Extremist Candidate Claims Victory In Salvadoran Voting

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador — The rightist Republican Nationalist Alliance today claimed victory over the governing centrists in a presidential vote leftist rebels tried to thwart with attacks launched across the country.

The military said six soldiers and 23 guerrillas were killed in clashes. In addition, security forces shot to death three journalists — two Salvadorans and a Dutchman. Presidential candidate Alfredo Cristiani, a wealthy coffee grower, told reporters that his party's unofficial count showed him leading with 54 percent of Sunday's vote with about 75 percent of the ballots counted.

"We are sure and we proclaim ourselves the victors," Roberto D'Aubuisson, founder of the party known as Arena, told a news conference.

That would leave Washington supporting a government run by a party long associated with extremism. In elections last March, Arena wrested control of the National Assembly from the incumbent Christian Democrats.

The rebels claimed a low voter turnout — unofficially estimated at roughly 60 percent — rendered the results meaningless.

Their Farabundo Marti National Liberation Front had called for a boycott and launched widespread attacks to keep voters at home.

Unofficial reports by a television station, the U.S. Embassy and the leftist Democratic Convergence party indicated Arena had gained the majority needed to avoid a runoff next month with the Christian Democrats.

Election officials had no results early today. They said they were having computer problems and had suspended counting. Guerrilla sabotage of power and telephone lines had hampered vote collection.

A team of 21 U.S. observers said the vote appeared to have been fair, but one observer said violence frightened many people away.

"There is no question that the intimidation of the (rebels) is working," said William Doherty, an AFL-CIO official on the team.

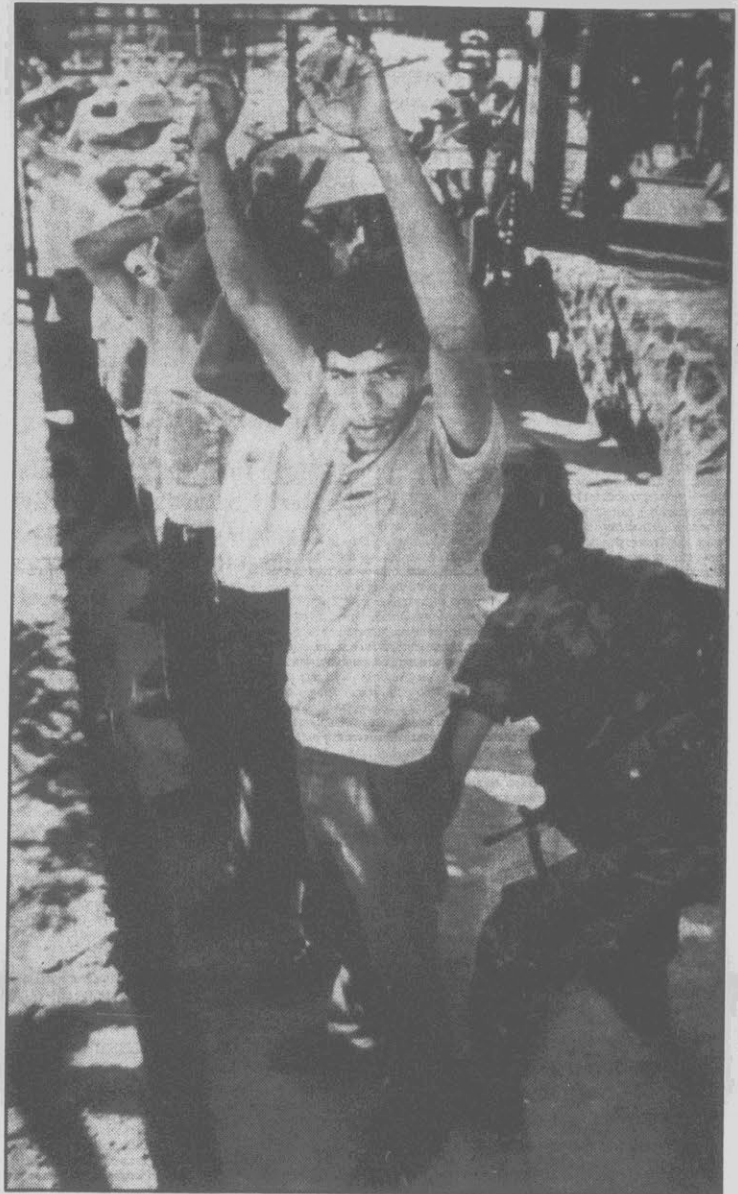

Cristiani, 41, campaigned as a moderate. However, at his side throughout the campaign was D'Aubuisson, a former army major who has been accused of links to right-wing death squads.

The Christian Democrats, their headquarters almost empty, said they would have no immediate comment on the returns. Their candidate was Fidel Chavez Mena, a 49-year-old lawyer.

The United States has sent $3.5 billion in military and economic aid to the government during its 9-year-old war with the rebels. The conflict has claimed the lives of 70,000 people, most of them civilians.

U.S. policy in El Salvador has been aimed at shoring up a centrist government represented by the Christian Democrats and President Jose Napoleon Duarte, who is dying of liver cancer and leaves office June 1.

Some U.S. lawmakers have said that if Arena wins, the United States should re-evaluate its support for the government.

Continental Attendants' Union Calls Strike, But Airline Says No Impact

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Continental Airlines flight attendants announced a strike today and began picketing at airports, but no immediate effects were reported at strikebound Eastern's sister carrier.

"I can only confirm that the strike has been called," Myra Clayton, spokeswoman for the Union of Flight Attendants, said today in Houston. She said the decision was made among union leaders Sunday night, but it was not directly related to the strike that has all but shut down Eastern Airlines since March 4.

As the strike deadline came at 10 a.m. EST, some flight attendants set up picket lines at the carrier's main Houston hub, but flights appeared to be departing and arriving normally.

The union represents about 6,800 Continental flight attendants.

"It's like an annual event," Continental spokesman Dave Messing said. An Easter 1988 call for a sickout failed to materialize, and "there's no reason to believe this attempt will be any more successful," he said.

About 10 members of the Union of Flight Attendants, dressed in maroon uniforms with Continental emblems, walked a picket line at Houston Intercontinental Airport, carrying yellow signs proclaiming "On Strike."

"We were prepared to strike in December and we were promised at the time that if we waited the company would be willing to sit down and negotiate a contract with us in January, but that still has not happened," Sheila Hammond, one of the pickets, said.

There were also pickets reported at Newark (N.J.) International Airport, another major Continental airport. It was not immediately clear how many flight attendants walked off their jobs this morning at Newark or whether any flights had been delayed, but at least 25 people were seen on a picket line.

"We don't see any evidence of that at this point," said Richard Boulware, public affairs director for Denver's Stapleton International Airport. "We have not received any requests for permission to demonstrate or picket by the flight attendants."

Houston-based Continental's flight attendants voted in December to authorize a strike over wages and have been free to walk out since that time, union president Carla Winkler said Sunday.

Messing said the company had reserve attendants it could call in if the walkout became significant.

"Continental is fully prepared to operate 100 percent of its schedule," Messing said. "We don't feel there would be any impact on us or our customers."

He said Continental operates about 1,400 flights daily serving 120 cities in the United States and numerous foreign countries, and as of early this morning, there has been "no disruption whatsoever."

EPA Asked To Aid In Waste Cleanup

By John Bare
 THE DAILY REFLECTOR

State health officials are asking agents from the Environmental Protection Agency to assist in disposing of medical waste and human body parts stored in two Pitt County locations.

Stephen Reid, spokesman for the Solid Waste Management Section of the state Division of Health Services, said the state is still working to draw up a consent agreement with Bethel funeral home John Gray, who has improperly stored the waste.

Also, the state has asked agents from the EPA's regional office in Atlanta to inspect the two sites near Stokes and offer an opinion about how to handle the cleanup.

"We are in the process of trying to get the EPA to come in and take a look at the situation," Reid said.

He said he does not know how long it will be before EPA officials are able to inspect the sites. The state has also been unable to iron out a consent order with Gray, which will provide instructions and guidelines for the disposal.

Gray, who owns Ayres-Gray Funeral Home in Bethel and Gray Funeral Home and Crematorium in Raleigh, is not licensed to handle medical waste. He is only permitted to dispose of human bodies and body parts.

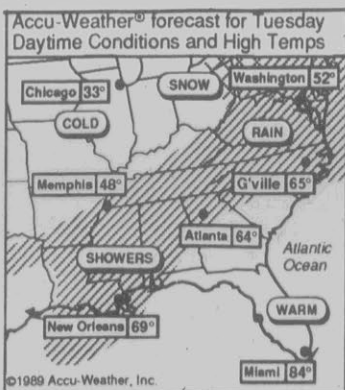

He may be in violation of several state regulations concerning the acceptance, storage and disposal of medical waste, Reid has said. In a separate incident, Gray was cited in December for improperly incinerating medical waste.

In the consent order, the state is asking Gray to provide a list of when and where he received the medical waste. Gray will also be responsible for selecting and paying an approved contractor to dispose of the waste.

Assistant Attorney General Nancy Scott, counsel for the solid waste section, said she last met with Gray on Wednesday, and another meeting was to be held early this week. However, Gray has not contacted state officials to set a time.

One site where the waste is stored, on rural paved road 1547, was scheduled to be sold at public auction Thursday as part of a bankruptcy settlement of Gray Farms Inc., a corporation Gray formed in 1980.

U.S. Copter Crash Kills 19 Marines

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SEOUL, South Korea — At least 19 Marines were killed and 16 injured today when a helicopter crashed in remote mountains, officials said. It was the second Marine chopper disaster in South Korea in four days.

The troop-carrying CH53-D Sea Stallion helicopter crashed near the port of Pohang on the southeast coast while taking part in exercises with South Korean forces, a Marine Corps spokesman said.

All 34 Marines aboard the aircraft were killed or injured, the spokesman said on condition of anonymity. The injured included 15 Marines aboard the helicopter and one hurt on the ground during rescue operations.

Nine of the injured were in very serious condition.

Marine officials initially said 22 Marines were killed in the crash, but later lowered the figure to 19 because of confusion in early reports from the crash site.

The helicopter was carrying four crewmembers and 30 infantrymen when it crashed, the spokesman said. The infantrymen were from the 1st Battalion, 5th Marines of the 1st Marine Division based at Camp Pendleton, Calif., he said.

Marine officials said they had no immediate word on what caused the crash. Little of the helicopter was left but charred pieces of wreckage.

Yonhap, the South Korean news agency, cited South Korean military officials as saying the helicopter exploded in the air and burst into flames before slamming into the ground. The report said the helicopter appeared to have a problem in its engines.

A Seoul newspaper, the Kookmin Ilbo, quoted a farmer who saw the crash as saying two helicopters were hovering about 250 feet above the ground when one suddenly turned upside down and plunged into a creek. About 10 soldiers leaped out of the helicopter as it hit the ground, the report said.

Jones Proposal Would Expand Medicaid To Mothers, Infants

RALEIGH — A bill that would expand Medicaid coverage for pregnant women and children and possibly reduce the state's infant death rate has been introduced into the N.C. General Assembly by Rep. Walter B. Jones Jr., D-Pitt.

House Bill 393 would expand Medicaid coverage for pregnant women and for children up to 12 months old if their family income is equal to or less than 185 percent of the federal poverty guidelines. In other words, a family of three with a gross annual income of $18,000 would be eligible.

If approved by the Legislature, the bill would provide the maximum allowable Medicaid coverage for poor pregnant women and children. The bill would expand Medicaid coverage to an estimated 9,700 women and 10,100 children.

HB 393 asks the state to appropriate $7.1 million in 1989-90 fiscal year and $14.1 million in the 1990-91 fiscal year to cover the costs of expanded services.

The bill also asks the state to appropriate during the 1989-91 biennium an additional $1.8 million, which will be given to county departments of social services to hire staff necessary to provide expanded services.

Football Fan To Pay Damages

A Cary man responsible for the assault that helped end the East Carolina-N.C. State football series has been ordered to pay more than $45,000 in damages to the public safety officer he attacked.

In Wake County Civil District Court on Friday, Judge Jerry W. Leonard ordered Keith Douglas Philbeck, 22, of Cary to pay $15,737 in compensatory damages and $30,000 in punitive damages to Robert W. Malason, 22, who suffered a fractured right eye orbit, nerve damage to his cheek and cuts near his eye.

A student at NCSU, Malason was working part time for the school's public safety department during the 1987 NCSU-ECU game in Raleigh. He was trying to stop fans from tearing down the goal post after ECU's 32-14 win at Carter-Finley stadium when he was knocked out by a man later identified as Philbeck.

NCSU athletic officials suspended the series after the incident. The game had traditionally been one of the top sporting events in the state and set attendance records for NCSU.

Philbeck, who pleaded guilty to assault in January of 1988, did not appear in court last week for the proceedings. He has reportedly moved out of state.

Graders also culled horned cattle, bulls, stags, cows, bred heifers, and sick or unthrifty cattle. Cattle are then sorted by grade, sex and weight.

Cattle should be of beef breeding and weight at least 300 pounds. After this grading and sorting of cattle, large uniform lots are offered for sale to buyers who know they are getting a particular type of animal.

The result is a better price for the producer and a satisfied buyer.

Cattle producers wishing to sell cattle at the Ayden State Graded Sale at East Carolina Stockyard should consign their cattle by March 30. Consignment forms are available at the Agricultural Extension Office or East Carolina Stockyard.

State graded cattle sales continue to be a good means of marketing cattle.

In North Carolina, a number of state graded sales are held in the spring (stocker sales) and in the fall (feeder sales).

These graded sales typically bring the cattle producer a higher price for his cattle compared to weekly auction markets of the same period.

The North Carolina graded sales are a cooperative effort of the Agricultural Extension Service, Cattlemen's Association, Department of Agriculture and livestock market operator.

In this area, a spring state-graded stocker sale is held each year at East Carolina Stockyard south of Ayden. This year the sale will be April 4 and cattle will be received April 3.

In these sales, cattle are graded by extension and NCDA cattle specialists. Cattle are graded into one of three frame sizes — small, medium and large.

FIRST SIGN OF PERIODONTITIS

If your gums bleed easily when you brush your teeth, this may indicate you have a serious form of gum disease known as periodontitis. Periodontal disease is the number one cause of tooth loss in adults. This disease attacks the gum tissue and supporting bone structure. As the gum and supporting bone gradually deteriorate, this causes the teeth to become loose and eventually fall out.

Dental plaque, an accumulation of harmful bacteria that is constantly forming on teeth, is believed to be the chief cause of inflammation of the gums and tooth decay. Gum disease in its early stages (gingivitis) is an easier problem for your dentist to treat. When treatment is neglected or put off, however, early gum disease progresses to periodontal disease, and, eventually loss of teeth.

Prevention is the best way to prevent this from happening to you. This should include, not only good oral hygiene habits at home, but regular professional cleaning. Call our office today for an appointment to get your teeth cleaned.

Note: We welcome new patients, both children and adults.

'Truth In Preference To Fiction'

Careful

Residential Development Has Pitfalls

Enthusiasm was virtually unanimous for a plan to promote residential development in the downtown Greenville area and thereby create a residential-commercial village atmosphere in what was once the center of the city's business district.

There are still vibrant commercial areas, but many of the large stores have long since moved to new shopping areas leaving a number of vacant business buildings.

The city has approved new regulations which would promote multifamily housing in the downtown mall and in the downtown commercial zoning districts. The proponents of the plan feel it will restore historic buildings, create downtown residential uses and provide customers for downtown merchants. They cite Chapel Hill's Franklin Street and other downtown areas in cities with large universities which have developed in close proximity to the downtown.

'Future downtown development will depend on private investment, and we only have to study larger cities to determine that the central business district will grow.'

It may work, but there are also pitfalls.

Even with its deficiencies, downtown Greenville is far from a ghost town. In fact there are many businesses which have continued to thrive in the central business district area. City and county government offices are also located there.

Planners and developers must consider whether a residential-commercial mix will work for Greenville. For now at least we are not so sprawling a metropolitan area that individuals cannot live on the fringes of the city and reach downtown in only a few minutes.

The worst scenario might be that well meaning developers would provide apartments in downtown buildings only to find the market was thin and the upscale residents couldn't be attracted to them. While we would hope that would not happen there should be some market studies to determine the need for downtown housing and provide guidance.

Much public money was spent to improve downtown in the 1960s and '70s. One had to have been around before those decades to understand that the funds were well invested. Recalling the slum housing which once existed demonstrates that the area now is better off.

Future downtown development will depend on private investment, and we only have to study larger cities to determine that the central business district will grow. Certainly a first rate hotel would help and good housing could also be a boost. We need to know where we are going, however, and the city should use its regulatory powers to make certain that downtown residential development is of superior quality and in the best interest of all the taxpayers.

To the editor:

Recycling is an act in which everyone should become involved. Americans spend millions of dollars on paper products. If recycling became more popular, prices of paper products would decrease and less trees would have to be cut down.

Aluminum mining costs a lot of money, but recycling cans would lower costs of aluminum products.

If recycling becomes a large part of our lives, then the world would be cleaner in that the trees that have been saved by recycling would put out a large quantity of oxygen. Recycling is the answer to America's money problem and environmental problems.

