Mrs. Bush undergoes treatment for thyroid condition

Barbara Treated

WASHINGTON — Barbara Bush went to a military hospital this morning for radioactive treatment to destroy her thyroid gland because it is producing excess levels of hormones, a condition that has irritated her eyes and caused her to lose 18 pounds in recent months.

A White House statement said the procedure "has no significant side effects" and has been a standard treatment for 40 years for people suffering with her condition, known as Graves disease. Mrs. Bush went to Walter Reed Army Medical Center for the procedure.

Once her thyroid gland has stopped operating, probably in two to three months, Mrs. Bush will have to take daily medication to maintain adequate hormone levels, according to her press secretary, Anna Perez.

Mrs. Bush consulted doctors last month because of swelling and irritation in her eyes, causing them to tear, and the sudden weight loss.

For several weeks, Mrs. Bush has been treated with methimazole, a drug that blocks production of excess hormones in the thyroid, a butterfly-shaped gland in the neck.

Ms. Perez said the use of drugs was an interim therapy and that the destruction of the thyroid through radiation was a more permanent treatment.

"She's feeling great. She's feeling just fine," Ms. Perez said. She said the first lady still was experiencing some problem with tears but that the condition was much improved.

Today's procedure, an alternative to surgery, was to be carried out with radioactive iodine in an oral solution. Once ingested, it seeks out the thyroid and begins destroying it.

Left untreated, Graves disease can be life threatening, but it generally responds quickly to therapy. It is caused when antibodies attack the thyroid gland and cause it to secrete too much hormone.

Satanic Smugglers Butchered 12

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MATAMOROS, Mexico — A satanic cult of drug smugglers who sacrificed and apparently cannibalized humans slaughtered 12 people, including a U.S. college student on spring break, authorities say.

Five people were arrested in connection with the killings and on drug charges by Mexican Federal Judicial Police, which found the dozen bodies in graves at a ranch just south of the U.S. border.

Police said they planned to resume digging today at the Santa Elena Ranch, searching for two more bodies.

"It was horrible," Cameron County Sheriff Alex Perez told a news conference Tuesday in the Texas border city of Brownsville. "It was like a human slaughterhouse."

The suspects were U.S. and Mexican citizens, said Sheriff's Lt. George Gavito, who did not identify them further.

The dead included 21-year-old University of Texas student Mark

Kilroy, who vanished last month in Matamoros, Gavito said.

Kilroy apparently was chosen at random by drug smugglers who had hoped human sacrifices would protect them from harm, Gavito said.

Kilroy was grabbed after the cult members "were told to pick one Anglo male that particular night," Gavito said.

The cult had been involved in human sacrifices for about nine months, he said, and prayed to the devil "so the police would not arrest them, so bullets would not kill them and so they could make more money."

Authorities found candles and kettles full of body parts and animal bones, said Oran Neck, chief U.S. Customs agent in Brownsville.

Also found were bowls and a caldron from which brains, hearts and other organs of victims were eaten, Perez said.

"They were cooking body parts in a big pot there on that ranch," said Texas Attorney General Jim Mattox.

Eastern Deal May Be Out

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Peter V. Ueberroth's deal to buy strike-bound Eastern Airlines "didn't go through," its president was quoted as saying today.

There was no indication whether the deal had collapsed or merely been stalled.

Dow Jones News Service quoted Eastern President Phil Bakes as saying the parties planned a news conference for today to "explain why this deal didn't go through." There was no indication when the news conference would take place.

"There is no deal right now," Eastern attorney David Boies told The Associated Press.

Talks between a Ueberroth-led group and Eastern parent Texas Air Corp. had bogged down over key provisions of the group's proposed $464 million buyout, and a self-imposed deadline for agreement expired at midnight Tuesday with no deal.

Separately, a federal judge in Miami today found no legal grounds to order Eastern's pilots back to work, handing the airline another blow in its attempts to end a crippling strike begun by the Machinists union March 4.

U.S. District Judge Edward B. Davis today said he found no evidence the pilots staged an illegal strike to further their own contract aims, as Eastern had charged in a request for a back-to-work order.

The pilots said they were only honoring Machinists' picket lines, and a federal appeals court last month asked Davis to determine whether that was the case.

Ueberroth and Frank Lorenzo, chairman of Texas Air, walked out of the talks at U.S. Bankruptcy Court Tuesday evening.

The stumbling block was a union demand that a trustee take interim control of strike-bound Eastern while the airline changes hands, sources said.

"I'm not optimistic," the former baseball commissioner said as he left. Lorenzo refused to comment.

Judge Burton R. Lifland, who is presiding over the bankruptcy case, ordered the parties to return to his chambers this morning.

Hearings Scheduled On Land Use Plan

The Pitt County Planning Board's comprehensive plan subcommittee has scheduled a series of public meetings for the last week in April to present information and solicit comments on draft goals and objectives for the county's first comprehensive land use plan.

Jeff Ulma, the county planning director, said the five-member subcommittee has been working with the planning staff since September and wants to share the planning information with the citizens of the county.

"The subcommittee has studied growth and development factors, has identified major land use issues, and has drafted goals and objectives which will form the framework for the rest of the plan," Ulma said. "It's time to let the general public review this information and provide comments on the direction being proposed."

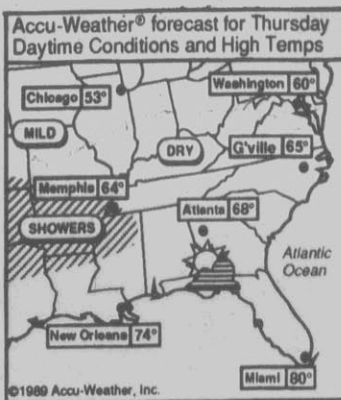

According to Ulma, the recommended goals and objectives prepared by the subcommittee have been organized into five topic areas. They include growth and development, land use, transportation, community services and facilities, and natural environment.

For each of the categories, Ulma said, a general goal and more specific objectives have been developed. Some of the objectives address such things as management of growth and development, preservation of prime agricultural land, effective land use regulations, aesthetics, protection of natural resources and provision of adequate public facilities and services.

The public meetings are intended to allow citizens to express their

Pet Adoption Fees Will Go Up Sharply Under New Plan

By Greg Laudick
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

A newly adopted program that is designed to reduce the stray and unwanted animal population in Greenville will significantly increase pet adoption fees at the local animal shelter.

The program, approved by the City Council at Monday's workshop session, will increase the adoption fee for cats from the current $2 to $35 and from $10 to $50 for dogs.

Under terms of the program, local veterinarians will agree to perform sterilization procedures on recently adopted animals in exchange for a fee to be paid by the animal shelter. The increased revenues obtained through the collection of higher adoption fees will be committed to pay for the spay or neuter operations.

"I think this program is wonderful," said Bobbie Parsons, president of the Pitt County Humane Society and manager of the Humane Society Shelter.

"We have a terrible stray animal problem here in the city," she said. "With Greenville being a university town, a lot of students adopt animals as pets. Then, when the school year is over and the student goes home, many of the dogs and cats are left on the streets."

Audro Barrett, the city's animal control supervisor, said the new program has many benefits.

He said that by having veterinarians perform the sterilization free of charge, there should be

Snow, Frost Throw Farmers Stumbling Block

By John Bare
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

The late-season snow and frost have created a delicate situation for tobacco and strawberry farmers, area agriculture officials say.

Greenville Utilities recorded a low of 33 degrees early this morning, which could cause transplanted tobacco plants to flower prematurely, said Mitch Smith, director of the Pitt Agricultural Extension Service.

Normally, a plant flowers about 60 days after being transplanted, Smith said, but extreme cold or moisture can sometimes cause the plant to flower much earlier, drawing important nutrients from the leaves to the blossom.

"It's sort of a mysterious type of affair," Smith said. "I think the freeze raises some serious question about the tobacco that has been planted in the field. The weather has sort of created a state of critical awareness on the point of our procedures."

About 36 percent of Pitt's 13,000 acres of tobacco are treated with multipurpose chemicals, he said, and the fumigant is best at controlling bacteria that cause Granville Wilt, the No. 1 tobacco disease in the county.

Growers must apply the chemical when the ground is dry, and they must wait three weeks after applying the fumigant before transplanting the seedlings. This year, however, there has not been enough dry weather to apply the chemical, and it is nearly too late to wait three weeks before transplanting, according to Smith.

"What growers have had to do is consider switching to other herbicides which are less effective in fighting disease," Smith said.

Also, the excessive rain and moisture have made the fields so wet farmers are unable to get transplanting machinery onto the fields, he said. Until transplanting is possible, he said growers must mow the plant beds and pull some seedlings to slow the growth.

Extension Agent Sam Uzzell said the cold weather can also damage strawberry blossoms and the developing fruit. Pitt growers produce between 16-20 acres of pick-your-own strawberries, he said, and the berries should be ready to pick in a month or less.

SEARCHING FOR THE CENTER

Many couples come to counseling in despair because they cannot find common ground. Often they are working under the misconception that having common beliefs and goals will circumvent conflict in their lives. While such common ground can be helpful, it is misguided to think that finding a happy center is the only step necessary to live "happily ever after."

This is a myth that often creates more problems than it solves. Couples who spend too much time looking for common ground spent too little time accepting their natural differences. They also tend to take any difference between them, no matter how small, and blow it out of all proportion, because this underlines their "failure" to meet their ideal.

Getting such couples to change their focus and be more accepting of their individuality can be difficult; it challenges some of their longstanding beliefs. One of the goals of professional counseling is to get couples to seek common ground while providing avenues for individual differences.

Council To Take Up Rezoning

Several rezoning requests are among the items to be considered by the Greenville City Council at its monthly meeting Thursday at 7:30 p.m. in the council chambers of City Hall.

The council is scheduled to consider a request by Lee Moore Oil Co. to rezone a .65-acre tract located at the southeast corner of Tenth and Charles streets from O&I (office and institutional) to CDF (downtown fringe commercial).

Permitted uses in the CDF zoning district include a drugstore, a car wash and a convenient mart. The Planning and Zoning Commission recommended at its March 21 meeting that the council deny the request.

Other items include: a request by Joseph D. Speight to rezone a .74-acre tract located south of Mumford Road, across from Powell Street, from R-6 (high-density residential) to I (industrial); a request by Rudy Robinson to rezone a 1.33-acre tract at the northwest corner of Dexter and St. Andrews streets from CH (highway commercial) to O&I (office and institutional), and a request by David G. Nichols Jr. to rezone a .66-acre tract located 163 feet south of the intersection of Lone and Truman streets and north of the Tucker Circle subdivision from R-6 to CDF.

Also to be considered is a resolution establishing street and highway priorities to be presented to the N.C. Department of Transportation at a public hearing on April 27.

Road improvement priorities include the completion of U.S. 264 including the Greenville Northwest Loop; the widening of Evans Street from 10th Street to Secondary Road 1708; replacement of the Greene Street bridge crossing the Tar River; extending Arlington Boulevard from Hooker Road to N.C. 43, and widening N.C. 33 to five lanes from the city limits to SR 1726.

The council will also consider a resolution to allow Collice C. Moore to close Smith Street, located west of Memorial Drive across from the existing Chestnut Street; a revision to the permit and inspection fee schedule as it relates to the electrical inspection fee; a request by William L. Tripp to close a portion of Staton Court located south of SR 1759; an amendment to the zoning ordinance regarding special uses in the RA-20 zoning districts, and an amendment to the bufferyard regulations requiring developers to show planned vegetation at the site review planning stage of a development.

Also to be considered is an application for a rental rehabilitation grant in the amount of $75,000 to provide funds to rehabilitate nine rental units occupied by low and moderate income individuals in West Greenville and East Meadowbrook; a taxi cab franchise transfer request and the operation of a limousine franchise, and a lease agreement between the city and Adventures in Health for displays and programs at the Science and Nature Center.

Consent Agenda items to be considered Monday include a request from the East Carolina University Athletic Department to allow a fireworks display at the "Purple/Gold Pigout Party" and a resolution designating co-signers for the city's lockbox.

Census Shows State Lost 13,000 Farms During Mid-'80s Crisis

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — More than 13,000 North Carolina farms folded between 1982 and 1987 during one of the largest farm crises to hit the country, according to figures released by the U.S. Department of Agriculture.

The five-year census, conducted by the U.S. Department of Agriculture, reported that the number of farms in the state fell 18.5 percent, from 72,792 to 59,284. While the number of farms encompassing more than 1,000 acres grew by 250, nearly 6,000 farms ranging from 50 to 180 acres failed or were sold.

"It's fair to say we lost one out of every five farms," said Ronald Wimberley, a sociology and anthropology professor at N.C. State University involved in several studies of the national farm crisis.

He said the last comparable loss occurred between 1969 and 1974, when North Carolina lost 28,000 farms.

National and international economic conditions, such as high interest rates and the squeeze on overseas markets due to a fluctuating dollar, have hurt most farmers in recent years, Wimberley said. But a decreasing number of farms since 1950, when North Carolina had about 300,000, and trends toward land buyouts and more efficient technology account for many of the difficulties facing farmers here over the past decade.

"We have better technology, which means fewer farms can produce as much, if not more, goods," he said. The large farms "may be able to maintain more and better equipment, and specialized equipment that smaller operators could not. They have the resources."

Many of the lost middle-acreage farms have since become part of the larger operations, he said. "We still have nearly as much farmland in place."

Very small farms, of between one and nine acres, however, dropped by only about 1,500. Nearly half of the state's small farmers depend on other jobs — roughly equally divided between blue collar and white collar — for their primary income and can therefore keep farming, Dr. Wimberley said.

"A lot of people stay in farming at a smaller scale as they work at other jobs," he said.

A significant part of the problem involves a rural employment crisis across the country. "In rural areas, there are fewer jobs and they are farther between. A lot of people have a strong commitment to farming. They stick with where they are, and of course they have communities, families, attachments."

April has been declared North Carolina Poultry Month and poultry means quite a bit to North Carolina. The North Carolina poultry industry produced enough food products to provide every person in the United States with 6.1 pounds of ready-to-cook chicken, 8.7 eggs and 6.1 pounds of turkey in 1987. The production and processing of chickens, turkeys and eggs contributed gross income of $1,646 million and employment for more than 24,000 people in North Carolina in 1987. And the industry continues to grow in our state.

The largest share of our poultry industry is production and processing of broilers. North Carolina produced 478 million broilers in 1987. Only Arkansas, Georgia, and Alabama produce more. Our broiler production has grown 49 percent in the last decade.

North Carolina is first in turkey production in the country and has increased production 134 percent in the last decade. Our state supplies 19 percent of all the turkeys consumed in the United States. The production and processing of turkeys generated $545 million to the state's economy in 1987.

Our egg industry in North Carolina produced more than two billion eggs in 1987 which generated $75 million in gross income. Another $56.7 million in gross income was derived from other poultry production and processing including ducks, quail and spend fowl.

The outlook for the poultry industry in North Carolina is bright. The industry continues to benefit the state economy and provide an increasing supply of wholesome poultry products to consumers.

A Reminder

Moving Tribute To A Difficult Time

There has rarely been a memorial to any war which generates so much emotion as the Vietnam Veterans Memorial in Washington, D.C.

That may be because the Vietnam war itself drained the American people emotionally to so great a degree. A part of the nation was bitterly opposed to the war that seemed to have no purpose and no end. Others defended it as a necessary part of patriotism.

Caught in the middle were the young men and women of the era who were called upon to go to the jungles of Vietnam to fight a shadowy enemy on his own territory.

Then it was over. The United States didn't surrender but it surely didn't win. Like the French, the Americans just left.

The veterans came home to little fanfare and sometimes to animosity. Most of them sought to fade away into civilian life. Those who died seemed remembered only by their loved ones, and those with physical or emotional scars could only do their best.

Then the Vietnam Veterans Memorial was planned and erected. It listed all the names of those who died in the far away conflict. Gradually a nation understood that a huge number of young people gave their lives in a time when their nation demanded it of them.

With time mellowing the tragedy, the nation now overwhelmingly wishes it had ended its Vietnam involvement years before it did, or better, never have become involved at all.

But the nation also recognizes that those who died did so believing they were serving the country and those who served believed they were placing the best interest of their countrymen as their priority.

Now large numbers of people visit the Vietnam Veterans Memorial in Washington every week.

In Greenville a half size replica of The Wall will be on display on the Greenville Town Commons 24 hours a day beginning Friday and continuing through April 21. The visit is being sponsored by Chapter No. 272 of the Vietnam Veterans of America.

All who care about those who died in this war which left its scars on a generation will want to visit The Moving Wall.

The memorial in Washington evokes unexpected emotions from those who visit and contemplate it. The replica will surely do the same.

Julian Dixon: A Healthy Antidote

WASHINGTON — Julian C. Dixon is about to become a national figure — despite himself. As chairman of the House Committee on Standards of Official Conduct (the so-called Ethics Committee), the Los Angeles congressman is in the hot seat as the investigation of House Speaker Jim Wright (D-Texas) nears its climax.

Dixon, a six-term Democrat, has shunned television interview programs and press conferences. So it will come as a surprise to most Americans to discover — as they soon will — that the man in charge of this supremely sensitive political assignment is black.

Within the House, however, it's no mystery why Dixon is where he is. Though relatively light in seniority, he is one of the most trusted and widely admired members of the House, among people of both parties and both races.

Dixon is a fascinating example of the emerging alternative style of black leadership: a person who makes his way not by the militance of his advocacy of civil rights or other racially linked issues, but on the basis of personal and intellectual qualities which cross racial and ideological divisions and make him an effective bridge-builder.

Other examples that come readily to mind include Gen. Colin L. Powell, the last head of the National Security Council in the Reagan administration; Los Angeles Mayor Tom Bradley; Ronald H. Brown, new chairman of the Democratic National Committee; and Rep. William H. Gray III of Philadelphia, chairman of the House Democratic caucus.

The emergence of these men in roles traditionally reserved for whites is itself a sign of the maturation of American politics. But it is particularly important at a time when so much attention is focused on the continuing racial polarization of our society.

Accounts of last week's Chicago mayoral election all emphasized the racial split in the voting. Exit polls showed the winner, Cook County state's attorney Richard M. Daley, received 90 percent of the white vote, while his main opponent, black Alderman Timothy C. Evans, won 95 percent of the black vote.

Jesse L. Jackson, the chief supporter of Evans, cited the results as further proof of his contention that the principle of racial reciprocity is mostly honored in the breach in this society. There's certainly a kernel of truth in that observation, uncomfortable as it may be to acknowledge it. But it's not the whole truth, as the careers of men like Dixon remind us. For all the shortcomings, American society and its political system have evolved to the point that some members of the minority race can be accepted and indeed welcomed in positions of exceptional sensitivity and significance on a color-blind basis.

No one reaches a position like Dixon's entirely by accident. The community from which he comes, the district he represented first in the California Assembly and now in Congress, is itself a rare example of integrated diversity.

On the west side of Los Angeles, between the Coliseum and the airport, it is a stable mixture of whites, blacks, Asians and Hispanics. When I interviewed Dixon ten years ago for a book on emerging young political leaders, one of the first things he said was that his "is a district where they really believe good neighbors come in all colors. They are very proud of their integration pattern."

Coming from that kind of community, Dixon has never played purely "black" politics, though he has headed the Congressional Black Caucus. An ally of the "Waxman-Berman" machine, headed by two Jewish congressmen and their partners in Los Angeles and Sacramento, his politics always have bridged racial lines.

Beyond the bent his district gives, Dixon has personal qualities that make him ideal for sensitive assignments like the investigation of Wright. Although at age 50 he is clearly a member of the television generation of politicians, he avoids the limelight as assiduously as most of his contemporaries seek it.

'Though relatively light in seniority, he is one of the most trusted and widely admired members of the House, among people of both parties and both races.'

He has a reputation for being conscientious in his workmanship, calm in demeanor and committed to fairness in process. The Ethics Committee is unique in being equally balanced between the parties. On one crucial question — the decision that it will release the full investigative report on Wright's activities — Dixon already has demonstrated his independence from partisan pressures and his ability to forge a consensus.

This is not the first time he's been handed a hot potato. In 1984, on the eve of a Democratic convention where Jackson was threatening a major rules challenge, then-Democratic National Chairman Charles T. Manatt asked Dixon to head the convention rules committee. He did so in a way that defused the fireworks, left Jackson without a divisive issue and spared nominee Walter F. Mondale a costly choice between capitulation and confrontation.

The Wright case will be infinitely tougher to handle, but the trust in Dixon expressed by both the Speaker's defenders and his most ardent critics speaks volumes about Dixon's character and reputation.

It's a healthy antidote to all the talk and evidence of racial polarization in the United States.

The Cuddly Come-On Crosses The Line Of Ethics, Fairness

BOSTON — They are advertising babies in the newspaper. Not real babies but, rather, the hope, the wish, the longing for babies. Advertisers call that sort of pitch, "selling the sizzle."

The ad features a photograph of a fuzzy newborn with a subliminal stork on the blanket. This baby picture carries a simple headline: "Before you let go of the dream, talk to us."

The tone of the message that follows is far, far more seductive than scientific. This is how it reads: "There's no other perfume like it, the smell of a newborn: a milk-scent, warm-scent, cuddle essence."

"Her skin a kind of new velvet. Toes more wrinkled than cabbage, yet roselike. Tender, soft, totally trusting; a blessing all your own."

"That dream might still come true for you. New techniques can resolve many infertility problems, including some that were previously considered hopeless."

Lest you become hopelessly lost in this cabbage patch of prose, I will cut through the cuddly come-on. The business being pushed here is a new fertility clinic.

Enter through our doors, it implies, and ye shall be able to finally experience the velvet-skinned, wrinkled-toed, blessing that has eluded you. "Many formerly childless couples have become parents or parents-to-be by letting the experience of our staff enrich their lives rather than giving up the dream of childbirth." We will satisfy your desire for this product.

As I read and reread this ad, I do not know what I find most offensive. The marketing of babies? The shameless pitch to such a vulnerable group of potential "buyers" as the infertile and sometimes desperate couple? Or the abuse of sentiment without a single hard statistic about success and failure, to cut the cloying sweetness?

Ever since the barrier that prevented professions from selling their skills like cookware went down before the FTC, I have been wary of the expanding medical hucksterism. Open any magazine, especially on the West Coast, and you can see ads directed at consumers rather than patients.

Liposuction, breast enhancement, face lifts are all best-sellers. One doctor in San Francisco advertises his expertise, saying that he has made "dozens of television appearances." Another Californian sends out a free brochure of full-color before and after photos. Choose one of the above.

It is not just the marginal medicine men who hang their shingles in an ad. Hospitals, often fighting for patients nowadays, go in pursuit of bottom-line builders. "We Mend Broken Hearts: Very Successfully" boasts one center for heart by-pass surgery. Another brags about being "a safe place to have your baby."

I am not alone in my concern about ads that lead or mislead the public into uncertain medical byways. Lawrence Nelson, who has co-authored a paper on the ethics of health-care marketing, worries that, "Patients are becoming commodities. To me that's very unsettling. I don't think the same kind of marketplace values should pervade health care."

vade health care."

But however offensive the pushing of such expensive procedures as lasers and magnetic-resource imaging in for-profit hospitals, there is something much more appalling about this infertility market. The ad that I quoted from may be among the most exploitative, but it is hardly the only one beamed at babies.

There are 2.4 million infertile couples in America. The new therapies from gamete-in-trafallopian transfer to in-vitro fertilization gives them new hope — and also new chances for disappointment. The number of American clinics offering IVF has grown to 169. But of the ads I have seen, not one gives the odds of having a baby. One ad displays a pregnant woman. Another, more discreet, says their parent company (that is the only way to describe it) has produced 363 babies to date.

At the very best clinics, however, the odds are only one in five or, one in six of taking home a baby. Each attempt at IVF costs between $4,000 and $6,000. There is a point at which it is fair to ask whether it is ethical to advertise in ways that heighten the expectation for something that they may not be able to deliver.

Surely the milk-scented, cuddle-essence, roselike baby ad — no loaded diaper here — crosses that line. As Dr. Kathleen Nolan, a bioethicist at the Hastings Institute, says cautiously: "It seems wrong to play upon the pain of infertility in order to sell fertility services."

Yes, it does. And yes, finally, it also seems wrong, deeply wrong, to imply that a baby is a product like a pair of gloves or a hat that can be purchased — if you just go to the right shop.

April Snow Slips Up On Unsuspecting Eastern Tar Heels

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Most people in southeastern North Carolina couldn't believe their eyes when they awakened to an April snow Tuesday, but it's certainly nothing new to Daisy Pittman.

Mrs. Pittman, who has lived in the Richlands area since 1905, said the last time she remembers it snowing in Onslow County during April was in the 1930s.

"I don't remember the exact year, but I do know all my young'ns were little," Mrs. Pittman said. "We had a garden way back in the field, and I had to go pull up some collard plants 'cause I was scared the snow would kill them. It might have snowed in April before that, but if it did, I can't remember."

Tuesday's snow will be memorable for the current generation, and even more memorable for Wilmington, because it set a record for the latest snowfall since records were kept starting in 1870. The National Weather Service says the previous record was April 3, 1915.

The weather service recorded .94 of an inch of snow, which melted rapidly as the snowfall tapered off by around 10 a.m., allowing the sun to reappear.

The early-morning snowfall also brought with it a record-breaking low temperature of 34 degrees, recorded at 9:30 a.m. at New Hanover County International Airport. The previous record for the day was 35 in 1966.

A mixture of cold arctic air and moist air from a front offshore produced a mixture of sleet and snow that produced a mixture of amazement and shock.

"I think we're talking about a record for eastern North Carolina," Albert Hinn, meteorologist in charge of the National Weather Service in Wilmington, told the Wilmington Morning Star.

Cars skidded on slick roads, although no serious injuries were reported. There were 54 weather-related accidents in Onslow County, up from a normal day's four or five, the state Highway Patrol reported.

About one-half inch of snow was recorded in Jacksonville, and just under one-half inch in Goldsboro.

"It was snowing up until about 7:30, and it finally quit," Warsaw

Police Department dispatcher Dale Carr said Tuesday morning. "It just stuck to the tops of cars and a little in the grass."

Sunshine is expected to return to the region today after the freak storm, bringing highs around 60 after overnight lows of 30 to 35.

Snow also dusted limbs, lawns and windshields across the Raleigh-Durham area.

Some areas in both the eastern and northeastern parts of the state got enough frozen precipitation to alter school schedules. Up to 4 inches was recorded in parts of Currituck County.

"I think it surprised everybody. Most people ask themselves 'April 11? Why snow?'" said Stanley Kite, Craven County emergency medical services director.

The snow caused some traffic accidents in Pamlico County, where county planner Lee Smith said some vehicles were sliding into roadside ditches.

Overnight temperatures which were predicted to dip below freezing posed a danger to fruit trees and to azaleas and ornamentals. Where temperatures drop to below freezing, apple and peach blossoms, blooms on blueberries and strawberries, and flowers on ornamental shrubs and plants are killed. The frost would not do permanent harm to trees and most plants, but with the blooms gone, there would not be any fruit on the trees.

Only the Outer Banks were exempted from the frost-freeze warning.

Freddie E. O'Neal, a Camden County agricultural extension agent, said he expected to see more damage to fruit trees than to strawberries in his county, because strawberry growers usually have a way to irrigate and reduce danger of frost damage.

Ornamentals planted close to building foundations or in protected places might not be harmed, said Dr. Katie B. Perry, an agricultural meteorologist at the weather service. And commercial fruit growers have methods — including covers especially made for low-growing plants and irrigation systems — to protect crops.

Security Poll

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (AP) — The U.S. should cease modernization of its nuclear arsenal and reduce its commitments to NATO, Japan and South Korea, say a majority of respondents to a national public policy group study.

More than 800 people in the Triangle, the Hickory-Morganton-Lenoir area and 11 other cities across the country also participated in the assemblies, from which the sponsoring Roosevelt Center for American Policy Studies compiled its report.

While supporting the cutbacks and changes, most participants advocated more U.S. spending to combat terrorism, and most wanted to maintain or increase current U.S. capabilities to combat revolutionary movements in Third World nations.

Criticism

RALEIGH (AP) — A proposed state constitutional convention to address the balance of power among North Carolina's three branches of government has drawn criticism as an evasion of legislative responsibility.

