Rough Water Helps Break Up Part Of Exxon Oil Spill

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

VALDEZ, Alaska — Bad weather turned into good news for the effort to clean up the nation's worst oil spill as a rough sea became a churning caldron that helped break up part of the Exxon Valdez slick.

Exxon, meanwhile, said it will reimburse the government for the costs of military assistance ordered by President Bush but would write off the charges from taxes.

"In the normal course of things, cost of doing business is deducted from your income tax and that is how it is expressed to customers," said Don Cornett, the company's top Alaska executive.

The spill has killed thousands of birds and animals, and gasoline prices in the United States have surged in the wake of the disaster.

U.S. Transportation Secretary Samuel Skinner warned oil companies against using the spill as an excuse to raise prices.

"If they're doing it, they're making a big mistake," he told reporters in Cincinnati. "I hope the oil industry isn't foolish enough — and I don't think they are, I haven't seen any proof of it — to think they can take advantage of the situation at Valdez to raise prices unnecessarily."

The Coast Guard said Monday the oil had stalled from its southwesterly move toward Kodiak Island, the nation's richest fishing port last year. It said the oil was breaking into tar balls, which sink.

"The weather is breaking up the slick, and that's good," said Coast Guard spokesman Rick Meidt.

In addition, the goop had traveled no further southwest than Gore Point, about 80 miles northeast of Kodiak, in three days.

"The weather did get very rough out there," said Hal Alabaster, spokesman for the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration. "Under certain conditions these weather factors could be very beneficial."

Officials will have to wait for a break in the weather to see how successful waves and winds were at breaking up the spill.

There was some concern that as two storms moved closer to land, higher waves in Prince William Sound could wash oil over booms protecting spawning areas.

"If the storm is a severe one, we'll see some more beaches impacted," said state cleanup coordinator Jim Hayden.

Still, Hayden said the fisheries were well-defended and boats were being moved from fish-rich Sawmill Bay to other heavily oiled areas.

Spotter flights over the spill were canceled Monday but the weather did not curtail boom-laying operations.

Med District Study Team Recalled

By Greg Laudick
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

The Greenville City Council on Monday decided to resurrect the committee which originally studied land-use zoning in the Medical District.

That unanimous decision came after council members expressed dissatisfaction with the results of a council subcommittee's recommendation that almost all non-medically related special uses be deleted from the highly-restrictive MD-2 zoning district.

"I think there is still a lot of confusion," said Council member Bill Hadden.

Subsequently, Mayor Ed Carter suggested that the Medical District Land Use Study Committee be reconvened to study the land uses which have occurred near Pitt County Memorial Hospital since the time the plan was originally put together in 1985.

"A letter will be sent back to Janice Faulkner (chairman of the original committee) which will ask her to reconvene the commission and meet with the council at some future date so that they can get their charge," Carter said.

Carter said any suggestions proposed by the committee would then proceed through the normal channels including consideration by the city's Planning and Zoning Commission.

Meanwhile, the subcommittee's recommendation will be removed from the agenda of Thursday's monthly council meeting. The recommendation was to be considered for approval at that meeting.

Texasgulf Marks Anniversary

By Carol Tyer
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

WASHINGTON, N.C. — An official of Texasgulf Phosphate Production Co. of Aurora underlined the firm's "commitment for tomorrow" at a gathering launching Texasgulf's yearlong celebration of its 25th year in Beaufort County.

Thomas J. Regan Jr., vice president for phosphate production, made the remarks during a luncheon given for governmental officials and the press Monday by Texasgulf at the Washington Yacht and Country Club.

Texasgulf's mining practices have drawn continuing opposition from environmentalists, fishermen and other residents and observers of the Pamlico River. But the company was nevertheless applauded by area leaders who attended the luncheon.

Grace Bonner, mayor of Aurora for the past 16 years, said the company has greatly benefited the economy of her town in the 25 years that either she or her husband Frank, who was mayor for 10 years before her, have led the town.

Ledrew Buck, a resident of the Bear Creek community, addressed the positive difference now over 25 year ago in job prospects for Beaufort County residents who choose to stay in the county once they've completed their education. He credited Texasgulf with creating much of that difference.

Washington, N.C., newspaper publisher Ashley Futrell and state Rep. Howard Chapin also discussed the company's contributions to the area's economy. Chapin said he has

Farmville Student Contradicts Drug Report

By Cherie Evans
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

The president of the Student Government Association at Farmville Central High School contradicted comments made by a fellow student by telling the Pitt County Board of Education that the drug problem at the school is not as bad as it has been portrayed.

During the board's regular monthly meeting held Monday at Farmville Central, Allen Lewis told the board that students at the school "completely disagree" with comments made by Allen Wooten during the board's March meeting.

Wooten told the board in March that the drug problem at Farmville Central and at other schools is extensive. He suggested that schools be searched more often by school officials, law enforcement officers and drug dogs and that drug intervention and prevention programs be implemented at the high school level.

But Lewis said Monday that "the comments that were made (by Wooten) were untrue and unfounded." He acknowledged there is a drug problem at Farmville Central but "the drug situation is not as bad as in other places."

He said that 75 percent of the school's student body signed a petition noting that the drug problem at the school is not as bad as Wooten suggested. The students have been trying to improve the drug problem in the school through several activities, including making a commercial on the affects of drugs, Lewis said.

"Now it seems all of our efforts have been forgotten," Lewis said.

Vickie Mercer, a sophomore at the school, told the board Monday that Wooten's comments may not represent the opinions of all of the students but "I believe he was correct in presenting his opinion," she said. "His goal was to voice his own opinion and no one else's."

She said there was no need for a petition to counter Wooten's comments. She also said the petition was invalid because many of the students who signed it weren't interested or even aware of what the petition was about.

In other matters Monday, the board appointed its attorney, Phillip Dixon of Dixon, Duffus & Doub, to the Pitt Community College Board of Trustees, filling the vacancy left by Clifton Everett who died in February as chairman of the PCC board.

Prefacing her motion to accept the recommendation of school administrators to appoint Dixon to the PCC board, board member Mary Williams said the school board needed to be "more open" in its appointments.

She noted that the PCC trustees appointed by the school board "seem to be appointed for life."

"We need a more diversified board," she said.

Spring Snow Slushes Eastern N. Carolina

By Carol Tyer
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Pitt County residents awoke this morning to a late spring snowfall that may be one of the latest ever in this area.

At 5 a.m. snow was falling, not in flakes, but in tufts. Fluffy balls of the white stuff was sticking on grass and structures, but not adhering to pavement. The loosely packed crystals were easily brushed off car windshields, and driving was hampered no more than by rain.

Temperatures were in the 40s and snow-laden branches of fully blooming azaleas and dogwoods were studies in the unpredictable nature of weather.

While there appear to be no official records kept in the area on late snowfalls, some weather watchers remember snow falling in April on other occasions.

According to Sam Uzzell, county agricultural extension agent, the snow so far has done no harm to plants. The danger might come tonight, he said, when it's predicted that skies will clear and colder temperatures will prevail.

"So many plants are blooming now," Uzzell said, "and some are even setting fruit. I'd advise people to cover with cloth or whatever they can every plant they care about. Trapping some warmth from the ground might well make the difference in whether we'll see fruit later in the year."

Uzzell said that if the temperature drops just a few degrees below freezing and a "little bit of breeze" is present, plants might be all right anyway. "It's a still, cold night we fear," he said.

Pitt County schools delayed one hour in opening this morning "just as a precaution," said Barry Gaskins, public information officer. He said at mid-morning there were no plans to close schools early this afternoon.

The Greenville Utilities water plant staff measured the precipitation for the 24-hour period from 7 a.m. Monday to 7 a.m. today at .75 inches. Temperatures fluctuated from 41 to 53 degrees.

The Tar River stands at 15.4 feet above sea level, according to the weather plant staff.

Fusion Testing Succeeds

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

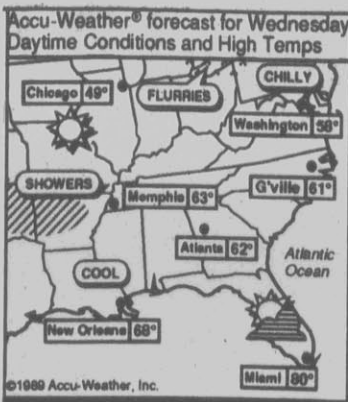

ATLANTA — The container holding heavy water and an electrode resembled a high school chemistry experiment. Only the beeps of a neutron counter showed that nuclear fusion might really be happening at room temperature.

"There's no question it's fusion," said Bill Livesay, a metallurgist who worked on the project at Georgia Institute of Technology here. "I still don't believe it, even though I see it."

Researchers at Georgia Tech and at Texas A&M University in College Station, Texas, on Monday announced the results of separate experiments that they said appeared to confirm a University of Utah experiment that aroused tremendous

Housing Units OK'd

The Ayden Board of Commissioners has passed a resolution endorsing a request for 30 additional low-income housing units.

The board, which also serves as the town's housing authority, passed the measure at its regular meeting Monday.

Town Clerk Ralph Ford said the town will submit the request to the federal Department of Housing and Urban Development and should receive notice on the application in the fall.

The board also voted to submit an application for Community Development Block Grant funds for the Venters Street area. The application includes a request for funding for downtown revitalization projects.

The board continued a public hearing on a rezoning request to May 8. Joseph Don Speight had requested that a tract of land on East Third Street be rezoned from R-10 to R-8 to allow for apartments and duplexes.

Speight was not able to attend the meeting, and residents and board members had questions about the size and number of multifamily dwellings planned for the area, Ford said.

Robersonville Hospital Closes

By Jerry Raynor
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

ROBERSONVILLE — The administrator of Robersonville Community Hospital said today that, due to a depletion of funds, the 12-bed hospital has temporarily closed "until such time as conditions make it possible to reopen the facility."

Linda Whitaker said that, following a special meeting of the hospital's board last week, chaired by Doug Damren, the decision was made to close the hospital at 5 p.m. last Friday.

Ms. Whitaker said that board members felt it was wise to close at this time rather than to continue to build up an indebtedness.

"There is simply no way at this time that we could continue operating on a daily basis," Ms. Whitaker said. "It took all the funds we had to pay IRS, and that still left us with an indebtedness of $175,000."

Stressing that the closure is looked on as temporary, Ms. Whitaker said, "We have applied for both state and federal grants and hope that something will materialize soon to make it possible to reopen."

"Our main concern is that the facility is needed especially to serve emergency situations. Although Robersonville is a small town, it has the heaviest concentration of industry in Martin County, and we feel

Ms. Zamora will measure the body composition of approximately 400 men to test the validity and reliability of a near-infrared spectrophotometry device. Her research will be supervised by Dr. Richard Gay Israel of the ECU Department of Health, Physical Education, Recreation and Safety.

In addition to her studies, Ms. Zamora works as a research assistant in the ECU Human Performance Laboratory. She is an alumna of Arkansas State University where she received a bachelor's degree in zoology in 1986.

it is essential to have this facility operational."

The Robersonville facility is one of the smallest hospitals in the country approved for federal health care programs.

Ms. Whitaker said the question arose as to whether once closed, a small hospital such as RCH could reopen. "The Department of Facility Services in Raleigh has assured me that we can keep our acute care license for several more months," she said.

The hospital spokeswoman said several things will need to be done before the hospital can meet the criteria to reopen. "One, of course, is to pay off indebtedness, which we hope grants will help take care of. Another requirement," Ms. Whitaker said, "is that of certain improvements that need to be taken care of."

The improvements she mentioned include painting, new light fixtures "and especially having the new part of the hospital, built two years ago, hooked up on emergency power. Some rewiring in the facility needs to be done to meet energy needs."

Among other needs to meet authorization for reopening is a new radio paging system to call in laboratory and X-ray technicians, she said. "We have two on call, but our paging system can only reach them for a distance of five miles."

The hospital opened in 1956. It has two local doctors on its staff, Dr. Victor Ng and Dr. Ki-Bong Um, who also have private practices. The hospital staff at the time the facility closed numbered 23, including the two doctors, nurses, technicians, administrative and maintenance personnel. "All but three have been laid off until we can reopen," Ms. Whitaker said.

"It's a tight situation, but we feel confident that we can find a way to reopen. The hospital serves a very definite need in the community, particularly in the area of emergency services."

Jenkins Draws 35 Years As Top Man Of Heroin Ring

By John Bare
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

A Greenville man has pleaded guilty to being the top man in a local heroin ring that allegedly brought in over $1,000 a day.

Charlie Lee Jenkins, 41, 1802 McClellan St., was sentenced to 35 years in prison Monday in Pitt Superior Court after pleading guilty to six counts of selling heroin and one count of operating a continuing criminal enterprise, a felony with a possible punishment of life in prison.

Under the charges, Jenkins faced a maximum of 110 years in prison, but as part of a plea arrangement he agreed to accept the 35-year sentence and a $250,000 fine. In exchange, the state dismissed six counts of conspiring to possess heroin and one count of possession of cocaine.

Arrested last September after an eight-month State Bureau of Investigation undercover drug sweep, Jenkins was the first person in Pitt County ever indicted on a charge of operating a continuing criminal enterprise. The charge alleges he organized and profited from a drug business involving at least five other conspirators.

In presenting evidence before Judge George M. Fountain of Tarboro, SBI Agent B.L. Fields said Ronald Lee Brown, 35, 110 Ward St., an alleged co-conspirator charged with 60 heroin violations, told authorities Jenkins was the top man in the local drug business. Brown is in custody pending a court appearance.

"Mr. Brown, first of all, said he was a user," Ms. Fields said. "Because he was well known, Mr. Brown said it was basically an opportunity to work for Mr. Jenkins ..."

Mr. Charlie Jenkins was in charge of things. When Mr. Charlie Lee Jenkins wasn't there, James Jenkins (Charlie's brother, who was convicted in February of selling and delivering heroin and sentenced to six years in prison) and David Earl Tripp (who pleaded guilty in February to heroin charges and received a 15-year prison term) were in charge."

James Jenkins, 42, 102 Glenda St., was also found guilty of conspiring with his brother, and Tripp, 38, 102-B W. Fifth St., pleaded guilty to conspiring with Charlie Jenkins. A third man, Forrest June Wilson of 605 Albemarle Ave. testified at his own sentencing hearing in February that he was a heroin addict and sometimes sold drugs for Charlie Jenkins in exchange for heroin. Wilson pleaded guilty to heroin, morphine and cocaine charges and received a 10-year prison sentence.

In a statement Brown made March 20, Ms. Fields said he told investigators that he was involved in the drug operation along with Charlie Jenkins, James Jenkins, Tripp, Wilson and at least three others. Brown said because he was a user, he could bring other users to Charlie Jenkins and generate new business, and he was paid in heroin, not money. The drug ring, which operated out of an apartment in the 1400 block of Fleming Street, took in between $1,000 and $1,800 a day, she said, and the buyer would pay the person in charge that day.

Ms. Fields told of four drug buys she made from Charlie Jenkins last year on March 31, April 11, April 18 and April 21; each time she purchased 10 packets of heroin for $240. She said she made four or five other buys at the apartment from people who worked for Jenkins.

