Pentagon Censors Study On Bias, Harassment

By Molly Moore
 LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — Pentagon security reviewers censored some of the most sensitive and potentially embarrassing parts of a recently released study on harassment and discrimination in the military, deleting some references to racial problems and rumors of an orgy at one Air Force base, documents show.

Public affairs officials authorized the deletions in an effort to speed release of the report, which had been delayed for months, according to Pentagon spokesmen.

Officials said some of the deleted sentences and phrases represented "the author's subjective opinion which is not official Department of Defense policy and is protected under the deliberative process exception." Officials said that exemption allows the Pentagon to edit publicly released documents to "protect the writer so that the person can make candid statements and analysis."

Officials said other statements were removed because they involved "speculation with no factual basis, similar to hearsay in a court of law."

The report on harassment and discrimination in the military was compiled by the Defense Advisory Committee on Women in the Services, an independent panel that monitors issues involving women, other minorities and families in the military. The committee traditionally has prepared an annual report based on personal interviews and firsthand impressions from visits to military facilities overseas and throughout the United States.

Dr. Jacquelyn K. Davis, who authored the report as chairman of the advisory panel last year, said she was unaware that portions of the study had been deleted by the Defense Department.

"The issues are controversial and difficult ... but I can't see how they affect our discussion of national security," Davis said in a telephone interview from her Boston office.

"The only reason (information should be deleted) is if it affects national security in a negligent fashion or if it is impinging on the private life of individuals."

Neither Davis nor Pentagon officials could explain why the report wasn't released for almost five months after it was submitted to then-Defense Secretary Frank C.

Brook Valley Residents Protest Rezoning Plan

By Greg Laudick
 THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Approximately 60 Brook Valley residents, gathering in opposition to a local rezoning request, voiced their objections to the Greenville City Council on Wednesday at the entrance to the recently annexed subdivision.

The citizens had assembled on the corner of Oxford Road and N.C. 33 to greet the council members as they arrived on a fact-finding bus tour. The trip, attended by the mayor, city staffers and five of the six council members, was scheduled to provide policymakers a firsthand look at two tracts involved in the rezoning issue.

Developer Bill Clark of Greenville has requested that the two tracts of land located on the corner of Oxford Road and N.C. 33 be rezoned from RA-20 (residential/agricultural) to O&I II (office and institutional).

The request was considered by the City Council at its Feb. 10 meeting but after listening nearly an hour to public opinion and input from the developer, Mayor Ed Carter continued the matter until after a tour could be taken to "get a better understanding of the situation."

Clark has argued that with the proposed widening of N.C. 33 and the subsequent increase in traffic, the O&I II zoning would be an appropriate buffer to adjacent residential uses. The city's development department is not opposed to Clark's request.

However, some neighborhood residents told the council Wednesday that any development on that site would be detrimental.

"The residents here today are very much opposed to the rezoning of the lot that we're standing on," said Joanne Honeycutt, president of the Brook Valley Homeowners Association.

"We are interested in keeping this entrance as natural as possible. Many of the residential areas around Greenville have been, sort of speaking, invaded by commercial-type properties and we don't want the entrance to be marred by parking lots," she said.

Ms. Honeycutt also said any future development on the site would contribute to "cut-through traffic" proceeding through the subdivision, a problem she says is rapidly increasing.

"We're here because we want to see the situation first hand," Mayor Ed Carter told the crowd which had gathered in the chilly 40 degree weather.

"We take this matter very seriously and when we have situations where there are differing opinions, we feel it's necessary to come out to look so as to formulate our own opinion and to look at the long range plans and to do some extensive study. We want to be completely objective about this," Carter said.

The Greenville Planning and Zoning Commission, an advisory board to the council, on Dec. 21 voted 7-1 to recommend Clark's rezoning request be denied.

Some residents of Brook Valley are wondering why the council at the February meeting didn't heed the commission's recommendation.

"The city has a planning board, consisting of experts, who look at these type of things all the time and they're doing a good job," said Brook Valley resident Walter Woodward. "Apparently the town council does not seem to think its zoning board is worth listening to."

As the council discussed the matter with residents, local children played soccer nearby on the vacant lot.

Brook Valley resident Edna Whitfield pointed to the children and said, "The (traffic) congestion is already bad. If you put anything here, there's going to be more cars. There's children all around here and you can hardly get in and out of here now," she said of the neighborhood entrance.

In a telephone interview today, Clark defended his proposal, calling it "an almost perfect textbook rezoning request."

"What I'm proposing is well within the scope of the planning guidelines which the city has set forth. There's a creek separating the tract from the Brook Valley residential area and also a great deal of vegetation," he said.

Clark said the high volume of traffic on the corner prohibits the property from being developed as residential. He also said O&I II zoning, which allows banks, bookstores, funeral homes, and municipal buildings, is far more restrictive than commercial zoning, which many

Helms, right, shares a laugh with Bennett as Senate panel opens confirmation proceedings

Bennett Promises To Defend Liberties During Drug Battle

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — William J. Bennett assured senators today he would defend the civil liberties of Americans as coordinator of the government's anti-drug fight, although "this war is not for delicate sensibilities."

In his second day of confirmation hearings as director of national drug control policy, the former education secretary defended his support of school officials who set up metal detectors and take other measures to control violence and drug abuse in the schools.

"This war is not for delicate sensibilities," he told the Senate Judiciary Committee. "This is tough stuff."

However, during a philosophical discussion with committee Chairman Joseph R. Biden Jr., D-Del., Bennett said, "I can't imagine circumstances in the near future ... that would require us" to suspend civil liberties in the cause of fighting drugs.

"They are the base. They are the anchors. They are the anchor. They sometimes cause us difficulties in this war ... but these are the ends ... You can't destroy the fabric of the country in order to defend the country," Bennett said.

He said he opposed "some who were arguing for universal (drug) testing of students."

When Biden asked his reason for that resistance, Bennett replied, "Because I'm sensitive to the Constitution, the Fourth Amendment,"

Bush Undecided On Eastern Strike

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — President Bush still is weighing whether to step in and avert an impending strike against Eastern Airlines, the White House said today.

Presidential Press Secretary Marlin Fitzwater suggested the decision may not come before Friday, when Bush plans to meet with top advisers on the situation.

The International Association of Machinists is set to strike Eastern at 12:01 a.m. EST Saturday.

A federal judge was considering a motion today to allow the machinists union to picket five other major airlines — Northwest, USAir, United, Piedmont, and Trans World — in the event of a strike.

The union also has said it plans pickets at rail, sea and other transportation companies, along with sister airline Continental and Texas Air Corp., parent firm of Eastern and Continental.

Federal mediators have urged Bush to stop the strike, which the machinists say could disrupt air, rail and sea transportation nationwide.

Civil rights leader Jesse Jackson and labor leaders have also urged the president to use his presidential powers to declare a national transportation emergency, postponing any strike for 60 days while a special panel investigates.

Jackson, who ran for the Democratic presidential nomination last year, met with Bush at the White House on Wednesday night, presumably to discuss the Eastern situation. However, Fitzwater said he did not know what the two discussed in the private session.

As to stopping the strike for 60 days, "No decision has been made," Fitzwater said today.

Eastern, which says it is losing about $1 million a day, wants to cut salaries to save $150 million.

GI With Access To Data Missing

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

STUTTGART, West Germany — U.S. military officials are investigating the disappearance near the East German border of a U.S. soldier who had access to secret information. It was not known if he defected.

U.S. Navy Cmdr. Joe Wilkinson, from the U.S. European Command headquarters in Stuttgart, identified the missing soldier today as Spec. 4 Michael A. Peri, 21, of Laguna Niguel, Calif.

He said Peri had access to classified information, was assigned to the intelligence section of his unit and worked as an "electronics warfare signal specialist."

Asked if Peri had defected to East Germany or if the possibility existed he had gone into the communist country, Wilkinson said: "It would be inappropriate to speculate on that at this time."

Wilkinson said in a telephone interview that Peri was reported missing when he failed to appear at his army unit's 6 a.m. formation Feb. 21.

He said Peri was assigned to Headquarters and Headquarters Troop, 11th Armored Cavalry Regiment in Fulda. The 11th Armored Cavalry is stationed along West Germany's frontier with East Germany.

Fulda is 65 miles northeast of Frankfurt.

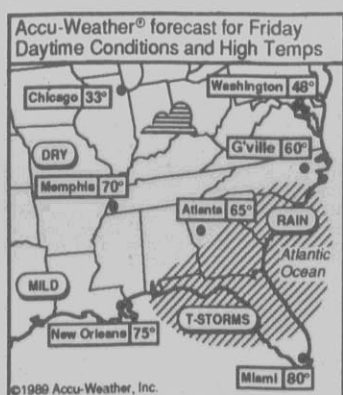

Wilkinson said Peri was last seen at 9 p.m. on Feb. 20.

A search revealed that a jeep was missing from the unit's parking area, Wilkinson said.

He said the jeep was later discovered abandoned about 35 miles northeast of Fulda, along the border near the town of Obersuhl.

Wilkinson said Peri "was responsible for operating equipment that identifies and locates non-communications signals such as radar. Additionally, he performed routine administrative duties within the (intelligence) section." Wilkinson said Peri had been assigned to West Germany since March 4, 1988.

Customers Line Up As Sears Reopens

By Angela Lingerfelt
 THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Wearing red carnation corsages, employees of Sears Roebuck and Co. at Carolina East Mall greeted about 100 customers when the store opened its doors Wednesday at noon following a 42-hour face-lift.

Starting Monday at 6 p.m., Sears employees across the country marked down prices on more than 1.5 billion pieces of merchandise in an effort to change the store's image and attract more customers. Prices on about 50,000 items in the Greenville store had to be changed.

"We finished about 97 1/2 percent of the work involved in changing all of the prices," said Stacy Whittington, local Sears manager. "To take physical inventory of everything in the store is a mammoth job in itself, plus everything else, was almost an impossible task in the time frame we had, but our employees pulled it off."

About 200 employees of the local store, in addition to temporary help, prepared for the new retailing strategy by changing signs and displays, taking inventory and cleaning up.

Whittington said the company plans to keep its prices low year-round, instead of marking them up and down periodically for sales. This is a major change for the retailer because it helped pioneer the sale concept.

"We will eliminate an incredible amount of behind-the-scenes work and costs," Whittington said.

Company officials estimate that the new strategy could save the national retailer up to $200 million a year through reduced paperwork, inventory handling and other related costs.

In a dramatic makeover, the store converted its old sales signs of yellow and black lettering to new ones of red and blue, and magenta and gray. Customers seemed pleased by the prices, as well as the look.

"In the past, when I thought of Sears, I thought of a boring and conservative image. Things look more modern and appealing to the eye now," said Lisa Horton, an East Carolina University graduate student. She was browsing through the sewing machine portion of the store.

"I'm sure this will be one of my stops at the mall from now on," Ms. Horton said.

In the clothing department, Julie Miller of Greenville was "looking for anything that's a good price." She heard about the storewide reductions through the mail, on television and by catalog. Sears has invested in a national advertising blitz to promote the strategy as "the biggest change in Sears history."

Kitty Miller, Julie's mother, said the new image looked "very festive. I will probably shop here more often than in the past."

Nearby, other customers were looking at signs that reflected reduced prices on various Sears products. Shoppers also were told of the changes on the store's intercom.

"The customers I have spoken with seemed pleased," said Sandra Price, who has been employed by the company for a year. "I think this will be for the good because customers won't have to wait for a sale. They can get a good price on a product any time."

Whittington said it will be a while before the company will be able to see the results of the change. But he said the response so far has been "good, great, fantastic. We have a store full of people."

Pitt County Sheriff Ralph Tyson said James Wayne Miles, 28, Box 224, Farmville, and Alton Ray Smith, 52, of Route 1, Box 107, Winterville, were arrested in Falkland about 9:45 p.m.

Miles is being held in the Pitt County Jail on $40,000 bond, and Smith is being held on $100,000 bond.

The State Bureau of Investigation and the sheriff's department worked together on the operation, Tyson said, and agents made three drug buys from the men.

Miles is charged with three counts of trafficking cocaine by transporting the drug, four counts of conspiracy and three counts each of possessing, selling and delivering cocaine. Authorities also confiscated Miles' 1987 Chevrolet van. Smith is charged with four counts of conspiring to traffic in cocaine.

Harassment Trial Ready For Jurors

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — Motions to dismiss charges of sexual harassment against First Citizens Bank and the former manager of the bank's Greenville branch were denied although several women testified that the manager never made sexual advances toward employees.

Wake County Superior Court Judge Donald W. Stephens of Raleigh denied the motions Wednesday in the case of William Glidewell.

The case was expected to go to the jury today following closing arguments.

Battered by allegations that he sexually harassed female employees at a Greenville bank branch, Glidewell called on several women who contradicted the testimony of former teller Mary Denise Haughn, 33. Mrs. Haughn said she had left her job in tears after Glidewell, 56, made sexual advances in the bank's vault in February 1987.

Mrs. Haughn is seeking an unspecified amount of damages in Wake County Superior Court, contending that Glidewell sexually harassed her for more than three years and that the bank condoned his conduct. She claims the harassment caused her severe emotional distress.

The women called to testify on Glidewell's behalf were, with one exception, still employed by First Citizens.

"He's the best person that I know of," said Judy Whitley, who still works at the bank. "Glidewell has not touched me anywhere where he should not."

The women said that Mrs. Haughn did not go home in tears on the evening of the vault incident, as she claims. Instead, the women said, Mrs. Haughn happily took part in a going-away party for another employee at a Mexican restaurant where she drank alcohol. Later that evening, she accompanied other female employees to a "ladies night" at a Greenville discotheque, the women said.

Health Officials Seek Warrant To Check Barn Site

By John Bare
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

State health officials have been delayed in their efforts to inspect a packhouse near Stokes where a funeral home owner is storing medical waste and biological remains, but a spokesman said today agents still intend to investigate the facility.

Agents from the Solid Waste Management Section of the state Division of Health Services had planned to inspect the packhouse Wednesday, spokesman Steve Reid said, but they did not have the proper warrant to search the facility, which is located on rural paved road 1547.

John M. Gray of Raleigh, who owns Ayers-Gray Funeral Home in Bethel and Gray Funeral Home and Crematorium in Raleigh, owns the land in question, and he has placed a padlock on the door of the packhouse.

Agents are in the process of obtaining an administrative warrant, Reid said, which is what state agencies use instead of a search warrant when they need to investigate a site.

"We'll get whatever we need to get," Reid said.

Pitt County Sheriff Ralph Tyson said he expected agents to arrive in Greenville today to obtain the warrant, and investigators from his office would help them by providing a description of the packhouse and the location.

"We're going to assist them any way we can," Tyson said.

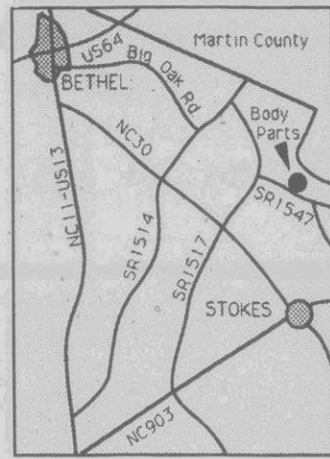

Pitt County deputies inspected the packhouse earlier in the week — after area residents discovered the contents Sunday — but they concluded that the storage practice does not violate any criminal laws, thus that inquiry ended.

Investigators said they are now looking into reports that Gray is improperly storing similar waste at other sites in the county.

Though no criminal charges have been filed, Reid said, Gray may be violating a handful of agency regulations regarding the acceptance, storage and disposal of medical waste. However, the facility does not appear to be a health hazard, he said.

"What it clearly might be is a violation of our rules and regulations," he said.

County health officials say the stored items appear to have come from a hospital, though they do not know which one. The cylindrical cardboard containers hold syringes, needles and other medical waste, as well as biological remains such as tissue and body parts. Cremated human ashes are also stored in the packhouse, investigators said.

The waste did not come from Pitt County Memorial Hospital, said Dr. Stan Harris, regional medical examiner. That facility operates its own incinerator.

Gray has a contract with the state's chief medical examiner to dispose of waste, but Chief Medical Examiner John Butts said he has no information indicating the material found in Pitt County came from his Chapel Hill office. Officials with the state Board of Mortuary Science said Gray also has contracts with at least one hospital.

Though Gray owns a crematorium in Raleigh, he could not legally incinerate much of the material there, Reid said, because he is not licensed to dispose of medical waste.

Gray is licensed only to dispose of bodies and body parts, Reid said.

Hospital items such as needles, syringes, laboratory packets and blood bags fall under another category, he said, and the items must be disposed of at a medical waste incinerator.

"He's not licensed to handle those materials," Reid said.

If Gray accepted the medical waste from a hospital with the understanding that he was to incinerate the material, that could be a violation, Reid said. The storage practice could also violate state regulations, because a packhouse is not a permitted facility.

Boards of wood and pieces of metal have been nailed over windows of the wooden packhouse, and some of the boards on the side of the building are missing. Pieces of the metal roof have also torn away.

In an unrelated matter, state officials received a complaint last December that Gray was illegally incinerating medical and infectious waste at his Raleigh crematorium, and Reid said the state cited him for the violations.

"(The state) issued a notice of violation ... telling him to stop that immediately and telling him that the

Leave The Wish List At Home, Joe

If East Carolina University needs a school of agriculture, that suggestion should come from its own leadership, not from House Speaker Joe Mavretic.

A university's goals for growth should be determined from within. It is not the job of legislators to set that agenda. After all, an institution's leaders best know the strengths and weaknesses of their schools. They know the needs of their students and of the region a university serves. They are specialists and their role is to plan and advise.

The lawmakers' job is to listen to these experts, evaluate recommendations and find the money to fill these needs.

Last week in Greenville Mavretic suggested ECU ought to have a school of agriculture. Neither Chancellor Richard Eakin nor ECU Board Chairman Max Joyner nor longtime ECU-watchers could recall that proposal passing the lips of anyone before Mavretic. It was, like last week's tornado and snowstorm, a shot from the blue.

Then this week Mavretic told leaders at North Carolina A&T University — one of the two existing schools of agriculture in the state — the institution is being cheated by the state because it gets significantly less money for agriculture than N.C. State University, the state's other ag school. Mavretic said if the two agriculture schools were funded equally, they'd be better schools.

There's probably truth in that statement and the questions Mavretic is asking about funding deserve thoughtful answers. In addition, there may or may not be a valid need for a school of agriculture at ECU. But it's not up to Mavretic to make that call. Politicians shouldn't determine funding priorities for the universities.

There are very practical reasons for that exclusion. Planning and priority-setting should come from the universities themselves. Then, policy should come from a board that represents the perspective of the entire university system — like the University of North Carolina Board of Governors, the board charged with overseeing the state's 16-campus. If the responsibility for determining who gets what were left up to elected officials, politics, not need, would be the dominant factor.

Case in point: Mavretic's suggestion that ECU develop a school of agriculture makes it obvious he either doesn't know or doesn't care what that university's leadership thinks is important. An eastern legislator, he's planting seeds of support with the farm vote in his region. A school of agriculture might be on the school's wish list, but it isn't on the reality list. ECU has a ream of documented needs already — projects its chancellor and department heads have determined are high priority. An addition to its library appropriately sits at the top of the page. Here is ECU's largest need — and here is where the funding should focus.

Mavretic should spend his time finding the money to fund the items on this reality list instead of adding to the wish list.

Tree City?

Another Reason To Stay Green

With all the furor lately over Greenville's lack of trees, it's a tad strange to see a headline proclaiming the city "Tree City USA."

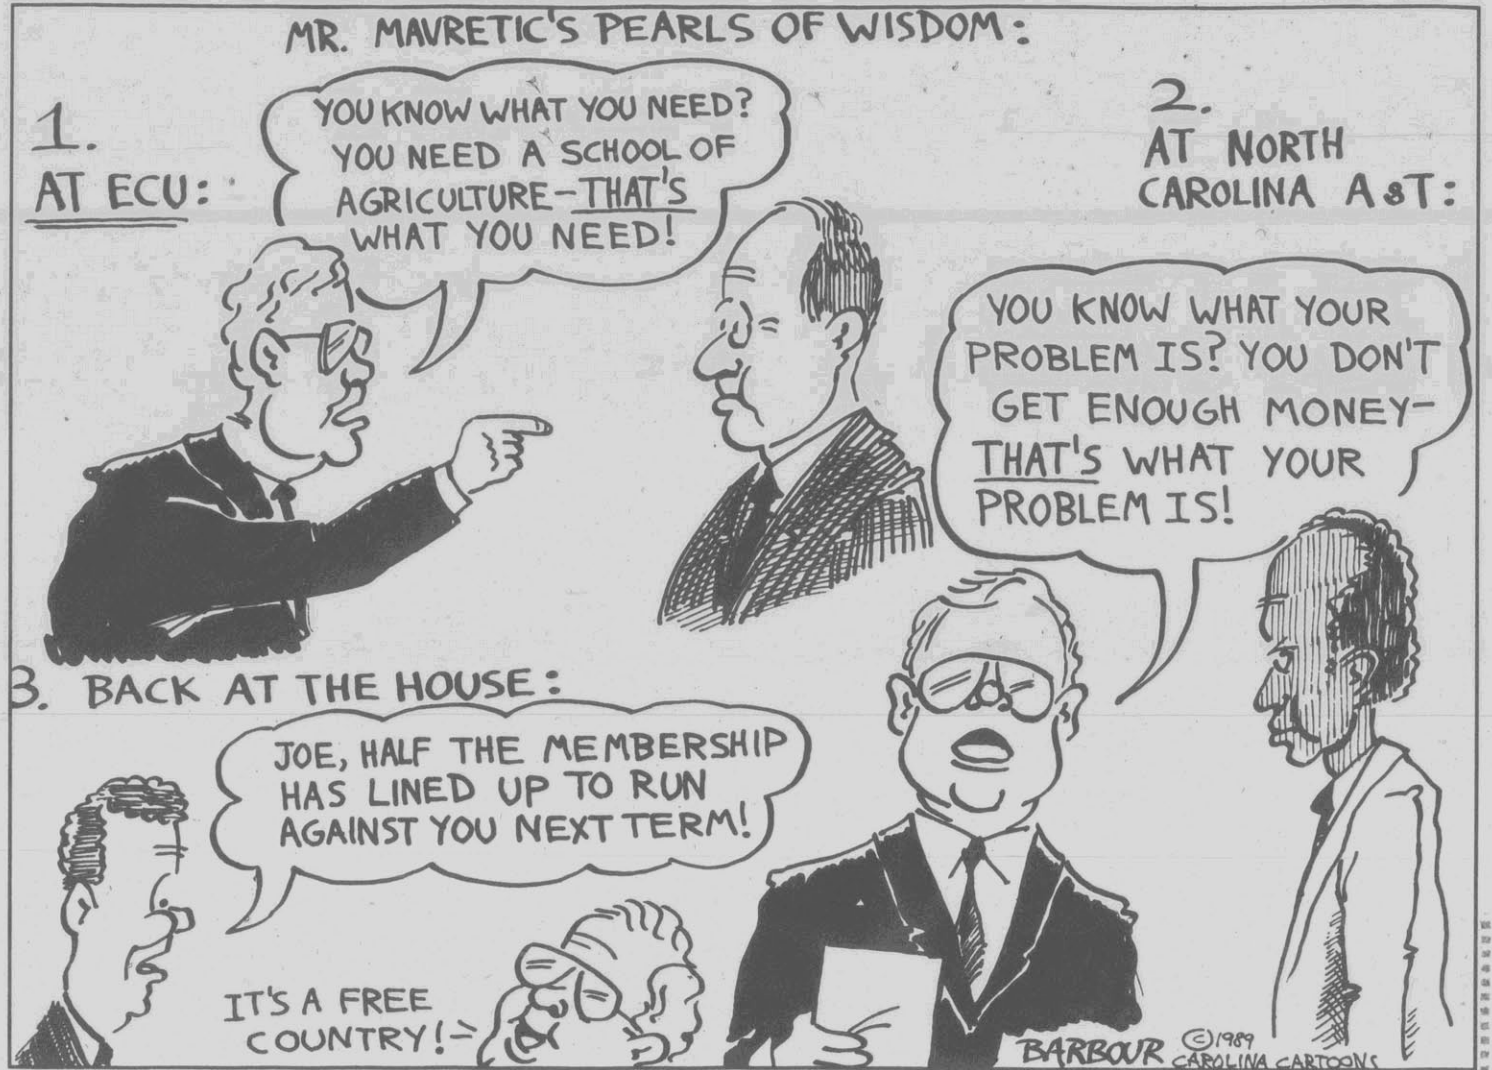

That designation should remind us, however, that we have every reason to maintain adequate trees in the area.

