GUC Orders 10 Percent Hike In Rates

By Stuart Savage
THE DAILY REFLELCTOR

Electric customers of the Greenville Utilities Commission will see a 10 percent rate increase on May 1, thanks to action by the GUC board Tuesday night.

The rate hike — the result of a 3.5 percent increase in the wholesale cost of power which took effect April 1, and a 7.5 percent wholesale rate increase scheduled for Sept. 1 — is only the second rate increase approved by GUC's board since 1984.

Malcolm Green, GUC's general manager, said that prior to the board's action Tuesday night, electric rates for GUC's customers have seen only a 5.2 percent increase since 1984.

"We absorbed a 2 percent wholesale rate increase in 1987 and a 4 percent rate increase in 1988, Green said. And rather than pass on the full 11 percent increase caused by the April and September increases, the commission is passing on only 10 percent, Green said.

According to Green, each 1 percent increase in the wholesale rate paid by the GUC for electricity translates into $500,000 in power costs per year. So by absorbing the 2 percent increase in 1987, the 4 percent last year, and the 1 percent this year, the commission will be absorbing about $3.5 million in charges each year.

"It's never a pleasant matter to do an increase," Green said. But he suggested that GUC's customers might be paying even more for electricity if it were not for the commission's load management program, which has saved more than $7.04 million in wholesale power costs since January 1985.

Under the new rate schedule, which will take effect May 1, a residential customer using 1,000 kilowatt hours of electricity a month during the winter months (November through June) will be paying $82.76, compared to the $75.25 under the present rate. Homeowners using 2,000 kwh of power a month will pay $158 under the new rate, compared to $143.65 under the present rate.

During the summer months, residential customers using 1,000 kwh of power will be paying $93.85 compared to $85.34 under the present rate, while those using 2,000 kwh will be paying 180.19 during the summer months (July-October), compared to $163.82 under the present rate structure.

Under the new rates, small general service customers will be paying $98.61 for 1,000 kwh both winter and summer, compared to $89.65 during the winter and $91.48 during the summer months now.

According to a written report to the GUC board, Green said "Our existing (residential) rates are 2 percent below" Carolina Power & Light Company's rates. This increase will put us approximately 8 percent above them for May 1 through Aug. 5."

Lucille Ball Dies At Age 77

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — Lucille Ball, the zany, wide-mouthed redhead who reigned for more than 20 years as the queen of television comedy, died today, a week after undergoing emergency heart surgery. She was 77.

The excitable star of "I Love Lucy" and similar situation comedies that continue in syndication around the world died of cardiac arrest at Cedars-Sinai Medical Center, said hospital spokesman Ronald Wise.

Miss Ball, who had a heart attack and had throat surgery in 1988, underwent surgery at Cedars-Sinai to replace her aorta and aortic valve April 18 and had been getting out of bed, eating and even walking around the room in recent days.

"Lucille Ball is the greatest woman clown in the world," fellow comedian Milton Berle once said. "In fact, she is one of the great clowns of all time, male or female."

Miss Ball's singularity as a comedian was matched by her talent as a show-business entrepreneur. She and her former husband, the late Desi Arnaz, established one of TV's first major independent studios.

Desilu, as their production company was called, made some of the top comedy shows of the 1950s and '60s, including "December Bride," "Our Miss Brooks" and "Make Room for Daddy."

As testament to their value as prime-time stars, Miss Ball and Arnaz signed an $8 million, no-cancellation, two-year contract with CBS in 1953 — the largest in television history at the time and a figure scarcely any TV star can touch 36 years later.

The actress was last seen introducing the "Young Hollywood" production number with Bob Hope at the 61st Academy Awards ceremony March 29, receiving a standing ovation. Looking svelte for her years in a fashionable slit skirt, she seemed to be in good health and laughed

Broyhill Tells Visiting Reporters Pitt Area Building On Its Assets

By John Bare
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

The state's top commerce official serenaded representatives from international business publications Tuesday in Greenville, praising the area's business climate.

"People here have sold their community, pure and simple," Commerce Secretary Jim Broyhill said to a group gathered for a luncheon at the Greenville Country Club for the opening of a three-day press tour.

"They've gone to work to put great effort in this community, and gone to work to build on the assets they have and gone to work to try and correct some of the liabilities they have."

Eastern North Carolina is a favorite of industry officials because of its educational system, its medical center, the recreational and leisure opportunities and the affordable cost of living, Broyhill said.

"All of this adds together to make this an attractive place for business to locate, to grow and to expand."

The press tour, sponsored by the Pitt County Development Commission, has attracted local print and television reporters, as well as representatives from four large publications. They are: Dietrich Zwaetz, Washington, D.C., bureau chief for the German newspaper Handelsblatt; David S. Kastriner of New York City, advertising sales manager for the Japanese magazine Nikkei Business Publications Inc.; Nancy Bader of Plants, Sites and Parks, a major development publication, and Jim Hughs of BusinessWeek. Neither Ms. Bader nor Hughs arrived in time for the luncheon Tuesday.

The group is touring local businesses, such as Overton's Sports Center Inc. and Grady-White Boats Inc., and also visiting national and international companies such as Weyerhaeuser and Burroughs

Armed Dad Lets Ailing Son Die

Holds Off Hospital Staff With Gun

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHICAGO — A man pulled his son off a life-support system today while holding hospital staff members at bay with a gun, and cradled the baby in his arms until the child died, authorities said.

Rudy Linares, 23, of Cicero, was charged with murdering his 16-month-old son, Samuel, said Lisa Howard, spokeswoman for the Cook County state's attorney's office.

Police said Linares and his wife, Tamara, walked into Rush-Presbyterian-St. Luke's Medical Center about 1 a.m. and were escorted to the pediatric intensive care unit, where their son's breathing had been sustained on a ventilator since an accident in August.

About 20 minutes later, Linares pulled out a .357-caliber handgun, ordered the lone nurse out of the unit, unhooked the infant from the life-support system, and sat with his son in his arms, said police Sgt. William Rooney.

About a half-dozen security personnel responded to the nurse's call for help, and gathered just outside the room.

"I'm not here to hurt anyone. I'll only hurt you if you try to plug my baby back in," Rooney quoted Linares as saying.

"He never pointed the gun at anyone other than the child," said Rooney. "He sat there in a chair until the baby had expired, then turned the gun over to the officers."

Hospital spokeswoman Carolyn Reed said Samuel had been brought to Rush-Presbyterian by ambulance after he swallowed an object — believed to be either a balloon or a small piece of aluminum foil — that blocked his windpipe.

Oxygen deprivation left him partially brain dead, and he had been in a coma since his arrival, said Ms. Reed. Doctors had notified the parents earlier Tuesday that the child was to be transferred to a long-term care unit, she added.

"You can understand the motivation," said Rooney. "I guess he didn't want his child to continue living under those conditions."

Area Apparently Escapes Damage

By Cherie Evans
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Pitt County escaped the strong winds and tornadoes that hit parts of eastern North Carolina on Tuesday evening, according to local officials.

"I don't know of any significant problems that we had" because of the thunderstorms, said Roger Jones, director of Electric Systems at the Greenville Utilities Commission.

Most of the adverse weather conditions occurred to the west of Pitt County, he said. "Wake Forest called me and asked for assistance," which was arranged, Jones said.

Other areas affected by the storm included Wilson, Wayne, Johnson and Duplin counties, the spokesman said. "It pretty well missed us."

Greenville Public Works crews may find some debris in the city caused by the storm, said Mayo Allen, director. But, "that's normal. Everything is pretty well normal this morning," he said.

Farmers in counties hit by the storm may have to wait until this afternoon or Thursday to get back into their fields to plant, said Mitch Smith, director of the Pitt County

Belhaven Physician Balks At Jury

By Jerry Raynor
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

The chief of staff at a Belhaven hospital said today he planned to resist any efforts by sheriff's department personnel to deliver him to Washington, N.C., for jury duty, saying his duties are to his patients.

"If the sheriff's people come for me this morning, they will have to wrestle me to the floor and put handcuffs on me and take me away," said Dr. Charles O. Boyotte at 10 a.m. today.

Boyette, who serves at Pungo District Hospital, was called to serve on jury duty in Washington this week. "I asked ahead of time to be excused from jury duty due to the overwhelming responsibilities and needs here at the hospital, but Judge Hallet Ward said he would not excuse me," Boyette said today.

"Further, he instructed the court's presiding judge, Billy Griffin, the sheriff and the clerk of court that they were to have nothing to do with in any way honoring my request," Boyette said.

Beaufort County Sheriff Nelson Sheppard said at 10:45 a.m. today that he had not been instructed to serve a warrant on Boyette.

Griffin is presiding judge at the current session of court, and Ward is the chief District Court judge for the 2nd District covering Beaufort County.

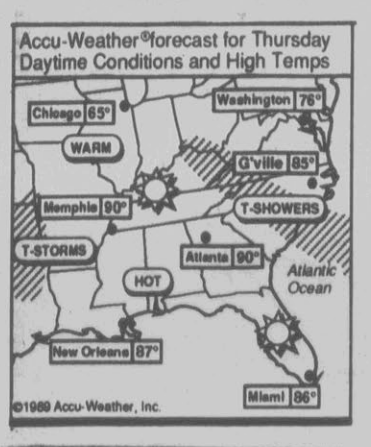

"Judge Ward also said that if I did not appear in court by 10 a.m. this morning, he would instigate contempt of court proceedings against me, Boyette said.

"I did honor the summons to jury duty on Monday morning," Boyette said. "To do that, I worked all weekend to take care of patients and to have the situation in readiness to the point where I could take time Monday for jury duty."

Boyette said that on Monday he again asked to be excused from jury duty but that the request was denied.

High Winds Rip Eastern North Carolina

By John Flesher
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PRINCETON, N.C. — Waves of thunderstorms and tornadoes that plowed south from Virginia at speeds of about 40 mph ripped roofs off buildings, downed trees and plunged thousands of eastern North Carolina residents into the dark.

The only injury reported was to a volunteer firefighter in Durham County. Glenn Jefferson was treated for head injuries at a Durham hospital after his pickup truck smashed into a fallen tree.

A tornado touched down in northeastern Durham County at about 11 p.m., ripping the roof off one home and knocking over trees and utility poles.

"It hit the back of my house and sounded like a thunderous train roar," said Phil Bunn, an assistant Durham County fire marshal. "It hit my house with a blast," he said.

Bill Colley, director of Durham County Emergency Management, said there would be no way to determine the extent of the damage until today.

In Johnston County, high winds blew part of the roof off a Princeton grocery store and damaged mobile homes.

Steve Edwards, manager of the Edwards IGA store in Princeton, told The News and Observer of Raleigh that were 10 people inside the store early Tuesday evening when part of the roof blew off.

"The rain started, and the hail started beating against the window. That's when I said, 'Look folks, we're having a tornado. Get away from the windows,'" he said.

"It picked the roof up," he said. "I've got roof scattered for a mile."

The storm plunged the entire town of Princeton into darkness, and the only lights that could be seen on city streets were the red and blue flashes from emergency vehicles. Tree limbs and other debris littered the streets.

Selma police said they had reports of a tornado touchdown on N.C. 39 in Selma and in Princeton on U.S. 70.

Eddie Haddock, the chief of the Princeton rescue squad, said he was home with his wife and two children when the storm hit.

"We heard the wind blowing real loud, roaring like a train," he said. "My four-year-old son said, 'We've got to get in the bathroom.' They've learned about tornadoes in school."

Haddock said he ran to open a window and as he did, the wind shifted "and started sucking things out." "I knew then" that it was a tornado, Haddock said.

Haddock said he huddled with his wife and two children in the bathroom until the storm passed.

A Smithfield fire department spokesman said U.S. 70 between Princeton and Smithfield was blocked by downed trees and that damage

East Carolina Alumni Hold Annual Weekend Reunions

ECU NEWS BUREAU

More than 300 alumni of East Carolina Teachers Training School, East Carolina Teachers College, East Carolina College and East Carolina University returned to the campus Friday and Saturday for a chance to reminisce with friends and faculty during ECU's Alumni Weekend 1989.

The weekend began Friday when Chancellor and Mrs. Richard R. Eakin hosted a reception at their home for senior alumni (members of the class of 1938 and prior years) and the Golden Anniversary Class of 1939.

During the reunion dinner which followed at Mendenhall Student Center, Micah Ball, director of Planned Support, announced that $2,797 in contributions had been collected from the class of 1939 and senior alumni to establish the Golden Anniversary Alumni Honors Scholarship Fund.

Ball said the scholarship will be funded annually by gifts from each 50th anniversary alumni class.

"We plan to ultimately build an endowment of at least $20,000 and use the annual income to perpetually fund the scholarship," Ball said. "Scholarships of at least $1,000 will be awarded to outstanding freshmen and can be renewed for up to four years by the recipients."

Receiving special recognition at the dinner were Mattie Moye Gaylord of Greenville, a member of the class of 1912, and Myrtle Little, a 1917 graduate, who flew from her home in Waynesville for the festivities.

Saturday's activities began with a champagne breakfast in Gray Art Gallery for senior alumni, followed by seminars sponsored by ECU's professional societies. Most popular was the Commerce Club's seminar, "Reaganomics under Bush: What's Next?", which drew more than 100.

During a meeting of the Alumni Association board of directors, the current slate of officers was re-elected to serve additional one-year terms. Elected were: Burney R. Rivenbark of Fayetteville, president; Lyda Teer of Durham, vice president; Nathan R. Weavil of Greenville, S.C., secretary, and David S. Englert of Chesapeake, Va., treasurer.

The following alumni were elected to three-year terms on the board during the association's annual meeting: Shay Matthews of Fayetteville, Bob Mays Sr. of Greensboro, and Gary Williams of Wilmington. They replace Pam Braxton of Deep Run and William 'Bill' Alexander Jr. of New Bern, whose terms expired.

During a luncheon, the association presented its Distinguished Service Awards to three alumni in recognition for their work on behalf of the university. Receiving the award were Eddie "Pat" Draughon of Dunn, Barbara Boyd Forester of Charlotte, and James A. (Jim) Hicks of Greensboro.

The three received engraved pewter trays from the Alumni Association.

Parents Plead Guilty To Abuse

A Bethel couple has pleaded guilty in Pitt County Superior Court to sexually abusing their child.

Judge David E. Reid Jr. of Greenville sentenced Lloyd Alvin Stallings, 38, of Route 1, Bethel, to 15 years in prison after Stallings pleaded guilty Tuesday to six counts of taking indecent liberties with a minor.

Stallings had also been charged with seven counts of first-degree rape and three other sexual offenses, but those charges were dismissed as part of the plea arrangement.

Stallings' wife, Antionette Parker Stallings, 35, who is the mother of the child, pleaded guilty to two counts of misdemeanor child abuse. She had been charged with allowing the commission of child abuse, which is a felony. Reid suspended a two-year prison sentence for three years and placed her on probation.

According to Reid's sentencing order, Mrs. Stallings is to continue to undergo therapy at Pitt County Memorial Hospital and the child is not to be returned to the home until the Department of Social Services deems the environment fit.

The Stallings were arrested in January by Pitt sheriff's detectives. The sexual abuse allegedly occurred between June 1984 and March 1988.

Rate Going Up

But Green noted that "CP&L has already been granted a 7.5 percent increase to be effective that date (Aug. 5)," after which "our rates should compare well to CP&L's ... within .5 percent.

"The key difference," Green's report suggested, is that "their rate will be implemented during a high usage summer month when customers can feel the increase."

Green told the board that by making the increase effective May 1 customers should see no increase in their bills because of lower usage. Green said a 9-year average of residential bills shows that the average bill for May is $65.82. "Under the new rate, the average residential bill would be $61.47," Green said.

The board Tuesday also adopted a new service fee schedule — to become effective July 1 — and approved bids for the painting of two water storage tanks.

In adopting a new service fee scheduled, the GUC board increased a half-dozen fees, not changed since July 1, 1981, to more accurately reflect the costs involved.

Under the new schedule, cut-on charges for electric and water service will double — from the present $20 on weekdays and $15 at nights, on holidays or weekends — to $20 and $30, while gas service cut-ons will increase $5 — from $20 to $25 on weekdays and from $25 to $30 at nights and on weekends and holidays.

The charge for lighting gas pilot lights will also increase $5 under the new fee schedule — from $20 on weekdays and $25 at night or on weekends and holidays, to $25 and $30, while the tapping fee for new gas services will increase from the present $35 to $75 on July 1.

And customers who pay their bills with bad checks will also pay more under the new fee schedule. The present schedule gives customers two chances before making a $10 charge for the third or subsequent returned checks. The new schedule allows customers one returned check before charging $20 for the second and subsequent bad checks.

The new fee schedule also eliminates the $200 charge made to install underground electric service to homes outside subdivisions. Beginning July 1, homeowners outside subdivisions will pay the same $125 for underground electric service as customers living within subdivisions do now.

A contract for cleaning and painting the exterior of two water storage tanks was awarded to Maynor & Hennessey Paint Co. for $28,460.

STATING YOUR CASE

Many couples in crisis approach each other as if each wants to put the other on trial. These people spend so much time focusing on the wrongs of the other, and on the merits of their own case, that they don't notice that the trial-like atmosphere has become part of the problem.

Pointing this out is often a step the counselor will take in attempting to defuse this devastating process. While in our legal system a prosecutor tries to prove guilt and see punishment imposed, a marriage cannot succeed if interaction is based on proving guilt and imposing punishment. Rather, the focus has to be on resolving conflicts and problems.

This is a foreign concept to many people, and requires some education and the skilled observation of a professional counselor. The price of finding one party guilty of causing crisis in a marriage is that the couple suffers a piece of the punishment.

Japanese Journalist Says Investments In U.S. Will Continue

By John Bare
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Despite the news that Japanese Prime Minister Noboru Takeshita is resigning in the wake of a bribery scandal, a representative of a Japanese magazine said officials of Japanese industry will continue to look to the United States for new business locations.

David S. Kastriner of New York City, one of the journalists taking part this week in a press tour of Pitt County, said the political shake-up in Japan will not deter Japanese businesses from opening offices in the United States.

Kastriner is advertising sales manager for the biweekly Japanese magazine Nikkei Business.

The state's top commerce official also said the Japanese businesses will continue investing in the United States, in spite of the crumbling government.

"The Japanese way of doing business is pretty well entrenched," Commerce Secretary Jim Broyhill said Tuesday in Greenville as the Pitt County Development Commission kicked off a three-day press tour for visiting journalists.

The resignation of Takeshita comes just six months before Gov. Jim Martin is scheduled to join commerce officials on a trip to Germany, Japan and Korea. In October, Martin is scheduled to personally call on Japanese companies and address a forum of Japanese officials. Also, Broyhill said the state is working with several Japanese business prospects, but he could not release the names of the companies.

Currently, 64 Japanese companies have offices in North Carolina, Broyhill said. Only Great Britain has established more businesses in the state.

Three international companies have located in Greenville, said John Chaffee, executive director of the development commission, but none are Japanese. Burroughs Wellcome and Ajax Magnethermic are British companies, and SAB Nife Inc. is a Swedish firm that moved its North American corporate headquarters to Greenville last year.

The state is working to land more foreign business, Broyhill said, specifically German and Japanese firms. The commerce department has offices in Dusseldorf and Tokyo. Development professionals on staff there encourage companies to to invest in North Carolina and to locate businesses in the state, he said.

"The department is very active in soliciting business in Europe as well as in the Pacific rim," he said.

While keeping a commitment to traditional North Carolina industry, Broyhill said the state is focusing on efforts to lure new high-tech companies to the area.

"Obviously, we'd like to have a good mix and encourage the higher technology firms to come in because they are the ones that are going to be here for a while," he said.

The visiting business journalists could boost the state's efforts to draw foreign industry.

Kastriner said he plans to collect information concerning Greenville and the work of the development commission and forward it to Nikkei's news division in Tokyo, which could decide to include Greenville in a future story. The magazine is modeled after the U.S. publication BusinessWeek, he said. It is the product of a joint venture between MaGraw Hill and Nihon Keizai Shinbun publishers and has a circulation of 240,000 readers.

Subscribers must not only pay for the magazine, they must be selected to receive the publication, he said. Thus, the publishers ensure that the readers are the country's top executives.

"It's very respected in Japan," he said. "We have articles on a few of the economic development agencies (in the United States). Plus, we do stories on regions known as success stories," he said.

Japanese readers respond well to advertisements, he said. Each advertiser, such as a development commission, receives an average of 56 quality responses. More elaborate ads with editorial copy may generate from 75 to 115 responses, he said.

Kastriner is one of four journalists in Greenville for the press tour. Also participating are Nancy Bader of Plants, Sites and Parks; Jim Hughs of BusinessWeek, and Detrich Zwaetz, Washington, D.C., bureau chief for the German newspaper Handelsblatt, which is similar to The Wall Street Journal.

Two Zoning Bids Will Be Heard

Two separate requests involving property in the Medical District will be among the items considered by the Greenville Board of Adjustment on Thursday at 7 p.m. in the council chambers of City Hall.

The board will consider a request by Jerry Whitehurst and Derek Dunn for a special use permit to allow the construction of a hotel and restaurant on the south side of U.S. 264, 950 feet west of the U.S. 264 and State Road 1204 intersection. The property contains 29.14 acres and is zoned MD-3 (office and institutional)

The board will also consider a request by Heritage Development Co. of Greenville Inc. to amend a special use permit to allow the operation of a bank on Lot 2 of Executive Park West, section 2, located on Stantonsburg Road. The property is zoned MD-2 (medical support services).

In other matters Thursday, the board will consider requests by: William Brock for a special use permit to allow the operation of a bingo establishment at 1002 Evans St.; Geraldine and Ellis Smith for a special use permit to allow the operation of a health and fitness center at 207 E. Fifth St.; Eastern Fence Co. for a special use permit to allow a mobile home to be used as an office at the southeast corner of North Greene Street and the Belvoir Road; Carolina Telephone and Telegraph for a special use permit to allow the construction of a telephone exchange equipment building on the west side of N.C. 11, approximately 1,000 feet south of Independence Boulevard, and by Jeffery's Beer and Wine for a variance from the zoning ordinance to allow an addition to an existing warehouse to encroach into the side yard setback located on the west side of North Greene Street, approximately 1,000 feet south of Industrial Boulevard.

Winds Strike Eastern Half Of State to mobile homes was reported in the area.

About two miles east of Princeton, a row of small frame houses off U.S. 70 were damaged by wind. Two large oak trees toppled over in the yard of a house owned by Donnie Bailey, an employee of a local oil distributor. One of the trees slammed into the house and destroyed the front room and caused extensive damage to another room, Bailey said.

Bailey said he had been nearby working at a new house his family is building when the storm hit. He said his wife and two young children were inside when the trees hit, but were not hurt. They escaped through a rear door and went to stay with relatives, he said.

"We're all very lucky," he said. "A little closer and we could have had real trouble."

One storm hit Person County about 6 p.m., damaging several mobile homes, downing trees and causing power outages on a path to eastern Johnston County.

When another storm rumbled through about 10:30 p.m., lightning touched off two fires and overturned a car on a rural road near Roxboro. No injuries were reported.

One fire destroyed a mobile home, worth about $11,000, while a fire in a storage building caused about $5,000 in damage.

"The only thing I can tell you is that there's been a lot of damage done," a Johnston sheriff's deputy said. "It's just really a mess."

In Wayne County, classes at Carver Elementary School in Mount Olive were canceled today because downed trees damaged the roof, police Officer Brian Rhodes said. Also, the glass fronts of several downtown businesses were blown out by high winds.

The storm system spawned golfball-sized hail and high winds in Wake County, blowing the roofs off of several barns.

A business was also damaged on N.C. 96 just north of Zebulon. High wind blew the roof off a 10,000-square foot building that houses Gene Stuffel & Associates. The company makes precision machine plastic components and employs 23 workers.

The owner's sons, Gerald and Gene Stuffel Jr., were alone in the building when the storm hit about 6:20 p.m.

"We looked out the back door and saw the storm blowing pretty hard," said Gerald Stuffel. "All of a sudden we heard the noise. We ran and cut the power and then looked for some place to hide."

Rain damaged computer operated equipment in the building. Damages were estimated at $150,000 to $175,000.

The storm knocked out power to about 16,000 Carolina Power and Light Co. customers, but as of 9 a.m. today, only about 3,000 people were still without electricity, said spokesman Rick White.

Wellcome. Today, the group was scheduled to tour East Carolina University, the medical school and the university's biotechnology center and dine with representatives from the area's larger corporations.

Broyhill reeled off a list of statistics indicating North Carolina is a prime spot for industry.

In 1987 and 1988, North Carolina was tops in the nation in siting new manufacturing facilities, Broyhill said. In 1987, 114 manufacturers invested at least $1 million to set up a new business in the state, and 101 manufacturers established new businesses in North Carolina last year.

With over 10,000 development commissions across the country competing to land new manufacturing business — only about 1,500 new facilities open each year — North Carolina has won a large number, Broyhill said. Overall, business and industry investments in the state have generated more than $5 billion in each of the last five years.

The state trails only California and New York in the movie-making industry, he said, and large scale amateur and professional sporting events are generating millions for the economy. Last year, tourism generated over $6 billion for the state.

"Today there is absolutely no way I can leave my work. Right now, when I'm taking a moment to talk to you, I have an 11-year old boy injured in a motorbike accident who must have immediate attention. There's a woman in labor, and a 82-year-old male patient with a serious heart problem who must be attended to."

Boyette, a veteran of 45 years of medical practice, said that he has 40 patients in the hospital at this time "and a long line of people in the waiting room needing to see me."

Boyette, one of only two doctors in the Belhaven area, said, "I know what I've got to do, where my real duty lies, and I'm sticking by that. If the judge insists on this shameful intimidation, that is his decision, one that he must answer for. I've got only myself and the almighty to answer to.

"As I said before, if they persist and come to arrest me, they will have to handcuff me and take me away under protest. I'm determined to put first things first, and I know I'm justified in my actions, as there are plenty of people able to serve on jury duty who do not face the responsibility of coping with the life and death problems of people who desperately need medical attention without delay."

Efforts to contact Ward this morning were unsuccessful.

DOT Schedules Kinston Meeting

The N.C. Department of Transportation will hold a Transportation Improvement Program update meeting Thursday at 2 p.m. at the Lenoir County Agriculture Center on N.C. 11 at Kinston.

The meeting is one of 15 public sessions scheduled across the state through May 25 to receive public input on how to set priorities for building the state's highways.

DOT officials say this year's meetings take on added importance because of an $8.6 billion, 12-year highway construction program under consideration by the General Assembly, which calls for establishing a trust fund to pay for an intrastate road system that will tie all regions of the state together with a series of four-lane highways.

The highway bill would also provide more money for paving secondary roads and build portions of outer loops around seven major cities. If adopted, the bill will lead to faster completion of many projects now in the TIP.