Rep. Beverly Perdue, D-Craven, said the process would circumvent what lawmakers are elected to do themselves. And Rep. Art Pope, R-Wake, said the voters are intelligent enough to consider constitutional amendments without a convention.

But Rep. Dan Blue, D-Wake, said such topics as gubernatorial veto and four-year terms for legislators would get a better hearing in a convention than on a statewide ballot.

If Blue's proposal is approved and the public agrees to call a constitutional convention, 120 delegates representing every House district could "coolly, calmly and reflectively try to shape the kind of government we want to have in this state," Blue said.

Physician Pleads

STATESVILLE, N.C. (AP) — A former physician from Alleghany County has pleaded guilty to federal charges that he illegally possessed and distributed narcotics and other controlled drugs.

Everette L. Taylor, 64, of Sparta, pleaded guilty Monday to nine separate charges in U.S. District Court.

Judge Richard L. Voorhees sentenced Taylor to one year in prison, but Voorhees suspended the sentence and placed Taylor on probation. Voorhees fined Taylor $20,000 and ordered him to pay $450 in court costs.

Soap Filming

PISGAH FOREST, N.C. (AP) — Producers of the ABC soap opera "All My Children" wanted a rural setting for a new story line and they have chosen Pisgah National Forest.

Seven actors and a production crew will shoot future scenes from Monday to Wednesday in the forest and at a ranch in the Fairview community, Audrey Fecht, the show's press representative, said Tuesday. The crew also may film Thursday if there is rain during the scheduled filming time.

Ms. Fecht said the main reason for the location is to shoot love scenes between the characters David Rampal, played by actor Trent Bushey, and Melanie Cortlandt, played by Paige Turco.

Youngster Knew Right Thing To Do

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ARCHDALE, N.C. — James Allen Canter, who answers to Jay-Jay, isn't sure of the details of a talk that firefighters gave when they came to his kindergarten class at Archdale Elementary School.

But Tuesday morning, 6-year-old Jay-Jay remembered exactly what to do when he awakened to find his family's apartment full of smoke.

"It was all smoky and it smelled like a fire," Jay-Jay said. "So I got up and said there was a fire."

Jay-Jay's warning saved his mother and father, who were asleep when smoke from a burning aquarium motor filled their Archdale apartment about 4 a.m.

"If he hadn't woken up, we wouldn't be here," said Becky Canter, Jay-Jay's mother. "That's all I've thought about all day, what could have happened."

Jay Canter, Jay-Jay's father, smothered the fire with a blanket before Guil-Rand firefighters arrived, but smoke was the real danger, District Chief Frank Crotts said.

"The smoke is normally what kills people," Crotts said. "It just puts them in a deeper sleep and they don't ever wake up."

That's exactly what happened, Becky Canter said.

"The door was open, but we were just sleeping too deeply," she said.

Becky Canter remembers Jay-Jay bringing home the fire-safety book he got at kindergarten, but they only talked about it briefly.

"I guess we should have, but you don't really think about it," said Canter, whose mother died almost 13 years ago in a trailer fire. The Canthers had bought a smoke detector, but it still sat on a shelf in its box.

The young Canter wakes up before daylight almost every morning, his mother said. He usually climbs out of his bunk bed and gets in bed with his parents. When he woke up about 4 a.m. Tuesday morning, he couldn't find his way across the narrow hall.

"I couldn't see anything," said Jay-Jay, an active little boy with a blond Dutch-boy haircut. "We had to climb out of my window."

Jay-Jay talks about the fire like an adventure. Just thinking of the trip his parents have promised to Showbiz Pizza has him hopping from the vacuum cleaner in the kitchen to the front door and back again.

"The minute I walked in, he said, 'Do you know I'm a hero?'" said Hazel Blackburn, his grandmother.

Tuesday evening, the Canthers had almost finished repainting the ceiling and scrubbing down the walls of their apartment. The fire left stringy black soot all over the house.

Becky Canter had just bought the motor Monday. She had five kinds of fish in the aquarium.

"I like them fishes," Jay-Jay said. "We had a catfish in there. One of them died."

Teachers Present Divided Front Over Career Ladder

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — Although the career ladder issue continues to divide North Carolina teachers, leaders of both sides say they agree on some points, including the need to correct the program's flaws.

"What we are saying is that one model imposed on the whole state is a guaranteed system of failure," said Karen Garr, president of the North Carolina Association of Educators.

Teachers for and against a statewide career ladder continued working the halls of the Legislative Building Tuesday.

Rounding out a two-day lobbying blitz, teachers who favor a statewide career ladder program made their case to the state Senate, repeating arguments they presented to House members and Gov. Jim Martin's "drug cabinet" Monday.

Meanwhile, the NCAE held a news conference at which local NCAE chapter leaders insisted the career ladder is flawed and not ready for major expansion.

But some opponents said their feelings could change if the program is revised. And some supporters, breaking with Gov. Jim Martin, said they were not convinced the program would be ready for statewide implementation next year.

The career ladder debate has grown increasingly bitter, with Martin and the NCAE leadership attacking each other. Martin has proposed a 1-cent sales tax increase to take the career ladder statewide and lift a freeze on the teacher salary schedule. The NCAE says a 3½-year experiment in 16 school systems has shown the career ladder a failure.

Some teachers said they felt torn and were longing for a compromise.

"We really should start pulling together," said Bobbie Short, a Buncombe County teacher who favors the career ladder.

Gil Underwood, principal of Chowan Middle School and an NCAE local unit president, said, "True professionals are caught in the middle. ... I do not believe that the NCAE is opposed to the career development program. I don't think we've been as positive as we could have been."

The two sides agreed that fine-tuning is crucial. For example, they said teachers should be deeply involved in designing and implementing the career ladder in each school.

That was the case in Burlington, one of the 16 experimental units, computer programming teacher Sandy Frances said.

"It's been characterized by fairness and common sense from the very beginning," she said. "We were informed ... about what was involved in the program, and then our teachers voted to become a part of the pilot."

Maureen Pasternak, a math and social studies teacher from Perquimans County, said in her county only teachers who had climbed to the top of the ladder receive extra pay for extra duties.

Scout Chief Resigns Over Roster Squabble

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

GREENSBORO — H. Don Smith, the top administrator with the General Greene Boy Scout Council, was forced to resign Tuesday after an internal investigation found that council rosters had been padded with fake Scouts.

A report released by the council accused Smith of mismanagement, poor supervision of staff and disregard of Boy Scout policies and procedures. It recommended he be fired immediately.

The report concluded that the staff, under Smith's direction, inflated membership figures because of perceived pressure to meet membership quotas, which in part determine whether employees receive raises.

"They went a little crazy as far as building numbers," said Alan Cone, who chaired a special investigative committee of Scout volunteers.

Attempts to reach Smith for comment were unsuccessful. He previously had denied charges of roster padding.

Smith has been on a paid leave of absence from his $50,000-a-year job since March 8. He has directed council operations for the past eight years.

The committee's findings confirm some of the allegations by an unidentified council employee that prompted the State Bureau of Investigation to seize council records last month.

The SBI is investigating whether the council padded rosters to fraudulently obtain more funding from United Way of Greater Greensboro and Randolph County, which provides about half of the council's $675,000 annual budget.

State Won't Give Tax To Retirees

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — Saying he knows it is unfair, Attorney General Lacy Thornburg has ruled that federal retirees who paid 1988 state income taxes more than 30 days ago can't get a refund under a U.S. Supreme Court ruling that they were taxed unconstitutionally.

But if they haven't already paid, retirees can refuse to pay 1988 taxes on their pensions without fear of retribution from state Department of Revenue.

Thornburg said his office is calling the discrepancy to the attention of the Department of Revenue, and that remedy may lie in the General Assembly.

"We, as well as having a responsibility to advise on the law, ... have the public interest to serve," Thornburg said. "We not only concede, we fully agree this is particularly unfair as to those persons who conscientiously got upfront and paid their taxes earlier on and are now seeing those who didn't come in and file request for a refund," Thornburg said.

The opinion came in response to a U.S. Supreme Court decision March 28 holding that states cannot tax federal pensions while waiving tax on state and local retirement pay.

North Carolina taxes federal pensions after the first $3,000 (that changes to $4,000 for the 1989 tax year) but exempts benefits of state and local government workers.

Tuesday's ruling is bad news for retirees like 60-year-old William Butler of Greensboro, who has paid the taxes 21 years and who filed his 1988 return early in January.

"Here is the whole point in a nut shell," said Butler, who pays $150-$200 a year on his $7,500 pension from 20 years in the Air Force. "If something is unconstitutional, how can they legally take tax from you?"

George Boylan, a deputy attorney general who authored the opinion, based it on a 1977 case involving an excise tax refund sought by Coca-Cola Co. The N.C. Supreme Court ruled that tax is refundable only if paid under protest and a demand for refund is made within 30 days.

"It's an unfairness that results from an application of the law in North Carolina, so the only place that the remedy lies is the General Assembly," Thornburg said.

He said the legislature might want to change the law just for 1988 taxes, or back to three years — the period in which North Carolina usually will accept amended tax forms — but would want to examine the economic impact of any decision.

Some experts have said refunding state taxes paid on federal pensions for the last three years could cost the state $100 million.

Cathryn Coley, president of the Mecklenburg chapter of the National Association of Retired Federal Employees, said she is urging members to submit amended tax returns soon for the 1985 tax year, despite the Attorney General's opinion.

"How can the state say it's not valid when it's a U.S. Supreme Court decision?" Coley said. "I don't understand that."

Still unresolved is how North Carolina will remedy the discrepancy in taxing retirement benefits. Giving the exemption to the state's 100,000 federal retirees would reduce state revenues by about $35 million a year.

Full House To Get Bill Revamping Makeup Of Wildlife Resources Unit

By F. Alan Boyce
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — A bill to revamp the Wildlife Resources Commission is heading for the House floor, where opponents are expected to fight for continued local election of commissioners.

The Basic Resources Committee voted 24-7 Tuesday for a version of the bill that would end the terms of current commissioners and change the way new ones would be appointed, eliminating wildlife district elections in favor of straight gubernatorial appointments. Gov. Jim Martin requested changes in the 13-member commission to address concerns over commissioners' involvement in personnel matters such as promotion of wildlife officers.

Sen. Bill Barker, D-Pamlico, the sponsor, said district elections have been a sham because only one-tenth of 1 percent of voters participate and the governor has been free to choose any of five vote-getters to fill commission posts.

"If you only get two votes, you can be a nominee," Barker said. "As often as the top vote-getter has been appointed, the bottom vote-getter has been appointed. ... These elections are not going to protect the hunting public at all."

That drew complaints from Rep. Gerald Anderson, D-Craven.

"What we have just done, in my opinion, is we've just done away with one of the democratic processes," he said.

Barker said after the vote he was pleased with the bill, although he would have preferred to use congressional districts to distance commissioners from political influences of wildlife districts.

Ward Purrington, Martin's legislative liaison, agreed that he would have liked to "disengage members from an enforcement district," but he said he would not lobby for any amendments on the House floor.

However, he said opponents would likely try to run amendments. "I think there will be a lot of action on the floor," he said.

The main provisions of the bill as approved by the Senate would have ended the terms of all current commissioners, given the governor the power to remove appointees at his pleasure and replaced wildlife district elections with gubernatorial appointments from each of the 11 congressional districts. The House and Senate would retain one appointment each.

The House committee voted Tuesday to rescind last week's approval of a version that would have done nothing more than let the governor remove appointees. Then Rep. Pete Thompson, D-Chowan, offered an amendment to the Senate version to keep appointments at the wildlife district level, but without elections.

Rep. Ed Bowen, D-Sampson, said eliminating elections could be dangerous.

"Any governor can make it strictly political, pay off campaign debts and things," he said. "That's what we're doing. If we take it (the vote) away from them, they'll see us next November."

Accidental Discovery May End Obesity

Blocks calorie absorption

SWEDEN—Medical researchers at the University of Kuopio, in Finland, have discovered (accidentally) a new weight-loss formula. The new discovery enables an overweight individual to lose pounds and fatty tissue without dieting or exercise.

Scientists made the discovery while searching for a formula to lower cholesterol. In a controlled study of a test group of people, cholesterol levels remained unchanged but the doctors were astounded to find that every patient who used the formula lost weight. The published report of this study stated, "A highly significant decrease in body weight was seen" in patients who received the formula.

The formula was then tested in Sweden at Sahlgren Hospital, University of Goteborg. Again, all patients lost a substantial amount of weight even though they did not change their eating habits. The report detailing this study, published in the British Journal of Nutrition, stated: "Body weight was significantly reduced even though the patients were specifically asked not to alter their dietary habits". One patient in this study lost more than 30 pounds.

According to one informed source, the active ingredient comes from a 100% natural botanical source and contains no drugs or stimulants. When taken before mealtime it bonds with the food you eat and "ties up" calories, preventing their absorption.

A substantial portion of the calories ingested therefore pass through the digestive system unabsorbed. The body has to get energy to replace the lost calories, so it starts to burn stored fat. The result is rapid body weight loss. Extensive clinical tests have verified the safety of this formula for long-term use.

The formula is marketed in tablet form in the United States under the trade name Cal-Ban 3000. A firm located in Tampa, Florida, has exclusive North American distribution rights. A review of the customer files of this company revealed the names of hundreds of people who have lost as much as 20, 40 or 60 or more pounds overall with Cal-Ban 3000. This is a golden opportunity for people who are plagued by fat and cellulite that they can't seem to lose by conventional methods.

Cal-Ban 3000 is reasonably priced at $19.95 for a 3-week supply and $38.95 for a 6-week supply. Postage and handling is $3. To assure fastest service, orders are accepted by toll-free phone only. VISA, MasterCard, AMEX and C.O.D. orders are accepted. C.O.D.'s are $2.20 extra. Orders may be placed by calling Anderson Pharmaceuticals TOLL-FREE 1-800-228-2105. During this special phone order promotion purchasers of a six-week supply of Cal-Ban 3000 will receive, absolutely free, a beautiful 24" double strand necklace of sparkling Chinese Faux pearls.

Call today to begin the pleasant transformation from fat and flab to the slender firm body you want! If you fail to achieve a major weight loss you may return the empty bottle within 30 days for a 100% refund.

NRC Says Rules Weak

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHARLOTTE — Federal investigators say crews at Duke Power Co.'s McGuire Nuclear Plant did their job when radioactive steam was released into the air after a tube ruptured, but those officials say the procedures workers followed were inadequate.

Nuclear Regulatory Commission officials said in a 30-page report that the crew knew "which procedure contained the actions or steps needed to mitigate this event." Plant operators declared an alert after the tube rupture allowed some 15,000 gallons of radioactive water to escape into the plant's steam system in the No. 1 reactor. The 9-year-old plant's second reactor was not affected.

"However, the procedures were found to have significant weaknesses which could result in unnecessary releases of radioactivity to the environment should future steam generator tube rupture events occur.

"We are also concerned with operators' lack of confidence that certain systems would function as designed," the report said.

The report, released at a news conference at the McGuire plant, concluded that a minimal amount of radioactivity was released in the most serious safety incident ever at the plant on Lake Norman.

"When we arrived, we saw some things we didn't expect to see," said Milton Shymlock, who headed a team of NRC investigators that spent several days at the plant following the March 7 incident.

The cause of the tube rupture is still under investigation. The damaged tube has been removed and shipped to Lynchburg, Va., for analysis, Duke officials said.

The NRC report said the operators of the plant should have followed "emergency operating procedures," which contain more detailed guidelines, rather than remaining in "abnormal operation procedures" following their discovery of the problem.

Specifically, they said, operators should have used a procedure called "safety injection" to mitigate the problem.

The NRC officials plan to come back to the plant on June 30 for another inspection.

Despite the criticism, no fines or other penalties were being considered at this time against Duke Power, Shymlock said.

North Carolina coast, but state officials still aren't comfortable.

The discomfort arises from the tanker spill off the Alaskan coast. A member of the state Attorney General's staff says a preliminary draft of Mobil's plans to handle any spill don't offset lingering fears.

"It's just an editorial comment, but in the Alaska situation, in one of the busiest shipping lanes in the world, I'm sure all the safeguards were addressed on paper," said Clark Wright of the state Attorney General's Office. "I'm concerned these same answers were given to people in Alaska."

Wright asked Debby Tucker, who works with oil leases in the Florida governor's office, if the state had much ability to enforce contingency plans.

"I'm not sure we have a lot of input on whether (oil spill) equipment is there and has been properly maintained," Wright said. "It appears we primarily have to rely on the companies."

"The state's only role in this is the right to give input, but in terms of forcing the companies to do something, we have very little in the way of rights," Wright said after the meeting. "The state certainly has a heavy interest in what happens out there, but we just don't have a lot of sticks we can use to make sure those rights are considered."

Wright said states were not given much authority over offshore oil and gas exploration because "Congress recognized the natural conflict between the national need for oil and natural gas and the local reaction of 'Not in my back yard. And it decided that when those conflicts developed, the national interest would take precedence."

Senate Approves Spending Proposal

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — An overhauled process of assembling the state budget has enabled the Senate to approve an omnibus spending bill for continuing programs in record time, a Democratic leader said.

Sen. Marc Basnight, D-Dare, chairman of the Senate Appropriations Base Budget Committee, hailed the new system after the full Senate approved the $7.1 billion package Tuesday on a 47-0 vote.

"It's a vast improvement," Basnight said, adding that he was not disappointed that only $43.1 million was found to cut from the budget as submitted by Gov. Jim Martin. He said years of work by the Martin administration and the Legislature had produced a budget with little fat.

"I think you've cleaned it out," Basnight said. "I think you've deboned it, sort of."

The bill now awaits reconciliation with the House version, which is being developed at a slower pace. Eventually, a conference committee will resolve differences between the two chambers' spending bills — a change from previous years when the House and Senate appropriations committees developed joint budgets.

Basnight said the new system has made for more openness, with rank-and-file senators taking a more active role in putting together the budget instead of having a few leaders make most of the decisions.

"The committee people worked very hard at it," Basnight said. "I think we've got some accomplishments this time."

Florida representative Debby Tucker questions drilling plans

Mobil Oil exploratory well, said Mobil's preliminary draft plan has raised some questions among state officials, but she believes the objections can be answered.

"We want to see drills done, to see all the equipment deployed that would be used in case of a spill here," she said. "We want to know where the equipment is, how long it will take to get it here, what the response time will be."

She said the task force may ask consultants in Alaska, to compare Mobil's proposal with contingency plans for Prince William Sound, where a tanker wrecked on a reef and leaked millions of gallons of crude oil. The plan to contain the oil failed completely, allowing the giant oil slick to foul beaches and drift into the Gulf of Alaska.

"That situation has made us all more careful, watchful," Ms. Moffitt said. "If the contingency plan says equipment is there ready to be used, we want the company to show us it's there and working, instead of just on paper."

Meanwhile, two environmental groups said Tuesday they would join the state in suing the federal government if it did not require a detailed environmental study on a plan to drill for natural gas off the North Carolina coast.

Members of the Sierra Club and the N.C. Coastal Federation said in interviews with The News and Observer of Raleigh that they have retained the Southern Environmental Law Center to file suit if the federal government denies requests for an environmental impact statement on Mobil's drilling plans.

"We must know the risks we're being asked to accept," Kim M. Shaffer, chairman of the state chapter of the Sierra Club, said at a news conference. "That requires an environmental impact statement."

Vote Is Postponed On Bumper Stickers

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — Lawmakers don't like the words they're seeing on bumper stickers these days, but they're less pleased with the words in a bill that would take the obscene stickers off the road.

"There is nobody in this room that likes to see the words we know appear on bumper stickers," said Rep. Dennis Wicker, D-Lee. "It's an embarrassment, almost, to our society."

"But when you look at it from our First Amendment rights and having to decide whether we are going to uphold our Constitution, I have to fall on that side," Wicker said.

The problem, he said, is that many of the words to which legislators object do not meet the U.S. Supreme Court's criteria of obscenity and thus cannot be outlawed as obscene.

The House Judiciary Subcommittee on Law Enforcement and Public Safety delayed a vote until next week to allow Rep. Don Dawkins, D-Richmond, one more chance to rewrite his bill. But members said they were pessimistic about prospects for coming up with acceptable wording.

"When you make these bills fit the constitutional test, you really haven't done anything," said Rep. Alex Hall, D-New Hanover. "You've maybe made headlines, but you haven't done anything. The bumper stickers that are offensive will still be out there. We're not going to fix this one and have it meet constitutional muster."

Dawkins said he had reworded his bill along the lines of a pending Senate measure, which would outlaw stickers with words that describe explicit sexual acts, excretory functions or body parts.

Heritage Ministries Will Temporarily Move To Charlotte

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

FORT MILL, S.C. — The "promised land" for Heritage Ministries, which spun off from the bankrupt PTL ministry, lies not at the Christian retreat formerly controlled by televangelist Jim Bakker but across the border in North Carolina, President Sam Johnson says.

The ministry will relocate as early as June to Charlotte, but ultimately plans to settle in South Carolina, Johnson announced Tuesday at a news conference at the Heritage USA television studios.

"We're just really facing reality today," he said. The ministry has made down payments on two tracts of land in North and South Carolina totaling more than 100 acres and worth nearly $5 million, Johnson said.

Heritage Ministries is the non-profit television ministry spun off from the bankruptcy reorganization of the PTL ministry last August.

The ministry and the separate Heritage Church, of which Johnson is pastor, are based in Fort Mill at Heritage USA, the 2,200-acre retreat Bakker once controlled.

"Amusement is a wonderful thing. A family park is a wonderful thing. Mr. Bakker had a wonderful dream but it went awry through mismanagement and misappropriations and for that we have all paid and are paying dearly," Johnson said.

Heritage Ministries offered to purchase some of the facilities it leases for $80,000 a month from the former PTL corporation, such as the television studio, following bankruptcy proceedings.

But Stephen Mernick, the Toronto businessman who bought PTL's assets for $65 million in December, was not receptive, Johnson said.

Johnson said he informed Mernick of the ministry's plans to move on Monday. "He did not stop us."

When Johnson asked Mernick if there were any reason to delay announcement of the ministry's move, Mernick replied, "Absolutely not at all," Johnson said.

"We are still in a situation where we don't have a home ... and we need to decide for ourselves where we're going to pitch our tent," Johnson said.

The ministry will leave Heritage USA by July 1 for a nearly 20-acre site of three lots in south Charlotte, west of Interstate 77 and close to the Charlotte Coliseum, Johnson said.

The ministry has made a $2,500 down payment on the site, valued at $2.2 million, he said.

A church on the site will serve as the home for the Heritage Church, which has about 600 adult members, and as the studio for the television ministry, Johnson said.

The ministry also has made a $10,000 deposit on 88 acres of undeveloped land in York County worth $2.5 million.

The site is west of I-77 and south of the Carowinds Theme and Water Park on the North Carolina-South Carolina border.

Johnson said the ministry also has an option to purchase an additional 25 acres at the site.

The two sites are within miles of the ministry's current headquarters.

The ministry's "more permanent home" will be in York County, where Fort Mill is located, but it has not set a timetable for development of the site, Johnson said.

"We want to do it with honor, we want to do it with sense, we want to do it with proper timing," he said.

The most important concern for the ministry, Johnson said, is raising the money to finance the resettlement.

One likely source is $5.5 million donated by Heritage Ministries supporters when the ministry was considering bidding on PTL before Mernick's purchase.

The money has been held in escrow; administrative costs have used up 8 percent of the total, Johnson said.

The ministry will begin a campaign this weekend to reach those contributors.

"We believe that most of the money, if not all of it ... will be released to help us relocate and cross the river Jordan and enter the promised land," Johnson said.

More contributions could come in from supporters who have waited for the ministry to announce its plans, Johnson said.

The money in the escrow account will not cover the cost of the entire land purchase and television equipment for the Charlotte church.

Banks Escalate Their War Of Words

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ATLANTA — Things are getting a bit nasty between the Citizens & Southern Corp. and NCNB Inc. as the battle over the proposed merger of the two banking companies heats up.

NCNB, based in Charlotte, has proposed a stock transfer to acquire Atlanta-based C&S and create the nation's sixth-largest banking company. The C&S board last week rejected the offer, and the two companies engaged in some mostly polite verbal sparring over whether the deal was a good thing.

It was evident on Tuesday, however, that the tone of the debate had changed.

C&S recounted its reasons for opposing the offer in a lengthy statement entitled, "Why NCNB Offer Makes No Sense." NCNB responded a few hours later with a statement condemning C&S for its "barrage of press statements ... which are clearly designed to cause confusion."

"NCNB will proceed with its merger proposal," said NCNB Chairman Hugh L. McColl Jr. "It is time for C&S to stop posturing. As fiduciaries for the C&S shareholders, the C&S board should promptly begin negotiations with us."

"We start with a clean sheet of paper and all issues are negotiable, including a price increase," he said.

C&S has opposed the NCNB offer on a number of grounds. C&S says it is unwanted, the stock exchange offer is inadequate and the deal would face numerous legal and regulatory obstacles, primarily because of NCNB's holdings in Texas.

NCNB maintains there are no such impediments to the deal.

Monday, Georgia Banking Commissioner Jack Dunn said the regulatory issues involved in the deal could stretch the review process up to 18 months. He stressed, however, his department would not be involved until a merger application was filed.

But C&S said Tuesday that Dunn's statement meant "NCNB must now recognize the severe disruption and enormous cost to both institutions that could accompany a continuation of the NCNB bid."

Industry analysts took note of the aggressive tone of the usually conservative C&S statements this week. But they said the hard-charging NCNB was not likely to back down and the battle would continue.

"They (C&S) took the gloves off," said Thomas K. Brown, an analyst with Smith Barney in New York. "The only mistake they could make is to not be aggressive enough and look bad and regret it later."

"I think you could say ... if anything, the degree of aggressiveness is surprising us," Brown said.

"They're fighting hard — no doubt about it. But they haven't been attacked before," said John J. Mason, an analyst with Interstate Johnson Lane in Atlanta.

Brown said, "I don't expect NCNB will just walk away from it. They'll bring out their lawyers' opinions to show where they believe C&S is wrong."

NCNB's offer of a stock transfer, at the time worth $2.4 billion, was rejected April 3 by the C&S board. The merger offer last month proposed swapping 1.075 shares of NCNB stock for each of C&S' 61.7 million shares of common stock.

C&S stock shot up $9.25 a share immediately after the NCNB offer was made public, and Mason said that has made a lasting impact on investors that ensures the battle is far from over.

"That's too big for C&S to say. Let's go back to business as usual," he said. "If C&S comes down and NCNB stays up, it's hard to make the case that this is something we should just forget about."

Meanwhile, NCNB Tuesday announced its first quarter net income was $75.8 million, up 8 percent from the $70.0 million reported in the same period last year. Earnings per share dropped to 82 cents from the first quarter of 1988, when the earnings of 83 cents per share included 13 cents per share of securities gains and some nonrecurring income, the company said.

NCNB said the quarterly earnings indicated improvement in core operations and strengthened its commitment to the C&S deal.

Measles Outbreak

BURNSVILLE, N.C. (AP) — Two of 29 Mountain Heritage High School students who recently took a trip to Europe have been diagnosed as having measles and a third began exhibiting symptoms of the disease this week, officials say.

The students and five chaperones, including Principal Larry Howell, spent March 22-30 traveling to London and Paris. They were on airplanes with students from from Piedmont and eastern North Carolina counties that have experienced measles outbreaks, he said.

Yancey County Health Department officials have begun immunizing hundreds of students at the school. Howell said school health records indicated about 365 of the school's 790 students appeared to need immunizing.

Four health department nurses began giving measles shots Tuesday but will have to return to the school a second day to finish immunizing students and teachers, school receptionist Becky Whitson said.

Stormy Weather Helps To Break Up Oil Spill

By Fred Bayles
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

VALDEZ, Alaska — The oil spill from the Exxon Valdez is shrinking following two days of pounding by stormy winds and seas, giving a reprieve to threatened shorelines and fishermen.

"I don't want to say it's over because something may change, but the oil is breaking up very rapidly," said John Whitney, an official with the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration.

"The combination of winds and waves is taking care of it nicely."