The city received the designation from the National Arbor Day Foundation and it signifies that the city has done certain things to protect its trees. It is a measure of our tree stewardship.

From a forest to an urban area, Greenville has a history that includes trees. Many, however, have gone and will continue to go through commercial and residential expansion or from damage or old age. More can be planted and if we are diligent we can have a new tree for every one which disappears. The Tree City USA designation gives the community more impetus to keep the green.

The city is fortunate to have an impressive green belt in the flood plain on the north side of the Tar River. It can be maintained and, indeed, must of it is embraced by the Riverside North park. Another green belt stretches though the main university campus.

Man has no choice but to live in harmony with nature. To do otherwise will destroy the very environment which we depend on for life. Trees are essential to our lives and Greenville must continue to provide abundant trees for present and future generations.

A Kinder, Gentler Semiautomatic

Art Buchwald

President George Bush, who wants to make this a kinder, gentler nation, moved in the right direction recently when he said that he was not interested in banning the importation of kinder, gentler semiautomatic weapons.

This declaration could not have come at a better time for the kinder, gentler National Rifle Association, which lists the president as a lifetime member. Not only are the anti-NRA forces determined to stop the automatic weapons from being sold, but the police around the country are complaining that they can't maintain a benevolent and humane society when there are so many machine guns available to the citizens.

It came as no surprise that Adolf Trigger, a gun dealer, was celebrating the Bush decision. He told me, "The president has sent a message in his kind and gentle way that as long as he is in office, Americans can buy any kind of gun they want to, be it Czech, Chinese or Israeli."

I was glad to share in Adolf's happiness. "If I were leader of the Free World, I would want to have a completely armed America, too. Only an unkind and ungentle president would try to keep semiautomatic weapons out of the hands of hunters and sportsmen. Bush doesn't want the weapons to be used against schoolchildren, does he?"

"Of course not. Nobody wants children to be shot by semiautomatic weapons. The president feels that we have to stop being so soft and lenient with our criminals. Guns should only be available to law-abiding citizens who won't use them to shoot each other in the back."

"The president has a warm and benign heart, but how can he stop sales if the NRA fights any law requiring background information on a person buying a gun?"

"No one ever said that separating the good gun buyers from the bad ones was easy," Adolf explained.

"Maybe the president will come up with a happy and sympathetic solution to the problem. I'm sure he feels awful every time there's a massacre with a firearm."

"Mr. Bush would like to do something about it, but he feels that gun control is an issue for individual states."

"Why?" "That way he can devote all his time to talking about disarmament with the Russians. If a person is working for a kinder, gentler world, he doesn't want to be distracted with gang wars in his own back yard."

"Do you think that Mr. Bush really agrees with the semiautomatic gun supporters, or is he just trying to placate them so that they won't get mad and go out and mow down a nursing home?"

"George believes every word he says. He was a hunter long before he was a president. When he was running for office, he promised the NRA that he would never support any kind of gun registration because crime cannot be stopped by finding out who owns a gun and who doesn't. I'm not saying that the NRA elected him president of the United States, but we like to think that we were responsible for his tender and merciful landslide."

"When Bush says that he will never do anything to prevent foreign hunting machine guns from flooding the United States, is he threatening the domestic gun industry?"

"No," replied Adolf, "because we don't manufacture semiautomatic guns in this country. So, by importing the semiautomatics, we're not taking jobs away from the American worker. All the president wants is to make sure that they are available to the people who need them. That's why he will go down in history as the kindest, gentlest president the NRA ever had."

Forget Tower, Bring On Giamatti

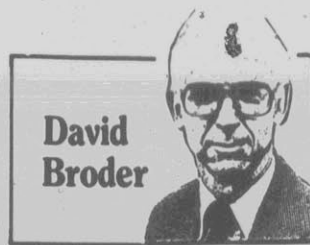

WASHINGTON — While official Washington was being tied into knots by the controversy over John Tower's appointment as secretary of defense, the future occupant of an even more sensitive position slipped into town almost unnoticed.

Controversy abounds in his area of responsibility, too. Scandals and substance abuse are familiar problems. Senators strive to influence his decisions and even more Americans worry about his rulings than fret over the procurement and strategy judgments made by the Pentagon boss.

I am speaking of the commissioner of baseball. The new occupant of that job, A. Bartlett Giamatti, displayed on his swing through the capital exactly the qualities that might have saved Tower much grief. He was wise, funny, principled, modest and — except for a certain squishiness on the issue of the infamous designated-hitter rule — right on almost every question that counts.

By the end of lunch at The Washington Post, it must have crossed the mind of almost everyone in the room that if President Bush wanted to give the Defense Department to a former academic, he should have skipped the ex-professor of political science at North Texas State (Tower) and gone for the former president and professor of comparative literature at Yale (Giamatti).

I do not know whether Giamatti would have taken the job, but I guarantee you that if he had, he would have been confirmed in a minute. He knows how to handle Capitol Hill. When the ad hoc committee of senators seeking new franchises for their states pressed him a bit too hard, he turned them aside with ease. "I'm strongly in favor of expansion," he said. "I favor three senators per state."

That the author of "Play of Double Senses: Spenser's Faerie Queen" should wind up first as president of the National League and now as commissioner of baseball is remarkable. Nothing in their recent record suggested that the baseball owners were brilliant recruiters. Their two previous picks for the top job in baseball were Bowie Kuhn, a corporate lawyer with a chilly personality who seemed to see himself on the Supreme Court, and Peter Ueberroth, a perpetual-motion self-promoter, who seemed destined (in his own mind) for the Oval Office.

Giamatti is a bearded, beer-belly, cigarette smoker, who clearly sees himself as the fan in the stands, even though he writes of baseball (as well as of Dante) better than all but the greatest of the game's chroniclers. What is most striking about the new commissioner is the clarity with which he discerns the fundamental values embedded in the game — the values which give it its enduring appeal.

When asked about his agenda, for example, Giamatti lists predictable items, like the need to reach agreement with the players and avert a strike that could threaten the 1990 season. But his "highest priority," he says, is protecting and improving the "ambiance" (his word) of the baseball stadiums, assuring that they remain places where one generation can introduce the next to the joy of the national game.

He hears complaints on call-in shows about the offensiveness of beer-spilling, cursing, pot-smoking ballpark boos. This leads him to a speculation on whether Americans retain the degree of self-discipline necessary for a cross-section of the community to be able "to continue to take its pleasure in public places," or whether recreation, like so much else, will be segmented into private enclaves on class and racial lines.

The concern about the role baseball has played and can still play in the life of the nation animates his conversation. Asked about salaries, he says: "I'm not disturbed that society values so highly talents I never possessed....Public culture is not declassé."

But the "maldistribution" of riches does disturb him, he says, obviously thinking of the journeymen players who are an essential part of the game but never seem to share in its rich rewards.

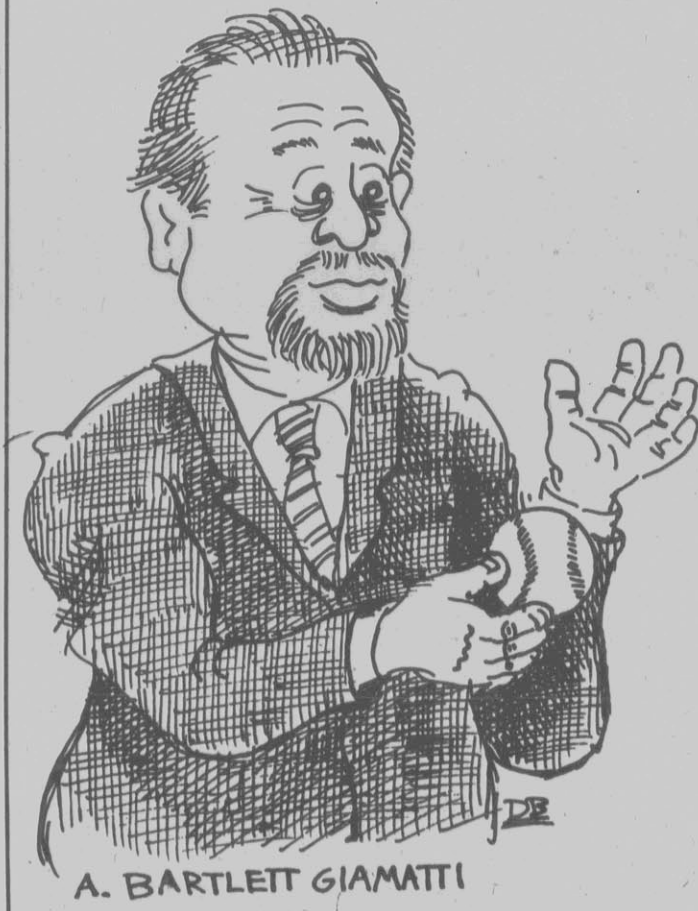

On the rules issues, his mind is clear and, mostly, consistent. Adding wild-card teams to the playoffs, as football does, is "abhorrent." Instant replay? "Never. It rests on the naive assumption that you can transfer the responsibility for judgment to technology."

"It's a game," he exclaims. "It's about acts of skill and judgment." Add instant replay and the umpires are denied the chance to employ their skill and judgment as the players do.

That same argument, he concedes, weighs against the abominable designated-hitter rule which, he correctly notes, "takes away from the manager one of his most important acts of judgment — when to hit for the pitcher." But perhaps because he comes from the job of National League president, Giamatti is reluctant to condemn the American League's despicable DH heresy.

He needs to overcome that reticence, and then Giamatti will be a just-about-perfect commissioner of the just-about-perfect game. A game which, needless to say, should be returned to the nation's capital long before his term is over.

Are Fighting Drugs & Improving Education Frills?

Paul O'Connor

ALEIGH — Not since it was approved in 1984 and funded for the 1985 school year has North Carolina's Basic Education Plan been under such fire. With money for Medicaid changes, new prisons and state employee pay raises hard to find, Gov. Jim Martin and legislators are looking with longing eyes at the nearly $113 million earmarked for new BEP spending next year.

During the campaign, when education was important to the candidates, the BEP was sacrosanct. After the campaign, when the realities of the state fiscal picture have to be confronted, Martin quickly began calling it a "sacred cow," a bit of a derogatory term.

When he proposed delaying parts of the next step of the BEP, Martin said he wouldn't hurt education. He just wanted to delay the hiring of some "non-instructional personnel." Suddenly, supportive legislators like Rep. Trip Sizemore, R-Guilford, started talking about talking another look at the BEP to cut out the frills and non-instructional personnel.

For the record, here are BEP additions scheduled for the fall, 1989.

- 89 assistant or associate superintendents at an annual cost of $4.8 million.
- 55 supervisors at a cost of $2.7 million.
- 503 teachers, grades seven through eight, at $15.3 million.

Analysis

- 477 teachers, grades four through six, at $14.5 million.
- 576 teachers, grades K through three, at $17.5 million.
- 33 vocational education teachers at $1 million.
- 53 in-school suspension teachers at $1.6 million.
- 725 instructional support personnel at $24 million.
- 311 clerical assistants at $6 million.
- 1,271 instructional, laboratory or clerical aides at $17 million.

The spending items under fire are the 725 instructional support personnel and the 1,271 aides. Their total cost is $41 million a year, and that's only enough to give state employees an extra one percent raise.

Before anyone begins calling these positions "frills, however, some thought might be given to what these people would do, if hired.

Some instructional aides would work in chemistry and physics laboratories where teachers often have to work one-to-one with students. Others are not "aides" at all, but librarians. In the parlance of the public school bureaucracy, librarians are "non-instructional" personnel, but in reality, they teach children how to find books and how to do basic research. They are charged with instilling in our children a love of reading, and a thirst for knowledge. A back-to-basics guy like Rep. Sizemore wouldn't want to de-emphasize reading. A back-to-basics guy like Rep. Sizemore wouldn't want to de-emphasize reading, would he?

Then there are 725 instructional support personnel: counselors, social workers, psychologists and school nurses. They're also "non-instructional."

But are they a frill? In a day when kids come to school with drug alcohol, parent abuse and pregnancy problems, can the hiring of one psychologist for every 2,000 kids in a system be considered a frill? If you're a politician looking to avoid a tax increase, it sure can be.

In the recent campaign, rhetoric about fighting drugs was second in volume only to rhetoric about improving schools. With these "non-instructional personnel," the state would be putting trained counseling professionals in a place where they could help kids with their drug problems.

But in a tight revenue year, fighting drugs and education for kids might be a "frill." Better to build some more prisons.

Deficits: The Nation's Governors Want It Both Ways

Walter Mears

WASHINGTON (AP) — It's always been frustrating for the nation's governors, accustomed to being the bosses at home, to come to Washington and wind up as high-profile lobbyists.

That was so even before the federal money ran out.

But they keep coming, contending, and urging their collective wisdom upon the White House and Congress, where it usually gains a polite hearing and little more.

The National Governors' Association gets VIP treatment, black tie receptions, audiences with the right people. But the message from those people has become a warning — don't look to the federal government for more aid to the states. Expect less because there's no money available here.

Sen. James Sasser, D-Tenn., chairman of the Senate Budget Committee, told the governors that they will have to find ways to finance some of the programs that face federal budget cuts because Washington is "fresh out of cash."

Secretary of Transportation Samuel Skinner said state governments should anticipate increasing costs for the repair of dilapidated bridges, the reconstruction of highways and the like.

Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell, D-Maine, politely chided the governors for wanting it both ways. "You've got a number of policy statements here ... that call for increased federal spending ... and yet another one that calls for meaningful deficit reduction," Mitchell said.

The association's task force on the federal budget was to have adopted a policy statement seeking freezes on military spending and on some domestic programs, but with full funding for welfare, child nutrition, Medicaid and similar programs. Those are programs state governments will have to finance if the flow of aid from Washington is cut or curbed.

That proposal foundered on a dispute that mirrors the budget debate in Washington. Democratic Gov. Mario Cuomo of New York, the chairman, wanted to build in provision for a federal tax increase as a last resort. Republican Gov. Carroll A. Campbell Jr. of South Carolina, the vice chairman, balked.

Walter R. Mears, vice president and columnist for The Associated Press, has reported on Washington and national politics for more than 25 years.

Mavretic Discounts Challenge

By John Flesher
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

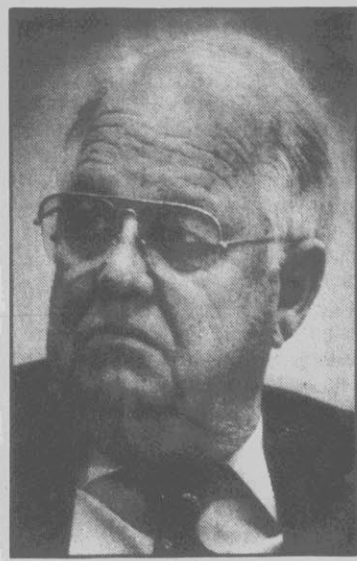

RALEIGH — House Speaker Joe Mavretic has failed to heal wounds from his defeat of Liston Ramsey, one reason why Democrats are openly planning to run for the state House's top office in 1991, some lawmakers say.

But Mavretic says he hopes Democrats who resented his pact with Republicans that elevated him to power will come to regard the move as necessary to open the way for new leadership.

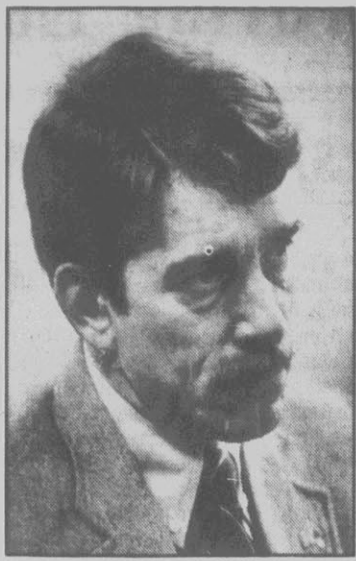

Less than six weeks after Mavretic led a bipartisan coup that toppled Ramsey, three Democrats have announced plans to run for speaker when Mavretic's term expires in 1991. Mavretic is expected to seek re-election but has made no formal announcement.

Reps. Jack Hunt, D-Cleveland, Joe Hackney, D-Orange, and Bob Hunter, D-McDowell, are working to line up support for the next election. Several other Democrats are expected to explore bids.

Rep. Billy Watkins, D-Granville, the longtime House Appropriations Committee chairman who was Ramsey's top lieutenant, said Wednesday he was considering a bid for speaker.

JACK HUNT

JOE HACKNEY

ROBERT HUNTER

Rep. Dennis Wicker, D-Lee, said he had not ruled out seeking the post but is postponing a decision to avoid violating his neutrality as House majority leader.

In an interview Wednesday, Wicker said the fact that people already are openly challenging Mavretic "is a symptom of a feeling" that House Democrats remain divided.

"I think it would be extremely difficult under the present set of circumstances for Speaker Mavretic to receive the nomination from the Democratic Caucus in 1990," Wicker said.

Mavretic disputed Wicker's contention but said it was too early to speculate on his prospects.

"If the coalition had not gotten a new speaker in place to make the kind of changes I've promised ... all three of the people that I've heard about so far who are announced candidates wouldn't have had a snowball's chance of being even considered for speaker in '91," Mavretic said.

Watkins, stripped of power by Mavretic and assigned to several subcommittees with Republican chairmen, said Mavretic has failed to bring additional Democrats into his camp and probably could not win re-election as speaker without Republican votes.

"I don't think he's been able to hold all (the Democrats) he had," Watkins said. "No good Democrat I know of admires the way it was done — in secrecy, bind yourself together and lie about something and then say you'll lie again if you have to."

Wicker said he hopes the Democratic nominee is elected speaker in 1991, instead of someone favored by a bipartisan coalition. "I'm not in favor of a coalition at all," he said. "Even in Congress, House Democrats elect the speaker. There's not a coalition."

Senate Tentatively OKs Veto Proposal

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — With little fanfare about the historic action it was taking, the Senate voted 43-7 to tentatively approve a constitutional amendment on gubernatorial veto, moving North Carolina a step closer to becoming the 50th state to grant such power.

The Senate Wednesday defeated an effort to increase the votes that would be needed to override a veto from three-fifths of legislators present to three-fifths of the full membership. But an amendment to push back the statewide vote on the matter was easily approved. A final Senate vote was expected today.

"I'm pleased at the support for this historical step after 200 years," said Lt. Gov. Jim Gardner, who said he would have preferred a two-thirds override and line-item veto for the governor.

Most of the debate centered on technical questions about the timing of override sessions, with little discussion of the historic importance of the vote.

"I think the Republicans have a planned effort to try to take the issue away from the Democrats and that's all you have seen here," said Sen. Dennis Winner, D-Buncombe, a sponsor of the proposed constitutional amendment.

Gardner, however, said most people had simply exhausted their rhetoric about the veto on the campaign trail.

"So much of that likely was answered during the campaign," he said. "Everybody's had a chance to talk about it at length."

Winner said he knew of only one technical amendment that might come up in the final Senate discussion. But Gardner said he wouldn't be surprised if someone offered an amendment to give the governor a line-item veto.

Democratic Majority Holds In Electing New Governors

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — Eight seats on the University of North Carolina Board of Governors have been filled in elections by the state House and Senate that the House Democratic leader hailed as a sign of renewed party loyalty.

Candidates endorsed by the House Democratic Caucus were elected to four seats on the 32-member board, which sets policy for the 16-campus UNC system. In the Senate, Wallace Hyde and Walter Davis outpolled Jim Van Hecke for at-large seats while Maxine O'Kelley was elected to a seat reserved for a racial minority and Lois Britt won a seat reserved for a woman.

In the House races, winners of at-large seats were Ellen Newbold of Rose Hill with 91 votes, incumbent Phillip Haire of Sylva with 80 and Harold Webb of Raleigh with 63.

They defeated incumbent William Woltz of Mount Airy, who received 54 votes, John Yorke of Lincolnton with 42, and Richard Lewis Jr. of Whiteville with 19.

In the race for a seat reserved for a Republican, incumbent Asa Spaulding Jr. overwhelmed Gastonia dentist Bill Current, 105-13.

The elections came the day after a joint session at which the candidates formally were nominated. Later Tuesday, House Democrats voted at a private caucus to support a common slate consisting of Haire, Webb, Mrs. Newbold and Spaulding.

About a dozen Democrats rebelled, according to sources who attended the caucus, saying they had committed themselves to others and did not consider the election a partisan matter that would justify a party line.

House Majority Leader Dennis Wicker, D-Lee, had described the election as a test of the extent to which Democrats have reunited after January's bitter fight over the election of House Speaker Joe Mavretic.

Sixty-four of the 74 Democrats supported the party ticket, while Rep. Sam Hunt, D-Alamance, was absent from the chamber. The other Democrats supported some, but not all, of the candidates on the caucus ticket.

"I think we elected good people to the Board of Governors ... but I'm especially pleased that the Democratic Party held their slate together on the floor," Wicker said. "That shows to me that there's a healing process going on." Among the 10 defectors were Mavretic, who voted for Lewis, Webb, Woltz and Spaulding; and Speaker Pro Tem Don Beard, D-Cumberland, who backed Lewis, Mrs. Newbold, Woltz and Spaulding.

But nine of the 20 Democrats who joined the bipartisan coalition that helped Mavretic defeat former Speaker Liston Ramsey supported the caucus ticket. Among them were Reps. Roy Cooper, D-Nash; Jim Crawford, D-Granville; and Harry Payne, D-New Hanover.

Rep. Dan DeVane, D-Hoke, who criticized the caucus action Tuesday, said Wednesday he had no regrets about going against the party line.

"I made commitments, I lived up to them and I feel good about it," DeVane said. "There's a lot of them on the floor that can't say they voted their convictions. Some of them were compelled by the caucus and voted against their will."

Davis, a Texas oilman with longstanding ties to North Carolina, picked up 43 votes in the Senate and won re-election to an at-large seat. Hyde, a veteran Democratic activist and fund-raiser from Raleigh, received 37 votes and won the second seat.

Van Hecke, former state Democratic Party chairman and a Greensboro resident, received 20 votes.

Ms. O'Kelley, of Alamance County, outpolled Theodore Carter Sr. of Raleigh 49-1. Carter did not wage a serious campaign, but allowed his name to be placed in nomination to comply with a state law requiring at least two candidates for every seat.

Mrs. Britt, of Duplin County, defeated Bonnie Cone of Charlotte 37-13.

Fire Damages Wilson Apartments

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WILSON — An 85-year-old three-story apartment building burned today, apparently after a tenant accidentally set his mattress on fire while smoking in bed, fire officials said.

No injuries were reported.

The fire at the Colonial Apartments, which began shortly after 1:30 a.m., gutted the top two floors of the building, officials said.

Firefighters were still fighting the blaze this morning, trying to prevent it from spreading to the first floor.

Aliens board a bus in Charlotte Wednesday after being removed from a cross-country flight

INS Says Alien Smugglers Used N.C. Route Regularly

By Paul Nowell
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHARLOTTE — A late-night flight from Phoenix to New York, with a two-hour layover in Charlotte, has been used for months to move illegal aliens from the West Coast, immigration officials said after 27 suspected illegal aliens were removed from one such flight.

"I wish I could say this is an isolated situation, or this number is uncommonly large," Thomas Fischer, Immigration and Naturalization Service regional director in Atlanta, said Wednesday. "But that wouldn't be accurate."

David Carmichael, a supervisory INS agent in Charlotte, said an additional 32 suspected illegal aliens were taken off Piedmont Flight 1522 in two seizures in October.

"Apparently, they've been using the flight for the last three months pretty regularly," Carmichael said.

The 27 suspected illegal aliens from five countries were stopped on a Piedmont Airlines flight in Charlotte on Wednesday. They were loaded onto a bus Wednesday afternoon bound for an INS processing center in Texas.

INS agents, acting on a tip from a regular commuter on the flight, seized the 25 males and two females shortly before 7 a.m. during a stopover at Charlotte-Douglas International Airport.