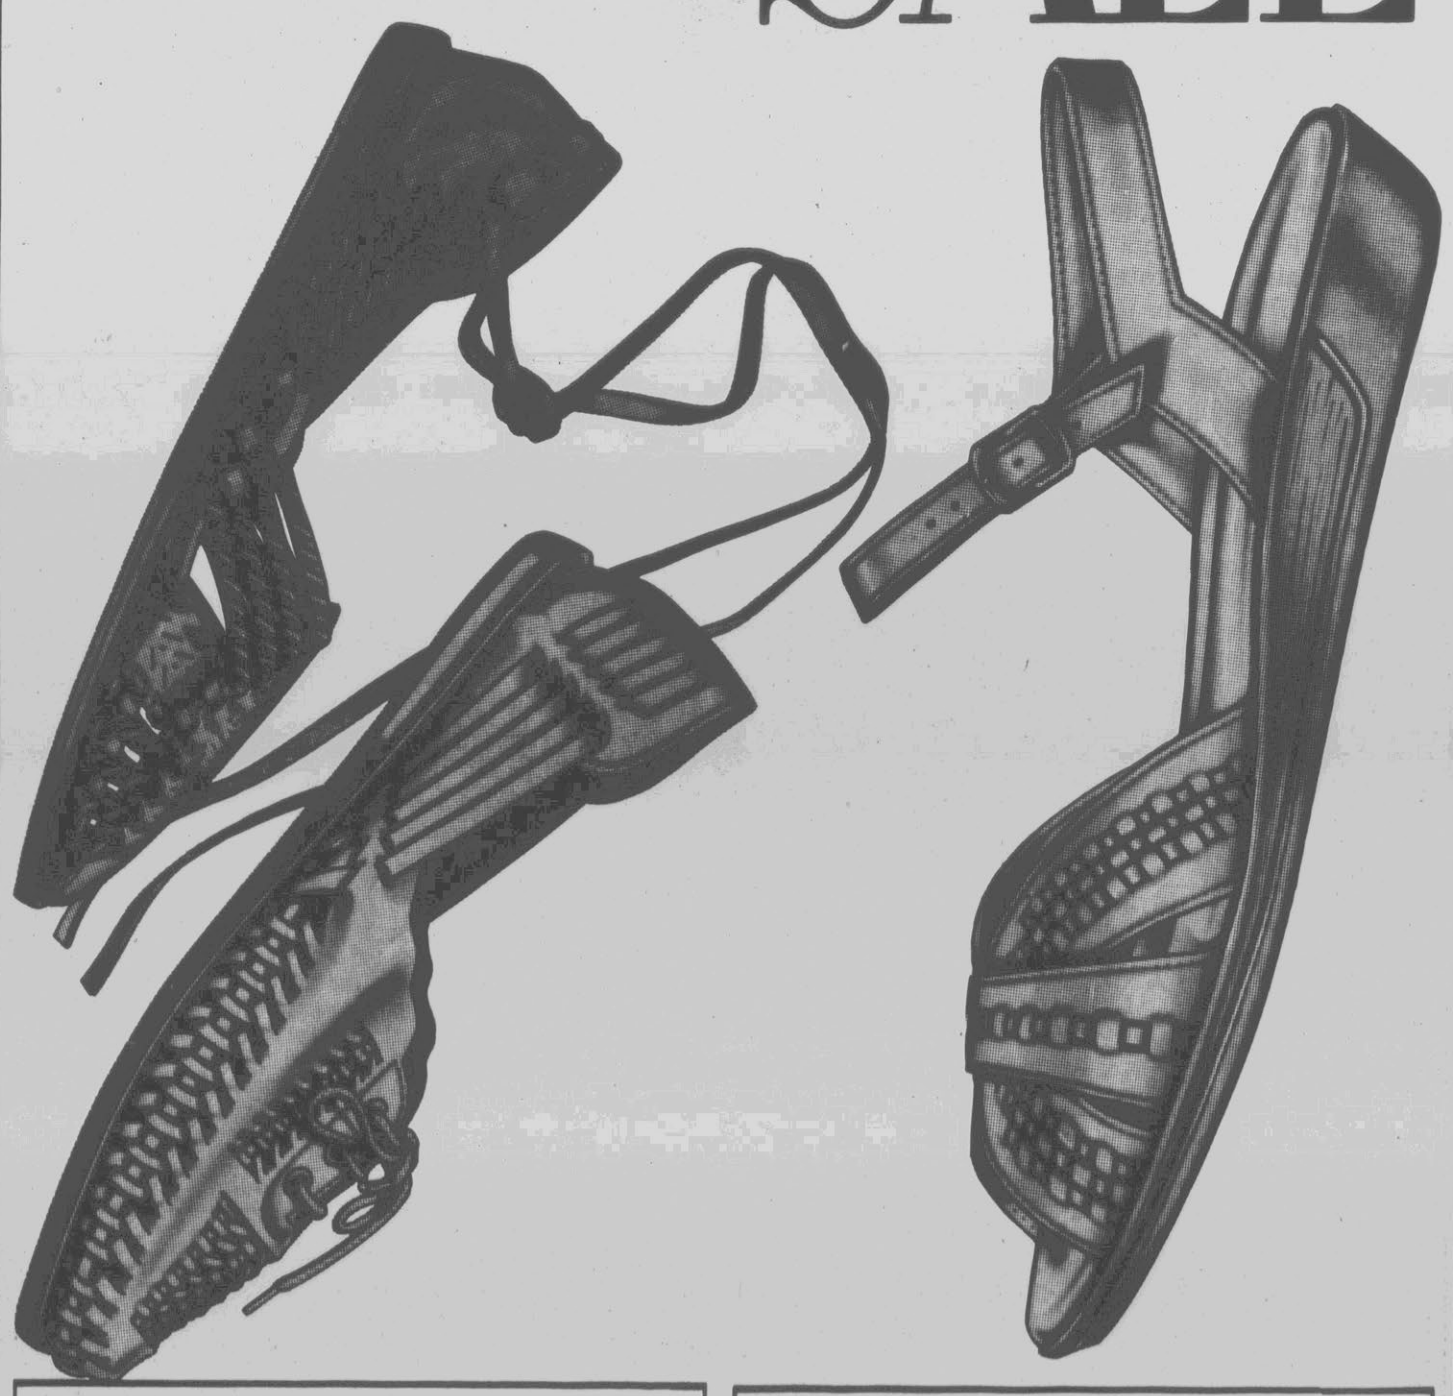

Registration for those wishing to speak at the TIP hearing will begin at 1 p.m.

'Truth In Preference To Fiction'

Safety Vs. Fun

Blowing The Whistle Was Correct

Nobody wants to be the one to end a party, but when a good thing goes sour, it's necessary and prudent. It's no fun to be the whistle-blower, but in the case of downtown Greenville's annual Halloween celebration, it was the right thing to do.

The Greenville City Council acted responsibly in accepting a committee recommendation to end the festivities. The move was made with the cooperation of downtown restaurants and night clubs, with restaurants planning to close early on Halloween night and nightclubs not opening at all. The action was also supported by East Carolina University, whose students are the prime participants, though perhaps not the prime troublemakers, in the yearly party.

'Choosing safety over fun was a tough call in this case. But the facts and history of Greenville's Halloween 'Mardi Gras' make it the only choice.'

That broad base of consensus and support gives the decision to end the tradition both credibility and significance. It is important that the three entities affected by the issue — the private property owners, the city and the university — sat down together to solve a community problem. That kind of cooperation is commendable.

Greenville's Halloween gathering has a troubled history of both festivity and violence. In 1975, the party erupted into a riot, prompting the city to prohibit the celebration for several years. Problems have escalated slowly each year since the Halloween festivities reappeared.

The celebration's reputation spread to other communities and drew droves of partygoers from other parts of the state. That fact made it extremely difficult for a host community — in this case Greenville — to pinpoint blame when trouble appears. It also made it impossible for law enforcement to anticipate and circumvent problems.

In 1988 there were more than 50 arrests, along with injuries and property damage. The danger and cost of such revelry prompted the City Council to appoint a Halloween Activities Review Committee. The council's action Monday was based on that committee's sound recommendation.

The decision to end the event will not be popular with the ECU students and young adults who enjoyed donning elaborate costumes and roaming the streets on Halloween. It won't seem fair to the law-abiding revelers. After all, most students and partygoers are capable of proper conduct.

But the decision is appropriate. The city, university, student leaders and all others concerned are doing what has to be done to protect public safety. The committee is to be commended for its careful study and the City Council was correct in accepting its recommendations.

Community efforts now should be aimed at informing students well ahead of time that there will be no Halloween celebration next fall. The message also must go out to those who have come to Greenville's party from elsewhere that there is to be no celebration downtown this Halloween.

Choosing safety over fun was a tough call in this case. But the facts and history of Greenville's Halloween 'Mardi Gras' make it the only choice.

Inevitable Perversity: Risky Business

David Broder

WASHINGTON — Come July, every essayist and columnist in the world will take note of the 200th anniversary of the French Revolution. Albert O. Hirschman has jumped the gun a bit in the May issue of The Atlantic magazine, but as usual he has made an important point so economically that commentaries to come will look bloated and insubstantial by comparison.

Hirschman is a remarkable man, a 74-year-old German-born economist and former Federal Reserve official. His academic studies have ranged far beyond his own field to illuminate politics with insights drawn from sociology, anthropology and a dozen other disciplines.

I was lucky enough to cross his path in 1970, the year he published "Exit, Voice and Loyalty," a small book brimming with insights into the ways people resolve the pressures that operate on them inside organizations. If you want to understand what was working on the mind of Oliver North as a Marine officer on the National Security Council staff, you cannot do much better than reading "Exit, Voice and Loyalty." And the same volume will give you all the clues you need to understand how — and why — the members of the House Democratic caucus will resolve the case of Speaker Jim Wright (D-Texas).

In his brief Atlantic article, Hirschman explores the persistence in "reactionary rhetoric" of a single argument: It is the assertion that organized efforts by liberals or progressives to improve people's lives — to expand the dimensions of liberty, equality, and well-being — will inevitably have exactly the opposite effect of what the sponsors say they intend.

A current example is the argument by President Bush and his backers that legislation to increase the minimum wage, far from improving the lot of marginal workers, will cost thousands of them their jobs.

A broader proposition, of great importance in shaping the thinking of the Reagan administration, was framed in Charles Murray's "Losing Ground," an intellectual assault on the welfare-state policies which culminated in Lyndon B. Johnson's Great Society. "We tried to provide more for the poor and produced more poor instead," Murray wrote. "We tried to remove the barriers to escape from poverty, and inadvertently built a trap." Hirschman points out that Murray's proposition, hailed as remarkably fresh thinking by the neo-conservatives of the Eighties, was an almost literal regurgitation of a view expressed by early 19th century critics of the British Poor Laws.

He quotes one of them as writing, "The Poor Laws were intended to prevent mendicants; they have made mendicancy a legal profession....The Poor Laws, formed to relieve the distressed, have been the arch-creator of distress."

As Hirschman traces the historical roots of this line of argument, he goes back inevitably to the French Revolution and the impact it had on conservative thinkers of that day, most notably Edmund Burke. It was Burke who set the fashion for reactionary argument in his 1790 "Reflections on the Revolution in France." He judged that "an ignoble oligarchy founded on the destruction of the crown, the church, the nobility and the people (would) end all the deceitful dreams and visions of the equality and rights of men." Instead of liberte, egalite, fraternite, the Revolution would bring "massacre, torture, hanging!"

When that proved to be the case, that whole line of argument about the inevitable perversity of schemes for social improvement was launched. And it continues to dominate reactionary political rhetoric down to our own day.

The critical question, of course, is whether this assertion — so beguilingly simple — is also generally correct. And the answer is clearly no.

As Hirschman points out, conservatives themselves acknowledge that opposite effects are not necessarily adverse effects. When it comes to the economy, those who wear Adam Smith ties argue that admittedly selfish individual behavior — the desire to maximize profits — produces altruistic social consequences, namely, the most efficient allocation of resources and distribution of rewards.

More important, the argument that conscious social action inevitably produces perverse effects contradicts what we know from experience is more often the case. That is that policies often have unintended consequences and unforeseeable results.

The likelihood, in any given case, is that the effects of any social policy will not be all that its sponsors hope. But it is just as risky to assume that they will be exactly the opposite of what they intend. Not every revolution swings from liberty and equality to dictatorship and despotism as the French Revolution did. The American Revolution, to name one, did not.

Hirschman reminds us that when we accept the reactionary dogma of inevitable perversity, we are acquiescing too easily in a persistent form of intellectual fear-mongering.

The Ghost Of Elections Past

Richard Cohen

WASHINGTON — Richard Cohen (may his tribe increase) awoke one night from a deep dream of peace, and saw within the moonlight in his room a short, Greek-looking man wearing a tank helmet and Filene's suit. Clutching a sheaf of papers, the apparition seemed to appear as out of nowhere. He smiled and whispered the words, "I won."

I sat up in fright, but the apparition's manner was gentle and I soon relaxed. "Why are you here?" I asked, and with that Michael Dukakis (for that is who he was) sat on the side of the bed and, without emotion or evident anger, chastised me for the columns I have written about George Bush. "Say nothing, Richard," he said.

And then, leafing through my columns, Dukakis said if he had won the presidency he would have done his best to end the war in Nicaragua which, he reminded me, he often called "immoral and illegal." But the best he could have hoped for was a deal in which the contras would continue to get humanitarian aid. This, he reminded me, is precisely what Bush has done. I thought I detected a wink.

Something similar has happened with "Star Wars," the Duke said. Had he won in November, he would have cut $1.1 billion from former President Reagan's request. To do more would have been impossible, he said. He pointed out that Democrats are always accused of being "weak on defense," and so when it came to cutting the Pentagon's budget, he would have stopped right there. Bush, though, has also proposed delaying production of the Stealth bomber. "That's what I wanted to do," the Duke whispered.

By now, I was fully awake and grasped the import of his words. Referring to some notes, Dukakis mentioned assault weapons. He would have liked to have banned their import, too, he admitted. But a liberal from Massachusetts could never have done such a thing. Unlike Bush, the Duke admitted, he was not a life member of the National Rifle Association, but the American Civil Liberties Union. He would have been accused of being soft on crime.

On the environment, the apparition said he would have done what Bush has done. He, too, would have appointed a conservationist to head the Environmental Protection Agency. But had he done so, Ronald Reagan would have denounced him for "useless" regulations and pointed out that trees, and not cars, cause most air pollution. "Yea, verily yea, I could not have done as much as Bush," the Duke intoned. As for the Alaska oil spill, the Duke leaned over and softened his voice even more: "I would still be studying it."

Then the apparition spoke of education. He had planned to increase federal aid to education had he won the presidency, the Duke said. He would have pored more money into the Head Start program and talked all he could about education. He had planned to be "the education President," he said with a sigh.

"Taxes," the Duke said, raising his voice. "I would not have raised them, either." The Duke reminded me that he had vowed to hike taxes only as a last resort. He said that like Bush, he knew that a federal tax increase had to wait, or the 1990 congressional elections would be lost. Unlike Bush, he said, he could have been labeled a "big-spending Democrat." The ghost said he would have raised certain fees instead. "That's what Bush proposes."

"See this," the apparition said, holding up a thick loose-leaf book. "This is my plan to bail out the savings-and-loan industry." The Duke said he never revealed his plan during the presidential campaign because he knew it was controversial. "It's the same as the one Bush proposed," the governor said.

By now, the sun was rising and birds were chirping outside my window. The apparition looked over his shoulder and then, as if rushed, rattled off some points he wanted to make. Had he won in November, the President would have vacationed in New England. Kids would be crawling all over the White House. He would have gotten a dog, had dinner with reporters, gone out to eat and had frequent press conferences. "I planned to take Hosni Mubarak to a Red Sox game," he confessed.

Then, floating off the bed, the apparition turned stern. "You have noted some of these things in your columns and have been critical of Bush. If you persist, the Republican right wing will notice Bush is not their guy and he'll become more conservative to placate them. When I said the election was not about ideology, I knew what I was talking about. This man is doing what I want."

With that, the apparition seemed to float towards the window. I rushed to look but the only thing I could see was the sun glancing off his tanker's helmet, and on the breeze fluttered a piece of paper. I grabbed it.

"My First 100 Days," it was entitled. Every box was checked off and initialed "M.D."

The Battle On Drunk Driving Will Begin On Senate Floor

Paul O'Connor

Analysis

RALEIGH — At the beginning of the 1989 session, it appeared that efforts to strengthen North Carolina's drunk driving laws would be among the leading stories to come out of the Senate. But so far, little has happened.

That changes this week when a Senate Judiciary I subcommittee reports out its package of anti-drunk driving proposals.

After a number of bills came before the committee, Sen. George Daniel, D-Caswell, chaired a subcommittee that threw some of them out, altered others and put the rest together in one package. The package does not include the two toughest proposals considered, but does include a number of ideas that the chairman of the subcommittee says will help reduce drunk driving.

The subcommittee defeated proposals to lower the blood-alcohol level — known as the BAC — at which a driver is considered to be legally intoxicated. That level is now .010 and there have been proposals to lower it to .008. Only three states have that standard and Daniel said that evidence before the subcommittee failed to show any appreciable reductions in drunk driving, or increases in convictions, in those states.

The subcommittee aslo refused to raise the fines or extend the jail and prison sentences that apply to drunk driving convictions.

The subcommittee approved a propasal to lower the BAC for those operating commercial vehicles. The federal government is demanding that states consider a BAC of .004 as legal intoxication for those operating trucks, buses and other commercial vehicles.

While bigger fines and longer sentences are not being proposed, one change could make it easier to get drunk drivers convicted and locked away for related infractions.

The subcommittee is proposing that a conviction for the lowest level of drunk driving offense be admissible evidence when the testimony of a defendant is being attacked in court. Currently, that information cannot be used in this manner. With this change, such a conviction could be used as an aggravating circumstance in the sentencing of a defendant, or as evidence to impeach his credibility during trial.

Daniel is hoping that one technical change in the law will lead to more convictions. When one is arrested for drunk driving, he is given two breathalyzer exams. If the driver takes one and fails it, he can refuse to take the second. If he does so, then the first breathalyzer results cannot be used as evidence in his trial. (The driver does lose his license, however, as an administrative punishment for failing to complete the breathalyzer exam.)

The subcommittee is proposing that the results of the first breathalyzer be admissable in these circumstances.

The new package is especially tough on youngsters. Anyone under 16 who is caught driving and who refuses to take a breathalyzer exam would automatically lose his right to get a provisional license until his 17th birthday. If they are convicted in juvenile court of having driven a car while intoxicated they they would be unable to get a license until they are 18.

For those 16 and 17 who are caught driving after any alcoholic consumption, state law currently says that their license will be revoked until their 18th birthday. The subcommittee is saying that there ought to be a minimum amount of time also involved with that. If a 17-year-old gets his trial delayed almost to the time of his 18th birthday, he would still lose his license for 45 days under the proposal.

When the package comes before the full committee, and then goes to the Senate floor, the anticipated drunk driving battle will finally begin.

Takeshita's Action Only One Step From The Sidelines

Jay Collins

The Recruit Co. scandal has brought the political system of the world's second largest economic power to a screeching halt. But the announcement of the forthcoming resignation of Prime Minister Noboru Takeshita is an attempt to get Japan moving again.

Like the long-running saga of Watergate, the Recruit scandal has prevented the ruling Liberal Democratic Party from advancing its domestic and foreign policy agenda. The opposition parties have refused to consider the 1989 budget until the leadership of the Liberal Democrats, namely former Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone and Takeshita, explained their involvement in the scandal to the Diet or resigned.

During the past six months Takeshita has been totally incapacitated by the scandal. Three members of his Cabinet were forced to resign, he was caught making several inaccurate statements concerning the contributions he received from Recruit, and his public approval rating plummeted to a record low of 3.9 percent. Takeshita was so handicapped that he could not even send his finance minister to Washington for the recent meetings on Treasury Secretary Nicholas Brady's Third World debt plan.

Takeshita's willingness to step down was a vital first step toward moving beyond the Recruit scandal. Within the next several weeks the public prosecutor's office is likely to complete the investigation, arresting a handful of politicians on charges of bribery. By late August, Japan will have passed its budget, held elections and handed the reins of leadership to a new prime minister.

Yet the world should not expect much from Japan between now and the end of summer. Without domestic political stability, Japan will lack the ability to build a consensus around foreign policy initiatives or trade concessions. Even with a new prime minister, Japan's ability to play a role in the July summit of the Western industrial democracies in Paris will be minimal.

In fact, despite the sacrificial resignation of Takeshita, the Liberal Democrats will remain frozen in anticipation of major losses in the forthcoming Upper and Lower House elections. The elections, likely to take place toward the end of the summer, will present the Japanese public with its first real opportunity since the scandal broke to express its deep anger, resentment and bitterness toward the party that has ruled Japan since 1955.

The two leading candidates to replace Takeshita, former Foreign Minister Masayoshi Ito and former Prime Minister Takeo Fukuda, are both able statesmen who believe in the need for Japan to play a greater role in the international community. Even so, regardless of who replaces Takeshita, the new prime minister will essentially be a "caretaker," chosen because he was one of the very few party leaders left untainted by the scandal.

Just as Watergate lingered long after the departure of President Nixon, Takeshita's exit will not remove the deeply rooted damage done by the scandal. Instead of judging politicians on the basis of the legality of their actions, the Japanese public is holding its leaders accountable for an outdated political system badly in need of reform.

The Japanese have always had great cynicism with regard to politics and are still suffering from the shock of the arrest of former Prime Minister Kakuei Tanaka in 1976. The perception of corruption once again at the most senior levels of society is causing the Japanese to ask themselves how Japan can be a world leader when it has yet to develop a political system that commands respect at home and abroad.

Takeshita tried to reform the tax system, restructure agriculture, upgrade the nation's global leadership role and handle the scandal simultaneously. Instead of tackling the agenda on a wide front, his successor is likely to emphasize one battle at a time, the first of which must be political reform.

Most likely to suffer will be the reforms necessary to bring about the reorientation of Japan's economy away from exports. A weakened Liberal Democratic Party may lack the political strength to pursue the myriad structural adjustments, including market liberalization, that would ultimately improve the U.S. trade deficit. As the party deals with difficult problems at home, it is unlikely to succumb to American pressure to confront its domestic constituencies with unpleasant reforms. Thus, if the Bush administration and Congress are expecting speedy progress in our bilateral trade negotiations with Japan, they will be greatly disappointed.

During Watergate and the Iran-Contra affair, U.S. allies complained that while we remained obsessed with our problems, the world suffered from the resulting leadership vacuum. As a new leading member of the global community, Japan must be reminded that timeouts are costly.

America, Japan and Europe should work toward a cooperative approach to financial issues, allied security, multilateral trade negotiations and the environment. As the Bush administration grapples with these global issues, it cannot afford to have Japan sitting on the sidelines. Takeshita's resignation is only the first step in a long process of bringing Japan back into the game.

Don't Blame Big Oil

Philip Verleger Jr.

Oil companies are once again being accused of price gouging. New York Gov. Mario Cuomo has accused the oil industry of taking advantage of a tragedy "of its own making" as an excuse to raise prices. Sen. Howard Metzenbaum, D-Ohio, recently held hearings to excoriate the industry for price increases that have ranged from 10 to 24 cents per gallon. Across the Atlantic, members of the British Parliament are voicing equal anger against refiners for price increases that have amounted to almost 35 cents per gallon. For once, however, the oil industry is blameless. Responsibility for the higher gasoline prices we pay this summer belongs to government regulators who first failed to regulate and then acted impetuously.

Ironically, oil exporting nations can do little to fix this problem. Gasoline prices could not decline much even if the price of crude oil were reduced to $1 per barrel. The problem today results from a lack of sophisticated refining capacity, not the cost or availability of crude oil.

The increase in gasoline prices is caused by the last-minute imposition of more stringent environmental standards. New and needed rules have been imposed by the Environmental Protection Agency, Cuomo's own state agency and by European governments.

The new regulations pertain to the Reid Vapor Pressure (RVP) of gasoline. The states and the EPA have called on refiners to reduce the RVP of gasoline during summer months to reduce evaporative emissions from cars. These emissions contribute to smog problems in urban areas, and their elimination is essential if we are to reverse the deterioration of air quality. The standards can be met by removing the lightest chemical components from gasoline — particularly, butane.

Unfortunately, compliance with these rules will reduce the amount of gasoline that can be manufactured by refiers until new facilities for manufacturing alternative components can be built. Such facilities cannot be completed in 1989. In the meantime, the lower RVP targets can be met in 1989 and 1990 only by removing the butane from gasoline, effectively cutting the volume of gasoline production. This loss in supply must be balanced by cutting consumption.

A cut in consumption once might have been achieved with little pain because old, inefficient autos were being replaced by new, fuel-efficient models. However, the shift to smaller and more efficient cars was stopped by the abandonment of energy conservation programs by the Reagan administration. Thus, growth in consumption must be restrained by higher prices — perhaps much higher prices. Consumers will be forced to pay 20 to 25 cents per gallon more for gasoline this summer than they paid in 1988.

Blame for the immediate increase in prices should be assigned to environmental agencies in the states of New York, Connecticut, Massachusetts, Rhode Island and New Jersey. This loss in supply would not have occurred had the industry been given time to modify existing refineries to meet the new standards.

Blame for the immediate increase in prices should also be assigned to the EPA for its slow action on the vapor-pressure issue. The states took action because the EPA had refused to issue national rules on vapor pressure for several years. In March, EPA issued nationwide rules designed to preempt individual state actions. These nationwide regulations will force an even greater cut in gasoline production than would have occured under the state rules. Much of the price increase could have been avoided had the EPA either acted six months earlier or ordered that the new rules take effect in 1990, not in 1989.

Automobile manufactures also deserve some of the blame for the crisis both for reducing their emphasis on fuel economy and for manufacturing high-performance engines. Increased production of the premium-grade gasoline required by high-performance engines in new models actually reduces total gasoline output. Thus, Detroit's shift to higher performance cars reduced the total availability of gasoline.

Verleger is a visiting fellow at the Institute for International Economics

Vet Holds Nurse At Gunpoint

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SALISBURY, N.C — A man who had been discharged recently from the VA Hospital in Salisbury held a nursing supervisor at gunpoint for 2½ hours, saying he did not want to be discharged.

Keith Hansen, 38, of Newton, N.C., took supervisor Ina Lindsey into a psychologist's office at the hospital about 5:15 p.m., and released her without incident about 7:45 p.m., hospital officials said.

"He was confused and disoriented about many things," medical center director Thomas Ayres said in an interview in his office. "He felt he was in need of our delayed stress syndrome, but he did not meet the criteria."

Ayres said Hansen had been discharged from the hospital earlier in the day. He declined to specify what Hansen had been treated for.

Hansen contacted a Charlotte television station early in the standoff, described himself as a Vietnam veteran, and said he had taken a nurse hostage and had barricaded himself inside Building 3 at the hospital.

He told WBTV that he needed more help for what he called post-traumatic stress disorder. During the call, he allowed the nurse to speak on the telephone. The woman said that a gun was being pointed at her.

During the ordeal, Ayres said Hansen called the Raleigh and Washington offices of Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C.

Ayres immediately began negotiating with Hansen as local, state and federal law enforcement authorities arrived on the scene. Ayres said Hansen turned over his weapon, which he described as a nine-shot pistol.

"We negotiated an agreement in which we would provide for his future care if he surrendered his weapon," Ayres said.

"My agreement with the patient means a lot to me and it means a lot to him. You can only lose your integrity once, so I plan to follow through with my agreement," Ayres said.

No charges were filed against Hansen on Tuesday night. He was taken to a closed psychiatric ward at the veterans hospital, where he was being held for observation, Ayres said.

The Veterans Administration Hospital is a 901-bed unit, 400 of which are reserved for psychiatric patients.

Senate Kills Off Proposed Tobacco Tax At First Sight

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — For the first time since the Senate summarily defeated a bill to eliminate the death penalty, lawmakers snuffed out at the onset a proposal to triple the tax on cigarettes, sending a message to its sponsor in the process.

Freshman Sen. Fountain Odom, D-Mecklenburg, watched helplessly as his tax bill was killed upon introduction, failing even to reach a committee. Sen. Jim Johnson, R-Cabarrus, said the action came after Odom ignored warnings against offering the bill.

"He just pretty well told everybody, 'Watch my smoke.' So we just told him to go ahead and smoke it," said Johnson, who filed a bill in retribution that would have taxed the furniture industry — big business in Odom's area.

"They were sending him a personal message: Take counsel," said Johnson. "Don't bump around the big boys."

Sen. R.C. Soles made the motion to table Odom's bill Tuesday. The motion was approved 36-6 and a second parliamentary motion to prevent further consideration without two-thirds of the members agreeing was approved 33-9.

