Surrender

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

HAUPPAUGE, N.Y. — The fugitive captain of the oil tanker Exxon Valdez surrendered this morning to authorities, a spokesman for the district attorney said.

Fired skipper Joseph Hazelwood turned himself in on Long Island about 8:45 a.m. and was to have a court appearance later today, said John Williams, the spokesman. Hazelwood was accompanied by his attorney, Williams said.

Hazelwood faces three misdemeanor charges in Alaska stemming from the March 24 grounding of the Valdez, which spilled more than 10 million gallons of oil into Prince William Sound. Exxon fired the 20-year veteran last week.

The charges carry a maximum penalty of 2 1/4 years in prison and a $10,000 fine.

Poland Makes Solidarity Legal

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WARSAW, Poland — Lech Walesa and a government minister today concluded a historic pact to legalize the independent Solidarity trade union after a seven-year ban and to hold Poland's first free elections since World War II.

The Solidarity leader, representing the opposition, and the interior minister, Gen. Czeslaw Kiszczak, endorsed hundreds of pages of agreements hammered out during intensive talks on Poland's political and economic reforms.

They approved the pact as participants in the 2-month-old negotiations gathered for a last time at the Council of Ministers Palace.

Earlier today, Walesa said Solidarity had achieved its primary goals.

"This is settled. Before Poland and all the world I am saying that we have achieved what we promised to do," he said.

Walesa spoke after a meeting of the Solidarity Executive Commission in which it agreed to approve the sweeping agreement with the government.

Asked when he thought Solidarity would be legalized, Walesa replied, "I think immediately after signing."

The government agreed in August to hold the talks in return for an end to a series of crippling strikes.

The negotiators agreed to amend the present trade union law to allow legalization of Solidarity, registration of farmers' Rural Solidarity and the reinstatement of workers fired for Solidarity activities after the December 1981 crackdown that quashed the trade union movement.

On Tuesday, negotiators agreed to a plan that would bring the opposition into the Sejm, the one-house parliament, as a minority party. Under the plan, a freely elected Senate and a powerful presidency would be established.

Walesa said the union did not get everything it wanted in the agreement but said other issues could be addressed later, "when we are a legal union."

Oil Found In Ditch Near Tar

By Carol Tyer
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Greenville and state officials are seeking the source of oil found Tuesday afternoon in a ditch near the city's recreation and parks department's maintenance facility on New Street.

Bryon Jenkins, public information officer for the state Division of Environmental Management, said the Greenville Fire Department did a good job Tuesday afternoon in containing the oil. The ditch empties into the Tar River within less than 50 yards.

Greenville Fire-Rescue Chief Jenness Allen said the fire department was called about 4:30 p.m. and told of the oily substance. He said department members erected a barrier of chicken wire and straw across the ditch and placed another floating boom and more oil-absorbent material further toward the river. State environmental management people arrived soon afterward, he said.

Ms. Jenkins said this morning that Jim Mulligan and his environmental management Emergency Response Team visited the site Tuesday afternoon and this morning. She said there is a possibility that the slick is the remainder of a known March 8 spill of diesel fuel.

On March 8, she said, people filling a recreation department underground gasoline storage tank lost not more than 25 gallons of diesel fuel in an accidental overflow. She said oil-absorbent material was placed in storm drains in the area at the time.

She emphasized, however, that it is not definite that the present oil on the ditch and in the river near the ditch's mouth is caused by that spill. There are old oil storage tanks on the Greenville Utilities no-longer-used electric plant site, also, she said, and there is some possibility the leak is from one of these. The recreation and parks site also has other fuel storage facilities that could be leaking.

Walter Stasavich, city recreation and parks superintendent who manages the maintenance facility, said he does not believe the newly found slick is related to the March 8 spill. "It could be," he said. "But that was not much fuel and we've had an enormous amount of rain since then. I think it's from some other source."

Hamilton Beach Expanding Force

By Stuart Savage
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Two hundred employees may be added to Hamilton Beach's workforce in Beaufort County in connection with a shift of manufacturing operations from the firm's Sampson County plant at Clinton.

And Bo Lewis, Beaufort County's industrial development director and executive director of the chamber of commerce, said two new industries will add another 325 jobs to the Washington-area workforce.

Hamilton Beach Inc. will transfer its appliance product-assembly operation from Clinton to its Washington, N.C., plant, Jim Mason, vice president of operations in Clinton, said Tuesday.

The change will result in the loss of 100 to 200 jobs at the Clinton plant, which employs about 500 people.

In turn, the Clinton plant will receive the Washington plant's motor-manufacturing operation for Hamilton Beach products, according to Mason.

The changes, already in effect, are scheduled to be completed by Sept. 1. They are designed to economize the operations of the two plants.

The Washington plant, Mason said, will hire about the same number of workers that the Clinton plant is scheduled to lose, leaving the total work force of the two plants about the same, Mason said.

Expo Will Spotlight County's Economic-Business Growth

By Greg Laudick
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Last minute preparations were under way today at the New Greenville Warehouse for the opening Thursday of Expo '89, the annual commercial fair sponsored by the Pitt-Greenville Chamber of Commerce.

"It's very exciting here at the warehouse today as the people are busy moving in and getting their displays prepared for tomorrow's opening," said Pat Burnette, the Expo manager and chamber vice president.

"We have such a wide variety of exhibits this year, there really will be something here for everybody," she added.

The annual three-day spring event showcases displays and demonstrations from hundreds of local businesses and organizations.

"This year's Expo has the theme 'Boomtown Biz,' which reflects the rapid economic and business growth in this area during the last few years," Ms. Burnette said.

"I believe many people will be surprised at what a diverse economy we have here in Pitt County as they are walking through this year's Expo. It's a wonderful educational experience, providing both adults and children a first-hand look at just what this community of ours has to offer," she added.

A ribbon-cutting ceremony is scheduled Thursday at 12:45 p.m. and gates will open the fifth annual Expo to the public at 1 p.m.

This year's Expo also features food stands and a variety of contests. Musical entertainment will begin nightly at 7:30 p.m.

On Thursday, the band "The Breeze" will play beach music and on Friday, "The Little Rock Band" will play a variety of country music. Charlotte-based "Perfect Fitt" will entertain Saturday with a mixture of top-40 tunes.

Hours for Expo '89 will be from 1 p.m. to 9 p.m. on Thursday and Friday and from 10 a.m. to 9 p.m. on Saturday.

Farmville Schedules Referendum

By Carol Tyer
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

FARMVILLE — Within minutes after Dr. Dan Heizer had presented a petition with 405 names, commissioners of Farmville called for a June 13 referendum on whether the town should have a council-manager form of government.

Heizer, accompanied by former Commissioner Jack Farrior, read the petition which has been circulating since early March.

The referendum, the first on the question since May 1969, will let the town's registered voters decide whether the town should continue with a mayor-council form of government or adopt the council-manager form now used by most North Carolina cities and towns. A mayor-council government concentrates more direct power with commissioners, while the council-manager format provides that they have only policy-making power, students of municipal government say.

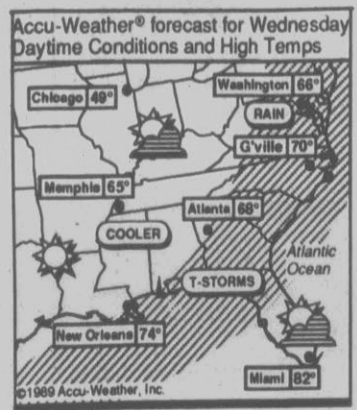

A public hearing on the town's new Community Development Block Grant application brought only one comment. Moses Moye, a former commissioner, said he would like to see the Edwards property near the town's community building completed by being included in the new grant program. Van Lewis of the McDavid engineering firm which administers the grant program, said this was the first of two public hearings on the matter. The application is due May 19, Lewis said.

A public hearing on whether to close two alleys in the East Pine-South Waverly street area brought no adverse comment, so commissioners voted for the closing, which will let the property within the alleys revert equally to owners on each side of each alley.

Patrick Leo Owens of 303 S. Waverly St. questioned whether he ever got back land that should have reverted to the previous owner of his property when an alley in the same

Gorbachev Promises No Nuclear Weapons, Bases In Latin America

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

HAVANA, Cuba — Mikhail S. Gorbachev, responding to longstanding U.S. concerns about Moscow's intentions in Latin America, says the Kremlin will refrain from putting military bases or nuclear weapons in the region.

With President Fidel Castro sitting nearby, the Soviet leader said in a speech to the National Assembly on Tuesday that Moscow supports the creation of a "zone of peace" in Latin America and an end to all outside military aid to the region.

Gorbachev's comments were made during his first diplomatic trip to Latin America and seemed directed largely at Washington, whose hemispheric policy for years has been based on concerns about Soviet influence in the region.

Tens of thousands of Cubans lined the streets this morning to bid farewell to Gorbachev as he headed for the airport for a trip to London.

About 700 buses were mobilized for the occasion and many people waited more than three hours for a final glimpse of the Soviet leader. Workers were given time off to take part in the departure activities.

Gorbachev left at mid-morning following a hectic day Tuesday highlighted by his late afternoon speech.

It was a day for sightseeing by Gorbachev at local points of interest and also a day in which dissident sources reported the arrest of seven people who had planned to lead a pro-Gorbachev demonstration at the Soviet Embassy.

The planned demonstration, canceled after the arrests, intended to seek Gorbachev's support for liberalizing moves in Cuba similar to the ones he is carrying out in the Soviet Union.

Castro introduced Gorbachev to the National Assembly, delivering a fiery 50-minute address in which he blasted U.S. policies across the board, particularly Washington's support for anti-communist insurgencies.

He criticized Western reporters for saying Gorbachev's reforms have produced a rift between the two.

Castro pointed out that the two countries have immense cultural, economic and historical differences, and it is only natural that they would follow different ideological paths.

Still, Castro has indicated in the past that he was troubled that Gorbachev would embrace some aspects of capitalism as part of his sweeping policy shifts.

At a news conference after his speech, Gorbachev also dismissed as "inventions" Western media portrayals of him and Castro "almost as enemies."

As proof of the durability of the Soviet-Cuban alliance, Gorbachev and Castro signed a 25-year Treaty of Friendship and Cooperation on Tuesday.

Gorbachev did lend credence in his speech to widely reported Soviet unhappiness with Cuban use of Soviet economic aid, estimated at $5 billion annually. Economic ties between the countries, he said, "should be made more dynamic, more efficient and mutually productive."

He called for "stricter accountability and more discipline to ensure timely and proper compliance with obligations mutually assumed." The remarks were interpreted as Soviet displeasure over protracted delays in development projects.

In The Area

Flim-Flam

Three flim-flam men allegedly pressured a 71-year-old Greenville woman to pay $100 for a sealant for her trailer, the Pitt Sheriff's Department reports.

Dorothy O'Mara, of Lot 1, Whitehurst Trailer Park on North Greene Street, reported that the men approached her home Tuesday about 5:20 p.m. The men offered to spray a sealing formula on the roof of her trailer, but sprayed only white paint on the roof.

When she complained that it was not the sealant, the men said they would need $150 for the work, and one man followed her inside the trailer. Ms. O'Mara said she was afraid of the men and gave them $100 for the work. The group said the seal would last for 10 years but refused to give her a written warranty.

Sheriff's deputies described the men as a 65- to 70-year-old white male with white hair and a slender build, a 25-year-old white male of average height and a slender build, and a heavy-set black male who wore a bandana on his head. Their truck was last seen headed north on N.C. 11.

JOB TRANSFERS

Work is an essential part of our lives that frequently imposes outside demands on a relationship - demands with which not everyone is prepared to deal. While the two-paycheck marriage is a reality in today's economy, corporate approaches to job transfers still don't adequately take this reality into account. Moving is traumatic in the best of circumstances, but when it is imposed by a job, spousal cooperation is vital in order to maintain marital stability. Unfortunately, a proposed job transfer can initiate a power struggle that doesn't address the needs or fears of both parties.

Job transfers can leave the partners actually feeling powerless - the transferee who may have no choice, the spouse who needs to move to accommodate the transfer. Both parties can get so caught up in their own issues that they lose track of the other's pain. Seeking professional counseling in this process can help you avoid many of the negative aspects of job moves, and give families the tools to work through transitions with a greater sense of joint purpose.

Yow To Speak

ECU NEWS BUREAU

Kay Yow of Raleigh, coach of the gold medal-winning 1988 U.S. women's Olympic basketball team, will be the speaker at East Carolina University's annual spring commencement on May 6.

Ms. Yow, head women's basketball coach at North Carolina State University, is widely known as a speaker. "We are delighted that Kay Yow, one of our own distinguished graduates, has consented to deliver the commencement address," said Dr. Richard Eakin, ECU chancellor.

Up to 2,500 graduates are scheduled to march in the traditional cap and gown academic procession and receive their degrees during the morning program in Ficklen Stadium. Last year's spring commencement drew an audience of more than 11,000.

Ms. Yow was ECU's Distinguished Alumni Lecturer at an annual program on campus during February. She delivered a motivational lecture, describing the value of a positive attitude whether on the court during Olympic games or in everyday life, and she spent the day visiting classes on the campus where she earned a bachelor's degree in English in 1964.

A former high school teacher and coach, Ms. Yow is a member of the North Carolina Hall of Fame and the Women's Sports Hall of Fame. She has been selected as Coach of the Year by the U.S. Sports Academy and Woman of the Year in Sports by the National Organization for Women (NOW). At N.C. State, her teams have won three Atlantic Coast Conference championships and six NCAA tournament berths.

Last year's spring commencement speaker was retired television news anchorman Douglas Edwards.

Year 2007 Panelists Begin Search For Specific Regions Of Concern

By Greg Laudick
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Efforts of the Year 2007 Committee to improve the quality of life in Pitt County went from the general to the specific Tuesday as participants broke into small groups to discuss particular issues of concern.

The approximately 150 participants, including community leaders from both the private and public sectors, divided into eight sub-groups to discuss specific areas of interest, ranging from transportation to crime and substance abuse.

"We have a number of good people represented in each area here to night," said 2007 Chairman Jerry Powell at Tuesday's meeting. "The task before them now is to work on creating a long-range vision to help establish Pitt County as a center for excellence by the year 2007."

"I think the most pleasant surprise was at that first meeting when 250 people attended, which indicated that there is broad public interest in this process and in what Pitt County is going to be like in the year 2007," he said.

After an introduction and an overview of the first two 2007 meetings, participants were divided into eight strategy teams, which averaged about 15 people per group.

Some people selected to be involved in the group aimed at improving education, while others chose to participate in the group discussing recreational and cultural development. Other sub-groups addressed county and municipal services, economic development and optimum skill employment in the county.

Each team then selected officers, identified strengths and weaknesses in the chosen area and then formulated a sub-group vision statement.

For example, the team "Economic Development-New Business," chaired by Malcolm Green, produced the statement: "To achieve the maximum potential for quality economic growth and development in Pitt County by the full commitment of all of our human natural and organizational resources."

"After a group discussion, we identified the county's geographic location, East Carolina University, Pitt Community College and the quality of life here as some of our strengths," Green said. "The feeling that we do not fully utilize all our cultural resources was then identified as a weakness," he added.

Also outlined at the meeting Tuesday was a tentative timetable for the entire 2007 project.

The strategy teams will meet again to discuss their particular area of planning on April 13. A joint meeting of the strategy teams in which the final recommendations of each group will be presented to all 2007 participants will then be held April 27.

Following two meetings in May to refine those recommendations, a draft of the completed strategy report is expected to be completed near the end of June.

Public forums, which will address the final report, are scheduled in July.

Phase II of the project, the action plan, will begin in the fall as the private and public agencies who will be called on to implement the plan will start to review the completed recommendations.

Other strategy team chairmen are Charles Coble, education; Chet Emerson, crime and substance abuse; Bobby Roberson, transportation; Sue Moody, county and municipal services; Deborah Davis, economic development, and Jo Linda Sanders, full employment. Jordan Whichard, 2007 vice chairman, on Tuesday led the recreational and cultural strategy team for absent chairman Phil Dixon.

NCSU Student On Trial In Stabbings

By John Bare
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

An N.C. State student charged with knifing two East Carolina University students last fall on the Greenville campus is on trial this week in Pitt Superior Court.

Tony Lawrence Sauls, 18, of 225 E. Second St., Clayton, is charged with two counts of assault with a deadly weapon with intent to kill, inflicting serious injury. Each charge is a felony punishable by up to 20 years in prison.

Joseph Francis Molineaux, 23, of 216 Belk Residence Hall and Christopher Simpson, 24, of 1918 White Hollow Drive took the witness stand Tuesday and described how they were cut. A plastic surgeon was scheduled to testify today concerning the victims' injuries.

The case was expected to go to the defense this afternoon.

Molineaux and Simpson said they were in the Greene lobby with a friend about 1:50 a.m. Oct 22, 1988, waiting for a taxi, when Sauls tried to enter the building. One door was locked and one open, they said, but Sauls kept shaking the locked door. Both men said they laughed at Sauls and made faces at him through the window for a few minutes; then their friend, Heather Draper, of 318 Greene, an ECU sophomore, opened the door.

Sauls and Molineaux exchanged words briefly, Simpson said, and then the two went outside. When Simpson stepped around the corner of the dorm, he said he saw Molineaux's knees buckle and Sauls' arm pulling back from a punch. Sauls then ran, Simpson said.

Simpson said he checked on Molineaux, then returned to Miss Draper near the corner of the dorm. He then spotted Sauls, holding a knife and crouching behind Molineaux. Simpson said he ran at Sauls and kicked him, but Sauls got to his feet and cut Molineaux on the arm and face. Molineaux still bears a scar running from his left ear to the left corner of his mouth.

Simpson said he tried to catch the fleeing Sauls and suffered cuts on his arm, head and lip. In all, he received 28 stitches. Sauls has also filed cross-warrants charging Molineaux and Simpson with simple assault. Those cases are set for May 17.

Simpson testified that on the night of the incident, neither he nor Molineaux was intoxicated.

Roulette

The Odds Are Against The Victims

Keeping abused children out of harm's way without enough social workers is like playing Russian roulette with five cylinders loaded instead of one. Odds are, the gun will go off.

And when it does, the target is a human life.

Pitt County's Department of Social Services is playing that risky game right now. Child abuse cases have tripled since 1985, while staff has only increased by one-third. Needs have mushroomed but manpower has stagnated. Social workers are trying their best, but there just aren't enough hands to do the job.

In 1985, two social workers investigated 320 cases of child abuse or neglect in Pitt County. By 1987 the caseload grew to 587 and in 1988 it hit a whopping 800 cases. But only 1 1/2 social workers have been added to take care of this increase. DSS Chairman Ed Garrison understandably feels frustrated and afraid his department can't safeguard children without adequate staff.

'Russian roulette is much too dangerous a game to play with human lives. To make a mistake, to allow the loaded gun to fire, would be unthinkable.'

"In this case we're playing with children's lives," Garrison said. "So far we haven't made any mistakes but if the case load continues I can't guarantee that record."

There's a sharp irony to the predicament. Both the community and DSS are doing a better job of recognizing potential child abuse and neglect. That's the primary reason for the rise in cases. The schools are more perceptive, the hospital is more aware. Neighbors are more attentive. Social workers are more persistent. These are the effects of heightened awareness about abuse, prompted by media attention and in Pitt County, by a chilling court case three years ago in which an abused boy who killed his father was on trial.

Not all the cases investigated are that dramatic or that compelling. But they are all urgent and they include rich, poor, middle class, black, white and Oriental. Each case represents a set of distinct, commanding human needs.

Garrison has asked Pitt's County Commission for two additional social workers to allow the department to confidently and promptly investigate reports of child abuse. Ideally, the county needs six additional people, but two will keep the department from going under, according to Garrison. That is a reasonable request and it should be granted.

Other counties have experienced similar crises and have responded by increasing staff. In Wake County, for example, child abuse cases increased 25 percent in 1988. The Wake County Commission recently authorized four additional social workers to keep pace with the case load.

It's a cliché to say Pitt is a progressive, expanding county and its needs increase concurrently with that growth. But population surge is a reality and must be dealt with effectively. So, too, must the difficulties prompted by that growth. Pitt has shown its enlightenment, involvement and concern about child abuse. That awareness is an asset that shouldn't be wasted because there aren't enough resources to utilize it.

The county's ability to keep abused children safe is in jeopardy. Those who suffer most from such a risk are the most vulnerable of the county's citizens — its children. That situation can be remedied with more manpower, and it should be. Russian roulette is much too dangerous a game to play with human lives.

To make a mistake, to allow the loaded gun to fire, would be unthinkable.

'Billy Bathgate' & Michael Milken

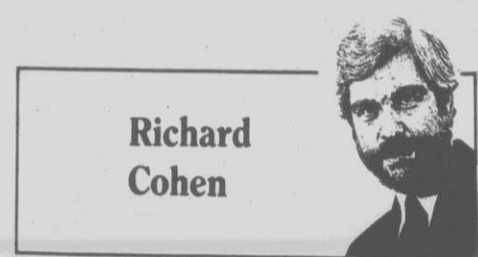

WASHINGTON — The Wall Street Journal has done its sums. Taking Michael Milken's salary for 1987, it has figured that he made $1.5 million a day or $107,000 an hour. He paid off his annual Social Security payment while brushing his teeth. He earned more in a year than it cost to build a B1 bomber, launch a space shuttle or, given some extrapolation, buy the territory that we now call the Louisiana Purchase. Milken made $550,000,000 in 1987.

The salary figure was contained in the indictment filed against Milken by the U.S. attorney's office in New York last week. The Drexel Burnham Lambert trader, this Wall Street alchemist who turned junk bonds into gold, is accused of a bevy of crimes, among them inside trading. Outside or inside, in three years Milken was paid more than $1 billion. John D. Rockefeller should have done so well. In fact, the Journal said Rockefeller didn't.

But Rockefeller was merely in oil. Milken is in something else — the floating of junk bonds with which corporations are reorganized, sometimes bought, sometimes taken private by their managers.

The staggering sums, the incredible wealth, brings to mind Scrooge McDuck, that comic-book character who drove a bulldozer around his vault, arranging his money. The troubles of Scrooge McDuck were awesome. But where his wealth came from was anyone's guess.

It is, however, easier to explain the riches of a comic-book character than that of Michael Milken. The floating of junk bonds aside, the man produces nothing. He has invented nothing. He manufactures nothing. He has dug no wells, cut no record, made no movie. But the people who have done those things — even the most incredibly successful of them (Michael Jackson, $60 million last year) cannot approach the wealth of Milken.

Milken's friends and associates also say that he is one swell fellow. In full-page newspaper ads (you expected something less?) they say, "Mike Milken, we believe in you." As well they should. Milken has made some of them wealthy. But what he has done for the rest of us is a matter of dispute.

Take the case of the Fruehauf Corp., for many a year the maker of truck trailers. Successful, indeed king of the road, it had those certain somethings that attract Wall Street raiders: cash in the bank and an undervalued stock. A raider, Asher Edelman, made a pass at it, but Fruehauf's management fought back. With the assistance of Merrill Lynch, the firm was taken private three years ago — and into the toilet.

Fruehauf has sold various divisions. It has fired oodles of employees, given others early retirement and is saddled with enormous debt — $101 million annually in payments. Things are so bad at the old trailer company that even some former executives lost money on their deal. But not Merrill Lynch. It invested $10.5 million in Fruehauf, but has so far "earned" $54.6 million in fees.

Something is terribly wrong here. A catastrophic deal in which a once thriving company is nearly destroyed and many jobs lost should not turn anyone a profit. But too often that is the case. Corporations are being turned upside down for the change in their pockets. They are leveraged, which is a fancy way of saying put into debt. The money borrowed is not used to produce a new product or invested in research, it goes to finance the deal. The deal — not the product — is now king in America.

Who can blame the young and the restless if they go into the demolition of companies, rather than the building of them? Indeed, who can blame them if they ignore warnings that corporate debt is crushing and that if a recession comes, it will bust many companies? There's more money to be made in the demolition of a company than the building of it.

In E.L. Doctorow's wonderful novel, "Billy Bathgate," the psychotic mobster Dutch Schultz becomes the benefactor of the small town where his trial is to be held — and is exonerated. In a similar way, Michael Milken has discovered the virtues of public relations. Once a recluse, he has emerged as a fund-raiser on the charity circuit. But he might serve his cause better if he admitted he was grossly overpaid, that the system he perfected has gone haywire and that — if the court pleases — he'll take the money he has left so that he can start a company and put people to work.

Of course, he'd have to take a pay cut.

Copping Out On Moral Judgments

WASHINGTON — Few will come right out and say it, but there's great disappointment among the journalists and political junkies in Washington over the ruling that former President Reagan need not testify in Oliver North's trial.

The prospect of Reagan being put on the stand for tough questioning had a lot of folks salivating. Liberals who never previously had expressed much sympathy for the former National Security Council aide and his efforts to supply the contra forces in Nicaragua began to speak feelingly of North's right to "present his best defense."

As the much-publicized courtroom drama approaches its end, the real question is not whether Reagan should have been put on the stand. Judge Gerhard A. Gesell properly dismissed the defense effort to subpoena Reagan as a fishing expedition. The question is why North was ever put on trial.

That we are going through this expensive legal exercise is not a tribute to the American system of justice. It is, rather, a reflection of the American people's current inability to reach — and enforce — a moral judgment of its own. It is a cop-out for our failure to ban — or shun — a prominent ne'er-do-well. And, as Richard Nixon's prominence reminds us, it is far from our first failure.

No question in my mind, or in the public record, that North, the cocky Marine lieutenant colonel, betrayed his trust. The majority report of the congressional committee which investigated the Iran-contra affair concluded 18 months ago that North was at the heart of an operation whose principal ingredients "were secrecy, deception and disdain for the law."

Have we really forgotten what was said at the end of that exhaustive study? The committees said North "admitted that he and other officials lied repeatedly to Congress and to the American people about the contra covert action and Iran arms sales, and that he altered and destroyed official documents. North's testimony demonstrates that he also lied to members of the executive branch, including the attorney general, and officials of the State Department, CIA and NSC."

Once that point has been made, what further is to be gained by putting North on trial on criminal charges? Clearly, the courts do not lack work. They, and the nation's prosecutorial forces, are all but buckling under the caseload generated by the upsurge of violence and drug-trafficking in our major cities.

After such an exhaustive congressional inquiry and such a clear judgment against North and the other central figures, there can be only two justifications for holding a criminal trial. One might be the discovery of additional facts or clarification of the historical record. But the North trial has added little to our understanding of what happened. Nor could it. The central conspiracy charge was dismissed before the trial began, because Gesell concluded that national-security sensitivities were incompatible with the defense North would have to present against those charges.

