Cold Mother Nature Delivers White Knockout

By John Bare
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

With eastern North Carolina still woody from ice damage and tornadoes, Mother Nature delivered a knockout punch today, spreading more than six inches of snow around the area by early morning.

"There's really nothing we can do. We're basically socked out," said Jim Turcotte, manager of the Pitt-Greenville Airport.

The snow, which began piling up about 5 a.m. and was expected to continue throughout the day, shut down schools across the region, East Carolina University, Pitt County courts and many businesses. With strong winds decreasing visibility and creating deep drifts of snow, driving was also treacherous.

"We've got all the men working to take the calls, to take care of stranded motorists and investigate accidents," Sgt. Robert Taylor said from the Highway Patrol's Greenville office. "We've had a few accidents, but not a whole lot of them yet because there's not much traffic out there yet — and that's the only reason."

"We don't want to be out on the roads, either. It's dangerous."

Leon Tolson, communications officer for the Highway Patrol's 22-county eastern division, said four to six inches of snow had blanketed nearly all roads in eastern North Carolina early today.

"By 6 a.m. this morning, we had dozens of calls for assistance from motorists who have skidded off roads or have been involved in minor accidents," Tolson said. "Luckily, so far, there have been no reports of major accidents or injuries. We are advising everyone to stay home, not to attempt to travel unless it's a case of extreme emergency."

"Anyone who encounters problems on the road may be stranded for hours before assistance may be given."

Crews with the city of Greenville began working before sunrise to clear the roads.

"We began about 4:30 this morning, putting sand on bridges and intersections. At about 6:30 this morning, the snow started coming down (harder) and it hasn't quit since," said Mayo Allen, public works director. "We're prepared to stay here all day, tonight and all day tomorrow if it's necessary."

Two crews of workers are operating on 12-hour shifts, Allen said, and they are using two motorgraders, two snow plows and three sand spreaders. Jarvis Street has been closed for safety reasons and portions of Third Street and Overlook Drive have been barricaded for sledding, Allen said.

Weather forecasts first indicated the snow would begin Thursday evening and taper off about noon today. But it didn't turn out that way.

Passengers Lost In Airliner Blast

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

HONOLULU — An explosion ripped a large hole in a United Airlines jumbo jet shortly after takeoff today, and the plane landed safely with eight to 11 passengers missing and at least eight injured, federal aviation officials said.

National Transportation Safety Board spokeswoman Drucella Andersen said the Boeing 747, which had departed Honolulu International Airport at 1:53 a.m. for Auckland, New Zealand, returned 40 minutes later with a 10-by-40 foot hole in the forward baggage area on the right side of the airliner.

"You could drive an ambulance through it, you could see the seats and the baggage compartment from the outside," said Ray Mews, a photographer for KGMB-TV.

Two of the plane's four engines had failed, apparently losing power after the explosion, according to JoAnn DeCampra, a dispatcher at the airport.

Barbara Abels, an FAA spokeswoman in Los Angeles, said eight to 11 passengers were believed missing from the plane, United Airlines Flight 811, which had originated in San Francisco.

Ms. Abels said authorities had no immediate clue as to what caused the explosion, and a crew from the National Transportation Safety Board was en route to investigate. The FBI also was investigating.

"There's no reason to assume it's a bomb at this time," she said but added authorities hadn't ruled out that possibility.

"All of a sudden, I could see the sky and feel the wind," said passenger Koji Yamamoto, 23, of Osaka, Japan. "The roof was breaking. Something was blowing toward us."

Feds Boost Discount Rate To 7 Percent

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The Federal Reserve Board, citing evidence of inflationary pressure in the economy, today boosted its key lending rate from 6.5 percent to 7 percent. Other interest rates were expected to move higher as a result.

In a statement, the central bank said it was increasing its discount rate, the interest it charges on loans two major banks — Chase Manhattan Bank and Republic National Bank of New York — raised their prime lending rates, the rate charged to the most creditworthy commercial customers, from 11 percent to 11.5 percent.

Economist David Jones of Aubrey G. Lanston & Co. in New York said the Fed's action had been widely anticipated and there even was some speculation the central bank might boost the rate a full percentage point rather than a half-point. He said further tightening could be expected as the Fed tries to control escalating prices.

"It was an appropriate action ... and does bring the Fed into rough alignment with the amount of restraint needed to stay even with the new inflation threat," Jones said. "We are in the process of accelerating (inflation) and it will require further Fed tightening steps."

The Fed last raised the discount rate on Aug. 9, from 6 percent to 6.5 percent. Today's increase was the third since Alan Greenspan took over chairmanship of the central bank in August 1987.

Snow Blankets The State

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

North Carolina's second major winter storm dropped snow from the mountains to coastal areas today, but the brunt of the storm was expected to be felt in the northeastern counties, where up to 12 inches of snow was predicted.

"Conditions are still bad and it looks like its going to get worse throughout the day," said Bill Cannell, public information officer with the state Department of Crime Control and Public Safety.

"The word from the Highway Patrol is to not drive unless you have to."

State officials said they had received no reports of major accidents caused by the storm, but roads throughout the state were covered with snow.

In Asheville, public works employees put 700 tons of salt and 2,000 tons of sand on city streets. Jim Ewing, director of streets, said the city also had some small four-wheel-drive vehicles to get into smaller side streets.

"Much of the state, just about all, is getting snow and a fair amount, but it still looks like the most will be in the northeastern counties," meteorologist Joe Pelissier of the National Weather Service office at Raleigh-Durham Airport said today.

"There's about two to three inches of snow on all the roads and they are passable but hazardous," said Bobbi Kewitt, a communications officer with the state patrol in Raleigh. The patrol said it had no report of traffic deaths in the state related to the snow.

Early today, the snow had ended over the western sections of North Carolina into the foothills from Shelby north to Hickory.

Gale warnings prompted the N.C. Department of Transportation to shut down six of the state's seven ferries that operate along the coast.

The snow across the state was caused by a complex weather system, Pelissier said.

"The thing that makes this somewhat complicated is that it's not Boosting the discount to the highest level in nearly three years is the most dramatic inflation-fighting move the Fed could have taken. Discount rate increases often a signal that other short-term loans, from adjustable-rate mortgages to automobile loans, will soon become more expensive.

Pitt Teachers Welcome Martin's Turnaround On Pay

By Cherie Evans
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

"Where has the governor been?" is a question some teachers in the Pitt County schools are asking after Gov. Jim Martin has "suddenly" come realize" the state's scale for paying teachers' needs revamping.

Martin said Thursday that overhauling the public school teachers' salary schedule must take priority over his longtime goal of implementing the career ladder program statewide.

According to the Associated Press, Martin said he has discovered in recent days that the system is in chaos over an eight-year freeze on teacher progression along the salary schedule.

"I have quite suddenly come to realize how incredibly absurd is the present distribution of our teachers on the frozen steps," the governor said at his weekly news conference. He acknowledged that before deliv-ing into the matter, he had a "completely wrong misperception about what was involved there."

Pitt teachers said this morning that Martin's new revelation will be helpful in their efforts to get better salaries, but it was surprising.

"In his position you would assume he would have education advisers to tell him" about the system and the kinks within it, said Mary-Anne Brannon, a teacher at W.H. Robinson School.

"He may not be aware of the salary schedule, but I'm sure he's aware we're being paid less than the national average," she said.

In addition to an unfrozen, readable salary schedule, teachers are asking for at least a 10 percent raise, Ms. Brannon said.

"Our approach right now is to change the governor's thinking and if he's doing that, that's good," she said.

Martin said earlier this week he is developing a major initiative for public schools that would address the salary schedule problem as well as the career ladder, a program that would award raises for meritorious performance.

He refused again Thursday to discuss details or its price tag but said the plan would include a method for meeting the cost.

"My concern is that he still insists in tying the career ladder to it and I don't think that's possible," said Jackie Wooten, a teacher at Bethel

Senate Committee Rejects Tower

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — President Bush vowed today to "stand strongly" with Defense Secretary-designate John Tower through a Senate floor vote despite the Armed Services Committee's rejection of Tower's confirmation because of questions of character.

"I'm going to strongly continue to back Senator Tower and I don't believe he's going down the drain," Bush told reporters in Tokyo, where he was attending the funeral of Japan's Emperor Hirohito.

The committee, voting strictly along party lines, recommended by 11-9 Thursday night that the Senate reject Tower's nomination after Democrats expressed continuing concerns about questions of his character.

"I cannot in good conscience vote to put an individual at the top of the chain of command when his history of excessive drinking is such that he would not be selected to command a missile wing, a SAC bomber squadron or a Trident missile submarine," Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., the committee chairman, said before the vote.

Bush, faced with a political defeat at home as he made his global debut at the Hirohito funeral, said he believed lingering doubts about Tower would be answered when the full Senate takes up the nomination.

It's Big, But Not A Record

By Stuart Savage
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

The headline at the top of the March 2, 1927, issue of The Daily Reflector read: "Heaviest Snow In Quarter Century." That record was matched in March 1980 and there seemed a possibility that today's snowfall could well be the third largest snowfall of the century.

Forecasters this morning were predicting that anywhere from 8 to 10 inches of snow would fall before the storm passed later today.

The March 1927 storm dumped an average of 16 inches on Greenville and Pitt County. And the Greenville Utilities Commission reported that the accumulated snow fall over the two-day period — March 1 and March 2 — in 1980 averaged 16 inches, with melted precipitation totaling 2.01 inches.

Weather forecasters say there is no formula to accurately correlate snow depth to melted precipitation and that in the absence of accurate information, 10 inches of light fluffy snow is generally considered equivalent to 1 inch of rainfall. If the snow is very dry, the equivalent depth will be more, while if the snow is very wet, the depth will be less.

Using that rough formula, the 2.01 inches of melted precipitation resulting from the 1980 storm, would give 20.1 inches of snow. However, much of the precipitation that fell during the first day of the 1980 storm was in the form of sleet and freezing rain.

The low temperature during the 1927 storm was reported as 25 degrees, while the GUC weather station reported the low during the March 1980 storm reached 16 degrees.

The utilities weather station reported that Thursday's high was 45 degrees.

"Today's low? It would be right now ... 27 degrees," a utilities employee said about 10 a.m. today.

A news story looking at 1980's snow storm quoted a N.C. Department of Transportation employee as saying that roads in Pitt County were in "terrible shape. We haven't accomplished a thing," by trying to clear the snow from highways other than to "get our equipment stuck. No road is passable."

The rally will be held Thursday at 7:30 p.m. in the Conley gymnasium, she said.

Carter Appointed

The National League of Cities has appointed Greenville Mayor Edward E. Carter to its Transportation and Communications Policy Committee, said Greg Brown, public information officer for the city.

As a member of the committee, Carter will help formulate NLC policy on public transportation, streets and highways, air transportation, railroads and waterways, cable television and telecommunications.

Carter was nominated for the post by the N.C. League of Municipalities and was appointed Feb. 13 by NLC President Terry Goddard, who is also the mayor of Phoenix, Ariz.

Carter will meet with other NLC officials when he travels to Washington D.C. for the NLC Congressional-Cities Conference in March and to the organization's Congress of Cities in Atlanta, Ga. in November.

Fire Trial Jury Sees Leaf Process

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — A U.S. District Court jury is likely to be well-educated in the operations of the flue-cured tobacco market by the time it reaches a verdict on arson and other charges against a Pitt County tobacco warehouse owner and his son, observers say.

One allegation against J.T. Worthington of Greenville, owner of the Liberty Warehouse in Wilson, is that he falsely claimed the warehouse lost a large amount of house-owned tobacco in a fire October 1986.

The prosecutor, Assistant U.S. Attorney Kieran Shanahan, has told jurors he would show that Worthington knew about the fire in advance. To do that, Shanahan said, he will present evidence that Worthington manipulated documentation of the amount of tobacco in the warehouse.

Worthington and his son, warehouse manager J.T. "Tommy" Worthington Jr., also of Greenville, are accused of arranging the fire to collect insurance and get relief from cash-flow problems. Their trial opened this week and is scheduled to resume Monday, following a snow recess Thursday afternoon and Friday.

In testimony Thursday, a former partner in Liberty told jurors how a warehouse makes money through its own "leaf account," which is tobacco bought at auction by the warehouse to keep prices high and to resell for a profit. Some warehousemen also have "dealer accounts" in which they personally buy and sell tobacco, said William Cecil Moore of Live Oak, Fla., the former Liberty partner.

Worthington claimed to have lost "leaf account" and "dealer account" tobacco in the warehouse fire, when the tobacco allegedly had been sold in other warehouses. He illegally allowed others to use his dealer's license to transfer the tobacco, the prosecution contends.

Moore, a partner in the Liberty operation from 1972 to 1983, at one point demonstrated for the jury how tobacco buyers are led past piles of leaf during auctions. Under cross-examination by defense lawyer Trawick Stubbs of New Bern, Moore placed large burlap sheets, used to protect piles of tobacco, on the courtroom floor to show how an auction proceeds.

Moore, who owned an interest in the warehouse building at the time of the fire, acknowledged under cross-examination that he was a partner in six other tobacco warehouses that were destroyed by fire in Florida, Kentucky, Tennessee and North Carolina.

The prosecution contends that Tommy Worthington caused the warehouse to have cash-flow problems by taking large cash advances from the Liberty operation and putting the money into failing business enterprises.

Moore testified that he was unaware of any advances obtained by the younger Worthington. But he said that he trusted the elder Worthington to oversee the warehouse's affairs.

TV, Electronic Gear Thefts Investigated

Investigators said eight thefts, among them several television sets and other electronic equipment, were reported to Greenville police on Thursday.

Officer C.G. Alphin said a television set, video cassette recorder, microwave oven, telephone answering machine, a radio-tape player and a cassette player were taken from the Pitt County Child Development Center at 1710 W. Sixth St. in a break-in reported at 7:45 a.m.

Alphin said a microwave oven, a television set, six puzzles, five read-along books and tapes, $40 worth of grocery items and other things were taken from the Headstart program facility at 1710 W. Sixth St. in a break-in reported at 7:54 a.m.

Alphin also said a bicycle was taken from 117 S. Harding St. in an incident reported at 2:13 p.m., while Officer C.A. Elks said a washing machine was taken from 310K Horseshoe Drive in a break-in reported at 8:32 a.m. and a hubcap was taken from a car parked at 722 Hooker Road in an incident reported at 10 a.m.

Officer P.E. Cherry said a package of steaks were taken from Pollard's Store at 100 Pollard St. in an incident reported at 1:40 p.m., while Officer S.C. Locke said $610 in cash was taken from the Trade Mart at 210 W. 10th St. in an incident reported at 5:34 p.m.

Locke said a television set, video cassette recorder and compact disc player were taken from 2711 Mulberry Lane in a break-in reported at 8:03 p.m.

Female Bank Workers Testify Manager Made Sexual Moves

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — Female employees at a First Citizens Bank branch in Greenville testified Thursday that they had seen, or fallen prey to, sexual advances by the branch manager.

Thursday's testimony in Wake County Superior Court was the latest in a lawsuit brought by a former teller who says she was subjected to three years of sexual harassment by the manager, William C. Glidewell Jr. of Greenville.

Mary Denise Haughn is seeking an unspecified amount of compensatory and punitive damages from Glidewell and First Citizens. She said in earlier testimony that Glidewell had fondled her breasts and buttocks and tried to unfasten her bra on numerous occasions while she was working as a teller.

Mrs. Haughn also said Glidewell had grabbed her and tried to force his tongue inside her mouth while they were working in the bank's vault in February 1987.

She contends that the bank must share responsibility for Glidewell's conduct because it was notified of his behavior toward Mrs. Haughn and other female employees and failed to take action.

Mrs. Haughn filed the lawsuit in Wake County because First Citizens' corporate offices are in Raleigh.

The testimony of the other female employees followed that of Mrs. Haughn's psychiatrist, who said she continued to suffer severe depression as a result of the alleged harassment.

The women testified that Mrs. Haughn was nervous and upset in the minutes and days following the incident in the vault. They said she had related basically the same account of the incident that she gave jurors Tuesday.

Jane Ross, a former teller at the bank, said that on some occasions when she would bring paperwork to Glidewell, he would touch her buttocks or her leg.

"He would put his hand on my leg or try to put it up my skirt," she said. His actions made her uncomfortable and she would move away, she said.

Students Win Science Medals

St. Peter's School has announced the medal-winning students in the school's annual science fair conducted recently.

One project in biological science, earth science and physical science was selected from among participants in grades six through eight to represent the school in the regional Science Fair on March 17 at East Carolina University.

The winning students selected for the regional science fair were Julie Wondolowski for her project on the effect of microwave radiation on mold; Alex Orr for his project on demonstrating and measuring water tension, and Michael Lambe for his project on what type of fence best limits wind erosion.

Student ribbon winners and their grade levels were: grade eight — Julie Wondolowski, first place, Graham Powell, second place; grade seven — Alex Orr, first place, Matt Raab, second place; grade six — Michael Forster, first place, Matthew Dellasega, second place; grade five — Laura Glascoff, first place, Allison Taylor and Mindy Dellasega, second place.

First place winners in the remaining grades were Joyce Wondolowski, grade four; Mark Jones, grade three; Dana Nichols and Tornee Lee Deimantas, grade two; and Vincent Porretta, grade one.

Ribbon awards were given in each grade level based on judges' recommendation.

'Great Decisions' Lectures To Open

ECU NEWS BUREAU

A speaker recognized as being knowledgeable about Soviet and American relations will open the 1989 Great Decisions lecture and discussion series Wednesday at East Carolina University.

Philip S. Gillette, a political science professor at Old Dominion University, will discuss "Arms Agreements: Too Little Too Soon, or Too Much Too Soon?" The director of ODU's graduate program in international studies and author of articles about Soviet foreign policy, he will speak at 7:30 p.m. in Room 1031 of the General Classroom Building. His presentation is open to the public.

The Great Decisions series is sponsored by the Foreign Policy Association, a national, non-profit, non-governmental and non-partisan organization devoted to world affairs education for the general public. The ECU Office of International Studies is coordinating the four lectures at ECU during March and April.

In addition to arms negotiations, other topics will focus on political change in the People's Republic of China, the volatile situation in the Persian Gulf, and the social and economic conditions in the Horn of Africa.

The other speakers and topics include John Quanshen Zhao, a political scientist at ODU. His topic is "China: Redefining the Revolution," scheduled for March 15 at 7:30 p.m. in Room B102 of the Brewster Building.

Mariana Seasarro Ottaway, a professor at American University, will speak on April 12. Her topic is "Horn of Africa: Empty Cornucopia?" and is scheduled for 7:30 p.m. in Room B102, Brewster.

On April 19, M. Ehsan Ahrari, a political science professor at Mississippi State University will close the series with a discussion of "The Persian Gulf: Reassessing the American Role." The lecture is set for 7:30 p.m. in Room 1031 of the General Classroom Building.

Elementary and president of the 15th district of the North Carolina Association of Educators.

"You can't do both at the same time," she said. "You don't implement any type of merit pay program until you have a sound base to work on."

But, Ms. Wooten said she is pleased Martin now sees the inconsistencies in the salary schedule. "At least that will help us because now everyone will be focusing on the same thing," she said.

Martin, who has come under intense pressure from teachers to improve his 1980-90 budget proposal to delay a 5.7 percent raise until April 1990, said his discussions with teachers led him to conduct an in-depth study of the salary schedule.

Beforehand, he said, he believed the problem was simply that the freeze imposed on the pay schedule in 1982 had kept teachers from moving from one pay level to another. "It took him four and half years to find out with all his advisers and everything," said William Wahl, a teacher at E.B. Aycock Junior High School. "Maybe teachers going up there helped him see."

Teachers across the state, including some Pitt County teachers, recently visited Martin and legislators in Raleigh to protest the governor's initial proposal to delay their raises and to request that the salary scale be unfrozen.

Martin said the salary system is so fouled up that teachers with the same experience are spread over different pay steps so that some earn more than others. For example, teachers with nine years of experience are scattered among seven or eight pay levels.

Another problem is that teachers who come to North Carolina from other states are routinely placed on higher levels than teachers with equal experience who have spent their entire careers in North Carolina, Martin said.

"It is surprising that Gov. Martin has just discovered" the problems of the salary scale, Billie Lennon, a teacher at J.H. Rose High School, said.

"If he campaigned on education and roads, he should have had advisers that made him aware" of the scale. "This I would have expected from a knowledgeable official," she said.

After the salary schedule is worked out so that pay is directly and consistently linked to experience, the career ladder could be implemented to base future progression up the pay scale on merit, Martin said.

"What I have learned has led me to the conclusion that as important as I think the career ladder is ... neither that nor anything else is going to work unless we also unfreeze the pay steps," he told The Associated Press.

Karen Garr, president of the NCAE, said she was surprised it had taken Martin so long to figure out the extent of the problem. "But we don't care how long it takes you to learn something as long as you learn it," she said.

The NCAE, which opposes the career ladder, last month proposed a new 30-step salary schedule that would be phased in over three years. It would raise salaries by 10 percent the first year and about 9 percent the next two.

The first-year cost would be $198.2 million, Ms. Garr said, adding that she hopes Martin studies the NCAE plan as he develops his own.

Two meetings have been scheduled next week in Pitt County to discuss teachers' concerns.

Teachers will meet Tuesday at 7:30 p.m. in the Jaycee Park building. And, the "Big East" rally of the NCAE is scheduled for Thursday at 7:30 p.m. at D.H. Conley High School.

Senate Panel Rejects Tower Nomination

to back Senator Tower," Bush said as he left the U.S. ambassador's residence in Tokyo. "... I am hoping that this debate that will follow next week will clear up any questions."

"I haven't considered any options. I stand strongly with John Tower," said Bush.

Secretary of State James A. Baker III, in Tokyo with Bush, said it would be a mistake for Bush to withdraw the nomination in advance of a vote on the Senate floor.

"If he now pulled it I think all of you would say, 'this is a terrible thing. It shows that his judgment was flawed from the beginning,'" Baker said on "CBS This Morning."

The committee vote marked an abrupt departure from the month-long honeymoon between the new Republican president and the Democratic majorities of Congress, but Bush said he still believes his relationship with Congress "is still going fine."

Should the full Senate reject Tower, it would be the first time in history a newly elected president had suffered a rejection of a nominee to his first Cabinet. In all, eight Cabinet nominations have been rejected, the most recent 30 years ago.

A handful of Democrats suggested after the committee vote Thursday night that Bush seek a replacement for Tower before next week's scheduled floor vote. "It doesn't do the president any good," said Sen. Robert C. Byrd of West Virginia. "It's a tremendous burden for any nominee to go to the floor with a vote of no confidence." But the White House quickly rejected that suggestion.

"There's no consideration of alternative candidates," presidential spokesman Marlin Fitzwater told reporters traveling with the president in Japan. "There's no alternate list — bar none."

"He'll be working to contact senators throughout the days ahead, sometimes by telephone, sometimes in person," he said.

Tower, a former Texas senator who had once chaired the committee, said in a statement he was "obviously disappointed" but would continue to work at the Pentagon "and await the vote of full Senate."

The strictly partisan vote climaxed an extraordinary 2½ hour nighttime committee session at which lawmakers swapped views on the FBI's investigation into numerous allegations against him.

Tower has been dogged by allegations about his drinking habits and womanizing, as well as by questions of possible conflict of interest posed by his earning hundreds of thousands of dollars as a defense industry consultant after leaving the Senate.

The committee's senior Republican, John Warner of Virginia, said Bush was entitled to a Cabinet of his own choosing. Warner noted that many of the senators who had served with Tower had been questioned by the FBI during its investigation.

"Not one single U.S. senator, not one who has served with John Tower can ever recall a single instance where any of his personal habits interfered with his duty," Warner said. "Not one."

Democrats hold a 55-45 majority in the Senate, and a strictly party line vote on the floor would doom Tower's nomination. Still, the prospect is for a bruising struggle leading up to an expected vote next Wednesday or Thursday, as Bush tries to sway enough Democratic votes to triumph in his first major confrontation with Congress.

Feds Boost Rate

The discount rate last was at 7 percent from March 7, 1986, to April 18, 1986, when it dropped to 6.5 percent. The rate bottomed at 5.5 percent in August 1986 and since then has been on the rise.

The Fed's latest action follows two particularly worrisome inflation reports for the month of January.

The Labor Department reported that its Producer Price Index jumped 1.0 percent — better than a 12 percent annual rate — and the Consumer Price Index soared 0.6 percent, a 7.2 percent annual rate and the biggest jump in two years.

By increasing interest rates, the Fed hopes to slow down economic activity and thus ease inflationary pressures in the economy.

The Fed has been steadily nudging up interest rates since March 1988 in an effort to check inflation by slowing economic growth. The federal funds rate, which is the rate that banks charge among themselves for overnight loans and is heavily influenced by Fed policy, has risen more than three percentage points over the last year, topping 9.5 percent Thursday.

In congressional testimony Wednesday, Fed Chairman Greenspan called the latest increase in consumer prices "disturbing" and blamed it in part on recent acceleration in wage increases.

He said price increases had reached unacceptable levels and could increase the chances for and severity of a recession if not brought under control.

"If inflation re-emerges, I think a recession will move up on us much more quickly than we can imagine and when it occurs it will be a prolonged one," Greenspan said.

He maintained that the Fed's credit-tightening moves would prolong the aging economic expansion and moderate the next downturn.

While many analysts have been predicting that growth will slow this year, early reports indicated the economy entered 1989 with strong momentum.

Fed efforts to slow the economy to a more sustainable level of growth could spell trouble for the Bush administration, which has pinned its deficit-reduction hopes on optimistic assumptions about the economy's performance.