SBI Agent J.C. Rea testified that he twice bought 50 bags of heroin from Charlie Jenkins, paying $1,000 on March 28, 1988, and $1,200 three days later.

Ms. Fields said others involved in the heroin operation were: Willie Junior Armwood, 33, 621-B Hudson St., who pleaded guilty in February to possessing and selling heroin and received a two-year prison term; Jill Caretta Daniels, 20, 2507 No. 5 E. Fifth St., who pleaded guilty in February to possessing, selling and delivering heroin and received a two-year sentence, and Laura Ruth Vines Daniels, 39, 512 Davis St., who pleaded guilty in January to 15 cocaine and heroin charges and received a nine-year prison term.

A Pitt grand jury indicted 31 people last September on drug charges stemming from the undercover operation. With Charlie Jenkins' plea Monday, 22 of those indicted have now been found guilty or pleaded guilty.

Warning

The Law Should Not Be Slighted

Winterville's police chief has received a warning ticket. Snub the law again, it reads, and you will be prosecuted. Along with that citation came a pertinent footnote: when the law isn't applied equally, it hurts everyone.

Police officers are sworn to enforce the law. They are also sworn to uphold it. Those two obligations have fallen victim to small-town politics in Winterville, where the chief of police directed officers not to give traffic tickets to town officials and their families.

A State Bureau of Investigation probe into why two Winterville officers were fired revealed that the Winterville police chief disregarded the law by telling his force to ignore speeding by certain citizens. The chief even went so far as to void a traffic ticket issued by one of his officers to the son of a town alderman. In a letter explaining the investigation, Pitt County District Attorney Tom Haigwood called the chief's actions reprehensible but stopped short of filing legal charges.

Haigwood's sharp reprimand was correct and well-placed. The chief's actions were improper and repugnant to the concept of equal protection under the law. Such inattention to propriety should not occur anywhere — big city or small community.

You may say Winterville is indeed a small town and that this incident is insignificant. You may insist it's southern protocol for public officials to be exempt from boo-boos while driving. There aren't any other perks to holding office in a small town, so what's the harm?

The harm is here: the law is the law. It doesn't matter where it's broken; the response must be the same. Otherwise, the fragile system of justice that protects communities is irrevocably shattered. The law becomes meaningless.

The harm is also here: not enforcing laws uniformly isn't fair to the law-abiding citizens of Winterville who pay town taxes for police protection. If a statute is on the books, it applies to everyone. That's the meaning of equal protection under the law, and that's what these townsfolk have paid for. They should get their money's worth, along with their constitutional affirmation that all laws be applied equally and impartially.

The warning has been issued: all laws apply to all people in all towns. Nothing short of this obligation will be tolerated. The message should be respected and heeded, not voided out of a misguided sense of small-town camaraderie.

Network

ECU's Link To Higher Education

A microwave communications network which was activated at the East Carolina University School of Medicine last week opens vast new horizons in higher education in North Carolina.

A three-way teleconference was initiated which linked the transmission site at the ECU medical school with the Microelectronics Center in the Research Triangle Park and Bowman Gray School of Medicine in Winston-Salem.

The television system will allow seminars, conferences and classes between distant campuses or the Research Triangle Park. The sound and television pictures will be two-way so that an instructor can lecture and also hear the students.

ECU Medical School officials were elated about the development and the possibilities of exchange of information between the universities and medical schools of the state.

While the network is beginning at the ECU medical school it is envisioned that other sites will be established elsewhere on the main campus.

The benefits of the network, which was established with a $3.9 million Legislative appropriation, are readily apparent. Eminent scholars on any university campus will be accessible to students on other campuses. Seldom taught courses can be made available on any campus. Conferences between scholars and authorities in any field can be arranged between campuses.

A goal of the university system was to make the entire state of North Carolina a university campus which stretches from the sea to the mountains. Reaching that goal would mean that the proper higher education courses would be available to qualified university students where ever they might be. The technical means are now available to fully accomplish this goal. It will be up to the people involved to make use of the technology to disseminate the vast amount of information which is available today and thus create a true statewide university campus.

How Much Math Is Enough?

WASHINGTON — If you are a successful, well-educated professional, Paul E. Burke has a question for you: How much math do you use?

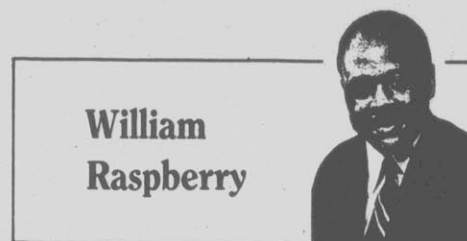

Unless you are a math teacher, a theoretical physicist, an engineer or some such, he's guessing that the answer is: not that much. Arithmetic, certainly — including fractions, decimals and percentages — maybe a little algebra. But even if you were once pretty good at analytic geometry, trigonometry or calculus, Burke doubts that you have much use for it now — or for such mathematical arcana as negative exponents, logarithms and imaginary numbers.

So why is the commission on standards for school mathematics (of the National Council of Teachers of Mathematics) calling for more required math in the nation's high schools?

Burke, a member of the NCTM, suspects the commission's recently released recommendations are based on the erroneous notion that raising the math requirements of high-school students will produce more scientists and engineers in a country in pitifully short supply of these professionals.

Burke, a social scientist at HUD, is no mathematics Philistine. A former math and physics teacher, he took advanced-placement calculus in high school before earning a bachelor's degree in math at Brown University.

His point is a simple one: High schools should require — even for the college-bound — only the math that successful professionals actually use. More esoteric courses should be available for those students with an interest in them. Nor will math-avoiders be happy with his proposed list of required courses.

"Everyone should study percents, statistics, logic (i.e. geometric proof, symbolic logic or law) and a computer language.

The most obvious argument against Burke's proposal is that limiting high-school requirements to the math that most people actually use would foreclose a number of career options. Few high-school students are settled on their career choices. Isn't it likely that his limited approach would make it impossible for late-deciding students to choose math or science majors?

Burke doesn't think so. "I believe there are very few students who dislike math enough not to take it early and then go on to take lots of it.

What of the argument that a person who knows only what he uses is not educated but merely trained? Says Burke: "To be educated, you need to know various habits of thought. There is a mathematical approach that works in some situations. But kids have been exposed to that for eight years before high school."

But even if Burke's approach wouldn't do much harm, what good would it do?

He has a ready answer for that one, too. Two answers, in fact.

First: "You can often learn more of what you really need to know in short courses. I had two weeks of symbolic logic, and that did more to teach me the rules of logic than a year of geometry. The point is that if students are not taking extra years of math, they will be taking something else that they like and would be less likely to drop out."

Second: "Math teachers are scarce, which means that good math teachers are scarcer. Eliminating some of the math requirements would mean that we would need fewer math teachers, which should translate into a higher percentage of good math teachers."

I find Burke's ideas appealing, but I'd be glad to entertain others in the interest of productive debate. Any takers?

Try Confidence-Building At Home

WASHINGTON — Almost every time he talks about the Middle East, President Bush is sure to say just the right thing: Israel is an American ally, a strategic partner and, of course, a fellow democracy. Having said that, however, the President — much like someone spoiling a photograph by holding up two fingers behind someone else's head — manages to step on his message.

Two examples: When the Israeli Foreign Minister, Moshe Arens, was here last month, Secretary of State James Baker III said publicly what he did not say privately to Arens — that the United States might want Israel to deal directly with the Palestine Liberation Organization. And last week, just before Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir arrived for a state visit, the President used the occasion of a similar visit by Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak to call for an end to Israel's occupation of the West Bank and Gaza Strip. Shamir must have been stunned. After all, the Israeli leader was supposedly coming to Washington with some plans of his own.

Word for word, I cannot fault either Bush or Baker. What they said makes sense. The way they said it, however, is another matter entirely. By publicly pressuring Israel, by showing a degree of impatience not exhibited elsewhere (Soviet relations, for instance), Bush and Baker are making the American-Jewish community (and, to a lesser degree, Israel) a bit nervous.

Why? One answer is Ronald Reagan. The former President was unambiguously pro-Israel. Not so Bush. The Jewish community remembers him as the vice president who seemed to blame Israel for the Iran-contra affair, whose presidential campaign had to rid itself of anti-Semites and who chose John Sununu as White House chief of staff. As governor of New Hampshire, Sununu refused to condemn the infamous United Nations resolution equating Zionism with racism.

If either Bush or Baker is aware of what a prominent Jewish leader called the community's "queasiness," they sure haven't shown it. Indeed, even as Bush was saying goodbye to Shamir, he repeated a formulation that startled some Jewish leaders: Israel must relinquish "sovereignty over...the West Bank and Gaza." As a general principle, that corresponds to the position of many Israelis — with one important exception. Even the Israeli left is not willing to give up all the occupied territories — not what was once East Jerusalem and probably not certain militarily strategic areas. Bush's statement lacked nuance.

Nuance is important. What disturbs Jewish leaders who have no substantive quarrel with the Bush administration's emerging Middle East policies is the suspicion that the White House has adopted a pro-Arab tilt. (One of them even noted that the state dinner for Mubarak included some well-known "Arabists" — former or current State Department officials considered hostile to Israel.) That perception could diminish the Bush administration's chances of being an "honest broker" in the Middle East. It might cause Shamir and his Likud bloc to dig in, to sense antipathy rather than concern.

At home, Bush's conduct toward Israel could rob him of the support he needs in the American Jewish community. By no means as unified as it once was on Israel, the community is likely to rally around Shamir if it thinks he's being pushed around — especially if those doing the pushing are suspected of being unfriendly towards Israel.

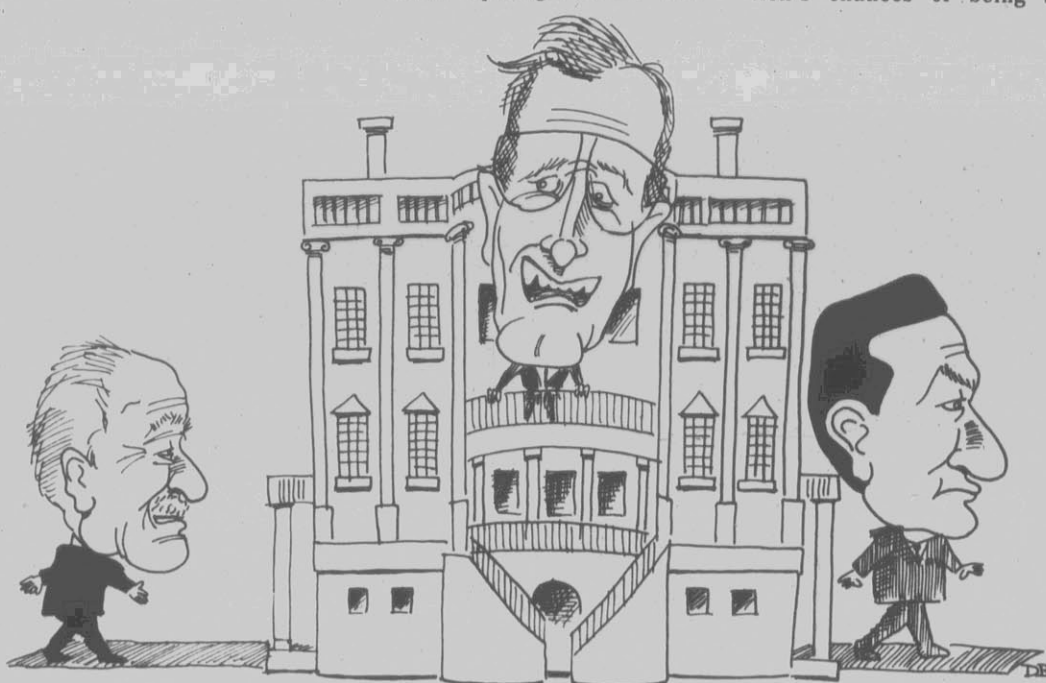

The administration's public declarations of policy have already caused at least one influential congressman to protest to the State Department. His message was blunt: Don't spoil what we have been working years to achieve.

Israel's current policies are both untenable and wrong. Its steadfast refusal to deal with the PLO is counterproductive and it must, as Bush insists, withdraw substantially from the occupied territories. But these objectives will be harder, maybe impossible, to achieve if the American-Jewish community thinks Shamir is being bullied. In that event, members of Congress who have been working behind the scenes to have Jerusalem change its policies will fear the wrath of an unforgiving Jewish community. That community is already on the alert.

Israeli sources and others say it is still too early to assess the Bush administration — and that, anyway, the signals are mixed. But significantly, the most radical changes in U.S.-Israel policy — opening talks with the PLO, for instance — occurred during the Reagan administration. This was possible because the American-Jewish community and, indeed, Israel itself never doubted Reagan's goodwill.

If the Bush administration wants to accomplish as much or more, now is not too early to ponder the signals it has been sending. The "confidence-building" steps it proposes for the Middle East might, in the short run, be better applied at home.

IN THE STATE

Cleanup Tests

BRIDGETON, N.C. (AP) — Authorities are examining samples of soil and water taken at the site of a chemical spill to determine if a cleanup of the area is necessary.

An undetermined amount of herbicide was spilled Friday after a Bridgeton woman's car collided with a chemical truck, forcing the evacuation of nearly 50 people.

Gloria Dudley Petteway of Bridgeton was killed when her car struck the truck operated by Rhem Tull Bell, 73, of New Bern, according to State Trooper Larry P. Johnson.

Jim Sheppard, a spokesman for the state Division of Environmental Management, said results of soil and water tests will be known in a few days.

Charged

MORGANTON, N.C. (AP) — A former business manager of the Morganton News Herald has been charged in connection with the embezzlement of $219,000, officials said.

Linda Hicks was charged with four counts of embezzlement and four counts of corporate malfeasance, State Bureau of Investigation warrants said. She was released on $5,000 bond.

Car Entry

RALEIGH (AP) — A Raleigh woman was charged with driving while impaired, driving without a license and misdemeanor possession of marijuana after she drove a borrowed car through the front door of a Wake County detention center near her husband's jail cell, officials said.

"I don't know what she was trying to do, but she obviously wasn't successful at all," said Wake County Sheriff John Baker. "You look at it and ask, 'Was it an escape attempt?' But I don't see how she could have gotten him out."

Chrystal Suzette Strickland, 25, was taken to Wake County Jail, where she was held on $500 bond.

AIDS Study

RALEIGH (AP) — The executive council of the North Carolina Medical Society has decided to create a new committee to study policies on Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome.

The new committee will report back in October.

The society's current policies on AIDS support antidiscrimination protection for people with AIDS and the AIDS virus in employment, health care, insurance and housing. They also seek funding for educational efforts aimed at informing the public about the disease.

The proposed new policies stress the need for antidiscrimination policies also, but seek funding for treatment as well as required testing of several groups. The call for mandatory testing and reporting of positive tests to public health authorities is stirring controversy among society members.

Hall Of Fame

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (AP) — Veteran television newsman David Brinkley led a group of six journalists inducted into the N.C. Journalism Hall of Fame Sunday night.

