Crippled Iowa Heads To Port

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The battleship USS Iowa, ripped by a gun turret explosion that killed 47 sailors, today steamed toward Puerto Rico and an investigation into the worst naval disaster in more than a decade.

Navy officials said the bodies will be taken off the ship when it reaches Roosevelt Roads, a Navy base in Puerto Rico. They'll be flown to a military mortuary in Dover, Del.

Lt. Russell A. Grier, an Atlantic Fleet spokesman in Norfolk where the Iowa is based, said the ship reported no serious injuries to any other crewmen.

The Pentagon today put the death toll at 47 and said other crew members were accounted for. Earlier, spokesmen had said the death toll could be higher.

Ten to 12 crew members suffered minor injuries. "Most of these ... were in the firefighting party," Pentagon spokesman Fred Hoffman said at a briefing this morning. "Most of these who have been hurt have been treated on board ship."

The explosion occurred during a gunnery exercise at 9:55 a.m. Wednesday while the 46-year-old ship was on maneuvers about 330 miles northeast of Puerto Rico.

The explosion and fire were in the second of the two forward turrets, at the leading position of the middle gun in the three-gun turret, said Bruce Mason, a Navy spokesman at the Pentagon.

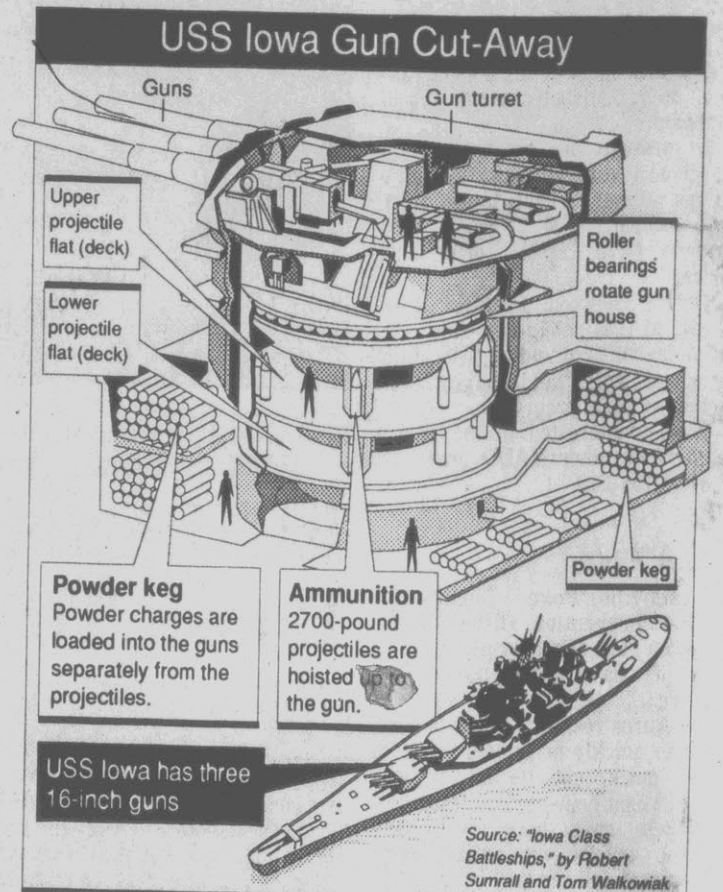

Hoffman said an investigation into the circumstances of the incident has already begun and will be led by Rear Adm. Richard D. Milligan, commander of Cruiser Destroyer Group 2 and a former commanding officer of the battleship USS New Jersey.

In Norfolk, about 200 relatives of the 1,600 crewmen aboard the Iowa spent the night at a Norfolk Naval Station gym where they had gathered Wednesday out of sight of reporters. Navy policy requires that families of dead or injured sailors be notified before any list of victims is released.

"There are those who are really struggling, and those who are really stoic," said Navy Chaplain Barry Brimhall. "Right now, for some of MEXICO CITY — A winery worker captured at a roadblock has confessed to killing seven people in California, including his wife and two of his daughters, in what Mexican police said was a frenzy of jealousy over her.

Authorities prepared for extradition proceedings they said could take months because the suspect, Ramon Salcido, is a Mexican citizen.

"I'm guilty," the 28-year-old Salcido said in a television interview with the private Televisa network Wednesday night in Mazatlan. "I did the killings in the United States and I expect to be judged there."

"I came to Mexico to see my parents for the last time," he said in the interview. He refused to discuss his motives for the crimes, but said, "I came to Mexico to see my parents for the last time."

Salcido was arrested off a bus before dawn Wednesday at a roadblock set up by anti-drug agents outside the northwestern village of Guasave, officials said. The village is near Salcido's hometown of Los Mochis.

The attorney general's office said in a news release that Salcido told Mexican police he killed, "motivated by jealousy, after he suspected that his wife was linked to (co-worker) Tracy Toovey."

Salcido is suspected of killing his wife, Toovey, two of his daughters, his mother-in-law and two young sisters-in-law in a rampage in Sonoma County, Calif. last weekend.

He has been charged with four of the killings and was being sought on a federal warrant for flight to avoid prosecution. Salcido was a forklift operator who worked with Toovey at the Grand Cru Vineyards.

Fernando Arias, spokesman for the attorney general's office, said police would escort Salcido to Mexico City on a Mexicana flight due to arrive at 3:15 p.m. today (5:15 p.m. EDT).

In the Mexican capital, Salcido was to undergo more questioning as well as extradition proceedings. Officials said he had crossed the U.S. border at Calexico.

The attorney general's office said Salcido told police under questioning he had lived in California for nine years and acquired American citizenship.

But U.S. authorities say Salcido apparently never applied for U.S. naturalization papers and remains a Mexican citizen, meaning the extradition process could take months. Arias said the process could be completed in as little as a day or so.

Salcido could face the death penalty under California law. Mexico has no capital punishment.

He was arrested the same day services were held in Petaluma, Calif., for the six members of Salcido's family who were killed.

Salcido's wife, mother-in-law, two sisters-in-law, and Toovey were butchered and shot to death Friday.

The next day, three of Salcido's daughters were found with their throats cut, two of them dead. The only survivor, 2-year-old Carmina, is recovering in Petaluma Valley Hospital. She told investigators her father cut her and her sisters.

Salcido's friends told the San Francisco Examiner that he had a frenzied, cocaine-fueled night of drinking and dancing before the killings.

The friends said the binge began the night of April 12, a day after Salcido had been served with Fresno County, Calif., court papers ordering him to pay $511 a month support for a 4½-year-old daughter from another marriage, plus nearly $6,000 to the county for back payments.

In San Francisco, affidavits filed against Salcido in U.S. District Court this week disclosed he left a note asking God's mercy and blaming the law for the slayings, apparently referring to the court order in the child-support case.

Under a 1973 treaty, Mexico is obliged to honor any U.S. extradition request, but the procedure is cumbersome and can take months.

A U.S. court has to request the extradition, detailing the evidence, through the Department of Justice and the State Department.

Garrett Satisfied Runoff Ban Nearer

By John Bare
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

The push to approve a bill eliminating second primaries is gaining more momentum than ever, supporters of the bill claim.

The measure, introduced by Sen. Ralph Hunt, D-Durham, was approved Wednesday by the state Senate's Election Laws Committee, which is chaired by Sen. Tom Taft of Greenville. It is the first time such a bill has won committee approval in the Senate, and a local black leader said he feels the measure has a good chance of passing on the Senate floor.

"I got the feeling it is time for it," said Pitt County Commissioner D.D. Garrett of Greenville, who testified before the Election Laws Committee.

Minorities have long called for the elimination of second primaries, claiming the process hurts their chances of winning office. Current law allows a candidate to call for a primary runoff if the top candidate does not receive over 50 percent of the vote. Often black candidates have led first primaries but lost the primary runoff.

Garrett has been active in local politics for 30 years, but he did not win office until last year. Oddly enough, he benefited from the second primary. Though he lost the initial primary, he was able to call for a primary runoff because the winner

Athletes Give Hand In Fighting Drugs

By Cherie Evans
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Alternatives, choices. Those were key words stressed Wednesday afternoon as athletes from Farmville Central High School urged fifth-graders at Falkland Elementary School to avoid the use of drugs and alcohol.

In conjunction with the Drug Abuse Resistance Education program, Reggie Barrett, a Farmville Central basketball player, and Monty King, a baseball player, told fifth-graders how useless it is to abuse drugs.

"Drugs lead you to nothing," Barrett said. "Anyone that is using drugs is just hurting themselves."

Students at Falkland asked many questions about the high school students' observance of drug use.

"Have you seen anyone actually using drugs?" asked one Falkland student.

"Yes," the athletes said.

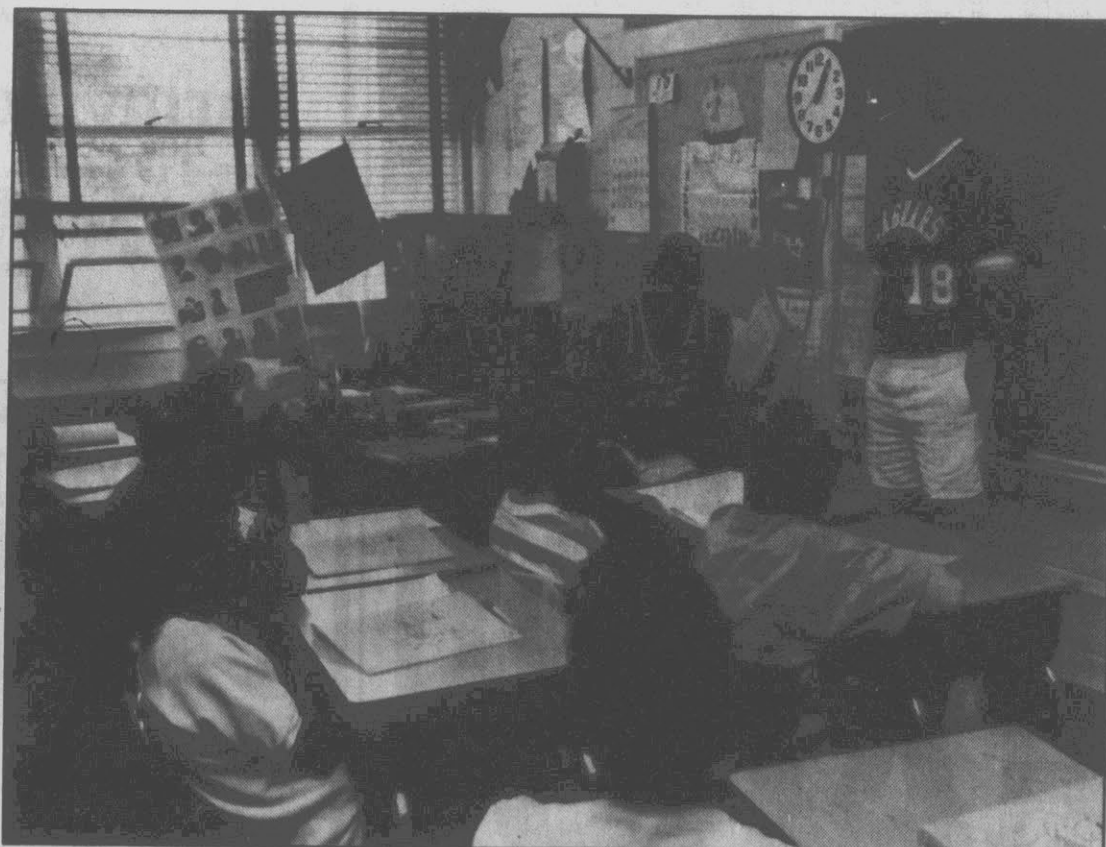

"If a friend is doing drugs. He's not really a friend especially if he's trying to push it on you," King said.

The athletes said those abusing drugs usually are not involved in school activities and are a group of troublemakers at school.

The students were encouraged to develop relationships with friends not abusing drugs and to build a drug-free support group among schoolmates.

Barrett and King said the reports of a "drug war" at Farmville Central High School have been "blown out of proportion."

Bush Says Conscience 'Is Clear'

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — President Bush said today "my conscience is clear" about the Iran-Contra affair and promised to cooperate fully with congressional requests for White House documents dealing with the matter.

However, Bush said it was not clear which documents might still be within his control, suggesting that some have gone to the federal archivists. He said he had no reason to believe that the Reagan administration withheld any documents.

ECU Project Paves Way For New Cancer Therapy

By William A. Shires
ECU NEWS BUREAU

Experiments being conducted by an East Carolina University scientist and his associates will enable the world's cancer-fighters to more accurately predict the effectiveness of the most powerful and precise tumor therapy yet developed.

With data obtained from studies of proton beam-irradiated cancer cells by Dr. James B. Robertson, a radiation biologist in environmental health at ECU, the Loma Linda University Medical Center in California plans to begin treating 1,000 to 2,000 patients a year with proton beams, sometime next year.

In effect, Robertson explains, "these preclinical studies are a sort of quality control" for one of the most exciting and promising cancer treatment projects in medical history.

With a new $40 million international cancer treatment center near San Bernardino, Calif., Loma Linda hopes to begin operation of its small-sized but ultra-powerful 250 million electron volt (MEV) proton accelerator by next spring.

It anticipates that its accelerator, called a synchrotron, will allow physicians to reach the deepest tumors in the human body with cell-destroying particles and eliminate many side effects commonly associated with conventional radiation treatments of cancer.

"They want to be sure that they're not going to have unexpected, unforeseen problems," says Robertson of his work under a $104,154 research grant from Loma Linda.

He is scheduled to present a report in September to an international radiation science meeting in Switzerland and says "we should be well along by then."

With 11 years of experience in particle radiation biology and radiological techniques at Harvard, the University of California at Berkeley and at Los Alamos Scientific Laboratory in New Mexico, Robertson feels "uniquely qualified" to perform these studies utilizing cultured cells.

He performed the first preclinical studies at the Harvard Cyclotron Laboratory where a 150 MEV accelerator for proton beam radiation has been in use at Harvard-Massachusetts General Hospital for 10 years.

The Harvard program has achieved an 85 percent success rate in treating certain brain tumors where the normal success rate is only 35 percent. Loma Linda, with its newer, more advanced and more powerful equipment, hopes to achieve an even higher success rate and treat many more patients.

Loma Linda's room-sized, $3 million synchrotron, designed and constructed at the Fermi National Accelerator Laboratory near Chicago, will produce a much higher energy stream of protons to bombard deep-seated tumors.

"We want to determine whether this machine (at Loma Linda) has any different characteristics," Robertson said. "They want to be certain that there are no unexpected differences between the two beams and determine if they can use information gained from the Harvard machine directly or will they have to adjust the doses when higher energy protons are used," he said.

In proton therapy, a beam of particles can be delivered at a precisely defined volume without seriously harming surrounding tissue or adjacent vital organs.

Robertson's studies involve the use of cancer cells suspended in gels within a cylinder and placed in the path of the proton beam. Distances, positions and proton energy will be varied. Also, cells will be placed on glass or plastic flasks to determine effects of proton radiation at bone soft tissue interfaces.

This work will be done at the Fermi lab in Batavia, Ill., where "they already have a cave prepared for me in piles of cement blocks," Robertson said. He will collect additional data at Harvard and at Loma Greenville Police Department Crime Prevention Officer Doug Jackson said driveway-paving flim-flammers have recently been seen in the area.

He warns residents not to be talked into quickly negotiated offers to have quick, cut-rate paving jobs done at their homes or business.

"These guys drive up in new pickup trucks with nicely kept equipment and say they have a little bit of asphalt left over from a job and will give you a reduced rate for paving," Jackson said. "Then they proceed to pour the asphalt thinly without any site preparation. What you have is an expensive mess."

Jackson also said the originally quoted price often is increased at the time the money is collected.

He urges that anyone approached with such an offer to call Crimestoppers, 758-7777.

ECU Faculty Members Donate Books To Costa Rican Library

ECU NEWS BUREAU

Engaging in a sort of "voluntary foreign aid," East Carolina University faculty members have collected hundreds of books to help fill the shelves of a new but nearly empty library on a university campus in Costa Rica.

"They're short of dollars to buy the books they need," says geography professor Simon Baker, a co-director of the drive among ECU faculty for contributions of books for the library at Universidad Nacional in Heredia, Costa Rica.

Approximately 700 books, mostly English-language college textbooks in many disciplines, have been collected on campus so far and are being stamped with a message of presentation in Spanish and the respective seals of Universidad Nacional and ECU.

With the assistance of Burroughs Wellcome Co. and local civic clubs, the books are stacked on wooden pallets and covered with plastic for shipment to port at Savannah, Ga. From there, the books will be transported by banana boat to the small Central American republic. Dole Fruit Co. is providing space on the boat.

Most of the students at Heredia can read English, says Baker. He and biology professor Vince Bellis, co-directors of the Books-For-Costa Rica campaign, have been engaged in collecting, stamping and packing the books for shipment.

Both Baker and Bellis have participated in the cooperative Latin American studies program which ECU has had with Universidad Nacional for a number of years. The message being stamped on the books expresses the appreciation and gratitude of ECU for the program.

Oldham Sentenced

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ELIZABETH CITY, N.C. — An owner of the Liberty Tobacco Warehouse in Wilson was put on two years' probation and fined $3,000 for making a false statement to a bank in connection with a loan application.

Robert Oldham of Nashville, Tenn., was sentenced Tuesday by U.S. District Judge Terrence Boyle.

Oldham was a prosecution witness last month in the trial of his partner, J.T. Worthington, and his son, warehouse manager J.T. "Tommy" Worthington Jr., on arson and fraud charges relating to a fire that destroyed the building in 1986. The Worthingtons are from Greenville. Oldham testified in accordance with a plea bargain under which he pleaded guilty to making a false bank statement to Southern National Bank.

The younger Worthington was convicted on 56 of 57 counts of arson and fraud, including a charge of arranging the fire. He could be sentenced to over 200 years in prison and fined over $10 million. The elder Worthington was acquitted of all but one relatively minor charge of making a false statement to the U.S. Agriculture Department on an application for a tobacco marketing card. Both men are awaiting sentencing.

Oldham is the third person to be sentenced for playing a role in the warehouse fire.

Edmund Wayne Hart, a former Ayden resident, and Ronnie Lee Stocks of Ayden were both sentenced March 21 to five years in federal prison. Hart pleaded guilty to setting the fire and testified for the prosecution in the Worthington's trial. Stocks pleaded guilty to conspiring to burn the warehouse. He testified that he was hired on behalf of the Worthingtons to burn the building.

Cash, Gun Reported Missing

Officer C.M. Credle said a circular saw, a television set, a television game, a typewriter, an electric shaver and a radio-tape player, with a combined value of $755, were taken from 1507B N. Washington St. in a break-in reported at 3:40 p.m., while Officer C.J. Melvin said a three-piece patio set was taken from 601 W. Third St. in an incident reported at 6:20 p.m.

Officer L.T. Gray said $20 was taken from a man at a vacated facility behind the Fuel Doc at the intersection of Fifth Street and Memorial Drive in an incident reported at 8:08 p.m., while Officer S.A. Bass said a radio-tape player valued at $780 was taken from a vehicle parked in an alley near the intersection of Fifth and Cotanche streets in an incident reported at 8:42 p.m.

Dominoes

Troubleshooting For The Community

The circumstances that cause a student to drop out of high school are as complex as a rolling set of dominoes. And once they're in motion, they're equally as hard to halt.

With dropouts, the key is not to let the dominoes roll. Prevent that first impact and you've neatly avoided the chain reaction. That's what school at-risk programs are all about — identifying students who may have difficulty, finding them and trying to intervene. In the business world it's called troubleshooting — an aggressive, heads-up way of avoiding problems before they appear.

Pitt's schools focused attention on at-risk students last week with a symposium and dialogue of the roles of school, family and community in reaching these kids. While managing at-risk students is not quite as simple as adjusting a machine or a marketing plan that's not working, the discussion made it clear that troubleshooting can effectively reduce dropouts.

It also became clear Pitt County needs to build its fledgling at-risk program. While the number of dropouts from Pitt's schools increased only by four students from 1985-86 to 1986-87, that number rose by 32 in 1987-88 — from 266 to 298 dropouts in a one-year period. That's a sharp jump, one that merits action.

Pitt's at-risk program has a coordinator but it has no money to operate. That's why a $100,000 expenditure under consideration by the board of education for at-risk programs is timely and needed. If efforts keep more kids in school, the county's investment will be well-placed.

The symposium also made additional factors in the dropout dilemma apparent — factors that also spell a partial solution to the problem. Dropouts frequently come from poor or single parent homes. Many single parents themselves are dropouts. Many have a record of chronic failure at school.