To the editor:

Lately it's common to hear that the only two values left in life are power and money. After attending the March 9 city council meeting, I found this to be true. The main group of people against a tree ordinance was composed of land developers and realtors — people who claim to lose money if trees are saved.

The majority of people to whom I have spoken do not approve of the vast wasting of our natural surroundings. That trees provide an aesthetic value is unquestionably important; but they also provide a home for birds to continue to fight our insect problem. Our animals are being pushed into smaller and smaller living quarters and are not adapting; therefore, dying at an alarming rate. Eventually the outcome will cost us more than we can imagine. Environmental damage is extremely difficult, if not impossible, to correct.

To the editor:

The effective school must serve everybody, all students — the slow learners, underachievers, culturally deprived, and the late bloomers — at all times and with the same kinds of concerns.

It has been fashionable in our society to measure a school's effectiveness by test scores and academic achievement. Students' home situations, social skills, communication skills, class participation, school activities must be considered. Added to this is a lack of parental support. Parents do not get involved, do not push their children, do not support the authority figure. They question and even criticize what is happening in public schools.

Parents are expected to supply the student with basic needs, discipline, a healthful home environment, and relevant values. It would be most helpful if the parents would support the schools.

Parents should keep an eye on their children's work from first grade on. If parents want their children to do well in school, they have to show they care. Teachers can't do it all. Not all teachers are terrific. If we value our children, we must put our money where our mouths are. We need to put more money, more dollars into education. The world is becoming increasingly competitive and our position as a leader hangs in the balance. Our children will make the difference.

Share The Burden Equitably

Paul
O'Connor

RALEIGH — You might think that you're responsible only for your medical bills and those of your family, but the N.C. Hospital Association wants you to know that you're paying for much more. Through taxes, higher medical bills and higher insurance rates, you're also paying for the medical care of those who are unable to pay for themselves.

There are about 800,000 North Carolinians without health insurance according to the NCHA. Many of those people, when they receive hospital care, are unable to pay. So others end up paying for them.

Whether we pay from our own wallets, or through health insurance, the paying hospital patient pays the subsidy through higher room rates. In 1987, North Carolina hospitals had to make up for $786.9 million of uncompensated hospital care for indigent persons.

The typical worker and his employer pay through higher health insurance rates that must reflect the subsidy. In the effort to increase the number of insured North Carolinians, state businesses have been at the forefront because they're tired of picking up the tabs for the uninsured.

Finally, the taxpayer pays. Many hospitals in this state are owned by a city or county. When someone can't pay the bills, the county gets stuck with the loss, and the county is really just its taxpayers. Also, for the poor who are covered by insurance, the insurance is often Medicaid, a program jointly funded a federal, state and local governments. Again, taxpayers.

The indigent Care Study Commission, a legislative panel, has recommended a series of bills to expand Medicaid coverage to more of the state's poor. NCHA, obviously, is backing the bills. Their total cost to the taxpayer would be $64.6 million to the state and $12.7 million to the counties, beginning next fiscal year. The federal government would pay an additional $153.6 million in matching funds if the state expanded the program, according to Pan Silberman, a member of the commission and a lawyer for N.C. Legal Services.

The central question with indigent care has to be, "Who will pay?" And the answer has to be all of us. North Carolinians can't expect the burden for indigent care to fall only on paying patients, or the insurance companies, or the employers or the hospitals.

Medical care for the indigent is a general obligation of the entire society. The tax system is supposed to be designed to fairly tax us all. It is time for that system to spread around the burden for these indigent persons — through the taxes we pay.

Communication Gap One Factor In GOP Legislative Rebellion

John

RALEIGH — During Gov. Jim Martin's first term in office, Republican legislators frequently complained about problems communicating with his administration.

The situation is said to have improved, but the surprising GOP revolt against Martin's budget and tax programs was seen by some as evidence of a relapse.

"That working relationship between the Republican legislators has not been good," said Sen. Jim Johnson, R-Cabarrus. "There's a feeling, rightly or wrongly, among the Republicans that they talk to the governor but he doesn't hear them."

Martin has endorsed the $8.6 billion highway construction bill crafted by his administration and a legislative study commission. It seeks a 5 1/4 cents-per-gallon gasoline tax increase and a 2 percent automobile title transfer fee.

He also has called for a 1-cent sales tax increase to fund a 6 percent pay raise for teachers and state employees and implementation of the career ladder incentive plan for teachers.

The tax increases would be the two biggest in state history. Although a few Republicans grumbled a bit about the highway bill, most apparently were willing to support it. But when Martin came forward with the sales tax proposal, the pot boiled over.

Twenty-eight representatives and two senators unveiled a counter-proposal last week. It would raise money for Martin's highway and salary programs by cutting more than $600 million in spending.

The governor did not brief GOP legislators on the sales tax plan until the day he made it public — which also was the day Democratic leaders got their first look.

That, Republicans say, is the problem. "There is a basic assumption Martin makes that is not correct, and that is if you are a Republican you're automatically signed on to go down with the ship," Johnson said.

As Martin noted at a news conference Thursday, some Republicans are "congenitally" opposed to tax increases and probably would not have supported him in any case. But others say if they had been brought into the discussions earlier, they could have warned the governor about the storm his proposed sales tax would generate and might have persuaded him to look elsewhere for revenue.

"I would say that some of this input would have been helpful to him ahead of time," said Rep. Trip Sizemore, R-Guilford.

'The governor did not brief GOP legislators on the sales tax plan until the day he made it public — which also was the day Democratic leaders got their first look. That, Republicans say, is the problem.'

Sizemore and Reps. Larry Etheridge, R-Wilson, and Art Pope, R-Wake, masterminded the development of the alternative budget.

Martin says the Republican plan would cripple state government. Yet there is bipartisan agreement in the General Assembly that all the fat has not been trimmed from the budget.

Senate Democratic leaders say they are putting together a salary package that will raise as much money as Martin's without raising the sales tax — possibly by combining spending cuts with taxes on "luxury items" such as alcoholic beverages.

If Martin had consulted more with GOP lawmakers, might he have come up with a more palatable plan?

The governor says no, insisting that he would not have called for tax increases if not convinced they were the only feasible option. He defended his decision not to tip off his Republican allies sooner, saying to do would have risked a damaging leak before he was ready to go public.

"I had been talking with individuals and small groups for several weeks, but if I had made a proposal to them and detailed what the proposal would be, you (reporters) would have had it two weeks earlier," Martin said.

He drew laughs at a news conference with a description of how one legislator complained that no one had asked him whether he supported Martin's proposal.

"I said, 'All right, are you for it?'" Martin related. "You know what he said? He said, 'I don't know.'"

The governor has at least two factors on his side, observers say. First, the legislative session is relatively young. He has time to lobby the Republicans and bring them back to fold, a process he began last week with a series of Executive Mansion meetings.

No matter how unhappy the GOP lawmakers are, many realize they owe their seats in the Legislature to Martin's popularity and party-building efforts. They also know how much they'll need him campaigning on their behalf in next year's legislative election.

Secondly, although Democrats are gloating over Martin's predicament, they have yet to come up with their own program.

"If we are not successful in doing at least some of the things we set out to do, certainly there will be abundant time for criticism then," Martin said. "It'll be very hard for that criticism to come from the Democrats if they undermine what we're trying to do."

IN THE STATE

Robot Surgery

CHARLOTTE (AP) — A swivel-armed robot likely will perform minor surgery in the McGuire nuclear plant later this week.

The robot's arm would reach into a damaged steam generator in the plant and snip out a section of ruptured tube.

The tube mysteriously split open March 7, shutting down Unit 1 and causing one of the worst tube-failure accidents ever at a U.S. nuclear plant.

The section will be sent to a laboratory in Lynchburg, Va., where the cause of the split will be studied.

Until the diagnosis is done, Duke Power Co. and the Nuclear Regulatory Commission won't know for sure why the tube fractured.

Body Found

RALEIGH (AP) — The body of a young woman who had been beaten beyond recognition was found Saturday off Poole Road in East Raleigh, police said.

The victim, a black woman in her mid-20s, was nude from the waist down and was found by a woman walking back from a convenience store, said Capt. B.W. Peoples.

Police made a tentative identification, but declined to release the victim's name until her identity could be confirmed.

Mill Fire

DURHAM (AP) — A weekend fire ruined about $250,000 worth of socks and stockings at the Jay Hosiery Mill, fire investigators said.

Two brothers were arrested at the mill Saturday night and charged with looting, police said.

The fire was reported early Saturday by a passing motorist, said Durham Fire Battalion Chief J.M. Beck. Flames broke through the roof and it took firefighters more than an hour to get the fire under control.

Edward Morris, 22, and Bobby Morris, 20, both of Durham, were charged with looting. Police seized 150 pairs of socks from two boxes.

Intruder Shot

BESSEMER CITY, N.C. (AP) — A Bessemer City woman at home with three young children shot a man to death during a break-in at her house, police said.

Mark Christopher Mitchen, 26, of Bessemer City died of gunshot wounds to the head and chest, said Don Conrad, acting Gaston County medical examiner.

No charges were filed, police said. Bessemer City police say Paulette Ellis shot an intruder about 3:40 a.m. after he refused to identify himself and began to approach her.

Youth Injured

DURHAM (AP) — A 9-year-old Durham County boy was in serious condition Sunday after a homemade explosive he had concocted blew up in his face, investigators said.

Timothy Ellis Jr. was being treated at Durham County General Hospital after the Saturday morning explosion.

Lt. W.L. Lawrence of the Durham County Sheriff's Department said the boy apparently had taken several shotgun shells apart and poured gunpowder into a glass jar, then threw a match into the jar.

"He was looking down on it, and the explosion hit him in the face," Lawrence said. The jar shattered, he said, sending glass flying.

Hunt For Waste Disposal Site Centers On Piedmont

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — The search for a regional low-level radioactive waste disposal site will be concentrated in about 9 1/2 percent of North Carolina, particularly the Piedmont, according to a new report.

The report, which shows 3.2 million acres of the state that might be suitable for a waste site, was scheduled to be released at today's meeting of the N.C. Low-Level Radioactive Waste Management Authority. The authority is in charge of finding a disposal site for North Carolina and seven other Southeastern states by Nov. 15, 1990.

Most of the acreage is concentrated in the Piedmont, with some scattered locations in flat parts of the mountain region and dry parts of the Eastern Coastal Plain, according to Ebasco Services Inc., which prepared the report.

"It must be recognized that there may not be licensable sites within every candidate area shown on the map," the report said. "However, these are the regions within the state where subsequent investigations will be focused."

Ebasco eliminated most of Wake and Durham counties in an earlier screening because of a rule against considering places with densities greater than 500 people per square mile.

When asked about the newest map, the authority's executive director said there was still plenty of territory to choose from.

"You are still talking about 5,000 square miles," Tenney Deane Jr. told The News and Observer of Raleigh. "They are still very broad areas."

"Candidate area' is just another term for a higher probability for finding a technically suitable site," he said in an effort to calm jittery local officials.

"We don't want people to think it's them, because no one has considered who they're are."

The authority is responsible for overseeing the location, construction and operation of a facility where low-level wastes from North Carolina and the seven other Southeast Compact states will be sent beginning in 1993 for a period of up to 20 years.

Low-level wastes include irradiated trash from nuclear power plants and radioactive isotopes from hospitals and laboratories. Such debris is now buried in special landfills, but North Carolina regulations will require the use of more sophisticated structures to guard against leaks.

Last November, Ebasco ruled out about 62 percent of the state during a preliminary survey. That first pass used state and federal guidelines to exclude flood-prone and urban areas, municipal wells, parks, military reservations and places with high water tables.

While all of the remaining 38 percent is still under consideration at this point in the search, the second pass identified a subset of areas to examine with greater scrutiny, Deane said.

The Greensboro consultant used smaller-scale maps to find ineligible features — such as creeks, ponds or swamps — that did not show up in the first screening.

It also began considering "suitability factors," including slopes in excess of 10 percent, that are not grounds for exclusion under state or federal regulations but must still be considered in site selection.

Other examples are coastal areas that could be flooded in the future if the sea level rose 15 feet in response to climatic changes, or places with limestone geology that is prone to caves or sinkholes.

The consultant will begin further refining his list of sites by looking for features such as cemeteries, historical properties and still smaller streams and ponds, Deane said.

After a spring and summer of further scrutiny, the authority is expected to select at least two 500-acre candidate sites for a year of individual study. The current timetable calls for a final site to be selected by Nov. 15, 1990.

The 15-member state panel is also hoping to hear from volunteer communities willing to offer suitable land for the project in exchange for incentives.

Last November, the General Assembly's Joint Select Committee on Low-Level Radioactive Waste encouraged the authority to give priority to volunteered sites and to utility-owned land near nuclear power plants.

Mavretic's House Committee Plan May Face Trial By Fire This Week

By John Flesher
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — Critics of a new committee system designed by House Speaker Joe Mavretic are likely to vent their unhappiness when a parental-consent bill for abortion reaches the House floor Wednesday or Thursday, observers say.

"They (Mavretic's team) came in here with all this stuff about fairness," said Rep. Billy Watkins, D-Granville. "Their fairness apparently meant it was fair to do what they wanted to do."

Last week, a meeting of the House Judiciary Committee broke up in disarray after the chairman refused to delay a vote on requiring parental consent for abortions performed on girls under age 18.

Critics pointed to the controversy as evidence that the new committee structure is flawed. Defenders replied that allies of former Speaker Liston Ramsey are engaging in guerrilla tactics to make the system fail.

"This was an example of one of the concerns I have about the new committee system, and I think you're going to see other examples pop up as the session moves on," said House Majority Leader Dennis Wicker, D-Lee.

The day after Mavretic was elected speaker, he unveiled a new system modeled after that of the U.S. House of Representatives. He condensed 58 committees into 12 and established 50 standing subcommittees, 20 of which have Republican chairmen.

As Mavretic envisioned them, the seven-member subcommittees would study bills in depth and iron out technical problems. They would report to the full committees, which would discuss the bills in a broader, more philosophical context and send them to the floor with a recommendation for approval or rejection.

The parental consent for abortion bill was referred to the Judiciary Subcommittee on Courts and Administrative Hearings, which discussed it at two meetings. The full Judiciary Committee conducted one formal public hearing, at which citizens were allowed to testify for and against it. At another full committee meeting, public testimony was allowed and members questioned some of the witnesses.

Last Thursday's meeting was the only one devoted entirely to debate by the full committee. As it turned out, most of the discussion dealt with the technical definition of abortion — which supposedly was settled by the subcommittee — instead of the parental-consent issue.

When Chairman Roy Cooper, D-Nash, called for a vote as the meeting hour ended, refusing calls to delay action until next week, opponents exploded in anger, saying they wanted to continue the debate and ask more questions.

Under the old system, ad-hoc subcommittees would be created to study complex bills that needed special attention. Sometimes, referring a bill to subcommittee became a polite way of killing it.

Cooper acknowledged in an interview the new system has "kinks" that need to be worked out, but said it will succeed if members cooperate. He said the parental consent bill was a difficult and unusual test case.

"It has been debated before the House since 1980 and has passed the same language," he said. "There was no question in my mind that people knew how they were going to vote and were ready to vote."

Under the old system, he noted, there would have been four full judiciary committees, only one of which would have handled the parental consent bill. Thus, fewer representatives could have discussed the bill in committee than were allowed to under the new system.

A committee member who feels there was inadequate discussion before a vote "has the same problem when, for example, he's not on the Commerce Committee and sees the bill for the first time on the floor," Cooper said.

But while critics acknowledge a subcommittee and full committee should not duplicate each other's work, they say it's unfair to force a full committee to give inadequate scrutiny to a bill before sending it to the floor.

"The subcommittee is absolutely useless if you have a controversial issue," Watkins said. He charged that Mavretic invented the subcommittee as "a ploy to utilize the Republicans that he sold out to, so he'd have enough positions for them to think they're in a position of importance."

Underlying the dispute, Cooper says, is the simmering feud between the Mavretic and Ramsey factions in the House Democratic delegation.

"I think there are representatives who want to see the new process and committee system fail," he said. He noted that Mavretic's committee chairmen also are drawing criticism for the session's slow pace and the relatively small number of bills that have reached the floor.

"In committee, you can ask one technical question after another 'til doomsday," Cooper said. "The time comes when you have to vote."

Arrival Of Spring Ends Winter Of Odd Temperature Swings

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

North Carolina soon will be awash with the color of blooming azaleas and dogwoods, and only memories of an odd winter will remain.

Spring arrived at 10:28 a.m. today, bringing to an end a winter of abrupt temperature and precipitation swings.

The season changes the moment the earth tilts sufficiently to create the illusion that the sun has moved north of the equator, bringing longer days and warmer weather. At the same time, the sun's warm rays diminish in the Southern Hemisphere, where autumn begins.

"We had a whole winter compressed into a period of about two weeks," said John Valentine, a meteorologist at the National Weather Service forecast office at Raleigh-Durham International Airport.

Temperatures were mild from mid-December through mid-February, and the state was dry. Less than an inch of rain and only a trace of snow fell on Greensboro during January.

Hydrologists and agricultural officials began fretting about a fifth year of withering drought.

Farmers "really do need to be concerned about getting some replenishment here in the next few weeks," Greg Johnson, agricultural meteorologist at N.C. State University, said in late January.

