Shuttle Atlantis Marking Return To Deep Space

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — The shuttle Atlantis was readied today for midafternoon launch, carrying a robot craft toward a voyage to Venus, the cloud-shrouded planet that is an abiding mystery to scientists. Weather conditions seemed ideal as five astronauts boarded their spacecraft.

Lennard Fisk, NASA's chief scientist, said the launch of the explorer craft Magellan will mark "a resurgence of America's planetary program." The last American probe sent to deep space was dispatched in 1978.

Atlantis was scheduled to lift off at 2:24 p.m. EDT, heading to orbit on a four-day mission 184 miles above Earth.

Launch pad workers completed fueling early this morning. After breakfast, the astronauts donned the bright orange launch suits they would wear into space. They smiled and waved to NASA workers as they headed to their beachfront launch pad.

Magellan is to be released from Atlantis' cargo bay six hours after launch and sent streaking on a 15-month, 806 million-mile unmanned trip of its own.

Mission specialists Mary Cleave and Mark Lee will operate remote controls that propel Magellan from the shuttle's cargo bay. Atlantis is commanded by David M. Walker. The other crew members are pilot Ronald Grabe and mission specialist Norman Thagard.

Preparations moved smoothly since the countdown began Tuesday. A launch control commentator announced "all conditions look good" for launch time weather in Florida. Officials kept close watch on wind conditions at emergency landing sites across the Atlantic Ocean.

Engineers in the launch firing room checked spacecraft systems and officials reported no problems.

"We're ready to go fly," Richard Truly, NASA's space flight chief and the agency's administrator-designate, said at a Thursday news conference.

After its release from the shuttle, Magellan's own rocket will send it out of Earth orbit. Over the next 15 months, the craft will fly around the sun 1½ times before settling into an orbit of Venus in August 1990.

Venus has intrigued humans as long as they've looked heavenward and marveled at the universe. The planet, the familiar "star" of the morning or evening, appears just before dawn or just after sunset as a brilliant, unblinking point of light. Its brightness in the nighttime sky is rivaled only by the moon.

Hail, High Winds Batter Area

By Cherie Evans
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Severe thunderstorms that struck Pitt County and other parts of eastern North Carolina on Thursday evening caused minimal damage, creating some power outages and fallen limbs, area officials said this morning.

Weather watchers say winds ranged from 50 to 80 miles per hour and quarter-size hail, in addition to 1 to 2 inches of rain, peppered parts of the area, but no tornadoes were sighted during Thursday's storm.

Meanwhile, the storm did cause some moderate problems for the crews of the Greenville Utilities Commission, said Roger Jones, director of Electric Systems.

"We had two feeders to lock out. One of them was caused by some tin from the old Greenville stock yards on Highway 11 that blew on the lines," Jones said. The other was caused by a trim limb.

Residents along N.C. 33, the Belvoir Highway, were without power for less than an hour, while those along the West Fifth Street area to Memorial Drive and from Memorial Drive to West End Circle were without power about an hour or so, Jones said.

Also, some blown fuses from small tree limbs or lightning were reported, and one pole was replaced, Jones said. "I think the top of the pole was broken out.

"We had crews working up to about midnight getting everything back in," Jones said.

There had been no reports of damage this morning to young tobacco plants because of the storm, said Mitch Smith, director of the Pitt County Agricultural Extension Service.

"The biggest adverse effect will be the prolonging of tobacco transplanting while plants will be ready to be put into the fields," he said. "We don't really need more water in our plant beds right now."

Hail and heavy rains may cause problems by striking the buds of the tobacco plant, Smith said. It also may strike the leaves, "but we're not too concerned about the leaf area, because a tobacco transplant loses about three to five leaves."

When the buds of the tobacco are struck, "it raises questions to the possibility of resetting tobacco but I haven't had any reports of damage this morning," he said.

There were no reports of major damage in Greenville, said Mayo Allen, director of the city's public works department.

"We really didn't see that much damage, just debris like we usually have," he said. "It's more or less like a special cleanup afterwards picking up limbs that had broken."

The rain has had some positive effects on forests in the area, said Mark Webb, forest ranger.

"We've been real fortunate this spring," he said. "It's been real wet. We don't have any severe fire danger at all."

The Tar River level was at 8.9 feet above sea level this morning, and .95 inches of rain was recorded from 8 a.m. Thursday to 8 a.m. today at the GUC water plant.

Forecasters called for temperatures ranging in the high 70s to mid 80s today under partly cloudy skies with the possibility of more thunderstorms this evening.

The Associated Press reported that two people were injured in storm activity elsewhere in North Carolina.

Tardy Doctor Apologizes, Skips Jail

By John Bare
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

The mayor of Belhaven avoided a day in jail Thursday by apologizing to a Superior Court judge for failing to appear for jury duty one day and reporting late another day.

Dr. Charles O. Boyette of Belhaven, who is the mayor of the town and one of just two physicians serving the area, was found guilty of contempt of court Thursday in Washington, N.C., by Judge William C. Griffin Jr. Boyette reported on schedule for jury duty Monday, but he claimed medical emergencies at Pungo District Hospital prevented him from reporting to court Tuesday.

Griffin found that Boyette intentionally disobeyed his order to report for jury duty. He handed down a $500 fine and suspended a one-day jail term.

"I apologized for being absent and for causing the situation of confrontation. There is no doubt, according to my attorneys and the judge, when the judge issues an order it must be followed. If is not followed, you must face the consequences," Boyette said. "I do think that as a physician, I have a charge to take care of my patients, and I accept that position willfully and thoroughly."

Boyette likened his dilemma about deserting patients with that of an attorney who is called out of a courtroom, leaving his client standing alone before a judge.

"I would trust an attorney would not leave his client in the courtroom. I think that is a very fair comparison," he said.

Boyette said he had documented evidence to prove he was dealing with emergency cases, including a woman in labor and an elderly patient experiencing heart failure. The circumstances put him in an impossible situation where he could not satisfy his professional obligation and his obligation to jury duty, he said.

"I simply chose to do what I had to do, and that is provide care for those patients until they were safe," he said.

Boyette said the General Assembly needs to review the policy by which citizens may be excused from jury duty. Chief District Court Judge Hallett S. Ward had refused to excuse Boyette from serving on jury duty, a decision Boyette called unyielding.

"I do believe that the only solution is an appropriate law which would give judges more latitude and allow them to have a broader vision in their interpretation in who is eligible for excuse of jury duty," he said.

"If the individual who is called for jury duty is contributing to the health and welfare of the community ... he is not excused. That is where I ran afoul of the law, by simply taking care of those patients in need, rather than following the absolute direction of the judge."

Two representatives of Pungo Hospital testified for Boyette and told the judge that his service is critical to the 49-bed facility, the Associated Press reported. Boyette and Dr. Lawrence Ward are the only physicians on staff at the hospital, which serves eastern Beaufort County and most of Hyde County.

Griffin could not be reached for comment. His office in Williamston said he was out of town.

ECU Tight Lipped On Coaches' DWIs

By John Bare
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

East Carolina University officials are remaining tight lipped about any disciplinary action taken against two assistant coaches charged with driving while impaired, but convictions could alter their job duties.

Both men arrested — assistant football Coach Timothy Alvin Kelly and assistant basketball Coach Chris David Benetti — have scouting and recruiting duties which require them to drive.

A DWI conviction could cause them to lose their driving privileges for a year, thus restricting the coaches to non-driving tasks. It would be up to a judge to decide whether to grant the coaches limited driving privileges that would accommodate their recruiting schedules. Even with the privilege, state law puts some limitations on what type of driving may be done at different times of the day.

ECU Athletic Director Dave Hart said after each arrest that the matters are being handled within the athletic department. In a telephone interview this week, he again refused to comment on the incidents.

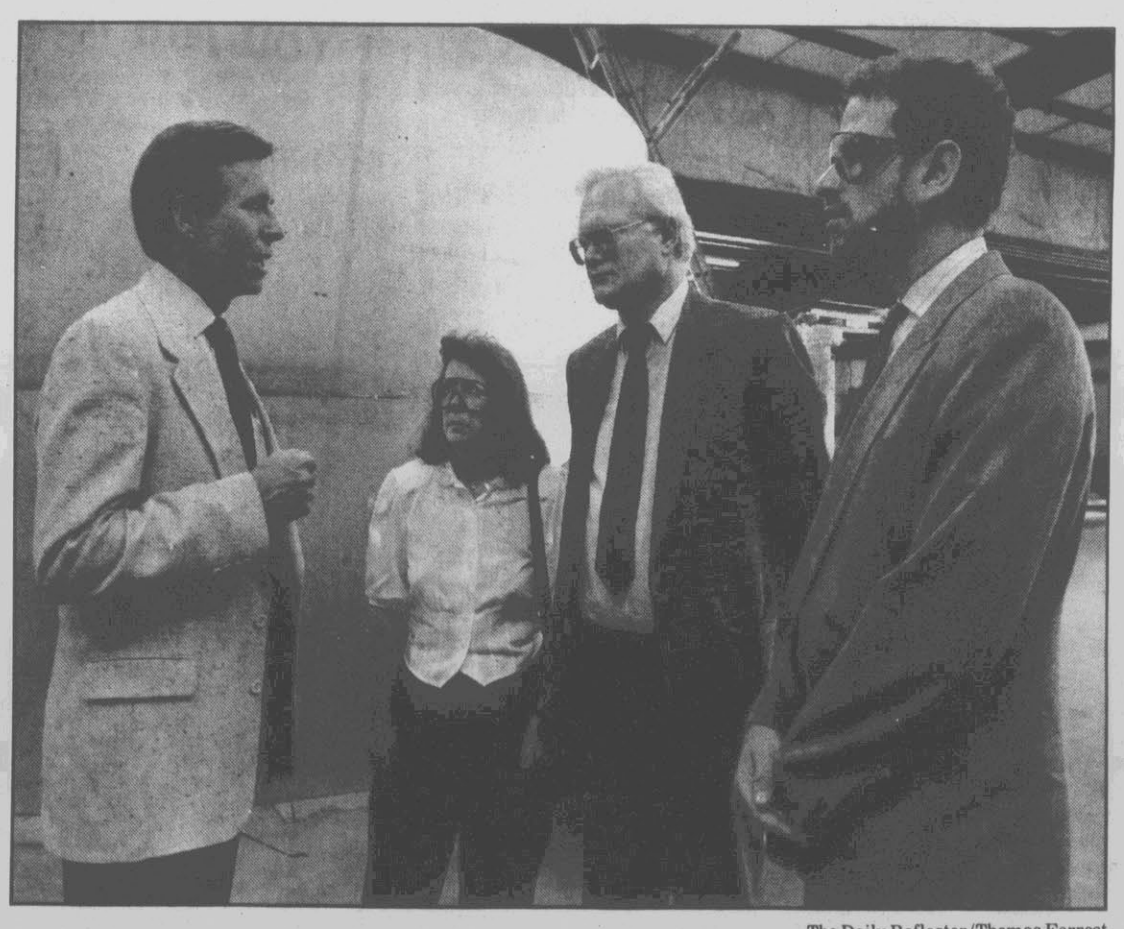

"Everything that we're doing has already been handled, and I would prefer not to make any further comment on that," he said.

ECU Chancellor Richard Eakin said any disciplinary action regarding faculty or coaches is handled within the employee's department.

"In the two instances, it's a matter of departmental considerations. Dave Hart has been the person that has been the contact on that. Any cases, such as these, would be handled by the department where the person is located," Eakin said.

Hart declined to comment on whether he is considering putting clauses in coaches' contracts in the future that would require disciplinary action or dismissal if they are convicted of DWI. Eakin said the university contends that the contracts are not subject to public disclosure.

Teachers Planning Lobby Day

By Cherie Evans
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Teachers in Pitt County will go on the road again for higher salaries by participating in a "lobby day" in Raleigh on May 9.

Teachers met Thursday evening in the Jaycee Park building to finalize plans for the day.

"We're going up there to lobby and to lobby means to win and influence votes," said Mary-Anne Brannon, a teacher from W.H. Robinson School who is chairing the Pitt County effort.

"The legislators are not our enemies," she said. "They're pretty much on our side. They know we need a raise. They're just not sure how much."

Ms. Brannon encouraged the teachers to "do your homework. Know the issues and know the bills that are there."

The schedule for the lobbying effort includes attending committee meetings in the Legislative Building from 10 a.m. to noon before having a lunch break from noon to 1 p.m.

Beginning at 1 p.m., the group will attend more sessions in the Legislative Buildings before having a dinner break from 4 p.m. to 6 p.m. At 6 p.m., the group will discuss concerns and will ask questions of area legislators.

The group will end its daylong activities with a walk to the Governor's Mansion where it will tie green ribbons on the gate.

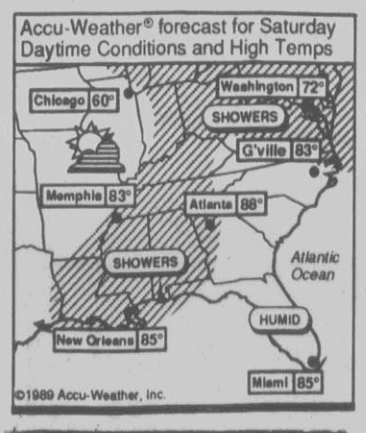

In addition to the lobby day, Pitt teachers are mailing a flyer to all legislators and to Gov. Jim Martin that suggests that teachers and other state employees be handled separately.

"These job descriptions are not equal. Why then should we get across-the-board, equal raises?" the flyer says.

It outlines the differences between teachers and state employees as they relate to the number of hours at work, work done at home, breaks and lunch schedules, overtime compensation, education, schedule flex-

Pitt's Press Tour Pays Off Quickly With Story In German Publication

By John Bare
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Less than a day after the Pitt County Development Commission's press tour ended, one journalist from the tour had already written an article for his German newspaper.

Dietrich Zwaetz, Washington, D.C., bureau chief for Handelsblatt, filed a story about the biotechnology center in Greenville for the newspaper, which is similar to the The Wall Street Journal and has a daily circulation of 130,000.

Wanda Yuhas, assistant marketing director for the commission, said the last journalist left Greenville at 6 p.m. Thursday, and the group is pleased to receive such immediate coverage. Zwaetz is also planning more articles on the area, she said.

"I am really pleased in one regard especially. (Zwaetz) has also sent a couple of stories off," she said. "He is looking at doing a general article on the community and the Pitt County area and its rate of growth. Something they were all impressed with is the diversity of the population here and the diversity of the industry here.

The biotechnology center is part of Pitt County Memorial Hospital and the East Carolina University School of Medicine. The facility, which is about a year old, is designed to provide laboratory facilities for high-level research, such as work with recombinate DNA.

"It's a very sophisticated process," she said. "Of course, North Carolina has a very large biotechnology center in the Raleigh area that has been active for a number of years."

Zwaetz was joined on the three-day press tour by Nancy Bader, a writer for the development magazine, Plants, Sites and Parts, and David S. Kastriner of New York City, advertising sales manager for the biweekly Japanese magazine Nikkei Business. Free-lance writer Jim Hughes, who covers North Carolina for BusinessWeek, was not able to participate in the tour.

The journalists were surprised at the number of European and Far East connections area businesses already have, Ms. Yuhas said. Overton's Sports Center Inc. was especially interesting to them, she said.

"It (Overton's) looks like a regular retail store in the front," she said. "But, once you go in the back, it is of course enormous. It is the largest distributor of water sporting equipment in the world, and it's home-grown. They were very impressed with the management."

The business also has a bank of clocks showing the time of day in London, Tokyo, Los Angeles and other major cities of the world, which was also a surprise to the journalists, she said.

The group did not know the local companies had grown so large in

A copy of a newspaper advertisement the teachers recently published will also be sent to legislators and to the governor, and the teachers arranged to publish an additional advertisement to gain support in their efforts.

Teachers wanting to ride a chartered bus to Raleigh for the lobby day may call Jane Laughinghouse at 756-2565 by Sunday evening, Ms. Laughinghouse said. Those riding the bus will meet in the parking lot of Carolina East Mall on May 9 at 8 a.m. The cost for the bus transportation is $7, she said.

Teachers planning to participate in the lobby day will have to request a personal leave day from their principals, the teachers said.

Leck Keeter, associate superintendent of personnel for the Pitt County schools, said in a previous interview that when teachers take a personal leave day, either $35, $45 or $52 is subtracted from the teacher's salary to pay for a substitute. The amount needed for the substitute is dependent upon the substitute's qualifications, he said.

About 400 people have been approved as substitutes for the Pitt County schools, Keeter said.

ECU Quiet About Coaches' DWI Charges

"Our position is ... that the matter of the contract is a personnel matter between the university and the employee," he said.

Stephen Allred, employee relations specialist with the Institute of Government in Chapel Hill, said state employees typically do not have contracts. He said he has never heard of any contract with a DWI clause, but there would be no legal barrier to inserting such a provision.

"I don't see any reason why they couldn't," he said. "I've never heard of that being done. But, I don't see any legal problem with that."

Benetti said there is nothing in his current one-year contract calling for him to be fired or disciplined if convicted of DWI, and he is not aware of any effort on the part of the university to create such a clause. He also declined to comment on any action taken against him since the arrest.

"I just can't make any comment on that," he said.

Drake Maynard, employee relations specialist with the state Personnel Division in Raleigh, said there are three instances in which DWI convictions may affect state employees.

One, any law enforcement officers convicted of a DWI will lose their certification; therefore they would be forced to leave the job.

Two, any state employee convicted of DWI away from the workplace would likely not be subject to discipline if their job duties did not include driving or operating machinery. However, if the job duties did include driving, he said disciplinary action might be justified.

Lastly, Maynard said if a state employee was convicted of a DWI that occurred on the job, there would be grounds for firing the employee.

"That would seem to me to be just cause for dismissal," he said.

Hart has not commented on whether either coach was working when the arrests occurred.

When Kelly, 34, was arrested, he was in a dealer car donated to the university through the Pirate Big Wheel Club, the police report said. An officer found him asleep in the car with the engine running and the lights on at 1:55 a.m. April 2. He blew a .19 and a .20 on the Breathalyzer test.

Hired earlier this year by first-year Coach Bill Lewis, Kelly has recruited heavily in the Fayetteville area.

Benetti, 31, was arrested at 12:53 a.m. April 21 after a Greenville police officer observed him run off the road and cross the center line twice, according to the police report. He blew a .15 and a .16 on the Breathalyzer.

Benetti, who has previously served as an assistant under Pirate Head Coach Mike Steele at DePauw University in Indiana, was on the road often this season recruiting and scouting. He has been an ECU assistant for two years.

With a blood-alcohol content of .10, the law says a person is legally impaired in North Carolina. In compliance with state law, both men forfeited their driver's licenses for the mandatory 10-day period.

Dr. John Atkeson, chairman of ECU's Faculty Senate, said the group has not formally discussed the coaches' arrests or the issue of DWI policy regarding coaches, but the recent arrests were mentioned in a joke at the senate's last meeting.

"Frankly, it's been a source of humor of the gallows persuasion," he said.

The senate would probably not consider such issues unless there were special situations, such as a single coach with numerous DWIs, he said.

The Faculty Manual outlines situations in which tenured faculty may be fired, suspended or demoted in rank, he said, and a single DWI conviction is not severe enough to merit such measures. The manual states that action may be taken against an employee who is incompetent, neglects duty or commits an act of such misconduct that they should no longer be a member of the faculty. The policy also applies to individuals with one-year contracts, he said.

ECU senior Larry Murphy, past president of the Student Government Association, was a member of the football coach selection committee along with Hart. He said he is confident Hart will deal with the coaches' DWIs fairly.

"Having dealt with Dave Hart, my confidence in him is pretty strong, very strong. As a person, he's not trying to take (the DWIs) lightly," he said.

Student Wins

Amy Tomlinson, a senior at J.H. Rose High School, recently won first place in the state Future Homemakers of America competition in Raleigh with her project, "The Flammability of Children's Sleepwear."

The project tested the flammability of seven different fabrics and compared the results with the material that clothing companies use in their garments.

Miss Tomlinson is a member of the Latin Club, the Anchor Club, Future Teachers of America and the school soccer team. Elaine Tschetter is her advisor.

Highway Shooting

ROCKINGHAM, N.C. (AP) — A passenger in a tractor-trailer was shot and killed Thursday as he was riding with his brother on U.S. 1 north of Rockingham, authorities said.

Richmond County Chief Sheriff's Deputy Dale Furr said John Frank Lipham, 29, died after he was shot in the back.

ECU Faculty Senate

A nuclear physicist, a professor of mathematics and a member of the School of Nursing faculty were elected officers of the East Carolina University faculty for 1989-90 in Faculty Senate elections Wednesday.

Dr. James M. Joyce of the physics faculty, whose research has included fusion process techniques, particle acceleration and digital physics, was elected chair of the faculty. He will succeed J. Conner Atkeson of the history department, who served two elected terms.

Joyce, a 19-year member of the ECU faculty, has served two consecutive terms as secretary of the faculty.

Math professor Stella M. Daugherty, who has served previous terms both as vice chair and secretary during her 28-year tenure at ECU, was elected vice chair, while Nursing School assistant professor Belinda T. Lee was elected secretary.

Eagles First

DURHAM (AP) — Human use of Jordan Lake's northern shores should be minimized to encourage continued habitation by bald eagles, a study says.

The study, commissioned by the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, recommends that a special "eagle management zone" be established to include all the waters and land north of the Farrington Bridge.

Sixty-three percent of the eagles observed at the lake were spotted in the area, and two communal roosts have been found there. The northern end of the lake also is popular with other large birds, including egrets, herons and cormorants.

Sports such as waterskiing, sailing and off-road vehicle use are disturbing to eagles and should be discouraged, the study said. Other activities, including fishing, hunting, photography, wildlife viewing, and interpretive walks, are less bothersome and could be continued without ill effects.

'Truth In Preference To Fiction'

Priorities

Library & Meetings Center Necessary

When the pie is sliced, East Carolina University and eastern North Carolina should get their share. That share includes $25 million in state funds to expand the university's library and a reasonable appropriation for a regional convention center.

North Carolina's purse strings are tight this year. Revenue has lagged behind, forcing legislators to make careful decisions about spending. To devise a fiscally sound budget, they've had to set priorities — even do some program-snipping. That's a tough, unenviable task.

But ECU's expansion of Joyner Library cannot be postponed any longer without impairing the university's development. And the East has watched other university communities in the state build convention centers with state money while this region waited its turn. Now its turn has come and tangible progress on such a project should begin in the form of an appropriation in the 1989-90 budget.

'ECU — and the East — isn't asking for the moon. It's just seeking a reasonable and deserved piece of the 1989-90 state budget.'

First things first, however. ECU leaders have appropriately placed the library expansion as the university's top funding priority for the coming year. Academic needs correctly take precedence over other spending and the facts 0emonstrate the need for the addition. Study carrels are perilously short — the university has only about 200 carrels for its approximately 15,000 students. Conference rooms and reference areas are stretched thin, and space for housing special donations and collections is nearly non-existent.

A library is the heart of a university's academic integrity. It provides the tools and raw materials for learning. Its quality, perhaps more than any other factor, determines the quality of the instruction offered by a university. Students and faculty are dependent upon a good library to build a solid education.

That's why ECU must have an addition promptly. One of the university's primary charges is to enlarge its academic prowess. While that strength has grown considerably in the past decade, it must have the proper resources if it is to continue to grow.

But the university, and the region, also needs a convention center — somewhere to house large, distinguished conferences. The ECU medical school frequently attracts large meetings, as do other departments of the university. Greenville, because of its geographic location, its good travel connections and its amenities, draws diverse conventions.

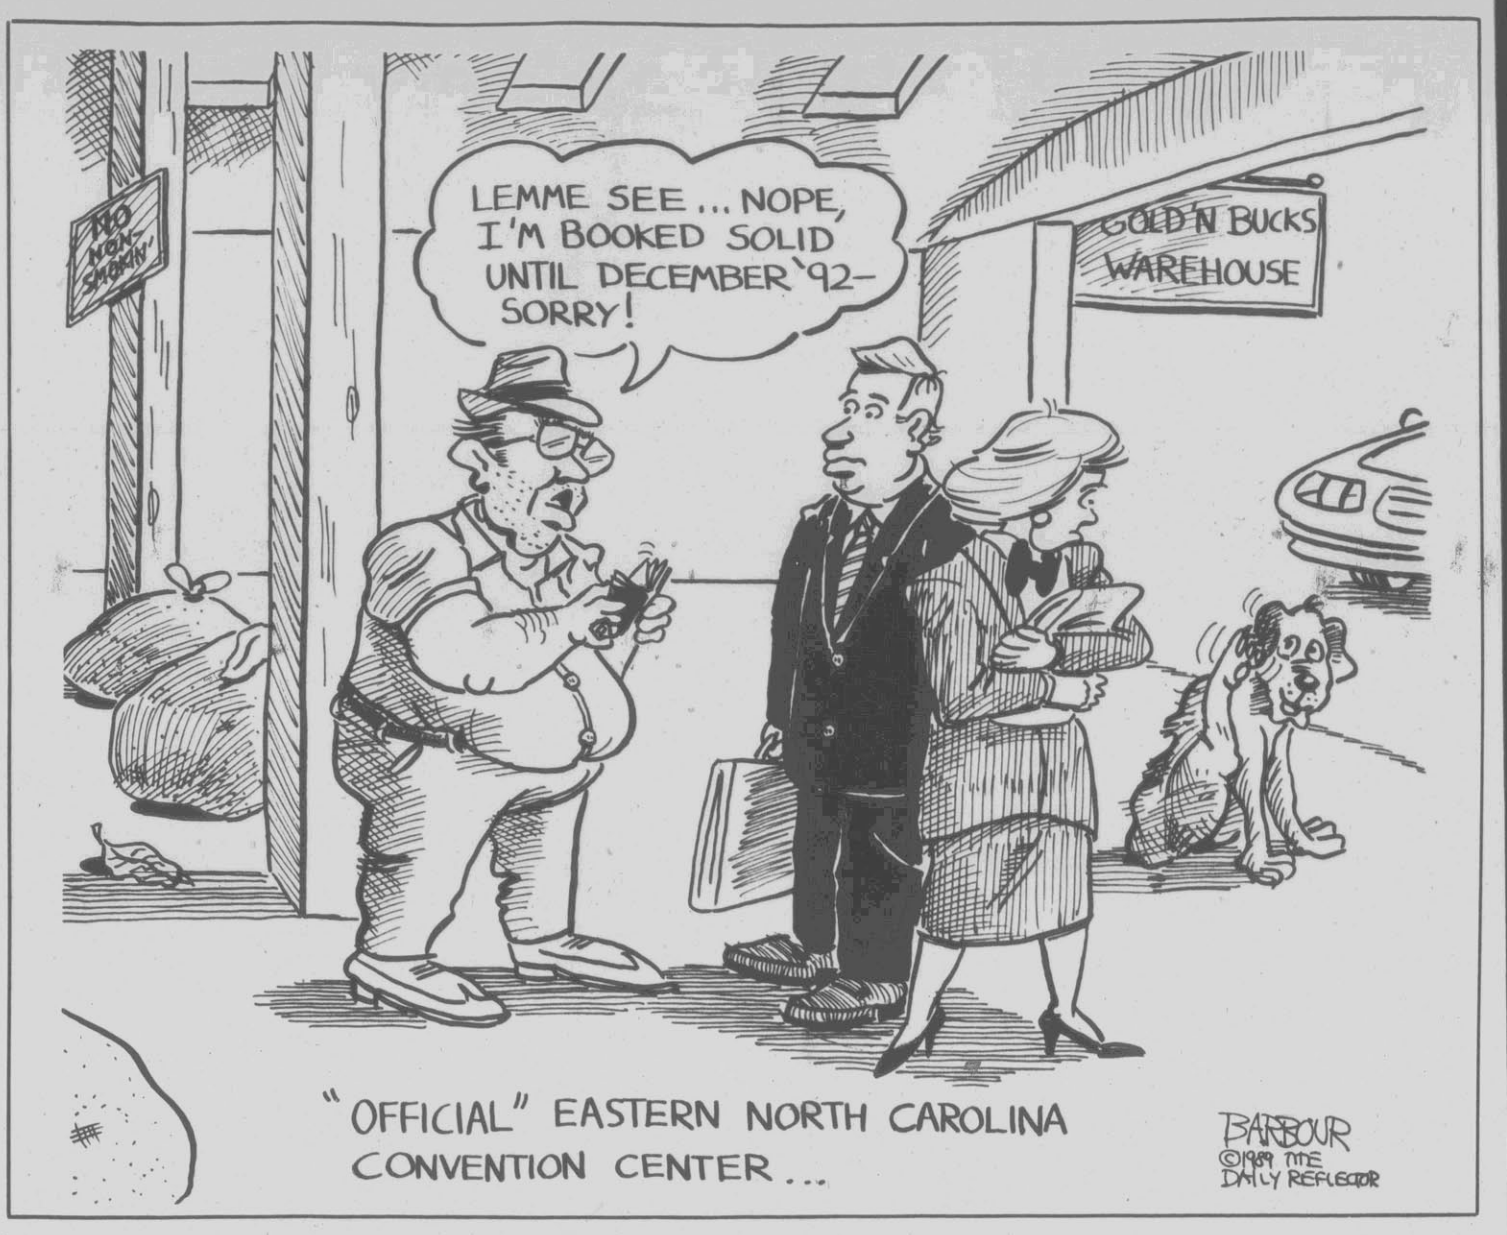

The only impediment to fully capitalizing on these advantages is the absence of a meeting place large enough to accommodate big groups.

ECU and eastern North Carolina have watched while the state built such a center at Western Carolina University. The two watched while other areas, Chapel Hill, for example, received funds for a meeting center. North Carolina State University has available conference facilities. Now it's time to begin work on such a center to serve the East.

It's a tight budget year and ECU must have its library addition. But that doesn't lessen the need for a regional conference center. Such facilities have been provided to other communities in proximity to university campuses and should be provided here.

ECU — and the East — isn't asking for the moon. It's just seeking a reasonable and deserved piece of the 1989-90 state budget.

A Little Democracy, Warts & All

Art Buchwald

"The worst thing that a totalitarian government can do is to give its people a little democracy," said Wabash of the Political Dynamics Institute. "It's like making them a little pregnant."

I was in his office and we were following uprisings all over the world on his short-wave radio. He pointed to Soviet Georgia on a map. "Every time Gorbachev loosens up and offers his people a bunch of grapes, they want the whole vineyard. All of the republics are demanding either autonomy or complete freedom from the mother country. It proves that if you are a dictator and allow just a small amount of light into your country, nobody is going to say 'thank you.'"