Consider the issue of teen-age pregnancy. According to Project Parenting, a Pitt County program that helps single mothers raise their children while continuing their education, half of the 550 teens expected to get pregnant in the county this year will have their children — and subsequently end their education. Half of that group will have another child as an adolescent. If those projections are accurate, teen-age pregnancy accounts for a huge percentage of the 250-plus dropouts per year Pitt experiences.

What may be less obvious, but more serious, are the effects of dropping out on the community. Those without high school diplomas have a hard time finding jobs. When they secure work, it's often a low-paying position. That means, most often, they live in poverty.

Consider this statistic: over 77 percent of the households below the poverty level in North Carolina are headed by individuals with less than a high school education. While poverty represents its own set of problems, it's clear from this figure that there is a link between dropping out of school and being poor.

The price of that connection is one paid for out of public coffers through increasing dependence on social welfare programs.

It doesn't take a scholar of social statistics to realize that crimes rates run alongside unemployment rates. Robberies, burglaries, murders and assaults increase with each percentage unemployment climbs. Again, the price for that phenomenon is borne by taxpayers — police officers, district attorneys, courtrooms and jails cost money.

All of these factors suggest that keeping kids in school until they get their high school diplomas would better everyone's life. Examining who drops out and why gives the community some idea how to address the problem. If single parents and students with economic hardships could be reached through flexible scheduling and work-school coop programs, more would finish high school. Making instruction relevant to students' needs and teaching pertinent skills could keep others in the classroom.

While these are the tools for the job, early identification of those vulnerable for dropping out provides a head start on the work. An aggressive at-risk program deserves an opportunity to succeed. The money requested will be a good investment if it can stop the dominoes before they roll.

To the editor:

We are humored by a good cartoon, and if accurate, it can teach us something about the world. Ideally, we hope that the humor is rooted in the facts, otherwise someone or some group becomes the victim of unjustifiable ridicule.

Unfortunately the Daily Reflector's cartoonist recently provided an example of inaccuracy (April 6, 1989). In commenting on the recent rise in oil prices, Mr. Barbour pictured a distraught American gazing at the prices on a gasoline pump behind which stand two smiling figures in Arab dress representing OPEC. This creates the erroneous impression that OPEC — which includes non-Arab countries — is behind the price increase, leading the consumer to point the accusing finger in the wrong direction. To my knowledge, the recent news reports do not credit any OPEC action with causing the price increase, but rather, indicate the Exxon oil spill in Alaska to be the major factor. In short, the cartoon was inaccurate and, to those who know no better, productive of misguided laughter.

To the editor:

As a "card-carrying member of the American Civil Liberties Union," I should be joining the nonsensical noise that you, the editor, have been making about the City Council and Faith House. A non-profit organization whose label happens to sound "religious" is not automatically a church. And people who publish newspapers are not automatically honest and professional "journalists."

In the Reflector (April 18, 1989) your editorial and accompanying "cartoon" do a disservice to the City Council and the community. The same Constitution which establishes the concept of separation of church and state also has protected your "right" of freedom of speech in any form you care to exercise it. However, it is unfortunate when "journalists" become so selective (or careless) in the exercise of that freedom.

Your repeated "bad press" as relates to the City Council gives newcomers a biased and misinformed image of the council as if they were a body of bumbling, incompetent elected officials. That's unfair, and I believe, no accident on your part. Do you know something we don't know about "unannounced candidates"?

To the editor:

Recently your paper had an editorial cartoon depicting the "No Vacancy" condition at the Pitt County Jail. This was followed by an editorial calling for funds to be appropriated for new detention facilities.

Why is it that people immediately feel the solution to a problem is to spend money? Perhaps the weekend overcrowded conditions could be alleviated if the weekend population could be housed in a minimum-security facility, i.e. an abandoned tobacco warehouse. Perhaps the detainees could maintain a vegetable garden which could provide produce for those who do not receive three meals a day!

It would be most refreshing to some creative solutions rather than immediately looking to the taxpayers to carry more burden.

To the editor:

How tragic to watch a statesman of virtue nibbled away by politically ravenous and petty men of smaller character and mind. Yet, how typical of Speaker Jim Wright to be willing to take the political heat, standing as a lightning rod for his friends.

Loyalty for friends and respect for foe has gotten the Speaker where he is today. In this long age of reform in the House, Jim Wright became Speaker because his colleagues knew him as steadfast as any knight and as zealous of truth and purity of doctrine as Martin Luther. Yet, cynicism and avarice rule the day and Wright is, therefore, a victim of his single greatest flaw: a genuine blindness to virtually any man's darker side.

In an age of abbreviated information, there isn't time to look beyond the Speaker's groupies and his comparatively small bank account, to see an almost unbelievably sincere and accomplished individual born to the job.

No Exemptions For The Press

WASHINGTON — The Washington Post, in a frenzy of sanctimony not seen here since the Ayatollah's minions sacked the Iranian Embassy's wine cellars, has — like the French revolution — turned on itself. In the course of publishing a list of honoraria bagged by members of Congress, the Post asked some columnists to disclose for publication what we have earned in speaking fees. Thus, I met my ignominy.

That this should happen to me proves that John F. Kennedy was right: Life is not fair. In an earlier article, I pointed out that a press that incessantly asks for an accounting from Congress (How much did you make and from whom did you make it?) would be asked to account for itself: From whence do we get our money — and does it affect our journalism?

And so it came to pass that a certain Eleanor Randolph, the Post's media reporter, asked me about my last month's booty. I supplied it: A speech to a county association of school librarians ($500); one to civilian Air Force workers ($200) and an address to a conference on aging ($2,555).

Ridicule greeted my disclosures and I feared reprimand from the Benevolent Protective Order of Newspaper Columnists (BPONC.) William Safire reported $18,000 for a single speech. David Broder got $6,000. David Gergen of U.S. News and World Report turns out to be the Willie Loman of journalism — on the road incessantly. For his smile and shewshine, a group must generally pay at least $5,000.

Others would not cooperate. George Will's assistant said he did not have the time — nor, we may suppose, the will — to address the issue. James J. Kilpatrick said his speaking fees were his own affair. Ditto, said Robert Novak and his partner, Rowland Evans. Similarly, Hugh Sidey of Time magazine said the public speeches he gives are "private" as did Chris Matthews, who said he feared being undersold.

As for me, shame was my lot. I was told I had sold myself too cheaply, although, to be candid, the groups that paid me seemed to think they had overbid. I expected a call from Brother Safire, High Exalted Quill of the BPONC, with the news that I would be accused of the lecture circuit equivalent of "dumping." I expected to hear from Pat Buchanan ($10,000 a speech) who has been unselfish in the cause of selfishness, having once taken an enormous pay cut to work in Ronald Reagan's White House. Brother Buchanan, chairperson of the BPONC's Francisco Franco chapter, would probably call for my ouster.

Richard

So ashamed was I that I did not admit that I occasionally speak for free (as others do). And, worse, I found myself in uncharacteristic sympathy with members of Congress, especially those who fault the press for the way this whole ethics matter has been handled. In the process of cleansing itself, Washington has lost sight of the distinction between the appearance of a conflict of interest and the real thing. There is a difference.

The mere listing of honoraria tells the reader little. Did the money I receive affect my journalism? Did I write something — or not write something — because there was money on the line? Did my speaking in any way constitute a conflict of interest? Aside from a voyeuristic cheap thrill (Wow! Safire, $18,000 a pop!), does the public now know something crucial that it did not know before?

Nevertheless, for journalists, this sudden introspection is a healthy thing. Some of us now know what it is like to be bathed in the spotlight of media attention, only to have it move on before we can offer explanations. The quick hit is surely discomfiting and it explains why Congress seethes with resentment toward the press. We sometimes tend to confuse the appearance of a conflict of interest with the real thing and — to be perfectly candid — we sometimes pander to the public's envy of the affluent. 'Twas envy that helped kill the congressional pay hike.

But the press cannot exempt itself from the rules we apply to others. True, we make no laws and order no troops into battle. But it would be yet another violation of BPONC rules to affect a false modesty: We have our influence, help set the national agenda and, from time to time, assist in the obliteration of a public official. To see what I mean, try calling John Tower at the Pentagon.

For all its imperfections, such reporting of both journalistic and congressional honoraria has its benefits. No report can be so complete as to answer all questions. My momentary discomfort provides the reader with the potential opportunity to connect something I wrote with a speech I have given. A press that is institutionally crazed on the subject of disclosure cannot exempt itself from its own madness.

If the people have a right to know, they have a right to know. My life is now an open book. Is it my fault, it is such dull reading?

House Approves Bill Reorganizing N.C. Wildlife Resources Commission

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — The North Carolina Wildlife Resources Commission could be dissolved as early as this week with new appointments designed to reduce its political activities under a bill approved by the House.

Gov. Jim Martin sought the bill after some commissioners became more involved in administrative matters such as the promotion of wildlife officers than in wildlife regulations.

"We all recognize that they have problems over there," Rep. Dan DeVane, D-Hoke said after the vote. "I'm confident that the governor will appoint good people back on there and they'll continue to do a good job."

DeVane successfully moved to have an immediate vote on the bill, which had been debated nearly an hour Tuesday before receiving tentative approval.

The bill, approved 80-30 on Wednesday, will become law if the Senate agrees to a House amendment to keep linking commissioners with wildlife districts. That vote could come as early as today.

The Senate had approved a provision to use congressional districts, hoping to further insulate commissioners from politics. But opponents said wildlife districts are better suited to the needs of sportsmen.

"I think the Senate will concur," said Ward Purrington, Martin's legislative liaison. "It sailed through the Senate the first time, so I don't see any problems."

The bill would terminate all current commissioners while giving the governor the power to remove appointees at his pleasure in the future. It would eliminate the current process requiring that the governor choose from people nominated through district elections.

Most of Tuesday's debate focused on efforts to keep district-level commissioner elections alive.

But DeVane said only one-tenth of 1 percent of the population of the state is involved in such elections.

DeVane said the controversy stemmed from pockets of sportsmen in various parts of the state and from some disgruntled former commissioners.

But he added, "A lot of people, including former commissioners, agreed that district elections were a joke."

Student Defends Funding For Gays

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — Gene Davis, a student government leader at UNC-Chapel Hill, has never supported allocating student funds to a campus group for gay men and lesbians. But he got furious when a state lawmaker moved to prohibit using tax dollars or student fees for such organizations.

"Its goal is to destroy the rights of students and of the university ... to control their own student fees," Davis said of the bill introduced by Rep. Steve Arnold, R-Guilford.

"It is unrepugnant and undemocratic," Davis said Wednesday. "This bill has the sickening stench of the speaker ban law of 1963. We are here to try to prevent a repeat of one of the ugliest events in the history of North Carolina."

The measure would require that "no state funds and no student fees are used, whether directly or indirectly, to permit or promote any gay or lesbian association or any other community or campus organization that advocates immoral, illegal or criminal behavior" at any of the 16 UNC institutions or the 58 community colleges.

Homosexual groups also would be barred from using campus buildings and facilities.

Hennis hugs daughter after jury cleared him of murder

Army Sergeant Wins Freedom

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WILMINGTON, N.C. — An Army sergeant who was sentenced to death for the murders of a woman and two of her children was acquitted in a retrial and will return to his military post.

Timothy Hennis was to report today to Fort Bragg and then transfer to Fort Knox, Ky., where he is still assigned to the personnel control facility. He retained his rank throughout the trial and appeal.

Hennis, 31, was acquitted Wednesday and jumped when the verdict was read. He then broke into tears.

"I missed my wife, and I missed my daughter, especially my daughter," he said, calling the last four years a nightmare.

In May 1985, Hennis was charged with murder in the deaths of Kathryn Eastburn, 32, her daughters Kara, 5, and Erin, 3. He also was charged with raping Mrs. Eastburn.

"I personally didn't feel at any time that he was proven guilty," said New Hanover County Superior Court juror Kenneth Wells. "For a lot of us, it was a pretty quick decision to make."

The jury deliberated a little more than two hours. Some jurors remained in the courthouse to hug Hennis, his family and attorneys.

One juror said a key to the acquittal was the prosecution's failure to prove that Hennis was inside the Eastburn house on the night of the slayings.

The second trial included testimony from a new witness who said he often took walks at night in clothing similar to what a witness in the original trial said he saw Hennis wearing that night.

ing that night.

Hennis told police when he was arrested that he had been at the Eastburn's house earlier in the day in response to an advertisement they had placed in the newspaper seeking a home for their dog. But he denied he was there later that night.

Opponents of a panel on adolescent pregnancy stand to be heard at meeting in Raleigh

Critics Say Pregnancy Panel Would Become Pro-Abortion

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — A state adolescent pregnancy commission would quickly evolve into an arm of the pro-abortion movement, opponents of establishing such a panel charged at a legislative hearing.

But others said a statewide approach to the "tragedy" of adolescent pregnancy was needed and that North Carolina should not base its policy on a naive hope that youngsters will abstain from sex.

"Just say no" will not continue to work. It has not worked when it's the only thing that you do. We must do more," Barbara Ziegler, founder of the North Carolina Coalition on Adolescent Pregnancy, said at a public hearing Wednesday before the House Human Resources Subcommittee on Families, Children and Youth.

"We do not need to promote promiscuity any more than we've already promoted it," replied Debra Wilson of Hendersonville, who said the proposed commission would not put enough emphasis on promoting abstinence. "Morality is going downhill."

About 100 people attended the hearing before the House Human Resources Subcommittee on Families, Children and Youth, which is considering a bill to establish the commission. A similar measure is pending before the Senate Children and Youth Committee, which postponed action Wednesday.

After the House subcommittee hearing, the activists fanned out and lobbied their local legislators. Opponents were easily visible as they sported paper badges in the shape of a schoolhouse reading, "No School-Based Clinics." Supporters wore tags reading, "Say Yes to Prevention."

Sponsored by Rep. Luther Jerald, D-Cumberland, the House bill would establish a 15-member commission within the Division of Health Services with members appointed by the governor, House speaker and Senate president pro tem and representatives of youth advocacy groups.

The commission would issue yearly reports to the Legislature on the status of North Carolina's adolescent pregnancy problem and would award grants and provide technical assistance to local pregnancy prevention programs.

N.C. State Asks Funds For Study

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — Even after 15 years of studying tornadoes, some of the characteristics of the twisters that tore through eastern North Carolina in November are still a mystery to North Carolina State University professor Charles Anderson.

"As somebody said, 'Why does it go here and go there?'" Anderson said. "Well, it's like a 2,000-pound gorilla, they go where they want to go and do what they want to do."

The storms Nov. 28 killed four people and caused more than $70 million in damage in the eastern part of the state.

Anderson announced Wednesday that NCSU will ask the National Science Foundation for a $100,000 grant to continue research on the November tornadoes.

Anderson, a professor in the Department of Marine, Earth and Atmospheric Sciences, headed a tornado open house on the campus as about 100 curious onlookers gazed at maps, drawings, videos and slides of the storm.

The study was awarded a $5,000 foundation grant to get started, but Anderson said he asked for more money to continue educating the public about tornadoes.

"We are talking about $250,000 homes that were blown over so that you can see the beams of the floor," he said. "But they were not only blown over, they were blown apart."

"It was like the story of the three little piggies," Anderson said. "I'm going to blow your house down and that's exactly what they did. This is awesome."

Mary Yionoulis, who works at N.C. State, got a personal invitation to the open house from Anderson. Mrs. Yionoulis' house was destroyed in the storm, but her family was in Washington and wasn't home to face the night of horror.

Waste Producers Seek New Sites For Disposal

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — The Tar Heel manufacturers that were shipping their hazardous waste to a South Carolina landfill are turning to other states for help or are disposing the waste at their plants.

"We had to scramble around and find someone else," Tom Finger, president of Asheville Metal Finishing Inc., in Asheville, said in a telephone interview Wednesday.

"I think we're going to eventually have to do it (create a waste facility in North Carolina)," Finger said. I think the sooner the better."

South Carolina Gov. Carroll Campbell placed a March 1 ban on accepting North Carolina's hazardous waste at the GSX landfill in Pinewood, S.C., where more than 250 Tar Heel companies buried some 40,000 tons of waste in 1988.

Campbell temporarily lifted the ban after the state Senate passed legislation that would renew North Carolina's search for its own waste disposal facility, but reimposed it two weeks later.

The comprehensive hazardous-waste bill, backed by Gov. Jim Martin, was unanimously passed by the Senate, but has been held up by debate in a House subcommittee.

James Hackim, general manager of GKN Automotive Inc. in Lee County, which generated 511,000 pounds of hazardous waste last year, has written Rep. Dennis Wicker, D-Lee about the dilemma. Wicker's subcommittee is considering the hazardous waste legislation.

"We are the world's largest supplier of front-wheel drive components and we have nowhere to send our waste," Hackim wrote.

Finger's company, which sent about 6,300 pounds of electroplating sludge to the GSX landfill in 1988, began shipping the waste to the Chem Met landfill in Wyandotte, Mich., last November because of a backlog at the South Carolina site.

"It (the South Carolina ban) did not really affect us that much other than the transportation cost was more — about 25 percent more," he said.

However, Stanadyne Inc. of Sanford, which makes plumbing fixtures, has seen its transportation costs increase by about 75 percent since the South Carolina ban.

Stanadyne is now shipping oil filtration waste to the Cecos International landfill in Livingstone, La., said Wayne Miller, chemical engineering project specialist.

"We're looking for alternate sources," Miller said. "It's a big burden on a company to have to go so far away. It's also a risk because ... there's more chance for accident on that long traveled road there."

"It was only about a three- to four-hour drive to Pinewood," he said. "Now you're looking at 12 to 15 hours on the road."

Figures supplied by the state Department of Commerce show the company shipped more than 67,000 pounds of waste to GSX in 1987.

Steve Reid, a spokesman for the Solid Waste Management Section of the state Department of Human Resources, said some companies are shipping their waste to the Chem-Waste landfill in Emelle, Ala. However, Alabama is considering following South Carolina's lead in rejecting out-of-state waste.

"Small-quantity generators will probably be most affected," he said. "They won't be able to absorb the increased costs of transportation ... to other suitable disposal sites."

Mallinckrodt Raleigh Chemical, a maker of the drug acetaminophen, which is used in such pain relievers as Tylenol and Anacin 3, has not been significantly affected, said spokesman Ron Harding.

"Over the past couple of years, we have explored avenues that include waste minimization and alternative disposal methods such as incineration," he said.

Bid Made To Halt NCNB Takeover

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

A Georgia lawmaker has asked Congress to consider legislation designed to block a multibillion dollar takeover bid by NCNB Corp. of Charlotte for The Citizens and Southern Corp. in Atlanta.

The legislation would bar hostile bids by banks that already receive federal aid to rescue troubled banks.

The move is a result of a political strategy designed by Virginia banks worried that NCNB might turn its sights on them should it be successful in buying C&S, Georgia's biggest bank.

The Virginia banks garnered the support of C&S, which in turn reportedly persuaded Sen. Wyche Fowler Jr., D-Ga., to ask Congress to consider the legislation.

The proposal, which Fowler made Wednesday on the Senate floor, was backed by Sen. Terry Sanford, D-N.C., a member of the Senate Banking Committee. It also was backed by senators from Alabama, Virginia and Tennessee.

Fowler asked the Senate to consider the legislation as part of the bailout package for the savings and loan industry. But Sen. Donald Riegle Jr., D-Mich., balked at attaching an amendment to the S&L bill, which he said could delay that bill's approval.

It then was suggested that the legislation be considered in hearings. Those hearings are expected to begin within 60 days.

So far, the C&S board has twice rejected NCNB's takeover bid and has refused to negotiate with the Charlotte-based bank.

Senate Leaders Exchange Barbs In Debate Over Jobs

By John Flesher
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — A proposal to eliminate 542 vacant state jobs sparked a vitriolic exchange during a Senate committee meeting, as a Republican leader complained of backroom tactics and the Democratic chairman retorted, "go to hell."

The Senate Appropriations Committee voted Wednesday to abolish the jobs, which are classified as "non-critical," to increase the supply of money for new and expanded programs in the next two years.

Senate GOP leader Larry Cobb of Mecklenburg County complained that senators hadn't been given adequate notice of the leadership's plan and that no list of the jobs involved had been distributed.

"Let's not go back to the old ways of jamming things through without everybody knowing what's in them," Cobb said.

Sen. Marc Basnight, D-Dare, chairman of the Base Budget Committee, said no effort was being made to keep anyone in the dark.

"We're trying to save money however we can and as efficiently as we can," he said, adding that most of the disputed jobs were for "coffee makers and coffee drinkers."

The Senate voted to eliminate 98 positions per year as part of its $7.1 billion budget bill for existing programs approved last week. The bill called for about $40 million in cuts from continuing programs. If approved, the reduction of 542 additional jobs would boost that figure to $54 million.