The news late Tuesday was welcome relief to areas of the central Alaskan Coast that have spent three tense days waiting for the oil to hit land. Whitney and other officials said aerial reconnaissance suggested that the danger had eased for Kodiak Island and the Kenai Peninsula, home of the Kenai Fjords National Park.

"Kodiak still seems to be saved," state cleanup coordinator Jim Hayden said of the port where last year's $166 million fish harvest was the nation's largest.

In other developments:

—The flow of oil from the North Slope has returned to normal, the operator of the trans-Alaska pipeline said. It also said it has complied with a state order for more tanker safety measures and a full-time emergency spill response team.

—State officials said a huge Soviet skimming ship, the Vaidogubsky, was heading to Alaska to offer assistance. The ship, which Soviet officials said left Sakhalin on Tuesday and would reach Valdez in eight to 10 days, can skim 200,000 gallons an hour and store 2 million gallons of oil on board.

—British Columbia and Washington state officials announced a task force to prevent future spills. Premier William Vander Zalm and Gov. Booth Gardner said the first test is to prevent the Exxon Valdez from polluting more coastal waters and beaches en route to Portland, Ore., or elsewhere for repairs.

—Despite the favorable weather, a light sheen of oil did seep into the Kenai Fjords National Park at scattered inlets and fjords, Coast Guard spokesman Ken Freeze said. With a thickness measured in molecules, the sheen does not threaten serious environmental damage, he said.

—New York Gov. Mario Cuomo ordered officials in his state to investigate rising oil prices. "It would be patently unfair if the oil industry took advantage of a tragedy of its own making in Alaska as an excuse to increase retail gasoline prices," said Cuomo. "That would be the equivalent of picking the pockets of ... consumers."

The Alyeska Pipeline Service Co. said it now has a 12-person emergency spill response team on duty 24 hours a day at Valdez harbor to attack spills.

The team had been disbanded years ago, and Alyeska transferred the duties to other employees.

Alyeska, a consortium of oil companies including Exxon, was criticized for its slow response to the spill and lack of oil dispersant. The company also said it has purchased a new supply of dispersant.

Last week, Alyeska began two-tug escorts of tankers in Prince William Sound, where the spill occurred March 24 when the Exxon Valdez tanker ran aground. With the changes, the flow of oil through Valdez has returned to its normal 2 million barrels a day, Alyeska said. It had been reduced as low as 800,000 barrels in the wake of the spill.

Winds turned away from Kodiak Island and oil continued breaking up the leading edge of the slick, according to the Coast Guard, which has been running the cleanup since President Bush's order last week.

In Prince William Sound, the wind and wave action may also have done some natural cleanup. Overflights of Naked Island, hard hit by the spill, show that some of the black stains have been washed away, Whitney said.

Rough weather inside the sound also has moved some of the oil around, but it still posed no threat to four important salmon fisheries in the area, the Coast Guard said.

Oil hasn't traveled further southwest than Gore Point, about 80 miles northeast of Kodiak, in four days.

Much of the cleanup so far has relied on floating containment booms. Crews ran into trouble when they tried to deploy a more permanent boom at Sawmill Bay, site of a salmon hatchery. Anchors weren't available in adequate numbers, and depth charts that hadn't been updated since the 1964 earthquake proved inaccurate, Freeze said.

Biologists have recovered 150 dead otters. Fifty-four of 113 others being treated at a rescue center have died.

So far, 1,242 dead birds have been found along the coastline, 227 live birds have been rescued for treatment; 87 have died and nine have been released.

Experts say thousands more birds and animals have been killed and not been found, however.

More than 19,000 barrels of crude has been recovered — only 8 percent of the 240,000 barrels that spilled when the tanker struck Bligh Reef.

Exxon said with additional skimmers, about 2,000 barrels were being recovered daily. Reports from state officials and the Coast Guard have placed the figure at about 1,000 barrels a day.

Freeze said even though crews have more skimmers, the oil is getting thicker and harder to recover.

Bradley Wins Fifth Term As Mayor Of Los Angeles

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — Mayor Tom Bradley fended off an upstart challenger to win an unprecedented fifth term in a squeaker election that almost had him facing a runoff.

"Never take anything for granted," the 71-year-old Bradley told supporters today after his narrow victory.

Bradley — the city's first black mayor, an ex-cop and son of a sharecropper — needed at least 50 percent of the vote to avoid a June 6 runoff.

Early today, he held more than 52 percent of the vote with 98.4 percent of the city's precincts reporting. At one point, he had dropped to 50 percent of Tuesday's non-partisan vote, in which turnout was less than 20 percent.

Bradley's nearest finisher among the 10 candidates, freshman Councilman Nate Holden, conceded after midnight.

"A little more time and more money, there could have been a difference," said Holden, who gathered only $150,000 for his campaign funds versus Bradley's $2 million.

Bradley, who remained out of sight most of Tuesday night, declared victory early today.

"I am grateful for the people who gave us this victory," he told supporters at the Biltmore Hotel.

Bradley quickly pledged to renew the battle against drugs and gangs that plague the nation's second largest city.

With 98.4 percent of the 2,353 precincts reporting, Bradley had 152,373 of the vote, or 52.13 percent. Holden had 81,747 votes, or 28 percent; and former county supervisor and television commentator Baxter Ward drew 44,186 votes, or 15 percent.

Only 16.5 percent, or 384,000 of the city's 1.9 million registered voters, went to the polls to elect the officials to lead Los Angeles during the next four years.

A poll taken recently by The Los Angeles Times showed 78 percent of Hispanics, 70 percent of whites and 68 percent of blacks had a favorable impression of the Democratic mayor.

That's led Bradley to be dubbed the "Teflon mayor" because he's apparently not being blamed for the city's mounting urban problems.

Other candidates included a socialist oil field worker and a singer-dancer who used to cavort in a green bikini across the street from City Hall every day.

The victory by Bradley, who has been mayor 16 years, puts him in a position to oversee Los Angeles into the early 1990s as the population swells past 3 million people, with more than 70 different languages spoken.

Bradley had been expected to win another four-year term despite a city attorney's office announcement of an ethics investigation of him after learning he had performed consulting work with Far East National Bank, which did business with the city. Bradley has returned the $18,000 in fees he was paid by the bank and called the charges politically motivated at election time.

Polsters and would-be opponents such as City Councilman Zev Yaroslavsky agreed that Bradley's low-key image kept him from being linked in voters' minds with Los Angeles' growing problems.

Note Shows President Deceived

WASHINGTON — Oliver North deceived President Reagan by saying that a fund-raiser and wealthy donor weren't providing money to the Contras, according to documents released at North's criminal trial.

As a result of those assurances, Reagan got the go-ahead from White House Counsel Fred Fielding to send thank-you notes to Carl "Spitz" Channell and Barbara Newington for their support of the Reagan administration's policy in Central America.

In an Oct. 7, 1985, memorandum to Reagan, North described Mrs. Newington as a "stalwart supporter of your Presidency" and Channell's organization as providing "paid television advertising in support of ... your policies in Central America."

Mrs. Newington, a Connecticut widow, donated $2.8 million to the Nicaragua rebels through Channell's tax-exempt organization, according to records.

In fact, Channell's tax-exempt group, with which North worked closely, help raised more than $10 million from private contributors for the Contras during a two-year congressional ban on military aid for the rebels.

Reagan didn't send the thank-you notes until after North assured White House Counsel Fred Fielding that Channell's activities were legitimate, according to an Oct. 10, 1985, memo from Fielding that was presented in court.

"Oliver North has advised my office that the recipients are not involved in raising private funds for the Contras, and that the recipients understand they may not use the letters in fund-raising or other promotional activity," the memo said.

Denying that Channell was involved in fund-raising is "a flat-out, 100 percent old-fashioned All-American lie," prosecutor John Kecker told North on the witness stand Tuesday. Channell has pleaded guilty to charges he made illegal use of a tax-exempt organization.

North, testifying for a fourth day, said he didn't remember talking to the White House counsel's office.

"I don't recall saying anything to Fred Fielding except 'hello' in the hallway," said the former National Security Council aide, who added that he didn't remember speaking to anyone else in Fielding's office.

"This doesn't mention anything about money. ... Why not?" Kecker asked in regard to North's memo for Reagan, marked "memorandum for the president" and sent to Robert McFarlane, national security adviser at the time.

"I don't know," said North. "I can't answer that." North denied he was trying to cover up Channell's role or Newington's contribution and said McFarlane was fully aware of his activities.

Emergency crews stand by as Concorde lands at Sydney with piece of tail section missing

Concorde Jet Loses Piece Of Tail Section In Flight

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SYDNEY, Australia — A British Airways Concorde jet with 100 Americans aboard lost a nine-foot piece of its tail today while trying to set a speed record on a world-circling journey, but landed safely in Sydney.

William F. Buckley, Jr. and his wife were on board, CBS News reported. The author and commentator had helped organize the trip, which cost each passenger $39,000.

Part of the rudder disintegrated while the supersonic jet was flying at 40,000 feet at about 1,500 mph — nearly twice the speed of sound — from Christchurch, New Zealand, said British Airways spokesman Peter Stanton.

"It experienced a shudder while over the Tasman Sea that was thought to have been air turbulence," said Stanton.

He said the pilot was unaware of any problem until he was alerted by the control tower at Sydney's Kingsford-Smith International Airport.

However, at least one passenger on the 1,000-mile flight, which lasted one hour and 25 minutes, said the plane had shuddered and passengers were tense.

"It was a normal landing, there was no emergency," Stanton said. "The pilot, Capt. David Leney, was told by the control tower that a piece of the tail was missing."

There were no injuries among the 100 passengers, all Americans, on the 38,343-mile journey that started April 1 in London.

British Airways airport service manager Pat Boody said the cause of the tail problem was being investigated and that the plane would not be allowed to fly "unless it is absolutely safe."

Australian Associated Press said the Concorde was about 15 years old and apparently had never experienced any problems.

In London, a British Airways spokeswoman said the airline was sending out spare parts to Australia to repair the plane, which would go on to Perth, Australia on Friday as scheduled and then to Africa before returning to London. Another spokesman said the tail sections of other Concorde were being checked.

The Concorde had been trying to break the speed record on all stops, making about 12 in all. The planned three-week journey includes stops in exotic locations like Colombo, Sri Lanka and Mombassa, Kenya.

Passenger Sheila Cole Nilva, a freelance journalist, telephoned The Associated Press with the following account:

"About 25 minutes after takeoff from New Zealand there was a large thump. It was like a vibration. Nothing was said about the thump but everybody looked at everybody else and lunch was served. The stewardesses looked terrified.

"The pilot came on and said there was nothing to worry about and that there was a piece loose on the airplane," she said. "We descended very quickly. There was no conversation and then the shuddering stopped."

David Learmount of Flight International, an aviation industry periodical, said in London that the Concorde was one of the best-maintained aircraft in the world.

"Concorde has been undergoing a certain amount of renovation recently," he said on British Broadcasting Corp. television.

Concorde, built by a French-British consortium, have been involved in a number of minor incidents but there have been no major accidents involving loss of life.

Solons Reject Bush Proposal For S&Ls

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Lawmakers are rejecting President Bush's effort to make the savings and loan industry meet the same capital requirements as banks in return for bailing out the thrift industry.

The administration and other reformers, however, are succeeding in early House action to end many "accounting fictions" that enabled S&L operators to hide billions of dollars in losses.

On a 24-23 vote Tuesday, the House financial institutions subcommittee rebuffed Bush's insistence on doubling the required capital base of S&Ls from 3 percent to 6 percent, the same level that commercial banks have to meet.

But then in several votes against the panel's chairman, Rep. Frank Annunzio, D-Ill., it endorsed elimination of several "smoke and mirror" accounting practices that allow S&L owners to meet the present capital standards with little or no investment of their own.

Meanwhile, the Senate Banking

Committee is scheduled to begin formally amending Bush's 330-page bailout bill today after reaching a bipartisan consensus behind closed doors "on nearly all issues," according to its chairman, Sen. Don Riegle, D-Mich.

One Senate committee member, speaking on the condition of anonymity, predicted its version will be much tougher than whatever emerges from the House in regulating S&Ls in the future.

Northrop Indicted Over Tests

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — The government has indicted Northrop Corp. for allegedly falsifying test data on cruise missile guidance systems, raising questions whether the strategic nuclear weapon would function in time of war.

The aerospace giant and five current or former employees were charged Tuesday with conspiring to defraud the government in the construction of part of the Air Force missile's guidance system and a component of the Navy's Harrier fighter jet.

The 167-count indictment charged that Northrop and the employees conspired to install parts for the Flight Data Transmitter of the cruise missile that failed to meet government specifications.

In addition to the suspect guidance systems, the defendants were accused of falsifying test data on the stability system for the Harrier.

The U.S. District Court indictment said the cruise missile data transmitter was required to undergo tests for effectiveness in extreme cold but were not performed. The indictment said defendants falsely certified untested units.

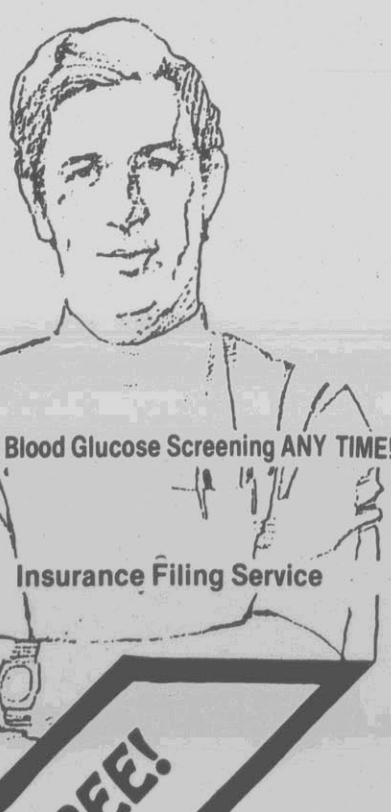

In some cases, faulty components were certified as having passed tests, according to the indictment.

Northrop said it "strongly disputes any allegations of criminal behavior" in the indictments that

Bethel Woman Joins Hearing On Rural-Urban Poverty Study

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The poor are getting poorer, especially those living in rural areas of the nation, and there are more of them, according to a private study released Tuesday.

"In spite of the common perception of poverty as an urban phenomenon, poverty rates are higher in rural areas than urban areas," said the study by the Center for Budget and Policy Priorities.

The report noted that rural poverty is likely to occur in two-parent families where one or both parents work.

"Nearly two of every three poor families living in rural areas contained at least one worker in 1987. Nearly one quarter had at least two workers," the study said.

That was demonstrated in emotional testimony from Sharon Whitford of Charlotte, Mich., and Myssee Green of Bethel, N.C., describing their families' struggles against poverty through the loss of a family farm and a disabling job-related injury.

Analyzing census data on poverty from 1978 to 1987, the center's researchers found that "the rural poverty rate rose from 13.5 percent to 16.9 percent" while the poverty rate in cities climbed from 15.4 percent to 18.6 percent during the same period.

Figures in the study show more than one in six people in rural America fell below the federal poverty line of $9,056 for a family of three in 1987 while the rate was one in eight for residents of metropolitan areas during that year.

"In fact, the rural poverty rate for 1987 — the fifth year of an economic recovery — was as high as the rate for 1975, the deepest recession year of the 1970s," said Robert Greenspan, the center's director, in testimony before a hearing of the House Select Committee on Children, Youth and Families.

The center, a nonprofit organization which conducts research and analysis on a range of public policy issues concerning low-income families and individuals, found the urban-rural poverty dichotomies consistent among most racial, ethnic, age and demographic groups.

Stock And Market Reports

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market headed higher today, adding to Tuesday's moderate gains.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials rose 8.98 to 2,320.56 in the first half hour of trading.

Advancing issues outnumbered declines by about 7 to 5 in nationwide trading of New York Stock Exchange-listed issues, with 533 up, 378 down and 544 unchanged.

Volume on the Big Board came to 23.60 million shares as of 10 a.m. on Wall Street.

In economic news, American businesses plan to increase spending on plants and equipment by a healthy 6.3 percent this year after an even stronger 10.1 percent rise in 1988, the government said today. The Commerce Department said a survey completed in March found businesses planning to spend $450.39 billion for expansion and modernization this year.

If realized, that would surpass the previous record of $423.77 billion in capital spending set last year. All of the numbers have been adjusted to take inflation into account.

Gainers among the blue chips included International Business Machines, up 1/2 at 111 1/2; Philip Morris, up 1/2 at 119 1/2; DuPont, up 1/2 at 104, and International Paper, up 3/4 at 48.

The NYSE's composite index of all its listed common stocks rose .36 to 167.94. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index was up .46 at 333.60.

On Tuesday the Dow Jones industrial average rose 9.71 to 2,311.58.

Advancing issues outnumbered decliners by about 5 to 3 on the NYSE, with 873 issues up, 503 down and 559 unchanged.

Big Board volume totaled 146.83 million shares, against 123.99 million in the previous session.

management system during March saved some $178,495 in wholesale power charges.

"Beat the Peak" switches on water heaters accounted for $87,412 in savings, Jones said, while voltage reductions added another $83,684. Among other savings was $5,694 from operation of generators at Procter & Gamble Paper Products and at GUC's water treatment plant.

Since January 1985, the load management program has saved more than $7.04 million in wholesale power costs, Jones said.

According to Jones' report, there were 18,805 radio-controlled "Beat the Peak" switches installed on water heaters and central air conditioners throughout GUC's system at the end of March. Some 129 switches were installed during March, while at the end of the month, there were 270 customers awaiting installation, with only 169 switches in stock and not installed.

The radio-controlled switches allow GUC to cycle water heaters and air conditioning units off and on during times of peak electric usage, thus reducing the demand for power.

In a related matter, the board Tuesday approved the purchase of 1,240 new load management switches from Regency Electronics at a cost of $76,880. But Jones said delivery time for the new order will be three to four months.

In a written report to the board, Jones said damage to the electric system from ice, wind and snow from Feb. 18 to Feb. 24 cost some $196,200 to repair, while damage from ice on March 7 and March 8 cost another $18,300, for a total of $214,500 for the two storm periods.

Malcolm Green, GUC's general manager, said the ElectricCities annual meeting will be held in Greenville on Aug. 11 and Aug. 12.

Green also reminded board members that the annual tour of GUC facilities will be held on May 9 prior to the board's regular meeting.

Fees Will Increase

an increase in the number of adopted animals sterilized. A similar program in Orange County recorded an 80 percent sterilization rate for adopted animals, he said.

He also said by increasing the fees, irresponsible individuals will be discouraged to adopt pets at the animal shelter.

"Most anyone can get $10 to adopt a dog," Barrett told the council on Monday. "We have had people get a pet with $10 in pennies. If they have to buy a dog with pennies, then how are they going to be able to take care of that animal?"

Barrett said some irresponsible pet owners have adopted animals, let them loose to fend for themselves and then the pets are captured by animal control officers. He said often that routine occurs with the same animal five or six times.

The animal shelter currently adopts approximately 200 dogs per year. Barrett said that assuming half the dogs are female and the average female produces eight puppies, a reduction in the population of fertile female dogs could reduce the stray and unwanted dog population by as much as 800 dogs per year after the program has been implemented.

Barrett said Greenville and Pitt County animal control employees pick up approximately 1,600 stray dogs per year.

"An effective spay/neuter program could dramatically reduce our stray and unwanted dog problem in a relatively short time span of only one to three years," he said.

Ted Jordan, an employee of the Pitt County Animal Control Division agrees.

Jordan said successful results have been achieved with such programs conducted across the nation. For example, he said residents of Los Angeles have witnessed a 50 percent reduction in the stray animal population with such a program.

The increase in adoption fees will be effective following passage of a fee ordinance amendment by the City Council on Thursday.

opinions about the land use issues to be addressed in the 20-year plan.

"Active citizen participation is needed during this planning process," Ulma said, "and it is critical at this stage. If the general public does not get involved now, then the plan will not reflect countywide opinion, but only the opinion of the planning board and its staff."

"In addition," Ulma said, "short-term work on a future zoning ordinance, new development requirements, other planning tools and more detailed land use plans will be developed as a direct result of this long-range plan."

Ed Hemingway, the comprehensive plan subcommittee's chairman, said, "We have gone as far as possible on our own. We have reviewed a great amount of background information and have developed draft recommendations that should allow for a healthy discussion of future growth and land use in the county."

"Since the plan is to serve the needs of all citizens, we are providing an opportunity for public input."

Ulma said that the first three steps of a seven-phase work program for producing the comprehensive land use plan have been completed.

"Following these public meetings, the subcommittee will concentrate on a future land use map and more detailed policies or actions needed to achieve the desired goals and objectives," Ulma said.

He emphasized that additional public meetings will be scheduled later this year when a draft plan is ready for inspection and public hearings will be held as the planning board and Pitt County Board of Commissioners consider adoption of the land use plan.

The three subcommittee public meetings to review the draft goals and objectives are scheduled at Falkland Elementary School on April 24, at D.H. Conley High School on April 25, and at North Pitt High School on April 27. All three meetings are set for 7:30 p.m.

were prepared to use overhead irrigation to reduce frost damage. Spraying controlled amounts of water on the plants forms a thin sheet of clear ice, he said, and when the water freezes a small amount of energy is released into the tissue of the plant. The practice can protect plants in weather as cold as 26 degrees.

"Obviously, cells of the blossom are very thin-walled and very easily damaged by cold weather," Uzzell said. "Other parts of the plant that were in danger are the developing fruit and the new growth."

As an option to irrigation, growers may also use row covers of fabric, which trap some ground heat and prevent frost from settling on the plants, Uzzell said.

Throw To Second — It's The One In The Middle

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ANNAPOLIS, Md. — The Soviet Union may have beaten the United States en route to the gold medal in basketball during last summer's Olympics, but America's national pastime is another story.

The Soviet National baseball team was looking to rebound from a 21-1 loss to Navy when it met George Washington University today in the second stop of a 12-game U.S. tour.

"We didn't play like we could have," Soviet manager Alexander Ardatov said through an interpreter after the game Tuesday at the U.S. Naval Academy.

Ardatov should have known he was in for a rough afternoon when his players had to face the American flag during the playing of the Soviet national anthem.

The Soviet flag was not raised before the game because it is not customary for a foreign flag to be raised on a U.S. military base. Instead, the Soviet players stood at attention facing the American flag as the Soviet anthem was played for the first time ever at the academy.

Once the game started, Navy took advantage of a flood of Soviet errors and walks, scoring 10 runs on three hits in the first inning en route to the exhibition victory.

The Soviets allowed eight walks, eight errors, eight wild pitches and four hit batsmen.

"You could see they were nervous," Navy catcher Tim Peifley said. "They're not used to playing in front of this many people. But we're not either."

"I wish I could have communicated with them to tell them to keep their heads up (while in the batters box)," he added.

About 900 people attended the game, including a group of children from a nearby school who adopted the Soviet team for the day, carrying banners that read "Go Russia," and "Beat Navy."

Center fielder Chris Angle went 2-for-2 with two runs scored and three RBI to lead Navy. Despite the 21 runs, just one of Navy's 12 hits was for extra bases.

The Soviets, who had three hits, scored their only run in the fifth inning on their first hit of the game, a double by Leonid Komeyev to score Sergey Zhigalov. Zhigalov reached first on a fielder's choice and scored on the double.

The 18-member Soviet team is using American-made equipment presented to it before the tour.

Despite the lopsided victory, the Soviet team is much better than it was nine months ago when a U.S. team visited Russia, said an official with Taco Bell, the sponsor of the tour.

"They didn't know how to bunt or steal or slide," said Elliot Bloom, director of public affairs for Taco Bell, after a scrimmage Monday against Howard University.

"They're less mechanical in throwing and their fielding style is much improved," Bloom said.

But they have some trouble paying attention, something that was particularly annoying to Ardatov.

"I've told you, watch your position," he yelled at one of his players. "They're throwing the ball and you, you're looking over there."

Moments later he yelled again, "Throw to second ... not first. Second is the one in the middle."

Knight, Retired Now, Is Carrying Nancy's Clubs

The caddy shouldering the golf bag looks familiar, but out of place.

Shouldn't he be wearing a baseball uniform, and swinging a bat?

For 18 years, until this spring, he did.

Ray Knight, MVP of the 1986 World Series, is caddying for his wife, Nancy Lopez, on the LPGA Tour.

"It's something I've always wanted to do. I can be with her out here and the family more. I've enjoyed it," said Knight, recently retired from an 18-year career, the last 13 in the major leagues.

"I know a lot of people tease him about carrying my bag, but he's my best friend, not just my husband," said Lopez, an LPGA Hall of Famer. "I want him here."

"With Ray out here, I can play a lot of tournaments and try to become the leading money winner again."

"I'm leaving the game feeling I can still play," the 33-year-old former infielder said. "But I don't want to be a part-time player. I'm not good at that. I've always been an intense player, keyed up."

"I can't sit and wait. The more I sat on the bench last year, the more I thought about retiring. I think I made the right decision, but it's going to take awhile to get used to it."

"I've never lost that enthusiasm, never lost that joy," said Knight, who, in addition to his World Series MVP year with the New York Mets, had 300 seasons earlier with Houston and Cincinnati.

In past years, Lopez adjusted her tour schedule so she and her husband could spend time together. But when Knight was traded from Baltimore to Detroit last year in

Rampants' Powers Signs With Baptist; Pirates Ink Chowan's Taro Knight

By Tom Morris
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Greenville Rose's Paul Powers signed a scholarship with Baptist College while former Tarboro standout Taro Knight elected to sign with East Carolina on opening of the spring college basketball signing period today.

Powers, a 6-9 center, averaged 10 points a game this past season, helping to lead Rose to a 18-9 record and a second-place finish in the Big East 4-A Conference.

Knight played his high school ball at Tarboro and then signed with Tennessee. He left school early in the fall of his freshman year and eventually landed at Chowan.

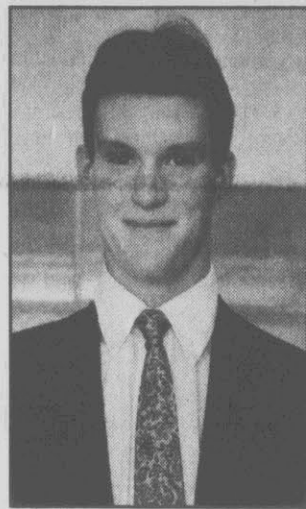

He sat out last year but started at point guard this past season. His main responsibility was getting the ball to the team's scorers. He averaged 7.4 points and 6.1 assists per game.

His teammates on that squad included 6-10 Billy Coles, who will sign with either James Madison or Boston College, 6-3 wing Tabarris Hamilton and 6-2 guard Terry Massey, who will be an academic non-qualifier.

ECU is also recruiting Hamilton, who averaged 12.5 points per game this past season. Both he and Knight took their recruiting trip to ECU this past weekend.

Powers took his visit to Baptist last weekend and decided to cast his lot with the Buccaneers over UNC-Greensboro and Pembroke State. ECU also had expressed some interest in Powers.

"I think they expect me to play (right away)," Powers said.

Paul Powers

"Their tallest returnee is 6-6 so I hope I can fill their need."

"This past weekend, Coach (Gary) Edwards asked us to come down and see the school. It's in Charleston and it's a beautiful city. They made me feel special and that they really wanted me."

Baptist, 17-12 this past year, will soon move into a new 14,000-seat arena.

"He's bringing in about six freshmen this year," Power said. "Hopefully, we can grow as a unit and get a NCAA bid in a couple of years since the conference (the Big South) will get an automatic bid."

Knight was expected to be ECU's only signee today, but Pirate coach Mike Steele expects to sign three more players over the next week or so.

The Bucs lose three seniors off this past season's 15-14 team, including both starting guards. Knight fills an immediate need for an experienced guard and also possesses size in the backcourt that ECU has not had in year's past.

Among the players ECU is still pursuing are 6-5 swingman Tim Shaw of Fayetteville South View, Hamilton of Chowan and 6-4 swingman Steve Richardson of Terre Haute (Ind.) South.

ECU has also shown some interest in Ayden-Grifton standout Ronnell Peterson, a 6-1, 190-pound guard, but he has yet to qualify academically. If he does qualify before the year is out, he will sign with the Pirates. If not, he will play at either Chowan or Louisville.