"I love my state," said Brinkley, a Wilmington native. "I'm flattered and honored."

Joining Brinkley in the Hall of Fame were James Schumaker, a University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill journalism professor since 1972; the late Brodie Griffith, a crusading Charlotte News editor; John Adams, a retired UNC Journalism School professor; David Gillespie, a 50-year veteran of the North Carolina newspaper business; and Morris Rosenberg, a long-time foreign correspondent for The Associated Press.

Center Closed

GASTONIA, N.C. (AP) — The Gaston-Lincoln Mental Health Center has shut down a detoxification program after the fourth suspicious fire in a month, the center's mental health director says.

Sunday's fire, which started in the second floor drug abuse counseling area, forced the release of 11 or 12 inpatients from a detoxification program, Mental Health Director James Melton said.

"We had to terminate treatment because we don't have the resources or facilities to provide the service," said Melton. "We tried to transfer some but basically there wasn't space in Cleveland or Mecklenburg. We hope that they maintain sobriety in the meantime."

Review Of NCNB Bid May Take 18 Months

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ATLANTA — Citizens & Southern Corp. said the Georgia banking commissioner's estimate that it could take 18 months to review the NCNB Corp. takeover proposal for C&S effectively kills any merger — but NCNB officials were not so sure.

Jack Dunn, the state banking commissioner, released a statement Monday saying the NCNB bid could take three times the normal time to complete such deals, which is typically half a year.

"Although a final decision would normally be reached within six months, applications involving complex legal and technical issues have required 12 to 18 months statefederal regulatory time," Dunn said.

C&S, which last week rejected the $2.4 billion stock exchange offer from the Charlotte-based NCNB, said Dunn's statement backs up their contention that the deal has serious regulatory problems.

"Given the length of time for the state to resolve these issues, and the uncertainty of a successful resolution, we think NCNB's bid is dead," said C&S Chairman Bennett A. Brown. "It is time for both of our institutions to get back to the business of banking."

Ben Johnson, an attorney with Alston & Bird, C&S' corporate counsel, said, "Twelve to 18 months is a pretty long period of time for a deal like this to be in limbo."

Johnson said the value of NCNB stock, during the period, "can be all over the place."

However, from company headquarters in Charlotte, NCNB spokeswoman Lynn Easley said Dunn broke no ground in his statement and that he simply recited the law.

"NCNB is quite confident there are no legal or regulatory impediments to the merger it has proposed to the Citizens & Southern Corp.," Ms. Easley said.

"The statement released by (Dunn) simply restates the law and regulations governing approval for interstate banking acquisitions," Ms. Easley said. "It raises no new legal or regulatory issues."

Shrimpers Have Until May 1 To Install Net Devices To Save Turtles

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOREHEAD CITY, N.C. — Time is running out for North Carolina shrimpers to install turtle excluder devices on their nets — and so is the money that would help them cover part of the costs, according to officials.

The Division of Marine Fisheries is reimbursing fishermen up to $500 per vessel for the TEDs. But the $30,000 reimbursement fund has dwindled to $12,035 and probably will be sapped by the end of the week, according to Frank Holland, a biologist at the state Division of Marine Fisheries.

"I think a lot of people are going to get caught out in the cold because we just won't have the money," he said.

Federal regulations call for the devices to be installed on all trawlers in ocean waters by May 1. Fishermen say the devices allow much of their catch to escape, and state officials fought the regulation that required the use of TEDs.

Four TEDs have been federally certified, but only one that a state official has tested — the Georgia Jumper — does not allow a large amount of shrimp to escape. With a $190 price tag, it's the most expensive TED.

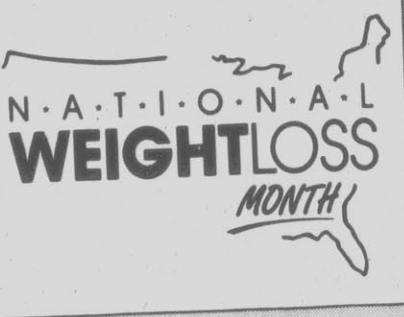

"But it is really cheaper in the long run," said Holland, who tested the devices.

Tests with which Holland has been involved showed that the one TED allowed about 26 percent of the shrimp catch to escape, while another allowed about 56 percent of the catch to escape, he said.

TEDs run as low as $40 and are available from many North Carolina net makers. The Georgia Jumper isn't yet available in parts of the state, but the manufacturer has been seeing them off a truck in Carteret and Pamlico counties. The manufacturer is now negotiating with marine supply stores that might be willing to carry it, Holland said.

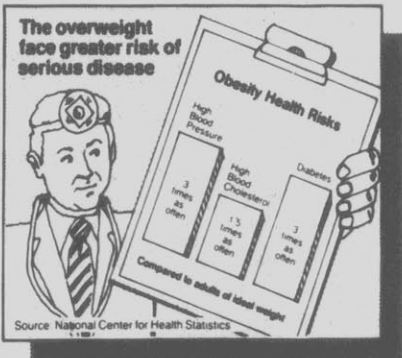

Nutri/System is fighting for your health.

The evidence is in. Science has taken the guesswork out of the importance of weight control. If you want to improve your health and live longer... chances are you need to shed a few pounds.

A study by the National Institutes of Health (NIH) finds that obesity* is a disease that afflicts 34 million American adults. And another 34 million are considered overweight — a total of 68 million adults!

The greatest risk from being overweight, says the NIH, is heart disease, the nation's leading killer claiming nearly one million victims yearly. Moreover, obesity increases other risk factors. These weight-related risk factors include hypertension, high-blood pressure, high-blood cholesterol levels, diabetes, and even cancer.

Risks of Overweight

The evidence is overwhelming:

- High-blood pressure occurs about 3 times as often in the obese as in the non-overweight
- High-blood cholesterol levels occur 50 percent more frequently in those who are obese
- The frequency of diabetes is nearly 3 times as high in obese people as it is in others
- Overweight men—regardless of smoking habits—have higher rates of colon, rectal, and prostate cancer.
- Overweight women stand a greater chance of death from cancer of the gall-bladder, breast, ovaries, and uterus. (Cancer deaths in women amounted to 490,000 as compared to 495,000 in men, according to the latest figures available from the American Cancer Society.)

The solution, according to an extensive study published by the Council on Scientific Affairs of the American Medical Association, has three simple elements:

1. Nutritionally-balanced diet
2. Behavior modification
3. Exercise

"These three elements are interdependent and mutually supportive. A program that incorporates all three is more likely to lead to long-term weight control," the AMA concludes.

Teachers Present Opposing Views On Career Ladder To Legislature

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — A pitched battle between teachers for and against the career ladder was being waged today in the halls of the General Assembly, which must decide whether to continue the program next year.

At the urging of Gov. Jim Martin, a vocal supporter of the incentive pay plan, teachers from seven of the 16 systems that have experimented with the career ladder for 3½ years were to discuss their experiences with state senators this afternoon.

The group made a presentation Monday to the state House and to Martin's education "summit," a group of education leaders. Reaction among legislators was mixed, with some saying they were reconsidering their positions and others standing firm.

"I've been leaning against the career ladder ... but some of the things they said hit the nail right on the head," said Rep. David Diamont, D-Surry, the only legislator who is a classroom teacher. "I'm still not convinced, but I'm a lot more open-minded than I was."

said he had heard nothing that persuaded him to disavow a campaign pledge to oppose the career ladder.

"They had some good general information, but they didn't have enough hard answers," he said.

Several dozen teachers, including some leaders of local chapters of the North Carolina Association of Educators, watched the pro-career ladder group's presentation from the House gallery Monday night.

The NCAE, which opposes expanding the program and has declared it a failure, scheduled a news conference for today to reiterate its views. Karen Garr, the group's state president, said teachers on both sides would be allowed to speak.

"We've always said there are pros and cons," Ms. Garr said. But she insisted that most teachers, including those who have participated in the career ladder, oppose it. "The teachers in the pilots have said it's not working."

At the summit meeting, Helen LeGette, career development coordinator for Burlington City Schools, disputed the NCAE for calling the program a flop.

"Not only has this program not failed; it has been a success," she said. "We have proved that a career development program can work and is working in our state."

Her group, including teachers, a principal and a professional who evaluated the career ladder program last year, represented seven of the 16 systems with "pilot" career ladder programs, all designed to reward excellence in classroom teaching with higher salaries.

Martin has asked the Legislature to take the program statewide in the 1990-91 school year. He has called for a 1-cent sales tax increase to finance expanding the program and lifting the seven-year freeze on the teacher salary schedule.

The governor told reporters he hopes the program's supporters will take the offensive and shift the terms of the debate.

Previously, "it was them versus me," he said. "It was why the NCAE and all the teachers were opposed to Governor Martin's career ladder program. But what you're going to see from now on is teachers who have been a part of it agree with me seven out of eight."

But Sen. Richard Conder, D-Richmond, chairman the Senate Education Committee and a member of the "summit" group, said he remains to be convinced of the need for a statewide program.

He said he was disturbed by reports that test scores had declined in some of the "pilot" systems after the third year.

"What we're looking at is the bottom line, and that's results," Conder said. "Those test scores are not conclusive that the career ladder is doing what it should be doing."

Recruiter Gets Their Attention

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. — The salaries might not turn heads, but when Judy Jones goes across the state looking for prospective teachers, she has a sure-fire attention getter.

In the middle of her speech about the advantages of teaching, out comes Felix, a 7-foot python which she drapes around her neck.

Ms. Jones, a biology teacher at Chapel Hill High School for four years, is spending this school year as one of eight teacher recruiters. She and the other recruiters were chosen as regional teachers of the year in 1987-88.

As a recruiter, Ms. Jones tries to persuade students to enter the teaching profession by talking to them and by showing schools how to encourage students to consider teaching.

"It's helping kids who have never thought of it begin thinking about it," she said.

With attention focused on teachers and their salaries, how does Ms. Jones convince students that they should consider becoming teachers?

North Carolina ranks 34th in the nation for teacher salaries, according to the state Department of Education, and it does not consider cost of living or other factors.

"One of the things I say to students, you're not going to go out and expect a perfect world. Salary is a problem, finding a professional atmosphere is a problem," she said. "If there is a young person whose goal in life is a rich lifestyle, teaching might not be for them."

While Ms. Jones isn't afraid to mention some of the negative aspects of teaching, she also has many positive things to tell the students. "What I say to young people, there are satisfactions that go beyond salaries," she said.

"We deserve higher salaries. I will always work for that, but I also know I get a lot of satisfaction out of working with young people, being able to go in depth over a year, not only with the subject I teach but also with the young people.

N.C. Surgical Eye Center Cited For High-Cost Lens

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — A North Carolina surgery center that performs large numbers of cataract operations recently paid $390 for a synthetic lens that a Canadian hospital was buying for $80, a government investigator said Monday.

The North Carolina facility was not identified, but it was cited during a four-hour congressional hearing as one of many examples of questionable practices in the lucrative business of outpatient cataract surgery.

Over the protests of groups representing high-volume cataract surgeons, some lawmakers said Medicare guidelines should be rewritten to cut their reimbursements.

"It's beyond my ability to believe that every ambulatory surgery center in the country is losing money" because of current Medicare formulas that outpatient surgeons say are too stingy, said Rep. Fortney "Pete" Stark, D-Calif.

Stark chairs the Ways and Means subcommittee on health, which held the hearing.

Debate centered on how to provide incentives for cataract surgeons to hold down costs, 80 percent of which typically are paid by Medicare and 20 percent by the patient.

Michael Zimmerman, the top Medicare investigator for the General Accounting Office, said predetermined reimbursement ceilings should be set for cataract procedures in order to spur surgeons to seek lower overhead costs.

He noted that in North Carolina, Medicare rules allow a cataract surgeon to be reimbursed for his full cost of an intraocular lens, or IOL, the man-made lens that is inserted in the eye during cataract surgery.

"This payment policy provided little incentive to negotiate for low prices when purchasing IOLs," he testified.

Zimmerman said a "high-volume" outpatient center in North Carolina "was paying $368 for a lens that lower volume providers in the other states were buying for an average of $207. This (center) also paid $390 for a second lens model" that a Canadian hospital was buying for $80, he said.

Each year, about 1.3 million Americans undergo cataract surgery, the nation's most common Medicare-funded operation. Stark questioned whether such centers are charging fair rates to patients and to the Medicare trust fund.

"I'm suggesting these guys running these (ambulatory surgery centers) aren't worth a poof if they're paying $360 for lens that can be gotten for $80," he said.

Congress is considering a $200 Medicare reimbursement limit on intraocular lenses.

Dr. John T. Henley Jr. of Fayetteville said the proposed rate was too low. He said the government agency that proposed it "selectively and arbitrarily excluded consideration" of numerous outpatient clinics that indicated higher rates are justified.

Dr. Henley testified as president of the Federated Ambulatory Surgery Association. He is medical director of the Fayetteville Ambulatory Surgical Center.

The witness most critical of high-volume cataract surgery centers was Dr. Hunter Stokes of Florence, S.C., secretary of representation for the American Academy of Ophthalmology.

"We see strong signs of erosion in the quality and ethics of eye care under the Medicare program," he said. "Cataract surgery ... has become particularly susceptible to unethical behavior and greed."

He urged Congress to prohibit eye surgeons from splitting the Medicare fee with optometrists, who generally refer cataract patients to ophthalmologists in the first place.

But Dr. James R. Scholles, president of the American Optometric Association, said splitting the care and fees for cataract patients is a sound practice.

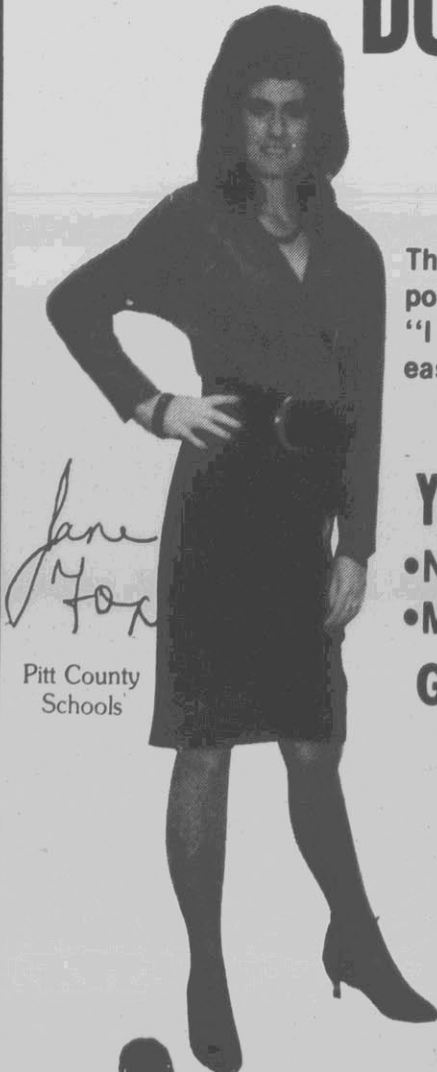

Optometrists and eye surgeons, he testified, "have worked together for years to provide cost-effective, accessible, high-quality patient care."