The additional job cuts were proposed first during a meeting of the Appropriations Committee leadership, when staffers reported that $220 million would be available for permanent additions to the budget next year and $681.2 million in 1990-91.

The $220 million is far less than needed for big-ticket items such as continued implementation of the Basic Education Program, a 6 percent raise for teachers and state employees, and state employee health insurance premium increases.

Sen. Kenneth Royall, D-Durham, chairman of the Appropriations Committee, said some of the 542 jobs might be restored if state agency leaders persuade legislative budget subcommittees they are needed.

"You've got to start somewhere in a tight budget year," Royall said.

The jobs targeted for elimination range from the governor's research director, a post opened when Martin appointed Charles Hughes to the state Utilities Commission, to numerous clerk-typists in the University of North Carolina system and other government agencies.

The proposed cuts go beyond what Martin wanted, said Marvin Dor-man, deputy state budget officer.

"There has to be a certain amount of flexibility left with the departments and that includes allowing them to maintain a level of vacant positions that they can use for managing their programs on a day-to-day basis," Dorman said.

Shortly before the Senate floor session adjourned, Basnight announced the Appropriations Committee would meet immediately afterward to consider the proposed job cuts.

Cobb accused Basnight of violating Senate rules by calling a committee meeting without adequate notice.

Republican Lt. Gov. Jim Gardner, the Senate's presiding officer, ruled in Cobb's favor. But the Senate, dominated by Democrats, voted 32-9 along partisan lines to suspend its rules and allow the meeting.

The panel met on the floor, with members standing around Basnight's desk. Cobb and Royall, who stood near the back of the group, jabbered at each other.

"It's right back to where you and Billy were," Cobb said, an apparent reference to Rep. Billy Watkins, D-Granville, the former House budget chairman with whom Royall conducted private budget negotiations last year. "Nobody knows..."

"Go to hell, Larry," Royall retorted. "I ain't having no more to do with you."

"OK," Cobb said. "You know you're doing wrong. That's why you're saying that."

Cobb later asked when he could call administration officials and ask their opinion of the proposed cuts. "Any damn time you want to,"

Royall replied.

"You're voting on it right now," Cobb protested.

"We're voting to put it in a bill," Royall said. "When it gets to the floor, you can say what you damn please. ... You're just trying to be a damn hero."

After the meeting broke up, Royall said Cobb had been "grandstanding."

Cobb later downplayed the argument. "We've exchanged words before," he said. "We've been friends for a long time."

School Shooting

CHARLOTTE (AP) — A Charlotte high school student who wounded two spectators and a coach at a football game last September fired in self-defense, jurors decided.

A Mecklenburg Superior Court jury of 10 women and two men deliberated for about 4½ hours Wednesday before acquitting Donnell Logan, 17.

The Sept. 2 shootings at Garringer High School's football stadium shook the community and heightened fears of guns in schools. Officials doubled security at football games and even considered using metal detectors at games.

Jury foreman Vivian Price said the public should not misunderstand the verdicts.

Logan testified that he fired as he and his cousin Albert Hankerson were being attacked by a gang. Logan pulled a .22-caliber pistol from his pants and fired four times, hitting Michael Lineberger, 18, in the shoulder and Keith Alan Jones, 20, in the stomach. The coach was hit by a stray bullet.

Water Briefings

OXFORD, N.C. (AP) — The Roanoke River Basin Association will hold briefings Monday to assure people that the fight to stop Virginia Beach from withdrawing its water from Lake Gaston is far from over.

Virginia Beach and some other Tidewater Virginia cities have been seeking federal permits for several years to build an 84-mile pipeline from the Tidewater area to Lake Gaston on the North Carolina-Virginia line.

The Roanoke River Basin Association, an organization composed of citizens and governments of towns and counties all along the Roanoke River, and the state of North Carolina have led a fight in federal courts against Virginia Beach's plans for several years.

The association will hold meetings at 9 a.m. and 1 p.m. Monday.

EPA Hearing

RALEIGH (AP) — After a one-year delay, the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency has renewed its proposal to revoke North Carolina's authority to manage hazardous wastes, EPA officials said Wednesday.

The EPA has rescheduled public hearings on the proposal for May 31 through June 2 at the McKimmon Center in Raleigh.

GSX Services Inc. asked the environmental agency in September 1987 to revoke the state's waste-management authority after the General Assembly passed a law that virtually barred the company from building a hazardous-waste treatment plant it had planned in Scotland County.

The EPA initially complied with the request, scheduling public hearings on the proposal for January 1988. But the federal agency rescheduled the hearings several times before announcing in August that it had postponed the meetings until further notice. In December, GSX asked a federal court to require the EPA to reschedule the hearings.

Heart Disease

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (AP) — North Carolina's death rate from heart disease has improved with the rest of the nation in the last 20 years. But a gap remains between some Southeastern states and the rest of the country, officials say.

North Carolina, South Carolina and Georgia show "a very marked concentration of cardiac mortality," said Dr. Gerardo Heiss, professor of epidemiology at the University of North Carolina School of Public Health.

Heiss is studying regional variations in heart attack mortality as part of a six-year, $12.6 million nationwide project to study the progression of heart disease.

Coast Guard Studies Delay In Relay

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WINSTON-SALEM — An emergency transmitter saved the lives of eight people who were stranded in the Atlantic Ocean, but the U.S. Coast Guard is investigating why seven hours passed before rescue attempts began.

Lt. Commander Ernest Fink says he wants to know why the signals from the radio beacon on Saturday were not picked up sooner by the satellite network that monitors the beacons.

Six people from northwestern North Carolina and the two-man crew of the Connie D floated on a life raft for 10 hours off the coast of South Carolina before they were rescued by a Coast Guard helicopter.

The 45-foot wooden boat was about 33 miles south of Little River, S.C., when it caught fire about 9:15 a.m. Saturday. When the crew and passengers abandoned the boat, Capt. Mike Brewster took the emergency beacon with him and switched it on, one of the passengers, Terry Lawson of East Bend, said.

But after several miserable hours passed and no rescuers arrived, everyone in the tiny raft began to wonder whether the transmitter was working and whether they would ever be rescued, he said.

Fink said the transmitter, which was inspected by the Coast Guard in March, probably was working properly. The problem, he said, may be somewhere in the elaborate network of satellites, computers and people that listens for calls of distress.

Lt. Commander Jon Embler, a Coast Guard officer in Washington, D.C., said about 200,000 emergency transmitters are in use nationwide. About 50,000 of the transmitters are on boats, he said. The others are on aircraft.

False alarms are common, he said. Of about 7,000 alerts relayed by the satellites during the first quarter of 1988, 13 turned out to be actual emergencies, Embler said. Most of the other alerts were accidents or were caused by electronic signals that didn't come from an emergency beacon.

Study Says Seas Warming Faster

NEW YORK (AP) — The world's oceans and seas have been warming at about one-fifth of a degree Fahrenheit a year, about twice as fast as previous observations indicated, says a study published today.

The new work is based on satellite observations, which provide more complete information than previous data from ships and buoys, said researcher A.E. Strong.

The increase in sea-surface temperatures was observed from January 1982 to mid-1988, Strong reports in today's issue of the British journal Nature.

The observed rate is faster than most scientists have expected from the greenhouse effect, a predicted global warming due to buildup of carbon dioxide and other gases in the atmosphere, Strong said in a telephone interview.

But it is premature to regard the findings as evidence of the greenhouse effect, said Strong, a research oceanographer with the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration and currently a visiting scientist at the U.S. Naval Academy in Annapolis, Md.

The findings may reflect only a temporary change rather than the long-term warming predicted from the greenhouse effect, he said. Researchers lack comparable satellite data from previous years for longer-term analysis, he said.

The average water temperature actually dropped about nine-tenths of a degree during 1988, but has risen about two-fifths of a degree this year through March, reaching a mark of about 66 degrees, he said.

The averages were derived from some 2 million to 3 million satellite observations a month, covering a global band that extends as far north as the southern tip of Greenland and farther south than the tip of South America.

Senate Approves Bush S&L Bailout Plan After Allowing Amendments

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Senators threatened with a disrupted vacation overwhelmingly adopted President Bush's savings and loan rescue after bowing to a last-minute plea to strengthen a key reform.

Dwarfing all other government bailouts, the plan approved Wednesday would provide at least $157 billion over the next decade — most of it from taxpayers — to close or merge 350 failed thrift institutions and make good on government pledges in the rescue of 200 others last year.

It would also reorganize the regulatory bureaucracy, provide $50 million a year for the Justice Department to pursue fraud in S&Ls and enact other reforms, chief among them a requirement that thrift owners back their lending with more of their own capital.

The ultimate passage of the bill was never in doubt, but Sen. Howard M. Metzenbaum, D-Ohio, was threatening to prolong debate, which began Monday, into the weekend unless senators agreed to tougher capital requirements.

Sen. Donald W. Riegle Jr., D-Mich., chairman of the Senate Banking Committee, and Sen. Jake Garn of Utah, the panel's senior Republican, had been resisting amendments, arguing that the package put together privately by the committee and endorsed by a 21-0 vote last week was too delicately balanced to withstand many changes without crumbling.

But only five minutes before the scheduled start of an 11-day recess, Metzenbaum succeeded in wresting concessions that allowed senators to adopt the bill, 91-8, and leave town until May 1.

The committee's bill had doubled capital standards, requiring S&L owners to come up with $6 for every $100 in lending, compared with the current requirement of $3.

However, it provided a big loophole for about a third of the nation's 3,000 S&Ls by allowing an accounting item known as "goodwill" to be counted as capital for the next 25 years. Good will represents the value of an institution's customer loyalty and other intangible assets.

Declaring that "goodwill isn't worth doodly-doo," Metzenbaum insisted that S&Ls have at least 1.5 percent in "tangible capital" — cash, stocks and property that could easily be converted to cash and could be seized, in the event of a failure, before turning to government deposit insurance funds.

Metzenbaum had sought 3 percent tangible capital, but in the end had to accept 1.5 percent. Regulators will have the authority to restrict the growth of institutions falling below that level.

"I can't say I'm satisfied with the result that has been obtained. ... I can say substantive progress has been made," Metzenbaum said.

Treasury Secretary Nicholas F. Brady praised the bill, saying, "We ... applaud the Senate's efforts to maintain strong capital requirements."

Metzenbaum was urged on by two groups — Consumer Federation of America and Consumers Union — that decided to emphasize capital as an important consumer issue.

Death Row Inmates Foiled In Escape

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

HUNTSVILLE, Texas — Two death row inmates constructed dummies, squeezed through a small air vent and were saving their way out of prison when they were caught, but they say the two hours of "freedom" were worth it.

"You can't blame a guy for trying," says James Paster.

He made the comment in an interview Wednesday, a week after he and cellmate Noble Mays wiggled out their cell and into a utility corridor where they tried to saw through a ceiling exhaust fan.

Said Paster: "I felt like I was doing something for myself instead of waiting for relief from the very people who had sent me here."

Mays added: "You just try to work as fast as you can and as quiet as you can. I wasn't out to hurt anybody."

Paster, 44, a former lounge singer and Elvis Presley impersonator, is awaiting death for a 1980 contract killing in Houston. Mays, 35, was sentenced to die for a 1979 robbery and stabbing death in Wichita Falls.

Guards noticed the pair was missing in the early hours of April 11 when a nurse who was supposed to give Mays some medication could not awaken him from outside the pair's cell.

When guards opened the cell door, they discovered the men in the bunks really were dummies made of clothing stuffed with newspapers and tobacco cans.

They also discovered the tiny vent to a corridor behind the cells was really cardboard.

Mays and Paster were discovered hiding above some pipes, about 15 to 20 feet from their cell. With Paster acting as lookout, Mays was trying to saw through bars that blocked a large exhaust fan to the roof on their wing of the Ellis Unit of the Texas Department of Corrections outside Huntsville.

"The next stop would have put you about 100 yards from the fence," Mays said.

Now, the two are confined in separate cells known as administrative segregation, the maximum security on the Texas death row. They also have been barred from participating in the death-row work program.

Prison officials say no inmates have ever escaped from death row at the Ellis Unit.

But that didn't deter Mays.

"What are they going to do to me?" he said. "We weren't out to hurt anybody. Neither of us had weapons or anything."

"I'm sure everybody would love to pull something like that off," he said.

Both men laughed about how they must have looked as they struggled to fit through the tiny vent that led outside their cell.

"I still don't know how I got out," Mays said.

"I still got pieces of my hide hanging there," Paster added.

Paster said Mays went through the hole first — and then got stuck.

"I greased him up while he was caught up in there," Paster said. "After I quit laughing so hard, I finally decided to grease him up."

He said he used several bottles of hair tonic as a lubricant.

Both men said a guard patrolling the area came so close to finding them that they could have touched him. But Mays had unscrewed a light bulb, making it difficult to see.

NCSU Center

GREENSBORO (AP) — A top official of the U.S. Department of Agriculture said Wednesday that a new $1.7 million research facility at N.C. A&T State University "is a center that will be heard from for many years and will help many people in the United States."

John Patrick Jordan, administrator of the USDA's Cooperative State Research Service, was keynote speaker at the dedication of the Charles Moore Agricultural Research Facility. The facility is the first phase of a $4 million USDA grant to A&T.

North Portrayed As Sacrificial Lamb For Reagan

By Dennis Bell
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — Oliver North's lawyer concluded his defense Wednesday by calling North a "sacrificial lamb" who intended to commit no crimes and who was held "hostage" for the misdeeds of former President Reagan and others.

In a final day of summations, Brendan Sullivan dissected the criminal charges against his client and highlighted the elements that he said should trouble the jury.

In the prosecution's second and final summation, special federal prosecutor John Kecker said Sullivan's arguments were excuses, not legal defenses. "This is Oliver North's trial," Kecker said, adding that the possible guilt of other former high-level Reagan administration officials in the Iran-Contra scandal is irrelevant.

"The man who held the lives of others in his hands is putting his life in your hands. In a sense, he's been a hostage," Sullivan told the nine women and three men on the jury. "Based on the evidence, I'm asking you to set him free."

North, a former Marine colonel, is charged with 12 criminal counts, including lying to Congress and the attorney general, and altering and shredding government documents to hide his role in the scheme to send weapons to the Nicaraguan rebels during the 1984-86 period when such aid was illegal.

He is also charged with illegally converting traveler's checks to his own use, accepting an unlawful gratuity and conspiracy to defraud the U.S. Treasury. If convicted, he could receive prison terms totaling 60 years and fines of $3 million.

Sullivan said that North had not perjured himself because he never took an oath. He said that North sometimes helped his bosses concoct false statements submitted to Congress and asked how he could be accused of misleading them when they knew what he was doing.

And former Attorney General Edwin Meese III testified that he was just gathering facts for Reagan, not conducting an official inquiry, when North withheld crucial facts concerning the scheme to overcharge the Iranians for arms and divert more than $12 million of the excess profit to the Contras.

North is not a tax lawyer and didn't give wealthy Contra contributors advice when they took illegal income tax deductions for their donations to buy guns for the rebels, Sullivan said. And, he said, North did not directly ask for the contributions, but simply described the desperate needs of the ragtag rebel army. North was out of the room when fund-raisers actually stuck out their hands for checks, testimony showed.

"Ollie North has been described as a virtual one-man crime wave. He goes to a meeting, it's a crime. He looks at his boss' letter, it's a crime," Sullivan said indignantly, referring to the counts relating to lies to Congress. He said that Reagan met with wealthy Contra contributors and thanked them for their help.

"What is the difference between what the president did and (what) Oliver North did?" Sullivan asked. "The president is happily retired in California, and Ollie North has been in Washington 2½ years fighting for his reputation."

In his final time at the lectern, Kecker asked each of the jurors to put themselves in North's shoes. "If you had done the things Oliver North has done ... wouldn't you expect to be convicted? Of course you would," Kecker said.

"Perhaps your lawyer, in an effort to explain the unexplainable, would attack the government's lawyers ... but as you've heard, it's all sound and fury signifying nothing," Kecker said.

He said that the government doesn't have to show North intended to violate a particular section of the criminal code, only that he intended to lie. Kecker pointed out that Sullivan had ignored North's "absurd" testimony that he could pay $8,038 in cash for a used car because he had $15,000 in cash in metal box in his closet.

Kecker asked the jury not to be misled by North's "sacrificial lamb ... fall-guy defense." He explained the origin of the term fall guy as slang for a boxer who intentionally lost a fight. "The fall guy is guilty. The winner is guilty. The people who pay them are guilty. They're all guilty."

Chemical Firms Say They Will Fight Proposed Tax On Profits

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The Bush administration plans to siphon off $2.45 billion from profits of companies making ozone-depleting chemicals over the next three years, a proposal that has infuriated the industry and may spark a fight in Congress.

The administration wants the money but doesn't want to call it a tax.

But that's just what it sounds like to the largest manufacturer of chlorofluorocarbons, Du Pont.

"They'll be sued. We will challenge it for sure," said a company official, Tony Vogelsberg.

The target for the revenue raising is windfall profits that chemical firms could earn after an international treaty reduces supplies of chlorofluorocarbons, which destroy the ozone layer and increase risk of skin cancer.

Rep. John D. Dingell, D-Mich., chairman of the influential House Energy and Commerce Committee, says the administration has "no specific authority to levy a tax on ... these commodities," and cautioned against bypassing his committee or ignoring Congress' taxing authority.

Dingell, however, indicated he hasn't formed a final opinion. "I don't have any dogs in the fight at this particular time," he said.

To complicate matters, the Environmental Protection Agency and the Office of Management and Budget are at odds over how to collect the money. OMB wants to auction off rights to produce a specific amount of CFCs. EPA favors a more straightforward fee on company profits.

OMB has budgeted $400 million in revenues in fiscal 1990, $1.5 billion in 1991 and $550 million in 1992. The first-year revenue figures survived an overall budget agreement between congressional negotiators and the administration.

Both agencies agree, however — and the industry hotly denies — that there will be windfall profits for manufacturers later this year, after the U.S. begins implementing a 1987 international agreement to cut production of the so-called CFCs.

The government's theory is that demand will far outstrip supply some months after July, when production must be frozen at 1986 levels. The Montreal Protocol requires that by 1998, production can be only 50 percent of 1986 figures.

The five manufacturers of CFCs are developing substitutes, but they are three to five years away from production. EPA spokesman Chris Rice said the companies may not hurry to produce them if they're making windfall profits on current CFCs.

Soviet Skimmer Joins Effort To Clean Up Exxon Oil Spill

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SEWARD, Alaska — A Soviet oil-skimmer joined the battle today to clean Resurrection Bay just six months after a similar superpower cooperative effort helped free two whales trapped in ice.

Soviet Capt. Serge Rekin, piloting the ultramodern oil-skimmer Vaidogubsky, was set to help in the cleanup of the gooey sludge left by the wreck of the Exxon Valdez. Last October, the icebreaker Vladimir Arseniev smashed through ice near Barrow, helping to free California gray whales.

"We really appreciated your being here, captain," Exxon spokesman

Don Cornett told Rekin through an interpreter on Wednesday. "This is the second time people from your country have come to the aid of the people of Alaska, and we thank you."

Rekin said he had little information about the task he faced but that he wanted to begin work as quickly as possible. The 425-foot Soviet skimmer is far bigger than any of the 20 or so skimmers that Exxon has used so far.

As immigration and customs officials worked Wednesday to approve the vessel, children on the dock happily swapped candy with Soviet crew members. Jackie Phillips and a few of her friends stretched on tiptoes to hand cookies to the Soviets. "It's just a friendly gesture," she said.

Officials are hoping the Vaidogubsky can vacuum up much of the 10.1 million gallons of crude oil dumped into Prince William Sound on March 24, when the Exxon Valdez slammed aground on Bligh Reef outside Valdez.

Escapees

AHOSKIE (AP) — Two prisoners seized a gun from a Hertford County deputy and escaped from a patrol car that was taking them to prison, prompting a manhunt with bloodhounds and helicopters.

The men, who escaped Tuesday night, remained at large Wednesday night. They are considered dangerous.

"Both of them have records of being very violent," Chief Deputy Ronnie Stallings said.

Stallings said one of the escapees, Warren Julius Stevenson, 19, was serving a sentence at Blanch Youth Center and had been in Winton for a court appearance on charges related to assault with a deadly weapon. The other escapee, James Garfield Bunch, 34, had been in the Hertford County Jail awaiting trial on charges of armed robbery and assault, and inflicting serious injury, and was being taken to Central Prison in Raleigh.

Protesters

RALEIGH (AP) — Nine abortion protesters arrested at a Raleigh abortion clinic in March were found guilty Wednesday of trespassing, but six of them appealed the decision.

Wake County District Court Judge Fred M. Morelock sentenced the defendants to 30 days in jail, but suspended the sentence for one year on the condition that they each pay a $200 fine and court costs. But six defendants appealed the decision to Superior Court, two opted to serve 30 days in jail, and one paid the fine.

