GOP Says Defeat In 'Memory Banks'

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The Democratic-controlled Senate is striving to put the rancorous debate over John Tower's failed nomination behind it, but many Republicans say the wounds are deep and will not easily heal.

"This goes into the memory banks," said Senate Republican Leader Bob Dole of Kansas, after the Senate scuttled Tower's bid to become defense secretary and prepared to begin the confirmation process anew for the replacement President Bush will soon select.

Tower's 53-47 rejection on Thursday, just 49 days into Bush's presidency, represented a major setback for his administration and opened the floodgates of speculation on who might be the next choice to run the Pentagon.

On various lists were: former defense secretaries Donald Rumsfeld and James Schlesinger; Sen. William Cohen, R-Maine, a principal defender of Tower in the Senate debate; and former Rep. Jack Edwards, R-Ala.

Other names mentioned were Sen. John Warner, R-Va., a former Navy secretary; Sen. Warren Rudman, R-N.H.; former Transportation Secretary Drew Lewis; Frank Borman, onetime astronaut turned business executive; and Zbigniew Brzezinski, President Carter's national security

'Gestapo Idea' Sets Off Debate Over Trees

By Greg Laudick
 THE DAILY REFLECTOR

A resolution intended to enable the city to have powers to protect its historic trees created a heated exchange at Thursday's City Council meeting, as supporters and opponents of the proposed bill argued over the government's role in regulating trees on private property.

And while members of the city's Environmental Advisory Commission said the proposed resolution was merely a starting point for looking at tree preservation, Greenville Mayor Ed Carter labeled it a "Gestapo idea."

The EAC requested the council consider a resolution which, if passed, was to be submitted to the General Assembly before the local bill deadline next Thursday.

The request to the General Assembly would have asked the legislature to pass a local act authorizing the city to "adopt and enact ordinances regulating the removal, replacement and preservation of trees on private property within the city's territorial jurisdiction."

By a 5-1 vote, however, the council agreed to table the resolution for further review and consideration.

"I am personally very apprehensive about asking for carte blanche authority from the General Assembly to draw up an ordinance to regulate trees on private property," Carter said.

"I love trees and I think that everybody in general loves trees. But I think that you can take things too far. I would have trouble regulating trees on private property. I think you can over-regulate things and I think that's almost a Gestapo idea," he said. "It seems pretty obvious to me that we need to table this thing and give ourselves some time to think about it."

"I think this has been far too quickly done," said Council member Nancy Jenkins. "This is the sort of issue I think we can look at later in different ways."

But Councilman Bill Hadden argued that the resolution didn't make specific suggestions on how to preserve trees and that under the resolution, the council would

People To Decide On Vote, Terms

 THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Two recently contested issues surrounding the form of city government — whether the mayor should have a vote in all matters and the length of office terms for the council and mayor — will be decided by local citizens.

The Greenville City Council on Thursday voted unanimously to put both matters on a referendum Nov. 7.

In order to have the issues on the November ballot, the council directed City Attorney Mac McCarty to petition the local delegation to the General Assembly for a local act allowing the city to conduct the referendum.

The decision to put the two matters before the citizens of Greenville came after two public hearings and many council discussions during the past three months over the proposed changes.

On Jan. 12, the council approved a resolution of intent to double the length of terms of office from 24 to 48 months and a public hearing was held on the matter Feb. 10.

A 1981 council decision to take away the mayor's vote on all issues before the board was deemed invalid in late December after it was learned the decision was not first precleared by the U.S. Justice department as required by law.

Subsequently Mayor Ed Carter has lobbied vigorously to have the vote reinstated, convincing the council to conduct a public hearing on the matter Feb. 28.

Public sentiments were expressed for and against both issues at the public hearings and after the issues were again debated, well into the third hour of the council's Thursday meeting at City Hall, the board finally elected to let the people decide.

"This issue has been so controversial among the council members themselves that I felt like that the best thing to do would be to turn it over to the citizens and let the peo-

EAL Passengers Seek Alternatives

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Thousands of Eastern ticket holders, suddenly transformed into creditors, scrambled to get refunds or fly on other carriers as the strike-grounded airline fulfilled its threat of filing for bankruptcy protection.

The action by the nation's seventh-largest airline, announced Thursday on the sixth day of a punishing strike by Eastern's Machinists union in a dispute over wage concessions, was the fifth biggest Chapter 11 bankruptcy filing in history in terms of company assets.

The move sparked a new wave of denunciations by union leaders, who denounced Eastern chief Frank Lorenzo as a "robber baron."

Machinists also called for a public boycott of Eastern's sister carrier, Continental Airlines, set up pickets against Continental in Houston, and said they would oppose Eastern's reorganization plan and any sale of assets.

No pickets were reported at Continental's area of New York's La Guardia airport, but Continental's telephone lines there were jammed as people sought alternate travel arrangements.

The first Eastern Airlines shuttle to leave Boston for New York and Washington today with a new $12 one-way fare in effect had 92 people on board, said a spokesman for the Massachusetts Port Authority, which operates Logan International Airport. Phil Orlandella said previous shuttle flights since the machinists strike carried as few as seven passengers.

Angry and confused passengers, meanwhile, confronted Eastern ticket agents as well as travel agencies, often getting little satisfaction as they learned they might have to wait on a long line of unsecured creditors for a refund or pay higher fares on other carriers.

But many service people, as well as travel agents, were as confused as the ticket holders about the effects of the action in U.S. Bankruptcy Court in New York, which temporarily frees the airline of the debt obligations.

"This has been one of those days that we all hope would never happen," said Phil Davidoff, president-elect of the 23,000-member American Society of Travel Agents.

Joblessness Rate Hits 15-Year Low

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The nation's unemployment rate in February plunged to 5.1 percent, the lowest point in 15 years, as employers created 289,000 new jobs in a sign of the economy's continued strength, the government reported today.

The jobless rate was down 0.3 percentage points from January, hitting 5.1 percent for first time since May 1974, the Labor Department said. The rate last was lower in December 1973, when it hit 4.9 percent.

At the same time, employers created 289,000 new nonfarm jobs last month, with the gains confined to service-producing industries, according to a separate survey of business payrolls.

February's job-growth figure reflected some fallback after payrolls grew by a robust 415,000 jobs in January, when employment was spurred by unusually mild weather. January's figure was revised upward from an initial estimate of 408,000 new jobs.

The latest figures provided fresh evidence that the economy continues to command strength in the seventh year of its record peacetime expansion despite widespread anticipation of an impending slowdown.

The unemployment rate had hovered around 5.3 percent and 5.4

Heavy Surf Pounds Away At Outer Banks

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

KITTY HAWK, N.C. — Three cottages were pulled into the surf, three resort motels sustained extensive damage and scores of oceanfront cottages were damaged or threatened as winds and waves from a relentless three-day northeaster pummeled the Outer Banks.

Most property owners could only watch as advancing waves threatened to turn their property into memories.

"I got to laugh to keep from crying," said Kitty Hawk resident Joseph Verscharen as he and his wife, Janet, surveyed the damage to their oceanfront lot on Thursday. "This was our castle."

About 10 feet of their cottage hung over a 6-foot cliff where the ocean had eroded more than 75 feet of beach and a "mammoth dune" the Verscharen's built after storm damage last in April.

Meanwhile, five traffic fatalities and two deaths from hypothermia were linked to slick roads and cold weather over the past three days.

The storm that initially helped kick up damaging tides is moving out to sea. But another low-pressure area, which was centered off of the Florida coast Thursday, is forecast to move northeast today. It may not bring precipitation, but its winds will continue to push waves high on to what is left of the beaches.

The new low will work in concert with combine with an approaching high-pressure system to keep a 1,000-mile-long wind tunnel — stretching from Newfoundland to the Outer Banks — in operation.

"The combination of these two systems will cause more strong northeast winds that will keep pushing high seas and heavy surf toward the Outer Banks," the Weather Service office in Raleigh warned. "Major beach erosion will again be possible with high tide this morning."

High tide is expected about 9:30 a.m. today along the Outer Banks.

Officials are hoping conditions will improve later today, giving them a chance to estimate the damage, which they say will probably reach into the millions, and find out if the area will be eligible for disaster relief. So far, no injuries had been reported in Dare County because of the storm.

A disaster declaration would make property owners eligible for low-interest loans.

In all, as many as 115 coastal homes and structures from Sandbridge in Virginia Beach south through North Carolina's Outer Banks have already been destroyed or damaged and scores more are in a precarious position.

On Hatteras Island, three neighboring motels in Buxton were endangered when the morning's high tide breached a protective dune. Residents, fighting 45 mph winds and a frigid afternoon sleet storm, pitched in to fill sandbags by hand, while bulldozers pushed up sand to rebuild the dune line.

"Whatever we do have left, it will be because the people of Hatteras came to help. It's something I'll never forget," said Carol Dawson, co-owner of the 43-unit Cape Hatteras Motel. "The only thing we can hope for now is the weather. We're at the mercy of the weather."

Gale and flood warnings are in effect this morning, and winds are expected to remain at 20-30 mph throughout the day. Tides will run about one foot above normal and erosion will continue until the rough seas subside Sunday or Monday.

Erosion remained a problem Thursday night, once again prompting officials to open a shelter at Kitty Hawk Elementary School for oceanfront residents fearing the abnormally high tides and 15-foot seas that have pulverized many sections of barrier islands' beaches.

Dare County officials said late Thursday that five buildings along the beach were destroyed and 81 were severely undermined or structurally damaged, but remained standing above the breaking surf.

Since the winter storm began Tuesday, North Carolina Power has disconnected electric lines to 45 endangered residences, primarily in South Nags Head and Kitty Hawk.

Teacher Survey

RALEIGH (AP) — Bobby Etheridge, the state superintendent of public instruction, sent a memo to local school superintendents Thursday criticizing a drug-and-education survey that Lt. Gov. Jim Gardner is mailing to teachers across North Carolina.

In the two-page memo, Etheridge dissociated the state Department of Public Instruction from the survey. "Because many of the questions are clearly politically motivated, the department wishes to make it clear that it disavows the document."

The memo touched off a flap between Etheridge, a Democrat, and Gardner, a Republican. Both serve on the state Drug Cabinet, established by Gov. Jim Martin with the lieutenant governor as chairman.

Prosecution Introduces Phone Tape To End Case Against Worthingtons

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — The general manager of Liberty Tobacco Warehouse joked about an FBI interrogation concerning a fire that destroyed the building in Wilson in tape recording that federal jurors heard.

"You'll like this," manager J.T. "Tommy" Worthington of Greenville said light-heartedly in a telephone conversation recorded via a court-ordered wire tap. "They're flying in a hotshot FBI investigator, one of their experts, to interview me."

The tape was among six recordings played as the prosecution rested its case Thursday in the trial of Worthington and his father, warehouse owner J.T. Worthington

Sr., also of Greenville, on charges of arson, conspiracy and fraud.

Federal agents wiretapped the office phone of Harvey Bowen of Ayden, a tobacco grower and car dealer, who allegedly arranged the Oct. 3, 1986, fire that destroyed the warehouse. The prosecution contends that Bowen, who died last year, had acted on behalf of the Worthingtons.

Breaking into laughter in the June 1987 conversation with Bowen, Tommy Worthington continued, "And they got to fly in somebody special for me. Makes me feel right honored."

In another conversation, recorded 10 days later, Worthington laughed about a subpoena to appear before a grand jury. "Yeah, I'm scared.

Harvey," he said, facetiously. "I'm over here by myself. I'm scared."

The two, who also joked about the possibility that the phone was tapped, continued their levity in a July 2, 1987, talk in which Bowen suggested that he could burn a business for another man.

"Don't talk about burning nothing up over these phones," Tommy Worthington replied. "Please don't."

The prosecution contends that the fire was set to cover cash flow problems largely caused by cash advances obtained by Tommy Worthington. At the time of the fire, the government contends, he owed the warehouse nearly $600,000, much of which allegedly went into failing businesses in Greenville.

On the day of the fire, the warehouse had a $929,515 overdraft in a bank account and was nearing the limit on a $600,000 line of credit at a bank, government auditors have said.

The defense, which was scheduled to begin presenting evidence today, maintains that the prosecution has overstated the amount Tommy Worthington owed the warehouse. Further, the defense has indicated that the bank account situation was normal, given the seasonal nature of the business.

One insurance company paid more than $2 million in claims stemming from the blaze, mostly to cover tobacco losses, while another insurance association has refused to pay a $600,000 claim partly covering the building.

Gunman Releases 1 Of 6 Hostages

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LENOIR, N.C. — A Lenoir man armed with a rifle and upset that his wife left him took six women and children hostage at a women's shelter in Lenoir early today, but later released one of the children, Lenoir police said.

Troy Lingle, 35, went to the Shelter Home for Battered Women seeking his wife and took hostages when he didn't find her there, police Major James Higgins said. The man demanded police bring his wife to him.

Lenoir police, the Caldwell County Sheriff's Department and the State Bureau of Investigation began negotiations with the man around 2 a.m., Higgins said.

Det. Helen Austin said an 11-year-old girl was released from the shelter about 6:30 a.m. The girl had the keys to Lingle's truck, but police do not know how she got them or why she had them.

Police say no shots were fired and no injuries were reported.

Police cordoned off all streets in a nine-block area surrounding the shelter, and deputies in the area were armed with assault rifles.

The shelter program has operated in Lenoir for 10 years. The independent, non-profit program moved to its current home in April 1988.

The seven-bedroom house has shared living quarters and an extensive alarm system that includes an automatic electric lock operated from the reception area of the building, said former director Georgie Stone, who now works in Hickory. Ms. Stone said the staff at the shelter also has a panic button which alerts local police of trouble.

"I don't know what happened up there," Ms. Stone said today. She said staff members are supposed to check security each night.

She said residents are instructed not to open any outside doors for anyone. The side doors near the bedroom areas are only for emergency use, Ms. Stone said. They do not have outside handles.

Stone recalled only one other incident at the shelter when a husband tried to break in. That was when the home was located about a block from the former police station and officers were notified then by a staff member.

Pickle Wedding

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOUNT OLIVE, N.C. — Planners of the North Carolina Pickle Festival in Mount Olive have picked a pair to pucker up at the annual pickle party on April 29.

Organizers, who wanted to add a new flavor to the festival with a wedding, chose a Mount Olive couple who said they would be "tickled pickle green" to plight their troths in front of thousands.

A clever application and pickle industry connections led to Timothy G. Gautier, 23, and Amy R. Smith, 19, said wedding committee chairman Lillian B. Langley.

Gautier works at Charles F. Cates and Sons Pickle Co. in Faison, and had worked part-time at Mount Olive Pickle Co. — two of the nation's biggest pickle producers, and festival sponsors.

Miss Smith, a community college student, works for her father's restaurant that features burgers. So, "this couple had said they had stayed together 'through pickles and hamburgers,'" Mrs. Langley said.

The two were chosen over five other couples, including some who promised that their bridesmaids would carry cucumber vines or sprigs of dill.

The festival will foot the bill for flowers, music and other wedding accoutrements. The presidents of both big pickle companies will be asked to witness. Otherwise, in spite of the setting, the nuptials will be nothing but traditional, Mrs. Langley said.

"This is going to be a class act," she said. "This is not going to be cornball county."

People Will Decide On Vote, Term Issues

ple decide," said Council Member Rufus Huggins.

Mildred Council agreed. "This is such a controversial issue. Very clearly this is a matter that the people should decide," she said.

"I was prepare to vote on the input that I had heard and that was to deny a mayor a vote and keep the two year terms — and I would be willing to stand on that," said Council member Nancy Jenkins. "But if the referendum can be held on election day and no additional costs incurred, then that's fine if that's what the majority wants."

"I think that it's time to put these matters to rest," said Mayor Ed Carter.

"I had gone out and solicited the input from citizens and obviously there were differing opinions on the matter. It was quite obvious to me that the decision should be made by the people and I'm elated the council has decided that this is the way that we should go," he said.

In other matters Thursday, the council approved an ordinance extending the extraterritorial jurisdiction one mile southeast of the city limits.

The proposed ETJ area includes 1,500 acres southeast of State Road 1725 between N.C. 33 and N.C. 43. The Cherry Oaks subdivision entered the ETJ area zoned R15-S (residential) while the majority of the remaining acreage was zoned RA-20 (residential/agricultural). Several existing properties were zoned in accordance so the particular land uses would not be non-conforming.

The council also approved the rezoning of a 29.14-acre tract located west of Pitt County Memorial Hospital, south of U.S. 264 and north of SR 1200 from MD-7 (low-density residential) to MD-3 (office and institutional).

In other matters, the council approved: an amendment to the Zoning Ordinance to permit wall signs on any building wall provided that the sign surface area does not exceed 25 percent of the total surface area of the wall; an ordinance to allow residential development in the DC (downtown commercial) and DM (downtown mall) zoning districts; an amendment to the Subdivision Ordinance affecting the amount and terms of performance guarantees for subdivision improvements, and the addition of a section to the Subdivision Ordinance to allow for transitional regulations for developing property brought into the extraterritorial jurisdiction of the city.

The council also approved: a request by D.C. Development Co. to annex 1.08 acres located west of Lindbeth Drive; a request to annex 3.47 acres located on the north and south of Quail Ridge Road; a request by the West Greenville Community Development Corp. that the city apply for a Housing Demonstration Grant under the Community Development Block Grant Program; a request by Collice C. Moore to close Smith Street west of Memorial Drive across from the existing Chestnut Street, and a request by Edward Carson to close portion of an unnamed street in Westwood subdivision located east of Carlson Street.

The council also approved: an indemnity and release agreement with Kroger's for a recycling center to be located at 600 Greenville Blvd.; a sewer capital project for the Brook Valley subdivision; an application for transfer of ownership of the Southern Gun and Pawn Inc.; an indemnification agreement with the Highway Patrol for use of the city's firing range; a request by the tax collector to advertise delinquent 1988 real and personal taxes as required State General Statutes, and release and refund of listed taxes.

Re-Enactment

RALEIGH (AP) — More than 500 re-enactment troops from eight states will gather at Bentonville Battleground State Historic Site near Newton Grove on March 19 to mark the 124th anniversary of a Civil War Battle.

The troops will recreate the last three Confederate assaults on Union lines, exactly 124 years to the day that weary soldiers fought around the farmhouse of John and Amy Harper.

Helping with the battle recreation will be the Johnston County Chapter of the American Red Cross, whose members will work with the hospital program. Also helping are the 690th Maintenance Battalion of the N.C. Army National Guard and the 70th Regiment, 3rd Battalion of the N.C. State Defense Militia.

The money may be used for public or private non-profit agencies to develop alternatives for training schools for status offenders or juvenile delinquents. A 10 percent local cash or in-kind match is required.

The Pitt County Youth Services Advisory Committee (CBA Task Force) has identified several priority needs, which include the continuation of the Juvenile Services Restitution Program and the Student Assistance Program.

Other considered priority services are implementation of drop-out prevention program and continuation of the Pitt PALS Program, an adult volunteer effort.

Applications for proposals may be secured from G. Carl Worthington Jr. at the juvenile services office, 110 S. Evans St. Completed applications will be accepted until March 30 at 4 p.m.

Oral presentations are required for each request at the April 3 meeting of the advisory committee at 1 p.m. in the Board of Education conference room, Pitt County Office Building.

MASONIC NOTICE

Winterville Masonic Lodge No. 232 will hold a communication today at 8 p.m. at the Masonic Hall.

College Salaries

RALEIGH (AP) — A state board has approved a plan to revamp the salaries of North Carolina's 58 community college presidents that members of the Board of Community Colleges said would erase inequities that have worsened since the early 1980s.

Under the plan, presidents of the two-year public schools would earn anywhere from $55,700 to $113,500 depending on experience and campus enrollment.

The British unconditionally surrendered Singapore to the Japanese Feb. 15, 1942, during World War II. It was a major blow to the Allies because the island controlled an important sea route. The Japanese had landed to the north and marched through the jungle to take Singapore.

'Truth In Preference To Fiction'

Quality

What The Latest Request Is About

Five times $4 million doesn't equal $25.7 million. And for Pitt's schools, even that amount doesn't add up to the sum total of its capital needs.

That's what members of the school board were trying to tell the Pitt County Commission when they agreed to ask the commission to place a $10 million request for school construction needs on any bond referendum placed before the public.

Thanks for the pay-as-you-go $20 million, the school board was saying, but it falls short of a rapidly-escalating need for repair and construction of school facilities. That is a pertinent statement that deserves a thoughtful response from the county commission.

Pitt's schools in 1988 requested a $25.7 million school bond referendum to fund specific projects around the county. The needs are well-documented. Some of them are immediate; some target long range goals. What the schools got was $4 million in capital outlay money for a period of five years. While that commitment is welcome, it does fall short of meeting the need.

'The county should enter the next century with the right environment for teaching those who determine its future. That's what the latest school board request is all about.'

Before the County Commission dismisses the $10 million bond issue for school construction, it should thoroughly explore these needs and make sure the county can afford to have them continue unmet.

While a county should not issue bonds capriciously, there are good reasons to do so to fund school construction. Bonds should be used in situations of extraordinary need. They should not be used in lieu of good long range planning for capital needs.

In Pitt County, there are few investments better than the public schools. A quality education system is imperative to the county's future. Pitt cannot lead eastern North Carolina in economic growth if it falls behind in education. One prerequisite for excellence is creating a proper environment for learning by providing its students and teachers with adequate classroom facilities.

Pitt is already falling behind in this duty.

Two-thirds of its facilities approach 30 years in age, and criteria place them near obsolescence at age 30. While Pitt's may not be incapacitated, they are very likely inadequately designed for the 1990s. And they have expensive problems, like sewage systems that don't meet Environmental Protection Agency standards. Three of Pitt's schools are in violation of regulations, and there is no option but to fix them.