"The bill was introduced by a freshman senator who had made a great deal of noise about it in the past 24 hours," Soles said in an interview. "When you've got a bad bill and you've got an opportunity to do away with it, you've got to move."

In the 1983-84 session, Sen. Ollie Harris, D-Cleveland, dealt a similar knockout blow to a bill to eliminate the death penalty in North Carolina.

Odom said he had gotten hints Monday night that his bill to increase the tax from two cents to six cents per pack might meet a quick demise.

"I'm disappointed but clearly the majority has spoken," he said. "I just feel that with all the financial needs of the state ... I would have liked to have a chance to debate the merits of it."

The bill would have raised an additional $32 million a year.

"Tobacco is really still king in North Carolina," said Soles, D-Columbus, after the session. "The tobacco farmers are just beginning to recover from one of the worst periods they've been through."

Odom said he believed there was more support in the Senate for the tax increase than was reflected in the vote. "There were some folks that indicated they would support it but they were not able to withstand the withering fires."

Sen. Marshall Rauch, D-Gaston, chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, said publicity may have led to the bill's demise.

"I think it's too bad that the media killed that bill," he said. "If they hadn't created so much hoopla, this never would have happened."

Another bill sponsored by Odom, which would levy a 12-cent per pack license tax on cigarette manufacturers if Kentucky and Virginia enact similar taxes, was allowed to go to a committee. Soles said he was less concerned about that because of the interstate competition involved.

Officers Tear Down Burroughs Wellcome Office Wall To Remove AIDS Protesters

By Dennis Patterson
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RESEARCH TRIANGLE PARK, N.C. — Hiding power tools in their briefcases, four AIDS activists wearing dark business suits barricaded themselves in an office at Burroughs Wellcome Co., protesting the cost of the only government-approved drug aimed at halting the AIDS virus.

"We won't let them tell us 'Pay or die' any longer," said protester Peter Staley, 28, a former Wall Street bond trader who has been diagnosed with AIDS-related complex and takes AZT.

"Either they knock down the cost or they knock down their own walls to get us out," Staley said.

Burroughs Wellcome security guards and Durham County sheriff's deputies did just that after the four men from the AIDS Coalition to Unleash Power, or ACT UP, sealed the door of an unoccupied office.

Meanwhile, analysts said Tuesday that the Research Triangle Park-based company is likely to cut the price of its anti-AIDS drug — known as azidothymidine, or AZT.

The drug, which is produced in Greenville, currently costs $8,000 to $10,000 a year.

Any price cut would not be because of the protest Tuesday, but because the company appears to have become a more efficient manufacturer of the drug, which it markets as Retrovir, and could pass along cost reductions to distributors, said David MacCallum, an analyst in the New York office of Hambrecht & Quist Inc. in San Francisco.

Jonathan Gelles, an analyst with Wertheim & Co. in New York, said his firm estimates that the company will reduce the price of AZT by 25 percent — the same amount demanded by the activists on Tuesday — within the next two years, the newspaper reported.

The protesters used small steel plates bolted to the door and door frame to seal the door. They planned to cut through a window in the second-floor office and unfurl a banner that would be visible from nearby Interstate 40.

As the officers cut through the wall about 30 minutes after the protest began, the activists chained themselves together inside the room. The chain was cut before the four men were led out of the company headquarters in handcuffs.

"We've been trying to deal with this company for two years," Staley said as he was put in a patrol car.

In addition to a 25 percent reduction in the cost of AZT, Staley said the protesters wanted Burroughs Wellcome to fund a government program to supply AZT to the needy.

Staley; Lee Arsenault, 41, a clothing importer from New York who suffers from AIDS; James McGrath, 32, a dance club owner from Providence, R.I., and Blane Mosley, 24, a New York clothing designer, were charged with first-degree trespassing and damage to property. All four were released on $5,000 bond each and face a court appearance May 4.

The drug AZT prevents the virus that causes acquired immune deficiency syndrome from replicating, but is not a cure for the fatal disease.

Dan Baker, a spokesman for the New York-based coalition, said Burroughs Wellcome recovered its development costs for AZT in the first year it was marketed and was now making an 80 percent profit on the drug sales.

"They could afford to practically give the drug away free," Baker said. "We're not denying that they deserve a profit; but we say it should be a reasonable profit on a drug people need to stay alive."

Burroughs Wellcome spokeswoman Kathy Bartlett did not deny the 80 percent profit claim, but said the company had never released profit figures and did not know "where that information came from."

She said Burroughs Wellcome has given away millions of capsules of AZT for clinical trials and had donated money to government AIDS programs.

"We understand their actions were motivated by desperation," Ms. Bartlett said. "But it was really misdirected. Burroughs Wellcome has been working for three years to bring therapy to AIDS patients."

Baker said the group was prepared to pay Burroughs Wellcome for damages to the office.

The protest, he said, was "a desperate act to draw attention to the AIDS issue. Until they agree to our demands, we will continue to take these actions. We'll be back."

Baker said the protesters, all dressed in coats and ties, walked into the building and ignored guards' questions about where they were going.

"We feel very proud of ourselves that we were able to penetrate their security," said Baker. "We don't consider their arrest to be a failure at all. In fact, it's a big success."

House Panel Votes Down Restrictions On Spraying

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — Rep. Bertha Holt had a simple explanation when her bill to increase the distance between aerial spraying of pesticides and residential areas was killed.

"The Farm Bureau is very powerful and so is the chemical industry," she said.

The House Basic Resources Committee voted 22-9 Tuesday to kill the bill after opponents said it would put farmers out of business.

Rep. Leo Mercer, D-Columbus, said 75 percent of farmers in his community would have to cease operations if the buffer zone were increased from 100 feet to 300 feet. He urged the committee not to overreact to occasional spraying mishaps.

"We don't stop using commercial planes because one occasionally falls," he said. "We have to have something to eat. We've got to make a living, too." Ms. Holt, D-Alamance, admitted her bill was probably "dead on arrival" in committee.

"But you have to raise the level of consciousness," she said, adding that publicity on the issue might persuade the N.C. Pesticide Board to consider adopting stricter rules on spraying.

Ms. Holt noted that current law requires a 300-foot buffer zone for businesses, churches, schools and hospitals. She and other supporters said the same protections should be extended to "children, the elderly and pregnant women."

But Ray Forrest of the Agriculture Department said it is already illegal to put pesticides on someone's property if it causes "an adverse effect."

"We quite honestly don't know how to make it any more stringent than that," he said.

Rep. Pete Thompson, D-Chowan, said the people who spray pesticides have been well trained and that the chemicals go through years of testing to ensure their safety.

But Ms. Holt pointed out that human error could shatter the illusion of safety, much as the recent oil spill in Alaska made Americans reexamine the safety of oil tankers.

Rep. Joe Hackney, D-Orange, tried to rescue the bill with an amendment to allow spraying within 100 feet with the written permission of the owner of a residence.

That amendment was defeated 18-12 after Rep. Charlie Albertson, D-Duplin, said the notification would add to the costs of spraying operations.

The House Finance Committee once more postponed action on a bill to improve collection of taxes on motor vehicles as some members hoped to find a foolproof method.

Rep. George Miller, D-Durham, questioned replacing the current system with a new one that "still would have slippage."

"In South Carolina, when you register your vehicle, you pay your tax," he said. "It's just that simple."

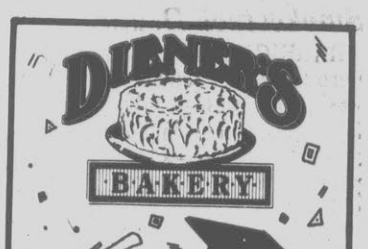

But the bill before the committee is designed to avoid placing any new burden on honest taxpayers. Car owners would receive notice of taxes owed after registering their vehicles. Those who have not paid by the end of the year would not be allowed to renew their registrations.

Rep. Dave Redwine, D-Brunswick, said the bill could save $13 million to $17 million a year. And Jim Blackburn of the N.C. Association of County Commissioners said few taxpayers would go to the trouble to evade the new system.

As for South Carolina, Redwine said, "They almost had an uprising in that state." Still, several committee members said they would prefer a system in which car owners pay taxes at the same time andplace they renew registrations. Action on the bill was put off to consider ways to accomplish that.

A bill to give North Carolinians three months to pay back taxes before facing tougher tax evasion penalties appeared likely to win approval from the House Finance Committee.

IN THE STATE

Contamination

CHARLOTTE (AP) — Two sites used by the Charlotte-Douglas Air National Guard have been identified by the guard as potentially contaminated.

The first site is a fire training area used to train firefighters both from the base and airport fire departments from 1961 to 1974. Fuel was burned to simulate aircraft fires, and some residual fuel may remain in the soil, guard officials said. The site presently shows no stressed vegetation and no sign of past use.

The second potential site is a pond that collects runoff from a large area of the base and airport. Refueling activities dating from World War II until the early 1970s may have resulted in fuels washing into the pond area, the guard said.

Malfeasance

BAKERSVILLE, N.C. (AP) — A former member of the Mitchell County board of education pleaded guilty to 72 counts of malfeasance of a corporate officer and was sentenced to five months in prison.

Allen Baker, 40, of Bakersville could have been sentenced to more than 1,000 in prison, officials say. He also was ordered to pay a $10,000 fine and repay more than $40,000 bilked from the Spruce Pine insurance agency in which he was junior partner and from dozens of its customers over a four-year period.

The state dropped 41 related counts of embezzlement and 18 counts of obtaining property by false pretenses in a plea bargain. In addition to the fine, five-month active term and restitution, Superior Court Judge John M. Gardner gave Baker a 15-year suspended sentence, placed him on supervised probation for five years, revoked his license to sell insurance for the five-year period, ordered him to perform 300 hours of community service and pay court costs.

Baker will also be eligible for work release, which will allow him to continue his current employment as a salesman at a Spruce Pine car dealership and retain a part-time job at a Burnsville bowling alley where he is working in lieu of paying the restitution he owes its owners.

Smokestack Death

RALEIGH (AP) — A North Carolina State University student was killed Tuesday night when he fell about 150 feet while climbing inside the smokestack of a campus power plant with another student, officials said.

Authorities would not release the student's name, but a Wake Medical Center official confirmed that he had died. He was taken by ambulance to the hospital late Tuesday.

The other student was not injured.

Raleigh District Fire Chief J.B. Sandy said the two students were climbing inside the stack, even though the plant was operating. He said he did not know how they had gotten inside the stack, near the old Riddick Stadium on the Raleigh campus.

Campus Poll

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (AP) — The Student Health Service at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill has mailed 1,250 questionnaires to randomly selected students to gauge their opinion about drug and alcohol use at the school.

The results will be used to develop prevention programs that meet the specific problems of UNC students, said Sue Gray, director of health education.

Number Of Active Farmers Shrinking

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The number of farmers in North Carolina fell by about 13,500 from 1982 to 1987, but the drop in farming acreage was relatively small, reflecting the trend toward fewer, larger farms, officials say.

"The more acres you can spread over, the more likely you can afford it," Union County agriculture extension director M.C. Howell Jr. said Tuesday. "There'll be less people in it, but the ones that are left will be better organized.

"I think long-range the implication of some of this is the political clout of agriculture will continue to decline some," he said. "I think our food costs will rise fairly substantially over the next 10 years."

A recent federal report says 13,500 North Carolina farmers quit between 1982 and 1987, but most were on farms of less than 180 acres. In North Carolina, the number of farms with 1,000 or more acres rose from 1,100 to 1,250.

N.C. statistician Jim Olson estimates the number of farmers fell from 86,000 in 1982 to 72,000 in 1987, but only 300,000 acres went out of production, leaving 10.8 million acres in 1987.

"We've been losing 3,000 to 4,000 farms a year for a long time," Olson said.

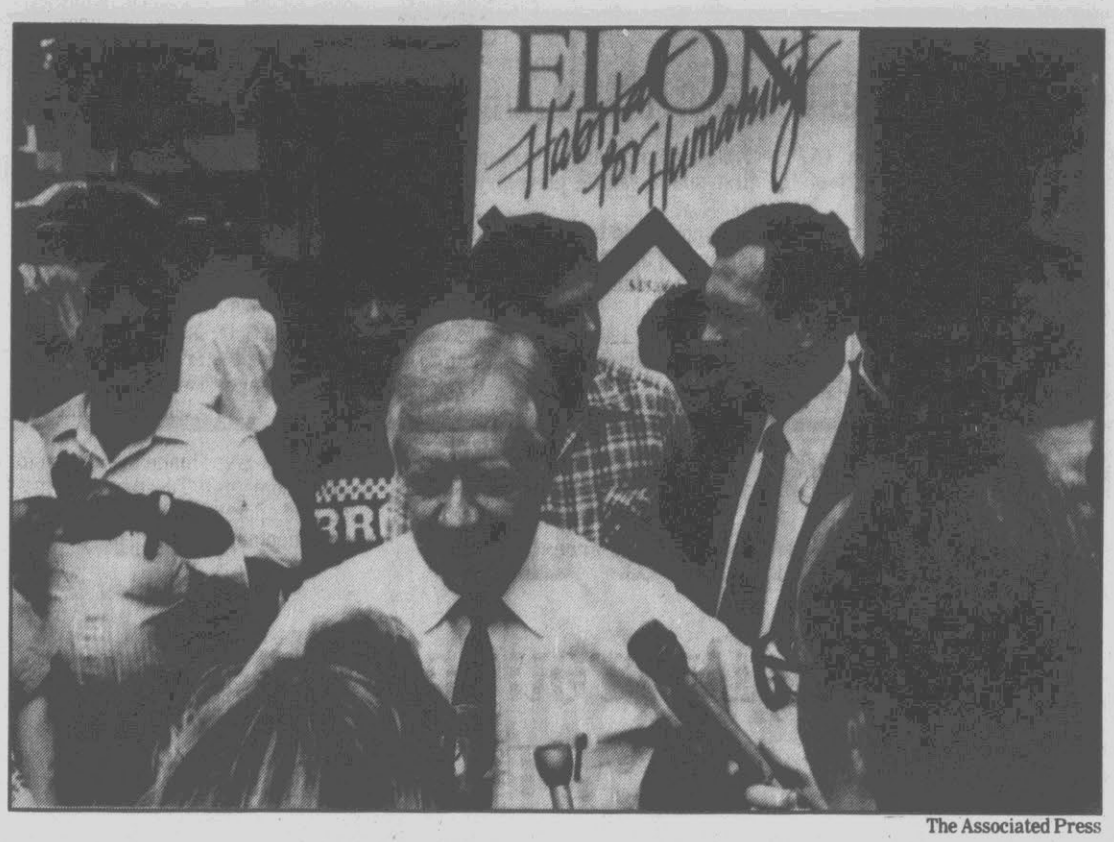

South Carolina statistician Henry Power estimates the number of farmers fell from 31,000 in 1982 to 26,000 in 1987 while 800,000 acres went out of production.

Power said he thinks 500 farmers returned and 100,000 acres went back into production last year.

Howell said the decline in numbers of farmers could hurt the industry's political clout and public sympathy. City folks who don't know farmers probably will demand more odor-free, litter-free agriculture, and governments will be more likely to enforce more expensive rules.

"Somewhere down the road, as agriculture is going to enjoy a less favorable treatment from the public as a whole, our production cost of food will go up significantly," Howell said.

"You're going to hear a lot of squeaking by consumers in general."

Carter Says Jackson Couldn't Win Race

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ELON COLLEGE, N.C. (AP) — Former President Jimmy Carter says Democrats can recapture the White House in 1992 if they promote "a conservative progressive platform."

In a news conference at Elon College on Tuesday, Carter said the next Democratic candidate for the office Carter lost to Ronald Reagan in 1980 must advocate a strong defense, fiscal responsibility, business competitiveness, non-intrusion by the federal government into private affairs of Americans and "promotion of civil rights at home and human rights abroad.

Carter said such prominent Democrats as Charles Robb of Virginia, Bill Bradley of New Jersey and Sam Nunn of Georgia could win the presidency, but he said the Rev. Jesse Jackson probably could not.

"He's already run twice," he said. "I think he's already proven he's not a candidate likely to win."

In a speech Tuesday night, Carter said a lack of boldness keeps many people from committing themselves to helping others and leading happy, productive lives.

Speaking to 4,000 Elon College students, faculty and local residents, Carter said each person should confront his or her interests and fears.

"Every person needs to be happy, to enjoy life, to be at ease in our chosen profession," the former president said.

Carter urged his audience to be bold in their decisions.

"The only limits we have on our lives are the voluntary limits we place on ourselves," Carter said. "We are afraid to be bold — we are afraid to be at ease in seeking help from someone we admire."

Carter, 64, spoke at Elon College's centennial convocation. His speech, delivered to about 4,000 students, faculty, alumni and local residents was the keynote address in the college's three day symposium, entitled "Reaffirming a Tradition of Service."

GOP Greets Mavretic

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — House Speaker Joe Mavretic, criticized by fellow Democrats at a party caucus last week, received a warm reception when he appeared at a House Republican caucus.

The GOP meeting, held Tuesday at a Raleigh restaurant, was closed to reporters — until Mavretic, D-Edgecombe, showed up.

He said he had agreed to House Minority Leader Johnathan Rhyne's invitation to speak as long as that part of the meeting was open to the public.

Most of Mavretic's comments to the 30 Republican House members centered on technical matters: how he is trying to get more telephone lines and word processors for legislators, how he expects the session to adjourn in June.

In January, 45 Republicans joined 20 dissident Democrats to overthrow Speaker Liston Ramsey, D-Madison, and install Mavretic as speaker. If he seeks a second term as speaker in 1991, he probably will need to sustain Republican support.

Tuesday, Democrat Mavretic appeared to still be in good shape with the GOP.

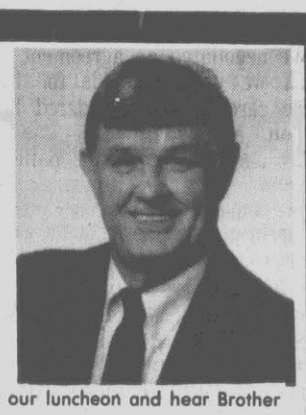

"I think you're doing a good job and a fair job as speaker," Rep. Robert Grady, R-Onslow, told Mavretic.

Rhyne later said many in the group shared Grady's sentiments.

House GOP whip Gingrich and wife defend partnership

Wright All Set To Deal On Royalties

LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — House Speaker Jim Wright, facing what may be a highly public congressional trial on ethics charges, said Tuesday that he would consider a sort of plea-bargain deal.

Wright, D-Texas, told reporters in response to a question that he would be willing to donate $7,700 in book royalties to charity as a form of restitution for the alleged offense of collecting that money in lieu of prohibited honorarium fees.

"If that is what the (ethics) committee would like me to do, of course, I would like to do it," Wright said.

The restitution proposal, which has been suggested by a number of the speaker's Democratic colleagues, would also involve an admission by Wright that his efforts to promote bulk sales of his book to groups from which he could not accept speaking fees had created at least the appearance of a violation of House rules.

"I apologize for any confusion right now," Wright said. He continued to insist, however, that it was "never my intention" that the purchase of his book, "Reflections of a Public Man," be considered "as a payment for my making a speech."

It was not clear Tuesday that a restitution offer could succeed either as a legal or a public relations maneuver. But Wright's willingness to embrace it, after steadfastly protesting his innocence for 10 months, seemed to confirm the view of colleagues that Wright's prospects look grim in what has become a fight for his political life.

The timing and format of Wright's trial before the Committee on Standards of Official Conduct, as the ethics panel is formally called, are still being negotiated by lawyers for the speaker and the panel. But Wright allies see the proceeding as critical and have urged him to retain a highly skilled trial attorney to represent him. He has already met with lawyers Clark M. Clifford and Richard Ben-Veniste.

Meanwhile, a new investigation by the committee of Wright's profits from an oil deal known as Sabine Lake hit a snag Tuesday when two key witnesses refused to meet with chairman Julian C. Dixon, D-Calif., and John T. Myers, R-Ind., who were in San Antonio for that purpose.

M.D. "Doug" Jaffe Jr. and his father, Morris D. Jaffee Sr., claimed in a hand-delivered letter from their lawyer that the committee had no authority to subpoena them because the Sabine Lake deal is not part of the official charges pending against Wright.

Wright also urged Tuesday that reporters take note of an affidavit signed by S. Gene Payte, a Fort Worth, Texas, developer who, the committee charged, tried in vain to give the speaker a cash gift, and then paid $6,000 for 1,000 books but only received 300 to 500.

Payte said in the affidavit he tried three times to tell the committee that he "believed" he had received the total 1,000. Upon further investigation, Payte said, he is now positive he received all the books he paid for.

Countdown Begins For Friday Launch

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Atlantis' commander says his crew is "mighty proud" to be part of the first space shuttle planetary mission scheduled to blast off Friday.

The countdown, which started Tuesday, continued toward a liftoff at 2:24 p.m. Friday. Six hours after launch, astronauts Mark Lee and Mary Cleave are to release the 7,600-pound Magellan probe and a rocket is to propel it on a 468-day journey to Venus.

Magellan is to reach its destination in August 1990, swooping into orbit around Venus to begin a 243-day period during which it is to map up to 90 percent of the cloud-shrouded planet's surface.

Wright Challenger Has Own Troubles

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — House Republican Whip Newt Gingrich says he doesn't feel snared by his own trap, despite similarities between the ethics complaint against him and the charges he instigated against House Speaker Jim Wright.

"I knew full well that this issue might well come up when I filed charges against Jim Wright," Gingrich said Tuesday, referring to the complaint Rep. Bill Alexander, D-Ark., filed against him with the House ethics committee. "I knew full well the intensity and savagery of the Democratic response."

The complaint, filed earlier this month, alleges 10 violations of House rules in a partnership set up in 1984 to promote sales of "Window of Opportunity," a book co-authored by Gingrich, his wife, Marianne Gingrich, and political associate David Drake.

Many of the investors in the partnership were Republican political activists who later obtained tax writeoffs from the arrangement.

Gingrich and his wife, who was the general partner of COS Limited Partnership, released hundreds of pages of documents Tuesday and then appeared together at a news conference in an effort to lay to rest the charges outlined in Alexander's complaint.

But the news conference turned stormy as reporters persisted with questions about the parallels between the ethics problems facing Wright and those confronting Gingrich. Mrs. Gingrich, upset by the questions, walked out of the room midway through the session.

"What we did, we did legally correct, we did ethically correct, we did it out in the open and it is above board," Gingrich said, "and I think that's a huge difference between us and Jim Wright."

The partnership involved 18 individuals and three corporations that put up $5,000 each to promote the book, in exchange for a promise of half of the publisher's profits. But the partnership reported more than $100,000 in losses from 1984 to 1988, and those losses were divided among the partners for tax writeoffs.

Gingrich acknowledged that some of the partners had a direct interest in legislation, and his office handled routine requests for some of them. But he denied that he provided any of the partners "unusual or extraordinary personal help" with any problem they had with the federal government.

House rules prohibit members from accepting gifts worth more than $100 from persons with direct interest in legislation, but Gingrich said the $5,000 each investor put into the deal did not constitute a gift because each one "thought there was a reasonable chance that it might make money."

Gingrich and his wife each earned $7,018 in royalties on the book, under a contract that provided the three authors with a total royalty of 10 percent on hardback sales and 8 percent on paperback sales.

Economy Tops $5 Trillion

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The U.S. economy, surpassing the $5 trillion mark for the first time, expanded at a robust annual rate of 5.5 percent in the first three months of 1989, the fastest pace in more than a year, the government reported today.

The Commerce Department said that almost half of the increase in the gross national product came from a statistical catch-up from last year's drought.

But even discounting this bookkeeping factor, the GNP, representing the country's total output of goods and services, advanced at a 3 percent annual rate, down only slightly from a 3.5 percent non-farm growth rate in the final three months of 1988.

The non-farm growth was slightly better than economists had been expecting. Most analysts believe the U.S. economy will slow substantially this year under the weight of higher interest rates.

However, the report contained information that inflation is rising. A GNP price index which measures a fixed marketbasket of goods and services rose at an annual rate of 5 percent in the first quarter, up from a fourth-quarter rate of 4.2 percent.

Half of the increase came from a pay raise for federal employees, with rising food and home costs accounting for much of the rest of the increase.

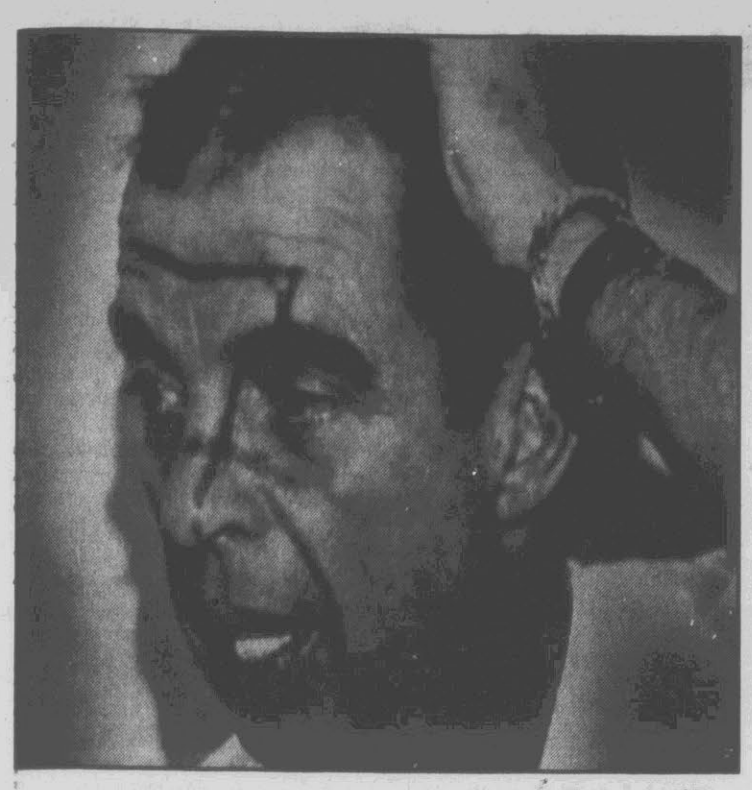

The 5.5 percent overall increase in the GNP was more than double the 2.4 percent advance in the October-December quarter, the last period in which output was held back because of the lingering effects of last summer's drought.

With the start of the new year, the government returned its estimate of farm output to normal levels, thus accounting for 2.5 percentage points of the 5.5 percent increase in the first quarter.

Economists expect growth for the remainder of the year to slow dramatically as the economy adjusts to the year-long credit tightening done by the Fed.

Talk Show Host Reports Attack

Police Say They Can't Confirm It

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SAN FRANCISCO — Police said they found no witnesses to verify a report by TV host Morton Downey Jr. that he was attacked in an airport bathroom by skinheads who painted swastikas on him and tried to shave his hair.

As police Tuesday continued an investigation of the incident, KOFY-TV owner Jim Gabbert said he would cancel local broadcast of Downey's show if police find the tale was concocted as a publicity stunt.

Downey responded to reports that his claim could not be substantiated, saying he would have to be "bordering on a little bit of insanity" to have made up the attack.

Downey, 56, was in San Francisco to promote his show when he said he was attacked in a restroom at San Francisco International Airport by someone who "put his arm around my throat and his other hand across my eyes and dragged me to a stall," he said.

"They sat me down on the toilet. One guy sat on me, and another one started cutting my hair," said the bombastic program host known for his arrogant, aggressive style.

About the time Downey said he was assaulted, a bomb threat forced KOFY to leave the air during the time slot for the syndicated series. The show returned to the air after about 30 minutes.

Downey said that the assault story is true but cannot be verified because police were not in the bathroom where he was jumped.

"You can listen to all the other stories of people who weren't there, but that's fine," said Downey, in an interview with WWOR-TV, in Secaucus, N.J., where he returned later Tuesday.