The bust was part of a three-day crackdown against alien smuggling rings that netted 175 suspected illegal aliens in Charlotte, Atlanta and Los Angeles, authorities said.

The group included two Mexicans, eight Brazilians, 14 El Salvadorans and three Ecuadorans. They were interviewed, fingerprinted and photographed Wednesday before being put on the bus at 4 p.m. bound for an INS processing center near Brownsville, Texas, said Tom Thomas, an INS spokesman.

None of the aliens spoke English.

Most of them spent the day sleeping off the effects of their long ordeal, which began Monday night in Los Angeles. According to INS officials, the aliens boarded America West Airlines flight 1277 in Los Angeles at 10 p.m. Monday night bound for Phoenix. There, they boarded Piedmont Flight 1522 bound for LaGuardia Airport in New York, with a stopover in Charlotte.

On Monday, 79 suspected illegal aliens were apprehended aboard an Eastern Airlines flight during a stopover in Atlanta. Monday's flight also was bound for New York. The same day, 69 others were taken into custody as they tried to board the same flight in Los Angeles.

Carmichael said the INS was alerted by a regular commuter on the Piedmont flight who had seen television news reports of Monday's apprehensions.

"The source told us he had taken the same flight on February 15th and he noticed 30 to 40 people who looked to him like the same people he saw on the news," Carmichael said.

INS agents met the flight early Wednesday morning in Charlotte and took the 27 into custody.

Donald Young of the INS's Charlotte office said one airline official told him Wednesday that smuggling rings have been moving as many as 30 aliens on the same Piedmont flight three times a week for the past several months.

"The publicity we get out of this might cause it to dry up for awhile, and force them to change their tactics," Young said. "But this isn't going to stop these people from coming into the country looking for work."

The INS doesn't intercept all such flights, Fischer and Carmichael said, because the agency is understaffed. "I've got four states to cover and 17 agents," Fischer said. "I don't have a single agent in South Carolina or Alabama."

The airlines cooperate with the INS but don't act on their own.

Piedmont spokesman Dave Shipley in Washington said: "If a person has a legitimate ticket, there is no reason for us to inquire about his or her residency status."

Carmichael said authorities were trying to determine whether any of the 27 taken into custody in Charlotte were part of the smuggling ring.

"We're talking to a couple of them more than some of the others," he said. "For example, one had six airline tickets in his possession when we took him into custody."

INS officials said illegal aliens pay as much as $4,000 apiece to the smugglers to get them into the United States and to a location where they can find work.

"The arrangements are usually made before they ever leave home," Carmichael said.

Thomas, who works out of the INS office in Atlanta, said the aliens would be given the opportunity to have a hearing before a deportation judge in Texas or choose to voluntarily leave the country.

"Most of them will be deported in a week or so," he said.

Investigation Of Tobacco Exports Covers 28 Dealers

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — Twenty-eight companies and millions of dollars' worth of tobacco are now involved in a Raleigh-based investigation into alleged deceit by leaf dealers, investigators said in Washington.

Rep. Charlie Rose, D-N.C., said Wednesday he was "outraged" that so many dealers would be under suspicion of exporting foreign-grown tobacco under a government program designed exclusively for U.S.-grown products. Previously, only 14 companies were being investigated.

None of the dealers has been publicly identified, but some are said to be in eastern North Carolina. The U.S. Attorney's office in Raleigh has said it will decide this spring whether to seek indictments on charges of falsifying government records.

The dealers, middlemen between tobacco growers and cigarette makers, buy and sell domestic and foreign crops.

Federal investigators said Wednesday that at least 28 of the 66 dealers involved in the export program had mixed foreign-grown tobacco in their shipments. The comments were made at a hearing of the House Agriculture subcommittee on tobacco. Rose is chairman of the panel.

The federal program, called GSM 102 and 103, guarantees the repayment of loans taken out by foreign buyers of U.S. tobacco and other commodities. James Ebbitt, an assistant inspector general at the U.S. Department of Agriculture, testified that the 28 companies under investigation shipped about 65 percent of all tobacco exported under GSM guarantees since late 1985. The GSM total, he said, was 127 million pounds, valued at $214 million.

The News and Observer of Raleigh reported that some Democrats have said privately they feared the U.S. Attorney's office might have political reservations about the case. The U.S. Attorney, Margaret Currin, was chosen by Republican Sen. Jesse Helms, a longtime foe of Rose.

In an interview Wednesday, Rose said he was not prepared to say he was worried that Mrs. Currin's office might not pursue the case vigorously.

Rose warned cigarette makers that the leaf dealer scandal might touch them.

"We've got more problems in Washington right now that need to be solved than us having to worry about this mess," he said at the hearing.

Jessica Hahn Plans Heritage USA Visit

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHARLOTTE — Jessica Hahn said she felt somewhat awkward being in Charlotte, where Jim Bakker started his PTL ministry, but said she planned to visit Heritage USA — the religious retreat built by the television evangelist.

"Naturally I have a certain feeling about this town," she said. "But Jim Bakker does not own Charlotte."

The former church secretary from Long Island, N.Y., whose 1980 sexual encounter with the PTL founder led to Bakker's ouster, came to Charlotte Wednesday to participate in a local radio station's promotional campaign.

HAHN

Ms. Hahn appeared with the station's morning team today. She was fielding questions from listeners and scheduled a lunch date with the winners of a contest.

Ms. Hahn arrived at the radio station in a white stretch limousine about 7:30 a.m., saying she had had just one hour of sleep.

The first thing she did when she got on the radio was send a message to Tammy Bakker. "Tammy, if you're listening, Happy Birthday," she said.

Ms. Hahn also talked about the Bakkers' telephone hotline and her new rock video "Wild Thing" with comedian Sam Kinison.

Ms. Hahn turned serious when de-jay John-Boy Isley asked her about the people who had supported the Bakkers over the years.

"Just because Jim and Tammy screwed up, that doesn't mean God won't have a place for them," she said. "Their hearts were in the right place. They won't be forgotten."

She said she would visit the Heritage USA complex later in the day.

"I really want to go to PTL so I can understand what it's all about," she said. "It's like trying to find your real father."

Ms. Hahn, who was last in town in 1987 to testify before a federal grand jury investigating PTL, told a news conference at a Charlotte club that she was saddened when the television ministry fell on hard times following the revelation of the tryst.

"If people want to blame me, fine," she said. "I had so little to do with PTL falling, but it was that one day that led to it."

Dressed in a T-shirt, tight blue jeans and cowboy boots, Ms. Hahn said she would like to run into Bakker during her short stay.

"I'd tell him, 'What did you hope to accomplish with all of this? Did you want to get (wife) Tammy jealous or what?'"

Ms. Hahn has been traveling across the country in recent months doing personal appearances. She recently did a radio show in Phoenix, Ariz., and is currently featured in a rock video version of "Wild Thing" by comedian Sam Kinison.

Ms. Hahn, who has also appeared nude in two Playboy Magazine issues, said she isn't as serious a person as she was several years ago.

"I don't regret Playboy. I don't regret doing the video," she said. "I am 29, I'm a girl and I'm having fun. I can finally be just Jessica."

Consent Proposal Advances

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — A state House subcommittee approved a bill to require parental consent for minors' abortions despite a court official's warning that it prescribes an inappropriate remedy for girls who seek a waiver to the rule.

The Judiciary Subcommittee on Courts and Administrative Hearings endorsed the bill 3-2 Wednesday. It now goes before the full Judiciary Committee and if approved will reach the House floor.

Judiciary Committee Chairman Roy Cooper, D-Nash, said he might call a public hearing in addition to the one held this week. The committee probably won't vote for a couple of weeks, he said.

The subcommittee vote came after Franklin Freeman, director of the Administrative Office of the Courts, objected to a provision that would let juvenile-court judges grant waivers to the parental-consent rule. Freeman said the court system was not equipped to handle abortion cases.

"To me, this is just not a good proceeding to have in the court system," Freeman said. "Abortion is more of a moral and medical decision than it is a legal decision."

The bill's judicial-waiver provision would require that pregnant minors be represented at the hearings by "guardians ad litem," Freeman said. North Carolina's guardian ad litem program involves volunteer laymen who work with abused and neglected children, he said.

"The guardians ad litem are trained to think in terms of helping children who have parents but who are unwanted after birth," Freeman said. "Many of our guardians ad litem would not be equipped ... to cope with this particular, emotionally charged situation."

Girls who go to court to seek permission to have an abortion should be represented by attorneys, who are trained to provide evidence of matters such as whether the pregnancy was caused by incest, he said.

Cost is another concern, Freeman said. In 1987, he said, 4,715 minors in North Carolina had abortions. If 50 percent of them had sought counsel for court hearings, the lawyers had charged the prevailing rate of $35 per hour and had devoted about two hours per case, the cost would have been $165,000, he said.

Inspector checks a truck entering hazardous waste landfill near Pinewood, S.C., Wednesday

EPA To Keep S.C. Waste Landfill Under Scrutiny

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

COLUMBIA, S.C. — The federal Environmental Protection Agency says it's monitoring Gov. Carroll Campbell's executive order banning hazardous wastes from 32 states and Puerto Rico to see if it would affect South Carolina's ability to manage its own hazardous waste program.

"The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency is concerned about the actions taken by the state of South Carolina," EPA's Southeastern administrator, Greer Tidwell, said in a statement issued late Wednesday.

"The agency will monitor the situation closely to determine what effect the state's action, as a result of that executive order, may or may not have on its authorized hazardous waste program," he said.

The EPA can take away any state's ability to handle its own hazardous waste program. If that authority is removed, all related permits for that state would have to be issued by the regional office and accompanying federal funding could be reduced, EPA spokesman Carl Terry said.

Tidwell also urged all eight states in EPA's Region IV to look at cooperative efforts in handling hazardous waste.

"The issuance of the executive order in South Carolina and the escalating concern by other states in the region regarding the hazardous waste management dilemma underscores the need for the states to work towards an equitable solution of the problem," Tidwell's statement said.

Terry's comments came as South Carolina began its ban on hazardous wastes and two of the most affected states — Florida and North Carolina — tried to regain access to the state's privately owned landfill.

Ten extra inspectors stood ready at the landfill to turn around loads from banned states Wednesday, but all of the 25 trucks accepted came from approved states, state health department spokesman Bill Culler said.

"It looks like the word got around and there haven't been a whole lot of problems," Culler said. Extra inspectors would be on hand for the rest of the week, he said.

State Department of Health and Environmental Control officials announced Tuesday that only 17 states plus South Carolina and the District of Columbia would be allowed to continue disposing hazardous waste in state as a result of Gov. Carroll Campbell's executive order of Jan. 18.

Campbell announced that South Carolina would prohibit beginning Wednesday the disposal of waste from any state that refused to dispose of the waste itself. He said it was meant to encourage other states to locate disposal sites within their own borders rather than relying on South Carolina.

The ban affects the GSX Services landfill on the shore of Lake Marion in Sumter County near Pinewood. The site annually accepts 135,000 tons of hazardous waste, such as solvents, acids and other chemical garbage. About 70 percent of the waste comes from out of state.

The GSX site is one of only two commercial hazardous waste landfills in the Southeast. The other is in Emelle, Ala.

DHEC figures from 1987, the latest available, show the banned states shipped about 45 percent of the waste handled by the facility, and a GSX official said again Wednesday the ban would adversely affect the company, though the extent was still unclear.

Most banned states did not respond to DHEC's request for information on prohibitions in that state, Hartsill Truesdale of the department's solid and hazardous waste division said in presenting the list Tuesday.

Attorney To Keep Up Fight For Child

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MORGANTON, N.C. — A Morganton attorney who ran away with his 5-year-old child because he believed she was being sexually abused by her stepfather will continue his custody battle even after his arrest by FBI agents, his attorney and family said.

His attorney and his sister say Hugh "Skip" Williams Jr. did not plan to fight extradition at his hearing today in Biddeford, Maine, District Court.

"He wants to get down there to North Carolina and do what he has to because he can't do it from Maine," Peter Detroy, Williams' attorney in Portland, Maine, said Wednesday. "He knows the child is bound back for North Carolina with her mother and stepfather. He clearly believes that the battle is for the safety and emotional and physical well being of his daughter."

Williams, 34, intends to continue fighting for custody of his daughter, Jessica. Williams' father and sister said Wednesday they'll join Williams' battle.

"I plan to find out what I can do to see that she's safe until something can be re-entered into the court system," said Elizabeth Williams, who lives in Atlanta. "I don't want her returned to that environment."

The flight of Williams and Jessica ended at 4:30 p.m. Tuesday. Jessica wept and begged the police and FBI agents not to take her father.

"It's one of the worst things I've done in 17 years," said Old Orchard Beach police Capt. Dana Kelley. "She didn't want to leave her father. She said she loved him and begged us not to take her away from him."

Williams "said he understood we were only doing our job, and he tried to make his daughter understand that we weren't going to hurt anybody," Kelley said.

Williams was arrested on a federal warrant charging him with unlawful flight to avoid prosecution for parental kidnapping. At the request of North Carolina authorities, the federal charge was dismissed in U.S. District Court in Portland, Maine, on Wednesday in favor of North Carolina charges, said Assistant U.S. Attorney Frederick C. Emery in Portland.

The state warrant charges Williams with transporting a child out of state in violation of a custody order. The crime, a Class J felony, carries a presumptive sentence of one year in prison.

In the midst of a three-year court battle with his ex-wife, Williams alleged that Realon had sexually abused Jessica. Realon denies the charge.

State Employees Seek Pay Raise, Deride Educators

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — About 100 state employees met to discuss a salary increase with Gov. Jim Martin, then took jobs at teachers for their protest over raises and at Martin for spending too much time discussing education.

Martin, who had two confrontations with angry teachers and was snubbed when 5,000 teachers came to Raleigh to demand better pay two weeks ago, thanked the state workers for their quiet approach in questioning his pay proposals.

"You don't learn very much when people are screaming at you," Martin said Wednesday. "You learn more in the way you have come."

Despite the lack of protest signs, the state employees said they were serious about their quest for a 6 percent pay raise and for no change in their health-care benefits.

"We have no interest in teaching state employees that they must march on you or the General Assembly to gain appropriate recognition," Kay Wijnberg, president of the State Employees Association of North Carolina, told Martin. "Don't let our quiet approach fool you — we are committed to our salary goals."

She said state workers were "disappointed with your salary proposals," which initially included a 4.5 percent pay raise that would be delayed until April 1990.

"Our colleagues have sent us to ask you for a better offer," Ms. Wijnberg said.

Martin told the workers that state employees should receive the same treatment as teachers when it comes to adjusting their salary scale.

"Anything that's done to unfreeze (salary) steps for teachers should be done for other school employees and state workers," Martin said at the meeting in the House chamber of the old Capitol.

The group later met with Democratic legislative leaders, who said they would try to provide higher raises than Martin has proposed but made no specific promises.

Martin told the workers he will submit a supplemental budget within the next two weeks that will address pay increases for teachers and state workers, but said he was not prepared to discuss specifics.

The pay scale for state workers, like the one for teachers, was frozen in 1982. Since then, all state employees have received cost-of-living raises, but no pay scale increases.

House Panel Backs Higher Wine Tax

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — Rep. Coy Privette's attempt to "put a tax on the Achilles heel of the wine industry" won a House committee's approval, but the panel balked at spending the revenue on a homeless problem he claimed wine helped create.

"The general public realizes that the production and distribution and promotion of fortified wines is primarily directed toward problem drinkers," Privette, R-Cabarrus, said Wednesday.

His bill would increase the tax on table wine from 21 cents per liter to 25 cents while raising the tax on fortified wine from 24 cents to 50 cents. He said it was only fair to attack the product that was contributing so heavily to the homeless population.

"Fortified wines, Thunderbird and what have you, are what a lot of these people live off of," he told the Human Resources Subcommittee on Housing and Social Services.

Rep. Howard Hunter, D-Hertford, said it was unfair to characterize the homeless as drunks and to stigmatize the wine industry for a problem with so many other problems.

But Rep. Paul Stam, R-Wake, said this was one of the few predictors of homelessness than can be taxed.

"You can't tax an abusive mother and you can't tax poor upbringing," he said.

Sneed High, representing the North Carolina Wine Institute, said it was improper to shift the current designation of funds from counties to any special area. He also complained at the public perception that might be created about the industry.

Rep. Sharon Thompson, D-Durham, had told the committee at the outset not to address the tax itself, which will be left to the House Finance Committee. But Hunter offered an amendment to remove all references to using the money for the homeless and the subcommittee voted in 4-3 for the amendment, with Ms. Thompson breaking a tie.

Privette said he hoped to restore the provision in the full Human Resources Committee.

"I would think most of the people on that committee want to do something positive about the homeless," he said. "If they want to really address this plight upon human society, here is a good way to do it."

In other legislative action, the Senate voted 37-11 to tentatively approve a bill to rescind North Carolina's call for a national constitutional convention on a balanced federal budget.

Sen. Bob Martin, D-Pitt, urged passage of the bill, saying most voters have changed their minds since the call was instituted in 1979. Thirty-five states have adopted similar legislation — two short of the number needed to convene the convention.

Supporters of the convention, including Sen. Larry Cobb, R-Mecklenburg, said a constitutional convention would be unlikely to do any harm and might help spur Congress to greater efforts to reduce the federal deficit.

Supporters of the bill on Tuesday had argued that there would be no way to control a convention and that some people were worried an attack might be mounted against legalized abortions.

Group Cites Penal Saving

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

GREENSBORO — North Carolina's community penalties program has saved the state at least $25 million that would have gone into prison construction in the last 6½ years, says a Durham group that advocates community alternatives to incarceration.

"It's working very well," said Dennis Schrantz, a state grants administrator who oversees the program.

The program targets offenders who are likely to be prison-bound, but who have committed non-violent crimes such as larceny, lesser drug crimes, embezzlement and forgery.

The North Carolina Alternative Sentencing Association, which began its three-day annual conference here Wednesday, says the money spent on the program would have been used to build cells for about 850 offenders who instead have gone through the prison alternative program since 1982.

Instead of a prison term, the program combines closely supervised probation or short jail terms with community service and victim restitution — neither of which would be possible if the offender was in the state prison system.

It has been recommended for 960 offenders; judges have accepted it for about 86 percent of those. Of those, 107 have completed the program and another 600 are still in it. There were 111 offenders who failed to meet the program's goals; 42 of them were convicted of a new crime.

"The percent of cases accepted testifies that judges think the program is credible," Schrantz said.

Goetz Parole

NEW YORK (AP) — Subway gunman Bernhard Goetz, who comes up for parole Sunday, should remain jailed for his full one-year term because early release would encourage recidivism, the prosecutor said.

Assistant District Attorney Gregory Waples, in a letter Wednesday to the state parole board chairman, said Goetz had shown no remorse for his Dec. 22, 1984, shooting of four youths on a subway train.

"Conditional release would increase the likelihood of recidivism by signaling to Goetz, if only in some subtle and unintended way, that the law does not truly mean what it says," wrote Waples.

The prosecutor also cited Goetz's "outspoken advocacy of arming citizens with handguns."

One of the four youths remains paralyzed from the incident. Goetz was sentenced Jan. 13 on a weapons conviction.

NASA Plans To Send Probes To Comet, Moon Of Saturn

By Paul Rezer
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — NASA plans to land robot probes on a comet and on a moon of Saturn early next century in new programs that would cost $1.6 billion over the next seven years.

In testimony prepared for a budget hearing before the House committee on science, space and technology, National Aeronautics and Space Administration scientist Lennard A. Fisk said Wednesday that the unmanned spacecraft would allow the United States to maintain world leadership in exploration of the solar system.

Fisk, the associate NASA administrator for space science and applications, said a mission called Comet Rendezvous Asteroid Flyby, or CRAF, would be launched in 1995 and would streak through space for five years before meeting in space with the comet Kopff and dropping a probe to its surface.

He said the probe from the spacecraft would penetrate to the core of the comet and study the chemistry of material that may date from the beginning of the solar system.

A second mission, called Cassini, would be launched in 1996 and arrive in an orbit of the planet Saturn in the year 2002.

Once there, Fisk said, the craft would drop a robot lander to the surface of Titan, one of Saturn's moons, and conduct a chemical analysis.

This study, said the scientist, could provide a fundamental understanding about the origins of life.

"The chemistry that gave rise to life in the past is no longer available for us to study (on Earth)," he said. "However, we believe that a chemistry similar to that on the early Earth ... exists today on Titan."

The two missions, said Fisk, will both study primordial, pristine matter, "the material from which the solar system formed, the material from which life on Earth formed, and the chemistry which gave rise to that life."

Fisk said that the missions will require an appropriation of $30 million in fiscal year 1990, with increases every year that follows for a total of about $1.6 billion by the time the spacecraft are launched.

He said the opportunity to fly the missions may be lost if the money is not approved this year because the planetary alignment will change and make the missions impossible.

Discovery Launch Delayed Two Days

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — The launch of Discovery and its five astronauts has been delayed at least two days until March 11 because of a crushed electrical part on a main engine, officials said.

The delay apparently will resolve a conflict that had been brewing when a classified military launching threatened to bump the shuttle from its March 9 target date.

The National Aeronautics and Space Administration said Wednesday that during a readiness test of Discovery's three main engines, a control mechanism on engine No. 1 shut down prematurely. The problem was traced to a crushed solenoid on a valve, but its cause was not known immediately.

A replacement part was flown here and installed late Wednesday. Officials said the installation and checkout of the new unit will mean a slip of at least two days in the launch.

Shuttle managers scheduled the start of a two-day flight readiness review today. It is to end Friday with the selection of a firm launch date.

During five days in orbit, Discovery's astronauts are to deploy a large communications satellite and conduct scientific experiments.

On Monday, the Air Force informed NASA it had scheduled a critical military launch next week and that it would not be able to support a Discovery liftoff until March 11. The space agency relies heavily on Air Force tracking facilities for a shuttle launch.

The military mission has launch priority for national security reasons, but NASA said before the solenoid problem it was ready to negotiate the launch date with military officials.

The Air Force launch is believed to involve a satellite to test sensors for the Strategic Defense Initiative, the Star Wars missile defense shield. Another mission scheduled soon that also would have priority over the shuttle is the first firing of a Trident 2 intercontinental range missile from a submerged submarine.

Search Continues For Agent's Killer

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — An undercover federal drug agent was shot out of "cold-bloodedness" by a man who probably was unaware he was dealing with a law enforcement officer, authorities said.

The slaying of Special Agent Everette Hatcher on Tuesday was the first killing of a Drug Enforcement Administration officer in the New York area since 1972, said DEA spokesman Robert Strang.

Investigators do not believe Hatcher's cover had been blown, said William Y. Doran, special agent in charge of the FBI's Criminal Division.

"This was not a 'buy and bust' situation. There were no drugs present. There was no money present," Doran said. "The killing was out of cold-bloodedness as far as we can determine."

The DEA, FBI and police issued a nationwide bulletin for the man Hatcher went to meet, Constable "Gus" Farace, 28, of Staten Island.

Drug agency officials said Hatcher, 46, who had been an Army captain in the Vietnam War, chose to go to the meeting at a diner unarmed.

Robber Repents

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — Police said a man who snatched purses from two women tried to give them back because his conscience got the best of him.

But the women had their doubts. So instead, Anthony R. Jackson contacted a bail bondsman, who told the victims their purses could be picked up at the Oklahoma City police station, according to authorities. He surrendered a short time later.

"He did call both victims at their homes offering to give them their property back," police Lt. Charles Owen said Wednesday. "He told them his conscience was hurting him, but they were both skeptical of it."

Jackson, who told police he snatched the purses Monday, was booked Wednesday on two complaints of robbery by force and fear.

Owen said Jackson told police he forged a check belonging to one of the women and was in the process of forging another when he decided not to.

Tower Vows To 'Never Surrender Or Retreat' As Opposition Mounts

By David Espo
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Republicans are promising a vigorous and lengthy Senate debate over John Tower's nomination as defense secretary, even as his chances of confirmation fade under the mounting weight of Democratic opposition.

Tower's GOP allies made their fighting intentions clear late Wednesday while the man at the center of the storm said he has no intention of giving up. "Never surrender or retreat," the former Texas senator said, quoting the commander of the Texas forces at the Alamo.

The full Senate arranged to begin debate shortly after noon today, although no vote was expected until next week at the earliest, and there were fresh Democratic pleadings that Tower withdraw his nomination.

