Tanker Captain Faces Arrest

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

VALDEZ, Alaska — Authorities issued an arrest warrant for the tanker captain suspected of drinking before his ship ran aground, causing a 1,000-square-mile oil slick that expanded Saturday under shifting wind and currents.

And Alaska's governor threatened to close the Trans-Alaska Pipeline if the oil industry fails to protect against future spills.

The bulk of the 10.1-million-gallon slick began moving toward Cordova about 50 miles southeast of here, threatening the home waters of fishermen who have struggled to save endangered fish hatcheries.

About 800 miles of beach have been tainted so far in the biggest oil spill in the nation's history, officials said.

Gov. Steve Cowper said the state will require "absolute proof that equipment is in place" to combat future oil spills. "If it's not done, we're authorized to close the pipeline," he said.

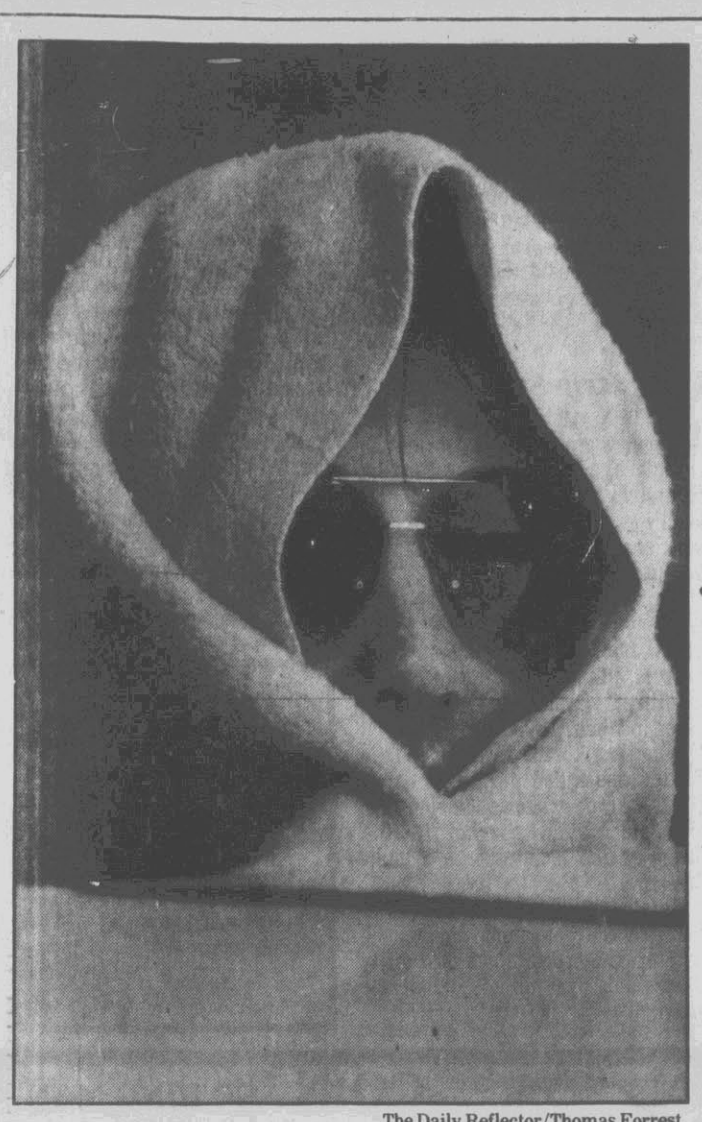

Some 85 percent of the state's $2 billion budget comes from the pipeline, and although the state has a $10 billion savings account, oil production on Alaska's North slope accounts for 25 percent of U.S. production.

Alaska Attorney General Doug Baily said Saturday that criminal charges were filed late Friday against Joseph Hazelwood, 42, captain of the tanker Exxon Valdez, which crashed into Bligh Reef in Prince William Sound on March 24.

Exxon fired Hazelwood on Thursday, the same day the National Transportation Safety Board revealed blood and urine tests taken about nine hours after the accident showed he had been under the influence of alcohol.

Charges filed in Valdez District Court accuse Hazelwood of operating a motorcraft while under

Expo '89 Will Open Thursday

By Greg Laudick
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Expo '89, this year's annual commercial fair, will be held Thursday, Friday and Saturday at the New Greenville Warehouse, located on N.C. 33 just north of Greenville.

Sponsored by the Pitt-Greenville Chamber of Commerce, the annual spring event showcases displays and demonstrations from hundreds of local businesses and organizations.

"The Expo gives our Chamber of Commerce members an opportunity to display their wares and lets the people of Greenville and Pitt County know just what products and services are available here," said Expo '89 manager and chamber vice president Pat Burnette.

Among the participants of this year's Expo, Ms. Burnette said, are automobile dealers; restaurants; banks; medical care providers, and a variety of non-profit agencies.

Also on hand will be representatives from businesses dealing in cosmetics; bicycles; recreational vehicles; boats, furniture; real estate; insurance, and weight-loss programs.

"This is the type of show in which you won't just spend an hour or so. You'll want to plan to come and spend at least a couple of hours — just strolling through and taking your time," she said.

The theme for the fifth annual Expo is "Boomtown Biz," so named, according to Ms. Burnette, because of the rapid economic and business growth recently exhibited in Greenville and Pitt County.

"We are very excited about our role as the hub of eastern North Carolina which, I believe, will be reflected in this year's show," she said.

Among the attractions are numerous giveaways and contests.

"Many of the exhibitors will have an opportunity where you can register for some nice prizes and gifts," she said.

Highlighting the event is a drawing Saturday at 3 p.m. for a round-trip ticket for two from Greenville to New York. No purchase is necessary and the winner need not be present to win. However, the winner must be 21 years of age or older to enter.

Ms. Burnette said a wide variety of food will also be available on the premises.

In addition, there will be musical entertainment beginning nightly at 7:30 p.m.

On Thursday the band "The Breeze" will play beach music favorites and, on Friday, "The Little Rock Band" will play a variety of country music. Charlotte-based "Perfect Fitt" will entertain Saturday with a mixture of top-40 tunes.

Hours for Expo '89 will be from 1 p.m. to 9 p.m. on Thursday and Friday and Saturday from 10 a.m. to 9 p.m.

Soviet Leader Heads For Cuba

By Michael Putzel
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

HAVANA — Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev arrives in Havana Sunday for talks that focus attention on the contrast between President Fidel Castro's doctrinaire Marxism and the pragamatic reforms of his communist sponsor.

It will be the Soviet leader's first visit to a Latin American country and only his third meeting with Castro, who traveled to Moscow for the 27th Communist Party Congress after Gorbachev took power and participated in the November 1987 Kremlin ceremonies marking the 70th anniversary of the Bolshevik Revolution.

In addition to the formal talks beginning Monday, Gorbachev will participate in ceremonial wreath layings and visit a health clinic, a genetic engineering center, and a crew of people who build housing on a voluntary basis.

He is expected to address the National Assembly in a nationally broadcast speech Tuesday and leaves the next day for London and meetings with Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher and Queen Elizabeth II.

Gorbachev will be accompanied by his wife Raisa.

Both nations have stressed in recent public statements the friendly nature of the visit and the healthy relations between the two communist countries.

But Castro in the past has been openly critical of "perestroika," Gorbachev's ambitious modernization program, for borrowing free-market concepts from capitalism. There are indications the Soviets have substantially reduced their aid to the island nation 90 miles off the Florida coast.

The Soviets highlighted another difference in the two systems when they held a news conference in Havana on Friday to trumpet the Soviet Union's March 26 parliamentary elections.

In Cuba, most forms of dissent are still banned as counterrevolutionary and can carry long prison terms.

At a time when Gorbachev is searching for new ideas and proposing experiments to spur economic development, Castro has warned

Farmville Citizens Seeking Another Vote On Town Government Change

By Carol Tyer
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

FARMVILLE — Having signed a petition, more than one-tenth of Farmville's citizens have voiced their will to have a say in whether the town should have a council-manager form of government instead of the mayor-commissioner government it now has.

A petition has been circulating for several weeks that calls for a special election to let voters determine whether the town charter should be amended to establish a town manager and council, according to Dr. Dan Heizer.

Heizer is a local family physician who is one of the leaders of an effort to educate citizens on what the group sees as the advantages of the council-manager plan of municipal government.

First public knowledge of a move to prevail on town commissioners to either enact the new form of government by ordinance or to call for the referendum on the issue came March 4, three days before the last commissioners' meeting.

The group interested in bringing about the new form of government has been led by Heizer, former Commissioner Jack Farrior, former Mayor Sarah Albritton and local dentist Dr. Bert Warren. For the March 4 meeting, the group brought Donald B. Hayman, a retiree from the North Carolina Institute of Government, to speak at a citizens' meeting held at the local Community Center.

Hayman, considered a specialist in municipal government, spoke in favor of the council-manager plan. He said that, in a council-manager muncipality, the council makes policy but does not have direct supervisory responsibility over departments nor over day-to-day operations of the town, as is true in Farmville now. Each commissioner now heads a particular committee over a particular department. In the council-manager plan, the town manager is a non-political professional who administers policy and becomes the only direct supervisor of department heads.

Heizer said Friday that "more than enough" people have signed the petition that he and others expect to take to the Farmville commissioners' regular March meeting Tuesday at 7:30 p.m. He said that a group will gather Monday night and go over the petition to remove

Steelworkers Strike Gulf States

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

GADSDEN, Ala. — Picket line skirmishers with clubs and chains damaged 10 police cars and a driver crashed a steel plant gate Saturday after more than 1,600 union steelworkers at Gulf States Steel Inc. went on strike.

Several security guards at the plant sustained minor injuries, but state police said they didn't know how or when the guards were hurt.

Workers began walking off their jobs after the old contract expired at midnight Friday. Four to eight pickets were at each of the plant's eight gates and no one crossed the picket lines, union spokesman Allen Stanford said.

Stanford said there was "just shouting back and forth but no one was hurt" in a picket line skirmish early Saturday, but police said 10 of their cars were damaged by clubs and chains and the tires on two units were slashed.

Around 3 a.m., police said, a motorist drove a van into a gate, destroying it, and then rammed a nearby small guardhouse, partially knocking it off its foundation. Police would not say whether the driver was arrested.

Despite the violence, state police Lt. James Hyatt characterized picketing as "very orderly most of the day." He said state troopers would be available through the night to assist city police.

Hyatt said troopers had made one arrest in connection with the strike. He said a man who was with the strikers at a plant gate was charged with failing to obey a lawful order and carrying a concealed weapon, a can of chemical Mace. Thermon Phillips, director of District 36 of the United Steelworkers of America, said he was unsure if supervisors were operating the plant, which makes steel plate and finished steel.

Company officials said they would have no comment Saturday.

Phillips said he expected an agreement to be reached "within a day or so" if negotiations continued as they have. Negotiatiors were meeting with federal mediators in Birmingham.

Earl Guyton, vice-president of United Steelworkers of America Local 2176, said negotiators had made some progress and would continue working toward an agreement with the maker of steel plate and finished steel.

Guyton said negotiations reached an impasse over several issues: wages, profit sharing, health care costs and contracting work in the plant to outside contractors.

Some 2,100 people work at the steel plant in Gadsen, about 50 miles northwest of Birmingham. About 1,650 are union members.

The lapsed three-year contract went into effect after The Brenlin Group of Ohio bought the plant under provisions of a court-ordered sale. Several attempts since September 1987 to reach a new work agreement have failed.

Two More Bodies Found In Mexico

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

AGUA PRIETA, Mexico — Three more bodies were found Saturday on an abandoned ranch about 1,000 yards south of the U.S. border, bringing to 12 the number of dead in a suspected drug ring reprisal, officials said.

Also Saturday, a spokesman for the Sonoran Attorney General's office said authorities believe an American is behind the killings. Spokesman Jose Luis Peraza also said two people have been detained for questioning.

The three bodies were found in a well where five other victims were found earlier in the week, said Tom Petropoulos, a homicide detective with the Pima County (Ariz.) Sheriff's office. Four other bodies were found in a nearby septic tank.

Petropoulos said the three bodies found Saturday were all Mexican men believed to be in their 20s, and all showed signs of being strangled.

Petropoulos, who has been assisting Mexican officials in the investigation, said earlier he had never seen anything like a bathroom in an abandoned house on the ranch where some of the victims were believed to have been tortured.

"There's a strong smell of death in the air. It's a very terrible thing, a very gruesome scene. Blood was splattered and strewn, you can tell there was a lot of suffering here," Petropoulos said.

This Mexican border city of about 75,000 residents has emerged over the past two years as the center of "Cocaine Alley," because of the increased drug trafficking through the area.

Mexican officials say they believe the slayings are drug related, but stopped short of connecting the slayings here with the mass murder of five men in Tucson last weekend.

Tucson Police said they are still trying to determine if the slayings in the two cities, about 130 miles apart, are linked.

Mexican officials have said two of those arrested told state judicial police that the killings were related to the disappearance of more than 220 pounds of drugs in recent weeks.

Man Dies After Boat Accident

Simpson resident Sylvester "Cookie" Ruffin died Saturday after a boating accident on the Tar River near Pactolus, Pitt County Sheriff's Deputy Larry Parker said.

Parker said Ruffin and Harold J. Edwards were fishing along the banks of the rain-swollen river when their boat drifted under limbs near the edge of the river. The current took the boat as Ruffin grabbed some of the limbs to move them, capsizing the boat and sending both occupants into the river.

Edwards, who Parker said was not wearing a life vest, swam to shore and called for help. Parker said Ruffin, who did have on a vest, apparently floated almost 200 yards to a swampy area of the river, where he was able to gain his feet and walk about another 50 yards.

Ruffin collapsed at that point, Parker said, apparently suffering a cardiac arrest brought on by the weather and the shock of the accident.

Parker said the Pactolus, Eastern Pines and Greenville rescue squads responded to the emergency, which was called in on the 911 line at about 11:55 a.m. He said the Pactolus squad arrived on the scene at about 11:57 a.m.

It was not until 2:58 p.m. that rescue teams were able to find Ruffin, however. Members of the Forest Service searching from the air finally spotted his life jacket and were able to direct other rescuers to his body.

Parker, a homicide detective with the Sheriff's Department, said preliminary investigations yielded no hint of foul play. A full autopsy will be performed by the coroner on Sunday, he said, and reports will be sent to the Sheriff's Department for its final investigation.

"I would say it's not a good idea to go to the river at this point and go riding in a small boat," Parker said of the Tar River, which has swelled past capacity with the recent abundance of precipitation in the area.

"The current seems to be much stronger in these conditions and it's very difficult to know when you're going to hit something when the river is that swollen."

Drag Strip Sued

DAYTON, Ohio (AP) — A New Lebanon woman filed a $10 million lawsuit against a North Carolina drag strip Friday, alleging her husband was killed in a motorcycle race that should have been postponed because of bad weather.

Sonja Blades filed the suit in Montgomery County Common Pleas Court against the Piedmont Drag Strip in Julianne, N.C., and the International Drag Bike Association, based in Mount Olive, Ala.

According to the lawsuit, Martin Blades was killed during the April 11, 1987, race when his motorcycle left the paved portion of the dragway and collided with a guardrail.

Ms. Blades contends that event officials were informed during the race of dangerously high and gusty cross-winds, yet failed to halt the event.

Castro, Gorbachev Plan Talks

that financial incentives for individuals and decentralizing the economy are dangerous.

"We must watch over the ideological purity of the revolution," Castro told his nation on the 30th anniversary of his victory on July 26. "That is why we cannot use any methods that reek of capitalism."

Soviet officials and Western observers agree Gorbachev is unlikely to lecture the Cuban leader in public or respond directly to his charges that Soviet reforms take too much from capitalism.

That would be seen as a direct contradiction of Gorbachev's oftenstated view that there is no one correct route to socialist development.

Diplomats in Havana and Moscow said it is unlikely Gorbachev is willing to continue subsidizing the Cuban economy at present levels while faced with widespread shortages, deficit spending and increasingly difficult economic problems at home.

According to U.S. estimates, the Kremlin provides Cuba from $4 billion to $6 billion annually in economic and military assistance, and the aid programs and subsidies account for as much as 20 percent of the Cuban gross national product.

The diplomats, speaking on condition of anonynmity, said the Soviets already appear to have reduced their purchases of Cuban sugar, which they buy at higher-than-market prices as a way of providing Cuban foreign aid.

Some diplomats said they expect Gorbachev to tell Castro bluntly — but in private — that Cuban must put its economic house in order.

But they suggest Gorbachev may make a public show of superpower support by announcing the Soviet Union's willingness to forgive all or part of Cuba's ruble debt, which has accumulated in the 30 years since the Cuban Revolution.

To forgive a debt that is unlikely ever to be repaid actually would cost Gorbachev very little, one diplomat said, while raising the ante for Western industrialized countries that hold most of the Third World debt.

Gorbachev told the United Nations in December the Soviet Union was prepared to offer the least-developed countries a moratorium on debt service and "in quite a few cases to write off the debt altogether" if the West would go along with a program to solve the debt problems of poorer countries.

Nuclear Plant Gets New Name

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

AIKEN, S.C. — Westinghouse took over management of the troubled Savannah River Plant nuclear weapons facility Saturday and immediately renamed it the Savannah River Site.

Jack Herrmann, a Westinghouse spokesman, said the new name is "basically symbolic," but serves a function.

Under the former operator, DuPont Corp., the operations, laboratory and construction departments all reported to different managers, and the name Savannah River Plant was used by the company as a reference to operations only.

Under Westinghouse, those departments all report to the same man — James Moore, president of Westinghouse Savannah River Co.

"We're just trying to develop better cohesion," Hermann said.

The three reactors at the plant, which makes nuclear weapons grade plutonium and tritium, have been idle for nearly a year because of safety and structural problems.

Crops Increase

RALEIGH (AP) — North Carolina farmers have indicated they plan to plant 14 percent more acres in crops in 1989 than in 1988, state Department of Agriculture officials say.

The figures show projected plantings of 267,000 acres of flue-cured tobacco, 1.3 million acres of corn, 1.65 million acres of soybeans and 680,000 acres of wheat.

Courier Charged

GASTONIA, N.C. (AP) — A Metrolina Courier driver has been arrested and accused of stealing cocaine and marijuana that was being returned to county police from a drug testing lab.

Lynn Avery Floyd, 38, of Gastonia, was arrested while driving his route Thursday and charged with 12 counts of altering court documents. He was held under $50,000 bond.

Teen-Ager Draws Prison Term In Stabbing-Robbery

By John Bare
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

A 15-year-old Greenville girl who pleaded guilty to stabbing a Farmville woman last November has been sentenced to 15 years in prison.

Superior Court Judge G.K. Butterfield of Wilson sentenced Melissa Stroud on Friday after she pleaded guilty to armed robbery, conspiracy to commit armed robbery and assault with a deadly weapon, inflicting serious injury. She faced a maximum of 50 years in prison. As part of the plea arrangement, the state agreed to dismiss a charge of conspiracy to commit murder.

Miss Stroud and her boyfriend at the time, Gary Patrick McBennett, 30, of Lot 15, Watkins Trailer Park, Farmville, allegedly entered Elise Jones Mozingo's home Nov. 10, 1988, and robbed and stabbed her.

Nancy Aycock, chief assistant district attorney, said Miss Stroud, McBennett and a friend of the Mozingo family, Larry Eugene King Jr., 22, of Farmville, conspired the day before to plan the robbery.

Earlier in the week, Butterfield sentenced McBennett to 25 years in prison and gave King a three-year suspended sentence and placed him on probation for five years.

"The plan was to leave no witnesses," Mrs. Aycock said. "(McBennett's and King's statements to police) clearly stated the plan was to kill Mrs. Mozingo."

While King backed out of the conspiracy because he "drew the line at murder," Mrs. Aycock said Miss Stroud told McBennett "she would do what had to be done."

When the two entered the home, Miss Stroud shoved Mrs. Mozingo and stabbed her in the arm and chest, Mrs. Aycock said. In all, she and McBennett stole $1,995, including personal money, church money kept in the house and a bank bag belonging to a friend of the Mozingos. Before leaving the house, McBennett threatened Mrs. Mozingo, and he and Miss Stroud sliced the telephone lines so no one could call for help, Mrs. Aycock said.

"Mrs. Mozingo described a period of time when she was as terrified as she probably ever will be in her life," Mrs. Aycock said.

The state asked Butterfield to impose substantial active time, in spite of the girl's age. In January, her case was transferred from Juvenile Court to Superior Court, and she faced the charges as an adult.

"We're not insensitive to the age of the child ... but we think the severity of the crime is such that it shouldn't go unpunished for a number of reasons," Mrs. Aycock said. A report from a juvenile counselor indicated that Miss Stroud was involved in the Juvenile Court system in October 1987 and shows a history of violent behavior, Mrs. Aycock said.

"At one point, she threatened to blow up her mom's car, and at one point she carved 'I hate Dad' with a razor blade in her arm," she said.

Miss Stroud's attorney, John Smith of Winston-Salem, put Dr. Jascha Danoff, chief of child and adolescent psychiatry at East Carolina University School of Medicine, on the witness stand.

Miss Stroud was hospitalized for evaluation in October of 1987, Danoff said, and there were indications she had been beaten and abused. She was diagnosed as having a conduct disorder, he said, which manifested itself in rule-breaking and hostile behavior.

Butterfield recommended that Miss Stroud undergo psychological treatment, and he sentenced her as a Committed Youthful Offender, which will allow her to be eligible for parole sooner than being committed as an adult.

Huggins Sentenced On Drug Charges

An Ayden man has been sentenced to 25 years in prison after pleading guilty to cocaine and marijuana charges.

Gentry Huggins, 27, pleaded guilty to three counts of possessing, selling and conspiring to sell cocaine and two counts of possessing and selling marijuana. He was sentenced Thursday by Superior Court Judge G.K. Butterfield of Wilson.

Huggins and four other Pitt County residents were arrested in November by Pitt sheriff's deputies after a four-month undercover investigation. Two defendants connected to Huggins were also sentenced Thursday.

Johnny Stanley Jr., 24, of 915 Courtland Road, Greenville, pleaded guilty to three counts of conspiring to sell and deliver cocaine, two counts of possessing cocaine and the counts of selling cocaine. He was sentenced to 12½ years in prison.

Eileen Wilson, 30, 2711 E. Fourth St., Greenville, pleaded guilty to two counts of delivering cocaine, two counts of possessing cocaine and two counts of conspiracy and received a nine-year suspended sentence. Butterfield placed her on probation for five years.

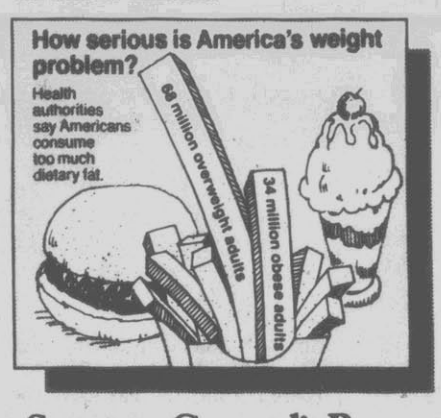

Two other co-defendants, Morris Ginn, 29, of Box 284-C, Ayden, and Chad Everett Reel, 18, of Route 2, Ayden, have not entered pleas or stood trial. Ginn is charged with possessing, selling and delivering cocaine and conspiracy. Reel is charged with possessing, selling and delivering cocaine and four counts of conspiracy.

Obesity is a national health crisis.

Count them. There are 34 million adult Americans in this land of plenty who are obese. One in every four adults. That means they eat too much or too much of the wrong thing. Their body weight is 20 percent above what medical authorities consider healthy.

Count them. Thirty-four million Americans who are at risk for serious illness linked to overeating: coronary heart disease, high-blood pressure, strokes, and even some types of cancers. Obesity can also cause hypertension, and increase by ten-fold the risk of diabetes.

Surgeon General's Report

"The Report on Nutrition and Health", released by U.S. Surgeon General C. Everett Koop, cites fats as a leading cause of disease that should be reduced in most people's diets. Overconsumption of fats and certain other foods, it concludes, is a major national health problem.

This report marks the first time the government has identified the reduction of fat intake as the No. 1 dietary priority of the nation.

Obesity: Major Risk for Americans

Is it any wonder the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services considers obesity a major killer of Americans? Health authorities say dietary fat—hamburgers, french fries, ice cream—accounts for at least 37-percent of the calorie intake of most Americans.

The solution, according to an extensive study published by the Council on Scientific Affairs of the American Medical Association, has three simple elements:

1. Nutritionally-balanced diet
2. Behavior modification
3. Exercise

ECU To Join 2-Way Microwave TV Network Linking Schools, Triangle

ECU NEWS BUREAU

A new education and research tool will be activated at 4 p.m. Tuesday when East Carolina University joins the microwave communications network operated by the Microelectronics Center of North Carolina.

In a demonstration of the capabilities of the network, ECU officials will throw a switch to initiate a three-way teleconference linking the local transmission site at the ECU School of Medicine with the Microelectronics Center in Research Triangle Park and Bowman Gray School of Medicine in Winston-Salem.

Funded by a $3.9 million appropriation from the North Carolina General Assembly, the extension of the network to ECU will be witnessed by members of the local legislative delegation, including Reps. Walter B. Jones Jr., Ed Warren and Eugene Rogers and Sens. Tom Taft and R.L. Martin. Chancellor Richard R. Eakin will lead ECU participation in the teleconference.

The microwave communications link will remove distance barriers between ECU and other institutions in the system, which include most of the state's major public and private universities, the four medical schools and several sites in the Research Triangle Park.

The television system will permit interactive teleclasses, video seminars and teleconferences between two or more distant locations. For example, graduate nursing students on another campus can "attend" a class originating at ECU. At both sites, the students will not only see and hear the instructor, the instructor will see and hear the students via two-way color television.

Dr. James A. Hallock, medical school dean, said he is excited about the opportunities that association with the network presents.

"This technology allows for transmission of information and ideas in a highly efficient and effective manner," said Hallock. "I can see tremendous potential for exchange among the universities and medical schools on the network, and we are delighted to be active participants."

Additional receiving sites are also contemplated for locations elsewhere on the ECU campus to enhance convenience for users from other graduate-level programs.

The network will also be a boon to collaborative research among scientists at the state's major research universities and in the Research Triangle. In addition to joint televised seminars, the microwave system currently permits more than 1,000 individual computers to "talk" to each other at a rate several hundred times faster than is typically possible. And beginning next fall, system users will have access to the Microelectronics Center's new supercomputer, further enhancing research capabilities.

Preparations for joining the network, which began in 1986, have included the construction of two signal relay towers in Bailey and Falkland. At the ECU School of Medicine, workers have been adapting a 100-seat classroom, a conference room and a control room as the ECU transmission and receiving station.

The classroom on the second floor of the Brody Medical Sciences Building has been equipped with four automated TV cameras, two 46-inch TV monitors and 24 voice-activated microphones to facilitate audience participation. Across a hallway, the conference room will accommodate up to six participants, each of whom will be visible by way of individual voice-activated TV cameras.

The network broadcasts graduate courses in microelectronics as well as evening courses in a variety of subjects, including engineering, nursing, library science and health.

Other members of the network include UNC campuses at Chapel Hill, Charlotte and Asheville, N.C. State, Winston-Salem State, N.C. A&T in Greensboro, Duke, Wake Forest and the Research Triangle Institute.

Conley Teacher Wins Top Award

ECU NEWS BUREAU

A Pitt County high school science teacher was the recipient of the Outstanding Science and Math Teaching Award given by the East Carolina University chapter of Sigma Xi, the Scientific Research Society, at a program last week.

Nancy Evans, a teacher at D.H. Conley High School, received the award Thursday recognizing her contributions to science teaching.

In addition to the award for outstanding teacher, Sigma Xi also presented awards to a member of the ECU faculty and to two students.

Dr. Chia-Yu Li, chairman of the chemistry department, won the faculty award for a scientific paper published in the Journal of Chromatography in 1988. Li joined the ECU faculty in the chemistry department in 1973. A native of China, he received degrees from Taiwan Normal University, the University of Louisville and Wayne State University.

Students receiving awards were Mamta Patel, a biology major, who was given an award in recognition of his research contributions in the biology department, and Mark E. Hemric, a graduate student, who won an award for research and a paper published in the Journal of Biochemistry. Hemric is a biochemistry major in the ECU School of Medicine.

While the research awards are given to ECU faculty and students, the outstanding teacher is chosen from schools throughout the region.

Ms. Evans, an ECU graduate, has taught at D.H. Conley for 18 years and is chairman of the school's science department.

She has received several awards for teaching excellence. She was the 1978 and 1980 Teacher of the Year for D.H. Conley High School and was the Outstanding Science Teacher in Pitt County in 1983 and 1985. In 1985 she was selected the Outstanding Teacher in District 15 of the N.C. Science Teachers Association.

Tax Issues Get Legislators' Eye

By F. Alan Boyce
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — Legislative finance committees are poised to take up several tax measures designed to pump money into the general fund, but lawmakers remain uncertain how to balance income with other tax-related issues.

Gov. Jim Martin's call for a 1-cent sales tax increase and a generally bleak revenue picture has led to the filing of other bills considered ripe for passage in this climate.

The House Finance Committee has bills to revamp the individual income tax system — something intended to help the poor without bringing in new money. Meanwhile, Revenue Secretary Helen Powers is pressing for a tax-amnesty program and tougher enforcement against tax cheaters.

"We're talking about increasing taxes and having revenue shortfalls and that's the best time in the world to have this amnesty period and bring in the revenues painlessly," Ms. Powers said last week.

With the base budget nearly written, lawmakers now have to decide whether to mix and match tax proposals or let each one stand on its own merits. And they have to keep their eye on Martin's goal of giving teachers and state employees a 6 percent pay raise.

Rep. Alex Hall, D-New Hanover, chairman of the House Finance Committee, said he wants a good idea of the money that will be needed before proceeding.

"We don't want to go off passing a tax package not knowing the dollars that are needed," he said. "I've taken the position I want to see what the appropriations process is able to accomplish. Once that's done, then we'll take those bills up. So I'm just holding those bills for the moment."

However, House Speaker Joe Mavretic said he saw no reason to link the tax issue too closely with the appropriations process. He said the 1-cent sales tax "pretty much covers the needs we are seeing."

David Crotts, chief fiscal analyst for the Legislature, said the picture would remain cloudy for quite some time. For example, he said the amnesty program could bring in $20 million to $30 million from people who owe back taxes. But he said that "moderately conservative" estimate could be low by as much as $30 million. And the state's share of taxes from the sale of RJR-Nabisco stock in the largest takeover in the nation's history is almost impossible to estimate, he said. "That's the way it has always been," he said. "That's the way the Legislature always has budgeted."

Rep. Sharon Thompson, D-Durham, one of the sponsors of the tax fairness plan, said she hoped to keep the bill insulated from tax-raising efforts. She wants to keep the public's attention on simplifying state tax returns by basing them on federal laws.

"What I'd really like is to get it moving right around tax time, so it would be fresh in everyone's mind how nice it would be if it were simplified," she said. "But I don't think it would be possible to get it moving that quickly."

Ms. Thompson said lawmakers also may have to look at some "sacred cows" when raising taxes — possibly increasing the levy on cigarettes as the manufacturer's level or raising tuitions at University of North Carolina System cmpuses.

Legislative leaders said it was difficult to gauge sentiment for any particular tax.

"It's tough to read," said Hall. "I think something will come together to do what is needed in the state. But I don't see anyone jumping out as a lightning rod at this moment."

Rep. Dave Diamont, D-Surry, House Appropriations Committee chairman, said it was just beginning to dawn on some lawmakers how much money will be needed. The end of the first round of budget talks resulted in few reductions, he said.

"Once folks realize we're not making the kind of cuts we need, there's gonna be a facing of reality," he said.

Martin Calls On Campaign Backers To Help Promote Sales Tax Boost

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH (AP) — Gov. Jim Martin has turned to his campaign for help in gathering support for his proposed state sales tax hike that would provide teachers and state employees with a pay raise.

Martin's election campaign committee mailed 30,000 letters to contributors this week explaining Martin's proposal and urging them to get their legislators to back the governor's plan, Brad Hays, a political consultant in Charlotte who advises Martin, said in an interview published Saturday.

The three-page mailing cost about $7,500, Hays said. It comes six weeks after a mailing seeking $125,000 to retire the debt from the 1988 campaign.

Printed over the top half of the front page is a note from Martin to Bob Bradshaw, campaign committee chairman.

"Please get the word out to our friends, and ask them to contact their legislators right away to support this vital education package," Martin's note says.

The state sales tax is 3 cents on most purchases. Consumers pay an additional 2 cents in local sales tax for a total of 5 cents.

Martin's proposal would add a penny to the sales tax on most items, but it would drop the tax to 4 cents for food and non-prescription drugs.

The revenue would be used to provide average pay increases of 6 percent for public school teachers and state workers. Martin has tied his sales-tax proposal to statewide implementation of the career-ladder pay plan for teachers.

Last month he quietly lobbied legislators for support, but hit a snag two weeks ago when 29 Republicans announced a counter proposal — a 5 percent across-the-board cut in the state budget and elimination of aid to non-state agencies such as libraries.

Hays and Tim Pittman, Martin's communications director, said the mailing was done to build support and not in response to the activity in the Legislature.

Hays said it was meant to directly inform supporters.

"Sometimes they don't know much else other what the paper says," Hays said. "We send out something unscreened, unfiltered by the press to tell them what's going on."

Hays noted that in 1985, Martin's campaign committee sent out three or four mailings to build support for programs to cut taxes. Eventually, the General Assembly approved about $200 million of the $500 million in tax cuts Martin sought.

While Martin is going to his supporters for help, members of the GOP group opposing the tax increases are distributing copies of Martin's October 1984 campaign statement, hich called for eliminating the state sales tax on food and over-the-counter medicine.

"There are two basic approaches to government," Martin says in the statement Oct. 18, 1984. "At the heart of this argument is the question of fewer taxes versus more growth in government."

The statement notes Martin's prediction that he would be able to give teachers and state workers a minimum 5 percent annual pay increase and provide for statewide implementation of the career ladder "without any new taxes."

Martin says he never promised not to raise taxes but supports tax increases only as a last resort.

Arts School Donors Told To Hold Funds

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WINSTON-SALEM — A former president of the student body at the N.C. School of the Arts is urging alumni to withhold contributions to the school until Chancellor Jane E. Milley leaves.

Seth Jason was the chairman of the Student Advisory Council at the arts school during the 1985-86 school year and now works in Washington. Jason estimates that there are between 150 and 250 alumni in the area around Washington, Philadelphia and Richmond, Va. He has been calling some of them and urging them to withhold their contributions until after Ms. Milley leaves, he said.

In November, top administrators sent Ms. Milley a letter expressing serious concern about her administration of the school. The faculty and students have since called for her resignation.

Jason is asking students not to contribute, he said, because of Ms. Milley's lack of concern for the school and its alumni.

"The alumni in the Washington area are not sending any money to the School of the Arts until she resigns or is terminated," he said.

"Everybody is appalled and everybody is agreeing with me," he said. "The feeling that I'm getting is that we all feel let down and we're not going to do anything with the school until she's gone."

Democratic Women Say Party 'Old-Boy Network'

By John Flesher
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — A group of Democratic women charged Saturday that the state Democratic Party is dominated by an "old-boy network" and questioned Lawrence Davis' fitness as party chairman.

In a bluntly worded statement during a tense meeting of the North Carolina Democratic Executive Council, the women said they had become "increasingly disenchanted and alienated." They presented a list of demands, including party support for female and minority candidates for statewide offices.

"The challenge for the Democratic Party is not to see how bland, inoffensive and middle-of-the-road we can be," said former state Sen. Wilma Woodard of Garner, the group's spokeswoman. "The challenge is not how to put the old-boy network on a life-support system.

"Rather, the challenge is to recruit, nurture and elect vigorous, forward-looking candidates, black, white and Indian, especially women," she said. "There's no other way to win."

Saying she spoke for thousands of rank-and-file Democratic women and that 280 party activists had endorsed her remarks, Mrs. Woodard asked the Executive Council to "assess the leadership of Mr. Davis and to balance it against the points we have made today."

In an interview, Mrs. Woodard said her group was "dissatisfied with the direction he (Davis) may be taking the party." Asked whether Davis should be fired, Mrs. Woodard said, "It's not my place to make that decision."

Davis sat a few feet from Mrs. Woodard as she read her statement in the conference room of the state Democratic headquaters, his face betraying no emotion.

"These matters will be addressed," he said after Mrs. Woodard finished and other people at the meeting offered their comments. Davis later refused to talk with reporters.

The women's action stemmed from remarks Davis made after his election in January as successor to former Chairman Jim Van Hecke. In a newspaper interview, Davis said the party should try harder to regain the loyalty of moderate to conservative Democrats who have voted Republican in recent elections.

Especially upsetting to his critics was Davis' remark that the party should reconsider its platform plank in support of letting women decide for themselves whether to have abortions.

Davis "has given every indication that he would reshape our party and its platform in his own image," Mrs. Woodard said. "Mrs. Davis is a fine and honorable man ... but Mr. Davis has no right to impose his personal views on the party."

About two dozen women joined Mrs. Woodard at the meeting, including Jane Patterson, a Cabinet officer under former Gov. Jim Hunt; Sandra Babb, a former member of the Raleigh City Council; state Rep. Anne Barnes, D-Orange; Mercedith Bacon, a chairperson of the Swain County Board of Commissioners; and Stephanie Bass, who was Hunt's deputy press secretary.

They said Davis' remarks had been the last straw for many women who have become increasingly frustrated with a party they see as dominated by white men who have not made women full leadership partners.

"You do not give us the support we need to offer this state our leadership," Ms. Bacon said.

Mrs. Babb said, "For too long, there has been a very small group of white males making the decisions. ... Our phones are ringing all acros the state. People are saying, 'I'm fed up. I want to be a part of the process. I'm not appreciated, I'm not included.'"

The women demanded that the party chairman support the Democratic platform, that the Democratic ticket include "several" female nominees for statewide offices and Congress in 1990 and 1992, that the party spend $25,000 to support re-election of female Democratic legislators and recruit others, that party resources be spread more evenly among candidates for all offices, and that two additional Executive Council positions be created for women.

On the recommendation of Herbert Hyde, the Buncombe County Democratic chairman, the Executive Council voted to accept Mrs. Woodard's statement and study the women's demands at future meetings.

Several council membrers praised Davis, although none defended his statements that sparked the controversy.

"I think all of us make mistakes," said state Sen. Russell Walker of Randolph County, a former state Democratic chairman.

Baker Enters Fla. Retreat

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHARLOTTE, N.C.— Defrocked PTL leader Jim Bakker is staying at a Florida retreat for ministers suffering from emotional distress and plans to rebuild his TV ministry while awaiting his fraud and conspiracy trial, a retreat official said Saturday.

"We extended an invitation to him," said the Rev. John Dawsey, chairman of the board of directors of the Lake George Ministries Retreat in the tiny community of Lake George, Fla., about 40 miles west of Daytona Beach.

Dawsey, who is pastor of the Church of God in the community of Salt Springs in Marion County, said Bakker had arrived Wednesday at the 30-acre retreat on Lake George. However, he did not receive permission to move to Florida until Friday after a federal magistrate in Charlotte gave his permission.

Dawsey would not say whether Bakker's wife, Tammy Faye, or other family members were staying at the retreat.

"It's a place for ministers to come and rest and recuperate," Dawsey said in a telephone interview. "Most pastors that come here have been hurt or devastated or have emotional problems or distress."

Bakker received the go-ahead to move to Florida after U.S. Magistrate Paul Taylor was told Bakker has found a location in Lake George to live and to broadcast the "Jim and Tammy" show.

Bakker, who is free on $50,000 bond, must first agree to conditions outlined by Taylor, according to court documents obtained by The Charlotte Observer.

Bakker cannot leave Florida without permission from court officials and he must maintain weekly and monthly contact by telephone and in person with court officials in Jacksonville.

Bakker was indicted last December on mail fraud, wire fraud and conspiracy charges stemming from a 16-month federal grand jury probe into PTL and the television ministry's fundraising practices.

Democrats $225,000 In Debt

RALEIGH (AP) — The North Carolina Democratic Party is $225,000 in debt because of "abysmal" accounting procedures and loose spending practices, Executive Director Mark Longabaugh said Saturday.

Longabaugh reported the shortfall to the party's Executive Council and outlined a plan to repay the money and put the party on a more sound financial footing.

The debt, he said, includes more than $20,000 owed by the Victory '88 fund, an independent campaign supporting the presidential campaign of Michael Dukakis; $95,000 to $97,000 owed to vendors; and a $100,000 line of credit with BB&T.

Longabaugh, who became party executive director in mid-February, said there were several reasons why the party had gotten into a financial "mess" last year.

"Our accounting procedures were abysmal," he said. Additionally, "we were living off loans" and unauthorized expenditures were made.

To improve the situation, he said, the party will make several direct-mail fund raising appeals and seek a bigger turnout than usual for the Jefferson-Jackson banquet, which he said could generate $75,000 to $100,000 this year.

He said the state party headquaters would become more geared toward fund raising and would establish a separate division for the purpose.

Black Lawmakers Will Boycott Session At Former Slave Mart

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — Holding a ceremonial session of the General Assembly this month at a former slave auction site in Fayetteville is inappropriate, say black state legislators who plan to boycott the session.

"It's a sensitivity issue," Rep. H.M. "Mickey" Michaux, D-Durham, said. "To go back to the slave market reminds us of an ugly past. We want to look to the future."

The Legislative Black Caucus voted unanimously Wednesday to boycott the April 13 session, he said. Black legislators from Fayetteville were permitted to abstain so they would not be put in a difficult position, said Michaux, chairman of the caucus.

The session will commemorate the 200th anniversary of North Carolina's ratification of the U.S. Constitution. Delegates to a constitutional convention met to ratify the document Nov. 21, 1789, in Fayetteville, one of several towns that served as the state capital in colonial times.

Fire destroyed the State House, where the constitutional convention was held, in 1831. It was replaced by the Market House, which still stands.

The building is too small to hold the Legislature, so lawmakers are scheduled to meet on the grounds around the Market House.

Rep. Dan Blue, former chairman of the Black Caucus, said black legislators have no quarrel with celebrating North Carolina's ratification of the Constitution. But the Market House "is the wrong symbol from which to talk about it," said Blue, D-Wake.

"A lot of us grew up having the example of the Fayetteville Market House put to us as the place where a lot of slaves were sold, and that's the way people perceive it," said Blue, D-Wake.

Michaux said the ceremonial session might be moved. But Rep. Bill Hurley, D-Cumberland, said it was too late to change the site.

"It's set," said Hurley, a former mayor of Fayetteville. Fayetteville officials have been working on the event for about a year, Hurley said.

"Fine, fine," Michaux replied when told of Hurley's comments. "We will go down there, but we ain't going to attend that session."

Hurley is scheduled to meet with the Black Caucus Monday night to discuss the issue. He would not say Friday what he plans to tell the group. But Hurley did say that historical information about the Market House will be presented to lawmakers when they visit Fayetteville.

Michaux said members of the Black Caucus have enough historical evidence to know that slaves were sold at the Market House.

"It was used to sell a lot of things, including slaves," he said. "It was known throughout the state as the old slave market."

Michaux also doubted that Hurley could convince the group to change its plans. "It's pretty firm," he said. "He (Hurley) knows that."

Fugitive Arrested

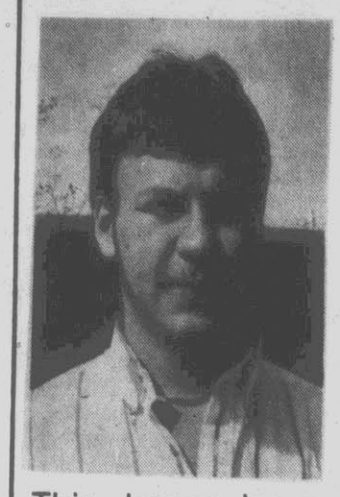

ST. PAUL, Minn. (AP) — A man authorities say is a fugitive wanted in North Carolina on various charges was arrested Friday, the FBI said.

Mark Arthur Webster, 45, has been charged with unlawful flight to avoid prosecution on a rape charge, said Jeffrey J. Jamar, special agent in charge of the Minneapolis FBI office.

Webster was being held at the Ramsey County jail pending his appearance before a U.S. magistrate.

Authorities said Webster faces extradition to Weaverville, N.C., where he faces the rape charge and other criminal charges.

IN THE STATE

Rally Planned

MORGANTON, N.C. (AP) — The leader of an "underground railroad" which harbors fugitives who believe their children have been sexually abused says she will hold a rally and march in Morganton on behalf of 5-year-old Jessica Porter Williams.

The child, who has been the center of a bitter three-year custody battle, was recently returned to the custody of her mother, Julie Williams Realon, after being abducted for four months by her father, Morganton attorney Hugh "Skip" Williams Jr.

Williams fled Morganton with Jessica on Oct. 28 and joined the underground railroad after failing to win custody of the child despite repeated accusations that she was being sexually abused by her stepfather, Rod Realon. A Department of Social Services investigation and a court-ordered study by an independent child abuse expert have cleared Realon of abuse charges.

Faye Yager of the fugitive group said the rally was not only to call attention to the Williams' case but to show similar situations are happening across the country.

Charges Filed

HIGH POINT, N.C. (AP) — A High Point man has been charged in the shooting deaths of a mother and daughter who were found shot in the head in their parked car Saturday.

Bill Jones Jr., 41, is being held in the Guilford County Jail without bond in the shooting deaths of Betty Sellars Dunlap, 45, and Cynthia Denise Dunlap, 27. Bot had been shot once in the head with a .38-caliber weapon.

Police said they have no motive in the slayings. Jones has several drug charges pending and Cynthia Dunlap had recently been released from jail after serving a sentence on drug-related charges. But police said there is no evidence to confirm the killings were drug-related.

Funds Returned

GREENSBORO (AP) — The federal government has returned more than $350,000 in funds forfeited by drug dealers to local and state law enforcement agencies in the Middle District of North Carolina.

The Greensboro Police Department got the biggest share of the proceeds, with $75,677 returned from officials of the Drug Enforacement Agency and the FBI.

The Rown County Sheriff's Department received $47,333, while the Guilford County Sheriff's Department received $43,513.

Extradition

RALEIGH (AP) — The papers requesting Indian fugitive Eddie Hatcher's extradition to North Carolina have been sent to California, officials in Gov. Jim Martin's office say.

John Hunter, Martin's counsel, says the paperwork for the extradition was received from Robeson County on Friday morning and Martin signed the necessary forms later in the day.

The papers are being sent to California Gov. George Deukmejian, who must sign them before Hatcher can be returned to face 14 kidnapping charges stemming from the Feb. 1, 1988, takeover of The Robesonian newspaper in Lumberton.

Light Study

GREENSBORO (AP) — A computer model developed at the University of North Carolina at Greensboro may help scientists figure out how much light penetrates the ocean and remains there stored as energy in the form of heat.

"This is not only of importance to the U.S. Navy, but to meteorology as well," said Dr. Robert Stavn, an environmental biologist who developed the model. "I can say unequivocally that the fact that we can live on this earth is fundamentally tied in with the ability of water to absorb and store heat."

Stavn's model predicts light levels at depths of 165 to 330 feet in the ocean to within seven percent, and accounts for substances contained in the water and the scattering effect water has on light.

Weyerhaeuser Will Monitor 2 Streams For Tainted Fish

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

At the request of the state, Weyerhaeuser this week will begin monitoring fish in the Neuse River and a tributary of the Roanoke River in light of the findings of cancer-causing dioxin in some fish.

The state Division of Environmental Management requested the monitoring.

The chemicals were discovered by the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency in the Neuse last September near the company's plants in Vanceboro in Craven County and in December 1987 in Welch Creek on the Roanoke in Plymouth in Washington County.

The company discharges treated waste into the Neuse and Roanoke Rivers and no longer uses Welch Creek.

The EPA tests were part of the National Dioxin Study, begun in 1984, which the federal agency conducted to identify any dioxins in fish below discharges from pulp and paper facilities.

The EPA notified the state Division of Environmental Management of its findings, and the DEM notified Weyerhaeuser and asked for a monitoring plan. A Weyerhaeuser scientist, Bob Herrmann, said the firm had submitted a plan, DEM had approved it and monitoring would start this week.

One scientist, Doug Rader of the Environmental Defense Fund in Raleigh, said there is "significant uncertainty" about the safety of eating fish with the amount of dioxin as those in the Neuse and Welch Creek.

"There is a significant enough question about the potential health effect that individuals should limit their consumption until more information is available," Rader said.

He said that due to the limited number of samples taken during the study, an outright ban is not necessary or appropriate now, but people should be "extremely cautious" when eating fish from the Neuse River and Welch Creek.

Jay Sauber, environmental supervisor with the DEM, said there is "enough concern to ask that further studies be done." But, he said, eating fish from the Neuse and Welch Creek is safe.

James Robertson, environmental toxicologist with East Carolina University called dioxins "one of the most, if not the most, toxic chemicals known to man."

Dioxin is a general term that refers to a chemical family of 75 individual members with the same basic structure, Robertson said.

In a letter to Weyerhaeuser dated Jan. 23, 1989, Charles Wakild, chief of the DEM water quality section, said "dioxin is classified as a probable human carcinogen and is therefore of environmental interest."

Robertson said dioxin has been linked to birth defects, cancer, damage to the immune system and immediate death in laboratory animals at amounts "so small you can't comprehend them."

He said .6 micrograms — .6 of one-millionth of a gram — will "kill a guinea pig straight out."

Samples taken by the EPA in Welch Creek showed a whole chub with dioxin levels at 164.5 parts per trillion and a largemouth bass filet with dioxin levels of 20.3 parts per trillion.

The samples found near Weyerhaeuser's Plymouth plant were the highest of six sites tested in the state.

North Trial Will Proceed With Reagan Issue Over

Defense Expected To Continue With Same Strategy

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — With former President Reagan ruled out as a witness, Oliver North's lawyers must look for other ways to show that his superiors authorized his actions in the Iran-Contra affair.

The defense begins presenting its case Monday at North's trial on charges ranging from lying to Congress to receiving an illegal gratuity.

While prosecutors were presenting their side over the last six weeks, North's lawyers brought out a number of secret actions taken by Reagan while in the White House on behalf of the Contra rebels fighting to overthrow Nicaragua's Sandinista government.

But that failed to persuade U.S. District Judge Gerhard A. Gesell that Reagan should be called to the stand as requested by North's lawyers.

On Friday, Gesell declared that "the trial record presently contains no proof that defendant North ever received any authorization from President Reaan to engage in the illegal conduct alleged, either directly or indirectly, orally or in writing."

That represented a blow to North's strategy but is not expected to deter his lawyers from focusing on Reagan.

They still may draw on secrets contained in a 44-page admission by the government, outlining the administration's inducements to other countries in exchange for help to the Contras.

In addition, they are expected to zero in on exhibits already presented at the trial suggesting authorization.

For example, after North denied in an Aug. 6, 1986, meeting with the House Intelligence Committee that he was aiding the Contras, then-national security adviser John Poindexter wrote his subordinate: "Well done." North now is accused of obstructing Congress in connection with the meeting.

The defense subpoenaed Poindexter, a co-defendant in the Iran-Contra case who will be tried separately from North later this year. Asserting his constitutional rights, Poindexter is declining to appear.

In his absence, North's lawyers want to show several hours of televised testimony Poindexter gave on Capitol Hill in 1987 during the congressional Iran-Contra hearings.

Poindexter testified that his one regret was that he didn't follow up personally after North reported a threat on his life by terrorist Abu Nidal. Part of North's defense to the charge of accepting an illegal gratuity, a home security system, is that he feared for his family's safety and that the government wouldn't pay for a security system.

The problem with focusing on Reagan is that North's lawyers have been unable to place him at the scene of any of the alleged crimes. The closest brush to date involving the president came in the testimony of former national security adviser Robert McFarlane.

McFarlane said he had talked with Reagan in the Oval Office about congressional inquiries before sending letters to Congress in September 1985 which denied North was assisting the Contras. McFarlane later pleaded guilty to misdemeanors in connection with the letters, which North is accused of preparing and for which he is now charged with felonies.

McFarlane testified that he got no guidance from Reagan on what to say in the letters, but North's lawyers said they needed to question the president about the matter.

North's lawyers also tried to show a pattern of concealment from Congress.

It was disclosed that Reagan, who told the Tower Commission in 1987 he didn't know about National Security Council involvement with the Contras, followed through on recommendations from the NSC staff to help the rebels.

During a two-year congressional ban on Contra aid, Reagan signed off on a secret plan to provide $110 million in extra aid to entice Honduras to support the Contras.

In response to a memo from McFarlane, Reagan also telephoned the president of Honduras to get a military shipment destined for the Contras released. It had been seized earlier in the day by the Honduran military.

Testimony at North's trial also shows that Reagan also apparently approved a secret airdrop of recoilless rifles and other items to the Contras. The rifles were to be used to destroy two arms-bearing ships headed for Nicaragua.

McFarlane testified that when he told Reagan of a Saudi Arabian government contribution to the Contras, "he made clear to me that no one should know and let's keep it that way."

Planes Collide

A Piedmont commuter plane, at right, with five passengers and two crewmen aboard collided with an All-Freight cargo plane on a taxiway at Hancock International Airport in Syracuse, N.Y., on Friday. No one was injured, but a 300-gallon fuel spill shut down the airport's main runway, forcing diversion of some flights and delayings others. A TWA airliner is shown passing behind the damaged planes.

Bush Schedules Talks With Middle East Lead

By Barry Schweid
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Back-to-back visits by Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak and Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir during the coming week will force the Bush administration to come to grips with problems in the Middle East, but there will be no rush to judgment.

"It would be nice if we could see concrete progress so far as the peace process is concerned," a well-placed U.S. official said this weekend. "But we ought not to set markers up out there that may or may not be realized."

Mubarak and Shamir will focus on the Palestinian uprising on the West Bank and in Gaza, but in vastly different ways.

The Egyptian leader, whose country signed a peace treaty with Israel in 1979, is lobbying for a Middle East peace conference and a seat at the table for the Palestine Liberation Organization.

Mubarak arrived by helicopter from Andrews Air Force Base about 4:30 p.m. EST at a spot between the Washington Monument and Lincoln Memorial and was met by Secretary of State James A. Baker III and a military honor guard. Neither of them talked with reporters before leaving by motorcade.

He plans a quiet weekend before talks open on Monday with Defense Secretary Dick Cheney.

Shamir, who accuses the PLO of unrelenting terrorism despite public renunciation last December by Chairman Yasser Arafat, will propose to President Bush and to Baker that elections be held on the West Bank and in Gaza.

The idea, said Avi Pazner, his media adviser, is to designate Palestinian leaders to negotiate with Israel. "Shamir is not a man who can be pressured," Pazner said. "So this does not come from a sense of pressure. He wants to move the peace process forward."

The U.S. official, who barred use of his name and title, said Bush and Baker were hoping Shamir would bring "some new ideas and some new proposals."

He begged off evaluating Shamir's elections proposal on the grounds it is vague. But the official pointed out that Israel had been trying to talk to Palestinians on the West Bank and in Gaza without success.

Bush and Baker, now in the midst of reviewing U.S. foreign policy in the Middle East and other regions, as well, are reluctant to outline a U.S. plan for Arab-Israeli negotiations.

"If we move too fast or at too high a level it could pre-empt more promising possibilities that might present themselves," the official said. "We would like to see the Israelis come with new ideas and new proposals."

Baker, in testifying last month before a congressional subcommittee, said his goal was direct negotiations between Israelis and Palestinians. He also said Israel might have to deal with the PLO in order to have a "meaningful" dialogue.

Another Shamir idea was shot down even before Mubarak's arrival.

Two weeks ago, Shamir proposed that the Egyptian leader meet with him on U.S. soil to try to find ways to resolve the Palestinian problem, but Mubarak turned him down, Pazner said.

The proposal apparently had the approval of the Bush administration. In a way, it would have recreated the meetings former President Carter held at Camp David, Md., in 1978 with the late Egyptian President Anwar Sadat and former Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin.

The agreements reached at the presidential retreat produced a peace treaty in 1979 between Egypt and Israel and called for Palestinian autonomy on the West Bank and in Gaza.

But Mubarak, through the Egyptian embassy in Tel Aviv, rejected the proposal, Pazner said.

Another U.S. official said, meanwhile, "we would support any meeting that would advance prospects for peace." But the official, who spoke on condition of anonymity, declined to discuss the substance of Shamir's overture.

A diplomatic source, also insisting on anonymity, said Mubarak had concluded Shamir would neither agree to negotiate with the PLO nor approve an international peace conference on the Arab-Israeli conflict.

U.S. Ships Leave Gulf

LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

MANAMA, Bahrain — Three U.S. minesweepers and a support vessel steamed out of the Persian Gulf on Saturday in the biggest pullout of American warships from the region since the Iran-Iraq cease-fire 7½ months ago.

The tank landing ship USS Peoria sailed through the Strait of Hormuz as escort for the minesweepers Fearless, Inflict and Illusive, bound for U.S. East Coast ports.

Their departure left 10 Navy ships in the gulf, including three minesweepers. With a nine-ship carrier battle group in the north Arabian Sea, the U.S. fleet was reduced to fewer than 20 ships for the first time since the massive Western naval buildup of mid-1987.

A Navy official said the withdrawal of the three minesweepers was decided after "consultations with our friends in the gulf" and "is consistent with the reduced threat to shipping" since the Aug. 20 cease-fire.

The truce ended eight years of hostilities that had spread to the oil-rich gulf. The fighting damaged or sank about 540 commercial ships and killed 300 sailors.

U.S. military sources said that apart from the three remaining U.S. minesweepers, whose future is uncertain, the latest withdrawal may be the last by the United States.

Navy sources said the 8,450-ton Peoria will escort the three departing "sweeps" back to the East Coast and return to its port in San Diego.

The Fearless and Illusive are based in Charleston, S.C., and the Inflict in Little Creek, Va.

Crowds Flock To See Crucifix After Once-Open Eyes Closed

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

AMBRIDGE, Pa. — The curious, the devout and the doubting Thomases are flocking by the hundreds to a Roman Catholic church to gaze upon a life-size crucifix, whose once-open eyes reportedly closed during a Good Friday service.

"I brought everyone who could fit in my car," said Evelyn Borrelli, 44, of Glassport, who drove about 40 miles with two children and five other adults to this Ohio River mill town on Friday.

"I wanted to be as close as I could be, and I wanted my children to experience it too. I truly believe it was a miracle," she said.

Since Easter, when the Good Friday occurrence was reported in the media, more than 1,000 people from several states have been visiting the Holy Trinity Church each day, according to the Rev. Vincent Cvitkovic, the church pastor.

The parking lot has been continually full, and there's a constant stream of traffic on the narrow, brick street in front of the white church 15 miles northwest of Pittsburgh.

A spokesman for Bishop Donald Wuerl, head the Roman Catholic diocese of Pittsburgh, said church officials are withholding judgment on the event until they can complete an investigation.

But many of the worshipers say that, miracle or not, they feel better after gazing at the luminescent statue suspended on a cross 15 feet above the altar.

"It's touching. You feel cleansed," said Joanne Smallwood, 66, of nearby Aliquippa.

"I feel a little bit calmer within myself," said Louise Zbihley, 51, also of Aliquippa. "It just made my faith a little bit stronger."

The downcast eyes, which now appear as small slits that conceal the pupils, were about one-third open when the plaster crucifix was moved in January from a corner of the church where it hung at eye-level. It was suspended in a more prominent position in front of a modern stained-glass window depicting a resurrected Christ.

Cvitkovic said he often pointed out the crucifix to his congregation of 300 families, saying it was unusual in that it depicted a still-living Christ, with open eyes and mouth.

Domenic Leo of Beaver, an artist who helped restore the 58-year-old statue in January and had touched up the eyes with acrylic paint, confirmed the eyes were open when the crucifix was hung.

But during a three-hour prayer meeting on Good Friday, worshipers noticed the eyes had almost closed.

Cvitkovic said it would be nearly impossible for someone to have tampered with the crucifix because the church is locked when services are not held.

"I don't know how to explain it," said Don Otto of Coraopolis, who attended the Good Friday prayer meeting. "It was like electricity running through you. It was an overwhelming experience. Tears came to me."

A member of the Queen of Peace prayer group, which studies the Virgin Mary's reported manifestations in the small Yugoslavian village of Medjugorje, claimed he then received a spiritual message while on his knees praying following the service.

Daley Big Favorite In Chicago

By Jim Litke
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHICAGO — Six years after the late Harold Washington changed the course of Chicago politics, the movement that crowned him mayor has fractured, jeopardizing the brief era of black leadership he set up on City Hall's fifth floor.

The likely benefactor of the split is Richard M. Daley, the white, three-term Cook County prosecutor who unseated Mayor Eugene Sawyer in the Democratic primary. He heads into Tuesday's election with polls showing him a strong favorite to occupy the office his political boss-father held for 21 years.

But if Daley does in fact defeat third-party candidate Tim Evans, the lone black in the race, and Republican Edward Vrdolyak, he will have to work fast to consolidate his power in the nation's third largest-city. Another election will be held in 1991, when Washington's second term would have expired.

"One of the first things Washington faced — and handled well — was sending a message to the voters that didn't back him," said top Daley campaign aide David Axelrod.

"He told people in the predominantly white communities that his administration was going to be even-handed in distributing services, in appointments and all facets of government ... then went out and did those things.

"Rich Daley the candidate has said many of the same things. And to do less than that, would not only be morally and ethically bankrupt," Axelrod added, "it would be politically suicidal."

If Daley were to model himself on Washington, he would in a sense be continuing a tradition. Washington, the city's first black mayor, learned more than a few of his political tricks from the elder Daley.

"The old man liked to say 'Good government is good politics and good politics is good government,'" recalled Eugene Kennedy, a Loyola University professor and author of "Himself," a biography of Richard J. Daley.

That translated into providing basic services, which Washington understood, Kennedy said.

"I'll never forget him walking in the (white) ethnic neighborhoods, pointing out broken curbs, busted lights and such, and telling people, 'I'd fix this, but your alderman is blocking the way,'" Kennedy added. "Sheer genius."

But while Daley would have to reassure blacks that he intended to treat them fairly, he might also have his hands full keeping his white constituency happy.

"While everybody is wondering whether the black political movement can be put back together, what's been overlooked is the high price that loyalty will cost Daley if he wins," said Paul Kleppner, a professor of political science at Northern Illinois University and the author of "Chicago Divided: The Making of a Black Mayor."

"He's got to keep his own troops in line, nurture the split among blacks, and get some votes in the City Council," Kleppner added. "And nothing in Chicago politics comes cheap."

To be sure, however, the constraints on Tuesday's winner go beyond the moral, the ethical and even the purely political.

For one thing, Washington didn't so much dominate his City Council opposition as outlast it.

For the first three years of his first term, an anti-Washington bloc of aldermen thwarted his legislative agenda at nearly every turn. It was only after a court-ordered remap increased minority representation in the council that Washington was able to put together a working majority.

Either Evans or Daley could command about 20 votes each in the council, but Daley is more likely to succeed in twisting the arms of the remaining 10 aldermen.

Another factor limiting the new mayor will be the paucity of spoils that can be handed out.

During the six-term reign of Daley's father, the mayor exercised control over 40,000 patronage jobs. Federal court rulings since the 1970s have prohibited most political hiring and firing, which means the next mayor will have fewer than 1,000 jobs to dole out to his army.

And the mayor's control over another traditional source of spoils — contracts for city services and consultants' fees — has been limited by increasing council review powers and a set of executive guidelines laid down by Washington that guarantee minorities a representative share.

But neither promises of fairness nor constraints assuage all the fears in the black community.

"Nothing less than the future of blacks in politics in Chicago is being threatened. I won't beat around the bush. I want a black mayor," said Lu Palmer, the popular black radio commentator and political activist.

After months of avoiding the potentially explosive issue of race, Evans wandered closer toward the minefield last week in hopes of energizing black voters in a city where the voting population is about 48 percent white against 42 percent black.

"Richard Daley is getting ready to reopen his father's plantation," Evans, a South Side alderman, told a rally of 12,000 supporters gathered at the University of Illinois-Chicago early last week.

Sawyer lost the Feb. 28 primary in large part because many black supporters of Evans stayed away from the polls. The two men had become bitter rivals during the council fight to appoint a temporary successor to Washington.

As a result, Sawyer drew nearly 130,000 fewer votes in the city's 19 predominantly black wards than Washington did in the 1987 primary. Sawyer lost to Daley by a margin of just over 100,000 votes.

The most recent polls show Daley with about 50 percent support and with a lead of between 14 and 21 points over Evans. Vrdolyak, whose upstart, write-in candidacy a week before the primary won him the GOP nomination, is mired at about 5 percent support and not considered a factor.

A Daley victory would make Chicago by far the biggest U.S. city to replace black control of City Hall with white.

"To know that Richard Daley would finish out Harold's reign would be unthinkable," said Palmer.

"But to know that blacks, on the very anniversary of Dr. King's assassination, would be so immobilized that we can't get enough people out on our own day to assure our freedom would show," he added, "that we get what we deserve."

Firefighters Check California Hill Fire

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LONE PINE, Calif. — Fire burning over 480 acres of brush destroyed a house, a mobile home and two trailers as firefighters battled flames pushed over rocky terrain by erratic winds Saturday, authorities said.

No injuries were reported and there was no estimate on the value of the loss, said Capt. Will Donaldson of the California Department of Forestry and Fire Protection.

The blaze, in the rugged Alabama Hills four miles west of this small eastern Sierra Nevada town, was 70 percent contained late Saturday afternoon and was expected to be fully controlled by 6 p.m. Sunday, Donaldson said.

About 250 firefighters were battling the fire.

The house was lost when the fire came out of a deep gorge packed with thick brush. "It's real, real heavy material at the bottom," he said.

The blaze erupted when smoldering embers from a blaze that had been controlled several days earlier were whipped up by 60 mph winds.

The earlier fire had begun as a controlled burn of a trash pile, but was whipped out of control by high winds last week, U.S. Forest Service spokesman Brian Miller said. That fire, which was ignited March 21, was controlled the following day.

Steep terrain and winds of about 30 mph hampered firefighters on Saturday, Miller said. The rugged area's picturesque mountains, located 175 miles north of Los Angeles, were used in the filming of many Western movies.

Firefighters from the Forest Service, Bureau of Land Management, Los Angeles Department of Water and Power, Inyo and Kern counties and several area volunteer agencies were on the scene.

Retiree Launches Fight Against Health Tax

The idea was to protect the elderly from catastrophic health bills without adding to the deficit. The solution was to tax affluent retirees to fund a new insurance program. But what seemed like fiscal prudence to Congress smacked of tax tyranny to Dan Hawley, a retired airline pilot who's launched a grass-roots rebellion against the new Medicare law.

By Christopher Connell
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LAS VEGAS, Nev. — With his bolo ties and legs bowed by knee troubles, Daniel Hawley has the look of an aging cowboy bent on kicking up one more ruckus. That's precisely what the 64-year-old retired pilot has in mind.

Hawley and his wife, Marsha, 51, have launched a mom-and-pop petition drive aimed at a decision by Congress to fund a new catastrophic health insurance program for old people by taxing elderly retirees.

The petition drive has attracted 140,000 signatures from people irate about the new Medicare law, which will tack $800 or more onto the annual tax bills of Hawley and other affluent retirees.

It's a grass-roots rebellion, fed by retirees' fears that if Congress can put a special tax bite on them to pay for these benefits, the lawmakers will do it again and again.

The outcries have caught lawmakers by surprise. They were trying to patch some of the cracks in Medicare that had spurred sales of high-cost, low-benefit "Medigap" insurance policies.

They also wanted to free the aged of the worry of being bankrupted by catastrophic medical bills without adding to the deficit or raising taxes.

When then-President Reagan signed the legislation last July 1, he noted with pride that it "follows the same premise as all sound insurance programs: It will be paid for by those who are covered by its services."

"That's a change in attitude in this country," boasted Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, chairman of the Senate Finance Committee.

The new law divides the $33 billion, five-year cost of benefits among the 33 million Medicare beneficiaries — not equally, but according to ability to pay.

All but the poorest pay a $4-a-month premium that generates 37 percent of the money needed. The other 63 percent of the costs are picked up by a "supplemental premium," or surtax, on the 40 percent of Medicare beneficiaries with enough income to owe at least $150 in federal income taxes.

What seemed like fiscal prudence to Reagan and Bentsen smacked of tax tyranny to Dan Hawley and his loosely knit band of confederates.

He claims the new Medicare benefits are minuscule and the costs are steep, and he inveighs bitterly against the "dictators" who railroaded "this big caboozle" through Congress.