The warm, dry weather stopped in mid-February. On Feb. 15, the mercury soared to a record-breaking 78 degrees in the Triad, giving joggers, construction workers and sun worshipers all the excuse they needed to strip down to the bare necessities and frolic outside.

Early the next day, though, temperatures began a steep drop as a mass of cold air that had built over Alaska for weeks finally made it to the East Coast. By Feb. 17, high temperatures had dropped into the 30s and the snows began.

Wet, cold weather has been the rule ever since. "In mid-February, we started getting into a more normal storm track," said Ed Brotak, an atmospheric scientist with the University of North Carolina at Asheville.

Through Feb. 16, a mere 1.61 inches of precipitation had fallen during 1989 at Piedmont Triad International Airport. Over the next 21 days, 5.98 inches fell. Included in that was 13.3 inches of snow — second only to snowfall accumulations in February 1979. Meteorologists calculate that 10 inches of snow will melt down to an inch of water.

White House Pups Reported 'Doing Fine'

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — First Dog Millie and her litter of six pups were reported to be doing fine after a weekend delivery at the White House, and the Bushes even got congratulated on the new arrivals at a Palm Sunday church service.

The First Family — with the six new canine arrivals — spent a quiet Sunday close to home after the 2-year-old brown and white English springer spaniel gave birth to one male and five female puppies on Friday night and early Saturday.

The Bushes have said they will give away the puppies, with some of them to go to grandchildren. White House aide Bruce Zanca said Sunday that the pups were expected to remain at the White House with Millie for about six weeks.

President and Mrs. Bush attended an early morning worship service at St. John's Episcopal Church on Sunday, a block from the White House, then spent the rest of the day at home.

"Congratulations on the puppies," the Rev. Mark K. J. Robinson, a rector at the church, said as he greeted them.

Millie lost neither her appetite nor her energy from the ordeal and was eating "several times as much as usual" and bounding around the White House grounds, according to Mrs. Bush.

The president, who joined his wife to watch one of the six puppies delivered, described the experience on Saturday as "really beautiful, it was unbelievable."

"The president and I cried when we saw one of them being born. ... We had a tear. It was really sweet," Mrs. Bush said. "It was so beautiful to see her."

She added that the puppies are "really cute." She said it had been an easy delivery and that, while she played midwife, Millie "did all the work."

"Millie is apparently a very good mother," said Anna Perez, Mrs. Bush's press secretary. "The puppies started nursing immediately. Mom and babies and midwife are doing fine."

Seven Oil Rig Workers Missing After Blast, Fire

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW ORLEANS — An offshore oil drilling platform burned early today after explosions on it and an adjacent rig injured at least 10 crewmen and left seven missing, the Coast Guard said.

One rig was still ablaze this morning, said Coast Guard Chief Mike Robling. Fires on the other rig, connected to the burning one by a catwalk, were extinguished a few hours after they started Sunday evening, he said.

Robling said a search was under way for the missing crewmen in the chilly Gulf of Mexico waters about 70 miles from here near the mouth of the Mississippi River. Five of the missing men work for Atlantic Richfield Co., which operated the rigs, and two are contractors, said ARCO spokesman Earl Sims in Dallas.

The cause of the explosions has not been determined but will be investigated by the Marine Safety Office, the Coast Guard said.

"I just don't know of any specific operations at the time of the explosion that would have caused this," Sims said. "The damage is extensive."

Ten of the injured were taken to West Jefferson Hospital in Marrero, a New Orleans suburb. Eight of them were burned, including two who were in critical condition; and the other two suffered multiple injuries, said spokeswoman Beth Dutcher.

Coast Guard Petty Officer Bob

Morehead said 13 injuries were confirmed but he did not know where the other three men were taken for treatment. Sims said he knew of only 10 injured crewmen, the ones at West Jefferson Hospital.

Cmdr. Gerry Donohoe, pilot of one of the helicopters which took some of the injured to the hospital, said when he left the area flames were still shooting high from one rig.

"It looked like the entire rig would be down to the waterline by tomorrow," he said Sunday.

"One crewboat was shooting water, trying to put the fire out, but it probably won't help much," he said. "It couldn't get very close."

He said he landed on one of the other oil platforms in the immediate area, where crewboats were taking the injured and others, including some who apparently jumped into the water.

Shuttle Astronauts Return To Work

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SPACE CENTER, Houston — Discovery's astronauts, fresh after a day of "R&R," today were briefing NASA on their mission, which the shuttle apparently weathered better than its predecessors.

Discovery remained at Edwards Air Force Base, Calif., where high winds hampered crews working Sunday to get the craft ready for its ride atop a jumbo jet to Florida. Officials, however, expected it to leave on time Friday.

After their desert landing at Edwards early Saturday, the five astronauts spent the rest of the weekend with their families.

They were going back to work today, briefing the space agency on the shuttle's performance and the experiments conducted during the nearly flawless five-day mission, said Steve Nesbitt, a Johnson Space Center spokesman.

A preliminary examination indicated only 10 thermal protection tiles will need to be replaced, in contrast to the last shuttle flight, in December, when nearly 200 tiles were severely damaged.

"This is one of the best yet," said Cindy Lodge, who works on the shuttle's tile system. "We've had no major damages, there's a few dings ...

around the nose cap, nothing severe at all."

The tiles shield orbiters during the fiery re-entry into Earth's atmosphere.

Five tiles were damaged when wires connected to a tire pressure monitor snapped as the right main landing gear dropped, Ms. Lodge said. Only one of those five tiles will need to be replaced, she said.

The brakes, which have caused problems during previous shuttle landings, also performed well, engineers said.

"The brakes looked the best ever. No signs of any heat; there was no damage whatsoever," said NASA's Tip Talone, who coordinates processing of the orbiter for each flight.

The mission ended with a picture-perfect landing that was watched by a near-record crowd of 460,000.

Five hundred people cheered the astronauts' return to Houston later in the afternoon.

"We've had one fun time and we really enjoyed this flight," said mission specialist James F. Buchli, who had been on two previous Discovery missions.

The flight was commanded by Michael L. Coats, who had flown one previous shuttle mission. The other crew members — pilot John E. Blaha and mission specialists Robert C. Springer and James P. Bagian — made their first voyages.

Discovery's flight, the 28th shuttle mission, was the third since Challenger exploded shortly after liftoff on Jan. 28, 1986. Seven astronauts died in the explosion, which brought shuttle flights to a halt for nearly three years.

Discovery blasted off from Cape Canaveral, Fla., a week ago today. Six hours into the mission, the crew accomplished its primary mission — the deployment of a $100 million communications satellite.

The satellite completes a network that will enable the National Aeronautics and Space Administration to have nearly constant contact with space shuttles and other satellites.

The astronauts also photographed the Earth. Their film will be edited into a movie that will document environmental damage by man and nature.

Four rats that were aboard as one of the experiments, were killed shortly after touchdown so researchers can study how their intentionally cut legs healed in microgravity. Many of the 32 fertilized chicken eggs that were aboard will be allowed to hatch to see how space affected embryo development.

Atlantis Is Set For Next Shuttle

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — Now that NASA has completed its third straight successful post-Challenger shuttle flight, Atlantis will be rolled to the launch pad Wednesday for a mission that will include a planetary probe.

Packed in Atlantis' cargo bay for the scheduled April 28 liftoff will be the Magellan Venus spacecraft, the first planetary probe to be carried by a space shuttle and America's first planned planet flight since 1978.

Magellan is to be released from the cargo bay. After 466 days, it is to orbit Venus and map its cloud-shrouded surface with high resolution radar.

Discovery's return to Earth on Saturday following a successful five-day mission buoyed the National Aeronautics and Space Administration's ambitious plan to launch seven shuttles this year as it continues its recovery from the 1986 Challenger explosion and builds toward a launch rate of 12 a year by 1992.

"Our goal is to fly again and again," with safety always a prime consideration, said Richard Truly, shuttle program director.

He said Discovery returned in better condition than any other shuttle and that bodes well for maintaining a vigorous launch schedule.

Truly said one stumbling block may be the extensive modifications being made to Columbia, the oldest shuttle. That shuttle's July 1 target launch date with a classified military payload already has slipped about two weeks.

Any additional holdup could push back another military shuttle flight planned in August, and that could begin affecting the high priority October launch of Atlantis with the Galileo probe to Jupiter.

"We want very much to launch Columbia in July," Truly said. "If not, we'll delay it to meet the Galileo window."

"This is the third successful flight of the space shuttle since we returned to flight," Truly said after Discovery landed Saturday. "It shows again what a marvelous and capable vehicle this is."

It also demonstrates, he said, that NASA has the capability of flying a busy and safe launch rate.

Magellan and Galileo are high-priority missions because there is only a month or so every two years when their planetary targets are in the proper alignment for a launch.

Here's the launch schedule for the remainder of the year:

April 28 — Atlantis, with the Magellan-Venus spacecraft.

Mid-July — Columbia, with a Defense Department payload.

Mid-August — Discovery with a Defense Department payload.

Oct. 12 — Atlantis, with the Galileo-Jupiter spacecraft.

Nov. 13 — Columbia, whose crew is to deploy a communications satellite and retrieve for return to Earth a scientific satellite orbiting since 1984.

Dec. 11 — Discovery, with the Hubble Space Telescope.

Ten flights are scheduled in 1990.

Tanker Sinks

TOKYO (AP) — A Liberian chemical tanker sank after burning for six days off the coast, with all 23 of its crew members still missing, the coast guard said.

A Maritime Safety Agency official said the 23,038-ton Maasgusar broke in two on Sunday and sank, leaving a 700-foot-wide sheet of fire on the water's surface for about an hour, a coast guard official said.

The official, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said no trace had been found of the 23 crew members — 19 Filipinos, three Britons and an Irishman.

He said water in the area, about 235 miles southeast of Cape Inubozaki, was about 18,480 feet deep and it would be difficult to raise the ship.

The tanker had been heading for South Korea from Houston when it was discovered on fire in the Pacific early Tuesday.

DEA Wants Sales Of Assault Weapons Halted

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Senior federal officials disagree over how fast and far the government should go in urging gun manufacturers to follow the example of Colt Industries Inc. and stop nonmilitary sales of semiautomatic assault rifles.

The head of the Drug Enforcement Administration, John Lawn, on Sunday urged an end to such sales, but drug czar William Bennett and Attorney General Dick Thornburgh advised caution.

"I thought that was a very courageous action on the part of Colt. Guns are dangerous; law enforcement is suffering because of these guns," Lawn said on the CBS-TV program, "Face the Nation."

"I am asking them to (take this action) on behalf of the officers who are in danger every single day, because a police officer dies every 37 hours in this country," he said.

Colt announced that it was suspending sales of its AR-15 semiautomatic rifle starting last Thursday, the day after President Bush decided to ban temporarily the import of foreign-made assault rifles.

Bennett and Thornburgh urged a broader approach to combating illegal narcotics and said there are limits on what the government can tell private manufacturers of semiautomatic weapons.

"This is not a dictatorship," Bennett said on CBS. "We do not tell people how to do their business."

But in a separate appearance on the NBC-TV program, "Meet the Press," Bennett said: "I think we can make the case that we don't need a whole lot more assault rifles on our streets right now."

Bennett also said "we have to get ... the person who is sometimes called the casual user. One expert in this field has told me that 70 percent of the cocaine that's used in this country is used by the so-called recreational user, the yuppie user."

That person, Bennett said, "needs to realize ... the kinds of things he's responsible for — the murder and mayhem that's going on in Washington, the fact that we have babies now being born addicted to cocaine, the murder of DEA agents in other countries."

"These people are accessories to all those things, and they need to start paying a price for that ... If you're using cocaine and driving around in your BMW, when you get stopped you lose your BMW. There are ways we can make people pay the price and help them recognize what they're doing to the nation's children."

Thornburgh cautioned against believing that "gimmicks" could stop drug abuse.

"If we think that the only way to deal with the drug problem is to ban a particular type of weapon, we're dead wrong," Thornburgh said on the ABC-TV program, "This Week with David Brinkley."

Addressing the issue of drug use in nation's capital, Bennett said he had not yet decided whether to declare the federal district a "high intensity drug trafficking area," enabling him to assemble a government strike force to fight drug dealing in Washington.

As of Sunday, 118 murders had been reported in Washington in 1989, a record rate, and police say that nearly all are drug-related.

The Washington Post, quoting unidentified Bennett aides, said Sunday that the strike force would target repeat drug offenders, try to shut down the city's 90 open-air drug markets, and use abandoned military facilities as temporary prisons for drug offenders.

"We are looking at whether we should do that or not," Bennett said.

Asked whether he was bothered by allegations that Washington Mayor Marion Barry was involved with cocaine, Bennett replied, "Well, sure it troubles me. I think it troubles everybody."

"If you've got all these allegations going around, it hurts the credibility of Washington. But I don't think we have to be so dainty as to say, 'Well, if we have disagreements or problems with the mayor, we're going to ignore the city.'"

Barry's alleged repeated, private meetings at a Washington hotel last year with a man since arrested on cocaine dealing charges have put the mayor's own behavior under scrutiny.

Barry was asked on ABC whether he used drugs.

"Absolutely not," he said. He brushed aside persistent questions about whether he would resign, saying, "The issue is not Marion Barry."

Thornburgh declined to discuss allegations against Barry, saying "those are all matters that are under investigation by the United States attorney's office in Washington and, obviously, I'm not going to comment on them."

Poll Shows Doubt S&L Crisis Will Be Solved

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Americans widely expect the federal government to fail in its search for a lasting solution to the savings and loan crisis, a national survey by Media General and The Associated Press has found.

The poll of 1,108 adults also revealed a considerable lack of confidence in the beleaguered S&L industry: Only half the respondents called thrifts safe and a third of those with S&L deposits feared losing their money.

Half those surveyed favored greater government regulation of the industry, and a majority preferred bailing out failing thrifts to closing them. But most opposed having the public bear the brunt of the costs.

Federal insurance is insufficient to cover accounts at the estimated 350 savings and loans that are failing, and the government so far has taken over 166 of them while Congress and the White House devise a rescue plan. The nation has 2,955 savings and loan associations in all.

President Bush has proposed using $50 billion in government-backed bonds to help cover the accounts, in addition to $40 billion pledged last year to sell or prop up failed thrifts. But in the poll just 27 percent said the government should pay most of the costs of salvaging the industry.

Crowd Jeers Family Of Slain Teen-Ager

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

VALLEY STREAM, N.Y. — An angry crowd chanting "Devil!" drove away family members from their house, where authorities said the body of a neighborhood teen-ager had been found two weeks earlier.

The dead girl's uncle, Robert Player, said Sunday that neighbors will "never allow these people to ever live here again."

More than 40 people taunted the Golub family outside the Long Island residence where the body of Kelly Tynyas, 13, was found March 4.

The Golub family returned to the house Saturday night for the first time since investigators ordered them out.

"Monsters! Seed of the devil! Get out," jeered members of the crowd, which included the dead girl's father, Richard Tynyas.

Ms. Tynyas was seen entering the Golub home March 3, but was never seen leaving. Her body was found in the basement, authorities said. Investigators had ordered the Golubs to vacate their house because it was the scene of the crime.

Police have said the only two suspects in the case were the two Golub brothers, Robert, 21, and John, 14, but no arrests have been made. The Nassau County district attorney plans to present evidence to a grand jury on Wednesday.

The two-hour verbal assault on the family began when Robert Golub left the house on foot and was followed by Richard Tynyas and an angry crowd.

A Nassau County police spokesman, Officer Charles Koller, said a patrolling officer saw Golub being followed and called for assistance.

When Golub reached a grocery store about six blocks from his home, some of those following repeatedly called him a "devil."

Eight police cars arrived, and officers protected Golub as he left the store with his older sister, Adele, who had come to pick him up in a car.

The shouting continued, with one member of the crowd calling out to Ms. Golub, "You are a devil for being with him."

Ms. Golub yelled back, "My brothers were innocent," then broke into sobs.

As neighbors continued to shout outside the home, Robert, Adele and John and their mother, Elizabeth, left the house and drove away.

About 10 minutes later, their father, John Sr., left in a separate car, to the applause of the crowd.

The Golubs' destination was not known, said Koller.

The family's lawyer, John O'Grady, said: "They pay taxes on the house there, so why shouldn't the Golubs go back home? Where else are they supposed to go? ... Should they be deprived of going home?"

He said the family had not requested police protection.

One neighbor, Jack DeLuca, told reporters: "We're not vigilantes; we would not have killed them. We are aware they have due process of law. But based on the circumstantial evidence, how could you just come back?"

Wright Accuser Has Own Book Published

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Republican political activists and business people from across the country contributed $105,000 to an unusual limited partnership that then paid to promote a book co-authored by Rep. Newt Gingrich, according to a published report today.

Gingrich, R-Ga., has been a chief accuser of House Speaker Jim Wright in an ethics investigation focusing on issues including a book deal for the speaker. Gingrich also is a candidate in this week's Republican race to become House minority whip.

The Washington Post reported today that Gingrich and his co-authors of a 1984 book set up the limited partnership that raised money for a promotion budget.

The Post said Gingrich asked the newspaper if he could delay his responses to its queries because a story that described his book deal as "equally as weird as Jim Wright's" would be to his "disadvantage" before the vote for minority whip, the No. 2 Republican leadership post in the House.