The judge also ordered them to stay off the present premises of the Women's Health Organization clinic and a new building where the clinic is relocating.

Runoff Bill Advances

did not receive over 50 percent of the vote.

Despite winning under the current system, Garrett said his situation was a rarity.

"I am opposed to the second primary. My rationale is, my victory in the second primary was the unusual, not the regular," he said. "Plus the fact is, although I won, it was too expensive. The whole campaign cost me in excess of $50,000, including legal fees, loss of (time away from) the business and everything else. I'm utterly opposed to second primaries."

The second primaries drag out the election procedure, he said, thus costing the taxpayers more money.

"Not only is it expensive to the candidates, it is tremendously expensive to the taxpayers. Here in Pitt County, the second primary cost the taxpayers in excess of $20,000 to $30,000. It's just too expensive."

The current bill states that the person with the most votes in the initial primary would win, he said, and the measure does not require candidates to win a minimum percentage. However, there will likely be some changes made, he said, such as requiring a candidate to land at least 40 percent of the popular vote to win the primary.

In that situation, candidates would still not have won a majority of the popular vote, but would be declared the winner of the primary, he said.

Taft was unable to be reached at his legislative office in Raleigh.

The Associated Press reported that Sen. Ted Kaplan, D-Forsyth, has decided to back the bill. Kaplan initially opposed the plan because he feared candidates could be elected without a solid consensus of support, thus allowing third-party candidates to win office. But, after looking at how similar plans have affected other states, Kaplan said he supports the bill.

However, Pitt County Democratic Sen. R.L. "Bob" Martin of Bethel said he favors keeping second primaries and has not received any information that would change his mind.

"I'm not supporting a bill to eliminate second primaries," he said. "I would have to have more than I've had so far to convince me they are not needed as part of the process. I've been running for 40 years, and a lot of them were second primary times, and I haven't seen any harm in second primaries."

Martin said he does not believe second primaries put minorities or any other political group at a disadvantage.

"I don't think any wide open election hurts anybody whose capable and has the desire to raise the campaign (funds needed). I think anybody can be successful in today's atmosphere," he said. "I think the weeding out process is good for Democracy, simply stated."

"I think democracy is being majority rule. Democracy in any case is over 50 percent," he said. "We're electing black candidates all over the state."

Martin cited Greenville Mayor Ed Carter as an example of a minority candidate who is able to garner enough support to win a majority of the popular vote.

Bush Says Conscience Is Clear

president stuck by his earlier refusal to discuss his role in the Iran-Contra affair. But, he added, "Everything I've said, I'll stand behind."

Documents introduced at the trial of former White House aide Oliver North have raised new questions about Bush's involvement, while vice president, in the Reagan administration's secret aid to the Contra rebels in Nicaragua.

Bush talked about the Iran-Contra affair and other matters during an informal news conference with nine reporters. He chose an informal setting for the gathering, meeting with the press on the colonnade outside the Oval Office on a sunny spring day.

Bush said he "might have something to say" about the Iran-Contra affair after the completion of North's trial, which was in its final stages today. North is accused of lying to Congress and obstructing a congressional investigation, among other charges.

The president has declined in recent days to field questions on Iran-Contra, saying he didn't want to prejudice the North case. However, he said today, "Let's put it this way, my conscience is clear."

On other subjects Bush:

—Expressed anguish about the shelling in Lebanon, saying he wished he had "some dramatic plan the players could agree to. It's not there."

—Said his administration, which is nearing the 100-day mark, is "moving reasonably well and I don't even think in terms of 100 days." Citing his broad budget agreement with Congress and congressional action on his plan to rescue the savings and loan industry, Bush said, "We're making some progress."

—Said he has not made a decision on how to modernize the nuclear arsenal. Bush said he will be prepared "very soon to make a decision" on funding for the Star Wars anti-missile system and whether to continue deployment of the MX missile or fund development of a single-warhead Midgetman missile.

Questions about the Iran-Contra affair focused on the charges that some documents produced in North's trial were not turned over to the congressional committees that investigated the issue.

Bush said he has seen no evidence that all pertinent documents were not made available.

However, he said, "I would offer full cooperation for any, any request made of this administration."

Asked if would release any documents that Congress wants to see, the president said:

"Well, procedures were set up to determine what documents were to be made available. Those procedures were agreed to by the Congress, and certainly I would see that if any documents are in control of this administration, relevant documents, that we would, we would live assiduously by those guidelines."

Blast In Battleship's Gun Turret During Practice Kills 47 Sailors

these families, they would rather have bad news than no news at all."

In Temple, Texas, Lorene Barron said all she could do was pray for her son, Monte Barron, and hope she would hear from the Navy by telephone.

"They told me if he was among the deceased, they would personally visit us," Mrs. Barron said. "But I believe everything's going to be OK. And I'm praying for all the mothers who are waiting just like I am."

The Navy said it had not determined the cause of the explosion. Pentagon spokesman Lt. Cmdr. Jim Kudla said an investigating officer will be appointed.

Grier said the explosion occurred while the ship was conducting open seas gunnery practice, but did not know if it occurred as the gun was being fired.

Each gun's 16-inch-diameter projectile is propelled by explosives in fabric bags loaded separately from the projectiles. The gun requires up to five bags, each containing 110 pounds of powder to fire a 2,700-pound round.

Naval officers familiar with the Iowa's gun turrets said an explosion can occur if a gun breech, or back end of the barrel, is cracked, or from a shell that "cooks off" — ignites prematurely from the heat of the barrel or smoldering debris left in the barrel from the last round.

"The first thing that comes to mind is something like a cook off," said Capt. Paul Hanley, another spokesman for the Atlantic Fleet. "It could have been a (powder) bag, or a projectile. We just don't know yet."

It was believed to be the worst loss of life in a naval accident since 1977, when 49 sailors died when a 56-foot launch returning sailors from shore leave in Barcelona, Spain, to the USS Guam and the USS Trenton was hit by a Spanish freighter.

An Iraqi missile attack on the USS Stark in May 1987 killed 37 crewmen and wounded 21.

A similar explosion occurred in the center gun turret aboard the heavy cruiser USS Newport News during the Vietnam War in October 1972, killing 20 crewmen and injuring 36.

"It is a great tragedy and a matter of terrible sadness," President Bush said in Washington. "I will take this opportunity to express my regrets, especially to the families of the kids that were killed."

Grier said 27 men normally are stationed at the turret, though it may hold up to 70 men. He did not know how many men were stationed in the turret — which extends through seven deck levels of the ship — when the explosion occurred.

Lt. Cmdr. Steve Burnett, another Atlantic Fleet spokesman, said the explosion and fire were confined to the turret, which is encased in 17-inch thick steel armor on the sides and 7 1/4-inch armor on the top. Several forward powder magazines were flooded by crewmen to prevent a second explosion.

Helicopters from the nearby aircraft carrier Coral Sea ferried work crews to the Iowa and the battleship and carrier later rendezvoused.

The USS Iowa was one of 29 U.S. ships participating in a three-week training exercise to test fleet readiness, which began April 13. Vice Adm. Jerome Johnson, commander of U.S. 2nd Fleet, was aboard the Iowa.

The Iowa was commissioned in 1943. Besides its 16-inch guns, the 887-foot Iowa is equipped with 12 five-inch guns and Tomahawk and Harpoon missiles. The Navy, in accordance with policy, declined to confirm or deny whether any nuclear weapons were aboard.

The 58,000-ton warship is one of the biggest in the world, dwarfed only by the Japanese World War II battleships Yamato and Musashi, each at 72,000 tons.

Athletes Join In

"You would be ignorant to believe there is not a drug problem going on, but there's not a drug war at Farmville Central," King said.

The athletes mentioned the commercial Farmville Central created to attack the abuse of drugs. It will be aired on WNCN-TV.

The Farmville Central students said they've never known anyone personally who has died because of the use of drugs, but King said he had three friends to die in an alcohol-related automobile accident.

They encouraged the Falkland students to ban together with their friends and say "no" to those who approach them about using drugs and alcohol. They also advised the students to talk to their parents, guidance counselors, DARE officer or some other adult that they trust if they're approached to use drugs or if they're concerned about friends who use drugs.

E.C. Moore, the DARE officer for schools in the Farmville Central attendance area, said each class has a DARE box where students may ask questions anonymously or may ask questions privately.

"They can ask me any questions they want to" from Moore's personal background to his experiences in law enforcement, he said.

Moore told the class that becoming a DARE officer is "the most important thing I've ever done in my 14 years in law enforcement."

There are 1,400 fifth-graders in Pitt County, he said. "If we can convince you that drugs and alcohol are not good ... look at how many lives we've saved."

"If you're going to be healthy and athletic, you can't mess with drugs and alcohol," Moore said.

DARE is a 17-week course taught by trained law enforcement officers to fifth- and sixth-graders in the county. It is provided by municipalities in the county that have agreed to assign an individual to work with local school personnel; to pay for officer training, lodging and meals, and for classroom materials needed for students and teachers.

Moore told the students he'll always "talk straight" about substance abuse and will not use scare tactics such as saying experiences with drugs will kill instantly or abusing alcohol means being involved in a car accident.

"If you talk straight and make sense, young people will listen," he said. "I will tell you the alternatives. You make up your minds. You have choices."

Cancer Therapy

Linda Medical Center.

Data evaluation and analysis will be done in the environmental health labs in ECU's School of Allied Health Sciences with which Robertson has been affiliated for the past four years as a member of the faculty.

In actual use, cancer patients treated at Loma Linda will be encased in pod-like compartments surrounded by an enormous, movable gantry. The treatment stations will be positioned strategically along the racetrack-shaped extraction system of the synchrotron.

The gantry will enable the accelerated proton beam to be rotated around the patient for precise positioning. The beam — made up of positively-charged atomic particles — is turned by banks of extremely heavy and powerful magnets.

Loma Linda medical authorities say proton therapy "holds promise, hope and proven results for eliminating the fear and reducing the hopelessness of many cancer patients and their families." Cancer now afflicts about 25 percent of all Americans.

"With reduced fear of side effects, individuals may more easily seek early detection methods and benefit more fully from the possibilities of proton beam therapy," a Loma Linda spokesman said.

As a toxicologist with a doctorate of science in physiology from Harvard, majoring in radiation biology, toxicology and biostatistics, Robertson holds personal views about the war on cancer.

"I am in environmental health here at ECU because at least 50 percent and probably 90 percent of all cancers are due to environmental exposures," Robertson said.

"It makes much more sense, with respect to economics, with respect to personal pain and anguish, to prevent cancer rather than try to treat it by any method," he said.

"That's why I am an environmentalist."

Lyle Hopes Work Pays Off

Dad Helped Him Regain Swing For GGO Defense

By Tom Foreman Jr.
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

GREENSBORO — Alex Lyle was glad to see his son return to England about a month ago, but he was shocked when he saw Sandy swing a golf club.

"My dad watched me and after a half an hour, he said 'My God, what are you doing?'" Lyle said.

The elder Lyle then went to work on his son's swing, an effort he hopes will pay off starting today at the $1 million Greater Greensboro Open, which initiates its new date, two weeks after The Masters.

Lyle won three tournaments last year and has failed this season to defend those titles at the Phoenix Open and The Masters. Greensboro provides him with his last chance at redemption, and the good news for Lyle is that he likes the Forest Oaks

Country Club course.

"Maybe it's because the greens here are tricky," he says. "I play well on courses where the greens are difficult like The Masters. And you have to putt well to win."

Lyle is winless this season, but has more than $279,000 in winnings. He is ninth on the PGA Tour's money list and is one of five top 10 money winners to make Greensboro.

Still, Lyle's new touch hasn't quite set in. He didn't make the cut at Augusta and missed again last week at the Heritage Classic.

"I would have liked to have gotten a few more rounds in there," he says. "I hit the ball well, but I just couldn't make a score."

Lyle only missed the cut at The Heritage Classic by one shot and he brings optimism to North Carolina's annual stop on the PGA Tour.

"I have a good feeling about this course," Lyle says. "This is one I play quite well."

If Lyle is upbeat, tournament officials are absolutely ecstatic.

For most of its existence, the GGO has been a way station en route to Augusta National. That date usually robbed the Greensboro field of some of the PGA Tour's top names who skipped the tournament to head south and get in some practice rounds.

Also, there was the unpredictable weather. There was bone-chilling cold in 1987, and sunny skies and warm temperatures last year.

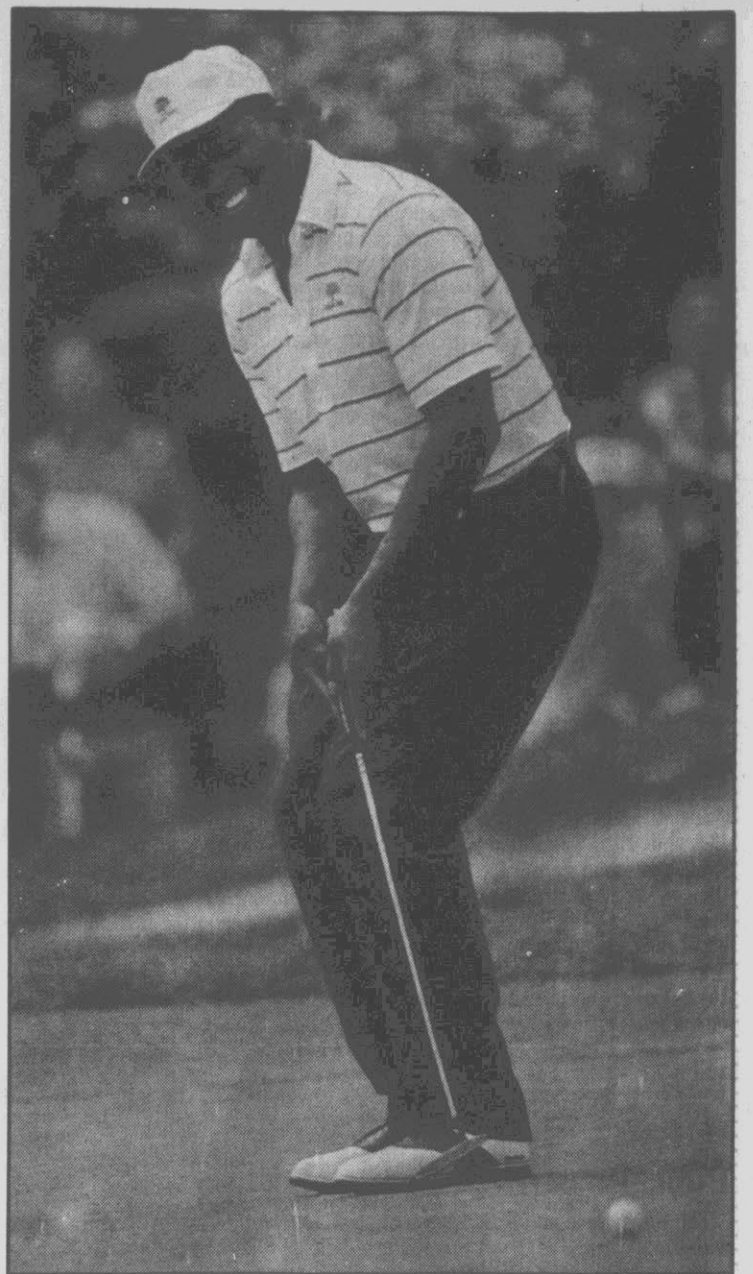

Now, the GGO assumes its late April spot and has drawn some big names like Greg Norman, who hasn't been to Greensboro since 1981, and Fred Couples, the third leading money winner. Also in the field are Tar Heel native Chip Beck, fifth on the money list, Bill Glasson, who is sixth, and the always resplendent Payne Stewart, winner last week at Hilton Head Island, S.C.

Nick Faldo, the 1989 Masters champion who usually stopped at the GGO in previous years, is skipping this time. Scott Hoch, who lost to Faldo in a playoff, will be in the chase.

The changed date also means the GGO might escape the always unpredictable weather it has faced. Two years ago, the third round was held up by snow, but the weather forecast for this year's tournament calls for temperatures in the 70s with a slight chance of rain.

Some golfers remember 1986, when temperatures in the Greensboro area plunged into the 20s and snow fell at sunrise. One is Bernhard Langer, who had originally planned to play in the GGO, backed out and went instead to Spain, where he will play in the Spanish open.

Brewington No-Hits Rocky Mount

Rampant Hurler Gets Shutout, Hits Home Run In 11-0 Rose Victory

By Woody Peele
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Jamie Brewington tossed a no-hitter and provided the final blow in an 11-0 baseball victory as Rose crushed Rocky Mount Wednesday night.

Brewington was shaky at times, walking seven and hitting one, but he was effective in preventing the Gryphons from scoring in the game. Rocky Mount threatened in the second, fourth and sixth innings, but was never able to get the hit that would provide it with a score.

Rose, meanwhile, rode a first-inning home run by Maurice Hines to a 2-0 lead, then put the game away with five runs in the fourth. Brewington hit a two-out, two run home run in the bottom of the sixth to up the lead to 11-0, invoking the 10-run lead rule which had been agreed to prior to the game.

"We simply got beat by a superior team," Rocky Mount's Shelton Chesson said. "We're not very strong this year, and they hit the ball well and made the plays they needed to make. We've had good ball games with them in the past, but not this year."

Rose coach Ronald Vincent felt his team played very well in the game, committing only one error — that, catcher's interference — and getting the job from Brewington on the mound.

"I was very pleased with the job Jamie did tonight. He threw the ball quite well outside of the walks," Vincent said.

"Again, I thought we played very good defense and we continue to hit the ball well."

Rose banged out 13 hits in the game. Tim Moore and David Leisten led the way with three each, while Brewington had two.

Rocky Mount took advantage of Brewington's lack of control at times to make it a little more than easy. In the second, two walks and a passed ball put runners at second and third with one out but Brewington struck out the next two. In the fourth, two walks and the catcher's interference loaded the bases with one out, but once again Brewington bore down and fanned the next two batters.

In the fifth, two walks and a ground out again put runners at second and third but once again, too,

Bullock Hurls

Vikes To 1-0 Win

By Tom Morris
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

HOLLYWOOD — Hits and runs were once again a scarce commodity for D.H. Conley, so the Vikings turned to pitching to get by Washington Wednesday.

Conley's Brian Bullock outdueled Washington's Rod Gorham on the mound and the Vikings got a key RBI single from Gray Mills in the eighth inning to hand the Pam Pack a 1-0 high school baseball defeat.

The loss dropped Washington to 3-1 in the Coastal Conference, the same as Conley. The Pam Pack is 6-2 overall, while the Vikings are 7-3.

"We said at the beginning of the year we'd have to scrap for everything we got," Bullock said after limiting Washington to four hits while striking out 14.

"We haven't scored but two runs in the last 21 innings, but we've won two out of three."

Gorham shut down Conley in the early going and had a perfect game until giving up a walk to Brian Smith and a single to William Crandall in the sixth inning. That offensive spurt was shortlived, though, as Paul Jackson, pinchhitting for Mills, struck out to end the inning.

"I had a runner on first and second and Gray normally will put the ball on the ground," Conley coach Allan Wilson said of his decision to pinch-hit Jackson. "Gray is not a

ECU Relay Team Set For TV Appearance

By Tom Morris
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

East Carolina's exposure on national television has been slight, but Saturday four members of the Pirate track team will get a crack at prime time on ESPN at the Tampa/Gatorade Track and Field Invitational.

ECU coach Bill Carson is hopeful his 4x100 relay team can record a low enough time to qualify for the NCAA Championships to be held May 31-June 4 in Provo, Tex.

"We've got a lot chances to qualify, but really this week is as good a chance as we've got," he said.

The meet, which will be televised from 7:30-9 p.m. on Greenville Cable channel 13, is also a chance for Eugene McNeill and possibly Brian Irving to qualify for the 200 meters. Kelvin Wrighton will also compete in the 100 meters.

The rest of the squad is headed to the James Madison Invitational where Carson is hopeful a few of his sprinters, such as 100-meter runner Ike Robinson or 400-meter intermediate hurdlers Udon Cheek and Brian Williams, can qualify for the IC4A Championships.

It has been a haphazard spring for Carson and the ECU squad, with inclement weather and unfortunate circumstances preventing a number of ECU's top sprinters from qualifying for either the NCAA's or the IC4A's.

Unseasonably cold and rainy weather early in the outdoor season put ECU behind in terms of preparation and conditioning.

"That's the big thing," Carson said. "That effects me in my coaching and where we feel we're at. We went five weeks in a row where we worked one day a week. Usually you get that in a week."

"It's the worst spring as far as preparing a track team in my 22 years at East Carolina," he added. "We're the least prepared because of the weather. You just don't know where you stand."