"Why would anybody want to live in a democracy when you can't get tickets to 'Phantom of the Opera'?" I asked.

Wabash answered, "The dilemma is how to reform the old system when people want a new one. I'm not Red-baiting when I say that communism doesn't work. Gorbachev is offering Marxism with freedom, and it is a contradiction in terms."

I agreed. "I think that the Russians should back off and take a serious look at what they are demonstrating for. We are a society of pizzas and Big Macs. We depend on Japan for our TV sets, and South Korea and Malaysia for our clothes. The New York Times crossword puzzle is much more difficult today than it was 10 years ago."

Wabash said, "We are not only seeing an internal revolution but an external one as well. All the Soviet bloc countries are demanding their freedom. Every country behind the Iron Curtain is poised for true democratic reform, including elections and multiple-party voting."

"They must be stopped," I declared. "If they all adopt the capitalist system, there won't be an empty parking place in the whole wide world."

"The political storm clouds are not only blowing over Eastern Europe but over China as well," Wabash explained. "We are watching Chinese students demanding the same democratic privileges that we have."

"Don't they know if that happens, they will have to read the National Enquirer every week and watch Morton Downey and Geraldo Rivera on television?"

"It doesn't matter. They want our way of life, even if it means that students in China will be wearing Ralph Lauren clothes to demonstrations. You can't stop the people once they have taken to the streets."

"Do the Estonian people have any idea what it's like to be ruled by Mayor Barry?" I asked.

"They don't care. They are willing to take Barry over some crooked Soviet bureaucrat who is telling them how to live. The world is a differe⅞t place now from what it was 12 months ago. No one is demonstrating for communism or fascism. They're all yelling for their right to phone in to a radio talk show host and make a fortune in the lottery."

"Someone has to tell them before it's too late that democracy has many holes in it. It's a messy system because no one agrees with anybody else. A totalitarian government speaks with a single voice — a democracy talks with a million. Besides, under communism, you don't have savings and loans banks failing every day."

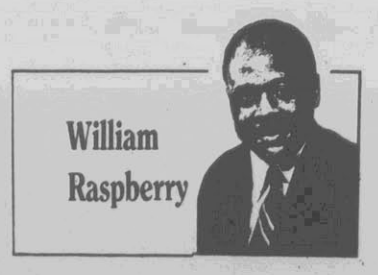

Wabash said, "I'm afraid that you can't put the genie back in the bottle. Whatever the Russian people wind up with, it isn't going to look anything like Lenin's dream."

"Maybe when the Soviets find out what it costs to stay in an American hospital, they'll reject any ideas they ever had of being like us," I suggested.

Wabash shook his head. "They're buying our system, warts and all. Even the KGB is trying to get prayers back into the schools."

Public Service & College: No Thanks?

WASHINGTON — No American who wants to go to college should be prevented from doing so for lack of money.

Every American ought to be willing to serve his country — whether in the military or in some volunteer program that promotes the public good.

Pose the two ideas separately, and you're likely to get a national consensus in favor of them. But Sen. Sam Nunn (D-Ga.) and Rep. Dave McCurdy (D-Okla.) have put them together, and the likelihood is that their proposal is a dead letter.

The problem: The legislation they introduced early this year would not merely allow would-be students to earn tuition credits by enlisting in approved national-service programs, but national service would be the only way to get federal subsidies for college training. Student grants and loans (save for certain exceptions for the disabled) would be phased out completely over five years.

Is this common sense or blatant discrimination against the poor? A realistic opportunity for youngsters whose families can't afford to send them to college, or a species of conscription into low-paid drudgery?

Nunn and McCurdy might have expected their proposal to launch a serious debate. What they have heard from a parade of witnesses — each praising the idea of public service — is: Thanks, but no thanks.

Johnetta Cole, president of Spelman College, in testimony last week before the House Committee on Education and Labor, paid the obligatory homage to the "idea of national service...as old as the nation itself." But then she noted her concern that "any legislation that would substitute service for access would be a cruel hoax" upon low-income students.

Her testimony, presented on behalf of the 42 member schools of the United Negro College Fund, found ready echoes in the views of the presidents of Rutgers, San Francisco State, Texas A&I and Norwich University.

The thrust of it: that the present loan-and-grant programs are working just fine and shouldn't be tampered with, that national service should be considered only as an additional means of access to college, and that forcing high-school graduates to perform up to two years of service before starting college would mean that many of them wouldn't go to college at all.

"Those who enter college directly after high school have a far better chance of completing college," Cole said. "College delayed is too often college denied."

Rep. William D. Ford (D-Mich.) has put it more bluntly. Nunn-McCurdy, he wrote in the Chronicle of Higher Education, "holds the educational aspirations of the poor hostage to public service, while excusing the affluent."

Aren't there arguments to be made on the other side? Can't the case be made that people who want to go to college but cannot afford it should not be unwilling to undertake a national-service trade-off? That those who delay college while performing national service are likely to have a clearer idea of the courses they would like to pursue and to be more serious students? That few people not already so inclined would enlist in public service if student loans and grants remain available? That the chief beneficiaries of college education — the students themselves — ought to be willing to pay for it, in service if they lack the cash?

But hardly anyone is making these arguments. Most of the testimony has addressed Nunn-McCurdy primarily as a means of supporting one of a half-dozen less restrictive proposals, such as the one introduced by Democratic Sen. Barbara Mikulski (Md.) and Rep. David Bonoir (Mich.).

'Can't the case be made that people who want to go to college but cannot afford it should not be unwilling to undertake a national-service trade-off? That those who delay college while performing national service are likely to have a clearer idea of the courses they would like to pursue and to be more serious students?'

The best guess is that none of the bills will be enacted, except possibly on a limited-scope pilot basis.

Not only is there no constituency for the Nunn-McCurdy approach among the poor and minorities who would be its putative beneficiaries, but the fate of the legislation rests in the hands of committee chairs who oppose it: Rep. Augustus Hawkins (D-Calif.) of House Education and Labor and Sen. Edward M. Kennedy (D-Mass.) of the Senate Labor Committee.

As a result, the student loan program, criticized on the right for its high default rate and on the left for its ungenerosity, is likely to remain the principal means of college access for the nonaffluent, and national service, everybody's wonderful idea, will remain the hit-or-miss proposition it already is.

Senators Support Four-Year Legislative Terms

By F. Alan Boyce
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — North Carolina voters would get another chance to vote on four-year legislative terms under a proposed constitutional amendment approved 34-13 by the Senate, and supporters hope this time the outcome would be different.

Sen. George Daniel, D-Caswell, said most of the arguments are the same as in 1982, when the public voted 522,181 to 163,058 against four-year terms. He said the change would encourage better candidates to run for office and would help lawmakers keep up with an ever-increasing work load.

"Certainly it goes without saying that having to run once every four years ... as opposed to every other year would drastically decrease the costs we all incur," he added.

In addition, this time the voters will be trying to balance the legislative branch against an executive branch that may have veto power — another proposed constitutional amendment already approved by the Senate, Daniel said.

Sen. Don Kincaid, R-Caldwell, said two-year terms make legislators more accountable to the people.

"Each session, Republicn or Democrat, we keep staying down here. We keep getting more involved and consequently we keep moving toward a full-time legislature and that bothers me," he said.

Daniel countered that the governor, lieutenant governor and many judges serve four-year terms with no apparent problems.

Sen. Jim Johnson, R-Cabarrus, told Kincaid it wouldn't be so bad to have a full-time legislature to deal with such issues as hazardous waste, AIDS and the changing role of the family.

"It's a lot more complicated than it was in '67, Don," he said. "It's a lot more involved."

Sen. Dan Simpson, R-Burke, warned that the public might perceive the proposal as an attempt to "unlevel the playing field."

He said currently Republicans pick up seats in presidential years and Democrats make up ground in off years and the change would "improve the position of the majority party, which there's no doubt has been slipping over the last few years."

The bill was approved over those objections, with Democrats Marc Basnight, D-Dare, Bill Barker, D-Pamlico and Jim Speed, D-Franklin, joining 10 Republicans voting in opposition.

Earlier, Kincaid made no apologies when he offered an amendment to put legislators on the ballot during presidential years. The bill calls for off-year elections.

"Obviously, this amendment is designed to help Republicans" who offer more conservative presidential candidates, he said.

Sen. Dennis Winner, D-Buncombe, agreed that it would hurt Democrats. But he said there was more to it than that.

"If it were possible to look at it in a nonpartisan way, I think it is also a bad amendment with respect to the people," he said, noting that the public usually focuses only on the top races and might ignore legislative races that have a far greater impact on their lives.

Johnson argued that there would be some merit in having the governor and one General Assembly elected at the same time so they could work together.

"Why not put the team on the field all at the same time and they come off at the same time?" he asked.

But Sen. Ollie Harris, D-Cleveland, moved to kill the amendment and the Senate agreed with a 30-17 vote.

Tentative Education Deal OK'd

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — Gov. Jim Martin and a group of Senate leaders have struck a tentative deal on a major education package that includes a voluntary merit-pay plan and a new system of performance standards for local school systems, a newspaper says.

The agreement "in concept" — as it was described by one of Martin's advisers — would fall short of Martin's goal of a mandatory statewide career-ladder system of merit pay for teachers, The News and Observer of Raleigh reported.

The tentative agreement also could lead to 6 percent pay raises for teachers and state employees without a 1-cent increase in the state sales tax proposed by Martin.

The deal also has the support of the North Carolina Association of Educators.

"We certainly support the concept and like many things in the bill," said Paul Pulley, a lobbyist for the organization, which has fought Martin's plan for a statewide career ladder.

"The governor has signed onto it," said Senate Democratic Leader Henson Barnes of Wayne County.

"He said he'd like to take it by the arm and try to help us," Barnes said. "The NCAE has signed onto it. It will provide performance-based teaching to our students, and the people of North Carolina will pay for that."

Martin stopped short of an outright endorsement of the Senate proposal, saying there were "still some terms to work out," particularly with regard to giving school districts the option of designing their own methods of rewarding teacher excellence.

But Martin said he was encouraged by the prospect of giving teachers an option of climbing onto the career ladder.

"I'd accept that, because I think a majority of people would volunteer for it," he said. "There are some good things in that bill, and I hope we can work it out."

Senate Approves Victory Threshhold

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — With virtually no debate, the state Senate has approved a bill that would allow the top vote-getter in a primary to win his party's nomination as long as he has at least 40 percent of the vote.

When the issue was first voted on Wednesday, some Democrats charged that Republicans had duped the Democratic majority into believing that the bill would help minorities and women win elections. But they said it would only help Republicans win more seats against minority and female opponents.

The only senator to speak on the bill Thursday, when the measure won final approval 34-12, was Sen. Ollie Harris, D-Cleveland, who thanked the Democrats who had spoken the day before for saying what he thought.

"Minority people think that it's going to ... let them get elected," Sen. Bob Swain, D-Buncombe, said Wednesday. "It might get some of them nominated, but it will never work to elect anybody except more Republicans."

Sen. Dennis Winner, D-Buncombe, had argued that a candidate who gets the nomination with 40 percent of the vote, while the second finisher gets 39 percent has not met the purpose of a primary — to get a consensus candidate who represents the party.

"So that my grandchildren will know I stayed in there fighting to the end, I call for the 'ayes' and 'nos,'" Harris said, asking that the vote be taken electronically rather than by voice vote.

House Panel OKs Higher Mandatory Age For School

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — A bill to increase the mandatory school age to 18 by 1990 and limit the number of hours high school students can work has passed a House committee.

The bill is one of several attempts to address North Carolina's soaring dropout problem. It passed the House Education Committee despite objections that it could increase dropouts.

Rep. Billy Watkins, D-Granville, said 25,000 youths who otherwise would drop out will have to remain in school when the mandatory school age increases to 17 on July 1. The age would go to 18 a year later under the bill, which will go to the Appropriations Committee.

The limitation on work would address what Watkins called the greatest cause of dropouts.

"Sixty-seven percent of those who dropped out worked in excess of 20 hours per week," Watkins quoted from a recent study.

Due to long working hours, "They stay home one day and then they stay home two," he said. "It becomes a force of habit and then they have dropped out."

Martin Reappoints Price, Three Others To Wildlife Commission

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — Saying that some members ignored warnings to stay out of personnel decisions, Gov. Jim Martin has named seven new members to the N.C. Wildlife Commission and reappointed four commissioners.

"I guess the essence of the problem is that several of them were continuing to participate in personnel matters that should have been left up to the commission executives of the Wildlife Resources Division," Martin said Thursday at his weekly news conference.

On Monday the General Assembly enacted legislation ending the terms of all commissioners and giving the governor authority to make new appointments.

"There's a mixture of people with backgrounds (in fishing, hunting and protection of game) and will assure that those kinds of considerations will be taken into account," Martin said.

Over the past few months, the panel has been its work overshadowed by clashing personalities, internal squabbles and a grab for power, some commissioners and observers have said.

The discord pitted commission Chairman Eugene Price and six other commissioners against a faction that included Robert Hester of Fairfield, a wildlife commissioner who last year refused Martin's request to resign after he blocked the promotion of a wildlife officer.

Price was reappointed to the commission; Hester was not.

"I welcome the opportunity to work with a commission that can begin with a clean slate and a singleness of purpose," Price said in a telephone interview.

"It was not inappropriate for the governor to return to the commission his previous appointees who had stood up for his policies and carried out his instructions," he said. "At the same time, it should be noted that some excellent commissioners whose terms would have ended in two months went down with the ship. They should be remembered not for how they went down but for the great service that they rendered."

Among the commissioners replaced was Price's uncle, M. Woodrow Price.

Also reappointed were Robert E. Barnhill Jr. of Tarboro; William H. McCall of Asheville; and Stuart R. Paine of Southern Pines.

Paine, who previously served as an at-large commissioner, now represents the 6th wildlife district, replacing Allen D. Miles Sr. Ferrell Blount III of Bethel was appointed to Paine's at-large seat.

The other replacements included: Maughan Hull of Elizabeth City who replaced Hester; R.G. Sowers III of Burgaw replaced Woodrow Price; Ted B. Lockerman of Clinton replaced R. Reed Allen; Richard Jarrett of Haw River replaced Eddie C. Bridges; Richard Budd of Advance replaced Howell W. Woltz; and Joseph Neisler of Kings Mountain replaced Jack Hamrick.

On other topics, Martin said he supported a measure introduced in the Legislature that would place the governor and lieutenant governor on the same ticket. But he said the issue should not be coupled with the issue of gubernatorial veto.

With the Legislature virtually assured of slashing the state abortion fund and the U.S. Supreme court hearing arguments in a Missouri case that could upset the 16-year-old Roe vs. Wade decision, Martin said he did not support an "absolute prohibition of abortion."

Martin said he believed abortion should be an option in cases of rape, incest or endangerment to the mother.

"To go beyond that, I have difficulty making that determination," he said.

Every man needs a god. Every man has a god. Every man's god is not God. But every man's god is the choice of his own heart. The very personal subject of where you stand with your god, and with God is an important issue—more important than this life, because it concerns death. And if you trade God for a god, you've traded eternal life for death—which is a poor substitute.

Trailers

RALEIGH (AP) — A bill to increase the length of trailers that truckers can tow on North Carolina highways won a House subcommittee's approval despite objections that longer trailers could compromise safety.

Chris Scott, president of the North Carolina AFL-CIO, said truckers believe the 53-foot trailers would not be safe, particularly when turning.

"I think at some point the legislature needs to stand up and take a position saying that's enough, the trucks are getting big enough and we need to have a safe highway for the motoring public."

The bill approved by the Infrastructure Subcommittee on Highways would allow 53-foot trailers, up from the current limit of 48 feet. The bill now goes before the full Infrastructure Committee.

Oil Spill

DURHAM (AP) — About $50,000 is being spent to clean up a fuel oil spill at the city's Brown Water Treatment Plant.

Terry Rolan, director of the Durham Water Resources Department, said Thursday that 500 gallons of heating fuel oil spilled last Friday in the emergency generator building, connected to the plant. "It was due to a combination of human error and equipment malfunction," he said.

The fuel is used to heat the building and operate the emergency generator. A large fuel tank outside the building is used to pump oil to the day tank. When the oil spilled, it seeped into the floor drainage of the building and on into a storm sewer and drainage way that serves as a tributary to Cabin Branch.

A beaver dam slowed the oil flow.

Marine Suit

JACKSONVILLE, N.C. (AP) — The parents of a 17-year-old Swansboro youth who died after being struck by a Marine Corps truck last August have filed a claim for more than $1 million against the Marine Corps, the family's attorney said.

Gerald and Elizabeth Pickett of Swansboro, parents of Jason Franklin Pickett, filed the claim with the Office of the Judge Advocate General at Marine Corps Headquarters in Washington. It seeks $1 million for wrongful death and $15,000 in property damage, the family's attorney, Mark L. Waple of Fayetteville, said on Wednesday.

Pickett, principal of Swansboro Middle School, declined to comment on the claim.

Jason Pickett died Aug. 16, 1988, after his small car was struck by a five-ton military truck at the intersection of N.C. 24 and N.C. 172.

Fatal Fire

KILL DEVIL HILLS, N.C. (AP) — A Staunton, Va., man died early Thursday after a fire at his Outer Banks apartment, fire officials say.

William Shinpock, 27, was trapped in an upstairs apartment here when the fire broke out around 2:30 a.m. Members of the Dare County Emergency Medical Service were unable to revive him.

The fire, which was confined to the living room, apparently was ignited by smoking materials, said Lt. Carl Leibnell with the Kill Devil Hills Fire Department.

No one else was in the apartment when the blaze broke out.

OB-GYN Hospital

GREENSBORO (AP) — State health officials have approved a $6.4 million project to convert Greensboro Hospital into the state's first freestanding obstetrics and gynecology hospital.

Greensboro Hospital Executive Vice President James L. Brexler said the conversation project should be complete by June 1990. Major construction is expected to begin in August.

Murder Review

FAYETTEVILLE (AP) — Following reports during the retrial of Timothy Hennis that someone else may have killed Kathryn Eastburn and two of her children, the SBI will review the investigation into the 1985 slayings, officials say.

"In re-evaluating the case, as a result of Mr. Hennis' acquittal, we have requested that the SBI review the matter," said Cumberland County Sheriff Morris Bedsole.

Hennis, 31, a former Fort Bragg soldier, was acquitted last week of three counts of first-degree murder and one count of first-degree rape in the case. He had been accused of raping and murdering Mrs. Eastburn, 32, and killing two of her daughters, Kara, 5, and Erin, 3, in May 1985.

Hennis was convicted in June 1986 and sentenced to death, but was granted a new trial by the state Supreme Court in 1988.

Barbecue Rally

RALEIGH (AP) — Pressing for better pay and benefits, hundreds of state government employees lobbied lawmakers by having a barbecue lunch with them outside the Legislative Building.

More than 300 district leaders of the State Employees Association of North Carolina took the day off Thursday to travel to Raleigh for the association's General Assembly appreciation day.

During a lunch-time rally, two large tractor trailer trucks hauled in eastern-style barbecue, slaw and cornbread sticks from Wilson to feed hundreds.

State Conducting Inquiry Into Oil Companies' Increase In Gas Prices

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — The N.C. Justice Department is conducting a "preliminary inquiry" into the possibility that oil companies conspired to artificially raise prices in the wake of the Alaskan oil spill last month, officials say.

"We're just looking under every rock," said Justice Department spokesman John Simmons.

The probe is not based on any specific allegations of criminal activity, but centers around the fact that retail gasoline prices have risen dramatically since the March 24 tanker wreck temporarily shut down the Trans-Alaska Pipeline, Simmons said.

The department's inquiry so far indicates that many "justifiable" reasons — including the spill — may have been behind the hike, Simmons said.

The department has won other cases involving allegations of gasoline price fixing in recent years, Simmons told The Asheville Citizen. "This wouldn't be unprecedented," he said.

Prices at Carolina gas pumps averaged $1.17 on April 14, according to the Carolina Motor Club, a 10.3-cent increase since late March.

Rep. Robert Hunter, D-McDowell, released Thursday a letter he sent to Attorney General Lacy Thornburg the same day asking him to "consider whether there are possible legal grounds indicating violation of the anti-trust laws or price fixing."

Thornburg and Hunter — who co-chaired the legislature's Highway Study Commission — have been discussing the rise in gas prices for a couple of weeks, Simmons said.

"The feeling of the public is there's no good reason for" the price hikes, Hunter said.

Besides their impact on consumers' pocketbooks, the increases could also make it harder for the General Assembly to pass a gas tax hike to fund an $8.6 billion roads package the legislature is now considering, Hunter said.

The Justice Department has consulted with petroleum analysts in an effort to determine why prices have risen, and discussed a multistate probe with counterparts in other states, Simmons said. The focus of the effort now is to determine if there is enough justification to launch a full-scale investigation, he said.

But an oil industry representative said he can see no reason to think that gas prices have risen as the result of collusion.

"It would be impossible" for distributors in the state to conspire to raise prices, said Don Ward of the N.C. Petroleum Marketers Association.

"There's no way they could get together," he said. "You're talking about 700 to 800 wholesalers or distributors."

"If it did happen, I'd say it would have to be at the refinery level," Ward said.

The price jumps appear to be due to a worldwide increase in the price of crude oil that started last fall combined with a shortfall of crude in the United States caused by the spill, Ward said.

"The oil industry ... wasn't very smart in timing these increases," he said.

So why didn't the gradual increase in worldwide prices show up until after the spill?

"You've asked a question that a lot of people have asked," he said.

Furniture Retailers Win First Round In Advertising Battle

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — A bill that has pitted furniture makers against the retail stores that sell their products has been narrowly approved by a Senate committee.

The Senate Manufacturing and Labor Committee voted 7-6 to approve a bill which forbids furniture manufacturers from retaliating against retailers who advertise in other parts of the state or country and use toll-free lines to make telephone sales.

Retailers in other states have complained to manufacturers that customers come to their stores, pick out a piece of furniture and then call North Carolina "discounters" to get the same furniture at a cheaper price.

The manufacturers began fighting the problem by requiring retailers to have specific amounts of sales space, to run certain types of advertising and pulling their lines from stores that used toll-free lines.

"This whole bill has given me some concerns," said Sen. Bill Goldston, D-Rockingham. "I'm concerned for our retailers, but I'm also worried we're getting into industry's area.

"We're trying to level out the playing field, but I believe that should be left to free enterprise to work out," Goldston said.

Sen. Frank Block, D-New Hanover, the bill's sponsor, rejected an appeal from Sen. Marshall Rauch, D-Gaston, to delay action on the revised bill for a week. Rauch has supported manufacturers in the controversy over the bill.

"Everything that has been taken out of the bill — and that's all these changes do — weakens the retailers' side," Block said. "Everything that is changed enhances the position of the manufacturers."

Manufacturers had argued that they had the right to regulate sales of their product and that the legislature was infringing on free enterprise by attempting to regulate contracts between furniture makers and sellers.

Block's revised bill would forbid manufacturers from limiting retail sales to any particular class of retail customers — specifically customers in a certain geographic area, would prohibit them from limiting sales only to people who have visited the retailer's store and would allow telephone sales.

The bill would not prohibit manufacturers from setting "reasonable requirements" on display space and advertising, and would not force furniture makers to make furniture available to all retailers at the same wholesale prices.

The original bill require makers to treat all retailers the same on wholesale prices.

Sen. Ollie Harris, D-Cleveland, moved that the bill be "laid upon the table," or killed, but Sen. George Daniel, D-Caswell, the committee chairman, ruled that the motion died for a lack of second just as Rauch seconded it.

George Dies

RALEIGH (AP) — George the python, the restful reptile visited by thousands of schoolchildren at the state Museum of Natural Sciences, has been put to death after a two-month battle with cancer.

"We're all sad," said museum spokesman Eloise Potter. "It's like losing any pet. But he lived a long and useful life."

George, a Burmese python at least 28 years old — compared to a record 30 years for the species — was diagnosed in March with glandular cancer of the jaw, which had made it difficult for him to eat, Ms. Potter said. On March 24, a team of veterinarians performed surgery on the giant snake in an effort to keep the cancer from spreading.

For a time, she said, he seemed to be improving but took a turn for the worse this month. Doctors determined last week that the malignancy had spread to George's lower jaw.

George, 16 feet long and once weighing 120 pounds, was down to about 100 pounds by the time he died, officials said.

On Wednesday, he was sent to the Smithsonian Institution's National Museum of Natural Sciences in Washington, where he was put to death.

Labor Department Contracts Studied

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — Labor Commissioner John Brooks has required about one-third of his employees to sign labor contracts for more than a decade, but the state Attorney General's Office is examining whether the contracts are legally binding.

"I think there is some question about his authority to enforce them," said Andrew A. Vanore Jr., chief deputy attorney general.

G.C. Davis, assistant state personnel director, said he had been told by Vanore that the contracts were not binding. And state personnel Director Richard Lee said he planned to ask the State Personnel Commission in June to ban such contracts.

"We find that this kind of activity is creating problems for employees who entered into these things," Lee said. "As an employing unit, we're going to say that our employees will not be held responsible for any of these activities in the future."

Except for state employees working overseas for the Department of Commerce, Lee said he knew of no employees subject to the State Personnel Act who are required to sign contracts.

Brooks requires some of his employees to sign employment contracts binding them to work for his department for up to three years. When employees break the contract, the commissioner penalizes them, either by withholding their final paychecks, taking away unused vacation time or both, The News and Observer of Raleigh reported.

Brooks said he has required about one-third of his 240 employees to sign contracts. He said he's been doing that since he was first elected commissioner in 1977.

Brooks gave no estimate of how often employees try to break their contracts, but he said no one had escaped reimbursing the department for leaving before a contract is up.

"I don't think we have any case of anybody not paying back what's due," he said, adding that the penalties range up to $5,000.

He said the contracts protect taxpayers. Brooks said he requires them for jobs that are difficult to fill, that require training, or that involve programs in which reports must be turned in at the end of the year to qualify for federal reimbursement.

The department might spend $60,000 in salary and another $10,000 on training before inspectors are fully qualified, he said.

Solons Say Non-Working Judges Shouldn't Get Salary Increases

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Five congressmen put a trio of leading judges on notice: the pay raise so vigorously sought by federal judges may well depend on denying it to senior judges who do no judicial work.

"Pay raises should be reserved for those who work," said Rep. Robert Kastenmeier, D-Wis., chairman of the House courts subcommittee.

His message was echoed by four Republican and Democratic colleagues at a hearing Thursday. They were taken aback by testimony from the judicial leaders, who are seeking a 30 percent pay raise for all federal judges.

U.S. Circuit Judge Frank Coffin depicted a federal bench demoralized over the loss of a 51 percent pay raise earlier this year, but he displayed no willingness to compromise in response to complaints over pay that members of Congress hear when they go home to the voters.

"I have never seen so many judges at all levels, in all courts, and in all parts of the country so disheartened as I do today," Coffin said. "Ours is a lunar landscape with all of the stark and ominous silhouettes that the term implies."

He called Feb. 7, the day Congress defeated the pay raise, "Black Tuesday."

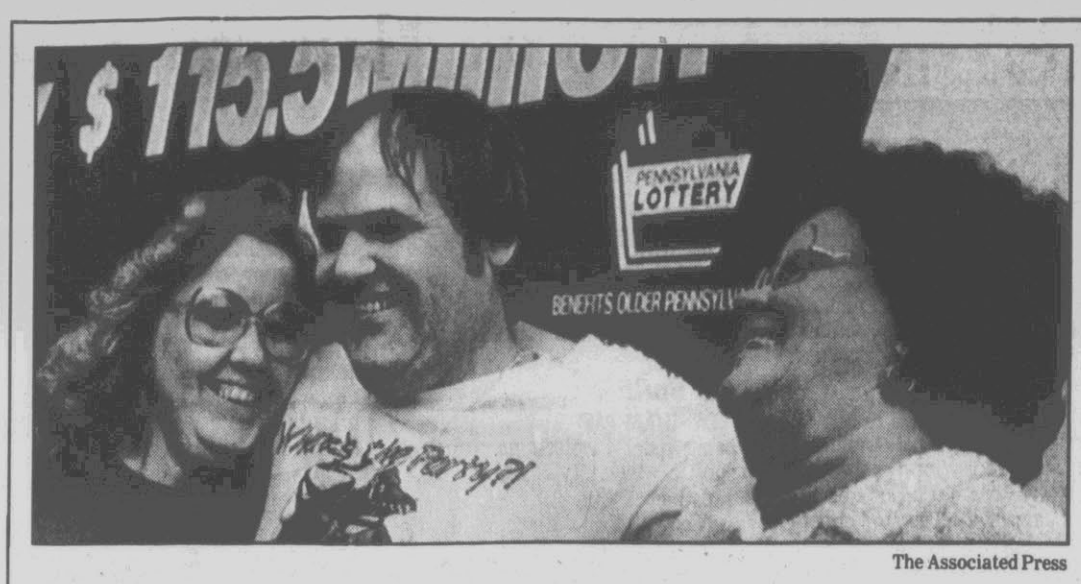

But Rep. Howard Coble, R-N.C., replied, "Many voters in my district do not regard it as Black Tuesday, and I'm one of them."

Rep. James Sensenbrenner, R-Wis., said, "One catalyst for that defeat was the front page story in most of the nation's newspapers that former Chief Justice Warren Burger" and other senior judges who do no judicial work would get the raise.

He said he went to four town meetings in his district at that time "and I heard about that 50 times if I heard about it once."

Then he offered the three judges what he called "a little bit of friendly advice: the senior judge situation must be resolved if you want a pay raise. ... And I've not seen much in the way of constructive suggestions from you."

Rep. George Sangmeister, D-Ill., said he too was peppered with objections at town meetings after the news stories.

HUD Audit Says Housing Program Feathered 'Nests'

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — An investigation into a $225 million federal housing program shows it was used during the Reagan years "to feather the financial nest" of former administration officials and other prominent Republicans, the House Banking Committee chairman says.

Rep. Henry B. Gonzalez, D-Texas, said he will hold hearings on the report by the inspector general of the Department of Housing and Urban Development, which suggested favoritism and cronyism in awarding federal housing renovation contracts.

The report, released this week, documented how former Reagan administration figures and other Republicans raked in handsome profits on consulting contracts to rehabilitate subsidized apartments for the poor.

The consultants included President Reagan's first interior secretary, James Watt; the late John Mitchell, attorney general under President Nixon; former Republican Sen. Ed Brooke of Massachusetts, and former Kentucky Gov. Louis Nunn, also a Republican.

