Commuter Trains Crash In Scotland

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

GLASGOW, Scotland — Two commuter trains collided today outside Glasgow, and initial Fire Brigade reports said one person was killed and as many as 40 may have been injured.

It was the second rail collision in Britain in 48 hours. A crash Saturday on the outskirts of London killed five people and injured 94.

Jack Stewart, a Fire Brigade senior divisional officer, said details of today's crash were sketchy, but that he knew of one fatality.

Stewart said two or three people were trapped in the wreckage. He said there were 30 to 40 other casualties, but added these could include people suffering only from shock.

Scotrail spokesman Archie Birt said the two trains were traveling in opposite directions between the Glasgow suburbs of Springburn and Ninningavie when they collided at 12:39 p.m. outside the Bellgrove station, two miles from the center of Glasgow.

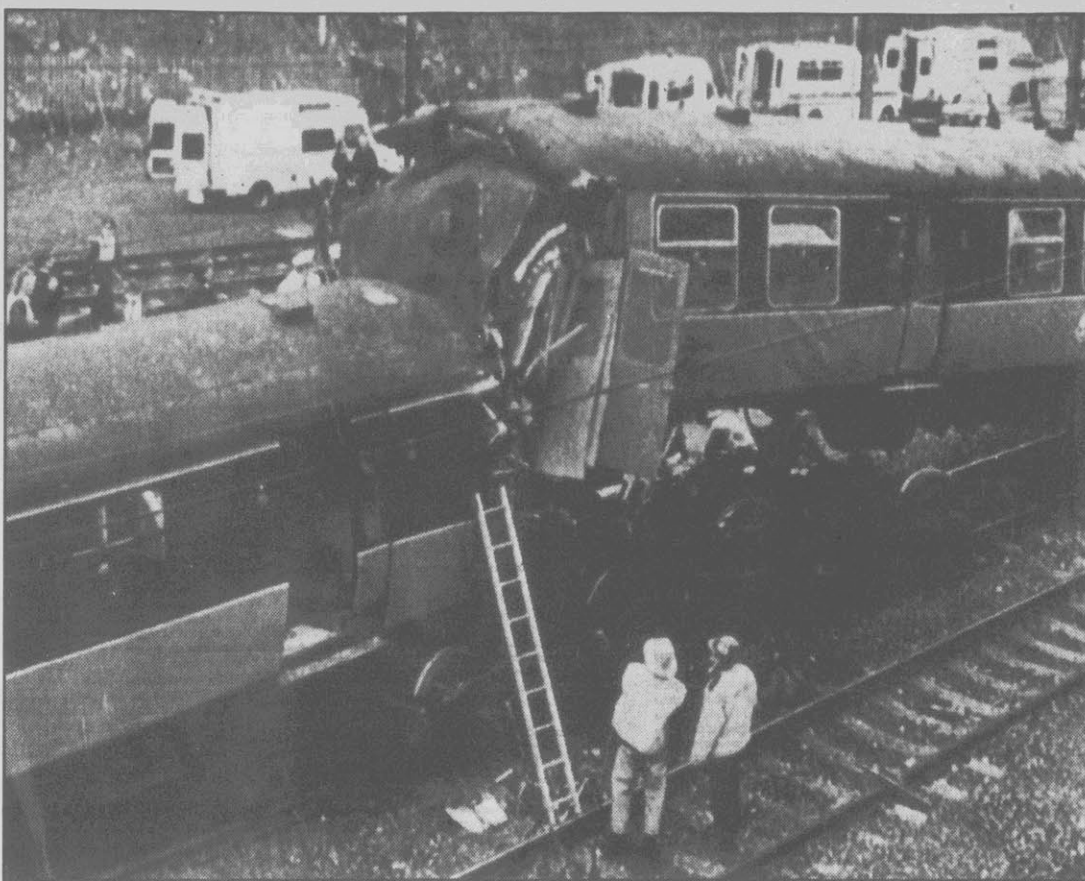

At least one of the trains derailed, Birt said.

Scotrail is a branch of state-owned British Rail, whose safety procedures are under severe criticism following two serious accidents in the London area in less than three months.

After Saturday's crash outside London, investigators found signs the driver of one passenger train tried to stop at a red signal before his train struck another London-bound train.

Gordon Pettitt, general manager of British Rail's Southern Region, said Sunday that driver David Morgan made "a severe brake application" long before his train passed the red signal and smashed into the back of another passenger train.

Morgan was one of 94 people injured when his train, traveling from Littlehampton to London, hit a train traveling from Horsham to the capital.

Pilots Honor Strike

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MIAMI — With rail commuters around the nation receiving a reprieve from chaos today, strike-torn Eastern Airlines warned pilots they were committing "economic suicide" by honoring Machinists' picket lines.

Most of the 3,600 pilots, who are critical to Eastern's operations, have honored the strike by the airline's 8,500 mechanics, baggage handlers and ground crew.

The strike, in its third day, began over Eastern's demand for contract concessions and escalated a 17-month battle at the nation's seventh-largest airline.

Most of the airline's 4,800 flight attendants also honored the Machinists' pickets. The effects of the strike could spread Tuesday if the nation's pilots followed their union's request to strictly observe aviation rules starting that day.

Only 92 of Eastern's 1,000 daily flights took off Sunday, said Eastern spokesman Robin Matell. The pilots' union put the figure at 68.

The sharp cuts in operations have stranded thousands of Eastern's usual 100,000 daily passengers at airports around the country.

The strike had threatened to spill over into a sympathy action today against 12 commuter railroads around the country, but the Machinists called off their plans Sunday after a judge in New York issued a temporary order banning railroad workers from honoring Eastern picket lines there.

Congress To Review Bush Role In Strike

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The Eastern Airlines strike this week is likely to become the second major confrontation between President Bush and a Democratic Congress already battling over John Tower's nomination as defense secretary.

The aviation subcommittee of the House Public Works Committee will hold a hearing Tuesday on Bush's refusal to intervene hours before 8,500 striking Machinists union members with support from pilots and flight attendants virtually shut down the nation's seventh largest airline.

Bush on Friday rejected the recommendation of federal mediators and 33 senators to appoint an emergency board and order a 60-day cooling-off period that would have forestalled the strike. Administration officials said Bush would not allow unions to wage "economic blackmail."

That decision — which had been sought by the management of Eastern and the head of its parent company, Texas Air Chairman Frank Lorenzo — was the first time in the 63-year history of the National Mediation Board that a president has rejected its advice.

Anticipating Bush's decision, Reps. Glenn Anderson, D-Calif., and James Oberstar, D-Minn., respectively chairmen of the Public Works Committee and its aviation subcommittee, introduced a bill last Thursday directing the president to empanel an emergency board and order the strikers back to work.

"I think the president got bad advice and his organization just misjudged the circumstances," Oberstar said Sunday. "Some outside force needs to be brought to bear to resolve this. The Machinists would be constrained to accept the recommendation of even a George Bush board."

Instead, Bush and Transportation Secretary Samuel Skinner said the administration would ask Congress to outlaw secondary boycotts in the transportation industry if Machinists put up picket lines at other airlines and railroads to cripple them as well.

Skinner said the administration is opposed to congressionally imposed contract settlements. The last time Congress did was two years ago.

No Threat Expected From Tar River

By Jerry Raynor
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

City officials say there is no immediate threat to Greenville from high water levels in the Tar River, and the cleanup process is continuing in the removal of broken limbs and debris from two recent winter storms.

Rick Langley, a water plant operator with the Greenville Utilities Commission, said this morning that "if the water level does not rise in the next couple of days due to heavy rainfalls, I don't foresee any danger to residences and businesses in low-lying areas."

"Right now, the water level is holding steady at 16.6 feet, down just a little from the high of 16.8 feet. It registered at 16.6 all day Sunday and at that level in this morning's reading."

Weekend temperatures have been warm, with the lowest readings at 45 degrees on both Saturday and Sunday. Saturday's high was 50, climbing to 62 on Sunday and registering even higher at 69 degrees this morning.

Cleanup of the widespread breakage and fall of limbs throughout the city as a result of the ice and snow storms of the past two weekends continues, according to Wendy Ross, administrative secretary to Greenville Public Works Department Director Mayo Allen.

"Because of the great accumulation of broken limbs, the work is taking considerable time to get done," Ms. Ross said. "The department is still using workers from the buildings and grounds division as well as the regular street division to take care of the situation. Some of the trucks are pulling chippers to grind up larger limbs. Work is progressing in different sections of town, and we expect to have everything cleaned up before too long."

Ms. Ross reported that for a short time, "the normal trash pickup days are a bit off schedule, but it will not be long before all services are back on a regular basis."

Agents Say Strike Has Little Effect

By Carol Tyer
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Local travel facilitators say their customers have been affected only slightly by the Eastern Airlines strike which began Saturday, at least partially because they were forewarned and directed people to other air carriers.

Ramona Alons of Travel Express said her agency heard about the possibility of the strike about three weeks before it began and began booking customers on other airlines. "So we've heard of no problems so far," she said.

Ms. Alons said that, if the strike continues, there may be problems down the line in getting the lowest fares on other airlines because all of them may be crowded.

Mary Wesley, owner-manager of Greenville Travel Center, said the strike has affected her customers some in that there aren't as many flights out of Raleigh. She said she understands that other carriers are honoring Eastern tickets already bought and her agency is working this morning to help customers find other comparable flights.

Maxine Anderson, manager of Quixote Travels, said "We don't have too many people booked on Eastern because we have been suspecting for three to four weeks that this might happen. Friday when we heard the strike probably would start Saturday, we contacted some East Carolina University students going on spring break and told them when they got to connecting airports to go to the Eastern counter to get a voucher which would entitle them to go to another airline counter and get a comparable flight. We're hoping not too many of our people have had long delays because of the strike."

Nancy Mazingo, Greenville station manager for Piedmont Airlines, said her customers are not being affected by the strike at this point because this is not a connecting station like Charlotte or Raleigh. She said most of her customers connect with other Piedmont flights in Charlotte and Raleigh and thus will have no problem. Arrangements to have Eastern tickets honored by other airlines should prevent travelers having serious problems, she said.

American Eagle Greenville station manager Ed Moore said he knows of none of his customers who have experienced problems because of the strike. "Almost all of the people who fly out of here on American connect with American flights in Raleigh," he said. "It's just more cost-efficient for them to do this. So I don't think many of our people will have problems."

Boat Show Attracted 13,000 People

By Greg Laudick
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Organizers of the Eastern North Carolina Boat Show today referred to the recent four-day event at the New Greenville Warehouse as an outstanding success.

"Over 13,000 people from throughout eastern North Carolina attended, which for the first year of the show, I think is very outstanding," commented Ed Walker, president of the Pitt-Greenville Chamber of Commerce.

Held Thursday through Sunday, the chamber-sponsored exhibition featured numerous fishing and ski boats and a wide variety of related accessories.

Over 50 dealers participated in the show, which Walker said is planned to become an annual local event.

"The response from the dealers has been excellent. All of them have signed up for next year's show. The only complaints were they indicated they wanted more space and better weather," Walker said.

The chamber president indicated the entire 68,000 square feet of floor space in the warehouse was occupied by the participating boat dealers with some situated outdoors on land adjacent to the warehouse.

Helping to ensure that Greenville's first attempt at hosting a boat show went without a hitch, Walker said, were hundreds of volunteers.

"Gene Brown, vice chairman of the chamber and chairman of the boat show, did an outstanding job of leading those volunteers and making the show successful," Walker said.

Besides giving boat manufacturers and vendors an opportunity to sell their product, the boat show also provided a boost to the Greenville economy.

"The show brought thousands of people to town who, after the show, ate in our restaurants, stayed at hotels and bought gasoline. The local travel industry really benefitted from that economic ripple effect," he said.

The lack of sailboats at the show disappointed some people at the show, he said, but indicated organizers will take note of the criticism and plan accordingly next year.

Joe Vernelson, owner of Greenville Marine and Sport Center, said he thought the Greenville show was much better than a similar show held in Raleigh several weeks ago.

"The organizers were very, very accommodating. The crowd was good and we sold some boats. I have

New Mortgage Plan May Cut Payments

By Bill Sing
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

A new kind of mortgage, offering initial monthly payments only half the size of those on current loans, may be introduced as early as this spring. The Federal Reserve Board issued a letter Friday that, in effect, removes the last major legal barrier facing the new loan.

The new loan, called the price level adjusted mortgage, or PLAM, could revolutionize the mortgage market if it catches on. For some prospective home buyers — particularly younger ones who may have trouble qualifying with today's rising interest rates — it may be worth a good hard look.

The loan is radically different from conventional adjustable- or fixed-rate mortgages in that monthly payments are tied to changes in inflation, not interest rates.

Thus, payments on a PLAM loan will be more closely tied to growth of earnings over time. They start out very low and work their way up along with rises in the consumer price index.

So while a conventional fixed-rate loan of $100,000 at today's going rate of 11 percent may result in a monthly payment of $952, the PLAM loan may start out at a monthly payment of only $477 — allowing far more borrowers to qualify.

If the consumer price index goes up 5 percent a year, then the monthly payment on a PLAM loan will go up 5 percent, adjusting once or twice a year just like adjustable-rate mortgages. What actually happens is that the loan principal grows at the rate of inflation — through a process called "negative amortization" in lender lingo.

So if you start out with a $100,000 loan, a 5 percent inflation rate will boost the loan amount to $105,000. If for any reason there is deflation — possibly in a severe recession — the loan amount will fall accordingly.

The interest rate remains the same, however, through the 30-year life of the loan. PLAM interest rates are expected to be about 4 percent, which is the so-called real interest rate after inflation is factored out of normal interest rates.

"This loan will allow more people to qualify. Even those who can qualify (with current fixed- or adjustable-rate loans) may prefer the PLAM because they like its pattern of payments better," says Susan E. Woodward, chief economist and deputy assistant secretary at the Department of Housing and Urban Development, which has developed the new mortgage along with some private lenders.

"For the typical home borrower, it makes a lot of sense," she says.

The new loan, however, does have some drawbacks.

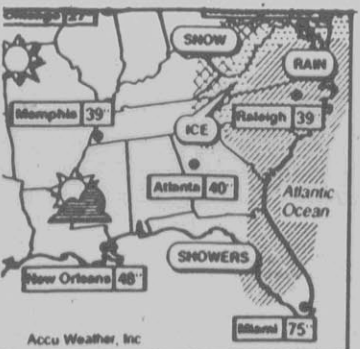

First, in the initial years of the loan, you will not be able to reap as much profit from rising home prices as you would through conventional mortgages. That is because your $100,000 initial mortgage may require about $128,000 to pay off after five years, assuming 5 percent annual inflation. Hopefully, your home will be worth at least that much when you sell it then — but that is not guaranteed.

Second, monthly payments will be much larger than conventional fixed- or adjustable-rate loans in the later years. For example, on a PLAM loan that starts at $100,000, the monthly payment by the 30th year will be about $3,200, assuming an average annual inflation rate of 6.5 percent, Ms. Woodward says. By

NIE Week Activities Will Take 'Living Textbook' To Schools

By Cherie Evans
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

"Newspaper In Education Week," scheduled to-day through Friday, will feature the treasures of the "living textbook," according to the coordinator of The Daily Reflector's NIE program.

NIE Coordinator Diane Williams and Assistant Coordinator Gigi Walter will visit students in Pitt County and New Bern this week, presenting the theme, "Celebrate the Treasures Found in The Daily Reflector."

"We're going to do a 30-minute skit in which we are going to be Pirates finding clues to lead to the treasure," Ms. Williams said. "All clues are parts of the newspaper," such as sports, comics, "Dear Abby," weather, television listings, advertisements and obituaries.

Lesson plans for elementary and secondary school children will be provided in the newspaper on the comic page in place of "The Family Circle" strip, she said.

The NIE program is a cooperative effort between daily newspapers and schools in which the newspaper is used as a tool of instruction. The week has been set aside to help parents, teachers and students recognize the tremendous learning opportunities presented in the newspaper, Ms. Williams said.

"The newspaper is a living textbook — a daily account of news and what's happening in the news, and students need to be aware of what's happening in the news," she said.

"In the curriculum across the board, you can use the newspaper as an effective teaching tool," Ms. Williams said.

Advertisements teach mathematics; the television schedule teaches about graphs; wire stories teach geography; sports articles teach averages; comics teach characteristics of people and objects, and the editorial pages teach facts and opinions.

"According to the U.S. Department of Education, on an average, a fifth-grade student reads by himself from seven to eight minutes at school and from two to three minutes at home versus 140 minutes of TV watching a day," Ms. Williams said.

"One-fourth of Pitt County's citizens are functionally illiterate," she said. "There has to be more work done in teaching the reading skills" and in making reading interesting so it will be enjoyed.

