Jumbo Jet Flies With Explosives

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LONDON — British Airways promised today to punish those responsible for letting a jumbo jet fly with explosives left on board by a bomb-detection team during a drill.

The incident sparked a new controversy over airline security after the Dec. 21 bombing of Pan Am Flight 103.

A cleaning worker found the gelignite, which officials said could flare up but not explode, aboard the Boeing 747 on Monday at London's Heathrow Airport, said Independent Television News, which broke the story Wednesday night.

The flight had just returned from a flight to Toronto.

Police confirmed the incident, saying one of their bomb-detection teams inadvertently left the explosives on board after using the aircraft in an exercise to train sniffer dogs.

The Department of Transport said today it has called for an urgent report. British Airways chairman Lord King promised "a most thorough and detailed investigation," saying: "If heads fall, they fall."

An airline spokesman, Derek Ross, said cleaners found the substance under a seat at the rear of the plane. ITN news said it was left there for about two weeks, during which the Boeing 747 made several journeys.

Today, airport sources said it was believed the package was placed in a seat pocket and then slipped through into the upholstery.

The latest controversy follows widespread charges that Transport Secretary Paul Channon was lax about sending airlines warnings about a new type of radio cassette bomb before the Pan Am Flight 103 disaster on Dec. 21 that killed 270 people.

Flight 103, which originated in Frankfurt, was blown up over Lockerbie, Scotland, after taking off from Heathrow. Authorities believe a bomb was encased in a radio-cassette player.

Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher has defended Channon, but

Physicians Say Doctor Has Obligation To Help Terminally Ill Find 'Good Death'

By Daniel Q. Haney
 THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BOSTON — Doctors should ease the dying of their hopelessly ill patients by giving them as much pain medicine as they need and even helping them commit suicide, if they wish, a report today concludes.

The report, drawn up by a panel of prominent physicians, contends that doctors have an obligation to help terminally ill patients have "a good death," just as they help them lead a healthy life.

"We really think that the physician has a responsibility to be actively involved in creating an environment in which a peaceful death can occur," said Dr. Sidney H. Wanzer, principal author of the report.

The most controversial of the group's conclusions was that "it is not immoral for a physician to assist in the rational suicide of a terminally ill patient."

Wanzer said doctors can ethically prescribe sleeping pills or other drugs to dying patients, knowing they will use them for suicide, and even tell them how big a dose is lethal.

The doctors said such assistance is "certainly not rare." However, they added that if physicians tend to their dying patients' comfort and dignity, suicide requests should be infrequent.

Two doctors on the 12-member committee disagreed with the suicide guideline.

"I don't want a blanket statement to say it is not immoral. I can accept that someone else may say it is moral, but I want to be able to say I don't like this," said one of the dissenters, Dr. Jan van Eys of the University of Texas System Cancer Center in Houston.

The report is the second from the committee, which was chaired by Dr.

MADD Rates Pitt Judge Near Top In Bench Errors

By John Bare
 THE DAILY REFLECTOR

A Pitt County District Court judge is among the state leaders in erroneously granting limited driving privileges to defendants who are not eligible for the restricted license, a Mothers Against Drunk Driving study says.

The study, conducted by Wake MADD Chairwoman Becky Bowman, indicated that over the last year and a half, 164 judges in the state have improperly issued 734 limited driving privileges. In all the cases, the defendants' licenses were in a state of suspension, thus they were not eligible for the privileges.

Judge James E. Martin of Grifton had the most rejections among local judges, having improperly granted limited driving privileges 15 times over the period. Seven instances occurred in Pitt County, five in Craven County and three in Carteret.

Statewide, Martin was tied for third with Forsyth County Judge Abner Alexander. Former Wake District Court Judge George R. Greene, now on the Superior Court bench, topped the list with 23. Duplin County Judge Kenneth W. Turner was second statewide with 16 instances of improperly granting the privileges.

Many of the instances involve driving while impaired cases, but the statistics include all situations in which defendants whose licenses had been suspended were still granted the privilege.

"This does not only involve DWIs. If you have so many points, you lose your license," said Kathy Prescott, former chairwoman of the Pitt MADD chapter. "It includes all limited driving privileges. Our main thing is that there are so many people that are getting (privileges) now that it means nothing to lose your license."

When the privilege is wrongly granted, the state Department of Motor Vehicles rejects the order and contacts the judge and defendant by mail. MADD obtained copies of all the rejection letters mailed over the last 18 months, Ms. Bowman said.

Roger Mitchell, chief hearing officer for DMV, said a full-time employee daily checks the limited driving privileges issued by judges.

"They handle them on a daily basis," Mitchell said. "The judges issue the privileges. We have no control over that. The department determines whether the privilege is valid. Of course, we have the driving record, and the judge doesn't. You might not call it an error on the part of the judges. If they had the driving record in front of them, they probably would not issue the privilege."

Also, he said the number of rejections is not a high percentage of the total number of DWI and traffic-related cases that are processed in the state.

"On a daily basis, it's not that many," Mitchell said.

While there are several reasons — other than judicial error — why a privilege may be improperly issued, Ms. Bowman said MADD believes the judges carry a great responsibility in imposing a valid sentence.

"It seems the DMV has to slap the judges' hands and tell them: 'No, you cannot do this. The license is in a state of revocation.' It costs taxpayers to do this (rejection process)," Ms. Bowman said. "In all fairness to the judges, we were searching for reasons (for the high number of errors)."

It is understandable for a judge to make an occasional mistake, Ms.

Bodies of man and wife are wheeled from Quail Ridge condominium Wednesday afternoon

Retired Leaf Executive, Wife Die In Apparent Murder-Suicide

A retired tobacco company executive and his wife were found dead in their condominium at 1853 Quail Ridge early Wednesday afternoon, apparently the victims of a murder-suicide, according to authorities.

Detective J.E. Nichols said the bodies of Edwin W. Skinner, 64, and his wife, Renate Wittig Skinner, 57, were found by a cleaning man about 1:58 p.m. They had been dead "at least three or four days," according to Nichols.

Investigators, who said autopsies were being performed on the bodies this morning, said both had been shot.

According to Nichols, a pistol was found beside Skinner's body in one bedroom, while Mrs. Skinner's body was found in another bedroom. A letter, apparently written by Skinner, was also found, Nichols said.

Skinner retired from Carolina Leaf Tobacco Co. several years ago.

Mrs. Skinner, born in Dresden, East Germany, had worked as a hotel executive in such places as Thailand, Indonesia, the Philippines, Singapore and Pakistan. She was an avid shell collector and last year gave 432 shells — some extremely rare — to the River Park North nature center.

ECU Students Hear Call For Volunteers

ECU NEWS BUREAU

It stirs memories of the 1960s, Peace Corps and VISTA, but in this case young people are asking not what they can do for their country, but how they can help make their city and county a "kinder, gentler" place to live.

Students at East Carolina University are heeding the call to volunteer service through a program sponsored jointly by the ECU School of Medicine and the Department of Health, Physical Education, Recreation and Safety (HPERS).

The program allows students enrolled in "Health and Modern Society," a course required of all undergraduates, to volunteer for at least five hours of work in a community service agency such as a soup kitchen or a nursing home. Students receive credit toward their final grade, plus a sense of what it's like to give something back to their community.

"We're trying to reach students early in college to give them a taste of volunteer service and hope that as they go along they'll become more active as volunteers," said Dr. Kathleen Dunn, a physician with the medical school's Center for Health

Man Holds Off Police In Standoff

A Greenville man is in jail today on kidnaping and assault charges after holding 17 local and state officers at bay at his Battle Street home for more than three hours early this morning with threats to kill his two children, the officers and himself.

Police Lt. C.B. Landreth said the standoff began when officers Alexander Batts and R.C. Allsbrook, responding to a disturbance call at 12:27 a.m., saw Louis Clark's wife, Emma, chased from the 1206 Battle St. home by Clark, who was wielding a knife.

After being threatened by Clark and being told by Mrs. Clark that the couple's two children — 7-year-old Shereta and 3-year-old Louis Junior — were in the house, the officers called for assistance.

For the next 3 hours and 19 minutes, a dozen Greenville police and a five-man special response team from the State Bureau of Investigation alternately tried to talk Clark into releasing the children and surrendering or were threatened and rushed by Clark, Landreth said.

At about 2:45 a.m., Landreth said, Clark released his daughter. Then two officers rushed to the house, locked Clark out of the front door and took the young boy out through the rear door.

But Landreth said it was another hour — 3:45 a.m. — before two other officers rushed toward Clark in the yard, tackled and disarmed him and placed him under arrest.

Clark, according to Landreth, was charged with assault with a deadly weapon, assault on a law enforcement officer and two counts of second-degree kidnaping.

Stocks Gets Six Years For Drugs

By John Bare
 THE DAILY REFLECTOR

An Ayden man who was a key player in the 1986 Liberty Tobacco Warehouse fire in Wilson has been sentenced to six years in prison after pleading guilty to marijuana charges.

Judge G.K. Butterfield of Wilson sentenced Ronnie Lee Stocks of Route 2, Ayden, to the prison term Wednesday in Pitt County Superior Court.

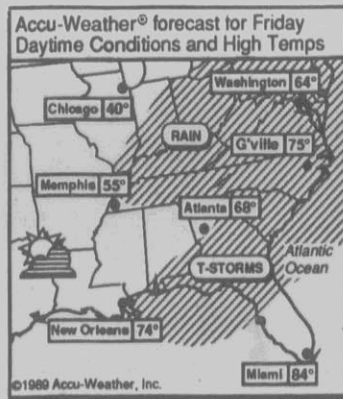

Stocks, who testified last month as a government arson witness in the warehouse arson trial, pleaded guilty to three counts of possession with intent to sell marijuana and three counts of selling the drug. The charges stemmed from drug sales Stocks allegedly made to undercover law enforcement agents in 1987.

Butterfield recommended that the six-year term run concurrently with the five-year prison sentence Stocks received last week for participating in the arson. As a condition of any work release or parole, Butterfield ordered Stocks to repay $690 to the Pitt County Sheriff's Department drug fund.

When A Yam Is Not A Yam

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — If Popeye had been a sweet potato, he wouldn't have dared say, "I yam what I yam and that's all I yam" around certain people in the Agriculture Department.

"Sweet potatoes and yams come from different biological and geographical origins," says USDA economist Amy Allred. "However, the darker varieties of sweet potatoes are often erroneously called yams."

In fact, the United States produces virtually no yams of its own. Sweet potatoes, yes, around 12 million hundredweight a year, or roughly 545,000 metric tons.

But that's far down the world's production list, with global output in 1987 at nearly 133 million tons. China is the biggest producer at 113 million tons.

Yam production is much smaller at about 24 million tons, with most grown in Africa. Nigeria, with a 1987 production of 16 million tons, is the leading producer.

Allred says in a report by the department's Economic Research Service that sweet potatoes have been cultivated since prehistoric times in two widely separated parts of the world, tropical America and the South Pacific islands.

Early artifacts show yams were used for food in West Africa prior to 50,000 B.C. and have been grown in Southeast Asia since 3,000 B.C.

Allred was amused when the label from a supermarket can of "yams" was read to her in a telephone interview. The label said yams in large letters, with "sweet potatoes" in finer print.

"Traditionally, people call them yams," she said. "It's pretty common."

But somewhere along the line, the yam-sweet potato question was settled partly, at least, in North Carolina, the leading U.S. producer.

It is now the North Carolina Sweet-potato Commission, with no mention of yams in the official title.

North Carolina produced 4.59 million hundredweight of sweet potatoes last year, followed at a distance by Louisiana, 2.47 million, and California, 1.31 million. Other commercial sweet potato states include Alabama, Georgia, Maryland, Mississippi, New Jersey, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas and Virginia.

Allred's report included further information about the differences between sweet potatoes and yams:

—There are a thousand species of sweet potato, which has a two-leafed embryo and thus is called a dicot. It also is a member of the morning-glory family. The flesh varies from nearly white to almost orange in color.

—In the United States, per capita sweet potato consumption reached a high of 6.4 pounds in 1982. Comparatively, Americans eat an average of about 119 pounds of regular potatoes annually, measured on the basis of farm weight.

—Most domestic use of sweet potatoes is in candied or baked dishes, but they are also used in puddings, pies and even ice cream. The industry in recent years has promoted new products, including fresh fried sweet potatoes.

—Yams have one-leafed embryos and are called monocots. They can be prepared in the same way as sweet potatoes. Most are consumed in the countries that produce them, often turned into flour and then into various staple dishes. Yams also are a source of a steroid compound used as a base in cortisone and hormonal drugs.

Rescue

HOFFMAN, N.C. (AP) — An 8-year-old Hoffman girl saved her 4-year-old sister from choking to death on a piece of candy by using the Heimlich maneuver, the mother of the two girls says.

Ashley Lantz, 8, was playing outside with her sister, Heather, when she saw Heather grabbing her throat and turning red. Ashley asked her sister if she could breathe or talk, but the girl did not respond and became "a little limp," said Darlene Lantz, the mother of the two girls.

Ashley got behind her sister, put her arms around her stomach and squeezed under the rib cage. On the third try, the candy popped out of Heather's throat, Mrs. Lantz said.

Mrs. Lantz and her husband are both on Hoffman's volunteer rescue squad, but Ashley learned the lifesaving maneuver from another rescue squad member who instructed school children how to perform it.

Group Wants Films To Reveal Paid Ads

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — That beer your favorite movie star quaffed in his most recent film may be part of an "insidious" advertising scheme, according to an advocacy group that wants to require moviemakers to reveal when they're being paid to show commercial products.

The Center for Science in the Public Interest says the movie "Bull Durham" included 21 shots of Miller Lite beer, "Superman II" featured the Marlboro cigarette logo, and "E.T. the Extra-Terrestrial" prominently displayed Reese's Pieces and Coors beer.

While the center didn't know if money changed hands between filmmakers and manufacturers on all these movies, it said Philip Morris paid $42,500 to get its Marlboro logo into the Superman film.

On the coming James Bond movie, "Licensed to Kill," Philip Morris paid $350,000 to have Lark cigarettes shown on screen, center staff attorney Charles Mitchell said.

The center is asking state attorneys general to determine whether the undisclosed placement of commercial products in films constitutes deceptive advertising that violates state laws.

It also said broadcasting movies on television in which there are paid placements of cigarettes violates a 1971 law that prohibits advertising of cigarettes on TV.

Mitchell said the center urged states to require filmmakers to state at the beginning of a movie, for example: "Notice. This film contains paid advertising for Marlboro cigarettes."

The center also said it would ask state officials to determine whether the placement of alcoholic beverages and cigarettes in youth-oriented films should be prohibited because youths cannot legally buy such products.

The group said it was petitioning the Federal Communications Commission to rescind a rule that exempts theatrical films from the general requirement for television programs that paid product placements be disclosed.

MADD Cites Judge For Errors

Prescott said, but her group is concerned about judges involved in a high number of rejections.

"We really are not alarmed at those guys who have one (error). Anybody, in 18 months, could make an error. But we feel like the guys who have 15 or more are getting a little excessive."

"There seems to be a question in my mind about where the breakdown is."

Ms. Bowman said there are several possible explanations for the rejections.

One, the judge may not have received a copy of the defendant's driving record prior to sentencing. Or, complete DMV records may not be available at the time of sentencing because of the backlog.

Chief District Court Judge E. Burt Aycock Jr. of Greenville, who MADD says had just one rejection in Craven County in the last 18 months, said it is not odd for a judge to be stuck with out-of-date DMV records or inaccurate information.

"We frequently don't have real fresh records at sentencing time in DWI cases. They're usually from about a week or two after the offense date (about the time a lawyer is hired and obtains the records). Frequently, the lawyers will order new records about the time the case goes to trial so they show their client's most recent record," Aycock said. "I understand the records themselves are not always accurate."

Many of the improper privileges stem from situations where DWI defendants have lost their driver's licenses for the mandatory 10-day period after being arrested and have not yet paid the $25 restoration fee when they appear in court for sentencing, Aycock said. If a judge does not recognize that the fee is unpaid, DMV will catch the error and reject the privilege because the license is considered to be in a state of suspension.

Ms. Bowman also said MADD court monitors believe some privileges are awarded because of a disregard for the law or as favors for defense attorneys.

Lastly, she said some judges may not completely understand all instances in which a defendant is not eligible for a limited driving privilege. For example, a defendant convicted of driving while their license is revoked is not eligible for the privileges, yet some judges in the state have not followed that law, she said.

District Court Judge H. Horton Rountree of Greenville was second on the list among local judges — and tied with several other judges for 11th place overall — with eight rejections. Former District Court Judge J. Randall Hunter of New Bern, who left the bench for private practice last year, had six rejections: two in Pitt; three in Craven, and one in Carteret.

District Court Judge J.W.H. Roberts of Greenville, a substitute judge, tallied five rejections in the study, with two in Pitt. District Court Judge James E. Ragan III improperly awarded privileges three times, one in Pitt. District Court Judge Charles L. Guy of Fayetteville improperly issued privileges three times, one in Pitt. District Court Judge Willie L. Lumpkin III of Morehead City improperly awarded privileges twice, both times in Carteret.

Superior Court Judge Herbert O. Phillips III of Morehead City tallied one rejection in Craven and Superior Court Judge Paul M. Wright of Goldsboro had one rejection in Pitt.

day by Pitt deputies from U.S. marshals, was held in the Pitt County Jail overnight and was to be returned to federal custody this morning.

In the arson case, Stocks pleaded guilty in federal court to conspiring to burn the Liberty warehouse, and he testified against the warehouse manager, J.T. "Tommy" Worthington Jr., and an owner of the warehouse, J.T. Worthington Sr. Both men are from Greenville.

A federal jury last month convicted the younger Worthington on 56 arson and fraud charges, and he could be sentenced to over 200 years in prison and fined more than $10 million. The jury acquitted his father on all but one fraud charge. Both men are awaiting sentencing.

Stocks testified that the younger Worthington directed the late Harvey Bowen of Ayden to hire Stocks to burn the warehouse. In turn, he said he hired another man to actually set the fire.

After pleading guilty to the federal charges, Stocks was kept in protective custody of the federal Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms, and his Pitt County trial was delayed several times when he failed to appear in court. In November, an assistant U.S. attorney assured Pitt court officials Stocks would be available to face the local charges after the Worthingtons' trial.

An ATF bureau agent testified Wednesday for Stocks, explaining his cooperation with the arson investigation.

Students Volunteer

Service Research and Development. Dr. Dunn oversees the program with Judy Baker, an HPERs faculty member who coordinates the course collectively known as Health 1000.

"We've found that a number of students have wanted to volunteer for a long time but don't know where to go," Dr. Dunn said. "This is a way to introduce them to the domain of volunteer services."

Locally, that domain includes many agencies that can use the help. The list includes the American Red Cross and its bloodmobiles, the Pitt County Family Violence Program, the Greenville Soup Kitchen, the Adventures in Health community health education museum, the Creative Living Center day program for the elderly, the Greenville Villa Nursing Home, the Special Olympics, the Senior Games and an ECU student health fair.

The student volunteers serve in many capacities, assisting in recreational activities for the young and the elderly, visiting the sick, preparing and serving food to the needy, and helping with publicity and fund raising.

The volunteer program began last fall as a pilot project open to 120 freshmen and sophomores. Ms. Baker said 95 students volunteered, donating more than 500 hours of community service. Response to the program was so positive it has been expanded this semester to potentially include 1,200 volunteers and a whopping 6,000 hours of service.

"We were shocked that we would get that much response," Ms. Baker said. "Community service is something you do for nothing. The only thing you get out of it is what you feel inside. Students are involved in so many things, it was difficult to predict how they would react."

Dr. Dunn and Ms. Baker hope to include more upperclassmen and graduate students in the future. They may also seek additional agencies in which to place them.

The program is supported by a $15,000 grant from ACTION, a federal agency that sponsors community development projects.

Dr. Dunn said the credit earned by students is minimal, perhaps one or two points on their final grade. But it provides additional incentive to get involved in a program that offers long-term rewards for all concerned.

"I think community service is important enough that we should incorporate it into the curriculum," Dr. Dunn said. "This is a way to teach them that although they may be students, they are still community members."

A Mess

Better Preparation One Answer

What's going on in the oil business in Alaska? Right now it is the worst oil spill ever. There are questions about how the ship was being handled when it ran aground ... and the cleanup is not going well. The longer the oil hangs around the more damage it will do to fish and wildlife and to the Alaskan shoreline.

It tells us we still have not developed fully safe ways to transport oil at sea, and it also tells us that we haven't developed a completely efficient method of cleaning up the oil once it is spilled.

Almost any coastal area of the world is subject to such a spill. Particularly is this specific one of great concern since it threatens America's last great wilderness, the state of Alaska and its magnificent natural resources.

Today's huge tankers carry large amounts of oil. This one spilled 10.1

million gallons off Alaska. High winds hamper the cleanup and only a small amount of that had been recovered early this week. In the meantime the oil slick moves with the ocean coating birds, fouling islands and threatening salmon and other fish.