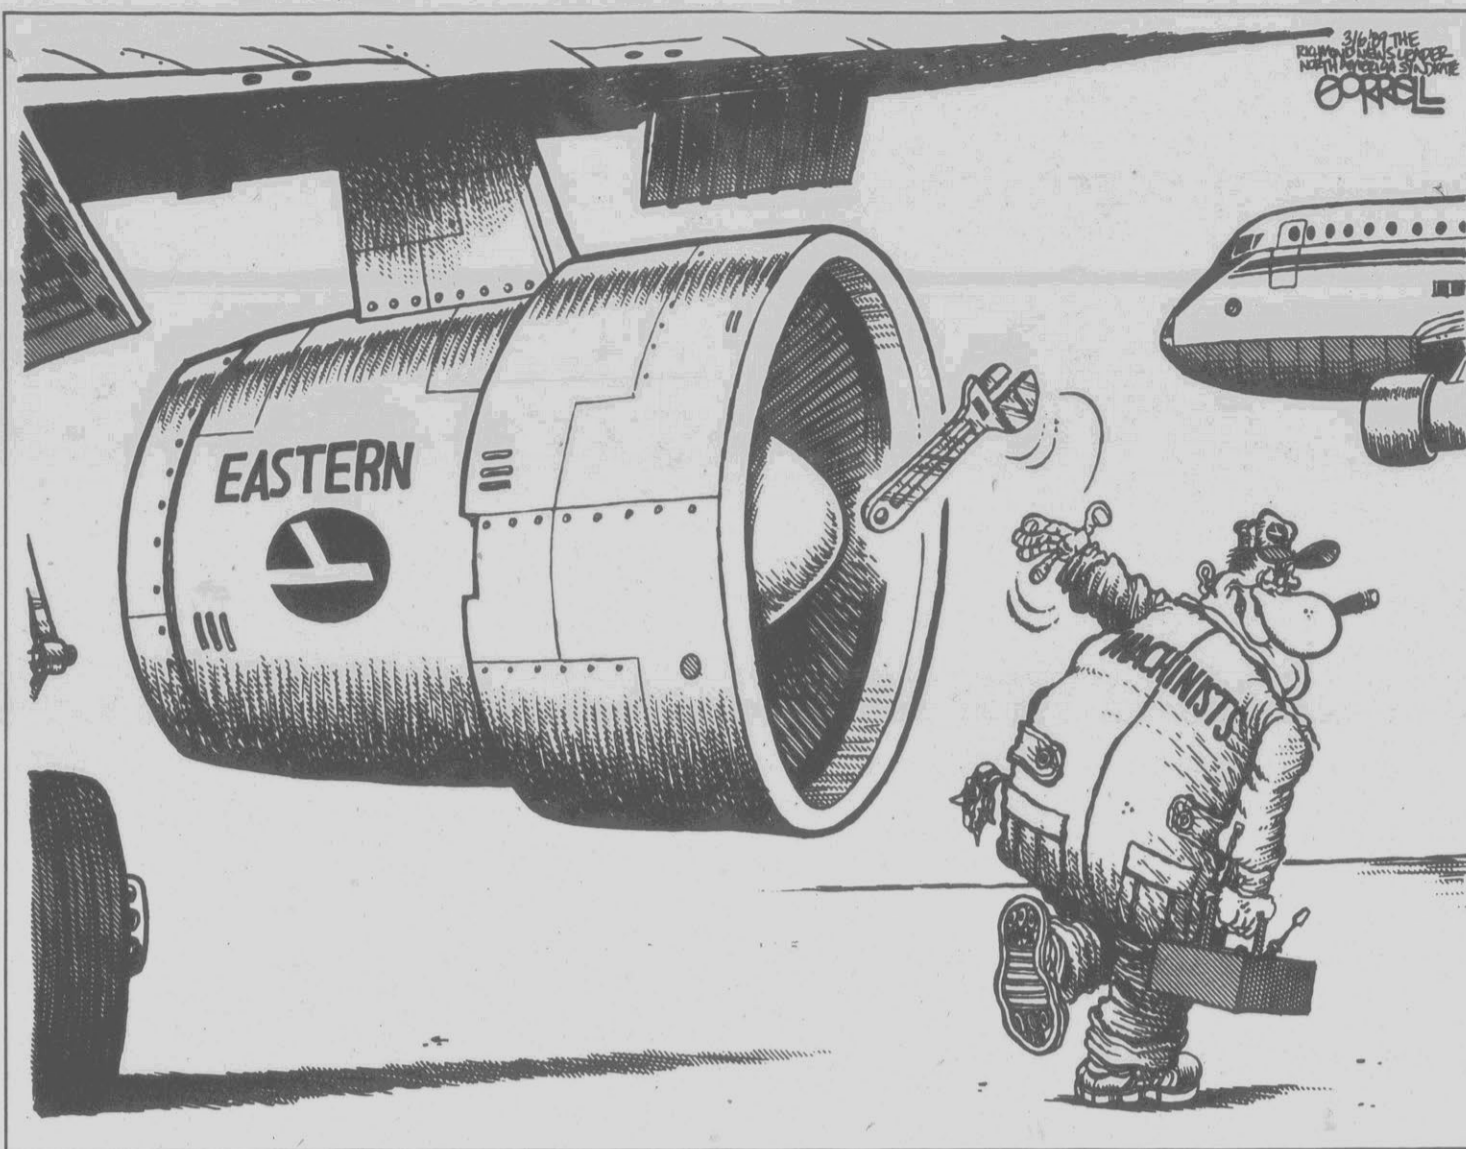

Second, Pitt gains students at a rate of 200 per year. To keep pace, a new school is needed every six years. Pupil growth is an enviable problem. It cannot, however, simply continue to be absorbed into the present system with degrading the system. There is no question rapid growth will continue and Pitt must plan sufficiently for concurrent expansion of facilities.

The consequences of failing to do so are already visible: the school system uses 90 trailers for classrooms — more than it utilized before a three-year funding program to eradicate trailers.

These certainties must be prominently discussed when the latest school bond request is examined.

In addition, the school board must do its part if it expects a favorable response from the County Commission. The schools must make sure any waste in the system is removed. A sharp pencil should be applied to all capital projects — and to all spending — to ensure money isn't being squandered. That is an obligation.

The county should enter the next century with the right environment for teaching those who determine its future. That's what the latest school board request is all about.

Discrimination Or An Insult?

WASHINGTON — The next time you are certain of your position on affirmative action, think of Richard Robinson.

Robinson is the double-bassist recently hired by the Detroit Symphony — the first black musician hired by the 98-member orchestra in 14 years. His addition doubles the number of black musicians — to two.

But Robinson wasn't hired through the normal audition process. He landed his job after several black members of the Michigan Legislature withheld nearly $1.3 million in public funding for the orchestra and threatened to organize boycotts of its concerts unless it hired more black musicians.

It is a stark case of affirmative action. But is it a good thing, long overdue in a city that is some 60 percent black? Or does it constitute unwarranted interference in a talent-based selection process, interference that threatens the artistic integrity of a fine orchestra?

Darwin Apple, a black violinist with the St. Louis Symphony Orchestra, was outraged at "the intrusion of politics into an area where legislators are ignorant." Other musicians and orchestra managers, white and black, were equally offended.

Even Robinson has his misgivings. "I would rather have auditioned like everybody else," he said, according to a recent report in the New York Times. "Somehow this devalues the audition and worth of every other player."

But if Robinson, who had been a substitute player with the symphony, has problems with the affirmative-action process that landed him his job, Ron Carter has problems with the fact that Robinson has problems.

"We're not talking about some guy off the street," said Carter, perhaps the premier jazz bassist in the world. "If he was good enough to be a substitute — if he had proven himself on the job — why would he object to being given full-time status without an audition?"

And why is Carter, whose metier is jazz, weighing in on an argument among classicists? For two reasons. The first is that I asked him to. The second is that, given a different racial atmosphere, Carter might have been a full-time classical artist.

"I was told by (the late) Leopold Stokowski in 1967 that he would love to have me play for him but that people weren't ready for a black classical player," said Carter, whose bachelor's degree from the Eastman School of Music (University of Rochester) and master's from the Manhattan School of Music both are in classical bass and who has recorded a solo album of Bach suites for bass.

According to Carter, the ostensibly pure process of hiring classical musicians is as subject as any other to "grandfathering," "old-boy networks" and the rest. "A few years ago, some people sued the New York Philharmonic, charging racial discrimination," he says.

"When I was at Eastman, classical jobs would become available and I wouldn't be told about them in time. They would say they assumed I wasn't interested, or that someone else was in line."

But even if such overt discrimination is no part of what has been happening in Detroit, orchestra selection is an unavoidably subjective process. It simply isn't true, as one member of the Michigan Legislature put it, that "music is music...do-re-mi-fa-sol-la-ti-do."

What is the right thing to do? It depends on where you begin. Begin with the assumption that an orchestra executive prefers racial inclusiveness, and you are likely to see subjective freedom as a good thing. Begin with the assumption that the executive is a bigot, and you might want to require him to hire a musician with the capabilities of a Richard Robinson.

The truth is, no one can ever know whether Robinson's earlier relegation to a substitute's role was a matter of racial discrimination or whether his elevation to full-time status was an insult to better qualified musicians.

Sweeping Up In Ethics Class

BOSTON — This is how it happens in Ethics Class. The teacher begins the morning with a carefully constructed and rather farfetched hypothetical case. Today, it's a doozie.

Imagine, just imagine, says the teacher, that a couple comes to divorce court to split up their property. They are not wrangling over a house or a boat or car. What they each demand is custody of their seven pre-embryos, the creations of his sperm and her eggs that lie frozen at the in-vitro fertilization clinic.

The class lets out a collective groan. Come on. Too farfetched. That would never happen. Give us a break.

Well, students, the ultimate hypothetical has now happened in Maryville, Tenn. The main players in this true story are Mary Sue and Junior Lewis Davis. The outcome is up for grabs.

During their ten years of marriage, Mary Sue had five tubal pregnancies that finally led the couple to an IVF clinic. There the doctors fertilized eggs in a petri dish, and tried unsuccessfully twice to implant them in Mary Sue's uterus. When the marriage disintegrated, the remaining seven pre-embryos became its most dramatic leftovers.

Now a Blount County judge has wisely restrained access to these fertilized eggs. But when the husband and wife formally split, the court must decide the fate of what they joined together.

This is more than a bio-ethics freak case. There have been well over 4,000 children born from IVF. Only this once have pre-embryos been part of a property claim in a divorce settlement. But the questions it raises are at the center, not the periphery, of this still-new technology.

Is an embryo really property? This is one that our ethics class could debate for days. Junior Davis listed these fertilized eggs under joint property. Mary Sue says, "I consider them life." The head of the IVF clinic, Dr. Ray King, believes "they should be treated like children." Junior Davis' lawyer, Charles Clifford says: "In the law, if they are not human beings they are property."

If embryos are property under the law, how does the court decide whose property? It cannot, after all, rule for joint custody, one week in his freezer, one week in hers. It could, I suppose, divide these fertilized eggs the way California divides assets, right down the middle: three for Junior, three for Mary Sue and one up for grabs. That hardly solves the puzzle.

Ellen Goodman

Alternatively, the court could decide "ownership" on the basis of what sociologist Barbara Katz Rothman describes reluctantly as "sweat equity." Mary Sue's participation — hormonal treatment, ova extraction, unsuccessful implants — was greater than that of her husband as sperm donor. The court could also calculate the dollar equity. Whoever paid for the clinic might own the "product."

Taking the most logical steps can lead down the most bizarre trails. The other ways to determine possession do not promise to be easier. Perhaps the pre-embryo should go to the one most in need or most eager to "use" it. Mary Sue, who can only have children through IVF, has said she wants to be a mother, although she is not sure she has the emotional or financial resources to try again. Junior has not said what he would do with the embryos.

There is also the sticky matter of rights. Junior says he doesn't want to father children now. Does he have a greater right to determine the pre-embryos than a man who fertilized an egg in, shall we say, the more traditional way? Mary wants to mother a child. Does she have a greater right to bear her ex-husband's child than another divorced woman? After all, Mary Sue could use these eggs after their divorce. Junior could end up responsible for the child. Whose rights are right?

Let's this ethics class get way out of hand, one other set of possibilities. If the court awards the pre-embryos to one or the other, what is to stop either from donating them to other infertile couples? Or using them in second marriages?

Hard cases make bad law and dilemmas make bad ethics. The Davis story teaches both those maxims. Not even an advanced seminar could work out a perfect resolution.

But there is a way to prevent such a hypothetical from becoming a reality again. Six years ago, another couple, Mario and Elsa Rios, died in a plane crash, leaving no instructions for the fate of the fertilized eggs which are still stored in a clinic in Australia.

In the aftermath, many clinics drew up agreements, asking couples what they wanted done with the fertilized eggs if they could no longer use them. They could add what I would call pre-conceptual clauses to these agreements. Husband and wife would decide in advance which would control the fate of their biological merger if they uncouple.

The new technology allows us to imitate the act of creation in a laboratory petri dish. But it has devised no biogenetic way to resolve everyday human conflicts. We are left to sweep up after the new technology. This ethics class will meet again.

Library Fire

CULLOWHEE, N.C. (AP) — It may cost more than $1 million to clean, repair or replace materials, structures and electronic equipment damaged by a Feb. 26 fire at Western Carolina University's Hunter Library, school officials said Thursday.

But the university said it now expects to reopen portions of the library next week.

Western Carolina officials had feared that fire and smoke damage would keep the library closed for the remainder of the spring semester.

The ground floor of the library, where most of the university's circulating books are kept, was not heavily damaged by smoke, and the university now anticipates being able to open that section of the library next week.

Fire officials said the fire started in an overhead fluorescent light fixture and was caused by an exploding ballast in the fixture.

DWI Conviction

MORGANTON, N.C. (AP) — A Burke County man convicted on Thursday of driving while impaired was ordered to surrender his car under a little-used provision of the state's DWI law.

It was the sixth DWI conviction for Ricky Lee Kincaid, 35, said District Attorney Bob Thomas. His license had been revoked three times previously.

Kincaid was also sentenced to three years probation, 14 days in the Burke County jail, a $500 fine, court costs and 72 hours of community service.

His 1973 Oldsmobile will be sold at an auction by the Burke County Sheriff's Department. Proceeds will go to the Burke County schools.

Under North Carolina law, a judge can order the forfeiture of a defendant's car if the case meets several conditions.

Doctor Sentenced

PITTSBORO, N.C. (AP) — Dr. James Phillip Westmoreland was given a suspended sentence Thursday after pleading guilty to charges of improperly dispensing drugs.

Judge Craig Ellis sentenced Westmoreland to three years probation and 200 hours of community service, and imposed a $1,000 fine on the Pittsboro physician.

The sentencing in Chatham Superior Court came after Westmoreland had pleaded guilty Monday to two charges of dispensing drugs outside the normal practice of medicine and entered pleas of no contest to three other charges. As a result, Orange-Chatham District Attorney Carl Fox agreed to drop 31 other charges and recommend that Westmoreland be given a suspended sentence.

Indictments

ASHEVILLE (AP) — A Buncombe County grand jury has indicted several Rutherford County residents on charges of tampering with car odometers.

Six people were charged this week with altering mileage on used cars, falsifying titles and forging mileage statements.

Mileage rollbacks can increase the value of a car by several hundred dollars, federal investigators say. Last spring 10 Rutherford County wholesale car dealers were arrested on federal fraud charges and pleaded guilty in the summer.

Land Wanted

RALEIGH (AP) — The new commander of the North Carolina National Guard says he wants to acquire about 21,000 acres of the Sandhills Game Land, a popular state-owned hunting area 25 miles southwest of Fort Bragg, to train National Guard units.

"It is my intent to try to acquire that land," Maj. Gen. Nathaniel Robb said. "This is going to be fantastic if we could. We could double the length of Fort Bragg."

He said he intended to ask the General Assembly in 1991 for money to buy 5,000 to 6,000 acres of privately owned land to link state-owned tracts south of U.S. 1 in Scotland County, in the Sandhills Game Land. The military has rights to do maneuvers on the game land.

Scout Rolls

GREENSBORO (AP) — High school and middle school students who occasionally hear speakers talk about a variety of careers have been registered as Scouts by the General Greene Council without the knowledge of school administrators or students themselves.

Council President Eckess Jones said Thursday that students who participate in the Career Awareness Exploring program are listed as Scouts and registered with the national Scout office in Irving, Texas.

The General Greene Council pays a $4 fee to national Scouting officials for each person participating, according to a council press release. In addition, each exploring unit must pay a $20 annual registration fee.

But Lynn Howard, community schools director for the Asheboro city schools, said educators there were not aware students were being enrolled in the Scouting program.

Legislators Vary On Martin's Call To Roll Back Tax On Food, Drugs

By John Flesher THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — Gov. Jim Martin's proposal to partially repeal the tax on food and non-prescription drugs has not erased skepticism in the General Assembly toward his plan to boost the sales tax to reform the teacher salary system.

"First he wants to cut taxes and then he's increasing taxes," Senate President Pro Tem Henson Barnes, D-Wayne, said Thursday after Martin called for cutting the food tax to make his proposed 1-cent sales tax increase more palatable.

While some legislators praised Martin for his willingness to innovate, many said he had been too quick to endorse a tax increase instead of cuts in the current budget. Others said his tax cut proposal was inadequate because it would apply only at the state level, leaving intact the 2 percent local sales tax on food and medicine.

"When you've got a tax on food and on ... drugs, you have a regressive tax, and I can't go for regressive taxes," said Marshall Rauch, D-Gaston, chairman of the Senate Finance Committee.

Sen. Marc Basnight, D-Dare, chairman of the Senate Base Budget Committee, said a group of Democratic leaders was exploring a combination of cuts in the existing budget and "luxury tax" increases. He declined to elaborate.

"We'll have a package put together shortly," Basnight said. "We don't need another 1-cent sales tax. There are other ways to do it."

Martin endorsed the 1-cent sales tax increase Wednesday, saying it would generate $510 million in fiscal 1989-90. Of that, $307.9 million would go for lifting the seven-year freeze on the teacher salary schedule and merit pay for state employees. Both groups would receive average pay raises of 6 percent next year and 5 percent in 1990-91.

A key component of the plan is statewide implementation of the career ladder incentive program for teachers in 1991-92.

Martin said his tax increase, plus additional revenue from better tax enforcement and other measures, could fund the pay raises and about $180 million in tax cuts in 1989-90. He said Thursday that if another $60 million can be found from cuts in the existing budget and other sources, the state food and medicine taxes can be eliminated.

"My preference ... is that if (the sales tax increase) generates more money than we need, then let's give some of that back to the taxpayers," Martin said. He said a number of legislators had expressed support for that idea in meetings with the governor Wednesday.

It is "going to be very tough to build the votes ... to get this passed," Martin said at his weekly news conference. "Perhaps that (food and drug tax cut) might be the kind of thing that could help me build a more willing acceptance of the proposal I put forward."

Supporters of the 1-cent tax increase hailed the tax-cut proposal. "I strongly favor it," House Minority Leader Johnathan Rhyne, R-Lincoln, said. "It's about 25 years overdue."

"We're finally doing something for working families," said Rep. Coy Privette, R-Cabarrus.

Voicing a recurrent theme of Democratic commentary in the House and Senate, Rauch said legislative budget committees should bring every spare penny from the current budget before raising taxes.

Martin said Wednesday he had looked in "every nook and cranny" of the budget and was convinced the tax increase was necessary to fund his salary program.

House Finance Committee Chairman Alex Hall, D-New Hanover, said the Legislature should take a "hard look" at the current budget but that the food tax cut made Martin's plan more attractive.

"The one criticism about a sales tax is that impacts heavily on the poor," Hall said. "If you can keep from taxing necessities such as food, it helps them." Martin's food tax proposal resurrects a theme of his 1984 campaign, when he was elected on a platform of eliminating the intangibles and inventory taxes and the sales taxes on food and medicine.

The Legislature has removed most of the intangibles tax and repealed the inventory tax, but rejected food and medicine tax repeal in 1985.

Governor Hopeful House Will Reinstate Veto Date

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — Gov. Jim Martin says legislative Democrats might be having second thoughts about the Senate's decision to delay implementation of gubernatorial veto authority until his term ends.

"I think we're going to have a little better reception on that subject in the House," Martin said at his weekly news conference Thursday. "I certainly hope so."

Martin said "everybody I've talked with in the House" and some senators had voiced regret that the Senate, which last week approved a constitutional amendment to give the governor veto power, voted to have it take effect in 1993.

The vote was mostly along party lines and followed a bitter debate between Republican and Democratic leaders in the Senate. Majority Leader Ted Kaplan, D-Forsyth, proposed the amendment to exclude Martin after Republican leader Larry Cobb, R-Mecklenburg, unsuccessfully offered amendments to strengthen the veto.

"That seems to be an attempt to insult me or to in some way tweak me for having pushed them to this point," Martin said. "They (Senate Democrats) were able to defeat (the GOP amendments) and should not have struck out in the way they did to deny the veto to me."

Martin hinted that he would use the issue against Democrats in next year's legislative election campaign if the Senate's action isn't reversed. He said he told a recent Republican gathering that Democrats seemed to want to "approve the veto for future governors but leave it as a political issue for me for one more campaign."

He said House Democrats had told him that "the better partisan stance for them should be to insist, if we're going to have the veto, that this governor have to use it."

The Senate veto bill and several similar measures sponsored by House members are pending in a subcommittee of the House Judiciary Committee. The panel's chairman, Rep. Roy Cooper, D-Nash, said he did not know what its position would be on excluding Martin from the veto.

"If the House believes it's prudent to begin the veto in 1990, that's the type of bill we'll pass," Cooper said. "The issue will need to be looked at by the whole Judiciary Committee."

House Speaker Joe Mavretic said he had not discussed the matter with Martin. "It'll get a fair hearing," he said.

