Trade Deficit Scores First Decline Since 1980

By Martin Crutsinger
 THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The U.S. trade deficit shrank to $137.34 billion in 1988, the first annual decline since 1980, as a surge in exports offset a relentless climb in imports, the government reported today.

The Commerce Department said exports shot up to an all-time high of $322.22 billion last year, a dramatic 26.8 percent above the 1987 level, led by a boom in sales of American-manufactured products and farm goods.

The huge gain in exports was enough to offset an 8.3 percent increase in imports, which also rose to a record level of $459.56 billion.

For December, the trade deficit shrank slightly to $11.9 billion, down from a revised November figure of $12.2 billion.

However, both November and December represented the highest imbalances between what the United States imported and what it sold abroad since August.

Analysts are worried that the improvement in America's trading performance has stalled out. After improving dramatically in the first half of 1988, the deficit actually began to widen again toward the end of the year.

Reversing that trend and getting further trade improvements is one of the major economic challenges facing the new Bush administration.

The trade deficit along with the related federal budget deficit represent the twin towers of debt that President Bush inherited from Ronald Reagan.

The $137.3 billion deficit for all of 1988 was down 19.4 percent from the all-time high of $170.3 billion set in 1987. It was the first year that the trade deficit has shown any improvement since it fell 12.5 percent to $31.4 billion in 1980, the last year of the Carter administration.

During the Reagan years, the deficit soared above the $100 billion mark as Americans' appetite for foreign goods proved insatiable. In 1985, then-Treasury Secretary

James A. Baker III engineered a coordinated effort with major U.S. allies to devalue the dollar on foreign currency markets in an effort to make American goods more competitive and imports more expensive.

The strategy has proven successful in boosting exports but has had much less of an impact in curb-

Industrial Group Will Sell Tract For Shell Building

By John Bare
 THE DAILY REFLECTOR

The board of directors of Greenville Industries Inc., has agreed to sell about 10 acres of land to the Pitt County Development Commission, which plans to erect a building to lure industry to the area.

John D. Chaffee, executive director of the commission, told the board at its meeting Thursday that the group is planning a shell building between 40,000 and 50,000 square feet. The shell structure, he said, would consist only of a graded site, walls and a roof.

The architectural firm, The East Group, has been retained to design the building, according to Chaffee, and the construction cost is estimated at more than $500,000.

"The way we look at it, a first-class building attracts a first-class tenant, and that's what we want to go after for the Greenville area," Chaffee said.

"We're going after the high end of the market. We want a very nice, a very classy building that we're going to be able to put a first-class company in. We're talking about a building on the caliber of a facility the size of Burroughs Wellcome, or Procter and Gamble or maybe something similar to the TRW building. But, it's going to be something nice."

The commission hopes to attract businesses in the electronic industry, computer industry, cosmetic industry, pharmaceutical industry, a number of medical-related fields or a large distributor. The commission hopes to land a company that will pay wages above $6 an hour, Chaffee said.

After a brief shareholder's meeting, the six members of Greenville Industries' board of directors met and approved the sale of the land for $10,000 an acre.

Founded about 30 years ago, the mission of Greenville Industries is to make land available at a reasonable price to responsible industries wishing to locate in the area, said Charles O. Horne Jr., president.

During 1988, Horne said there were about six serious inquiries, but the group did not sell any of the 285 acres of land it owns in the northern portion of the city in the Greenville Industrial Park. The land is prime property, Chaffee said, between the Burroughs Wellcome building and the Yale Materials Handling Corp. facilities.

The group did donate $5,000 to the commission's Shell Building Fund, Horne said.

Several members of the board said there is a strong need to begin developing the organization's property, and they are hopeful the shell building will spark more sales.

"We need to get something started, though," board member William H. Watson said.

"We don't know. You may get somebody out there who wants 50 acres," board member William H. Clark said. "I think this is like using Sugg teacher Sandra Flowers receives congratulations from West, right, and Williams.

Sugg Educator Is Named Teacher Of Year For Pitt

H.B. Sugg School kindergarten teacher Sandra Echols Flowers was named Thursday by the Pitt County schools as the system's Teacher of the Year.

Mrs. Flowers was selected from among teachers nominated by 27 of the 31 schools in the county. The presentation was made during a luncheon honoring all 27 nominees.

Charles Freeman, Region I Teacher of the Year, presented a slide show on "What It Means To Be A Teacher." As the regional Teacher of the Year, Freeman has a year's leave of absence from the classroom to promote the teaching profession.

Mrs. Flowers has taught at H.B. Sugg in Farmville for the past three years, but has 16 years of teaching experience, all in grades K-3. She is a graduate of the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill and has attended East Carolina University.

Mrs. Flowers is a member of her school's Teacher Assistance Team and is a mentor teacher, assisting first- and second-year teachers at H.B. Sugg. She represents her school at North Carolina Association of Educators meetings and serves on annual report, beautification and hospitality committees.

She is a member of the First Baptist Church of Farmville, serving as a Sunday school teacher and as its choir president. She also belongs to the Farmville Arts Council and the Farmville Central High School Band Boosters.

According to Ola Perry, chairman of the Teacher of the Year effort, Mrs. Flowers will compete for designation as Region I Teacher of the Year, probably next January.

The winner and nominees in the annual competition were announced by school Superintendent Eddie West and George Williams, chairman of the county school board.

Students' Protest Fails To Develop

By Carol Tyer
 THE DAILY REFLECTOR

A sit-in or other expressions of protest by students in support of teachers' pay increases rumored to have been planned for this morning at D.H. Conley High School never materialized, Conley Principal Ike Baldree said.

Baldree said he has reason to believe the students have chosen "more constructive ways to make their concern known."

Baldree said when he heard about the protest possibility Thursday, he called together the president of the student body, class presidents, club presidents, the ROTC student commander, and some athletic leaders for "a dialogue."

He said he and Conley biology teacher Ruby Jackson, president of the county chapter of the North Carolina Association of Educators,

Courthouse Toilets Go 'Boom'

SEATTLE (AP) — About two dozens toilets and urinals in the King County Courthouse exploded when they were flushed after an air compressor was mistakenly connected to a water line, officials said.

"We think we've lost about 20 to 25 toilets," building services manager Bill Kemp said Thursday. "The porcelain is actually cracked."

Each time the pressurized privies were flushed in restrooms throughout the 72-year-old building, plumbing started popping, Kemp said. Instead of the usual swirl and gurgle of water, geysers erupted.

Officials eventually traced the problem to an erroneous compressor hookup by a construction worker on a nearby $430 million bus tunnel project.

"They started blowing at about 11:30 (a.m.) and it took us a while to figure it out," he recounted. "We knew it had to be air in the system, but the (city) Water Department said that was impossible."

Kemp said there were no reports of injuries, although several people apparently were soaked.

After the incident, all courthouse restrooms were closed for the day.

Jacobs Denied Jurors

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WAMPSVILLE, N.Y. — A New York judge today denied a request by fugitive Indian activist Timothy Jacobs that a special advisory jury be seated to hear his upcoming extradition appeal.

Madison County Judge William O'Brien III rejected the motion by Jacobs' defense attorneys following a 30-minute hearing. The judge said he felt confident he can decide the complicated issues in the Jacobs' case by himself.

The Jacobs' extradition hearing is scheduled for next Friday.

"When all is over and finally submitted, I'll be able to resolve any questions of fact or any questions of credibility," O'Brien said.

Empaneling an advisory jury, O'Brien said, would only further complicate the controversial Jacobs' case.

"This case already has enough conflict," O'Brien said.

Jacobs and his attorneys said they were disappointed in the judge's determination.

"I'm disappointed, yes, but it's part of the game," said Jacobs. "I have faith in the judge and believe that once he hears our evidence, he'll rule in our favor."

Hotel Fire Kills Three

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

DETROIT — A four-alarm fire broke out early today in a downtown hotel, killing at least four people and forcing some residents to slide down makeshift ropes of blankets and sheets in freezing weather, officials said.

Fire officials said arson was suspected.

At least 52 people were sent to hospitals. Four police officers trying to evacuate the residential hotel were among the injured.

The fire was discovered at 3:12 a.m. at the Billingham Hotel by police Sgt. John Stevenson, who was on routine patrol, police spokesman Sgt. Christopher Buck said.

Buck said Stevenson got one resident out of the building, called the fire department, then went back in to alert other residents.

Temperatures were in the teens while some residents tied sheets and blankets together to slide from their windows down the five-story building's walls.

Bush Says He'll Sit In On Budget Talks

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ST LOUIS — President Bush, back on the road championing his $1.16 trillion spending plan, said today he will personally participate in high-level budget talks next week and share responsibility with Congress for difficult spending cuts.

Bush said he had invited House and Senate leaders to the White House next Tuesday, the day before he leaves on a five-day Far East trip, for a round of talks to speed a budget accord.

"Together, we must make the budget process work," Bush told students at Washington University in prepared remarks.

Next week's meeting appeared designed to blunt Democratic criticism that Bush's budget enabled him to take credit for proposing expanded social programs, while leaving Congress with the unpopular job of finding ways to pay for them through cuts in other areas.

Budget analysts say the spending plan Bush unveiled last week, while calling for restraints in defense spending but new initiatives in education, housing, child-care and environmental cleanup, falls about $9.6 billion to $11 billion short of meeting the deficit targets he set forth.

"I am committed to working closely with my friends on the Hill to help them meet the target date set by the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings law for an April 15th budget resolution," Bush said.

That law, which requires a balanced budget by 1993, calls for a deficit in the fiscal year that begins next Oct. 1 of no more than $100 billion — down from an estimated $160 billion this year.

Failure of Congress to meet the targets can result in across-the-board cuts in military as well as civilian programs.

Direct involvement by a president this early in the budget process is rare. However, Bush has promised all along to work closely with the Democratic-controlled Congress and engage in a number of bipartisan meetings with leaders.

Bush spokesman Stephen Hart said next week's White House meeting was "the beginning of his (Bush's) personal involvement with Congress in the budget process."

He said that Bush was not seeking to sidestep the usual legislative process, and that Tuesday's session likely would not involve any detailed "number crunching" over specific spending levels.

Bush, as he has done this week in two other out-of-Washington appearances, outlined the highlights of his budget plan, calling it "responsive and responsible" and "fair-minded in its strategy."

He gave particular emphasis to its proposed initiatives on education, including the first installment toward a $500 million program of grants for the nation's best schools.

"We have made education the Gateway Arch of the Bush administration," the president declared, referring to the city's trademark steel arch on the banks of the Mississippi River.

Watauga Reopens Old Murder Case

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BOONE, N.C. — The bodies of Bryce Durham, his wife and his son were found head-first in an overflowing bathtub more than 17 years ago, but state and local officials say they haven't abandoned efforts to solve Watauga County's only unsolved slayings.

"The file takes up more than a drawer in the filing cabinet," said Joe Momier, supervisor of the SBI district based in Hickory. "We've just had agents rotate in and out to try to get a fresh look at it since I was employed here in 1972."

New action in the case "is just another attempt," Momier said. "If it works, it's great; if not, well, at least we tried."

Investigators said Durham, 51, his wife, Virginia, 46, and their 19-year-old son, Bobby Joe, were beaten, strangled and stuffed head-first into a bathtub at their home on Feb. 3, 1972.

Four Asheville men were arrested a few months after the slayings, but charges against them were later dropped. Detectives who first looked into the case thought robbery might have been the motive, but subsequent investigations have later raised questions about that theory.

"This is not a closed issue," said Watauga County Sheriff James "Red" Lyons. "We are trying to get public awareness up and community involvement. Somebody has to know something."

Lyons said a local chapter of Crimestoppers met Thursday night to discuss the case and solicit additional pledges for a reward that already stands at $17,000. The goal for the reward fund is $50,000, he said.

"Because the anniversary is just past, we got to thinking about it and now that they've got Crimestoppers started we got to thinking to ourselves 'Have we extended every opportunity that we know possible to solve this case?'" Lyons said.

"This is one renewed way, we feel like, of trying to raise some money and get someone to come forward if they've got some information," Lyons said. "It's not like it hasn't been talked about or worked on, but maybe it's one way. Money makes some people talk."

The night the Durhams were slain, their son-in-law, Troy Hall, told investigators that Mrs. Durham called him about 10:30 that night. She told him three black men were beating her husband and son in a back room. The call, he said, was abruptly cut off.

Hall thought the call was a joke, but his wife, Ginny Sue, convinced him to drive over and check on her parents. A neighbor, Cecil Small, went along, and Mrs. Hall waited in the car while her husband and Small checked the Durham's split-level home.

The lights were on, the house had been ransacked, the phone was ripped out of the wall. Pictures were torn from the walls and a pool of blood was found in the den.

When they investigated the sound of running water, they found all three victims, fully clad, with their heads in a bathtub overflowing with water.

Hospital Reissued Trauma Designation

Pitt County Memorial Hospital has received a five-year designation as a Level I Trauma Center by the North Carolina Department of Human Resources, renewing a status it attained in 1985.

From 1983 until 1985, the hospital was designated a Level II Trauma Center.

To be a Level I Trauma Center, a hospital must have a variety of specialized resources including surgical and non-surgical specialists, a well-organized emergency department, intensive care units and operating room, specialized radiological and rehabilitative services, and a system for evaluating the care provided, the program's medical director, Dr.

Paul Cunningham said. He said the facility must conduct trauma research and provide continuing education programs for staff, public education programs regarding injury prevention and outreach programs to community hospitals.

Cunningham said the PCMH emergency department's outreach activities include working with emergency medical services personnel as well as community hospital personnel to explain the services offered by the trauma center and to coordinate transfer of patients.

A site committee which visited the hospital last October said the trauma center's strengths include an excellent physical plant, a helicopter program, commitment of the board of directors, administration and medical staff to the trauma program, well-developed treatment protocols, quality assurance and trauma registry programs, sense of responsibility for eastern North Carolina and trauma-oriented research.

Aerial Pollution Increases In U.S.

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Air pollution last summer was the worst of the decade and the number of cities where ozone exceeded federally approved levels jumped 41 percent, according to preliminary federal figures.

"This new information shows the clear fallacy in industry arguments that America's air pollution problems are solving themselves," said Rep. Henry Waxman, D-Calif., who made the figures public on Thursday.

A year ago the Environmental Protection Agency listed 68 cities that had recorded peak ozone levels considered unsafe under federal standards. Last summer the number jumped to 96 metropolitan areas plus two areas considered to be rural.

The House subcommittee on health and environment, chaired by Waxman, had requested the data from the federal agency.

EPA officials said the data were only preliminary and had not been thoroughly analyzed. But they acknowledged the findings indicate a significant increase in urban pollution in 1988 and suggested that when the final numbers are evaluated from all monitoring points the number of cities where pollution exceeds federal standards could exceed 100.

The preliminary data submitted to Waxman's subcommittee show peak daily ozone pollution levels last summer were on average 5 percent higher than in 1983, which had been widely regarded as having the worst ozone pollution this decade. Last summer's levels of ozone, a key component of smog, were on average 14 percent greater than those in 1987.

Waxman called the data startling enough to affect the congressional debate on how to strengthen federal air pollution laws.

"I expect this data to give a strong boost to congressional efforts to establish long overdue new pollution control requirements for the automobiles, factories, power plants and other pollution sources which contribute to the urban smog that now afflicts almost every American city," said Waxman.

Waxman's subcommittee has scheduled a hearing later this month on the health impact of the air pollution. He said the latest EPA data indicate that more than 100 million Americans now live in cities with levels of ozone or carbon monoxide pollution that exceed what the federal government considers safe.

Ozone pollution, caused by a variety of emissions from cars and trucks as well as industrial plants and factories, causes coughing and chest pains and has been linked by some scientists to permanent lung damage.

According to the EPA findings, two-thirds of the agency's 323 monitoring sites reported higher ozone pollution levels last summer than in any other summer this decade.

The information, which was collected by the EPA from state and local air pollution control agencies, covered the period from April through October, 1988. The EPA suggested that the hot summer contributed to the ozone problem.

The additional areas that were classified in 1988 as exceeding federal ozone pollution levels were:

Manchester, N.H.; Buffalo, Glen Falls and adjacent Essex County, and Poughkeepsie, all in New York state; Sussex County, Del.; Altoona, Erie, Johnstown, Lancaster, Harrisburg, Reading, Scranton and Sharon, all in Pennsylvania; Charleston and Greenbrier County in West Virginia;

Fayetteville and Greensboro, in North Carolina; Greenville and adjacent Cherokee County in South Carolina; Knoxville, Tenn.; Lafayette, Ind.; Canton, Columbus, Dayton, Toledo and Youngstown, all in Ohio; Lake Charles, La.; Kansas City, Mo.; and Denver.

An area is considered to have exceeded the federal levels if it has a daily peak ozone level of more than 0.12 parts per million of pollutant.

Democrats Assail Civil Rights Office

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The Education Department's civil rights office strayed far from its mission of fighting racial discrimination during the Reagan administration, say Democratic investigators for a House committee.

A report by the majority staff of the House Education and Labor Committee adds that the prospects for revived enforcement under the Bush administration are not yet clear.

"Whether the OCR (Office of Civil Rights) accepts its responsibility and begins to execute the laws as originally intended will depend greatly upon the commitment of the incoming administration to civil rights enforcement," it said.

The authors said they hoped the Bush administration would undertake a comprehensive review of the issues they raise in the report.

Under Reagan, they conclude, OCR was "stymied by an administration which actively opposed the laws which were entrusted to it and took efforts to minimize the agency's potential impact."

The current director of the agency, LeGree Daniels, is a holdover from the Reagan administration and it is not known whether she will stay on. In a letter published with the report, Daniels denounced it as "replete with inaccuracies and misconceptions of OCR's role."

OCR is in charge of enforcing statutes barring discrimination on the basis of race, gender, handicap, age and national origin in all federally funded education activities and programs.

Democratic committee aides visited six of the 10 OCR regional offices between January and March 1988. They reported finding widespread mismanagement, a decimated staff and confusion stemming from lack of policy direction from the top. Specifically, they noted the following: —OCR initiated 9,768 complaint investigations between fiscal 1981 and 1988, most of them related to handicap discrimination. Only 15 percent involved racial discrimination — "a violation of its mandate" since the office was created in connection with the 1964 Civil Rights Act.

"There was a clear perception among the regional office staff that certain issues were 'off limits' and could not be investigated. Most of the issues involved race discrimination," the report said.

Do It Again?

Should He Or Shouldn't He?

Should Jim Hunt run for Sen. Jesse Helms U.S. Senate seat in 1990?

Some Democratic party insiders say there should be a new face and fresh approach for the party in tackling Helms again.

Former governor Hunt and Sen. Helms engaged in a titian struggle in 1984 for the Senate seat and Helms won with 52 percent of the votes. The Republicans won the governor's seat that year and in 1988 Republican governor Jim Martin won again and along with that Republican Jim Gardner won the lieutenant governor post.

But wait. How about in 1986? Former Democratic governor Terry Sanford contested Republican Jim Broyhill for the U.S. Senate seat made vacant by the death of John East. Sanford, long out of politics while serving as president of Duke University, won that election and now sits in the Senate. That was a year when many heavyweight Democrats laid back because they felt the tide was running against the party. What they didn't take into account was that there was no presidential election that year to bring out a heavy vote.

And it must be remembered that 1990 is an off year election for the other North Carolina Senate seat.

Even though the election is still 18 months away a flurry of names is being proposed for the Democratic nomination ... and certainly Hunt's is prominent among them. On the Republican side there is only one name even breathed ... and that is Jesse Helms.