President Bush has repeatedly expressed concern that the Fed was overly concerned about inflation and could unduly slow economic growth crucial to his budgeting plans.

"I don't want to see us move so strongly against fear of inflation that we impede growth," the new president said in January. On Thursday, Treasury Secretary Nicholas Brady expressed a similar opinion in testimony to the House Banking Committee.

"Obviously inflation is something we ought to be concerned about," Brady said. But, he added, "... I don't know as I see as strong evidence of inflation right now as does the Federal Reserve."

Hallmark

Half A Century Of Civic Service

The Greenville Jaycees and the Greenville Lions Club both reach that important 50th anniversary milestone this year.

The Jaycees was formed in 1939 as an organization for young men, the Greenville Lions organized on Feb. 27, 1939 as a service civic club. The clubs will celebrate this hallmark Saturday and Monday, respectively.

It is a time when the community should recognize that Greenville would not be what it is without these two organizations.

The Jaycees, from the beginning, have been involved in some of the projects which have resulted in the exciting Greenville and Pitt County that we know today.

The club's work goes back to the optioning of the property on which the Pitt-Greenville Airport now is located. The property was developed as a military air base during World War II. The airport had intermittent use in the years following the war. Recently, however, it has become a thriving commuter airline terminal.

In the post war years the club was involved in changing the city government to a city manager-council form of government. Prior to that the city had a mayor and aldermen.

The Jaycees were involved in efforts to attract Burroughs-Wellcome and other industries. It also sponsored the High School All-Star Football Game when it was held here to benefit Boy's Home in Lake Waccamaw. And the Jaycees were involved in efforts to bring a Boy's Club here, an endeavor which is now thriving.

The club's projects are endless. It has the young men available with energy enough to provide much manpower.

Originally known as the Junior Chamber of Commerce the name was shortened to the Jaycees to better reflect its role. The club for years was open only to young men through age 36. Now they can stay until they are 40 and the club is open to women, too.

Mention Greenville Lions and thoughts turn to work with the blind. For many years that was the club's major project. Recently it has instituted Lions Quest a drug program for young people and the club also helps the hearing impaired. Club donations go to various organizations in the community.

Fifty years represents a huge amount of service by a large number of members of both the Jaycees and the Greenville Lions Club. Greenville is a better community because of the work of both organizations. As they reflect back on the half-century of service, past and present members can take a great deal of pride in what their clubs have done. Certainly the community takes pride in it.

'As they reflect back on the half-century of service, past and present members can take a great deal of pride in what their clubs have done.'

Selfish Youth? Not Here

WASHINGTON — The next time you are tempted to think of today's youth as a self-centered generation, interested less in attending human needs than in acquiring another pair of designer jeans, think of Melissa Kanter.

Melissa is — quite literally — a philanthropist: a grantmaker.

William Raspberry

"Just giving money isn't enough," says Melissa, who thinks she would like some day to run a women's shelter that prepares women to earn a living. "It's no good just to provide emergency help if people end up in the same situation they were already in. We have to learn how to break some of those cycles."

A senior at Holton Arms, she is a member of a small group of volunteers at the Bethesda, Md., school that raised some $4,000 for Greenville, a women's shelter in suburban Washington. Last year, their fund-raising was for Sneakers, a teen-age pregnancy-prevention program.

"Adults put kids down a lot; you call us selfish," says Melissa, a volunteer with a unique program called Youth in Philanthropy. "The truth of the matter is that kids can do a lot if they are given a chance. The only thing most teen-agers lack is not time, not expertise, not will power, but opportunity."

Youth in Philanthropy, sponsored by the Washington-based Community Foundation, provides that chance. Students at 15 public and private schools in the area, led either by their junior class or by their student councils, investigate and choose their own charities, monitor their work and design their own fund-raisers. The Community Foundation matches the first $1,000.

Like many schools in the area, Holton Arms has a mandatory volunteer-service program. But the Youth in Philanthropy is wholly separate. Participating students use their lunch hours and after-school time for their fund-raisers: a tie-dye sale at Holton Arms, a folk concert for the homeless at Bethesda-Chevy Chase, a student-served gourmet dinner for drug offenders at the Field School.

In virtually every case, not only schoolmates but parents and even younger sisters and brothers participate in the fund-raisers and, in the process, learn both about social problems and philanthropy.

Which is pretty much what Lawrence Stinchcomb, president of the Community Foundation, had in mind when he founded the Youth in Philanthropy program four years ago.

"I was struck by the fact that there are millions of people working in the nonprofit world, using billions of dollars to provide help," Stinchcomb said. "And yet we are never educated to the fact that we have a responsibility to improve the quality of life in our communities or else it's not going to be improved. Some people give money, some don't, and we just let it go. It occurred to me that if there is going to be a nonprofit world, we'd better start training our young people in charitable giving. That's how we came up with Youth in Philanthropy, as a demonstration project to develop future grantmakers." So far the various projects have raised some $70,000 for Washington-area charities.

But Youth in Philanthropy, which has plans to double the number of participating schools, does more than that. Adults — particularly those with fond memories of their participation in the campaigns for civil rights, peace or the environment — tend to dismiss today's youth as apathetic.

What may be nearer the truth is that we have failed to provide today's young people with a context within which to act: the institutional wherewithal to change — or even to think about changing — their world.

As Melissa Kanter puts it, there is no lack of willingness on the part of young people to get involved: "There is an urgent need for young people to reach out and help others. The problem is, they are not informed about the opportunities for helping. It doesn't happen in the schools, and there's not enough effort coming from their homes, their churches or their temples."

Youth in Philanthropy (like its collegiate counterpart, Campus Compact) is filling that gap, both by encouraging students to become active in charitable undertakings and providing the framework for that activity.

"Just giving money isn't enough," says Melissa, who thinks she would like some day to run a women's shelter that prepares women to earn a living. "It's no good just to provide emergency help if people end up in the same situation they were already in. We have to learn how to break some of those cycles."

Nor need the effort become a sort of grim-but-necessary drudgery.

"I've found something I really like to do, something that has given me a whole new direction for my life," Melissa told me. "And I'm not that different. Kids will almost always lend a hand if they are given the opportunity."

Youth in Philanthropy is providing that opportunity, and raising a lot of much-needed money in the process.

Bumping Against The Sharp Shards Of A Fractured City

CHICAGO — The chip off the old block is compactly built but does not look, as dad did, like something that walked — no, stalked — away from Stonehenge. And Mayor Richard J. Daley was never called, as the son is, Richie.

Things are (these things are relative) almost mellow as Chicago prepares for its mayoralty primary next Tuesday. The political machine, and much else, isn't what it once was.

In Ward Just's new political novel, "Jack Gance," a character recalls the description of Prussia as less a state with an army than an army with a state. Not long ago, Chicago was a machine with a city. But in this year 13 A.D. — Mayor Daley died in December, 1976 — the machine, or as much as remains of it, is in the hands of the incumbent mayor, Eugene Sawyer, 53. That makes Richie Daley, 46, the reform candidate. If Daley wins the primary, Chicago will become the first large city to elect a white mayor after having elected a black mayor.

In 1983, Richie Daley helped make Harold Washington

George Will

Chicago's first black mayor. Daley entered the Democratic primary against Mayor Jane Byrne, splitting the white vote. When Washington died after re-election in 1987, Timothy Evans, a black alderman who had been Washington's captain in the city council, was backed by Jesse Jackson in his bid to be elected mayor by the council. But Sawyer, backed by a few black aldermen and most of the white ones, won in a near riot, during which he fainted.

Today Jackson is supporting Sawyer in the primary. But if Daley wins, Jackson may support Evans, the candidate of the Harold Washington Party, in the April 4 general election. Jackson and some other black politicians are encouraging black voters to regard the mayor's office as a racial entitlement.

Meanwhile, although the Republicans have designated a candidate, another guy wants in. Edward "Fast Eddie" Vrdolyak, former Cook County Democratic chairman who recently turned Republican, is mounting a write-in campaign for the Republican nomination. That could drain enough white ethnic voters from the Democratic primary to cost Daley a close election. (The Daley-Sawyer race is close. The city is approximately 40 percent white and 40 percent black.) Conceivably, Vrdolyak could win the Republican nomination, setting up a Dodge City general election between him, the symbol of white hostility to Harold Washington, and two black candidates (Sawyer and Evans).

A Republican mayor? Not likely. The games being played by politicians are stirring fewer passions than in recent elections because citizens are increasingly serious. Chicago is somewhat healthier politically because it is becoming sicker socially.

The city government's budget has grown as city population has declined. The city's solvency depends on retaining and attracting job-creating and tax-paying businesses. That is becoming desperately difficult because of what most people recognize as the most important issue, the disastrous condition of Chicago's public-school system.

The system is 60 percent black, 24 percent Hispanic. Forty percent of the students flunk at least two major courses a year. Almost half do not graduate. Half the 65 high schools are in the bottom one — yes, one — percent of U.S. schools in student performance on the American College Test (ACT).

The average high-school graduate seeking a job reads at the level of an average American eighth-grader. One-fourth of these graduates read at the sixth-grade average. A bank reports that three-quarters of the applications for entry-level jobs can not fill out the job-application form. A machine shop finds few applicants who know how many 16ths there are in an inch.

This city of broad shoulders is not stacking wheat anymore. It is increasingly a city of nimble fingers on computer terminals. Many new jobs are in financial services. Chicago businesses are at the breaking point in their ability to compete while building in the cost of doing what the schools do not do — teaching skills suited to today's workplace.

Daley still lives two blocks from his father's house in the near Southside neighborhood where his mother, sister, brother and many friends from grammar school and high school still live. His politics, like his slightly doughy shape, lack edge, as do the politics of Sawyer. These are not divisive men.

That is good, because behind the gleaming lake front, Chicago is caught in a dynamic of decline. The next mayor — Chicago has had five in 13 years — is going to bump against the sharp shards of a fractured city.

Heatwole Trial

CARTHAGE, N.C. (AP) — A Moore County Superior Court jury Thursday recommended the death penalty for a Georgia man who pleaded guilty to shooting his stepmother and a security guard in 1987.

George Franklin "Jeff" Heatwole, 31, abruptly pleaded guilty to all the charges against him when the prosecution concluded its case. Heatwole had been acting as his own attorney.

The jury deliberated about 20 minutes before recommending the death penalty on both charges.

Heatwole had been charged with the shooting deaths of his stepmother, Alta Jane Heatwole, 57, and a security guard Edgar John Garrison, 40, at a resort community near Vass on Feb. 27, 1987.

Burley Fees

WASHINGTON (AP) — Producers and buyers of burley tobacco each will be assessed a penny a pound on the 1989 crop, the Agriculture Department said Thursday.

The total assessment of two cents per pound is unchanged from last year and will include 1.66 cents to help pay for the government program under a requirement that it operate at no net cost to taxpayers. The remaining 0.34 cents is required by law to help trim the federal budget deficit.

Officials said the budget deficit assessment — 0.17 cents each for producers and buyers — is imposed under the Omnibus Reconciliation Act of 1987, which requires a 1.4 percent reduction in the level of price supports or an equivalent assessment.

Child Shot

HIGH POINT (AP) — A 2-year-old High Point boy was accidentally shot Thursday while playing with a handgun he found under his grandmother's pillow, police said.

The child, whom police did not identify, was treated at High Point Regional Hospital and released. A .25-caliber bullet passed through his left arm, police said.

The grandmother, the child's mother and a male friend of the mother were in the front area of the grandmother's house when the shooting occurred, police said.

The child's 6-month-old brother was nearby and Capt. Jim Hoyng said police had not yet ruled out the possibility the other child may also have been involved.

Identified

HIGH POINT (AP) — A man whose body was found by fishermen in the High Point City Lake Jan. 30 was a native of Nigeria and a former city resident, police said Thursday.

Police have identified the man as Christopher Ogbonna Isiguzo. His exact age is unknown, but he is believed to have been in his 40s.

Police said the identification stemmed from a drawing of Isiguzo that ran in the High Point Enterprise last week. A man called police and said the picture looked like his cousin. Police said they were able to confirm the tentative identification with fingerprints.

The man apparently fell or slipped into the lake, police said.

Suspension

HUDSON, N.C. (AP) — A ninth-grader at Hudson Middle School received a three-day suspension Tuesday for possession of tobacco, but his father is refusing to keep him out of school.

Duane Rhodes, the father of Jeremy Rhodes, said the suspension is much too severe for the first offense, and other measures — such as a warning — would have been more appropriate.

Assistant Principal Wilfred Throneburg caught the younger Rhodes with a can of Copenhagen tobacco in the school bathroom, Principal Jerry Austin said.

Despite the suspension, Rhodes refused to take his son home.

Officers Needed

RALEIGH (AP) — The North Carolina Army National Guard needs 80 men and women to become lieutenants and fill junior officer vacancies throughout the state.

"It is the best leadership training program a young man or woman could ask for," said Maj. Gen. Charles Scott. "This training prepares you not only for a rewarding military career but it also is beneficial in your civilian work."

During the recruiting campaign, titled Gold Rush '89, recently commissioned lieutenants have been given the task of finding new officer candidates.

Sanford Award

NEW YORK (AP) — Sen. Terry Sanford, D-N.C., will receive one of the highest awards granted by an American Jewish organization on Feb. 26 when the Jewish National Fund gives him the "Tree of Life" award.

Sanford is being honored in recognition of his outstanding professional and humanitarian leadership in service to the people of North Carolina. The award also will serve to recognize the Senator's concern and support for the betterment of American-Israeli relations.

Russian Students

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (AP) — Twelve Russian students will get a taste of Southern life at the University of North Carolina-Chapel Hill next week.

Soviet students from Rostov State University in Rostov-on-Don will arrive in Chapel Hill on Sunday as part of a 10-day exchange program sponsored by the New York-based Citizen's Exchange Committee and the Soviet Committee of Youth Organizations.

Witnesses Back Utility 'True-Ups'

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — A law that allows North Carolina electric companies to adjust their rates to reflect fuel costs has returned $100 million to customers in two years and should be continued for two more, a House subcommittee says.

"Without true-ups (the ability to adjust for fuel costs), over-collections would have continued, in my opinion," Robert Gruber of the state Utilities Commission Public Staff told the House Subcommittee on Utilities Thursday. "We believe the statute is working and should be extended for two years."

Under true-ups, electric companies can refund over-collections of fuel charges or increase their rates to make up for under-collections. The law was approved in 1987, but contained a "sunset" provision that would make it expire this year. The measure approved Thursday would extend the law until 1991.

"Fairness is what we're trying to achieve," said Rep. George Miller,

D-Durham, who sponsored the extension. "The concept must prove itself (in the next two years) or it will die by the deadline."

Miller told the subcommittee the law so far has meant refunds for customers, but there is no guarantee that utility companies would not increase their rates in the future if fuel costs rise.

A group of large utility owners endorsed extending "true-ups," but another industry group — Carolina Utility Customers Association — opposed extending the measure.

"True-ups allow retroactive ratemaking, a procedure always abhorred and avoided in North Carolina," said Jerry T. Roberts, CUCA's executive director.

"In regard to fuel price stability, the fact is that fuel prices between 1982 and 1987 have been stable and that with the current fuel stability, now would be the time to eliminate fuel adjustments altogether outside general rate cases" Roberts said. "Fuel adjustment procedures are for unsettled times or emergency situations."

Senate OKs Amended Environmental Bill

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — North Carolina regulators could impose environmental regulations more stringent than federal standards as long as they proved the benefits of the rules are greater than the burdens they would impose under a bill approved by the state Senate.

"What was passed was not a requirement for an economic analysis, but an overall analysis of the impact that a measure will have," said Sen. Dennis Winner, D-Buncombe, who proposed the original bill and then worked out a compromise between environmentalists and business lobbyists. "If the state is not worried about the balance between benefits and burdens of its regulations, then it should be."

The Senate, by a 33-9 vote Thursday, agreed to repeal the so-called "Hardison amendments," that required state environmental regulations to be no stronger than federal rules. The amendments were proposed by former state Sen. Harold Hardison, D-Lenoir, and have long been a target of environmental groups.

The House must now consider the plan, which would require agencies to compare the benefits of a regulation with the burden it would place on the environment, governments, businesses or agriculture. Only rules that show greater benefits than burdens could be imposed.

Winner declined to predict how the plan would be accepted in the House, which still must consider it, but said "I believe we have it in shape so that the House can accept it."

The compromise had been backed by environmental groups, the textile industry, the chemical industry and the business lobbying group North Carolina Citizens for Business and Industry. Winner said the N.C. Farm Bureau, which refused to endorse the plan when it was considered by a committee, had belatedly indicated it did not oppose the plan.

Hearing Scheduled On Tobacco Exports

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WILMINGTON — Officials investigating charges that American tobacco was mixed with foreign leaf and sold as all-U.S. leaf under federal credit guarantee programs will testify next week before the House subcommittee on tobacco and peanuts.

Rep. Charlie Rose, D-N.C., called for the hearing to be held two weeks after officials with the Foreign Agriculture Service and Commodity Credit Corp. ended a 5-month-old policy that permitted mixed tobacco to be sold under the program. The export credit guarantee program is designed to boost agricultural commodity exports by protecting American lenders against defaults by foreign buyers who borrow to finance the purchases.

Officials with the General Accounting Office and the Office of Inspector General began the investigation last year after a leaf importing company in Iraq complained that it bought mixed tobacco sold as all-U.S. leaf under the program.

Officials disagree about whether the Agriculture Department's initial policy permitted mixed foreign and domestic agriculture commodities to be eligible for export credit guarantees.

In September, Melvin Sims, vice president of Commodity Credit Corp., the financial arm of the Agriculture Department, announced in a notice to exporters that export credit guarantees would be permitted for blended commodities if the value of the foreign portion did not exceed 25 percent of the total value. That policy was rescinded last week.

Officials with the Foreign Agriculture Service and CCC will not be called to testify at Wednesday's hearing, an official told the Wilmington Morning Star.

Study Says Smoking Redistributes Fat

By Brenda C. Coleman
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHICAGO — People who smoke to control their weight are simply redistributing their fat and putting themselves at risk for potentially deadly illnesses, according to a study published today.

Smoking does reduce weight, the researchers acknowledged, but flab stays around the waist, increasing the chance for heart disease, diabetes — and early death.

"If you're a cigarette smoker who is continuing to smoke in order to control your body weight, or a non-smoker considering starting up again ... you're making a bad decision," said Dr. Reubin Andres, a co-author of the study and clinical director of the National Institute on Aging in Baltimore.

"There's no question that the risk of cigarette smoking is much greater than the risk of a few (excess) pounds of body weight," he said.

Cigarette smokers generally weigh less for their height than non-smokers and typically gain weight if they quit, the researchers acknowledged in their report in today's Journal of the American Medical Association.

But in looking at the ratio of waist size to hip size in men over a period of 26 years, the researchers found that waist sizes generally were larger in relation to hip size among smokers than non-smokers.

Mean measurements among smokers were 35.7 inches at the waist and 39 at the hips, compared with a mean ratio of 35.7 to 39.5 among non-smokers, the researchers said.

The more a person smokes, the larger the comparative waist size, the study found.

While the difference between the two ratios is small, Andres said previous studies have indicated this can have a big effect on risks of heart disease.

"If you are fortunate enough to be shaped with the fat down around the hips, then you have a relatively safe form of obesity," Andres said. "You are less likely to have high cholesterol, high blood pressure and diabetes.

"It's simply one more bad effect of cigarette smoking — as if you needed one more bad effect."

Gary Miller, a spokesman for the Tobacco Institute, a Washington-based group representing the tobacco industry, said he had not seen the study and had no comment.

How smoking causes differences in fat distribution is unclear, Andres said, but cigarettes could affect hormones or could have a drug-like effect on their own.

Andres said no data on smoking and body-fat distribution is available for women, but "one can hypothesize that women will show the same sort of changes" as men.

The researchers also found that when smokers in the study gave up tobacco, they gained an average of five pounds, but the ratio of waist size to hip size did not increase significantly.

Ex-smokers who took up the habit again lost an average of 2.2 pounds, but the ratio of waist size to hip size increased, meaning there was a greater increase in waist size.

The survey tracked 1,122 men between the ages of 19 and 102 between 1960 and 1986. The researchers measured the subjects' height, weight, waist size and hip size and tracked changes in measurements and smoking status at two-year intervals.

Smoking-related deaths claim 390,000 Americans annually, according to the American Cancer Society, which says smoking is linked to lung cancer, heart disease, chronic obstructive lung disease, emphysema, and various cancers.

Bush S&L Plan Encounters Stiff New Opposition

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — President Bush's plan to close or merge insolvent savings and loan institutions over the next 30 years at a cost of $265 billion is encountering stiff opposition in Congress.

After reading the 333-page bill submitted this week, both Democrats and Republicans who support a separate S&L industry devoted primarily to home mortgages doubt it can survive under Bush's proposal.

"There are too many officials within the administration who would just as soon see the home mortgage lending industry done away with," said Rep. Frank Annunzio, D-Ill., and chairman of the House Banking Committee's financial institutions subcommittee.

Annunzio predicted that interest rates on home loans will rise dramatically if federally chartered S&Ls are allowed to disappear, because the remaining financial institutions will not give such loans a high priority.

That concern was bolstered Thursday by Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan, who said his board is making it easier for bank holding companies to buy troubled S&Ls and questioned "whether specialized fixed-rate residential lending institutions are needed today."

Greenspan, testifying before the Senate Banking Committee, said that whatever survives will not be the traditional S&L that relied on short-term deposits from savers to finance long-term, fixed-rate mortgages.

"My own judgment is that, at the end of the day, thrifts will look a lot more like banks than they do now, but there will still be thrifts," he said. "Ultimately it's going to be the markets that are going to determine the banking structure in this country."

Treasury Secretary Nicholas Brady, testifying Thursday before the House Banking Committee, defended that "market approach" and said the Bush administration will stoutly resist congressional efforts to re-regulate S&Ls by further restricting their lending activities.

The failure of many S&Ls has been blamed on imprudent and sometimes fraudulent loans for shopping centers, office buildings and other high-risk ventures after Congress deregulated the industry in the early 1980s.

Annunzio, with the backing of the industry, said he will try to amend Bush's proposal to restrict 80 percent of future S&L lending to family housing within a 50-mile radius of each institution.

He complained that Bush's plan requiring S&L owners to put up more of their own capital to cover losses for non-residential lending "doesn't stop the crooks, it just makes them pay more to do business."

Brady said Annunzio's proposal would put S&Ls "back into the same box that we took them out of" through deregulation when they had to pay more interest on deposits than they were receiving on home mortgages.

He predicted that more of them would go bankrupt as a result, even while acknowledging that the healthiest third of the industry contains precisely those S&Ls that have maintained their emphasis on home mortgages.

The administration's plan would require S&Ls with less than 60 percent of their loans in residential housing to become banks eventually.

It also would require them to meet the control of federal banking regulators for the first time, place them under the 6 percent capital-to-asset requirements of banks within two years, and open the way for banks to take over failed S&Ls immediately and healthy ones after two years.

"Rather than heal wounds, your plan may actually put it (the S&L industry) out of its misery," Rep. Richard Lehman, D-Calif., told Brady. "The banking regulators are going to make S&Ls look more like banks and I'm concerned about the effect of that on housing."

Brady denied any "intention on our part to deliver up the S&L industry to the banking industry" after contending earlier that Bush's plan "assures the emergence of a healthy and strong S&L industry."

Meanwhile, Greenspan said the Federal Reserve, as the nation's lender of last resort, has entered into a support arrangement with the Federal Home Loan Bank system, which lends to S&Ls.

"We stand ready to make certain the liquidity needs of the thrift institutions are met," Greenspan said, referring to the record $15 billion in deposits that were withdrawn from them in November and December.

Border Patrol Says Latins 'Lying Low' Hoping For Lapse In U.S. Restrictions

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BAYVIEW, Texas — The tents were empty, the applications lay blank and all was quiet on the Texas border today, but immigration authorities warned that thousands of Central Americans were "lying low" and hoping for a lapse in tighter federal restrictions.

"I don't think they will stop coming," said Juan Bautista Sanchez-Sanchez, a Nicaraguan who was detained after his application for asylum was denied. He said he left home after being arrested and beaten for marching against Nicaragua's Sandinista government.

"They will be coming not only for economic reasons, but for political reasons and I think they will come if I tell them that even if they get put in jail here, they will not get beaten up," he said.

But for now, the Immigration and Naturalization Service's tough new asylum policy has achieved its goal: a sharply reduced flow of Central Americans across the Texas border.

Patrol officers all along the border said the policy has not yet resulted in an increase in illegal immigration, despite rumors that immigrants were shifting their point of entry westward to Laredo and El Paso.

"We're keeping an eye on the situation," said Jaime Arras of the U.S. Border Patrol Office in El Paso.

Border Patrol officers in Laredo also said they had seen no unusual activity.

But many Central Americans are presumed to be in Mexico, waiting their turn to make it past Border Patrol checkpoints and to their destinations in the interior.

"They are not stupid. They're lying low," said Silvestre Reyes, Border Patrol chief for the McAllen sector. "They're probably with a sympathizer, on their own or with an alien smuggler in hopes they get them past a checkpoint."

Since last spring, more than 100,000 Central Americans have crossed into the United States through the Rio Grande Valley around Brownsville, including 40,000 who have sought political asylum.

To control that flow, an army of INS workers and additional border patrol officers descended on the Texas border this week to carry out the tougher rules for asylum-seekers.

At the Port Isabel Service Processing Center, where an influx of asylum applicants was expected, giant tents were pitched to house detainees and dozens of typewriters were shipped to process applications. So far, none of the tents and few of the typewriters have been needed.