Other consultants included former top HUD officials under Reagan-era Secretary Samuel Pierce, with one charging fees of $1.3 million. Still other former officials under Pierce participated as developers in projects to renovate subsidized housing for the poor, benefited by the HUD contracts.

Inspector General Paul Adams drew a comparison with the Pentagon procurement scandal, with former government officials drawing big fees as consultants to developers seeking government contracts.

But Adams said he had found no evidence that active HUD officials had been involved in influence-peddling and made no charges of criminal activity.

The rehab program is a $225 million a year endeavor that survived in Congress despite efforts by the Reagan administration to kill it. Through it, developers win contracts to acquire and renovate existing housing and receive HUD guarantees of subsidized rents for 15 years.

"It is indeed ironic that a program that the Reagan administration had sought to terminate for six years was misused to feather the financial nest of HUD and administration favorites," Gonzalez said Thursday.

He praised the action by HUD Secretary Jack Kemp, who ordered a halt to 35 pending awards worth $100 million and audits of existing contracts.

Adams said that while he had found no illegality in HUD's Moderate Rehabilitation Program, contracts were distributed in ways that suggested favoritism and use of insider information.

Money for over half the units audited went to just 10 states, which by HUD formulas were entitled to just 16 percent.

Adams said he had turned over the 700-page investigative report to the FBI and Justice Department.

Adams said in a memo to Kemp that developers and local public housing agencies "were led to believe the consultants enjoyed a special relationship with persons making recommendations and decisions."

Addressing the Pentagon purchasing scandal, Adams said in his memo:

"In Defense, the contractors were paying consultants to obtain information to influence contract awards. At HUD, the developers were paying consultants to influence awards of moderate rehabilitation units to public housing authorities.

"The difference between the two situations is that the investigation at Defense was able to prove that the consultants paid government employees for information and for selecting a particular contractor. Our investigation at HUD was unable to substantiate that government employees received any financial consideration from the consultants."

Adams' report questioned the role of Thomas T. Demery, the former assistant secretary and federal housing commissioner, who was responsible for the program beginning in 1986. The investigation looked into contracts going back to 1984.

Investigators found that a nonprofit charity, FOOD for Africa, which Demery headed before joining HUD, received $290,000 from recipients of HUD contracts under the program. Efforts to locate Demery for comment were unsuccessful Thursday.

Adams' report named 11 former HUD officials who participated in project contracts as developers and owners, consultants, or representatives of lenders.

Among them was former Under Secretary Philip Abrams and former Assistant Secretary for Housing Philip Winn. Both were presidential appointees, and later became owner-developers in half a dozen rehabilitation projects.

Winn is now the U.S. ambassador to Switzerland; efforts to reach him through the State Department were unsuccessful.

Abrams did not return a reporter's call to his Colorado office.

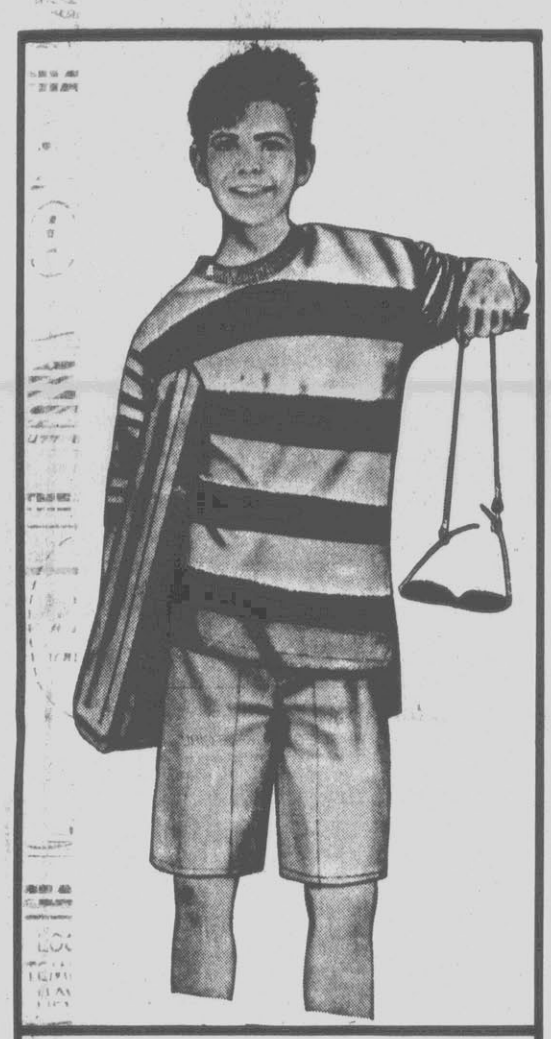

Others included Joseph Strauss, a former special assistant to Pierce, who the report said collected $1.3 million in consultant fees on such projects. Pierce's one-time executive assistant, Lance Wilson, was identified as an owner-developer in six projects.

Watt collected a $300,000 fee as a consultant on a 312-unit project in Essex, Md.

Alaskan Residents Aren't Buying Exxon's Views On Spill Cleanup

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

VALDEZ, Alaska — Hours after Exxon showed off its beach-cleaning effort to reporters, an oil company executive got an earful when he tried to convince a fishing community that things were looking better.

Exxon got good reviews from a state geologist who watched Smith Island being prepared for pregnant seals. But citizens of Cordova let Exxon vice president Luyesse LeGrange know they don't see the same progress.

Michele O'Leary, one of 300 people at Cordova High School's gym Thursday night to talk with LeGrange and others coordinating the spill cleanup, disputed Exxon's claims about the number of skimmers it operates.

When Exxon said 19 were working in the sound, an overflight by pilots for the Cordova United Fishermen Union found only three, she said. Another occasion Exxon said it had 45 skimmers at work and the union found only five.

"When can we expect to see the situation improve?" asked O'Leary, a member of the fishermen's union.

"I hardly think that's the case with all the equipment we have out there," LeGrange said. "I'd be most suprised if we have equipment not working."

After a slow start with officials questioning each other, the two-hour meeting began to get lively as the audience was allowed to join the inquiry.

Dennis Kelso, the state's chief environmentalist, said, "There has been a long pattern of claims by Exxon that don't bear out when people go look at what's happening."

Kelso said he wasn't accusing LeGrange of lying, but that "nobody believes" the company's recent announcement that the shoreline cleanup was ahead of schedule — a mention that drew laughs from the audience.

"I can tell you this is not a technical issue, not a biological issue or an economic issue," Kelso continued. "It's a moral issue. Until Exxon steps up to their moral responsibility and stops trying to shift blame to somebody else we're going to have problems getting the kind of performance we all expect, whether it's in the water or on the shore."

LeGrange denied there was any shifting of blame.

"But perhaps there's some sharing that needs to be considered," he said. "In the end, the truth will come out in hearings, in court rooms where people are testifying under oath and subject to cross examination."

National Transportation Safety Board hearings on the accident and the emergency response have been set for May 16-19 in Anchorage.

The tone of the town meeting was sharp but polite, a contrast to the first meeting of Exxon officials and Cordova residents dependent on fishing in Prince William Sound for their livelihood.

At the earlier meeting, speakers were interrupted and there was considerable shouting. The confrontation occurred shortly after the Exxon Valdez wrecked on Bligh Reef and put more than 10 millions of oil into the sound.

The newly arrived USS Juneau sent its first crews to beaches on Smith Island Thursday, with reporters on hand to watch water hoses turned on the thick, black goop coating the rocks. Standing on the beach was difficult.

North Takes Time For Speaking Date

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Jurors in Oliver North's trial resumed deliberations today, the seventh day they have been considering 12 criminal charges against the former White House aide in the Iran-Contra affair.

North made a quick trip to Cincinnati to speak Thursday night to an invitation-only audience at the Bankers Club and then returned to Washington to await his fate.

The former National Security Council staffer spoke about traditional values and received a standing ovation from his audience, according to Bankers Club members who heard his speech.

Steven Doherty, an Ohio State sophomore from Cincinnati, said North spoke highly of the Bankers Club's next scheduled guest — former President Reagan — who will speak to the group in September.

An anti-Contra group picketed outside the club before the speech.

"We don't care whether North sees us or not," said Roy Silver, organizer for the Central American Task Force. "We're demonstrating against the Bankers (Club) for giving him $25,000 while there are homeless people in this city sleeping on the streets."

The Bankers Club refused to say how much North was being paid for his speech.

"You're all a bunch of pro-communists" shouted a well-dressed businessman at the demonstrators. "I'm just a pedestrian," said the man as he took two flyers from a demonstrator and tore them into pieces. He declined to identify himself.

There was no indication of whether jurors were nearing a verdict. There have been no notes from the jury since Monday, when a nurse was sent in to check a panel member's blood pressure.

The nine women and three men were beginning their second week isolated from their families. They are shuttled back and forth between the U.S. courthouse and an area hotel by federal marshals.

North has not been whiling away the time. He has made several other speeches since jury selection in his trial began on Jan. 31. He has been getting $25,000 an appearance through the Washington Speakers Bureau.

North, who has had at least three lawyers at the defense table and at times as many as five, faces legal bills estimated at $380,000 a month.

North is accused of lying to Congress to cover up his role in secretly assisting the Nicaraguan Contras and lying to the attorney general about aspects of the diversion of funds to the Contras from the Iran arms sales. He also faces charges that he accepted a $13,800 home security system and converted $4,300 in travelers checks from a Contra leader to his own use.

Congressmen Protest Church Attacks

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Thirty-two members of Congress are asking El Salvador's president-elect for action to halt the alleged persecution of churches by members of his right-wing political party and by the Salvadoran armed forces.

The letter Thursday to President-elect Alfredo Cristiani denounced the "dramatic escalation of violence committed by factions from both the right and left" over the past few weeks."

But it singled out for attention recent "verbal and physical attacks" allegedly committed by members of Cristiani's right-wing ARENA Party against Salvadoran church groups.

The letter, drafted by Rep. Pete Stark, D-Calif., and signed by him and 31 of his House colleagues, said it is believed that violence against church groups is believed to be connected to their demands for a negotiated political solution to the war, their defense of human rights, their demand for an end to war-related aid to El Salvador and their efforts to relive the suffering of refugees and displaced people.

Citing a list of incidents since March 27, the House members said a teacher in a Baptist school was assassinated, a Lutheran church worker was abducted, and the offices of church groups broken into and ransacked by officers of the Treasury police.

They also complained that ARENA Party members and troops of the Salvadoran armed forces have threatened the legal aid office of the Roman Catholic Church in El Salvador for issuing a report "which was critical of the rise of death-squad-related violence."

"We urge you to stop the persecution of the churches of El Salvador and the communities they serve," the House members told Cristiani.

"We support action to end human rights violations and we look for a negotiated solution to the conflict within your country," they said.

Desegregation Suit Filed In Hartford

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

HARTFORD, Conn. — Civil rights leaders are suing the state of Connecticut contending its schools make it impossible for poor, minority students to get the same education as their white, suburban counterparts.

The desegregation lawsuit was filed Thursday in Hartford Superior Court on behalf of a black Hartford fourth-grader and 16 other children and teen-agers, arguing that racial imbalance in Hartford area schools violates the state constitution's guarantee against racial discrimination.

The lawsuit contends that black and Hispanic inner-city children and white suburban children are all suffering under greater Hartford's racially divided school systems.

"Black children going to black schools and white children going to white schools is inherently unequal," said Wesley Horton, one of 10 lawyers who will argue the case. "It's got to be stopped."

The lead plaintiff in the lawsuit, 10-year-old Milo Sheff, attends Hartford's Annie Fisher School, where 99 percent of the students are black or Hispanic.

Six of the 17 plaintiffs in the lawsuit are white, including two children from West Hartford, an affluent suburb where schools are 84 percent white. In Hartford, where the other 15 plaintiffs live, schools are 91 percent black or Hispanic.

The lawsuit contends that the concentration of poor children, children from one-parent families, and non-English speaking children places severe burdens on the Hartford school system, making it unable to provide education comparable to that offered in nearby suburbs.

The lawsuit also alleges that white children in suburban school districts surrounding Hartford "are deprived of the opportunity to associate with, and learn from, the minority children attending school within the Hartford school district."

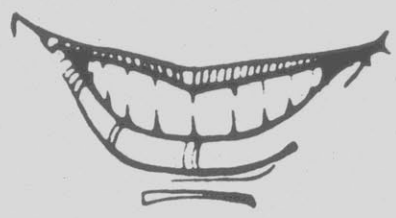

The lawsuit does not ask for any specific remedy to desegregate the schools, and the lawyers who will argue the case seemed hesitant to suggest one.

"What we envision is a system whereby Puerto Ricans and blacks and whites are educated together," said William Olds, executive director of the Connecticut Civil Liberties Union, which is providing two lawyers to the plaintiffs.

A court-ordered solution could focus on redrawing school district boundaries, busing students from one district to another, or creating interdistrict "magnet" schools.

State Education Commissioner Gerald H. Tirozzi, one of 10 state officials named as defendants, has proposed voluntary, incremental steps such as magnet schools to desegregate Connecticut schools. But the Legislature has not acted on Tirozzi's suggestions.

Women More Likely To Need Help

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — American women are more likely to need anti-poverty assistance than men, as they struggle to raise children on their own and cope with leaner times in old age, a Census Bureau report shows.

More than one woman in five — 20.5 percent — received help from some major benefits program during a 32-month study reported on by the Bureau on Thursday.

During the same period the public assistance programs aided 15.8 percent of men in the nation, somewhat less than one out of six.

John M. McNeil of the Bureau's Housing and Household Economic Statistics Division said that the difference in need is largely the result of women raising children without a husband present and the preponderance of women in the older age groups.

As of 1987, the bureau said, 34.3 percent of families with a female householder fell below the poverty level. By comparison, 12.5 percent of families with a male householder and no wife, and only 6.0 percent of married couples fell below the poverty level.

The analysis showed that more than two-thirds of people living in a female-headed household with no husband present throughout the study period received anti-poverty benefits — 67.1 percent.

The study found that 18.3 percent of all Americans received benefits from at least one of six programs studied. Included were general assistance, Aid to Families with Dependent Children, Supplemental Security Income, Medicaid, federal food stamps and federal and state rent assistance.

The study was based on repeated interviews with 19,900 households.

Storm

Horace Lee Walsh, 28, of Union Grove, was listed as critical at Baptist Hospital in Winston-Salem, a nursing supervisor said. He was hit in the shoulder by lightning as he was cutting wood shortly before 4 p.m. Thursday in Yadkin County, officials said.

Jean L. "Pops" Sparks, 67, of Marritte Island, Fla., was listed in stable condition at Cape Fear Valley Medical Center after being injured by falling scaffolding as he tried to cover a piano in Fayetteville.

The $80,000 tent sustained major damage, said Bobby Burnette of the Bobby Burnette Ministries Inc. of Cocoa Beach, Fla. High winds also damaged 12 helicopters at Fort Bragg, but no damage estimate was available.

Also in Fayetteville, about 3,000 homes and businesses were temporarily without power, a Fayetteville Public Works Commission employee said.

High winds also ripped off much of the outer metal roof at Tri-M-Sounds in Fayetteville and blew it onto an adjacent building, according to Rudy Mack, the store's owner.

The store was closed, and damage was estimated at $3,000, Mack said.

Lightning sparked a fire to one Fayetteville home at about 9:30 p.m. Thursday, but no major damage occurred, authorities said.

Lightning ignited a house fire in Winston-Salem at about 5:15 p.m., leaving about $10,000 in damage.

Forsyth and Davie county officials reported golf ball-sized hail late Thursday afternoon. Power lines came down in Rockingham and Davie counties, according to the National Weather Service.

Hail and damaging winds also were reported in Catawba, Lincoln and Mecklenburg counties, according to the weather service.

There were unconfirmed reports of funnel clouds between Rural Hall and Lewisville in Forsyth County, and also in Caswell and Surry counties.

Carolina Power and Light Co. spokesman Kyle Hampton said approximately 2,500 customers were without power following Thursday's storms. Most of the outages were in Oxford, he said, and downed trees and poles were the problem.

About 1,000 customers in Nashville were also without electricity for some time, Hampton said. All homes affected by the storm were to have their power restored by Friday morning, he said.

"The power outages are pretty much scattered and no where near the likes of the other night" when about 20,000 customers were without power at one time," Hampton said.

In Guilford County, Patrick Jones, 9, went into his bedroom in Pleasant Garden at about 6 p.m. Thursday to find it pouring rain in side. A tree had crashed through the roof of his parents' house.

A tree also crashed through a second home in Guilford County, said Jimmie Frazier, shift supervisor for Guilford County Emergency Services. Eighteen fire departments were sent out to clear trees off of roads and buildings, he said.

Tour

such a short period of time, she said, and Kastriner said that Grady-White Boats Inc. produces the type of boats that the Japanese consumers want to purchase.

The journalists also visited the Roberts Companies of Winterville, Weyerhaeuser, Burroughs Wellcome and ECU facilities.

Ms. Yuhas said some of the local businesses are considering advertising in Nikkei, which is similar to BusinessWeek and has a circulation of 240,000. All subscribers are top executives who must be selected to receive the magazine.

Much of the magazine's editorial coverage comes at the recomendation of the U.S. sales staff, she said, and she believes Kastriner will recommend story ideas for the area.

"I think that we will get some editorial coverage fom them," she said.

Ms. Bader's magazine is a more general kind of development publication, she said. Many communities advertise in the publication and its readers are consultants, corporate real estate officers and industry officials looking to relocate a business, she said.

"We will probably get strong consideration in the magazine's North Carolina edition," she said. "It helps us a lot that North Carolina is such a popular business location."

Some local companies also expressed an interest in expanding their marketing efforts in Asia and Europe, she said, which will probably generate new overseas business opportunities.

The commission is considering enlarging the press tour to eight or 10 journalists, she said, and the group is also considering changing the format to individual press tours for visiting journalists.

The editor of Biotechnology magazine has inquired about visiting the center in Greenville, she said, but he could not attend the press tour. With specialized single tours, the editor could spend a full day at a specific site interviewing people.

Anglican Panel Urges Unity On Women Bishops

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LONDON — A church commission today urged that the world's 70 million Anglicans concentrate on what unites them and avoid further divisions over the issue of women bishops.

"Bishops should take every opportunity to emphasize their fundamental agreement on matters of faith," it said.

The Archbishop of Canterbury, Robert Runcie, assigned the commission to report on how the unity of the 27 self-governing Anglican churches in 164 countries can be preserved in the face of the disagreement.

The dispute deepened in February when U.S. Episcopalians consecrated Barbara Harris as the first Anglican female bishop, in their Boston diocese.

The 18,000-word document, "Report of the Archbishop of Canterbury's Commission on Communion and Women in the Episcopate," was published simultaneously in London and Larnaca, Cyprus, where the Anglican primates met to consider that and other issues.

Pope John Paul II said in a letter to Runcie that the insistence of some Anglican churches on having women priests and bishops appeared to block progress toward Catholic-Anglican reconciliation. The Roman Catholic Church retains an all-male priesthood, and it split with the Anglican Church in the 16th century Reformation.

Runcie, spiritual head of the Church of England and world Anglican leader, will meet with the pope in Rome Sept. 29-Oct. 2, primarily to discuss unity of their churches, a consultation their predecessors began in 1966.

The commission's report dismissed suggestions that a diocese divided on women bishops might have two bishops catering to opposing views.

"The bishop is an embodiment and agent of unity and continuity in the church," the report said. It stressed that bishops must take care not to become focal points of dissent in dioceses that are split on the issue.

The report recommended that in dioceses with strong views for and against women priests and bishops, a compromise first worked out by the U.S. Episcopalians should be adopted.

The compromise allows any congregation rejecting a woman bishop to petition for a male "Episcopal visitor" bishop to administer confirmations.

"Provision for Episcopal visitors is a way of exercising pastoral care," said the unanimous report written by six ordained men and an English woman theologian.

It proposed that women bishops ordaining priests should do so collegially with a male bishop to meet the objections of church members who feel they could not recognize the ordinations of a woman.

"That would protect the interests of the person ordained and the communities in which he or she may minister in the future," the report said.

Runcie set up the commission at the request of the Lambeth Conference of Anglican bishops in August, when they knew that the U.S. Episcopalians, who have ordained more than 1,200 women to the priesthood, were preparing to approve the first woman bishop.

The conference declared that practical pastoral arrangements would have to be made in all Anglican churches and dioceses for those unable to accept women bishops.

The majority of Anglican churches, including the Church of England, still rejects women priests.

A number of Anglican bishops have said they might reluctantly accept women priests, but could never accept a woman bishop because it is against belief and tradition. They say it was no accident that Jesus Christ chose only men as disciples.

Archbishop of Armagh Robert Eames, who chaired the commission, said the different views on women bishops were reflected by its members, who met for nine days of talks in London in November and in New York in March.

The other commission members were Bishop Joseph A. Adetiloye, Primate of All Nigeria; Archbishop Peter F. Carnley of Perth, Australia; Bishop Mark Dyer of Bethlehem, Pa., Bishop David Hope of Wakefield, England; the Rev. Dr. E. James Reed, director of the Toronto School of Theology, Canada, and Dr. Mary Tanner, theological secretary of the Church of England's board of mission and unity.

John Paul En Route To Tour Of Africa

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

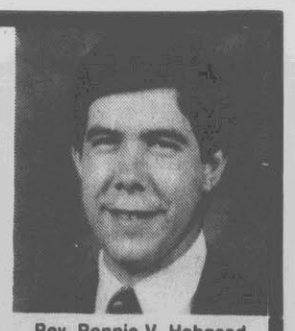

ROME — Pope John Paul II left today on his fifth tour of Africa, flying first to the exotic island of Madagascar where a "papal truce" has been declared to silence anti-government protests that have claimed five lives.

The pope's special Alitalia Boeing 747 left Leonardo da Vinci Airport this morning for a nine-hour flight to Madagascar's capital, Antananarivo. The nine-day trip also will take him to the French Indian Ocean island of Reunion, and to Zambia and Malawi. It is the 41st foreign pilgrimage of John Paul's 10½-year papacy.

In all, the pope will deliver 36 speeches and travel 13,500 miles during his trip. He is scheduled to return to Rome on May 6.

Girlwatcher Isn't Husband Material

Dear Abby
Abigail Van Buren

Dear Abby: I have been dating this guy I'll call Michael for two years. I really love him, but he does something that simply kills me! He's a heavy girl watcher.

When we're out in public, whether it's at the movies, restaurant, bar or just walking down the street, he stares at girls constantly — paying no attention to me or what I'm saying. It's like I'm not even there.

I mentioned a few times how hurt I feel when I see him staring at other girls, but he says, "It doesn't hurt to look" — then he tells me it's jealousy and insecurity on my part.

I know he'll never change. His friends act the same way. I don't even want to think about what goes on when he hangs out with the boys. For someone who's 31 years old, he acts like a high school boy.

Abby, I love him, but I can't see myself marrying a man who stares at girls when we're together and makes me feel like nothing. I feel used. By the way, Michael is obsessed with girlie magazines and porn videos.

Please help me. — Michael's Girlfriend

Dear Girlfriend: How wise you are to realize that this one fault is important enough to stop you from marrying Michael. I receive letters every day from married women who are miserable because their husbands never overcame the habit of staring at girls.

Michael is mistaken. It does hurt to look — it hurts you. And don't let him lay a guilt trip on you for feeling jealous and insecure. His "looking" causes you to feel this way.

Girlie magazines and porn videos, yet? If it's marriage you want, you need a more mature man than Michael.

Dear Abby: My wife had some cousins visiting her from a distant state. They are nice people, but apparently they had never been to a classy restaurant. Well, we took them to one.

They ate heartily, then just before we left the restaurant, one of the cousins emptied the entire contents of the breadbasket into her oversized purse! There were rolls, breadsticks, a few muffins, and some crackers individually wrapped in cellophane. She even took all the packets of artificial sweetener!

When she saw the look of disapproval on my face, she said, "There's nothing wrong with taking these things; you're paying for them. And besides, I understand it's against the law for restaurants to serve anything a second time; once it's been on the table, if nobody eats it, it has to be thrown out."

Is that true or not? — Embarrassed Relative

Dear Embarrassed: According to Jimmy Murphy, proprietor of "Jimmy's," one of the classiest restaurants in Beverly Hills, Calif.: "Laws vary from state to state, but the local board of health requires that unwrapped rolls and muffins may be served only once. If they are not eaten, they must be thrown out. However, packaged foods, such as crackers sealed in cellophane, may be served again. And rarely do diners take home what's left in the breadbasket. But should they ask, the waiter will gladly wrap it to go."

If you would like to write to Abby, send your letter to Abigail Van Buren, P.O. Box 69440, Los Angeles, CA. 90069. For a personal, non-published reply, enclose a self-addressed stamped envelope.

Researchers Progressing In Fight Against Allergies

By Tom Sharp
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Researchers are looking for drugs to prevent allergic reactions from starting, but until they succeed, 35 million allergic Americans will just have to keep fighting the symptoms — with pills, snorts, shots and handkerchiefs.

And despite advances in treatment, spring still can be a miserable time.

There currently is "no way to attack the central souce and make it go away," said Gerald Vanderpool of American Allergy Consultants in Atlanta. "So basically you have to deal with it. There are ways now to keep a patient fairly comfortable. Not many years ago it was a voodoo and witchcraft specialty."

An allergic reaction is an overzealous response of the immune system to an otherwise harmless substance, such as pollen, dust, penicillin or cat dandruff.

The body releases powerful chemicals that cause those classic symptoms: runny nose, watery eyes, rash or, in asthma, constriction of the breathing passages.

Of 35 million allergic Americans, 14.6 million suffer from hay fever, nearly 9 million have asthma and 11.8 million have eczema, hives, swelling or an allergic reaction to food, medicine or insect stings.

The discovery that lifted allergy treatment from the "voodoo and witchcraft" category was immunoglobulin E, or IgE, an antibody found in much higher levels in allergic people. Antibodies fight foreign substances in the body; when IgE cells come into contact with a foreign substance, they release histamine, a chemical that causes swelling and itching. The greatest advances in treatment in recent years have been improved delivery of time-tested drugs.

A better understanding of the allergic reaction and better medication are making life more bearable for people with allergies, said Dr. Allen Kaplan, the chairman of the department of medicine at State University of New York at Stony Brook and president of the American Academy of Allergy and Immunology. A prime example is the use of steroids that can be inhaled to treat asthma.

"Previously the most severe asthmatics had to take steroids by pills. Administering them through inhalation gets a very concentrated dose into the lungs without significant absorption into the rest of the circulation," Kaplan said. "Therefore it minimizes the side effects of steroids and optimizes therapy to the lungs because you're delivering it directly."

Another asthma drug is cromolyn sodium, available as a nasal spray or eye drop. It works by inhibiting the secretion of mast cells, which are involved in all allergic reactions.

"In both these instances we're treating the reaction locally in a reasonably potent way," Kaplan said. "They really work better than treatments we've used in the past."

Allergy treatments have for years relied on antihistamines, which combat the chemical responsible for many allergy symptoms. Kaplan said antihistamines have advanced in two significant ways: Versions are available that do not cause drowsiness, and timed-release capsules to be taken just once or twice a day.

"There is no question our understanding" of allergies has increased tremendously in recent years, Kaplan said. The immediate allergy symptoms are well known and are the target of most treatments, but researchers have learned only recently that there is a delayed, secondary reaction.

RJR Nabisco May Be Moving Again

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ATLANTA — The new chairman of RJR Nabisco Inc. says the company needs to be in close contact with the financial community, so the headquarters of the food-and-tobacco giant will be moved from Atlanta to the New York City area.

The company will decide over the next few weeks whether layoffs are necessary, said Pauline Howes, an RJR Nabisco spokeswoman.

"We are in the process of looking at staffing needs," she said Thursday, adding, "There might be some functions and positions that might not remain with the company."

There are about 450 RJR Nabisco employees in Atlanta, Ms. Howes said.

The move would be the second for RJR Nabisco corporate headquarters in recent years. Former RJR President F. Ross Johnson moved the headquarters from Winston-Salem to Atlanta after he took over following the merger of R.J. Reynolds Industries Inc. and Nabisco Brands Inc. in 1985.

The announcement came Thursday, shortly after shareholders approved the record $24.53 billion buyout of the company by Kohlberg Kravis Roberts & Co.

RJR Nabisco said its new chairman, Louis Gerstner Jr., sent a letter to employees saying the plans of the firm can "best be achieved by maintaining close ongoing contact with the investment banking community and other New York-based segments of the business community."

The letter said relocations could begin by early summer and would be completed by the end of the year. Some existing corporate functions may be reassigned to RJR Nabisco's operating companies, the letter said.

After Gerstner, a former American Express executive, was named to head RJR Nabisco, it was speculated he would move the company's headquarters to the New York area. Gerstner lives in Connecticut, near New York City.

The exact location of RJR Nabisco's headquarters was not announced. However, the firm's Nabisco Brands division is based in New Jersey, also near New York.

Earlier Thursday, RJR Nabisco shareholders formally approved the buyout by Kohlberg Kravis at a special meeting in Wilmington, Del.

Company officials said about 85 percent of RJR Nabisco's shares were voted in favor of the merger, which will take effect Friday. At that time, trading of RJR Nabisco stock will cease on the New York Stock Exchange.

Shareholders who tendered their stock to Kohlberg Kravis will receive cash and securities valued by the company at $109 per share.

Gerstner was questioned by one shareholder about the future of the company's Del Monte Foods subsidiary, which is thought to be a prime candidate to be sold to help ease the debt associated with the takeover.

Gerstner replied, "It's a terrific company. I know there are rumors and speculation that Del Monte will be sold under the financing plan, but I cannot comment, except to say that it is speculation."

Also Thursday, Swiss Bank Corp. and the Swiss branch of J.P. Morgan Securities Ltd. said they had reached agreement with RJR Nabisco on measures to protect holders of bond issues the companies separately managed.

After Kohlberg Kravis launched its buyout of RJR Nabisco, Swiss Bank Corp. and J.P. Morgan sought assurances that the takeover would not result in losses to bondholders.

Teamsters Accept Vice President Convicted Of Taking Payoffs, Theft

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — A Detroit-area Teamsters official with two convictions for union-related offenses has been named an international vice president of the nation's largest union, raising questions about its pledge to improve its image.

The selection of George Vitale by Teamsters President William J. McCarthy, though not announced by the union, was confirmed Thursday by Teamsters sources. A Teamsters spokesman did not return telephone calls seeking comment.

The selection comes in the wake of the settlement of a racketeering suit against the Teamsters and a pledge by its leaders to back election reforms and refurbish the union's image.