Faculty Wants Milley Replaced

WINSTON-SALEM (AP) — The Faculty Council at the North Carolina School of the Arts has called upon Chancellor Jane E. Milley to resign.

The council voted 11-0 Thursday, with two abstentions, to reaffirm an earlier no-confidence vote and — for the first time — to call for Milley's resignation.

A strongly worded letter discussing the vote and the resignation request was delivered to Milley Thursday morning.

Frank Smith, chairman of the Faculty Council, traveled to Chapel Hill Thursday afternoon to deliver a copy of the document to C.D. Spangler, president of the University of North Carolina system.

The discontent focuses on Milley's management style, which top administrators describe as abrasive and counterproductive to the goals of the school. They also say she won't delegate authority and doesn't understand what it takes to develop young artists.

Juice Can Causes Bus To Hit Rail

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ROWLAND, N.C. — A charter bus slammed into a guardrail after a can of fruit juice lodged under the brake pedal, preventing the driver from stopping the vehicle, the state Highway Patrol said today.

All 26 people aboard the bus were injured, Trooper Jeff Stethens said. Most of them suffered serious cuts and bruises, although two were admitted to St. Eugene's Hospital in Dillon, S.C., he said.

Stethens said the bus was exiting when it was exiting at South of the Border at the North Carolina-South Carolina line when the incident occurred. The bus continued up the exit ramp, ran across S.C. 301 and started down the on-ramp on the North Carolina side before slamming against a guardrail.

The accident occurred around 11:35 p.m. Thursday.

"They had an ice cooler that was beside the driver and it contained soft drinks and fruit juices," Stethens said today. "And somehow or another, a can of juice came out of the cooler, and it lodged under the brake pedal. He (the driver) had brakes, he just couldn't smash them."

Twenty-three passengers were taken to St. Eugene's, including the two who were admitted, Stethens said. Three people, including the bus driver, were treated at Southeastern General Hospital in Lumberton.

The passengers were returning to Latrobe, Pa., after taking a cruise in Fort Lauderdale, Fla.

Caution Urged On Road Plan

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — Supporters of an $8.6 billion highway funding package have asked House members to tread carefully before doing anything to threaten the bill's balance.

"This is a balanced package," said Rep. Bob Hunter, D-McDowell, who described the bill at a joint meeting of three House subcommittees Thursday. He said they should be particularly wary of reducing fees and taxes called for in the bill.

"We don't want to have to cut back on the plan," he said. "We hope that we can maintain ... the integrity of that."

Hunter also urged members to avoid controversy and "stay away, as much as possible, from individual projects."

Rep. John Church, D-Vance, called the package "one of the greatest public projects that's ever been introduced." He said he hoped to see the bill enacted by April 15 so it could start pumping money into highway needs by July 1.

Hunter said the public appears ready to accept higher taxes and fees to improve roads.

"I think the message is out there of the needs," he said, noting that North Carolina has the largest state-maintained highway system in the nation.

"It takes a lot of money at the state level to pay for those roads."

While North Carolina's gasoline tax will be relatively high under the proposal, Hunter pointed out that in other states taxes at the county level make up for lower fuel taxes.

"We cannot afford to stand still," he said, noting that neighboring states have already embarked on major road-building programs.

Rep. Sam Hunt, chairman of the House Infrastructure Committee, said he hoped the House would defer action on tax issues until the bill reaches the Finance Committee.

"We're at a starting point," he said. "There are a lot of proposals.

There's a lot of people that are concerned."

On Wednesday, Sen. Bill Goldston, D-Rockingham, unveiled a revised revenue formula to defuse criticism that the program would unfairly burden the poor. That proposal was the third to be discussed by the General Assembly. All three would raise the gasoline tax by 5 1/4 cents per gallon at the pump, to just under 21 cents. There are several proposals for vehicle transfer taxes and other fees to make up the rest of the needed money.

Duke Power Begins Search For Tube Rupture In Nuclear Plant

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHARLOTTE — Operators of the McGuire nuclear plant near Charlotte have begun the tedious process of draining water from a damaged steam generator, part of the search for a tube rupture that caused Duke Power Co.'s most serious safety incident ever.

The rupture, which sent 15,000 gallons of radioactive water into the plant's steam-supply system about midnight Tuesday, was still a mystery to Duke and U.S. Nuclear Regulatory Commission officials.

The water entered Unit No. 1's turbine area, where a small amount of radioactive xenon gas escaped from the plant. Duke said there have been no accidental releases since.

Duke officials said they won't complete draining the 67-foot-high generator and siphoning off radioactive gases inside until this weekend.

Duke spokesman Mike Mullen said on Thursday that plant technicians will be able to isolate the area of the rupture during the draindown.

After the steam generator is dry, workers from a nuclear specialty firm will use video cameras and other equipment to pinpoint the ruptured tube or tubes among 4,500 in the generator.

Hal Tucker, Duke's vice president of nuclear production, said he suspects the cause to be cracking caused by metal stress and chemical corrosion.

Duke has already detected indications of cracking in 200 to 300 tubes in both Unit No. 1 and Unit No. 2 since their startup in 1981, Tucker said. Those tubes have been plugged.

He said he didn't believe the rupture was the result of an earlier problem: premature wearing of tubes discovered in Unit No. 1 in 1982. That problem was caused by violent swirling of water entering the generator. Duke installed a device to diffuse the flow, and Tucker said no similar tube problems have been detected since.

Kim Van Doorn, the senior resident NRC inspector at McGuire, agreed with Tucker that premature wearing was not the likely cause of Tuesday's rupture.

Tubes in three other plants in Florida, Virginia and South Carolina deteriorated so badly that the utility owners were forced to replace the steam generators during the past 10 years.

At the Robinson plant in Hartsville, S.C., Carolina Power & Light

Co. spent $129 million for new steam generators in 1984.

Despite the accident, Duke Power will not inspect Unit 2 of the plant until July, a spokesman for the company said.

Company officials do not believe that a similar problem will occur at Unit 2, Mullen said. However, when Unit 2 is shut down for routine maintenance in July, inspectors will look at the steam generators in that unit, he said.

In December, some of the 4,600 tubes in each of Unit 1's four steam generators were inspected electronically and found to be in operable condition, Mullen said. A similar inspection of Unit 2 was done in August 1988, Mullen said.

The tube rupture was one of the largest ever at a U.S. nuclear plant. It was considered serious by both Duke and the NRC because a rupture breaches the radioactive barriers, providing a pathway for radioactivity to get out of the plant.

"The release definitely could have been higher," Van Doorn said. He said a combination of quick action by plant operators and the fact that the reactor water contained low amounts of radioactivity two months after getting fresh fuel kept the release level low.

Nonetheless, Van Doorn said the NRC investigators are looking at whether McGuire operators followed the best course of action by sending some contaminated water from the steam generator for treatment in the nonradioactive part of the plant.

He said they also pumped some water back into the reactor. While that prevents the inadvertent release of radioactivity, it also raises the risk of diluting a chemical that helps keep the nuclear reaction stable.

Tucker defended the operators' actions, saying they responded exactly as they were trained to do and took a conservative course in managing the accident. Meanwhile, cleanup of more than 200,000 gallons of contaminated water continued Thursday at McGuire Unit No. 1. Unit No. 2 was not affected and continues to operate.

Duke's Mullen said some 15,000 to 20,000 gallons of water was pushed out of the steam-supply system by the leakage of radioactive water from the reactor. Mullen said that water is being cleaned up and the task should be completed today.

In addition, cleanup is continuing on 200,000 gallons of water in the steam-supply system that became contaminated during the accident. Mullen said that cleanup could take several weeks.

First Union Takes Over Florida Bank

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHARLOTTE — First Union Corp.'s merger to create the nation's 14th-largest bank came together during six days and nights of whirlwind negotiations in Jacksonville, Fla., and Charlotte, officials said.

But perhaps the most critical negotiations leading to Tuesday's acquisition of Florida National Banks Inc. took place for several hours Monday afternoon at the Manhattan offices of New York's Chemical Bank.

At that meeting, Chemical Chairman Walter Shipley won a $100 million payment from First Union Chairman Ed Crutchfield for Chemical's option to buy Florida National.

That agreement was the linchpin in a series of events that led to First Union's $749 million acquisition of the Jacksonville-based banking firm, The Charlotte Observer reported. The deal resulted from an anti-Yankee Florida banking law, years-old courting between the banks' chief executives and an intense weekend of number-crunching by several dozen First Union managers in Charlotte.

It was Chemical Bank's misfortune — recent financial problems and that exclusionary Florida banking law — that prompted First Union to propose its daring merger last Thursday, First Union Vice Chairman Robert Allen said Wednesday as he outlined how the deal unfolded.

Chemical agreed in 1984 to acquire Florida National, which has $7.8 billion in assets. But Florida banking laws, aimed at stopping the big New York banks from invading the fast-growing Southeastern state, prevented the merger from occurring.

The state allows Florida-based banks to merge with other Southern banks, but not those outside of the region. North Carolina and South Carolina have similar laws.

Time was running out for Chemical, whose option to buy Florida National expires in August 1990. Moreover, Chemical Bank, a $70 billion bank saddled with $6 billion in Third World loans, is striving to raise its capital, or net worth. A large deal would have eroded Chemical's efforts.

"That's how the light went off in our head," said Allen, who headed the merger team. "There was no indication Florida laws would change in a reasonable period of time so they could conclude the deal."

"Chemical struck a fantastic deal," says analyst Gerry O'Meara of Robinson-Humphrey Co. He estimates Chemical would have received just $50 million in compensation from Florida National in mid-1990 under its previous merger agreement.

Three Plead Guilty In Pentagon Purchasing Scandal

By Joan Mower
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ALEXANDRIA, Va. — The chief prosecutor in the Pentagon purchasing scandal says cooperation from three businessmen who have pleaded guilty will help him move ahead on the case at a "tremendous pace."

U.S. Attorney Henry Hudson commented Thursday after the three pleaded guilty to a variety of charges stemming from the 2½-year-old investigation — code-named "Operation Ill Wind" — of the Pentagon's $150-billion-a-year purchasing practices.

One of the men who pleaded guilty in U.S. District Court was Charles F. Gardner, 58, former general manager of Unisys Corp.'s surveillance and fire control systems division in Great Neck, N.Y.

Gardner admitted bribing Melvyn Paisley, the former assistant secretary of the Navy for research, engineering and systems, by buying Paisley's condominium in Su Valley, Idaho, for an inflated price in 1986, and to funneling illegal corporate contributions to congressional campaigns.

"These pleas of guilty ... are significant developments not only because of what they demonstrate in themselves, but also because the cooperation we will receive from these three individuals will move this investigation forward at ... a tremendous pace," Hudson said.

James G. Neal and Kenneth F. Brooke, both private consultants, pleaded guilty to other charges before U.S. District Court Judge Claude Hylton. Neal, a consultant to Unisys, worked closely with Gardner, prosecutors said in court documents. Gardner also worked with William Galvin, a private consultant who is Brooke's stepfather.

Neal admitted conspiring to bribe Garland Tomlin Jr., who was a Navy engineer with the Naval Electronics Systems Command until his retirement in October 1985.

On instructions from Gardner, Neal transferred in 1983 and 1984 a total of $400,000 to a Longwood International, a company in Nassau, Bahamas owned by Tomlin in order to influence Tomlin's decisions, the government said. Tomlin has not been charged with any crime.

Gardner was charged in a criminal information with three counts, including bribery, conspiracy to commit bribery and file false statements and aiding and assisting in the filing of a false tax return. He faces a maximum sentence of 23 years in prison and fines of up to $750,000.

Prosecutors said Gardner amassed a slush fund by hiring "consultants" to Unisys with the understanding that some money would be placed "in bank accounts, both domestic and foreign, for purposes of bribery, illegal campaign contributions, and in part for ... Gardner's personal use."

The government also said Gardner caused Unisys to "make and present to the departments of the Navy and Air Force false, fictitious and fraudulent claims upon and against the United States."

Unisys, a giant computer company with headquarters in Blue Bell, Pa., said in a statement that it had cooperated with the government and welcomed Gardner's guilty pleas.

"What has been uncovered is a deliberate fraud and other criminal activities, carefully disguised by a small group of former Sperry employees and consultants," the company said. Unisys is a successor to Sperry Corp.

The government said Gardner, at Galvin's suggestion, arranged to have Neal buy Paisley's resort condominium in August 1986 for $149,000, a price above fair market value. A year later the property sold for $100,000.

Hudson said the condominium purchase was designed to influence Paisley's actions on two Pentagon contracts sought by Unisys, one on the Aegis automated radar firing system and the other on the Marine air traffic and landing system. Unisys eventually received a portion of the $9 billion Aegis contract.

Paisley, now a private consultant, has not been charged with any crime, but prosecutors said he "performed certain official acts to benefit" Unisys with regard to the two contracts.

Gardner also caused illegal $1,000 corporate contributions to be made in 1986 and 1987 to the campaigns of Rep. Roy Dyson, D-Md., and former Rep. Bill Chappell, D-Fla., both members of a House committee that handled defense issues. Dyson and Chappell have denied knowing that illegal contributions were funneled to their campaigns.

In January, Robert D. Barrett, a former Unisys executive, pleaded guilty in January to charges stemming from the complicated scheme to make illegal campaign contributions.

Prosecutors spelled out an elaborate network of companies in Northern Virginia that Neal set up at Gardner's request to receive money from Unisys and Sperry.

Neal also pleaded guilty to making false claims to the government and conspiring to defraud the government by concealing his true taxable income. He faces up to 15 years in prison and fines of $750,000.

Brooke, 40, pleaded guilty to evading about $66,000 in taxes in 1985, prosecutors said. He faces a sentence of five years in prison and a fine of up to $250,000.

Energy Secretary Gets Fast Start On Nuclear Woes

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON (AP) — Energy Secretary James D. Watkins is moving quickly to tackle the problems of modernizing the nation's problem-plagued nuclear weapons plants and cleaning up their hazardous wastes.

Even before his formal swearing-in Thursday, a team of nuclear experts assembled by Watkins had begun assessing conditions and prospects at key weapons plants to give him an independent view of the problems, department officials said.

Members of the Watkins team visited the Savannah River Plant, near Aiken, S.C., last week and were at the Hanford Reservation in Washington state earlier this week, the officials said.

The creation of the team and the start of their work were not announced by the department.

Watkins informed the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee late last month that he wanted a special review of efforts at Savannah River to prepare the restart of three reactors there that produce tritium, a perishable and scarce gas needed to make nuclear warheads. The reactors have been shut down since last spring because of safety, technical and management problems.

"This review will provide me with an integrated overview of progress and planned activities" at Savannah River and other key parts of the weapons complex, Watkins said in a written response to questions from members of the Senate panel. A text of Watkins' comments was made available by the panel this week.

The department has said that unless it gets at least one of the Savannah River reactors back in operation by the end of the year, supplies of tritium would be dangerously low.

Will Callicott, a department spokesman, said he could confirm that members of the new review team had visited Savannah River, but he declined to provide more details.

Tom Bauman, a spokesman at the department's Hanford office in Richland, Wash., said two members of the team, Leo Duffy and Fred Carlson, had visited the site on Monday. He, too, said he could not discuss other details of the visit.

At Watkins' swearing-in ceremony at Energy Department headquarters, President Bush pledged to "waste no time" starting to correct the weapons plants problems, including extensive soil and groundwater contamination at some sites.

"This task is critical," Bush told an audience of several hundred Energy Department employees.

"These problems developed over time and they'll be fully solved only over time, but we'll waste no time getting started on fixing these problems," Bush said.

The department in the waning days of the Reagan administration issued a preliminary plan for spending $81 billion over the next 21 years to modernize and begin cleaning up the weapons complex. Bush has not explicitly endorsed the plan. At his swearing-in, Watkins said his main goal was to instill a more responsible attitude in Energy Department workers that would lead to sounder practices in the nuclear field.

Hero Pilot Forced Out

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

HONOLULU — The pilot praised for safely landing a United Airlines jet that lost a chunk of its fuselage and nine passengers in flight is being forced to retire as he turns 60 this month, and he's not happy about it.

"I would certainly love to keep flying," United Capt. David M. Cronin, who turns 60 on March 23, said Thursday at Honolulu International Airport. "Unfortunately, they can't put new rivets in me."

Cronin complained that the federal government's requirement of mandatory retirement at his age is outdated, but he didn't know whether he would use his new celebrity status to try to get the rule repealed.

Howard Students Call Off Protest

LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — Triumphant Howard University students ended their takeover of the school's administration building Thursday, three days after the start of a tense confrontation with university administrators and D.C. police over the appointment of Lee Atwater, Republican National Committee chairman, to the board of trustees.

The occupation of the building ended after the university agreed to eight student demands during negotiations that involved Mayor Marion Barry and Jesse L. Jackson, who went to the building about 10 p.m. Wednesday.

"We left the table with everything we wanted," said a jubilant Garfield Swaby, a senior who is president of the Howard University Student Association. "If you are right, you will win."

The university's president, James E. Cheek, agreed in an eight-point memorandum not to punish students for the protests and to pursue student goals that included speeding financial aid processing, improving campus security and developing an African American graduate studies program. Participants in the negotiations said Jackson persuaded Cheek by telephone to agree to the students' demands.

Barry also pressured the university to settle by telling university officials that he was adamantly opposed to using District police to arrest the students, according to participants. In a statement late Wednesday, Cheek had threatened to have students arrested if they failed to leave the building by the end of the day.

Thursday, the campus was quiet, as officials returned to the administration building for the first time since students expelled them Monday, and students who had spent most of the past week protesting returned to their dormitories and books. One student leader estimated that as many as 3,000 Howard students, out of a total enrollment of about 12,000, participated in the protest at various times.

Protest leaders went to Capitol Hill on Thursday to discuss their grievances with members of Congress, just before a House Appropriations subcommittee heard Cheek give previously scheduled testimony.

The student uprising began last Friday, when more than 2,000 students disrupted the university's convocation ceremonies to protest Atwater's appointment. The protest forced the cancellation of a keynote speech by entertainer Bill Cosby.

Soviet Expelled

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOSCOW — The Soviets today protested the U.S. expulsion of one of their diplomats and claimed he was arrested while taking out the garbage at his home, not while receiving secret papers.

"Obviously, the long-awaited thaw in relations between the superpowers doesn't suit everyone in the U.S.A.," the official Tass news agency said in its lengthy dispatch today.

It called the expulsion of Lt. Col. Yuri N. Pakhtusov a "provocative action."

However, there was no immediate word on any Soviet retaliation.

Pakhtusov, a military attaché at the Soviet Embassy in Washington, was ordered to leave the United States on Thursday after a six-month FBI investigation culminated in his arrest Wednesday night.

A U.S. source identified the 35-year-old Soviet as a member of GRU, the Soviet military's intelligence arm.

U.S. officials said he was ordered home after the FBI caught him receiving sensitive information on how the U.S. government protects computer secrets.

Tass mocked those charges and expressed outrage at the FBI's treatment of Pakhtusov following the arrest outside his Virginia home.

"FBI agents seized Pakhtusov late Wednesday evening, when, before going to sleep, he left his apartment to put garbage in the garbage chute. He went out in house slippers, sweatpants, and a T-shirt," Tass said. "You'll agree that people don't go out into the cold to receive secret documents dressed like that."

Tass said the FBI agents handcuffed Pakhtusov and put him in a car. The agency said they offered him money to defect, but the diplomat refused.

North Complained Of 'Asinine' Questioning By Congressmen

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Oliver North angrily complained about having to answer "asinine" congressional questions, according to a witness in his trial on charges of lying to Congress about the Iran-Contra affair.

Daniel L. Conrad, the liaison between North and conservative fundraiser Carl "Spitz" Channell, said North made the comment in the fall of 1985 and then told Conrad the two had to stop meeting at North's office.

Conrad's name appeared on a log at the Old Executive Office Building each time he visited North and "he didn't want meetings to be so often," Conrad testified Thursday.

Conrad said North told him the National Security Council recently had received a letter from a congressional committee asking about NSC staff members' involvement in fund-raising and other activities for the Nicaraguan Contra rebels. At the time, Congress had banned U.S. aid to the Contras.

"He angrily went through the questions and he was irritated that he had to develop answers to these asinine questions," recalled Conrad.

Because of the political heat from the congressional inquiries, North then said that "we need to not meet so frequently in these offices," Conrad added.

He said the two then started meeting outside North's offices, chiefly at a hotel across the street from the White House, but that after congressional pressure waned, they began meeting again at North's office.

"These things run in cycles," said Conrad. "They would cool off and we would meet again in his offices."

Four of the 12 criminal charges against North are that he made false statements and obstructed Congress in 1985 by denying he assisted the Contras. Then-National Security Adviser Robert McFarlane signed letters containing the denials and the government alleges that North prepared the responses.

The House Intelligence Committee sent McFarlane a list of questions on Sept. 12, 1985, asking whether North had been handling contacts with private fund-raising groups for the Contras. The question mentioned several groups, but not Channell's organization, the National Endowment for the Preservation of Liberty. North is charged with making false statements to Congress in responses made on Oct. 7 of that year.

Conrad recalled another meeting in North's office in December 1985 in which a newspaper account described the shooting down of a Soviet HIND helicopter in Nicaragua by a Redeye missile launched by the Contras.

"Col. North pointed to the clipping with some pride and said it was the first time a Soviet helicopter had been shot down in the war," recalled Conrad. "He made the point that the Redeyes only cost $8,000 apiece. In other words, we could do a great deal for the freedom fighters by getting them Redeye missiles."

Conrad also said that he tried to get North to tailor his pitches to contributors based on how much the private fund-raisers thought the donors would be willing to give.

Conrad said he would give North a list of people coming to see the White House aide and how much each was likely to give and that he would then tell North: "Would you be so kind as to structure your presentation around that sum of money?"