"The senior citizens of America are in the greatest fight they have been in since World War II, and this time it is with their own Congress," said the white-haired Hawley, a one-time pile driver from Chicago who boasts that he "never bent any tin" during nearly 34 years as an American Airlines pilot.

"Congress did a marvelous job of keeping the public uninformed on the total extent of this bill. The seniors are saying, 'We did not ask for this bill. Take your benefit back. Leave us alone.'"

Each morning's mail brings another stack of letters, petitions and a few small checks for Hawley's cause.

"In Florida we are all hopping mad. Who was on the committee that passed this abomination?" wrote a Punta Gorda, Fla., man.

A Pottstown, Pa., retiree sent Hawley a copy of the note he now sends charities informing them that until the new Medicare act is repealed, "all of our funds previously available for good causes such as yours have been confiscated by the U.S. government."

A Lake City, Mich., man complained that senior citizens are being "forced to pay for the health care of profligate drug users and AIDS victims who for any reason have gained a place on the rolls of Medicare and Medicaid."

"If, indeed, this concept is the trend of the future, i.e., 'Make those who benefit, pay,' then please hasten to take us from the list of those who pay for child care, education, welfare, ADC, low-income housing and a myriad of other government giveaway programs from which we receive no direct benefit," wrote the Michigan retiree.

In Washington, Bentsen and some of the other "dictators" at whom this torrent of complaints is aimed defend their legislation and argue that many of the critics are misinformed.

Medicare remains "the best buy in town" for its 33 million elderly or disabled beneficiaries, including the 1.6 million seniors who will be hit with the maximum tax, Bentsen insists.

"I hear some of these folks say, 'Well, the odds are that they're not going to need catastrophic illness (coverage).' Well, that's wonderful," said Bentsen.

"Well, there's only one-half a percent chance that your home's going to burn down but to be prudent most of us go out and buy fire insurance on our homes, and if we don't go out and voluntarily do it, the people that carry the mortgage insist that we do it. And we're delighted that we don't have to collect on it," he said.

"The same thing is true in catastrophic. You would hope you never had to collect on it. But it should give people peace of mind that they're not going to be wiped out financially if they have that catastrophic illness."

Rep. Pete Stark, D-Calif., who co-authored the legislation as chairman of the House Ways and Means subcommittee on health, said even "those who pay the highest conceivable premium are still getting a $1,500-plus tax-free subsidy from the federal government" on their Medicare benefits.

"It's hard for me to be sympathetic about somebody making 70 grand a year and getting a $1,500 spiff from Uncle Sam," said Stark.

The giant American Association of Retired Persons is another object of Hawley's scorn for its advocacy of the Medicare catastrophic legislation. AARP says surveys disprove Hawley's claims that most seniors don't want the expanded coverage. In one poll, 47 percent of AARP members supported the catastrophic care program, 26 percent were opposed and 27 percent had no opinion.

While 33 congressmen and one senator — Harry Reid, D-Nev. — are sponsoring bills to repeal the Medicare catastrophic law, few insiders expect Congress to retreat from the biggest expansion of Medicare in two decades and one of the few major pieces of social legislation passed in the Reagan era.

But the bickering and the backlash over the catastrophic act show the difficulty of finding ways to remedy social ills without adding to the deficit.

The furor also demonstrates that, deficit or no, it is hard to wean people from the notion that government benefits are their natural due and that the costs should be borne or at least shared by others.

When Reagan and his health secretary, Dr. Otis Bowen, first proposed expanding Medicare in 1987 to insure the elderly against catastrophic hospital bills, they proposed a flat $4.92-a-month premium. They also wanted to make Medicare beneficiaries pay a deductible, now $564, for each of their first two hospital admissions annually.

Congress added an expensive prescription drug benefit that starts in 1990, and made Medicare beneficiaries liable only for one $564 deductible for hospitalizations each year. But they agreed not to add to the deficit.

"Had we tried to finance that bill with taxes, it would have been vetoed," said Stark.

Seniors with adjusted gross incomes above $43,000 for individuals or $85,000 for couples will pay the

What There Is, And How It Costs

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Here is a look at the new or expanded benefits provided the elderly and disabled by the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act, and how much beneficiaries will have to pay for them.

HOSPITAL — Medicare beneficiaries will pay a deductible of $564 for their first day's stay in the hospital each year, but Medicare pays the rest of their hospital bills, no matter how long the stay. Previously there were limits on how much Medicare would pay for stays longer than 60 days, and patients were charged a deductible for each hospital admission after a 60-day "spell of illness." Effective: Jan. 1, 1989.

DOCTOR BILLS — Starting in 1990, Medicare beneficiaries will have to pay no more than $1,370 in out-of-pocket expenses for doctor bills and other services under Medicare's Part B. However, if their physician charges more than Medicare approves, they will still be liable for the difference.

Medicare patients must pay the first $75 as a deductible on approved charges, then Medicare will pay 80 percent of other approved charges up to the $1,370 threshold, and 100 percent beyond it. If a patient's private insurance pays some of the bills, that still counts toward the $1,370. Effective: Jan. 1, 1990.

DRUGS — Currently, Medicare pays only for prescription drugs administered in the hospital and for immunosuppressive drugs administered during the first year after an organ transplant. Starting in 1990, it will begin covering outpatient prescription drugs for the first time.

In 1990 Medicare will help pay for certain antibiotics and other intravenous drugs, and it will cover immunosuppressive drugs beyond the first year of a transplant. After a $550 deductible, Medicare will pay 80 percent of the cost of intravenous drugs and 50 percent for the immunosuppressives.

In 1991, Medicare will begin covering most other prescription drugs and insulin. There will be a $600 deductible and 50 percent co-payment for 1991; a $652 deductible and 40 percent co-payment for 1992, and a 20 percent co-payment and deductible to be determined for 1993 and beyond.

SKILLED NURSING FACILITY — Medicare will pay for 150 days of skilled nursing care, up from 100 days. The co-payment is limited to an estimated $22 per day for the first eight days. The new law scraps a requirement that a patient had to be hospitalized for at least three days before entering a skilled nursing facility. Effective: Jan. 1, 1989.

HOME HEALTH CARE — For those who meet Medicare's restrictive eligibility requirements, the catastrophic act will provide up to 38 consecutive days of care. Those who do not need daily care will be eligible for up to six days a week for as long as prescribed by a doctor. Effective: Jan. 1, 1990.

HOSPICE CARE — The new law provides unlimited hospice care for terminal patients; it was previously limited to 210 days. Effective: Jan. 1, 1989.

RESPITE CARE — For someone caring at home for a Medicare beneficiary requiring daily personal care, Medicare will pay for up to 80 hours per year of home health aide and personal care services. Limited to those who have met either the annual deductible for prescription drugs or the $1,370 Part B catastrophic limit. Effective: Jan. 1, 1990.

MAMMOGRAPHY: Medicare will pay up to $50 for X-ray screenings to detect breast cancer. Effective: Jan. 1, 1990.

TAXES AND PREMIUMS — All Medicare Part B beneficiaries now must pay an extra $4 premium each month; this will rise to $10.20 per month in 1993. Those who owe at least $150 in federal income taxes will also pay a supplemental premium based on that income tax liability. The supplemental premium rate for 1989 is $22.50 for each $150 of federal income taxes, or 15 percent. If someone owes $1,000 in federal taxes, they will have to pay an extra $150 in Medicare supplemental premium. The maximum supplemental premium is $800 per Medicare beneficiary, or $1,600 per couple enrolled in Medicare.

The supplemental premium, or surcharge, rises from 15 percent for 1989 to 25 percent for 1990, 26 percent for 1991, 27 percent for 1992 and 28 percent for 1993. In effect, a 15 percent surcharge on the elderly boosts their 15 percent marginal tax rate to 17.25 percent and the 28 percent rate to 32.2 percent. In 1993, the 28 percent surcharge will boost the 15 percent rate to 19.2 percent and the 28 percent rate to 35.8 percent.

The House Ways and Means Committee says 60 percent of the elderly will not be subject to the supplemental premium, paying only the $4-a-month premium for their coverage. It predicts that 5 percent of the elderly in 1989 and 10 percent in 1993 will pay the maximum supplemental premium. They are generally individuals with adjusted gross incomes above $43,000 this year and couples with incomes above $85,000.

The committee says more than 7.8 million Medicare beneficiares, or 22 percent, will receive new benefits each year when the catastrophic act is fully implemented. Some 5.8 million will receive prescription drug benefits, 2.4 million will have doctor bills and other charges in excess of the $1,370 cap paid, and 1.5 million will be spared having to pay more than one hospital deductible of $564 each year.

Although the new law does not provide direct coverage of long-term care costs, it eases Medicaid restrictions on how much income and assets an elderly spouse can keep when the other spouse is a Medicaid-financed nursing home resident.

Effective Sept. 30, 1989, spouses will be able to keep income of at least 122 percent of the federal poverty level, or $786 per month. These limits will rise to 133 percent of the poverty line on July 1, 1991, and 150 percent on July 1, 1992. In addition, the new law allows states to permit the spouse to keep assets, in addition to a home, worth at least $12,000 and possibly as high as $60,000.

Panel Says Student Created 'Worm'

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ITHACA, N.Y. — A rogue computer program designed at Cornell University that crippled a nationwide computer network last fall was neither the creation of a genius nor the act of a criminal, a university commission has concluded.

Cornell graduate student Robert Morris alone created the program that infected thousands of military and university computers on Nov. 2, 1988, says the panel's 45-page report obtained Saturday by The Associated Press.

Morris, 23, who is on a leave of absence from Cornell's doctoral program in computer science, declined to be interviewed by the commission, which was left to speculate as to the reasons Morris created the "worm."

"It may simply have been the unfocused intellectual meanderings of a hacker completely absorbed with his creation and unharnessed by considerations of explicit purpose or potential effect," the panel wrote.

Technically, the program was not a "virus," which inserts itself into a host program to propagate; it was actually a "worm," or an independent program that endlessly duplicates itself once placed in a computer system.

Cornell officials and members of the special panel were scheduled to discuss their findings at a news conference at 10 a.m. Monday.

Morris, of Arnold, Md., remains under investigation by a federal grand jury in Syracuse and by the U.S. Justice Department.

Ex-Pilot Fights Health Tax On Retirees

maximum surtax of $800 apiece. The surtax effectively raises their 15 percent marginal tax rate to 17.25 percent, and the 28 percent marginal rate to 32.2 percent.

Hawley won't disclose his retirement income, but "I will be hit by the maximum tax, as most pilots would be," he said.

Eight hundred dollars, he added, "isn't going to make me eat crackers instead of bread. It's the principle of the thing. They're changing the rules in the middle of the game." He also worries about how much Medicare will be charging by the time his wife, a former administrator with the Utah State Bar, turns 65.

The Hawleys moved to Las Vegas in part to escape the burden of state income taxes.

They have a small pool in their back yard, but their house is mortgaged, and the 1979 Lincoln Continental in the driveway has traveled 116,000 miles. Hawley prefers to drive the customized van he uses to haul his 36-foot Fifth Wheel, a recreation vehicle.

"I have never considered myself a wealthy man," said Hawley, who was married four times. "I raised five kids, paid all the bills. I've never stiffed anybody in my life. I basically kept my nose clean and at this stage in life I feel that I have earned the privilege of having some toys."

He heatedly rejects the argument that working people subsidize the benefits of all Medicare beneficiaries.

Medicare is "part of government. That's part of the cost of a democracy. You (must) never means test the benefit," he said.

Hawley said he doesn't "go out looking for causes," but by his own telling, this Medicare fight is the latest in a series of lifelong battles with misguided management.

The proud son of a union printer who flew submarine patrols for the Navy in the Pacific during the war, Hawley was a pilots' elected representative during 28 of his years in the cockpit, and helped found the Allied Pilots Association in the 1960s when American pilots split from the Air Line Pilots Association.

For eight years, he was chairman of the Federal Aviation Administration's Air Traffic Procedures Advisory Committee, and he tells of locking horns with agency brass on safety issues.

Once, while living in Leesburg, Va., he waged an unsuccessful fight to block Loudoun County from opening a sanitary landfill near his home. Entertainer Arthur Godfrey was an ally in that dispute.

"I don't go out looking for causes," said Hawley. But "I've always been a competitor, and I don't play games not to win.

"I do think that in many respects the people are not heard by management or by Congress or boards of supervisors. They make decisions with themselves, and unless you organize in some shape or form, you get no time for opposition or rebuttal," said Hawley. "It's another world inside that Beltway."

The Hawleys began their organization last summer after reading a senior columnist's article in the Las Vegas Review-Journal and calling a meeting at a local senior citizens' center.

Some were AARP members dissatisfied with their own organization's stance.

AARP says it likes the catastrophic benefits, but not the way they were financed. The organization has held its ground, despite pressure from some chapters.

Hawley has debated a top AARP executive on public television's MacNeil-Lehrer News Hour, and squared off with AARP officials on other television and radio shows.

He isn't camera-shy. "We are constantly talking over microphones in an airplane," he explained.

While Hawley speaks of waging a David vs. Goliath struggle against the AARP to lobby for repeal of the catastrophic act, he disavows any intention of trying to turn his coalition into a permanent lobbying force.

Others are using the fight over catastrophic coverage to try to sign seniors up for new organizations, and banks and securities firms are using it to pitch tax-free investments.

Hawley's petition warns that the elderly could wind up footing the bill for "most of the medical costs of AIDS patients." With the AIDS medication AZT costing up to $10,000 a year per patient, Hawley fears that elderly people with big drug bills could get frozen out of the program.

The prescription drug benefit has a cap so that only those with the steepest drug bills are helped. Some 5.5 million beneficiaries — one in six — will get Medicare reimbursement for some of their drug costs.

But relatively few AIDS patients live long enough to get Medicare.

Some 10,000 AIDS patients receive Social Security disability payments, but only 900 have been on the disability rolls for the two years required to qualify for Medicare, according to Social Security spokesman Phil Gambino.

Despite its name, the Catastrophic Coverage Act makes only a small dent in the financial problems confronting families trying to pay for long-term nursing home care, which costs an average of $25,000 a year. The new Medicare law relaxes restrictions on the income and assets an elderly person can own when a spouse needs Medicaid to help pay nursing home bills.

The uproar may make lawmakers leery of ever attempting to cover long-term care costs under Medicare.

Horace B. Deets, the AARP's executive director, said the complaints about the Medicare catastrophic act are a "good example of what happens when you take a patchwork approach to a systemic problem. We need something done for universal access to comprehensive care, and it isn't here yet for everybody."

In addition to repealing the catastrophic act, Hawley also wants Congress to set up a blue-ribbon presidential commission to examine the "monstrous" unresolved health care issues. He would set one rule for this commission: no politicians allowed.

Hawley isn't saying when he will deliver his petitions to Congress.

"Eisenhower didn't tell the Germans when he was going to land," the pilot said. "When the snowball is rolling down the mountain, you don't stop it halfway."

If he loses the fight, "then I almost guarantee you that in two years, Congress has its greatest turnover ever. The senior power will vote them out of office."

If he wins, "then you will never hear Daniel Hawley's name again. He's going down and start playing golf, all across this country."

Baby Boomers Growing More Sensitive About Saving

By Vivian Marino
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

U.S. Level Of Personal Saving Continues To Hover Near 40-Year Low

Self-employed Denver chiropractor Mark Gander earns $120,000 a year, but a sizable mortgage, hefty child-support payments and business expenses had been keeping him from socking any away.

In the past several months, though, he and his wife Berith began painstakenly saving around 5 percent of their after-tax income while paying off debts through a plan devised by a professional money manager.

"It's a change of attitude, I guess," said Gander, 35, whose goal is a 15 percent savings rate. "We're living very modestly ... or rather less than someone with my income should be living. But that's the only way to get out of debt and save money at the same time."

The Ganders are baby boomers, the generation born between 1946 and 1964, known for freely spending money and borrowing more when they don't have enough.

But the Ganders, like a growing number of other boomers, are becoming more sensitive to how much money they're saving for a future that seems increasingly laden with economic uncertainty.

Many openly wonder how they'll survive on Social Security and pensions. Some fear that by the time they retire, Social Security won't exist.

"My friends talk about it (saving) more, but I don't know if they indeed do it," said Sean Kendrick, a 31-year-old Jacksonville, Fla., architect who is putting more take-home pay away but having a tough time doing it.

Some economists predict baby boomers will turn financially conservative with age and squirrel away money for retirement. Others say a generation raised on having it all won't shake its spendthrift ways.

"They have been building in spending habits that are not easy to change," said Glenn Forman, a senior economist for the Wefa Group, an economic consulting organization in Bala Cynwyd, Pa.

Scott L. Shires, the Denver money manager who counseled the Ganders, agreed, "You see something you want, you buy it even though you may not be able to afford it.

"You know the difference between a 4-year old and a 40-year-old? The pricetag on their toys."

Americans in general are poor savers. The net U.S. savings rate — the sum of personal and corporate savings plus government surpluses or deficits — is one-eighth the savings rate in Japan and one-fifth the comparable rate of other major industrialized nations.

This not only reflects what economists call poor personal planning for the future by millions of U.S. wage earners, but harbors sinister implications for the economy. The savings rate represents billions of dollars that can be loaned for reinvestment and business growth.

Some studies on America's much-publicized decline in competitiveness have shown that the higher savings rates among foreign rivals has enabled them to achieve stunning advances in productivity and higher living standards.

A fat government budget deficit, or "dissaving" as it's sometimes called, is partly to blame for the poor U.S. savings rate, but many economists see reduced private savings as the main reason.

The personal savings rate has been declining over the past 20 years after rising during the 1950s and early '60s. In 1987 it hit a 40-year low of 3.2 percent of after-tax income, then bounced back to 4.2 percent last year.

Shires said most individuals under normal circumstances can save up to 8 percent of take-home pay if they follow simple rules, like buying with cash instead of credit, establishing long-term tax plans and living within their means. He said a good rule is that mortgage payments not exceed a quarter of total income.

The decline in the personal savings rate can be attributed partly to demographics. In the post-war period there were more traditional savers, those in the 45 to 55 age bracket, than spenders, typically starting at age 20. With the baby boomers now in their peak consuming years, the ratio of savers to spenders has flip-flopped.

Some economists say that will change again as more boomers head into their 40s, since many by then already will have owned a house and its trappings and will no longer be as interested in impulse buying.

Edward Yardeni, chief economist for Prudential-Bache Securities, offers the most optimistic forecasts, predicting that by 1993 aging boomers will boost the personal savings rate to 10 percent while consumer spending will slow sharply.

But many economists disagree.

The Wefa Group, for one, places less reliance on changing demographics, estimating that the personal avings rate will average 5.1 percent this year and stay in that range through the turn of the century.

Maury Harris, chief economist for PaineWebber Inc., said major lifestyle changes could affect demographics. In a recent study he noted the rise in single-parent households and in couples postponing having children, which would make saving money tougher.

There are otherconsiderations, Nomura Securities Inc. chief economist David Resler added, such as the high price of real estate and cars and the high number of boomers going to college.

Architect Kendrick and wife Laura, a 30-year-old surgical technician, are still paying off school loans — in addition to making mortgage payments on their $63,000 home.

Officer Who Killed Three Had Notches On Gun; Is Fired

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — A police officer who fatally shot three suspects in six months was fired over two notches found etched into his pistol.

Bryan Farrell, who was cleared of any criminal wrongdoing in each of the shootings, was fired by Arlington Police Chief David Kunkle on Friday after investigators probing the third killing found the notches on the gun.

Farrell, 25, who insisted that he knew nothing about the nicks discovered on the trigger guard of his 9mm pistol, was fired because the police chief didn't believe him, police spokesman Dee Anderson said.

Anderson stopped short of saying whether investigators believed the marks represented a death tally. He refused to describe the markings, except to say they were similar.

Farrell's attorney, Jim Lane, told The Dallas Morning News that he would meet with Kunkle on Monday to urge him to reconsider.

The markings were discovered by Dallas police investigators probing the killing of Michael Robinson, 21, who was fatally shot by Farrell while being served a warrant Feb. 1 in University Park, near downtown Dallas.

Robinson was wanted on a forgery charge.

Farrell also killed Ray Soto Jr., 32, of Arlington, as the man sat in his pickup truck and raised a handgun toward Farrell and a fellow officer on Aug. 2, 1988.

Less than three weeks later, Farrell shot 33-year-old Martin Williams during a struggle that occurred along Interstate 30 in Fort Worth.

The same gun, a Browning 9mm semiautomatic pistol, was used in all three shootings, Anderson said.

The gun was recovered by investigators after each shooting, but the marks weren't discovered until Dallas police probed the third shooting, he said.

"These markings and their possible inference were obviously very troublesome to us," Anderson said at a news conference to announce the officer's dismissal.

In September, a Tarrant County grand jury declined to indict Farrell in the first two shootings. In March, a Dallas County grand jury, which knew about the markings on the pistol, cleared him of any wrongdoing in the latest shooting.

According to police records, Farrell has said that the pistol had been at a gunsmith shop on several occasions and that he had let friends shoot it.

Anderson said the investigation would continue until police learned who put the marks on the gun, what they signify and how they were made.

Building Is Too Tall

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — How do you erect a 19-story building in New York City?

Start with a 31-story structure. Discover zoning prohibits a building that big. Lose a three-year court battle. And receive an order to lop 12 stories off.

Welcome to 108 E. 96th St., the $7.2 million high-rise set to shrink this month in the final act of a showdown between local activists and its developer, Parkview Associates. David defeated Goliath last week when the city ruled the 31-story edifice must lose its top dozen floors.

The decision will cost the developer about $10 million in addition to the fought-over floors, leaving the building owners a little queasy as they ponder continuing their fight to save those stories.

"We're going to take a while to digest this decision," said Jay A. Segal, attorney for Parkview Associates. "We won't make any decision for a week or two."

The city last week also dealt with a second Manhattan building found to be too tall. The 811-foot CitySpire project on West 54th Street was erected 14 feet above what zoning ordinances allow.

But officials spared the building a steel haircut. Developer Ian Bruce Eichner won a compromise agreement in which he will build a $2.5 million dance studio in return for a variance.

Parkview's $10 million loss includes the cost of chopping off the illegal floors, the income from the lost apartments and the cost of the building's extended vacancy. The building remains uninhabited; it would have been ready to open in late 1986.

Wright Holds On To His Popularity Back In Texas Despite Ethics Probe

LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

FORT WORTH — Rita Palm, a Republican activist here who would love to see the GOP capture the 12th Congressional District of Texas some day, tells a story to illustrate why she doesn't think that will happen as long as House Speaker Jim Wright, D, wants to keep his seat.

A few days before the inauguration of George Bush, whose Tarrant County campaign she cochaired, Palm got a phone call from Wright's chief of staff. Did she need any extra inaugural tickets? asked Wright aide Marshall L. Lynam.

"My Jim Wright tickets turned out to be better than my George Bush tickets," recalled Palm with a smile. "Now, isn't that smart?"

It is that kind of attention to detail and constituent service that voters in Fort Worth cite repeatedly to explain Wright's enduring popularity in the district he has represented since 1954. Even as he faces what may be the sternest test of his long political career with the conclusion of a nine-month House ethics committee investigation into his finances, Wright's standing in his hometown appears little diminished.

"It's eroded him in Washington, but not here," said Dee J. Kelly, a prominent Fort Worth attorney who once worked on the staff of Wright's hero, the late speaker Sam Rayburn, D-Tex. "People who don't like him like him less, but I don't think there's been any erosion among people who have supported him in the past."

Sometime this month, the 12-member ethics panel, formally known as the Committee on Standards of Official Conduct, is expected to decide whether there is reason to conclude that Wright broke House rules in his personal financial dealings. There have been strong hints that the special counsel hired to conduct the committee's probe has written a stern report alleging numerous possible violations. And some of Wright's Democratic colleagues are saying privately that he may have to relinquish the speaker's gavel less than three years after succeeding Thomas P. "Tip" O'Neill Jr., D-Mass.

If that happens, a close friend of Wright said, Wright would likely retire from the House.

While they await the outcome, many voters here view the lengthy probe into Wright's life — which has been followed blow by blow on the front page of the local newspaper — with a combination of anger and amusement. They feel angry at what they see as a partisan attack on someone widely considered an able representative who has assiduously chased down lost Social Security checks and kept a huge, steady flow of federal dollars coming into their community. And they are amused that such seemingly petty allegations could be so blown out of proportion by official Washington.

A typical view comes from Debbie Whitehead, who with her husband runs a small investment firm whose interests in oil and gas, real estate and pawn shops reflect the cyclical boom and bust nature of Texas' economy. The ethics inquiry into Wright, she said, "is disgusting," and people in Fort Worth are "sick and tired of it."

"I feel he's done absolutely nothing wong," she added, suggesting that the speaker's troubles are nothing more than "politics, period."

Similar sentiments are expressed by Steve Murrin, a colorful city councilman, rancher and partner in the newly reopened Billy Bob's Texas — a three-acre country and western bar in the historic stockyards section of town that bills itself as "the world's largest honky tonk."

Murrin said he can sympathize with Wright's trial by newspaper because he and some of his colleagues on the City Council have lately been subjected to articles in the Fort Worth Star-Telegram about possible conflicts of interest.

"It's kind of like tying you up and hitting you ...," said Murrin. "You can't fight back."

Supersonic Trip

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LONDON — Author William F. Buckley Jr. and fellow voyagers who paid $39,000 per ticket left Saturday on a supersonic trip around the world.

Buckley is leading the 38,343-mile, 22-day trip aboard a British Airways Concorde jet, with supersonic hops alternating with stopovers in New York; Acapulco, Mexico; Sri Lanka; Tahiti; Australia and other points, said airline spokesman Ken Cook.

Concordes have circled the globe before but not using supersonic speeds for each leg or for that distance, Cook said. He said the jet could break more than a dozen speed records, but he did not name them.

During the trip, Buckley planned to broadcast his television show "Firing Line" from Cape Town, South Africa, and Sydney, Australia, Cook said.

Cook said a Miami-based travel agency, Lorraine Travel Bureau, chartered the jet for the tour and that all 100 seats for the trip had been sold out, although not everyone was starting in London. Most passengers were scheduled to leave from New York.

Five Die As Plane Hits Tennis Court

LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

NEWPORT BEACH, Calif. — A private plane crashed onto a tennis court at the posh Newport Beach Tennis Club Friday and exploded in a huge fireball, killing as many as five people aboard and narrowly missing a tennis instructor and two students.

The plane, a twin-engine Piper Aerostar from Canada, had just taken off from John Wayne Airport in nearby Irvine, at 8:33 a.m. PST and was trying to return. The pilot was in contact with air traffic controllers at the time. Airport Manager George Rebella said that it appeared the plane had lost power.

Witnesses said that the plane was in a steep dive toward the tennis club in this affluent seaside community 30 miles southeast of downtown Los Angeles. The plane then nosed straight down in an apparent attempt to miss the clubhouse, which at that time contained an estimated 125 people. The plane hit with such force that only a propeller cast to the side remained easily recognizable as part of an airplane. No one on the ground was injured.

Authorities did not immediately identify the dead. They said the plane was company-owned and was based in Camrose, Alberta. The flight plan showed it was headed for Pocatello, Idaho, carrying two adults and three children, all members of one family. Airport officials said the plane had been serviced at the airport before taking off.

The plane crashed onto a tennis court about 20 yards from the corner of the clubhouse where instructor Bernie Mitton was volleying with his students.

Mitton, 34, was treated for shock but was otherwise unhurt, said one of his students shouted, "There's a plane coming!" He looked up and saw the plane falling straight down.

"I started to run into a corner but it seemed like the plane just kept following me," Mitton said.

"I ran out of the corner and within seconds it crashed and immediately exploded and burst into flames. If I had stayed in that corner I would have been dead."

The remains of the plane lay in a mound at the corner of the tennis court, where the court's chain-link boundary fence had been twisted and bent but had contained the wreckage like a safety net.

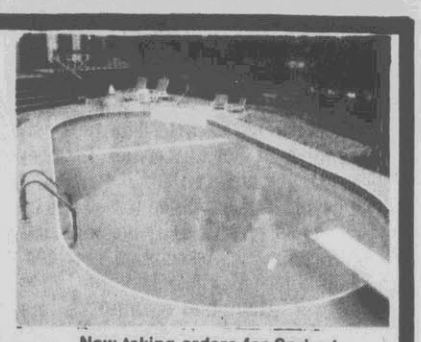

Bill Parker, owner of the tennis club, said the possibility of such a crash had been apparent to him for a long time. "Every day I see these planes take off. I can't tell you how many times I've thought of what might happen."

He said if the crash had occurred later, all the tennis courts would have been full. "We're just incredibly lucky no one on the ground was hurt," he said.

Amnesty Praises Soviet Campaign For Human Rights

LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

MOSCOW — The Soviet Union is in the midst of a campaign to improve its human rights reputation among Western countries, and there are signs that the effort is succeeding.

Amnesty International, the London-based human rights monitoring group, completed its first visit to the Soviet Union Saturday with the organization's director praising Moscow for, at long last, "acknowledging the legitimacy of human rights activism."

The assessment was the third in a series of limited endorsements over the last several weeks.

Friday, the World Psychiatric Association provisionally readmitted the Soviet Union, five years after Moscow pulled out of the organization over allegations that it was involuntarily confining political dissidents in mental hospitals.

In mid-March, a group of American psychiatrists completed a two-week tour of Soviet psychiatric facilities, refusing to disclose their findings but commending Soviet authorities for cooperating with their requests "to a degree that I'm not even sure we would," one of the doctors said.

The psychiatrists wanted to see whether the Soviet Union had abandoned its practice of involuntarily hospitalizing dissidents, and it is likely that the World Psychiatric Association received a preliminary report of their impressions before making its decision.

Moscow's attempt to revamp its image in the West appears aimed at securing approval from the United States and its European allies to host a human rights conference here in 1991.

But the initial impetus to improve human rights was clearly internal. President Mikhail S. Gorbachev's efforts to pull the Soviet Union out of its prolonged period of economic and political stagnation required open criticism of past policies, and for that people had to be able to debate freely, without fear of imprisonment.

Neither the psychiatrists nor Amnesty International, however, believe that all human rights violations have ended in the Soviet Union.

Amnesty's secretary general, Ian Martin, said the visiting three-member delegation had raised the cases of approximately 100 prisoners of conscience with Soviet authorities.

The cases in question, he said, involved Soviets jailed for religious and political beliefs, including conscientious objectors, as well as those held against their will in psychiatric institutions. In addition, he said, other people have been denied permission to emigrate in violation of their rights.

But he said Amnesty figures showed that there had been a decline in the number of annual cases of jailing of political and religious dissidents, and that the Soviet Union had released 300 imprisoned dissidents since 1987.

In addition, the decision to allow Amnesty International to visit after 28 years of refusals was a turnaround for this country, which previously imprisoned Soviet members of the Helsinki Watch Group set up to make sure the Soviet Union abided by human rights accords signed in Helsinki in 1975.

"We've been encouraged by how open the debate on human rights has become," Martin said in an interview, "and we've been encouraged to find people in Moscow who advocate all the same views that Amnesty International advocates."

Martin said that during a 10-day visit, the Amnesty delegates met with the country's chief psychiatrist, the head of the Supreme Court, representatives of the human rights and internal affairs departments within the Foreign Ministry, and attorneys in charge of a current effort to revise the Soviet penal code.

In addition, he said, delegates met with former Soviet prisoners and dissidents, including physicist Andrei D. Sakharov.

Bush Meets Venezuelan President To Launch Third World Debt Drive

By Susanne M. Schafer
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — President Bush urged Venezuelan President Carlos Andres Perez to press ahead with his economic reforms on Saturday as the administration prepared to launch its Third World debt reduction plan at a series of critical international financial meetings.

The breakfast session, held in the private White House quarters, lasted 1½ hours and was "very productive," said White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater.

Secretary of State James A. Baker III, Treasury Secretary Nicholas Brady, national security adviser Brent Scowcroft, Vice President Dan Quayle and White House chief of staff John Sununu also attended the meeting, Fitzwater said.

The group discussed the debt-induced turmoil that has plagued Venezuela and other Third World nations and Perez described the attempts he's been making to revamp his economy to deal with his nation's $33 billion debt. Bush "encouraged them to continue the reform effort," the spokesman said.

Perez smiled and waved as his limousine left the White House grounds, adorned with flowering trees on the chilly, but sunny, spring morning.

Bush's conference with Perez came at a critical stage for the administration's new strategy for attempting to ease the $1.3 trillion Third World debt crisis. It was put forward by the Treasury secretary on March 10 and is known as the "Brady plan."

Under the proposal, commercial banks are asked to forgive voluntarily a portion of the loans they've made to poor nations. In return, the International Monetary Fund and World Bank would provide assurances the remaining debt would be repaid.

The administration expects to glean general expressions of support for the initiative as key officials of the world's seven industrial democracies gather Sunday at a historic site near Mount Vernon, Va.

The financial leaders, known as the Group of Seven, are in Washington for the spring meetings of the 151-member nations that make up the IMF and the World Bank.

A senior administration official said the administration is hoping to "get some support on the debt strategy" from Perez, whose country was rocked by debt-related riots last month that claimed around 270 lives.

U.S. officials showed Perez and his aides during the past week how his government could reduce its debt under the Brady plan and they "were truly impressed with the numbers," said the official, who spoke on condition he not be named.

The official added that Treasury officials hope Perez, who is well regarded among Latin American leaders, will help convince other debtor nations to give the approach a chance.

"Then, we're opening the door" to further acceptance of the plan, the official said.

"Here is a president with the blood of nearly 300 people to deal with, and he's pretty courageous to stand by his economic reforms," the official said.

U.S. officials have been meeting with representatives of other heavily indebted governments, such as Mexico and the Philippines, to check the social and economic turmoil that has been set off by the 7-year-old debt crisis.

The problems of paying interest on $1.3 trillion that developing nations owe has sapped their economies, lowered living standards and led to growing political and economic unrt.

Several weeks ago, Perez blamed his country's turmoil on "intolerable and obscene" debt repayment terms imposed by creditors. He called on wealthier nations to do more to relieve the debt burden.

Critics have complained that the administration plan has raised unreasonable expectations for debt relief in Latin America and may end up fomenting political instability instead of helping relieve tensions.

Sunday's talks involve the United States, Japan, West Germany, Britain, France, Canada and Italy.

Administration official have expressed hope the Group of Seven will offer a united front when the Brady plan is taken up at the Monday and Tuesday sessions of the IMF and World Bank.

The administration has estimated that, over the next three years, its proposals could result in wiping out about $70 billion of the $340 billion in debt owed by 39 developing nations, a group that includes all of the largest debtors and many of the smaller ones.

The IMF and World Bank would be expected to contribute about $12 billion each over three years to spur the debt reduction effort. The United States is also looking to Japan, and other countries which are running large trade surpluses, to recycle some of that money into debt relief. Japan is expected to contribute between $5 billion and $10 billion.

Police Crackdown Brings Street Fight

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SEOUL, South Korea — Thousands of dockworkers and students armed with clubs, firebombs and rocks clashed with police Saturday to protest a police crackdown that ended a strike at South Korea's largest shipyard.

About 3,500 workers and students battled police in the port city of Ulsan, about 150 miles southeast of Seoul, news reports said. The sporadic street fighting and protests lasted most of the day, according to Yonhap, the South Korean news agency.

Thousands of high school students, shoppers and office workers caught in hit-and-run street battles fled, covering their mouths and faces from clouds of choking tear gas, reports said.

In Seoul, about 1,000 students from Hanyang university protested the government decision to use 14,000 riot police to put down the more than 3-month-old strike at the Hyundai shipyard.

There were no immediate reports of arrests or injuries in Seoul, but Yonhap said 80 workers and police had been injured in Ulsan since police entered the shipyard Thursday.

The shipyard is owned by the Hyundai Group, one of the largest conglomerates in South Korea.

Hundreds of masked students carrying banners with anti-government slogans streamed from the university gates shouting "Down with Roh Tae-woo who stifles workers' rights!"

They burned effigies of Roh and Chung Ju-yung, honorary chairman of Hyundai. Some hurled firebombs and swung wood and steel clubs, while others stood on walls surrounding the campus and threw rocks.

Riot police fired hundreds of tear gas shells.

The National Council of Student Representatives, a major radical student group, said it would launch a nationwide wave of attacks on Hyundai in support of workers. Hyundai offices and automobile showrooms were attacked Friday and protesters battled police in seven cities.

In Ulsan, thousands of riot police guarded the shipyard and set up check points around bus terminals and on roads leading to the shipyard to block more sympathizers from joining the protesters, said Yonhap.

Operations at the shipyard were slow, although more than half of the 22,000-member work force showed up for work Saturday, officials said.

Prosecutors brought formal charges against 10 union leaders for conspiring to cause violence and said investigations continued against some of 697 other workers who were arrested.

Cubans End Long Stay In Embassy

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

HAVANA, Cuba — Two Cubans who gained asylum in the Peruvian Embassy nine years ago have returned home after receiving government assurances they will be allowed to leave the country, diplomatic sources said Saturday.

The sources, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said Felino Ramirez Batista, 58, and Eduardo Herrera Dia, 39, left the embassy Friday after accepting a promise by the Cuban government that they will be permitted to emigrate within six months.

Their departure brought to an end a series of events that began in the spring of 1980 and culminated in the Mariel boat lift, when 125,000 Cubans fled to the United States between April and September.

The two were among some 10,000 Cubans who entered the Peruvian Embassy in early April 1980 hoping to leave their island homeland and its communist government.

The people packed into the embassy after Cuba removed its security guards from outside the complex because of a dispute with Peru.

Virtually all of the Cubans in the Peruvian Embassy were allowed to leave the country. President Fidel Castro's government opened the port of Mariel to Cubans wishing to emigrate to the United States and the massive exodus began.

But Ramirez and Herrera refused to leave the embassy, fearing they would be arrested.

Moslems Reported Building Missile Arsenals

By Ed Blanche
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NICOSIA, Cyprus — Moslem countries are building up long-range missile arsenals in the Middle East, including systems capable of carrying nuclear and chemical warheads to Israel, military analysts say.

Four Arab countries — Iraq, Syria, Egypt and Saudi Arabia — now possess missiles capable of hitting targets in Israel. All except Saudi Arabia are capable of producing their own chemical weapons, analysts and diplomats say.

Jane's Defense Weekly said last week the Middle East missile race is eroding Israel's traditional aerial supremacy and could "dramatically change the balance of power" in the region.

Jane's said that in addition to the four Arab countries that have missiles, Libya is "rushing to catch up."

At a time of East-West detente and arms reductions, military developments in the Middle East have rung alarm bells in Washington and Moscow.

Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze warned recently of a Middle East arms race that "sooner or later would degenerate into a nuclear face-off."

Arab states in the region are pressing ahead with major arms programs costing billions of dollars, but analysts do not believe the missile spread has reached a critical stage yet.

"The real question is what kind of warheads these missiles are going to carry. High explosive and chemical warheads basically cause very localized damage," said Don Kerr of the London-based International Institute for Strategic Studies.

Kerr said the countries do not have enough missiles to ensure that they could hit all targets and prevent retaliation.

Saudi Arabia disclosed last year it has acquired Chinese-made DF-3A ballistic missiles. They have a range of 1,600 miles and can carry a 1.3-megaton nuclear weapon or a warhead containing 4,500 pounds of high explosive.

The Saudis insist the missiles, the most powerful in the region, will only carry conventional warheads. Intended primarily as defense against Iran, the missiles can also easily reach Israeli targets.

Missile warfare in the region started during the 1973 Arab-Israeli conflict.

The Iran-Iraq war spurred the spread of missile acquisition. The use of outlawed chemical weapons in the Iran-Iraq conflict made the Israelis more aware than ever of the nightmare they faced in any new Middle East conflict.

Iran, Iraq, Syria, Jordan and Libya have Soviet Scud-B surface-to-surface missiles with a range of 180 miles.

Syria, Israel's main Arab foe, has more than 100 Scud-Bs. It also has an estimated 36 of the more accurate and powerful Soviet SS-21 Scarab tactical missiles, which have a range of 120 miles and are capable of carrying chemical warheads. These can reach key Israeli targets.

The Syrians also have Soviet-built SS-C-1 Sepal and SS-C-3 anti-ship missiles.

Iran has some Chinese-made Silkworm surface-to-ship missiles and appears determined to build a missile arsenal to match Iraq's efforts.

Israel has long held the offensive edge in the volatile Middle East through its vaunted air force, and it is widely believed to have built up a stock of nuclear weapons.

The superpowers' influence in restricting access to missile technology has been undercut by the emergence of sophisticated arms industries in South America and the Middle East.

Argentina, Brazil and China have become major arms exporters. Egypt and Israel are the main producers in the Middle East, but Iraq and Iran are building up their own defense industries, even though their technological capabilities are still limited.

Iraq and Egypt are working with Argentina to develop the Badr-2000 missile with a 620-mile range and a warhead that can contain explosives, a nuclear device or poison gas.

Libya is reported to be negotiating with Brazil to buy Oteiba MBEE-600 missiles with a range of 375 miles, enough to hit Israeli targets.

The Israelis are believed to be seeking to counter the growing threat by developing missile systems to either knock out Arab and Iranian missile sites in preemptive strikes or destroy incoming missiles in the air.

The Washington Post reported Friday that some Israeli sources believe Iraq has a program to build nuclear warheads for use with missiles.

Analysts say that so far the arsenal is limited, both in quantity and quality, although they noted that any large-scale acquisitions, particularly by Libya, Iraq and Iran, would cause alarm.

Kerr said: "For the time being, these weapons are being sought by people for essentially defensive purposes. These states want to be listened to."

The key question is whether Arab states or Iran ever achieve nuclear weapons status. Most analysts believe that prospect is still distant.

Libyan leader Moammar Gadhafi has called for an Arab nuclear capability and Iraq and Iran have nuclear reactors or are building them.

"The Arabs worry about Israel as an advanced and dangerous outsider in the region," Kerr said.

But he said they are wary of missile encounters with Israel, which has its own nuclear-capable Jericho-1 weapon, with an estimated range of up to 370 miles, and has tested an advanced version with a reputed range of more than 1,000 miles.

"Arab states know that if they started firing missiles at Israel, they run the risk of nuclear retaliation," he said.

Thai Pirates Kill 45 Boat People

LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

KUALA LUMPUR, Malaysia — Thai pirates massacred 45 Vietnamese refugees sailing in the South China Sea and kidnapped about 11 women on the boat, officials on Saturday quoted two survivors as saying.

The pirates slashed the passengers with knives and threw them overboard before running their boat over the floating bodies to make sure no one was alive, they said.

An old man and young boy were the only survivors of the attack that occurred within the past week, said the officials, who work with refugees and who spoke to The Associated Press on condition of anonymity.

The two hid under planks floating in the water, and their boat later drifted to an Esso Oil Co. rig in the South China Sea off the Trengganu coast of Malaysia, the officials said. The company is a subsidiary of Exxon.

Workers picked up the two Monday and sent them to the Malaysian government hospital in Kuala Trengganu, 180 miles northeast of Kuala Lumpur.

"This is one of the worst cases of piracy reported in recent years, and the pirates nowadays kill the people after plundering the boats so that there would be no witnesses," said a senior refugee official.

The refugee officials said the two survivors did not give a full account of their experience. They did not say exactly when the attack took place or how many pirates took part. There was no word on the fate of the kidnapped women.

"The women are normally raped and either killed and dumped into the sea or abandoned in remote islands," said another refugee official.

In January, refugee officials said two Vietnamese women were raped and dumped on a remote Thai island before arriving at the camp. The women reported that 26 people in their boat were killed by Thai pirates late last year.

The government reported that in March, about 2,000 Vietnamese refugees landed on Malaysian shores, almost double the average for the past few months. There are now about 16,500 Vienamese boat people in Malaysia.

Malaysia and the nations of the region accept the refugees only for temporary stay pending permanent settlement in the West.

Sri Lanka Issues Call For Peace

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

COLOMBO, Sri Lanka — President Ranasinghe Premadasa on Saturday appealed to Sinhalese militants and Tamil rebels to negotiate an end to more than six years of ethnic violence, and said Indian troops would be sent home.

"I personally guarantee your safety," Premadasa said at a public meeting in the village of Girandurukotte, northeast of Colombo. "Let us forget the past and start a new era. I don't deny the wrong done to you in the past."

His speech was broadcast over state-run radio.

Premadasa promised to scrap the controversial India-Sri Lanka peace accord under which 40,000 Indian soldiers have been sent to the Indian Ocean island nation to put down the rebellion by Tamil militants.

He said Indian Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi had agreed to remove the troops, and that the accord would be replaced by a peace treaty between the two countries.

Premadasa also offered radicals seats in Parliament. He promised to do away with strict anti-terrorism laws and outlaw vigilante groups that have been blamed for the killings of Sinhalese suspected of being militants.

He said his proposals were backed by all major opposition parties in the country.

"Leaders of all opposition political parties will appoint their representatives to monitor the security of everybody ... who wants to give up violence," Premadasa said.

There were no immediate comment from either the Tamil rebel groups or the Sinhalese militants.

Palestinian Killed In West Bank Clash

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

JERUSALEM — Israeli troops shot and killed one Palestinian in a clash Saturday in a West Bank village, and Arab reporters said 16 Palestinians were wounded in confrontations throughout the occupied territories.

The army said a second Palestinian died Saturday of gunshot wounds suffered last week. It confirmed that two Palestinians were wounded in the West Bank and said it was checking the other reports.

The deaths raised the Palestinian death toll to 417 since the uprising against Israeli occupation of the West Bank and Gaza Strip began in December 1987. Eighteen Israelis have been killed.

Hospital officials identified the Palestinian killed Saturday as Akram Mustafa Mahmoud Yassin, 24, and said he was shot in the heart. They said Yassin's family took his body from the hospital and held a funeral that quickly turned into a nationalist demonstration.

The military said the Palestinian was critically wounded after a group of Arabs stoned an army jeep patrol and two soldiers suffered minor injuries. The soldiers took the wounded Arab to Muqassed hospital in annexed east Jerusalem, where he died.

Hundreds of Arab youths waved Palestinian flags as Yassin's coffin was carried through Bethany. The funeral march broke up after troops said no more than 40 people could participate in the procession and fired in the direction of the crowd.

There were no reported injuries. The army imposed a curfew on the village's 4,000 residents after the funeral.

Hospital officials identified the other Palestinian who died as Tareq Awad Farah Amir, 23, from the West Bank town of Hebron. He was wounded Thursday.

An army spokesman said the military was investigating reports that Jewish settlers shot the man.

In the West Bank, 12 Palestinians were wounded, including a 13-year-old who was shot in the back and a 15-year-old who was shot in the stomach, Arab reporters said.

Four Arabs, including a 12-year-old, were wounded in Gaza City when troops opened fire to break up a demonstration in the area's commercial center, sources at Arab hospitals said.

A worker for an international organization in Gaza said that during the demonstration eight Israeli undercover agents wearing kaffiyehs, or Palestinian headdresses, joined the protesters in throwing stones at the soldiers.

The worker, who spoke on the condition that neither he nor his organization be identified, said that as the demonstration grew, one agent pulled out an Uzi submachine gun and began firing in the air. The agents then arrested at least four Arab youths, the worker said.

Credit Unions Care About Members' Financial Needs

Respond With Personal Touch

LELAND, NC — Jerald Gore and Marvin H. "Chuck" Baker are members of the Cape Fear Employees Credit Union co-sponsored by E. I. Du Pont de Nemours. Jerald has been with Du Pont for 21 years and is a power auxiliary operator. Chuck has been employed over 16 years and is a yarn operator on special assignment. Chuck's wife and daughter are also members of the credit union. Jerald's wife is employed by Brunswick Electric in Shallotte, NC, and is a member of EMC (Electrical Membership Cooperative) Employees Credit Union in Raleigh, NC.

Jerald Gore, Whiteville, NC

Chuck is a charter member of the credit union and has been active in credit union management, serving on the first board of directors. Jerald joined the credit union about five years ago.

They were asked what credit union services they used. Jerald said he uses savings and checking, and his deposits are handled by payroll deduction. Chuck said, "My wife and I have a joint share draft account (checking), a joint savings account, and we have had personal loans. My daughter has her own share draft, savings and loan accounts."

Marvin H. "Chuck" Baker, Wilmington, NC

When asked if he works with the credit union through payroll deduction, Chuck replied, "Absolutely. That's always been the best possible way to handle it for us. That way, the money doesn't take a detour through my pockets. We don't ever miss it, and it's very convenient."

When asked how they felt about credit union services, Jerald said, "The service is a lot better (than other financial institutions). I enjoy working with the people at the credit union. It's convenient and the credit union employees are always very informative and tell me what I need to know to make informed decisions."

Chuck added, "I had the opportunity during the time I was in the military to become associated with a federal credit union. I was extremely pleased with the way they handled business — the personal touch. I felt we could probably get the same results starting a credit union here with the company, and I was not disappointed."

Jerald continued, "The personal relationship that you can have between the people here at the credit union is good. You know you don't have to worry about them talking about your business after you leave. It's just a personal relationship between the credit union employees and yourself."

"That's right," Chuck agreed. "I don't know if you even want to use this, but about a year and a half ago my father was sick; he had cancer. He called me and said he did not want to leave any bills behind. He asked me to lend him enough money so he could pay off his bills. At the time, I did not have the extra cash. I talked to the people at the credit union, and I had the money in my hand practically before I left. It meant so much to me and my father who died a short time later. They knew me and they cared. It was a very personalized (sic) thing."

When asked to express their views on what the credit union's not-for-profit, member-owned philosophy means to them, Jerald said, "It means something special to me. — Yes, sir. It's nice to know that you can feel like you're not going to get taken every time you have a need for a loan. You know that they are treating you honestly up front. You don't get the same care at other financial institutions. I've had loans at other places — a home loan and a car loan — and you just don't get the same attention you get at the credit union."

"For me," Chuck continued, "It gives me a feeling of ownership. Even from the start that was the feeling I had, because being on the board (of directors) I knew my responsibility at that time was for the people because I was representing the people. I look at my board members the same way. They represent me, and I own a piece of the business, and I think the board handles their responsibility very well."

When asked to sum up their feelings, Jerald said, "Credit unions are like a family — they help when others won't."

Chuck added, "I think I would probably tell the world that our credit union is one of the most caring and feeling credit unions that I've ever been associated with and that the people here are the friendliest. They are here to serve our needs, not to be self-serving. The credit union is an important part of my life."

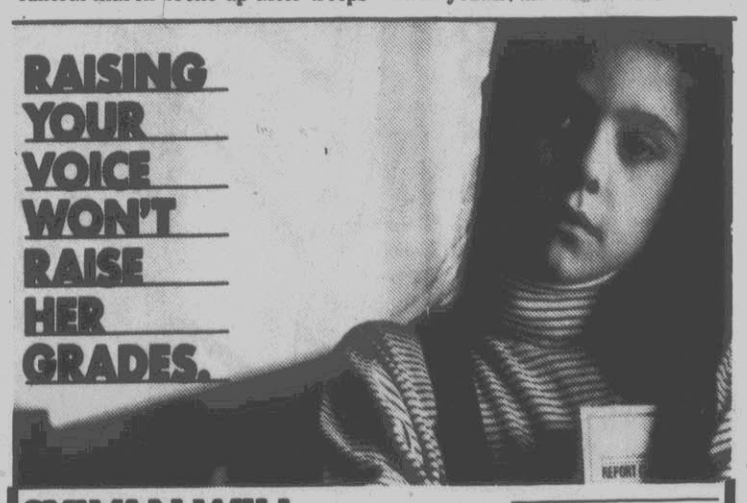

North Carolina boasts 267 credit unions with a growing membership exceeding 1.1 million and assets of 4.2 billion dollars.

Trucks Leave Khartoum Carrying Relief Supplies To Southern Sudan

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

KHARTOUM, Sudan — Thirteen trucks flying the blue flag of the United Nations rolled out of the capital Saturday, one of the first shipments of a $132-million relief operation aimed at feeding 2.5 million people in the south.

Before the rainy season begins in early May, Operation Lifeline aims to position at depots more than 100,000 tons of food, blankets, tents and medical supplies to keep alive those displaced by famine and civil war.

Trucks, airplanes, trains and Nile River barges are being pressed into duty in the project, which for the first time includes deliveries to villages and areas under control of Christian and animist rebels fighting the Moslem-dominated government.

For the first time, both the government and the rebel Sudan People's Liberation Army have promised not to attack or otherwise hinder the relief shipments. Previous efforts were hampered by one side or the other for political or military reasons.

In Nairobi, Vincent O'Reilly, the U.N. media spokesman for Operation Lifeline, said a convoy of five trucks under U.N. sponsorship carrying 30 tons of food left Kenya on Friday. On Monday, a 60-truck convoy is scheduled to leave with 1,000 tons of food and 10 tons of medical supplies, tarpaulins and pallets.

The drivers who left Khartoum were on a risky 450-mile journey to the western village of Muglad, just north of the war zone. Already 12,000 southerners were sheltered in Muglad in mid-March and hundreds more have been arriving daily.

The drivers were to to take their vehicles over roads that hardly deserve the name and nervously close to Kadugli, capital of Southern Kordofan region, where heavy fighting has been reported in recent weeks.

"If we don't do this, the disaster will be roughly equal to the disaster of Hiroshima," said James A. Grant, the U.N. official coordinating Operation Lifeline Sudan. "Or in recent history, it will be four times larger a disaster than Armenia last fall."

Soviet officials estimated 25,000 people died in the massive earthquake that struck Armenia in December. An estimated 78,000 people died when the United States dropped the atomic bomb on Hiroshima on Aug. 6, 1945 in its war against Japan, and up to 140,000 died within a few months.

Nobody knows how many people already have died in Sudan's 6-year-old civil war. Western relief experts put the figure from 1988 alone at 250,000 to 500,000 or more. Some think as many as 2 million have died since the war began in 1983, mostly civilians driven from their homes who either perished while seeking shelter or left to starve in refugee camps or besieged towns.

Grant, special representative of U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar, described the Sudanese operation as "a race against time (and) a mission impossible that could be possible with the cooperation of everybody."

Prime Minister Sadek Mahdi's government previously refused to allow relief agencies' to deal with the rebels.

Rebel gunners have shot down at least two civilian passenger planes and one relief plane and have fired on several others, claiming the government uses civilian and relief aircraft to transport troops and military supplies. The rebels also have been blamed for attacks on relief trucks, barges and trains that have killed dozens of people.

Austria Buries Last Empress With Full Pomp, Pageantry

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

VIENNA, Austria — Austria on Saturday buried its last empress, Zita, with all the pomp and pageantry of a vanished monarchy that for centuries ruled territory from Poland to the Mediterranean.

The nation's biggest funeral since Emperor Franz Joseph was buried in 1916, in the waning days of the Hapsburg Empire, seemed like an act of reconciliation with the family that brought Austria greatness but was driven into exile after World War I.

An elaborate Requiem Mass in Vienna's towering St. Stephen's Cathedral climaxed a week of ceremonies honoring Zita, who died in Switzerland two weeks ago at 96. When she and her husband left the country in 1918, she was denounced as a spy for her role in a plot to end the war.

Police estimated the number of spectators at 40,000, including hundreds from Hungary, Italy, Yugoslavia and other parts of what was once the Hapsburg Empire.

State television broadcast the ceremony live, and the nation's largest-circulation daily, Neue Kronen Zeitung, bore the headline, "Farewell to Zita," printed against a background of imperial Hapsburg yellow.

Zita's son, Otto von Hapsburg, who fled Vienna's sprawling Schoenbrunn Palace with his parents, led mourners who included President Kurt Waldheim.

All Europe's Roman Catholic royal houses sent representatives. But no crowned heads attended the four-hour ceremony, which drew curious, sometimes bemused spectators in an outpouring of nostalgia for the glory of the empire.

"The Austro-Hungarian monarchy was the best state for central Europe," said Abel Paizs, a 21-year-old Hungarian who called himself a monarchist and came from Budapest for the occasion. "The small countries don't function as well separately."

An Austrian woman who refused to identify herself said she had always been a monarchist, adding: "Nothing better has come after the monarchy."

Between passages from the soaring Requiem of Vienna's most beloved composer, Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart, the Mass was laced with tributes to the huge Hapsburg Empire that stretched north to Poland, south to northern Italy and east to what is now the Soviet Union.

Intercessions were read in each language of the polyglot empire — German, Italian, Hungarian, Croat, Slovene, Czech and Polish.

At the end of the two-hour Mass, the old imperial hymn that was replaced with a republican anthem in 1918 rang through the vaulted naves of the Gothic cathedral.

Cardinal Hans Hermann Groer, in a brief address, said the singing of the hymn "is not nostalgia, or flirting with a different state or political system."

He recalled that Zita, who always refused to abdicate formally, had before her death expressed confidence that the peoples of the former empire would live well.

Zita, who was also queen of Hungary, will be honored at a separate Mass in Budapest on Monday. Hungary's Cardinal Laszlo Paskai attended Saturday's ceremony.

An isolated crowd of protesters held aloft a banner that said, "The Empress is Dead — Long Live the Republic." Police detained at least two people when they tried to unfurl another banner outside the imperial vault where Zita was buried.

At the vault's doors, an ancient ceremony was re-enacted in which a monk asked, "Who wants to enter?" and allowed the coffin in only when Zita was identified not by her string of imperial, royal and aristocratic titles, but as "a mortal and a sinner."

Following an ancient family custom, Zita's heart was buried in the Swiss village of Muri with that of her husband. Muri is a traditional resting place for the hearts of some Hapsburgs.

Zita's hearse was the same as that used for Franz Joseph's last journey to the Capuchin Vault where all the Hapsburg emperors except Zita's husband, Charles I, are buried. Charles I, Franz Joseph's nephew, was buried on the Portuguese island of Madeira, where he died in exile at age 34, 67 years to the day before the elaborate funeral accorded his widow.

Charles became emperor of Austria and king of Hungary after the death of Franz Joseph, who reigned 68 years.

When Charles and Zita were crowned, they believed only a rapid truce could save the crumbling dual monarchy, then allied with the Reich of the German Kaiser. Zita had a key role in arranging secret contacts with the Allies in search of a peace treaty.

After Charles' death, Zita and the couple's eight children lived on the sufferance of other European royal families. The outbreak of World War II found them in Belgium, but they managed to flee the advancing Nazi troops and eventually landed in the United States.

After the war, Zita eventually settled in a modest two-room apartment in a Swiss convent close to the Austrian border. Austria allowed her to return in 1982.

Hawaii May Buy $33 Million Atoll

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

HONOLULU — A Honolulu family is giving state lawmakers until the end of April to decide whether to buy picturesque Palmyra Island, an uninhabited coral atoll 960 miles south of here. The asking price: $33 million.

Otherwise, the 600 acres of land within the 8,000-acre reef-protected atoll will go to the highest bidder, preferably one who is willing to preserve the island's natural beauty, said Ainsley Fullard-Leo, the youngest of three brothers who own the island.

"We've had it for a number of years now and we're not in a position to develop it. We're getting on in years and feel it is time to sell it and move on," said Fullard-Leo, 57. "We're giving the state the first chance at it."

"I view the purchase with a manifest destiny mentality," said Sen. Russell Blair, who introduced the bill to buy the island. "It is something that could be tremendously important for Hawaii's future generations."

People laughed at the Louisiana Purchase and "Seward's Folly," the 1867 purchase of Alaska from Russia for $7 million, Blair said.

Gov. John Waihee said he is willing to give the purchase "real consideration," if the Legislature decides to buy it. The bill has been approved by the state Senate and is pending before the House.

What makes Palmyra especially attractive is its deep draft harbor, an airstrip left over from World War II and frequent rainfall, said Peter Savio, a realtor representing the family.

Democracy Is Slow To Come For Haitians

By Susana Hayward
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti — In a roofless, burned-out church, the congregation sings hymns in Creole about death and crushed dreams.

"They kill us in the street, they kill us in our homes, they kill us inside church."

The words flowed from 200 or so worshipers during Mass at St. Jean Bosco Roman Catholic Church in the midst of slum.

"The problems of our country make us die like animals.

"Democracy. Democracy."

In September thugs with machetes, guns and spikes stormed into St. Jean Bosco during Mass, killing 13 people and wounding 70 others before setting the church afire with gasoline. A week later, on Sept. 17, rank-and-file soldiers revolted and put Lt. Gen. Prosper Avril in power.

They overthrew Lt. Gen. Henri Namphy and stirred hopes for democracy at last in Haiti.

The Caribbean-island nation has known almost nothing but brutal dictatorships since winning independence from France in 1804 — the first slave state to become a nation.

Today, six months after Avril took over and three years after dictator Jean-Claude "Baby Doc" Duvalier flew to exile in France, there is disillusionment over the pace of promised democratic reforms, while allegations of human-rights violations continue.

But Avril, who holds a law degree, has made some, albeit slow, progress toward his pledge to hand over power eventually to an elected government. His government maintains democracy is the only path for the poorest country in the Western Hemisphere.

"We've had dictatorships for 184 years and we are still the least developing nation in Latin America. So something is wrong with how we governed," said Foreign Minister Serge Elie Charles in an interview. "Democracy is not a choice; it's an imperative."

In February, Avril approved the formation of an independent council to oversee eventual elections and he recently restored 291 articles of the 1987 constitution, suspended in June by Namphy. But 37 articles that mostly restricted the army's role were not revived because, Avril said, they were inconsistent with a de facto government.

"You can't expect this government to behave like a democratically elected government," sociologist Leopold Berlanger, head of the Haitian Research and Development Institute, said in an interview. "Avril is a product of the system.

"The only thing we have to expect is that he assures a secure, fair and honest democratic process."

The 50-year-old Avril was Duvalier's close financial adviser and people still associate him with the old regime. Many charge he is making reforms merely to win back $70 million in U.S. economic assistance. The aid was frozen Nov. 29, 1987, after goonsquads killed 34 people voting in the country's first election in 30 years.

The U.S. State Department has said it won't renew aid until democratic government is in place but Congress could release some funds in the meantime as an incentive.

With about 80 percent of the country's 5.5 million people living in dire poverty, Haiti desperately needs help.

"Witholding aid has been very negative," said the foreign minister. "The social-economic factors have worsened so we cannot say how these measures have in any way advanced democracy."

This year, labor strikes and sporadic demonstrations broke out in Port-au-Prince, the capital, and in the provinces with demands for Avril to step down.

America's Watch and other human rights groups say abuses and arbitrary arrests by the army and paramilitary groups continue to be made of people in peasant organizations, labor unions and church groups.

"The basic human rights situation has not changed," said Robert Duval, who was a political prisoner under Jean Claude Duvalier and today runs a human rights group. "In the last weeks we have found one to two bodies a night as a result of the political situation."

Duvalier's feared private militia, the Tonton Macoute, was disbanded after Jean-Claude fled and some were integrated into the 7,000-member army. But they were chased out by soldiers who brought Avril to power.

Although disorganized, the army wields considerable power.

"You're not going to get to power if there's not a reasonable understanding with those guys," said presidenial hopeful Marc Bazin, a former Finance Minister and World Bank economist. "You would be killed or disappear one morning."

Optimism waned a month after Avril took office when the soldiers who put him in power were jailed, accused of plotting a coup. Three months later, they were released. No explanation was given.

But the tide turned in late December when Avril gave Franck Romain, the notorious mayor of Port-Au-Prince, safe passage to the Dominican Republic, which shares the island of Hispaniola with Haiti.

Romain, a retired colonel, was believed to have orchestrated the church massacre and was implicated in the one against voters in 1987.

"Giving Romain safe conduct showed the tendency of the government to preserve the status quo and encourage the Duvalierists to stay on — not to pursue the murderers of Nov. 29 or the church massacre," said Louis Dejoie II, son of popular industrialist who lost to Francois Duvalier, Jean-Claude's father, in the disputed 1957 election.

Fears also abound that elections would again be disrupted or rigged, as was believed the case in the elections Jan. 17, 1988, when frightened voters stayed home and Leslie Manigat came to power amid allegations of fraud. Manigat was overthrown by Namphy five months later.

"International pressure would have to be great so they can't repeat the events of November or of January's sham election," said sociologist Hubert de Ronceray, the runner-up in the 1988 election.

About a dozen opposition parties and an array of organizations have emerged since 1986 but are divided.

"The democratic process depends on confidence building between the army and civilians," a Western diplomat said. "Civilians have to trust the army to take its role but not to take control. And you have to have the willingness of the existing government, the quietude of the far left and the tolerance of the far right."

No one predicts what will happen.

The Communist Party, the grassroots "popular church" and leftist unions are influential with peasants and the poor. These groups want Avril to step down and allow a coalition government to govern until elections.

Many say Avril is caught in the middle.

"He risks being overthrown if he doesn't make enough progress. He risks it if he does," said the diplomat, speaking on condition of anonymity. "So he's trying to maintain an equilibrium."

Namibian Cease-Fire Is Marred By Violence

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WINDHOEK, Namibia — South Africa reported major clashes with guerrillas hours before Namibia began its transition to independence Saturday and said it may ask the U.N. force monitoring the process to leave.

Foreign Minister Pik Botha of South Africa said 38 guerrillas and two territorial policemen were killed when guerrillas of the South-West African People's Organization, or SWAPO, infiltrated from Angola on Friday evening.

"This is a most serious development," said Botha.

The reported attack came hours before a formal cease-fire took effect and a 20-nation U.N. peacekeeping force began overseeing the end of South Africa's 74-year rule over Namibia.

Police blocked thousands of SWAPO supporters who tried to march in the capital to celebrate the transition.

Botha accused the rebels of a flagrant violation of a pledge to halt hostilities and said he had complained to U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar.

Unless there is a satisfactory response from the United Nations, Botha said, South Africa would feel compelled to ask the peacekeeping force to leave "until SWAPO can be brought to its senses."

In New York, U.N. spokeswoman Nadia Younes released a statement from Perez de Cuellar saying: "The secretary-general is greatly concerned that such incidents have been reported. He has told Mr. Botha that UNTAG (the U.N. Transition Assistance Group) is immediately sending a team to investigate the reports."

U.N. officials here said a team would travel to the border Sunday.

An official of SWAPO, which has waged a war for independence since 1966, said the organization would need a day or so to determine what had happened but added that SWAPO "has gone out of its way to avoid conflict."

According to Botha, Perez de Cuellar indicated he might agree that South Africa could reactivate its troops to guard against SWAPO operations. But the U.N. spokeswoman said the secretary-geeneral would have no comment on Botha's remarks.

Later at a news conference, Botha said South African troops will be allowed to leave their bases to search for the guerrillas involved in the fighting if police can't control the situation.

South African and SWAPO forces were confined to their bases as of Saturday under the U.N. plan but Namibian Administrator General Louis Pienaar said SWAPO units had not complied.

Botha interrupted his airport news conference to take a call from Pienaar. He then said that Pienaar, U.N. Special Representative Martti Ahtisaari and Gen. Prem Chand, the UNTAG commander, said certain South African units would be released from their bases to provide support to the police and the U.N. group would monitor the South African movement.

Fewer than 800 of the 4,500 military personnel assigned to the UNTAG have arrived in Namibia.

There had been no fighting since September between South African and SWAPO forces.

'Truth In Preference To Fiction'

No Room

The Problem In Black & White

It was the kind of headline that gives taxpayers and law-abiding citizens bad dreams: "Full Jail Leaves Prisoners Free."

There was no room, it seems, for criminals serving weekend sentences at either the Pitt County Jail or the satellite jail two weekends last month, the story under the headline said. When the offenders checked in on Fridays to do their time, they were sent home. Sheriff Ralph Tyson predicted about 50 more inmates than the county could handle would show up this weekend.

To ordinary people who pay the bill to punish criminals and expect their money's worth, that kind of justice isn't justice. It's cheating. And it's a problem the county must address before it goes any further.

Pitt County has a pack of construction needs — expensive endeavors all, but essential entities for a progressive community. A new jail is among those items, and it is one of the issues awaiting the leadership of Pitt's County Commission.

Jail overcrowding is not a new topic. Last week's headlines, however, put the issue in black and white terms: unless a new jail is built soon, criminals in Pitt County can't be punished. The work of police officers is for naught. The arguments of prosecuting attorneys are in vain. Judges' order mean nothing. The system fails.

That's repulsive to anyone who believes in and is prepared to pay for justice. The problem is one the county must fund its way out of. The money to build an ample jail must be located, and located soon.

It's not that Pitt's cup runneth over with criminals. True, the county has an aggressive criminal justice system that keeps jails hopping. But that's as it should be. To keep a community crime free requires an energetic legal system.