In the early signing period last fall, ECU signed four players in 6-5 Jon Hardin of North Greenville Junior College; 6-6 D.J. Morgan of Raleigh Athens Drive; 6-6 Darrell Overton of Craven Community College and 5-9 Paul Childress of Albemarle.

Hardin, perhaps the prize of the recruiting class, is on shaky ground academically and may not qualify to enter ECU in the fall.

Locally, 5-9 North Pitt guard Keisha Pilgreen, who was a three-year starter for the Pant-Hers, figures to make a decision on where she will play next season over the next week or so.

She helped lead the Pant-Hers to the State 2-A Regionals this past season. She will choose from among Tennessee State, North Carolina Central, St. Augustine's, Mount Olive, Chowan and Pembroke State.

Odom Wants Only Grant To Pay Off For Deacs

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Wake Forest basketball coach Dave Odom has just one grant to give, and he wants to make sure if he's going to use it, that he'll get that one blue-chip athlete that could help him right away.

"I have given some thought to recruiting," Odom said, "but right now my major concern is the players who are on the team. After evaluating them, I feel very good. I don't think we have to rush out and sign someone just to fill the 15th spot on the roster."

"But that's not to say I wouldn't take a backup point guard, if I can find one, or a 6-10 center who would help us inside," he said.

Everyone in the Atlantic Coast Conference, and across the nation as well, will be looking for that special player today as the NCAA opens its spring signing period.

Odom said he knows of Tim Shaw, the 6-foot-4 guard from South View High School in Hope Mills who had been offered a grant by Bob Staak, the former Wake Forest coach.

Odom said that he wanted to look into the situation before deciding on Shaw.

North Carolina coach Dean Smith, who has signed two players and received a commitment from a third, says he wants as many as three more players. He is concentrating on the frontcourt, and the object of his attention is Kevin Salvadori, a 6-11 center from Pittsburgh.

Salvadori is the son of Al Salvadori, who played at South Carolina from 1965-67. He helped Seton LaSalle High School to a 32-6 record in 1988 and the state Class 3-A championship, but drew only meager recruiting interest in the fall because he is underdeveloped. He weighs only 200 pounds and has just turned 17.

Salvadori didn't turn a lot of heads, according to Seton LaSalle athletic director Chuck Rutter, until he averaged 18 points, 11 rebounds, and 12 blocks a game last season. He helped the team to a 26-7 record and the Western Pennsylvania regional championship.

South Carolina, North Carolina

State, Nevada-Las Vegas, Temple, and Texas are recruiting Salvadori, Rutter said, but Salvadori isn't close to making a decision.

"The poor kid's head is spinning," Rutter said. "He and his family are trying to sort out things and see what's best for him. I talked to him (Monday), and he said he was not ready to get down and commit."

The Tar Heels and Virginia are in the final decision of George Lynch, a 6-7 forward from Roanoke, Va., via Flint Hill Prep School in Oakton, Va. Lynch visited North Carolina last weekend and is scheduled to visit Virginia this weekend.

North Carolina is also looking at Douglas Edwards, a 6-9 forward from Miami. N.C. State remains in the hunt for Edwards, along with Louisville, Florida, and Florida State. Edwards will probably not make his decision until May, according to Shakey Rodriguez, his high school coach.

N.C. State signed five players in the fall, and has one grant left. If it NORMAN, Okla. — Attorneys for three former Oklahoma football players charged with rape want a judge to disallow the testimony of two men who reportedly discussed the case while waiting to testify.

The alleged conversation came to the attention of Special District Judge Gary Purcell during Tuesday's preliminary hearing for the three former players.

Sherrelyn Lynnette Osborn told the court that she overheard Jimmy Fennell, Keith Traylor and another man discussing the case while they waited in a witness room of the Cleveland County courthouse.

The men had been subpoenaed to testify in the case of Bernard Hall, Nigel Clay and Glen Bell, who are charged with first-degree rape in an alleged Jan. 21 attack on a 20-year-old Oklahoma City woman in the athletic dorm.

Among other things, Ms. Osborn said she heard the men say the woman who was allegedly raped "was trying to appear sexy" to the men in Hall's room and had announced herself as "the wild thing."

The woman has said she felt uncomfortable in the room.

Fred Shaeffer, the attorney for Hall, said motions were filed late Tuesday to bar testimony from the witnesses, including Osborn and her boyfriend, Larry Medice.

The attorney said court rules forbid such discussions.

He said, however, that Purcell ruled testimony from Osborn and Medice was acceptable and would decide today whether to accept testimony from Fennell and Traylor as the preliminary hearing enters its third day.

Tuesday's session lasted more than 10 hours, seven of them involving the alleged victim responding to cross-examination by the three defense attorneys.

The most noteworthy testimony came from Medice and Osborn, who said they heard screams coming from Clay's room the night of the alleged attack. Medice's room is directly under Clay's in the Bud Wilkinson House dormitory.

Medice testified he heard Clay ask the victim "What did they do to you?" He said she told Clay "five guys raped me."

Medice said when he heard noise upstairs the first thing he thought was "some young lady was getting beat up." He said he also thought the noise might have been from a wild party.

Osborn said she heard a "vague" scream, followed by a noise that sounded as though something fell on the floor, then a louder scream.

"We looked at each other and said 'It sounds like some girl's getting her butt kicked,'" Osborn said.

She said neither she nor Medice called police, and admitted under cross-examination that she had told the district attorney the screams could have been screams of passion.

The alleged victim never requested a break and sobbed only occasionally as she tried to recount particulars about the Saturday night when she allegedly was attacked.

However, she seemed confused at times and repeatedly said she did not know or couldn't remember specifics.

The woman, who testified she receives weekly counseling and has started using an anti-depressant drug since the alleged attack, was able to remember vividly the directions Clay gave her to get from the dorm room to a liquor store, but said she couldn't remember his directions to get back.

She said she remembered her girlfriend, with whom she went to Norman, spilling some of her drink. But she said she couldn't remember what the girl drank from.

At one point, while trying to answer a question, the woman said "My mind just went blank," and the judge gave her time to collect her thoughts.

She had testified Monday that she did not think Clay had been a part of the attack. Tuesday, she said she first found out on Feb. 9 that Clay had been identified as a possible assailant.

"(District Attorney) Tully McCoy is the one who gave you the name, is that right?" asked Clay's attorney, Joel Barr.

"Yes," she said. "... He (McCoy) went over with me what happened and I changed my mind."

Bell's attorney, Charlie Cox, spent much of his 3½ hours of questioning trying to determine how many men were in the dorm room, how much she could see in the darkened room and how hard she tried to get away from her alleged attackers.

Rose Baseball Ranking Up To No. 10

Rose High School's baseball team, 8-0 on the season, has been upped to the Number 10 ranking in the country by USA Today.

The Rampants, who have played but one conference game thus far this year, have had two straight league games postponed, including Tuesday's scheduled game with Wilson Beddingfield. No dates have yet been set for the makeup of that game, nor of the game with Rocky Mount, rained out last week.

Rose has not lost a regular season game since the 1987 season, having gone unbeaten last season until the state championship series, when it bowed to Charlotte Harding for the title, losing two of three games.

Rose's game Friday with Kinston has been switched from a 7:30 p.m. start to a 4 p.m. start because of expected cold weather.

NFL Exec Joins Charlotte Move

CHARLOTTE (AP) — Mike McCormack, former Seattle Seahawks executive, has become an executive consultant to Jerry Richardson, who is trying to bring an NFL team to North and South Carolina.

"I will be doing everything in my power to help bring an NFL expansion franchise to the Richardsons and to the Carolinas," said McCormack.

rdson said McCormack — a veteran of 32 years in the NFL as a Hall of Fame player, coach and team president — will be active in all aspects of developing the plan to acquire a franchise. The plan includes the design and construction of a 65,000-seat football stadium.

McCormack will be involved in planning the Aug. 20 preseason exhibition game at Carter-Finley Stadium in Raleigh between the New York Jets and the Philadelphia Eagles.

Bodine Moves To NASCAR Lead

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Geoff Bodine's third-place finish in Sunday's Valleydale Meats 500 moved him to the top of this week's Winston Cup standings for NASCAR drivers.

Bodine is winless this year, but Sunday's race was his fourth top-five finish in six starts. He has 900 points, 19 more than second-place Rusty Wallace, who won Sunday's race for his third victory this year. Alan Kulwicki is third in the Winston Cup standings with 875 points, followed by Dale Earnhardt with 869. Sterling Marlin is next at 851, followed by Darrell Waltrip at 807. Waltrip took third in the Valleydale Meats 500.

The rest of the Top Ten includes Davey Allison with 786 points, Rick Wilson with 756, Mark Martin with 728 and Michael Waltrip with 727.

Lute Olson Top Kentucky Candidate

LEXINGTON, Ky. (AP) — Lute Olson appears to be the No.1 candidate for Kentucky's vacant basketball coaching job if the price is right.

Olson, head coach at Arizona, is expected to meet with Kentucky athletics director C.M. Newton this week to discuss the details of the job.

Olson and Newton were expected to meet in Lexington on Thursday. Newton, however, said Monday night that he had not offered the post to Olson.

Cedric Dempsey, University of Arizona athletic director, said he gave Kentucky officials permission to talk with Olson but didn't know of the coach's intentions.

Burson Receives Pete Maravich Award

ORLANDO, Fla. (AP) — Ohio State's Jay Burson, whose college career ended prematurely because of a neck injury, was named the first recipient of the Pete Maravich Award, organizers of the Orlando All-Star Classic announced.

Burson, an All-Big Ten selection, played in 95 games for Ohio State before suffering a fracture of the anterior of the body of the fifth cervical vertebra in the neck. The injury broke a string of 90 consecutive starts for the Buckeyes' captain.

Braves Cut Payroll Last Four Years

ATLANTA (AP) — Despite a steady climb in baseball salaries, the Atlanta Braves have cut their payroll 47 percent in four years, from the National League's highest to the league's lowest.

The average Brave's salary this season is $349,400, according to league figures, compared with $657,657 in 1986 and $163,364 below the major league average.

Three American League clubs, Baltimore, Chicago and Seattle, have a lower salary scale than Atlanta.

Braves President Stan Kasten said the salary change reflects the drastic remake of the Braves.

"We had the highest payroll in baseball (in 1986) and a last-place team," Kasten said. "That we have the lowest payroll was not a goal. It was just a byproduct of wanting to improve the team."

"As our young guys develop, I think it's pretty safe to say our payroll is going to skyrocket."

"We would be perfectly happy to have the highest payroll in baseball if it meant we were winning championships," Kasten said.

Only five of the 1986 Braves are still with the team.

The departure of veterans Ted Simmons, Gary Roenicke, Ken Oberkfell, Graig Nettles, Damaso Garcia and Ken Griffey drastically cut the Braves' salary scale.

Ontiveros Leads Phils Past Expos

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Steve Ontiveros found out he can do more than just pitch in the major leagues.

Ontiveros threw seven shutout innings and drove in three runs with a bases-loaded double as Philadelphia beat Montreal 6-2 Tuesday night.

Last season, Ontiveros appeared in only 10 games for Oakland as he spent most of the season on the disabled list with a sore right elbow.

After the season ended, Ontiveros had surgery and also became a free agent. The Phillies, a team in need of pitching, took a chance and so far Ontiveros has been their lucky charm.

"You have to believe in yourself, have confidence," Ontiveros said.

Manager Nick Leyva relieved Ontiveros at the start of the eighth after the right-hander appeared to tire in the seventh.

"I was not in pain," Ontiveros said. "There just was no need to take any chances. I suggested to Nick that I had enough. Under the circumstances, it was a wise move."

Elsewhere in the National League it was Pittsburgh 4, New York 3 in 11 innings; Houston 5, Cincinnati 3; Chicago 5, St. Louis 4; San Diego 3, Atlanta 2, and San Francisco 8, Los Angeles 3.

Leading 1-0, Chris James and Ron Jones led off the Phillies' fourth with singles and Darren Daulton drove in a run with a single. Pascual Perez, 0-1, walked Steve Jeltz to load the bases and Ontiveros doubled to right field to score three runs.

Ontiveros had not batted since high school, later playing at the University of Michigan and in minors leagues which used the designated hitter.

Ontiveros said he was so excited about his first big-league hit that he didn't realize he had cleared the bases.

Later, in going to third on a hit, he almost ran through third-base coach Larry Bowa's stop sign.

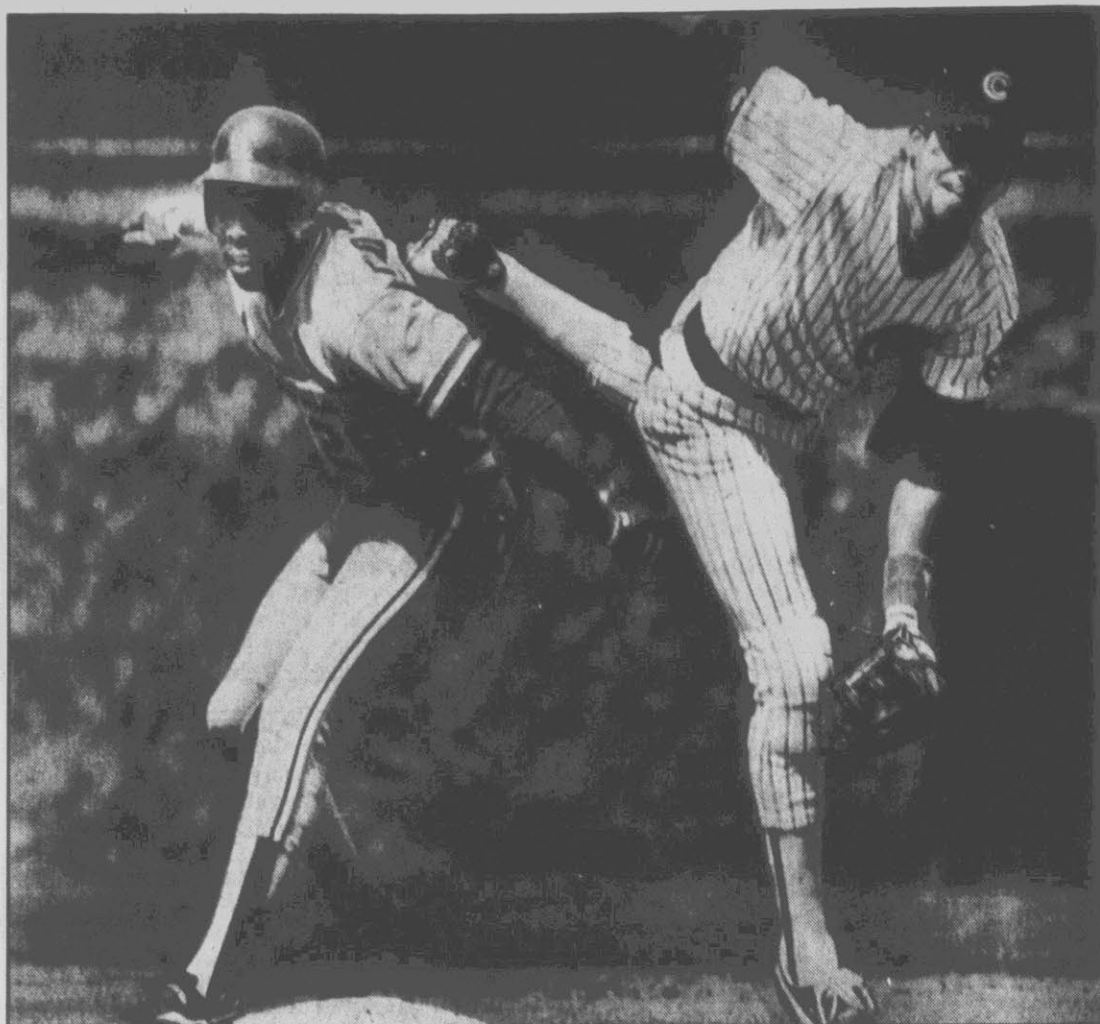

"Yeh, I was just so psyched," Ontiveros said.

Montreal manager Buck Rodgers said that it was the first time he had seen Ontiveros pitch.

"I don't know if he's that good or we're hitting that bad," Rodgers said. "He changed speeds and pitched well. Give him credit."

Pirates 4, Mets 3

Lind singled with one out in the 11th off Randy Myers, 0-1, stole second and moved to third on Andy Van Slyke's ground out to second.

Bonilla then bounced a slow roller that third baseman Dave Magadan caught with a backhand stab. But Bonilla easily beat his three-hop throw to first, as Lind scored standing up.

Jeff Robinson, 1-1, retired all three batters he faced in the 11th for the victory as the Pirates ended a four-game losing streak.

The Pirates tied it 3-3 in the ninth on Glenn Wilson's sacrifice fly off Myers.

Astros 5, Reds 3

Ken Caminiti hit a two-run single in the Astros' four-run first inning and started a double play to end a threat in the seventh as Houston beat visiting Cincinnati.

Caminiti caught Ken Griffey's line drive to third and then threw to first to get Ron Oester for a double play after the Reds had scored two runs in the seventh.

Rick Mahler, 0-2, started for the Reds and lost his ninth straight decision to Houston.

Jim Deshaies, 1-1, allowed four hits and struck out three before leaving during Cincinnati's two-run seventh.

Padres 3, Braves 2

Ed Whitson allowed five hits in 7 2-3 innings and added a run-scoring single as San Diego beat Atlanta at Jack Murphy Stadium.

Tony Gwynn hit his second homer in the fifth inning and has hit safely in all eight games played by the Padres.

Mark Davis pitched the final 1 1-3 innings for his fourth save in as many appearances. He yielded Andres Thomas' leadoff homer in the ninth. It was the first homer Davis has allowed since last June 3.

Darrell Evans hit his 40th career homer for Atlanta's other run.

Giants 8, Dodgers 3

Will Clark drove in five runs with a three-run homer and two doubles, as San Francisco beat Los Angeles at Candlestick Park.

Kelly Downs, 2-0, allowed eight hits and one earned run in 6 2-3 innings and got relief help from Craig Lefferts.

Trailing 2-1 in the fifth, Downs helped his own cause with a leadoff single off Tim Leary, 1-1. One out later, Robby Thompson singled and Clark followed with his second homer of the year to give the Giants a 4-2 lead.

Cubs 5, Cardinals 4

Jerome Walton homered in the first inning and scored the tie-breaking run in the eighth as Chicago beat St. Louis at Wrigley Field for its fourth straight victory.

Jose DeLeon, 1-1, walked Walton and Mitch Webster to open the eighth and the two runners pulled off a double steal. Todd Worrell relieved DeLeon and got Ryne Sandberg to foul out. Worrell then walked Andre Dawson intentionally, filling the bases.

AL Loss Streaks Starting New Season

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

"Every day you come to park you think you're going to win." — Detroit Manager Sparky Anderson, whose Tigers have dropped 12 straight games to the Minnesota Twins. And, Anderson noted, "rather easily."

"There are no automatics. Any team can beat any other team any day." — Kansas City's George Brett, whose Royals have taken 15 in a row from Baltimore.

Both streaks continued Tuesday. Pinch hitter Carmen Castillo hit a grand slam in Minnesota's eight-run eighth inning and Kirby Puckett drove in two runs with a double and homer, leading the Twins over Detroit 14-0, the Tigers' worst shutout loss since a 14-0 setback to Boston in 1973.

Meanwhile, Bo Jackson and George Brett hit two-run homers and Danny Tartabull had a solo shot as Kansas City beat the Orioles 6-5.

Another streak continued when the New York Yankees dropped their seventh straight, losing to Toronto 11-6 on a five-run 10th inning. In other American League games, it was California 7, Oakland 1; Chicago 8, Seattle 6.

Believe it or not, Anderson liked what he saw.

"That's a great team," he said of the Twins. "They can play baseball and they enjoy playing. I enjoy watching them play."

Allan Anderson, no relation to Sparky, pitched seven innings for the Twins, allowing seven hits as he beat the Tigers for the fourth straight time.

"He's so easy," Sparky said. "You watch him and he keeps the ball off the middle of the plate. And once he gets two strikes on you, you're done. You don't lead the American League in ERA — especially in that ballpark they play in — if you're not able to pitch."

The Tigers didn't get much pitching as Minnesota rapped off 19 hits. The Twins chased Jack Morris in the fourth inning. He was charged with five runs and eight hits. Puckett homered off Charles Hudson and Castillo connected off Guillermo Hernandez.

Royals 6, Orioles 5

Kansas City hit only one home run in its first seven games, but there's something about Baltimore that brings out the best in the Royals.

"We can hit home runs," said Tartabull, whose homer following Brett's two-run shot tied the score 3-3 in the third inning. "The wind has been blowing in a lot. You know, we play in one of the biggest ballparks in the league and it doesn't help when the wind is blowing in."

Jackson's two-run homer in the sixth made it 5-3 and Bob Boone's single chased Orioles starter Jose Bautista. Boone moved to third on consecutive wild pitches by Gregg Olson and scored what proved to be the decisive run as Bill Pecota hit into a double play. Pinch hitter Joe Orsulak hit a two-run homer off Tom Gordon in the eighth.

"I don't know what it is, but I would hope we could play 100 or more games against them," Tartabull said. "It does get psychological, and then your positive attitude takes over and you say this team can't beat you. Whenever you think positive, good things are going to happen."

Blue Jays 11, Yankees 6

Hear that, Yankees? Think positive.

For the seventh straight game, something bad happened to the Yankees. Toronto shortstop Manny Lee, whose ninth-inning error helped New York tie the score, hit a tie-breaking two-run single in the Blue Jays' five-run 10th against Dave Righetti.

Lee's bases-loaded single, his career-high fourth hit, made it 8-6. Lloyd Moseby delivered his second RBI single and George Bell, who homered in the second inning and singled a run home in the seventh, hit a two-run double, giving him four RBI.

Fred McGriff hit a pair of solo homers off Dave LaPoint, who also surrendered Bell's shot.

The Yankees' 1-7 record is the worst in the majors and their poorest start since 1966. The losing streak is their longest since September 1985.

This is how bad the Yankees are going: With the score 4-4 and the bases loaded in the seventh, reliever Lance McCullers apparently struck Bell out. But catcher Don Slaught had asked for time just prior to the pitch. Given another chance, Bell singled to give Toronto a 5-4 lead.

"We've shaken up as much as we can shake up this team," Yankees manager Dallas Green said. "We thought we had the guys who were able to do it, but we prefer to continue to make mistakes."

Angels 7, Athletics 1

Bert Blyleven hurled a four-hitter for his first victory with California. Blyleven walked two and struck out five. The 38-year-old right-hander, tied with Steve Carlton and Nolan Ryan on the all-time list with 55 shutouts, blanked the A's on two hits until the ninth.

The Angels were shut out on two hits through four innings by Storm Davis but scored six times with two out in the fifth. With two runners on base, consecutive RBI singles by Glenn Hoffman, Mark McLemore, Devon White and Claudell Washington made it 4-0 and Lance Parrish added a two-run double.

White Sox 8 Mariners 6

Steve Lyons hit a two-run homer off Seattle reliever Tom Niedenfuer with two out in Chicago's three-run ninth inning. Billy Jo Robidoux doubled with one out and, after Niedenfuer struck out Ron Kittle, Lyons hit his first home run of the season. Eddie Williams followed with a double and scored on Ron Karkovice's single.

The Mariners had taken a 6-5 lead in the eighth on pinch hitter Scott Bradley's RBI single. Earlier, the Mariners built a 4-0 lead on Ken Griffey Jr.'s solo home run in the first inning. Dave Valle's two-run homer in the second and Alvin Davis' RBI double in the third. Williams hit a two-run homer off Mike Campbell in the Chicago fourth.

Humphrey To Tell Plans For Future

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TUSCALOOSA, Ala. — For almost seven months, question marks have followed Bobby Humphrey's name.

The leading all-time runner at Alabama re-broke his left foot last September against Vanderbilt in the Crimson Tide's second game of the season.

Would he recover in time to play any more last fall? He didn't.

Would he recover in time for spring practice, now underway? He didn't.

Would he seek a hardship ruling from the NCAA to play a fifth season at Alabama? He hasn't.

Would he make himself available for the regular National Football League draft? He didn't.

Would he try to play at Alabama next fall or put his name in the NFL supplemental drafts? He apparently was ready to answer that question today, with reports surfacing that he will try pro football.

The school called a news conference for 2 p.m. for Humphrey to break his silence.

The news conference came a day after The Birmingham News reported that Humphrey would enter his name in either the July or September supplemental drafts.

Humphrey gained 91 yards in Alabama's opening victory last fall against Temple, and had picked up 101 in the next game, a 44-10 decision over Vandy, when the foot injury sent him out of the game.

Those yards gave him 3,420 for his career — 502 as a freshman, 1,471 as a sophomore and 1,255 as a junior. His career average is 5.6 yards a carry. At Alabama, he scored 40 touchdowns and picked up 4,958 all-purpose yards, fourth best in Southeastern Conference history behind Georgia's Herschel Walker, Auburn's James Brooks and Louisiana State's Dalton Hilliard.

The Birmingham newspaper quoted sources as saying Humphrey decided against returning for the 1989 season after learning he could not get enough insurance coverage to make it worthwhile should he suffer a career-ending injury.

Although he was insured for $1 million through Lloyd's of London, he wanted to purchase at least twice that amount.

"It would be unprecedented to increase his coverage in the $2 million or more range at this stage," an unidentified Lloyd's of London representative told the newspaper. "It might have been possible to get perhaps another $500,000, but that's about it."

Coach Bill Curry said he would not comment until Humphrey announces his decision.

Gene Stutts, of Birmingham, Humphrey's legal advisor, said he could not respond to any questions.

"Bobby is his own man," Stutts said. "When he is ready to announce his decision I'm sure he'll let everyone know."

Previous reports said both Humphrey and Gene Jelks, an Alabama cornerback who also suffered a season-ending injury in the Vanderbilt game last season, would return to the Crimson Tide this fall as fifth-year seniors. A news conference was scheduled for both, but Humphrey withdrew from it.

Jelks went ahead and announced he planned to play for Alabama in the fall.

There's nothing like a couple of days off to cure those aches and pains that make an 82-game schedule drag on and on.

Larry Nance of Cleveland and

Pitt County Schools

Basketball Winners

These four students won top honors in the 11th annual Pitt County Community Schools' Super Champ Basketball Competition this year. They are, left to right: Michele Turnage of Pactolus (Girls 7-8); Casandra Harris of G.R. Whitfield (Girls 9-10); Shonda Haddock of A.G. Cox (Girls 11-12) and Felecia Carmon of Grifton (Girls 13-14). Second and third place winners in each age group, respectively, are: 7-8, Brandy Dickerson of Whitfield and Shannon Stocks of Grifton; 9-10, Kelly Grace of Sadie Sauter and (tie) Sharie Lawrence of Belvoir and Demetrius Battle of Whitfield; 11-12, Kristen Gilbride of Greenville Middle and Sarah Manning of Cox; 13-14, Australia Graham of Grifton and Toni Alford of Cox.

Houston's Mike Woodson came back from short layoffs and led the Cavaliers and Rockets to NBA victories Tuesday night.

Nance, who missed two games because of a sore tendon in his left calf, scored 11 of his 20 points in the third quarter, helping the Cavaliers build a 13-point lead en route to a 92-90 victory over the Philadelphia 76ers.

Otis Thorpe led Houston with 26 points, but it was Woodson who came off the bench to hit his first seven shots and finish with 21 points in a 108-99 victory over Indiana that clinched a playoff spot for the Rockets.

Woodson was doubtful for the game after suffering a hairline fracture on his face against Atlanta last Friday.

"My legs were fresh and my shot was there," Woodson said. "My shots seem to be there since I missed the Miami game (on Saturday)."

After scoring 15 points on 7-for-7 shooting in the first quarter, Woodson wasn't offended by being a substitute for one game.

"I spent half of my career coming off the bench," Woodson said. "I have no stigma about not starting."

Buck Johnson scored 17 points for Houston and did a good job defensively on Indiana's leading scorer Chuck Person, who was held to 10 points on 3-for-11 shooting.

"Buck told me he could handle Chuck one-on-one, and he did an outstanding job," Houston coach Don Chaney said. "His defensive presence definitely got Chuck very frustrated."