INS officers processed 233 applications for asylum on Tuesday, the first day of the new policy, but just 51 on Wednesday and 10 on Thursday. Only two of the more than 300 applicants were granted asylum.

"Nobody is coming to apply for asylum and that's sort of predictable when 99 percent of these folks are being thrown in jail here, so obviously people are going underground and they are not going to be going through the system anymore, which is a tragedy," said Mark Schneider, an attorney with the Harlingen-based Proyecto Libertad, which represents Central Americans.

Under the old INS procedures, immigrants applying for asylum had to wait weeks while their applications were processed, during which they were released on their own recognizance.

Under the new policy, applications are processed on the spot but those whose applications are denied are being held on bonds between $1,000 and $4,000. They are housed at an indoor detention center at Port Isabel, 15 miles northeast of Brownsville, or at a Red Cross shelter near the Texas-Mexico border.

Pitt Stands Still

 was supposed to start last evening about 8 p.m., get real heavy about midnight and taper off and be finished by noon," Turcotte said.
 "It put a real crimp in our operation. We had the snow plows standing by to start operating at 5 a.m. They arrived at 4:30 a.m., and guess what? There wasn't any snow on the runways.
 "And at 5 or 5:30 a.m. the bottom fell out. We had based all of our operating procedures on the forecast we had. Now, the forecast says the stuff may last until 10 o'clock tonight."
 Visibility must also be at least a mile before planes may land at the airport, and Turcotte said the swirling snow cut visibility to a fraction of what is needed.
 Nancy Mozingo, Greenville station manager with Piedmont Commuter Airlines, said crews had planned to clear the runways early today so that operations could begin about 10 a.m. But, with the snow hitting later, it appeared there would be very little activity at the airport today, she said.
 "I'm not too optimistic at the moment," Ms. Mozingo said. "We have four to six inches on the runway (at 9 a.m.) and it's still blowing. It takes four hours to clear the runways ... so it doesn't look like we're going to be transporting too many people in and out of Greenville."
 To receive updated flight information, she said customers need to call Piedmont Commuter's toll-free telephone number.
 A spokesman for Greenville Utilities said this morning that the snowstorm had not affected power like last weekend's ice storm.
 "So far, we have had no serious problems, no mass or extended power outages," Roger Jones, director of the electrical system, said shortly after 9 a.m. today.
 "We basically have closed up the office operations, but electrical crews have reported in and are standing by just in case problems should develop," Jones said. "With this storm, winds could give us problems, but not to the extent of mass power outages. People may see their lights blink, but, for the most part, the system is holding up really well."
 Glenn Letchworth, special services director for the town of Farmville, said a few residents were without power today for a brief period about 8:30 a.m., but all power was restored.

 Also, no streets in Farmville will be scraped by public works crews until the snow stops falling, he said.
 By 9 a.m., Kinston officials said the weather had knocked out power in about 150 homes.
 "At this time, the Kinston utilities are working to restore power to about 150 residential dwellings that have lost power, and expect to have that corrected soon," said John Kinston, communications supervisor for the city of Kinston.
 ECU also canceled classes and closed offices for the day, but Dick Edwards, executive assistant to the chancellor, said all meetings and events planned for the weekend are still scheduled to be held.
 "We're looking and hoping for this all to clear this afternoon," Edwards said. "I'm told that the last time the university was closed was in 1980, when there was something like 22 inches of snow."
 The ECU home basketball game scheduled for Saturday night is still set to tip off at 7:30 p.m., athletic officials said, and any decision to postpone the contest will probably not be made until Saturday.
 The snow has made it tough for some visitors to leave Greenville.
 "I have folks who are here who are skeptical about leaving," said Lynne Creech, guest service manager at the Holiday Inn. "I think I'm getting a lot of other motel business because of my indoor pool, and a 104 degree Jacuzzi helps too."
 Cathy Barnhart, manager of the Hampton Inn, said several travelers also stopped in Greenville early today because they could not make it any further in the tough weather.
 "They just couldn't drive anymore," she said.
 One truck driver who stopped at the Hampton told her it took over 15 hours to make it from Cherryville (in Gaston County) to Greenville.
 "He was exhausted. Pretty much people are staying put. They're really afraid to take a chance, and I don't blame them."

Union Carbide Pays Bhopal Settlement

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS
 NEW DELHI, India — Union Carbide Corp. and its Indian subsidiary deposited $465 million with the Supreme Court today to compensate victims of the 1984 Bhopal gas disaster.
 The court ordered the payment last week as a final settlement of all claims from the gas leak that killed more than 3,400 people in the world's worst industrial disaster.
 The payment was made four weeks ahead of the court's deadline. The court gave the Indian government a week to submit a breakdown of how the funds will be allotted.
 A same five-judge Supreme Court panel that ordered the settlement also began preliminary hearings today on a petition by a lawyers' group to raise the damages to $600 million. The petition was filed Wednesday by the Association for Socio-Legal Literacy.
 The petition sought to challenge the settlement on the ground that the sovereignty of India had been violated. R.K. Garg, attorney for the group, has argued that the settlement "challenged the concept of India as a free nation" by "capitulating" to Union Carbide and had "fettered its fine Constitution to the whims of a multinational company."

 Lawyers for Union Carbide declined to comment on the petition.
 The government says 20,000 people are seriously affected by exposure to the methyl isocyanate gas that leaked from the Bhopal pesticide plant operated the Indian subsidiary of Union Carbide, which is based in Danbury, Conn. More than 500,000 others have filed damage claims.
 On Feb. 14, the Supreme Court ordered Union Carbide to pay a total of $470 million in final settlement of all claims. However, the court ruled last week that Union Carbide could receive credit for $5 million deposited after New York District Judge John Keenan ruled in 1986 that the money be made available for immediate relief to the victims.

 ASHEVILLE (AP) — Superior Court Judge Charles Lamm sentenced convicted cocaine trafficker Kenneth Lee Gardner to 60 years in prison Thursday.
 He also ordered Gardner, a mechanic in training before his conviction in Buncombe County Superior Court on Wednesday, to pay a fine of $200,000. Gardner's attorney filed notice of appeal.

An Open Letter from Greenville Utilities

 On behalf of Greenville Utilities Commission, I would like to personally thank our customers for their patience after our recent ice storm. While we were able to restore power to the majority of our customers within the first few hours, approximately 1,000 to 2,500 of our 33,300 customers had to endure the hardship of being without power for 12 hours or longer. Many of these customers had problems with their individual service lines -- getting the most people back on the system in the quickest amount of time. We also had to concentrate on restoring power in life-threatening situations (medical facilities, etc.). After that was accomplished, then we could begin restoring individual services. Still, when the majority of these inconvenienced customers called us, they were understanding and appreciative of the "superhuman" effort they knew we were making to restore power. Their support, which reflected a confidence in us that we value, was overwhelming.
 Equally overwhelming was the dedication shown by our employees. It was truly a team effort when we implemented our emergency storm plan early Saturday. We had rotating shifts of 70 to 80 people in the field working in icy, hazardous conditions 18 to 20 hours at a stretch. Water/Sewer and Gas Department employees worked alongside our Electric Department personnel. Our office workers were called in to our Operations Center to answer the eight phones set up during the emergency 24-hours-a-day. We answered over 3,000 calls throughout the weekend.
 It wasn't just a matter of restoring power. We also had to coordinate providing food for our crews at the various job sites; housing the four crews from Fayetteville, two crews from High Point and two contract tree trimming crews; and providing food for the personnel who worked around the clock in our Control Room and at our Garage.
 I'm especially proud of the fact that, while working long, tiring hours under dangerous, nighttime conditions, not one of our employees was injured during this emergency.
 I'd like to thank everyone involved, including the families of our employees, for their cooperation, sacrifice, and willingness to pull together during this stressful time.
 Sincerely,

 Malcolm A. Green, P.E.

Hirohito's Body Sealed Inside Hillside Crypt

By Denis D. Gray
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOKYO — The body of Emperor Hirohito today was sealed inside a hillside crypt and offerings were made to his spirit, ending a 13-hour funeral attended by the largest gathering of world leaders in modern history.

A day of elaborate ceremony concluded by torchlight shortly before 9 p.m. after the coffin was placed on a cart and pulled 33 feet up a slope. It was then moved inside a prepared stone tomb dug into the hillside and sealed with concrete.

Hirohito's mound-like mausoleum is in a grove of towering cypress trees at the Musashi Imperial Cemetery west of Tokyo.

Worshiped as a living god and branded a war criminal during his long life, Hirohito was honored by the presence of official representatives of 163 nations at some of the ceremonies, including President Bush and his wife, Barbara, who sat in the front row covered with blankets to protect them from the winter chill.

Bush, the collar of his black overcoat turned up, paused in front of the coffin and lowered his head in a slight bow when his turn came to approach the coffin.

A bomb exploded in a roadside embankment about 20 minutes before a motorcade carrying his body and members of the imperial family passed by on its way to the burial ground.

Police said groups opposing the emperor system staged 11 demonstrations in the Japanese capital, and officers arrested five people in disturbances.

The Japan Communist Party boycotted the funeral and some members of the main opposition Japan Socialist Party stayed away from the Shinto ceremonies while attending the state ones.

"The people will remember him forever," Emperor Akihito eulogized during the ceremony, expressing his "overwhelming emotion" and "extreme sense of sorrow." He thanked the Japanese and foreigners who sent condolences.

The $74 million, 13-hour funeral began with private Shinto rites within the walls of the Imperial Palace in downtown Tokyo. The body was then driven to Shinjuku Imperial Gardens for the main ceremony.

The metropolis of 12 million people came to a virtual standstill and 32,000 police mounted the largest security operation in Japanese history.

Police estimated 210,000 people — braving the wet and 37-degree temperatures — lined the streets as a black hearse carrying the laced-draped coffin drove at 6 mph from the palace to Shinjuku gardens.

The motorcycle-escorted, 32-car procession passed Parliament, the democratic core of modern Japan, and the National Stadium where the emperor opened the 1964 Summer Olympics, heralding Japan's postwar re-emergence.

Police said 4,300 people took part in 11 anti-emperor demonstrations and rallies in the capital and officers arrested five people. Protesters carried banners denouncing the funeral and attack on Hirohito for his role as titular leader during Japan's World War II aggression.

"Under the name of Hirohito, our mothers and fathers were mobilized for war in Asia and thousands of people were massacred," said a 36-year-old high school teacher who declined to be further identified.

But others cried or clasped their hands together in prayer as Hirohito's coffin passed.

A 72-year-old farmer, Morie Hiroki, tried to commit suicide by ritual disembowelment, or hara-kiri, on the southern island of Kyushi.

Police said Hiroki was in serious condition after slashing his abdomen with a kitchen knife. The World War II army private, who served in China, left a note saying he felt he had to follow his emperor in death.

A New York Times-CBS News poll this month said 77 percent of Japanese support the imperial system; 73 percent regarded the emperor as a national symbol, and just 2 percent said they still considered him a god. Hirohito renounced his divinity in 1946 as Japan began its climb from the ashes of World War II toward spectacular economic success.

Today was a special national holiday, and financial markets, stores, restaurants and other places of entertainment were closed. Sections of Tokyo were blocked off to traffic and many residents had gone skiing.

Emperor Akihito and Empress Michiko led the imperial mourners, but Hirohito's 85-year-old widow, the Empress Dowager Nagako, did not attend the public ceremonies due to reported poor health.

At the Shinjuku gardens, 51 black-robed men carried the coffin on a 22-foot-long palanquin to a wooden shrine for Shinto rites led by Emperor Akihito. The body of Hirohito, who died of cancer Jan. 7 at age 87, was placed in an inner wooden coffin and an outer one of metal.

A chamberlain dressed in white followed the bier carrying a platter with a pair of white shoes that tradition says the deceased monarch will wear to heaven.

Flutes and pipes, with an occasional drum beat, sounded a plaintive tune as the procession entered the ceremonial grounds.

Members of the imperial family — the women in veils, men in black tailcoats and black silk top hats — protected themselves from the elements with umbrellas.

In two vast, heated tents, were the 9,800 invited mourners: a phalanx of world leaders, Japanese government officials, private citizens and several champions of sumo wrestling, a favorite sport of Hirohito.

Akihito delivered his four-minute eulogy, a deep-voiced male chorus sang a solemn mourning song, a poem was read and imperial family members went individually before the coffin and bowed slowly.

Shinto attendants wore black robes and traditional headgear, and eight men carried two sacred evergreen trees while others bore tall banners with imperial symbols of the sun and moon and chests containing ceremonial offerings.

After the religious ceremony, Shinto appurtenances were removed and the state funeral began with a minute of silence.

In his eulogy, Prime Minister Noboru Takeshita referred to Hirohito by his posthumous name, Emperor Showa.

He said the country "will continue to strive mightily to ensure that Japan is open to the rest of the world, full of vigor, and culturally rich, and will further promote the cause of world peace and human welfare."

He described Hirohito's 62-year reign as "eventful and turbulent times for Japan, including the calamities of that deplorable war, the struggle to reconstruct itself from the ruins amid confusion and dire poverty and to regain its full independence..."

"During all these years, Emperor Showa ardently wished for world peace and the well-being of the Japanese people."

After the eulogies, Bush, wearing a black tailcoat, and his wife Barbara, in a black overcoat, stepped to the front of the hall, paused and made a slight bow before the coffin.

Bush was shot down by Japanese anti-aircraft fire during World War II.

Also bowing before the coffin was Britain's Prince Philip, a Royal Navy veteran of World War II who was present at Japan's surrender ceremony in 1945.

Bush Joins Thousands For Hirohito Ceremony

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOKYO — Bundled against the cold, President Bush bowed in final respects to Emperor Hirohito at a rain-drenched funeral today, joining 9,800 mourners under tents at the Shinjuku Imperial Garden ceremony.

Although he appeared tired from the rigors of his first overseas trip as president, Bush said he felt like "a spring colt ready to charge."

Earlier, leaving the three-hour funeral, Bush had shown no sign of distress over a Senate committee's vote to reject his nomination of former Sen. John Tower as secretary of defense. He gave a thumbs-up sign and smiled as his armored limousine — flown in specially from Washington — brought him back to the American ambassador's residence.

Apart from the funeral, Bush held separate meetings with Philippine President Corason Aquino, King Baudouin of Belgium, Prime Minister Benazir Bhutto of Pakistan, West German President Richard von Weizsacker, Singapore Prime Minister Lee Kuan Yew, Prime Minister Turgut Ozal of Turkey, Italian President Francesco Cossiga and President Mobutu Sese Seku of Zaire. Bush had a private dinner with King Juan Carlos of Spain.

White House officials said Bush's meetings in Tokyo, most lasting no more than 30 minutes, consisted mainly of general discussions and were not intended to delve into issues in detail.

For the occasion, Bush had rented a morning coat in Washington, including grey stripe pants, black vest, black tie and black cutaway jacket with tails.

Accompanied by his wife, Barbara, Bush was given a front-row, center seat in one of two huge open-sided tents at the state funeral. To give him a place of prominence, Japanese officials had to waive protocol rules that would have put Bush toward the back because of his short tenure in office.

One by one, world leaders approached Hirohito's coffin to pay respects after the formal eulogies.

When their turn came, Bush and his wife paused in front of the coffin and lowered their heads in a slight bow. A pelting rain and stiff wind made the chilly day in Tokyo seem even colder.

Bush wore a black overcoat and turned up his collar against the wind. Along with many other mourners, Bush and his wife covered their laps with wool and cashmere blankets placed on each seat.

There were electrical heating coils beneath the floor and a heater in the low wall directly in front of the president.

Hirohito, the last of the World War II-era world leaders, died of cancer at age 87 on Jan. 7 after reigning for six decades.

Bush issued a statement thanking Japanese officials "who managed this complicated logistics and put on a marvelous pageant in honor of the late emperor — beautifully staged and beautifully carried off, on schedule, working against the elements, but nevertheless with a dignity and a ceremony that was appropriate."

He said he had "great respect for what they did and the way in which they did it, and I am proud to have represented the United States of America here today."

Bush, a Navy combat pilot in World War II who was shot down by Japanese gunners during a bombing run, said attending the funeral was the right thing to do because Japan and the United States are allies.

The gesture was appreciated by the Japanese, particularly because of lingering resentment in some quarters about Hirohito's role as a leader during the war. Some U.S. veterans were among those who objected to Bush's decision.

Bush was unaffected by the only significant security incident involving the emperor's funeral. A bomb damaged a highway along which the emperor's hearse was due to be taken after the ceremony, but Bush was already back at his hotel at the time. Police speculated that radicals opposed to the emperor system were responsible for the blast.

Lebanese Hijacker Sentenced

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LAUSANNE, Switzerland — A militant Lebanese Shiite Moslem was sentenced to life imprisonment today for the 1987 hijack of an Air Afrique jetliner in which he killed a French passenger and seriously wounded a flight attendant.

Switzerland's highest court convicted Hussein Hariri, 22, on all seven charges against him, including murder, attempted murder and hostage-taking.

The ruling by the five-member Federal Criminal Court, after a four-day trial, matched the demands of the prosecution, which called Hariri a "killer blinded by conviction."

Defense attorneys had sought a conviction on the lesser charge of manslaughter, claiming Hariri acted on reflex when he fatally shot Xavier Beaulieu, 28. They said testimony did not disprove their contention that the victim had made a threatening move.

Hariri commandeered an Air Afrique DC-10 on a flight from Brazzaville, Congo, to Paris on July 24, 1987, to press demands for the release of Lebanese and Palestinians held by France, West Germany and Israel.

After gaining control of the plane over northern Italy, he demanded to be flown to Beirut but agreed to a refueling stop at Geneva airport. Hariri shot Beaulieu after his deadline for readying the plane expired.

Swiss police stormed the plane and arrested the lone hijacker after crew members overpowered him and passengers began fleeing the aircraft over safety chutes.

Flight attendant Jean-Pierre Elouma was seriously injured by a shot from Hariri's pistol when he jumped the hijacker.

Investigators said Hariri boarded the plane at Bangui, Central African Republic, carrying 140 rounds of ammunition and 19 ounces of explosives.

Hariri refused to testify in court about his alleged links to the pro-Iranian Hezbollah group, Lebanon's most militant faction.

Presiding judge Jean-Jacques Leu said Hariri told pre-trial interrogators that he joined Hezbollah in 1985 after his release from an Israeli prison.

Hezbollah is believed to be an umbrella for groups holding most of the 15 foreign hostages in Lebanon, which include nine Americans.

The longest-held foreign hostage is Terry A. Anderson, 41, chief Middle East correspondent for The Associated Press, who was kidnapped March 16, 1985.

Author Holding Up

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LONDON — Despite being forced underground by Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini's death order, the author of "The Satanic Verses" is not in bad spirits and is grateful for the support he has received — especially from Moslems, his friends say.

Salman Rushdie has been in hiding since Feb. 14, when Iran's fundamentalist patriarch, the Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini, told Moslems to seek out the British author and his publishers and kill them for his allegedly blasphemous book.

Blake Morrison, literary editor of the weekly newspaper The Observer, said Thursday he had talked with Rushdie and that the 41-year-old writer sounded "all right."

"He did not sound terminally depressed or anything," he said.

Moslem clerics in Iran have backed Khomeini's threat by offering up to $5.2 million in bounty for the death of Rushdie. Orthodox Moslems consider "The Satanic Verses" slanderous to the Islamic religion.

Banks Boost Rate To 11.5 Pct.

By Peter Coy
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — An increase in banks' prime lending rate to 11.5 percent, the highest level in over four years, is a direct outcome of the Federal Reserve's attempt to crack down on inflation, economists say.

Chase Manhattan Bank and Republic Bank of New York announced the half-percentage-point increases in the benchmark rate on Thursday, and other banks were expected to follow their lead today.

Banks use the prime rate as a base for setting rates on a wide variety of business and consumer loans, including car loans and adjustable-rate home mortgages.

The increases, effective today, lift the prime rate to its highest level since November 1984, when it reached 11.75 percent. In the past year the rate has jumped 3 percentage points. The most recent rise, to 11 percent from 10.5 percent, was on Feb. 10.

The Federal Reserve has been trying to keep inflation under control by slowing down the economy. It does that by draining reserves from the banking system, which drives up short-term interest rates and discourages borrowing.

Banks are passing along higher rates because their own cost of funds has risen and demand for loans remains strong, said Alan Lenz, director of trade and economics for the Chemical Manufacturers Association.

"The prime rate is like any other price; it's set by both supply and demand. They're going to get the best price they can," Lenz said.

Chase said it was reacting to rises in other rates, not anticipating them, when it raised its prime rate.

"The prime's a laggard rate," said Fraser Seitel, a senior vice president.

On Wednesday, the Labor Department reported that consumer prices rose in January at an annual rate of 7.2 percent, the highest in two years.

Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan called the inflation trend disturbing and vowed to keep upward pressure on rates until the pinch succeeds in squeezing inflation out of the economy.

Since February 1988 the federal funds rate has jumped by more than 3 percentage points. This rate, the interest on overnight loans between banks, is closely controlled by the Federal Reserve.

The Fed drained reserves from the banking system on Thursday, seemingly indicating that it wants to keep the federal funds rate some- where between 9.5 percent and 9.75 percent, said Giulio Martini, an economist at the investment firm Sanford C. Bernstein & Co. in New York.

Banks typically set their prime rate about 2 percentage points above the federal funds rate, which would translate to a prime of 11.5 percent to 11.75 percent, Martini said.

"This is essentially a correctly placed prime," Martini said.

Principals Report Higher Salaries

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — High school principals enjoyed a 4.9 percent salary boost to an average of $52,987 this school year, reflecting what one official called a recognition that they are "key players" in the drive for better education.

The lowest salary scale among senior high principals nationwide was $30,497, paid in one of the largest districts surveyed with at least 25,000 students, according to the survey by the National Association of Secondary School Principals.

The report was released Thursday at the principal's annual meeting being held this week in New Orleans. Data on more than 1,000 school districts around the country was collected by the Educational Research Service, a private, non-profit research arm created in 1973 by the principals' association and several other education groups.

Pay increases exceeded the 4.1 percent overall inflation rate for 1988, but were not as steep as the 6-7 percent salary increases of the preceding four years.

"I think it represents the fact that principals are being recognized as key players in the drive for better schools," said Paul W. Hersey, the association's director of professional assistance.

Hersey pointed out that more school districts are trying "school based management," where individual schools are freed to try different strategies with less outside interference.

That kind of reform "requires highly skilled leaders who are paid well," Hersey said.

The survey calculated average salaries by school district size, but did not identify individual school districts, nor did it give state-by-state averages.

Average pay for high school principals was $52,987, up from $50,512 a year ago. But the averages ranged from $55,991 in districts of 25,000 students or more to $47,612 in districts with enrollments of 300 to 2,499.

Hersey said in an interview that the highest salary found in the survey was $86,500 for a senior high school principal in a district in the Northeast with enrollment between 2,500 and 9,999 pupils.

The survey also found that junior high and middle school principals averaged $49,427, up 5 percent from last year's $47,078. Elementary school principals' average pay rose 5.1 percent to $45,909 compared with $43,664 in 1987.

Investor Indicted

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — A Broadway producer-investor was ready to flee the country when she was arrested for stealing more than $1 million by telling investors she was the "secret wife" of David Rockefeller, a prosecutor said.

Adela Holzer, an investor in the Broadway shows "Hair," "Lenny," and "The Ritz," was indicted Thursday, and she remains in jail without bail on a charge of first-degree grand larceny in connection with the alleged scheme, Manhattan District Attorney Robert Morgenthau said.

He said Ms. Holzer conducted the scheme between April 1988 until her arrest last week and was about to flee the country when she was picked up by authorities outside her mid-Manhattan apartment building.

She is scheduled to be arraigned March 8.

Morgenthau said Ms. Holzer convinced investors to give her money by telling them she was secretly married to Rockefeller, retired chairman of Chase Manhattan Bank. He said she promised investors that Rockefeller would invest their money and obtain profits of 48 percent to 82 percent within 90 days.

Morgenthau displayed two fake marriage certificates which showed she had married Rockefeller in Madrid, Spain.

Prosecutors alleged that Ms. Holzer victimized one investor, Brian Griffiths, a New York City investment counselor, of $1 million, and other investors of smaller amounts.

The six-count indictment lists five people allegedly swindled by Ms. Holzer, but Morgenthau said his office knew of at least 26 people from whom she had obtained money ostensibly for investment.

Robert Koppelman, Holzer's attorney, said: "The true facts are not as they appear in the indictment. At a trial, the truth will emerge and my client will be vindicated."

The first-degree grand larceny charge carries a maximum term of 25 years in prison upon conviction.

Ohl College Houses Works Of Reformer Martin Luther

By James Hannah
 THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SPRINGFIELD, Ohio - Equipped with protective lighting filters, a library basement at Wittenberg University is home to one of the nation's largest collections of the religious works of Martin Luther, leader of the 16th century Protestant Reformation.

Some materials in the collection are more than 500 years old. Some of the documents are kept in a safe. All require special permission to study.

"It's a real treasure for scholars," said Regina Entorf, special collections librarian. "So many of these things have been lost through fire and flood and bombing."

Ms. Entorf said the materials are invaluable to scholars who need to trace exact wording of important documents in the intellectual history of the Western world.

"A surprising number of people know that these are here," she said. "And we do have people come and study them from time to time. A lot of these things are irreplaceable."

Wittenberg takes its name from the University of Wittenberg founded in Germany in 1502 by Frederick the Wise, a lifelong protector of Luther against the pope.

Luther was a professor of theology at the University of Wittenberg. He was the leader of the Reformation, a religious movement that led to a schism in the Catholic Church and the birth of Protestantism. His translation of the Bible into German helped create the modern German language.