The colonel is being tried essentially on collateral matters now, not on the questions that will occupy the historians of the Reagan presidency.

The other rationale is that if North has done something wrong, he should be punished. But North already has been canned from the White House and he has resigned his commission in the Marines. His old career is finished. What more would be gained by sending him off to Allenwood or one of the other federal prisons for white-collar criminals?

No one presumes that North would spend more than a short period in comfortable conditions of custody if convicted. And then he would return to American society.

The critical question is not whether he goes through a trial, but whether we as a society are prepared to treat him as someone who has breached his trust and betrayed his oath of office. And that is up to us, not to the 12 men and women now sitting as the North jury.

In a society which understood the principles underlying the Constitution, the principles on which our freedom and our democracy rest, a man who did what Oliver North did could anticipate being shunned if he ever sought to reenter public life in any way.

But we do not do that. Instead, what probably awaits him — whether or not he is convicted and punished for these peripheral charges — is a lucrative book contract, a continuation of a profitable lecture career and adulation as a celebrity.

We in the press bear a lot of responsibility for saving these characters from the internal exile their actions merit. As Marie Shear points out in the current issue of the Washington Journalism Review, the unending media fascination with Richard Nixon has kept the slippery former President alive as a public figure, when he ought to be living out his life in private and in disgrace.

But in this, as in other things, the press mirrors the faulty values of the larger society. Shear quotes Watergate conspirator G. Gordon Liddy's cynical remark that, "One of the biggest lies in the world is that crime doesn't pay. Of course, crime pays."

Unless and until we learn to enforce moral judgments in this society, rather than asking the courts to do our job for us, that cynicism will be well-merited.

When Good Ideas Meet The Realities Of State Government

Paul O'Connor

RALEIGH — Rep. "B." Holt, D-Alamance, had a great idea to save some taxpayer money. When jail inmates incur medical bills, they ought to have to pay those bills themselves, she said. The counties ought not be responsible.

The idea sounded so good, in fact, that a House judiciary subcommittee was falling all over itself trying to approve it. But a problem developed, then another. Pretty soon, the committee realized that it has opened the proverbial "can of legislative worms."

Mrs. Holt's county attorney found contradictory state statutes, one which said that jail inmates were responsible for their own medical bills, another which said the county was responsible. She therefore proposed legislation saying that, unless an inmate is "indigent," the inmate would be responsible for medical bills incurred while in custody. The bill would not cover inmates of state prisons.

Analysis

The first problem arose with the question of who is a state prisoner, and who is a county prisoner. While Mr. Holt, a lawyer, contended that those in the jails belonged to the counties, and those in prison belonged to the state, others said it wasn't that simple. Some jail inmates should be in prison, but they are being held in jail to relieve prison crowding. Some inmates in the state prison hospital should be in jail, but they are too ill to be there.

Rep. Billy Watkins, D-Granville, argued that everyone convicted of a crime is the responsibility of the state. Rep. Anne Barnes, D-Orange, said there was a distinction between a state and county inmate and it was determined by the length of prison sentence. At day's end, this matter was still unresolved.

The second problem was cited by Watkins. How does the state determine who is indigent? There is no state definition of indigency, he said. When judges decide who cannot afford a lawyer, they use varying standards, Watkins said. Would the same be true if this bill became law?

Monroe Waters of the Department of Correction added his concern. DOC might have to open an entire new office just to keep track of the financial worth of inmates. It wouldn't be a simple matter of deciding whether an inmate could enter prison with health insurance from his employer and with financial assets. But the insurance would expire and the assets might be spent, or taken away. Some inmates might even accumulate assets while they were in jail. The state would have to keep track and might create more in bureaucratic costs than it saved for the counties.

Finally, Rep. David Redwine, D-Brunswick, asked how the bill would affect medical care. Would doctors prove reluctant to treat inmates knowing that they's probably have trouble collecting? Doctors now know that the county will pay them for their services.

And that raised another question. Who would be liable for the medical bills of an inmate who just refused to pay? The county might find itself paying these bills anyway just to make sure that the next time a call was made to a doctor that the doctor answered it.

The idea is a sound one. Someone from the suburbs who is in jail for the weekend on a drunk driving charge ought to pay his own hospital bills if he suddenly gets sick. But, like so many ideas that are raised in legislative hallways, they make much less sense when the realities of state government are brought into play.

A Book About Verbal Twists and Tangles

Tom Raum

WASHINGTON — President Bush used to joke he had to keep his charisma in check as vice president, but one thing he didn't put under wraps when he got the No. 1 job was his way-with-words thing.

Bush brought his celebrated tendency for gaffes, misstatements and sometimes wacky phrases right into the White House with him.

"It has been said by some cynic, maybe it was a former president, 'If you want a friend in Washington, get a dog.' Well, we took them literally — that advice, as you know. But I didn't need that because I have Barbara Bush," he told a group of college students just last week.

Bush has frequently made fun of his own gaffes, often jokingly referring to his claim, quickly corrected, that Sept. 7 was "Pearl Harbor Day." And at a journalists' banquet last weekend, Bush cracked: "People say I'm undecisive. I don't know about that."

Bush's one-liners — often unintentional — have long brought chuckles and grimaces alike from supporters and critics.

Now, a greatest hits of Bush's wayward phrases has been collected in a paperback volume entitled "The Wit and Wisdom of George Bush," compiled by Ken Brady and Jeremy Solomon and published by St. Martin's Press of New York.

The book focuses mainly on statements made by Bush during last year's presidential campaign and during his eight years as vice president.

Among the entries: classics such as Bush's demand for "just a splash" of coffee at a New Hampshire truck stop and his analysis of why he lost an Ames, Iowa, GOP straw vote: "A lot of people who support me were at an air show, they were off at their daughter's coming-out party, they were teeing up at the golf course..."

Bush's suggestion that Soviet auto mechanics come to Detroit "because we could use that kind of ability" and his 1981 toast to then-Philippine dictator Ferdinand Marcos that "we love your adherence to democratic principles" also made the book.

Also, some quick takes: "a kitchen in every pot," "tough as horseradish," "in deep doo doo," and a vow to "make sure everybody who has a job wants a job."

Bush's fondness for the words "thing" and "stuff" is also documented: "on the visions thing," "the hostage thing," "this inflation thing," and "the feminist thing."

The book also recalls how Bush last summer introduced to President Reagan three of his grandchildren, whose mother is Hispanic: "The little brown ones over there."

And, his discussion of his close relationship with Reagan in a campaign stop last May in Twin Falls, Idaho: "We have had triumphs, we have made mistakes, we have had sex..."

The book doesn't say it but Bush quickly corrected himself, saying he meant to say, "setbacks. We had setbacks."

Asked at a lunch with out-of-town reporters whether he would sign the Fairness Doctrine passed by Congress, Bush said: "I never talk about what I'm going to sign until I know exactly what's in it — read the fine print. Or better still, given the size of some of this stuff that comes around, have somebody else read the fine print."

To students at a local high school: "How many of you do the computer stuff?"

To another student group at a White House session, encouraging them to ask questions: "It's a good time to speak to me and I guess, with these cameras listening, be sure never to end your sentence without — end a sentence with a preposition, because it will be duly reported all across the country."

Tom Raum covers the White House for The Associated Press.

Quayle Jokes By Dan Quayle

Walter Mears

WASHINGTON — Live, from Washington, it's a new crop of Dan Quayle jokes, as told by Vice President Dan Quayle.

He poses no retaliatory threat to the TV comics who have made him the butt of their humor, but Quayle is polishing his style as a black and white-tie humorist.

"Mr. President," he said to George Bush and 629 other people at a formal dinner Saturday night, "you've been so supportive of me.

"The other day he called me into the Oval Office and said ... I want to do something that will show the nation what faith I have in you, in your maturity and your sense of responsibility.

"Would you like a puppy?"

The Quayle performances at the dinner of the Gridiron Club and earlier at the Radio and Television Correspondents Association's dinner are in keeping with the springtime rites of Washington, which include a round of formal dinners featuring the leaders of government needing journalists and themselves.

Self-effacing humor is deemed best, and the higher the rank, the bigger the laughs. Curiously, that is doubly so if the official involved has been facing the kind of sharp, sometimes personal criticism that has been Quayle's lot ever since he was nominated.

Quayle made his debut as a humorist at the 45th Radio and Television Correspondents dinner a couple of weeks ago. Reviews varied. He was panned in the Post.

But his delivery is improving. As for the material, that's a judgment that can only be made by the listener-viewer-reader.

He opened that night by remarking on the cocktails and the wine at every table, saying he realized "most of you do not want to be secretary of defense," the job John G. Tower was denied largely because of reports of excessive drinking.

That drew more groans than laughs, although variations on the gag had been making the rounds since Tower's rejection by the Senate. "It gets better," Quayle told his tough crowd.

Quayle said some people expected that as vice president he'd behave like Spiro T. Agnew, public enemy of the news media during the Nixon administration until he resigned rather than face prosecution on bribery charges. So, he joked, he'd sought Agnew's advice on press relations. "This time around, tell them 'No More Mr. Nice Guy,'" he said Agnew counseled.

Gridiron dinners have been the setting for the repair of some political reputations and the denting of others. Nancy Reagan sang "Second Hand Clothes" early in the Reagan administration and deflected criticism of her costly, borrowed gowns and White House china.

In keeping with the ritual, Quayle turned his best lines on himself. He said Bush had offered him a new title to describe his duties: "funeral czar."

"I think the president truly appreciates my insights," he said. "Just the other day he was telling the Cabinet 'If there's one thing I won't tolerate, it's yes men.' 'Isn't that right, Dan?'"

Quayle looked down the head table at Secretary of State James A. Baker III. "I owe him so much," he said. "During the campaign he took me under his wing. 'And kept me there.'"

He said Baker advised him on the way to handle the questions about his experience in the vice presidential campaign debate. "Wait for a strategic moment, then compare yourself to John Kennedy.

"Thanks, Jimmy."

Quayle said complaints about youth and inexperience didn't really bother him during the campaign. "What really burned me up were all the stories about my so-called handlers. I finally got so mad I went right to the top. I said 'Marilyn, you've got to do something about this.'"

Marilyn, of course, is Mrs. Quayle. Some of the vice president's critics say she's the brains of the family.

"I'll never forget that magic moment we met," Quayle said. "You remember, dear. When you caught me peeking over your shoulder during the bar exam."

Trying to outdo the hostile humor may seem a strange way to counter it. But it's worked before. Still, there's a lot of mileage left in Quayle jokes. At the Gridiron dinner, Ronald H. Brown, the Democratic chairman, reminded everyone that Washington now has an 11 p.m. curfew for juveniles who do not have essential employment. He turned to Quayle.

"You've only got about an hour and a half, Mr. Vice President."

Walter R. Mears, vice president and columnist for The Associated Press, has reported on Washington and national politics for more than 25 years.

Leaf Farmers May Vote On Assessments

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — Though the issue is before the General Assembly, farmers may be the ones to settle a dispute over which commodity groups represent flue-cured tobacco growers.

The bills will be taken up by the Senate Agricultural Committee this week, Sen. James Speed, D-Franklin, told the Wilmington Morning Star.

Speed and Sen. R.C. Soles, D-Columbus, co-sponsored a bill to permit a referendum on whether Tobacco Associates can increase an assessment growers pay to support flue-cured tobacco worldwide from 10 cents per 100 pounds to a maximum of 25 cents per 100 pounds.

Speed and Soles also are co-sponsoring a bill introduced by Sen. Wendell Murphy, D-Duplin. That bill would permit farmers to vote in a referendum to increase the assessment up to 50 cents per 100 pounds, with 25 cents paid to Tobacco Associates and 25 cents divided between Tobacco Growers Association of North Carolina and the Tobacco Foundation.

Farmers disagree over which groups should receive funding from growers.

Speed said Monday he expects both bills to pass the Agriculture Committee. Both bills could be approved by the General Assembly, which would permit farmers to decide which proposal to accept.

Under the 50-cent proposal, farmers would pay Tobacco Associates 25 cents per 100 pounds of tobacco sold, to finance international promotional projects.

Tobacco Growers is currently financed by $15 annual membership fees from producers. A large portion of the group's revenues comes from leaf dealers, cigarette manufacturers and farm supply businesses.

Tobacco Foundation, which donates money to N.C. State University for tobacco research, is funded largely by cigarette manufacturers.

Judge Threatens Contempt Citation

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHARLOTTE — A federal judge in Charlotte is threatening the U.S. secretary of health and human services with a contempt citation over the way he says the U.S. government illegally denies disability payments to North Carolinians.

The threat is the second warning in five months from U.S. District Judge James McMillan to the secretary, Otis Bowen.

McMillan said Bowen and the Social Security Administration are breaking the law. A spokesman said the administration had no comment Tuesday.

At issue is how the government decides whether someone is eligible for Social Security disability payments. McMillan contends that the government is denying benefits to people because they can't provide medical evidence proving the severity of their disabling pain. He says that's illegal.

The government contends it's doing nothing illegal.

About 77,000 North Carolinians whose disability benefits have been denied have been notified that because of earlier McMillan rulings they may get new hearings.

Among them are people like Judie Parks of Concord.

Parks, 41, a former textile mill worker, said she suffers from diabetes and hardening of the arteries and has difficulty standing and walking.

She said she has been denied disability benefits three times since applying in September 1985. "I think that's wrong," Parks said Tuesday. "I'm angry."

"I've worked all my life — since I was 14. I think they should help me. If I could work, I sure wouldn't be asking them for help."

McMillan's warning is part of a five-year legal battle. He has repeatedly attacked the federal government since a group of North Carolinians filed a class-action lawsuit in 1983 challenging the Social Security Administration's policies in denying disability benefits.

In February 1984, McMillan issued a stinging 48-page order chastising Margaret Heckler, who was health and human services secretary then, for illegally denying Social Security benefits to people. He ordered the Social Security Administration to stop:

— Terminating disability benefits without proof the clients' medical conditions had improved.

— Denying benefits because no objective medical evidence showed the severity of their disabling pain.

Those Tax Returns Are Due On April 17

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — You don't have to subtract Line Z from Line A on Schedule B (amended) to figure there are only 13 days before income tax returns are due.

Thanks to a quirk of the calendar — April 15 falls on a Saturday — taxpayers get a short reprieve this year. April 17 is the big day.

And both state and federal revenue offices are processing tax returns as fast as employees can spin them out.

"It's running pretty much on time, compared to last year," said Michael S. Hodges, director of the Individual Income Tax department of the North Carolina Department of Revenue.

It is taking six to eight weeks for taxpayers to get refunds from both the state and federal tax offices. But the refund time will increase April 17.

After April 17, it will take about 10 to 12 weeks for taxpayers to receive state refunds, and seven to 10 weeks for federal refunds.

The state Department of Revenue has 150 temporary employees helping 194 permanent employees process tax returns this year. The temporary employees are coding and verifying returns, preparing them for work by data processing employees.

To date, the state department has received about 1.5 million returns and mailed about 804,000 refunds. Refunds are averaging $235, Hodges said. So far, the state has mailed about $189 million in refunds.

Military Littering Pamlico

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — More than 400 pounds of radar-foiling debris dropped from jets into the Pamlico Sound last year is part of a broader problem of military litter being dumped in the fragile waters, the director of the Pamlico County Health Department said.

James R. Baluss said Tuesday he had received documentation from Cherry Point Marine Air Corps Station, which conducts flight training over the sound off Pamlico and Carteret counties, indicating that 1,175 cartridges containing 451 pounds of glass fibers were dropped over Pamlico County last year. The aluminum-coated fibers, known as chaff, are used to confuse enemy radar.

"Chaff is just one example of a large variety and volume of stuff that the military is discharging into public-trust waters," Baluss said in a telephone interview with The News and Observer of Raleigh.

His department has been examining the environmental effects of military practices in the area in an effort to predict what might occur if a proposed Mid-Atlantic Electronic Warfare Range is approved there.

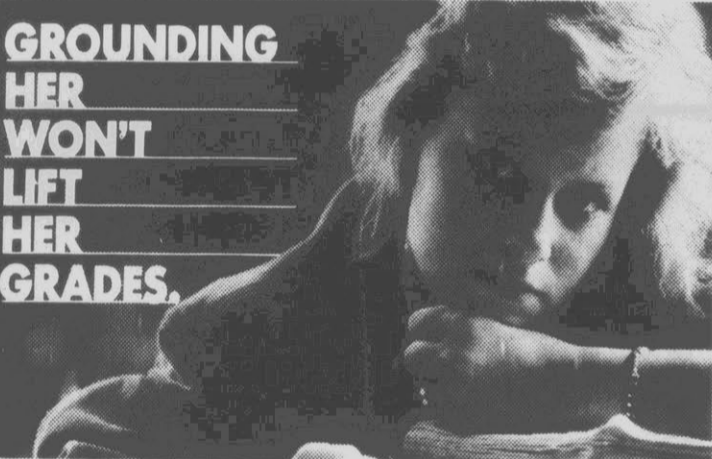

Baluss said that while the amount of chaff that falls into the water in the form of inch-long, hair-like fragments was relatively small, the casings containing the material also end up in the water along with the other items dropped as jets fly over the air corps' BT-9 and BT-11 bombing targets, around Piney Island in the Pamlico Sound.

"Is 400-plus pounds of this stuff going to shut down the sound?" he asked. "No. But it's a piece of a larger total."

Lynn R. Muchmore, assistant secretary for administration and intergovernmental relations for the state Department of Natural Resources and Community Development, said water quality specialists with the agency had investigated the chaff and concluded that the amounts being used were not a threat to the environment.

However, he said, he agreed with Baluss that long-term dumping of military training devices into the sound could damage marine life.

Officials are trying to determine whether such discharges are allowed under the federal Clean Water Act, he said.

Off-Duty Waitress Eligible For Aid, Appeals Court Says

By Dennis Patterson
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — A waitress at a mountain resort was off-duty when she stopped to help a guest, but she's still entitled to worker's compensation for injuries suffered when the man attacked her, the state appeals court ruled in a split decision.

Deborah Phar Culpepper said she had been instructed to be helpful to members and guest of Fairfield Sapphire Valley Resort, so she stopped when she saw a guest she assumed had car trouble on a resort road.

The guest kidnapped her and sexually assaulted her in a remote area. When she jumped from his moving car after the attack, she suffered a skull fracture and other injuries that left her with no sense of smell and partial hearing.

A hearing officer with the state Industrial Commission awarded her $17,500 for damages, two months of temporary disability and her medical expenses. The full commission overturned the ruling, saying Ms. Culpepper was off-duty at the time of the attack.

But a three-judge panel of the appeals court Tuesday reversed that ruling. "Because her decision to stop had its origin in her employment, we hold that her actions were sufficiently 'work-connected' to warrant a conclusion that her injuries arose out of the employment," Judge Charles Becton wrote for himself and Judge Sidney Eagles. "The commission erred by concluding otherwise."

The majority said Ms. Culpepper's employment as a cocktail waitress and bartender "placed her at an increased risk of sexual assault not shared by the general public."

Ms. Culpepper said she had turned in her day's receipts at the resort office in August 1981 and was on the way to say goodbye to a friend who was leaving the resort staff the following day when she spotted the guest, who had previously asked her for a date.

The resort and its insurance company had argued that she was off-duty, and that her instructions to be helpful to guests applied only during her on-duty hours.

Judge Edward Greene, who dissented from the majority opinion, agreed with that argument, saying Ms. Culpepper was off-duty at the time of the attack, even though she was still on the resort grounds.

The appeals court also ordered a new hearing in Robeson County on whether cocaine found in a car after the driver was stopped for speeding could be used as evidence against the driver.

Isa Abdul Ghaffar was stopped on Interstate 95 in August 1987. Trooper Willard Mitchell said he became suspicious when Ghaffar did not appear to know the person to whom the car was registered and could not explain how he got the car.

Mitchell said Ghaffar verbally approved a search, a point which Ghaffar disputed in court.

The lower court ruled the cocaine found in the trunk of the car could not be used as evidence in drug trafficking charges against Ghaffar because there was no written consent for the search and because Ghaffar was held for 40 minutes until a backup officer arrived and the search conducted.

The appeals court said no written consent is required for a search. "The trial court's order ... simply does not resolve the issue of fact of whether the defendant gave his oral consent to search the vehicle," the court ruled. The court said that issue could only be decided by the judge, "largely on the credibility of the witnesses."

In other action, the court:

— Ordered a new trial for Robert Lane Wise, who was convicted in Cabarrus County of the 1986 rape of a 12-year-old girl and sentenced to life in prison. The appeals court said a counselor who had dealt with the victim described her as "genuine" when asked about the girl's emotional state. That answer was not stricken and could have led the jury to believe the counselor was certifying the truth of her story, the court held.

— Upheld the second-degree murder and child abuse convictions of Donald and Cammy Louise Kinser in Onslow County in the death of Holly Kelly, a 2-year-old girl they were keeping in their home and considering adopting. An autopsy said the girl died from a blow to the head and showed signs of abuse.

— Dismissed an appeal by Bert and Dana Blackwell of Farmington Hills, Mich., who bought a condominium at Kure Beach just before a northeaster washed away the beach. The Blackwells had accused Carolina Beach Realty and the salesman of not telling them about the beach's history of erosion, but the court ruled that the Blackwells had not pursued the erosion question after the salesman offered to check with the condominium homeowners' association.

Support Growing For Martin Veto

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — Bipartisan support appeared to be growing to make Gov. Jim Martin the first North Carolina governor to have veto power as a House subcommittee considered several proposed constitutional amendments.

"Let's get his hands dirty too, if you will, on the legislative issues," said Rep. Dave Redwine, D-Brunswick, sponsor of one of eight House bills containing veto provisions.

"We would be portrayed as being less than fair with this particular governor if we made all of this effective after his term of office," Redwine told the Judiciary Subcommittee on Election Laws and Constitutional Amendments. "Martin has advanced this issue throughout his term in office. I think it's only fair from a fairness standpoint that we allow this governor to participate in something he feels so strongly about."

Rep. Johnathan Rhyne, R-Lincoln, agreed, saying, "If this is a good idea that we have a veto ... let's go ahead and implement it, start it out and not delay a good thing."

Rhyne told the panel he was sponsoring "the real veto bill" supported by Martin.

His proposed constitutional amendment, if approved by the public, would give the governor line-item veto over budget items. It would allow a pocket veto, under which laws the governor does not sign fail to take effect. And it would take two-thirds of all members of the House and Senate to override the veto.

Other veto proposals have called for no line-item or pocket veto with overrides by only a simple majority of legislators.

Rhyne said his bill is the kind of veto the public wants.

"I believe that people out there in peopleland, when they think of a veto, they're thinking about something that is fairly tough to override," he said.

But Redwine urged the committee to look at the broader picture of balancing state government.

"Once you begin to tinker with one part of the system, you begin to throw the other parts out of kilter," he said. Redwine supports a plan balancing the veto against four-year legislative terms and legislative confirmation of most gubernatorial appointments to boards and commissions.

With a veto and a two-thirds override, "you're going to have now a very strong executive branch," Redwine said.

"In order for there to be as strong a legislature, I feel like we need four-year terms," he said, pointing to a 25 percent turnover among lawmakers each election. He said freshman legislators provide a poor buffer against a powerful governor.

Rep. John Kerr, D-Wayne, said confirming too many of the governor's 4,000 appointments could become a full-time job. And he objected to putting any veto measure before the people without a campaign to educate them on the issue.

Redwine agreed that might be a good idea, but he added, "The people of this state are a lot smarter than sometimes we give them credit for."

Father Sentenced

BOONE, N.C. (AP) — A Graham man was sentenced to 34 years in prison Tuesday for breaking into his daughter's apartment near Appalachian State University with a gun and assaulting several people.

Robert Lewis Moore, 45, of Graham pleaded guilty to two counts of second-degree kidnapping, two counts of breaking and entering and one count of assault with a deadly weapon.

House Will Take Time On S.C. Ban

By F. Alan Boyce
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — South Carolina's ban on accepting North Carolina's hazardous waste will not force the state House into hurried consideration of a bill to restart the search for a hazardous waste site, a subcommittee chairman says.

"It's obvious to me that the governor of South Carolina is attempting to influence legislation in North Carolina," Rep. Dennis Wicker, D-Lee, said Tuesday.

Wicker told the Basic Resources Subcommittee on Solid Waste that South Carolina's actions "... have accentuated the problem of hazardous waste."

But he noted, "This has a long ways to travel in the House."

When the Senate passed the bill last month, South Carolina agreed to accept a limited amount of North Carolina waste. But South Carolina Gov. Carroll Campbell made it clear he wanted further action before restoring unlimited access to his state's waste facility. Wicker, however, urged careful consideration of the "voluminous bill."

"The chair intends to be deliberative, give close scrutinization to the bill and I do not intend to be influenced by factors inside or outside this committee in considering this bill," he said.

Campbell spokesman Tucker Eskew acknowledged Campbell was trying to move states into action. "Since past methods haven't worked, it was time to turn up the heat and tighten the lid on the pressure cooker," Eskew said. "Within each state, they'll have to reconcile the speed or lack of speed with which they approach this issue with the needs of their own citizens."

Sen. Lura Tally, D-Cumberland, said her Senate Environment Committee sometimes met three or four times a week to get an acceptable bill, but denied being rushed.

The package would replace the Hazardous Waste Commission with a new Industrial Waste Commission mostly appointed by the governor. The commission would find a site for a waste facility, using siting criteria similar to those adopted by a panel looking for a low-level radioactive waste site. The bill contains guidelines for compensating affected communities, charging fees for waste treatment, encouraging a regional approach to handling waste and encouraging waste reduction.

Wicker said there were some concerns not addressed in the Senate bill that had come up in a study commission on which he had served. Among those concerns were whether North Carolina should repeal its ban on shallow land burial of hazardous wastes before setting up rules governing such burial and whether private companies can be better encouraged to participate in waste reduction efforts.

House Panel OKs Changes In State Wildlife Commission

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — Although sportsmen disagreed over the best way to curb politics on the N.C. Wildlife Resources Commission, a House subcommittee approved a bill to restructure the panel.

Rep. Pete Thompson, chairman of the Basic Resources Subcommittee on Wildlife, Natural and Scenic Areas, broke a 3-3 tie Tuesday on a motion to delay action on the bill for a week and it was sent to the full Basic Resources Committee for further action on a 3-1 vote.

Sen. Bill Barker, D-Pamlico, who got the bill through the Senate, warned that "time is of the essence" because voting for members of the current commission is set for April 18.