About 2,200 issues of The Daily Reflector will be distributed to teachers and students this week, Ms. Williams said. Teachers who have purchased issues of the Reflector also will receive a 32-lesson plan book, a Tar Heel trivia booklet, a seasonal puzzle booklet and a federal facts poster and lesson plans.

Greenville Mayor Ed Carter has designated the week as NIE Week in the city, and Willard Scott, the weather forecaster on NBC's "Today" show, recently used promotional materials submitted by the Reflector to feature the week.

There are eight NIE programs in North Carolina, with more than 700 programs nationwide, Ms. Williams said.

CANKER SORE OR HERPES?

If you've been scheduled for a dental checkup and you're concerned about an area in your mouth that's sore, you may be worrying whether it's a canker sore or herpes. There are some sharp differences that will be obvious to your dentist. For example, canker sores are found only on movable tissues, such as your tongue, cheeks and throat. In the mouth, primary herpes is found only on non-movable tissues attached to bone, such as your gums.

Painful redness of the gums, in fact, is considered one of the classic features of primary herpes.

Another feature is the formation of small blisters that usually break and form ulcers. Whether it's a canker sore or primary herpes, the condition usually lasts from 10 to 14 days and then disappears.

Your dentist can prescribe medicine to alleviate the discomfort and suggest whatever other treatment may be necessary to protect your dental health. If you have an area in your mouth that is sore, call our office today. We will be glad to help.

Note: We welcome new patients, both children and adults.

Prepared as a public service to promote better dental health. From the office of Kenneth T. Perkins, D.D.S., P.A., Evans St., Family and General Dentistry.

Five Firefighters Injured In Blaze

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

FLAT ROCK, N.C. — Five Henderson County firefighters were injured Sunday morning while fighting a house fire that destroyed a Flat Rock residence, officials said.

Three of the men were injured when a brick wall fell on a balcony they were standing beneath. Another was hurt trying to reach the injured. A fifth later twisted his knee as he leaped out of the way of falling debris.

Firefighters were called to the D.O. Thompson Sr. home Sunday morning after a neighbor spotted flames coming from the house. Firefighters had responded to an electrical fire that started in the basement of the Thompson house seven hours earlier — around midnight Saturday.

The State Bureau of Investigation and the Henderson County Sheriff's Department are investigating the cause of the fire.

Blue Ridge volunteer firefighter Ricky Dean Bishop, 26, fractured his kneecap when he was caught underneath the collapsing balcony and wall, Blue Ridge Fire Chief Randy Stepps said.

A Margaret Pardee Hospital official said Sunday that Bishop was listed in good condition and would be operated on Monday morning.

Harry Iler III, 27, of Hendersonville, a Valley Hill volunteer firefighter, was hit by bricks from the wall and lost consciousness. He and three other firefighters were treated and released from Pardee Hospital.

Another Valley Hill firefighter, W. Gary Hill, 27, of Flat Rock, was cut by a brick that knocked his helmet off his head.

Valley Hill Fire Chief John Hill, 26, of Hendersonville, injured his left knee as he was trying to get to the other injured firefighters.

Hill said Sunday night that the balcony appeared to be safe several minutes before it fell.

Panel Recommends Refuge On Roanoke

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — The N.C. Wildlife Resources Commission has recommended the state support the creation of a 30,000-acre wildlife refuge along the Roanoke River in Martin, Bertie and Halifax counties.

But the commissioners, who considered the matter in committee Sunday, agreed that the recommendation should urge the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service to allow hunting and fishing in the refuge. The panel was to discuss specifics of the provision during its regular meeting today.

The Fish and Wildlife Service has proposed the refuge to protect bottomland hardwood forests and swamps in the three counties. Migrating and wintering mallards, black and wood ducks use the wetlands. The refuge would protect striped bass spawning habitats, although the service is primarily interested in a refuge for black ducks.

Gov. Jim Martin asked the commission to recommend whether the state should support the refuge. The motion Sunday recommended approval on a "willing seller, willing buyer basis."

Many hunters who have leased exclusive hunting rights from landowners in the area would lose those privileges if the land becomes a refuge, and they have opposed the refuge. Bertie and Halifax counties favor the refuge, but Martin County commissioners voted to oppose it.

Eugene Price of Goldsboro, who proposed an amendment urging hunting to continue in the area, said the provision would put the commission on record as being in favor of "more, not less, deer hunting."

John F. Lentz of Ellerbe said James W. Pulliam, the wildlife service's regional director, had assured him that he would "allow hunting as long as the resource will stand it."

The May 1988 Fish and Wildlife Service proposal says the service allows hunting on refuges when it does not interfere with the primary reason for having the refuge.

Price, the commission chairman, said Martin County Commissioner William Manson Jr. had written to him asking that the panel delay a decision on its recommendation until March 21.

The Martin County officials oppose the refuge, Price said, because they say it will include areas that could be used for industrial development.

'Truth in Preference To Fiction'

Two Goals

Fight Drugs, Protect Freedoms

William J. Bennett, seeking Senate confirmation as coordinator of national drug control policy, got into the sensitive issue of protecting civil liberties at his recent hearing.

Bennett assured the senators that he expected to protect civil liberties as he assumed control of the war on drugs.

But, he said, "this is not for delicate sensibilities." In later comments he assured the senators he could not image circumstances which would require suspension of civil liberties in fighting illegal drugs.

"You can't destroy the fabric of the country in order to defend the country," Bennett said.

On the other hand Bennett pledged to do the job aggressively bringing together all federal government illegal drug fighting resources. He also said he would look to treatment and prevention programs as a way of attacking illegal drugs.

The illegal drug trade in our country is insidious and apparently growing. A national effort will be required to even curb the drug trade.

Nominee Bennett is correct, however, in his conception of a law enforcement program conducted within our constitutional requirements. Perhaps a democracy could fall as the result of a widespread illegal drug trade and drug use. It is certain to fail if law enforcement fails to observe our constitutional guarantees as it pursues the prosecution of the drug traffickers. And the fact is we can make effective gains against drug dealers and still maintain our individual freedoms.

Air Safety

Prevention The Best Approach

Federal officials and airlines are in agreement on proposals to replace parts subject to wear out in older commercial planes, even with the cost estimated at $800 million.

The airline industry spokesman said the planes currently flying are "perfectly safe." Nevertheless the plan would call for replacing strategic parts before they wear out.

The task force proposals, which are expected to be written into law, call for modifications costing $600,000 each on various older Boeing 747s, 737s and 727s.

While the task force recommendations are not connected to the recent ripping open of a United Air Line 747 in the Pacific, that incident nevertheless focuses attention on the proposals.

For the air traveler the issue of safety of the aircraft on which we fly is paramount. Never should cost be spared or caution ignored in providing a safe conveyance. Passengers have every right to feel that the aircraft they board meets every safety standard.

There has been a significant increase in air travel since deregulation. Even though new planes have been added by the air lines old ones continue to fly to handle the passenger load.

Expert opinion is that these older planes can be kept safe with good maintenance and a regular schedule of strategic parts replacement. This should be done and the flying public will know if it is done if the requirements are written into the law.

Caucuses Grow In Number, Clout

John Flesher

RALEIGH — Another sign of power dispersal in the General Assembly, especially in the House of Representatives, is the way caucuses are growing in numbers as well as clout.

Simply put, caucuses are associations of legislators who have something in common: party affiliation, race, gender or interest in a particular subject or constituency.

Unlike committees, caucuses are not official bodies and therefore aren't required to meet in the open, although some do. But the word brings to mind the stereotypical gathering in a smoke-filled room, where informality and bluntness replace the forced civility of floor debate.

Officially, there always have been Democratic and Republican caucuses. But for many years they seldom made news. When Liston Ramsey was undisputed king of the House and powerful lieutenant governors such as Jimmy Green reigned over the Senate, a tight leadership circle often decided Democratic position on major issues and put out the word to the rank-and-file. Meanwhile, there were too few Republicans for their caucuses to mean much.

The shakeup in the House, swelling GOP ranks and Republican Jim Gardner's election as lieutenant governor have changed all that.

Suddenly, Democrats and Republicans seem to be caucusing all the time. And by most accounts, the meetings are more than just window dressing. They are genuine quests for consensus and, sometimes, no-holds-barred family quarrels.

Majority Leader Dennis Wicker, D-Lee, presides over the House Democratic Caucus. He says the group's meetings have been particularly useful as the majority tries to mend fences trampled in the speakership fight.

"It's been good therapy to put all the feelings on the table and deliberate," Wicker said. "It's had a positive effect on the healing process."

Controversy erupted last week when the House Democratic Caucus voted to endorse a slate of candidate for the University of North Carolina Board of Governors. About a dozen Democrats protested that the board election was not a partisan matter, but were overruled.

Wicker said the caucus will not establish party positions on every issue. But on matters that involve the basic Democratic philosophy — education, transportation, tax policy, and fair treatment of working people and the poor — members will be urged to follow the party line.

Meanwhile, House Republicans are wielding genuine power for the first time this century.

Twenty of the 46 GOP members are chairmen of permanent subcommittees. And with the Democrats in disarray, Republicans are a force too great to ignore.

Minority Leader Johnathan Rhyne, R-Lincoln, says the GOP Caucus meets once a week. Although pending issues are discussed in detail, he says no efforts are made to develop "official" positions that members are asked to support. For example, the Republicans did not endorse a UNC Board slate.

"We'll never bind somebody to vote against a position of conviction," Rhyne said. "We discuss things, try to persuade each other. But in the end, we don't get mad at someone if their convictions are different than ours."

With no Democratic lieutenant governor running the Senate, the majority caucus has become more important there as well.

"For the first time, the Senate is truly running itself," said a Democratic senator who asked not to be identified. "With Jimmy Green or Bob Jordan (as lieutenant governor), you knew they were running for governor and they were using the Senate as a base, so you felt obligated to support them."

The Sooner It's Over, The Better

WASHINGTON — In the 200 years since Congress first assembled on March 4, 1789, no new president has ever been denied his choice for a Cabinet position. No former U.S. senator has ever been rejected for a Cabinet nomination by the chamber in which he served. Not since 1945 has a Senate committee voted against a president's nominee, and not in 30 years has the full Senate turned down a presidential Cabinet choice.

These are among the reasons why the case of John G. Tower has assumed historic proportions. It promises to set even more precedents if it proceeds to a final advise-and-consent decision by the Senate this week. The near-certain result is that a majority of senators will vote "nay."

If so, Tower will become only the ninth Cabinet nominee to be rejected in American history. He should withdraw and spare President Bush further humiliation. The longer this case drags on, the more embittered it will become. There are no winners now, only losers.

Detailing the historical stakes does not, of course, explain how this political disaster occurred or what the long-term consequences are likely to be.

The Tower nomination has been the most badly bungled in memory. The White House missteps are numerous and serious, and all reflect adversely on the political skill of Bush's advisers and on Bush's judgment. These are among them:

- The choice. From the beginning, Tower's selection to be secretary of defense presented obvious special problems. He had never been popular among his Senate colleagues and therefore had little reserve of good will on which to draw.

- The stories about his personal behavior, now given ugly public airing, were omnipresent in Washington. Everyone, it seems, had heard one or more of them before the nomination.

- Finally, and most important, was his connection with defense contractors. He had dealt with them as chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, then profited handsomely as their consultant upon leaving government and would deal again with them as defense secretary.

Each of these problems was compounded by the political environment in Washington. Bush has made, and properly so, high personal and professional ethical standards a centerpiece of his new administration. He also has warned that no one should create even the appearance of a conflict of interest while serving in the government. This was particularly pertinent as it applied to management of the Pentagon, where the greatest procurement scandal in U.S. history was unfolding and the Defense Department would be facing new political difficulties because of reduced funding and the ballooning budget deficit.

For the White House, the political question was why risk so much with a nominee who quite clearly began his confirmation process with potential problems?

The confirmation strategy was critical. Once Bush chose Tower, the nomination should have been made expeditiously. The White House did not do so. Weeks passed, and rumors and allegations swirled, before Bush announced Tower's nomination shortly before Christmas.

Once the nomination was launched, the White House bungled further. It needlessly alienated Sam Nunn, D-Ga., chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, and the panel's majority Democratic members by briefing only Republican members about FBI findings in the Tower investigation. Other political blunders followed, two of them notable.

The first was permitting a publicly combative tone to develop between the White House and Nunn, a respected senator and a conservative Democrat whose support Bush will need. The other was in not asking the committee to postpone its vote on Tower while the president was on his first major diplomatic mission, to Japan for the funeral of Emperor Hirohito and then to China and South Korea.

None of this had to happen. The sooner this sorry episode is concluded, the better. Too many national problems have been on hold while the Tower nomination fight dominates the political scene. It is time for White House and Congress to get back to governing.

The Promises Were Made But The Solution Is Elusive

Paul O'Connor

RALEIGH — The day care chicken has come home to roost. During the 1988 campaign, candidates for offices from president to legislator tried feverishly to outsquawk each other about the middle class social issue of the year: The need for government-subsidized, safe, clean places to leave children while mothers work.

The enormity of such an undertaking is now hitting the legislature. A bill to appropriate $21 million annually to set up 10,000 new day care centers in day care centers before the House Human Resources Committee has spawned an angry debate. Democrats said the funding is essential to reduce the welfare rolls. Republicans argued that the bill would destroy families.

North Carolina currently spends $29 million a year subsidizing day care for poor children. But that leaves 10,000 financially eligible children without subsidized day care. So five female representatives filed the $21 million bill to expand the program to include all of those children.

John Niblock, executive director of the N.C. Child Advocacy Institute, testified that many parents who want to work cannot because they cannot find affordable day care worse yet, he said many four and five year old children are being left home alone, or alone with other small children, while their parent, or parents, work. "Then we have the case of the child in Stokes County last summer where the child was left locked in the car and suffocated," Niblock added.

Rep. Martin Nesbitt, D-Buncombe, made an impassioned plea for the funding, raising the point that "half of the homeless in this country are single mothers and their children. The least we can do is provide a safe place for the children while a mother goes out to work."

Other Democrats argued that the bill would help poor people find work and get off of welfare.

But most of the Republicans on the committee opposed the bill. Rep. Paul Stam, R-Wake, argued that a tax credit is the best way to provide day care for the poor.

He said he didn't want the government involved in a family matter. Nesbitt fired back that a tax credit was no good for the he doesn't like the current program because it discriminates against families. He said that a mother should be able to take her

Stam charged that the current program does not allow such arrangements, and pushes children into day care centers and day care homes. But Niblock strongly refuted that claim later. "He's confusing this," Niblock said. "Parents do choose where their children go. It can be a licensed day care center, or a registered family day care home. Or, it can be an approved individual child day care arrangement (with a grandparent). It depends on what the parent thinks is appropriate for the child."

When the vote came, the Democrats, with two Republican defectors, prevailed. But now the bill must go to an appropriations committee that is looking to cut, not increase, state spending. Full funding for subsidized day care is probably a long way off.

'During the 1988 campaign, candidates for offices from president to legislator tried feverishly to outsquawk each other about the middle class social issue of the year: The need for government-subsidized, safe, clean places to leave children while mothers work.'

poor because they don't pay taxes to begin with. But Stam then countered that the tax credit should be refunded to families even if they didn't pay any taxes.

Stam said he wasn't against spending the $21 million. He said children to a grandparent of other related adult and that the state subsidy for day care ought to be paid to that relative. That would encourage family members to keep their children with family.

Stakes Are High For Both Political Parties In 1990

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — Stunned last November by the loss of 13 legislative seats — the largest loss by any state political party in the country — North Carolina Democrats are planning to mount a major campaign to regain those seats in 1990.

"We intend to win back a substantial number of seats that we lost," said Rep. Martin Nesbitt Jr., D-Buncombe, the House chairman of the Democratic Legislative Campaign Committee.

At a barbeque and shrimp fund-raising dinner in Raleigh last week, Democrats and lobbyists gathered to raise money for the campaign.

Scores of lobbyists attended the $100-per-person fund-raiser and rubbed shoulders with legislative leaders. The event Wednesday raised $20,000 for the campaign committee.

The stakes in the 1990 legislative races are also high for Republicans, who hope to have a larger presence when the General Assembly begins to redraw district lines for legislative seats, which it does after every census. Republican officials say past Democratic control of redistricting has limited Republican opportunities.

"We need to pick up enough members so we won't be germyndered out of office for another 10 years," state GOP Chairman R. Jack Hawke Jr. said.

The 1988 elections produced a high-water mark for the GOP. The party holds 46 seats in the 120-member House and 13 in the 50-member Senate.

Republican candidates were helped by a GOP tide led by President Bush. Also in 1988, voters re-elected Gov. Jim Martin and made Jim Gardner the first GOP lieutenant governor since 1901.

To hold those seats, Republicans will have to buck some historical trends in which GOP legislative candidates have fared worse in non-presidential election years.

"Republicans have a lot of seats to defend," said Mark Longabaugh, executive director of the state Democratic Party. "They are not going to have as fertile a climate."