Bush Edgy Over 'Go-Slow' Image Of White House

By Merrill Hartson
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Two months into his presidency, George Bush is struggling with perceptions that he hit the ground walking and chose a style of governance constrained by worry about policy stumbles.

Bush has gone out of his way, in recent speeches and exchanges with reporters, to drive home the message that the only treadmill he's on is the exercising machine he uses in the White House residence.

He chafed at suggestions by critics that his go-slow strategy on East-West relations gives Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev the upper hand in world public opinion, saying "I am not going to be pushed into speedy action because Mr. Gorbachev gives a compelling speech at the United Nations."

He undertook an almost painstaking explanation of why he ordered time-consuming reviews of both foreign and defense strategy, saying "we've got to map a strategy." But administration officials acknowledge that Bush's pre-inaugural decision to conduct such reassessments contributed to an image problem once he settled into office.

Bush said Thursday that he moved quickly to defuse such "ticking time bombs" as America's endangered savings and loan industry. But he also said getting the nation ready for the 1990s and beyond is "what my (long-term) agenda is all about."

Speaking in this same context earlier in the week, he told insurance executives that "I want to be a president who is remembered for preparing our country for the next century."

The administration has been beset in recent weeks with a spate of news reports, often quoting both Democratic and Republican political experts, saying Bush has adopted a too-cautious leadership style. Because of this, the notion went, he missed the opportunity history has afforded new presidents get to establish an agenda in their first 100 days in the White House.

Bush confronted such talk head-on during a question-and-answer session with reporters on March 14 in which he denied the administration was "adrift." The president also argued that he had moved as quickly as Ronald Reagan, in 1981, to choose people for top-level jobs.

What followed was an unmistakable White House campaign to blunt any continuing talk of an aimless presidency.

"I'm particularly amused by the notion that the Bush administration must do all kinds of things in our first hundred days," Vice President Dan Quayle told the National Press Club. "We're succeeding an administration of our own party at a time when the country is in good shape ...

"The notion of the '100 days' came in with Franklin Roosevelt, who took over a country in the depths of a depression," he said.

James David Barber, a presidential scholar at Duke University, disagreed.

When Bush talks about vision, he asked, "Does that mean anything? When he says something, hang loose until he does it. Drug war? Where is it? Education president? When?"

Thomas Edmonds, a Republican political consultant, said Bush "has got to satisfy the public's need to see accomplishments taking place."

"It's not enough to be just a statesman. You have to be a politician as well," he said. Edmonds noted that Reagan successfully used television frequently to "visually demonstrate forward motion" — even if little was being done.

Stephen Studdert, a special assistant to Bush who helps plan the president's activities and concerns himself with the president's image, said: "I think the 60-day report card is probably going to be pretty tough. But I think the 365-day report card is going to be a better barometer."

White House officials say Bush has moved forthrightly with his domestic policy agenda, noting that in addition to proposing a rescue plan for the troubled S&Ls, he has continued to seek a budget compromise with Congress and sent lawmakers his legislative proposals on such issues as child care and the minimum wage.

One official, discussing Bush's strategy on grounds of anonymity, acknowledged, however, that presidential aides recently scrapped the "theme-a-week" strategy used early on — ethics one week, budget the next, drugs the next, and so forth.

The official said the unpredictable flow of news events, and the extent to which a president's visibility is often dictated by these occurrences, made it impractical to try to sustain a single theme through a week's time.

Frank Greer, a Democratic consultant, said Bush had "a good inaugural" and had set a constructive tone in his statements about seeking bipartisan consensus on major issues.

But he said the Bush White House "wasted tremendous political capital" on the enervating battle to win confirmation of former Sen. John Tower as secretary of defense.

"History has shown that the first 100 days will prove the tone and the effectiveness of a new administration, and he's wasted two-thirds of it," Greer said. "And I think what you're headed for is a weak presidency."

How They Voted

WASHINGTON — Here's how area senators were recorded on major roll call votes in the week ending March 10. There were no House votes.

TO REJECT JOHN TOWER — By a vote of 47-53, the Senate rejected the nomination of John G. Tower as the Bush Administration's secretary of defense, following six days of floor debate over his fitness to direct the American military.

Tower, 63, was a GOP senator from Texas between 1961-85 and an arms control negotiator during the Reagan administration. The Democratic majority's case against him centered on his history of heavy drinking and charges that as a defense consultant in recent years he may have parlayed sensitive arms control information into private financial gain.

Minority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., said Tower was the victim of unsubstantiated charges. He said the Senate had allowed itself to become "a pipeline for gossip and smear, a peddler of rumors and leaks, a partisan hotbed of character assassination...."

Majority Leader George Mitchell,

D-Maine, who voted against the nominee, said "Senator Tower's financial relationship with a number of defense contractors immediately after his service as chief arms negotiator raised serious and troubling questions about his ability to distinguish private and public interests."

Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., voted for Tower and Sen. Terry Sanford, D-N.C., voted against Tower.

TO CONFIRM WILLIAM BENNETT — By a vote of 97 for and 2 against, the Senate confirmed William J. Bennett to lead the Bush Administration's anti-drug effort. Bennett, 45, becomes "drug czar" after serving as former President Reagan's education secretary.

Supporter Alfonse D'Amato, R-N.Y., said Bennett "has the courage, dedication and intellectual honesty that this most important job requires."

Referring to Bennett's record as education secretary, opponent Paul Simon, D-Ill., said "I expect from the new drug czar a blizzard of press releases but not much action."

Both Helms and Sanford supported Bennett.

Hollywood Takes Care Of Its Own At New Complex

By Burt A. Folkart
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

LOS-ANGELES — Nearly seven decades ago, a handful of film stars who were more concerned with their colleagues' well-being than with their own careers envisioned a place where those who make movies — be they mechanics or matinee idols — could live their final years in a spirit of comfortable camaraderie.

From that long-ago gathering came the Motion Picture Relief Fund and its credo "We Take Care of Our Own."

As of March 5, what has grown to be the sprawling Motion Picture Country House and Hospital will be taking even better care of its own.

A $25 million hospital and health center was dedicated at the scenic 41-acre Los Angeles facility where one-time stars mingle with scenarists, and comics with craftsmen.

The dedication would have gladdened the hearts of Mary Pickford, Charlie Chaplin, Douglas Fairbanks Sr. and D.W. Griffith, the first celebrities to gruffly the now-legendary retirement home where anyone with 20 years of work in the film industry can spend his or her final years in comfort, regardless of the individual financial situation.

"It's not a home, it's like a resort," said Fayard Nicholas, once half of the Nicholas Brothers terpsichorean team that tap dance enthusiasts will remember for their flying feet and spectacular splits.

Nicholas, now 74, has lived there with his wife for five years "after getting tired of being burglarized" in their West Hollywood apartment. Because of the fund, he was able to get corrective surgery for a hip condition that once had him saying, "I can dance better than I can walk."

Mae Clarke, the still-feisty and fiercely independent star of the 1930s who will forever be the gun moll smashed in the face with a grapefruit by James Cagney in the 1931 classic "The Public Enemy," is another resident, as is Hal Elias, a former producer and governor of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences.

But in the main, those who may someday benefit from the new 80-bed, three-story hospital addition that will serve the critically ill and the convalescing are the electricians, grips, sound technicians, film editors and scores of other behind-the-scenes unknowns who made Hollywood what it was and is.

The new facility includes a pharmacy, surgical suite, dental offices, outpatient medical center, radiology department, and physical, occupational and recreational therapy units.

The opening of the hospital building was the beginning of a plan that extends burgeoning health facilities and eventually double hospital capacity. The eventual cost will total $50 million, of which $35 million already has been raised.

Much of the money came from those within the industry, from studio heads and studios themselves and from businessmen who became more interested in reaching for their checkbooks after hearing personal appeals for help from some of Hollywood's biggest names.

The fund drive was coordinated by producers Robert Blumofe and Walter Seltzer and presided over by Edie Wasserman, wife of MCA Chief Executive Lew Wasserman.

She has spent 10 years as the unofficial "Mother Superior" of the campus, and it was a personal experience that first brought her there.

"My mother was 95, and we were thinking about admitting her," she said. "But the visiting hours were inconvenient and there were no phones in the rooms and it just wouldn't have worked. So we kept her home, but I remember thinking 'there's some things there that need fixing.' So I decided to fix them."

Besides the hospital and health center, the Motion Picture and Television Fund operates a retirement village, an outpatient medical center in Hollywood and a state-of-the-art Alzheimer's care center.

Substance abuse programs have been established while the fund provides more than 20,000 visits each year to film veterans who are in need of financial or psychological support beyond the constant care given the residents of the home itself.

There is a dining room, a theater donated by Louis B. Mayer, and a lodge with 42 rooms established by Samuel Goldwyn's widow, Frances. And there are the 58 cottages where most residents live.

Stan Freberg, adman, humorist and now memoirist

Freberg Wears Many Hats: Adman, Humorist, Memoirist

By Michael Kernan
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

When President Reagan left office, the familiar White House scene in "Donesbury" collapsed with a Fffwumppp! It was nothing but a backdrop.

Garry Trudeau may be a great cartoonist, but the gag belongs to a man named Stan Freberg.

In his landmark '60s record, "Stan Freberg Presents the United States of America," memorized complete with sound effects by an entire generation of Americans, the British lose the Revolution because of a backdrop painting of a huge army, done by "the Rockwell kid."

After Cornwallis surrenders, George Washington shouts, "Strike the war set!" and the thing rolls up like a window shade, Fluplupluplup.

OK. The Smothers Brothers had a skit about Washington crossing the Delaware: He was unable to decide which cutely named little boat to take. That gag belongs to Freberg too.

In fact there is a whole cult of humor based on a foppish Washington and his wig ("Is it me?") and his wooden teeth: New Yorker cartoons, "Saturday Night Live" skits, Second City gags.

It all originated, laugh for laugh, with Stan Freberg.

Paul McCartney was asked in 1985 where the Beatles got their wild, somewhat anarchic humor. Lenny Bruce, he said. And Stan Freberg.

How about this: Writers Stephen King and David Mamet described, unknown to each other, the single event that unleashed their imaginations, that showed them they could produce whole worlds, whole solar systems, in the infinite reaches of the mind.

It was the same event, a radio sketch in which Lake Michigan is drained and filled with hot chocolate, a 700-foot mountain of whipped cream and a 10-ton maraschino cherry, dropped from a bomber to the cheers of 25,000 extras.

Guess who wrote the sketch. Let's not fool around: In the '50s and '60s, America's sense of what was funny came straight from a genius named Stan Freberg.

Today everyone who remembers the famous cop show "Dragnet" also remembers that Freberg — what, blew it away? immortalized it? — with his lamppoon, "St. George and the Dragonet."

"The legend you are about to hear is true," intones the dead-level cop voice. "Only the needle should be changed to protect the record. This is the countryside. My name is St. George. I'm a knight." And so on.

The record sold 1 million copies in three weeks.

It was very large in Australia, too, though the Jack Webb show had never been seen there. After the series did arrive, an excited Aussie rushed up to Freberg to tell him, "Some bloke has built a whole television show around your record!"

The notorious "John and Marsha" radio bit, consisting entirely of two breathy voices moaning, shouting, whispering those names in turn, scandalized some people who insisted Freberg must have put a mike under a honeymoon bed.

The song "Green Christmas" features Scrooge as an ad man, a chorus of "Deck the halls with advertising ..." 'Tis the time for merchandising ... and winds up with "Jingle Bells" played on cash registers.

Wife Gives Tips To Other Woman

Dear Abby: This is in response to "Heartsick in Illinois," whose husband used their bed at home to have an affair. She urged readers contemplating an affair to have the decency to do it somewhere other than their own bed. And you advised her to do everything in her power to forget.

I, too, am married to a man who had an affair, and during the past two years I've come a long way with the help of a therapist. I have learned much and would like to pass along some additional advice for women who are having — or have had — affairs with married men.

Even among thieves there is a code of ethics, so if just one "other woman" heeds a few of these suggestions, it will go a long way toward helping the wife "to forget." We human beings, just like lower forms of animal life, have our territorial rights. The more of these territories violated by an intruder (another woman, in this case), the harder it is for the wife to forget.

Advice To Other Women
(Once the wife knows about the affair)

1. Don't write to the wife asking for compassion.
2. If you do write, don't send it to the wife's place of employment, as this may be her one haven of escape.
3. If you haven't already violated the wife's home, don't send mail there, either. This goes for Christmas cards, too.
4. Don't continue to attend his softball games. But if you choose to ignore this advice, at least don't sit next to his wife.

5. Don't join his church, of which his family had been active members for many years. (We now no longer attend.)

6. Don't move into his neighborhood.

7. If you decide to leave the husband's workplace, don't take a job where his wife works. Then, if you leave the wife's company and return to your former employer, if you've requested an assignment in a different department than the husband's, be big enough to stand by that request if management asks you to work with him again.

8. Don't join the fitness center where the wife has worked out for several years.

9. Don't talk with his children, pretending that they don't know about you.

10. Don't stand behind the wife in the grocery store checkout line; busy yourself in the produce department until she has left the store.

11. Don't kid yourself that no one at work or among your mutual friends noticed what was going on between you.

12. Don't glibly tell the wife that you have forgiven yourself, forgetting that forgiveness does not include responsibility for your offenses, or thinking that it means all is forgiven and forgotten.

Thank God, I don't have to forget about the violation of my bed, but I'm still trying to forget about the above listed violations — all of which happened to me.

Protesters Arrested

RALEIGH (AP) — Ten anti-abortion demonstrators were arrested Saturday and charged with trespassing after they blocked the entrance to a clinic where abortions are performed.

The demonstrators were carried to a bus while about 30 other demonstrators picketed with anti-abortion signs in front of the Women's Health Organization Inc. office.

So, Abby, continue to advise the wives to get therapy. It helps. And, please, advise the "other women" to accept the end of the affair — when it's over — and to show some sensitivity to someone who has been deeply hurt. She's already been violated enough. — Much To Forget In Allentown

Confidential To The Great Dane: When he (or she) says, "I think we should both start dating others" — it's the beginning of the end.

If you would like to write to Abby, send your letter to Abigail Van Buren, P.O. Box 69440, Los Angeles, CA. 90069. For a personal, non-published reply, enclose a self-addressed stamped envelope.

She Tries To Answer: What's In A Name?

By Paul Newberry
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — It began as a college thesis but evolved into a lifelong obsession for University of Alabama professor Virginia Foscue.

Her new book, "Place Names In Alabama," lists some 2,700 towns, counties, rivers, creeks and mountains in dictionary form and explains how they acquired their names.

There's everything from Abanda — an acronym for railroads that used to run through the Chambers County settlement — to Zip City, a Lauderdale County community which picked up its name in the 1920s from speeding cars on their way to Tennessee where booze could be purchased legally.

"In many cases, names are the only thing left that tells you the history about a place," said Ms. Foscue, who has been teaching English at Alabama since 1963. "It's possible to deduce a number of things about an area from its name."

The 55-year-old professor is a master of onomastics, the study of the origin, form, meaning and use of proper names. Her area of study is Alabama.

"A number of counties are named for former presidents of the United States or revolutionary war heroes," she said. Washington and Jefferson counties are examples that come quickly to mind.

Many communities picked up their names from their first postmaster or a prominent family in the area. Other names came from old Indian words, European settlers, Greek mythology, the Bible or a historical event.

Here are some examples:
— Loachapoka, a town in Lee County, got its name from the Creek words "locha" (turtle) and "poga" (killing place).

— Penitentiary Mountain acquired its name in 1734 from a stagecoach stop on the Lawrence County summit which also served as a holding cell for prisoners on their way to Tuscaloosa.

— Graball, a community in Henry County, supposedly got its name from a surprise raid conducted by law officers on an illegal chicken fight in town. During the raid, a gambler is reported to have said, "Grab all the money and run!"

— Royal, a settlement in Blount County, was named after a "battle royal" that took place nearby during the Civil War between the Union forces of A.D. Straight and Confederate troops under Nathan Bedford Forrest.

Ms. Foscue said it was impossible to get every Alabama name into the book.

"It would take two years of full-time work for one person to do each county," she said. Considering Alabama has 67 counties, "obviously no one person could do it."

"With this kind of book, most of what I did was consult what other people had already done," she said, pointing out the 16-page list of references at the end of the book. "If I was doubtful of the explanation they gave, I would find people in the counties ... who might be good sources of information."

To narrow the list of names for her book, she studied the 1966 U.S. Geological Survey Base Maps of Alabama for names of the state's counties, cities, towns, communities, mountains, valleys, capes, islands, rivers, creeks, lakes, bays, lagoons and sounds.

She updated her list with some 240 towns and communities and 20 lakes which were not on the geological survey but did make the 1983-84 Alabama Highway Department map.

"The hardest part was selecting all the possibilities," she said. "I ended up with a number of names that I included in the book, as well as hundreds of others that I couldn't include."

For example, one of Ms. Foscue's favorite Alabama names isn't in the book. Lily Flagg, a small village that has been assimilated into Huntsville, did not meet the qualifications for inclusion.

"It was named for a cow that had won a lot of prizes for its butter-milk," she said with a laugh. "Whenever we finish the whole state of Alabama, we'll give Lily Flagg some attention."