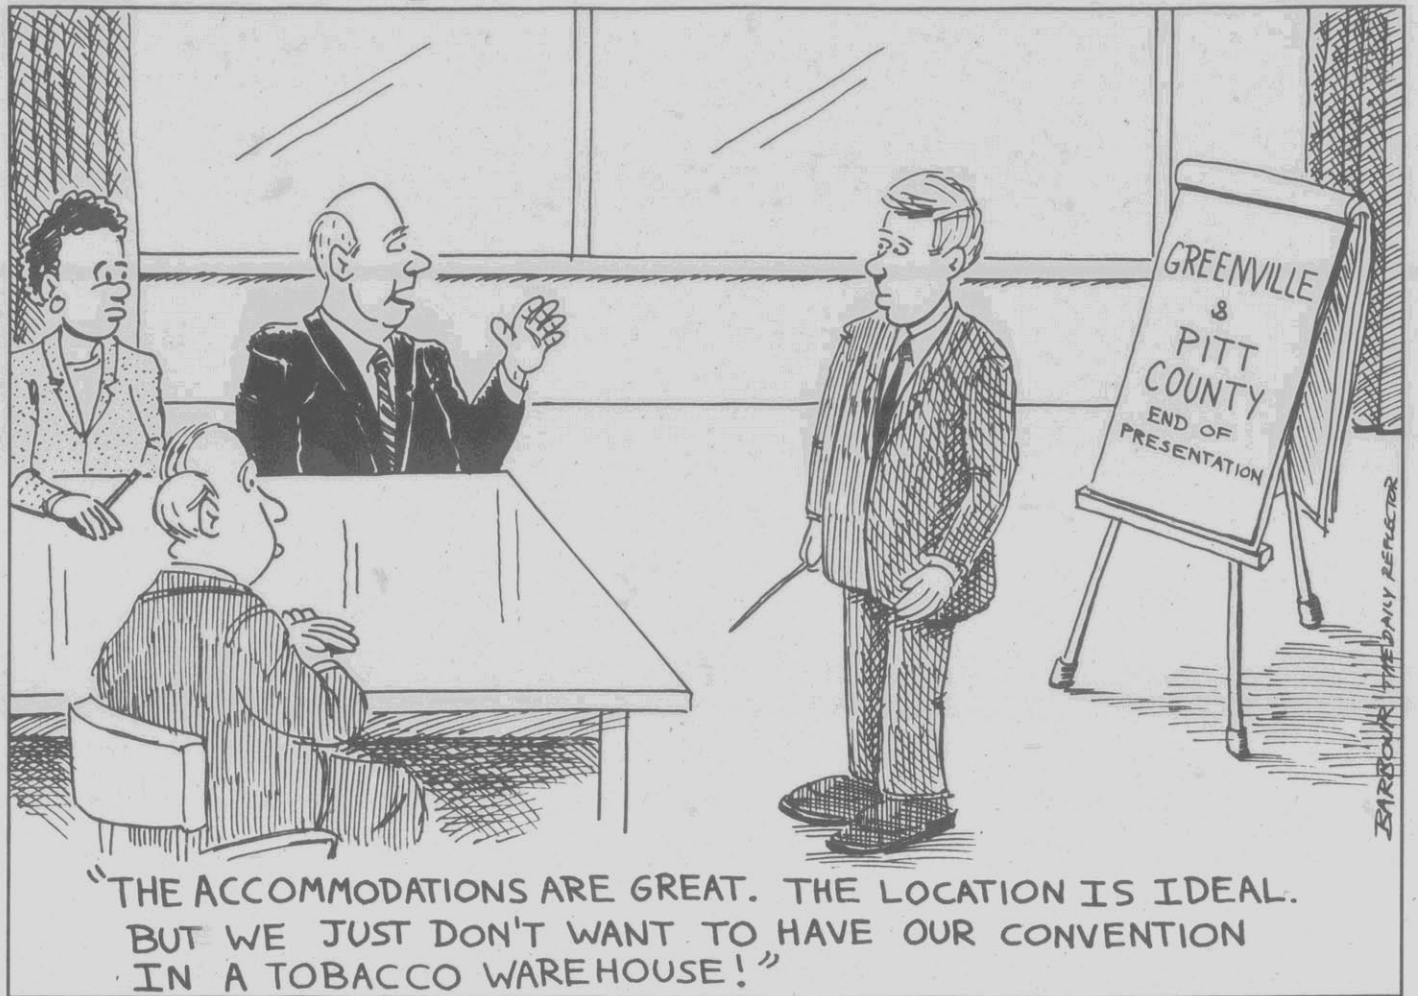

The sea is vast and eventually it will probably absorb more of the oil than will be recovered. In the meantime, however, the ecological damage will be severe.

We must have tighter controls over the oil shipping business ... and we must develop more efficient ways to clean up oil spills if they occur. A worldwide consortium of cleanup experts ready to be on the scene of a disaster in a very short amount of time would help contain damage.

But the question of safe operation cannot be ignored, especially in the case of the latest Alaska spill. There are large doubts about whether or not the tanker involved was properly piloted and whether regulations were being followed.

Those questions must be suitably answered and adequate cleanup resources provided. We only damage ourselves when we allow such situations to occur.

To the editor:

The big debate is on about the insertion of new courses into the public school system. The most important thing those in charge of picking books should consider right after which books to choose is how much does the chosen book weigh?

My daughter weighs a healthy 59 pounds. She is a good fifth grade student and works hard in the AG program at school. That's the good news. The bad news is the ratio of her weight to her school books.

Just for fun the other day, she weighed her books. They weighed in at a hefty 19 pounds. Suddenly all the backaches my daughter had been experiencing made sense.

Most nights three of my four children spend about two hours doing homework. I get home from college at 6 p.m. By the time we all finish with homework, it's bedtime. That's fine. We all like eating supper in bed. It's relaxing.

Anything worthwhile is worth working at. My complaint is not the amount of homework. But after weighing the matter, it would appear that spiral-bound books might better serve students. That way they could take home the pages assigned from the book for homework assignments and leave the rest of the book at school. For the subjects in which the entire book is needed, perhaps paperback books could replace heavy-bound books.

I have "weighted" long enough to write about this gripe which has been "heavy" on my mind. Perhaps the public schools system needs to lighten the course load before adding new courses to the curriculum. If I'm the heavy here, it's because I like my children, am walking softly and carrying a big stack of books to school.

To the editor:

Whatever happened to the democratic American way when it pertains to the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act?

As to the policy of our government in regard to programs dealing with specific issues involving a particular group, it is not intended that only the particular group pay for it.

For example: 1. Farm programs, not only the farmers are taxed. 2. Veteran programs, not only the veterans are taxed. 3. Educational programs, not only do the parents pay.

The legislators should be cognizant that it doesn't work thus in regard to the catastrophic insurance plan since only the over-65 seniors pay the bill.

Moreso, a special segment of the over-65 senior (the middle income group) bears the brunt of the cost because of the method of the premium range determination. And, the amount of the supplemental premium to be paid is based on the income tax the over-65 senior pays. Call it a surtax.

In America, a caring nation helping the needy in many lands, obviously the inequitable aspects of the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act have been overlooked. I'm compelled to question: Do our representatives have understanding and realization as to the differences between the democratic and democratic practices? Where is fairness?

Party Time

Celebrate Without Anesthesia

Pitt County high schools juniors and graduates will be invited to participate in a giant all-night party on graduation night.

The event will be staged in Minges coliseum from 10 p.m. to 5 a.m. After 11:30 there will be no further admittance.

Sounds like a graduate's dream bash? There's one hitch. Participants will agree not to use alcohol or other drugs on the day of graduation.

Greg Allinson is manager of the event. He is a member of the Pitt County Council on Substance Abuse.

Allinson, student representatives of the Pitt high schools, Mothers Against Drunk Driving, the Council on Substance Abuse and the Interfraternity Council at East Carolina University, joined forces to discuss the plans before community leaders and media representatives last week.

Other than booze all the ingredients for having fun will be there. There will be an area band, disc jockeys from two area radio stations, food and beverages, but only the non-alcoholic kind.

Money for staging the event has been raised through donations and there will be no charge to students who participate. Their only commitment will be to sign a contract agreeing not to use drugs or alcohol on graduation day.

Of course every eligible student will not attend and sponsors are hoping for 500 or more out of the 2,100 who are eligible.

That group, though, won't be among the inevitable news stories we see at graduation time about new graduates who are killed due to drunken driving.

In Pitt County there'll be pressures to go elsewhere where the booze flows to enjoy on the night of nights.

The answer to that is to just try it without the brain anesthetic. This big party can be just as much fun and the exhilaration of graduation, the music and dancing can be as memorable as anything on the big night.

It is a rare individual who doesn't want to celebrate on graduation night after 12 years of hard work.

It can be done without getting killed this year. A giant party has been provided for the asking.

Primitivism In The Midst Of Urbanity

CHICAGO — The police cruiser crawls, like a cockroach across worn linoleum, through the concrete and grassless dirt of an urban lunarscape called Cabrini Green. It is a public-housing project on the Near North Side, not far from the posh shops of Michigan Avenue's "Magnificent Mile" and cheek-by-jowl with some gentrified yuppydom.

George Will

This cluster of high-rise and half-abandoned buildings is a dispiriting beat for the two police officers who give their passenger a laconic lecture on their experiences as part of the half-hearted pretense of government in the project. They describe which gangs control which buildings, which weapons are used in the sporadic fire-fights that erupt between building-fortresses, how many foolhardy people have been hit by snipers while trying to cross the free-fire zone between buildings.

Public housing, particularly in high-rise configurations, usually is a concentration of pathologies. During today's drug plague, public housing has become recrudescence of the worst of the American frontier — Dodge City without a marshal.

So, you modern-day Jeffersonians, you who think that government is best that governs least: Welcome to your world. It is Hobbes' world, where life is always poor, nasty and brutish and often is short. Public housing here is anarchy tempered by juvenocracy — power wielded by adolescents.

Cabrini Green will eventually be eradicated by the most powerful and revered social force, the real-estate market. Developers are salivating for these 70 or so acres near good shopping. The concentrated pathologies will be shuffled away, perhaps even dispersed. But they will be re-concentrated daily in the public schools.

'In any city in any age, a walk among the underclass is apt to be a walk on the wild side, with glimpses of deeply moving bravery, tenacity and heroism in nurturing. However, the drug epidemic and the disintegration of families under the pounding of today's urban poverty is giving us a glimpse of how much social regression can occur in a modern society.'

In a series of hammer-blow reports, the Chicago Tribune has documented its characterization of this city's school system as "institutionalized child neglect." The bureaucracy and teachers' union are culprits. However, the reports rightly stress that two-thirds of the students live in poverty and come to school from environments of deprivation that would defeat the best intentions of even the best school system.

One high school provides day care for the children of its students, 90 percent of whom come from public housing. At another school, a 14-year-old girl is in her third pregnancy. "Another student," the Tribune reports, "sleeps with five other children on three piled-up mattresses in an unheated apartment. During the winter the boy often came to school smelling of urine because it was too cold for the smaller kids to get up and go to the bathroom at night." A teacher asks, "How can you learn when people tell you you smell of piss, and you do?"

Some sixth graders, never having used rulers, do not know how many inches are in a foot. Some eight-year-olds from homes without books tear pages from school books to use as toilet paper. Some children come to kindergarten still not toilet trained. There are first graders who have not learned numbers or colors. "A teacher," says a teacher, "cannot take mom and dad's place. What am I going to accomplish when mom doesn't take the time to pick up a can of peas and say, 'Green! Round! Peas!'"

This panorama of pain, waste and the perpetuation of squalor and violence is a chilling example of rebarbarization. It is the eruption of primitivism in the midst of urbanity. Let us have no more abstract arguments about the relative importance of nature and nurture in the formation of individuals. Look around here, and in all other cities, and you will see the consequences of the abandonment of nurturing.

In Anne Tyler's novel "Breathing Lessons," a woman attending classes to prepare for natural childbirth exclaims, "Breathing lessons — really. Don't they reckon I must know how to breathe by now?" To which a wise woman responds, "I remember leaving the hospital with Jesse and thinking, 'Wait. Are they going to let me just walk off with him? I don't know beans about babies.'"

She continues: "You're given all those lessons for the unimportant things — piano-playing, typing...But how about parenthood?...Before you can drive a car you need a state-approved course of instruction, but driving a car is nothing, nothing, compared to...raising up a new human being."

In any city in any age, a walk among the underclass is apt to be a walk on the wild side, with glimpses of deeply moving bravery, tenacity and heroism in nurturing. However, the drug epidemic and the disintegration of families under the pounding of today's urban poverty is giving us a glimpse of how much social regression can occur in a modern society.

What is called the "cycle" of poverty is actually a downward spiral. The spiral tightens, gaining speed, because so few people live in Cabrini Green and similar places who give, or learn, lessons in the important things.

Enough To Warrant Another Round At The Tavern

Paul O'Connor

RALEIGH — Late one evening last week, this reporter and two lobbyists entered a local tavern promising ourselves that we wouldn't discuss work. Halfway through our first brews, they broke their promise.

"I just don't know who's pulling the strings," one said. "I can't make any sense of the House."

These two lobbyists, and about a dozen others interviewed the next day, were expressing their frustration with the uncertain political situation in the state House of Representatives. Following the Jan. 12 overthrow of former House Speaker Liston Ramsey and the election to that post of Rep. Joe Mavretic, D-Edgecombe, very few people seem to know who is in charge.

The uncertainty is created by the lack of a working majority in the chamber. The coalition which elected Mavretic consisted of 20 Democrats and 45 Republicans. Another 54 Democrats stuck with Ramsey. One Republican didn't vote. That means that there is no majority, but at least three minorities, in the House: Republicans, Mavretic Democrats and Ramsey Democrats. (Gov. Jim Martin's tax plans may have also split the Republican delegation in two.)

"And the animosity is worse today than it was on January 12," one lobbyist said. "I don't think there are any factions," the other said, "everybody is kind of going off on their own."

If no one is running the House, then it will drift. If someone is and Mavretic is supposed to be, then the players in the game want to know who that person is. There's suspicion that Mavretic doesn't have control

yet. (In sports, they wear different colored uniforms so fans can discern the different teams. In the past, the different teams were the parties. No one handed out any uniforms this year.)

For the lobbyists, the problem is immediate. With filing deadlines approaching, they need to decide who they ask to sponsor their bills. They don't want their bills sponsored by someone in a weak faction because that could mean that the bill dies for political reasons, even before its merits are debated. "This is my retirement bill," one mid-30s lobbyist said about a bill for which he's seeking just the right sponsor. "If it passes, my retirement is safe. If it doesn't, I can retire now."

One veteran business lobbyist, approached in the Legislative Building, said he didn't know who "the real players are, and I don't know if we'll ever really figure it out. Of course, there are a bunch who want to be players."

Several legislators and lobbyists said that some of the confusion in the House is apparent to the naked eye. The House Human Resources Committee, for example, got mixed directives last week from the speaker and the appropriations chairman. One said to hold onto spending bills and the other said to send them to the appropriations committee. Rep. Mickey Micheaux, D-Durham, noted that the House rarely had what would be considered a full day's worth of floor work. Bills aren't getting through committee. "Things just are not organized the way they should be," he said.

The ramifications are clear. If someone doesn't grab control of the House the session will either drag on into late summer or the legislature will just adjourn without completing its work.

Both prospects were enough to warrant another round at the tavern.

Bush Says Nation Can't Afford Tuition Tax Credits For Private School Pupils

LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — President Bush, abandoning a campaign promise that was a high priority for many of his conservative supporters and many religious leaders, said Wednesday the government "can't afford" to provide tuition tax credits for parents who send their children to private schools.

Tuition tax credits have been an issue of particular importance for Catholic education officials. They have also been sought by conservative religious fundamentalists as tax relief for parents patronizing the growing number of Christian academies.

Republican strategists have seen the credits as a way of solidifying conservative support and attracting Catholic voters who traditionally have voted Democratic.

But teacher unions and public school advocates have contended the tuition measure would weaken support for public education and help primarily wealthy families, for whom a tax break would be more valuable.

"That's outstanding news," Frances Haywood, vice president of the United Teachers-Los Angeles, said when informed of Bush's remarks. "It's a great departure from the stance of the Republican party."

"I'm disappointed," said Bill Rivera spokesman for the Los Angeles Archdiocese, which sponsors the largest parochial school system in the nation with an enrollment of 100,000. "This president has called himself the 'education president' and he's ignoring a sizable segment of the American population in not recognizing the needs of parochial school students."

The GOP, and Bush, long have supported tax credits for private schools although the issue was not one on which Bush personally placed great emphasis during his campaign.

The 1988 Republican platform declared that "We will continue to support tuition tax credits for parents who choose to educate their children in private educational institutions." In responses to a newspaper questionnaire last year, Bush repeated his support for the tax credit plan.

But in answering questions from a group of about 75 high school students visiting the White House Wednesday afternoon, Bush said that while he had "been intrigued with the concept of tuition tax credits," he had decided that federal budget problems made the idea unworkable.

"So," he said, "I think everybody should support the public school system and then, if on top of that, your parents think that they want to shell out in addition to the tax money, tuition money, that's their right and that should be respected. But, I don't think they should get a break for that."

Barbara Bush Undergoing Treatment For Weight-Losing Thyroid Problem

By Lois Romano
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — Barbara Bush revealed in a White House luncheon with reporters Wednesday that she is being treated for a recently diagnosed hyperthyroid condition known as Graves' disease, which has caused an 18-pound weight loss in the past few months.

Responding to a question about her weight, the first lady said she was talking publicly about her illness because she was weary of speculation that she was on a diet. She also insisted that she felt fine.

"Now, please don't have me dying," she joked as her guests were leaving.

Barbara Bush's remarks during a two-hour session ranged from her advice — or lack of it — to the president to her views on her adopted city's well-publicized drug and crime problems. She also pointedly dispelled a popular misconception that she does her own hair. "I hate to break that myth, but you might as well know the truth. I have my hair done."

She even gave her guests a glimpse of her dog Millie's new litter of puppies. And with the enthusiasm of a professional guide, she offered a tour of her new digs, complete with history and background on the rooms.

But clearly, she had decided to use the opportunity to speak of her illness — and to do so without overdramatizing it.

She said she first suspected something was wrong just before the Inauguration, when her eyes started bothering her. "My eyes were very strange and it got worse and worse," she said. "They looked horrible — all puffy ... It came on in two months. The thyroid just went wacko."

Without that warning symptom, she said not altogether seriously, "I might have gone down to a Size 6!"

"How can any grown-up in America be so dumb as to think weight would just fall off?" she said.

After tests at Walter Reed Army Medical Center and Bethesda naval hospital, which included a thyroid scan and an electrocardiogram, she was diagnosed last week and put on medication six days ago.

Medical experts say there are three options when a patient's thyroid gland produces too much of the hormone thyroxine and triiodothyronine: surgery, a dose of radioactive iodine, or daily pills. The medication option, which is, Mrs. Bush's treatment, could last from six months to a year, at which time the patient is retested. The White House Wednesday released an advisory saying that she was taking a drug called methimazole, which blocks the production of thyroid hormones.

During lunch, the first lady said several times that she "never felt better," though she did concede, in response to a question, that she thought her condition made her a little tired.

But there were no signs of weariness apparent Wednesday. She looked fit and healthy in a bright red suit and her trademark faux pearls. She said she had gone for a swim in the White House pool the previous night — and planned another with the president Wednesday night.

Wednesday's meeting was the third such "round table" she has had with reporters — but the first lunch in the traditionally private family quarters.

Mrs. Bush talked at length about what she can do to help society — and she almost always returned to her ability to raise consciousness about her favorite project: literacy and education. Whether the social problem is AIDS or poverty or homelessness, the first lady said she believes reading and better education can help alleviate it.

"Everybody in Washington is ready to get our schools back, and to get our city back and get it safe, and I think they are ready to clean up corruption. And why not pick the nation's capital? ... I have told (drug czar William Bennett) I will help him in any way, shape or form I can."

Given her public statement in February, supporting a ban on the AK-47 assault weapon, she was predictably asked whether she had anything to do with the president's recent shift on the matter.

Her predictable response: "Absolutely nothing."

"He never discussed it with me," she said, of the Bush administration's temporary ban this month on the importation of semiautomatic assault weapons.

Her February remark on banning assault weapons was slightly out of character — though not out of personality — for a woman who has always insisted that she will not differ with her husband publicly. Nonetheless, she was asked if muzzling herself goes against her grain.

"I muzzled myself in about 1967 when George was elected to Congress. It's a decision I made many years ago that when I disagreed with George Bush it would be in private. Occasionally, I have had slippage but very rarely."

Street Grant

CHARLOTTE (AP) — Charlotte will get a $12.3 million federal grant to build a bus-car pool lane — the first in North Carolina — to ease traffic along the state's busiest non-freeway, East Independence Boulevard.

The grant, announced by Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., and Charlotte Mayor Sue Myrick, will go toward a $17.6 million high-occupancy-vehicle lane, to be built as part of a $100 million project to turn the overcrowded 44-year-old boulevard into a freeway.

The 28-foot-wide lane is designed for cars carrying at least three people and for buses. The lane will reverse — carrying traffic westbound toward uptown Charlotte in the mornings and eastbound away from Charlotte in the afternoons.

Klan Permits

WHITEVILLE, N.C. (AP) — The Christian Knights of the Ku Klux Klan have permits to march Sunday in three Columbus County communities.

The white-supremacist group will march in Whiteville, Chadbourne and Tabor City.

Tobacco Associates Chief Says Foreign Markets Hold Key

By Joe Taylor
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

American tobacco, under siege at home for health reasons, is just starting to catch on in Turkey, and that could improve the livelihood of farmer Jerry Jenkins and other growers of the leaf.

The future of tobacco grown in the United States is in the world's developing nations, according to Jenkins, a Virginia grower who is chairman of the board of the North Carolina-based Tobacco Associates.