No, what makes cell space in Pitt County a hot commodity is procrastination. For too long the county has postponed building a suitable jail. Last week's headlines more than prove the point. For years Pitt's leadership has felt major capital expenditures were too expensive. Now what's completely unaffordable is the alternative — to let the needs of a booming community outstrip its ability to serve the people.

Pitt's main jail was built in 1964. It has not had a major expansion since. Not only is it too small, but its design is outdated and unsuitable. An expensive satellite jail at the county office building in 1988 was designed to house the overflow. But lately, that hasn't even been enough space.

No, the only way to avoid thwarting justice is to build another jail, and the time has come for Pitt County to proceed. It's not glamorous and it's not a fun way to spend tax dollars. But it is the only way to avoid more headlines like this: "No Room At The Jail ... Again."

Goals Met

Steps Toward Fulfilling Mission

While medical schools nationally seem to be noticing an end in the seven-year decline of applicants, the decline has never been noted at the East Carolina University School of Medicine.

The Association of American Medical Colleges says there is an increase of 348 applicants this year over last year, the first upturn in several years. At East Carolina, however, officials say the number of applicants has remained stable for the past four years.

The school, still relatively new, is fulfilling its mission of giving priority to in-state students. This year there is only one from out of state.

The ECU school is also continuing its efforts to attract female applicants, Asians, black and American Indian. It has recruited heavily among qualified minorities.

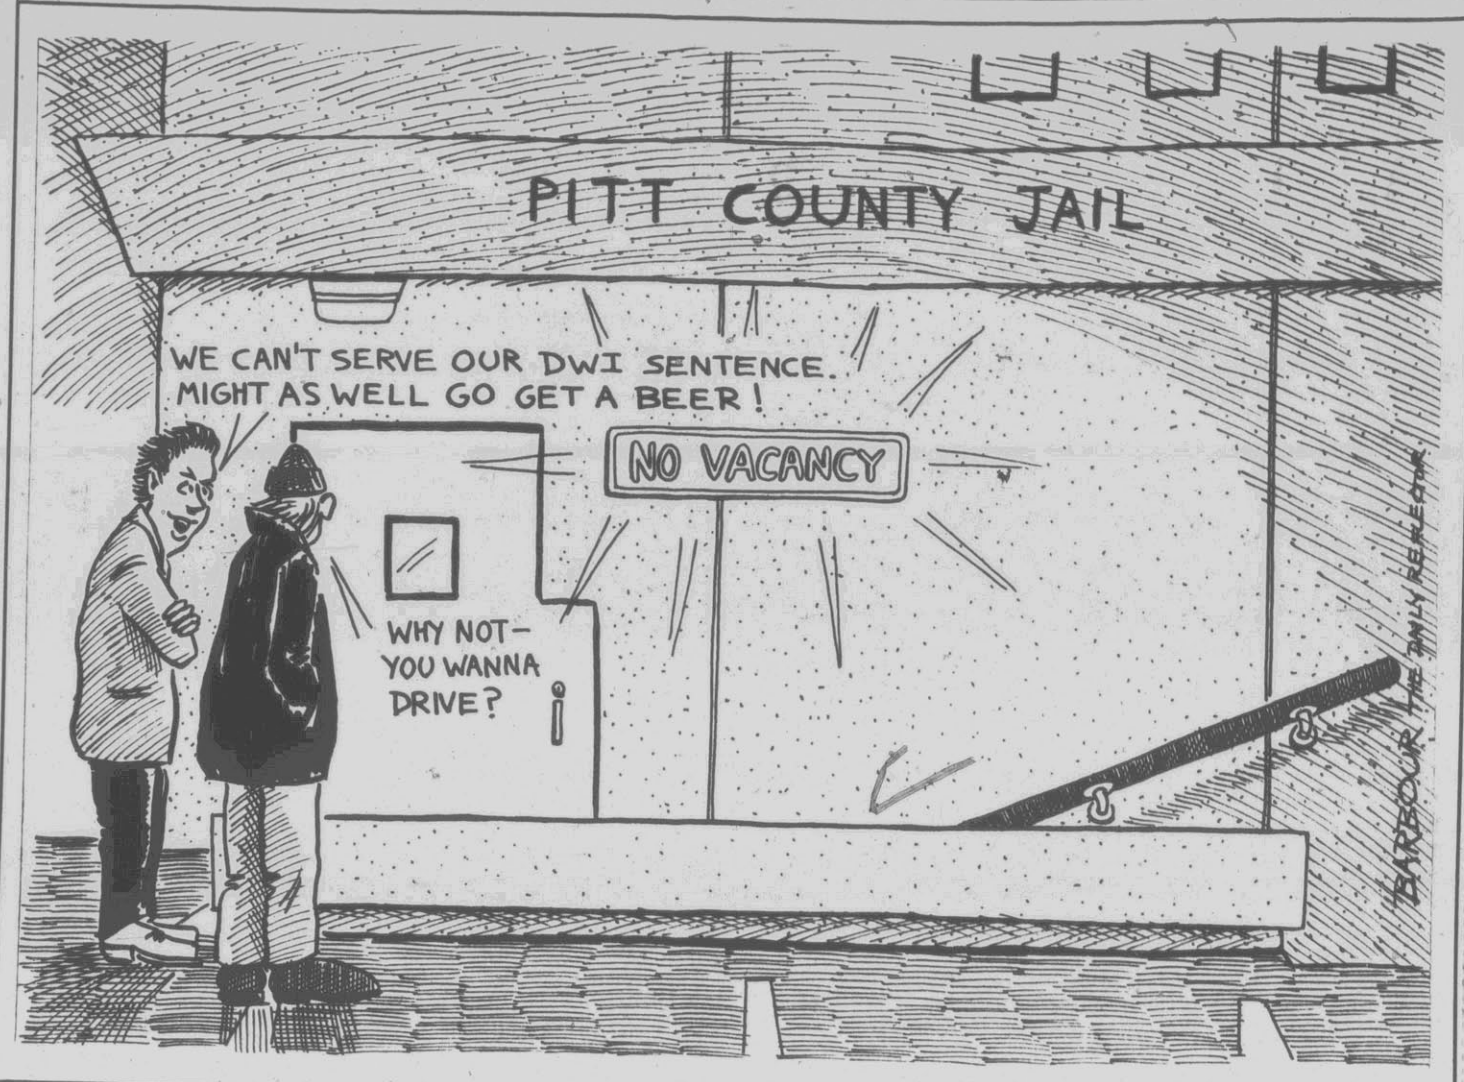

That the ECU School of Medicine is filling a need is rarely questioned today even though it was a subject of great debate over a decade ago.

The planners promised there would be adequate applicants, available clinical facilities and that emphasis would be placed on primary care physicians. It was anticipated that recruitment of minorities would be strong and emphasis would be placed on admitting in-state students.

Those goals have been met and the efforts are ongoing. Qualified applicants are recognizing this by seeking admission to the school.

In the future there will be a major expansion of Pitt County Memorial Hospital which will allow for an increase in residents in training there. Thus the service of the ECU School of Medicine and PCMH is multifaceted.

Basic to it all is the attraction of qualified applicants for admission to the medical school. That seems to have developed very well.

Play Ball — No, Let's Play Two

David Broder

WASHINGTON — No heavy stuff today on contras, Congress, oil spills or other conundrums. The Season is set to begin and on the desk is a book that whets your appetite as much as a ballpark hot dog. It's "The Dickson Baseball Dictionary," edited by Paul Dickson and just published by Facts on File.

It contains "5,000 terms used by players, the press and people who love the game." It gives their origins and variants, with wonderful illustrations from the living literature of baseball and a slew of photos and drawings further illuminating the men and the scenes that have enriched the language of the game.

If you wish to learn about the baseball history of "hot dogs," for example, you discover they were first sold at the Polo Grounds in 1901 and first recorded in print as part of the baseball scene in 1906. The accompanying photo shows some spiffy gents lining up at the hot-dog stands outside Ebbets Field, while waiting for the gates to open for the second game of the 1920 World Series.

'No heavy stuff today on contras, Congress, oil spills or other conundrums. The Season is set to begin and on the desk is a book that whets your appetite as much as a ballpark hot dog. It's "The Dickson Baseball Dictionary," edited by Paul Dickson and just published by Facts on File. It contains "5,000 terms used by players, the press and people who love the game." It gives their origins and variants, with wonderful illustrations from the living literature of baseball ... .'

But while on that page, your eye inevitably strays to the preceding entry, "hot corner." And you learn that this year marks the centennial of the first recorded use of that standard description of the third-base position.

Cincinnati sports writer Ren Mulford used it to describe a game in 1889 in which third sacker Hick Carpenter (a great baseball name) "fielded seven sharp drives tha almost tore him apart. The Brooklyns had Old Hick on the hot corner all afternoon and it's a miracle he wasn't murdered."

The dictionary offers that sort of seductive scholarship on almost every page. Before I got out of the "H's" I had learned that a "holdout," which I assumed was a modern usage and a phenomenon of our materialistic age, was older than the hot corner. It appeared in a New York newspaper in 1888, but the practice may go back as far as 1869, when Charles Sweeney of the Reds refused to report until his season's salary was raised from $800 to $1,000.

Still ensnared by the riches of baseball H's, I was nudged to ponder the special precision of the game's terminology by Dickson's entry on "the hole." The hole, as any fan knows, refers to the unoccupied space between the shortstop and the third baseman. Occasionally, it can be used to describe one of the other infield openings that invite a hitter's attention.

But it never applies to the outfield. The spaces between outfielders are "gaps," and a ball hit up the gap can be called a "gapper." But nobody talks about "holers." Why not? Perhaps because baseball has plenty of "holler guys," or cheerleading, chatterbox players, so who needs a holer?

There are scores of terms I never knew or at least never associated with baseball. As an old Chicagoan, I was chagrined to discover that in olden days, "to Chicago" the opposition meant to shut them out. And, on the same page, a "Chicago slide," of which I had never heard, was apparently "the original hook slide," invented by one Mike "King" Kelly, who played for the White Stockings (not yet the White Sox) in the 1880s.

They never taught us any of that important stuff in school.

Dickson, a writer who lives in Garrett Park, Md., has a stupefying list of terms which have jumped from baseball to general usage, ranging from "bat a thousand" to "two strikes against him." More thought-provoking are his ruminations about the odd tendencies of baseball language.

It is, he notes, essentially pastoral in tone. "Even under a dome, it is a game of fields and fences, where ducks sit on the pond and pitchers sit in the catbird seat. New players come out of the farm system and a farmhand who pitches may get to work in the bullpen."

That may reflect the character of the 19th-century America where baseball was born. But some of it defies such easy explanation. As Dickson notes, "Baseball seems driven to come up with its own terms for things that are used widely in other sports. Everywhere else teams are piloted by head coaches, but baseball insists on managers....Its referees are called umpires....Baseball players never seem to turn. They always pivot. In realms as diverse as bowling and bombing, a strike is a hit; but in baseball alone it is a miss. Out of bounds works for everyone else, but baseball insists on foul territory....And the locker rooms used by football players become clubhouses for the baseball players."

"Clubhouse" has been the term of choice at least since 1869, that definition informs. But it's time to leave the clubhouse and respond to the two best words in American sports — "Play ball!" — words that may have first appeared in print in "Frank Merriwell's Marvel" in 1901. As Dickson also informs us, when Joe DiMaggio asked President Reagan to get Mikhail Gorbachev to autograph a baseball for him at a White House dinner in 1987, the New York Times gravely reported that the President "used the occasion to tell his (Russian) guest that the two leaders should 'play ball' with each other."

Play ball, sure. But even better, as Ernie Banks would say, "Let's play two!"

Driving Yourself Nuts Over ... Driving

Alvin Taylor

Sunday Morning Notes

Is there anything more valued in our society than the drivers license.

Certainly it ranks right up there with the deed to the farm, the high school diploma, college degree and other cherished papers. In today's context it might even rank just above the marriage license.

Most of the time, most of us take the drivers license for granted. It's in our pocket books and rarely thought about except when identification is needed or a law enforcement officer demands it.

In North Carolina, however, virtually every driver feels a tug of fear at his heart every four years. That's when the envelope arrives from the Division of Motor Vehicles. The message inside tells us that another birthday is coming up and if we wish to keep driving we must visit the license examiner and renew the drivers license.

Immediately the image is conjured up of a scowling examiner, bent upon tricking us and determined that we won't get that little card which allows us to continue driving.

My time arrived this month. The card came and I became depressed. Since driving is like oxygen for modern day living, I soon rallied enough to visit the license examiners office and pick up a refresher publication. Because of a speeding ticket a couple years back I knew I had to take the written test. Instead of watching television reruns I spent a couple of nights reading the booklet and answering the sample questions.

Finally I determined that one day last week was time I should force myself to the licensing examiners office. I was prepared for an afternoon of waiting and worrying.

It wasn't that way, of course. Within five minutes of my arrival I was taking the test. That was done within 15 minutes and an examiner scored it and told me I had passed. Then the eye test, road sign test, pay $10 and have my picture taken for the license. Everybody had been pleasant, there was no delay and no hitches in renewing my license. Other than noticing the face in the picture was a little older than the last one — and wondering what the next one would look like — there was no trauma. In fact I felt pretty good about passing the exam.

Well the new card is in my billfold and I likely won't think about it until I need it. But for now I think what a valuable privilege it is to drive, something that few people in all history have had. It represents freedom, pleasure and even offers some sense of security knowing we can travel for an emergency.

There are ways to lose the drivers license and one wonders why anyone would risk it. There are few joys comparable to having the vehicle of one's choice and the ability to go when one wants. Now that's freedom.

A Love Of Learning & Baseball Practice

George Will

SARASOTA, Fla. — Baseball, sport of the long season and strong oral tradition, tells of the time when the Cincinnati Reds plane hit severe turbulence and Pete Rose said to a teammate: "We're going down. We're going down and I have a .300 lifetime average to take with me. Do you?" The teammate's response, which could reasonably have been homicide, is not recorded.

As this is being written, while teams break camp and head for hard work, Rose's infractions, if any, regarding rules about gambling, have not been revealed. No such infractions are unserious. However, much good about Rose has been revealed through the seasons.

Rose has baseball in his chromosomes. Tell him Lindbergh flew the Atlantic in 1927 and he responds, "The year Ruth hit 60." To you, 1941 means Pearl Harbor. To Rose, 1941 means DiMaggio hitting in 56 consecutive games and Williams hitting .406. A statistician once tried to stump Rose with this arcane question: What active player has the highest ratio of flyouts to groundouts? Rose replied, "Easy. Gary Redus." Rose was right.

"The trick," said Casey Stengel, "is growing up without growing old."

"I was raised," Rose once said, "but I never grew up."

"All games," says baseball writer Tom Boswell, "offer an alternative reality" and baseball, with its relentless schedule and statistical richness, particularly appeals to the fanatical personality. But Rose the man-child has an adult understanding of the ethic of sport.

He was last the focus of national attention four seasons ago in his quest for his 4,192nd hit to break Ty Cobb's career record. Boswell, in his new collection of baseball essays, "The Heart of the Order," remembers the Sunday in Chicago that began with Rose two hits shy of Cobb's 4,191. That night the Reds would head home for a soldout series where he would break the record.

Player-manager Rose was not going to play that Sunday because the Cubs had scheduled a left-handed pitcher. But the left-hander got hurt, was replaced by a right-hander, and Rose immediately wrote himself into the lineup. By the fifth inning he had tied Cobb with two hits.

In the ninth inning the score was tied, no outs, Reds runners on first and second, Rose at bat. He could sacrifice the runners over to second and third, saving The Hit for the home folks. But Dave Parker, a slugger, was on deck. If Rose sacrificed, the Cubs would walk Parker with first base open. So Rose calculated, reasonably, that the Reds would have a slightly better chance of winning if he tried for a hit.

He failed. To get a hit, that is. But he succeeded brilliantly at showing, as Boswell says, the meaning of the phrases "integrity of the sport" and "best interest of the game."

Boswell rightly notes that Rose, like Cobb, is not a balanced personality. But Cobb was a hideous caldron competing with ugly ferocity. Rose combined cheerfulness and a competitiveness that burned with a hard, gem-like flame. He competed simultaneously against the other team and his own high standards.

Sport can produce self-absorption, and a moral sense that is sharp only because, like a knife blade, it is very narrow. This leads some stars to a sense of exemption from the restraints relevant to others. Rose may not have resisted that temptation.

But one reason for participating in sports is to become better — better at the sport and in the soul. Acquisition of particular skills leads to appreciation of all skills. To learn a sport is to learn what mastery means, even if you fall far short of it. Playing a sport, and appreciating the play of a Rose, is an apprenticeship in craftmanship.

Becoming better at something is called self-improvement, a term with two meanings. It means improving one's self, one's character, one's core identity. It also means an unavoidable loneliness, getting better by oneself, in submission to severe self-judgments, in the aloneness of private determination, under the lash of the necessity to satisfy one's demanding self. Sport can be an exacting and elevating school.

So:

In a restaurant near Wrigley Field there is this sign: "Any employee wishing to miss work because of death or serious illness please notify the office by 11 a.m. on the day of the game." In that spirit, the teachers of Victoria and Jon Will are hereby notified that, because of an annual April emergency, Victoria and Jon must be in Baltimore Monday afternoon. But Geoffrey Will will be in school, drawn by love of learning (that's a joke, son) and baseball practice.

Someone Should Be Paying Attention

Richard Cohen

NEW YORK — Maybe they'll put a plaque on the building at 108 East 96th St. Thirty-one stories high, faced with red brick and bristling with terraces, it is 12 stories higher than the law allows, although a molehill by Big Apple standards. Nevertheless, the city has made a mountain out of it. The owners have been ordered to remove the top 12 stories.

What would the plaque say? "Stop"? "Enough"? or, in another block where Park Avenue doormen give way to Hispanic bodegas, "Basta"? Whatever it says, something remarkable has happened in New York City. Here, in the hometown of greed, the city not even Tom Wolfe could fully parody in his "Bonfires of The Vanities," citizens have risen in indignation. In Paris years ago, a citizens' movement leveled the Bastille. Here, it threatens the top 12 floors of a building already completed and waiting for people to move in.

The courts might yet reverse the city's action and, anyway, 12 stories do not a policy make. The city has tentatively compromised with yet another developer who overreached — this time by only 11 feet. But with a mayoral election coming this year, virtue is rampant.

Somewhere in the White House someone ought to be paying attention. When New York gets finicky about zoning laws, when it in effect says no to higher and bigger, it is a sign of massive discontent within the citizenry. The stunning decision to decapitate a building would once have been considered blasphemy. But the people of New York have had it. Like the old gray mare, life in Gotham ain't what it used to be.

But you could say that about just about any place in the country now. The emphasis the Bush administration says it wants to place on protecting the environment comes from an acute reading of public sentiment. Just a year ago, the beaches not far from here were closed. Hypodermic needles came in with the tide. Sewerage did the dead-man's float up the coast. In the great Los Angeles basin, smog seems to have settled in for the duration — 199 days of smog alerts. And in Washington, the onerous summer is made worse by air so thick and dirty it could slow a bullet.

Now the country is sickened by a massive oil spill off the Alaskan coast — 11 million gallons of crude from the tanker Exxon Valdez. This was, we were told, an accident. Oil-industry spokesmen ask us to look at all the crude that was pumped and shipped without incident. This is a variation of the refrain often put to journalists: Why don't you write the good news? Because, we retort, it is the bad news that can kill you.

No one has died off Alaska. But the sea is poisoned with oil; fishing grounds are endangered; white birds dive into the water and come out black. A huge oil company, Exxon, had assured us that if such a thing happened they could control it. Here, see our plans. Here, see our technology. But something has gone wrong. The plans don't work. The technology is insufficient. The sea is besotted with oil.

It is the bad luck of the growth-at-any-cost adherents that the Exxon Valdez went astray 10 years to the month after the nuclear accident at Three Mile Island. That, too, was a mere accident, an event that could not happen, should not happen but, somehow, did happen. The plant has yet to completely reopen and, like Chernobyl in the Soviet Union, the disaster came like a slap to the face: Oh, so this is what we were warned about. Oh, so this is what those loony, backpacking, bird-watching ecologists were saying might happen.

In politics, as in weather, there are seasons. The season of Ronald Reagan has passed. The growth he advocated, the deregulation he extolled, the bounty we would all get from untrammeled capitalism, took us in the wrong direction. The virtues of greed, manifest in the novels of Ayn Rand, have become the vices of reality. For eight years, the nation's energy policy was essentially to have none at all. The wisdom of Jimmy Carter was ignored and his energy-conservation policy essentially junked. Detroit, ever-nostalgic, still yearns for the gas guzzler.

But in New York a building is being shrunk. In Los Angeles, anti-smog laws with teeth are going into effect. Those dreaded words — policy, regulation — are no longer abstractions. We breathe their implications and, on a hot day, we can't swim in their consequences. Here, as elsewhere, people are attempting to control the environment.

So maybe years from now school kids will be taken to 108 East 96th St. They will be told that on this spot a developer put 12 too many stories on his building and the city told him to take them off. He pleaded that the zoning map was muddled, that the cost of removing the floors and their 24 apartments could amount to more than $1 million. Do it, he was ordered — and history was made.

What shall the plaque say? Well, what's Latin for "We won't take it any more?"

Looking Again

Stephen Rosenfeld

WASHINGTON — The conservatives, fishily eyeing the administration's Nicaragua deal with Congress, suspect that "bipartisanship" is not so much discretion and statesmanship as surrender by another name — on policy and on presidential power. But this is sour grapes: George Bush had no wise choice but to make the best of Ronald Reagan's failure to hold a Democratic Congress to his Central America dream.

Another instance of bipartisanship troubles me more. Afghanistan. For a decade, there has been agreement across the political spectrum to help the resistance kick out Soviet troops. What differences there were concerned only degrees of ardor. So deep is the habit of consensus on this issue that in Congress now there is almost no disposition, let alone institutional readiness, to take the fresh look the new situation requires.

At this point it's not established that the administration is on the wrong track. The fair question, however, is whether Washington is taking into timely and full account the sea changes flowing from the evacuation of Soviet troops in February.

That event changed what was a holy war against infidel invaders to a more "normal" war among Afghans — no superficial change. The regime enjoys continuing Soviet support, and this is reasonably cited by the American government to continue providing American support to the mujaheddin. The flow of American arms, however, no longer goes exclusively to an anti-Soviet purpose. A couple of other purposes have been added that the United States scarcely acknowledges and perhaps understands less.

One contest is identified by Edward Girardet, the Christian Science Monitor's veteran Afghan hand, as a regional tug of war involving the Soviet Union, Pakistan, Iran, India, China, Saudi Arabia and others. They seek by such means as arms, aid and bribery to shape the internal outcome in Afghanistan. It is not pretty but it is the inevitable rush to fill a vacuum left by a great power's withdrawal, and it is only natural that near neighbors, to whom it matters, will join in.

The other contest is a civil war — and not just between communists and anticommunists but increasingly among elements of the resistance. New refugees are now fleeing Afghan-wielded American as well as Soviet arms.

This struggle takes us to terrain where, to be effective, we must know a great deal about Afghan politics. There are experts among us, but our larger political community — and this is what counts in our democracy — is literally years away from thrashing out the broad-based understanding that would make us savvy performers, if we chose that chancy role, in the internal Afghan game.

As we have since Moscow sent in its troops in 1979, we take political advice on Afghanistan from the Pakistanis. This has produced a belated but brisk discussion inside the government and a little bit outside. Some say the Pakistanis have drawn us into ill-considered support of their own unrepresentative fundamentalist Afghan clients — the gang that set up a flimsy interim regime a few weeks ago and now hopes to seat it in Jalalabad, besieged for precisely that purpose. Others are calmer or more defensive; I find it hard to tell which.

Bipartisanship is fine if it puts political force behind a well-considered policy, but when it becomes a veil for congressional inattention to an increasingly fuzzy executive policy, it can be a costly pose.

Why The Struggle For A Vantage Point At The North Trial?

Haynes Johnson

WASHINGTON — Courtroom six on the second floor of U.S. District Court in Washington is a small, well-lighted and well-filled one these days. It is also a place of dignity and decorum, as befits the solemn national business being conducted there.

Besides judge, jury, defendant and prosecution and defense lawyers, about 100 people can be accommodated. Half of the seats are for the news media. The rest are reserved for staff, relatives of witnesses, official observers and the public. Few private citizens gain admission. Demand for seats exceeds supply, and lines for public admittance form about 7 a.m.

There's something curious and impressive about these patient, quiet crowds. In an age of fickle mass audiences attracted like moths to the latest media spectacle featuring an instant and ephemeral "star," these citizens seem more seriously motivated.

A couple from San Diego has come to witness history. A lawyer from Chicago takes pride in believing that so many citizens understand the importance of the trial and what it represents to the country. A young public-school teacher from Ohio wants to see how justice is applied to the powerful in America so she can report on the process to her students. A District of Columbia man carries a copy of the Constitution. He turns a page and points toward Article Two specifying the oath that presidents, officials and military officers are required to take. "They've all taken the same oath to 'preserve, protect and defend the Constitution of the United States,' " he says, "and that's what this is all about. They didn't defend it."

The fact that this is yesterday's news, overtaken by the daily flood of more pressing concerns — remarkable political developments in the Soviet Union, environmental calamity in Alaska, new concern about the economy, better prospects for ending the long warfare in Central America that has consumed such blood and treasure — doesn't seem to bother them.

Nor do they seem concerned that perhaps the wrong person is on trial here or that not much new information is being disclosed. They are focused on the case at hand.

The defendant, a small, trim man with a crew cut and pug nose, seems even slighter than one remembers. Perhaps that's because he now wears a somber dark business suit instead of a military uniform decorated with ribbons. He is one of the best known people in the world. No, that's not correct. His is one of the best known names in the world.

Oliver L. North's trial is an attempt to determine the truth about the motivations and responsibility for his extraordinary activities — multiple, clandestine and worldwide — on behalf of the secret policies of President Ronald Reagan. These led to 12 criminal charges against North and, if he is convicted on all of them, he could face as much as 60 years in prison.

North appears unperturbed. Of the many facets of his personality, a constant trait is on display daily. He continues to be an indefatigable note-taker. Just as he once ceaselessly recorded notes of what was happening in the byzantine undertakings in which he was a central player and later poured out his intimate thoughts and impressions over supposedly "secure" computer networks, he now spends his time mainly seated alone at a table facing the judge and taking more copious notes.

His lawyer also is something of a celebrity, thanks to national television exposure. "There goes the potted plant," says one citizen standing on line outside the courtroom as Brendan V. Sullivan Jr. walks down the corridor with his famous client.

The peril is not to U.S. security or America's international relations: It is to Reagan's reputation and standing in history. Perhaps those quiet crowds seeking courtroom admittance are on to something. This may not be yesterday's news after all. They may be witnessing history.

Alaskan Governor Warns He May Close Trans-Alaska Pipeline

the influence of alcohol, reckless endangerment and the negligent discharge of oil, all misdemeanors.

The three offenses carry combined maximum sentences of two years and three months in prison, and fines totaling up to $10,000. District Attorney Larry Weeks said if convicted, Hazelwood would have to spend at least 30 days in jail because he has two prior drunken driving convictions in the past five years.

Valdez Magistrate Tracee Schnell signed the arrest warrant for Hazelwood, and set bond at $50,000. Authorities believe he left the state several days ago, but Baily said the state would seek his extradition.

Police in Hazelwood's hometown of Huntington, N.Y., said Saturday they did not know his whereabouts.

FBI officials in Washington say they're investigating possible felony violations of the Clean Water Act, which prohibits the "negligent discharge of a pollutant into navigable waters."

Exxon is liable for millions of dollars in fines under state law if it is proven to be negligent in causing the spill and cleaning it up.

Shifting wind drove the main body of the slick east toward Hinchenbrook Island, which forms the primary boundary between the sound and the Gulf of Alaska.

The movement of the oil toward the rich fishing grounds at the mouth of the Copper River stirred fear in Cordova, which lies on the east side of the sound. Some Cordova fishermen, who had mounted a bold effort to protect the hatcheries on the west side, headed back toward their home port to battle the oil there.

Larry Dietrick of the Alaska Department of Environmental Conservation praised the Cordova fishermen as the "backbone" of the cleanup and containment effort so far.

Leaders in the fishing and tourist town of Seward, the first community downstream from Prince William Sound to the west, also went on the offensive, deploying 10,000 feet of boom the town ordered from a Massachusetts manufacturer to protect salmon river habitats.

"We're not going to let it happen," said Harry Gieseler, mayor of the town 125 miles southwest of Valdez. "We're taking our own initiative."

At the Kenai Fjords National Park, near Seward, a team was sent out to survey wildlife and evaluate the state of the park before oil reaches the rocky shores, spokeswoman Dixie Dies said.

The park will count on the city of Seward for boom and other protective measures, she said.

The Coast Guard rejected a plea from oil producers to ease restrictions placed on tanker traffic into Valdez following the spill. The Atlantic Richfield Co. said tanker movement from the marine terminal of the trans-Alaska oil pipeline needs to be stepped up to ensure adequate supplies on the West Coast.

On Friday, wholesale gasoline prices surged as commodities traders speculated that the squeeze in oil supplies caused by the disastrous spill won't ease soon. Gas prices at the pump jumped by as much as 10 cents a gallon in parts of California.

Normally three to four loaded tankers leave Valdez daily. Since the spill, only five have made it out. The Coast Guard has ordered tugboat escorts until the tankers pass the grounded Exxon Valdez. Local harbor pilots are required to accompany the tankers for longer distances than usual.

The Coast Guard said the restrictions would not be lifted until the Exxon Valdez is refloated and moved to a safe anchorage, possibly next week. Workers continued Saturday to pump oil from the crippled tanker onto the Exxon San Francisco.

Biologists walking beaches have counted 520 oiled birds representing 20 species, fish and game officials said. Ten sea otters and 27 oiled birds were taken to Valdez for cleaning, and federal bird experts said more than 1,000 tainted birds — some alive, some dead — had been spotted on a single island. They expected the number to increase dramatically.

names of any signers who are not registered voters.

As it was explained at the March 7 commissioners' meeting, the commissioners are obliged to schedule a referendum if one-tenth of the registered voters petition for such an election. Ten percent of the registered voters of Farmville is approximately 260.

In an interview Friday, Commissioner Marvin Speight said he is in favor of a referendum, even if the petition is not presented.

"I was elected by the people and, if a majority of the people want a council-manager form of government, then that is what we should have," he said. "It's been voted on before and I think it's time to vote on it again. We'll pass a resolution to have a referendum Tuesday night, I feel sure."

Commissioner Joe Kue said he is "definitely in favor of a referendum." He said, if the referendum is set up, he hopes that "people will really study the pros and cons of the issue and vote on the issue, not on personalities."

Kue said he favors a council-manager government "because I'd like to see us be more progressive and I think having a manager would make us more efficient, more like a corporate structure."

"Running a town these days is like running a complex business. And I don't think each commissioner has the time nor the expertise to be fully responsible for the particular department that the committee he chairs heads," Kue said. "I think we'd be better off to act as policymakers and let the manager manage the day-to-day operation of the town.

"I also think the town employees deserve not to have to answer to their department head, the town administrator, five commissioners and a mayor for every action they take."

Heizer voiced similar concerns to those voiced by Kue. "Politicians are oft-times not good managers," he said. "I think what a council should do is be innovative, plan ahead, rather than have to be bogged down with every little thing it takes to run a town. They need to trust somebody trained in that to do that."

By North Carolina statute, once the commissioners call for a referendum, it must be held within 90 days.

Farmville citizens last voted on the issue on May 9, 1969. It was defeated by 18 votes — 692 against and 675 for. The town administrator's job was established on March 2, 1971. Previously the town's top administrator had been a town clerk.

According to Hayman, if the referendum is called and Farmville voters do adopt the council-manager plan, they will have their town join 73 percent of all towns in the state with 1,000 or more population which have adopted the plan. It was first adopted by Hickory and Morganton 76 years ago. Some 98 of the state's 100 counties have the same form of government, the highest percentage of total counties in a state in the United States.

Hayman said that about 75 North Carolina towns with smaller populations than Farmville have managers. All North Carolina cities and towns with more than 10,000 people have managers. The only other incorporated town in this area that has the mayor-commissioner form of government is Williamston.

Pirates Whip Duke; Michigan Wins By 2

Injuries Hurt Blue Devils

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SEATTLE — Andrew Gaze scored 20 points and Seton Hall overcame an 18-point deficit with a tremendous second-half defensive effort on Duke's Danny Ferry Saturday to advance to the NCAA championship game with a 95-78 victory over the Blue Devils.

The Final Four appearance was the first for Seton Hall, while Duke was in the national semifinals for the third time in four years — each without a national championship. It was the Blue Devils' seventh Final Four failure — all since 1963.

Seton Hall, 31-6, will meet the winner of Saturday's later game between Big Ten rivals Illinois and Michigan.

Duke led 26-8 when Seton Hall coach P.J. Carlesimo called his second timeout of the game with 8:47 left in the first half.

The Pirates had made just two of 14 shots from the field and had turned the ball over seven times.

Whatever Carlesimo said to his team turned the game around for the rest of the first half and his halftime defensive strategy changed Ferry's contribution to Duke drastically.

Ferry had 21 points in the first half on 8-for-13 shooting. He finished with 34 and made just five of 16 in the second half while mising the front end of two 1-and-1s as every player on Seton Hall over 6-foot-7 had a chance to cover him in the final 20 minutes.

Seton Hall had managed to get Duke's halftime lead to 38-33 as its shooting improved drastically and the turnovers were eliminated. The Blue Devils, 28-8, scored six of the first eight points in the second half and then it was all Seton Hall.

A 15-4 run got Seton Hall's its first lead of the game, 50-49 with 13:56 to play, on a drive by Michael Cooper.

There would be one more Duke lead and one more tie and then Seton Hall took off behind the tough inside play of reserves Anthony Avent, Cooper and Frantz Volcy.

Gaze, the Australian Olympic star, finally got into the offensive flow for the Pirates as he nailed consecutive 3-pointers for a 73-64 lead with 8:26 to play. Teammate Daryll Walker added 19.

Ferry continued to miss shots that seemed forced and he was able to get little help from the other front court players as Christian Laettner fouled out with 9:26 to play and Alaa Abdelnaby was hit with his fourth foul less than five minutes into the second half.

Robert Brickey, Duke's starting small forward, suffered a bruised thigh in the first half and was limited to just three minutes in the first half and two brief appearances in the second half.

The manpower problem up front gave Seton Hall a 23-7 rebounding edge at one point in the second half and the Pirates made 22 of 31 shots from the field in the final 20 minutes while Duke shot 15-for-43.

Gerald Greene had 17 and Morton 13 for the Pirates.

Laettner and Phil Henderson each had 13 for Duke, Henderson on just 4-for-16 shooting.

Higgins' Score Secures Win

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SEATTLE — The lead changed hands 33 times, but the biggest change of all was for Michigan. The Wolverines finally beat Illinois, and are headed for college basketball's national championship game.

The victory sends Michigan, playing in its first Final Four since 1976, into the final against Seton Hall on Monday night.

The victory was sealed when Glen Rice, Michigan's hottest hand during the tournament, intercepted a length-of-the-court inbounds pass by Illinois' Steve Bardo as time ran out.

"You got a tough, one second," Fisher said in the huddle during the last time out. "You had since Oct. 15 to get to this point. Don't let up now."

Rice led the Wolverines with 28 points, three less that his tournament average, in a game that was so close in almost every statistical category that the only difference was the final score.

Illinois, ranked third in the nation at season's end, had the speed. Michigan, ranked 10th, had the size. In two previous Big Ten Conference meetings this season, speed won.

This time, Michigan used a combination of its size advantage, the scoring of Rice, the ball-handling of Rumeal Robinson and the 16 rebounds of center Loy Vaught to prevail.

"We worked on keeping them off the boards. That's why we won," Rice said.

They also beat Illinois at its own game.

The Illini led the nation in offensive rebounding this season, but it was Higgins' rebound off Terry Mills' miss that set up the winning basket. Michigan beat Illinois 17-13 on the offensive boards.

"I thought it was going in," Higgins said of Mills' shot, "but coach always told me that those shots always come off on my side of the court.

The lead changed 17 times in the first half, which wound up with Michigan holding a 39-38 lead. The biggest lead of the game was eight points, 16-8, on two free throws by Illinois' Nick Anderson just 5½ minutes into the game.

Michigan outscored Illinois 12-6 to start the second half, getting six of those points from the 6-foot-10 Mills, who is three inches taller than any of Illinois' starters. That run gave the Wolverines a 51-44 lead with 15:35 left.

Illinois, however, scored 10 of the next 12 points, getting four from Lowell Hamilton, to lead 54-53 with 11:26 to play. No more than four points separated the two teams the rest of the way.

For Michigan's interim coach, Steve Fisher, it was the fifth straight victory in an undefeated coaching career that began in this tournament. For Illinois' Lou Henson, whose career record is 535-249, it must have been a major disappointment.

Henson had taken Illinois into the tournament for seven straight years

Pirates Sweep Patriots

Gast Aids In Opener With Seventh-Inning Homer

By Woody Peele
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

John Gast gave East Carolina new life in the bottom of the seventh inning with a home run in the first game of a Colonial Athletic Association doubleheader against George Mason Saturday afternoon at Harrington Field and the Pirates went on to sweep the twinbill.

Gast's homer tied it at 3-3, and the Pirates later scored an unearned run in the frame to pull out a 4-3 victory. Then, in the second game, the Pirates rolled to a 4-1 win, extending their winning streak to nine in a row.

The victory was also Coach Gary Overton's 150th in his five-year career at East Carolina.

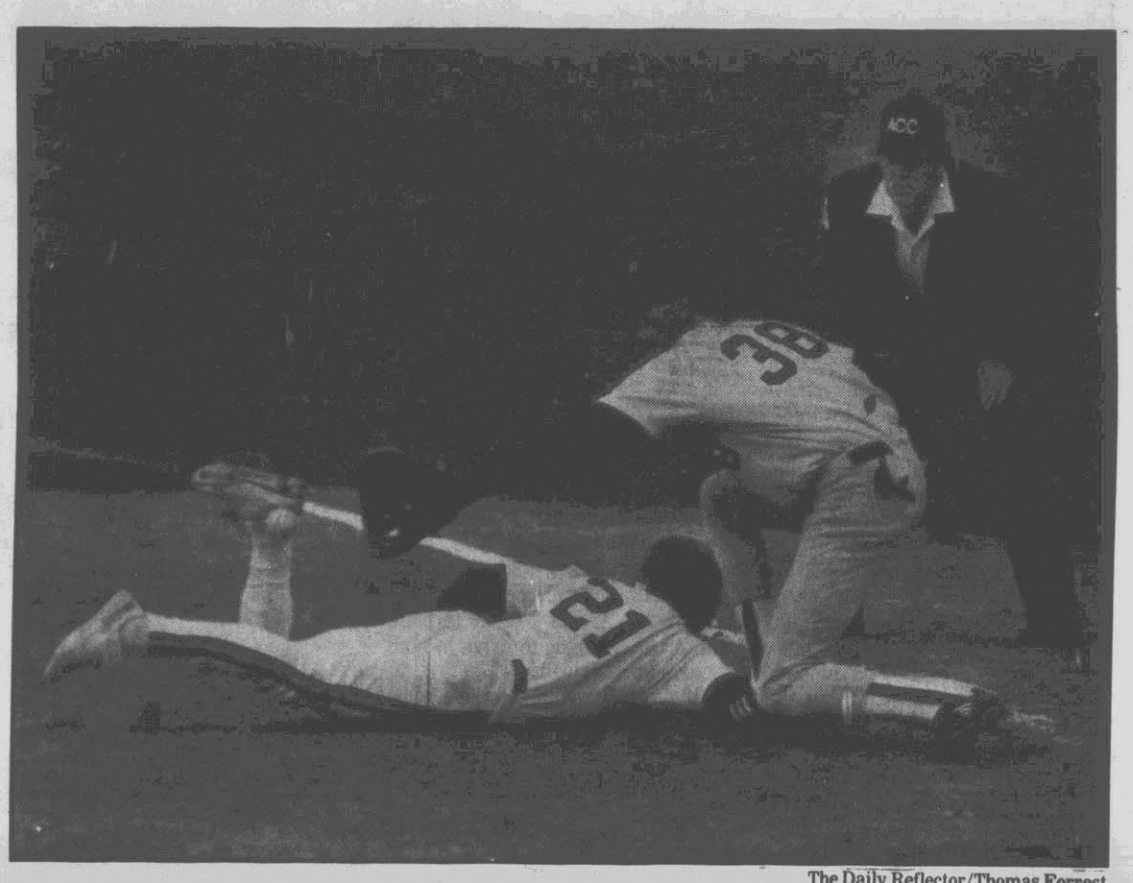

"That doesn't mean that much," Overton said. "But the nine in a row is. We've been playing very well and doing the right things at the right time to win. Today, we played East Carolina-style baseball, manufacturing runs and finding the way to win."

The Pirates appeared to struggle in the opening game against GMU hurler Corey Gesell in the opener, trailing much of the game. But after Gast's homer that led off the inning, the Pirates came back to score with two out and two on when a grounder to short was misplayed.

"There's no question Gast's homer got us back in the game," Overton said.

"He had me 2-0 and then got me to foul off an inside pitch," Gast, a freshman transfer from Auburn said. "A lot of times, in a situation like that, the pitcher thinks he has you where he wants you. But I think that's the best time for me. He came with another inside pitch and I got it. Then, it was just a question of whether the wind would keep it in. I felt good when I hit it, but I lost it

ECU Gridders Hold First Scrimmage

East Carolina's new football coach got his first look at his Pirates in a scrimmage Saturday afternoon, running the team through a 2½ hour, 117-play workout in Ficklen Stadium.

And, he appeared to be pleased with what he saw in this first scrimmage.

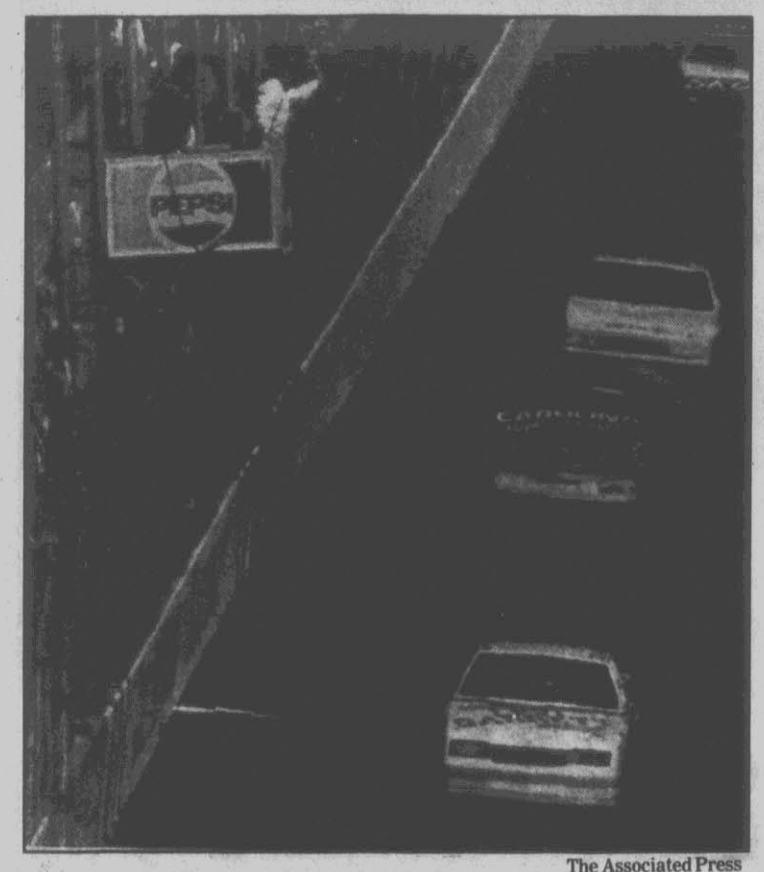

"What pleased me," Lewis said, "was that we accomplished what we set out to do. We took a look at our kicking game, broke it down into phases, and then went into first and 10 situations, offensively trying to make a first down in three plays, and then defensively trying to stop the offense in three plays. Then, we tried sustaining drives with the offense making three first downs in a row and we concluded the scrimmage with third down situations."

The leading ground gainers for the Pirates in the scrimmage were senior tailbacks Willie Lewis and Denell Harper. Lewis had 15 carries for 81 yards while Harper carried 14 times for 72 yards. Lewis also caught a screen pass for 22 yards.

"I thought the offense became consistant early," Lewis said. "Later in the scrimmage the defense began to get consistent and forced some big turnovers."

Sophomore Joe Bright had a big day for the Pirate defense with three tackles for loss, including two sacks for minus 15 yards. Defensive backs Ed Brogdon, Brian McPhatter and

Mast Hoping For TranSouth Win

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

DARLINGTON, S.C. — Rick Mast doesn't mind being a rookie, once.

Mast, who will start Sunday's TranSouth 500 in the 24th position after leading Friday's second-day qualifying, has had to go through the unusual Darlington Raceway procedure for first-year drivers for the second straight year because of a technicality.

Last September, substituting for injured Buddy Baker, Mast led second-day qualifying, started 22nd and finished 32nd in the Southern 500 on Darlington's 1.366-mile oval.

Since the 32-year-old driver from Palmyra, Va., has opted to run for NASCAR's Winston Cup Rookie of the Year in 1989, he still is considered a Darlington rookie this weekend.

That means Mast, along with six other Darlington rookies, had to take a driving test Friday under the supervision of several veteran drivers and Winston Cup Director Dick Beaty

"I've passed the rookie test twice now," Mast said. "I really don't know why it was necessary for me to take it again, but they (NASCAR) said it wouldn't be fair to the other rookies if I didn't take it."

Once he got that behind him, Mast, who leads Larry Pearson in the tight rookie race, 43-42, qualified for Sunday's race at a solid 156.601 mph.

That was good enough to move into the 41-car lineup behind Phil Parsons, Dave Marcis and Michael Waltrip, all of whom stood on their first-day speeds.

"That's pretty good considering I had the car almost sideways on both ends of the track," Mast said. "The track's a lot slower than it was (Thursday), and we didn't think we had a shot at being the fastest in the second-round qualifying, so we loosened the car up a little bit more than we should have.

"It was my decision, and I think we went just a little bit too much. But we're still a lot better off than we were (Thursday)."

Mast, driving a Chevrolet Monte Carlo for Travis Carter, has qualified for all five races this season. His best showing was in the season-opener at Daytona Beach, where he qualified 11th and finished sixth.

Fellow Darlington rookies Dick Trickle (155.911) and Ben Hess (155.832) were next in Friday's time trials.

Thirteen drivers — all of whom made the starting field — stood on their first-day speeds. That included Richard Petty, whose string of 513 consecutive starts ended last weekend when he failed to qualify for a race at Richmond, Va.

The $499,547 race, which is scheduled to start at 1 p.m. EDT, will be televised live by ESPN.

Dale Earnhardt, who leads the Winston Cup standings — by 64 points over Alan Kulwicki — said, "There's four Fords starting up front, but we've got four Chevrolets right behind them.

Bodine Takes Flag In Country Squire 200

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

DARLINGTON, S.C. — Geoff Bodine won the Country Squire Homes 200 Busch Grand National stock car race for the second straight year, overpowering the rest of the 42-car field Saturday at Darlington Raceway.

Bodine, who started from the pole for the third time in a row and fourth in the last five Grand National races on the 1.366-mile oval, took the lead for good on lap 111 of the 147-lap, 200-mile event.

Mark Martin, giving a V-6 powered Ford its highest finish ever in the Grand National division, wound up second, finishing 0.37-seconds behind Bodine's Chevrolet.

The winner averaged 118.681 mph in the race slowed by eight caution periods covering 30 laps.

Bodine led the first 30 laps before pit stops shuffled the order. He then remained within sight of the leaders before regaining control in the final third of the race.

Before retaking the lead, Bodine survived a gamble on lap 106.

In Grand National racing, teams are allowed to change only two tires during a caution period. Bodine chose to pit again moments after the green flag waved following the fourth caution period of the race in order to change his other two tires.

"We took some chances," Bodine said. "We pitted for those tires because our left-side tires were just wore out. Those four fresh tires made the difference. We got up to the front and stayed there."

Harry Gant was third, followed by Phil Parsons, Rick Wilson, Dale Earnhardt, Davey Allison and Ken Schrader.

The eight top finishers also will drive in Sunday's TranSouth 500 NASCAR Winston Cup race, with Martin starting from the pole.

There were no serious accidents and no injuries reported. Most of the caution flags were brought out by harmless spins, cars scraping the concrete walls or debris on the track.

Sanders Willing To Take NFL To Court

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

DENVER — Citing his school's recent probation and a desire to help his family financially, Heisman Trophy winner Barry Sanders said Saturday he is prepared to challenge the NFL in court, if necessary, in order to turn pro.

Sanders, a junior running back from Oklahoma State, notified the NFL on Thursday that he wants to become eligible for this year's draft. His petition sets up a possible test of the league's restrictions against drafting underclassmen.

Sanders said Saturday he has signed contracts with sports agents David Ware of Atlanta and Lamont Smith of Denver. As a result, OSU officials have declared him ineligible for 1989.

"For the past three months, I have been giving a great deal of thought to my future as a football player," Sanders said at a news conference. "I've talked with my parents, Coach (Pat) Jones and other OSU representatives.

"I have come to the conclusion that it would be in my best interests and in the best interests of my family to renounce my last year of college eligibility and pursue a career in professional football.

"This decision in based, in part, on the financial hardship that my family and I are presently faced with, and the opportunity to relieve some of the pressure. I come from a family of 11 children, and I feel a duty to try to assist them.

"The probation OSU is faced with the next few years also played a part in my decision."

The January the NCAA banned OSU from bowl games for three years and from television appearances for two, citing recruiting violations.

Sanders also said the pressures of being a Heisman candidate "made it impossible for me to concentrate on my studies. In fact, I'm still working on first semester finals. My father advised me that my days of running the football are limited, and I can always go back to school. I intend to do that, and at least get a bachelor's degree in business administration."

In an effort to underscore his financial hardships, Sanders noted he was nearly three hours late to the news conference because the clutch on his 1980 automobile went out while he was driving to the airport in Oklahoma City Saturday morning.

Ware said he and Sanders were aware of the legal obstacles, but added that Sanders "is not trying to create any new rules. This is not going to open any floodgates. It would be a pernicious system which wouldn't allow someone to help his family. The NFL's position about not drafting underclassmen is legally indefensible. There's no legal reason to keep him out, and there's no moral or other reason.

"Barry is not a confrontational person. We would like to resolve this matter amicably. But if we have to, we'll litigate."

Ware said the NFL office is required to respond to the petition within 15 days, but that he had requested a response by Monday.

A true junior who has not redshirted, Sanders is ineligible for either the regular or supplemental drafts without a special exemption from NFL commissioner Pete Rozelle.

An NFL spokesman said Rozelle has granted about six of those exemptions a year for the past 20 years, mostly to players who were never drafted. Most recently, Pitt's Craig Heyward was allowed to enter the draft with a year of eligibility remaining. In Heyward's case and others, Rozelle has cited the possibility that if he turned down the request, it might be challenged in court.

The regular NFL draft is April 23-24, and the supplemental drafts are in July and September.

Seton Hall...

Final Four experience about to dominate Seton Hall's nerves in its first appearance in the national semifinals.

The first point of the game — a free throw by Duke's Phil Henderson — took 1:51 to reach the scoreboard and the game's first field goal — a side jumper by Ferry — wasn't until 2:17 had elapsed.

Both teams made just one of their first seven shots from the field as Duke led 9-4.

Then Ferry took over as he scored 12 of the Blue Devils' next 17 points as they took a 26-8 lead with 8:55 to play in the first half.

Seton Hall was 2-for-14 from the field with seven turnovers and Carlesimo was forced to use the second timeout.

The Pirates outscored Duke 25-12 over the remainder of the half without giving the ball away again as Walker scored eight points while the shooting leveled off on both sides.

Gaze's baseline drive with 1:58 left in the half brought the Pirates within three and both teams were now 11-for-27 from the field.

But Ferry hit a long jumper with 1:22 left for the final points of the first half and Duke led 38-33 at halftime.

Ferry, Duke's leading scorer on the season, had 21 in the opening half, while Morton, the Pirates' top scorer all year, did not score in the first half as he was limited to nine minutes with three personal fouls.

Trail Blazers Slip Past Hornets In OT, 125-121

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHARLOTTE — Clyde Drexler's three-point play with 1:13 left in overtime put Portland ahead for good and the Trail Blazers held on to defeat the Charlotte Hornets 125-121 Saturday night.

The Hornets had taken their first lead since the first quarter on Robert Reid's steal and layup with 1:29 left before Drexler's play gave Portland the lead.

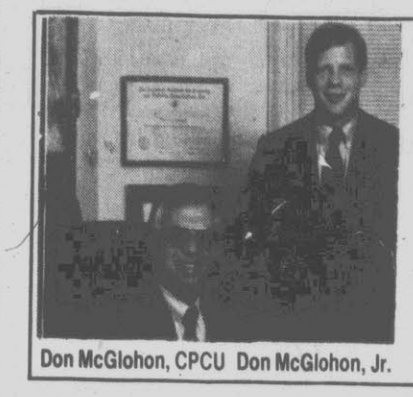

Drexler's two free throws with six seconds remaining made the score 122-119 and sealed the victory for the Blazers, who broke a six-game losing streak and moved one game ahead of idle Dallas in the race for the eighth and final playoff berth in the NBA's Western Conference.

Drexler scored 36 points, Kevin Duckworth added 30 and Jerome Kersey 21 for Portland. Charlotte suffered its fifth consecutive setback despite Kelly Tripucka's 38 and 23 by Reid, who didn't start.

Reid's 3-point shot with 20 seconds remaining in regulation sent the game into overtime 108-108 and completed the Hornets' comeback from a 12-point fourth-quarter deficit.

Drexler was whistled for a technical foul with 1:47 left in the fourth period while Tripucka was between foul shots. Tripucka hit all three free throws to pull the Hornets within 105-103.

Muggsy Bogues hit a layup on a fast break to tie the score with 50 seconds left. Drexler made a pair of free throws and Terry Porter one of two to give Portland a 108-105 lead before Reid's shot sent the game into overtime.

Pirates Win Two CAA Games...

The ball fell just out of reach of the Patriot left fielder to knot it at 3-3.

The next two Pirates went down in order before Gesell walked Mike Andrews, his first walk of the game. David Ritchie then beat out a bunt down the third base line and John Thomas hit a grounder to short — which looked like an easy play for the force of Ritchie at second.

But the ball went through the fielder as Andrews raced on home for the winning run.

East Carolina struck first in the game, scoring a run in the second. Calvin Brown hit a triple to right — his first three-bagger as a Pirate — to open the frame. Gast followed with a double to right center, but was thrown out after over-running the base. Brown easily scored on the play.

Mason then pushed over two in the top of the third. With one away, Jamie Miracle singled and stole second. He scored on Keith Rice's single to left. Kyle Settle followed with a double to left, with Rice scoring when the ball was bobbled in the outfield.

The Pirates tied it at 2-2 with one in the bottom of the inning. Ritchie doubled and scored on a hit by Kevin Riggs.

Mason pushed over its third run to regain the lead in the fourth. Chris Lawrence doubled to right and was sacrificed up. He scored on Miracle's grounder to short.

But then, the Pirates rallied for the win.

John White picked up the victory in relief of starter Tim Langdon. It was White's third straight win in relief in as many games, upping him to 4-0 on the year.

Rice led the Mason hitting with three while Settle added two. Gast and Ritchie each had two for the Pirates.

The second game started off with another GMU lead — and an oddity. Lawrence opened the game with a single to right, then stole second. With one out, Settle got a hit to put runners on the corners. Kevin Kobylinski then grounded to second, forcing Settle, but the Pirates didn't throw on to first as Lawrence scored. Kobylinski, however, after touching first, apparently lost count of the outs and trotted back to the dugout and was declared out for abandoning his base.

It was the only run allowed by Jake Jacobs, who went the distance for the Pirates to claim the win. He gave up only three more hits while walking three and striking out nine.

The Pirates struck for the lead in the second. With one down, Gast singled and Steve Godin followed with a double to right center. After a second out, Andrews came through with a clutch single to drive in both runners for a 2-1 lead.

"It was a curve ball on the outside of the plate," Andrews said. "With two strikes, I was looking for something on the outside and I just got hold of it."

The Pirates picked up another run in the fifth. Gast walked and stole both second and third. With two away, Chris Cauble also walked and the two pulled the double steal, with Gast scoring for a 3-1 lead.

The final run came in the sixth. Ritchie singled and raced to third when a pickoff attempt was thrown away. He scored on a hit by John Adams.

"I have to give a lot of credit to our pitchers," Overton said. "Coach (Billy) Best has done an outstanding job of handling out pitchers and our defense is playing well too. And I've been pleased with the offense all year long."

Mason's Bill Brown said he felt the best team won on the day. "They did what they had to to win. They clutched up when they had to."

Brown didn't feel that the fatal error in the first game carried over into the second. "Errors are a part of the game. The timing of it hurts somethings, but you have to jump back up and play the game and I thought we did. We played well, but we just got beat."

Brown said he was fairly happy with his pitching on the day. "It just seems like everything we do wrong gets magnified because we're struggling."

Settle again had two hits for Mason, while Thomas had two to lead the Pirates.

East Carolina climbs to 19-2 with the win, 7-1 in the CAA. Mason drops to 4-10, 0-5.

The two teams meet again Sunday at Harrington Field at 1 p.m. in a single game.

Heath, Sheridan Lead Tigers To 4-2 Win

Yankees Clip Mets With Four-Run Seventh; Reds, Blue Jays Also Take Wins

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WINTER HAVEN, Fla. — Mike Heath and Pat Sheridan hit solo homers and the Detroit Tigers beat the Boston Red Sox 4-2 Saturday.

Jeff Robinson, Charles Hudson and minor leaguer Randy Bockus combined on a five-hitter.

The Tigers scored three runs on six hits and three walks in five innings off Boston starter Wes Gardner.

Rob Murphy, Bob Stanley and Lee Smith each pitched a shutout inning before Sheridan hit his second spring homer off Smith with one out in the ninth.

Detroit starter Jeff Robinson pitched two hitless innings before giving way to Hudson, who allowed an RBI single by Marty Barrett in the third and Jim Rice's run-scoring double on a fly ball which center fielder Kenny Williams lost in the sun in the fourth.

Hudson struck out Rice with the bases loaded to end the fifth, then gave way to Bockus.

NEW YORK — Tom Brookens' run-scoring single capped a four-run rally in the seventh inning off Roger McDowell Saturday as the New York Yankees beat the New York Mets 4-3 before 52,119 at Yankee Stadium.

It was the first meeting in New York between the two clubs since April 21, 1983, when the Yankees beat the Mets 4-1 in the final Mayor's Trophy game.

The Mets and Yankees conclude their spring training schedule with a game at Shea Stadium on Sunday.

Ron Darling started for the Mets and allowed no hits in five innings. Against Atlanta last Tuesday, he gave up one hit in seven innings.

Trailing 3-0, the Yankees loaded the bases in the seventh with one out. After McDowell struck out Randy Velarde, Roberto Kelly singled in two runs. Don Aase relieved McDowell and Bernie Williams tied the score with an infield hit off the pitcher's glove.

Brookens then put the Yankees ahead with a hard single to left, scoring Kelly.

McDowell, 1-5, has allowed 30 hits and 16 earned runs in 14 1-3 innings this spring.

With one out in the first, Gregg Jefferies doubled off Dave LaPoint and one out later, Darryl Strawberry hit his fifth homer of the spring, a drive that just missed landing in the upper deck in right.

LaPoint pitched five innings for the Yankees and allowed four hits.

Jefferies led off the sixth with his third double of the game and scored on Kevin McReynolds' two-out double. Jefferies had only two doubles in 67 at-bats in Florida.

Reds.....4
Cardinals.....0

LOUISVILLE, Ky. — Jose Rijo and four relievers combined on a four-hitter Saturday and the Cincinnati Reds beat the St. Louis Cardinals 4-0.

Rijo pitched four innings, allowing three hits. Cris Carpenter took the loss despite allowing just one unearned run in five innings.

The Reds scored their first run in the fifth without a hit. Jeff Reed walked, moved to second on a walk and to third on an infield out. He scored when catcher Tony Pena threw wildly to second trying to catch Barry Larkin stealing.

A triple by Dave Collins started a two-run sixth. Collins scored on a single by Paul O'Neill, who was later caught stealing. Todd Benzinger singled and scored on a triple by Herm Winningham.

Blue Jays.....5
Phillies.....1

CLEARWATER, Fla. — Rob Ducey drove in three runs, two on a bases-loaded single during a four-run ninth inning as the Toronto Blue Jays beat the Philadelphia Phillies 5-1 Saturday.

Ducey, who had homered in the second off Ontiveros, raised his spring average to .439 with his go-ahead single. Larry McWilliams, 0-2, then balked home another run. Duane Ward, 1-0, got the victory.

Orioles.....6
Pirates.....3

WASHINGTON — Rookie Bob Milacki pitched three hitless innings and Phil Bradley and Rick Schu each hit two-run homers Saturday as the Baltimore Orioles beat the Pittsburgh Pirates 6-3.

Milacki, scheduled to be the Orioles' third starter, finished the spring with a streak of 10 shutout innings.

Brady Anderson opened the game with a triple and scored when Bradley followed with a home run off John Smiley. The Orioles got another run in the second on a sacrifice fly by Rene Gonzales and Bob Melvin's RBI single made it 4-0 in the fourth.

Bobby Bonilla, Sid Bream and Junior Ortiz homered for the Pirates.

Braves.....5
Indians.....2

GREENVILLE, S.C. — Ron Gant went 3-for-3 with two doubles Saturday and the Atlanta Braves beat the Cleveland Indians 5-2.

It was the first major league exhibition game in Greenville since 1966 when Baltimore played the New York Mets. An overflow crowd of 9,559 packed the 7,028-seat stadium.

Gant doubled with one out in the second inning and scored the game's first run on a single by Geronimo Berroa. Berroa advanced to second on a balk by Bud Black, 3-1, and scored on Bruce Benedict's single.

Jeff Blauser led off the third inning with a home run, and the consecutive doubles by Dale Murphy and Gant increased the Braves' lead to 4-0.

Athletics.....3
Giants.....2

OAKLAND, Calif. — Dave Henderson hit a two-run homer in the eighth inning and the Oakland Athletics beat the San Francisco Giants 3-2 in exhibition baseball Saturday.

Dennis Eckersley, 1-0, faced eight batters, allowing three hits and striking out four for the victory. Jeff Brantley, 0-1, took the loss.

Muster Won't Get Chance Against Lendl

The Associated Press

Ivan Lendl fires a shot back in semi-final action

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

KEY BISCAYNE, Fla. — Thomas Muster was still celebrating a thrilling five-set victory over Yannick Noah when a car wreck knocked him out of Sunday's finals of the International Players Championships.

Tournament officials Saturday awarded the title to the other finalist, Ivan Lendl.

Muster, 21, suffered damage to both major ligaments in his left knee from the accident, which occurred less than two hours after he rallied from a two-set deficit Friday night to beat Noah.

"It was a great moment for us," said Muster's coach, Ronnie Lietgeb. "Unfortunately it was a short celebration."

Muster, ranked 14th in the world, planned to return home to Austria late Saturday for major reconstruction surgery, said Dr. Charles Virgin, who diagnosed the injury.

"I am shocked about what has happened," Muster said. "My first thought was that there would be no more tennis, but it doesn't seem that serious now. ... I am still strong and young, and there is a good chance to come back."

Sunday's finals were scheduled to be televised to 40 countries. The tournament instead will hold an exhibition match between Lendl and Jakob Hlasek, who lost to Noah in the fourth round. The women's doubles finals and the wheelchair tennis exhibition are also scheduled.

Muster, Lietgeb and two others had stopped for sandwiches downtown when the accident happened. Muster was getting something out of the trunk of a car when it was struck head-on by another car, tournament security official Bob Brandes said. The second car, which was driving on the wrong side of the street, pushed the parked car into Muster's leg and knocked him back about 15 feet.

"He tried to stand up and he couldn't," said Lietgeb. "I was already very scared. I told him to lie down."

The driver of the car that caused the crash tried to flee but was arrested, Brandes said. Police said the driver's name and the status of possible charges were unavailable.

Virgin performed surgery on Muster to confirm the extent of the knee injury. The doctor, former team physician for the Miami Dolphins, said Muster probably will undergo surgery in Austria in five to seven days and faces six to nine months of rehabilitation.

"There's a reasonable chance he'll be back with a full recovery," Virgin said.

Lietgeb was unhurt. Two other people with him and Muster were treated at a hospital for injuries, Brandes said. They were Wolfgang Ritschke, an Austrian photographer, and Michelle Boyd, a tournament volunteer who was driving their car.

Muster's tennis bag and rackets wound up under the car's left rear tire, and he realized the accident could have been more serious.

"I was so shocked and scared," Muster said. "But I thought, 'Thank God I'm alive.'"

Lietgeb said: "We said we are celebrating his birthday on the first of April in the future."

Muster earned his first finals berth in a two-week tournament by beating Noah, 5-7, 3-6, 6-3, 6-3, 6-2. The victory guaranteed the biggest paycheck of his career — $55,875 for second place.

Lendl, ranked No. 1, beat Kevin Curren in Friday's other semifinals match.

"I was very surprised to hear what happened, and I feel very sorry for Thomas," Lendl said in a statement. "I hope he gets well very soon."

Lendl, who won the tournament in 1986, became its first two-time champion. He won every set in his six matches and collects $111,750.

A walkover in the finals of a men's two-week tournament occurred at least once before — at Wimbledon in 1931.

Fans with tickets for Sunday's finals won't receive refunds, tournament chairman Butch Buchholz said.

"We feel the tournament is providing a full day of tennis for the fans," Buchholz said.

"It's a sad situation. We're thankful Thomas is OK. That's the most important thing. You just can't anticipate things like this. The odds of this are millions to one or more."

Donald Leads Independent By Two

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

THE WOODLANDS, Texas — Mike Donald already has experienced the ultimate pressure in his nine years on the PGA Tour.

So he won't be nervous Sunday when he tees off with a two-shot lead in the final round of the $800,000 Independent Insurance Agent Open.

"In last year's Disney, I had to birdie eight of the last 10 holes just to save my card," Donald said. "They were ready to tell me to go find another job.

"I won't feel any more pressure than that tomorrow (Sunday)."

Donald shot a third-round, 2-over-par 74 Saturday that included five bogeys, but still held a 2-shot lead over three players, including Seve Ballesteros, who also had bogey problems on the front nine before playing a smooth back side.

Donald said the wind was his ally in helping him stay ahead of the field. "Last year, I was 8-under-par going into Saturday and everybody blew right past me," Donald said. "But the wind was so unpredictable."

Donald had overcome four bogeys on the front nine when he hit his tee shot in the rough on No. 17, ranked the toughest hole on the course.

He chipped out onto the fairway and made bogey.

"I thought I was going to steal a par, but I was happy to come away with a bogey," Donald said.

Donald never has won a PGA event. He's tied for second place twice, in the Hawaiian Open and the Players' Championship.

Ballesteros said he did his best work on the greens.

"My best club today was my putter," he said. "The greens were fine. I have to get the ball closer to the hole.

"I have to play consistent. I have to keep the ball more in play. Tomorrow (Sunday), I'll have to hit the tee shot cloesr than today."

Donald started the day at 10-under-par with a four-shot lead over Ballesteros. His problems started early when he bogeyed two of the first three holes, and he reached the 54-hole mark with a 208.

Ballesteroos, after a par 72 Saturday, was tied with John Inman and Lance Ten Broeck.

Ballesteros suffered successive bogeys at Nos. 8 and 9 but recovered played a steady back nine to stay in contention.

Inman, who had a second-round 75, got back into contention with a 66. Broeck shot a 68.

Players again complained of the unpredictable winds that swished over the par 72, 7,045-yard TPC course.

Donald had 67s in each of the first two rounds.

He birdied the par-5, 515-yard No. 1 hole Saturday, but ran into trouble at No. 2, where he bogeyed for the second straight day. Donald missed a 3-foot par putt on the hole Friday.

Donald also bogeyed the par 3 No. 3 hole and his troubles returned with bogeys at Nos. 8 and 9.

Donald ran in birdies at Nos. 12 and 15 but he missed the fairway with his tee shot on 17 and picked up his fifth bogey of the day.

Ballesteros went to seven under par for the tournament on the second hole.

He missed a chance to pull within one shot of the lead when he bogeyed No. 8. He also bogeyed No. 9 to stay two shots behind.