In an effort to compete financially with the Republicans, the Democrats hope to beef up fund raising for 1990.

In 1988, the Republican Party poured more than $200,000 into legislative races, while the Democratic Party spent an estimated $80,000 to help elect Democratic legislators.

For the first time, the GOP made direct contributions, $98,000 to its candidates in 1988, Hawke said in an interview. Every candidate who submitted a campaign plan to Republican headquarters for review received $500, and those in targeted races got more.

The party also spent $60,000 to hire a four-member staff called Team PAC, headed by Rep. Robert Grady, R-Onslow, to hold workshops and provide issue papers for legislative candidates. For more emphasis, the legislative effort had a separate headquarters.

GOP legislative candidates also received $43,500 from the Republican National Committee.

The Democrats assigned only one staff member full-time to legislative races; although other party staff members helped part time, said Beth A. Barringer, director of the Democratic Legislative Campaign Committee.

The party made no direct contributions to Democratic candidates, and the Democratic National Committee provided no money for legislative races.

"We are going to have to have a more active effort from the party than in 1988," said Sen. Ted Kaplan, D-Forsyth, Senate chairman of the Legislative Campaign Committee.

Democrats plan to step up efforts to recruit candidates, raise more money for the campaign committee, target vulnerable Republicans and learn how to reach selected groups of voters in a more sophisticated way.

Meanwhile, Republicans have begun efforts to help their freshman class. They have held a session with the freshmen on what they should be doing to get re-elected, such as constituent work.

"I think we as Republicans have not done the job necessary to win off-year elections in a long time in North Carolina," Hawke said. "I understand there will be some trends against us. But that doesn't mean that a good, old-fashioned kind of local campaign can't make a difference in an off-year election."

Valuable weapons for the Republicans will be Martin and Gardner, both of whom are expected to campaign across the state for legislative candidates.

The governor, who stumped the state in a van for legislative candidates in 1986, is considering setting up a political action committee to help elect legislative candidates, Hawke said.

But Nesbitt said he was not particularly worried about Martin's influence. He noted that the governor has had his own troubles recently, especially with teachers who protested a temporary pay freeze he proposed.

"If Jim Martin is going to be he has been going, we might use him," Nesbitt said.

"We are of the opinion that legislative races are a very personal thing. Jim Martin has campaigned against us every time we've run. The only thing that makes a difference is the big sweep at the head of the ticket."

Lawyer Goes Free On Bond

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHARLOTTE — A Morganton lawyer charged with parental abduction was released on a $30,000 secured bond early Saturday after police brought him back to Burke County from Maine.

Hugh "Skip" Williams, 34, is scheduled for arraignment Tuesday in Morganton. He is charged with transporting his daughter Jessica out of state in violation of a custody order. The felony charge carries a maximum three-year sentence.

Williams' father, Hugh Williams Sr., a Morganton real estate agent, posted the bond.

Williams, who disappeared with Jessica on Oct. 28, said Saturday he's "running around like a chicken with my head cut off."

On Monday, he plans to look for work and begin helping out the more than 200 clients he left behind, he said.

"There's not much I can say to apologize," Williams said.

Williams has other legal troubles in connection with his flight. He faces misdemeanor counts in Burke County on charges of passing bad checks, and later this month, he faces a N.C. Bar review panel.

State's Schools, Roads Attract Japanese Firms

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — North Carolina's educational system, roads and airports — and its golf courses — are some of the drawing cards that attract Japanese investors to the state, a commerce official says.

"Basically, the state affords many good industrial sites and many strong communities. That allows the Japanese to come in and have their pick," said Gary Shope, director of a N.C. Department of Commerce program that recruits investment from the Pacific Rim of Asia.

Shope said Japanese investment was an important contributor to North Carolina's No. 1 ranking in the nation in announcements of new manufacturing facilities and plant expansions in 1988.

The state's community college system has worked hard to establish training programs to prepare workers in newly built facilities, he said. And word of the system has gone back to Japan.

"Many companies have come to North Carolina and have gone through the technical training programs. That goes back to Japan and word gets around."

Shope said other inducements help convince Japanese executives to bring their projects to the state. He said North Carolina has several strong Japanese-American associations and three schools where Japanese children may attend Japanese language classes so they can keep up with their peers at home.

The popularity of golf in Japan also plays a role in bringing Japanese investment to North Carolina, Shope said.

"On a subjective note, North Carolina is a golf state. There's (little) land in Japan. They come here and can see 20 or 30 golf courses in a 30-mile radius."

In 1988, North Carolina led the nation with announcements of new plants, and expansions of existing plants, with 101, beating out Georgia by one, according to a survey by Site Selection handbook, a journal for the economic development industry.

The survey included only plants and additions that involved investments of $1 million, created at least 50 new jobs, or resulted in at least 20,000 square feet of new floor area.

Shope said that according to the journal, 27 of the new plants and expansions in North Carolina involved foreign firms. Out of those, ten were Japanese enterprises.

"Overall, the business climate is perceived to be, and it is, very strong by the Japanese, and they see that business climate as having tremendous continuity," Shope said.

"The Japanese view, essentially, their project locations in long terms, not just one or two, three years down, but several years out," he said. "The strength of the business climate and the stability of it is really very important to them."

Shope said the Japanese investments are positive ones for the state.

"They tend to announce very substantial investment figures and they tend to hire from 200 to 400 people," Shope said.

Police Go In Small Numbers

WASHINGTON — Law enforcement is a lonesome job in nearly a thousand American communities with one-officer police departments, according to a government study.

Although some big cities and counties boast thousands of officers, nearly half of all police and sheriff's departments have fewer than 10 officers, the Bureau of Justice Statistics reported on Sunday.

Law enforcement agencies ranged in size from 34 police departments and 12 sheriff's offices with more than 1,000 officers apiece to the 987 departments with just one, according to the study, the first detailed statistical analysis of local law enforcement staffing.

All state police agencies, 99 percent of sheriff's offices and 97 percent of local police agencies with 135 or more officers require at least a high school diploma, the 1987 study found. A separate analysis of police standards in 1967 found only 70 percent required such a diploma.

In fact, the new study found, about 10 percent of the larger police departments and 6 percent of sheriff's operations are now requiring prospective officers to have at least some college education.

The Justice Department report said that overall the nation has 11,989 local police departments, 3,080 sheriff's departments and 49 state police agencies. Hawaii has no state police, even though such a department was once featured in the television show "Hawaii Five-0."

Nationally, law enforcement agencies had 757,508 employees including 555,364 sworn officers.

Of those agencies, 52.6 percent of local police departments have fewer than 10 officers and 79 percent have under 25, the report found. Among sheriff's offices, 33.6 percent had under 10 deputies and 67.3 percent had fewer than 25.

Thus, of the 15,057 local police and sheriff's agencies, 48.7 percent had fewer than 10 officers.

Sheriff's departments led the way in employing women, at 12.5 percent of their sworn deputies, the report found. Women constituted 7.6 percent of local police officers and only 4.2 percent of state troopers.

Blacks were more strongly represented on local police departments, making up 9.3 percent of the officers. Sheriff's offices reported 8.3 percent black deputies and state police lagged with 6.5 percent.

Average annual starting salaries for police officers ranged from $13,768 in the smallest departments to $23,000 in cities of a million people or more. Local police chiefs were paid salaries of between $18,503 and $87,044.

Salaries and wages accounted for six of every seven dollars spent on police work by governments. Total police spending was $28.3 billion.

Two-thirds of the departments that have 135 or more officers said they allow collective bargaining.

Nationwide, 31.7 percent of police agencies and 28.3 percent of sheriff's departments said they participated in the 911 emergency telephone system. The highest rate was 88 percent for police in cities of between 250,000 and 500,000 people. Sheriff's offices serving communities of under 10,000 reported that only 15.7 percent had the 911 system in use.

The responsibilities of the law enforcement agencies vary from place to place in addition to regular peacekeeping functions.

Nearly half of the departments are also responsible for animal control in their communities, for example, and one in four handles emergency medical services.

Other special functions include court security, handled by 22 percent of the departments; civil defense, 21 percent; civil process serving, 18 percent; jail operation, 12 percent; training academy, 6 percent; drug testing, 4 percent; and ballistics testing, 2 percent.

Blind Workers Call For Equal Pay

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LUBBOCK, Texas — Blind employees at a workshop established to rehabilitate them say they're being exploited and are demanding the same wages their sighted counterparts get for comparable work.

But the founder of the Southwest Lighthouse for the Blind says the workshop trains blind people for work in the private sector and is not required to pay the minimum wage.

The U.S. Labor Department is investigating the workshop's wages, and Lighthouse officials are to appear next month before an administrative law judge to defend the separate wage scales for blind and sighted employees.

"I think they're trying to have more of a factory out there than to do something for the blind," said David Rocco, a former Lighthouse employee who led a workers' strike in August and was laid off in January.

The dispute comes at a time when the blind are increasingly questioning their treatment at such organizations. About 100 similar workshops employ 6,000 visually impaired people nationwide.

Employees at workshops in Houston and Cincinnati have formed unions in the wake of wage and labor disputes. Unionization efforts by workers in Little Rock, Ark., were denied by an appeals court.

"Blind people have been exploited in workshops since workshops came into being," said James Gashel, director of governmental affairs for the National Federation of the Blind in Baltimore.

Officials had assembled a team of volunteers to nurse the child in case Hope rejected it, but so far she has warmed to her new role, while father, Carlos, remains next-door.

"It seems things are in excellent shape," Schobert said.

Zoo officials will continue to monitor the new family by camera and through Hope's usual care givers. Lowland gorillas generally nurse on and off for about three years, Schobert said.

ing is a learned and innate behavior in gorillas, Schobert said.

But the mother-child bonding is an encouraging sign, and zoo officials have refused to disturb the pair by weighing the baby or checking for its sex. Schobert could not estimate when they might get close enough to identify the sex of the baby, who remains unnamed.

Lowland gorillas such as Hope are vulnerable to extinction, and the birth marks the first successful captive breeding of them at the N.C. Zoo.

Gorilla Begins Nursing New Baby At N.C. Zoo

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ASHEBORO, N.C. — Hope, a lowland gorilla who gave birth on Wednesday, started nursing her baby gorilla Friday at the North Carolina Zoo, and zoo workers spotted Hope breast-feeding five times by late Saturday, according to Les Schobert, the zoo's general curator.

Zoo officials had feared that Hope, a mother for the first time, might reject her baby or fail to nurse it because she also was raised in a zoo and is a novice at motherhood. Nurs-

Power Struggle Over Tower's Choice Also Is Tarnishing Reputation Of Foe

By Lawrence L. Knutson
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — John Tower and his formidable Washington reputation are under siege in the Senate, but the once-pristine reputation of his principal opponent, Sen. Sam Nunn of Georgia, has been assailed in the battle as well.

Nunn, hailed for years as a principled, non-partisan, hard-working Democratic chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, is now accused of making a purely partisan grab for power.

"There's a lot more going on here than meets the eye," says Sen. Ted Stevens, R-Alaska, who characterizes allegations against Tower of excessive drinking and suspect ties to defense contractors as "total character assassination."

"It's a power struggle," Stevens says. "John Tower's opponents are contending he is not the person to head the Department of Defense rather than admitting they disagree violently with his policies."

Senate Republican leader Bob Dole of Kansas says Nunn is "obviously" partisan. He has said Republicans intend to examine "the allegation that Sam Nunn has some motive" in his conduct of the Tower affair.

In Nunn's case, what is under attack is the reputation he has built as a highly regarded and respected architect of defense policy who puts U.S. security interests ahead of other considerations.

"It is Sam Nunn's unique qualities of intelligence, thoroughness and thoughtfulness that have, with good reason, made him one of the most respected members — if not the most respected member — of the Senate," Majority Leader George Mitchell, D-Maine, said last week.

Although many Republicans aim the "power play" charge against Nunn and the Democrats, Sen. John Warner, R-Va., the senior Republican on the Armed Services Committee, walks a middle line.

On the one hand, he implies there are partisan motivations behind the assault on Tower. On the other, he absolves Nunn of complicity.

"It's not a power grab of trying to run the Pentagon from Capitol Hill," he says.

Nunn's Democratic colleagues are — predictably — even more emphatic.

"There has been no power grab by Sam Nunn or anyone else; that's hogwash," said Sen. Ernest F. Hollings, D-S.C., a Tower opponent who opened a counterattack of his own.

"There is no question about the partisan nature of Sen. Dole and his assault on this body," he said.

Nunn says developments have put him in a no-win situation.

"When you agree with them, they say, 'He's a statesman,'" Nunn says. "If you disagree, they say, 'How can he be so partisan?'"

"Either I would be a scapegoat because I was taking on a president, or I would be covering up the alleged transgressions of the nominee."

Is he upset by the "power play" accusations?

"That's part of the process," Nunn says. "They've got to find something to throw at me. The only way to handle a situation where you don't have the evidence on your side is to go after the person who is making the case. The effort here is to basically destroy my credibility."

Is he attempting to assert power over the Pentagon, to prevent a strong-willed leader like Tower from taking over?

"Bob Dole knows better than that," Nunn says. "It's preposterous to think that anyone can run the Pentagon from Capitol Hill."

As the battle over the Tower nomination raged in the Senate, The Wall Street Journal reprinted a December 1972 article from The Atlanta Journal reporting that Nunn had pleaded either guilty or no contest in 1964 — when he was 26 — to leaving the scene of an accident.

The article implied Nunn had been drinking at the time and the senator admits it.

"I pled guilty to leaving the scene, paid my fine, apologized to all concerned and, at age 26, learned a valuable lesson which I have not forgotten," he says.

"I don't know that this is relevant ... but I guess when you're in this kind of fight everything is fair game."

Nunn likes to point out that before the presidential election he and Warner sent a letter to candidates George Bush and Michael Dukakis, emphasizing the importance of high-quality nominees for Defense Department posts.

They said the letter was sent "principally to avoid any suggestion of partisan motivation."

Pentagon Helps Service Personnel With Adoptions

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The Defense Department, in a test program ordered by Congress, has begun reimbursing some of the expenses of active-duty servicemen who adopt children.

The unusual program, which provides up to $2,000 to offset the expenses of legally adopting a child, is set to last through the end of the current fiscal year — or until Sept. 30 — unless Congress votes to make the benefit permanent.

The adoption reimbursement program was formally launched by the Pentagon's personnel chief, Grant S. Green, last September and as of Dec. 31, the Army had processed 69 claims. The Air Force and Navy lagged behind the Army in publishing their regulations and are only now handling claims.

The test was ordered in the Pentagon's fiscal 1988 budget bill and was championed by Rep. Patricia Schroeder, D-Colo.

It was proposed not only as a morale-building benefit that might play a role in keeping men and women in the military, but also as a benefit for adoptive parents that parallels the cost of health care provided to women bearing babies in military hospitals.

The Defense Department nonetheless opposed the program, arguing Congress wasn't providing any extra money for the payments and it couldn't afford to tap other accounts.

"In the current fiscal climate, this program might negatively affect the other personnel and family initiatives that benefit a greater percentage of the military population," the Pentagon argued unsuccessfully.

The Defense Department has not requested any funding for the program in the fiscal 1990 budget pending before Congress, but promised it would "look at the results of the test program to determine further action."

The reimbursement payments are available to anyone on active duty "who initiates adoption proceedings after Sept. 30, 1987, and before Oct. 1, 1989," the Pentagon regulation states.

Tower Says He Would Face Critics

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Defense Secretary-designate John Tower says his "excessive drinking" in the past does not indicate any long-term problem and he would welcome the chance to defend his nomination on the Senate floor.

Tower, appearing Sunday on the CBS-TV program "Face the Nation," said he would not to ask that his nomination be withdrawn, arguing that the dispute over his selection has escalated beyond consideration of his qualifications.

The former senator repeated his pledge to stop drinking if confirmed as defense secretary, and he accused his detractors of hypocrisy.

Tower sought to deflect the most common criticism against him by drawing a distinction between the past heavy drinking he has acknowledged and an alcohol "abuse" problem that would disqualify him from sensitive military positions.

"I still have sip of wine now and again," Tower responded when asked whether he had stopped drinking since pledging a week ago to do so if confirmed by the Senate. "Once confirmed, I will give it up altogether."

The chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., has said Tower would fail to qualify for a sensitive military position because of his history of drinking.

Tower denied that, and said "I would be disqualified if you could prove alcohol dependency or chronic alcoholism. ... In the final analysis, it is a decision to be made by the commanding officer that should be based on hard evidence. In my particular instance, the president of the United States is the commanding officer."

"The fact is I am not alcohol-dependent," Tower said. "There is no conclusive proof to the effect. As a matter of fact, the weight of proof seems to indicate otherwise.

"I've admitted to excessive drinking in the 1970s," Tower said. "I've said excessive drinking, not alcohol abuse. ... There's a difference."

Tower said he would relish a chance to appear on the Senate floor to defend himself, as suggested by Senate Republican leader Bob Dole of Kansas.