"We've made a lot of progress there and it's been through encouraging these people to use a lot of U.S. tobacco in their blend," said the 51-year-old Jenkins, who produces 48,000 pounds of the flue-cured leaf each year on a 20-acre southside Virginia spread in Lunenburg County, near the border with Brunswick County.

Earlier this month, Jenkins was elected to a second one-year term as chairman of Tobacco Associates, a trade organization that promotes the sale of flue-cured tobacco worldwide. He is the only Virginian to head the board in the organization's 40-year history.

Tobacco Associates, with offices in Raleigh, N.C. and Washington, D.C., is involved primarily in the export market. The organization is composed of affiliated groups and gets its funding from assessments on flue-cured growers in Virginia, the Carolinas, Georgia and Florida.

Last year, Tobacco Associates began a pilot project in Turkey to help that country's tobacco monopoly develop U.S.-style cigarettes, Jenkins said. The new cigarettes proved to be very popular, and Jenkins said his organization is hoping to spread them elsewhere.

"Hopefully, we can expand this type of operation into some other countries," he said. "When people have a little more spendable income, they're able to buy a higher quality product."

Kirk Wayne, the D.C.-based president of Tobacco Associates, said Turkey purchased $9 million of U.S. flue-cured and burley tobacco last year. "That was a first-ever purchase from the United States," he said.

Overall, flue-cured leaf exports from this country amounted to 384 million pounds last year, up from 333 million pounds in 1987, Wayne said.

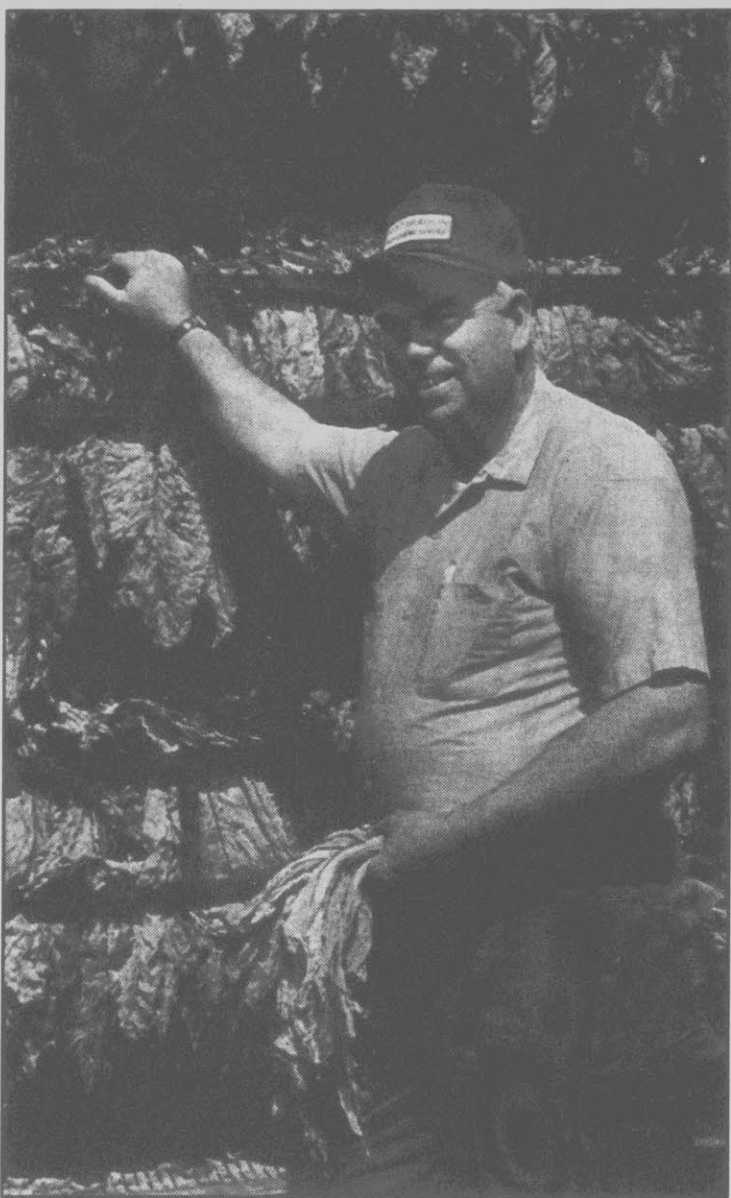

Jenkins has been involved in farming most of his life and has spent almost a quarter of a century running his own operation. He has seen the domestic tobacco market erode under what he sees as the twin burdens of adverse health publicity and taxes.

"Some states have taxes up where a pack of cigarettes costs more in tax than the product costs," he said. "You can tax the product to death."

The health warnings on cigarettes that list dangers to smokers from cancer and heart and lung ailments create social pressures to stop smoking, even though many people enjoy using tobacco, Jenkins said.

"It's kind of driven the smoking public into a corner," he said. "Even though some people want to smoke, you're getting a lot of peer pressure, and the appearance is that it's socially unacceptable."

The problems involved in selling to tobacco markets overseas are different, Jenkins said. Export difficulties relate less to health concerns and more to trade barriers, tariffs and other restrictions that protect monopolies of home-grown tobacco, he said.

Jenkins stands at the door of one of his tobacco curing barns

But the experiment with the Turkish tobacco monopoly and its U.S.-style cigarette has been encouraging, he said.

"It's caught on, and we're expecting some larger orders."

The overseas situation could help prevent domestic tobacco producers from going out of business, even though the market in the United States probably will stay about where it is, Jenkins said.

"As long as people are free to smoke, I don't think we'll see much change," he said.

Dredging To Begin

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — The beach at Hatteras Island, chewed away by a northeaster earlier this month, should get its first replacement sand this week in an effort to prevent damage to the Herbert C. Bonner bridge from future storms.

During the next two months, the state Department of Transportation plans to pump about 125,000 cubic yards of sand out of the sound onto South Point, where the bridge connects with the northern end of the Dare County island.

"The primary purpose is to try to get something out there to hold that point and protect that access to the bridge," said Archie Hankins, the hydraulics engineer with the DOT.

The state dredging is strictly to renourish the beach and will have no effect on the Oregon Inlet shipping channel, he said.

The inlet has been closed to boats since it shoaled to an impassable depth during the storms.

The U.S. Army Corps of Engineers is responsible for dredging the shipping channel. Officials from the the South Atlantic Division of the corps told Dare County officials Wednesday that they would try to find funds to open the channel and to keep it open for the rest of the fiscal year.

Prisoner Sues Over Injuries

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — A federal prisoner has filed suit against the government, saying that he was injured in a car accident while the U.S. Marshals Service transported him and that he was denied medical treatment.

John Leslie Leavis Jr. of Colorado, serving a 16-year sentence on federal cocaine charges, said he was riding in the back seat of a car driven by a deputy U.S. marshal in Wilson in 1987 when the vehicle hit the rear of another car at a stoplight.

Leavis, who was wearing handcuffs connected to chains around his waist and feet and no seat belt, said he had been thrown against a metal screen separating the front and rear seats.

He suffered cuts and bruises, lost consciousness and had severe injuries to his head, neck, arms, spine and nervous system, said the complaint, prepared and filed Tuesday in U.S. District Court by Raleigh lawyers Scott L. Wilkinson and Thomas P. McNamara.

Later, while he was being held in county jails in Fayetteville, Wilmington and Kinston and in federal prisons, he did not receive medical treatment, although he reported his injuries, the complaint said. In November 1987, he had a heart attack at a federal prison in Tallahassee, Fla., and his doctor told him the attack was brought on by his injury, pain and stress, he said.

Leavis seeks an unspecified amount of damages in excess of $10,000.

Judge Fixes Hatcher Bond At $1 Million

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SAN FRANCISCO — A lawyer for American Indian activist Eddie Hatcher said a judge's order setting his client's bail at $1 million is excessive and he will ask for a bail reduction in the next few weeks.

"The Municipal Court judge's order, issued Wednesday, was 'the court's way of denying my motion for bail,'" said attorney Harris Taback.

Hatcher is fighting extradition to North Carolina, where he faces charges of kidnapping 14 people in a protest at a newspaper office.

Hatcher's lawyers will seek a hearing before Gov. George Deukmejian, who must decide whether to approve the extradition request when it arrives from North Carolina, Taback said. Hatcher fears that his life would be in danger from law enforcement authorities in Robeson County, N.C., whom he has accused of drug-dealing and corruption.

Hatcher, 31, was arraigned before Judge Alfred Wollenberg two days after the federal government dropped an unlawful-flight charge and allowed his case to be transferred from federal to state court. The transfer lets Hatcher fight extradition by alleging that he would be in danger or could not get a fair trial in North Carolina.

Hatcher and Timothy Jacobs, 20, both Tuscarora Indians, were accused of holding as many as 20 people hostage for 10 hours in the offices of The Robesonian newspaper in Lumberton, N.C., in February 1988.

They said they were trying to draw attention to their claims of official corruption. A task force formed by Gov. Jim Martin concluded later that the claims were unfounded.

The two men were tried and acquitted in federal court on hostage-taking and firearms charges, but then were indicted by a Robeson County grand jury last December on state kidnapping charges.

Jacobs was arrested in New York state and returned last week to Lumberton, where bail was set at $100,000. Hatcher was arrested in San Francisco after unsuccessfully seeking asylum at the Soviet consulate March 10.

Wollenberg scheduled a hearing May 2 to determine whether Deukmejian had approved the extradition papers. Taback said a hearing would be sought before then with a representative of the Republican governor to ask him to deny extradition.

Taft Panel Holds Hearing On Runoffs

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — The debate over runoff primaries has resurfaced in the General Assembly, with black legislators pushing for abolition of a system they say has prevented minorities and women from being nominated for public offices.

The Senate Election Laws Committee took no vote on a bill to abolish runoffs Wednesday after an hour-long hearing. The chairman, Sen. Tom Taft, D-Pitt, said he was not sure when the panel would vote.

North Carolina is one of 10 states, all in the South, that allow second-place finishers in primary elections to call a runoff if the front-runner did not receive more than 50 percent of the vote.

Many black leaders say the runoff is racially discriminatory. They contend black candidates often finish first in a multi-candidate primary, only to lose in the runoff against a single white opponent.

An example frequently cited is state Rep. Mickey Michaux, a black Durham attorney, who received nearly 45 percent of the vote over two white opponents in the 1982 Democratic primary for the 2nd District congressional seat. He lost to Tim Valentine, a former state legislator from Nashville, in the runoff.

Valentine won the general election and has been re-elected three times.

"It is clear from everything that I've read and researched ... that the second primary works to disadvantage black citizens when they seek to gain the nomination of a particular party," said Kelly Alexander Jr., state president of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Sen. Jim Johnson, R-Cabarrus, co-sponsor of the bill with Sen. Ralph Hunt, D-Durham, said, "Being honest about it, (the runoff) is primarily to keep minorities from getting an opportunity to get into office. It's one of the last vestiges of the Southern heritage of trying to do that."

The front-runner in the first primary lost in the runoff 32 times since second primaries were established in 1915, Hunt said.

At its state convention last year, the Democratic Party adopted a resolution calling for abolition of second primaries. Alexander said the resolution wasn't sought by the party leadership, but was proposed by rank-and-file delegates who "believed that the second primary had served its purpose and needed to be relegated to the ash can of history."

But many Democrats oppose the change, fearing it would improve the GOP's chances of winning elections on the theory that it would be easier for a white Republican to defeat a black Democrat than a white Democrat.

"The theory of second primaries is to attempt to get a candidate who is popular enough with his own party to be able perhaps to win in the gen-

Billboard Tax Hike Proposed

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — City and county property taxes on billboards will increase next year — possibly doubling — under a new formula the state Department of Revenue will recommend to county tax assessors.

For years, most local governments have followed a state-recommended formula to tax signs at half their original construction cost — a fraction of their value. Revenue Secretary Helen Powers said Wednesday that the new formula recommended by the state will be based on the full cost of replacing a billboard, minus depreciation as the signs get older.

"I guess it would be fair to say (local tax offices) would get increased revenue from the formula we recommend, as well as listing more billboards," she said.

Revenue Department officials said they did not know how much more billboard tax money local governments would collect under the new recommendation.

Miss Powers said tax assessors were more aware now that numerous signs are not on the tax books.

"They're gonna get more signs listed," she said. "That's where you're going to get the money."

Senate Panel Wants Stickers Banned

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — A civil libertarian says a bill to outlaw obscene bumper stickers in North Carolina is unconstitutional, but his warning didn't stop the Senate Transportation Committee from giving it unanimous approval.

The bill cleared the panel 9-0 and was sent to the floor Wednesday. The committee actually voted twice, unanimously approving the measure before realizing that a representative of the North Carolina Civil Liberties Union hadn't been given a chance to speak.

After Joel Newman, a NCCLU board member and Wake Forest University law professor, commented on the bill, the committee passed it a second time with equal enthusiasm.

"It just frightens me that the civil liberties union would even support leaving those words on the cars in any fashion, in any way," Sen. Marc Basnight, D-Dare, told Newman. "If you believe the words you have spoken, you certainly have the right to speak them and I certainly have a right to try to defeat your philosophy."

The committee voted after a subcommittee offered an amendment with revised language in an effort to avoid running afoul of the U.S. Constitution's guarantee of free speech.

The new wording would outlaw stickers with "indecent words describing sexual acts, excretory functions, or parts of the human body or a visual description which is harmful to minors."

"Indecent" and "harmful to minors" are terms defined in a South Carolina anti-obscenity law that has been upheld by the Supreme Court, said Sen. Fountain Odom, D-Mecklenburg.

But Newman said the bill was still unconstitutional, citing a Supreme Court ruling in the 1970s upholding a man's right to wear a sign making an obscene reference to the draft board.

He said he has two children and does not like some of the bumper stickers he sees. "But I find that putting up with these offensive things is the price I have to pay for freedom," he said.

The courts have been especially protective of speech "in the street," he said. While only a few individuals and groups can afford to advertise their views on television and in the printed media, "putting a bumper sticker on one's car is something that virtually everyone can do," Newman said.

If the bill passes, he said in an interview, he'll urge the NCCLU to challenge it in court.

Sen. Aaron Plyler, D-Union, the bill's sponsor, passed around photocopies of some stickers he called offensive. But Newman said some of them did not include words that would meet the bill's criteria for obscenity.

If the North Carolina bill is passed, violators would be subject to a $50 fine.

Workers pull boom across Alaska's Chenega Bay in effort to keep oil from salmon hatcheries

Salmon Fishermen Use Booms To Save Hatcheries From Spreading Oil Slick

By Hal Spencer
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

VALDEZ, Alaska — With the nation's largest oil spill growing to 500 square miles, the governor said he hopes it snakes out of Prince William Sound instead of "bouncing around like a pinball" and polluting for years.

Desperate commercial fishermen deployed booms in the sound to protect salmon hatcheries, and state officials worried about the fragile image of Alaska's billion-dollar fishing industry.

A newspaper, meanwhile, reported today that a barge intended as a key piece of equipment against oil spills was not working Friday when the 987-foot Exxon Valdez struck a charted reef 25 miles from Port Valdez. Furthermore, The Wall Street Journal reported, the company that operates the barge conceded it violated its own requirement to notify state environmental officials that the vessel was out of commission.

The tanker had just loaded 1.2 million barrels of crude oil from Alaska's North Slope.

Exxon said about 450,000 barrels had been transferred from the grounded tanker to the Exxon Baton Rouge by Wednesday evening, and loading of the remaining oil into another vessel was to begin today.

The Exxon Valdez may be refloated this weekend, company officials said.

Exxon, which has been heavily criticized for its response to the 10.1 million gallon spill, said it will re-evaluate how it handles such problems.

"Now that (the spill) has happened, it's incumbent on us and the industry to profit in the maximum extent from the experience," said William Stevens, president of Exxon USA, the parent of the Exxon Shipping Co. Inc.

"Certainly we will be going back to relook at contingency plans, not only here in Valdez," but in other sensitive areas, he said Wednesday.

The response to the spill also may have been slowed by the unavailability of Aleska Pipeline Service Co.'s cleanup barge. The barge was supposed to have 7,000 feet of oil-restraining booms but had been disabled by a storm and was in drydock for two weeks before the spill, the Journal reported. Chuck O'Donnell, a supervisor for the company, which operates the pipeline, said the failure to notify the state environmental department about the barge being disabled was a technical violation of the consortium's cleanup plans.

President Bush, meanwhile, was to meet in Washington today with the three senior administration of-

Ways to Clean Up Oil Spills

Mechanical

- Floating booms contain the spill near the source or block it from sensitive areas
- Skimmer boats herd the oil together to be vacuumed up onto collection barges
- Strings of absorbent pads soak up oil on beaches and in water too shallow for skimmer boats

Fire

- Oil must be fairly concentrated to burn, and crude is hard to ignite
- Chemical burning agents and lasers improve effectiveness

Chemical

- Coagulating agents cause floating crude to gather together for easier pickup, or sink to the bottom where it does less harm
- Dispersing agents break slicks
- Disadvantage: Chemical agents are pollutants just as the oil is

Natural

- Wind and wave action emulsify some oil into the water (like shaking salad dressing)
- Bacteria consume some crude over time move southwest.

Valdez Mayor John Devens has estimated the loss to the fishing industry at $150 million.

Rick Steiner, a spokesman for Cordova District Fishermen United, said at least 30 fishing boats would be out today trying to protect sensitive areas around several islands on the west side of Prince William Sound.

Wind and currents have stretched the slick into ragged patches of shifting iridescent oil on crystal blue water. Oil can be found 60 miles from the grounded ship. The heavy goo surrounds several islands — gravel beaches and rocky points smeared with a black band of oil.

Exxon spokesman Don Cornett said Wednesday that only 6,000 barrels of oil had been recovered from the sea.

By nightfall Wednesday, at least half a dozen tankers remained near the entrance to the sound, awaiting their turn to pass through the reopened harbor and load crude oil at the pipeline terminal. The port was closed after the spill to prevent what the Coast Guard called "secondary pollution" — oil carried into the harbor by boats passing through polluted waters.

Despite fears of immediate damage to the fisheries, some officials warned the worst may lie ahead.

"This spill will devastate the ecosystem long after wildlife that now has been exposed has died," said Jon Lyman, a spokesman for the Alaska Department of Fish and Game. He said thousands of birds, including bald eagles, may die in the coming years.

In another development, the National Transportation Safety Board was told the Exxon Valdez's skipper appeared "competent" shortly after the accident.

William Woody, chief of the four-member NTSB team assigned to the disaster, said a Coast Guard officer identified as Mark Delozer told investigators he smelled alcohol on the breath of Capt. Joseph Hazelwood a few hours after the ship hit Bligh Reef. But Delozer and harbor pilot Ed Murphy agreed Hazelwood appeared competent, Woody said.

Exxon officials said Hazelwood was not on the bridge when the accident occurred one-half mile beyond established shipping lanes. Third mate Gregory Cousins was giving the orders.

On the advice of their lawyers, Hazelwood and Cousins have refused to talk to investigators, Woody said, delaying a public inquiry by perhaps weeks.

Alaska Public Safety Commissioner Art English said state troopers are making preliminary inquiries as the possible prelude to a criminal investigation.

officials he had sent to Alaska to decide whether to order a federal takeover of cleanup operations. Press Secretary Marlin Fitzwater, however, said the president was leaning against such a step.

On Wednesday, a private oil cleanup firm hired by the state dropped more than 20,000 feet of boom to fishermen trying to protect three pink salmon hatcheries and other environmentally sensitive areas in the sound.

"I think it's clear that we're going to have to have some kind of test, and that the people who buy our fish are going to have to be assured that those fish are not going to be contaminated because of oil," Gov. Steve Cowper said.

The oil is headed toward the Montague Strait, an outlet to the Gulf of Alaska, and Cowper said that is where everyone hopes the oil goes, "rather than bouncing around like a pinball in Prince William Sound and polluting it for years."

Once in the gulf, however, the oil could jeopardize valuable fisheries around Kodiak if it continued to

Federal Takeover Of Alaskan Oil Cleanup Reported Unlikely

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — President Bush is leaning against a federal takeover of the cleanup of Alaska's oil-polluted Prince William Sound, but wants to hear reports from three administration officials before making a decision, his spokesman says.

Bush was to meet today with Transportation Secretary Samuel Skinner, Environmental Protection Agency Administrator Bill Reilly and Coast Guard Commandant Paul Yost on their return from a two-day tour of the site of the grounded tanker Exxon Valdez.

Although Bush earlier in the week had mentioned a federal takeover as an option, press secretary Marlin Fitzwater told reporters on Wednesday. "I would guide you a little bit away from that."

"I think the preliminary feeling is that the resources are there on the job, and probably as effective as they might be, even under some kind of federal direction. So we would not rush into that step quickly," Fitzwater said.

Bush spoke briefly with Skinner by phone on Wednesday. Fitzwater said the transportation secretary told Bush the cleanup was one of "good cooperation" between Exxon, the state, local authorities and fishermen.

"They didn't have any conclusions to report ... other than to say that they felt there was good cooperation among the cleanup parties involved there, that everyone appeared to be dedicated and working as hard as possible," Fitzwater said.

Other administration officials, who spoke on the condition of anonymity, said a federal takeover of the cleanup now appears to be a remote possibility — although the government stands ready to provide more equipment and personnel if needed.

The fast-moving oil slick covered more than 500 square miles. The largest oil spill in the nation's history was caused when the tanker ran aground on a reef six days ago.