Secrets Revealed

Diaper Makers Go To Court To Resolve Fight Over Design Of Disposable Items

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHARLESTON, S.C. — A battle between industry giants over super-absorbent diapers — and the millions of dollars that come with their sale — has opened in U.S. District Court here.

In the case, Procter & Gamble charges the design of its highly successful super-absorbent Pampers was copied by Kimberly-Clark in developing super-absorbent Huggies.

The firm wants U.S. District Judge Falcon Hawkins to order Kimberly-Clark to stop manufacturing Huggies and remove them from store shelves. The firm is also seeking unspecified monetary damages.

The stakes are high, for making disposable diapers is a $3.3 billion business.

Procter & Gamble, based in Cincinnati, is the industry leader, with 47 percent of the market. Kimberly-Clark, which is based in Dallas, is No. 2 with about 30 percent, industry analysts say.

As the trial got under way Monday, attorneys crowded the courtroom while scattered along the jury box were boxes and bags of diapers. The case is expected to last at least three weeks.

Allen Gerstein, representing Procter & Gamble, said his firm came up with the idea that made super-absorbent diapers possible and took out a patent on the development.

The breakthrough, he said, allowed the manufacture of diapers which are generally thinner but more absorbent than regular, more bulky disposables.

"We stayed within the system while Kimberly-Clark disregarded and took unfair advantage of the system," Gerstein told Hawkins in his opening argument.

Researcher Paul Weisman developed a means for combining wood pulp fluff and super-absorbent materials in the diaper to allow it to be made thinner, he said.

Gerstein said that Kimberly-Clark copied the idea shortly after the Pampers were test marketed in Wichita, Kan., in 1984.

The introduction of the new diapers "turned the diaper world on its ear," he said.

But attorney H. Blair White, representing Kimberly-Clark, said "this case is about two fiercely competitive companies each trying to improve baby diapers."

He charged Procter & Gamble never had a valid patent because it withheld important test information from the U.S. Patent Office.

In addition, he said, the system Weisman developed was already covered in a British patent for super-absorbent materials issued to an Italian inventor in 1979.

"In order to have a valid patent, you can't be the second person or the 10th person (to invent something). You have to be the first," he said.

White argued that Kimberly-Clark had widespread experience with super-absorbent materials as early as 1977 in the manufacture of tampons and adult diapers.

"Kimberly-Clark didn't need lessons from anyone about super-absorbent products," White said, noting that "the only things our scientists learned from the Wichita diapers was how not to make a diaper."

White said the problem with the Pampers when they were introduced was that the super-absorbent material would come off on the skin of babies.

It was a problem Kimberly-Clark was trying to address in its own labs at the time, he said, adding the firm eventually developed a system of putting the material farthest away from the babies' skin — a system for which the company has been awarded a patent.

Nine People Perish In Peoria House Fire

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PEORIA, Ill. — Fire raced through a house early today, killing at least nine people and injuring three, authorities said.

Three people were pronounced dead at the scene, and six were pronounced dead at two hospitals, said Beverly Todd, nursing supervisor at St. Francis Medical Center. Two of the injured were reported in serious condition.

The 2:30 a.m. blaze at the two-story wood-frame home began on the first floor, but the cause was not immediately known, said Assistant Fire Chief Sam Sisk.

"Our primary concern was rescue, and the house was pretty well involved when we got there," he said.

"The victims' identities were not immediately released. Ms. Todd said that judging from their names, they may have been from the same family.

Sisk said he believed the cause of death was smoke inhalation.

Four adults and eight children were in the house, fire officials said.

One victim was treated at St. Francis and released, said a nursing supervisor who would not give her name.

A 14-year-old boy and a 30-year-old woman were in serious condition with burns at the Franciscan Medical Center in Rock Island, said spokeswoman Neva Aldene.

Abortion Issue Revitalizes Women's Movement

By Jill Lawrence
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The threat to legalized abortion has infused the women's movement with a passion and purpose unmatched since the determined but losing campaign to ratify the equal rights amendment.

Women are turning out, joining up and writing checks in what one organizer called "a torrent of activity" provoked by the Supreme Court's decision to re-examine Roe vs. Wade, its 1973 ruling that legalized abortion.

"It's like spontaneous combustion or a prairie fire," said Rep. Pat Schroeder, D-Colo., co-chairman of the Congressional Caucus on Women's Issues.

The throngs that turned out for Sunday's abortion rights march were only the most visible aspect of an energized movement.

March organizers report their contributions have risen 50 percent in recent months. One group, the National Abortion Rights Action League, raised $600,000 in March 1989 — five times as much as the previous March. New members in February and March amounted to double the entire number of people who joined NARAL throughout 1988.

Another major beneficiary has been the National Organization for Women. Once the undisputed leader of the women's movement, NOW after the 1982 ERA defeat was just one of many groups with separate interests. Its membership fell, its finances suffered and its activist, grassroots tactics were spurned in favor of an insiders' strategy of "playing the game."

But NOW has gained 18,000 members in the past few months, said president Molly Yard. Its fiscal health has improved dramatically as a result of the abortion rights mobilization. And the march, initially scheduled to kick off a new NOW campaign for ERA, has raised its profile considerably.

Many feminists acknowledge their movement had been in a slump, successful through the 1980s only in staving off threats to ground they had thought was secure. For example, women's groups were part of the broader coalition that helped defeat Supreme Court nominee Robert Bork and pass the Civil Rights Restoration Act over then-President Reagan's veto.

But for the most part, women's groups in the post-ERA movement went their separate ways. Some raised money for feminist candidates, some lobbied for family or economic bills on Capitol Hill. NARAL continued its abortion rights campaign, NOW its pursuit of the ERA.

Until the threat to abortion rights, "there wasn't that kind of eye on the prize that a movement needs," said

Frances Kissling, president of Catholics for a Free Choice.

While acknowledging the backhanded contribution the conservative Reagan and Bush administrations have made to their movement, feminist leaders say they don't consider the Roe vs. Wade threat a boon or a necessity.

"It has mobilized both human resources and money. It's providing energy and fuel to the movement," said Judith Lichtman, president of the Women's Legal Defense Fund. "But it wasn't a dying movement. It's an extraordinarily diverse movement with quite powerful leadership. We didn't need an attack on Roe vs. Wade to be a strong movement."

NOW's moment in the spotlight cast by the massive abortion march may pass, but feminist leaders say the energy activated by the abortion threat will continue on that front and spill over to others.

"It will certainly revive the reproductive freedom movement and it will go well beyond where it's been before," said Kate Michelman, executive director of NARAL. Noting the new involvement of labor unions, doctors, civil rights groups and religious groups, she said "the coalition to preserve this right is much bigger and broader than ever before in the '70s and '80s."

Many leaders spoke optimistically of the college students from some 450 campuses who came to the march. "This is going to be the issue that brings them into the political process," said Michelman. "It's going to galvanize them to care about public policy and legal rights and civil rights. It will have a spinoff effect."

The women also cited a renewed resolve to hold politicians accountable on a wide range of women's concerns. "People were here for abortion because there's an immediate threat," said Lichtman. "But they lobbied on Monday not just on abortion but on child care, family leave and the minimum wage. They're going to use their political chits with Congress."

Most groups are likely to continue the present focus on abortion and family issues such as child care, which concern women on an intensely personal level. But NOW intends to renew its quest for the ERA, despite the difficulties of building steam for what is perceived as a losing issue.

Yard said NOW doesn't need a lot of people to build a solid legislative record at congressional hearings, the first phase of what she sees as a 10-year effort. And she said congressional passage can wait until more women are elected to the state legislatures that must ratify the amendment.

While some women consider legal abortion the fundamental right women need to participate fully in society, Yard said NOW members believe the bottom line is the ERA. "We're never going to let the ERA go," she said. "We're very concerned about other issues, but at rock bottom, you have to have the equal rights amendment to protect the rights you win."

Panel Concludes Wright Probably Violated Rules

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The House Ethics Committee has concluded that Speaker Jim Wright probably violated the chamber's rules by failing to report benefits from a Texas business partner as gifts.

A source familiar with the investigation said late Monday that the committee has found "reason to believe" that Wright violated the gift-reporting rules on benefits given to him and his wife by the business associate in Fort Worth.

The source, who spoke on condition of anonymity, declined to say how many instances of failure to report gifts had been identified by the panel.

But the number could easily be in the dozens, because several benefits Wright received continued over a period of years and would have had to be reported on each year's financial disclosure form. Among the benefits under scrutiny are his virtually free use of a condominium in Texas, an $18,000 salary for his wife, Betty, and use of a 1979 Cadillac.

CBS News reported Monday that the committee had found 30 instances of possible rules violations by Wright.

"We think it's an absurd report," said Mark Johnson, Wright's press secretary. "We have absolutely no information along those lines."

The committee, which resumes deliberations Tuesday in what is expected to be its final week before issuing a report, is engaged in a process not unlike that of a grand jury.

Finding "reason to believe" that rules have been violated would be equivalent to an indictment of Wright. The speaker would then have a chance to defend himself in a disciplinary hearing, the equivalent of a trial.

Wright reported his wife's employment with Fort Worth developer George Mallick on his financial disclosure forms as salary for her work. But the ethics panel's outside counsel, Richard Phelan, argued that the salary amounted to a gift because Mrs. Wright did little work in exchange for it.

Wright, Mallick and their wives jointly formed a small investment company called "Mallightco" and used it to make several investments.

Oil Firms Told To Hold Prices

LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

NEW YORK — Federal and state officials Monday warned major oil companies not to use the Alaskan oil spill as an excuse for jacking up gasoline prices.

The warnings came as soaring retail prices that started on the West Coast reached the East Coast; in the New York area, increases of 10 cents a gallon or more have been reported.

"I hope the oil industry is not foolish enough ... to think they can take advantage of this situation in Valdez to raise prices unnecessarily," Secretary of Transportation Samuel Skinner said during a news conference Monday in Cincinnati. "Because, if they do, they'll be cutting off their nose to spite their face."

He Prefers Handshake Over Hug

Dear Abby: I know you meant well when you said, "Everybody could use a hug once in a while," but this advice can easily get out of hand.

I am an English-born clergyman who is presently living in California. I like my ministry and I love Americans. But one of the biggest culture shocks I've had to face in your country is the phenomenon of hugging.

Total strangers will rush up and grab me as though I were a long-lost relative! Otherwise charming women will clasp me, impaling my cheeks on their flyaway diamond earrings. Even more alarming are the burly males who grip me in a bear hug from which there is no escape.

Abby, I am not a cold person, but such trespass bespeaks a false intimacy. As I had to put it to one clinging vine, "Madame, a handshake will do."

If you use this, I trust you will not disclose my name or location. Just

Dear Abby

Abigail Van Buren

sign me ... Forgive Them That Trespass

Dear Abby: While a handshake may do for you, some are not all that eager to shake hands. One reader actually changed religions in order to escape the hand-shaking routine. Read on:

Dear Abby: After many years of reading your column, I finally came across a subject I feel so strongly about that I'm writing a letter to you. It was regarding the importance of washing one's hands after leaving the bathroom.

Hands are an incredible repository of germs. In fact, I recall reading that there are more germs on one's hands than on any other part of the body. That's why washing them frequently is so important.

Which brings me to the main point of my letter: Many colds are spread by shaking hands. A person with a cold sneezes into his hands, shakes hands with you, and if you touch your nose, mouth or eyes before washing your hands -- bingo, you've caught his cold!

Why does this archaic form of greeting still exist in most parts of the world? Actually, it began as a guard against treachery. (If you were holding someone's right hand, neither of you could go for your sword.)

I abhor shaking hands because I am susceptible to colds. I've even changed religions for this reason. I was a devout Catholic from birth, but became a Protestant when the "sign of peace" (shaking hands with the people around you) was introduced into the liturgy of the Mass. I couldn't stand to see people blowing their noses and sneezing into their hands for 40 minutes, then offering those same hands in greeting.

At work, I take a vacation day on Christmas Eve because all day long, co-workers stop by to shake your hand and say, "Merry Christmas." This, at the height of the flu season!

Abby, I am not an anti-social person, but we could all take a cue from the old-world Oriental people who bow in greeting while shaking their OWN hand! Sign me ... Shaky In College Point, N.Y.

Dear Abby: The poem "Present Tense," written by 14-year-old Jason Lehman, was truly a gem. It reminded me of another poem I learned a long time ago. I never did know who wrote it, or if it had a name. It goes like this:

As a rule, man is a fool
When it's hot, he wants it cool
When it's cold, he wants it hot
Always wanting what is not!

Parents Overprotect Children With Chronic Medical Problems

By Maury Frieman

and Dr. Alyne T. Ricker, M.D.

An adolescent with a chronic disease or disability may not readily communicate his concerns and fears about himself or his friends to parents or doctors. The following questions touch on some of these concerns, and might serve as the start of a discussion for those involved with someone with a chronic medical problem.

Since I was diagnosed, my parents worry about me all the time. They seem afraid to let me do anything on my own. I love my mother, but it's embarrassing when she always wants to go to the mall with me. I'd rather be alone with my friends. I want to go to camp this summer, but my parents will never let me go. How can I convince them that I need to grow up?

It's usual for parents to worry about their children, even when they're perfectly healthy. When the child has been ill, or has special needs to stay healthy, they may find it much more difficult to separate from their child.

Often, parents of an adolescent with a chronic illness are over-protective. They have normally been the ones responsible for providing for their child's health needs and may be so involved in day-to-day concerns about the child's welfare that they fail to realize that he or she is growing up and able to be independent of them, and so they miss opportunities to let the adolescent gradually assume responsibility for his own care.

In addition, they may feel guilty or responsible for the illness (although they are not), and may treat their guilt by "taking care of everything." Then, no one else but them will do as companion or chauffeur, not even your very best friends.

Instead of fighting about it, try to find out -- in an open discussion -- what specific worries they have, and often the solutions will become apparent. They may also need a reminder from your doctor to give you a chance to try it on your own. You can learn about your medical care and gradually take on any tasks that you can do, such as remembering to take medications on time and following your diet.

Show your parents that you can be responsible. Let them know how much you appreciate their efforts. They got you this far. Share your concerns and feelings with your family, and keep communications open in case you experience problems.

My parents say we can't afford a vacation this year, and my brothers and sisters are mad. I know that they've had a lot of expenses because of my illness, with medicine and doctors' visits and all, and I feel guilty.

This is not an unusual situation, since health care has become so expensive and insurance may not cover it all. However, you need to realize that you didn't cause your illness. Your parents and family need to pull together.

If it had been someone else in the family who was ill, would you be mad? A family discussion which covers your illness and the family's priorities may help your siblings to understand better and decrease the tensions that may exist because things have not been out in the open. Finances are your parents' concern, not yours. Your concern is taking the best care of yourself that you can do.

What about dating? With or without an illness or disability, it is a normal part of adolescence to begin to develop close relationships with members of the opposite sex outside the family. Dating among friends is the way these relationships usually grow.