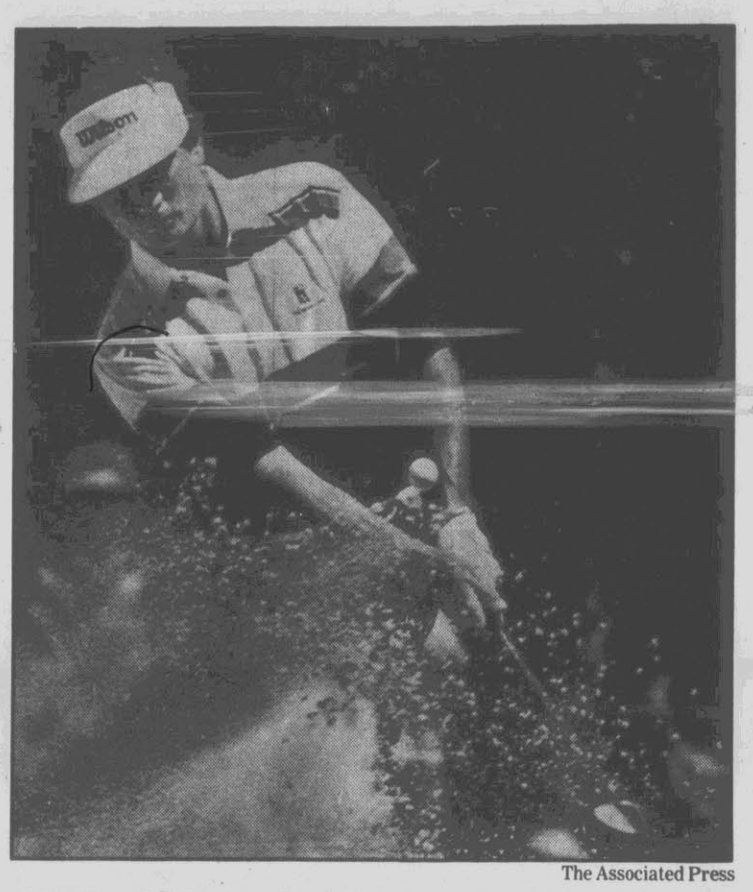

Inman birdied four holes on the front nine to charge into contention and had a birdie on No. 11.

Inman's round could have been even better had he not lipped out would-be birdie putts of 12 feet on No. 12 and four feet on No. 13.

Defending champion Curtis Strange also made the turn at 5-under-par for the tournament with two birdies and a double bogey on the front nine. He finished with a 72 for a 211 total.

Strange went 6-under-par with a birdie at No. 3, but was slowed by a double bogey at the par 4, 413-yard No. 4. Strange returned to even par for the round with a birdie at No. 9.

Strange birdied No. 11 and bogeyed No. 12, then parred the rest of the round.

Inkster Holds To Five-Shot Lead In Dinah Shore Event

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RANCHO MIRAGE, Calif. — After a poor start this year, Juli Inskter has the Dinah Shore tournament, the LPGA's first major of 1989, in her grasp. She's determined not to let it get away.

"The problem with a five-shot lead is that the tournament is mine to win or lose," Inkster said Saturday after shooting a 1-over-par 73 — but increasing her lead by a stroke.

"Everybody is shooting at me now and I have no one to shoot at," said Inkster, who was at 8-under 208 after 54 holes at the Mission Hills Country Club. "I have to be really careful to focus on my game, not worry about what anybody else is doing."

LPGA Hall of Famer JoAnne Carner, Jody Rosenthal and Lynn Adams were tied for second at 213.

Carner stayed in contention with her third consecutive 71. She has won 42 tournaments — but a victory in the Dinah Shore, generally considered the LPGA Tour's most prestigious event, has eluded her.

"It would be the greatest thrill of all to win this one," said the 49-year-old Carner, who's looking for her first victory since 1985.

"I finished second once, back in the early '70s (1973) chasing Mickey Wright."

But Carner, who hit all 18 greens in regulation Saturday but made just one birdie putt, knows those chasing Inkster have their work cut out for them.

"When Juli's putting well like she has been, she's excellent," Carner said.

Inkster, who took command with an opening-round 66 and a second-round 69, said she wouldn't trade places with anyone in the field.

"I'll take where I am," she said with a smile, though admitting she had to avoid getting too cautious in Sunday's final round.

Beth Daniel, who began the day in second, four shots behind Inkster, bogeyed No. 17 and had a double bogey on No. 18 for a 76 and fell seven shots back.

Janet Coles, Danielle Ammaccapane and Tammie Green also finished the third round at 215.

Inkster, 28, won three times last year but is looking for her first victory of 1989 and her second Dinah Shore victory. She won in 1984, her first full year on the LPGA Tour.

Inkster, who has 11 victories and more than $1 million since she joined the tour, got off to a rocky start this year.

Heading into the Dinah Shore, her best previous finish was a tie for 19th, and she had missed the cut at Tucson two weeks ago.

She has credited her putting — and a change to a new putter last week — with her solid play in the Dinah Shore.

First prize in the $500,000 tournament is $80,000.

Tennessee-Auburn III For Title

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TACOMA, Wash. — And now, to decide matters once and for all, Tennessee-Auburn III.

Fierce rivals any time they meet, the two Southeastern Conference teams will be playing for bigger stakes than usual Sunday when they battle for the NCAA women's championship at the Tacoma Dome.

They'll also be settling a personal score because they split two earlier games this year, one in the regular season, the other in the finals of the SEC tournament.

"It puts everything in a head-to-head competition and comes down to execution," Tennessee coach Pat Summitt said Saturday. "They know us, we know them. It's just which team will execute tomorrow."

This will be the first time in the eight years of the NCAA tournament that teams from the same conference have met in the finals.

And while the players and coaches from the two teams know each other and get along, any pretense of friendship will vanish on Sunday.

"I have a fine line of respect for Pat and her program," Auburn coach Joe Ciampi said. "We take some bread once in a while, but not on game day.

"I think the players respect one another. They know who we are and what we're doing. But when the lights come on, it's a totally different respect."

And how, said Tennessee star Bridgette Gordon.

"I respect them," she said, "but when we go on the floor for the national championship, it will be for blood."

Tennessee, 34-2 and ranked No. 1, is appearing in its fourth straight Final Four and seeking its second title in three years. The Lady Volunteers, who beat Louisiana Tech in the 1987 championship game, advanced with a 77-65 victory over fifth-ranked Maryland on Friday night.

Auburn, 32-1 and ranked second, is in the title game for the second year in a row. The Lady Tigers lost to Louisiana Tech 56-54 in last year's finals, but got back at the third-ranked Lady Techsters by defeating them 76-71 in the semifinals Friday night.

In the most recent meeting, Tenneessee beat Auburn 66-51 in the SEC tournament on March 6, ending the Lady Tigers' 28-game winning streak and knocking them out of the No. 1 spot in the rankings. Auburn won the regular-season game 67-59.

Auburn was the aggressor in the first game, but Tenneessee dominated the rematch with its defense, limiting Auburn to 29.6 percent shooting.

"They totally disrupted what we wanted to do," Ciampi said. "They made us rush shots, took away all the rebounding we had and they controlled the tempo."

The key for both in Sunday's game will be to contain the other's inside play.

Tennessee has Gordon, a 6-foot senior who helped the U.S. team win the gold medal at the Seoul Olympics, and 6-4 Sheila Frost. Frost scored 25 points in the semifinal victory over Maryland, while Gordon made her first seven shots and finished with 24 points.

"If we could keep them from getting the ball at all, that would be great," said 6-6 Linda Godby, Auburn's top reserve. "But that's totally impossible. They're two very good players.

"When they get the ball, we just have to play the best defense we can."

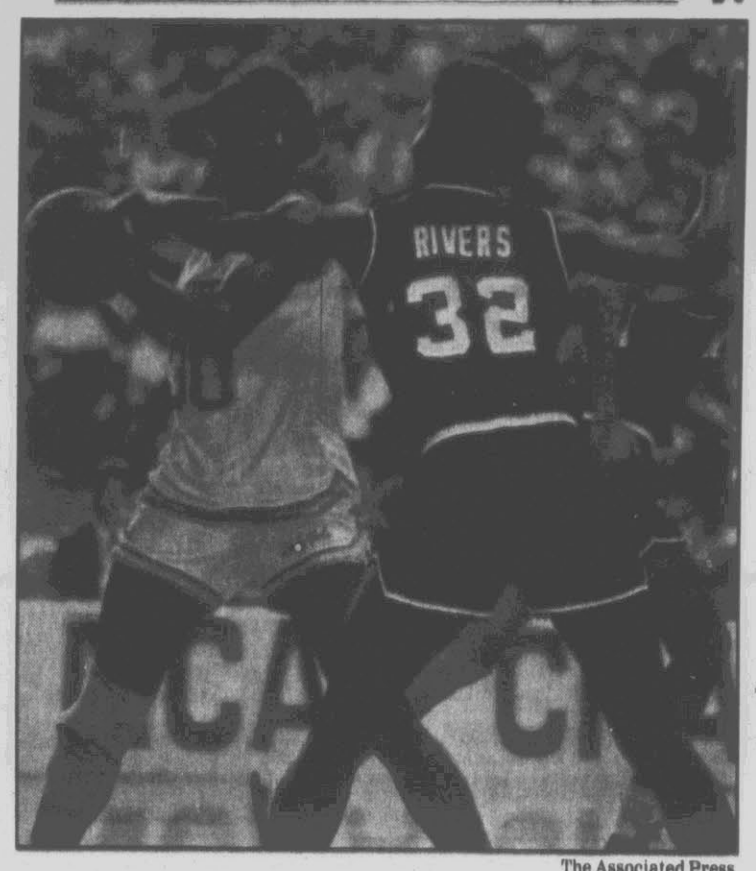

Godby complements 6-3 Vickie Orr, who is Auburn's leading scorer with a 15.9 average. Sometimes Godby relieves Orr, who has tendonitis in her knees and must rest frequently. Other times, they're in the game together.

"I felt last night Auburn did an outstanding job," Summitt said. "I thought they executed well offensively going inside against as strong a front line defense as you'll ever play against.

"Vickie Orr is an outstanding player. Linda Godby to me of late has been supplying Auburn with an additional threat inside that gives them a 1-2 threat at the post."

Godby scored 12 points against Louisiana Tech, including eight in the final 7 minutes to help the Lady Tigers come from behind. She's averaging 11.3 a game.

Summitt, who coached the U.S. women's team to the gold medal in the 1984 Olympics, has a 6-5 record in games with Ciampi.

Sabatini Defeats Evert

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

KEY BISCAYNE, Fla. — Gabriela Sabatini beat Chris Evert at her own game, winning long rallies from the baseline, en route to a 6-1, 4-6, 6-2 victory in Saturday's final of the International Players Championships.

Sabatini earned $110,100, her 10th tournament title, her first this year and her first championship in a two-week tournament. She improved to 6-0 this year in three-set matches.

Evert, who lost the final nine points, is winless this year. Her record fell to 1-4 in finals at this tournament.

Sabatini's topspin forehand pushed Evert several steps behind the baseline. The Argentine won Evert's first three service games and breezed through the opening set.

Evert hit two beautiful backhand cross-court winners to clinch service breaks while winning the final four games of the second set. But she netted backhand shots on break point twice as Sabatini took a 3-0 lead in the final set.

Evert is considered the master at keeping the ball in play, but Sabatini did it better, as typified by a point in the sixth game of the first set. Sabatini chased down two volleys by Evert, who then missed an easy overhead smash.

Sabatini, 18, is 3-6 against Evert, 34, but has won three of the last four matches against her.

Tim Wolter had interceptions in the scrimmage.

"I think the offensive line had done a great job blocking," said Lewis. "All spring I have thought that they had done a good job. The tight ends, today, also did well, catching the ball."

The Pirate offense accounted to 588 yards on the day, which was an average of 5.02 yards per play. In the rushing department, ECU had 60 carries for 285 yards while completing 23 of 57 passes for 303 yards.

Seniors Charlie Libretto and Travis Hunter performed well at quarterback. Libretto was five of nine for 74 yards while Hunter was four of 12 for 54 yards and also had three carries for 27 yards. Sophomore Jeff Blake completed six of 13 passes for 71 yards and Chad Grier had three completions in 11 attempts for 43 yards.

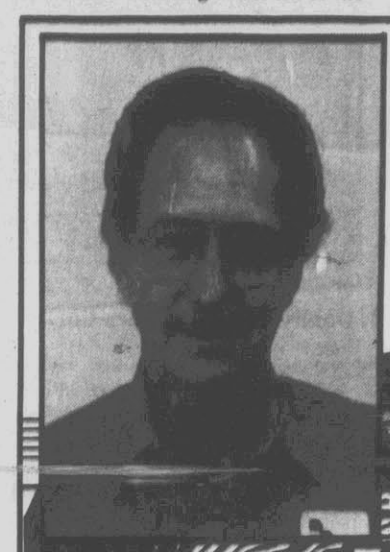

Walter Wilson was the leading receiver with four for 71 yards while John Allen also caught four for 36 yards. Charles Freeman had three catches for 35 yards.

"What we've got to do is continue to teach the fundamentals this spring," Lewis said. "We had to be as sound as we can and stress discipline. We have to teach these kids what it takes to win."

The Pirates practice again Tuesday with spring practice culminating with the annual spring game on April 22 at Ficklen Stadium.

Yanks Deny Mattingly Has Injury

NEW YORK (AP) — The New York Yankees said Saturday that first baseman Don Mattingly does not have a disc problem and may be used as a designated hitter on opening day in Minnesota.

"It's a lower lumbar spasm," Yankees spokesman Harvey Greene said. "Tests indicate no change from (negative) tests taken in the past."

Mattingly said Friday he couldn't bend over to tie his shoes and doubted he would play on opening day.

"When you can't get your shoes on, it's hard to feel like you'll be able to play in four days," Mattingly said.

But after treatment and a day of rest, Mattingly and the Yankees were feeling better.

"We're more optimistic than when he walked out of that door yesterday," Manager Dallas Green said in the Yankees' clubhouse Saturday. "There's no problem with the disc and that's encouraging news. It's day to day, but he'll be OK." When asked if Mattingly would be the DH at Minnesota, Green said, "I will probably go that route."

Mattingly, who also had back problems last season, did not participate in the weekend exhibition series against the New York Mets.

In 1987, Mattingly was sidelined for 18 days with a protruding disc problem.

After hitting .352 in 1986, Mattingly has slipped to .327 and .311 the past two seasons while battling nagging injuries.

The Yankees open their season Tuesday night against the Twins at the Metrodome.

Phillies Lose Samuel, Dieto To Injuries

CLEARWATER, Fla. (AP) — The Philadelphia Phillies placed center fielder Juan Samuel and catcher Tom Nieto on the 15-day disabled list Saturday.

Both players will miss only five games of the regular season, which opens at Chicago against the Cubs Tuesday, because their stays on the disabled list are retroactive to the time of their injuries.

Samuel hasn't recovered from a left hamstring pull incurred two weeks ago. Nieto jammed three fingers on his throwing hand about a week ago.

Manager Nick Leyva got some more bad news Saturday when he learned Floyd Youmans, his starting pitcher Opening Day, was in an automobile accident Friday night. Youmans was driving from St. Petersburg, Fla., to Clearwater, Fla., when his car was struck in the rear. He complained of stiffness in his neck, the Phillies said.

Leyva also said:

— Outfielder Chris James is out with the flu and an ear infection.

— Outfielder Ron Jones is sidelined with a pulled muscle behind the right knee.

— First baseman Ricky Jordan was set to play Saturday in an exhibition game against Toronto despite a jammed right wrist. Leyva wanted to see if Jordan is ready for the opener. Outfielder Von Hayes would play first base if Jordan isn't available Tuesday.

— Outfielder Bob Dernier, who would be Samuel's replacement in center field, has an injury in his lower left leg and did not play Saturday. Leyva said he expected Dernier to be ready for the Cubs game.

— Second baseman Tom Herr returned to the lineup against Toronto after missing two days with the flu.

On the positive side, catcher Steve Lake appeared to have recovered from a right quadricep injury, and the Phillies recalled outfielder-third baseman Joe Redfield from the minor leagues.

Ferry's Third Bid Falls Short

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SEATTLE — Danny Ferry's one-man show for Duke ended in one more disappointment.

Ferry's third failed bid for the NCAA basketball title ended in the sad embrace of teammates shocked by the totality of Seton Hall's 95-78 victory Saturday in the semifinal game.

Some of Ferry's teammates and school officials cried as they hugged him in the locker room, but he shed no tears despite the pain he felt inside.

He had scored 34 points and grabbed 10 rebounds while playing the entire game, but Ferry could find no solace in individual achievement. Nor would he allow his third loss at the Final Four to cloud his career at Duke.

"There's definitely disappointment, but the thing I'll remember more than anything else is the year we've had, and even more so than that, the four years," he said. "You couldn't ask anything more of a university or a basketball program than I got at Duke. It's sad to be going."

Ferry's 21 points in the first half flowed almost effortlessly — five quick jumpers between 15 and 18 feet, a couple of short pops inside 8 feet, one layup after an offensive rebound on a break and five free throws.

He scored 12 of Duke's 14 points during part of the Blue Devils' 20-4 early run to a 26-8 lead.

Yet, there were no spectacular moves, no fancy passes. He didn't leap over defenders so much as he simply raised his long arms and stretched above them, using his two-inch height advantage and 15-pound weight advantage well against Seton Hall's 6-8 Daryll Walker.

Ferry's strength is in economy of movement, not flash. He jumps about as well, or as poorly, as Larry Bird did at Indiana State or Bill Bradley did at Princeton, yet he shares with them the same full-court vision, presence and knack for being in the right place at the right time.

But as the first half came to a close, with Seton Hall down only 38-33, it was becoming clear that Ferry and the Blue Devils were in the wrong place on the wrong day.

Walker kept up the pressure — "I was in his face every time he had the ball, but he made some tough shots," Walker said — and the rest of the Pirates ganged up on Duke.

"Fouls, injuries and all that got us out of our rhythm," Duke coach Mike Krzyzewski said. "But the main thing that got us out of our rhythm was Seton Hall's defense. They were outstanding. They played with composure and they played like a team that has played together a long time and in tough situations."

Ferry tried to carry the burden offensively for Duke in the second half but just wore down. After hitting 8-of-13 in the first half, he finished with 13-of-29.

Signs of Ferry's fatigue began showing midway through the second half as Seton Hall took the lead for the first time. He looked awkward on a 3-point shot — he made only 1-of-5 — then put up a weak shot on a drive and missed a free throw.

His soaked shirt hung out of his shorts and his face looked weary as he draped his arms on Krzyzewski's shoulders during a discussion on the sideline. Ferry simply couldn't do it all this time. He returned and missed a wild shot on a short turnaround and threw up another wild driving shot.

Seton Hall coach P.J. Carlesimo called Ferry "the best player in the country." Many others agree. He was a first team All-America this year and is among a select few who have reached the NCAA Final Four three times.

He is the son of a pro, Bob Ferry, who played 10 years in the NBA and is now vice president and general manager of the Washington Bullets.

After the loss, father and son hugged for several moments. This one hurt, but the son is headed for his own pro career and there probably will be many other big games.

"I thought this would be our year," Ferry said. "I'm very disappointed, but we've all got to go on."

Wolverines Make It To Finals...

before reaching the Final Four, only to lose to a team he had beaten twice during the season. His Fighting Illini were even ranked No. 1 for a week in January, but now that honor will fall to either Michigan or Seton Hall.

"We couldn't get the ball off the boards," Henson said. "We're going 6-4 against 6-8 and 6-9. We looked like a junior high school team out there. Michigan is an awesome team."

Robinson and Higgins each scored 14 for Michigan, now 29-7, while Kenny Battle had 29 and Anderson 17 for the Illini, 31-5.

Michigan shot 47 percent from the field, Illinois 45 percent. Michigan had 45 rebounds, Illinois 39.

When Michigan called time out with 1:36 to play and Illinois ahead 79-78, both teams had hit 17 of 34 shots in the second half.

Mark Hughes created the final lead change of the game, rebounding a miss by Mills, then converting a three-point play to put the Wolverines ahead 81-79 with 1:09 left.

Illinois called time out, and when the Illini came back, Battle hit a short jumper in the lane, tying the score at 81 with 33 seconds left. Robinson took the ball upcourt for Michigan and ran the clock down to the final few seconds before finding Mills in the right corner.

Mills' 3-point attempt was long, Higgins took the rebound, put it in and Michigan was ahead 83-81.

Michigan shot 44 percent from the field in the first half, after making just four of its first 16 shots. That was 14 percentage points poorer than its regular-season mark, which led the nation. Illinois, meanwhile, could not use its speed to full advantage because of Michigan's size. The Wolverines outrebounded Illinois 26-20 in the first half and kept the Illini out of their fastbreak offense.

Illinois scored 10 of the game's first 14 points, and it looked like the Illini had the makings for a repeat of their first two games this season against Michigan — a 96-84 blowout in Champaign, Ill., and an 89-73 rout in Ann Arbor, Mich., on the final day of the regular season.

That's not the way Michigan saw this story unfolding, though. The Wolverines then outscored Illinois 15-8, getting two jumpers from Rice, a 3-pointer from Higgins and two baskets from Robinson for their first lead, 19-18. There was 9:41 left in the first half, and the lead changed 16 more times before it ended with Michigan ahead 39-38.

Illinois fell behind 24-20 after Mills fed first Rice, then Higgins for baskets. But the Illini then outscored Michigan 9-2 for a 29-26 lead with an even five minutes to go before intermission. Kendall Gill had a three-point play in the run.

Neither team led by more than three points after that, and Robinson's driving layup with 44 seconds to play put Michigan ahead at the half.

The Masters: Golf's Black Tie Event

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

AUGUSTA, Ga. — It starts with a nostalgic trip up Magnolia Lane to the bridal-white frame clubhouse of the Augusta National Golf Club. It sizzles a while and then bursts into a splendorous, magnificent spectacle that marks it as the inarguable aristocrat of its sport.

"Masters Week"

Spell it in capital letters and cloak it — for emphasis — with quotation marks. It has been called "The Black Tie Event of Golf." It is more than a mere golf tournament, more than just one of the majors. It is the game's annual ball with an aura all its own — regal and yet gracious, paradoxically as homey as grits and pumpkin pie.

It's a gathering of golf's great and near-great, their friends and admirers. To many, it is an observance — virtually a rite, celebrated for its rich traditions, dignity, hospitality, circumspect operation and resistance to crass commercialism.

"The Masters is a monument to everything that's great in golf," said Jack Nicklaus, a six-time winner.

Poems have been written about it. Writers have strained to put into words the natural beauty of its stage and the raw drama of the show.

The cranky press corps savors it. Players revere it.

It remained for a cynical British historian, admittedly faithful to the tradition of the sport's Scottish birth, to put the Masters into proper perspective.

Saying he felt that the effusive praise for the upstart American event was "postively orgiastic" that sent writers and editors into a "fey trance," Robert Ferrier decided to come to America to see for himself. The year was 1963 while "Arnie's Army" was in full cry."

He was converted.

"In spite of its immense muscularity," Ferrier wrote afterward, "the Masters is remarkably gracious. It has style and elegance. It is without vulgarity. There is no advertising. The clubhouse is pleasant and modest. Nobody tries to sell you anything. It is in the graciousness that the real dignity of Masters lies."

On the other hand, the sheer experience of it turned an unschooled ex-caddy and a man whose professional career spanned four eras, into a drooling Shakespeare.

"The Masters is the Mecca of golf," effused octogenarian Gene Sarazen, who has checked into them all. "It's where East meets West. Everybody's here. Sponsors come to scout young pro talent. Merchants push their wares. The old oak on the back lawn is the world's market place."

It was the beknickered Sarazen who unleashed that 220-yard rocket for a double eagle two on the 448-yard, par five 15th — golf's most memorable shot — which enabled him to tie Craig Wood and go on to win the second Masters title in 1935.

Photos of that historic playoff show only a few people gathered around the 18th green, in marked contrast to the thousands who now wind along the fairways and through the trees like giant slithering snakes.

In those early days, the event was very informal and low-key, more like a family outing — just as Bob Jones intended it. It was Jones, the great amateur player of the Golden Age, who had conceived the idea and, with New York financier Cliff Roberts, brought it to fruition.

Having retired at age 28 in 1930, after completing golf's unprecedented Grand Slam (British Open and Amateur, American Open and Amateur championships), Jones desired to stage a spring tournament for his golfing friends. Rather than use an existing course, he and Roberts decided to build one of their own.

It was during a leisurely drive west of Augusta, the hometown of Jones' wife, that they chanced upon a lush plantation and nursery known as the Fruitlands. Bulbs flashed in both their heads. They obtained the property, sent for their famed Scottish architect Alister MacKenzie and got the project under way in the spring of 1931.

A holding company was formed and the Augusta National Golf Club was established with 100 charter members, largely businessmen. The initiation fee was $350 and the annual dues $60. The first tournament was played in 1934, won by Horton Smith. Jones finished 13th. He played in 11 others before bowing to a spinal ailment that later took his life.

These were depression days. Augusta was a pleasant, sleepy town with a typical main street of small shops and an economy buttressed by a nearby army base. There was an absence of first class hotels and eating places.

Visitors who couldn't get into the five-story Richmond Hotel downtown — these included players and the press — had to settle in the outskirts for the rambling old Bon Air and the adjacent Partridge Inn, which pundits puckishly dubbed the Tennessee Williams Arms.

The Masters galleries at the time were made up largely of fans from other parts of Georgia and neighboring states, who motored in and made it a holiday. They purchased season tickets for $5 and were automatically designated as "patrons" with the opportunity to renew every year.

This put them in a privileged class since daily ticket sales at the gate were stopped in 1966 and no additions to the so-called "patron's roll" has been made since 1978. There is a waiting list of 5,000. These tickets, still a bargain at $90, can't be sold or passed off but, as in the case of a Coca Cola franchise, must be inherited — then only by a spouse.

Thus it has become the hottest ticket in sports.

In the 1960's the publisher of one of the nation's most influential newspapers wired his reporter at the scene to get him two guest tickets for a certain day.

"Sorry," said Chairman Cliff Roberts bluntly. "We made exceptions only for Congressmen and five-star generals."

In the ensuing four decades, Augusta has grown with the inflationary tide. New industries have taken root here. The one-time small airport has expanded and modernized. You can find luxury hotel accomodations. Motels, restaurants and fast food eateries are all over the place. The Richmond has been converted into an office building, the Bon Air turned into a senior citizens' rest home and the Partridge Inn — whatever became of the Partridge Inn?

This week the town will be teeming. Airports in the vicinity will be choked with private jets bringing corporate executives and their friends. Some of them will move into the beautiful colonial mansions in the suburbs for the week. It's become a custom. Residents move out and rent their luxurious homs, complete with butler and maid, for $3,000 to $10,000.

Meanwhile, the Masters has remained blessedly changeless. There has been a little primping here and there, some forced expansion. The press — writers such as Grantland Rice, Alan Gould, Henry McLemore and Damon Runyon — covered the early tournament from the upstairs balcony of the modest clubhouse. Today's press corps — electronic and print, numbering around 1,400 — requires a spacious special room in the quanset hut that forms the working headquarters. New towers have been erected to accomodate photographers and writers covering action on the course.

Paraphrasing a line from the classics: "Upon what meat doth the great Masters feed that it hath grown so great?"

Some golf technocrats have questioned that the Masters should be bracketed with the recognized major championships, which also include the British and U.S. Opens and the American PGA — elite titles by which greatness is guaged.

They contend that the Masters hasn't aged enough, that it doesn't command the strongest field and even that the great courses doesn't offer the same challenges.

The Masters is the only one of the Big Four not affiliated with a national association and not representing a national title. At 55, it is the stubby-chin upstart of the group. The British Open is the grandpappy, dating back to 1860. The American Open is 94 years old, the PGA 73. Both the Australian and French Opens are longer in the tooth.

Furthermore, the Masters — by almost general agreement among players and students of the game alike — lacks the overall stength of the other three because of the limited hand-picked field — in the neighborhood of 80 — and the sentimental sprinkling of old champions, foreign guests and amateurs. The PGA is rated toughest, followed by the U.S. Open and the British.

Still, winning the Masters is worth more than anything else in golf. Mark McCormick of the sports management firm, International Management Group, says a Masters victory brings in more in endorsements and other benefits than the other three majors combined and a a major is usually considerd worth about $1 million.

The course itself also creates controversy. For all its beauty, does the Augusta National present as formidable an adversary as the U.S. Open and PGA, with their gun-barrel fairways, knotty rough and dinosaur graves on the greens? By comparison, some say, the Masters is like a leisurely stroll in the country.

Perhaps, but history disputes it. Augusta National has confounded and frustrated the greatest over the years.

In laying out Augusta with architect MacKenzie, Bob Jones held to his theory that a course should not only be challenging but also a pleasure to play. He insisted that the terrain of the beautiful nursery be retained with a minimum of obstacles.

The result was no rough, instead 70 acres of unfettered, irrigated fairway. There were only 28 bunkers (since raised to 43), compared with 200 or more for most big courses. The greens were large but meticulously manicured and inclined to be exceedingly fast, putting a premium on the player's second shot. Only three holes have water hazzards. No hole is blind.

Jones was adamant that the maze of color be retained, each hole framed and identified by its dominant native flower — such as azalea, dogwood, redbud and Chinese fir — and shaded by towering pines.

"You can't snap at her," Jones said of the course later. "She will snap back. She has to be gently cajoled."

So what is the Masters mystique?

It's the spirit of Bob Jones, one of the most admired personalities in the history of sports. It's the stage of inifinite beauty and charm which he left. It's near-perfect organization and operation. It's an almost changeless gallery, the most knowledgeable and polite in sports.

Cliff Roberts, who died in 1977, said the first priority was the players and second the fans. Both are treated like special guests. The tournament radiated dignity and hospitality.

It has been a showcase of the stars — Sarazen, Nelson, Demaret, Snead, Hogan, Palmer, Nicklaus and, more recently, the invaders, Player, Ballesteros, Norman.

The first tournament in 1934 was called simply the "Augusta National Invitation," at the insistance of Jones who thought "Masters," proposed by Roberts and sportswriter Grantland Rice was "presumptuous."

The event might have remained a casual affair for years except that big city writers and columnists, out of deference to Jones, dropped in while en route with baseball teams working their way north from spring training.

"Masters" became part of the sports lexicon.

Interest in the tournament further heightened in the mid-1940s when, with World War II winding down, the struggling pro tour produced a band of straight-shooting Texans and a Virginia hillbilly named Sam Snead.

Byron Nelson, exempt from service, was the fairway giant of the period, winning 19 tournaments and 11 in a row in 1945. Having won his first Masters in 1937, Lord Byron captured his second in 1942, beating longtime rival Ben Hogan in a dramatic playoff that captivated the nation.

Another Texan, flamboyant Jimmy Demaret, became the first three-time winner — 1940, 1947 and 1950. And Snead, after victories in 1949 and 1952, matched Demaret's triple with a playoff victory over Ben Hogan in 1954. Interest was so intense a hole-by-hole account was carried on the national wires for the first time.

Hogan, recovering miraculously from an automobile accident that nearly took his life, won in 1951 and 1953. The Hogan shadow hung heavily over the golf world until the bull-shouldered son of a Latrobe, Pa., greenskeeper burst on the scene in 1958 and turned tranquility into bedlam.

As Arnold Palmer, with his sledgehammer drives and putts long as a city block, collected Masters crowns in the even years — 1958, 1960, 1962 and 1964 — his yelling, stampeding "Army" went berserk. Crowds swelled to 50,000 or 60,000.

Counterfeit tickets flooded the gallery, some traceable to a group of Georgia college students. That's when Chairman Roberts cut off daily ticket sales.

Palmer's histrionics coincided with television's discovery that golf was a marketable commodity. A contract was signed with CBS in 1956 and it has never been broken, although the Masters restricts commercial breaks so as not to interfere with the flow of play. Many attribute golf's boom to the marriage of Palmer and TV at the Masters.

But for every hero there is also a sucessor. Palmer found his in a big, golden-haired kid out of Columbus, Ohio, named Jack Nicklaus. The so-called Golden Bear became the youngest player ever to win the Masters at age 23 in 1963. He set the tournament record of 271 in 1965 and became the first to repeat in 1966. He won again in 1972 and 1975 then, as the oldest ever champion, captured his sixth green coat at age 46 in 1986 as tears mixed with cheers around the final hole.

Now what can Jones' pretty lady do for an encore?

Mets May Fall From Atop The NL East

By Jim Donaghy
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Five teams spent all winter trying to catch up to New York in the National League East, and the Mets have spent most of spring training helping them do it.

All is not well with baseball's most successful team over the last five years. In that period, the Mets have won at least 90 games a year, averaging 97, yet have only one World Series ring to show for it.

The Mets' toughest opponent seems to be themselves.

On March 2, in Port St. Lucie, Fla., the uneasy battle for leadership on the club resulted in an ugly incident on team photo day when Darryl Strawberry took a swing at Keith Hernandez.

The day resulted in a double negative when Strawberry walked out of camp over a contract dispute. The All-Star right-fielder came back, but said he would leave New York after his contract expired in 1990.

Some Mets are asking to be traded because they don't play and others are unhappy because of where they play.

"I don't know what to say," catcher Gary Carter said. "You don't want to say something wrong. It's like walking on eggshells around here."

The result of the clubhouse tension has been a very lethargic spring training that has Manager Davey Johnson worried.

"We're making stupid mistakes," Johnson said. "Our offense is almost nonexistent."

Still, the managers of Montreal, Pittsburgh, St. Louis, Chicago and Philadelphia all wish they had such problems.

"The Mets are the best team in the division," Montreal manager Buck Rodgers said. "The other clubs just have to stay close and hope something happens."

Something may happen, but the Mets will probably win anyway followed by the Expos, Pirates, Cardinals, Cubs and Phillies.

New York Mets

On offense, the Mets have very little over any team in the NL East but hardly any team in baseball can match the rotation of Dwight Gooden (18-9, 3.19 ERA), Ron Darling (17-9, 3.25), David Cone (20-3, 2.22), Bob Ojeda (10-13, 2.88) and Sid Fernandez (12-11, 3.03). All five also had 25 starts or more.

New York led the majors with a team ERA of 2.91 and allowed only 404 walks.

Left-hander Randy Myers became a dominant force in the bullpen with 26 saves and a 1.72 ERA and right-hander Roger McDowell had 16 saves.

Despite the brilliant pitching, the Mets were only a .500 team from May 22-Aug. 21 (41-41).

Hernandez missed two months with a hamstring pull and Carter (.242, 11 HR, 46 RBI) went 225 at-bats without a home run as years of catching are finally slowing him down. Both are in the final year of their contract and may not be back.

Strawberry (.269, 39 HR, 101 RBI) and Kevin McReynolds (.288, 27 HR, 99 RBI) carried the offense and will have to again in 1989.

The Mets tried to trade third baseman Howard Johnson (.230, 24 HR, 68 RBI) to make room for Gregg Jefferies at third but were unsuccessful. Jefferies, who wants to play third, will start the season at second. But where does Tim Teufel, Keith Miller and Dave Magadan play?

Neither Mookie Wilson nor Len Dykstra like to be platooned in center and Dykstra has often asked to be traded.

The Mets will continue to have their share of arguments and disgruntled players. They will also have a lot of victories.

Montreal Expos

After challenging the Cardinals in 1987, the Expos slipped last season to 81-81. For a while it seemed they would give the Mets a run, too, but a nine-game losing streak ruined that possibility.

Manager Buck Rodgers thinks the addition of right-hander Kevin Gross from Philadelphia (12-14) and slick-fielding Spike Owen at shortstop could make the Expos serious contenders again.

This team certainly has the talent and is probably the most balanced club next to New York in the division.

Tim Raines (.270, 33 SB), Andres Galarraga (.302, 29 HR, 92 RBI), Tim Wallach (12 HR, 69 RBI) and Hubie Brooks (.279, 20 HR, 90 RBI) give the Expos a formidable heart of the order. Raines was plagued by injuries and should bounce back to his .330 pace of 1987.

Center fielder Otis Nixon and second baseman Rex Hudler started last season in the minors, but combined to steal 75 bases after their recall on June 21.

The Expos had the third lowest ERA in the majors at 3.08 and may be even better this year. Gross joins a rotation of Dennis Martinez (15-13, 2.72), Bryn Smith (12-10, 3.00), 6-foot-10 rookie Randy Johnson (3-0, 2.42 ERA) and Scott Holman. Pascual Perez (12-8, 2.44) is back from drug rehab and may be ready to start in a few days.

In addition to his 15 victories, Martinez had 13 more starts in which he allowed three or less runs and didn't win.

Tim Burke (18 saves) is joined in the bullpen by Joe Hesketh and Andy McGaffigan. Last season, Rodgers got 43 saves from eight different pitchers.

The Expos lack left-handed power and Nelson Santovenia is still unproven as a regular catcher.

Pittsburgh Pirates

It seems like the second-place Pirates are coming off a super season, yet they finished 15 games behind the Mets.

In their head-to-head competition with New York last season, the Pirates lost 12 of 18 games.

Former GM Syd Thrift thought the reason was the bench, so he went out and got outfielders Gary Redus and Glenn Wilson and infielder Ken Oberkfell. Management thought he was spending too much and let Thrift go.

Thrift will be remembered for making some great deals, though.

He got outfielder Andy Van Slyke (.288, 25 HR, 100 RBI) and catcher Mike LaValliere (.261, 47 RBI) from St. Louis, and pitchers Doug Drabek (15-7) and Brian Fisher (8-10) from the New York Yankees.

Drabek is now the No. 1 starter followed by Bob Walk (12-10, 2.71), John Smiley (13-11), Mike Dunne (7-11) and Fisher. Left-hander Dave LaPoint was acquired late in the season from the White Sox and didn't stay long as he signed a free-agent contract with the Yankees.

The Bucs may have the best bullpen in the division with Jim Gott (34 saves), Jeff Robinson, Bob Kipper and Neal Heaton.

The key to the Pirates' attack is Barry Bonds (.283, 24 HR, 58 RBI) at the top of the order. He gets it going for Van Slyke and third baseman Bobby Bonilla (.274, 24 HR, 100 RBI).

The Pirates are very strong defensively except for third, where Bonilla made 32 errors.

St. Louis Cardinals

The Cardinals finished 25 games behind New York last season but they are still the team the Mets fear most. Perhaps with good reason.

Three times in the 1980s the Cards went from NL champions to sub .500 the next season. So last year's 76-86 finish must mean big things for St. Louis in 1989, right? Well, maybe.

The Cards started 1988 with an obvious power shortage and helped that problem by trading for Tom Brunansky (22 HR, 79 RBI) and Pedro Guerrero (10 HR, 65 RBI).

Still, the Cards finished last in the majors in homers with only 71. Oakland's Jose Canseco and Mark McGwire combined for 74 homers.

The top of the Cardinals' order will have Vince Coleman (81 SB), Ozzie Smith (57 SB) and Willie McGee (41 SB).

Last season, the Cards stole 234 bases to become the first team since Detroit (1909-15) to steal 200-plus bases in seven consecutive seasons.

Coleman, who has to improve on his .313 on-base percentage, Smith and McGee figure to be on base, so big seasons from Guerrero and Brunansky are a must.

Third baseman Terry Pendleton (.253, 6 HR, 53 HR) is coming off an injury-plagued season and got a late start in spring training and catcher Tony Pena has slipped defensively.

The Cards everyday lineup matches up favorably with the Mets but they lose out on the mound, particularly now that Danny Cox is out for the season (elbow surgery).

The rotation figures to have Jose DeLeon (13-10, 3.67 ERA), Greg Mathews (4-6), Joe Magrane (5-9, 2.18 ERA), Cris Carpenter and Scott Terry. Mathews and Magrane are coming off injuries last season and Carpenter was slated for the bullpen.

Chicago Cubs

There will be more night games at Wrigley Field this year and probably more losses for the Cubs than in 1988 when they finished 77-85.

The home team should score lots of runs in Wrigley, but don't expect much offense this year.

Chicago went from 209 homers in 1987 to 113 last year. As a team, the Cubs hit .261 but had trouble scoring runs.

Management thought Rafael Palmeiro (.307, 8 HR, 53 RBI) lacked power so he was traded to Texas for reliever Mitch Williams and starter Paul Kilgus.

The Cubs hope rookie Jerome Walton (.331 at Pittsfield) can play center, joining Andre Dawson (.303, 24 HR, 79 RBI) and Mitch Webster in the outfield.

First baseman Mark Grace hit .296 but he hit only seven homers in 486 at-bats and amazingly none were at Wrigley.

The middle of the infield is strong with All-Star Ryne Sandberg (.264, 19 HR, 69 RBI) at second and slick-fielding Shawon Dunston at short.

Rick Sutcliffe, in the last year of his contract, heads a starting rotation of Greg Maddux (18-8, 3.18), and the left-handed Kilgus. Mike Harkey was a combined 16-4 in the minors last season, but has been hit hard in spring training and was sent back to the minors.

Last year, the Cubs had 27 blown save opportunities so strengthening the bullpen was GM Jim Frey's main goal over the winter.

Williams had 18 saves for Texas but he allowed 6.2 walks per nine innings. Calvin Schiraldi, a hard thrower, made 27 starts last season but will pitch in short relief this year. Aging Rich Gossage, who blew 11 save opportunities last year, was released.

Philadelphia Phillies

At 35, Nick Leyva is the youngest manager in baseball. It's a good thing, because he will need lots of time to build this team into a winner.

In 1988, the Phillies finished last at 65-96 because the pitching was horrible (10th or worse in ERA, walks, strikeouts, saves and complete games.) And, without traded top starters Shane Rawley and Kevin Gross, the numbers might be even worse this year.

The rotation shapes up as Bruce Ruffin (6-10), Don Carman (10-14) and newcomers Floyd Youmans (3-6), Ken Howell and Steve Ontiveros.

Ruffin, who is considered the ace, is having control problems and Youmans and Howell arrived at camp overweight. To make matters worse, Youmans is 1-6 lifetime in April with a 6.30 ERA.

The bullpen of Steve Bedrosian (28 saves), Jeff Parrett (12-4 with Montreal) and Greg Harris figures to get lots of work.

The Phillies will have Juan Samuel (.298, 12 HR, 67 RBI), new second baseman Tommy Herr and Von Hayes at the top of the order followed by Mike Schmidt and Ricky Jordan. Jordan came up from the minors at mid-season and hit .308 with 11 homers and 43 RBI in only 273 at-bats. NL Rookie of the Year Chris Sabo of Cincinnati had 11 homers and 44 RBI in 538 at-bats while batting .271.

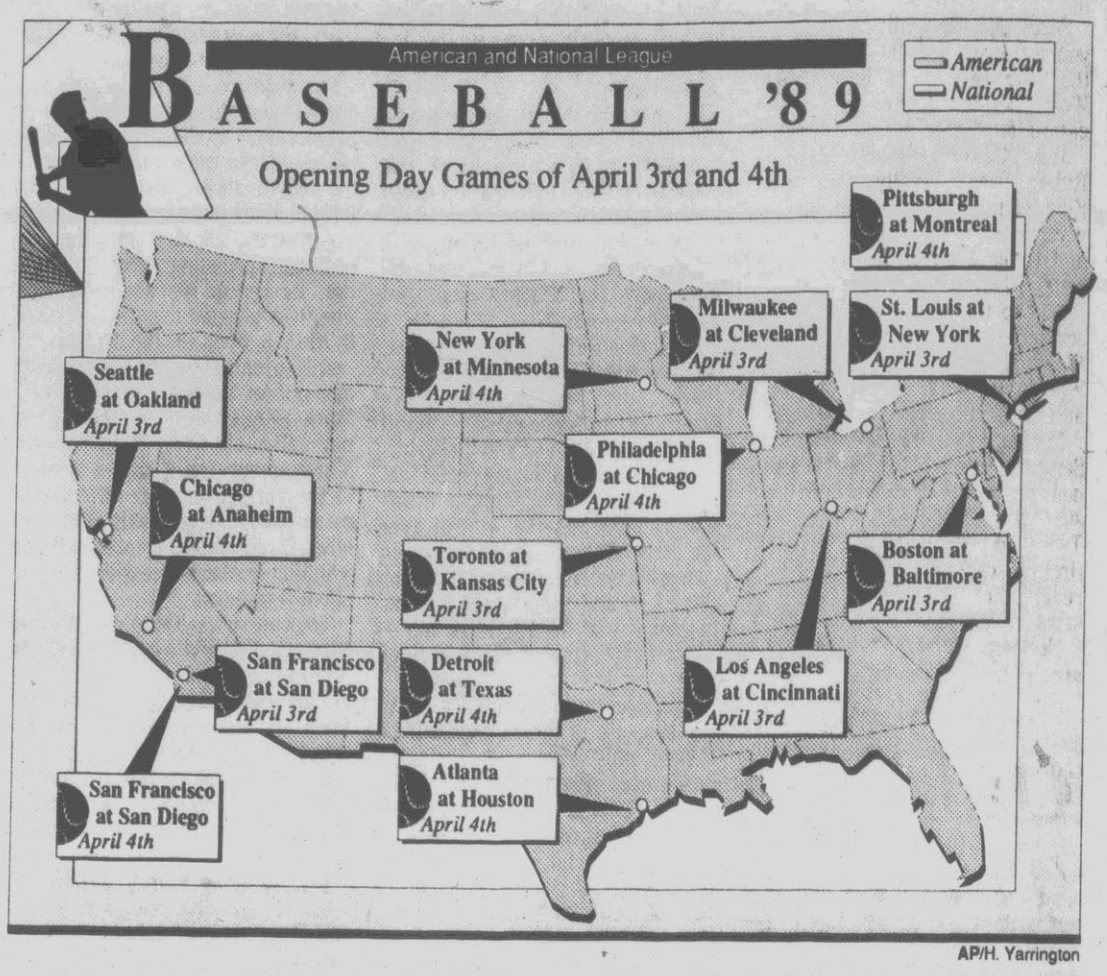

Schmidt, who is coming off rotator cuff surgery, still isn't certain he can play third. If he can't, he may be off to the AL as a designated hitter.

The Phils traded catcher Lance Parrish to California for minor-league pitcher David Holdridge and will go with Steve Lake and Darren Daulton.

Two bright prospects, Chris James (19 HR, 66 RBI) and Ron Jones (.290) will share time in the outfield.

Youth Movement Is Improving AL West

By Ben Walker
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The argument in the American League: is the West better than the East?

"I don't know if I'm ready to say that yet," Oakland general manager Sandy Alderson says. "The East has more depth, but the West is improving."

Sure is, especially because of young talent. The last six rookies of the year have come from the AL West; before that, only two of 14 came from there.

Jose Canseco, Mark McGwire, Ruben Sierra, Wally Joyner and Kevin Seitzer are among the best while Ken Griffey Jr., Jim Abbott and Robin Ventura are among the brightest on the way.

Add to that some new faces this season — Nolan Ryan, Julio Franco, Rafael Palmeiro, Claudell Washington and Lance Parrish — and the West is no longer the Worst.

Minnesota became the first World Series winner to win more game the next season without taking the division title. The advances by the Twins and Athletics made them the first two different AL West teams to reach the World Series in consecutive years.

No team has repeated in the West since Kansas City in 1984-85. Oakland should do it this year, followed by Kansas City, Minnesota, Texas, Seattle, Chicago and California.

Oakland Athletics

Jose Canseco and the Bash Bunch moved into first place on April 20 and stayed there the rest of the season and won 104 times, a division record. Now, Oakland has added free agent Mike Moore to the league's best pitching staff.

Moore, 66-96 lifetime with Seattle, is interesting. His winning percentage was worse than the Mariners', but many feel he will be a big winner with a good team.

Dave Stewart, a two-time 20-game winner who has not gotten the attention he deserves, Bob Welch (17-9) and Storm Davis (16-7) are supplemented by Todd Burns (8-2) and Curt Young (11-8).

Dennis Eckersley stars in a bullpen that led the majors with 64 saves. Eckersley got 45 saves (in 54 chances) and four more in the playoffs, but will always be remembered for the one that got away when Kirk Gibson homered.

Canseco became baseball's first 40-40 player and 27 of his 42 home runs either tied the score or put Oakland ahead. Canseco, Mark McGwire (32 home runs, 99 runs batted in) and good-glove shortstop Walt Weiss are the last three AL rookies of the year, but the lineage might end this season unless outfielder Felix Jose breaks into the lineup.

Dave Henderson (.304, 24 HR, 94 RBI) and Carney Lansford (.279, 29 stolen bases) add offense and All-Star MVP Terry Steinbach led the league by throwing out 43.5 percent of potential base stealers.

Kansas City Royals

The Royals made a one-game improvement to 84-77, not bad for team that has traded away Danny Jackson, David Cone and Melido Perez in the past two years.

Kansas City continues to rely on pitching, led by Mark Gubicza (20-8), Bret Saberhagen (14-16), Charlie Leibrandt (13-12) and Floyd Bannister (12-13). Rookie Tom Gordon, who started in Class A and worked his way up to the majors — striking out 281 along the way — may join the rotation.

George Brett (.306, 24 HR, 103 RBI) and an All-Star for 13 straight seasons, Seitzer (.304), Danny Tartabull (26 HR, 102 RBI) and Willie Wilson (35 SB) give Kansas City some big names on offense. But the Royals' on-base percentage was eighth at .321, hurt by Wilson at .289 with only 22 walks in 628 plate apperances.

Catcher Bob Boone became just the second free agent ever to leave another team to join the Royals (Jerry Terrell was the other). Boone, at 41, is expected to handle the pitching staff well and he batted a career-high .295, including .333 when the count reached 0-2.

Frank White, 38, committed a career-low four errors and Kurt Stillwell settled shortstop. Seitzer made 26 errors and led AL third basemen in miscues for the second straight season.

Minnesota Twins

The Twins proved the previous season was no fluke. They won 91 games, two more than Boston got in winning the AL East.

Cy Young winner Frank Viola (24-7, 2.64 ERA) has been baseball's best left-hander for five years. Unheralded Allan Anderson (16-9, 2.45 ERA) held off Ted Higuera to win the ERA title after Manager Tom Kelly scratched him from his last scheduled start. Shane Rawley (8-16) was acquired from Philadelphia for Tom Herr and Fred Toliver and Les Straker will compete for the final spot.

Jeff Reardon saved a career-high 42 games, but his fastball may not overpower hitters much longer. Juan Berenguer (8-4) and Keith Atherton (7-5) are setup men.

The Twins are the best-fielding team in the majors and they can hit, too. Kirby Puckett (.356, 24 HR, 121 RBI), Kent Hrbek (.312, 76 RBI) and Gary Gaetti (.301, 28 HR, 88 RBI) should benefit from Wally Backman (.303), obtained from the New York Mets for minor leaguers.

Texas Rangers

Call them the Texas Strangers. After youth movements didn't work out as well as expected, the Rangers sped up the rebuilding process by trading five players for 10 new ones.

Julio Franco and Palmeiro each hit .300 last season and Texas hopes Buddy Bell (40 RBI with Cincinnati and Houston) can still be productive.

Everyone knows what Nolan Ryan can do. At age 42, some thought the team shouldn't have spent millions to get him. But he's a Texas folk hero who can still throw in the mid-90s and draw fans. Drew Hall and Jamie Moyer also came over in trades that sent Mitch Williams and Paul Kilgus to the Chicago Cubs and Pete O'Brien, Oddibe McDowell and Jerry Browne to Cleveland.

Texas has had only two winning season this decade. The presence of the franchise's first million-dollar players — Ryan, Franco and Scott Fletcher — might make for an interesting team, but not necessarily a big winner.

Seattle Mariners

Jim Lefebvre will try to do what no other Seattle manager has ever accomplished: lead the Mariners to a winning season.

Seattle went 68-93 and then lost Moore to free agency. Lefebvre, an Oakland coach last season, is trying to change things on and off the field; he began each day at spring training by giving a half-hour motivational talk to his players.

Pitching, instead of words, will determine whether Seattle improves. Mark Langston (15-11, 235 strikeouts) is apparently staying put after many trade rumors. Scott Bankhead (7-9, 3.07 ERA), Bill Swift (8-12) and Mike Campbell (6-10) are in the rotation and Tom Niedenfuer (18 saves with Baltimore) has been added to Mike Schooler (15 saves) in the bullpen.

No one had more than 69 RBI for Seattle. Steve Balboni led the Mariners with 21 home runs in 97 games, but upset management with his salary arbitration victory. Harold Reynolds (.283) again was an All-Star, but he was caught stealing 29 times and stole just 35. Ken Griffey Jr. batted .338 in Class A and, at 19, may start in center field on opening day.

Chicago White Sox

Jeff Torborg, like Jim Lefebvre, will be under a long-time baseball curse: many managers take over bad teams, finish with bad records and then get blamed for being no good.

Chicago went 71-90 and made no major changes in the off-season. The White Sox were 13th in average and runs and led the majors with 154 errors. Batting coach Walt Hriniak may help with powerless White Sox hitters.

If there's a bright spot, it's pitching. Melido Perez (12-10), Jack McDowell (5-10) and Shawn Hillegas (3-2) are young and promising. Bobby Thigpen (34 saves) is good.

Carlton Fisk (.277) at age 41, Dan Pasqua (20 HR) and Harold Baines (81 RBI) highlight a weak offense. Robin Ventura, a three-time All-America and U.S. Olympic star, will start the season in the minors but will soon be in the majors.

California Angels

The Angels loaded up on veterans in the offseason; Bert Blyleven, Parrish and Washington to play and Doug Rader to manage.

Owner Gene Autry hoped to get free agents Bruce Hurst and Nolan Ryan at the winter meetings. He got neither — the rumor was Hurst didn't want to play for tough-guy Rader.

Attendance in Anaheim fell 355,000 in a year when baseball set an all-time high. Wally Joyner (13 HR, 85 RBI) and Mike Witt (13-16) also had off years.

Willie Fraser (12-13) gave up a league-leading 33 home runs and Blyleven (10-17 with Minnesota) always gives up a lot. Bryan Harvey (17 saves) was a nice surprise.

Chili Davis led the Angels with 93 RBI. He also made an amazing 19 errors in the outfield.

Jim Abbott, the Olympic hero born without a right hand, will begin the season in the minors. The Angels are predicting great things for him, and he could make an appearance in the majors this year.

Oakland Looking To Beat The Odds And Win Again

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

OAKLAND, Calif. — If the Oakland Athletics are headed for a big fall in 1989, the warning signs remain invisible.

Ten straight American League champions have succumbed to injuries, age, contract woes or a general letdown in failing to defend the pennant. But entering the final countdown to the regular season, the A's are all signed up, mostly healthy and deeper in talent than ever.

Even a wrist injury that will sideline Jose Canseco for at least the first half of April leaves barely a chink in the A's armor. His replacement, able rookie Felix Jose, has been one of the team's toughest outs all spring.

Manager Tony La Russa just hopes they don't get too happy. His pet peeve is "mental comfort," and he wants his players to remain somewhat uncomfortable until they can achieve the World Series victory that got away last year.

"We have a good team, we're more experienced, we have talent and depth and we should win it," La Russa said of the AL West race. "If we don't, we'll have no excuses. If we fail, it will be very embarrassing."

The A's had it all last year, at least until suffering an offensive drought in a five-game World Series loss to the Los Angeles Dodgers.

They had baseball's best player in Canseco, the best bullpen headed by the top reliever (Dennis Eckersley), and a troika of starting pitchers (Dave Stewart, Bob Welch and Storm Davis) that went 54-28. They were second in the league with 156 homers and 800 runs scored, and third with just 105 errors.

Virtually the entire roster, except for designated hitter Don Baylor, is back. And the A's shelled out $3.95 million over three years to add former Seattle right-hander Mike Moore (9-15, 3.78 ERA, 182 strikeouts) to the starting rotation.

La Russa knows he can't count on his team having only minimal injuries again this season. But he spent the offseason poring over the symptoms of the "no-repeat" syndrome like a medical researcher searching for a cure to the common cold.

The manager studied books, including one by Los Angeles Lakers coach Pat Riley on maintaining peak performances. He talked to successful NFL people such as former San Francisco 49ers coach Bill Walsh and Seattle coach Chuck Knox. He went over a videotape by Notre Dame football coach Lou Holtz, among other people. He even enlisted political pundit and baseball buff George Will as a motivational speaker for his ballclub in spring training.

It's a different approach from last year, when the A's were coming off an 81-81 season and went on to record an Oakland-record 104 victories.

"The books, tapes, they all make similar points," La Russa said. "The idea is you have to, one, work just as hard; two, enjoy the competition; three, take nothing for granted; and four, learn to handle your success."

Oakland gets 'A's for hard work and a competitive atmosphere in Phoenix this spring. The question now is how the team deals with its role as prohibitive favorite in a much-improved division.

"If we keep our intensity, I don't see any problem with our repeating," said Stewart, who will be the Opening Night pitcher against Seattle on April 3 after a second straight 20-win season (21-12). "But we've got to avoid injuries."

Aside from the slight ligament tear in Canseco's left wrist, the A's have few worries.

The most compelling issue left for La Russa as spring training wound down remained a decision on who to start at second base from among Glenn Hubbard, Tony Phillips and Mike Gallego, the trio that shared the position a year ago.

Hubbard, 31, had a firm grip on the job a year ago but missed 57 games and the AL playoffs due to injury. He hit .255. Phillips, 29, hit just .203 in an injury-shortened season and played every position but catcher and pitcher. Gallego, 28, has the best range and hands of the three but hit only .209.

None emerged as the obvious choice in Phoenix, so La Russa may go with a platoon system. That could leave an opening later in the year for top prospect Lance Blankenship (.265 with nine homers, 40 stolen bases and 96 walks with Triple-A Tacoma last year), who needs to polish his defense.

Luis Polonia has solved the only other question about the A's starting lineup with an outstanding spring that has earned him the left field job and leadoff spot. Polonia hit .292 and stole 24 bases in 84 games a year ago, and the A's are convinced he has improved in the outfield and will be able to draw more than 21 walks.

Stan Javier (.257, 20 stolen bases) is an outstanding fielder but may not get the chance to prove his claim that he can hit .300 if he plays every day. The team's third young Dominican outfielder, the 23-year-old Jose, made enough waves in the left-field derby to win the temporary starting job in right and has a chance to oust Polonia or Javier when Canseco returns if he shines.

The rest of the lineup appears rock-solid.

Canseco is expected to reclaim his right-field spot no later than the beginning of May. He has vowed to reduce his strikeouts (128) and boost his batting average (.307) on the heels of his first-ever 40-40 season (42 HR, 40 SB, 124 RBI). He was hitting the ball hard and deep in practice before injuring the wrist March 7.

The A's three other biggest bashers — first baseman Mark McGwire (.260, 32 HR, 99 RBI), center fielder Dave Henderson (.304, 24, 94) and designated hitter Dave Parker (.257, 12, 55) all had excellent springs.

Last-name Jose was hitting .354 in the final days of spring training and appears destined for major-league stardom; the only question is when. Last year at Tacoma, he hit .317 with 12 homers and 83 runs batted in.

Rookie of the Year Walt Weiss says he can improve on his .250 average while continuing to turn all the plays at shortstop. And third baseman Carney Lansford (.279, 29 stolen bases) has a new, straighter batting stance he thinks will get him closer to the form that produced a .402 average through last June 2; he hit only .196 the rest of the way.

La Russa predicts Terry Steinbach (.265, 9 HR, 51 RBI) will knock in 90 runs if he gets 500 at-bats, and he plans to play him occasionally at third base or DH to get them. The 1988 All-Star MVP led the league's catchers by throwing out 43.5 percent of baserunners. He has a capable backup in left-handed-hitting Ron Hassey (.257, 7, 45).

Stewart, Welch (17-9, 3.64 ERA) and Davis (16-7, 3.70) will be joined in the league's best rotation by lefty Curt Young (11-8, 4.14) and Moore, who had an impressive spring in his debut with a winner.

The 34-year-old Eckersley comes into the season in tip-top shape and determined to prove that last year's 45-save, AL-playoffs MVP season was not an aberration. As for the fateful ninth-inning homer he served up to Kirk Gibson in the World Series opener, he said he fretted for about a month but "now it seems like years ago."

Hornets Are Cornering The Market

With the recent acquisition of Greg Kite, the Charlotte Hornets have nearly cornered the market on slow, white, immobile centers in the NBA.

Kite joins incumbent statues Dave Hoppen and Tim Kempton. This is the same team that has spent most of the year trying to acquire Stuart Gray, another postman cut from the same mold. I hear Uwe Blab's available in Dallas. Someone contact Carl Scheer.

These four follow in the fine tradition set forth by such NBA big name plodders as Rich Kelley, Billy Paultz and Rick Robey.

Seriosly, though, the Hornets are in dire need of some inside help.

When Kelly Tripucka went out with an injury, teams just packed it inside even harder on the Hornets. Kurt Rambis has played well, but without any help underneath or Tripucka's bombs from outside he's in deep trouble.

While there aren't any real franchice-building big men available in this year's draft, the Hornets should be able to find a power forward who can score inside and rebound.

Just looking around, players who figure to be lottery picks include Oklahoma's Stacy King, Iowa's Ed Horton, Arizona's Sean Elliott, Duke's Danny Ferry, Louisville's Pervis Ellison and Georgia Tech's Tom Hammonds just to name a few. All would be welcome additions to the Hornets, as would Syracuse forward Derrick Coleman if he declares hardship status for the NBA draft.

'88 Prep Stars Showing College Potential

Last year was an incredible year for baseball talent in the greater Pitt County area and a lot of those players have moved on to the college level.

Former Greene Central standout Tommy Eason has been a regular for East Carolina as a freshman, playing catcher and outfield and recently earned Colonial Athletic Association Player of the Week honors for the week ending March 27. Eason is fourth on the team with a .387 average with 21 RBI and three homers.

Former Rose standout Dave Daniels is taking time off from the football team to play baseball for the Pirates this spring. He saw some action early in the season as the designated hitter, playing mostly against left-handed pitching. Of late, Glenn Beck, a freshman from South Brunswick, has seen action in that spot. But Daniels should see some time on down the road.

Tom Moye, a prep teammate of Daniels, has seen action pitching in three games this year for the Pirates and has a record of 1-0.

Ex-D.H. Conley pitcher Bronswell Patrick, who was drafted and signed with the Oakland Athletics out of high school, figures to wind up at A level this season after playing in a rookie league last summer.

At North Carolina Wesleyan, Axel Smith has stepped in and seen action as a designated hitter and is hitting .333.

ECU Recruit Could Fill A Big Need

D.J. Morgan, one of East Carolina's basketball signees for next season, has the ability to be a welcome addition to the Pirate squad next season.

A 6-6 frontcourt player, Morgan was a key part of an Raleigh Athens Drive team that advanced to the Eastern 4-A Regional Finals before falling to Wilson Fike.

He joins an ECU squad that has very little in the way of front-court depth, especially with the departure of all-everything forward Blue Edwards.

Morgan averaged 15 points per game this year and is the all-time leading rebounder in school history.

He played center for the Jaguars, but will likely see action at forward for ECU coach Mike Steele.

Morgan runs the floor well and also shoots well enough from 15-feet and in to be an effective inside player for the Pirates. His high school coach, Lawrence Dunn, said with maturity he felt Morgan could develop into a good player.

"D.J. plays when D.J. wants," Dunn said. "He needs to develop some kind of consistency. D.J. is going to have to learn move his feet (better). He plays according to the level of competition. If he doesn't play (well next year), he'll get embarrased."

Greener Pastures For ECU Transfer Gast

John Gast, a transfer from Auburn, has stepped in and played well at third base for the Pirates in his initial season as a Pirate.

Gast went to Auburn out of high school to play for former ECU coach Hal Baird and promptly found himself backing up All-American first baseman Frank Thomas. With little playing time available, Gast wound up at ECU where he is hitting .320, fifth on the team, with 17 RBI and four home runs.

Seton Hall's Pirates An Unknown Quantity

Residents of Tobacco Road like to think they know their basketball pretty good, but ask the average person what he or she knows about Seton Hall and you'll get a blank-faced stare in return.

That is unless you're lucky enough to live with a resident from South Orange, N.J. who is an undying Seton Hall lover who has suffered through years of ignominy when the Pirates were the doormat of the Big East.

'The Hall,' as I've been told the school is known, is for real and that fact has been driven into my head time and time again. So for those of you who don't know much about the Pirates, here are some thumb nail sketches:

Power forward Darryl Walker was the Player of the Year in New York City as a high school senior. Guards Gerald Greene and John Morton were both All-New York City and Greene led the city in scoring with an average of 34 points per game.

Take note of reserve forward Nick Katsikas who actually glows in the dark. The man has a year round tan (even in January and February) and gets his winter sun workout at the Village Tropics Tanning Beds in South Orange. That's the same city where the sun actually shines only three months out of the year.

Reds' Talent Should Dethrone L.A.

By Jim Donaghy
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

If the Cincinnati Reds can make it through the distractions of baseball's investigation of Manager Pete Rose, they should be able to overcome anything.

The commotion over Rose could cause the the Reds to come together — or it could be a lingering problem. Whatever, the Reds have enough talent to beat the Dodgers, Padres, Giants and Astros in a close race in the National League West.

The NL West had five teams finish above .500 last year and they all seem improved in 1989.

The Rose story has turned the Cincinnati spring training camp into a media circus.

"I have no problem with media people," Rose said. I like media people. This is perfect because it gives my players the same kind of atmosphere they're going to enjoy in October."

No team has repeated as world champions since the New York Yankees in 1977-78 and Los Angeles general manager Fred Claire didn't stand pat. He added first baseman Eddie Murray and second baseman Willie Randolph when Steve Sax left to sign with the Yanks.

"I think we're a better team than last year," Dodgers manager Tommy Lasorda said. "We didn't have a set lineup last spring. There were a lot of question marks."

Starting on April 3, five contenders in the NL West will start getting some answers. The Atlanta Braves? They start working on 1990.

Cincinnati Reds

The Reds have finished second four years in a row and they're the only team in the division not to finish first this decade. At least the law of averages is on their side.

The top of the order — shortstop Barry Larkin (.296, 12 HR, 56 RBIs, 40 SB), third baseman Chris Sabo (.271, 11 HR, 44 RBIs, 46 SB), left fielder Kal Daniels (.291, 18 HR, 64 RBIs) and center fielder Eric Davis (.273, 26 HR, 93 RBIs) — is perhaps the most explosive in the league and all should improve on 1988.

Sabo, the Rookie of the Year, tired in the second half and hit only .216 with one homer and nine RBIs. Bigger things can also be expected of Davis. He's capable of 40 homers and 120 RBIs.

The right fielder, Paul O'Neill (16 HR, 73 RBIs) bats fifth and newly-acquired first baseman Todd Benzinger hits sixth. With Boston last season, Benzinger had 13 homers and 70 RBIs in 405 at-bats. Second baseman Ron Oester, back after recovering from knee surgery, hit .280 in 150 at-bats last season.

The catching could be a problem. Bo Diaz (.219) is 36 and playing on sore knees.

The Reds have an experienced bench with Ken Griffey, Joel Youngblood and Manny Trillo.

To win the division, the Reds will need another 20-game season from left-hander Danny Jackson (23-8, 2.73 ERA). Tom Browning pitched a perfect game on Sept. 16 against the Dodgers and finished 18-5 with a 3.41 ERA, a nice rebound from his 10-13, 5.03 ERA effort in 1987. The Reds have added 35-year-old Rick Mahler (from Atlanta). He's capable of winning 10-15 games and pitching 250 innings. Right-hander Jose Rijo finally found his control and finished 13-8, striking out 160 batters in 162 innings.

John Franco had 39 saves in 42 opportunites but might miss setup man Rob Murphy, who was traded to Boston in the Benzinger deal. The Reds think they have a replacement in hard-throwing Rob Dibble. The 6-foot-4 right-hander has been clocked at 100 mph and for Class AAA Nashville last season, he had 41 strikeouts in 35 innings.

Los Angeles Dodgers

Even if Orel Hershiser pitches 300 scoreless innings, the Dodgers need a healthy Kirk Gibson to repeat.

Gibson has not recovered from his knee problems last October and may go down at any time. If he does, the Dodgers are in trouble.

Fernando Valenzuela is pitching but still doesn't have the same stuff and John Tudor (elbow surgery) isn't expected back until at least July.

In 12 seasons with Baltimore, Eddie Murray averaged .295 with 28 homers and 99 RBIs. He's happy to be in LA and should have a big season with Willie Randolph, John Shelby and Gibson (if healthy) hitting at the top of the order. Having Murray hitting fourth should also help Mike Marshall (.277, 20 HR, 82 RBIs) and catcher Mike Scioscia (.257, 35 RBIs). Third baseman Jeff Hamilton, who only had 10 walks in 309 at-bats, hits seventh and shortstop Alfredo Griffin eighth.