When a wealthy Connecticut widow, Barbara Newington, sent in $500,000 in stock certificates, Conrad handed them to North, who said, "I have never had so much money in my hands at one time. He actually played with the stock certificates and he said, 'She is a great American.'"

Launch Count Starts

By Howard Benedict
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — The countdown began early today for a Monday launch of space shuttle Discovery on a flight its commander says will demonstrate "we're a space-faring nation again."

The launch will be the third for the shuttle program since the Challenger disaster more than three years ago, and the first of seven flights scheduled this year as NASA moves toward its target of safe, routine, once-a-month missions by 1992.

"The countdown started right on time," said NASA spokeswoman Lisa Malone. The ambitious 1989 schedule is getting a late start, with Discovery's flight delayed nearly four weeks so faulty or suspect engine parts could be replaced.

The countdown clock began ticking at 12:01 a.m. after test conductor Jerry Crute issued the traditional call to stations that summoned members of the launch team to their posts. The initial task was to electrically activate the spaceship's systems.

Liftoff is set for 8:07 a.m. Monday. The five astronauts for the five-day mission were to arrive this afternoon from their training base in Houston to make final flight preparations.

The commander, Navy Capt. Michael L. Coats, said in a recent interview that the first two post-Challenger missions, flown successfully last September and December, "were important to show that we could fly the space shuttle again after the catastrophe."

"The next step," he said, "is to prove that we can do it on a regular basis, that we're back in the business of space, to show we're a space-faring nation again."

"It was very frustrating for us in the space program the last three years to watch the Russians set new flight time records and do all the things in space with their shuttle while we've been grounded," Coats said.

Flying with Coats will be Air Force Col. John E. Blaha, the pilot; Marine Col. James F. Buchli and Robert C. Springer, and Dr. James M. Bagian, a medical doctor.

Bagian and Springer are to release a $100 million Tracking and Data Relay Satellite six hours after liftoff. The satellite is to join two identical satellites to form a global network for transmitting communications among ground stations, the shuttle and several other satellites.

Once the new satellite is operational, NASA will begin closing down six of its shuttle ground stations.

Following deployment of the satellite, the astronauts will settle into four days of science and medical experiments.

The Discovery is scheduled to touch down March 18 at Edwards Air Force Base in California.

Scientists Say You May Be Able To Fool That Cold

By Daniel Q. Haney
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BOSTON — Scientists reported today that the next best thing to a cure for the common cold — a way to prevent it — may have become possible at last by using a kind of cellular illusion to trick the relentless virus.

Two teams, working separately, have deciphered the chemical hitching post that about half of all cold viruses use when they latch onto cells in the nose and infect them.

This seemingly arcane discovery may be an important key to defeating one of humanity's most universal miseries.

"It is clearly feasible to develop a treatment based on what we have learned," said Dr. Timothy

A. Springer of the Center for Blood Research in Boston.

Their anti-cold strategy is simple: Fool the virus.

The scientists have developed a detailed picture of the rhinovirus receptor on the cells that make up the lining of the nose. A cold occurs when a virus attaches itself to one these receptors and infiltrates the cell.

Researchers have isolated the gene responsible for making the receptor, and as a result, they can produce it in limitless quantities.

They believe they can keep people healthy by flooding their noses with copies of the receptor. If a cold virus wanders by, it will harmlessly attack a dummy receptor and never find a susceptible nose cell.

No one knows for sure whether this ploy will work, although it looks promising in a test tube. A similar scheme is being tested against AIDS.

"If it works, it would be very exciting," commented Dr. Richard Crowell, a virus researcher at Hahnemann University School of Medicine in Philadelphia.

Even if the scientific hunch is right, it will be several years before such treatment is available. There will also be drawbacks. The therapy will only work against rhinoviruses, which causes about half of all colds, but it will be powerless against other cold germs. And it probably will not stop colds once they start.

"This is not a cure. It is a scientific step," said Dr. Michael

E. Kamarck of Molecular Therapeutics in West Haven, Conn.

Reports on the two teams' conclusions were published in the journal Cell. One study was conducted at the Center for Blood Research, the Dana-Farber Cancer Institute in Boston and Boehringer Ingelheim Pharmaceuticals in Ridgefield, Conn., and the other at Molecular Therapeutics, part of Miles Inc., a pharmaceutical firm.

Springer said his group has already produced a soluble form of the virus receptor, but they are attempting to develop a version that will be even more effective as a virus-fooling drug.

Experts predicted that such a treatment would probably be used as a nose spray or drops. Since it would be impractical — and probably expensive — to use the drops daily, people might take the medicine when they are especially worried about getting colds.

For instance, parents might take the treatment to protect themselves when their child brings home a cold. Or an athlete might use it to keep from catching a cold before an important game.

Scientists said the discovery resulted from combining two lines of separate research.

Springer has worked for several years on a structure on the surface of cells called intercellular adhesion molecule-1, or ICAM-1. This protein is the receptor that white blood cells use to hook themselves onto the body's tissues.

'Lean On Me' School Principal Suspended

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PATERSON, N.J. — Joe Clark, the high school principal who became famous for his no-nonsense discipline, has been ordered suspended because he arranged a school assembly at which four strippers performed, officials said.

Thursday's action marks another episode in the turbulent tenure of Clark at Eastside High School, part of which led to the recently released film, "Lean On Me," which depicts Clark as a well-intentioned administrator whose tough tactics arouse controversy.

The suspension was ordered by Paterson's superintendent of schools, Dr. Frank Napier, according to Robert G. Rosenberg, attorney for the board of education.

"Dr. Napier has stated that Mr. Clark failed to supervise his building on this particular day," Rosenberg said.

The suspension must be ratified by the school board next week.

The school assembly included an act by dancer Wanda Dee in which she stripped four male dancers down to their G-strings. School officials on hand stopped the show right away.

Clark was not at the school the day of the assembly last month and has said he never expected the dance group he hired to lapse into lasciviousness.

The principal could not be reached for comment late Thursday but earlier in the day, toting his trademark bullhorn, Clark led a group of more than 500 students across city streets to the Board of Education offices to plead for more bilingual teachers in the school system.

Napier said he met with the students and discussed ways in which he could recruit additional bilingual teachers.

As a result of the meeting, a committee of school officials and students will be formed to help recruit additional bilingual teachers, Napier said.

Survey Shows Youth Considering Suicide

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ATLANTA — One out of every three eighth- and 10th-graders surveyed in 20 states said they have seriously considered killing themselves, and many have poor health habits that include drinking, smoking and ignorance of safe sex.

Thirty-four percent of the 11,000 students — 25 percent of the boys and 42 percent of the girls — reported that they had thought seriously about ending their lives, and 15 percent had gone so far as to attempt potentially fatal injuries, the national Centers for Disease Control reported Thursday.

Dr. Lloyd Kolbe, director of the CDC's Division of Adolescent and School Health, said the suicide figures were surprising. "We just didn't think it would be that high," he said.

He said it was the first time the suicide question had been asked in the National Adolescent Student Health Survey, so researchers lacked a benchmark for comparison.

"Many schools in the nation are teaching more about suicide, about how to identify friends who may be suicidal and many school faculty are being trained in how to deal with suicides should they occur," Kolbe noted.

He thought the findings added urgency to such activities. "I think what it means is that we need to begin exploring this a little more and looking at what we can do," Kolbe said.

The 1987 survey addressed questions about alcohol, drugs, violence, suicide and sex to eighth- and 10th-grade students in randomly selected classrooms chosen from a national sample of 217 schools in 20 states.

In the eighth grade, 51 percent had tried smoking and 77 percent had tried alcohol; by 10th grade, the numbers rose to 63 percent for smoking and 89 percent for liquor.

Overall, 22 percent reported smoking in the previous month and about 32 percent reporting having five or more drinks at one time in the previous two weeks.

"Drinking and drug use ... contributes very substantially to homicide and suicide," Kolbe said. The survey also measured students' knowledge about health-related topics:

—Forty-seven percent believed wrongly that donating blood increases the risk of AIDS.

—Fifty-one percent thought incorrectly that washing after sex could decrease the likelihood of getting AIDS.

—Only 43 percent were able to figure out from a cereal box which was the chief ingredient, and only 42 percent knew what the date on a milk carton means.

One bright spot was that more than 90 percent knew that having sex with a person infected with AIDS or sharing drug needles increases the chance of transmitting the virus, according to CDC researchers.

Soviets Will Accept World Court Rulings

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

UNITED NATIONS — Soviet treatment of human rights probably will never be tested before the World Court and Moscow's willingness to obey court rulings carries more symbolism than substance, U.N. and State Department legal experts say.

Pieter Kooijmans, U.N. special investigator on human rights, said Soviet acceptance of the court's authority in six major human rights treaties "is the shattering of a 40-year-old taboo."

Interviewed in Leiden, the Netherlands, Kooijmans added: "It would be a real breakthrough for human rights if the Soviet Union would recognize the right of individuals" to file complaints of rights abuses.

The World Court does not hear complaints from individuals, only governments.

A State Department legal expert noted that the World Court has never handled a human rights dispute and said privately that the Soviet acceptance of jurisdiction "may amount to nothing more than a meaningless gesture."

"It would be unlikely that a human rights dispute would ever wind its way to the World Court," he said.

State Department spokesman Charles Redman said Thursday that the United States welcomes "any step in the submission of disputes of this kind to binding decisions by neutral bodies such as the International Court of Justice," the court's formal name.

The Soviet Union had ratified the six treaties and pledged to honor them but withheld recognition of the authority of the World Court to judge its compliance.

On Wednesday, Moscow announced it would accept the court's jurisdiction in the human rights treaties, putting into practice a policy President Mikhail S. Gorbachev advocated in December before the General Assembly.

The Soviets agreed to the court's authority on treaties condemning genocide, banning slavery, guaranteeing political rights for women, prohibiting racism and outlawing torture.

Gorbachev also has spoken recently in favor of a larger U.N. role in such international areas as arms control and space exploration, traditionally the domain of the Soviet Union and United States.

The Soviet acceptance of the court's authority will aid the Soviet campaign to hold a human rights conference in Moscow in 1991 as one of several follow-up meetings to the 1975 Helsinki agreements on European security and cooperation.

In January, Washington changed its position and said it would accept a Moscow conference, citing the Soviet release of political prisoners, the easing of emigration and more tolerant views on free speech and freedom of religion.

Only governments can take cases before the court, which has 15 judges and sits in The Hague in the Netherlands. It has no authority to deal with complaints of individuals or private organizations. Under the Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, individual citizens can complain of rights abuses to an international body of legal experts with the power to order compensation.

retain ultimate control over the content of any future tree legislation.

"We're not specifying a tree ordinance here. All we are saying is we would like permission to look at it. The process of formulating a particular ordinance would come later," he said.

Amy Hannon of the EAC reiterated Hadden's assertion.

"This is a request to create the possibility to create the conditions to spend as much time as we like thinking about ordinances, defining them, making them specific, or even doing away with them," she said.

"This is almost not asking for action. This is asking 'could we think about taking action sometime in the forthcoming future.'"

Dr. Barney Kane of the commission also appeared before the council, saying, "We only wanted to open the avenue so that we would have the authority to draft what the people of the city would like in the way of preserving the pastoral integrity of this community — to keep it from becoming a concrete city instead of a Greenville," he said.

"I think to characterize this as Gestapo tactics is not quite fair, Mr. mayor," Kane told Carter. Kane's observation prompted a round of applause from the commission members and their supporters.

Lynn Tozer, representing the Greenville Home Builders Association, said his organization was opposed to the proposed resolution and argued that government regulations have a significant effect on the cost of homes.

"The American Dream is home ownership," he said, as about 30 people who attended in opposition to the resolution listened. "Through regulations, you have caused the developer, the land owner, for his cost to elevate to the point where you are pushing your own people in your own city out of homes."

"In an era of rising interest rates, you must consider the effect that this will have on the city."

Also speaking was Marie Davis, president of the Greenville Board of Realtors, who called the resolution "a patent infringement on private property rights."

City Attorney Mac McCarty said the next time the resolution could be submitted to the General Assembly would be in June 1990 during the legislative short session.

Storm Rakes Coast

Armand and Betty Muller, owners of the Claydon Motor Lodge in Kill Devil Hills, lost a unit on Wednesday and watched Thursday morning as another section of the motel they have managed for 23 years slipped into the churning sea.

"The storm windows started breaking last night, and we grabbed what we could and left," Betty Muller said Thursday.

"It didn't go all at once. It has been coming down for three high tides. But yesterday, when we saw the floor fall out of the bottom unit and the furniture go floating away, we knew it was over."

In South Nags Head, a unit at the Sandspur South Motel and Cottage Court slid into the sea after waves gnawed away its foundation.

As many as 50 dumptruck loads of sand were placed in front of a neighboring oceanfront unit during the day to try to save it, manager Dot Williams said.

On Hatteras Island, Ms. Dillon said the morning's overwash at three motels in Buxton was "a near-disaster."

About 200 volunteers, including Coast Guardsmen, high school students and National Park Service rangers, helped repair the damaged dune, Dillon said. Work began at 7:30 a.m. and continued late in the day. The Lighthouse View Motel in Buxton also was threatened.

Dawson described a frightening experience on the Herbert C. Bonner Bridge Wednesday night: As she crossed the bridge about 10 p.m., a "wall of water came over the bridge" and struck her car. "It scared me so bad, I had to stop the car when I got off the bridge and pray. That bridge is not stable. It was moving."

The high tides had Hatteras Island officials worried about the Herbert C. Bonner bridge, which connects the island's 5,000 people with Bodie Island to the north. Late Thursday night, officials said water was slashing over both ends of the bridge.

Master Chief Petty Officer Wayne Gray said Thursday that the storm ate away up much of the land north of the abandoned Oregon Inlet Coast Guard station, up to 250 feet in some places.

Gov. Jim Martin said he had sent a team to study danger to the Bonner Bridge.

"I've asked that we see if there's a way to put some more large stone riff-raff along the south end of the bridge to protect the land coming from the bridge," Martin said.

"Our engineers have determined that the bridge is not in danger, but if the land south of the bridge washes away, you wouldn't be able to get on the bridge," he said.

Senate Starts Process Of Reconciliation

adviser and a Bush supporter in the presidential campaign. Brent Scowcroft, Bush's national security adviser, also was mentioned although he said he would stay in his current post.

Warner, asked on NBC's "Today" show this morning whether he would be interested in the job, said: "I can best serve my president and also the people of Virginia by staying where I am. I'm pledged to fill out this Senate term, and I'm going to stand for re-election (in 1990)." The naming of a new candidate for defense secretary gains added urgency in light of evidence the Pentagon is close to bureaucratic paralysis because of the time lost in the bruising battle over Tower.

Decisions need to be made across the Pentagon, including the staffing of key positions, Bush's plan to cut almost $6.4 billion from the Pentagon budget, and on a special 90-day strategic military policy review the president has set in motion.

In a statement he read minutes after the Senate vote, Tower said: "I will be recorded as the first Cabinet nominee in the history of the republic to be rejected in the first 90 days of a presidency and perhaps be harshly judged.

"But I depart from this place at peace with myself, knowing that I have given a full measure of devotion to my country," he continued. "No public figure in my memory has been subjected to such a far-reaching and thorough investigation nor had his human foibles bared to such intensive and demeaning public scrutiny."

In the Senate, Democratic leaders turned to damage control to limit the impact of Tower's rejection on the bipartisan spirit that seemed about to bloom in the days immediately after Bush's inauguration.

But many Republicans said the bitterness would linger.

Dole had much to say, condemning a confirmation process he said had become a "hotbed of character assassination" and "a pitched partisan battle."

"The partisan taste of this debate is going to linger," said Sen. Robert Kasten, R-Wis. "This is going to make it damn tough for us to act in much of a bipartisan manner in the months ahead."

"Bipartisanship is not going to be automatically restored unless the majority wants it restored," said Sen. Ted Stevens, R-Alaska.

But Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell of Maine voiced the optimistic view of many senior Democrats when he said: "There will be no long-term adverse effects within the Senate."

"We must work together in the future because the national interest compels us to do so," he said. "I know it is difficult now in the heat and anger of the moment, but that is precisely what I ask of my colleagues."

Sen. John Danforth, R-Mo., who said he feared the scrap over Tower might mark "the first battle in an all-out war between Congress and the president," said he had been reassured by Mitchell's words.

"But words are cheap, and the continuing effect of the vote remains to be seen," he said.

Some Republicans disagreed with their angry GOP colleagues.

"I feel a spirit of reconciliation already coming over the Senate," said Sen. Warner, the ranking GOP member of the Senate Armed Services Committee.

Vice President Dan Quayle, who had stood ready to break a tie in Tower's favor as the vote was taken, was also more conciliatory than many Republicans.

"We have a job ahead of us," Quayle said. "We have an agenda ahead of us. And we're going to need the help and cooperation of the Democratic Congress."

Many Democrats echoed Mitchell's attempts to get the congressional train back on track.

"The importance of this vote has been exaggerated out of all proportion," said Sen. David Boren, D-Okla. "It is important that we now put the Tower controversy behind us and get back to work."

Sen. Carl Levin, D-Mich., added, "This was one vote on one person on one job under one set of circumstances."

The Senate's most senior Democrat, Robert C. Byrd of West Virginia, said he believes the Senate fulfilled its role under the Constitution "to refuse to be a rubber stamp for any president, new or otherwise."

"These things come and go like storms which sweep out to sea, and then the sun comes out again," he said.

Unemployment Hits 15-Year Low

percent for the prior five months.

Janet L. Norwood, commissioner of the Bureau of Labor Statistics, said in testimony prepared for Congress that "many wondered whether it was possible for the rate to decline any further or whether the labor market had already expanded as far as it could go."

She said that while the decline was important, most of the decrease was among groups whose jobless rates tend to be erratic, notably youth and Hispanics.

Overall, the civilian labor force contracted by 247,000 people last month to 123.2 million, while 142,000 workers found jobs, according to the department's monthly sample of households, from which the jobless rate is calculated.

With the rise in employment, 62.9 percent of working-age Americans held jobs, matching the record high level set in January.

February's job growth was paced by gains in service-producing sectors, while employment in goods-producing industries decreased slightly due to a weather-related decline in construction.

There were 321,000 new jobs in the service-producing sector of the economy, including gains in health and business services.

Construction employment was down 22,000 jobs due to harsh weather after a strong surge in January that had been attributed largely to mild weather.

Manufacturing employment was down 8,000 jobs after steadily increasing since September.

In figures closely watched for signs of inflation, the report showed that seasonally adjusted average hourly earnings of nonsupervisory employees were up a slim 0.1 percent and average weekly earnings declined 0.2 percent in February.

A separate unemployment calculation including the 1.7 million members of the armed forces stationed in the United States also stood at 5.1 percent in February, down from 5.4 percent a month earlier.

In the civilian population, the jobless rate among whites was 4.3 percent last month, down from 4.6 percent in January, while the unemployment rate for blacks was 11.9 percent, down from 12 percent.

The jobless rate among Hispanics plunged to 6.8 percent from 8.4 percent in January.

The rate for teen-agers dropped by 1.6 percentage points to 14.8 percent, while the unemployment rate for young adults aged 20 to 24 fell 1.2 points to 8.1 percent.

Analysts have long been forecasting an economic slowdown, but most reports at the start of 1989 have indicated the economy continues to demonstrate strong momentum.

Egypt May Build Poison Gas Plant

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ZURICH, Switzerland — A Swiss engineering company today said it has cut its business links with a military-industrial complex in Egypt that reportedly plans to build a plant to produce poison gas.

The company said it believed the parts it shipped to Egypt would be used to produce pharmaceuticals but that it severed its business relationship with the Egyptian complex on the advice of the Swiss government.

The comment by Krebs A.G. followed a news report in The New York Times today saying that U.S. officials believe Egypt is assembling Swiss-made parts that could be used to create a chemical weapons plant.

The report, quoting Swiss and U.S. officials, said the Bush administration hasn't decided how to respond to the reported Egyptian plan.

The Times said Krebs delivered to Egypt parts that will be installed in a plant at Abu Zaabal, north of Cairo.

Churches Urged To Screen All Child-Care Employees

By George W. Cornell
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Religious institutions are being hit with a tide of child abuse lawsuits, and a leading church-state attorney says churches should take steps to protect themselves and the children.

Such action "is long overdue," says Oliver S. Thomas, general counsel for the Baptist Joint Committee on Public Affairs in Washington, D.C., noting the swelling number of such cases.

"It's going on across the country, for religious as well as non-religious organizations," he added in a telephone interview. "It's happening, and it's time to take it seriously."

Thomas advises churches to begin screening all child-care workers, as well as other employees placed in regular contact with children to verify they have not been convicted of child-related crimes.

"This is not a burdensome thing and it's extremely important for the children's sake," he said. "Parents would be pleased. And churches could breathe a sigh of relief that they've acted responsibly."

Thomas said that more than 100 claims for sexual abuse of children have been filed against churches nationwide and the number is continually growing, involving various denominations.

"It's not a Baptist, Catholic or Methodist problem, but everybody's concern," he said. "It's pervasive."

He said damage settlements in such cases often are in the millions. "These are big-dollar lawsuits," he said. "Churches don't realize their potential liability, nor the greater need for protecting the children."

He suggests a formal screening of prospective employees of church child-care centers to determine if they have been convicted of sex offenses or other crimes involving children or of committing acts of abuse or neglect.

Such information is a matter of public record available through local criminal and civil court clerks, or in some localities, circuit or district court clerks handling both

"This would take little more than a telephone call or trip to the courthouse," he said.

"The stakes are high for both the children and the churches. On the human side, one incident of abuse can scar a child for life. On the financial side, the potential costs to the church is staggering."

While not suggesting formal screening of Sunday school teachers and other lay volunteers, as he does for day-care workers, he advises extreme care in selecting anyone who will have frequent, direct contact with children.