The first seeds of her obsession with onomastics were planted by her father while she was growing up in Sumter County (which, by the way, was named for Thomas Sumter, a Revolutionary War general).

"My father was from Demopolis," she said. "He used to get so disgusted when people would (mispronounce the name)."

The passion remained dormant until 1957, when her English professor at the University of Alabama, I. Willis Russell, encouraged her to write her master's thesis about place names in her home county.

"Once I started, I could never think of a name without thinking about what it means," she said.

In 1973, Ms. Foscue began compiling place names with the help of her graduate students and others. The effort, which five years later became known as the Place Name Survey of Alabama, will be part of a national study now being conducted under the guidance of the American Name Society.

"Friends of mine are now doing extensive studies of other counties that will be included in the study itself," she said.

In addition to Russell, Ms. Foscue gave a bulk of credit for her book to James B. McMillan, former chairman of the university's English Department.

"He knew what the procedure was," she said. "Through the years when I had any difficulties, I could call on him and he would always help. I could not have done this without both of them."

Ms. Foscue said her work is far from over.

"It's something I can keep adding to," she said. "I might not live to see the finished product but I hope there's much more I can do."

MRS. GRAHAM

Wedding Vows Said Saturday Afternoon

The wedding ceremony of Deborah Wendi Overby and Douglas Charles Graham took place Saturday at 2 p.m. in Jarvis United Methodist Church.

The bride is the daughter of Dr. and Mrs. William R. Hoots Jr. of Greenville and Mr. and Mrs. Jerry Overby of Raleigh. The bridegroom is the son of Wallace Graham of Harrisonville, Mo.

The double-ring ceremony was conducted by the Rev. Norman A. Hicks, uncle of the bride. Organist Justin Sturz and vocalist Marjorie Green, aunt of the bride, presented wedding music.

The bride was given in marriage by Larry Overby. Gayle Terry Palmer of Creedmoor was matron of honor. Christy Miller of Rocky Mount was bridesmaid. Both are cousins of the bride.

The father of the bridegroom was best man. Ushers were Craig Overby of Greenville, brother of the bride, and Scott Graham of Tappahannock, Va., brother of the bridegroom.

The bride wore a white waltz-length gown of satin. The neckline was Victorian, accented by schiffli lace and the fitted bodice was beaded with pearls and sequins. The Renaissance sleeves had sheer cut-outs trimmed with seed pearls. The basque waistline extended into an A-line skirt. Lace appliques accented the low V back of illusion. She wore a low V back pearls with a pouf illusion extending into a two-tiered veil. The bride carried long-stemmed roses and a Bible.

The attendants wore midnight blue iridescent tea-length gowns. The three-quarter-length sleeves extended to a point and the necklines were boat-shaped in front. The dresses had fitted bodices and dropped waistlines. The hemlines were high-low. Each carried a lace fan trimmed with flowers.

A reception was held at the home of the bride and a rehearsal dinner was held at Sweet Caroline's Restaurant Friday evening. The bride's family entertained at a miscellaneous shower.

After a wedding trip to Williamsburg, Va., the couple will live in South Korea where the bridegroom serves in the U.S. Army. The bride attended Rose High School and Pierce College.

times from the record. Some radio stations simply banned it.

"The Los Angeles Times ran a Christmas-morning editorial," Freberg says, "calling it anti-business, anti-Christmas. I got hold of the guy who wrote it, and he said actually he'd never heard the song. But he knew all about it."

A few years later, Freberg reports, Time magazine planned an essay on the overcommercialization of Christmas, with his record as the focus. The essay never ran. "The sales department put pressure on the editors," the writer told him.

Freberg is fond of saying, "My records aren't released — they escape."

Swift's humor wells up from a profound anger, and so does Stan Freberg's. Not that he sees himself that way. It's just that he's one of those fiercely intelligent people who has had to develop a certain patience over a lifetime of suffering fools, a perfectionist in a world that seems determined to remain imperfect. He wears a permanent scowl, rather attractive with his scrambled gray hair and horn rims.

He is delighted to find a fan who can quote his lines back at him, lines now a quarter-century old. "They're in every city, I run into 'em all the time." He is uneasily aware that "radio doesn't exist as I knew it," but it's still his favorite medium, even though "TV, video, is exciting, the optical effects you can get."

Time has become an irritant. He wants his picture taken from above

so it won't show his jowls. He tells of hearing some teen-agers gabble, "Did you know Paul McCartney was in another group before he was in Wings?"

Most of all, one senses, he resists the homogenization of taste at a level dictated by yahoo ad executives. This is why, no doubt, he went into advertising, home base of the mendacious and unscrupulous merchant: If you can't join 'em, beat 'em. (And win 21 Clio awards.) It is also why he named his memoir "It Only Hurts When I Laugh."

The recently published first volume only goes up to 1963, shortly after he had launched his advertising career. But you get the idea.

One 1956 campaign was for Contadina tomatoes, for which he wrote a jingle, "Who Puts Eight Great Tomatoes in That Little Bitty Can?" Then he had a skit involving some silly business with a 300-foot can of tomato paste on top of the Empire State Building.

The client flipped. Where were the recipes? Why didn't he put down Hunt's, their big rival? What would the food brokers say?

The brokers hated it. The salesmen hated it. But the company president, the only one who had laughed at the presentation, ordered the commercial to run.

Of course, disc jockeys everywhere loved the ridiculous dialogue, talked about it constantly, and Contadina sales rocketed. Advertising Age called it one of the two best marketing stories of the year.

Then there was the Crown Zellerbach ad where a man sticks a roll of Zee paper towels in a player piano to see if it will play "Japanese Sandman." (It doesn't. It plays the Zee jingle instead. "See," the man says, "I told you it wouldn't play 'Japanese Sandman.'")

And the Butter-Nut Coffee ad that had executives screaming because it specifically pointed out that the company had taken five years to produce an instn't handle it so sold so well that the packing machinery couldn't handle all the orders.

And the other Butter-Nut commercial that ran over 6 minutes — the longest commercial in history and turned out to be a complete musical comedy named "Omaha!", a parody of "Oklahoma!"

Butter-Nut sales quadrupled.

Remember the Suitsweat prune ads, "Today the sun ... tomorrow the wrinkles?" Remember the Chun King chow mein in cans with little wire handles like a take-out container? And the line about buying a second can for when you got hungry an hour later? And the boast that only 5 percent of the people buy Chun King? This was Freberg's policy of "more honesty than the client had in mind," and it made owner Jen Paulucci so mad he bet Freberg a rickshaw ride that it wouldn't work.

There is a photo in the book of multimillionaire Paulucci pulling Freberg up La Cienega Boulevard in a rickshaw.

Freberg also got a lot of static from the people at Kaiser Aluminum for his ads in which a grocer gets whopped with a cartoon mallet because he won't stock the product.

Engagement Announced

Hilda Turner and Donnie Letchworth, both of Greenville, announce the engagement of their daughter, Kimberly Dawn Letchworth, to John Lawrence Boseman, son of Clarice Boseman of Princeton, W.Va. An April 8 wedding is being planned.

Tar Heels Overcome Bruins In 2nd Half

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ATLANTA — Kevin Madden said the loss of leading scorer J.R. Reid to suspension didn't have any effect on his play or that of North Carolina on Sunday.

Madden, who averaged 14.6 points during the season, scored 22 points for the fifth-ranked Tar Heels, who overcame a 10-point first half deficit to beat UCLA 88-81 and advance to the NCAA Southeast Region semifinals.

North Carolina, 29-7, will meet No. 10 Michigan next week in Lexington, Ky. The Wolverines defeated South Alabama 91-82 in the second round opener on Sunday.

"It was the same as if J.R. were here," Madden said. "I don't think anybody had to step forward to make up for J.R.'s absence. It was just a team thing."

"If we had J.R., I think we would have played with more confidence," said Steve Bucknall, who added 19 points for the Tar Heels. "But in the second half, we just got together and said so what if our best player is not here. Why let him down. Let's play basketball, execute and we'll win."

North Carolina, which trailed 51-41 late in the first half, took its first lead of the second half when Madden made two free throws for a 76-75 lead with 5 minutes left and never relinquished it.

The victory gave North Carolina coach Dean Smith the 667th of his career, tying him for sixth-place on the all time list with former UCLA coach John Wooden.

Smith, however, said he was not aware of the record and didn't want to talk about it.

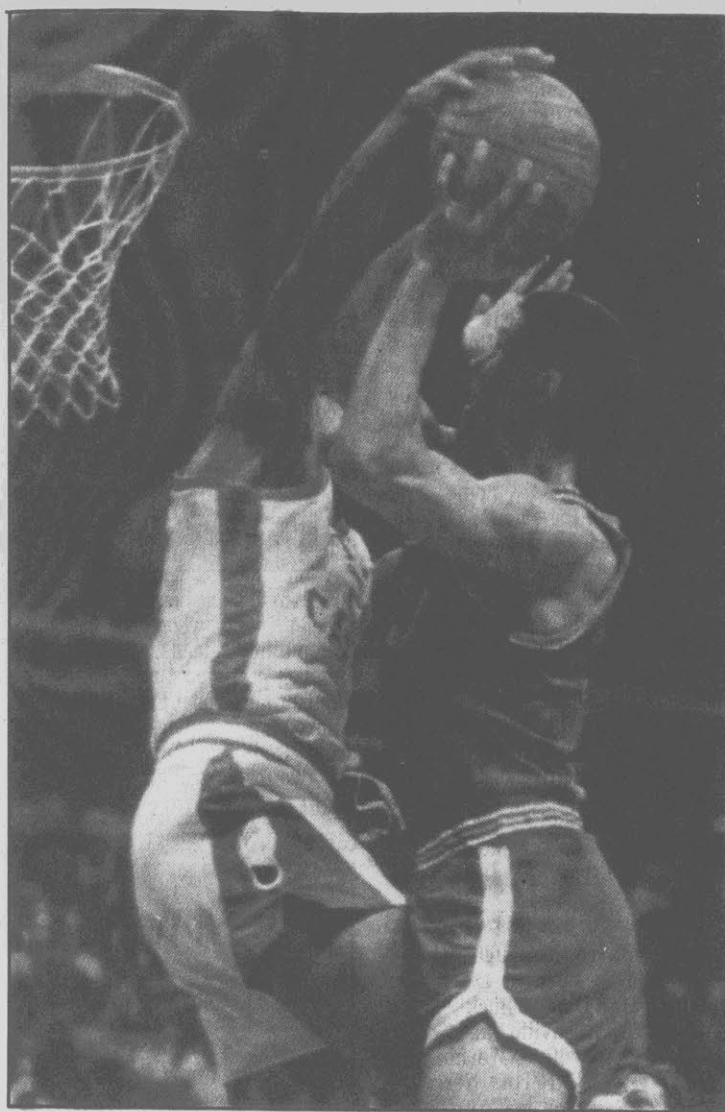

"Let's talk about the 29 victories this year. They are the sweetest ever and let it go at that," he said.

North Carolina built its margin to 80-75 on two free throws by Bucknall, who scored 13 of his 19 points in the second half and UCLA never got closer than 84-81 on a 3-point goal by Pooh Richardson with 1:06 left.

"We scared them," said Richardson, remembering a 104-78 loss in December to North Carolina in Chapel Hill. "What was it supposed to be, a 20-point blowout they were supposed to beat us by today? Well, we almost got them."

Rick Fox, who replaced Reid in the starting lineup after the junior center-forward was suspended Saturday for one game after missing curfew, scored 18 points as all five Tar Heel starters were in double figures.

Wolfpack Triumphs In Double Overtime

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PROVIDENCE, R.I. — North Carolina State Coach Jim Valvano gets angry when Rodney Monroe misses: He didn't get angry with his top scorer Sunday.

Monroe, whose baskets sent the game into both overtimes, scored 11 of his career-high 40 points in the second overtime, giving 19th-ranked North Carolina State a 102-96 NCAA tournament victory over 14th-ranked Iowa.

"He has the shooter's mentality," Valvano said. "When did Rodney feel he was hot? When he woke up this morning."

"When it leaves his hand, I think it's going in. I get very mad at him when it doesn't."

"I'm a very confident shooter," said Monroe, the Wolfpack's leading scorer during the season. "It's something I work very hard on."

The Hawkeyes worked very hard on stopping the sophomore guard.

"I didn't realize he is so lethal from outside," Iowa guard Roy Marble said. "He just got hot and there was nothing you could do but get him farther from the basket. I've never seen a player shoot like that."

Both Monroe's shots that sent the game into the overtimes came off picks against a tight defense.

"I would prefer to take the easy shot," Monroe said. "It just seemed like their weren't any easy ones out there today."

N.C. State, 22-8, meets second-ranked Georgetown, 28-4, next Friday in the East Regionals at East Rutherford, N.J. The top-seeded Hoyas beat Notre Dame in Sunday's first game, 81-74.

Monroe gave N.C. State the lead for good, 86-85, on a 3-point basket with 4:00 left in the second overtime. With the score 88-87, he connected on a three-point play that made it 91-87 with 3:06 remaining.

After Iowa's Wade Lookingbill sank two foul shots, Monroe hit another 3-pointer, building the lead to 94-89 with 1:18 to go. A 3-point field goal by Marble gave Iowa a 96-92 lead with 47 seconds left, but Monroe hit two free throws with 36 seconds left, giving the Wolfpack a 98-92 advantage.

The closest Iowa came after that was 98-94 on B.J. Armstrong's jumper with 28 seconds left, but Mickey Hinnant and Chris Corchiani made two foul shots each for N.C. State before Monroe scored with three seconds left.

"This was one of our better games of the year, and it's such a tough loss because we had it in our hands one or two times," said Iowa Coach Tom

Sutton Is Stepping Down

Embattled Kentucky Coach Announces Resignation

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LEXINGTON, Ky. — One day after vowing not to step down as basketball coach at the University of Kentucky, Eddie Sutton did just that.

Saying he didn't want the university "to suffer anymore" from the backlash from rumors about his status in college basketball's winningest program, Sutton stepped down Sunday.

He made his announcement on national television, several hours after informing UK President David Roselle of his decision and just a day after he vowed not to resign.

Sutton, 53, said at a news conference that the constant flow of "vicious" rumors about his position at the university prompted him to resign before too many people were hurt.

"I know how important basketball is to the people of the state, and I've decided for the good of the program, for the fans, for the players and most of all for my family, I should resign at this time," he said.

"I don't want the University of Kentucky to suffer anymore."

Roselle, in a separate news conference, commended Sutton for his action.

"I appreciate Coach Sutton's willingness to put concern for the University of Kentucky basket-

ECU Tops Dukes, 7-2

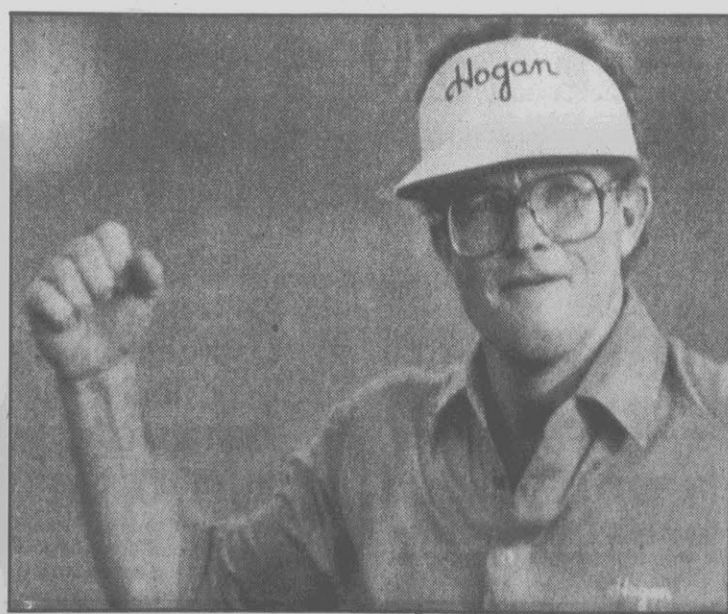

HARRISONBURG — Jonathan Jenkins ran his record to 5-0 by scattering six hits over eight innings to lead East Carolina to a 7-2 win over James Madison in collegiate baseball action Sunday.

Jenkins pitched seven scoreless innings before JMU pushed across two runs in the eighth, only one of which was earned. That broke a 24 1/3 scoreless-inning streak for Jenkins, who ran his career mark to 10-0.

Tom Moye, a former Rose High standout, finished up for Jenkins in the ninth and set the side down three straight to close out the win.

The win moved ECU to 12-2 overall and 2-1 in the Colonial Athletic Association while JMU fell to 12-5 and 1-2.

Tom Kite gestures after sinking the final putt for the win

Kite Takes Players Win

2nd Straight Win Answers Questions For Veteran

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PONTE VEDRA, Fla. — That's two and counting for Tom Kite.

"Why not make it three in a row?" caddy Mike Carrick asked Sunday after Kite's second consecutive victory — and the biggest of his career — in the Players Championship.

Kite survived a knuckle-gnawing scare, when an aggressive shot flirted with the water, to nail down the annual championship of golf's touring pros, an ambitious event seeking a stature equal to that enjoyed by the game's Big Four tournaments.

Although a frequent contender, the veteran Kite has yet to win the Masters, U.S. or British Opens or the PGA. He quickly embraced the concept of the Players as a major.