The decision on allowing Tower to appear in the Senate rests with newly chosen Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell, D-Maine. Mitchell opposes Tower's nomination, but has not ruled on Dole's suggestion.

Dole, appearing on the ABC-TV program, "This Week With David Brinkley," vowed "to fight this to the end."

"John Tower is the best-suited man in America. President Bush has said so, and he has the right to make the nomination because he won the election," Dole said.

The Tower nomination has threatened to undermine relations between the White House and Congress at the outset of the Bush administration. The Senate Armed Services Committee voted 11-9 against Tower on Feb. 23, splitting on partisan lines with Democrats in favor and Republicans against.

Democrats, led by Nunn, say they are troubled by reports of Tower's excessive drinking, extramarital affairs and his ties to defense and aerospace contractors.

One Democrat, Sen. Dennis DeConcini of Arizona, said on CNN that although many of the accusations against Tower had proved untrue, he decided to vote against the nomination because "it's risky to have someone with his background and the problems he has had in that office."

Tornadoes Hit In South, Snow Covers Midwest

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

A fierce winter storm spread up to a foot of snow and ice from the South to Ohio, closing schools in four states today after disrupting flights at Dallas-Forth Worth International. Damaging tornadoes swept across Alabama and Georgia.

Severe thunderstorms along a cold front raked the Southeast with rain and golf ball-size hail and produced tornadoes that heavily damaged a Georgia motel and killed one person in a mobile home Sunday night.

Sunday's bad weather also was blamed for six other deaths, including two children killed in an house fire in Alabama ignited by lightning.

The weekend snowstorm developed from a cold front out of the Northwest and sent heavy snow to the southern Plains. Today, the wintry weather stretched from eastern Oklahoma to Pennsylvania, said Hugh Crowther of the National Weather Service's Severe Storms

Forecast Center in Kansas City, Mo.

Thunderstorms extended from northern Georgia across northwest Florida into the Gulf of Mexico early today.

The heaviest snows were in Oklahoma, where up to a foot fell in Chandler, and in Missouri where snowfall totals in the Ozarks reached 10 inches.

Schools remained closed today in parts of Arkansas, Oklahoma, Texas and Ohio.

Crowther said the snow should taper off as the storm moved slowly east, with snow to the north and rain to the south.

Temperatures dipped to record lows early today in Port Arthur, Texas, 24; Shreveport, La., 24, and Wichita Falls, Texas, 15.

The cold, however, didn't keep an Arkansas couple from exchanging wedding vows at an outdoor ceremony or 3,000 Texans from a much heralded Ramses II exhibit in Dallas.

"Beautiful day for a wedding," said the Rev. Gregory Hogan, after he shucked his fur-collared overcoat to preside at the wedding of Jo Wright and Bill Stackhouse in Little Rock. It was 31 degrees when they exchanged vows.

"Maybe we will take a honeymoon in Mexico, or someplace warm," Mrs. Stackhouse said.

The blowing snow brought traffic to a crawl or made travel nearly impossible in many areas.

Crews worked around the clock at Dallas-Forth Worth International Airport, where snow forced disrupted flights Sunday. American Airlines canceled about 240 of its more than 400 flights there, spokeswoman Mary O'Neil said.

"I've got a lobby full of people wanting rooms, and I'm full and it's blowing like crazy," said Mary Martin of the Green Country Motel in Sallisaw, Okla. "They can't hold their trucks and vehicles on the highway."

One of three tornadoes that touched down southwest of Atlanta late Sunday heavily damaged about five houses and an Econo Lodge motel in Newnan, said Coweta County Sheriff's Capt. Ross Henry.

He said 19 people were taken to hospitals, about 10 from the motel. Several people had broken arms "but we were very fortunate no one was killed," Henry said today.

"We had one woman who was trapped in the wreckage at the motel for a while," Henry said. "She had internal injuries and was apparently the most seriously hurt."

A dispatcher for the neighboring Heard County Sheriff's Department who would not give his name said a man was killed when the storm hit a mobile home near Franklin.

The Oklahoma Highway Patrol said two motorists died when their car slid on ice and collided with a tractor-trailer on the Will Rogers Turnpike in northeastern Craig County.

In Ohio, two women were killed when a car when out of control on U.S. 6 near Sandusky in northern Ohio and struck another car, the state Highway Patrol said.

Lighting was blamed for a Sunday morning house fire that killed a 14-year-old girl and her 7-year-old brother in Russellville, Ala. The children's parents and two younger children escaped.

Police Chief Donnie McGuire said Elton King, who was hospitalized with burns, hurled his wife and their two younger children through a second-floor window of the burning house.

Five tornadoes struck central Alabama, with most reports of damage in Talladega County, including damage to a storage building, automobile dealership, a mobile home sales park and several mobile homes.

About two dozen people went to the Shelby County Emergency Management Agency's office in Columbus to wait out the stormy weather, said Bill Tucker, the agency's director.

"When the weather gets bad, people in mobile homes come down and keep me company here," he said.

NATO Calls On Soviets To Cut Tanks, Artillery

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

VIENNA, Austria — NATO today urged Moscow to cut its tanks and artillery in eastern Europe by two-thirds to give impetus to new talks aimed at reducing conventional forces on the world's most heavily armed continent.

Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze countered with demands for percentage reductions by East and West of troops, tactical nuclear weapons and combat aircraft as well.

Shevardnadze proposed that both military blocs reduce troops and "the main categories of arms" by 10 to 15 percent over the next two to three years.

In a second phase of two to three years, further cuts of about 25 percent, or half a million men, should be made by each side, he said.

The North Atlantic Treaty Organization will enter the negotiations, which formally open Thursday, with a call for lopsided Warsaw Pact reductions of weaponry excluding missiles and combat aircraft.

The Western military alliance maintains the Warsaw Pact has almost a 2-to-1 advantage in tanks and artillery.

Along the East-West divide in Europe, Shevardnadze said, the two blocs should agree on areas where they would reduce, limit or withdraw "the most dangerous, destabilizing kinds of arms."

"Tactical nuclear arms would also be withdrawn from those zones," he told foreign ministers gathered in Vienna's historic Hofburg palace for a three-day, 35-nation meeting preceding the opening of negotiations.

Shevardnadze also proposed separate talks on "reducing and completely eliminating tactical nuclear arms in Europe" as soon as possible.

His speech ran counter to U.S. aims to keep short-range nuclear weapons in West Germany, which has asked NATO to delay any decision on modernizing such forces for at least two years.

Foreign Secretary Sir Geoffrey Howe of Britain, speaking after Shevardnadze and outlining NATO's proposals for the new talks, stressed the need to maintain a nuclear presence in Europe.

He said Shevardnadze's proposals, while differing from the West's, were worthy of serious study.

"The Vienna negotiations must not become a competition for who can put forward the more radical proposals," Howe said. "They are a serious quest for stability and security and not a competitive striptease."

Howe proposed an overall ceiling of 40,000 tanks, 33,000 artillery and 56,000 armored personnel carriers in Europe. Those totals should be equally divided on each side — the 16 NATO nations and seven Warsaw Pact countries.

He also proposed a limit of 3,200 tanks, 1,700 artillery pieces and 6,000 armored troop carriers stationed outside national borders on each side.

That would significantly slice the Soviet armored presence in Eastern Europe. Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev announced in December a unilateral withdrawal of six tanks divisions and 50,000 men from East Germany, Czechoslovakia and Hungary in the next two years.

But the Soviet Union currently has some 10,000 tanks stationed outside its borders, meaning further cuts would be needed to meet the NATO proposals.

Howe said NATO is seeking a two-thirds reduction "in the massed ranks of Soviet tanks and artillery in Europe, and by well over half in armored troop carriers."

This would not threaten Soviet security, he stressed, because "the Soviet Union will still have more tanks within the area than the United States and West Germany combined."

Shevardnadze, by contrast, said he was not proposing any concrete numbers, arguing that the fixing of such ceilings should be left to experts.

The 35 foreign ministers meeting in Vienna are from the nations that signed the 1975 Helsinki Final Act — the superpowers, Canada and all European nations bar Albania.

Those 35 nations agreed in mid-January to launch two sets of arms control negotiations to enhance security in Europe.

U.S. Fears Afghanistan Could Turn Into Major Drug Source

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — U.S. officials are concerned that Afghanistan, already a principal opium producer, could become an even greater source of illicit narcotics in the wake of the Soviet troop withdrawal.

"Afghanistan... worries everyone who is interested in this issue," said Ann Wroblewski, the assistant secretary of state for narcotics affairs.

Ms. Wroblewski, in discussing the department's annual narcotics control report, said the problem is likely to be aggravated when the estimated 3 million to 5 million Afghan refugees return to their homeland.

In the wake of the destruction caused by the nine-year war against the Soviet occupiers, traditional agriculture has been made nearly impossible in many regions.

"As we see refugees moving back into a war-torn country where there is no strong central government, we see them returning to a fairly easy, quick, profitable means of supporting themselves," Ms. Wroblewski said.

"Therefore, the prediction is that output of opium will increase out of Afghanistan, which then leads to a chain reaction of increased heroin moving through Pakistan," she added.

Throughout the opium-producing region that also includes Iran, Burma and Laos, "prospects are not good" for any reduction in the opium trade in the coming year, Ms. Wroblewski said.

With some 700-800 metric tons produced last year, Afghanistan is second only to Burma in opium production in Southern Asia, the report said.

"Compounding U.S. government frustration at increasing worldwide opium supplies is the fact that about 90 percent of the world's opium production takes place in areas in which the United States has little or no access — such as Afghanistan, Lebanon, Laos and Burma," the report said.

Bigfoot Believer Out To Prove His Case

WALLA WALLA, Wash. — Even a Bigfoot believer like Paul Freeman concedes the supermarket tabloids get carried away.

"HUGE BIGFOOT MONSTER TERRORIZES THE ROCKIES! It stunk like a sewer, roared like a lion and clutched the leg of an animal in its hand."

"BIGFOOT ATTACKED US! Blood-Crazed Creature Savages Camera Crew and Pounds 2-Ton Truck Into Junkyard Scrap."

Freeman smiles at the outlandish stories, which he collects in a cardboard box. "There are some crazy people out there," he says.

Freeman himself has been called the craziest of all.

But he knows otherwise. He says he has seen Bigfoot. Four times. He swears it's true, and he is out to convince a doubting world that the legendary ape-monsters, perhaps a thousand strong, really do roam the dark woods of the Pacific Northwest.

"I know they are there, and I know what I see," Freeman says. "Nothing has to be proved to me. But I'd like to prove it to the public, so they'll say Freeman's not really a kook."

Bigfoot — or Sasquatch, as the Indians called the beast — is one of the Northwest's enduring legends. More than 750 sightings of the creatures or their oversized footprints have been reported over the past century, mostly in the evergreen forests stretching from Northern California to British Columbia.

Yet no Bigfoot has ever been killed or captured.

No carcass or bones have ever been found.

A few purported Bigfoot photographs exist, including a picture taken in October by Freeman's son, but they always seem to be out of focus, too dark, or too far away. What looks like Sasquatch could be a misshapen tree stump or someone in a monkey suit.

Skeptics point to hoaxes, like the time a Washington man created a whole Bigfoot family by stomping around with three whopping pairs of feet he had carved of wood.

But if you want to believe, talk to Paul Freeman.

Drive with him eastward from Walla Walla, where the flatlands of southeastern Washington rise into the Blue Mountains of the Umatilla National Forest. Listen to Freeman's tales of safaris into the forest's 177,000-acre wilderness area. Behold a lonely land of wind-bared ridges and dark, forested canyons.

Bigfoot country, Freeman says: "You can go in there all summer and not see anybody."

Not that nobody sees you.

Freeman tells of suddenly skittish horses, of normally docile dogs growling fiercely at the darkness. "Your skin gets kind of crawly and the hair stands up on your neck," he says. "You know you're being watched, but you don't know from where."

Freeman, 45, does not seem the type to spook easily. He is beefy, bearded and, at 6-foot-4 and 265 pounds, approaches Sasquatch proportions himself. He's a meat-cutter by trade, an outdoorsman and hunter by nature.

He says he too was a skeptic — until June 10, 1982, when he was working as a watershed patroller for the U.S. Forest Service and met up with a shaggy, reddish-brown Bigfoot nearly 8 feet tall.

"He was 60 yards away," Freeman recalls. "I watched him walk the length of two football fields. He'd take a few steps, look back at me, and take a few more steps. Then he went up over a hill and disappeared."

When word got out, Freeman became an instant celebrity, but the fame was spiked with ridicule. Reporters hounded him. His supervisors doubted him. Anonymous callers said he was crazy and threatened to take his three children away.

Freeman quit his Forest Service job and moved away, drifting through a series of jobs. A gnawing need for vindication, he says, drew him back to Walla Walla in 1984.

He has been on the spoor of Bigfoot ever since. He says he is in the woods three days a week and figures he has sunk $50,000 into the search, funding it by driving trucks part time and tapping profits from the sales of a meat-cutting business and to houses.

What can he show for his effort?

There is a trunk filled with plaster casts of Bigfoot tracks; and hair samples that, according to Freeman, experts cannot identify as man or beast.

Near the kitchen door of his rented home, a map is webbed with lines marking where he and son Duane, 22, have tracked Sasquatches. In the freezer sits a chunk of suspected Bigfoot scat.

Last Oct. 5, Duane snapped three color photos that he and his father say show a creature they spotted 35 miles east of Walla Walla. The best one shows a black, ape-like shape in a clearing 150 yards away.

Duane says it made a believer out of him, but the fuzzy pictures do less for one who wasn't there. "I was shaking a lot," Duane explains.

Those In Public Relations Aren't Snake-Oil Salesmen

Dear Abby: In a recent letter, a high school senior (I'll call him John) accused a girl of stealing his girlfriend's expensive bomber jacket. He made this accusation publicly in a crowded school lunchroom. Actually, the girl had bought the jacket herself from money she had saved from baby-sitting. The poor girl was humiliated and fled in tears. John learned soon afterward that he had wrongly accused this girl, so he had flowers delivered to her in care of her classroom. The girl's mother thought this was an act of "chivalry," but you called it a "grandstand play," then added: "This kid is a natural showman. He should go far in the P.R. business."

Abby, it's sad that so many people perpetuate the myth that public relations professionals are "showmen," con artists and snake oil salesmen. Today's public relations professionals are ethical, conscientious and honest, and to suggest that the "showmanship" exhibited by that brash, insensitive young man qualifies him for a successful career in the P.R. business is an insult to all of us in that profession.

Please use the power of your column to set the record straight. I think you owe a public apology to all of us in the P.R. business. — A.J. Soley, Joliet, Ill.

Dear Mr. Soley, and everyone else whom I offended: It was not my intention to denigrate the public relations profession. It's my understanding that one of the functions of a public relations firm is to create, improve and maintain positive images for people and businesses through publicity and advertising campaigns. (Remember the Tylenol tampering scare — and how well that product recovered?)

Back to John: Had this young man been able to hire a top-notch P.R. firm to restore his tarnished image, they could not have done a better job than he did. Brash as he was, he also had the kind of imagination and creativity one needs to go far in the P.R. business.

Dear Abby: Will you please straighten me out on something that has baffled me for years? When do you use "infer" and when do you use "imply"? I always confuse these two words.

Please don't send me to the dictionary. I have looked up both of these words a dozen times, and I still don't get it. — Detroit Dummy

Dear Dummy: "Imply" means to suggest or to say indirectly. "Infer" means to deduce, or conclude from facts or indications.

Think of it this way: The implier is the pitcher; the inferer is the catcher. (Catch?)

Dear Abby: Please settle an argument I am having with all my friends and acquaintances on the subject of "Juniors" becoming "Seniors" when their fathers die. I say "Junior" automatically becomes "Senior" when the father dies. Right? — Waiting In Annapolis

Dear Waiting: No. According to the revised edition of the "Amy Vanderbilt Complete Book of Etiquette" by Letitia Baldrige: "A 'Jr.' usually drops the 'Jr.' when his father dies, unless both he and his late father were so well known that to drop it would cause public confusion."

If you would like to write to Abby, send your letter to Abigail Van Buren, P.O. Box 69440, Los Angeles, CA. 90069. For a personal, non-published reply, enclose a self-addressed stamped envelope.

Loan Plan Studied

ably can be invested in other things, making up the difference, she argues. Also, home prices typically shoot up faster than inflation. So you still may be able to profit from price rises.

And while payments in later years will be larger, you also will be accumulating equity faster then, Ms. Woodward says. Presumably, your income also will be larger then too, rising with inflation.

At any rate, most homeowners do not own their homes as long as 30 years anyway. And PLAM loans can be refinanced without prepayment penalties, Ms. Woodward argues.