The Democratic debate over who should represent the party in the race is refreshing, but after the bruising battle of 1984 Jim Hunt should be allowed to make up his own mind on his possible candidacy. He is the best known Democrat among any names yet bandied about. He well knows the difficulty of a 1990 race. He also knows that another defeat could be an almost insurmountable political obstacle for him personally.

The choice is Hunt's to make and in today's political climate his instincts concerning his own political future are paramount.

Another Step

Contract Signals Work Beginning

Another major step in the development of U.S. 264 was taken last week when contracts for the second phase of the Farmville bypass were awarded.

The first portion of the bypass, from west of Farmville to U.S. 258 is already under construction. The contracts let Friday will begin at the terminus of U.S. 264 at the Farmville Eastern bypass and continue through to the U.S. 258 where a separated intersection interchange is being constructed.

The contracts signal the beginning of construction on a most important section of the highway corridor to Raleigh. As most travelers know sections have been built from Greenville to Farmville's eastern bypass. The corridor picks up again west of Farmville and ends east of Wilson. West of Wilson U.S. 264 is at interstate standards on to and including U.S. 64.

Many travelers from the east were not aware that a part of the Farmville U.S. 264 bypass was under construction since the work could not readily be seen. That construction has been under way for a year, however. Soon motorists traveling from Greenville to Farmville will see work ongoing where the new highway currently ends.

The contract is to be completed by Nov. 1, 1990. Following that another contract will be let for paving the entire length of the Farmville U.S. 264 bypass.

Motorists will not be traveling the new route for a couple more years. Inevitably it will be completed, however and our area will be a step closer to a freeway corridor from Pitt County to Raleigh. A long held highway dream is progressing.

It's Time To Bring Out The Troops

WASHINGTON — The civil authorities have lost control of this city's streets. It's time to bring out the troops. Somebody has got to stop the killing.

Police Chief Maurice Turner's outmanned and outgunned force can't do it. Mayor Marion Barry, whose political future could hinge on ending Washington's record-setting homicide rate, doesn't know what to do. Members of the city council, no matter how evident their concern, are out of ideas.

It's time for the troops. Frances Cress Welsing, the Washington psychiatrist noted for her work with adolescents, agrees. The city's warring drug dealers, she says, "are like children out of behavior control; there's nobody with the authority to say 'This must stop.' You have to use force to stop the violence. There can be no effective therapy until you do."

Whether that force should be supplied by the D.C. National Guard, as Welsing suggests, or by regular Army troops, my own view, is worth debating. The guard has the advantage of being composed of local citizens, whose concern for the city is not in doubt. The Army's advantage is that its members are likely to be more experienced and more familiar with firearms. There's no point to deploying men with unloaded rifles, as was done in the riots of the 1960s. The trouble this time is not from window-smashing rioters but from well-armed killers, willing to kill to protect their turf.

How willing? This city, which last year set a record of 372 homicides in 366 days, has recorded an astounding 75 killings—most of them drug-related—in the first 46 days of this year. There were 13 shootings last Tuesday alone.

There's not much that can be done to prevent certain kinds of violence. Domestic homicides, spur-of-the-moment rage, deaths from robberies gone bad are too unpredictable. But the bulk of the killings plaguing Washington take place in a few identifiable neighborhoods. Deploying armed troops in those neighborhoods could buy the time needed to address the long-term problems behind the killings.

For Welsing, that means a serious effort to determine "what is happening to black men, a large segment of whom are in a state of frustration and hopelessness."

She suggests that our lack of interest in that question may be influenced by racism. "When (Patrick) Purdy shot those Asian kids in Stockton, Calif., there was immediate interest in finding out what had gone wrong with him." News reports described the young gunman (who later took his own life) as resenting his mother for using the insurance money from his father's death to buy herself a car and as being particularly upset at the success of newly arrived Asian-Americans while he himself lived from hand to mouth.

But is it race? Aren't journalists making a similar effort to understand the Ethiopian gunman who killed three coworkers in a Bethesda, Md., bank? What seems more probable is that we seek psychological explanations for random or "senseless" violence, but imagine that we already understand the drug-related killings as money-driven turf wars.

Welsing refuses to dismiss the importance of personal history. "We can see depression and frustration as problems in other people, but not in young black men. I'll bet you that if we examined the lives of these drug killers, we'd find a mother who started having babies as a teenager, a kid who had no self-esteem and a fatalistic expectation of a short, violent and jobless life. These are the things that we need to start paying some attention to."

Among other things, she suggests the establishment of "WPA-type jobs" to address the unemployment situation of young black men in the inner cities.

But before we can address the underlying problems of these quick-trigger killers, she agrees, we first have to check their out-of-control behavior.

Those Left Are Those That Care

BOSTON — The protestors are gone now. The legal hit team has wandered off in search of another target. The television crews have moved to other sites and other stories.

The people who surround Nancy Klein these days are those who care about her: Not as a case study or a political focal point, but as a wife, a daughter, a mother. Her husband Martin visits with her as he has every day since the 32-year-old woman went into a coma. He tells her the simple things, how his day went, what he did, what their 3-year-old daughter did.

If some spark leads Nancy Klein out of the shadows of her coma, her husband and parents will eventually also tell her how strangers tried to wrest control of her medical care away from them. They will tell her how these intruders, men she had never met, sued to become guardians of her and her fetus, to make decisions about her life and death.

The story of the Klein family began on Dec. 13 with a car crash that left this woman, pregnant with her second child, in a coma. In the weeks that followed, doctors at the Long Island hospital told Martin Klein that his wife might have a better chance of recovery if she had an abortion.

These doctors offered opinions rather than promises, and odds rather than certainties. But Nancy's family held to those opinions and pinned their hopes on those odds. They opted for the abortion.

If this had been any other medical procedure, there would have been no further delay. It is virtually automatic to allow family to make decisions for an incompetent patient. This hospital however, spooked by right-to-lifers, refused to perform an abortion without court permission. The administrators invited intervention and they got it.

Two men, anti-abortion advocates both, came to wrangle for power over the body of the comatose woman they had never met and have never yet seen. Their lawyer was A. Lawrence Washburn Jr., a regular on the right-to-life legal circuit.

In 1984, in the famous Baby Jane Doe case, Washburn was the one who sued to force surgery on the handicapped baby against the will of her parents. Since then, he has represented more than one estranged husband trying to prohibit his wife from having an abortion. In June, he was briefly appointed guardian of the fetus inside a client's wife's body.

Washburn eventually lost the Klein case as he lost those others. After two bitter weeks, three New York state courts ruled that only Martin Klein was the proper guardian. On Saturday after the Supreme Court refused to overturn that ruling, the abortion was performed.

Ellen Goodman

The crucial sentence in all of this judicial maneuvering came from the appeals court ruling that stated unequivocally that these "strangers" had "no place in the midst of this family tragedy."

All but the most hard-core right-to-lifers in the country seemed to identify with the family and against the invaders. Even Barbara Bush came out of her silence on abortion. Not only she but her husband sided with the Kleins. "I agree with my husband on that," Mrs. Bush said. "The life of the mother was at risk. I'm very grateful that it worked out as it did."

Is the Klein case then such an exception in the annals of abortion that even a pro-life President and an ambivalent populace can separate it from the others? I don't read it that way.

The question in this case was not whether an abortion would save Nancy Klein's life. The medical evidence was less than conclusive; sadly, she is still in a coma. What was at stake in the court was who had the right to make that determination.

This is not some peripheral issue. It is the central question of the entire abortion debate: Who decides? The answer of the anti-abortion activists is: "strangers."

Martin Klein eventually won the right to choose abortion because his wife had that right. It was protected in the Roe v. Wade decision. He was merely the guardian allowed to exercise his wife's rights. If abortion were illegal, he might not have had that right. It is notable how much more support there was for the family of a comatose woman facing these decisions than there might have been for the woman herself.

'What we have seen here is a preview of what the world would look like if Roe is overturned, a grave and imminent possibility. It's a world in which the Washburns would decide the fate of the Kleins and the rest of us.'

What we have seen here is a preview of what the world would look like if Roe is overturned, a grave and imminent possibility. It's a world in which the Washburns would decide the fate of the Kleins and the rest of us. A world in which the government would become the "guardian" of every pregnant woman, of every fetus. A world in which "strangers" would weigh the evidence of every woman's health and life.

So I wish Nancy Klein a full recovery and a return to her husband and child. In a coma, this woman may have helped to wake up the country.

ACU Rates Members Of Congress

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The Massachusetts congressional delegation showed its liberal colors and Wyoming was the most conservative state in 1988, according to a survey by the American Conservative Union.

A lawmaker with a rating of 100 percent is one who voted in accordance with the position of the conservative group in all instances. In Massachusetts the average score was just 3.69. In Wyoming, it was 97.3.

Based on its selection of 22 key votes in the two chambers, some of which the group gave double weight, the ACU said both the House and Senate voted more conservatively in 1988 than in 1987. The average House rating went from 37 percent to 44 percent, while the Senate average went from 40 percent to 43 percent.

Helms Gets 100 Percent Rating

WASHINGTON (AP) — Here are ratings on North Carolina members of Congress released Thursday by the American Conservative Union. A rating of 100 percent indicates that a member agreed with the group in all 22 selected votes in 1988.

Three of the votes were given double weight. A missing vote was not scored for or against the member.

Senate:
North Helms, R-N.C., 100; Sanford, D-N.C., 4.

House:
Democrats — Clarke, 29; Hefner, 25; Jones, 13; Lancaster, 40; Neal, 21; Price, 24; Rose, 11; Valentine, 48.
Republicans — Ballenger, 92; Coble, 92; McMillan, 88.

In both chambers, however, the move to the right was made easier by a lack of confrontation over tough budget issues last year, due to the 1987 budget summit, the group said.

Last month, the Americans for Democratic Action, a liberal group, released a similar survey and declared that the Congress had become more liberal.

The differences occur because the two groups base their surveys on different vote lists. However, the surveys do highlight the ideological differences between the parties.

The ACU said four senators and 38 House members, all Republicans, scored 100 percent. The ADA last month gave two senators and two dozen House members, all Democrats, 100 percent ratings.

The conservative group in its rating gave double weight to votes on three issues: aid to the Nicaraguan Contra rebels, the override of President Reagan's veto of the Grove City civil rights extension bill, and a vote on shifting $100 million away from the Star Wars missile defense system.

Najib Says Afghan War Could Be Over 'In Weeks'

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

KABUL, Afghanistan — President Najib said today the nation's war could end soon and that representatives of his Marxist government have held private peace talks with Moslem guerrillas.

The main highway connecting Kabul to the Soviet Union, which Soviet troops used to withdraw, remained open, Tass said, quoting the Afghan Bakhtar news agency. Tass, the official Soviet news agency, said more than 100 trucks carrying Soviet food and supplies were bound for the Afghan capital.

Najib also said he had sent emissaries to Rome to talk with former Afghan King Zahir Shah and that his government had been in contact with the Moslem guerrilla resistance. He did not elaborate.

Yuli Vorontsov, Soviet deputy foreign minister, gave a similar report at a news conference in New Delhi, where he met with government officials in talks aimed at resolving the war between the Afghan government and the guerrillas.

Vorontsov said some guerrilla groups were in contact with the Kabul government, despite their public vows against any negotiations with Najib. "Some dealing exists already — clandestinely," he said without elaborating.

When Najib was asked by Western reporters whether there could be peace in days or months, he replied: "Maybe weeks."

But he has repeatedly insisted that any political settlement must include the governing People's Democratic Party of Afghanistan.

Some Western officials believe the Moslem guerrillas will soon capture key Afghan cities now that the Soviet troops are gone.

Najib wore a Western suit and an Islamic-style cap as he attended morning prayers at a mosque near the presidential palace. He was protected by about 60 security guards who formed a circle around him.

He has been under increasing pressure to reach a settlement with the Moslem guerrillas who have been fighting since 1978 to overthrow the Soviet-backed government.

Under a U.N.-sponsored agreement, Moscow on Wednesday withdrew the last of the estimated 115,000 Red Army troops it once had in Afghanistan. It began sending them there in December 1979 to prop up the Marxist government.

More than 1 million people, including 15,000 Soviet soldiers, died in the fighting. Another 35,000 Red Army troops were injured in the war.

Charles To Dine With Bush

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Britain's Prince Charles is planning a talk with President Bush over dinner tonight about protecting the environment, one of the future king's favorite causes, before he flies to sunny Florida for two days of polo.

The 40-year-old prince arrived in New York late Thursday for his eighth visit to the United States. He is not accompanied by his wife, Diana, who made a hit with New Yorkers during her own solo visit a couple of weeks ago.

Bush and his wife, Barbara, invited the prince and British ambassador Sir Antony Acland to a small, informal dinner party at Camp David, Md., where the Bushes will be spending the weekend.

British officials said Prince Charles' concerns about the environment probably would be a major topic at his lunch at the British Embassy today with a select group of American movers and shakers, and likely would figure in his conversation with Bush at Camp David.

Bush, who had met the prince during two previous royal visits in 1981 and 1985, was likely to listen sympathetically to his guest's views.

The president last week reaffirmed his campaign pledge to clean up the environment, although he said solutions for problems of toxic waste disposal, global warming and acid rain must avoid "stifling the economy."

Embassy spokesman Francis Cornish said the dinner table talk at Camp David won't be frivolous, if the prince has his way. "The Prince of Wales is a serious-minded person," Cornish said. "I'd be surprised if it's not a substantive discussion."

During his low-key, 24-hour visit to Washington, the prince also planned to speak at an embassy reception marking the creation of an alumni association for Marshall Scholars, a British government program under which 30 exceptional American students are selected annually to spend two or three years at British universities.

Bush To Continue Aid To Afghan Rebs

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — President Bush says he will continue helping rebel groups in Afghanistan after the Soviet Army's withdrawal, and fully intends to support the Contras in Nicaragua when their current aid expires next month.

Bush said Thursday he preferred a peaceful reconciliation in Afghanistan but was concerned that departing Soviet forces may have stockpiled weapons for the Marxist government in Kabul.

"It would not be fair to have a tremendous amount of lethal supplies left behind and then cut off support for the resistance and thus leave an unacceptable imbalance," he said in a session with reporters in the Oval Office.

Bush's remarks came a day after Soviet troops completed their withdrawal. Their departure has caused widespread fears that a struggle for control by competing guerrilla groups could throw Afghanistan into a civil war.

"The time for recrimination is over," Bush said. "The time for bloodbaths is over and I would like to see the various factions get together and come up with recommendations that would lead to a peaceful Afghanistan with no more bloodbaths."

Shiite Says Hostage Still Alive

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TYRE, Lebanon — U.S. Marine Lt. Col. William R. Higgins, abducted a year ago today while serving as a U.N. observer, is alive despite his captors' statement that he was sentenced to death as a spy, a Shiite Moslem leader said.

"He'll be released eventually" by the pro-Iranian Shiite extremists who seized him, Abdul Majid Saleh, political officer of the Amal militia in this ancient port 50 miles south of Beirut, said Thursday.

Higgins, from Danville, Ky., commanded a 76-man U.N. observer group monitoring the Lebanon-Israel border. He was kidnapped by gunmen who stopped his car, 20 minutes after he had met with Saleh, on the highway south of Tyre.

Saleh would not say how he knew Higgins had not been killed by the Organization of the Oppressed on Earth, which claimed responsibility for the abduction.

His militia claims to have undercover agents who track hostage developments. The moderate Shiite movement, backed by Syria, opposes the pro-Iranian fundamentalist Shiites who hold most of the 15 Westerners missing in Lebanon.

Amal and the militia Hezbollah, believed to be an umbrella group for those holding hostages, were at war for months and nearly 600 people were killed. They reached a peace agreement in January with mediation by Syria and Iran.

Waste Panel Says State Should Place Emphasis On Land Disposal Facilities

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — North Carolina should abandon plans to build a comprehensive hazardous-waste treatment facility and instead focus on land disposal, a state panel recommended.

Land disposal needs are particularly critical since South Carolina soon plans to ban the disposal of hazardous wastes from North Carolina and other states, according to a draft report issued by a committee of the Governor's Waste Management Board.

"In regard to hazardous-waste management capacity, the most urgent need in North Carolina is for a land disposal facility or other alternatives to shipping waste to the disposal facility in South Carolina," said the report by the board's industrial liaison committee.

By land disposal, however, the panel was not recommending the burial of hazardous wastes in a landfill, said William L. Lewis, a Sanford engineer who chairs the committee. Landfills are prone to leak, allowing wastes to contaminate groundwater. "We definitely do not want to say landfill, because that sends the wrong signal," Lewis said after Thursday's meeting. "That sends a signal to the general public that you're going to dig a hole and bury it."

Instead, he said, the panel supports the disposal of wastes in containers stored above or below ground. The containers would be retrievable, so operators could recycle or reuse the wastes if technologies became available to do so.

The waste management board did not adopt the committee's report but intends to vote on it at its meeting next month. The board is an advisory panel whose recommendations are not binding on state government.

Efforts to manage North Carolina's hazardous wastes have focused on building a comprehensive facility that would include an incinerator and chemical treatment plant.

A state law passed 1984 prohibited the construction of a hazardous waste landfill until the state builds and begins operating a comprehensive facility. But last summer, the General Assembly imposed a moratorium on efforts to locate and build a treatment plant.

That action, in part, is what prompted the South Carolina ban. South Carolina Gov. Carroll A. Campbell Jr. announced last month that he would forbid the GSX landfill near Pinewood from accepting hazardous wastes that other states do not allow to be disposed of within their borders.

South Carolina lawmakers also are considering legislation that would bar other states from using waste incinerators in South Carolina.

Meanwhile, Gov. Jim Martin and the General Assembly have been trying to avoid the ban by reviving efforts to build a hazardous-waste treatment facility in North Carolina.

But before it adopts legislation, the state should take a different course, the waste-management board's report recommended. North Carolina industries need a land disposal facility for getting rid of their hazardous wastes more than they need an incinerator or chemical treatment plant, the report says.

"Whatever legislation is drafted, we should back away from using the term 'comprehensive,'" Lewis said.

"We need to develop the criteria for land disposal, and then proceed with siting a facility."

The report also recommended that the treatment facility include a process for treating metal-contaminated sludges. Metal-plating companies produce about 20 million pounds of sludge a year in the state, he said, and most of the metals in that waste could be recovered if the water were removed, Lewis said.

"The more water you take out, the more enriched the residual becomes in metal and the more desirable that becomes as a recoverable resource," he said. "If there are metals in solution, there are technologies available to get those metals out."

ATF agent displays British Sten, other automatic weapons

Agents Charge Pair With Sale Of Guns

LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

GREENSBORO — Undercover federal and state agents said Thursday they arrested two Cabarrus County men after the men sold agents four machine guns and an unspecified number of semiautomatic pistols.

U.S. Attorney Robert H. Edmunds Jr. announced the arrests Thursday at his office in Greensboro.

Paul Lyon, the agent in charge of the regional office of the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms, identified the men arrested as 47-year-old Robert Caldwell and 27-year-old Jimmy Johnson. Both men live in Harisburg.

Agents with the ATF, the State Bureau of Investigation and the Cabarrus County Sheriff's Department say that they bought three British-made 9mm Sten machine guns from the men and a Ruger Mini-14 .223-caliber semiautomatic rifle that had been converted to an automatic.

The U.S. Attorney's office will present the case to the federal grand jury Feb. 27.

Lyon said the machine guns were used in World War II by British paratroopers.

Federal agents say that the investigation is continuing.

State Rejects Ban On Trawling

RALEIGH (AP) — North Carolina will not cooperate with a Virginia request to ban commercial trawling within North Carolina's three-mile territorial limit, the state Marine Fisheries Commission says.

