Storm Spawns 4 Tornadoes, Heavy Rain, Hail

By Clay Deanhardt
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

A week highlighted almost daily by severe afternoon and evening weather closed Saturday with the destruction of a Pitt County farm complex by a tornado.

Pitt County Sheriff's Deputy Ammie Eason said a pack house and tobacco barn were destroyed and several trees were twisted and uprooted on T.J. Paramore's farm on Secondary Road 1771 just southwest of Grimesland near Ham's Crossroads.

Eason said no personal injuries or other property damage was reported.

He said the 6:23 p.m. tornado which destroyed the Paramore complex was one of four sighted in Pitt County.

The first twister touched down at 5:14 p.m. near St. John's northeast of Grifton. The second was sighted by a deputy on N.C. 102 at Venters Crossroad, east of Ayden, at about 5:29 p.m. No damage was reported from either tornado, Eason said.

A fourth twister was sighted in the sky near Farmville at about 8:07 p.m., Eason said, but the tornado never touched down.

He said Saturday's rains brought flood warnings to low-lying areas of Pitt County, where several roads were covered with sheets of water by 9 p.m.

"We want to make the drivers aware they have to drive with extra, extra caution," he said, "because even a transfer truck will hydroplane."

Eason said more heavy hail and rain was reported in the Scuffleton and Ayden areas.

A dispatcher at the Ayden Police Department said there were several areas with no power, and some minor flooding due to the overworked drainage system, but that no major damage had been reported in the community.

The weather service issued flood warnings for Greene and Pitt counties due to repeated downpours.

"I think it's pretty safe to say that most low-lying roads have water across them," said Bill Vandiford, an investigator with the Pitt County Sheriff's Department. He said several accidents had been reported due to the flooding, but that no injuries were reported.

The situation was the same in Greene County.

"We've got a lot of high water on the roads," said Evelyn Jones, a dispatcher with the Greene County Sheriff's Department.

"We've had a few people who have gone into ditches and some people stall in the water," she said. No injuries were reported she said.

At the Greenville Utilities Commission, Roger Jones said several areas within the company's service area were without power at different times throughout the evening.

"We've had a number of scattered problems from the lightning and the

Shuttle's Flight Put Off Indefinitely By Fuel Woes

By Howard Benedict
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — Engineers on Saturday studied two mechanical problems that halted the launch of space shuttle Atlantis and its robot Venus probe, and a NASA spokeswoman said it's anybody's guess when the mission will take place.

The space agency said the flight will not be attempted before late this week at the earliest and that it will be at least Monday before a new launch date will be set.

Sources said the delay, which began with the last-minute cancellation of the flight Friday, could stretch to a week or more if technicians have to replace both a faulty fuel pump and a leaking fuel line.

NASA said it will replace the line but would not know about the pump until engineers inspect it Sunday.

"We don't know when we can go; it depends on where the troubleshooting takes us," said NASA spokeswoman Lisa Malone.

She said NASA and industry officials evaluated the problems Saturday and assigned committees to study each element. She said those committees would make preliminary reports Sunday.

Three of the five astronauts — Mary Cleave, Mark Lee and Norman Thagard — returned to their training base in Houston Saturday, an indication NASA doesn't expect to launch soon. Commander David Walker and pilot Ronald Grabe planned to leave here Sunday after flying practice runs in a jet plane equipped to handle like the shuttle.

The delay squeezes valuable time out of a 32-day launch opportunity "window" for dispatching the Magellan spacecraft toward Venus.

If the shuttle can't get off the ground by May 28, the mission will have to be put off for two years, at a cost of more than $100 million, until Earth and Venus are again in proper alignment.

"Even with this current issue we've run up against, I'm convinced we're still in a very favorable position to launch Atlantis during the Magellan window," shuttle chief Richard Truly said Saturday.

The countdown was halted Friday with just 31 seconds left after controllers noted a power surge in a pump. The pump recirculates liquid hydrogen through fuel lines serving engine No. 1, keeping the lines cool and in proper condition for ignition.

After the launch was called off, engineers examining TV tapes noticed a second problem, a vapor cloud spewing from a line that carries hydrogen from the external fuel tank to the shuttle.

Launch director Bob Sieck said the problems posed no danger to the five astronauts because there are so many safeguards the engines would not have started.

After the scrub, the space agency tentatively set Monday as a new launch target.

Soviet Shuttle Flawed

LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — The Soviet space shuttle is still at a very early developmental stage and has more technical problems than its successful first flight last November would indicate, according to Igor Volk, the shuttle's chief test pilot.