ECU's strength has long been the sprint events and the last four years, with All-America Lee McNeill leading the way, the Pirates boasted one of the top 4x100 relay teams in the country as well as one of the top individual 100 meter performers in the world.

But Lee McNeill's eligibility expired last season and when Junior Robinson, a member of last year's NCAA qualifying 4x100 meter relay team, decided to concentrate solely on football this spring, Carson had to replace two legs on his relay team.

Most of this year, the relay has been made up of Irving, Wrighton, Jon Lee and Eugene McNeill, Lee's younger brother.

"I'm not so sure these kids can't just qualify," Carson said. "The only time we had a chance was in the Florida relays (March 25) when Eugene got heat exhaustion and couldn't run. They ran the 4x200 relay first and then he got sick. In the 100 two hours later, Jon Lee hurt his back and I had to use two newcomers."

So far this year, ECU's strength has been its 4X200-meter relay team, a switch from the 4X100-meter dominance of past seasons.

"I knew in the middle of the indoor season that I could take these sprinters and run them up and do well in the 100, but we could really do well in the 200," Carson said.

"Indoor, we didn't have great dash men, but we concentrated on the 200. We changed the scope of team. We were attuned to the 200. Brian Irving was the 200 meter champion in Pennsylvania.

Gene is in the top 17 in the world. It was a good decision."

With strong performances at both meets this weekend, Carson is hopeful his charges can make up time in terms of preparation for either the IC4A's or the NCAA's.

"If we can just get qualified, we can concentrate on honing," he said. "That's the thing the rest of the way. It's tough to place in the nationals, but strange things can happen. I don't see but 12 teams qualifying and eight of them make All-American."

"What you really hope for is by the Penn Relays (April 28-29) to qualify as many kids as have a chance to for the IC4A's and NCAA's."

"Then, taking time from the Penn Relays on to hone it down and try to get as sharp as you can be," Carson added. "We haven't been able to do this. But no one has qualified for any of the sprint events other than teams from Texas, California and Florida. That shows you how the weather has been. But we're not crying the blues. We're working."

Pirates Close Out Pre-Game Work

The East Carolina Pirate football team held its final scrimmage of the spring season Wednesday before the scheduled spring game Saturday.

First year coach Bill Lewis said he was "pleased with the way the defense performed" during the one hour, 45 minute session.

"Today was the first time this spring that I saw the defense really flying to the football. That's the kind of intensity I want from the defense and I was very happy to see it," Lewis said.

Linebacker Anthony Thompson had a standout performance with four tackles for losses totaling 26 yards. Lineman Joe Holmes had a pair of sacks for minus 16 yards.

Lewis was pleased with the performance of transfer quarterback Chad Grier. "He has had two very good scrimmages, this one today and the one from Sunday, where he has looked very good," Lewis said.

Grier was 20 of 36 passing for 193 yards with one touchdown and an interception in Wednesday's practice. Running back Willie Lewis was also a standout performer, gained 78 yards on 17 carries and scoring one touchdown.

One injury of note occurred on Wednesday. Three-year letterman quarterback Travis Hunter suffered a knee injury. Lewis said that Hunter is doubtful for Saturday's Purple/Gold game.

ECU will end its spring drills with the Purple/Gold game, which begins at 3:30 p.m. in Ficklen Stadium.

Lady Seahawks Sweep Two From ECU

The UNC-Wilmington Lady Seahawks took a pair of softball games from East Carolina University Wednesday afternoon. UNCW won the opening game, 5-2, then came back with a 13-8 victory in the nightcap.

In the opening game, the Lady Seahawks moved out to a 5-0 lead, scoring a single run in the first inning and adding two each in the third and fifth. ECU finally scored in the bottom of the fifth when Laura Crowder reached back on an error, scoring Renee Meyers. Donna Weller then hit a line drive scoring Crowder.

Ingrid Meyers recorded the victory for UNCW and upped her record to 18-5 while ECU's Jennifer Sagl took the loss, falling to 8-5.

In the second game, UNCW again jumped out on top, taking a 4-0 lead in the top of the first. UNCW scored in every inning except the sixth. After scoring once in the first, ECU came back with three in the fifth, one in the sixth and three more in the seventh before the rally was cut short.

ECU is now 18-14, having dropped its last three in a row, heads to the Frost Cutlery Tournament this weekend. UNCW boosted its record to 29-11 on the season.

Conley Golfers Top Farmville, SouthWest

AYDEN — D.H. Conley set a school record with a team-total of 304 while winning a tri-meet golf match with SouthWest Edgecombe and Farmville Central Wednesday.

Ben Edwards shot a 72 to win medalist honors. Conley's three other golfers also shot below 80 as Tran Dean recorded a 76, Gentry Pinner, a 77 and Jason Wing, a 79.

SouthWest Edgecombe took second with a total of 330 while Farmville was third with 337. The Jaguars' scores were Pat Hobbs, 81; Dave Baker, 82; Allen Lewis, 84 and Gary Joyner, 90.

West Craven Defeats Farmville, 8-5

FARMVILLE — West Craven High School spotted Farmville Central a 2-1 lead then came back to capture an 8-5 baseball victory in non-conference action Wednesday.

West Craven scored its first run in the first inning but Farmville came back with two in the third to take the lead. Scott Shirley singled and Jeff Tyson got a hit. Both were sacrificed up and scored on a double by George Burnette.

But West Craven came up with four runs in the fifth to take the lead for good. Gene Roach doubled and Chris Hill got a single. Chris Stillely walked, loading the bases. Kip Brian sacrificed Roach over and Kevin Holtzworth singled in both Hill and Stillely. Monty Brown singled in Holtzworth with the final run of the inning, making it 5-2.

The Eagles added one in the sixth and two in the seventh before Farmville came back with three in the bottom of the seventh to cut it to the final 8-5 margin.

Holtzworth led West Craven's hitting with three while Roach had two. No one had more than one for Farmville.

Mazzilli Makes Bedrosian Pay

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The next time, Steve Bedrosian may not throw Lee Mazzilli a slider.

Mazzilli's three-run pinch homer off Bedrosian with two out in the eighth inning gave the New York Mets a 4-2 victory over the Philadelphia Phillies on Wednesday night.

"I don't know if it hung, I just closed my eyes and swung," Mazzilli said. "What I do know, is this was my second homer off Bedrosian and both of them came off sliders. He's a quality pitcher, and tonight I got him. The next game he may get me."

Mazzilli had a poor season as a pinch hitter last year and knew he had to come up big in 1989 to stay with the Mets. He was 7-for-30 with eight RBI last year as a pinch hitter.

"No alibis for that," Mazzilli said. "I had a bad year. The more I tried, and the harder I tried, the less I had to show for it. Maybe last year was good for me. I had a whole new approach and an entirely different attitude when I went to spring training."

Elsewhere in the National League it was Pittsburgh 7, St. Louis 5; San Diego 4, San Francisco 3; Montreal 3, Chicago 2; Atlanta 4, Houston 3, and Los Angeles 3, Cincinnati 0.

The Phillies had taken a 2-1 lead in the top of the eighth on Ricky Jordan's run-scoring single.

Kevin McReynolds hit a two-out double off Jeff Parrett in the bottom of the inning and Bedrosian, the Phillies' ace reliever, came on and walked Howard Johnson.

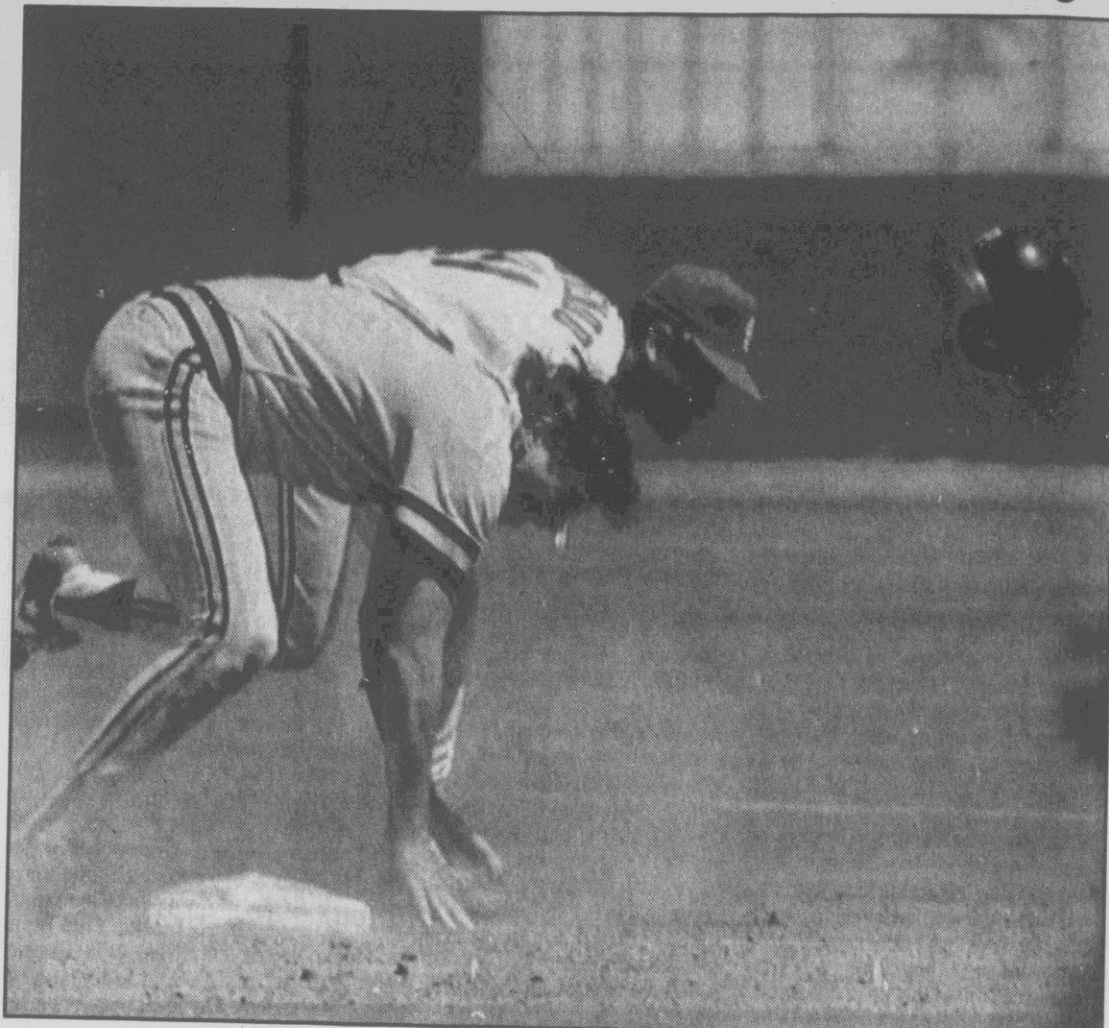

Mazzilli, pinch hitting for Barry Lyons, then homered to right field. It was his fifth career pinch homer — four coming with the Mets.

"It was a slider that got up," Bedrosian said. "It wasn't a quality pitch. I didn't do my job, and Mazzilli was good enough to capitalize on the mistake."

Randy Myers, 1-1, pitched 1 2-3 innings for the victory in relief of David Cone.

Kevin Elster of the Mets set a major league record when he played his 73rd consecutive game at shortstop without making an error. Elster broke the record set by Eddie Brinkman with the Detroit Tigers, May 2, 1972 to Aug. 4, 1972.

fourth inning as Montreal completed a three-game sweep of Chicago at Olympic Stadium.

The Cubs entered the series with a seven-game winning streak — their longest since June 1983.

Dennis Martinez, 1-0, allowed eight hits in eight-plus innings for his first victory since Aug. 24.

Martinez yielded a leadoff single in the ninth and Tim Burke got the last three outs for his fourth save.

Braves 4, Astros 3
Dale Murphy, who entered the game with two RBI, drove in three runs as Atlanta beat visiting Houston and sent the Astros to their fourth straight loss.

Trailing 3-2, the Braves loaded the bases in the eighth and Murphy singled in two runs.

Pirates 7, Cardinals 5
Rafael Belliard and Tom Prince drove in two runs each and Pittsburgh capitalized on an error by Ozzie Smith for the second straight day to beat St. Louis at Busch Stadium.

Smith, considered the best fielding shortstop in the game, made a throwing error during a three-run rally in the fourth inning. On Tuesday night, the Pirates scored the winning runs when Smith booted a grounder with two outs in the ninth.

Padres 4, Giants 3
Benito Santiago drove in three runs and Jack Clark walked with the bases loaded in the seventh inning to break a tie as San Diego beat San Francisco at Candlestick Park.

Eric Show, 3-1, allowed four hits and three runs in 7 2-3 innings and Mark Davis finished for his seventh save in seven opportunities.

Giants reliever Craig Lefferts retired the Padres in order in the ninth to extend his streak of consecutive outs to 29. The major league record is 41, set by Jim Barr of the Giants in 1972.

Dodgers 3, Reds 0
Mike Morgan and three relievers combined on a five-hitter as Los Angeles shut out visiting Cincinnati for the second straight game.

Los Angeles starters have an earned run average of 0.84 over the first seven games of their 10-game homestand, and haven't allowed an earned run in their last 19 2-3 innings.

power hitter. I thought it was a good time to try something different. We really hadn't been hitting the ball. He (Gorham) had a perfect game until the sixth."

Conley put a man on in the seventh, but failed to advance him, forcing extra innings.

Andy Fassett opened the eighth for the Vikings with a single and Bill Jenkins followed with a walk. Smith laid down a sacrifice bunt to move the runners over.

That brought up the top of the order and Crandall was intentionally walked to load the bases. That brought up Mills and he delivered a short shot into shallow centerfield to score Fassett and give the Vikings the win.

"Rod was getting tired," Washington coach Steve Coats said. "They got the key hits when they needed them."

Wilson said he contemplated trying a squeeze play when Mills was at the plate, but with only one out he decided to let him go ahead and swing away.

"We had the bases loaded and I thought about bunting," he said.

"Gray's probably our best bunter, but I knew if he put it in play, it would be a tough out."

Washington had a similar situation in the seventh, with men on the corners with two outs. But Bullock struck out Eric Seiler to end the inning.

"We started to make a move a couple of times," Coats said. "If you go back, we had runners on second three or four times (actually three). But we just couldn't get anything out of it."

A lot of that had to do with Bullock. Other than the seventh, when he gave up two hits, he cruised through the game.

"The adrenaline kicked in (late in the game)," Bullock said. "In the middle innings, you let down some. You're mentally down. You're waiting for a run that never comes."

"I just reached down further. I knew if we got this far, we couldn't lose now. If it had gone any longer I'd have died."

Nokes Ruins Viola's Birthday With Two-Run Homer In Ninth

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Minnesota pitching star Frank Viola learned that you can't have your cake and eat it, too.

It was Viola's birthday, but Detroit's Matt Nokes blew out the candles Wednesday night with a two-run homer in the ninth inning that gave the Tigers a 3-2 victory over the Twins and handed the 1988 American League Cy Young Award winner his third loss in as many decisions.

Viola, who turned 29 Wednesday, did get one nice present — a three-year, $7.9 million contract that equaled the record pact signed earlier this year by Los Angeles' Orel Hershiser. It came after owner Carl Pohlad entered the negotiations.

Despite the loss — his third of the season at the Metrodome, where he lost only twice all last year and once had a 19-game winning streak — Viola wasn't down. He has said the bitter contract negotiations affected him mentally.

"I know I'm back on," he said. "I felt in total control for the first time, regardless of what the score was. I'm going to be there."

Elsewhere, it was Texas 5, Milwaukee 1; Oakland 7, Seattle 5; California 7, Chicago 2; Boston 8, Cleveland 4; New York 4, Toronto 2, and Baltimore 6, Kansas City 5.

With one out in the ninth, Viola was cruising with a five-hitter. But Keith Moreland singled and on the next pitch Nokes hit his fourth homer of the year, ending Detroit's four-game losing streak and giving the Tigers only their second victory over the Twins in the last 15 meetings.

"I just went for the ball. I never hit off him before," said Nokes, a left-handed hitter who is beginning to get playing time against left-handed pitchers and has 10 RBI in his last seven games. "I just decided I was going to be smooth and not jump at the ball."

Winner Doyle Alexander allowed six hits in eight innings, including Kirby Puckett's two-run homer, and Guillermo Hernandez pitched a perfect ninth for his second save. Minnesota's first run came when Viola walked Al Pedrique with the bases loaded.

Rangers 5, Brewers 1

Pete Incaviglia, Julio Franco and Ruben Sierra homered as Texas improved its record to 12-2, best in the majors. Incaviglia had a sacrifice fly in addition to a two-run homer.

Jamie Moyer, 3-0, allowed a run on five hits in 6 1-3 innings. Loser Mike Birkbeck was the victim of the Rangers' long-ball attack.

Gary Sheffield's homer put Milwaukee ahead 1-0 in the second inning but Texas tied it in the bottom half on Franco's homer. Incaviglia's sacrifice fly after a walk and Franco's double put Texas ahead in the third inning. Sierra hit a solo homer in the sixth and, after Franco walked, Incaviglia followed with a 424-foot homer.

Milwaukee manager Tom Trebelhorn said the Brewers are "not playing up to our abilities and we're not getting any breaks, and the Rangers are playing up to their ability and getting breaks. It's as simple as that."

Athletics 7, Mariners 5

Unbeaten Dave Stewart won his fourth game and Terry Steinbach drove in three runs. Stewart owns the majors' best record after yielding four runs and eight hits. Last April, Stewart was 6-0 and has won his last 13 decisions in April. He also has won nine straight against Seattle and is 10-2 lifetime.

The A's took a 2-0 lead in the first inning against Mark Langston on Steinbach's two-run double and added a run in the third when Carney Lansford tripled and scored on Steinbach's second double. Billy Beane's two-run single in the fifth gave Oakland a 5-1 lead and Mike Gallego followed three consecutive walks with a two-run single in the seventh to make it 7-3.

Angels 7, White Sox 2

Devon White's three-run homer in the fifth inning powered California to its fourth consecutive victory. White's third homer came against Bill Long and helped make a winner of Mike Witt, who allowed both Chicago runs and eight hits in 6 1-3 innings.

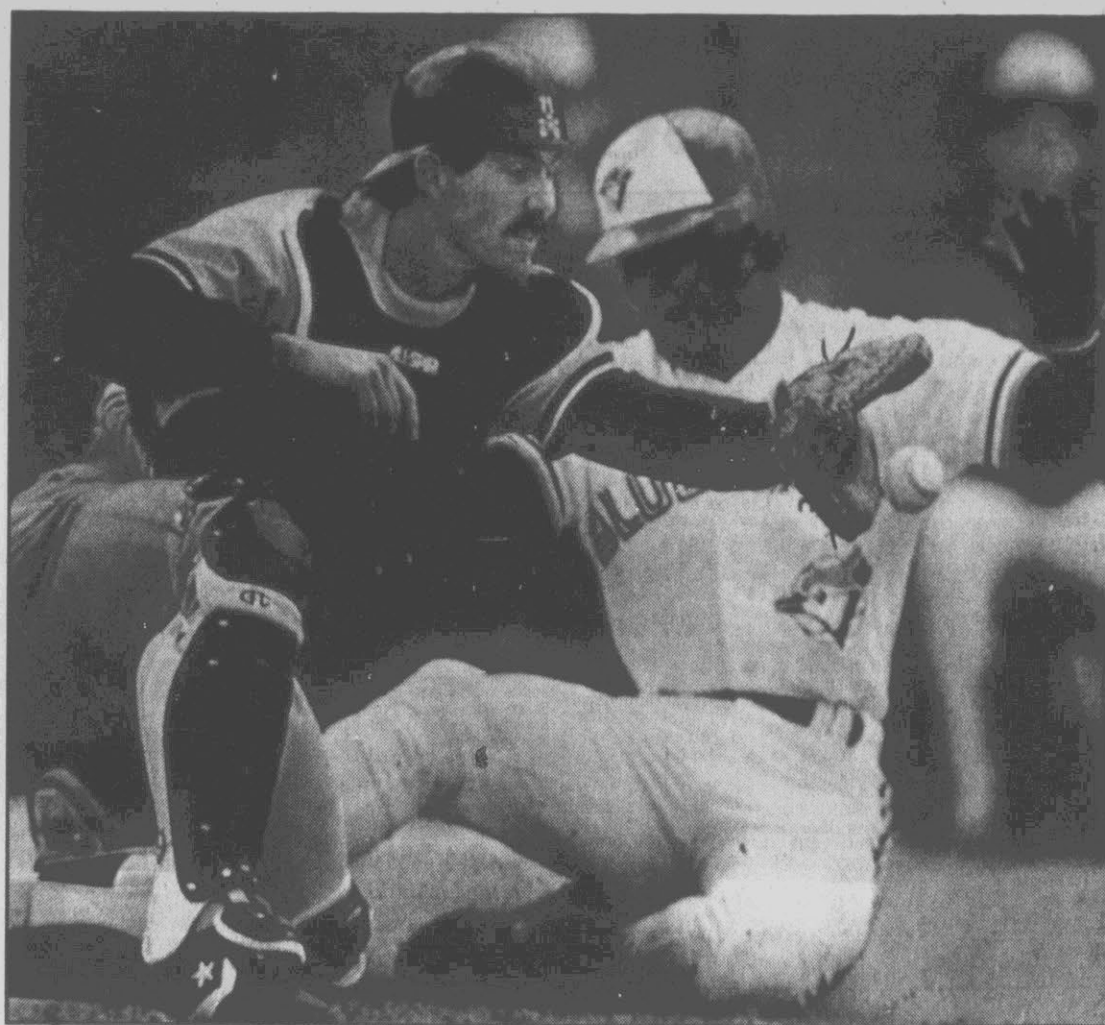

Brian Downing and Mark McLemore singled before White homered, putting California ahead 5-0. "He (Bill Long) threw it right down the middle and I drove it. Hardest ball I've hit all year," White said.