He said that traditionally, claims against churches for abusive acts by employees have met with little success on grounds such acts were aberrations disconnected from the employment, and the church thus was not accountable.

However, he said a different possibility has been raised by a case against Victory Tabernacle Church in Norfolk, Va., sued by parent-soning girl repeatedly raped by a church employee.

They contended it should have known of the employee's past child-abuse offenses. While a trial court dismissed the case on grounds the church itself was not liable, the Virginia Supreme Court reinstated the case.

Folklorist Listens To Pitt County

By Carol Tyer
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

"What's a nice girl like you doing trying to make a living as a folklorist?"

Anne Kimzey is asked this or a similar question often. She's even had it posed to her by her father in Chattanooga, Tenn.

The former newspaper writer doesn't have ready answers for her dad or anyone else. But she said she's come to know within herself, even in the face of all the moving she's done and expects to do, that she's doing exactly what she wants. Ms. Kimzey is spending the next three months in Pitt County seeking to find, interview and make available for public school use the knowledge and insights of the people of Pitt County. She's seeking out the people who normally might not be called upon to share their knowledge.

She's out every day somewhere talking to people about the old days, the old skills, the old pastimes. Her job is to preserve for us all the wisdom and experience that will be lost forever if people like her don't do it for us. She arms herself with a notebook, a tape recorder and two cameras. Mostly she encourages people to talk by being a good listener.

In Pitt County, she's interviewing musicians, cooks, quilters, soap-makers, moonshiners and others who have learned their practices through knowledge passed down from their parents and grandparents and beyond.

Her long-range plan is to compile for the ECU Folklore Archive profiles of folk artists of Pitt County and the nearby area for inclusion in a booklet to be used in the schools.

Her most recent folklore job was as coordinator for the North Carolina Folk Heritage Award ceremony for the North Carolina Arts Council. Last summer she was a researcher in four counties of South Carolina for the McKissick Museum in Columbia, S.C. In the summer of 1987 she was an archival assistant cataloging folk music field recordings for the Southern Folklife Collection at UNC-Chapel Hill. In late 1986 and early 1987, she served as a documentation assistant in a statewide quilt survey for the North Carolina Quilt Project.

A former feature writer and advertising account executive for a Charlotte newspaper, she has a B.S. degree in journalism from UNC-Chapel Hill. And she has completed all requirements except a thesis toward a master's degree in folklore from UNC-CH.

She expects her next position to be as a folklorist with the Alabama Council for the Arts and Humanities in Montgomery, Ala.

Ms. Kimzey's work here is directed by Karen Baldwin, director of the ECU Folklore Archive within the ECU English Department. Anyone who would like to talk to Ms. Kimzey or who has suggestions of people to whom she might like to talk is invited to call her at 757-6389 or 757-6041.

Schoolchildren Work On America

Dear Abby: You need to know how much good you do with your column. I teach a class of special children. There are 12 children, grades 1 through 5, at Skeen Elementary School in Leesburg, Fla.

A letter in your column stimulated them to get involved. We call our program "Litter Perfect."

They want you to know what they (along with family and friends) have done about cleaning up their surroundings since Nov. 29, 1988.

I am enclosing a letter from that class. I hope you have room for it. -- Their Teacher

Dear Teacher: I made room. Here's their letter:

Dear Abby

Abigail Van Buren

Dear Abby: Our class is studying ecology. We read your list of how long it takes things to rot.

We are helping to clean up America. We are recycling. We have recycled 140 1/2 pounds of cans, 23 pounds of scrap aluminum, 966 pounds of glass and 4,370 pounds of newspaper. Sincerely, Eddie Day, Mrs. Ayis' Class

Dear Eddie: Hooray for your class. And congratulations to Mrs.

Ayis. You may have given other teachers and students an excellent idea.

Dear Abby: How does Surgeon General Everett Koop propose to care for all the elderly people who are going to live to be 100 because they quit smoking?

Is the government preparing for the strain this will have on Social Security and Medicare reserves? Is Dr. Koop really concerned for the public's health or just irritated by a habit that he finds disgusting? -- Mrs. Roy G. Duncan, Winston-Salem, N.C.

Dear Mrs. Duncan: I cannot answer for Dr. Koop, but his excellent record speaks well for itself. To suggest that perhaps we should encourage people to smoke so they won't live "too long" is both foolish and inhumane. We do know, however, that the quality of life for most people who are not addicted to tobacco is infinitely better.

Confidential To "Born Again" In Columbia, S.C.: No one said it better than Harry Emerson Fosdick: "Vital religion is like good music. It needs no defense, only rendition. A wrangling controversy in support of religion is as if the members of the orchestra should beat the folks over the head with their violins to prove that the music is beautiful."

'Retired' Lawyer Continues On

By Debra Butterworth
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BEAUFORT, S.C. — Fifteen years ago, Samuel and Raye Hanenberg came to Beaufort to retire among family and friends. Today, at age 74, Samuel Hanenberg is a practicing attorney.

"Retirement isn't all it's cracked up to be," Hanenberg explained.

Writing newspaper articles, serving as a trustee for Beaufort County Library and assisting with Beaufort's illiteracy program didn't fill the void created when he retired from a challenging law career.

Hanenberg had traveled throughout the world resolving the U.S. Air Force's legal problems concerning real estate and reviewing military records.

In 1982, he began a two-month review course designed for attorneys taking the South Carolina Bar examination.

He passed the test and was admitted to practice law in the state on Jan. 4, 1983. In addition to working in Beaufort's municipal court, Hanenberg accepts civil and family court cases.

"I'm going on until I'm not able," said Hanenberg, who also serves as chairman of the city's elections board. "I hate injustice. I hate people being taken. I'll do my best to see people get a fair shake."

"Sam is the kind of retiree that comes to Beaufort and brings with him experience, insight and real energy. The city and county have been the beneficiary," said Beaufort attorney Scott Graber.

"I have had a career not many lawyers have. It was terribly challenging. I met all kinds of people," Hanenberg said.

His career was launched in 1935 when he was working as a clerk in the U.S. Treasury Department in Washington, D.C. A friend recommended that he attend law school at Georgetown University.

A business law course Hanenberg took as an undergraduate at the City College of New York sparked his interest in law, but he didn't have the money to attend law school.

"The tuition was nominal, but I didn't have that. There wasn't much money around," said Hanenberg, the son of a Brooklyn, N.Y., steelworker.

Nevertheless, Hanenberg visited the law school dean and told him of his desire to attend school. He was soon enrolled in the afternoon sessions, a four-year law program.

Working as a clerk and attending afternoon classes, Hanenberg found himself "sleeping about two to three hours a night and spending most weekends in the law stacks at the Library of Congress."

He passed the bar in 1938 and graduated the following year. Then law students could take the bar examination after three years of study, he said.

As he began a job as a legal examiner with the Interstate Commerce Commission, his future wife, a Beaufort native, began working for the U.S. Census Bureau, also in Washington. They were married in 1941.

Hanenberg remembers vividly the December day that changed their lives.

"In those days it wasn't unusual to take a Sunday drive. Over the radio came the news that Pearl Harbor had been bombed — Dec. 7, 1941. I immediately drove to the White House," Hanenberg recalled.

"It was an eerie, eerie feeling. In the twilight as night fell, hundreds of people were standing silently, motionless. The White House was alight. Limousines were coming and going. Most of us there knew we were going into the Army, the Navy, or Army Air Force."

Drafted into the Army in 1943, he was trained as a combat engineer before being sent to Europe. When the war ended in Europe, Hanenberg was recovering from combat injuries in a British hospital.

"I got orders to report to Paris to the office of the Army Judge Advocate General. During the war, we (lawyers) were just warm bodies. When the war was over, they needed lawyers," Hanenberg said.

The attorneys were told they would be discharged when they had reviewed all the Army courts-martial cases from the European Theater of Operations. In 1946, Hanenberg was discharged and returned to Washington, where he accepted a job with the U.S. Department of the Interior.

"It was the dulllest job I have ever had in my life. Dealing with public lands and mineral rights weren't my interest," Hanenberg said.

In 1948, he accepted a civilian job in the office of the general counsel of the newly formed U.S. Air Force. Five years later, he was appointed as the assistant general counsel of that office.

The legal problems that arose from establishing and operating Air Force bases in the United States and throughout the world were then his responsibility.

"I worked Saturdays and Sundays and brought briefcases home with me," he recalled. His travels took him to Spain, Turkey, Germany, Greece, Italy, England, France, Morocco and Australia.

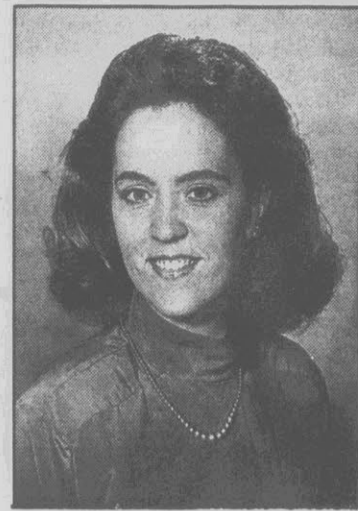

He dealt with foreign contractors and government representatives. His domestic negotiations took him to offices of congressmen, municipal officials, and utility representatives. He worked with cities to establish joint use of airports.

The task that may have affected the largest number of people was Hanenberg's work involving the construction of houses for the military and their families.

The secretary of the Air Force later assigned him an additional job, as chairman of the Air Force Board for Correction of Military Records. This five-member panel reviewed appeals involving such matters as dishonorable discharges, disability retirements and officer performance reports, and made recommendations to the secretary of the Air Force.

In 1965, Hanenberg was awarded the Exceptional Service Award by the Air Force, its highest civilian service award.

Computer Tooth Repair Is Tested

By F. Alan Boyce
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH, N.C. — It may not be long before advances in video cameras, digital recording, computers and robotics will make visits to the dentist a bit easier.

Researchers at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill and the University of Alabama-Birmingham are experimenting with a machine that will turn a three-dimensional picture of a cavity into a ceramic inlay in a matter of minutes. That means one-stop shopping for dental work that used to require two visits, said Dr. Harold Heymann, acting chairman of operative dentistry at UNC.

"It's absolutely a landmark in dentistry," Heymann said in a recent telephone interview. "It really is the beginning of an evolutionary process that I think will revolutionize dentistry."

What made the technique possible were advances in computer-aided design, which allows complicated 3-D models to be stored in a computer's memory. The digitized image can be fed into a milling machine that produces a filling in minutes.

Instead of taking a physical mold of the tooth and giving a patient a temporary filling while waiting for a laboratory to do the work, a dentist aims a small video camera at the cavity, taps a foot pedal to fix the image and waits.

"You can do a restoration in about 45 minutes to an hour, compared with two appointments of considerably greater length using current methods," Heymann said. "It certainly will enable a large part of the aesthetic restoration being done today to be done right there chair-side."

The new process, expected to be approved by the U.S. Food and Drug Administration within a year, can be used with silver amalgam fillings, Heymann said. Those probably will continue to be used where the silver is out of sight because that material is quick to use and lasts many years.

"This procedure offers primarily an advantage in that it's aesthetic," he said. "And, for the dentist, there wouldn't be a lab bill involved. It would be very cost effective."

The manufacturer of the system continues to improve the process, changing the computer software twice and upgrading some of the hardware recently, Heymann said.

"Five, 10 years from now we're probably going to look back on this model the way we look at a Model T after looking at today's modern-day Ford," he said.

The campus experiments are focusing primarily on improving the fit of the computer-generated ceramics and following up on the people who receive the new dental work, Heymann said.

"It's not an experimental thing at all, in terms of dentistry," he said. "You're interested in the performance of whatever restoration or material you're replacing over time."

If Momentum Means Much Virginia's Cavs Are On A Three-Game Winning Streak

By Tom Foreman Jr.
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ATLANTA — Momentum might mean a lot in the first round of the Atlantic Coast Conference tournament, but Virginia coach Terry Holland would argue that confidence would mean as much.

"I don't think what happens to you immediately before the tournament in terms of winning or losing has an effect unless for some reason it takes away your confidence," Holland said after his team prepared for tonight's opening round tournament game against Clemson.

The Cavaliers have a modest three-game winning streak going in to tonight's game, but that is the longest streak of any of the eight teams playing today. Of their last 14 games, Virginia has won 11.

"I don't think any other team in the conference can match that record, particularly against the kind of schedule we've played," Holland said. "I think we are playing with confidence, but I do think that's more important, that confidence level, for tournament basketball."

The 14-game stretch began with Virginia's 106-83 victory over North Carolina at Charlottesville and ended with a triumph over Maryland in the regular-season finale. Holland credits assistant coach Dave Odom with getting the team going while he was recuperating from surgery.

"We were mired in a five-game losing streak at that point and if we don't turn it around very quickly, then we were going to be in trouble," Holland said. "To win in impressive fashion was just icing on the cake."

Clemson coach Cliff Ellis said he was as confident about the Tigers as he has ever been, even more than the team that went to the NCAA tournament two years ago, and he thinks that feeling should translate into a return trip to the national championship hunt.

"When you take the top 64," Ellis said, "there's no question that we're among the top 64 teams. When you look at the fact that we've beaten teams that have been ranked ... I really feel that we deserve to be in. Whether they're going to take six teams or not, I don't know."

Today began with top-seeded North Carolina State meeting with Maryland. Georgia Tech and North Carolina faced each other in the second game of the afternoon session. Tonight's session opens with Duke playing Wake Forest before the Virginia-Clemson finale.

"I totally, completely separate the season from the ACC tournament, and the ACC tournament from the NCAA tournament. We are in a one-game season," Wolfpack coach Jim Valvano said in a telephone interview.

"It doesn't matter whether you come in on a winning streak, losing streak, what others say, it doesn't matter," Valvano said. "You can forget about what happened from Oct. 15 until now. Starting Friday, everybody's record is 0-0 and you're in a survive and advance mode. You've got to win the game you play if you want to play another one."

Valvano and the Wolfpack weathered two months of distractions to get to the top of the ACC, then had to wait a wild weekend before claiming the top spot. N.C. State is 20-7 after a 10-4 conference mark.

The distractions stemmed from allegations of wrongdoing which appeared on the dust jacket of a book which was never published. Most recently, Valvano was rumored to be in consideration for the head coaching job with the Los Angeles Clippers.

Maryland struggled in at 8-19, winning just one of its 14 conference games.

North Carolina lost to Duke on the final day of the regular season, preventing the Tar Heels from sharing first place with the Wolfpack.

The Tar Heels have gone with a variety of lineups this season to reach their 24-7 record. One of their losses came at the hands of Georgia Tech, who took a 76-74 victory on a buzzer-beating 3-point shot by Dennis Scott.

"You'd like to keep Scott's percentage down," North Carolina Coach Dean Smith said of one of the league's top 3-point shooters.

"(Tom) Hammonds is the most consistent. When he gets the ball inside, or even about 15 feet away, it's a basket."

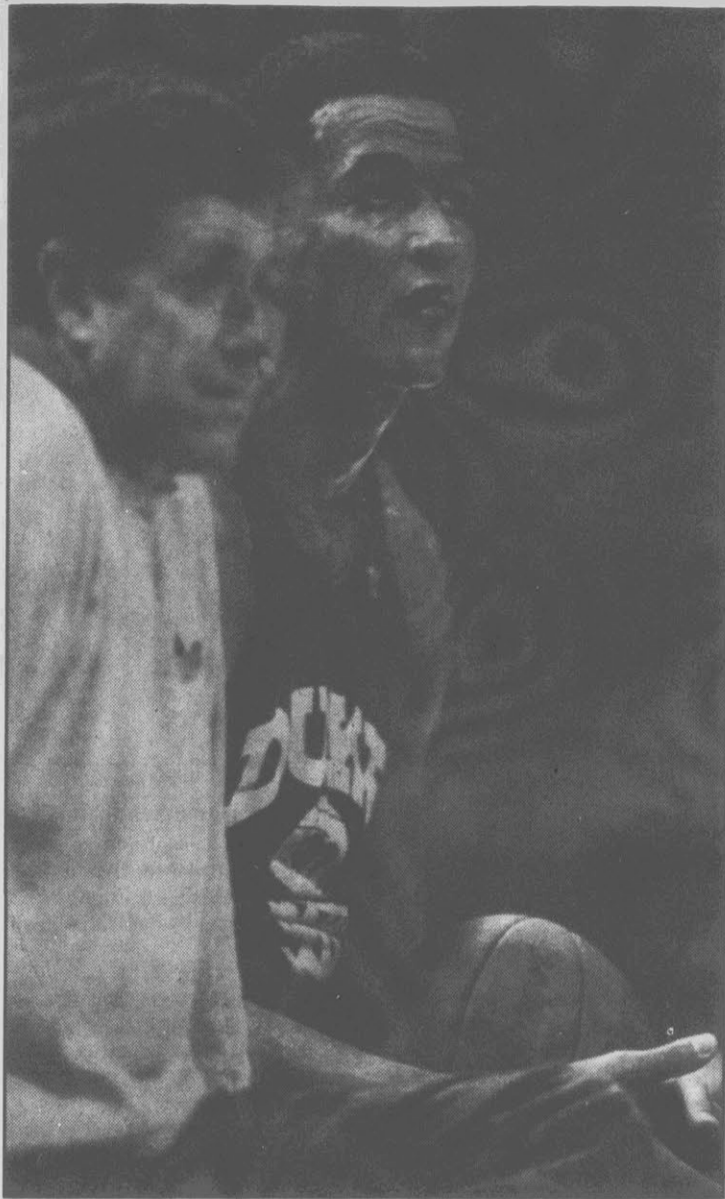

Georgia Tech coach Bobby Cremins feels the Tar Heels will be remembering the loss in Atlanta in the rematch, as well as the season-ending loss to the Blue Devils in Chapel Hill.

"North Carolina is going to be mad. They lost a very tough game to us," Cremins said. "Sometimes, losses help you."

Duke, 22-6, played two close games with the Demon Deacons, holding on to beat them in December and losing a game which signaled the midseason slide that took them from the No. 1 position in the polls.

"Everyone's got a tough draw," Duke coach Mike Krzyzewski said. "In order to win the tournament, you have to play three really good games. We have to focus in on the game Friday night."

Wake Forest coach Bob Staak admitted that he and his team entertained hopes of making the National Invitation Tournament field if they could have overcome N.C. State in four overtimes, the longest conference game in ACC history. At 13-14, they must win twice in the tournament to hold on to their dream.

EC Women Rip American, 77-50

WILLIAMSBURG, Va. — East Carolina University overcame a sluggish start and rolled to a 77-50 victory over American University in the first round of the Colonial Athletic Association's women's basketball tournament Thursday.

The win moved the Lady Pirates into the semifinals of the tournament tonight against defending champion and regular season leader James Madison. George Mason and Richmond were to collide in the other semifinal game.

The championship game is scheduled for Saturday.

The Lady Pirates fell behind early to the Lady Eagles, 8-4, as Christina Valls hit a layup for American with 15:23 left in the first half.

But the Pirates went on a tear after that, outscoring the Eagles, 26-9, over the next 10 minutes to take a 30-17 lead. The Lady Pirates led by as much as 15 during that sprint, that coming at 30:15 on a Pam Williams jumper in the lane with 4:50 remaining.

American was able to cut the lead back to 12 at halftime, 35-12.

East Carolina continued on its roll in the second half, outscoring American, 18-6, in the first five and a half minutes for a 53-29 lead. That came after Irish Hamilton stole the ball and scored on a layup. The Pirates eventually led by as much as 31 at 68:37 as Sandra Grace hit a driving layup with 5:45 remaining to play.

"I really think everyone played well for us today," Coach Pat Pierson said. "I thought the second team came in and we didn't skip a beat. American's a young team and will be a force in the CAA in the near future."

"Against James Madison (22-3) we face a tremendous challenge," Pierson added. "But we're just happy to have the opportunity to win this challenge."

East Carolina was led by Williams with 18 points while Hamilton and Tonya Hargrove each had 10. Sarah Gray led East Carolina's rebounding with 10.

American was led by Danielle Blackburn, who scored 10 points. The Pirates held Felecia Young, the league Rookie of the Year, to just eight points.

American held a 45-41 rebounding edge in the game, led by Shauna Walden, who had 11.

Rose Wins, 64-59; In Section Final

By Woody Peele
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Rose High School used its superior height, along with some timely outside shooting, to defeat Fayetteville's South View High School Thursday night, 64-59, and advance to the 4-A Section II Basketball Tournament finals.

Rose will travel to Fayetteville Pine Forest on Saturday at 7 p.m. for the championship and the right to advance to next week's regionals, also to be held in Fayetteville.

Pine Forest advanced to the finals by defeating Elizabeth City North-eastern, 94-85, Thursday night.

Rose took an early lead in the contest, only to see South View rally and take the lead in the second period.

But after a 29-27 South View lead early in the third period, James Teel took control of the game for Rose and put the Rampants into high gear. Carlester Crumpler hit a basket off a rebound to tie the game at 29-29 and then Teel scored off a fast break for a 31-29 lead. He followed that with two straight three-point baskets, running the lead out to 37-29.

After that, Rose pulled away to a 13-point lead before one last attempt by South View to get back into it.

"(Rose) played hard and their size wore us down," South View coach Ron Miller said. "You have to give them credit. But I thought my kids played hard, too. We just couldn't get the ball in the hole."

South View shot only 40.7 percent for the game, and had only a 38.5 percentage going into the final period. Rose, meanwhile, shot only 45 percent but was more consistent throughout the game.

"Their big men just went over us," Miller said. "We couldn't stop them." He was referring to 6-6 Carlester Crumpler, who scored 18 and 6-9 Paul Powers, who added 16. The two of them also dominated the boards, as Rose held a 49-34 edge in that department.

"Our big kids played very well tonight," Rose coach Jim Brewington said. "They carried us because Johnny (Ebron) didn't shoot well and (James) Teel didn't shoot well early. The two three-pointers by Teel really got us going."