The collection boasts about 350 books, pamphlets and prints, including all of Luther's collected works from the 16th century. The oldest is a Bible printed in 1478, only 23 years after the Gutenberg Bible was printed on the world's first printing press.

"It's a very beautiful thing," said Ms. Entorf. "It's in the safe, as is a letter that Luther wrote." The letter is to a parishoner and answers questions about eating meat sacrificed to idols.

She said the Wittenberg collection is one of the largest in the country. Other Luther collections include those at the Folger Shakespeare Library in Washington and at Stanford University.

Some of the Wittenberg works were part of the original collection at the school, which was founded in 1845.

"Of course, the people are heavily Lutheran," said Ms. Entorf. "People just kept these books forever. And we've had a lot of gifts through the years. We've educated pastors from the very beginning of our history."

The Wittenberg collection boasts numerous pamphlets written by Luther.

"This is what really spread the Reformation throughout Europe because these would go to pastors in small towns throughout Europe," she said. "And that's the way the word would spread."

Along with the 1478 Bible and the original Luther letter, the collection includes a Bible Luther translated from Latin into German in 1555, a Luther translation of the communion service from Latin into German and a 1570 church order prescribed by the government on how church services were to be conducted.

Ms. Entorf said the Wittenberg collection has held up well, with the bindings being virtually indestructible if they are treated properly.

"The content is interesting because the original text is here, and the scholars can trace that back," she said. "But the other thing that you have is a lot of history in the bindings. So these are interesting artifacts to scholars as well as intellectual content."

Printing in the 16th century was often done on linen, which lasts indefinitely. Covers of the books are made of embossed pigskin or of parchment, which is dried lambskin.

Ms. Entorf said fluorescent lighting in the library basement has special shields to reduce the ultraviolet light and protect the works.

"We don't have climate control yet, but we're working on it," she said. "You would need to keep it (the humidity) down in the summer and up in the winter. It has to be level."

John & Candi Staton Sussewell
 They Will Be Ministering In Word And Song
 Friday & Saturday, February 24 & 25 • 7:30 Nightly
 Sunday, February 26 • 6:30 P.M.

Rev. John Sussewell and his wife, Candi Staton, were once successes in popular music. Mr. Sussewell was a seasoned percussionist who'd played for the likes of Dinah Ross and Ashford & Simpson, while Ms. Staton scored several big R&B hits and was in demand nationwide for club dates and recording sessions.

But both maintain that their lives today are richer and fuller, and that when they became born-again Christians the subsequent changes were so beneficial they had to tell others their story.

CAIN and ABEL

WHEN CAIN AND ABEL MAKE OFFERINGS TO GOD, THE LORD REJECTS CAIN'S OFFERING AND CAIN IS FILLED WITH JEALOUSY AND ANGER AT HIS YOUNGER BROTHER'S ACCEPTANCE...

THE LORD PREFERS A KEEPER OF SHEEP OVER ONE WHO WORKS IN GOD'S OWN SOIL!

CAIN!

WHY ARE YOU ANGRY? IF YOU DO WELL, SHALL YOU NOT BE ACCEPTED? AND IF YOU DO NOT DO WELL, SIN LIES AT YOUR DOOR WHEN YOU GIVE WAY TO ANGER.

AND THERE IS ABEL... ACCEPTED BY THE LORD! I HATE HIM! HE STOLE GOD'S FAVOR FROM ME!

SO!

I MUST RUN... I MUST HIDE FROM THE LORD!

NEXT WEEK -- PUNISHMENT.

Fringe Benefits Are A Plus

CULLMAN, Ala. — When a Saudi Arabian prince went searching for his children's first nanny, he had to go to Cullman to find her.

The Alabama city is the home of Care By Nannies Inc., a business devoted exclusively to placing nannies, governesses and mother's helpers in the homes of its clients.

Its president, Tuscaloosa native Carol Adams, readily admits her company caters to the wealthy — people who desire children but have little time for daily care. "I would say $150,000 would be the lowest income for one of our families," Mrs. Adams said.

Naturally, that figure would be a little low in the case of the Saudi prince.

"We were contacted by his representative in Chicago," Mrs. Adams said, "and he was very specific about what he wanted. He told us he was one of the wealthiest people in the world."

The challenge facing Mrs. Adams was to find a woman to teach the prince's children proper English, but also with the ability to live in a world far different from America. As are all the nannies, she had to be single. Unlike the others, she had to be prepared to exist in a country where there is no dating.

"We found a 39-year-old woman with a Lebanese-American background," Mrs. Adams said. "She was very interested in Middle Eastern culture, but I'm not sure anybody can be prepared for that life before they go over there."

Once settled in, the nanny will be furnished full room and board, a wardrobe, medical expenses and a chauffeur.

Because of her new family's wealth, she will most likely see the world. Another nanny on the job for seven months in Washington, D.C., already has been to London and Canada and will travel to Aspen, Colo., and the Caribbean soon.

"I guess the biggest perk to me is the travel," Mrs. Adams said. "There are lots of fringe benefits. It's something that would be fun to do for a young, single girl."

In fact, Mrs. Adams got the idea to start her company by nearly becoming a nanny herself.

After receiving a bachelor's degree in child development from the University of Alabama, Mrs. Adams landed a position with the Department of Human Resources and dug in as a social worker.

Ten years and a master's degree in social work later, "it was time for a change."

She came across a newspaper ad placed by a New York couple looking for a nanny. Mrs. Adams made contact and left Alabama for a job interview in the Big Apple.

"They were very wealthy, and it was very exciting to me," she recalled. "It was a 26-year-old man married to a 38-year-old woman. They hadn't planned on having children, and here they were with a 9-month-old child. They just had no idea what to do with this kid."

The mother of the child was in the thoroughbred horse business, and Mrs. Adams also was struck by the prospect of living in an apartment complex where Paul Newman regularly stopped by to pet the family dog. She came "so close" to taking the job, but worried about her social life.

"They wanted me to work all weekends, and I felt like being in New York with no weekends off, I'd be pretty unhappy."

With her mind whirling on the plane ride home, thoughts of starting her own business slowly grew. She thought it over, considered her background and felt qualified to go ahead.

"What can a social worker do besides go into counseling work? Then you listen to people's problems, and I had done that for 10 years."

She kept her job with the state as the fledgling business grew, and then worked part time for eight months. "It got to the point that I couldn't do it as a hobby. It's a lot of work, and a complicated process."

Now headed into its third year, Care By Nannies has placed 35 women in homes. They range in age from 19 to 63, and are spread from Florida to Saudi Arabia.

Prospective nannies are selected carefully. Ads run regularly in newspapers and Young Children magazine, and all interviews are conducted in Cullman. Candidates are psychoanalyzed through the administration of a test, the Minnesota Multi-Phasic Personality Inventory.

Mrs. Adams also relies on five consultants, each of whom work different fields related to child care. After the screening, the really hard part begins — placement.

"You can work and work to find the perfect person, and the family will find something very trivial they don't like," Mrs. Adams said. "I've had two families that specified the nanny had to wear a uniform. That family wants a servant, and you can't have a professional person be a servant."

Pay is based on the number of children, with salaries ranging from $900 to $1,400 a month. Each nanny's expenses are minimal. They are given free room and board, usually a car and sometimes even have their phone bill paid.

"In many homes the nannies are treated just like a member of the family, and I've found that arrangement usually works the best. Most of them really enjoy it."

Double-Ring Vows Said

MRS. SUGG

GRIFTON — Tammy Lynn Harris and Kevin Bruce Sugg exchanged wedding vows last Saturday in the Grifton Free Will Baptist Church.

The Rev. Van Mitchell officiated at the double-ring ceremony. A program of wedding music was presented by organist Cindy Chadwell and pianist Kay Davis. Vocalist was Vicky Bell of Grimesland.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Randy Clark of Greenville and the late Jimmy Wayne Harris. The bridegroom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Melvin Sugg of Grifton.

Given in marriage by her stepfather and mother, the bride was escorted by her stepfather. She wore a chapel-length gown of white satin. The neckline was Victorian accented by lace. The bishop sleeves of satin extended into a lace sleeve. The bodice was fitted and the basque waistline extended into an A-line skirt, accented with tiers of chantilly lace. The back featured a low V back trimmed with lace.

Bridesmaids were Annette Manning, Wendy Brady and Lynn Holland of Greenville.

The father of the bridegroom was best man. Ushers were Jimmy Harris of Greenville, brother of the bride, Randy Sugg of Grifton and Todd Sugg of Maury, brothers of the bridegroom.

The ceremony was directed by Ann Dail of Snow Hill, aunt of the bride.

A reception was held in the church fellowship hall given by the mothers of the bridal couple and family. Danielle Mills presided at the guest register. Assisting in serving were Ann Hughes, Carolyn Fleming, Margaret Clemons and Carolyn Fleming.

Having had a wedding trip to the coast, the couple resides near Grifton.

The bride is employed by H&R Block and the bridegroom is self-employed.

Parents Should Reinforce

Dear Abby: Recently I was in a grocery store with my two daughters, ages 4 and 7. After we left, I discovered that my 4-year-old had taken some candy, so I made her go back in with me, apologize to the manager and return the candy.

To my amazement, the manager rewarded her for her "honesty" by giving her and her sister more candy than she had stolen!

Abby, please tell shopkeepers to reinforce parents' efforts to teach children that stealing is wrong. I'm afraid that shopkeeper gave the wrong message to my children. The 4-year-old felt like a hero in front of her big sister for getting even more candy than she had taken.

Please comment on this. — Mom In Snellville, Ga.

Dear Mom: You make a very important point. Rewarding a child lavishly for returning ill-gotten gains gives the child the impression that stealing pays off. The shopkeeper should have praised the child for owning up to her wrongdoing and told her sternly never to take anything again.

Dear Abby: I lost my wife after having been married for 30 years. We had one of those very good marriages that are all too rare these days. She died a little over a year ago, but she was a very sick woman for the last two years of her life.

After my wife was diagnosed as terminal, she told me that she had heard (she didn't say where) that men over 50 are highly susceptible to cancer of the prostate if they go without sex for very long. Is this true?

I certainly hope not, because my religion forbids sex outside marriage and I am in no mood to date another woman, let alone go to bed with one.

You can print this if you think it will help others, but I respectfully ask you to withhold my name and the name of my town. Sign me ... Over 50 And Worried Idea Over 50: Cancer of the prostate does occur more frequently in men past 50, but it has nothing to do with sexual activity. See your physician for regular checkups, and don't worry.

Dear Abby: My mother and I are having a disagreement. Is it necessary to write and thank someone for a thank-you gift? This is not a joke. I am serious.

I had a houseguest over the holidays. She sent me a gift thanking me for my hospitality. My mother says I must acknowledge it.

I say that she thanked me for my hospitality, and there is no need to thank her for thanking me.

What do you say? — Enough Thanks, Already

Dear Enough: It is not enough. You should thank her for her gift.

School Offers Dream Course

By John Platero
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PEMBROKE PINES, Fla. — Few people have sat behind the wheel of a moving car, hands gripping the steering wheel, and not imagined — for at least a moment — the thrill of being a race car driver.

That fantasy can be a reality here at Brands Hatch America, a school for the aspiring race driver or for those wishing to satisfy a Walter Mitty dream for a day.

"This is the for the guy who wants the experience of driving a race car once — for the thrill of it — and for the guy who really wants to race, but doesn't know how to go about it," said Vice President Dave Charsley of Bromley, England.

The school features a fleet of Formula race cars, its own road-racing track and a team of instructors. Students can select a one-day course or continue with advanced personal instruction and training that, on graduation, provides provisional licenses qualifying the individual to race professionally as a rookie.

Owned by Brands Hatch Racing of England, the school also teaches anti-terrorist protective driving for security personnel or accident evasion driving for people who simply want to be better drivers.

The one-day or initial course, costing $175, begins with a classroom session where auto dynamics and physics of a moving vehicle are taught.

Students are then provided helmets and racing suits and taken for a demonstration ride around the 1.6-mile track in race-prepared Ford Escorts or Mustangs.

Driver and student then change places for several laps. This allows the instructor to observe, analyze and correct the novice's driving faults.

Finally, the student is strapped into a brightly colored, single-seat Formula First race car and is alone for five laps around the 10-turn raceway. The Ford-powered race car can do 145 mph, but novices are not expected to reach that speed.

From a nearby control tower, instructors watch and time students on first-time performance — information needed for those who return for advanced training.

For safety, an ambulance and emergency service personnel are always at trackside.

"People think performance driving is speed, but it's control," said Pete Argetsinger, vice president and chief instructor.

One lap with Argetsinger as he skillfully maneuvers the chicanes (tight turns to slow the driver) at 110 mph, puts the vehicle through a four-wheel "drift" around a curve, brakes and down-shifts for a hairpin turn, quickly shows students how little they know about driving.

"Anything students learn here can save their lives on the highway," said Argetsinger, an active competitor with 14 years of racing experience in Europe and the United States.

"We teach respect for the car," he added.

Since Brands Hatch opened this training center in April 1988, Charsley estimates some 600 students from around the country have come through the school. Many are the recipients of gift certificates.

The average age is 25-45 although several have been in their late 60s, he said.

"Most come for the one-day course, but many come back for the ongoing program," he said. Advanced sessions cost $350 a day, but include 30 laps in a race car. While one out of every 20 who take the course is a woman, females tend to be better students.

"Women don't come with a 'macho hangup,'" explained Argetsinger. "Men come thinking they are good drivers and often are insulted when you criticize their driving."

Charsley added there is no physical difference between men and women when it comes to racing. One problem with women, he said, "is mentally they don't think they are good enough. That's erroneous."

Stock And Market Reports

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market headed lower today, faced with a barrage of interest-rate increases.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials dropped 8.39 to 2,281.07 in the first half hour of trading.

Losers outnumbered gainers by nearly 2 to 1 in nationwide trading of New York Stock Exchange-listed issues, with 314 up, 598 down and 537 unchanged.

Volume on the Big Board came to 22.19 million shares as of 10 a.m. on Wall Street.

After the close on Thursday, Chase Manhattan Bank of New York kicked off the second round of prime rate increases this month, raising the benchmark rate on variable loans from 11 percent to 11.5 percent.

As more banks joined in that move today, the Federal Reserve increased its discount rate, the charge it sets on loans to private financial institutions, from 6.5 percent to 7 percent.

The Fed said it acted in response to "inflationary pressures in the economy."

Open-market interest rates for securities such as bonds and Treasury bills also climbed today.

While the rise in rates increased investors' worries about the business and economic outlook, analysts said, they did not come as any great surprise, given recent government reports that suggested inflation was heating up.

Emhart led the active list, up 6 3/4 at 39 1/2. An investment group known as Topper L.P. said it began a $35-a-share tender offer for Emhart's stock, and speculation immediately arose among traders that a higher bid might be in the offing.

The NYSE's composite index of all its listed common stocks dropped .55 to 163.54. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index was down .33 at 322.90.

On Thursday the Dow Jones industrial average finished with a 5.53 gain at 2,289.46.

Advancing issues slightly outnumbered declines on the NYSE, with 738 up, 684 down and 501 unchanged.

Big Board volume totaled 150.37 million shares, against 163.14 million in the previous session.

information about the incident. "We have a team of people gathering information right now," she said. Last April 28, a flight attendant was killed and 61 persons injured when a portion of the fuselage on a Boeing 737 peeled off during an Aloha flight from Hilo to Honolulu, exposing the first-class section to the open air at 24,000 feet. The pilot and co-pilot managed to land the crippled jet 13 minutes later in Maui although one of the engines quit. Tiny cracks were found later in nearly half the aging Boeing 737 jetliners inspected in the months following the Aloha accident.

Nominee

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., has asked the FBI to investigate the business dealings of Lawrence Eagleburger, tapped for the State Department's No. 2 job. Eagleburger is President Bush's choice for deputy secretary of state. He's a well-known former career diplomat with close ties to former Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger.

The nominee's ties to Kissinger have prompted the senator, a critic of the Kissinger policy of detente with the Soviet Union, to ask the FBI to investigate some of Eagleburger's business dealings. Until recently, Eagleburger was president of Kissinger Associates, a consulting firm for multinational corporations.

Animal Rights

DURHAM (AP) — A group of 35 biomedical research organizations will form a permanent alliance to counteract the increasing visibility of animal-rights activists in North Carolina, the group announced. "Our concerns are mainly for balance," said Dr. Stephen R. Mosier, director of research services at the University of North Carolina at Greensboro.

N.C. Gets Snow From Mountains To Coast

primarily a surface system," he said. "The primary energy is in a very deep trough in the upper levels of the atmosphere. A reflection of that is this coastal low developing near the Outer Banks. The overall storm system is this kind of large, deep upper level system. That's why the system covers so much area — Alabama to Virginia, West Virginia. No little old surface low near the Outer Banks would cause so much of the area to be blanketed by snow."

It's unusual for one system to take snow to cover the whole state, he said. "But this is a big one."

It's also unusual for there to be lightning and thunder during a snowstorm. But that also happened Thursday.

Thunderstorms usually occur in the summer when the surface air is much warmer than upper-level colder air, he said. In this case, even though the surface air is very cold, the upper level air is even colder, producing the same instability that causes summer thunderstorms, Pelissier said.

Early today, amateur radio operators had reported two to four inches of snow west of a line from Fayetteville to Tarboro with locally heavier amounts over the northeast Piedmont and coastal plains of more than five inches.

Farther west, county communications centers indicated snow amounts ranging from three to seven inches with heaviest accumulations in Lincoln County, where seven inches had fallen. Snowfall amounts of three to four inches were common with up to five in some areas on the ground around metropolitan Charlotte. In Catawba County, Hickory reported around an inch of snow on the ground while other parts of the county reported about four inches.

In the northern foothills and northwest Piedmont, snowfall ranged from eight inches in Davidson, Rowan and Randolph counties, to a low of about one inch in parts of Surry County.

The gale warnings are in effect along the coast from Cape Lookout north, including the area sounds.

Most state-run ferries were suspended. "We don't know when they will be back up," said Bill Jones, a spokesman for DOT. He said the only ferry still in operation was on the Pamlico River between Bayview and Aurora. Jones also said a foot of water was reported covering parts of N.C. 12 on the Outer Banks.

Strong, gusty north winds of between 30 mph and 40 mph occurred over northeast North Carolina, mainly along the Albemarle Sound and along the coast of the Outer Banks. Winds gusting to 50 mph were reported on the Alligator River Bridge Thursday night.

Perfect Script For Ferry, Blue Devils

DURHAM — Danny Ferry wouldn't have written the script any differently.

Ferry, a 6-10 senior All-American forward at Duke University, was playing in his final game at Cameron Indoor Stadium Wednesday night against North Carolina State.

The Blue Devil co-captain was greeted one final time by the appreciative crowd with a thunderous roar during player introductions.

His gift in return was a 26-point, seven rebound effort and an 86-65 win over the Wolfpack.

Ferry took one last bow before the crowd with 1:32 left on the clock when coach Mike Krzyzewski took him out for the last time. Following the game, a throng of fans and students paid tribute to Ferry and fellow seniors John Smith and Quinn Snyder by waiting around as each spoke to the crowd and gave them their thank yous.

"I'm really excited we won," Ferry said in the lockerroom following the game. "But I'm also sad. I know I'll never experience anything like this (Cameron) again."

"I've played here for four years and it's been unbelievable," Ferry said. "It's almost like this building is alive and the fans, they're great. They really are a part of this team. It's been a great four years and it's just sad that it has to end."

But Ferry was quick to point out that he wasn't hanging up his sneakers just yet.

"It's not over yet," Ferry said. "It's been a great four years here, but we've still got some work left to do."

The Blue Devils next job will be tackling Arizona in the Meadowlands in New Jersey on Sunday.

The creativity of Duke University students was evident once again Thursday when the Wolfpack invaded Cameron Indoor Stadium.

The Blue Devil fans, known throughout the country for their wacky behavior, had dug up plenty to pick on the Wolfpack for.

Duke's Tricks Foil State

The Associated Press

Duke's Quinn Snyder blocks State's Chris Corchiani

By Tim Chandler
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

DURHAM — On a night when Mother Nature was busy pulling tricks, Duke came up with a defensive prank of its own.

The Blue Devils, known for their tenacious man-to-man defense, used a match-up zone to spark a 86-65 rout over N.C. State in Atlantic Coast Conference basketball action Thursday.

The Duke win sent seniors Danny Ferry, Quinn Snyder and John Smith out of Cameron Indoor Stadium with a win in their final home game appearance.

"I'm very upset with Mike (Krzyzewski) about that (using the match-up zone)," Wolfpack coach Jim Valvano quipped after the game. "My assistants kept telling me that they were in a zone but I said 'no way, Mike wouldn't do that.'"

"It (the zone) tends to make people stop penetrating and we did," Valvano said. "It was like we were sort of shocked to see Duke in a zone."

The win lifts Duke to 21-4 overall for the year and 8-4 in the ACC. The loss dropped the Wolfpack into a tie for the ACC lead with North Carolina at 8-3, just a half-game ahead of the Blue Devils. State is 18-6 overall.

"I think we've earned everything we've gotten," junior forward Robert Brickley said. "We want to come in first place. We know that we're going to need some help, but I think we're playing the best ball in the conference right now."

The Blue Devils went into the zone when they were behind 16-15. The end result was a 22-3 run and a 37-19 lead with 3:14 left in the first half.

"They had a hard time scoring tonight," Krzyzewski said. "We went to the matchup to stop fouling them because they weren't scoring from the field before we went into it, they were getting their points at the foul line."

Ten of the Wolfpack's first 16 points came at the charity stripe.

The Blue Devil spurt spelled the beginning of the end for the Wolfpack, according to Valvano.

"They had that run and that was all she wrote," Valvano said.

Ferry, who finished with 26 points and seven rebounds, scored 11 points during the Blue Devil run.

"The defense was the key," Ferry said. "I don't think I remember a game where we switched defenses more in a long time. But I think we all responded well throughout the changes and that was the key to the game for us."

Alaa Abdelnaby gave the Blue Devils the lead for good when he scored on a baseline layup with 10:19 to play for a 17-16 lead.

Ferry then scored in the lane and Duke was off to the races.

At one point, the Blue Devils ran off 14 straight points.

Ferry capped the Duke spurt with

Martin Wants An End To Controversy

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — Gov. Jim Martin says he is impressed by the way North Carolina State University has handled the controversy over alleged corruption in its basketball program but says the matter has gotten enough attention.

"There's nothing wrong about raising questions about any institutions in American society," Martin said Thursday. "Yet once that's been examined and you find no evidence of a serious problem then I think it's time to move on."

Martin praised the school, its athletes and basketball coach Jim Valvano the day after Simon & Schuster announced it would not publish a book alleging corruption in N.C. State's basketball program.

"They've been under a lot of pressure," said the governor, who frequently attends college basketball games. "I have seen them carry their burden remarkably well and I think they deserve a lot of credit for it. ... And their coach does."

A dust jacket released last month billed the book, "Personal Fouls," as an expose on the Wolfpack program and listed allegations including improper gifts to players and grade changes.

But after a review of the manuscript prompted by the university's threat of a lawsuit, the company said Wednesday the book did not meet its standards and would not be published.

N.C. State Chancellor Bruce Poulton said publicity about the book had damaged the university's reputation "irrevocably" and that legal action was still being considered.

At his weekly news conference, Martin agreed the school had suffered.

"I'm not sure about the irreparable part," he said. "I think it has caused some injury to the university's reputation because it's been broadcast all over the country. ... But 'irreparable' means you can't repair it. I think they can."

Martin did not answer directly when asked whether he believed N.C. State should take legal action, but appeared to address the question by saying it was time to put the matter in the past.

He noted that separate investigations have been conducted by the National Collegiate Athletic Association, the UNC system and N.C. State itself. None has resulted in allegations of wrongdoing, he said.

"It's easy to attack a group of students who are also exceptionally good athletes," Martin said. "And I think it's unfortunate that the fact that some of them are having academic difficulty has to be paraded out in front of everybody when they're trying to work on both their school work and their basketball program. I have been very impressed with how they have responded to that."

Notes: East Carolina will be seeking to win its fifth straight game... If it does, it will be the first time since the 1974-75 season that ECU has won as many games in a row.

The Pirates will also be attempting to snap a nine-game losing streak against the Seahawks... ECU hasn't won over UNCW since the 1984-85 season when the Pirates won at home, 78-61... The Pirates do however hold a 9-6 edge in series' games played at Minges Coliseum UNCW has clinched fourth place in the CAA standings and will meet the fifth place team in the first round of the CAA tournament.

That could well be ECU as a Pirate win, coupled with a James Madison loss would make ECU fifth... If both ECU and JMU lose, a coin toss will decide fifth and sixth (on Monday)... If both JMU beats George Mason, the Dukes would take fifth seeding... ECU, 14-12, would ensure a winning season — only their fourth in the last 15 years — with a win over UNCW... The Seahawks, 13-13, lost to Campbell in Fayetteville Wednesday, 67-53... ECU lost to UNCW, 81-66, in their first meeting of the year, playing a terrible second half.

UNCW senior center Larry Houzer had only nine points against the Camels but has been a particular thorn in the side of the Pirates. He had 19 points and eight rebounds against ECU the last time these two met... In the last meeting between ECU and UNCW, the Bucs got no points from their guards as Jeff Kelly and Kenny Murphy were a combined 0-7.

The game will be broadcast on the Pirates Sports Network originating out of WDLX 93.3 in Washington. Jeff Charles will be the play by play man and his broadcast will start at 7:05 p.m. with the Mike Steele Show... At halftime, Pizza Hut will award a scholarship to the Pirate Club for the team's Most Valuable Player for the season... The top player for ECU against the Seahawks has been Blue Edwards. In four games against UNCW, he has averaged 15.3 points and 5.8 rebounds per game... This year's team has already set a record for most steals in a season with 189, led by Edwards' 43 and Kelly's 36...