"I was never in sync," Person said. "They continually ran people against me, and Buck did a good job on me."

Sleepy Floyd had 12 of his 16 assists in the second half for Houston, which defeated Indiana for the ninth straight time.

Reggie Miller led the Pacers with 24 points and Detlef Schrempf had 21.

Houston assumed the lead for good after scoring the first eight points of the third quarter to go ahead 58-51 with 10:15 left in the period.

The Rockets hit 14 of 19 shots in the third quarter and were never threatened after taking an 83-73 lead into the fourth period.

Cavaliers 92, 76ers 90

Nance's 20-point effort was his best since he scored 27 against Milwaukee on March 5. He has been hobbled since late January by the injured leg.

Philadelphia, which allowed only 17 points in the fourth period, tied the score 86-86 when Hersey

Hawkins made a short bank shot with 2:36 to play.

On the 76ers' next possession, Nance deflected a pass in the lane, and Ron Harper drove for the layup that put Cleveland ahead for good.

The victory was Cleveland's 30th in its last 31 home games, including eight straight.

Mark Price finished with 19 points and 13 assists for the Cavaliers, who trail Detroit by 2½ games for the Central Division lead. Mike Gminski and Charles Barkley scored 23 each for Philadelphia, whose loss officially gave the New York Knicks the Atlantic Division title.

Bucks 125, Nets 93

Milwaukee turned a close game into a rout by outscoring New Jersey 50-27 in a 17-minute stretch.

The Bucks, who led only 41-39 with five minutes left in the first half, used a 20-9 run for a 61-48 halftime lead, then outscored the Nets 30-18 in the third period for a 91-66 advantage.

Ricky Pierce scored 19 points, Terry Cummings 16 and Jack Sikma had 15 points and 14 rebounds for the Bucks, who moved one-half game ahead of Atlanta for the Eastern Conference's fourth playoff position, which ensures a first-round playoff series at home.

Chris Morris led New Jersey with 25 points.

Warriors 114, Heat 98

Golden State improved its record to 11-0 against the NBA's three worst teams, beating the Heat behind

Chris Mullin's 25 points and Terry Teague's 24.

The Warriors stayed unbeaten against Miami, Charlotte and the Los Angeles Clippers and moved a half-game ahead of idle Denver in the four-team scramble for the fourth playoff spot in the Western Conference. Seattle and Houston are another game back in the race to secure the final berth that carries a homecourt advantage.

The Heat, which was coming off a 108-69 defeat in Sacramento on Monday, fell behind by 22 points against the Warriors in the first quarter and never caught up. The expansion team dropped to 2-35 on the road with its ninth straight loss away from home.

Rory Sparrow had 18 points and Scott Hastings 17 for Miami.

Trail Blazers 126, Clippers 102
Portland pulled three games ahead of Dallas for the final Western Conference playoff spot as Clyde Drexler scored 24 points and Terry Porter had his second triple-double of the season.

Drexler scored 10 points in the second quarter, helping the Blazers take a 66-42 halftime lead over the Clippers. Porter finished the game with 10 points, 15 assists and 10 rebounds.

Rookie Charles Smith scored a season-high 32 points for the Clippers, and Ken Bannister, starting at center for Benoit Benjamin — who had an allergy reaction — scored 21 points.

Clinton's Fox Tabbed Prep Coach Of Year

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — The losses Karen Fox accumulated in her first year as Clinton's head coach nearly matched her age.

But that was nine years ago, and the 32-year-old Fox says basketball has changed at the Sampson County high school.

Fox also has matured as a coach, earning the 1988-89 Associated Press women's high school basketball coach of the year award in North Carolina. She received six of a possible 14 votes from a statewide panel of prep sportswriters.

Morganton Freedom's Marsha

Crump, who led her team to the 4-A title, fell short of the award by two votes, while Rick High of Asheville Reynolds received three votes and Keith Gould of D.H. Conley in Greenville one.

Fox, a former guard at Elon who played under N.C. State and U.S. Olympic coach Kay Yow as a freshman, landed the Clinton job just barely out of college at age 23.

And in less than a decade, Fox has run the gamut of coaching emotion. Her first Dark Horse team was 0-20.

"The first year was the hardest only because the kids didn't think they could win," said the former graduate assistant at Campbell.

Forestry workers survey fires that charred more than 3,000 acres of Florida's Everglades

Everglades Fires Blanket South Florida With Smoke

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MIAMI — A forecast for wind and rain held out hope for relief today from dense smoke generated by brush fires in the bone-dry Everglades that blanketed downtown Miami, including beaches and resort hotels.

Residents fled indoors Tuesday, as did surprised tourists who wondered what had happened to the famous Florida sun. Health officials warned residents to stay indoors, turn on their air conditioners and close all vents.

"I came here for sun and I got smoke — figure that out," remarked disappointed tourist Albert Smith, from Minneapolis, as he squinted into the downtown Miami haze Tuesday.

Officials of the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service evacuated hundreds of aliens from a detention center south of the city, less than a mile from one of two major blazes in Dade County.

Brush fires are common in Florida during the spring, but an unusually dry winter has spawned more of the blazes this year.

Evening sea breezes temporarily thinned the smoke cover, and scattered thundershowers appeared Tuesday evening in western Dade, where the fires caused the worst damage.

Commuters were expected to face another slow-moving morning rush hour. The smoke cut visibility Tuesday to less than a quarter of a mile on many roads in both Dade and Broward counties.

The National Weather Service said the area was expected to remain shrouded in smoke until northeast winds and rain move in today.

Forestry officials said more than 23,000 acres have burned in south Florida in recent days.

INS district director Perry Rivkind ordered 745 illegal aliens moved from the Krome Avenue Detention Center to a baseball stadium in Miami. He said the detainees could be sent to a Port Isabel, Texas, immigration camp if the smoke doesn't die down today.

Some senior citizens who woke up coughing were alarmed, hospital officials said.

"Fear becomes an integral part of the problem for us. They panic and call rescue," said Dr. John Davison.

Firefighters were battling two fires covering about 18,000 acres of dried-out sawgrass in western Dade County Tuesday night. The fires straddled Tamiami Trail, Florida's southernmost east-west cross-state road.

Two more fires, according to state Division of Forestry duty officer Margaret Hope, were still burning late Tuesday in Palm Beach County grasslands. Those fires had already burned an estimated 5,000 acres, she said.

Bush May Veto Wage Proposal

LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — The Senate endorsed a Democratic measure to raise the minimum wage Tuesday and set Congress on a collision course with the White House that could trigger the first veto of the new Bush administration.

By a 61-39 vote, largely along party lines, the Senate approved an amendment initiated by Democrats to raise the minimum wage from the current $3.35 an hour to $4.55 over three years. Final passage of the measure is expected Wednesday, but no substantive changes in the legislation were expected before the final action.

The proposal, which is virtually identical to legislation that the House has already passed, includes a sub-minimum "training wage" for inexperienced workers, the first time that such a program would be established in wage-and-hour law.

President Bush favors a broader training-wage program and a smaller increase in the minimum wage, which has not been raised since a 1978 law provided phased increases until the current minimum was reached in 1981.

The Senate rejected Bush's alternative Tuesday on a 58-41 vote. However, the vote margins show that Bush has sufficient support to prevent the Senate from mustering the necessary two-thirds majority to override a presidential veto.

Bush has held firm to his own plan and has drawn a line in the sand in his battle with Congress over the issue.

"There isn't going to be a compromise," Senate Minority Leader Robert J. Dole, R-Kan. said Tuesday.

The administration favors a total increase of 90 cents — from the current $3.35 an hour to $4.25 — by 1992, in three steps of 30 cents each. The Bush proposal would also establish a sub-minimum wage for unskilled workers of $3.35 an hour for a six-month training period. Once the full increase had been phased in in 1992, the training wage would be set at $3.40 an hour.

White House Wants Judicial Pay Raised

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — President Bush is proposing tougher ethics rules for government employees but faces criticism that he is letting Congress off easy, by not seeking to bar the speaking fees that enrich members' incomes.

Bush's package calls for a 25 percent pay raise for federal judges coupled with a ban on judicial honoraria, or speaking fees, income, said administration officials who spoke on condition of anonymity.

But Bush will not recommend any hike in the $89,500 congressional salary, nor will he call for a halt to the system that permits lawmakers to earn thousands of additional dollars in honoraria, the officials said.

Executive branch employees already are barred from accepting honoraria, and that ban would be continued under the executive order and legislative proposals Bush planned to announce today in a speech to the American Society of Newspaper Editors convention.

News of Bush's decision on the congressional honoraria question brought an accusation from Fred Wertheimer, president of the lobby group Common Cause, that Bush "caved in to pressure by members of Congress who want to keep this corrupt system going. He knows better and it appears the president doesn't have the courage of his convictions."

Common Cause supports a pay raise for Congress and opposes all honoraria on the grounds they promote excessive influence by the special interest groups that pay members of Congress for speeches.

Bush's Commission on Federal Ethics Law Reform, in its report March 10, endorsed a ban on honoraria for all three branches of government.

While turning down the congressional honoraria recommendation, Bush is accepting a commission recommendation to bar judges and members of Congress who leave the government from lobbying their former offices for one year, one source said. Executive branch employees already are subject to such a ban.

The commission was created by Bush to recommend changes in government ethics rules. It reviewed matters such as outside income, conflicts of interest, financial disclosure and post-employment lobbying.

Bush is accepting most of its recommendations, the source said.

The president is not totally discounting the honoraria issue, but intends to take it up at some future time with Congress in conjunction with the question of a congressional pay raise, the official said.

White House Press Secretary Marlin Fitzwater would not directly confirm what was in the ethics plan, but said the president believes the honoraria issue should be discussed in conjunction with congressional pay raises.

"We have always said that honoraria are a part of the pay equation and we do not intend to deal with the congressional pay raise, so it makes sense we wouldn't deal with the other part of it," Fitzwater told reporters.

Bush backed a previous pay raise proposal, but Congress itself voted against giving its members a raise this year.

Sources said that in addition to proposals that require congressional legislation, Bush will issue an executive order, requiring only his signature to become effective, to cover what executive branch employees can do.

One component will bar senior government officials from serving on the boards of profit-making enterprises, administration sources said.

The executive order also would give elevated rank to a designated ethics officer in each department, and would do away with "compartmentalization" of the various agencies of the executive branch for purposes of lobbying after working for the government.

That means that executive branch workers, currently barred for a year from lobbying their former office once they leave the government, would be under the same restriction regarding all the departments of the executive branch.

Gambling Returns To Deadwood

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

DEADWOOD, S.D. — Wild Bill Hickok was shot in the head during a poker game in Deadwood more than a century ago, but the city's voters have bet that restoring gambling will give a shot in the arm to the gold-rush town's economy.

Residents voted 690-230 Tuesday to allow poker, blackjack and slot machines, with the city's cut of the proceeds to be used to restore and preserve buildings in the historic Black Hills community of 2,000.

An amendment to the South Dakota Constitution last year provided that gambling limited to $5 bets would be permitted in Deadwood if 60 percent of the city's voters approved it.

South Dakota is the third state to allow casino gambling, joining New Jersey and Nevada.

Melodee Nelson, head of the Deadwood You Bet Committee, said legalized gambling should boost the economy, increase tourism, create jobs and help hold down property taxes.

"But let's all remember it's first and foremost a funding mechanism for historic preservation," she said. "That's what it started out as. That's what it's always been."

Supporters hope the games can begin this summer, said Bill Walsh, owner of the 85-year-old Franklin Hotel. He said the restoration of gambling is about as important as the arrival of the first train in 1890.

"It's here, and we want to all jump on the train and ride this thing for the betterment of the city of Deadwood and the state of South Dakota," he said.

About 50 supporters of the measure gathered Tuesday night in the hotel lobby, which is guarded by a bust of Hickok.

But their celebration was subdued by the outcome of the mayoral election. Mayor Tom Blair, a gambling supporter, ran into trouble in his re-election bid. Blair finished second in a three-way race, and now will face first-place finisher Bruce Oberlander in a runoff in two weeks.

Some residents quietly opposed a return to gambling on moral grounds, and argued that the games wouldn't provide that much of an economic boost.

"I don't know that I'm as disappointed as much as I'm hurt by this, when people aren't looking at moral issues here," said the Rev. Don Hadrick of the United Methodist Church in Deadwood.

Supporters think gambling will help make the area a final destination for tourists, instead of just a stop on the way to Yellowstone National Park, the Rocky Mountains or Mount Rushmore National Monument, which is about 50 miles away.

They have predicted gambling could attract at least 200,000 additional tourists a year. It also could provide $500,000 annually to further promote tourism by restoring an Old West look to the city founded when miners flooded the area after the 1876 discovery of gold in Deadwood Gulch.

Before gambling begins, a South Dakota Gaming Commission will be appointed to write regulations.

Deadwood owes much of its tourism reputation to Hickok, the U.S. marshal and frontiersman who was shot in the back of the head in 1876 during a poker game in a saloon called No. 10. Legend has it he was holding a pair each of aces and eights, known since as the "dead man's hand."

Revenue Falls

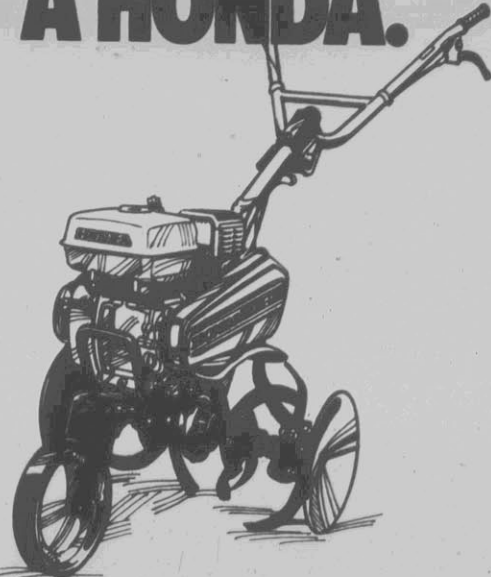

RALEIGH (AP) — The National Congressional Club, the political action committee aligned with Sen. Jesse Helms, has seen its revenue decline more in the past four years than almost any other PAC, according to a new report from the Federal Election Commission.

Still, the Congressional Club remains one of the nation's top fund-raisers, with more than $4 million collected in the last election cycle, the FEC's report said.

The FEC's report says Congressional Club revenues fell from $16.5 million in 1985-86 to $4 million in 1987-88, the largest decrease in the country. Wrenn said the figure for 1985-86 was inflated and that the real decrease was about $5 million.

Despite the decline, the club's revenues in 1987-88 ranked eighth in the nation.

East Germans Becoming Vocal Over Failure To Grant Reforms

By Girard C. Steichen
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BERLIN — East Germany's aging Communist leadership is under increasing pressure as disappointment grows over its refusal to follow Mikhail S. Gorbachev's lead on economic and political reforms.

The Soviet president has gained popularity in East Germany, particularly among young people, who often are seen wearing "I like Gorb" buttons.

Interviews and conversations across East Germany during a recent two-week period indicate that resentment is mounting and that even Communist Party officials have grown impatient and disillusioned with the government's rejection of Gorbachev-style reforms.

"The senile old men are doing everything they can to stop the flood of new ideas from Moscow," said a 22-year-old student at East Berlin's Humboldt University.

The East German leader, Erich Honecker, is 76 years old and his Politburo deputies also are in their 70s.

Many East Germans also are becoming increasingly frustrated with the government's continued hardline approach toward dissent, the gap between the economic successes reported in the state-run media and the realities of the marketplace, and severe restrictions on travel to the West.

On the Berlin-Leipzig Express one recent day, East German passengers turned away from the window as the train passed the barbed wire, gun towers and steel barriers at the Berlin Wall.

"It is simply not possible emotionally to confront this division and isolation all the time," said a 35-year-old man.

"You try not to think about it because it is an obscene symbol of your own powerlessness. But you never really succeed. It's always there in your mind even when you don't see it."

According to West German government statistics (none are made available in East Germany), at least 750,000 people have applied to leave East Germany. In a rare public demonstration, more than 600 people protested recently in Leipzig over the government's refusal to grant them exit visas.

Exit visas are especially difficult for highly trained East Germans, such as doctors, engineers and scientists.

"I speak two foreign languages and it looks like I'll never get out of the country to use them," said a 27-year-old East Berlin engineering student.

"We don't all want to leave. If they would let me travel I'd come back. This is my home."

The government has made clear it has no intention of taking the Berlin Wall down, contending it protects East Germany from "plunderers" and those aiming to disrupt "stability and peace in Europe."

"This is ridiculous, cynical cant," said another East Berlin student. "Anyone with eyes can see that the binoculars and rifles are pointed East."

The government also has banned several Soviet publications and films because of the growing public popularity of Gorbachev's reforms.

Lutheran Church bulletins advocating a dialogue with the government over reforms have been censored and security authorities have cracked down on human rights groups.

While the party's leaders continue to insist that such reforms are unnecessary, many lower-level party members, intellectuals and workers insist that Gorbachev's experiments should be tested.

Gorbachev's policies, which are known as glasnost and perestroika and call for openness and some decentralization in political and economic life, have been hailed by dissidents as the first good thing to come from the Soviet Union in decades.

"For many (in the party leadership) the changes are coming too fast," said a party official in East Berlin, speaking only on condition of anonymity.

"But many in the party ranks believe these ideas would prove useful."

Government intransigence appears to be having an effect on party membership.

Neues Deutschland, the Communist Party's newspaper, reported in January that more than 3,000 people had left or had been expelled from the party in East Berlin over the past year.

Stefan Heym, one of East Germany's best-known authors, said Gorbachev's changes in the Soviet Union appear to have caused a rift in the party's upper echelons.

"There seem to be differing views about what should be done," he said.

However, one of the party's chief ideologues, Otto Reinhold, made it clear in a recent article in the state-run media that East Germany has no plans to follow the Soviet Union and other Warsaw Pact allies with reforms any time soon.

"There are those who believe that we have to change the way the economy is led, to expand the market and to create competition," Reinhold said.

"We on the other hand, believe the best way is to build step by step on a system that has proven successful for us."

East Germany has one of the most prosperous economies in the Warsaw Pact and its citizens enjoy among the highest standards of living in the region. But the economy is slowing down, and East Germans complain of shortages.

"There's a terrific new gas oven in my kitchen but no valve to connect it to the gas lines," said a middle-aged man from Dresden. "I've been looking for this valve for four months."

Owners of some of the private business establishments permitted say strict government regulations continue to hamper enterprises that can produce many goods and services that East German consumers want and are ready to pay more for.

At a popular private nightclub in Leipzig, the restaurant's operator scanned the crowded tables and the line of people outside waiting to get in.

"We are in a daily battle with the authorities just to keep going," he said.

"The system is designed to make it as difficult as possible to prosper."

Americans Set For MIA Search

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BANGKOK, Thailand — A U.S. military team arrived in Vietnam today for the fifth joint field investigation to account for American servicemen missing from the Vietnam War, a U.S. spokesman said.

The 10 specialists flew from Bangkok to Vietnam's capital of Hanoi for the 18-day mission, which is expected to be the longest of its type since the war ended, said Ross Petzing, the spokesman of the U.S. Embassy in Bangkok.

Previous investigations were limited to about 10 days each.

The U.S. investigators, including forensic scientists, are from the U.S. Joint Casualty Resolution Center and the Army Central Identification Laboratory, both based in Honolulu. They will work with officials of Vietnam's Office For Seeking Missing Personnel.

U.S. Defense Department officials said earlier that most of the investigative work this month would focus on the area of Danang, a major port 400 miles southeast of Hanoi.

Danang is in what was South Vietnam, which the United States supported in the war the against Communist north. The Marines who splashed ashore there in March 1965 were the first American combat troops to set foot on the Asian mainland since the end of the Korean conflict.

U.S. forces withdrew in 1973 and South Vietnam fell to Communist forces in April 1975.

In the joint field missions, American and Vietnamese investigators interview villagers and inspect U.S. warplane crash sites to try to resolve "discrepancy cases" that the U.S. considers top priority.

These are cases that U.S. officials say Vietnamese authorities should have information on, including cases of airmen who survived crashes but failed to emerge from prisoner of war camps.

The U.S. Defense Department previously announced that Vietnam on April 27 would return 21 sets of remains that may be those of missing Americans.

Vietnam has returned large numbers of remains since August 1987, when it agreed to accelerate cooperation on the issue in return for Washington's help in encouraging private humanitarian aid to Vietnam.

More than 1,700 Americans are listed as missing in action in Vietnam and others are unaccounted for in Laos, Cambodia and China.

The pro-Vietnamese government in Cambodia claims to have found the remains of some of the 83 U.S. servicemen missing there, but a senior Cambodian official last week there was "no progress" in arranging their repatriation.

Wall Is Still There

BERLIN (AP) — More than 5,000 East Germans have made it safely over the Berlin Wall since it went up in 1961 and 30,058 others have fled into West Germany at other border areas, according to the August 13 group in West Berlin.

But 189 people are known to have died while attempting to flee, said Horst Schumm, deputy director of the group, which monitors human rights in East Germany.

The latest fatality at the Berlin Wall was a 22-year-old man who was shot and killed by border guards Feb. 6 as he tried make it over the top with a ladder.

Another East Berlin man was killed recently when he fell to his death from the platform of his homemade hot air balloon. On March 10, East German border troops wounded one of three men during an escape attempt.

"The economic and political situation in East Germany has deteriorated considerably and many people have no hope that things will change or get better," Schumm said. "People are becoming more desperate."

East German leader Erich Honecker, who supervised construction of the Berlin Wall after it was ordered built by Communist Party chief Walter Ulbricht in August 1961, said this past January that the wall "will still be standing in 50 years and even in 100 years if the reasons (for its existence) are not set aside."

Soviets To Close Up Space Station

LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

MOSCOW — The Soviet Union's 3-year-old orbiting space station Mir will be evacuated at the end of this month and mothballed, Soviet authorities disclosed Tuesday, amid indications that the Kremlin is sharply scaling back its ambitious space program.

The three cosmonauts aboard the space station have been ordered by the mission control center outside Moscow to begin shutting down and putting into protective wrappings the station's flight, control and scientific systems, according to the official Soviet news agency Tass.

In addition, the scheduled April 19 launch of a three-man replacement crew has been canceled, although space officials were saying as recently as a month ago that the mission would proceed as planned.

"New tasks will be found for the Mir," Radio Moscow said late Tuesday, implying in its announcement that the station would remain unmanned for some time, although it was designed and placed in orbit as the centerpiece of the Soviet-manned space program.

Plans to enlarge Mir with two new modules — one small factory for growing crystals in conditions of weightlessness and the other adding more scientific equipment to the space laboratory — have also been postponed.

The actions, so far not officially explained, may reflect the government's determination to reduce its massive budget deficit, estimated at $160 billion this year, as well as a rising popular demand that the country's space programs be cut so that more money and resources may be allocated to meeting consumer needs.

"We are tackling more problems in the Soviet Union, but it is equally true that we are not used to counting our expenses," a science commentator in the government newspaper Izvestia wrote recently. "There is actually no system yet that would enable a quick transfer of space achievements to our economy on a commercial basis."

According to U.S. space experts, the Soviet Union spends more than $30 billion a year on its combined military-civilian space program.

Another critical element, however, may be the failure of two Soviet probes launched toward Mars last July with the goal of landing on the Martian moon Phobos. The first was lost in October because of a ground controller's error, and radio contact was lost with the second in late March.

The setback has brought into the open a serious debate among Soviet scientists over what course that the space program should take, and the Soviet press has suddenly been filled with critiques of the program from half a dozen different points of view.

Insurgents Block Way To Kabul

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

KABUL, Afghanistan — The government says its troops repelled a guerrilla assault on Jalalabad, killing hundreds of attackers, and denies that insurgents have cut off land shipments to the embattled eastern city.

But guerrillas and Western diplomats in Kabul and Pakistan said the insurgents controlled major portions of the road connecting Jalalabad and Kabul and that only helicopters flying by night can make the 75-mile trip.

"The regime's army is trying desperately to open the Kabul-Jalalabad highway," the guerrillas' Afghan News Agency said Tuesday.

Also Tuesday, Pakistan agreed to allow the United Nations to set up permanent monitoring posts along its border with Afghanistan as requested by Moscow and the Marxist government in Kabul.

Foreign Ministry spokesman Mohammad Nabi Amani said government troops on Tuesday counterattacked 14,000 U.S.-backed guerrillas around Jalalabad after the insurgents bombarded the city with 18,000 shells and rockets Sunday and Monday.

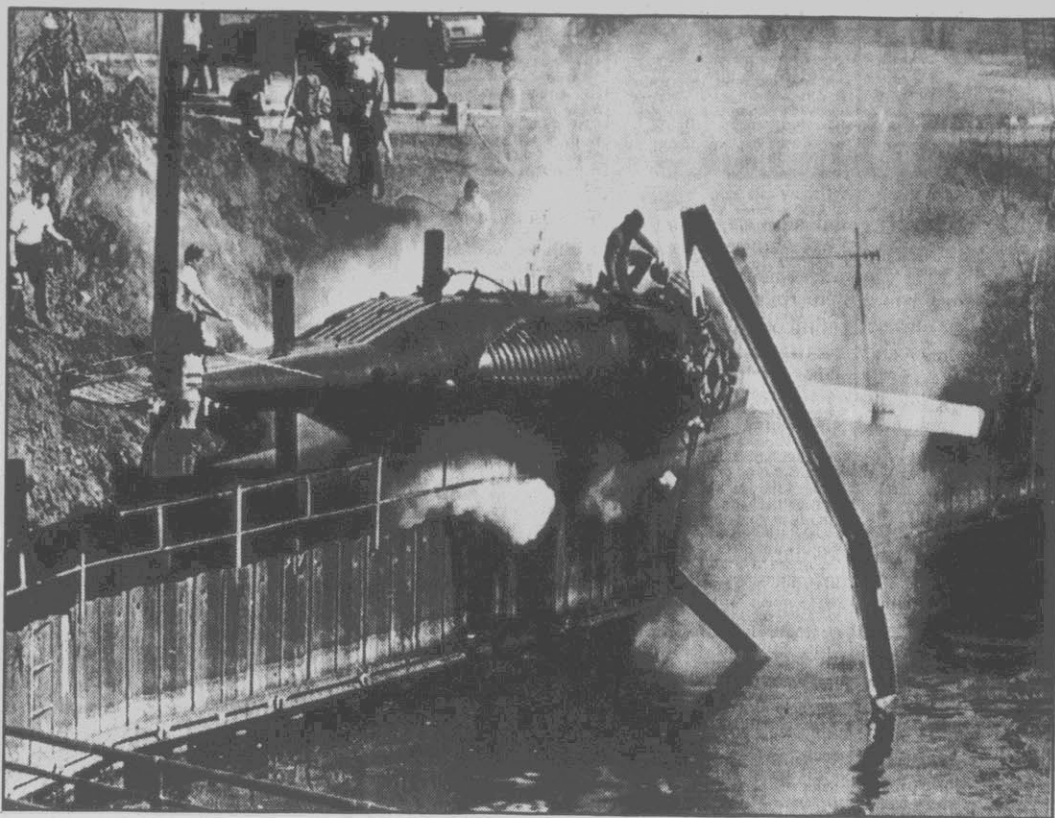

Amani said troops had killed 318 guerrillas by sundown Tuesday and lost just three government soldiers and five civilians. It was not possible to confirm the figures.

The capture of Jalalabad, 45 miles west of the border with Pakistan where the guerrillas are based, would give the insurgents an important foothold and provide their shadow government-in-exile with its first seat inside Afghanistan.

Amani maintained that military convoys were still carrying food and arms from Kabul to Jalalabad. He said the convoys were not seen leaving the capital because they travel at night. Civilians are not permitted out of their houses during a curfew starting 11 p.m. and ending 4 a.m.

Western diplomats in the Pakistani capital of Islamabad said Afghan government forces were holding the city and its airport, but guerrilla rockets and artillery make it too dangerous for fixed-wing aircraft.

"The only means of resupply remaining to regime forces is by helicopter, although such flights are increasingly being interdicted by the resistance, even though most of them take place at night," said one diplomat on condition of anonymity.