A disability or chronic illness shouldn't have to stand in the way of dating. If the teen can see himself as a teen-ager who happens to have a disability, rather than as a disabled teen-ager, he will find that others will relate to him in that light.

Where can I go for more information on managing with a chronic disease?

Budget Prepared

Joseph Taft initially were appointed by the school board in 1963, according to Susan Nobles, PCC public relations director.
Taft's current term on the PCC board expires this year.
Dan Thomas, controller of the school system, reviewed the 1989-90 budget with the board. The school system's budget for the next fiscal year needs to be submitted to the Pitt County commissioners by May 15.
About $2.3 million will be needed to fund mandated programs such as salary and hospitalization increases, and $1.6 million will be requested for expansion programs in operational, instructional and personnel services, Thomas said.
About $4.2 million will be requested for the school system's capital outlay program which includes a payment on the Boy's Club and funds needed for school buses and maintenance trucks.
The board will conduct a hearing on its budget Monday at 7:30 p.m. at Falkland Elementary School.
Ed Congleton, chairman of the Stokes Elementary School Advisory Council, and Matthew Lewis, asked the board to put the proposed new elementary school in the North Pitt attendance area in Stokes.
The board approved a resolution in support of "At Risk Student and At Risk Family Week" in the schools this week. It also approved revised personnel policies and the appointment of Sylvia Shepard to the J.H. Rose kindergarten through six advisory council.

Texasgulf Uses Dry Mining Process

WASHINGTON, N.C. — Texasgulf Inc. is using a new dry method of mining phosphate at Aurora that company officials say will help restore land in the area.
Meanwhile, an environmental group voiced concerns that future mining by Texasgulf might have an impact on the headwaters of the Pamlico River.

Texasgulf

opposed and "will continue to oppose" suggestions that the North Carolina Legislature impose a depletion tax on Texasgulf for its removal of minerals from the area.
Noting Texasgulf's "commitment for tomorrow," Regan said, "We want to show how we will continue to work and cooperate in making this area a progressive and spirited place to live while preserving the balance of nature."

The official said that the company has a yearly payroll of $48 million and paid more than $1.5 million in property taxes to Beaufort County last year, some 27.5 percent of the county's entire tax levy.
Regan said that, in addition to payroll, the company spends $30 million in four counties — Beaufort, Pitt, Craven and Pamlico — each year and another $70 million throughout North Carolina. Corporate offices of the firm are in Raleigh and there is a feed phosphate production plant employing 30 people in Kinston.

Regan told the gathering that the company plans celebrations over the next several months to note its being in Beaufort County since April of 1964. He said a celebration for employees at the Aurora site will be held April 24, with employees representing three generations from the same families to be honored. He said that Texasgulf's Morehead City port workers will be honored along with Carteret County leaders in May.

formed in 1985 to study the best means of creating orderly development of a regional health care center and offer recommendations to the council pertaining to land use zoning.
The plan, which received the recommendation of approval from the city's Planning and Zoning Commission, was submitted to the council and adopted in November 1986.
Ms. Faulkner, who is also director of the Regional Development Institute, today said she has not as yet been contacted by the city regarding the matter.
In other matters Monday, the council agreed to appropriate the remaining $152,000 in unappropriated fund balance monies from the 1987-88 fiscal year.
The council allocated $110,000 for the paving of dirt streets in the city; $10,000 for a right turn lane to be constructed at the intersection of Charles and Greenville Boulevards; $10,000 to resurface a portion of Hardee Road, and $22,000 to resurface the Community Building parking lot.

Speaking on the 25th anniversary of the company's establishment at Aurora, Thomas J. Regan Jr., vice president for production, said the new bucket wheel excavator system also would improve efficiency. One of the two new bucket wheels, which scoop dirt out of the ground as they turn, was put into use in January, he said. The other bucket wheel will go into service soon, he said.
Under the old system, the company pumped about 60 million gallons of water a day from the ground and used part of it to flood large tracts of land. Dredges then removed about 45 feet of overlying soil, called overburden.
The water and soil were drained into other areas that had already been mined. Eventually, the water was discharged into the Pamlico River. Huge draglines, excavating machines that pull buckets across the land, then dug about 100 feet deeper to remove the phosphate ore.

The bucket wheel system, Regan said, eliminates the need for flooding. But the company will still need to pump water from the aquifer to keep the water level below the working surface.

Fishermen and environmentalists have contended that phosphorus, fluoride and other pollutants dumped in the river from the Texasgulf processing plant at Aurora have damaged marine life. They also contend the discharge of fresh water into the river upsets the salinity of Pamlico Sound.

Regan said the bucket wheel system would work with the company's planned wastewater recycling system to reduce any adverse effects on the river. The recycling system, which could be ready to use by 1992, is expected to reduce the amount of phosphate discharged into the river by 95 percent and to reduce fluoride by 85 percent.

Douglas N. Rader, senior scientist with the N.C. Environmental Defense Fund, said the new system would have a "modest benefit" to the environment. With the dredging system, water was discharged into the river sporadically. The bucket wheel system will ensure the water is released on a more regular basis.

Fusion

skepticism when it was announced last month.

James Mahaffey, a senior researcher at Georgia Tech, said the school's experiment began detecting the release of subatomic neutron particles last weekend, a sure sign of fusion.

"It's open season on fusion," Mahaffey said.

B. Stanley Pons, the chairman of the Utah chemistry department, said he was elated and relieved by the announcements. He and a colleague, Martin Fleischmann of the University of Southampton, England, sent scientists around the world scrambling with their March 23 announcement of a controlled fusion reaction.

"This is just incredible," Pons said in Salt Lake City. "If they indeed have measured the neutron production, that's a real breakthrough. My sincere congratulations to Georgia Tech."

Nuclear fusion — the melding together of two atoms with an accompanying release of energy — normally requires enormously high temperatures. It is the energy source of the sun and hydrogen bombs.

Scientists have sought for decades to harness fusion's power because it holds the potential to provide an almost unlimited supply of relatively clean, cheap energy.

Unlike nuclear reactors that use fission — the splitting of atoms — to derive power, fusion doesn't generate significant radioactive waste.

In the Georgia experiment, which was kept behind lead shielding, probes that normally measure 40 neutrons an hour in background radiation were measuring 600 an hour.

Mahaffey cautioned that his team had not confirmed whether the process produces more energy than it consumes.

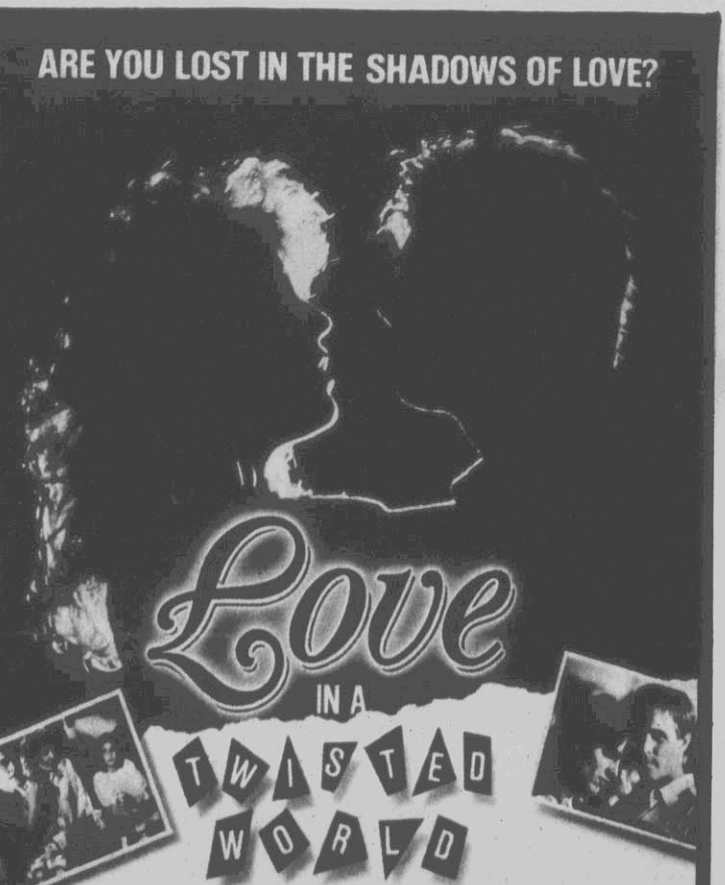

Texas A&M researchers said their experiment generated a net 1.144 watts of energy in the form of heat. They didn't measure neutrons.

Fisher Hiring Completes Climb To Top

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ANN ARBOR, Mich. — America's favorite nobody is the Michigan somebody now.

Steve Fisher, a little-known assistant who won the NCAA basketball championship one week earlier, won the Wolverines coaching job Monday on a permanent basis.

"I went from someone who very few people knew — and even those who knew me, very few knew me well — to one who everybody in America felt they knew," Fisher said. "For that, I'm tremendously indebted to our players."

The 44-year-old Fisher took over the team March 15 when Michigan athletic director Bo Schembechler angrily banned Bill Frieder from the coaching the team after Frieder accepted a job with Arizona State.

The talented Wolverines had finished third in the Big Ten. They responded to the tumultuous situation by winning all six tournament games, including an 80-79 overtime victory over Seton Hall for the title in Seattle.

"I went to all of those games," Schembechler said at a news conference Monday during which he confirmed Fisher's appointment. "I watched him operate. I was very much impressed. That was an entirely different team."

"They got into tough situations. In past times, those players just wouldn't have responded the way they did."

Schembechler, whose football teams tune up for the Big Ten with the likes of Notre Dame and Miami, Fla., said Frieder's easy non-conference schedule was part of the Wolverines' problem once play began in the rough-and-tumble Big Ten.

Next year, Schembechler said, the Wolverines will play non-conference games against Duke, Villanova, Iowa State and perhaps even Seton Hall.

"I know we'll give Bo the kind of program Michigan can be proud of," Fisher said. "We will stress winning on the floor. An NCAA title may never happen again, but it won't be from lack of effort."

Emphasis on recruiting athletes who can cut it in the classroom would continue, Fisher said.

After he won the NCAA title, there was overwhelming support for Fisher, but Schembechler wouldn't be stampeded.

"I wasn't going to be pressed into an emotional decision," Schembechler said. "I wanted to be cool, calculated, and study it from every angle. It always came up Steve Fisher."

Schembechler said he wanted

Bo Schembechler congratulates new coach Steve Fisher

Schembechler Deserves Credit Too

By Ed Schuyler

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Maybe he ought to be called Knute Schembechler.

Steve Fisher got deserved credit for guiding Michigan to the NCAA basketball championship as interim coach.

Bo Schembechler, Michigan's athletic director and football coach, deserves credit, too.

The world of college athletics is a motivational world, and it was Bo who provided the spark that ignited the Wolverines in NCAA tournament.

At the end of the regular season Bill Frieder, Michigan's head basketball coach, announced he was leaving to take the job at Arizona State and gave a three-week notice. That would make him available for the playoffs.

"A Michigan man will coach Michigan, not an Arizona State man," peeped Bo.

Now that might not be as dramatic as Rockne's "Win One for the Gipper" exhortation to a Notre Dame team playing Army, but it was an emotional peg for the Michigan players to hang their talents on. They responded.

The 44-year-old Fisher, who was a Frieder assistant for seven years, became the kind of story American sports fans love. With Fisher on the spot, the team became a spot remover as the Wolverines kept winning NCAA tournament games.

And Monday, one week after winning the championship with an 80-79 victory over Seton Hall, Steve Fisher became head coach at Michigan.

There were calls for his being named to the position even before the championship game.

Three suspended Oklahoma football players look on during a preliminary hearing Monday

Victim Recounts Rape By Oklahoma Football Players

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NORMAN, Okla. — An Oklahoma City woman meticulously recounted details of the night she allegedly was raped by three Oklahoma football players, saying she was thrown to the floor of an athletic dorm and attacked by several men.

However, the 20-year-old woman admitted she cannot say who raped her the night of Jan. 21 because the room was too dark.

"I couldn't see any faces," she said in response to a question by District Attorney Tully McCoy.

The testimony came Monday in the first day of a preliminary hearing for Nigel Clay, Bernard Hall and Glen Bell, three former Sooners who were dismissed from the team following their arrest in February.

Hall, 22, of Detroit, and Clay, 20, of Fontana, Calif., face charges of first-degree rape as well as two counts each of furnishing liquor to a minor. Bell, 20, of Muskogee faces a charge of first-degree rape.

All three players, dressed nattily in gray suits, sat quietly in the courtroom as attorneys questioned the victim, the woman's mother, sister, and a friend.

Testimony was scheduled to continue this morning in Cleveland County District Court. The preliminary hearing is to determine if the three should stand trial.

The woman remained composed during nearly three hours of testimony, although she seemed confused at times.

During cross-examination by Joel Barr, Clay's attorney, the victim admitted having trouble remembering what transpired that night.

"Is your memory of what happened more clear today than it was two weeks ago?" Barr asked.

"I haven't really thought about it," she said. "All I can say is it's still not clear ... it's choppy and I can't remember what sequence things happened."

Under questioning by Tully, the victim said she had gone to Norman with a friend who had arranged a blind date with some Oklahoma football players. She said they went to Clay's room in the athletic dorm, then to a liquor store and back to the dorm.

The woman said she had some drinks, then went to use the bathroom. Inside, she spotted someone in the shower whom she said was Hall.

"It made me mad. I grabbed the guy in the shower, opened the door with my other hand and shoved him out," she said.

Upon leaving the bathroom, she said someone grabbed her from behind by the shoulders and led her into the darkened bedroom.

"He took hold of my zipper on my dress and started

Hawks Slip Past Slumping Hornets

Atlanta's Inside Game Was Key To Charlotte's Ninth Straight Loss

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHARLOTTE — When things aren't going well from the outside, said Atlanta's Glenn "Doc" Rivers, then you have to hope for something inside.

Atlanta's hopes turned into a 112-105 victory over the slumping Charlotte Hornets thanks to timely shooting by Rivers and eight free throws by Moses Malone in the closing minutes. Charlotte lost its ninth straight game.

The Hawks missed 13 consecutive field goals in the third and fourth quarters, going 10-25 without a basket from the field. Charlotte, which trailed by 13 in the third quarter, came back behind reserve Dell Curry's 18-point performance and twice led by five in the fourth quarter.

Although the Hawks couldn't hit from the field, they managed to regain the lead thanks to timely shooting by Rivers and strong foul shooting at the end. Atlanta, which has won four straight and five out of six, outscored the Hornets 17-6 in the final 4:51 of the game.

Rivers hit a 3-pointer with 4:10 left to pull the Hawks within one at 99-98, then added a second outside shot just inside the 3-point line on the Hawks' next possession to give his team the lead for good.

Malone then took over, scoring 10 of the Hawks last 12 points.

The Hawks hit 43 of 54 free throws in the game to the Hornets 20 of 23. In the end, the Hawks didn't need the outside shot because the Hornets got only a layup by Dave Hoppen and four free throws in the last 4½ minutes.