Rep. Ed Bowen, D-Sampson, asked that the bill be delayed, saying he'd been receiving phone calls from sportsmen since the bill was rushed through the Senate, fearing the bill had been "greased."

"I'm not trying to put sand on it, I'm just trying to cool that grease down a little bit," he said.

The bill would end the terms of all 13 commissioners, allowing the governor to appoint one member from each of the 11 congressional districts. One at-large member would be named by the House and Senate. The bill would eliminate a system in which candidates are nominated through wildlife district elections and the governor chooses one of the top five nominees.

Before voting on the measure, the panel heard both supporters and opponents of the bill.

Janet Russ of Hyde County objected to the provision that would eliminate local races for nominees from which the governor now chooses members.

"I think this bill would limit the people's participation in that activity," she said.

But Mike Corcoran, executive vice president of the N.C. Wildlife Federation, said the commission is in turmoil, with members spending more time on politics and administrative decisions than on wildlife issues.

"In this case, in our opinion, the Wildlife Commission is broke," he said.

Corcoran applauded the "removal of the pseudo-election process which doesn't work and encourages people to make promise they can't keep." And he said divorcing members from local geographic districts would eliminate "an unhealthy, close relationship (with wildlife staffers) that makes it easy to be bad ..."

Corcoran said members have sometimes used wildlife officers to help them campaign or to drive them around the district and then feel obligated to them.

Former Rep. Bob Slaughter of Stanly County opposed the bill, saying, "We're putting politics first and wildlife second."

But Bill Holt of the National Turkey Federation said the bill would help eliminate needless politics.

"We should never lose sight of the extreme value of wildlife to the state of North Carolina," he said. "Politics is playing too big a part ... in our wildlife management today."

In other legislative action, the public could put proposed changes to the North Carolina Constitution to a vote of the people by getting 200,000 signatures under a bill before the House Judiciary Subcommittee on Election Laws and Constitutional Amendments.

Rep. Art Pope, R-Wake, said the provision, in use in 17 states, could have helped North Carolina give its governor veto power years ago instead of seeing veto bills caught in the "bottleneck" of the legislature. While the governor is the only one in the nation without the veto, public opinion polls have consistently showed support for the veto.

"There is a basic conflict of interest when you have elected officials balancing their own powers," he said.

But some committee members objected to any efforts to "tamper" with the constitution.

"It's easy for any of us, in the computer age, to get 200,000 signatures for anything," said Rep. Beverly Perdue, D-Craven, adding that the change would be "dangerous for North Carolina."

Pope replied that the founding fathers were careful to include a provision for state legislatures to call a convention to amend the U.S. Constitution. While that has never been used, Pope said Congress has acted at times to redress problems when some states began to ratify constitutional convention calls.

Rep. John Kerr, D-Wayne, objected to cluttering ballots with such things, saying lawmakers are elected to represent the public.

The House voted 108-3 to tentatively approve a bill to expand a law giving tax credits to employers who create jobs in distressed North Carolina counties.

The bill would remove the requirement that a distressed county have 7 percent unemployment — something needed because of declining unemployment rates. It also would remove limitations on the types of businesses a taxpayer must engage in to be eligible for the tax credit.

The law allows tax credits to the 20 most distressed counties in North Carolina to spark new businesses and business expansions.

Reps. Charles Cromer, R-Davidson; Trip Sizemore, R-Guilford and Ann Duncan, R-Forsyth, voted against the bill.

Most environmental agencies in North Carolina would be consolidated under a new Department of Environment, Health and Natural Resources under a bill given tentative House approval.

Rep. Joe Hackney, D-Orange, said the bill had widespread support from the business community because it would speed permitting and from environmentalists for improving efficiency of enforcement.

The bill would combine the Department of Natural Resources and Community Development, the Division of Health Services and the Division of Environmental Management, with some exceptions, Hackney said. For example, most of the community development agencies would be shifted to the Commerce Department.

Although there was considerable debate on the bill, focusing on why various agencies were or were not moved, no amendments were offered.

NCNB Appears Ready To Push Merger Bid With Atlanta Bank

By Paul Nowell
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHARLOTTE — Citizens & Southern Corp. in Atlanta is waiting for the dust to settle before it decides how to fight an unsolicited takeover bid from NCNB Corp., said an analyst, who compared the fight to a boxing match.

"This is just Round 1," said John Mason, who follows both NCNB and C&S with the InterstateJohnson Lane brokerage firm in Atlanta. "If some definitive legal or regulatory impediment comes up that NCNB didn't anticipate, that's another question."

"The only tangible thing we have right now is the skepticism of C&S about the value of the NCNB stock," he said.

While neither side was talking Tuesday, it was clear NCNB Corp. Chairman Hugh McColl Jr. remains intent on expanding his company's presence in the lucrative Atlanta banking market by taking over Citizens & Southern Corp. in what would be the largest banking merger in U.S. history.

"We want to meet to discuss this unique opportunity," McColl said in a statement Monday night after NCNB's $2.4 billion stock offer was rejected by the C&S board of directors. "We believe our offer is fair and generous. We are determined to proceed and request the C&S board to reconsider our offer and promptly authorize negotiations."

If the deal goes through, it would make Charlotte-based NCNB the nation's sixth-largest banking firm with about $76 billion in assets.

Since 1982, NCNB has aggressively expanded into new markets in Florida, South Carolina, Georgia and Tennessee. Its biggest move prior to the C&S bid came in July when it came to the rescue of ailing First RepublicBank of Texas.

Late Monday, C&S officials said they intend to fight the NCNB bid. A spokesman said the firm would have no comment Tuesday.

"What we have here is two contenders," Mason said. "One is taking advantage of its new Wall Street image," he said. "(NCNB) is not the same company it was a year ago. It has a better image, it's a better company, and a larger company."

"On the other side, we've got a fine, well-managed company that was surprised and shocked that it became the subject of an unfriendly offer," Mason said.

Bank analysts predict that NCNB, which has more than $50 billion in assets, might raise its offer by about 10 percent to acquire C&S, the nation's 32nd largest bank.

"On paper, the combination makes a lot of sense," said Dennis Shea, vice president of the Morgan Stanley Co., a New York investment firm. "It would give the Southeast a dominant company.

"This is the wave of the future," he said. "The banking industry suffers from overgrowth. It's natural for some banks to combine."

Shea said it doesn't make sense right now for NCNB to up the ante.

"They will probably let the bid stand. This will pressure C&S to come up with some method to defend themselves," he said.

Just four months ago, NCNB effectively doubled its size when it was selected by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. to acquire Texas' biggest bank, First RepublicBank Corp.

In what was described as the largest bank rescue in U.S. history, NCNB put up $210 million for 20 percent of the capital of the new bank. The FDIC also gave NCNB an exclusive five-year option to buy the remaining 80 percent.

Wall Street's enthusiasm over the Texas deal has boosted NCNB's stock price by 50 percent to record highs. It also enabled the bank to finance new acquisitions with the high-priced stock instead of cash, analysts said.

In its statement Monday, C&S called the $2.4 billion stock offer "clearly inadequate" and suggested that federal regulators might oppose the takeover on grounds that NCNB was taking improper advantage of the federal aid involved in the Texas bank deal.

"C&S's desire is not to do the deal," said banking attorney Rodgin Cohen, who was hired by the Atlanta bank following NCNB's bid. "We hope they leave us alone."

In his statement, McColl said he had been assured by his legal advisers that there were no regulatory obstacles to the deal.

But C&S Chairman Bennett Brown said following the board meeting in Atlanta: "We have managed this bank for service, growth, profitability and long-term value to shareholders — not for a quick sale."

Shea said the likely next step would be for NCNB to "publicly address some of the statements put forth by C&S."

Both analysts said it was unlikely that another bidder would enter the picture.

From his view, Shea said NCNB is going after a valuable institution that will help it prosper down the road.

"It's a good, clean bank with dominant markets," he said. "There's no need to fix it. For NCNB that's important, because its plate is already full with management tasks."

If the deal is completed, Shea said, C&S's management could help NCNB with its work in Florida and Texas.

"I spoke with Hugh McColl last night and he has genuine respect for C&S's management," he said.

N.C. Furniture Show May Get New Name

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

In 1980, the Southern Furniture Market was considered just another regional market, but today, there's a proposal to rename the High Point trade show to reflect its international appeal.

Rick Barentine, executive director of the Furniture Factories' Marketing Association of the South, which sponsors the trade show, said his group is considering renaming the market to the International Home Furnishings Market.

"Back in 1909 it was deliberately named the Southern Furniture Market to avoid becoming too local," Barentine said. "As stewards of a heritage, we're evaluating whether the (current) name is broad enough."

Last year, the Southern Furniture Market Center underwent a similar name change.

Since 1980, the Southern Furniture has surpassed rival cities such as Atlanta, San Francisco and Dallas. High Point now ranks with Milan and Cologne as a "must" stop for buyers and exhibitors.

In the past decade, the number of exhibitors at the market has increased from 1,100 to 1,600. About 10 percent of the exhibitors are either foreign companies or U.S. importers who represent one or more foreign firms.

More than 50,000 buyers, dealers, factory representatives, designers and others are expected to visit High Point, a city of 70,000, during the market's eight-day spring run, which opens Thursday.

The market, which is the world's largest home furnishings trade show, pumps an estimated $125 million annually into the area's economy.

High Point would not be the same place without its twice-yearly furniture market. Visitors come from every state and more than 50 foreign countries to attend the trade shows every April and October.

"I don't know how to describe its importance in dollar terms," said Calvin Rice, president of the High Point Chamber of Commerce. "A lot of our residents are employed in the furniture industry. It's obviously very, very important."

Fire Closes Dare Bridge

MANTEO, N.C. (AP) — A bridge that connects Roanoke Island with the Outer Banks was closed for about an hour after a fire was discovered on a wooden support beam, authorities say.

The fire, which was discovered about 5 p.m. Tuesday, was extinguished quickly, but traffic was halted until the state Department of Transportation could inspect the bridge, officials said. At about 6 p.m., one lane of the bridge was reopened for small cars and pickup trucks.

Nags Head Fire Chief Doug Ramaley said the fire may have been started on the Washington Baum Bridge after highway crews did patch work on the highway roadbed earlier Tuesday.

Robert L. Spence, a Transportation Department supervisor, said after inspecting the damage that one wooden piling was burned, probably from the road work.

A new high-rise bridge is being built alongside the Baum Bridge, but it has not been completed yet.

College Students Rescue Fisherman

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WILMINGTON — Three college students on spring break rescued a man stranded on a jetty near Masonboro Inlet at Wrightsville Beach, and managed to capture the event on videotape.

Clarence Marshburn, 34, of Castle Hayne, was fishing in his 14-foot motor boat when he fell overboard and his boat sped away without him, said Petty Officer Daniel Stonewall of the U.S. Coast Guard at Wrightsville Beach.

"He said he caught a fish and the boat got away from him," Stonewall said.

James Loutit, 21, of Wilmington; Steve Spaulding, 19, of San Francisco; and Levi Richardson, 23, of Arlington, Va. — all students at Trinity College in Hartford, Conn. — saw the man clinging to the rocks about 200 yards offshore as they passed the northern jetty in their motor boat around 6:30 p.m.

They maneuvered their boat to the side of the jetty opposite Marshburn, "got the life preserver and a buoy and a bumper and threw that to him," Loutit said. "He had the life preserver around part of him and he jumped into the water and we pulled him into the boat."

The waves were cresting at about three to four feet, the water temperature was about 61 degrees, and high tide was about an hour away when the students rescued

Marshburn, Stonewall said.

Marshburn had been stranded for about 15 minutes. He was taken to the Coast Guard station where officers warmed him and called an ambulance. He appeared to be suffering from mild hypothermia and his legs were cut, officers said.

Marshburn was treated at New Hanover Memorial Hospital and released, a nursing supervisor said.

Marshburn's boat wasn't found.

Waste Disposal

RALEIGH (AP) — Local governments in western North Carolina cannot handle their solid waste without help from state government, members of the General Assembly were told Tuesday, but House Speaker Joe Mavretic said local governments must be committed to solve the problem.

Members of Western North Carolina Tomorrow, a Cullowhee-based regional leadership organization, asked legislators at a briefing to push bills to bring officials in the region more money, regulatory authority and technical expertise.

But Mavretic said local governments must help come up with a solution.

Indian Suit

RALEIGH (AP) — A lawsuit in which Eddie Hatcher, Timothy Jacobs and their supporters accuse state and Robeson County officials of running a campaign of "intimidation and harassment" should be dropped, the state Attorney General's Office told a federal judge.

"The complaint presents no basis for the grant of any relief by this court," lawyers from the Attorney General's Office said in a memorandum supporting the motion to dismiss the suit.

"The plaintiffs lack standing, ... and, specifically, the court should abstain from deciding many of the plaintiffs' claims."

The suit, filed in January, was brought under a federal civil rights statute that permits suits by those whose federal constitutional rights have been violated by state or local officials.

Retirement Suit

GREENSBORO (AP) — Two Atlanta men have won a $15.1 million court judgment against a Georgia company that develops retirement communities, including one project that was never started in Greensboro.

Peter B. Reeves and Donald A. Carver, former employees of Covenant Development Co., received the award from a Fulton County jury after the two filed a breach of contract suit against Covenant.

Covenant's assets have been sold to partly satisfy claims of the U.S. Internal Revenue Service, which says the company didn't pay employee taxes.

More than 70 people, many of them retired business people and doctors from the Greensboro area, paid more than $400,000 in deposits to reserve condominiums at Carolina Glen. They signed agreements in which they agreed to refund the deposits upon 30 days notice. When people started demanding refunds, Covenant refused to return the money.

Guilty Plea

RALEIGH (AP) — One of two teen-agers charged with repeatedly shooting a penned dog with "Ninja" blow darts in February pleaded guilty to a charge of cruelty to animals and was sentenced to 90 days in the Wake County jail.

Todd J. Dove, 18, of Raleigh was sentenced Tuesday to one year in jail with all but 90 days suspended. Wake District Court Judge Donald W. Overby gave Dove credit for the month he had been in jail awaiting trial and put him on two years supervised probation.

Dove's co-defendant and former apartment-mate, Robert Kenneth Brown, 18, is scheduled to appear in court April 19.

Jenkins Trial

CONCORD, N.C. (AP) — Former state Sen. Cecil Jenkins was acquitted Tuesday of conspiracy to commit perjury in connection with plotting false testimony to help a client beat a driving-while-impaired charge.

"I have paid a tremendous price for something I did not do," Jenkins said.

"I was a victim of circumstances beyond my control," he said. "I honor my profession and would never in my wildest dreams do anything to cause embarrassment to the judicial system."

A Cabarrus County Superior Court jury found Jenkins innocent after deliberating for 2½ hours.

Jenkins, 47, and three other Cabarrus residents — Gene Isenhour, 45, Melvin Greene, 61, and Alesia Beck, 26 — were charged Dec. 7, 1987, with plotting false testimony that let Isenhour beat a DWI charge in March 1987. Jenkins was Isenhour's lawyer; Greene and Ms. Beck worked for Isenhour's Terminal Trucking Co. in Concord.

Jury Convicts Woman In Baby Case

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

HIGH POINT — The mother of a baby who was snatched from the hospital when he was 2-days-old said she was relieved that the woman charged in the abduction was found guilty.

"It's going to take a long time to get back to normal," said Renee McClure, 28, of Silver Valley in Davidson County.

Mrs. McClure's son, Jason, was snatched June 20 from her room at High Point Regional Hospital.

Brenda Joyce Nobles was convicted Tuesday in the abduction. She is scheduled to be sentenced today.

Ms. Nobles, who had pleaded innocent by reason of insanity, showed no emotion as the clerk read the verdict at 5:45 p.m.

The Guilford Superior Court jury deliberated about 3½ hours before finding Ms. Nobles guilty of felony child abduction.

Judge Judson DeRamus Jr. of Winston-Salem ordered Ms. Nobles to be held in the Guilford County Jail until she is sentenced at 9:30 a.m. today. She had been free on bond pending her trial.

"Obviously we are going to urge the judge, in view of her severe mental illness, to consider a probationary sentence rather than prison," said Guilford Public Defender Wally Harrelson, who represented Nobles.

Harrelson said he also would recommend as part of the sentence that Ms. Nobles receive psychiatric treatment.

Felony child abduction carries a maximum sentence of 15 years in prison. But she likely will face a sentence of 4½ years or less because there apparently are no aggravating factors that would allow the judge to impose a stiffer sentence.

Ruling May Block Tax Refunds For Retirees Living In N.C.

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — Federal retirees in North Carolina may not be able to win $100 million in tax rebates despite a recent U.S. Supreme Court ruling that struck down differing treatment of government pensions.

While the court ruled last week that states such as North Carolina can't tax federal pensions and exempt state and local government pensions, a previous state Supreme Court ruling said unconstitutional taxes paid voluntarily are not refundable.

The 1977 state court ruling would control the issue in North Carolina because the high court left it to individual state courts to remedy tax inequities on government pensions.

Lawyers with the N.C. Senate Finance Committee and state attorney general's office are trying to determine if the 1977 precedent is applicable to the federal pensions.

"Under state law, I think it's an open question as to whether they can get a refund," said George Boylan, special deputy attorney general. "We haven't decided that. But that's on the books. That's a 12-year-old court case in this state."

Martha Harris, a lawyer with the Senate Finance Committee, said if the state court ruling applies to pensions, it would prevent recovery of the taxes through amended tax returns.

"It specifically says that filing an amended return is not a method of getting a refund where the plaintiff has paid the tax without protest," Harris told the Greensboro News & Record.

She said the most federal pensioners could probably regain are 1988 taxes on pensions — if they pay them under protest and request a refund within 30 days of payment.

While lawyers search for answers about the state liability for tax refunds, the legislature still must decide how to address the differing treatment of government pensions for future years.

North Carolina taxes federal pensions after the first $3,000 (that changes to $4,000 for the 1989 tax year), but exempts the pensions of state and local government workers.

Several proposals are being discussed. The most costly way would exempt all federal pensions, reducing annual state revenues by $35 million.

Mortgage Interest Rates Are Highest In 18 Months

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Conventional mortgage interest rates rose in March to their highest level since just before the 1987 stock market crash, the government says.

The Federal Home Loan Bank Board, the regulator of savings institutions, said Tuesday the national average for conventional, single-family loans jumped to 11.36 percent in early March, up from 11.11 percent in early February.

It was the highest rate since early October 1987, when the average hit 11.42 percent just before the stock market crash. Interest rates began falling after the crash as the Federal Reserve Board pumped money into the economy to guard against a recession.

The bank board said rates for the most popular type of one-year adjustable-rate mortgages, those with caps on how high the rate can increase, also rose last month to 9.75 percent, up from 9.6 percent in early February.

It was the highest ARM rate since March 1986, when the average was 9.84 percent, the bank board said.

The Fed for a year now has been tightening credit and pushing interest rates upward in an effort to restrain economic growth to hold down inflation. Those efforts intensified in February after the government reported there were sharp price increases at both the wholesale and retail levels during January.

"The increases in the early March rates reflected the general tightening in credit markets during February," said James Barth, chief economist for the bank board.

The percentage of mortgages closed with adjustable rates declined to 55 percent in early March, down from 57 percent in February, the board reported.

A separate weekly report released Friday by the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corp., known as Freddie Mac, showed interest rates remained high throughout March.

It said fixed-rate home mortgages were averaging 11.19 percent last week, down slightly from a rate of 11.22 percent during the previous week. On one-year adjustable rate mortgages, lenders were asking an average initial rate of 9.31 percent last week, up from 9.3 percent the previous week.

The Freddie Mac averages are lower than the bank board's because they do not include add-on fees, known as points, which are paid by borrowers.

General Motors Tops Fortune List As Economy Keeps Going

By Vivian Marino
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Industrial America enjoyed a record year in profits and sales in 1988 as the economy expanded for the sixth consecutive year. Fortune magazine said in its ranking of the 500 largest U.S. manufacturing companies.

"Any way you cut it, last year was the most prosperous for the 500 since Fortune published the first 500 directory in 1955," Fortune said in its April 24 issue.

The magazine said sales by the Fortune 500 last year topped $2 trillion for the first time, while total profits for the group jumped 27 percent to a record $115 billion.

The Big Three automakers had especially strong revenue, with General Motors Corp. again topping the Fortune 500 and Ford Motor Co. bumping Exxon Corp. from No. 2. Chrysler Corp. jumped to No. 7 from No. 10.

Companies involved in acquisitions also moved higher. Philip Morris Cos. took the No. 10 spot, up from 12th, partly due to its acquisition of Kraft Corp., ranked 31st in 1987. Eastman Kodak Co. jumped to 18th from No. 25 with the acquisition of Sterling Drug Inc., ranked 174th the previous year.

The magazine ranks companies in terms of annual sales. It also publishes a list later in the year of the top 500 U.S. service companies.

The top 10 after GM, Ford and Exxon were: International Business Machines Corp., General Electric Co., Mobil Corp., Chrysler, Texaco Inc., E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., and Philip Morris.

American Telephone & Telegraph Co., ranked eighth in the 1987 listing, was bumped from the 1988 list because most of its revenue was generated from the service sector. ITT Corp., ranked No. 45 in 1987, also fell into that category. The highest-ranking newcomer was Unilever U.S., which is owned by the British-Dutch consumer products giant Unilever and debuted at No. 63.

All companies on the list this year had at least $500 million in sales. The 500th company, Chemed Corp.

of Cincinnati, had sales of $500.6 million.

The magazine said nearly all of the 27 industrial categories contained in its list had double-digit earnings growth in 1988, led by metal companies, which showed a 100 percent jump, boosted by soaring copper prices and the steel industry's successful restructuring.

Chicago Gives Daley His Dad's Old Office

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHICAGO — Richard M. Daley, scion of Chicago's venerated "Boss," reclaimed the mayor's office his father held for 21 years and promised blacks that City Hall's "doors will remain open."

In ending six years of black control of the nation's third-largest city, Daley defeated black Alderman Timothy C. Evans, who ran as an independent and was backed by Jesse Jackson.

Republican Edward Vrdolyak also ran in Tuesday's court-ordered special election to complete the final two years of the late Mayor Harold Washington's second term.

Daley, 46, used overwhelming white support, low black turnout and the shoe leather of precinct organizations whose efficiency recalled the political army controlled by his father, the late Richard J. Daley.

"We were determined to prove to a doubting world that Chicago has grown beyond the politics of division and name calling," Daley told cheering supporters.

"We've run a campaign that will be remembered not for its angry words, but for the hand of friendship we've extended throughout Chicago."

His victory made Chicago by far the largest U.S. city to replace a black incumbent with a white. It also left intact a Democratic hold on the city dating back to 1931 — including six straight terms captured by the elder Daley before he died in office at age 74.

With 2,895 of 2,911 precincts reporting, or 99 percent, unofficial returns showed the three-term Cook County prosecutor with 575,437 votes, or 56 percent, to Evans' 417,315 votes, or 40 percent.

The 51-year-old Vrdolyak had 36,349 votes, or 4 percent.

Daley overcame his unsuccessful mayoral run in 1983 and Jackson's formidable opposition. It also left in doubt the future of the black political movement that made Washington the city's first black mayor in 1983 and four years later, the city's first mayor since the elder Daley to win re-election.

"The late Mayor Washington opened city government to many citizens who felt excluded and ignored. As long as I am mayor, those doors will remain open to all citizens," Daley said.

The 45-year-old Evans conceded, but not without a pointed question for Daley, whose inauguration date has not been set.

Kiernan Transfer

FAYETTEVILLE (AP) — Lt. Col. David R. Kiernan, chief of public affairs for Fort Bragg and 18th Airborne Corps since 1985, will become Army chief of leadership support and media strategy in Washington, D.C., in June.

Kiernan, 46, was formerly a public affairs officer at Fort Jackson, S.C., and Fort Wainwright, Alaska.

"I have contacted Richard M. Daley and I have congratulated him on his win, and now, what about us?" Evans told a cheering crowd at a downtown hotel.

But Evans also promised his cooperation.

"I certainly don't expect to be an obstructionist at all," said Evans, who ran on the Harold Washington Party ticket. "I'm going to be as cooperative as I can ... (but) I would assume reasonable men would differ from time to time."

Daley ran up margins of better than 150-to-1 in two wards on the city's predominantly white Southwest Side and 75-to-1 on the Northwest Side. He also beat Evans handily among liberal voters along the lakefront and Hispanics — two groups that broadened Washington's coalition and handed him a dependable voting bloc in the City Council.

Daley had the support of all three voter blocs in winning the February Democratic primary against Mayor Eugene Sawyer, a black alderman selected by fellow City Council members a week after Washington died in November 1987.

Evans, who skipped the primary to give Sawyer a "clean shot" at Daley, failed to energize black voters any more than Sawyer had — a fact most political commentators attributed to the feud between the two men to succeed Washington.

Even two-time Democratic presidential contender Jackson, who first backed Sawyer and then incurred the wrath of some party officials by supporting Evans, was unable to mend the split.

Jackson reacted to Daley's victory with a call for unity among blacks. "It's true now, neither (faction) can win without each other," he said.

Many people charged Evans and his allies with sabotaging Sawyer's bid and that apparently came back to haunt him.

"We have to blame ourselves," said Lu Palmer, a black activist and popular radio commentator. "After Harold Washington's death, black people spent 14, 15 months fighting each other."

Mindful of how the war of succession among white politicians following the elder Daley's 1976 death paved the way for Washington, Palmer predicted, "We'll have a hard time getting that seat back."

Lawmakers Say IRS Needs More Money To Do Its Job

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The Internal Revenue Service, which collects $100 for every 54 cents it spends, is having trouble winning a bigger budget and some members in Congress want to know why.

President Bush's budget would give the agency $5.5 billion, an increase of less than $300 million from this year — even though the agency is facing a record amount of uncollected taxes and is auditing barely half as many returns as 10 years ago. The IRS asked for $1 billion more than the president proposed.

"We question whether the administration has properly reflected what IRS will need to assure adequate funding of its ongoing activities in fiscal year 1990," which begins next Oct. 1, said Jennie Stathis of the General Accounting Office.

Some members of the House Ways and Means oversight subcommittee were more blunt at a hearing Tuesday. "The administration's proposed 5.5 percent budget increase just seems inadequate to me," complained Rep. J.J. Pickle, D-Texas, the chairman.

"This budget is a real friend of the deadbeats," said Rep. Byron Dorgan, D-N.D. "The folks who don't meet their tax obligations are going to experience a diminished threat" because there will be fewer auditors and collectors of delinquent taxes, he said.