Another PLAM advantage: Payments will not fluctuate to the degree that current adjustable-rate mortgages do, because the inflation rate is not as volatile as interest rates, contends Gerald Detwiler, a branch manager for CityFed Mortgage Co., a nationwide mortgage banking firm.

the loan's nature, there can be no annual "caps" that limit rises in payments, as are included in conventional adjustable-rate mortgages.

As such, a PLAM loan would be inappropriate for you if you are living on a fixed income, or expect to be soon. "If you will only earn $1,000 a month for the rest of your life, then it is risky to take out a mortgage tied to inflation," Ms. Woodward admits.

But PLAM proponents say the first drawback — not building equity fast initially — isn't so bad when you consider how much lower the initial payments are.

"Sure, you will have less equity in early years," Ms. Woodward says. "But that stands to reason because you have a smaller payment."

Money saved in the early years from those lower payments presum-

EAL Issues Warning To Pilots

Eastern President Phil Bakes, admitting that service has "been a mess," urged the pilots to return. "Come back now and make this airline work," Bakes told a news conference Sunday. "Come back for your families, come back for Eastern Airlines. ... We can make it work."

He also apologized to customers and admitted that the carrier had miscalculated when it had assured travelers there would be no major disruptions.

Charles Bryan, negotiator for the Machinists, did likewise. "We feel very bad and certainly apologize for inconvenience to the traveling public," he said on ABC-TV's "This Week With David Brinkley."

But, he added: "This is probably the purest classic case of evil versus good that's been seen in the history of organized labor. ... These people were not workers who were greedy or doing anything wrong."

By honoring the pickets and virtually shutting down the carrier, pilots threatened Eastern's "very existence," Matel said Sunday. "By continuing to stay out, the pilots are committing economic suicide," he said.

The company late Sunday sent pilots a letter telling them to return to work before noon Tuesday or be classified as being on strike. Pilots who are placed in that classification and later go back to work will be required to sign a "preferential recall list," according to the letter from Frank Causey, Eastern's chief of pilot operations.

The wording appears to refer to last week's U.S. Supreme Court ruling that allowed Trans World Airways Inc. to reward flight attendants who crossed picket lines during a strike by moving them up the seniority list over attendants who refused to work.

The pilots "wouldn't be surprised" if Eastern went to court charging the group with an illegal strike, union spokesman Skip Stokes said. Thousands of anxious passengers holding tickets on canceled Eastern flights spent hours in lines that snaked around airport terminals, hoping to find seats on other airlines or get refunds.

"I'm not flying this stinking airline again!" yelled John Vannua of New York's Long Island, who had been waiting three hours at Miami International Airport to have his ticket validated for another carrier. Pickets chanted and baggage piled up at airports from San Juan, Puerto Rico, to Los Angeles and from Miami to New York. Some Eastern planes were stranded on Caribbean islands without crews, the company said.

In Washington, Air Line Pilots Association President Henry Duffy said his union was asking all pilots nationwide to strictly follow aviation rules starting Tuesday "to ensure the safety of the (air traffic) system," which he said had been weakened by the Eastern disruptions.

Duffy said the action would slow air traffic, but insisted that was not the intent.

Battered by years of labor tension and growing competition in the deregulated airline business, Eastern has racked up nearly $2.5 billion in debt and claims daily losses of more than $1 million. It wants $150 million in concessions from the International Association of Machinists over four years; the union wants $50 million in raises.

George Mason Rally Ends East Carolina's Dreams

Patriots Come From Behind For 65-58 Victory

By Woody Peele
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

HAMPTON, Va. — Just when it seemed that dreams might come true, the dream turned into a nightmare.

With just over five minutes to play in the Colonial Athletic Association basketball tournament semifinal game Sunday, East Carolina seemed headed for the finals. The sixth-seeded Pirates held an eight-point lead over number two George Mason.

But just as he had done in the first meeting of the two teams in January, freshman Mike Hargett turned into a three-point monster and led the Patriots back from the brink to a 65-58 victory over the Pirates and a berth in the finals against UNC-Wilmington tonight.

Kenny Murphy sank a three-point basket and Blue Edwards added two free throws to lift the Pirates from a 44-41 lead to a 49-41 edge with 5:22 showing on the clock.

But Robert Dykes tossed back a rebound for the Pats and Hargett added two free throws. Then, after Edwards made two free throws to put it back to 51-45, Hargett hit from the top of the arc with 4:32 left to trim it to 51-48. Following an exchange of points that made it 54-51, Hargett again stepped up to bury another three with 2:02 left, this time tying it at 54-51.

It was then that the nightmare got even worse. Reed Lose was called for a charge after a shot, and Hargett hit the first of the one-and-one for the first Patriot lead since the first half.

ECU coach Mike Steele questioned the call. "We had a number" of opportunities (in the last five minutes) where we took the shot and they ended up shooting free throws. Reed goes in for a layup, they cut him and he gets the foul."

"(The referee's) got to make the call and I guess I've got to live with it," Lose said. "Maybe I should have pulled up. But I thought I got fouled from behind and then someone cut in front of me. I don't know."

Edwards, who tied the CAA single game scoring record with 34 points, put the Pirates back on top, but the Patriots fouled Dykes, who returned it to the Patriots. Gus Hill then made two free throws with 1:10 showing to again put the Pirates up.

Then came the play that may have been the clincher. The Pirates missed on a shot after a turnover, and Murphy went up to tap it in.

Duke Rallies Past Carolina, 88-86

Devils Come From 10 Down

Duke's Danny Ferry looks to basket past J.R. Reid

CHAPEL HILL — A 10-point lead midway through the second half had the Tar Heel faithful rocking, but Duke's Blue Devils put a quick end to the celebration.

After falling behind, 70-60, with 7:26 to go, Duke rallied back and held off a number of late challenges by North Carolina to take a 88-86 Atlantic Coast Conference basketball victory Sunday.

The matter wasn't settled until the final seconds, though.

With Duke leading 87-85 and seven seconds left in the game, Duke All-American Danny Ferry threw the ball away on the inbounds play and UNC's King Rice recovered the ball in stride just past halfcourt. His breakaway layup rolled off the rim, but he was fouled by Quin Snyder with one second left. Rice hit the first shot but missed the second as Duke preserved its lead.

Robert Brickey added a free throw on the next play to account for the final margin.

"The thing I really like was the way we reacted when we were down 10," Duke coach Mike Krzyzewski said. "We showed a lot of poise. We didn't try to get it all back right away. We showed much better tempo after Quin hit the 3-pointer instead of scurrying around."

It was a tight game most of the way before UNC went on a 15-3 tear with just over 12 minutes left in the game to go up by as many as 10. Reid had four points in the stretch and Steve Bucknall had a key three-point play.

When Scott Williams followed a miss by Rick Fox with 7:26 left to make it 70-60, Krzyzewski called for a timeout.

"It wasn't an X-and-O timeout," Ferry said. "It was just (to say) stick together. That was the one thing coach said. When we stick together, we can be a pretty good team. We responded."

Leading the way was Snyder, who took advantage of UNC's inside double-teaming defense to break through for three key 3-pointers down the stretch.

"I haven't shot the ball as well as I would have liked to this year," Snyder said. "But they were playing off me."

His first trey came right after the timeout. After the Blue Devils got the ball back on a jump ball, he nailed another with 6:05 left to make it 70-66.

Bucknall, who scored a team-high 23 points in his final home game, missed at the other end and Christian Laettner rebounded for Duke. Ferry then scored inside with 5:39 remaining to make it 70-68.

Fox finally broke the Tar Heels' drought with a tap in to make it 72-68, but Greg Koubek countered with a basket inside to pull Duke back within two at 72-70.

A free throw by Fox made it 73-70, but Henderson hit two from the stripe at the other end to make it 73-72.

On UNC's next possession, Kevin Madden stepped out of bounds to turn the ball over to Duke. Snyder worked free for another bomb and Duke had regained the lead, 75-73 with 3:24 left.

"We went to a zone and Quin Snyder hit some tough shots," Reid said. "He hadn't been looking for his shot against the man (defense) and when he saw the zone his eyes lit up."

In all, Snyder scored 11 of his 15 points in the second half while hitting three of five from 3-point range.

Duke went up by as many as five points on three separate possessions after that, the last being 87-82 after a dunk by Henderson with 45 seconds remaining.

Fox countered with a three-pointer to make it 87-85 and UNC then got a chance to tie when Ferry slipped after catching an in-bounds pass and was called for traveling with 38 seconds left.

UNC set up on offense and tried to get the ball into Reid but Ferry came around and batted away the entry pass. Snyder recovered the loose ball and was fouled. He missed the front end of the one and one with 22 seconds to go, but the teams traded turnovers before Duke regained the ball with seven seconds left.

Next came Ferry's misplay on the in-bounds pass, but when Rice missed the second shot on the free throw, it didn't matter.

"We had two chances to get it inside to tie and didn't," UNC coach Dean Smith said. "They were deflected and those two plays hurt."

"The key was when we were up by 10. We were going to chase Ferry off me."

The last time East Carolina went to a conference championship game, Blue Edwards was six years old.

There were high hopes Sunday, hopes dashed in the final minutes of ECU's second round game with George Mason.

If the Pirates are to do it again, it will be without the services of Edwards, who may have been the finest player ever to wear the Purple and Gold.

Edwards finished the season with a record 771 points. In his brief two year career, he scored a total of 1,175, eighth best among Pirates. Only number five Oliver Mack, with 1,196 did as much in two seasons.

Blue, however, was multifaceted. He not only scored, he got the ball to teammates to score, ranking ninth on the career list. He also played defense, finishing third in career steals and eighth in blocked shots.

"I'm going to miss Blue Edwards," Mike Steele said, "not only because of the kind of player he is, but because of the kind of person he is."

Two other seniors also closed out their careers Sunday, Kenny Murphy and Jeff Kelly. Murphy, who walked onto the team and earned a starting berth as a junior, was a steady performer who usually did the job on defense. He could score, and had some good games, but generally was in the shadow of other more prolific players.

Kelly, who set ECU season and career records in assists, did his job quietly and without fanfare. He took a lot of abuse from fans, abuse he didn't deserve. Jeff may not have been the most talented point guard in ECU history, but few, if any, worked as hard and played as hard as he did.

East Carolina may become accustomed to heart-breaking losses in the CAA tournament. This is the third that I can recall in the brief history of the league.

The first time East Carolina advanced to the semifinals of the tournament, back in 1982-83, the Pirates won a close game from George Mason. Then, in the semifinals, they had William & Mary on the ropes with Johnny Edwards leading the way.

Losing Is Not Customary Thing

By Tom Morris
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

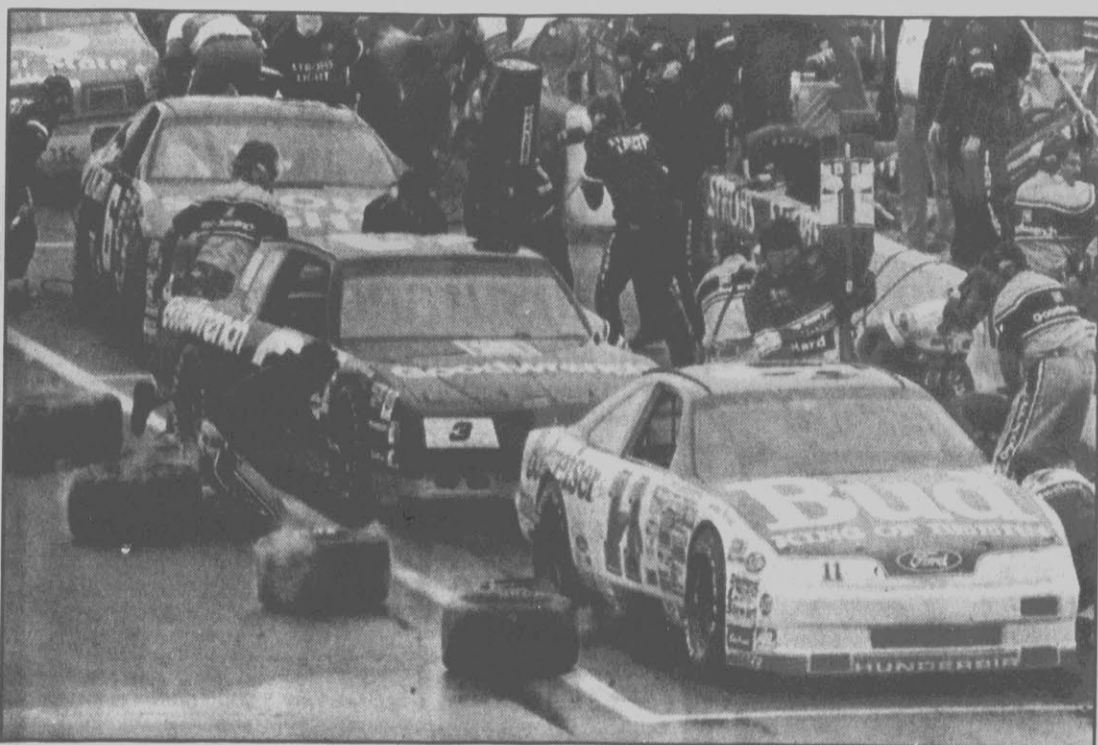

CHAPEL HILL — Senior Day at North Carolina has a number of standard customs, but losing the game certainly isn't one of them.

But that's exactly what happened to the Tar Heels Sunday as Duke came from behind to take a 88-86 win that prevented North Carolina from clinching a tie for first place in the Atlantic Coast Conference final regular season standings.

The game was the final home appearance for seniors Steve Bucknall, Jeff Lebo and reserve David May. All three were introduced along with their parents to standing ovations from the crowd before the game.

The loss to the Blue Devils was the second in a row for the Tar Heels, who dropped a 76-74 decision at Georgia Tech Thursday as Dennis Scott hit a 3-pointer in the waning seconds.

Wallace Uses Comeback Style To Capture Race

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ROCKINGHAM — Rusty Wallace, who earned the pole in the Goodwrench 500 NASCAR Winston Cup race with a track qualifying record, finished what he started, winning the contest in the comeback style that brought him to stock car stardom last season.

Wallace, driving a Pontiac on the damp North Carolina Motor Speedway, strode home the winner Sunday by about 10 car lengths over Ford driver Alan Kulwicki.

Wallace, 32, earned $72,100 of the $507,600 race purse.

"This win is for the crew," said Wallace, of St. Louis, who set a track qualifying record of 148.793 mph Thursday on the 1.017-mile trioval. "It seems we always get down, but we were real fortunate today.

The crew did a super job."

Kulwicki passed Dale Earnhardt's Chevrolet on the final lap to claim second. Geoff Bodine, Mark Martin and Davey Allison finished fourth through sixth, respectively, and were the only other drivers on the lead lap.

Wallace led seven times for 222 laps, including the final 22 when his pit crew got him out first after two caution periods.

"It may have looked like I could put the car anywhere I wanted, but it really started working the last two caution flags," Wallace said. "We got the stagger right. When I came in on the last stop I was just hoping I could get another good set of tires, and I did."

Earnhardt also finished third in the season-opening Daytona 500 two weeks ago and leads the points standings with 335 points. He's five points ahead of Bodine and nine ahead of Kulwicki.

"I had to drive it to death to bring it home," said Earnhardt, whose right rear tire began losing air after the final restart.

Average speed of the race was 115.122 mph. There were 29 lead changes among 11 drivers and 10 caution flags totaling 65 laps.

Daytona 500 champion Darrell Waltrip was plagued by mechanical problems and had to settle for a 29th-place finish.

Defending Winston Cup champion Bill Elliott started the race despite a broken left wrist suffered nearly three weeks ago during Daytona 500 practice. He was relieved by Jody Ridley during the first caution period on lap 47.

Pirate Softballers Win Tournament

ATLANTA, Ga. — East Carolina's softball opened its season by taking first place in the Georgia State Tournament held over the weekend in Atlanta.

The Lady Pirates swept a pair of games to claim the title. In the first game, ECU scored six runs in the ninth inning to break open a 3-3 game and record a 9-3 victory over Tennessee Tech. Tracey Kee and Jennifer Sagl, who went 2-3 in the game, began the ninth inning rally with a pair of hits. Wendy Tonker also played a key role for the Lady Pirates going 2-4 with a pair of RBIs. Larkin picked up the win on the mound for the Pirates in the opener. In the second game, ECU rolled to a five-inning, 14-0 win over Lander College to sew up the title. The game was stopped after five innings because of the 10-run "slaughter rule." Tonker led the Pirates at the plate, going 4-4 with 4 RBI, while Mickey Ford, Kee, and Kathy Schrage all went 2-4.