"McCarthy surely could have done better than to go out and appoint a guy who has been convicted of taking payoffs both from employers and stealing the union members' money," said Ken Paff of Teamsters for a Democratic Union, a dissident union group based in Detroit.

Vitale, president of Teamsters Local 283 in Wyandotte, Mich., was convicted twice in the early 1970s, for accepting an illegal payment from a Teamsters employer and for illegal use of union funds in a plan to buy his wife a car. He received fines and probation for both convictions but was allowed to keep his union job.

The prosecutor who handled the racketeering case raised the possibility that a court-appointed administrator agreed to as part of the settlement could review the Vitale appointment.

"The court-appointed administrator will have the authority to review the appointment and to discipline any Teamster officials," said assistant U.S. attorney Randy Mastro. "There is no statute of limitations on the right to discipline."

The appointment of an administrator is expected to be made in the next two weeks. That is one of three court-appointed monitoring positions agreed to as part of the settlement of the racketeering suit, which alleged widespread organized crime influence on the Teamsters.

Critics within the union characterized the Vitale appointment as a slap at former Teamsters Vice President Robert Holmes Sr. of Detroit. Holmes resigned in January in return for being dropped as a defendant in the suit.

Holmes opposed McCarthy's election to succeed the late Jackie Presser as Teamsters president. Vitale reportedly had a falling out with Holmes in recent years.

McCarthy under Teamsters bylaws can fill vacancies on the union's General Executive Board — which consists of the president, secretary-treasurer and 16 international vice presidents — subject to board approval. He has a solid majority on the board because of recent turnover and has two vacancies still to fill.

Economic Index Plunges

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The government's chief economic forecasting gauge plunged 0.7 percent in March, the second straight decline and the biggest drop in eight months, the Commerce Department said today.

It was the first time the Index of Leading Economic Indicators, which dropped 0.3 percent in February, had posted back-to-back declines since it fell for five straight months from September 1987 through January 1988, the months surrounding the October stock market crash.

While many analysts feared that the nation was headed for a recession after the market collapse, the economy rebounded with vigor and the record peacetime expansion is now in its seventh year.

Analysts said the latest negative signals from the leading index are in line with signs that the U.S. economy is losing steam and with widespread expectations that the slowdown will become more pronounced as the year progresses.

The debate among economists is whether the end result will be an outright recession or a so-called "soft landing," in which growth slows just enough to relieve inflationary pressures without bringing a halt to the expansion.

The economy expanded at a strong 5.5 percent annual rate during the first three months of the year, but the growth in the gross national product was a more modest 3 percent, discounting a statistical quirk reflecting the bounce back from last year's drought.

That was down somewhat from the drought-adjusted 3.5 percent pace for the final quarter of 1988. Monthly reports on the economy's performance in February and March suggested a progressive weakening during the first quarter.

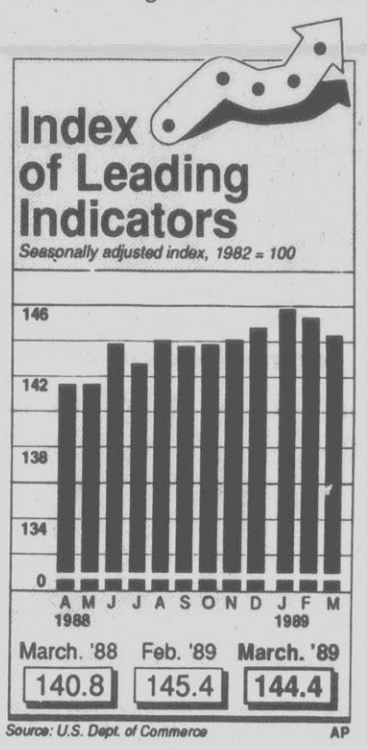

"The underlying growth rate in the economy is much below last year and the risks of a recession certainly are higher," said economist Sandra Shaber of the Futures Group in Washington. "To be a prudent planner, you have to take those risks into account."

March's decline in the leading index, which is designed to predict economic activity six to nine months into the future, was the biggest falloff since a 0.8 percent drop last July.

The traditional signal of a recession is three straight declines in the index. However, it has flashed two false recession signals since the 1981-82 economic downturn, one of them in the months after the stock market crash.

In March, nine of the 11 indicators that make up the leading index declined, with a drop in building permits counting as the biggest negative factor.

Other negatives included: a dip in manufacturers' orders for consumer goods; a shorter average work week; an increase in initial claims for jobless benefits; a drop in an index measuring consumer confidence; faster vendor deliveries, signaling slower demand; a contraction in the money supply; a decline in manufacturers' unfilled orders and falling stock prices.

Aunt Jemima Gets A New Look

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHICAGO — Aunt Jemima's down-home style is giving way to a more sophisticated look.

Gone are the geometric-print headband and plain white collar. The "new" Aunt Jemima wears gold-trimmed pearl earrings, a lace collar and soft, wavy, gray-streaked hair.

Quaker Oats Co., home to this ageless black woman since 1926, is updating the 100-year-old trademark.

But she still looks like she knows her way around the kitchen, company spokesman Ronald G. Bottrell said Thursday.

And her smiling face — adorning 40 breakfast products from pancakes to syrup to grits — is the same. It didn't change much in 1968, either, when Quaker gave the once-portly icon a more svelte look.

So why bother?

It was time, says Quaker.

AUNT JEMIMA '89

The time comes about every 20 years.

Five months of consumer research in 12 cities "showed very high awareness of the Aunt Jemima trademark and positive perceptions among all groups," said Barbara R. Allen, vice president for marketing in Quaker's convenience foods division.

The new design will begin appearing in July.

The original Aunt Jemima Pancake Mix was introduced in 1889, a breakthrough convenience product from the R.T. Davis Milling Co. in St. Joseph, Mo., where it is still made by Quaker.

Today, Aunt Jemima is the leading brand in both pancake mixes and syrups, offering low-calorie variations and microwave convenience, the company said. Her products represent about $300 million of Quaker's $5.3 billion in sales.

Whiter Teeth?

AFTER BEFORE
Commonly asked questions and answers concerning this procedure.
Question: "How long does the procedure take?"
Answer: This procedure takes only 15 to 20 minutes to start and the patient completes the treatment at home and to their desired degree of whiteness; however, on your first visit, the dentist must prepare you for the procedure and usually a normal one-hour appointment is sufficient. The results are very predictable when the patient follows the instructions to the letter. Most cases can be completed within a two week period, more complicated cases may require a longer period of time. Patients who follow the instructions properly may see results within the first three days of treatment.
Question: "If this is such a new procedure, how can I be sure it's safe?"
Answer: Although it is a new product, it is based on the older bleaching techniques that have been in use on teeth for over twenty years. When used properly, these techniques have proven to be extremely safe but overpriced for most people. It is a much milder medication than anything ever used before for this purpose and is priced where every patient can now afford to look their very best with a totally different and easier procedure.
Question: "How long will the results last?"
Answer: The procedure can be permanent with occasional and proper maintenance.

Lakers Open With Victory

Defending Champs Ready To Stand Up, Take Charge

By Barry Wilner
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

It's the playoffs, time for the infirm and aging to stand tall. Time for the Los Angeles Lakers to take charge.

"I believe this team truly steps up to another level in the playoffs; they're used to winning, they're addicted to it," Lakers coach Pat Riley said Thursday night after the two-time NBA champions beat the Portland Trail Blazers 128-108 in their best-of-5 series opener. "I think this team's been written off, but they haven't written themselves off.

"People say this team is old, senile, finished. We can't let those things affect us."

They didn't let anything the Blazers did affect them. Magic Johnson had 30 points and 16 assists, Byron Scott chipped in with 29 points and Mychal Thompson came off the bench to score 20.

"Riley said he really wanted a lot from me, both offensively and defensively, because I'm a veteran now," Scott said, "and I felt like I delivered."

The Lakers are trying to become the first team to deliver three consecutive NBA championships since Boston in 1964-66.

"We came in prepared and focused," Riley said. "We were coming off winning seven of our last eight and five in a row (to end the regular season). We just continued that."

In the other openers, it was Golden State 123, Utah 119; Atlanta 100, Milwaukee 92, and New York 102, Philadelphia 96.

Tonight, it's Boston at Detroit, Seattle at Houston, Chicago at Cleveland and Denver at Phoenix.

The Lakers took control early. Whenever Portland rallied, Los Angeles suddenly would spurt away again.

Los Angeles, 5-0 during the regular season against the Trail Blazers, is 19-3 at home versus Portland in the decade.

Clyde Drexler paced Portland with 30 points and Jerome Kersey added 23.

Warriors 123, Jazz 119

Golden State was the only road team to win.

Chris Mullin scored 41 points, including 18 in the third period, for the Warriors.

Rookie Mitch Richmond, averaging 22.7 points against the Jazz, finished with 30. Richmond was 8-for-34 in his last two games but was 13-for-21 Thursday.

Mullin shot 7-for-11 from the field in the third quarter, including 1-for-2 from 3-point range and made all three free throws.

"We didn't want to take the ball inside to Mark Eaton," Mullin said of Utah's 7-foot-4 center. "We have to take the outside shot. When we hit them, we look like geniuses."

John Stockton led Utah with 30 points. Karl Malone, who entered the game as the NBA's second-leading scorer at 29.1, finished with 22. He was scoreless in the first quarter and had only six in the first half.

"This didn't go Karl's way," Utah coach Jerry Sloan said. "He'll play well next time. That will happen — you won't be perfect all the time."

Hawks 100, Bucks 92

Although Milwaukee slowed the tempo to its liking, it wasn't enough because Dominique Wilkins and Glenn Rivers got their rhythm with seven points each in the final 6:34. Atlanta is 7-0 against Milwaukee this season.

Rivers broke a 79-79 tie by hitting a free throw and referee Wally Rooney gave Bucks assistant coach Frank Hamblen a technical foul before Rivers could shoot his second free throw.

Reggie Theus made the technical shot and Rivers then added his second free throw, giving the Hawks an 82-79 lead.

Wilkins finished with 28 points and Moses Malone had 23. Jay Humphries scored 20 points to lead the Bucks.

"This game truly was a struggle, for us and them," Rivers said. "It was a war. They slowed the game to their style and you can't count on them missing all those free throws. We got kind of lucky."

Knicks 102, 76ers 96

Philadelphia, which won four of six games against the Knicks this season and the last two at New York, had its chances in the playoff opener. But the Knicks got a season-high 34 points from Gerald Wilkins and Patrick Ewing had 26.

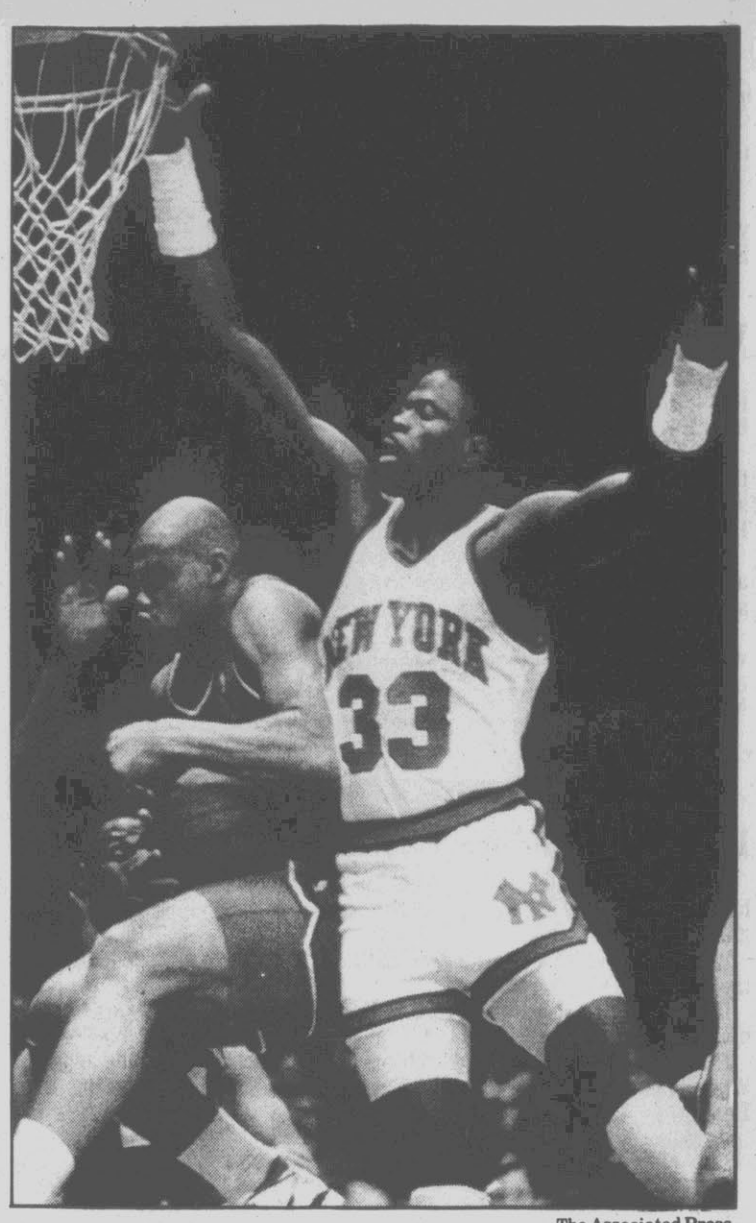

The Knicks trailed 92-91 after rookie Hersey Hawkins' layup with 3:11 left, his only basket of the game. Ewing drove into the lane for the field goal that put the Knicks ahead for good. Wilkins, whose previous season high was 30 points on Nov. 15 at Houston, then made it 95-92 with a jumper with 2:08 left.

But Philadelphia was within a point and the shot clock was running down when Mark Jackson hit a 30-footer with 16 seconds left to clinch it.

"I realized the clock was winding down and they were swarming all over me," Jackson said. "So I got into my rhythm and just let go. I practice these shots every day but they do not come out as picture-perfect as this one."

Ron Anderson led the 76ers with 26 points, while Charles Barkley had 22 and Maurice Cheeks 19 and 16 assists.

"I didn't think the shot had a chance," Anderson said of Jackson's 3-pointer. "I don't think he thought it had a chance, either. He said his prayers before he shot it."

Carlesimo Seeks Time To Make Decision

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SOUTH ORANGE, N.J. — Seton Hall coach P.J. Carlesimo apparently has asked the University of Kentucky for a little time to clear his head and consider whether to become the Wildcats' next basketball coach.

Carlesimo, who led Seton Hall to the NCAA championship game, met Thursday with school officials and his returning basketball players and was quoted as telling them that nothing has been finalized.

"All he told us is he went down there and talked with people," junior forward Frantz Volcy said after the 15-minute meeting with the haggard-looking Carlesimo.

Seton Hall athletic director Larry Keating said Carlesimo faces "a very tough decision," and it could be a couple of days before anything is decided.

A source close to Kentucky, however, said Carlesimo's selection will be announced before the NCAA hands down sanctions against the school's program, something that could be as far off as three weeks.

Those at Seton Hall maintained Carlesimo was still mulling a Kentucky offer that could pay him two to three times more than his current annual $250,000 salary at Seton Hall.

"He just hasn't made up his mind," assistant coach Bruce Hamburger said. "It's his decision."

Carlesimo met with Keating for two to three hours Thursday afternoon after taking a plane from Washington, where he was a guest speaker at the banquet for the Georgetown basketball team.

"I don't know what their timetable is," Keating said of Kentucky. "I would think they would want it settled as soon as possible. I think he (P.J.) has asked for time for considering and that's what's happening."

After meeting with Keating, Carlesimo walked into Walsh Gymnasium about 4:30 p.m. EDT, his sports jacket slung over his shoulder and carrying a small leather suitcase.

Reporters who were watching some of his players shooting baskets, started to get up to approach him.

However, Carlesimo just smiled and said: "What is this, Lexington?"

Carlesimo walked into his office and his players followed for their meeting.

Hamburger said all Carlesimo told his players was that he knew they had read and heard a lot lately, but that nothing was finalized.

Forward Michael Cooper, the Pirates' sixth man last season, refused to comment.

Carlesimo had two days of interviews at Kentucky earlier this week and sources told The Associated Press that the 39-year-old two-time Big East Conference coach of the year had agreed to become the Wildcats' next coach.

Carlesimo, who has not commented on the report, refused to speak with the media Thursday.

Keating described his meeting with Carlesimo as good.

Keating said he could not say whether Kentucky offered Carlesimo a contract, but just as quickly said Carlesimo is facing "a very tough decision."

"Obviously, we want him to stay here," Keating said. "He has an opportunity to go to one of the top two or three programs in the country."

Kentucky has been under investigation by the NCAA for 18 alleged violations and is likely to be placed on probation.

Keating said the threatened sanctions will not influence Carlesimo's decision.

"That was a very small part of our conversation," Keating said. "I don't think they are a factor at all."

In Lexington, Kentucky athletic director C.M. Newton told reporters that "P.J. has to back off from it. You need to clear your head, see what other questions you've got and try to get them answered."

Kentucky went before the NCAA Committee on Infractions last weekend at Charleston, S.C., to allegations of wrongdoing the past two seasons under Eddie Sutton, who was forced to resign in March after guiding the team for four years.

NCAA officials indicated any penalties levied against the school would be announced in the weeks or two.

A source told The Associated Press that Kentucky wanted to have Carlesimo under contract before the NCAA report.

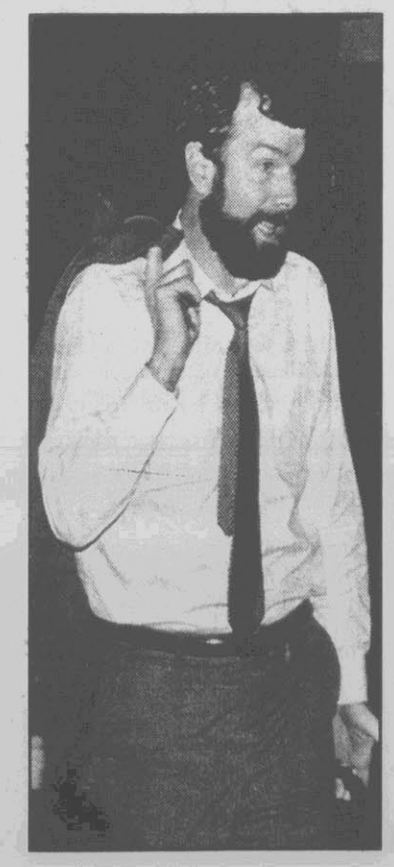

Kentucky officials denied Thursday that Carlesimo had been offered the position.

"I'm going on with the process (of hiring a coach)," Newton said.

Before Carlesimo could be hired, however, the move would have to be approved by the University of Kentucky Athletics Association, the school's governing board.

Chris Cameron, Kentucky's sports information director, said an athletics association meeting has not been planned by the school.

"There's nothing going on today, I can assure you," Cameron said.

Martin Suspended After B&E Charge

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHAPEL HILL — North Carolina tailback Kennard Martin, released on bond after being charged with breaking and entering and larceny, has been indefinitely suspended from the team, Coach Mack Brown says.

Martin, a rising junior who was the leading rusher in the Atlantic Coast Conference last season, was charged following a report of books being stolen from a second-floor room in Ehringhaus dormitory, according to police records.

Martin's first court appearance is scheduled for May 10, according to University of North Carolina Police Sgt. Ned Comer.

"We are indefinitely suspending Kennard Martin from our football team," Tar Heel football coach Mack Brown said in a statement released by the UNC sports information department Thursday. "His future status will be reevaluated at the appropriate time."

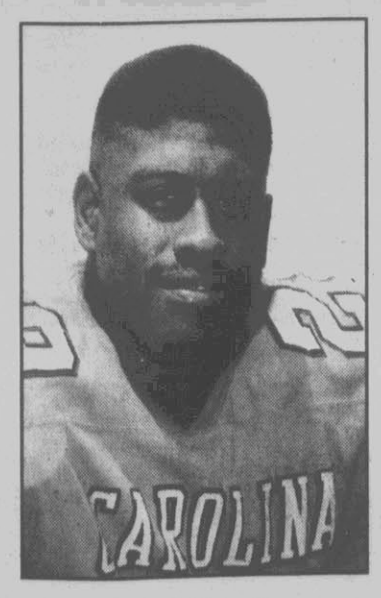

Brown's prepared statement did not mention the arrest.

Jon Swanson, the resident who reported textbooks missing from his room, said he was in one of the rooms at the back of a second-floor suite when someone he identified as Martin came in to ask where a resident advisor lived.

"At about five till midnight, Kennard stuck his head around the corner and asked for my R.A. — George Hicks," Swanson told the Durham Morning Herald in an interview. "We told him he was in the next suite over. (Martin) kind of lingered there for awhile, asked us how we were doing. Then he thanks us and leaves.

"About two minutes later I went to my room and noticed all my books were scattered. I started stacking them back and noticed a lot were missing," he said. "I went out on the

Baseball Notebook:

No Record Wins This Year Likely

The hopes of East Carolina University's Pirates earning 40 wins again this year are pretty well down the drain — unless the Pirates move past the Colonial Athletic Association Tournament.

Rain and a late-season tailspin have combined to cut down on the number of victories after the best start ever by a Pirate team. ECU ran out to a 25-2 record before taking a nose-dive and losing five of six games over a little more than a week.

But the Pirates would appear to be back on track now, having extended their record to 29-7 with a split with Virginia Commonwealth and a sweep of Atlantic Christian, including a no-hitter by Jake Jacobs.

However, rain washed out a doubleheader against Winthrop on Tuesday and more rain is possible this weekend. The Pirates face Mount Olive in a doubleheader tonight at 6 p.m. at Harrington Field and then meet N.C. State on Saturday night in a single game at 7 p.m. at Harrington.

The team has two more home games after that, next weekend, when the Pirates take on Norfolk State on May 5 and N.C. Wesleyan on May 6.

They'll then close out the year with a road trip to North Carolina on May 9.

Then, it's on to the Colonial Athletic Association Tournament in Wilmington, which begins May 12. There, the Pirates will take on George Mason in a first round game at 8 p.m., winding up the first day's play.

Still, even if the Pirates were to win the remainder of their regular season games, they would go into the tournament with just 35 wins. They would just about need to sweep the CAA and earn at least one or two NCAA regional wins to reach the 40-win plateau.

Coach Gary Overton's 1986 team was the only other ECU team to post 40 wins, going 40-10.

The Old And The New

This weekend's two opponents represent one of the newer series with the Pirates and what is one of their oldest.

Mount Olive's Trojans have played the Pirates only twice in the past — including one game last year, a 9-1 victory by the Bucs. In the same vein, the Pirates have met N.C. State a total of 58 times, stringing back well over 30 years.

Earlier this year, the two met in Raleigh where the Pirates took a 5-3 decision in 10 innings. Jonathan Jenkins won the game in relief and Calvin Brown came up with the game-winning hit in the 10th.

Last year's series between the two schools was halted because of the problems incurred at the football game between the two, but the series was revived this year.

East Carolina officials are hopeful that the crowd expected for Saturday night's game will behave itself, both physically and vocally, so that relations between the two schools can continue to be improved.

Needless to say, it could carry some weight when the two sit down again to talk about renewing the football series, clearly the most popular in the state.

Records Could Fall In Base Stealing

Pirate senior John Thomas is just one stolen base shy of the ECU single season record, having nabbed 22 bases thus far this year. Eddie Gates set the standard of 23 back in 1977.

Thomas and another senior, David Ritchie, are both closing in on the career stolen base record. That record, 54, was set by currently assistant coach Billy Best.

Thomas currently has 47 career steals and Ritchie, 45. Now let's see, who's the guy at third that gives the steal signal?

CAA All-Conference Voting Nears

As the time comes for voting in the CAA for all-conference honors, one must expect that East Carolina and regular season champion UNC-Wilmington would dominate the team.

But with only the coaches voting and four of the six in Virginia, it may not prove to be that way. The two North Carolina schools were excluded from the team last year and had only three players on the previous year's team.

Still, the Pirates have some top candidates. They include pitcher Jonathan Jenkins, 10-1 with a 1.05 earned run average, who is a candidate for player of the year; first baseman Calvin Brown, with a .370 average and 11 homers; catcher Tommy Eason, with a .334 average and seven homers; third-baseman John Gast, .264 with seven homers; leftfielder John Adams, .362; centerfielder John Thomas, .271; and pitchers Jake Jacobs, 6-1, 2.91 era, 61 strikeouts and a no-hitter; and John White, 6-1, 1.59 era.

We'll know the answer to that one on May 11.

GOLDSBORO — Rose's Derrick Daniels carded a round of 70 to earn medalist honors and lead his team to wins over Eastern Wayne and D.H. Conley in a three-team golf match Thursday.

Rose totaled 301, while Eastern Wayne had 311 and D.H. Conley had 323.

Conley was led by Ben Edwards and Tran Dean, both of who shot 80. Genrtry Pinner had an 81 while Jason Wing had an 82.

The win moved Rose to 26-0 while Conley falls to 14-2.

The Vikings return to action Monday in its final conference meet of the year against Havelock at Ayden. Rose travels to Elizabeth City for a Big East Conference match.

Willoughby Keys North Pitt To 5-2 Win

BETHEL — Craig Willoughby went 3-4 and drove in two runs to lead North Pitt to a 5-2 win over Ayden-Grifton in a Eastern Plains 2-A Conference baseball game Thursday.

Both teams pushed across a run in the first inning, but North Pitt broke the tie in the third when Johnny Sherrod led off with a triple and scored on a single by Roosevelt Hines. Craig Willoughby followed with a double to score Hines.

The Panthers then scored two insurance runs in the sixth. Daniels singled and scored when an error allowed Sherrod to reach. Willoughby singled to score Daniels and make it 5-2.

Hines also had three hits for North Pitt, 5-6 overall and 2-5 in the EPC, which returns to action Tuesday at Pamlico County.

Beddingfield Slips Past Rose, 1-0

Kim Kilgore scored the only goal of the game midway through the second half to lead Wilson Beddingfield past Rose, 1-0, in a Big East girls' soccer game Thursday.

Kilgore scored off a penalty kick at the 63:30 mark to give Beddingfield the only goal it would need.

Beddingfield outshot Rose, 13-9, and Rampant goalie Susan Grimsley had nine saves.

Rose falls to 2-6-1 overall and returns to action Monday at home against Wilson Fike and Tuesday against Eastern North Carolina School for the Deaf.

Overton Win To Be Shown On ESPN

Kristi Overton of Greenville captured the slalom event in the season opener of the Professional Water Ski Tour recently. The meet will be shown on ESPN this Saturday at 10 p.m.

Overton advanced through the competition and met world record holder Jennifer Leachman in the semifinals. She then defeated former world record holder Deena Brush-Mapple in the finals. Overton won with a perfect pass through the buoys with a 40-foot rope after Mapple had failed in her attempt.

Overton is currently a freshman at the University of Central Florida. She will next be in action in May at the Masters' Water Ski Tournament in Callaway Gardens.

Duke's Dilweg Reports To Camp Early

GREEN BAY, Wis. (AP) — He may be just a third-round draft pick from Duke, but quarterback Anthony Dilweg said Thursday he arrived in town ready to play for the Green Bay Packers.

"I showed up (at the Packer office) and I was ready to go," he said. "I didn't even want to go back to my motel. I just wanted to get going."

On arrival Wednesday, Dilweg was met at the airport by his aunt and uncle, who live in nearby DePere. His aunt, Vivi L. Dilweg, is a Brown County Circuit Court judge.

His grandfather, Lavvie Dilweg, was an all-pro end who helped the team to NFL championships in 1929, 1930 and 1931.

"I went through the Hall of Fame here and saw my grandfather and I think as a kid, you always dream of playing professional football, but it means a little extra to play for the team your relative played for," Dilweg said.

Dilweg, who graduated in December, reported to Green Bay three days earlier than required for the start of minicamp Saturday.

Oliver Threatens To Sit Out The Season

MIAMI (AP) — Former Florida safety Louis Oliver, taken by the Miami Dolphins with the 25th selection in the NFL draft, said Thursday he'll sit out the season unless he's paid the same as a top-10 pick.

"If I don't get paid the money that I think I'm worth, I would be more than happy to sit on the sidelines," Oliver said shortly after arriving at the Dolphins' camp for a physical.

Some teams and draft experts had projected Oliver as a top-10 choice. The Dolphins, who used the No. 9 selection to draft Florida State tailback Sammie Smith, would have taken Oliver if they had held the No. 10 pick, owner Joe Robbie said earlier.

"I feel I'm one of the top 10 players that came out in this year's draft," Oliver said. "I don't feel I deserve 25th-player money. When I go into contract negotiations, I want to be paid as if I'm a top-10 player."

As team after team bypassed Oliver in Sunday's first round, ESPN, which televised the draft, said the player's stock might have fallen because of a rumor of drug use. The rumor hasn't been substantiated, and its original source is unknown. Oliver has denied using drugs.

"I just have so much anger because of the rumor that spread and might have pushed me so far down in the draft," Oliver said. "Sometimes I feel like that draft was just a dream draft, and the real draft is coming this Sunday. But it's real, and I'm beginning to accept that now."

Oliver's agent, who accompanied the player to Miami, said he doesn't think the drug rumor caused teams to bypass his client.

"I think there just weren't many teams needing safeties," said Gene Burrough of Chicago. "But his talent didn't slip."

If Oliver decides against signing with the Dolphins, he could re-enter the draft next year. Burrough said he'll keep that option in mind when he begins contract negotiations with the team, probably in June.

Chowan's Coles Signs With JMU

MURFEESBORO — Chowan center Billy Coles has announced his signed a scholarship to play basketball for James Madison University nest season, school officials announced.

The 6-8 Coles, who averaged 22.5 points and eight rebounds a game last year, also considered Boston College and Virginia.

KC Fan Dies In Fall At Royals Stadium

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — A young man fell to his death onto a concrete walkway at Royals Stadium after he tried to do a handstand on a railing in the uppermost portion of the stadium.

Mike Wurzer, 20, died a short time later at Truman Medical Center, said Virginia Erickson, director of shift operations for the hospital.

Martinez' Homer Lifts San Diego

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PITTSBURGH — Carmelo Martinez tried to hit a home run and all that approach got him was two quick strikes.

He forgot about the home run, concentrated on making contact and immediately hit his second career grand slam.

It keyed a five-run fifth inning Thursday that helped the San Diego Padres to an 8-1 victory and three-game sweep of the Pittsburgh Pirates.

Martinez swung hard at two split-fingered fastballs from rookie reliever Logan Easley.

"They were good pitches," Martinez said. "I looked bad on them."