"There's been so much talk about 'Tom Kite has done this and done that but he's never won a major,' so you're going to have a tough time convincing me that this isn't one," he said.

Yet he couldn't help looking ahead three weeks to the first major of the year, the Masters at Augusta, Ga.

"After this, you can't help but feel good about the Masters. I just wish it was tomorrow," he said.

Instead, he will travel to New Orleans and the USF&G Classic and the attempt to become the man to win three consecutive PGA Tour titles since Gary Player in 1978.

That shot at a little bit of Tour history was set up by his playoff decision in the Nestle Championship two weeks ago and his one-stroke triumph on the wind-raked TPC course at Sawgrass.

The two victories came by decidedly different means. In the Nestle, Kite made a double bogey from the water on the 72nd hole, then won the playoff when his opponent three-putted for bogey.

In this one, he won by compiling the only sub-par round recorded by the leaders, a 1-under-par 71.

Waltrip Takes Second Win With Motorcraft Victory

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

HAMPTON, Ga. — Some people thought Darrell Waltrip might go quietly into the twilight years of his racing career.

But the 42-year-old Waltrip, the winningest driver over the last 12 years, says he never had any intention of going out quietly, despite a two-year slump that let other people take most of the headlines in NASCAR stock car racing.

Now, after victories in the season-opening Daytona 500 and Sunday's Motorcraft 500 at Atlanta International Raceway, nobody is mentioning retirement — least of all Waltrip.

"It took two years for this team to really get its act together," Waltrip said of his Hendrick Motorsports crew. "I was worried about that for a while. But, now I see it was worth the wait."

Waltrip, who now has two victories in three starts this season and 75 career victories, outraced fellow three-time Winston Cup champion Dale Earnhardt over the last nine laps to win Sunday's race by just six-tenths of a second in a battle of Chevrolet Monte Carlos.

"Those last two cautions really helped us out," Waltrip said. "I was worn out. My neck felt broken. The car got a little loose there toward the end because of the tires we had until the last (pit) stop."

Waltrip was running third, behind Earnhardt and Geoff Bodine, when Ricky Rudd's engine blew and Phil Parsons spun on lap 276 of the 328-lap race.

That gave the Franklin, Tenn., driver a bit of rest. Then, with Earnhardt apparently on his way to ending an 11-race winless streak, Bodine, Waltrip's teammate, slid sideways in turn four, was tagged by Rick Wilson and hit the wall, bringing out the sixth and final caution flag just 15 laps from the end.

Earnhardt and Waltrip dived into the pits for gas and new tires, while Winston Cup rookie Dick Trickle, the only other driver on the lead lap, remained on the 1.5-mile oval and assumed the lead.

Earnhardt was done first, leaving his pit in a hurry to try to beat Waltrip onto the track. Instead, Waltrip, in one of the end pits, just beat Earnhardt across the white line at the end of pit road to take second place under the caution flag.

"That was a fantastic pit stop there at the end," Waltrip said. "We made a small chassis change, got those new tires and got ahead of Dale."

"We pretty much knew that first out (of the pits) would win the race ... It wouldn't have even been close but that everybody on my team was so excited they were telling me to get going."

"I spun the tires a little too much. If I'd taken it easier, we'd have beat him out easy."

ECU Wins Lady Pirate Softball Classic

Renee Meyers pitched East Carolina to a 2-0 shutout victory over Virginia in the finals of the Lady Pirate Softball Classic Sunday.

ECU pushed across a run in the first when Leslie Cramer reached on an error that scored Wendy Tonker to make it 1-0.

The Lady Pirates went ahead 2-0 in the fifth when Cramer scored off a passed ball.

ECU reached the finals by defeating UNC-Wilmington 9-2 in quarterfinal play behind the pitching and hitting of Jennifer Sagl, who went 2-4 on the day. Laura Crowder also had two hits for the Lady Bucs, who scored seven runs in the fourth to overcome a 2-0 deficit.

In the next round, ECU took a 4-3 win over George Mason to advance to the finals.

Tracye Larkin was the winning pitcher for ECU, which scored two runs in the bottom of the seventh to earn the victory.

Mechelle Jones singled in Barb Schuler to tie the game at 3-3. Tonker then scored off a wild throw to give ECU the win.

The wins moved ECU to 9-5 overall.

Justice Takes 2nd At Coors Winterflight 8K

SALISBURY — Charle Justice, an East Carolina graduate student, took second place at the Coors Winterflight Eight Kilometer Race Sunday.

Justice recorded a time of 25:50.00 to finish just behind Brian Lessley of Greensboro, who recorded a time of 25:40.08. Third place went to Michael Walden of Salisbury who had a time of 25:56.

This was a race that was originally scheduled for January but had to be rescheduled due to a measles outbreak. It is the first race of the 1989 Tar Heel Tour.

Tripucka Hospitalized In Oakland

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) — Kelly Tripucka of the Charlotte Hornets was hospitalized Sunday for treatment of back spasms and possible kidney stones, the Hornets announced.

Tripucka missed the afternoon game against the Golden State Warriors and was expected to remain in Peralta Hospital overnight for treatment and observation.

Tripucka, the NBA's No. 12 scorer with an average of 22.7 points per game, had missed games at Denver and Seattle earlier in the week before scoring 18 points in 27 minutes against the Los Angeles Clippers on Friday night.

Guidry And Winfield Both Out With Injuries

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. (AP) — Dave Winfield left camp Sunday saying he would miss the start of the season and the Yankees said Ron Guidry had elbow surgery on Friday.

Both injuries turned out to be more serious than the team first said. Winfield's injury was first announced as back spasms but he said Sunday he may require surgery.

"I wanted to say hello to all the guys because no matter how you look at it I'm going to miss the opening part of the season," the 37-year-old Winfield said.

When asked if doctors know what is wrong with his back, Winfield replied, "They pretty much do. I don't want to get into it. There are only three ways to deal with it — rest and hope everything works out, rehabilitation and exercise, or I can have surgery. Which door is it?"

Winfield is confident that he will be able to play this year.

"With my physical shape and my mental approach, it's not season-threatening," he said.

Winfield led the Yankees last season with 107 runs batted in. He was second on the team with 25 homers and batted .322, including .347 with runners in scoring position.

To replace Winfield, the Yankees Sunday acquired Mel Hall from the Cleveland Indians for catcher Joel Skinner and minor-league outfielder Turner Ward.

Dunn Enters Spring As Tide Quarterback

TUSCALOOSA, Ala. (AP) — Jeff Dunn will be the starting quarterback when the Alabama football team opens spring drills Wednesday and he will have the starting slot in September, Coach Bill Curry said.

"Unless Jeff is injured between now and when we open the season, he's our starting quarterback," Curry said. "I don't see that changing."

The 6-foot-1, 200-pound junior from Page High School in Greensboro, N.C., was redshirted in 1986. He started the last six games in 1987 and two games last fall.

With the graduation of 1988 starter David Smith and backup Vince Sutton, Dunn and Gary Hollingsworth are the only two quarterbacks on scholarship this spring. And with Hollingsworth dividing his time between spring practice and baseball, Dunn will get most of the work with the first offense.

Crewman Gets Burned At Race

HAMPTON, Ga. (AP) — Robert Calicut of High Point, N.C., the gas man for longtime NASCAR star Richard Petty, was reported in critical condition Sunday after sustaining burns over 50 percent of his body in a pit fire during the Motorcraft 500 race at Atlanta International Raceway.

Calicut was engulfed in flames when gas ignited as he pulled the can away from Petty's car after filling the tank late in Sunday's 500-mile race.

It appeared that overflow from either the gas can or the car's tank fell onto the hot tailpipe of the Pontiac and ignited a ball of flame.

Calicut, 35, was flown by helicopter to Georgia Baptist Hospital in Atlanta for examination and treatment, then transferred to the burn center at Humana Hospital in Augusta, Ga.

Dr. Robert Fritz, a track spokesman, said Calicut was "alert, talking and stable" upon his arrival at the burn center. Fritz said most of the burns are second degree.

There were no other injuries reported in Sunday's race.

Warriors Looking To Playoffs

Golden State Tops Charlotte, Looks To Win Home-Court Advantage

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

OAKLAND, Calif. — A year ago, Golden State just wanted to go home for the summer.

Now the Warriors are looking to stay home to open the playoffs. What a difference a year makes — not to mention Coach Don Nelson, rookie Mitch Richmond and a rejuvenated Chris Mullin.

Golden State took a big step over the weekend toward gaining a homecourt advantage for the opening round of the Western Conference playoffs next month. Following an overtime victory over Atlanta on Friday night, the Warriors outlasted Charlotte 124-117 on Sunday for a 3-0 start to their five-game homestand.

The win lifted them into a fourth-place conference tie with Seattle, with the top four teams getting to play as many as three games in the best-of-five playoffs at home. Two games between the Pacific Division foes in the season's final week could determine the postseason schedule.

Nelson, meanwhile, is showing the first symptoms of a coach possessing the belief his team is playoffs-bound: reluctance to talk about it. It would take only eight more victories to reach the 45-win plateau he said five weeks ago would be good enough to qualify.

"We still have 18 games to go before the playoffs," said Nelson, who's concerned about the six-game Eastern road trip that starts Saturday.

"All I know is that this was a good win. We went back to our smaller lineup and it worked."

The Warriors' big men played a secondary role. Starting center Ralph Sampson had just three points and one rebound in 10 minutes.

It took a while for the Warriors to dispose of their expansion opponent before a capacity afternoon crowd of 15,025, their 17th sellout of the season.

Rod Higgins' four 3-point shots, Mullin's 27 points and Richmond's 23 points plus a season-high 12 rebounds enabled Golden State to overcome a slow start. A 10-2 run early in the final period built the lead to 106-96, and even Rex Chapman's late three-point play on a slam dunk over the 7-foot-7 Bol couldn't rally the Hornets.

The Warriors, 20-62 a year ago, improved to 10 games over .500 despite committing 20 turnovers.

"We played sluggishly all the way through," Richmond said. "I thought we had picked things up in the last three or four games, but today we weren't. We didn't play good defense and gave up easy baskets."

Nelson thought that had something to do with the play of the Hornets in their first appearance against Golden State.

"We tried to take their outside shots away from them, but they played really well," Nelson said. "I'm proud of them. They're an expansion team and they came in and played well on the road — that's good for the league."

Chapman scored 22 points, Kurt Rambis 19 and Robert Reid 18 for Charlotte, now 4-29 on the road. Tyrone "Muggsy" Bogues made his fourth start and tied his season high in assists with 14 for the second straight game.

The Hornets' leading scorer, Kelly Tripucka, missed the game after being hospitalized Sunday for treatment of back spasms and possible kidney stones.

"I was proud of the way our team played," said Charlotte coach Dick Harter. "We played like this the first 50 games and then had a lull. If we can finish like this, I will be very happy. It will be my most satisfying year in coaching."

The Hornets visit Sacramento tonight, while the Warriors host Portland on Tuesday night and Phoenix on Thursday night before beginning their road trip in Houston.

Hawks 113, Lakers 111

After losing some heartbreakers, the Atlanta Hawks found some solace at an unexpected source.

Glenn Rivers' 22-foot jumper at the buzzer Sunday night gave the Hawks a 113-111 victory over Los Angeles at the Forum, where the Lakers won 27 of their first 30 games this season. The Hawks snapped the Lakers' six-game winning streak and averted their seventh loss in 10 games.

"I thought we had a tremendous effort," Hawks coach Mike Fratello said. "Our guys didn't hang their heads when they fell behind. We've been in so many games down to the wire in the last ten, but couldn't find a way to get them. We wanted the last shot. It was either OT or a win at the buzzer."

Recently, the Hawks lost by two points at home to Utah and Phoenix and fell in overtime at Golden State. With the addition of Moses Malone and Reggie Theus, many believed Atlanta would win the Central Division, but it has been dominated by Cleveland and Detroit.

"We expected to win the division, but we're not going to do that," Rivers said.

In the only other NBA game, Cleveland defeated New Jersey 101-91, New York routed Milwaukee 128-104 and Golden State beat Charlotte 124-117.

With the score tied 111-111 after a layup by Magic Johnson with 10 seconds left, Rivers said the plan was for him or John Battle to take an outside shot.

"He got trapped down low and was able to get rid of the ball," Rivers said of Battle. "I was wide open and got off a good shot."

Dominique Wilkins had 33 points and Rivers added 27 for the Hawks, while Johnson had 29 points and 13 assists and Byron Scott 21 points for the Lakers.

Cavaliers 101, Nets 91

Cleveland pulled a game ahead of Detroit in the Central Division and handed New Jersey its seventh consecutive loss as Ron Harpe scored eight points during a 22-5 spurt in the third quarter.

Cleveland, which has the NBA's best record, fell behind 66-60 midway through the third quarter when Chris Morris capped an 11-3 New Jersey run with a three-point play.

Knicks 128, Bucks 104

New York snapped a 3-point shooting slump and forced 25 turnovers against a Milwaukee team that had committed a total of 23 in its previous three games.

The Knicks, who have 41 more 3-pointers than the previous single-season NBA record, were 5-for-30 in their previous three games before making seven of their first 12 against the Bucks.

Trent Tucker, who scored 15 of his 18 points in the first half, hit three and Wilkins added two during a 28-8 spurt that turned a 24-22 deficit into a 50-32 lead with 7:04 left in the first half. Tucker had 13 points and Wilkins nine during the burst, which ended with a 9-0 run — a 3-pointer by Wilkins followed by two from Tucker — in a 50-second span.

Scott Williams added 14 points and Jeff Lebo had 12 for North Carolina, making its 23rd NCAA appearance and 15th straight. It will be the Tar Heels' ninth straight trip to the final 16, losing last year in the quarterfinals to Arizona.

UCLA, 21-10, never led until Don MacLean hit a pair of free throws with 5:44 left in the first half for a 37-36 lead.

The Bruins, with Trevor Wilson scoring 18 first-half points, then ran it up to a 51-41 lead before Lebo hit a 3-point shot for the Tar Heels to narrow the margin to 52-44 at intermission.

UCLA shot 64 percent in the opening half, hitting 18 of 28 shots. But the Bruins made only 4 of their last 16 shots.

Madden and Lebo each had 11 points in the opening half for North Carolina.

Wilson led UCLA, which was in the NCAA's for the 25th time, but hadn't won a national title since capturing its 10th in 1975, with 21 points. Kevin Walker had 17 points, MacLean added 16 and Richardson had 14.

State Moves On ...

Davis, who suffered his first career loss in 10 first- and second-round NCAA tournament games.

Monroe beat his career-high of 37 points set this season against Nevada-Las Vegas. Corchiani and Brian Howard had 16 points each and Chucky Brown 14 for the Wolfpack.

Iowa, 23-10, was led by Ed Horton with a career high 32 points, Marble with 24 and Armstrong with 20.

Monroe sent the game into the first overtime with a 12-foot jumper from the right baseline that tied the score at 75 with four seconds left in regulation.

With 21 seconds to go in the second half, Brian Garner, who had been scoreless, sank two free throws to put Iowa on top 75-73. Iowa had scored seven consecutive points to take a 73-71 lead. But Monroe made a 14-footer in the lane to even the score with 1:08 remaining.

He connected again with a 12-footer from the left with four seconds remaining to send the game into a second overtime at 83-83. Marble's foul-line jumper had given the Hawkeyes an 83-81 lead with 41 seconds left in that period.

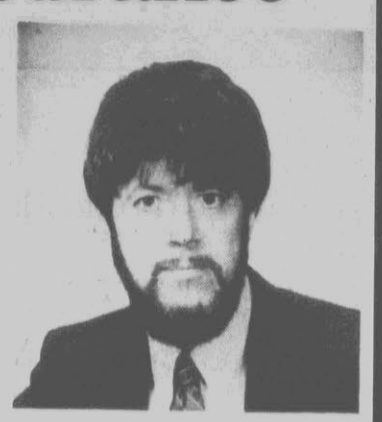

The score was tied 41-41 at halftime and Iowa led 56-53 with 12:38 left in the game after an 11-2 run in which Horton had six points.

But N.C. State responded with a 16-8 surge led by Monroe's seven points, all on free throws, to take a 69-64 lead with 6:18 remaining.

Indiana, Seton Hall Both Take Wins

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TUCSON, Ariz. — Indiana, a team that found itself in December, obviously has not lost sight of what college basketball is all about in March.

While other high seeded teams — Georgetown, Oklahoma and North Carolina — were narrowly avoiding early elimination, the Hoosiers were marching from Tucson to Denver at full speed.

Indiana, the No. 2 seed in the West, beat Texas-El Paso 92-69 on Sunday to secure a spot in the West Regional semifinals next week at Denver.

The Hoosiers, 27-7, will meet brawny Seton Hall, 28-6, an 87-73 winner over Evansville in the other second-round game at Tucson.

The Big Ten Conference champions opened the tournament with a 99-85 victory over George Mason, then took apart a UTEP team that figured to match up well with Indiana.

It never happened. Despite having three of its starters in foul trouble and on the bench for much of the first half, Indiana was in control throughout.

"They are better than they were in December," said UTEP Coach Don Haskins, whose team lost 81-63 at Indiana during a 13-game Hoosiers winning streak that turned the season around after a 3-4 start.