Police at San Francisco International said they were investigating the incident reported to them at 11:30 p.m. Monday.

"What he's claiming doesn't appear to be the case at all," airport spokesman Ron Wilson said. "We have not yet been able to confirm any of the statements Mr. Downey made."

Authorities found no evidence of skinheads in the area, he added.

Downey was cleanly dressed when spotted later in a limousine at the airport and showed no signs of being in a scuffle, said Wilson. Scissors and a marking pen were found in the restroom, but no physical signs of a fight were present, he said.

In an interview with the San Francisco Examiner, Downey displayed swastikas scrawled across his face, shirt and pants. His right eye was bloodshot and bruised, his head partially cut.

Downey said he believed his assailants to be skinheads, young white supremacists with shaved heads who have been reviled on his television show. He said his music director, David Lloyd, pulled him from the stall where the attack reportedly occurred and helped him out of the building.

TV Show To Cover Up Nurse Actresses

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — Bowing to audience complaints and advertiser defections, the executive producer of NBC's fleshy "Nightingales" said the series will show less skin and more nurses in uniform.

"We did some things we're not proud of," Aaron Spelling told reporters Tuesday. "Mostly, we want to add to the patient-nurse relationship."

The one-hour drama depicts the trials of five less-than-brilliant and lusty nursing students. Spelling said if NBC renews the show, it would return without lacy lingerie, bouncy aerobic workouts and locker-room gossip-disrobing sessions.

Critics, including irate nurses, said it demeaned the nursing profession specifically and women generally.

"Nightingales" is one of several television programs criticized recently by advocacy groups.

The Fox Broadcasting Corp.'s "Married...With Children" and NBC's "Saturday Night Live" have been slammed for their frank language and candid sexual references, and national advertisers have backed out of both programs.

Chrysler Corp. and Sears, Roebuck and Co. have pulled spots from "Nightingales."

"We're in a no-win situation," Spelling said of the assaults on the show, which premiered in January. "We've been beaten over the head with baseball bats."

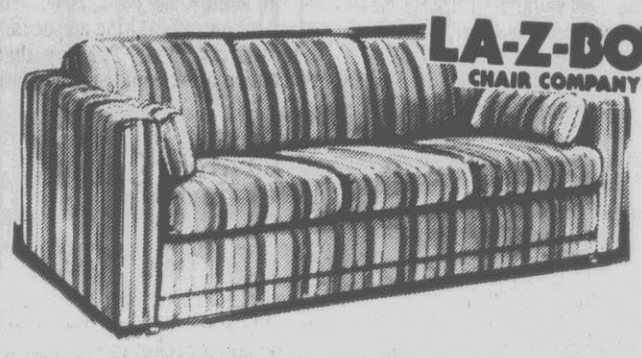

Spelling, whose program "Charlie's Angels" brought bikinis and hot tubs to the world of TV private detectives, said the new "Nightingales" would have characters saying lines like, "All I want to do is be a good nurse and help."

State Official Contends U.S. Scrapped Honduran Aid Plan

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — A State Department official disputes evidence in the Oliver North trial, saying the U.S. government backed away from a plan approved by President Reagan to give Honduras extra U.S. aid in return for supporting the Nicaraguan rebels.

The comments Tuesday by Michael G. Kozak to a House subcommittee came in response to disclosure of the plan at North's trial. The jury in the trial returned to the courthouse this morning for its fifth day of deliberations.

Reagan initialed a Feb. 19, 1985, memo prepared by North and introduced at his trial approving a plan to link more than $110 million in extra aid to Honduras' support for the Contra rebels.

That support consisted primarily of allowing the rebels to maintain base camps on Honduras. At the time, Congress had banned military aid to the Contras.

The month after Reagan approved the plan, then-Vice President George Bush visited Honduras and told President Robert Suazo Cordova that Reagan had directed expedited delivery of U.S. military items and other aid to the country, according to a 42-page admission introduced at North's trial. Honduras did receive the additional assistance and continued to support the Contras.

But Kozak, acting assistant secretary of state for inter-American affairs, maintains that the extra aid wasn't conditioned on Contra support.

"The ... plan was disapproved, at the objection of the State Department, on the grounds that conditionality — linkage between U.S. assistance and any assistance to the resistance — was contrary to U.S. policy," Kozak told the House appropriations subcommittee on foreign operations.

Kozak offered no details on how the plan came to be scrapped. He wasn't asked by the subcommittee about the fact that Reagan had approved it.

Kozak at one point mischaracterized the 42-page admission, saying that North, whose lawyers prepared the document, "has linked a trip of the vice president ... to a secret plan that was never approved." In fact, the admission does not address whether Bush, during his visit to Honduras, told Suazo the extra aid was contingent on Contra support.

Bush has repeatedly refused to discuss the contingent aid plan or his actions during the Honduran trip, saying it could prejudice North's trial.

The court admission was prepared by North's lawyers and the prosecution, in concert with U.S. intelligence agencies.

Kozak referred to the admission as "a fiction" and said it was primarily the product of North and his lawyers. Some changes were made by the independent counsel prosecuting the North case. But administration officials were permitted only to screen it to excise classified information, he said. Kozak said he was among the officials who screened it.

The plan which Reagan approved included an emissary who would carry a signed copy of a letter by Reagan urging support for the Contras, according to the Feb. 19, 1985, memo initialed by the president. The emissary was then to "very privately explain our criteria for the expedited economic support, security assistance deliveries and enhanced CIA support," said the memo from national security adviser Robert McFarlane.

The document, marked "memorandum for the president," was prepared by North and an NSC colleague, Raymond F. Burghardt, according to a notation at the bottom of the document.

Reagan put his initials in two locations, including the line marked "OK" for the recommendation saying that "you authorize us to proceed as outlined above."

"The whole proposed linkage that was included in (North's) plan was disapproved, was not made, there was no 'discreet emissary,'" Kozak maintained.

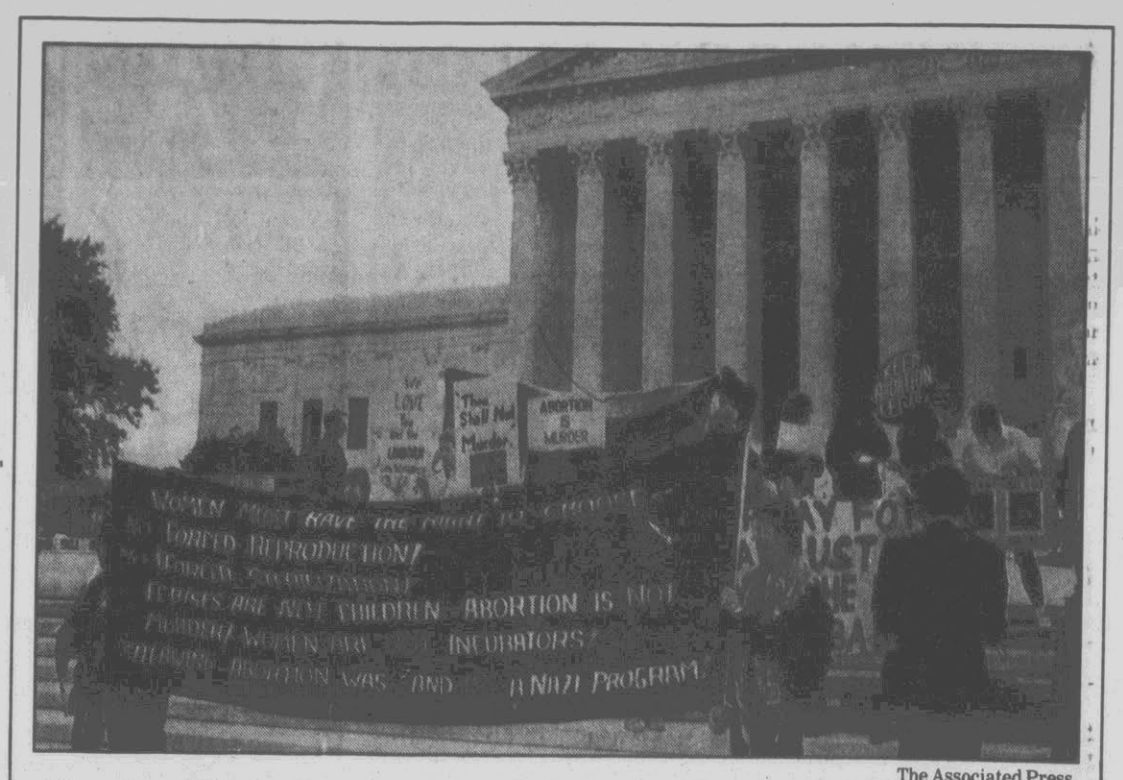

Another document introduced at North's trial reflects opposition by Kozak's area of the State Department, then headed by Elliott Abrams.

A Feb. 15, 1985, memo from North to McFarlane says that Abrams' operation "has clearly indicated that they do not desire to have an emissary, that there is no need to explain the 'conditionality.'"

A Feb. 25, 1985, memo from North to McFarlane seems to suggest that the emissary idea was proceeding. It says that Reagan's letter to Suazo urging support for the Contras "will be delivered by Ray Burghardt," North's colleague on the NSC staff.

"We seem to be well on the way toward an early release" of the additional aid, North's memo continues.

Abortion Battle

"Pro-choice" and "pro-life" activists gather in front of the U.S. Supreme Court Building in Washington, D.C., today. The court was scheduled to hear arguments on a key abortion rights case from Missouri in which it has been asked to overturn the 1973 Roe vs. Wade decision legalizing abortion.

Appeals Court Overturns Conviction Of FBI Agent

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SAN FRANCISCO — The espionage case against an FBI agent whose romance with a Soviet spy led to his imprisonment on two life terms will be pursued, the prosecutor said after a court reversed the conviction.

"We may re-appeal and we have other means," U.S. Attorney Robert Bonner of Los Angeles said, apparently referring to requests for appeals court rehearing or Supreme Court review. "If those fail, we will retry the case."

Bonner, who headed the prosecution in the case, said he would weigh his options after reading Tuesday's decision by the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals overturning Richard Miller's conviction.

Miller, whose 1986 conviction for spying rested heavily on the results of his lie detector test, was granted a new trial after the court said such evidence should not have been allowed. He is the only FBI agent ever convicted of spying.

The court said U.S. District Judge David Kenyon wrongly allowed prosecution witnesses to relate the questions Miller was asked by a polygraph examiner, the answers he gave, and the examiner's conclusion that he was probably lying.

Miller, a 20-year FBI veteran, was charged with furnishing a classified document to the Soviet Union in return for a promise of $65,000 in cash and gold. He was sentenced to two life terms plus 50 years in prison.

His attorney, Joel Levine, said he was pleased by Tuesday's decision but that the victory comes a little late for Miller.

"We would be more pleased if we didn't have to wait almost five years for a fair trial with a client in custody," referring to the time Miller has spent behind bars since his arrest.

Another defense lawyer, Stanley Greenberg, said they would seek to have Miller released on bail pending a new trial. He said Miller is in the federal prison in Rochester, Minn.

"The ruling that Miller did not have a fair trial should come as no surprise to any fair and impartial observer of the Miller proceedings," Greenberg said. "The prosecution brought to this case an end-justifies-the-means mentality that I have never before witnessed in a court of law."

The polygraph evidence bolstered the credibility of Miller's later admissions of wrongdoing, "the heart of the prosecution's case," said Judge Dorothy Nelson in the 3-0 decision.

Man Convicted In Deaths Of 7 Children Wins Trial

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ARCADIA, Fla. — A former fruit picker enjoyed his first taste of freedom today after 21 years in prison because a judge said perjury and prosecutorial misconduct got him convicted in the deaths of his seven children.

"I don't feel freedom yet," 53-year-old James Richardson said Tuesday following an eight-hour hearing in the DeSoto County courthouse where he had been sentenced to death in 1968.

"I guess it's going to take a while to get use to it, but I'm going to keep trying to make that step."

Retired Circuit Judge Clifton Kelly, assigned to review the case by the state Supreme Court, freed the black man who was convicted by an all-white jury after agreeing with defense attorneys that prosecutors allowed perjured testimony and withheld evidence.

"The enormity of the crime — seven children poisoned to death — is matched only by the enormity of the injustice to this man," said Kelly.

Although the state has 10 days to order a retrial, Janet Reno, a special investigator assigned to the case, said it will be closed.

Richardson was released in the custody of attorney Ellis Rubin, who took him to his condominium near Daytona Beach, where a press conference was scheduled for this afternoon.

Richardson's first wish was to eat a shrimp dinner, said Rubin.

After Richardson was freed, his wife, Annie Mae, cried on the courthouse lawn, threw her arms up and said "Thank you, thank you."

Gorbachev Strengthens His Hand

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOSCOW — Mikhail S. Gorbachev has taken a major step toward mastering the Communist Party's top policy-making body by easing out a quarter of its most senior members and installing his own men.

At a meeting of the Central Committee on Tuesday, the Soviet president remolded the body's membership in a maneuver expected to make it easier for him to wage his campaign for reform.

Seventy-four of the committee's 301 full members retired, including former President Andrei A. Gromyko and many other holdovers from pre-Gorbachev days, and 24 people were promoted to full membership.

The committee also retired 24 of its non-voting members and 12 members of the Central Auditing Commission, which handles party finance.

Party ideology chief Vadim A. Medvedev told a news conference that all had volunteered to step down.

The military lost a substantial voice in the Central Committee: at least nine senior officers were dropped and just one officer was promoted from candidate status to full membership.

The changes left the Central Committee with 251 full members, party personnel chief Georgy P. Razumovsky told the news conference.

While the Politburo is the party and Soviet society's ruling body, it is the Central Committee in its several meetings a year that sets policy goas.

The committee also is empowered to make changes in the Politburo, and a stronger hand in its affairs could make it easier for Gorbachev to bring supporters into the ruling body.

The resignations followed the first contested, nationwide elections in 70 years of Communist rule on March 26. Dozens of top party and government officials, including more than 30 regional party chairmen, were defeated.

Medvedev said 83 members of the Central Committee had lost the government and party jobs that entitled them to committee membership. Officially, they lost their jobs because of poor health or age, but some clearly fell from political favor.

Medvedev said a few of the 83 were too ill to sign their resignations.

Mexican Quake Leaves One Dead

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Just one death was reported in the strongest earthquake to strike Mexico since a 1985 tremor that killed thousands of people, but panic was widespread among residents haunted by memories of the last big quake.

Two women leapt from the second-story window of a swaying building during Tuesday morning's quake, seriously injuring themselves, police said. Another 240 were treated for shock, said Mayor Manuel Camacho Solis.

Two little girls hit by falling debris were briefly hospitalized, 13 buildings were damaged seriously enough to be closed for repairs and parts of the city of 19 million were without water because an aqueduct cracked.

The tremor, which measured 6.8 on the Richter scale, felled a power line just north of the city center that electrocuted a man of about 30, said Maria Cortina Benitez, a city police spokeswoman.

Port facilities in the Pacific resort of Acapulco and city hall in the Guerrero state capital, Chilpancingo, sustained minor damage.

"This earthquake reactivated the terror that remains engraved in the minds of people since '85 and that hasn't been able to be resolved," psychoanalyst Antonio Santamaria said in a telephone interview. At least 9,500 died in that quake, which registered 8.1 on the Richter scale.

The epicenter of Tuesday's quake was 40 miles east of Acapulco, about 200 miles south of Mexico City, said the U.S. National Earthquake Information Center in Golden, Colo.

"I was hysterical because I thought the same thing was going to happen that happened in '85 because it felt quite strong and because my husband, my daughter and my grandchildren were all in different places," said Sara Torres de Zamorano, 59.

She lives in Tlatelolco, where 472 people died when two buildings collapsed in 1985.

China's Student Boycott Spreads

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BEIJING — Students said today that government threats to suppress the largest student movement in Communist China's history have only increased their resolve to make the country's leaders embrace democratic reforms.

Student leaders said a class boycott that began Monday has spread to 41 universities and colleges around Beijing, involving more than 70,000 students. At least four more schools joined the protest today, they said.

Two protest leaders said students were ready to stage street demonstrations again as they did when they began their campaign 10 days ago.

Chinese leader Deng Xiaoping on Tuesday ordered authorities to crack down on the protest, said a journalist at the People's Daily, the voice of the ruling Communist Party.

"The peasants support us, the workers support us, the army supports us, so why should we be bothered by students," the journalist quoted the 84-year-old Deng as saying.

His remarks prompted the People's Daily to publish a harsh editorial that called the student movement "a planned conspiracy" aimed at overthrowing the government. The editorial said further protests would be forbidden.

The country's major newspapers and radio stations carried the editorial, and millions of Communist Party members met to discuss it and to prepare for the crackdown.

More than 1,000 party members met in Beijing and "resolutely condemned the illegal student activities," said the Beijing city television news.

The Beijing Daily, meanwhile, published an order from the city government telling students to disband their "illegal" unions. Most of the unions were formed last week after students in Beijing voted down the official student organizations, which are set up by university officials.

About 10,000 troops from the 38th Army, a special force for suppressing civic disturbances, have taken up positions in buildings near university campuses, students and Chinese sources said.

Prime Minister's Aide Kills Self

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOKYO — An aide who handled scandal-tainted donations that helped to sink Prime Minister Noboru Takeshita's career committed suicide today, casting a pall of sorrow over Japan's growing political crisis.

Police said Ihei Aoki, 58, who had served Takeshita since 1958, was found dead at his apartment in Tokyo. He had slashed a wrist and an ankle with a razor and hanged himself, they said, and he left notes to his wife and several other people including the prime minister.

The normally unflappable Takeshita appeared shocked by the death. He told reporters he had not seen Aoki's note but thought it was possible that the suicide was linked to the long-running Recruit scandal.

"I strongly regret (his action). We walked side by side for over 30 years," said Takeshita, who had announced Tuesday he would resign soon to take responsibility for his and his party's involvement in the scandal.

Aoki's name rather than Takeshita's appeared on loans and share dealings with the Recruit Co. that now are under suspicion both for political ethics and bribery. The company is accused of trying to buy influence with politicians, bureaucrats, business leaders and media executives.

Prosecutors had questioned Aoki several times. So far, 14 people face charges in the Recruit scandal but none of them is a politician or political aide like Aoki.

Despite Japan's fame for harakiri, or ritual self-disembowelment, it has a suicide rate similar to most Western countries. Some Japanese are driven to kill themselves by shame or out of embarrassment for troubling others, as well as such universal motives as problems with money, romance and health.

Last weekend, news reports revealed that Aoki had accepted a loan from the Recruit Co. of $384,000 in 1987 when Takeshita was campaigning to succeed Yasuhiro Nakasone as prime minister, and the money, which was later paid back, was said to have been used in the campaign.

The revelation of the loan embarrassed Takeshita because he had not included it in a report to Parliament on April 11, when he said he had received more than $1 million in legal political donations from Recruit. The loan forced him to change his account of his involvement with the controversial company, and two days later Takeshita announced his decision to resign.

Takeshita did not blame Aoki in his departure statement, but news reports Monday said he had not known of the loan at the time he spoke to Parliament because his aide had not informed him of it until Saturday.

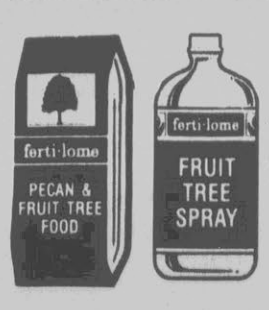

Meanwhile, political factions in the governing Liberal Democratic Party were consulting about a successor to Takeshita, who said he would not leave office until Parliament passes the 1989 budget, likely some time next month.

The most prominently mentioned candidate was Masayoshi Ito, 75, a former foreign minister, who has appeared reluctant to take up the post at a time of political crisis. He said Tuesday the post should go to a younger person.

The Yomiuri Shimbun newspaper reported today that Ito was the choice agreed upon at meetings late Tuesday between Takeshita and other party leaders.

The daily Asahi Shimbun said a majority of governing party members judged Ito as the only appropriate candidate because he is untainted by the scandal involving the Recruit Co., an information services conglomerate.

Stock And Market Reports

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market was mixed today.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials dropped 5.50 to 2,3881.41 in the first half hour of trading.

But gainers outnumbered losers by about 3 to 2 in nationwide trading of New York Stock Exchange-listed issues, with 454 up, 309 down and 529 unchanged.

Volume on the Big Board came to 22.39 million shares as of 10 a.m. on Wall Street.

The Commerce Department reported this morning that the nation's gross national product rose at a 5.5 percent annual rate, after adjustment for inflation, in the first quarter of the year.

Without the effects of last year's drought, however, the agency said the growth rate would have been just 3 percent.

Inflation figures that accompanied the GNP report indicated that prices were still rising at a 5 percent to 5.5 percent annual rate.

USX rose ⅛ to 33⅞. On Tuesday the company reported sharply higher earnings for the first quarter.

The NYSE's composite index of all its listed common stocks dropped .30 to 171.30. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index was down .05 at 343.02.

On Tuesday the Dow Jones industrial average fell 15.77 points to 2,386.91.

Declining issues outnumbered advances by about 8 to 7 on the NYSE, with 820 down, 681 up and 461 unchanged.

Lucille Ball Dies

freely throughout a brief routine with Hope.

Her last series — "Life with Lucy," co-starring frequent sidekick Gale Gordon — was carried by ABC at the start of the 1986 season. But the show, Miss Ball's first series in 12 years, was canceled after less than two months when it drew spectacularly low ratings. The actress "felt terrible. ... It really devastated her," daughter Lucie Arnaz said at the time.

Miss Ball also played a bag lady in the 1985 TV movie "Stone Pillow," considered one of the most challenging roles of her career. She was hospitalized for dehydration when it was over, but the movie was a minor critical and ratings success.

Despite her remarkable popularity, Miss Ball was one of the few stars in television's golden age who did not go on to have an extensive theatrical film career.

Her timing, wails and pratfalls made the "I Love Lucy" show one of the most popular in television history.

Bridge clubs and bowling teams changed their meeting nights to watch Lucy Ricardo and her sidekick, Ethel Mertz (the late Vivian Vance), come up with another harebrained scheme to drive their long-suffering husbands, Ricky and Fred, to desperation.

A Chicago department store changed the night it stayed open because shoppers were staying home in front of the television.

Miss Ball's real, onscreen pregnancy marked a milestone in television, and an estimated 44 million viewers — more than watched the inauguration of President Eisenhower — tuned in on Jan. 19, 1953, the night Lucy Ricardo delivered Little Ricky. Her real son was born just four hours before the previously filmed show was broadcast.

Miss Ball remained a worldwide favorite through the breakup of her 20-year marriage to Arnaz, who played husband Ricky Ricardo in "I Love Lucy."

Miss Ball was born on Aug. 6, 1911, in Celeron, N.Y., the daughter of an electrician and a concert pianist.

Young Lucy, a brunette, was dazzled by the stage, but her ambitions were discouraged by an acting school — "They sent my mother a letter saying she was wasting her money" — and she turned to modeling under the name Diane Belmont.

Her ads for Chesterfield cigarettes caught the attention of Hollywood, and in 1933 she was off to California. As a blonde, she appeared with the Marx Brothers in "Room Service," with Fred Astaire in "Follow the Fleet" and with Katharine Hepburn and Ginger Rogers in "Stage Door."

In all, she appeared in more than 75 movies.

In 1940, her tresses now the fiery trademark red, Miss Ball met Arnaz, a rumba star. They married within six months.

In 1951, when CBS decided to move her radio series, "My Favorite Husband," to television, Miss Ball insisted that Arnaz be her co-star. But the network wasn't sure Arnaz would be a hit with the American public.

The couple went on a nationwide vaudeville tour and proved audiences would sit still to watch a leggy, blue-eyed comedian and a Cuban-born band leader with a heavy accent. They also produced their own pilot episode on borrowed money.

CBS relented, and "I Love Lucy," with Miss Vance as Ethel and the late William Frawley as Fred, was an immediate success.

More than 10 million of the nation's 15 million television sets switched to "Lucy," and some of her antics became comedy classics.

Cheney Says 'Star Wars' Research Focused On Use Of Tiny Satellites

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Star Wars research is focusing on a concept called "Brilliant Pebbles," consisting of thousands of satellites under three feet long and designed to knock down enemy missiles, says Defense Secretary Dick Cheney.

Cheney told Congress on Tuesday that he remains a strong advocate of Star Wars, known formally as the Strategic Defense Initiative, but is recommending that the budget for fiscal 1990 be cut to $4.6 billion from the $5.9 billion proposed by former President Reagan.

He said President Bush "believes very deeply that we need to go forward with strategic defense."

Much SDI research will focus on the Brilliant Pebbles concept, said Cheney, although SDI officials later said that weapon is one of several space-based anti-missile satellites under consideration.

The budget level for Star Wars "will buy us the capability to look aggressively at Brilliant Pebbles," said Cheney. "If Brilliant Pebbles does not work out, the ultimate deployment date of the current space-based missile program would slip by two years." He did not set a date.

Plans call for the president and Congress to decide in 1993 or 1994 whether to go ahead with Star Wars, said Pentagon spokesmen. Several years later, deployment could begin on the first elements, surveillance satellites and ground-based missiles.

Brilliant Pebbles drew backing from the outgoing SDI chief, Lt. Gen. James Abrahamson, who predicted in a Feb. 9 memorandum that it could be deployed in space for about $25 billion, far under estimates of $45 billion for other SDI orbital systems.

The concept calls for between 3,000 and 5,000 satellites, about three feet long and weighing less than 100 pounds apiece, to be placed in orbit up to 400 miles above the earth, according to retired Lt. Gen. Daniel O. Graham, a strong backer of Star Wars.

Each satellite would be housed in a protective cocoon, called a "life jacket," from which it would be ejected in time of war. If everything worked, sensors aboard the satellites would spot and track enemy boosters, and rockets would propel the "pebbles" toward the boosters, destroying them before they could release their warheads.

The other space-based interceptor (SBI) under consideration calls for several hundred satellites, each armed with about a dozen interceptors, which would be fired at enemy boosters.

Brilliant Pebbles and SBI rely on a Boost Surveillance and Tracking Satellite, in high earth orbit, designed to spot boosters at launch.

Brilliant Pebbles is the brainchild of Lowell Wood, a physicist at the federal Lawrence Livermore Laboratory in California. He is a protege of Edward Teller, who is known as the father of the hydrogen bomb and helped persuade Reagan to launch his Star Wars campaign.

Cheney's remarks drew applause from SDI backers and skepticism from Star Wars critics, who note that any space-based system would violate the 1972 Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty and thus lead to a new round in the arms race.