Tower on Wednesday renewed his vow to abstain from drinking if he is confirmed. Asked during a National Press Club appearance if he had ever broken any previous pledges, including wedding vows, the twice-divorced Tower said he had broken marital vows.

"I think I probably am not alone in that connection," he added.

Tower also said he would not return to the defense consulting industry even if his confirmation fails.

Sen. William Cohen, R-Maine, said there would be a "vigorous" debate on the Senate floor, adding that the issue involved is more important than a single nomination.

In a reference to the Senate's majority Democrats, Republican leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., said, "We hope the door is not closed on the other side."

But not a single Democrat has thus far supported Tower, and two Democrats announced their opposition in speeches on the Senate floor.

Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell had been expected to vote no, but the decision of Sen. David Boren of Oklahoma to oppose Tower was a blow to the Republicans.

By day's end Wednesday, an Associated Press survey showed 36 Republicans in favor, 36 Democrats against and the remainder undecided or not answering. Democrats hold a 55-45 majority in the Senate.

Bush met at the White House with additional senators in his effort to win Democrats over to support the nomination. He summarized his appeal this way: "Do what you've got to do, but remember fair play, remember decency and honor and then remember also historically the concept of advice and consent where reasonable doubt is given historically to the president of the United States who after all is responsible for the executive branch of this government."

But if Bush's lobbying was paying dividends, there was no public evidence of it.

Boren is one of the most conservative Democrats in the Senate. He met privately with Bush at the White House on Tuesday and said he looked forward to supporting the Republican president on numerous issues in the future.

But he said the nation needs a defense secretary for whom "there is broad support, a person about whom there is not deep division of opinion or strong debate about his qualifications to hold office."

Boren said he hoped Tower would decide "that it is in the best interests of the country, the best interests of the president ... and in his own best interest to withdraw prior to any vote on this nomination."

Sen. William Armstrong, R-Colo., complained in a speech that information about Tower should be made public, rather than kept hidden in a confidential FBI report. One senior administration official, C. Boyden Gray, traveled to the Capitol during the day to meet with key senators to discuss whether any of the information could be made public.

Some of the specific allegations against Tower have surfaced in news reports. The Washington Post today quoted a retired Air Force sergeant as saying Tower appeared drunk and fondled women on two visits to Bergstrom Air Force Base in Texas, in 1976 and 1978.

Tower fielded questions at the National Press Club about allegations concerning excessive drinking, womanizing and lucrative consulting fees he received from defense contractors.

Taxpayers Getting In Early

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Less than 30 percent of taxpayers have filed their returns halfway into the filing season, but the pace is still ahead of last year's.

The Internal Revenue Service said Wednesday that through Feb. 24, it had received 30.8 million returns, up 2 percent over the comparable period of 1988, when 30.2 million were received.

The number of taxpayers filing the long Form 1040 — most of whom itemize deductions — dropped 4.2 percent, the IRS said. But the number filing the "short" Form 1040A and the one-page 1040EZ rose 7.5 percent and 6.8 percent. This year's figures include 13.1 million long forms, 8.5 million Form 1040A and 9.1 million Form 1040EZ.

The IRS read the figures as suggesting "that many taxpayers who filed Form 1040 in the past may be switching to the simpler, shorter forms."

School Reopens Show Despite Vets' Objection To Display Of U.S. Flag

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHICAGO — An exhibit that appears to invite people to step on the American flag was resuming on a limited basis despite a lawsuit by veterans' groups seeking to prevent the flag's alleged desecration.

After closing a gallery at the School of the Art Institute following protests by veterans, school officials announced Wednesday the student show would reopen with access limited to students, faculty and staff.

The school cited the students' right of free expression in announcing it would reopen the show today. The show was closed Friday.

But Peter Brown, the school's vice president, said it would not be open to the press and public.

"A majority of students intensely dislike the way the flag is displayed, but they take a strong stand on First Amendment rights," Brown said. "They want their rights protected, because someday it may be them."

The move drew an immediate protest from veterans' groups, which filed a lawsuit Wednesday demanding that the Art Institute remove the flag from the floor.

A Cook County circuit judge was expected to rule on the lawsuit today.

"What we're objecting to, of course ... is that it is the American flag and the flag is being disgraced, walked on," said John Mahoney of the American Legion.

"This is totally unacceptable to the veterans' groups," said Joseph A. Morris, general counsel for the Mid-America Legal Foundation, which represents the Veterans of Foreign Wars, Disabled American Veterans and the Military Order of the Purple Heart, among others.

The flag placement "invites people to participate in flag desecration in violation of federal and state statutes," Morris said. "There are some things you can't do using art as an excuse."

The work by student Scott Tyler — titled "What Is the Proper Way to Display a U.S. Flag?" — features a flag spread on the floor in front of a montage. Depicted in the photographs are flag-draped coffins, South Koreans burning the U.S. flag and other scenes. Visitors are invited to comment in a ledger on a shelf in front of the exhibit.

The veterans complain that in doing so, most will step on the flag. Morris said a viewer "would have to be an acrobat or an extremely tall person to write comments ... without trampling on the flag."

But in a statement Wednesday, school officials said: "It is not necessary for the viewer to walk on the flag to write in the book."

"There is sufficient room to stand on either side of the flag for those viewers who choose to write comments in the book."

Tyler has said that although the U.S. flag symbolizes freedom to some people, it represents domination and oppression to others.

It's the second time in a year that an exhibit at the school has stirred controversy. Black aldermen stormed its halls last year to take down a portrait of the late Harold Washington, the city's first black mayor, who was depicted by a student wearing frilly women's underwear.

Adams walks to an interview after hearing court decision

Court Overturns Murder Conviction In Case Involved In 'Thin Blue Line'

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOVELADY, Texas — A man whose capital murder conviction has been overturned after he spent 13 years behind bars says he won't be satisfied until his innocence is proven through a new trial.

"If the case is dropped where does that leave me?" Randall Dale Adams told The Associated Press on Wednesday after a state appeals court overturned his conviction. "It leaves me on the courthouse steps with nothing."

The Texas Court of Criminal Appeals ruled that Adams, whose conviction for the 1976 slaying of a Dallas police officer was questioned in the film "The Thin Blue Line," had been denied a fair trial because witnesses lied and the prosecutor suppressed evidence.

It ordered the 40-year-old Adams transferred from the Eastham Unit state prison to the custody of Dallas County, where he will be entitled to release on bond, said his attorney, Randy Schaffer.

"This is what I've been asking for for 13 years. I'm happy to have a second chance," Adams said.

"I felt from the beginning I would win this case," he added. "It's taken 12 1/2, 13 years. I have never had a doubt this would come."

The case attracted attention last year with the release of Errol Morris' documentary. Morris said from Los Angeles he was "delighted and relieved" and hoped people realized that Adams was not getting off on a technicality.

"Randall Adams is truly an innocent man," Morris said. "And there was a terrible miscarriage of justice 12 years ago."

The Dallas County District Attorney will decide soon whether to pursue a retrial, said assistant prosecutor Norm Kinne.

Although Adams said he does not believe the state will retry him, Schaffer predicted prosecutors will insist on a new trial for political reasons.

"I am certain the state does not have evidence to persuade a jury beyond a reasonable doubt that Adams committed this crime," he said. "Every witness in the case has been totally and completely discredited."

Asked whether he was bitter, Adams said. "I've had 13 years taken from my life. Can the state replace that?"

Adams has worked as a clerk in the prison maintenance office and earned an associate degree in general studies while imprisoned.

"Prison is not the life I would have wanted to live, but it is a life and I think I have used it wisely," he said. "I have a college education and many more job skills than when I came here. I like the person I am today."

In 1979, Adams was within three days of death when his execution was stayed. The next year, his death sentence was commuted to life.

"You do not come three days from execution without changing," Adams said. "I am a different man from the one who was locked up in December 1976. I have grown in my own way ... as much as possible to build my inner life, my family life."

"If I could change anything, I would never have been in Dallas, in Texas."

The appellate judges said prosecutor Doug Mulder suppressed evidence and knowingly allowed perjured testimony during Adams' 1977 trial.

Mulder did not return phone calls for comment.

"It is the fundamental, constitutional purpose of this court to insure that a convicted defendant received a fair trial," wrote Judge M.P. Duncan. "When deceit produces court rulings that have the effect of denying one a fair trial then the conviction should be vacated."

The court said the state knowingly suppressed evidence that witness Emily Miller had failed to identify Adams in a police lineup; that a police officer advised her she didn't identify Adams; and that the officer told her the person she should have identified.

It also said Ms. Miller committed perjury by testifying she had identified Adams in the lineup.

The film suggests that David Harris, who was the chief accuser in the 1977 trial, committed the slaying.

Harris recanted his testimony in the movie and again during a December hearing before state District Judge Larry Baraka. Harris is on Death Row for another slaying.

"We would have won this case without David Harris. But I appreciate the fact that he was willing to talk," Adams said.

"I would like to say I forgive David Harris but that is very hard to do. David Harris has to pay for his crimes," he said.

On Nov. 28, 1976, Adams ran out of gas while driving home from work. Harris, a 16-year-old at the time who had stolen a car, helped Adams get gas and spent part of the day with him.

Officer Robert Wood was fatally shot that night by a motorist he had pulled over on a traffic violation. Harris testified in 1977 that Adams killed Wood. Adams said he and Harris, then 16, parted company long before the shooting.

Adams' mother, Mildred Adams of Columbus, Ohio, was overjoyed at the news of the ruling.

"We had planned on going down to TDC over Easter break to see him," she said. "Now I just don't have the words to express myself. We're just as happy as can be up here."

PTA Opposes Sponsored News Show

NEW YORK (AP) — Leaders of a second major education group have gone on record opposing the idea of beaming commercials into the classroom as part of a televised news program designed for teenagers.

The National Parent-Teacher Association said Wednesday its 22-member executive committee took the position this weekend in response to a venture called Channel One proposed by Whittle Communications LP, a Tennessee-based media concern.

Whittle has proposed giving thousands of high schools about $50,000 worth of television sets and other electronic equipment each to beam to them a daily 12-minute news show that would include up to two minutes of commercials.

The show would be sent by satellite to participating schools, which would be expected to show the program to the entire student body each school day.

The PTA has 6.4 million members in 26,000 local units across the country.

On Monday, leaders of the National Association of Secondary School Principals voted, without specifically mentioning Channel One, to urge schools against participating in ventures in which commercials are inserted into educational programs.

Whittle plans to begin testing its service in six schools starting next week. Its chairman, Christopher Whittle, showed a prototype of the program to PTA leaders last weekend before the vote.

"I'm sorry they feel that way," said William S. Ruker, editor-in-chief of Whittle Communications. "To say the commercials are unacceptable while the program is acceptable is begging the question."

He said educators have said for a decade that a televised news program could benefit students, but have never found a way to pay for it.

Winterville, North Carolina

Mr. Elwood Nobles, Town Clerk
Town of Winterville

Dear Mr. Nobles:

Who were those people? Who were those men, who last Saturday night in the ice and the cold, were out restoring electricity to the town of Winterville? What was the name of the young and kind policeman who, too, while standing in ice and cold, cleared fallen tree limbs from off our TV cable?

As I stood at the window of my dark, cold house on Blount Street and heard big utility trucks rumbling by, with large revolving lights, and saw human beings walking up and down the frozen streets, I thought it all looked good and sounded good. And at 9:30 when the appliances began to hum and the lights to burn, and the electric blanket to heat up, things did indeed look good and sound good. Again, I ask, who were they? I would like to thank them personally.

There are others to thank. Those who hauled away tree limbs as fast as we could pile them by the curb. Of course, there are many others, those "behind the scenes", whom we didn't see or know about. There are, also, those who coordinated all the activities. They all deserve much praise.

Will you read this letter at your next meeting of the Town Board? Will you also make photocopies of it and mail it or hand it to every individual involved -- not their superiors but those who actually did the work. Each one has my sincere gratitude.

I am proud to live in Winterville.

Sincerely yours,
La Rue M. Evans

Fire In Everglades Burns 17,000 Acres

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MIAMI — State foresters who battled a four-day fire that scorched 17,000 acres of the drought-parched Everglades have offered $1,000 for information leading to the arrests of those who sparked the blaze.

The wildfire was finally doused Wednesday afternoon as heavy rains moved into the area, but firefighters planned to fly over the burned area today to check on any new fires, said state Forestry Division duty officer Phil DeAngelis in Fort Lauderdale.

"We don't expect any problems with (the fire restarting), but it was an arson, so you never know what's going to happen," said DeAngelis.

Investigators today still tried to pinpoint the origin of the massive fire, which threatened power lines and forced some road closings because of thick smoke, DeAngelis said.

Another wildfire in southeast Florida burned 4,100 acres of cypress and palmetto trees and engulfed six camp buildings used by hunters in Collier County before a brief shower helped firefighters contain it Wednesday morning, said duty officer Roberta Smith in Fort Myers.

"It seemed like it rained right over the fire," Ms. Smith said. "That helped us out an awful lot."

The two blazes were the largest of more than 50 brush fires the forestry division has fought since Monday with about 400 firefighters, said Charles Maynard, the agency's spokesman in Tallahassee.

"We're probably in better shape than we have been all week," state forestry division spokesman Jim Whitson said Wednesday. "It looks like we've got some moisture coming into the state right now."

The Everglades fire finally stalled at a canal near the Broward-Palm Beach county line after firefighters set backfires with incendiary bombs dropped from a helicopter.

Rural Wreck

A Robersonville man was injured Wednesday afternoon when his car collided with a truck on rural road 1708 near Greenville. According to Trooper John Tomer, a car driven by Ervin Landon Spain and a truck driven by Billy Ray Rouse of Greenville collided, injuring Spain. Members of the Winterville fire and rescue departments responded to the call.

Mrs. Whitley denied allegations made last week by other witnesses who said that Glidewell "sensuously" had massaged Mrs. Whitley's back and once caused her to break into tears because Glidewell "would not keep his hands off" her.

"No, Mr. Glidewell has never made me cry," Mrs. Whitley said.

Frieda Donahue, who supervised the tellers while Mrs. Haughn worked at the bank, testified that no tellers, including Mrs. Haughn, reported that Glidewell harassed them.

Glidewell was transferred to a Kinston branch after Mrs. Haughn filed her complaints.

materials he had were to be taken to a proper disposal facility," he said.

The enforcement power of state agencies is currently in limbo, Reid said, while the state Supreme Court decides whether the agencies can legally levy fines against people or businesses that violate regulations.

Also in December, Wake County deputies discovered that Gray's funeral home had left six cadavers in a van overnight instead of moving them inside, and Gray faces a hearing on the matter March 14 before the Board of Mortuary Science. Corrine J. Culbreth, executive secretary of the board, said the agency could vote to suspend Gray's license following the hearing.

Efforts by The Daily Reflector to contact Gray have been unsuccessful.

Chief Deputy Brooks Oakley said he and an investigator spoke with Gray by telephone Monday, and Gray said he is storing the material there until he constructs an incinerator on the site to burn the waste. Gray said the practice is legal, Oakley said.

Eric Teel, who said he was an employee at Gray's funeral home in Raleigh, denied Tuesday that Gray owned the land or had ever spoken to authorities.

But, county tax records indicate that the packhouse where the waste is stored sits about 100 feet from the road on a 46-acre parcel of land owned by Gray Farms Inc., a business incorporated by Gray in August of 1980.

Tax records state that the land is suitable for farming peanuts, tobacco, and agricultural and forestry uses. It lists the buildings on the site, but it does not state that any building is being used to store medical waste. Pitt tax officials said Gray would not have had to explain that the waste was there. The 1989 tax value of the land is $69,480.

The Articles of Incorporation for Gray Farms, Inc., state that the corporation was formed to engage in any farm operations, livestock, timber and other farm products, and any legal business in the state, according to information from the county's Register of Deeds office.

Gray was named the only member of the corporation's board of directors, the documents state.

Gray Farms Inc., also owns an adjoining 106-acre parcel of land with a 1989 tax value of $48,000. Nearly all of that land is covered with trees and records indicate there are no buildings on the site.

Accountant Says Funds Shifted By Worthington

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — The general manager of a tobacco warehouse in Wilson used a "kited note" system to keep a convenience store and a nightclub, in business, a Greenville accountant testified.

Accountant Dick Clark, who had done accounting and tax work for the businesses, testified Wednesday that J.T. "Tommy" Worthington Jr. of Greenville would borrow from the warehouse to cover losses in the businesses and repay the warehouse by borrowing from other sources.

"He was borrowing from Peter to pay Paul?" asked the prosecutor, Assistant U.S. Attorney Kieran Shanahan.

"Exactly," Clark replied.

Worthington and his father, a partner in the Liberty Warehouse, are on trial in U.S. District Court on charges of arson, conspiracy and fraud in connection with the October 1986 fire. They are accused of arranging the blaze to collect insurance to cover the cash advances, which Worthington allegedly had poured into failing businesses.

Clark said he had urged Tommy Worthington to sell the store, called the Pirate's Chest, and the nightclub, Carolina Opry House, because of the financial drain. Both businesses were in Greenville. He had suggested that Worthington had a choice of selling the nightclub or "burning it down to collect the insurance," Clark said. But he said, that he had told him a fire was not an option because it would be illegal.

Tommy Worthington had replied, "And also I don't want the stigma of it being burned," the accountant said.

Permitted by Judge Terrence Boyle to testify as a defense witness, Clark said that the elder Worthington would have had only minimal financial benefit from the fire if an insurance association had paid $600,000 for the building. The association has refused to pay the amount because of the arson charge.

Under questioning by defense attorney Trawick Stubbs of New Bern, the accountant said that J.T. Worthington would have made less than $2,000, considering the costs of reopening the business in another warehouse.

Shanahan attacked the conclusion, saying Clark had taken the elder Worthington's claims of tobacco losses at face value. He is accused of inflating the amount of tobacco lost in the fire.

The prosecutor said Clark also had not considered that the elder Worthington had expected a $1 million insurance payment for the loss of the building.

Later, an accountant testified that Tommy Worthington obtained $1.76 million in cash advances from the warehouse during six years and owed about $550,000 when fire destroyed it.

The accountant, Phillip Holder of Hartsville, Tenn., said another warehouse partner, Robert Oldham, also from Hartsville, had hired him to find out after the fire how much the younger Worthington had borrowed. The government says that Oldham did not know until after the fire that the younger Worthington was taking the money.

Holder said the manager had borrowed the largest sums in the later years.

Michigan Works To Stop Capitol Decay

By Charles Hillinger
LAT WP NEWS SERVICE

LANSING, Mich. — Michigan Lt. Gov. Martha W. Griffiths, 77, affectionately known as "Aunt Martha," is fond of telling the story about how she might have become part of history recently had she been using the facility in her restroom.

A huge chunk of the Capitol ceiling fell, striking and damaging the commode in the lieutenant governor's office. Luckily, no one was there at the time.

Falling sections of ceiling in Michigan's 110-year-old Capitol are not that unusual.

"The Capitol is decaying and falling apart before our eyes," says Senate Press Secretary Deborah Townsend. "Not only is the ceiling raining down but chunks of limestone from the exterior of the building are as well."

"Last week I was walking on the sidewalk when a piece of limestone from the Capitol fell, barely missing me. So far no one has been hurt by the building, as far as I know. But somebody could easily get beamed by it."

In a leaflet issued by the Friends of the Capitol, an organization dedicated to the restoration of the Michigan State Capitol, it says:

"Even the casual observer notes that architectural erosion is everywhere. Much has been destroyed, much has simply been covered up in this great Michigan treasure.

"In an effort to gain more space in the 1960s an entirely new floor was constructed nine feet above the original floor and the half floors were then sectioned off with movable metal partitions. State workers call these extra floors 'pigeon coops.'"

From the outside the new floor cuts across the center of each original tall window. A special blight is the sight of support columns, structural necessities, that poke up through the new "over-floor" and reach all the way to the old ceiling. The original ceiling, adorned with 19th century fresco artwork, is now obscured by a false drop ceiling of acoustical tile.

Clarence "C.J." Echterling, 70, silver-haired, with an ample silver mustache, the oldest uniformed officer in the Michigan state police, has been a Capitol guard for 18 years. He knows the building as well, if not better, than anyone working in it.

It was late one night and the neoclassic Michigan State Capitol was empty of people except for the cleanup crew and Capitol guards when Echterling took this writer on a tour of the building.

"I enjoy all capitols. The thing about a capitol as I look at it is that it is the hub of a state or a nation. You can find out a lot more about a

Los Angeles Times/Charles Hillinger

Echterling relaxes in the legislative chamber, part of a 110-year-old building that's literally falling to pieces state or a country in its capitol than any other place. All capitols are loaded with history," insists the guard as he points out special features of Michigan's statehouse.

What about this capitol compared with others you have seen?

"I love this one best of all, yet, it looks worse than all the rest," he says. It hasn't been properly cared for. It has been abused for years. They've made a mess out of it. It's a hodgepodge.

"Just look at the dirt-encrusted dome. It probably hasn't been cleaned in 50 years. And those windows painted light green. Ugh! This place looks more like an antique than any of them."

He walked by portraits of past governors on the second floor, commenting on accomplishments during their terms, remarking at one portrait: "He didn't do anything for the state whatsoever."

On the fourth floor the guard had a surprise — the beginning of the restoration of Michigan's 1879 Capitol: the walls and ceilings returned to their original ornate splendor and the refurbishing of committee rooms last year for $1 million.

There had been talk of tearing down the Capitol and erecting a new one. But the people of Michigan like this building. Architecturally it is historically significant, and it is the first capitol designed by Elijah Myers.

Paris Firemen Bottlers Of Tradition (And Wine)

LAT WP NEWS SERVICE

PARIS — At the foot of Montmartre, between the Opera and the Moulin Rouge, is a firehouse where a rich tradition lives on. Six grape vines are trained up the great black gate and around the garages housing the Seventh Company's bright red firetrucks, producing a vintage known more for its whimsical origins than its bouquet.

"We say, above all, don't drink it," warned Capt. Joel Le Guennec of the Rue Blanche firehouse, master of Chateau Blanche.

The vines were planted in 1934, reminders of a time when Montmartre, along with such other Parisian neighborhoods as Belleville, Montreuil and Suresnes, supplied the wine for Paris.

According to a study called "The Origins of Montmartre" by Andre Maillard, 250,000 to 300,000 people lived in Paris 500 years ago. Each day, they consumed 214,000 gallons of wine at some 4,000 bars.

"It was probably not much better than what we make," said Lt. Max Simian, "but they didn't have much of a choice."

With meticulous care the firemen snip the vines and feed the soil. Each spring the vines blossom in wide green leaves and set bunches of purple grapes.

Though the vines were planted in the 1930s, only in the past 10 years have the firemen begun harvesting the grapes, pressing the fruit, fermenting the juice, and putting it in bottles that are normally associated with the wines of Bordeaux.

Each year, the harvest is dedicated to a different region of France. In 1986 it was Alsace, in 1987 it was Franche Comte (between Burgundy and Switzerland), and last year, it was the area around Nantes.

Like the rest of Montmartre, the Seventh Company makes a celebration of harvesting the grapes in October. The Opera lends the station house costumes of rural peasants from long ago. Anatole, the 72-year-old garde-champetre — or rural policeman, another honorific throwback — always shows up in full Napoleonic regalia for a grand dinner reflecting the cuisine from the region of the year.

The bottles cannot be sold and are given to honor friends of the Seventh Company and its retiring firemen. In a meager year, the six vines produce 20 to 25 bottles of pinot noir. The record, 46 bottles, was produced in 1987.

"It's a real privilege to receive a bottle like this," said Capt. Le Guennec, chief of the Seventh Company.

They may be a pleasure to receive, but Le Guennec cautions the recipients so honored not to open their bottles, on penalty of instant punishment to the palate.

"People say — but they are storytellers — that the essential quality of our little wine is neither its bouquet nor its color, but rather its virtues as a laxative and a diuretic," Le Guennec told the 1987 recipients.

"It's more a tradition than a great wine," the captain confided.

He Traded Concert Hall For Dining Hall

By George W. Hackett
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOUISVILLE, Ky. — When the governor of Kentucky invited him to play at a private reception, Kurt Siegert had to decline because his contract wouldn't permit it.