"We never did anything to make me believe that we had a chance," Haskins said.

Indiana, on the other hand, did just about everything right.

"We probably played today as well as we've played all season," Coach Bob Knight said of the 700th game of his career.

Freshman Eric Anderson scored 24 points and, along with Indiana's other bench players, carried the Hoosiers when leading scorer Jay Edwards, guard Joe Hillman and center Todd Jadow got in foul trouble.

Edwards, who played just 7½ minutes in the first half, finished with 17 points, Jadow added 14 and Hillman 12.

UTEP, 26-7, was led by Tim Hardaway with 20 points, most of them after the game was out of reach. Greg Foster scored 18 and reserve Mark McCall 12.

Indiana's defense keyed on Hardaway, holding him to six points in the first half. Knight said that went according to plan.

"They're a young team with the exception of Hardaway," Knight said. "We can really load up on him and that's what we were doing."

Seton Hall, in the tournament for the second straight year, wore down a smaller Evansville team with rebounding and defense in the final five minutes. Two offensive lapses crippled Evansville, which fell behind by 19 points early in the second half, then rallied behind its trio of 3-point-shooting guards.

Evansville went scoreless for almost eight minutes late in the first half and early in the second. Seton Hall built its lead from 44-41 to 60-41 in that stretch.

John Morton scored the final five points of the first half for Seton Hall, and Darryl Walker scored three straight layups during an 11-0 second-half start by Seton Hall.

Evansville cut the deficit to 74-73 with 5:06 left after a 13-0 run, but the Purple Aces then went dry again, failing to score the rest of the way.

A 3-point goal by Andrew Gaze and inside baskets by Gerald Greene sparked Seton Hall's 13-0 spurt down the stretch.

Morton had 17 points, Walker 16 and Gaze 15 for the Pirates.

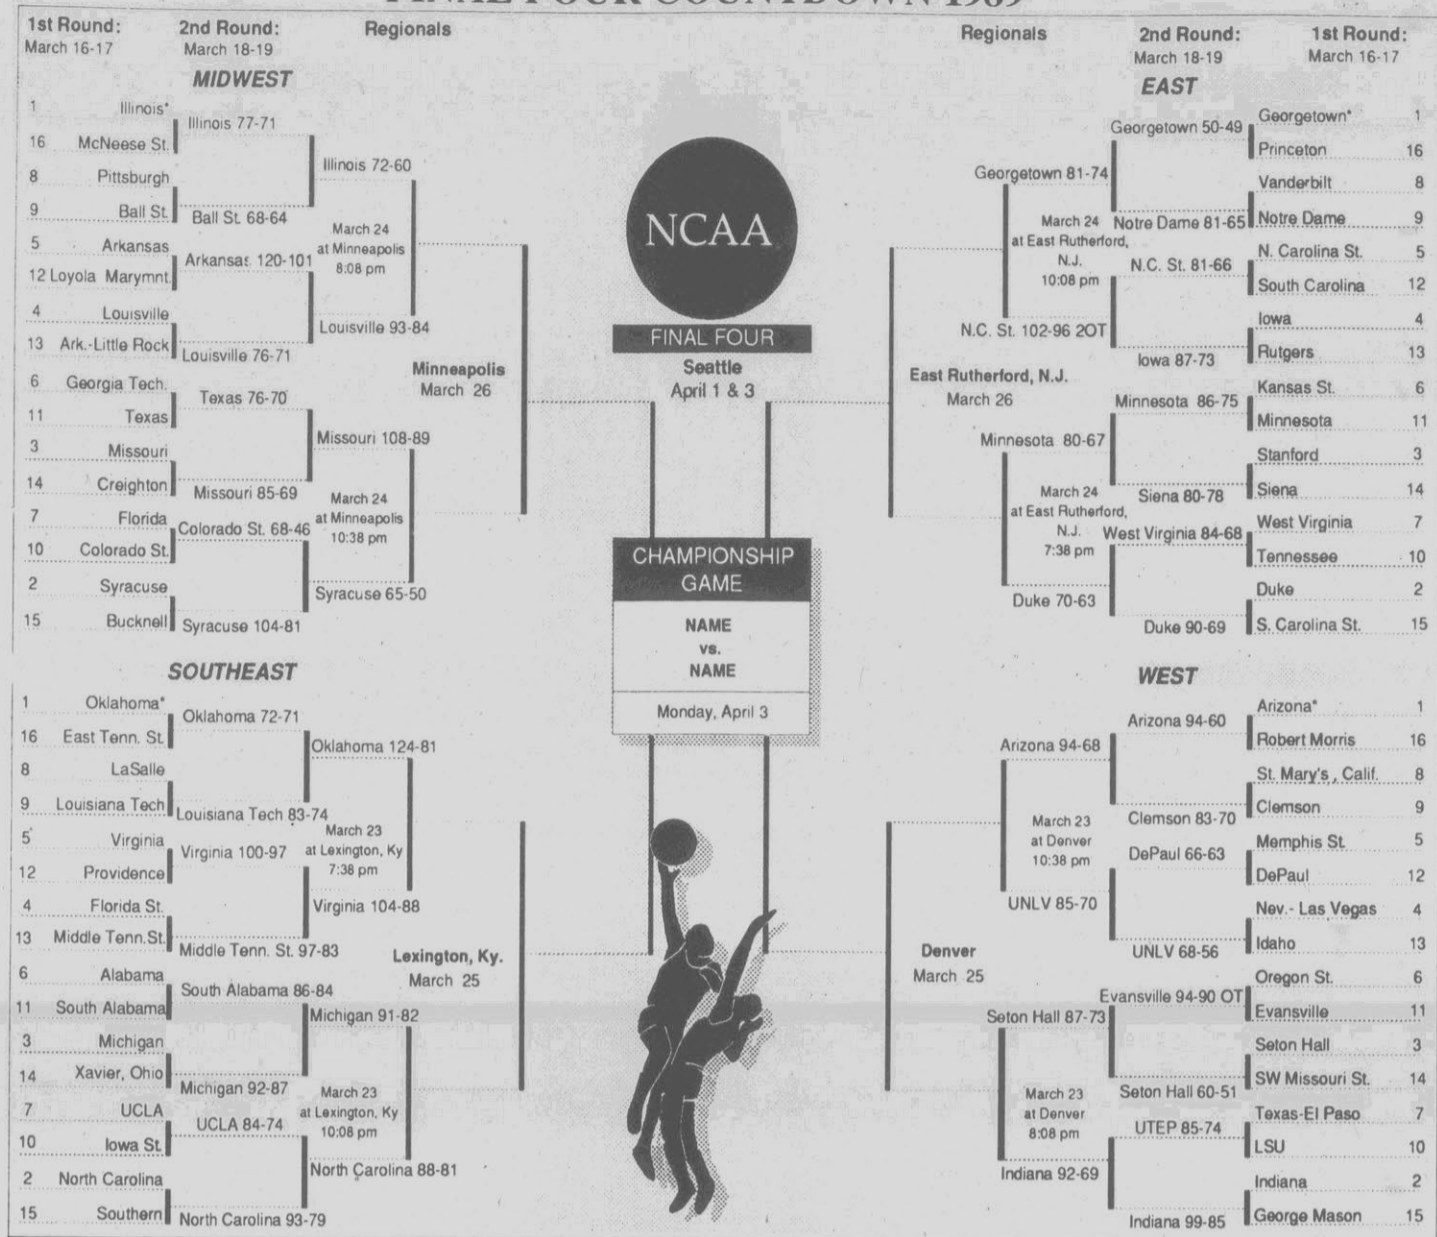

Guard Scott Haffner, the only senior starter for Evansville, led the Purple Aces with 20 points. Reed Crafton added 17 and freshman Scott Shreffler 15. Seton Hall coach P.J. Carlesimo said his club is more confident than a year ago, when the Pirates lost in the second round to Arizona.

"We felt we were good enough to come out here and win two games," Carlesimo said. "We felt we were one of the 16 best teams in the nation, but we had to prove it."

The Pirates beat Southwest Missouri 60-51 in the first round.

Knight, who declined to discuss the matchup with Seton Hall, said only the odds had improved.

Smith Keys Hoyas Past Irish

Charles Smith

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PROVIDENCE, R.I. — Charles Smith is a shooter. Whether he hits everything or nothing, he must keep shooting.

Smith's shooting launched second-ranked Georgetown to an 81-74 NCAA tournament victory over Notre Dame on Sunday.

North Carolina State's Rodney Monroe fills the same bill for the Wolfpack as he led his team to a 102-96 double overtime triumph over 14th-ranked Iowa in the day's second game.

The shooting guards' next duel is against each other in Friday's East Regional semifinal at East Rutherford, N.J. The survivor will play Sunday for a spot in the Final Four at Seattle.

Smith scored 28 of his 34 points in the second half, during which he sank eight of nine shots. That was stunning because he was coming off one of the worst games of his career and a poor first half.

A clutch shooter throughout the season, the Big East player of the year struggled in Friday's first round when Georgetown, the top seed in the regional, squeaked by 16th-seeded Princeton 50-49. Smith went 0-for-5 from the field in the first half, 2-for-12 in the game and scored four points.

"I don't consider myself as having had a slump," Smith said. "I had a bad game. ... If I go 0-for-50, I'll still come out and shoot because I always have confidence."

Smith made only two of five shots in the first half Sunday, although his shooting began to turn around when he hit a 3-pointer at the halftime horn, leaving Georgetown behind 36-32.

With Notre Dame ahead 44-40, Smith got the Hoyas' next 13 points, tying the game 53-53 with 11:04 to play.

Georgetown, 28-4, took the lead for good on a three-point play by Alonzo Mourning that made it 58-57 with 9:37 left. Mourning had 17 points.

"It's obvious that as Smith goes, they go," Notre Dame coach Digger Phelps said. "He took charge when it counted."

"I had never seen him play the way he played for a game and a half," Georgetown coach John Thompson said of his senior captain. "I never understood about the phoenix rising out of the ashes, but when I saw that look in his eyes in the second half I said, 'He's back. Thank God.'"

"When we came out right at halftime, a guy in the stands yelled at me 'You're overrated,'" Smith said. "Every time I scored I thought of that guy."

Georgetown's biggest deficit was seven points before Smith's 3-pointer at the horn.

The Fighting Irish, 21-9, took their last lead at 57-55 on two free throws by Daimon Sweet with 10:06 to play.

Georgetown was ahead 68-66 with 5:04 to go when it ran off seven consecutive points, five by Smith, to open a 75-66 advantage with 1:09 remaining.

Notre Dame got no closer than seven points after that. The Fighting Irish were led by LaPhonso Ellis with 18 points and Joe Fredrick with 16.

"Smith took the game over," Phelps said. "That's what hurt."

Monroe scored 11 of his career-high 40 points in the second overtime and had seven of his team's last eight field goals, including shots that forced each of the overtimes. That was stunning because of the suddenness with which he took over the game.

"There are two kinds of players," North Carolina State coach Jim Valvano said. "One is when you shoot the ball, you know it's going in and you're surprised when you miss. "The other is when you shoot the ball and you know it's going to miss and you're surprised if it goes in. If you have too many of the second kind, you don't win."

Fortunately for Valvano, Monroe is the first kind.

"I'm a very confident shooter," Monroe said. "It's something I work very hard on."

He had nine points at halftime, when the score was tied 41-41 after Iowa erased a 25-6 deficit. He erupted for 16 in the second half, including the Wolfpack's last two baskets, shots that tied the game at 73-73 and 75-75.

He had four points in the first overtime, including the basket that sent the game into another period tied at 83-83. Both game-extending field goals came on 12-foot jumpers with four seconds left.

In the second overtime, his 3-point field goal gave North Carolina State, 22-8, the lead for good at 86-85 with 4:00 left. Ed Horton, who led Iowa, 23-10, with a career-high 32 points, had made two foul shots for the last Hawkeyes' lead.

With N.C. State leading 91-89, Monroe hit another 3-pointer to extend the margin to five with 1:18 remaining. The Wolfpack led by at least four points the rest of the way.

Iowa guards Roy Marble had 24 points and B.J. Armstrong 20.

Monroe made four 3-pointers, 13 of 21 shots overall and 10 of 11 free throws.

"I got a first-hand view," said Armstrong, who guarded Monroe. "He shot the lights out."

"He was a hard man to cover," said Iowa Coach Tom Davis, whose team lost for the first time in 10 first- or second-round NCAA games. "We tried different combinations — zones, man-to-man, triangle-and-two. He's so quick with and without the ball. He's really tough to stop. He's a true scoring guard."

Wolverines Stop Jaguars; Advance To Take On UNC

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ATLANTA — Michigan, 26-7, broke a deadlock at 80 when Terry Mills converted a 3-point play with 2:17, starting a 9-0 run that also included a 3-point basket by Glen Rice, a free throw by Demetrius Calip and two free throws by Mills that put the game out of reach with 38 seconds left as Michigan rolled to a 91-82 win over South Alabama.

Rice scored 36 points and Mills 24 in leading the Wolverines to their seventh victory in eight games.

"That Rice kid is just unbelievable," South Alabama coach Ronnie Arrow said. "He's going to make somebody in the NBA a better coach."

"I thought it was the Atlanta Hawks there for a while today," Arrow said of Michigan, referring to the NBA team that plays its home game in the same Omni arena. "They (Wolverines) have as fine talent as I've seen anywhere."

The setback for the Sun Belt Conference champions snapped an 11-game losing streak and left the Jaguars with a 23-9 mark for the year.

Junie Lewis led South Alabama with 25 points and Jeff Hodge added 16.

North Carolina's Dean Smith already is giving Michigan the psychological edge when the two teams meet Thursday night at Lexington, Ky., in the semifinals of the NCAA Southeast region tournament.

"We are playing an excellent Michigan team that we have knocked out the last two years," Smith said Sunday after both teams advanced with second-round victories — his fifth-ranked Tar Heels over UCLA 88-81.

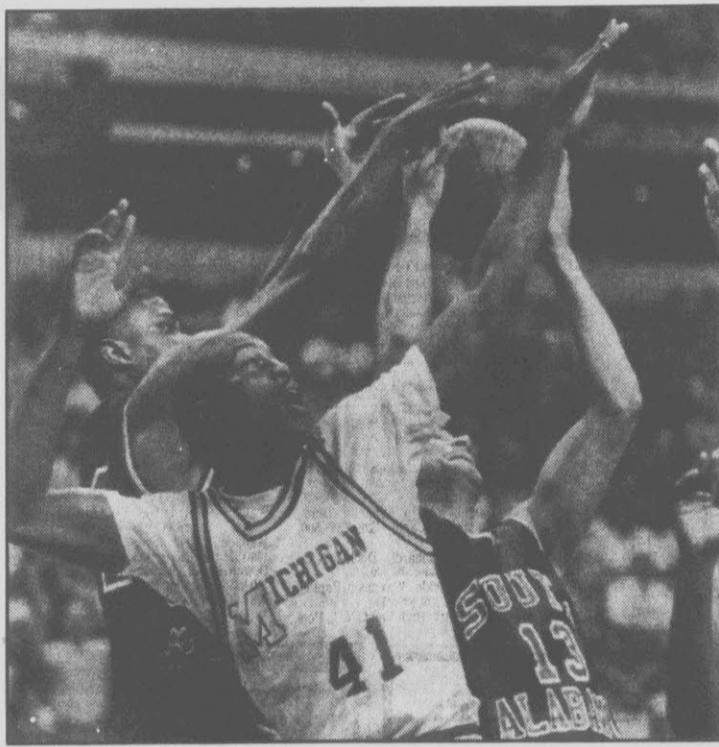

"I don't like that psychological matchup," Smith said. "They are just a very powerful team."

The two have met only twice in history, both times in the NCAA tournament. Carolina won 78-69 in the West semifinals last year and had 109-97 triumph in the second round of the East region two years ago.

Smith's team will get one psychological and physical lift as well — the return of leading scorer J.R. Reid to the lineup.

Reid was suspended for Sunday's game after violating a 1 a.m. curfew following the Tar Heel's first-round victory over Southern University on Friday night.

"I think J.R. was more hurt than we were," Carolina's Steve Bucknall said. "I know he really wanted to play. We can't wait to get him back. He's our best player. We can't win the NCAA title without him."

Syracuse, Missouri Set For A Rematch

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

DALLAS — Making its first trip in seven years to the round of 16 under a coach who's not really a coach, Missouri at least will face a familiar opponent in the NCAA Midwest Regional semifinals.

The sixth-ranked Tigers take on No. 7 Syracuse, a team they lost to in the Big Apple NIT finals earlier this season, Friday night in Minneapolis. Illinois and Louisville meet in the other semifinal.

Missouri, 29-7, defeated Texas 108-89 and Syracuse, 29-7, dumped Colorado State 65-50 in Sunday's second round.

Syracuse Coach Jim Boeheim, whose team beat Missouri 86-84 in overtime almost four months ago, said Missouri has changed for the better since their early-season meeting.

"Missouri's a veteran, solid team and very improved from when we played earlier this year," he said.

The biggest change has been on the bench. Tigers Coach Norm Stewart was diagnosed as having cancer last month and recruiting specialist Rich Daly has coached the team for the last 13 games.

Syracuse won despite a limited contribution from star forward Derrick Coleman, who is still recovering from a back injury.