Virginia marine officials have targeted trawling in the spawning grounds of summer flounder as the main suspect in recently diminished numbers of the fish. A proposed ban, in Virginia's Atlantic Coast waters is in the public hearing process.

Flounder spawn as they migrate south from Virginia's Eastern Shore and the Chesapeake Bay in the fall. Trawler nets can easily scoop up large numbers of the fish as they congregate during this time.

Because the spawning grounds reach south to Cape Hatteras, "the full benefit of the closure would not be realized unless North Carolina took similar action," William Pruitt, commissioner of Virginia's Marine Resources Commission wrote in a letter requesting North Carolina to consider a similar measure.

But commissioners unanimously and quickly nixed the suggestion in their quarterly meeting Thursday.

Commissioner Cashwell Caroon of Southport said the recently imposed flounder size limit of 13 inches will accomplish more toward replenishing the fish stock than the proposed trawling ban. Many fishermen have vigorously protested the size limit, and the commission will again discuss the limit in its meeting Friday.

IN THE STATE

Fee Program

RALEIGH (AP) — A bill that would let judges levy fees against participants in a pretrial release program for indigents charged with crimes is on its way to the Senate floor, where a debate over its constitutionality is likely.

The measure was approved 4-2 by the Senate Judiciary I Committee on Thursday, despite questions about whether it conflicts with a requirement in the state Constitution that court fees and costs must be uniform across the state.

The pretrial release program is designed to allow people charged with crimes who cannot afford bail to be released on a promise to show up for trial.

The program, begun in 1971, costs Mecklenburg taxpayers about $800,000 a year, Odom said. About 33,000 accused criminals are screened for participation in the program each year — roughly 90 a day.

Nearly 7,000 a year are granted pretrial release.

Under the bill, if a person is convicted after having been given pretrial release, the trial judge could order the person to pay up to $15 to defray program costs.

Condom Debate

GREENSBORO (AP) — National Condom Week was honored at the University of North Carolina at Greensboro with a sometimes heated debate over whether condom machines should be installed in dormitory bathrooms.

Students in favor Wednesday night argued that the condoms could help prevent AIDS. Those opposed said it would merely encourage more sexual promiscuity.

The condom debate was sparked by the upcoming meeting of the North Carolina University Association of Student Governments scheduled for Feb. 25 and 26 at N.C. State University in Raleigh. The association is expected to recommend a system-wide installation of condom machines that would be forwarded to University of North Carolina System President C.D. Spangler for approval.

Confusion Surrounds Road Building Bill

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — The Senate co-chairman of a legislative study commission says he will push for a vote Monday on a set of tax and fee increases that would generate $7 billion for highway construction over a dozen years.

Sen. Bill Goldston, D-Rockingham, said Thursday he will press ahead despite a statement by the other co-chairman that reports of an agreement on a financing formula were premature.

Rep. Bob Hunter, D-McDowell, said he had not signed off on an agreement between Goldston and Transportation Secretary Jim Harrington. They have endorsed a combination of taxes and fees to finance the construction that would raise the price of gasoline by 5 1/4 cents per gallon.

"What he (Harrington) is going to do is use that as an example of how the road program might be paid for," Hunter said in an interview. "We've got some members on our commission who like it and some who don't. I would like to see us get something that everybody could feel comfortable with."

Goldston, D-Rockingham, appeared taken aback by Hunter's comments, saying he also thought the trio had agreed in principle to support the funding formula.

"I thought we had an agreement and we were going to put it in a bill," Goldston said. "Now Hunter comes up and says he wants to keep Appalachian State University in Boone was the first and only school in the system to install the machines after its student council recommended the plan in November.

Farming Loans

RALEIGH (AP) — The Farmers Home Administration has a new loan program designed to help members of socially disadvantaged groups, including minorities, acquire land for farming in North Carolina, FmHA's state director said Thursday.

Under the new program, FmHA will try to find persons in those categories who are interested in farming and can qualify for a FmHA farm ownership loan, said Larry Godwin.

The agency is prepared to sell or lease to them a farm held in its inventory if any are available in their county, or make a loan for purchase of land on the open market. Godwin said that FmHA can also provide other loan and technical assistance, if needed, to help the borrower get started.

Illegal Dump

WILMINGTON (AP) — A Leland company has been ordered to pay a $150,000 fine and take out a newspaper advertisement for illegally dumping hazardous waste on its property.

General Wood Preserving Co., Inc. was found guilty in Wilmington's federal court of dumping arsenic, among other hazardous material, into a ditch on its property. The indictment cites July 1985 as the date of the offense, although a N.C. Department of Human Resources spokesman said the department inspected the site in April 1988.

U.S. District Judge W. Earl Britt fined the company and ordered it to buy a full-page advertisement in the Wilmington Morning Star and Wood and Wood Products magazine within 60 days.

The heading for the ad will say, "We apologize for polluting the environment."

his options open. That's been our problem for the past 16 months. We've got to stop talking in circles and get specific sometime."

The confusion arose over a meeting Wednesday afternoon attended by Hunter, Harrington, Goldston and several other senators and legislative staffers. Harrington said afterward the participants agreed that the staff would draft a bill containing the agreed-on points that could be presented to the study commission when it meets Monday.

The proposed bill was to include an increase in the gasoline tax — now 15.7 cents per gallon at the pump — to about 20.5 cents. It would combine an increase in the tax at the wholesale level from 3 percent to 7 percent with a 3-cent increase in the flat, per-gallon levy.

Currently, the flat tax rate is 14 cents per gallon. The 3 percent wholesale tax is the equivalent of 1.7 cents a gallon at the pump.

Harrington had pushed for only a 2 cents flat rate increase but accepted the extra penny at Goldston's insistence.

Additionally, the bill was to levy a 2 percent fee on automobile title transfers.

But Hunter said there still was not a consensus among House members on the commission on these numbers.

The proposed bill also would contain a statement of intent to distribute money generated by the package equitably — a major concern of Hunter and other representatives of rural districts.

Candy Maker Drops Effort To Win Approval Of Alcohol-Laced Sweets

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — An attempt to increase the alcohol allowed in North Carolina candy got its last call when an Iredell County confectioner yielded to bitter attacks on its sweets.

Rep. Bob Brawley, R-Iredell, said Beacon Sweets decided against pursuing the bill after a wave of public sentiment against the measure this week. But he also cited public misinformation and political pressures.

"I think the misconceptions are simply the word alcohol has gotten a whole lot of people disturbed unnecessarily," Brawley said at a news conference.

"The owners of the company have decided that they, being new citizens of North Carolina, would like to be in agreement with the wishes of as many people as possible," he said. "We don't want to start off being known for this."

Brawley had hoped to raise the ceiling on alcohol allowed in candy from .5 percent to 5 percent by weight, so Beacon could market one of its candy lines in North Carolina. His argument that it would take 49 of the candies to produce the lowest reading on a Breathalyzer test was met by a chorus of opponents — many from his own county. They said the move would encourage alcoholism and pose a threat to children and pregnant women.

"The Christian Action League sent out a letter which I felt like distorted the intent of what we were doing," Brawley said. "You can take anything and make it bad."

The company wasn't alone in hearing from the public.

"There were political threats, even one petition for my removal from office," Brawley said. "But ... I've had threats like that before. Anybody in the political arena has to be prepared to live with those kinds of statements sometimes."

Despite the pressure, Brawley said he asked Beacon officials

Thursday morning if they were sure they wanted to stop the bill. "I told them we have the votes," he said.

Brawley said he was surprised at the outcry at this week's meeting of a House subcommittee on alcohol laws. A representative of Hershey's Food Corp. called alcoholic candy the "tip of the iceberg" and made dire predictions about opening the door to even more potent food stuffs like 60-proof chili and 40-proof mayonnaise.

"I would have to agree that I learned a little more about the industry itself," Brawley said. He said he hadn't realized some confectioners market chocolate bottles that contain pure liquor. But he said even something like that could be regulated to keep it away from minors.

"You either buy a (candy) liquor bottle that has it in it or you go and buy the whole fifth," he said.

In making comparisons with other laws, Brawley may have unearthed another area for legislation.

"There is no law now governing rum-raisin ice cream," he said. "You can go ahead and dump rum in the ice cream if you want to. There's rum-soaked cakes, rum balls. I believe if you check around we've even been to receptions that have had rum balls. There's no law against that."

Senate Panel Debates School-Of-Choice Plan

By F. Alan Boyce
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — Gov. Jim Martin's proposal that North Carolina consider letting children and parents choose which public schools to use drew close scrutiny by the Senate Education Committee.

George Kahdy, executive director of the North Carolina Business Committee for Education, was quick to point out Thursday that Martin was only interested in studying the idea, which has been adopted in some form by 39 other states. He said its main attraction would be to foster competition among schools to improve programs and lure students.

But the idea, mentioned first in Martin's State of the State address, quickly raised questions as a possible spur to resegregation and a slap at the Basic Education Program.

Sen. Ralph Hunt, D-Durham, said the plan was reminiscent of efforts to avoid desegregation in the past.

"Nobody's going to admit the purpose of the plan is to resegregate the schools," he said. "But it could very well result in that to some degree."

Kahdy said the schools-of-choice program "has brought about more desegregation than almost any plan has brought about so far."

He said magnet school programs available in some North Carolina counties could be considered schools of choice and might be expanded.

"This is just in the beginning stage of study and a determination would be made by you folks later on down the line and by school people throughout the state," Kahdy said, adding that a national poll indicated 72 percent of the public favors such a program.

Sen. Bill Martin, D-Guilford, said the idea would run counter to the Basic Education Program, which is designed to give every student in North Carolina equal access to educational opportunities. He said the capital investment in one school might be jeopardized if students flocked to another at the expense of enrollment there.

Sen. Jim Richardson, D-Mecklenburg, said there are already choices available, including private schools and home schools.

"We've pumped a lot of money into making an equal education across the state and it seems to me there is a conflict," he said.

Kahdy agreed it would have to be a "controlled situation."

"It is not intended to be something where a student might want to be with a friend who lived all the way across town," he said.

Sen. Dennis Winner, D-Buncombe, pointed out that North Carolina is not like the states that have schools of choice.

"Perhaps this idea is more important in other states than it is here because other states do not have unified state school systems," he said, noting that North Carolina is one of three states that pay local schools' operating expenses.

Sen. Richard Chalk, R-Guilford, said possible benefits should not be overshadowed by resegregation worries.

"I don't think the racial balance is as important as the quality of education they are getting," he said.

One other worry surfaced on a different issue: athletics. Sen. Marvin Ward, D-Forsyth, said in the 1940s efforts to let people change schools resulted in athletes being lured from one system to another.

Episcopal Dissidents Buy Ads

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BOSTON — A full-page newspaper advertisement calling on Episcopalians to take a stand against women priests gives a rallying point to people who are unhappy with changes in the church, one of the campaign's supporters says.

"We are letting people know that they do not have to go along with all this trendy stuff," said the Rev. Titus Oates, rector of Boston's All Saints Episcopal Church.

Oates is a member of the Evangelical and Catholic Mission that gave a test-run Thursday to the ad in the Boston Herald. The ad was aimed at the diocese that last week consecrated Bishop Barbara C. Harris as the first woman bishop in the Anglican Communion's 450-year history.

"Episcopalians! Do Something," read the ad, which included a litany of demands, including the mission's belief that priests should be male. The ad asks readers to sign and return to the group a "declaration of common faith and purpose," and encourages readers to attend a synod planned this June by the Fort Worth, Texas-based mission, a conservative Episcopal group.

The ad was the latest note of discord sounded since Bishop Harris was elected as bishop last September, a position that gave her entry into an apostolic succession that the church traces back to the time of Christ.

At Bishop Harris' consecration as suffragan, or assistant bishop, two men spoke against the ordination, including one who termed it sacrilege. But the congregation of about 8,000 roared its approval when asked if their will was that she be ordained.

The 58-year-old Episcopal priest from Philadelphia has generated controversy because of her gender, her lack of formal seminary degrees, her divorced status and her tenure as former publisher of the distinctly liberal Episcopal publication, The Witness.

Many church leaders saw Thursday's ad as no threat to Bishop Harris' position.

"In one sense it's good copy and is a way for them to fly their flag," said Diane Spence, director of development at the Episcopal Divinity School in Cambridge.

Architects of the campaign say the ads will run elsewhere in the country this spring.

Protest Reflects Turmoil

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BRIDGEPORT, Conn. — The seizure of a Roman Catholic church by dissident Polish parishioners reflects a growing cultural clash between the U.S. church and a new wave of Polish immigrants, a Catholic official says.

About 100 parishioners began occupying St. Michael the Archangel Church on Saturday because they want the Rev. Roman Palaszewski to remain. The priest, part of an exchange program begun with Polish church authorities, has been ordered to return to Poland.

The protesting parishioners claim their new pastor, the Rev. John Bambol, engineered Palaszewski's ouster because the latter was too active in the Polish community.

They said Palaszewski, who has been in seclusion since his removal, brought enthusiasm to the church, knitted together the old and young parishioners, packed the Polish-language Masses and started a Polish-language class for their children.

The drama in Bridgeport has played out at other Polish parishes in recent years.

In August 1987, 1,000 parishioners at a church in New Britain took to the streets to protest the transfer of one of their priests. A month later, Polish immigrants in Portland, Maine, picketed outside their church demanding a Mass in their native language.

One top church official attributed these and many less strident flare-ups across the country to attitudes brought to the United States by Poles weaned on a more politicized church and the Solidarity movement.

"It's two different world views," said the Rev. Peter W. Zendzian, who directs the office for pastoral care of immigrants and refugees for the U.S. Catholic Conference of Bishops in Washington.

"You have a lot of people who were Solidarity members and they were able ... to mobilize quickly and make their feelings known," he said Thursday. "We're more used to getting a committee and studying things. Our processes usually take a little bit longer."

Tornado Hearing

RALEIGH (AP) — A congressional hearing will be held in Raleigh on March 3 to assess the tornado-predicting ability of the National Weather Service radar at the Raleigh-Durham International Airport, officials said.

A tornado hit Raleigh shortly after 1 a.m. on Nov. 28 and swept across the northeastern part of the state. The radar at RDU was not working at that time, and questions arose whether the existing system would have been able to predict the tornado if it had been operational.

"The hearing should provide us with critical information about the National Weather Service's performance and limitations during extreme weather conditions," said Rep. David Price, D-N.C., who requested the hearing along with Rep. Tim Valentine, D-N.C.

an advertising program. You put this building here, and they look at everything else."

About 85 percent of companies seeking to buy land in the state are looking for a site that already includes a building, Chaffee said, and that situation is similar throughout the Southeast. Therefore, the shell structure is a key to recruiting businesses because they are able to begin operations quickly.

Even if clients choose not to occupy the shell, Chaffee said they may like the area and locate elsewhere in Greenville.

"From the development commission's standpoint, this is the carrot," Chaffee said. "We don't care if we sell the building in the first year. If we can have that building sitting out here and end up selling two parcels of land back there for (Greenville Industries), then we've got two new industries."

"Our attitude is — we certainly want to sell the building — but the primary effort of the building is to get somebody to come in and take a look at the community."

"The Pitt County Development Commission is not going to be overly concerned about forcing that building on somebody. If they come in, and they really like the community but there's something wrong with the building ... then we're going to very quickly to show them another site," Chaffee said.

Last year, the unemployment rate in Pitt County dipped to a three-year low of 3 percent, which could create a tight labor market and discourage potential companies from locating in the area, said Chaffee. The unemployment rate for 1988 in surrounding counties ranges from 3.3 percent in Greene to 6.5 percent in Wilson, he said.

But, companies the commission is targeting should not be affected by the small labor pool, Chaffee said, because they are expected to seek educated workers who already hold other jobs.

Other southeastern states, including South Carolina, Alabama and Florida, have had success luring businesses with shell buildings, and nearby areas such as Craven County, Wilson County and Kinston have also landed industry by offering similar buildings.

"It's a countywide program," Chaffee said. "This first building has been selected to be put in Greenville. But, it's a countywide program, and we will go out into the smaller communities and also build buildings in the smaller communities."

"It's a joint venture between the private sector and the public sector. The county has put money into the programs, and there have been a lot of people who have made contributions to the fund."

"By the time that we receive all pledges, we expect to have a fund in excess of $1 million (in the Pitt County Industrial Building Fund) to build buildings," Chaffee said.

Once all the money is raised, Chaffee said the commission's objective is to always have two buildings on the market at any given time. Once one is sold, another will be built.

Students

thanked the student leaders for student support of teachers' concerns and made suggestions of ways the students could better show their support.

Baldree said he and Ms. Jackson told the students that the wearing of a green arm band or green ribbon or the displaying of a green ribbon on one's car, notebook or whatever would show support. They promised that, if the students wished, state legislators would be invited to visit the school and talk about the issue. They also suggested letter-writing and calling the governor's toll-free phone number as other ways to make sentiments known, Baldree said.

After the meeting, Baldree said he then went on the school intercom and talked to the entire student body about the same matter.

The students were reminded, Baldree said, that it is against school system policy for students to participate in "any boycott of any lawful school function, mission or process or participate in any sit-in or any walk-out at any school to which he is assigned or any other school in the Pitt County schools system."

Baldree said the student handbook given to high school students throughout the Pitt County system calls such participation a Category I offense, calling for an informal hearing before the student's principal and possibly resulting in "a suitable punishment or suspension of up to five days for the first offense."

Barry Gaskins, Pitt schools' information officer, said he visited Conley this morning and saw no sit-ins in progress. He said he understood there may have been some sort of show of support for teachers planned by the students during the lunch break today.

Baldree said students have been invited by Mrs. Jackson to meet with her Monday at 8 a.m., 30 minutes before classes begin, for a talk about ways students can support teachers in their seeking of pay increases.

Pirates Hold Off Camels Edwards Passes 1,000 Points In 65-60 ECU Victory

By Woody Peele
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

FAYETTEVILLE — With 1:11 left in the game, Blue Edwards went to the bench with his fifth personal foul and his East Carolina basketball team leading Campbell, 59-58.

But his teammates looked inside themselves and pulled out a 65-60 victory over the Camels in Cumberland County Arena, snapping a three-game losing streak.

For Edwards, who led the Pirates with 31 points, it was a milestone night as he surpassed the 1,000-point plateau. For his teammates, it was an opportunity to show that they could perform without their all-star leader.

Coach Mike Steele said that the Pirates had been having good practices lately, but against James Madison (their previous game), they didn't hit their shots. "Our attitude has been really positive, but we've gotten nothing to show for it. That's why this one was so nice."

"They are really playing well together. We haven't played well on the road and this is a tough place to play. (Campbell) is playing well."

Steele said that when Edwards fouled out, the Pirates didn't look around, wondering where he was, but went to work to win the game.

A key play came on the next trip down the court for the Pirates after Henry Wilson had hit the two free throws he earned on Edwards' foul to draw the Camels within one again, 59-58.

The Pirates controlled the ball for the next 30 seconds, before Reed Lose took the ball on the wing and drove to the lane and leaped up at the foul line. But instead of shooting, he hit Kenny Murphy all alone under the basket when the defense collapsed on Lose. For Murphy, it was a shot he could not miss.

"I didn't know if he saw me," Murphy said. "I was so alone."

Lose said he caught Murphy out of the corner of his eye as he started up for his shot. "I just dropped it down to him at the last second."

Steele said that it wasn't a planned play — but one the Pirates have worked on. "We felt that we could get behind their defense. When his man left him to cover Reed, it became a big play for us."

Another pair of key plays followed. The Pirates knocked a pass out of bounds with 14 seconds to go and Campbell's Mark Mocnik made the in-bounds pass, then cut directly to the basket, taking a pass to score with 11 seconds to play.