A major technical concern is a possible design flaw in the shuttle's complex automatic flight control system, according to Volk, who was here to observe the U.S. space shuttle launch that was delayed Friday.

In addition, Volk said, the Soviet Union has not outlined a clear use for its space shuttle. "The purpose of the program hasn't really been established yet," he said. "The main problem now is simply to design it."

The shuttle's second flight, which like the first will be unmanned, will not come until at least late 1990, he said. It will not carry a human crew before 1992.

This is the second downbeat assessment concerning the Soviet space program here in recent days. Top Soviet scientists who toured the space center earlier this week an-

Pitt Schools Reap Benefits From Pilot Funds Project

By Cherie Evans
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Participation in the state's Pilot Finance Project for the last four years has helped the Pitt County schools progress in various areas because of the flexibility allowed in using state funds, Pitt's school superintendent says.

Termination of the project at the end of this fiscal year, June 30, will put the responsibility of the schools' progress back on the county budget, Dr. Eddie West said in an interview.

"Under the Pilot Finance Project, the system has been able to better utilize state resources because of the flexibility of being able to utilize funds on a need basis versus line item," West said.

Usually, money given to the system by the state is designated for a specific use, he said. If all of the money is not absorbed by the system for that use, it is given back to the state.

As one of eight school systems in the state participating in the pilot project since the 1985-86 school year,

ARC Officials Object To Proposed Cuts

By Carol Tyer
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

As drug use and abuse spread in North Carolina, consideration is being given to cutting back on or vastly altering the state's treatment program for substance abusers who cannot afford the services of private rehabilitation programs.

The Walter B. Jones Alcoholic Rehabilitation Center in Greenville is one of the state's three substance abuse treatment institutions, all of which would lose their medical services if the recommendations of State Auditor Edward Renfrow's office were heeded by the North Carolina General Assembly. The report was first presented to a human resources study committee of the General Assembly during last session. It was presented again this session, but is not expected to be acted upon.

The long-range recommendation of the state auditor is that all three ARCs be done away with and their work assumed by the state's 42 area mental programs.

Today most of the local ARC's clients are polysubstance-addicted and they're younger, poorer and more difficult to deal with than the clients seen in the several years following the opening of this and the other two ARCs in 1965. As was stated in an overview section of the performance audit of the ARCs published by the Office of the State Auditor, "For many years, the typical client was a white male alcoholic in his mid-to-late forties who voluntarily participated in the program. He was generally docile and cooperative. In recent years, the clientele has changed so much that there may no longer be a typical client. If there is, however, he is young, combative and more difficult to manage."

Dr. John Gamble, the Jones ARC medical director, and Phyllis Martin, its director of nursing, are two people who know first-hand the changing nature of the work done at the ARC. They see ever more formidable challenges that convince them that the state would be making a mistake damaging to many of its citizens if it were to close the medical facilities of this and the two other 28-day treatment facilities at Butner and Black Mountain.

"We used to get alcoholics who developed their addictions over many years," Gamble said as he walked the ARC campus that has been his life's work for more than 20 years. "We still get alcoholics, but we also get young people who have become hopelessly addicted to crack in one evening. Their bodies and spirits are wrecked and they need our care.

"It's seldom now that anyone comes here who is not in physical as well as emotional and spiritual distress resulting from the substance abuse disease process. We see people come in here at all times of the day and night who are in heart failure, in the last stages of liver disease, and with many other terrible health problems.

"The medical workup is the major wind," Jones said. He said the worst damage was to a substation in the Stokes area which knocked out power to the extreme southeast corner of the county for about 90 minutes.

Jones said some GUC customers may have had trouble early reaching the company for repairs, since their PBX phone machine was temporarily knocked out of service by the storm.

Randy Buck, a water plant operator with GUC, said at 9:20 p.m. Greenville had recorded 1.56 inches of rain since midnight, with a high temperature of 86 degrees and a low of 57.

The Tar River stood at 10.2 feet, up from 9.8 feet at noon.

The twisters were reported as a series of storms swept across North Carolina on Saturday afternoon, prompting severe thunderstorm warnings in several central and eastern counties.

The National Weather Service also issued a tornado warning for eastern Edgecombe County Saturday afternoon. A dispatcher with the Edgecombe County Sheriff's department said no damage or injuries had been reported in connection with the storm.

In Alamance County, high winds toppled trees Saturday afternoon, and one of them knocked down a power line and damaged a road, the Alamance County Sheriff's Department reported.

The North Carolina Forestry Service reported 1½ inch size hail in Lenoir County near Kinston.