Michael J. Murphy, the IRS acting commissioner, said the agency is dealing with its parent, the Treasury Department, and the White House Office of Management and Budget to determine if the budget can be increased. For the moment, he said, "I feel the 1990 budget does step us forward in tax administration."

OMB, which declined to send a representative to the hearing, had no comment on the IRS budget. However, OMB has taken the position that most federal departments must share the burden of cutting the federal deficit.

Subcommittee members and Robert M. Tobias, president of the National Treasury Employees Union, which represents most IRS workers, said IRS is different because each dollar it spends produces almost $200 of revenue.

The IRS already is being squeezed in the current budget year, operating with $360 million less than it says is needed. As a result, travel, training, transfers and purchases of computers and supplies are being cut.

Although the IRS has vowed that the crunch will not result in reduced taxpayer services or slower processing of tax returns, the employees' union contends reduced enforcement has cost the government $1 billion in six months and could lose another $1 billion by October.

Murphy acknowledged that there is no money in the new IRS budget to implement three new laws: a catchall package that includes a "bill of rights" for taxpayers involved in disputes with the IRS; the tax that finances catastrophic-illness coverage for older Americans, and the anti-drug law. GAO, an arm of Congress, said the IRS budget for next year is suspect because it fails to include some costs, including the anti-drug law and the taxpayer bill of rights, while anticipating questionable savings. The latter was a reference to OMB projections that the IRS can save a considerable amount of money by having private contractors, rather than federal workers, do certain jobs.

This year's squeeze came because the IRS had to cut other services to finance a mandated 4.1 percent increase in employee pay, higher postal rates and a rise in premiums for workers' health insurance and pensions.

U.S. Birth Rate Climbs As Deaths Hit All-Time High

By Randolph E. Schmid
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The number of babies being born in the United States is bounding back from the low levels of recent years, according to a new report that shows the increase occurring despite a decline in the number of women in the prime childbearing ages.

Births totaled 3.9 million last year, up 2 percent from the year before and the most in this country since 1964, the National Center for Health Statistics reported Tuesday.

At the same time, the Center said, the nation set an all-time record for the number of deaths in a year, marriages declined slightly and the number of divorces increased.

The statistical center, a division of the Department of Health and Human Services, said the 1988 birth rate was 15.9 per 1,000 people, up from 15.7 a year earlier.

"Within the childbearing ages the number of women 15-29 declined while the number of women 30-44 increased," reported the Center. It noted that the ages 20 to 29 have traditionally been the prime years for American women to have children.

Thus, an increase in the overall number of births at the same time the most productive segment of the population is shrinking indicates a shift in the timing of births, a phenomenon population experts have been expecting in recent years.

Martin O'Connell, a fertility researcher at the Census Bureau, commented that increasing births among women in their 30s indicates an adjustment pattern in the life cycle of women.

The number of women in the 30 to 44 age group is increasing simply because so many were born during the post World War II Baby Boom, O'Connell explained in a telephone interview.

But the ratio of births between the younger and older women is shifting, he said. That compensates for the declining number of younger women.

Women in their 20s currently are averaging about 110 births per 1,000 women annually, compared with about 70 for women in their 30s, he said. Twenty years ago, he said, the ratio was more than 2-1 in favor of the younger group.

Age-specific birth rates for 1988 were not yet available. But federal reports show that in 1970 the rates were 167.8 per 1,000 women aged 20 to 24 and 145.1 for those aged 25 to 29. Women aged 30 to 34 had a rate of 73.3 but by the ages of 35 to 39 it fell to 31.7.

By 1980 the rate for women aged 20 to 24 was down to 115.1 and it was 112.9 for those 25 to 29, a significant decline over the years as women postponed marriage and childbearing in favor of higher educations and beginning careers, O'Connell explained.

For those aged 30 to 34 the rate was down also, falling to 61.9, while women aged 35 to 39 were having 19.8 babies per 1,000.

Since 1980, the younger women have continued to see a decline, with the rate falling to 108.2 for those under 25 and 109.2 at 25 to 29 by 1986, the most recent year for which complete statistics were available.

But between 1980 and 1986 the rates rebounded for the older group, a situation that appears to be continuing. The 1986 rates were 69.3 for women aged 30 to 34 and 24.3 at ages 35 to 39.

This delay is from a combination of factors, O'Connell said, including delays in marriage that are resulting in a shift in the timing of childbearing for women.

The delay allows them to become more established in a career and potentially financially more secure before having children, researchers pointed out at the meeting of the Population Association of America last week.

This allows women to decide to have children sooner after marriage than they might if wed while younger and also gives them a sense of security in case the marriage should fail, researchers said.

Deaths in 1988 totaled 2.2 million, a record representing an increase of 44,000 from the year before. The rising population and its increasing average age has led to record numbers of deaths in most recent years.

Computer whiz Bruce Johnson's computer asks elderly citizens living alone, 'Are You OK?'

Computer Can Make Check On Elderly Who Live Alone

By Tony Kennedy
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

COON RAPIDS, Minn. — A self-taught computer wizard is attracting the attention of police from around the nation and Scotland Yard for a computer dialing program that checks on elderly people who live alone.

"Good morning!" the recorded message announces. "Are you O.K.?"

If the recipient of the call utters a response, the computer assumes the answer is yes and moves on to the next person. If there's no answer or the telephone is busy, the computer repeats the call.

But if there's no answer a second or third time, the computer designed by Bruce Johnson sounds an alert to law enforcement officials who dispatch a squad car to see if anyone is in danger.

"It's a good deal all the way through," said Clyde Ritter, 73, of rural Osage, Iowa. "They say it saved my life."

Ritter had gone into a diabetic coma one morning in August at his home five miles northwest of Osage.

The town's "Are You O.K.?" computer at police headquarters alerted authorities that Ritter failed to answer a second call, and a deputy sheriff was sent to the home. He found Ritter comatose and summoned an ambulance.

"I guess I credit the system for saving at least one life," said Osage Police Officer Michael DeKruif. "We've had tremendous success with it."

Besides Ritter's rescue, the system has alerted Osage police to an elderly man whose hands were caught in a window — trapping him inside his own home — and to three elderly people who had fallen in their homes and needed police to help them.

"I haven't seen anything like it," said Retha Jefferson, a police department desk officer in Belhaven, N.C. "It's just that officers respond to calls all the time of neighbors not seeing their neighbors for two or three days and then it's too late."

Jefferson, who manually calls about 45 elderly people each day to check on them, said Belhaven is raising $7,000 to buy a system.

The 41-year-old Johnson said he developed the program about a year ago for Osage "more or less as a public service" while he was living in nearby Austin, Minn. Johnson had video stores in Austin and Osage and was considered a computer guru by friends.

Members of the police department had heard of a computer dialing system in Carthage, Mo., and they wanted Johnson to improve on it.

"I foolishly told the city, 'I'll write it for you,'" Johnson said. "It took me 14 months."

Thanks to publicity in law enforcement journals, the project has blossomed into a full-time business for Johnson, a former Army and National Guard officer.

Only Osage, Charles City, Iowa, and Sutherland, Ore., are on line with the system, but inquiries and purchase orders have been pouring in from all over.

"We had a call from Scotland Yard on it," said Robert O'Keefe, the only other officer in Johnson's home-based company, Northland Innovations.

"The whole thing has caught me off guard," Johnson said. "Maybe I'm achieving the American dream by accident, but that's OK."

Johnson, a two-time University of Minnesota dropout who has lived in Brazil, Germany and the Bronx, started to teach himself about computers in 1982 when he was bedridden for six months with a back injury.

He said "Are You O.K.?" programs are flexible and easy to operate. The service is free to the residents where a system is based.

Participation is voluntary, but police departments emphasize the importance of avoiding false alarms. Participants are asked to be in their homes and off the telephone at the same time each day to answer the call. They are required to report in advance when they will not be home so the information can be stored in the computer in time to avert a call.

"My goal for 'Are You O.K.?' is to see one in every city in the U.S.," Johnson said.

D.C. Mayor Asks Funds For Crime

LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — Under heightened congressional pressure, Washington Mayor Marion Barry asked the federal government Tuesday for $102 million to expand police, courts, prison space and drug treatment, but did not propose emergency measures to control the capital's soaring rate of drug-related violence.

Saying that "there are no quick fixes, no magical solutions," Barry argued that even the 700 additional police he requested would not halt the rash of largely drug-related killings — 129 so far this year, up from 84 during the same period last year.

"These killings will continue for some time, unfortunately, until we take away the cause," the mayor told the Senate Appropriations subcommittee for the District of Columbia.

The mayor made only one request in the area of "emergency assistance" — for 1,500 Federal Bureau of Prison bed spaces, at a cost of $27,400,000, to ease overcrowding. The problem has forced the district to ship hundreds of prisoners out of town and, police say, is hampering pretrial detention and effective punishment.

The remaining proposals, which would raise the direct federal payment to the district by about 20 percent, addressed such long-term needs as improved police equipment, better public housing security, added court personnel and public defenders, and expanded drug treatment and school programs.

The proposals largely failed to address demands from members of Congress, including some voiced by a number of senators Tuesday, for major action soon to combat drug-related crime — the aim of a plan that drug war czar William J. Bennett is expected to announce within a week.

"Right now this city is hemorrhaging and there has to be an emergency operation," Sen. Arlen Specter, R-Pa., said at the hearing.

Georgia Democrat Wyche Fowler urged the mayor to look beyond an "incremental approach" and to "pan for it, ask for it as if it were Dunkirk."

Bennett's office, which received the mayor's proposal only a day before it was released, had no immediate comment other than to agree to the need for and cost of added prison space.

Bridge Collapse Claims 8th Victim

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

COVINGTON, Tenn. — The eighth victim of a bridge collapse was pulled from the rain-swollen Hatchie River after a specially trained dog led searchers to a submerged station wagon.

Authorities said they don't believe anyone else died but would continue to search the waters where an 84-foot section of the two-lane bridge collapsed Saturday night. Five vehicles, including a tractor-trailer rig, toppled into the river.

"We have not had anymore missing person reports that have been confirmed so we feel like that's all, but we want to be sure," said Fire Chief Jerry Craig.

Transportation Secretary Samuel Skinner was to inspect the bridge today, along with Sen. Jim Sasser, D-Tenn., and Rep. John Tanner, D-Tenn.

The cause of the bridge collapse has not been determined, but officials said high water for the past couple of months may have undercut one of the bridge supports. The 55-year-old bridge carries the northbound lanes of U.S. Highway 51 over the Hatchie River, about 50 miles north of Memphis.

Seven bodies were recovered Saturday and Sunday, but the eighth was not found until Tuesday when divers located the station wagon partly buried in the riverbank under 15 feet of water. The spot had been picked out on Monday by a dog trained to smell bodies buried in rubble or under water.

The latest victim was identified as Adrian Jones, 26, of nearby Ripley. He was known to have been driving on the highway about the time of the collapse, and his relatives had kept a riverside vigil through much of the search.

After the station wagon was hauled out, workers used a crane to begin removing huge chunks of concrete lying on the other vehicles. Three 28-foot sections of highway weighing 75 to 100 tons each plunged into the river when the bridge gave way.

The bridge passed a state inspection in 1987. A companion two-lane southbound bridge was closed and inspected after the collapse, and authorities said it would probably reopen as a two-way bridge Thursday.

Teen-Ager's Death Changes City's Views About Alcohol

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ALAMOS, N.M. — When Jennifer Fleming died after a car crash early on New Year's Day 1988, it changed the way Los Alamos looked at alcohol.

"It's totally just not cool to drink and drive anymore," said Los Alamos County youth coordinator Peggy Vigil. Students "see those who drink and drive as the enemy. They saw public outrage, perhaps you could say community anger."

Jennifer, 16, a Los Alamos High School junior, was fatally injured while driving around to help sober up a friend who'd been drinking. Jennifer had spent the evening at an alcohol-free dance she'd helped organize.

"I didn't want to go home at the time because I was afraid my parents would find out," said Laura Root, who was with Jennifer's and two friends when a pickup swerved to avoid a stopped car and crushed Jennifer's car.

"Before the accident, I was on a crash course," Laura said. "I was doing things. I was lying to my parents. I was totally out of control. I guess for me it took one of my best friends dying to realize I couldn't live that way any more. It wasn't worth it. It just wasn't worth it."

She lost 12 teeth, suffered a bruised spinal cord and a crushed knee that had metal from the wreckage embedded in it. "They're still reconstructing my mouth. Sometime this summer they should be done."

Jeff Bussolini permanently lost all but peripheral vision in his left eye and suffered a fractured hip, arm and 20 to 30 fractures in his face.

Stephanie Van Dyck had fractures of the foot, arm, ribs, hand and face and a punctured lung. She still feels pain more than a year later. After they got out of the hospital, Jeff, Stephanie and Laura helped found a chapter of Students Against Driving Drunk. The 20-member chapter held an alcohol-free St. Patrick's Day dance this year.

Ms. Vigil said she has seen a change in "how the kids perceive and treat their peers who drink and drive." There has been a 42 percent decrease in arrests for driving while intoxicated since 1986, she said.

The biggest decline came after the crash, said Police Chief Alan Kirk. "The last year in Los Alamos there's been a tremendous publicity campaign by various organizations in the community to bring attention to the drunk driving problem. The County Council passed several laws the past year which also deal with drunk driving violations."

These include extending a ban on open beverage containers to the passenger, not just the driver; a mandatory 30 days in jail for third-time offenders; 15 days for driving on a DWI-revoked license; and two days if breath alcohol is 0.15 percent or higher. The legal limit for DWI remains 0.10.

Police also have intensified roadblocks and have been speaking at schools and civic organizations, Kirk said.

Bomb Report

CHARLOTTE (AP) — A Charlotte man was arrested Tuesday after being indicted on one count of making a false bomb report in February, according to the FBI.

Kevin Kedrick Gorham, 35, was indicted with telephoning a false report that a plastic explosive was in a bag at Charlotte-Douglas International Airport, said Paul Daly, Special FBI Agent in charge of North Carolina operations. Gorham was arrested after a joint investigation by the FBI and the Charlotte Police Department.

Gorham, a Piedmont Airlines employee, is also charged with threatening the life of Edwin Colodny, the chief executive officer of USAir.

Expansion Planned

Beaufort County board of Commissioners, said this morning that, "any time we can get industrial expansion in Beaufort County and Washington, that's what we want to do. Anything they do to expand is in our best interest."

Buck noted that Hamilton Beach, which has had a plant in Washington for "about 20 years — time gets by in a hurry, they've been here a good length of time," moved its corporate offices to Washington "a year or so ago."

Lewis, the county's industrial development director, said "we're tickled to death" over Hamilton Beach's plans. "It's going to make us stronger," he said.

"Anything that happens that improved our industrial situation, we're glad to have."

Patrick Resigns

WASHINGTON — Federal Communications Commission Chairman Dennis R. Patrick has submitted his resignation to the White House but will remain in his post until a replacement is named, the agency said today.

Patrick's resignation had been widely expected after the Bush administration came into office. The former California attorney had battled frequently with Congress on his deregulatory approach during his two years as head of the commission.

A replacement for Patrick, 37, was not immediately announced. Patrick is expected to make a statement today.

FCC spokeswoman Maureen Peratino said Patrick hand-carried the letter of resignation to the White House on Tuesday. Patrick gave the letter to Chase Undermeyer, who is White House personnel director.

Peratino did not know if there had been an official White House response to Patrick's letter.

Farmville Sets Public Vote

area was closed in 1971. City attorney Chris Burti said the reversion would have been automatic and Van Lewis said he will discuss the matter privately with Owens.

Commissioner Marvin Speight abstained during the voting because he owns property in the area.

A public hearing was set for May 2 on whether to restrict manufactured housing on single lots in RA-20 and in mobile home parks of two or more acres in R-5 districts and to establish, instead, specific residential manufactured housing districts. That was the recommendation of the town's planning board.

Also per a planning board recommendation, a public hearing will be held May 2 on whether to revise the town's subdivision ordinance to allow the issuance of building permits in subdivisions when final plats are approved if completion of improvements are guaranteed through performance guaranties.

The final plat of the second phase of the North Ridge Subdivision on State Road 1200 near Farmville was accepted by the board. The subdivision is being developed by Alex Allen III and David Stowe. A guaranty document was received from Allen and Stowe on $18,870 worth of water and street improvements. Commissioner Oliver Murphrey complimented Allen and Stowe, who were in the audience on the subdivision, saying it is a nice addition to the Farmville area.

The board authorized the advertisement of 1988 delinquent taxes beginning April 19. It was pointed out that an ad will be placed in an April 12 edition of the Farmville Enterprise warning citizens that names of those with delinquent taxes will be published April 19.

A $7,000 budget line was added by the commissioners allowing for the hiring of special crews to cut tree limbs broken but not severed during the recent ice storm. Several members of the audience questioned the way tree trimming is done by the town and the board said it will welcome the town Tree Board's input into how trimming can best be done to protect utility lines and not disfigure trees any more than is necessary. They invited the Tree Board to participate in its next workshop session.

A resolution of respect was enacted for recently deceased Farmville resident Fred Carr Moore, a former town commissioner.

Town Administrator Frank Bradham said investigation is being done on the cost of a speaker system for the council chambers-courtroom in the new town hall. Costs seem to range from $3,200 to $3,500, he said.

Bradham said two pickup trucks ordered by the town have arrived. One is to be used by public works; the other by utilities.

Walsh, Sanders Announce Plans For NFL

Steve Walsh

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Four years ago, Bernie Kosar left the University of Miami a year early and took advantage of the NFL rules to land with the team he wanted, the Cleveland Browns.

Steve Walsh, who announced Tuesday he's turning pro, may try to do the same thing, but changes in the rules have made his chances of doing it a lot smaller.

Walsh's announcement came about one-half hour after the NFL granted the petition of another junior, Heisman Trophy winner Barry Sanders, to enter the April 23-24 draft. Sanders, who ran for 39 touchdowns and 2,628 yards and set 24 records in 1988, left Oklahoma State after the school was placed on probation.

Sanders' fate is relatively clear — he probably will be among the top half-dozen players taken in the regular draft.

But Walsh, a junior who doesn't need permission from the league to be eligible because he plans to graduate this summer, still is weighing his options — he can, if he fails to formally notify the league by next Monday, opt for a supplemental draft in July or September.

He said he hasn't had contact with any NFL teams but replied when asked if he expects to be drafted in the first round, "I would think so."

In fact, there is considerable intrigue surrounding Walsh's decision.

He is ranked with Washington State's Timm Rosenbach — another junior who may go in either the regular or supplemental drafts — one level below UCLA's Troy Aikman among quarterbacks.

Aikman was considered a cinch to be taken by the Dallas Cowboys, who choose first, until the team was purchased in February by Jerry Jones. Jones named Walsh's college coach, Jimmy Johnson, to replace Tom Landry.

Johnson reiterated Tuesday through Cowboys' spokesman Greg Aiello that he will not make a decision on his choice until April 23. He could trade the choice to a team like Kansas City, which picks fourth, or San Diego, which picks eighth, for a combination of picks and players and then take Walsh.

But Johnson was noncommittal Tuesday.

"Steve Walsh was an outstanding player for us at the University of Miami. There's no question that he's a winner," he said. "I feel he will be a productive player in the NFL ... but we are still in the evaluation process."

Moreover, despite Walsh's denial that he has an agent, one source said Walsh had contact with Marvin Demoff of Los Angeles, who represents such NFL stars as Miami's Dan Marino and Denver's John Elway. The source said the decision on opting for the regular or supplemental drafts would depend on whether Demoff could determine who would likely draft Walsh.

But because of 1985, when Kosar came out knowing that he would be taken by the Browns, who had worked out a deal with last-place Buffalo for the first pick in the supplemental draft, now it's a matter of chance who gets that first pick.

Salaries On Rise

Baseball's Best Making Bundles

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Remember when the top baseball players made $100,000? On the Los Angeles Dodgers today, every player makes at least $100,000.

Winning the World Series brought Dodger Blue a lot of owner Peter O'Malley's green. Los Angeles has the highest payroll in baseball at $852,518, according to an Associated Press study of all major league contracts.

That's a 27 percent increase from the start of last season and double the Dodgers' average from the end of the 1987 season. Orel Hershiser makes $2,766,667, including a prorated share of his signing bonus, and seven other players make $1 million or more. Pitcher Tim Lincecum, the Dodger with the lowest salary, makes $130,000.

Los Angeles was not the only team to have a skyrocketing payroll this year. According to the AP study, the average salary in the major leagues rose 14.6 percent from the start of last season, from $447,291 to $512,804. Nearly one in six players are making $1 million or more this year.

There are 107 players making $1 million or more, including 18 at or above the $2 million level.

The New York Mets, who lost to the Dodgers in last fall's National League playoffs, have the second-highest average, $778,308. The American League East champion Boston Red Sox are third at $754,583 and the New York Yankees fourth at $708,247. Boston's payroll rose 37 percent to $754,583.

Pittsburgh, which fired general manager Syd Thrift after last season because of worries about the payroll, had the highest percentage increase of any team, 95 percent, from $237,000 to $461,288.

Texas, which signed free agent pitcher Nolan Ryan and re-signed shortstop Scott Fletcher to large contracts, climbed 89 percent, from $215,000 to $407,365.

San Diego, which signed free-agent pitcher Bruce Hurst over the winter and traded for first baseman Jack Clark, increased 42 percent, from $378,000 to $537,801.

At the opposite end, the Baltimore Orioles' payroll matched their record and fell to the bottom, decreasing by 47 percent to $275,316, the least of any team. Baltimore averaged $518,000 on opening day last year, but since have gotten rid of high-priced players, including Eddie Murray, Fred Lynn, Scott McGregor, Mike Boddicker, Terry Kennedy, Tom Niedenfuer and Don Asse

Conley Nips Chargers, 2-1

Travis Clemmons' Solo Home Run Secures Win

By Tim Chandler
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

HOLLYWOOD — For the third time this season D.H. Conley and Ayden-Grifton locked up in a defensive struggle Tuesday in high school baseball action, and for the third time it was Conley that came out with the win.

The Vikings improved to 4-2 on the year with a 2-1 win over the 1-5 Chargers.

Travis Clemmons provided the winning margin for Conley in the pitcher's duel with a fourth inning home run over the centerfield fence.

"The home run was very big for us," Conley coach Allan Wilson said. "This was another game where we didn't hit the ball, we haven't scored over four runs in a game this year. We haven't hit well except for the Rose game (a 5-4 loss)."

Sophomore Viking pitcher Hal Conger went the distance on the mound to get the win, giving up five hits, while striking out seven and walking two.

"Our record is misleading in a way," Ayden-Grifton coach Chris Ross said. "Three of our losses have been to Conley and in those three games we've faced probably as good of pitching as we will see all year.

"We open play in the (Eastern Plains) conference Friday against South Lenoir and although they have more wins than we do, I'll guarantee that they haven't seen the pitching that we have," Ross said. "We'll have to see what happens, whether getting the wins helps them or us facing good pitching early on works to our advantage."

The Chargers got a complete game pitching from Jay Tripp, who gave up five hits and struck out four, while not issuing a base on balls.

"Despite all the adversity we're having, we're getting good pitching," Ross said. "In the three games we've lost to Conley, they've scored only eight runs (the Vikings won the first meeting 2-1 and the second game 4-1). We just don't have any offensive prowess."

Ayden-Grifton seemed poised for a good offensive game early on as shortstop John Tyndall led off the game with a bloop single to right. After moving to second on a sacrifice bunt by Johnnie Moore and to third on a single by Tripp, Tyndall brought home the Chargers' only run on a sacrifice fly by Ronnell Peterson.

But after that run, the Chargers wouldn't get a runner past second base the rest of the game. In fact, only four runners made it past first base in the final six innings.

"We're still struggling offensively," Ross said. "There are two ways to look at it. We're either going to bust loose when we begin play in the conference and start facing pitching that isn't as good as what Conley has, or we're going to continue struggling at the plate."

"Our guys have a lot of heart, but there mind is just not there when they're hitting," Ross said.

The Vikings managed to even the game at 1-1 in the bottom of the third inning.

Gray Mills then brought the run in with an RBI single to center.

"It's tough to play a team three different times and beat them every time," Wilson said. "We threw three different pitchers against them in the games (Conger, Clemmons and Brian Bullock) and all three did well."

"I feel like going into (Coastal 3-A) conference play, we've got good pitching," Wilson said. "It's going to keep us in a lot of games and hopefully we can peck away and get the

Pirates Sweep Twinbill From Baptist, Go To 22-2

By Woody Peele
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

East Carolina swept a doubleheader from Baptist College Tuesday afternoon to run its record to 22-2, the best start ever for a Pirate baseball team.

ECU took the opening game, 5-2, then came back with a 9-4 victory in the nightcap.

"East Carolina has a very good hitting club. I can certainly see why they're 22-2," Baptist coach Jamie Futrell said.

And Futrell, in his first year with the Buccaneers, is very familiar with the Pirate program. He once lived in Pitt County and played baseball as a freshman and sophomore at Farmville Central before his family moved on to Columbia,

S.C. At 24, he is the youngest Division I coach in the country.

"We can play better in the field than we did today. But I did think we hit the ball better than we have being," Futrell continued.

The Buccaneers picked up 15 hits on the day, seven in the first game and eight in the second. But — they didn't bunch them and only two of them were for extra bases, a one-run double and a solo home run.

The Pirates, meanwhile, picked up just four hits in the first game, but took advantage of six walks, an error, a couple of wild pitches and a sacrifice fly.

In the second game, the Pirates added eight hits, including two doubles and two home runs.

They also got some timely pitching in the opening game from Brian Berkman, who went the distance for the second time this year.

"I felt pretty good today," Berkman said. "I haven't gotten much work so far this year, but I've patiently waited and I think I answered the bell when my name was called. I threw well in spurts and I felt good in the early innings but I did get tired toward the end."

John Adams continued to have a hot bat for the Pirates after breaking out of an 0 for 21 slump on Saturday in the second game against George Mason. Since then, he's gone seven for nine, scored eight runs, driven in five, hit a double and two home runs, including his third round-tripper of the season Tuesday.

"I've been concentrating more on the pitches," Adams said, "and keeping my elbow still. I'm seeing

Lyle Set To Defend Masters Title

Professional Golf's Showcase Ready To Open Play

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

AUGUSTA, Ga. — Sandy Lyle of Scotland is rested and loose as he prepares to defend his Masters golf championship. But he does have one concern.

"I just don't want to make a fool of myself shooting 84 the first day," Lyle said Tuesday.