After the Tigers scored the first basket of the game, Rose scored the next nine in a row for a 9-2 lead. Then, following a South View free throw, Rose added another for an 11-3 edge. All five of the baskets came in the paint.

But South View, led by two baskets each by Tim Shaw and Corley McMillian, scored the final eight points of the quarter to tie the game at 15-15.

Shaw hit a turnaround jumper on the baseline to put South View back up, 17-15, but Rose got baskets from Powers and Crumpler to regain a 19-17 margin. Willis Holmes then hit two Tiger baskets for a 23-23 tie.

Rose regained the lead on a fast-break basket by Teel and a rebound by Powers, 25-23, but two free throws by Shaw tied it up again. Powers again scored from underneath for a 27-25 lead with 1:42 left in the half, and neither team scored again in the time remaining.

Two free throws and a basket by Jamie Haggins put South View into the lead one last time as the second half opened, 29-27. Then came Crumpler's tying basket and the three straight buckets by Teel that opened up a 37-29 lead.

After an exchange of baskets, Haggins hit a free throw to cut it to 39-32, but Crumpler scored two straight in the paint to put Rose into a 43-32 lead with 1:39 left in the third. Rose carried a 46-38 margin into the final period.

Rose scored six straight early points in the final quarter to run the lead to 52-40, and later inched it out to 62-49, the biggest lead for the Rampants. Haggins and Shaw then put together a rally that cut the lead to the final five point margin, although Rose was never in danger of losing the lead.

Teel added 16 points for Rose, while Shaw led South View with 22 and Haggins had 12.

"I'm not ashamed for my kids," Miller said. "It's no disappointment to lose by five to a team like this."

Abdelnaby Hopes To Be Improved

ATLANTA (AP) — Alaa Abdelnaby says his basketball life might mirror his academic life and he thinks if he can improve in the classroom, he can get better on the court. The 6-foot-10 Abdelnaby missed Duke's last two regular-season games against Clemson and North Carolina. He was placed on academic probation and was restored to the team on Wednesday. He was allowed to practice with the team while coach Mike Krzyzewski pondered the outcome. "Consistency takes a lot of concentration, and once you let up on your concentration, you let up on your consistency," Abdelnaby said following his team's practice for tonight's Atlantic Coast Conference tournament game against Wake Forest. "I deserved it and I accept it," Abdelnaby said of the two-game punishment. "I have to go and take things the positive way and with a positive approach."

"I'm just so happy to be playing now and so happy to be contributing, seeing the guys on the court and being a part of them instead of being in civilian clothes and listening to it on the radio," he said. The criticism against Abdelnaby is that he doesn't play well from game to game. At the start of the year, he hit his first 20 field goals and appeared ready to play like the center Duke hoped he would be. He is averaging 9.7 points per game, but just 3.9 rebounds per game. "That's always been a problem of mine, to be consistent day in and day out on the court and day in and day out off the court," he said. "I think the suspension, although it was academic, is going to help me in a lot of different areas. It's going to make me concentrate and it's going to make me be consistent." Specifically, Abdelnaby says he just didn't do what had to be done in the classroom. He wasn't specific on what his violations were, but Duke officials said while he met conference and NCAA guidelines, he failed to meet the school's standards. "It was a matter of me not doing what I had to do. It was something I regret and I hope it never happens again," he said. "It won't happen again."

Wake Year Has Been Disappointing One

ATLANTA (AP) — At the start of the year, Wake Forest basketball coach Bob Staak said his team was a season away from being a contender in the Atlantic Coast Conference. Some unforeseen problems will force the Demon Deacons to hold to that schedule. Sam Ivy was slow to start the season because of an enzyme deficiency that caused him to dehydrate and actually lose some of his hair. Tony Black, who could have provided help in the backcourt, sat out this season to undergo further treatment on his broken left leg suffered a season ago. Thus, Staak entered another season at less than full speed and the result was a less-than-sparkling record of 13-14. With three freshmen who have started, Staak can look forward to next year, but the current season has been tough, and it continues Friday night in the ACC tournament when the Demon Deacons face Duke. "You're always disappointed when you don't do as well as you think you're capable of doing. Being realistic, there were a lot of things we had no control over," Staak said after the Demon Deacons practiced at The Omni Thursday. "Black not coming back and his leadership would have really been a big help. If Sam was able to give us, physically, the type of year he's capable of, that changes a couple of games," Staak said. "So, basically, I'm very, very pleased with the way the kids have played in terms of effort and intensity and determination and bouncing back from adversity." Times were not so adverse after Wake Forest helped topple Duke from its No. 1 perch with a 75-71 victory. Staak said in response to a question that the team might have lifted its hopes a little too high. "I never really heard them coming in with false bravado and thinking they were better than they are," Staak said. "Inwardly, they might have thought that way." Staak now entertains hopes of getting two wins in the tournament to get into the National Invitation Tournament, which would be Wake Forest's first postseason appearance since the 1985 NIT.

Coastal Carolina To Host NCAA Golf

CONWAY, S.C. (AP) — Coastal Carolina has been chosen as the host school for the NCAA East Regional Golf Championships later this year, according to officials. The tournament, which helps determine the schools that advance to the NCAA Championships in June, will be played May 25-27 at the Jack Nicklaus-designed Long Bay Club. "It's a big boost for Coastal Carolina and a boost for the Grand Strand area," Coastal Carolina athletic director George F. "Buddy" Sasser said. As many as 10 golf teams ranked in the top 10 could play in the regional, as well as a number of All-America players. "It will probably be the strongest college tournament, as far as field goes, that I've ever seen," Coastal Carolina golf coach Billy Bernier said Wednesday. This is the first year the NCAA has operated under a regional format in collegiate golf. In previous years, every district was allotted a certain number of spots for teams in the NCAA Finals, which on average was the top eight teams and the top individual scorer. That system created a problem, NCAA Men's Golf Committee Chairman Joseph Feagans said. "There were complaints that the best teams didn't always advance because of regional representation," said Feagans, who is also the men's golf coach at Marshall. Because a set number of teams had to advance from each District, several good teams were always left out, especially those from the South and Southwest. "There are so many good teams that the seventh, eighth and ninth teams in those Districts weren't able to go (to the NCAAs)," Feagans said. "And they were better than the District teams in the North that advanced. Something needed to be done to assure that the best teams would be in the finals." The NCAA came up with three regions: East, Central and West. The Central Regional will be held at Stonebridge Country Club in Dallas and the West Regional will be at El Paso Country Club in El Paso, Texas.

Roberts Holds Nestle Golf Lead

ORLANDO, Fla. (AP) — Memphis, which often produces the hottest weather on the PGA Tour, is 1,000 miles and five months away. Golf's touring pros are ready for it right now. "We haven't had any good weather this year," veteran Tom Kite said Thursday on the coldest day of what the tourists agree has been, overall, the coldest start in memory. "We're ready for Memphis. We're ready to start sweating," Kite said after battling brutal cold, biting winds, bone-chilling fog and mist at the $800,000 Nestle Invitational. "The coldest it's been this year," said Loren Roberts, who extracted a remarkable, 5-under-par 66 from the miserable conditions and established a 1-stroke first-round lead. "That's flat out as good as I can play," he said. "Considering the conditions, that may be my career round." The conditions were miserable. "By far the worst I've been in this year," said Ted Schulz. "The coldest I remember in a long time," Kite said of a wind-chill factor reported at 25. "Brutal," said Wade Gagle, the Tour's Tournament Supervisor. "Worst I can recall in years." Nick Price, wearing gloves, a ski cap and five layers of clothing, birdied the last three holes for a 67 that left him one stroke back. "I was just trying not to shoot too many," he said. "On a day like this, par is a very good score. That finish just jumped up and grabbed me." Kite, a former winner of this event when it was known as the Bay Hill Classic, holed a 173-yard 6-iron shot for an eagle-2 on the 16th and was tied at 68 with Schulz and Tom Purtzer.

Indiana Again Big 10 Champ

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Bob Knight has coached Indiana to three NCAA basketball championships, but it's doubtful any of them pleased him more than the Big Ten crown the Hoosiers are wearing this season.

The Hoosiers lost four of their first seven games, with three opponents scoring more than 100 points, a level reached only once previously in Knight's first 17 years.

But Indiana came back to win 22 of its next 24 games, capped by Thursday night's 75-64 victory over Wisconsin that gave the Hoosiers a record 10th outright Big Ten championship and a berth in the NCAA tournament.

"They came back to just give us all, everyone associated with Indiana basketball, one of the greatest treats I've ever seen a group of people give anyone," Knight said.

Indiana freshman Eric Anderson, a 6-foot-9 forward who earlier in the week was named Big Ten Freshman of the Year by the AP, scored 14 of his 19 points as the Hoosiers took a 36-32 halftime lead. In the second half, Todd Jadow scored all 18 of his points and Joe Hillman added 12 of his 17. Trent Jackson and Danny Jones had 16 apiece for Wisconsin, which has dropped 19 straight games to Indiana.

"They've worked awfully hard, done the things we've asked them to do," Knight said of the Hoosiers, who bounced back from Sunday's last-second loss to Illinois. "Last Sunday was a tough loss for us, but tonight that doesn't mean a thing because can't any of 'em catch us now."

Rutgers 70, Penn State 66

Rick Dadika made two key 3-point shots in the final 3:14 as Rutgers capped a phenomenal comeback season under new Coach Bob Wenzel and won the Atlantic 10 tournament. Rutgers, 18-12 after a 7-22 campaign a year ago, rallied from a 13-point first-half deficit in earning its first NCAA bid since 1983.

Dadika hit a 3-pointer with 3:14 left to break a 61-61 tie and nailed an NBA length 3-pointer that made it 69-63. Tom Savage led Rutgers with 18 points.

"We've got to have new dreams now," Wenzel said. "We have to adjust our dreams. If you can't dream or envision something then you probably won't see it come true."

Middle Tenn. 82, Austin Peay 79
Kerry Hammonds made a close-in basket and free throw with six seconds left, lifting Middle Tennessee to the Ohio Valley Conference tournament crown. Hammonds' field goal tied the game and his free throw made it 80-79. Middle Tennessee shared the regular-season OVC title with Murray State.

The Blue Raiders led by 12 points in the first half but trailed 76-71 late in the game. Hammonds, who also made two free throws to narrow Austin Peay's lead to 76-75, finished with 17 points, one fewer than Randy Henry. Austin Peay was led by Keith Rawls' 23 points.

Ark.-Little Rock 100, Centenary 72

Jeff Cummings keyed a 14-0 run at the start of the second half that powered Arkansas-Little Rock to the Trans America Athletic Conference championship. The 6-foot-9 Cummings made one basket and fed teammates Johnnie Bell and James Scott for easy baskets during the spurt that put UALR on top 54-38 with 16:20 remaining. Bell led the Trojans with 25 points, including 22 in the second half. Scott had 23 points, Cummings 21 and Derrick Owens 20.

No. 8 Michigan 88, Northwestern 79

Glen Rice scored 26 points, Sean Higgins got 12 of his 14 points in the second half and No. 8 Michigan survived a late scare. The Wolverines led 64-45 with less than 12 minutes left, but Northwestern twice got within six points.

Rice rebuffed the first challenge with a jumper and Loy Vaughnt made a layup and Rice added two free throws to turn back the second threat. Rice finished with 2,244 career points, surpassing Gary Grant as the second-leading scorer in Michigan history. Northwestern got a career-high 22 points from Brian Schwabe.

No. 18 UNLV 102, UC Irvine 82

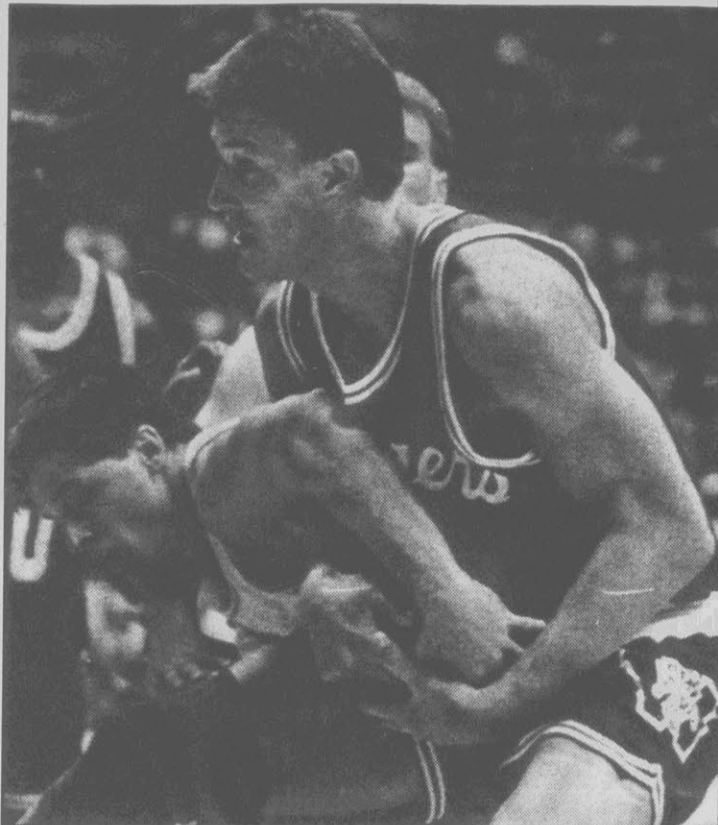

Stacey Augmon, Greg Anthony and Anderson Hunt made consecutive 3-point shots during an electrifying display of transition basketball and Nevada-Las Vegas used a later 22-4 run to bury UC Irvine 102-82 in the quarterfinals of the Big West Conference tournament.

Augmon, the conference Player of the Year, scored 27 points and Anthony had 24. Rod Palmer scored 23 points for UC Irvine.

In other WAC quarterfinals, Cedric Ceballos, who had 27 points, drove the baseline and scored on a slam dunk with 11 seconds remaining in overtime to give Fullerton State an 87-86 victory over Utah State; Mike Doyle scored 19 points and Eric McArthur 18 to lead UC-Santa Barbara past Long Beach State 69-57 and New Mexico State edged Fresno State 60-59 on Willie Joseph's five-foot jumper with six seconds left.

Seven other conference tournaments got under way Thursday.

Southeastern Conference
Freshman Litterial Green scored 30 points, including 16 of 17 free throws, to lead Georgia past Mississippi State 83-68. Gerald Glass

The Associated Press

Indiana's Kreigh Smith (1) ties up Badger Darin Schubring scored 31 points as Mississippi beat Auburn 80-68. The Rebels needed a 12-0 run, five by Glass, to erase a 50-42 second-half deficit.

Glass, the nation's No. 4 scorer with a 28.4 average, surpassed the 30-point mark for the seventh game in a row.

Pacific-10 Conference

Brian Quinnett had 18 first-half points and Harold Wright scored 12 in the second half to carry Washington State past Oregon 78-56. Chris Moore scored 31 points as Southern Cal beat Arizona State 94-82. USC's victory was only its third in the last 20 games.

Western Athletic Conference

Rob Robbins scored 25 points, including five 3-point shots, as New Mexico beat Air Force 74-60; Prince Stewart's 3-point goal in the second overtime triggered a 9-0 run as Texas-El Paso outlasted Wyoming 88-81 despite a tournament record 11 3-pointers by the losers; Terry Houston scored 21 points and David Hallums' jumper and free throw in the final three minutes lifted Hawaii over Brigham Young 72-69 and into the semifinals for the first time and Colorado State nipped Utah 52-50 on two free throws by Pat Durham with 22 seconds left.

Big East

Dana Barros set tournament records with 38 points and eight 3-point field goals as Boston College beat St. John's 81-74 in the conference's opening-round game.

Big Sky Conference

Wayne Tinkle scored 28 points and Montana sank eight consecutive free throws in overtime to pull out an 87-84 victory over Montana State. Michael Ostlund gave Weber State the lead on a 3-point shot with 2:21 left and hit five straight free throws in the final 1:18 to spark the Wildcats over Nevada-Reno 69-61.

Midwestern Collegiate Conference

Anthony Bonner's 20 points led St. Louis over Butler 68-64, the Billikens' 13th victory in their last 15 games; Derek Strong scored 28 points and Tyrone Hill added 21 as Xavier of Ohio beat Loyola of Chicago 85-83; Anthony Corbitt hit a 3-pointer at the first-half buzzer and scored 11 points in the second half to help Dayton pull away from Detroit 77-54.

ECAC North Atlantic Conference

Steve McCoy scored 15 points as Siena defeated Colgate 61-51; Steven Key scored 19 points, 16 in the first half, as Boston University rolled over Niagara 96-58; Derrick Lewis scored 17 points and Northeastern held Maine scoreless for more than 10 minutes in the second half of a 65-59 victory and David Thompson and Al Jones scored 14 points each as Hartford defeated Canisius 75-57.

The games were played without spectators in an effort to control measles outbreaks on the Hartford and Siena campuses.

Lady Tribe To Finals

CHOCOWINITY — Chocowinity High School's girls advanced to the finals of the Section I, 1-A Girls Basketball Tournament Thursday night with a 48-27 romp over Currituck.

Chocowinity will now meet Dixon in the finals of the sectional, to be played at 3 p.m. Saturday at Williamston. The winner of that game advances to the regional tournament, to be played next week in Fayetteville.

Chrylene Myers led the Lady Indians, scoring 24 points. She scored 11 of those in the first period of the game when the Tribe rolled up a 13-4 lead over Currituck. After that, it was just a question of margin. Chocowinity built up a 29-10 halftime lead and carried a 40-19 edge into the final quarter of the game.

Chocowinity recorded 28 steals in the contest.

Druscilla Crawford added 10 points for Chocowinity, while no one scored in double figures for Currituck.

Chocowinity is now 24-3 on the year.

Gaylord Was Not Surprised

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

OKLAHOMA CITY — Communications magnate Edward Gaylord says he wasn't caught looking when the American League owners threw strike three at his bid to purchase the Texas Rangers.

"It was no surprise to me. I was sure they were going to vote against us," Gaylord said Thursday. "I feel a little sorry for Eddie Chiles. He has to find a buyer. hat's the main disappointment."

Chiles, who controls 53 percent of the team, said Thursday he was abandoning attempts to transfer majority ownership to Gaylord, who owns 33 percent of the franchise.

Gaylord has an option to purchase Chiles' portion of the club through March. As minority owner, Gaylord can exercise a right of first refusal to cancel a bid by any ownership group.

But Gaylord, who used his right of first refusal to block a sale last September because he was concerned the team would be moved to Florida, said he has no plans to block a sale of the Rangers if the purchasers "are good people ... good citizens. I've said that all long."

Gaylord said the next move concerning the purchase "will be up to Eddie Chiles."

"If he finds a good buyer in Texas, then we would stay with our minority," Gaylord said.

Commissioner Peter Ueberroth says he would like major negotiations on the Rangers' sale underway by March 31th.

Ueberroth has indicated he would prefer that the team be sold to a Texas group headed by George W. Bush, the son of President Bush, and Edward "Rusty" Rose.

"Bush himself would be all right, but I've never met the others," Gaylord said. "Some of the others are out-of-staters and that's not too good. It would be better to have buyers from the Southwest or Texas."

A source for the Bush group told The Associated Press "we're still engaged in the process of trying to buy the Rangers and will talk if and when a deal is consummated."

Baseball's ownership committee has twice come out against Gaylord's efforts to buy the Rangers because of his ownership of television station KTVT-TV in Fort Worth, Texas. The station is picked up on many cable systems and the team owners have expressed concern that the Rangers could become another superstition baseball franchise, such as the Chicago Cubs and Atlanta Braves.

When asked if Gaylord was rejected again because of his connection to television, AL president Bob Brown, who would not reveal the vote, said: "Basically that's true. The same criteria applied."

Richmond's 38 Leads Warriors To Win

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

OAKLAND, Calif. — When the Golden State Warriors adopted "We came to play" as their new team slogan, there were a few snickers.

Critics also were heard from when they made Mitch Richmond of Kansas State their first-round pick.

There are no snickers or criticisms about the Warriors anymore. Especially after they defeated the Cleveland Cavaliers 120-114 Thursday night behind Richmond's 38 points.

Richmond scored 24 in the second half, including a game-breaking 3-pointer with 27 seconds remaining to help upset the NBA's winningest team despite a career-high 37 points by Mark Price.

"Mitch did it all tonight," Golden State's Chris Mullin said. "He is too strong when they put small guys on him and too quick when they put big guys on him."

The muscular, 6-foot-5 Richmond is one of the key reasons why the Warriors, a 22-60 team last year, are currently 34-24 and only one of three teams — Milwaukee and Seattle are the others — to beat all four of the NBA's current division leaders. His 21.8 scoring average has established Richmond as the leading candidate for Rookie of the Year honors.

"It hasn't been just one person," Richmond said of Golden State's dramatic turnaround since Don Nelson took over as coach and he joined the club. "Everyone on this team has made a contribution. Our balance is one of the reasons why we're doing so well."

The game featured 19 lead changes and 12 ties, the last coming at 1:07 when Brad Daugherty hit a pair of free throws with 4:40 remaining.

Mullin hit one of two free throws to put the Warriors ahead to stay and Richmond's 3-point play made it 111-107 with 4:02 remaining.

The Cavaliers were still in contention at 115-112 with 1:09 remaining when 7-7 Warrior center Manute Bol missed a three-point shot with plenty of time left on the shot clock.

"I've told Manute all season if he had the three to take it," Nelson said. "I'm not going to change now."

Bol made up for his mental lapse by blocking Larry Nance's layup and Richmond followed with his decisive three-pointer.

The Warriors had to overcome Price's six 3-pointers, including five in the third quarter when he scored 17 of his points.

"I don't think their plan in the third quarter was to give me the shot because I shot well in the first half," Price said.