The county communications center in Union County reported 1½ inch size hail in Mineral Springs, about 15 miles southwest of Monroe.

Downed power lines were also reported in northern Johnston County, the weather service said.

Ton Of Cocaine Found On Plane

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MIAMI — Federal agents seized more than a ton of cocaine flown here in 40 cardboard boxes loaded on a Brazilian jet, and arrested two men, officials said Saturday.

The boxes were discovered during a routine check of the Varig Brazilian Airlines jet's cargo following its arrival Friday at Miami International Airport from Rio de Janeiro, said Customs Service spokeswoman Cliff Stallings.

Agents allowed the 2,200-pound cocaine cargo to be transferred from a Varig warehouse to a rented truck, then followed it to the Miami suburb of Kendall, where they seized the truck and arrested the driver, Jose Machado, 55, of Uruguay, officials said. Warly Dasilva, 47, of Brazil was arrested later.

Dasilva and Machado were held on charges of drug conspiracy and importation, Stallings said.

The 40 cardboard cartons contained wooden crates that in turn were stuffed with cocaine, Stallings said. There were no marks or numbers on the cargo, which was not listed on the flight manifest.

Customs seized the Varig DC-10 and held it until the airline posted a letter of credit Friday night, Stallings said.

The airline was assessed a penalty of $37 million, roughly $1,000 an ounce. However, Varig has the right to appeal and the dollar figure frequently is cut to a fraction of the original fine.

Louisiana Voters Reject Overhaul Of State Taxes

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW ORLEANS — Voters on Saturday rejected a plan to overhaul Louisiana's tax system that had been heralded by Gov. Buddy Roemer as a chance to end the state's lengthy recession.

With 3,030 of the state's 3,285 precincts reporting, about 92 percent, the proposed constitutional amendment to authorize the Legislature to change the tax system was rejected 510,403, or 55 percent, to 417,061, or 45 percent.

About 45 percent of the state's registered voters turned out, said Darrell Glasscock, a spokesman for the secretary of state.

The plan had been condemned by opponents as a huge tax hike.

Under Roemer's package, the tax base would have been shifted by putting more of a load on individuals through the income tax, cutting sales taxes and giving businesses incentive to move to the state and expand.

The plan also included a $1.4 billion program to improve highways, airports and shipping ports that would be funded by a gasoline tax increase of 4 cents a gallon.

Defeat of the plan would mean the Legislature would have to cut more than $600 million from an already tight budget, which Roemer has said is impossible.

Roemer, voting earlier in Bossier Parish in the northwest section of the state, refused to predict victory, but said he felt "good about our chances."

He said he would call a meeting with Louisiana's business leaders no matter what the outcome.

"We have a problem: the highest unemployment rate in America," he said. The jobless rate was 9.6 percent last month.

Roemer pushed the plan in a blitz of radio and television spots financed by more than $1.2 million from backers. The governor touted it as a way to create jobs in a state that has the nation's highest unemployment rate and to end Louisiana's dependence on the oil industry.

Backers said the state puts too much of its tax burden on business, driving away potential new industries and forcing cutbacks and shutdowns among existing businesses.

But opponents said most of the tax breaks would be enjoyed by the state's 1,000 largest corporations, many of which are not labor-intensive, and contended new jobs would not be created.

The plan would cost an extra $126 million over the current tax load. But opponents pointed out that as of July 1, the increase in the tax load would be $526 million.

The Legislature approved a one-year sales tax increase of $500 million last summer to avoid government bankruptcy. The increase, which was achieved by canceling longtime exemptions on purchases of food and utilities, expires July 1.

Roemer's plan kept about $400 million of that tax on a permanent basis.

Shuttle

nounced that although they plan to forge ahead with two robot missions to Mars in the next decade, other facets of the space science program are being scaled back because of a lack of money.

Volk, 52, is the leader of a group of seven Soviet shuttle pilots known to some as "the wolf pack." (Volk means wolf in Russian.) The shuttle pilots are bureaucratically distinct from the cosmonaut corps.

They are part of an organization called the Flight Research Institute, and their training base is in the town of Zhukovsky, near Moscow, he said. Volk is technically a cosmonaut because he flew an orientation flight aboard a Soyuz space station in 1984.

In his first interview with a western reporter, given during a tour of space facilities here, the former tactical bomber pilot said he started training to fly the shuttle in 1978 and has flown 16 of the 24 shuttle test flights the Soviets have performed so far.

The tests are carried out in a test plane modeled aerodynamically to resemble the real shuttle orbiter, and in two other less-elaborate training planes that simulate its lower-level, atmospheric flight characteristics.