Malone had a game-high 24 and Dominique Wilkins had 22. But Wilkins was held to five points in the second half, while Malone scored 16 in the third and fourth quarters. Rivers scored 21 and had six assists.

"I thought the second half we played great defense, excellent defense," said Charlotte coach Dick Harter, whose team has now matched the longest skid of the season. "We just let it slip away. If Moses hadn't gone to the line so much, we would have had him under good control."

Malone had a game-high 14 rebounds with 11 coming on the offensive end. He finished the game with a 16-for-22 performance from the line. Jon Koncak had 11 rebounds.

For Charlotte, which had seven players in double figures for the third time this season, Curry led with 18, followed by Kelly Tripucka with 17 and a season-high 16 from Hoppen.

Tyrone "Muggsy" Bogues, which led Charlotte scorers at the half with 11, scored 13 and added 15 assists.

The Hawks held a 13-point lead in the third quarter but allowed the Hornets to get back in the game by missing all those field goals.

Both teams shot over 51 percent from the field in the first half, but Atlanta finished the game with 40 percent from the field and the Hornets had 45.7 percent.

Pistons 124, Bullets 100

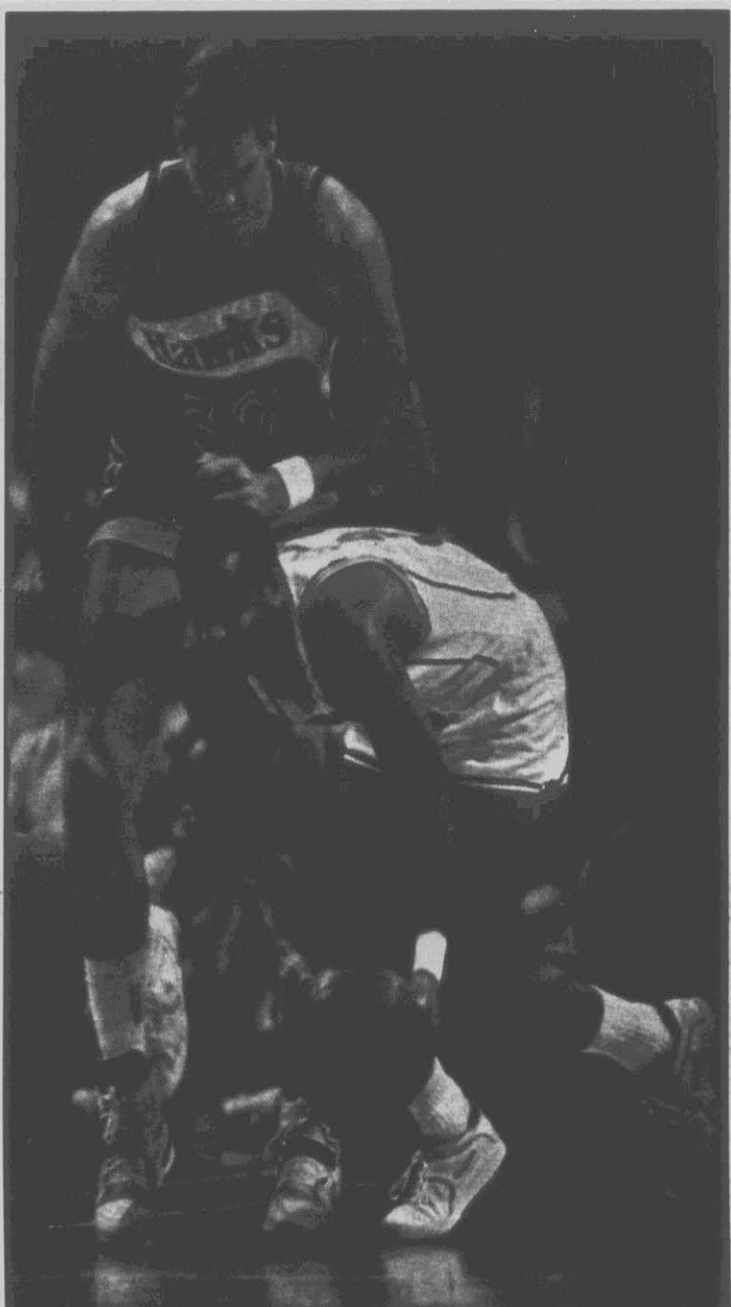

Isiah Thomas? Larry Bird? Who needs them?

Not that they wouldn't like to have them back, but the Detroit Pistons and Boston Celtics are doing all right without their respective injured stars.

Bill Laimbeer had 27 points and 11 rebounds, Joe Dumars had 21 points and 11 assists and Vinnie Johnson also had 21 points Monday as the Pistons won their fourth straight game — and second without the injured Thomas — trouncing the Washington Bullets 124-100.

Meanwhile, Kevin McHale's rebound and layup with seven seconds left gave Boston a 113-112 victory over the New Jersey Nets and a 2½-game lead over Washington in the race for the NBA's final Eastern

Pirates Ranked 30th In Latest ESPN Poll

East Carolina University has been ranked 30th in the nation in the Collegiate Baseball/ESPN Division I poll announced Monday afternoon.

This marks the first time the Pirates have been ranked since the 1986 season when that team went 40-10, reaching as high as 24th.

The Pirates, now 25-2, amassed 387 points out of a possible 600 in a power index. A nationwide panel of 103 coaches, sports writers and sports information directors votes on the top 30.

Texas A&M, 38-1, is the top-ranked team in the nation with a 499 index. No team has ever gone over 500 points in the national rankings.

East Carolina's pitching staff is ranked second in the nation by the NCAA, based on its earned run average. The Pirates have a 2.29 ERA through April 7. Number one is Virginia Commonwealth at 2.22, is a later Pirate foe, coming to Greenville in two weeks. VCU is coached by former ECU aide Tony Guzzo.

Jonathan Jenkins, who was named Player of the Week in the Colonial Athletic Association, is sixth in the national in ERA with a 0.54 mark. Jenkins has currently lowered his ERA to 0.43. Only three pitchers in the nation have more victories than Jenkins's 8-0 mark.

Jenkins pitched nine and a third scoreless innings Sunday in gaining two wins over the University of Richmond.

East Carolina, currently 11-1 in the conference, still trails UNC-Wilmington, which has a 12-0 record. The two teams will meet for what will prove to be the league's regular season title on Saturday and Sunday. The Saturday meeting will be a doubleheader at 6 p.m. and a single game Sunday at 1 p.m.

ECU travels to the University of Virginia on Tuesday for a 3 p.m. contest.

Majors, Dickey Choose To Leave Club

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Tennessee football coach Johnny Majors and athletics director Doug Dickey quit an all-white country club Monday after reports that incoming basketball coach Wade Houston, who is black, could not become a member.

"The university cannot be a party to any membership of any organization that even raises the possibility that a white coach can be treated one way and a black coach another," university president Lamar Alexander said.

The president of Cherokee Country Club said Monday that Houston could not have been denied a membership in the club because he had not applied.

Hank Bertelkamp said no application had been made by Houston or on his behalf, so it would not have been possible for it to be rejected.

"Cherokee Country Club has no exclusionary policy based on race," Bertelkamp said. He acknowledged that the club has no black members, however.

The university has for several years paid for memberships in the club — which has an entrance fee of $15,000 and $225 monthly dues — for the athletics director, football coach and basketball coach.

Before Alexander's late-afternoon announcement, political leaders were calling on the university to sever all ties to the country club.

Houston said over the weekend he had no intention of fighting to get into the club.

"It's their decision. It's their club," he said.

Statements made in Sunday newspapers by Dickey that a membership at Cherokee was not an option for Houston brought critical comments from black leaders.

"The university needs to take a definite stand on this," said Rep. Joe Armstrong, D-Knoxville.

Armstrong and Sen. Bill Owen, D-Knoxville, said prior to Alexander's announcement they were drafting a resolution calling on the university to cancel memberships for Dickey and Majors.

And Gov. Ned McWherter said, "I think it's silly for them to be taking up their time arguing about an issue like this. If officials of the university and coaches in the athletic department have a country club membership as a perk, and the country club will not allow one of their fellow coaches to join, then I think they should all get out."

Also Monday, members of another Knoxville country club appeared anxious to extend Houston an invitation to join. Sandra Blackburn, membership secretary for Deane Hill Country Club, said several members had called her to ask how they could invite Houston to become a member.

"We would be happy to have him here," she said.

Wilson Sets Record Pace, Wins Bud 200

BRISTOL, Tenn. (AP) — Rick Wilson, who set a record pace throughout the day, out-duelled Mark Martin and Rick Mast on Monday to capture the Budweiser 200 Grand National stock car race at Bristol International Raceway.

Wilson, who set a race qualifying record last Thursday with a lap of 119.299 mph, led on four separate occasions for a total of 161 of the 106-mile race's 200 laps.

Wilson's Oldsmobile Delta 88 averaged a race-record 85.776 mph as he gave the Grand National circuit its sixth different winner in six 1989 races.

Dale Earnhardt, who left the race after an early collision involving Jimmy Spencer's Buick and Tom Peck's Oldsmobile, finished 27th. He had set the old record of 76.162 mph in last year's Budweiser 200.

Rain on Saturday had forced the Grand National race to be reschedule for Monday.

Wilson, who took home a first-place check of $13,325, led 92 of the final 93 laps, losing the lead to Rick Mast on lap No. 192 when Mast took his Buick low in the first turn on a restart.

The lead soon came back to Wilson as he ducked past Mast in the backstretch on the next lap and Martin followed the move into the No. 2 spot.

"I knew the car was good enough to get back around him. I was just hoping he (Mast) wouldn't hit me or I wouldn't hit him," Wilson said.

"My car was working extremely good on the high side and on the low side. I just needed a good line and they (Mast and Martin) gave it to me," Wilson said.

"You couldn't ask for anything better. The car just ran perfect," Wilson said. "It was a deal where I would get four or five car lengths and just ride along until somebody got close and then I'd just punch it again."

Martin's Ford was the second car to take the checkered flag followed by Mast, Steve Grissom and Kenny Wallace.

Yankees Continue To Stumble

Bronx Bumpers Lose Again As Blue Jays Record 8-0 Shutout Victory

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The Bronx Bombers have become the Bronx Dive-Bombers, spinning out of sight.

"I'm tired of getting beat," New York Yankees manager Dallas Green said Monday night after Dave Stieb and Toronto beat the Yankees 8-0 on a one-hitter. "It's awful. I'm not sure we could beat Peoria the way we're playing."

While the Yankees may not be able to beat a Class A team, they've gotten themselves in Grade A trouble. New York is batting .186, has been outscored 48-13 and is 1-6 for the first time since 1975.

"It feels hopeless," Yankees first baseman Don Mattingly said.

Green was brought in to turn things around after a fifth-place finish last year. The only turns so far are down.

"I don't know if I can take much more of this. I'm not going to watch much more of this," he said. "I'm going to do some banging on someone. I can only stand still for so long."

On Saturday he said: "We stink."

He hasn't changed his mind.

"If I were a fan, I'd be booing, too," he said. "In fact, I'm booing from the dugout, but they can't hear me."

Stieb, who throws one-hitters routinely (three in his last four starts going back to last year), gave up only Jamie Quirk's solid single to center with one out in the fifth. Stieb, 1-0, struck out five and walked four.

"There's no secret to it," Stieb said. "I'm getting all of my pitches over and they got me a lot of runs, and that usually means a victory."

Jesse Barfield, Fred McGriff and Lloyd Moseby homered in Toronto's 12-hit attack against Andy Hawkins and two relievers. Barfield went 4-for-5 and also doubled.

Royals 3, Orioles 0

Bret Saberhagen threw a three-hitter for his ninth career shutout as Kansas City beat Baltimore for the 14th consecutive time since July 26, 1987.

Saberhagen, 3-0, struck out six and walked none in his ninth career shutout. He allowed a single to Brady Anderson leading off the game and a one-out double to Phil Bradley in the fourth. Saberhagen retired the next 16 batters until Anderson's single with two outs in the ninth.

Rookie Pete Harnisch, 0-1, allowed seven hits and walked five in 7 2-3 innings.

Athletics 4, Angels 0

Bob Welch allowed three hits in eight innings and Glenn Hubbard homered.

Welch, 2-0, struck out seven and walked none. He allowed a double by Brian Downing and a bloop single by Devon White in the fourth and a single by Claudell Washington in the eighth. Eric Plunk pitched a hitless ninth, striking out two.

Chuck Finley, 1-1, allowed 10 hits and all four runs in 6 2-3 innings.

Oakland took the lead in the first when Dave Henderson doubled and scored on Mark McGwire's single. McGwire left the game three innings later with a stiff lower back and was to be examined today.

Hubbard's solo homer in the fourth, his second of the season, made it 3-0.

Red Sox 5, Indians 2

Nick Esasky homered in his Red Sox debut and Wade Boggs keyed rallies with a pair of singles in Boston's homer opener.

Mike Boddicker, 1-0, allowed no runs and two hits in five innings. Mike Smithson relieved after a two-run homer by Joe Carter in the sixth. Smithson finished for his second save.

Joe Skalski allowed three runs on six hits in five innings.

Cleveland pulled within 3-2 on Carter's homer, which snapped Boddicker's streak of 16 2-3 innings scoreless innings against the Indians. Boston scored two runs in the bottom of the inning on Esasky's first AL homer and Marty Barrett's RBI double.

Rangers 6, Brewers 4

Ruben Sierra doubled in the go-ahead run in the 10th inning in Milwaukee's home opener.

Sierra's hit off Chuck Crim, 0-1, followed a walk to Rafael Palmeiro. Cecil Espy singled in the final run for the Rangers, who won for the fifth time in six games.

Jeff Russell, 1-0, struck out Robin Yount with two on and two outs in the ninth and then retired the Brewers in order in the 10th.

Pete Incaaviglia tied it for the Rangers with a two-run homer off Chris Bosio in the sixth.

Mariners 6, White Sox 5

Dave Valle tripled off a Kingdome speaker to drive in the go-ahead run in a three-run seventh inning and Seattle hung on to win its home opener.

Murray, Hurst Starting To Pay Off

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Eddie Murray and Bruce Hurst have started to put up some impressive numbers in the National League, too.

Murray hit his 15th career grand slam Monday night to lead Los Angeles to a 7-4 victory over San Francisco. Hurst, shelled in his first NL start, pitched a one hitter and struck out 13 as San Diego beat Atlanta 5-2.

Murray, the seven-time American League All-Star who was only 2-for-25 in for the Dodgers, hit a grand slam in the ninth inning at Candlestick Park to cap a five-run rally and give Orel Hershiser his first victory.

"I'm so confused at this point that I have no idea what the pitch was," said Murray, who hit 333 homers in 12 years for the Baltimore Orioles before being acquired by the Dodgers last December. "I was just trying to get one run in."

Murray is in eighth place on the all-time slam list and needs one more to tie Babe Ruth, Hank Aaron and Dave Kingman.

"He hit a pretty good homer, huh, at the proper time," Los Angeles manager Tommy Lasorda said. "That's what he was waiting for, the bases loaded."