Valvano AP's ACC Coach Of Year

RALEIGH (AP) — North Carolina State basketball coach Jim Valvano, who led his team through a turbulent two months to the top of the Atlantic Coast Conference in the regular season, has been named the league's coach of the year by the Associated Press. Valvano outpolled Virginia coach Terry Holland in voting by a panel of sportswriters and broadcasters throughout the ACC region. It is the second straight year Valvano has captured the award. "Last year, I was very pleased to win the award because I think our team lived up to its expectations all year long," Valvano said. "This season, I'm especially pleased to win because I think this award goes straight to the players." Valvano had special words of praise for his team. Chucky Brown, Rodney Monroe and Chris Corchiani all were members of the AP's all-ACC first team. "They have overachieved and because of that I'm proud and pleased," Valvano said. The team achieved in the face of adverse conditions. Last January, the Wolfpack basketball program was the target of allegations of wrongdoing. The allegations surfaced on the dust jacket of a book and were published on the first weekend of 1989. Valvano denied the allegations, marshaled the team through the initial stages of the claims. Eventually, the publisher of the book announced that "Personal Fouls" would not be published. All along, Valvano kept the Wolfpack on course to the top of the ACC. On Sunday, his work was rewarded as Duke's victory over North Carolina ensured N.C. State's first-place finish in the regular season and top seed for the ACC tournament in Atlanta.

Seahawks Beat Richmond, Move To Finals

HAMPTON, Va. (AP) — The rubber match went to North Carolina-Wilmington, and with it came a chance for the Seahawks to play for an NCAA tournament berth. "This was the type of ballgame that I thought it would be," Coach Robert McPherson said Sunday after his Seahawks pulled out a 59-56 victory over Richmond in the semifinals of the Colonial Athletic Association tournament. It was North Carolina-Wilmington's second victory over Richmond in three meetings this season, and it put the Seahawks into tonight's CAA title game against George Mason, a 65-58 winner over East Carolina. An NCAA tournament berth awaits tonight's champion, and McPherson's team, seeded fourth in the eight-team CAA field, has made no secret that it considers itself the conference tournament favorite. "We had 120 minutes of work to do," McPherson said. "We've completed 80 of it. The last 40 minutes will be the toughest." Richmond went into the tournament as its defending champion and top seed. The Spiders lost only once during CAA regular-season play, to North Carolina-Wilmington last month. Coach Dick Tarrant said an at-large invitation is not likely for his Spiders. "Twenty and nine is a good season, though," he said. Larry Houzer paced North Carolina-Wilmington, 16-13, with 19 points, including five in the final 45 seconds. His layup with 45 seconds left put the Seahawks ahead for keeps at 54-52, and he pushed their lead to three points with a free throw 22 seconds later. With four seconds to play and the Spiders trailing 57-54, Richmond's Ken Atkinson was fouled before he could get off a 3-point attempt. He made the front end of the one-and-one, but missed the second, and in the scuffle for the rebound, Antonio Howard was called for fouling Richmond's Jim Shields. Shields made the first to cut it to 57-56, but missed the second. Bryan Withers got the rebound for North Carolina-Wilmington, was fouled with two seconds left and made both free throws. Richmond's last gasp was a 65-foot 3-point attempt by Curtis Blair that bounced off the rim as time expired. "The last 10 seconds or 20 was an eternity," McPherson said. Added Tarrant, "I said to myself at the end, 'We're going to win this thing.' I thought we had it, but we came up short." Howard added 14 points for North Carolina-Wilmington and Withers had 11. Richmond got 15 points from Scott Stapleton, 13 from Atkinson and 12 from Eric English.

Barber Claims Vintage Invitational Title

INDIAN WELLS, Calif. (AP) — Miller Barber isn't getting older — he's getting better. Barber, who's nearing his 58th birthday, shot a final-round 69 Sunday to win the Vintage Invitational seniors golf tournament by one stroke over Bob Charles, Larry Mowry and Don Bies. Barber said he doesn't know how long he can keep winning, but if his nerves remain steady, his composure stays cool and his putter stays hot, he sees no end in sight. "I'll just play as long as I feel competitive," said Barber, who had three birdies and no bogeys in his final round, which gave him a 7-under-par 281 for the 72-hole tournament. The $55,000 top prize raised Barber's earnings for the year to $170,055 and his Seniors career total now stands at $2,014,429. He's the first Senior to eclipse the $2 million mark. "All of those numbers mean nothing to me," Barber said. "If I thought about them when I played, I probably couldn't win anything. They're things that just happen."

Pirates Sweep Pair From Stags

By Tim Chandler
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Sparked by a pair of big innings, East Carolina's baseball team swept a doubleheader Sunday from Fairfield University.

The Pirates scored eight runs in the first inning of the nightcap en route to a 12-5 win, while they scored seven in the second inning of the opener to pave the way for a 14-4 win.

But even with the wins, which improve the Pirates' record to 6-0 for the year, ECU coach Gary Overton saw some things he didn't like.

"They were wins and that's the bottom line," Overton said. "But they weren't pretty. We didn't play sharp ball today."

"We have played back-to-back doubleheaders and the guys probably got tired since it's early in the year, but there's no excuse for some of the mistakes we made today," Overton said. "We got big leads and lost our level of intensity. You have to find a way to keep that up no matter what the score is."

For Fairfield coach John Slosar, the losses mean back to the drawing board.

"I guess I just made bad decisions on starting pitchers," Slosar said. "We've got to be able to keep down the big inning. I don't mind giving up a run as long as we don't give up seven and eight in an inning. We've got a good hitting team, but when we get in a position where we are as far behind as we were today, it takes us out of our game."

In the nightcap, the Pirates sent 12 men to the plate in the eight-run first inning.

Tommy Eason reached on a fielder's choice in which John Thomas and courtesy runner Dave Daniels were both caught for outs. Calvin Brown then doubled Eason home for the first run.

After John Gast singled and Steve Godin walked to load the bases, Mike Andrews ripped a two-run single to left.

Glenn Beck then walked setting up a two-run single to left by Dave Ritchie.

After Thomas walked on his second trip to the plate, Cauble belted in the final three runs of the inning when his shot to center was mishandled by Keith McCall.

Fairfield rallied with a pair of runs in the second inning. The runs scored following an error by Gast at third base.

The Stags added another run in the fourth inning to close within 8-3 before the Pirates finally got the bats going again in the fifth frame.

Cauble belted a two-out double to left and moved to third on a wild pitch. Cauble then scored to make it 9-3 after an infield single by Eason.

The Pirates added three more runs in the sixth inning as Gast, Godin and Andrews all walked to start off the inning. Kevin Riggs was the fourth straight Pirate walked in the inning pushing across one run, while Ritchie brought home another on a single to left. The final run scored on a fielder's choice by Thomas.

In the opener, the Pirates jumped out to a 3-0 lead in the first inning thanks to a 3-run homer by Calvin Brown.

The Pirates then put the Stags in a deep hole in the second inning as they tallied seven runs to open up the big lead.

Godin belted one of his two home runs in the game in the inning, while Thomas and Adams had doubles and Andrews, Riggs and Ritchie added singles.

"In both games we jumped out to big leads and that's what you have to do against a team like Fairfield," Overton said. "They swing the bats well and by us scoring early we took them out of their offense."

The Pirates and the Stags will square off today for a single game beginning at 1 p.m. ECU will send sophomore righthander David Willis to the mound.

15 Area Teams To Begin Action In Sectional Play

Fifteen area basketball teams enter North Carolina High School Athletic Association sectional playoffs, which begins tonight. Seven of those teams, however, have received first round byes and won't be in action until later this week.

On the 4-A front, only Rose High School's boys have advanced into the playoffs from the area. The Rampants, second in the Big East Conference, are among those getting a first round bye and will meet the winner of the New Bern-Fayetteville South View game, scheduled Tuesday, on Thursday. That game, at 7 p.m., will be played at Rose. A victory by the Rampants would put them into the sectional finals.

Four area teams advance in the 3-A playoffs, the boys' and girls' teams from D.H. Conley and from Washington.

Conley's two teams, both winners of the regular season championship, will have first round byes and will play their first games on Thursday. Conley's boys will meet the winner of Tuesday's game between Apex and Warren County, on Thursday at 8 p.m. at SouthWest Edgecombe. Conley's girls take on the survivor of Tuesday night's game between Western Harnett and Tarboro on Wednesday at 8 p.m.

Washington's boys, third in the Coastal, will travel to Southern Nash, the Tar Roanoke third-place team on Tuesday night. The winner advances to meet Triangle champ Southern Durham on Thursday at 6:30 p.m. Washington's girls, the second seed, are at home against South Johnston's on Tuesday. The winner then advances to face Tar Roanoke winner SouthWest Edgecombe. Those two semifinal games will be played at Harnett Central.

The bulk of the area action involves 2-A teams from the Eastern Plains and Northeastern Conference.

In boys' action, Ayden-Grifton is the only area team with a bye. The Chargers will entertain the winner of the Wallace-Rose Hill-Northampton East game on Thursday at 7:30 p.m. North Pitt, however, travels Tuesday night for a 7:30 p.m. game at White Oak. The winner advances to Edenton to face the Aces, the Northeastern Conference champion, on Thursday.

In Section Two boys' play, both Greene Central and Farmville Central will be in action. Greene Central travels to Plymouth Tuesday for a 7:30 p.m. game. Farmville Central, meanwhile, is at home to East Duplin, in an 8 p.m. game.

In the girls' play, Ayden-Grifton travels to East Duplin at 7:30 p.m. Tuesday, while North Pitt has a first-round bye. The Pant-Hers will be at home against the winner of Tuesday's night's game between James Kenan and Roanoke Rapids, on Thursday.

In Section Two, Northeastern champ Roanoke has a bye and will face the winner of the Farmville Central-Pender County game. That contest will be played at Farmville Tuesday at 6:30 p.m. as part of a doubleheader. The winner travels to Roanoke on Thursday.

Chocowinity's boys and girls' are the only area 1-A teams still playing. Chocowinity's girls won the Tobacco Belt Conference title and will have a first round bye. They meet the winner of tonight's game between Jones Senior and Currituck on Wednesday in a home-court battle at 7 p.m.

Chocowinity's boys, who went from the fifth seed to the TBC tournament championship, will face Lejeune in a first-round game Tuesday at 7 p.m. on the Indians' home court. The winner advances to a Thursday game at Northampton West.

Championship games in all sections are slated for Saturday, with the winners advancing to Fayetteville next week for the regionals.

Losing...

The two defeats have got the Tar Heels shaking their heads, wondering what's wrong.

"The last two games the way we've lost them there have been some calls that could have gone either way in both games and still you have to play down the stretch," junior center J.R. Reid said.

Next up is the Atlantic Coast Conference Tournament Friday in Atlanta.

N.C. State, the top seed, will play Maryland Friday in the first game at noon. A coin flip decided the next three seeds since UNC, Duke and Virginia tied for second place during the regular season. Duke will be the second seed and play Wake Forest Friday at 7 p.m. Virginia got the third seed and will play Clemson at 9 p.m. The Tar Heels ended up with the fourth seed and will play Georgia Tech Friday at 2 p.m.

"It's nice to finish as high as we did," UNC coach Dean Smith said. "But we wanted to win the regular season (too). That was one of our goals and we're disappointed we didn't win it. I'm disappointed very much for Jeff Lebo and Steve Bucknall. They competed very hard. But, we hope there's a lot left to our season."

No doubt there is. With a 24-7 record, the Tar Heels are once again headed to the NCAA Tournament. But that concern aside, the primary objective for the Tar Heels now is Friday's game and ending their two-game skid.

"It might motivate us and make us more hungry, coming off two heartbreaking losses," Lebo said. "We've got to regroup."

UNC lost two games in a row only one other time this year, falling to Clemson and N.C. State consecutively in early February. After that, though, the Tar Heels came back with six straight wins before falling to Tech.

Early March, though, is not the ideal time for a losing streak.

"It is rough losing two games like that in one week. Especially coming down to tournament time," sophomore forward Rick Fox said.

"It's rough to lose like this, especially, in the last one at home. The tournament is coming up. That would be a good paycheck."

Peele Col....

But in the last two minutes of the game, things turned around. Edwards missed a stuff and William & Mary was fouled on the rebound, giving the Indians the momentum for a 48-45 win.

Two years ago, perhaps the most heartbreaking loss in ECU history occurred when UNC-Wilmington's Brian Rowsom hit a three-point basket at the horn. In that game, the Pirates had led from the start and held a two-point lead with five seconds left when Keith Sledge, an outstanding free throw shooter went to the foul line to sew it up. But his shot went in and came back out, and Rowsom launched his shot that handed the Pirates a 59-58 defeat.

That was brought back to Pirate fans vividly as it was shown by Home Team Sports as a promo for this year's tournament time and again.

Next year, those three will be gone. It will be up to Coach Steele and his staff to fill the gaps.

Certainly, the Pirates of 1989-90 will not resemble this year's version. There will be no Blue Edwards. That, however, doesn't mean that the Pirates will not be a good team. They will be a different team.

But the CAA is going to be a strong conference next year. Nearly every team has some key losses, but they also have some key players returning.

UNC-Wilmington brings back Joe Cherry and Major Wiggins, two who could become stars. William & Mary returns Curtis Pride and is believed to have had a fine recruiting year. Richmond returns Ken Atkinson to build around and Jim Spears looks like another in the string of tall, gangly centers that Dick Tarrant gets so much from.

Navy returns Eddie Riddick, Sam Cook and Joe Gottschalk. American has Ron Draper, Mike Sumner and Daryl Holmes back.

And Lefty, at James Madison, is expected to field the best team in the league, not only including newcomers, but CAA Rookie of the Year William Davis, Barry Brown, Kenny Brooks and Claude Ferdinand.

Will there be any new coaches on the scene? As there have been for the last several years, there are rumors that Ed Tapscott may be gone from American. The Eagles still haven't won a tournament game in CAA play, and ECU's victory over them Saturday may prove fatal. That, a year after having been named co-coach of the year.

And who knows what will happen right here in our own back yard. Steele has been mentioned as a prime candidate for the job at Indiana State. Only time will tell.

Bullets Win Fourth Straight, Top Hornets

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LANDOVER, Md. When the 1988-89 season began, the Washington Bullets were often spoken of in the same breath as the NBA lottery. It went something like this: Sure they have two great scorers - Jeff Malone and Bernard King - but not much else.

Now, about two-thirds through the year, Washington is in post-season contention. Malone and King are doing what's expected of them, but the difference has been the Bullets' other players.

Five reserves were on the court against Charlotte Sunday night when, with the score 88-88 midway through the fourth quarter, Washington used a 14-1 burst en route to its season-high fourth straight triumph, 114-101 over the Hornets.

Malone had 30 of his 34 points and King 23 of his 27 when the spree began, and still the score was tied.

Steve Colter scored five of the 14 points. Mark Alarie four, Ledell Eackles three and Harvey Grant two - on a thundering dunk. The surge made the score 102-89 and the Hornets got no closer than six.

"Our coaches stress we need 12 players to contribute, not two or three," said Colter after the Bullets won for the sixth time in seven games and the ninth time in 12.

Washington moved within two games of Boston, still waiting for the injured Larry Bird to return, in the chase for the final playoff spot in the East.

"It feels good. I'm sure (the Celtics) look at the box scores every night," Malone said. "They know we're right on their back."

And the Hornets, who equaled a club record with their fourth consecutive setback, were right on the Bullets' backs through 3 1/2 quarters.

Said Alarie, "I think we got in a transition (game) and their starters had trouble keeping up with our second unit.

"As far as the media and public goes, the forecast for this season was dismal," said Alarie, a 10-point and seven-rebound contributor.

"We've really put things together," Alarie, Colter, Eackles and Grant combined to score 24 of Washington's 32 final-period points.

"They played very well," said Charlotte Coach Dick Harter of the Bullets. "They're unselfish, move the ball well and they don't fall off when they go to the bench. They are very underrated."

Rex Chapman tried to rally the Hornets by totaling 14 of his 22 points in the final period.

"I'm just trying to learn from my coaches and veteran players, so I can one day be a star in this league," said Chapman, who would've been a college junior had he not left Kentucky.

Kurt Rambis equaled his career-high with 21 points and had 11 rebounds for the Hornets. Kelly Tripucka scored 17 to move within two of 10,000 lifetime.

Washington surged to leads of 18-8 and 27-18, paced by King's 11 points and Malone's 10. Rambis scored five straight Hornets' points as Charlotte closed to 31-27 after one quarter.

Kings 110, Warriors 96 Golden State coach Don Nelson called it fatigue, but it could have been arm-weariness.

Sacramento beat Nelson's Warriors 110-96 Sunday night, 24 hours after Golden State scored an NBA-record 57 points in the third quarter of a 155-143 victory over the Kings.

"We scored 143 last night and lost and 110 tonight and won," Sacramento coach Jerry Reynolds said. "Same game plan, same guys. That's why I love basketball."

"Last night wasn't easy, we had a super third quarter," Nelson said. "That is a coach's fantasy and I wish we could do it again and again. Fatigue was really a factor in tonight's game and it really showed ... The players played hard but you can't expect a repeat of what happened yesterday."