"This was one of the one or two times in my life I felt so fluid," Price added. "I hit one and then I came off a pick and shot another one. Then I came off a pick and hit another one. Then I came down on a break and I said, 'Well, I'm three-for-three so I might as well try another one.' And that's the way it kinda went."

Daugherty had 20 points and 11 rebounds and Nance had 13 points and accounted for seven of Cleveland's 14 blocked shots.

Mullin had 21 points and reserve Rod Higgins 20 for the Warriors, who won for the 13th time in 14 home games. Bol had six of Golden State's 11 blocks.

Despite the loss, Cleveland still is tied with Detroit for the best road mark in the NBA at 16-12.

"We expected them to come out and play hard, and that's exactly what they did," Cleveland coach Lenny Wilkens said. "They play very well at home and you have to play exceptionally well to win here."

76ers 106, Kings 96

Charles Barkley had 25 points and Ron Anderson added 18 as Philadelphia handed the slumping Kings their 12th loss in 14 games.

Kenny Smith's jumper brought the Kings to within 81-74 with 10:27 to play. But Derek Smith, picked up by the 76ers last month after being released by the Kings, sparked an 11-2 Philadelphia surge and a driving layup by Gerald Henderson gave the 76ers a 92-76 lead with 7:34 to play. The Kings never threatened again.

Derek Smith added 15 points and Mike Gminski had 14 for Philadelphia. Waymon Tisdale led the Kings with 26 points, while Danny Ainge and Kenny Smith had 18 apiece.

Spurs 112, Nets 98

Alvin Robertson had 13 of his 29 points during a third-quarter stretch that broke the game open for the Spurs.

The Spurs forced 32 turnovers, including 19 steals, six by Robertson. They lead the NBA with an average of 11.7 steals per game.

Barber Seeking 3rd Win

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PHOENIX — Miller Barber is on a roll and looking for his third PGA Seniors Tour win of the year in the $300,000 Arizona Classic.

Barber, who became the first player to surpass $2 million in earnings on the Seniors Tour with last Sunday's victory in the Vintage Invitational, is now tied with Don January for most victories — 26. It was his second win of the year.

Barber, who turns 58 later this month, says he's enjoying life more now than he did in 22 years on the PGA Tour.

"It's a lot more fun," Barber said. "The guys are a lot closer than we were, a better atmosphere. It's not as serious although we're playing for some big bucks. Everybody is having a good time. If they're not, they're missing a hell of a chance. At our age, we're on the back nine. We're not 22-23 anymore."

Barber ranks first on the combined career money list with $3,616,837.

This year, he has won the Tournament of Champions, tied for second place in the PGA Seniors Championship, tied for eighth at the Suncoast Classic and placed third at the Aetna Challenge.

Hershiser Leads Dodgers To 4-2 Win

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Poor Orel Hershiser.
"My mechanics were worse than the last start. They were terrible. It could have been the wind and the rain. It could have been my arm strength," the National League's 1988 MVP and postseason hero said Thursday.

It's obviously time for great concern. After all, Hershiser gave up a whole run. He pitched four innings, allowing four hits while walking one and striking out four as the Los Angeles Dodgers won a five-inning rain-shortened exhibition game from the Montreal Expos 4-2.

In his first start, Hershiser pitched three scoreless innings against the New York Mets. He's starting out 1989 the way he ended 1988 — except for that run.

"I had good velocity, but poor location," he said of Thursday's outing. "My arm felt strong for the first time this spring, but it affected my mechanics. What matters most right now is the fact that I feel good. I'm sure everything will fall into place as the spring goes along."

Mike Marshall's two-run homer capped a three-run third inning against Fred Toliver, who allowed four runs and eight hits in four innings.

Astros 7, Mets 2
Billy Hatcher was 3-for-3, including a three-run homer in the first inning and an RBI single in the third. Houston scored all its runs off Ron Darling but four of them were unearned. Houston's Mike Scott combined on a five-hitter with Larry Andersen, Bob Forsch and Juan Agosto.

Hatcher has hit safely in his last six at-bats and is 8-for-14 this spring for a .571 batting average.

"I had been trying to pull the ball all spring, but Yogi (coach Yogi Berra) told me to just keep my head down and hit to all fields," Hatcher said. "He said, 'Just go with the pitches.'"

Athletics 9, Angels 3
Athletics 6, Mariners 5

The American League champs split their squad and both halves won.

Dave Parker and Mark McGwire homered on consecutive pitches in a six-run fifth inning against a split California squad. The A's scored eight runs off Colin Charland in the fourth and fifth innings after starter Bert Blyleven pitched three innings of one-hit ball. Parker and McGwire drove in runs with singles in the fourth.

Mike Moore went four innings for Oakland, yielding three-run homer to Dante Bichette.

The other squad of A's edged Seattle on RBI singles by Billy Beane and pinch hitter Joe Savarino in the 12th inning. Seattle tied the score 4-4 on a solo homer by Ken Griffey Jr. off Joe Law with one out in the ninth. Griffey also tripled home Seattle's first two runs.

Angels 7, Giants 1
Willie Fraser, Vance Lovelace, Greg Minton, Bryan Harvey and Rich Monteleone combined on a four-hitter, including Will Clark's first-inning homer. California scored four runs off Kelly Downs and three off Craig Lefferts.

Tigers 5, Phillies 5
Philadelphia remained the only winless team this spring, but at least the Phillies didn't lose. Bob Dernier's RBI infield single capped a four-run eighth inning against Mercedes Eqsuer in a game that was called after 11 innings because Detroit ran out of pitchers. Matt Nokes homered for Detroit, which got three shutout innings from both Jeff Robinson and Ted Power.

Brewers 7, Cubs 1
Milwaukee's Mike Birkbeck pitched five scoreless innings and B.J. Surhoff went 3-for-3. Birkbeck has not allowed a run against the Cubs in 13 exhibition innings dating back to last spring. Surhoff, who had three singles, scored twice and drove in a run and Edgar Diaz hit a two-run triple.

Chicago didn't score until Jerome Walton homered off Dan Plesac in the ninth inning. The Cubs, who have lost six of seven exhibition games, committed three errors, giving them 17 this spring. They have been outscored 46-23.

Padres 7, Indians 7
San Diego's Rob Nelson hit two home runs, including a game-tying two-run shot in the eighth inning. The game was halted after 10 innings to the displeasure of San Diego manager Jack McKeon.

"I want it known that they stopped the game, not us, supposedly because they ran out of pitchers," McKeon said. "They've only got 30 pitchers in camp."

Reds 9, Pirates 2
Eric Davis had a triple and three-run double as Cincinnati combined 14 hits and five Pittsburgh errors. Brian Fisher became the first Pirates' starter to be roughed up this spring, allowing four runs and six hits in three innings, including Todd Benzinger's two-run triple.

Yankees 11, Expos 6
Hal Morris' two-run double and Bernie Williams' run-scoring single highlighted a seven-run eighth-inning rally. Loser Tim Burke lasted one-third of an inning, allowing six runs on two hits, three walks and an error. New York starter Charles Hudson was roughed up for the second time in as many spring outings.

Rangers 8, Cardinals 1
Pete Incaviglia's two-run double keyed a five-run fourth inning against Jose DeLeon. Kevin Brown allowed one unearned run in four innings for the victory. Dean Palmer homered for Texas.

Blue Jays 6, White Sox 4
Tony Fernandez and Fred McGriff drove in two runs apiece for Toronto while leadoff man Lloyd Moseby reached base three times, stole two bases and scored three runs. The Blue Jays broke a 3-3 tie in the fifth inning on consecutive RBI singles by Fernandez and McGriff off John Pawlowski. Harold Baines homered for Chicago.

Braves 4, Orioles 0
Tom Glavine, Dave Miller, Charlie Puleo and Joe Boever combined on a three-hitter while Ron Gant hit a solo homer.

Adams Touring Country With Story

By Dianne Klein
LAT/WP NEWS SERVICE

LOS ANGELES — In just about half an hour, talk show host Arsenio Hall will introduce her to his studio audience as "the most notorious woman in America," and right now, Margo Adams, dressed in a body-hugging scarlet knit, is back stage getting ready.

"Did you do Sally?" asks the makeup artist as she dabs at Adams' cheekbones.

"Sally?" Adams says, her blue eyes flashing upward.

"Sally Jessy Raphael."

"Oh, no," Adams says. "I did Sonia. Then Larry King."

"Ohhh," comes the response. "I must have caught you on one of those."

Of course, if you missed Arsenio, or Sonia Live on CNN, or Larry, or Phil, there's always Geraldo.

Geraldo's taping Adams the next day in New York. Then it's on to Miami, Tampa, Philadelphia, Chicago, Detroit and Cleveland. Before Los Angeles, which was Monday, there was Boston last Friday, then before that the news conference in the "Bimbo Room" of Penthouse magazine headquarters in New York.

But so far at least, maybe Boston was the biggest hit because Boston is Red Sox country. Penthouse sold out in Boston. And undoubtedly that's because Margo Adams, erstwhile Orange County mortgage broker turned Penthouse show-and-tell sensation, may be to the Boston Red Sox what Jessica Hahn was to PTL Ministries.

Here's the story, the details of which are not in dispute. Adams, who lives in Costa Mesa, Calif., spies American League batting champion Wade Boggs at an Anaheim, Calif., restaurant in April of 1984. She likes him. He's cute.

Next thing you know, Boggs joins Adams, her girlfriend and one of his teammates for dessert.

By the following night, "I was completely enthralled," Adams tells Penthouse.

They had road trips together during four seasons while Debbie Boggs and the couple's two young children were ensconced elsewhere.

It ended abruptly last May. Adams says Boggs reneged on an oral contract to compensate her for wages lost during all those road trips. She sought solace at her attorney's office, to the tune of a palimony lawsuit seeking about $12 million (a figure that the 4th District Court of Appeal later reduced to a fraction).

And now Penthouse. Adams says

Boggs loved her, that she was no one-night stand. She says that for a honorarium of about $500,000, she is seeking to set the record straight, in a two-part interview with semi-nude color glossies.

Among the points she makes:
—"I was the one who took him to each of those playoff games in '86, not his wife. It was the way he wanted it."

—"Wade has to eat chicken every day. There are hits in chicken."

—"His (batting) average when (his wife) was with him was about .221, and his average when I was with him was .341."

—"He could recite almost every line of 'The Wizard of Oz' in all those cute voices."

In short, Margo Adams, 33, is making trouble, impugning that hallowed baseball tradition of sleeping around. And inquiring minds want to hear all about it.

Adams' interview with Arsenio Hall is over. She thinks it went well. She made a few serious points, about accepting responsibility and learning from her mistakes, and she rolled with the rest of it.

Like when Hall asks his guest about her relationship with another well-known ballplayer, Steve Garvey. "Between Wade and Steve, who has a better swing?"

Pats' Perryman Testifies In Bloom, Walters Case

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHICAGO — New England Patriots running back Robert Perryman says he was not threatened physically by two sports agents charged with racketeering, but said one of them did threaten to expose him for signing an illicit deal.

Perryman, a star on Michigan's 1986 Big Ten championship team, told a federal court Wednesday that sports agent Lloyd Bloom threatened him with possible incrimination if he refused to extend a contract agreement he'd signed earlier in violation of NCAA rules.

"He said he could go to (Michigan coach) Bo (Schembechler) and incriminate my name ... and the Big Ten championship could be invalid, and he could mess up the institution," said Perryman, the fourth NFL player to testify for the government in the agents' fraud trial.

Bloom tried to get Perryman to sign a new contract to conceal the earlier deal after Schembechler discovered in the spring of 1987 that the player had agreed to be represented by the agents, Perryman testified.

Bloom apparently sensed that he and his partner, Norby Walters, were about to be fired by Perryman, and they were. In April 1987, shortly before Perryman signed with the Patriots and before the agents could collect a commission, Perryman said he fired them.

Walters, 58, and Bloom, 29, partners in the New York-based World Sports & Entertainment Inc., are accused of mail fraud, extortion and racketeering.

Prosecutors contend the agents defrauded colleges and universities by signing athletes to representation contracts before their college eligibility had expired. The government also alleges that the athletes were threatened with physical violence when they tried to back out of the contracts.

The agents have pleaded innocent. Their attorneys contend they were victims of money-hungry athletes and universities and that the money they offered the athletes in exchange for signing was in the form of loans.

Perryman said Bloom and Walters recruited him during the spring of 1986, his junior year at Michigan.

Perryman said the agents signed him to a post-dated contract, giving him $2,500 cash at the time and $240 to $250 a month thereafter, in violation of NCAA rules.

Like three other athletes before him, Perryman testified that he lied about the deal with the agents to university officials, knowing that if the contract was revealed he would lose his football scholarship and be kicked off the team.

But Perryman denied committing any federal crime by taking cash and signing post-dated representation agreements with the agents violating college amateur player rules.

"You're talking about all these crimes as if I was selling drugs or something," Perryman told jurors in the courtroom of U.S. District Judge George Marovich. "The only thing I had done wrong was violate NCAA rules."

When asked by Walters' attorney Ethan L. Epstein if he had ever been "physically threatened" by the agents, Perryman replied, "No, I haven't been."

Earlier Thursday, Pittsburgh Steelers cornerback Rod Woodson said that while at Purdue he signed a contract allowing Walters and Bloom to represent him in negotiations with professional football teams, and then lied to his coach and on NCAA eligibility forms.

"If I did not (lie), I would have lost my scholarship and lost my senior year at Purdue," Woodson said, under questioning by U.S. Attorney Anton Valukas.

Perryman also said he lied in filling out eligibility forms after he signed with the agents.

Woodson said Bloom called him in 1986, his junior year at Purdue, and said he wanted to represent him. The agents then flew to his parents' home in Fort Wayne, Ind., where Walters displayed an envelope with $4,000, Woodson testified.

The athlete said his mother was concerned the contract might make him ineligible to play at Purdue, but the agents told him it would be post-dated to make it appear it would not take effect until after Woodson's college eligibility had expired.

After the deal was signed, Woodson said, he told Bloom he needed a car and the agent gave him a new one, putting the title in his grandmother's name so the university would not find out.

Former Iowa stars Devon Mitchell, now with the Detroit Lions, and Ronnie Harmon, now with Buffalo, also testified this week that they signed illicit contracts with the agents and lied about it to university officials.

Adams grins, adjusts herself slightly, and leans forward as she answers with a double-entendre.

Later, over steak tartare at a restaurant in Beverly Hills, she explains. "Sure it's embarrassing to talk about these things," she says, "but I'm telling the truth. I'm just telling the story the way it happened ..."

"If I (only) wanted to get money from Wade, and I wanted to become public and do all this, why in the world would I have gone through what I went through with him? I mean, I could have done that after the first year of dating him."

Adams attorney James McGee of Irvine, Calif., says he's undaunted by last month's appellate decision against his client. He says he will refile, seeking even more money, and plans to call more than 20 baseball players and managers to testify.

He and Adams want to take the case to the jury.

Meanwhile, Margo Adams says she is getting on with her life. She says she is looking forward to starting back to work as a mortgage broker in Orange County.

Sure, she says, she may do a book. But she's not making a career out of notoriety.

"I don't think of myself that way," she says. "I'm Go-Go (the nickname her nieces gave her). I'm not Margo Adams."

Star Says 'Married' Series Has 'Mean-Spirited' Theme

By Kathryn Baker
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — The coffee shop on Bleeker Street where Ed O'Neill had wanted to meet was jam-packed with soggy tourists seeking refuge from the sudden downpour.

O'Neill pushed his way through the crowd and suggested a quick sprint to his apartment a block away. Inside the fourth-floor walkup, O'Neill checked the refrigerator for vittles and extracted white bread, mayonnaise and cold turkey, which he graciously offered his guest — no thanks — who was busy removing drying sweatsocks from the back of the vinyl dining-room chair.

While slathering mayo on bread, O'Neill considered comparisons of the show on which he stars, Fox's "Married ... With Children," and ABC's new sitcom, "Roseanne." Both are centered on lower-middle-class families with kids.

O'Neill plays Al Bundy, a hapless shoe salesman with a primping, stay-at-home wife (Katey Sagal) and two borderline juvenile-delinquent kids (Christina Applegate and David Faustino).

On "Roseanne," plump protagonists Roseanne Barr and John Goodman struggle valiantly, if sardonically, against the financial realities of the blue-collar '80s, surrounded by a halo of family love.

"I like the idea that they ('Roseanne') have people who aren't typically real good-looking, you know, television-type people, character people, and that's nice, I think. I think that's part of the appeal of it, it's just kinda like folks," said O'Neill who grew up in Youngstown, Ohio, the son of a truck driver.

On "Married ... With Children," it's a little more work to find any evidence of familial love. It is suggested to O'Neill that the humor on his show is, well, kind of mean.

"The thing I like about our show is that we are mean-spirited a lot of times," he said. "We don't even try to hide it or make excuses for it."

No kidding. A couple of major sponsors recently pulled advertising from "Married ... With Children" because of a letter campaign by a Detroit housewife who said she found the show anti-family. Fox says it has a waiting list for commercial spots nevertheless.

In a recent episode, the Bundys gleefully hied to a fancy restaurant to blow the pittance a deceased relative had left them. When the bill came, Al realized he had left his wallet at home. The kids, sent to fetch the money, were faced with a moral dilemma — return to bail out the folks, or purchase tickets to that night's Tears and Vomit concert. The kids split with the cash.

Such no-holds-barred slaps at typical sitcom family life have found an audience for Fox. "Married ... With Children" is pulling a network-quality share of the Sunday audience and has become a force to be reckoned with by the big guys at ABC, CBS and NBC.

O'Neill, a serious New York stage actor who had found some success guesting on network shows and starring in a couple of pilots, heard about the new Fox network on a trip to Los Angeles.

"I read it, and I was laughing," he recalled. "And I went in and read for them (executive producers Ron Leavitt and Michael Moya), and they were such funny guys. They were such off-the-wall characters, I immediately thought, 'I like this.' ... I had, like, this connection to the character."

Back in New York, his agent advised to pass on the sitcom, since he was "hot" at NBC, having starred in the made-for-TV movie "Popeye Doyle."

"So I said, 'OK, pass.' So about 20 minutes later, I'm just sitting here, thinking, 'I like that.' So I called L.A. I said, 'All right, if they'll give me $4,000 more a week, tell 'em they have a deal and I'll be there in the morning.'"

Now O'Neill has become something of a latter-day Ralph Kramden. Fans, who know him as "Al," stop him on the street.

"Somehow they identify with the guy. They relate to him some way. And I know I did when I read the pilot. It just reminded me of a couple of my uncles. It's a self-deprecating humor. People that don't have a lot going for them, the ones that always interest me the most are the ones who can laugh at their situation a lot as sort of a way through it, and I saw that in the character."

Stars Kick Off School Program

NEW YORK (AP) — Singing star Lisa Lisa, actress Susan St. James and New York Knicks basketball player Sidney Green helped kick off a state program to build students' self-esteem and curb the dropout rate.

The volunteer mentor program they helped launch Wednesday will encourage sixth-graders to stay in school.

"If you have dreams, that is what you have to make reality," said Lisa Lisa. "No matter how many doors are slammed in your face."

Ms. St. James reminisced about an uncle who nurtured her dream of becoming an actress. "Take advantage of it," she said of the mentor program. "This is your chance to be better than the next guy."

Public service announcements to recruit adult mentors, especially former teachers and other retired people, will be narrated by actor Gregory Peck.

Carson Will Be Back

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BURBANK, Calif. — Johnny Carson, host of "The Tonight Show" for 26 years, says he'll be back for at least one more season — because of the weather.

Carson said he recently had lunch with Brandon Tartikoff, president of NBC entertainment and signed on for another year.

"Last year I said to him — I made a foolish mistake — I said I'll do another year when it snows in Malibu. And it snowed in Malibu so here we are," Carson said.

A rare snowstorm struck earlier this winter at the seaside community that is home to Carson and many other celebrities.

Congress Told U.S. May Lag In High Definition TV

By Jay Arnold
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Japan is investing billions of dollars in semiconductor manufacturing and support for advanced video systems, according to congressional witnesses who say the United States may face a defeat similar to those it suffered in TV and VCR manufacturing 10 years ago.

U.S. electronics companies are unlikely to try to enter the high-definition TV arena unless they get protection from foreign manufacturers, witnesses told a hearing Thursday of the House Energy and Commerce subcommittee on telecommunications and finance.

Robert Cohen, senior economist at the New York State Urban Development Corp., said the Japanese in December committed another $700 million for a total of $1.4 billion to speed development of high-resolution display technology.

The Japanese and Koreans have invested $6 billion for construction of new semiconductor fabrication plants, he said, with the governments making capital available at preferential rates.

Those interest rates are from zero to 2 percent in Japan and from 2 percent to 4 percent in Europe, he said. U.S. companies, meanwhile, pay double-digit rates for capital.

The Bush administration is considering tax breaks and possible changes in antitrust laws to spur a U.S. HDTV industry.

U.S. makers of TV sets and VCRs were driven from the business in the 1960s and 1970s, primarily because of collusion among Japanese electronics companies, dumping of below-cost Japanese TV sets in this country and kickbacks to U.S. importers, witnesses told the panel.

In the face of such market assaults, U.S. companies will be reluctant to enter the potentially lucrative but enormously expensive HDTV manufacturing arena, the panel was told.

"The American television industry was forced out by predatory and vicious attacks here in this market," said Pat Choate, a vice president at TRW Inc.

"It involved in effect a cartel that was sanctioned by the Japanese government," Choate said. "It involved massive dumping. ... There was a massive kickback scheme that was involved."

Choate said that for the United States to get back into the world market in consumer electronics, the government must defend U.S. manufacturers "from predatory attacks, something that was not done in the past." Choate said the Japanese see HDTV as an essential element of the nation's future well-being, "like building highways ... like developing other things that are absolute necessities."