The Angels took a 2-0 lead in the fourth. McLemore was hit by a pitch, two outs later he stole second, went to third on an infield hit by Claudell Washington and scored on a single by Chili Davis. Lance Parrish singled to score Washington.

Witt retired the first 11 Chicago batters before Harold Baines singled with two outs in the fourth. The White Sox scored their runs in the sixth, ending a string of 29 scoreless innings by California pitchers.

Red Sox 8, Indians 4

Nick Esasky homered, doubled and singled twice, driving in four runs and scoring three as Boston handed Cleveland its fifth consecutive setback. Esasky had gone 1-for-15 since he had three hits against the Indians on April 10.

The Associated Press

Jesse Barfield is tagged out at home by Don Slaught of the Yankees

Roger Clemens, 2-0, got the victory, giving up three runs and eight hits — including Brook Jacoby's solo homer — striking out three and walking one in seven innings. He improved his career record against Cleveland to 11-1 with a 1.90 ERA.

Loser Bud Black surrendered a two-run homer to Esasky in the second inning and the Red Sox broke it open in the fourth. Ellis Burks walked, Mike Greenwell and Jim Rice singled to load the bases and Dwight Evans walked to force in one run. Esasky hit a ground-rule double for two more and Scott Bailes gave up an RBI groundout to Rick Cerone and a run-scoring single by Wade Boggs to make it 7-1.

Yankees 4, Blue Jays 2

John Candelaria allowed four hits over seven innings and struck out five to pass the 1,500 mark for his career as New York completed a sweep of the three-game series. Loser Jimmy Key gave up 10 hits and four runs in 6 1-3 innings.

Tom Brookens, Alvaro Espinoza and Roberto Kelly had consecutive RBI hits — a double and two singles — with two out in the fourth inning to give the Yankees a 3-0 lead.

Orioles 6, Royals 5

Bob Melvin and Bill Ripken singled home one run apiece and Phil Bradley singled home the other two in Baltimore's four-run sixth inning. The Orioles trailed 3-2 after Bo Jackson's three-run homer in the top of the sixth but they had five hits and a walk in the bottom of the inning and beat the Royals for only the second time in the last 18 games.

Melvin tied the score with a one-out single off loser Charlie Leibrandt. Mickey Tettleton walked and Luis Aquino relieved. One out later, Ripken singled to score Melvin.

Brewington...

Brewington struck out the next batter to end it.

Rose took the lead in the first inning, getting two runs. With two away, Leisten singled to center. Hines then followed with a home run over the fence in left for a 2-0 lead.

In the fourth, Rose came up with five big runs. John Bolen singled and stole up. Brewington laid down a bunt, beating it out, but the ball was thrown away, allowing Bolen to score and Brewington to race to third. Courtesy runner Pat Joyner then scored on a wild pitch. Walter Gatlin singled and stole second, going to third on a wild pitch. With two down, Moore singled him in, then stole second. He went to third on a balk and scored on Chris Christopher's infield hit. Leisten then doubled in Christopher to make it 7-0.

Rose added two more in the fifth. Bolen and Brewington both walked, and both Bolen and Joyner, again running for Brewington, stole up a base. Gatlin grounded out, scoring Bolen, and Joyner scored on a double by Heath Clark.

In the sixth, Rose closed it out. Leisten reached on an infield hit and Brewington connected with two outs to send the ball out of the park in left, ending the game.

Rocky Mount falls to 5-6 on the year overall, 1-3 in Big East Conference play.

Rose is now 11-0 overall, 4-0 in league play. The Rampants travel to Wilson Hunt on Friday for their next outing.

Pistons Start Hot, Roll To 115-105 Win

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The best record in the NBA got better and for a while the Detroit Pistons were even perfect.

The night after locking up the homecourt advantage throughout the NBA playoffs with the league's best won-loss record, the Pistons came out and made their first 10 shots from the field against the Indiana Pacers on the way to a 115-105 victory Wednesday night.

"We came into the regular season prepared to play 82 games, not 77 or 78," said Isiah Thomas, who made his first start since suffering a broken left index finger last week and finished with 18 points. "We want to play all 82 as well as we can. Our goal is to win as many games as we possibly can."

The Pistons set three team records with their 61st victory of the season as it was their 19th straight at home and 35th in 39 home games.

"Detroit is the best team on the planet," said Indiana coach Dick Versace, a former Pistons assistant. "There is an obvious gap between us and them. Detroit cannot play a lot better overall."

In other NBA game, Phoenix beat Miami 117-91, Atlanta downed Milwaukee 100-92 and Houston defeated San Antonio 99-84.

Thomas made his first five shots from the field and eight of 13 overall. He said the injury, which he suffered in a fight with Bill Cartwright of the Chicago Bulls, is still causing him considerable pain but he's becoming more comfortable with it.

"It's still broken," he said. "Any time you have a broken bone in your body, the pain just doesn't go away. God, I wish it would. I don't think it will heal until the season is over."

And I'm pretty sure when the season is over I'll have to have surgery."

Joe Dumars led the Pistons with 20 points and 11 assists as seven Pistons scored in double figures. Dennis Rodman had 14 rebounds to lead Detroit to a 51-31 advantage in that department.

Detroit took control early in the second quarter with a 20-5 run that gave it a 52-37 lead. Indiana did pull within 83-76 late in the third period but Detroit went on a 13-4 run to make it 96-80 less than two minutes into the final period and Indiana never got closer than 12 points.

Rik Smits led the Pacers with 22 points, one more than Reggie Miller. Suns 117, Heat 91

The interesting action was off the court at Miami Arena in the Heat's final home game of their first season.

Miami's Pearl Washington and Armon Gilliam of Phoenix squared off in the Heat locker room shortly after being ejected from the game with 1:30 left in the third quarter for their part in an oncourt skirmish. Washington came away from the second confrontation with a lip injury that required three stitches.

After Gilliam and Miami's Kevin Edwards exchanged shoves, Washington unleashed a right hook that grazed Gilliam's face. Order was quickly restored.

While the game continued, Gilliam went to the Miami locker room and confronted Washington and that was where the Miami guard suffered the injury.

"I'm not going to comment on that," Gilliam said. "Nobody was around. Nobody saw anything."

Miami coach Ron Rothstein said Washington, who left the arena without talking to the media, was fine.

The Suns tied a team record with their ninth straight victory and with two games left they still have a chance to finish with the best record in the Western Conference. The Lakers, who have three games left, are a half-game ahead in the standings.

Eddie Johnson led Phoenix with 29 points, while Scott Hastings and Edwards had 17 apiece for Miami.

Hawks 100, Bucks 92
Atlanta clinched the homecourt advantage for the first round of the playoffs and ended the season 6-0 against Milwaukee, which will likely be the Hawks' opponent in the opening round.

Dominique Wilkins had 31 points to lead the Hawks, who won their eighth straight game and clinched homecourt advantage for the first round of the NBA playoffs.

The Bucks, playing for the third straight game without center Jack Sikma, who has a sprained ankle, got 22 points from Terry Cummings and 20 from Ricky Pierce.

Rockets 99, Spurs 84

The Spurs had nine fourth-quarter points and scored their final field goal with 7:05 to play. They shot 4-for-24 in the final quarter, 17 percent, as the Rockets completed a six-game sweep for the season.

Akeem Olajuwon led Houston with 29 points, 15 rebounds and seven blocked shots.

Alvin Robertson topped San Antonio with 18 points, including that final field goal. The Spurs' final point of the game was a free throw by Greg Anderson with 2:19 to play.

The Spurs actually led 75-73 at the end of three quarters and they opened the final period with a 6-0 run. Houston did not get its first points in the last quarter for 2:56, then outscored the Spurs 26-3.

Gioiosa Told To Find Some Work

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CINCINNATI — U.S. Magistrate Robert A. Steinberg has told Tommy Gioiosa, Pete Rose's former house guest who faces federal charges of cocaine distribution and tax evasion, to get a job or else.

After Steinberg learned Wednesday from Gioiosa's lawyer, Mark Bennett, that Gioiosa had lost his job at Gold's Gym in his hometown of New Bedford, Mass., Steinberg ordered Gioiosa to find a 40-hour-a-week job by Friday or risk having his $20,000 bond revoked.

"It's my understanding Tommy has found another job and is working already," Bennett said. He would not say where Gioiosa is working.

Gioiosa, who lived in Rose's Cincinnati home from 1978 to 1983, pleaded innocent before Steinberg Monday morning to charges contained in a five-count indictment returned two weeks ago by a federal grand jury here.

After his arrest in Boston two weeks ago, Gioiosa's parents put up the mortgage on their home to make his $20,000 bond. Steinberg released

Gioiosa in the custody of his parents after being assured he had a fulltime job.

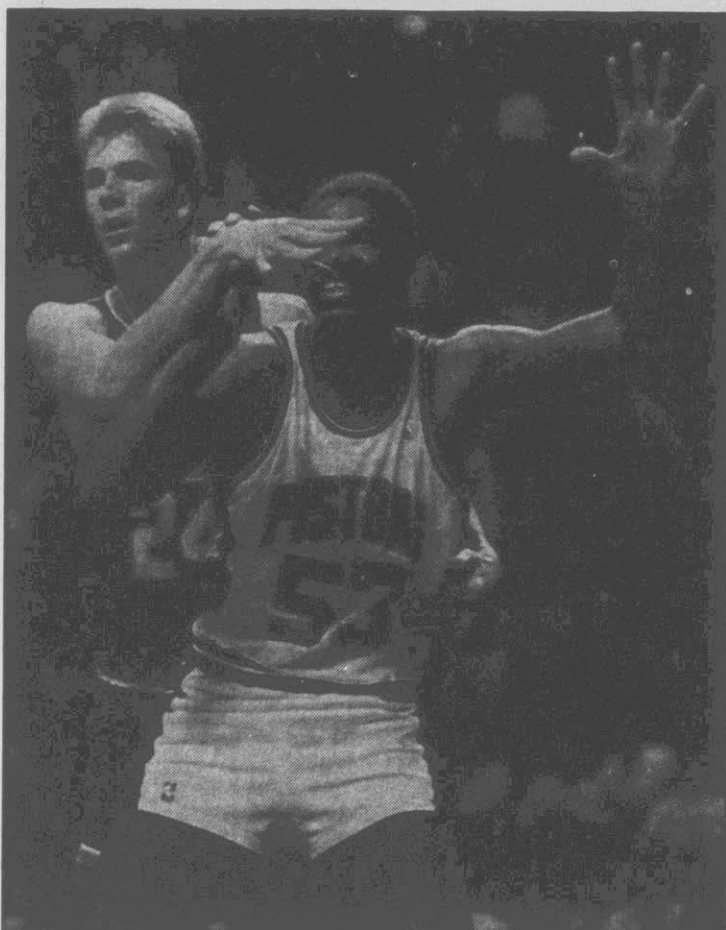

Bennett said he contacted the magistrate's office Wednesday morning to tell Steinberg that Gioiosa had returned to Massachusetts Monday afternoon and "found the position (with Gold's Gym) was no longer available."

"I think to say he was 'fired' is too strong," Bennett said. "The bottom line is he is no longer there."

Bennett said Gioiosa had a "problem" at work since his relationship with Rose and his criminal indictment became the subjects of national news attention.

"The phone was ringing all the time with reporters wanting to talk to him and there were a lot of curiosity-seekers stopping by the gym," Bennett said. "It was an impossible situation."

Gioiosa, 31, was indicted as part of a wide-ranging federal drug investigation that has resulted in charges against nine people so far. If convicted of all the charges, Gioiosa could face up to 38 years in prison and $2 million in fines.

CFA Playoff Plan Presented For '90's

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ATLANTA — The College Football Association has presented a plan to bowl representatives for a 16-team national championship playoff in the early 1990s that could bring participating schools millions of dollars but undermine the present bowl system, a newspaper reported.

The Atlanta Journal-Constitution said CFA Executive Director Chuck Neinas revealed the plan at a closed meeting with eight bowl representatives in Atlanta Wednesday. Attending the meeting were officials from the Orange, Sugar, Cotton, Holiday, Citrus, Fiesta, Liberty and Peach Bowls, the newspaper said.

The CFA is a group of 63 schools which play Division I football, including teams from the Southeastern, Atlantic Coast, Southwest and Big Eight Conferences, plus leading independents such as Notre Dame, Penn State and Florida State.

The playoff would exclude the Big Ten and Pacific-10 conferences which have their own television package, the paper said.

According to bowl sources, the CFA has been seriously studying a playoff system for the past four months, and considered more than 40 plans before deciding on the one revealed Wednesday, the paper said.

According to the Journal-Constitution, the plan calls for a selection committee similar to the one that picks the field for the NCAA basketball tournament. The committee would pick and seed the 16 teams for the playoffs.

The top eight seeds would host first-round games on the campuses. The four quarterfinal, two semifinal and championship games would be held at current bowl sites yet to be determined and would essentially take the place of those bowls. The championship game, which may be rotated among several bowl sites, would be held on the weekend before the NFL's Super Bowl.

The CFA is attempting to get its playoff plan approved by the time its current contract with CBS expires at the end of the 1990 season. Then it could sell the regular-season package and the playoffs to the highest bidder.

CBS spokesman Mark Carlson said he had no idea how much the networks would be willing to pay for such a championship playoff, but a bowl representative at the meeting said the CFA believes it could receive $80 million annually from a network.

"I'm sure that Neinas is not going into this thing blind," said Carlson. "It's clear, though, that if he can put this thing together, it would greatly enhance the value of the package."

Among the hurdles for such a plan is a powerful bowl lobby that would undergo severely diminished status. The seven bowls not involved in the playoffs would be relegated to taking the teams left over after the top 16 were picked. There would almost certainly be fewer television dollars for bowls excluded from the plan because fan interest would be focused on the playoffs.

"All I can tell you is that the bowls are together and we are opposed to any kind of a playoff plan, be it sponsored by the CFA or whomever," said Gator Bowl Executive Director John Bell. "But if a playoff plan affects the current bowl structure, you can say that we are very concerned."

Peach Bowl Executive Director Robert Dale Morgan sat in on Wednesday's meeting and said he saw no cause for alarm.

"This kind of talk comes up on a fairly regular basis and for now we see no reason for concern," Morgan said. "This was purely an informational meeting. There are many things that must happen before something like this can become a reality."

The CFA will take the plan to its membership at its annual convention June 2-4 in Dallas. If it passes there, the CFA will attempt to get it on the ballot for the NCAA convention in January.

Of the 105 football-playing schools in the NCAA's Division I-A, the only division that does not have a championship playoff in football, 63 belong to the CFA. A simple majority is required for a passing vote.

But getting all the CFA schools to support the plan is not automatic. University presidents are under pressure to bring athletics under control.

A playoff would invite further expansion of commercialism into the amateur sport and the season would be extended for some teams. The winner and runner-up of such a playoff would play 15 games instead of the usual 12.

"There are a lot of presidents who think the season is too long already," said Carlson. "But the thing the CFA has going for them is that these same schools also are looking for more ways to get money."

Yanks' King Is Stable After Fall

GOLDSBORO (AP) — New York Yankees executive Clyde King was in stable condition in a North Carolina hospital Wednesday after being injured in a fall earlier this week.

King, 64, special adviser to Yankees owner George Steinbrenner, was building an elevated playhouse for his six grandchildren at his home Monday when he fell, breaking five ribs and his collarbone, officials said.

"I stepped back and there was nothing there," King said from Wayne Memorial Hospital.

King said doctors estimate the injuries would take five to six weeks to heal.

King was working alone when the accident occurred. He said he fell about nine feet.

He said he came home for a short stay following the end of spring training and was supposed to leave for New York on Wednesday.

When asked about Steinbrenner's reaction to the fall, King replied, "He wanted to know what I was doing in a treehouse."

How They Voted

WASHINGTON — Here's how area members of Congress were recorded on major roll call votes in the week ending April 14.

House

TO CURB FUNDING — By a vote of 209 for and 216 against, the House rejected an amendment to freeze spending for the National Endowment for Democracy, blocking a proposed 58 percent budget hike.

This left intact legislation to raise the endowment's $15.8 million budget to $25 million next year. The vote occurred as the House sent to the Senate a bill (HR 1487) authorizing $4.9 billion for the State Department in fiscal 1990.

The endowment sends federal appropriations to the Republican and Democratic parties, the AFL-CIO and the Chamber of Commerce, which use the money primarily to promote democratic reform around the world.

John Conyers, D-Mich., said the endowment "has become a pseudo entity of the U.S. government ... often embarrassing our government."

Henry Hyde, R-Ill., who opposed the amendment, said "anything that advances the cause of democracy on places that are inhospitable to democracy ... is money well spent."

Members voting yes wanted to block a 58 percent spending increase for the National Endowment for Democracy.

Voting yes: Walter Jones, D-1; Martin Lancaster, D-3; Stephen Neal, D-5; Howard Coble, R-6; W.G. Hefner, D-8; Alex McMillan, R-9.

Voting no: Tim Valentine, D-2; David Price, D-4; Charles Rose, D-7; Cass Ballenger, R-10; James Clarke, D-11.

CONTRA AID — The House passed, 309 for and 110 against, a bill (HR 1750) putting into effect the new Nicaraguan policy of the Bush Administration and the Democratic-led Congress.

The package includes nearly $50 million in non-military aid to keep the Contra rebels assembled in Honduras until it becomes known whether Nicaragua's Marxist government will keep its promise to hold elections next February. It could lead to the Contras being disbanded.

Supporter Matthew McHugh, D-N.Y., said "this new policy recognizes that the contra war is over."

Opponent Dan Burton, R-Ind., said "if we don't vote for this package, the Freedom fighters die now. If we do vote for it they die in seven months."

Members voting yes: Lancaster, Price, Coble, Rose, Hefner, McMillan, Ballenger, Clarke.

Voting no: Walter Jones, Valentine, Neal.

Senate

CONTRA PACKAGE — By a vote of 89 for and 9 against, the Senate gave final congressional approval of the new U.S. policy for dealing with Nicaragua's Sandinista government and the American-backed Contra rebels.

This followed House approval of the policy (above). The bill (HR 1750) provides nearly $50 million in non-military aid to sustain the Contras until the February 1990 deadline by which the Sandinistas say they will hold elections.

Senators voting yes supported America's new policy.

Voting yes: Terry Sanford, D.

Voting no: Jesse Helms, R.

TO VERIFY COMPLIANCE — By a vote of 70 for and 28 against, the Senate tabled (killed) an amendment enabling the Contra rebels to spend part of their new American aid (above) on verifying whether Nicaragua's Marxist government is moving toward democratic reform.

Supporters of killing the amendment said it would undercut the U.S. government's new Nicaraguan policy.

Amendment sponsor William Armstrong, R-Colo., said the Sandinistas have "falsely promised" democratic reform enough times to warrant Contra verification efforts.

Senators voting yes opposed the amendment.

Voting yes: Sanford.

Voting no: Helms.

MINIMUM WAGE — By a vote of 62 for and 37 against, the Senate passed and sent to conference with the House a bill (HR 2) to increase the minimum wage by $1.20 an hour. The existing $3.35 minimum would rise to $3.85 in October 1989, $4.25 in October 1990 and $4.55 in October 1991.

The new wage floor would apply to most businesses with sales over $500,000 as well as to schools, hospitals, local governments and social services institutions. It would be accompanied by a subminimum wage, initially set at $3.35, for certain workers during the first 60 days of their employment.

Senators voting yes wanted to raise the minimum wage by $1.20 an hour.

Voting yes: Sanford.

Voting no: Helms.