First U.S. Commercial Space Launch Succeeds

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS
WHITE SANDS MISSILE RANGE, N.M. — U.S. industry was launched into the space exploration business with the blastoff of the first cased commercial spacecraft, officials said.
 The successful, 15-minute sub-orbital voyage Wednesday of the Consort 1 should convince potential investors and customers that private businesses can send a payload into space safely and reliably, said Carol Lane, director of the Department of Transportation office that issued the pioneer launch license.
 "I think we'll see growth," she said minutes after the slender rocket shot its payload of scientific experiments 178 miles high. "The commercial space industry has been slow to develop, and this is one of the most positive developments we've seen in a long time."

 The 630-pound payload capsule went through about seven minutes of near weightlessness, then parachuted gently onto the desert floor of White Sands Missile Range about 58 miles north of the launch pad.
 A preliminary look at the payload contents showed the flight was successful, said David Dooling, spokesman for the University of Alabama-Huntsville, which sponsored the project.
 "As far as we can tell, the scientific instruments worked well, but we don't have any results yet," he said. "We think this is an outstanding beginning, not only for space exploration but for space experimentation."

 The payload included experiments designed to measure how liquids mix in weightlessness, how plastic foam forms and cures, how liquids coat glass surfaces, how epoxy reacts in weightlessness and how finely powdered metals bond under high temperature to produce alloys.
 About 100 spectators cheered as the rocket streaked from its launch pad, spewing yellow flame and leaving a white trail.

The rocket dropped its first stage six seconds and more than a mile into the voyage, and disappeared from sight in about 25 seconds.
 Most of the observers were employees or family members of employees of Space Services Inc., the Houston-based company that provided the rocket and launch services for the Consort 1.
 Space Services launched the Consort 1 rocket in September 1982, the first space shot by a private company. That rocket carried a dummy payload, and the launch was carried out before the Transportation Department had formulated guidelines for licensing private spacecraft.

 The Consort 1 was the first to be licensed and carry a real payload.
 To launch Conestoga 1, Space Services had to deal with 18 government agencies. The Reagan administration directed the Transportation Department to issue launch licenses and cut through government red tape on private industry's behalf.
 "When we went up in '82, there was no infrastructure for commercial launches," said Bill Vance, Space Services' vice president of finance and administration. "We've been working a long time to put up a successful launch. It's been a six-year countdown. We've been on long hold."

 The Consort 1 was a suborbital voyage, meaning it went into space and back down again without circling the earth. But Space Services plans a much more ambitious project to put a satellite into orbit, possibly late next year, company spokesman Mark Daniels said.
 The cost of the Consort 1 has been pegged at $1 million to $2 million, Daniels said he expects Space Services' annual revenues to reach $100 million to $500 million once it starts sending satellites into orbit.

W.Va. Treasurer Faces Removal

CHARLESTON, W.Va. (AP) — State Treasurer A. James Manchin vowed he would remain in office even though he was impeached for the loss of $279 million in an investment fund he oversaw.
 "When you consider the leadership of the House ... that's behind all of this, and how they've been twisting arms and pushing, I'm not surprised at the outcome of this vote," Manchin said after the House of Delegates voted 65-34 to impeach him on 17 of 18 articles Wednesday.
 "I have committed no wrong. I'm going to stay around as long as I can."
 The 61-year-old two-term Democrat said he would remain in office even though conviction in the Senate would mean that he could never run for office again and the immediate loss of his $50,000 a year job. It likely would jeopardize a pension estimated at $2,128 a month, too.
 He faces removal from office if convicted by a two-thirds vote of the 34-member Senate.
 Senate President Larry Tucker said that in consultation with state Supreme Court Chief Justice W.T. Brotherton Jr., he has set a tentative date of June 12 to begin what he expects to be a monthlong trial. Brotherton will act as chief judge at the impeachment trial.
 The impeachment resolution blamed Manchin for delegating too much authority and failing to supervise the consolidated investment fund, where the losses occurred primarily in April, May and June 1987.
 The resolution also blamed him with making improper investments with state fund, paying out interest that was not earned and covering up the losses.
 The House vote came after more than six hours of debate Wednesday.

Jury Convicts Trio In Officer's Death

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS
NEW YORK — Three admitted drug dealers were convicted in the murder of a rookie policeman whose death gained national prominence in last year's presidential election and led to a major drive against drug traffickers.
 Scott Cobb, 25, Todd Scott, 20, and Philip Copeland, 23, were found guilty of second-degree murder and weapons charges Wednesday evening after two days of jury deliberations.
 All three verdicts were met in the crowded courtroom by cheers and applause from police officers and friends and family of slain Officer Edward Byrne.
 Speaking to reporters afterward, Matthew Byrne said his son's murder was "meant to send a message to society" about the power of the drug dealers. The guilty verdicts, he said, send "a message from society ... don't kill cops."
 Prosecutors said Byrne was killed early in the morning of Feb. 26, 1988, on orders from Howard "Pappy" Mason, a jailed drug lord who was seeking revenge for his weapons conviction earlier that week.
 Byrne was shot five times in the head at close range as he sat alone in a patrol car guarding the home of a witness in a drug case in the borough of Queens.
 In the wake of the slaying, police established the Tactical Narcotics Team, which put a heavy police presence in the area. The program has since been extended to other drug-plagued neighborhoods and has resulted in thousands of arrests.
 Byrne's slaying also gained national attention during last year's presidential election when the officer's father presented his son's shield to then Vice President George Bush at a rally.
 The elder Byrne supported Bush's pro-death penalty stance. New York state does not have the death penalty.
 The defendants each face a maximum sentence of 25 years to life on the murder charges and five to 15 years on the second-degree criminal possession of a weapon convictions.
 A fourth defendant, David McClary, is to be tried later.
 Lawyers for the three convicted Wednesday promised appeals.

Iran-Contra Probe Skipped Reagan

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The defense for Oliver North underscored its argument that Ronald Reagan should testify, showing through a Justice Department witness that the former president was never questioned by the attorney general's staff about arms shipments to Iran in 1985.

But Reagan objected Wednesday to the possibility of having to appear at North's trial, saying through his lawyer that it hasn't been shown his testimony is needed.

The same day that Reagan made his objection, Justice Department official Charles Cooper said the attorney general's aides never followed through with plans to interview Reagan about the November 1985 shipment of Hawk missiles from Israel to Iran.

The CIA had arranged for an agency-run airline to handle the shipment, which took place without prior presidential approval. Reagan signed a finding of approval after the weapons were delivered.

Cooper said the fact-finding mission in November 1986 on the administration's secret Iran arms initiative was "overwhelmed" when North confirmed on Nov. 23, 1986, that money had been diverted to the Contras.

"Did anybody think to ask ... 'Why not ask the president what he knows' about the 1985 arms shipment?" defense lawyer Brendan Sullivan asked Cooper.

"The decision was made to interview the president ... after we had interviewed" everyone else with knowledge of the shipment, Cooper replied.

The 1985 Hawk shipment "receded in its importance" on Nov. 22, 1986, said Cooper, when aides to then-Attorney General Edwin Meese III discovered a memo North had written outlining a planned diversion of money to the Contras.

The diversion of Iran arms sale money to the Contras "had the potential to bring the conclusion of President's Reagan's term," said Cooper.

North is accused of obstructing Congress by preparing a false chronology that stated no one in the U.S. government knew until January 1986 that the 1985 shipment contained arms.

Cooper said that at a Nov. 20, 1986, White House meeting, North provided a proposed addition to CIA Director William Casey's testimony the next day to Congress on the 1985 shipment.

North's addition included the statement that no one in the government knew the contents of the 1985 shipment at the time.

Cooper said he found out after the meeting that Secretary of State George Shultz had been briefed on the Hawk shipment before it occurred by then-national security adviser Robert McFarlane.

Reagan, who was eventually interviewed by the Tower Commission on the matter, initially told the panel he had objected to the shipment.

But Reagan later stated that both he and White House Chief of Staff Donald Regan agreed they couldn't recall any meeting or conversation about the Hawk shipment.

Junk Bond Wizard Michael Milken, Two Others Indicted In Racketeering Probe

Federal Prosecutors Seek $12 Million In Penalties, Long Prison Terms

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Prosecutors are seeking staggering prison terms and more than $12 billion in penalties against junk bond wizard Michael R. Milken and two others in the largest criminal action against a Wall Street trader.

The Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc. executive was indicted by a federal grand jury Wednesday along with his 40-year-old brother, Lowell J. Milken, and Bruce Lee Newberg, a former trader for Drexel, the nation's fifth-largest securities firm.

The long-expected indictment charged the three with turning Drexel into a billion dollar racketeering enterprise that used Drexel's junk bond department for a series of securities frauds with various unindicted co-conspirators. Among them are the imprisoned Ivan Boesky and members of the defunct investment partnership, Princeton-Newport Partners.

Among other things, the indictment accused Milken of using illegal inside information about merger proposals to arrange deals and manipulate stocks.

U.S. Attorney Benito Romano said the racketeering penalties were the most ever sought against individuals under the 19-year-old federal Racketeer Influenced, Corrupt Organizations Act.

But defense lawyers attacked the 98-count indictment as an abuse of prosecutorial power and a tool to wrench cooperation from other Drexel employees.

They called the charges a "perversion" of the racketeering act, which was established principally to combat organized crime but is used increasingly to prosecute white-collar criminals.

"I think it is outrageous to use RICO in a circumstance like this," said Michael Armstrong, an attorney for Lowell Milken. "They applied the statute to behavior which for the most part has not been considered even to be criminal, much less the subject of a racketeering indictment."

The three defendants denied wrongdoing and said they would plead innocent.

"After almost 2½ years of leaks and distortions I am now eager to present all the facts in an open and unbiased forum," Michael Milken said in a statement.

Milken, 42, has headed Drexel's junk bond department since the mid-1970s and is credited with revolutionizing corporate takeovers by relying on the highly risky, high yielding securities, turning them into a $175 billion annual market. The bonds also are often used to help small and medium-size companies grow.

The indictment described the Beverly Hills, Calif.-based junk bond department as "the driving force behind Drexel's business" noting that between 1983 and 1987 it accounted for nearly half of Drexel's profits.

If convicted on the racketeering counts alone, each defendant would face maximum fines of $3.7 billion, roughly double their alleged illicit profits. All three face maximum prison sentences of 20 years on each of two racketeering charges, prosecutors said.

In addition, the three are subject to forfeiture proceedings on virtually all money they have made through their Drexel dealings since 1984, an estimated $1.85 billion. That includes $1.2 billion in salaries, $112 million in Drexel stock, $205 million in corporate finance fees, $37 million in trading profits on allegedly tainted deals and $257 million in interest.

Michael Milken also was charged with all of the 96 non-racketeering counts, which include numerous mail, wire and securities frauds. His brother was charged with 11 counts and Newberg with 20 counts.

If convicted of the non-racketeering charges, each would face a maximum penalty of five years in prison and at least $250,000 in fines per count, making Michael Milken subject to $24 million in fines and a total of 520 years imprisonment.

The indictment paralleled the Securities and Exchange Commission's sweeping civil insider trading action against Drexel, Milken and others last September.

In December, Drexel struck a plea bargain with prosecutors that called for the dismissal of Milken and the withholding of most of his 1988 compensation — estimated at between $100 million and $200 million.

As part of the agreement, which Drexel said it made to avoid crippling racketeering charges, the firm agreed to plead guilty to six federal felony charges and pay a record $650 million in fines and penalties.

Drexel has not yet pleaded to the charges and settlement of the criminal case remained subject to SEC approval.

A Drexel statement said the Milken had been placed on leave of absence.

First Agent Orange Grants Being Made

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The first of many grants to social service agencies serving Vietnam veterans and their families is being made today from a $32 million fund created by the settlement of the Agent Orange lawsuit.

The money is part of a $240 million settlement of a class action suit brought more than 10 years ago by veterans who claimed exposure to the defoliant Agent Orange during the Vietnam War caused cancer, birth defects in their children and other illnesses.

The chemical was sprayed over Southeast Asia during the 1960s by the U.S. military, which hoped to deprive communist troops of crops and cover.

A large portion of the settlement, $170 million, has been allocated to the Agent Orange Veteran Payment Program, which provides cash payments to totally disabled Vietnam veterans and to the widows or children of veterans who died. Distribution of these payments began earlier this month.

The remaining settlement money went to attorneys' fees and to Australian and New Zealand military personnel who were exposed to Agent Orange in Vietnam.

The Agent Orange Class Assistance Program, from which today's grants come, was designed to reach veterans and their families who do not meet the eligibility requirements for direct payments.

The assistance program "would maximize the value of the settlement fund by providing useful services to a large number of exposed veterans and their families, rather than adding smaller dollar amounts to those claimants found eligible for cash compensation awards," U.S. District Judge Jack B. Weinstein of Brooklyn said in court papers last year.

Weinstein has been handling the case since its inception in 1978. The settlement was reached in 1984 on the eve of trial when the veterans and defendants, seven manufacturers of Agent Orange, agreed to the terms.

Years of subsequent legal challenges to the settlement ended last June when the U.S. Supreme Court upheld it.

The first eight grants from the assistance program will be announced at a news conference held by the program's executive director, Dennis Rhoades.

Slow-Moving Agents Dry Up Drug Funds

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Federal agents trying to penetrate the illegal drug world set up an undercover money-laundering operation in Atlanta two years ago and soon ran into complaints. They were working too slowly to suit their clients.

The undercover investigators were told to look at La Mina, or "The Mine," a Los Angeles-based operation. It could launder illegal drug profits and have the money wired back to drug kingpins in Latin America in 48 hours, they were told.

Federal authorities did just that. On Wednesday they announced the culmination of an investigation that they say smashed the La Mina operation, which had laundered $1.2 billion in drug proceeds over those two years.

"I think it's fair to describe this operation as a very hostile takeover of a major money laundering operation," Attorney General Dick Thornburgh said.

Thornburgh, FBI Director William Sessions and other law enforcement officials said their "Operation Polar Cap" ended with federal drug and money-laundering charges against 127 people and two Latin American banks.

Thornburgh called the investigation "the largest money-laundering crackdown ever carried out by the federal government." He said the operation had direct ties to the Medellín cartel of Colombia, which authorities say is responsible for 80 percent of the cocaine flowing into the United States.

But Justice officials ran into problems closing their net.

Plans to arrest defendant Eduardo Martinez in Panama apparently depended on the assistance of the Panamanian Defense Forces headed by Gen. Manuel Noriega, who is himself under federal indictment.

Justice officials said Martinez, who is from Medellín, Colombia, had holed up in a Panamanian bank on Wednesday and was surrounded by Noriega's forces.

"Mr. Martinez is inside the bank and won't come out," Thornburgh told reporters at lunch Wednesday.

But by late afternoon, chagrined Justice Department officials said Martinez had eluded them and was not in the bank.

Noriega himself is under a federal indictment for drug trafficking, and his relations with U.S. officials were an issue in last year's presidential campaign.

Despite that indictment, Thornburgh and Drug Enforcement Agency administrator John Latham had said the Panamanian authorities were cooperating with U.S. officials.

At a news conference announcing the end of the drug money laundering investigation, Thornburgh and other law enforcement officials said the government had seized a half ton of cocaine and $45 million in cash, jewels and real estate in connection with the investigation.

The government also filed civil actions in an effort to seize as much as $412 million more in U.S. assets of two banks, Banco de Occidente of Panama and Banco de Occidente of Colombia, that allegedly agreed to receive wire transfers of the laundered money.

Justice Department lawyers and court documents said the money was laundered through a variety of methods, most involving sophisticated and complex financial arrangements.

In some cases, phony records of transactions through Los Angeles jewelry dealers were used to create what appeared to be legitimate sources for the money.

Peter Djimis, a department narcotics attorney, said La Mina moved millions of dollars in cash by commercial armored trucks hired to drive back and forth between New York and Los Angeles.

Their cargo was identified as jewelry or gold to be smelted, but it actually was cash, he said. Proceeds were later wired to banks in Latin America after being obscured by fictitious invoices, bills of lading and payments for jewelry, he said.

In other cases, he said, large sums were moved through a complex network of accounts at various banks across the country, splintering into many smaller accounts in order to make the sources difficult to identify.

New Court Stays Simmons Death

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — The execution of convicted mass murderer R. Gene Simmons, who has said he wants to die, has been blocked a fourth time.

The 8th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals on Wednesday became the fourth court to stay Simmons' execution by lethal injection.

Simmons has been convicted by two juries of 16 murders, including 14 members of his family, and the wounding of four others.

"Let the torture and suffering in me end," Simmons said after his first conviction. He has declined to appeal.

But courts have allowed others to intervene and succeed in efforts to block his execution.

The most recent postponement came March 15 from the U.S. Supreme Court on the eve of Simmons' last scheduled execution date. The nation's highest court ruled upon the petition of death row inmate Jonas Whitmore, who contends a review is mandated in capital cases.

Gov. Bill Clinton then set April 5 as a new execution date. But the appeals court Wednesday decided to delay the execution to allow time for consideration of issues raised in both sets of killings.

The bodies of 14 relatives were found in and around Simmons' home near Dover. The family victims included Simmons' wife, children, two of the children's spouses, and four of Simmons' grandchildren.

Officers went to the home after Simmons surrendered on Dec. 28, 1987, following a 40-minute shooting spree in Russellville in which he killed a woman who had complained about his amorous advances and a man who apparently was shot when he chanced upon Simmons' rampage.

Meanwhile in Russellville, officials suspect arson in a fire which destroyed Simmons' vacant former home.

"There's no electricity, no gas, no utility connected to the house," said Dwayne Luter, the fire marshal. "Nothing there to start the fire accidentally."

The home has been hit by vandalism since it was left vacant after authorities completed their investigation in early 1988. The house was sold at auction to the woman from whom Simmons bought the property.

An anonymous caller tipped officials at Russellville on Wednesday that the house was on fire, said Ormond Peters, a dispatcher for the Pope County Emergency Medical Service.

U.S. Asks Soviets To Limit Activity

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Secretary of State James A. Baker III appealed to the Soviet Union today to limit its export of arms and ideology to Latin America.

"We are looking for signs of new thinking," Baker said. "The Soviet Union now has an opportunity to demonstrate it in Central America."

Baker's appeal was in a speech prepared for a conference in Atlanta hosted by former Presidents Carter and Ford.

Baker said the Bush administration was committed to work with leaders of the hemispheric democracies to promote political solutions to armed conflicts.

He cited as an example last week's accord with Congress providing aid for Nicaraguan Contra rebels and support for regional peace efforts.

However, Baker said, "the United States will never support a paper agreement that sells out the Nicaraguan people's right to be free." Nor, he said, "should any other democracy in this hemisphere."

Directing his remarks to the Soviet Union and others who support the Marxist government in Nicaragua, Baker said: "We must send a clear message to others outside this hemisphere: this is not a dumping ground for their arms or their failed ideology."

Baker made no direct reference to the military aid the United States gave given to the Contras in their attempt to overthrow the Sandinista government in Managua before Congress ordered a cut-off.

He said the United States supports dialogue between the two sides and also between the U.S.-backed government in El Salvador and Marxist guerrillas in that country "so the guns of war can stand silent through Central America."

His appeal to the Soviets for "new thinking" appeared timed to the visit Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev will make next week to Cuba, the Soviets' closest ally in the hemisphere.

Baker, a former treasury secretary, also said there was no "magic solution" to the economic problems in Latin America.

He said hard-pressed countries must reform their "bloated state-dominated economies," keep up with debt obligations "and satisfy the needs of their citizens."

He acknowledged, though, that this was "a nearly impossible juggling act" and gave assurances that the United States was prepared "to hear your calls for help."

Soviet Students Get Military Deferments

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOSCOW — Beginning this spring, Soviet students can defer their military service until after they have completed their education, newspapers reported today.

The Defense Ministry newspaper Krasnaya Zvezda said that under the new rules, students who go through officer training programs can also expect to be "essentially exempted" from call-up for peace-time service after they graduate.

Previously, Soviet students were liable for call-up in the middle of their studies. Under Soviet law, every able-bodied male between the ages of 18 and 25 must serve at least two years in the military.

Changes in the draft system have been under discussion for the last five years, said the Young Communist League newspaper Komsomolskaya Pravda.

There have been some calls for a complete end to the draft, which is estimated to take 80 percent of the male population, normally at age 18.

"Now it has become obvious to everyone that a two-to-three year break in studies spent on soldiering leads to a serious lowering of students' educational level," G.F. Kutzev, deputy head of the State Education Committee, was quoted as saying.

"And the national defense capability itself depends to a great extent on what kind of intellectual cadres we have, what kind of specialists we prepare," he said.

According to Kutzev, the system of officer training courses is being reorganized.

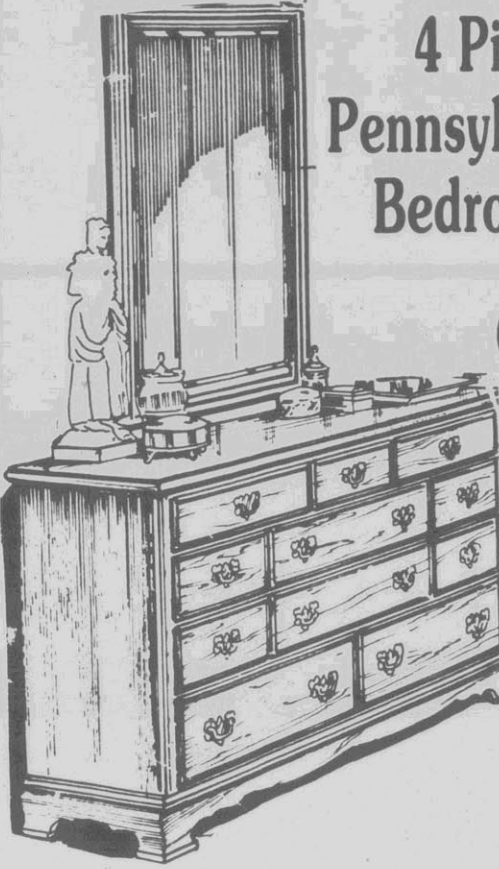

"They will be canceled in some schools, added in others and generally reoriented toward subjects with civilian applications."