Volk said he plans to fly another test soon after returning to Moscow. "This is a very serious program and we're only in the beginning of it."

This may come as a surprise to some western observers who thought, because there has been a year's hiatus in the flights, that testing in Earth's atmosphere had been discontinued, according to Soviet expert and author James Oberg.

It seems the flights were halted only while the pilots worked on the first orbital flight of the 100-ton shuttle, called Buran (Snowstorm). That flight took place on Nov. 15 and lasted two hours.

Transplant Patient Dies

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WINSTON-SALEM — The youngest heart-tranplant patient in North Carolina died Saturday morning at North Carolina Baptist Hospital.

Jeffrey Clark Richardson, 20, of Mocksville, had been receiving chemotherapy treatments for a tumor when he died, according to Dr. Barry T. Hackshaw, a cardiologist and co-director of the hospital's transplant program.

Hackshaw said officials have not determined the cause of Richardson's death noon. "He had a very sudden collapse," he said. "It was very sudden and unexpected. We had no warning of this."

Richardson, who was 17 years old when he underwent transplant surgery, was the first patient to have the heart-transplant operation at Baptist. Hackshaw had treated Richardson since the six-hour operation on July 7, 1986.

Nurse Honored For Training Monkeys To Help Disabled

By Carol Tyer
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Shelby Hinton Brannon was honored Friday by the Governor's Advocacy Council for Persons with Disabilities for her "exceptional contributions in promoting employment opportunities for disabled persons."

Mrs. Brannon, who received the council's Distinguished Service Award, trains monkeys in her home to become helper-companions for persons with quadriplegia. She does this in affiliation with the Helping Hand program. She was honored during an annual awards luncheon in Raleigh attended by her and several other Greenville area residents.

A Pitt County native who has been a registered nurse most of her adult life, Mrs. Brannon graduated from Chicod High School and the Wilson School of Nursing. She has worked in former times to help Dr. Ira Hardy establish eastern North Carolina's first neurosurgery program and to help Dr. Al Ferguson establish the first hospital and community dialysis programs. She has worked in many phases of hospital nursing and has been the director of nursing of a local nursing home.

She has taught various health profession courses for Pitt Community College and was a writer of a training program for certified emergency medical technicians in this area. She was the first woman ambulance driver in this county.

"In my work in hospital and nursing home, I have realized the great need of the physically handicapped to feel needed, wanted and independent. That's why my family and I put up with all the monkey behavior that's a lot like a 2-year-old. And that's why I wipe a tear or two aside and give away my beloved babies after they're trained. My monkeys become links in a chain that sets a patient free to live alone. They're friends, companions, feeders, operators of mechanical equipment and can even give medication.

"They've taught me that animals are not dumb beasts and that handicapped people can be helped to believe in themselves in this and other ways that other people show they care."

The Pitt County Committee on the Handicapped was among the nominees for the state's "Outstanding Mayor's Committee Award," which went to the Rocky Mount Mayor's Commitee for Persons with Disabilities.

Greenville-area resident Linwood Haddock, blind since he was injured in a hunting accident in his teens, was among those nominated for the Later-Life Onset North Carolina Handicapped Citizen of the Year Award. He is employed by Hatteras Hammocks of Greenville.

Shriners' Regional Provost Guard Holds Weekend Meet

By Rosalie Trotman

A North Carolina welcome was extended this weekend by Hugh Hardee Jr. to the South Atlantic Shrine Association Provost Guard.

Three hundred people were in Greenville for the weekend attending the spring meeting. Eleven Shrine temples were represented from Kentucky, Tennessee, West Virginia, Virginia, South Carolina and North Carolina.

The provost guard was initiated by James W. Brewer of Greenville in 1947. "It was to be used as a police unit for the Sudan Temple — we are responsible for restoring order," Hardee said.

The Sudan Temple of New Bern has a membership at 13,000. "The provost guard can have a maximum of 31 members from Sudan Temple, which makes us a select group," Hardee said.

The march toward becoming chief started for Hardee seven years ago. "Last September when named chief, I had the option of choosing the location for the convention, and I selected Greenville," said Hardee.

"My future goal as a provost guard member and Shriner is to help burned and crippled children in all Shrindom," he said.

The Shriners totally support 19 crippled childrens hospitals and three burn hospitals throughout the United States.

The SASA members and guests were entertained at a N.C.-style barbecue Friday night at the Pitt County Shrine Club. Other weekend activities included a buffet breakfast Saturday morning followed by a business meeting for the men and a tea and fashion show for the ladies. The home of Glenn and Gladys Hardee was the scene of a lunchtime cookout.