CHANGE TO SOCIAL SECURITY — The Senate adopted, 86 for and 11 against, an amendment allowing the working elderly to earn more without losing Social Security benefits as a result of their earnings.

Attached to the minimum wage bill (above), the provision raises from $8,880 to about $9,980 the earnings limit for Social Security recipients under 70 years of age. The elderly lose $1 in Social Security benefits for every $2 they earn above the limit.

Supporter Jesse Helms, R-N.C., said the Social Security earnings test "punishes older Americans" who work after turning 65.

Opponent Lloyd Bentsen, D-Tex., said the amendment "would add some $400 million to the deficit over the next five years."

Senators voting yes favored the higher earnings limit.

Voting yes: Sanford and Helms.

WHY BUY A CAR THAT CALLS ITSELF CONTINENTAL WHEN YOU CAN OWN ONE THAT IS.

Giving a car a European-sounding name does not automatically give it entry to the class of European touring sedans. So before you invest your money in a stylish name, we suggest you take a look at something more substantive: The Volvo 760 GLE. Built around the philosophy that a European road car should offer as much in the way of comfort as performance, the 760 features orthopedically-designed seats with a special lumbar support. Power features that include everything under the sun...including a power sunroof. And an electronic climate control system sophisticated enough to adjust the temperature inside while monitoring the temperature outside. Equally impressive is the 760's Multi-link independent rear suspension. The system that proves a comfortable ride and pinpoint handling can be mutually inclusive. For options, the Volvo 760 offers a powerful choice: an intercooled turbo or a light-alloy V-6 engine. Either way, the time from zero to fifty-five will fly. So please stop by our showroom and test drive the Volvo 760 GLE. Everything about it is continental. Except, of course, the name.

Austrian police grab a man who tried to give a Nazi salute in Hitler's hometown Wednesday

Hitler's Birthday Prompting Security

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BRAUNAU, Austria — Police in Adolf Hitler's hometown today arrested at least eight people on the dictator's 100th birthday and turned back several others at the West German border in an effort to head off neo-Nazi violence.

Hundreds of police roamed the area, helicopters circled overhead and police vehicles were spotted as far as 10 miles from this town.

The security measures were aimed at preventing a repeat of clashes between neo-Nazis and left-wing opponents on Hitler's 90th birthday.

By midmorning, a constant stream of dozens of curious onlookers clustered near Hitler's birthplace, which was sealed off by metal barriers.

Dozens of police cars blocked the street leading to the house that is now a nursery for handicapped children. Many stores closed and at least two shops boarded their front windows.

An unidentified American gave the Nazi salute on Braunau's main square and was arrested, said District Mayor Harald Schindler. Reporters watched as a West German shouted "Jew, go and rot!" and "This will be a national holiday in 100 years!" and was dragged away by police.

Police handcuffed another West German from Frankfurt who was carrying a sharp knife.

Five young Italian neo-Nazis were detained after marching down a Braunau street with their arms outstretched in the rigid salute, police said.

Police declined to identify those detained. Schindler indicated they would face misdemeanor charges and not more serious criminal charges under an Austrian law that bans neo-Nazi activity.

Salvadoran Official Killed By Car Bomb

LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador — The attorney general of El Salvador was assassinated Wednesday in what government and U.S. officials said was part of a leftist strategy to provoke a bloody government reaction that would endanger American support and prove the country ungovernable.

Roberto Garcia Alvarado, 53, was killed when an unknown assailant placed a bomb on top of his car as it was stopped at a traffic light in the Don Rua section of San Salvador at about 7:45 a.m.

Military and U.S. officials said that Alvarado was on his way to work, riding in the back seat of a Jeep Cherokee equipped with bullet-proof windows and armored sides. A driver and a bodyguard sat in front while an escort car followed.

However, a man who had been in the back of a pickup truck walked calmly up to the Jeep, placed a bomb on top — evidently attached by a magnet — and walked away.

Alvarado's driver tried to accelerate, thinking the movement would dislodge the explosive, but it blew up. The blast peeled away the top of the car and killed Alvarado immediately. The driver and bodyguard were slightly wounded, police said.

No one took immediate responsibility for Alvarado's slaying. But American officials, Salvadoran military officers and President-elect Alfredo Cristiani blamed the Farabundo Marti National Liberation Front, a Marxist guerrilla group, for the assassination.

Although the guerrillas neither acknowledged nor denied the Alvarado assassination, the front named him in a radio broadcast on March 17 as "covering up for murderers."

Alvarado was named attorney general by the National Assembly last December after the legislative body had removed his predecessor, Roberto Giron Flores, for allegedly being too soft on the FMLN and its sympathizers.

Chinese Police Hit, Kick Protesters At Party Offices

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BEIJING — Police broke up a pro-democracy rally outside Communist Party headquarters today, hitting and kicking protesters slow to disperse. The government promised tough action to stop a wave of student-led protests.

Later, hundreds of students from at least two universities braved heavy rain and marched for a fourth day toward Tiananmen Square, the symbolic political center of China, which is near the party headquarters.

One group of students carried a wreath and a portrait of Hu Yaobang, the reform-minded Communist Party chief whose death on Saturday has served as the rallying point for the demonstrations.

Two police cars followed close behind.

"This is a test for us," said one marching student. "We must show that we fear nothing."

Curious crowds flocked to Tiananmen this evening, but only about 700 were there by 7 p.m., compared with more than 15,000 at that time Wednesday. A heavy downpour continued.

There were unofficial reports of student marches in recent days in five other cities: Shanghai, Tianjin, Wuhan, Hefei and Nanking. Details of most of the marches could not immediately be obtained.

Beijing municipal authorities issued a statement today expressing support for activities to mourn Hu, but they harshly condemned the protests and warned that demonstrators will be "dealt with severely according to the law."

The statement blamed the unrest on "a small number of people with ulterior motives" and said further disturbances would "absolutely not be allowed."

Beijing students have led successive marches and rallies since Monday.

Executive Encounters

Support Groups Help CEOs Find Some Of The Answers

By Jim Schachter
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

LOS ANGELES — Bob Morris, chief executive, was talking about his goals.

"Every time I write down my fundamental life purpose, it comes out different," he said. "But they all have the word 'harmony' in them."

His light blue eyes looking from face to face around the room, Morris explained his difficulty finding a rewarding role in his months-old company, which operates a child-care center in Cypress, Calif., and plans to open several more.

Sure, the sandy-haired 44-year-old said, he wants to earn $300,000 a year.

But other things are just as important.

"I need to find the niche where I get to come forth completely as a human being," Morris said.

Group therapy? No — and yes. This was a recent meeting of the Summit Team, one of a growing number of forums in which top corporate executives gather in small groups, drop their facades of omnipotence and, in styles that range from strait-laced to funky, seek out the frank counsel of their peers.

At dozens of conference tables across the country these chief executive and near-CEOs, mostly of small- and medium-sized companies, are sitting down once a month to bare their hidden personal vulnerabilities, test business plans and build leadership skills in an atmosphere that combines support with surgically sharp criticism.

How do I go about firing my controller and making sure the new one does not fail, too? What do I do about a son who got straight A's in high school but won't stop partying at college? Can I give my franchisees more say in corporate policy without diluting my authority? How do I meld my values and my business?

'We're helping people to ask the question and answer the question, 'What is real success for me?'

Doug Kruschke

These are the kinds of questions chief executives are paying as much as $10,000 per year to run by other chief executives.

"Only kings know the affairs of kings," explained Bill Williams, president of the Executive Committee, the oldest and largest of the organizations that package and coordinate executive support groups. "They can come expose their downsides, their frailties, their concerns, their worries."

TEC, as Williams' group is known, was founded in 1957 by a Milwaukee businessman who realized that he learned more during the cocktail parties at management seminars than at the formal sessions. Most of the nation's 150 TEC groups are run by Williams' company in San Diego, while the original organization in Milwaukee runs groups in Wisconsin and Michigan. Participation has doubled to 1,600 chief executives in the past three years, Williams said.

TEC pioneered the format that other support groups have adapted. A TEC group of up to 14 chief executives, chosen to represent diverse industries, meets once a month for a full day at one of the member's companies. In the morning, an outside expert makes a presentation on financial planning, marketing, taxes, investing, team building, current affairs or some other topic of interest to the group.

The heavy-duty work begins after lunch. Members present their "issues," the business and personal challenges about which they have nowhere else to turn for advice. Their colleagues then drill them with questions, offer parallels from their own businesses and suggest solutions or, more often, the paths to take to find solutions.

In a typical exchange, James H. Furry, president of Grand American Fare, a Santa Monica, Calif., company that operates 33 restaurants with total revenue of about $30 million, needed feedback on a management issue from his TEC group, which met in Lawndale, Calif., recently.

The problem: Furry wanted his restaurants' general managers to maintain a 5½ day work week, but the managers wanted to cut back to five days.

"What is your fear about the five days?" asked Samuel K.

Freshman, chairman and president of Standard Management Co., a real estate company in Los Angeles.

"I think it's just another lowering of standards and expectations," Furry replied.

"I wouldn't care if my general manager worked one hour a day or one hour a week, as long as his supervisors were doing the job," said Aaron Cohen, president of United Education & Software, a troubled chain of trade schools based in Los Angeles. "A manager's job is to make sure other people do their job."

Michael W. Arthur, executive vice president of Los Angeles-based Sizzler Restaurants International, disagreed. "It's incredible, the difference between when the general manager is in or not," he said. "You can go in as a customer and see it."

On this issue, Furry, 40, said that he was not ready to change his mind.

"Why am I holding on?" he said. "It's because it's one of the reasons we've been successful."

Afterward, Freshman reflected on the value of such repartee.

"Anywhere else," he said, "everybody has an ax to grind or deal with. If you're dealing with a consultant, they're trying to sell more consulting services. If you're dealing with your board of directors, it's usually your relatives, your stockholders, your attorney, your key employees. They're influenced in the advice they're giving you by their relationship to you."

"TEC is the only place I've ever found where I get truly unbiased advice and sincere advice," Freshman said. "It's sort of a mutual exchange. You get out of it what you put into it. These people are more frank with you than even your spouse."

Executives uncomfortable with give-and-take find groups such as TEC unhelpful.

"For the person who's not willing to take a stand or take a risk, it's not a good place to be, and if you're not a good listener, it's not a good place to be," said Judith Segal, a Los Angeles management consultant who has worked with several support groups. "For the person who thinks they know everything, it is for them, but they won't enjoy it."

Each TEC group is led by a "chairman," a management consultant who coordinates all the meetings and conducts monthly one-on-one coaching sessions with the members. A poor chairman may mean that a group goes over the same issues endlessly, Segal warned. Executives pay $7,200 per year to participate.

At the Summit Team, members are intent on inventing whole new ways of conducting business.

Founded two years ago by Santa Monica management consultant Doug Kruschke, a former TEC chairman, the group has a decided "new age" focus. Many of the corporate chiefs who pay $9,800 annually to participate are veterans of therapy or other human potential programs. They hug and cry. When they understand a colleague's comment, they say, "I hear you." When they don't, they say, "I'm not getting it."

The 12-hour monthly meetings can be an emotional drain, careening from revealing descriptions of foundering love relationships to intense assessments of personal and business goals to heated discussions of participants' corporate crises. The process of learning to peel back layers of armor and share openly with others in the group is as important, members say, as what is shared.

"We're helping people to ask the question and answer the question, 'What is real success for me?'" Kruschke explained. "What's the best way for me to achieve that? What do I have to learn and develop to be able to do that? If people are interested in that kind of thing, they fit in our program. If those are weird questions, they don't belong with us."

Couples Travel To Work, Marriage

LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — "We are not a modern couple," said Ginny Thornburgh, the wife of U.S. Attorney General Dick Thornburgh. "I take my marriage vows very seriously and I never would have thought I would have done this."

Nonetheless, she's been doing it for eight months — living in a separate city from her husband. Pennsylvania's former first lady has been working at Harvard University Monday through Thursday and then lugging suitcases, garment bags and a briefcase on the subway to Boston's Logan Airport for the weekly flight to Washington, where her husband moved last August to become attorney general.

In Washington, she'll arrive somewhat bedraggled to find the 56-year-old Cabinet member surviving on peanut-butter sandwiches and lounging on rented furniture. A friend says Dick Thornburgh doesn't even attempt something as technologically daunting as making coffee.

"I consider it not only important to be home in the evening with my husband but a responsibility to be home," Ginny Thornburgh said. "We're a very traditional couple."

Nonetheless, the Thornburghs have been among more than 700,000 American couples, according to the Census Bureau, who find themselves doing a very non-traditional thing: living in different places for reasons other than military service or marital problems. Increasingly, this type of arrangement involves living elsewhere during the workweek, with weekend commuting moving from interstate highways into the skies. Many couples now spend several thousand dollars a year shuttling back and forth.

The trend goes right to the heart of the most resounding change to take place in the American family: women pursuing careers. No longer is it a given that a woman, if she works at all, will have a job that is secondary to her husband's. No longer is it assumed that the wife will pack up the kids and move if her husband is transferred or finds a better opportunity elsewhere. And, the "Mommy Track" notwithstanding, no longer are women automatically turning down promotions because they involve moving to another city.

Though still affecting only a small percentage of upscale Americans, commuter marriages are more frequently arising as a sometimes painful side effect of equal opportunity. Scaling two ladders of success inevitably thrusts some climbers in opposite directions, and there can be just as much pain deciding not to do it (passing up a good career opportunity) as to do it.

Some couples, such as the Thornburghs, do it temporarily until a specific job task is completed or a new job can be found in the other city. But other couples, such as the dermatologist-consultant duo of A. Paul and Beverly Baker Kelly of Los Angeles and Oakland, Calif., have installed it as a way of life. The Kellys, who have two children, have lived apart — sometimes on different continents — for 22 of their 23 years of marriage.

They have been away from each other so often in their marriage that "other people many times are more worried about our relationship than we are," said Beverly Baker Kelly. "If you need a great deal of social approval, I do not think this type of relationship would work as well."

And it would seem that living apart could invite infidelity. But the couples say that if the relationship is strong, this is not any more likely to happen in a commuter marriage than in a traditional one.

It doesn't mean that commuter marriages don't have their strained moments, however. For Deedie Runkel, the proverbial stuff hit the fan when a bat dive-bombed into her fish tank.

"I was so furious he wasn't there. I simply don't do bats. He's in charge of them," said Deedie, who remained along with one child in Washington, D.C., at her jobs while her husband, David, was working in Cambridge, Mass. "I was prepared to let him (the bat) meet his maker doing the bat stroke, as my daughter said. But one of my daughter's friends who is an animal-rights activist was there, and she fished the damn thing out and brought it back to life in a Converse shoe box and set it free."

Troubled, Handicapped Form Own Bonds

By Steve Bates
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

LEESBURG, Va. — Susan Dieter gazed intently at 17-year-old David McIntire as he crouched beside her wooden desk and turned a page in her photo album.

McIntire, a burly, dark-haired student in the Loudoun County, Va., public schools' Alternative Center for troubled youths, pointed to a picture of a school bus and asked, "What is that?"

Susan, a developmentally delayed preschooler with cerebral palsy, responded, "Ride a bus."

McIntire turned another page, this one upside down and loose from its binder. "My book's broken," exclaimed a wide-eyed Susan, who turned 3 in March.

McIntire beamed with pride. "I'll fix it; hold on," he said.

The exchange was a common one at an uncommon school, the Douglass Community School in Leesburg. In the aging building that county school officials hope to replace soon, about 65 children with a wide range of handicaps share an education with a comparable number of teen-agers who haven't succeeded in larger schools. Some of them are recovering from drug or alcohol problems.

The older, troubled students, many of whom were identified as in danger of dropping out of school, spend most of their day downstairs at Douglass, attending standard and vocational classes for anytime from a month to three years, until they graduate or return to their regular schools.

Handicapped students and troubled teens work together at Douglass Community School

Preschool classes and instruction for the physically handicapped and mentally retarded students are conducted upstairs. Some special-education pupils will move on to regular schools, while others may stay at Douglass through the 12th grade.

But Douglass is a place where all students, including emotionally disturbed youngsters, mix in the halls, cafeteria and in some classrooms. It is also a place where troubled teens act as mentors for disabled children and learn from them at the same time. The result is a school that local and national education officials say may be unique.

"It brings out the best in both" groups, said county School Board Chairman Betty S. Poehlman of Leesburg.

School Board member James D. Callahan said, "The interesting thing is that everyone seems so happy."

"Douglass is a special place," said Susan's mother, Clarice Dieter of Waterford, Va. She said her daughter "has improved wonderfully" in language skills since enrolling at Douglass last year. Mrs. Dieter and Douglass Principal Lauraine Landolt attribute some of the success to helpers such as McIntire.

McIntire, who lives in the western Loudoun community of Lincoln, Va., said that in less than two months his volunteer work with special-education pupils has helped him become "used to being patient." In his own classes, McIntire studies drafting with an eye toward becoming an architect.

Couple Married Saturday

MURFREESBORO — Linda Iris Wiggins and Calvin Christopher Vinson were united in marriage Saturday at 2 p.m.

The Rev. Gerald Riggs conducted the double-ring ceremony in Meherin Baptist Church. Organist Bob Mulder and soloists Elizabeth Gibbs and Barbara Sue Benton presented nuptial music.

Mr. and Mrs. Carlyle Wiggins of Dunbar, W.Va., and Lila Vinson of Route 1, Murfreesboro, are parents of the bridal couple.

Sally Robinson of Washington, Pa., sister of the bride, was matron of honor. Junior bridesmaids were Katie Robinson, also of Washington, and Jona Wiggins of Raleigh, nieces of the bride.

Tad Vinson of Murfreesboro, son of the bridegroom, was best man. Ushers were Christopher Vinson of Murfreesboro and Ralph Cherry of Seaboard, sons of the bridegroom. Michael Vinson of Murfreesboro, grandson of the bridegroom, was ring bearer.

The bride was given in marriage by her brother, Aubrey Wiggins. She wore an ivory tea-length dress with a hankerchief hemline and carried a bouquet of orchids, roses, gardenias and baby's breath.

The couple will live in Murfreesboro after a wedding trip to Las Vegas.

The bride is a registered nurse and is employed by Pitt County Memorial Hospital. The bridegroom is self-employed.

A reception was held at the Ramada Inn.

A rehearsal dinner and several parties were given for the couple.

'Jane' Could Adopt Special Child

Dear Abby: I'll bet "Jane in Long Island," who is 38 years old and is having a hard time adopting a child, wouldn't be told that she is too old to adopt an older, non-white and/or handicapped child. And she certainly is not too old to be a foster parent.

Every week, a local TV station runs a spot called "Waiting Child," seeking homes for hard-to-place children. There are literally thousands of these children sitting in orphanages, feeling unloved and unwanted because there is something "wrong" with them.

Jane can moan about not being able to get pregnant, but it's really her shortsightedness that deprives her of the chance to open her heart and home to a truly needy child. Sign me ... No Sympathy In Carmichael, Calif.

Dear No Sympathy: It takes a very special kind of person to open her heart and home to a "hard-to-place" child. God bless those who do.

Dear Abby: You stated that the AIDS virus may lie dormant in the body for several years before symptoms of the disease appear.

Does that mean that one who has had a blood transfusion several years ago may be at risk from donor blood? Is not the blood of donors screened for antibodies? How much at risk is a person who has had a transfusion?

Dear Abby

Thanks and best wishes. I enjoy your answers and learn from reading Dear Abby. — Scared Of Blood Transfusions

Dear Scared: According to a spokesperson for the American Red Cross, people who received blood transfusions between 1975 and 1985 should be tested for HIV, because before 1985, blood was not screened for the AIDS virus.

However, since 1985, the blood supply has been closely screened and, according to the Centers of Disease Control, the chance of becoming infected with AIDS from a transfusion is now about 1 in 100,000. In order to eliminate even this tiny risk, many physicians advise their patients who are contemplating surgery to bank their own blood for use at that time.

Dear Abby: Well, here I go with my first letter to you. Something is bothering me, and I have to know the answer and I can't ask anyone else.

I have "A Positive" blood type, and my husband has "O Positive." Our child's blood type is "AB Positive."

The point is, I fooled around a little about the time I got pregnant. I need to know if this child could belong to my husband.

For obvious reasons I can't sign my name or have your reply come to our home, so please give me a fast "Confidential to Keeping My Fingers Crossed in Kentucky": affirmative, if the child could be my husband's; negative, if it couldn't be. Thank you. — K.M.F.C. In Kentucky

DEAR K.M.F.C.: It's not that simple. According to Dr. Ronald S. Ostrowski, my genetic consultant at the University of North Carolina at Charlotte: "In all probability, the answer is 'negative.' But there is a very small possibility that the husband has a 'masked' gene. (This is called the 'Bombay Phenomenon.') For an absolutely foolproof test, tissue typing will provide an accurate answer."