With the bases loaded and nobody out, Easley went for the kill on 0-2, figuring he might be able to get a strikeout. Instead, Martinez lined the pitch into the left field seats for his third home run of the season.

"It's a funny game," Martinez said. "When you try to hit them, it doesn't happen. I shortened up a little and tried to make contact. I knew I hit it good. I've been waiting this whole series to hit a ball hard."

Elsewhere in the National League, it was Chicago 1, Los Angeles 0 and St. Louis 10, San Francisco 1.

The Padres swept a three-game series in Pittsburgh for the first time since Aug. 1-3, 1980. They won the first two games with great pitching and just enough offense.

They appeared headed for another close decision until the eighth.

"This game was just what the doctor ordered," said winning pitcher Ed Whitson, 3-2.

The Padres set their season high for runs with six in the last three innings.

They broke the tie in the seventh when Whitson walked and went to second on starter Neal Heaton's wild pitch. Randy Ready grounded a single up the middle to score Whitson.

Morris Madden gave up singles to Tony Gwynn and Jack Clark in the eighth and Easley relieved. Benito Santiago grounded a pitch back to Easley, but the Pirates botched the rundown play between third and home to load the bases.

That gave Martinez the opportunity he'd been waiting for.

"We've been winning, but we haven't been scoring a lot of runs," Martinez said. "This is a good feeling to do this. A lot of people expect us to score a lot of runs and we haven't been doing it. Maybe we needed this game to get us going."

The Padres are 7-3 on their longest road trip of the season. They'll conclude the 13-game trip with weekend games in Chicago.

The Pirates are struggling with three starters on the disabled list. First baseman Sid Bream and catcher Mike LaValliere are already out and center fielder Andy Van Slyke officially joined them on the disabled list earlier Thursday.

Van Slyke has missed 10 games with a pulled muscle in his rib cage. The Pirates have now had seven players on the disabled list since the end of spring training, matching their 1988 total.

That's one reason usually fiery Manager Jim Leyland has maintained his composure in the face of the Padres sweep. The Pirates hadn't lose a three-game home series since they dropped games to the Philadelphia Phillies, July 28-30, 1987.

In his previous three seasons, Leyland has closed the clubhouse door for some lively meetings. He didn't after Thursday's loss.

"The worst thing a manager can do is ask his people to do too much," Leyland said. "We're not at full strength now. The worst thing you can do is make the situation worse by panicking. We just have to stay loose and work out of this."

The Pirates scored two runs and batted .197 in three games against San Diego.

The Padres scored an unearned run in the first against Heaton, 0-2. Shortstop Rey Quinones' third throwing error in two games preceded Santiago's RBI single.

The Pirates scored in the second when Bobby Bonilla doubled and later scored on Ken Oberkfell's sacrifice fly.

Cubs 1, Dodgers 0

Chicago snapped a nine-game losing streak to Los Angeles at Wrigley Field as Greg Maddux pitched a five-hitter to beat Orel Hershiser.

Maddux, 1-3, struck out six for his fifth career shutout. Hershiser, 3-2, pitched seven innings, allowing three hits.

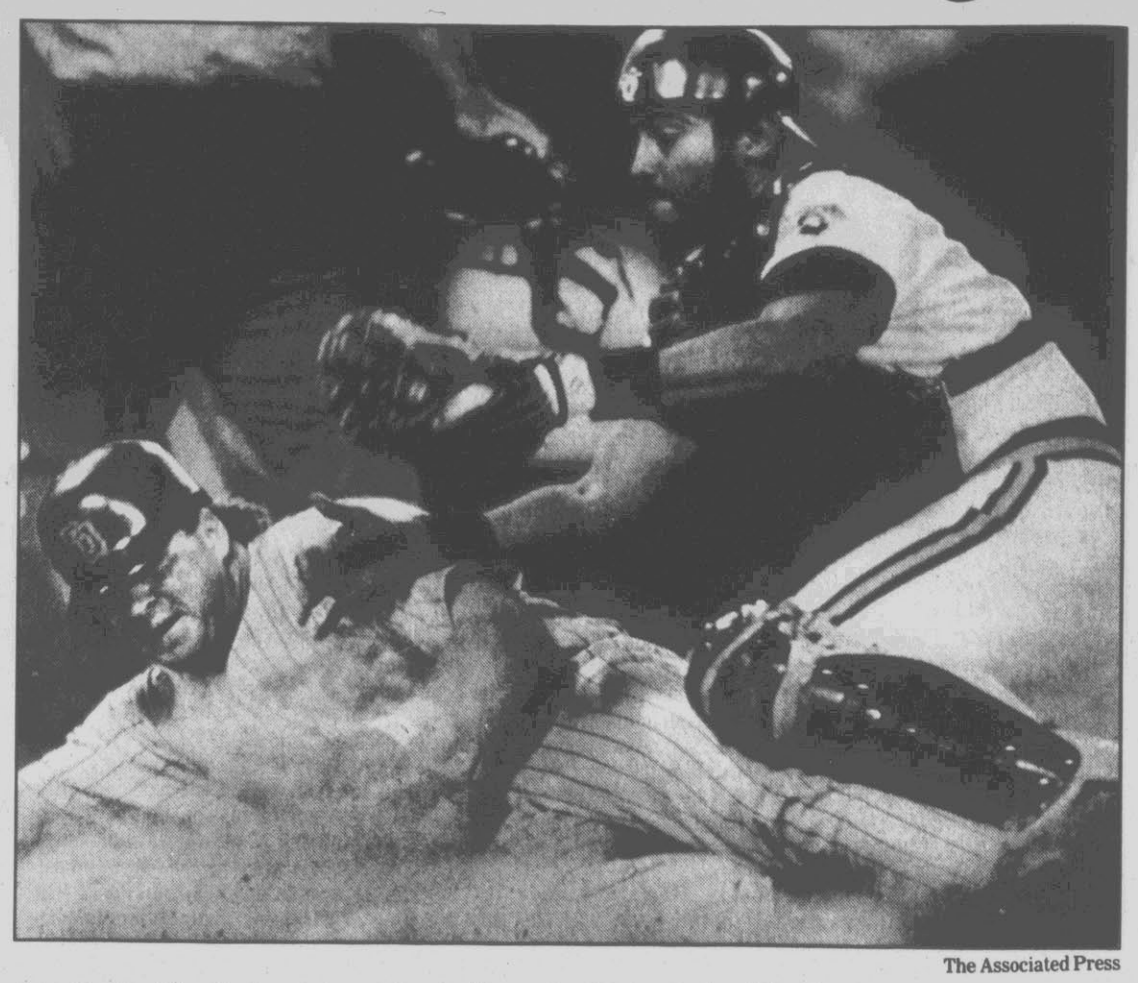

Gary Varsho, who entered the game with an .091 average, tripled off the right-field wall in the fifth inning to drive in Maddux, who had singled with two outs.

Cardinals 10, Giants 1

Scott Terry won his third straight game and went 3-for-3 with a three-run homer as St. Louis defeated visiting San Francisco.

Terry hit his first major-league home run off Joe Price in the sixth inning after singles by Jose Oquendo and Tony Pena. Terry also doubled and singled to pace a 15-hit attack.

Terry, 3-1, retired 12 of the first 13 batters and didn't allow a hit until Kevin Mitchell tripled with two out in the fourth. Terry gave up eight hits over eight innings with Dan Quisenberry pitching the ninth.

Sprinter Used Drugs

Doctor Administered The Steroids

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TORONTO — A doctor says he injected steroids into Angella Issajenko, Canada's top female sprinter, because Issajenko thought it would help her run faster.

But Dr. Gunter Helge Koch told a federal inquiry Thursday that he did not believe synthetic hormones benefited athletes when he gave Issajenko the injections seven years ago.

"I gave her what was essentially low dosages," he testified at the inquiry into drug use in amateur sport. "There wasn't really any (medical) reason for it. It was on demand."

He said he was aware the drugs were banned by international sport groups but added he and Issajenko never discussed clearance times — the period needed to flush the drugs from the body before testing.

Last month, Issajenko told the inquiry she began using steroids in 1979, obtaining them from Koch and Canadian thrower Bishop Dolegeiwicz.

Koch said he was unaware Issajenko was obtaining the drugs elsewhere.

John Gets Help, Earns His 288th Victory By 3-2

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Even after 288 career victories, Tommy John never takes a win for granted.

John allowed two runs in eight-plus innings but needed Dave Righetti to get out of a bases-loaded jam in the ninth as the New York Yankees beat the Kansas City Royals 3-2 Thursday night.

"My stomach was churning and my palms were sweaty," John said. "I felt like I was just an inch away from having a great game go down the drain."

John, who will be 46 on May 22, allowed seven hits, walked two and struck out five as the Yankees snapped Kansas City's five-game winning streak.

But things got a little shaky in the ninth.

John took a four-hitter and a 3-1 lead into the inning, but Kevin Seitzer led off with a double and scored on Jim Eisenreich's single. Danny Tartabull then followed with a single to chase John with none out.

Righetti relieved and Pat Tabler moved the runners up with a sacrifice bunt. After pinch-hitter Bill Buckner was intentionally walked, George Brett pinch hit and lofted a short fly to left field that failed to advance the runners.

"When George popped up I went, 'Whew.' But then of all the hitters they have, I hate to see Frank White."

Righetti then got White to hit a forceout grounder to short to end the game for his third save.

"He's been in that spot for 50 years," John said of White. "Almost as long as I have, and that's when Frank White shines. That's when Frank White is a gamer. You aren't going to strike him out if you make a good pitch.

"It's a good thing I'm not a reliever. I'd be a blithering mess. I was pacing in the dugout."

Elsewhere in the American League it was Oakland 9, Baltimore 4; Toronto 6, Seattle 1; California 10, Detroit 3 and Chicago 3, Boston 1 in 16 innings.

John, 2-3, and 18-7 lifetime against the Royals, walked Willie Wilson with two out in the sixth and Seitzer followed with an RBI double to cut the Yankees' lead to 3-1.

The Yankees scored two runs in the fourth on Stan Jefferson's RBI grounder and Alvaro Esinoza's run-scoring single. Don Mattingly added an RBI single in the fifth.

Athletics 9, Orioles 4

Mark McGwire hit two home runs as Oakland rallied to beat visiting Baltimore.

The Athletics came back from an early 3-0 deficit and then broke a 3-3 tie with six runs on eight hits in the seventh inning.

Todd Burns, 1-0, allowed one run on three hits over 4 2-3 innings in relief of Curt Young to get the victory.

McGwire, playing his second game after missing 14 games due to a lower-back injury, had his first multi-homer game since Sept. 15, 1987, at Texas.

Blue Jays 6, Mariners 1

Fred McGriff drove in four runs with a three-run homer and a triple, leading Toronto past Seattle at the Kingdome to spoil Mike Dunne's pitching debut with the Mariners. McGriff leads the AL with seven homers.

Mariners rookie Ken Griffey Jr. had his streak of eight hits in eight straight at-bats end when he walked in the second inning. The walk extended Griffey's streak of reaching base to 11 straight times, but that ended when he struck out in the fifth. His 8-for-8 streak tied the club record.

Mike Flanagan, 1-1, allowed seven hits in 8 1-3 innings and lost a shutout in the ninth when Jeffrey Leonard and Dave Valle hit consecutive doubles with one out. Duane Ward got the last two outs.

Angels 10, Tigers 3

Claudell Washington drove in four runs with a homer and single as California routed visiting Detroit.

Washington's two-run homer in the fifth inning off Charles Hudson, 0-1, snapped a 3-3 tie. He added a single with the bases loaded in the sixth to give California a 7-3 lead.

Bert Blyleven, 3-1, pitched 6 1-3 innings and allowed eight hits for the victory. Bob McClure pitched the final 2 2-3 innings.

The Tigers scored three runs in the top of the first as Lou Whitaker hit a two-run homer and Alan Trammell hit the next pitch for his first home run.

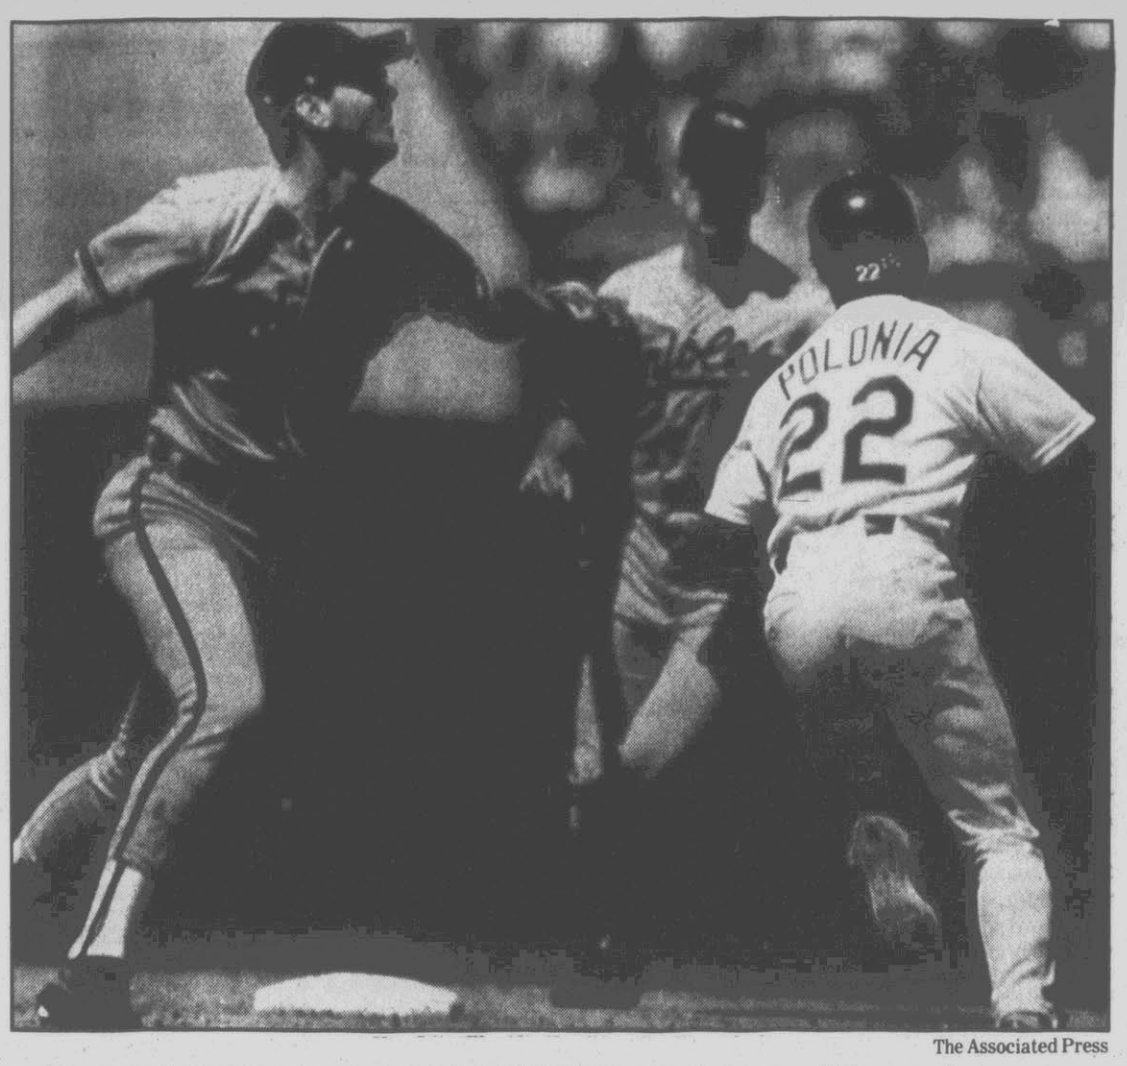

White Sox 3, Red Sox 1

Ozzie Guillen's triple scored Steve Lyons with two outs in the 16th inning, as Chicago beat Boston 3-1 at Fenway Park in the Red Sox' longest game in nearly eight years.

With one out in the 16th, catcher Ron Karkovice beat out a bunt. Lyons forced Karkovice at second, but Guillen followed with his fourth hit in eight at-bats to beat Mike Smithson, 0-2. Dave Gallagher added an insurance run with a single.

Donn Pall, 1-0, who shut out the Red Sox for four innings, got his first major league victory.

The game, which lasted five hours, nine minutes, was Boston's longest since Sept. 3, 1981 when a contest with Seattle was suspended after 20 innings.

Judge Disqualifies Himself In Rose's Bookmaker Case

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CINCINNATI — The case of an Ohio bar owner identified as Pete Rose's main bookmaker has been transferred to another federal judge after Chief U.S. District Judge Carl Rubin disqualified himself.

One day after stating he would not withdraw from the case, Rubin on Thursday decided not to sentence Ron Peters on drug and income tax charges.

"The appearance of impropriety is as damning as impropriety itself," Rubin said.

Peters has been identified in Sports Illustrated magazine as a Rose bookie.

The case was reassigned to U.S. District Judge S. Arthur Spiegel. It was unclear whether Thursday's move would delay the sentencing, which Rubin had hoped to impose May 5 or May 12.

Rubin came under fire this week for his criticism of baseball's investigation of Rose. He said baseball Commissioner A. Bartlett Giamatti's letter in Peters' behalf for his assistance in the game's probe of Rose was inappropriate. He said there appeared to be a "vendetta" against the Cincinnati Reds' manager.

Since then, the propriety of Rubin continuing to handle the Peters case has been questioned. Wednesday, the judge said he wished he hadn't criticized Giamatti so strongly, but reiterated his confidence that he could treat Peters fairly.

Peters' attorney, James Ruppert, said he made a mistake by suggesting to Giamatti that a letter be sent to Rubin. It should have been addressed to John Cole, the federal probation officer preparing Peters' pre-sentence investigation report, Ruppert said.

"There was nothing inappropriate about it (the letter) at all," Ruppert said. "In sentencing, one of the factors that is looked at is whether or not the person being sentenced is trying to atone for his wrongdoing; and the letter demonstrated that he (Peters) has."

Ruppert said he suggested to John Dowd, Giamatti's investigator in the Rose case, that a letter be written, "if they thought it appropriate to do so."

Peters' sentencing will come after Cole completes his pre-sentence report, makes his sentencing recommendation and both sides review Cole's work. Peters has said in depositions that he accepted gambling bets from Rose.

Rubin's decision to give up the Peters case does not affect the case of Tommy Gioiosa, Rose's former housemate. That case, too, was assigned to Rubin.

In addition to four counts of distributing cocaine, Gioiosa faces one tax evasion charge arising from a $47,646 winning "Pik-Six" ticket from Jan.16, 1987 at Turfway Park. The government says Gioiosa claimed the money on his tax return when he collected it for another person.

Meanwhile, the Dayton Daily News reported that Mike Bertolini, a partner in Rose's New York-based sports marketing company, has accused Dowd of Gestapo-like tactics in baseball's investigation of Rose.

Bertolini's comments came after Rose's own lawyers sharply criticized Dowd, an attorney who is handling major league baseball's investigation of Rose, for sharing information with federal officials who are probing Rose. The lawyers say that conduct is improper.

Cooper Suffers A Big Fall

Fleeing From The Media Proves To Be Dangerous

By Scott Howard-Cooper
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

INGLEWOOD, Calif. — Evidence was everywhere at the scene. The small clump of hair wedged in the wood, bent itself from the collision. The several drops of blood a few feet away in the hall, left behind as the wounded victim staggered for help.

And there it was. The outline of Michael Cooper's body in chalk on the cement floor, or at least something that was supposed to pass for it. For dramatic effect, "OUCH!" had been drawn inside the balloonlike drawing of the head.

"I'm an usher, not an artist," Gary Kass said, reluctantly taking credit for the police-style sketch while guarding a door that leads to the locker rooms at the Forum.

Cooper is a Laker guard, not a '69 Chevy. So when he went mano-a-mano with a plywood-and-metal railing inside a tunnel that leads off the court, some damage could be expected.

"A serious headache," he said.

That may be the short-term effects. More serious are the 21 stitches he took in the front of head scalp, just above the forehead. Not more than a couple inches from his left eye, either.

The Coop-a-Bloop that resulted in a pair of cuts on the front of his head and a trip to the hospital occurred just after the Lakers' morning shootaround at the Forum.

He sprinted off the court, bound for the locker room, and, with the structure partially hidden by curtains, collided with the wood on one side, headfirst.

That he came back to get eight assists, four rebounds and three points in the Lakers' 128-108 victory over Portland in Game 1 of the Western Conference quarterfinals made him a candidate for some sort of Purple Heart. That he survived the accident made him an open target for teammate abuse.

"We call him 'Scarface' now," backup center Mychal Thompson said.

Added Coach Pat Riley: "He did that on purpose. He wanted to let the guys know he was ready. He wanted some battle scars."

He got them.

"It was a little bit hard to concentrate on the court," said Cooper, who made one of two three-point shots to raise his National Basketball Association all-time playoff high from that range to 251 attempts and 101 makes. "That hurt my head.

"It was kind of a gruesome hit, but I had to do it. I had to shake the fear of charging into that end of the Forum, in case I had to go for a loose ball or something."

"Coop feels a lot more comfortable when he's battered and bruised," said Thompson, who did some hard-hat work inside for 20 points, on 8-of-11 shooting, and six rebounds in 27 minutes off the bench. "It gets him ornery and mean. He came to the Forum in a bad mood and took it out on the court. That's the way you have to be in the playoffs."

Cooper, in his 10th season of postseason play, only wishes the accident could have been staged for motivational purposes. Then he wouldn't have had those headaches and that awful feeling inside his gangly 6-foot-7 body.

"I was kind of queasy for a while," said Cooper, who revisited the scene later and saw the hair he left behind. "But I'm over it now. It's good to get the pain out of the way."

And, for some people, Game 1. The Portland Trail Blazers knew all along who their competition was.

But Michael Cooper, who found out the hard way what was behind curtain No. 2?

He has met the enemy, and it is he.

Fickling Ins.....12
First Federal.....11

Fickling Insurance rallied for five runs in the top of the sixth inning, then held off a First Federal rally to capture a 12-11 victory in the Tar Heel Little League Thursday.

Fickling pushed over four runs in the first inning of the game, but First Federal came back with two in its half of the inning. Fickling added two more in the second, while First Federal got three, making it 7-5. Fickling added another in the fourth, while First Federal scored three times, tying it at 8-8.

In the top of the fifth, Fickling put it away with five. Leavy Vicars and Will Bowen both walked and Clayton McCullough reached on an error, scoring Vicars. Randon Russell singled in Bowen and Mark Ellwanger reached on a fielder's choice. A wild pitch let McCullough score and Brett Givens walked. Tanner Amerson then singled to drive in Russell and Ellwanger for a 12-8 lead.

First Federal rallied for one in the fifth and two in the sixth, but fell short.

Russell, Givens and Amerson each had two hits to lead Fickling. Trevor Cox led First Federal with three while Michael Knoke and Casey McCall each had two.

Kiwanis.....14
Aldridge & S'land.....5

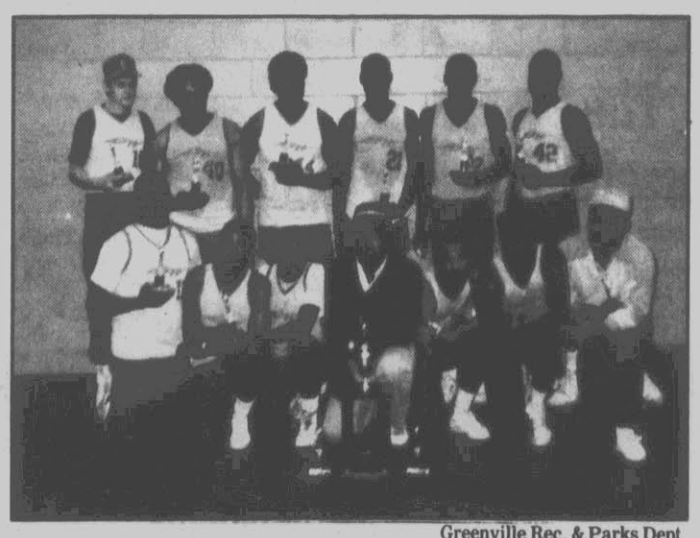

Tutu Moye banged out three hits to help paced the Kiwanis to a 14-5 victory over Aldridge & Southerland in the North State Little League Thursday.

Aldridge & Southerland took the initial lead with a run in the top of the first but the Kiwanis came back to score two.

Then, in the second, the Kiwanis scored six times to put the game away. Tommy Shepard walked and Marcus Belvin did too. Both stole up and scored on Kevin Gilbride's single. Charles Humphrey reached on an error, as did Moye, scoring Gilbride and Humphrey. Pete Muller walked and both moved up on a passed ball. James Richardson then singled, and walks to Mark Jones and Shepard forced in the final two runs.

The Kiwanis added three each in the third and fourth. A&S picked up four more in the fourth.

Richardson added two hits for the Kiwanis while Richard Worthington had two for A&S.

balcony and at a distance of about 24 feet I noticed Kennard walking up the steps with a stack of books under each arm."

Martin's mother told the newspaper that her son denied the charges.

"All I know is they called from UNC and told me Kenny had been charged with stealing some books," Johnnie Martin said in a telephone interview from her home in Winston-Salem. "They said he fit the description, but he said he didn't do it.

Mrs. Martin said that her son "had no reason to steal."

"He just got a Visa card with a $1,000 limit," she said. "It just doesn't make sense."

Martin's suspension is his second since joining the Tar Heels. Redshirted in 1986, Martin saw limited action in 1987 before being suspended by former North Carolina coach Dick Crum for "disciplinary reasons."

Martin rushed for 1,146 yards and tied for the league lead with 11 touchdowns. He was a member of the all-ACC team.

Martin was suspended in the midst of the 1987 season. He later said in an interview that he had failed a drug test.

Reformists Want Uniformity For Boxing Across The Country

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Boxing regulations in most states do not adequately protect prizefighters and should be standardized through a non-profit Washington-based federal corporation, supporters of boxing reform say.

The proposed United States Boxing Corp., whose activities are outlined in legislation introduced by Rep. Bill Richardson, D-N.M., would protect boxers from injury and exploitation. Although the standards are voluntary, supporters said at a hearing Thursday that they should be made mandatory if the legislation is to have any remedial impact.

"Tonight in Washington, two boxers will compete for the International Boxing Federation's welterweight championship," Rep. James Florio, D-N.J., said as he convened the subcommittee on commerce, consumer protection and competitiveness.

The hearing came just hours before welterweight champion Simon Brown of Washington, scored a seventh round knockout over Al Long of Quail Valley, Calif. in the first boxing championship in the District of Columbia in 30 years. The victory lifted Brown's record to 29-1 with 22 knockouts. Long fell to 22-7-3.

Florio and fellow New Jersey Democratic, Rep. Donald Payne, both former amateur boxers, sided with promoters, fellow congressional colleagues and Olympic silver medalist Riddick Bowe in calling for better regulation to safeguard boxers' health.

Richardson's bill is designed to pick up where the boxing industry's own efforts have failed.

"The sport has had more than 100 years to attempt self-regulation. The decision is in, boxing lost the decision," said Rep. Pat Williams, D-Montana, a co-sponsor of the Richardson bill.

As proposed, the USBC and its 12-member board of directors would draw up uniform boxing regulations and assist states in implementing them, It also would create a computerized national registry to track boxers, their won-loss records and injuries; and establish uniform minimum safety and health standards — all at no cost to the taxpayer.

Richardson told the subcommittee of the Committee on Energy and Commerce that similar legislation passed the House last year, but died in the Senate.

"Many of us are reaching a point of frustration in not passing this legislation," Richardson said. "I favor mandatory participation, but I'm concerned with keeping bipartisan support."

Williams stood by his support for nationwide adherence to corporation rules.

Boxers, he suggested, should be assured the same workplace safeguards as those workers covered by Occupational Safety and Health Administration standards.

"Why shouldn't they understand that when they step into the ring, there's a basis for safety in their workplace?" he said.

"It seems to me this situation cries out for uniformity, but it's not as simple as dealing with workplace safety," said Florio, who also is seeking protection encompassing training sessions.

The only significant objection to the proposed regulations, as voiced by International Boxing Federation President Robert W. Lee, was a complaint that requiring the proposed corporation to issue a certificate every three years to promoters, matchmakers, managers and trainers would be anti-competitive.

"Certification of a promoter or manager impacts on the free enterprise system," Lee said, limiting opportunities within a sport born in America's cities that has moved into the more sophisticated and lucrative arena of casinos and televised sports.

"Remember, the boxing industry has been the vehicle of entrepreneurial opportunity and financial success for many poor and disadvantaged young men," Lee said.

New Jersey and South Carolina officials who appeared before the panel said they backed federal legislation to standardize the industry.

Larry Hazzard, commissioner of New Jersey's State Athletic Control Board, said 43 state agencies regulate professional boxing, but impose different standards.

"Licensing requirements, medical requirements, time between bouts, and even rules of conduct pertaining to the actual event are, in many instances, different from jurisdiction to jurisdiction.

"It's not impossible for a boxer disqualified in one state to compete elsewhere, with few questions asked. The greatest danger here is that a boxer with a serious medical problem can, and will, compete where testing necessary to detect such a problem is not required," said Hazzard, himself a former boxer and referee.

John H. Holladay Sr., chairman of the South Carolina State Athletic Commission and a veteran of 21 winning professional fights, said his agency was established under a 1984 state law. Lawmakers in his state sought to respond to such abuses and deficiencies as a dearth of ringside physicians, boxers fighting under assumed names, a young boxer's death and a promoter's failure to pay participants in a match, Holladay said.

King Hopes To See 4th Round

LPGA Veteran Playing Like She Will Make The Cut

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Betsy King wasn't around for the final round of last year's Sara Lee Classic, but the way the LPGA Tour veteran is playing, she looks to have a good chance for the winner's check this year.

Fresh from a playoff victory over Lynn Adams in last week's USX Classic in St. Petersburg, Fla. — her third tournament win in 1989 — King is playing down her chances in the $425,000 Dara Lee at Hermitage Golf Course despite her fast start.

"It's very difficult to win back-to-back tournaments because of the level of competition these days," King said Thursday during practice for today's scheduled first round.

"I'm striking the ball and making some putts and — if you're playing well — all you can do is try to put yourself in a position where you have a chance to win on Sunday," King said. That was not the case last year, when King failed to make the cut and was outside the ropes with the gallery for Sunday's final round.

"I don't miss the cut very often, so chances are I won't miss it here two years in a row," King said. "I think I'll play much better than I played last year."