"I get lots of requests like that," says Siegert, whose 1760 violin has taken him to concert halls across Europe and the United States. "I've performed alongside some of the most famous names in the musical world."

He still recalls road trips with the Berlin Symphony, the Boston Pops and Arthur Fiedler, and with Mantovani. "Those were wonderful, exhaustive times and I miss them. But if you're given a chance to settle down, you seize it."

Siegert's opportunity came in May 1963 when he received a telephone call from the management of Executive Inn, then preparing to open a hotel in Louisville. He was offered a six-week contract to entertain patrons in the dining room.

"They must have liked what they heard because, after 25 years, I'm still here."

He plays six nights a week with the six other members of the Singing Strings.

"We have three violinists, including my wife Barbara, and recently added a guitar to obtain a different kind of sound. You have to go with the trend...."

The Siegerts met and married while she was a member of the Norfolk, Va., Symphony. Both have roots in Berlin, where Barbara's mother was a noted opera singer.

"Siegert was born there in 1923 and reared in a family of 'fiddle players. My father, grandfather and uncle did pretty well on it, but I was the only one who turned professional. It was difficult to study and acquire an education during World War II, but I managed somehow." He played with the Berlin Symphony until immigrating to this country in 1948.

Siegert says that in working with Fiedler, he found him to be "a marvelous conductor and a taskmaster who could chill you with one glance. He was, however, always willing to help any musician with his career."

Siegert says he was hired as assistant concertmaster for Mantovani's tour of America "only because Mr. Fiedler had good things to say about me."

There are adjustments to be made when musicians give up the quiet of the concert hall for the clatter of a hotel dining hall.

Making Choices

Variety Society Exacts Its Toll On Consumers

By Beth Ann Krier
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

LOS ANGELES — Visited your local Cereal Aisle From Hell lately? Shopping for an exercise in confusion, like, say, trying to find the right oat bran?

After you've picked your way through such oat cereals as Fruity Yummy Mummy and the Real Ghost Busters, you're likely to discover more than 40 additional selections at some stores ... with more on the way.

You say you're getting a headache from just thinking about cereal choices? The health-aids aisle could conceivably make things worse. Even if you've figured out the differences between aspirin, acetaminophen and ibuprofen (and you know whether you want regular or extra strength formulas — with or without sinus, arthritis or antacid medication thrown in), you then face the capsules, tablets or caplets decision.

Think it might be easier to see a shrink? Who you gonna call? A Freudian, Jungian, Reichian or Skinnerian? A psychiatrist, psychologist, minister or peer counselor? And what about primal therapy, Roling, bioenergetics or just joining one of thousands of anonymous groups?

The list is endless. So, increasingly, are the lists of lists. As anyone who's tried to choose a dependable paper towel or a long-distance telephone company can tell you, products and services have become diversified as never before.

Not even the classics are safe: Spam now comes in four different varieties, including Spam Lite.

Indeed, the phenomenon of choice has spread so far and wide that it affects virtually everything but highly regulated public utilities such as gas and electrical services. But while freedom of choice is generally viewed as a sign of health in a thriving, democratic, capitalistic society, some observers are now beginning to ask if we've gone too far.

They're asking if one person's diversity isn't another's overchoice. They're starting to look at the obvious and hidden costs of living in a 57-varieties society.

In the experience of Rex Beaber, a Los Angeles clinical psychologist and attorney, the time needed to make such consumer decisions can unwittingly add up to a significant portion of one's life.

"As your number of choices ... increases, so the time you spend making choices increases," he said. "Unless people are willing to engage in what I call default choice — to simply do what they did the last time — people have to invest a certain amount of time in making psychic choices they wouldn't otherwise spend."

Even consumers who revel in a wide spectrum of choices say they've had to develop defensive behaviors, such as super alertness, in order to return home with what they want.

"I like Cheetos Crunchy," said Kathy Sjoren, an art director at Della Femina, McNamee WCRS. "Now two other manufacturers have made the same thing and they both have the same kind of package. If you're not alert, you're going to come home with the wrong brand."

Shopper before wall of coffee choices faces typical dilemma

Some shoppers, who claim not to mind such diversions but are married to spouses confused by them, resort to doing all the marketing themselves.

"My husband is overwhelmed by all this. I send him out for one thing and he comes home flustered — and without what I sent him for. If it's butter, he says to me, 'You didn't say if you wanted it salted or unsalted, in tubs or in sticks, whipped or in a squeeze bottle.' I can't even send him out for apples — there are too many kinds," said Ruth Smith, a Los Angeles businesswoman.

"So I do nearly all our shopping. I love all the variety. I stand there and read everything. I go into Ralphs just for milk. Two hours and $200 later, I come home feeling fulfilled. ... For relaxation, I read catalogs."

Executives at Consumer Reports magazine say many readers are suffering from choice burnout.

"... We hear over and over again that people have trouble making choices," said David Pittle, the technical director of Consumers Union, which publishes the magazine.

"Technology, in many cases, has gotten way ahead of the consumer. In the case of VCRs, there are probably in the neighborhood of 450 or 500 VCRs that claim to be available in the marketplace. Televisions are the same way. CD players are getting to be."

Partly as a result of rampant product and service proliferation, Consumer Reports' circulation is currently at a record high, Pittle added. He expects no slowing in either readers or the avalanche of new products and services, so long as consumers "keep trying everything."

Said Pittle: "The way things are done in this country is that people put out everything you can imagine because they can't tell in advance what the consumer really wants. It's somebody else's worry whether that's good for society."

For Sale: One Country

Nowhere in the world will you find people with the same creative work ethic as Americans.

At the age of 4, one of my sons was going through the neighborhood dragging a little red wagon with our canceled checks in it. He was selling them for a penny a package.

In the years that followed, all three of our kids went from selling watered-down lemonade to baby-sitting to delivering newspapers. As teen-agers, they were paid an allowance to breathe and to put gas in our own car, which they had driven to "E" in the first place.

I personally taught them how to drop money each week into a ceramic pig on their nightstand. They taught me how to get the money out of the ceramic pig by inserting a kitchen knife in the slot and sliding the coins out to pay the paperboy. The message was set: You are never too young or too rich to make a few bucks if you use your imagination.

We may have overdone it.

Everything in this country is for sale. (What am I saying? The country is for sale.) You can rent out your bull for a stud fee. You can sell your seat at the Super Bowl and take an early retirement. You can pay someone to send your daughter cookies at college or write her a letter on her birthday. There's a man in Syracuse who will scoop dog droppings from your yard for $5 a week. If you have a need for $21,000, you could sell Napoleon I's toothbrush. A farmer in Oklahoma has offered the Soviet Union $1 million worth of wheat in exchange for a seat on a Soviet space flight. The name of the game is supply and demand.

At Wits End

I didn't realize how far we had drifted until I read about a letter that appeared on the pages of The New York Times. A guy was standing in a line at the fish counter holding number 997. Number 793 was being served. As he stood there, a guy in a black leather jacket approached him and asked him what number he had. "For 10 bucks, I'll give you 873," he said. When the writer refused, he said, "How about 25 bucks for 840?"

"You're scalping tickets at the fish counter?" the shopper asked in shock.

"Hey pal," said Mr. Black Leather Jacket, "time is money."

The story brought to mind a crusty old editor I used to work for in my early reporting days in Ohio. He stormed into the women's department one day and demanded to know why I had used a trade name for a soft drink in a story I had written. The tirade lasted an eternity. As the entire newsroom strained to listen, he ended by shouting, "Don't give it away when you can sell it."

I didn't realize so many people heard him.

Loving America Means Loving Our Right To Criticize Wrongs

Dear Abby: May I reply to "M.S. Seipal, D.D.S.," whose letter you published accompanied by an article titled "The Dumbest Person in the World."

I am sick of hearing that I should go somewhere else if I don't like it here. This is my country, too, and I love it just as much as you do. Possibly more, because I'm not afraid to criticize it when it is wrong. It takes courage to face the truth and try to correct things. Nothing was ever accomplished by waving the flag and saying, "We're better than the trash next door, so shut up!" Being better than the worst is nothing to be proud of.

To take issue with a few things we Americans have to be "proud" of:

Almost unlimited natural resources: Not anymore — thanks to the unbridled greed of industry.

A ballot box nobody can stuff: Really? Ask Nixon about 1960 in Chicago.

A judicial system that is the envy of the rest of the world: Our judicial system is not the envy of the world. Plea bargaining, which allows sleazy criminals to get off with a slap on the wrist, is unique here. So is getting off on a technicality. In England, if the arresting officer errs, he is reprimanded and suspended, but his mistake does not allow the accused to go free. Sentencing disparities are a disgrace — six years for beating a baby to death, but 10 years for striking a police officer. We have country club accommodations for political prisoners, and capricious parole for perpetrators of some of the most heinous crimes imaginable. What country would envy that?

Food so plentiful that overeating is a major problem? Tell that to the below-poverty-level citizenry.

One hundred million jobs, when too many of them are engaged in an overabundance of offensive weapons production, is nothing to brag about.

We have lost our prestige in the world because too many wrongs have been allowed to flourish for too long, and it's our own fault.

Pollyanna never solved any problems. She just smiled and said, "Isn't everything wonderful?" — Diane Stacom, Huntington Station, N.Y.

Dear Diane: Ouch! The truth hurts, but it's worth examining. Thanks for a good letter.

Dear Abby: What do you say when someone walks up to you and says, "I'll bet you don't remember me, do you?" — On The Spot

Dear On: I say, "You win! Won't you please refresh my memory?"

residents have spoken against. "I have apparently pushed some people's panic button on this issue," Clark said.

The developer also indicated in the interview that he is willing to drop the rezoning request on the tract located on the east side of Oxford Road.

Meanwhile, members of the City Council commented on Wednesday's meeting.

"This is a fairly emotional issue with these people obviously, and I think the fact that this many people would turn out on a cold day like this is significant," said Nancy Jenkins, the council representative to the voting district which includes Brook Valley.

Mildred Council said she thought the bus tour was a valuable experience.

"I was glad to get to hear both sides of the issue in reference to the Brook Valley situation," she said.

Mayor Pro-Tem Lorraine Shinn said she believes the council will likely be prepared to make a decision on the developer's request at the next City Council meeting on March 9.

"They might be reluctant, but I think (the council) will have made some kind of decision as to what they are going to do," she said. "I think it's going to be a tight situation because of the political ramifications but I think they'll vote — I don't see how they could avoid voting on it."

Carlucci. For the past two years, released versions of such reports have contained personal opinions by the authors as well as reports on incidents that included perceptions but no factual evidence.

The deliberative process exception to the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), which was used to delete several of the comments in the report, is one of the broadest exemptions in the law, according to legal experts. It most frequently is directed at documents that discuss recommendations leading to policy changes within an agency, legal experts said.

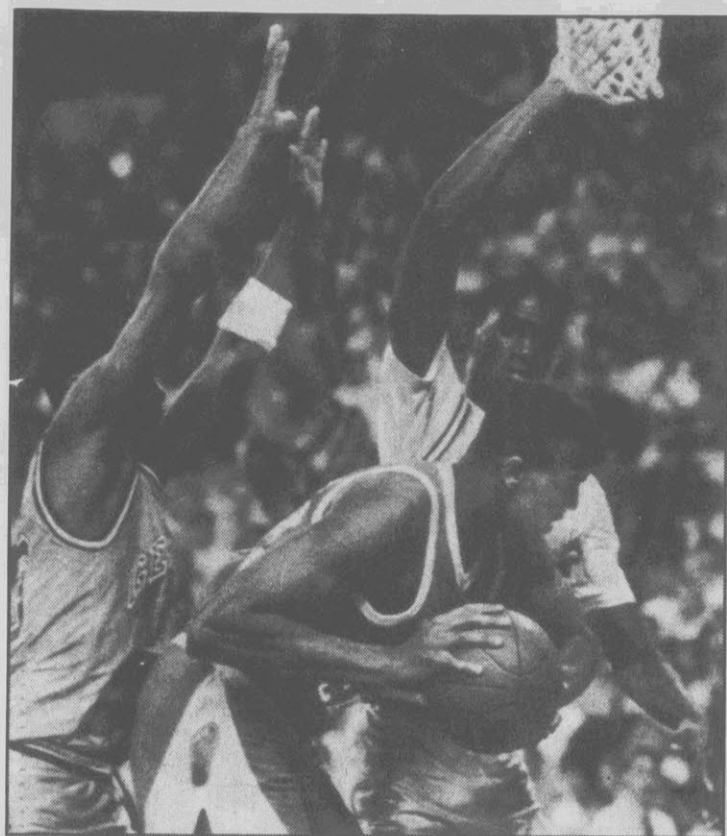

Defense Department spokesman William Caldwell said he authorized the release of the edited document Feb. 17 after the security advisers' initial review in an effort to expedite efforts to provide the report to the news media. He said that if public affairs officials had rejected the security reviewers' recommendations, the report would have been held up in the Pentagon several more days before it would have been released.

"We would never be able to go through the FOIA process in one day," said Caldwell. "It would have been 7 to 10 days. ... I was anxious to get it (the report) out."

Caldwell said reporters have the option of requesting further review of the censored items when the report is released.

UNC, Duke Suffer Upset Losses

UNC's Scott Williams looks for room underneath the basket

Scott's 3 Pointer Sinks Heels; Campbell's 18 Points Key Tigers' Upset

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ATLANTA — Coach Bobby Cremins thought the North Carolina hex was on his Georgia Tech Yellow Jackets again.

"We had a four-point lead and just gave the ball away out of bounds," Cremins said. "We seemed to lose it. It looked like the Carolina syndrome was just taking over."

It may have, had it not been for Dennis Scott.

Scott swiped an in-bounds pass with five seconds remaining, turned around in the left corner and hit his seventh 3-point shot with two seconds to play, giving Georgia Tech a 76-74 Atlantic Coast Conference victory over the fifth-ranked Tar Heels Wednesday night.

"Dennis made a great steal, a clean steal, an absolutely clean steal, got the ball and made an incredible shot," Cremins said. "It's wild. It's absolutely totally wild."

It was only Georgia Tech's sixth victory in 38 meetings with the Tar Heels and snapped a seven-game losing streak in the series. It came in Georgia Tech's final home game of the year, following an emotional pregame ceremony in which the school retired Tom Hammonds' jersey No. 20.

The victory wasn't secured until Rick Fox's 22-foot shot bounced off the rim at the buzzer, denying North Carolina's quest to wrap up its 11th regular season ACC title in the last 14 years.

"This might have been the biggest shot of my whole life," Scott said. "The DePaul shot (a game-winner last season) was big, but this was UNC, the conference and the seniors' last home game."

"I knew I had enough time left and I didn't want to rush it," he said. "It would have killed me if I had missed an easy shot for the seniors."

Scott finished with 28 points and Hammonds, the third leading scorer in Georgia Tech history with 2,030, added 19 as the Yellow Jackets, 20-9 overall and 8-5 in the conference, posted their third victory in a row.

J. R. Reid scored 20 points and Scott Williams 17 for the Tar Heels, who fell to 24-6 and 9-4 after having a six-game winning streak end.

"We played about as well as we're capable in the second half in this kind of environment," North Carolina coach Dean Smith said. "I was so proud of the players that they came back from six or seven down in Hammonds' last home game. We wanted to get a tie for the regular season championship tonight."

Georgia Tech trailed 74-71 after North Carolina's Steve Bucknall hit two free throws with seven seconds to play. Georgia Tech's Karl Brown cut the lead to 74-73 with a pair of free throws with five seconds remaining.

Scott then slapped Kevin Madden's in-bounds pass out of Williams' grasp and hit the game-winner.

The game drew a record crowd of 9,323 into Alexander Memorial Coliseum, breaking the previous mark of 9,206 set earlier this season against Duke.

Georgia Tech normally has played North Carolina at The Omni, a 16,000-seat downtown arena, but decided to go for the home floor advantage, and it paid off.

"It was absolutely, totally incredible," Cremins said.

Clemson.....79
CLEMSON, S.C. (AP) — Tim Kincaid didn't like the view he had the last time Clemson played Duke.

Kincaid was among six players on the bench in street clothes Jan. 29 after being suspended for one game for violating team study hall rules. The result was predictable: Duke 92, Clemson 62.

It was a different story Wednesday night as Kincaid and the five other Tigers were much in evidence in sparking Clemson to a 79-74 victory over No. 9 Duke in Atlantic Coast Conference action.

"In the first game, a lot of the guys didn't get to play," Kincaid said. "We felt we let the guys down. We had to watch from the bench as the team was struggling."

"We felt like we owed the guys something ... There was some talk about it before the game. It was in our minds ... A lot of the fellows really wanted to prove we could make a difference against a team like Duke."

Even with that, however, the Tigers were barely able to beat Duke. Clemson had to rally after

Rampants Roll, Top Northeastern

By Woody Peele
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Rose High School vaulted past Northeastern of Elizabeth City Wednesday night, 70-58, to gain a berth in the finals of the Big East Conference basketball tournament.

The Rampants finally broke open a tight game in the second period of the game and burst out to a 10-point lead, then shot the eyes out of the basket in the second half.

Rose missed only five shots from the floor in the second half of the game, connecting on 15 of 20 — a blistering 75 percent. At the same time, the Rampants were holding the Eagles to a mere 13 of 36, 36.1 percent.

For the game, the Rampants hit on 63 percent of their shots, while Northeastern made 36.8 percent.

"I thought we played real well tonight," Coach Jim Brewington said. "We took good shots, we played good defense."

"I thought Carlester (Crumpler) and Paul (Powers) played well for us inside and (Johnny) Ebron had an outstanding game. (James) Teel played one of his better games and cut down on his turnovers."

Brewington said Rose wanted to get a good win over the Eagles to prove a point. "They felt that they got shafted here and we wanted to be sure that we beat them good. We played with a lot of intensity. If we keep this up, there's no telling what we can do."

Rose got the initial lead on two free throws by Crumpler, but Melvin Brooks tossed in a three-pointer for a 3-2 Eagle lead. The two swapped the lead back and forth throughout much of the remainder of the period. Northeastern led by as much as three, 7-4, while Rose never held more than a two-point lead.

Rose held the lead at the end of the period on two straight baskets by Ebron, who led Rose with 16 points, in the final minute of play, 16-14.

All told, there were eight lead changes in the period.

But there were none the rest of the way. Northeastern tied it up at 16 on the first basket of the second quarter, but a basket by Maurice Hines, followed by a turnaround jumper by Powers, gave Rose a 20-16 lead.

After two free throws by the Eagles, Rose ran off eight straight points, each of the four baskets by a different Rampant, to make it 28-18 with 3:53 left in the half. The Eagles managed to clip one point off that the rest of the period and trailed, 32-23, at intermission.

Baskets by Ebron and Powers opened a 13-point margin to start the Vikings Roll Past Mariners To 78-60 Win

By Tim Chandler
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

HAVELOCK — The old saying that a good defense is your best offense definitely applied to D.H. Conley Wednesday.

The Vikings used a tough zone defense to slow down East Carteret's running attack and then rolled to a 78-60 win in the semifinals of the Coastal Conference Basketball Tournament.

"We just had a terrible time tonight trying to attack that zone,"

East Carteret coach Cecil Lilly said. "Conley has got as good of a defensive team as I've seen all year."

The win lifted top-seeded Conley to 19-4 for the year and into the finals on Friday to face the winner of the game between second-seeded Washington and third-seeded Havelock tonight. East Carteret, who will advance to play in the sectionals, is now 11-10 for the season.

To go along with the stingy defense, the Vikings came out of the blocks sizzling offensively in the opening quarter, racing to a 22-12 lead in the first eight minutes.

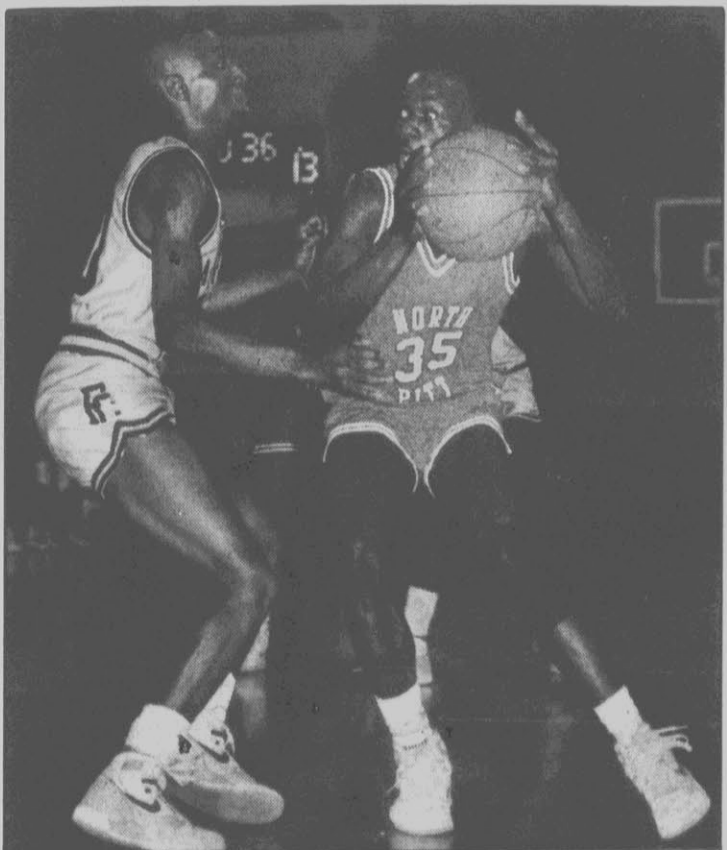

"Offensively, I thought we were real patient and made them play defense," Conley coach Cobby Deans said. "We were effective because people like Paul Merritt were helping set up nice shots with assists."

The Vikings placed a trio of players in double figures in the win led by Terry Williams' 23 points. Bershaun Thompson added 19 and Paul Merritt 18.

North Pitt's William Morning (35) gets set for a move

Farmville Holds Off Panthers, 63-56

By Tom Morris

BETHEL — North Pitt shut down Farmville's Jarvis Lang, but teammates Reggie Barrett and William Carr more than made up the slack.

Barrett scored 19 points and Carr added 17 as top-seeded Farmville held off a late rally to defeat North Pitt, 63-56, in the semifinals of the Eastern Plains 2-A Conference Basketball Tournament Wednesday.

Lang, Farmville's 6-5 junior center and leading scorer, was held to nine points and fouled out with over three minutes remaining, but the Jaguars were able to hold on to the lead to take the win.

"We felt as though we had to do that," Carr said. "We just can't let Jarvis key our offense. Tonight, they were leaving me and Reggie open so we had to hit our shots."

Their scoring was a must, according to Farmville coach Mike Terrell.

"That's what they've got to do," he said. "I felt all year, we had a balanced team. Every team is going to try and take Jarvis out of the ball game."

North Pitt's Clayton Cherry and Malcolm Wiggins spent most of the night shadowing Lang's every move and he rarely received the ball in scoring position, but that concentration left operating room for the Jaguar forwards.

"Carr got six points versus us the first time and zero the second time," North Pitt coach Gregg Ashorn said. "I told Randy (House) to lay off and he forgot about him a few times."

The Jaguars led by 10 with 1:18 remaining and seemed to have the game in hand, but Roosevelt Hines

North Pitt's Pressure Keys Victory

By Tom Morris

BETHEL — Each time it got close, North Pitt went to its old standby of full-court pressure defense and that was enough to dispatch Ayden-Grifton.

The Pant-Hers used their quickness as an advantage on defense and also got 34 points from Keisha Pilgreen on offense to ease past the Lady Chargers, 58-44, in semifinal action from the Eastern Plains 2-A Conference girls basketball tournament Wednesday night.

"When we put the press on, it takes other teams out of their offense," North Pitt coach Mabel Perry said. "It gets our girls motivated."

North Pitt opened the game with the press on and forced four straight turnovers to move out to a quick 8-0 lead as Gwen Pilgreen had two of the team's four baskets.

By the time Ayden-Grifton adjusted, the Pant-Hers were up 16-2 with just over two minutes remaining in the opening quarter.

But in order to keep from tiring out too early, Perry called off the press and midway through the second quarter, Ayden-Grifton began to rally.

Iris Brown scored five of her team's first 10 points of the second period to pull the Lady Chargers as close as 23-17 with 2:47 left until halftime.