"Knowledge received in officer training courses should contribute toward the mastering of a civilian specialty and vice versa," he said. "After all, it's obvious that we need reserves of highly qualified officers — mathematicians, chemists, electronics experts."

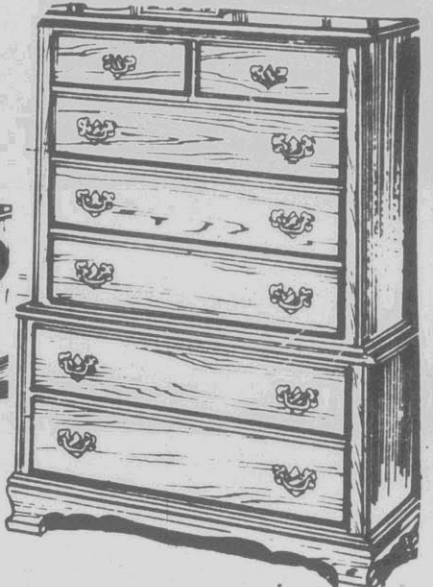

Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev plans to cut back the Soviet armed forces by 500,000 troops as part of his strategy to devote fewer resources to defense and more to the national economy.

About 75 percent of Soviet military personnel are conscripts.

Kiwanis 'Sock Hop' Benefit Boogies For Children

By Carol Tyer
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Move over, Fonzie Baby. Women dynamic enough to establish and sustain the only all-female-membership Kiwanis Club in the United States can throw one peachy keen sock hop.

And Happy Days will reign Saturday night in Greenville. That's when the Kiwanis Club of Greater Greenville and its guests will become bobbie soxers and drugstore cowboys for an evening. They will socialize for fun and the financial well-being of the Children's Hospital of Eastern North Carolina.

The Greenville Athletic Club has donated its facilities for the Kiwanis '50s theme party. About 5 p.m., many of the 45 club members will blitz the place and transform it into '50s City. When it's complete, it will include a drug store-like lounge area, a refreshment room stocked with era edibles served from high school cafeteria-brown bowls, a bathtub full of punch, and a high school gymnasium-effect dance floor canopied with aqua and pink crepe paper streamers.

Shortly before the guests arrive at 8 p.m., the decorators will lay aside their tack hammers and tape and hurry home. They'll change into attire that some, but not all, remember from their youth. Since club members range in age from early 20s to 60s, they have varied vantage points from which to view the '50s, but all will participate and bring their friends.

Unless the weather is ghastly warm, club president Jeanette Cox will wear a lettered cheerleader sweater. And event overall chairman Linda Muller will don a red circular skirt she made herself and decorated with a rhinestone-collared poodle. Spouses, dates and other male guests are expected wear everything from rolled up-sleeve shirts — with Camel cigarette packages in their cuffs — and lots of Brill cream to crew cuts and white sportcoats and pink carnations, possibly with dirty bucks.

A restored '55 Ford Thunderbird will grace the entrance and Marilyn Monroe, Elvis Presley and other '50s idols posters will be used throughout.

There'll be a juke box stacked with favorite '50s hits and "The Spontanes," a band that excels in '50s rock tunes, will provide dance music and a floor show.

The price of admission for the dance is $25 per person. All money raised will be added to the club fund for donation to the Children's Hospital of Eastern North Carolina.

A wish to be involved in providing for the Children's Hospital was a major impetus for forming the Greater Greenville club, president Jeanette Cox remembers. She said she and Peggy Christopher, now vice president, Ann Boswell, now treasurer, and Ruth Matous, now second vice president, were four who started talking to their friends about forming a female Kiwanis group.

The group, chartered with 25 members and active since March 1988, is now one of 11 Kiwanis clubs in the 12th Kiwanis district. At least one other club in the district has some female members, Ms. Cox says she understands, but the Greater Greenville group is the only one that is, so far, only women. Men are not barred from the club, she emphasized.

The Children's Hospital had a special appeal as a major project, Ms. Cox believes, "because most of us are mothers. You can't be a mother and tour that Children's Hospital neonatal unit without shedding some tears. Once we'd been on that tour, we were ready to go to work."

The group has weekly lunch hour at Greenville Country Club. Three out of four meetings include programs; the fourth is a business session.

In addition to the Children's Hospital, the club contributes money and specifically needed materials to other causes, including Operation Sunshine Girls' Activities Program, a tutorial program for Greenville area school children and Special Olympics.

"We enjoy a very good working relationship with the other Kiwanis clubs," party publicity chairman Joanne Honeycutt said. "We've made it clear that we'll support most of their projects in any way we can and they support ours quite well."

"We've sold a lot of pancake supper tickets and bags of peanuts for them and we're expecting a lot of our fellow Kiwanians and their wives to attend our dance."

Others who might wish to attend may contact Betty Fuqua at 830-6470 or 756-3226.

Persons interested in membership may contact Ms. Cox, 756-1322.

Lighthouse Group Has A Keeper Of Its Own

By Charles Hillinger
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

"There is no structure as altruistic as a lighthouse. Its only purpose is to serve humanity."

—George Bernard Shaw

SAN FRANCISCO — Wayne Wheeler 50, known to lighthouse aficionados from coast to coast as Mr. Lighthouse, probably knows more about the quaint sentinels that guide ships into safe harbor than anyone alive.

The bearded, blue-eyed San Franciscan is founder-president of the 4,000-member non-profit historical and educational U.S. Lighthouse Society, sponsor of this year's Bicentennial of the Lighthouse.

"There is a wave of lighthouse restoration projects going on all along America's coasts and the shores of the Great Lakes," Wheeler explains. "At Key West, for example, $250,000 was raised in fund drives to restore the lighthouse abandoned by the Coast Guard 20 years ago."

Wheeler will be busy this year, attending a number of lighthouse rededications at bicentennial celebrations — many on July 4, and some on Aug. 7, set aside by the U.S. Senate as National Lighthouse Day.

It was on Aug. 7, 1789, that President Washington signed the Lighthouse Act, the first public-works act of the new nation, transferring 12 lighthouses to the federal government.

Newport, R.I., will be the site of the 200th birthday party for lighthouses. The Coast Guard Academy Band will perform, there will be a parade, photograph and art exhibits and workshops pertaining to the history of lighthouses, old keepers swapping stories and the "Ida Rather Be Rowing Regatta," named after legendary lighthouse keeper Ida Lewis.

Lewis died of a stroke at the Lime Rock Lighthouse in Rhode Island in 1911 after tending the light for more than 50 years. She saved 18 lives and became a national hero, with her picture appearing on the cover of Harper's Weekly in July 1869.

In 1910, there were 800 lighthouses in operation in the United States, manned by 1,659 civilian keepers from the U.S. Lighthouse Service. It was the heyday of the colorful structures, which the Senate resolution described as symbolizing "safety, security, heroism, duty and faithfulness."

In 1939, the Coast Guard assumed responsibility for lighthouses. During the last 25 years, all but nine of the more than 750 lighthouses have been automated. Many have been replaced, in the words of Wheeler,

"by rotating aero beacons stuck up on ungainly poles."

Wheeler, a native of Buffalo, N.Y., was a Coast Guard officer from 1963 to 1975, and the civilian assistant chief to navigation aids for the Coast Guard in San Francisco from 1976 to 1987.

"I started the U.S. Lighthouse Society in 1984 in the dining room of my home," Wheeler said. "For three years I worked 40 hours a week for the Coast Guard, 35 hours a week for the Lighthouse Society. "The society got so big I had to quit the Coast Guard," explained Wheeler, a self-proclaimed "lighthouse nut."

In 1977, he put together a slide show on the history of lighthouses, beginning with the 45-story Pharos at Alexandria, Egypt, constructed in 280 BC and one of the Seven Wonders of the World. During his presentation, he recites lighthouse poetry, sings sea chanteys and delights audiences with legends and lore of lighthouses.

Mr. Lighthouse has been on the lecture circuit with his one-man show ever since.

"I quickly learned there are people all over America who, like me, are crazy about lighthouses, even people in landlocked places like North Dakota. ... I decided there ought to be an organization for lighthouse nuts like myself."

Today, nearly five years later, lighthouse lovers in every state and 13 nations are members of the U.S. Lighthouse Society. They include Walter Fanning, the group's 80-year-old vice president, who was born in a lighthouse, and Connie Small, 87, an ex-lighthouse keeper's wife who wrote the book "Lighthouse Keeper's Wife."

For $20 a year, members receive the Keeper's Log, a magazine filled with features, photographs, sketches and historic accounts about lighthouses and those who staff them. Each issue of the Log carries stories about famous lighthouses, like America's first lighthouse: Little Brewster Island, erected in 1716 in Boston and blown up by the British in 1786. America's first keeper, George Worthylake, drowned two years after the lighthouse was built, a fate remembered over the years by scores of keepers in storms and in rescue attempts.

The Lighthouse Society headquarters — on the fifth floor of a downtown San Francisco building at 244 Kearny St. — is a museum of lighthouse artifacts, photographs and information about lighthouses.

The Lighthouse Society sponsors an annual fog-calling contest and photography contests and works tirelessly for the preservation and restoration of lighthouses throughout America.

The society owns the 128-foot lightship Relief, one of the last of the Coast Guard relics that served as floating lighthouses.

Gumbel-Scott Feud Ongoing

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

KINGS MILLS, Ohio — "Today" show weatherman Willard Scott said he wants peace with program host Bryant Gumbel, but that didn't stop him from limping Gumbel during a speech.

Scott limped as he walked to the podium Wednesday to deliver a lecture at the Kings Island amusement park, and told the audience: "I ran into a little problem in New York. I had to lift Bryant Gumbel's ego."

"You know, Bryant Gumbel's ego has applied for statehood. And if it's accepted, it will be the fifth largest," he said.

The two have been feuding since Gumbel's confidential memo about co-workers was publicized earlier this month. In the memo, Gumbel criticized Scott for his corniness and his numerous on-air promotions.

"Bryant has one mind-set about what the show should be, and I'm not part of it," Scott said. "I am a cornball. I don't think I fit in with what he has in mind" for the show.

Scott said that his stormy relationship with Gumbel "has been going on for three or four years" but his faith and wife, Mary, have helped him survive.

"I said a little prayer for Bryant on Sunday," Scott said. "I'm not being a hypocrite. In my heart, I want Bryant to be happy."

Scott, 55, also wants to find happiness without leaving NBC, where he began as a page in 1950.

"I'll celebrate my 40th year in September," he said. "This has torn me up. ... My spirit has been wounded."

High-Fiber Diets Unhealthy For Babies

By Deborah Mesce
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Parents could jeopardize the health of their babies and toddlers by feeding them according to the same high-fiber, low-fat nutritional regime they follow themselves, nutrition and health experts say.

In addition, the experts say, sugar and sodium in moderate amounts contribute to a well-balanced infant diet.

These points are included in new infant dietary guidelines developed by Gerber Products Co. and based on published statements of the American Academy of Pediatrics and the American Dietetic Association.

"The key message is that babies need to be fed like babies, not like adults," said Dr. Guy Johnson, director of infant nutrition for Gerber.

"Avoiding fat and cholesterol is becoming more popular among health-conscious adults, but it may be too restrictive for rapidly growing babies who need about two and a half times more calories per day, pound for pound, than adults," he said.

The "Dietary Guidelines for Infants," outlined in a 19-page booklet, are billed by the company as the first comprehensive recommendations aimed at children under 2.

The company said the Dietary Guidelines for Americans, published jointly by the U.S. Department of Agriculture and the Department of Health and Human Services, are directed at healthy Americans in the general population and "should not be strictly applied" to infants.

Susan Welsh, director of nutrition education at the Agriculture Department, said the infant guidelines "provide very useful information and are not inconsistent" with the department's guidelines, which include a brief section on infant diets.

The American Academy of Pediatrics, the largest professional association of pediatricians, said it agreed with the infant guidelines, but noted that it does not endorse Gerber's nor any other commercial products.

Dr. James E. Strain, executive director of the academy, said the guidelines are patterned after statements that have been published previously by the academy's Committee on Nutrition about babies' nutritional needs.

"We think there is a need for parents to know that diets for children less than 2 need to be different from those of older children and adults," he said.

The guidelines include:
• Parents should not overly restrict the amount of fat and cholesterol their infants consume.
• Skim milk and other reduced-fat milks are not recommended because they may not provide enough calories.

• High-fiber diets are not suitable for babies and young children because they may not provide enough calories and other nutrients.

• Sugar and sodium in moderate levels contribute to a well-balanced diet for youngsters. Artificial sweeteners and foods that contain them are not recommended.

The Compassionate Friends Will Help

Abigail Van Buren

Dear Abby: I am writing in response to a letter you had in your column recently. It was from a mother whose son had died, and she felt bad because she had no one to talk with about her son.

As a mother who has lost a child, I know the importance of having someone there when you need to talk. There is much comfort in just talking about what is in your heart, and who better to talk to than someone who has gone through that experience?

Abby, there is an organization known as Compassionate Friends. It is a support group made up of parents who have lost their children in death. It is a legitimate and worthwhile organization whose only purpose is to ease the pain of having lost a child.

Membership in Compassionate Friends is free — and it's open to anyone who wants to join. This group helped me so much when my son died, I want to tell others about it. Will you please help me spread the word? — Denise In Nacogdoches, Texas

Dear Denise: With pleasure. I have recommended Compassionate Friends in my column several times, but for those who may have missed it, this group has my unqualified recommendation. It was founded in 1969 and has grown to 400 chapters throughout the United States.

Compassionate Friends has no religious affiliation; people of all faiths (or none) may join. It publishes a newsletter and depends on voluntary contributions to cover local and national operational costs, but there are no "dues." There is no charge for attending meetings.

Dear Abby: I recently started dating a physician who has genital herpes and belongs to a herpes support group. I have oral herpes (cold sores). He has told me that when he does not have any lesions, he is not contagious and he refuses to use a condom at these times. My girlfriend says that this is not true — that genital herpes is less transmittable when there are no visible lesions, but it is transmittable at all times, and he should use a condom during every sexual encounter.

My doctor/boyfriend says his herpes is no more contagious than my cold sores. Abby, since I rarely get breakouts and have never transmitted my cold sores to anyone, I fail to see how genital herpes could be any different.

I want to believe the doctor, but what my girlfriend told me is confusing. Should he wear a condom at all times? Who is correct? Are there any good books on the subject? — Confused In Toronto

Dear Confused: Your girlfriend is mistaken. Herpes is not transmissible at all times. For a person to be infectious there must be active herpes virus present. If there are no symptoms, sores or active lesions, your partner is not infectious. One of the best books on this subject is "Herpes: Cause and Control," by William C. Wickert, M.D. Although it's now out of print, the book is available in libraries. It's written in language that is easily understood by people who are not medically trained.

Dear Abby: Here is another reason why the hostess should tell her guests who else she's invited to her party: Many times I've arrived at a party and I see my next-door neighbor there! Then I think, wouldn't it have been nice if I had known in advance that she had been invited so we could have ridden together and visited on the way? — Denny

Dear Denny: "Riding together" can be very nice — unless your neighbor wants to go home earlier or later than you.

If you would like to write to Abby, send your letter to Abigail Van Buren, P.O. Box 69440, Los Angeles, CA. 90069. For a personal, non-published reply, enclose a self-addressed stamped envelope.

In China, Owning One's Home Is A Dream That Carries A Very Expensive Price Tag

By John Pomfret
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

YANTAI, China — An ambitious experiment to allow Chinese to own their homes has halted in this seaside city because of complaints from powerful officials and austerity policies in Beijing.

Other experiments in housing reform throughout China are also off to a slow start due to the sky-high price of living space and lack of confidence in the government.

"The policies are in contradiction. We don't know what the future holds," said Qin Shiyu, a housing reform official in Yantai, a breezy town in Shandong province on the Bohai Sea.

In Beijing, apartments cost the equivalent of about $45 a square foot, meaning that an average college graduate would have to save his total income for 70 years to buy a basic three-room flat.

In crowded Shanghai prices can be even higher.

A recent report by the official Xinhua News Agency said living space per person in a Shanghai neighborhood amounted to nine by nine feet, or 54 square feet.

"And that's only for the relatively well off," it said.

Thousands, it said, were living in 21.6 square feet of space.

In Yantai, prices have been more reasonable and 1,600 homes have been sold in about two years. But 16,000 families are still waiting for a chance to buy.

Yu Bingmo, a worker at the Yantai General Synthetic Leather Factory, was lucky.

In October, he scraped together his life savings, took out a loan and bought his three-room, 600-square-foot apartment — or, about 30 feet by 20 feet — for about 12,000 yuan ($3,243).

"It may mean a few more years of lousy cigarettes but I was willing to take the risk," said Yu, 57, as he sat with his wife in the living room. "It's not a palace but at least it's mine."

China began housing reform in the mid-1980s in an attempt to correct a serious housing shortage that had left millions of Chinese urban dwellers with nowhere to live.

The plan picked up urgency over the past few years as part of China's effort to reform its heavily subsidized housing system.

In China's countryside, houses are privately owned and passed from generation to generation. But in the cities, home to 40 percent of the country's 1.1 billion people, housing has been built and maintained by state funds and rented at rock-bottom prices.

"China's housing industry is a welfare undertaking making no profits at all," said a recent edition of the Beijing Review.

China also looked at private housing as a way to channel people's money into the country's infrastructure and halt spending on consumer goods. They reasoned that less consumer spending would limit record high inflation of around 30 percent.

In addition, reformers wanted to battle corrupt officials who use their power to secure bigger and better apartments for themselves and their friends.

In 1986, Yantai and three other cities were selected as the first group of pilot cities for urban housing reform.

In Yantai, rent was raised almost 2000 percent to 1.24 yuan a square meter (3 cents a square foot). To Chinese accustomed to paying around 3 percent of their salaries for rent the jump was substantial.

Next, the housing department ordered businesses in the city to add a subsidy of 23.5 percent of each worker's salary to his paycheck to make up for the rent increase.

PBS Series Often Chilling

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — American education is laid bare in a landmark television series virtually certain to leave viewers unsettled and embarrassed.

"Learning In America," which began Monday night on PBS, is a five-part, multimillion dollar look at what's happening in the nation's classrooms, featuring Roger Mudd and three correspondents from the MacNeil-Lehrer Newshour.

The portrait is always revealing, sometimes chilling.

"I don't want to graduate, to tell you the truth. It's just fun. I like it," says a California high school senior interested mainly in sports.

"I think it's my senior year and I'm going to relax," says his friend, explaining why he's taking nutrition and lifestyle courses instead of the math he needs to become a computer repairman.

And from Denver high school teacher Martha Nagel: "This is a job that breaks your heart every day."

The makers of "Learning in America" roved from California to East Harlem, from Ireland to Japan, to paint a broad television canvas unusual in the far-flung, locally controlled education field.

"The reason education doesn't get covered well on TV is that it's so decentralized. Finding out about what's going on is very time-consuming," said Joe Quinlan, executive producer of the series.

Chrysler Corp. put up nearly $4 million for the series, equally divided between production and promotion, and had nothing to do with content. A number of other companies were also interested in financing the project, Quinlan said.

The most disturbing parts of the series examine inequities in American schools and problems in the teaching profession. Nagel is shown trying to call her gynecologist from a public phone; a 23-year veteran doesn't have his own classroom; an incompetent teacher is fired and then hired within hours by another principal who never bothered to call for a reference.

Vending Machine Gallery Big Hit In Europe

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BERLIN — The night is dark and dismal on Dresdener Street. Suddenly, bizarre lights and music burst from a rusty old vending machine as miniature monsters stare sinistinely from inside.

No, this is not "The Twilight Zone."

It's the "Blumenautomat Galerie," where a few coins buy strange, tiny sculptures created by Georg Glueckman and Suwan Laimanee, and a show that keeps fans coming back for more.

In its previous life, the "Blumenautomat Galerie" (Flower Automat Gallery) was an after-hours vending machine that dispensed posies to passers-by.

But now it is one of the most talked about multimedia art events in Europe, pulling its creators out of years of obscurity.

Glueckman and Laimanee came up with the idea as an alternative means of promoting their modernistic concept of art, and say it is Europe's only 24-hour art gallery.

"This is not what you would call a conventional exhibition. It's not what you would call a normal thing," acknowledged the wry, 37-year-old Laimanee, who is originally from Thailand.

The man-size automat is bolted to a wall on dimly lighted Dresdener Street, a cul-de-sac in one of the poorest sections of West Berlin.

Explosives Found

speculation remains that she will drop him from the Cabinet later this year.

Scotland Yard said police use British Airways planes for explosive-search training from time to time.

Police Inspector Andrew Nielson said the explosive weighed less than a pound and measured about 4 inches by 8 inch.

He said the substance was incapable of exploding by itself and "at the very worst it could flare up if ignited by fire. Nobody at any time has been placed in any danger."

But lawmaker David Wilshire, a member of the governing Conservative Party and whose constituency includes the airport, said British Airways was responsible for the incident.

"I'd say to BA ... there's evidence growing by the week that you aren't carrying out your responsibility properly," Wilshire said in a radio interview. "The buck stops with BA on this occasion."