Brad Childress then was called on a foul on Jeff Kelly on the in-bounds with eight seconds left.

Kelly hit both free throws to make it 63-61 and when Childress air-balled a three-point shot with one second left, Murphy was intentionally fouled before the ball could be put in play, and his two shots set the final margin.

"(Murphy's basket and Kelly's free throws) and Blue Edwards' 31 points were the keys to the game," Steele said. "Blue had one of his best nights tonight. He was sound inside and outside, he stole the ball and blocked shots and totally dominated the game."

Heels Manhandle Wake, 99-76

By Tim Chandler
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

CHAPEL HILL — It was a case of men against boys.

North Carolina used its size and experience to manhandle Wake Forest, 99-76, in Atlantic Coast Conference basketball action Thursday.

The win marked the third straight for the Tar Heels and kept them within a half game of ACC leader North Carolina State. North Carolina is currently 21-5 overall and 7-3 in the league, while the Deacons slipped to 11-11 and 2-8.

The Tar Heels, who never trailed in the game, jumped out to a 25-9 lead in the first eight minutes and were never threatened after that.

Steve Bucknall led five Tar Heel players in double figures with 21 points, including 4-8 from 3-point range. Rick Fox added 17, while Kevin Madden chipped in 15. Jeff Denny had 13 and King Rice 10.

"We went out with every intention of winning," Fox said. "We knew that Wake was capable of beating us, they've got some big conference wins. We knew we had to start getting ready for tournament time, we couldn't afford any more lapses like we've had this season."

In the end, the Tar Heels had no lapses offensively as they hit 67 percent of their field goals. In the first half, North Carolina connected on 69.6 percent of their shots, while the Deacons hit only 41.9 percent in the opening 20 minutes and finished the game at a 36.8 percent clip.

"They (UNC) played well and were strong inside," Wake Forest coach Bob Staak said. "Madden is so tough to defend, he posts up well and is strong inside. Bucknall hurt us terribly tonight. He caught the ball on the run and shot it from outer space."

Madden keyed the early burst by North Carolina, scoring eight of his points in the opening eight minutes.

"I didn't expect the game to be that way," UNC coach Dean Smith said. "I thought it would be much closer after seeing them play Georgia Tech so close."

Wake Forest, which dropped a 75-70 decision to the Yellow Jackets last weekend, never got closer than 10 points after the opening Tar Heel run and were forced to change from their zone defense plans after the Heels began to light up the scoreboard.

"On the zone, we got easy shots, so that's why they went back to man-to-man," Smith said. "We're an unselfish team, and that's why we're hard to play. We're not taking that first shot now."

Wake trimmed the UNC lead to 10, 25-15, with 11:29 left in the half on a pair of 3-pointers by Cal Boyd, who connected on 8-11 from the 3-point stripe and led the Deacons with 24 points.

"Boyd really put on a show with the 3-pointers," Smith said. "He kept them in it by himself for a while."

Boyd hit two more 3-pointers, one with 9:03 left and one with 5:04 left, to keep the Deacons within 10 points on both occasions.

The Tar Heels, however, went to their bread and butter inside and nailed 12-14 free throws in the final nine minutes of the half to take a 49-34 lead in at the intermission.

"We had our chances in the game," Staak said. "We could have cut it to eight in the first half, but twice down the court, we couldn't get shots off." Boyd looked as if he might ignite a Deacon rally in the second half when he copped a 3-point shot with 19:20 left to cut the lead to 12, 49-37.

After Reid canned one of two free throw opportunities for UNC, Ralph Kitley, who finished with 13 points, went down the baseline for a dunk to make the score 50-39 with 18:27 left.

The Tar Heels then went on a 11-0 run to open up a 61-39 lead at the 13:48 mark and end the Deacons hope for a comeback.

Fox keyed the run with a pair of assists and a score.

"Fox is feeling more comfortable now, that's a good sign," Smith said. "He showed 500 percent improvement over the game in Wake Forest."

Baseball Opener Set Saturday

East Carolina's baseball Pirates are scheduled to open the 1989 season Saturday at 1 p.m., hosting Howard University in a doubleheader.

The big question for the Pirates will be pitcher, where one of the few losses East Carolina had after last season was the top hurler, Gary Smith.

Returning are a lot of pitchers, led by Jake Jacobs, a righthander who was 7-4 last year. Brian Berkman, the last Pirate to throw a no-hitter, and Jim Bottomly, a junior college transfer, are expected to bolster the staff, although Bottomly is coming off surgery and has to overcome that.

Sophomore Mike Whitten, 3-0 last year, and Tim Langdon, 1-0, and freshman Tom Moye could also find spots in the starting rotation. Jonathan Jenkins, 5-0 last year, should lead the bullpen contingent along with Warren Hall, a freshman.

The only other big loss for the Pirates was Jay McGraw, a .300 lifetime hitter.

Coach Gary Overton returns 10 players who started at one of the eight fielding positions at one time or another. Calvin Brown returns at first base, along with Mike Andrews, who missed most of last season with a broken leg, and Kevin Riggs at second. David Ritchie is back at shortstop, with Auburn transfer John Gast taking over at third. John Thomas, Steve Godin and John Adams all return in the outfield, although Godin's availability is questionable due to illness. Chris Cauble returns behind the plate, but freshman Tommy Eason could move him out. David Daniels, a hard-hitting freshman, may end up with the designated hitter position.

Following Saturday's games, the Pirates have a single game scheduled Sunday at 1 p.m. at Harrington Field, also with Howard.

Peterson Keys Charger Success

Ayden-Grifton, Farmville Central Meet In Key EPC Contest Tonight

By Tim Chandler
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Ayden-Grifton's Ronnell Peterson

LITTLEFIELD — Ayden-Grifton's hopes of knocking off Eastern Plains Conference leader Farmville Central tonight will have a lot to do with the way Ronnell Peterson performs on the court.

Peterson, a 6-1 senior forward, has proven to be the catalyst for the Chargers this season.

"It is very important for him (Peterson) to play well," Charger head coach Bob Murphrey said. "When he plays well, we're a mighty good team."

Peterson, although playing at the forward position, is the man that quarterback the Charger attack, according to Murphrey.

"When the game's on the line he's the one we want to have the ball," Murphrey said. "He is so good at making things happen for us on offense that he's the one we look to."

And that's just fine with Peterson. "I like being put in that position," Peterson said. "I like pressure situations."

But even in the pressure times, Peterson has a knack for keeping the same relaxed expression on his face, even if things aren't going well.

"I feel like if you can't do it that night, you just have to go back and try that much harder to get it done the next time," Peterson said. "You're always going to have a bad game sometimes. But you just have to shake those off."

The Chargers, 16-4 overall and 8-1 in the conference, have been on a roll since opening the season 3-3. The only loss for them in the past 14 games came at the hands of the Jaguars two weeks ago on the road, 72-68.

Much of the reason for the slow start for Ayden-Grifton this season was a nagging knee injury which slowed Peterson. Peterson suffered the injury during football season and didn't start for the Chargers until the third game of the year.

"Being off his feet so long, he never had a chance to do any conditioning," Murphrey said. "He had to play his way back into shape. At this point, I feel like he's at the top of his game."

Peterson has definitely recovered from the slow start. He is currently the leading scorer in the area, averaging 20.5 points per game. He also leads the Chargers in rebounds with nine per game and in assists.

"I think Ronnell is the type of player that can play any position on the court, he's that versatile," Murphrey said. "He can bring the ball up the floor, he can go inside and score outside."

"But the great thing about him is that he doesn't have to score to make us a good team," Murphrey said. "He does so many things well that he'd still be one of our best players even if he didn't score."

Peterson claims the thought of re-injuring his knee had a negative effect on his play at the beginning of the season.

"I was worried about my knee and that it might get hurt again," Peterson said. "Sometimes I still think about it, but I feel like it won't bother me anymore."

"I kind of put it (the injury) out of mind in the second game against (D.H.) Conley," Peterson said. "I scored 26 points in that game and

Pagano Joins ECU Coaching Staff

Chuck Pagano, an assistant coach at Boise State University the last two years, was named to the East Carolina University football staff Thursday afternoon, Pirate head coach Bill Lewis has announced.

Pagano, a Boulder, Colo., native, replaces Tom Tuberville, who resigned earlier this week to take a position at the University of Miami (Fla.).

"I am delighted to find a person the quality of Chuck to join our staff," Lewis said. "He is an outstanding individual and a superb coach."

Pagano, a 1983 graduate of the University of Wyoming, will coach linebackers at East Carolina. He began his coaching career as a graduate assistant coach at Southern Cal for two years. In 1986, Pagano joined the Miami (Fla.) staff for one season before becoming linebacker coach at Boise State the last two years.

"We feel like Chuck is a perfect fit into our staff," Lewis said. "He joins us from one of the top Division I-AA staffs in the country."

Boise State finished 8-4 in 1988, including a berth in the NCAA Division I-AA playoffs. During Pagano's stint as an assistant there, the Broncos compiled a two-year record of 14-9.

Conley Seeks Regional Mat Title

D.H. Conley's Coastal Conference champions will have three of its 13 wrestlers seeded first in the East Regional Wrestling Tournament, to be held tonight and Saturday at East Wake High School. Conley is the defending regional champion.

First round matches will be held tonight at 7:30 p.m. Saturday competition begins at 11 a.m. and the championship session begins at 7 p.m.

Jacinto Moore (119), Derrick Gardner (140) and Kevin Daniels (145) are all seeded first in the region. Both Gardner and Daniels are defending regional champions while Moore was the runner-up last year. Two other Vikings also placed last year, Steve Allen (112) was a second place finisher while Jason Hamby (160) finished third.

Daniels, with a 33-0 record, has tied the school record for the most wins, while Hamby, with 18 consecutive pins on the year, set a new school record in that category. Both had 24 pins, which ties a school record. Moore and Daniels have 25 first takedowns, while Daniels has recorded 203½ points. They led the Vikings to a 24-2 dual meet record.

Clemson Players' Arraignment Postponed

CLEMSON, S.C. (AP) — A preliminary hearing for two Clemson football players allegedly involved in a fight with another student was postponed Thursday because the arresting officer was unavailable.

Charles Deal, the attorney for the players, said another hearing will be requested. During a preliminary hearing, both sides hear the evidence in the case and the judge determines whether the case should be prosecuted.

Chuck O'Brien, a sophomore linebacker, and Curtis Whitley, a red-shirt freshman offensive lineman, were arrested by Clemson city police Jan. 17 and charged with aggravated assault after a fight with Tomas George Bennett, a junior at Clemson, in a downtown bar.

The preliminary hearing in Pickens County Court was postponed Thursday when the arresting officer, Detective Robert F. Crooks, was not available, officials said.

Deal said it was important that another preliminary hearing be scheduled. "We always want to find out as much as we can," he said, adding that a specific date has not been requested.

Montgomery Happy Sheridan Is Staying

RALEIGH (AP) — Quarterback Shane Montgomery said Dick Sheridan told his North Carolina State football players that no matter what they heard or read, he was committed to the Wolfpack. Sheridan remained true to his word.

"I think most of us had a gut feeling he'd be back next year, and we're really happy about it," Montgomery said Thursday prior to Sheridan's official announcement indicating he would not remain in consideration for the coaching job at South Carolina.

"It makes us feel good inside to know that he believes so much in this program and he believes in the people in this program," Montgomery said.

Montgomery was one of three quarterbacks Sheridan used during the 1988 season, sharing time with Charles Davenport and Preston Poag.

"I didn't get to play as much as I like. I was in an unusual situation," Montgomery said. "But, it was a situation where he told me my role before the season."

"I know that he respects people like myself who are in roles and don't complain," he said. "We all respect him and I know they all have respect for us."

N.C. State Chancellor Bruce Poulton said, "The entire university will celebrate Dick's decision as a statement of faith and confidence in the strides we have made toward excellence both in the classroom and on the playing field."

"Dick's decision is a reaffirmation of the academic integrity of our university," Poulton said. "He believes, as I do, that we can continue to build a nationally competitive athletics program while giving our athletes a first-rate education," Poulton said.

Edward I. Weisiger, chairman of the N.C. State board of trustees, called Sheridan's decision "the clearest possible indication that our program is on solid ground."

"His decision lets us know how strongly he believes in N.C. State's support for that mission," Weisiger said.

Sheridan Stays, But Makes No Guarantees Of Future

By Tom Foreman Jr.
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — Dick Sheridan will be North Carolina State's football coach in 1989, but to hear him talk would indicate that 1990 in Raleigh isn't necessarily etched in stone.

"I don't think it's wise for any coach to ever make any general, final statements about the job status or where you're going to be. Things change in athletics," Sheridan said after announcing he had asked that his name be removed from consideration to succeed the late Joe Morrison as head football coach at South Carolina.

"I can say exactly what I've said all along. I'm not looking for a job. I'm very happy here at North Carolina State," Sheridan said. "But at the same time, just like in any profession, it's always wise that if someone thinks enough of our staff that they want to talk, that we would listen. That's all that we've done in this particular case."

For the second time in less than three months and the third time in three years, Sheridan was the focus of a school looking to replace a coach. He was one of Arizona's targets after the 1986 season, then became the focus of Georgia officials when Vince Dooley announced his resignation.

The South Carolina job came open after Morrison died of a heart attack on Feb. 5 after playing racquetball with three friends. Morrison had been at South Carolina for six years.

Sheridan's decision not to coach at his alma mater came after a Thursday morning meeting with N.C. State athletic director Jim Valvano and an afternoon meeting with his football team at the Wolfpack football headquarters. He admitted to reporters that the attraction to the South Carolina job was strong.

"The fact that it's my home state and my alma mater, and I have so many friends in the state there, make that position particularly attractive to me," Sheridan said.

But Sheridan said the loyalty extended to him by Valvano and the commitment to those people who have devoted time to the Wolfpack football program made him decide to stay in Raleigh.

"A big part of this decision is not only to our players and the university, but for Jim. I feel a strong sense of loyalty because of that same type of support and loyalty that he's given me," Sheridan said.

Sheridan said he had not been offered the job as had been reported.

In a prepared statement, Valvano said he was delighted with the decision.

"I'm ecstatic about Dick's decision, and especially the vote of confidence he has given our athletic program," Valvano said. "The academic integrity of our program has always been a top concern of Dick's."

Sheridan also said another factor in his decision was the controversy surrounding Valvano's basketball program. Allegations of wrongdoing in the program appeared on the dust jacket of a book scheduled for publication by Simon & Schuster. The book, "Personal Fouls," was slated for release this month.

"I feel like (Valvano) deserves my loyalty and support right now because from my perspective, the allegations brought against him are not true," Sheridan said. "He's undergone a tremendous ordeal that has hurt him personally. I feel like it will be regarded as fact that we do have a very strong, united university here that is committed to academic excellence among our athletes and going by the NCAA rules and to also try and excel through competition."

"I wouldn't want to be part of this university if I didn't feel our leadership ... was not committed to the concept of the student-athletes and the well-being of the people we work with," Sheridan said. "I wouldn't want to be here if it was otherwise."

South Carolina athletic director King Dixon said the search for a new coach is continuing.

"Our hearts go out to Sheridan for agonizing over the decision," Dixon said following an appearance in Orangeburg, S.C.

South Carolina assistant head coach and defensive coordinator Joe Lee Dunn said Wednesday night that he had been told Sheridan had been offered the job. Dunn also is considered to be in the running for the job.

Pirates Hold Off Campbell...

It didn't start out that way, however. Edwards, double- and triple-teamed, had only eight points at the halfway point.

But he caught fire at the break and pushed in 23 second half points, leading the Pirates on a 15-2 sprint to open the half, erasing a 28-23 Camel lead at the intermission.

Edwards became the 16th Pirate to pass the 1,000-point level with 4:13 left in the game when he hit a jumper from the lane. He finished the game with a total of 1,007, leaving him five behind Larry Hunt, who stands 15th with 1,012.

Campbell ran out to a 10-6 lead early in the game, but the Pirates came back to take a 12-11 lead on two free throws by Edwards with 10:33 left.

However, Childress hit a baseline jumper to return the lead to the Camels, 13-12, and they slowly pulled out to as much as a seven-point advantage, 26-19, and held a 28-23 halftime lead.

Edwards scored from inside to open the second half and Kelly followed with a jumper. Murphy then hit a three-pointer to give the Pirates a 30-28 lead with 16:57 left.

Wilson made two free throws at 16:35 to tie it once more, 30-30, but Edwards scored from underneath 14 seconds later for a 32-23 lead and the Pirates never trailed again.

Kelly added a jumper, Brooks Bryant scored from underneath and Edwards hit an 18-footer to run the lead out to 38-30 with 12:58 left.

Edwards hit a three-pointer with 8:56 to go stretching the lead to 10, 49-39 before the Camel's rallied to draw even again.

Trailing 51-43, Campbell scored a pair of two-pointers, then got a three-pointer from Childress to close to 51-50. Edwards hit — his plateau basket — but Mocnik countered from the corner with another three, tying it at 53-53. Edwards followed with a three-point play but again Childress hit a three-pointer tying it at 56-56.

Edwards was fouled with 2:59 left and hit the first of two free throws for a 57-56 lead. At the other end, Wilson drove in for a layup, but Bryant took a charge and the basket was nullified.

"That was a big play for us," Steele recalled. "Brooks probably played his best game for us tonight."

East Carolina took the ball over, however, and Wilson again missed a shot for the Camels. Bryant, knocked to the deck, managed to get a hand on the ball and forced a tie-up and ECU had the arrow to gain possession with 1:44 left.

Edwards hit a turnaround jumper at 1:30 for a 59-56 lead, but then fouled out against Wilson with 1:11, setting up the final minute of action.

Campbell's Billy Lee credited Edwards as the deciding factor. "We did everything we could to stop him and couldn't. I even thought about lacing on my sneakers and trying to stop him."

Steele said the Pirates went to their triangle defense at the start of the second half and that helped the Pirates in their 15-2 sprint. "They adjusted to it but by then we were ahead. They did have some easy shots during that period, but just didn't hit them. We were just trying to keep the ball away from their shooters."

Lee said that the triangle did cause some problems, but the biggest problem was that Wilson was missing easy shots — shots he later made to help bring the Camels back. "But I have to give East Carolina credit. They played hard and they played extremely well. It's a disappointing loss, but we didn't play well during those first eight minutes of the second half. We did have a run and caught up, but East Carolina showed its character then in pulling it out."

Wilson finished the game with 18 points for Campbell while Sanders Jackson had 13 and Mocnik had 10.

No one other than Edwards scored in double figures for the Pirates. Kelly had another outstanding night running the club with eight assists, moving him from seventh to fifth place in single season assists with 97. He needs only 17 the rest of the season to add the single season mark to the career record he's already established.

The Pirates, 11-12, return to the Colonial Athletic Association on Saturday night, hosting American University in a 7:30 p.m. game at Minges Coliseum. Campbell is now 13-10.

Heels Roll...

Bucknall pushed the lead to 25, 72-47 with 9:01 to play when he was true on a 3-pointer.

Wake Forest then made one last push. Guided by a free throw from Kitley and two 3's from Boyd, the Deacs cut the lead to 18, 72-54, with 8:26 to go.

Bucknall and Rice then both hit two free throws to push the lead back over 20 points, 76-54, with 7:49 left in the game.

"They just had too much fire power for us," Kitley said. "We came out with a good game plan in mind but they just took us right out of our plans."

Former D.H. Conley player Phil Medlin continued struggling offensively in the game. Over the past four games, Medlin, a freshman center, has tallied only four points and four rebounds.

"I'm not playing as well as I was at the first of the year," Medlin said. "I don't know what it is, maybe it's my confidence or something. I'm still trying to play hard."