Soviet Georgians Mostly Quiet As Sporadic Strikes Continue

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOSCOW — Sporadic strikes persisted today as soldiers complained of harassment but residents said tensions had cooled in Tbilisi, scene of a bloody clash between Red Army troops and Georgian nationalist protesters.

The official Communist Party newspaper Pravda said today that the mood remained "extremely tense" in the Georgian capital and several other cities in the southern republic.

The situation is "more or less quiet now," said a church employee in Tbilisi who asked not to be identified. "They've promised to lift the curfew if people behave."

Pravda put the number of police and troops injured in Sunday's melee between Soviet troops and pro-independence demonstrators at 91. Previously, officials had said 75 soldiers and police were hurt.

No reason was given for the change.

The military newspaper Red Star said army political officers have been dropping leaflets onto the city from helicopters. It indicated the leaflets were part of an official campaign to counter public anger against the military.

Officials said 18 civilians died Sunday.

The head doctor at the Central Republican Hospital in Tbilisi, Jor Benadze, said in a telephone interview today a report that a 32-year-old man injured in the clash had died was incorrect. That report came from David Lazarishvili, an anesthesiologist at the hospital.

Red Star said youths were harassing Soviet soldiers, and "there are attempts under way to organize provocations against soldiers."

The newspaper said a major had been pelted with stones and a lieutenant colonel had been hit in the head by a bottle thrown from a window.

"We run into people, mainly youth, who yell humiliating things at us and then run away," the newspaper quoted a sergeant named O. Parkhun as saying.

Soviet media said strikers have been trying to prevent other Georgians from working, including bus drivers and factory workers.

Mexico Signs $3.6 Billion Debt Plan

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MEXICO CITY — Mexico has signed a $3.65 billion three-year loan agreement with the International Monetary Fund to bolster the country's foreign exchange reserves and help spur domestic economic growth.

The accord breaks from previous IMF practice by mandating no new austerity measures, said Treasury Secretary Pedro Aspe.

Mexico, struggling to overcome the burden of payments to commercial banks and governments on its $107 billion foreign debt, is the developing world's second-largest debtor. Only Brazil owes more — $121 billion.

Tuesday's agreement is the first from the international lending community since U.S. Treasury Secretary Nicholas Brady outlined a debt-reduction plan on March 10 that he hoped would help ease payment terms on the developing world's $1.32 trillion foreign debt.

As interest rates have risen worldwide since last year, the higher rates have created additional problems for countries struggling to meet the terms of payments to foreign creditors. Some debtor nations threaten default unless they can arrive at more favorable terms with lenders.

Austerity measures imposed by the Venezuelan government at the behest of international lending organizations prompted riots last month in Caracas that led to the deaths of more than 300 people.

Aspe said Tuesday that his country's agreement intends to reverse Mexico's net outflow of funds and provide investment money to spur economic growth, which was nil last year.

By stipulating that the IMF recognizes Mexico's need to set its growth priorities first and schedule debt servicing accordingly, Aspe said the agreement "is a fundamental change from the past."

"The agreement reached with the IMF constitutes a plain endorsement of the economic strategy of Mexico," he said.

That means the IMF will not require further devaluations of the Mexican peso, as has been called for in previous agreements in an effort to stimulate exports.

Experts Say Elderly Should Enjoy Exercise

By David Larsen
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

LOS ANGELES — Many seniors still hesitate to join the fitness craze in America, but what with the increasing graying of the nation, attention is turning more and more to the issue of what extent older people should participate in exercise.

Surveys, according to the President's Council on Physical Fitness and Sports, show that only about one-third of American adults age 65 and older exercise regularly.

That is unfortunate, health experts say.

"The four most common chronic conditions among adults age 65 and older are arthritis, hypertension, hearing impairments and heart disease," said a spokesman for the Council. "All but hearing impairment can be positively influenced by appropriate exercise."

But those seniors who have tried intensive exercise seem to have caught the bug. Two years at the first Senior Olympics, about 3,000 people showed up from 38 states to compete in swimming, archery, volleyball and other events. A spokesman for the Senior Olympics expects 4,000 to show up this year.

Who better to proclaim the exercise gospel than an elderly person himself, 78-year-old Dr. John H. Williams of Valdese, N.C., a former health educator who continues to practice what he preaches.

Five days a week he drives 50 miles round-trip just to swim at the YMCA in Conover — about 600 yards daily at present — in preparation for the swimming events at the coming Senior Olympics.

"Swimming is ideal exercise for seniors," Williams said by phone. "There is no pressure on the bones, joints and tendons. An older person can harm those things, especially by pounding them on the pavement while running or jogging."

"But the buoyancy of water means you can get an aerobic workout without putting any stress on the joints."

Another oldster who believes in the value of swimming is 66-year-old Doris Peters of Imperial, Mo., also a participant in the inaugural Senior Olympics.

"There is something about the water that is very relaxing," she said by phone. "If you run, you may finish exhausted. But if you swim, you finish refreshed. I feel like I'm a 66-year-old in the body of an 18-year-old."

Bob Wiswell, an associate professor of exercise science at the University of Southern California, touts the idea of seniors devoting part of their leisure time to exercise.

—For cardiovascular endurance.
—For maintenance of muscular strength.

—For mobility and flexibility.
—To keep body fat down.

The important thing for the older folks is that they don't have to reach exhaustion to benefit from exercise, Wiswell explained. "The younger get 70 percent to 85 percent of maximum heartbeat output, the older can get the same benefit from 35 percent to 45 percent."

Wiswell mentioned Harry Truman's favorite exercise, walking, as something most seniors can do. "Walking a mile will burn off 100 calories."

"Such people might also consider lawn mowing, riding either a stationary or moving bike, swimming, deck shuffleboard, lawn bowling, badminton, folk dancing — something other than just sitting," he said.

Those looking for statistical evidence should consider the remarks of Dr. Everett L. Smith, director of the biogerontology lab at the University of Wisconsin:

"Currently, the average individual loses functional capacity at the rate of 0.75 percent to 1 percent a year after the age of 30. ... In my opinion, about 50 percent of the average aging decline is self-induced by life style, and the other 50 percent is due to the genes or the makeup of the individual biological system."

Walking, according to gerontologists, is by far the most popular exercise activity for people 65 and older.

Jean and Donald Cotner of San Juan Capistrano do their daily walking at Dana Point Harbor in Southern California. By now they are used to the wisecracks: "Is somebody chasing you?"

The 65-year-old wife and the 66-year-old husband are both rapid-walking buffs. So good have they become in their few months at it that they have won prizes in three competitions, and will strive in the coming national Senior Olympics — in the 5-K race walking event.

"It sort of started by accident," Donald Cotner said. "I had taken up running at age 63, and was competing in events for seniors. Two years ago we went to Melbourne (Australia) where I was entered for an event."

"I came down with the flu. Had gone all that way, and didn't even get to participate in the parade. I was so disappointed I decided the heck with run competition."

When the Cotners returned home, they did a little recreational walking at Dana Point, and in due time they noticed something: They seemed to be walking faster than most of the other pedestrians.

Which led to race walking. "It's great for the cardiovascular system," Jean Cotner said. "Gets your pulse up, and keeps your body moving."

"I still like swimming and bicycling, but walking can be done anywhere."

Additionally, as she has for 21 years, Jean Cotner teaches yoga classes. "Some of my students are seniors. It's a safe way to keep the body flexible and in tune."

As for the couple's fast walking, they do about four miles together daily, four days a week.

The senior circuit.

Habitat For Humanity ECU Students Build For Others In Durham

By Carol Tyer
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Spring break gave nine East Carolina University students a chance to build for their fellow man, cope with mud and ice and have fun all at the same time.

The nine, all participants in the ministry of Immanuel Baptist Church, were in Durham for seven days working in the Durham Habitat for Humanity project.

Habitat, a non-denominational program, enables those who wish to give volunteer time and materials to provide homes for people who could not otherwise afford them. Recipients pay the program for the homes through no-interest loans, and they are required to volunteer time in Habitat.

Durham's program is one of 54 in North Carolina.

ECU students participating were Paul Vanderhoeven of Asheville; Jonathan Sitton of Hendersonville; Melinda Walker of Elizabethtown, Pa.; David McCreary of Greenville; Lori Buchanan of Short Hills, N.J.; Lori McLellan of Williamston; Curtis Hollowell of Goldsboro; Tiffany Campbell of Landis, and Billy Sharp of Wilson. They were accompanied by Sylvia McCreary, the church's minister of music and college program director, and Frank LaMaster, the church's minister of education.

In some ways, this year's project was a follow-up to last year's spring vacation trip. Then, five of the nine students traveled to Atlanta to see first-hand the lives of homeless people. The trip was billed as a singing tour of women's centers, corrections centers, homeless shelters, soup kitchens and other places where the down-and-out congregate.

But the students also did volunteer work to meet physical and emotional needs of newly made friends. They served soup at the soup kitchen and played games with youngsters at the women's center.

"That trip really opened my eyes to just how much need there is out there," said Paul Vanderhoeven. "I saw the effects of people's being homeless. So I was really eager to do what I could this year to help build some homes for people who wouldn't otherwise own their own homes."

This year's crew arrived in Durham on a Saturday. They spent every day following except Sunday and Wednesday working at the Kingston Mill Habitat site.

On the site were four houses in the finishing stages of construction. On Sunday they visited Duke Chapel on the Duke University campus for services and on Wednesday, they stayed in all day because the streets were so icy it wasn't considered safe for them to go to work.

Otherwise, they worked under the supervision of Steve McDevitt, Habitat's only full-time employee. He serves as a construction supervisor who must constantly work with novices.

"There was only one person in our group who had any experience at all with construction work," Vanderhoeven said. "We were amazed at all the things we learned we could do with just a little bit of gentle instruction from Steve."

Mrs. McCreary agreed. "He was a wonderful teacher. He never lost his patience, always seemed to know how to get the most meticulous work out of every person there."

Pippi's Creator Has Freed The Pigs And Chickens

By Martha Sherrill
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — Tucked away in the library at the Swedish ambassador's house — a Spanish stucco number with the sun beating down on it — is 82-year-old children's-book author Astrid Lindgren. She's thin and sitting still.

She looks a little helpless, until she lunges. Her face looms only 6 inches away. She grinds her teeth. "I hate cartoons," she says.

That's Lindgren. Age hasn't dulled her tongue, or her mind. The creator of Pippi Longstocking, one of the most beloved characters in children's books, has been writing screenplays of her tales but don't ask her if the films are animated. Many other subjects — animals, say, or politicians, or taxes — will also get her lunging.

"The chickens are not all free," she says. "And the pigs are not happy yet. They were supposed to have one place to eat. One place to sleep. One place to ... But they are still living in boxes."

She hasn't only been writing screenplays. Lindgren's been making Sweden a better place for beasts. A barnyard Shangri-La. She was in Washington to pick up an Albert Schweitzer Award — given to her by the Animal Welfare Fund in mid-March — for her victories on behalf of farm animals.

LAT-WP News Service

Age has not dulled the tongue of Astrid Lindgren, now 82

After badgering Sweden's politicians with caustic newspaper editorials for three years, Lindgren nearly single-handedly pushed through a law last July that gives cows, pigs and chickens the right to live "naturally."

Ingvar Carlsson, Sweden's prime minister, has nicknamed the law "Lex Astrid."

Swedish cattle — if the law is interpreted the way Lindgren sees it — will get new grazing rights. Cows and pigs will have constant access to straw and litter. Chickens will all be free-range. And like other farm animals in Sweden, they won't be given drugs and hormones — except in the treatment of disease.

They'll die a little easier, too. "Invite the politicians to visit a few slaughterhouses," Lindgren wrote in a letter to Sven Tidala, the president of the Farmers' Meat Marketing Association.

It was published in Expressen, the largest-circulation evening paper in Sweden. "Tell them what happens sometimes in the slaughterhouse — because everything happens at such a disgusting pace."

"You know, like when the pig is sedated and stuck and bled, and thrown into the scalding caldron, and maybe didn't manage to be sufficiently bled, so it regains consciousness in the scalding hot water and swims around, terrified, until it drowns."

She doesn't mince words, something she's got in common with Pippi, whose manic antics have been translated into 50 languages.

Pippi is a 9-year-old girl with red braids that stick straight out from her head. She lives alone. She has tons of gold coins stashed in her kitchen. She wears weird clothes, has a pet monkey and refuses to go to school.

Pippi can lift a horse with one hand, and she tells everyone her mother is an angel in heaven. She says her father is a cannibal king. She sleeps with her feet on the pillow and her head stuffed under the sheets. And when Pippi makes cookies, she rolls the dough out on the floor.

She's a total delinquent. Kids love her.

"Bertrand Russell said that every child has dreams of power — just as adults have sexual-wish dreams," says Lindgren. "And when I read that, I thought, That's why Pippi's so popular. She has plenty of money. She has no mother or father — which she's very happy about. But she never misuses power."

"She could be a good politician," says Swedish Embassy press counselor Lars Romert, who's sitting by to help with English, though Lindgren rarely needs help.

"Yes, maybe she could be a politician," she says.

"But Pippi has such a lying problem," someone else suggests.

A big nod from Lindgren. So much the better.

In Sweden at the same time Lindgren was getting her award, the board of agriculture was getting around to interpreting "Lex Astrid." She says the board is "reactionary" and doesn't think it will go along with all her Shangri-La ideas. (She left Washington March 19, "returning to Sweden to hear what idiot things they have achieved.")

Christine Stevens, the president of the Animal Welfare Institute, says she chose Lindgren for this year's award after reading a newspaper article about her involvement with the new law.

"We knew that Sweden was advanced in working on better conditions for animals, and we hadn't realized what an enormous part Astrid had played in this," says Stevens.

It's called the Albert Schweitzer Award, she says, "because of his philosophy of reverence for life." Rachel Carson, Hubert Humphrey, Jane Goodall and Sen. Robert Dole, R-Kan., are among those who have received it. A quote of Schweitzer's is inscribed on the medal: "We need a boundless ethics which will include the animals also."

"We wrote to him," says Stevens, who founded the institute in 1952, "and we were delighted when he wrote a letter back. He said he never expected to have his philosophy recognized in his lifetime. ... It came to him — his philosophy — one day when he was in a small boat on an African river, and all of a sudden a crowd of hippopotamuses rose up out of the water, and at that moment his thoughts about reverence for life crystallized."

Pippi crystallized in 1945. Lindgren, then 37, came to write the story for her daughter Karin, who was in bed recuperating from pneumonia. Karin turned to her mother one night — maybe in a feverish state — and said, "Tell me about Pippi Longstocking." Lindgren had no clue what her daughter was talking about. "It was a crazy name," she says. "And so it had to be a crazy story."

Many sequels followed. Lindgren worked at a children's-book publishing house all along — for 23 years. "I wrote my books in bed, very early in the morning, in shorthand," she says. "After two hours I got up, put on my clothes and walked to the publishing house and edited other people's books."

Mom Should Give Sloppy Son A Clean Ultimatum

Dear Abby: After reading the letter from "Wife of a Slob," I had to write. My son makes this guy sound like "Mr. Clean!"

He layers his pile of clothing with dishes (with the food still on them) plus orange peelings, apple cores, egg shells, etc. Our house smells like a compost pile. This is not just confined to our home. His employer had to demand that he clean the food and garbage out of the company vehicle.

Instead of putting garbage in the garbage container, he throws it downstairs or under the cupboards. He never vacuums his room or changes his sheets. He has absolutely no regard for our furniture — he thinks nothing of using my good crystal glasses (when all the other glasses are dirty in his room). These good glasses join the others — full of mold, under his bed or wherever he leaves them. This has been going on for 10 years. When I ask him to please clean his room, he becomes belligerent and doesn't speak to me for days.

I have just told him, for the 100th time, that he must clean his room or move. Abby, he is 26 years old and is impeccable about his personal hygiene and his appearance.

I cannot help but believe that this is an illness. I find it hard to believe that anyone could be this gross (by choice) without a deep psychological reason. I consulted a psychiatrist some years ago. He said my son would outgrow this.

Please help me, Abby. I know you often consult professionals. If one can help, I will be forever grateful. I don't mind paying for help, if only I knew where to look.

I love my son very much, and I know when he gets married, you'll be getting another letter from "Wife of a Slob" — but this time, it will be my slob. Please don't print my name. Sign this ... Mother Of A Slob

Dear Mother: At first, I soliloquized: "Tell this tormented mother to find a psychiatrist with two couches — one for her son, and one for herself for putting up with him for so long. He didn't turn into a super-slob overnight. Why didn't she nip this gross, slovenly behavior in the bud before it reached the point where her lovely home smelled like a compost pile?"

Then I further soliloquized: "Telling her what she should have done won't help her. What should she do now?" And here's the answer:

You can't change anyone but yourself. Give your son an ultimatum: "Clean up your act within 24 hours, or you will find your clothes packed and on the porch because you can no longer live like a pig under this roof."

Then make good your threat — if you have to change the locks on your door.

Tough? You bet. The ball is now in your court, Mother. Please write again and let me know of your decision. I wish you well.

Dear Abby: In a recent letter to you signed "Wife of a Slob," she wrote, "There is a pile of his clothes a foot high on our bedroom floor." Then she wrote, "It's been there for two months." Abby, who's the slob? She asked you, "What should I do?" You should have replied, "Pick up the clothes!"

I am a househusband (retired), have been married for 40 years, and have lovingly picked up after my wife most of those years and was glad to do it.

This reminds me of the story of two young men who met and one said, "I hear you're getting married." The other said, "Yes, I'm tired of no clean underwear, no clean shirts, dirty dishes in the sink and a messy apartment."

"Oh," said the first man, "that's why I'm getting divorced." — Wes In Chattanooga

If you would like to write to Abby, send your letter to Abigail Van Buren, P.O. Box 69440, Los Angeles, CA. 90069. For a personal, non-published reply, enclose a self-addressed stamped envelope.

Dramatic Pillows Easy, Exciting

These dramatic Bargello needlepoint pillows will bring excitement to your home whatever your decorating scheme. Three shades of color add a delightful touch of class to the square pillow, done in a modified shell pattern, and to the round one, with its "starburst" look.

With either pillow — even the circular one — the work involves long, straight stitches, each covering seven holes. Worst-weight yarn is used on 12-mesh canvas. It's a great project, quick and easy — even for a beginner!

To obtain your directions for making the Dramatic Accent Pillows, send your request for Leaflet No. Z-040989 with $2 and a long, self-addresses envelope to: Pat Trexler Crafts, The Daily Reflector, P.O. Box 419148, Kansas City, Mo. 64141.

Pat's Pointers

By PAT TREXLER

Or you may order your kit No. N-040989 by sending a check or money order for $13.95 to Pat Trexler Crafts at the same address. The kit price includes shipping charges, full instructions, canvas and yarn in your choice of the following colors: a combination of green and peach, shades of antique rose, or shades of blue.

Although Bargello needlepoint (also known as Florentine embroidery) often gives the effect of peaks and/or curves, it is worked with perfectly straight stitches that extend over several canvas holes and threads.

A graph chart is used for working Bargello stitchery. Each line of the chart equals one canvas thread and each blank square represents one canvas hole.

There are two ways to count the span to be covered. You can count either the thread or holes, whichever you find easier. If your written instructions tell you how many threads are covered with each stitch and you prefer to count holes, just remember that the number of threads involved will be more than the number of holes covered. For example, if each stitch is to cover eight threads, that same stitch will cover seven holes. This does not count the holes in which the needle goes up or down.

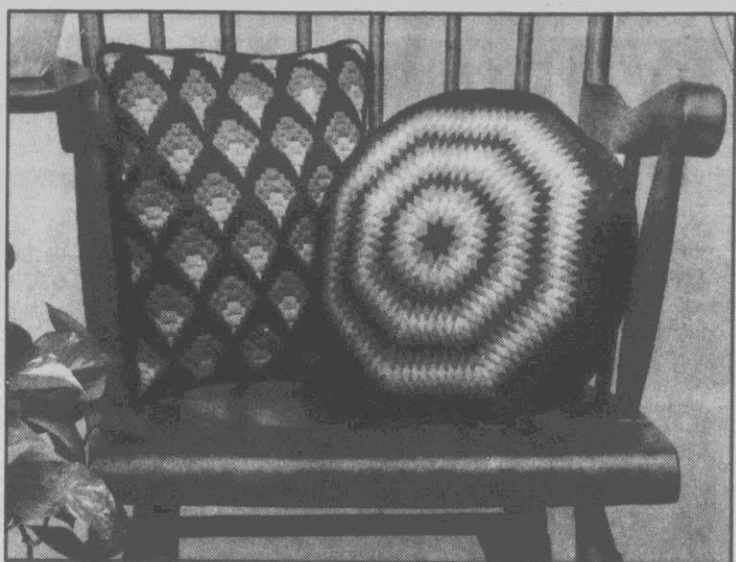

You will start by bringing your needle up from the wrong side to the right side of your work at either the top or bottom of the stitch. Then you count off the correct number of threads or holes above or below and pass your needle down through the next hole.

The next stitch to the right or left may be a duplicate of the first and will be started one hole to the side at the same level where the first stitch was started. Or it may start above or below that point.

When the line of your stitches is ascending (moving upward), work from the top to the bottom of the stitches. When the line is descending, work from the bottom to the top. This pads the back of your work nicely. This padding will keep your needlepoint looking smooth and beautiful for a much longer period of time.

If you work in the opposite way — working ascending stitches from bottom to top and descending stitches from top to bottom — you will use less yarn, but you will see gaps on the back between each stitch. On the other hand, if you work all stitches in the same direction (either all from the top or all from the bottom) you will see that half of the stitches are padded on the back and the other half are not. It may not become immediately apparent, but after just a little wear, your work will appear uneven.

To try out the technique of padding all stitches, practice on a scrap of canvas with any Bargello chart you happen to have on hand. Try working a row of a dozen or so stitches in each of the three ways described and you will immediately see the difference on the wrong side of your work.

The Arts And Crafts Furniture Of 1920s Is Returning To Favor

By Barbara Mayer
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

When it went out of fashion in the 1920s, bulky "arts and crafts" furniture of quarter-sawn oak was relegated to the attic.

Now it is coming out of the attic and showing up in antique stores and auction houses.

At the April furniture market in North Carolina, arts and crafts furniture takes another step to mainstream popularity. Reproductions of Gustav and Leopold Stickley's arts and crafts originals are being introduced by Alfred Audi, who owns the Stickley company. The 30-piece collection should reach retail stores by fall.

"Interest in the period is so keen that we decided the timing is perfect," says Audi, who bought the company in Manlius, N.Y., from Stickley's widow in 1974.

Audi says a dining chair reproduction will be $900, compared with $23,000 recently paid for an original. "We will sell a china cabinet for $4,600; an original went for about $18,000," he says.

Other pieces include a bed, a grandfather clock, dining and occasional tables, a settee and a Morris chair. All will be available in a dark finish typical of Gustav's early pieces and a lighter finish favored later by Leopold and Gustav.

A record price of $363,000 for a piece of arts and crafts furniture was paid at Christie's in New York last December when Barbra Streisand topped the bidding for a hotly contested sideboard designed by Gustav Stickley.

Previous record prices were in the $85,000 range, and Christie's presale estimate for the sideboard was $70,000 to $90,000.

Nancy A. McClelland, vice president of 19th- and 20th-century decorative arts for Christie's, says Stickley has been one of the hottest names in American furniture for at least five years, and the full range of decorative arts of the period is popular among the country's well-heeled collectors. Christie's is among several auction houses with regular sales in the category.

Beth Cathers, co-author of "Treasures of The American Arts and Crafts Movement," says there are several reasons for interest in the style: It is coming of age because it's almost 100 years old, and it still costs far less than top-level pieces of comparable quality from earlier periods.

"People can enjoy collecting at a high level for prices that are relatively reasonable compared to other top quality material," she says.

Another reason for its popularity, Cathers believes, is because the designs are more appealing to a modern sensibility than the ornate pieces of the late Victorian period.

There were five Stickley brothers, all in the furniture business over the years either on their own or with various family members. According to McClelland, furniture bearing the L. & J.G. Stickley or Gustav Stickley name is by far the most collectible.

"On the whole, most people would prefer Gustav," she says. "The most interesting period for L. & J.G. was from 1908 to 1920. For Gustav Stickley, the greatest emphasis is on work from 1900 to 1905."

Gustav's role as the most influential person in the American arts and crafts movement and as originator of the Craftsman magazine makes his the more important name.

Students Work On Habitat Project

In addition to the volunteers like the ECU students — who were there possibly one time only — there are workers from such closely located groups as the Duke University Habitat for Humanity club who work at the site on a regular basis.

And there are the homeowners, those who live in Habitat houses, volunteering at least 300 hours of work time, usually on weekends.

"It was great," Vanderhoeven said, "working right along with members of the families who either already live in Habitat houses or who will live in the ones we were constructing."

Greenville may be in the beginning stages of developing a Habitat for Humanity program. An advisory committee to Mayor Ed Carter has begun studying the possibility.

Janice Faulkner, who heads the committee, said, the local effort is very preliminary. "We are gathering information on Habitat projects from other cities," she said. "And we are seeking to find out how many people there are here with sufficient commitment to make a local project successful."

To help with the development of a local project, contact Ms. Faulkner at the Regional Development Institute 757-6650; Dr. Steve Creech at the Pitt County Mental Health Center, 752-7151; or Carl Fisher at the South Roanoke Baptist Association office, 756-4332.

Creech is a member of a committee of Jarvis United Methodist Church looking at Habitat possibilities. Fisher serves on the South Roanoke Association's church and community ministries committee. That panel hopes to channel the efforts of several counties' Southern Baptist Church members into this project when it is developed.

Author Working For Animal Rights

Lindgren got a little sick of Pippi after a while. She moved on to other wild tales — the "Emil" books, the "Karlsson-on-the-Roof" series — nearly 40 books in all, 10 of which have become children's movies in Sweden.

"You can't go on with the same character," she says. "Pippi has had her life. She still exists for children, but not for me. For me, she's not there anymore."

Character development was a problem — Pippi had supposedly taken a pill so she wouldn't grow up. "She didn't want to get old," Lindgren explains. "She didn't want to pay taxes and get corns."

This gets a big laugh from other Swedes in the library. It gets a big laugh because Lindgren's other major gripe — besides chicken cages and pig boxes — is taxes.

In fact, taxes are what got her going in the political barnyard. In 1976, when Sweden's tax laws were revised — and deductions were no longer allowed — Lindgren claimed she was being asked to pay 102 percent of her income to the government.

She called the fiscal office. "I told them I had decided to go out on the street and beg — so I could raise the money for a crowbar. And I told them they had better increase the guards around their safe," she says. "If you can steal," she told them, "then I can too."

Will The Real Chevy Chase Please Stand Up?

By Bob Thomas
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — Chevy Chase lives, and so does Fletch, the ham-handed investigative journalist with a talent for assuming a wide variety of disguises.

The pair can be seen in the new Universal Picture "Fletch Lives," in which the Los Angeles reporter invades the Deep South. The ham-hocks-and-turnip-greens depiction of Southerners may well stir up more indignation than "Mississippi Burning."

While Fletch may assume many identities, Chase's image has remained the same since he emerged in "Saturday Night Live": the clumsy know-it-all who bumbles into situations over his head.

The comedian has this to say about Fletch: "I guess he's daring. Stupidly so, but he's daring. And he has values, morals, he cares about people, he cares for his safety, that's clear. He doesn't like to pass up on a story. He's an investigative reporter. He tends to want to follow up. I'm looking for some depth in him, and I don't see it in that character. He's a shallow fellow."

"The part I had the most fun with is the part that is like me. It's the part of Fletch that is not in costume, not in wig and makeup. I enjoy inventing a lot of 'sttick,' like pinching my boss in the office and blaming it on the next guy. All of that comes easy to me; it's the kind of stuff I wing. It's basically the kind of thing everybody wishes they could do, a little bit of the wiseguy stuff."

"The danger of doing this character is that ... it looks like that's who Chevy Chase is, and we don't like him. I'm not that way in real life."

Indeed, there seems to be a degree of maturity in Chevy Chase at age 45. No more the brash prankster whose wisecracks could be hurtful. Marriage, fatherhood and a session at the Betty Ford Clinic to kick painkillers for a back injury seem to have mellowed him.