ITN last week showed videotape taken by three youths who said they boarded an empty British Airways jumbo jet at Heathrow on March 20 without being challenged. The video included a shot of one youth sitting in the captain's seat.

British Airways said it regarded the incident as "extremely serious," but stressed it took place in a maintenance area and not the operational area.

The opposition Labor Party's spokesman for transport, John Prescott, called for a new supervisory security body at Heathrow and accused the police of sloppiness. "It's a breakdown yet again of simple procedures," he said.

Doctors' Report

Daniel D. Federman of Harvard Medical School, former president of the American College of Physicians. It was published in today's New England Journal of Medicine.

Its first report, issued five years ago, also dealt with the ethics of obeying patients' final wishes, including removing feeding tubes. Some of its recommendations have since been widely adopted by doctors and courts.

The doctors noted that one of the greatest concerns of the dying and their families is that doctors won't give enough painkillers. They said this fear is largely justified.

The group said that allowing a patient to experience unbearable pain or suffering is unethical medical practice. When death becomes inevitable, the importance of relieving pain outweighs the risk of hastening death.

"It is morally correct to increase the dose of narcotics to whatever dose is needed, even though the medication may contribute to the depression of respiration or blood pressure, the dulling of consciousness, or even death, provided the primary goal of the physician is to relieve suffering," they wrote. "The proper dose of pain medication is the dose that is sufficient to relieve pain and suffering, even to the point of unconsciousness."

The panel recommended that doctors question patients about whether they want aggressive treatment to prolong the dying process. Their values and wishes should be part of their medical records, and nursing homes should regularly review patients' preferences.

Besides Harvard and the University of Texas, panel members were from Pritzker School of Medicine in Chicago, Massachusetts General Hospital, Hennepin County Medical Center in Minneapolis, the University of Virginia Medical Center, the University of California School of Medicine in San Francisco, the Mayo Clinic and the University of Pittsburgh Medical School.

Belgium Tightens Security For Moslems After Slaying

BRUSSELS, Belgium — Police tightened security for the 225,000-strong Islamic community today after the slaying of a Moslem leader who criticized Iran's call to kill author Salman Rushdie.

Gunmen killed Imam Abdullah Ahdal, the Saudi leader of Moslems in Belgium, the Netherlands and Luxembourg, in an attack Wednesday at Ahdal's office in the Islamic Cultural Center.

"Because of the attack, protective measures for members of the Islamic community were increased immediately," Interior Minister Louis Tobback in a statement.

He said police will start "preventive patrols" in Moslem neighborhoods "aimed at restoring the peace of mind within this community."

Separately, police said they have reinforced security checks at the borders and airports.

Police said Ahdal, 36, and librarian Salem Behir, a 40-year-old Tunisian, were shot at close range.

There was no immediate claim of responsibility for the attack, and police said there were no witnesses. Unconfirmed reports said three hooded men were seen jumping from a van, entering the mosque and then fleeing.

In London, a senior Moslem cleric today blamed the murders on jealousy between Moslems after Belgian authorities designated the Brussels mosque where the slayings took place as the official mosque in Belgium.

"That creates a lot of jealousies and resentments," Zaki Badawi, president of the United Kingdom Council of Imams and Mosques, said in a telephone interview. The organization is one of about a dozen separate Moslem religious bodies in Britain.

Ahdal, an imam or preacher, had been in Brussels for six years heading the Moslem community in Belgium, the Netherlands and Luxembourg.

Behir, who headed the mosque's social services and library, lived in the city for about 10 years.

Ahdal's center, in a park near the European Economic Community headquarters, is sponsored by the Mecca, Saudi Arabia-based Moslem World League, which was set up by the late Saudi ruler King Faisal to unite Moslems.

On Feb. 14, Iran's fundamentalist patriarch Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini called on Moslems to kill Rushdie, a naturalized Briton, for his novel "The Satanic Verses".

Former Florida Congressman Dies

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BETHESDA, Md. — William Chappell, a 20-year Florida congressman defeated for re-election last year amid reports linking him to the Pentagon procurement scandal, died today after a battle with bone cancer. He was 67.

Chappell, a Democrat who had represented northeast Florida's 4th District, died at the National Institutes of Health, where he had been hospitalized Feb. 23.

The former chairman of the powerful defense appropriations subcommittee lost to Republican newcomer Craig James last fall by 791 votes, less than 1 percent of about 250,000 cast. Chappell challenged the outcome for a month before conceding.

James' campaign emphasized reports linking Chappell to an investigation of defense contractors and consultants who bribed Pentagon employees for inside information useful in winning defense contracts.

Chappell never was charged with any wrongdoing in the case, which has resulted in a dozen guilty pleas.

In addition to 10 terms in Congress, Chappell served in the Florida House for 10 years and was its speaker in 1961. He was a county prosecutor from 1949 to 1954.

He was a Navy aviator in World War II and was in Navy Reserve until 1983, retiring as a captain.

In Congress, he fought to retain a manned-bomber force and for a fifth nuclear-powered aircraft carrier. Chappell also sponsored legislation that created an assistant secretary of defense for reserve affairs.

Chappell was behind the creation of the 70,000-acre Cape Canaveral National Seashore and the addition of 10,000 acres to the Ocala National Forest.

Survivors include his wife, Jeane; four children and two stepchildren. Funeral arrangements were incomplete.

Rampants Rally For Winning Run In Seventh Inning

By Woody Peele
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

After two straight blowout victories in the Pitt County-D.H. Conley Easter Baseball Tournament, some observers were afraid that Rose High School would make it three in a row against the hosting Vikings Wednesday night.

But the Vikings weren't about to be intimidated by the Rampants' USA TODAY ranking of 17th in the nation and made Rose struggle for everything it got.

As it turned out, Rose had to score an unearned run in the bottom of the seventh inning to take a 5-4 victory in the game.

It was the third straight championship for the Rampants, their third in a row over Conley in the finale and their third straight exciting contest that wasn't over until it was over.

"This was a fantastic high school baseball game," Rose coach Ronald Vincent said. "Conley played well, they hit the ball well and their pitcher (Brian Bullock) was fantastic and kept us off balance. We got a couple of breaks and that meant the ball game."

"I'm really pleased that we didn't quit," Conley coach Allan Wilson said. His team battled back in the top of the seventh from a 4-1 deficit to tie the game. "I thought Bullock did a great job. He did a good job of mixing 'em up against the kind of batters that (Rose has)."

"I thought we outthit them. We played the best we have all year. We had our opportunities, but we left too many people on at critical times. We had to play from behind most of the game."

It came within a hair of going extra innings for the second time in the past three years. Tied at 4-4, Rose had one out when Heath Clark singled to center and David Leisten followed with a single to right, moving Clark to third. Wilson elected to give the automatic walk to strong hitting Maurice Hines, setting up a force at any base.

And it nearly worked. Chris Christopher hit a sharp liner down the third baseline that Kervin Vines made an outstanding stop of, diving to his right. But he had to hurry his throw home as he tried to throw from his knees and the ball hit Clark in the back as he slid in with the game-winning run.

Rose took the lead early in the game, scoring once in the first. With one out, Clark doubled down the left field line and moved up on a fly ball by Leisten. A wild pitch allowed him to score.

Conley tied it up in the second after leaving a man on third in the top of the first. Travis Clemons singled and was wild pitched to third. He scored on Seymour's double to right. Conley went on to put two on before the next two grounded out.

It remained tied until the fifth with both teams losing out on opportunities to score. Rose pulled off a fine double play in the fifth to get out of a jam, forcing a runner at third, then making the relay to first for the third out of the inning.

In the bottom of the fifth, Rose struck for the lead again, scoring twice. With one out, Timmy Moore singled and stole both second and third before scoring off an error on the throw to third. Then, with two away, Leisten walked and stole second. He scored on a hit to right by Hines.

Rose added a fourth run in the sixth. Jamie Brewington singled and courtesy runner Pat Joyner stole both second and third before scoring on a passed ball.

After again leaving runners at second and third in the sixth, Conley finally got a rally going in the sev-

Sanders To NFL?

Announcement Expected Saturday

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

OKLAHOMA CITY — Heisman Trophy winner Barry Sanders would be the first true junior to join the NFL without first being dropped from his team if he opts to turn professional as Oklahoma State officials expect.

"There is to the best of my knowledge some kind of announcement that will be made Saturday as I understand it," Oklahoma State coach Pat Jones said Wednesday. "I am not saying I know what is going to be said. We will let him (Sanders) say it."

Jones said in a telephone interview from Stillwater that he doesn't "know exactly how far along that is" when asked if Sanders has an agent, but "discussions are taking place."

"I am going to wait until Saturday before I say anything," Jones said. "We will find out tomorrow when it will take place."

Oklahoma State Athletic Director Myron Roderick said that Sanders leaving the Cowboys "is not going to be a problem for us because once he gets an agent he becomes ineligible for next season."

"I just know that he is going to make an announcement. That is my understanding," Roderick said Wednesday in a telephone interview from Stillwater. "I became aware of that today."

Sanders was not immediately available for comment.

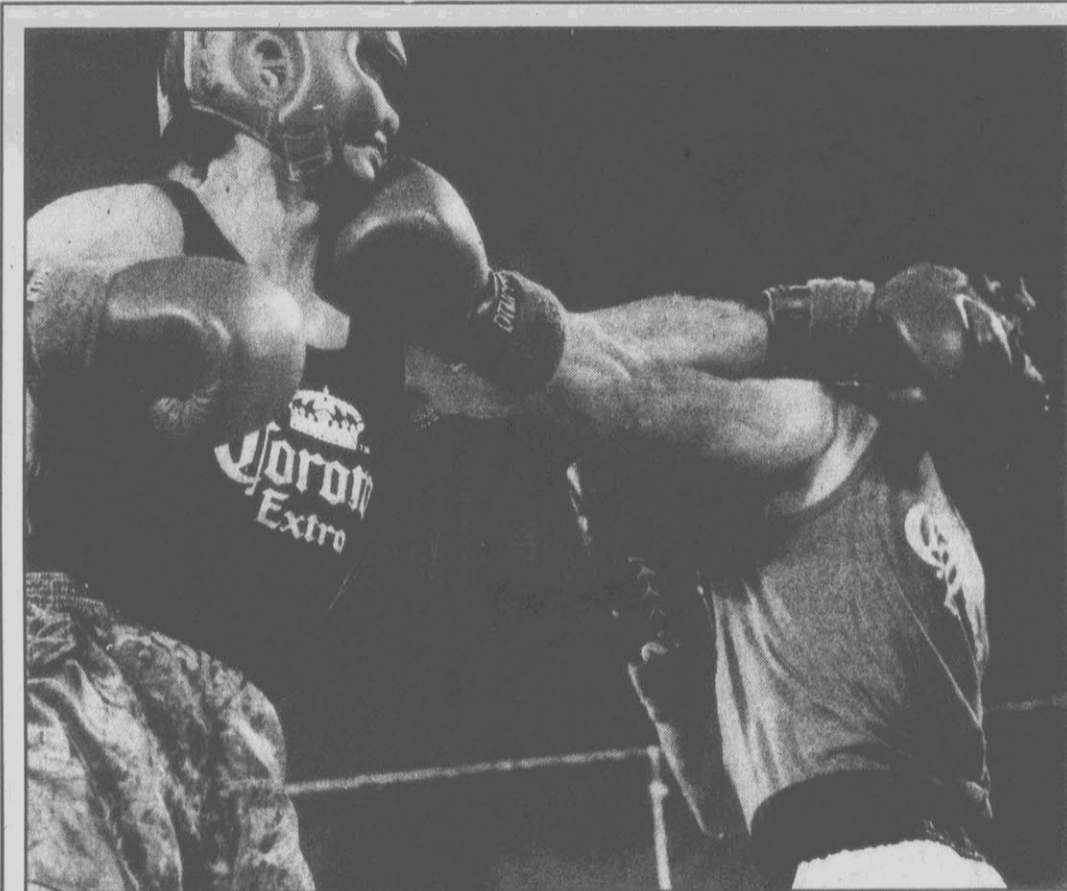

NFL rules prohibit teams from drafting underclassmen before they or their original class has graduated, but most legal experts maintain the league cannot prevent anyone from playing.

Since Sanders has never redshirted, he would not be eligible for the regular NFL draft this spring unless he decides to challenge the legality of the draft in the courts or unless the league changes its long-standing policy of not drafting underclassmen.

"I think that's true (that Sanders is going pro). I think that's the direction he's going," said Jack Mills, an attorney and sports agent in Denver. "I did have a discussion with him in Stillwater on March 13 and I spoke with his father on the phone, but I don't think I'm going to be the guy (agent)."

Mills said he thinks Sanders might be leaning toward David Ware of Atlanta as his agent.

Sanders has already decided to sit out spring practice with the Cowboys in order to explore his options concerning the NFL.

Waters Is Removed

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CULLOWHEE — Western Carolina's Bob Waters once said he had to keep coaching to fight Lou Gehrig's Disease, but school officials say it's time for the wheelchair-bound coach to move from the sidelines.

"I am extremely disappointed that I will not be allowed to coach the 1989 football team," Waters said Wednesday night. "The decision should have been left to me, whether I could coach or not. What can be gained by my remaining as head coach for the 1989 season far outweighs what we will lose."

Waters' dismissal came abruptly at the end of Wednesday's spring football workout when he was handed a letter by Athletic Director Bob Setzer that outlined terms of the university's decision.

The letter, signed by Chancellor Myron Coulter, advised Waters that he was being relieved of his football duties and would be appointed associate director of athletics and head football coach emeritus, effective April 14, a school official said.

Coulter's letter said that Waters would retain his current annual salary of $73,044, plus "customary state benefits," but would serve in his new position "at the discretion of the

Wake And Staak Reach A Decision

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WINSTON-SALEM — The combination of a new arena and the wealth of talent returning signal a bright future for the Wake Forest basketball program, according to the school's athletic director, who credits Bob Staak with rebuilding the team.

But Staak won't be in Winston-Salem to enjoy any winning ways. The 41-year-old head coach resigned under pressure Wednesday.

The official announcement came after attorneys for Staak and the university hammered out the final details of a buyout agreement.

University officials refused to discuss terms of the settlement, but outside sources told the Winston-Salem Journal that Staak will be paid the remaining three years of a contract that was extended in 1987.

Staak was in Seattle, the site of this weekend's Final Four, when the official announcement was made.

"I'm disappointed. I'm hurt. I would not deny that. But I understand this part of the business, and life's gotta go on," he said.

Staak's decision to resign came after a Monday meeting with Athletic Director Gene Hooks, in which a standard, season-ending review and evaluation of the program was discussed.

"When he (Staak) came here, the cupboard was bare," Hooks said. "I don't think it's that way now. I think the program, with the coliseum and the nucleus of players right now,

Wake Forest finished 13-15 overall and 3-11 in the Atlantic Coast Conference this season. It marked Staak's fourth consecutive losing season at the school after succeeding Carl Tacy in 1985. Staak compiled a 45-69 overall record but was only 9-52 against ACC competition.

University officials denied that an internal investigation into alleged NCAA recruiting violations within the program led to Staak's forced exit.

In a prepared statement, Staak said, "Gene Hooks spoke to me about the program and its future. Today, we concluded that it is in my best interest and the best interests of the program and the university to pursue coaching opportunities elsewhere. I am very proud of the program's foundation that my staff and I have built and would like to see it thrive."

"We are grateful to have had Bob Staak carry us through a trying period in our basketball history. He leaves our program much better than he found it and I believe with a brighter future," Hooks' statement said. "Those of us in the Wake Forest community recognize the challenges of conducting an athletic program in a university of this size and academic rigor. That point does not go unnoticed or unappreciated."

Snyder Ready For Homecoming

By Tom Foreman Jr.
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

DURHAM — Quin Snyder had to use some quick moves to avoid being tossed out of the last Final Four in the Kingdom — not much different from this weekend's trip with Duke.

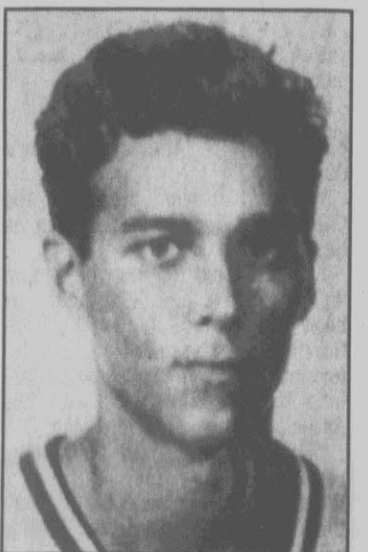

Snyder is enjoying a homecoming as the Blue Devils join three other teams vying for their first-ever national championship. The moment is more special for him now because his hometown of Mercer Island is minutes away from Seattle.

"If we were to go play to Seattle for the beginning part of the tournament, it would be one thing. A committee would decide and we'd find out at the last minute," Snyder says. "It wouldn't quite be as big an event."

Duke has already been to Seattle this season. They visited Washington and took an 87-61 victory. Needless to say, this visit means much more.

"It's become such a long-term goal, since the time I was in high school, I saw this as a place that I wanted to be at this time," he says. "You forget about it for periods of time. Now, to actually be going and seeing that goal realized, it provides me with a lot of satisfaction."

In 1984, he recalls the combatants — Georgetown, Kentucky, Virginia and Houston, and how he watched the teams practice before the semifinals. Five years ago, he was a high school junior sitting in the upper level and hoping for a better seat.

Quin Snyder

"I went with a couple of buddies," Snyder says. "It was one of those things where we bought tickets way up in the rafters. Like kids do, we ended up sneaking down on the floor and I was holding a 'Where's The Beef' sign when Kentucky was playing Georgetown. I was one of the kids that was grabbing the sign, pretending I was supposed to be there."

Snyder says he couldn't dream about returning to the Kingdom as a player then. He was too busy making sure he could hang around to watch the games. "I was pretty

Lewis Sees Progress In Spring Drills

East Carolina football coach Bill Lewis said Wednesday's football practice session showed some real progress as the Pirates prepare for their first scrimmage of the spring Saturday.

"Today is the first time I've sensed real progress in the way our football team is practicing," Lewis said. "This is the first time this spring we've had two good days in a row to workout and I think we are beginning to build a good base to work from."

"We'll know much more about the performance of the individuals after Saturday."

Thus far, spring drills have been hampered by bad weather and forced the Pirates to do some of their drill work indoors.

Lewis moved the second half of Wednesday's practice into Ficklen Stadium.

"There are three reasons for that," he said. "First is the good turf. Second, a better filming angle, which is important in making good evaluations and third, this is our home. You get the stadium atmosphere."

Spring drills conclude April 22 with the Purple-Gold game.

Hornets Sign Kite For The Season

CHARLOTTE (AP) — The Charlotte Hornets signed veteran center Greg Kite Wednesday for the remainder of the season and made room for him on the roster by waiving forward Ralph Lewis, team officials said.

Kite, who was most recently with the Los Angeles Clippers, cleared waivers and will be in uniform for Thursday's game with Golden State. He was drafted by Boston in 1983 out of Brigham Young and played four seasons with the Celtics before being claimed off waivers by the Los Angeles Clippers on Feb. 3, 1988.

Kimball's Lawyer Wants Reduction

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — His attorney wants a reduction in Bruce Kimball's 17-year prison sentence for killing two teens while driving drunk, and insists the former Olympic diver be treated for alcoholism at a private residential facility.

Frank Quesada says he will ask Hillsborough Circuit Judge Harry Lee Coe III at a hearing today to grant those requests.

The 1984 silver medalist, sentenced in January for drunken driving-manslaughter, is serving his time at Tomoka Correctional Institution in Daytona Beach.

Quesada described Kimball's first month in the maximum security facility as trying and said the 26-year-old athlete sleeps with his sneakers on, fearing his belongings will be stolen.

Jabbar Pays Fines, Avoids Jail Time

PHOENIX (AP) — Los Angeles Lakers center Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, the NBA's all-time leading scorer, was fined $500 today and told to pay $840 in restitution for shoving an Italian tourist at a shopping mall here last April.

Abdul-Jabbar, who brushed past spectators without comment after the sentencing, escaped any jail time. He could have been given up to 10 months, and the fine could have been as much as $1,750.

Phoenix Municipal Court Judge John L. Wiehn convicted Abdul-Jabbar on Feb. 28 on two misdemeanor assault and criminal damage charges after the 41-year-old waived his right to a jury trial.

He had previously agreed to pay the restitution.

Wiehn said Abdul-Jabbar would have 10 days within which to appeal the sentence, but his attorney, Michael D. Kimerer of Phoenix, said there will be no appeal.

The charges were filed by city prosecutors after the April 21 incident involving the 7-foot-2 Abdul-Jabbar and tourist Fernando Nicolai, 40, at the Metrocenter shopping mall in north Phoenix.

Waters had been preparing the Catamounts for his 21st season as head football coach.

"I understand that he will remain on for another couple of weeks as head football coach, then he'll officially be reassigned," Sports Information Director Steve White said in a telephone interview with The Associated Press from his home.

"He's not being fired. He's being reassigned to other duties ... Whether or not he accepts it, I don't think he has any choice," White said.

Waters has been battling a cureless degenerative nervous disorder called amyotrophic lateral sclerosis for the last five years.

"There's been a steady deterioration," White said. "He's now bound to his wheelchair and ... is on a portable respirator. He has to have someone with him all the time. He has no use of his arms and legs."