Bucs Go For 5th Straight

Final Home Game For Edwards, Kelly And Murphy

By Woody Peele
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Three seniors, including two who have made their mark on the East Carolina record book, will make their final appearance in Minges Coliseum Saturday night.

The prime feature is the matchup between East Carolina and UNC-Wilmington in the final Colonial Athletic Association basketball game of the regular season, set for 7:30 p.m.

But the farewell to the three seniors will help bring in what is expected to be a full house to Minges as Blue Edwards, Jeff Kelly and Kenny Murphy play in their final home game.

Edwards, who is a prime candidate for Player of the Year honors in the Colonial, is the league's leading scorer with a 26.4 point per game average. He is the only one in the conference to be named named Player of the Week three times this year. Edwards also averages 6.8 rebounds a game, leading the Pirates.

Edwards goes into the game within sight of several seasonal and career records for the Pirates. His average is a point and a half behind Oliver Mack's 1978 record of 27.9 points a game. He's scored 266 field goals this season, just 26 behind Mack's record of 292. His total points for the season, 685, is just 14 behind Mack's mark of 699. Edwards has scored 132 free throws, 14 behind Jim Modlin's 1970 record of 114. And his field goal percentage, if it holds, could surpass Jerry Woodside's record of .540, set in 1966. Edwards is seventh in field goals made in a career with 435.

With 1,089 points, Edwards currently ranks 12th among career scorers, just nine behind 11th place Billy Brodgen (1961-65). And his 26 blocked shots is cited with William Grady for eighth place.

Edwards has 80 career steals, third among Pirates, while Kelly ranked fifth with 70 and Reed Lose, a junior, is 10th with 56.

Kelly has surpassed both the career and single season record for assists. He passed Herb Dixon as the single season leader Wednesday with three against Liberty. That brought him to 114 for the year. His four-year total of 263 is some 30 better than the old record holder, Curt Vanderhorst.

Kentucky Official Denies Sutton Rumors

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LEXINGTON, Ky. — There has been no discussion of and no decision made on the future of Kentucky basketball coach Eddie Sutton, the university's acting athletic director says.

"It would be ludicrous to even suggest that we would be thinking about changing coaches at this point in our season," Joe Burch said Thursday. "There's been no discussion on that. There is no coaching vacancy at the university, and therefore no reason for us to be searching for a new coach.

Any reports to the contrary are pure speculation."

Burch was responding to a story Thursday in the Columbus (Ohio) Dispatch that Lee Rose, an assistant coach with the New Jersey Nets, would be named to replace Sutton in a few weeks.

Rose said any talk of him coming to Kentucky was news to him.

"I have not talked to any official at the University of Kentucky," Rose said Thursday from East Rutherford, N.J., where the Nets hosted the Los Angeles Clippers. "It's unfortunate that rumors of this magnitude begin and once they start to unravel, you can't do anything about it."

Sutton said at his weekly news conference Thursday that he is determined to remain as coach of the Wildcats after this season.

"I'm a fighter," Sutton said. "I'm proud to be the coach of the University of Kentucky. I've tried to run the program in a class manner. I'm not about to resign."

"If they want to get rid of me, that's fine. But let's wait until the season is over... Every time one of these leaks comes out, it's so disruptive and discouraging to our basketball players. That's not fair to them."

ECU Officials Say Hoop Game Is Still On

Despite a heavy snowfall Friday, East Carolina officials said Saturday night's basketball game against UNC-Wilmington at Minges Coliseum was still set to go at 7:30 p.m.

A spokesman for ECU said it was a wait-and-see situation and that if the game had to be postponed, it would probably be played Sunday afternoon.

Wilmington received a minimal amount of snowfall and officials at UNCW said they expected the team bus to leave Wilmington Saturday afternoon without any complications.

ECU's baseball game against George Washington set for Saturday at 1 p.m. looked doubtful but a final decision to call the game had not been made. That decision would probably be announced Saturday morning.

Creswell, Mattamuskeet Both Advance

SWAN QUARTER — Creswell and Mattamuskeet advanced into the first round of the Tobacco Belt Conference girls' basketball tournament Thursday night with preliminary victories.

Creswell, seeded ninth, ousted eighth seeded Jamesville, 39-35, while Mattamuskeet, which came in seventh, downed number 10 Columbia, 46-29.

Creswell inched out into a 10-9 lead in the first quarter of its game with Jamesville, but then failed to score in the second period. Jamesville, meanwhile, was scoring 13 points to take a 22-10 halftime lead.

But the Lady Bullets collapsed in the second half. Creswell came back with a 14-6 advantage in the third period to cut the lead to 28-24, then outscored Jamesville, 15-7, in the final period to take the win.

Amy Williams led Creswell with 11 points while Sandra Rawls added 10. Val Clark had 11 and Karen Styons had 10 to pace Jamesville.

The loss ends the season for Jamesville, which closed out with a 4-20 overall record. Creswell advances into the tournament proper to face top-seeded Chocowinity on Monday while Mattamuskeet will take on Aurora, the number two team.

First round boys' games were scheduled for tonight, but may not be played because of weather conditions.

State Wrestling Tournaments Delayed

CHAPEL HILL (AP) — Inclement weather has forced the postponement of the North Carolina High School Athletic Association wrestling championships which were scheduled for this weekend, officials said Thursday.

The 4-A event was set to start Friday at East Forsyth High School, with the 3-A tournament at Greensboro Grimsley High School and the 1A-2A at Ledford High School in Thomasville.

The two-day event will now begin on Friday, March 3, with the championship round set for the night of March 4.

A decision on the state swimming championships, also scheduled for this weekend, was to be made today, according to NCHSAA spokesman Rick Strunk.

Calcavecchia Takes Doral Lead

MIAMI (AP) — Mark Calcavecchia, the dominant figure in golf this season, shot a 7-under-par 65 and established a two-shot lead in the first round of the $1.3 million Doral Open Golf Tournament.

Ben Crenshaw, Bruce Lietzke and Tom Kite were Calcavecchia's closest pursuers. Playing in a threesome, Crenshaw had a 67, Lietzke a 68 and Kite a 68.

Ellis Leads Pontiac 200 Qualifying

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — Defending series champion Tommy Ellis overcame a snow-slickened track to capture the pole for Saturday's Pontiac 200 Busch Grand National stock car race.

Driving a Buick, Ellis posted a fast lap of 120.235 mph on Richmond International Raceway's three-quarter-mile, D-shaped layout.

Morganton's Stout To Be Shrine Coach

CHARLOTTE (AP) — Pete Stout of Morganton Freedom High School has been named North Carolina's head coach for the 1989 Shrine Bowl Game, while Bobby Ivey of Laurens High School was named his South Carolina counterpart.

Stout, who has a 231-86-14 record in 30 years of coaching, will be assisted by Dave Gutshall of Burlington Cummings, Ed Hiatt of West Carteret and Richard Kemp of High Point Central.

Ivey has compiled a 127-632 record in 18 years as a head coach. His assistants are Dave Maness of Aynor, Jim Ringer of Rock Hill and Mac Wier from Barnwell.

The two staffs will meet the first week in November to select 35 outstanding high school senior football players from each state. The all-star game will be played on Dec. 9 in Charlotte.

Ga. Southern Chosen As 1-AA Host Site

STATESBORO, Ga. (AP) — Georgia Southern College, which has played in three of the last four NCAA Division I-AA title games, was selected to be host of the next three championships.

Officials for the NCAA Division I-AA Selection Committee made the decision in South Lake Tahoe, Calif., Thursday.

"By bringing the championship games to Georgia Southern, we are giving the fans a better opportunity to actually attend the games," said Jim Radcliffe, Athletic Marketing Director for GSC and member of the committee. "Statesboro and Georgia are known for their hospitality and now we have the chance to show everyone first-hand."

The National Collegiate Athletic Association's executive committee must make the final decision, but Radcliffe said he believes the action is "99.9 percent official."

Supporters in the Statesboro-Savannah area have committed to buy at least 10,500 tickets for each of the next two games if they are played in the 18,000-seat Paulson Stadium.

The city of Pocatello, Idaho, site of the 1987 and 1988 I-AA Championships, was the only other city that presented proposals for hosting the championship game.

Southern won the 1986 and 1987 titles, the first years its team played in Division I-AA. The Eagles lost the title game last season in Pocatello.

Dantley Set To Report To Dallas

DALLAS (AP) — Adrian Dantley announced that he was ending his holdout with the Dallas Mavericks and would likely play in Friday night's game against Golden State.

The Mavericks said Dantley, acquired from Detroit in a trade last week for Mark Aguirre, arrived on a late-night flight at Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport.

Dantley had sought to extend his contract a year and had missed three games at a cost of $45,000.

Woods To Wait A Week On Staff Decision

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — South Carolina coach Sparky Woods has met with some of the prospects for his coaching staff, but he says he'll wait until next week to announce his decisions.

"What I think I'll do is name the whole staff at one time next week," the Gamecocks' new head coach said Wednesday night.

Woods, 35, said at a news conference Tuesday to announce his hiring that he planned to bring "at least the bulk" of his Appalachian State staff to South Carolina. Woods also has interviewed the five assistants left from Joe Morrison's staff.

Woods replaced Morrison, who died Feb. 5 of a heart attack after playing racquetball with three friends.

Athletic Director King Dixon said Wednesday several outside candidates will be considered for assistant coaching positions on Woods' staff.

"He has indicated to me that he's interested in talking to three or four other people besides those on the two staffs," Dixon said. "Right now is such a critical process because the staff you bring in is what you live with. It can only be as strong as its weakest link."

FSU Loses Fourth In Row

La Salle Tops Seminoles 101-100; Other Leaders Win

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

A couple of weeks ago, Florida State was winning games and support. Now, it looks like the 12th-ranked Seminoles are real — really in trouble.

Florida State lost its fourth straight game, falling 101-100 to LaSalle on Thursday night. Earlier this week, the Seminoles lost to New Orleans and that followed setbacks against Memphis State and Louisville.

This time, Lionel Simmons did the damage. The nation's second-leading scorer got 36 points and 10 rebounds to lead host LaSalle.

"We got off to a slow start and that really hurt us," Florida State coach Pat Kennedy said.

George McCloud scored 36 points for the Seminoles, 19-6. He was 10-for-17 from 3-point range, but missed a 3-point try with four seconds left that would have tied it.

In other games, No. 2 Arizona routed Arizona State 109-74, No. 4 Indiana beat Michigan State 76-65, No. 9 Duke defeated North Carolina State 86-65, No. 11 West Virginia downed St. Joseph's 65-50, No. 13 Michigan beat Ohio State 89-72, No. 16 Stanford got past Oregon 54-50 and No. 18 Nevada-Las Vegas held off Fresno State 75-71.

La Salle, 23-5, led 50-33 at halftime and was ahead 87-76 with 6:07 remaining. Florida State closed within one point, but was still behind 101-95 with 24 seconds left.

McCloud then made a 3-pointer. After a turnover, McCloud missed his potential tying shot and Tharon Maves put in the rebound as time expired.

"I think everybody saw two of the two best players in the country in George McCloud and Lionel Simmons," Kennedy said.

Simmons said the loud crowd of 8,772 at the Palestra kept the Explorers excited.

"I was never in a game where the crowd was in it from start to finish like this one," he said. "Probably all of our players played the best game of our careers."

Jack Hurd scored 19 points and Doug Overton had 17 for La Salle. Maves had 24 points and Tony Dawson 20 for Florida State.

No. 2 Arizona 109, Arizona St. 74
All-American Sean Elliott scored 22 points in his final home game as Arizona clinched a tie for its second straight Pacific-10 Conference title.

Anthony Cook scored 18 points and Ken Lofton had 13 in joining Elliott as seniors making their farewell appearances. The Wildcats, 21-3 and 15-1 in the Pac-10, went 14-0 at McKale Center for their second consecutive undefeated season at home and 33rd consecutive victory overall.

Trent Edwards scored 29 points for the Sun Devils, 12-13.

No. 4 Indiana 76, Michigan St. 65
Jay Edwards scored 21 points and sparked a first-half burst for Indiana.

The Hoosiers, 22-5, won their sixth straight game and improved to 12-1 in the Big Ten, three games ahead of second-place Illinois.

Indiana shot 71 percent from field, the best ever at 50-year-old Jenison Fieldhouse. Edwards was 7-for-8, including 3-for-4 from 3-point range, and led a 12-2 burst that made it 29-17.

Ken Redfield scored 15 points for the Spartans, 12-11.

No. 11 W. Virginia 65, St. Joseph's 50
West Virginia clinched the Atlantic 10 championship and extended the nation's longest winning streak to 22 games.

Herbie Brooks, who went over the career 1,000-point mark, and Steve Berger scored 14 points apiece for the host Mountaineers, 23-2 and 16-0. Ahead 22-21, West Virginia opened the second half with a 22-7 run.

Henry Smith scored 24 points for St. Joseph's. West Virginia has won six straight games against the Hawks.

No. 13 Michigan 89, Ohio St. 72
Glen Rice scored 30 points and Michigan reached the 20-victory mark for the sixth straight season.

The Wolverines are 20-6 and 8-5 in the Big Ten. Ohio State, playing its first home game without injured Jay Burson, is 17-9 and 6-7.

Rumeal Robinson scored 16 points and Loy Vaught had 15 for Michigan. Perry Carter scored 23 points for the Buckeyes, who lead the all-time series 69-55.

No. 16 Stanford 54, Oregon 50
Todd Lichti scored 19 points and Stanford won a slowdown game at Oregon.

The Cardinal, 21-5 and 12-4 in the Pacific-10, was ahead 44-36 midway through the second half but managed just three baskets in the final nine minutes. Oregon got within 47-46 before Stanford held on.

Randy Grant scored 17 points for the Ducks, 8-17.

No. 18 UNLV 75, Fresno St. 71
David Butler scored 19 points and UNLV got past visiting Fresno State in the Big West to clinch a tie for its seventh straight conference title.

UNLV trailed 52-50 with 12:41 remaining before going ahead 72-64 with 51 seconds left. Fresno State rallied within 73-71 with 28 seconds left, but UNLV's Greg Anthony made two foul shots with six seconds to go.

Anthony and Anderson Hunt had 15 points each for the Runnin' Rebels, 20-6 and 13-2. Jervis Cole scored 18 points for the Bulldogs, 12-12.

TERRE HAUTE, Ind. — Larry Bird is long gone and so are the glory days. Not even brother Eddie Bird can save Indiana State now, and even he was ejected as the team finished with just two players in its latest loss.

A first-half fight Thursday night resulted in nine Indiana State ejections, leaving the Sycamores with only four players. Still, they managed to outplay Wichita State before fatigue and fouls set in.

By the time two others fouled out, it was all over. Indiana State, with two players left on the court, lost 84-69 for its school-record 15th straight setback. The Sycamores are 4-22 and 0-13 in the Missouri Valley Conference.

"I'm sorry it happened," said Indiana State coach Ron Greene, who submitted his resignation Wednesday and will leave at the end of the season. "Maybe it was just the culmination of all the frustration. We tried our best to get it under control, but it was such that our backs were to the situation."

The Sycamores trailed 41-25 when the brawl broke out. Centers Darrin Liles of Indiana State and Sasha Radunovich of Wichita State collided under the basket and had to be separated.

A video tape replay showed Liles then reached across and grabbed Radunovich by the hair with his left hand and punched him in the face with his right.

Players on the Indiana State team joined the fight, but the Wichita State players stayed on the sideline. When order was restored, referee Jim Bain ejected Liles and all eight players from the Sycamores' bench. Wichita State's John Cooper, who punched Liles, also was ejected.

"I saw Sasha throw an elbow at Jimmie (Holiday) and I just lost it, but I thought he should have been thrown out, too," Liles said. "There's a lot of tension, what with the coach resigning and everything. We wanted to come out tonight and win for Coach Greene and one thing led to another."

The Sycamores made a good try. Playing 4-against-5, they put together a 28-18 run to start the second half and pulled within 59-55 with 11:13 remaining.

But that was as close as it got. Wichita State scored the next seven points and pulled away.

"I've never been in that situation before (playing against fewer than five players) and neither have my players," Wichita State coach Eddie Fogler said.

The Shockers scored the game's final seven points as Indiana State's players dwindled to two.

Radunovich scored 18 points to lead Wichita State, 17-9 and 9-4 in the conference. Holliday scored 36 for Indiana State.

N.C.-Charlotte 84, Jacksonville 71
CHARLOTTE — Byron Dinkins scored 30 points and set a team single-season assist record in lifting North Carolina-Charlotte to an 84-71 Sun Belt Conference victory over Jacksonville on Thursday night.

Dinkins, the conference assist leader with 7.4 per game, handed out seven assists, hit 13 of 17 field goals and pulled down seven rebounds.

The previous assist mark of 187, set in 1976-77 when UNCC reached the NCAA final four, belonged to current 49er assistant coach Melvin Watkins.

Dinkins scored 18 points in the first half as the 49ers, 16-10 overall and 9-4 in the league, held a 39-34 halftime lead.

The 49ers forced tempo early in the second half. A 16-6 run, capped by Henry Williams' transition layup, gave the 49ers a 55-40 advantage with 16:21 left.

Jacksonville, 12-13 and 5-7, battled back with increased half-court defensive pressure. With 14:10 left, Curtis Taylor's jumper finished off an 11-1 rally that brought the Dolphins to 56-51.

But despite employing a 2-3 zone to slow tempo, UNCC gradually pulled away. A jumper by Jeff West gave UNCC a 77-62 lead with 4:34 left.

Dee Brown scored 22 points to pace the Dolphins, while Reggie Law added 17 points and 10 rebounds.

Williams scored 19 points for the 49ers. Ala.-Birmingham 78, Va. Commonwealth 62

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. — Reginald Turner scored 36 points to lead Alabama-Birmingham to a 78-62 win over Virginia Commonwealth in Sun Belt Conference action Thursday.

The Blazers, 16-9 overall and 8-5 in the league, jumped out to a 6-0 lead and never trailed.

Andy Kennedy added 11 points and Barry Bearden chipped in 10 for the Blazers.

Chris Cheeks led the Rams with 16 points, while Ford and Derrick Thompkins each had 10.

Sale Report Premature

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

DALLAS — Reports that the Dallas Cowboys are about to be sold — with Tom Landry possibly being replaced as head coach by Miami University's Jimmy Johnson — are premature, an aide close to club owner H.R. "Bum" Bright says.

Reports Thursday said Bright has sold the team to Arkansas oilman Jerry Jones, but Bright aide Jim Francis says negotiations are continuing with several prospective buyers.

"Jerry Jones is not someone to take lightly," Francis said Thursday night. "We think he's serious. The Bright people are taking him seriously. He's a good guy and he'd make a good owner. He's for real."

"But there has been no deal. We're working on several deals. Some are ahead of others. Some are closer. Some are more real."

Francis' remarks came late Thursday night after KXAS-TV in Fort Worth, citing unidentified sources, reported the Cowboys had been sold to Jones, president of Arkoma Exploration of Little Rock, Ark.

The Fort Worth Star-Telegram, citing a source close to the negotiations, reported in today's editions that a deal is in place and could be completed as early as next week. That same source said if Jones' bid to buy the team and the lease to Texas Stadium is approved, there could be wide-sweeping changes in the organization, changes that could put Coach Tom Landry's job into question.

New York Bombs Hornets For 20th In Row At Home

By Bill Barnard
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — The last time the New York Knicks won 20 consecutive games at Madison Square Garden, they went on to win the NBA title.

This year's players don't want to forget the past glory, but they also don't want to play in its shadow.

The 1988-89 Knicks won their 20th straight at home Thursday night, routing the Charlotte Hornets 139-114. There was little doubt of the outcome after New York took a 36-13 lead.

"We have to go down as one of the best teams ever to play here," Patrick Ewing said after scoring 11 of his 28 points during the first-quarter spurt. "It means a lot. Hopefully, we can set a record on Sunday, then we can have our own destiny without worrying about the past."

New York, whose only loss in 24 home games was a 110-98 defeat to the Los Angeles Lakers on Nov. 22, matched the 20-game winning streaks by the Knicks' 1968-69 and 1972-73 teams. They could set a team record by beating Boston at Madison Square Garden on Sunday.

"It doesn't matter who we get the record against," said Mark Jackson, who had 20 points, 15 assists and seven steals. "It just happens to be the Celtics. It would be very special to have our place alone in Knicks history."

In other NBA games Thursday, it was New Jersey 111, the Los Angeles Clippers 100, and Atlanta 100, Indiana 97.

Knicks coach Rick Pitino said he was pleased that the team took nothing for granted against the expansion Hornets.

"We played to a big intensity level against Charlotte when we might have had a letdown," Pitino said. "We played like we were going against the Lakers."

Ewing, who scored less than his average of 21.3 points in his previous five games, said he took more shots than usual because the Hornets didn't double-team him.

"It's my job to take the shots when they don't double me," said Ewing, 12-for-20 from the field.

"He's been passing more lately, but tonight they didn't double him, so he took advantage of that," Pitino said. "He hasn't really been in a shooting slump."

Charlotte coach Dick Harter said the Hornets double-teamed Ewing in a 129-117 Knicks victory at Charlotte on Feb. 14, but it didn't work.

"He destroyed us, so we decided to try something else," Harter said. "This didn't work either. He did what a good center is supposed to do."

Ewing and Jackson led nine Knicks in double figures, while Dell Curry had 19 points and Brian Rowsom 17 for Charlotte, both season highs.

After falling behind by 23 points, the Hornets, who lost their fifth straight road game, took advantage of Ewing resting on the bench to score 11 consecutive points, closing the gap to 36-24.

The Knicks, who also led by 12 at the end of the first quarter, got six points each from Ewing and Gerald Wilkins and started the second period with a 26-13 spurt for their largest lead of the first half, 66-41.

It was 77-58 at halftime, and New York's largest lead in the second half was 123-85.

Nets 111, Clippers 100

Roy Hinson scored 35 points and Lester Conner dished out a career-high 18 assists as New Jersey handed the Los Angeles Clippers their seventh consecutive loss. The Clippers have now lost 26 of their last 27 games, including 15 in a row on the road, and haven't beaten an Eastern Conference team on the road in 36 consecutive games, dating back three years.

The Nets built a 60-41 halftime lead, then surged ahead by as many as 27 points late in the third quarter. The final score was as close as Los Angeles got in the second half.

"For us there's no such thing as a guaranteed win," Nets coach Willis Reed said. "I don't care how good we look, we have the potential for self-destruction. But any win at home is a good win."

Ken Norman led the Clippers with 16.

Hawks 100, Pacers 97
Dominique Wilkins, scoreless at the half, finished with 26 points as Atlanta handed Indiana a club record-tying 12th straight loss.

The Hawks trailed much of the first half and went ahead to stay four minutes into the third quarter. But they almost blew a 12-point lead in the final two minutes of the game when the Pacers cut the lead to 100-97 with six seconds left.

Chuck Person had a chance to tie the game, but his 30-footer bounced off the rim just before the buzzer.

"We were in the game until the final shot, and that's all we can hope for," Indiana coach Dick Versace said. "We will win our share with this team's effort and desire."

The Pacers, now 1-26 on the road this season, had two other 12-game losing streaks — in 1983 and 1985.

Knicks Get Vandeweghe; Celtics Deal Off Ainge

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Veterans Kiki Vandeweghe and Danny Ainge were both the center of trade activity Thursday as the Boston Celtics and the New York Knicks both made moves to try and strengthen their respective clubs for the postseason.

The Sacramento Kings say they have traded Ed Pinckney and Joe Kleine to the Boston Celtics for Danny Ainge and Brad Lohaus.

Kings spokeswoman Julie Fie reported the trade Thursday.

The Knicks, meanwhile, completed a deal that had long been in the works by acquiring Kiki Vandeweghe from the Portland Trail Blazers.

"When we went into talks with Portland in September, we wanted to get the deal done right then," Bianchi said Thursday after the Knicks grabbed the two-time NBA All-Star in exchange for their 1989 first-round draft choice. "But the Trail Blazers kept putting it off."

Ainge, who will turn 30 in three weeks, is a two-time former All-Star player and one of the top three-point shooters in the NBA.

Lohaus, 24, is a second-year center out of Iowa who has been averaging six points a game.

Pinckney, 25, a fourth-year forward, has been averaging 12 points per game. He was acquired by the Kings two years ago from Phoenix.

Kleine, who was the Kings' first-round draft pick when the team moved to Sacramento in 1985, learned the news of his trade while his wife was giving birth to their first son, said Sacramento radio station KFBK.

The 27-year-old center has a 6.7-point-per-game average.

Knicks coach Rick Pitino shrugged off suggestions that the team's chemistry would be disrupted with the arrival of Vandeweghe, who is expected to be in uniform Sunday against Boston.

"The entire team and the coaching staff are excited," Pitino said. "Al's patience paid off in the end. It was a poker game and we got a royal flush."

The long-discussed deal appeared to be a bluff until Trail Blazers GM Bucky Buckwalter talked to Bianchi on Wednesday, and they agreed to the deal that was announced Thursday.

"Early on (in trade talks), we were willing to give up players, but when we started to do well this season, we wanted to make the trade for a draft choice," Bianchi said.

The Knicks general manager said when he and Buckwalter talked earlier this month, the deal was set up to include New York's first-round pick in 1990 or later. When Buckwalter asked that the draft choice be this year's, Bianchi agreed because the Knicks have the third-best record in the league and therefore should draft near the end of the first round.

"What allowed the deal to happen was the Trail Blazers needed a No. 1 to get on with building their team," Bianchi said.