Of his current life, Chase complains mildly: "It's too ordered. It's too busy. I have three children and one wife, and that's really my life. My business works around this, because (the business) could all go anyday, you never know.

"I have a feeling it won't go, and I'll be around a long time. But it doesn't matter as much as my home life. That's an iconoclastic thing to say, and I think all actors will say that, just to look good. In fact, it's a reality. I'm very much a homebody, and I'm very close to my family."

He was born Cornelius Crane Chase in New York City, but soon the family called him Chevy, perhaps after the Maryland suburb. A cutup at the prep schools he attended, he moved naturally into comedy after graduating from Bard College. He wrote and appeared in satirical revues, composed comedy stuff for Mad Magazine and wrote for "The National Lampoon Radio Hour."

After writing material for the Smothers Brothers and Alan King, Chase signed on with a new television show, "Saturday Night Live."

"I was hired to write, not perform," Chase said. "It was a kind of lucky thing that Lorne (Michaels, the producer) said, 'I think you ought to try doing the newsman. And incidentally, since you do those funny falls, why don't you open the show with one?'"

"So basically I had two things to do: fall down and say, 'Live From New York, it's Saturday Night,' and write my news update. And that was the beginning of something that became a career in acting."

In films Chase has had his hits ("Caddyshack," "National Lampoon's Vacation," "Fletch") and misses ("Modern Problems," "Deal of the Century," "Oh Heavenly Dog") as well as in-betweeners ("Spies Like Us," "Three Amigos").

Fortunately, he observed, the flops have not been reflected in his salary.

"It's just gone up and up and up," he said. "I've never taken a drop; in fact, it's gone up after every picture, bomb or not. Something is working in terms of the business."

"Emotionally, it's always nerve-racking to open a movie and sense that you are going to get bad criticism and hope that the audience will like it and not read the reviews. It's almost like an identity check, a mark of where you stand in society."

'Dream Street:' Twentysomething?

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

UNION CITY, N.J. — Mark Rosner sinks into a corner to talk about "Dream Street," the series he is writing and directing for NBC. It premieres Thursday in a 90-minute special before moving to its regular hour-long time period on Fridays.

From the first twang of the guitar on "After Midnight" and the best opening credits since "Miami Vice," it's clear this is a different kind of television series.

Already dubbed variously "dirtysomething" or "twentysomething," a comparison with the hit ABC series "thirtysomething" that comes from the same executive producers, Ed Zwick and Marshall Herskovitz, "Dream Street" is a no-holds-barred tale of 20s, when young people are hit with the realities of adulthood.

Dale Midkiff ("Elvis and Me") stars as Denis Debeau, who takes over the family refrigeration business after his father has a stroke, bypassing his anguished failure of an older brother, Harry (Peter Frechette). Thomas Calabro plays Denis' best friend, Joey Coltrera, who is joining his father's business, too — organized crime.

Rosner offers his own catch-phrase for the show.

"I started calling it 'rock 'n' roll television,' because I don't want people to call it like 'blue-collar' television. To me that sounds like real '50s, kitchen-sink, good-for-you television, and that's not it," he said. "The fact that the characters are working-class is the context in which the stories take place. To me, what it's really about is being in your 20s and trying to be a grownup for the first time, really.

"To me all the great rock 'n' roll is about that stuff. ... And also just because it moves real fast and it looks real hot and the energy is real high on this show, that handle seems to make sense to me."

PBS Finds Some Magic In The 'Serengeti Diary'

By Michael Hill
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

Serengeti. The word itself dances off the tongue as if precisely choreographed to scan properly for a piece of mystical poetry. Serengeti. It is a name appropriate for the magical place in Tanzania where abundant wildlife creates a vision of a world long ago and far away.

"Serengeti Diary" is the title of the new National Geographic Special to be shown on PBS tonight.

Recent National Geographic shows have been earnest and informative, but a bit lacking in imagination. "Serengeti Diary" is a cut above precisely because, even as it informs with solid journalism, it shows a respect for the mystical appeal of its subject.

This region of Tanzania is approached from three different directions — through the eyes of Dutch wildlife photographer Hugo van Lawick, through the story of some of the basic research on the Serengeti, done by a German team from the Frankfurt Zoo, and what its continuing stream of data means to the area's management, and through the experiences of Teplit Ole Saitoti, a member of the Masai tribe which lives in the Serengeti who has found success in the big city but often returns to his native village.

Van Lawick, who works with both still and film cameras, first came to the Serengeti more than three decades ago. In the special, he relates that someone suggested to him recently that maybe after 30 years he had gotten everything he could out of the area. "I've barely scratched the surface," he replied.

He was originally drawn by little more than a rather unformed desire to photograph wildlife. In 1962, he filmed a documentary on famed chimpanzee researcher Jane Goodall, and National Geographic digs a few minutes of that film out of its archives for this program. Van Lawick and Goodall married not long after and, though they divorced in 1974, their son spends much of his time with each of them in the Serengeti. In Wednesday night's hour, he is shown accompanying his

Van Lawick has the combination of an artist's eye and a naturalist's patience. The result is stunning footage and photographs that often reveal previously unknown aspects of animal behavior. Looking at his work, even as you realize its depth, you see that he has indeed only scratched the surface.

The Frankfurt Zoo researchers are also shown in quarter-century old National Geographic footage as they drove alongside a zebra and grabbed it by its tail so it could be fitted with an identification harness to allow tracking of migratory patterns.

But "Serengeti Diary" also shows that it is possible for humans to exist in relative harmony with their surroundings as it follows Teplit Ole Saitoti on a journey from his life in a large Tanzanian city back to his Masai village to undergo the ceremony that will make him a senior elder of his tribe.

Opening lead: Five of ♠
When a skilled player makes an unusual play you can assume there is a good reason for it. If you can work out why something strange occurred, the cure can become obvious.

At any vulnerability, especially favorable, East would have been better advised to raise his partner's weak two-bid all the way to game as a two-way action—it might make, or it could jack up the auction to a level where the opponents could not interfere.

West's opening lead of a low spade was taken by declarer's ace, and a club hit the table. That was a peculiar play with five clubs in the dummy, since it risked for an adverse ruff. West asked himself: Why didn't declarer draw trumps before playing on clubs? There was only one answer: Declarer had to have a hole in the trump suit.

That meant declarer had to have started with a singleton ace of spades. The club lead, therefore, had to be an attempt to get to the table for a discard on the king of spades, to be followed by a trump finesse. To prevent that desperate measures were called for, and West was up to the task. He rose with the ace of clubs and boldly shifted to the king of diamonds. A diamond to the ten, followed by the ace, cooked declarer's goose.

He was able to prevent an over-ruff by trumping with an honor, but West countered by discarding his remaining club. Declarer had no way to get to the board for the trump finesse, so he had to concede a trick to the king of hearts for down one.

Signs Of Spring

By Kelly Hardy

Baby animals being born.
Flowers popping up.
Dandelions vanishing under our bare feet.
Vegetables on the plants, soon ready to eat.
Lets me know spring is here.

Buzzing bees.
Swarming gnats.
Little fish swimming under the algae.
Croaking bullfrogs on a warm spring night.
Lets me know that spring is here.

Turtles slide.
Snakes appear.
Green grass grows down by the pond.
New leaf buds forming on the trees.
Lets me know spring is here.

Kelly Hardy, 11, a student at Wahl-Coates School wins this week's writing contest.

Cold Night, Cold Hearts

By Ben Allen

Outside at night the land lies dark and lonely and cold,
Within many men the heart lies the same,
For they have forgotten the ways of old,

When we learned to have peace and compassion and our violence to tame,
The tempter gains his strength overnight,
He gains, we lose, till we cannot fight.

For his army strikes within Plays with our minds, encourages sin,
If we give in, our fate is the same,

As the land when in dark and cold loneliness it lays.

Ben Allen, 13, a student at Farmville Middle School receives special mention.

Chicken Pox/Heat Bumps

By Courtney JeRay Howard

I went to school with a bump on me. It was itching.
My teacher said it was chicken pox. I called my mamma at work. She came to get me and take me to the doctor. While waiting for the doctor, I told my mamma, "Ma, let's go on back home, this ain't nothing but the heat bumps." I was scared.

My mamma laughed and said, "No, we have to go on and wait." The doctor came in and knew on the spot that it was chicken pox and that it had to take its course. He was real nice to me and told me some things that would help with the itching. He said heat bumps weren't that big!

Courtney JeRay Howard, 8, a student at South Greenville School receives special mention.

The Happiest Day

By Harrison Gaskins

The happiest day I can remember was when I had just moved into my new house. There were some painters at our house. One day the painters saw a green snake and they tried to kill it but my dad picked it up. My dad gave it to me. That summer we went to the beach and I forgot to feed him and he died. I was real sad.

Harrison Gaskins, 7, a student at South Greenville School receives special mention.

Climbing A Tree

When you climb a tree there is something that you need to know--trees with branches hanging low are the best kind to climb. You put your hand on a middle-size branch, you pull yourself up and hope you don't fall...which is always a chance!

Katherine Clyde, 8, a student at Sadie Sautter School receives special mention.

My Puppy

The Foolish Giant

By Eric Zeisler

There once was a foolish giant who was as tall as the Sears Tower. Once he came to a large castle where a witch lived. She cast a spell on him that turned him to stone and he stood there for a long, long time until a man came and touched him and he was free. The foolish giant went right back to the witch and she turned him back to stone again and he was never seen again.

Eric Zeisler, 7, a student at St. Peter's School receives special mention.

Most people believe that the strongest winds blow in March. The highest record wind blew on this day in Mt. Washington, N.H. in 1934. Do you have any idea how powerful that wind was? The answer to this question has digits which add up to the number 6. Could it be 321 miles per hour or 51 mph? How about 123 mph? Do you think any of these are correct or could it be another number? Try to logically figure it out. The correct answer is below.

Answer: 231 mph!

Federal Facts United States Mottos

Many clubs, nations and even individuals will have a motto by which they live. A motto is often a word or a few words which represent the ideals of something. A motto is often a principle which one hopes or wants to follow. The United States has two mottos which represent her and her people. The oldest is E Pluribus Unum which is the Latin for "One Out of Many". This means that the nation was formed into one from the many different states. E Pluribus Unum has been used by the U.S since 1781 but it actually came from an even earlier source. The first known writing is from the ancient Roman poet Vergil, "Color est e pluribus unus." In his writing Vergil was actually talking about the making of a salad.

It is suspected that the wording and idea for the motto of America came from a popular magazine of the 1700's. On the title page of Gentlemen's Magazine, a British publication, the words E Pluribus Unum were printed. This magazine was first read in the colonies in 1731. Earlier Richard Steele had written in an essay that the words were also found in a writing by Horace, another ancient Roman writer.

The second motto often used by America is In God We Trust. This was adopted by the nation in 1956 and it, as well as E Pluribus Unum, can be found on American money. This motto was used as early as 1437 by a business in London, England and it is also the motto of the state of Florida.

Eat Mo' Shad!

(But Cook It Grifton Great, First)

By Cherie Evans
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

The 1989 Grifton Shad Festival, open through Saturday, offers demonstrations and samples of the traditional folk art of cooking.

The recipes for stewed, fried and baked fish, provided by the festival and included in the festival brochure, are traditional recipes of eastern North Carolina, said Janet Haseley, the publicity coordinator.

In the shad stew, for example, eggs are dropped in the stew, she said. "Other parts of the world don't have eggs in fish stew."

Other cooking methods of eastern North Carolina include dropping a tablespoon of vinegar into the hot oil for each batch of fish just before the fish begins to float, Ms. Haseley said. This softens the bones so they can be eaten.

"That's just the way people cook fish. That is something that is unique to this area," she said. "People who've grown up in eastern North Carolina don't realize this is unique."

Shad is an extremely bony fish, Ms. Haseley said. Removing the bones before cooking it is difficult. But there is a recipe for cooking the fish so that the bones dissolve when the fish is baked, she said.

"For years, we've been having the fish stew and fish fry," Ms. Haseley said. But research from 1985 to 1987, conducted under grants to the town of Grifton from the Folklife Division of the North Carolina Arts Council, revealed the true value of the festival tradition, she said.

"What we discovered in that research is that regional, traditional cooking is a folk art," Ms. Haseley said.

Through the shad cooking demonstrations and samples, "we are informing the public about traditional folk cooking," she said.

The shad recipes have been provided by Leo and Peggy Brown of Grifton, Ms. Haseley said.

"I've been cooking fish stews for years and years," Ms. Brown said. "My husband does the frying. He uses the gas burner with an iron pot."

In addition to being the star of the foods presented during Grifton's festival, the shad has some nutritional value, said Linda Walker, nutritionist with the East Carolina University Department of Family Medicine.

Three and a half ounces of shad, not fried, is a lean meat that is low in fat and has no carbohydrates, she said. It has about a third of the Recommended Daily Allowance in protein and about a half of the RDA for niacin with small amounts of other nutrients.

Eastern barbecue also will be offered during the festival, Ms. Haseley said. Pork, not beef, is used to make the barbecue, which is cooked in a vinegar base of ground red pepper.

No tomato base, ketchup or mustard is used in cooking the eastern North Carolina barbecue which makes it different from barbecue in other parts of the state, she said.

Two of the five new postcards that will be on sale at the information and souvenir building of the festival will include the recipe for stewing and for frying the fish, Ms. Haseley said.

Stewed and fried fish plates will be sold at the festival from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. Saturday.

EASTERN NORTH CAROLINA FISH FRY

Use an iron pot and gas burner to fry fish outside. Fill pot with 48 ounces of cooking oil and heat until the oil sizzles when a piece of food is dropped into the pot.

For small fish, such as herring or hickory shad, cut closely-spaced gashes along both sides of the fish, about 1/4-inch apart. For larger fish, such as American shad, cut crossways through the backbone into pieces about three or four inches long.

Put cornmeal, salt and pepper in a bag and add the fish. Shake to coat the fish.

Drop the fish in hot oil and cook about 10 minutes or until fish floats. Scoop fish out with slotted spoon or french fry basket. Serve with hushpuppies and slaw.

Optional: Drop one tablespoon vinegar into hot oil for each batch of fish just before fish begins to float. This softens the bones so they can be eaten.

GRIFTON SHAD FESTIVAL STEW

Any kind of fish may be used, but rock and catfish are less bony than shad and more plentiful in April. Shad makes tasty stew, but many people do not like to pick out so many bones.

Stew can be cooked inside in an ordinary pot or outdoors in an iron pot over a gas burner. The ingredients are seldom measured, and seasonings are added according to taste. More or less of each ingredient can be used.

1/2 lb. fatback or slab bacon
5 lbs. white potatoes, sliced
5 lbs. onions, sliced
4 lbs. fish cut in 2-inch pieces
Salt and pepper to taste
1/2 tsp. crushed red pepper
1 can tomato soup
1 dozen eggs
Water

Put fatback or bacon in bottom of pot and fry. Leave grease in pot and remove fried meat. (Optional: leave fried meat in pot.) Add other ingredients, layering them beginning with onions, then potatoes, fish, more onions, potatoes, fish, etc. Sprinkle with salt and pepper as you add ingredients to pot. Add water to cover. When stew comes to a boil, turn heat down to medium and cook about 1 1/2 hours. Do not stir as this will break fish into small pieces. Do share the pot from time to time to keep stew from sticking to bottom. About 20 minutes before stew is done, add one can of tomato soup and break eggs into the stew. Allow eggs to cook in the liquid until yolks are hard-boiled. Plan about one or more eggs per person. Add more red pepper for a hotter flavor.

BAKED SHAD WITHOUT BONES

Cut gashes about 1/4-inch apart along both sides of shad (3 lbs. or larger) and place on a large piece of aluminum foil. Sprinkle about two tablespoons of vinegar on fish. Surround fish with sliced onions and sliced white potatoes. Place four slices of bacon on top of fish. Salt and pepper to taste. Fold and seal aluminum foil and place in baking pan in 300-degree oven. Bake at least six hours. All of the small bones will dissolve; everything may be eaten except the backbone.

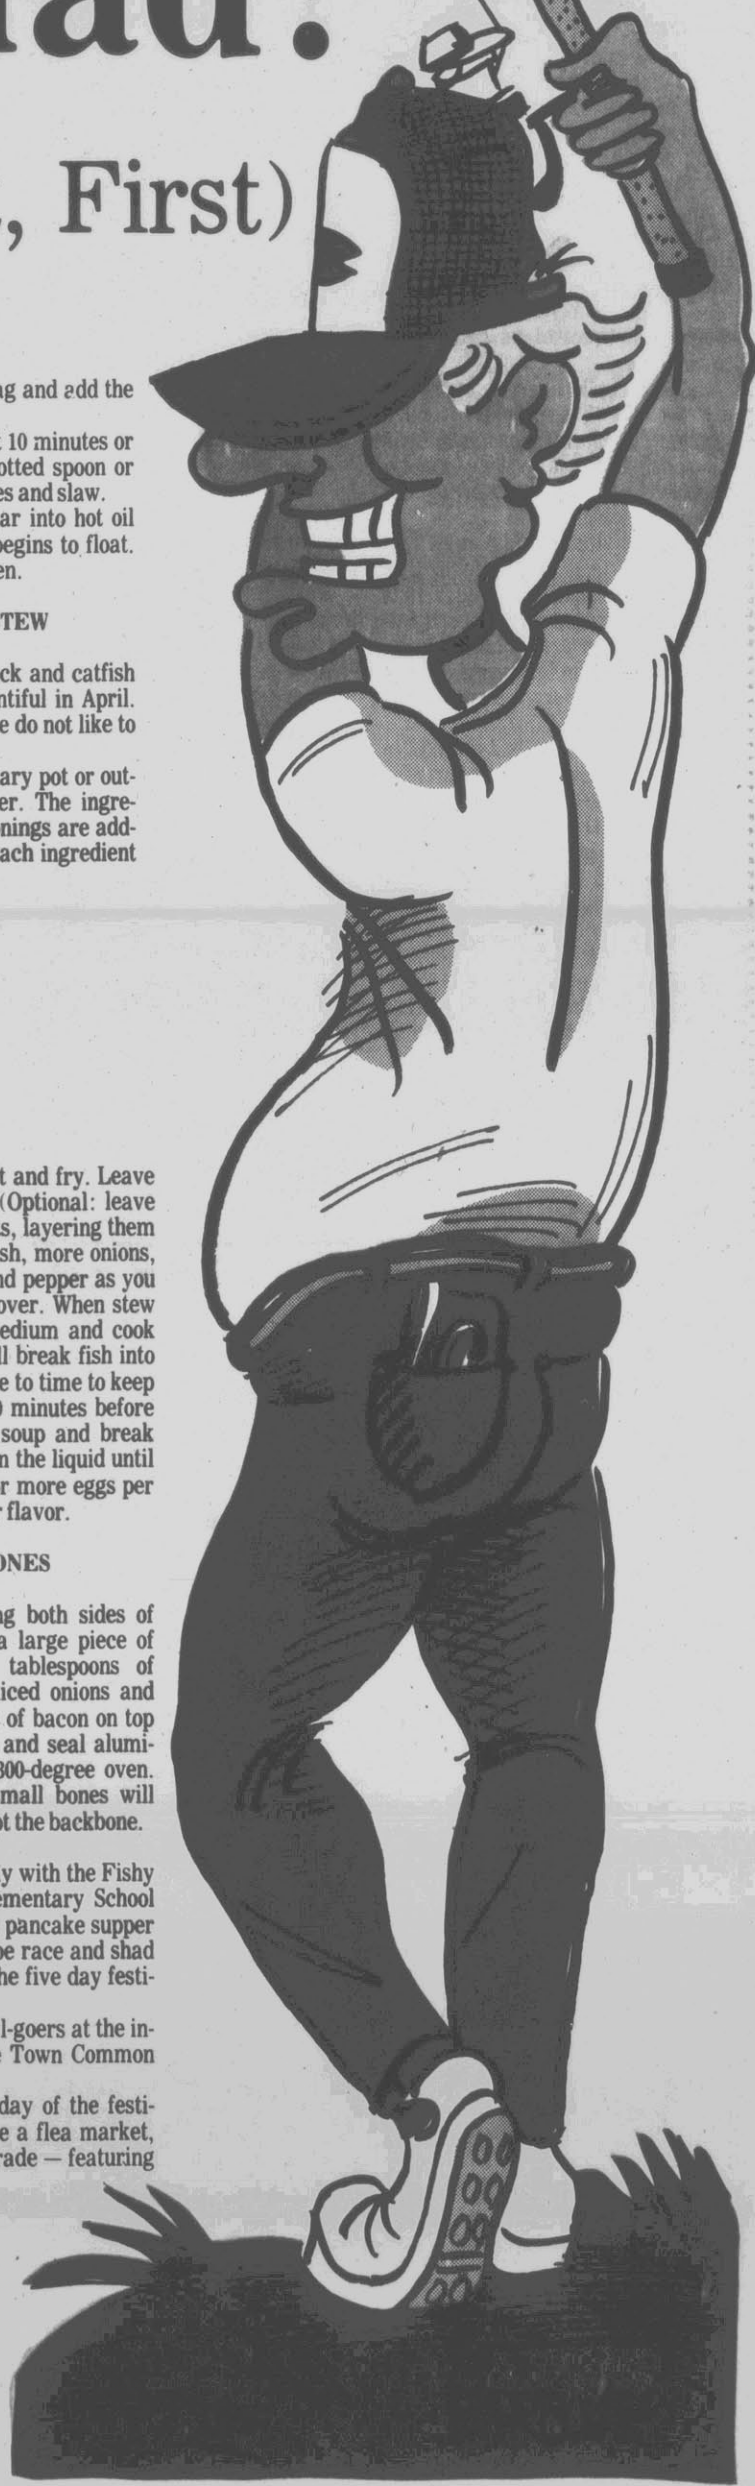

The shad festival opens at 8 p.m. today with the Fishy Tales liar's contest in the Grifton Elementary School cafeteria. Other events, ranging from a pancake supper at 5 p.m. Friday, to a flea market, canoe race and shad run on Sunday, will be presented over the five day festival.

A free brochure is available to festival-goers at the information and souvenir building at the Town Common on Queen Street.

Saturday is the most action-packed day of the festival. Among the events planned then are a flea market, a tennis tournament, rides, crafts, a parade — featuring Jackie Padgett, Miss North Carolina-U.S.A. — a fish fry, an art show, a band concert, street dance and a golf tournament.

Between 400 and 500 people will gather to put the festival together, and a huge crowd is expected. Last year's event attracted about 12,000 people.

And many of them came to get a look at Grifton's wettest hero, 'Mo Shad.'

Baking Powder Biscuits Easy To Make

By Joan Drake
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

Biscuits picked up at fast-food restaurants or popped out of cans found in supermarket refrigerated cases and simply baked have become so popular that many cooks no longer make these quick breads from scratch. However, if you need a particular size, such as 1-inch for appetizers, or want to make cheese or herb variations, it is surprisingly quick and easy to turn out a batch of baking powder biscuits.

In most quick breads the fat is melted, but in biscuits it is used in the solid form, cut into the flour-baking powder-salt mixture with a pastry blender. This helps to produce a flaky texture, much different from muffins.

The liquid is added all at once and stirred in with a fork just until the mixture holds together. Then the dough is turned out onto a lightly floured surface and gently kneaded 10 to 12 strokes. Knead by folding the dough in half and pressing lightly in a rhythmic motion with the heel of the hand.

Kneading distributes the moisture and makes the biscuits more flaky. If the dough is underkneaded, the biscuits will not rise properly and the undissolved or poorly distributed baking powder will produce brown "freckles" on the crust; overkneading results in tough biscuits.

Roll or pat the kneaded dough out to a thickness about half the desired height of the baked biscuits. Using a sharp biscuit cutter dipped in flour, press straight down through the dough. It is important not to twist the cutter or the biscuits will be lopsided. Biscuits from the first rolling will be better shaped and more tender than those cut from rerollings.

To produce crisp-sided biscuits, place them at least an inch apart on an ungreased baking sheet. For softer sides, position the unbaked biscuits so their sides touch. By brushing the tops lightly with milk, the surface will develop a shiny, golden brown crust free of the freckles previously described.

Bake at 425 degrees for 12 to 15 minutes, or until golden brown.

Biscuits are best served hot from the oven (Step 4), perhaps with butter and jam. If they must be reheated, wrap in foil and bake at 350 degrees about 10 minutes.

BAKING POWDER BISCUITS

2 cups flour
4 tps. baking powder
1/2 tsp. salt
5 tbsps. shortening
Milk

Combine flour, baking powder and salt. Place shortening on top, then using pastry blender, cut shortening into flour mixture until particles are about size of small peas or coarse meal. Use relaxed flick of wrist to keep dough mixture from becoming compact mass. If necessary, run finger across inside arc of pastry blender to release shortening.

Pour in 3/4 cup milk all at once. Stir just until mixture holds together. Turn out onto floured work surface and knead lightly 10 to 12 times.

Roll or pat dough to thickness of 1/2 to 3/4 inch. Cut with desired size floured biscuit cutter. Reroll dough and cut again.

For crustier sides, place biscuits about 1 inch apart on ungreased baking sheet. For softer sides, place biscuits with sides touching or 1/4 inch apart. Brush with milk.

Bake at 425 degrees 12 to 15 minutes or until golden brown. Makes 8 to 10 (1 1/2-inch) biscuits.

Braising's Not Glamorous, But Results Are Tasty

By Carleton Jones
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

All it takes is a heavy pot with a top and sometimes some waxed paper. But it may be the most neglected cooking method in America today.

That is the braise. Even the name sounds obscure. But this moisture-laden, low-temperature wonder, once mastered, can yield more tender meats and an interchange of vegetable flavors.

It lacks any glamour at all. Socially, it has the pot-roast stigma. You would be much more impressive throwing a flambe, skewering a shish kebob or searing a sirloin. But the method is perfect for a range of beef products and lamb and it can make many an ordinary vegetable sing.

Basically, what happens when you braise is convection currents of steam are circulating around the food as you simmer, cooking it without a boil-off of flavor. The properly done braise will never shrink or toughen meat or overcook vegetables.

The food chemistry wizard, Howard McGee, puts things this way: "The long, slow braise is the best way to tenderize meat that is tough on account of its connective tissue content."

He adds the braise is inappropriate for the finest, most tender grades of meats like prime ribs or filets but if carefully done can be successful on chops, prebrowned before oven cooking.

There are hidden advantages in the cooking technique. One is that many of the nourishing foods that respond to gentle braising (and improve in flavor) are available year-round and usually inexpensive, such as cabbage, celery, carrots and onions.

The braise played a big role in 1973's landmark gourmet volume for healthy dining ("Haute Cuisine for your Heart's Delight"; Clarkson N. Potter, Inc.), in which author Carol Cutler defined hundreds of elegant dishes that could be made without cream, whole milk, butter or egg yolks. Braising with stock, wine or beer and spices can make the difference between something that tastes like health food and a dish that pleases the fussiest gourmet, Ms. Cutler relates. One trick is to add a polyunsaturated tablespoon or two of oil to lean ground beef to provide the necessary moisture that such meat lacks.

To the French chef Michel Guerard, braising is "the example par excellence of cooking by 'interchange.'" You can marinate your meat in advance, then lightly brown it and cook it with diced vegetables and water, gently, evenly and for a long time, he says. The vegetables reduce into a meat-flavored sauce which you strain. Ideal for the process, he says, is a heavy cast iron pot with a top.

I have braised celery in a heavy-topped aluminum Dutch oven accompanied by a shallow escort of beef stock and the interchange gives you a meaty, hearty celery slice and a celery-flavored, reusable soup stock.

I find it helps the seal between the pot and the lid to use a double thickness of wax paper stretched tightly over the top of the pot. This reduces condensation on the inside of the lid and seems to assist in the convection process. Some chefs identify rump pot roasts, brisket of beef and chuck pot roasts as among the very best bets for oven-braising.

Others recommend avoiding sirloin cuts and eye round steak, but a Cutler formula (below) permits use of the eye round in a richly flavored Belgian carbonnade (braised beef).