"I'm not nervous. I don't think I'm quite as sharp with the game as I was last year, but I'm not far off it. I've had two weeks rest and a chance to work on my game."

Lyle will try to become only the second player to repeat as champion when the 53rd Masters gets underway Thursday with an international field of 86 players, including five amateurs.

Jack Nicklaus included successive titles in 1965 and 1966 among his record six Masters championships.

"It just means you've got everything to do again," Lyle said of his role as the defending champion.

No one has established himself as a clear-cut favorite to claim the green coat that goes to the player who carves out the best score for 72 holes on the storied Augusta National Golf Club course, a 6,905-yard, par-72 layout.

British oddsmakers have made Seve Ballesteros of Spain, a two-time champion, and Greg Norman of Australia, one of the top players in the world who hasn't won at Augusta, 8-1 favorites.

U.S. Open champion Curtis Strange, the first player to win $1 million in a season on the PGA Tour, doing it last year, was 12-1, and Lyle and Mark Calcavecchia, last year's runner-up, were 14-1.

Strange, the tour's leading money winner in three of the last four years, is winless this season. He did put together three consecutive third-place finishes in Florida this winter.

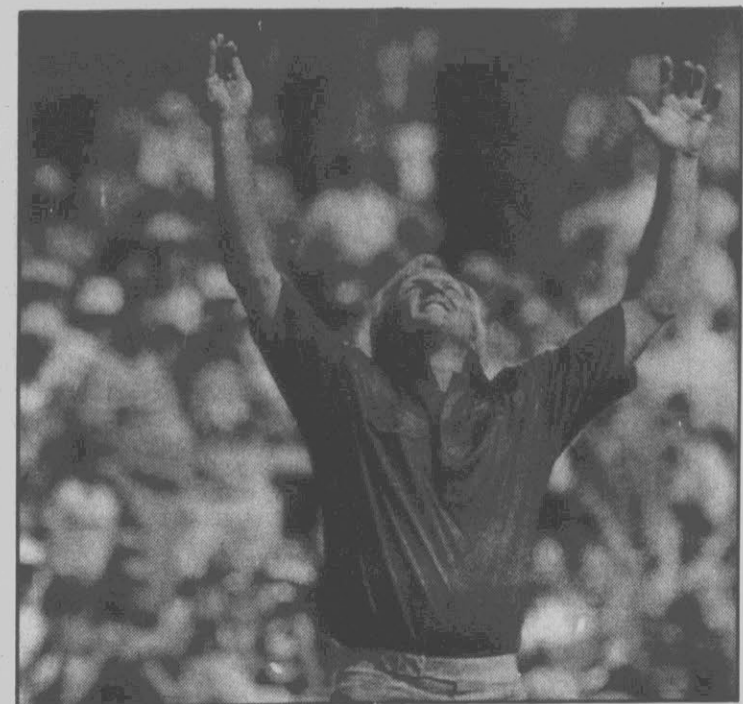

Ballesteros finished third at Houston last week, only his fourth event in the United States this season.

Norman, apparently recovered from the wrist injury that sidelined him for two months last year, tied for second two weeks ago at New Orleans and tied for fourth in the Players Championship, an event won by Kite.

Kite, who also won at Bay Hill the week before the Players, has a history of playing well at the Masters. He has finished second twice and has been fifth or better nine times in his previous 16 Masters.

"I have no idea what it takes to win," Kite said. "I know you have to play well and get some breaks. I feel like I'm playing well. I'm on a golf course I like. Whether that translates into a win or not, I have no idea."

Calcavecchia won four events at Phoenix and Los Angeles earlier in the season and had an opportunity to win two other events. But he has missed the cut in three of his last five outings.

Chicago Warms Up For Pistons

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHICAGO — Michael Jordan says the Detroit Pistons may be in for a big surprise Thursday when they face the Chicago Bulls in the first of two back-to-back games.

The Bulls, who have lost four straight to the Central Division-leading Pistons this season, tuned up Tuesday night with a 121-101 triumph over the Charlotte Hornets.

Jordan turned in his sixth consecutive triple double — with 33 points, 10 rebounds and 12 assists. He now has 10 for the season.

But when the Bulls take the court Thursday against the Pistons in Auburn Hills, Mich., they will be shorthanded at the other guard position.

Bulls coach Doug Collins said the Bulls "are so beat up" that the team only has two healthy guards now.

With 10 games remaining in the regular season, the Bulls are now 45-27 and might be hard pressed to reach the 50 wins column as they did last year.

Bullets 104, Nets 96
Bernard King did something he hadn't done in a while.

King's 43 points in Washington's 104-96 victory over New Jersey on Tuesday night were the most he has scored since he played for New York and suffered a knee injury in March, 1985, that sidelined him for 24 months. He scored 19 points in the first quarter, tying the Washington record for points in an opening period.

King had help from Jeff Malone, who scored 29 points in the Bulls' 14th consecutive home victory. King made eight of nine shots in the first half, finishing with 25 points.

Cavaliers 105, Hawks 91
Ron Harper scored 32 points and Cleveland's defense forced four straight turnovers during an 11-0 tie-breaking run midway through the fourth quarter.

John Williams made two free throws to start the spurt, giving the Cavaliers an 84-82 lead with 8:19 left. The Hawks then turned the ball over on their next four possessions, beginning with two straight steals by Craig Ehlo that set up easy fast-break baskets by Harper and Mark Price.

Rockets 90, Pacers 88
Akeem Olatujun scored 26 points and grabbed 12 rebounds and Houston withstood a late rally to beat Indiana for the eighth straight time.

Reggie Miller led Indiana with 27 points and Vern Fleming added 24. But the Pacers went almost eight minutes without a field goal starting late in the third period and carrying into the fourth quarter and fell behind 78-69.

76ers 124, Knicks 113
Ron Anderson scored 15 of his 36 points in less than six minutes of the second quarter, giving Philadelphia the lead for good.

The 76ers, who have won four straight games and six of seven, became the first team to beat the Knicks twice at Madison Square Garden this season. New York is 32-5 at home, but four of the defeats have come in their last seven games.

Spurs 109, Heat 87
Willie Anderson scored 22 points to lead San Antonio in a game between two teams that will miss the playoffs. Alvin Robertson added 20 as Miami lost for the 33rd time in 35 road games.

Nuggets 128, Kings 124
Walter Davis and Alex English scored 22 points each as Denver snapped Sacramento's two-game winning streak and left the Kings as the only NBA team without a three-game streak this season. The Kings have won two games in a row 10 times — six this season — since April 1987 when they last won three straight.

Jazz 95, Mavericks 80
Karl Malone scored 22 points and John Stockton had a basket and three of his 18 assists during a 10-0 run to start the fourth quarter. Utah led 66-61 starting the fourth quarter. Stockton started the spurt when he fed Mike Brown for a basket. Brown scored again on a rebound 30 seconds later. Eric Leckner scored from the corner after a pass from Stockton to end the run and give the Jazz a 76-61 lead.

Lakers 115, SuperSonics 97
A.C. Green scored a career-high 33 points and Magic Johnson had 18 assists as Los Angeles handed Seattle its sixth consecutive setback. The Lakers, who lead the Pacific Division by 3½ games over Phoenix, notched their 50th victory, the 10th consecutive time they have reached that mark.

Celtics 124, Clippers 108
Reggie Lewis scored 27 points and Kevin McHale 21 as Boston snapped a four-game road losing streak. Robert Parish added 19 points for the Celtics, who have won all 10 games against the Clippers since they moved to Los Angeles from San Diego at the start of the 1984-85 season. Los Angeles was led by Benoit Benjamin with 28 points and rookie Gary Grant with 23.

Bucks 124, Warriors 118
Terry Cummings scored 32 points, including a game-clinching basket with nine seconds remaining, as Milwaukee clinched a playoff berth with its 12th straight victory over Golden State.

After Rod Higgins' 3-pointer gave the Warriors a 114-109 lead with 3:12 to play, the Bucks went ahead for good on Jay Humphries' drive that made it 116-114 with 1:45 left.

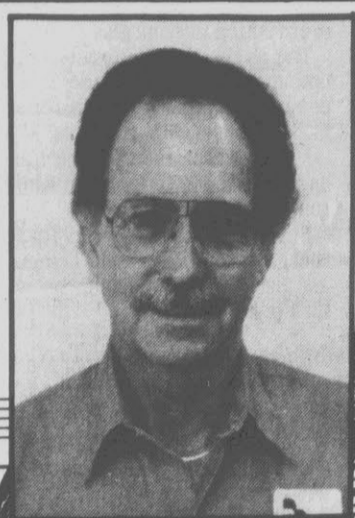

Trail Blazers 118, Pistons 100
Clyde Drexler had 25 points, 13 rebounds and 10 assists as Portland snapped Detroit's eight-game winning streak and left the Pistons just one game ahead of Cleveland in the Central Division.

Drexler, who got his fourth triple-double of the season, had 17 points in the second half and 10 in the fourth quarter.

Salaries...

The figures are based on an AP study of the contracts of 679 players who are on major league rosters or the disabled list. The figures were obtained from numerous player and management sources and include prorated shares of signing bonuses.

Typically, many players increase their income by earning incentive bonuses. However, several players with large salaries are released during most seasons and the average salary at the end of the year usually decreases by about 3 percent. Last year's end-of-season average was about $438,729, according to the Major League Baseball Players Association. The owners said the average was about $431,000.

Forty-five players are making the minimum salary, which rose to $68,000 this year from $62,500.

NFL...

Under the rule in effect for the past three years, it is a weighted lottery — the team with the worst record gets 28 chances for the first choice, the team with the second-worst 27, down to one chance for the Super Bowl winner.

Moreover, some scouts prefer Rosenbach to Walsh if both go in a supplemental draft, making Walsh's fate even more a matter of random chance.

Sanders has two agents, Lamont Smith of Denver and David Ware of Atlanta.

Smith first said Tuesday he would decide on which draft to enter depending on where the best contract potential lay. However, informed that his letter to the league office required that Sanders be included in the regular draft, Smith said:

"That's fine with us, as long as he's in."

Sanders will be one of the first true juniors ever drafted — he has spent three years at Oklahoma State.

Others, like Craig Heyward of Pitt and Kris Carter of Ohio State were four-year juniors allowed in because of contact with agents. Others, like Koser and Brian Bosworth, were in the Walsh category — they graduated early.

NFL spokesman Joe Browne said the league had granted Sanders' request to enter the draft because his school, Oklahoma State, is on NCAA probation and because Coach Pat Jones and athletic director Myron Roderick support him. Sanders had threatened to go to court if he wasn't admitted, something that has prompted the NFL to grant the past applications of underclassmen.

"They've never blocked anybody before, so I wouldn't think they would block anybody this time," Jones said.

John Leads Yankees To Win Over Twins

By Jim Donaghy
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The season opener for six teams in the American League turned out to be old timers' day, too.

There were three games in the AL on Tuesday, and they were won by 45-year-old Tommy John, 41-year-old Charlie Hough and 39-year-old Jerry Reuss. Reuss won't have to wait long to join the over-40 club; he celebrates his 40th birthday on June 19.

Reuss' batterymate against California, 41-year-old Carlton Fisk, chipped in with a home run and a single as the two became the oldest batter ever to team up for an opening day game in the majors.

John allowed two runs in seven innings and got out of two bases-loaded jams as the Yankees beat the Twins 4-2.

John tied a major league record when he opened his 26th major league season. Deacon McGuire also played for 26 seasons (1884-1912). It was also John's 287th career victory and moved him past Robin Roberts into 20th place on the all-time list.

Roberto Kelly went 4-for-4 for the Yankees with a homer and two stolen bases.

Kelly drove in the tying run and scored the winner in the fifth off Viola. In the ninth, Kelly homered off Juan Berenguer to make it 4-2.

Rangers 4, Tigers 0
Hough struck out five and walked two en route to his 11th career shutout and Scott Fletcher drove in three runs for Texas.

"I had a rough time out there tonight, feel-wise. I didn't feel comfortable," Hough said of his knuckler. "I threw the good pitches when I had to."

The last time the Tigers were shut out on opening day was 1975 when Baltimore's Jim Palmer beat them 5-0.

"When we got a four-run lead, I threw the fastball to make them hit it," Hough said. "I stayed with the fastball because I was having a tough time with the knuckler. I caught Detroit looking a lot."

White Sox 9, Angels 2
Reuss held California to two hits and no walks for seven innings as Chicago opened the season with a victory over the Angels in Jeff Torborg's debut as manager. It also was Doug Rader's first game as manager of the Angels.

Reuss allowed only a first-inning homer to Devon White, then retired 17 straight before White doubled with one out in the seventh.

"I was able to pitch the way I wanted," Reuss said. "I was pitching just inside, where they had to swing at it. I also got some good defense behind me."

There was a brief bench-clearing brawl in the top of the ninth inning, but no serious punches were thrown.

The incident started when California reliever Bob McClure hit Ivan Calderon with a pitch following a two-run homer by Harold Baines to make it 8-2.

Calderon charged the mound and wrestled McClure down as both dugouts emptied. Both Calderon and McClure were ejected.

Scott Hurls Astros To 10-3 Victory

By Jim Donaghy
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Mike Scott didn't have his best stuff, but the Houston Astros still got their money's worth.

On Monday, Scott signed a contract extension worth $3.925 million, and on Tuesday night the right-hander opened the season for Houston and beat the Atlanta Braves

10-3 at the Astrodome. He will be paid $1.3 million for this season.

In seven innings, he fanned seven but walked four and allowed solo homers to Tommy Gregg and Ron Gant.

"I've thrown worse and I've thrown better, but the runs early helped," Scott said. "Having the luxury of a good lead was nice."

It was the most runs in the season opener for Houston since 1962, when the Houston Colt 45s beat the Chicago Cubs 11-2.

Glenn Davis was 2-for-4 with two RBIs and three runs scored for the Astros. Billy Hatcher had three hits.

Scott helped his own cause with a two-run single in the third inning to give the Astros a 3-0 lead.

Expos 6, Pirates 5
Tim Raines drew a bases-loaded walk in the ninth inning from reliever Jeff Robinson as Montreal opened the season with a victory over visiting Pittsburgh.

The Expos trailed 5-4 entering the bottom of the ninth. But they tied the game on Damaso Garcia's bases-loaded single with two outs in the ninth. Robinson then walked Raines on a 3-2 pitch to force in the winning run.

Barry Bonds had four hits for Pittsburgh, including a solo homer off Joe Hesketh in the eighth that gave the Pirates a 5-4 lead.

Cubs 5, Phillies 4
Mitch Williams struck out the side in the ninth after loading the bases with none out as Chicago held on at Wrigley Field to beat Philadelphia, spoiling Nick Leyva's managerial debut.

Williams, who came on in the eighth after Mike Schmidt's 543rd homer cut it to 5-4, went 1-2-3 in the ninth. He gave up three straight hits to load the bases in the ninth, but struck out Schmidt, Chris James and Mark Ryal for his first NL save.

Andre Dawson hit his 299th homer for the Cubs. The homer came in the fourth inning off loser Floyd Youmans after Ryne Sandberg had opened the inning with a double.

Giants 8, Padres 3
In his San Diego debut, Bruce Hurst allowed eight runs and 10 hits, including consecutive home runs by Will Clark and Kevin Mitchell in a six-run, San Francisco third inning. The Padres signed Hurst to a three-year contract last December worth $5.25 million.

Kelly Downs held the Padres to six hits and three walks with six strikeouts in making his first start since missing the final six weeks last season with a shoulder injury. He improved his lifetime record against San Diego to 5-0, including two shutouts in 1987.

Pirates Sweep Two From Baptist...

the ball well again, too. In the slump, I was trying to hit it up the middle."

Coach Gary Overton said Adams got off to a hot start in the first games of the season. "But he went into a period when he wasn't seeing the ball very well and he struggled. All he needed was his confidence. He got that bloop hit (against Mason) and has gotten his eye back on the ball and regained his confidence."

Overton said the sweep of Baptist, which fell to 11-11, was not an easy one. "They are one of the better teams in the Big South and their record is not indicative of how well they play. Too, we had to use guys on the mound who we hope will help us down the stretch and in the tournament."

Berckman, in his complete game, scattered four hits with only one of the two runs against him earned. He walked none and struck out three.

Tom Moye, who started the second game, came out after four and two thirds, having allowed five hits and three earned runs. He walked five and fanned two. John White, who came on in relief for the rest of the fifth and the sixth, picked up his fifth victory against no losses.

ECU took the lead with a run in the first. Adams walked as did Tommy Eason. An error on John Gast's grounder allowed Adams to score.

Baptist came back to tie it up in the third. Kevin Futrell, brother of the head coach, reached on an error and Earl Smalley singled him to third. He scored on Dan Wolfe's sacrifice fly.

The Pirates quickly came back with two in the bottom of the frame. Adams opened with a single and Eason walked. Gast singled to drive in Adams. Eason's courtesy runner, David Ritchie — out of the lineup with a slight shoulder separation — moved to third on a fly out and he and Gast pulled a double steal to put the Pirates up, 3-1.

East Carolina added two more in the fifth for a 5-1 lead. Adams beat out a pop just over the third baseman's glove, moving up on an out. He took third on a wild pitch and scored on Calvin Brown's sacrifice fly. Gast then walked, stole second and scored on a double by Steve Godin.

Baptist added a late run in the seventh on a solo homer with two out, hit by Mike Olean.

Adams led the Pirate hitting with two, while Richard Murphy had two for the Buccaneers.

Baptist scored two in the first to take the early lead. Smalley singled and with two away, Steve Ebersole walked and Hardy Ferguson singled in Smalley. Walks to David Sink and Courtney Jackson forced over Ebersole.

East Carolina took the lead with three in the second. With one down, Godin singled and Chris Cauble walked. Kevin Riggs also walked to load the bases. Mike Andrews' sacrifice fly scored Godin and John Thomas singled to left to drive in Ritchie, running for Cauble. Adams followed with a hit to score Riggs for a 3-2 lead.

Baptist tied it up with one in the fifth. With two away, Ferguson singled and scored on a double to deep center, making it 3-3.

But the tie was for a short time only as the Pirates scored three times in the bottom of the inning to take the lead for good.

Thomas opened with a double to center, his alert running turning slow fielding into the two-bagger. He was sacrificed to third and scored on Eason's single. Brown then hit his eighth home run of the year to give ECU a 6-3 lead.

Three more came over in the sixth. Cauble was hit by a pitch and Riggs singled. Andrews' grounder to third forced Riggs at second, but courtesy runner David Daniels scored. Adams then followed with

After cleanly fielding two straight shots back to the mound in the inning, Conger overthrew Claybrook at first for the possible third out before striking out Tripp to end the game.

"He (Conger) played real well defensively the whole game," Wilson said. "He had made several good plays like that but he led off on that throw and it could have cost us."

Conley will be back in action Thursday at 4 p.m. on the road against Farmville Central, while Ayden-Gritton will battle South Lenoir Friday.

Good Weather A Plus For Pirates

Excellent weather was a plus for East Carolina head football coach Bill Lewis and his staff as they led the Pirates through over two hours of practice Tuesday afternoon.

Practice conditions were ideal for the Pirates, who have faced rainy weather and muddy fields much of the spring. Lewis said the dry field helped his staff and players accomplish many things.

"Today gave us the chance to come out and practice without worrying about slipping and sliding," Lewis said. "We were able to get good footing and the guys practiced with confidence."

Tuesday's workout was the first since Saturday's scrimmage and the football staff spent the day teaching and correcting mistakes which they saw in the scrimmage.

Lewis said each coach took the responsibility of mapping out a new plan and re-teaching the things that they thought needed to be re-emphasized.

"The scrimmage gave us a chance to detect the problems and correct them, and move on the new things," the coach said.

Vietnam Agrees To Leave Cambodia By October

By Robert H. Reid
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BANGKOK, Thailand — Vietnam will unconditionally withdraw its troops from Cambodia by the end of September, ending a 10-year occupation and conflict with resistance forces, Thai officials and news agency reports said today.

The decision was made after consultations between Vietnam, Laos and the Hanoi-backed Cambodian government of Prime Minister Hun Sen, the official Cambodian news agency SPK said in a dispatch monitored in Bangkok.

SPK said Canada, Poland and India had been invited to jointly monitor the pullout in coordination with a representative of U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar.

Vietnam previously said it would withdraw its troops by 1990, but would move the pullout up to September if a political settlement could be reached.

The Cambodian statement, however, gave no indication of any such conditions and called on foreign governments to end their support of resistance fighters.

If such assistance continues after the Vietnamese leave, the Cambodian government "would reserve its legitimate right to call on other countries to give assistance to the Kampuchean (Cambodian) people to defend themselves," the statement said.

Japan's Kyodo News Service reported that Foreign Minister Nguyen Co Thach of Vietnam announced the pullout during a Hanoi news conference today. It said he indicated Vietnam would meet the deadline even if a political solution has not been reached by Sept. 30.

In Bangkok, Thai Foreign Minister Siddhi Savestila told reporters he was informed of the Vietnamese decision today during a meeting with Hanoi's ambassador in Thailand, Le Mai.

Siddhi said the Vietnamese envoy urged all other countries to refrain from supporting resistance groups seeking to topple the Hun Sen government.

Vietnam invaded Cambodia in December 1978 and toppled the government of the communist Khmer Rouge, under which an estimated one-fourth of the country's 8 million people died from famine and execution.

As of August, Vietnamese had about 140,000 troops in Cambodia, but Vietnam began withdrawing troops last year and an estimated 70,000 remain.

Siddhi said the Vietnamese ambassador told him there were 50,000 troops left in Cambodia.

Fear that the Khmer Rouge — the strongest force in a resistance coalition — might return to power has been a major hurdle in negotiations on a post-occupation coalition government for Cambodia.

The resistance coalition is led by Prince Norodom Sihanouk, the former Cambodian ruler and also includes the non-communist Khmer People's National Liberation Front.

Officials of the Vietnamese-installed Cambodian government had urged an earlier withdrawal target provided neighboring Thailand denies the guerrillas sanctuary and other countries stop arming the resistance groups.

Thailand denies providing sanctuary to the guerrillas, but armed groups move in and out of Cambodia from refugee camps along the border. China arms the guerrillas while the Soviets support Vietnamese forces.

Non-Communist Southeast Asian nations have been engaged in a major diplomatic effort to remove Vietnamese forces and restore peace to Cambodia.

In February, representatives of the six-member Association of Southeast Asian Nations held talks in Jakarta, Indonesia, along with Hun Sen, delegations from Laos and Vietnam and from the three guerrilla groups.

The talks failed, however, in accomplishing much more than getting the warring parties talking. Siddhi said the Vietnamese hope their offer will lead to talks next month in Jakarta between Prince Sihanouk and Hun Sen as well as talks between China and Vietnam expected to take place this month.

The presence of Soviet-backed Vietnam's troops in Cambodia has been one of the major obstacles to restoring normal relations between China and the Soviet Union. Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev and Chinese senior leader Deng Xiaoping plan to meet on May 15, the first Sino-Soviet summit in 30 years.

South Africa May Scrap Namibian Independence

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WINDHOEK, Namibia — South Africa has threatened to scrap a plan for granting Namibia independence if the United Nations cannot stop an incursion by black nationalist guerrillas who continued battling security forces today.

"Unless active and effective measures are taken within the next few hours to stem the rapid deterioration of the situation, the whole peace process in Namibia is in danger of collapse," Foreign Minister Pik Botha said Tuesday in a letter to U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar.

Sam Nujoma, leader of the South-West African People's Organization guerrilla movement, says South Africa instigated the fighting.

Nujoma, at a news conference Tuesday in Harare, Zimbabwe, urged the U.N. Security Council to stop South African-led security forces "from butchering Namibians and confine the South African army to their barracks."

He said he would end a 20-year exile and return to Namibia soon.

Intense fighting began Saturday, the day a cease-fire was to take hold and the U.N.-supervised transition to independence began in the territory that neighboring South Africa has ruled for 74 years.

A territorial police official, Chief Inspector Kierie du Rand, said the intensity of the fighting had diminished today, with the guerrillas dispersing into smaller groups.

U.N. investigators say the fighting broke out after about 1,000 South-West African People's Organization guerrillas crossed into northern Namibia from Angola last weekend, in violation of the independence plan.

At least 172 guerrillas, 20 members of the South African-led police force and one South African soldier have been killed in clashes in the northern region along with an undetermined number of civilians, du Rand said.

SWAPO has not issued casualty figures and there was no way to independently confirm du Rand's figures.

South Africa accused Nujoma of sending his guerrillas into Namibia to sabotage the peace process, a charge Nujoma and other SWAPO officials deny.

SWAPO has battled South African rule since 1966 and is considered the favorite to come to power under the U.N. independence plan, which envisions elections for a national assembly Nov. 1.

Namibia, which has 1.3 million people, is roughly the size of France and West Germany combined. The predominantly black and mixed race population includes about 75,000 whites.

The United States on Tuesday urged the guerrillas to pull back into Angola. State Department spokeswoman Margaret Tutwiler said Washington does not believe the peace accord is in danger of unraveling "at this point."

British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher also condemned what she called a rebel incursion into Namibia.

Under the U.N. plan, guerrillas are to remain at their bases in Angola at least 100 miles north of Namibia's border until mid-May.

Botha wrote, "The South African government cannot be expected to implement its undertakings ... while SWAPO continues to act in flagrant violation of the provisions" approved by the United Nations.

In the letter to Perez de Cuellar, which was released in South Africa, Botha said 4,450 SWAPO fighters are now in violation of the U.N. plan.

He also said hundreds of Cuban troops in Angola had moved to within 650 yards of the Namibian border.

"In such circumstances, South Africa has the undoubted right to suspend its compliance with its obligations," Botha's letter added.

"Our people have been fighting inside Namibia in the past 20 years," Nujoma told reporters after meeting in Harare with representatives from the five permanent member nations of the U.N. Security Council — the United States, Britain, France, China and the Soviet Union.

He said he had asked the United Nations to bolster its cease-fire monitoring forces in northern Namibia.

Haitian Leader Departs Leaders Of Failed Coup

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti — Ending a challenge from rebel troops, President Prosper Avril departed their commander and two other alleged leaders of a failed weekend coup and reportedly fired six high-ranking officers.

Mutinous troops from the Leopards battalion who had held the international airport for two days returned to their barracks Tuesday.

About 100 of the unit's 400 troops had been demanding the release of their leader, Lt. Col. Himmler Rebu, who was exiled to the United States with two colleagues.