The committee completed two days of hearings on what the government role should be in the face of the revolutionary changes that HDTV — with its motion-picture clarity and large-screen displays — promises not only in entertainment, but in education, medicine, automated manufacturing, communications and defense.

Kenneth Flamm of the Brookings Institute said he wasn't sure that there should be so much focus on HDTV, rather that the government needed to help restructure the technical policy to support a new commercial technological base.

He said HDTV was less important than establishing networks of cable fiber optics to link homes and businesses.

"HDTV is peripheral to that network," Flamm said.

Other witnesses disputed that, saying HDTV, with its heavy use of semi-conductors and memory chips, could be the driving force behind a rejuvenated U.S. electronics industry. The subcommittee heard testimony that there could be $140 billion in sales of HDTV receivers and VCRs by the year 2010.

Fred Branman, director of the group Rebuild America, said the United States needs all the new technologies and must find a way to coordinate what Flamm termed the "piecemeal" approach to electronics development.

Subcommittee Chairman Edward J. Markey, D-Mass., said that was just what his subcommittee intended to do. But he said other governments were out to protect their own interests, and when "push comes to shove," they will act.

Clyde Prestowitz, a senior associate at the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace, also cautioned that the U.S. government must tread carefully in any effort to protect the U.S. electronics industry because U.S. companies also are trying to enter foreign markets.

The Defense Department is seeking companies to share $30 million in HDTV research funds, and "We might consider some reciprocity requirement," conditioning foreign participation in U.S. efforts to develop HDTV on the possibility of U.S. participation overseas, Prestowitz said.

Markey said the subcommittee planned to "move very fast" to make recommendations on the government role in HDTV development.

Conductor Leads 7 Million School Kids In TV Songfest

By Robert M. Andrews
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Band director William P. Foster thought he'd done it all, from Macy's Thanksgiving Day parades to more than 200 football halftimes. But now he was lifting his baton for the challenge of a lifetime.

With help from a global TV hook-up, Foster conducted what promoters billed as "the world's largest concert." He led no fewer than 7 million school kids in a songfest Thursday that spanned the United States and reached from Tunisia to the Philippines.

But Foster is an old pro, and he didn't flinch.

Natty in a high-collared white uniform with gold buttons, he mounted the podium in the Kennedy Center's Grand Foyer to conduct 400 local school children in a half-hour choral program performed simultaneously by millions of other youngsters via television.

Among them were the "Singing Bears" of Coral Park Elementary School who sang along at a shopping mall in Fort Lauderdale, Fla. In Ohio, the Columbus Symphony Youth Orchestra played host for 2,800 local school children, and more than 4,000 youngsters from across Colorado gathered at three sites in the Denver area to join the singing.

One hundred children from 20 countries who attend an American school in Tunis sang under Foster's televised baton at the U.S. Embassy in the Tunisian capital. Others chimed in from West Germany, Guam and American Samoa.

Although it was midday Thursday in Washington, it was nighttime when 170 singers and band members performed from schools in the Marshall Islands, 2,400 miles southwest of Hawaii. Nearly 600 pupils chimed in from an elementary school at the U.S. naval base at Subic Bay in the Philippines.

They all followed Foster's conducting cues on seven selections including Woody Guthrie's "This Land is Your Land" and Irving Berlin's "God Bless America." The same music had been performed by 2,400 children in a performance taped last November in the Brooklyn Academy of Music.

The concert was broadcast Thursday by 315 public broadcasting stations nationwide and by the Armed Forces Radio and Television network to American schools at military bases and U.S. embassies overseas.

"It's an incredible experience," said Foster, director of bands at Florida A&M University at Tallahassee for the past 42 years.

Even though his own marching band and its precision-drill exploits have been seen by millions of people at football halftimes — including the 1969 Super Bowl — nationally televised parades and TV soft drink commercials, Foster said, "this was a big deal."

This press agent's dream is produced annually by the Music Educators National Conference, a non-profit association of 58,000 music teachers and administrators, to dramatize the importance of music studies in the schools. The mass sing-along, which began in 1985, was underwritten this year by McDonald's Corp.

Opera soprano Susan Dunn, who began her singing career in school and church choirs in her hometown of Bauxite, Ark., told the Kennedy Center singers that she hoped their part in the worldwide concert would encourage other youngsters to study music.

"I know first hand that music is more than singing and learning rhythm," said Miss Dunn, who is starring this week in a Washington Opera production.

Stallone Reportedly Admitted To Hospital

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Sylvester Stallone is visiting a Manhattan orthopedic hospital after complaining of pain in one of his limbs, according to a published report today.

Stallone, 42, arrived at the Hospital for Special Surgery on Thursday, a unidentified hospital spokeswoman told the Daily News.

"But I'm not at liberty to tell you anything else," she said.

The News quoted sources as saying Stallone "complained of pain in one of his limbs."

A nursing supervisor at the hospital early today told The Associated Press she had no information on whether Stallone had been treated there.

Stallone recently started shooting a movie, "Maverick The Escape," in New Jersey.

Ozone Crisis Splitting West And Third World

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LONDON — The Third World, challenging industrial nations on yet another environmental issue, is slowing efforts to eliminate chemicals that are eating away the Earth's crucial ozone layer.

Prodded by increasing scientific evidence that chlorofluorocarbons are destroying the ozone shield protecting Earth from cancer-causing ultraviolet rays, the West has promised to ban or significantly reduce their use by the end of the century.

Third World countries do not dispute the facts and figures, but they are just embarking on large-scale expansion of refrigeration, air conditioning, plastics and electronics industries, most of which depend on chlorofluorocarbons.

Australia's science minister, speaking at an international conference in London this week, wondered aloud if it is fair to ask for equal measures in both kinds of countries.

"This raises a major moral problem in the West," said the minister, Barry Jones.

The dispute recalls the 1960s debate over the insecticide DDT. The West discovered it was harmful to both plants and animals and imposed bans or restrictions in 1970-71 against the wishes of developing nations, which feared a resurgence of disease-carrying insects.

Another environmental issue dividing the West from the Third World is the dumping of toxic waste.

President Daniel arap Moi of Kenya told the London conference that recent dumpings in Africa of toxic chemicals from industrial countries were "unfriendly actions ... equivalent to declaring war on the Earth's ecosystem."

On the ozone issue, developing countries demand Western help in financing any switch from chlorofluorocarbons to safe substitutes.

The chemicals, developed in the United States more than 50 years ago as the working fluid for refrigerators, also are used in aerosols, fast-food packaging and computer solvents. About 1.2 million tons are produced annually, more than 76 percent in the United States and European Economic Community.

When chlorofluorocarbons reach the stratosphere 15-25 miles up, as much as 100 years after emission, they break apart and their chlorine atoms deplete the ozone. Chlorofluorocarbons also trap heat, increasing Earth's temperature in a process known as the greenhouse effect.

Washington now says it will ban all chlorofluorocarbons by 1999 if safe substitutes become available.

The 12-nation EEC has agreed to a similar timetable but its environment commissioner, Carlo Ripa di Meana, wants an earlier target.

Thirty-one countries have ratified the 1987 Montreal Protocol requiring the amount of chlorofluorocarbons to be cut in half by 1999.

Another 20 countries have agreed to sign up, but China, India and Brazil, with rapidly growing populations, are not among them. They have urged Western nations to create a fund to help them acquire technology to replace chlorofluorocarbons, but insist the money not be deducted from existing aid.

"Any reduction in these resources for whatever reasons would mean that the poor of these countries will have to wait longer for the promised freedom from hunger and poverty," said Z.R. Ansari, India's environment minister. "The poor are no more prepared to wait, and there will be social upheaval if they are asked to wait any longer."

China's environment commissioner, Liu Ming Pu, told the London conference his nation of 1.1 billion people uses less than 2 percent of the world's chlorofluorocarbons.

Western nations say the potential for chlorofluorocarbons use in the developing world is enormous and could wipe out any cuts made by industrial countries.

Judge Imposes $2.25 Million Fine For Ashland Oil Spill

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PITTSBURGH — The judge who imposed a record $2.25 million fine against Ashland Oil Inc. said the fine would have been larger if the oil company had not acted responsibly following one of the nation's largest inland fuel spills.

U.S. District Judge Gustave Diamond on Thursday said he considered the fine a "gentle sentence" for the negligence he found on Ashland's part in the spill that fouled two rivers in three states last year, threatening to disrupt drinking-water supplies for more than a million people.

Ashland's Floreffe Terminal ruptured on Jan. 2, 1988, unleashing 3.8 million gallons of diesel fuel. More than 700,000 gallons escaped a dike and entered the Monongahela River 25 miles south of Pittsburgh.

The fuel moved down the Monongahela, a source of drinking water for suburban Pittsburgh residents, then entered the Ohio River, also a source of drinking water.

About 23,000 suburban Pittsburgh residents endured a week without tap water because their system lacked sufficient reserves to last until the river current carried the pollution downstream.

Mandatory conservation was ordered for businesses and homes elsewhere in parts of Pennsylvania, Ohio and West Virginia.

So far, Ashland said it has paid about $18 million in clean-up costs and civil claims from residents and businesses affected by the water crisis.

"Were it not for the defendant's responsible action," the penalty, the largest ever imposed against a company for a fuel spill, would have been much harsher, Diamond said.

Ashland spokesman Roger Schrum called the fine excessive, but said it had not yet been decided if the company would appeal.

U.S. Attorney Charles Sheehy said the fine should be a warning to future violators.

"We want to try and send a message to these people. This is something we're going to take a hard line on," Sheehy said.

Ashland had pleaded no contest in a criminal case to two misdemeanor counts under the Clean Water and Refuse acts. Each count normally would carry a maximum fine of $200,000 per count.

But Diamond invoked a special fines provision, marking the first time the federal provision had ever been applied in an environmental criminal case since the provision was instituted five years ago.

The judge was not limited in setting a fine as long as half of it represented actual damages.

The Occupational Safety and Health Administration fined Ashland more than $50,000 for safety violations, and the Environmental Protection Agency fined the company $145,000 for alleged deficiencies in its spill prevention plan.

Ashland is negotiating with state governments to settle civil penalties and damage claims totaling more than $10 million. In addition, 20 class action lawsuits are pending against the company, Schrum said.

FDIC Takes Over 45 More Thrifts

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. has taken control of 45 more failed savings and loans in eight states, bringing the total under the agency's control to 118 thrift institutions in 24 states.

As an interim step, President Bush is having the agency, which regulates commercial banks, take over the sickest S&Ls, with the goal of minimizing losses while Congress considers the administration's proposal to rescue or close such institutions.

The FDIC plans to take control of about 100 more institutions within the next month. The agency is emphasizing that the S&Ls will remain open as usual and that all deposit accounts up to $100,000 are fully protected by federal insurance.

The 45 institutions in Thursday's action, including 21 in Texas and nine in Colorado, had assets totaling $13.6 billion.

Black & Decker Policies Studied

LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

The British subsidiary of Black & Decker Inc. has engaged in marketing practices that are anti-competitive, a study by the United Kingdom Office of Fair Trading has concluded.

The six-month study is likely to lead to a full investigation by the Monopolies and Mergers Commission unless Black & Decker comes to some agreement with the Office of Fair Trading.

Black & Decker spokeswoman Barbara Lucas said Wednesday that the company would welcome an investigation by the commission because it contends that it has done nothing illegal.

The dominant supplier of tool and workbenches to the United Kingdom has come under scrutiny for refusing to supply retailers who sell its products below a prescribed resale price when the product is being sold as a "loss-leader" or promotional item.

Lucas said that Black & Decker believes that this practice by some large retail stores in United Kingdom is unfair to smaller retailers. "The smaller retailers can't afford to compete," she said.

Black & Decker contends that it is in the best interest of the consumer and the company to have a wide distribution network, Lucas said.

Lucas said that Black & Decker would submit a report to the commission within the next six weeks detailing its arguments. A complete investigation could take up to six months, she said.

The initial complaint came from one retailer who now refuses to sell Black & Decker products, Lucas said. "The instances of this happening are only a few," she said.

Even if the commission rules against the company, there would be no fines or financial penalties, Lucas said.

House Panel OKs Pay Plan

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — A Democratic measure to increase the minimum wage by $1.30 an hour to $4.65 over three years is gaining ground in Congress even as President Bush insists he will veto any raise higher than his own proposal.

The plan to raise the $3.35-an-hour minimum wage for the first time since 1981 won approval from the House labor standards subcommittee on Thursday. Democratic leaders, at the same time, called for a compromise on a sub-minimum "training wage" for new hires in hopes of passing the increase this month.

Rep. Austin Murphy, chairman of the subcommittee, said he plans to propose a reduced minimum when the bill reaches the House floor, although requirements will be far stricter than what the administration wants.

The House bill drawn up Thursday is virtually identical to the one passed Wednesday by the Senate Labor and Human Resources Committee, where Chairman Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., says he hopes the legislation is on a "fast track" for approval.

But the Bush administration repeated warnings Thursday that an increase beyond 90 cents an hour over three years and without its own reduced minimum for all newly hired workers would be vetoed.

"The entire package is the bottom line, both the $4.25 figure and the six-month training wage at $3.35," said Dale Tate, a spokeswoman for Labor Secretary Elizabeth Dole. "We've come more than halfway towards meeting the goal" of proponents of a minimum wage increase.

The Bush package would keep the hourly floor at $3.35 for all newly hired workers for their first six months employment on any job. Otherwise, 30 cents an hour would be added to the minimum annually for three years.

 One of our favorite definitions of trump break could endanger his contract. If West holds four trumps, declarer would need X-ray vision and a very fortunate lie of the cards to salvage the contract, unless East had a bare honor. But if East were to hold four trumps ...

After winning the king of spades, declarer cashed a high trump just in case a singleton honor happened to fall. When only low cards appeared, declarer elected to take a safety play against the possibility that East held all the remaining trumps. He crossed to the table with a heart and led dummy's last trump, inserting the nine when East followed with the eight. When that held, he claimed his slam, conceding only one trump. (Had West won the second trump, that would have meant that only one trump was outstanding, which declarer could draw as soon as he regained the lead.)

GI Gets Jail Term As Spy

WASHINGTON — An Army officer who made up to $200,000 spying for East Germany and the Soviet Union did it mainly for the money, a psychiatrist testified before the officer was sentenced to 40 years in prison and fined $50,000.

Warrant Officer James W. Hall III, 30, of Sharon Springs, N.Y., was sentenced Thursday night in a military courtroom at Fort McNair in southwest Washington. Three days earlier he had pleaded guilty to 10 counts of espionage, attempted espionage and violating Army regulations.

Col. Howard C. Eggers, the military judge who presided at the court-martial, also gave Hall a dishonorable discharge and ordered him to forfeit all future pay and allowances.

Chinese Strong Arm Brings Calm To Tibet

BEIJING — Chinese troops rounded up suspected separatists and kept a tight lid on Tibet today as the embattled region marked the 30th anniversary of a failed attempt to cast off Chinese rule.

Police and the military already had detained many Tibetans in house-to-house searches and planned to move swiftly to crush any demonstrations to commemorate the anniversary, according to Tibetan and foreign sources.

A Tibetan woman, contacted by telephone today, said the capital was calm and that the army occupied all roads.

"There are new arrests ... There are many, but we don't know how many," she said.

A man came on the line. "Don't talk a long time," he said. "There are a lot of police. We can't talk long."

China imposed martial law in Lhasa on Tuesday to quell three days of anti-Chinese riots that took 16 lives, according to official count. Western travelers say most Tibetans put the death toll at between 20 and 30. Some estimates ranged much higher.

All foreign tourists were ordered to leave Lhasa by Thursday. It was believed the last group departed this morning.

Another Tibetan woman reached by telephone Thursday evening from Beijing said Chinese troops began rounding up large numbers of Tibetans after most foreigners left.

China's national radio today said large groups of protesters turned themselves in and that police said those who gave themselves up would be treated with leniency.

It said some shops had reopened in the mountaintop city of 70,000, and the Barkhor, the central marketplace, was returning to life.

During the riots that began Sunday, mobs of Tibetans demanding independence from China and chanting loyalty to their exiled spiritual leader the Dalai Lama threw stones, ransacked Chinese-owned shops, set fire to Chinese property and attacked government office buildings.

The Dalai Lama spoke today to about 5,000 ethnic Tibetans in Dharmasala, India, who gathered to mark the 1959 uprising. He urged Tibetans to demonstrate against Chinese rule but avoid violence.

"The non-violent struggle is the best because of the recent events," he said. "Have faith in the struggle and continue demonstrations so that the world will know Tibet is suffering under Chinese rule."

He called on Chinese leader Deng Xiaoping to end violence in the Tibetan capital, according to a statement issued by his headquarters in New Delhi.

"I urge your personal intervention for bringing an immediate end to the repressive measures against innocent Tibetans and lifting of the martial law in Lhasa," the statement said.

Thousands of Tibetans also demonstrated in New Delhi and the Indian city of Madras today.

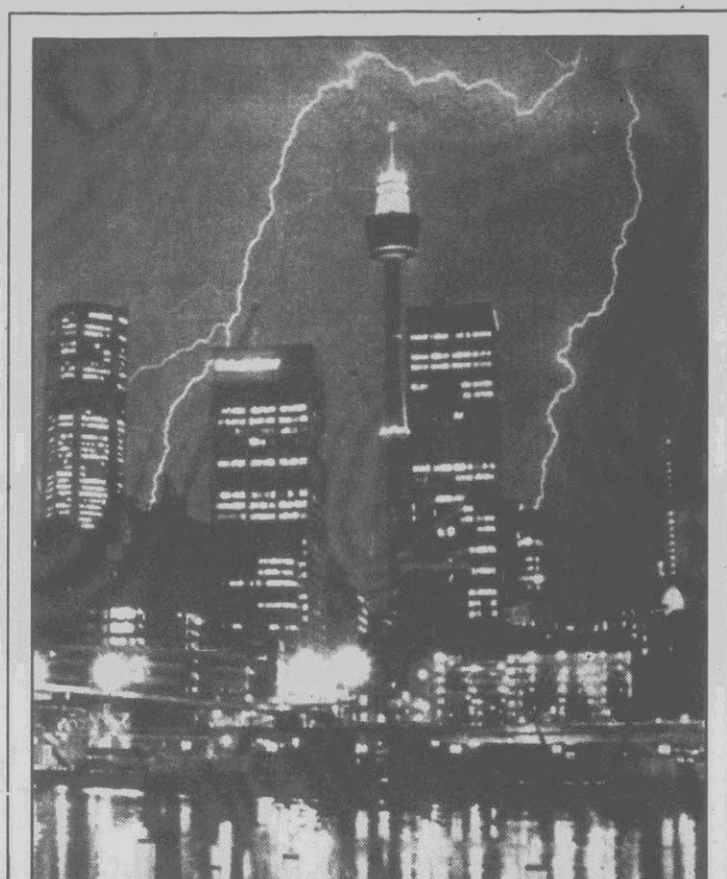

China's leading newspaper today issued a plea for calm and said that without stability, economic reforms would fail.

"The riots in Lhasa ... show how precious stability is to the (economic) modernization and how important it is for the peace and happiness of the people. Without stability, nothing will be accomplished," said the front-page editorial in the People's Daily.

For the Chinese, the March 10 anniversary marked the beginning of "democratic reform" in Tibet, the institution of Communist political and economic systems in the remote Himalayan region.

Tibetans remember the day in 1959 when tens of thousands converged on the Dalai Lama's palace to prevent what they thought was a Chinese military attempt to kidnap their god-king.

A week later, the Chinese allegedly fired two mortar shells into the palace ground, and the Dalai Lama and his family fled secretly that night, eventually reaching India. The Dalai Lama and about 100,000 followers now reside in exile in northern India.

Down Under Lights

A lightning bolt flashes across the night skyline of central Sydney early today. The bolt created a dramatic light show over the Australian city.

How They Voted

WASHINGTON — Here's how area senators were recorded on major roll call votes in the week ending March 3. There were no House votes during the week.

Mail Costs

By a vote of 50 for and 47 against, the Senate expanded its franking privileges to permit up to a 500 percent increase in this year's budget for mailing newsletters and other material to constituents.

The vote killed an attempt to block the expansion, under which senators can send up to six self-promotional newsletters annually to each postal patron in their state. That could generate 1.2 billion newsletters nationwide.

The new system will cost taxpayers about $180 million if fully utilized. Senators spent $36 million last year on all mail costs.

The vote occurred during debate on legislation (S Res 66) to fund Senate committees in 1989-90, which later became law.

Supporter Wendell Ford, D-Ky., said the expansion would put senators on a par with the House, which in recent years has far out-pented the Senate on postage. House members can send up to six newsletters annually.

Opponent Pete Wilson, R-Calif., called the fivefold spending increase "a leap so large that it would make the 50 percent pay raise proposal appear almost modest."

Terry Sanford, D-N.C., voted yes and Jesse Helms, R-N.C., voted no.

Committee Spending

By a vote of 62 for and 36 against, the Senate tabled (killed) an amendment to cut about $5 million from the $106 million budgeted for Senate committees in 1989-90.

This cleared the way for enactment of a measure (S Res 66; see preceding vote) to hike spending for Senate committees by nearly 13 percent over two years, with staff pay raises absorbing much of the increase.

Robert Byrd, D-W.Va., said the Senate needs the extra money to adequately oversee the executive branch.

Sponsor Jesse Helms, R-N.C., said the Senate should adopt his amendment to show the country it can restrain spending.

Sanford voted yes and was opposed to the proposed budget. Helms voted no and was in favor of the budget.

To Confirm Louis Sullivan

By a vote of 98 for and 1 against, the Senate confirmed Dr. Louis W. Sullivan as secretary of the Department of Health and Human Services.

Supporter Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, called Sullivan "a progressive, compassionate conservative with proven abilities as an administrator."

Sanford supported Sullivan's appointment.