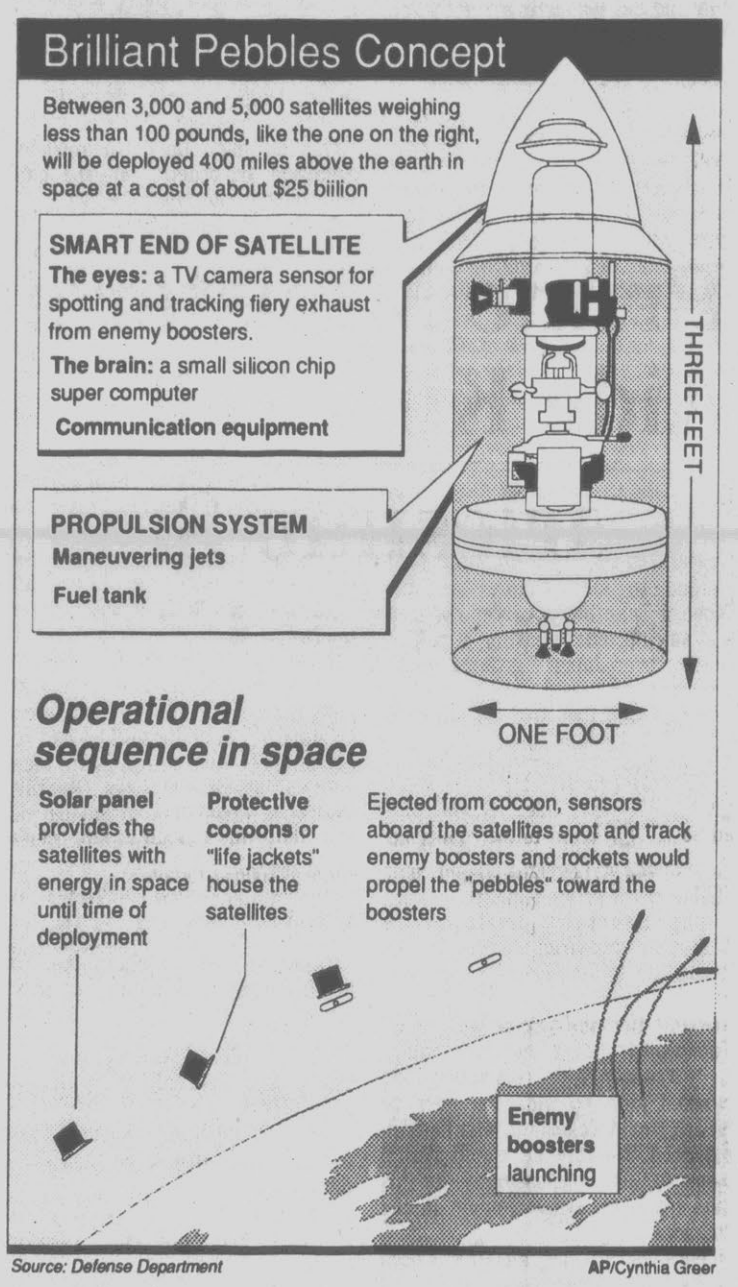

Graham, the head of the pro-Star Wars lobbying group High Frontier, said he was "delighted" by Cheney's remarks.

Critics noted that the Pentagon has done relatively little work so far on Brilliant Pebbles.

"The fundamental problem is that there is no 'there' there. At this point it is just a neat idea," said John Pike, director of space research for the Federation of American Scientists.

"I think it is entirely premature for the administration to be making the claim that this will pan out," said Pike, calling Cheney's remarks "a triumph of faith over fact."

SDI is spending $40 million on Brilliant Pebbles this year, a tiny fraction of its overall budget and only 10 percent of the $400 million it is spending on two ground-based interceptors that would likely also be deployed in any anti-missile defense.

Agricultural Extension Service.

"Basically, this week actually has been the most active time. For the past two weeks we've had a lot of excess water that prolonged the reentrance into many of the fields," he said.

"Over the past couple years, there has been a substantial decrease in the amount of corn Pitt County has grown," Smith said. "The last practical day (for planting) is May 10, after that there's great risk."

Smith said research data shows that corn yields decrease about one bushel per acre, per day after April 15 in most areas of North Carolina. The rate of decrease jumps significantly after May 1, after which corn is more likely to be affected by insect damage, low grain test weights and lodging.

In addition to getting the corn planted, farmers are facing the need to transplant their tobacco, Smith said.

"Tobacco transplants are in short supply" because of the wet conditions presented by the rain, he said.

"We've had field operations temporarily suspended but once the sun comes out, it won't be long before we'll be back in full swing," Smith said.

The GUC water plant recorded the Tar River level at 6.8 feet above sea level at 8 a.m. today, down significantly from early spring levels that flooded low-lying areas.

Forecasters called for sunny skies today with temperatures ranging from the mid 80s to low 90s. Thundershowers are possible this evening with low temperatures expected in the 60s tonight.

Faculty Senate Wants Valvano To Limit Duties

Either Give Up Coaching Or Athletic Directorship

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — North Carolina State basketball coach Jim Valvano should not also be the school's athletic director because there is a conflict of interest when he creates policies for himself, a committee has concluded.

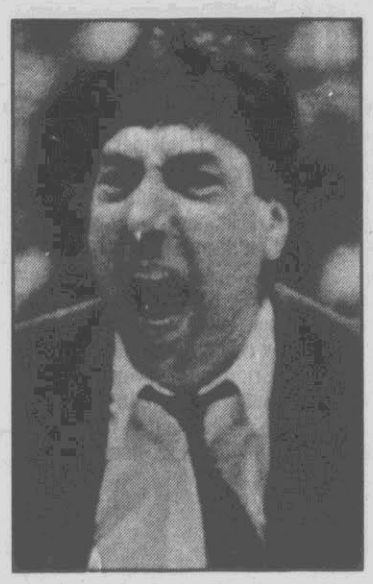

The recommendation was unanimously endorsed by the faculty senate after it was issued in a report by the group's Select Committee on Academic Integrity, which was formed to examine N.C. State's handling of student grades in the wake of allegations of improper grade changing on the basketball team.

"The singular nature of the varsity basketball challenge at N.C. State University has prompted the committee to further suggest that the two roles of director of athletics and basketball coach of the men's team may not be compatible," the committee said.

The panel added that it was impressed with the improvement in academics in athletes in non-revenue sports as well as the football team.

In an interview after the senate meeting, Dr. Edward P. Stahel II, a professor of chemical engineering who chaired the committee, said the committee had found that basketball players were not encouraged to achieve beyond a minimal level to keep them eligible to play.

"We were concerned about the basketball players' lack of progress toward a degree and the quality of the academic programs," he said.

Jim Valvano

Valvano, reached at his office for comment, hung up on a reporter asking for his reaction to the senate vote and the commitee's report.

In the first four pages of the five-page report, the committee said it had found nothing amiss in the university's handling of student grades. On the final page, however, the committee wrote that it had found serious academic problems with the basketball team.

"While examining selected basketball players' academic records, the committee was struck by the lack of academic progress in case after case," the report said.

"While TV 'color' personnel talk of 'seniors' on the team, they are often referring to athletes in their fourth year of eligibility and the students' academic standing may place him years short of achieving a degree," the report says.

The committee wrote that it was encouraged that a report by the director of the academic skills program said that "essentially all our athletes were capable of successful academic work at N.C. State.

"It is the consensus of the committee that an extremely strong statement needs to be made by the academic community, indeed by the whole university family, that athletes are first and foremost students and scholars," the report said.

The report said the school's athletes "are best served by a program that in every way assures them of the primary importance of their academic program."

University administrators issued a statement noting the committee's finding that all policies and procedures related to grades were being followed. But the university's statement largely ignored the fifth page of the report and did not mention either the committee's findings on the academic performance of the basketball team or the recommendations about Valvano.

Carlesimo Said Taking Kentucky Cage Position

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LEXINGTON, Ky. — P.J. Carlesimo, who guided an unheralded Seton Hall team to the runner-up spot in the NCAA tournament, will accept the head basketball coaching job at Kentucky, sources have told The Associated Press.

P.J. Carlesimo

"Kentucky has a new coach," one source said Tuesday night.

Two sources told the AP that Carlesimo would accept the position, and that an announcement could come as soon as today.

The sources said Carlesimo wanted to talk with Seton Hall officials, specifically those who supported him during attempts to oust him two seasons ago, before making the official announcement.

UK President David Roselle told The Courier-Journal, however, that any reports Carlesimo had been hired are "not true." A source close to Seton Hall also said "it is not a done deal."

"He's a good candidate (and) we're clearly interested in one another," Roselle said. He added that he was sure UK Athletics Director C.M. Newton had "not made any offer" to Carlesimo.

Roselle said Carlesimo's hiring would have to be approved by the school's athletics board, of which he is chairman. He said no such board meeting has been scheduled.

Carlesimo, in Lexington after his interview Tuesday with the school's screening committee and Newton, could not be reached for comment Tuesday night. A person who answered the phone at his Lexington hotel room said he was resting.

Chris Cameron, UK sports information director, and Bernie Vonderheide, a school spokesman, said they knew nothing about a decision on a new coach, and both added no news conference had been scheduled for today.

Carlesimo just finished the first year of a five-year contract reportedly worth a total of $1.2 million. That average salary of $240,000 could probably be doubled by UK's overall package.

Carlesimo, a 39-year-old bachelor whose coaching record is under .500 despite last season's 31-7 mark, is the first candidate Newton had wanted who has been interested enough to visit the campus.

Duke coach Mike Krzyzewski and Los Angeles Lakers coach Pat Riley immediately said they were not interested. Arizona coach Lute Olson flirted with UK briefly but canceled a visit to the campus.

Newton had declined earlier Tuesday night to characterize Carlesimo as the top candidate.

"Not really. I'm not going to get into numbers," Newton said. "But obviously he's a young coach we're very, very interested in and obvious-

Price Doubtful As Cavs Open Series Against Bulls

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The Cleveland Cavaliers learned they can beat the Chicago Bulls even without guard Mark Price. Now they may have to try it again.

Price, who averaged 18.9 points during the regular season and led the team in assists with 8.4 per game, could not work out with the team on Tuesday and is listed as doubtful for Friday's opening NBA playoff game against the Chicago Bulls.

He pulled his right groin muscle in a loss to Detroit on April 18 and sat out the Cavaliers' final two regular-season games, the last a 90-84 victory over the Bulls on Sunday.

The first round of the NBA playoffs, all best-of-5 series, begins on Thursday with Milwaukee at Atlanta, Philadelphia at New York, Golden State at Utah and Portland at the Los Angeles Lakers. On Friday, it's Boston at Detroit, Houston at Seattle and Denver at Phoenix.

Portland is a heavy underdog in its first-round matchup. The Trail Blazers finished 39-43 — the poorest record of the 16 playoff teams — and must take on the Lakers, seeking their third straight NBA title.

"We have our work cut out for us," said the Lakers' Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, who is retiring after the playoffs. "But I do think we're legitimate contenders."

The Trail Blazers needed an overtime victory over the Kings on the last day of the season to qualify for the playoffs. They would have gotten a chance for the first pick in the NBA draft with a loss to Sacramento, but the Trail Blazers weren't sorry.

"I don't deal with what's going to happen next year. I'm trying to do the best I can with this team," Portland coach Rick Adelman said. "Everybody can say what they want, but when you're a coach or a player, it's always better to make the playoffs than to not make the playoffs."

The Knicks, 52-30, finished with their best record since 1972-73, but the 76ers beat New York four of six times during the regular season and have convinced at least one bystander that they can advance.

"I think if they stay healthy, they can beat the Knicks," said Hall of Famer Wilt Chamberlain, a former 76er. "New York has a great team, but these guys are good and they have the big guy (Charles Barkley)."

The Bucks are hoping to shake off a 117-110 loss to Indiana on the last day of the season. "We didn't sell a lot of tickets for the Atlanta game," Bucks Coach Del Harris said.

Atlanta also is trying to rebound from a season-ending defeat; the Detroit Pistons held Dominique Wilkins to just eight points and beat the Hawks 99-81.

"We just want to play well going into the playoffs and we've been doing that," said Wilkins, who averaged 26.2 points during the regular season. "We'll be ready."

Golden State, 43-39, lost its last six games and will try to change its luck against the Jazz, who won the Midwest Division by six games.

"They've got good players on their team," Utah coach Jerry Sloan said. (Mitch) Richmond and (Chris) Mullin are terrific players. There isn't a team in the league that wouldn't want them. I don't fear them, I respect them.

"I have a great deal of respect for Golden State and I want our players to respect them."

Boston did not qualify for the playoffs until the last day of the season and will probably have to face the Pistons without Larry Bird, still recovering from foot surgery.

Phoenix has only lost one game at home to a Western Conference team all year while the Nuggets have won 19 of their last 20 games at Denver.

Xavier McDaniel returned to the lineup on April 6, leading the SuperSonics to an 8-2 record in their final 10 games.

Rampants Roll Over Eagles

By Tom Morris
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Rose's starters spotted their backups a 7-0 lead and then made way for the substitutes with little worry about the outcome of their game against Northeastern Tuesday.

The reserves held on for a 9-5 baseball victory that kept Rose undefeated at 13-0 overall and 6-0 in the Big East.

"He played a lot of people," Northeastern coach David Brinson said. "I've coached here 11 years and we've only won once and that was in my first year. He (Rose coach Ronald Vincent) is a gentleman."

Vincent had a number of starters who needed rest, and, after moving out to a 5-0 lead after the first inning, he decided to take advantage of the situation.

"We've got some people with nagging injuries," he said. "We got a big lead, so I took them out. It's a good chance for the other guys to get in."

Outfielder John Bolen and shortstop Chris Christopher both were plagued by sore legs while starting pitcher Walter Gatlin, who threw three innings of one-hit baseball, left early with an arm problem.

"He said he felt something wrong," Vincent said.

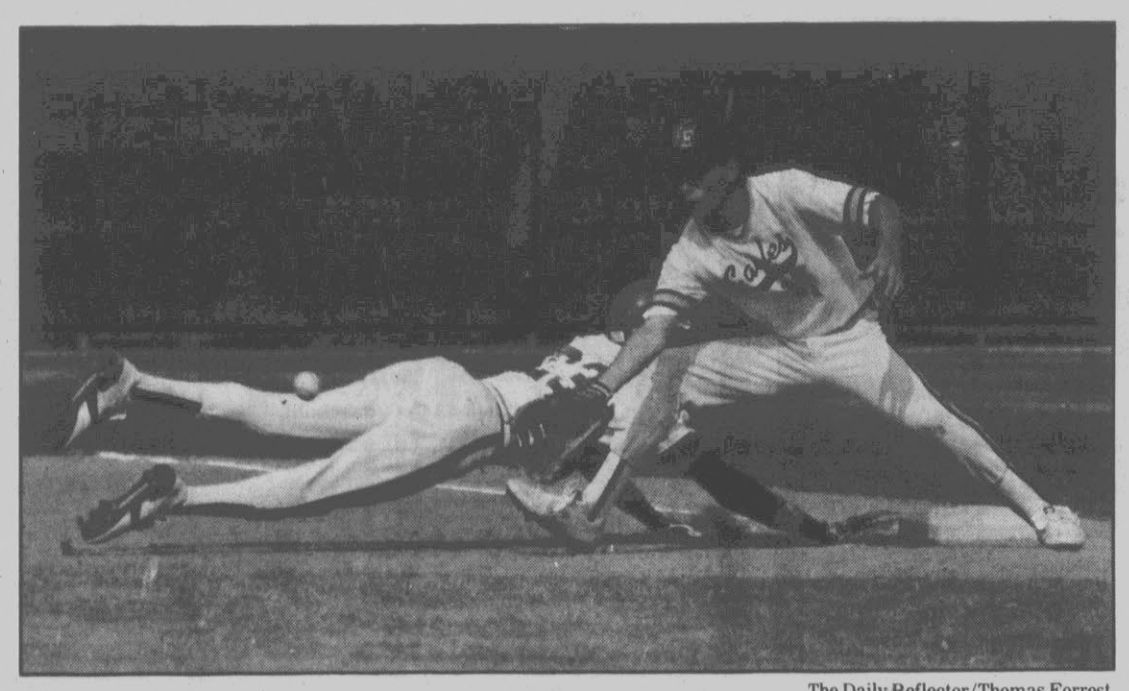

Paul Powers came on in relief of Gatlin and allowed one run over two innings. He was then relieved by sophomore William Gibbs, who had trouble finding the strike zone in the sixth and walked in three of the Vikings' five runs.

Senior David Leisten, who announced Tuesday that he will sign a baseball scholarship with East Carolina, relieved Gatlin and closed out the sixth and seventh to give the Rampants the win.

"It really helps to jump on people early," Vincent said. "It takes the pressure off of us and it puts it on them."

Belcher Making A Streak Of His Own

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Move over Orel, Tim Belcher is starting a streak of his own.

Belcher pitched his second straight shutout Tuesday night as Los Angeles beat Chicago 4-0, spoiling the party to celebrate the 75th anniversary of Wrigley Field.

Belcher has a ways to go, though. Last season, Orel Hershiser had 59 consecutive scoreless innings to break Don Drysdale's major league record by one inning.

"He pitched a helluva game," Dodgers manager Tommy Lasorda said. "We had a chance to get some more runs, but as it turned out he pitched some kind of a game."

Belcher, 2-1, allowed five hits, walked one and struck out seven. He also shut out Cincinnati 6-0 on four hits in his previous start on April 18.

"They got themselves out a couple of times," Belcher said. "Obviously, I'm in a good groove, but I did not pitch as well tonight as I did against Cincinnati."

Elsewhere in the National League it was San Diego 1, Pittsburgh 0; Cincinnati 6, Montreal 1; New York 2, Atlanta 1; San Francisco 4, St. Louis 0, and Houtson 4, Philadelphia 1.

Belcher, 12-6 as a rookie in 1988, had one shutout last season, a 6-0 victory over Houston on Sept. 20.

"He pitched a good game, he's got a good arm and a good fastball," Cubs manager Don Zimmer said. "But you can't give the pitcher all the credit. We're just not hitting."

While the Cubs weren't hitting, Belcher was.

He provided all the runs he needed with a two-run double to cap a three-run second inning against Scott Sanderson, 1-2.

Belcher also singled in the sixth while Eddie Murray had three hits, including a pair of doubles. Murray also had a sacrifice fly in the ninth.

Padres 1, Pirates 0

Eric Show allowed six hits in eight-plus innings and Mark Davis got the last three outs for his 10th save in 10 opportunities as San Diego edged Pittsburgh at Three Rivers Stadium. With one out in the fifth, Garry Templeton doubled off Bob Walk, 1-2, and scored on Roberto Alomar's single.

Walk lost to the Padres for the first time since July 21, 1984. He had been 5-0 against San Diego since then.

Mets 2, Braves 1

David Cone allowed five hits in 8 2-3 innings and Len Dykstra drove in a run and scored another, leading New York past Atlanta at Shea Stadium. It was the Mets' sixth victory in their last eight games and moved them to the .500 mark at 9-9.

Cone, 2-1, struck out 10 and walked four before needing last out relief help from Randy Myers.

Reds 6, Expos 1

Paul O'Neill snapped a sixth-inning tie with a three-run homer as Cincinnati beat Montreal at Riverfront Stadium and snapped out of a batting slump.

The Reds had scored only 10 runs in their previous six games, including three straight shutouts. The Expos have lost four of their last five games.

O'Neill's second homer of the season came off Dennis Martinez, 1-1, and put the Reds ahead 4-1 in the sixth.

Astros 4, Phillies 1

Mike Scott pitched a four-hitter and Glenn Davis hit a two-run homer as Houston beat Philadelphia in the Astrodome. Davis has homered in three straight games and has six for the season.

Scott, 3-1, had a shutout until the seventh inning when Darren Daulton hit his fifth homer of the season. Daulton had one homer last season in 144 at-bats.

Davis hit a two-run homer off Ken Howell, 2-1, in the first and scored from first in the sixth on Kevin Bass' double.

Giants 4, Cardinals 0

Don Robinson allowed four hits in seven innings and singled to key a three-run third inning, leading visiting San Francisco past St. Louis.

Robinson, 1-1, walked four and struck out none.

To The Sports Editor:

Having participated in the "Pig-Out" festivities at ECU this past weekend I was very surprised to find so little coverage of the event in Sunday's Daily Reflector. My husband and I took our children to the stadium on Friday night and thoroughly enjoyed the carnival, fireworks, live band and watching the cookers prepare the pigs. We returned on Saturday and found the entire experience to be very festive.

The "Pig-Out" caters to the family and offers activities for all ages. The ECU administration, coaches and players all took the time to speak with fans and children alike. I was impressed with how cordial they were. I know that the Pirate Club and ECU alumni take great pride in this event and they should. I am puzzled why our local newspaper would not share in that pride by giving more exposure to what has become a nationally recognized weekend which just happens to take place in Greenville, N.C., home of East Carolina University AND the Daily Reflector.

ly he's interested in us or he wouldn't be on campus.

"So we just have to see what happens."

Calls to Newton's Lexington home later Tuesday night went unanswered.

Kentucky is seeking a replacement for Eddie Sutton, who resigned under pressure in March after directing the program for four years.

School officials went before the NCAA Committee on Infractions last weekend in Charleston, S.C., responding to 18 allegations of wrongdoing in the basketball program.

Any sanctions or penalties against the program by the NCAA are expected in the next two to four weeks.

The sources said that Carlesimo was the kind of coach UK wanted to hire before the possible sanctions were announced to lessen any blow the NCAA might administer.

Carlesimo, whose integrity has generally been unquestioned, took over Seton Hall's foundering program in 1982. The Big East Conference team limped to a 6-23 record the first year and has steadily improved. Several student groups called for his resignation two seasons ago before he took Seton Hall to its first NCAA tournament appearance in the school's history.

Carlesimo was on the UK campus for most of the day Tuesday. He met for much of the morning with Newton, then had a two-hour meeting in the afternoon with the screening committee.

William Sturgill, the screening committee chairman and a UK board of trustees member, said he was "personally impressed with his (Carlesimo's) dedication as a coach and his intention and knowledge of the game."

With one out, Christopher reached on a chop single just over the pitcher's glove and up the middle. Leisten followed with a double.

Maurice Hines, the designated hitter, hit a line drive right into the third baseman's glove, but he dropped it, allowing Hines to reach.

Bolen followed with a two-run double, scoring Christopher and Leisten. Jamie Brewington got into the act with a two-run single, scoring Hines and Bolen for a 4-0 lead.

One out later, Travis Williamson was hit by a pitch. He then stole second. Viking catcher Scott Elliott tried to throw him out and Brewington cruised home from third with the fifth run of the frame.

Rose added two runs in the third when courtesy runner Pat Joyner, running for Gatlin, scored off an error. Heath Clark, who reached off an error, later scored on a RBI single by Tim Moore.

Rose pushed two more runs across in the fourth for a 9-0 lead before Northeastern finally scored its first run when Jeff Piscorik doubled in Jason Pipkin in the bottom of the fourth.

The Eagles then took advantage of two hits and five walks to score four runs in the fourth to narrow the gap.

"You can't ever tell," Brinson said. "I was proud of the way we played we kept our heads up. If anyone had hit one out, we could have been close. It's enjoyable to think what could have happened."

Rose returns to action today at Wilson Beddingfield.

Christopher had three hits for Rose while Moore had two.

Lady Pirates Add Third Signee Of Year

Michelle Marsh, a 6-0 forward from Roane State (Tenn.) Community College, has signed a basketball scholarship to play for East Carolina.

Marsh averaged 14 points and eight rebounds per game, leading the Raiderettes to a Region VII Junior College Title. She will join junior college teammate Kenneya Wilson at ECU.

Marsh was a member of the All-Region VII team. She was a standout at Greenback High School leading her team to the state championship as a senior.

"Michelle is a winner and has always been a winner," ECU coach Pat Pierson said. "She is a hard-nosed player who plays with a lot of intensity. She is a welcome addition to our program."

Marsh is ECU's third signee, joining Wilson and Hallsboro's Toni Thurman, who chose ECU during the fall signing period.

Rampette Soccer Team Defeated 2-0

Rocky Mount's girls' soccer team used a stingy defense to pave the way for a 2-0 victory over Rose High Tuesday.

WINSTON-SALEM (AP) — Jerry Wainwright, an assistant basketball coach at Wake Forest the past four years, will remain on the Demon Deacon staff, new head coach Dave Odom said Tuesday.

"I am very pleased that Jerry has accepted my offer to remain at Wake Forest," Odom said. "We have been close friends for well over 15 years and I believe that will be very comfortable working together.

Tyson Given Honorary College Degree

WILBERFORCE, Ohio (AP) — Mike Tyson, high school dropout, became Dr. Tyson on Tuesday.

The 22-year-old heavyweight champion received an honorary doctor of humane letters degree from Central State University for his accomplishments and for being an inspiration to young people.

But at a news conference earlier Tuesday, Tyson said he tries not to present himself as a role model because it puts pressure on youths.

"I don't think you should have idols," he said. "You should put your energy where you can be the best at what you can do."

Incaviglia, Buechele Lead Rangers

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

What would a manager take from his No. 7 and No. 9 hitter. How about seven hits, six RBIs and four runs scored?

Bobby Valentine got that Tuesday night from Pete Incaviglia and Steve Buechele as the Texas Rangers extended their best start ever with an 11-7 victory over the Cleveland Indians. Texas, 14-4, had 19 hits.

Incaviglia was batting .203 and has not been much of a factor as the Rangers compiled the best record in the majors. Valentine dropped him to seventh in the batting order. Buechele hit ninth.

"My job is to play hard and do the job, whether I'm hitting fourth, seventh or ninth," Incaviglia said. "Bobby (Valentine) is the manager and I'm not going to cause problems. He respects everybody in this clubhouse."

Incaviglia was having trouble respecting himself before the first four-hit game of his career — two singles, a double and a triple.

"Four hits brings my confidence back," Incaviglia said. "I was fighting myself through spring training and up until now. But mentally, I've been believing in myself, and everybody on the club believes in what I can do."

He scored three runs and drove in two in boosting his average to .246. Buechele had four RBIs from a single, double and triple. Buechele and Incaviglia each knocked in two runs during the Rangers' five-run fifth inning, which snapped a 5-5 tie.

Elsewhere, it was Boston 11, Chicago 0; Milwaukee 10, Minnesota 4; Kansas City 5, New York 3; Detroit 5, Seattle 2; Oakland 3, Toronto 1, and Baltimore 8, California 1.

Bobby Witt, 3-0, allowed seven runs on seven hits in five innings. Reliever Brad Arnsberg pitched four scoreless innings for his first career save, yielding two hits.

Cleveland lost for the ninth time in the last 11 games. The Indians' starting pitchers haven't won in 11 games since April 12, 0-6 during that span.

"You're always concerned about something like that, but I know they're good enough. They're going to be back," Cleveland manager Doc Edwards said. "Last year, they were getting into the sixth and seventh inning. You hate to go to your bullpen before the fifth."

Red Sox 11, White Sox 0

At Boston, Roger Clemens beat his nemesis, pitching a three-hitter to break his five-game losing streak against Chicago. Jim Rice, Ellis Burks and Rich Gedman homered as Boston ended a three-game losing streak and improved Clemens' career record after Red Sox' losses to 36-6.

"I just made good pitches all the way through," said Clemens, 3-0, who struck out 11 and allowed singles to Harold Baines in the first and to Ivan Calderon in the fourth and seventh. "You hear everybody saying, 'you're struggling against a particular team (Chicago),' and the team (Boston) itself is struggling a little bit. It makes my job a little tougher, but I like those situations."

Brewers 10, Twins 4

At Milwaukee, Bryan Clutterbuck's first major league victory was easy thanks to two homers apiece from Glenn Braggs and Paul Molitor and one by Gary Sheffield.

Clutterbuck, who pitched a seven-hitter in his first decision since 1986, did not pitch in a major league game the last two years after undergoing elbow surgery in 1987.

"It feels good, especially after surgery," he said. "I worked hard to come back, but it's easy when you get the runs and the defense is behind you."

Braggs drove in five runs. He hit a two-run homer in the fourth, tripled in a run in the sixth and had a two-run homer in the seventh. Braggs' five RBIs were a career high.

"I just decided I was going up there and be very aggressive, get my pitch and swing as hard as I could," Braggs said. "I hope this is a breaking point and I show what I can do. It's been real tough. I'm good one day and the next day I'm terrible."

Molitor led off the first with a solo homer — the 24th time he has done so — and also hit one in the eighth. Sheffield added a home run in the fourth on the pitch following Braggs' first homer.

Royals 5, Yankees 3

At Kansas City, Bo Jackson hit his fourth home run in six games and major-league-high seventh. Kevin Seitzer also homered and singled in a run, Frank White had an RBI double and Bob Boone added a run-scoring single.

Royals second baseman White was assessed his first fielding error in 171 games on a questionable scoring decision in the eighth. Rickey Henderson, one of the league's swiftest runners, hit a ground ball that White lunged to his right to stop. But he didn't come up with the ball in time to get Henderson and was given the error.