E.B. Aycock Junior High School captured the Tar East Nine Junior High School basketball tournament championship Wednesday, defeating Bertie 59-43. Aycock was led by Dwight Sheppard with 22 points while Adrian Bond paced Bertie with 19. Aycock finishes the season with a 13-1 record.

Abdelnaby Suspended For Poor Grades

CLEMSON, S.C. (AP) — Duke junior center Alaa Abdelnaby has been suspended from the team for academic reasons and will miss the Blue Devils' final two regular-season games, Coach Mike Krzyzewski said Wednesday. "Alaa has met all standards according to league rules regarding eligibility, but he has failed to maintain the level that we at Duke University have set for our team," Krzyzewski said in a news release. Krzyzewski did not elaborate. Krzyzewski announced the suspension about an hour before the ninth-ranked Blue Devils faced Atlantic Coast Conference foe Clemson at Littlejohn Coliseum. The 6-foot-10, 240-pound Abdelnaby didn't travel with the Blue Devils to Clemson, but Krzyzewski said Abdelnaby would continue to practice with the team. Abdelnaby will also not play Sunday against North Carolina. Abdelnaby's status will be re-evaluated in a week, when his standing with the team will be determined, Krzyzewski said. Abdelnaby, of Bloomfield, N.J., has played in all but one of Duke's 26 games, starting 19. Abdelnaby, who missed one game this year with an ankle injury, is averaging 9.7 points and 3.9 rebounds a game.

Bonecrusher To Be Lighter For Next Bout

LILLINGTON, N.C. (AP) — Heavyweight boxer James "Bonecrusher" Smith says he plans to be almost 30 pounds lighter than in his last bout when he meets Razor Ruddock on April 1. Smith told The News and Observer of Raleigh the bout would be held at Caesar's at Lake Tahoe, Nev. The fight will be televised live by CBS at 4 p.m., a network spokesman confirmed Wednesday. Smith, a former World Boxing Association heavyweight champion, weighed 262 pounds for a third-round technical draw with Mike Rouse in August 1988. "I weigh around 240 now," Smith said. "We want to come in this fight around 235." A Shaw University graduate and former Army sergeant, Smith is working out near his home in western Harnett County with former middleweight champ Emile Griffith as his trainer. The bout with Ruddock, a Canadian ranked fourth in the division, is scheduled for 10 rounds, but Smith plans to end it earlier. "My attitude for the remaining time I have in boxing is to not let my opponent get past the first round," he said. "It's a matter of training so I can throw a lot of punches — a lot of hard shots. I punch with a lot of power anyway." Former champ Mike Weaver is a common foe for Smith and Ruddock. Weaver was knocked out by Smith in the first round and lost a decision to Ruddock in Fayetteville. Smith, 35, has a 19-7-1 record with 14 knockouts.

Hodge Leads All-Sun Belt Selections

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — South Alabama's Jeff Hodge was named the Sun Belt Conference player of the year and heads the all-conference team, league officials announced Wednesday. Hodge, a 6-foot-2 senior guard, was a member of the all-conference team last year as was North Carolina-Charlotte guard Byron Dinkins, who was also named to this year's first team. Dinkins was last year's player of the year. Joining Dinkins and Hodge on the first team were Old Dominion center Chris Gatling, Virginia Commonwealth forward Chris Cheeks and Western Kentucky guard Brett McNeal. All but Gatling, who is a sophomore, are seniors. Seniors Reginald Turner of Alabama-Birmingham and Junie Lewis of South Alabama, juniors Anthony Carver of Old Dominion and Dee Brown of Jacksonville and freshman Henry Williams of North Carolina-Charlotte were named to the second team. Williams is the only freshman honored on either team. Ronnie Arrow of South Alabama was the league's coach of the year. Arrow led the Jaguars to an 11-3 conference finish and the regular-season championship. The team was picked by the league's coaches. CHARLOTTE, N.C. Waltrip Would Like Goodwrench 500 Title

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Darrell Waltrip likes the challenge of trying to win the Daytona 500 and the Goodwrench 500 at Rockingham's North Carolina Motor Speedway in the same year. Waltrip, who won his first Daytona 500 less than two weeks ago, has a chance to do it Sunday. "What are the odds of a single driver winning any two races at any two tracks?" Waltrip said. "The odds are 40-1 against you winning one race and 40-1 in the next race. With those kind of odds, it would just make it that much sweeter if we did win." The Rockingham track opens Thursday for pole qualifying. The 500-mile race requires 492 laps around the demanding oval. "Rockingham is a tough race track on everybody," Waltrip said. "It's demanding on the driver, demanding on the crews and demanding on the cars. It's a tough place to win anyway." Richard Petty is the only driver to win Daytona and the Goodwrench in the same year, accomplishing the feat in 1971 and 1974. Waltrip's last victory at North Carolina Motor Speedway came in the 1985 AC Delco 500, the annual October race at the track. His last Goodwrench 500 win came in 1981, and since then Waltrip has had four Winston Cup victories there. "Patience is a real virtue at Rockingham," he said. "You're talking about a long race where a lot of things can happen to you and can happen to the guys you're racing against. You have to be when your time there. You have to know when it's worth making a move and when it's better to wait a few laps." "Experience will play a big role in the race, I think," he continued. "We've got plenty of that." The first 20 starting positions in the Goodwrench 500 will be determined in pole qualifying at 2:30 p.m. Thursday, with the 40-car field being set in final qualifying sessions at 2 p.m. Friday.

Johnson's Coach Admits Involvement

TORONTO (AP) — Ben Johnson's track coach testified that he turned the Canadian sprinter on to steroids in 1981 because they were "worth a meter" in competition and everyone else was doing it. Charlie Francis told a Canadian inquiry into drugs and sports that he first approached Johnson that summer about steroids, but he "was not sure of the advantages." That fall, Francis said, Johnson "decided he would go on." Francis said after he put Johnson on a steroid program in 1981, the drugs were later administered by his personal physician, Dr. Jamie Astaphan.

Nelson Earns NBA Monthly Honor

NEW YORK (AP) — Don Nelson, who led the Golden State Warriors to nine wins in 11 games in February, was named as the NBA's Coach of the Month. The Warriors have won 11 straight at home, their longest such winning streak in 13 years. The Warriors' 9-2 record in February included wins over both participants in last year's finals — a 121-118 victory over the Lakers in Los Angeles and a 121-119 victory over Detroit.

Bucks Solve Knicks' Press

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The Milwaukee Bucks won a pressing engagement against the New York Knicks.

The Bucks solved New York's pressing defense Wednesday night as Rickey Green, just hours after he signed with the team, subbed for injured starter Jay Humphries and helped Milwaukee hold on for a 121-111 victory.

"What helped us that we got just about any shot we wanted," said Terry Cummings, who scored a season-high 38 points on 15 of 19 shooting. "Once you break a press like they have, there is only Patrick Ewing back there. He's tough enough by himself, but if you can get him to come out, it's your game against his."

Cummings had 16 points in the fourth quarter and the Bucks weathered a late charge by New York that closed an 18-point deficit to nine with 5:09 left.

Larry Krystkowiak, who scored 20 points, then hit two free throws and Green, who played 17 minutes, made his only basket.

"We spread them out and split the gaps," said Green, waived last month by Charlotte. "You've got to attack the press and we attacked it all night. The only thing I was concerned about was my conditioning. I haven't played for two months. I felt jittery in the first half and more comfortable in the second."

The Bucks led by 15 points at the half, by 18 after three quarters and 99-81 with 9:04 left against the Knicks, who hit six 3-point goals to give them 274 this season, three more than the previous NBA record set by Boston last season.

Gerald Wilkins, who had 13 of his 20 points in the fourth period, scored 11 straight New York points to start a rally, and Mark Jackson's three-point play with 5:09 left capped a 16-7 run that cut Milwaukee's lead to 106-97.

Kiki Vandeweghe made his first appearance with the Knicks after a trade from Portland but did not score, missing all four of his field-goal attempts.

76ers 114, Kings 111
Philadelphia rallied from a 24-point deficit and didn't let a 40-minute delay caused by a leaky roof stop a 15-0 rally against Sacramento. Charles Barkley had 30 points, 15 rebounds and 11 assists and Derek

Smith scored 12 of his 16 points in the final quarter for the 76ers, who scored the first 15 points of the fourth period, 11 before the Arco Arena sprung a leak and four after play resumed.

The game was stopped when steady drips of water fell from the ceiling of the six-month-old, $40 million arena during a light rain. Play stopped with 9:43 remaining and the Kings leading 94-91.

The 13th point of the 15-0 run gave the 76ers their first lead of the game, 96-94, and they made it 98-94 with 8:17 remaining.

Kenny Johnson hit a 3-point basket with 17 seconds left to cut Philadelphia's lead to 113-111. Six seconds later, Barkley hit the first of two free throws to put Philadelphia ahead by three.

Smith and Wayman Tisdale scored 25 points apiece for Sacramento.

Pistons 96, Jazz 85
Vinnie Johnson scored a club-record 19 consecutive Detroit points in the second quarter against Utah and finished with a season-high 34.

Johnson was 8-for-10 from the field in the second period and hit six straight shots in one stretch.

He started his hot streak after the Jazz scored six straight points to trail 38-34. The Pistons gradually hiked their lead to 57-48 at halftime, and a 15-6 fourth-quarter run increased the margin to 94-83 with 1:59 left.

Mark Aguirre added 16 points for Detroit, all of them in the first period, and Bill Laimbeer had 14 points and 13 rebounds. Karl Malone led Utah with 27 points.

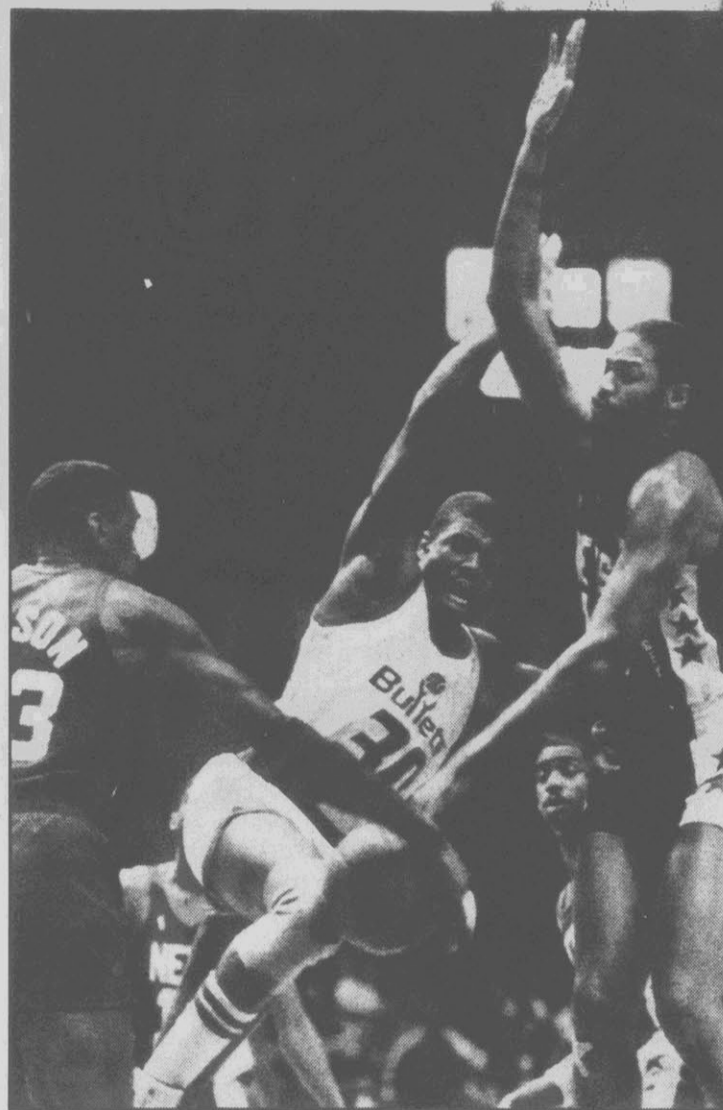

Lakers 142, Warriors 121

Magic Johnson, playing his third game since returning from a hamstring injury, had 35 points and a season-high 14 rebounds as Los Angeles routed Golden State.

Johnson scored 13 points in the first 4½ minutes of the third period to help the Lakers extend their 17-point halftime lead to 90-71. The Lakers had their season-high for points in a quarter when they outscored the Warriors 46-30 and took a 119-86 advantage into the fourth period.

Chris Mullin scored 23 points for the Warriors, who took a three-game winning streak into the game. Byron Scott added 25 points for the Lakers.

game winning streak as Kevin McHale and Robert Parish scored 23 points each and combined for 23 in the fourth quarter.

In the final period, McHale scored 14 points and Parish nine after the Celtics saw a 13-point lead cut to 80-78 on a fallaway jumper by Moses Malone with 7:46 left in the game.

Later in the fourth period, a free throw by Parish started a 7-0 run in which McHale followed with two foul shots, Parish dunked and Reggie Lewis, who scored 22 points, hit a jumper, increasing the lead to 91-82 with 3:54 to go.

In the third period, Jeff Malone and Darrell Walker scored eight points apiece, John Williams had seven and King six as the Bullets pulled ahead by as many as 20 points and led 94-78 at the end of the quarter.

Sanders Is Excused From Spring Drills

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

STILLWATER, Okla. — Oklahoma State coach Pat Jones is giving Heisman Trophy winner Barry Sanders all the time he needs to explore his options in the National Football League.

Jones excused the junior tailback from spring practice Wednesday, but refused to discuss details. "Just 'stay tuned' is all I can say," Jones said.

Sanders, who rushed for 2,628 yards and scored 39 touchdowns last season, both NCAA records, said previously that he had made a decision concerning possible application for the NFL draft. But he has not disclosed his decision.

Sanders requested to remain unavailable to the media until a later date. He apparently unplugged his telephone Wednesday, according to a campus operator.

His decision to sit out spring practice came as a surprise to his father William, who spent Wednesday evening hedging between making a two-hour drive to Stillwater or waiting by the phone.

"I really want to talk to him," Sanders' father said from his home in Wichita, Kan., adding that his son showed "no sign of something like this" when he spoke to him Monday night.

"He said he was going out for spring football," the elder Sanders said. "He said he was going to be out running with everyone else."

Sanders had his own speculation about his son's absence from spring practice.

"I think Pat Jones excused Barry because he doesn't want him to go through scrimmages in case he decides to come out in April," the elder Sanders said, alluding to the April 10 deadline to apply for the NFL draft. "He knows what Barry can do."

Sanders has said he would prefer to have his son skip his final year and turn pro, saying Barry "couldn't get any more money or market himself any more" even if he won the Heisman again.

Sanders could become the first third-year college player ever allowed to participate in the regular NFL draft.

Since Sanders has never red-shirted, he would not be eligible for the regular NFL draft this spring unless he decides to challenge the legality of the draft in the courts or unless the league changes its longstanding policy of not drafting underclassmen.

In January, the NCAA placed Oklahoma State on a four-year probation, barring the Cowboys from bowl games for the next three years and live television for the next two.

Valkyries Advance With 67-54 Victory

By Tim Chandler
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

HAVELOCK — D.H. Conley's girl's basketball team had its lapses, but when it mattered most the Valkyries came through with the key plays.

Conley, the top seed in the Coastal 3-A Basketball Tournament, topped fourth-seeded West Carteret 67-54 in the semifinals to advance to Friday's championship game to face the winner of tonight's matchup between second-seeded Washington and third-seeded West Craven.

"I was pleased with the way the girls went after them," Conley coach Keith Gould said. "We didn't play well the whole time, but when we had to make the plays, we made them."

The win pushes Conley to 18-5 for the season, while West Carteret, who will play in the sectionals next week, slips to 15-6.

After falling behind 5-2 at the outset of the game, the Valkyries put together an 11-0 run to take a 13-5 lead at the end of the first quarter. The Lady Mariners went the final 5:53 of the opening period without a score.

Lendora Tyson, who scored 34 points and hauled in 15 rebounds, paced Conley in the first quarter, scoring seven of her points.

"The thing about Lendora that is so effective is that there really isn't anybody in the conference who can match up with her," Gould said. "Nobody else really has a true center to play the position."

The Valkyries looked as if they might continue pulling away at the start of the second quarter when Jenni Bradburn scored on a layup off an assist from Glenda Hardy with 7:46 left in the half for a 15-5 lead.

The Lady Patriots, however, went on a 10-1 run to close to within one, 16-15, with 5:28 showing on the clock.

Wendi Nelson, who led West Carteret with 16 points, did all of the scoring for the Lady Patriots in the run.

The Valkyries went back up by nine, 25-16, by the 3:22 mark as Tyson scored seven points to lead a 9-1 spurt.

West Carteret pulled within four, 25-21 with two minutes left in the half before the Vikings pushed out to a 33-23 lead at the intermission.

The Valkyries, for the most part, put the game out of reach at the beginning of the third quarter with a 9-2 run to open up a 42-25 lead.

Conley wound up outscoring the Lady Patriots 19-8 in the period to build a 52-31 lead heading into the final quarter.

Glenda Hardy scored nine of her 14 points in the period for the Valkyries.

West Carteret tried to make a run at the Valkyries in the fourth quarter as Jenny McCausley nailed three straight 3-point attempts to cut the lead to 16, 56-40, with 5:20 left in the game.

After the Valkyries put a box-and-one defense on McCausley to slow her down, Sharon McKay, who scored 11 points, and Nelson picked up the slack, scoring four points each over the next three minutes to pull the Lady Patriots within 10, 60-50 with 2:11 to play.

"We went to a box-and-one on (McCausley) to shut her down," Gould said. "But then the others started cranking it up. You won't find many teams that will shoot the ball much better than they did in the fourth quarter."

Conley then went back to Tyson for the answer to the West Carteret run. She answered, scoring five of the final seven points by the Valkyries and icing the game away.

"Overall I think we executed well," Gould said. "We slacked up a little bit in the fourth quarter, but when you go up by 23 points that tends to happen."

Tribe Upsets 'Dogs; Lady Indians Advance

BATH — Chocowinity, fifth seeded in the Tobacco Belt Conference basketball tournament, pulled off the shocker Wednesday night, upsetting regular season champion Belhaven, 74-51.

The Bulldogs had whipped the Tribe by 21 and eight points in their two regular season games, but never got into the action Wednesday night as the Indians vaulted into the finals of the tournament.

Big Bucks In Golf

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CORAL SPRINGS, Fla. — While big money is available on the pro golf tour, Mark Calcavecchia says it just doesn't compare with some other sports.

"Baseball is ridiculous," the PGA Tour's leading money-winner said Wednesday after practice for today's first round of the $800,000 Honda Classic.

"You've got an outfielder standing out there picking his nose and catching three fly balls a day and hitting .220 and he's making $1.9 million a year," Calcavecchia said.

"And it's guaranteed. He gets that no matter what he does."

"He goes 0-for-19 for a week and makes three errors and he still gets his $20,000 a game or whatever it is."

"But they have a tough schedule. I'll say that. It's a long season. They play 27 preseason games and a regular schedule of 162 games and then the playoffs."

"They only get three or four days off a month. And with baseball being so boring, that's tough," said Calcavecchia, who then turned his attention to another sport.

"But boxing is the worst. Look at (Frank) Bruno. He gets $3.8 million for hugging a guy and getting his face bashed in."

"Ridiculous," said Calcavecchia, who won $751,912 last year and leads golf's money-winning list in this young season at $426,522.

"It's nice. I've bought a lot of nice things. What's the use in having money if you can't enjoy it? That's why I keep on playing all the time. I want to keep what I've got," Calcavecchia said.

But it was not always like that. As recently as four years ago he was on the outside looking in, scrambling and struggling to make expenses.

"There's a lot more money in golf now than there used to be. But it's not even close to other sports."

"There's still a lot of young players out there trying to make ends meet, staying in the cheap hotels, missing meals."

"I know them. I'm not too far away from them. It wasn't that long ago I was one of them."

"Golf has a long way to go to catch up," he said.

Chocowinity inched out into an 18-14 lead in the first period, then, behind 14 points from Otis Harrell in the second period, outhit the 'Dogs, 19-13. That gave the Indians a 37-27 lead to carry into intermission.

Things got no better for Belhaven in the third period as the fired-up Indians boosted their lead to 54-41 and then outscored the Bulldogs, 20-10, in the final period to complete the rout.

Harrell finished the game with 20 points for the Tribe, while Sean Crawford had 16, Bobby Moore had 14 and Dewayne Tripp had 12. James Mackey led Belhaven with 12 while Nelson Harvey had 10.

The win boosted Chocowinity to 11-11 while Belhaven is 20-4. Chocowinity will meet the winner of tonight's game between Matamuskeet and North Edgecombe for the tournament championship.

Chocowinity, however, must win to advance to the sectionals next week.

PLYMOUTH — Plymouth High School rolled to an 89-67 victory over Williamston in the first round of the Northeastern Conference basketball tournament Wednesday night.

The game closed out the tournament's first round and sets up the semifinals. Plymouth will advance to face Edenton in a game Friday night for the right to move on to the championship game.

Plymouth built up a 21-17 lead in the first period and inched that out to 41-35 by the end of the half. The Vikings continued to pull away in the third period, making their biggest gain with a 26-16 margin. That made it 67-51 as the final quarter opened.

Marvin Armond led Plymouth with 26 points while Rusheem Wynn added 16. Jamie Ebron led Williamston with 17 points while Toby Gardner had 11 and Pierre Jones had 10.

Williamston ends the year at 5-16, while Plymouth is now 15-5.

In the girls' game, number six

Plymouth upset third-seeded Northampton East, 34-28, to advance to Friday's semifinal game against Roanoke.

Jags Take Win ...

canned a number of three pointers in the final minute to get the Panthers close. But it was a case of too little, too late.

The fourth-seeded Panthers, playing without starting forward Reggie Daniels, stayed close all night, but were never able to take the lead. North Pitt was done in by poor free throw shooting, hitting on only 11-21 from the line.

"That was probably a six-point ball game all night," Ashorn said. "You can't shoot 11-21 against the No. 1 team in the East and expect to win."

"It's been our Achilles heel all year. I don't think we've had two games all season where we shot over 50 percent from the line."

North Pitt forward William Morning kept the Panthers in the game in the first half by scoring 16 of his game-high 23 points.

"I think Morning is just a super athlete," Terrell said. "He's super inside. We did a better job in the second half against him. In the first half, he did whatever he wanted to do."

Still, Farmville still led by seven at the half, 36-29. North Pitt had pulled within three at 24-21 on a follow shot by Morning with 3:45 left in the second quarter, but that was as close as the Panthers would get.

The third quarter was more of the same and Farmville had a chance to run away with the game early in the period when Carr came up with a steal and a dunk and then dunked again on the next possession after Barrett came up with another steal and fed him perfectly to make it 42-29.

North Pitt, though, closed the third quarter strong as Hines hit a jumper and a three-pointer to narrow the gap to 45-39.

"They get two dunks and it's over," Ashorn said. "But we came back and got back in the game. I remember telling them it's a six-point game. It's anybody's game, let's go. I thought the kids played well, we just didn't hit our shots."

North Pitt's momentum carried over into the final period as Wiggins hit a free throw and Calvin Grimes added a jumper to pull the Panthers within 45-42.

But that was as close as North Pitt would get. Carr and Burnette followed that up with jumpers for the Jaguars to move the lead back to seven at 49-42 and Farmville maintained control from there on out.

The Jaguars, 20-3, advance to the finals to take on the winner of the Ayden-Grifton-Greene Central game to be played tonight. North Pitt, 11-13, returns to action next week in the 2-A Sectionals.

Rumors Abound In Spring Camps

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Rickey Henderson says he's sorry. Darryl Strawberry says he may leave. And the Boston Red Sox just have a lot to say about everything.

The Grapefruit League starts today as Boston is scheduled to play the Chicago White Sox in Sarasota, Fla. But most of the baseball news is being made off the field.

Strawberry said Wednesday he will walk out of the New York Mets camp in Port St. Lucie, Fla., today if there is no progress on his demand to renegotiate his contract.

Eric Goldschmidt, Strawberry's agent, previously had set deadlines of late February to guarantee the All-Star outfielder $7 million through 1992. Goldschmidt met with Mets vice president Al Harazin in the New York two weeks ago to discuss an extension and will meet with him again today.

"He (Strawberry) will come to practice tomorrow (today)," Goldschmidt said. "Whether he remains or comes the next day will be determined by our meeting."