"We had been talking to New York for some time. It hadn't been as good a deal as we liked, so we had held off," Buckwalter said.

Vandeweghe, a 23.7-point career scorer, has been plagued with back troubles the last two years and has been limited to 18 games and a 13.9 average this season.

Vandeweghe, who was with the Trail Blazers in Cleveland when the deal was announced, said he didn't fit in the team's plans.

"I wanted to go where I was wanted and to be a part of what the Knicks are building in New York," Vandeweghe said.

He said his back problems have improved in the last six months and didn't appear worried about the physical exam that he must pass to make the deal official.

Pitino predicted that it may take weeks for Vandeweghe to start playing a significant role on the Knicks because they play a pressing style that he's not familiar with.

"He not only has to be in shape, he has to be in Knicks shape," Pitino said. "In our system, you have to be in great shape to play. What we have to shoot for is to get him ready for the playoffs."

Vandeweghe acknowledged that it will take some time for him to become included in the team's rotation.

"Things will progress slowly," he said. "I have to learn the system. Each team does things differently."

As the State players were being introduced, white pieces of paper, wrapped with red ribbons to symbolize a diploma were tossed onto the court in reference to a recently published report that said 10 of the Wolfpack players were on academic probation this semester.

Wolfpack forward Chucky Brown got the worst of the treatment as paper-back books and diplomas were hurled out when he was introduced.

The joke with the academics was taken a little farther by one Duke student who had sign made up using the ESPN-TV logo.

His sign read, "Every State Player Nose how to spell."

Even though Peter Golenbock's controversial book about the N.C. State basketball program, Personal Fouls, has been shelved by Simon and Schuster Publishing Company, it didn't go unnoticed by the Duke student body.

Every foul committed by the Wolfpack in the early going was greeted by the chant, "Personal Foul, Personal Foul."

The loss to the Blue Devils marked the first loss in unitards by the Wolfpack this season, according to State head coach Jim Valvano.

Valvano said he gives the players the opportunity to decide when they are at home or on the road which uniform they want to wear.

The Pack had successfully won on the road last week at Georgia Tech wearing the outfit.

Here's betting they wear the regular uniforms Sunday when they take on Virginia in Reynolds Coliseum.

The Blue Devils' win over the Wolfpack has made the ACC race very tight. North Carolina and N.C. State are now tied atop the league with 8-3 records, while the Blue Devils are one-half game back at 8-4.

The Wolfpack, however, seems to still be in the best shape. Two of their final three conference games are at home, while the only road trip they have left to make in the conference is to seventh-place Wake Forest. State will play Virginia at home Sunday and last-place Maryland at home on Thursday.

North Carolina will host Clemson Saturday at the Smith Center and Duke on March 5. The Tar Heels also have to travel to Atlanta on Wednesday to play Georgia Tech.

Duke plays at Clemson Wednesday and then closes out the conference year at UNC.

Kemp Spends Night In Housing Shelter

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PHILADELPHIA — Housing Secretary Jack Kemp, once a champion of "trickle-down" economics, spent the night in a housing project as part of President Bush's mission to take "inventory" of the nation's homeless and impoverished.

Kemp toured housing alternatives for the poor and homeless Thursday and slept at the Opportunity Towers, a federally supported apartment complex for senior citizens and the handicapped.

"We wanted Kemp to see human faces," said Robert M. Hayes, a lawyer for the Coalition for the Homeless who accompanied the new housing secretary. "Ten minutes on a steam grate is worth 50 white papers."

"I hope this touches his heart," Hayes said, "but in any event, his political future will be linked with his success in battling homelessness."

Kemp, a former Republican congressman from New York who is closely identified with conservative "supply-side" economic theory, was accompanied on his tour by Pennsylvania's U.S. senators, Republicans John Heinz and Arlen Specter.

At the Women of Hope, a permanent shelter for impoverished women, most of whom are mentally ill, the three listened as about 16 residents complained about the lack of affordable housing and jobs for unskilled workers.

Lawyers Say Reagan Knew Of North Acts

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Oliver North's defense lawyers are trying to show that many top government officials — including President Reagan — knew that he was helping the Nicaraguan rebels despite a congressional ban on U.S. aid to them.

During cross-examination Wednesday of Contra leader Adolfo Calero, the defense contended that North's close relationship to the rebels was an open secret in official Washington while the congressional ban was in effect between 1984 and 1986.

"Whenever I talked to people (CIA) people, if I went beyond what they were permitted to hear or talk to me about, they would say: 'See Ollie about that,'" Calero told defense attorney Brendan V. Sullivan Jr.

The defense also hopes Calero's testimony blunts prosecution claims that North embezzled $4,300 of the $90,000 in travelers' checks that the Contra leader gave the former presidential aide to finance efforts to free American hostages. The charge carries a 10-year sentence upon conviction.

Calero said he didn't object upon learning that North had given Robert Owen $1,000 of the money as a wedding gift.

"I had absolutely no problem in him giving Rob Owen the gift on account of the work he had done for us," said Calero, the former president of the Nicaraguan Democratic Force.

Owen, who has been described by prosecutor John W. Kecker as "North's eyes and ears in Central America," was scheduled to testify today about his role in carrying intelligence information between North and the Contras.

Senate Panel Endorses Sullivan

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Democrats and Republicans alike say they are concerned that the White House forced Health and Human Services Secretary-designate Louis Sullivan to forgo nearly $300,000 he was entitled to from his medical school job.

"I feel what is being asked of you has not been asked of others in the past," said Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, which endorsed Sullivan on a 19-0 vote Thursday.

Sen. John Danforth, R-Mo., agreed, saying, "It is grossly unfair to him. ... My hope is we can reopen this issue with the White House."

The issue of Sullivan's severance pay from the Morehouse School of Medicine in Atlanta came to light earlier this month when President Bush was trying to fend off ethical questions about several of his other top appointees.

Committee members said they think the White House overreacted and forced Sullivan to give up the severance pay even though he was entitled to the money and accepting it would not have violated any ethical rules.

At the time, Bush was on the defensive on ethics issues, with questions being raised about Defense Secretary-designate John Tower's relationships with defense contractors, White House ethics chief C. Boyden Gray's links to a communications corporation, Housing and Urban Development Secretary Jack Kemp's acceptance of speaking fees exceeding House limits, and Agriculture Secretary Clayton Yeutter's acceptance of a lavish reception from a tobacco company.

Sullivan said during his confirmation hearing Wednesday that he decided to forgo the severance pay because conflict-of-interest questions were raised in news reports about the arrangement. He said such questions could hamper his effectiveness and damage the image of Morehouse.

"I felt it was more important to clear up those questions by the action I took," he said.

Donald Campbell, deputy director of the Office of Government Ethics, has said the office concluded that Sullivan was entitled to take the severance pay, but that he surrendered it before the opinion could be written.

Congressional Democrats Overcome GOP Edge, Lead In Collecting For Campaigns

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Democrats who control Congress now dominate the means of getting there, having spent more money, raised more and received more from special interests than the Republicans.

The Federal Election Commission put the price tag for electing the 101st Congress last year at $458 million, not appreciably higher than it was to finance the campaigns of the 100th Congress two years earlier.

However, the commission, in a report issued Thursday, found that the Democrats now have surpassed the Republicans in raising money for Senate campaigns from political action committees. In the House, the Democrats have widened the lead they held previously.

One result is that Republicans suddenly are sounding like threadbare populists, while Democrats say they have made peace with the captains of industry who once regarded them with suspicion.

"All of the Democrats' expressions of concerns about the Republicans being the party of moneyed interests are shown up by these figures to be absolutely false," said John Buckley, a spokesman for the National Republican Congressional Committee, which provides money and other help for GOP House candidates.

However, Anita Dunn, spokeswoman for the Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committee, said her party was able to recruit stronger candidates and they, in turn, were able to attract greater contributions.

In the Senate, Democratic candidates got almost $24.9 million from political action committees, or PACs, while Republicans received $21.5 million, according to the FEC report.

Until last year, the Senate Republicans had raised more money from PACs than did Democrats. In 1986 the GOP raised $4.9 million more than Democrats from PACs, and in 1984 the margin was $1.6 million.

The differences were far more pronounced in the House, where the Democrats' control is more lopsided. House Democratic candidates received more than $66.9 million from PACs while Republicans got barely half that amount, $34.9 million. The gap between Democrats and Republicans in 1986 was $22 million and in 1984 it was $17 million.

"I think that PACs take a look at races and they take a look at candidates and I think, frankly, we just had better candidates," Ms. Dunn said. "They are not perceived as hostile to the business community, as they aren't."

"I think this is a party that realizes that certainly business is important to this country."

Overall, the Democrats raised $107.4 million for Senate campaigns and spent almost $107.5 million in 1987 and 1988, the two-year period the election commission uses for compiling figures on the most recent election. The Republicans raised $91.3 million and spent $93.2 million.

In the House, Democrats raised $159.8 million and spent $145.1 million while the GOP received $116.6 million and spent $110.5 million.

Another $1.3 million was spent by the 264 candidates who ran for Congress as independents or on minor-party tickets.

Republicans in Congress have called for reform of the campaign finance system, saying it gives an unfair advantage to incumbents — most of whom are Democrats. But while backing some means of limiting spending, the Republicans are against any reform that would involve public financing of congressional campaigns, as is now the case with presidential candidates.

Ms. Dunn said Republicans have become recent converts to the idea of finance reform.

"The Republicans didn't complain about the PAC system in 1986, when they controlled the Senate and their incumbents outspent our challengers 2-1 or 2 1/2-1," Ms. Dunn said.

Among Senate candidates, Sen. Pete Wilson, R-Calif., spent far more than anyone else to keep his job — nearly $13 million. Wilson's Democratic opponent, Leo McCarthy, spent almost $7 million.

That was considerably less than in the 1986 campaign, when Wilson's colleague from California, Democratic Sen. Alan Cranston, spent nearly $10.8 million to fend off Republican Ed Zschau, who spent some $11.3 million.

"It's just because it's so damned expensive to run in California," said Linda Royster, a spokeswoman for Wilson. "The media market in California is so massive and so expensive it virtually compels a candidate for statewide office there to raise more money than some would think is humanly possible."

Ms. Royster said Wilson accepts fund-raising as something he has to do to be in politics, but it "drives him crazy."

Wilson raised $1.8 million from PACs, second only to Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, who raised more than $2.3 million.

"He says while he does not believe there is a conflict of interest involved in accepting PAC contributions, as long as there is a public perception that it is creating a conflict of interest, the Congress has a responsibility to do something about reform," Ms. Royster said.

In the House, two Democrats who unsuccessfully sought an open seat in a Tennessee special election topped the spending list. Jane Eskin spent nearly $2.6 million while Philip Bredeisen spent almost $1.9 million.

'Coach' Looks Like A Winner

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — ABC's "Coach" could be a winner.

The formula — lovable bruiser of a dad, plus teen-age daughter equals laughs — is as old as the Gipper. But in this incarnation, some decent writing and an especially fine cast add up to a nice little comedy.

Craig T. Nelson plays Hayden Fox, football coach for the Minnesota State Screaming Eagles, a tough guy with a soft spot for the ladies in his life — his sportscaster girlfriend, played by Shelley Fabares, and Kelly (Clare Carey), his teen-age daughter from a long-ended marriage who shows up to attend college.

Jerry Van Dyke is a hoot as assistant coach Luther Van Dam, a perpetually befuddled sort whose mouth runs more than the team's best halfback.

In Tuesday's preview episode, he must ride herd on a buffalo-sized player who has to lose 11 pounds by Saturday's game. "Maybe we could get him some of that hippo-suction they talk about," Luther suggests. Bill Fagerbakke rounds out the regulars as big, dumb Dauber Dybinski, a career college junior.

The show, from "Newhart" creator Barry Kemp, has a preview

Tuesday night, then moves to its regular time period on Wednesday where it will be paired in later weeks with the much-less-appealing new "Anything But Love" — but more on that some other time.

In the preview episode, written by Mark Ganzel, Kelly lets slip that she has a date with a professor. Dad promises not to interfere. But through the process of elimination he finds the English professor he suspects of daring to mess with his daughter.

"Forty, single and published — just the kind of guy I have no respect for," he complains to Luther.

He pays a visit to the professor, and though he brandishes the professor's bust of Shakespeare — Fox thinks it's "some president" — he is proud of the fact that he does not resort to physical violence.

Principal Stars In, Directs Film

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — For her latest movie, CBS' "Naked Lie," Victoria Principal's two roles as actress and executive producer were occasionally at odds.

"There were some things that the executive producer wanted the actress to do, but as the actress I didn't want to do them," she said. "Generally, the executive producer won."

"One day, for instance, the actress had a scene early in the morning and wanted to take the rest of the day off. But the executive producer felt it was more economical to have her do one more scene at the end of the day. Another time, the producer felt that since the wardrobe had been made for the actress she should pay half price to take it home. But the actress wanted it and we gave it to her."

She laughed and said, "I'm sure the supermarket tabloids will take that and the headlines will read: 'Victoria Principal Has Fight With Self.' For the last few days a tabloid reporter's been parked outside my house. They've gone through my trash and they've been following me everywhere I go."

"Naked Lie" will be telecast this Sunday by CBS. Principal stars as a prosecuting attorney whose affair with a judge, played by James Farentino, threatens to destroy her career when they're both assigned to a politically explosive case.

The movie is her second since she left "Dallas" after nine years on the hit prime-time soap opera. She had starred as Pamela Barnes Ewing.

When she read the screenplay of "Naked Lie," she said, "I liked the story. I was drawn to its concept, which was new to TV at the time. It had aspects of 'Suspect' and 'Jagged Edge.' I felt it could be a very tight, suspenseful, romantic mystery. Our story is very tight, which is unusual for TV. Usually, you can drive a truck through the plot. You don't have to suspend belief."

Principal is developing other projects and has deals with NBC and ABC. She is in no hurry to do another series.

"I own several properties that I think would make good series," she said. "But I want to have deep artistic involvement. It would have to be done by my company. Doing a series is a grueling lifestyle. In order to live that lifestyle it would have to be a project I believe in. It would have to be one from the heart."

"The best of all worlds in terms of lifestyle is a half-hour comedy. I do have one I like. But for one-hour dramas, outside of 'Murder, She Wrote,' there are no shows starring women. First, you entertain, but if I did a series I'd want to do something meaningful."

'Moonlighting' Team Hopes To Recapture Lost Viewers

By Jerry Buck
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — It's just the kind of hopeless case David Addison and Maddie Hayes would take on at the Blue Moon Detective Agency: Find the missing audience for ABC's "Moonlighting."

Once the critics' darling, the show has taken its lumps in recent months and has been overtaken in the ratings by NBC's "In the Heat of the Night." Then came the announcement this past week — ABC is pulling "Moonlighting" off the air until April.

"I'm optimistic that we'll do well when we come back, but I have to be," said executive producer Jay Daniel. "Our fans are very vocal and we've been chastised severely."

"When we come back, people will see those old elements that made them love 'Moonlighting.' David and Maddie will be back with an interesting relationship, and we have some stories with some very hot stuff emotionally and sexually. We'll get back to having some surprises."

Daniel said a major reason for taking the show off the air was to catch up with script writing. Otherwise, the show would have gone into reruns, which he said would have been "disastrous" and a rerun of the series' woes that caused the audience to tune out last year.

"Moonlighting" made its bow in 1985 as a spring trout series and wowed the audience with its sexual electricity and daring stories that defied television conventions.

Bruce Willis as David and Cybill Shepherd as Maddie, zided and abetted by creator-producer Glenn Gordon Caron, turned Tuesday night into the sassiest, fastest-paced battle of the sexes since Spencer Tracy sparred with Katharine Hepburn and William Powell and Myrna Loy traded quips.

It was great for a while. The stories were inventive, innovative and provocative. The rapid repartee between the mismatched couple left the audience breathless with laughter. David regularly stopped action to talk to the audience. On occasion, they knocked down the walls and stepped off the set onto the soundstage.

In "The Dream Sequence Always Rings Twice," shot entirely in black and white, Willis was a horn player whose hots for jazz singer Shepherd turns to murder. It spoofed the film noir of the 1940s. Willis was Humphrey Bogart, Alan Ladd and John Garfield, all rolled into one. Shepherd was Rita Hayworth, Barbara Stanwyck and Joan Crawford.

Willis came from nowhere to a stardom that put him in demand for motion pictures. It was a comeback for Shepherd, whose career had taken a nosedive. Not only was she in a hot series, but she proved she could do comedy.

Quite possibly, "Moonlighting" was spoiled by its own success.

Working conditions on "Moonlighting" were at best chaotic. Caron often didn't have a script completed when filming began on an episode. The show fell behind in production and resorted to reruns so often that the audience first became confused, then alienated.

The real trouble began two years ago when Shepherd became pregnant. It presented the producers with a dilemma. Unfortunately, they also chose to have Maddie become pregnant.

Mark Harmon was brought in as an old lover who returned to renew the affair. Maddie also went to bed with David. Once that happened, the sexual tension ended. The magic was gone.

Shepherd's appearances were limited by her pregnancy. In the series, Maddie had taken off for Chicago to visit her parents. The series relied more and more on its secondary stars, Alyce Beasley and Curtis Armstrong.

Later, returning from Chicago, Maddie impulsively married a man she met on the train (Dennis Dugan). This was Maddie, who never does anything on impulse. The marriage was annulled.

By then, both the audience and the critics were starting to turn thumbs down on the show. In the first episode of the season Maddie had a miscarriage. This was one bad script the long writers' strike failed to stop.

Caron, who brought a special chaotic genius to the show, is gone. He left after repeated clashes with Shepherd. Daniel said he is in regular contact with Caron, who is now working on feature films.

"Moonlighting" is continuing in production and will return with eight new episodes. Daniel said the working conditions on the set were now harmonious, but said he would not attribute that to Caron's absence.

"Cybill had a very difficult pregnancy," he said. "She suffered from exhaustion for a long time. Now she's back 100 percent. Our show has always reflected what was happening off camera. Cybill's feelings about her pregnancy were translated to the screen. Now we're away from that melodrama and people can come to work and be happy."

Shepherd had twins in October of 1987. She recently filed for divorce from her husband, Dr. Bruce Oppenheim. But Daniel said Shepherd was dealing with her private life off the set "in a very professional manner."

When "Moonlighting" returns, David and Maddie will resume their old relationship of bickering and bantering. Daniel said sufficient time will have passed since the miscarriage that they can get on with their lives. A third party — not the return of Mark Harmon — will bring them back together.

Menuhin Medal

LONDON (AP) — Sir Yehudi Menuhin (the violin virtuoso and conductor, will receive a medal in West Germany for his efforts to foster Jewish-Christian dialogue and reconciliation after World War II.

Menuhin will receive the Buber-Rosenzweig medal in Bonn on March 5 from the German Societies for Christian-Jewish Cooperation, his spokeswoman, Yvonne de Valera, said in a statement Wednesday.

The medal honors the Jewish musician's "courageous visit to Germany straight after World War II and his outspoken efforts to bring about unspiced dialogue between Jews and Christians," the statement said.

It said the award, established in 1968, commemorates the Jewish philosophers Martin Buber and Frank Rosenzweig.

Opening lead: Ten of ♠
 When there is an obvious line, bridge players sometimes overlook the other options. A good player didn't spot his second chance on this hand, and paid a heavy price.

After his partner's strong opening bid, which showed a balanced 23-24 points, North used the Stayman convention in an attempt to find a 4-4 heart fit. When he found none, he leaped straight to where he wanted the hand to be played.

West attacked with a heart, and declarer could count 11 fast tricks. The spade finesse was there to be taken, so most declarers wasted no time. They won the first trick in dummy and led the jack of spades to the queen and West's king. 'Twas a sad tale—they started and ended with 11 tricks when there were 12 to be taken, as the cards lay.

There was plenty of time for the spade finesse—if that was going to work, declarer would always come to 12 tricks. The club suit offered an additional chance for the fulfilling trick, but it had to be tried before declarer tackled spades.

One declarer who saw this possibility was Michael Valentine, owner of the new Ace Point Backgammon and Chess Club in New York City. He won the first trick in hand and immediately led a low club toward the queen. If West had the king, as was the case here, dummy's queen would become the extra trick declarer desperately needs. If West played low and the queen lost to the king, declarer would win any return and then cash all his winners outside the spade suit, taking care to end up on the table. He would then fall back on the spade finesse, and his club play would have cost nothing.

Traveler Returns Rough Diamonds

CHICAGO (AP) — An Idaho businessman who lost $125,000 in uncut diamonds during his return from Europe got them back from a good Samaritan who found them on an airport sidewalk.

Chris Cacioppo, a 53-year-old office worker, received a $7,500 reward from Roland Von Walker of Rigby, Idaho, for his good deed.

Cacioppo returned the diamonds Thursday to a Walker business associate, George St. Laurent, during a meeting at the office of Cacioppo's lawyer.

"Mr. Walker was certainly pleased," St. Laurent said. "We were a little surprised that they hadn't been turned in earlier." He said they were virtually worthless uncut.

Walker, 62, lost the diamonds at O'Hare International Airport on Friday, when he flew in from Amsterdam.

He had returned from his travels with 76 uncut stones, worth about $220,000, which he had mined and purchased in Liberia. He carried them in two envelopes pinned inside his pants pockets.

But when Walker reached the U.S. Customs Service desk at O'Hare, one envelope was missing. He reported the loss Saturday.

Cacioppo, of suburban Mount Prospect, was on the same KLM Airlines flight and said he found the envelope of diamonds on the sidewalk outside a terminal.

"I picked it up and put it in a pocket without looking in it because I wasn't feeling too swift," he said.

Because of his illness, Cacioppo said he stayed in bed Saturday and finally got up on Sunday to eat something. Then his wife asked about the package.

"I opened it and wasn't sure what they were," he said. "I took them to a friend, who told me he thought they were real diamonds."

Cacioppo said he was excited and pretty nervous about the discovery, and at the insistence of a friend, contacted attorney Robert Clifford for advice. Clifford phoned Chicago police, who provided Walker's telephone number.

Military Says Recruiting Drying Off

WASHINGTON — A long-predicted downturn in military recruiting has begun, with Army recruiters missing their quotas for the first time this decade, the Pentagon says.

The other three military services managed to hit their enlistment quotas for the first quarter of fiscal 1989, but also are showing signs of distress, the Pentagon said Thursday.

The downturn has been predicted for more than a year, primarily because of the strong economy and a dwindling pool of 18-year-olds.

"But we need to act now to head off future recruiting problems," said Grant S. Green Jr., the assistant defense secretary for force management and personnel.

"The first step is to work with Congress on military pay and to restore the value of recruiting incentives, advertising resources and education benefits," he said.

"Otherwise, we could begin the chain of events that led to the serious military manpower problems of the last decade."

Instead, they gave the decorated Vietnam War veteran a reprimand, saying he erred last June 9 while his ship was in the South China Sea but deserved no further punishment than to be relieved of command, as he was in August.

Balian, 48, claimed he had been made a scapegoat over the incident and that "heroes like me are hung out to dry when they get in trouble."

The jury had acquitted him of the more serious charge of ordering one

The latest manpower report covers the period from last Oct. 1 to Dec. 31. During those three months, the four services had a combined quota of 61,900 people.

The services signed up 61,700 — or just 200 shy of their goal. But breaking the statistics down by individual service, the Army fell short of its goal of 24,143 by 475 men and women — the first such decline since 1980.

The Navy managed to exceed its quarterly goal of 18,900 by signing up 19,200 men and women. But it did so by calling up, earlier than expected, volunteers who had joined the Delayed Entry Program to put off their military service by a few months.

The Army and Navy also had to increase the percentage of "Category 4" volunteers — or low scorers on the military entrance test — that they accepted, the report shows. The Army had to accept almost 11 percent of its recruits from Category 4, more than double the 4 percent level maintained for the past three years.

The Marine Corps matched its recruiting goal during the quarter by bringing in 7,100 men and women, and the Air Force also matched its objective of 11,800.

U.N. officials said 31 of the refugees later died. Survivors said they had devoured the dead to survive before Filipino fishermen rescued them on June 27.

Balian took command of the Dubuque, a 16,500-ton vessel based in Sasebo, Japan, in May 1987 and was relieved of command last August.

Captain Convicted In Cannibalism Case

LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

SUBIC NAVAL BASE, Philippines — A military jury spared a U.S. navy captain serious punishment after convicting him today of failing to help Vietnamese boat people who resorted to cannibalism to survive.

The jury of six Navy captains could have jailed Alexander Balian for 90 days and made him forfeit two-thirds of his pay for three months.

refugee shaken off ropes as he tried to climb aboard the amphibious landing ship USS Dubuque.

The jury deliberated nearly six hours before returning a verdict. It took a half hour to decide on the sentence.

Balian, of Los Angeles, was accused of failing to render adequate assistance to more than 80 Vietnamese refugees in a leaky boat the Dubuque encountered about 250 miles north of the Philippine island of Palawan.

U.N. officials said 31 of the refugees later died. Survivors said they had devoured the dead to survive before Filipino fishermen rescued them on June 27.

Love Comes First In Their Formula For Good Marriage

By Rosalie Trotman
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Waitus and Sue Howell dated three years before they were married, but it's been more than 60 years since they said, "I do" on Aug. 28, 1928.

Things have changed a bit since their first dates.

"There was no hugging and kissing on dates 63 years ago," said Howell, "There was no sneaking of kisses on our early dates and not a lot after we had dated for a while."

Mrs. Howell graduated from college in June 1925 and was home for the summer in Toccoa, Ga. Howell was going to Florida on an excursion train and was to leave his car at the home of Mrs. Howell's aunt.