But Henderson was picked off by Bret Saberhagen. Then Steve Sax doubled and, on right fielder Danny Tartabull's fielding error, came all the way home.

Tigers 5, Mariners 2

At Detroit, Frank Tanana pitched six-hit ball for eight innings to snap his 11-game winless streak and Matt Nokes broke a tie in the sixth with a three-run homer.

Tanana, 1-3, struck out five and walked one. He had been 0-7 with four no-decisions since beating the Chicago White Sox 5-4 last Aug. 19. Frank Williams relieved and gave up a hit and a walk before Guillermo Hernandez got the last two outs for his fourth save.

Orioles 8, Angels 1

Jeff Ballard became the first Baltimore pitcher in 25 years to win his first four starts of the season. Ballard gave up six hits in seven innings but left the game with a slight hip strain and Kevin Hickey and Mark Williamson finished.

The last Baltimore pitcher to win his first four starts was Wally Bunker in 1964.

The visiting Orioles, losers of their first 21 games last season, remained atop the American League East. The Orioles supported Ballard with four home runs — by Mickey Tettleton, Jim Traber, Craig Worthington and Steve Finley.

Athletics 3, Blue Jays 1

At Oakland, Storm Davis equalled his career high with nine strikeouts and Carney Lansford drove in two runs as the Athletics extended their winning streak to seven games.

Davis, 2-1, pitched seven innings, gave up six hits and walked two before being replaced by Rick Honeycutt to start the eighth. Dennis Eckersley pitched the final 1 2-3 innings, striking out the side in the ninth, and got his American League-leading seventh save.

Starter John Cerutti, 0-1, took the loss as the Blue Jays dropped their third straight game.

Cavs' Kughn Honored

GREENSBORO (AP) — Virginia's Chris Kughn, who batted .588 with 10 runs scored and 12 runs batted in as the Cavaliers won eight of nine games during the week has been named the Atlantic Coast Conference baseball player of the week.

Kughn, a 6-foot-1, 190-pound outfielder, pounded out 20 hits in 34 at bats during the nine games, including six doubles, one triple, four stolen bases and three game-winning RBIs. In Virginia's three victories against conference opponents, Kughn had six hits in eight at bats, .750, with two doubles, one run scored and seven runs batted in.

On the year, the Lynchburg, Va., junior has 13 doubles, three triples, three home runs and 30 runs batted in. Kughn is currently third in the ACC batting statistics with a .397 average.

Clark Const.....8
Eveready 6

Bill Clark Construction scored four runs in the top of the sixth inning to take an 8-6 victory over Eveready in the opening game of the North State Little League season for each team Tuesday.

Clark took the lead in the first with a pair of runs, then added two more in the second. Eveready came back with a pair in the bottom of the second, then pushed into the lead with four in the fourth, 6-4.

But in the fifth, Clark scored four times to win it. Jeff Alligood singled and moved up on two passed balls. He scored on a hit by Chip Davis. Davis stole second and Jason Bartlett doubled him over. Jeff Smith followed with another double, driving in Bartlett. Smith stole third and scored the final run on a passed ball.

Alligood, Nabeel Baraket and Scotty Selby each had two hits to lead Clark, while Chris Grover had two for Eveready.

Exchange.....6
Wellcome 1

The Exchange took a 6-1 victory over Wellcome in the Tar Heel Little League Tuesday as the two teams opened the 1989 season.

Exchange took the lead with a run in the first, but Wellcome came back with one in the top of the second.

Exchange then pushed over what proved to be the winner in the second. Jason Lipscomb walked as did Darin Miles. Chris Joyner also walked to load the bases and a wild pitch allowed Lipscomb to score for a 2-1 lead.

Exchange added four more in the third to close out the scoring.

World's Fair Plus 50

Back In 1939, The Future Was Dazzling

By Jerry Schwartz
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — In many a dresser drawer across the country, amid the faded snapshots and other keepsakes, there rests a plastic pickle, a souvenir of a splendiferous tomorrow that came and went.

Fifty years ago, in the interlude between the Great Depression and World War II, the pickle's owner had gone to Flushing, Queens to discover a sleek and glittering future had set up camp on 1,216 acres of reclaimed ash heap.

The visitor to the 1939 New York World's Fair came away with visions of televisions and superhighways, of nylon stockings and automatic milking machines, of man-made lightning and aerated bread — all this and a pickle pin, one of six million such souvenirs distributed at the H.J. Heinz pavilion.

They saw wonders like the Walker-Gordon Rotolactor, a revolving platform on which five cows were showered, dried with sterile towels and mechanically milked. They watched the 7-foot-tall Westinghouse robot, Elektro, and his "moto-dog," Sparko. They toured 200 buildings — each of them spectacular — 175 sculptures and 105 murals.

"Everything was unfamiliar — they were dazzled by what the future could be," says Barbara Cohen, author with Steven Heller and Seymour Chwast of "Trylon and Perisphere: The 1939 New York World's Fair."

That was the aim of the fair's organizers — that, and to bring tourist dollars to New York City. The city's business elite had been impressed by the 1933 Century of Progress fair in Chicago. They proposed a fair to mark the 150th anniversary of George Washington's inauguration in New York.

Grover A. Whelan, former police commissioner, head of a distillery and the bow-tied barker-boss of the 1939 World's Fair, said at the time: "By giving a clear and orderly interpretation of our own age, the fair will project the average man into the World of Tomorrow."

The symbols of the fair were two abstract shapes, at once classical and modernistic — the Trylon, a 610-foot spike, and the globular Perisphere, a theater twice the size of Radio City Music Hall which was home to Democracity, a multimedia depiction of the city of the future.

Radio commentator H.V. Kaltenborn narrated the six-minute show: "As day fades into night, each man seeks a home, for here are children, comfort, neighbors, recreation — the good life of a well-planned city."

The same theme was struck at the fair's most popular exhibit, General Motors' Futurama, where 552 moving chairs carried fairgoers past a diorama depicting the United States, circa 1960 — a place where seven-lane, radio-controlled highways directed teardrop-shaped cars at 100 mph.

In the future, the narrator said, cars would be air-conditioned. He was right. He said they would cost as little as $200. He was wrong.

"The land is much greener than it was in 1939...Men love their fields and gardens better and more wisely," Life magazine wrote of Futurama.

Spectators often waited in line two hours to see Futurama. But there was so much to do, and so little time!

They ran to the AT&T building to see the VODER, a speech synthesizer, and to enter the contest for a free long-distance call. They ran to the Dairy World of Tomorrow to meet Elsie the Cow. They ran to the DuPont exhibit to witness the wonders of nylon, Lucite and cellophane, and to RCA to see the first regular broadcasts of television.

The home of tomorrow was highlighted at General Electric, which offered a kitchen with appliances that talked; at Westinghouse, which pitted "Mrs. Drudge," who did dishes the old-fashioned way, against "Mrs. Modern," who used a dishwasher; at Tomorrow Town, a collection of 15 model homes.

The fair was not entirely commercial — 60 nations opened pavilions in Flushing Meadows, including the Soviet Union — but there is no doubt that the World of Tomorrow was a world of salesmanship.

Writer E.B. White hoped to find "the field of honor" at the fair, but found instead that "it was merely Heinz jousting with Beech-Nut — the same old contest on a somewhat larger field, with accommodations for more spectators, and somewhat better facilities all round."

Others found fault with the fair's crowd-pleasing amusement zone, which featured a Parachute Jump and Billy Rose's Aquacade, as well as more tawdry diversions like sideshows and bare-breasted women — offered, of course, as educational exhibits on the lifestyles of Amazons.

The amusements took precedence in 1940, when it became clear that the fair was in trouble. With the advent of World War II, the Soviet pavilion and others closed. The Trylon and Perisphere were in bad repair, temporary structures that were not designed to withstand the weather.

More importantly, the fair was losing money. Most critics argued that the 75-cent admission fee was too high. A full day at the fair for two people, including meals, cost about $7 — a high tariff for the end of the Depression.

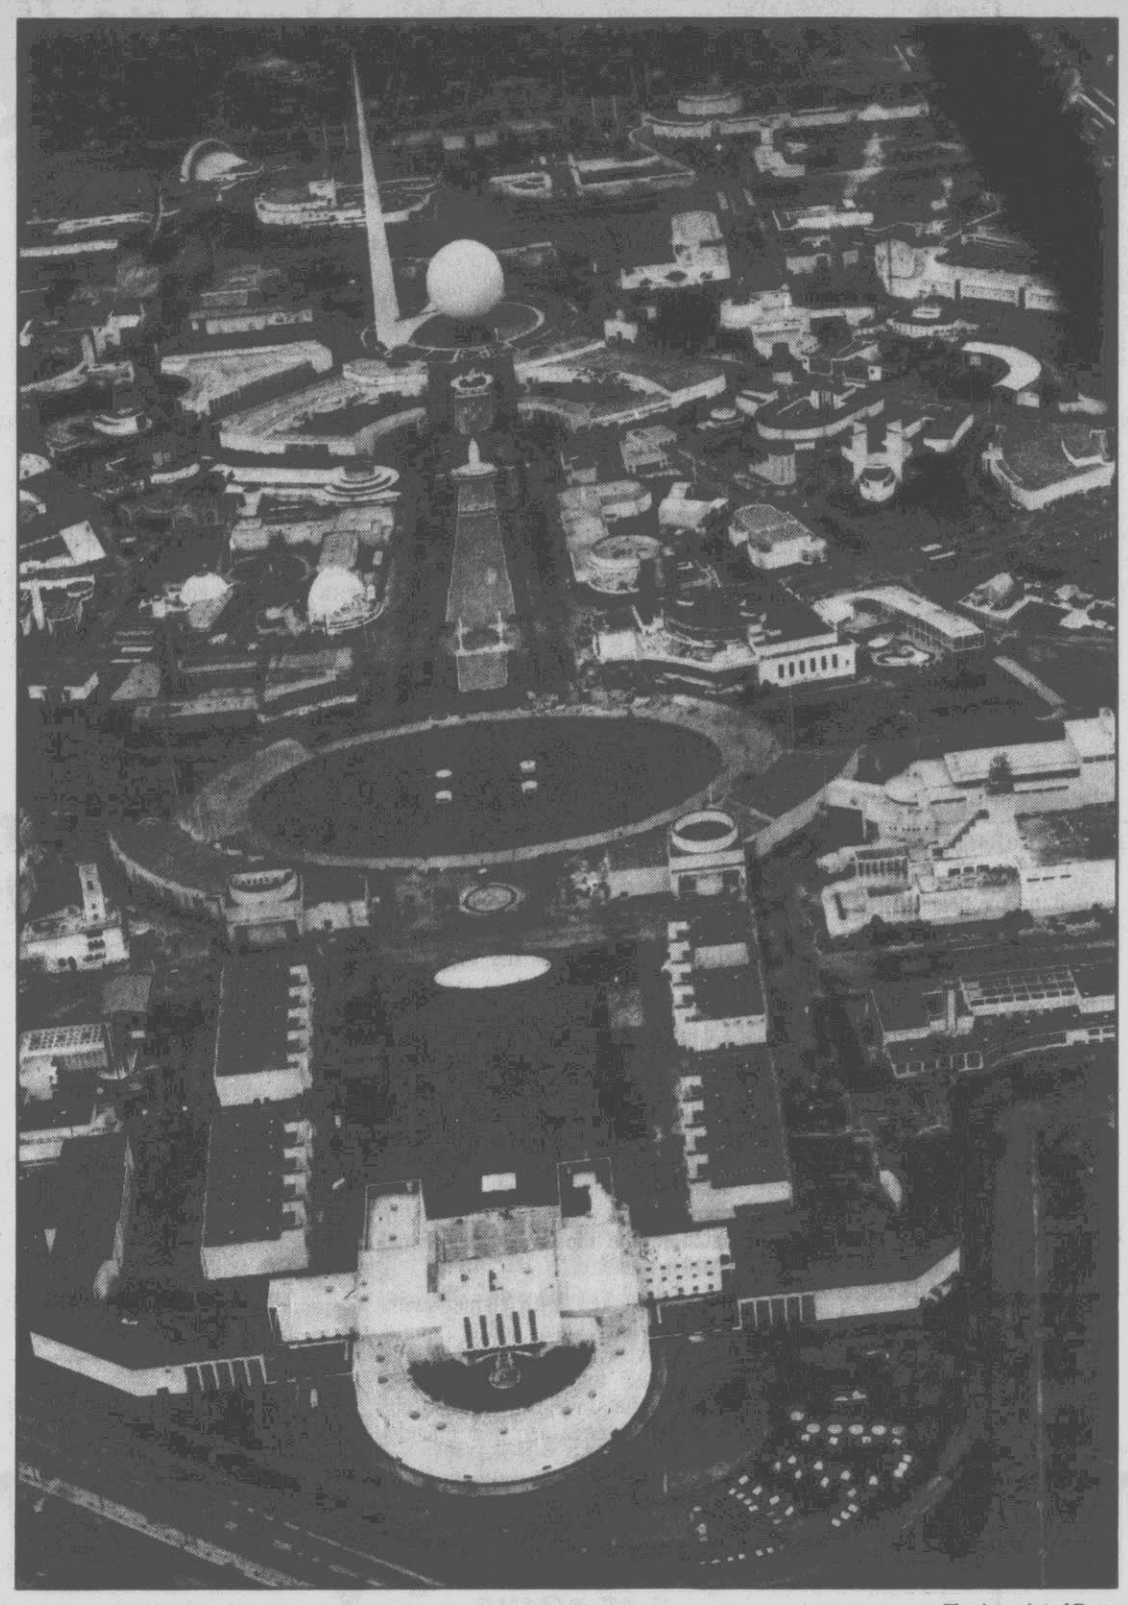

Fair officials expected 50 million visitors in 1939. Attendance fell short of that mark after two years running. The fair lost nearly $19 million.

This did not prevent New York from trying another world's fair at the same spot 25 years later. That fair, too, was a financial fiasco, and it is not recalled with the same intensity and fondness as its predecessor.

"It seemed more tawdry than the 1939 World's Fair," said author Cohen.

The people who attended the 1939 fair were not so world-wise as their children would be. They traveled less, had no television to bombard them with images of an unobtainable good life, had never eaten food of foreign lands.

"It was a simpler time. Truly," Cohen says.

Riders Mount For Greenville Steeplechase

By John Bare
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Break out the riding crop and pop open the bubbly, it's steeplechase time in Greenville.

Carolina National Steeplechase Inc. is bringing one of the greatest of Southern traditions to Greenville this weekend. Along with mint juleps, bluegrass music and seersucker suits, steeplechasing is somewhat of a fixture of the Southern social set.

Saturday's event at the River Road Ranch off N.C. 33 West will include eight races, and gets underway at 1:30 p.m. when the Triangle Hunt reviews its hounds.

Established steeplechase races have long been drawing thousands in Southern Pines, Winston-Salem and Virginia, and there is a Triangle Hunt that rides on fox hunts twice a week, said Joe Chesson, director of Carolina National Steeplechase. Chesson said he selected Greenville to host the group's first event because of the university population and the recent growth in the city.

The race is new and experimental for Greenville, he said, but he's optimistic it will catch on. If so, anybody who is anybody will be attending the annual fall and spring steeplechases Chesson said he plans to schedule.

"We're getting a pretty good response. We've gotten calls from Winston-Salem all the way down to the coast," he said. "If this one is half-way successful, we hope to promote more and even have a bigger one in the fall and spring.

"We've got a lot of room to grow. We're hoping to have a sanctioned race, and that would attract horses from all over the country."

For the National Hunt and Steeplechase Association of New York to sanction a race, there must be at least $40,000 in prize money. The Greenville event is a long way from reaching that level, but Chesson said steeplechases are the hottest thing going in many cities.

In Charlottesville, Va., Chesson said University of Virginia students often do not turn out well for football games, but steeplechase days attract about 20,000 people, with men decked out in tweed and women sporting colorful wide-brimmed hats. Other events, such as Stoneybrook in Southern Pines, attract about 7,000 people, while some of the larger spring races in Virginia attract over 70,000 spectators, Chesson said.

Such events are big economic boosters, said Al Nichols, director of the Pitt-Greenville Convention and Visitors Bureau. A steeplechase that attracts 5,000 visitors would generate about $100,000 for Greenville, he said.

With such a potential windfall, Chesson said Greenville is the perfect setting for a steeplechase race.

The Triangle Hunt opens the day's events by "laying a drag" around the race course. In other words, they'll pull an object around the course that puts down the scent of a fox, the the hounds will be let loose, and the riders will follow.

"It will be just like they were chasing a fox," Chesson said.

While most American horse races are run on dirt, steeplechases take place on grass. The horses run the course, which includes hurdles of shrubbery. There are also "flat" races, which do not include the barriers.

There will be a flat race open to anyone, a flat race for the men and a flat for the ladies. There will also be three comparable races with the hurdles. In addition, there will be pony races for youngsters and a Carolina Hunt Chase, which is a relay race between different "hunts," or riding clubs in the area.

"It's something for every member of the family," Chesson said.

Steeplechases are also a time for the upper crust to toss some money around and the bourgeoise to act rich for a day. A steeplechase is a social outing where people sometimes rent Rolls Royces and hire butlers to pour the champagne and serve the strawberries and cream.

Advance ticket prices for the event range from a $7 general admission pass to a $50 restricted parking pass to the prime $200 reserved rail parking arrangement. With the most expensive package, four people receive admission passes and hospitality passes. The group may drive their car right to the rail near the finish line and tailgate under a grove of trees. The prices may seem steep, but Chesson likened it to joining the Pirates Club, where members may get prize parking, complimentary food and several tickets to an event.

Anyone looking to recoup some of the ticket money may want to create an outlandish hat to wear to the steeplechase. To poke fun at the traditional spring hats women wear, steeplechase-goers often don homemade head wear modeled after a race track or some other racing-related object. There will be a contest at the Greenville steeplechase, with $100 going to the person with the most artistic hat.

However, if the $200 ticket is out of reach, Chesson said a $7 general admission ticket will allow people to park in an adjoining field and walk to the track. There will be plenty of room for everyone to picnic, he said.

For those looking to make it a 24-hour party, there is also a semi-formal affair scheduled for Friday night at the Hilton Inn ballroom in Greenville, starting at 8:30 p.m. Tickets are $20 per person.

Carolina National Steeplechase has an office at 401 W. First St. in Greenville, and anyone interested in tickets or directions may phone Chesson or Terry Driver at 752-4594. In Greenville, tickets are available at East Coast Music and Video, the convention and visitors bureau, Animal House, Hampton Inn, Holiday Inn, Southern Eyes, Phi Kappa Tau fraternity. Tickets may also be purchased at the Irish Pony in Ayden. Ticket prices will rise the day of the event.

Film Set's New Fast Track Is Poetry, Hollywood Style

By Beth Ann Krier
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

LOS ANGELES — Justine Bateman, star of "Family Ties" and the fast-track party circuit, wasn't dancing at Helena's.

She was reading poetry.

Smiling serenely, she recited "Ice," a romantic, confessional poem about a platinum blonde who abandons her fiance at a party where "guests could already hear her packing."

On another night, actor Robert Downey Jr. cracked up an attentive industry crowd with his raunchy satire-erotic fantasy on an alternative scenario for "Gorillas in the Mist."

And recently, Katey Sagal, "Married ... With Children's" Spandex queen and mom, instructed her listeners that "we can never be all things to all people, but we can be all things to ourselves. Just for the fun of it."

It is poetry, Hollywood style. And since last October, it has been served up weekly at Helena's, the private supper club in Los Angeles known for its elite, New Hollywood clientele.

Here under the fuchsia lights each Wednesday night, entertainers such as Judd Nelson, Ed Begley Jr., Michael Des Barres, Harry Dean Stanton, Carl Reiner, Michael J. Pollard, Michael O'Keefe , Patti D'Arbanville and others have read their own work or that of established poets.

Their performances have been so well-received that other actors have agreed to read as well — Melanie Griffith, Don Johnson, Charlie Sheen, Ally Sheedy, Rebecca De Mornay, Alfre Woodard, Rutger Hauer, Howard Hesseman and David Carradine among them.

As poetry, record producer Harvey Kubernik describes the weekly phenomenon: "New York had the beat poets. L.A. has the SAG (Screen Actors Guild) poets."

What's more, serious literary figures have occasionally come by to share the upscale spotlight and listen at tables graced with Dendrobium orchids.

Says Hubert Selby Jr., author of "Last Exit to Brooklyn" who has read several times at Helena's: "The thing is, everybody has a lot of fun. Most of the time, poetry readings are in less than hospitable surroundings. This makes it available to people rather than keeping it in some academic classroom."

And Los Angeles poet Wanda Coleman, a medical transcriber who has won an Emmy for soap-opera writing and a Guggenheim fellowship for her poetry, recently gave such an intensely moving reading of her work that a producer in the audience later called to offer her an acting job.

Audiences typically hear about 10 poets — roughly a 50-50 mix between actors and non-actors — performing for about seven minutes each. As Kubernik puts it, "Some of the stuff's like radiation. You get five- to 10-minute jolts."

Observers of the Los Angeles poetry scene say that the weekly experiment at Helena's is unprecedented. Though a theme usually is assigned to each evening's presentations ("Ecstasy" and "All Dressed Up With No Place to Go" were explored recently), an abundant mix of styles and subjects has been addressed by the readers. And typically, plenty of uncensored verse on the unglamorous side of show business.

Poet/producer Eve Brandstein, actor/poet Michael Lally set up star-studded poetry readings

"You get your share of the 'I've blown my audition' poems," says actor Michael O'Keefe, who recently read a freshly written commentary on "actresses as female impersonators," a poem he thought sure would insult the actresses in the crowd.

O'Keefe had never performed the poem before, but it was received with wild applause and all-too-knowing laughter.

Though some of the more established poets say they would never risk reading a new, untested work before such a hip, demanding crowd, many of the actor-poets first expose their poetry to the public at Helena's.

Sagal, for instance, has long been a songwriter but only lately began writing and performing her poetry at the club. She claims she is not ready to have one of her poems published in a newspaper, but did not mind performing them before her peers. "It's a risky thing to do," she acknowledges. "But everybody's

Rug Is Portable Project

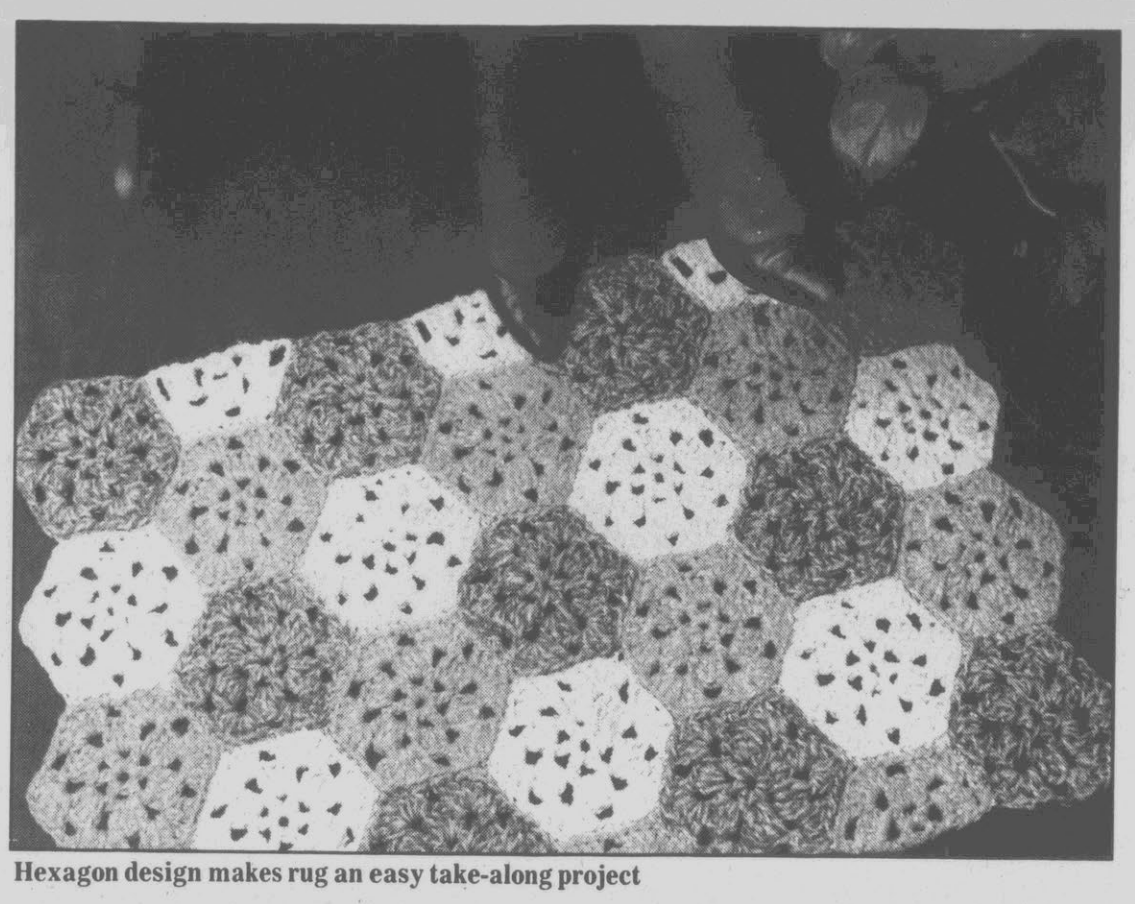

Looking for a fast and easy "take-along" project? The six-inch hexagons in this attractive crocheted rug are very portable, so you can work on it wherever you go.

Polyester craft cord is used in three different shades to create an interesting tweed effect in the hexagons. Each is made separately and then sewn together to form a sturdy, machine-washable, 20-by-31-inch rug — great for just about any room in your home. Double strands are used throughout, so the rug works up quickl.

To obtain directions for making the Americana Crochet Rug, send your request for Leaflet No. Z-042389 with $2 and a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope to: Pat Trexler Crafts, "The Daily Reflector," P.O. Box 419148, Kansas City, Mo. 64141.

Or you may order Kit No. C-042389 by sending a check or money order for $14.95 to Pat Trexler Crafts at the same address. The kit price includes shipping charges, full instuctions and craft cord in your choice of the following colors: cream and shades or blue, or cream and shades of rust.

Portable crochet, take-along crochet, on-the-go crochet, granny squares. All of these terms — and probably many more — refer to a type of crochet that is extremely popular. The common denominator to all are small geometric shapes make separately and then joined to create a variety of useful items.

Hexagon design makes rug an easy take-along project

In years gone by, with small hooks and fine white or ecru cotten yarn, our ancestors created elegant, lacy tablecloths and bedspreads. With heavier yarns and larger hooks they made cozy, warm afghans.

Why the renewed popularity among today's crocheters? It's my bet that it's because take-along projects allow anyone to fulfill his or her creative urges at off moments snatched from busy schedules. Granny squares are used for clothing and for personal accessories as well as for decorator items. Finally, most projects of this sort are easy on the budget, often making use of leftover yarns.

If you would like to try your hand at making the hexagon shapes used in the Americana Rug, do so with any yarn and hook you have handy. (Note: the beginning chain-3 always counts as 1 double crochet.) To begin, chain 6 and join with a slip stitch to form a ring.

Round 1: Step 1, chain 3; Step 2, work 1 double crochet into the ring and chain 2. Repeat Step 2 four more times. Join with a slip stitch in the top of the beginning chain-3.

Round 2: Step 1, slip stitch in the first space; Step 2, chain 3 and work 3 double crochets in the same space. This will give you 4 double crochets, counting the chain-3 make at the beginning of Step 2. Step 3, chain 2, work 4 double crochets in next chain-2 space. Repeat Step 3 four more times (5 times in all). There will be 6 groups of 4 double crochets. Step 4, chain 2 and join with a slip stitch in the top of the beginning chain-3.