Strawberry will receive $1.4 million this year and the Mets have an option for 1990 at $1.8 million. Goldschmidt has indicated that he wants the option year firm up and a three-year extension; citing the recent three-year deals for Kevin McReynolds, Ron Darling and Dwight Gooden as examples.

Meanwhile, Henderson said he made a mistake when he claimed that excessive drinking hurt the Yankees' chances last season and his teammates said Wednesday they would forgive and forget.

"Now I can say I stuck a foot in my mouth. Whatever we do as a team we should keep to ourselves," Henderson said at the Yankees' camp in Fort Lauderdale.

"Maybe I didn't do it right," he added. "Maybe it was right for them to get upset."

Henderson specified that drinking by some players — he named ex-Yankees Bob Shirley, Neil Allen and Tim Lincecum — disrupted the team the last two years and hurt its pennant chances.

"It's going to affect family lives," reliever Dave Righetti said. "It's going to affect outside people coming in asking questions. Right now we're all being labeled alcoholics. I don't like to be labeled like that. Maybe we're just not good enough."

In Winter Haven, the Red Sox took their numerous gripes to management Wednesday in a meeting designed to open a line of communication between players and the front office.

"It was brought on by all the stuff said during the off-season," player representative Rich Gedman said. Gedman and pitcher Roger Clemens met behind closed doors for one hour with Red Sox co-owner Haywood Sullivan, General Manager Lou Gorman, public relations director Dick Bresciani and traveling secretary Jack Rogers.

Clemens sharply criticized the club in a Boston television interview in December, complaining about ballpark seating for families, the players' wives' waiting room, parking, the lack of clubhouse phones and other things.

Bresciani said the Clemens' refusal to talk to the media in Florida since he signed a 3-year contract worth $7.5 million also was discussed briefly.

"Roger said he is sticking to his decision not to talk during spring training," Bresciani said. "However, he said that once the season starts he will talk after games he pitches."

Wade Boggs' highly publicized affair with Margo Adams, detailed in her lawsuit and in Penthouse magazine, has topped the Boston soap opera and left many players edgy in the clubhouse.

"I think it was a very productive meeting," Gedman said. "We just talked over a lot of things. They said they would see what they can do on many of the issues we brought up."

Camp News

Montreal right-hander Pascual Perez will remain in a Florida drug rehabilitation center indefinitely, the Expos said Wednesday. Perez, who entered the center on Feb. 3 after recurrence of a cocaine problem, was to finish his treatment program this Saturday, but will stay at the center on doctors' orders, the club said.

Cincinnati outfielder Kal Daniels walked out of training camp Wednesday, saying the team's salary proposal was unacceptable. Daniels said he has rejected a $300,000 offer from the Reds, who have the right to renew his contract unilaterally. He left camp this morning after talking to General Manager Murray Cook and Manager Pete Rose.

Second baseman Steve Lombardozzi reported to the Minnesota Twins spring training camp Wednesday, hoping that the appearance would help his bid to be traded.

"It's been 10 months and it's gotten to a point where something has to be done. I need to move on. It's not fair to anybody," Lombardozzi said.

Spring Medical Report

—Darrell Evans, who suffered a mild muscle pull in his side earlier in the week, worked out Wednesday with Atlanta but did not take batting practice. His status is day-to-day.

—St. Louis reserve outfielder John Morris, who was limited to only 20 games due to injuries last season, got the go-ahead Wednesday from Whitey Herzog to participate in full workouts.

—Second baseman Steve Sax and right fielder Dave Winfield both missed Wednesday's workout for the Yankees. Sax has a strained intercostal muscle in his left side. Winfield had back spasms.

—Veteran outfielder Ben Oglivie, attempting a comeback with Milwaukee, was scheduled for arthroscopic surgery. The 40-year-old Oglivie, who played in Japan the last two seasons, injured his right knee in running drills at the end of Tuesday's workouts.

—Bryan Harvey, rebounding from September elbow surgery, threw a hitless inning Wednesday to highlight the California Angels' second intrasquad game of the spring.

Signings
Cincinnati third baseman Chris Sabo reached agreement Wednesday on a one-year contract that will pay him $155,000. Sabo, 27, was NL Rookie of the Year last season. He hit .271 with 11 home runs, 44 RBI and 46 stolen bases.

Canadians Continue Drug Probe

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TORONTO — Ben Johnson's track coach says his star athletes used banned steroids for years and were well aware of the need to clear their systems before getting caught by a drug test.

Coach Charlie Francis said Johnson, who maintains that he never knowingly used drugs to enhance his performance, first decided to take steroids in 1981 and by 1985 was describing a new one's effects in "not repeatable" slang.

Francis detailed a steady pattern of steroid use in hours of testimony Wednesday to the Canadian commission investigating drugs and athletics. The federal inquiry was opened after Johnson was stripped of his 100-meter gold medal after testing positive in the biggest scandal of the Seoul Olympics last September.

The events of 1988 were not discussed in Francis' first appearances Tuesday and Wednesday, but were expected to be outlined today as he returned for a third day of testimony.

Johnson and Dr. Jamie Astaphan, named by Francis as the administrator of his athletes' steroid programs since 1984, are scheduled to be among some 30 witnesses to testify in later weeks in the commission's extended review of track and field. Astaphan has denied providing banned substances to the athletes.

Francis said the rule for his athletes was to stop taking banned substances 28 days before competition.

Ontario Associate Justice Charles Dubin, leading the Commission of Inquiry into the Use of Drugs and Banned Practices, interrupted to say that the rule was not to use steroids at all.

"It depends on the rules of international sport, on the rule of fair play, I guess," Francis replied. He insisted repeatedly that keeping up with the competition made steroid use a virtual necessity at the top level of international sports.

The track coach cautioned against believing any claims from top-level athletes that they are clean and that their records are the result only of hard work.

"It just isn't true, not at the highest level," Francis said.

The coach said he also tried his own program of steroids injected by Astaphan for about five weeks in the 1985-86 season to get a perspective on their effects.

Francis, now 40 and a former

Olympic athlete, said his weightlifting ability "came back to what I was lifting some years before quite rapidly" and he did not notice any negative side effects.

His only previous comment since Johnson was stripped of the Olympic gold medal was a brief statement last October that the urine test at Seoul might have been sabotaged.

Francis recalled discussing with Johnson the possibility of using steroids in 1981.

"If he wanted to compete, it's pretty clear that steroids are worth a meter at the highest level of sports," Francis said. "I think he understood that his competitors were on them."

Francis has been Johnson's coach since 1977, when the sprinter was 15.

Francis said he first worked on a steroid program with champion women's sprinter Angella Taylor Issajenko in 1979 and with Johnson and fellow runners Desai Williams and Tony Sharpe in 1981.

The coach said he first considered the "moral dilemma" presented by the use of banned substances in international competition.

"You have to decide, is it universally being used out there?" he said.

He described as a "vicious circle" the open use of steroids before they were banned in 1975 and then the ability to use them in training and get off before any testing.

Francis said the three male sprinters in 1981 first took five-miligram daily doses of the steroid dianabol and then went to an alternating schedule of five- and 10-miligram doses.

Asked if Johnson understood that dianabol is an anabolic steroid, Francis replied: "Yes." Asked if the sprinter understood they were banned, he replied: "Yes."

The coach said he did not notice any negative side effects. He said the doses were low and were taken over limited periods of time.

Francis outlined year-by-year programs of the use of steroids and growth hormones among his top athletes from 1979 through 1986. He named at least eight.

trailing 42-35 at the half. The Tigers had not come back to win a game after trailing by that much at halftime in 11 years.

The Tigers also had to overcome some poor free throw shooting in the final minutes. In the final 2:22, Clemson missed the front end of four one-and-ones, and the Tigers hit just four of 10 foul shots during that span.

Still, Clemson won, in part because the Blue Devils suffered through their worst shooting night of the season, hitting just 39.2 percent. Coming into the game, Duke was hitting an ACC-leading 55.4 percent of its shots and had failed to make at least half their shots in a game only five times.

Duke shot just 32.5 percent in the second half, including a 3½-minute span — from 4:58 to 1:18 left in the game — in which the Blue Devils went scoreless. Meanwhile, Elden Campbell, who had 18 points and 11 rebounds, hit six straight points to give Clemson a 75-69 lead.

Campbell, who was with Kincaid on the bench in the earlier Duke game, made two free throws with 3:56 left to give Clemson a 71-69 lead. Campbell then hit a jumper and a layup as the Tigers upped their lead to seven with 2:46 left.

"They were doing a good job of getting me the ball then. I just wanted to do my job and put the ball in the hole," Campbell said.

The Blue Devils sliced the gap to 76-74 on a 3-pointer by Greg Koubek with 53 seconds left, but Kincaid hit one foul shot and Marion Cash hit two with 24 seconds left as Clemson sealed its 12th victory in 13 games this year at home.

"I wish we could bottle up whatever we're doing at home and take it on the road with us," Clemson coach Cliff Ellis said. "We really hung in there ... when it looked dim."

Clemson, which hit 49 percent of its shots, is now 17-9 overall and 6-7 in the ACC. Duke is now 21-6 and 8-5.

Davis led Clemson in scoring with 19 points — 16 in the second half — and 14 rebounds. Derrick Forrest added 11.

Danny Ferry led Duke with 19 points and 12 rebounds, while hitting seven of 21 shots and going scoreless for the final 8:42. Phil Henderson added 16 points for Duke.

Duke was without center Alaa Abdelnaby, who was suspended from the team before the game by Coach Mike Krzyzewski for academic reasons. The 6-foot-10 Abdelnaby is Duke's fourth-leading scorer, averaging 9.7 points a game.

"We had a horrendous shooting second half," Krzyzewski said. "We have to get more offensive rebounds for us to put points on the board."

Krzyzewski said his players also need to get to the foul line more. Duke hit just eight of 13 free throws, while Clemson made 23 of 34.

"The number of free throws we give up — the disparity between our team and the opponent — is unbelievable," he said. "We can't be such a jump shooting team. We have to fake and drive to put people in a position to draw the fouls."

Krzyzewski said the Blue Devils didn't play particularly well in losing their second straight, but he said he would not use that — or the loss of Abdelnaby — as an excuse.

"It's not an embarrassment to lose to Clemson. Clemson's got outstanding talent," Krzyzewski said. "They've got 10 guys who can play."

Virginia.....81

Wake Forest.....72

GREENSBORO (AP) — Richard Morgan scored 23 points and sparked Virginia's second-half spurt en route to an 81-72 victory over Wake Forest in the Atlantic Coast Conference on Wednesday night.

The Cavaliers, hoping to secure an at-large invitation to the NCAA tournament, raised their record to 17-9 overall and 8-5 in the ACC. Wake Forest dropped to 13-13 and 3-10.

After exchanging the lead seven times and tying the score five times in the first half, Virginia opened the second half with a 15-3 run. Morgan started the upsurge with a 16-foot jumper and added a 3-pointer to stretch the Cavalier lead to 51-44 with 15:36 left.

John Crotty ended the run with a three-point play with 13:01 left, giving Virginia a 58-44 lead.

Virginia led by as many as 17 points after Kenny Turner's jumper with 8:41 remaining. Wake Forest, beaten badly on the boards, rallied to 75-68 after Robert Siler's jumper with 1:37 to play, but the Demon Deacons got no closer.

Bryant Stith and Brent Dabbs had 14 points each for the Cavaliers, who have won four of their last five. Crotty scored 11.

Cal Boyd had 16 points to lead Wake Forest. Sam Ivy scored 14, and Siler and Chris King had 11 each.

Morgan hit nine of 17 field goals as he continues to emerge from a February slump.

"I was basically putting a lot of pressure on myself, and at the same time not really relaxing and having fun out there," Morgan said. "As soon as I got that back into the game, it's all come back. That's what I like to get out of my game — the smiling part of me, the emotional part of me."

As for the NCAA tournament, Morgan says the team is playing as if each game has a tournament berth at stake.

"We definitely know what we're playing for when we go out there," Morgan said. "I think all the guys know that and we're aware of that."

Virginia coach Terry Holland said the difference in Morgan stems from the help from others.

"Richard Morgan played well tonight, but that may be a result of our other guys playing well," Holland said. "This takes the pressure off Richard and things flow better for him."

Wake Forest was outrebounded 35-28, and surrendered a 13-8 edge in offensive rebounds.

"We played well for the first 20 minutes, but we hit a drought in the second half," Wake Forest coach Bob Staak said. "We had trouble stopping them from getting the second shots."

Francis' Testimony Will Have A Impact

By Scott Ostler
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

Charlie Francis is singing like a bird, and his song is too loud and shrill to be ignored.

Charlie is the star witness at Canada's Dublin Inquiry into performance-drug abuse. He is the whistle-blowing, mud-slinging, bean-spilling, stone-turning, finger-pointing, gut-spilling, chop-busting track coach who, he says, steered Ben Johnson into steroids and who, he says, has the bad goods on many, many track and field greats, dating back almost to Pheidippides.

Charlie Francis does not have a four-star credibility rating, since he was part of the Ben Johnson Steroid Denial Team in Seoul, after Ben tested positive. But he can't be ignored, and the impact of his song is going to be major. Charlie Francis is going to change the Olympic Games.

His testimony is a breath of stale air. After decades of rumor, innuendo, cheap talk and an occasional suspension, someone is standing up and naming lots of names. Instead of chipping away at the problem, in the manner of such self-styled reformers as Carl Lewis and Edwin Moses, this man Charlie has hauled out a jackhammer.

Finally, everyone does not salute Charlie's song.

"It's so unfair, it's so unfair," said Anita DeFratz, president of the Amateur Athletic Foundation of Los Angeles, when told that Evelyn Ashford, among other world track champions, had been indirectly implicated by Francis. "Evelyn was a world record-holder and I know that Evelyn is not one to use drugs."

It's unfortunate that a lot of people will be accused and they will have no way of proving their innocence. Jay Silvester, a former discus world record-holder indirectly tainted by Francis, surely can't produce a urine specimen from 1972. In fact, in 1972, there were no rules against the use of steroids.

But if Charlie's song leads to a reform of what many suspect is widespread steroid abuse among Olympians, a greater good will be served.

First the pain, then the healing. The image of the Olympic Games is taking a beating. The Olympic symbol of the five interlocking rings may have to be changed to crossed hypodermic needles on a field of stanzolol capsules.

Francis is telling us the inside story, about how Olympic drug testing apparently isn't detecting all the cheaters. With Ben Johnson as a notable exception, we have a system that is not working. We have a dishonest sport.

Maybe none of this should matter. It's fairly certain that steroid abuse is heavy in the National Football League, yet we still watch and enjoy. Do we really care about the means, as long as we get to watch the end?

I think we do for the Olympic Games, where we have the right to expect a minimal level of purity. The public doesn't care if Olympic champions are amateur or professional, gay or straight, black or white, personable or surly. But the public, I think, prefers to believe its Olympic heroes are more than lab rats in gym shorts.

So Charlie Francis' singing is going to result in changes, such as:

—A beefing up of the drug enforcement. More sophisticated and frequent testing. The public will no longer believe the athlete's or the coach's word. We will want to see the lab report before we hold the ticker-tape parade.

—An end to the Western buck-passing to the Soviet Union and Eastern Bloc. Maybe the Soviets started all this drug stuff, maybe not. But according to Francis, steroid abuse among Western Olympians dates back at least to 1968. As Pogo once said, "We have met the enemy and he is us."

And won't Francis' singing, and confessions such as that recently of American sprinter Diane Williams, likely bring out other whistle blowers and confessors, in many sports?

It's not always the gold-hearted do-gooder who touches off a revolution of reform. Remember Al Campanis?

Charlie Francis is no folk hero, but he's a hell of a singer.

Adams On Tour Promoting Article

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Margo Adams, the kiss-and-tell former paramour of Wade Boggs, says she spent four years in a world of booze, bars and skirt-chasing ballplayers before realizing she had to get out and stay out.

Embarking on a two-week U.S. tour to publicize her two-part interview with Penthouse magazine, Adams characterized most of the ballplayers she knew from 1984 to 1988 as hard-drinking, immature womanizers.

"They are unbelievably protected," she said. "They don't get the chance to face responsibility, and that breeds immaturity."

Boggs, Boston's five-time batting champion who is married with two children, has admitted his four-year love affair with Adams, once saying to reporters he may have been the victim of sex addiction.

"I'm a 33-year-old woman, and if Wade had a sex disease, if he thought he was oversexed — well, I didn't say no to sex any more than he did," she said at a news conference Wednesday.

"On our last road trip together, though, in Milwaukee, we were having dinner together, and he said to me, 'Maybe I should go to a psychiatrist, maybe I should get some help.'"

Adams said that when she met Boggs in 1984 and became his "helpmate," she hardly took a drink of liquor at all. Then, she began to make all the Red Sox' road trips with Boggs — 64 by her count — and she fell into the lifestyle.

"When you're out five hours in a bar every night, which is what they do, you can only drink mineral water for so long," she said. "Then, I'd have a little wine, and by the third year, I was drinking martinis."

"You hear about hard liquor. I didn't see a lot of hard liquor. What I saw was 12 or 13 or 14 beers a night. They'd be riding back in a car, and one of them would say, 'I didn't get any hits tonight, so let's pound back a few quick ones.'"

Pilgreen Keys NP ...

Keisha Pilgreen countered with two free throws but Mary Spruill narrowed the gap again with a jumper from the right side to make it 25-19. Sherese Wallace followed with two free throws and a layup to pull Ayden-Grifton within two at 25-23.

North Pitt went back to its defensive pressure for the close of the first half and forced three straight turnovers, leading to two baskets by Keisha Pilgreen and one by Gwen Pilgreen to move back out to a 31-23 halftime lead.

"We were down by 14 in the first quarter and came back within two," Lady Charger coach B.T. Chappell said. "Then we had a letdown and turned the ball over three times in a row right before halftime."

"I don't think right now, we have the ballhandlers or the passers. We're inconsistent. They'll go out there one time and pop the press and then the next time we act like we can't do it."

The Lady Chargers managed to pull back within one on a jumper by Spruill with 4:54 left in the quarter, but North Pitt then went on a 11-0 run to regain control of the game.

Keisha Pilgreen had seven of the points in the run, including a three-pointer, to put the Lady Chargers up, 43-31. Pilgreen then closed the quarter with two more three pointers for a 49-37 advantage.

"In the second quarter, we went forever without scoring (at one stretch)," Perry said. "In the third quarter, they went out and knew they had to get control of the ball game."

The third quarter edge proved to be enough for the Pant-Hers as they maintained at least an 11-point edge throughout the final period.

Debbie Williams led Ayden-Grifton, 13-11, with 17 points. The Lady Chargers return to action next week in the sectionals against an opponent to be determined.

North Pitt returns to action Friday against the winner of Farmville Central and South Lenoir in the league championship game.

first quarter when Williams canned a turnaround shot in the lane for a 6-4 advantage.

Following a layup by center Martin Patrick, Merritt slammed a shot home off a Williams steal for a 10-4 lead with 5:29 left in the period.

The Vikings put together a seven-point run later in the quarter to swell the lead to 19-8. Merritt and Williams both scored inside, while Thompson put the lid on the spurt with a 3-pointer.

Billy Ellison, who scored 10 points, was the only saving grace for the Mariners in the opening period as he scored six of his points to keep East Carteret from getting blown out.

The second quarter didn't get much better for the Mariners as the Vikings stretched the lead to 19, 39-20, by the half, thanks in part to Williams, who scored eight of his points in the period.

"They just filled it up in the first half," Lilly said. "We never could get back in the game after they started so quick. I don't want to have to play them again if they could play any better than they did in the first half tonight."

Conley effectively ended all hopes of a Mariner comeback in the third quarter when they reeled off seven straight points, five by Merritt, to take a 52-25 lead with 5:15 left in the period.

Following a 3-pointer later in the quarter by Jimmy Walker, who scored 14 points, the Vikings reeled off six more unanswered points on scores from Thompson, Merritt and Patrick to take a 65-34 lead with 1:06 showing on the clock.

In the fourth quarter, the Vikings went 5:28 seconds without a basket and the Mariners' Joe Montford put on an offensive show to help make the score seem closer than the game actually was.

Montford scored eight of 16 points in the final period as East Carteret outscored the Vikings 21-11 in the last eight minutes.

"We got a little ragged in the fourth quarter, but basically we played well," Deans said. "A lot of times when you get a lead like we had, you tend to get a little ragged."

second half, 36-23, and after a free throw by Northeastern, Crumpler completed a three-point play for a 39-24 lead.

Later in the period, a fast break layup by Teel and a free throw by Shawn Moore ran the lead to 46-30 with 2:40 showing. After another free shot by the Eagles, Hines scored a jumper in the lane to open a 48-31 margin.

Rose took a 50-36 lead into the final quarter, and got the first two baskets of the period, one each by Ebron and Crumpler, to make it 54-36, the largest margin of the game.

The Eagles closed to within 11 late in the game as Rose went to its bench, but there was never any question as to the outcome.

Crumpler had 15 to add to the Rose total, while Hines had 13 and Teel had 11.

Northeastern was led by 19 by Brooks and 12 by Daniel Everette.

Northeastern coach James Daye had little to say afterwards, instead voicing his opinion that Rose should have made the trip to Elizabeth City last weekend despite the snow and icy traveling conditions.

"It's not fair for us to lose the number two seeding and have to come back here after we just lost to them by one point. We never got the chance to play them at our place and second place was on the line.

"They could have come if they had wanted to," he complained.

No games were played anywhere in the Northeastern part of the state over the weekend on the high school level.

Rose will now travel to Wilson Fike, a 75-68 winner over Northern Nash Wednesday. The championship game will be played Friday at 9 p.m.

With Fike's victory over Nash, Rose automatically clinches the number two seed for the Big East and will have a first-round bye in the 4-A Sectionals. They will host a first round winner in the second round, to be played next Thursday.

Rose goes to 17-7 on the year, while Northeastern is now 15-9 and will also be in action in next week's sectionals.

Viet Boat People Leaving Hong Kong For Trip Home

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

HONG KONG — Seventy-five Vietnamese who fled their Communist homeland in search of a better life returned to Hanoi by chartered jet today in the first large-scale repatriation of boat people.

The boat people were among the approximately 11,000 Vietnamese who have sailed into this British colony since it adopted a tough new policy last year that for most of them rules out resettlement.

Many of the boat people waved and smiled as they boarded the Hong Kong Dragon Airlines' Boeing 737 jet, but some appeared apprehensive. A few carried cassette tape recorders; others were empty-handed.

The 46 men, 19 women and 10 children were accompanied this evening by two United Nations officials and an interpreter on the 2½-hour flight to Hanoi.

"This is an important start," Security Branch official Michael Hanson told reporters. The Hong Kong government hopes the successful repatriation of the first group will convince other boat people to return home from the colony's crowded camps, now bulging with nearly 26,000 Vietnamese.

The repatriation was arranged under an agreement reached by Vietnam and the U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees. Hanoi promised not to prosecute its returning citizens and to allow the international organization to monitor their treatment back home.

The UNHCR agreed to provide assistance to the repatriated Vietnamese. Returning adults received $50 and their children $25, according to U.N. officials, and other unspecified assistance will be offered.

The U.N. agency, which has offices in Vietnam, has vowed to closely monitor the fate of boat people who return home.

"I would tend to say if too many of them get into trouble, it will be known," Alexander Casella, one of the two U.N. officials on the flight, said Wednesday. He was expected to remain in Vietnam one week and accompany the boat people to home villages after their brief stay in Hanoi.

Most of the repatriated Vietnamese came from villages in the Hanoi area, according to the U.N. agency.

Vietnamese have sailed by the tens of thousands to ports of asylum in non-Communist southeast Asia since the Vietnam War ended in 1975, but only a handful had previously asked to go back.

This British colony, about 500 miles north of Vietnam, long classified all arriving Vietnamese as refugees who could stay in the colony until resettled elsewhere. Less than two dozen of the more than 120,000 Vietnamese who have come to Hong Kong returned home between 1979 and 1988.

But to stem the growing influx of boat people, the colony adopted a new policy effective last June under which Vietnamese are considered refugees only if they can prove they fled their homeland because of persecution.

The vast majority do not meet that standard under a government screening program and are classified as illegal immigrants. Hong Kong wants to forcibly send them home, but Hanoi insists it will only accept those who want to return.