"Defensively, I take pride in what I'm doing," Medlin said. "Tonight we did a pretty good job on their inside game, but they were just hitting real well from the outside."

Petty Added To Daytona Lineup

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. — Richard Petty was ready to call it a day.

"I'm pretty tickled," Petty said Thursday after he was added to Sunday's Daytona 500 as a provisional starter. "It took a lot of pressure off me. I've been feeling pressure all week to do good, do good, do good. Now that I'm in the race, I'm in a lot better mood."

He will start 34th in the 42-car field for the $1.7 million race. Petty made the field by virtue of last year's car-owner points.

This will be his 29th Daytona 500, but the 51-year-old Randleman, N.C., driver, a seven-time Winston Cup champion and seven-time Daytona 500 winner, came close to missing NASCAR's richest and most prestigious event for the first time since 1965.

That year, he was driving for Chrysler, which boycotted the race because NASCAR would not approve its new hemi engine.

This time, Petty was nearly sidelined by his own problems.

First, the owner of an all-time racing record 200 victories could not get his Pontiac Grand Prix going very fast. His qualifying lap of 186.185 mph on Daytona International Speedway's 2.5-mile oval was 45th among 61 drivers who posted official laps during three days of time trials.

The 125-mile qualifying races on Thursday determine positions three through 30, with 31 through 40 filled on the basis of previous qualifying speeds.

In his qualifying race, Petty knew he needed to finish in the top 15 to clinch a starting position in the race field.

He started 19th in the race and moved to 10th by lap 10. But a bumping incident with Dale Jarrett on the 26th lap and a pit stop for a tire change on lap 30 cost Petty a lap and he was never near the front again, finishing a quiet 21st.

"I feel disappointed that I didn't finish higher in the the qualifying race, but the tire going down just killed us," Petty said. "But, I'd be just as disappointed if a tire had gone down in the 500."

"The tire started going down before Dale Jarrett and I got together. In fact, that's what caused me to get

The Associated Press

Neil Bonnett (top) is hit by Lake Speed (4) during first race of Daytona Twin 125 feature into him. I was just trying to hang on long enough to get a caution (flag), because I knew I'd lose a lap if I pitted."

"Then, I almost got sideways coming off of (turn) four, and I knew I had to come in."

Each of the top 35 car owners from the previous season have up to two provisional starts at the beginning of the season. If two ahead of Petty had used provisional starts, the longtime NASCAR stock car star would have been out of the race.

Instead, Ricky Rudd got the first provisional position and Petty the second and last, which would normally be 42nd in the lineup.

Petty wound up 34th in the final lineup when eight other drivers were forced to go to backup cars for Sunday's race after crashing their primary cars in the qualifying events. Under NASCAR rules, those cars are placed at the back of the field, regardless of where they qualified.

Sullivan To Race In IROC

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. — Former Indianapolis 500 winner Danny Sullivan is getting his drafting initiation in a car much different from the open-wheel Penske PC-18 he drives on the Indy Car circuit.

"Whew, that drafting stuff is a whole different art," Sullivan said after a practice session for today's Budweiser International Race of Champions.

Sullivan, the starting Indy car champion, defended fourth today, a spot ahead of Terry Labonte, with whom he drafted considerably in practice. Stock car driver Labonte has considerable experience drafting, something Sullivan had not done on the 2.5-mile Daytona International Speedway.

"We (Indy-car drivers) don't get that at all," Sullivan said. "If we get that close to a guy, you're in trouble."

Sullivan said the race, an all-star event featuring stock and Indy drivers and road racers, would be his first competition since the Indy car final last November in Miami.

"It was getting more comfortable with each lap," Sullivan, the 1985 Indianapolis 500 winner, said of his sessions with Labonte. "It was getting more comfortable with each lap."

Starting inside Sullivan, in the third row of the 12-car field is defending Winston Cup champion Bill Elliott, driving with a cast on his broken left wrist.

But Elliott will have no trouble finding racing room because only 12 cars are involved. Elliott was hurt a week ago, when he crashed while practicing for Sunday's Daytona 500 Winston Cup race.

So, all eyes will be on Elliott in first of four races that make up the $800,000 IROC series. This is the 13th edition of the series, contested in identically prepared IROC-Z Chevrolet Camaros.

Elliott figures to get no breaks from field headed by pole-sitter Rick Mears, the three-time Indianapolis 500 champion who also has won three Indy-car titles.

Flanking Mears in an all-Indy-car front row is four-time Indianapolis 500 winner A.J. Foyt.

After Labonte, a former Winston Cup Champion, the field is, in order, seven-time Winston Cup and seven-time Daytona 500 champion Richard Petty, former Winston Cup champion Dale Earnhardt, defending IMSA GTO champion Scott Pruett, defending SCCA Trans-Am champion Hurley Haywood, defending IROC series champion Al Unser Jr. defending IMSA Camel GT champion Geoff Brabham and Winston Cup points runner-up Rusty Wallace.

Elliott figures to be sub-par for at least the first three Winston Cup races, which he plans to start for points before leaving in favor of Jody Ridley.

Cardinals Top Seminoles In OT, 78-77

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Late in the season, look out for Louisville late in the game.

The 10th-ranked Cardinals, always ready to play their best ball when it matters most, stung No. 7 Florida State 78-77 Thursday when freshman reserve Everick Sullivan made a 3-point shot with one second left in overtime.

"We've had our share of defeats at the end," Louisville coach Denny Crum said. "Maybe the law of averages is coming around for us."

Louisville, 18-5, had dropped its previous two games. The Cardinals fell to Florida State 81-78 at home 10 days ago and lost at UCLA 77-75

Sunday on a last-second goaltending call.

The victory moved Louisville back in front of the Seminoles in the Metro Conference standings at 7-1. Florida State, 19-3 overall, is 7-2 in the league.

"They are not an easy team to beat anywhere," Crum said. "Tell you what, we held this team to 38 percent shooting and still only won by one point."

In other games, No. 2 Arizona beat Southern California 93-70, No. 5 Illinois downed Michigan State 75-56, No. 13 Michigan defeated Purdue 84-70, No. 14 West Virginia routed Massachusetts 88-55, No. 17 Stanford defeated California 97-71 and No. 18

Nevada-Las Vegas beat San Jose State 95-66.

Florida State overcame a five-point deficit in the final 11 seconds of regulation to tie it at 69-all.

The Seminoles led 77-73 with 1:54 left in overtime, but Pevis Ellison's basket got Louisville within two points. Tony Dawson, who led the Seminoles with 21 points, then missed the front end of a 1-and-1 with eight seconds remaining.

Crum said the final play was designed for Kenny Payne, who led Louisville with 24 points and 12 rebounds. But when Payne was covered, the ball went to Sullivan.

"He's a good shooter and he's a winner," Crum said. "He has a tough attitude. He doesn't have a conscience when it comes to shooting the ball."

Sullivan finished with 17 points and Ellison had 16 points and eight rebounds.

"I thought it was payback time for all the 3-pointers we stung some people with this season," Florida State coach Pat Kennedy said.

Tat Hunter had 19 points and 15 rebounds for Florida State and George McCloud scored 18 points.

Louisville led 69-64 with 11 seconds to go when Dawson made one foul shot but missed his second attempt. McCloud, however, got the rebound and scored on a follow.

The Cardinals then lost the ball out of bounds and Hunter tipped in Dawson's miss to tie it at the buzzer.

Arizona 93, Southern Cal 70
Anthony Cook scored 31 points on 12-for-14 shooting and had 12 rebounds as Arizona handed Southern California its 12th straight loss.

The Wildcats, 19-3, are 13-1 in the Pacific-10 Conference. Sean Elliott added 11 points for host Arizona.

Arizona led 28-24 before outscoring the Trojans 11-4 in the final 5½ minutes of the first half. Chris Moore scored 21 for Southern Cal, 7-17 and 0-12.

Illinois 75, Michigan St. 56
Kenny Battle scored 19 points and Lowell Hamilton got 17 as Illinois won easily at Michigan State.

The Illini, 21-3 and 8-3 in the Big Ten, jumped to a 39-18 lead with 5:05 left in the first half. Michigan State got within 10 points midway through the second half, but no closer.

Reserve Steve Smith scored 19 points for the Spartans, 12-9 after their fourth straight loss.

Michigan 84, Purdue 70
Glen Rice scored 21 points and Rumeal Robinson had 19 as Michigan pulled away in the second half to beat visiting Purdue.

The Wolverines led 33-32 before scoring seven straight points to start the second half. Purdue never got closer than six after that.

Michigan is 19-5 and 7-4 in the Big Ten. Reserve Kip Jones scored 25 for the Boilermakers, 10-14 and 3-8.

W. Virginia 88, Massachusetts 55

West Virginia extended the nation's longest winning streak to 20 as Herbie Brooks and Tracy Shelton each scored 14 points against visiting Massachusetts.

The Mountaineers are 21-2 and lead the Atlantic 10 at 14-0. West Virginia led the entire way and was ahead 37-21 at halftime in its 11th straight victory over Massachusetts.

The Minutemen, who shot just 29 percent from the field and fell to 9-14, were led by Jim McCoy's 23 points.

Stanford 97, California 71
Todd Lichti scored 25 points and Eric Reveno added 17 as Stanford had little trouble at California.

The Cardinal is 20-5 and 11-3 in the Pacific-10 Conference. Stanford jumped out to a 15-4 lead and led 46-30 at halftime.

Leonard Taylor shot 13-for-20 from the field and scored 33 points for California, 17-9.

UNLV 95, San Jose St. 66

David Butler scored 20 points and Barry Young had 19 as UNLV used a 16-2 burst in the first half to break away and sent host San Jose State to its 12th straight loss.

The Runnin' Rebels, who had lost four of their last seven games, are 17-6 and lead the Big West at 11-2.

San Jose, playing its seventh game since 10 players quit the team Jan. 18, were led by Johnny Johnson's 23 points and 12 rebounds. Johnson, a football player who became a replacement on the basketball team, scored a touchdown against UNLV last season. The Spartans fell to 5-18 and 1-13 and are just two losses from tying the school record.

Switzer Defends His Actions In Suspension Of Thompson

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

OKLAHOMA CITY — Oklahoma coach Barry Switzer says he was looking out for the university's football's program when he told quarterback Charles Thompson the FBI was investigating him for allegedly selling cocaine.

"I can't worry about their investigation. I had to be more concerned about the OU football program," Switzer told The Daily Oklahoman in today's editions. "That's a hell of a note ... for them to sit back and not let anyone know what's going on. I had to act on what was in the best interest of our program. If they had come to me and cooperated ... no one ever contacted me."

Switzer did not say where he got his information concerning Thompson, but said "I just had a source that told me definitely, for a fact, that they had him, had him taped, bugged, he was set up. When I confronted the kid he told me the truth, cooperated totally. I acted on that."

The coach suspended Thompson from the team Monday and ordered him out of the athletic dormitory. Thompson was arrested later Monday on a complaint of selling 17 grams of cocaine to an undercover FBI agent.

The Oklahoma football program is reeling from a series of felony charges against five athletes — the most recent being the complaint filed against Thompson.

Authorities said the arrest of Thompson was premature and hampered their investigation of drug trafficking in the Norman area.

U.S. Attorney Bill Price said Thursday "there is no federal criminal investigation for obstruction of justice" to learn the source of Switzer's information and "there is no investigation of Barry Switzer."

Switzer said his information "came from people I believed in, and they knew what they were talking about."

"It was as simple as that. I had enough information to confront him and give him some facts. That's how it came about."

Interim Oklahoma President David Swank said Thursday he had "no idea" where Switzer heard about allegations against Thompson. "I found out about it shortly before it was announced," Swank said, refusing to say who told him. "I'm sorry, just like you sometimes have sources of information, so do I."

"Apparently it was fairly common knowledge on the street at that time," Swank said. "The information came from several different sources... I don't know for sure."

Swank said Switzer is in no immediate danger of losing the job he has held for 16 years, but indicated a spate of trouble on the football team may have left the veteran coach on thin ice.

"At the present time I am not going to ask for the termination of Mr. Switzer's contract," Swank said. "I am going to rely on the athletic director and the football coach to get these problems solved. Now, if they can't, we're going to have to look at other solutions."

According to the FBI, Thompson went to the office of Norman lawyer Robert L. "Buddy" Pendarvis after Switzer suspended him Monday and told the attorney he was concerned about what Switzer told him.

Pendarvis said at Thompson's request, he called the player's parents and then called the Cleveland County district attorney's office, and was referred to the FBI.

Authorities said they do not believe Switzer intended to interfere with the investigation. But they have been unable to determine how Switzer, and possibly others on campus, learned of the investigation.

Peterson...

since then I haven't let it affect my play."

Another factor that has pushed Peterson is his longing to play collegiate basketball on the Division I level.

"I don't think there's any doubt that Ronnell is capable of playing Division I college basketball," Murphy said. "The thing holding him back right now is his SAT score."

In order to be eligible to play college ball, according to NCAA rules, Peterson needs a 2.0 overall grade point average in his high school core curriculum and a 700 score on the SAT. He currently meets the core curriculum marks, but has yet to earn a 700 on the SAT.

"I'm going to take it (the SAT) again March 11," Peterson said. "I've been taking a study class and I feel confident that I'll make the 700."

Peterson was enrolled in the study class once before, but had to stop attending once he suffered his injury in football.

Even if he fails to make 700 and earn a spot on a Division I team, Peterson said he will still continue his battle.

"I've talked to some coaches who have told me I could go to junior college first and then transfer," Peterson said. "That's not the way I want to go, but it will be better than not playing at all."

But for now, Peterson's goals are focused on Farmville and then the rest of the season.

"We want to try to go all the way and win the state championship," Peterson said. "We're playing well now offensively and if we improve on defense I think we'll have a better chance to go all the way."

Japan Builds Security Net for Hirohito Rites

By Margaret Shapiro
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

TOKYO — Japanese authorities, nervous about possible terrorist attacks at the funeral of emperor Hirohito, are casting a security net over Tokyo that they say is unprecedented in its size and scope.

Police have been mounting door-to-door sweeps and random roadblocks since Hirohito died last month. During the funeral Feb. 24, large sections of Tokyo will be closed to traffic, almost no cargo will move in or out of Tokyo's airports and nearly 40,000 police will line the streets and patrol the city from a blimp.

Representatives of 151 countries, including President Bush, are planning to attend the outdoor rites for Hirohito, making the event one of the largest gatherings of world leaders ever and a security nightmare for police officials.

Hirohito died Jan. 7 after 62 years on the Chrysanthemum Throne. Radical groups opposed to the imperial system have since warned through leaflets that they will try to bomb or otherwise disrupt the funeral, which is expected to cost more than $400 million.

Already several incidents have been attributed to radicals, including the bombing of a Tokyo shrine dedicated to one of Japan's imperial-era military heroes. No one was injured.

Police are particularly concerned about the Japanese Red Army, a Mideast-based group thought to be responsible for the 1987 bombing of a club in Naples that was frequented by U.S. servicemen. Five persons were killed.

Two other groups have threatened action against the funeral, the Revolutionary Labor Cooperative Front and the ultraleftist Chukakuha, which launched ineffectual rocket attacks on the 1986 financial summit of the industrialized democracies in Tokyo. No arrests were made in those attacks.

Police this week arrested a member of the Revolutionary Labor Front who was carrying designs for a mortar shell that could be used in a rocket-launched attack. Hirohito's funeral will be held outdoors under a tent in a fenced garden park. Before the funeral, there will be a four-mile motorcade through downtown Tokyo. The park, Shinjuku Gyoen, has been closed to the public for weeks and is under 24-hour guard by police.

Tokyo police have been conducting door-to-door checks of houses, apartments and other buildings within about a three-mile radius of Shinjuku Gyoen, according to some reports, because that was about the range of the homemade rockets fired at the financial summit.

Police also have been pulling over cars and trucks for spot-checks at random roadblocks throughout Tokyo with increasing frequency.

The Tokyo Metropolitan Police will put 32,000 of its 40,000 officers on the street on the day of the funeral, most of them to form a human barricade along the funeral procession route. An additional 6,000 police from outside Tokyo will help provide security.

Yasuhiro Chikaishi, senior superintendent of the Tokyo Metropolitan Police, said his officers will also provide security to all foreign dignitaries. Bush will travel with Secret Service agents, but they and other foreign security officials will not be allowed to carry their guns in line with Japan's strict gun-control laws, Chikaishi said.

Japan's Transport Ministry has banned most cargo shipments into and out of Tokyo's two airports from Feb. 22-26 to prevent a bomb from being detonated at the airport. Checked luggage will be searched twice, and only ticketed passengers will be allowed into Haneda Airport in downtown Tokyo.

The banning of all but medical and emergency supplies is expected to have a significant impact on daily life, since much of Tokyo's fresh produce, fish and flowers is imported by air. Some of it will be flown to other airports in Japan and then transported by truck to Tokyo.

Next week, police also will begin patrolling the shore near the airport and checking about 2,000 manholes around Haneda in an effort to prevent sabotage of underground communication lines.

Right-Wing South Africans Propose All-White Nation

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa — A group of right-wing academics who believe black majority rule is inevitable have proposed creating an all-white, Afrikaner nation in a thinly populated section of western South Africa.

Carel Boshoff, leader of the Afrikaner Freedom Movement, outlined details of the proposed nation Thursday that he said would include the Atlantic coastline starting about 60 miles north of Cape Town and extend 300 miles inland. The area contains no major cities, and much of it is desert.

Boshoff's as-yet-nameless nation also would include the southern half of Namibia, but that South African-ruled territory is due to gain independence by early next year.

His proposal contrasts sharply with the demand of a nationwide extremist group, the Afrikaner Resistance Movement, for creation of a whites-only state consisting of Transvaal and the Orange Free State, two of South Africa's four provinces. Both provinces have vast farming areas and numerous gold mines, and Transvaal includes the major cities of Pretoria and Johannesburg.

Boshoff is a theologian and a former chairman of the Broederbond, a secretive society of influential Afrikaners. He is the son-in-law of the late Prime Minister Hendrik Verwoerd, who designed South Africa's apartheid system in the 1950s.

Boshoff's proposal represents a reversal of the ideology of Verwoerd, who sought to relocate blacks in nominally independent rural homelands while whites controlled the bulk of the country, including the industrial centers, gold mines, ports and best farmland.

Boshoff contends establishment of a small, whites-only nation is the only way of ensuring the survival of the Afrikaners, the mainly Dutch-descended whites who make up about 60 percent of South Africa's 5 million whites.

In a controversial policy document last year, Boshoff said Afrikaners should abandon hope of dominating the entire country, where the 26 million blacks outnumber whites more than 5-to-1.

"Minority domination as currently practiced in South Africa is morally unjustifiable," he wrote.

The National Party government rejects the idea of a white homeland. It is struggling to find support for its concept of racial power-sharing, in which blacks would be brought into central government but would not be allowed to overrule white interests.

Boshoff said he envisioned a transitional period in which Afrikaners would move to the proposed white nation while it remained under South African control. He said infrastructure would be improved with government grants similar to those extended to black homelands.

Boshoff acknowledged the area is dry, but suggested that the region along the Orange River, which forms the South Africa-Namibia border, could be developed for agriculture.

Britain Is Taking Rushdie Threat 'Extremely Serious'

LONDON (AP) — Authorities said they were taking "extremely seriously" a threat in India to bomb British Airways flights because of the controversy over Salman Rushdie's book "The Satanic Verses."

Britain protested to Iran after Ayatollah Khomeini urged Moslems to kill Rushdie, an Indian-born British citizen, because he wrote a book that religious zealots say slanders Islam. Iranian religious leaders have offered a $5.2 million bounty for the killing of Rushdie.