Round 3: Step 1, chain 3 and work 2 double crochets in the last space worked in the previous round. Step 2, chain 2; in the next space, work 3 double crochets, chain 1, 3 double crochets. Repeat Step 2 four more times. End with chain 2 and work 3 double crochets in first space of round. Chain 1 and join with a slip stitch in the top of the beginning chain-3. Fasten off.

When worked with lighter with lighter-weight yarn and/or single strands, your finished hexagon will be smaller than the 6-inch ones shown in the American Rug, but this will allow you to see how quickly they can be made.

Because this pattern stitch has so many uses, I suggest you clip and file this column for future use.

Rhode Island Transplant Despises 'Foreign Accent'

Dear Abby

Abigail Van Buren

Dear Abby: After much deliberation, I have decided to write to you for help.

I was born in Rhode Island and lived there until a few years ago when I moved to Maryland. The problem: I have a "New England" accent, and am constantly coming into contact with people who bring it up. It's one thing to comment on an accent and quite another to degrade it.

I work in a personnel office and must talk to many people. I cannot tell you what I go through! One person — an applicant from Guam — has called several times. The last time he asked to speak to the lady with the "foreign accent"!

One lady asked me where I was from because, she said, "It is obvious that you are not an American."

I have an accent. There is no doubt about that. I will go so far as to say that some people do not find a Midwestern accent very pleasant, but to call attention to it is rude.

One man asked me where I was from, and when I said, "Rhode Island," he said, "Too bad." Nothing else.

We now have another woman in our office who has an accent. She's from Alabama. Although she has not been called a foreigner, she has been told that she talks funny.

Please give me a snappy retort that will put these rude people in their place. Thank you. — A "Foreigner" From Rhode Island

Dear "Foreigner": You don't need a snappy retort. You need to change your attitude. When people comment about your accent, don't take it as a putdown. They are probably just being friendly and trying to engage you in conversation. However, if it really bothers you, enroll in a speech class.

Dear Abby: Your advice about washing hands after going to the bathroom was all wrong. It's more important to scrub them before.

Better yet, both before and after, but especially before. Your genitals may be the cleanest part of your body bacteriologically; your hands are the dirtiest.

When I was a straphanger commuter in New York City, the first thing I did after arriving to my office was to scrub away other people's germs. — Miller Swaney, Spring Hill, Fla.

If you would like to write to Abby, send your letter to Abigail Van Buren, P.O. Box 69440, Los Angeles, CA. 90069. For a personal, non-published reply, enclose a self-addressed stamped envelope.

Louisiana Jazz And Heritage Festival Observes 20th Year

By Mary Foster
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW ORLEANS — All you need for the annual Louisiana Jazz and Heritage Festival is a good set of ears, some comfortable clothes and lots of napkins to wipe the grease from your lips.

The festival launches its 20th anniversary this month with a two-week, $3 million celebration featuring 3,000 musicians and tons of good food.

"I honestly think the New Orleans festival is not only the largest but the most important in the world," said George Wein, the producer who founded the New Orleans event and helped launch others, including the famed Newport Jazz Festival.

"Lots of big name artists come to the Jazz Fest and hide themselves in the crowd so they can enjoy it."

The formula for success has been fine-tuned since that first 1969 festival in Congo Square off Rampart Street, and this year's event, scheduled April 28 through May 7, will look a lot like the one last year.

"It's been so successful that we didn't see any reason to change it," said Anna Zimmerman, spokeswoman for the festival.

"We're always looking for ways to make things work better, but we looked into the archives about when it started and it's basically the same — it's just bigger. ... We're expecting 300,000 and we'll be happy with that."

The festival is really two events — a series of evening jazz concerts and a pair of weekend heritage fairs with open-air stages surrounded by food and crafts.

This year's concerts feature Wynton Marsalis, Miles Davis, George Benson, Jimmy Buffett, Al Green and Santana.

Some of their performances will be in a new riverside tent on the banks of the Mississippi River — the most conspicuous change in the way the festival is staged this year.

In the past, nightly riverboat concerts aboard the President were an integral part of the program, but the owners moved the old paddlewheeler to a new station at St. Louis, leaving festival organizers to find a new forum.

They resorted to a big tent, which will have more seats, better views and — they hope — better acoustics than the boat.

The weekend concerts will be held at the Fair Grounds, the nation's second oldest horse race track. Eleven performing areas in stages, tents and gazebos, each strategically positioned to cut down on overlapping sound, will be set up on the infield inside the dirt track.

The schedule calls for continuous music from midday to dark — Cajun, country and western, rhythm and blues and, of course, lots of jazz.

"The heritage of the area includes a large variety of music," said Wein. "People can choose the type of music they want."

Performers at the Fair Grounds range from dozens of local favorites to some of the stars of evening concerts, plus such drawing cards as Fats Domino, Robert Cray, Ricky Skaggs, Pete Fountain, Rita Coolidge, the Neville Brothers, Pete Seeger, Bonnie Raitt and Irma Thomas.

"You just put on your cutoffs and your T-shirt and join in," said Thomas, who performs April 30. "It's great — the music and the food. All you need is some money and your Rolaids because you always eat too much." Food booths will feature local samplers to exotic imports: crawfish, alligator, goat, oyster, shrimp, chicken, and red beans and rice.

Organizers counted 124 food dishes on the menu this year. Their only estimate on volume came from one of the festival sponsors, who sold 9,000 pounds of rice in the two weekends last year.

"Everyone has a Louisiana taste," said Sonny Vaucresson who serves up Cajun and Creole sausages. "Every year we get more people trying them. We just dish it up and watch them walk away happy."

"We sure do cook it up," said Joseph McDermott, in charge of the Second Mount Triumph Missionary Baptist Church food booth. The church sells $2 and $4 portions of fried chicken and potato salad, which McDermott describes as "just good old home style cooking."

Crafts from Louisiana's many cultures are also on sale in long lines of tents: handmade jewelry, Indian pottery, Mardi Gras masks, Acadian accordians, African jewelry, quilts and a variety of folk arts.

"If you don't enjoy it ... if you don't enjoy New Orleans and the festival, then you don't enjoy living," said Wein.

Students Like Big School, Small Classes

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ANN ARBOR, Mich. — Michael Corrigan heard the horror stories in high school: Attend a large university and you'll be just a number.

Still, Corrigan had his heart set on the University of Michigan, with a main campus enrollment of about 35,000. "I wasn't scared about the size of the university so much as I didn't want to not be able to see my teacher when I wanted to if I was having a problem or trouble with my work."

Then he found out he could have it both ways.

Corrigan signed up for The Pilot Program, a "living-learning community" that offers a personal approach to education through small classes taught by instructors who are resident advisers in the dormitory where the students live.

The 26-year-old program, emulated at other schools, draws freshmen and sophomores from all majors and cultural backgrounds. Because of its size — 400 students — they also must take some courses with the rest of the population.

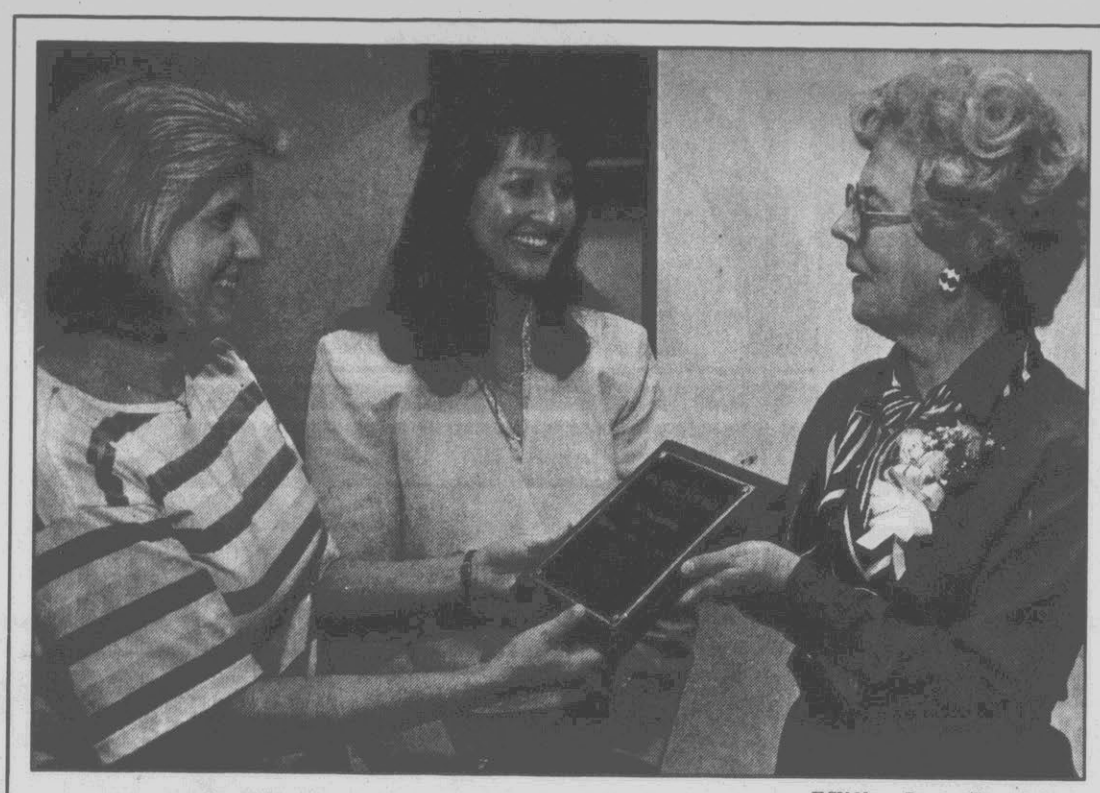

"People who studied education in the '60s thought a lot about the potential for combining academic life with the rest of life," said director Richard Meisler, known in the academic community for his book, "Trying Freedom: A Case for Liberating Education."

Pilot co-founder Donald R. Brown, now director of Michigan's Center for Research on Learning and Teaching, said the living-learning concept originated with monasteries, and at the college level with Oxford-Cambridge. And while many small schools operated with that theory in mind, the University of Michigan had no large, public university to turn to for a model.

"None of the specific details were simply lifted, they were really invented," he said, adding that the school's Residential College, founded in 1967, evolved simultaneously. That program, which also survives, is a four-year program which operates as a full college with its own faculty.

Out-of-classroom contact between students and instructors can be a positive factor in student performance, said Russell Edgerton, president of the American Association for Higher Education.

Students would benefit more if tenured professors could participate, Edgerton said, "But the costs are just astronomical. That's why students pay a lot more to attend small, liberal arts colleges."

Refinish Wooden Floor With Creativity, Paint

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Refinish a worn wooden floor with an artful paint job.

With a steady hand, masking tape, stencils and patience, Traditional Home magazine says ambitious homeowners can create checks, stripes or hearts. Mask off squares or strips, or use ready-made stencils for hearts and other simple shapes.

With a bit more skill and practice, design and cut original stencils. Intricate patterns, however, are best left to the pros.

— Prepare the floor: Remove any old wax with wax remover and sand the floor. (Unless the floor is in very good shape, rent a floor sander or hire a pro for this job.) If sanding to the bare wood, seal with a coat of thinned oil-based primer.

— Protect handiwork: Wait for 24 hours, then protect the design with at least three coats of low-luster or shiny polyurethane varnish. Let the floor dry 24 hours between coats.

Before Saying Their Vows, Couple Should Investigate The Laws Surrounding Marriage

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Do law and marriage go together as much as love and marriage?

Yes, because marriage is a contract — not only between two people but between the couple and the larger society, says Cele Lalli.

"It's not unromantic to learn all you can about the laws that affect marriage," says Lalli, editor of Modern Bride magazine. "After all, we love with the head as well as the heart."

For example, marriage is not an entirely private matter between two people. Marriage is a contract between two people and the government, since the legal status of the union can't be altered without the consent of the state. The landmark Supreme Court decision explains: "It is an institution in whose maintenance and purity the public is deeply interested. For it is the foundation of the family and society, without which there would be neither civilization nor progress."

Don't for a minute believe that a woman has to take her husband's name to ensure the legitimacy of their children. Assuming the husband's name is a custom in the United States, not a law. If a bride retains her maiden name, neither the child's legitimacy nor birth certificate will be affected since the mother's maiden name appears on this in all cases. However, some states may request clarification if the child is not to carry the father's name.

Stars Enjoy Poetry Readings

It's a new experience for many in the audience, too.

"For a lot of people here, this is their first exposure to serious poetry — they're finding it can be entertaining. It can make you laugh or cry. Some of the people in this room are making six figures a year, performing or directing or producing," says Kubernik, a long-time participant in Los Angeles' poetry scene.

"And they're hearing people who grew up in South Central L.A., like Wanda Coleman, who's been a welfare mother and still has to work a day job. ... You see glimpses of light here you didn't know existed. I felt the room lift a bunch of times. And none of the stuff was moon-June poetry."

Few poems are greeted with silence, demure applause or contemplative "hmmmmms." The folks here are demonstrative whether they are pleased (whistling, barking and clapping) or not (booing, hissing and shouting).

Observes poet-actor Michael Lally, who organizes the weekly events with poet-producer Eve Brandstein: "The amazing thing is that a room full of mostly cynical Hollywood people spontaneously cries or bursts into applause or sometimes boos."

One poet, whose work resembled a letter to Penthouse's Forum sprinkled with bits of animal torture, was not only booed but pelted with cries of "No, no, no" and "Sit down."

Coleman declines to characterize the quality of the actors' poems, but she applauds their performances. "When they're actors, they deliver," she says. "They really deliver, baby!"

Meanwhile, don't expect the actors who read at Helena's to forsake the celluloid trenches for the poetic life anytime soon.

Says O'Keefe, who's appeared in "Ironweed" and "Caddyshack": "My identity will always be as an actor, but it's nice to have something else. I like being perceived as a poet because most actors are perceived as having the IQ's of their bowling scores — not very good bowling scores, I might add."

Opening lead: King of ♠

At about half the tables in the event, West overcalled with one spade. That's not a call we endorse, since it has no preemptive value and West is likely to be on opening lead in any event. And it had a strange repercussion in the play.

Against four hearts West led the king of spades. Declarer grabbed dummy's ace, cashed two rounds of trumps and then played off the high clubs. Although that suit did not split evenly, the defender with the long trump also held the fourth club, so declarer was able to ruff a club on the table. He exited with a diamond, and in the fullness of time he regained the lead with a ruff to draw the last trump and claim his contract, losing only two spades and a diamond.

Where West did not overcall, East boldly interjected a lead-directing bid of two diamonds. Now, the lead against four hearts was ace and another diamond. Declarer ruffed and again drew two rounds of trumps before cashing the high clubs and trumping a club. But now he had no way to get to his hand to draw the last trump. As soon as East gained the lead he played diamonds, so West's jack of trumps was promoted to the setting trick.

Despite the lead of the ace of diamonds, one East-West pair failed to get their trump promotion and the contract succeeded. All this proves is that even world championship competitors have feet of clay.

The Lost Doll

By April Yarrell

Once upon a time there was a girl named Caludia. She had a doll named Mary. Caludia took this doll everywhere. One day she was going to a friend's house. When it was time to go, she made a mistake and left the doll. That night she was going to put the doll away but she could not find it. Her mother told her to go to sleep and look some more in the morning. That night she didn't sleep a bit. She usually slept like a baby.

The next morning Caludia looked everywhere in the house and even in the car. For a whole week she looked for the doll. Then she remembered about her friend. So she called and asked if it was there but it was not there. Her friend took it over to her aunt's house. So she asked where her aunt lived. Caludia was pretty upset about that. But she would do anything and go anywhere to get her doll back. Caludia went to her friend's aunt's house and got her doll.

She was happier than she was ever before. That whole thing taught her a good lesson---not to take her stuff everywhere she went. That night she slept with her doll. Caludia promised that she would never lose her doll again.

April Yarrell, 8, a student at Stokes Elementary School wins this week's writing contest.

Little Sue

By Sam Simmons and Mike Powell

Up to the line stepped Mighty Jim,
As slender as slender, and as slim as slim.

Meekly staring across the net
Was Little Sue Ambersett.

And looked around for a place to stand.

The ball zinged into the net,

Little Sue cracked a smile
That probably stretched for a mile.
Sue prepared to serve,

And Sue prepared for attack.
Sue hit the ball in mid-air,
Jim ducked as it parted his hair.

As Jim grabbed his ankle in sudden pain.

The Magic Mitten

On a cold day, I picked up a mitten. I put it on. It was magic. I turned into a frog. I wasn't an ordinary frog. I could ride a skateboard. I rode the skateboard home and scared my dad. He said, "You're grounded!"

The frog said, "Ribbit!" I turned into a human being. I threw the mitten away. I didn't like being a frog.

One night I heard a loud noise outside my house. I got up and looked out the window to see if anyone was there. I remembered that my mother had parked her car next to her flower tree. The next morning we found out what the loud noise was. One of her flower pots had fallen out of the tree.

Federal Facts

The Capital

After gaining independence from the British, the new United States faced many problems. Included was the establishment of a form of government, a system of economics and a capital.

Both the southern and the northern states desired to have the capital placed in their area. Finally, through compromise, a sight along the Potomac River was selected. George Washington was to choose the exact location and the land was to become a part of the federal government and would not belong to any one state. The states of Maryland and Virginia turned over land to the federal government--this was to become Washington, D.C. Because the capital did not grow as fast as first invisioned, Virginia later had her land returned.

A French engineer Pierre Charles L'Enfant made the original plans for the layout of the new capital. L'Enfant has been called the first modern planner of cities even though he had been a military engineer during the American Revolution. He designed wide streets, parks and locations for public buildings. Even though he did not stay on the project until the end, his design was followed for Washington, D.C. In 1792, L'Enfant and George Washington had a misunderstanding and L'Enfant was released from his position. Later in his life, L'Enfant tried to claim money was owed him for the work he had done in the design of the city. He is buried in Arlington Cemetary.

The city was first used as a capital in 1800 after the government was moved form Philadelphia. Today Washington, D.C. has over 640,000 residents within the city with more than 3 million in the entire metropolitan area. It is noted for government offices, memorials to presidents, the Kennedy Center for Performing Arts, the Library of Congress, the Smithsonian Institution, the Washington Zoo, and the Freer Gallery of Art. In addition, there are many other sites and memorials in the town including one of the most recent---the Viet Nam Memorial Wall.

Before 1964, residents of Washington, D.C. could not vote for president. And recently there has been a suggestion to make the District of Columbia a state called New Columbia. The city of Washington, D.C. is recognized throughout the world as the center of government for the United States.

WASHINGTON — Consumers today have to be smarter than ever. Airlines go on strike and leave travelers stranded. Cars are recalled. Even apples, symbol of mom and good health, were tarnished recently by worry about too many pesticides in the orchards.

The National Institute of Environmental Health Sciences convened a two-day conference last fall to examine the health risks of eating chemically contaminated seafood. The National Academy of Sciences recently began a two-year study of the quality of aquatic food sources.

Like the canary that warns miners about deadly gases, fish and shellfish are good barometers of the chemical contaminants present in rivers, lakes, bays and oceans.

"It has taken about 25 years of research, but it has turned out to be pretty convincing that fish do, in many instances, serve as indicators of carcinogens in the environment," said Clyde Dawe, a physician and researcher at Harvard Medical School who in 1963 reported finding liver tumors in fish, a variety of suckers in Deep Creek, Md.

Since then, epidemics of liver tumors have been documented in about 15 species of fish in 35 to 50 different sites, according to John D. Harshbarger, director of the Smithsonian Institution's Registry of Tumors in Lower Animals.

And in a progress report issued last November, the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, which monitors both sediment off the U.S. coast and the levels of contaminants in various aquatic creatures, reported that the "highest concentrations for any particular contaminant have been at the 20 sites near Boston, New York, San Diego, Los Angeles or Seattle." Among the contaminants found were chlorinated pesticides, polychlorinated biphenyls (PCBs), polyaromatic hydrocarbons (PAHs) and 12 trace elements.

Defining exactly what risk that poses for humans is about as tricky as pinning down the story about the fish that got away. "Most people in the risk-assessment business agree on one thing," said Dawe. "They feel very uncertain about it."

Searches of the scientific literature aren't much help either. "There's no consistent (conclusion) whether eating fish is good or bad for you," said David Ozonoff, chief of the environmental-health section at the Boston University School of Public Health.

There are, however, studies that show a behavioral effect on newborns whose mothers ate contaminated fish during pregnancy. In a study of 313 infants born to mothers who ate Lake Michigan fish contaminated with PCBs two to three times a month during their pregnancy, researchers found that these infants weighed 200 to 250 grams (seven to nine ounces) less at birth. At five months, the babies who had been exposed to PCBs showed some developmental delays when compared to babies whose mothers did not eat contaminated fish. At seven months, the exposed babies scored more poorly on memory recognition tests.

But compared with cigarette smoking, drinking excess alcohol, not wearing a seat belt and not eating a well-balanced diet, consuming contaminated fish is a "much smaller risk," said Michael Jacobson, director of the consumer group, Center for Science in the Public Interest. "It's good to try to avoid some of these things in your diet," he said. "But one could probably have a far greater effect by writing to (legislators) and urging them to do something than by struggling to avoid all the pesticides and contaminants in food."

Eating fish has numerous nutritional benefits. Fish are low in calories, saturated fat and — except for shellfish — cholesterol. They have high levels of omega-3 fatty acids, substances that heart researchers are investigating for their possible protective powers against stroke and heart disease.

But the concern about fish and shellfish comes from a lack of adequate and regular inspection and the difficulty of knowing exactly where fish or seafood that appears at the market or on a restaurant menu was caught.

Most of the fish consumed in the United States — some 92 percent — is caught three miles or more from shore, said Lee Wettig, executive vice president of the National Fisheries Institute, an industry group. That distance from close-in coastal waters and direct pollution sources offers protection, he said. "And that's not to assume that the other 8 percent coming from within the three-mile limit would be bad."

The worry about seafood, of course, is an old fish tale. For millennia, orthodox Jews have been prohibited from eating shellfish because the organisms were recognized as a potential source of disease. Only in modern times has it been identified as hepatitis. Decades before George Bush tweaked Michael Dukakis about Boston Harbor, fishing for winter flounder there was off limits. The reason: polluted waters. Yet commercial lobstering continues in the harbor.

When it comes to chemical contaminants, shellfish are the most worrisome. "It's related to the ability of the shellfish to metabolize the compounds," explained Usha Varanasi, director of the environmental-conservation division of NOAA's fisheries service. Fish exposed to runoffs of pesticides and hydrocarbons convert these contaminants to other compounds. They do this in the liver, which also concentrates high amounts of these toxins.

But shellfish are able to concentrate PCBs even more highly — sometimes 10 times higher — than the levels in fish. The risk is also greater with shellfish because the whole organism is sometimes consumed.

The effects of eating contaminated fish or shellfish can last a long time. W.R. Swain, a Dutch researcher, made some calculations of how PCBs could be transmitted from generation to generation. Starting with a 20-year-old woman who eats fish contaminated with PCBs and gives birth to a daughter, Swain reported in the journal Aquatic Toxicology that it would take five generations for the woman's initial PCB levels to pass out of the family — provided, that is, no more contaminated fish is eaten.

"There's a big black hole of ignorance about this," said Varanasi. "We just don't have all the information."

In the meantime, researchers at the Woods Hole Oceanographic Institution are searching for more sensitive tests that would allow sample loads of fish to be screened as they are hauled aboard.

But no one is advising that people avoid fish. "People should not be so scared that they stop eating fish," said Dawe. "The real point is that they should be selective in buying it."

Q: Is there any cholesterol in dried eggs? E.S., Greenville

A: If you buy a powdered egg, it still has cholesterol. But, there are both frozen and powdered egg substitutes that have no cholesterol. The egg substitutes may be made mostly from egg whites. Some brands of dried egg substitutes also have leavening agents in them. Read the ingredient list. Some brands of powdered egg substitutes that have little or no cholesterol are Egg Magic and Egg Replacer. But, you don't have to buy egg substitutes to cut your cholesterol from your eggs. You can use two egg whites for every whole egg in most recipes. For example, some cake and cookie recipes call for two eggs, just use one whole egg and two egg whites. If you do it that way, the flavor and moistness given to the cake or cookies by the yolk will be there. Another way to use eggs is to chop just the hard cooked egg white for egg salad sandwich. You could use egg whites as topping for salads and get flavor and protein. Or, simply use a medium egg instead of a large egg. A medium egg may have 160-180 mg cholesterol compared to 210-220 mg cholesterol in a large or extra large egg. Yes, I said 210-220 mg cholesterol per large egg. For those of you who memorize cholesterol numbers, you'll realize that it is lower than the figures given in most books! Why? eggs have recently been reanalyzed for their cholesterol content. The egg producers paid for this work, done under the guidelines and supervision of the U.S. Department of Agriculture and found today's eggs to have less dietary cholesterol than eggs tested in the past. This all started when some independent egg producers had their own eggs tested and found them to be lower in cholesterol than the books said. So, they started advertising "lower cholesterol eggs". That prompted the whole egg industry to pay for the study of eggs. It's the way the system works. Manufacturers and producers must pay for the nutrient analysis of their foods. Generally, they are done in independent laboratories and then submitted for review to the appropriate governmental agency. The egg yolk is still a high cholesterol food and should be used in moderation by those on a cholesterol lowering diet. The egg white is a low fat, high protein food that can be used freely. But also remember, if you are trying to lower your blood cholesterol, reducing your total fat intake is probably the most important dietary change to make.

Celery A Wonderful, Inexpensive Snack Brimming With Versatility

By Earl Aronson
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BELLE GLADE, Fla. — Celery is in the same plant family as carrots and parsley. The characteristic flavor and odor of this family is due to the presence of volatile oils in the stems, leaves and seeds. The plant originated in the Mediterranean.

Celery earned a place in salads in the mid-12th century when it was determined that the strong flavor could be reduced by growing the plants in late summer or early fall, then keeping them into winter.

The earliest record of its cultivation as a food plant was in France in 1623, when it was used primarily as a flavoring herb in broths and soups.

Celery-growing as an industry in the United States probably began about 1880. One farm in central Florida grows one of the largest stands of celery in the world: 3,250 acres at Belle Glade near Lake Okeechobee.

Production averages about 33,000 celery plants per acre, according to farm manager Richard Treadway. The same farmers, A. Duda & Sons, raise hundreds more acres of spring and fall celery elsewhere in Florida, as well as in California and Texas.

The Duda family, which migrated from Czechoslovakia, began with 4 acres in Florida in 1912. The family had its first successful commercial celery crop in 1926. The firm, with four generations of the family now involved, also raises large acreages of salad vegetables, corn, sugar cane and carrots. A. Duda & Sons has headquarters in Oveida, Fla.

George Talbott, general manager of the Florida Celery Committee, says celery is rich in vitamins A and C, plus minerals, with only 3 calories for a small inner rib, or petiole. (A stalk is an entire plant.)

Consumers should look for crispness, with the petioles brittle enough to snap easily.

He offers these tips:

• Pressure cook celery 1 or 2 minutes for immediate use.

• Add diced celery to chicken, lamb and beef stews.

• To pep up canned vegetables, cut celery in diagonal slices, using 1 cup per can of vegetables. Drain liquid from vegetables into a saucepan, add celery, and boil for 5 minutes. Add drained canned vegetables, bring to a boiling point, and serve.

• Celery can make an attractive centerpiece for the table. Wash, then drain, keeping leaves intact; use the celery leaves as a garnish.

• Use a stalk or rib of celery to scrape the sides of a blender.