Defending champion Patti Rizzo, who last year won in a four-way playoff with Sherri Turner, Tammie Green and Kim Williams, says she believes the Hermitage layout is tailor-made for the women golfers.

"Hermitage is the perfect course for us. It's a little shorter than some but, if the wind blows, the course will play tough," Rizzo said.

A premium will be put on long drives and short-iron shots over the 6,242-yard, par-72 layout.

"Fortunately for me, driving well is the most important thing at Hermitage," Rizzo said. "The driver is one of the better clubs in my bag. I'm rarely out of play."

During practice, Rizzo and others have remarked about the course's greens, which seem faster than last year.

"The greens are a little quicker. I think they've mowed them down a little lower," Nancy Lopez said.

The fast, smooth greens are welcomed by Martha Nause, who tied for eighth last week.

"For the last three weeks, we've been playing on slow, bumpy greens and you get frustrated," she said. "I love these greens. I grew up on fast, undulating greens like these."

Rizzo adds that there are few surprises once a player reaches the green.

While what you see may be what you get on the putting surface, Rizzo says she is seeking to regain the proper mental formula that propelled her to last year's title.

"The Patti that won at Nashville last year is the one I'm trying to keep around all the time," said Rizzo, who broke a three-year winless streak with last year's championship.

"When I get in a playoff, when it's head-to-head competition, I'm told that I'm very intimidating simply because I'm so laid back. That person comes out maybe two or three times a year. The rest of the time she goes into hiding. Most of the time I'm too complacent, too nice on the golf course."

Among those joining Rizzo and King in the chase for the $63,750 winner's check will be Dottie Mochrie, Lori Garbacz and Allison Finney — all 1989 tour winners — along with Beth Daniel and JoAnne Carner.

Conley Rolls By Farmville, 13-2

HOLLYWOOD — D.H. Conley rolled to a 13-2 softball victory over Farmville Central in a non-conference game Thursday.

Farmville scored first, getting a run in the first and another in the third for a 2-0 lead.

Conley then exploded for six in the fourth. Stephanie Haddock singled and Charlene Davenport homered. Anna Foster kept it going by reaching on an error and Nikki Adams singled. Tracy Stancil singled in Foster and Beth McGhee reached on an error, scoring Adams. Eileen Evans reached on a fielder's choice that forced McGhee. Tracy Sumrell walked to load the bases and Angie Jones singled, driving in Stancil and Evans for a 6-2 lead.

Conley then added seven more in the sixth.

Haddock, Davenport, Adams and McGhee each had two hits to lead Conley while Frances Boone had two for Farmville.

Conley, now 8-4, plays at home against West Carteret on Tuesday. Farmville travels to South Lenoir on Tuesday.

WILLIAMSTON — Rain halted play and helped Northampton East take a 5-4 softball victory over Williamston Thursday, handing the Lady Tigers their first loss of the season.

Williamston took the lead in the game in the first inning, scoring twice. Dawn Bundy and Valerie Peele both reached on singles and both scored on a double by Dana Hardison.

Northampton East came back with two in the top of the second, but Williamston matched that for a 4-2 lead.

But in the fourth, Northampton came up with three runs to take the lead. Katrina Mitchell and Donna Johnson both got hits and Williamston committed two errors after that, helping one run to score. Nan Stevenson then doubled in the other two runs for the 5-4 lead.

Rain then halted the game in the top of the sixth inning.

Mitchell led the Lady Ram hitting with three while Stevenson had two. Bundy, Peele and Hardison each had two for Williamston.

Williamston falls to 7-1 overall, 6-1 in the Northeastern Conference. The Lady Tigers travel to Roanoke on Tuesday.

Grab-Bag Leaders Doing Just Fine

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

AUSTIN, Texas — For co-leaders Al Geiberger and Harold Henning, playing as a team in the $650,000 Legends of Golf is a new experience.

"Both our partners sort of dropped out. We sort of just fell in together," Henning said after the pair shot a nine-under-par 61 to tie with Bob Charles-Bruce Devlin for the first-round lead in the two-man, better ball event.

"This is the first time we've played together as partners. It's ironic. Last week (at the Chrysler Cup) we faced each other as opponents. He waxed my ... 68 to 71," Henning said Thursday.

Gardner Dickinson, 61, who said he and wife Judy are expecting twins in September, teamed with Dave Hill to hold second after an eight-under-par 62 over the 6,367-yard Onion Creek Club course.

Four teams were knotted at third, including Billy Casper-Gay Brewer after Casper made a hole-in-one on the 146-yard, par-three 17th.

"It's still a thrill to make an ace," said Casper, adding that while he had made 10 or 12 in his lifetime, this was only the second in competition. "You probably hit a lot of shots equally well and they just don't go in," he said.

Also tied for third were defending champions Orville Moody-Bruce Crampton, plus Chi Chi Rodriguez-Lee Elder and Tommy Jacobs-Ken Still.

Geiberger said there wasn't much special about his pairing with Henning, at first.

"We didn't really have a good feeling about playing together early in the week. But, if you look at the money list, you can get a pretty good feeling in a hurry," he said.

Henning ranks third in the Senior PGA Tour winnings this year, with $147,748, while Geiberger is seventh at $112,865.

What's new for them is old hat for Charles and Devlin. They first teamed up in 1964 to win the CBS Golf Classic, Devlin said.

Charles notched seven of his team's nine birdies, including a 30-foot pitch-in on the 367-yard third hole.

"It was very nice watching him today. I would like to contribute a little more tomorrow, however," Devlin said.

"I'm a very good driver," he laughed. "I just sit in the chariot."

The Legendary Champions division, an option for players over age 60, was led at six-under 64 by George Bayer-Kel Nagle and Bob Goalby-Sam Snead.

Snead, 76, injured his back during the round where he had two of the team's birdies. A doctor examined Snead immediately afterward, and Senior PGA Tour officials said they expected him to continue.

"If he'd have been on his own, he'd have quit. I'll get on him a little bit, and I hope he'll play — for the tournament's sake," Goalby said. "He's the greatest player of all time."

Players in the regular division compete for $500,000, including a $120,000 first prize. The Legendary Champions purse is $150,000, with $35,000 going to the first-place team.

Snead Is Still Going Strong

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

AUSTIN, Texas — A month short of his 77th birthday, Sam Snead was scheduled to play the second round of the Legends of Golf tournament despite injuring his back.

"We played on blood and guts today, I'll tell you that," Snead's partner, Bob Goalby, said of the team's performance Thursday in the opening round of the two-man, better ball event. They shot a six-under par 64 for share of lead.

"For the guy to play like he was hurting, he deserves a lot of credit," Goalby said.

Snead birdied the par-five first hole of the 6,367-yard Onion Creek Club course and the par-four 12th, while Goalby made four other birdies in their round.

Goalby said Snead's back has been sore for some time, noting that Snead had withdrawn after four holes at this year's Masters.

"His back's really bothering him. It's been hurting for three weeks," Goalby said.

Afghan Envoy Is Loneliest Diplomat In Washington

By Ruth Sinai
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Ostracized by the State Department, confined to the city limits, Afghanistan's top diplomat in Washington leads a frustrating existence.

Miagol — the first, last and only name of Afghanistan's charge d'affaires — is hoping the recent pullout of 115,000 Soviet troops from his country will ease some of the isolation imposed on him by the United States. But he is also realistic.

The Soviet-educated economist invited Secretary of State James A. Baker III to his embassy's reception Thursday evening marking the 11th anniversary of the revolution that brought to power a Marxist-oriented government and resulted in the 1979 Soviet invasion.

"They said he couldn't come, unfortunately," Miagol said with a skeptical laugh.

Very few Americans attended the reception, which drew mostly diplomats from Soviet bloc and other communist and socialist countries.

For a man who has to ask permission every time he wants to leave the city — and is usually turned down — Miagol was remarkably cheerful at an interview in the resplendent red-brick mansion which doubles as residence and embassy.

"Physically our life is good," he said, "but morale is difficult."

Miagol, one of 15 children, does not know how old he is but estimates his age at about 40. "My mother said there was snow on the ground, but she didn't know in what year," he said.

Miagol arrived here 10 months ago with his Russian wife and two children. When he asked to travel to New York by car to attend the General Assembly meetings of the U.N. last fall, he was told to go by plane.

When he asked permission to drive to the Soviet Embassy's recreation compound outside Washington, he was denied. "They said it was too far. But people from other socialist embassies also have 25-mile limit, and they are allowed to go," Miagol said.

The United States and other countries impose 25-mile travel limits on diplomats from countries deemed unfriendly.

"This makes me nervous," Miagol said. He spends his days reading messages received by telex from Kabul, dealing with administrative matters relating to his three-man embassy and keeping in touch with the extensive community of Afghan exiles in Washington.

His only contact with the State Department is through Richard Gookin, head of the Protocol Department, whom he sees about twice a month. "I give him my opinions," Miagol said.

Gookin listens politely — "he's a very nice man" — and conveys Miagol's views to State Department experts. But Gookin refused to accept a written message from Afghanistan's leader Najibullah congratulating George Bush on his inauguration as president and expressing his hopes for improved relations, Miagol said.

"They told me to put the envelope in a window for letters" at the State Department, he said. Miagol said he used the same window to deliver a second message several weeks ago asking the United States to stop arming the Mujahedeen rebels.

The rebels, backed by the United States and Pakistan, fought the Soviet occupation for nine years and are now locked in a civil war with Najibullah's Soviet-backed government.

The United States continues to view Najibullah as a hardline Marxist and fails to see that he is gaining acceptance by Afghans as the only viable choice for leading the war-wracked country, Miagol said.

"They must learn from the mistakes of the Soviets, who didn't understand the Afghan people," Miagol said.

Neither the Soviets nor the Americans understand that Afghans cannot embrace Marxism, he said. "It is not right with our culture, with our religion," said the Soviet-educated Moslem.

The United States withheld recognition from Afghanistan's government after the Soviets invaded, contending it was not elected democratically and does not represent the Afghan people. However, the U.S. Embassy continued to function in Kabul, serving as a listening post in the Soviet-run country.

"The United States recognizes many governments that are not democratic, that are fascist dictatorships," Miagol said. At least Najibullah was elected to office — "maybe not like American elections," but in accordance with Afghanistan's constitution, he said.

Once, the Soviets were considered the bad guys in Afghanistan and the Americans were the good guys, Miagol said. Now, the Soviet tanks and troops have left and they are sending wheat, flour and oil, while the Americans send missiles to the Mujahedeen.

"If the U.S. continues this, Afghanistan will of course be pro-Soviet," Miagol said.

Pravda Says Some Soviets Protest Gorbachev Policies

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOSCOW — Many Communist Party officials are unprepared or unwilling to accept the swift changes wrought by the political reforms of President Mikhail S. Gorbachev, the party newspaper Pravda said today.

The editorial followed by one day the newspaper's publication of startling admissions of failure made by party officials at a meeting of the policy-making Central Committee on Tuesday.

A senior Western diplomat today said the publication of the admissions may have been a device used by Gorbachev to force the officials to more solidly back his program of political restructuring, known as perestroika.

Pravda said political activity has rapidly increased over the past year and democratization is gaining ground.

"In many cases, however, party organizations and functionaries have proved unprepared for the rapid progress in extending democracy," the newspaper said. "A number of party committees and local governing councils are lagging behind the times in their attitudes, styles, methods and interpretation of events."

It said many officials were lapsing "into old thinking, nostalgia for authoritarian leadership and panicky attempts to check grassroots initiatives under the pretext of protecting socialism."

Pravda called on all party members, committees and organizations to follow the line of change initiated by Gorbachev, regardless of current difficulties facing the economy and society.

The diplomat, speaking on condition of anonymity, said some of the 20 speakers at the Central Committee meeting may have been taken by surprise when Gorbachev suggested their comments be published for the public to read.

The speeches were sharply critical of the party. For example, Moscow Mayor Valery T. Saikin said, "The people feel uncomfortable, alarmed, have lost their optimism, and various generations of people, separate social levels and even regions are quarreling with themselves."

As a result, said Saikin, who lost in the recent elections for the new Congress of People's Deputies, party organizations "have lost their vanguard role."

Gorbachev, in closing remarks at the meeting Tuesday, agreed perestroika was going poorly and was worsening shortages of housing, consumer goods and food. But, the 58-year-old leader said, people still have faith in the party.

Gorbachev gained strength to push for more extreme action at Tuesday's meeting when 74 of the Central Committee's 301 members retired.

Food Tampering Cases Increasing

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LONDON — Investigators intensified their search for extortionists who contaminated baby food with caustic soda, glass slivers and pieces of razor blades, and police said the number of reported cases of tampering rose to about 220.

Three babies were taken to hospitals in England on Thursday but later released after doctors found they were not harmed by tainted food, hospital officials said.

The only victims so far are a 9-month-old girl who cut her mouth on a piece of razor blade in a jar of yogurt and two mothers cut by glass found in baby food.

A U.S. executive of the Pittsburgh-based Heinz food company arrived Thursday night to help in the investigation, which involves a company subidiary, H.J. Heinz Co. Ltd.

"We are very angry in the Heinz corporation about this terrorist attack on babies and we are determined to do everything that is possible to help the police catch them," said Ted Smyth, director of corporate affairs.

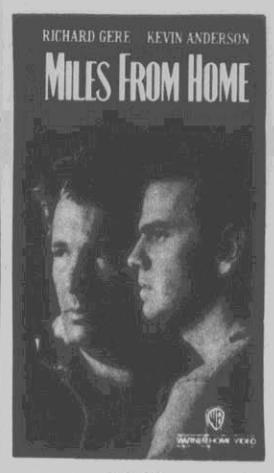

Home Office Minister John Patten said Wednesday that the first tampering reports occurred on April 7.

Since then, the number has risen to about 220, several of which were reported in Northern Ireland and the Republic of Ireland. Not all of the cases has been confirmed.

The majority probably were the work of "copycats, people getting on the bandwagon, cranks and some cases of self-contamination," an unidentified police detective said, according to Press Association, the British domestic news agency.

Protesting Students Reject China's Offer To Talk

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BEIJING — Students at universities in Beijing vowed today to continue their 5-day class boycott and wall posters at several schools proclaimed victory, a day after more than 150,000 of them and their supporters marched triumphantly for democracy.

"The strike must go on," read a new poster at Beijing Normal University.

"We must persist until final victory," read another at People's University.

The government announced Thursday that it was willing to talk with students about their demands for greater freedom. But student leaders rejected the government's stipulation that talks be conducted through official student groups.

Protesters at most schools have rejected the groups as nondemocratic and formed their own student unions. The government has denounced the unions as illegal.

Student leaders from several schools met today to discuss strategy.

"We talked about the march but didn't come to any decisions," said one leader at Beijing Normal University who spoke on condition of anonymity. "Right now we are savoring this victory. We have made the Communist Party bend."

Wang Dan, a student leader at Beijing University, said student leaders hoped the talks would be held soon and wanted to meet with Premier Li Peng.

"He is the leader of the government and he should hear all the views of the citizens," he said.

Newspapers throughout China carried a Xinhua News Agency story on the protest that said only about 30,000 students participated in Thursday's march.

But the 20-mile march through the streets of Beijing drew more than 150,000 students, workers and city residents who called for a free press and political reforms. It was Communist China's largest protest in modern times and lasted 15 hours.

The march was sparked by an editorial Wednesday in the People's Daily, which called the student movement a "chaotic disturbance" and accused the students of being unpatriotic.

Protesters who led the march carried a poster that said: "Uphold the righteous leaders of the party."

Today's Xinhua report was significant because it did not accuse the students of calling for the overthrow of the government. Most students say they only want the leaders to do their job better and respect human rights.

The television news today broadcast the first tape of the march. The report also repeated a warning that the protest was illegal and that organizers were breaking the law.

The People's Daily, the official newspaper of the Communist Party, published an overview of the previous two weeks of protests in an apparent attempt to pacify angry students.

The article denied that students had been beaten in Beijing last week when they staged a sit-in at the gates of the Communist Party headquarters. An Associated Press reporter saw police hit six students.

The article also attempted to dispel a rumor that a female student had been killed in the protest. The woman, it said, was hit by a car as she returned from the demonstration. Many students believe police killed her, although it appeared the newspaper's account was correct.

During Thursday's march, tens of thousands of Beijing residents escorted the students on bicycles and on foot, and tried to shield them from soldiers and police.

"We're opening a road for them," said one worker, after he helped push through a line of officers.

Police had issued harsh warnings against marches, but the security forces were unarmed and they gave up after pushing matches failed to stop the advancing demonstrators.

The march was the most dramatic action yet by Beijing students in their campaign for sweeping democratic reforms.

The protest began after the death of ousted Communist Party leader Hu Yaobang on April 15. Hu was removed from his post in 1987 after the party accused him of failing to crack down on pro-democracy demonstrations in late 1986.

Last week's protests culminated Saturday with a huge rally at Tiananmen Square, the symbolic political center of China.

At People's University today, one student said he went to class but found no one there.

"I thought everything was going to end after yesterday but now I see the movement is still going strong," he said.

Students have said they plan another march May 4, the 70th anniversary of China's first student movement for democracy. The movement grew out of students' opposition to Japan's territorial advances in China after World War I but developed into a quest for broader political goals, including democracy.

Police, Korean Students Clash

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SEOUL, South Korea — Students chanting "Yankee go home!" fought police with firebombs and rocks today after authorities banned a march to the North Korean border, and striking workers rioted in two southern cities.

Several thousand radical students clashed with riot police on at least five campuses in Seoul after the government banned a march to Panmunjom border truce site 30 miles north of Seoul for talks with communist students.

Twenty student delegates were seized by police as they tried to get to the border to meet the North Korean student delegates to discuss taking part in a youth festival in Pyongyang in July and other ways to reunite the two nations.

About 6,000 striking workers clashed with riot police in the southeastern industrial cities of Masan and Changwon, police said. Strikers in Changwon poured oil on some streets and set them ablaze and protesters in Masan pelted police with bits of scrap metal.

It was the fifth day of clashes in Changwon.

Riot police blocked 4,000 students trying to march out of Seoul National University. Screaming students armed with metal and wood clubs attacked riot police with firebombs before troopers stormed onto the campus firing tear gas.

Black police vans armed with multiple tear gas launchers fired hundreds of the bombs as fighting flared around the sprawling campus. It was surrounded by 3,000 riot police in green combat fatigues and visored helmets.

Police officials said people were hurt, but they had no figures.

Students clashed with riot police on at least four other Seoul campuses. About 700 students battled troopers with firebombs and rocks for wo hours at Yonsei University.

Student clashes also erupted in the southern port of Pusan and radicals seized a government prosecutors' office in Taegu, according to Yonhap, the South Korean news agency.

Student leaders lashed out at South Korean President Roh Tae-woo and the United States in rallies before the clashes, accusing them of perpetuating the division of the Korean peninsula. Speakers called for immediate unification with the communist north. "Overthrow Roh Tae-woo, who blocked our vital march to the north for talks with North Korean students. Let's raise a flag of anti-facism and anti-Americanism and march to Pyongyang," a leader said at Seoul National University.

The government banned the march to Panmunjom on grounds it posed a threat to public safety and the government alone has authority to deal with the rival north.

Winning Films Reaping Benefits From Oscars

By John Horn
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

HOLLYWOOD — The outlaw Snow White has disappeared and the copyright lawsuits have been shelved, but the real impact of the 61st Academy Awards has not diminished in the month since the curtain fell on the glitzy ceremony.

"Rain Man," winner of five major trophies, including best picture, has enjoyed a record-breaking post-Oscar surge, and a number of lesser victors have profited handsomely from their awards.

"Rain Man," the reigning domestic box-office champion with revenues of $156 million, is now MGM-United Artists' highest-grossing film ever, and is expected to be its biggest international hit, too.

Meanwhile, best foreign film winner "Pelle the Conqueror" is selling tickets at a brisk pace across the country, and sales for best original song "Let the River Run" from "Working Girl" have skyrocketed. "A Fish Called Wanda," which won an Oscar for best supporting actor, is No. 1 on the home video-rental charts.

Most post-Oscar publicity focused on the Oscar telecast's opening production number in which an unauthorized Snow White impersonator presented material so strange Disney promptly sued for copyright infringement.

In addition, a group of 17 producers, actors, directors and writers complained to the Academy that the show, with all its hype and glitz, "was an embarrassment to both the Academy and the entire motion picture industry." The note, dated two days after the March 29 show, was sent to Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences President Richard Kahn and the Academy's board of governors.

"It is neither fitting nor acceptable that the best work in motion pictures be acknowledged in such a demeaning fashion," said the letter, signed by Julie Andrews, Stanley Donen, Blake Edwards, Sidney Lumet, Paul Newman, Gregory Peck, Billy Wilder and others.

But the performance by "Rain Man" has transcended the flap over the telecast.

"Rain Man" has taken in $127 million internationally, and the story of a scheming car salesman learning to love his autistic brother will likely surpass all of United Artists' "Rocky" sequels and James Bond features in foreign receipts.

"A year ago, when we planned the release of this picture, we felt with the cast and the director and the story structure, that we had a major chance for Academy nominations and awards," said Jack Gordon, president of MGM International.

"So we planned the foreign release so that we would be breaking on the screens around the world at the time the nominations were announced and the awards were given. So the strategy worked perfectly and the picture has just bombarded the marketplace."

"Rain Man" is now playing in more than 50 countries, Gordon said. In 6½ weeks of release in Japan, "Rain Man" has grossed in excess of $25 million. The movie's Oscar triumph — it also won best actor for Dustin Hoffman, best director for Barry Levinson and best original screenplay for Ron Bass and Barry Morrow — has boosted many of the film's related performers.

Valeria Golino, the movie's co-star, now is inundated with scripts and has just completed the coming feature "Torrents of Spring."

For other movies that might have faded without any Oscar hype, the Academy Awards have given them a fresh jolt of momentum.

"Upon winning the Academy Award, we've found that a lot more people are interested in 'Pelle' and in (the film's star) Max Von Sydow," said Adam Rogers, national sales manager for "Pelle the Conqueror" distributor Miramax.

'Mister Rogers' Show To Premiere

PITTSBURGH — The miniseries comes to "Mister Rogers' Neighborhood" next week, and the show's cardigan-clad creator promises a message as gentle and reassuring as ever.

The three-part musical, titled "Josephine the Short-Neck Giraffe," tells the story of a young giraffe who yearns for a long, graceful neck like all the other giraffes. She eventually grows, Fred Rogers confided, "not on the outside, but on the important side."

"It's very much like the usual message of the Neighborhood, that you can be acceptable as you are," he said, smiling. "It's not so much the outsides of us that are important."

A song sung by Josephine and her friend Hazel the elephant sums it up best, according to Rogers.

"You're much more than a neck, Josephine. And you're much more than a trunk, Hazel. A chicken's more than a peck, and there's more than a smell to a skunk," Rogers quietly sang during an interview at Pittsburgh's WQED-TV, home to his children's programs for the past 35 years.

The special week of new programs gets under way Monday on Public Broadcasting Service stations with a trip to the San Diego Wild Animal Park, where viewers are introduced to real-life giraffes and elephants. On Tuesday, Rogers visits a film processing lab to have his animal photographs developed.

The miniseries, which features a cast of 15, elaborate animal costumes and five sets, runs Wednesday through Friday. Rogers gently guides his young audience from one day to the next, summarizing the main events and hinting at what might lie ahead for Josephine.

In the Neighborhood of Make-Believe, where animals sing, dance and play the trombone, Josephine is befriended by J.R., a shy giraffe who overcomes his problems by helping Josephine conquer hers. He accomplishes that with help from Hazel the elephant, who advises him to "just let your heart speak."

Actress Betty Aberlin talks with Fred Rogers

"There isn't a time that I see the scene in which J.R. talks and sings with Josephine ... that I haven't gotten chills up my spine," Rogers said, tapping his right hand against his back. "And this is something I've worked with for years. There's something so redemptive about someone who is trying so hard to help somebody else."

Rogers, 61, wrote "Josephine the Short-Neck Giraffe" for a French class assignment at Florida's Rollins College in 1950. He named J.R. the giraffe after fraternity brother John Reardon, who went on to sing with the Metropolitan Opera and was a frequent guest on "Mister Rogers Neighborhood." Reardon died a year ago, and the miniseries is dedicated to him.

Rogers set the story to music in the late 1950s, and about 1,000 records were pressed. Writer Barry Head transformed "Josephine the Short-Neck Giraffe" into a poem for children in 1975.

For years, Rogers tried to have the musical produced on stage or as an animated film.

"I still think it would be great for animation and a stage production," he said. "But I thought unless we get it out on the air, I don't think anybody's going to know about it."

The story Rogers wrote 39 years ago is vastly different from the musical airing next week. It is the Neighborhood's 13th musical.

"At the end of the (original) story, when people are telling Josephine that they like her just the way she is, she raises her head to look at them because she hasn't really heard this message before and her neck starts to grow. And it grows and grows and grows until her neck is as tall as everybody else's," Rogers said.

In the musical, Josephine's neck remains short.

"I think it shows how much we've grown," Rogers said. "You know, you don't have to look like everybody else to be acceptable and to feel acceptable. And wishes don't always come true.

"Because for a year and a day I've been wishing, she sang. That was one of her first songs. Her wish was for a longer neck, she thought. But really her wish was to have people like her exactly as she is. So often what we say we're wishing for isn't necessarily what is behind the wish. This is very philosophical."

Will pre-schoolers be able to grasp such a serious message, even in such a light-hearted setting?

"Maybe not in words, but let their hearts speak to them the way Hazel said to J.R., 'Just let your heart speak,'" Rogers said. "I think that that's the way an awful lot of communication takes place."

Roy Acuff Interested In Performing Again

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Roy Acuff, the 85-year-old "king of country music," would like to continue performing despite an earlier announcement that he's considering retiring, the general manager of the Grand Ole Opry says.

Acuff, best known for "The Wabash Cannonball," was honored earlier this week with a special humanitarian award at The Nashville Networks' Viewers' Choice Awards.

"I seem to be a burden on other people," the fiddler-singer said after receiving the award. "I have to be helped through the crowd like a baby. I have to be treated like a baby."

But Hal Durham, Opry general manager, said Acuff has told him he wants to remain on stage where he has performed for presidents and plumbers alike.

"The only health problem I'm aware of is his loss of vision," Durham said. "But he still sees, and he wants to work all the shows this year."

"He has to depend on someone to help him, and to a person who's been so active, that's a tough adjustment," Durham said.

Acuff has entertained on the Opry's radio show for 51 years. For more than 20 years, he made overseas trips to entertain U.S. armed forces at Christmas.

Concerts Set

LONDON (AP) - The British rock group Pink Floyd will play five concerts in June at Moscow's Olympic stadium.

The band said the Soviet government made the performances possible by offering to fly in the group's more than 300 tons of stage equipment.

Dozens of lasers, computerized lighting systems, circular screens, videos, fireworks, smoke effects and a model of a flying pig, one of the band's trademarks, will be used in the show.

Widows Upset Over Film Plans

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

HOUSTON (AP) — Several widows of crew members aboard the Challenger space shuttle say they are upset about plans by ABC to make a three-hour television movie about the accident.

Loran Onizuka, widow of Challenger astronaut Ellison Onizuka, and Jane Smith, widow of Challenger pilot Michael Smith, and their attorney have talked to George Englund, executive producer and writer of the ABC drama, in an effort to get him to drop the project.

Englund, however, said the project to tell the story of the seven astronauts who died in the accident Jan. 28, 1986, will continue.

"In my heart, I've tried to understand their feeling," he said. "The most honorable thing I can say is that my hopes and wishes are that it will be accurate."

But Mrs. Onizuka said, "They ought to let them be."

"Why do we have to relive this? Why don't they leave it alone? If it is going to be done at all, it should be done as a very serious documentary," added Mrs. Smith.

Cheryl McNair, widow of Challenger astronaut Ronald McNair, said the movie "just doesn't seem necessary at this time."

Englund said the cast has not been selected and a start date has not been set. But he hopes to film the entire movie in the Johnson Space Center vicinity south of Houston.

June Scobee, the widow of Challenger commander Francis "Dick" Scobee, talked with Englund for purposes of script research. But Englund would not say whether the families of Challenger astronauts Judith Resnik, Gregory Jarvis or schoolteacher Christa McAuliffe talked with him.

Except for a young lady from Bulgaria, no declarer in the semifinals of the World Team Championships succeeded in making five diamonds after a low spade lead. Try your luck at it. We'll even show you all the cards.

South's bid of five diamonds was a reasonable shot. She hoped her partner would produce another high card in the red suits rather than the king of spades.

West's spade lead went to the ten and ace. Declarer popped up with the ace on the heart shift, ruffed a club and cashed the king of spades for a heart discard. A heart ruff was followed by another club ruff, and a heart was trumped with the jack.

Declarer ruffed her remaining low club and cashed the ace of diamonds, reducing the hand to this position:

The Daily Reflector's Guide To Rest and Relaxation

Beating Theme Park Blues

A Little Planning Goes A Long Way

By Cherie Evans
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Let children work up to the most thrilling rides by beginning with the easier ones

Spring and summer can bring out the rambler in almost anyone. The beauties of the world are in full bloom in accordance with the seasons, and folks just want to get out and enjoy them.

A trip to Europe or Africa may be considered until the cost tallies beyond one's means, then a trip through the sites of North Carolina become more appealing but also may be too expensive.

Fortunately, there are opportunities to enjoy the culture, food and novelties of foreign countries and even the Tar Heel state in a day or perhaps two.

Greenville and Pitt County are within 250 miles of three major theme parks — Busch Gardens in Williamsburg, Va., Kings Dominion in Dover, Va., and Carowinds in Charlotte.

The parks have been organized around various themes from the traditions of European countries and the wonders of Africa to the diversity of the Carolinas and the flavor of old Virginia. Each offers a daylong trip through their wonderlands for less than $20 — an affordable price for the thousands who visit them each year.

Park officials have made several suggestions to make the visit most enjoyable.

"If possible, it's nicer on a weekday instead of a weekend," said Serena Barry of Kings Dominion,

Weekday crowds are usually smaller, so rides and attractions are accessible without hours of waiting in long lines, she said.