Hershiser says if he doesn't win 20 games and have an ERA under 3.00 it will be regarded as an unsuccessful season. The Dodgers don't have to worry about Orel, but will Tim Leary (17-11) and Tim Belcher (12-6) pitch as well?

For some starting depth, the Dodgers acquired Mike Morgan but he was only 1-6 with a 5.43 ERA for Baltimore.

The Dodgers' bullpen had 49 saves last season led by Jay Howell's 21 and Alejandro Pena's 12.

San Diego Padres

The Padres made a dramatic improvement during the 1988 season and became a genuine threat with some bigtime acquisitions during the winter.

Jack Clark (from the Yankees for Jimmy Jones, Lance McCullers and Stan Jefferson) and starters Bruce Hurst (free agent) and Walt Terrell (from the Tigers for Keith Moreland and Chris Brown) have made the Padres the most improved team in baseball.

The Padres fell to 16-31 last season and fired Larry Bowa as manager. Jack McKeon moved from the executive suite to the dugout and the Padres went on to win 67 of their last 115 games.

McKeon is still looking for another power hitter and needs to strengthen third base. His bait has been rookie catcher Sandy Alomar Jr. (.297, 16 HR, 71 RBI at Class AAA Las Vegas).

And, there's still a possibility McKeon may swing a deal with Seattle to land left-hander Mark Langston. Getting Langston would make the Padres tough to beat in the West but even without them the pitching is solid.

Hurst, who signed a deal worth $5.25 million over three years, was 18-6 with a 3.66 ERA last season for Boston. He is joined in the rotation by Eric Show (16-11, 3.26), Dennis Rasmussen (16-10, 3.43), Ed Whitson (13-11, 3.77) and Terrell. Rasmussen started 1988 in Cincinnati and was 2-6 with a 5.75 ERA in 11 starts for the Reds. After being acquired by the Padres, Rasmussen was 14-4 with a 2.55 ERA.

Clark, who hit 27 homers with 93 RBI for the Yankees last season, never got use to the offspeed pitching in the American League and ended up with 141 strikeouts in 496 at-bats.

Second baseman Roberto Alomar (.266, 24 SB) leads off followed by outfielders John Kruk and Tony Gwynn (.313, 70 RBIs).

Catcher Benito Santiago, a .300 hitter in his rookie season in 1987, slipped to .248 last season. Santiago gives the Padres something rare these days — a catcher who can throw runners out. Last season, Santiago nailed 35 of 77 base stealers (45 percent) including 11 of 17 while throwing from his knees.

Shortstop Garry Templeton is 33 and playing on sore knees and third base is unsettled.

Baseball's Best Division Is Weakening

By Ben Walker
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The American League East isn't so hot anymore.

Gone are the great teams. Boston won last year with only 89 victories, the fewest ever in a full season for an AL East champion.

Gone are some big names, too. Eddie Murray, Bruce Hurst, Julio Franco, Jack Clark, Walt Terrell, Claudell Washington and Willie Randolph all left, weakening what once was far-and-away baseball's best division.

"It used to be that you went into the season knowing it would take 100 wins," Milwaukee's Paul Molitor said. "It wasn't fair when you saw what it took to win other divisions. Now, you know if you win 90 games, you've got a chance."

If the AL East isn't as strong overall, parity has made the pennant race even better — no team has repeated as champion since the Yankees in 1980-81. Not a bad tradeoff.

Boston, Detroit, Milwaukee, Toronto and New York each had a chance to win last year. The Yankees wound up in fifth place, only 3½ games behind the Red Sox.

The same five teams should be bunched again. This time, a series of injuries to other clubs should put Toronto in position to win.

The Tigers will find another way to stay close, followed by Milwaukee, Boston, New York, Cleveland and Baltimore.

Toronto Blue Jays

General manager Pat Gillick, nicknamed "Stand Pat," has not made a major trade since getting Mike Flanagan on Aug. 31, 1987. If the Blue Jays don't go far this season, it will be the last time the team stays intact.

Basically, it's the same bunch that has won at least 86 games for six straight years; only Detroit and the New York Mets have won more.

Manager Jimy Williams won last spring's power struggle with George Bell, but Bell's production dropped (.269, 24 home runs, 97 runs batted in). Jesse Barfield (18 HR) and new leadoff hitter Lloyd Moseby (31 stolen bases) will join Bell in the outfield; each is 29, born within two weeks of each other.

Tony Fernandez (.287, 41 doubles) is a three-time Gold Glove winner at shortstop and Fred McGriff's 34 home runs established him at first base. Kelly Gruber (81 RBI) is solid at third base, but second base remains weak. Free agent Bob Brenly will platoon with Pat Borders (.273) at catcher. The bench needs improvement. Toronto pinch hitters batted a franchise-low .202 last year.

The Blue Jays led the league with 17 shutouts, and pitching, as usual, will determine what happens.

Dave Stieb (16-8) came within one strike of no-hitters in his final two starts. Left-handers Jimmy Key (12-5 despite elbow trouble), Flanagan (13-13) and Jeff Musselman (4-1) also are in the rotation. John Cerutti (0.98 earned run average after the All-Star break) may fill in for departed free agent Jim Clancy.

Tom Henke converted 25 of 29 save opportunities. Duane Ward (9-3, 15 saves) and inconsistent Mark Eichhorn (0-3) are the middle-inning relievers.

Toronto won 22 of its final 29 games and finished two games behind Boston. This year, the Blue Jays hope the old gang in a new location (the SkyDome opens June 5) can bring the first World Series to Canada.

Detroit Tigers

Sparky Anderson is a great manager. How else can he keep the Tigers close with patchwork lineups?

Detroit was in first place last August, but injuries to Alan Trammell, Lou Whitaker and Jeff Robinson led to a 4-19 skid that ended its chance of winning.

Trammell (.311) and Whitaker (.275) again are in the middle; it seems like they've been there forever, but both are only 31. Keith Moreland and Chris Brown, acquired from San Diego for Terrell, should help with offense at the corners.

Robinson held opponents to a .197 batting average, lowest among AL starters, and was 13-6. He seems to have recovered from circulation problems that finished him six weeks early. Jack Morris (15-13) is still the top winner of the decade and Frank Tanana and Doyle Alexander each won 14 games. Mike Henneman (9-6, 22 saves, 1.98) is the best in the bullpen.

Milwaukee Brewers

Everyone was picking the Brewers this year until injuries to Ted Higuera and Juan Nieves wrecked a pitching staff that lost the league's ERA title to Oakland on the final day of the season.

Bill Wegman (13-13), Mike Birkbeck (10-8) and Don August (13-7) must take over while Higuera (16-8, 2.45) and Nieves (7-5) heal.

The Brewers' bullpen was the most effective in the majors, converting 51 of 58 saves opportunities. Dan Plesac (30 saves), Chuck Crim (AL-high 70 games) and Paul Mirabella (1.65 ERA, stranding 35 of 42 inherited runners) were the reasons for the strong relief showing.

Robin Yount (.306, 91 RBI, 22 SB) at age 33 is on track for 3,000 career hits and possible election to the Hall of Fame. Molitor (.312) and Rob Deer (23 HR) might get help from rookie shortstop Gary Sheffield (28 HR, 119 RBI in the minors). Sheffield, a nephew of Dwight Gooden, is the best product of a minor-league system that had a cumulative .553 winning percentage, second-best in the majors to Los Angeles' .581.

Boston Red Sox

Sure, Manager Joe Morgan and Boston overcame a nine-game deficit at the All-Star break and won the division. But the Red Sox went 27-30 after Aug. 4, got swept by Oakland in the playoffs and lost Hurst to free agency.

Therefore, Morgan's Miracle might be hard to duplicate, especially with the off-the-field problems that are sure to linger all season.

Roger Clemens (18-12, 2.93 ERA) decided to stay for three more years but upset fans with remarks that may have been misconstrued. Mike Boddicker (13-15), Oil Can Boyd (9-7 with arm trouble) and newly acquired John Dopson (3-11, 3.04 ERA with Montreal) must make up for Hurst's 18 victories. Lee Smith (29 saves) will benefit from the addition of Rob Murphy (76 games, 3.08 ERA), acquired with Nick Esasky from Cincinnati for Todd Benzinger and Jeff Sellers.

The Red Sox led the majors with a .283 batting average and 813 runs, but were 10th with only 124 home runs even while playing half their games at friendly Fenway Park. Batting coach Walt Hriniak, who stressed contact, has been replaced by power-oriented Richie Hebner.

Wade Boggs (.356 lifetime) won his fifth batting title, including four straight, and led the majors with a .476 on-base average. He swung at 1,032 pitches and missed only 32; he also batted .520 when the count reached 3-1.

Boggs can somehow block out distractions, but the rest of the team cannot avoid the Margo Adams mess. Mike Greenwell (.325, 22 HR, 119 RBI), Dwight Evans (.293, 21 HR, 111 RBI) and Ellis Burks (.294, 18 HR, 92 RBI) make the most offensive outfield in baseball and Jim Rice (72 RBI) was a productive DH at 36.

New York Yankees

Will big changes at Yankee Stadium bring big success? Probably not, because the new pitching staff isn't any better than the old one that ranked 12th with a 4.24 ERA and allowed a major-league high 157 home runs.

Under new Manager Dallas Green and an all-new coaching staff, pitchers Andy Hawkins (14-11) and Dave LaPoint (14-13) were signed as free agents; pitchers Jimmy Jones (9-14) and Lance McCullers (10 saves) were acquired from San Diego for Clark; Rick Rhoden is gone; John Candelaria is hurt, and Green doesn't want Ron Guidry and Tommy John.

Free agent Steve Sax (.277, 42 SB) and Rickey Henderson (.305, 93 SB) give Green the National League-style players he likes. But without Clark (27 HR, 93 RBI) and free agent Washington (.308, 64 RBI), a lot of power is missing.

Don Mattingly (.311, 18 HR, 88 RBI, career-high nine errors) had an off-year by his standards. Dave Winfield (.322, 25 HR, 107 RBI) had a super season, but back problems may limit him at age 37. Trading for Mel Hall (.280, 71 RBI) may help fill Winfield's loss on offense.

The Yankees, the last team to repeat as World Series champions, have not won it all since 1977-78. That's their second-longest drought since the Babe Ruth-Lou Gehrig era, and a 9-20 slide in August prevented them from going far last season.

Cleveland Indians

Cleveland made a 17-game improvement and came within 11 games of first place, its closest finish since 1959. A young pitching staff gives the Indians more hope this year, but their 1948 World Series championship flag won't get any company.

The Indians, who led the majors in runs a few years ago, now stress pitching, fielding and speed. Franco (.305) was traded to Texas for first baseman Pete O'Brien (.272, 71 RBI), center fielder Oddibe McDowell (33 SB) and good-glove second baseman Jerry Browne.

Veteran knuckleballer Tom Candiotti (14-8) is joined by Greg Swindell (18-14). John Farrell (14-10) and Scott Bailes their mid-20s.

The Indians surpr spending $2.5 million reliever Jesse Orosco The main man in the Jones (37 saves, incl 15 straight), but he least two innings fo saves.

Pressure Forced Rozelle To Step Down

By Dave Goldberg
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Pete Rozelle decided to resign as NFL commissioner because he finally realized that in the remaining three years of his contract there was no way he could rid himself of lawsuits and labor troubles that were overwhelming him.

Underlying that, however, was his diminishing ability to do what made him one of the most effective commissioners in the history of sport — unify 28 individualistic and often eccentric owners for the common good.

The last straw may have been the inability to reach agreement with the players' union, in part because of a runaway Management Council led by Tampa Bay's Hugh Culverhouse. It repeatedly scorned Rozelle's attempts at compromise, the last made the morning of the Super Bowl, when the two sides hoped to reach agreement on a compromise that would grant players free agency after six years.

In fact, about the only effect Rozelle had on the council was to get it to add one of his friends and allies, Wellington Mara of the Giants, as the sixth member. Nonetheless, Mara and Pittsburgh's Dan Rooney remain the council's only moderates.

Ironically, one man who agrees with Rozelle's moderate position on labor is the man who was the commissioner's most bitter enemy for a decade — Al Davis of the Raiders.

Davis, who embraced Rozelle as he walked from the room after announcing his retirement, was unstintingly positive in his remarks about Rozelle afterwards, both publicly and privately. On the other hand, men like Culverhouse and Tex Schramm of Dallas, staunch Rozelle allies in the past, have been among the hardest-liners on the Management Council.

In fact, people in Rozelle's office still rankle at the events on the last day of the 1987 strike, when the players returned on a Thursday, expecting to play the next Sunday. Rozelle said later that he wanted them to play and his spokesmen were putting that word out to reporters.

But within half an hour, Schramm and Culverhouse were quashing that. The players sat out a weekend and the union is now awaiting a ruling from the National Labor Relations Board that may get them back pay for that one week.

Some of the division showed up in the committee named to pick Rozelle's successors.

Schramm and Culverhouse were pointedly omitted from the old-guard group made up almost entirely of Rozelle allies — Mara, Rooney, Cleveland's Art Modell, Kansas City's Lamar Hunt, Green Bay's Robert Parins and Buffalo's Ralph Wilson

SAVED FROM THEMSELVES

Lost in the headlines over Rozelle's resignation was one of the more bizarre developments of the winter meetings — a resolution that limits teams to 80 players under contract by July 1. In other words, said one critic, "trying to save the owners from themselves."

It was pushed through by Patrick Bowlen of Denver, one of the NFL's freer spending owners, and Mike Lynn of Minnesota, one of the more tight-fisted general managers.

The cost-cutting measure came during the final rush of free agent signings, in which players from the league's bottom 40 percent received raises and signing bonuses that amounted to 80 percent raises. Moreover, it left teams active in the free-agent market like Kansas City, Washington, Green Bay, Detroit and Cleveland with a dilemma — they already have more than 80 players.

"Frankly, I don't understand it," said Jack Donlan, executive director of the Management Council, who is always urging owners to cut costs. "We're chasing our tail a little bit. Now we're saying certain clubs can't sign anyone anymore. It doesn't make much sense."

Bowlen, who had brought as many as 140 players to camp in the past, then angered his 27 colleagues with his $7.5 million, five-year offer to Buffalo's Bruce Smith, one which the Bills matched on Tuesday.

But that doesn't mean they're happy about it.

Smith's salary will impact on what Reggie White demands from the Eagles — Philadelphia claims he has an option year left; White says he doesn't.

And Bowlen was roundly chewed out for his alleged hypocrisy on costs by Buffalo owner Ralph Wilson, who would have been run out of town had he not matched the offer to Smith. Bowlen's reply? He said he would make room for Smith's salary by trading (or releasing?) two high-salaried veterans, Rulon Jones and Tony Dorsett.

FINGER IN THE DIKE

Barry Sanders' decision to enter the NFL draft may not be accepted as readily as he expects.

That's because the Heisman Trophy winner is a pure junior, a player, unlike Pitt's Craig Heyward last season, who has been in school for three years and has a year of eligibility remaining.

Heyward and other underclassmen, like Cris Carter, have been allowed into the regular or supplemental drafts without a degree the past two years because they had been in school for four years and because the NFL feared a court challenge it would lose.

But the fear is that allowing Sanders in would open the doors to NFL underclassmen that would make it like the NBA, which has dropped the farcical "hardship" from its rules for underclassmen and now lets anyone in. Some officials, like Dallas' Tex Schramm, are willing to go to court again to test the NFL rules even thought it's likely the NFL would eventually lose.

But a court fight might make Sanders wait until the second supplemental draft, in September, and cost him time in training camp and exhibitions that could delay his development.

If Sanders gets into the regular draft, on the other hand, he's almost sure to go high. Detroit, which picks third, is desperate for speed and would probably grab him.

RETREADING

Al Davis is attempting to revive the Raiders with the kind of players who thrived on his three Super Bowl winners — other people's failures.

Among the free agents he has signed are three former first-round draft choices, defensive lineman Pete Koch (Cincinnati through Kansas City) and linebackers Emmanuel King (Cincinnati) and Jackie Shipp (Miami.)

"We' just want to take a look," Davis says. "We want to see why they failed."

But the most intriguing experiment is with Ethan Horton, the first running back picked in the 1985 draft. He was cut by Kansas City in 1986 and has floated from camp to camp since.

Now the Raiders are converting him to a tight end to take advantage of the skill he showed most in his earlier tries — his pass catching ability. He has bulked up to 240 pounds and has shown good hands in workouts.

But can he block like a tight end and take the beating at the line of scrimmage?.

"That's what we want to find out," Davis says.

RECRUITING

Indianapolis' Ron Meyer, a former college coach, on signing the new-style free agents:

"It's like going back to college recruiting. You get a guy in your place and you say to him, 'Look at this. Don't we have a nice Jacuzzi?'"

Green Bay's Lindy Infante on the same subject:

"Whatever you say about it, some guys learned a lot about geography. They got a guided tour of the whole league."

Wyche Working To Help The Homeless

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CINCINNATI — In three months of trying to help homeless people, Cincinnati Bengals coach Sam Wyche has learned that it doesn't take much to go from having a home to being out in the street.

He has learned enough about the homeless to crush a few of the public's stereotypical views. Many of them have jobs, maybe even two jobs, but aren't making enough money to find affordable, decent housing, he said.

Some have mental or physical handicaps. Some are trying to come back from a personal tragedy that bumped them out of the ranks of people who have decent homes.

"There are an awful lot of needs," Wyche said. "Nobody wants to be homeless."

Wyche has capitalized on publicity about the Bengals' march to the Super Bowl to bring attention to problems of the homeless. He said their plight began to particularly touch him when he saw street people in Cincinnati early on mornings of football weekends as he drove to Riverfront Stadium.

He organized his informal effort, which he calls "Homemade," by meeting with Cincinnati social service agencies to plot quick ways of getting funds he raises into programs to aid homeless people. Wyche adopted the name "Homemade" after one person compared the effort with a memory of a grandmother who cooked much of her own food and declined handouts from others.

Since then, Wyche has made 13 speaking appearances at Cincinnati-area companies, charging $5,000 per speech, and will make three more to raise money for the homeless. Some companies have donated money directly to projects, such as renovating buildings for occupation by the homeless, he said.

"The real heroes in this thing are the agencies ... They work every day on this, for long hours and low pay," he said.

He has been gratified by the people who offered jobs, help or donated goods to assist the homeless.

He has shared meals with homeless people in local shelters and talked with drifters about their hopes of finding jobs. He has spent hours encouraging them to find jobs, and has offered direct help to some.

It was a new experience for Wyche, 44, a former Indiana University football coach who has known success as an NFL quarterback and coach, and as partner in a chain of sporting goods stores based in Greenville, S.C.

"The idea was conceived just to bring a lot of awareness, a lot of attention, just so the cause of the homeless could be given a nudge," Wyche said in an interview last week.

Some companies have offered goods or services to homeless shelters.

A Cincinnati company promised to donate equipment that could be used to build housing, including shower enclosures, bathroom vanity tops, kitchen sinks and cooking equipment.

"These are sitting in a warehouse and they've got some nicks in them and can't be sold as new," he said.

Sons Trying To Make Own Names

By Jim Donaghy
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Following in your father's footsteps is never easy, and it can be even harder if it's down the first-base line.

Rose, Griffey, Alou, Bonds, Stottlemyre, Alomar and Hundley. A lineup for a future oldtimers game? Perhaps. But right now they are the sons of former major leaguers trying to make a name of their own.

Doing things on their own is something the sons of major leaguers have gotten use to. Most of them played catch with mom in the backyard — or a brick wall — while their fathers went to work. And often the most they saw of their dads was on television or in the papers.

Still, they inherited a rare talent to play big league baseball.

Pete Rose and Ken Griffey were part of Cincinnati's "Big Red Machine" that won consecutive World Series in 1975 and 1976. Now, their sons are on the way up.

Barry Bonds, Todd Stottlemyre, and Roberto Alomar are already in the majors, and Sandy Alomar Jr., Todd Hundley and Moises Alou aren't far away. And Bob Boone, the son of Ray Boone, has a son on a baseball scholarship at Southern California.

While the 38-year-old Griffey is trying to hang on for another season, his 19-year-old son, Ken Griffey Jr., is about to break into the Seattle Mariners' starting lineup after an outstanding spring.

Griffey Jr., the Mariners' top pick in 1987, started last season with San Bernadino of the California League, hitting .338 with 11 homers, 42 RBIs and 32 stolen bases in 58 games.

This year, Griffey was slated for Triple-A, but now is likely to start in center field.

"I'm always there if he needs advice," his father said. "But he has the talent to make it without me."

If the Griffeys both make it this year, it would be the first time a father and son have played in the majors at the same time.

"He talks about it," Griffey Jr. said. "You can't get him to stop sometimes. He's my father, so I can't say 'Dad, I've got to go now.' I listen to him."

Rose, 19, was a 12th-round selection by Baltimore last June out of Oak Hills High in Cincinnati. His father is baseball's all-time hit leader (4,256) and a probable member of the Hall of Fame.

"I don't think there's pressure to be as good as my father because nobody expects that," Rose said.

Like his father, Rose made himself into a ballplayer with hustle.

"I grew up around baseball and my father always talked about it," Rose said. "It's something I've always wanted to do."

While his father always talks about baseball, it's not always to his son.

"He said he'd try to see me play but I know that means he won't come," Rose told Gentleman's Quarterly magazine. "Even if I wanted to call him, I don't have his telephone number. I have to call his agent, and he tells my dad I want to talk to him. We don't get in touch unless my dad wants to. Still I love him. He's my dad."

Some were surprised that the Reds did not draft Rose.

"It wouldn't have been fair," his father said. "I would have been tougher on him and he deserves an equal shot."

Cal Ripken Sr. managed his sons in Baltimore, Cal and Billy, and both were angry when he was fired last April after the Orioles opened the season 0-6.

Pete Rose II already has his future stardom mapped out and it's predicated on his father remaining as manager of the Reds.

"I have a dream that the Orioles are playing the Reds in the World Series and I hit a grand slam home run in the ninth inning of game seven," Rose told the AP. "I don't think my dad would be completely happy but my mom would."

Like Pete Rose II, Barry Bonds didn't have a lot of help from his father on the way up.

In his second season with the Pittsburgh Pirates in 1988, Bonds hit .283 with 24 homers, 58 RBIs and 17 stolen bases.

"I never pressured Barry into baseball," Bobby Bonds said. "He just had the talent."

Bobby Bonds reached the 30-30 club (homers and stolen bases) a record five times in his career.

"I think I have a shot at 30-30 someday," Barry said. "I have to cut down on strikeouts.

"My father never pushed me into being a baseball player. I just did that on my own."

Alou, a Pirate prospect, could hardly miss being a baseball player.

His father, Felipe Alou, and uncles, Matty and Jesus, once started in the same outfield for the San Francisco Giants.

He was drafted from a California junior college in 1986 and hit .313 for Augusta of the South Atlantic League last year.

Scouts say Alou has quick wrists and has a hitting style similar to uncle Matty, who had his best years in Pittsburgh.

"I have gotten a lot of advice on little things," Alou said. "But no matter who your father is if you can't hit it doesn't matter." San Diego's Sandy Alomar Jr. is one of the most sought after catching prospects in baseball. Last season, he hit .297 with 16 homers and 71 RBIs for Triple-A Las Vegas.

His father, now a coach with the Padres, played for 15 years and led the American League in at-bats with 689 in 1971 while a member of the California Angels.

"Playing on the same team with my brother and my father coaching is something I didn't expect," Sandy said. "My brother and I didn't really see my father play. I think of him more as a coach."

For 14 years, Randy Hundley was a standout defensive catcher and spent his most productive years with the Chicago Cubs from 1966-1973. His son, Todd, is considered one of the New York Mets' top catching prospects.

"My father has helped a lot with the mechanics of being a catcher," said Hundley, 19. "He told me good cathers can make it faster in the the majors and I think I'll be ready soon."

The Mets say defensively Hundley is already major-league material but he needs work on his hitting.

Todd Stottlemyre got off to a shaky start with the Toronto Blue Jays (4-8, 5.69) last season and was demoted to Triple-A Syracuse.

In the minors, Stottlemyre looked a lot more like his father, Mel, going 5-0 with a 2.05 earned-run average.

This season, he looks even more like his father on the mound. He's changed his number to 30.

Celtics' Robert Parrish Emerges From Shadows

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BOSTON — He comes to play, not to be praised.

His goal is to collect baskets, not verbal bouquets. It takes a team to win, he says, not one man.

But in Boston's season of struggles and surgeries, if there is one player who has held the Celtics together, it is Robert Parish. In this strange season, he is, if not yet a center of attention, at least a constant in an ever-changing cast of characters.

"He's just been a pillar of strength," Boston Coach Jimmy Rodgers said.

"It's almost as if you take him for granted, he's been doing it for so long," forward Ed Pinckney said. "He does a quiet job."

Parish is a stoic, unsmiling star on the court, his jutting brow giving a misleading appearance of meanness. Off it, he is a surprisingly gregarious man with an easy laugh. When he chooses to be.

The man they call "Chief" slips off to the trainer's room after home games to avoid media questioning. He'd do it on the road, too, he said, but "I don't have a place to hide."

There was no one incident that prompted that policy, he added. "I'd just rather not" answer post-game questions.

He is available at practice, where he said he hasn't gotten the credit he deserves as the NBA's second leading rebounder and the Celtics' second leading scorer.

"It's been that way all my career, so why should it change now? I can't think of a reason," he said.

He admits that he is partially to blame.

"The fact that I don't make myself accessible to the media has something to do with it," Parish said. "I'm sure of that."

He also was an all-star on a team of all-stars. The spotlight has been on forwards Larry Bird and Kevin McHale for most of Parish's eight years with the Celtics. But Bird played in only six games before undergoing surgery on both heels Nov. 19 that probably will keep him out for the rest of the regular season and, possibly, all of the playoffs.

As a result, the 7-foot-½-inch Parish, a center with amazing agility and a soaring, deadly jump shot, is emerging from the shadows.

Until a left knee bruise kept him out of the starting lineup for the first time this season Wednesday night, he was averaging 18.8 points and 12.6 rebounds per game. His .575 field goal percentage was third in the league.

"I think I'm having a great year, individually," he said. "Statistically, everything is up. With the people that we've got out, I'm more involved offensively and there's definitely more rebounds available with Larry being out because he normally gets nine or 10 a game.

"The opportunity is there, so I'm just taking advantage of it."

Parish also is the key to Boston's defense. He clogs the middle and, in his deep voice, barks out instructions to teammates.

In a 119-108 victory over San Antonio March 20, he had 18 points, 13 rebounds, three blocks and three assists in 24 minutes.

"The big guy was phenomenal," Spurs Coach Larry Brown said. "He kept them in the game when he had to."

Parish and McHale also are the keys to Boston's potent inside game. That chore fell primarily to Parish in a victory over Philadelphia last Sunday, in which he had 30 points and 16 rebounds, and a loss to the 76ers last Tuesday when McHale was sidelined with right foot problems. Parish was hurt in that second meeting and both players missed Wednesday night's 106-97 win over Portland.

Boston, which has five players who weren't with the team when the season began, was 23-28 on Feb. 21. It was 36-33 after the win over Portland despite injury problems that included a season-ending wrist operation on guard Jim Paxson last Tuesday.

"I'm just picking up some of the slack, that's all," Parish said. "It's not an individual sport. It's a team effort."

"He's given everything that you ever ask of a guy to give under the circumstances. Not that he hasn't in the past," Rodgers said. "He anchors the defense. He ancors the boards. He starts the fastbreak. He's playing great offensively and on a consistent basis."

At age 35 and in his 13th NBA season, Parish is still playing with a youthful zest. The acquisition of backup center Joe Kleine from Sacramento Feb. 23 has reduced Parish's minutes and could prolong his career.

"I take it one year at a time," Parish said. "I feel good."

"He's never wavered at all as far as enthusiasm and work ethic and consistency," Rodgers said. "We're still going through problems, but I see a lot of enthusiasm, guys staying together, working hard.

"I think a lot of that stems from the example Robert has set."

Pinckney, who came to Boston with Kleine, agrees.

"He's pretty much doing the job he's done for a long time," Pinckney said. "Because of the other guys that are injured, he's getting more attention and people are getting to see what he can really do out on the court."

NCAA May Move 3-Point Line Back

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SEATTLE — Gym custodians, get your paint brushes ready. The NCAA rule tinkerers are toying with a small change that would mean repainting 3-point lines on college courts.

There's no danger of the 3-pointer vanishing after the rules meeting Monday, though some notable coaches such as Indiana's Bobby Knight and Southern California's George Raveling wish it would. The idea is merely to bring the arc out nine inches farther from the hoop to conform to international standards and make the shot a bit more difficult.

In its three years in the NCAA, the 3-pointer or bomb or trey or triplet or whatever else it's called, has become a fan favorite that is alternately wonderful and maddening for coaches. Given its impact, and its added excitement for the TV market, not many want to tamper with it too much.

Louisville coach Denny Crum calls it "the greatest change we've had in the game of basketball" in at least 30 years, even more than the rule changes to counter Wilt Chamberlain's control of the pivot.

"It's not only changed the offense and the ways to attack, but it's changed defenses," Crum said. "You've got to go out and guard those people now. That changes your interior defense. But the biggest impact is that it changes the way the game is scored."

Scoring is up to 151.5 points per game for both teams this year, nearly four points higher than a year ago and sixth highest in NCAA history. Four years ago, when all teams used the 45-second clock for the first time but before everyone adopted the 3-pointer, scoring was averaging 138.7 points per game.

Of the Final Four teams, two had outstanding 3-point shooters: Glen Rice rolled in with 92 of 176 for Michigan and Andrew Gaze had 89 of 207 for Seton Hall while teammate John Morton had 75 of 176. Seton Hall relied on the 3-pointer more than the other three teams, making 207 of 492. Michigan made 187 of 395, Illinois 126 of 312 and Duke 141 of 181.

Knight recognizes the powerful effect the 3-pointer has had on the game, but he'd just as soon ban the bomb forever.

"I'd like to see it rescinded completely," Knight said, "but I think it'll stay where it is."

When the old American Basketball Association introduced the 3-point shot in 1967, purists sneered and called it a gimmick similar to the league's red, white and blue ball, which always seemed more appropriate on a seal's nose.

Well, some fans and coaches are still sneering, though the 3-pointer is popular in the colleges and the pros.

The change proposed by a panel of coaches would move the line out to 20-feet, 6-inches to match the international and Olympic standard but stay well short of the NBA's tapered arc, which ranges from 22 feet to 23-9. If the international distance is changed, the college lines would be repainted again, according to the proposal.

If the NCAA rules committee goes along with the coaches' recommendation it would mean the 3-pointers in the Final Four championship game Monday night would be the last at the shorter distance.

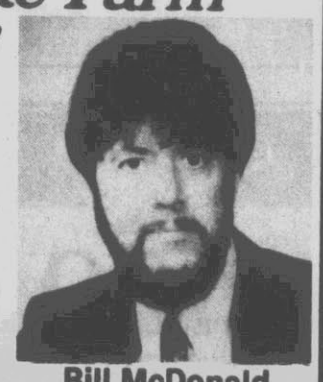

Knight argues that the 3-pointer fails to reward a difficult shot as its backers originally suggested.

"I still shoot the ball from that distance and it is not a difficult shot," he said. "In fact, over the course of a basketball game, that shot usually is taken as an open shot and it becomes one of the easier ways of scoring."

Knight, of course, is still smarting over Seton Hall's 3-point barrage in the third round of the NCAA tourney.

Games Begin In Alabama Turkey Season

By Bill Schulz
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TUSKEGEE, Ala. — The magnificent bird gobbled, drummed and strutted, showing off his red wattling and luminescent brown tailfeathers as he paced among the dogwood saplings on the ridge.

But he was out of shotgun range at 110 yards and refused to come closer.

"That's turkey hunting," James Earl Kennamer, director of research and management for the National Wild Turkey Federation, said after the big gobbler tired of the game and stalked off.

"There are some birds that won't come in."

It was the first week of the Alabama turkey season and there were other hens in the woods. Later, as more hens were bred and in hiding incubating their eggs, the gobbler would work harder to find a lady.

The game had lasted nearly 90 minutes, with Kennamer using a mouth call, box call and slate call to try to coax the gobbler close enough so we could get a shot — about 30 yards.

The turkey gobbled enthusiastically, rattling the trees and their tiny, newborn leaves, with proclamations he was there and available.

Turkey hunting is about the ultimate battle of the sexes.

"He was doing what he was programmed to do," said Kennamer. "He's supposed to stay there and gobble and show off and get the hens to come to him."

The hunter's job is to be a female impersonator, using his calls to be coy, cute and inviting, to convince the gobbler the lady of his dreams is out there and waiting and all he has to do is walk that few dozen yards to enjoy her favors.

The tactics and strategy are essentially the same both early and late in the turkey season, but there are different problems.

Early in the season, the gobblers haven't been "educated," Kennamer said. They haven't been worked or spooked by a lot of callers and often will respond more readily to a call.

But in the early season the gobbler frequently has hens with him.

"I can do all I can, but I'm not that good. I can't beat the real thing," Kennamer had said earlier that morning after one of the hens traveling with two gobblers had persuaded the males to ignore the song of the siren coming from a few yards inside the grove of hardwoods.

The best early season gobbler to hunt is one who either hasn't gathered hens or has lost them for whatever reason. He is looking for female companionship and will more readily respond to the call.

But no matter how good the call, a hunter's setup in the woods is vital, Kennamer said.

"Calling is important, you can't overemphasize it," he said, "but more turkeys are killed with good woodsmanship and poor calling than the other way around."

The birds' eyesight and hearing are phenomenal. A hunter must be in complete camouflage, up against a tree or other cover which will hide his silhouette and be completely motionless.

Wind direction doesn't matter. Turkeys have little sense of smell.

"If turkeys could smell, they'd hunt us," Kennamer said.

Our bird, like all toms on the make, kept looking for the lady, peering through the leaves, looking for the source of the enticing clucks, putts and yelps.

Since he couldn't see her and she wouldn't come to him he ran out of patience — and won this battle of the sexes.

Endangered Woodpeckers Get Help

The first phase of a U.S. Forest Service policy designed to increase the population of an endangered woodpecker on national forests in North Carolina and other Southern states is being put into effect immediately, according to agency officials.

The red-cockaded woodpecker, which nests inside living pine trees, is on the endangered species list of the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service. Pine trees are the most common type of tree growing in national forests in the South.

The new Forest Service policy modifies harvest methods within three-quarters of a mile of red-cockaded woodpecker colony sites and will be applied to populations of less than 250 colonies. A typical colony has three to four birds — a breeding pair and one or two helpers.

The policy will generally eliminate the use of clearcutting as a harvest method within three-quarters of a mile of woodpecker colonies on proposed timber sales.

In addition, existing sales will be reviewed to ensure minimal impact to red-cockaded woodpeckers before harvesting is allowed to continue.

In lieu of clearcutting stands of trees, increase emphasis will be placed on thinning existing stands near red-cockaded woodpecker colonies. Under this system, a substantial number of trees are left on each acre to continue to provide suitable habitat for the birds.

The hardiest, most suitable and oldest of these trees will not be harvested. Many of these pine trees can be expected to live to be more than 100 years old and should provide good nesting habitat in the future.

Three red-cockaded woodpecker populations in the Southern region are not affected by the decision because they have more than 250 colonies and the total population is stable or increasing. Those areas are at Francis Marion National Forest in South Carolina, Apalachicola National Forest in Florida and three of six ranger districts on the Kisatchie National Forest in Louisiana.

The policy will be implemented in the Croatan National Forest near New Bern, N.C., as well as in Kentucky, Tennessee, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, Arkansas and Louisiana.

According to John E. Alcock, southern regional forester, it was "timely and appropriate now to implement this program after completing a study which indicated significant declines in most of the smaller red-cockaded woodpecker populations."

He said the Forest Service is "committed to taking whatever actions are necessary to do all we can to save these populations."

Wildlife biologists from the service, coordinating with officials from the Fish and Wildlife Service, are working on additional guidelines which are expected to be implemented later in the spring. These interim guidelines, together with the current policy manual, will supersede existing directions until the Forest Service Southern Regional Guide can be revised. The revisions could take 18 to 36 months to complete.

The red-cockaded woodpecker frequently is mistaken for the red-headed woodpecker, but is substantially different in looks, with only small tufts of red hair near the back of its head.

Wildlife biologists attribute the decline in populations to several factors. One is an overabundance of medium-height hardwood trees, which cause a variety of problems including nesting competition from flying squirrels.

Population decline also may be due to a lack of old pine trees for nesting, possible fragmentation of foraging habitat, colony isolation because of a decline in the overall population and possible genetic problems.

Intensive surveys have documented decline in population and prompted a detailed review of management practices.

Mackerel Season Began Saturday

A bag limit of five king mackerel per person, per trip for recreational fishermen went into effect in state waters when the season opened Saturday. It will continue through May 8.

The South Atlantic Fisheries Management Council will meet the last week in April to recommend the total allowable catch and bag limit for king and Spanish mackerel in federal waters for the new season that began Saturday and ends March 31, 1990.

Until the National Marine Fisheries Service acts on the council's recommendation, the bag limit in federal waters remains three king mackerel and 10 Spanish mackerel per person, per day.

State limits, applying to waters inside the three-mile limit, will be further evaluated by the N.C. Marine Fisheries Commission on May 8 during a noon meeting at the New Hanover County Library in Wilmington. At that time, the commission and the N.C. Division of Marine Fisheries will determine limits and management needs for the remainder of the season for both king and Spanish mackerel.

For more information, contact the division by calling 1-800-682-2632.

Bird Joins Diners At Hotel For Lunch

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TACOMA, Wash. — While guests inside the restaurant atop the 26-story Sheraton Tacoma Hotel were dining on finely seasoned fowl and other dishes, the guest outside the window was snacking on pigeons.

"We thought it was a hawk," the Sheraton's Barbara Faulkner said about the bird who liked to bring its lunch and join the rest of the diners. "It would bring pigeons up there and, ah, dine, right there on the window ledge."

After a number of complaints, hotel managers called Tacoma's Point Defiance Zoo for advice on how to get rid of the messy eater.

But when they learned it was a rare peregrine falcon, an endangered species rigorously protected by the federal government, they offered it the best perch in the house.

On Monday, the Sheraton sent out a news release proudly announcing the falcon's choice of Tacoma accommodations. The innkeepers speculated the bird was influenced by the hotel's "unobstructed view of the city and Mount Rainier."

Actually, said John Houck, curator of mammals and birds at Point Defiance, the falcon probably regards the Sheraton as a convenient cliff.

"He's bopping the pigeons along the railroad yards," Houck said. "There's a lot of pigeons down there, and it's pretty easy to make a living, picking them off and taking them back to the ledges of the Sheraton to eat."

Peregrine falcons are the fastest birds alive, Houck said, plummeting toward their prey at up to 200 mph in 1,000-foot power dives.

Once numbering in the thousands, the falcons were nearly wiped out in the 1950s and 1960s by pollution.

The falcons have begun a modest recovery, and state Department of Wildlife biologist Eric Cummins estimates there are 10 to 15 nesting pairs in Western Washington.

A number of birds choose city life, attracted by the tall buildings and easy pigeon pickings, the Audobon Society says.

FIBA To Vote On NBA Players' Fate

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MUNICH, West Germany — At the place where America's perfect record in Olympic basketball came to an end almost 17 years ago, top officials of the sport are expected to vote this week to give the United States such an edge that it may never lose again.

FIBA, basketball's international governing body, is to decide Friday whether to open its world championships and the Olympic tournament to professional players.

The move would allow American stars of the National Basketball Association such as Michael Jordon and Magic Johnson to wear "USA" on their jerseys and play for an Olympic gold medal.

"Our intention is to have the best possible players in the Olympics, as with other sports, and our feeling is that professional contracts should not be the criteria for eligibility," said David Turner, technical assistant to FIBA secretary general Boris Stankovic and a key figure in the drive to allow pros in the Games.

At first glance it would seem that the move, in the works for the last three years, could tip the balance of power in Olympic basketball too far in the United States' favor. That may seem unfair for a country that invented basketball and has lost just two times since the sport was introduced to the Games in 1936.

But supporters are confident the measure will be enacted and argue that many nations besides the United States will benefit from the move.

"It's not just Americans who play in the NBA," Turner said. "Look at West Germany, which has three players in the NBA. Puerto Rico and Canada also would benefit."

The Philippines, which has a thriving professional league of its own, would get a boost in Olympic competition, Turner said, while Nigeria, which never has played in the final Olympic group, could suddenly become a power with the eligibility of one of the NBA's superstars, Akeem Olajewon of the Houston Rockets.

"This is hypothetical, of course, but imagine the program Nigeria could build around Akeem," Turner said.

Admitting high-profile professionals also could raise interest in the sport and help basketball development worldwide, the official added.

The Olympics had an uninterrupted string of U.S. gold medalists in the men's basketball tournament from the sport's introduction in Berlin through the 1968 Games in Mexico City. The Americans were unbeaten in that stretch and few teams came close to their power; after beating Canada 19-8 in the 1936 gold-medal game, the closest the Americans came to a loss in Olympic finals was in 1952, when the Soviet Union resorted to a stall and the United States won 36-25 behind Clyde Lovellette.

Then came 1972 in Munich.

Led by college stars such as Doug Collins, Tommy Burleson, Bobby Jones and Tom McMillen, the United States breezed through the first eight games before meeting the Soviets in the final. In one of the greatest controversies in international sports history, the Soviets scored a last-second basket after the clock was reset for a 51-50 victory, ending the U.S. winning streak at 62 games.

The FIBA vote, at a special meeting called solely to discuss the professionalism issue, will be held in a conference room at Olympic Stadium, in the same parklike complex where the basketball game was held. The man who ordered the clock reset, then-secretary general R. William Jones of Britain, has been mentioned prominently by backers of the open-Games move.

"Integration of the world's best players into FIBA competition under our guardianship is my dearest wish for 1989," Stankovic wrote to federation members earlier this year. "This would also make William Jones' dream come true, who worked for many years to prepare the path toward this goal."

Turner said opposition remained within the federation to the plan but expected the measure, which was narrowly defeated two years ago, to pass.

"We are optimistic," he said. "There is a group opposed to it, but we believe it will be adopted."

In the last five years, more and more sports have opened Olympic eligibility to professionals. Ice hockey, among the first to allow pros, has had problems getting players from the National Hockey League into the Olympic program because the Winter Games come in the middle of the league season.

Turner said that should not be a problem for basketball.

"The world championships next year are in August and the 1992 Olympics in Barcelona are in July and August, and the NBA usually ends its playoffs in mid-June and doesn't start its season until late October or early November," he said. "We should be able to fit it in."

He said getting pro stars to play on Olympic teams would be a problem for national basketball federations to solve.

"I am sure insurance would be an issue in some cases," the FIBA official said.

As for the collegiate and other amateur players who have made up Olympic and world championship teams until now, Turner said there would be plenty left for them.

"There are any number of international tournaments in which they (amateurs) can take part," he said.

The FIBA conference will follow the first European Final Four, a continental club title tournament modelled after the American collegiate championships.

In Tuesday's semifinals, top-seeded Maccabi of Tel Aviv plays fourth-seeded Aris Solonika of Greece, while second-seeded Barcelona plays fourth-seeded Jugoplastika of Yugoslavia. The winners meet for the European club championship on Thursday night at the 12,000-seat Olympic Hall.

Bird And Johnson Made Immediate Impact On NBA

By Bill Barnard
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

For one day in 1979, Larry Bird and Magic Johnson owned college basketball. For one decade after that, if they didn't own the NBA, they certainly held it in their debt.

Magic and Bird. Bird and Magic. Together, they virtually defined the NBA in the 1980s.

Before Johnson joined the Los Angeles Lakers, they were sky hooks from Kareem Abdul-Jabbar. With Johnson, they became Showtime and won five championships in nine years.

The year before Bird arrived in Boston, the Celtics were 29-53. In his rookie year, they were 61-21 and won the first of three NBA championships in the 1980s the following season. The Celtics had 61 consecutive winning months with Bird on the team, a streak that ended last December with him on the sidelines following surgery on both heels.

But the impact of Bird and Johnson on the NBA goes beyond points, rebounds, assists, championships and winning streaks. It approaches the savior category.

The NBA when they arrived in 1979-80 was floundering.

One of the best games of Johnson's career, when he played center in place of the injured Abdul-Jabbar and had 42 points, 15 rebounds and seven assists in the sixth and final game of the 1980 championship series, was televised on tape delay at 11:30 p.m. on the East Coast.

"The fact that the game was not on live TV says a lot about where the NBA was then," Johnson said. "Larry and I came in and we were able to bring the NBA into prime time. Now, all the final games are shown live in prime time. We're proud of that. We're proud of the changes we helped make. All the teams are making money. Players are making big salaries. Larry and I were definitely responsible for that."

CBS paid the NBA just $16 million to televise its games that season, and USA had a $400,000 cable contract. Today, the CBS bill is $44 million per year —a figure that undoubtedly will go higher next season when the contract expires —and the TBS national cable contract is for $25 million more.

Attendance in Bird and Johnson's rookie year averaged 11,000 per game league-wide. This season, the average is nearly 15,000.

Of course, Bird and Johnson aren't the only reasons for the resurgence.

Julius Erving and Moses Malone were legitimate marquee names and Michael Jordan came along in the mid-80s to bring the NBA to greater heights. Better and more responsible management, the avoidance of player strikes and more effective marketing and promotion share the credit.

But no one doubts this is the Magic-Bird decade.

"They originated the comeback of the NBA," Jordan said. "They dominated the league with their teams. They gave the NBA a big push and got back the respect of the fans. Together, they pushed the league forward. They have meant a lot to the game for 10 years."

"The NBA is on an upward spiral and I think it's directly related to those two guys coming into the league," Boston coach Jimmy Rodgers said. "Both have gone to teams that have succeeded consistently with both of them as dominant players. I think the whole league has rallied around what they've contributed. More people want to watch pro basketball and more people want to watch on their TV."

Sidney Moncrief of Milwaukee, another 1979-80 rookie who led the Bucks to nine consecutive 50-win seasons, says the contributions of Bird and Johnson are incalculable.

"Pick out any two players who probably had the biggest impact, it has to be Magic and Larry," Moncrief said. "Before they came in, the exposure and interest was not as great as it is now. This was probably the first time that interest in the college game carried over to the NBA. Their arrival marked the start of lucrative TV contracts."

Moncrief, a five-time All-Star, has played in relative obscurity in a small NBA market, while Bird and Johnson have spent their entire careers in cities with long traditions of NBA excellence. But he believes that Bird and Johnson would have been stars anywhere.

"It helped that they went to L.A. and Boston, but they are impact players regardless of where they played," Moncrief said.

On the court, Bird and Johnson revolutionized the NBA with their emphasis on all-around excellence.

The term "triple-double" — double figures in three statisical categories in one game — was practically invented to showcase Johnson's abilities.

Bird won consecutive Most Valuable Player awards from 1984-1986 because he combined the inside rebounding skills with uncanny shooting accuracy from outside. His fellow players regard him with awe ... Bird admits that he won the first three 3-point shooting contests on All-Star weekend by psyching his opponents into believing they were playing for second place.

Larry Brown, who coached in the NBA before Bird and Johnson arrived and later came back to the league after their games were established, said the two players are a model for pro players to follow.

"When I coached in New Jersey, I had all young kids on the team and the first thing I wanted to do was bring them out before a game and watch Bird work out," Brown said. "I thought, 'Here's the best player in the world, or one of the best, out there before the ballgame, and that's why he's the best.' I wanted them to see that."

Brown, now coach of a poor San Antonio team, credits Johnson and Bird with making the NBA popular even without their presence.

"Years ago, people would come to see Magic or Larry, but now you see sellouts even when we come to town," Brown said. "That's an indication of the popularity of the league."

Elliott, King, Ferry And Ellison Top NBA's Choices

By Bill Barnard
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

There's an excellent chance that one of the players in the NCAA's final 16 will be the top pick in the NBA draft on June 27.

Marty Blake, the NBA's chief scout, names Arizona's Sean Elliott, Danny Ferry of Duke, Stacey King and Mookie Blaylock of Oklahoma, Glen Rice of Michigan and Pervis Ellison of Louisville as possible first selections.

Some scouts have a shorter list — Elliott, King, Ferry and Ellison are mentioned most often — but Blake said, "I wouldn't narrow the list down. Beauty is in the eye of the beholder. Last year, there was no doubt it was Danny Manning. This year, nobody knows what's going to happen. No one knows who has the No. 1 pick yet."

"What if Indiana picks first?" Blake said. "It's highly unlikely they would take a center. But who knows?"

Blake scoffed at those who say the 1989 draft is weak.

"All nine teams in the lottery are going to get a very good player," Blake said. "There are people who tell you this is a bad draft. There's no such thing. How can you say any year is a bad draft when the NBA has gotten players like Jerome Kersey, Gerald Wilkins and Kevin Duckworth in the second round?"

Five rookies have scored more than 20 points in their debuts at Boston Garden this season.

Ricky Berry of Sacramento scored 28, Rony Seikaly of Miami had 22 and Kevin Edwards of the Heat, Rex Chapman of Charlotte and Rik Smits of Indiana scored 21 each.

Only the Pacers beat the Celtics, however.

The last team with four players averaging 18 or more points for a season was the 1972-73 Baltimore Bullets, with Elvin Hayes at 21.2, Phil Chenier at 19.7, Archie Clark at 18.3 and Mike Riordan at 18.1. Clark, however, played only 39 games.

Going into Friday's games, Brad Daugherty was averaging 19.0, Mark Price 18.8, Ron Harper 18.7 and Larry Nance 17.6 for the Cleveland Cavaliers.

Phoenix had a chance to have four 18-point scorers until Armon Gilliam slumped in the second half, leaving Tom Chambers, Eddie Johnson and Kevin Johnson with 20-plus averages.

Sacramento Kings coach Jerry Reynolds is having a tough season, with a collapse on the sidelines and his team losing 70 percent of its games.

"I have been convinced for some time that the Lord is punishing me for past transgressions," Reynolds said. "I was a pretty ornery little guy. But it seems to me that I may be getting blamed for some other Jerry Reynoldses, too."

Indiana coach Dick Versace said that an NBA team having its own jet is worth seven victories a season.

"You've got to have vision," said Versace, who was an assistant coach at Detroit, the only NBA team with a private airplane, before moving to the Pacers. "Those seven games could be the difference of a winner, the difference between 36 and 43 games. You have a tremendous investment in people in the NBA, so why wear them out on runways, in airport waiting areas?"

4 ♡	Pass	4 NT	Pass
5 ◇	Pass	6 ♠	Pass

Opening lead: Jack of ♠

It is surprising how even good players can fail to spot seemingly obvious lines. An expert played too fast on this one.

North's bid of four hearts was a cue-bid confirming spades as trumps and showing a maximum no trump. South trotted out Blackwood just in case (the heart cue-bid in theory denied the ace of clubs), then settled in a small slam when he discovered that one ace was indeed missing.

The opening club was taken by East's ace and a club was returned. Since he had an unavoidable heart loser, declarer discarded one from hand. He drew trumps and, after frittering around for a while, tried the diamond finesse. When West showed out on the second round. declarer became aware of his fate—down one.

Declarer made a critical error. At trick two, he failed to announce that, barring a 5-0 diamond break, he was claiming his contract!

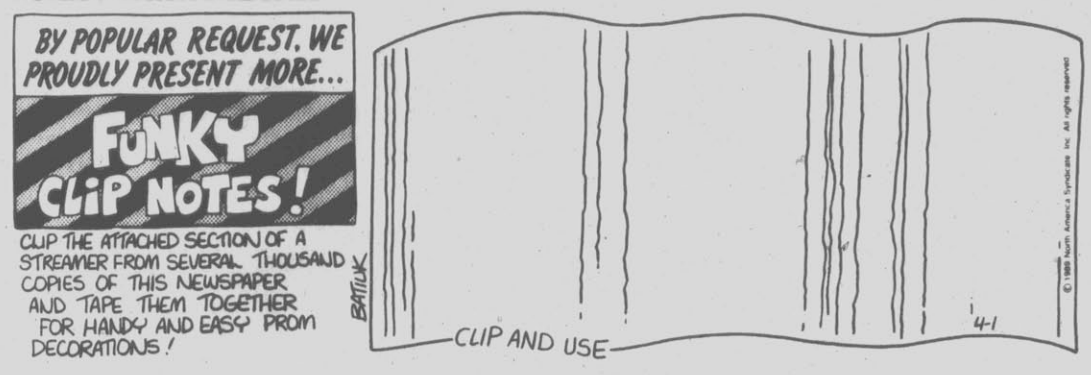

Instead of a heart, declarer should have discarded a diamond on dummy's club winner. After drawing trumps in as many rounds as necessary, he should go after setting up the diamonds. As long as both defenders follow to the ace of diamonds, the contract is secure.

Declarer continues with a second diamond to the king, then ruffs a diamond. A heart to the king is the entry for the second diamond ruff, which sets up a long card in the suit. The ace of hearts serves as the dummy entry to let declarer take a heart discard on the long diamond.

Low-Cost, Quick-Fix Ideas May Help Cut Costs In Home Project

Does it require a really experienced decorator to get the maximum decorating mileage out of a dollar?

Not at all, say designers Mary Meehan and Robert Metzger, who have come up with a few top-drawer ideas that wouldn't cost all that much.

Although both ignored budgetary constraints this spring in rooms they decorated at New York's Kips Bay Showhouse, they were able to suggest some low-cost, quick-fix ideas for imparting special style to your home.

"Cost is irrelevant," says Miss Meehan, a New York designer whose clients usually can afford not to pay much attention to the expense. It is the unexpected that makes for interest, not the dollars, she says.

"In my house in Southampton (Long Island, N.Y.), I have a lot of junk furniture from second-hand stores that I've painted," she says. "Put that junk in a room with one thing that's really good — a rug, painting, chair, armoire, for example — and it will still look terrific."

She says you can find the money for the splurge item by saving in other places. "I prefer to buy an old sofa and put a slipcover on it and then spend the difference on something with value and impact," she says.

Another factor that distinguishes rooms created by good designers, she says, is attention to detail. "Details make the difference between a room that look well-planned and one that doesn't. People notice, but they don't know that they do."

An example is to upgrade the lampshades. "You can turn ordinary lampshades into custom wonders with store-bought dye and commercial trims applied with glue," she says.

For about $35, she created a shade by dyeing a plain white lampshade a very pale pink and then applying a fringe trim in pink and green at the base and a thinner braid trim with the same colors at the top. It took only a few minutes and less than a yard of trim, she says, to create something that would cost about $200 if custom-made.

"Many people are afraid to do things that are not formula," says Miss Meehan. "That is what decorators do. Until they actually see it in place, they don't know for sure if their choices will work together. I don't care how good you are. The very best decorators try some things that won't work and they take them out."

Designer Metzger advises dealing with bad walls by slipcovering them in inexpensive fabric. He seams fabric top and bottom and then installs it in ready-made hardware that fastens to the ceiling or wall. Or he uses Velcro fasteners on the wall and fabric, or simply staples the fabric to the wall.

Metzger says that sheeting and remnants you can buy for 99 cents a yard work as well as more costly fabrics and the effect can completely change the room.

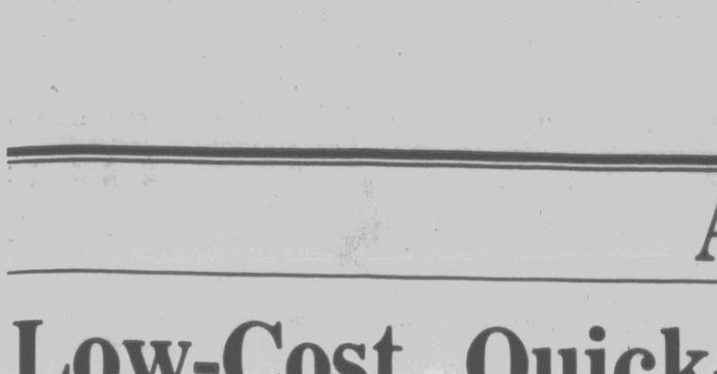

If cost is a factor, he says, disguise the bad condition of wood and concrete floors with paint.

When carpeting a stairway, paint stripes to the left and right of the carpeted tread to create the illusion of a costly border treatment.

To create height and emphasize a mood of grandeur at windows, he suggests hanging curtains right at the ceiling line. If the preferred treatment is a shade, it, too, can be hung above the actual window.

If you need substantially more storage room, don't overlook the possibility of converting the unused space under a staircase, Metzger says. Remove the sheetrock surround and install shelves. Then cover the space with a hinged door and different sheetrock or pull-up panels. He suggests painting or wallpapering it to match the rest of the room.

Here's The Answer

By Andy Lang

Q. — Is there some rule of thumb that can be used when working with adhesives? In the past, when using adhesives, I have found it difficult to know when to use one kind of adhesive and when to use another. Can you help? I especially am anxious to find out when the so-called flexible adhesives should be used and when they should not.

A. — It sounds as if you are not an avid reader of the instructions on the adhesive containers. This is partly the fault of the manufacturers, who sometimes have the instructions in such small type that a magnifying glass is required to read them. But, no matter how difficult it is to make out the instructions, you should make it your business to see what they say. Generally, a flexible adhesive is required when the two objects to be joined are made of different materials; as for instance, when joining wood to glass. That's because different materials expand and contract differently when there is a change in the weather. With an adhesive that is inflexible this can cause trouble. But nothing takes the place of reading the instructions and following them to the letter.

Q. — I intend to put down a concrete floor soon. Is there some way to tell when to use a base of aggregates and sand and when it can be skipped? Years ago, when I did this a couple of times, I guessed wrong both times.

A. — Generally, a base is needed if the ground is fairly soft. You can proceed without a base only if the ground is hard. Even when it is, it should be compacted. If there is any doubt in your mind about the hardness of the soil, put down the aggregate and sand, with about four times as much aggregate as sand.

Q. — The wooden shingles on the outside of our house are fairly new but have no finish at all on them. How can they be finished?

A. — An impossible question to answer unless your personal preferences are known. What effect are you trying to achieve? The shingles can be stained or painted or coated with a preservative or bleached. Most of the time, people prefer not to paint the shingles, yet it is done occasionally when a color change is desired. Using a finish that allows the grain and texture to show through is a more common way of treating them. Should you decide to paint them, use a primer recommended by the manufacturer, otherwise you may find the shingle substance will "bleed" through. In painting, remember the shingles absorb much of the paint. You will need at least two coats of paint over the primer. Apply the paint with a brush and put on a heavier coat than you would over ordinary siding.

Anything we buy costs more when it is purchased in small quantities. But not if all of it is used.

One of the greatest wastes in home workshops is the tremendous amount of paints, varnishes, glues and other do-it-yourself materials that is thrown out every day. Think of how often you have disposed of finishing products because they had become hard or gone bad after only part of the container's contents had been used.

We may have bought the items in fairly large quantities because they were cheaper that way. Why spend $3 for a half-pint of something when you can get a quart of it for $8? In the quart size, that comes to $2 a half-pint, whereas the same amount in a smaller size would be $12! Where are the savings if you use only a little of the material in the quart container and never get around to it again? Even if you do, the chances are it has become unusable or spoiled just enough to ruin or lower the quality of your project.

Some years ago, after we had written on this subject, the public relations director of a paint manufacturer took exception to the article, saying most paints last indefinitely if they are taken care of properly after being partially used the first time. He was told he had missed much of the point: that most people do not properly store such materials and so later lose the use of them.

All of this came to mind the other day while reading "The Weekend Refinisher" by Bruce Johnson. Once a professional refinisher, he said: "In my refinishing career, I can remember getting to the bottom of only a few cans of stain or finish; the rest I either had to throw away or manage to knock over before the can was empty."

Johnson brought up another angle: that certain liquids — strippers, glues, stains and finishes — have a relatively short shelf life. "Part of the problem with buying any of them," he said, "is you have no reliable way of knowing how old they are or whether they have been exposed to freezing temperatures, two factors that have a direct impact on their performances." As for buying materials such as these in quantities that you are likely to use fairly soon, Johnson said: "Buying in small quantities is not necessarily a disadvantage, however, especially when you realize $10 can buy either one gallon of Colonial Maple or a pint each of Golden Oak, Light Walnut, Mahogany and Colonial Maple. Besides the fact that four small cans are easier to store than one large can, you can mix those four together in various combinations to create limitless numbers of colors."

The Johnson book provides plenty of helpful hints for the weekend refinisher, but it is more than a guide for do-it-yourselfers. The author's penchant for personalizing everything he writes about makes it all worth reading even if you never contemplate stripping and refinishing a table or other piece of furniture.

Talking about the tools needed for refinishing, Johnson said: "One of the most enoyable and challenging aspects of being a weekend refinisher is utilizing a number of common tools for a variety of purposes. A pair of old socks can turn an extra hammer into a padded mallet for tapping apart loose joints. A few strokes with a metal file can turn a screwdriver into a miniature scraper or a dull chisel into an upholstery tack remover. You can also use that same metal file to remove old glue from the end of a chair rung or round a sharp edge on an unfinished reproduction corner cupboard."

(Do-it-yourselfers will find helpful information on a variety of subjects in Andy Lang's "Practical Home Repairs," which can be obtained by sending $2 to this paper at Box 5, Teaneck, NJ 07666.)

Q. I read in the newspaper about the hundreds of praying mantises that hatched in the North Carolina Museum of Art when a praying mantis egg case was brought in on sculpture woven out of sapling. What does a praying mantis egg case look like?

A. A praying mantis egg case looks like a lump of hardened, brown foam. It is usually attached to a weed or the twig of a tree or shrub. The case in about the size of a quarter of smaller. The eggs hatch in spring or, in the case of the museum, earlier if they are brought into a warm area.

Q. What is meant by "hardening off" plants?

A. "Hardening off" plants is the process of conditioning plants to a new environment. Vegetable seedlings and bedding plants from a greenhouse are succulent and tender. They should be hardened off before being planted outside where a sudden change to lower humidity, exposure to wind and more intense sunlight can injure the plants. Hardening off is accomplished by gradually exposing the young plants to outdoor conditions and, in some cases, giving them less water and fertilizer. Hardening off is often done in a cold frame. Hardened off plants will not have the lush looks of plants direct from the greenhouse, but they are much better prepared to go into the garden.

Q. When is this year's Mordecai Garden Symposium?

A. The seventh annual Mordecai Garden Symposium will be May 18-20 in Raleigh. This year's theme is "The Well-Furnished Garden ... from Floor to Ceiling." Speaking at the Thursday night session will be Marco Polo Stufano, director of horticulture at Wave Hill Garden, Bronx, New York, who will illustrate how to use plants to create a garden rather than a collection. A reception will be in the North Carolina State Capital.

Adter tours of area gardens on Friday morning, the symposium moves to Meredith College to explore the various layers of the garden with talks on trees , shrubs and perennials. Barry Yinger, formerly with the National Arboretum in Washington, will present "Small Trees That Are Finer for Carolina." Viki Ferreniea, assistant director of horticulture at Wayside Gardens, will speak on shrubs. Lynden Miller, director of Central Park's Conservatory Garden, will tell what's new in perennials.

On Saturday, Brent Heath, of The Daffodil Mart in Glousecter, Va., will speak on new small bulbs to be used as companion plants. J.C. Raulston, professor of horticulture and director of the N.C. State University Arboretum, will speak on groundcovers and vines. Tony Avent, landscape director of the N.C. State Fairgrounds will give some solid information about lawns.

Projects Must Go With Building Code

By Reader's Digest
FOR AP NEWSFEATURES

Building, remodeling or adding on to a house has to be done in accordance with your municipality's building code. Because procedures and requirements vary widely from town to town, you must learn about your local building code before you begin the work.

A building permit generally is required when the planned improvement will change your home's use or "occupancy," say from a single-family to a multi-family dwelling. It also is required when you build a carport or garage or convert an existing garage to another use; plan to wall in, roof or attach a patio to your house; build a pool deeper than 24 inches; build a retaining wall more than 4 feet high; install plumbing or electricity inside or outside; build a barbecue with a chimney; build a well or install an underground lawn-sprinkler system; install an antenna, tower or flagpole that will exceed 45 feet in height.

Visit your local building inspector early in the planning stage of your project, long before you begin to work. Call ahead to learn what to bring. You may need a survey of your lot and copies of your plans, especially if it's a large project.

The building inspector will tell you whether your plan varies from zoning regulations — for example, building too close to the lot line. If you are creating a nonconforming use such as a business in a residential neighborhood, apply for a variance from a local board of adjustment, appeals board or zoning board.

Building Levels Fall In 1988

Building activity in Greenville dropped in 1988 below activity reported in the previous year, according to statistics released by North Carolina Labor Commissioner John C. Brooks.

In 1988, Greenville recorded 1,198 units authorized at a value of $67,603,863. That compares with 1,205 units authorized in 1987 at a value of $58,771,546.

Greenville's dip in construction activity mirrors an overall trend in North Carolina communities.

Brooks said construction activity authorized in 45 selected North Carolina communities in 1988 fell 8.6 percent when compared to activity in 1987.

Total construction permits, 39,701, were down 3,734 units when compared to the 43,435 units recorded in 1987, although value, $2,495,902,822 rose 3.4 percent above 1987, $2,413,323,354.

Other area municipalities recording lower authorized units recorded in 1988 compared to 1987 were Wilson, with 872 compared with 1,047; Tarboro, with 190 compared with 192; Rocky Mount, with 811 compared with 878; New Bern, with 354 compared with 511 and Goldsboro, with 82 compared with 101.

On a statewide level, residential units, including multifamily and single-family, dropped 14.1 percent, 25,453 in 1988 compared to 29,629 in 1987. Value, $1,020,132,046, dropped 5.1 percent from $1,075,344,315.

Single-family units, 10,664, dropped 10 percent from 11,851 in 1987. Value, $798,970,117, rose 2.2 percent from $781,816,049 in 1987.

Multifamily units, 5,066, dropped 38.5 percent from 8,231. Value, $123,224,822, dropped 38.5 percent from $200,404,727.

Residential additions and alterations, 9,723 permits, rose 1.8 percent from 9,547, permits in 1987. Value, $97,937,107, rose 5.2 percent from $93,123,539.

Non-residential permits (new construction and additions and alterations) totalled 14,248, a 3.2 percent increase above the 13,806 in 1987. Value, $1,475,770,776, was up 10.3 percent from $1,337,979,039 in 1987.

New non-residential construction permits, 6,332, declined 4.6 percent from the 6,634 in 1987. Value, $993,996,684, was up 3.1 percent from $964,377,430.

Georgia Recovers

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ATHENS, Ga. — North Carolina, Tennessee and Florida have taken the lead in economic growth in the South, but Georgia could regain it by the end of the century, a University of Georgia study says.

"All conditions suggest that Georgia again will be growth leader in the decade of the '90s," said Albert Niemi, dean of the College of Business Administration, whose study appears in the April issue of Georgia Trend magazine.

Georgia's growth rate slipped because of layoffs in the automotive and aircraft industries and reduced activity at textile plants, he said.

Georgia had led the South in economic growth from 1982 through 1986.

He predicted that Florida will lead the 12-state region in the next decade based in an increased population and tourism.

North Carolina, he said, rode an expansion of manufacturing and service industries to prosperity and has the lowest unemployment rate — 3.8 percent — in the Southeast.

Niemi said Tennessee had a relative slowdown in the last half of 1988 but should weather the decline by developing a more diverse economy.

Airport Authority Approves Bids For Work On Terminal Expansion

By John Bare
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

The Pitt-Greenville Airport Authority has given conditional approval to four prime contractors set to build the $1.3 million terminal expansion.

The construction, which could begin as early as May 1, will add about 11,000 square feet of space, more than double the area of the existing terminal. The addition will increase the amount of general circulation space, add a substantial waiting area, a conveyer-driven baggage carousel, and a departure lounge.

Dennis J. Wiehl, architect with the South Carolina-based LPA Group Inc., recommended to the authority that the board accept offers from Eastern Construction Co. of Greenville as general contractor, Pitt-Electric of Greenville as electrical contractor, Humphrey Heating and Air of Jacksonville as heating and air contractor and Braxton Britt of Wilson as plumbing contractor.

At a special meeting Friday, the board unanimously approved the recommendation, with the contract awards being contingent upon the Federal Aviation Administration's grant approval. Wiehl said the bids are within 1 percent of the probable cost estimates the FAA has already approved.

"I don't forsee any problem with the FAA participating in this project," he said.