Hurst, who signed as a free agent for $5.25 million over three years, lost his debut with the Padres last week. He was 88-73 in nine seasons with the Boston and had two two-hitters.

The left-hander's performance was a reversal from his NL debut last Wednesday when he allowed nine hits and seven runs in five innings in an 8-3 loss to the Giants.

"I was much better prepared to pitch tonight," Hurst said. "I spent all week making sure I got into the frame of mind I needed to be."

The only hit Hurst allowed was a two-out, two-run homer by Lonnie Smith in the third inning.

"It was a bad pitch," Hurst said. "I hung a forkball 0-2. But, I've given up home runs before and there was a lot of baseball left to pitch. I told myself to just keep it at two and give us a chance to get back."

At Candlestick, Mike LaCoss relieved Altee Hammaker after Mike Scioscia singled to lead off the ninth with the Dodgers trailing 3-2.

Kirk Gibson drove in pinch-runner Dave Anderson with a grounder that first baseman Will Clark booted for an error, and then Murray homered for his first NL extra-base hit.

Phillies 7, Expos 6

Von Hayes led off the bottom of the ninth inning with his second homer of the game to lift Philadelphia past Montreal.

Hayes' homer over the right-field fence came on a 2-1 pitch from Gene Harris, 1-1, to make a winner of reliever Steve Bedrosian, 1-0. It was the seventh time in Hayes' career that he has hit two homers in a game.

Mike Fitzgerald also hit two homers for Montreal, the second giving the Expos a 5-5 tie in the sixth.

Reds 8, Astros 3

Eric Davis hit a three-run homer in the fifth and Tom Browning beat a West Division opponent for the 14th straight time as Cincinnati whipped Houston at the Astrodome.

Astros left-hander Bob Knepper dropped to 0-2. Last season, Knepper did not lose consecutive starts en route to a 14-5 record.

Ron Oester walked to start the fifth, was balked to second and moved to third on a sacrifice by Browning. Barry Larkin's single scored Oester and after Kal Daniels singled, Davis homered over the center-field fence.

Glenn Davis homered for the Astros and also had a run-scoring double.

Schembechler...

After the game, a CBS sportscaster asked Schembechler in his best you-heard-it-here-first voice if Fisher would be the new head coach.

It was question that had been asked 1,248 times.

Schembechler smiled and said Fisher would be interviewed for the job.

Oh, what a card that Bo is. Of course, he could have had them rolling in the aisles if he had said, "We're going to interview Steve after we talk to P.J. Carlesimo (the Seton Hall coach)."

Maybe Schembechler let down Brent and Billy and the gang at CBS, but Fisher knew what to expect.

"He said he wasn't going to make an emotional, popular decision and name me before or right after the tournament," Fisher said.

"I don't think this is any secret," Schembechler said in announcing Fisher's appointment Monday. "I look at it as a continuation of what this young coach has done in the time since he took over the Michigan team in the NCAA tournament and led it to the national championship."

Fisher reportedly was the only candidate interviewed for the job.

If Schembechler had announced Fisher's appointment in the first flush of victory, he might have come across as Bo Fan rather than as a big-time athletic director.

As a big-time athletic director, he also obviously knew that loyal alumni would expect a show of loyalty to the man who stepped into the breach.

Besides, a week's delay was nothing. Can you imagine how long it would take Schembechler to name an interim coach as head football coach?

Last week, Fisher and his wife attended a black-tie dinner at the White House, then spent the night there.

If the "Gipper" still lived there, rumors would be flying about a possible movie of Fisher's life, with a featured role going to the actor who played Bo.

Dad's Success Brings No Pressure

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

INDIANAPOLIS — His father was a world heavyweight champion at 21. Tracy Patterson is looking for a world featherweight title at 24 and says that the success of Floyd Patterson carries no pressure.

"I don't put that kind of pressure on me," says the younger Patterson, who battles Kim Jackson of Elkhart, Ind., in a 10-rounder for the Mid-American Boxing Association's featherweight title in tonight's feature bout at Tyndall Armory.

The elder Patterson will be there with him, serving as his manager and trainer.

"Most important, I'm his father," the former world champion said Monday. "My only problem is when he gets hurt. When it was me that was hurt, I knew the degree I was hurt. When he's hurt, I don't know the degree and that bothers me."

Patterson has been working with Tracy since he arrived in his New Paltz boxing camp as an 11-year-old. Three years later he adopted the youngster.

"He's the only father I've known. He's taught me as a boxer and he's taught me as a father. The biggest thing is to be willing to work. I'm tough on myself, but every now and then he's got to give me a kick in the butt," Tracy said.

The younger Patterson, 29-1 with 19 knockouts as a professional, is scheduled to meet Steve Cruz, a former featherweight champion, May 14 in Atlantic City, N.J. in a fight to be televised nationally by NBC.

"I'm very proud," the elder Patterson said. "But, I'm more happy for him, to see him get what he wants after all the work that he put into it. All that I've told him, and I think I learned a lot about this sport, he's listened to."

The father has also taught his son the value of his word.

"When Madison Square Garden signed Tracy for that (Cruz) fight, I was worried they would pull out of this fight," promoter Fred Berns said. "But, they gave me their word and they're here."

"We promised that we would do the fight and they were there first," the elder Patterson said. "Once you commit yourself to something, even though there were no contracts signed, you live up to it."

The site of tonight's fight is only a few miles from the Indiana State Fairgrounds, where at 24 Patterson knocked out England's Brian London on May 1, 1959, retaining the heavyweight title he won as a 21-year-old with a fifth-round knockout of Archie Moore in Chicago to become the youngest heavyweight champion ever — a distinction that stood until Mike Tyson won the crown.

Jackson, the Indiana featherweight champion, is 15-1.

"All I'm thinking about is tomorrow night," Tracy said. "I don't know much about Jackson."

Boston Lesson: Don't Dump On Fans

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BOSTON — The verdict is in from Red Sox fans at Fenway Park: cheat on your wife if you must, but criticize the hometown at your peril.

Wade Boggs got the good news when he was introduced Monday before the Boston Red Sox home opener when fans gave him a rousing ovation despite nearly a year of publicity about his extramarital affair with Margo Adams.

And ace pitcher Roger Clemens got the bad news a moment later when boos cascaded down from the Fenway grandstand.

The reason was simple enough to those in the stands.

"Clemens dumped on the fans and Boggs didn't," said Ken Magrath, who was watching the action from an upper deck box seat. "You know what they say about Red Sox baseball: It's not life and death. It's more serious than that."

Clemens stepped into the off-season spotlight with some vague remarks about how he was unhappy in Boston, how the area did not afford the family atmosphere he valued in life and how he did not feel the team did enough to protect his family at the ballpark from rowdy fans.

After getting himself in trouble with press comments, Clemens has a policy of not talking to reporters unless he's pitching, and Manager Joe Morgan seemed unconcerned with the fans' reaction to his pitching ace.

"That's up to the fans," Morgan said. "All I know is they clapped for me."

For Boggs, the cheers were a welcome relief.

"It really meant the world to me," Boggs said after the Red Sox defeated the Cleveland Indians 5-2, sparked by two Boggs singles that began rallies. "I've been waiting all winter for this day ... I didn't know what it was going to be like."

Now, Boggs said he would like the team to get noticed for baseball.

"We just can't be dwelling on this thing all year," Boggs said, adding that his own reception helped relieve tension of off-season trade talk.

Basketball Roundup ...

Conference playoff berth.

The Pistons have won 12 of their last 13 games and 21 of 23 and have a three-game lead over second-place Cleveland in the Central Division. Washington lost at home for the second time in as many days after winning five straight overall and 15 in a row at the Capital Centre.

Detroit dominated the game except for the opening minutes. The Pistons missed four of their first five shots, then made 12 of 15 to open a 35-21 lead in the first quarter. The Bulls' starting lineup totaled only 31 points on 14-of-36 shooting (39 percent). Ledell Eackles led Washington with 22 points.

Celtics 113, Nets 112

Chris Morris, who led New Jersey with 19 points, missed a shot with 19 seconds left. Boston's Robert Parish, who had 29 points and 13 rebounds, got the rebound and started a fastbreak.

Brian Shaw missed a 15-footer but McHale, who had 24 points, got his only offensive rebound of the game and made the basket that gave Boston its 13th consecutive home victory and handed New Jersey its 14th straight road loss.

Lester Conner and Roy Hinson had 17 points each for New Jersey.

Kings 108, Heat 69

Kenny Smith scored 23 points, Vinny Del Negro added 20 and Wayman Tisdale had 18 as Sacramento posted the second largest victory margin in the history of the franchise. The 39-point margin was five less than a 146-102 victory over Denver on Dec. 22, 1983.

Rony Seikaly scored 18 points for expansion Miami, whose 69 points were four more than its record low of 65 against Boston last Nov. 15. The Kings' biggest lead, 97-48, came with 9:45 left. Miami had only scored 48 points and trailed by 49.

Lakers 133, Clippers 116

Magic Johnson scored 24 points and added 13 assists and A.C. Green had 15 points and nine rebounds as the Lakers snapped a two-game losing streak and reduced their magic number for clinching their eighth consecutive Pacific Division title to six. They lead Phoenix by two games with seven left for each team.

The Lakers took control from the outset, outscoring the Clippers 31-9 in the first 7½ minutes as James Worthy and Byron Scott each scored eight points. The Lakers led 40-20 after one period and 77-52 at halftime.

The Clippers were led by Gary Grant, who had 21 points and 13 assists. They played without starting center Benoit Benjamin, who broke out in hives after an allergic reaction to food he ate following a loss to Phoenix on Saturday night.

Pacers 110, Mavericks 103

Reggie Miller scored 25 points, including a 3-pointer with 4:20 to play that gave Indiana the lead for good.

The Mavericks, trailing 89-73 early in the fourth quarter, went on a 19-2 run and took a 92-91 lead with 4:47 to play on two free throws by Adrian Dantley, who led Dallas with 26 points. But Miller drilled his 3-pointer for a 94-92 Indiana lead and former Maverick Detlef Schrempf's basket with 2:58 left made it 96-92.

Schrempf had 20 points for Indiana, which converted all 12 free-throw attempts in the final 2:20.

Dallas fell 2½ games behind Portland in the race for the NBA's eighth and final Western Conference playoff spot.

SuperSonics 102, Spurs 89

Dale Ellis scored 28 points and Xavier McDaniel added 26 as Seattle clinched a playoff berth. Willie Anderson led San Antonio with 22 points and Vernon Maxwell added 15 for the Spurs, who have lost eight of their last 11 games.

Ellis had eight points to trigger a 13-2 Seattle run late in the third quarter that gave the Sonics an 85-71 lead. San Antonio trimmed the deficit to eight early in the fourth period but Seattle took control with an 11-0 run over a 5:18 stretch.

The Sonics took the season series from San Antonio 4-0, with a margin of victory of more than 12 points a game.

Oklahoma Rape Trial ...

moving it down real fast," she testified. "He pushed me down as I started to struggle. I said, 'Hey, no, wait a second.' I tried to find my zipper but I couldn't."

She struggled throughout, the victim said, but was unable to get out from under her assailant.

The first two people were unsuccessful in their attempts to have intercourse, she said. She said she believed the next four who tried were successful, although she wasn't sure about one person because she was in great pain.

Following the alleged gang rape, the woman said someone turned on the lights, walked into the room and asked what was going on.

"I responded to Nigel because he walked into my line of vision," she said. "I said 'What do you think is going on here, Nigel? They raped me.'"

She said the girl with whom she had gone to Norman sat beside her on the floor and apologized, saying she hadn't been able to get into the room.

"I asked Nigel why (it had happened) and he said, 'It's because you're pretty,'" the victim said.

She said her friend and Clay told her several times she needed to calm down. "I remember Nigel saying, 'We'll get in trouble.'"

However, asked whether she thought Clay had been involved, she said no.

She said she asked Clay later that night what would happen if she got pregnant.

"He said 'If you do, I'll pay for it,'" she testified. Asked what Clay meant by "it," she said an abortion.

The woman said she passed out when she tried to get up off the floor, and again when she tried to leave the dorm. She wanted to immediately go home, she said, but her friend tried to talk her out of it.

"I said I wanted to go see my sister. She said 'You can't go because she will make you go to the police,'" the woman said.

She said she left once, but the friend screamed at her and insisted they return to the dorm. They did, she said, and they later went to a fast-food restaurant with one of the athletes not involved in the case before returning to the dorm again.

Hall's attorney, Fred Shaeffer, asked the sister of the victim if the woman had mentioned why she had waited to report the alleged assault, which was not reported to police until Monday, Jan. 23.

"She told me she didn't feel like anybody would believe her," the woman said. "(She said) they're OU football players."

The victim's mother said she asked her daughter why she had returned to the dorm.

"She said 'I don't know. I don't know, Mom,'" the mother said.

The courtroom in the basement of the Cleveland County Courthouse was packed for the first day of the hearing. Special District Judge Gary Purcell even allowed some of those in the courtroom to sit in the jury box.

Michigan Names Coach...

most of all to be sure rumors of improprieties in Frieder's program either were untrue or didn't involve Fisher, who served as an assistant for seven years under the departed coach.

For example, a high school player whom Frieder had recruited recently began driving a new Mustang. The prospect had to convince Schembechler his mother bought the car.

"I think Steve is a forceful disciplinarian, even though he doesn't give you that impression," Schembechler said. "Let's face it, tomorrow the honeymoon is over and it'll really be over when the season starts next fall. Coaching's a tough business, I can tell you that."

Duke coach Mike Krzyzewski and Evansville coach Jim Crews are believed to be other candidates in whom Michigan was interested, but they never were interviewed.

"The more I thought about it, the more I was convinced we had the right guy right here," Schembechler said. "He was thrown into the breach and showed a lot of moxie."

Terms of the contract weren't disclosed, but Fisher is expected to receive a one-year contract, which is standard for all Michigan coaches. Fisher probably will be paid about $85,000 a year, but an expected shoe contract worth about $100,000 plus money from basketball camps and radio shows could push Fisher's income to an estimated $450,000 annually.

"It's a dream come true," Fisher said. "I knew when I was in high school I wanted to be a coach and a teacher. Never in my wildest dreams did I think it would be a place like Michigan."

Fisher, who said he lost 15 pounds off an already-lean frame during the emotional ride to the championship, said he would retain Mike Boyd as his No. 1 assistant and move Brian Dutcher up to a full-time position. Boyd and Dutcher were brought into the program by Frieder, who angered Schembechler with the timing of his defection.

"Bill Frieder is a friend," Fisher said. "He hired me. I think that's life. After that, it's what you make of your opportunity."

"If you know Bill Frieder, you know you're going to get late-night phone calls. Lately, I leave my answering machine on a lot, but he's one I call back."

He said he expects Frieder to continue recruiting in Michigan, where he has deep roots.

Fisher was an assistant at Western Michigan for three seasons before coming to Michigan. He began his coaching career at Rich East High School in Park Forest, Ill., where he coached for eight years.

"I'm not a rookie," Fisher said. "I feel I know what it takes to have a successful program. I know what kind of program Steve Fisher wants."