Kenny Smith scored 28 points for the Kings, who snapped a franchise-record seven-game home losing streak. Sacramento's last previous win at Arco Arena was a 142-117 victory over Golden State on Feb. 9.

Harold Pressley added 21 points, Wayman Tisdale 19 and Danny Ainge 18, including three 3-point baskets, for the Kings. Tisdale had 17 rebounds and Rodney McCray 16 as Sacramento had a season-high 64 rebounds.

Mitch Richmond, who scored 47 points on Saturday, led the Warriors with 26.

Bucks 103, Cavaliers 98 Milwaukee broke Cleveland's 22-game home winning streak by holding the Cavaliers to nine points in the fourth quarter on 2-for-16 shooting.

Terry Cummings scored 26 points for the Bucks, who trailed 89-79 after three quarters. But the Cavaliers missed their first eight shots during a 12-2 Milwaukee run at the start of the fourth period, tying the game.

Brad Daugherty led Cleveland with 30 points and Larry Nance had 27. Larry Krystkowiak scored 21 for the Bucks.

Jazz 85, Hawks 83 Utah won for the third time in its last four road games as John Stockton and Bobby Hansen scored 20 points each and Mark Eaton added 15 points and 23 rebounds against Atlanta.

Stockton and Hansen each contributed five points, including a 3-point shot apiece, in a 12-0 spurt that gave Utah its biggest lead in the game, 67-54 late in the third period.

Rockets 88, Lakers 83 Houston snapped a seven-game losing streak and broke Los Angeles' four-game winning streak as Sleepy Floyd and Mike Woodson led a third-quarter comeback.

The Rockets trailed 48-39 at halftime, their lowest-scoring half of the season, but they outscored the Lakers 29-16 in the third period to take the lead for good. Floyd had nine of his 22 points and Woodson 10 of his 14 in the period.

Pacers 121, Trail Blazers 118, OT Indiana, which lost 26 of its first 27 road games, won for the third time on a four-game West Coast trip, as Detlef Schrempf scored nine points in overtime at Portland.

Reggie Miller scored 29 points and Chuck Person added 22 for the Pacers, while the Trail Blazers, who had their four-game winning streak snapped, got 22 points apiece from Clyde Drexler and Jerome Kersey.

Schrempf's 15-footer with 2:19 remaining in overtime put the Pacers ahead 115-113 and they held on to the lead from there.

Pistons 109, Heat 100 Isiah Thomas and Vinnie Johnson each scored 22 points as Detroit grabbed a big early lead and held on.

The Pistons, hitting 13 of their first 17 shots from the field, led 27-15 with 2:53 left in the first period. Bill Laimbeer had 14 of his 20 points during the early surge.

The Heat, which was being paced by Grant Long with 26 points, were unable to get the margin below seven.

Cavs End Season With 86-59 Rout

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHARLOTTEVILLE, Va. - Virginia coach Terry Holland says, his Cavaliers' 27-point triumph over Atlantic Coast Conference rival Maryland was not as decisive as the scoreboard might have shown.

"It was much tighter game than the final score indicated," Holland said Sunday after Virginia rolled to an 86-59 victory and into a three-way tie for second place in the ACC standings. "Maryland did a good job taking emotion away from us. They held on to the ball and took away any momentum by playing good defense."

Senior guard Richard Morgan, in his last home game, led the Cavaliers with 34 points and celebrated the victory by racing into the stands to embrace his parents after coming out of the contest with 2:18 left to play.

"That was classic Richard Morgan out there today, on and off the court," said Holland, whose Cavaliers improved to 18-9 overall upon their ACC mark to 9-5, the same conference record compiled by North Carolina and Duke.

The Cavaliers never trailed, opening the contest with an 11-2 surge en route to a 39-24 lead at intermission.

Morgan, who finished the game with six 3-point baskets, contributed 18 points in the first half.

Coach Bob Wade said his Terrapins "didn't do a good job team wise of realizing where Morgan was on the court."

Maryland, 8-19 and 1-13, got within 44-35 on a basket by Tony Massenburgh with 15:28 left in the contest.

But Morgan responded with a 3-pointer and the Cavaliers pulled away to their 11th victory in the last 14 outings.

"Richard got hot and at the end Maryland had to change its strategy and attack, and that helped us," said Holland, who said the Cavaliers got in trouble with tentative second-half play.

Bryant Stith added 15 points and 12 rebounds for Virginia. Brent Dabbs added 11 points.

The Terrapins, 0-11 on the road this season and losers of 16 of their last 18 games, got 19 points from John Johnson, 12 from Massenburgh and 10 from Jesse Martin.

Maryland played Sunday without starters Jerrod Mustaf, out with a knee injury, and Gred Nared, out with an ankle injury.

Wallace...

Ridley quickly was lapped because of worn tires and was never a factor. He drove the car to a 19th-place finish.

"I had to use my left hand a lot more than I wanted to, but the thing was I got awfully tired," Elliott said. "I couldn't have gone 30 more laps. It's just a bad situation."

The first 22 laps of the race were run under caution in an effort to dry the track from morning rains.

Wallace led through the 47th lap when Eddie Eberschwale's spin brought out the first caution.

A track-record 83 consecutive green flag laps were run between the first and second caution periods.

Cautions became the rule rather than the exception over the final 150 laps. Three of the cautions came during the final 70 laps. Wallace was the first out of the pits after each of the last three caution stops.

The final caution came on lap 483 when Richard Petty and Ken Schrader wrecked in the first turn. The race was under caution for three laps.

The top five drivers - Wallace, Earnhardt, Kutvicki, Bodine and Martin - each put on four new tires for the final six laps.

Wallace jumped to a quick lead on the restart and was never threatened.

McCallister Wins Honda Title By 4

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CORAL SPRINGS, Fla. - Curtis Strange, playing about an hour in front of the other contenders, knew his last chance was gone when he bogeyed the final hole at the Honda Classic.

Watching on television as Blaine

McCallister made a gutsy run down the stretch, Strange said:

"If he's going to win it, I hope he wins it big."

And he did. The 30-year-old who proudly identifies himself as "the only touring pro from Fort Stockton, Texas," twice escaped potential disaster with aggressive play and went on to a four-stroke victory Sunday.

"Wow, what a feeling," he said after a bogey-free, 8-under-par 64 had given him a 266 total, a distant 22 under par on the TPC course at Eagle Trace and three strokes better than the tournament record set by Jack Nicklaus in 1976.

"It was great to win that first one last year (Hardee's Classic), then to back it up with another one, well, it's hard to describe. I just want to go on and win another one, do it again."

"I knew it was coming. I came in here feeling good. I knew it was just getting some putts in the hole. And this time my putter showed up," said McCallister, who one-putted 10 times over the final 18 holes and pitched in for an eagle-3.

Despite pressure from Strange and Payne Stewart, the attacking McCallister said he never even considered the safe, conservative route.

George Mason Rallies...

"The shot goes in, and there's a whistle, and I thought, 'we've got a three-point play,'" Steele said. "But they call the foul on Murph. Unbelievable!"

Murphy said he, too, thought the foul was going to be called against GMU. "Somebody pushed me from behind. The tap went and I'm going to the line. I don't know who it was, I was just trying to get the ball into the basket. But it's a five-point turnaround, because we don't get the basket, the free throw, and they make both of them."

Dykes made the shots with 57 seconds left for a 59-58 lead and the Pirates never recovered. Edwards missed and GMU's Kenny Sanders rebounded and ECU fouled Steve Smith, who upped the lead to three and the Pirates followed by missing two three-point attempts, and fouling on the rebound, setting up the final margin.

All told, Mason outscored the Pirates, 24-9, in the final 5:02 of the ball game.

Steele said that the Pirates, who effectively kept Sanders from being a force in the game (14 points, six rebounds), had to give up something in their defense, and it was the three-point shot. "I give them credit for hitting it when they had to and for making their free throws down the stretch." GMU made 11 of 12 after tying the score at 58-58.

Asked if he thought the Pirates might have been a little impatient in shooting in the final minute, Steele said he didn't know. "Did Blue shoot it?" he asked. Told he did, he said, "I guess that's about as good as we can do then."

Edwards, the CAA's Player of the Year, suffered through a poor night shooting, hitting only 11 of 32 shots. "He missed some shots he normally makes," Steele said. "But he played the full 40 minutes (Saturday) and 40 minutes today. He had to be a little tired."

Edwards said he may have been rushing some of his shots. "Some of them went in and came out, shots I've been making all year."

Steele said a foul could have been called against Mason on nearly every one of Edwards' shot. "He could have had 50 points today," Steele said.

Chuck Broadnax, who drew the principal job of guarding Edwards, said he just tried to stop Edwards' penetration and get a hand in his face. "I bodied up to him a lot. I think I did a good job."

GMU coach Ernie Nestor said he thought the Pats did an outstanding job on Edwards. "When you play a great player like Edwards, you don't look at the points he gets, but the field goal percentage. 'Chuck, and the others who guarded him, did a great job. (Edwards) is a great player and such a factor in their offense. I feel very fortunate to have won."

Unlike the Saturday game, when the Pirates got help from others on the team, the Pirates got little Sunday. Edwards was the only Pirate in double figures and took 85 percent of the Pirates' total field goals (32 of 49).

Mason had a balanced attack, led by Dykes with 16. Hargett finished with 14 while Smith had 12.

East Carolina held a slim 30-29 rebounding edge, with Edwards leading the way with eight. Dykes led GMU with nine.

Still, the Pirates finished with a winning season, 15-14, for the first time in six seasons, only their fourth in the last 15 years.

Duke Wins...

would have given the Tar Heels a tie for first place in the ACC. That left the Tar Heels in a three-way tie for second with Duke and Virginia. After a coin-flip Sunday night, Duke earned the second seed for next week's ACC Tournament while Clemson got the third seed and UNC the fourth.

Reid added 18 points for UNC while Jeff Lebo scored nine points in the final home game of his career.

"A minute is a lot of time," Fox said. "Things can swing in so many different directions. We seemed to get closer and closer and we just couldn't get over the hump."

Ferry led Duke, 21-6 overall and 9-5 in the ACC, with 24 points, seven rebounds and six assists while Henderson chipped in with 16. Koubek had 14 points off the bench.

UNC falls to 24-7 and 9-5. A win

'Anything But Love' Debuts On ABC Television Tuesday

By Kathryn Baker
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Only in sitcom-land does a funny, neurotic journalist on the staff of a successful Chicago monthly wind up sitting just across the aisle of the airplane from a scrappy former teacher who wants to become a writer.

Of course, he'll help her land a job at his magazine. Otherwise, we would have no series. "Anything But Love" premieres Tuesday on ABC.

Someone should start a consulting firm that specializes in advising so-so shows to avoid titles that only enable unkind reviewers to take easy potshots. This one cries out to be called "Anything But Laughs."

"Anything But Funny." "Anything But This."

Unfortunately for unkind reviewers, "Anything But Love" does have laughs — a few, and almost all provided by comedian Richard Lewis, whose lines sound suspiciously like part of his standup act.

Lewis plays Marty Gold, a nervous flyer who paws through the seat pocket for the emergency instruction card — "Barf bags, gifts, death ..."

Jamie Lee Curtis, who apparently has no standup routine from which to draw, is stuck with staff-written deadly earnestness as a former inner-city educator Hannah Miller who aspires to inspire the world with her way with words. She just split with her boyfriend and hangs all her hopes for the future on landing a research job at Marty's magazine.

Marty helps her because she held his hand and evoked scenes of Paris when he panicked as the plane hit turbulence. This is sitcom-land, remember? In the real world, those who clasp strangers' hands and evoke scenes of Paris prompt the summoning of authorities.

Back in Chicago, Marty can only get Hannah in the door with Mean Editor (Louis Giambalvo). Once inside, Mean Editor means to banish this bimbo by making the job contingent on whether she can complete the "impossible" task of writing a 1,000-word article on the silly question of whether Chicagoans prefer corn or flour tortillas — gasp!

overnight. Hannah's ex-cop pop (Bruce Kirby), who aspires to be a painter, doesn't understand his daughter's quest for an entry-level career change. But he does provide a blue collar straight man for more of Lewis' lines: "Bowling — isn't that where you throw rubber at wood and get to wear other people's shoes?"

Marty gives Hannah the inspiration to complete the assignment. She turns in her work to Mean Editor and waits while he peruses it behind closed doors. When she wonders what's taking so long, catty senior writer Pamela Peyton-Finch (Sandy Faison) gets off a rare non-Lewis funny: "Because he loves it and is savoring every word. Or he hates it and is making copies to show his friends at parties."

Does plucky Hannah get the job? Does this so-so comedy have at least a six-episode pickup by the network?

Pledges

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Entertainers including Tammy Wynette, Pia Zadora and Ray Charles helped stir up pledges of more than $37 million to the National Easter Seal Society during its 18th annual telethon.

"We found that the American public was very supportive. We had an even stronger turnout than we expected," said John Garrison, head of the non-profit organization.

Newcomer Patty Loveless Has Credentials For Country Music

By Joe Edwards
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Here are her credentials: Loretta Lynn is her distant cousin; Dolly Parton has showed her how to apply makeup, and she has eaten pancakes with Grand Ole Opry star Porter Wagoner.

With a background like that, how can Patty Loveless miss becoming a country music star?

She's well on her way. Since September, she's had two songs make the Top 5 of the country music charts: "A Little Bit in Love" and "Blue Side of Town."

In January she won an American Music Award as the top new vocalist in country music. She has been a finalist for similar awards presented by the Country Music Association and the Academy of Country Music.

The 31-year-old performer with soaring, heartfelt vocals is keeping a remarkably level-headed perspective on her success. This is especially hard in light of some press clippings announcing her as the next country queen in the mold of Miss Lynn, Patsy Cline and Reba McEntire.

"I guess people look at me and think I don't get excited about things," she said. "I've always been the kind of person to try to stay in the middle of the road. I feel like if I get too high and get my hopes too high, that means I can fall down real low."

Her singing style is not the only connection to Miss Lynn, whose career was chronicled in the movie "Coal Miner's Daughter." They are uncannily similar in several other respects.

They are distant cousins, though 22 years apart. Both their fathers were Kentucky coal miners who died of illnesses related to years of mining. Both sang with the Wilburn Brothers early in their careers. Both got married as teen-agers (Miss Lynn at 13 and Miss Loveless at 19) and both now sing on the Grand Ole Opry.

Miss Loveless actually has been closer to Miss Parton, whom she met in 1972. She was 15 and had come to Nashville to show around some songs she had written. By chance, she got to meet Miss Parton and her singing partner at the time, Wagoner.

"She was a real dream," Miss

The Associated Press

Patty Loveless had two songs in top five in last six months

Loveless recalled. "She was as sweet as I thought she would be.

"I remember being backstage where she would go make herself up. She showed me how to put makeup on. ... She was like a sister to me, and sweet all the time. I adored her."

Wagoner and Miss Parton often invited Loveless to go with them after performing on the Grand Ole Opry or on Wagoner's TV show.

"We used to go eat pancakes for breakfast," she recalled.

A year later, Miss Loveless was hired by the Wilburn Brothers to write songs and sing on their road show on weekends and in the summer. She took the spot vacated by Miss Lynn, who was becoming a major star by then.

"I think people accepted me," she said. "I was just a young kid. I wasn't trying to be Loretta. I didn't know at the time we were related."

That didn't come until 10 years later when the family trees were traced.

She worked for the Wilburn Brothers for 3½ years, then moved to Kings Mountain, N.C., for 10 years before returning to Nashville in 1986.

"I felt I had to get away and 'find myself.' I was happy with the music but not totally happy with myself."

Since 1986, her career has climbed steadily. Her song "If My Heart Had Windows" reached the Top 10 of the country charts in 1987. She has released three albums, including the current "Honky Tonk Angel."

Her next single release will be "Don't Toss Us Away," her version of the Lone Justice rock 'n' roll song. Another rising country star, Rodney Crowell sings it with her.

"If I get a song in the Top 5, I'm happy with it," Miss Loveless said. "I had one song No. 2 ('A Little Bit in Love'). To me, that's close enough to 1."

Career Expansion

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — Actor Hal Holbrook is planning to expand the horizons of his career when he directs his first movie later this year.

Beginning May 1, Holbrook will direct "Staggerwing" on location in northwest Arkansas.

He said the film is spun from a true story of a mastermind criminal and will star David Strathairn, with a screenplay by Harry Minetree.