The three were accused of planning the attempt to overthrow Lt. Gen. Avril's government that was foiled Sunday by loyal troops. Four rebel soldiers were reportedly killed.

Life slowly returned to normal Tuesday in Port-au-Prince, capital of the poorest country in the Western Hemisphere.

"Everything is calm," National Palace guard Sgt. Jean-Pierre Raymond told a reporter early today. "The president is sleeping" at the palace.

A government communique said Avril, "seeking a rapid return to normal life, magnanimously permitted" the three officers to leave the country.

The U.S. Embassy said the three had visas to the United States and flew there Tuesday from the neighboring Dominican Republic. No more precise destination was given.

Besides the 38-year-old Rebu, the other two allegedly involved in the coup attempt were identified as palace guard Col. Philippe Biamby, 36, and Col. Leonce Qualo, 35, head of the Interior Ministry's intelligence department.

A Western diplomat, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the Leopards "didn't want him (Rebu) sent into exile ... they wanted him freed."

The coup occurred several days after four high-ranking officers who had been accused of drug trafficking, were discharged from the army.

Avril is cracking down on the narcotics trade as a condition for the resumption of $70 million in annual U.S. aid that was suspended after thugs killed 34 voters in November 1987, thwarting the country's first free elections in more than three decades.

State television said Lt. Col. Michel Louis, Lt. Col. Carrel Occil, Lt. Col. Serge David and Maj. Renel Sanon had been fired, while radio station Haiti Inter said Lt. Col. Romouald Achille and Lt. Ruben Alexis were also dismissed.

Foiling what would have been this Caribbean nation's third coup in less than a year, loyalist soldiers rescued Avril late Sunday as rebel soldiers drove him to the airport to be flown out of the country.

Avril, 50, was brought to power Sept. 11 by non-commissioned officers who wanted to end state-sponsored violence and ousted Lt. Gen. Henri Namphy. Most of Avril's support appears to come from the 1,000-man Presidential Guard.

But there remained tension between the National Palace and the repressive Dessalines Barracks, which has about 700 men headed by the powerful Col. Guy Francois.

Soviets Sell Jet Planes To Libya

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The Soviets have sold Libya at least a dozen and as many as 15 fighter-bombers that are capable of striking long-range targets in the Middle East, Pentagon sources say.

The planes SU-24 Fencers, which can travel within an 800-mile radius without refueling, have been broken into pieces, crated in large boxes and delivered to the Libyans aboard Soviet Antonov-22 transport planes, the sources told The Associated Press on Tuesday.

The price was not known, said the sources, speaking on condition of anonymity.

The deliveries are infrequent and at irregular intervals, the sources said. They added that the Fencers are likely to be based in eastern Libya, possibly at Bumbah.

In addition, the sources said, the Libyans also are seeking to purchase equipment that could convert some of their existing large transport planes to be used for aerial refueling, the sources said.

Last year, Libya tried to buy extra refueling tanks and other refueling gear that could be used aboard aging Boeing 707s that it already owns, the sources said.

The New York Times reported in today's editions that the Soviets have also agreed to refit a Libyan transport plane, the Soviet-built Ilyushin-76, so that it can be used as an aerial refueling plane.

Fighting In Beirut Leaves 7 More Dead, 30 Wounded

Captain Draws Suspended Term

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BEIRUT, Lebanon — Thunderous blasts echoed across Beirut and the surrounding mountains today as Syrian and Christian gunners fought with howitzers and rocket launchers for a fifth straight day.

A U.S. Embassy spokesman denied a radio report that the residence of U.S. Ambassador John McCarthy in the Christian suburb of Yarze was on fire after taking a direct hit.

"The house of the ambassador has been hit repeatedly during the last week, and recently some shells fell near the compound, but not in the compound. There was no fire," said the spokesman, speaking without using his name.

Police said seven people have been killed and 30 wounded in the exchanges since midnight Tuesday.

The latest casualties raised to 162 killed and 536 wounded the overall toll from the 29-day confrontation between Gen. Michel Aoun's Christian troops and an alliance of Syrian and Druse forces.

The International Committee of the Red Cross called on the combatants to spare the civilian population.

"Once again, we call on all parties to respect the basic humanitarian principles...and respect the civilian population which is suffering more casualties every day," Red Cross chief delegate Michel Dufour told a news conference at the mission's headquarters in Moslem west Beirut.

Dufour said the Red Cross mission in Lebanon had enough supplies to "cover emergency needs in Lebanon for the next two or three months."

Pope John Paul II also today appealed for an end to the "terrible bombardments" in Lebanon today, saying the fighting threatened the very existence of the country.

Shells fell randomly into Christian and Moslem residential areas despite a call from the Arab League for a cease-fire.

The appeal was stressed Tuesday by Kuwaiti Foreign Minister Sheikh Sabah Ahmad Sabah upon his arrival in Damascus, Syria. Sabah was to meet with leftist Lebanese leaders on ways of settling a six-month political crisis that threatens to cement the nation's de facto partition.

"In the name of the Arab World, in the name of humanity, I appeal to all to cease firing immediately... Once the cease-fire is in force, all solutions are possible," said Sabah, who heads a six-man Arab League panel on Lebanon.

The Lebanese Front alliance of right-wing Christian factions, in a statement published today, said it will not take part in talks with Sabah.

Aoun's command said in a communique its gunners "scored direct hits" on two Syrian tanks around the mountain resort of Aley, southeast of Beirut, and a Syrian howitzer emplacement in the seaside Khaldeh junction, south of Beirut.

The report could not be verified with the Syrian command.

However, Syrian army checkpoints in Khaldeh were deserted early in the day and helmeted soldiers were seen taking cover in foxholes along the sand coast, an indication the area was under shelling.

Smoke billowed from the wooded hills of Aramoun where the Syrians maintain artillery and rocket batteries south of Khaldeh.

Witnesses said Syrian gunners also opened fire at the 310-square-mile Christian enclave from several rocket launchers mounted on trucks and driving across several Moslem residential neighborhoods in west and south Beirut.

A police spokesman, who demanded anonymity, said Christian militiamen of the right-wing Lebanese forces alliance opened fire at Moslem west Beirut from twinbarrelled, anti-aircraft guns.

He said the rounds from both the mobile launchers and fixed emplacements in east Beirut are "exploding in most streets of west Beirut."

A mortar round slammed into a narrow street off west Beirut's Hamra commercial thoroughfare, seriously wounding two pedestrians, witnesses said.

A witness said the mortar round explosion "chopped off the legs of a male pedestrian near a stationery shop."

The current crisis began Sept. 22

when President Amin Gemayel's six-year term expired with parliament failing to elect a successor.

Gemayel appointed Aoun head of an interim military cabinet to rule pending the election of a new president.

Syrian-backed Moslems rejected Aoun's appointment because it violated a 45-year-old tradition of having a Sunni Moslem premier, a Christian president and a Shiite Moslem parliament speaker. They pledged allegiance to acting Prime Minister Salim Hoss, a Sunni who governed under Gemayel.

GENOA, Italy — In a case that caused a national uproar, a court has given a two-month suspended sentence to the captain of a Syrian ship whose toxic cargo originated in Italy and was rejected on two continents.

The Genoa court handed down the sentence Tuesday after convicting the captain of the Zanoobia, Ahmed Tabalo of Syria, of traveling without the proper permit.

Tabalo said he took command of the ship after the 12,000 barrels of toxic waste had been loaded and said he believed its manifest was accurate in listing the goods as normal chemical products, the Italian news agency ANSA reported.

The vessel, dubbed the "ship of poison" by the Italian media, docked in Genoa in northern Italy in May after crew members reported being sickened by fumes from the cargo. The barrels were examined and the ship was subsequently seized by Italian authorities.

The cargo's odyssey began in February 1987 when it left the Italian port of Carrara on a Maltese freighter for Djibouti carrying waste from Italian companies.

Authorities in the African country refused the cargo and the ship later unloaded it in Puerto Cabello, Venezuela.

But the cargo began to leak and Venezuelan officials ordered it out of the country. It was put on a Cypriot freighter, which was refused entry by several ports until it reached Syria.

Eventually the Syrians had the cargo reloaded onto the Zanoobia and the ship went to Italy.

The Zanoobia was one of three vessels that returned to Italy bearing a total of 2,200 tons of unidentified waste from Italian chemical companies that had been rejected in foreign ports.

The return of the three ships at about the same time prompted fear in many cities that they would be used as dumping grounds for the refuse.

Art Winners

NEW YORK (AP) — Four students from North Carolina are among the 50 winners in "Dow Presents: The Art of Science," a national art competition for high school sophomores, juniors and seniors across the country.

The winners from North Carolina are Gregory Abbas of Cary, Stephen Little of Raleigh, Reuben Cox of Highlands, and George Langford II of Chapel Hill. Abbas, Little and Cox are students at the N.C. School of Science and Mathematics in Durham, and Langford attends Chapel Hill High School.

The contest challenges students to express scientific and technological themes through original works of art. The winners will be honored at the New York Academy of Sciences in New York on April 25, during National Science and Technology Week.

Refugee Flow Continues To Climb

WASHINGTON (AP) — The number of refugees who have fled their native lands rose by 1.1 million last year to 14.4 million, mostly because of civil wars in East Africa and the war in Afghanistan, the U.S. Committee for Refugees reported.

And this year the number arriving in the United States is expected to top 100,000 for the first time since 1982.

Another 14 million to 20 million people are refugees within their own countries.

But the numbers are approximate, because in many places, no careful figures are kept and there are many definitions of who is a refugee.

"These are not numbers," said Roger P. Winter, director of the committee, in a statement on its report. "They are people. Each one of these 14.4 million represents an individual human tragedy."

The committee is a private group financed by foundations, churches and contributions from individuals.

"The biggest new groups described in its annual report, made public this week, are:

—335,000 who fled to Ethiopia when a long-simmering revolt flared up last summer in Somalia, on the northeast tip of Africa. About 600,000 people have been displaced within Somalia, a country bigger than France and with a population of about 8 million.

—Almost 250,000 Mozambicans who fled a 14-year-old revolt against their Communist government by the Renamo guerrilla movement, which has support in South Africa. The committee says 1.15 million Mozambicans have now gone to other countries and 2 million of the country's 15 million people have been violently uprooted within its borders.

—150,000 refugees from a civil war between non-Moslems and the Islamic government of Sudan. They have moved eastward into Ethiopia, one of the world's poorest countries, bringing the total of Sudanese there to 350,000. About 2 million people are reported to have lost their homes in Sudan. The country has 24 million inhabitants and more than twice the area of Egypt, its northern neighbor.

The largest number of refugees comes from Afghanistan — more than 5.9 million. Most are in Pakistan, which shelters the world's biggest refugee population. Another 2 million are still within their homeland.

Palestinians — 2.3 million — make up the second largest group. Ethiopia, to which 700,000 refugees have fled, has seen about 2.1 million of its own people flee abroad.

Refugees differ widely. Most of the Afghans have fled in the last eight or nine years. Many Palestinians left more than 40 years ago when Israel became a state, and their children and grandchildren are still considered refugees.

The United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, Jean-Pierre Hocke, praised countries which have taken in refugees as safeguarding the unity of the family.

U.S. Secretary of State James A. Baker III told Congress last month that he is planning to ask for another $100 million this year for refugees, in addition to the $412 million already available. But for the following year the Bush administration has sought a cut in spending.

Baker said his department will complete a review of its refugee programs soon after May 1.

Just before leaving office in January, President Reagan raised to 25,000 the number of refugees from the Soviet Union and eastern Europe to be permitted into this country during the year that will end Sept. 30. That will leave 7,000 fewer possibilities for people from Vietnam, but almost 40,000 places will still be available for them.

Hocke, writing in a special edition of his agency's publication "Refugees," said the most natural solution for refugees is to send them home when conditions change enough so that they are welcome. He called attention to those repatriated last year to Ethiopia, Uganda and El Salvador.

The U.S. committee reported only about 280,000 voluntary repatriations for the year, the largest number to Uganda and Burundi in southern Africa.

Arias Backs Bush Plan For Contras

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Costa Rican President Oscar Arias, endorsing the Bush administration's package of nearly $50 billion in non-military aid for Nicaraguan Contra rebels, wants Cuba to follow suit and halt military aid to leftist rebels in El Salvador.

After meeting Tuesday with President Bush, Vice President Dan Quayle and Secretary of State James A. Baker III, Arias said the so-called humanitarian aid was essential for integrating the Contras back into Nicaraguan society.

"You cannot persuade the Contras to go back to Nicaragua if you have nothing to offer them," he said. "There's no freedom, there's no democracy, they cannot integrate into political life, and economic conditions are not the best."

Arias, who won the Nobel Peace Prize two years ago for his Central America peace plan calling for a halt of all outside military support for rebel groups in the region, said Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev now has to persuade Cuban President Fidel Castro to stop sending arms to Salvadoran leftists.

"If he supports sincerely the Central American peace plan he has to ... persuade Fidel Castro not to keep the support of the guerrillas in El Salvador," Arias said of Gorbachev, who is meeting with Castro in Havana this week.

"We have learned that we must change bullets by ballots and we can only do this with the support of the Cubans and the Soviet Union," Arias said.

Gorbachev told the Cuban National Assembly on Tuesday that the Soviet Union opposes the "export of revolution or counterrevolution," referring to both Cuban and U.S. policy in Latin America.

But he also said his country will continue supplying weaponry to Nicaragua's leftist government as long as the United States continues to arm other Central American countries.

And he called the Bush administration's continued non-military support for the Contras "worrisome."

Quayle said Arias' support for Bush's plan puts the ball in Nicaraguan President Daniel Ortega's court to respond with democratic reforms.

Israeli Leader To Present His Plan For Palestinian Elections

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir will sketch out his plan for Palestinian elections in talks opening today with Bush administration officials on the unrest in the West Bank and Gaza.

The prime minister's aim is to find leaders other than from the Palestine Liberation Organization to negotiate some form of self-rule for the 1.2 million Arabs in the territories.

The 73-year-old prime minister steadfastly refuses to negotiate with the PLO, and told a conference of Jewish American organization leaders that sitting with the PLO "will bring disaster."

While Shamir has withheld many of the details until he sees Secretary of State James A. Baker III today and President Bush on Thursday, he apparently intends to hold the elections only after the 15 12-month uprising subsides.

The Bush administration is seeking a more immediate change in the situation. And yet, a U.S. official, briefing reporters Tuesday at the White House on the visit, said, "We want to listen to what Prime Minister Shamir has to say how the peace process can be moved forward, but I don't want to prejudice what, in fact, he is going to tell the president."

Shamir follows close on the heels of Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak, who said toward the end of his Washington visit on Tuesday that he saw no way to stop the violence in the territories lost by the Arabs in the 1967 Middle East war.

The uprising has cost the lives of 418 Palestinian Arabs and 18 Israelis.

"If anybody could stop it, we would be very pleased," Mubarak said. "But how?"

The Egyptian leader made no public demands on the United States or Israel. He said he was simply "trying to find out what's the best way to achieve peace" through negotiations.

Mubarak, who has insisted that Israel deal with the PLO, withheld judgment on Shamir's proposal. He said the criterion should be whether an election would help advance the peace process.

The Egyptian leader was warmly received by the Bush administration. Bush took him to Baltimore on Monday to see the Orioles and the Boston Red Sox play in the opening game of the American League season.

Shamir will be entertained with a series of luncheons and dinners, but there was no event scheduled to match the friendly spectacle of Mubarak and Bush sitting side-by-side at the ball game.

AIDS Fighters Turn To Street Demonstrations

By Victor F. Zonana
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

NEW YORK — Peter Staley, a $200,000-a-year bond trader, was on his way to work on Wall Street one morning when he ran across a group of boisterous demonstrators.

Many carried black signs bearing pink triangles — the symbol of Nazi oppression of homosexuals — and the words "SILENCE equals DEATH." Others dramatized their rage at the slow testing of potential drugs for acquired immune deficiency syndrome by hanging an effigy of U.S. Food and Drug Administration chief Dr. Frank Young. A handful blocked traffic on lower Broadway and were arrested.

"ACT UP! FIGHT BACK! FIGHT AIDS!" the 250 men and women shouted.

"That night, when I turned on the TV, I was blown away by how they were able to transmit their anger to an entire nation," said Staley, diagnosed with an AIDS-related condition in 1985. "I decided that these were my people."

That was two years ago. Staley, 28, since has left Wall Street to become the unpaid fund-raising chairman of the AIDS Coalition to Unleash Power, a growing alliance of elite professionals and street activists "united in anger and committed to direct action to end the AIDS crisis."

The group includes art directors who design eye-catching posters, television producers who teach demonstrators to talk in "sound bites" and lawyers who defend group members arrested for acts of civil disobedience. There is even a pharmaceutical chemist, Dr. Iris Long, who critically analyzes research protocols for clinical trials of experimental drugs.

At a time when other AIDS groups lobby quietly behind the scenes or tend dying patients, ACT UP is taking the AIDS battle into the streets. Its members say that they are fed up with a system they are convinced is not doing all it can to prevent the carnage.

Its activities range from guerrilla theater — tossing condoms at officials who oppose safe-sex education or staging "die-ins" at offices of companies making exorbitant-priced drugs — to elaborately choreographed acts of civil disobedience such as last week's siege of New York's City Hall, where 200 were arrested.

ACT UP has supporters and detractors among other AIDS activist groups and the public. Critics say its tactics may do as much harm as good by alienating people.

"We are not out to make friends," Staley said. "We are out to shame people into action."

As the movement has grown, it has come to encompass women, blacks and Latinos, as well as the gay white men who launched the group two years ago. "We have tapped into the fear, anger and grief surrounding the epidemic, and have turned it into action," said Avram Finkelstein, the art director who designed ACT UP's SILENCE equals DEATH logo.

It is as if the passion and activism of the '60s have been updated for the careerist and entrepreneurial decade of the '80s. And it all comes with an intensity of energy that could only be justified by the life-or-death stakes.

"I am getting tired of candlelight vigils when, in fact, blow torches may be necessary," said Mark Sikorowski, 37, a managing partner of a New York design firm. Actually, while ACT UP members court arrest, the group eschews violence, preferring non-violent civil disobedience in the Gandhi tradition.

Before last week's demonstration in New York, its biggest action occurred in October, when demonstrators surrounded and shut the FDA headquarters in Rockville, Md., and 187 people were arrested. Born in New York City, ACT UP now has perhaps 5,000 adherents and chapters in two dozen cities.

ACT UP's initial goal was to increase availability of experimental treatments to people with AIDS and those infected with the HIV virus. More recently, the group has sought better prevention and treatment services from cities such as New York.

In Los Angeles, the County Board of Supervisors voted to speed creation of a 20-bed AIDS ward after ACT UP staged a seven-day, around-the-clock vigil at the hospital.

In San Francisco, producers of the television drama "Midnight Caller" revised a script after ACT UP disrupted filming an episode that activists claimed would incite violence against gays.

In Boston, the John Hancock Mutual Life Insurance Co. reversed its policy and began paying for treatments of aerosol pentamidine to prevent pneumocystis pneumonia, the biggest killer of AIDS patients, after ACT UP members blocked an entrance at the insurer's headquarters.

And in New York, a sit-in at the offices of a Japanese pharmaceutical firm ensured that supplies of a potentially promising anti-viral drug sold over the counter in Japan would continue to flow to the U.S.

Perhaps more importantly, ACTUP has helped to alter terms of the national debate on AIDS. "We have refocused the discussion to the rights of people with AIDS to gain access to drugs and decent health care," said Ann Northrop, a former CBS News producer and ACT UP member who trains fellow activists to deliver pithy sound bites.

Indeed, earlier this year, Dr. Anthony S. Fauci, director of the National Institute on Allergies and Infectious Diseases, took the unprecedented step of publicly urging the FDA to ease its restrictions on a pair of drugs that appear to prevent AIDS patients from going blind.

FDA chief Young, who was hanged in effigy at ACT UP's first rally two years ago, has mixed feelings about the group. "On one hand, seeing demonstrators can make people realize some of the deep, deep concerns," he said. "I worry, on the other hand, that scientific decisions won't be made objectively if they are subjected to political pressure. And that might slow things down."

Still, he said, he fully understands the demands of AIDS patients and people infected with the human immunodeficiency virus for access to experimental drugs. "I had a melanoma myself. If it ever metastasizes (spreads), do I want to have access to experimental drugs? Yes."

ACT UP traces its roots to March 10, 1987, when playwright and activist Larry Kramer delivered a fiery speech to about 70 people at the Gay and Lesbian Community Center as part of its monthly speakers series. He had long felt that the gay community's political energy was being sapped by grief and denial. His goal was to shatter denial about with the magnitude of the epidemic—with a sledgehammer, if necessary.

"Two-thirds of this room could be dead within five years," Kramer thundered. "How many dead brothers have to be piled up in front of your faces in a heap before you learn to fight back and scream and yell and demand and take some responsibility for your own lives?"

While Kramer supplied the rhetoric, art director

Finkelstein had begun a separate effort to politicize gay men using visual imagery. He and a group of five friends came up with the idea of using the pink triangle, which homosexuals were forced to wear in Hitler's concentration camps, over the words SILENCE equals DEATH.

When Finkelstein's group learned about ACT UP, the two groups joined forces. ACT UP printed 1,000 SILENCE equals DEATH buttons for $160 and sold them for $1 apiece, clearing an $840 profit, "enough to finance a good-sized demo," Finkelstein noted.

Staley has used his financial acumen to build ACT UP into a $300,000-a-year group, deriving roughly equal amounts from merchandising, direct mail and benefits and foundation grants.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — Attorneys are seeking the release of a man whom state officials now agree didn't get a fair trial when he was convicted in the poisoning deaths of his seven children.

James J. Richardson, 53, was sentenced to die in the electric chair after his 1968 trial. His sentence was commuted to life in prison after the U.S. Supreme Court struck down the death penalty in 1972.

Last fall, newspaper reports claimed that prosecutors withheld evidence from defense attorneys. Richardson's advocates say prosecutors framed him and suggest DeSoto County officials protected a more likely suspect, the children's babysitter.

After months of investigation this year, a special prosecutor appointed by Gov. Bob Martinez confirmed evidence was withheld and Attorney General Bob Butterworth concluded Richardson received an unfair trial.

Chief Justice Raymond Ehrlich of the Florida Supreme Court said he intends to appoint a special judge to reconsider Richardson's conviction.

In the meantime, Richardson's attorney, Ellis Rubin, said Tuesday that he has asked that Richardson be released from prison, and he predicted Richardson could be out this week.

Guard Will Join Hunt On Border

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Cactuses along the Texas-Mexico border may actually be National Guard troops camouflaged to gather drug-trafficking intelligence information for federal agencies, congressional officials say.

A spokesman for the National Guard in Texas says he knows nothing about the proposed intelligence-gathering efforts under a $2.9 million appropriation from the Pentagon.

But Sen. Phil Gramm, a Texas Republican, says the money will indeed be spent for air and ground surveillance by guard troops dispatched to the state's 1,000-mile border with Mexico.

Gramm said the troops will attempt to infiltrate areas of suspected drug smuggling along the border and relay their findings to agencies including the Border Patrol, U.S. Customs Service and Immigration and Naturalization Service.

Gramm said the Guard is not disclosing many details of the planned patrols, which would be part of a drug-trafficking package by Guard troops that also calls for aerial surveillance and helping Customs with search and seizure of cargo crossing the border into Texas.

A congressional source said the Texas Guard troops would use camouflage paint to "look like a cactus bush" and then infiltrate the border "under cover of darkness" as the guardsmen attempt to gather information on drug-trafficking patterns.

The $2.9 million in spending was approved last week by Defense Secretary Dick Cheney, who also authorized plans by guardsmen in 11 other states to attack drug smuggling.

Gramm said the so-called "long-range reconnaissance patrol" program "is a new program the National Guard is not talking about."

However, he said Tuesday, it would help federal agencies in the "running war with drug smugglers along our border."

"The American people clearly want the military more involved in our war on drugs," Gramm said in an interview. "It is not a substitute for law enforcement, but it is a good complement. It makes law enforcement more effective."

But Lt. Col. Ed Komandosky, spokesman for the National Guard in Texas, said he was not aware of any such foot or air patrols "whatsoever" under the $2.9 million effort.

Reagan's Protection Is Most Expensive Yet

LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

LOS ANGELES — While Ronald Reagan enjoys a relaxed and splendid retirement, earning $50,000 for occasionally chatting with trade and professional groups for an hour, federal protection for the former president and his wife is likely to cost more this year than the combined total to guard all the former presidents and their spouses, according to records and government sources.

The U.S. Secret Service, which last year spent more than $8 million for the round-the-clock protection of former presidents and their wives, discloses only to Congress the amount it spends on each former president, because, it contends, public release of the information could endanger its mission.

So far, according to congressional sources, the Secret Service has refused to offer an estimate of the amount it expects to spend this year to protect Ronald and Nancy Reagan. But Robert Coakley, a deputy staff director for the Senate Governmental Affairs subcommittee, which deals with the Secret Service, estimated that perhaps $10 million will be spent to protect the Reagans. Included are the costs of elaborate security equipment at their home and offices.

Secret Service spokesman Robert R. Snow conceded last week that the cost of providing security to the Reagans could be more than twice the estimated $4 million that is now spent on each of the other couples the service protects: Gerald and Betty Ford and Jimmy and Rosalynn Carter. The cost for Lyndon Johnson's widow, Lady Bird, is minimal, because her travel is limited. Richard Nixon declined further protection in 1985.

That would mean that protection for the Reagans would at least equal the amount spent in 1988 for the Fords, Carters and Lady Bird Johnson combined. Snow said that security costs would probably be higher than normal for Reagan's first year of retirement because of expenditures to improve security at the Reagans' leased $2.5 million mansion in the super-wealthy Bel-Air district, and in the suite of offices they share a few miles away near Beverly Hills.

Under current law, Snow said, "there is no limit" on Secret Service spending for such protection, which is guaranteed for life.

At the Reagans' tightly guarded pink-brick home among the wooded hills of Bel-Air, a visitor can see only a glimpse of the security arrangements. The house, purchased for the relatively low price of $2.5 million by a syndicate of Reagan friends, who still own it, is said to be leased by the couple for $15,000 a month.

The high stone wall surrounding the grounds has been supplemented by an eight-foot chain-link fence equipped with electronic sensors. Outside the newly built stone guard house at the edge of the winding driveway, cameras survey passersby.

Security for the former first lady's travels from Los Angeles to New York to consult with publishers and meet with friends help push up the cost of protecting the Reagans. But overall, security spending for Reagan is expected to be higher than for past presidents, Snow said.