"This will be Steve Fisher's program. I'm nobody's clone."

Haitians Hijack Plane en route to Florida

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MIAMI — Two Haitian soldiers who fired their way aboard a small plane before hijacking it to Florida were being questioned about their role in a recent failed coup attempt in Haiti, authorities and witnesses said.

The plane was carrying eight people, including three American missionaries, when the Fort Lauderdale-bound flight was hijacked Monday. No one was injured.

Passengers said the soldiers did not threaten them and had hoped to talk to President Bush.

The two were to be arraigned this afternoon on air piracy charges, said Paul Miller, an FBI spokesman.

Witnesses said the pair ran out waving guns and shooting in the air Monday on the tarmac at Cap Haitien airport on Haiti's northern coast, and forced their way onto the twin-engine Cessna 402.

They threw down their weapons and surrendered upon arrival at Miami International Airport, the FBI said.

"These guys were pretty upset," said pilot Duer Smedley. "They were desperate to get out of Haiti. They're not like terrorists from Lebanon. They are not looking to hurt anyone. They are just looking for a way out of the country."

Guillaume Berlioz, 25, and Fadael Milord, 29, both of the Haitian capital Port-au-Prince, were armed with a .38-caliber revolver, an assault rifle and a 40mm anti-tank shell, the FBI said.

They were questioned by the FBI and transferred to the Metropolitan Correctional Center.

Miller said investigators weren't certain of the motive behind the hijacking, but, "there are indications that they are against the government." Police sources at Cap Haitien, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said the hijackers had deserted from the Dessalines Battalion.

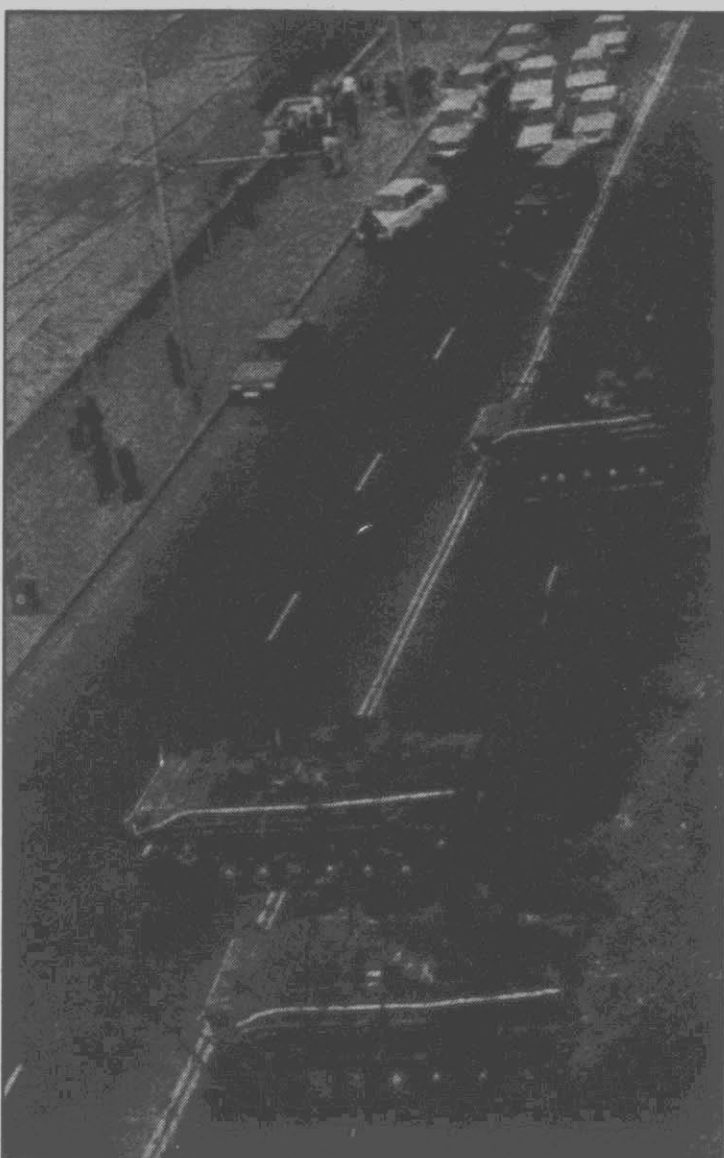

The battalion, with 750 soldiers, is one of two military units that tried to bring down Lt. Gen. Prosper Avril, Haiti's military president, on April 2.

By Monday, Avril's loyal 1,100-member Presidential Guard appeared to have quieted rebellious outbreaks.

Smedley said the pair told him they wanted to talk to Bush after they surrendered.

"I asked him where he wanted to go and he said 'Miami, Miami, I have a lot of things to tell Bush,'" the pilot said.

"The military has been fighting down there for the last week," Smedley said. "I think these guys were just on the losing side."

Soviet armored vehicles block street in Georgian capital

Georgians Nurse Their Wounds

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOSCOW — Radio stations played funeral music, residents wore black and troops in tanks rolled through the streets today as the Soviet republic of Georgia mourned the deaths of 19 people killed in ethnic turmoil.

"Everyone's suffering. Many are not working because everyone feels terrible and can't come to their senses," said Nana Natadze, the wife of a Georgian nationalist activist.

The republic's leadership declared today a day of mourning to mark the deaths of civilians killed in Sunday's clash with soldiers and police during a pro-independence rally.

Georgian Communist Party leader Djhumber Patiashvili called the deaths "a common grief."

Cars and trolleys were adorned with black flags and people wore black clothes and ribbons, Mrs. Natadze said by telephone from the Georgian capital of Tbilisi, a city of 1.2 million people about 900 miles southeast of Moscow.

"Everything is black," she said.

Tanks, armored personnel carriers and soldiers patrolled the streets to enforce a ban on public gatherings and an 11 p.m. to 6 a.m. curfew.

Georgian radio and television canceled regular programs to broadcast funeral music and news, said Nana Natadze, another Tbilisi resident whose daughter, Irina Sarishvili, was among six Georgian activists arrested during the weekend.

All entertainment activities were canceled, said the deputy director of the official Georgian news agency Gruzinform. He declined to give his name.

Dr. David Lazarishvili, an anesthesiologist at the Central Republic Hospital in Tbilisi, said a 32-year-old man died this morning of injuries from Sunday's clash. He said that brought the death toll to at least 19, although he said he heard unconfirmed reports of as many as 50 deaths.

Foreign Ministry spokesman Genady I. Gerasimov said Monday that 17 or 18 people had been killed and 100 injured when they were trampled. According to official and unofficial reports, the dead included 12 women and seven men.

In a report on the evening television news program "Vremya," Patiashvili said no one expected fatalities when troops armed with clubs and shields were ordered to clear demonstrators from Tbilisi's main street.

"After the troops started to act, (the demonstrators) didn't retreat. And then the unpredictable happened," he said. "The troops didn't back off, and unfortunately, innocent people who were not active participants in the demonstration died."

"Unfortunately," he added, "the leaders immediately fled, and not one of them was scratched."

Reports indicated a general strike that began Friday to back demands for Georgia to secede from the Soviet Union was easing. Some buses and trolleys resumed service after being idled by the strike, Mrs. Natadze said. Many schools remained closed because of a boycott, she said.

The Gruzinform official said some people still were striking factories.

Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze, an ethnic Georgian, was sent to the republic to help quell the unrest. He met today with workers, the Gruzinform official said. He had no details of the session.

Shevardnadze, who displayed some sympathy to nationalists during his earlier tenure as the republic's Communist Party chief, and Politburo member Georgy P. Razumovsky met Monday with Georgian party leaders.

Japanese Leader Says He Got Funds

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOKYO — Prime Minister Noboru Takeshita told parliament today that he received $1 million from the company at the center of a highly damaging bribery scandal, but he rejected opposition demands that he resign.

Takeshita's statement was a reversal of earlier comments that he had not received money from Recruit Co., an information and publishing conglomerate.

"I am feeling my political and moral responsibilities very strongly," he told parliament's budget committee. "I think it is important to settle this matter legally and politically as soon as possible."

A series of recent news reports linking Takeshita to Recruit had prompted the prime minister to explain his role in the widening scandal.

"I am aware the Recruit scandal is the most serious matter I have ever experienced in the 38 years of my political career," he said during the nationally televised committee hearing.

"Political reform is essential to overcome the current situation and restore public trust in politics."

Takeshita said Recruit and its subsidiaries gave about $1 million between 1985 and 1987 to his political organizations in the form of donations and purchases of fund-raising party tickets while he was finance minister and secretary-general of the governing Liberal Democratic Party.

The prime minister said the money was treated as political donations, not bribes.

Asked by opposition lawmaker Kanji Kawasaki of the Japan Socialist Party what his understanding was of Recruit's intention in making such large donations, Takeshita replied: "I am not in a position of telling the intent of another party's political donations."

In the scandal, Recruit sold hundreds of thousands of unlisted shares in a real-estate subsidiary to about 160 political, business and government officials at low prices.

Buyers of the shares received handsome profits when the stock value soared shortly after being listed on the over-the-counter market.

Mexicans Capture Reputed Drug Boss

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MEXICO CITY — Opposition politicians and U.S. officials praised Mexican authorities for the capture of a drug czar believed to control more than half of the cocaine shipped through Mexico to the United States.

Authorities seized some of Miguel Angel Felix Gallardo's assets Monday, including a hotel, pharmacy, real-estate company, bank accounts and various properties. Felix Gallardo, 43, was arrested Saturday night in Guadalajara.

No value was placed on the assets confiscated Monday, but Felix Gallardo's net worth is estimated to exceed $500 million, including at least 50 houses and 200 ranches.

Attorney General Enrique Alvarez del Castillo, at a news conference Monday, called Felix Gallardo "the No. 1 drug trafficker in Mexico."

He said that others arrested in the weekend raids included three of Felix Gallardo's aides as well as the chief federal anti-drug official and five other ranking police officers in Sinaloa, Felix Gallardo's home state.

"We congratulate the judicial police for the apprehension of the drug czar and we praise the role of the military in Sinaloa, where they detained police involved in drug trafficking," Alberto Noyola, spokesman for the conservative National Action Party, told the government news agency Notimex.

Cesar Yanez, a leader of the leftist Democratic Revolutionary Party, told Notimex: "We hope that this not only affects the circulation of drugs but that it attacks the problem starting with production."

Members of Alabama celebrate backstage after being named the artists of the decade

Alabama Wins Country Music's Decade Award

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BURBANK, Calif. — Southern rockers Alabama got the artist of the decade award from the Academy of Country Music, but it was 1989's top entertainer Hank Williams Jr. who provided the show's wallop.

Williams was one of three double winners, taking his third consecutive entertainer of the year trophy and second video award during Monday night's 24th-annual presentations.

K.T. Oslin won album of the year and best female vocalist and Kathy Mattea's "Eighteen Wheels and a Dozen Roses" won for record and song.

Randy Travis was shut out despite three nominations.

It appeared to be Alabama's night as the band joined Marty Robbins and Loretta Lynn in the artist of the decade ranks.

But Williams, the wild-eyed Tennessean whose rowdiness has been embraced by country music in recent years, brought a tear to many of the 1,600 people present when he accepted his trophy.

"I'm a late bloomer, a survivor, a fighter, a contender," Williams said.

"I can be a champion, but I'm nothing without all of you in this room and all the fans out there."

Williams then referred to his current hit record and video, the father-son duet "Tear in My Beer," which uses a tape his late father made decades ago.

"The video with Daddy was the most special thing I ever did in my life," Williams said, choking back tears and biting his lip.

Backstage, he conceded it was as emotional for him as the audience.

"When I started talking about that video I had to get off that stage because the man of steel just about lost it," he said.

The presentations broadcast on NBC-TV also brought a videotaped salute from President Bush, who said "howdy" and told the artists he had a "deep appreciation for country and western music, and the values you represent."

The big surprise was Travis' leaving empty handed. He's won eight ACM trophies since 1986 and this year has won American Music Awards and a Grammy Award.

The crowd inside Walt Disney Studios gave a standing ovation to Alabama members Randy Owen, Jeff Cook, Teddy Gentry and Mark Herndon.

"I'd like to accept this award for all those artists that have deserved awards but never won awards," said Owen.

Alabama has won 13 Country Music Awards since 1982. It has had 21 consecutive No. 1 singles, including "Feels So Right," "The Closer You Get," "Roll On" and "You've Got the Touch."

Cowpoke balladeer Robbins prevailed in the 1960s and coal miner's daughter Miss Lynn was crowned the decade's best in the 1970s.

Miss Oslin, the robust queen of down-home music known for her irreverence, thanked "the fans, the radio that played me and me."

Strait won his third male vocalist trophy, the last time in 1986 when he also won album of the year.

"This means a lot to me. My little boy has been asking me, 'Dad, when are you going to win another award?' Well, we got one tonight Bubba," Strait said, referring to 7-year-old George Jr.

Los Angeles-based Highway 101 beat out Alabama, the Desert Rose Band, the Oak Ridge Boys and Restless Heart to take their second consecutive vocal group trophy.

The Judds, Naomi and her daughter Wynona, took their fifth consecutive duet award.

Suzy Bogguss was named top new female vocalist and Rodney Crowell, whose wife is country singer Rosanne Cash, was named the top new male vocalist.

Buck Owens, the academy's top male vocalist in 1966, was presented the non-competitive Pioneer Award for outstanding achievement.

 ISN'T SO GREAT AT SIZING UP SITUATIONS.

Today's Cryptquip clue: E equals H

The Cryptquip is a simple substitution cipher in which each letter used stands for another. If you think that X equals O, it will equal O throughout the puzzle. Single letters, short words, and words using an apostrophe can give you clues to locating vowels. Solution is accomplished by trial and error.

 Bridge star Matthew Granovetter has written an intriguing book mixing sound bridge instruction with a murder mystery (Murder at the Bridge Table, published by Granovetter Books, 310 pp, paperback. Available from The Bridge World, 39 W. 94th St., New York, N.Y. 10025. $12.95 postpaid.) If we have any complaint, it is that the author has tried to do too much. But there is much to learn from the bridge advice, as this hand illustrates.

"The bidding was questionable. Marcel's double with two five-card majors is doubly wrong ... The club lead went to dummy's queen ... Next the diamond king was played. Under normal circumstances Marie would have played the deuce to show an odd number. But it was illogical to give count for two reasons:

"(1) Marcel had already won the ace before the count could be given; and

"(2) holding up could not help the defense since dummy had plenty of entries ...

"Marie must have understood this. When Marcel won the diamond ace, she played the ten in an effort to show where her strength was. This was a suit-preference signal that should have led to a two-trick set. It was an excellent idea and many players would not have thought of it. Yet upon reflection no other meaning was conceivable.

"There can be few explanations for Marcel's actual heart return ... There can be little doubt he either thought Marie's ten was a count signal or he hadn't even bothered to look at it. The former case is a sign of ignorance, the latter motive for murder."

The hands and the mystery are interestingly linked. An enjoyable read.