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

- Q.1—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
 ♠A5 ♥72 ♦A87 ♣J109542
 Partner opens the bidding with a demand bid of two spades. What do you respond?
A.—Nothing's perfect. It is a choice between three spades and three clubs. For the former, you want a third spade; for the latter, you would like a better suit. Our own preference is for three clubs, since a club slam might be your best spot, but the arguments for three spades are weighty.
- Q.2—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
 ♠Q7632 ♥AK1076 ♦7 ♣83
 Your right-hand opponent opens one club. What action do you take?
A.—Unless you have a specialized bid available that shows a limited major two-suiter, such as a Michaels cue-bid, you should plan on showing both your suits. Therefore, overcall one spade, with the intention of bidding hearts at your next

- turn unless the auction is too high.
- Q.3—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
 ♠KJ762 ♥5 ♦AJ82 ♣J105
 The bidding has proceeded:
 North East South West
 1 ♥ Pass 1 ♠ Pass
 3 ♥ Pass ?
 What action do you take?
A.—A tough problem. Despite the probable misfit, there should be a game somewhere. Since partner is showing a good, long suit, four hearts has considerable appeal, but it's a trifle unilateral. We would opt for three no trump—partner can still act if his hand is not suitable.
- Q.4—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
 ♠A8 ♥762 ♦J103 ♣KQ652
 The bidding has proceeded:
 North East South West
 1 ♥ 2 ♦ ?
 What action do you take?
A.—An awkward hand. You are not strong enough for three clubs,

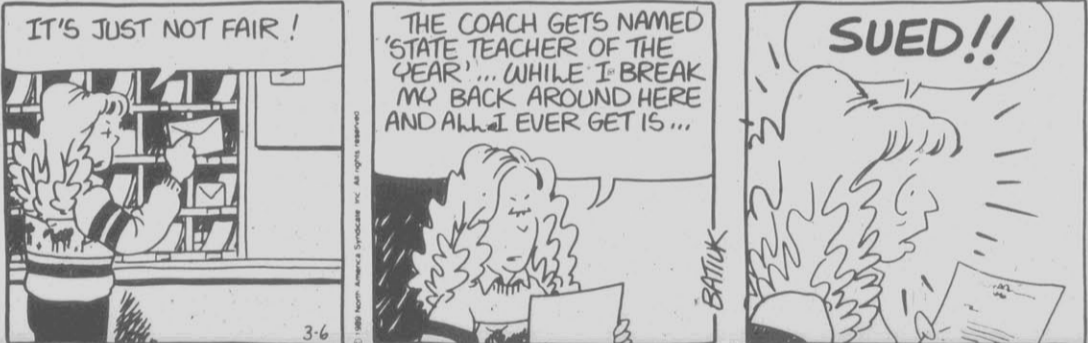

- yet you have too much to stay out of the auction. The only sensible bid is two hearts—even if your methods permit opening with a four-car major.
- Q.5—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
 ♠A8 ♥762 ♦J103 ♣KQ652
 The bidding has proceeded:
 North East South West
 1 ♥ 2 ♦ 2 ♥ Pass ?
 What do you bid now?
A.—Partner has made a move toward game, and were it not for the quality of your heart support, you would consider going straight to four hearts since you have a maximum. Under the circumstances, though, we prefer showing partner where our length and strength is—bid three clubs.

- Q.6—East-West vulnerable, as South you hold:
 ♠J ♥AJ3 ♦AQ964 ♣A987
 The bidding has proceeded:
 North East South West
 1 ♥ Pass 2 ♦ Pass
 2 ♥ Pass ?
 What do you bid now?
A.—If you jumped to four hearts, you have judged your holding much too pessimistically. With three aces, a singleton and a trump fit, you are in slam territory. Complete the picture of your hand by bidding three clubs now, then jumping in hearts at your next turn, even if you have to go to the five-level.

U.S. Influencing Investigation Of Stock Fraud

NEW YORK (AP) — From the Champs Elysees to the Japanese Parliament to Hong Kong's waterfront stock market, authorities suddenly are prosecuting securities frauds that had been ignored, overlooked or condoned for years.

The enforcement campaigns have led to embarrassing scandals in France, Japan, Hong Kong, Mexico and elsewhere for crimes that range from profiteering on inside information to bribery and embezzlement.

To many U.S. securities-law specialists, an intriguing common thread among these crackdowns is their coincidental timing.

Some experts believe the highly publicized insider trading scandal on Wall Street has jolted foreign governments into scrutinizing sleazy practices in their own backyards.

"I think what's been happening in the United States in the last five years has caused countries like France and Japan to beef up enforcement efforts in terms of securities regulation," said William Tyson, a legal studies professor at the University of Pennsylvania's Wharton business school.

Louis Loss, a Harvard Law School professor who has been consulted by foreign governments in drafting securities regulations, said many were several decades behind the United States in anti-fraud enforcement and only now were grappling with the severity of white-collar crime.

Part of the reason, Loss speculated, is "they've read about the financial scandals in our country."

Others said the explosive worldwide expansion of the securities industry over the past several years, coupled with quantum leaps in communication technology that make cross-border trading easy, have forced many governments to toughen previously lax anti-fraud laws.

In Britain, stock prices of companies targeted for takeovers often rise sharply at least one month before the official public announcements of deals, although insider trading has been illegal since 1980.

In West Germany, where insider trading is not only tolerated but a term for insider doesn't exist in the language, stock prices regularly rise in advance of improved earnings reports.

Switzerland, historically a haven for the profits of illegal financial dealings because of tough bank-secrecy laws, only made insider trading a crime last July.

In Hong Kong's freewheeling stock exchange, which many trading professionals have likened to the Dodge City of international securities markets, conflicts of interest are said to be a way of life.

It was the only exchange to shut down completely for four days after the October 1987 crash. Eight market officials, including former Chairman Ronald Li, were arrested later on charges of taking bribes.

Things aren't much better in Mexico City, where earlier this month prosecutors arrested four top brokers and interrogated dozens more in connection with widespread fraud allegations that range from insider trading to sale of phony securities. All of Mexico's 24 registered brokerage houses have been implicated, and securities regulators have promised tough new rules.

Japan, home to the biggest stock market, modeled its postwar laws on securities fraud after those in the United States but rarely enforced them. One reason, said Tyson, is "the Japanese never felt insider trading was wrong."

A recent Japanese move to put teeth in its laws has since led to a massive stock-trading scandal that's jolted the country's governing party and created a nationwide debate about business ethics.

Tibetans Stage Mass Street Riots To Protest Domination By Chinese

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BEIJING — Thousands of Tibetans rioted in the streets of their capital today, hurling goods looted from Chinese stores onto bonfires, witnesses said. A day earlier, at least 11 people were reported killed in street clashes.

Police fired on protesters in Lhasa on Sunday, but did not interfere today as the demonstrators chanted pro-independence slogans and stoned Chinese bicyclists who ventured into the area, the Western witnesses said.

The official Chinese Xinhua News Agency said one policeman and 10 protesters were killed in Sunday's violence and 40 police and more than 60 demonstrators were injured.

An American traveler, speaking by telephone from the city, said today that many Tibetans reported the death toll at closer to 30.

It is the fourth time in 18 months that tensions have boiled over between Tibetans and Chinese, who rule the remote southern region.

At least 40 were killed in the earlier clashes, including 24 who died one year ago during a daylong battle.

Sunday's protest was begun by Buddhist monks and nuns who apparently were marking that anniversary.

American and other travelers said thousands of Tibetans milled around the streets of the city's old section today, looting merchandise from Chinese-owned stores and setting it on fire.

They stoned any Chinese who tried to bicycle through the area and dragged some from their bikes, which they burned, the witnesses said.

A second American said he saw a policeman dragged from his bike and chased down the street at knife-point.

"The streets are thick with people. There's lots of whooping and shouting and throwing stones. There's no control whatever," said an Australian. He said the protesters set up barricades with tables and garbage cans on some streets.

Tibet remains largely closed to journalists and the only independent reports came from travelers, many of whom spoke on condition of anonymity for fear of police reprisals.

Xinhua said Sunday's violence began at noon when 13 monks and nuns paraded illegally through the Barkhor, the city's central market and location of its main temple, the Jokhang. They waved banners and shouted "Independence for Tibet," the report said.

They were joined by several hundred people, who stoned a nearby police station.

A Swedish traveler, who gave his name only as Pontus, said he ran to the roof of the Jokhang Temple for a better view.

"There were six people to the left of us taking pictures of the crowd ... Then they dropped their cameras and started firing with hand guns into the crowd," Pontus said. He said no warning was given.

He said he and four companions, some of whom took pictures of the shooting, later had their cameras and passports confiscated.

Several travelers reported police also threw beer bottles down on the crowd from roofs in the Barkhor area, while the crowd threw stones back.

At about 3 p.m., a group of Tibetan youths carrying the banned pro-Communist Tibetan flag began marching on a major street north of the Barkhor, said travelers who watched from a hotel on the street.

Hundreds of Tibetans joined them, but police moved in quickly firing tear gas and bullets, the travelers said. Skirmishes along the street lasted until after nightfall, they said.

Xinhua said the protesters fired at police, and that police "were forced to fire as no other means could stop the rioters." It did not make clear which side began shooting first.

However, none of the nearly one dozen travelers interviewed reported seeing Tibetans with guns.

Former Utility Chairman Arrested

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOKYO — Authorities today arrested the former chairman of Nippon Telegraph and Telephone Corp. on suspicion of bribery in a stock-profiteering scandal that has shaken Japan's political and business elite.

The Tokyo District Prosecutor's Office said Hisashi Shinto, 78, was arrested with his 63-year-old secretary, Kozo Murata, on suspicion of receiving bribes in the form of bargain-price shares in a subsidiary of the Recruit Co., a conglomerate with business links to the giant telecommunications utility.

Authorities also said they searched Shinto's home.

Shinto was known as an advocate of clean government and business until December, when he was forced to resign from the chairmanship of NTT as a result of the scandal.

Today's arrests follow the announcement Saturday that prosecutors in the case had indicted four people on bribery charges, including the founder of the Recruit Co., another Recruit executive and two former NTT officials.

The Recruit figures were indicted on charges of offering bribes, and the former NTT officials were accused of accepting bribes.

Prosecutors suspect that in exchange for bribes, NTT gave Recruit special favors in the resale of U.S.-made Cray supercomputers and reduced rates on leased communications circuits, news reports say.

The Recruit scandal has shaken confidence in the government of Prime Minister Noboru Takeshita. Three members of his Cabinet have resigned under fire for links to the Recruit company.

A total of 10 people have now been arrested in the case on charges of bribery or violating securities and exchange laws. Five have been indicted, including one who allegedly tried to bribe an opposition legislator into easing off in an investigation into the affair.

Recruit officials reportedly sold about 687,000 unlisted shares of the real estate subsidiary Recruit-Cosmos Co. at bargain prices to politicians, their aides and other prominent figures through September 1986.

An estimated 160 people purchased the prelisted shares and were then able to reap large, tax-free profits shortly after they were offered for over-the-counter trading in October 1986.

Shinto's secretary reportedly made about $157,000 and Shinto earned about $71,000. When the transaction was revealed in detail in December, Shinto said he had not known of it and that his secretary had controlled the account.

Shinto had headed NTT since 1981 and oversaw its conversion to a private company during the administration of former Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone, who was among politicians whose aides or relatives profited from transactions in the stocks.

Takeshita, who is also among those figures, has repeatedly denied direct involvement in the scandal.

We Have 12 Involved Leaders Supporting Our Commitment To Performance.

There are no limits for the committed person.

We, the leaders of First Federal, embrace an unquestionable commitment to the organization we have promised to manage.

We have shaped First Federal and its success by following one guiding principle: to create a noticeable winning environment for our customers, employees, shareholders and the community we serve.

Each year we work to improve on our performance. In 1988, we strengthened our financial reserve, enhanced our products, improved our services and consulted with our customers. Every working day we call dozens of customers just to ask if they are happy with the job we are doing and to find out how we can do a better job.

One measure of our success has been our enviable financial performance. First Federal is a sound financial institution. Our impressive earnings record has been matched by steady asset growth and a strong capital position.

Another important success indicator has been the "very good or excellent" service rating we have received from 97% of our customers during the past year. Thank You!

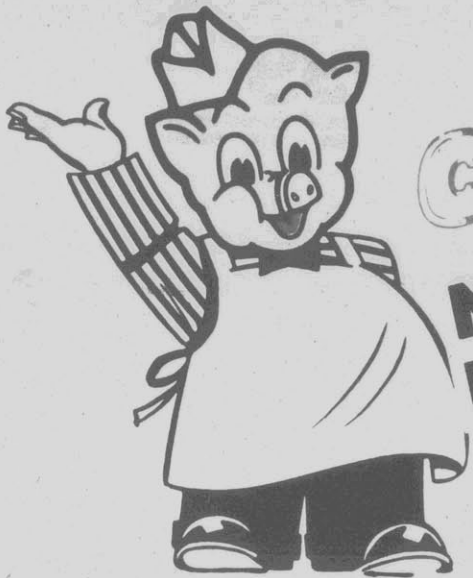

The directors, management, and staff at First Federal wish you all success in 1989. Working together we will make our goals and yours a reality. That's our commitment.

Your Hearing is a Priceless Gift.

Don't Take it for Granted...

As members of your local Health Care Team, we are involved in a program to provide you with information on a health problem that affects you or someone you know. In addition, we would like to introduce our services to you.

Hearing Loss

Who is affected?

Hearing loss, often called nerve deafness, is one of the leading disabilities in this country today. Surveys indicate that one out of every three Americans over 50 years of age have a mild to moderate hearing loss.

#1 Complaint.

"I hear, but I'm unable to distinguish all the words in a conversation." Because of its slow, yet progressive nature, many people are not aware of how much their hearing loss affects them. Eventually some high-pitched sounds, like the ring of a telephone or the singing of birds, may become impossible to hear.

Causes of hearing loss.

Aging, noise exposure, disease, medication and hereditary are some of the many factors that lead to hearing impairment. Early detection is important.

Today most hearing losses can be helped.

With today's advanced treatment and technology, almost everyone who suffers from nerve hearing loss can be helped. This includes people who have been previously told that nothing could be done for them.

What help is available?

While some impairments may be surgically or medically corrected, the most effective and inexpensive solution to sensorineural or nerve type hearing loss is properly fitted hearing aids. The only way to determine how much hearing loss you have or what help is available is to have a complete hearing evaluation by a trained professional.

Please Accept Our Invitation For A Hearing Evaluation

To find out if help is available will cost you nothing -- this service will be performed absolutely free of cost or obligation.

Dates: Tuesday through Friday -- March 7th, 8th, 9th and 10th

Location: Smith's Hearing Care Center
1716 West Fifth Street -- Greenville, North Carolina

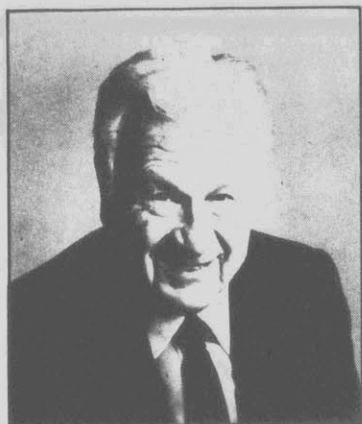

Telephone: 758-4586

Appointment Not Necessary -- To Avoid Waiting Call

"You're Invited To Learn Something Important About Yourself"

Unlike other medical problems, hearing loss is a gradual disorder that often goes unnoticed. Most people with sensorineural hearing loss, better known as "NERVE DEAFNESS," do not understand its effect on their hearing and understanding. This type of hearing loss is usually painless, gradual and most likely results in permanent damage.

HEARING LOSS IS A SERIOUS MATTER. Don't miss this opportunity to find out. These tests are being provided to you at no cost by a trained professional.

EDDIE ALBERT

Not long ago, Beltone invited me to re-examine a hearing problem I'd been struggling with for quite some time. That was a turning point in my life, because at Beltone's free hearing evaluation I learned how easily my hearing problem could be helped.

Do you find it difficult to follow a conversation in a crowded room or restaurant?

Do you frequently ask people to speak up or repeat themselves?

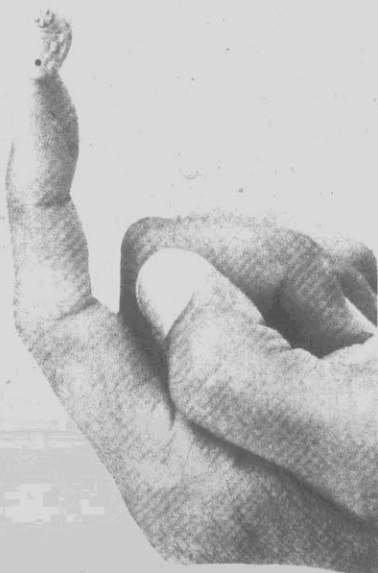

Do you turn one ear towards a speaker to hear better?

Do you have difficulty hearing when you speak on the phone?

Do people complain that you turn the TV up too loud?

Do you feel like people are mumbling or not speaking clearly?

Do friends and loved ones comment on your inability to understand clearly?

Now you can enjoy better hearing without others ever knowing you are wearing a hearing aid. The In-The-Canal Aids are so tiny you will forget you are wearing them.

The good news is that not only is it not noticeable, it is not nearly as expensive as you may expect it to be.

It's like a contact lens for your ear.