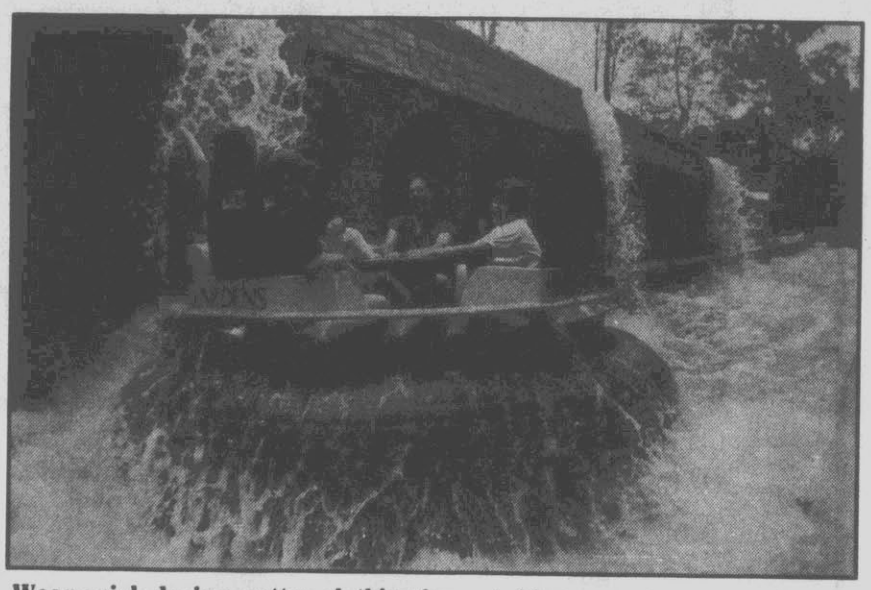

If attending a park on the weekend, go early and ride the major rides first, she said. That also will minimize the wait.

And it's important to wear comfortable clothes, Ms. Barry said. "You wouldn't believe the people we see in the park with high heels on, and they usually end up in our first-aid station complaining of cramps."

Consider taking an extra set of clothes if you're planning to enjoy one of the water rides that often drench patrons. Remember that cotton clothing drys more quickly than clothing made of other fabrics, including denim.

Bathing suits are required in the six-acre RipTide Reef at Carowinds, Claire Lang said, but street clothes are needed for other attractions in the park.

Three Parks Offer Unique Brand Of Fun

You may have heard a lot about the various theme parks within driving distance of Greenville, but not be acquainted with all they offer.

Carowinds, Busch Gardens and King's Dominion are all full of activities for all ages, but each offers a different theme.

Here's a look at each of the three parks.

Busch Gardens

Busch Gardens, in Williamsburg, Va., is 153 miles from Greenville and features eight European hamlets that may be visited for $19.95 a day or $25.95 for two days. A season pass is $59.95. Children 2 years and younger are admitted free.

The 17th-century English village of Banbury Cross includes a "Hot Ice" Olympic-style ice skating review, the Muffin Man pastry shop, the White Swan cottage and the workshop of John Hine.

Heatherdowns is the Scottish home of the Loch Ness Monster, one of the largest roller coasters in the world.

"Stage Struck," a musical extravaganza, highlights Hastings which also offers The Enchanted Laboratory, a computer-animated show with elaborate special effects.

New France, the Canadian fur trapper's village, houses authentic crafts including pottery, candles and handblown glass.

An antique carousel is featured in Rhinefield, a replica of a German village. The Rhine River boat cruises, a glockenspiel, a candy shop, Hummel figurines and beer steins also are offered in the village.

In Oktoberfest, which captures the spirit of Germany, celebrates the fifth year anniversary of The Big Bad Wolf, a suspended roller coaster that travels through Bavarian villages before dropping 80 feet to the Rhine River.

Roman Rapids, a wet, white water adventure is found in the Italian village of San Marco.

Busch Gardens is open Saturdays from 10 a.m. to 10 p.m. and on Sundays from 10 a.m. to 7 p.m. through May 12. From May 13 through June 9, the park is open from 10 a.m. to 10 p.m. Mondays through Thursdays and Saturday. It's open from 10 a.m. to 7 p.m. Fridays and Sundays. From June 10-30, it's open daily from 10 a.m. to 10 p.m., and from July 1 to Aug. 27, it's open from 10 a.m. to midnight on Friday and Saturday, and from 10 a.m. to 10 p.m. Sunday through Thursday. From Aug. 28-31, it is open 10 a.m. to 7 p.m.

Kings Dominion

Kings Dominion, in Doswell, Va., is the largest park in the area with 400 acres of entertainment centered on five different themes. About 161 miles from Greenville, the park's front gate admission is $18.95 a day or $29.95 for two days. Season passes through April 30 are $29.95. Senior citizens aged 55 years and older are admitted for $14.45, and children 2 years and under are admitted free.

Safari Village features acres reminiscent of the Serengetti Plains and the African Veldt. The monorail treks through 120 acres of natural habitat animal preserve with more than 300 exotic birds and beasts from parts of Asia and Afria. In addition the village offers the rides Smurf Mountain, Diamond Falls and Avalanche Bobsled.

International Street, the main entrance of the park, features rides, shops and restaurants of architecture, food and novelty items of various countries.

Venture through the back woods along the byways of the antique car ride or dare the fury of the Grizzly rollercoaster in Old Virginia, which also hosts the drenching White Water Canyon and the architecture of the 1,300-seat Mason Dixon Music Hall.

Yogi Bear, Scooby Doo and others host the Hanna-Barbera Land geared toward the young. The Backyard Circus and the Racing Rivers waterslide also are offered.

Kings Dominion also provides a pavilion, an amphitheater and campground. It is open on weekends through May 29, and it opens daily June 1 through Sept. 1. It's open weekends from Sept 2 to Oct. 14.

Carowinds

Carowinds, located on 325 acres near Charlotte on the North Carolina and South Carolina state lines, is made up of 10 themed areas depicting the different aspects of Carolina culture. It costs $17.95 a day for ages 7 to 59; $8.95 for ages 4 to 6 and for ages 60 and over, and children 3 and younger are admitted free. A two-day ticket is $24.95.

RipTide Reef is a new six-acre water area featuring tube and speed slides, a wave pool and a water-play area, while Plantation Square is at the main entrance of the park and is highlighted by a huge mansion and shopping area modeled after the Charleston, S.C., waterfront.

The Old World Market Place reflects the international heritage of the two Carolinas, and Carolina R.F.D. salutes the rural Carolina with split rail fences, country music and southern fried chicken. The ride Whitewater Falls is located in this area.

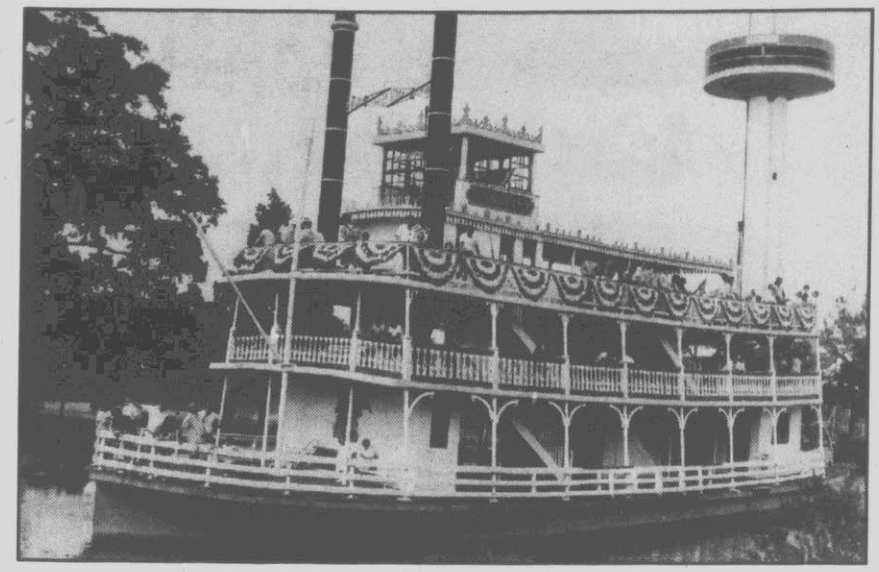

Hanna Barbera Land, designed for young visitors, has nine rides and a baby care center, while County Fair provides all the fixings for the old fashioned county fair.

Pirate Island is a reminder of Carolina's coast and the pirates that loomed there. Blackbeard's Revenge is moored on the island.

Blue Ridge Junction is made of log cabins, mining towns and crafts, and provides the hospitality of the Appalachian Mountains, while Carolina Showplace features the singing and dancing of contemporary Carolina.

Carowinds is open weekends through June 4 and from Aug. 19 through Oct. 8. It will open Sundays through Thursdays from June 5 through August 17. The park also will be open May 26, May 29, July 7 and September 4. It opens daily at 10 a.m. and closes at 8 p.m. except on summer Saturdays when the park is open until 10 p.m.

Tips

"Take children to the park early before they get tired and cranky," Ms. Barry said. "Bring a stroller if you're planning to stay all day," noting most parks rent strollers.

Take the children to the restroom often, and make up games to play while waiting in line for an attraction.

"Eat at off times to avoid congestion at the food stands," Ms. Barry said. "Stay away from foods with a high sugar content. Kids seem to get restless if they eat a lot of sugar."

But keeping children away from sugar may not be easy at a theme park, she said. Most parks do offer fruit juices, sandwiches and ice cream, which should not make children overly active.

After a child has eaten, "wait before putting kid on a ride with spinning motions," she said.

"Don't force children on rides," Ms. Barry said. "Let them watch a few rides so they can see kids get on and off. Let them have a good experience with some rides first before pushing them onto the bigger rides."

Many parks have areas with rides designed specifically for children, she said. "Go to those areas first."

Pre-arrange meeting times and places for older children or others in the group, Ms. Lang said. Many parks do not page announcements unless there is an emergency.

Make children and others in the group aware of what to do if people become separated.

"All major parks are trained to handle that situation," Ms. Lang said. "Make sure the child can identify the park personnel who can take them to a lost parent center."

Major parks have first-aid stations with trained personnel if health emergencies arise, Ms. Barry said. It's good to know where they're located.

Strollers, purses, cameras, sunglasses and bulky objects are not allowed on the rides in most parks, Ms. Lang said. Make arrangements to leave those items with those in the group not riding at the same time.

Lost articles may be recovered at the guest relations center or similar area in the park, she said.

Remember to get your hand stamped if you're leaving the park but are planning to return that day, Ms. Lang said.

Family Is Tops To Vacationers

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Being with the family is the primary reason most Americans go on vacation, according to an American Express survey.

The survey of 1,000 adults found that 72 percent of those asked put family as the biggest motivation in taking a vacation, especially among women and among those over 65. It was followed by being with a spouse or companion, then rest and relaxation and escape from stress. Rest and relaxation was the biggest reason among travelers aged 18 through 49.

Fifty-eight percent said they went on vacation for fun and entertainment and 56 percent wanted to "go somewhere new."

Men ranked romance higher than women did; 38 percent of the men said it was an important factor, compared to 32 percent of the women.

The survey, called "Psychology of Vacation Travel," also found that the average American vacationer takes a day-and-a-half to "unwind," although nearly 10 percent said they never unwind.

The vacation "afterglow" lasts six days, on the average, according to those interviewed. But 9 percent said it lasts less than a day.

Others reasons cited for vacations included adventure, meeting new people, "escape" (from everyone, everything or the weather), shopping and gambling.

North Carolina Has Perfect Spots For A Weekend Trek

By Greg Laudick
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

The cold winter temperatures have finally given way to the warmth of spring and summer, which according to travel experts, is the time of year in which most people turn their thoughts to vacation travel.

Many of us who are granted a week or two of vacation time from our employers often make arrangements for our time away from work for major trips — like taking the kids to Disneyworld, a jaunt to Boston or New York City or perhaps even a trip to the Hawaiian Islands.

How often we forget that North Carolina boasts a multitude of vacation adventures that can be experienced over the course of a weekend drive.

Those many tourist attractions that are virtually in our own backyard are the same sites that people in northern states such as Indiana, Michigan and Ohio spend their two weeks of vacation time to enjoy.

When making vacation plans this year, consider the possibility of:

•The Blue Ridge Parkway: this wonderous stretch of highway extends over 250 miles along the crest of the mountains along the North Carolina-Virginia border.

Maintained by the National Park Service, The parkway provides many scenic overlooks offering breathtaking views during the spring and summer months. Along the road are plenty of recreation areas featuring special exhibits and trails, campgrounds and picnic areas.

Sometimes, the observant traveler can even catch glimpses of wild animals such as bobcats, foxes, and white-tailed deer as they proceed near the roadside.

•The Lost Colony: The longest-running outdoor drama in America details the demise of the first English speaking settlement in the New World.

Over 3 million people have witnessed the re-enactment of Sir Walter Raleigh's Roanoke Voyages on the very shores where the original events actually occured.

The presentation runs at the Waterside Theatre on Roanoke Island from June 9 to August 26, with presentations nightly except on Sunday.

•Cedar Island: located at the farthest eastern point of U.S. 70, Cedar Island offers nature lovers a breathtaking example of undisturbed natual habitat.

Approximately 15,000 acres of unspoiled saltmarsh and woodlands is the home to a wide variety of animal species.

Observation roads and boat landings are open during the weekends during daylight hours. Cedar Island is headquartered on Lola Road off U.S. 70.

•Historic Bath: The state's oldest chartered community, Bath is located on an inlet of the Pamlico River. Its numerous historic structures such as churches and homes provide photographers, amateur and professional alike, with a series of extraordinary backdrops.

Bath is the site of the state's first public library and first church, St. Thomas' Episcopal Church, which was constructed in 1734.

•Cape Hatteras Seashore: Encompassing nearly 70 miles of beach along the Outer Banks, the seashore is one of the most popular vacation spots in the state during the hot summer months.

A must for sight-seers is the historic Cape Hatteras Lighthouse. The structure rises above the sandy dunes over 200 feet high.

•Wright Brothers National Memorial: Located near Kitty hawk and Kill Devil Hill, the site marks the location where Wilbur and Orville Wright made the world's first powered aircraft flight on Dec. 17, 1903.

The Wright Monument, a national historic site, is a 60-foot triangular plyon of gray granite. Besides the monument is a

Traveling With Kids Can Be Rewarding

By Kim Upton
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

As any parent knows, traveling on airplanes with children can be a humbling experience. But it is also not without its rewards. Travel can help expand your child's mind and enhance his or her life.

But first you have to get there. Here is some advice on enhancing your travel experience with children.

When accompanied by an adult, children under 2 years fly free on most domestic airlines. But they must be placed in your lap unless empty seats are available. From ages 2 through 11, children accompanied by an adult are entitled to a discount. Check fares with individual airlines.

When making reservations, request bulkhead seating for the extra space it provides. Your own government-certified child-safety seat may be used aboard an aircraft, but you will have to buy a full-fare seat to use it.

If notified at least 24 hours in advance, most airlines offer children special meals such as peanut butter-and-jelly sandwiches, hot dogs and spaghetti. Airlines don't stock baby food, so take along your own, as well as emergency snacks.

Pack the child's favorite toy, plus a surprise pack that includes such things as books and crayons. Don't pack games with lots of pieces that can get lost.

A free pamphlet, "When Kids Fly," published by Massport, which is the agency that manages Boston's Logan Airport, details parental responsibility as well as the obligations of an airline carrying an unaccompanied child.

The guide cautions parents to expect problems such as missed connections, canceled flights and late departures, which might cause a child to miss the adult picking him up at his or her destination.

The pamphlet warns parents not to think of teen-agers traveling alone as adults. Although they may look mature they may not be able to handle all emergencies. And they may avoid asking questions because appearing "cool" is important to them.

Many airlines will not allow children under 5 to fly by themselves. Five-to 7-year-old children can fly solo on most airlines if no change of plane is required. But a responsible adult must remain with the child until he or she is boarded, and the child must be met by an adult with adequate identification, such as a driver's license.

Children 8 through 11 generally will be allowed to travel by themselves, even if a change of plane is required. Most airlines will assist the child in making the plane change, although some charge a fee for the service.

A few airlines, including Continental, have children's club rooms in some major airports. The club rooms are places where the children can be entertained with games while waiting for the next flight. There may be a fee for use.

OBERAMMERGAU 1990
CONTINENTAL EUROPE

Join us in July of 1990 for a 15 day tour of Continental Europe. The tour includes visits to nine cities and the 1990 performance of the Oberammergau Passion Play. Oberammergau has been performed every 10 years since 1663. The Play depicts the 15th century Passion of Christ and is truly an experience of a lifetime.

Don't Leave For A Vacation Without Safeguarding Home

By Stuart Savage
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Summer's on its way and a vacation or a weekend away from home might be on the agenda. But your vacation or weekend plans might turn into a bad experience if you return to a burglarized and ransacked home.

You can make each trip more enjoyable and carefree if you will take a few simple steps to reduce the possibility that your home will be entered while you are gone, says Officer J.E. Tripp of the Greenville Police Department's crime prevention section.

According to Tripp, a few days before you leave, notify the post office to hold your mail or arrange with a neighbor to pick up and hold your mail. And notify your newspaper carrier to discontinue delivery while you are away.

If you will be away for an extended period, make arrangements to have the grass cut. Ask a neighbor or relative to watch your home and give them a key. Let them know where and how you can be reached in an emergency and give them your car description and license plate number.

Tripp also suggests that you contact the police department and request a vacation house check, which officers will do on a routine basis until your return.

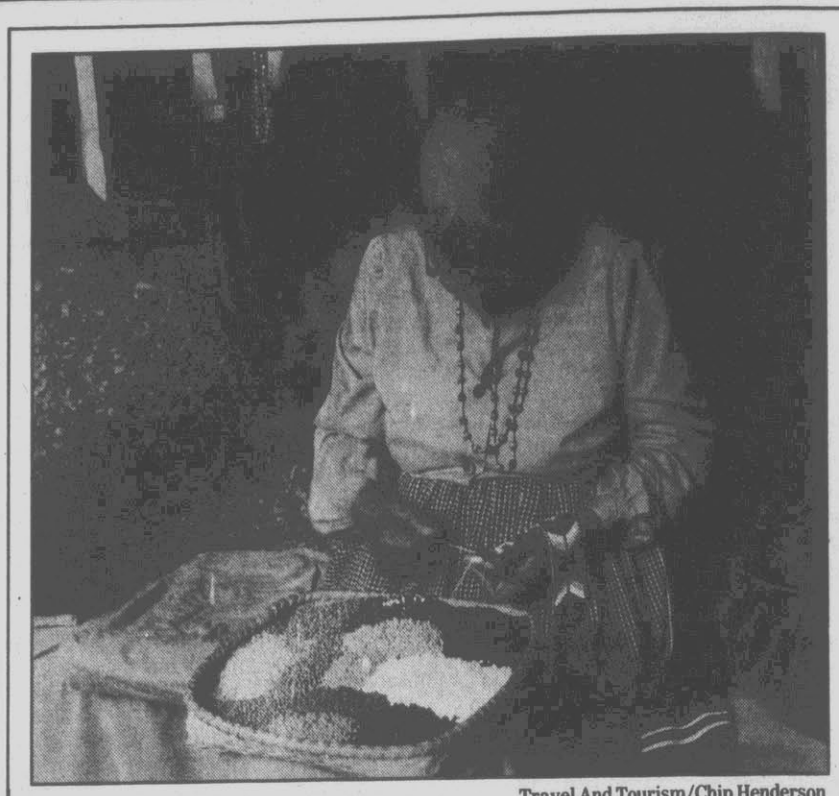

Another good idea, Tripp says, is to store valuables with a friend or at a bank.

And ask your neighbors not to tell inquiring strangers that you are away.

On the day you leave, unplug all major electrical appliances — television sets, washers, microwave ovens stereos — to prevent possible damage from electrical storms. And set your thermostat so that your air conditioner will maintain a reasonable temperature — 80 degrees in the summer.

Tripp also suggests that you remove all highly-perishable foods; turn down the volume control on your telephone so it cannot be heard from the outside; check all windows and doors for security; and arrange window shades, drapes, curtains in the normal daytime position so neighbors and the police can see into your home.

Another suggestion from Tripp, consider buying an automatic timer to turn lights and a radio on for a few hours after dark, or possibly have a friend turn lights on and off at varying times, to make your home look and sound occupied.

Ashe County Cheese Has Grand Tradition

TRAVEL AND TOURISM

WEST JEFFERSON — "Say Cheese," is an expression often associated with that special photograph of the family vacation or a visit to your grandparents' house. Here in Ashe County when you hear that saying, they don't want you to pose for a snapshot.

Sandwiched between Main and Fourth streets, the Ashe County Cheese Company has produced cheese for more than five decades. When you "Say Cheese" here, a delicious sample of cheddar or colby may follow.

Located 180 miles from Raleigh and 95 miles from Charlotte — the state's largest centers of commerce — this remote town became the home of the Kraft Company in 1930.

"People in the community were already making cheese, and Kraft came in and consolidated in 1929," said Jo Starling, the factory's office manager.

"In my opinion this cheese factory probably kept a lot of people from going hungry during the Depression," Mrs. Starling, a 20-year veteran with the company said.

The Kraft Company owned the factory until 1975, when it was sold to the man who managed the plant for Kraft, C.F. Hazelwood. it has changed hands several times since, and is now operated by a Connecticut firm, she said.

Even with the changes, one thing has remained the same — the Ashe County Cheese Company produces rich cheddars, mellow colbys and delicious mountain jack cheeses.

"Most of our work is still done by hand," said Steve Hendricks, the plant manager. "And you get a different flavor. We like to think the extra attention makes this cheese better."

This is the only cheese manufacturer in the Carolinas, and visitors to the High Country can watch the cheesemaking through a special viewing area.

Next, it's off to the cheese shop where visitors can sample and purchase an array of natural cheddars or curd — golden nuggets of cheddar that have a mild flavor. "Cheddar is what we really excel in," Mrs. Starling said.

The cheese shop, which sells the Ashe County Cheese and accessories, opened in 1981. "We've gone from selling cheese off a desk to a full retail and mail-order outlet," she said.

Approximately eight million pounds of cheese are sold annually from the cheese factory, she said.

If you're planning a visit, the viewing room is open from 8:30 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday, but you should call to be sure cheese is being made that day. West Jefferson is easily accessible from North Carolina Highways 16, 21, 421 and the Blue Ridge Parkway.

Cruises Vary In Character, Length, Cost

Adventurous Trips Offered This Year

By Gene Schroeder
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

When it comes to deciding what to do for a vacation this year, many travel consultants are of the opinion that some 3 million Americans can't be wrong.

That's the number of U.S. travelers expected to take cruises in 1989.

The choice of itinerary ranges from a 25-cent ride on the Manhattan-Staten Island ferry (round trip) to a round-the-world trip in a penthouse split-level suite aboard the Queen Elizabeth 2 at $360,000 each, double occupancy.

For travelers lured by faraway places with strange-sounding names there's a cornucopia of adventurous cruises offered vacationers this season.

For example:

• An Amazon River expedition that includes fishing for piranhas that later become a luncheon treat.

• A visit to the Galapagos Islands, described by Charles Darwin as "a living laboratory of evolution," where he formulated his "Origin of Species" in 1835.

• Siberian River cruises led by Sir Fitzroy Maclean, a noted Soviet expert from Great Britain.

• A trip aboard what is billed as the first and only luxury ship to cruise China's Yangtse River.

• In-depth luxury cruises in the Baltic Sea and Gulf of Bothnia.

Despite the millions of cruising Americans each year, travel experts say less than 10 percent of U.S. vacationers have discovered cruising.

But because of an expected increase in popularity, more ships are being constructed, according to Douglas Ward, executive director of the International Cruise Passengers Association.

The result is an overcapacity of berths in certain cruising areas, keeping prices modest and competitive for passengers, says Ward, author of the Berlitz "Complete Handbook to Cruising."

The Associated Press

Travelers cruise along the Amazon, going into areas unreachable by ship

Since 85 percent of those who take cruises are eager to go again, he adds, the overcapacity is expected to decline as the margin grows.

Robert Thornton, professor of marketing at Miami University of Ohio, agrees with Ward that overcapacity means the cruise industry may not be in for smooth sailing.

While cruises are in the midst of an unprecedented boom in popularity, Thornton foresees a change in marketing strategy if that growth — which averaged 10.5 percent annually from 1980-87 — is to continue.

Plans by the cruise industry to expand by 30,000 berths in the next five years, he says, could result in a classic overcapacity squeeze in profits.

Because the market is already so heavily discounted, the Miami University professor recommends that consumers find a travel agent who specializes in cruises.

Bargains exist and more may be in the offing for those who can wait for a last-minute trip, he says, for no cruise line will leave with an empty cabin if possible.

Thornton says industries approaching overcapacity typically attempt to segment the market, and he believes that tactic will be used more and more by the cruise industry as capacity exceeds demand.

"That means you'll have 'dinks' (double income, no kids) on cruise A, singles on cruise B and retirees on cruise C," he says.

Ward puts it another way. He notes a trend toward "specialty" cruising, using smaller ships equipped to cater to young, active passengers, pursuing their hobbies or special interests.

In advising vacationers how to make a selection, Ward says there is a trend by some cruise lines to offer "more ports" in a week than their competitors, according to Ward.

But such intensive "island hopping" gives little time to explore a destination to the full before you have to nip back on board for a quick ride to the next port, he says, adding:

"While you see a lot in a week, by the end of the cruise you may need another week to unwind, and you'll be hard put to remember what you saw on which day.

"Ultimately, this is not the best way to cruise, except for those who want to see as much as possible in a short space of time."

Ward, who has been on more than 600 cruises himself, agrees with the old maxim that "the best way to unwind quickly is to travel slowly."

Discovery Completes Mission With Perfect Desert Landing

By Lee Siegel
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

EDWARDS AIR FORCE BASE, Calif. — The space shuttle Discovery plunged out of space to a desert landing at dawn Saturday, ending an almost flawless mission that included completion of NASA's satellite communication system.

"Well done, Discovery. That's one crew, four crippled rats, 32 fertilized chicken eggs and other experiments landed on schedule at 6:36 a.m. on a paved runway on Rogers Dry Lake, watched by a near-record 360,000 spectators.

"NASA and the country's happy this morning. It's a beautiful day in California," Rear Adm. Richard H. Truly, the space agency's associate administrator, said after Discovery touched down.

"It's marvelous people can come back," as country realizes we're back."

The landing looked perfect, as promised from orbit when shuttle commander Michael L. Coats, a veteran Navy aircraft carrier pilot, radioed "3 wire" to mission control. He referred to the best arresting cable for a plane to snag when landing on the deck of a carrier.

NASA television close-ups of the shuttle after its 1.9-million-mile trip showed numerous white marks on the black thermal tiles that protect

But Truly described the damage as "a few minor chips."

"The vehicle is just as clean as it can be," Truly said at a post-landing news conference.

In December, the shuttle Atlantis suffered severe tile damage when it was hit by insulation falling off a booster rocket and fuel tank during the launch.

About seven hours after Discovery landed, the astronauts and their wives arrived in Houston, where

Coastal Golf Courses Ranked Among Best By Golfing Magazines

N.C. TRAVEL AND TOURISM

RALEIGH — Since 1895 when the first gold course was constructed in Pinehurst, the sport has spread from the sandhills to the mountains, offering the golfer stunning scenery and challenging course design.

North Carolina has long been recognized as "Golf State, U.S.A.," where men and women donned in colorful golfing attire flock to the cool mountain courses in the fall and summer and the coastal golf resorts throughout the year.

As the number of golf enthusiasts increases yearly so does the number of velvety, lush fairways. More new courses are under construction along the North Carolina coast than anywhere else in the state.

The "hot spot" for course development is on the southeastern tip of the state where 10 new courses are scheduled to be completed in the next 18 months.

Developers like Miller Pope and Mason Anderson want to entice golfers from Myrtle Beach, S.C., to play the championship courses along the North Carolina coast.

"Generally, the number of golfers is growing to 10 to 15 percent annually," said Anderson, who is developing a golf course and resort in Brunswick County. "North Carolina's coast already has great restaurants, accommodations and friendly people."

Pope, co-founder of the N.C. Coastal Golf Association and a partner in Sea Trail Golf Links, is constantly selling the area and its golf courses, which are ranked among the top layouts in America by golf magazines.

"This is a beautiful area," said Chet Page, golf pro at Sea Trail Golf Links. "The weather is good throughout the year, and golf is becoming more and more popular."

North Carolina courses are appealing the golfers because they are less commercialized, with natural areas surrounding the fairways, he said.

"The golfer would prefer to drive 20 minutes here than see rows of condominiums and motels," Page said.

"During the spring and fall we turn away hundreds of golfers because we are overbooked," said Hugh Gill, assistant pro at March Harbor Golf Links. Located in Calabash, the course runs along the Intracoastal Waterway and across the state line. Approximately 95 percent of its business comes from the Myrtle Beach area.

Nearby is Oyster Bay Golf Links. When it opened in 1983 it was designated America's best new resort golf course by Golf Digest, Betty Nichols, the resort's golf professional, said.

"Oyster Bay has its own reputation," Ms. Nichols said. "I think the competition from new courses can only help. Golfers will play one course in the morning and another in the afternoon."

In fact, with more than 30 courses dotting the North Carolina coastline, golfers could play a new course each day during a week-long vacation, and do that for several years.

And while a surge of new course development is taking place on the southern coast, elsewhere along North Carolina's shoreline there is an excellent tradition of golfing.

Starting at America's birthplace near the tallest sand dunes on the East Coast, where the wind was strong enough to launch man's first flight, is Sea Scape, an 18-hole public course in Kitty Hawk. Nearby Southern Shores is the home of Duck Woods, a private course appoved by the United States Golf Association.

In seaport of Morehead City there is Brandywine Bay Golf & Country Club. Star Hill Golf and Country Club is at Cape Carteret. The Bogue Banks Country Club is in nearby Atlantic Beach. And historic New Bern offers Carolina Pines, Fairfield Harbor Country Club and River Bend Plantation Country Club.

Belvedere Plantation, Topsail Greens and Olde Point Golf & Country Club, all 18-hole championship courses, are located in Hampstead, about 15 miles north of Wilmington.

In the Wilmington area are the 65-year old Wilmington Golf Course, the new Cape Golf and Racquet Club, the Echo Farms Country Club and the Cape Fear and Pine Valley country clubs. Three miles from Wrightsville Beach on Highway 74 is Duck Haven Golf Club, a public 18-hole course.

Located 35 miles southeast of Wilmington is Oak Island Golf Club, a semi-private 18-hole course, and the beautiful Bald Head Island Golf Course.