A source close to the university told the Asheville Citizen that ESPN was considering another nationally televised game at Cullowhee this season, if Waters were the coach. The Western-East Tennessee State game was televised by ESPN last season with halftime and postgame salutes to Waters' struggle against ALS. Western Carolina won the game, 33-23, one of two victories in a 2-9 season that ranked as Waters' worst in two decades.

Former Western Carolina quarterback Jeff Gilbert, who helped guide the Catamounts to the brink of a national championship in 1983, said Wednesday he was "shocked" to hear that Waters was dismissed.

"I just don't know what to say," said Gilbert, who led the Catamounts to an 11-3-1 record in '83 and a trip to the I-AA championship game. "It's a shock. I know he meant a lot to the university, probably more than anybody else ever will in any other field."

"I hate to see it happen," Gilbert told the Citizen. "I think Coach Waters showed a lot of courage in staying in there and handling everything like he did. I think for it to happen like this hurts the pride of a lot of former players."

Waters, 51, played at Presbyterian College, which he quarterbacked in the 1960 Tangerine Bowl. He was selected in the 1960 National Football League draft by the San Francisco 49ers.

Waters frequently started at quarterback during his four seasons (1960-63) with the 49ers, and he was the first quarterback used in Coach Red Hickey's shotgun offense that also featured John Brodie and Billy Kilmer.

Pistons End Jazz Win Streak

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

All that Jazz home-court winning streak is now a thing of the past.

Isiah Thomas scored from the corner with 30 seconds left in the second overtime and Joe Dumars sank two free throws with three seconds left as the Detroit Pistons snapped Utah's 12-game home victory string, 108-104 Wednesday night.

The Pistons, who have won six straight and 18 of their last 20 games, fought off Utah comebacks at the end of regulation time and in the first overtime before Thomas and Dumars sealed the victory in the physical game.

The Pistons have a two-game lead over Cleveland in the NBA's Central Division and the Jazz leads the Midwest Division by five over Houston. They slugged it out toe-to-toe as benefis division leaders — 38 fouls were called on each team and five players fouled out.

"They're real tough, aren't they?"

They don't lose too many here so it was extra sweet to beat them," Thomas said after the Pistons' sixth straight victory.

After Utah's Thurl Bailey put the Jazz ahead 104-102 with 2:34 left in the second overtime, Thomas drove the lane and scored with 1:30 left, tying the score. His shot from the left side one minute later put the Pistons on top 106-104.

Bulls 106, Bucks 102
Michael Jordan scored 32 points, including six late free throws, as Chicago won its sixth straight game, snapped Milwaukee's 11-game home winning streak and climbed within 1½ games of the third-place Bucks in the Central Division. The Bucks have lost 13 of their last 14 games to Chicago.

Celtics 106, Trail Blazers 97
Reggie Lewis scored 27 of his 35 points in the second half for injury-plagued Boston, which played without Larry Bird, Kevin McHale, Robert Parish and Jim Paxson. The Celtics trail second-place Philadelphia by two games in the Atlantic Division. Portland's lead over Dallas in the race for the eighth and final playoff berth in the Western Conference was trimmed to one game.

Hawks 120, Bullets 102
Dominique Wilkins scored 30 points and Moses Malone 28 for Atlanta. The Hawks never trailed, building a 23-point lead late in the third quarter and again in the fourth period. Atlanta's lead stayed at 10 or more after Antoine Carr hit two free throws with 1:28 left in the second quarter for a 59-49 advantage.

Pacers 96, Heat 89
Indiana's Chuck Person, who scored 31 points, keyed an 8-0 run to open the fourth quarter and the Pacers snapped Miami's club-record three-game winning streak.

The expansion Heat led 73-69 after three periods but missed their first eight shots in the fourth quarter. While the Heat went cold, Indiana used two baskets by Person and four points from Detlef Schrempf to take a 77-73 lead with 8:49 to play.

Clippers 114, Kings 108
Quintin Dailey keyed a third-quarter rally with 10 of his 29 points and Ken Norman added 26 as Los Angeles posted its second straight victory.

Rookie Gary Grant had 20 points and 14 assists for the Clippers, who have won four of their last nine games after losing 13 in a row and 32 of 33. The Kings were led by Danny Ainge with 26 points and Wayman Tisdale with 17 points and 12 rebounds.

Indiana's Edwards Opts For Pros

Brother Reportedly Contacted Agents After IU Star's Freshman Year

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

INDIANAPOLIS — The brother of Indiana University guard Jay Edwards contacted professional agents about NBA prospects during the basketball guard's freshman year, but an NCAA spokesman says no rules were broken, according to a published report.

The University announced Wednesday that Edwards, a sophomore and second-team All-American who led Indiana to the Big Ten championship and the semifinals of the NCAA tournament's West Regional, would give up his remaining two years of college eligibility to enter the NBA draft.

At least two NBA general managers, however, said the decision was a bad one.

Edwards could not be reached for comment Wednesday. His brother, James, answered the door of the player's Bloomington apartment and told a reporter: "He ain't going to talk. He's not saying nothing. I'm his brother. I've got control over him."

The Indianapolis Star quoted James Edwards as saying he was talking to agents about his brother's NBA prospects as early as last season.

"I've talked to several people (agents), but I did that last year, just trying to get a feel for what's out there," said James Edwards, 35, a Muncie policeman. "We've been talking about Jay playing pro basketball since he was a sophomore in high school."

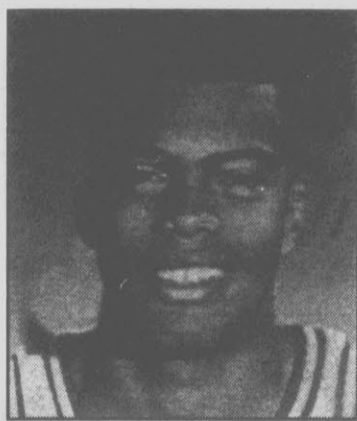

"Jay has nothing to do with this and I don't even have contact with Jay about any of this," James Edwards told The Star.

Rick Evrard, director of legislative services for the National Collegiate Athletic Association, said a student-athlete is permitted to talk with an agent "regarding their marketability or to find out what the atmosphere is out there."

Edwards, a 6-foot-4 guard who has been in an out of Coach Bob Knight's doghouse, averaged 20 points per game this season and was Big Ten Player of the Year.

Edwards is following in the footsteps of Isiah Thomas of the Detroit Pistons by leaving Indiana as a sophomore, but general managers Donnie Walsh of the Indiana Pacers and Wayne Embry of the Cleveland Cavaliers said Edwards was making a mistake.

"This could jeopardize his career," Walsh said. "That is not to say he can't eventually make it, but I think he really is not helping himself. I think emotionally, mentally and physically he's not ready to go into the NBA."

Jay Edwards

"He's a talented basketball player. I think he needs more development and he will get that in this league if he comes in, but this is more than just playing basketball: You're coming into a man's world and I'm not sure he's ready for that."

Embry said Edwards had been "very much ill advised."

"I feel badly for Jay and the Indiana program; I just feel badly. I think Jay needs to benefit from staying in school and being part of the Indiana program. I just think it's a horrible decision," Embry said.

Neither Walsh nor Embry would project when Edwards might go in the draft, but both said he would have to attend and play well in post-season camps to be considered for early selection.

"I think conceivably he's lost some money," Embry said. "I think it's just a horrible thing. If he doesn't go in the top five, he's made a bad decision."

Thomas, the only other player to leave Indiana early, agreed with Embry.

"I knew when I came out that I was going to be the first or second player taken," Thomas said. "You don't leave if you might be taken 15th or 16th. I think he's taking a big risk."

"His biggest transition is going to be off-court. You're forced to grow up fast. You're responsible for taking care of everything yourself, and that could be hard if you're 20 years old," Thomas said.

St. John's Captures NIT Crown

Carnesecca Calls It His Sweetest Victory After Record Fifth Title

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — While Lou Carnesecca's 1988-89 team was by no means his best in 21 years as coach at St. John's, he might remember it most fondly.

"I've had some fine victories, but I think this is the sweetest," Carnesecca said after the Redmen beat St. Louis 73-65 Wednesday night for a record fifth National Invitation Tournament title. "These kids were ugly ducklings, but they never gave me the idea they were giving up. They faltered, but they always showed a lot of heart."

St. John's, 20-13, and Bradley shared the record of four NIT titles before the season. The Redmen also were making their 25th NIT appearance after a disappointing season in which they finished eighth in the nine-team Big East Conference.

St. John's, with three freshmen in the starting lineup, displayed uncommon unity and emotion in the tournament following the death from cancer of sports information director Katha Quinn two weeks ago.

"She told me just before she died that she needed a miracle," Carnesecca said. "What she didn't know was that she was the miracle."

Matt Brust, the only St. John's senior who played Wednesday, said the team won because of Quinn's inspiration.

"People say I have a lot of spirit, but the real spirit of St. John's is Katha Quinn," Brust said. "We're all sorry she couldn't be here to see this. She was the driving force behind what we did."

Jayson Williams was named most valuable player of the tournament with 45 points and 29 rebounds in the final two games, including 28 points and a career-high 18 rebounds in the championship.

He was scoreless in the first 10 minutes, but after that he continually got free inside against the smaller Billikens, who won their only NIT title in 1948.

"They were playing man-to-man early and Anthony Bonner kept me from getting the ball," said Williams, who made 11 of his first 12 shots and finished with 12 baskets in 18 attempts. "Then they went to a zone and Bonner had to play behind me. It was easier for me then."

St. Louis, 27-10, got 21 points from Roland Gray but couldn't overcome foul trouble and foul-shooting trouble.

The Billikens missed 12 of their first 17 free throws, and Monroe Douglas, who scored 25 points in their semifinal victory over Michigan State, played only 16 minutes because of foul trouble and finished with two points.

"No doubt about it, the better basketball team won," St. Louis coach Rich Grawer said. "They were a bigger, stronger team and had more weapons. We couldn't hit our free throws early and that tends to hurt your confidence."

Grawer said the Billikens were forced to switch to a man-to-man defense because freshman Jason Buchanan, who scored a career-high 21 points, was too quick for a zone defense.

St. John's led only 44-39 with 13:18 left before Williams scored seven of the Redmen's next 12 points, giving them a 56-45 advantage. St. Louis could get no closer than five thereafter, the last time at 70-65 after a 3-

Two 3-point goals by Luechtefeld gave St. Louis a 23-19 edge with 6:34 left in the first half, but the Billikens scored only one point in the next 5:41 as St. John's took a 32-25 lead.

A 3-pointer by Gray got the Billikens within four with 52 seconds to go, but Williams got inside for a basket with one second remaining, giving the Redmen a 34-28 advantage at halftime.

In the third-place game, Alan Ogg's dunk with four seconds left in overtime gave Alabama-Birmingham a 78-76 victory over Michigan State.

Barry Bearden, who had eight 3-pointers and 26 points, drove the lane and passed to the 7-foot-2 Ogg for the uncontested dunk.

Fogler Named At Vanderbilt

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Vanderbilt wasn't looking to make any major changes in its basketball program by signing on Wichita State's Eddie Fogler as its new head coach, the school's top athletic official says.

In fact, Vandy athletic director Roy Kramer says he'd be pleased if the 40-year-old Fogler turns out to be a younger clone of outgoing coach C.M. Newton.

"Certainly every person is an individual and every person will approach a job from a little different standpoint," Kramer said in an interview Wednesday night. "... But we hope he will follow that example (set by Newton)."

Fogler announced earlier in the day he would leave the coaching job he has held the past three years and move to Southeastern Conference territory.

"It was a very, very tough decision for me," Fogler told a news conference in Wichita, Kan.

Fogler cited Vanderbilt's strong academic record, fan support and competitive potential as his reasons for moving to Nashville. He said he was not leaving because of dissatisfaction with Wichita State.

"If there was something wrong here, I would be interviewing every place that came open," Fogler said.

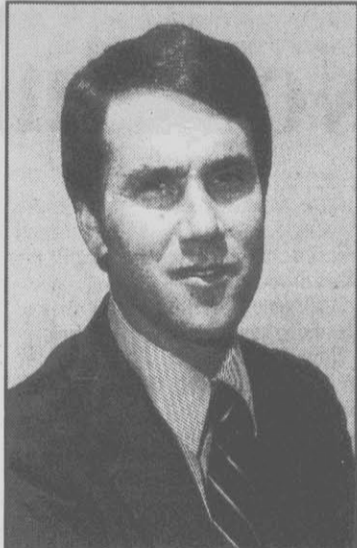

Fogler said he had been approached about 15 jobs — including Tennessee's current head coaching vacancy — during the past three years, but that the Vanderbilt spot was the only position he chose to pursue.

Fogler acknowledged many coaches would have taken the Tennessee job over Vanderbilt, "but Vanderbilt is something I think I fit very well."

Comparing it to Duke, he said Vanderbilt has a national reputation as a strong academic school, ranked 14th nationally in total attendance this season and consistently fills its 15,000-seat arena even during losing years.

Fogler met with Kramer and Vanderbilt chancellor Joe Wyatt during a visit to Nashville Monday and Tuesday. He said he also talked with Newton, who resigned the Vandy coaching post to become athletic director at Kentucky.

Kramer cited Fogler for "the integrity of his program, his approach to coaching, his commitment to the concept of the student-athlete in the tradition of Vanderbilt and his ability as a teacher of the skills of basketball."

"He is a premier recruiter and has the ability to develop players and improve upon their skills," he said.

Kramer declined to discuss Fogler's salary or the terms of his contract, but said he would start the Commodore job immediately and would hold his first press conference in Nashville next Wednesday.

"I expect him to be the coach at Vanderbilt for a long, long time," Kramer said.

Fogler came to Wichita State in March 1986. He had played point guard for coach Dean Smith at North Carolina and later began a 15-year stint as an assistant under Smith.

In his three seasons at Wichita State, Fogler compiled a 61-32 overall record and was the only WSU coach to guide the Shockers to consecutive NCAA appearances, doing so in his first two seasons. This year, WSU finished 19-11 after being defeated by Michigan State in the second round of the National Invitation Tournament.

Fogler said the Southeastern Conference is one of the strongest basketball leagues in the nation and noted that five SEC teams went to the NCAA tournament this year.

Capel, did not resign. University officials said that the three would be retained through the conclusion of their one-year contracts.

Hooks said there was no timetable for a coaching search and would not comment on possible successors.

Wake Forest will move into the new 14,200-seat Lawrence Joel Veterans Memorial Coliseum next season after splitting its home games in recent years between the well-worn Memorial Coliseum and Greensboro Coliseum.

Unless the coaching change leads to player defections, 11 of Wake's top 12 players will return next season along with three others — Tony Black, Daric Keys and Anthony Tucker — who sat out this season.

South Carolina assistant coach Eddie Payne says he wouldn't mind being head basketball coach at Wake Forest, but said he has not yet been interviewed by either school.

"I haven't been contacted by anyone officially, just some friends," said Payne, a 1973 Wake graduate. "I'll be making contact with them at some time. Obviously, since it's my alma mater, I'd be interested."

Wake Forest officials announced Wednesday that Bob Staak had resigned after four seasons and a 45-69 record. Payne, then head coach at Belmont Abbey, reportedly was the runner-up to Staak in 1985.

Payne has been an assistant with the Gamecocks since 1986, after three seasons as an assistant at East Carolina and five years at Belmont Abbey. Reports out of Winston-Salem indicated Wake Forest may pursue candidates with head coaching experience at major schools.

For Williams, 100% Effort Not Enough

man who gives 100 percent both in the classroom and on the basketball court.

But in the cold, hard view of the NCAA, Williams is only half that — a Proposition 48 non-qualifier, another black kid from the inner city with unlimited potential and too-low college test scores.

"What do I think about Prop 48?" Williams repeated dutifully, setting his 6-foot-9, 230-pound frame into a chair several sizes too small. "I think not playing basketball won't be the end of the world. For me."

"I feel like I'm one of those kids who would be working in school with or without it. I've already proven that."

"But a lot of kids who play ball don't see things the way I do. Take it away from them," he added, "and you're taking away a lot of their motivation ... scrambling their future."

To be sure, the biggest piece of the puzzle already seems in place for Williams, who spurned such suitors as Indiana, Michigan, Notre Dame and DePaul before signing a national letter of intent to attend Cincinnati next fall on full scholarship.

But that was before Cincinnati fired Tony Yates as its coach March 6.

When Williams signed the letter last fall, he knew Cincinnati already was under NCAA sanction. But the added burden of adjusting to another coach has him rethinking, especially since he admits, "I chose Cincinnati partly because the coach was black."

The only way he can wind up in a Division I program other than Cincinnati will depend on the results of his third and probably final shot at the American College Test.

If Williams gets at least a 15 score on the test, he will have met the criteria of Proposition 48 and be eligible to play as a freshman. If he fails a third time, he will be free to break his commitment to Cincinnati, but not to play basketball at any Division I school.

Twice before, he took the ACT and did not achieve 15; that, despite carrying a 2.8 of a possible 4.0 grade-point average overall and in the core-curriculum courses and the No. 17 academic ranking in his graduating class at South Shore Academy.

"I took it the first time in the middle of my junior year, with no pressure, just to see what it was like," Williams recalled. "I got 11.1 thought, 'Eleven, wow, that's rough. I got so panicked, I ran through the house and picked up a textbook — I don't even remember now which one — because I had this feeling I had to start studying something.'"

To his surprise, Williams scored you've done it right or not. Those (scores) picked up on the second test, but not enough. And I can't really tell you why."

His second attempt at the end of his junior year produced a 13 score.

Now, he may have to take a year off from the game that motivated him.

"If I've failed it a third time, I can live with it," he said. "At least my goals are still in front of me."

After eighth grade, Williams found South Shore's Don Pittman.

When Pittman arrived at the school just three years earlier, he threw most of the underachieving upperclassmen he inherited off the team, a move tantamount to professional suicide in Chicago's rough-and-tumble Public League, which lists pros Mark Aguirre of Detroit and Terry Cummings of Milwaukee and collegians Byron Irvin of Missouri and Nick Anderson of Illinois among its alumni.

"None of the big programs that were interested in Kenny were scared away by 48," Pittman said. "I liked Cincinnati because I think he'll find it easier to grow as a ballplayer there. I'm not worried about him as a student. ... I've found a correlation that kids who carry a 2.5 (GPA) here in the core curriculum can do the same in college."

"The biggest problem with 48 right now is that it doesn't recognize exceptions," Pittman concluded. "Like Kenny."

better the first time in English than math. With a concentration in computer science, he already has conquered algebra, advanced algebra, basic physics and both natural sciences and biology.

"I took history courses with my electives ... didn't waste them on woodworking or home economics or anything like that," he said.

"I'll admit I don't spend a lot of time on English. Honestly, I can't relate a lot of what I learn to real life, and I've never done that well with it besides."

Coaches Can Joke Now

Come Saturday, The Atmosphere Figures To Change

By Dave Goldberg
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

On Saturday, these same four men will be jumping from their seats, yelling at their players, complaining to officials, running up heart rates of more than 100.

But on Wednesday, with 72 hours to go until the NCAA's Final Four begins, it was sweetness, harmony and even jokes as the coaches of Michigan, Illinois, Duke and Seton Hall addressed the media via national telephone hookup.

"They have two fine 3-point shooters in Gaze and Martin," Duke's Mike Krzyzewski said of Seton Hall, then realized he'd erred. "... er, I mean Morton. Martin is Polish for Morton."

"Tell John I'm sorry," he said to the Pirates' coach, P.J. Carlesimo. "That's all right. He's half Italian," said Carlesimo, whose leading scorer, John Morton, is black.

And so it went. Lou Henson of Illinois, who plays Michigan for the third time this season after Seton Hall and Duke in the opener Saturday, made light of his two victories over the Wolverines this year — Michigan 96-84 at home and 87-73 on the road.

He called the latter "one of the best games we played all year." "Lou, you're being benevolent. You waxed us pretty good," replied Michigan's Steve Fisher, who retains the title "interim coach" even after winning four straight games after taking over for Bill Frieder when the latter bolted to Arizona State.

Much of the discussion sounded like a meeting of the Coaches' Marching and Chowder Society or, if you will, a prospective meeting of the coaches' union — which some have proposed in the backwash of a season in which more than a dozen Division I coaches have been fired.

Henson bluntly said that Fisher deserves to be taken off the hook, win or lose in the Final Four, which will be played at the Kingdome in Seattle.

"I really feel Steve Fisher deserves the head coaching position," Henson said. "When he takes over and they beat the people that they've beaten by the scores they've beaten them, he's proven he's a big-time coach and is ready for the job."

Carlesimo and Krzyzewski, meanwhile, reminisced about the time more than a decade ago when they coached at Wagner and Army respectively and used to chat during writers' luncheons at an Italian restaurant in Manhattan.

"Yes, I've known P.J. a long time, but we didn't think about the Final Four in those days," said Krzyzewski, who has taken Duke to college basketball's ultimate event three of the past four years. "Our aim was to have a gyro sandwich at Mamma Leone's."

In a more serious vein, Krzyzewski and Carlesimo were outspoken about the quick trigger fingers of athletic directors who seem more prone than ever to get rid of coaches who don't win immediately.

Carlesimo discussed the calls for his dismissal last year, when the Pirates probably saved his job by winning seven of their last nine Big East games and reaching the NCAA tournament for the first time with a 22-13 record.

And he was outspoken in his praise for the loyalty of the administration at the East Orange, N.J. school.

That loyalty was returned Wednesday when Msgr. John J. Petillo, the school's president, was asked if he felt vindicated by its decision to keep Carlesimo.

"Vindication would imply my decision was suspect," Petillo replied. "I never had any doubt about it."