West Germany today announced it was recalling its senior diplomat from Tehran to show its "deep consternation" over the death threat, which it said poses "an embarrassment for German-Iranian relations."

An Italian magazine today quoted Iran's ambassador to the Vatican as saying that publishers planning an Italian edition of the novel should be killed and he would be willing to personally carry it out.

Rushdie, 41, and his wife, American novelist Marianne Wiggins, remained under police guard today at an undisclosed site in Britain in fear of their lives.

In Iran today, President Ali Khamenei demanded that Britain explain why it permitted the publication of the book, the official Islamic Republic News Agency reported.

The agency, monitored in Cyprus, quoted Khamenei as saying during prayers in Tehran that "the British government must respond and explain... why it has allowed one of its dependents to make such a blunder."

"This wretched man (Rushdie) has no choice but to die because he has confronted himself with a billion Moslems and with the imam (Khomeini)," the president was quoted as saying.

It said demonstrators shouted "Death to Britain and America!" Iranian leaders declared today a "day of anger" against the novel.

In Montreal, Transport Secretary Paul Channon said Thursday that his officials in London, British Airways and security services were evaluating the threat.

"We are taking it extremely seriously," he said.

United News of India said a man claiming to speak for the previously unknown "Iranian Guards" telephoned the news agency's Bombay office Thursday and threatened to bomb British Airways planes unless Rushdie emerged from seclusion. The airline tightened security on flights from London to Asia.

In Washington, the State Department said Thursday it was "appalled" by the Iranian death threats and denounced such actions as "completely irresponsible."

Japanese Labor Ministry Raided

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOKYO — Authorities investigating a major stock scandal today raided the main offices of the Labor Ministry and nine of its other facilities, and they arrested a former ministry official.

Shigeru Kano, 55, former head of the Labor Ministry's employment service division, became the eighth suspect and the first former government official to be arrested in connection with the scandal. Since the scandal broke, 20 people, including three government ministers, have resigned their positions.

Kano resigned from his post in January after reports surfaced linking him to the stock scandal, in which selected politicians, bureaucrats and others were offered bargain-priced unlisted shares in Recruit-Cosmos Co., a real estate subsidiary of the information-service conglomerate Recruit Co.

Shareholders earned large profits after the stock was offered for over-the-counter trading, raising the issue of bribery and favor-granting on the part of those involved.

The Tokyo District Prosecutors Office and Justice Ministry officials charged Kano played a major role in easing restrictions on employment information publishing, a move that would benefit Recruit Co., which earns 60 percent of its income from publishing employment-related information.

Recruit officials allegedly spent $10,000 wining and dining Kano in return for his assistance in easing the restrictions, prosecutors claim.

Following Kano's arrest, 15 investigators from the prosecutors office raided the main building of the Ministry of Labor, as well as nine other ministry-related facilities, to search for evidence against the former official, who resigned in January.

Prime Minister Noboru Takeshita described the raid on a public office as "a very serious matter." He addressing legislators in a parliamentary committee but refused further comment on the latest development, saying he didn't yet have all the details.

Public support for Takeshita has been severely waning, a number of public opinion surveys have shown recently. A relative and an aide of Takeshita were invited to purchase the Recruit-Cosmos shares, but the prime minister himself has denied knowledge of the transactions.

Chief Cabinet Secretary Keizo Obuchi, another high-ranking official in the scandal, said today that he regretted the arrest of a public official.

Also today, opposition parties stepped up demands in the Diet, or Japanese parliament, that former Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone appear before a parliamentary committee for questioning on his own links to Recruit.

Nakasone was one of 17 politicians who earned hefty profits in the transaction of unlisted shares.

Asia Watch Reports Atrocities

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — A U.S. human rights organization accuses the Khmer Rouge of resorting to atrocities against Cambodian refugees that are "chillingly reminiscent" of policies blamed for more than 1 million deaths in 1975-79.

Asia Watch, a private monitoring group, said nearly 100,000 refugees are virtual prisoners in camps in Thailand but controlled by the Khmer Rouge, the Marxist group that ruled Cambodia from 1975 into 1979.

It said the refugees are subjected to torture, summary executions, forced labor, denial of food and exposure to mines and shelling.

In the camps, "policies that have made them international pariahs" are again pursued by the Khmer Rouge, Asia Watch said in a 45-page report based on recent interviews along the border and news dispatches.

"Systematic human rights abuses ... and the determination to keep refugees away from the 'con-taminating' influence of Western and international aid agencies are chillingly reminiscent of the barbarous practices that characterized Khmer Rouge rule in Cambodia from 1975-79," it said.

Marked by purges, starvation and depopulation of cities, those years became known as "The Killing Fields" era, the title of a U.S. motion picture on the period.

"The international community must now insist that refugees in Khmer Rouge-controlled camps be allowed to choose whether they wish to remain in those camps or be transferred elsewhere," it said.

The report was issued Thursday, on the eve of weekend diplomatic talks in Jakarta, Indonesia, aimed at ending the 10-year Vietnamese occupation of Cambodia that ended Khmer Rouge rule.

Asia Watch said recent Khmer Rouge activities suggest a coming bid to regain power in Cambodia, and that Thailand should be persuaded to crack down against the group.

The United States, numerous human rights organizations, and Asian governments participating in the Jakarta talks all have declared opposition to a return of Khmer Rouge control.

The report said there is a danger that protection of the Cambodian refugees will be overlooked during fast-paced diplomatic activity on Cambodia involving China, the Soviet Union, Vietnam, and the Association of Southeast Asian Nations.

"A change in Thai government policy is the first step," Asia Watch said. "International pressure on Thailand to establish and enforce international access to all refugee camps is essential."

The Thais, seeking to use the Khmer Rouge "as a buffer between the Thai military and Vietnamese forces inside Cambodia, have acquiesced in the Khmer Rouge's refusal to let civilians who wish to do so leave camps under its control," it said.

But a new phase of the conflict, with prospects for Vietnamese withdrawal and solution of Cambodia's external problems, no longer justifies this, it added. Asia Watch said the Khmer Rouge depend on Thailand for food, arms and other logistical support.

"Weapons supply to the Khmer Rouge and the transfer of these weapons across the Thai border into Cambodia should be terminated immediately," it said. "It is clear from ... its efforts to stockpile weapons inside Cambodia that the Khmer Rouge is preparing for a protracted war."

Asia Watch described teen-agers and women forced to carry weapons and ammunition from Thailand across heavily mined frontier zones into Cambodia, with heavy casualties, denial of medical care and abandonment of the crippled.

Between last June and November, the Khmer Rouge attempted to shift 15,000 refugees to Cambodia from widely separated locations in Thailand, it said, indicating "they were part of a central policy" probably ordered by leaders Pol Pot and Ieng Sary, "who observers believe continue to be the primary decision-makers."

U.S. Food Begins Journey To Sudan

LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

NAIROBI, Kenya — The first truckload of U.S. government emergency food bound for southern Sudan left here Thursday, beginning what relief officials said is an operation intended to prevent recurrence of a famine that last year took tens of thousands of lives.

But even as the truck was leaving, some relief officials expressed concern that the effectiveness of the U.S.-funded operation could be hampered by lack of reliable information about the emergency food needs in the rebel-held region.

The 10-ton shipment of high-energy cereal is expected to arrive in the Sudanese town of Kapoeta by Saturday, according to a western relief official here. Another 20 tons is expected to arrive Monday.

The convoy was arranged by the California-based, private relief agency World Vision with the help of a private Norwegian relief agency. World Vision has contracted with the U.S. government to ship more than 3,400 tons of corn to Kapoeta before the beginning of the rainy season in April. It is for the estimated 110,000 people who have gathered there to escape Sudan's six-year civil war.

Except for a few government-held cities, southern Sudan — a vast, roadless region larger than Texas — is controlled by the rebel Sudanese People's Liberation Army. Fighting between the rebels and the Moslem-dominated Khartoum government has displaced more than 1.5 million civilians. The war was largely responsible for last year's famine, which produced the highest death toll since the 1984-85 famine in Ethiopia. Some relief officials have said that 250,000 people starved to death in Sudan in 1988.

Thursday's food shipment was the first tangible result of a change in U.S. policy announced earlier this year. The State Department said in January that it would enlist private relief agencies to bring food into rebel-held areas. Previously, Washington had restricted its relief food to government-held towns for fear of affronting Sudan's government, a strategic American ally.

Roger Winter, executive director of the private U.S. Committee for Refugees and one of a group of American relief officials who have lobbied hard for the U.S. aid, said the shipment was a welcome sign that the U.S. government was "finally" moving in the right direction. He said the Bush administration had done more in three weeks for starving civilians in Sudan than the Reagan administration had accomplished in the previous seven months.

Winter, one of several American relief officials to visit Kapoeta in recent weeks, said it was important that distribution of the U.S. food go ahead despite incomplete information about food needs. "You almost have to start doing something. One of the things we've been critical of the U.S. government for is waiting for perfect solutions."

General Confirms Torture Chambers

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ASUNCION, Paraguay — The new interior minister acknowledged that police under ousted President Alfredo Stroessner had torture chambers, but he said they would be dismantled soon, a newspaper reported.

The comments by Gen. Orlando Machuca Vargas followed accusations in recent years by Paraguay's Roman Catholic Church and human rights organizations that Gen. Stroessner used torture to repress political opposition.

In an interview with the newspaper El Diario Noticias, Machuca Vargas was quoted as saying his ministry would crack down on rights violations by police.

"We are going to eliminate torture chambers in police stations since they do nothing for the image of the country and are degrading to the human condition," he was quoted as saying.

The interior minister declined to give details of the "torture chambers" but said they will be shut down, probably "within a month."

Stroessner was deposed Feb. 3 in a coup by Gen. Andres Rodriguez, who named himself provisional president, appointed a new Cabinet, and accepted the governing Colorado Party's endorsement for president in elections set for May 1. About 50 people were killed in the coup, the government said.

Human rights groups said Stroessner's forces frequently used torture.

After he consolidated power following a 1954 coup, Stroessner eased up on the most blatant human rights violations, replacing murder and torture with harassment, detentions and expulsions, the rights groups charged.

Machuca Vargas said members of the investigative police agency, which long has been accused of torturing political and criminal prisoners, will be prosecuted if formal complaints are lodged.

"We will investigate all the irregularities committed by employees of this ministry," he was quoted as saying. "We're not going to cover up for anybody. ... Our mission is to clean up the image of the Interior Ministry as being a repressive organ of the government."

In a separate development, a judge ordered the release of a Chilean convicted of being an accomplice in the September 1980 assassination of exiled Nicaraguan president Anastasio Somoza.

Rafael Mella Latorre was arrested in October 1980, 47 days after Somoza's car was blasted by a bazooka in a residential neighborhood of this capital city.

"I'm emphatic in saying I had no participation in that. I was a scapegoat of authorities in charge of the custody of Somoza," Mella Latorre told reporters.

"The investigative police tortured me for almost seven months. They even tortured my pregnant wife in my presence, causing a miscarriage," he said.

Mella Latorre was scheduled to be released in 1986 after being convicted and sentenced to six years in prison, but prison officials accused him of participating in a prison riot that January. Judge Tito Medina decreed his release after a witness testified Mella Latorre was not involved.

'Mr. Rogers' Producer Plans A Visit

Hedda Sharapan Will Speak On Issues Affecting Children

By Cherie Evans
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

A storyteller will narrate real-life anecdotes Thursday in Greenville revealing some thoughts and concerns of children.

Hedda Bluestone Sharapan, associate producer on the set of "Mister Rogers' Neighborhood," will speak at the East Carolina University School of Medicine on "Understanding the Feelings of Hospitalized Children," and at the ECU School of Education on "Television, Education and Children."

Her public address will be at 7:30 p.m. in Jenkins Auditorium at ECU where she will discuss "Parenting Today's Children."

As mother of two daughters, ages 15 and 18, Ms. Sharapan knows that parenting isn't easy.

"I think there are real reasons why parenting is difficult these days," she said in a telephone interview. "But, I also think there are real strengths that we bring from our past that make us feel better about ourselves."

"There's enough out there that tells parents they're not doing enough and it works on guilt," she said. "One of the things I'd like to do is play a communications exercise to show us how much we already know. There's enough already of guilt."

The exercise will show "the humanness of parenting," Ms. Sharapan said. Stories from fans of "Mr. Rogers' Neighborhood" will highlight her message, she said. "I think we learn best from stories."

She explained how the operas presented on the show inspired a 10-year-old girl to make up her own operas.

"Mr. Rogers explained to the children that an opera is just a story put to music," she said.

A segment about an emergency room in the hospital helped a 2½-year-old boy get through his experience of having his hand X-rayed. The boy's parents watched the program with him, paralleling what he would experience with what Mr. Rogers discussed.

"The beauty of that experience is that the parent was able to help the child through" his fear while watching the program, she said. "We can help families deal with some of the things that are tough. Family communications — that's what we offering," Ms. Sharapan said.

"Mr. Rogers' Neighborhood," which defies the rules of basic broadcasting with its slow, simple programming, has such an impact on children and their families because of the respect Fred McFeely Rogers has for the child on the other side of the screen, Ms. Sharapan said.

Rogers is the main character on the show, does most of the voices for a large cast of puppet characters and is the producer as well. The show, which began airing in 1966, is produced on WQED in Pittsburgh.

"He understands the value of taking the time to listen; he understands who they are and what they have to offer," she said.

Rogers also knows that "through relationships we grow best," Ms. Sharapan said. He develops a relationship with children by calling his show "a television visit" and calling himself a "television friend."

Because of that approach, children talk differently about what they learn from the show, Ms. Sharapan said. For example, children explain what they've learned

Ms. Sharapan will discuss parenting, feelings of hospitalized children and TV and children ed on other shows by saying "I saw," she said. But, when recalling something from Rogers' show, they say "Mr. Rogers told me," Ms. Sharapan said.

The show is "very personal and it's very human, and he's talking about a basic concern to them," she said.

Of her presentation at the ECU Medical School, Ms. Sharapan said, "there's a phrase that we use here that says feelings are mentionable and whatever is mentionable is more manageable."

She will discuss being honest with children who are hospitalized. "If we respond to them on that level we can help children deal better with what they're experiencing."

Research has shown that informed children "are better able to handle their feelings, they bounce back faster and they have fewer repercussions," she said.

During the presentation at the ECU School of Education, Ms. Sharapan said she wants to "give them a sense of the power of television and to talk about the way Fred Rogers has used television," she said.

Ms. Sharapan's visit to Greenville is sponsored by Adventures in Health at Greenville's River Park North.

Morality Of Children Is Concern For Author

By Mary Jo Kochakian
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

It's a parent's nightmare: children who ignore all warnings and waste their lives with drugs or drinking or out-of-control sexual behavior. Less dramatic, perhaps, but still tragic are those children who grow up disregarding the rights and feelings of others, who cheat, lie and refuse to take responsibility, with no misgivings.

Such behavior is now so common that it's apparent our children's moral growth has been neglected for too long, says William Damon, author of "The Moral Child" (Free Press, $19.95). As a society, we're not approaching the problem effectively because we have a poor understanding of how morality develops in children, says Damon, professor of psychology and chairman of the education department at Clark University in Worcester, Mass.

Social science research has established how morality develops, but the knowledge has not been put to use effectively, Damon says. It has been published in research journals but hasn't reached the public, he says.

Meanwhile, American children are often left to develop morals largely on their own, Darman says, and many parents fail to teach values effectively. Children see people in positions of great authority who practiced unethical behavior.

Family conditions also can work against moral growth, Darman says. Economic hardships and social conditions may make it impossible for many poor families to provide children with the kind of structured family life that fosters moral behavior, Damon says, and "at the other end of the spectrum, frankly, there's too much affluence."

It's not that having a comfortable life is bad, he says, but many children of affluence have been sheltered from activities that traditionally help develop a sense of responsibility, such as having jobs, doing chores or community service, or helping neighbors.

"Moral education must be a cooperative enterprise between adult and child," Damon says. Children need adult guidance, but adults cannot influence children without respecting their feelings and reactions. It is counterproductive to use both authoritarian and permissive child-rearing practices, Damon says. The best approach is an authoritative style that makes firm demands of a child while clearly communicating why the demands are necessary.

This method, which has at its core a respect for children and high expectations for their behavior, is one of Damon's principal recommendations. Some others:

—Parents should share openly their moral reactions to events in their own lives.

—Children should be encouraged to recognize their own moral feelings and urged to discuss them with adults. Children need to learn to recognize and interpret their feelings for themselves in order to control and channel their moral emotions.

—Children need to compare their moral reactions to those of others so that they realize that others have beliefs that will often clash with their own.

Answer Kids' Questions About God Honestly

By Mary Jo Kochakian
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

Many a thirtysomething parent will squirm when a little one brings up the inevitable questions about God.

Young parents who feel uncomfortable with their own religious upbringing — and they are legion — often can be at a loss when their children start asking the big questions, even though the parents believe in God.

But answer they must, in some fashion. Far better that it be honest and open — even if indefinite — than unresponsive, says David Heller, author of "Talking to Your Child About God" (Bantam, $12.95).

Parents lose the opportunity to begin a meaningful dialogue about religion only if they are so uncomfortable that they don't want to talk, Heller says. "I don't think you lose out if you don't have a lot of ready-

'You have the right, if not the moral obligation, to let your child know what you believe about God.'

made observations to give a child," Heller says. "It's an opening of dialogue if all you say in return is, 'Gee, I'm not sure myself, but here's what I believe.' I think that's a lot."

Religion is very important to children, although they may not acknowledge it if the question is posed in terms of church-going, says Heller.

"If you ask them, many kids will say, 'not really.' Then if you look at the substance of what their spirituality is about, their curiosities about the world, where we come from, you find out that underneath, it's very important to kids," he says.

In exploring spirituality with children, parents must first share their own beliefs. "You have the right, if not the moral obligation, to let your child know what you believe about God," Heller says. "But more important, your dialogue will be mutual and heartfelt if you express your own views. Your beliefs will matter a great deal to your child, though they should not be the child's only source of information."

Heller warns that parents should not be "overly shy or unduly dogmatic. Try to strike a balance between revealing your own beliefs and eliciting your child's ideas. If you can accomplish that, your child will learn to appreciate and respect your views as well as his or her own."

Religion means the most to a child when it is translated into everyday concerns such as relationships, so framing your beliefs in such a context is best at the outset, Heller says.

Heller suggests the following ways to keep discussions going. They might also be helpful to an adult trying to think through religious issues:

—Take your child out for an ice cream cone. Ask your child how he or she thinks ice cream and other good things came to be.

—If one of the child's grandparents is deceased, ask your child where he thinks his grandma or grandpa is. Be ready to offer a thoughtful explanation.

—Take your child out on a clear night to look at the stars. Ask your child what's out there in the sky.

—Ask your child to write a letter to God, as children sometimes express themselves most directly in this way.

He gives this letter by a 9-year-old boy as an example: "Dear God, Who do you pray to? If you don't say prayers, do you think you can let me off the hook?"

—When your child asks about some significant family event such as a wedding or bar mitzvah, try to explain the ceremony and rituals in terms of God.

—On the eve of a major religious holiday, try to explain to your child how God is the inspiration for the observance.

—Read aloud a poem about religion or spirituality you particularly like and discuss its meaning. Ask your child what comes to mind when listening to the poem.

—See a film (such as "Miracle on 34th Street") or take your child to a play with a religious theme. Ask the child's opinion, and ask what God has to do with it.

—Ask your child to role-play God with a set of family dolls. For example, ask, "What does God have to say to the little girl?"

Study: Divorce Has A Lasting Impact on Children

By Joan Kelly
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

It has barely reached the bookstores, let alone the talk-show circuit, but it is already causing a stir.