"Aunt Pinkie Blake called me and wanted me to entertain Waitus that evening. Since I had a date, I said I would find a girl and that we all could spend the evening getting acquainted and visiting," said Mrs. Howell. "Two days later, Waitus called and thanked me for the visit and wanted to know if he could correspond."

Howell was teaching at King's College in Raleigh and she had taken a position at Reinhardt College in Waleska, Ga. Howell visited her at college, on vacations and during Christmas.

"We had picnics and dinner parties with my friends whenever he came. We enjoyed sitting in the living room discussing our jobs and reading together. We would join other friends and go hiking. If he were there on Sunday, we went to church," she said.

The couple was married in a very formal ceremony in which her father assisted. She had her wedding gown and veil made. "I did not cry, I was marrying the man I loved," said Mrs. Howell.

The couple left immediately for their honeymoon and spent the first night in the bridal suite in the Poinsett Hotel in Greenville, S.C., enroute to Asheville. The couple established their first home in Raleigh where she was to teach in the English Department at N.C. State and he was still at King's.

The couple were at Elon College from 1936 until 1944. He was asked to develop business administration and secretarial science departments there. They moved back to Raleigh and then to Greenville in 1948 where they were invited to help develop a school of business at ECTC. They retired in Greenville — he in 1966 and she in 1969.

Since retiring Mrs. Howell has worked with young people in the community and in church activities. She is active in Jarvis Memorial United Methodist Church, Delta Kappa Gamma and was a charter member of the Pilot Club. Howell is a life member of the Lions Club and the Rotary Club. Both are members of the American Association of Retired Personnel and N.C. Retired School Personnel.

"Our marriage success formula is loving each other first, respect each's individuality and discuss problems," they said.

"I agree with Sue — don't make an assumption its going to be an easy road all the time. I can't say we never had a cross word," said Howell. "We play together — going for dinner and enjoying music. Avoid discussing problems when you are under stress."

Blue is Mrs. Howell's trademark. "I like it — it's cheerful for me and my eyes are blue," she said.

The couple have had special celebrations on their 10th, 25th, 50th and 60th anniversaries.

Planning Is Key When Merging Two Households

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

One effect of marrying later is that each partner is likely to have been living independently. Marriage is therefore not merely a merger of two people; it's also the combination of two sets of household effects.

Moving two people into one home is far from an effortless endeavor. But you'll accomplish the feat more easily if you plan ahead, make lists — and learn how to pack and load a truck.

According to Joann Alencikas, manager of customer services at Ryder Truck Rental, it's wise to start about four weeks ahead of time to organize the details of the move. Even those hiring a mover should make an inventory of what they each have. The list can be used to plan what to get rid of, what new items are needed and finally to estimate the size truck required to move belongings.

Those renting a truck should reserve it well in advance. During busy summer weekends, the peak period of demand, a month is not too long. At other times, a week or two is usually sufficient.

When making a reservation, be prepared with a list of what you need to move so you can get the right size truck. Rental trucks range in size from a 10-footer with 295 cubic feet or room for one roomful of belongings to a 24-footer for seven rooms of furnishings. A 15-foot van provides about 750 cubic feet of storage or three to four rooms of furnishings.

The majority of moves in the United States are do-it-yourself moves, according to Alencikas, primarily because of cost savings. As an example, she says, it might cost about $420 to rent a 15-foot van for a one-way move from New York to Boston, compared to about $1,000 based on standard tariffs discounted at 30 percent for the same move via a van line.

You'll also be able to rent protective wrapping and hand trucks and to buy bubble pack and cartons from do-it-yourself rental companies, or, of course, you can save money by recycling supermarket boxes and bubble wrap from wedding presents.

Two to four weeks ahead of time, make an inventory and start to pack and label possessions; close and open charge and bank accounts; turn utilities on and off, and notify the old and new post offices of your new address.

Two weeks before the move, it's time to start packing.

On moving day, it's time to start loading the truck.

Some tips: Load the truck one-quarter at a time, solid from floor to ceiling. Tie off each quarter with sturdy rope. Don't leave any open spaces since a tight fit keeps the load from shifting and protects goods from breakage. Fill in spaces with small boxes. Load the heaviest items, such as major appliances, first.

Brides Turning To Consultants

When we need to do something right, we call on a professional. We may enjoy crunching numbers, but we have an accountant check the taxes to make sure they're correct.

So, too, with weddings, many Americans now turn to a professional — the bridal consultant — to help make it turn out right. With tight budgets and more expensive weddings, it also is a sound financial move.

Enter the bridal consultant, who can save money, time and effort. As a professional, the consultant knows what needs to be done and how to do it best — within the budget.

Many bridal consultants charge 10 to 15 percent of the cost of the wedding. Flat fees and hourly or daily rates also are acceptable.

The key is that this is not an added expense, but a way to save money. The consultant, even after her fee, probably will be able to coordinate a better wedding — because of her contacts — than if the bride had spent the full amount herself on the wedding.

We're a nation of "do-it-yourselfers," but we realize it sometimes pays to let a professional make sure it works.

Weddings Of Remarriage Planned With The Same Dedication As First

By Barbara Mayer
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

It sometimes seems as if Americans are marrying earlier and more often.

Statistics show that 36 percent of the weddings today are remarriages, according to Bride's magazine.

Furthermore, says Barbara Tober, editor of the magazine, half of all Americans divorce and remarry in their lifetime and the majority of women who divorce remarry within about three years.

Paradoxically, even though "they are trying very hard not to divorce and to pick the right friend, partner and pal, if they don't, they cannot stay in the marriage in these days of lengthened lifespan and vigor," says Tober.

According to Cele Lalli, editor of Modern Bride, one of the most striking changes in recent years has been in attitudes towards remarrying.

"In the past, one didn't advertise a remarriage; one just unobtrusively did it. Today, people flaunt it. There is no sin in making a mistake and it is wonderful to find happiness," she says.

Weddings that are remarriages are being planned with just as much dedication as the first-time wedding, but there are some differences, agreed these authorities.

For one thing, the couples usually make the arrangements and pay for the wedding themselves. For another, if there are children from an earlier marriage, they are often part of the wedding.

The remarriage wedding may well be smaller than the average first wedding today, but not always.

Many of the parties are elaborate evening events with dinner and dancing, says Lalli.

According to Tober, a second or third wedding is often a more intense though quieter event. There may be a much closer bond between the couple and the guests they choose to invite. "The guests are often people who have been supportive during a divorce or widowhood. They accept the new relationship. They are the people you want in your life in the future," she says.

Ralph Lamacchia, who produces bridal shows, says that companies providing wedding services are now paying more attention to the remarriage wedding market. Based on his observations of these events at which a mix of local service providers and national companies sell their wares, he says that "couples seem more clear-minded about the type of wedding they want."

The bride tends to choose a more practical dress that can be used for other occasions, or at least she will buy a dress that reflects her fashion style. The party is more likely to be at home or in a restaurant, not at a catering hall or a hotel ballroom. Photography is likely to be more creative and candid. They aren't going for multiple albums.

Wedding announcements and invitations tend to be less formal and sometimes humorous. People are still self-conscious even though the taboos have diminished quite a bit. He says that nonsectarian ceremonies are more common at second-time weddings.

Tober says that at remarriages, the issues of etiquette can be more difficult to settle. For example, she says she receives letters concerned with dissension in the family, such as where to seat factions of the family, whether to invite former in-laws and how or whether to include the children in the wedding.

"When I am asked if kids should be in the wedding, I say, 'Are they going to be in the marriage?' If they are, then have them in the wedding. We even suggest that couples go on a honeymoon alone first but have the children join them later," she says.

No Rules, Just Guidelines In Choosing Bridal Fashion

By Barbara Mayer
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

When it comes to bridal fashions, the word is options.

A bride can choose a ball gown, a country dress, a sheath or a tailored suit, say designers and editors who work in the bridal field. There are no rules, only guidelines.

She can look demure, like Cinderella at the ball or — in a departure from tradition — alluring in a strapless or off-the-shoulder dress with a low-cut neckline. Dresses with jackets and detachable trains also make it easier to go from religious service to post-ceremony party with maximum comfort.

Holly McMunn, of Bridal Originals, says there are more choices in fabrics, style and color for brides than at any time in the recent past. She sees several strong directions.

"One type of bride wants a simple dress in a classic silhouette — a princess, empire or sheath style. Another type chooses an elaborate dress," she says. There is also a demand for the fashion statement dress — particularly by older brides who may be remarrying — that reflects silhouettes currently in style, she says.

While white and ivory remain the colors chosen by the overwhelming number of brides, soft tinges of color are becoming more popular, agree Modern Bride and Bride's magazine fashion editors. One new tinge is ice-blue on satin dresses, which imparts a silvery sheen to white.

Still popular are color-themed weddings, in which a particular color scheme is carried through in flowers and decorations, wedding party attire, table linen, plates, even party favors.

Some favored schemes include black and white, and white and a deep tone such as hot pink, coral or strong turquoise. For spring and summer, pastels such as mint and lemon yellow are popular.

Cindy Rose, fashion director for Vogue-Butterick Patterns, says the latest styles are available in sew-it-yourself pat-

Attire Of Groom, Attendants Should Complement The Bride

By Barbara Mayer
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The sartorial role of the groom and his attendants is to complement the attire of the bride and her attendants, says Bill Blass.

The designer of women's couture and of men's suits and sportswear, Blass says it is most important that the men's attire should be appropriate for both the occasion and the women's dresses.

For a simple country wedding, a morning coat would seem exaggerated. For a city wedding, a navy blazer and white flannel pants would be a little too casual.

Choose clothing suited to your build, your age, the time of year and occasion and the circumstances of the wedding, he advises. And don't overdress, even though this may be the biggest day of your life.

To Blass, it is never appropriate for a man to look like the little figure on the top of the wedding cake. Instead, he suggests quiet, classic clothing for men. In winter, a tuxedo; in summer perhaps a white dinner jacket.

"You can't go out and rent a character for the day of the wedding. What is appropriate is what suits you," says Tom Fallon, an associate of Blass. "We see some tragic mistakes when we pass a church and notice a groom in a powder-blue tuxedo with a ruffled shirt. You can see they are mortified because the clothes have nothing to do with their life."

Fashions for grooms and groomsmen don't change much over the years, and that's fine with Blass. On the other hand, not everyone takes quite the classic approach.

According to Ken Hall of After Six, manufacturers of dress clothes for men, grooms are becoming more adventurous in selecting bridal attire. They are moving away from the traditional clothing of the past four years.

"There is a groundswell of interest in more free-wheeling design, such as jackets with much broader shoulders, mess jackets with nipped-in short waists and elongated, slightly wider lapels on jackets," he says.

Shiny, textured fabrics, especially in medium tones of gray and in black tone-on-tone fabrics, are popular. Gray is more often chosen than it was in the recent past and in some areas of the country, such as the Midwest, midnight blue dress clothes are also "in."

Even in traditional styles, unorthodox fabrics, such as herringbones, are being used for the suits. The fabrics were first found on European brands but now many American manufacturers are offering them, he says.

Hall says other trends include the return of the low-cut, three-button vest to match the jacket, and the growing popularity of double-breasted jackets.

terns. Some examples include dresses with bows at the shoulder or waist, ruffles, leg-o-mutton sleeves and even modified bustles.

According to Rose, "Bridal dresses are frankly not as innocent as they used to be — with bustles and low necklines, they do call attention to a woman's figure. Many brides want to look like a sexy woman so the dresses they select have more style."

An advantage to having a home-sewn dress is the opportunity to customize it with, for example, a detachable train, snap-off sleeves or a coat, jacket or bolero.

In keeping with the variety of bridal dresses, accessories are similarly wide-ranging, according to fashion reports by Bride's and Modern Bride.

Modern Bride notes the popularity of hats, sprays of flowers for the hair and bows worn at the back of the head. Bride's says jewelry for the bride has become more dramatic than it used to be. Seen on more brides are drop earrings, charm bracelets and antique pins and earrings.

For bridesmaids, dresses in floral prints and polka dots with low necklines or halters worn under jackets are popular. For the mother of the bride and the groom, soft pastel colors in fabrics like lace, velvet, silk moire and taffeta are more popular than the glittery dresses of several seasons ago.

Rose says the use of expensive details such as re-embroidered fabric for brides and their attendants is also growing.

Bright, Hot Colors Are Trendy Picks For The Bride's Flowers

A Bride's magazine survey of florists across the country found several new trends in wedding flowers.

The most significant trend in bridal flowers is toward bright, hot colors, according to a New York floral designer. Bright blue delphinium and corn flowers are becoming popular. Other colors: deep crimson pink, purple, jewel tones. The all-white bouquet is also popular, especially when the color scheme is white and black.

Other flower trends: more hand-tied, loose and airy bouquets; Victorian style flowers, lots of laces and beribboned tablecloths, more tulle and netting in bouquets.

Wedding Traditions Make Comeback

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Wedding traditions that once were thought old-hat are back.

"Bridal couples are getting pleasure by doing things the old-fashioned way," according to Barbara Tober, editor of Bride's magazine.

For example, she says, "calligraphy once again is in fashion for invitations and people are thinking of toasts in advance and caring about the fact that someone should say something at the reception.

"Couples are embracing the idea of dressing up, sending out invitations in advance, putting announcements in the newspaper. They have music, they carry flowers, they say their vows. Brides are having attendants, throwing bouquets, wearing a garter and cutting the cake," she says.

The once-overlooked personal letter of thanks to friends and family for wedding gifts is again in favor. Though pre-printed thank-you cards are available, etiquette experts agree that the sincere and courteous way of expressing thanks is with a hand-written note.

As the arbiter of the '80s, Judith "Miss Manners" Martin, put it: "The only time a handwritten thank-you note is not necessary is when no wedding present has been received."

According to the Bride's Book of Etiquette, another exception to the requirement for a note is acknowledging gifts from parents or a spouse. However, it's also duly noted that parents and spouse will appreciate a special letter of thanks.

For all other thank-yous, the first requirement is to keep a thorough and reliable gift record.

Keep track of gifts in a wedding journal, a notebook, index cards or even on a computer. Record the gift along with the name and mailing address of the giver so it will be simpler to get the thank-you note on its way quickly. Indicate when you've mailed it, so you won't overlook any.

While it has been traditional for the bride to acknowledge all gifts, today it's also quite acceptable for the groom to share the responsibility by writing to those whom he knows best.

Etiquette requires the use of folded note paper in white, ivory or the shade of the wedding invitation. The stationery can be plain or embossed or printed with your name or initials. But the bride shouldn't send stationery imprinted with her married name until after she is married.

A note should mention the gift and refer specifically to something about it, such as its usefulness or style. If you are not quite sure what the gift is, compliment an unusual or unique feature such as color material. Mention your spouse's name in the note since, as a rule, only the writer will sign it. Conclude with a friendly closing sentence.

The timetable for thank-yous calls for a

Best Man Traditionally Offers First Toast To Bridal Couple

"The champagne toast is one of the few times during the reception when someone other than the bride and groom has center stage," says Michel La Croix, chef de cave at Piper-Heidsieck. Traditionally, the best man offers the first toast to the couple, but others may do so.

Whoever gives the toast should agree on the message with the groom ahead of time.

LaCroix's tips for a toast:

The toast takes place after the bride and groom have been received and the guests have taken their seats.

The person giving the toast stands to the right of the couple while the newlyweds remain seated.

The groom rises after the toast and offers another to his bride and her family. The bride may respond by welcoming the groom into her family.

Guests usually stand for the toast.

Couples Mixing Traditional, Contemporary In Ceremony

When it comes to her wedding, the contemporary bride often mixes traditional and modern concepts that influence not only the ceremony and her gown, but also the wider arena of marriage and her relationships.

Brides today are older than they were, but that does not rule out a large, traditional ceremony and a long white gown. However, it is also chic to be married in a tailored suit.

The key to a successful wedding is deciding on one with which the bride and groom are comfortable. The new trend in weddings for the '80s must reflect the personality of the couple getting married.

The most important factor in '80s weddings is the freedom of expression to create your own unique ceremony and a reception that reflects your ideas.

Because today's bride is older, she often has an education and career experience behind her. Her tastes are more sophisticated and so are her expectations of her relationship with her spouse.

Not only does she value her marriage, but also the career she has worked to obtain. Chances are she will strive to create a balance between the time she allocates for her job. Time management is important to most young couples making the transition between single and married life.

Matrimony has experienced a resurgence in the '80s but it incorporates a new breed of togetherness. Women today enjoy more career freedom than their mothers, but also have rediscovered traditional values as well.

With education and career freedom comes the fact that the bride of today has done traveling outside her hometown. She may have gone away for college and then relocated to a city with career opportunities. This means it is less likely that the bride of the '80s will marry her high school sweetheart.

Therefore, chances are that the bride and groom are from different parts of the country. This leads to innovative ideas to get the friends and relatives from both sides to mix and mingle at different weekend events such as barbecues, picnics and cocktail parties.

What this translates about the new trend in weddings for the '80s is that they are an intimate interpretation of the couple to be married, reflecting their ideals, goals and lifestyles.

Much of the previous criticism of the institution of marriage revolved around the idea that, once you were married, you had to disregard the person you were before. Most of today's couples have more defined goals before marriage, so they have a clearer sense of their own identity and needs.

There is also a new trend involving the groom. He is more involved in the planning of the wedding. With couples striving toward equality, it is only natural that the groom become more of a participant than a spectator.

The wedding day is acknowledged as a day the couple can share, rather than considered to be a day reserved solely to "give away" the bride.

Today's couple has a new maturity and freedom reflected by how they choose to celebrate their marriage. Wedding choices are varied and numerous, ranging from large, formal, traditional weddings to an outdoor wedding in the country with a picnic reception.

All this leads to the freedom of expression that characterizes the marriage — as well as the wedding — of the '80s and makes them more enjoyable experiences for all involved.

Tips Help Plan Nuptial Music

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The American Music Conference has some ideas to consider when planning music for the nuptial rites:

— If the wedding is in a religious setting, be sure to check with the clergy or music director to determine what types of music are allowed.

— If a music advisor or wedding planner is not available, talk to friends involved in music, or music students at a local college.

— Resist the temptation to choose musical selections only because you like them; the music should not distract from the ceremony, no matter how beautiful or entertaining.

— If you choose a traditional wedding selection, like Wagner's "Bridal Chorus" or Mendelsohn's "Wedding March," consider a non-traditional grouping of instruments. Guitars, string ensembles or electronic instruments can offer a different approach.

— To personalize the ceremony, ask friends who can sing or play musical instruments well to participate. (However, if family and friends aren't musical, paying for the performance is worthwhile.)

— Position musicians and singers near the front and to the side — where they can be heard but won't upstage the wedding couple.

You Can Banish Tradition Of A Tasteless Wedding Cake

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Why not actually serve the cake as dessert at the wedding?

Cake baker and author Rose Levy Beranbaum, who wrote "The Cake Bible," knows perfectly well why wedding cakes may be the least appreciated portion of the wedding food: Most are not nearly as tasty as they look.

She says that the tradition of the tasteless wedding cake can be banished by baking your own; she includes a section on how to bake and decorate wedding cakes in her book.

Beranbaum, who once made wedding cakes professionally as well as teaching others how to do it, has put away her cake pans now that her book is out. But she says that with two days to spare and a certain amount of patience, the bride, a doting relative, or friend can bake a cake to serve 150 in the ordinary home oven.

She presents formulas for a variety of cakes and icings and shows how to decorate and how to calculate quantities for virtually any size cake. Though the labor is one of love, not economics, a homemade wedding cake is almost sure to cost substantially less than a bakery cake — "even if you blow $100 on white chocolate for the icing."

The reason most people undertake such a project is to have a unique cake, which may be white, golden, carrot, chocolate or cheese. The only requirements are tiers and icing.

Beranbaum says that while baking a large cake is not necessarily harder than baking lots of small cakes, the methods vary. For example, large cakes actually take proportionately less baking powder than small cakes do.

The larger cakes also have a tendency to get too brown at the edges before the centers are done. Aluminum strips can be used to retard browning the sides so the center can be cooked through.

Some tips: Use cake flour, not all-purpose or self-rising flour. Make sure that the butter is softened before it's added to the batter. If it isn't, the cake mixture won't be aerated properly and the cake will be tough and flat.

Oven temperature is critical in baking a large cake. She advises that before baking a large cake, bake a small one and see if it takes longer than the recipe. "A cake that bakes fast might be a little humped, but a cake that bakes slowly will never be tender, so raise the temperature in a slow-cooking oven," she says.

A tiered cake needs support. In commercial bakeries, the supports are wood dowels. Plastic straws work fine at home, she says.

The simplest wedding cake to make is a white or yellow butter cake with buttercream icing. "Give it two full days — one day to make the components and one day to put them together and decorate the cake," she says.

You can make some decorations ahead of time. For example, marzipan roses can be stored for years. Most cakes don't have to be refrigerated overnight, she says.

As for transporting the cake, she says that there are only two people fit for the job: "The person who made the cake or the person who is paying for it."

The safe method is to place the cake in a box whose sides are rigid and keep the largest bottom layer from touching the sides. Provided there are not too many bumps on the ride, the cake should survive without a blemish.

The cake that launched Beranbaum's reputation was a four-tiered creation covered in what looked like dotted swiss fabric with a trim of roses. She developed it for Bon Appetit magazine as an example of what could be done at home.

"That cake changed my life," she says. "I got so many calls I decided to teach intensive classes in special occasion cake-baking."

The information she compiled for the classes and the experiences she had baking the wedding cakes led her to develop the formulas and expertise that are found in her book.

note within two weeks of the arrival of the gift. If the gift arrives on the wedding day or during the honeymoon it should be sent within a month after the honeymoon, says Bride's.

Pearls Have Long Been A Best Friend To Brides

Ever since history's first bride said the first "I do," pearls have been a bride's best friend. Once considered mystical gems with the power to ensure long life and prosperity, today pearls are a popular jewel to accompany a blushing bride down the aisle.

"A fine strand of pearls is probably the best single jewelry item a bride can wear," states Linda Weichenrieder of a leading wedding magazine.

"Not only are pearls elegant, traditional and always in fashion, but they complement almost any bridal design as well. They seem to have the unique ability to pick up and enhance the glow of a woman on her wedding day."

Indeed pearls, which come in a variety of shapes from round to baroque, in colors from white to black, and in lengths from choker to opera, will surely flatter any woman and the gown she chooses to wear.

With the wide array of different bridal designs on the market today, all it takes is a little fashion savvy and good taste to select the perfect strand of pearls to suit a particular look.

For off-the-shoulder strands of pearls in single or multiple layers are the key. For high and "V" neck styles, long strands of pearls create a regal, yet demure feeling.

Just as a woman will consider the style of gown when selecting the right length of pearls for her, she should also take into account what color pearls go best with her skin and hair tones.

Experts say that creamy pearls with a golden overtone look best on women with dark skin and dark hair. Off white, cream colored pearls are perfect on women with olive and fair complexions and dark hair. And rose or slightly pinkhued pearls are smashing for those with fair complexions and blonde or red hair.

When shopping for pearls, keep in mind that lustre (the clarity of the reflecting surface of the pearl) and orient (the deep seated glow that seems to come from within the heart of the pearl) are two important factors that influence price.

While natural pearls are the most expensive, they are also very rare. Cultured pearls, which are also fine jewelry, are considerably less expensive.

The only difference between cultured and natural pearls is that man has given the oyster a helping hand by surgically inserting an irritant into the oyster rather than leaving it to nature. Imitations are by far cheaper than cultured or natural pearls, in more ways than price alone, and are completely manmade.

According to Freddy Kohn, president of the Cultured Pearl Association of America, a marked increase in cultured pearl sales across the country over the past three years has been directly related to a growing appreciation for formal weddings in the U.S.

"I think that in this day and age when things seem to be moving faster, growing larger and selling 'harder' than most people care to admit, traditional concepts such as marriage and family life are looked upon as a basis for stability," he said.

"American brides are wearing cultured pearls as opposed to imitation pearls, not simply because of tradition, but because cultured pearls are gems that will hold their value over time. Cultured pearls are as real and warm as brides hope their wedding day will be."

Wedding Doesn't Need To Be Expensive To Be An Original

By Barbara Mayer
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

When Aimee Gauthier and Mike Reed wed last fall in Stamford, Conn., her hobby of collecting 1930s and 1940s tableware and vintage tablecloths and napkins occupied center stage.

The tables holding the wedding feast were covered with the tablecloths and set with her mixed collection of colorful Depression glass and Fiestaware. The menu consisted mainly of food made by the bride.

It was a prime example of couples planning their wedding as a very personal event.

Gauthier-Reed says colorful tables are conducive to a festive atmosphere. Though unassuming and not normally for a formal table, the settings were a delightful surprise to guests at her wedding, she says.

Gauthier-Reed, a 25-year-old graphic artist, says she learned some of her stylish ways by working as an assistant to Martha Stewart, the food stylist and author of books on party-giving, including "Weddings."

She put Stewart's lessons on color to use at her own wedding to create a relatively inexpensive event that was nevertheless original.

The menu included a salad of thinly-sliced filet of beef and red and yellow peppers, carrots and snow peas in vinaigrette dressing. There was also tortellini salad with pesto, sesame noodles, tomato and red onion salad and broccoli.

Table garnishes included a mix of black, purple, red, yellow, green and orange peppers and edible nasturtium flowers.

"We didn't have fancy food, just a simple menu of homemade food. But everyone said it was the most elegant wedding they had gone to. I think the table settings had a lot to do with that. It was a unique way of expressing ourselves," she says.

So pleased was she with the wedding and the enjoyment she got out of using her rapidly-enlarging collection of dinnerware and tablecloths from the 1930s and early '40s that she decided the experience held the seeds of a new business idea.