Eastern's base bid was $823,000; Pitt-Electric bid $156,835; Humphrey bid $54,771, and Braxton bid $62,000. Braxton was the only company to submit a plumbing bid. All other companies were low bidders in their category.

The authority will now submit the exact dollar cost of the project to the FAA. Once the FAA awards the grant, the Greenville City Council, the Pitt County Commissioners and the authority must sign the measure before it is official. Then, after a preconstruction meeting with the FAA, the notice to proceed with construction should come between May 1 and May 15, Wiehl said.

Jim Turcotte, airport manager, said about 85 percent of the new terminal is considered to be public-use space, thus the FAA and the state Department of Transportation will fund about 77 percent of the cost of the project. County and city governments have each pledged $165,000 to help fund the expansion.

The authority will have to finance only a few items, such as the airline ticket offices, the baggage make up area and the heating unit for the baggage room, Turcotte said.

Derrick Dunn, president of Eastern, said his company has experience with school projects in several counties, jail construction and hospital renovations. The company also constructed a fire and rescue building for the airport.

"We don't really see any major problems with the job," he said. "The 270 days (given to complete the job from the notice to proceed) is ample time to build a building. We don't have any problems with this building. We're looking forward to building this building."

Bids for general contracting ranged from Eastern's low to $909,500 from C.A. Lewis, from Pitt-Electric's low to $179,800 from Electricon and from Humphrey's low to $76,867 from Kinston Plumbing and Heating.

Refunds Possible

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — A U.S. Supreme Court ruling requiring states to treat government pensions equally in tax laws could force North Carolina to refund $100 million to retired federal employees and reduce annual state tax revenues by $35 million, state officials say.

North Carolina taxes federal employee pensions but exempts state and local government pensions in much the same way as a Michigan law that was struck down in the court's 8-1 decision Tuesday.

State officials agreed that a federal court challenge of North Carolina tax laws could force the state to refund all taxes paid on federal pensions in the past three years.

"If the federal employees are smart — and in my opinion they are — they're going to ask for the rebate, and the statute of limitation allows them three years," Sen. Marshall Rauch, D-Gaston, chairman of the tax-writing Senate Finance Committee, said in an interview.

Under North Carolina law, anyone overtaxed can recoup the overpayments from the current year and the two previous years but cannot be reimbursed for years prior to that.

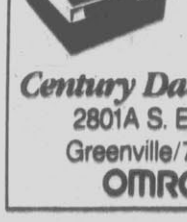

"That's $100 million back this year for three years," Rauch said.

Atlanta Bank Cool To NCNB Bid For Merger

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHARLOTTE, N.C. — The outcome of the quest to merge with Citizens & Southern Corp. may hinge on how determined NCNB Corp. is to win a long-sought position in Atlanta, one of the Southeast's premier banking markets, analysts say.

"It's a question of how high they are willing to go" in increasing the bid price, said Thomas Brown, analyst with Smith Barney & Co. of New York.

NCNB announced its proposed $2.4 billion merger Thursday night, portraying it as friendly. A company statement praised C&S's management and promised to let them keep autonomy in Georgia and retain the C&S name in that state.

But the bid for one of the pillars of Atlanta's corporate community isn't getting a warm reception at C&S.

"We did not solicit this offer. It is uninvited and undesired," C&S Chief Executive Bennett Brown told senior managers in Georgia, South Carolina and Florida in a conference call Friday, sources close to the bank told The Charlotte Observer in a published report Saturday. A C&S spokesman declined to comment on Brown's remarks.

A source close to C&S said the Atlanta bank would oppose NCNB's overtures "with all vigor. There will be a great deal of resistance to this, not only at this price but at higher prices."

In New York Stock Exchange trading, C&S's stock surged $9.125 per share Friday to $35.875 per share, about $3 below the $39 per share value of NCNB's bid. Meanwhile, NCNB's stock fell 75 cents to $35.50 per share.

The proposed merger would be the largest in U.S. banking history and would create the nation's sixth-largest banking firm with $76 billion in assets. It would have the largest share of the Carolinas' and Georgia's deposits and third-largest of Florida's.

The C&S board has broad leeway in deciding whether to accept the deal, even though that would disappoint some shareholders, said one Southeastern banker who has negotiated interstate mergers.

Richard Kattel, who left as C&S's president and chairman in 1978, said C&S would oppose a low bid.

"However I think in today's world, if the price were right — that is, better than $39 — it could become friendlier," Kattel said.

No other bidders for C&S are likely to emerge, analysts said. Laws of Southeastern states permit only banks in the region to make interstate deals, effectively locking out big New York banks. And because of C&S's size, at $21 billion in assets, it appears much too big for any other Southeastern bank to acquire.

In the absence of a deal, C&S stock could lose $557 million in market value it gained Friday and directors could face lawsuits challenging the decision, analysts say.

"Wall Street has spoken," said George Salem, analyst with Prudential-Bache Securities in New York. "At this point, people think that NCNB will buy C&S, or somebody else will pay that price."

Still, bankers and analysts expect directors to ratify C&S managers' opposition. The directors have a meeting Monday.

Some Atlanta executives applauded NCNB's initiative, saying the combination would create a "mega-super-regional" bank with muscle in the Carolinas, Georgia, Florida and Texas.

But others questioned how the hard-charging style of NCNB Chairman Hugh McColl Jr. would play in Atlanta, where some consider gentility an important part of the business code.

"The news came as a shock," said CF Foundation Inc. President Dan Sweat, a 30-year veteran of Atlanta economic development. "C&S is a tremendous community institution, and all of a sudden — bam — it could become part of a completely different animal. We are all wondering how it would change."

Many Georgians still recall McColl's comment to a Florida reporter several years ago in which he said NCNB had no plans to buy banks "in every pig path in Georgia." C&S has the largest branch networks among Georgia's big banks, with branches in many of the state's smaller towns.

McColl is facing Brown, a 59-year-old Kingstree, S.C., native who is regarded as one of Atlanta's most powerful and respected business figures.

In 1979 Brown was named chairman and chief executive officer as C&S emerged from severe financial problems caused by Atlanta's real estate recession in the 1970s.

Acquisitions of banks in Florida in 1985 and South Carolina in 1986 boosted C&S's assets from $8.2 billion in 1982 to $21.1 billion in 1988. The bank is one of the nation's most profitable banking companies, having earned $206.3 million in 1988.

The bank's comeback, as well as its ability to remain independent amid a frenzy of bank mergers, earned C&S a reputation as a survivor that many attribute to Brown.

"By reputation, Bennett Brown is a solid-rock kind of guy," said Jim Carson, chief operating officer of Carter & Associates, an Atlanta-based real estate development firm. "C&S has the flavor of a place that has overcome some tough times. It has solid, experienced management that is highly regarded in Atlanta now."

"I think he'll handle it well," said Charles Loudermilk, chief executive officer of Atlanta-based Aaron Rents Inc. "He's a very capable person. I don't think he'll be taken advantage of."

Trump Signs $365 Million Deal For Eastern Shuttle

LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

Billionaire developer Donald Trump Friday signed a new agreement to buy the Eastern Air Shuttle for $365 million in a deal that could allow a second bidder to use the cash to help buy the rest of the airline.

The agreement could also help Texas Air Chairman Frank Lorenzo avoid a day of reckoning with Eastern's unions in federal bankruptcy court, since such an arrangement would not need court approval.

Trump agreed to pay basically the same price for the Washington-New York-Boston shuttle that he agreed to pay last September, with four extra "non-advance" 727 jetliners thrown in for good measure. These are older jets with only short-range capability.

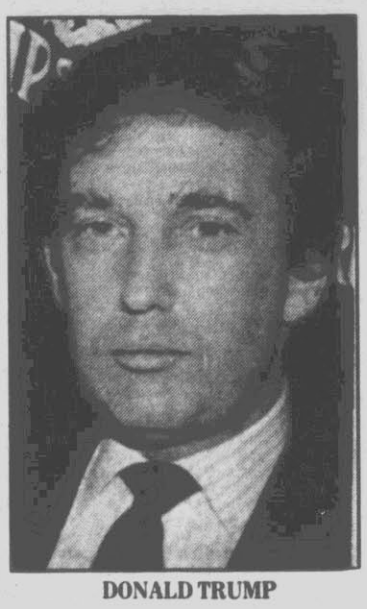

But the new agreement gives both sides 60 days to close the deal, and that, according to a source familiar with Texas Air's strategy, is a key to the whole arrangement. Trump, who has secured the necessary approval for the sale from government aviation agencies, could have closed the deal almost immediately if he chose to.

With the shuttle deal remaining open, Lorenzo can now shop the entire airline to anyone of a number of investors who have expressed an interest in buying Eastern and use the $365 million in cash from Trump as a firm asset to help the potential buyer finance the purchase. "The price of the shuttle becomes a way for someone to finance the deal (for the rest of Eastern)," a source close to the negotiations said.

Eastern President Phil Bakes said Friday that the latest Trump agreement "proves that the value of Eastern's assets remain high and continues to be attractive to various parties."

Ten days ago, Trump told Lorenzo he would walk away from the September deal unless Texas Air cut the price by more than $100 million. He said the value of the shuttle had materially changed as a result of Eastern's labor troubles. Lorenzo responded by saying he would look for other buyers. It was unclear Friday what prompted Trump's return to the negotiating table.

Eastern was struck by the International Association of Machinists March 4 in a dispute over company demands that the union make $120 million in contract concessions.

DONALD TRUMP

Eastern's pilots have refused to cross the machinist picket lines, forcing the airline to curtail 90 percent of its service and seek protection from its creditors in federal bankruptcy court.

Congress Writing Own S&L Rescue

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Congress is under mounting pressure to swiftly pass President Bush's proposal to rescue the savings and loan industry, but a dispute over accounting artistry threatens to knock the plan off the fast track.

The House and Senate banking committees, after six weeks of hearings, begin writing their own versions of S&L legislation this week.

Democrats on the House panel are meeting privately Tuesday in preparation for public drafting sessions beginning two days later. Senators are also gathering behind closed doors this week, before starting open meetings April 13.

"I expect to see (the Bush proposal) adopted without major surgery ... (and) on the president's desk by May," said consultant William Issac, a former chairman of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp.

Quick movement is nearly unprecedented for a major piece of legislation dealing with the financial system and the host of special interest groups representing its segments, but this time fear is a driving force.

S&L depositors are withdrawing their funds in record amounts — $35 billion from November through February — and members of Congress are afraid to risk further deterioration.

S&L regulators at the Federal Home Loan Bank Board say the huge withdrawals are not abnormal when interest rates rise and mutual funds and other competitors offer investors a better return.

However, Treasury Secretary Nicholas F. Brady and the White House budget director, Richard Darman, are telling Congress that depositors are nervous because the president's plan isn't in place.

Brady used several speeches last week — in Dallas, New York and Washington — to press the administration claim that "we will continue to see withdrawals as long as our plan is not enacted into law."

Some in Congress, even those with reservations about the plan, are inclined to give Bush what he wants and try to sidestep political blame if things go wrong. If the plan works, then it was Congress that passed it. If it doesn't, then it's the Bush plan.

But other members of Congress are looking to put their mark on the bill. Administration officials fear the most likely target will be Bush's complex scheme to keep $50 billion in bailout money out of the budget deficit by creating a new government corporation to sell bonds.

NWA Stock Soars After Davis Makes Offer

LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

The price of NWA Inc. shares shot up more than $16 Friday, one day after Los Angeles oilman Marvin Davis made a surprise $2.62 billion bid for the company, which owns Northwest Airlines.

NWA shares closed at $84.875 in frenzied trading on the New York Stock Exchange. The stock was the day's second-most-active issue, with 2.6 million shares changing hands. The closing price fell short of Davis' $90-a-share offer, however.

"I think investors wonder whether Davis can pull it off," said Kurt A. Rivard, an airline industry analyst with the Dain Bosworth investment company in Minneapolis.

Davis told Northwest's board Thursday that he was confident he could raise the money needed to buy the nation's fifth-largest airline, but he offered no details. He was not available for comment Friday.

Northwest, which earlier this week rejected an overture from an unidentified group of shareholders, has yet to respond to Davis, who has been looking for an airline to buy for two years. After being outbid by real estate tycoon Donald Trump for Eastern Airlines' Northeast shuttle five months ago, Davis set his sights on Northwest, which owns valuable Tokyo real estate and key air routes in the burgeoning North Pacific market.

Davis, a billionaire with extensive California real estate holdings, would apparently have little trouble buying Northwest, according to analysts. Last fall, Forbes magazine put Davis' wealth at $1.6 billion and estimated that he had accumulated around $1 billion in cash.

Airline industry analysts have said Davis could raise another $700 million or so by selling, and then leasing back, Northwest's fleet. The airline owns about 260 of its 313 airliners and leases the rest. Davis could raise another $300 million or so, analysts said, by selling Northwest's Japanese real estate.

Australians Buy MGM-UA For $1 Billion

LOS ANGELES (LAT-WP) — After nearly a year of rumors, on again-off again negotiations with a variety of suitors and several 11th-hour reversals, MGM-UA Communications Co. has finally been sold for $1 billion to an Australian company best known in the United States for co-producing the hit TV miniseries "Lonesome Dove."

As part of the deal, major MGM assets will be immediately repurchased by its longtime owner, Kirk Kerkorian, for $250 million.

MGM-UA announced Friday evening that it had accepted a bid from Qintex Group, a Brisbane-based firm with holdings in the media, entertainment, resorts and leisure businesses.The company owns Australia's largest commercial television network as well as Mirage Resorts, which operates resorts in Hawaii and the Australian state of Queensland.

A Los Angeles-based subsidiary, Qintex Entertainment Inc., produces and distributes television programming. The American unit co-produced "Lonesome Dove" with Motown Productions.

Better Weather Deflates Wheat Prices

David Dishneau
AP BUSINESS WRITER

Wheat futures prices sank to a 6-month low Friday on the Chicago Board of Trade as growing conditions in the Great Plains continued to improve, and a pair of government reports suggested crop prices are more likely to fall than rise this summer.

Corn futures prices rallied Friday on rumors of new Soviet purchases while soybeans were mixed.

On other markets, crude oil prices fell sharply; precious metals advanced; and most livestock and meat futures retreated.

Wheat settled unchanged to 5¼ cents lower with the contract for delivery in May at $4.03¾ a bushel, the lowest settlement of a near-month wheat contract since Sept. 19, when wheat for September delivery ended at $3.96¼ a bushel.

Corn settled 2½ cents to 5¾ cents higher with May at $2.68½ a bushel; oats were 1¾ cents to 2 cents lower with May at $1.87¼ a bushel; and soybeans were 1 cent lower to 2¾ cents higher with May at $7.38¼ a bushel.

Wheat's decline followed a steep sell-off on Thursday sparked by heavier-than-expected rain in the parched wheat fields of western Kansas.

The action preceded two eagerly awaited USDA reports — the quarterly grain stocks report and the annual report on farmers' spring planting intentions — that were released shortly after the close.

In its planting projections, based on farmer surveys, the USDA estimated 1989 U.S. corn seedings at 73.3 million acres, an increase of 8.3 percent over last year's actual seedings but well below most analyts' pre-report estimates.

The USDA projected 1989 U.S. soybean seedings at 61.7 million acres, a 4.8 percent increase from last year's actual seedings, which was also below most analysts pre-report expectations.

Taken alone, those numbers would be bullish for crop prices. But Spilka said actual plantings of corn and soybeans historically exceed intentions by about 1 million acres.

Further offsetting the planting projections was the grain stocks report, which showed higher-than-expected supplies of wheat, corn and soybeans.

Analysts found the corn stocks number — 5.2 billion bushels — especially bearish in light of pre-report estimates, which ranged from 4.7 billion to 5 billion bushels.

"This is a major negative surprise for the corn market," said Rich Feltes, director of commodity research with Refco Inc., a large, Chicago-based futures brokerage. "It suggests corn moving down another 15 to 20 cents."

Feltes said the soybean numbers left plenty of room for summer crop damage without threatening supplies. And in the wheat numbers, he said, "I see nothing here to reverse the near-term flushout we've seen this week."

Most petroleum futures prices plunged on the New York Mercantile Exchange in a late sell-off linked to rumors, which were later denied, that the Coast Guard had lifted restrictions on tanker traffic in Alaska's Port of Valdez, the site of a massive oil spill.

Study Says Ports Should Be Sold

- THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOREHEAD CITY, N.C. — A news conference will be held in Raleigh on Monday to announce the findings of a national think tank's study that recommends North Carolina's state ports and two railroads be sold to private investors, officials said.

Officials said the possible move would free up millions of dollars in state revenue.

The state reportedly did not request or fund the nine-month study, but several government officials were aware it was being conducted, the Carteret County News-Times reported.

The Reason Foundation received a grant from the John William Pope Foundation in Raleigh to study the feasibility of selling the state-owned ports in Wilmington and Morehead City and the N.C. Railroad Co. and the Atlantic and N.C. Railroad Co., foundation spokesman Kevin Teasley said.

North Carolina owns both state ports and about 75 percent of the outstanding shares of the railroad corporations. The remaining shares are owned by private investors.

According to a state official who asked not to be identified, state Rep. James Arthur Pope, R-Wake, may submit legislation that would allow the ports and railroads to be sold.

The state official said James Pope is the son of John Pope of the Santa Monica, Calif.-based foundation.

State Rep. Bruce Ethridge, D-Carteret, Rep. Billy Mills, D-Onslow, and Sen. Bill Barker, D-Pamlico, denied any prior knowledge of the study.

"I'm disappointed if there has been a study going on and the Legislature has not been made aware of it," Barker said.

Ernie Pearson, deputy secretary of the state Commerce Department, received a draft of the 30-page report Thursday, said Ken Rabb, director of public affairs for the department.

The foundation will explain its position and present what it calls "a reasonable alternative" to state-owned entities, Teasley said.

Under the proposal, state employees would retain their jobs and receive stock in the new, private companies.

Creative Country Comfort

For The Harmons, This Old House Is Labor Of Love

The Daily Reflector/Shannon Wolfe

Harmon and son Tegan with their toy collection, one of many the family enjoys

By Carol Tyer
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

FARMVILLE — From cupola to cellar doors, front-yard gazebo to back-yard herb plot, there isn't a square foot of Stan and Bobbi Harmon's house and yard that doesn't reflect their creativity.

Farmville resident Bobbi Harmon has been a auction goer and collector since her childhood; her husband Stan has been a visual artist since his youth. The two have collaborated in the past three years to make their 108 S. Contentnea St. home an island of eclectic charm on an already attractive street near Farmville's business district.

A before-and-after glance at the exterior shows formerly dingy white siding now painted an appealing gray-green. Blue-gray shutters have been added, along with a welcoming country front porch. The once unsightly yard is now meticulously landscaped.

The two teamed years ago to create a prototype of country comfort and self-sufficiency in a rented house near Hugo. After seven years, they'd completed that project. And in May 1986 they bought their home in Farmville where Harmon works.

The couple and their two sons, Abel, now 7, and Tegan, now 4, continued to live at Hugo for the first 14 months they owned the house. They spent that time hosing wallpaper off the walls, turning a dilapidated side porch into a brick-sided room and renovating the kitchen.

The kitchen renovation included installing a cupola where a chimney had been, removing the attic and recycling those boards for pegged flooring, opening a loft for a children's playroom, and adding French doors out to the back yard.

A weathervane atop the cupola can be read from inside, and signs posted on either side of the cupola opening tell distances to some of the Harmons' favorite places: Key West (1,014 miles), Blowing Rock (237 miles) and Nags Head (137 miles)

They moved into the house on July 4, 1987. Every room, every feature, every furnishing has a story — and virtually every item in the house has been made, recycled or bargained for by the Harmons, their family and friends.

"I can see something for the house, or for at least one of our collections, everywhere I go," Mrs. Harmon said. "I constantly get ideas and file them away in my head for future use. And for every idea I get, Stan has just the way to bring it into being.

"We sometimes say that I'm the architect and he's the engineer of our team," she said. "Anything I can dream up, he can make."

The Harmons prize the convenience of their house's location. Mrs. Harmon must commute 30 miles to Caswell Center, where she works as a unit director, but it's near Harmon's work as manager of the Farmville wastewater treatment plant. It's within walking distance of their church, First Christian, and near stores, schools and the homes of many of their friends.

Their house, they're told by neighbor B.S. Smith, was built by the Smith family about 1884 and moved from the corner of Church and Contentnea streets to mid-block in the 1920's. It was renovated by Mabel Turnage, now a Greenville resident, with oak flooring, a curving staircase and two cylindrical columns separating the foyer from the living room.

The master bedroom to the left of the front door has a hardwood floor which Mrs. Harmon has pickled herself. Its furnishings include a canopied high-poster waterbed made by Harmon from his wife's design, and a chest of drawers Mrs. Harmon salvaged from a garbage pile and persuaded her husband to renovate. He promises to add a bottom portion later and make it into a chest-on-chest.

"That's the way we operate," Mrs. Harmon said. "Every portion of our house is subject to further change, upgrading and improvement. Everything we do we do with an eye to what can be done later. But at the same time, we enjoy what we already have all the time."

"She's right," Harmon said. "We have projects in all stages of completion. But if we have something even a little bit done, Bobbi will work it into the decor so you almost don't realize it isn't finished."

He pointed to an example — a seed counter from a hardware-seed store that is used as a divider between their kitchen and den. It doesn't have the display fronts of the seed bins replaced yet, but it's attractive and in use now. Someday, those bin fronts will hold seeds again.

Many windows in the house have been cut with the idea of adding stained glass later.

A downstairs room they plan to make a library now houses Harmon's fishing rod and lure collection, Mrs. Harmon's sewing machine, their toy collection, his butterfly collection, a collection of his father's copper wire trees, and other treasures. Mrs. Harmon has been an antique book collector since her college days and before.

Her sewing will eventually be moved to a small house they've recently moved from the L.B. Johnson farm near Farmville to their back yard. It will be renovated in a sewing studio-guest house.

Further renovation, including the addition of a woodworking shop, is also slated for a weathered building moved onto the property. Harmon now uses the building as a studio for his stained-glass fabrication. He has spent many late nights there, fulfilling the commissions that come his way. Occasionally he makes a new piece for his own home.

The two bathrooms in the house are floored with bowling alley flooring Mrs. Harmon and her father, the Rev. William Roberts, salvaged in Kinston years ago. Harmon built the cabinets in both bathrooms from unpainted board and batten found in another Kinston building.

Each bathroom has a clawfoot bathtub, and the downstairs bath has a skylight that will eventually be furnished with stained glass in a wisteria design, Harmon says. Two skylights are also planned for the library.

Mrs. Harmon designed and sewed the curtains throughout the house, including those of balloon design in the master bedroom and those of crewel print in the kitchen and den. Harmon made cornices for the bedroom windows, as well as the lamps with stained glass shades that provide subdued lighting in

Ah, Ella!

First Lady Of Song Scats With The Best

By Mary Campbell
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — A boy walking by Radio City Music Hall saw a big picture of Ella Fitzgerald, advertising her upcoming concert. "Ah, Ella!" he cried, then he threw his arms wide and embraced the glass over the poster.

You can show her picture or say "Ella" any place in the world and people know who you mean: America's first lady of song.

The 6,000-seat Music Hall sold out fast. After more than 50 years in show business, Miss Fitzgerald hasn't tired of those appearances. These days, her doctor sanctions a couple of dates a month. The longest she's been away from the public was nine months, after her 1986 heart attack and a bypass operation.

"I love to sing and I love people," she says. "I try to give people love through singing and make them happy."

It was Yale men and their dates at a dance 54 years ago who put Ella in show business. From the stage, in the shy, modest tone of somebody unaware of her own greatness, she always thanks the public for keeping her there.

When she arrived in New York from singing in Palm Springs two days before her Radio City concert, a wealthy fan gave her a party. "He had a cake made with my picture on it. Neil Sedaka was there, Tony Bennett, Jon Hendricks. We got up and jammed; we were supposed to be doing 'Lady Be Good.' You never heard such a 'Lady Be Good.'"

Liza Minnelli and Whitney Houston, who were unable to attend, sent notes of regret, which Miss Fitzgerald took home to keep.

She travels with an 8-by-10 photograph of her 3-year-old granddaughter, Alice, who lives in Seattle. "She likes country and western. She sings, 'You are my sunshine, my only sunshine.'" Alice's singing is imitated by her famous grandmother.

Imitating is one of the things Miss Fitzgerald does best. In Radio City, she sings "Ghost of a Chance" like she thinks it would be done by a tenor saxophone, trades scat phrases with bassist Keeter Betts and offers a Louis Armstrong-like growl in her flag-waving final encore, "Mack the Knife."

In a voice that is light, girlish and true, she slips easily in and out of jazz, always swinging. When Norman Granz became her manager in 1954, he bought her contract from Decca Records and began recording her on his own new label, Verve. Instead of easing her slowly from jazz into the day's pop hits, he boldly moved her into classy popular music. Her first Verve recording was "The Cole Porter Songbook."

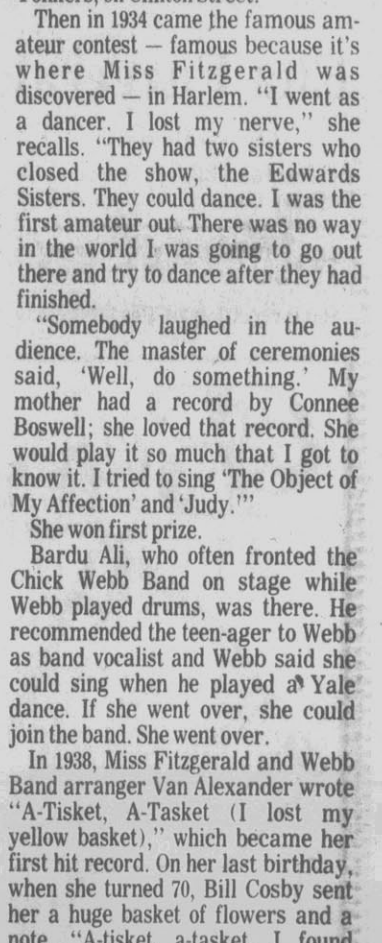

She'd been traveling with Dizzy Gillespie and was apprehensive about drastically changing styles. "I'd been singing be-bop. I thought the man was trying to get me out of the business."

Instead, "The Cole Porter Songbook" introduced the singer to a larger, non-jazz audience. The record was followed by other "songbooks" devoted to the music of Gershwin, Ellington, Rodgers and Hart, Berlin, Arlen, Kern and others. These days, Miss Fitzgerald sweetly reminds audiences, "They're available on CD."

If there was anybody left who didn't know Ella Fitzgerald, they met her through commercials. She sang for Memorex tapes and a glass shattered. "Kids liked it. They'd always ask me when I'm going to break another glass. We get on an airplane and pilots say, 'Whatever you do, don't sing next to the window.'"

Slimmed down from her previous look as a comfortably plump grandmother, she posed for Annie Leibovitz for an American Express ad. The photographer chose a red dress, hat and leopard coat from Miss Fitzgerald's closet, posed her by her old convertible that had to be pushed into place and said something a bit raunchy — Miss Fitzgerald doesn't say what — to put a "foxy lady" look on her face.

"She got me snazzy," the singer smiles. "People take that picture out of magazines and ask me to autograph them." They also recognize her voice singing "Isn't It Romantic" in American Express TV ads as a couple loses a credit card in Venice and picks up a replacement in Beijing.

ELLA FITZGERALD

Ella Fitzgerald was born in Newport News, Va., and moved to Yonkers, N.Y., before she started school. "I came with my mother; she was married," Miss Fitzgerald says. "I started first grade in Yonkers, on Clinton Street."

Then in 1934 came the famous amateur contest — famous because it's where Miss Fitzgerald was discovered — in Harlem. "I went as a dancer. I lost my nerve," she recalls. "They had two sisters who closed the show, the Edwards Sisters. They could dance. I was the first amateur out. There was no way in the world I was going to go out there and try to dance after they had finished.

"Somebody laughed in the audience. The master of ceremonies said, 'Well, do something.' My mother had a record by Connee Boswell; she loved that record. She would play it so much that I got to know it. I tried to sing 'The Object of My Affection' and 'Judy.'"

She won first prize.

Bardu Ali, who often fronted the Chick Webb Band on stage while Webb played drums, was there. He recommended the teen-ager to Webb as band vocalist and Webb said she could sing when he played a Yale dance. If she went over, she could join the band. She went over.

In 1938, Miss Fitzgerald and Webb Band arranger Van Alexander wrote "A-Tisket, A-Tasket (I lost my yellow basket)," which became her first hit record. On her last birthday, when she turned 70, Bill Cosby sent her a huge basket of flowers and a note, "A-tisket, a-tasket, I found your blank-blank basket."

She has three bits of advice that she lives by. "One time in a school play, I tried to sing 'Sing, You Sinners' and I got on the street and somebody told me they liked it and I ignored them. My mother slapped me down. You've heard of seeing stars? I saw stars. She told me, 'If somebody speaks to you, you say hello.'"

Once, when she was pining, Miss Fitzgerald says, "Duke Ellington told me it's like a toothache. It'll hurt for awhile. But when you take that tooth out, you miss it but you'll feel better."

And a cousin told her to smile, even if people said something bad about her. "I used to be very self-conscious. Somebody looked at me. I thought, 'Oh, what are they saying?' I learned to smile. It's beautiful to feel you can smile and you can love people."

In 1987, after she recovered from her heart attack, she played the Hollywood Bowl. Other dates were lined up but another, shorter layoff intervened. "One of my toes had to be amputated. I was wearing pointy-toed evening shoes. Now I have to wear open-toed shoes. I say, 'Thank God, here I am walking.'"

Last summer Miss Fitzgerald fell on a step on the Hollywood Bowl stage. Forget malpractice suits. The backstage was instantly full of doctors eager to help. The singer took a short intermission, then returned to sing "Since I Fell for You." Now she enters and leaves the stage holding her pianist's arm.

Her last recording, "Easy Living," made with guitarist Joe Pass, came out before her heart attack. The month she turned 70, a 30-year-most rooms.

Flower and shrub beds in the yard are bordered with water-smoothed stones collected by the Harmons from mountain creekbeds. They use every visit to his parents, Marshall and Dot Harmon of Newton, as an opportunity to collect more stones for their yard.

The two enjoy their above-ground swimming pool at the rear of the yard almost as much as their sons do. "There's nothing greater," Mrs. Harmon said, "than to work hard in the hot sun for a while, then jump in the pool for 30 minutes or so, then go at gardening again. I love it."

Mrs. Harmon wants to fill the yard with low-maintenance flower and shrub beds. "I must have accomplished that pretty well," she said. "Because I find that most of my gardening time, I'm putting in new topsoil and new plants, not working on the old ones.

"We love for people to come look at our yard," she said. "We do what we do for our own enjoyment, but we also like sharing it with others."

Her husband agreed. "I've been thinking about making a little sign that would invite people to stroll through our yard as they choose, with the only admission being the pulling of a weed or two while they're here."

The Harmons root many of their own plants and exchange cuttings with their friends. They also borrow ideas from their friends. They have some comfortable wooden back yard chairs that Harmon made after drawing his own pattern of chairs owned by their friends, Mike and Sally Bramley. And they have outdoor steps designed like those of a house they saw near Falkland. Some indoor steps have tops hinged to provide shoe storage space underneath — another borrowed idea.

"It might appear," she said, "that Stan and I are very materialistic, given our constant collecting. But actually, nothing could be further from the truth.

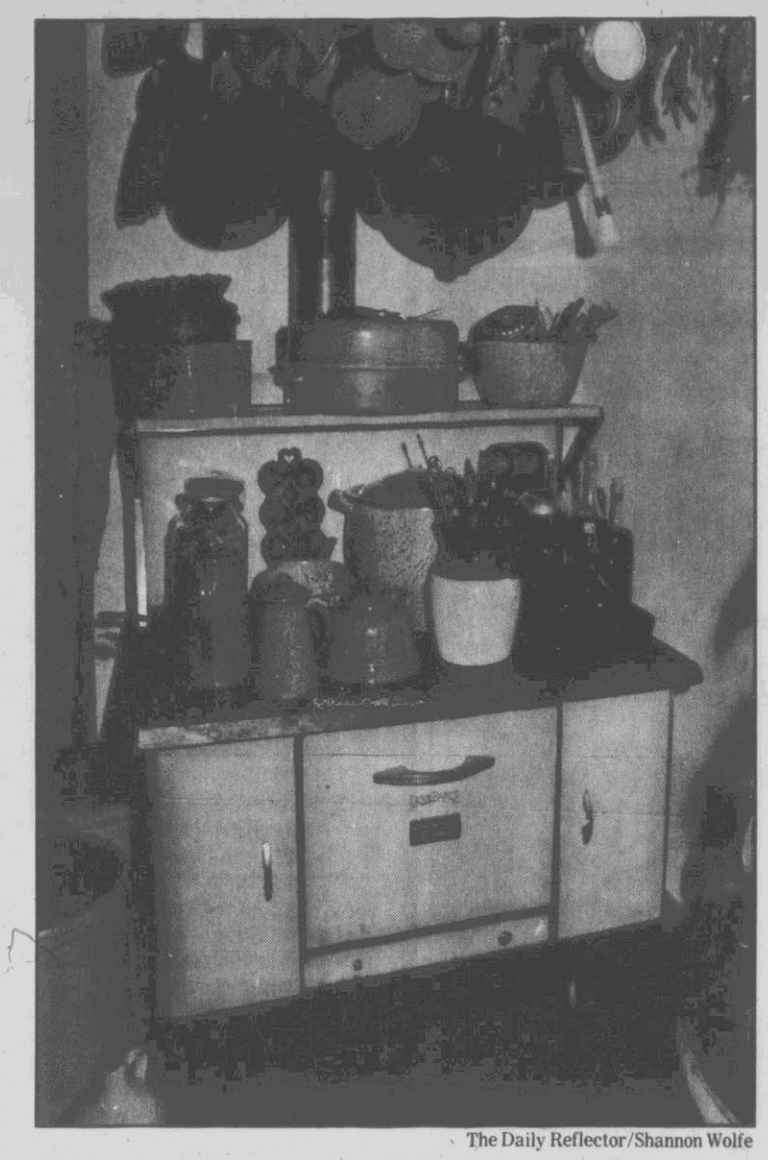

"There is nothing in this house that I couldn't live very well without," she said. "I'm very clear that people are what's really important.

"We just get a charge out of taking something that doeen't appear to have much value and making it into something that we enjoy having. But I could let it all go in a heartbeat if I needed to and I know Stan could, too."

Is this house where the Harmons hope to live from now on? Mrs. Harmon says no.

"I love living here," she said, "And we won't move until we have made everything pretty much the way we want it. But by then, I'm sure we will have found a place in the country we want to renovate. We want eventually to have some land, a pond, more leeway for landscaping.

"By then the boys will probably be old enough to drive themselves places they need to go... No, we won't be in this house forever," she said. "We'll start over on another house after this one is finished."

Tennessee Town's Claim To Fame: Mark Twain Was Conceived Here

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

JAMESTOWN, Tenn. — Missouri may claim the birthplace of Mark Twain, but a Fentress County historian says he's also got his stamp on Tennessee.

Twain was born Samuel Langhorne Clemens on Nov. 30, 1835, in Florida, Mo., but Wilma R. Pinckley calculates his parents were living in Jamestown when he was conceived.

Pinckley, 80, has always been interested in history, and people in the city consider her the county historian. She has written three books on local history and is a member of the Fentress County Historical Society.

She can pinpoint the place she believes Twain was conceived. The Clemens family lived in a house that stood on the site of the present-day post office.

"Some people think Mark Twain was born here. I'm inclined to think he was conceived here, but not born here. Most records will substantiate he was probably born in Missouri after they left here," Pinckley said.

"Let's see," she said, counting the months on her fingers. "Sarah Clemens must have been about three months pregnant when they left here.

"According to legend, somebody took the family to Carthage (Tenn.) in a wagon. They got on a steamboat there and went to Missouri."

John Clemens came to Fentress County around 1825, Pinckley said. He was a lawyer and served as circuit court clerk, county court clerk and Jamestown's first postmaster. He drew the plans for the first jail and the first courthouse.

In 1832, Clemens moved his family to Wolf River Valley and established the Pall Mall post office. He built a small complex, a general store and a log cabin where the family lived. Nearby, he built the Republican Meeting House, which was used for community events.

The log cabin where the family lived in Pall Mall is still there, resting alone in a field in the Possum Trot area of Wolf River.

Grace Buck, who owns the land with her husband, Ernest, said they know the cabin belonged to the Clemens family because the information has come down through the years by word of mouth every time the property changed hands. "Each fella knew who had it before him," she said.

John Clemens moved his family back to Jamestown before they left for Missouri, and Fentress County was to leave its mark on Twain.

He called the Fentress County property "the Tennessee land," and he writes about his father's investment in his autobiography. The city Obedstown in "The Gilded Age," written by Twain and Charles Dudley Warner, is based on Jamestown, Pinckley said.

John Clemens may have been wealthier in Jamestown than at any other time in his life. He owned 75,000 acres here, which Twain describes in his autobiography. "The entire lot must have cost him somewhere in the neighborhood of four hundred dollars," Twain wrote. "That was a good deal of money to pass over at one payment in those days — at least it was considered so away up there in the pineries and the 'Knobs' of the Cumberland Mountains of Fentress County, East Tennessee."

After his father's death, Twain wrote, the family rented a large house, thinking they could pay for it when they sold the Tennessee land. The prospective buyer, however, wanted to buy only part of the land, and they decided to sell all or nothing.

old record, "Ella in Rome — the Birthday Concert," was released for the first time. It was taken from a recently found tape of a concert she did in Rome on her 40th birthday.

She'll record again this spring and would like to make her first music video, in which she would dance, possibly with children from a Watts nursery that's named for her, then break into song.

"I love ballads because they tell a story," Miss Fitzgerald says.

Use A Little Eye Appeal If Decorating Home Office

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The personal computer, the fax machine and fancy telephone equipment have made it possible for entire segments of the population to work at home, but it's not particularly appealing because the furniture industry has been slow to meet home-office needs.

During 1988, researcher Thomas E. Miller says, there were 24.9 million home offices in America, and that number will grow to 30.8 million by 1992. About one-third are occupied by owners of small businesses. The rest are "telecommuter" employees who do most of their work at home and link up with the office via telephone and-or computer, employees who bring work home from the office on occasion, and freelance or contract workers who have no other space.

Carol D'Agostino, Miller's colleague at Link Resources, a New York-based market research firm, says there may be hope on the furniture front for these millions because as the home office becomes a recognized market, there should be more products to satisfy it.

Right now, there is no home office department store, so to speak, so those wanting to buy and those with the products to sell don't always meet, she says.

Edgar B, a mail-order retailer of upscale furniture, has registered a 16 percent increase in sales of home office equipment in the past three years. Edgar Broyhill, owner, says it represents the fastest growing segment of his business.

Broyhill says his customers — high-income, childless, dual career couples between the ages of 35 and 50 — typically spend $3,000 on a leather desk chair, a desk and a storage unit for a computer and home electronics equipment.

He says the residential furniture industry could do better in designing workable home office furniture: more desks, wall systems and computer stands with matching finishes, and wall systems that include a sturdy pull-out or drop-leaf desk so workers could allot only part of a room for office use.

Miller says that whatever motivates a person to set up a home office, there is a lag between the time he starts to work and the time he sets up an efficient work space.

Although 45 percent own a computer when they start, he says, they usually make do with whatever space and furniture they have on hand.

"However, if they stick it out through a year," Miller adds, "people are more willing to make a commitment to spend for products and services."

Graham-Souza Couple Are Wed

St. Peter's Catholic Church was the setting Saturday for the wedding ceremony of Karen Marie Souza and John Charles Graham.

The Rev. Joseph Jones conducted the double-ring ceremony. Organist Sylvia McCreary and vocalists David Oxendine, brother-in-law of the bride, Annette Vick, Scottie Dixon and Pam Dixon presented wedding music.

The bride is the daughter of Joseph Souza of Fayetteville and the late Lillian C. Souza. Parents of the bridegroom are John E. Graham of Durham and Regina Graham of Winston-Salem.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore a floor-length gown with a cathedral train of bridal satin and organza with beaded sposabella lace. The Victorian neckline had an illusion sweetheart yoke, leg o'mutton sleeves and basque waistline. Lace motifs with pearls and sequins appliqued the bodice, sleeves, yoke, collar and waist. Lace motifs appliqued the skirt in a pyramid design and edged the hemline of the skirt and train. Her fingertip veil was attached to a headband of embroidered lace and pearls. The bride carried a cascade bouquet of white orchids accented with white bridal lace.

Bethann Oxendine of Brooklyn, N.Y., was matron of honor for her sister. She wore a black satin intermission-length gown. The fitted bodice featured a sweetheart neckline, shirred pouf sleeves, torso waist and flared tulip skirt. She carried a long-stemmed single pink rose, greenery and baby's breath with pink and white ribbon.

Bridesmaids included Vivian Covington, Elizabeth Langston and Sheila Gurganus, all of Greenville, and Kelly Ann Liversedge of Selma, cousin of the bride. Jennisue Kolczynski of Greenville was honorary attendant.

Susan Banks of Greenville directed the ceremony.

Jack Spoon Jr. of Greenwood, S.C., was best man. Ushers included Rick Uhlman and Jeff Covington, both of Greenville, David Oxendine of Brooklyn, brother-in-law of the bride, and Johnny Chestnut of Raleigh.

A reception was held at the Rotary Building and guests were greeted by Mr. and Mrs. Sam Pearce. A rehearsal dinner party was held at the Beef Barn given by the mother of the bridegroom. Prior to the wedding, several showers were given for the couple, and a luncheon was given for the bride.

The bride is a graduate of Lumberton Senior High School and Beaufort Community College. She is owner of Scissorsmith Hair Designs of Greenville. The bridegroom graduated from R.J. Reynolds High School in Winston-Salem and East Carolina University. He is employed by Professor O'Cools Restaurant in Greenville.

The couple will live in Greenville after a wedding trip to Jamaica.

MRS. GRAHAM

Two Are Wed Saturday

KILL DEVIL HILLS — The double-ring wedding ceremony of Dr. Mary Anne Leslie and David Harrison Cluck took place Saturday.

The Rev. Spottswood Graves Jr. performed the ceremony at the home of Mr. and Mrs. James L. Goes in Kitty Hawk where guests gathered on the lawn. The bridal couple took their vows on the dock.

Parents of the couple are Mr. and Mrs. G. Henry Leslie of Greenville, and Mr. and Mrs. William Harrison Cluck of Columbus, Miss.

Cindy Goes of Point Harbour was maid of honor and Dennis Saver of Cary was best man.

Given in marriage by her parents and escorted by her father, the bride wore a tea-length antique ivory satin gown with a lace overlay. The gown was styled with long sleeves pointed over the hands, high neckline and gathered below the waist with pink and blue bows. Her bib tip veil was shoulder-length and she carried a cascade bouquet of lilies and stephanotis.

The bridal attendant wore an antique dusty rose gown with an ivory lace overlay and carried a bouquet of lilies and stephanotis.

A reception was given by the bride's parents.

After a wedding trip to Duck the couple will live in Kill Devil Hills.

The bride is a graduate of N.C. State University in Raleigh and the School of Veterinary Medicine there. She will practice at Coastal Animal Hospital in Kitty Hawk. The bridegroom graduated from N.C. State University and is employed by Cozy Home Cabinets in Kitty Hawk.

A rehearsal dinner was given by the bridegroom's parents at the Colington Yacht Club. A miscellaneous shower was given for the couple prior to their wedding.

A Son's First Credit Card: Sure Sentence Of Doom?

At Wits End
Erma Bombeck

Your son opens the envelope and his first credit card falls out. Is it his first taste of maturity? Or his last meal before execution?

Suddenly, small moments from the past invade the present like a pesky gnat that won't go away. You remember the first time he emptied out his piggy bank and tried to buy a $30 wagon with $1.57. But he was a naive child then. Not to worry.

Later, for no reason, you recall when he bought a $60 sweater for a girl he met in a line to see "Kiss of the Spider Woman," whom he dated for two weeks. If he didn't eat lunch or put gas in the car for three months, he could afford it. But he was only an impulsive teen-ager then. Not to worry.

Then you remember how he borrowed $40 for a concert ticket from you in 1984 and still hasn't paid you back. It's time to worry!

It's all your fault. You piffled away all those years telling him not to talk with food in his mouth and never to sit on a public toilet seat, but you didn't teach him about money. He thinks all you have to do is insert a bank card in a slot in a brick building and it drools 10s and 20s into a little tray.

Hey, he'll be all right. He's older now. Once he sits down and reads all the small print about interest rates, and checks the charges against the slips he's going to file in his desk each month, and keeps tabs on how much he's spending by keeping a little notebook in his billfold, he'll ... end up in jail. That's what he's going to do.

Remember his first checkbook? He thought it was a scratch pad for phone messages and shopping lists. When he wasn't ripping out one to wrap his gum in, he was scribbling out a check for something minor. He once was clocked at writing 23 checks in one week under $2.

What are you worried about? The credit card will be different. He has only one little piece of plastic to keep track of. ... Wait a minute, what if he gets more than one credit card!

No one has just one credit card. His name and address are already in a worldwide computer system to alert everyone on this planet that another "big spender" is in tow.

A picture begins to form. He'll charge, charge, charge until all he is paying is interest. He'll get a second job to keep up with his time payments. He won't be able to afford his car. Without a car, he won't get dates. Without a date, he won't get married. Without marriage, you'll never be a grandmother. Why is he ruining your life!

As he prepares to leave the house, sanity returns. There is no reason in the world why he can't change into a responsible human being who is committed to being accountable for his own actions. Maybe he isn't the flake you thought he was.

As the motor of his car turns over, you see the credit card on top of the toaster. Should you keep the card and sleep at night? Or should you run out and give it to him?

What do you mean, give you a minute to think!

Exercise Aids Building Bones

LADIES' HOME JOURNAL

Osteoporosis affects 15 to 20 million women in America, and it is responsible for 1.2 million bone fractures each year.

Often the disease is subtle. It develops silently and undetected until it's too late to stop the devastating effects of bone loss.

There is good news. According to a recent report in Ladies' Home Journal, most people can protect themselves from osteoporosis, as findings are being made every day about the factors that lead to bone loss. Some women are more susceptible to the disease. When made aware of their risk level, they can take appropriate action to reduce bone deterioration.

Fair-skinned, small-boned, and lean women are at higher risk levels. Women over 40 and those who went through menopause early are prone as are women who may have an inherited predisposition to osteoporosis.

Preventive measures include decreasing cigarette smoking, alcohol drinking and salt added to food. These factors all contribute to loss of calcium which is essential to strong bones. A diet high in protein (over 20 percent of a total dietary intake) will cause too much calcium to be flushed from the system. A very high fiber diet (more than 35 to 60 grams per day) or a total vegetarian diet can also inhibit proper absorption of calcium.

Milk or other dietary products are excellent sources of dietary calcium. At all stages of life, it is essential to consume 1,000 to 1,500 mg of calcium daily. If it's not possible to get sufficient calcium from dietary sources, a doctor or pharmacist can recommend a calcium supplement.

Most experts believe regular exercise helps build bones. In fact, a recent study of women ranging in age from 69 to 95 found that moderate exercise actually increased the density of their bones. The Journal suggests several simple exercise options such as swimming, bicycling and lifting 1- to 3-pound weights. Readers are reminded to consult a physician before starting an exercise program.

Divorce Announcements Are Nothing New

Dear Abby
Abigail Van Buren

Dear Abby: After a sincere but futile effort to make her marriage work, our daughter, Barbara (her real name), decided it was hopeless, so she has filed for divorce.

Since her father and I officially announced her marriage by sending engraved announcements to friends and family, we think it fitting and proper to do the same for her upcoming divorce.

Perhaps this has never been done before, but we feel that it will set the record straight officially, and we hope that friends and relatives will not call to ask us if what they heard is true. — Barbara's Parents

On the Question of Punctuality: Better To Be Late Than Nervous

By Richard O'Mara
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

I had a friend once who always read the Reader's Digest. She devoured those smug little articles that told you how to improve your looks, personality, marriage and romantic relationships, how to lose weight, advance in your chosen profession, find inner peace, build your self-esteem, and make everybody else admire you — all in about three weeks.

The Reader's Digest is a handbook for self-improvers. Yet in the six years that I knew her, my friend failed to noticeably improve. To tell the truth, she may have gone downhill. But every month she was at it again, tearing through those pages in search of the elusive formulas for betterment.

I always wondered over the source of her torment, why she never stopped finding fault with herself. Maybe she was too concerned with the opinions of others. I suggested that once and she declared her determination to change, to be more her own person. She bought a book titled "How to Enhance Your Self Confidence." It was full of personal triumph stories written by timid people. It contained mental exercises. She repeated mantras to herself: You are extraordinary! You are special! ...

We used to have lunch. She always came late, usually by 40 minutes. I always showed up on time, for reasons I will give below. I hated waiting alone in restaurants, self-consciously twirling my fork, pretending I was preoccupied with important matters, having another drink and blearing the afternoon. Once I scolded her and she promised to do something about it. Not long afterward, on her coffee table, I saw a little booklet titled "Getting There on Time: New Hope for the Tardy."

This really alarmed me, so, full of regret over what I had done, I took both her hands in mine and warned her she was walking on dangerous ground.

"Punctuality is one of the deadly virtues," I said. "Actually it isn't a virtue at all. It's an affliction — to the person who's punctual, and to the people subjected to it. What's more, it can't be learned. It's not like overcoming double negatives, or expanding your vocabulary. You can't become punctual; you are either born that way or not."

As I spoke, I could see that look in her eyes: She wasn't listening to me. She had the book; her strategy for smiting this particular character flaw which had given her so much anxiety was in place. "Punctuality is the politeness of kings," she said, quoting a dead French king. I sighed.

My father was so punctual he made the German army seem lackadaisical. It was his practice to arrive well ahead of the appointed hour. He liked to boast about "getting up before the chickens," but never told me why that should recommend anybody for anything. Once during the hard times of the Great Depression he got up at 1 o'clock in the morning to do a day's labor. He wanted to be first in line; there were always more men than jobs. But he fell asleep and the truck left without him.

My memories are of him sitting silently in the dark living room, smoking, waiting for the dawn. On the other hand, my mother always liked to sleep in and getting to places on time was never one of her compulsions. People in her family were much longer-lived.

I used to go fishing with my father at a small lake in the park. He always insisted we get up at 4, said it was important to get an early start when fishing. Again, he never told me why.

We never caught many fish. Maybe it was because of the bait, just flour and moist bread rolled up into little balls. A few times I went fishing in the same lake with a friend. We went in the afternoon and we didn't catch many fish. To this day I like to fish, and when I am on vacation down the ocean I go out for half a day. My luck is the same as it was back then, even with live bait. I always go on the afternoon boat. Might as well not catch fish in the afternoon as in the morning.

People who are punctual think they are better organized and tend to believe personal organization of one's affairs leads to success. This is not necessarily true.

Anne Tyler's character in "The Accidental Tourist," Macon Leary, was a rigidly orderly man who believed the world was shared by two types of people, the organized and disorganized, and everything flowed from the differences between the two. He was a pattern maker who adhered to his patterns and had no sense of occasion. He was not happy until he met a woman exactly his opposite.

People become obsessed with the patterns they create, live for their routines instead of by them. Allow me another literary allusion. Think of Franz Kafka's story "The Metamorphosis." A salesman named Gregor Samsa wakes up one morning and finds he has been transformed into a big bug. What does he do? Does he contemplate this awful change in himself? Wonder at the impossibility of it all? The metaphysical implications? Nope. He worries about how he's going to turn his clumsy new body over and get out of bed, how he's going to miss his train, what his boss is going to think. He is anxious because he is going to be late for work.

There's something to be said about carrying on, trying to follow coherent routines in the midst of chaos. Gregor Samsa is like Macon Leary, organized, small-minded, always trying to get someplace on time.

This obsession with punctuality is widely shared. Hugh Kenner, the literary scholar and critic at Johns Hopkins, wrote a little book called "The Mechanic Muse" in which, among other things, he tried to show how technologies change our lives and our art. He quotes lines from T.S. Eliot, written in 1909:

"With the other masquerades
That time resumes
One thinks of all the hands
That are raising dingy shades
In a thousand furnished rooms."

It seems to suggest the vast loneliness and atomized nature of modern life. Maybe it does. But it also announced the arrival in common use of the alarm clock, invented in New England in the early years of the century.

Everybody was getting up at the same time to raise dingy shades with at least a noticeable simultaneity. The modern world, its factories and offices, required punctuality.

There has never been a need for an alarm clock in any house where I have ever lived. I have one in my head, or something that serves the same purpose. It was put there when I was very young, by a nun. This nun was compulsively punctual (a determined enemy of pleasure), and like all such people she sought to make others just like herself.

When I was young, nuns had real power over little boys. This nun wanted to make sure the boys in her class would not be late for the early-morning Mass, so she introduced to us a little psychological device, and thereby shackled my mind forever. She gave us each a saint to put into our heads. The saint, she said, would wake us at any hour we asked it to the night before.

The saint she gave me was St. Joseph, and I can tell you here and now the trick worked. Trouble is, it hasn't stopped working for over four decades. I have tried to lay him off. I give him no instructions, but he carries out his duties with robotic precision. He has tenure in my mind, that saint; he is there every morning at 6, sadly, without fail, or without concern at all for the time I went to bed. He hangs in there. All these years, like the guest who wouldn't leave, I have been unable to free myself of him.

Self improvement is a mania in America. It is one reason for the enduring success of the Reader's Digest. Having been to a few other places around this world, I can report a similar mania exists nowhere else.

BETSY DRAKE LEWIS' DECORATING TIPS

FURNITURE TO AID YOU IN "WASTED" AREAS

Many rooms have alcoves or other areas that are not used or decorated as well as they might be, and oddly enough, these wasted areas are often regarded as a nuisance--but, actually, they can be turned into an advantage, and they can provide the opportunity for wonderful use.

Here are a few ideas. You could, for example, put a table in an alcove and let it act as a server or a decorative place to hold books and other things; or you could put an easy chair and good lamp there and make it a place to read; or you could use the area to group a few chairs and make it a separate conversation place; or you could put a desk there for obvious good use; or you could add a wall unit and make it a place to show off flowers; hobbies, etc.

If you want to call attention to this area after you've given it any of the new uses, you can make it an added attraction with contrasting colors for the furniture and the wall. This will also help in creating an illusion of space.

You can thus make an alcove, or any other "wasted" area of a room, newly important. It could enhance your overall decorating scheme and provide you additional usage.

Get a taste of the good life.

Tennessee Walking Horses Are Strutting Again

By Jules Loh
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BUCKEYE, Tenn. — It would be nice if everybody could claim the title his government has bestowed upon Charles Thomas, but few measure up. Thomas is, officially, a Designated Qualified Person.

"I don't know who thought up that name," says Thomas. "I guess they had to call us something."

What Thomas and only about 75 others are designated to be qualified at is deciding whether a horse, specifically a Tennessee Walking Horse, is fit to compete in a horse show.

"For a while there," he was saying the other day, stroking the forehead of a brood mare who ambled over to the fence to greet him, "it looked like the whole walking horse business was going down the drain. That would have been a shame. It's a beautiful breed."

It is most gentle with an easy gait that doesn't jar the rider at any speed. It reaches its front feet high and far out, one and then the other, and brings its back feet forward to overstride the front. Its back remains as level as a love seat. The high stretch of the front feet is what horsemen call "the big lick," a crowd-pleasing action prized in show rings.

"The gait is bred into the horse," Thomas explains. "With regular training a good horse will develop the big lick naturally. But some trainers weren't satisfied. They took shortcuts, tried to make something artificial out of what's supposed to be natural.

"That's why we now have DQPs — designated qualified persons."

The "shortcuts" brought down upon the walking horse industry the wrath of the American Horse Protective Association and other humane groups and, finally, Congress. In 1970 it passed the Horse Protection Act, aimed specifically at Tennessee Walking Horses, and assigned the U.S. Department of Agriculture to enforce its provisions.

"What the trainers would do," says Thomas, grimacing, "was sore the horse.

"First they built up the front feet by putting thick pads between the hoof and the shoe. This raised the horse in front and gave him a longer reach, a higher step. Then they did the worst part. They burned the horse with a chemical, blistering it above the front hooves, and attached a heavy, rough chain that would rub on the sore part.

"The horse would try to kick the chains off, like you would try to throw a bracelet off your wrist that bothered you. The whole effect was to exaggerate the big lick.

"The crowds loved it. It really is exciting to watch. The judges listened to the crowds, and soon soring, as it was called, became the accepted way to treat a walking horse.

"I've seen horses so sore they couldn't finish, just give out. I've seen horses walk off with blood running from above their hooves."

The memory causes Thomas to shudder. He cannot abide cruelty.

Charles Thomas is 50. He is a gentle soul with a voice like a Southern lullaby. He and his wife, Christine, and their three children live in a friendly farmhouse a century old, nestled against a clear spring on 96 acres of Cumberland Mountain foothills in this rural community near Lynchburg.

Both Charles and Christine work at the nearby Jack Daniel's distillery, he in the steam plant, she in the bottling house.

"Walking horses are important to me," Thomas says, "but just as a sideline. Of course for a lot of folks around here their living is the walking horse business."

Quite a business. Shelbyville, a few miles north of here, bills itself as "The Walking Horse Capital of the World" and is the site of an annual 10-day show, called The Celebration. It is to walking horses what the Kentucky Derby is to thoroughbreds.

Last year's 50th annual Celebration drew more than 3,500 horses who competed before a paid attendance of 231,000 devotees of the big lick.

"It's like a 10-day carnival," says Thomas. "The fans get really into it. One time I had to disqualify the favorite and I thought it might cause a riot. They weren't pleased."

Thomas has been a DQP for six years and an inspector at the Celebration the past five.

He recalls that when he first became an inspector he disqualified a horse at a small show and the trainer threatened him.

"That hasn't happened since and I don't believe it will ever happen again. The inspection program is accepted now, and I'm accepted as a fair person. So are the other DQPs.

"The owners and trainers realize it's in their best interest. We reject fewer horses each year." At last year's Celebration, for example, 56 horses were rejected compared with 185 the year before.

"Why did I apply to become a DQP? Well, I grew up around walking horses and love the breed. I never could abide that business of soring them.

"In the old days they were called plantation horses, just a good sturdy horse you could ride all day without getting tired. People around here would ride them to a show on Sunday and ride them home.

"It wasn't until they became big business, sort of show business, that trainers began soring them. There's big money in it.

"So when I heard about the DQP program I decided I would like to be one, like to help get the breed back to what it's supposed to be.

"Every Friday and Saturday night from the first of May through the end of October," says Thomas, "there will be a horse show at one place or another, sometimes just small places around here like Wartrace and Belt Buckle and Winchester, and I will be at one of them.

"I will also go to auction sales and inspect there, so the buyers can be sure they aren't getting a horse that's been sored.

"The way I do it, I take up each front foot in turn. I press all around the top of the hoof, at one o'clock, two o'clock, all the way around.

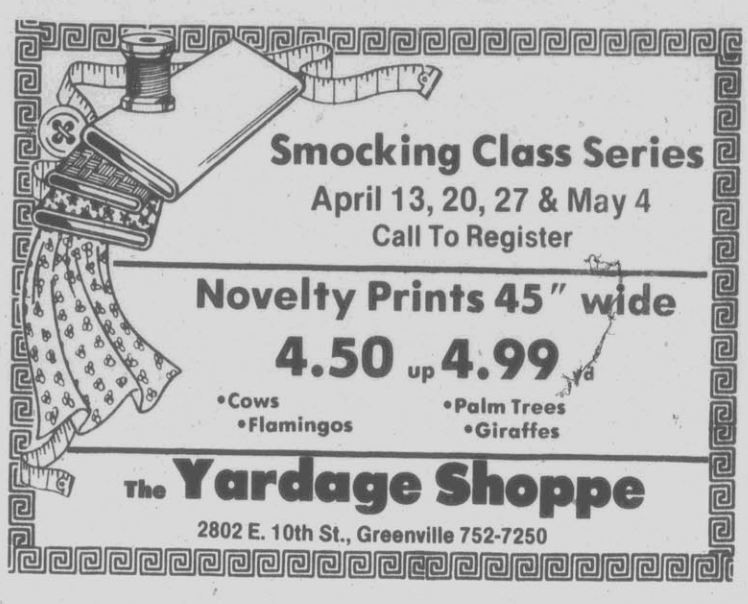

"I press with my thumb until my nail turns a little white, that much pressure. If the horse flinches at all, just moves a little, that's it. I turn him down."

Has it made the shows less sensational, less spectacular with those high-prancing steeds?

"No," says Thomas emphatically.

"Now they have to produce that action by breeding it into the horse, not by abusing them. Knowing that, I believe the fans feel the shows are better than ever."

What Designated Qualified Person would disagree?

Diet Pills Sweeping U.S.

Doctors Invent 'Lazy Way' to Lose Weight

U.S. Gov't. Approves Patent Claims for New Diet Pill

BEVERLY HILLS, CA (Special)— An amazing new weight loss pill called "fat-magnet" has recently been developed and perfected by two prominent doctors at a world famous hospital in Los Angeles that reportedly "guarantees" you steady fat loss and calorie reduction by simply taking their tested and proven new pill.

The U.S. government has just approved the doctors claims for a hard-to-get patent that confirms "there has never been anything like their fat-bonding pill process before." It is a totally new major scientific breakthrough and is revolutionizing the weight loss industry.

You Can "Eat Normally"

Best of all, "you can continue to eat your favorite foods and you don't have to change your normal eating habits. You can start losing fat and reduce calories from the very first day, until you achieve the ideal weight you desire without exercising".

Flushes Fat Out of Body

The new pill is appropriately called the "fat-magnet" pill because it breaks into thousands of particles, each acting like a tiny magnet, "attracting" and trapping many times its size in undigested fat particles. Then, all the trapped fat and calories are naturally "flushed" right out of your body because they cannot be absorbed.

Within 2 days you should notice a change in the color of your stool, caused by the fat particles being eliminated.

"Automatically" Lose Fat

According to one of the inventors, Dr. William Shell, heart specialist and associate professor of medicine at UCLA medical school, "the new fat-bonding process is a "lazy way" to lose weight because the pills alone "automatically" reduce calories by eliminating dietary fat. It is 100% safe and not a drug."

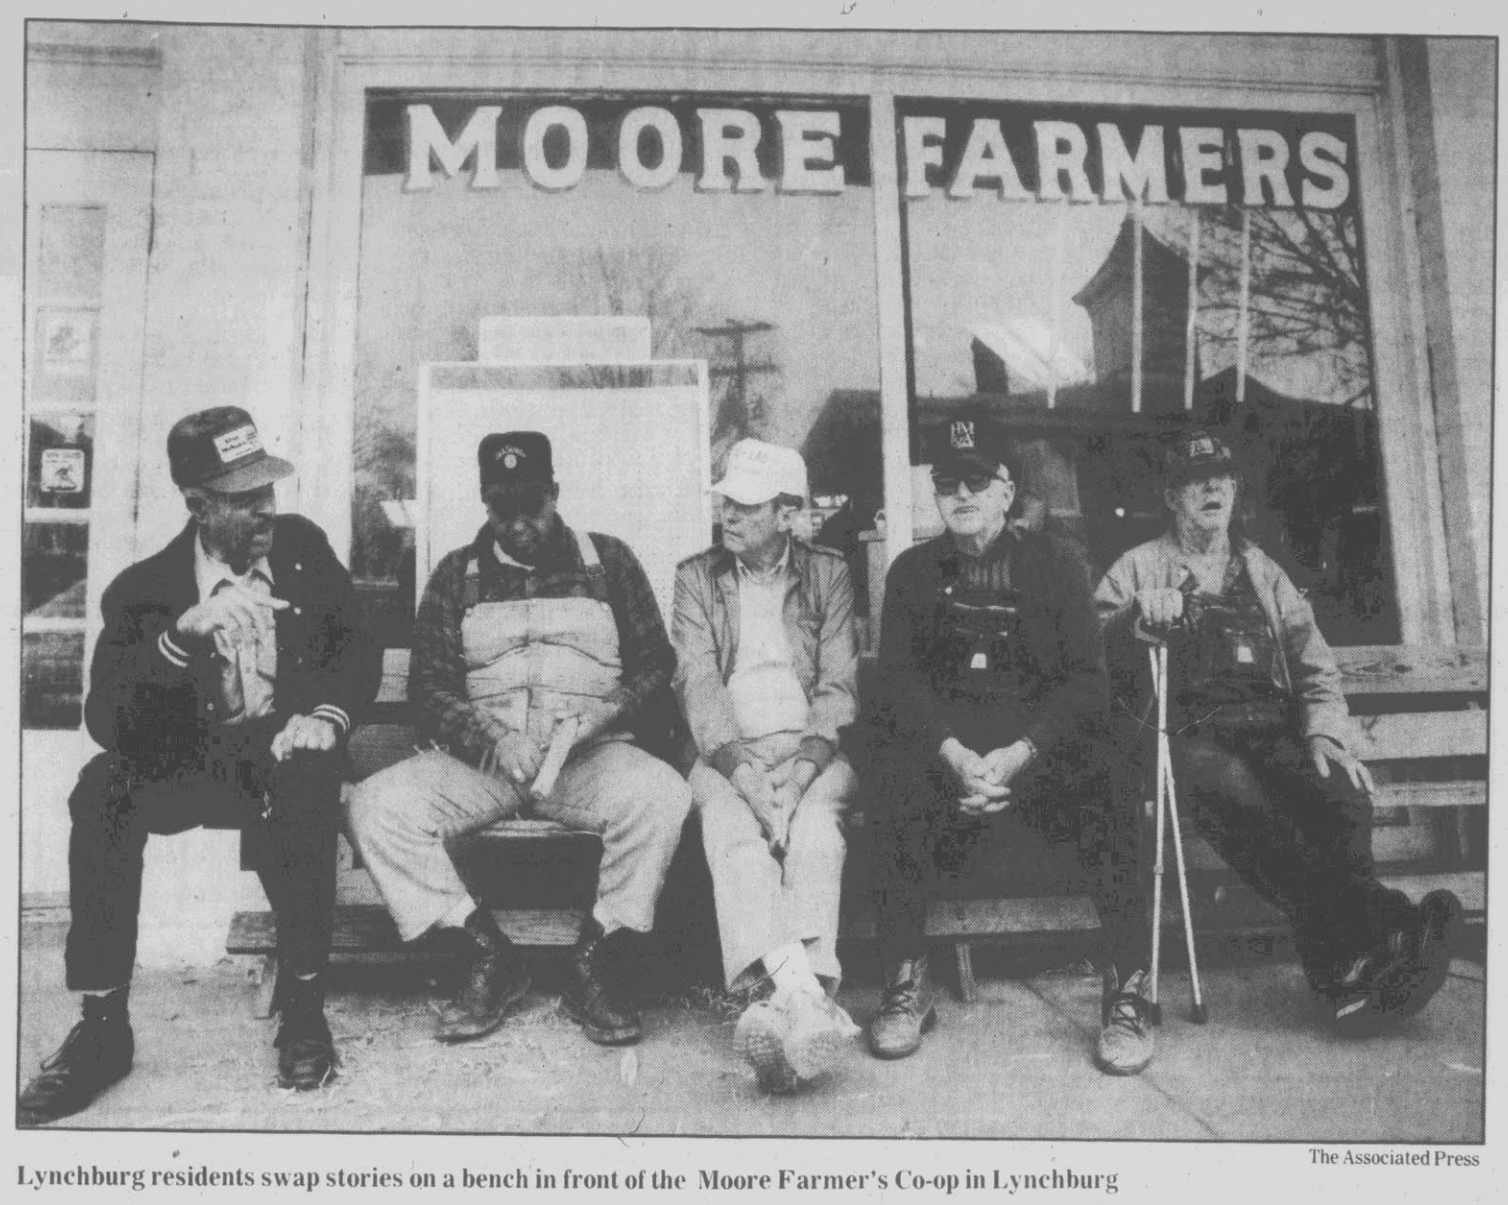

The fat-magnet pills are already sweeping the country with glowing reports of weight loss from formerly overweight people in all walks of life who are now slimmer, trimmer and more attractive again.

Now Available to the Public

If you are trying to lose 20, 50, 100 pounds or more, you can order your supply of these "no-risk" highly successful fat-magnet pills directly from the doctors' exclusive manufacturer only (includes optional calorie-reduction plan for even better results). Send $20 for a 90 pill supply (+$3 handling), or $35 for a 180 pill supply (+$3 handling), to: Fat-Magnet, 9016 Wilshire Blvd., Dept. W634, Beverly Hills, CA 90211. (Unconditional money-back guarantee if not 100% satisfied.) Visa, MasterCard and American Express OK. (Send card number, expire date, and signature.) For fastest service for credit card orders ONLY call anytime 24 hours, toll free 1(800) 527-9700, ext. W634.