TUNA CELERY HERO

2 tsps. lemon juice
¾ tsp. salt
¼ tsp. ground black pepper
3 cups thinly sliced celery
Two 6- or 7-oz. cans tuna, drained and flaked
½ cup minced onion
½ cup roasted peanuts or toasted slivered almonds
¼ cup diced pimiento
6 individual hero rolls
Lettuce leaves
Sliced tomatoes

In a large bowl, thoroughly combine mayonnaise, lemon juice, salt and black pepper. Add celery, tuna, onion, nuts and pimiento. Toss lightly. Cut rolls in half lengthwise. Arrange lettuce and tomatoes on lower halves. Spoon tuna celery salad over tomatoes. Cover with tops of rolls. Yield: 6 servings.

CRUNCHY CELERY SLAW

4 cups thinly sliced celery
½ cup coarsely shredded carrots
½ cup raisins
½ cup coarsely chopped walnuts
⅓ cup salad oil
2 tbsps. cider vinegar
2 tsps. salt
½ tsp. ground white pepper
⅔ cup plain yogurt

In a large bowl combine celery with carrots, raisins and walnuts. Set aside. Blend together oil, vinegar, salt and pepper. Stir in yogurt. Pour over celery mixture. Toss lightly. Serve on lettuce leaves, if desired. Yield: 8 servings.

CELERY SUKIYAKI

3 tbsps. salad oil
3 cups celery, sliced diagonally
2 small onions, sliced and separated into rings
1 beef bouillon cube
¾ cup boiling water
1 cup water chestnuts, sliced
5 tbsps. soy sauce
1½ tsps. ground ginger
½ tsp. ground black pepper

Cut steak into thin diagonal slices. (For easier slicing, partially freeze first.) In large skillet, heat 2 tablespoons oil. Add steak strips, a few at a time, and brown on both sides. Remove and set aside. Add celery and onion to skillet. Saute for 3 minutes in 1 tablespoon oil. Dissolve bouillon cube in water. Add to skillet along with water chestnuts, soy sauce, ginger and black pepper. Stir well. Add browned steak; spoon juice over steak. Cover and simmer for 10 minutes or until steak and vegetables are fork tender. Serve over rice. Serves 6.

Celebrate Spring With Fresh, Crisp Asparagus

By Jonathan Susskind
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

On asparagus, there are two schools of thought.

There is Dick Bothwell, the late humor columnist for the St. Petersburg (Fla.) Times, whose acquaintance I was pleased to make some years ago but who was, in this instance, flat-out wrong.

Bothwell, to put it mildly, abhorred asparagus, once opining that it is "a flaccid, putrid-green, fibrous stick which had no place in polite society, let alone a place in a barbaric one."

And then there are most of the rest of us, who welcome this vegetative harbinger of spring with the same joy reserved for cherry blossoms and robins.

While asparagus is always available canned or frozen, the fresh, tight-tipped spears of the spring are the most acclaimed.

A member of the lily family, the asparagus is related to the leek and onion, but you would never guess that if you saw the fernlike fronds of wild plants bobbing in summer breezes.

European custom and traditional wisdom dictate that the best and most tender asparagus is thin as a pencil. "That traditional wisdom is 180 degrees off," said Mike Harker, manager of the Washington Asparagus Growers Association. "The larger spears are going to be more tender than the smaller spears" because fat spears come from the youngest plants, he said.

"Think in terms of vigor. For instance, if you take an apple or a peach tree, when it's 5, 6, 7 years old, it doesn't produce a lot of fruit but the fruit is very large and very nice. When the tree is 30 years old, it produces a lot of fruits but they tend to be smaller. It's the same with asparagus," he said.

Dehydration toughens asparagus, which is why you should pick through the piles in your market looking for firm, straight, unblemished spears with pretty tightly closed buds. Try to pick ones all the same size for uniform cooking, and avoid mushy tips and wrinkled stems.

Refrigerate asparagus and use within a couple of days after purchase; the tips, which continue to grow after picking, rot quickly. "It will retain its crisp vigorous nature if it has water at the butt end and cool air at the top," Harker said. Although his board and other authorities have suggested snapping off the white ends, sticking them in an inch of water and covering the tops with plastic wrap, he does not believe it is worth the bother and says too much moisture causes rot. Just wrap the ends in a damp paper towel, he said.

Peeling asparagus is not worth the bother either, although that does make the spears a bit prettier and sometimes the skin can be chewy. Instead of cutting the spear, just hold the ends and bend — it will snap where tender and tough parts meet.

Microwaving is an ideal cooking method for asparagus. Wash the spears and, with water clinging, place them in an oblong dish alternating tips and ends (I use the glass bottom dish of my microwave if I am making a lot). Cover with plastic wrap, vent, and cook at 100 percent power for 5 minutes per pound. Let rest, covered, 5 minutes.

Steaming, boiling and stir-frying are other preferred cooking methods. Asparagus cookers, in which the stalks stand up in a basket immersed in boiling water, are not necessary. Laying them down in a frying pan covered with boiling water and cooking until the tips droop — 5-7 minutes, depending on size — works just fine. In "Northwest Bounty" (Simon and Schuster; $18.95), authors Schuyler Ingle and Sharon Kramis recommend that for crisp-tender spears, cover the asparagus in a frying pan with lukewarm water, bring to a boil uncovered, count 1 minute, and drain.

The simplest adornments — lemon or orange, butter or margarine, a quick vinaigrette in a salad, a sprinkling of buttered toasted bread crumbs in the polonaise style — are all the dressing asparagus ever really needs. Tarragon, basil, pepper, mustard seed and sesame seed are among the herbs and spices that marry best with its natural grassy flavor. Try it in rice, pasta, eggs or crab dishes. Or mix asparagus with early peas or new potatoes.

Here are the fun food facts on nutritional value of fresh asparagus: Recent tests have shown it to be loaded with the B vitamin folacin, which benefits the nerves and the blood. A 5.3-ounce serving — about eight average spears — contains 60 percent of the Recommended Dietary Allowance of folacin, plus 20 percent of the RDA for Vitamin C, 10 percent of the RDA for Vitamin B-6,

Try Japanese Taste Treats Shiitake And Nori

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Shiitake mushrooms from the forests of Japan and nutrient- rich nori from the depths of the sea are two exotic foods that can be used in many interesting ways.

Shiitake and nori are flavorful — and healthful — additions to the American diet. Shiitake is an excellent source of vitamin D. Nori provides 23 important minerals and significant amounts of vitamin A, vitamin C and the B-complex vitamins.

Nori (pronounced noh-ree) is a sea vegetable that has been a delicacy in the Orient since at least 800 B.C. Nori is harvested from the sea during the cold months, after which it is dried, processed into thin sheets, cut and packaged.

Americans are most familiar with the paper-thin sheets of dried nori that are used as the outside wrappers of sushi. But nori can also used as a garnish on salads or soups, in omelets, or as a seasoning sprinkled over rice. (It can even be sprinkled over spaghetti.)

Shiitake (pronounced shii-ta-kay) are large cap mushrooms found on trees in Japan's moist, shady forests. Dried shiitake is more flavorful and aromatic than the fresh varieties, and is the most available form from Japan.

Meaty and rich in flavor, shiitake is used in sushi, in chawan-mushi (a popular, custardlike dish in Japan), in suimono (a clear soup) and stews. It can also be served with steaks, chicken and pasta, as well as in salads, soups and casseroles.

For shiitake and nori recipes, write: Agriculture & Fisheries Section, JETRO, New York, 1221 Avenue of the Americas, New York, NY 10020.

Several New York City restaurants, including Nippon, KyoTan Nippon, Nakagawa, Fujiyama Mama and Quilted Giraffe, recently featured recipes with shiitake and nori in a week-long salute to these Japanese foods. The following are recipes developed by the restaurants.

CHICKEN ROLL WITH SHIITAKE AND MUSTARD SAUCE
(Fujiyama Mama restaurant)

4 pieces boneless chicken breasts
16 thin asparagus stalks
8 strips nori, 2- by 6-inches long
2 cups vegetable oil
1 cup string beans
5 large shiitake mushrooms, thinly julienned
½ medium onion, chopped
2 oz. butter
4 cups chicken stock
½ cup of saikyo miso paste
5 tbsps. Pommery mustard
2 tbsps. lemon juice
Salt and pepper

Separate chicken breasts and cut away skin and fat. Pound each breast with a mallet until it is thin and quite flat. Set aside.

Cut asparagus from the tip to a length of 6 inches. Boil in salted water for 1-2 minutes.

Roll 4 asparagus in each breast. Seal each roll around the center with a strip of water-moistened nori. Powder with cornstarch and deep fry rolls in hot oil for 5-6 minutes. Rolls should turn a golden brown. Set aside.

Saute mushrooms and onions in 1 ounce butter in a medium saucepan. Pour in chicken stock and mix in miso paste, mustard, the remaining 1 ounce butter and lemon juice. Cook over medium heat for 5-7 minutes until mixture thickens. Salt and pepper to taste.

Pour the shiitake sauce in a serving dish first. Then cut chicken rolls in half and place on top of sauce. Garnish sides of the serving dish with whole cooked string beans. Serves 2.

SHIITAKE AND SOUR CHERRY RAVIOLI
(The Quilted Giraffe restaurant)

Ravioli dough:
½ tbsp. butter
½ tbsp. white wine vinegar
1 cup flour
2 whole eggs
¼ cup julienned nori
½ teaspoon salt

Melt butter and add vinegar. Combine flour and butter mixture in electric mixer with paddle attachment and mix at medium speed. Add eggs one at a time and continue mixing until dough appears as coarse meal.

Spray dough lightly with water and turn dough out of bowl. Knead by hand until smooth and allow the dough to rest for 15 minutes.

Roll out dough into a sheet as thin as paper and divide in half. Lay julienned nori on top of the first sheet of dough taking care not to clump nori strips upon each other. Spray the sheet with water and gently place the second sheet of dough over the first and press gently. Again roll the two combined sheets into one very thin sheet.

Cut the sheet into 4-inch squares. Place 2-3 tablespoons of filling into each square, wet the edges with water, and fold over each square into a triangle.

Cook 3-4 minutes in salted water and garnish with roasted shiitake mushrooms.

Shiitake and Sour Cherry Filling:
2 oz. dry shiitake mushrooms
4 cups warm water
3 tbsps. butter
¼ cup fresh ginger, minced
4 medium shallots, chopped
2 tbsps. garlic, minced
Salt and pepper
1 cup dried sour cherries
1 bunch spinach, chopped

Soak the dry shiitake mushrooms in 4 cups of warm water for at least 30 minutes. Squeeze excess water from mushrooms and save 1 cup of the soaking liquid.

Cut off stems and finely chop shiitake, and saute in butter until mushrooms are golden brown. Add ginger, shallots and garlic and cook over medium heat for 1-2 minutes. Season to taste with salt and pepper.

Remove mixture from pan. Add sour cherries to pan and deglaze with soaking liquid. Cook until all the water is absorbed and add to the shiitake mixture. Saute spinach very quickly and add to the shiitake mixture. Season to taste with salt and pepper.

Roasted Shiitake:
10 dry shiitake mushrooms
4 cups warm water
3 tbsps. extra virgin olive oil
¼ tbsps. salt
¼ tbsps. pepper

Soak the dry shiitake mushrooms in 4 cups of warm water for at least 30 minutes. Squeeze excess water from mushrooms, cut off stems, and toss mushrooms in olive oil with salt and pepper. Roast in 350-degree F oven for 20 minutes or until crispy. Use to garnish finished ravioli. Serves 4.

Asparagus Season Here

And on the rather delicate matter of the distinctive sulfurous odor that asparagus produces very quickly after consumption: According to Harold McGee's book "On Food and Cooking," until 1980 it was believed that most people had a gene for excretion of the chemical but some did not. Then a study found that all asparagus eaters void the substance, but not all can smell it.

Asparagus season winds down in late June and the prices start shooting back up. To continue savoring the flavor, you can freeze the stalks practically until next year at 0 degrees by following these directions from the Washington Asparagus Growers Association: Wash spears and snap off ends. Cut into package-length pieces or 2-inch lengths. Sort according to diameter. Blanch in boiling water for 30 seconds if small, 1 minute if medium, 2 minutes if large. Plunge into ice water to stop cooking. Drain and package in moisture-proof containers.

Hollandaise is a traditional accompaniment for asparagus, but considering the warnings against eating uncooked or undercooked eggs and a general desire to eschew heavy butter sauces, it is a luxury some may not indulge.

APARAGI ALLA BASSANESE

1½ lbs. thin asparagus
4 hard-boiled egg yolks
½ to ⅔ cup olive oil
½ tsp. fresh lemon juice (or to taste)
Salt

Cook the asparagus until crisp-tender by the method you prefer and stop the cooking by rinsing in cold water and draining.

In a medium bowl, mash the egg yolks to a very smooth paste with the back of a spoon. Pour on the olive oil in a thin stream of droplets, stirring constantly so the yolks take up all the oil. Stop when the oil is no longer absorbed and the sauce is the consistency of thin mayonnaise; you may not need all 2-3 cup. Add lemon juice and salt to taste.

To serve as a side dish, place spears on individual plates and drizzle sauce on top. To serve as an appetizer, chill the spears and then arrange in a sunburst pattern on a large round plate, tips inward. Pour sauce in a ring around the spear necks. Diners use fingers to pick up spears and dip into sauce. Serves three to four.

TARRAGON-ALMOND ASPARAGUS

1½ lbs. asparagus
½ tsp. salt, divided
¼ cup slivered almonds
6 tbsps. vegetable oil, divided
¼ cup white-wine vinegar
¾ tsp. dried tarragon, crushed
1 tsp. sugar
⅛ tsp. freshly ground black pepper

Cut off the woody ends of the asparagus spears; wash carefully. Bring a pan of water and ¼ teaspoon salt to the boil, drop the asparagus into the water. Cover, return to a boil and cook gently about 5 minutes or until spears are tender-crisp. Drain and chill.

Saute the almonds in 2 tablespoons oil, stirring until golden brown. Add the remaining 4 tablespoons oil, the vinegar, tarragon, sugar, remaining ¼ teaspoon salt and the pepper. Heat for 1 minute, then pour over the cold asparagus. Turn to coat thoroughly.

Divide the spears between 4 serving plates and garnish with a crosswise strip of the almonds and the remaining dressing. Serves four.

CREAMY ASPARAGUS SOUP

2 lbs. medium asparagus
2 tbsps. olive oil
2 tbsps. unsalted butter
3 medium leeks, white part only, cleaned and cut crosswise ½-inch thick
2 cups chicken broth
1 cup light cream or half and half
Salt and freshly ground black pepper to taste
2 tsps. lemon juice (optional)

Snap off and discard the tough bottoms of the asparagus spears. Cut off the tips and reserve. Cut the stalks across into one-inch pieces. Heat the olive oil and butter in a heavy large saucepan or Dutch oven over medium heat until the butter is sizzling. Stir in the leeks. Reduce the heat to low. Cover the pan and cook the leeks, stirring occasionally, until tender, about 10 minutes.

Stir in the sliced asparagus stalks. Cover, and cook until they are bright green, about 3 minutes. Stir in the broth, increase the heat to medium, and cook until simmering. Cover the pan, and simmer until the stalks are tender, about 15 minutes.

Puree the soup, using a food mill fitted with the fine disk, into a bowl. (Note: The soup also may be blended smooth and poured through a wire mesh strainer, pressing the solids with a spatula to extract juices. The soup may be prepared to this point and held for a couple of hours in a covered pan. It also may be frozen and thawed gently on low heat before the final steps.)

Return to the pan, add the cream and asparagus tips. Heat to simmering, and season with salt and pepper. Add the lemon juice if desired. Serves six.

TURKEY WITH ASPARAGUS AND RED BELL PEPPER

2 cups freshly cooked rice, seasoned with 2 tsps. butter and salt and cayenne pepper to taste
2½ lbs. cooked turkey breast, thinly sliced
1½ lbs. freshly cooked asparagus
2 medium red bell peppers, cored, seeded and slivered, or 1 jar (4 oz.) pimentos, slivered
4 tbsps. (½ stick) unsalted butter
3 tbsps. flour
2 cups chicken stock
1 cup heavy or whipping cream
Salt to taste
Cayenne pepper to taste
1 cup freshly grated aged Swiss, imported Gruyere or Parmesan cheese

Line the bottom of a shallow baking dish or 6 individual ramekins with the rice. Lay the turkey slices over the rice, then cover the turkey with the asparagus. Sprinkle with the slices of red bell pepper or pimento.

Melt the butter in a heavy saucepan over medium low heat. Add the flour and blend well. Stir until smooth and then gradually whisk in the stock. Simmer until the raw flavor of the flour is gone and the sauce has thickened, 5 minutes. Add the cream and salt and cayenne to taste. Blend in half of the cheese.

About 30 minutes before serving, heat the oven to 375 degrees. Sprinkle the remaining cheese over the sauce. Bake until it is bubbly hot and lightly browned. Serves six.

Enjoy An Old Favorite During Applesauce Month

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

McLEAN, Va. — April is Applesauce Month, and with good reason. Applesauce blends well with a variety of ingredients, so you can use it many different ways.

The International Apple Institute offers these suggestions:

• Breakfast with applesauce: Heat chunky applesauce, flavor with cinnamon, ladle over French toast, and dust with confectioners' sugar.

• Johnny Applesnack: Place applesauce in waxed paper cups. Top with granola.

• Taste a trifle: In a trifle bowl or in individual champagne flutes, alternate layers of applesauce and crumbled pound cake. Top with whipped cream, sprinkle with cinnamon sugar, and garnish with a sprig of mint.

• Pair up with a pineapple: Wash a ripe pineapple. Cut in half, lengthwise, through the pineapple and foliage. Remove core from both sides and discard. Cut pineapple pulp into small chunks and place in a small bowl. Add 1 cup applesauce, 1 teaspoon vanilla extract and 1 teaspoon of crushed, dried mint. Mix and return to pineapple halves to serve. Garnish with toasted slivered almonds and mint.

• Applesaucy gravy: Place a small amount of margarine in a skillet and reheat a large slice of fully cooked ham. Remove ham to a heated platter. Add ¼ cup apple juice and ¼ cup raisins to the pan. Simmer, while stirring, for 2 minutes. Add ½ cup chunky applesauce, mix and heat through. To serve, pour applesauce over ham slice.

• Applesauce dressing: In a small bowl, mix 1 cup applesauce, 1 cup low-fat vanilla yogurt, 2 tablespoons honey, 1 teaspoon ground cinnamon, ½ teaspoon ground cloves and a dash of nutmeg. Prepare a fruit salad, top with cottage cheese, and drizzle with applesauce dressing.

• Saucy cornbread: In a medium-sized bowl, mix together 2-3rds cup applesauce, 1 egg and ¾ teaspoon ground cinnamon. Mix in one 8½-ounce package of cornbread mix. Pour into greased 8- by 8-inch pan, sprinkle with cinnamon sugar and bake in a preheated 350-degree F oven for 15 minutes.

• Applesauce-cheese melts: Lightly toast English muffins. Top with applesauce and sharp Cheddar cheese. Broil just long enough to warm applesauce and melt cheese.

• Delicious dipping: Soften blue cheese and mix in applesauce until mixture is of dip consistency. Add curry powder to taste and serve as a dip, surrounded by fresh apple slices.

The following recipes are provided by the International Apple Institute. As you prepare these easy dishes, you'll discover that there are many more ways you can use applesauce to add a new dimension to all of your cooking. But don't forget: applesauce is good all by itself, too!

APPLESAUCE-GLAZED ORIENTAL PORK ROAST

3 tbsps. hoisin sauce
3 tbsps. light corn syrup
One 5-pound boneless pork loin roast

In a small bowl, mix together applesauce, hoisin sauce and corn syrup. Set aside. Place roast on a rack set in a shallow pan and roast at 325 degrees F for 2 hours. Brush with applesauce glaze and continue roasting for an additional 15 to 30 minutes, basting occasionally with glaze, until pork registers an internal temperature of 165 degrees F. Makes 10 to 12 servings.

APPLESAUCE SCONES

⅓ cup buttermilk
¼ cup margarine, melted
1 tsp. vanilla extract
1 tbsp. honey
2 cups all-purpose flour
¼ tsp. baking soda
2 tsps. baking powder
¼ tsp. salt
Dash grated nutmeg
½ cup raisins
1 tbsp. margarine, melted
Cinnamon sugar

Preheat oven to 425 degrees F. Line a baking sheet with aluminum foil and lightly grease. In a medium-sized bowl, combine applesauce, buttermilk, margarine, vanilla extract and honey. Set aside. In another medium-sized bowl, combine flour, baking soda, baking powder, salt, nutmeg and raisins.

Combine applesauce mixture with flour mixture. With floured hands, knead gently and turn out onto a floured surface. Pat dough to ½-inch thickness and cut into 8 triangle shapes. Arrange on baking sheet ¼ inch apart. Brush with 1 tablespoon melted margarine and sprinkle with cinnamon sugar. Bake 12 to 15 minutes, or until lightly browned. Makes 8 scones.

APPLESAUCE-STREUSEL COFFEE CAKE

2 cups flour
1 tsp. baking soda
1 tsp. baking powder
¼ tsp. salt
½ tsp. ground cinnamon
¾ cup margarine
1 cup sugar
2 eggs
⅔ cup applesauce
⅓ cup buttermilk
1 tsp. vanilla extract
Topping (recipe follows)

Grease and flour a 9- by 13-inch baking dish or pan. Preheat oven to 350 degrees F (or 325 degrees F if using a glass dish or pan). In a medium-sized bowl, sift together flour, baking soda, baking powder, salt and cinnnamon. Set aside.

In the large bowl of an electric mixer, cream together margarine and sugar. Add eggs, one at a time, mixing after each addition. Stir in applesauce, buttermilk and vanilla. Stir dry ingredients into applesauce mixture and pour into prepared pan. Add topping, pressing in lightly.

Bake for 30 to 35 minutes or until a toothpick, when inserted in the center, comes out clean. Makes 15 servings.

Food Labels Often Give Too Little Information

By Mary MacVean
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — "Lite" olive oil may have no fewer calories, cereal boasting "all natural fruit flavors" may have more salt and coloring than flavor, and "sugar-free" snacks may have sweeteners as fattening as sugar. And how many grams does it take to fill you up anyway?

What's a health-conscious consumer to do?

Frank E. Young, who heads the federal agency that regulates the labels on much of our food, can sympathize. He's a doctor, and even he has trouble.

It's hard "to read labels and figure out what to eat," said Young, commissioner of the U.S. Food and Drug Administration, which is responsible for labels on foods not regulated by the U.S. Department of Agriculture. Labels on food, he said, are "a relic."

He'd get no argument from consumer groups.

Statements on food packages by law must be true, but manufacturers may not tell consumers all they want to know. That sugar-free snack, for example, or an oat bran muffin with several tablespoons of fat, at 100 calories a tablespoon.

"Saturated fat is still not listed, cholesterol is still not listed, and fiber is still not listed... These are the nutrients the surgeon general has told the American public to watch for when they go shopping," said Bruce Silverglade, director of legal affairs for the Washington-based consumer advocacy group Center for Science in the Public Interest.

Food processors say the problem is that many consumers aren't sufficiently informed about ingredients to interpret information already on labels.

"You get into good food-bad food, good ingredient-bad ingredient, when what you want to look at is your overall diet," said Allen Matthys, director of regulatory affairs for the National Food Processors Association. Its 450 processors favor current regulations making many nutrition labels voluntary.

"You can reduce risks by modifying diet," Young said. "That means you have to give much more information, you have to give interpretations of the information."

The FDA was sidetracked from food label reform by such issues as AIDS and food additives, he said. But labeling will be a dominant issue this year, and the agency is considering new regulations on fiber and cholesterol.

Silverglade agreed that prospects for reform appear better. "What's changed is that several very important reports have been issued ... advising Americans to modify their diet."

Among them was Surgeon General C. Everett Koop's report last summer that nearly 1.5 million people died in 1987 from diseases associated with diet.

Also, consumers "are becoming increasingly frustrated" with labels, Silverglade said. A coalition that includes several medical and dietary groups, the National Council on the Aging and Consumer Federation of America is meeting with federal officials to lobby for changes this year from the FDA or Congress.

The Center for Science in the Public Interest has proposed labels with a "traffic light" system of colored panels for calories, fiber, fat and salt. Its proposal would require labels for fast foods; percentages of major ingredients in a food; and disclosure of cholesterol, saturated fat and fiber.

"Food labels could be one of the greatest measures we could take to benefit the health of Americans," said Silverglade, noting the costs in lives and dollars from diet-related disease.

Still, Young said, it likely will be years before consumers see changes.

The USDA's Food Safety and Inspection Service approves labels for products that contain at least 2 percent poultry or 3 percent meat. Its standards say, for example, that a product called beef with gravy must be at least 50 percent beef, while gravy with beef must be 35 percent beef. It also regulates eggs.

Of the rest of food, regulated by the FDA, only about 55 percent have nutrition labels. Regulations the FDA adopted in 1973 require them only if nutrients are added or if a nutritional benefit claim is made.

All food labels must provide the name of the product; the name and location of the manufacturer, packer or distributor; and the net contents or net weight. But not all foods must list even the ingredients; the FDA has a "standard of identity" for about 300 foods — such as mayonnaise and ketchup — and doesn't require ingredient lists for products that fit the standard.

There are two issues the FDA must consider:

One is nutrition labels, now on the back or side of packages listing ingredients in descending order by weight, and per-serving amounts of calories, protein, and certain vitamins and minerals.

"Health claims are claims that talk about the people that eat the food. Nutrition claims are claims that are made about the properties of the food," said John L. Stanton, professor of food marketing research at St. Josephs University in Philadelphia.

"We really need a strategy that includes both of them," Young said. But there is no consensus whether all packaged foods should have labels, what information should be included or how it should be provided.

In the meantime, the FDA has a proposal — its second such effort — awaiting Office of Management and Budget approval that would regulate health claims.

"The FDA is taking a cautious approach, limiting label statements to things on which there is a consensus, based on the surgeon general's report," said F. Edward Scarbrough, deputy director of the FDA's Office of Nutrition and Food Sciences, Center of Food Safety and Applied Nutrition.

Five things would be addressed: fats and heart disease, fats and cancer, fiber and cancer, calcium and osteoporosis, and sodium and hypertension. The FDA would come up with model label statements that manufacturers could use, or companies could write their own within certain guidelines.

Young would not even guess whether OMB would act on the proposal this year, and some consumer groups say there's little chance a rule would be adopted.

Silverglade said FDA and OMB are "caught in a bureaucratic trench warfare over the wording of the rule. OMB is insisting on a very weak rule that will allow manufacturers to write their own ticket and slap practically whatever health claims they choose on their product."

FDA inaction has prompted nine states to start negotiating with food companies directly, said Steve Gardner, assistant attorney general in Texas. "We've seen a plethora of pretty outrageous claims of health benefits. Even with the good products, the basic venal nature of the companies is such that they can't avoid making misleading or untruthful claims."

In addition, legislation has been submitted to Congress that would require disclosure of more information about saturated fats and establish standards for "lite" foods. Currently, "lite" or "light," except on meats, can mean fewer calories or just a lighter color or texture.

Other bills are expected, including one requiring nutrition labels on all FDA-regulated foods.

Kellogg Co. broke the ice in 1984 when it linked consumption of All-Bran cereal with reduction of cancer risks. The label said in part: "The National Cancer Institute reports that high-fiber, low-fat diets may reduce some kinds of cancer. All-Bran is a high-fiber cereal."

FDA's options were to declare the cereal a drug and force Kellogg to undergo the lengthy procedures for drug approval, or to try to come up with a regulation that would allow such labels. Seizing All-Bran, Young said, would have been ridiculous. The agency still is seeking a solution.

Because many consumers are trying to eat better, some officials fear poorly regulated health claims might do more harm than good.

A food high in fiber might brag about that without owning up to also being high in salt. "So you don't have a heart attack," Gardner said. "You would have a stroke instead."