"Second Chances — Men, Women & Children, A Decade After Divorce," by Judith Wallerstein and Sandra Blakeslee (Ticknor & Fields; $19.95), presents the first long-term study of families after divorce. A recently published excerpt, saying that many children suffer serious latent reactions to divorce, sent some parents into panic. Some, skimming the piece, concluded that it was too painful to read.

"I just wanted to avoid it because it's something I've been dealing with for a long time," said a professional man in his 50s with two grown daughters. "The effects on them were marked," he said. "They're healthy. They could be healthier."

The study indeed offers some sobering statistics. Three in five children felt rejected by one or both parents. Half grew up with parents who were still intensely angry with each other. Only one in seven parents experienced a happy remarriage and half went through a second divorce. One in four saw a severe and enduring drop in their standard of living.

Even more chilling were reported residual effects that seemed to turn up regardless of how well a child had adjusted to the parents' separation and divorce at the outset. But, as painful as the possibility of these hidden wounds may be, experts say, there are ways at any stage to help children heal.

"The book does not say that you are doomed," says Wallerstein, a psychologist and executive director of the Center for the Family in Transition in Corte Madera in Northern California. "The book does talk about a lot of long-lasting results, but it does not say you're doomed by a long shot."

To their surprise, researchers found that more children were troubled 10 years after the family break-up than at five. Almost half of the children studied were entering adulthood as "worried, underachieving, self-deprecating, and sometimes angry young men and women." Some 66 percent of young women showed "sleepier effects" in fears of failure and betrayal in their relationships with men.

"A lot of young people are coming into adulthood running scared," Wallerstein says.

Wallerstein points out that children experience divorce in a profoundly different way from adults.

"The adult who divorces tries to shut the door and go on and create a new life. Many fail; many succeed," Wallerstein says. "For the child, the experience is first the failing marriage, then separation, and then the long period in the post-divorce family — and it's a continuing experience. For the child, there are no closed doors."

"It isn't the divorce per se," Wallerstein says. "It's what you do in that post-divorce family that makes all the difference."

A child's vision of marriage and relationships will continue to be affected by how this, their first model, is experienced and remembered, Wallerstein says. And it is never too late to clear up misperceptions.

Even if the child is grown, an honest, heart-to-heart talk is always helpful, Wallerstein says. She tells the story of a 25-year-old woman who asked her mother, divorced 20 years, to tell her "something good" about her father. The daughter later confided, "Do you know they once loved each other?"

"She needed that," Wallerstein says. "She needed to feel that at some point they had something good. She needed that for the present... for her own relationship."

If possible, clarify the reasons for the divorce, even if it took place many years ago. It may help them understand the nature of their own often exaggerated fears as they try to form loving relationships of their own.

Parents should encourage their children to ask questions about the divorce, says Wallerstein, something they rarely do. "They may encourage children to hear their version of it but they don't encourage honest questions."

If parents can put the divorce in perspective, it can be very helpful, Wallerstein says. Even grown children need to know that what happened to their parents won't necessarily happen to them.

Parents should resist the temptation to deride each other in front of the children as if it didn't matter. "It matters," says Wallerstein, noting that children seemed to fare worst in families where the anger was undiminished.

And what of the parent who has done this for years, even in jest? If it is already a pattern, stop and explain, suggests Wallerstein. Say, for example, "I misunderstood a lot of things and I just realized how upsetting it's been over all the years my talking in a derogatory way... I haven't realized it would hurt or make you feel bad..."

"There's room for civilization, for generosity, and for kindness," she says.

Wallerstein's conclusions were based on interviews over 10, in some cases 15, years with parents and children in 60 mostly white, middle-class families in California. Families were chosen in which the children were doing well in school at the time of the divorce and parents weren't being treated for psychiatric disorders — "divorce under the best of circumstances," say the book's authors.

And while some psychologists and social observers are raising questions about the meaning and method of the study (for example, the absence of a comparable study of intact families), others applaud it.

"I think you have to call a spade a spade and a divorce is a loss," says Constance Christopher, a New York writer who is both a divorced mother and a child of divorce. "It's not wrong to want a better life for yourself, but it's wrong to lie that it's not going to have a bad effect on the people around you."

L.A. Cop Capitalizes On Police Business

By Barry Stavro
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

LOS ANGELES — Like many police officers, when Sgt. David Crockett heads home at night, he takes his pistol — a 9mm Beretta — with him. But after nearly two decades on the Los Angeles Police Department, Crockett has come up with a twist of his own.

Instead of leaving the pistol on a nightstand, he stores it in a bedside holster on the side of his mattress. Why? "Cops are concerned about neighborhood burglars just like everybody else," he said.

He sells the bedside holster to other police officers for $23.50.

Some nights, it gets awfully quiet in the squad car, so to pass the time Crockett has tested a portable AM-FM radio that clips onto a rear-view mirror. He sells the radio for $39.95.

Other nights, like when a suspect kicked out the rear windows of Crockett's police car, things aren't so quiet. So Crockett sells a $9 nylon chain that wraps around a suspect's legs and clips onto handcuffs. Crockett calls this a "Duster Buster." In police lingo, somebody who is under the influence of the drug PCP, or angel dust, is "dusted" and, as Crockett describes it, the chain keeps "your PCP suspect or other obnoxious combatant ... restrained, whether he likes it or not."

Crockett, 42, works out of the North Hollywood division of the Los Angeles Police Department, but in his spare time, he sells police paraphernalia from his mail-order business called Lineup Police Products, which he runs out of a cramped warehouse north of here. He offers about 300 items to police around the country and writes every word of copy in his 36-page catalog, which goes out four times a year to 90,000 potential customers and brings in about $450,000 a year in sales, he said.

He sells handcuffs, gun-cleaning kits and, from $8.50 on up, Slim Jims — the notched metal bars that unlock cars. He targets many of his sales to small-town, Andy-of-Mayberry-type police departments that have a couple of officers, little follow-up training and no access to equipment supply stores. "I do the research and the shopping for them," Crockett said.

The Potosi Correctional Facility in Missouri, for instance, ordered a couple of videotapes that deal with how to defend against knife or razor-blade attacks. "We need to get anything we can get on edged weapons. It's what a lot of inmates use," said Danny Berry, Potosi's business manager.

Many of the books and videos that Crockett stocks offer tips on police techniques, such as collecting evidence at a crime scene. What do you do if you have to fingerprint a corpse whose fingers look like 2-year-old prunes? First, inject water into the wrinkled digit. The same volume points out that if blood drips from a height of 20 inches or less, it will form an almost perfect coin shape on the floor, while blood that drops from 7 feet resembles a scallop shell.

Crockett also sells coffee mugs and T-shirts emblazoned with cartoons and sayings that he composes. One popular mug for the homicide division reads: "Our day begins when yours ends." Another mug shows a burglar in flight with a gun trained on him. It reads: "Cut Court Costs."

Crockett's boss, Capt. Dan Watson, commanding officer of the department's North Hollywood patrol, said: "It's a business he's developed using his expertise from being a police officer. I see it as a combination of serious training aids and novelty items. I know that people here purchase his products."

Crockett has three employees, plus his mother, who does the accounting, and says his business turns a profit, although he won't say how much. It's promising enough that he's thought about quitting the department. Next month, Crockett hits his 20-year mark on the job, so he's eligible to retire at 40 percent of his $50,000-a-year salary.

"I'm having a difficult time figuring out if this is the right time or not," Crockett said.

He got started in 1981 when an artist friend came up with an idea for a humorous police calendar. They printed 1,000 calendars, and Crockett left fliers around the police station and put a small ad in a police newspaper. Two months later, he had 800 calendars left and was looking at a $1,000 loss, when the responses came in from his ad and he sold out. The next year, he put together another calendar and added some coffee mugs and, as his business grew, he moved it from his garage to a warehouse.

Although Crockett only advertises in police magazines, he's careful not to sell some of his products unless customers enclose a copy of their police identification card. "I don't want some people out there to have these products," he said.

Hank Williams Jr. Joins Dad For Duet 'Tear In My Beer'

By Joe Edwards
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — In a rare contemplative moment for country music thunderbolt Hank Williams Jr., he paused in his west Tennessee office and stared at the picture of his parents. He winked at his mother, then fixed his admiring gaze on his dad.

"Well," he said to the large photo showing his famous father. "It looks like I've got a new singing partner and you're No. 1 again."

Hank Williams Sr., a country music legend who died in 1953, and Hank Williams Jr. are finally a duet. Through the magic of technology, they sing together on the current song "There's a Tear in My Beer."

The previously unreleased song by the elder Williams was recently discovered, improved technologically and vocals by his 39-year-old son were added. The result is one of the most anticipated country music releases in years.

"It's a wonderful feeling to be singing along with him — something I never thought possible," Williams said in an interview. "To me, you are looking at two rockabilly stars that finally got together for one hot shot. It's just a very contented feeling."

That's an apt description of Williams' entire career these days. He's country music's No. 1 act right now, having been voted entertainer of the year two straight times by the Country Music Association.

He has a whopping five albums on the country music charts, including his "Greatest Hits, Vol. 1," which has sold 2 million copies.

His concerts — 2½ hour marathons — have set attendance records in several cities. Agents have said he commands up to $100,000 per show.

His music reveals him to be an enduring explorer singing blues, hard-core country and rock 'n' roll. His concerts tingle with fury as he charges around stage, singing his blue-collar anthems and rapping with raucous fans who shout their salutes.

His bold baritone celebrates the South with such songs as "Dixie on My Mind," "If Heaven Ain't a Lot Like Dixie" and "If the South Woulda Won."

But his music is not entirely provincial. His "A Country Boy Can Survive" is about world tensions. "Something to Believe In" is about the struggles of the common man.

He performs his high-voltage music by playing an array of instruments including guitar, banjo, fiddle, piano, steel guitar, harmonica and drums.

"I write songs that most of my fans can relate to, about everyday life," he said. "I play six-seven instruments on stage, and they know if you are enjoying what you are doing."

He's also had a turbo-charged lifestyle, having survived cocaine use, suicide attempts and a 500-foot fall off a Montana mountain in 1975 that required a year of anguished recovery. His ever present beard and sunglasses hide the stubborn scars. A spiffy cowboy hat tops off his commanding 6-foot-2 frame which tapers to gleaming cowboy boots.

"I don't sit around the penthouse and polish my nails," he said.

HANK WILLIAMS JR.

Williams, who was just 3 when his father died, has recorded more than 50 albums. At one point in 1982, he had an unprecedented nine LPs on the country music charts.

He made his first public performance at age 8 and was appearing on the road not long thereafter. He is a high school dropout. This year marks his 25th year as a recording artist.

"I'm proud of it," he said. "The longevity has been good. It's hard to imagine all the good things that have happened in (just) the past eight years. And I aim high."

He inherited a famous name from his father, who in the early 1950s was country music's top star with hits including "Your Cheatin' Heart," "I'm So Lonesome I Could Cry" and "Hey Good Lookin'."

But it wasn't until this decade that the younger Williams decided to carve his own style and not be a clone of his father.

"I just started doing what I wanted to do not that long ago," he said. "All that before doesn't count in my book; I was just a kid; it was do this, do that. I was not that enamored with the music business then. It was all built in for me."

He has used music videos to good advantage, enlisting rock 'n' roll stars Van Halen, comedians Cheech and Chong and pro football stars among dozens of other celebrities who have appeared in them.

Ohio's Whistling Musician Performs With A Pucker

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHAGRIN FALLS, Ohio — In an increasingly high-tech world of music, all Ron McCroby needs to perform is his pucker.

Of course, a microphone with a wind shield helps when he goes before a large audience as a jazz or classical whistler.

Indeed, McCroby has coined the word "puccolo" to describe his wind instrument, a sort of piccolo formed by puckering his lips.

"Puccolo is an instrument created by the lips. It's my word," he says. "I think to have my word in the dictionary some day would be great. I'm a puccoloist. I've been whistling ever since I was a little kid."

McCroby has gone from advertising executive in Cincinnati to musician of some renown. He has performed internationally, appeared at major jazz festivals and on network television, while creating two jazz albums and one classical album.

Seven years ago, McCroby's wife, Barbara, suggested he record his whistle. At the time, he was a part-time musician playing clarinet in dance bands.

"I made a little tape and got some interest," he says. "I started to think that maybe there is something here. In addition to just being able to technically do this, I had a lot of musical background. The listener could say, 'Wait a minute. That's real music this guy is doing, not some freaky bird call.'"

A tape McCroby made in 1981 of jazz whistling landed him an appearance on the Merv Griffin Show. A guitar player on the show took his tape to the producer of the Monterey Jazz Festival, and McCroby was invited. He displayed the art of puccolo in 1982 at the 25th Monterey Jazz Festival, an event which featured many of the jazz greats.

"Well, that was it. That did it. That even got picked up by CBS Evening News. After that, I signed a recording contract."

McCroby, 55, the father of six, moved his family to Chagrin Falls 3½ years ago after living some 20 years outside Cincinnati. He says his new neighbors have only a vague idea of his musical accomplishments. They do know he travels a lot.

He says he feels accepted as more than just an oddity in jazz circles.

"With a lot of the jazz players," he says, "when I first came on the scene they would wonder, 'Oh really? You're going to whistle? Can't wait, man.' Then I start doing some things and they say, 'This guy is an official player. He just uses a different instrument.'"

McCroby says he does not need to practice his whistling technique. His "circular breathing" method makes his whistle consistent, whether he inhales or exhales.

"It's to the point now where if I can think it, I can pretty well execute it. There are no fingering problems. There is no real range difficulty. There are no sharps or flats that I really have to worry about, although generally speaking I do most tunes in the standard key they are written in. I sound like a piccolo."

McCroby, a chubby, bald man with glasses, seems likely to be the start of a practical joke when he appears on stage with no instrument in hand. Once he begins to whistle, his eyelids tighten, reflecting his concentration, and the fingers of his left hand often play notes on an imaginary clarinet.

"When I'm out there performing, I am definitely into it, because it's very serious work I'm doing," McCroby says.

One of his recent thrills was performing with the Cleveland Orchestra.

Service Still Key For Him

Old-Timer Believes In Wiping Windshields

By Wayne Knuckles
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MIDDLESBORO, Ky. — Charles Siler started in the service station business when "service" was more than just a name.

In 1938, he came to Middlesboro from Williamsburg as an $18-a-week assistant manager at the Standard Oil station on the corner of 19th Street and Cumberland Avenue.

"Fill 'er up, sir?" the nattily dressed attendant would ask cheerfully as he cleaned the windshield and offered to check the tires and look under the hood at no extra charge.

"We had to go to school on all that stuff — how to wait on a car," says Siler, who completed 50 years at the station at the end of December.

Siler still runs the station, now called Chevron, in much the same way he did in the late '30s.

At 77, he shows no sign of slowing down as he moves out the door to pump gas then back again to make change, fill out a credit card slip and trade banter with three or four buddies, each of whom he calls "Hoss."

"I still get up at 5:30 every morning, and I don't usually go home to eat supper until about eight o'clock at night," he says.

Pumping gas really meant pumping gas when he first began in the business, Siler recalls.

"Gas sold for about 25 cents a gallon, and the pumps had a handle on the side for you to pump the gas up by hand into a little glass globe and then let it out," he says.

These days, he says, with few full-service stations available, motorists tend to neglect the service on their cars until it becomes a problem.

"It's a sight now the people who come in here and there's not even that much oil showing on the stick," he adds, pinching his thumb and forefinger together. "People seem to want to wait on themselves now, but they don't always do a good job of it."

Siler has never had any real problems at the station, except for the one time he was robbed.

"This fella came in here and he had a gun, and we asked him if that thing would shoot. And he went 'blooey' and shot a hole in the roof," Siler says.

The bullet hole is still there. He's long past the age when many people start thinking about retirement, but Siler says the idea has never crossed his mind.

"I've got to have something to do," he says. "I've worked in a garage or a service station all my life. That's all I've ever known. I love this place. It's home to me."

Hollywood Owes A Debt To Jewish Immigrants

By Hillel Italie
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — The celebrated writer Ben Hecht once said that the "persistent banality of the movies is due to the 'vision' of their manufacturers."

This, he said, "is usually a man who has no taste to be violated or intelligence to be distorted. He admires with his whole soul the drivel his underlings produce in the factory."

Hecht, co-author of that irreverent look at the news business, "The Front Page," and a major screenwriter of the 1930s and '40s, was assailing the studio bosses who ruled Hollywood during its "Golden Age."

But the transformation of Hollywood from cow town to tinsel town could not have happened without such men as Adolph Zukor, Louis B. Mayer, Harry Cohn and Harry and Jack Warner. They were all immigrants, Jewish immigrants who arrived in this country in the late 19th century.

"The story is the story of not only Jewish immigrants, but all immigrants," said film critic Neil Gabler, author of "An Empire of Their Own" (Crown, $24.95) which chronicles the role played by Jewish immigrants in the rise of Hollywood.

"These individuals created their own alternate America. It's not particular to just five individuals, it's particular to 5 million."

Zukor was born in Hungary in 1873. Orphaned at an early age, he was raised by an uncle who was a rabbinical scholar. Mayer was born in Russia around 1885 and would later claim the Fourth of July as his birthday. His father, Jacob, was a peddler unable to keep his family out of poverty.

Harry and Jack Warner were born in Poland, but ended up traveling around the United States while their father pursued a career as a cobbler. They would eventually settle in Youngstown, Ohio. Harry Cohn was born in 1891 in New York City, the son of a tailor. He quit school at 14.

They were determined to succeed, to break out of the cycle of poverty and failure that had marked their childhoods. But for a Jewish immigrant at the turn of the century, the options were limited.

"They couldn't go to most universities," Gabler noted. "They couldn't enter most professions, not even law. There were two Jewish lawyers in all of Southern California."

So one by one, they drifted into the film business, which at the time consisted of nickelodeon houses.

Some came in by accident. Zukor wandered into a Chicago theater in 1897, saw a film of a scene from the Broadway hit, "The Widow Jones," and was impressed enough to eventually open his own arcade. Cohn, and others, were brought into the business by relatives.

The industry began to take hold the following decade as nickelodeons gave way to feature films. By the '20s, movies were big business and the Jewish immigrants were in charge of the major studios. Zukor headed up Paramount, the Warners formed Warner Bros., Mayer ran MGM and Cohn was in charge of Columbia.

But the studios were more than a business for the immigrants; they were an extension of the moguls' own personalities. Zukor identified with sophisticated and smart, Gabler said, and Paramount specialized in slick, romantic comedies such as Ernst Lubitsch's "Trouble in Paradise" (1932), with Herbert Marshall and Miriam Hopkins, and his "The Smiling Lieutenant" (1931), with Maurice Chevalier, Miriam Hopkins and Claudette Colbert.

The hostile, belligerent Cohn liked his films tough and Columbia became the home of the fast-paced comedies of Frank Capra and Howard Hawks. Jack and Harry Warner considered themselves outsiders and their studio specialized in gangster films, starring actors who put the T in TOUGH — James Cagney and Edward G. Robinson.

MGM was the most "Hollywood" of all the studios, with its white sound stages and art deco administration building. Sentimental films such "Boys Town" and the Andy Hardy pictures reaffirmed Mayer's own old-fashioned values. It was also the studio that made "Gone With the Wind."

"Those pictures were the fullest expressions of the Mayer personality," Gabler said. "He wanted to be father to the world, although in a very 19th century, patriarchal kind of way. He treated his actresses that way. 'What are you wearing?' 'Who are you going out with?' He treated his stars like children."

Mayer was benevolent compared to the other studio heads, who followed Cohn's motto: "I don't get ulcers, I give 'em!" But Gabler saw underlying reasons for their ruthless style.