Lynchburg residents swap stories on a bench in front of the Moore Farmer's Co-op in Lynchburg

C'mon: Stop And Set A Spell In The Town That Jack Built

By Jules Loh
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LYNCHBURG, Tenn. — The Moore County Chamber of Commerce has no office, no telephone. All of its documents reside in one thin file folder on a closet shelf in Miss Mary Bobo's Boarding House.

Lynne Tolley, the chamber's current president and also the boarding house hostess, shrugs.

"We don't really go after new industries," she says. "Oh, if somebody asks we answer. But we're not looking. Not a bit."

In chambers of commerce across America, of course, such a viewpoint borders on heresy. But in this corner of the remote and rolling foothills of the Cumberland mountains in Middle Tennessee, the consensus seems to be that one industry is sufficient. Whiskey.

Lynchburg, the Moore County seat, is the home of the Jack Daniel distillery.

In warehouses atop the ridge above Jack Daniel's hollow — or holler as it is pronounced hereabouts — 47 million gallons of Tennessee sippin' whiskey reside in charred oak barrels, aging. The ripe stuff is bottled daily and new barrels filled.

To the people of Lynchburg and Moore County, that is quite a reservoir of security.

There are in America one-industry towns, so-called, where the economy relies heavily on a dominant employer. But a researcher would be hard put to find another place in the nation where the population of an entire county depends for its livelihood, directly or indirectly, on a single industry, and, as industries go, not a very large one at that. Jack Daniel's work force runs about 350.

"Ten years ago," says Moore County Judge Donald Ray, "I would have said dependence on the distillery was 100 percent. Now it is somewhat less, but not much. Some people who live in Moore County now work in adjoining counties. There are only so many jobs to go around.

"But without Jack Daniel's the county would be in a terrible situation. Every family in Moore County that has been here a long time has some member or close relative involved with Jack Daniel's, if only as a pensioner."

Today Moore County — 131 square miles, all hilly, with a population of 4,510, or about 34 souls per square mile — has only one center of commerce, Lynchburg.

The city and county government are one. The county has no doctor, no lawyer, no railroad, no interstate highway, no river, no motel. It has one post office, one state park, one bait shop, one undertaker, one pool hall and one traffic light, which, according to the sheriff, is where most accidents happen because people don't seem to have the hang of having to stop and wait.

Jack Daniel's influence extends far beyond the distillery's studiously quaint buildings and stone fences and crystal-clear creek, beyond its payroll and pensions, even beyond the pint of whiskey that goes with every employee's paycheck on the first Friday of every month, Good Friday as it is known here.

Every cash register in Lynchburg benefits mightily from the 300,000 tourists a year the distillery draws, but it doesn't stop there.

Back in the hills, for example, every farmer relies exclusively on the distillery's mash byproduct, called slop, for cattle feed. "The thin soil in these hills won't grow row crops," says Ray. "All it will produce is cattle."

With few exceptions, though, the populace appears more than content with its lot, and why not?

Unemployment is lower than any adjacent county and per capita income, at $15,928, among the highest in rural Tennessee. And because the distillery has been here through good times and bad since 1866, nobody has the least fear that Jack Daniel's will ever, figuratively speaking, go on the rocks.

Back when Reagor Motlow, the grand-nephew of Jack Daniel himself, was president of the company, his promise was that anyone in Moore County who wanted a job could have one at the distillery. He lived up to that. He also said anyone who didn't want a job was welcome to leave the county. There's that, too.

"There is that," says Ray. "But in all my time in Moore County I have never known the distillery to throw its weight around or interfere in any election or any county decision. Not so much as a speeding ticket."

But there is also the experience of 1985. That was long after Reagor

Town Traces Its Spiritual Origins To A Boy, A Preacher And A Still

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LYNCHBURG, Tenn. — This remote corner of the Cumberland hills is not a likely place for major industries to want to locate. And the way Jack Daniel's distillery happened to get here is not apt to be repeated.

Jasper Newton "Jack" Daniel was born in 1846, the last of 10 children. When he was six his widowed father, hard pressed, sent him off to live with a neighbor, Dan Call. Call ran a store on Louse Creek and needed an apprentice for his black slave, Nearest Green, who was a superb maker of the store's most prominent product, whiskey.

Dan Call was also a preacher.

When Jack Daniel was 14, a traveling evangelist named Lady Love borrowed Dan Call's pulpit and told Dan's congregation that their pastor had better decide whether to preach or make whiskey because in the eyes of the Lord he couldn't do both.

Jack bought Dan's still, on credit, and went in business.

When the Civil War ended he moved his still a few miles to a lovely spring outside Lynchburg, brought with him Nearest Green's son, George, and prospered.

A new federal law in 1866 required all distilleries to register with government tax collectors and Jack Daniel's became the nation's first. It is celebrated as a national historic site as America's oldest registered distillery.

Spend Some Time In The Town That Jack Built

Motlow's death and long after he and his three brothers, in 1956, sold the company to the huge Brown-Forman distillery in Louisville, Ky. It was the year Jack Daniel's laid off one-fifth of its work force. The reason given was an increase in federal taxes which the company by itself couldn't meet.

There is no evidence that Brown-Forman has interfered in Jack Daniel's policies. "They know better than to kick a pulling mule," said one longtime employee, Roger Brashears. But for the past four years there has existed in Lynchburg an uncommon element of uncertainty.

And back in the hills, cattle raisers dependent on that high-protein slop are uneasy because of a study the company made in 1984, just before the layoffs, when it was looking for new revenue.

It showed that a drying process many distillers use to recover spent mash would allow the company to sell it on the open market for nearly 10 times what it makes distributing the wet product to local farmers who come by and pick it up themselves.

These are undercurrents in an otherwise tranquil sea.

The company keeps the same low-key image locally as it reflects in its magazine ads — just country folks doing unhurried work in a "tiny little town where things don't seem to have changed very much."

Lynchburg has stayed at a steady population of about 600 for years. The visitors actually do see old-timers in bib overalls sitting on benches around the town square, whittling, swapping coon dogs from the back of pickup trucks. They are not company props.

On the square, the Lynchburg ardware and General Store and the White Rabbit Saloon are two main tourist attractions. Both are owned by the distillery and neither is what it says it is.

Lem Motlow, Jack Daniel's nephew, heir and successor, the father of Reagor Motlow, built the general store in 1921. Old-timey wares from that era, horse collars and salves and such, still decorate its shelves and walls but they are not for sale. Coca Cola is, for 10 cents, in a bottle. The only items the store sells in earnest are Jack Daniel souvenirs.

As for the saloon, it too has kept its old-fashioned decor. It serves sandwiches and lemonade. It hasn't sold anything stronger since 1909 when Tennessee went dry, 11 years before Prohibition.

The irony is that Lynchburg, the town that Jack built, and all of Moore County, is still dry. (Well, so is most of Bourbon County, Ky.) The nearest liquor store from here is in nearby Coffee County — yes, Coffee — and anyone in bib overalls on the square will tell you the door of that store is at a distance from Lynchburg of 12.3 miles and 14 steps.

Jack Daniel's also owns Miss Mary Bobo's Boarding House, just off the square. It is a charming old white-columned home which dates from 1867. But it is not a boarding house, not since Miss Mary's death, at age 102, six years ago.

Yet it contributes much to Lynchburg's down-home mystique. Rather than let it go to ruin Jack Daniel's bought it. Lynne Tolley, a great-grand niece of Jack Daniel himself, serves noonday dinner there to 65 guests daily — Southern fare, of course: fried okra, cheese grits, vegetables from the garden out back. Iced tea.

If such operations can be assigned to Jack Daniel's advertising budget, other benefactions seem as pure as the iron-free water that gushes out of Cave Spring at a constant temperature of 56 degrees year-round, which is why Uncle Jack, as he is known to one and all in Moore County, built his distillery here in the first place.

The Lynchburg library, as modern and well-stocked as any in an affluent American suburb, was a gift of the Motlow family. So was the land for the Motlow State Junior college, the county's only institution of higher learning. The county's only ambulance was a gift of the distillery. So was its fire truck.

It was the distillery that matched a $260,000 federal grant for the sewer system. When the county courthouse was falling down in 1968 the distillery rebuilt it.

"They do things like that all the time without making a fuss about it," says Carl Payne, the Moore County executive. "If the high school needs something it can't handle, like band uniforms or whatever, they go to the distillery and somebody writes a check."

Jobs at the distillery are the most coveted in the county. At the retirement party for one old-timer, Herb Fanning, it was discovered that he hadn't taken a vacation in 20 of his 33 years at Jack Daniel's. "Since you do for a living what most people would pay to do he said, why should you go on vacation and pay not to do it."

Another longtime employee, Clarence Rolman, 86, said, "They pay good and if they've got a job for one hand they usually put two on it."

Rural colloquialisms abound in Moore County, which is about as rural as you can get.

Lynchburg is its only incorporated city. A dozen or so "communities" nestle in the county's hills and hollows — Turkey Creek, Charity, Buckeye, Possum Trot, Owl Hollow, Marble Hill — some of which in the long ago had maybe a one-room schoolhouse, maybe a store, a church, a cemetery.

In the old days, Uncle Jack built many of those churches, of whatever sect, and saw to the upkeep of the cemeteries. His benevolence became a tradition.

Talk about rural. Many small towns in America boast that their citizens don't bother to lock their doors. In Moore County they don't even bother to lock the jail.

"Almost 100 percent of our crimes are committed by someone from out of the county," says Sheriff Mark Logan, whose father and uncle were sheriff before him.

"We have a state park with a big lake. Some people who go there get into burglaries, into drunk driving, into auto theft, into drugs.

"But within the county we don't have many problems. I pulled up a few marijuana plants last year but that's about it. No, I don't know of any moonshine stills, although my father busted a few."

Logan, incidentally, leaves the keys in his patrol car overnight.

"When there is crime in Moore County," says Ray, "it is usually of a personal nature and the families resolve it among themselves. Nobody files a lawsuit or tries to get anybody arrested.

"The people in our communities are so in touch with one another and with their pattern of life it would be difficult, foolish really, for someone to commit a crime. If a strange car should pass down one of those back roads, the sheriff will get a call.

"We don't necessarily raise perfect citizens. It's just that any of our citizens who would normally get in trouble in Moore County go elsewhere to do it."

The area's serene hills and uncluttered blacktop roads are alluring to many of the visitors who come to see the distillery.

"Every weekend during the summer," says Carl Payne, the county executive, three or four people will stop in and ask me about land for sale for a retirement place. Quite a few from other states have retired here."

Because of its remoteness, it's also small wonder the chamber of commerce doesn't bother to try to lure new industries.

"We don't really want anything that would change the nature of Moore County, or at least I don't," says Payne. "I want our peace and quiet and clear streams and clean air to stay just the way they are."

"What we do need, and our tourists need," he adds with a sigh, "is a place where you can buy a drink."

Painting Pinups On Planes Is Returning At SAC Base

CASTLE AIR FORCE BASE, Calif. — Painting pinups on airplane nose cones, an art form that reached its zenith in World War II, is making a comeback at this Strategic Air Command base.

A KC-135 Stratotanker now sports a 1940s-era calendar pinup, a looker in a midriff and a miniskirt rippling in the breeze.

Castle Air Force officials say the painting is designed to instill pride in the crews that fly and maintain SAC aircraft, but some women's rights groups say they find the pinup art form offensive.

Col. Richard Martin, commander of the 93rd Bombardment Wing at Castle, says today's aircraft pinups aren't so scantily clad as those of the 1940s. The sometimes-racy World War II pinups are "too sexist and not appropriate," he says.

"We want enthusiasm, vigor and spirit, but we don't want to offend anyone," says Martin.

Staff Sgt. Randy Jones says he found the model for the KC-135 painting on a 1943 calendar while browsing in Sonora, Calif. The calendar art was forwarded to base officials for review and approved by the previous wing commander, he says.

From that, Staff Sgt. Ruben Rodriguez painted the aircraft's nose cone in nine hours during a routine inspection stop.

Plane art originated during World War I when aircraft first assumed a major role in warfare. The "Hat in The Ring Squadron" was among the best known pieces of plane art of the era and was emblazoned on the side of Capt. Eddie Rickenbacker's fighters.

During World War II, pinups such as "Ack Ack Annie," "Memphis Belle," "Pistol Packing Mamma" and "Shoo Shoo Baby" were featured on warplanes and were considered a source of pride to the troops. But nose cones carried other art forms, such as "Blue Goose," and "Poop Deck Pappy."

Martin says he's already approved a sketch of a knight with a sword and shield mounted on a horse that will be painted on the nose of another Stratotanker. Jones says crews are continually looking for ways to personalize their planes, and they find nose cone art to be a perfect outlet.

Old Homesteads, A Window On Southern Rural Farm Life

Homestead. The old home place. By either name or even by the grander, usually exaggerated appellation plantation, the rural South abounds in homes and supporting buildings that have long been the traditional center of rural family life.

Unlike the pattern established long ago in the Old World, where rural people lived in compact villages and each day went forth to tend fields, vineyards and flocks, returning to the village at twilight, the growth and development of rural America was of another order.

Early rural settlers in wilderness America had vast areas of virgin land to choose from. That, coupled with the intrepid spirit of the mostly young early pioneers, fostered an approach in establishing homesteads far different in concept from that of the Old World.

Instead of a concentrated, community-shared clustered arrangement, rural settlements in beginning America tended to be widely scattered. Each farm was developed as an entity designed to be self-supporting — with dwelling house, pastures, barns, gardens and orchards planned on individual preferences and convenience rather than by an established pattern.

At first, farm buildings in eastern North Carolina were constructed basically of rough hewn logs harvested from the sea of forests from which pioneer farmers carved tillable acreage. Later, the advent of sawmills provided a variety of welcome building materials making possible the construction of larger homes and a greater assortment of outbuildings.

As time passed and large rural holdings were divided into smaller farms among generations of inheritors, the individuality of homesteads nonetheless remained basically constant.

Although the type of buildings constructed have generally been dictated by the purpose such buildings served, there remains to this day the element of personal choice of design without recourse to any dominant systemized arrangement plan.

As the 20th century draws to a close, the proliferation of large-scale leasing or rental of farm land to big farm operators has altered the role of the homestead more drastically than any other factor over the past two centuries.

Many of today's descendants of farmers still live on family land, often in modern homes on the site of, or adjacent to, abandoned homesteads, while earning a livelihood at some job or place other than from the soil.

There are significant exceptions to widespread homestead abandonment, especially among stately late 18th century, 19th century and early 20th century homesteads. A fair number of these have been modernized, renovated and are now showplaces as well as home to families whose roots on the same land go back several generations.

Whatever the changes in rural lifestyles, there remains an abiding sense of nostalgia, of pride in the old family farm homestead. This is evident in the fact that locally and throughout the South, numerous homesteads still stand years after they no longer serve a vital role as a place to live, to work. Some of the old houses and outbuildings are used as storage facilities for crops and machinery. Many stand empty, deteriorating through the toll of neglect and weather.

Any random tour of the countryside in eastern North Carolina reveals countless examples of rural homesteads, both those still in use and those abandoned. Even the most casual observation registers the fact that the architecture, the placement of buildings is seldom duplicated to any considerable degree at other homesteads.

It is not the buildings alone that offer evidence of the love of beauty lavished on a homestead combined with productive self-sufficiency practiced by farm dwellers in the past. It is not uncommon to find remnants of orchards — old lichen-covered pear, apple, plum and peach trees still productive despite the absence of pruning and fertilizing. In overgrown yards favorite flowers such as daffodils, running roses and sweet Betsys have escaped their confines, spreading yearly in larger carpets of color.

Oaks, magnolias, maples, sweet gums, China berry and other trees planted in farm yards by original dwellers have matured into giant old trees, many reaching the stage of aged brittle specimens that lose limbs in storms.

Farm implements of long ago and the not so distant past — wagons, carts, harrows, one-horse implements for planting, stalk cutters, even early tractors — are stored in shelters, barns, and abandoned mule stables where they gather cobwebs and a patina of rust.

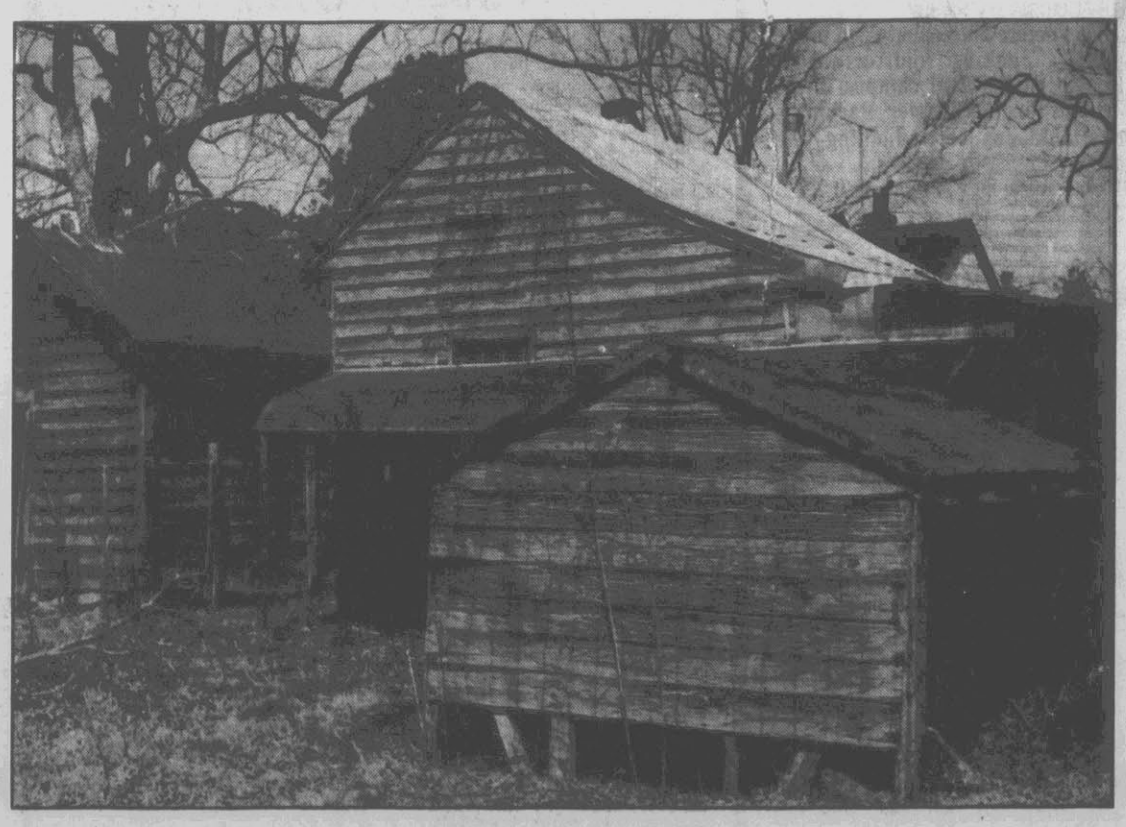

The record of former landowners, of inhabitants in past years are frequently preserved in family cemeteries. Here, the outline of a history of family can be at least partially pieced through information contained on leaning, moss-covered gravestones.

Each passing year brings an accelerated pace in the gradual demolition of these old rural homesteads. But for a foreseeable period of time, the byways and backroads of the local area and throughout the rural South still offer a remarkable treasure of nostalgia and history in the way farm people lived and worked in past years.

Gray Gallery Has Superb Show Of The Art Of Tibet

Each year there comes to Greenville at least one (sometimes more than one) exhibition of art that people other than dyed-in-the-wool art lovers should make a special effort to see.

Such is the case with the "Art of Tibet," now on view at Gray Art Gallery on the East Carolina University campus. (Gallery hours are 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Mondays through Saturdays, until 8 p.m. on Thursdays, closed Sundays. Admission is free and parking is available on a search-for basis).

This show constitutes an impressive array of 65 items of Tibetan art — masterpieces in metal, weavings, ritual bronze and wood instruments, paintings and prints; art from past centuries and recent 20th century art, especially woodblock prints. In addition there are color photographs taken in Tibet that provide an effective framework in imagining the setting of the art.

An illuminating, entertaining element in this show is a video in color of a Tibetan Buddhist temple service. The video is an opportunity to see and hear an authentic form of worship as practiced today, with its hypnotic, deeply masculine-toned chanted form of music — an articulation of the mantra "Aum Mani Padem Hum," the national prayer of Tibet.

Gray Gallery director deserves our gratitude for making arrangements to have this magnificent exhibit come to Greenville. The art comes from the collection in the Rose Art Museum's of Brandeis University in Waltham, Massachusetts. Most of the pieces shown were acquired between 1924-1928 during expeditions sent to Tibet by the Master Institute of United Arts, Inc.

John Brzostoski, curator of the Tibetan collection at the Riverside Museum and director of the Center for Oriental Studies in New York has been instrumental in making the collection accessible to ECU. He also presented a lecture on the art in Jenkins Auditorium on campus last Thursday night.

A necessary approach to getting the greatest pleasure and understanding of this show is allowing more than a brief browsing time. Each item is accompanied by a succinct explanatory text card with a brief history of the particular piece of art and the specific purpose it serves. (Next time, Perry, please make the print larger).

Also very helpful, as well as an informative keepsake, is a beautifully produced catalog measuring nine and one-half by 14 inches with black and white and color illustrations. The catalog contains a description of the 65 primary items shown, a glossary of major terms, a selected bibliography and an illuminating essay by Brzostoski. (The bibliography includes Brzosaoksi's "Art for the Year of the Fire Tiger," a collection of essays on Tibetan art). The catalog is available for $5 at the gallery.

Traditional Tibetan art is above all religious art — art that now as in the centuries past reflects the pervasive deep-rooted Buddhist way of life governing all aspects of living for the Tibetans inhabiting their still-remote kingdom in the towering Himalayan Mountains.

In the eyes of Western viewers, Tibetan art is exotic, even erotic. On the surface it seems characterized by a dazzling flamboyancy in its strange rich coloring, the aggressive stances and ferocious expressions often depicted in the faces of gods and goddesses.

Also to Westerners, Tibetan art — and Buddhist art in general is wholly mysterious. We ponder the enigma of what registers visually with what is actually intended as manifestations of an all-encompassing way of life. How is it, we wonder, that gods and goddesses with bodies depicted in such graceful, sinuous postures can at the same time be shown with snarling, wolf-like teeth and dark eyes blazing with anger.

Such depictions are the opposite of traditional Western religious art exemplified in countless paintings and statuary of Madonnas with child — often exhibiting vapid half-smiles and gowned in impossible yardages of voluminous materials.

In contrast, Tibetan Buddhist religious personages are not so encumbered. Ample flesh is shown, and bodies are lavishly adorned in glittering, bejeweled ornaments, headdresses of miniature skulls and such. These can so easily be dismissed as a barbaric love of splendor without pausing to consider the intricate, complex symbolism associated with such depictions.

Yet this visual savagery is strangely a parallel accompaniment to the introspective qualities of calm, or surrender of self to the inevitable flow of life, a philosophy (or religion) that accommodates present reality with hoped for achievement in eventual enlightenment. This element is strongly represented in the calm, studious representations of Buddha in Tibetan art.

So for us the alluring mystery remains. Perhaps one of the keys to understanding Tibetan art and in consequence, Tibetan life, is expressed in Christmas Humphreys' master study of "Buddhism," (Penguin Books). He writes: "The physical conditions of Tibet lend themselves to religious thinking. The great spaces, the height of the mountain ranges which surround them . . . the silence where men are scarce and wild life rarer still, all lend themselves to introverted thought . . . to the practice of the best and worst of the manifold powers of the mind." He adds that "nowhere . . . are there so many men who, by becoming masters of themselves, are the spiritual masters of mankind." This brief insight gives us at least an inkling of how Tibetan Buddhism and art that represents it has developed until very recently without extensive contact with the world outside the isolated mountain kingdom.

In light of the vast silence and emptiness of this mountain kingdom, the intriguing question arises. How has such an elaborate iconography developed? In nearly all Tibetan art, all is excess. Seldom is empty space a significant factor in their art. Rather, the art leads the eye on tracing the multiplicity of images — figures, veils, flames, accessory animals, real and fantastic.

Whatever the answer to these questions may be is not important in the enjoyment of this exhibition of Tibetan art for its beauty.

Guest Artist Russell Gordon To Give Lecture

'Andre Le Note,' a work of art by Russell Gordon

Russell Gordon, a guest artist-in-residence in painting at the East Carolina University School of Art, will present a slide lecture on April 6 at 7:30 p.m. in Jenkins Auditorium.

Gordon's extensive exhibition record includes the Whitney Museum of American Art in New York; the San Francisco Museum of Art; and the Chicago International Art Exposition.

In addition to receiving a grant from the National Endowment for the Arts in painting, he has also been awarded the Black Creativity Award of Excellence.

Russell is a member of the fine arts faculty at Concordia University in Montreal, Quebec.

"Russell's figurative work is undeniably influenced by the historical presence of primal cultures in a modern society," says Perry Nesbitt, director of ECU's Gray Art Gallery. "A contemporary artist, he mystically blends his knowledge of the primitive past with his personal experiences as a black man living in a contemporary society."

The lecture is free and open to the public. Jenkins Auditorium is located on the ECU campus in the Jenkins Fine Arts Center. Parking is available in lots adjoining the center.

Prints Highlighted In Two GMA Shows

Bodybuilder print from "Phobias" show

One thing is certain in the twofold exhibition "Maps" and "Phobias" currently on view in the North and South Galleries at the Museum of Art, Greenville. The artists contributing to the show have been lured far more by efforts to visualize phobias than in depicting maps in this 44-piece traveling exhibition from the University of Tennessee.

The titles of phobias in themselves will challenge all but the most dedicated phoboist to unravel what is alluded to. It would be nice to know how many of the phobias enumerated in the titles of the prints are bonafide, how many are playful products of artistic or literary imagination.

The works shown are drawn from two art printmaking portfolios created by student, faculty and alumni artists of the University of Tennesse, Knoxville, along with the work of a few guests artists.

In this print selection, many done in lithographs, the viewer encounters an invigorating span of objects and subjects — cows and caves, rest stops and highways, trees, bathers and at least one body builder.

The majority of the prints are realistic. Those dealing with phobias, expectedly, convey a sense of mystery, while those focusing on maps have more of the romance of maps and travel — with expectedly, a showering of directional arrows along with actual map segments.

• In the Upstairs Gallery and hallway, East Carolina University faculty artist Michael Ehlbeck has a show of prints, drawings and constructions. Though far from being a comprehensive look at his prolific output, it gives a good cross section summary of his skill in printmaking.

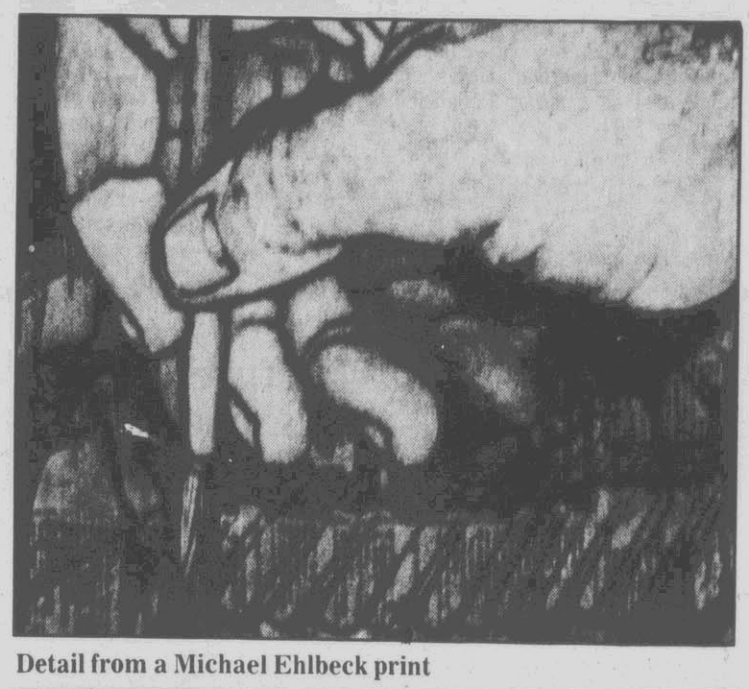

These prints range from delicate studies in ink wash, pencil and acrylic which project a pleasant kind of dream world to nice story telling prints on to somber prints in which mystery is suggested.

A pencil drawing of a meticulously realized section of tangled grass forms, in luminous tones of light and shadow, is intruded by a barely detectable manmade object. A postcard-sized color woodcut print, "Blue Cup" is an attractive small piece of art, while a large intaglio, "Man of Urbino Now Residing in Forence," makes an effective use of intaglio to update a typical Renaissance subject.

Ehlbeck has also turned to the common cow for subject matter — a small bronze sculpture and accompanying it, a print simply titled "Cow," created in a formal sideview design.

Both the "Maps" and "Phobias" and the Ehlbeck exhibition are interesting viewpoints of work being done today in contemporary printmaking.

Gullah Life Subject Of Tarboro Art Show

TARBORO — "Gullah Life Reflections," a traveling exhibition of the paintings of Jonathan Green, is on view in the Hobson Pittman Memorial Gallery of the Blount-Bridgers House in Tarboro.

The exhibit consists of brilliantly hued oil paintings depicting the culture of the people who have for centuries lived on the coast of South Carolina, Georgia, Florida and North Carolina.

Carroll Greene Jr., editor or "American Visions Art Book," writes: "When Jonathon Greene talks about his life growing up in South Carolina's Lowcountry, one begins to realize that his is a quest to recapture a part of himself."

According to Norman Pendergraft, director of the North Carolina Central University Museum of Art, where Green's exhibit opened in February, "Green lovingly takes us back to his Gullah community of the sixties — his childhood. We are shown a place little affected by the activity of resort center developers or the dulling influences and divisiveness of television."

Nearly all the paintings, created for this exhibit over the past three years, include figures, images from Green's memory of this place, his people. The scenes of daily activity throb with color, the figures are strongly rendered, but the faces are indistinct. Green states that as a small child he recognized individuals by the way they walked or by their shapes, rather than by facial features, and it is the "pattern" of the person he represents here.

Green was born in Gardens Corner, S.C. near Beaufort, in 1955, lived briefly in New York City, but was raised by his maternal grandmother in Gardens Carner, where he come to know the Gullah dialect and traditions very well.

After service in the U.S. Air Force, he entered East Grand Forks Technical Institute in Michigan where he studied fabric construction, and in 1978 he began his studies at the School of Art Institute of Chicago, receiving his Bachelor of Fine Arts degree in 1982.

He has traveled extensively in the United States, and to Switzerland and Mexico.

The exhibit will remain in Tarboro through April 30. The Blount-Bridgers House is open to the public, free of charge Monday-Friday 10 a.m. until 4 p.m. and on Saturdays and Sundays from 2 p.m. to 4 p.m. For more information, call the Edgecombe County Arts Council office, 823-4159.

Maps And Prints Show

NEW BERN — The Craven Arts Council in cooperation with the Tryon Palace Restoration Complex will exhibit "Maps & Satirical Prints" beginning Wednesday to continue through May 13. This will be the first major exhibition of the Tryon Palace collection outside of the Tryon Palace Complex.

The collections at Tryon Palace range from the smallest personal items to the largest pieces of furniture. Among the most interesting and appealing objects in the collection are the prints and maps.

These prints and maps provide images of people and places, details of dress, architecture and geography. Nearly all aspects of 18th century are represented in these prints — humor and satire, religion and morality, love and family, politics and war, nature and science, and gardens and buildings.

Prints were abundantly produced in England during the 18th century and avidly collected by the upper classes in both England and America. Some of these prints might also have been found in the homes of the middle classes and in public places such as taverns. In a gentleman's home, prints might be kept in cabinets, pulled out occasionally for an evening's study and amusement. In a tavern, prints might be nailed directly to the wall without benefit of glass or frame.

The prints in the exhibit are a cross-section of the collection that can be seen at Tryon Palace. They date from about 1730 to 1781 and represent most of the types popular in England and America during this 50 year period.

An opening reception will be held on Friday from 5 p.m. to 7 p.m. at the Bank of the Arts, 317 Middle St., New Bern. Gallery hours are Mondays-Fridays, 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. and Saturdays 10 a.m. to 1 p.m.

Francis Speight Art In A Major Exhibit

ECU NEWS BUREAU

A painting by Francis Speight, retired artist-in-residence at East Carolina University, will be included in a show of American impressionist paintings at a major Philadelphia gallery. Speight's "Between Houses, Lyceum Avenue, Manayunk," painted in 1958, will be among works by some 40 artists on view at the Frank S. Schwarz & Son gallery, 1806 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, from April 7 to June 30.

The Schwarz exhibition features other cityscapes, like the Speight painting, along with landscapes, still lifes, portraiture and genre paintings. Works span the period after the flourishing of the Hudson River School, from 1876 to 1950.

Speight and some of the other artists represented in the show studied and taught at the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts.

Speight's "Between Houses" is typical of the group of Pennsylvania cityscapes which comprise a large portion of his work. In Philadelphia art circles, Speight is considered part of the "Manayunk" school of artists.

The artist is noted for his landscapes of rural eastern North Carolina, particularly scenes from his native Bertie County. Speight's work is part of numerous museum and private collections throughout the nation.

Although he retired from the ECU School of Art faculty several years ago, the artist continues to maintain his home in Greenville. He is married to artist Sara Blakeslee, whom Speight met during his years in Philadelphia.

The Schwarz gallery timed the opening of the American Impressionism show to coincide with the annual Philadelphia Antiques Show. The gallery is best noted for his exhibitions of 19th century paintings and rarely exhibits works of living artists. Speight's works have been included in previous Schwarz exhibitions.

Accompanying the exhibition is a 52-page catalogue with 45 color illustrations. The catalogue may be ordered from the gallery by mail for $10.

Martin Bachelor Has Front Porch Art

By Jerry Raynor
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

In the past few years, James Howard's front porch art has been his abiding love and source of creative contentment.

The 62-year-old bachelor, who lives on Gus Lane in rural Martin County between Church's Cross Roads and Stokes, recalls that "for a long time it was a dirt road that didn't have many people going by. It's all different now. Lots of cars pass here all the time."

The small, unpainted plank house Howard lives in has a backyard tiled-in well, one or two small unpainted storage barns and a lean-to shelter housing old tobacco sticks. The front porch is only a couple of dozen feet from the highway.

Except for the porch art, it's a gray dwelling one would hardly notice in passing. The source of the items he exhibits on his porch comes from things that catch his eye which he picks up and things that people occasionally give him.

"When I get something new, I find a place to put it," he said about his approach to collecting and displaying. "Some things I keep inside because rain would hurt them."

Items displayed, or "pieces," as Howard calls them, include a number of glass conductors from power and telephone lines, clear and colored; mirrors which are hung on the porch's back wall; a few small weathered dolls; miscellaneous fragments of cloth and plastic, and several wooden chairs and flower boxes.

"This one I think is specially pretty," Howard said, pointing to a white painted wooden box that formerly served perhaps as a shoeshine or tool box which he has filled with ears of golden corn and suspended from the porch's ceiling.

An added collecting-display group consists of rusted hinges and other small metal pieces strung on wire and nailed to the door of a barn.

"I used to farm with James Thompson. When he quit farming, I quit working. A few years ago," he noted, "Mr. M.D. Wilson built a porch for me and that's when I started collecting things for the porch. I've lived in this house most of my life so it's home.

"Every now and then people stop by and talk to me about the things I put on my porch. I like it when they do that and I like it when somebody brings me something."

GMA Kite Festival Set

A spring kite extravaganza is being sponsored by the Greenville Museum of Art, 802 South Evans Street. The events will be held in two stages at the museum on April 21 and 22.

Artists Oscar and Sarah Bailey of Penland are the two artists who will conduct the extravaganza, which is the concluding event of the museum's 1989 visiting artist program.

The initial program will be a slide/movie presentation on their kite art to be held at the museum the evening of April 21. Examples of their kites will be on view at the museum that evening only. The presentation and exhibit are open to the public without charge.

The second event will be a one-day workshop from 9 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. on April 22. Enrollment is limited and is accepted on a first come, first served basis.

Participants will design and make their own kites, with emphasis on creating original designs based on constructing kites from proven plans. Paper, silkspan and bamboo will be primary designs used.

Registration for the workshop will begin on April 10. A fee of $7 will be charged which will cover supplies and tuitions.

If weather and time permits, kites made by the workshop participants will be taken outside and flown.

Beauty Depicted In A Book On Raleigh

RALEIGH FOR THE PEOPLE. Text and captions by Jane Collins. Photographs by Chip Henderson, Steve Muir, Steve Murray, Michael O'Brien, Carol Fontelli, Scott Larson and Simon Griffiths. Raleigh, N.C. Capitol Broadcasting Company, Inc. 1988. Hard cover, illustrated. 136 pages, $29.95.

The grace and beauty of North Carolina's capital city is breathtakingly portrayed in this magnificant book. Except for the 14-page history of Raleigh, which is illustrated by very good black and white pictures, the entire book is filled with lovely color photographs, many in full-page and double-page spreads.

The stunning color photos encompass a wide variation of scenes and places.

In 1792, the year of Raleigh's founding, 400 acres were incorporated and sold in one-acre lots and the proceeds used to build the first Capitol.

This building, not considered attractive, burned in 1821 and was not replaced until 1840 by the present Capitol.

The original site of Raleigh was purchased by the State from Joel Lane, Justice of the Peace and a prominent citizen of Wake County. Lane is the only resident of Wake County to be honored by having one of the first Raleigh streets named for him.

The present Governor's Mansion, first occupied in 1891, is the third structure built for that purpose. It is interesting to note that the second one was occupied in 1865 by Union General William T. Sherman and was never again used by a governor. The text does not state whether or not Sherman's occupation ws the reason for the abandonment of the "palace."

The present mansion is considered to be one of the finest examples of Victorian architecture in the country. President Franklin D. Roosevelt has been quoted as saying that "the executive mansion in North Carolina is the most beautiful in the nation."

The remaniing pages of the text tell about the early churches of Raleigh, the colleges, hospitals, museums, other state buildings and the various businesses that were built up around the public buildings.

Illustrating the text are black and white pictures of the Devereux House and the Yarborough House, neither of which is still standing; an artist's 1872 sketch of Raleigh; trolley cars; and various other photographs that recall past life in our state capital.

The remainder of the book portrays the exceptional qualities and beauty of Raleigh in 122 pages of gorgeous color photographs.

These include statues — for which the city of Raleigh is noted — and double-page pictures of the State Legislative Buildilng, the State Fair, the Little Theater Rose Garden, Pullen Park, Umstead State Park, the Executive Mansion, and many other scenes.

Then there are nearly 100 other photographs of historical and contemporary subjects to delight the viewer and also to capture for the reader a comprehensive and over-all picture of North Carolina's capital city.

Greenville 'Legacy Of Yesterday' Event

ECU NEWS BUREAU

"Greenville, N.C.: Yesterday's Legacy" is the title of an exhibit in East Carolina University's main campus library scheduled for display through mid-June.

The exhibit, on view in the Archives and Manuscripts Department in the east wing of Joyner Library, features the recent publication, "The Architectural Heritage of Greenville, North Carolina."

Published by the Greenville Area Preservation Association, the book is based on two 1982 manuscripts: an historic preservation survey by Kate Ohno and Mary Hollis Barnes's "Brief History of Greenville." Additional research about buildings and individuals mentioned in the survey and copies of many of the period photographs and post cards were made after 1982.

Images of early educational buildings on view include pictures of the Graded School, the Old Academy and East Carolina Teachers Training School. The edges of town are represented by pictures of the Municipal Water and Light Station and B. E. Parham's Warehouse.

The central downtown area is shown in early photos of Court House Square, the Masonic Temple, Frank Wilson King Clothier, the Rotary Building, the Proctor Hotel, the National Bank Building and various views of Evans Street. Residential neighborhoods and early churches are also depicted.

The exhibit in Joyner Library highlights the photographic contributions of the ECU Archives and the East Carolina Manuscript Collection. Three officers of the Greenville Area Preservation Association are members of the library staff: Michael Cotter, who edited the "Architectural Heritage" volume, Mary Boccaccio and Martha Elmore. Among members of the GAPA publication committee are Elizabeth Ross of the ECU art faculty and John Tilley of the history faculty.

REBEL SHIP

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Confederate warship Alabama was built under secret conditions in Birkenhead, England, in 1862.

After protests from the United States government, the ship escaped to the Azores, where it took on guns and stores. Commanded by Capt. Raphael Semmes, the Alabama sank, burned or captured 66 Union ships during the next two years.

In June of 1864, after being repaired at Cherbourg, France, the Alabama was attacked and sunk in the English Cannel by the U.S.S. Kearsarge under Capt. John Winslow.

Seven years after the Civil War, Britain paid the U.S. $15.5 million for damages inflicted by British-built ships of the Confederate Navy.

FROM SHEPPARD MEMORIAL LIBRARY

By Sarah-Shepard-Swartz
SHEPPARD MEMORIAL LIBRARY

Over the last several years, we have witnessed an interesting trend in our society: a renewed fascination with small towns in general, and specifically, in the hometown. With more Americans in the work force than ever, many citizens prefer to commute to their city jobs, and live in smaller towns as a means of escape and economy.

Greenville is not excluded from this practice — indeed, many of our professionals choose to make the short drive from Ayden, Bethel, Farmville, and surrounding areas to their Greenville jobs. Bearing this mind, we have received an exceptional book at Sheppard Library that pays homage to that great American institution — the hometown.

"Hometowns-An American Pilgrimage" by George Tice takes us on a photographic journey through three seemingly ordinary Midwestern towns. What distinguished these hamlets from their figures: Fairmount, Indiana, the home of James Dean; Ronald Reagan's Dixon, Illinois; and lastly, Mark Twain's revered Hannibal, Missouri.

This is more than just a book of beautiful photographs. The reader gains insight into how these towns helped to shape the character of these three men, and how each man's celebrity informed the character of these towns. Interspersed among the photographs are selections of writings by and about the three men: excerpts from Dean's high school themes, Reagan's autobiography and Twain's "Life of the Mississippi," as well as fan club newsletters, movie reviews, and local newspaper clippings. Each of these aid in our transport into the past and illuminate Tice's meditative view of these Midwestern towns today.

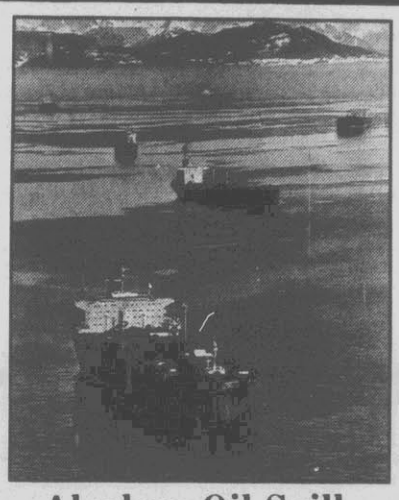

Tice is a master photographer, having received numerous honors, including fellowships from the Guggenheim Foundation and the National Endowment for the Arts.

It is no wonder, then, that each photograph is as meticulously crafted as a piece of sculpture or fine painting, with rich detail and a loving eye.

"Hometowns" is a lovely book, and one that should appeal to most. Come by Sheppard soon and browse through this delightful and very special portrait of the American heartland.

Fascinating Facts About The 'Chattanooga Choo Choo' Song

By John Shearer
FOR THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn. — Pardon me, boy, but do you know the story of the song, "Chattanooga Choo-Choo?"

Even though the Glenn Miller number was recorded nearly 50 years ago, its words and melody are still well known among today's youth and droves of non-Chattanoogans.

Evidence can be found in the fact that a research firm several weeks ago told local public officials that residents in cities within a day's drive of Chattanooga more often associate the song with the Scenic City than they do any attraction or place.

Just as "I've Got a Gal in Kalamazoo" put Kalamazoo, Mich., on the map, the song "Chattanooga Choo-Choo" has perhaps made Chattanooga more famous than its population size might dictate.

According to two local train historians, there was never a train called the Chattanooga Choo-Choo, although one person has documented that newspaper reporters used the term to refer to the first train that ran when the Cincinnati-to-Chattanooga railroad line opened years ago.

The song is actually about a New York-to-Chattanooga route.

But the name was never officially used and never seemed to have caught on before "Chattanooga Choo-Choo" was released, so it is widely believed the song was merely an invention of a creative song writer trying to put together a catchy phrase.

The song was actually written specifically for the 1941 movie, "Sun Valley Serenade," a 20th Century-Fox film that was popular when released but doesn't seem to have enjoyed nearly as much lasting appeal as "Chattanooga Choo-Choo."

Movie executives, realizing a chance to make money, had begun featuring big bands in pictures several years earlier to draw teen-agers into the theaters. But the bands usually only appeared in musical scenes and had little to do with the overall plot.

Glenn Miller, who had never performed in a movie before, agreed to be in "Sun Valley Serenade" only if the film was believable and his band would play a significant and consequential role in the script. He was granted both wishes and filming began in March 1941.

The band director, voted the most popular American musician by a poll of college students in 1942 but who perished in a plane crash in 1944, was to play the role of band leader Phil Corey.

tlso starring were John Payne, Milton Berle and Sonja Henie, the figure skater from Norway who had won gold medals in the 1928, 1932 and 1936 Winter Olympics.

Glenn Miller's band recorded "Chattanooga Choo-Choo" and other songs for the movie first and then pretended to be playing during the filming. The lyrics for "Chattanooga Choo-Choo" were written by Mack Gordon, while the music was composed by Harry Waren. Jerry Gray is credited with "Chattanooga Choo-Choo's" arrangement. Among the vocalists were Paula Kelly, Tex Beneke and other members of the Modernaires.

While "Chattanooga Choo-Choo" is played in the movie, the Nicholas Brothers and Dorothy Dandridge perform a dance routine in front of a prop of a train with the words Chattanooga Choo-Choo written on it.

The movie opened in Chattanooga at the Tivoli on Oct. 12, 1941, and ran for four days, a standard run at one theater at the time. It was later shown at other local theaters.

News-Free Press movie reviewer Marian Rosenbloum praised the music in "Sun Valley Serenade," saying, "Sonja Henie gets top billing but real honors go to Glenn Miller and his band."

Metronome magazine wrote of the band's performance: "From the shadowed figures of the bandsmen which serve as background, to the credit titles of the picture, to the easy presentation of the rehearsal scene that features 'Chattanooga Choo-Choo,' the band is really brilliantly directed, lighted and photographed."

The song "Chattanooga Choo-Choo," Edward Conjager's cinematography and Emil Newman's musical direction were all nominated for Academy Awards in 1941.

As a single, "Chattanooga Choo-Choo" became the first record since Gene Austin's 1920s song, "My Blue Heaven," to sell a million copies. To commemorate the sales, RCA Victor presented Glenn Miller with a gold record, a gesture that had never been done before.

The Record Industry Association of America picked up on the idea and soon began presenting gold records to artists who sold a million records. So all the gold and platinum records that are given today started as a result of RCA Victor's actions over the sales of "Chattanooga Choo-Choo."

Azalea Festival Street Fair Set

WILMINGTON — "The 1989 Azalea Festival Street Fair will be the biggest and best ever planned," said Bill Cameron, president of the Wilmington's 42nd Annual Azalea Festival.

This year, the Street Fair will begin at noon on April 15 (immediately after the parade and close that day at 5 p.m. The second day, on April 16, the Street Fair will reopen at noon and close at 5 p.m.

According to festival officials, the 1989 Street Fair will reach from Chandler's Wharf to the Riverfront Park to The Cotton Exchange and end with festivities at The Railroad Museum.

Until this year, the Street Fair went only as far as The Cotton Exchange, but because of the substantial increase in booth reservations as well as entertainment bookings of all kinds, it was necessary to expand Street Fair space and stage areas.

The 1989 Azalea Festival Street Fair will feature over 100 arts and craft booths, nearly 40 food booths, several commercials craft booths, a beer tent and a wine tent.

Continuous entertainment geared to all ages and preferences will be featured on five stages, the newest being at The Railroad Museum.

A variety of music and performing acts will be featured on five stages this year. The Chandler's Wharf stage will showcast performers that range from folk and rock and roll to gospel and jazz. The Riverfront Park stage will feature a wide array of individual performing acts. The Beer Tent stage has booked country and rock and roll musicians.

The Cotton Exchange stage will be a favorite spot for children with clogging, dance, youth singing, gymnastics, bicycle and skateboard groups scheduled.

The popular Street Dance will be held April 15 from 6 p.m. until 10 p.m. at the Coast Guard Dock, foot of Princess Street. Music will be provided by "Lou's Blues Revue," an Atlanta-based group.

Currently, planning is to have the Coast Guard Cutter "Seneca" out of Boston, and "The John Huges," a Navy Fast Frigate which is based in Charleston, to both be docked at the Coast Guard Dock location.

Arabs Intrigued By American Indian Tom-Tom Music

MANAMA, Bahrain — War whoops pierced the desert s llness. Tom-toms kept the beat as ancers circled under the starry sky nd the campfire flickered their sha ws on the adobe walls.

The American Indian had to Arabia.

The fascinated onlook ere Bahrainis, who also have t ig-ins, but dance to different d

The occasion was a cros ultural pow-wow during a visit by the American Indian Dance Theatre, a 15-member troupe touring the Middle East and Europe under the auspices of the U.S. Information Service.

The Americans, representing eight Indian tribes from Apache to Zuni, said they were delighted by the Arabs' enthusiasm at their performances, featuring traditional dances in authentic dress.

"We show them the vibrant colors, our beadwork, the songs, dances. In a sense, they're just like us, they have their tribal songs and dances that are new to us, just as ours are to them," said Marty Pennecoose, 31, a Southern Ute who now lives in Salem, Ore., and works as a high-iron construction worker.

The desert gathering, arranged by the U.S. Embassy, was a private affair held in the ruins of an 80-year-old sheik's palace, within sight and smell of Bahrain's oil and gas fields.

The 50 or so guests sat on rugs in the sand, eating Middle Eastern food, including four roast lambs, to watch an all-male Bahraini dance group perform.

The Indians later staged an impromptu performance. Long hair and braids flew as the dancers, wearing jeans, cowboy boots and sneakers instead of tribal costumes, mingled with the Bahrainis in their white dishdashi robes and Arab headdress.

Pennecoose said it was "a learning process, going to these different countries, experiencing their surroundings and cultures, things that we'd only see in books."

"We want to show the rest of the world what we have to offer," he said. "It's a good thing, what we're doing, dancing around the world."

Arlie Neskahi, 32, a Navajo and lead singer, said he found cultural similarities as well as differences.

"Our people are shepherds, and I grew up eating lamb and goat," said Neskahi, who wore an Arab head scarf wrapped in the style of Yemen.

"My father always told me it takes all the colors of the rainbow to make it beautiful," he said.

"We want to share our cultures with other people who don't know anything about us," said Chester Mahooty, 60, a Zuni Indian from New Mexico and the troupe's senior member.

"The people here think that John Wayne is the most popular, not the Indians. We have to tell them the truth."

It was that stereotype that the company's founder and producer, Barbara Schwei, said she wanted to dispel.

"I felt there was definitely a need to express the American Indian culture to people because there is such a lack of information. I thought it was time for a company done properly, playing first-class theaters all over the world." Schwei, with director and choreographer Hanay Geiogamah, picked the dancers during visits to Indian pow-wows and festivals in the southern and northwestern United States.

The members are drawn from both American and Canadian tribes.

Geiogamah, a Kiowa Delaware from Oklahoma, said the result is "a kind of new pan-tribal idiom" that helps Indians preserve and expand an important art form.

Mahooty, who adorns himself with hu e turquoise breastplates and rin s, said American Indian dances emphasize a religious relationship with nature.

Many are acted-out prayers to the "Great Creator," mother Earth, or mountain spirits, for rain, good harvest or hunting. "Eagle dances," common from the northern plains to the southwestern pueblos, pay homage to the soaring bird that Indians believe has direct contact with deities in the sky.

Talmage Fauntleroy To Lead Opera Workshop

ECU NEWS BUREAU

Talmadge Fauntleroy, a graduate of East Carolina University, who is now director of the Studio Lirico opera workshop in Stia, Italy, will return to his alma mater next week to work with advanced student singers in the ECU School of Music.

Fauntleroy's visit is part of ECU's Minority Presence Initiative, a program sponsored by the Offices of the Chancellor, Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs and Equal Opportunities Programs. Fauntleroy is one of a number of scholars who are members of a minority race scheduled to visit ECU this year.

During his weeklong sojourn at ECU, Fauntleroy will lead a "Characterization Workshop" for ECU opera students, culminating in a public presentation of opera scenes on Friday at 4 p.m. in the Fletcher Music Center Recital Hall.

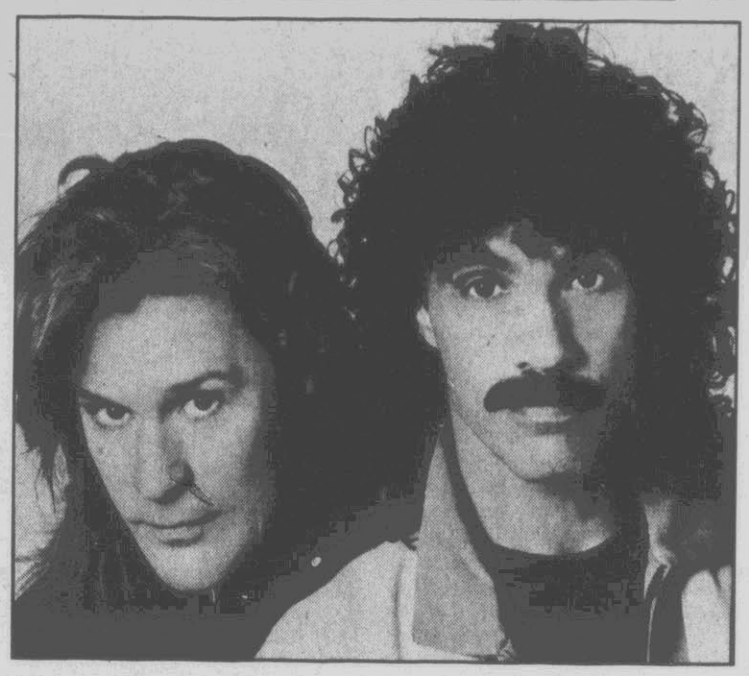

On Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday he will conduct workshop sessions in Room 105 Fletcher from 4 p.m. to 6 p.m. each day. A Thursday session, also from 4 p.m. to 6 p.m., will be held in the Recital Hall. All sessions and the opera scenes performance are free and open to the public.

Fauntleroy resides in Florence, Italy. In addition to directing the Studio Lirico, an opera apprenticeship program for young professional singers, he is artistic director of the international Festa Musicale Stiana which is held in the Italian province of Arezzo each summer. He is also director of opera studies at the Conservatory Pietro Mascagni in Livorno, Italy.

A 1975 graduate of ECU, Fauntleroy studied at ECU under voice teacher Gladys White and received the Master of Music degree from Howard University in Washington, D.C. in 1977. He has been an opera administration intern with Opera America and recipient of a fellowship from the National Endowment for the Arts.

While best known for his work with new, very old and little-known operatic material, Fauntleroy has also received acclaim for his productions of traditional repertory. His production of Rossini's "Barber of Seville" for the Virginia Opera Theatre was described as "delightfully coy but avoids the overinventive excesses that stage directors so often use."

Q How do you explain the decline of Burt Reynolds as a screen star? For five years he was the hottest thing in Hollywood, earning millions per picture. Now they can't give him away, or so they say.—Josh Fisher, Rochester, N.Y.

A Reynolds, 53, is the victim of a series of poor motion pictures, the fickleness of moviegoers and an inexplicable loss of charisma. In the 1970s, the public regarded him as a likable, witty, easygoing actor who went steadily with Dinah Shore, then with Sally Field. Over the years, however, he seemed to develop into a money-minting playboy corrupted by success, and the public tuned him out. Reynolds and his second wife, actress Loni Anderson, now live in Florida with their adopted infant son, Quinton, and Reynolds hopes to restore his popularity via a new TV show, "The ABC Mystery Movie," an anthology series featuring three rotating two-hour dramas. Every three weeks, Burt will star as B.L. Stryker, a private eye.

Q Isn't it a fact that Doris Duke, the tobacco heiress, jointly owns—with Imelda and Ferdinand Marcos—the Philippine Virginia Tobacco Co.? And isn't it a fact that the funds from that corporation were used to bail out Imelda last year in New York City?—L.S.J., Oxnard, Calif.

A There is no truth to your allegations. Doris Duke is using her own funds to help Imelda and Ferdinand Marcos in their time of difficulty.

Margaret: She beat rap

Q Margaret Trudeau —once married to Pierre Trudeau, ex-prime minister of Canada, by whom she has three sons—was arrested last year on a marijuana charge. What happened at her trial? Was she found guilty?—Phyllis F., Vancouver, B.C.

A The case never came to trial, owing to a reported defect in the search warrant. Margaret, 40—currently married to Fried Kemper, a real-estate agent in Ottawa—was charged with possession of marijuana. The former "flower child" insists she doesn't smoke the stuff.

Q President and Mrs. Bush have five adult children and 11 grandchildren. Vice President Quayle and Mrs. Quayle have three children, all minors. Are all these people under the protection of the Secret Service?—G.L., Venice, Calif.

A The President and Mrs. Bush and the Vice President and Mrs. Quayle are under Secret Service protection. At this writing, however, only one of the Bush children has accepted Secret Service safeguarding. The other four apparently believe it would alter their lifestyle too radically. They can, of course, change their minds in the future, and some probably will. The three Quayle children are under the protective wing of the Secret Service.

Q Are singer Michael Jackson and his sister LaToya on the outs because LaToya disobeyed him and posed in the nude for "Playboy" magazine? —Lydia Booker, Little Rock, Ark.

A They are not. Says big sister LaToya Jackson, 31: "Michael understood why I did it, and he thought it was a good career move."

Q Christopher Reeve, who plays "Superman" on the screen, has lived with British model Gae Exton and their two kids for years without benefit of marriage. Suddenly one hears that Reeve is about to marry the kids' baby sitter in New York. True or false?—Gloria B., Hartford, Conn.

A Dana Morosini, 26, an attractive singer-actress, has been coupled with Christopher Reeve in printed reports which state that she entered the actor's life as a baby sitter. Reeve and Exton have two children—Matthew, 9, and Alexandra, 5.

Ron Galella

Q A California jury awarded Rock Hudson's gay lover $14.5 million on the grounds that he had been emotionally damaged when Hudson failed to confide that he was dying of AIDS. How large an estate did the film star leave? Is it large enough to afford such massive judgments? Also, how much does the lawyer representing Hudson's lover get as his fee?—P. Crowley, Kissimmee, Fla.

A According to probate attorney Earl Bender, Hudson's estate is valued at approximately $6 million. There is a good probability, however, that a judge will reduce the amount the jury awarded Marc Christian, Hudson's lover. If the judgment is not overturned or reduced, Robert Parker Mills, attorney for Hudson's estate, will file an appeal to the higher California courts, a process which can take years. Harold Rhoden, lawyer for Christian, will receive a third of the settlement, which he must split 50/50 with Marvin Mitchelson, Christian's original attorney in the case.

David Hackworth's love for the Army was greater than anything else in his life. Until it disappointed him.

Eddie Adams

Can He Come Home Again?

BY JAMES WEBB

SCHOFIELD Barracks, Hawaii, is an historic post, made famous in the novel From Here to Eternity. One almost searches for the rowdy, khaki-clad soldiers of yesteryear as he passes the quiet streets and stately old parade ground. But those men are gone now, replaced by young soldiers in baggy camouflage fatigues.

A warrior from an earlier time watches these young inheritors. He wears a powder-blue shirt and tan slacks. Both arms are scarred from combat wounds and surgically removed tattoos. His hair is gray and his eyes, the color of his shirt, are merry and discerning. David Hackworth is back inside an Army post for the first time in 18 years.

"How much does this weapon weigh?" he asks a soldier carrying an automatic rifle, who peeks at a card for the answer. "How would you like to fire this weapon in combat?" he queries the gunner of an antitank rocket, who confesses that he has never even fired one in peacetime.

David Hackworth has not lost his keen eye, or his irreverence. And these soldiers could use his help, for he knows their trade like few others. But it isn't that easy. To many, he is an albatross who carries with him the ghost of an Army that, in his view, failed itself and the nation by not winning the war in Vietnam. To others, he is simply a warrior who became an eccentric.

I had heard about "Hack" for years from Army veterans and from journalists who had covered the Vietnam war. His story had the grist of classic tragedy: the odds he overcame as a boy, his courage and dedication on the battlefields of Korea and Vietnam, the dreadful end to a brilliant career, the bitterness that drove him from his homeland to live in Australia, where he flourished as an entrepreneur. I heard that he had written a book and was finally coming home.

I felt a kinship with David Hackworth. During our interviews, we often stopped to trade stories from a war in which we both had bled. At the end, I gave him the most sincere tribute that one warrior can pay to another: I gladly would have fought alongside this man.

But there are problems with David Hackworth too.

He began the Vietnam war—as did the United States Army—with a dedication to discipline, a proven legacy of valor and a belief that the enemy could and should be soundly defeated. Hackworth spent four years on the battlefield, adding four Purple Hearts for wounds in action to the four he had received as a young soldier in Korea, and becoming perhaps the most decorated living American soldier. His combat exploits in both wars were the stuff of legend. He was awarded two Distinguished Service Crosses, second only to the Medal of Honor; nine Silver Stars, four Legions of Merit and eight Bronze Stars.

"Hack is the finest combat leader I have ever seen," says Brig. Gen. John Howard, a West Pointer who served under Hackworth as a platoon leader. "He had no peer. He simply had an innate sense of the battlefield."

"He was the most inspirational leader I saw in 25 years of Army service," notes Doug Holtz, who spent time as both an enlisted draftee and an officer.

Hackworth, now 58, was an almost certain promotee to general—an unimaginable feat for a man who had run away from an orphanage at age 14 and had largely educated himself after enlisting in the Army at age 15. He was known as an inspirational leader and a bold tactician. He was a respected thinker and writer, a protégé of the military historian S.L.A. Marshall and a favorite of former Army Secretary Stanley Resor.

And yet...By the time South Vietnam fell in 1975, David Hackworth was living in exile as a self-described "hippie" on a 160-acre farm he had built from scratch in the rain forests of northern Australia. He had stormily departed from Vietnam and the Army in 1971, after castigating the Army's strategy and leadership in a TV interview on Issues and Answers and predicting with haunting accuracy in a Newsweek interview that "the North Vietnamese flag [will be] flying over Saigon in 1975."

David Hackworth's life plays on a big screen. It's filled with great heroism and grand flaws. In many ways, his story is an allegory of the Army itself following World War II. His improbable successes seemed almost a magnification of the opportunities the Army provided; his disenchantment provided a harsh judgment of its foibles and travails. And his trek from spit-and-polish sergeant to spit-in-your-face colonel mirrored the Army's long march from World War II victors to the humiliated, dispirited brigades that limped home from Vietnam.

"He was the very best we had," remembers retired Lt. Gen. Hank Emerson, another legendary warrior who, like Hackworth, twice won the Distinguished Service Cross. "There is no soldier I respect more. He could do it all. He could write, speak, fight—you name it. He would have had at least three stars. And he came to a terrible end."

At a time when other boys his age were trying to figure out what to say to that cute girl at the bus stop, David Hackworth was in the Merchant Marine, spending liberty calls in steamy Pacific ports and touring battlefields still littered with the debris of recent slaughter. A year later he joined the Army and was reporting to the 752nd Tank Battalion in Italy, a unit gone wild as its veterans waited to be shipped home from World War II. He then served as a squad leader in the elite Trieste United States Troops. Young Hackworth had no qualms about pushing his squad to perfection. He was so tough, and so thoroughly motivated, that his older squad members nicknamed him "Sergeant Combat."

The name seemed to fit. From Trieste he volunteered for Korea, fighting from Pusan to the Yalu River and back again during the disastrous early days of the war. He stayed until the end, with time out only to complete the infantry officer's course at Fort Benning, Ga., after receiving a battlefield commission at the age of 20. He finished the war with three Silver Stars, two Bronze Stars, four Purple Hearts and a reputation for charismatic, independent leadership.

"The Army had become my home," Hackworth says of those early years. "I loved it. I belonged there. And it remained my first and favored love for 25 years. I was a soldier 24 hours a day."

Between wars, Hackworth educated himself. He became an astute thinker and a prolific writer on military tactics, the author of many challenging and thought-provoking articles. He was a favored co-author of military writer S.L.A. Marshall. He also wrote Vietnam Primer, one of the most important internal textbooks of the Vietnam war.

Below, Hackworth (l) poses with fellow soldiers after 1966 battle for village of My Canh: U.S. claimed victory, he says, but suffered heavy casualties. Above, on the farm in Australia, 1988.

'I loved the Army,' he says. 'I belonged there.' Yet, in 1971, he stormily departed after publicly denouncing its tactics.

Hackworth spent more than four years in Vietnam, first with the 101st Airborne Division and then—after two years at the Pentagon—as a battalion commander with the 9th Infantry Division and with a number of Vietnamese units and advisory commands. His battlefield performance embellished his reputation as a bold, imaginative leader who savored independence of thought and action.

During his time at the Pentagon, Hackworth surveyed the progress of the war with increasing frustration at the Army's lack of overall objectives and its failure to adapt its tactics to the enemy. He also was one of the earliest critics of "ticket-punching"—the policy that fed officers into the battlefield for a few months to give them some combat experience in order to "round out their resumés," instead of focusing on leaders who could fight more effectively, stay longer and win the war. After the surprising Communist strength in the 1968 Tet Offensive, he wrote, "the Army has botched the war...To win we need a Wingate, Giap, Rommel, Jackson, McNair-type soldier. But I doubt if our present system will produce such an individual."

In a memorandum to Gen. William Westmoreland, Hackworth elaborated: "The capable combat leader has traits which are inconsistent with today's criteria for high-level positions. As a result, men who know how to win in battle, with rare exception, just don't get ahead." He later wrote that ticket-punching was the Army's "death blow," a response to demands from top civilian leaders for "officers who would not only command fighting men but also teach physics, serve as statesmen and advise industry. This produced officers conversant in many matters, and proficient in very few."

Discouraged by the failure of the Army to adjust to the war, Hackworth contemplated resigning but instead volunteered to return in command of a battalion of ill-motivated draftees. "I was obsessed with winning," he explains. "I believed that it was more a question of leadership than of doctrine, that if I could take draftees and make them win, I could show the Army how to turn the war around."