But Carlesimo said others aren't as fortunate.

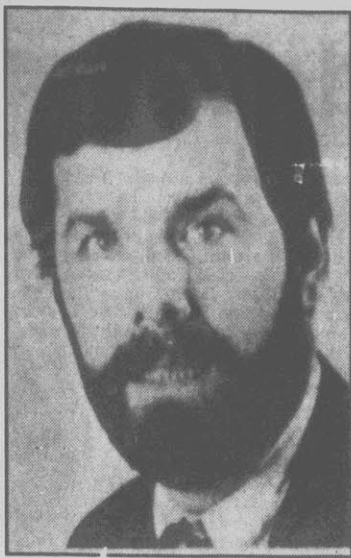

"People are being let go after two, three or four years when they don't win," he said.

"That's not enough. When you take a job in the spring, you lose a recruiting year. Then you lose a second because you're still getting things in order when the early signing period is coming up. So you start out two years behind."

"I really believe that coaching is overrated. I know how lucky I am to be here. If things hadn't worked out last year, Seton Hall would be here and our players would be here but our coaches wouldn't."

Krzyzewski noted that sometimes a team is ready to gel, as Seton Hall was last season, when the old coach is fired and a new one comes in and gets credit.

"Too often, I see guys losing jobs when they have a young team and they're just about to turn the corner," he said. "The administration fires him and it makes it easier for the guy coming in and makes him look good. To me, those are the sick ones."

much happy to be there, worried about whether I was going to be there in the second half," he says. "I think I got kicked out."

This time, Snyder and his teammates have an extended visit in mind. They don't want to leave Seattle early, and they certainly don't want to go away without a title. That was a decision made between Snyder and Danny Ferry when they were freshmen.

"We were driving, and just between the two of us, we pledged to ourselves that it was going to be something that we were really going to try to do, not only to make it to a Final Four, but to win a national championship," he says.

Rose Was Fined By Customs Service; More From SI

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Cincinnati Reds manager Pete Rose was fined more than $23,000 by U.S. Customs after bringing cash into the country in 1981 without declaring the money, Sports Illustrated reports in its latest issue.

"Two other sources close to the investigation said last week that the signals between Janszen and Rose didn't involve placing wagers on games, but related to updates on the scores of games in progress at a time early in the 1987 season when the stadium scoreboard was not working," SI said.

The magazine also quoted former Reds pitcher Ted Power, now with the St. Louis organization, as saying Rose discussed gambling continually in the Cincinnati clubhouse.

"Gambling just seemed like the normal thing for Pete to do," Power was quoted as saying. "People expected him to say, 'I was at the track yesterday' or, 'Yeah, I picked the trifecta.'" ent, scoring three to tie it at 4-4.

William Crandall led off with a single, but was forced at second on Gray Mills' grounder to short. Bullock walked and Vines was hit by a pitch, the fourth batter hit by Brewington in the game.

That brought on Christopher in relief, but after he got Clemons to fly out — scoring Mills, Christopher walked Seymour to load the bases and gave up a single to center by Andy Fassett which brought in Bullock and Vines to tie it up.

Walter Gatlin then came on to retire the final batter, earning the eventual win in the game.

"I'm very proud of our guys," Vincent said. "We battled back and fought. We hadn't been in this situation this year and you never know how you'll react until you get into a game like this."

Brewington, who started the game for the Rampants, didn't seem to have his stuff at times. "He wasn't real sharp, but he showed a lot of courage in continuing to battle," Vincent said. "His control wasn't that good, but he had some good pitches."

Brewington, in addition to hitting four, also walked four and struck out two. He gave up seven hits and all four runs against him were earned.

In contrast, Bullock stayed on top much of the way. He struck out five and walked four — one of them intentionally. He gave up eight hits, but only three of the runs he gave up were earned.

"My curve was working real well tonight," he said. "I needed to keep them off stride and if I'd tried to gun my fast ball, I think they would have hit it well. I had to keep them off balance and my curve did that."

But Bullock admitted that he was tired in the final frames. "My adrenaline was so high, I was pumped so hard in the third that I was running out in the seventh," he said.

In the third, Bullock had struck out the final two batters after a lead off error and a sacrifice put the go-ahead run on second base.

Bullock, along with Clemons and Fassett were named to the all-tournament team from Conley.

Crandall led the Viking hitting with three while Seymour and Fassett each had two.

Clark and Hines each had two runs to lead Rose and both were named to the all-tournament team, along with Moore, Leisten and Brewington. Gatlin was named the tournament's most valuable player.

Rose improves its record to 7-0 and will open Big East Conference play at Northern Nash on Tuesday. Conley, now 3-2, entertains Ayden-Grifton on Tuesday at 7:30 p.m.

Dustin Hoffman Wins As 'Rain Man' Scores

Jodie Foster Gets Oscar For 'Accused'

By John Horn
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — In true Hollywood style, a quiet film about the disconnected soul of an autistic "Rain Man" won Oscars for best picture, best original screenplay, best director Barry Levinson and best actor Dustin Hoffman.

"It is for us a Cinderella story. The picture was literally canceled three or four times," Hoffman said backstage at Wednesday night's 61st Academy Awards.

It also had a much-rewritten screenplay and went through four directors over two years.

Jodie Foster, a former child star, won the best actress award and her first Oscar for her emotional portrayal of the angry, traumatized victim of a gang rape in "The Accused."

"Cruelty might be human and it might be cultural, but it's not acceptable, and that's what this movie is about," said Miss Foster, 26, who was nominated for the award in 1976 at age 13 for playing a child prostitute in "Taxi Driver."

Her dark-horse victory was over the more favored actresses Glenn Close, in "Dangerous Liaisons," and Melanie Griffith's "Working Girl." Sigourney Weaver, nominated for best actress and best supporting actress, won neither.

"Dangerous Liaisons," a saga of sexual gamesmanship and deceit among the wealthy in pre-Revolutionary France, won three Oscars — for art direction, costumes and adapted screenplay, given to writer Christopher Hampton.

"Who Framed Roger Rabbit," the inventive comic blend of animation and live action, won three technical Oscars — visual effects, film editing and sound effects editing — and a special award for its chief animator, Richard Williams.

Geena Davis, who played a bubbly, eccentric dog trainer in "The Accidental Tourist," and Kevin Kline, the pseudo-intellectual, goldfish-devouring jewel thief in "A Fish Called Wanda," won in supporting roles.

Denmark won best foreign language film for the second straight year with writer-director Bille August's "Pelle the Conqueror," a grim picture of farm life in Denmark early in the century. The 1988 winner was "Babette's Feast."

Best song was Carly Simon's "Let the River Run" from "Working Girl." The movie, Miss Simon said, "inspired me to write a hymn to the morning. New York is a jungle, but I still wrote a hymn."

The academy could find only three songs to nominate this year, instead of the usual five, and didn't see fit to have them performed during the show.

Instead, producer Allan Carr said the show's opening number would be the most exciting 15 minutes in television history. Instead, the man who put "La Cage aux Folles" on Broadway gave the world a Snow White lookalike trilling "Proud Mary" to Hollywood brat packer Rob Lowe.

The night belonged to the "Rain Man" himself.

"I'm supposed to be jaded at this point; I'm very honored," Hoffman, 51, said in a halting, emotional voice after a rare standing ovation from the Shrine Auditorium audience. He won the award in 1975 for "Kramer vs. Kramer."

Backstage, he acknowledged the difficulty of creating Raymond Babbit, a "high-functional" autistic who can perform genius-level feats of calculation and visualization, but is unable to connect with other human beings, including a scheming younger brother who covets Raymond's $3 million legacy.

"I'm hanging on by a fingernail," he once told Levinson.

Levinson, in accepting the director's award, said the movie's success was "really about two actors — Dustin Hoffman and Tom Cruise. If they didn't deliver the performances they gave, I wouldn't be up here this evening."

"Rain Man" entered the awards ceremony with eight nominations, more than any other title, and has grossed $134.6 million at the box office.

"Rain Man" lost the original score award to "The Milagro Beanfield War" (Dave Grusin) and art direction to "Dangerous Liaisons."

Miss Davis was the first to receive an award with the line "And the Oscar goes to ..." The Academy, dropping the traditional "And the winner is ..." intended to soften the sense of competition, but several presenters, including Cher for best picture, reverted to "The winner is..."

"First of all, I want to thank Anne Tyler for writing such a wonderful book," said Miss Davis after receiving her award. She has remarked that she had read Miss Tyler's novel when it was first published and coveted the role of Muriel, later realizing her dream.

"It's great getting an Oscar for a comedy. It doesn't usually happen," Kline said backstage.

Stars Make Academy Awards Scene Dressed To The Nines

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — In traditional Oscar night high-style, the stars came out dressed to the nines — with diamonds, silk and black tie — and the Academy Award winners walked out on clouds with the same number.

The performers' grand entrance has been a tradition for the 61 years since Douglas Fairbanks, Mary Pickford and Cecil B. DeMille founded the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences and introduced the golden Oscar.

"This is my 26th time," Comedian Bob Hope said Wednesday night as he walked through the throngs in front of the Shrine Auditorium. "I'm learning to do it."

The fans seemed to recognize the hot young stars first, and especially turned up the volume when a long-haired Don Johnson and his ex-wife- "best friend" fiancée Melanie Griffith stopped to chat in front of the grandstands.

Ms. Griffith looked like a fairy-tale princess in a long, full white gown with a diamond and pearl choker at her neck.

One of her competitors, Sigourney Weaver, elegant in a white Yves St. Laurent gown, arrived on the arm of her father, TV executive Pat Weaver.

"He's my good luck charm," she said.

Not good enough. Miss Weaver missed in her double nominations for best actress in "Gorillas in the Mist" and supporting actress in "Working Girl."

While the men were limited to classic black dinner jackets, the women were the prime attraction to the fashion conscious, and they did not disappoint.

Goldie Hawn wore a golden dress with a plunging neckline designed by designer Bob Mackie, most recently noted for the revealing dress he designed for Cher last year when she won as best actress for her role in "Moonstruck."

a strapless fringed mini-dress in black.

One tradition was upheld by eternal "sexploitation" starlet Edy Williams, who wore her customary, barely-there "dress." This year's was strategically applied designs that looked like they were glued to her body.

She occasionally dropped her sheer shawl for the TV camera to display her structural integrity. In addition, she carried two puppies and led a pit bull named "Bad Rap" on a leash.

ARIES (March 21 to April 19): Keep a loose schedule that can be adjusted to fit your needs. Use moderation in pleasures and pastimes. Enjoy the comforts of life.
TAURUS (April 20 to May 20): You resent pressures that stem from inefficiency. Discord and frustration are the result of poor finances.
GEMINI (May 21 to June 21): Concentrate on art, music, sensuality and romance. Improve communications with the opposite sex. Stay on a steady course.
MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21): Breaking new ground pays off. Understanding other viewpoints has rewards. Lower your expectations.
LEO (July 22 to Aug. 21): Your vitality is high. A response on your part is needed to connect with someone interested in you. Have faith in your abilities.
VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22): Mixing business with pleasure is not the ideal situation. Pump yourself up and find someone informal with whom you can have fun.
LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22): Eccentric acquaintances cross your path. A hard-boiled associate should be avoided. Don't move in too many directions at once.
SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21): Emotions are close to the surface. Your fast pace may be a source of irritation to others who need some of your time and energy.
SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21): Humor is the best antidote for the social blues. Give an invitation to a cultural event to a friend. Added rest increases physical stamina.
CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20): Use diplomacy to handle untimely disputes. Benefits flow from the fruits of your labor. Avoid careless moves that are unsafe.
AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19): Home and business seem to be on a collision course. Use the weekend to straighten out family situations that could boil over.
PISCES (Feb. 20 to March 20): Those around you seem to be at cross purposes. Your sensitivities make you sensual and adoring with the right person.

 There are strange prayers being uttered at the local bridge club. Whenever anyone cuts Trump Coup Tommy, he appeals to the gods for bad trump breaks—it's the only time Tommy's bridge is bearable. Here's a typical escapade.

Only TCT would find a jump shift to two hearts on a broken four-card suit with no support for partner's suit. We would suggest a response of one diamond as a more sensible approach. North's jump to four hearts also was something of a stretch, and Tommy needed only Blackwood to bid a grand slam on a hand where most would be satisfied with a sure small slam as a matter of money management. Seven hearts was, however, an excellent contract.

West led the top of his club sequence, taken in dummy. When a trump to the ace revealed the 5-0 break, West started to shiver—he knew all about Tommy's propensity to romp home in contracts where mere mortals failed. Tommy cashed the table's high clubs, discarding a spade from hand. Next came the ace-king of spades and ace-king of diamonds, followed by a diamond ruffed low. When East followed to the third diamond, declarer could claim.

He led a spade from the board and East, down to nothing but trumps, ruffed with the nine. Tommy overruffed with the ten, ruffed a diamond with the king of hearts as East underrated helplessly, then took the marked finesse for the jack of trumps. In all, he collected two spade tricks, three trumps, three ruffs, two diamonds and three clubs for a "laydown" grand slam.

Guatemala Offers Concessions To Mutineers At Prison Farm

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SANTA CATARINA PINULA, Guatemala — The government says it has agreed to replace a prison farm's warden and guards if heavily armed inmates holed up inside with friends and relatives end a four-day revolt and surrender.

The offer was made Wednesday after authorities cut off water and power to the 2½-square-mile Pavon prison. At least four guards and three inmates have been killed there since Sunday, when inmates seized about 75 M-1 rifles.

The Easter revolt began while visitors were on the grounds, and many have stayed inside with the inmates in what some officials termed an effort to prevent an assault by security forces massed outside.

The estimated 100 rebellious convicts were expected to respond today to the government's proposal, which was made by Gonzalo Menendez de la Riva, the attorney general for human rights and chief government negotiator.

The government said it would consider the rebels' request for pardons for crimes committed during the uprising and guarantee their physical safety once they surrender their arms and release the roughly 500 people who are with them.

About 110 prisoners who took no part in the revolt fled Wednesday from the section that remained under inmate control and were taken into custody.

Twenty relatives of inmates trapped inside when the uprising began also made their way out.

In its offer, the government also promised to promote "strict application" of a law providing for reduction of sentences through work and present to Congress the mutineers' demand for a nationwide reduction of all prison sentences by five years.

Any pardon or amnesty for crimes committed during the rebellion would have to be enacted by Congress.

However, Edmundo Vasquez Martinez, president of the Supreme Court, said Wednesday that the court could not grant pardons for crimes committed at Pavon.

The first thing would-be escapee Victor Hugo Trujillo asked for when he was seized Wednesday was water.

Speaking from the window of a bus that later took him to another prison, Trujillo told The Associated Press he had not eaten for three days and had not had water since Tuesday afternoon.

"We suffered so much," Trujillo said. "We had no other choice but try to escape."

"It's the only way we can pressure them (the rebellious inmates)," Carlos Ramos Moncada, inspector general of prisons, said of the water and power cutoff. "If we don't, they could stay inside for days or weeks."

The inmates responded by offering to surrender if the warden and guards were replaced at Pavon, which is about 15 miles east of Guatemala City, negotiator Julio Escobar Arango, said.

About 75 to 100 prisoners have controlled key sections of the 1,350-inmate facility since Sunday. About 600 people — mostly women and children — were visiting when the uprising began. Authorities differ on whether they are hostages or whether they stayed inside to protect their loved ones from security force reprisals.

About 100 black-helmeted military police arrived Wednesday to reinforce the 1,000 police and army troopers ringed the prison. President Vinicio Cerezo has said force would not be used unless prisoners try to shoot their way out.

The rebels were described as hardened criminals serving long sentences for crimes such as murder and kidnapping. They reportedly include former security forces members.

Opposition Says Khomeini Fired Iranian U.N. Envoy

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NICOSIA, Cyprus — The main Iranian opposition group claims the country's newly ousted U.N. ambassador was jailed on orders from fundamentalist patriarch Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini. Iran denied the claim.

The Mujahedeen Khalq (Holy Warriors) said in a telex sent Wednesday from its headquarters in Baghdad, Iraq that the envoy, Mohammad Jaafar Mahallati, was arrested after returning from New York.

"It was only a short period after his arrest that the Khomeini regime announced his resignation on the false excuse of illness and doctors' recommendations," the statement said. It could not be independently confirmed.

Iran's official Islamic Republic News Agency, monitored in Nicosia, later denied that Mahallati had been arrested.

The agency quoted an unidentified foreign ministry source as saying the report was "quite baseless."

Mahallati's resignation was announced Tuesday by IRNA, hours before Khomeini's designated successor was ousted in an apparent crackdown on moderates in the administration.

Ayatollah Hussein Ali Montazeri, 64, was dumped after voicing open criticism in recent weeks of the 10-year-old Islamic revolution's shortcomings, and calling for greater freedoms.

He was named in 1985 as successor to Khomeini, now 88 and ailing, but had fallen into disfavor for his liberal views and growing alignment with former Prime Minister Mehdi Bazargan.

Bazargan, the revolutionary government's first prime minister, heads a token opposition grouping known as the Freedom Movement.

The first indications of a shakeup in the Iranian leadership came Sunday when the resignation of Deputy Foreign Minister Mohammad Javad Larijani was announced.

Mahallati and Larijani, both American-educated, had worked to improve relations with Western nations after the U.N.-sponsored cease-fire last August in the eight-year Iran-Iraq war.

Together with Montazeri, they appeared to be casualties of a resurgence of radical fundamentalism in Iran following Khomeini's harsh attack last month on rebuilding ties with the West.

The two diplomats belonged to the so-called pragmatist camp led by the powerful Parliament speaker, Hashemi Rafsanjani, which also includes the foreign minister, Ali Akbar Velayati.

Rafsanjani and his supporters have argued that opening up to the West was essential for reconstructing the economy in the post-war period.

But Khomeini denounced attempts to liberalize Iran, citing British author Salman Rushdie's novel "The Satanic Verses" as proof Western nations were trying to undermine Islam.

On Feb. 14, Khomeini ordered Moslems to seek out and kill Rushdie, who was born to a Moslem family in India, for allegedly blaspheming Islam with the book.

Last week, he said Iran had drifted away from the values of its 1979 revolution whose aim, he asserted, was still "the creation of a global Islamic government."

Riot Troops Storm Strike-Bound Plant

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SEOUL, South Korea — Striking workers fought police with firebombs, pipes and rocks today after 10,000 riot troops stormed the country's largest shipyard to quell three months of violent strikes.

Police said 700 workers were arrested at the Hyundai shipyard in Ulsan, about 150 miles southeast of Seoul, and Korean news reports said at least two dozen people were injured.

To protest the police action in Ulsan, radical students and workers battled riot police today in six cities, some firebombing Hyundai offices and showrooms of the conglomerate's automobile division.

The shipyard strikers, demanding recognition of their union, have staged sporadic work stoppages at the since Dec. 12 and at least 400 people have been injured in related violence.

Riot troops entered the shipyard by breaking through barricaded gates with heavy equipment. Some even arrived by boat. Firing tear gas, they raced up fire escapes and down hallways of company dormitories to drag out hiding strikers.

Windows were smashed by rocks and clubs as police entered the buildings, according to the South Korean news agency Yonhap.

Tear gas spewed over the shipyard and into nearby residential areas, causing citizens to complain. Yonhap said about 2,000 relatives and supporters of the strikers were also dispersed by tear gas.

The shipyard is owned by The Hyundai Group, one of the nation's largest conglomerates, which produces cars, ships, electronics and others products.

Hyundai has refused to recognize the union at the shipyard, and up to 5,000 of its 22,000 workers have clashed with pro-management workers. The Labor Ministry said today that Hyundai has lost $6 million daily as a result.

About 1,000 students at Ulsan University were dispersed by riot police using tear gas today as they attempted to march from the campus to the shipyard to join the strikers, Yonhap said.

At Changwon, a south coast city, about 1,800 workers at the Hyundai Precision Co., a subsidiary of the conglomerate, rallied in support of the striking workers and demanded the government stop suppressing the union.

In the southern city of Kwangju, bands of radical students armed with firebombs and steel pipes attacked two Hyundai offices and an automobile showroom, Yonhap said.

"Punish Chung Ju-yung who suppressed labor movement," they yelled. Chung is the honorary chairman and founder of the Hyundai conglomerate.

Former Nazi Deported

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Michael S. Bernstein's final assignment for the Justice Department before his death in the bombing of Pan Am Flight 103 last December was to negotiate the deportation of a former Nazi death camp guard to Austria. The deportation is now completed.

Josef Eckert, 65, who was an SS guard at the Auschwitz death camp during World War II, flew out of the United States on Tuesday night, Justice Department spokesman Loye Miller said Wednesday.

However, he did not show up in Austria as expected.

"We found out today that he went to sleep at Heathrow (Airport in London) between planes" and missed his connecting flight, Miller said, adding that Eckert continued his trip on Wednesday. "He's somewhere between Heathrow and Switzerland and Austria."

Eckert had concealed his Auschwitz service from U.S. immigration officials when he obtained a visa to come to the United States in 1956, the department said. At the time, he was living in Austria.

Eckert, who had been living in La Puente, Calif., admitted last Sept. 27 that he had been a member of the SS guard unit assigned to Auschwitz where he guarded prisoners. Millions of people were murdered during his time of service there.

Bernstein, a member of the department's Office of Special Investigations, negotiated with the Austrian government to arrange Eckert's return to that country, and Austria agreed to the return last December.

Bernstein was flying home from those negotiations when the plane exploded over Scotland on Dec. 21.