Coleman, who sat out Friday's first-round game with Bucknell, scored 12 points and had seven rebounds and two blocks against Colorado State, but Boeheim Coleman showed the effects of missing six days of practice.

"Obviously his offensive timing and rhythm weren't on, but his defense was there," Boeheim said.

Playing 11 minutes in the first half and the entire second half, Coleman was 6-of-8 from the field.

"His presence definitely turned the game around," said Syracuse guard Sherman Douglas, who added 11 points. "We need him in the game, it's important for him just to be there. His defense was very important."

Stephen Thompson led the Orangemen with 21 points, and Syracuse shut down the Rams' outside game. The Orangemen denied the ball to Joel Tribelhorn, who had hit 11 of his last 14 3-point attempts coming into the game. He hit two 3-pointers and finished with nine points.

"We didn't want to let them have any 3-point shots," Boeheim said.

Rams Coach Boyd Grant, whose team finished 23-10 after its first trip to the NCAA tournament in 20 years, said Syracuse could go far if Coleman is at full strength.

"Missouri has the athletes who can play with Syracuse, but if Coleman is well I can see Syracuse in the Final Four," he said. "Missouri will be a big test."

In outrunning the up-tempo Longhorns, the Tigers showed they could dominate inside and defend against a perimeter game. They outrebounded Texas 41-30, building their lead to as much as 20 points in the second half. Led by Travis Mays' 25 points, the Longhorns, 25-9, got within eight with 9:24 remaining, but couldn't close the gap.

"They just kept coming inside and pounding us," Texas Coach Tom Penders said. "Missouri runs a lot of people at you, and they don't drop off in quality."

Coming into the game, the Longhorns had been shooting 37 percent from 3-point range but were just 5 of 17 against Missouri.

"We felt we could get inside and on defense we extended their 3-point shooting from 19 feet to 22 feet," Daly said.

Most dominant inside was Doug Smith, who scored a career-high 32 points and had eight rebounds. His previous high was 31 points against Ohio University earlier this season.

"It was easy because of the way our guards were passing the ball," Smith said. "We got some good offensive rebounds, too."

ECU Wins ...

ECU got ahead early, pushing across four runs in the first.

John Thomas led off with a single. With one out, Tommy Eason walked. Calvin Brown followed with a single up the middle to score Thomas and advance Eason. John Gast added a RBI double that scored Eason to make it 2-0.

Brown later came home on a ground out by Steve Godin while Gast scored off a Chris Cauble single.

In the sixth, ECU went up 5-0 when John Gast led off with a single and scored on a double by Godin.

In the seventh, Eason singled with two away and went to third on a single by Calvin Brown that was error-ed at second base. With runners on second and third, Eason came home on a wild pitch that put Brown at third. He then came home on a single by Gast.

JMU pushed across two runs in the eighth, taking advantage of a hit batter and a passed ball during the inning.

ECU returns to action Tuesday at 1 p.m. at home against Davis & Elkins College.

Gast had three hits to lead ECU while Cauble and Eason had two apiece.

PBS Trilogy Will Provide British Star Expanded Screen Exposure

By Matt Wolf
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LONDON — His cameo roles in movies are often jewels, but Ian Holm's latest TV assignment offers something more — the sustained screen exposure any actor craves.

"It's a huge, great leading role, and it's been a long time since I'd done that," Holm said of "Game Set and Match," Granada Television's adaptation of the Len Deighton trilogy which starts its 13-part run March 26 on PBS.

Holm, 57, has made an art form out of the supporting role: a robot in "Alien," a fictionalized Lewis Carroll in "Dreamchild," a maudlin dinner guest in "Wetherby," and his Oscar-nominated turn as the eccentric running coach in "Chariots of Fire."

Now, he comes to Deighton's cloak-and-dagger world as Bernard Samson, a laconic MI6 secret agent who suffers the ultimate betrayal — the discovery that his wife is a Soviet mole.

The $8.55 million series took more than a year to make, shooting in Mexico, Germany and England. It was the first film to be allowed to shoot on location at Checkpoint Charlie, the American crossing point through the Berlin Wall.

"It becomes a way of life; you can't really believe it's finishing," he said. "As somebody said, 'My God, we're all still speaking to each other.'"

During that time, Holm says, he could have made four major movies. But "with all these cameos (behind me), I sort of thought, let's go for it."

The series is vintage Deighton: quirky, multistranded and as complex as a Times crossword puzzle. Viewers dare not blink for fear of missing a clue.

It offers an abundance of meaty supporting roles for its British and German cast. But its basic texture is oblique and understated, a perfect vehicle for Holm's extraordinary ability to express seething emotion beneath a calm surface.

"I suppose I leapt (for the role), in a way," the slightly built, amiable Holm said in an interview that included imitations of John Gielgud, reminiscences of a chance supper with John le Carre, and thoughts about the acting techniques of John Hurt and Robert DeNiro.

A psychiatrist's son, Holm is chiefly admired for the stillness and unfussy psychological truth of his technique. London's weekly Observer newspaper recently asked Holm to name their favorite actor. Holm came second, behind Laurence Olivier.

"It's the best compliment one can garner," said Holm, pleased at being thought of as an actor's actor. But he offers no blueprint for success: "I don't mean to be flip, but you learn your lines and get on with it."

"I'm very happy doing nothing; I'm a great doing-nothinger," he said. "I like having time to stand and stare."

His ability to disappear into a role is reflected in public reaction to his work in "Alien." "Alien" was a huge success, but people would say, have you seen 'Alien?' I'd say, I was in it!"

A graduate of London's prestigious Royal Academy of Dramatic Art, Holm was a leading classical actor in the 1950s and 1960s.

He played the Fool to Charles Laughton's King Lear, and his Richard III in the Royal Shakespeare Company's landmark 1963 "The Wars of the Roses" was likened to Olivier's.

His portrayal of the repressed Lenny in Harold Pinter's "The Homecoming" won him a 1967 Tony Award when it transferred to Broadway.

But in 1976, while heading a revival of Eugene O'Neill's "The Iceman Cometh," Holm suffered a nervous breakdown during the first preview and dropped out.

"I'm not a particularly emotional, nervous, or depressive type, so when that thing happened, it was a severe shock," he said.

Holm has since appeared in only one play, a London fringe staging of Chekhov's "Uncle Vanya." He says the stage "still absolutely terrifies me," and he refused the starring role in the upcoming West End production of the Broadway hit "M. Butterfly." Anthony Hopkins got the part.

He enjoys making movies and would like to work again with Woody Allen, after appearing alongside Gene Hackman, one of his favorite actors, in Allen's recent "Another Woman."

Firms Pull Ads On TV's 'Nightingales'

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — The Chrysler Corp. and Sears, Roebuck & Co. have decided not to advertise any more on NBC-TV's "Nightingales," which has provoked criticism from women because it has shown scantily clad nurses.

Chrysler advertised on one episode of the Wednesday night series about student nurses because NBC owed it time, said Chrysler spokesman Thomas Houston.

But, "based on the response we got from viewers, which was obviously negative," the company reviewed the show and decided not to continue, Houston said.

Sears ran a few commercials about its new pricing strategy, but "we pulled the one more that we had because we decided that the program did not meet our guidelines as suitable for family viewing," said a spokeswoman, Kathy Guca.

The Kansas City-based American Nursing Association said last week it has circulated lists of "Nightingales" advertisers to its 189,000 members, urging them to "communicate their concerns" about the series, which began Jan. 25.

"Nightingales" exploits women, said association spokeswoman Carol Grimaldi.

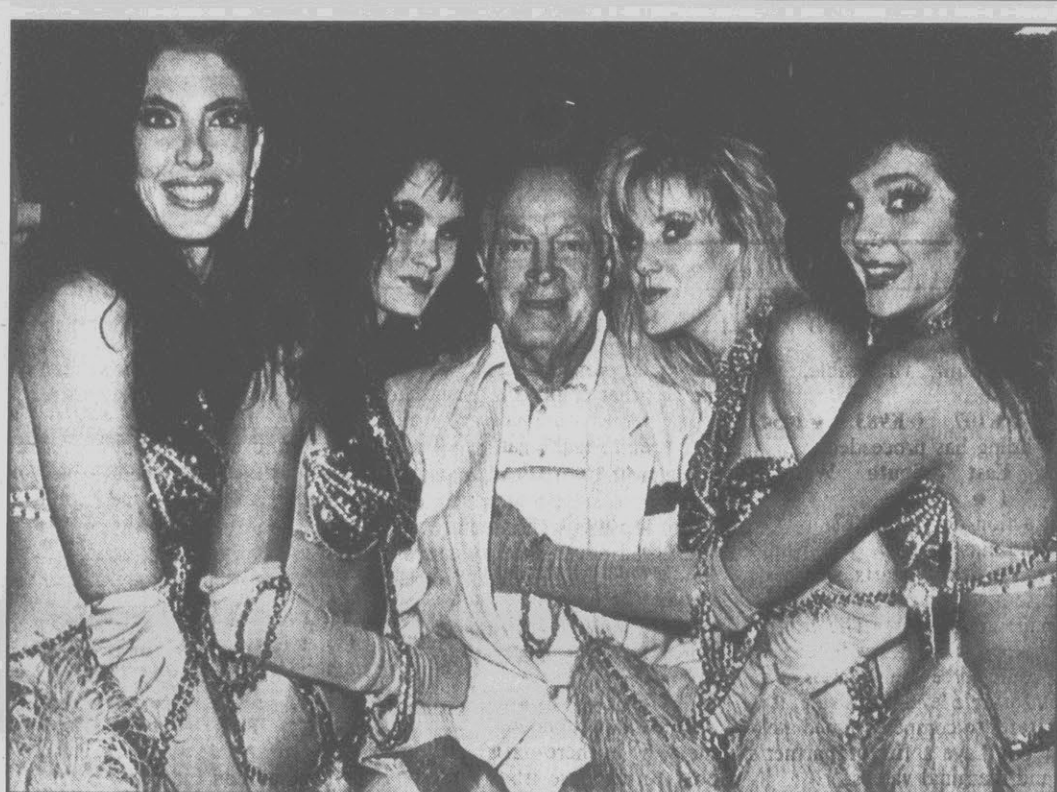

"It uses nurses to show these very pretty girls in their underwear and in the shower," Grimaldi said. "It shows very lax educational standards — when it does say anything about nursing education."

NBC responded that "'Nightingales' is a continuing drama about the personal lives of fictional people who happen to be nurses." The network noted that a registered nurse reviews every script and consults with the production company on nursing procedures and other medical aspects.

"It's a drama about young women coming of age in Los Angeles today," added NBC publicist Merry Aronson. "It's very focused on their personal lives. The hospital setting is almost an aside."

Best Actress Competition Makes Decision Difficult

By Bob Thomas
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — Five members of a new generation of American film actresses are in competition for the 61st Academy Award for best leading role, and the power of their performances makes the race one of the toughest Oscar calls in years.

Meryl Streep has become an Academy Award regular, this year's "A Cry in the Dark" marking her eighth nomination. Two have resulted in Oscars: as supporting actress in "Kramer vs. Kramer" (1979), and best actress in "Sophie's Choice" (1982).

In "A Cry in the Dark," the 39-year-old actress again portrayed a martyred woman, the real-life Australian housewife named Lindy Chamberlain, who spent three years in prison after being convicted of killing her infant daughter. She insisted the child had been carried off by a dingo, a wild Australian dog. She was finally exonerated last September.

As in "Sophie's Choice," "Out of Africa" and other films, Streep affected an accent. "I get a lot of flak for my accents," she admitted in a recent magazine interview.

She has no intention of changing her acting style because of the kidding, but adds: "Once in a while I think it would be a relief to play a housewife trying to raise three kids, keep her husband and organize her neighbors to fight pesticides."

Glenn Close, the scheming marquise of "Dangerous Liaisons," has a remarkable Oscar record of her own, having been nominated for five of her eight films. But so far, no wins.

Close, 41, was named for supporting actress in "The World According to Garp," "The Big Chill" and "The Natural," and for a leading role in the terrifying "Fatal Attraction" last year.

"Since the beginning of time, we've been trying to figure out who we are in relation to the opposite sex, and then how to relate to them," she has said. "Both 'Fatal Attraction' and 'Dangerous Liaisons' deal with that theme in different ways. When it comes to sexual identity, we're living in very unsettled times."

For former child star Jodie Foster, the Academy nomination for "The Accused" confirms her emergence as a mature actress. The recognition might help erase the notoriety caused by John Hinckley Jr.'s attempted assassination of President Reagan. Hinckley had attempted to impress Foster, upon whom he had fixated after seeing her in "Taxi Driver" 14 times.

Her role as the prostitute in "Taxi Driver" won her a nomination as supporting actress at the age of 13. Now 26, she was nominated as the brassy waitress who is gang-raped in the backroom of a tavern.

Of "The Accused" role, she comments: "I like her. I think the audience likes her. There are probably moments when they don't like her, but she's human. She has flaws, she says the wrong things, she can be loud, and she repeats herself."

"She's somebody you can know, which makes the issue of ... what rape is all about. It becomes even more cruel when it happens to someone you know."

Sigourney Weaver, 39, finds herself in the peculiar position of being nominated as lead actress for "Gorillas in the Mist," and-for support in "Working Girl." It last happened to Jessica Lange in 1982, who was nominated as best actress in "Frances" (she lost to Streep in "Sophie's Choice"), and won for supporting actress in "Tootsie."

As the late naturalist Dian Fossey, Weaver did what most other stars would never consider: she worked intimately with wild gorillas.

She discounts the danger involved: "I was reading a lot of Dian's papers and rereading her book, and it seemed that she was often threatened by gorillas, but they never actually hurt her. It was all a question of getting to know each other."

"I didn't see why they would feel animosity toward me. That was a lucky choice on my part. I don't think it would have been wise to go in and work with animals without having previously reassured yourself that you would be all right."

Horoscope From The Carroll Righter Institute

FORECAST FOR TUESDAY March 21
ARIES (March 21 to April 19): Emotions dominate the day. You may be the victim of someone's moodiness. Domestic adjustments turn out satisfactorily.
TAURUS (April 20 to May 20): Flirtation may be just the beginning of something wonderful. You must initiate as well as respond to keep the ball rolling.
GEMINI (May 21 to June 21): If you exaggerate a story too far you may get caught. Don't confuse your creative ability when composing a great story with reality.
MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21): Take a chance while Cupid is on your side. When your heart beats faster, you withdraw from the love arena shutting yourself off.
LEO (July 22 to Aug. 21): Someone has information that he is withholding. Financial news is not up to expectations, but is better than a month ago.
VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22): Your present situation is draining you emotionally and financially. Back up a bit and reappraise time and resources. Balance the budget.
LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22): Starting over, and over, and over, can be as boring as sticking it out. You learn the lesson if you stay put and study the matter.
SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21): Look into a legal matter that can be brought to a successful conclusion. Speculation, chances or risk-taking should be avoided.
SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21): A frugal outlook now will save enough for a vacation. Someone's own jealousy may be the cause of their cautions and warnings.
CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20): Your curiosity regarding different financial matters is on target. Check, analyze and get expert opinions. Luck is on your side.
AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19): Unexpected good news arrives. Your roaming eyes could settle on a new romantic friend. Try a new and interesting format.
PISCES (Feb. 20 to March 20): Beating on the war drums will not solve the matter to your satisfaction. You could be putting too much effort into trying to force peace.

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
 ♠J8 ♥K107 ♦K983 ♣10542
 The bidding has proceeded:
 North East South West
 1 ♥ 1 ♠ ?
 What action do you take?
 A.—Had East passed, you would have raised to two hearts, so there's no reason why you should not take the same action now. The trouble with passing is that a spade raise by West could force you to guess at an uncomfortable level. As a rule, it is much safer to compete immediately when you have a fit for partner's suit and marginal values.

Q.2—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
 ♠QJ104 ♥6 ♦AQJ105 ♣A63
 The bidding has proceeded:
 West North East South
 1 ♥ Pass Pass ?
 What action do you take?
 A.—Even though you have an excellent diamond suit with 100 honors, don't lose sight of the overall cam-

Q.3—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
 ♠KQJ9762 ♥AQ ♦K ♣AKQ
 The bidding has proceeded:
 South West North East
 2 ♣ Pass 3 ♣ Pass ?
 What do you bid now?
 A.—We don't know how this one sneaked in here—after partner's positive response it's too easy. If ever there was a hand for Blackwood, this is it. Bid four no trump.

Q.4—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
 ♠KQJ9762 ♥AQ ♦K ♣AKQ
 The bidding has proceeded:
 South West North East
 2 ♣ Pass 3 ♣ Pass
 4 NT Pass 5 ♥ Pass ?

Q.5—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
 ♠AQ762 ♥Q9 ♦J107 ♣876
 The bidding has proceeded:
 South West North East
 Pass Pass 1 ♠ Pass ?
 What do you bid now?
 A.—A borderline hand, but with good five-card support for partner's major, it usually pays to be aggressive. Jump to three spades.

Q.6—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
 ♠KJ5 ♥A632 ♦K87 ♣QJ3
 Partner opens the bidding with one club. What do you respond?
 A.—We do not recommend suppressing a four-card major in favor of jumping to two no trump, but this type of hand is the exception. Our major suit is weak and our hand is perfectly balanced. Bid two no trump.