Ford's home and office are in Palm Springs, Calif.; Carter lives and works in Plains, Ga.

Hatteras Natives Recall Life Before Bridge

The Associated Press

Residents Remember A Life With Less Money, More Ease

By Michael Hobbs
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

HATTERAS — Some communities mark their history with references to a key event by which all other events are measured. For Hatteras Island, it's the building of the Herbert C. Bonner Bridge, the link that swamped the spit of land with tourists and flooded it with change.

"Everything's changed," said Bill Burrus, owner of Burrus' Red and White Supermarket in the center of the quiet Hatteras fishing village.

"It's made it better for us in here," Burrus said as he sat in his usual spot on a stool by a cash register in the store his family founded in 1866. "But then life was quieter. Business wasn't as good, but we made out."

The 4½-mile-long bridge, which was completed in 1963, carries two-lane N.C. 12 over the Oregon Inlet, a cut in the Outer Banks that was opened by a hurricane on Sept. 7, 1846. Now, continuous dredging is needed to keep the inlet open. State officials are pushing for a set of twin jetties they say would help protect the inlet and the bridge from storm erosion.

The N.C. Department of Transportation workers currently are driving pilings through the north end of the bridge into the sand below. The old supports were weakened by surging tides that swept away sand on the inlet floor during winter storms.

"We're going to lose that bridge," said Ernal Foster, a retired fisherman who was born on the island in 1910 and has fished surrounding waters since the '30s.

Foster criticizes the dredging in the inlet and blames it for the erosion problems. And he is not entirely happy with the changes brought by the bridge.

"(The bridge) has made it faster. Too fast. Everybody's gotten in a hurry. They don't know where they're going," Foster said. "It's caused the people here to get in the same flow."

"... Before the bridge, we had it free and easy," said Foster, who once hired out his three boats for fishing trips. His son now operates the business.

Foster says he left the island during the '30s so he wouldn't have to fish for a living. But he ended up in soup lines in New York and soon made his way back home.

"I pushed a clam rake for 15 cents per hundred. The first 100 paid for my lunch," Foster said. "Everybody was in the same boat. No one had any money."

But they could go to the three dance halls free of charge. Summer parties on the beach were common.

"We had a lot of fun," he said. Today, the dance halls are gone, replaced with vacation homes, motels, restaurants and shops.

"Before the bridge came there were no homes on the beach," said Burrus, the grocery store owner. "But people put them on the beach now because they know insurance companies will pay for them."

Natives remember with fondness the days before the bridge, when they had to run a flag up a pole to signal for a ferry to pick them up if they cared to venture across Oregon Inlet to the mainland.

Foster says he wouldn't mind if the bridge fell into the water, but he is aware of the consequences.

"It wouldn't bother me so much, but it would cripple our businesses," Foster said.

Archie Hankins, an engineer with the state Department of Transportation, says that on a busy day in the summer, the bridge carries 21,000 money-spending surfers and tourists to Hatteras Island, providing the lifeblood of the island's economy.

Burrus said the expansion of the island's economy also has allowed more natives to make a living were they grew up.

"The bridge has helped people get in here and it allowed people to stay here," he said.

"There is more opportunity here now," said Burrus, who has two sons who help him run the store.

Fred Kirkland, the owner of Hatteras Hobby and Tackle Shop on the northern end of Hatteras village, located at the southern end of the island, says he depends on tourists for "99 percent plus" of his trade. He says he's in favor of officials doing whatever is necessary to protect the threatened link with the mainland.

"Well, I gotta make a living, unfortunately, and as long as I have to make a living I don't want to see it go," said Kirkland, who has lived on the barrier island for 10 years after moving from Henderson.

"It would be difficult to get the people down here and it would be difficult to get the merchandise here to sell to them."

Even though they idealize life before the bridge, residents say the link now is needed.

Fisherman Lin Odem said a loss of the bridge would hurt his industry because it would hamper efforts to get their catches to market.

"It would hurt everybody. We wouldn't be able to get fish off the island," Odem said.

"The bridge also serves as the only land-based evacuation route if a major storm should occur," adds Hankins, the transportation engineer.

But Burrus said that bridge or no bridge, he loves life on the island.

"I liked it here the way it was. And I like it here the way it is," Burrus said.

A Vital Link

Symphony Kicks Off Drive

The Kick-Off for the 1989-90 North Carolina Symphony Subscription Drive was hosted Saturday by Mr. and Mrs. William Brown. Pitt County volunteers attended the event to prepare the season ticket drive. Approximately 120 volunteers are involved in the drive, which is headed by Jane Brown and Leslie McCarley.

N.C. Rep. Walter Jones Jr., honorary chairman, addressed the group, expressing his commitment to "The North Carolina Symphony — The Cultural Jewel of our State." Jones related his reaction to an educational concert given by the N.C. Symphony to all third graders of Pitt County. "I was amazed at the rapport among the conductor, orchestra and children," he said. "The children were completely attentive throughout the concert."

He has reaffirmed his commitment to the funding of the symphony by the N.C. General Assembly.

Mary Taft, trustee of the N.C. Symphony said she believes that Pitt County residents, especially school children, should benefit from this cultural resource.

Lydia Bardin of Tarboro, a member of the N.C. Symphony Society's board of directors, explained the one major difference between the N.C. Symphony and other major American orchestras: The N.C. Symphony has had a balanced budget for seven years.

Peggy Shuping, president of the local chapter, welcomed new volunteers.

Soloists for the upcoming two-concert series in Pitt County will be Mike Cross in a "pops" concert, and Ruth Laredo, pianist, in a classical concert. For ticket order information call 756-0303, or 756-6878.

Singers' Workshop Thursday

"Awareness Through Movement," a free workshop for singers, teachers and students of singing, will be offered Thursday at the East Carolina University School of Music.

Mary B. Cochran will conduct the workshop. She is a certified teacher of the Feldenkrais Method, which uses structured movement sequences to enhance musical performance. The sequences are "gentle, novel movements designed to augment or challenge the habitual ways we breathe, use the mouth and organize ourselves in space," said Ms. Cochran.

The "awareness through movement" method, funded by Moshe Feldenkrais, is designed to help increase a singer's options for movement and alignment while improving the mind/body connection.

Those participating in the workshop should wear comfortable clothing and bring a mat or towel for working on the floor. Workshop sessions will be held 10:30 a.m. to noon and 1:30 p.m. to 3 p.m.

Ms. Cochran is a member of the Feldenkrais Guild and has been a teacher for 20 years. She has a master's degree from UNC-Chapel Hill and is a specialist in physical education, dance therapy and movement education.

The workshop is sponsored by the ECU student chapter of the National Association of Teachers of Singing and coordinated by Dr. Charles Moore, chair of the ECU voice faculty. For more details, call 757-6851.

Soft Cover-Up Has Lacy Look

Pamper yourself on cool summer nights with a soft, light-as-a-feather cover-up. You'll love the way this simple little jacket works up quickly with large needles and fluffy mohair yarn.

The lacy look achieved with the deceptively simple "drop stitch," with a gauge of only three stitches to the inch. It's a knit-from-the-neck-down raglan style worked in one piece, ensuring simple finishing and an easy, comfortable fit.

To obtain directions for making the Lady's Choice, send your request for Leaflet No. Z-040289 with $2 and a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope to: Pat Trexler Crafts, The Daily Reflector, P.O. Box 419148, Kansas City, Mo. 64141.

Or you may order Kit No. K-040289 by sending a check or money order for $18.95 to Pat Trexler Crafts at the same address. The kit price includes shipping charges, full instructions and yarn in your choice of lilac, red or off-white.

The knitted drop stitch — sometimes known as the double wrap stitch — is truly one of the easiest pattern stitches you can use: For the first row, knit all stitches, wrapping the yarn completely around the needle twice for each stitch. It can be worked from beginning to end of the row or can be started at any point on the row.

For Row 2, purl all stitches, dropping the extra wrap off the left-hand needle as you go. Repeat these two rows over and over for the desired length. That's all there is to it!

If you are one of the many knitters who enjoy knitting but dislike or have trouble setting in sleeves and joining seams, then the knit-from-the-neck-down method is sure to appeal to you.

In this method, the stitches you cast on to begin the sweater are at the neck edge rather than the lower edge. That is why it is referred to as "knitting down." After you work a row or two, you will be instructed where and how to mark for sleeve "seams."

If you are working on a garment with a front or back opening, you will be working back and forth on circular rather than straight needles as they will accommodate the large number of stitches you will have before the yoke section is completed. For a pullover, you will join the beginning and end stitches after casting on the will work from then on in rounds.

As you progress downward, you will be increasing on either side of the sleeve seam markers on every other row. The type of increase you use will be determined by the desired effect.

If your pattern stitch is lacy, the "yarnover" type of increase is usually desirable. To make a yarnover before a knit stitch, simply bring your yarn forward to the purl position and knit the next stitch. This lays an extra strand across the needle, which becomes an extra stitch when it is worked on the next row. This type of increase leaves a hole in your work, which is fine for a lacy pattern.

other type of increase is better. My preference is one known as the "arrow" increase. With the right side of your work facing you, insert the tip of the left needle through the center of the stitch just under the end stitch on the right needle, passing the needle under the right strand of that stitch. Now return your needles to the knitting position and knit that lifted strand, thus increasing one. When using this increase before and after markers, I recommend that you work as follows: Knit to within one stitch of a marker, make an arrow increase, knit one, pass marker, knit two, make another arrow increase. When this increase is used on every other row, it gives a beautiful full-fashioned effect.

Grown-Ups Should Quit Gawking

Dear Abby: I have a young child who has worn glasses since she was 4 months old. She is not to be pitied. We consider it a blessing that the problem (strabismus) was diagnosed and corrected at such an early age. Perhaps in time her glasses will not be such an oddity.

Abby, I am finding it increasingly difficult to be gracious to every well-meaning soul who wants to engage me in conversation about my daughter's eyes and treatment while I'm shopping, dining out, etc. Then there are the rude remarks: "Look at that baby!" "How old is that child?" And, "Poor thing — what else is wrong with her?"

These comments come not only from strangers but from our extended family and friends as well — although those familiar to us tend to use the not-so-subtle, "Will she always have to wear those glasses?"

Certainly I do not mind talking about it with people I know, but when I'm out running errands with two young children in tow, must I give my undivided attention to strangers just to satisfy their curiosity? How I wish they would keep their questions and comments to themselves. — Losing Patience In St. Paul

Dear Abby Abigail Van Buren

Dear Losing Patience: You have written a very important letter. Young children, on seeing something unusual, will ask questions to satisfy their natural curiosity. But adults should know better.

This is a plea for everyone who is old enough to read: Please refrain from gawking or inquiring about those who are "different" because they wear braces, use crutches, walkers, wheelchairs or some kind of device to help them function better.

Dear Abby: I have just ordered a teen booklet from you. I wrote a check and clipped it to my note to keep it straight. I just realized that you could be a tremendous help to the banking industry if you would tell your readers to never, never, never fold a check.

My husband is a banker in Fayetteville, Ga., and one of the biggest problems with the check sorters and other high-speed equipment is caused by creased or folded checks. (It interferes with the rapid processing procedures; ask your banker.)

I realize that people are always asking you to print things, but it would be a big help if you could get this message out to the public. — Dorothea H. Redwine, Fayetteville, Ga.

Dear Mrs. Redwine: I'm a convert as of now. I shall never fold a check unless I absolutely must. It may not help your husband's bank, but the folks at my bank should be tickled pink.

Dear Abby: I am 15 years old and enjoy going to the mall to window-shop. There is one problem that I cannot seem to handle and I hope you won't think I'm stupid for asking. Many unfortunate people appear in this mall, and it's almost impossible to avoid encountering the question, "Got any spare change?"

Being somewhat of a timid soul, I usually dig into my jeans and give whatever I have. But having the small income of an average teenager, I sometimes must consider myself one of the needy.

How can I avoid the uncomfortable feeling of guilt if I have nothing to give but a kind word or two? — Wealthy In Spirit Only

Dear Wealthy: Don't feel guilty when you give a beggar just a kind word or two. That's more than most beggars get.

Dear Abby: Your phrase "All men do not cheat on their wives" is good English, amateur logicians to the contrary.

If you think William Shakespeare wrote good English, you can find the phrase "All that glitters is not gold" in the Merchant of Venice, Act 2, Scene 7, line 65. — Bob Wheeler, Hockessin, Del.

Dear Bob: Thanks. I needed that.

If you would like to write to Abby, send your letter to Abigail Van Buren, P.O. Box 69440, Los Angeles, CA. 90069. For a personal, non-published reply, enclose a self-addressed stamped envelope.

Leonard Cohen To Appear Saturday Night On PBS

By Kathryn Baker
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — The last time I saw Leonard Cohen perform was at least 10 years ago at a nightclub in Washington, D.C.

During intermission, several of us in the audience struck up conversations and realized it had been almost a decade since we had seen him before that.

I had seen him in, I think, 1971 at Municipal Auditorium in Austin, Texas, where he invited the entire audience of several hundred people up onto the stage with him. When an authority figure was summoned and took control of the proceedings, Cohen led the audience out onto the lawn and continued the performance.

The enigmatic poet-songwriter-singer (listen to him and you'll know why "singer" is always mentioned last) makes a rare appearance, his first major American television appearance, this Saturday on PBS' "Austin City Limits."

The venue is appropriate. Cohen had an affection for Austin after that early '70s performance, when he was surprised by such a warm response from a Texas audience for a rather obscure, intellectual Canadian poet.

In one of his funny but occasionally obtuse monologues on Saturday's show, Cohen explains, "I've only had one tricky moment in this city. It was when we were passing a shoe hospital. One of my boots, which has a long history of hypochondria, cried out pitifully, and my whole catalog flashed before my eyes."

The audience responded enthusiastically to this anecdote. But some of them are inexplicably dressed in costumes — a young woman in a nun's robe, and a young man with a watermelon on his head, for instance. No kidding.

Cohen's recording career has been only slightly more prolific than his performing one. The TV appearance is no doubt prompted by the recent release of the well-received album, "I'm Your Man," which re-established Cohen as a champion of wry observation.

The only disappointment in Cohen's ACL appearance is that the hour-long set is almost all songs from "I'm Your Man," which is fine — it just would have been nice to hear more of the old songs, too. There are a couple.

A few songs into the performance, Cohen declares, "Austin is known as a seat of resistance," then launches into his haunting version of Anna Marly's "The Partisan," a tribute to a Resistance of another time, from his 1968 album "Songs From A Room": "When they poured across the border, I was cautioned to surrender, this I could not do. I took my gun and vanished. ... An old woman gave us shelter, kept us hidden in the garret, then the soldiers came. She died without a whisper. ..."

Cohen, 54, was born in Montreal and was known primarily as a poet and novelist ("Beautiful Losers") until Judy Collins recorded "Suzanne" in 1966 and launched his music career.

Dreams Fueled Reiner's Success

By Hillel Italie
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Carl Reiner's long career in show business has been a succession of possible dreams, from "Your Show of Shows," to the "Dick Van Dyke Show" and "The 2,000-Year-Old Man."

The dream began in the mid-1940s when he saw Sid Caesar in the musical, "Tars and Spars," and Reiner vowed to work with him some day. He would eventually become a key writer and performer on Caesar's "Your Show of Shows," the classic '50s TV comedy-variety program with Imogene Coca, and went on to create the "Dick Van Dyke Show" in the '60s.

He also starred in the hit film "The Russians Are Coming, The Russians Are Coming," and directed "Where's Poppa" and "All of Me" among other movies. His son, Rob, starred in the landmark television sitcom, "All in the Family," and is now a director in his own right.

But the 67-year-old Reiner hasn't lost his touch. Two years ago he went to see "Me and My Girl" and was overwhelmed by the show's star, Robert Lindsay.

"I said to my wife afterwards, 'Not since Dick Van Dyke have I seen a guy that intriguing.' He combined everything. He's a great actor. He learned to dance for 'Me and My Girl.' He had never danced professionally."

To Reiner's delight, Lindsay was open to working with him and stars in "Bert Rigby, You're a Fool," a musical-comedy that features the Tony Award winner's acting and dancing talents.

"When you see talent like Lindsay's, you have to get him in front of the public," said Reiner, who wrote and directed the film. "He's well known only in the theatrical circles, so we have to tell the world there's a new star on the horizon."

Helping others has been a trademark of Reiner since joining "Your Show of Shows" in 1950 and working with a high-powered writing team that included Mel Brooks and Neil Simon.

"We were all screaming towards the center, trying to get our jokes heard," Reiner recalled. "Neil Simon had a soft voice so I always spoke up for Neil."

He also played straight man to Brooks in the comedy sketch, "The 2,000 Year-Old Man," helping to launch the career of the director of such outrageous hits as "The Producers" and "Young Frankenstein."

"It's totally ad-libbed. I came into the office one day and heard something that bothered me on television, somebody who actually said they saw something that they couldn't have seen."

"I turned and said to Mel, 'So you were actually at the scene of the crucifixion,' and Mel said, (with a heavy accent) 'Oh boy, vat a day,' and for the rest of the day I interviewed him."

Reiner and Brooks performed the routine at private parties for several years until Steve Allen suggested they make a recording. "2,000 Years With Carl Reiner and Mel Brooks" was released in 1960 and was so popular that the pair recorded a number of sequels. By 1965, Reiner and Brooks had sold over 2 million records.

"Steve Allen said, 'Why don't you put on tape,'" Reiner recalled. "I said, 'This is nothing, this is for friends. But we went ahead and did a two-hour tape, which was cut down to 47 minutes. The rest is history.'"

Reiner stuck with Caesar through various incarnations of "Your Show of Shows," before taking a shot at a solo career in the late '50s. He had an idea about starring himself in a situation comedy about a television writer for the "Alan Brady Show," a variety program starring a talented but volatile man, a "benevolent dictator."

But Reiner realized he wasn't good enough to do it himself, so he turned to an unknown actor called Dick Van Dyke.

"Dick Van Dyke is one of the rare talents," said Reiner, who wrote 40 of the first 60 episodes himself. "He was what I call left-right coordinated. He can do anything, anything he's asked to do and he can do it very easily."

Critic Uses Acerbic Wit To Bash 'Formula Movies'

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SAN FRANCISCO — In a review late last year, Pauline Kael described the film "Rain Man" as "a wet piece of kitsch." She called Dustin Hoffman's portrayal of an autistic savant "a repetitive, boring feat" that masochists can regard as great acting.

"Rain Man" was a box-office hit and won four Academy Awards, including best picture and actor.

The review generated a goodly number of nasty letters to The New Yorker, where Kael's acerbic wit has made "The Current Cinema" one of the most consistently entertaining features in one of the world's most established magazines.

But "Rain Man" is hardly the only popular movie on Kael's hit list. Try these: "Three Fugitives," "Karate Kid," "Lean on Me" and another Oscar winner, "Terms of Endearment." The list goes on and on.

She fondly remembers a period not so long ago when theaters screened meatier American films such as "The Godfather," "Mean Streets" and "Taxi Driver." At the same time, Americans were willing to squint at subtitles so they could see the latest from Truffaut, Bertolucci and Godard.

"That was a period of the film generation and everyone was talking movies. If you went to a restaurant, everyone was arguing about 'Bonnie and Clyde' or something else. And people really got angry about movies in a way they don't today," she said.

"It's a terrible loss when people accept square, formula movies and don't complain, and don't say, 'Why don't we have some excitement on the screen?'"

She believes audiences bear a big share of the blame for the faltering quality of films, particularly younger filmgoers.

"You can't get college kids interested in going to any sort of daring movie now. They're perfectly willing to sit through the same old crap."

When you commit a crime and get nailed for it, you can have no cause for complaint. But when you do something eminently reasonable and get punished for that, you have the right to feel that the gods had turned against you.

West's double of one spade has the endorsement of this department. With ideal distribution for such action, not to double could lead to all sorts of complications later in the auction. North's jump to two no trump over the double showed a limit raise in spades (10-12 points). It's not a bid we would have chosen—theoretically, North promises a fourth trump.

West started with the king-ace of diamonds and a third round, ruffed by declarer. A low spade went to the queen and, since holding up the ace would make matters easy for declarer, East took his master trump and exited with a club. But that, too, gave the game away.

Since West could not have more than 10 working high cards for his takeout double, declarer was sure that he had to have the right shape to act. Therefore, he won the club return in dummy and ran the six of spades. When West showed out, declarer's card-reading was justified and the contract became easy to make. A trump continuation allowed declarer to pick up that suit for one loser, and dummy's ten of diamonds was there to take care of the third heart.

Had West kept silent in the auction, declarer would surely have gone wrong. He would have had no reason to expect a 4-1 trump split, so he would have lost two trump tricks for down one. Blame West if you wish, but we feel he was punished too harshly.

Monkey And The Eagle

By LeAnn Steinbeck

Once there was a monkey and an eagle. The monkey admired the eagle's being able to soar around the sky. The monkey didn't know it but the eagle admired the monkey's being able to swing from tree to tree by its long tail.

One day the monkey went to the eagle and said, "I wish

I could be more like you." The eagle laughed so hard he almost fell out of the tree. The monkey said, "What's so funny?"

The eagle said, "I was just thinking before you came over here that I wanted to be more like you."

"Well, why don't we change places for a day,"

"OK," said the eagle.

So the monkey tried and tried to fly off the ground but he couldn't. The eagle tried to swing from tree to tree but he couldn't. You should have been there. Feathers were flying everywhere! So when two hours passed the monkey went to the eagle and said,

"It was nice, but I think I like myself just the way I am."

Meeting A Space Monster

By Morgan Cable

One day I decided to go to the moon. That day I built my space ship. The next day I left to go to space. I rode for a long time. I saw some other planets. Finally, I reached the moon. I got out and looked at some rocks. I looked up and saw another spaceship landing. A space monster walked out and he scared me. He was green and had spots around his nose. I ran back to my spaceship and headed back to earth. When I got back I told my friends about the green monster I saw on the moon.

Pledge of Allegiance

When the people of the United States stand at a ball game or in a hall or classroom and Pledge Allegiance, they are promising their loyalty to the country.

The pledge was written by an associate editor of The Youth's Companion. Francis Bellamy of Boston wrote the pledge and it was first used at the dedication of the Chicago World's Fair on October 12, 1892. Children began to recite the Pledge of Allegiance in schools that same year when President Benjamin Harrison asked that it be used to help celebrate the 400 anniversary of the discovery of America.

It was not until 1945 that Congress adopted the pledge as official and by that time some changes in the wording had been made. It was President Dwight D. Eisenhower who had the words "under God" added to the pledge. This was done in the year 1954 on Flag Day (June 14).

Omar Chahid joins his wife Sheila behind the counter

International Fare Flavors Omar's Menu

By Cherie Evans
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

A little Greek, a little French and a little Italian create the taste at Omar's Sandwich Express.

The restaurant, located on Fifth Street in downtown Greenville, offers "something different" in addition to a list of contemporary foods such as grilled cheese, hamburgers and cheeseburgers, hot dogs and fish and chips.

Omar's offers such delicacies as Knackwurst, chicken on pita, Gyros, Souvlaki, spicy Cajun french fries and shrimp eggrolls — to name a few.

Omar Chahid, who owns the restaurant with his cousin, Ali Chahid, said they combine Italian breads with Greek spices and French cooking to create a variety of tastes.

Souvlaki is a popular sandwich that is made with pita bread, marinated beef, lettuce, tomato and a "secret" sauce, Omar said. The Greek salad, also popular with customers, is made with fresh lettuce, tomatoes, Kalamati olives, feta cheese, olive oil with wine vinegar, red cabbage, green pepper, onion, oregano and peperoncini.

Baklava, a dessert served in the restaurant, is a pastry made with struden dough, walnuts, almonds, honey, butter, fresh lemon and cinnamon.

The atmosphere also offers variety for customers, Omar said. "You feel like you're at home," he said explaining the restaurant has a large-screen television and music from the record collection of WZMB radio station at East Carolina University.

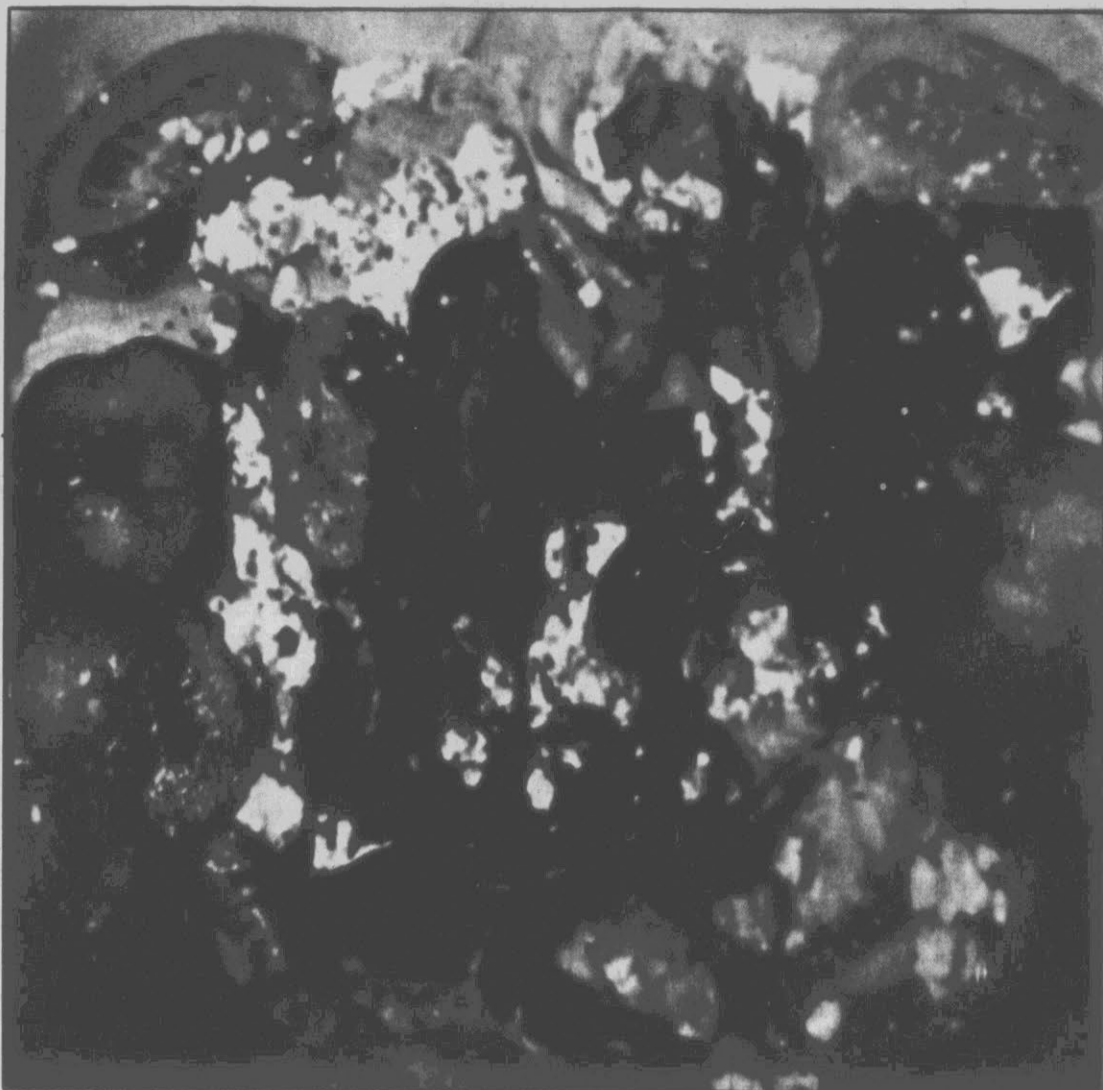

"Why leave," said Jeanna Shallcross, who calls herself Omar's best customer. She said she had all she needed with the television, her books and food while eating recently at the restaurant.