The policy change has convinced a small fraction of new arrivals that their future lies in repatriation.

Vietnam originally approved repatriation applications from 145 boat people in Hong Kong, but when Hanoi officials arrived in the colony to issue travel documents last month only 81 still wanted to go home.

Six backed out at the last minute.

Despite the harsh new policy, boat people continue to sail to the colony, with 356 arriving last month, up from 114 for January and 91 in February 1988.

Meanwhile, resettlement of the approximately 15,000 Vietnamese in Hong Kong camps granted refugee status received a recent boost with several countries, including the United States, agreeing to increase the number they accept.

Officials believe 4,000 refugees may be resettled this year from Hong Kong, up from 2,772 last year and 2,212 in 1987.

Icelanders celebrate the return of legalized beer at a party in a Reykjavik bar Wednesday

Legalized Beer Comes Dear

REYKJAVIK, Iceland (AP) — Thirsty Icelanders are knocking back real beer again after a 74-year drought, but the price of a brew is staggering.

Almost enough to drive someone to drink. Bars are charging $3.90 to $4.80 a glass, and on Wednesday the folks were lining up to pay it.

The state, which controls the liquor supply, is exacting fancy levies on beer. A case containing 24 cans of imported beer costs about $57.60.

A referendum made alcoholic drinks illegal in Iceland in 1915. Prohibition was repealed in 1933, but beer containing more than 2.25 percent alcohol still was banned.

On Wednesday, that ban ended and it was legal to sell full-strength beer, with an alcohol content of up to 5.6 percent.

Residents of this island nation of 251,000 people formed lines outside some of the 17 state liquor stores. Cheers and applause broke out when Snorra Braut branch opened its doors in central Reykjavik.

Restaurants and bars reported their tables were booked up weeks in advance by people planning to celebrate.

At The Beer Cellar, first came a moment of silence. Then Magnus Sveinsson, president of the Reykjavik City Council, cut a ribbon and hoisted the first glass. Each customer was treated to a free beer — high price or not.

Before legalization, smuggled beer brought about $70 for a 24-can case.

Caracas Calm Under Army Patrols As Rioting Subsides

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CARACAS, Venezuela — More than 20,000 soldiers and police officers patrolled the capital today to maintain order after three days of rioting over price increases. A newspaper said at least 200 people have been killed.

Sporadic gunfire died down at daybreak in the capital, and officials urged workers to return to their jobs.

The government of this oil-rich country has blamed the rioting and looting — the country's worst unrest in 31 years of democratic rule — on "minuscule" groups of leftist extremists it did not name.

But the scope of the disturbances prompted it to impose martial law and an overnight curfew beginning Tuesday, a day after increases in gasoline prices and transit fares touched off the violence.

El Nacional newspaper said at least nine people were killed Wednesday by snipers shooting at troops in the shantytowns east and west of Caracas.

In today's editions, the paper said the dead included an elderly woman hit by a stray bullet while in her apartment.

An estimated 15,000 troops and 7,000 police maintained order in the capital today. Some patrolled in armored vehicles; others manned roadblocks.

Interior Minister Alejandro Izaguirre said Wednesday night that "small anarchistic groups" were bent on prolonging the unrest that has "shaken the country." President Carlos Andrés Pérez has been in office for just a month.

The opposition has blamed the riots on government austerity measures mandated by the International Monetary Fund as a condition for new credits.

Venezuela, affluent during the 1970s thanks to its rich oil reserves, saw its fortunes slide along with petroleum prices in 1981.

Real wages have since fallen by one-third, inflation is expected to hit 70 percent this year — double the 1988 figure — and the foreign debt is $33 billion, fourth largest in Latin America after Brazil, Mexico and Argentina.

At least 200 people have died, 1,000 people have been injured and 2,000 arrested in violence, El Nacional said, citing official sources.

The paper listed the names of 159 people whose bodies it said were in Caracas morgues "congested with corpses."

Food shortages were reported and the army began to airlift food from the interior to supply residents of Caracas, a city of 4 million people and the country's financial center. Venezuela imports two-thirds of its foodstuffs.

The unrest that has convulsed Caracas and seven other cities began Monday in Guarenas, 30 miles west of the capital, but has largely been centered in Caracas and its poorer neighborhoods.

It has been closely tied to economics — the first inklings of unrest in this normally stable South American country began in 1987 when university students in Caracas protested a nearly 50 percent devaluation. Several students died in clashes with police and dozens were injured.

Pérez, president from 1973-78 when Venezuela was flush with "petro-dollars," said in declaring martial law Tuesday that the "incredible tragedy" of the violence threatened Venezuela's democracy.

The unrest is the country's worst since January 1958, when 100 people were killed during the uprising that ousted dictator Gen. Marcos Pérez Jiménez.

Bus fare increases of 30 percent to 50 percent and price gouging by drivers were the immediate cause of the riots — but the economy has been in decline since 1981.

Two weeks ago, Pérez announced a sweeping reform package under pressure from international creditors that includes lifting ceilings on interest rates, doubling gas prices and letting the currency float, which means higher prices for imports. Oil accounts for 90 percent of Venezuela's export income.

Israeli Troopers Shoot Four Guerrillas In Border Clash

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

JERUSALEM — Israeli paratroopers patrolling southern Lebanon shot and killed four Palestinian guerrillas today who were en route to attack targets in Israel, the army and Israel radio said.

A fifth guerrilla escaped, and troops were searching the area, said a military source, speaking on condition of anonymity.

The clash occurred about three miles north of the Israeli-Lebanese border in the western sector of Israel's self-proclaimed security zone, said the army spokesman, who cannot be identified under military regulations.

"This was definitely an infiltration attempt," said the spokesman. He said this judgment was made on the basis of the equipment carried by the guerrillas, but he would not provide further details.

No Israeli troops were injured, the spokesman said.

The spokesman did not know the identity of the guerrillas.

Israel radio said the Democratic Front for the Liberation of Palestine confirmed that four of its fighters were killed today in clashes with Israeli troops in south Lebanon.

A security source in Lebanon said the clash occurred in the Israeli-controlled security zone near the Lebanese village of Al Jibbayn, about three miles north of the Israeli-Lebanese border.

"This morning, there was some heavy firing by Israeli soldiers near the area," said the source. "We haven't seen any bodies because it's a rough terrain, a very difficult area to get through."

The six to 10-mile-wide security zone was created by Israel in 1985 when it pulled the bulk of its forces out of Lebanon after a three-year occupation.

It was the second infiltration attempt in the past eight days.

On Feb. 23, Israeli soldiers killed three Palestinians in the security zone and identified them as members of the Democratic Front, a radical Marxist faction of the Palestine Liberation Organization led by Nayef Hawatmeh.

Earlier today, the Foreign Ministry gave reporters photocopies of two Democratic Front identification cards it said belonged to two of the three guerrillas killed Feb. 23. A ministry spokesman, who is by tradition not identified, noted that the Democratic Front is a full member of the PLO.

Israel has tried to persuade the United States to end a dialogue it began with the PLO after its chief, Yasser Arafat, said in December that he recognized Israel's right to exist and renounced terrorism.

Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir, who maintains the PLO will never give up terrorism, said in an interview published Wednesday that the U.S. talks with the PLO are "useless."

On Tuesday, American officials met with PLO representatives in Tunis, where the organization has its headquarters, and asked them to put an end to all attempts by its guerrillas to infiltrate Israel.

But the State Department also criticized an Israeli retaliatory air raid on Tuesday against a Democratic Front post in Lebanon southeast of Beirut.

On Wednesday, a State Department spokesman, Charles Redman, said the U.S. talks with the PLO will continue despite Israel's pleas.

"This dialogue is not an end in itself," he said in Washington. When asked if any progress had been made in the talks, he said: "This is still early going in the process."

Charlotte Hotel Is Scene Of Latest Copperfield Act

By Jerry Buck
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — A building falls on magician David Copperfield during his latest special, but who's worried?

The building collapse is the highlight of "The Magic of David Copperfield XI: The Explosive Encounter," a special airing on CBS Friday.

Copperfield is handcuffed and sealed inside a safe on the fourth floor of the White House Hotel in Charlotte, N.C. The 13-story landmark, built in 1924, is to be demolished by means of strategically placed explosives and wire cables that will cause it to collapse inward.

As a Mozart melody plays, the crew shuts Copperfield in the safe, sets the explosive timer and runs out of the building. The building collapses and moments later Copperfield appears from beneath a blanket on a steel plate.

Magic or camera trickery? Copperfield was asked about suggestions that his spectacular TV feats, such as making the Statue of Liberty or a jet airplane disappear, are not true illusions but use camera tricks.

"That's not true," said Copperfield as he watched a tape of the building collapse on a monitor in an editing room. He had just arrived a few minutes before from Nashville, where he had been performing on stage.

"I think a lot of magicians are jealous. When I hear that, it's a compliment. People ask me to, say, cure a headache. I say I'm only an illusionist. I always work in front of an audience. There were 40,000 people watching when the building came down. It was all done in one unedited camera shot.

"Besides, the network is very strict. They would never permit me to take advantage of the audience. There are people who are funnier than me, people who are better looking. If you could do it with a camera, they could use anybody."

It is the 11th special Copperfield has done for CBS. It features such new illusions as dancing ties and an origami box. His guest is Emma Samms of ABC's "Dynasty," who participates in a levitation illusion.

"I combine magic with a story and romantic music," he said. "We use a lot of contemporary rock 'n' roll, from the Pet Shop Boys to Peter Gabriel to Sting...."

"It's very important for me to keep my magic current. It's an art form that keeps growing. If more of us were doing it you'd see more transition in magic. Since I'm one of the few who gets exposure I feel a responsibility to guide magic into new areas."

Gumbel's Criticism Upsets Weatherman

LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

NEW YORK — NBC weatherman Willard Scott indirectly joked on the "Today" show Wednesday about a Bryant Gumbel memo that sharply criticized him, but said off the air that the morning-show host's remarks had "cut like a knife."

"I feel so sorry that it happened," he added in an interview, referring to a published report Tuesday that disclosed Gumbel's 5-month-old memo, which had been intended as a private one for "Today" executive producer Marty Ryan.

Ironically, Scott said, off-camera problems he and Gumbel had last year had been resolved before the memo became public. Written last September in response to a request from Ryan for Gumbel's thoughts on the program, the memo criticized many aspects of the "Today" show, including Scott and several other on-air personalities.

Scott said that he had known for years that Gumbel "didn't think my act was much," but added that he and Gumbel actually had been getting along well for the last two months.

He acknowledged being stung by the criticism in Gumbel's memo, which charged that Scott holds the show hostage "to his assortment of whims, wishes, birthdays and bad taste."

"It cut like a knife," said Scott, who has been part of the "Today" show since March 1980. Gumbel arrived in January 1982.

Now, the normally jovial weatherman said, he fears that "almost nobody" will believe he and Gumbel actually have the rapport they show on the air.

"But there's nothing I can do.... We'll just have to wait and see what happens," he said. He added that he had not talked with Gumbel about the matter.

Gumbel was on vacation this week and not available for comment, a network spokesman said.

The uproar over the disclosure of Gumbel's memo seemed to affect co-anchor Jane Pauley briefly on Wednesday's show.

Scott, discussing an upcoming segment on life-saving dogs, asked her: "What if the dog comes up and grabs you by the arm and takes you over to CBS?"

"I won't fight it," she replied off-handedly.

But in an interview after the show, she said that her remark was only in jest. "There's no significance to it. There's less there than meets the ear."

Pauley, who was not criticized by Gumbel, readily admitted that "some people are hurt" by the memo, which NBC News President Michael Gartner on Tuesday said was "ancient history" that someone had stolen from Gumbel's office computer.

"But I think feelings can be mended, and after a while we'll be all right," Pauley said. "But it's not a pretty thing."

Talk show host David Letterman greets residents of tiny Bolan, Iowa, during their expenses-paid visit to the big city

Iowa Town's Entire Population Joins Letterman In 3-Day Visit To New York

By Larry Neumeister
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — The entire town of Bolan, Iowa, took the stage of David Letterman's show knowing the joke was on them, but the 16 residents say the last laugh was theirs.

They were wined and dined and eventually maligned during a three-day all-expenses-paid adventure that saw them plucked from quiet obscurity in the corn and soybean fields of the Midwest for a sudden assault on their senses in the Big Apple.

The moment in the sun for the entire population of Bolan's metropolitan area — six Bolanites and 10 from the "suburbs" — came on NBC-TV's "Late Night with David Letterman."

They watched offstage on a monitor as comedian Jeff Altman, the first guest, told Letterman and the audience that he walked past the Bolanites to get on stage and one of them said, "Who the hell is that?"

Larry Nydegger, 21, immediately defended himself.

"It was me but I didn't say, 'hell.'"

Letterman, whose show was taped late Wednesday and broadcast early today, held nothing back.

"Do you have like a town slut?" he asked 73-year-old Ruth Hansen. "And if so, when she comes up, point her out."

Mrs. Hansen, a 50-year resident, chuckled.

Also put on the spot was Nydegger's 23-year-old sister, Lori, a weekend resident who admitted that she spends most of her week away from town.

"So, you're just here for the free trip?" Letterman asked as she blushed and shook her head. "Let's string her up."

Lori Nydegger was the one who helped draw attention to Bolan during a 1986 centennial celebration.

She formed a standstill parade of floats, marching band members on lawn chairs, and grand marshals on cars, all on the village's single street. The spectators marched around it while the parade stood still.

The town is 130 miles north of Des Moines and consists of an antique shop, a Methodist church and the Bolan Store Inc., a farm equipment and supplies store that owns three-fourths of the town's property and is for sale.

A 16-acre property with a three-bedroom home, one of eight in Bolan and its suburbs, is also on the market, for $42,000.

The 103-year-old community at one time had 75 residents as well as a general store, a blacksmith, a train depot, a post office, lumber yards, stock yards and a creamery.

But the automobile changed everything and Bolan's population has remained relatively stable — and small — the last 20 years.

While they were away, the Bolanites arranged for friends or relatives to stay at each of their homes and hired additional security officers to protect their belongings.

Letterman, prompted by a staffer intrigued by Bolan, paid for the town's trip. They stayed at the Mayflower Hotel, where they held a party after the taping — and watched themselves on television.

Earlier, they toured Manhattan, and every corner seemed to bring something to turn their heads.

A man cursing loudly for no obvious reason passed near Lori Nydegger.

"Oh my," she said. "They get kind of mad, don't they?"

Her 17-year-old brother, Loren, said he was "asked for money twice in one block."

"I'm glad I grew up where I did," he said.

Comparing motorists in Bolan and Manhattan, 59-year-old Daryl McCready said: "We wave at everybody. They give each other the bird."

But McCready said the town was enjoying the trip — even if some people were poking fun at them.

"We have to laugh at ourselves, too," he said. "Main Street is 720 feet long and it ends in a dead end in a corn field...."

"These people who might laugh at us would like to be in our place, too," McCready said. "We're in the enviable position of being the only town that was flown for free to New York."

Says Mrs. Hansen: "The town of Bolan got put back on the map, especially after NBC and David Letterman."

Millions May See Ad Featuring Madonna

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Pepsi-Cola Co. hopes to reach a worldwide television audience of 250 million today as its two-minute commercial with pop singer Madonna makes its debut in 40 countries from Turkey to Thailand.

The commercial, which was to be broadcast in the United States on NBC during the top-rated "The Cosby Show," also marks the debut of Madonna's song "Like a Prayer."

Pepsi officials who previewed the commercial for reporters Wednesday said they tried to place the ad on the top-rated evening show in each country.

They refused, however, to disclose how much it cost to produce, to hire Madonna or to buy the advertising time.

The commercial was appearing first in Japan and following the time zones around the world before finishing on the U.S. West Coast.

The commercial opens with Madonna watching a grainy home movie of her eighth birthday party, where she gets a new doll and sips on a bottle of Pepsi.

As the spot unfolds, the little girl in the movie and the grown-up pop singer trade places.

As she sings her new song, Madonna finds herself dancing with a group of teens on the street, with uniformed school children at a grade school and finally in a church where a gospel choir sings with her.

Those shots are mixed with glimpses of the little girl, played by 8-year-old actress Heidi Marshall, exploring Madonna's apartment, finding clues to what her life will be like when she gets older.

When the little girl finds her alter ego still has the doll, she looks back at the screen and trades places with the singer once again.

Madonna, back in her chair watching the movie, raises a Pepsi can and offers a toast to the birthday girl: "Go ahead, make a wish."

Bill Katz, an account executive for Pepsi's advertising agency, BBDO, said the ad will be edited into 60-second and 30-second versions for subsequent showings.

It was directed by Joe Pytko, whose work for Pepsi has included commercials featuring singer Michael Jackson and actor Michael J. Fox.

Pepsi has often used pop singers in trying to create a youthful, energetic image for the soft drink, which trails only Coca-Cola in the soft drink market.

Madonna's single of "Like a Prayer" is scheduled to be released Tuesday, followed two weeks later by an album. A music video that differs from the ad is slated to debut Friday on cable's MTV.

As Pepsi tries to win customers with the ad, the company and rival Coke came under criticism Wednesday by Massachusetts officials, who said the companies made unsubstantiated claims last summer on results of consumer taste tests.

In the ads, Diet Pepsi said it was "undisputed champion" and "decisively beat Diet Coke" in taste tests, while Diet Coke said it was "winner and still champion" after beating Pepsi four times in four years.

Trump Coup Tommy was bursting with pride at his son Timmy's performance in the Junior European Championships. No sooner was Timmy back home than dad shanghaied him into a duplicate game at the local club, where he hoped to show off his son's abilities. But it was Tommy's skill at handling bad trump breaks that soon came to the fore.

We do not hold any brief for East's preemptive opening bid, although we are aware that it has become the style in duplicate competition. As it turns out, Tommy would have done better to pass three no trump, but we don't blame him for bailing out. Note Timmy's delicate correction to four spades with a doubleton—a decision that has the endorsement of this department.

and led a club, fetching the king from West. He decided that he had no chance to make his contract if trumps were 4-1, so he played for a 5-0 split. After ruffing a diamond he cashed three rounds of hearts, and was delighted to see East discard on the last.

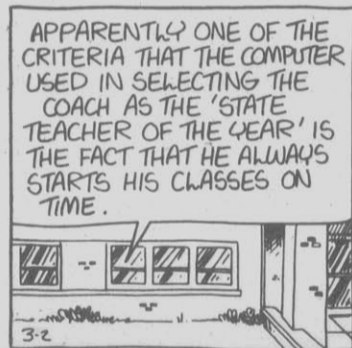

Tommy got back to the table by ruffing his heart winner! A diamond ruff brought him down to the position he wanted. He led a club and West, who held nothing but trumps, was forced to ruff. He exited with a trump, won in the closed hand with the jack for Tommy's ninth trick. The club return was again ruffed by West, who had to yield another trump trick to Tommy. Game and set.

New Home Sales Climb In January

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Sales of new, single-family homes rose 4.9 percent in January, pulled up by a surge of activity in the Midwest, the government said today.

The Commerce Department said sales reached a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 704,000 in January, following a 2 percent increase in December and an 8.4 percent drop in November.

January's strong showing aside, analysts have been forecasting a gradual decline in construction of single-family homes this year based on expectations that mortgage interest rates will continue to rise during the first half of 1989 and the economy will slow.

New home sales had edged up a meager 0.9 percent during 1988 after plunging 10.5 percent in 1987, when the drop was blamed on increased interest rates and a slowdown in demand after five strong sales years.

Fixed-rate home mortgages last week were averaging 10.78 percent, up from 9.87 percent a year earlier, according to a national survey by the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corp.

Economists predict rates could drift toward 12 percent this year, although the increasing popularity of adjustable-rate mortgages that offer lower initial interest rates is expected to mitigate damage to the single-family housing market.

January's increase in home sales was the biggest monthly jump since a 5.4 percent increase last June.

The strength in home sales was concentrated in the Midwest, where sales rose 22.2 percent to a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 110,000. The region's economy has rebounded as its manufacturing industries experience rising demand from increased export sales.

Sales last month were up 8 percent in the West, and rose 0.9 percent in the Northeast, but declined 1.9 percent in the South.

The median price for a new home, meanwhile, declined 6.9 percent in January to $113,000, meaning half the homes sold for more and half for less. The average price, which is pulled up by sales of very expensive homes, also was down, falling 8.2 percent to $137,100.

Federal Officials Say Public Unrest Led To Run On S&Ls Since January

By Dave Skidmore
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Treasury Secretary Nicholas F. Brady is blaming newspaper headlines and television reports for causing billions of dollars in withdrawals at savings and loan associations so far this year.

Federal savings and loan regulators on Wednesday revealed that depositors withdrew at least $1 billion last month after publication of a list of institutions targeted for government takeover.

Brady, appearing before the Senate Budget Committee, said, "It's our conviction that the outflow is due to the stories on the nightly news and the black headlines on the front of the business pages or page 1 almost every day for the past two months."

He said S&Ls have been forced to increase interest rates on savings by an average of three-fourths of a percentage point to hold deposits following the increase in public attention to the industry's problems. He predicted that the rates would drop once President Bush's plan to bail out the industry is approved and public confidence is restored.

"We feel growth (in deposits) will be strong in the future," he said. M. Danny Wall, chairman of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, said the nation's 2,950 S&Ls suffered net withdrawals of $4 billion to $5 billion in February, $1 billion to $2 billion of it at the 220 institutions earmarked for takeover by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp.

Wall, in a separate appearance before the Senate Banking Committee, said the bulk of the withdrawals were a normal response to rising interest rates. Other investments offering a better return, such as money market mutual funds, lure bank and S&L customers away, he said.

Also, shaky and rescued S&Ls, under orders from regulators to scale back their operations, represented another substantial portion, he said.

Roger Martin, another member of the bank board, told reporters that withdrawals throughout the thrift industry totaled $7 billion in January.

That represents a continuation of the so-called "silent run" that began gathering steam with a $7 billion outflow in November and a record withdrawal of $8.1 billion in December.

The withdrawals add up to $26 billion to $27 billion over the four months. All S&L deposits at the end of 1988 totaled $970 billion.

In January, public attention to the industry's problem soared after the administration revealed it was considering a controversial proposal, since dropped, to charge depositors a fee. The industry's problems received another dose of publicity in early February, when the president proposed his rescue plan.

The FDIC, which regulates commercial banks, has been assuming control of the worst-off savings institutions as a preliminary step before enactment of Bush's plan.

So far, the agency has taken over only 36 of the targeted institutions in a legal arrangement called a conservatorship. The agency plans to have about half of the 220 under control by the end of next week and the rest by the end of the month.

The affected institutions, while still privately owned, are controlled by the government. They remain open and all accounts continue to be protected up to the $100,000 insurance limit.

Martin said the high withdrawal rate at the 220 insolvent institutions has since stabilized.

"We had a temporary aberration but that has subsided tremendously," he said. "I just think it was something that hit the press. The word conservatorship, I think (people) thought about it in terms of bankruptcy. But that's all stopped."

Antarctica Oil Slick Spreads

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PUNTA ARENAS, Chile — An oil slick from a ship grounded off Antarctica is more serious than originally thought and has spread in stormy weather, the Chilean navy says.

The slick from the 1,980-ton Peruvian vessel, which ran aground Sunday off King George Island, had become a half-mile long and 150 feet wide — more than double its size of a day earlier, the navy said in a communique Wednesday.

Winds up to 80 mph on Wednesday prevented efforts to right the Humboldt and clean up the diesel oil leaking from two fuel tanks, the navy said.

Lt. Cristian Carbone, a navy spokesman in Punta Arenas, 1,500 miles south of Santiago, said authorities hope to re-float the Humboldt soon.

The Humboldt ran aground around midnight Sunday near Marion Cove on King George Island. All 64 scientists and sailors aboard were rescued unharmed by the British Royal Navy's ice patrol ship Endeurance.

The navy communique said a group of sailors went back on the ship Wednesday to start preparing the operation to float it.

A cutter from the Chilean navy, the Yelcho, was scheduled to reach the Humboldt today with personnel and equipment both for the floating operation and cleanup.

On Jan. 28, the Argentine navy ship the Bahia Paraiso ran aground 300 miles from the Humboldt accident site, creating a major oil slick. An international team involving Argentina, Chile and the United States joined in the clean-up effort.