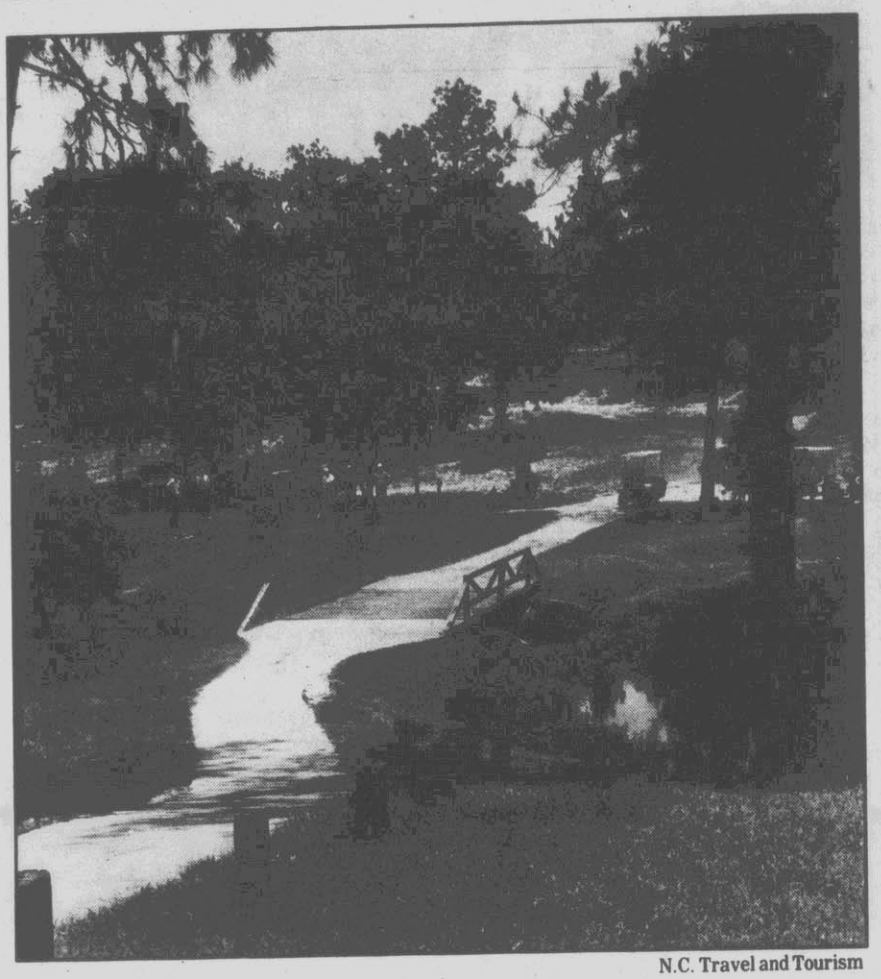

From Shallotte to Calabash there are 10 additional courses, including the area's newest, Brick Landing Plantation. Beginning October 15, the 18-hole course will accept tee times, according to Ben Hunt, golf professional.

The 800-acre resort will provide next day club repair, overnight golf equipment storage and junior golf, Hunt said.

Another new gold resort is Lockwood Folly located near Holden Beach. Channelside Corporation is developing the course, which should be ready for its first golfer in December.

"What more could a person want for a vacation?" Anderson muses about coastal golf, with its superb courses and excellent scenery. "The fact is you can't beat it, and that is why golfers are coming in such large numbers."

EMERALD ISLE — The light drizzle had stopped where NC Highway 58 crosses Bogue Sound. At Emerald Isle, the gray wedge of clouds lifted to let the sun cast its warm, early evening light across the swaying shrubbery of the marshes and dunes on the ocean's edge.

Beams of sunlight caught the misty ocean spray to form a bright rainbow that seemed to join the waters of the Atlantic with seaside suburbia.

Stand anywhere along the 300 miles of North Carolina shoreline after a summer shower and you might spot a rainbow. Or you may see dolphins or shrimp boats slowly moving across the horizon.

The waters of Emerald Isle glisten and sparkle like a gem. That's why the original developers dubbed the island "Emerald Isle."

Neal Lewis, executive director of the Carteret County Chamber of Commerce, remembers the legend like this: "The story goes that during the early days of surveying the property, the owners were standing on a sand dune on one of those magnificently clear, calm days when the gentle ripples of the ocean sparkle and saw the water was a rich green color. Someone commented that it looked just like emeralds sparkling, so, they decided to call it Emerald Isle."

Emerald Isle is part of the Crystal Coast in Carteret County, which includes Atlantic Beach, Beaufort, Newport, Pine Knoll Shores, Cape Carteret, Morehead City, Cedar Island, Harkers Island, Salter Path and Indian Beach.

Summer officially begins June 20 at 11:57 p.m., and already beach promoters are predicting an excellent 1988 season. "Every indication is that things will be good this summer," Lewis said. "Our reservations are already ahead of last year."

For information on the Crystal Coast contact the Carteret County Chamber of Commerce, 726-6831.

Further south is the Cape Fear area, which includes Wilmington, Wrightsville Beach, Carolina Beach and Kure Beach. Wilmington, North Carolina's major seaport, is located on the Cape Fear River. There is the North Carolina Aquarium at Fort Fisher and a 200 block historic district rich in shopping, dining, arts and culture.

Permanently moored across the Cape Fear River from downtown Wilmington is the USS North Carolina Battleship Memorial. Visitors can walk the decks, inspect the guns and relive the glory of the World War II ship. A 70-minute drama, "The Immortal Showboat," an action-packed account of the USS North Carolina's role in American naval history, is presented nightly during the summer. The battleship is open year-round from 8 a.m. to sunset. For more information contact 762-1829.

A new attraction this year along the Cape Fear is the Henrietta II riverboat. Like the historic stern wheel riverboats of the past, the Henrietta II will be docked at the foot of Market Street at Riverfront Park, the traditional riverboat landing. Henreitta II is named for Henrietta, a trail blazer for steamboats on the Cape Fear River, which enjoyed a long and financially successful life. The ship was built in 1817-1818 by James Seawell at his plantation. The Henrietta II is the brainchild of Captain Carl Marshburn. Under the ownership of Cape Fear Riverboats Inc., construction of the Henrietta II began in mid-September 1987 in Greenville, Mississippi and was completed early this year.

The steamboat will offer three types of cruises: sightseeing, dinner and private charter cruises. For more information or reservations contact: 392-1140.

The southernmost portion of North Carolina's coast includes the Brunswick Islands area, comprised of Southport, Bald Head Island, Boiling Spring Lakes, Caswell Beach, Yaupon Beach, Long Beach, Ocean Isle, Holden Beach, Sunset Beach and Calabash.

There are 17 miles of beautiful beaches in the Southport-Oak Island area. "We have great shell collecting and good clamming and oystering," said Steven Foster, director of the Chamber of Commerce.

Southport will host the 10th annual U.S. Open King Mackerel Tournment, Sept. 20-Oct. 1. Other fishing opportunities are available daily with charter boats providing full and half-day tours for Gulf Stream fishing. "All you have to do is bring your lunch." he said.

Golf courses are plentiful in the Brunswick County area, offering top-rated opporunities for the competitive player. And this year visitors can enjoy golf at the area's newest course, Lockwood Folly, Foster said. Other attractions include Fort Fisher State Recreation Area, the North Carolina Aquarium and Brunswick Town State Historic Site.

For more information contact the Southport-Oak Island Chamber of Commerce at 457-6964 or the South Brunswick Islands Chamber of Commerce at 754-6644.

Make This Summer's Vacation Your Safest Ever

By Stuart Savage
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

If you'll be traveling this summer — away on a vacation or for a weekend outing — there are a few things you might want to consider in an effort to keep your holiday from turning into a not-so-pleasant experience.

According to Officer J.E. Tripp of the Greenville Police Department's crime prevention section, if you are driving, have your car checked thoroughly and service before you leave. Check the spare tire for sufficient air, and take along an extra set of keys.

And don't carry a large amount of cash. Tripp suggests that you purchase travelers checks, because they are safer than cash. And carry the receipts apart from the checks. If you lose your checks, or if they are stolen, you'll still have proof of purchase.

Don't leave valuables in your hotel or motel room either. If you must take expensive jewelry or other valuable property, store it in the motel or hotel's safe.

If you are driving, make sure your car doors are locked when it is parked unattended. And don't leave valuables in plain view inside the passenger compartment. Put valuable items in the trunk out of sight.

And if you have a bicycle, boat or motorcycle along on your vacation, make sure they are securely locked when you are away from them.

Tripp suggested that a good plan — whether you are at home or away — is to make sure your drivers license number or social security number is engraved on valuable property. If is stolen, there will be a positive means of identifying your property so that it can be returned.

Aran Islands A World Of Their Own

By Prudence Heller
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

KILRONAN, Aran Islands — Ireland's Aran Islands have so many stone walls that only seeing is believing.

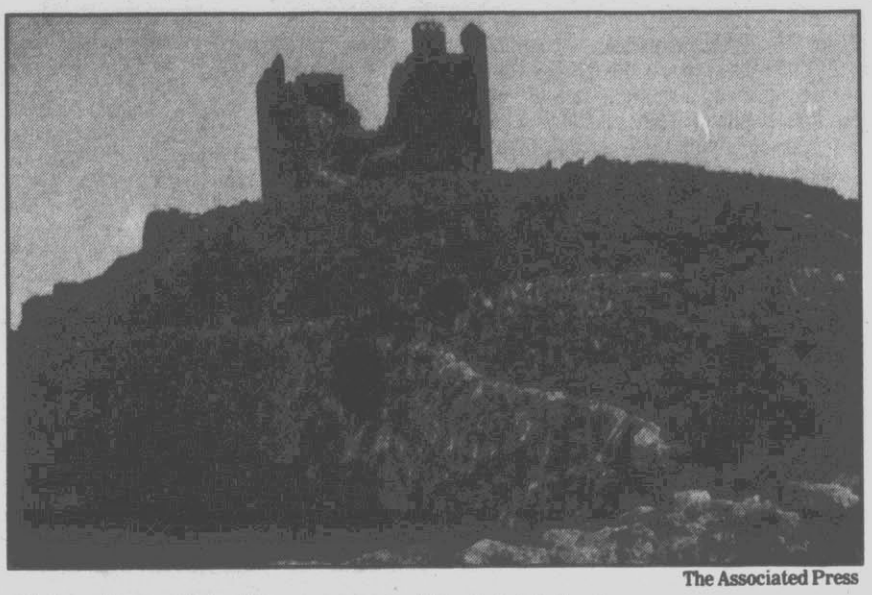

The three inhabited islands — Inishmore, Inishmaan and Inisheer — add up to about 18 square miles, but there must be hundreds of miles of stone walls. They are usually dry walls of mostly sharp stones enclosing tiny pastures and gardens.

The walls are the key to the makeup of the Aran Islands, lying across the mouth of the Bay of Galway on Ireland's west coast. They are islands of limestone, solidified sediment of a tropical sea that covered the area more than 270 million years ago.

Documentary filmmaker Robert Flaherty, in "Man of Aran" (filmed on Inishmaan in the 1930s), showed viewers what seemed the epitome of isolation and struggle against the odds of nature.

The islands also inspired playwright John Millington Synge, author of "Riders to the Sea" and "The Playboy of the Western World," when he visited in the 19th century. He made the trip from Galway by curragh, the native open Irish canoe made of timber lathes and canvas and rowed by two or more people.

Although the islands are only about six miles from Doolin, in County Clare, and some 30 miles from Galway, they must have seemed remote indeed.

Ruins of a medieval tower on one of the Irish islands

But today, Kilronan, the main village on the biggest island, Inishmore, can seem quite crowded by people looking for the remote.

Boats bring day trippers from Rossaveal, north of Galway, and Doolin. Both boat trips are far shorter than the three hours it takes the boat from Galway.

The bed-and-breakfasts in the Aran Islands have television, hot water, electricity and radiators in the bedrooms.

But the Aran Islands are still a world of their own — and still remote in their way — for visitors who spend days rather than hours on them, walking and looking around and listening to the Gaelic language.

A horse cart, van or bike will take a visitor to the foot of the hill where stands Dun Aengus, one of the best preserved prehistoric fort-like structures in Europe. The climb to the top has to be done on foot, across a wet, rock-strewn meadow with dainty little flowers and over rocks worn so smooth by nature and so criss-crossed by little crevices that they resemble giant tiles. They are slippery in wet weather — and chances are it will be misting if not raining there or anywhere else on the Aran Islands.

In addition to the stone walls, stone ruins and stone houses, stone crosses dot the landscape, in memory of islanders killed at sea.

Fishing is still a major occupation of the islanders and the sea still rules their lives. The man running the tourist office may suddenly shoo away the tourists, close down, and dash to the beach where others, clad in orange rescue suits, are already launching a motorized rescue raft for a boat in trouble under the cliffs of Moher, across the water in County Clare.

As dusk falls on Inishmeer, on a broad sand beach, small boys play with their dogs. The friendly donkeys no longer used for tilling the soil come up to nuzzle a passerby. There are piles of curraghs on the beach, for Inishmeer is the only place in the islands where they're still made.

Beyond the beach, on a sweep of dune, are an old burying ground and various ruins dating back to medieval times or even earlier. Up a steep hill, one comes upon a cashel wall (ancient circular wall that used to enclose ecclesiastical buidings) and within it a "more modern" tower house built, perhaps, in the late 14th century.

Alone in the misty twilight, visitors can still feel the remoteness of time and place.

Options Make It Easy To Care For A Pet While On Vacation

By Carol Tyer
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

It used to be that when Greenville resident Peggy Karsnak went away for a weekend or a week, she left a sad poodle named Shae boarded at her veterinarian's office.

Not any more. Now Shae is soothed on her way to her place of care and on her way home by a doughnut hole. That's right — one doughnut before and one doughnut hole afterward is all it takes to assuage Shae's grief at being left by her owner. Ms. Karsnak says Shae, a 16-year-old convinced she's a puppy by never being referred to by her family any other way, knows, when they turn into the Dunkin' Doughnuts parking lot, what's in store for her. And her eyes light up when she sees that doughnut hole. Shae relishes the treat because she never gets sweets otherwise.

And her owner declares that, since she has hit upon this plan, Shae never protests being left and seems glad to be boarded away from home once in a while and happy to greet her when she returns — as long as she gets her sweet treat.

Mrs. Karsnak, with the help of a trusted caretaker, has arrived at a solution that works for herself and Shae. Every pet owner must, like her, must come up with solutions that work for the care of each of their particular animals if they are to travel with peace of mind.

Pet boarding options abound in the Greenville area, so it's a matter of shopping for the surroundings and the personalities that seem the most compatible with one's own pet. The Hoffman-Haus Kennels on State Road 1713 has recently opened with dozens of spaces for pets. And several veterinarians' offices and pet grooming services also offering boarding.

Helen Bach of Helen's Grooming World and Pet Motel said, "I have a detailed form that I ask everyone who brings me a pet to fill out. First, I need to know that every pet who stays here is up-to-date on his shots. And I need to know if the animal needs any preventive or maintenance medication. I always ask permission to take the dog or cat to the veterinarian if he seems sick, with the owner's having agreed to pay that bill. If the pet is on a special diet, I need to know it and I ask that the owner bring the food. If not, I feed at my expense.

"I don't insist, but I like it when the pet owner agrees to a flea and tick dip when the animal enters. That cuts down a lot on my risk of having fleas spread to other pets.

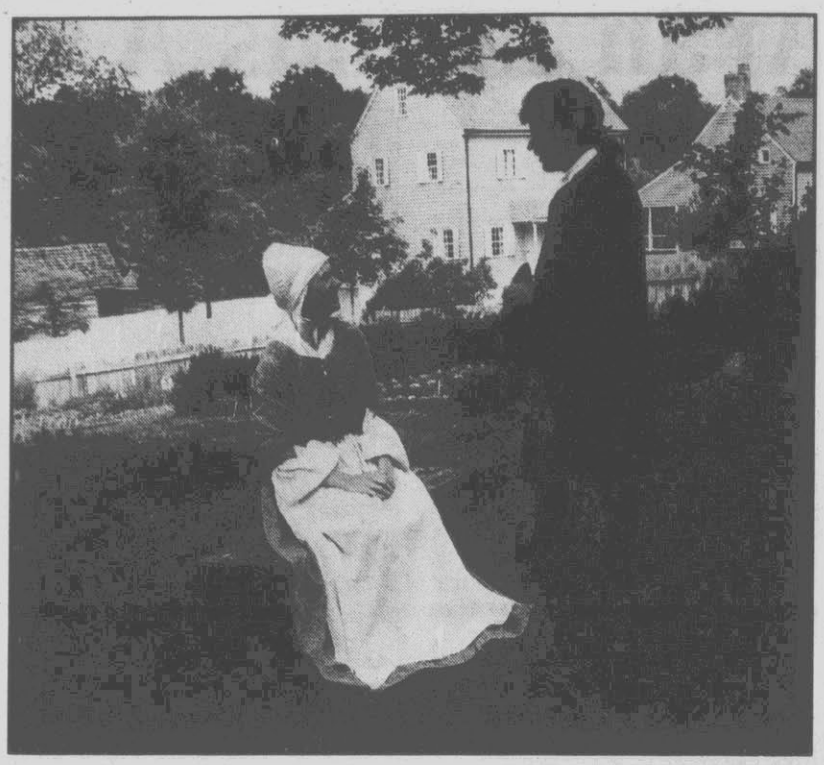

"Very importantly, I like to know if an animal has any particular personality traits I need to know about. Especially, I need to know about potential for violence. One of my friends who runs a kennel in aother state recently got what seems like it's going to be permanent damage to her hand when a German shepherd she was boarding attacked her. The owner had neglected to tell her that the dogh was attack-trained. That's the kind of thing I definitely want to know for the good of my employees and myself."

Many of the same considerations apply when someone comes to one's home to care for a pet. Sherry Dendy, owner-operator of Residential Pet Care Service of Ayden, goes to people's homes and cares for their pets for a living. But she says that, even if you're relying on a friend or relative, keep these things in mind: "Leave specific instructions for the person caring for your pet. Everyone given the responsibility of pet care needs to know what the pet is used to, something about his or her personality. They need feeding instructions, medication instructions, if any. They definitely need a phone number where you can be reached and your veterinarian's phone number. And it's good to also tell them the name of a neighbor or close friend who also might know your pet very well."

She said inside pets, especially dogs, usually need to be seen twice a day. Cats often can do fine with just one visit a day, as can some outside dogs.

She stressed the value of choosing a pet care person who really likes animals and will, therefore, spend some quality time with your pet during your absence. Outdoor walks are, of course, advisable for house dogs.

Another reason for being sure to choose a person really tuned in to animals or whom you are convinced you can trust is that people who do not have animal care as part of their daily routine can easily forget, Mrs. Dendy said. "I can think of nothing worse," she said, "than coming home and finding out that your friend forgot your pet while you were gone."

Pointers Help Consumers Find Most Reputable Travel Agents

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — How can those who want to use a travel agent find a good one?

The Institute of Certified Travel Agents, a non-profit organization headquartered in Wellesley, Mass., and devoted to educating travel industry personnel, offers some advice:.

"First, ask a friend who's had a good experience with an agent."

It also suggests that one look for the CTC (certified travel counselor) or DS (destination specialist) designations, given by ICTA to those who have completed its courses.

Also, ICTA says, membership of an agency in such trade associations as ASTA (American Society of Travel Agents) and ARTA (Association of Retail Travel Agents) is an indicator of a serious-minded agent.

Note, too, how long the agency has been in the field, and how long its staff has been in the business. Beware of rapid turnover.

And note whether the office is neat, well-stocked with brochures and well organized, and whether the staff is helpful and friendly.

Rainbow Room Is Recalling The Way It Was

By Mary Campbell
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — The pot of gold may remain elusive. But here, the rainbow is back in the sky.

The Rainbow Room of beloved memories — the first really big date, the celebration of certain wedding anniversaries and birthdays, the one go-for-broke dinner on that vacation in New York — is operating again, recalling bygone days.

As the song says, they've "put it back the way it was" — when it opened in 1934 as the epitome of elegance on the 65th floor of the art deco RCA Building at 30 Rockefeller Center.

The Rainbow Room has never been updated but, Joseph Baum, whose company now leases the two floors of the Rainbow complex, says that changes had crept in. "All of us make little changes. Suddenly they become big changes."

The Rainbow Room, which has spectacular views of the Manhattan skyline and a revolving dance floor, reopened in December 1987 after a two-year, $20 million renovation. "It was completely rebuilt down to the steel, every square inch refurbished, put back to be in perfect condition," says Baum.

Tony Bennett headlined the first shows at the new Rainbow Room The Associated Press

Renovation became complete this year with the opening of a cozy cabaret named Rainbow and Stars.

Baum, who likes to talk about an ambiance of "dine, dance and romance," says that the Rainbow Room now has alternating dance bands and its circular, wooden dance floor revolves again. "It hadn't been used for years," he says.

What isn't in the Rainbow Room that was at its opening 55 years ago is the "color organ." It shot lights in the colors of the rainbow onto the ceiling's white dome and crystal chandelier, depending on what notes were played, and gave the Rainbow Room its name.

The rainbow theme — updated — is carried out in Rainbow and Stars. The long interior wall is dotted with tiny lights — the stars. Periodically, the stars disappear and the wall becomes curved rows of rainbow colors.

Baum says the average food check in the Rainbow Room is around $50 for food per person; drinks, tax, tips and a $15 music charge take it higher.

Dinner prices in Rainbow & Stars are comparable, with an entertainment charge usually at $35 per person.

France Celebrates Its Bicentennial

By Suzy Patterson
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PARIS — It was 200 years ago that French citizens overthrew King Louis XVI, beginning a bloody revolution that was to reverberate throughout Europe.

Bastille Day, July 14, the day in 1789 when the French revolutionaries stormed and destroyed the state prison in Paris is the national holiday of France.

A reconstruction of the Bastille and "the world's biggest ball" are just two of the events marking the celebration of the bicentennial of the French Revolution taking place in France in the coming months.

Those thirsty for "revolutionary" wine will find it at the Salon des Vins at the Porte de Versailles where, from April 28 to May 8, visitors can sample wine made as it was during the reign of Louis XVI.

For visitors who don't speak French but would like to know more about exactly what happened 200 years ago, a special historical bus tour in English is being offered by Vision tourist agency. The tours go both to Versailles, where the Royals lived it, and to sites in Paris, where they died.

Meanwhile, the Tuileries Gardens from May 5 to Nov. 11 will become a living theater of bicentennial events.

A special area in the gardens will come alive with musicians, dancers and clowns, while cafes and a restaurant cater to hungry and thirsty crowds.

In a theater space visitors will see computer-powered plastic automatons resembling Robespierre, Danton and other historical figures doing their revolutionary thing, though beheadings are not part of the show.

And spectators may experience a time warp as they view the computerized 3-D film of Paris as it was 200 years ago, complete with a riot outside a bakery, the crowds demonstrating against high-priced bread.

The gardens will sprout several temporary structures, including two 120-foot towers with spiral staircases to evoke flying doves, the bicentennial symbol.

Another theater will offer nonstop, 10-minute skits with actors portraying aspects of the Revolution like "Fraternity Night." This is not a celebration of pledging a college frat, but a show on "the abolition of privileges."

Those in Normandy at mid-summer will be able to see Tall Ships from all over the world sailing from Rouen to Le Havre between July 12-15.

As a special salute to France, 51 visiting brass bands from the United States will parade from City Hall to the Trocadero on July 8.

Also in July will be the inauguration of a giant arch west of central Paris, a new monument that stands in a line of landmarks beginning at the Place de la Concorde and running through the Arc de Triomphe. The inauguration will kick off events to celebrate the Declaration of the Rights of Man, the French Bill of Rights adopted during the Revolution and later the preamble to the French Constitution.

Festivities will peak on Bastille Day, July 14, beginning with fireworks and including "the world's biggest ball," a huge street dance on the evening of July 13.

At the Place de la Bastille, the new Paris Opera will open its doors for the first time, offering a concert commemorating the revolution.

The original Bastille prison was burned down two centuries ago, but visitors can see copies of it reconstructed at La Villette, a giant park in northeast Paris from July 9-15.

At the end of the show, visitors will be allowed to tear down the towers and take home souvenir bricks inscribed, "Liberte, Egalite, Fraternite."

Meanwhile, toy-makers are offering giant inflatable plastic replicas of the Bastille — suitable for the backyard.

In a more serious vein, President Francois Mitterrand will host a summit meeting of the seven richest nations schedueled to take place at the height of the summer celebrations.

On July 14, U.S. President George Bush, British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher and other heads of state are expected to view the parade and flyover from the presidential box on the Champs-Elysees.

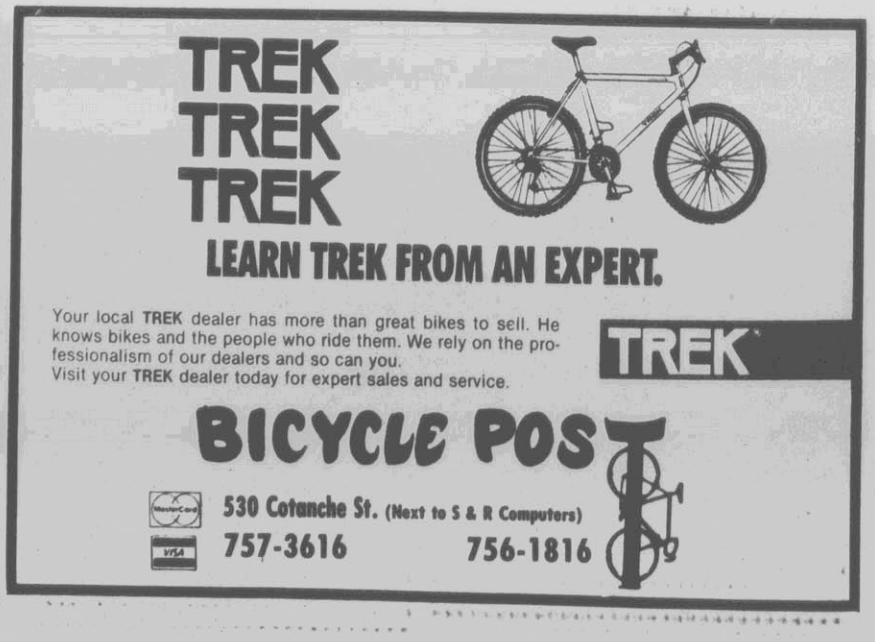

As a gala wind-up on July 15, a special sound-and-light display created for Paris by Jean-Paul Goud will illuminate the City of Lights.

The Eiffel Tower, celebrating its own centennial, will present a special illuminated show on July 17. And Mayor Jacques Chirac has announced that on Aug. 26 tightrope walker Philippe Petit will negotiate the Seine on a 400-foot highwire between the Eiffel Tower and the Palais de Chaillot.

Tips Make A Picture-Perfect Vacation

By Thomas Forrest
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

It's a fresh cool morning and the car is all packed and ready for the long-awaited vacation. The family is ready to go, and all that's left is to get everyone out of the house and take the family dog by the kennel.

You're about ready to back out of the drive when a small voice comes from the back seat, "Dad, did you get the camera?"

For some families, the first thing to go into the suitcase is the camera, along with an ample supply of film.

Questions often asked of a professional photographer are what type of film — color or black and white — and what speed film to use. Film type and speed should fall under your equipment list for the trip.

Color is what most vacationers use, but there is still a place for black and white. If you're in doubt, take both.

Film speeds vary. The lower speed films offer smaller grain, making the picture look better, but the high speed films allow for more action in the photos.

Color saturation on lower speed film will be more intense. Brands of film available are as plentiful as one could imagine.

Next on your list should be the camera. If you don't already own one, choose your camera a few weeks before you start your vacation. And get familiar with it! Don't use the valuable time you had set aside for sightseeing to learn about the camera.

There are those fantastic small electronic wonders now that will do almost everything for you — focus, set exposure and advance the film. Most models come in a 35mm version. These cameras are great for the vacation photographer. They are so easy to use the entire family will enjoy them.

If you are a more serious photographer, you might want to consider the 35mm single-lens reflex camera. These cameras allow the flexibility of changeable lenses and a variety of other options you just can't get on an automatic camera.

Don't overpack your camera bag. Carry only the essentials — film, small tripod, light meter (if your camera doesn't have one), lens cleaner, filters, shutter release cable, a small flash and extra batteries for camera and flash. Of course, any of this can be adjusted to meet your specific needs.

A good point to remember is to have you camera bag 'hand-checked' through airline terminals. Physically remove film from the bag and do not let it go through the X-ray equipment. If you must pack film in luggage, purchase a film shield and place the film in it. This is a special bag to prevent film from being exposed to X-rays.

By the way, the airline terminals are a good place to start shooting. It gives an opening shot for your album as the beginning of your vacation. You can also start with one of your loaded car, or a shot at the bus station or train terminal.

You have arrived at your favorite vacation spot.

Now for a few tips on how to make those photographs that will make the folks back home wonder what professional you hired.

Make sure the lens cap is off. New cameras are now single lens reflex models and if the cap is on you can't see an image.

Pay close attention to the film. Check to see if you have the proper film for the shot — color, black and white, slides or prints. Inspect the camera to make sure the film is loaded correctly. Never leave your camera in a hot car or bright sun. Heat will damage the film.

Now you are ready to shoot the photo. A good rule is to stand with the sun behind you, the photographer.

Hold the camera steady. Use your arms as a tripod, with your elbows tight to your sides to make a steady support. A steady camera will yield a much sharper photo.

Push the shutter button very gently, but with a steady downward motion. Don't jerk the camera. This will cause camera shake and unwanted motion.

If you have the availability to change lenses it would be good to vary focal lengths during your shooting. This will give a different perspective to your pictures.

Shoot the entire roll of film and remove it immediately. Store the film in a dry, cool, dark environment.

When unloading the film, choose a shady area. Use this technique when loading the camera as well.

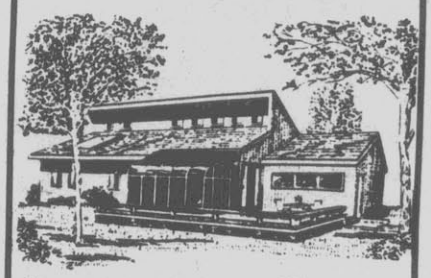

After your vacation is over or your roll of film is finished, take the exposed film to a processing lab. The one-hour photo labs are good, and you can view your finished work while some of the excitement of the vacation is still fresh.

Place your photos in a slip-cover type album. It's not a good idea to use an album with the adhesive on the page. Adhesive will make the picture difficult to remove later, often damaging the photo. Store your negatives in a safe place. It's also good to number your pictures to the corresponding negatives for making reprints later.

One final comment: Get to know your camera before your shooting gets serious. Your pictures will reflect this in the final product. You'll be glad you made the extra effort the next time you use those shots of a warm summer beach to brighten a snowy winter day.

Remember the old saying, "a picture is worth a thousand words."