"Out of context Harry Cohn is a beast, if you only look at his behavior. The same thing may be true of Mayer and Zukor and others," Gabler said. "If you look at them as a group of individuals who felt the culture was against them, then their behavior takes a different context."

The ending for most of the studio heads was more Shaposperean tragedy than Hollywood epic. By the '50s the immigrants had been pushed aside in favor of younger men.

"As Hollywood became increasingly democratized, they were like King Lear, too old to govern. It's a young man's business, for people who have the iron will to succeed. All these various factors contributed to their decline. The thing they most feared did happen; the industry was taken away from them," Gabler said.

He spent five years writing and researching "Empire of Their Own." He would learn firsthand about the power of the immigrants' "vision" after interviewing Norma Shearer, one of MGM's biggest stars of the '30s and the wife of Irving Thalberg, the studio's celebrated production head.

Gabler and Danny Selznick, the son of producer David O. Selznick, visited the actress at the Motion Picture Home in California not long before she died.

"She was a tiny woman and had no recollection of Thalberg," Gabler said. "After the interview, we took her back to her room and put her on her bed. Danny said, 'Do you mind if I kiss you?' and she said, 'No not at all.' She turned her head and said, 'This is my good side.'"

Black Is Most Slimming Color

HARPER'S BAZAAR

When it comes to wearing clothes that make you look thinner, black is beautiful.

Black is the hot fashion color, according to an article in the current issue of Harper's Bazaar, because it is classic, timeless, contemporary and multifaceted.

But the bottom line is that it makes you look pounds lighter.

"Black absorbs light rather than reflecting it, so it hides a multitude of sins. Whenever I do a new design, I do it first in black," said Donna Karan, renowned for clothes that make the most of your figure. She, herself, wears black constantly.

"Black always make you look sleek," said Isaac Mizrahi, known for his shape-defining jumpsuits.

There are tricks for maximizing the color's minimizing effect.

Designer Michael Kors suggested wearing black in the area you wish to de-emphasize.

"If you have great legs but chubby arms, wear a short black dress with long sleeves," he advised.

If you are bottom-heavy, choose black trousers with a white blouse.

Mizrahi likes black all the way, including accessories, for total slimming. "That way you achieve one long line," he said.

Authors Of Love Lines Kept Busy This Week

By Maria L. La Ganga
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

It is Feb. 11, and your intentions are good. You sit at your desk for a full 15 minutes, sweat on lip, pen in hand, heart on sleeve. The best you can muster for a touching phrase is "Michelle, my belle, these are words that go together well."

But it has already been taken. And Valentine's Day is just a few heartbeats away.

The problem is that you've been looking for love letters in all the wrong places. There is a steamy little cottage industry out there, a host of gushing ghostwriters awaiting your order to pen anything from a page-long epistle to a 40,000-word fill-in-the-name romance novel starring you and your love.

All it takes is a phone call. They make a buck — actually between $5 and $150, depending on your request — and you win her heart. Yes, her heart. Because a full 60 percent to 80 percent of the clients are men.

Not surprisingly, February is the busiest season for these sentimental scribes, who have cropped up in the past two years with businesses that cater to our writers block.

Love Letters Ink in Beverly Hills, Calif., did a full third of its business — about 150 standard and custom missives ranging from $12.95 to $24.95 — in the three weeks before Cupid struck.

The two computers at Evelyn M. Brown's Swan Publishing in Placentia, Calif., are going day and night, grinding out some 300 orders this season for her personalized romance novels "Our Love" and "Paradise Dream." The price tag, for 100 pages: from $45 to $150, depending on how personal and how steamy you want it.

Although Victoriana with cherubs and lots of lace, is big in the greeting card industry this year, these agents of amour offer something a little spicier:

"I want to stare searchingly into your eyes," Elliot Essman, owner of Manhattan's Incurable Romantix, writes for his clients throughout the United States. "I want to kiss your lips, first gently, hardly touching, then with the flame of passion."

Martine Greber, owner of Love

Letters Ink, is a tad more subtle: "Before I met you, I would imagine that somewhere you were waiting for me," says one of 12 standard love letters. "At last we met and today, I can touch and love you not just in my mind."

Greeting cards, they're not. And they do little to cause the card industry's heart to flutter in fear.

Patti Brickman, spokeswoman for the Greeting Card Association, estimates that 900 million to 1 billion Valentine cards were exchanged by Tuesday, compared to a few thousand personalized letters and those personalized romance novels known as bodice rippers.

She is not worried about the new competition. "Instinctively, I do not think they pose a threat," Brickman said. "Cards are personal but not personalized. The letter concept is very personal and I think would be marketed much differently than greeting cards."

Personal is not the half of it.

When Greber's customers call in to place an order, they can choose a standard letter that is already in the computer, which is equipped with a calligraphy font. Greber's assistant recites the steamy lines over the phone, the customer responds with a credit card number, and the letter — laser printed on deckle-edged paper — is mailed the next day.

Or the customers can pour out their souls, and Greber will form their words them into something presentable, intelligible.

Don't Encourage The Turkey, Abby

Dear Abby: In case you haven't already been raked over the coals for telling the fellow who flunked the California bar exam 44 times to "keep trying" — here comes the rake.

Abby, no one should practice law who has had to take the bar exam 44 times — assuming he or she passes on the 45th try. Eventually, some people who are marginally qualified will pass the bar exam simply due to learning how to take it. If such a person required 45 tries to do so, I would avoid having him or her as my legal counsel.

How would you like to be operated on by a surgeon who has had to take his state medical boards over 40 times before he or she finally passes them?

Please don't encourage this turkey to keep trying. He might make it, and we already have enough incompetent bunglers out there now, giving the legal profession a bad name. — California Attorney

Dear Attorney: You are right, of course. Much as I admire determination, for the reasons you mention, I should not have encouraged a 44-time loser to keep trying.

And speaking of how difficult it is to pass the bar exams, judging from the number of candidates who flunk on the first try, Vermont's bar is the toughest to pass, and California's is the second toughest.

Dear Abby: I have been a widow for three years and have been dating a divorced man for two. We have agreed to see no one else but each other. He calls me two or three times a day, and we are together every weekend and at least once or twice during the week. We have taken several vacations together and spend every holiday with his family or mine.

If any repairs are needed at my home, he is always there to do them. He is constantly sitting near me, holding my hand or showing some other sign of affection. He seems to care a lot for me, but he's never told me so.

After two years of dating, I'm wondering if maybe I should try to meet someone else. I am crazy about him, but I'm getting older and don't want to spend the rest of my life alone. All our children are grown and away from home and we are both financially secure.

Abby, how can you tell if a man loves you? I'm so afraid I may be living in a fantasy world and will get hurt that I'm considering backing off from this relationship. Please, don't tell me to discuss it with him. I just don't have the nerve. — Wary Widow In Texas

Dear Wary: Actions speak louder than words. Of course he loves you. Your question seems to be: "Am I wasting my time — or is this man going to ask me to marry him?"

That's a perfectly legitimate question, and if you're considering backing off because he's made no commitment, take my advice and get that message to him — if you have to mail him this column. (If you send me his address, I'll mail it.)

If you would like to write to Abby, send your letter to Abigail Van Buren, P.O. Box 6940, Los Angeles, CA, 90069. For a personal, non-published reply, enclose a self-addressed stamped envelope.

PBS Viewers Offered Chance To Sample 'Barber Of Seville'

By Mike Silverman
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — The world premiere of "The Barber of Seville" was such a fiasco that the humiliated composer, young Gioacchino Rossini, fled the theater in fear of assassination.

Luckily, the piece survived that first Rome performance in 1816 and has gone on to become the most popular comic opera of all time.

Television viewers can sample its melodious delights tonight when it is shown on the Public Broadcasting Service as part of the series "The Metropolitan Opera Presents."

Rossini, always a fast worker, claimed he spent all of 13 days setting to music his adaptation of the famous play of the same name by the French dramatist Beaumarchais. The straightforward plot tells how two young lovers, heroine Rosina and her suitor Count Almaviva, triumph over old fogies, her guardian Dr. Bartolo and the music teacher Don Basilio, with the help of some inventive duplicity — provided by the resourceful barber Figaro.

Tonight's performance, taped last fall, is well worth watching, both for die-hard opera fans and for those to whom the words "Largo al factotum" are more suggestive of a prescription for cough medicine than the title of Figaro's big patter song. English subtitles are provided for viewers who don't know Italian.

Chief among its virtues are the performances of Kathleen Battle as the spunky Rosina, and Enzo Dara as Bartolo, the elderly gentleman who is not only her guardian but who wants to become her husband.

Miss Battle's soprano is as ravishing as ever and her voice sounds fuller and more powerful than it often does in the opera house.

Rossini wrote the part of Rosina for a mezzo, but it is often appropriated by sopranos. Few listeners will regret a casting decision that allows Miss Battle to toss off scads of high-flying coloratura the way she does here.

The only blemish on her performance is a lack of spontaneity in her acting and a tendency to rely too heavily on stock gestures and facial expressions.

Dara is a joy to watch, a great comic actor having a field day. And he can sing, too! He brings the house down in his Act 1 aria, feigning heart failure one moment, dancing a jig the next. In Act 2, he steals the music lesson scene right out from under Miss Battle without opening his mouth, nodding off in his easy chair, a glass full of wine in his hand gradually tipping over further and further until it spills.

Unfortunately, the Figaro of Leo Nucci and the Almaviva of Rockwell Blake don't measure up to their co-stars. Both are efficient but charmless, and Blake, while undeniably an expert vocal acrobat, often looks and sounds ill-at-ease.

Too bad the telecast couldn't have borrowed the superior Figaro and Almaviva who took over the roles later at the Met — Americans Thomas Hampson and Frank Lopardo.

The production by John Cox boasts a spectacular turntable set by Robin Wagner that allows a speedy change-of-scene in Act 1 and some welcome visual distraction during the storm scene in Act 2.

Conductor Ralf Weikert takes a brisk, no-nonsense approach to the proceedings. But that's a shame, because the "Barber" IS nonsense — inspired nonsense — and the music doesn't sparkle and bubble as it can under lighter batons.

"Il Barbiere di Siviglia" has long been Rossini's most popular work — aside from the overture to "William Tell" — but its start in life was shaky. Another Italian composer, Giovanni Paisiello had set the same Beaumarchais play to music 35 years earlier, and his followers disrupted the premiere of Rossini's work with whistles and catcalls.

The second night went much better, and by the third night, the new piece was being hailed as a triumph, one that swept across Europe and quickly put Paisiello's work into the shade.

It's the second of three operas televised this season in the Met series. This spring viewers can see a twin bill of Bartok's "Bluebeard's Castle" and Schoenberg's "Erwartung."

Host for the series is actor F. Murray Abraham.

'Passion And Paradise' Is Return To TV Fare

By Kathryn Baker
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Well, we're all just so pleased that the cast and crew of ABC's "Passion and Paradise" got to do part of the winter filming in Jamaica.

That seems to be the best result of this two-part movie, no doubt named "Passion and Paradise" because such a title will draw more viewers than the more apt "Tedium and Purgatory."

Was it only a week ago that we were hailing the triumph of quality in "Lonesome Dove?" Back to reality, folks.

This is a mostly muddled attempt to make a suspense yarn out of the real-life 1943 murder of Sir Harry Oakes, a fabulously wealthy American miner who traded gold for British title and a plantation in the Bahamas. Oakes' murder was never solved, though it likely was linked to his opposition to legalized gambling on the islands, a development sorely desired by organized crime.

The movie, which airs Sunday and Tuesday, sports a rather bizarre cast. Yes, Rod Steiger and Mariette Hartley — together at last!

Steiger and Hartley are actually not bad as Oakes and his wife, saddled as they are with a lurching script that provides ample opportunity for great fits of overacting. Steiger, playing the doomed Sir Harry, manages to last through the first installment.

In the second, Hartley shrieks at one point, "Kill me! Kill me now!" This seems to be part of the dialogue and not a spontaneous plea to be released from the proceedings.

Armand Assante, looking like Napoleon in exile, seems to be making a career out of slouching through overwrought network miniseries. He plays Alfred De Marigny, a count-slash-chicken-farmer who casts aside his history of fortune-hunting to woo and win Sir Harry's winsome — and very rich — daughter, Nancy. She is played with fretful consternation by Catherine Mary Stewart, whose reaction to tragedy seems remarkably similar to observing a run in one's stocking. When Nancy discovers that Alfred has a wife, she complains, "Do you know what this makes me feel like?" A new agent, perhaps?

Oakes is bludgeoned and burned in what appeared to be a voodoo ceremony — there was an uprising among native workers at the time. The rest of the movie is taken up with Alfred's mind-numbing murder trial, interspersed with scenes that attempt to portray everyone else as still a suspect. This is the writing-directing equivalent of trying to keep several plates spinning at one time.

But mystery turns to melodrama. The villains — Mafia stereotypes partnered with snooty Britons — have all the subtlety of a herd of Snidely Whiplashes. Michael Sarrazin does, however, do an admirably oily job of playing the gangsters' evil emissary to the islands.

Beatles Lawyer Sues Video Dealer

TRENTON, N.J. — Attorneys for the Beatles and Michael Jackson have sued to stop a video distributor from selling videocassettes featuring the Fab Four.

The federal lawsuit alleges that Video Wholesalers Inc. of Neptune illegally distributed and sold several Beatles videocassettes, including "The Beatles at Shea Stadium," "The Beatles in Tokyo," "Beatles Concert in Washington D.C." and "The Beatles in The Magical Mystery Tour."

Jackson owns the copyright to most Beatles songs.

After the lawsuit was filed Wednesday, attorneys for Video Wholesalers agreed to halt sale of the videotapes until the matter is resolved in a hearing March 3 before U.S. District Judge Garrett E. Brown.

"This case is of great importance because it is the first time that Michael Jackson and the Beatles have come together to police the valuable Beatles material in which they each have substantial interests," said their attorney, Leonard M. Marks. "This lawsuit sends bootleggers and pirates of Beatles materials the clear message that they will be sued for damages and stopped in their tracks."

David Saka, a director for Video Wholesalers, denied that his company is doing anything illegal. "We have complete rights for what we are doing," Saka said. "We sell prerecorded videocassettes that are made by other people, and made legally. They have not litigated against the manufacturers. We've looked into it, and everything is in order." Saka said the sale of the videotapes is not restricted by copyright laws. Lyle Hough, Saka's attorney, said the agreement to temporarily stop sales of the videotape "is in no way an admission of guilt."

The complaint, filed by Jackson and three Beatles-owned concerns, Apple Corps Ltd., Apple Films Ltd. and Subafilms, alleges that Video Wholesalers illegally made and sold the videocassettes without authorization. It charges that the company violated federal copyright laws. Attorneys for Jackson and the Beatles are seeking to bar the firm permanently from selling the videocassettes. They said they also will ask for financial damages.

Cheryl Ladd To Star In Movie Recommended By Her Mother

By Jerry Buck THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — Cheryl Ladd's new TV movie might have a rather scandalous plot, but the story was recommended to her by her mother.

Airing Sunday on CBS, "The Fulfillment of Mary Gray" is based on the romantic novel "The Fulfillment," by LaVern Spencer, about a turn-of-the-century farm couple who consider an unusual way of overcoming their lack of children.

"The husband, decides that his younger brother can father their child," Miss Ladd said. The author based the book on stories she had heard from her grandmother. The book was recommended to Miss Ladd by her mother.

"My mother's an avid reader," Miss Ladd said. "She not only recommended that I read it but said it would make a fabulous film. I read it and agreed with her. It has great characters and a rich and powerful story. Good stories are tough to find. I worked on the script six to eight months with Laird Koenig."

Miss Ladd's husband, Brian Russell, was supervising producer on the film. Miss Ladd said she liked the story because of the characters' relationships changed. "The wife and the brother had been friendly up to that time, but there was nothing more," said Miss Ladd. "But when the husband makes the announcement at the dinner table, it changes all relationships. They had been married for seven years and had no children. He comes to the conclusion it was because he had mumps as a boy. He's a very religious man and he prays and prays and comes to this decision."

"She's very hurt by the suggestion that he would give her to another man. He thinks he's giving her a gift. Children are very important on farms, and it's important that the land be passed on generation to generation. When the husband goes out of town for a few days they make a baby and fall in love. Now it really gets sticky because she loves both of them."

The movie also stars Ted Levine as her husband and Lewis Smith as the younger brother. Piers Haggard directed. The movie was filmed in Brenham, Texas, which stood in for Minnesota.

"We got the weather we needed, in fact, all four seasons," she said. "We found a farm house from the early 1900s and a grange hall for a dance."

Miss Ladd said she was attracted to the book because it's a strong story that presents "a moral issue that we can all relate to."

"These are all imperfect people," she said. "You can feel the pain they're going through. They're good people trying to do the right thing. The husband is solid, quiet and introspective. The brother is more open and more fun. Put them together and they make a complete man."

Miss Ladd's last television appearance was the CBS miniseries "Bluegrass," but she is best known for the popular series of the 1970s, "Charlie's Angels."

Her latest feature film, "Millennium," which also stars Daniel J. Travanti and Kris Kristoferson, will be out in April.

"I play a woman a thousand years in the future in what's really a time-travel love story," she said. "I come to the present and fall in love. It's written by John Varley, who's a leading science fiction writer. He spent a lot of time on the set. He has a very free and strange imagination." Miss Ladd said she is still asked frequently to do another series.

'Mission Impossible' Will Go On

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Determined to get ratings for "Mission Impossible," publicists sent TV critics tape recorders with a facsimile of the tape-recorded message that begins each episode of the spy drama.

In this case, according to the tape, "your mission, should you choose to accept it" is to watch Saturday's episode, when one of the IMF team bites the dust. The unlucky victim might even be IMF leader Jim Phelps (Peter Graves), publicity promises.

The show is a remake of the popular 1960s-'70s series and was prompted by the writers' strike last summer. The show will not self-destruct, yet. ABC has ordered eight more episodes.

Some bridge players are people-eaters—they cannibalize their partners by making life as difficult as possible for them at the table. But a partner who solves your problems for you is not only worth his weight in gold, but a sure winner.

As a passed hand, South's jump to two no trump showed a balanced 11-12 points. With his fine suit and good intermediates, North had an easy raise to game.

West led the six of clubs, and East made the correct technical play of the queen. Declarer took his king and started to run diamonds. On the third round of diamonds, East discarded the ace of clubs!

Had East lost his mind? Far from it. From the Rule of 11, East could tell that declarer had only one card higher than the card led by West. Therefore, East knew his partner held both the jack and nine of clubs. He was afraid West might think declarer held the ace of clubs, and let go of one or more clubs. This defense was sure to defeat the contract.

But couldn't East have accomplished the same thing by rising with the ace of clubs and continuing with the queen? No! Declarer would simply hold up the king of clubs until the third round. As the cards lie, West has no fast entry, so declarer would have time to force out the ace of spades and come to nine tricks via one spade, two hearts, five diamonds and a club.

Drastic cases require drastic remedies.

John & Candi Staton Sussewell
They Will Be Ministering In Word And Song
Friday & Saturday, February 24 & 25 • 7:30 Nightly
Sunday, February 26 • 6:30 P.M.
Rev. John Sussewell and his wife, Candi Staton, were once successes in popular music.
Mr. Sussewell was a seasoned percussionist who'd played for the likes of Dinah Ross and Ashford & Simpson, while Ms. Staton scored several big R&B hits and was in demand nationwide for club dates and recording sessions.
But both maintain that their lives today are richer and fuller, and that when they became born-again Christians the subsequent changes were so beneficial they had to tell others their story.