Any cooking method has its pluses and its minuses and one of the pluses for braising is that it doesn't seem to matter if it is done on top of the stove or in the oven as long as the heat is kept moderate and that heavy, heat-retaining pots are used with their lids. It is easier to check on how things are going on the stove top, but my feeling is that oven simmering gives a slightly more even result. The very heavy, fine and often quite expensive enamel-coated ironware from Europe is major-league braising equipment, as long as there is a tight-fitting lid that goes with it.

Betty Rossbottom, the Ohio gourmet chef, makes this imaginative fennel-flavored carrot and snow pea ensemble finished in chicken stock steam. It does well served with veal or chicken entrees.

BRAISED FENNEL, CARROTS AND SNOW PEAS

3 fennel bulbs, tough outer layer discarded, trimmed
4 medium carrots (8 oz. total), peeled and trimmed
1/4 lb. snow peas, stringed and halved
4 tbsps. (1/2 stick) unsalted butter
1/2 to 3/4 cup homemade chicken stock or good quality canned broth
Salt and freshly ground pepper to taste

Halve the fennel lengthwise and discard the tough inner core. Cut the bulbs crosswise into 1/4-inch thick slices. Cut the carrots diagonally into 1/4-inch thick slices. Blanch the snow peas in a large pot of boiling salted water until just tender, about 2 minutes. Drain the snow peas in a colander and rinse under cold running water. Pat dry (Prepare vegetables a day ahead by wrapping in kitchen towels — fennel and carrots together and the snow peas separately — putting in a plastic bag, and refrigerating).

Melt butter in a large heavy skillet over medium-high heat. Add the fennel and carrots, and stir until coated with butter. Add 1/2 cup stock and bring to a simmer. Reduce the heat to low. Cover and cook until vegetables are tender, stirring occasionally, 10 to 12 minutes. Add an extra 1/4 cup stock if all liquid evaporates before the vegetables are cooked. Uncover and boil to evaporate the liquid if necessary. Add the snow peas and stir until they are heated through, about 1 minute. Season with salt and pepper and serve immediately. Serves six.

BRAISED CARROTS

1 1/2 lbs. carrots, peeled or scraped
1/2 cup polyunsaturated margarine

1 tbsps. sugar
Salt and pepper
3/4 to 1 cup water
1 chicken bouillon cube

If you are using tiny spring carrots leave them whole; cut large carrots in half lengthwise. Heat the margarine in a heavy skillet and add the carrots. Sprinkle on the sugar, salt and pepper while keeping the heat rather high to caramelize the sugar onto the carrots. Turn often to prevent burning. When the carrots are all nicely browned, pour in enough water to come almost to the top of the carrots. Crumble the chicken bouillon cube into the water, stir thoroughly, cover the skillet, and let the carrots simmer for 20 to 30 minutes, depending on size. If they are not to be served immediately, turn off the heat while a little liquid remains in the skillet. At serving time turn up the heat to reduce the remaining liquid to a thick syrup, while carefully mixing the carrots to coat them with the syrup. Serves six.

BRAISED CABBAGE

1/3 cup polyunsaturated oil
3 medium onions, thinly sliced
1 cup water
1 1/4 cups white wine
2 garlic cloves, crushed
1 beef bouillon cube
1/2 tsp. celery salt
1/4 tsp. dried basil
1/4 tsp. thyme
Salt and pepper to taste
Herb bouquet (6 springs parsley tied around 3 celery stalk tops and 2 bay leaves)
1 tbsps. poppy seeds

Shred the cabbage with a knife and blanch in a large quantity of boiling salted water for 2 minutes. Drain and immediately put under cold running water. Leave the cabbage in a colander to drain thoroughly. Heat oil in a heavy pan and add the sliced onions. Cover and simmer for 5 minutes.

Meanwhile, squeeze the cabbage a handful at a time to remove all water. Add the cabbage and mix well with the onions. Pour the water and 1 cup of white wine over the cabbage. Add garlic, beef bouillon cube, celery salt, basil, thyme, salt and pepper and herb bouquets. Cover and simmer for 15 minutes. Add the poppy seeds and the remaining 1/4 cup of white wine, cover, and simmer for another 15 minutes. Serves six.

BEEF AND ONIONS BRAISED IN BEER

3 lbs. of lean chuck, rump, or eye of round
1 cup flour
Polyunsaturated oil for frying
2 lbs. onions, thinly sliced
Salt and pepper
5 garlic cloves, crushed
1 cup beef bouillon
1 bottle of beer
1 tbsps. Dijon mustard
2 tbsps. dark brown sugar

Herb bouquet (4 parsley sprigs tied around 2 bay leaves)
2 tbsps. cornstarch
2 tbsps. wine vinegar
1/2 cup beer

Trim all fat off the beef. Slice the meat into pieces about 1/2-inch thick, 2 inches wide and 4 inches long. Dredge the slices in flour to dry them and for a nice coating when browned. Pour enough oil into a heavy skillet to coat the bottom well. Heat oil until hot and fry a few pieces of meat at a time, browning each side quickly and removing to a side plate. If the flour has burned in the oil, pour out and use fresh oil to saute the onions, again filming the bottom of the pan well. Keep heat moderately low for the onions, which you should cook slowly and covered. Turn the onions occasionally and continue cooking until limp, but not cooked through (about 10 minutes). Add salt, pepper and garlic, then cover again and cook for 3 minutes more.

In small pot combine the bouillon, 1 cup of the beer, mustard and brown sugar. Bring to a slow boil to dissolve the mustard and sugar. Select a deep casserole that can go into the oven and layer with half the browned meat pieces. Sprinkle on salt and pepper. Spoon half cooked onions over the meat. Repeat with remaining meat and onions. Pour the heated stock over the meat and onions, adding enough beer to bring the liquid level almost to the top of the onions. Bury the herb bouquet, cover the casserole and put in the oven heated to 325 degrees. Cooking time should be 1 1/2 to 2 hours, depending on the cut of meat. Test for doneness by piercing with a small sharp knife. When the meat is thoroughly tender, drain off the remaining liquid into a saucepan. Be careful while doing this since the casserole will be heavy and hot; hold the cover firmly in place and let the liquid pour out the side.

Put the cornstarch, wine vinegar, and 1/2 cup of beer in a small bowl and mix to a smooth paste. Slowly add this to the drained stock and simmer slowly while whisking vigorously to keep the sauce smooth. Return the sauce to the casserole and stir well while reheating the meat thoroughly. Serve with boiled potatoes or noodles. Serves six.

NEW YORK — What professional chef would not give his tongue to cook in the kitchen where James Beard established himself as the "Father of American Gastronomy?"

The legendary Beard kitchen will once again sizzle and steam with culinary activity, thanks to the James Beard Foundation, a group of chefs, food consultants and food lovers who are organizing the restoration of the Greenwich Village brownstone where Beard lived and worked in New York City.

The Jack Daniel Distillery in Lynchburg, Tenn., is helping turn the Beard house into what Peter Kump, president of the James Beard Foundation, calls a "culinary Mount Vernon" with a fund-raising effort that is expected to generate more than $20,000.

During the month of April, the distillery says it will donate a portion of the profits from the sale of its famous Tennessee "sippin' whiskey" for the kitchen restoration project.

In addition, the distillery is offering a special booklet, "The Spirit of American Cooking," with recipes from some of America's top chefs, including Julia Child, Anne Rosenzweig and Larry Forgione. Proceeds from the sale of the booklet will go to the restoration of the kitchen.

Novel Appetizers Can Perk Up Dull Parties

By Sherrie Clinton
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

Are your parties suffering from the blahs? Can guests reel off your menu by heart? Do they know without peeking that you will be serving: Swedish meatballs, cheese-puffs, frozen mini-egg rolls, onion dip and potato chips, crackers with cheese-in-a-can or, horrors of horrors, pigs-in-a-blanket?

Food mavens say the solution to SOS, or same-old-stuff, foods is to choose foods that can be made. Even one or two new recipes will add a bit of pizzazz to your party.

One of the first pieces of advice that Peter Halstad, a Baltimore caterer, proffers home cooks is to keep it simple.

Keep it simple for yourself by preparing only one or two hot appetizers that need to be fussed with during the party. And keep it simple for your guests by offering only five or six appetizers and by putting only one appetizer on a tray, particularly if you are going to pass the foods.

Chef Guy Reinbold, of the Stouffer Harborplace Hotel in Baltimore, said that he leans toward serving only cold appetizers.

"It is difficult to maintain the quality of warm hors d'oeuvres. In many cases they don't hold up, they get soggy and blah."

One simple way to spruce up an appetizer, like the ubiquitous cheese- or crab-puff, is to insert the skewer first into a slice of scallion and then into the food. The scallion, which covers most of the skewer, looks like the stem of a flower, Reinbold says.

But there is no reason to stick with the tried-and-dull when there are so many other appetizers available.

For example, Reinbold suggests skewering foods like thinly sliced steak or chunks of chicken and frying them in a wok for 30 seconds.

He also recommends taking semi-soft cheese, mixing it with dill or other fresh herbs and then rolling it out between two pieces of waxed paper. Chill until firm, then cut-out rounds from it with a cookie cutter and put it on a wafer. Next, pipe some cream cheese on top, using a pastry bag, and add a grape.

One of Reinbold's favorite appetizers is made by pouring a 1-inch layer of unflavored gelatin, tinted with a bit of yellow food coloring, into a shallow aluminum pan. Once set, slice it into squares and then pipe some cream cheese on it and top with a strawberry.

"Serve this at a party and everyone thinks its very fancy and upscale, but it is very, very easy," he says.

Presentation is everything, agrees Halstad.

"One thing I can recommend is to use things that are attractive; the prettier the food the better it seems to taste. I approach things visually first, thinking how the colors would look together on a table."

John Hadamuscin, author of "Special Occasions" (Harmony Books; 1988, $22.50) says that he tries to think how the platters or bowls will look not only when they are full but also when they are empty.

You might consider putting food on small trays. They will have to be refilled more frequently but they will look better longer.

A bed of greens, such as parsley, looks attractive even when the greasiest of foods is gone, he said. Paper dollies, while pretty, show grease.

One of his suggestions is to make everything as far ahead of time as possible and prepare trays, usually throw-away aluminum pans, that can be taken right from the freezer or refrigerator to the oven.

This strategy works particularly well if keeping hot foods hot is a problem. Hadamuscin suggests serving hot appetizers at different times. That way hot foods are served hot and don't sit around getting soggy.

One hot appetizer Hadamuscin recommends is tiny, spicy crab cakes. They can be made a day ahead of time, stored on an aluminum cooking sheet in the refrigerator and then baked during the party.

Cookbook author Martha Stewart in her "Hors d'Oeuvres" book (Clarkson N. Potter Inc.; 1984, $17.95) recommends skewering two warm tortellini and serving them with a dipping sauce. The tortellini can be bought at most grocery stores.

Here are some suggestions from these experts for your next party:

SPICY SHRIMP

1 lb. large shrimp, peeled and deveined
1½ tbsps. peanut oil (can use vegetable oil)
1 tsp. minced garlic
1 tsp. grated fresh ginger
3 tbsps. tomato paste
¼ tsp. chili oil or ¾ tsp. chili powder
½ tsp. sugar
1 tsp. sesame oil
2 tbsps. finely chopped scallions

Stir fry shrimp in peanut oil with garlic and ginger for about 45 seconds.

Make sauce by combining tomato paste, chili oil, sugar and sesame oil. Add sauce to shrimp and continue to stir fry over high until shrimp are done, about 4 to 5 minutes.

Toss in scallions just enough to wilt them.

This looks beautiful if passed on a tray covered with a bed of blanched, julienned snow peas.

CHERRY TOMATOES FILLED WITH MOZZARELLA AND OLIVE OIL

½ lb. fresh mozzarella cheese, cut into ¼ inch cubes
2 tbsps. chopped pumate, also known as sun-dried tomatoes
¼ cup olive oil
Freshly ground black pepper to taste
1 tbsp. chopped fresh, basil leaves

Wash and dry the cherry tomatoes. With a sharp, serrated knife, cut off the round bottom of each tomato. Remove the seeds and pulp with a small, melon-ball scoop and put the tomatoes, cut side down on a rack or on paper towels to drain. Refrigerate until ready to use. (Cutting off the bottom of the tomatoes and standing them on the stem end makes them less apt to roll.)

Marinate the cheese and sun-dried pumate in olive oil and pepper for several hours before stuffing into tomatoes. Sprinkle with basil. Makes 40.

CHICKEN SATAY

½ tsp. sambal oelek (hot-pepper paste)
1 tsp. grated fresh gingerroot
2 tbsps. lemon juice
3 tbsps. dark soy sauce
2 tbsps. honey
1 tbsp. peanut butter
½ cup water

Cut chicken into 1-inch chunks and thread chunks equally on 15 bamboo skewers. Set aside.

In a large saucepan or skillet or wok, combine remaining ingredients. Bring to a boil, stirring constantly, then reduce heat and add as many chicken skewers as will fit without crowding. Simmer 10 minutes, basting. Remove from pan and transfer to a rimmed platter. Repeat with remaining chicken skewers.

Simmer sauce remaining in pan until reduced to about ¾-cup. Pour over chicken. Cover and refrigerate until cold, then serve.

Variation:

Instead of threading chicken on skewers, simmer in chunks. When done, alternate chicken chunks with blanched vegetables on the skewer. We used blanched snowpeas and tiny cherry tomatoes.

SPICY CRAB CAKES

1 cup (2 sticks) butter
1½ cups finely diced celery
2 medium onions, finely chopped
12 thin slices white bread, trimmed and cubed
3 lbs. lump crab meat, flaked

2 cups milk, approximately 6 large eggs, lightly beaten
¾ cup chopped parsley
1 tsp. freshly ground black pepper
1 tsp. cayenne pepper
1 tsp. dry mustard
4 cups fine, dry bread crumbs, approximately

Melt the butter in a small skillet over medium heat. Add the celery and onions and saute until crisp-tender, about 10 minutes. Transfer to a large mixing bowl.

Place the bread in a shallow bowl or pan with milk to cover. Soak 5 minutes and then remove the bread, squeezing out the milk (reserve the milk). Add the bread and all remaining ingredients except dry bread crumbs to the mixing bowl and toss to mix well. The mixture should have the consistency of raw meat loaf; add some of the reserved milk if necessary.

Preheat the oven to 400 degrees. Lightly grease two baking sheets.

Place dry bread crumbs in a shallow bowl. Shape the crab mixture into 1-inch diameter balls and flatten them slightly between your palms. Roll each cake in the dry bread crumbs to lightly coat and place them on the baking sheets, about 1 inch apart. (May be prepared up to a day ahead at this point, covered with plastic wrap and refrigerated.)

Bake for 10 minutes or until golden brown. Arrange the cakes on a platter lined with watercress.

2 large garlic cloves
1 medium sized onion
8 medium jalapeno peppers, halved, stemmed and seeded

Honey-Applesauce Cake Almost Healthy

By Nancy Byal
BETTER HOMES AND GARDENS

Maybe there's no such thing as a healthful cake, but this one comes close. Even better, the ingredients that make it good for you — whole-wheat flour, applesauce and raisins — also make it taste great.

HONEY-APPLESAUCE CAKE

2½ cups whole-wheat flour
¼ cup non-fat dry milk powder
1½ tbsps. baking soda
¼ tsp. baking powder
½ tsp. salt
¼ tsp. ground cinnamon
¼ tsp. ground cloves
1 cup honey
½ cup shortening
2 eggs
1 cup applesauce
1 cup raisins
1 cup chopped walnuts
Glaze
Walnuts (optional)

Grease and flour a 10-inch fluted tube pan. Set aside. Stir together

flour, milk powder, soda, baking powder, salt, cinnamon and cloves. Set aside.

In large mixer bowl beat honey and shortening with electric mixer on medium speed until light and fluffy. Beat in eggs, one at a time, beating well after each addition. On low speed add flour mixture and applesauce alternately to beaten mixture, beating just until combined after each addition. Fold in raisins and nuts. Pour batter into prepared pan. Bake in 325-degree F oven 40 to 45 minutes or until cake tests done. Invert onto wire rack; remove pan. Cool completely.

Glaze: In a small mixing bowl stir together ¾ cup sifted powdered sugar, ¼ teaspoon vanilla and enough milk to make of drizzling consistency (about 2 teaspoons). Drizzle over cake. If desired, garnish with walnuts. Makes 16 servings.

Pressure Cooker Yields Fast, Flavorful Results

By Jonathan Susskind
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

The heat is on for pressure cooking.

Sales of pressure cookers are spurring upward like steam from a petcock as new generations of cooks, undaunted by stories or memories of quasi-nuclear kitchen explosions, discover the ease, speed and healthfulness of steam cuisine.

"I don't think it's a fad," said Robin McKenzie, a buyer for the Williams-Sonoma chain of cooking stores and catalog sales, which currently sells cookers from two companies, Cuisinart Inc. and Chantal Cookware. "I scoffed when they first brought it in. A pressure cooker? Right, granny stuff, uh-huh. But it's selling phenomenally well," Ms. McKenzie said.

Lorna Sass, a New York food writer who is in the last stages of writing a book to be published next fall, "Cooking Under Pressure," says young cooks "who have no memories of split pea soup on the ceiling and consequently have no fear of pressure cookery" are drawn to the concept if they enjoy stovetop cooking at all.

"I think that people are recognizing some of the limitations of the microwave and are really growing so accustomed to virtually instant gratification when it comes to cooking that the pressure cooker is a very logical alternative or supplement to the microwave," said Ms. Sass, who believes that pressure cooking "yanks the flavors out of foods" unlike other cooking methods.

"Once upon a time the pressure cooker was as handy as the microwave oven. Every home had one because it was quick cooking," said Vivian Salters, a home economist.

Pressure cookers today are safer than in Grandma's time and are "virtually foolproof," says Ms. Sass, who has been testing recipes in several types for more than seven months with no problems.

At least two and often three pressure-releasing mechanisms have been designed into the pots in case the main systems fail (or you forget to watch) and steam builds up to dangerous levels. The cookers won't develop a head of steam if not closed correctly, and many have features that won't allow the unit to be opened after cooking until the pressure is reduced to normal. On some units designed for use at several pressure levels, automatic indicators pop up to tell you when the proper level has been reached, replacing the old and sometimes inaccurate gauges.

What's more, the best-designed cookers don't rattle, bang and hiss like Grandma's old clunker (You still can manipulate the releases to produce clouds of steam, however, and must be as careful as you are with any cooking method that produces hot vapors).

Pressure cooking gained favor in the United States in the Depression and during World War II. It remained popular in Europe, where it is not uncommon for chefs and home cooks alike to own several, according to Ms. Sass. But here, pressure cooking apparently fell out of favor in the 1960s and 1970s, probably for several reasons: those fabled or real disasters, the rise of the microwave oven, and the American obsession for packaged foods and eating out.

Perhaps pressure cookers are back in vogue because of our culinarily schizophrenic desires for meals that are quick and easy as well as homey and nutritious.

Depending on the recipe and the model, foods cook three to 10 times faster by pressure cooking than with ordinary methods, even, in some instances, microwaving.

Heida Thurlow, whose Houston-based company distributes the French-made Fissler Super Cooker under the Chantal Cookware label, said she enjoys cooking a large batch of artichoke juice.

beat in egg until fluffy. Add flour.

Stir in lemon juice and set aside. Preheat oven to 350 degrees. Spray 12-cup tube pan with PAM.

Cream margarine and sugar. Beat in eggs until mixture is very light and fluffy. Add lemon juice. Combine dry ingredients and add to creamed mixture alternating with milk. Pour ½ batter into pan. Cover with cream cheese mixture. Pour in remaining batter. Gently swirl knife through batter a few times.

Bake 50 to 60 minutes until cake pulls away from side of pan. Cool in pan 10 minutes. Turn out and cool completely.

Stir lemon juice into confectioners' sugar. Drizzle over cake. Makes 10 to 12 servings.

Pointers Aid Care And Use Of A Cooker

LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

Here are some tips for buying, using and storing your pressure cooker:

Units range, in capacity from 4 quarts to 10 quarts, but most recipes have been tested for use in 6- or 8-quart cookers and would have to be halved for use in a 4-quart cooker. Remember, you can fill the cooker only half to two-thirds full. If you cook only for one or two people and do not plan to prepare extra food for freezing, a 4-quart cooker may be useful, but for many people the larger sizes are more practical.

Cooker instructions call for a range of minimum liquid requirements, from ¼-cup to 2 cups. The less liquid required, the more versatile the cooker for such uses as braising, says cookbook author Lorna Sass.

You may wish to purchase a cooker with a removable pressure-regulating valve so the unit can be used as an ordinary stockpot or saucepan. Some also come with trivets or baskets, useful for steaming and optimum heat circulation.

The best models of cooker have a small handle opposing the large handle so they can be carried safely with two hands while hot and full.

Stainless-steel cookers are heavier and more expensive but generally easier to clean unless food is burned on, when the lighter, less expensive aluminum cookers are an advantage, says Consumer Reports.

Find out how easy the cooker is to clean. Is it all right to put the pot in the dishwasher? Is the pressure-regulating valve removable or is the rerol.

Grocers have gone gaga over grains. From cereals to muffin mixes, various grains are enjoying top billing for their high-fiber, cholesterol-reducing abilities. Oat bran muffins, if you aren't already sick of them, appear to be a favorite.

Even the packaging caters to the cholesterol conscious. Kellogg's has a cereal called Just Right with a box that features a heaping teaspoon of various grains, behind which is a large grid that looks as if a heart blip is about to bounce across it. Not subtle.

Stealing myself, I can skirt by the aisle with all the cookies these days. But stores have taken to putting deserts in so many places, I usually succumb to something before I get to the checkout line.

Keebler, bless those little elves, counts itself to be the first major snack food company to pledge to eliminate tropical oils and animal fats from all its cookies and crackers.

Keebler is denying any pressure from groups like the National Heart Savers Association, which has conducted a major, million-dollar "Poisoning of America" advertising assault on food producers.

But the group has won assurances from five other producers, including Quaker Oats, Ralston Purina, Borden's, General Mills and Pillsbury, that they will reformulate at least some of their products.

The five companies, with total sales of over $30 billion, market over 1,000 nationally known food products, a large number containing cholesterol-raising oils.

And grocery stores aren't the only ones undergoing a change. Many restaurants have also gotten in on the act and now offer low-cholesterol menus.

Of course, I still don't like extremists. Pretty soon, ice milk may be as close any one can come to the real thing outside of the black market. Nonetheless, I will probably end up doing the right thing. I haven't reached my ideal cholesterol level yet, and I'm too paranoid to give up.

Soviet Children Chow Down On American Vittles

By Carol Deegan
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — The Soviet children were first to the table crowded with American foods. They started with the pigs-in-a-blanket — then went back for more.

They ate Southern fried chicken, rolls and vegetables. They let their mothers try the roast turkey, jambalaya and guacamole.

When it came time for dessert, one could choose chocolate cake and apple pie. But everyone's favorite — mothers and children alike — was the gelatin parfait.

Are red and green cubes of gelatin a rare treat in Moscow?

"Oh no," laughed Tonya Malayan, one of a group of 20 Soviet women and their children who were guests at a "regional American-style buffet," prepared by the chefs of McCall's magazine.

The dessert was a favorite at the lunch, she explained through an interpreter, because it is so familiar; a comfortable choice when in unfamiliar surroundings, like metropolitan New York.

Another reason: the gelatin was so beautifully presented, she said, who could resist?

Indeed! The buffet included barbecue ribs, Buffalo chicken wings, jambalaya, Cincinnati chili, rolls, breads, salads and more — all prepared in the magazine's six test kitchens.

The Soviets' visit to McCall's Park Avenue offices was part of an 18-day cultural exchange tour sponsored by Mothers Embracing Nuclear Disarmament (MEND), an international organization that supports multilateral, verifiable nuclear arms reductions.

After the buffet, Marianne Langan, food editor for McCall's, described the shopping and cooking habits of American women, and the Soviets, through their interpreters, responded to her questions about their lives.

In contrast to the "average" American woman, who spends about 30 minutes each night preparing dinner, the Soviets said it takes them about an hour. On the weekends, they may spend up to 3 hours preparing meals.

Why about home appliances?

Most have an electric mixer, toaster and meat grinder, they said. The one appliance they would most like to have? An electric dishwasher. For Lily Vasilyeva, a professor of philosophy at a college in Moscow, shopping isn't a chore because she can order her food in advance and then pick it up on her way home from work. This is becoming fairly widespread throughout Moscow, she said.

Many of the basic food products come from Central Europe. Bananas are imported from Africa, she said, and tea from India is popular.

Some food items are more expensive than others.

Tonya Malayan said her 11-year-old son particularly enjoys big, beautiful fruit. In Moscow, she said, fruit costs much more than meat. "But," she explained with a smile, "when you are a mother, it is hard to say 'no' to your child."

Most of the visiting Soviets are working mothers. Their trip to the United States is part of an American-Soviet exchange sponsored by MEND and the Center for Children's and Adults' Initiatives for Peace in Moscow.

The reciprocal exchange was initiated in September 1988 when a MEND group of 21 American mothers and children traveled through nine cities in the Soviet Union.

The menu for McCall's regional American-Style Buffet:

Appetizers: Pigs in Blankets on a Stick, Tex-Mex Guacamole with Crudites, Buffalo Wings, Bite-Size Texas Barbecue Ribs.

Entrees: Roast Turkey, Turkey Pot Pie, Cincinnati Chili (served over spaghetti), Jambalaya, Southern Fried Chicken.

Accompaniments: Corn Bread Stuffing, Marinated Fresh Vegetable Salad, Celery Slaw, Fresh Fruit and Citrus Salad on Mixed Greens, Cranberry Sauce, Pull-Apart Bread, Assorted Dinner Rolls.

Desserts: Apple Pie, McCall's Perfect Chocolate Cake, Jello Parfaits, Baked Alaska.

The recipes for the dishes served at the buffet were taken from the pages of McCall's magazine.

CELERY SLAW

1 head celery (about 2 lbs., trimmed)
1 small onion
2/3 cup salad oil
1/2 cup sour cream
1/4 cup white-wine vinegar
1 tsp. sugar
1/4 tsp. paprika
1/8 tsp. celery seed

Crime Stoppers

If you have information on any crime committed in Pitt County, call Crime Stoppers, 758-7777. You do not have to identify yourself and can be paid for the information you supply.

Parsley sprigs (optional)
Cherry tomatoes, trimmed and halved

Slice celery in thin diagonal pieces; slice onion into thin rings; place in large bowl.

In small bowl, combine remaining ingredients except parsley and tomatoes. Pour over vegetables; stir to combine. Cover, and chill 1 hour.

PARSLEY-CHIVE BREAD

1/4 cup (1/2 stick) butter or margarine
2 tbsps. finely chopped parsley
1 tbsps. finely chopped fresh chives
One 15-in. loaf Italian bread

In a small saucepan, melt butter. (Or, in a small, microwave-safe bowl, cook butter on High for 45 seconds in the microwave.) Stir parsley and chives into the butter. With sharp, serrated knife, cut bread diagonally into 3/4-inch slices, almost through to the bottom. Brush each side of slices with butter mixture. Wrap in foil. (If made ahead, refrigerate.)

Preheat oven to 400 degrees F. Bake bread 15 minutes (20 minutes if bread has been refrigerated). Serve hot. Serves 8.

CINCINNATI-STYLE CHILI

1 1/2 lb. pork butt, cut in 1/2-inch cubes
2 lb. ground beef

1 large onion, chopped
1-2 jalapeno peppers, seeded and minced
2 medium cloves garlic, crushed
One 28-oz. can crushed tomatoes
One 12-oz. can beer
1/2 cup water
Two 1.25-oz. packages chili-seasoning mix
1/2 tsp. ground cinnamon
1/2 tsp. ground allspice
1/2 tsp. salt
Cooked pasta

In large skillet or saucepan heat 2 tablespoons salad oil. Cook pork 5 minutes, or until evenly browned. With slotted spoon, remove to large bowl. Cook ground beef 5 minutes, or until browned; remove to bowl with pork. Add onion, jalapeno peppers and garlic. Cook 3 minutes, or until tender.

Return all meat to the pan. Add tomatoes, beer, 1/2 cup water, the seasoning mix, spices and salt. Simmer, partially covered, and stirring occasionally, 45 minutes. Serve over pasta. If desired, sprinkle with shredded Cheddar cheese. Serves 8.