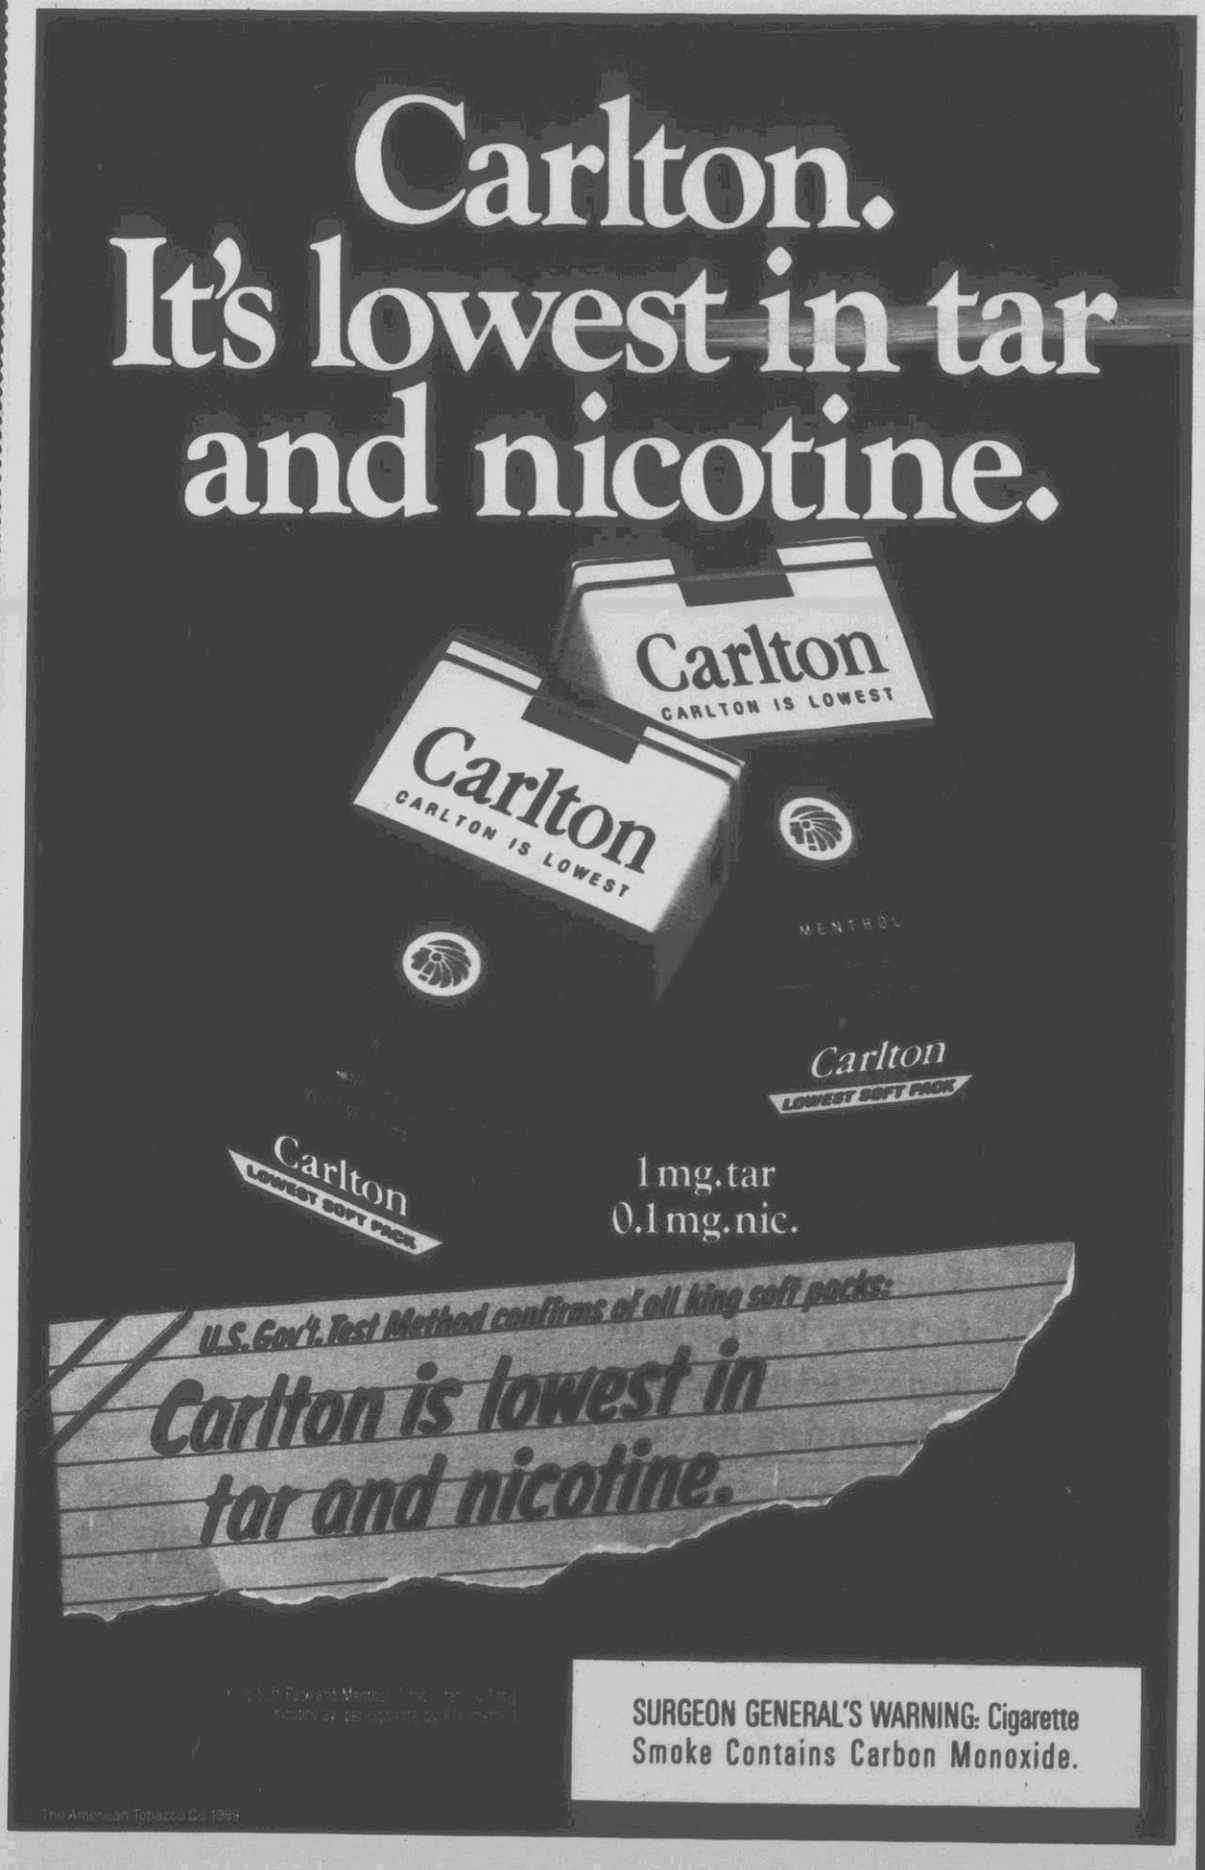

In January 1969, he took over a battalion in the 39th Infantry Brigade that had failed to account for a single enemy casualty in six months and yet had lost more than 500 killed or wounded. "It was total disintegration," he comments. "It wasn't even a military organization."

Hackworth shaped up the battalion in less than a month. By emphasizing surprise, deception, mobility and imagination—and by rotating platoons to the division rear for unit training—he turned the "hard-luck" battalion into the "hardcore" battalion. In five months, it accounted for more than 2700 enemy dead, with a loss of only 26 soldiers.

Despite his successes, Hackworth laments that there was no interest in his revolutionary tactics. "There were seven general officers in my chain of command, and not one of them even asked me how it worked," he recalls. "I wrote extensive reports on how we could win and still preserve our human assets. At the same time, my old division—the 101st—was repeating the mistakes of the past, making 11 assaults up Hamburger Hill, losing almost 400 casualties, only to abandon the hill a few days later. The Army was pushing ticket-punchers through Vietnam like tourists: Spend a few months in combat, get your Combat Infantryman's Badge, go home and wait for the final pullout."

If Hackworth had gone home in 1969, he would have had an unmatchable chestfull of medals, a reputation as one of the finest mid-level combat commanders in Army history and a bright future. Instead, he stayed on in Vietnam and grew more bitter and outspoken. He twice refused orders to attend War College, opting to work with the South Vietnamese. "Vietnamization" was in full swing, and he quickly decided it was a doomed effort. "The ARVNs were good soldiers," he remembers. "And they had some great leaders at the top. But their mid-level leadership was a disaster. Too many were political appointees who were more concerned about stealing than fighting. They betrayed their nation and their soldiers."

continued

It was clear to him by 1971 that the war was lost. "It was like a play," he says, "and it was time to bring the curtain down. Our top leaders lacked the guts either to fight the war right or to offer their resignations in order to stop it. I didn't want anyone else to die when the purpose had gone. We still could have won, even in 1971, by placing mid-level ARVN units under the direct command of American officers and rebuilding the South Vietnamese officer corps. But that wasn't going to happen."

Hackworth, never a "by-the-book" soldier, rebelled. Embittered by what he viewed as a paralysis in Army leadership whose end result was an acquiescence to continued American casualties, he decided to "hurt the Army as badly as she'd hurt me," as he puts it. "I went out of my way to break every regulation I could. I took immense joy in screwing the system, joy that was only matched by the fact that in the process my men had some of the best times of their lives." The man who, as a young sergeant, had marched his squad to the front gate in Trieste to warn them that there would be no liberty without military perfection in the barracks and who, as a battalion commander in 1969, had relieved a radio operator for having written an expletive directed at the Army on his helmet, now led an antidisciplinary assault.

His remote command post deteriorated into what he terms "one big broken regulation." An Inspector General team descended on his command after his Issues and Answers diatribe, finding massive violations. He had erected a massage parlor that doubled as a house of ill repute inside his compound. He had gambled with subordinates. He had begun a "drug amnesty" program, with a buddy system that, if all else failed, allowed the "clean" buddy to urinate in place of the drug offender, avoiding court-martial and allowing him to "go home, hopefully to start a better life." He was accused of currency violations and subjected to a seven-year audit of his tax records. And it was only after being represented by Joseph Califano, later HEW Secretary, and Brendan Sullivan, whose most recent military client has been Oliver North, that Hackworth could retire without being court-martialed.

S.L.A. Marshall wrote that Hackworth, while a "true hero," was "overlong in battle and emotionally imbalanced," adding that he was "out of his depths" in discussing the strategy of the war. Hank Emerson, who in 1977 retired after criticizing the ill-fated Bradley fighting vehicle, agrees that Hackworth was "burnt out" and laments that Hackworth's superiors did not send him home earlier.

"He was our treasured star," says Emerson. "We needed him during the years just after the war."

It is human maxim, as old as Achilles, that those who give the most often end up paying the biggest price. In war, some inevitably die. But in long, inconclusive wars, others suffer the death of their spirit, brought on by the paradox of their repeated courage, on the one hand, and the overwhelming futility of their effort, on the other. And so David Hackworth, eight times wounded in two such conflicts, ceased to be a soldier in a war he believed was winnable long after he'd ceased to believe it would ever be won.

As Gen. John Howard put it: "It has been said that David Hackworth 'died' in the service of his country in 1971."

Now, after 20 years abroad, Hackworth is coming home. The hippie phase is long gone, having given way to entrepreneurship. Today, he is a millionaire "a few times over" from the management of a restaurant business and from a duck farm begun with 12 ducks that soon was selling 2000 ducks a week.

In Australia, his bitterness manifested itself in outbursts given to rhetorical extremes. He became deeply involved in the anti-nuclear movement. He warned that the Carter Administration's reaction to the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan might somehow bring us into another Vietnam. In 1981, he stated that Ronald Reagan "had surrounded himself with a bunch of Nuke the Pukers" and began stockpiling food and water at his farm in case of nuclear war. He blames U.S. policy for having "sent Castro into the Soviet camp" and having "turned Central America into a killing field." He writes in his new book, About Face, that successive administrations have "allowed the CIA to run riot in Third World nations, with excesses that rival the Nazis."

And yet, in person, he seems to have vented a great deal of his earlier anger. "As I wrote the book, the bitterness went away," he says. "I was so affected by Vietnam. The book gave me the catharsis I had needed for all these years."

Hackworth plans to move to Colorado and hopes to become a military commentator. "My first love has always been the Army," he says. "I think I have some important insights to offer, especially in the area of readiness and training."

And we have much to learn from David Hackworth—about personal courage, human resilience and what it takes to train and lead combat soldiers. But he also stands to learn a great deal from this nation he left 20 years ago—about its continuing obligation to lead the free world and how we slowly but honestly have been coming to grips with our national failure in Southeast Asia.

And perhaps we can relearn together the lesson of tolerance. We all burned out in some fashion toward the end of the Vietnam war. But beyond that anger and disappointment, there are hands to shake and wounds that yet may heal.

High school basketball teams are taking a chance with female coaches

Steve Goldstein

Andy Levin

Roz Goldenberg (l) of Oakwood School in North Hollywood coaches the sort of defensive style she played in college. Debbie McIntosh (above) of Brooklyn's Prospect Heights High was voted Coach of the Year in a poll of her peers.

How Some Women Teach Boys To WIN

"DOWN THE MIDDLE!" Debbie McIntosh yells to the players running the basketball up the court, her large eyes following each dribble and pass. "Watch the middle! Get back!"

In the packed high school auditorium, where all the other cheering women are either proud mothers or enthusiastic schoolmates, this fair-haired female is The Coach. And to her, the job is about a lot more than just winning at athletics. McIntosh coaches the boys' varsity basketball team at Prospect Heights High, a tough inner-city school in an area of Brooklyn, N.Y., that is ravaged by crime and drugs. And she is determined to see that the students on her team go to college—hopefully on scholarship. Her game plan for the boys is not just for victory on the basketball court but for victory in life.

"I work three hours a day with the team, in addition to their gym classes," says McIntosh. "They don't have time to get into trouble.

"Basketball season is October to March, but the rest of the year I write to colleges and try to get the kids scholarships. Coaching," McIntosh says resolutely, "is a seven-day-a-week job."

Unusual as the idea of a woman coach may seem, McIntosh is not alone—not entirely, that is. She is one of about half a dozen women among the 18,680 coaches of boys' high school basketball teams across the United States. The number of females who coach boys is, therefore, too slight to be considered a real trend, but the women's efforts—and their results—are noteworthy. One hallmark: They insist that if the boys don't score in class, they are not allowed to compete on the court. "Whenever I think about cutting class," says Donald Taylor, 18, "I hear Miss Mac's words come into my head, saying, 'Don't do it!'"

McIntosh, 35, is compact and intense, with cropped platinum-blond ringlets and three earring studs on each lobe. Her players, all black, describe her as a second mother or, lest she seem too old, a loving sister. "Miss Mac worries about us like a mother but talks back to us like a coach," says Locksley Gordon, 17.

Divorced, McIntosh has no children of her own but is ready when the youths bring her their personal problems. "One boy asked me about contraception," she says. "Another talked about an argument he had with his girlfriend. I don't believe in telling them they should go to someone else. If they had somewhere else to go, they would go."

Born and raised in Brooklyn, herself a hip city kid, McIntosh has a physical education degree from Brooklyn College and a master's in human sexuality from New York University. She taught gym at Prospect Heights for seven years until 1985, when the principal "begged" her to coach the boys' junior varsity team because no one else wanted the job. McIntosh took it but was so inexperienced on the basketball court that she had to phone her predecessor so he could explain how to run a practice. Two years later, in 1987, she was asked to take on the boys' varsity team. "She earned the job," says Steve Appelbaum, the school's former principal, who gave McIntosh the job. "She gave a damn about the kids—much more than a win-it-all coach."

McIntosh won it all anyway, just about. At the end of the 1987-88 season, the team was voted Sportsmen of the Year by the New York Referees Association; she was voted Coach of the Year in a poll of New York City's high school basketball coaches; and last November McIntosh and her team were featured on CBS's 60 Minutes.

Across the continent in North Hollywood, Calif., Roz Goldenberg of Oakwood School is coaching the boys on her team to master a different sort of skill. Oakwood is a private, intensely academic coed prep school where most students are headed for top colleges. It's a school where students are encouraged to express their individuality. "I expect the boys to play hard and represent the school with sportsmanship," says Goldenberg. "But I also expect them to be team-oriented. That's the hardest part."

At the start of each season, Goldenberg is the host of what her players call "Hell Weekend." The boys go to her house, an hour outside the city, where they jog through the countryside, cook dinner and really talk, exposing their feelings about themselves and each other.

"We are in the same mindset as Roz," says John Muntner, 16, a player and president of the student body. "We know what she expects of us, and if we're not giving our all, we feel it."

Goldenberg, 31, coaches the sort of defensive style she herself played in college at California State at Northridge. Since Oakwood has just 220 upperclassmen, Goldenberg has only a small pool of talented boys to draw from, yet she found a star: Mitchell Butler, one of the best young players in the state, who just won a scholarship to UCLA. When other high schools tried to woo Butler away, he stayed with his coach. "Roz is demanding," says Butler, 18, "but she knows how to motivate us mentally, and she has a good sense of humor."

"Coaching boys has been easier than I thought," says Goldenberg. "Winning helps." Indeed, last year her team won the championship of the Southern Small Schools division of the California Interscholastic Federation, which has more teams than some entire states.

Until recently, the women coaches did not know each other existed. When Wanda Oates, the coach at Frank Ballou High in Washington, D.C., learned that Gertrude Fisher coached Boston Technical, a public prep school, she was determined that their teams would meet on the court. Oates footed the $12,000 expense of transporting and housing the Boston team herself by forgoing the purchase of a new car. "The purpose of our game was to show that women can coach as well as men," says Oates. "Gertrude is as fiery and aggressive as any male coach, and so am I." Each put up a tough fight, with Oates' team winning 59-54.

Ballou is an inner-city school faced with the challenges of poverty. The flinty Oates, a graduate of Howard University with a master's from George Washington University, is 46, single and has taught health and phys ed at Ballou for 23 years. She was named coach of the boys' team in 1988. "Going to class is a condition for being on my team," she says. "My main goal is to get every one of my players a college scholarship. I don't care if it's a sports or academic scholarship, as long as the boys go to school." To make sure her players are at the books early, she teaches an 8 a.m. health class. She sees them again for an afternoon study period, in addition to practice sessions.

"At first I wondered about having a woman coach, but I knew she had coached the girls to a championship, and I saw how good she was," says Price Williams, 17. "Then, in the middle of the season, when our first report cards came out, she told us we'd have to forfeit all the rest of the games because our academics weren't good. At the next report card, four of us were on the honor roll. Others went from D's to C's, B's and A's."

Some traditions do fall by the wayside when a woman is in charge. Female coaches stay out of the locker room while the boys are dressing and leave it to others to explain personal hygiene problems, such as jock itch. Because of their enthusiasm, commitment and intense involvement, however, the women forge a bond with the boys that is as fierce as any male coach could hope for.

Dr. Lee Salk, a professor of psychology, psychiatry and pediatrics at Cornell University Medical College, says that women coaching boys is a positive thing. "Certainly it breaks down the stereotype of women as nonauthoritative. The idea that it might in any way be a problem reminds me that 25 years ago people asked me if women wearing pants would create confusion in the minds of young children."

Sometimes the women coaches' approach to a problem is, well, typically female. When the limited athletic budget at Prospect Heights prevented the team from playing important but non-league games that would round out their season, Debbie McIntosh—and the boys—raised money by selling candy.

"Boys don't have a problem with women coaches at all, although some authorities think boys need male role models," says Ellen J. Staurowsky, director of athletics and physical education at William Smith College in Geneva, N.Y., who is studying the phenomenon of women coaching boys' teams. "From a developmental standpoint, it's good for them to get used to women in positions of power."

Five years ago, bone-marrow transplants from outside the patient's immediate family were almost unknown. Today, anyone can donate.

Ed Kashi

You Can Save A Stranger's Life

Why take the time and trouble to become a donor? Why help someone whom you will never know? Just ask Laura Packer and her dad.

BY MICHAEL RYAN

"IT'S A BIOLOGICAL TIME bomb we're racing against, and we have every hope and confidence that we will win the race," said Dave Frohnmayer, 48, father of five, former Rhodes scholar and now attorney general of Oregon.

Five-and-a-half years ago, his oldest daughter, Kirsten, now 16, was diagnosed as having a degenerative bone-marrow disease. Called Fanconi's anemia, it is a progressive disorder in which the bone marrow gradually abdicates its function of producing fresh blood cells. A handful of victims survive into their 30s; many never see 21. Then doctors made another discovery: Kirsten's sister Katie, 10, had the disease as well. For both girls, a bone-marrow transplant became vital.

"They did immediate tissue-typing on my entire family at University Hospital in Portland," Frohnmayer said. "We didn't understand the intricacies of bone-marrow transplantation at that point. When our physician told us, with great sadness, that there was no donor in the family, we didn't understand the significance of that."

At that time, marrow donations from outside a patient's immediate family were almost unknown—and very risky. But without a marrow donation, Kirsten and Katie had no hope. Today, all that has changed. The Frohnmayer girls, and thousands of other patients, now have a chance—if enough of their fellow citizens are willing to help—through the National Marrow Donor Program in St. Paul, Minn.

Kelly Leonard's face was swollen and flushed from the drugs she was taking; chemotherapy had robbed the 13-year-old girl of her hair. But she smiled from behind the plastic sheet that sealed her into a sterile environment. When I asked how she felt, she said, "Okay," then admitted, "I wish it was summer, so I wouldn't be missing so much school."

Last year, physicians in her hometown of Pueblo, Colo., discovered that Kelly had leukemia. None of her relatives matched her tissue type. But the National Marrow Donor Program ran Kelly's tissue type through a computer and found a donor. In December, doctors at the Fred Hutchinson Cancer Center in Seattle subjected her to radiation and chemotherapy that killed her diseased marrow. Then they transplanted marrow from an anonymous donor. "I know he's from Baltimore, and his name is Joe," Kelly said. "I wrote and told him 'thank you.'"

Joe is one of 25,000 Americans who have registered with the National Marrow Donor Program; many more are needed. "We know now that unrelated donor transplants are almost as effective, if not as effective, as sibling donations," said Dr. Jeff McCullough, president of the program.

Under the program's rules, Kelly probably will never meet Joe, or learn much about the man who saved her life. But, in the two years since the donor program was organized, there have been a hundred others like Joe. They have undergone a surgical process in which small incisions are made in their backs, and marrow is removed by needles run through the hipbones. "It shocks some people to find out that there are people out there who are willing to do this for someone they don't know, but there are," said Dr. McCullough.

One of those people is John MacLeod, 37, an engineer in St. Paul who was recruited by the local Red Cross as a marrow donor after many years of giving blood regularly. "I remember when I was 13 or 14, watching my mother go downtown to give blood," he said. "I learned by example: If you can do something to help, you do it." Last April, the donor program notified John that a woman in Seattle needed his marrow. He checked into the hospital, underwent anesthesia and gave. "I didn't really have pain, just kind of a stiffness in my back for a few days," he said. "There's nothing heroic in it at all. It's a should kind of thing."

Hundreds, perhaps thousands, of lives could be saved if more people added their names to the donor program's list. With 50,000 more names, McCullough estimates, the program could find donors for most patients. But since tissue types tend to be unique to ethnic groups, those donors must reflect the population as a whole. "Most of the names on the list are Caucasians, and we have yet to find an unrelated donor for a black patient, for instance," Dr. Patrick Beatty of the Hutchinson center told me. "We haven't even come close. We need to reach out to black donors and other ethnic groups."

Since Kirsten's illness was diagnosed, the entire Frohnmayer family has thrown itself into supporting the National Marrow Donor Program. Dave now sits on its board of directors, which includes such high-powered names as Adm. Elmo Zumwalt Jr., its chairman, and former Vice President Walter Mondale. The Frohnmayer girls are registered with it, but while the program works at building its list of donors, their parents have traced hundreds of relatives, searching for one with the elusive tissue type that will help. "To a person, they have all agreed to be typed, and we've had some near matches," Dave Frohnmayer reported. "We're on the trail."

When Admiral Zumwalt heard of the girls' plight, he raised $50,000. This has allowed the Frohnmayers to follow the family's roots back to Nova Scotia, where genealogists have tracked family connections through a tangled web of distant cousins. Although none has matched Kirsten and Katie, one of their cousins matched another patient on the program's list. She gave her marrow last year—to a total stranger.

"We see ourselves as a healthy family," Dave Frohnmayer said confidently. "We made a vow at the beginning that we're not going to be victims. We're going to fight back. There is a donor out there. It could be you, or the next person who walks by on the street, or a 15th cousin."

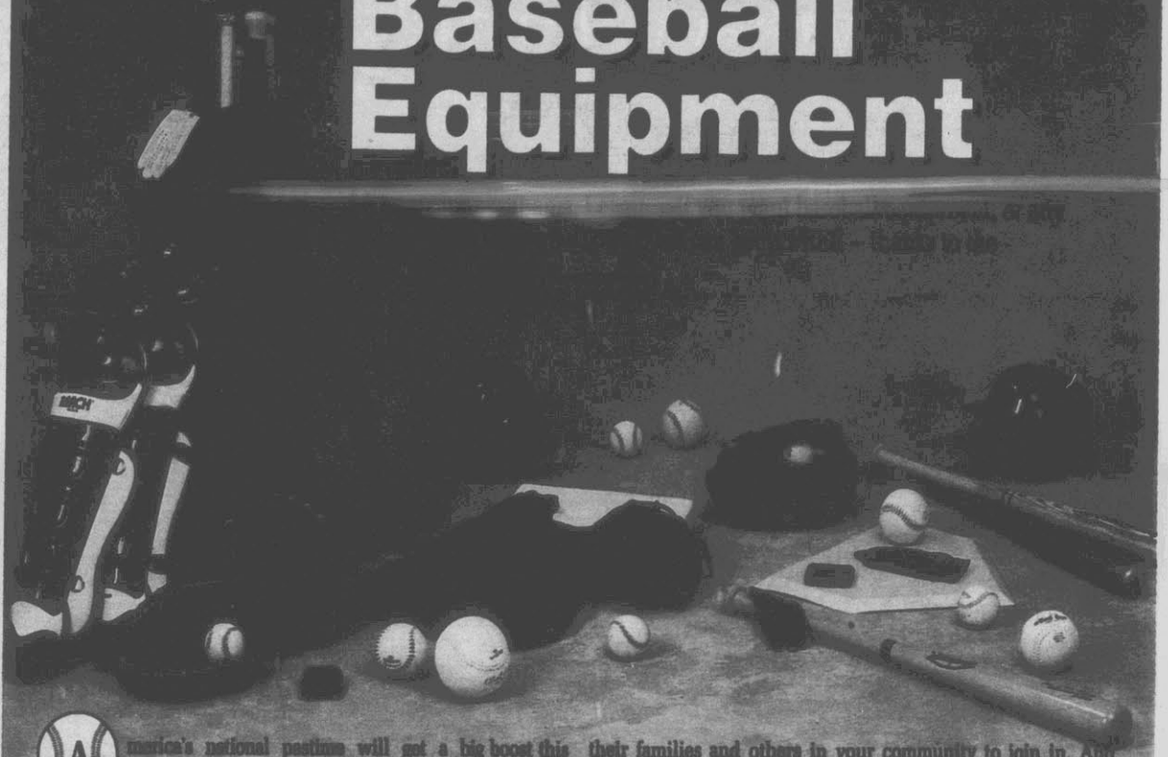

If there is a donor, why should he or she take the time and trouble and put up with the discomfort to help someone whose name and face will forever be a mystery? I found the answer to that on a rainy afternoon on Washington's Puget Sound, where I was sitting with Charles Packer, who told me his leukemia had not been diagnosed until it reached the crisis stage. There wasn't much time—or hope—for him when his name went to the donor program. "The doctors had told me I had about six weeks to live, and four weeks went by," he recalled. "Then they found a donor last February. I don't know anything about him."

As we spoke, the door opened, and a bright, smiling 6-year-old bounced in. "This is Laura," Charles Packer said as she gave me a cheerful hello.

Somewhere out there—although he or she will never know it—is a very generous person who gave Laura Packer back her father.

THE CAR BUYER'S BILL OF RIGHTS

"PROTECTION IS YOUR RIGHT."

Chrysler has consistently led the way in long-term quality protection. 7/70 is the longest powertrain protection in the industry.

If you really want to know how much confidence a carmaker has in his quality...see how far he's willing to go in backing his quality.

It's a pretty reliable indicator.

Chrysler has never been hesitant about backing its quality. In fact, Chrysler pioneered long-term protection. And Chrysler's warranties speak for themselves.

Chrysler's 7/70 protection plan has no equal. It covers every car, truck and minivan Chrysler builds in the U.S. And it protects the most important part of those vehicles, the engine and powertrain for 7 years or 70,000 miles. That's the longest powertrain protection in the business. And there's more: It also protects against outer body rust-through for 7 years or 100,000 miles.* 7/70 is a benchmark in protection.

In the luxury car area, Chrysler goes even further. In addition to 7/70, you get Chrysler's new Crystal Key Owner Care Program that comes with New Yorker. It covers the entire car for 5 years or 50,000 miles. — The Kansas City Star —

At last you can make the quilts you have admired in antique shops with the same blocks your grandmother used!

Between 1928 and 1961 the "Kansas City Star" and its successors, "The Weekly Star Farmer" and "The Weekly Kansas City Star," published quilt blocks as a constant feature. It is estimated that as many as 1,000 patterns were printed over this period.

The "Star" was one of the largest newspapers of its time; in 1931 it had more than 490,000 paid subscribers. The influence of these quilt patterns was therefore significant. To this day quilt historians refer to quilts made from these patterns as "Kansas City Stars."

Now for the first time, many of these patterns have been collected in one beautiful edition. Reproduced exactly as they appeared in their original form, the patterns are as fresh today as they were over 50 years ago.

Whether you are a quilter or a quilt collector, you will find this volume an invaluable source of patterns.

Included are such favorites as:

Broken Dish • Carrie Nation • Four-Corner Puzzle
Hands All Around • Kansas Dugout • Seven Sisters
Turkey Tracks • Wedding Ring • Plus More . . .

In addition, more than half of the blocks have been recreated in the suggested colors and appear in a special full-color section.

All of this plus much more in QUILT BLOCKS FROM "THE KANSAS CITY STAR". Order your copy today!

COMPANION VOLUME

MORE QUILT BLOCKS FROM "THE KANSAS CITY STAR" is a collection of 50 original quilt blocks, many photographed in full color. Including the Valentine quilt, Jig Saw Puzzle, Garden Patch and more! Reproduced exactly as they appeared over 50 years ago these patterns will delight you. Order both and save!

GUIDE TO Better Fitness

BY MICHAEL O'SHEA, PH.D.

Q What exercise can I do to build up my arms—particularly my biceps?

A For biceps development, the dumbbell biceps curl is very effective. It can be conducted standing or sitting. If you have a back problem, use the sitting position.

Initial positions. Sitting: It is best to use a bench or seat with a back to sit against. However, if the seat has no back, sit with your feet flat on the ground and your back straight and relaxed. Standing: Stand erect with your feet shoulder-width apart and knees slightly bent. The bent knees are important to help support the back. The back should be straight and relaxed. The head and neck should be in a relaxed position.

Curl action. With one dumbbell in each hand, relax the arms so they are straight. The wrists should be facing the body. Slowly bring one arm up by bending at the elbow. The elbow should remain against the body throughout the motion. The only movement should come from the elbow bending and wrist turning. As the wrist moves in front of the body, turn it to face the ceiling and bring the dumbbell toward your chest as far as possible without moving the elbow and upper arm forward. Now, slowly reverse the direction (the return direction, or negative movement, should be slower) with the wrist up. As the dumbbell approaches the body, turn the wrist so it faces the side and return the dumbbell to the starting position. It is important that you return to the straight-arm position in order to work the entire muscle. Repeat exercise with other arm.

Remember not to hold your breath during any position. Also, the back, head and lower body must not be used during the exercise. And make sure the elbow and upper arm remain still and against the body. If these parts of the body enter into the exercise, then the weight is too heavy. You should be able to do 8-10 repetitions without your form deteriorating.

To build size into the biceps, do three or four sets of 8-10 repetitions; for toning, choose a weight you can manage for two or three sets of 15-20 repetitions.

STANDING: fully flexed

SITTING: initial position...

Q There are many aerobics videotapes on the market. Are they all safe? If not, what should I look for in a good aerobics video?

A Not all aerobics videotapes are safe. The features you should look for in one are: 1) slow, passive stretching at the beginning; 2) smooth movements that do not involve a lot of bouncing or high kicks; 3) a combination of fast and slow periods, so that you can rest and not let your pulse rate get too high (better videos actually tell you to take your pulse at various stages of exercise); and 4) a cool-down period, which includes light stretching at the end of the exercise program.

Have a question about exercise? Send it to "Guide to Better Fitness," PARADE, Box 3680, Grand Central Station, New York, N.Y. 10163.

Robert Schuller: 1000th Broadcast

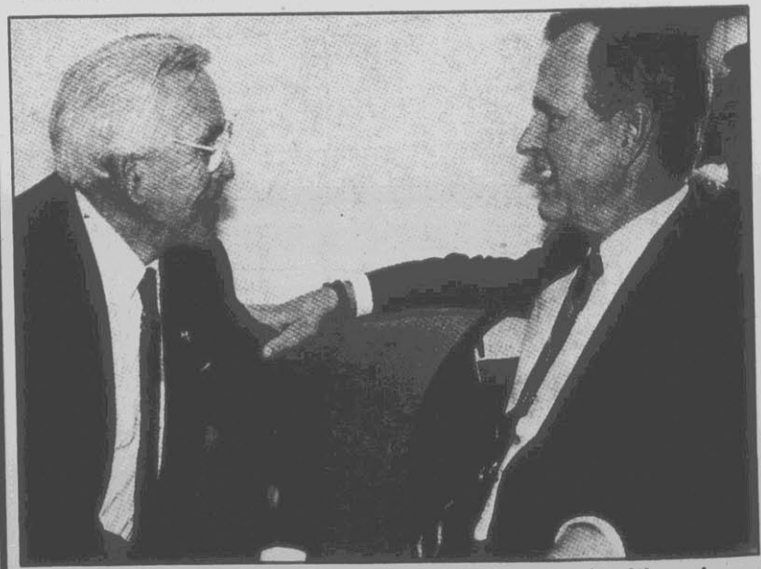

Dr. Robert Schuller

When the late John Wayne's youngest child, Marisa, was a little girl, they were watching TV together in his bedroom one Sunday when, switching the dials, he happened upon a church service. And, as Marisa Wayne Romick, who is now 23, remembers it, after a while "the minister said, 'Wherever you are, kneel down and pray with me now...' And my dad, who I hadn't thought was particularly religious, said, 'Maybe it's time we did that,' and he got up out of bed and got down on his knees, and I did too, and we said the prayer."

That program was The Hour of Power With Robert Schuller, and today Marisa will tell this story as the show celebrates its 1000th broadcast. It is the longest-running and most-watched religious service in the nation, with viewers who include Lucille Ball ("I go to your church every Sunday—no matter where I am, I find you") and guests—always people who have overcome adversity, whose experiences exemplify the minister's positive theology—who are as diverse as Dodgers manager Tommy Lasorda and Mother Teresa. She will appear on the program today, along with Sammy Davis Jr. and others.

It was no accident that at the inauguration of President Bush, the verse "This is the day which the Lord hath made; let us rejoice and be glad in it" was read. Every week, Dr. Schuller compiles a list of Scriptural verses, which his staff faxes to the White House. And that was the passage for the first day of George Bush's presidency.

What attracts such people to Schuller? He calls his religious philosophy "Possibility Thinking" and suggests that people ask, "What would I attempt to do if I knew I could not fail? What dream would I like to see come true if anything was possible?"

Preacher and President: Schuller faxes Scripture to Bush for every day of the week

Two approaches to helping people: Mother Teresa, Nobel Peace Prize-winner, who will make a videotaped appearance on today's Hour of Power, with Dr. Schuller

This is advice that comes naturally to Schuller, who was educated in a one-room schoolhouse in Iowa. When, at age 29, he arrived to start a Reformed Church in America ministry in Garden Grove, Calif., and could find no place to hold services, he persuaded the owner of a drive-in theater to let him have it on Sunday mornings. And he preached standing on top of the snack-bar roof to parishioners in 30 cars, who listened to him from speakers that hung on their windows. His wife, Arvella, played the organ that they'd towed to the drive-in behind their car on a trailer Schuller had made. (Showing his ability to "positivize," he had advertised: "Worship as you are...in the family car.")

Fifteen years later, in 1970, at the suggestion of Billy Graham, Schuller broadcast the first Hour of Power over one Los Angeles station. Today, broadcasting from the spectacular glass-enclosed Crystal Cathedral, he's heard on 200 stations in the U.S., 11 in Canada, six in Australia and, since Feb. 12, in 22 countries in Europe.

Schuller's upbeat approach doesn't ignore pain, disappointment or tragedy. "But," he says, "trouble never leaves you where it found you. It will change you, and you can choose the change. It will turn you into a bitter or a better person, and that depends on your reaction to what happens to you. And everything I say is designed to positivize a person's reactions to the good or the evil. It's not a rejection of the reality of evil, but attempting to control our reactions so they will be positive and redemptive."

Ron Galella

John Wayne and daughter Marisa, at 11: She now reveals a new side of the actor

Dr. Schuller's Scriptural message for President Bush and everyone else today is: "If you have faith as a grain of mustard seed, you will say to this mountain, 'Move,' and it will move, and nothing will be impossible for you." And, he adds, "Any fool can count the seeds in an apple, but only God can count all of the apples in one seed. So remember: There are infinite possibilities in little beginnings if God is in it." Check local TV listings for time and station.

Fitting Facts

How to Avoid Gapping and Wrinkling

If you experience bulge at any part of your bra, the design may be wrong for your figure—or your cup size may be too small. Another sign of improper size is when the cups themselves wrinkle—also an indication that they are too small. A bra that fits should embrace you smoothly in all areas and lie flatly against the breastbone.

Judy Collins

I SUPPOSE THERE ARE PLENTY of us old enough to remember the 1960s, when Judy Collins asked in that sweet, sad voice, "Where have all the flowers gone?" and—with Joan Baez, Bob Dylan and Peter, Paul and Mary—sang the protest songs of a generation.

Well, Judy will be 50 years old on May 1. When I reached her, she was in the Westin Hotel in Denver, halfway through a talk-show tour, plugging the paperback version of her book, Trust Your Heart. "It's sunny here," she said. "Sixty degrees." Eventually, she added, she'd be back in New York, where she lives in a vast apartment on the West Side—but first there would be a stopover in Los Angeles to do commercials for her new cosmetic line, Judy Collins Harmonics.

How did that come about?

"I wanted to have everything done," Judy informed me, "eyes, ears, lips, hips, chest. I really meant it. Then I ran into this guy and said, 'Is there anything I can do without surgery?' He said, 'Lemme see,' and he told me about liposome eye gel [liposome is a natural, fatty ingredient in cells], and it works!"

She was so happy with it, she lent her name to the marketing of the eye gel, with plans to add on other products. The manufacturer sells the stuff through Telshop, a marketing show on the Financial News Network.

Is that what antiwar activists have come to—selling beauty on television? Well, hardly—not in Judy's case. She still does concerts in places ranging from Carnegie Hall to college gyms. Her latest album, Sanity and Grace, out earlier this year, led the critic Hugh Wyatt to call her "one of the most formidable singers" on the contemporary scene. And last month, the Disney Channel telecast her special, Judy Collins: Going Home, with Kris Kristofferson and members of her family, singing songs from her concerts in Aspen, Colo.

Darryl Estrine

"Judy Blue Eyes" has survived illness, drugs, alcohol and losing custody of her only child. Now she's a grandmother... and still singing.

Judy really was just a kid when she became a star in 1961. But, unlike so many political artists of the '60s, she isn't forever reaching back to some nostalgic yesterday. Her current songs are as modern as today.

Her autobiography, when it first appeared two years ago, was something of a shocker. It spoke in candid terms of her painful past—polio at age 10, a bout with tuberculosis, experiments with LSD, a drinking problem and the loss of a bitter custody battle over her only son—plus her love affairs with Stacy Keach and Stephen Stills, who wrote "Judy Blue Eyes" for Ms. Collins.

"I'm aghast at my adventures," she said of her turbulent life. But she defended the book's honesty: "I don't know of anyone who decided not to have dinner with me because of it. It was a very hard book to write, but I feel good about it. There's no character assassination. The person who was most disturbed by it was me. At one point, I just couldn't write, and I called Nan Talese [her editor], and she told me, 'Just go ahead and come back to the painful part later. You can do it.' And I did."

Then, as we talked, she brightened. She and her longtime love, industrial designer Louis Nelson, are still together. "It's 11 years now, and it's great!" she said. And, oh yes, the slim, almost childish young singer we remember has marked another milestone. "I'm a you-know-what," she said happily. "We don't use the word grandmother. I refer to 'my son's child'!"

BRADY'S BITS

Her father was a singer who happened to be blind. While she was growing up, there was always music in the house, and Judy was trained to be a classical pianist. "That training," she said, "gave me a priceless musical background on which to build. There's nothing I hate more than a singer I can't understand. I don't care who it is." Well, then, what contemporary music does she like? "I love U2," she said. "I would love to work with Brian Eno as my producer. Frankly, look, I've always been a storyteller. I like Tracy Chapman and Suzanne Vega. I like Sting. And groups who are bringing lyrics back in, so you can hear the words. My own work: fine lyrics, spiritual as well as topical."

New booklet teaches "latchkey kids" such basics as what to do when a stranger knocks

For $1—What Every Child and Parent Should Know

There was a time in this country, mostly before World War II, when young children came home from school to mothers, cookies and milk. Today, as many as 6 million children ages 5 to 12 come home to an empty house or apartment or to one where they have to take care of younger brothers and sisters. The nation calls them "latchkey kids," and they constitute one of the fastest-growing segments of the school-age population.

To prepare these children to take care of themselves and their younger siblings until a working parent gets home, the Corporation for Public Broadcasting has published a 16-page guide, What If I'm Home Alone? Informative and easy to read, it teaches children such basics as: how to get home from school safely; how to use the telephone to get emergency help; how to escape from a fire; how to deal with strangers who phone or knock on the door; how to put their time alone to best use, and much more.

The booklet is a must for families headed by a single parent or by parents who both work outside the home. It offers tips on baby-sitting, pointers on first aid and a letter to parents suggesting how to make their home and children more secure. It is full of practical knowledge.

What If I'm Home Alone? sells for $1 and is easily worth it. Send a check to: What If I'm Home Alone?, Corporation for Public Broadcasting, Dept. P, P.O. Box 33039-LK, Washington, D.C. 20033. You won't regret it.

Were You Born in a VW?

From 1964 through 1988, about 400 American babies were born in Volkswagens. So reports the German carmaker, which is offering three $100 U.S. Savings Bonds to any parent whose child was born in a VW and who can provide a physician's letter to prove it.

Kay Cornwell of Volkswagen says the company regrets it can't extend the offer to those conceived in a VW, but if you had a child in one—any model—send the information and the doctor's letter to: Volkswagen of America, Bonds for Babies Program, Dept. P, 888 W. Big Beaver Road, Troy, Mich. 48007.

Consume and Enjoy!

Japan, a nation of workaholics, has decided to take it easier—that is, if it can. The ritual of working six and seven days a week is so deeply embedded in the people's routine that it's difficult to alter. Anyway, the Japanese are trying. For the first time, their banks and stock exchange are closed Saturdays, and many workers who never took their 7- to 10-day paid vacations are happily doing so.

What is happening is that the Japanese are at last regarding themselves as successful members of the middle class. They are in the mood to enjoy the fruits of their work ethic. They are becoming consumers in search of leisure and the good life—which, to a growing number of them, consists of travel, learning to play golf, joining country clubs, buying brand-name merchandise and dressing well. In short, the key word to their newly acquired philosophy seems to be "enjoy."

Best Friends of Man

Ever wonder which is the most popular breed of dog in the U.S.? On the basis of registration statistics it gathered last year, the American Kennel Club reports cocker spaniels out front and Labrador retrievers in second position, followed in order by poodles, golden retrievers, German shepherds and chow chows. Rounding out the top 10 are Rottweilers, beagles, dachshunds and miniature schnauzers. For 25 years, from 1959 to 1984, the poodle was the nation's favorite—until the cocker spaniel became top dog.

According to Roberta Vesley, library director at the American Kennel Club, "The basic reason for the cocker's current popularity is that it's a small, easygoing, sweet-tempered, reasonably intelligent and trainable family dog."

CBS VIDEO CLUB 1400 N. Fruitridge, Terre Haute, IN 47811-11 12

A lot of savvy VCR owners have been finding out how good our deal is. Just keep reading and you'll see for yourself why the CBS Video Club has the best deal around on the movies you want to own.

SIX HIT MOVIES ONLY 89¢ EACH.

PLUS SHIPPING/HANDLING WITH MEMBERSHIP

Seems too good to be true? Then take a good look at the listing above. We'll send you any six of over 220 terrific movies for 89¢ each, just for joining now.

And you can even get 2 more movies at a saving of up to $65 each (see box in coupon). And that's only the beginning.

PAY NO MEMBERSHIP FEE.

Even with an upfront deal as good as ours, there's no membership fee. All we ask is that you buy six more movies at regular Club prices within the next three years.

And you'll have no problem in finding six movies you want, because our library holds over 2,500 titles; from the very newest releases to classical favorites. Our regular Club prices currently range from $79.95 to $29.95, plus shipping and handling; and we also offer a selection of lower-priced videocassettes, down to $14.95. Your only membership obligation is to buy six movies within the next three years, for as little as $29.95 each—and you may cancel membership anytime after doing so.

CHOOSE ONLY THE MOVIES YOU WANT.

Here's how the Club operates: about every four weeks (up to 13 times a year) we send you our CBS Video Club Magazine, reviewing our Director's Selection, plus many alternate movies. And up to four times a year, you may also receive offers of Special Selections, usually at a discount off regular Club prices, for a total of up to 17 buying opportunities.

If you want the Director's Selection, don't do a thing—it'll arrive automatically. If you'd prefer an alternate movie, or none at all, just mail the card always provided by the date specified. You'll always have two full weeks to decide. (If you ever receive a tape before having had two weeks to decide, just send it back at our expense.)

SAVE 50% WITH OUR BONUS PLAN.

After fulfilling your membership obligation, you'll automatically become eligible for our Half-Price Bonus Plan. With each movie you buy at regular Club prices, the plan currently allows you to take another movie of equal value or less at 50% off.

SPECIAL 10-DAY RISK-FREE TRIAL.

Join today and we'll send your introductory movies, along with more details on how the Club works. If you're not satisfied, return everything within 10 days for a full, prompt refund and no further obligation.

For fastest service, use your credit card and call toll free

Cover Story....

Baseball Has It's Opening Day On April 3

By George Robinson

The balance of power has shifted in major league baseball. This year should produce three excellent pennant races, but none will be as furious as those in the Western Divisions of both the American and National Leagues. With opening day upon us on April 3, and NBC offering the defending champion Los Angeles Dodgers vs. the Atlanta Braves or the Pittsburgh Pirates vs. the Chicago Cubs in the opening "Game of the Week" on April 8, here's how things shape up.

NL West: This year, the Cincinnati Reds either will finish first or manager Pete Rose will be out of baseball for the first time in nearly 30 years. The Reds have one of the best rotations in the division, to go with a nicely tuned bullpen. But the Reds have to score more runs in order to stay ahead of the wheeling-and-dealing San Diego Padres and the defending champions, the Dodgers. The Padres acquired Jack Clark, Bruce Hurst and Walt Terrell in the off-season. As for the Dodgers, Tommy Lasorda did a brilliant job last year holding together a team full of limping, battered everyday players, a seemingly feeble bench and a bullpen that was full of question marks on Opening Day. It's always dangerous to bet against Tommy. The San Francisco Giants and the Houston Astros are two talented teams that seem to be running in reverse — getting older and not filling holes. As for the Atlanta Braves, what can you say about a team that lost 106 games and whose only major-league acquisition during the offseason was 41-year-old Darrell Evans?

NL East: This will probably be the site of this year's only runaway. The New York Mets have too much frontline pitching to be beaten. If New York should falter, though, the Pirates and Montreal Expos will be at their heels. Both have good young pitching and hot young bats. The St. Louis Cardinals have too little pitching and too little depth overall. The Cubs will live to regret the Rafael Palmeiro trade. Giving him up leaves a big hole in the batting order. The Philadelphia Phillies lost 96 games last year and could be even worse in 1989.

AL West: The Oakland Athletics are the best-balanced team in baseball. They have starting pitching, a deep bullpen, power, and excellent defense. The Minnesota Twins have their usual pitching shortage after Frank Viola and Jeff Reardon, but their everyday players are almost as good as Oakland's. The Kansas City Royals' major acquisition was golden oldie Bob Boone. The savvy catcher should make their already excellent starters even better. The Texas Rangers helped themselves a lot by adding Nolan Ryan to anchor their rotation. After that, you can throw the Seattle Mariners, California Angels and Chicago White Sox in a hat and draw them out in any order.

AL East: This used to be the best division in baseball. Now it is a hair breadth away from being the worst. Six flawed teams are vying for the division title, followed by the hopeless Baltimore Orioles. The Milwaukee Brewers have no depth and are injury-prone. The Boston Red Sox rotation is full of holes. The New York Yankees came to Florida with 11 potential starters, always a sign of incipient chaos. The Toronto Blue Jays' golden outfield has turned to tin. The Tigers are getting old. The Cleveland Indians are ... well, the Indians. But we've got to pick somebody, right? We'll go with Milwaukee, which has some fine young players.

Michele Will Tell

By Michele Marks

Dear Michele: As a child, I loved each of Clifton Webb's "Lynn Belevedere" movies, and, of course, "Cheaper by the Dozen." Are they available on video? And was Webb the same sort of cantankerous character off-screen as he was on? — NONA LONG, QUINCY, ILL.

Although best remembered for his cantankerous characters, Webb was a genial man whose early roles were much more varied. During his early childhood, he was trained as both a dancer and actor, and, by the age of 10, he was a show-business veteran. He quit school at 13 to study painting and music, and by age 17 he sang with the Boston Opera Company. Two years later, he made a name for himself as one of New York's premier ballroom dancers. By the early '20s, Webb was appearing on both the London and New York stage and in silent films. After nearly a 20-year absence from the screen, he returned in 1944's "Laura." The film was his first major screen role and earned him an Oscar nomination. Webb won another Academy Award nomination for his 1946 feature "The Razor's Edge." In 1948, he landed the role of the amiable, albeit ill-tempered, Lynn Belvedere in "Sitting Pretty." The ensuing sequels typecast him, but they were immensely popular with movie-goers. Clifton Webb diedin 1966 at the age of 73. At this time, the films in question are unavailable on videocassette.

Dear Michele: Could you tell me the birth date and family status of Martin Kove ("Cagney & Lacey")? — SHERRY MALENOSKY, BROWNSVILLE, PENN.

Kove was born March 6, 1947, in Brooklyn, N.Y. Married in 1981, Kove and his New Zealand-born wife, Vivienne, reside in a house in the Hollywood Hills. It is decorated with martial arts weapons, antique firearms, Old West tomes and a life-size karate poster of Kove posed for battle. The 6-foot-1, 195-pound hunk, who appeared as the desk-bound Det. Victor Isbecki on the CBS series "Cagney & Lacey" for six seasons, recently debuted on CBS as the star of his own series, "Hard Time on Planet Earth."

Dear Michele: Was actor Rock Hudson ever married? If so, to whom? — M. BAXTER, MONTVILLE, CONN.

Hudson eloped to Santa Barbara, Calif., with Phyllis Gates, a secretary who worked for his agent, Henry Wilson, in November 1955. The couple honeymooned in Jamaica, but the union deteriorated quickly, and they divorced in 1958. Gates, who was 32 at the time of their divorce, never remarried. She has most recently been employed as an interior decorator in Beverly Hills.

Dear Michele: Are Alan Ladd, Cheryl Ladd and Margaret Ladd related? — M. LUKURS, SANTA CRUZ, CALIF.

Cheryl Ladd was married to David Ladd, son of the late actor Alan Ladd, from 1973 to 1979. Following their divorce, she retained the surname professionally. Margaret Ladd, who plays Emma on"Falcon Crest," is the daughter of a former professional ice skater turned executive of an office-supply company. Her mother is an artist.

Dear Michele: Who plays the role of psychiatrist Frasier Crane on "Cheers"? Please provide some info on him. — MRS. FURMAN S. TODD JR., WASHINGTON, D.C.

Actor Kelsey Grammer portrays resident in-house psychiatrist Frasier Crane on "Cheers." Born in St. Thomas in the Virgin Islands, Grammer grew up in New Jersey and Florida. He attended New York's Julliard School for two years and eventually found work as a stage actor. Grammer made his television debut as another doctor, Dr. Canard, in NBC's daytime series "Another World." He guested on "Kate & Allie," and had a minor role as Stephen Smith in the 1983 NBC miniseries "Kennedy." Frasier is Grammer's first prime-time recurring role.

Dear Michele: Please provide us with the real age of Sophia on "The Golden Girls." — ROSE DE LORETO, NIAGARA FALLS, N.Y.

Sans makeup and gray wig, you might not recognize the real Estelle Getty, who plays Bea Arthur's 80-ish mom, Sophia Petrillo, on "The Golden Girls." Getty is actually 64 years young. She was born July 25, 1924 in New York City.

Soap Scoop

Gautreaux returns in potentially meaty role

By Connie Passalacqua

John O'Hurley

There have been two very interesting castings of late. A striking returnee to soaps is David Gautreaux, who is debuting as a new Buchanan named Austin on "One Life to Live" (what a mantle to uphold!).

Gautreaux made a memorable soap debut in 1980 as artist Garth Taper on "Search for Tomorrow." His Garth was moody, with a unique air of romantic rebelliousness. But this was a case of an exciting young actor who went nowhere because he was on an extremely low-rated show. ("SFT" has since been canceled.) A similar fate befell Charles Flohe, who now calls himself Charles Grant. He, too, was an overlooked sensation when he played Preacher Emerson on the low-rated "Edge of Night," which was also canceled. Now, Grant is playing Evan Webster on "Another World," and his potential as a soap superstar is at least partially realized. It will be interesting to see what happens to Gautreaux on the soap showcase "One Life to Live."

Meanwhile, it seems that '60s movie star John Phillip Law ("The Love Machine") didn't quite work out as Dr. James Granger, on "The Young and the Restless." So he was quickly replaced by John O'Hurley, who was so striking in the good/evil twin roles of Keith Lane and Jonathan Matalaine on "Loving" from 1982 to 1986. Most recently, O'Hurley played Prescott, the mustache twirler who tried to rob tycoon Travis Montgomery (played by Larkin Malloy) of his fortune, on "All My Children." O'Hurley made a short detour to nighttime last year, playing an alien in the miniseries "Something Is Out There." It's good to have him back.

• NBC's "Generations," the first completely biracial soap, debuted last week, and don't think the other networks haven't noticed. Time-slot competitor "Loving" (on ABC) has been stoking up for the premiere of "Generations" for months, adding many new, young characters, such as Todd Jones (played by Todd McDurmont) and Rocky (played by Rena Sofer). Now there's speculation that a whole family is being built around Lt. Art Hindman, the black town cop who has been played sporadically from the show's debut by John Danelle (who played Frank Grant on "All My Children"). ABC denies that these are the plans, but blacks have always been underrepresented on daytime dramas, so it's very interesting to see the effect that "Generations" is having.

TV Chatter

By Frank Sanello

Don't worry about tabloid television invading network news — at least not on ABC's "World News Tonight with Peter Jennings." The venerable newscaster, who is consistently ranked the best of the three network anchors by polls of print journalists, predicts that CBS and NBC will fall prey to "Geraldo-ism" long before ABC. "We will continue to do what we do best — serious national and international news," the Canadian-born journalist promises. "Even if sleaze TV takes the numbers (ratings) from us, we won't do sleaze." Jennings believes there's no need for the nighttime broadcast to cover, for instance, Satanism in the suburbs. "If we continue to do a creative job of reporting the news, the audience will continue to watch us," he says. Although Jennings concedes that tabloid magazines have "driven legitimate newspapers out of the business, tabloid TV won't drive us out."

Is the hard driving investigative reporter she plays on CBS's "Murphy Brown" based on Diane Sawyer or Barbara Walters? Candice Bergen says it's neither. "She's modeled after Mike Wallace. We just put his character in a dress." To flesh out the often prickly Brown, Bergen adds, "I read Sam Donaldson's book to learn how to be abrasive." The actress believes she inherited her sense of humor from her father, ventriloquist Edgar Bergen. "It may be genetic encoding. My father always thought I had a flair for comedy, and he always encouraged me. I think I also have a Shriners aspect tomy personality. I love whoopee cushions — I'll do anything for a laugh." Bergen recalls growing up feeling sibling rivalry with her father's dummy, Charlie McCarthy. "He was like a brother.

Sports Roundup

SUNDAY, APRIL 2

Climbing (CBS)

International Sport Climbing Competition, from Snowbird, Utah.

NBA Basketball (CBS)

Boston Celtics at Cleveland Cavaliers.

PGA Golf (ABC)

Independent Insurance Agents Open, final-round action, live from the Touring Players Club, at the Woodland, Woodlands, Texas.

LPGA Golf (NBC)

The Dinah Shore Invitational, final-round action, live from Mission Hills Country Club, Rancho Mirage, Calif. Amy Alcott is the defending champ.

Women's Basketball (CBS)

NCAA Division I Women's Basketball Tournament, championship game, live from the Tacoma Dome, Tacoma, Wash. The women's game is changing — becoming more athletic, more exciting. So says Nancy Lieberman Cline, former all-America from Old Dominion and one of the greats of women's hoops. "You're seeing the smaller, quicker athlete who can do more things," she observes. If the women's game is getting more attention, she says, "It's because we warrant more attention."

Outdoors (ABC)

MONDAY, APRIL 3

NCAA Basketball (CBS)

NCAA Division I Basketball Tournament championship game live from the Kingdome, Seattle, Wash. This is the most consistently exciting major event in sports today. When was the last time the NCAAchampionship game was anything less than breathtaking? Danny Manning said it best on NBA draft day last year: "Winning the national championship was the icing on the cake for my four years at Kansas."

FRIDAY, APRIL 7

Men's Tennis (ESPN)

United States vs. France, Davis Cup Quarterfinals, Singles A & B, live from San Diego, Calif. ESPN's Cliff Drysdale, himself a former player, likes the U.S. chances in this "tie," as a Davis Cup match is called: "They're going to play against Yannick Noah and Henri Leconte in the singles, and that's going to be very tough," he says. "But I think (Ken Flach and Robert Seguso) will win the doubles; they're going for their ninth straight Cup victory. That gives us one victory. I think Andre Agassi will win both of his matches, and that's three points right there. But even if he doesn't win both, I think John McEnroe has at least an even chance of winning against either Noah or Leconte, possibly both."

SATURDAY, APRIL 8

Women's Tennis (NBC)

Family Circle Cup Tennis Tournament, semifinals, live from Hilton Head, S.C.

PBA Bowling (ABC)

The $150,000 Fair Lanes Open, final-round action, live from Baltimore.

Baseball (NBC)

Los Angeles Dodgers at Atlanta Braves or Pittsburgh Pirates at Chicago Cubs.

PGA Golf (CBS)

The Masters, third-round action, live from Augusta National Golf Club, Augusta, Ga. Last year, when he came off the course after shooting a blistering 66 in the second round, 1979 Masters champ Fuzzy Zoeller was even hotter than his clubs.

This Could Be The Best Sports Week Of The Year

By Marty Linehan

Spring is really here, and this week has to be one of the busiest in the entire sports year. Just look at the lineup: the NCAA women's basketball championship, the NCAA men's basketball championship, Davis Cup tennis, the opening of the major-league baseball season and golf's prestigious Masters Tournament.

* On Sunday, April 2, NBC starts off with the semifinal round of Dinah Shore's annual women's golf tournament. Long-time pro Amy Alcott won it last year.

* On Sunday, as well, CBS offers the Women's NCAA Division I Basketball Tournament final from the Tacoma Dome in Tacoma, Wash. Former all-American Nancy Lieberman Cline claims the women are getting quicker and have more ability.

* On Monday, April 3, CBS offers the big one — the World Series, Super Bowl and U.S. Open all rolled into one. It's the NCAA Division I Basketball Tournament Championship game. The two survivors of the Final Four battle it out in the Kingdome in Seattle. Basketball fans can look for another breath-taking final.

* On Friday, April 7, ESPN will carry the Davis Cup quarterfinals, with the United States playing France. The French team features Yannick Noah and Henri LaConte, and the United States will have Jonn McEnroe and Andre Agassi.

* Though the big-league baseball season opens on Monday, April 3, there won't be any nationally broadcast games until Saturday, April 8: NBC, in its final year of carrying the major-league games, will feature either the World Series champion Los Angeles Dodgers vs. the Atlanta Braves, or the Pittsburgh Pirates vs. the Chicago Cubs.

L.A. Case Dramatized In Hillside Strangler

By Robert DiMatteo

With so few criminal investigations coming to a satisfactory resolution, the rare ones that do probably deserve to be recreated in TV movies. The Case of the Hillside Strangler (NBC, Sunday) is the latest example, a chronicle of the Los Angeles police investigation that led to the arrest of serial killers Angelo Buono and Kenneth Bianchi.

In 1977 and 1978, Buono and Bianchi committed a series of brutal murders of young women in the L.A. area. The case spread terror in the community, taking on that kind of dark folkloric aura that criminal sprees often achieve. The killers are played by Dennis Farina and Billy Zane ("Back to the Future"). Ex-cop Farina had a rough-skinned tawdriness and edge of menace even as a good guy on "Crime Story," so he'll have no trouble convincing us of his psychopathology as Buono.

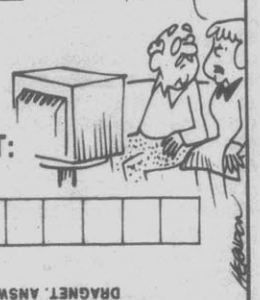

Richard Crenna plays the good guy here. He's the police detective who spearheads the investigation. With several such roles under his belt in recent years, Crenna has become an effortlessly gruff and convincing authority figure. Seeing him now, it's funny to remember that he played that lightweight hayseed Luke on "The Real McCoys."

At age 78, the late John Huston directed Prizzi's Honor (ABC, Sunday), an adaptation of novelist Richard Condon's wild gangster spoof. It remains one of his finest, most forceful and acerbiccreations. Jack Nicholson has a hammy good time in the role of a mafia hit man who falls for a sophisticated blonde (Kathleen Turner); she happens to be in the same business.

Sun safety for your baby. BABYCare

A baby's skin is very susceptible to sunburn, so your Eckerd pharmacist recommends the following precautions:

- Try to avoid exposure to the sun between 10 a.m. and 2 p.m., when the sun's rays are most intense.
- Dress your baby lightly; this will help in preventing heat rash.
- Keep a hat on your baby at all times because the head is the first to feel the effects of the sun.

Stop by your nearest Eckerd drug store for all your suncare needs. And, if you have any questions on sun safety for your baby, just ask your Eckerd pharmacist.

To an Eckerd Pharmacist, nothing's more important than your health.

Physicians Life
Insurance Company

FOR PEOPLE AGES 45 TO 80

Introducing
the All-New

GOLD SEAL PLAN

that Guarantees You up to $5,000.00

Life Insurance

YOU CANNOT BE TURNED DOWN!

- ☑ No Physical Exam
- ☑ No Health Questions
- ☑ No Hassle

ENROLL BEFORE APRIL 15, 1989
FOR ONLY $1!

The All-New Gold Seal Plan Guarantees More Security For Your Loved Ones And More Peace of Mind For You!

Now you can get up to $5,000.00 of life insurance with NO RISK of being turned down!

That's right. As long as you're age 45 to 80, your acceptance for this important protection is guaranteed.

Physicians Life created the all-new Gold Seal Plan exclusively for people 45 to 80—who usually find buying life insurance difficult—not to mention expensive.

But with the Gold Seal Plan you won't have to fill out a long application, take a physical exam, or answer any health questions. This coverage is yours for the asking.

Best of all, just $1 pays your entire first month's premium when you enroll before April 15, 1989. Then you can continue at a low monthly rate that never goes up.

What This Protection Means To Your Loved Ones

The life insurance you own now may not be enough any more. The reason? Inflation.

For example, if you bought a $10,000.00 policy just 10 years ago, it's now worth about $5,000.00. Inflation has eaten away 50%, according to the Consumer Price Index.

So you can see what this added protection will mean to your loved ones. It means having enough cash after you're gone . . . cash to help pay your last doctor and hospital bills, funeral and cemetery costs, and taxes, among other things. Surely you don't want these bills to fall on your family's shoulders.

What This Protection Means To You

Of course, you'll enjoy the warm feeling of giving your loved ones an extra financial cushion. And the Gold Seal Plan adds to your own security, too.

It's permanent, lifetime protection that builds cash values you can borrow against or even cash in later on.

What Sets The Gold Seal Plan Apart From Ordinary Plans

You may hear of other plans that SOUND the same. But only the Gold Seal Plan gives you all these important guarantees:

☑ GUARANTEED ACCEPTANCE
You and your spouse age 45 to 80 will not be turned down for any reason. Of course, we can guarantee each of you one policy only.

☑ GUARANTEED PROTECTION
We'll never cancel your policy, no matter what your age or health. Only you can cancel.

☑ GUARANTEED LEVEL PREMIUMS
Your renewal premium will never go up—so you'll save money year after year.

☑ GUARANTEED IMMEDIATE COVERAGE
From the first day your policy is issued, your beneficiary receives the full face amount for accidental death.

For non-accidental death during the first two years, your beneficiary receives all the premiums you've paid plus an extra 10%. From then on, we pay the full face amount.

☑ GUARANTEED CASH VALUES
Your policy builds cash values that you can borrow against or even cash in later on.

You Can Depend On Physicians Life For Fast, Personal Service

When you enroll in the Gold Seal Plan, you'll be dealing directly with Physicians Life. No salesmen are involved. That saves time and insures your privacy.

Enroll Today For Just One Dollar—Your Satisfaction Is Guaranteed!

To get the Gold Seal Plan working for your family, just fill in the brief application (one for you and one for your spouse) and send it with your $1 first month's premium. We've attached a postage-free envelope for your convenience.

If you're not completely satisfied after receiving your new policy, just return it within 30 days for an immediate refund of your money—no questions asked. So you have nothing to lose, and a lot of protection and peace of mind to gain!

• FRUIT BOWL! Pick yourself a bowlful of fruit in the diagram at right by moving one letter at a time in any direction — up, down or diagonally. Pick varieties in the following order to use up all of the diagram's 45 letters: Apricot, peach, melon, plum, tangerine, banana, kiwi, apple.

Can you find them all?

• MAKE CHANGE! 1. What three U.S. coins total 31 cents? 2. What five U.S. coins total 80 cents? Answer quickly, if you can.

1. Quarter, nickel, penny. 2. Two quarters, three dimes.

SUM-PRODUCT EVALUATION

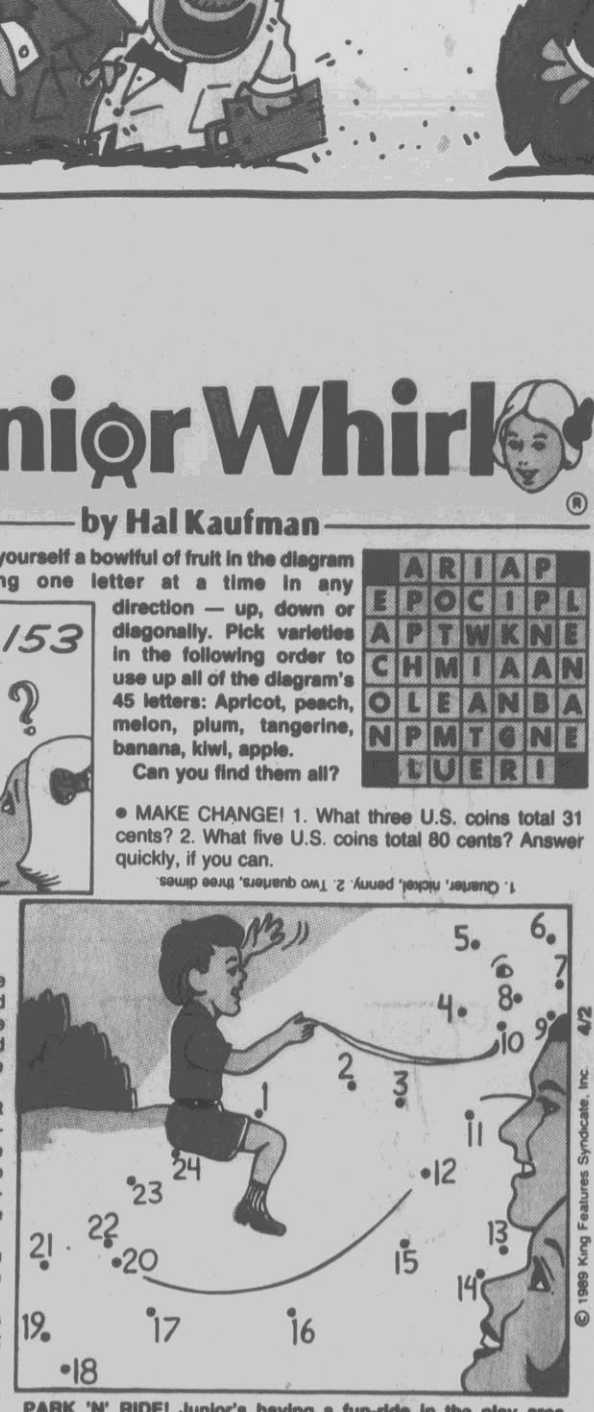

A peculiar thing about the figures on the blackboard above is that each of the numbers being multiplied is duplicated in the answer.

It so happens that another set of three figures will produce the same result — that is to say, will result in a product comprised of the same three figures.

How quickly can you determine what these other figures are?

Hint: Each of the digits in this new arrangement is valued at six or less.

Six times twenty-one equals one two six.