Now uncross your fingers, and cross your heart you will never fool around again.

If you would like to write to Abby, send your letter to Abigail Van Buren, P.O. Box 69440, Los Angeles, CA. 90069. For a personal, non-published reply, enclose a self-addressed stamped envelope.

The Coiffure Column Comes Back

It is rare that I do a follow-up on a column, but the one on women who will get to a beauty shop — no matter what — prompted a couple of interesting responses.

One of them was from a male reader who wrote: "Wise up, lady. The column on women who go through snowstorms to have their hair done is bunk! My wife has had the same hairdo since I married her (30 years ago) and has never been in a beauty shop in her life. Maybe you go all the time, but most women aren't that vain."

The majority of letters came from the opposing camp.

"In September 1987, I crossed a street in Escondido, Calif., and was hit by a truck, dragged a ways and critically injured. Besides my many fractured and demolished bones, I suffered serious head injuries that delayed surgery for two weeks. It's my good fortune that this also wiped out my memory of the entire episode, so I have only what I was told to relate to you.

At Wits End

"While I was in the hospital awaiting the results of X-rays, scans and tests of all kinds, I was aware of only one important thing: My hair was dirty. All I talked about was my dirty hair. My daughter and her friend (who are both nurses) got so tired of hearing my constant complaints that they decided to shampoo me while waiting to find out if I was going to live or die. I have thin, skimpy hair and never considered it an obsession ... just an inconvenience. Maybe we can be obsessed without knowing it until we're 'mowed down.'"

And from another reader: "Let me tell you a true story. When the temperature was 21 degrees below zero (40 degrees below with the wind chill factor), I walked across town (a 20-minute walk) to keep an 8 a.m. hair appointment. My car wouldn't start, and there was nothing open to stop and get warm. I was beet-purple when I arrived at the hairdresser's."

A hairdresser reminisced: "During World War II in London, we had frequent air raids at which time people were supposed to head for the nearest shelter. All during the war, I cannot remember one woman under the dryers so much as moving a finger when she heard the warning of approaching aircraft. They figured if they were going to get bombed, they'd have clean hair."

And my personal favorite: A funeral director wrote that he was talking with a bereaved widow about funeral services for her husband. When he suggested a 2 p.m. service, she shook her head adamantly and said, "No, no. That would be cutting it too close. My beauty shop appointment isn't until 1 o'clock."

I stand by my original assessment: "Hell hath no fury like a woman separated from her hairdresser."

Hollywood Vamps Inspire New Look In Lingerie And Loungewear

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Weddings are back in fashion, and the trend is toward big, formal affairs with all of the traditional accouterments including the romantic honeymoon and a feminine trousseau.

By the end of this year, the '80s will have seen more weddings than any other decade in American history, averaging well over 2 million annually.

According to Modern Bride, the first-marriage bride is better educated and a bit older — 25 years — than in previous decades. The magazine says 80 percent of its readership have a college degree and 85 percent are pursuing careers.

The average combined annual income of the first-marriage couple is $41,000.

None of this is lost on the makers of intimate apparel, who are appealing to the bride with elegant and sensuous designs in a variety of fabrics, colors and patterns, including florals.

The Hollywood vamp of the 1930s has inspired one new look in lingerie and loungewear — slinky, sexy, ultra-feminine designs fashioned in soft, shimmering fabrics that drape well and flatter the figure. They are geared to a new generation of "coconers" and homebodies who crave elegance in their personal lives and spend more time relaxing or entertaining at home.

New fibers such as Patina nylon combine the elegance of silks and satins with the easy care of nylon. Fashions in these new fabrics range from sumptuous floor-length gowns that look as though they were made for dancing to elegant peignoir sets and seductive baby dolls and teddies.

Antique lace adorns the necklines, and full sleeves end in cascading ruffles. There are a lot of pleats, embroidery, lattice work, appliques, beading, even rhinestone glitter and clip-on flowers. Unusual collar, neckline and sleeve details echo fashion trends of bygone eras.

But unlike those of the past, today's nighties don't look like they've been slept in.

American Movie-Goers Turning Thumbs Down To Big Screen Ads

By Gretel Wikle
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

DETROIT — Put some racy, glittery commercials with lots of naked bodies on movie screens in France and the audience goes wild.

But do the same thing in the United States — with the glitz but without the nudity — and the ads go over as big as sticky floors, stale popcorn and overpriced candy.

Richard Dodderidge, senior vice president for corporate marketing at AMC Entertainment in Kansas City, Mo., said when AMC tried the ads in theaters, audiences went berserk.

"There was public displeasure indicated by throwing popcorn boxes at the screen and people wanting their money back," he said. "They left home to avoid commercial television. They paid money and expected relief."

"I've been in theaters where people booed," said Barbara Lippert, advertising critic for Ad Week magazine. "On paper they sound great ... but they can only be successful if they're really artfully done and surprising."

In France, audiences get about 30 minutes of commercials, which must by law be 90 percent entertainment. In American theaters, though, audiences who are often asked to pay as much as $10 a ticket, resent the intrusion.

The ads would have more staying power if they helped lower ticket prices, said Ed Swanson, senior vice president of sales and marketing for Modern Talking Picture Service in Chicago, which distributes corporate-sponsored films. He recalled a recent movie outing with his family in which he paid $22 for four tickets — after a $50 dinner check. "If I'd have sat there and seen a commercial I'd have been peeved."

"Nobody likes commercials," said Terry Laughren, president of Screenvision Cinema Network, a New York-based company that distributes commercials. "But there's a tremendous fascination in this country for good advertising."

The clutter of commercials on television has been one force behind the advertisers' quest for a more captive audience. Toyota Motor Corp., General Motors Corp., 7-Up, Dr Pepper, Lee jeans, Pepsi Co., Memorex and the U.S. Marines, have reeled out dollars to give movie advertising a try.

"It seems to be growing pretty steadily," said Larissa Alexandra, vice president of Screenvision in Los Angeles. "With TV, what you are trying to do is talk through clutter to get some attention. There's no chance to get the emotional aspects of the product."

Creators insist the ads are distinctly different from typical TV commercials, and some of them can be edited for television.

Dave Danzer, national advertising manager for Toyota, said the directors hired to do the ads often have experience with feature films and stunts such as car chases. He refused to divulge how much Toyota spends on theater ads.

One of Screenvision's most recent commercials features Toyota.

"It is hard to find anybody who reacts negatively," said Laughren about the ad. "To the concept, yes, there is negative reaction, but then they say, 'Oh god! That was a great commercial.'"

In the Toyota ad, which Danzer likens to the adventure formula of "Raiders of the Lost Ark," a man dreams he's being chased through a jungle in his Toyota four-wheeler by an imaginary threat. There's no dialogue until he wakes up, looks out his window and sees his Toyota sitting outside. Then an announcer says: "Toyota's new V64X4. Get it ... before it gets you."

Danzer didn't know if the ads helped sales, but he said they were especially good at reaching males 18 to 34 years old, who are typically light TV viewers.

"In the theater 95 percent of the people see your ad," Danzer said. "They might be eating popcorn, but they see the ad. With television you have no idea whether they are going to look at it."

Michael Bernacchi, a professor of marketing at the University of Detroit, has studied theater advertising and thinks companies increasingly will want to see their products featured on the big screen.

"Right now it's an outstanding way to communicate with consumers," he said. "Viewers will tend to ... receive them with more interest and maybe chagrin. They may reject them in their hearts, but they are probably going to stay in the saddle and witness them."

The reason is a moviegoer's state of mind. Bernacchi said the expectation is much different when people actually seek entertainment.

"Few people go to the movies with the idea of just sitting and casually attending. You go there with a purpose," he said.

Bernacchi thinks the ads will thrive because in theaters there is much less competition for a viewer's attention, and because the cinema, unlike VCRs, don't offer the option of hand-held controls.

League Plans Its New Gift Shop Opening

Plans to open the new gift shop at Pitt County Memorial Hospital were discussed at the Monday meeting of the Service League of Greenville.

Helen Rountree said the new shop should open this month.

Laurie Charlton reported on three March bloodmobile visits — 69 workers volunteered 219 hours and 356 units were collected. Mary Anne Howard said 14 workers gave 28 hours making 450 Easter favors for patient trays at the hospital. Five Easter lilies were placed at nurses stations.

Mary Ann Barnhill gave the Laughinghouse Fund report and Mindy Howard gave a final report on the hospital disaster plan.

School

The combination of the special education and Alternative Center students "sort of evolved" in the early 1970s, according to Landolt.

"We had a building" that once had been a high school and now doubles as a community center, Landolt said.

"At the time it was just a convenience. The convenience has been a beneficial combination," she said.

In fact, last winter, when county school officials proposed replacing the 48-year-old structure with a new building, they gave almost no thought to changing the student or educational mix. The new building is part of the schools' five-year capital-improvement program, which will be reviewed this spring by the Board of Supervisors.

School officials concede that Alternative Center participants have had their share of suspensions and other discipline at Douglass, but Clarice Dieter said she had no reservations about sending her daughter to a school with troubled teens.

"I think it's wonderful the way these (older) kids help out. It gives them more compassion and a broader scope," she said.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21): It may be difficult to control matters according to your own wishes. It may be necessary to procrastinate on a creative project.

LEO (July 22 to Aug. 21): Upheavals on the domestic front call for some fence mending. You are on firm ground but give attention where it is needed.

VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22): Head for a favorite spa and treat yourself and the whole family. A flexible attitude will bring surprises and adventure.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22): The social scene promises to be lively. It seems like the start of a fun weekend. Being active is great for the waistline.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21): Your lethargic mood can irritate feisty family members who are demanding. You can finish errands quickly. The p.m. brings change.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21): You can be practical, as well as creative, when you want to. You need to schedule your time to keep things humming.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20): Someone you are eager to meet would enjoy a phone call or other contact. Don't overindulge. Handle money carefully.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19): A rest would be good for you, but not today. Demands on your time are making you a wreck. Cover less ground with more gusto.

PISCES (Feb. 20 to March 20): This can easily be a scattered day if you let it. Concentrate on details that can be overlooked. Wine, dine and circulate with friends.

Many of our favorite bridge players know how to enjoy a good meal. Perhaps their spouses will enjoy reading some good hands while preparing some of the recipes that ap-

South's jump to four hearts is a little aggressive. With two queens of doubtful value, a game try of three clubs might have been more advisable.

After West's lead of the diamond king, declarer can see two sure losers in diamonds and one in clubs. In addition, there is the danger of a second club loser if declarer mis-guesses the suit. However, a dash of deception could eliminate all guesswork.

Under the king of diamonds declarer should sacrifice his queen. That puts West under a lot of pressure. From his point of view, the ace of diamonds could get ruffed, setting up the jack for a critical discard.

But any switch by West presents declarer with his contract. If West shifts to a club, East can win and return a diamond, but now declarer gets two club discards—one on the jack of diamonds and the other on a spade. And if West shifts to a spade, declarer wins, draws trump and takes a diamond discard on the third spade.

The only defense to give declarer a chance to go wrong is for West to cash his top diamonds, then exit in any suit save clubs. But after South's morsel at trick one, we admit that we wouldn't have found that defense.

Former Raider Changes Careers

By Joe Edwards
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Mark Lindsay, the spirited, former lead singer in Paul Revere and the Raiders, knows what he should have done with his famous ponytail.

"It needed to be bronzed," he says.

He cut the trademark ponytail 15 years ago, and he's put away the flamboyant three-cornered hats, lavish long coats, big boots and white tights that identified the popular rock 'n' roll band.

But after spending the past decade in music behind-the-scenes, the 45-year-old Lindsay is stepping out before the public again.

He's putting together a six-to-nine member band with the intriguing name "Mark Lindsay and the Research and Development Ensemble (RADE)." They plan to record an album.

"It's like an old race horse," he said. "They ring the bell and he staggers out of his stall."

Lindsay and the colorfully costumed Paul Revere and the Raiders were one of this country's top rock 'n' roll bands from the mid-1960s to the early '70s, putting out such hits as "Indian Reservation," "Kicks," "Just Like Me," "Hungry," "Steppin' Out" and "Good Thing."

They spent about three years on the TV show "Where the Action Is," a year on the program "Happening '68" and another year on "Happening."

Lindsay, as a solo performer, had hit records including "Arizona" and "Silver Bird."

"There are about 10 years of my life that are a blur," he recalled. "It was a wonderful period of music. The summer of 1967 will always be engraved in my mind as a golden year. We had 'Sgt. Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club Band,' and the aftermath of the (Rolling) Stones. 'Flower power' was still fun. It was a great year in music, a great summer."

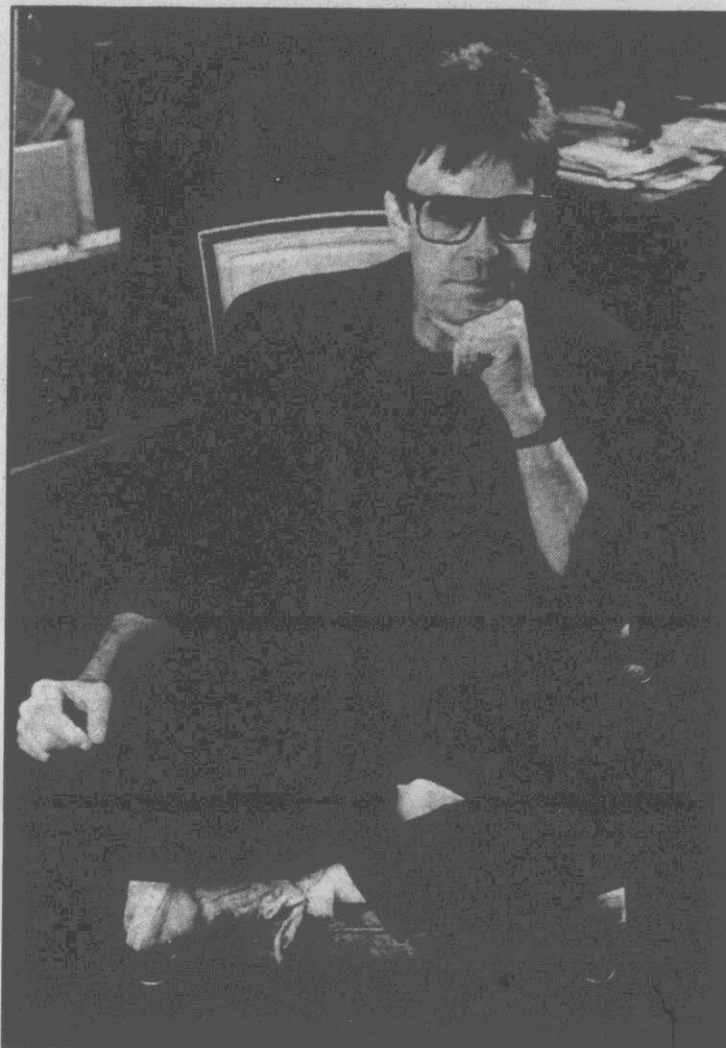

Reynolds Isn't Member Of GOP

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla. — Burt Reynolds, who couldn't make it to a weekend barbecue for Vice President Dan Quayle, isn't really a member of the Republican Party after all.

In fact, The Palm Beach Post reports he hasn't voted since 1980 and is a registered Democrat.

"The issue is: What does a person consider himself?" said Reynolds' agent David Gershenson. "If he's technically registered as a Democrat, I know he considers himself a Republican."

The Associated Press

Ex-Raider singer Mark Lindsay has new band

He described the Raiders as "a party band, a good-time band, a band that would do anything."

"We were very irreverent in that we were nontraditional. If I wanted to lie down on the stage during a song, I'd do it. I had a 100-foot microphone cord so I could go around in the crowd singing, or go over to the snack bar during the performance or go outside and interview people in the streets."

"We had water fights. And I'd always liked to climb, so at the end of the show I'd find the highest point in the gymnasium or wherever and climb to the top and finish the show from up there. We were known as doing anything."

The Beatles, he said, indirectly contributed to the success of the Raiders.

"Our press agent, Derrick Taylor, also had been press agent for the Beatles. He said, 'we'll type you guys as the answer to the British Invasion.' It played very well. It gave us good press. We were a very energetic band and we had a cute drummer. We were different, I guess."

He offered these reflections on some of their biggest hits:

"Indian Reservation" — "This was at the height of the Indian awareness. I'm part Cherokee myself, so I guess I sang it with some conviction."

"Kicks" — "It was saying ... drugs are not the answer. You thought you found the answer on that magic carpet ride last night, but when you woke up in the morning, the world still gets you up tight. It was an anti-drug song which is very valid today."

"Hungry" — "It was about what all kids and young adults and grownups want. I guess the yuppie generation would know about that."

Lindsay, who was raised in the Boise valley area of Idaho, left the group in the mid-'70s. He wrote music for a few little-known motion pictures, including "Shogun Assassin," and was an executive for three years for United Artists Records in Los Angeles.

He moved to Nashville last fall with an eye to returning to the stage. His ambition had been whetted when he gave benefit performances for the Statue of Liberty restoration fund and the 1988 U.S. Olympic Team.

VH-1 Network Revamping Format For Baby Boomers

By Richard de Atley
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — VH-1, once a poorly defined cable network that believed what people over 30 wanted was Julio Iglesias music videos, has finally found itself, as members of its baby boom audience might say.

VH-1's parent MTV Networks, which also has the big-time MTV and Nickelodeon cable channels, has in recent months boosted VH-1's staff and budget and given VH-1 chief Jeff Rowe his own pipeline to network president and chief executive officer Tom Freston.

The developments at VH-1 are what network television has most to fear about cable: an entire broadcast agenda microprogrammed to one very lucrative audience.

While the networks take snatches of the age 25 to 49 audience with shows like "thirtysomething," "China Beach," "The Wonder Years," and "L.A. Law," they also have to reach viewers who were unconscious from 1960 to 1980. Just watch "Nightingales."

VH-1, its parent MTVN hopes, is for everyone who stayed awake during those years.

"We feel this is a great chance to target the audience that grew up on television and contemporary music," Rowe said in a recent interview.

The new VH-1 programming includes interview segments, clips of classic and contemporary rock and pop, "infotainment" reporting on show business, and special attention to weekends, when VH-1 watchers are more apt to set aside their graph charts and tune in.

The theme weekends have included interviews, clips and concert films devoted to Elton John, Paul Simon, Tina Turner and others.

Rowe also acknowledged the challenge of reaching an audience that includes Vietnam veterans, former peace marchers, sociologists who became investment bankers and business majors who operate halfway houses.

"A network that is targeted to fit this generation has to know how it lives," he said. "We want to create an environment that keeps people up on contemporary music, but also reflects their past; has comedy about current events, but also is nostalgic."

To keep both ends of the candle burning, VH-1 is sponsoring a "Million Dollar Baby" contest for the offspring of baby boomers and offers a series of Earth Alerts — celebrity-hosted informational spots keyed to the activities of the Greenpeace organization.

The "Million Dollar Baby," sponsored by Gerber Products Co. and Downy fabric softener, harkens back to the corporate-sponsored contests of the 1950s. Entrants send in a photo of their offspring from ages four months to 2½ years, with an April 24 deadline looming. The winner will be announced May 8.

The prize is a zero coupon municipal bond, worth $1 million at maturity.

The Earth Alerts are tied in with a celebrity fund-raiser album, "Rainbow Warrior," due this month on Geffen Records. "Environmental issues are still the issues of this generation," said VH-1 spokeswoman Dana Kornbluth.

"At the farthest end, there is not much we can do to shock this audience," said Rowe. "This audience did a lot of crazy things back in the 1960s and 1970s ... we can't take ourselves too seriously."

One of VH-1's best efforts to catch the spin of its viewers recently failed with the cancellation of the "Watch

Knowing Best

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The Family Channel plans a seven-hour "Father Still Knows Best" marathon for Father's Day, June 18. Stars Robert Young, Jane Wyatt, Lauren Chapin and Billy Gray have taped reminiscences to run between the episodes.

Bobby Rivers' interview show. Rivers remains with the network as a host, and he is typical of the exuberant, insightful personality VH-1 is seeking for its audience.

The 35-year-old Rivers grew up in the Willowbrook neighborhood of Los Angeles and graduated from Verbum Dei High School — where he was president of the library club — and Marquette University. He's a bookish, energetic personality who came to VH-1 from WPXI-TV in New York and before that was an interviewer for the syndicated "PM Magazine."

His first exposure to the power of television was the Watts Riots in August of 1965, just a few blocks from his home.

"We were all in the living room watching the riot on TV, and it looked like all of Los Angeles was going up," Rivers said. "But no, it really was just a very small community. But from what was on TV, people in Redondo Beach (a Los Angeles suburb) were ready to pack up and leave town."