She has launched a business renting the pieces to others for parties and special occasions.

"Depression glass was the poor person's colored crystal. It was given away as a bonus when people bought their groceries. You could also buy it for about a quarter a place setting," she says.

Couples Shouldn't Panic If Negative Emotions Surface

By Barbara Mayer
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

When the wedding is over, the honeymoon is supposed to begin. But most couples discover that the honeymoon phase doesn't last out the first year of marriage, says psychotherapist Arlene Modica Matthews.

The author of "Why Did I Marry You, Anyway?" (Houghton Mifflin) says that some couples panic when they realize they aren't going to live together without conflict. They shouldn't. "Negative emotions are a normal part of living with another human being and 'happily ever after' is a fiction," she says.

The fact that most divorces take place in the first three years of marriage shows that an unrealistic idealization of marriage can be harmful.

"Any little disappointment makes them think they were wrong. Since divorce is now socially acceptable, they take the easy way out. Then they go out and marry the same kind of person again," she says.

By knowing what to expect and focusing on methods of communicating in the first year of marriage, couples can resolve inevitable stresses, which in turn gives the marriage strength to endure.

In an interview and in her book, Matthews identified a three-stage pattern similar to the steps a baby takes along the pathway to independence.

In the first stage, each believes the other can fill all emotional needs. It's soon succeeded by the realization that some of your needs won't be instantly met: "You start to think you made a mistake, that your spouse tricked you.

"The third stage is to join the images and realize that your spouse is an integrated human who has foibles and flaws as well as wonderful traits. Ideally, you both emerge with a sense of constancy in which you believe that the marriage will endure in good times and bad," she says.

"This generation thinks it is a good idea to be completely open when you are angry. Fights are healthier than sitting on your negative feelings for a year and then simply leaving. But you have to know how to reveal your feelings.

"Ask yourself: Is my spouse going to be receptive to hear this now, and how can I phrase it so he or she will not feel unduly attacked.

"Start your sentences with I — as in 'I feel hurt being ignored at a party.' Stick with the issue at hand; don't make it a laundry list of everything that's ever bothered you."

She says old-fashioned rules of politeness should not be abandoned as soon as the wedding finery is taken off. The politeness of courtship can be continued to a great degree and it is usually a bad idea to be completely honest all the time.

Between money and sex, she identified money as the more troublesome issue. "Most courting couples have terrific sex lives but money is a taboo. All of us have learned illogical ways of dealing with money and, because we are marrying later, we are used to managing money. Two quirky patterns that are different create a real problem."

Strategies for coping include hiring a financial consultant to help you de-emotionalize the situation or even separating finances. Many couples make the mistake of coming together financially without discussing their differing patterns. She says it may make more sense to start out separately and come together with more

Brides, excited before the wedding, face reality after vows are spoken understanding later on. Though sex is less likely to be a bone of contention in these days of more open discussion, she says that it's normal for the frequency of activity to decline after marriage.

No matter what the problem, Matthews says that flexibility usually helps solve it. "The people who will adjust best to marriage are those willing to try new ways of behavior in order to figure out what they want and how to get it," she says.

It's Normal For Unknown To Worry You

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

You're getting married in a month or two and you find yourself daydreaming about all the things that might go wrong at the wedding and in the marriage. Does this mean you should call the whole thing off?

No, say two authorities who have talked to many brides and grooms. Jerilynn Ross, president of the Phobia Society of America, says that it's normal and appropriate to worry about the unknown.

Cele Lalli, editor of Modern Bride, sees the realization of potential conflict as a sign of maturity in the age of divorce. Both say it isn't the worries you should worry about, but what you do about them.

In a recent seminar she conducted for Bride's, Ross noticed both brides and grooms-to-be had more fears than they realized and hadn't discussed them.

"Merely learning that others worried about similar fears made the participants feel better because they had felt their worries were unique. In many instances, the partner was surprised to learn of the fears," she says.

This observation led her to conclude that communicating worries may be all that's needed to relieve them. "Even if

Roses Atop Gift List For Anniversaries

Anniversaries are special occasions meant to be remembered in unique and different ways.

While some 173,500 anniversaries of all types are celebrated daily, it is the wedding anniversary that commands the most attention.

In addition to the 64 million wedding anniversaries celebrated annually, there are other pre-wedding anniversaries as well.

From the "first date" anniversary, popular with the young and not-so-young romantics, to the engagement date anniversary, preliminary to the "I do," and the wedding anniversary, roses convey a meaningful sentiment appropriate to all special anniversary occasions.

Rated the number one "all occasion" anniversary gift item, red roses have always offered even the busiest individual the welcome advantage of versatility. Usually purchased in arrangements of one, three, five or seven, roses fit any budget.

Whether the choice was a single rose or a dozen, a typical month in 1987 found 400,000 anniversary buyers, about 13,000 daily, purchasing a variety of rose gifts nationwide.

Many send a gift of roses. In Victorian times, shy husbands used small rose bouquets called "tussie-mussies" to communicate devotion, trust and love. A modern-day anniversary "tussie-mussie" could contain the number of red roses representing the months or years a couple has spent sharing happy moments together — six roses for six years, 24 roses for 24 years, etc.

So, it's the anniversary of your first date. How about a gift of gourmet dining at an exclusive restaurant? Send your invitation by card describing the romantic evening you have planned.

If the gift you have selected for your special someone in unsuitable for wrapping — (how do you tie a bow on a vacation or a new car?) — here are two alternatives. Give the lucky recipient

When selecting a rose arrangement for your anniversary, remember roses have a "language" of their own, and there are a number of vibrant colors suitable for every occasion. Use this guide from America's Rose Growers to convey the appropriate message.

The red rose symbolizes love, respect and courage.
Pink roses carry the message, "You're gentle and graceful."
Deep pink roses say, "Thank you."

Light pink roses convey admiration.

A white rose says: "You're heavenly."

Yellow roses signify joy and gladness.

A bouquet of roses in full bloom means gratitude.

A single rose in full bloom means "I love you" or "I still love you."

Combining traditional values and innovative ideas can enhance the spirit of giving and create a much loved remembrance.

Worries

you need to go a third person such as a therapist or religious leader to get the worry out, it's best to reveal it," says the psychologist who counsels at Roundhouse Square Phobia Treatment Center in Alexandria, Va.

Lalli says that because couples getting married now are generally older than couples in the recent past, there are more potential wedding conflicts between them and the way their parents do things. She sees this as a plus, not a drawback.

"That's what marriage is all about — separating from the family. Working out conflicts that may develop over the wedding is the often the first opportunity to act as a couple," she says.

One reason why worries may be more overt but less troubling is that there is wider latitude in what's considered acceptable and greater awareness of a need to communicate. Couples are less inhibited about talking about conflicts, says Lalli.

In general, both women agreed that issues that couples worry about fall into one of two main categories: practical concerns relating to the ceremony and party and philosophical concerns about the durability of the bond they are assuming.

Today's different way of life has created both the problem and its solution. For example, higher costs force different financial arrangements.

"Traditionally, the bride's family paid for just about everything. Practically speaking today, that is difficult. If both families want an extravaganza, they are more flexible about paying for it. The traditional guidelines are not relevant," says Lalli.

"Because of greater mobility and fact that couples often meet and live in a city other than the one where the bride grew up, there's often some concern about where to have the wedding. Today, the right decision is what is most convenient and least expensive," she says.

Ross characterized most worries of couples about to be married as normal worries about the future.

Despite role changes in recent years, Ross says men and women at the seminar she conducted worried along traditional lines.

"The women all talked about their fears of being a good mother. They felt the children were their primary responsibility. The men talked about their fears of being the sole support of a family," she says.

Don't Overlook Your Health When Seeing To The Details

Choose a date, pick a place, order flowers and invitations, reserve a photographer and a caterer. Do these activities sound familiar? Any bride and groom will recognize them as the planning activities for that all-important day — the wedding.

In addition to these steps, there are many more that the two of you will need to address. To ensure that all the wedding plans go smoothly, and that you have time left over to take care of yourselves, follow this simple guide to wedding preparation strategies.

First, remember always to plan in detail. There are many things to do before your wedding day arrives, and things will fall into place if you plan out every small detail. Second, allow as much time as possible to put everything together. With these two tips in mind, your plans can be effortless.

After choosing the wedding date, the bride can shop for a gown. Plan on spending a few full days visiting several bridal boutiques. Bring your mother or maid of honor to help you on and off with the gowns. Once you decide on a gown, the bridal shop-keeper will help you schedule intermittent fittings right up until the week before your big day.

Schedule separate days for finding your bridesmaids' dresses. Try to choose a style that will look good on most figures. Your bridesmaids will also need to schedule fitting sessions to be sure the dresses fit them and that they are all the same length.

And, grooms, choose both your tuxedo and the ushers' tuxedos. Fitting sessions must also be scheduled with the tuxedo tailor.

Next, with several months before the wedding, the two of you should spend time planning your beauty and grooming strategies. For example, devise an engagement exercise and diet plan. Exercise together at least three times a week to slim and tone your bodies.

Try cycling, walking or playing racquetball — these are fun activities you can do together that keep you in tip-top shape.

Chart out a balanced diet from the basic food groups: Fruit and vegetables; dairy; meat, fish and poultry; and bread, cereal and grains. As you get busy, try not to skip meals; it's not healthy.

Also, try to cut out snacks whenever possible. However, if you must snack, reach for fruit or vegetables such as oranges and carrots — they are rich in vitamins A and C which can keep hair and skin healthy.

Since your hair and facial skin are your two most visible features, be sure to care for them properly. Start by shampooing daily with a good shampoo and conditioning system.

With clean and healthy hair, you can style and shape your hair into your desired wedding day look. Try styling it this way several times in the weeks before the wedding, and be sure to have it trimmed.

In addition, wash your face twice daily with a mild cleanser. Both of you should follow this with a light moisturizer for softness. Men, this procedure not only cleans your face, but softens your beard bristles for obtaining a close shave.

Once the two of you have all your wedding plans in place and have taken the proper steps to look and feel your best, you'll be able to fully enjoy that very special day.

Magistrates See All Kinds

By Rosalie Trotman
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Magistrates, some might think, lead pretty dull lives. Their role in the court system puts them at the lowest rung, dealing with some petty cases on a daily basis. But they also marry couples who want to tie the knot without a church ceremony, and that activity can keep things interesting all by itself.

Russell Wooten of Ayden has been a magistrate for nearly 20 years, and he can tell first-hand why the state wants cash, up front, for its wedding ceremonies.

"I am required to collect just $10 even if I am offered more," he said. "In one particular case, I personally cashed a check for a bridegroom so cash could be used — and the check bounced."

"I finally was able to contact him about two weeks after the wedding," Wooten said, "and he came in and paid the check off."

Another wedding didn't go quite so well. "I married a couple on Saturday," Wooten said, "and Monday morning the bridegroom came back and wanted his money returned."

"Several years ago, a fellow in his mid-40s came into my office along with a lady of about the same age and several children," Wooten remembered. "After having the couple stand side by side, I started the ceremony."

"When I asked 'Mary do you take...,' a 17-year-old young lady in the back of the room answered, 'I do'."

"As it turned out, I was trying to marry the husband to the bride's mother."

Not all of Wooten's weddings are conducted in his office. One he remembered had its own kind of beauty. "A particular couple had set the location of their wedding on a creekbank in the fall last year," he said. "Someone climbed tall cypress trees, decorating them with flowers at least 12-15 feet off the ground. They had also constructed an archway, which are also decorated with flowers. It was really a pretty setting."

But another couple couldn't be married soon enough. "I could tell that a shotgun might have been needed," he said. "About half way through the ceremony, the bride started moaning and I speeded up the process."

"I got the final 'I do' and called the rescue truck. About two hours later, the bride gave birth to a son."

J.L. Cowan of Farmville, a magistrate since 1977, has performed over 100 ceremonies.

"Festivities were very jovial at the home of a certain bridegroom where the bridal couple were to be married by the swimming pool," he said.

The wedding scene was complete with a kneeling bench, candelabra and other wedding accessories. "While still dressed the bride and bridegroom jumped into the pool," he said.

Beautiful Beginnings

Wedding Party Should Look Its Best, Too

By Karen Caldwell
COPLEY NEWS SERVICE

Bridesmaids, groomsmen and guests will enhance your wedding and enjoy it more — if they look their best.

Here are tips to help the important people in your wedding party get started on the right fashion track. (If it all seems overwhelming, relax. Help is available.)

Mom's Wear

According to Judith Martin, author of "Miss Manner's Guide to Excruciatingly Correct Behavior" (Warner Books), the only thing the mother of the bride can be sure of, fashion wise, is that she'll wear her pearls.

Your mother had best plan what she's going to wear below her pearls as soon as possible, because your future mother-in-law will be waiting to hear from her:

"The bride's mother selects her dress first and then informs the groom's mother of her choice," says Bride's magazine.

The moms should be in sync because it may look odd if they're not. Their dresses should be of a similar length; colors should complement each other and the wedding party. They should also dress for the time of day (day or evening) and style (formal or informal) of the wedding.

The mother of a soon-to-be-wed will want to look distinguished and proper. A dressy dress in a flattering color or pattern is a safe bet — usually knee or mid-calf length; possibly longer for a formal evening wedding. Lovely touches include a small hat, gloves, furs or jewelry.

Bonny Bridesmaids

Your bridesmaids will love you if their dresses are a style that can be worn for more events than just your wedding.

The bridal designer who created the bride's gown and maids' dresses for the wedding of New York Gov. Mario Cuomo's daughter advises, "Maids' dresses must have an afterlife. Give as much attention to maids' attire as your own, because it reflects your style, too."

Ms. Cuomo's gown, according to Bride's magazine, was created in silk satin; her maids' dresses, in an elegant rose moire.

The attendants follow the bride's lead, but their fashion choices are wide. Their dresses can be short, long, sharp or soft in tone, printed or plain — anything but white.

Most maids' dresses are a solid color satin or silk. Colors range the rainbow, including all pastels. Bright red is a popular choice for Christmastime.

The current silhouette is full-skirted, sometimes with a peplum, and puff sleeves. Just like bridal gowns, necklines are low (scoop, bateau, V, sweetheart) and often off-the-shoulder.

Trendy touches include bows, fluffy tulle ruffles, lace or net gloves and fabric flowers.

Speaking of flowers, roses made of silk and satin are popping up in the middle of bows, at waistlines and shoulders, and on bodices and headpieces. Roses are also the pattern of choice for bridesmaids' dresses.

Attendants' Accessories

Bride's magazine advises that you choose your attendants' headpieces with hairstyles in mind. Combs with silk flowers and pearls are a stylish and relatively inexpensive option — but they're not for everyone.

If you choose combs, make sure your bridesmaids' hair is the right thickness to hold the accessory securely.

Another style, and one suitable for nearly all types of hair, is the halo or wreath. Choose one of silk, cotton, or fresh flowers. Or consider barrettes with fresh or dried blooms.

For a flower girl, look for something airy, dainty and innocent-looking — a light wreath or comb, perhaps.

Whether your attendants wear hats, wreaths, barrettes or no headpiece at all, remind them to have their hair, nails and makeup done the day of the wedding.

If the look suits them, have the hairdresser arrange their hair in similar styles — perhaps with matching bow, ribbon-enhanced braids or chignons studded with silk flowers.

Fit For A King

The men in a formal wedding party — and the fathers of the bride and groom — need tuxedos that fit well and look great.

The bride and groom select the type of tuxedo based on the formality of the wedding, the time of day and personal preference. This can be anything from ultra-formal black jacket and white bow tie to a casually elegant stroller jacket to a gray or pastel tux with pastel or paisley tie and cummerbund.

According to Bride's magazine, the men in the wedding party must be measured by a professional to ensure a perfect fit. Out-of-town ushers can visit a local formal-wear store and mail in their measurements to the store preparing the rental tuxes for the wedding.

Check with your formal-wear specialist — he or she may provide cards for ushers to fill out.

When tuxedos are ready, the men should try them on in front of a three-way mirror. They'll want to be sure the collar fits comfortably, the jacket sleeves leave half-an-inch of shirt sleeve showing, the jacket vent lies flat, the trousers fit snugly at the waist, and the hems break at the insteps.

Bridal Registries Are A Lifesaver

By Monica Perez
COPLEY NEWS SERVICE

Among the Iroquois Indians, the bride and her mother brought maize cakes to the groom's mother. She gave them venison in return.

Too bad the squaw-in-training had no department store nearby. She could have registered for a stewing pot in which to cook the venison, dishes to serve it in, linens to grace her table and a microwave oven to reheat the leftovers.

"Bridal registries are a lifesaver," says the mother of a modern bride. "Not only did my daughter and her fiance pick out exactly what they needed and wanted, it made things easier for the guests."

The best part? "No duplicates. No exchanges. We've kept the registry open, too, so when occasions like birthdays and Christmas come along, friends can continue to add items."

Bridal registries are a free service offered by department and specialty stores. You'll want to register soon after you become engaged.

How To Register

Do a little homework first. (Actually, it's not work at all. It's more like winning a lottery and deciding how to spend it.)

Both bride and groom should participate. After all, you're both going to live in the home you furnish.

Magazines such as Modern Bride and

The Associated Press

Clock is timely gift

Bride's publish lists of items you're likely to need. Use these as a starting point.

Browse department stores. Attend bridal fairs. Discuss your tastes: Do you prefer understated elegance or drama? Are you contemporary, traditional, sophisticated?

"The traditional couple might select ivory china with a gold rim," says Modern Bride magazine. "A contemporary pair might enjoy the versatility of the many mix-and-match patterns available; and a sophisticated duo might opt for a stylish black pattern on their china, complemented by black-stemmed goblets."

Visit the store's bridal consultant. She'll help you select and coordinate the furnishings and accessories you need. She'll also complete the gift registry form for you and record the information in the store's system.

If your families span the world, sign up at several locations. For example, register your china in Chicago, your linens in Louisville and your flatware in Ft. Lauderdale.

Many department stores use computers to make things easy for long-distance weddings. When the salad bowl you want is bought by your aunt in San Francisco, branches in Los Angeles, Seattle and San Diego know about it — it's automatically noted in their computerized registries.

Etiquette dictates that you never mention your registry in wedding announcements or shower invitations. So how do you get the word out? Enlightened guests will ask. Others should be informed (discreetly) by you or the groom, your families and close friends.

Keep in mind that guests are under no obligation to use the registry. Many people will want to surprise you with specially selected, thoughtful gifts.

What To Register For

Register for computer equipment, if you really want it. Or hardware, a set of encyclopedias, lingerie, board games and exotic coffees.

The point is, don't limit yourself to what you think you should register for. You'll be doing yourselves a disservice — and missing a lot of fun — if you overlook the luxuries you long for and the practical items you need.

There is a return to traditional wedding gifts. Couples are registering for silver, china and crystal — and large, old-fashioned church weddings are also back in a big way.

Yet gifts that promote romantic indulgence — anything that may help a couple create a special moment together — are also popular.

If you don't have a "hope chest," it's not too late. Register for a formal white damask table cloth with matching napkins. Add an assortment of place mats, kitchen towels, and linens for bath and bed.

Know what's hot? Teapots designed by architects. (Michael Graves, Richard Meier and others). Look for designer tableware, too, that will add a stylish, distinctive "form follows function" touch to your home.

According to Bride's magazine, the must-haves for your kitchen include: 8-inch and 12-inch casseroles and frying pans, large and small baking dishes (don't forget glass ones for the microwave), a loaf pan, 1 quart and 2 quart sauce pans, a Dutch oven, baking sheets, 9 inch and 10 inch pie pans, roasting pans and a stock pot.

Flowers Essential To Wedding Magic

By Nanette Wisner
COPLEY NEWS SERVICE

To many, flowers and weddings are synonymous. From wedding bouquets to the groom's boutonniere, the magic moment will be recorded in the freesias and roses you choose for your special day.

In addition to the flowers you and your wedding party will carry, there are flowers to select for the ceremony and reception. Finding the right look, within your budget, is tricky. But if you research well and choose flowers that are in season, your day will bloom lavishly.

In Ieta W. Clark's new book, "Affordable Weddings" (Simon & Schuster), there are hundreds of ideas for organizing your floral approach.

Books and magazines are good sources for finding flowers that match your mood and your color scheme. Check the library or bookstore for magazines such as Architectural Digest and Interior Design Magazine for the latest word on flowers and floral arrangements.

Clark suggests looking "at the spacing of large and small blossoms, how the colors are mixed, and how the shape of the grouping is achieved."

Copy pictures of flowers and arrangements you like and bring them to your florist. Find out what's in season. Bring with you swatches of the groom's and bride's wedding outfits, the color scheme for the wedding and even the invitations.

Another source of ideas is to browse in flower shops. Ask florists if you can look over their book of arrangements they've created for parties.

Do you want to integrate other items into your reception flowers — such as lace, shells, or keepsakes? Or do you prefer an unusual container — such as white wicker baskets or pewter? Then, comb antique stores and novelty shops, and bring those items to the florist you select.

If a volunteer is doing the flowers, you can utilize blooms and greenery from friends' gardens, local flower shops, wholesale flower markets, or even wildflowers cut from fields.

Silk flowers have become very popular for the bridesmaids' bouquets, and last forever. They come in every color, which makes it easy to match even the most unusual fabric.

For the winter wedding, silk or dried flowers provide an excellent alternative to the expense of fresh flowers.

Find An Original Gift For The Couple Which Has Its Own Distinct Personality

By Monica Perez
COPLEY NEWS SERVICE

According to Bride's magazine, if a couple has a distinct personality, one of these ideas might fit for a shower or wedding gift:

Gourmets: Wine glasses, a wine rack, a wine label scrapbook, membership in a wine-of-the-month club.

Exercisers: Warm-up suits and leotards, an exercise bike, membership at a health club.

Travelers: Luggage, sunglasses, beach towels, passport wallets, a travel alarm or iron.

Social butterflies: An appointment book, an engraved pen, theater or opera tickets, restaurant gift certificates.

Sports fans: A stadium blanket and thermos, season football tickets.

Sailors: Floating barware, deck chairs, a compass, an all-weather radio, a picnic basket for snacks.

The couple setting up a home office: Bookends, paperweights, desk sets, a remote telephone, a tape recorder or dictaphone.

The couple buying a first home: Gardening tools, a leaf blower, a lawn mower, a garden sun dial, a wheelbarrow, snow shovels, a welcome mat, a bridge table, folding chairs.

Remember to register for items in a wide range of prices. Your niece, for example, may have only $10 to spend. Make it easy for her to get you something she knows you really want. A photo album or frame or handworked pillowcase are just as memorable.

You'll need appliances, too: a coffee maker, toaster, hand mixer, blender, iron, vacuum, microwave oven, can opener and a toaster oven. (There are dozens more; these are just the basics.)

Here are necessities you may not have thought of: luggage, camera equipment, shower curtain, clock, address book,

Bridal Baubles Are Important To Couple And Wedding Party

By Debra Lee Baldwin
COPLEY NEWS SERVICE

The bridal lovebirds will wear their wedding rings forever.

Rings are important. Today mixed metals, diamonds and rubies and the return of wedding sets are big.

But there are other baubles that symbolize the love you share as well.

"For a great many women," says Modern Bride magazine, "getting married means buying or receiving their first pearls."

In addition to pearls, other love tokens the groom (or a proud parent) may want to give the bride include earrings, an elegant watch, an engraved pendant, a gemstone-studded dinner ring or a graceful bracelet.

For a special wedding gift for her mate, the bride might select a gold-and-diamond tie bar, an antique pocket watch or cuff links. Or present him with the key to your heart: an engraved key chain.

Because it's elegant and eternal, jewelry is an ideal gift for members of the bridal party as well.

The bride can present pearl earrings or pendants to her attendants. The groom can give money clips or tie bars to the best man and ushers.

When it comes to diamonds, pearls, watches and more, a reputable jeweler is a bridal couple's best friend. Most soon-to-be-weds are inexperienced when it comes to purchasing their rings or other fine jewelry — and there's a lot to learn.

Diamond Dazzlers

It's a trade-off: size vs. quality. Be prepared to choose.

"Would the recipient like a smaller stone of greater quality or a larger stone of less quality? When dealing with diamonds, consumers often sacrifice one for the other," says the vice president of a large jewelry retailer.

Keep in mind your loved one's tastes. Would he or she prefer a traditional stone and setting — or one that is more contemporary? Or does a diamond mixed with rubies or sapphires suit her needs?

How important is the shape of the stone? Fancy-cut diamonds tend to look larger than round stones of the same weight, yet they are priced comparably. Shapes to consider include oval, pear, marquise and emerald-cut.

Be sure to ask the jeweler to explain the "four C's" of diamond selection: color, cut, clarity and carat weight.

How much should you spend on an engagement ring? According to Modern Bride magazine, a ring equal in cost to two months' salary is in a ballpark price range. For women, decide whether you want an engagement ring that comes with a matching wedding band.

His Ring

Chances are, the new husband will want a wedding ring, too — nine out of 10 do.

Double-ring ceremonies became popular during World War II, when soldiers wanted a remembrance of their brides to take to service with them.

Today's grooms are not shy when it comes to expressing their sense of taste and design. They opt for etched, woven or gemstone-inlaid designs instead of plain gold bands.

The latest trend? Diamonds. As many as 17 percent of men's wedding rings include this glittering symbol of eternal love.

Gold Notes

Be sure any ring you are considering has a karat mark stamped on it to indicate you are buying real gold. Many pieces of jewelry are processed with a layer of gold mechanically bonded to base metal. If this is the case, the mark indicates that the piece is "gold filled."

Gibson doll

This 'Gibson Girl Bride' doll is sculpted in hand-painted bisque porcelain and gowned in satin, lace and fine tulle.