Omar said his customers range from the professionals downtown to the students at ECU. The restaurant "is in the center of everything," he said.

Professionals frequent the restaurant at lunch, while students are there throughout the day but especially in the evenings, he said. "It's hard for the students to get into town from campus if they have a 15 to 20 minute break" during the day, he said.

Omar and Ali, both from French Mirroco, learned cooking skills at home and in Chapel Hill.

Omar said he has been in the United States for eight years and has managed the Casa Blanca restaurant and has worked in the Crook's Corner in Chapel Hill. He also was an owner of Hector's.

Ali has been in the United States more than two years and also worked at Hector's before coming to Greenville.

A late night drive with his wife, Sheila, prompted Omar to consider opening a restaurant in Greenville, he said. Sheila is a Greenville native and is a North Pitt High School graduate.

"If you want something to eat late at night there's no where to eat in Greenville," he said. Seeing the opportunity to capitalize on late-night hunger pains, Omar decided to open the restaurant that closes at 2 a.m. Monday through Thursday, at 3 a.m. Friday and Saturday, and at 1 a.m. Sunday. It opens at 11 a.m. each day.

Omar said they hope to expand their business to other towns and cities housing universities.

Vineyard Creates Its Own Garden

By Carol Deegan
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Nationally recognized as one of California's premier vintners, Fetzer Vineyards sees its future in the discovery and appreciation of food and wine.

Fetzer, which is 100 percent family-owned and operated, sold 1.5 million cases of wine in 1988. All but one of the 11 children of Kathleen and the late Barney Fetzer work for the company, which has three major ranches and two wineries in Northern California's Mendocino County.

While Fetzer's wine sales are on the rise, says Jim Fetzer, company president, the wine industry as a whole is shrinking. "If we're going to continue to grow," he said in an interview here, "we feel the future of our business is food."

To complement the production of its premium varietal wines, Fetzer founded the Valley Oaks Food & Wine Center in 1985. Located in the town of Hopland, the Food & Wine Center combines vineyards with an organic garden and a demonstration kitchen.

"We figured we needed to get involved in food, and more so than just saying that our wines are food wines and here are some recipes to go with them," Fetzer explained. "So what we decided to do is to build a food and wine center. It's a place where we can share information and education relating to food and wine and how they relate to each other and complement each other."

Much of what goes on at the Food & Wine Center is focused on Fetzer's 5-acre organic garden.

"The main heartbeat of the operation we felt should be the garden," Fetzer says. "We'd build this garden, and we would incorporate fruits, vegetables, herbs and edible flowers — we focused on those things."

Expert gardener Michael Maltas was brought in to create the garden, which flourishes today.

"We're growing right now about 2,000 varieties throughout the year in the different seasons," Fetzer said. "For example, apples, we have 85 varieties; we do 60 varieties of melons a year; we do 35 varieties of plums; we do eight varieties of basil, so it kind of gives you an idea of what we're doing there."

Public tours are given twice each day.

The Valley Oaks Food & Wine Center also includes a conference center with meeting rooms for food and beverage executive training programs. Fetzer Vineyards has been working with major hotels, helping to train chefs, as well as with other smaller, regional restaurant groups.

Adjacent to the organic garden is the center's 100-seat, pagoda-style, dining pavilion-demonstration kitchen. Plans for the kitchen and garden include a series of events highlighting guest chefs, cooking demonstrations, and garden seminars for the trade, press and consumer.

"We can bring chefs in, or the trade, or the public, and we can pick the fresh ingredients from the garden, take them right into the kitchen, and this is all organically done," Fetzer says, "so there's no synthetic chemicals."

The produce used at Fetzer's Sundial Grill, located next to the Fetzer Wine Tasting Room complex in Hopland, comes from the organic garden. The chefs at the Sundial Grill work closely with Maltas in varietal selection for the restaurant.

Fetzer considers the Fetzer style and consistency as a major contributor to the success of his family's business.

Many Adults Ignore Mom's Rule: Eat Your Vegetables!

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Eat your vegetables. That's what researchers across the country are telling us. These nourishing, low-calorie foods are an important part of a balanced diet.

The U.S. Department of Agriculture recommends three to five servings of vegetables each day. Yet, a national dietary survey indicates that many adults are ignoring this advice.

The Second National Health and Nutrition Examination Survey was conducted from 1976 to 1980. An analysis of this survey was published recently in the American Journal of Public Health.

On the day of the study, 20 percent of the adult population between the ages of 19 to 74 did not include even one vegetable in their diet. Fewer than 30 percent ate orange, deep yellow or dark green vegetables like carrots, squash, broccoli and collard greens.

It's important to include vegetables in the daily diet because they provide needed vitamins, fiber and minerals.

Beta carotene, which is a good source of vitamin A, is found in spinach, carrots and sweet potatoes. Vitamin A helps maintain good vision, and it is essential for the proper functioning of many body organs.

Spinach contains B vitamins, such as folacin and B6. Calcium is found in collard greens and mustard greens. Vitamin C is found in broccoli, sweet green and red peppers, and dark green leafy vegetables like kale and collards.

Cruciferous vegetables — vegetables with four-petaled or crosslike leaves — provide fiber, vitamins and minerals. These vegetables include broccoli, cauliflower, brussels sprouts and cabbage.

One serving of vegetables equals ½ cup cooked or ½ cup chopped raw vegetables, or 1 cup of leafy raw vegetables such as lettuce or spinach.

The U.S. Department of Agriculture says adults should try to include each of these five types of vegetables regularly in their diet:

— Dark green vegetables: broccoli, spinach or collard greens.

— Deep yellow vegetables: carrots, winter squash or sweet potatoes.

— Dry beans and peas: split peas, lentils or pinto beans.

— Starchy vegetables: potatoes or corn.

— Other vegetables: cabbage, eggplant, mushrooms and lettuce.

While it might not be practical to toss a head of lettuce into your briefcase or lunch bag, there are easy ways to include more vegetables in your diet.

Marilyn Carnell of Campbell Soup Co.'s Consumer Nutrition Center suggests munching on fresh cut-up vegetables or drinking a box of vegetable juice, instead of snacking on candies.

At the salad bar, limit calorie-laden items like mayonnaise-based salads, fried croutons, creamy salad dressings and bacon bits. Select cruciferous vegetables like broccoli and cauliflower.

Try new vegetables in salads and stir-fry dishes. Jicama, radicchio and bok choy, which were once found only in gourmet or ethnic food stores, are now available in supermarkets.

Diet And Disease Are Linked

Another group of scientists have issued a report on the relationships between what we eat and the diseases we get. Dr. Barney Kane in ECU's Environmental Health Department suggested I share those guidelines with you. Fortunately these guidelines are consistent with the recommendations I have been giving you over the last two years. Here they are paraphrased by a writer for Science magazine.

•Reduce cholesterol to less than 300 milligrams a day.

•Eat five or more servings a day of vegetables and fruit, especially green and yellow vegetables and citrus fruit.

•Don't eat more than 6 ounces of protein a day.

•Don't drink if you can help it. If you must, stick to two beers, two glasses of wine, or two cocktails a day.

•Stick with fluoridated water.

•And forget about that daily vitamin pill. Just one a day won't do you any good. An excess might make you sick.

Kathy Kolasa

Ph.D., ECU Dept. Family Medicine

If you follow this good- and familiar advice you may lower your risks of getting these chronic diseases: heart disease; cancer of the colon, prostate, and breast; stroke and diseases of the peripheral arteries; hypertension; obesity; osteoporosis; diabetes; gallbladder and liver disease; and cavities. However, the National Academy of Sciences, the scientist nor I promise eternal life if you follow these suggestions.

The new report states clearly that although diet counts in preventing disease, genes do too.

If you want to order the report which is more than 1000 pages long, copies cost $45 each and are available from the National Academy Press, 2101 Constitution Avenue, NW, Washington, D.C. 20418. Ask for the Food and Drug Nutrition Board, National Research Council, Diet and Health: Implications for Reducing Chronic Disease Risk. This is a scholarly rather than a consumer report.

You can continue to read in this column, suggestions on how we can best put into practice these dietary recommendations.

A few weeks ago I wrote about being solicited for money to study how diet affects cancer. I've learned how to check out charities to determine the type of job they are doing. The Philanthropic Advisory Service of the Council of Better Business Bureaus, 1515 Wilson Blvd., Arlington, VA 22209, (703) 276-0100, review charities. Our own attorney general's office may also have a review of specific charities operating in our state. I still don't have an answer about the cancer group asking for your donations to study food and cancer. We're still tracking it down.

Dried Tomatoes Move From Stylish To Staple

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

HEALDSBURG, Calif. — Dried tomatoes have been a regular part of the Mediterranean diet for centuries. Before the invention of canning, refrigeration or the year-round availability of fresh tomatoes, sun-drying tomatoes was a method of preserving the bountiful summer crop for later consumption.

Dried tomatoes were introduced in the United States by Dean and Deluca, a New York-based specialty-food company. The rich, sweet flavor of these tomatoes was initially discovered by restaurateurs who found them to be compatible with the "New American" cuisine. Chefs from New York to California began using these sun-dried products to add color and exciting flavor to pastas, salads, pizzas and sauces.

In the last eight years, dried tomatoes have become increasingly available in gourmet shops and supermarkets, and consumers are using them in everything from soups and casseroles to pastas. You can use marinated dried tomatoes anywhere you would use a marinated artichoke; minced dried tomato bits can be used like bacon bits.

What are dried tomatoes? They are simply height-of-season, vine-ripened tomatoes, cut in half and dehydrated, either in the sun or in a dehydrator. Although one might associate the color and appearance of dried tomatoes with those of a chili pepper, dried tomatoes are not spicy. When the tomatoes are harvested for drying, they contain 5 percent to 7 percent natural sugar, making them sweet and flavorful.

The following suggestions for using dried tomatoes are provided by Timber Crest Farms, located in Sonoma County, Calif., makers of Sonoma dried tomatoes:

DRIED TOMATOES:
(Reconstitute in boiling water and drain as package directs):

Rosy salad dressing: Puree tomato halves with fresh garlic, dry mustard and freshly ground pepper. Mix with mayonnaise and thin with milk. Drizzle over crisp greens.

Tomato potatoes: For scalloped potatoes with a difference, arrange tomato halves between layers of sliced potatoes before baking.

Pasta pizzazz: Add a handful of tomato halves, some chopped anchovies, minced garlic and parsley, and a drizzle of olive oil to hot cooked pasta. Toss well and serve.

DRIED TOMATO BITS:
Sonoma scramble: Add a sprinkle of tomato bits and freshly chopped herbs to scrambled eggs before cooking.

Speckled salad: Add tomato bits, sliced ripe olives and capers to your favorite potato, egg or chicken salads.

Saucy Tom: Add tomato bits to cheese sauces. Serve over steamed vegetables.

Food Business Is Not An Easy Path To Success

By Caroline E. Mayer
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

You've got a great family recipe for salad dressing, barbecue sauce, chocolate chip cookies — you name it. You've been making it for years for family and friends, and they all keep telling you it's so good you should go into business.

The kudos finally get to you. You decide to launch a business with dreams of becoming the next Silver Palate or Dove Bars, both mom-and-pop operations that grew into successful companies and were bought out by large food corporations for millions of dollars.

Stop! Is this really what you want to do? From those who have been there — and there have been hundreds — comes this oft-repeated advice: Think twice, if not more.

"Tell them not to start," warned Leyla O'Day, the founder and owner of Mrs. O'Day's Delightful Cookies. "You have to be very young, very energetic, determined and have enough faith to do it. And forget about going out anywhere. You are locked into the business," added the 53-year-old Turkish immigrant, whose 2-year-old company sells 14,000 cookies a week through Washington-area supermarkets.

"Don't" is the simple advice from Kathleen Marquardt, who with her husband launched Cyrenic Gourmet Condiments in 1983. "We had a product line that everybody raved about — bread-and-butter onion rings, peach butter, blueberry chutney, seasoned vinegars, mustards and seasoned oils."

But the cost of producing their goods the way they wanted — with fancy labels in top-of-the-line packages, and in an up-to-date kitchen that had the necessary federal and local health approvals — was so high that the business was unprofitable. The Marquardts sank about $150,000 into the business before they shut down their operations about a year after they started.

That's not to say it's impossible for individual entrepreneurs to enter the food business — and with a far smaller investment than the Marquardts'. In fact, many entrepreneurs say it is possible to launch a business with about $7,000 to $10,000. But even then, it is a long, hard struggle.

Chalif Inc., a mustard and gourmet-sauce manufacturer outside Philadelphia, has been in business since 1981. Despite winning specialty-food industry awards for its product, it only now is climbing out of the red ink. "We're about to be profitable," said Liz Thomas, who began the company with her husband with an old, secret family recipe.

Mom's Apple Pie, also begun in 1981 in Washington, is regarded as one of the area's more successful small operations, selling about $1 million in pies, breads and fruit-cakes a year.

"We're successful, but we're struggling," says founder Avis Renshaw, who with her husband, Steven Cox, began by selling pies in farmers' markets.

Although some years have been profitable, "we're break-even right now," she said, because of a $75,000 investment made last year for some new equipment in their commercial kitchen in Herndon, Va. "We had to mortgage our house" to get the bank financing for it, she said.

Although having a good recipe is critical to success, it appears to be the easiest part of starting a business.

"A good recipe is almost the last of your needs," noted Barry Wax, who has seen many start-up food businesses come and go in his position as head of Kitchen Privileges, a commercial kitchen that rents space to food entrepreneurs.

Even with a good recipe, "there is still a lot of work to be done. You have to translate it into mass production, marketing and distribution," and all the while meet local and federal regulations, Wax said. But he quickly added, "If you can do the packaging, marketing, promotion and distribution well, you can sell anything."

In fact, enthusiasm is perhaps the single most important key to entering — and surviving in — the food business. Talk to Jennifer Beebe of Bethesda, Md., and you understand why Giant Food supermarkets agreed to help her sell her sweet sesame dressing.

"I had been making the dressing for years, and every time I made it, I was getting accolades," said the 31-year-old former telecommunications sales representative. Her spirited sales pitch for the dressing convinced Giant officials to help get her started two years ago.

"She could sell ice cubes in Alaska," commented M. Davis Herriman, Giant's vice president for grocery operations. Herriman put her in touch with a food processor to make the dressing and loaned Giant's help in designing Beebe's labels.

Herriman admitted that Beebe's Gourmet Salad Dressings, which now number three different flavors, have never been big sellers, partly because they are very sweet. But that fact has not hurt Beebe's, which now is using its Giant connection to gain entry to other supermarkets. "You have to be pretty aggressive and persistent," said Beebe, who remains optimistic.

It's hard to calculate precisely how many entrepreneurs there are like Beebe, because there is no one organization that keeps tabs on new food companies. But if membership in the National Association for Specialty Food Trade, a group many new companies join to market their products, is an indication, it is clear that there is a growing number of start-up food entrepreneurs across the country.

"Within the past two years, we've had a cord number of applications," said Ron Tanner, communications director for the association. Where 75 companies applied for membership in the early 1980s, 250 applied last year, Tanner says. "And that number is a lot smaller than what's really happening. There are a whole lot more people doing business locally that we don't know about."

Of the start-ups, "only a small percentage make it," noted Ann Brody, a food consultant who has advised scores of companies on how to start or expand a business. "Less than 1 percent of those who have the dream make it," she said. "There are companies I know of that have been in the business for five to six years, and they still haven't seen black on the bottom line. I don't know how they can make it," she added.

With the rash of new products being introduced on the supermarket shelves, even the large food companies, such as Campbell Soup Co., are finding it increasingly difficult to win acceptance for their new offerings. As a result, many have cut back on the number of new products they plan to introduce this year.

For the small companies, though, one of the biggest problems is the lack of a realistic financial plan, Brody noted. "They wind up paying themselves so little they get a false sense of security of what real profitability is. They also don't allocate money for salaries," so when business picks up, they have no funds to hire additional employees to help meet demand. "They end up burning themselves out, paying themselves nothing and getting disgusted after a while," Brody said.

But even for those who do have financial plans, obtaining money has been the biggest challenge.

Lavish Torte A Perfect Dessert

By Nancy Byal
BETTER HOMES AND GARDENS

Special occasion coming up? This lavish torte will be the perfect dessert. It's a hassle-free choice because you bake the cake and assemble the layers a day ahead. The easy whipped cream frosting goes on before dinner. Add a spiral of raspberry jam at serving time.

ALMOND RASPBERRY TORTE

- 1 1/2 cups all-purpose flour
- 2 1/4 tps. baking powder
- 1/4 tsp. salt
- 3/4 cup margarine or butter
- 1 cup sugar
- 1 1/2 tps. vanilla

- 3 eggs
- 3/4 cup milk
- 1/2 cup seedless red raspberry jam
- Almond Filling (recipe follows)
- 1 1/4 cups whipping cream
- Toasted sliced almonds
- 1/4 cup seedless red raspberry jam

Grease and lightly flour two 9-inch round cake pans; set aside. Stir together flour, baking powder and salt. In large mixer bowl beat margarine on medium speed about 30 seconds. Add sugar and vanilla; beat until well combined.

Add eggs, one at a time, beating after each addition. Add dry ingredients and milk alternately to beaten mixture. (Batter may appear curdled.) Spread batter in prepared pans. Bake in 375-degree F oven for 20 to 25 minutes or until a wooden toothpick inserted in the center comes out clean. Cool 10 minutes in pans on wire racks. Remove from pans; cool completely.

Cut cake layers in half horizontally. Stir the 1/2 cup jam. To assemble, spread one cake layer with one-third of Almond Filling, then with 2 rounded tablespoons jam. Repeat layering 2 more times. Top with final cake layer. Cover cake tightly and refrigerate at least 6 hours or overnight.

No more than 1 hour before serving, beat cream to stiff peaks; spread over cake. Press almonds around base of cake. Just before serving, stir remaining jam. Drizzle on top of cake. Serve at once. Makes 10 servings.

Almond Filling

In a small mixer bowl crumble one 8-ounce can almond paste. With an electric mixer beat in 1-3rd cup softened margarine or butter. Add 2 tablespoons milk; beat until smooth.

Beefy Main Dish Tastes Great, Is Easy To Make

By Nancy Byal
BETTER HOMES AND GARDENS

This hearty main dish, one of our most-requested recipes, is a 20-year favorite. Folks like the robust beef flavor and easy preparation. Top it with the biscuit lattice given here, or dollop with mashed potatoes and sprinkle with shredded cheese.

LATTICE-TOPPED HAMBURGER PIE

- 1 lb. ground beef
- 1 large onion, chopped (1 cup)
- 3/4 cup chopped celery
- 1/2 cup chopped green pepper
- 1 clove garlic, minced
- 2 tps. chili powder
- 1/2 tsp. pepper
- One 10 3/4-oz. can condensed tomato soup

- 1 cup loose-pack frozen cut green beans
- 1 cup all-purpose flour
- 1 tsp. baking powder
- 1/2 tsp. salt
- 1/4 cup finely shredded American cheese
- 2 tps. shortening
- 1/2 cup milk

In a large skillet cook beef, onion, celery, green pepper and garlic until beef is brown and vegetables are tender. Drain off fat. Stir in chili powder and pepper; cook 1 minute. Add soup and green beans; bring just to boiling. Turn into an 8- by 1 1/2-inch round baking dish.

Meanwhile, for crust, in mixing bowl stir together flour, baking powder and salt. Cut in cheese and shortening. Add milk; mix well. Form into a ball. On a lightly floured surface roll crust to a 9-inch square about 1/4 inch thick. Using fluted pastry wheel or knife, cut into eight 1/2-inch-wide strips. Weave strips on top of casserole, forming lattice crust. Trim strips at casserole edge, pressing down slightly. Bake, uncovered, in 425-degree F oven 15 minutes or until golden. Makes 4 servings.

Casseroles Signal Return To Homemade Tradition

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Casseroles are appearing on family dinner and restaurant tables faster than we can say "chicken a la king."

John Celauro, executive vice president of 4C Foods, attributes this trend to robust, hearty and homemade fare to a return to tradition, including "comfort foods."

The following are some suggestions for quick and easy vegetable casseroles, provided by 4C FOODS.

BROCCOLI ONION DELIGHT

- 3 cups steamed fresh broccoli (chopped)
- 2 cups whole small onions
- 2 tbsps. butter or margarine
- 2 tbsps. flour
- 1/4 tsp. salt
- Dash pepper
- 1 cup milk
- One 3-oz. package cream cheese
- 2 tbsps. melted butter

- 1 cup 4C Plain Bread Crumbs
- 1/4 cup grated Parmesan cheese

Chop broccoli into medium-sized pieces. Steam, then drain. Boil onions in salted water until tender, about 10 minutes. Drain. In saucepan, melt butter or margarine. Blend in flour, salt and pepper. Add milk. Cook and stir until bubbly. Reduce heat. Blend in cream cheese until smooth. Stir in vegetables.

Turn into 1 1/2-quart casserole dish. Bake in 325-degree F oven for 25 minutes. May be prepared ahead and refrigerated at this point. When ready to serve, toss melted butter or margarine with bread crumbs and grated Parmesan cheese. Sprinkle over casserole. Bake 20 minutes more or until hot. Serves 10.

MUSHROOM CASSEROLE

- 1 lb. whole fresh mushrooms,

- cleaned and trimmed
- 1/2 cup chopped onions
- 1/2 cup butter
- 1 cup beef bouillon
- 2 tbsps. flour
- 1/2 tsp. marjoram
- 2 tbsps. dry sherry
- 2 tbsps. snipped parsley
- 1/2 cup 4C Redi-Flavored Bread Crumbs
- 2 tbsps. grated Parmesan cheese
- 1 tbsps. melted butter

In saucepan saute mushrooms and onions in butter. Combine bouillon and flour, making a smooth paste and add with marjoram to sauteed vegetables. Stir and cook until thickened. Remove from heat, stir in sherry and parsley. Pour into 1 1/2 quart casserole or deep pie dish. Combine bread crumbs, cheese and melted butter and sprinkle on top. Bake at 350 degrees F for 15-20 minutes or until bubbly.

FESTIVAL TAMALE PIE

- 1 lb. ground beef
- 1/4 lb. pork sausage
- One 1-lb. can tomatoes
- One 12-oz. can corn niblets
- 1 1/2 tps. chili powder
- 1 1/2 tps. salt
- 18 pitted ripe green olives
- 3/4 cup 4C Redi-Flavored Bread Crumbs
- 1 cup milk
- 2 eggs, well beaten
- 1 cup grated Cheddar cheese (6 ounces)

Brown beef and sausage in large skillet; drain off fat. Add tomatoes, corn, chili powder and salt. Bring to a boil. Pour into 9-inch square baking dish. Press olives into mixture. Combine bread crumbs with milk and eggs. Spoon over meat mixture. Sprinkle with cheese. Bake in preheated 350-degree F oven for 1 hour. Makes 6 to 8 servings.

High-Energy Meals Easy

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Want to cut the fat content of the foods you eat?

For high-energy meals, Jeff Billone, chef at the Palm-Aire Spa Report and Hotel in Pompano Beach, Fla., often serves pasta dishes: His vegetable lasagna, which is only 175 calories per serving, is one of the Palm-Aire Spa's most popular dinners.

The following are recipes for Vegetable Lasagna and Spa Tomato Sauce that are used in Billone's lasagna.

GET-INTO-SHAPE VEGETABLE LASAGNA

- 1 cup cottage cheese
- 3/4 cup Jarlsberg cheese, shredded
- 2 egg whites
- Dash of black pepper
- 1 tsp. oregano
- 1 tsp. chopped garlic
- 1 tsp. fresh parsley
- Two 16-oz. cans low-sodium mixed vegetables
- Tomato sauce (recipe follows)
- 1 lb. lasagna noodles, cooked and drained

Preheat oven to 350 degrees F. Mix cottage cheese, 1/2 cup Jarlsberg cheese, 2 egg whites and all seasonings in blender until smooth.

Drain and rinse vegetables and set aside. Lightly coat 13-by-9-by-2-inch baking pan with tomato sauce. Place one layer of lasagna noodles side by side, lengthwise, in bottom of pan. On top of noodles, spread 1 can mixed vegetables and ladle over 3/4 cup tomato sauce. Spread half the cheese mixture evenly over vegetables and sauce to form the next layer. Add another layer of lasagna noodles, the remaining can of vegetables, another layer of sauce and remaining cheese mixture. Cover with layer of lasagna noodles. Top with a layer of tomato sauce and sprinkle on remaining shredded Jarlsberg cheese. Bake at 350 degrees F for about 45 minutes. Serves 9.

SPA TOMATO SAUCE

- 1/4 cup chopped onions
- 2 cloves garlic
- 1 tbsps. olive oil
- Three 16-oz. cans no-salt-added tomatoes
- Two 15-oz. cans low-sodium tomato juice
- 1 tbsps. canned tomato puree
- 8 basil leaves
- 1 tsp. dried oregano
- 1 tsp. dried thyme
- 1 tsp. black pepper
- 1 bay leaf

Saute onions and garlic in olive oil in medium (5-quart) saucepan on medium heat. Add all canned tomato products and seasonings. Once sauce begins to simmer, turn to medium-low heat, cover, and stir occasionally. Can be used in pasta dishes as well as vegetable lasagna. Makes 4 cups.