During the formal banquet Saturday night, officers and past chiefs were recognized.

Bell is a member of Jamil Temple and is originally from Chocowinity. "This is a fantastic weekend — I fully hope I can carry through as Hugh did with the meeting in Columbia next year," Bell said. He is the guard's major.

"Good fellowship and outstanding hospitality made a very fine weekend," said Dent. Dent has been a Shriner for 21 years and is SASA's first lieutenant.

'Fool On A Mule' Reaffirms Joy Of Seeing Family Entertainment

A Reflector Review

All you people who have been bewailing the emphasis on flesh and vulgarity in contemporary entertainment need to see the Rose High School production of "Fool on a Mule" to experience a refreshing reaffirmation that wholesome, enjoyable family entertainment still exists.

The final of three performances of the play takes place at 3 p.m. Sunday in the Agnes Fullilove Community Auditorium (the former Grace Free Will Baptist Church on Watagua Street in west Greenville). Tickets, available at the door, are priced at $3.

Greenville's Claude "Kip" West is the playwright of this three-act play, his initial foray into other than one-act scripts. Now retired from a long stint of teaching, primarily at Rose High, West in this play proves that the talent he demonstrated in shorter material is very much in evidence in this more sustained effort.

It's worth mentioning that the polished pews in the former sanctuary are far more comfortable than the bleachers at Rose, where patrons formerly had to endure backless squirming.

The 15-member Rose cast and one guest performer give fine performances all around. Guest actor Anthony Burcher excells as Pop, a checkers-addict old man among youngsters and a scattering of middle-age personages.

Rolf Sundwall and Darby Thomas, the boy-girl romantic twosome attracted to each other at first sight, fit their roles beautifully — he as Nathan Caswell, the seemingly dumb Tennessee boy traveling west with his mule; she as Martha Hoke, the pert, determined mistress of her own life, the daughter of the wealthiest man around.

In his portrayal of the elegant braggart schemer Justin Carter, Matt Neill effectively struts his way through the play from the moment he enters the general store with his "Hey, look me over stance" to a final moment when he realizes he has been outfoxed — by a woman, nonetheless.

Other lead players — Peter Herndon as Jasper Hoke, Martha's father, despite the drawback of looking too young, is believable in the role of a successful man who thinks he's pretty near infallible. It soon becomes clear, however, that his wife Cathleen, played to the teeth by Alex Ewing, is much the shrewder of the two.

Susie Ambert, the no-nonsense widowed storekeeper, and Mirko Bettels as Carl, the overlooked suitor, add distinction to lesser roles. Other players who round out the cast are Jalyn Parsley, Laura Silverman, Christy Davenport, Kerry Mortensen, Louann Gay-Lord, Rebecca Copeland, Stephanie Lamb and Iris Olrich.

The mule and the thoroughbred stallion, both prominent in the play, remain unseen, but West's script makes us believe they really do exist — we never lose the sense of their presence.

There's a strong suggestion of the qualities of an old-fashioned melodrama in "Fool on a Mule," along with delightful nuggets of humor. The courtship scenes recall the shy, tender manner of wooing in past days. West succinctly fashions believable character with a minimum of words, and the plot is well shaped.

"Fool on a Mule" has a decidedly interesting, unexpected twist — one I'm tempted to mention, but will not so that your pleasure in waiting for it to happen will not be spoiled.

For a charming, entertaining two hours that is totally home-grown, don't miss this last opportunity to see "Fool on a Mule."

Auditor Proposes Changes In State's ARCs

portion of the admissions process. We take X-rays. We collect their old medication and our on-call psychiatrists represcribe medication. We do blood work. I don't see how one of our clients could possibly get well if they didn't have the benefit of the ongoing medical expertise and care that we offer them the whole time they're here."

Ray Mozingo is the state auditor who did most of the work contained in the report that first went to the General Assembly's Human Resources Committee in May 1988. He believes that many rehabilitation programs in this and other states that are not state-supported do operate without medical facilities. He cites Open House in Charlotte and First Step Farm in Asheville as examples.

He believes and stated in the official state auditor's report that the state's money would be better-spent contracting for services with area hospitals and private physicians or by throwing the ball fully back into the area mental health programs.

He pointed out that the area mental health programs of the state are already charged with detoxification. And he says that they are not fulfilling this mandate.

Gamble agreed with Mozingo's charge — in part. He confirmed that most clients come to the Jones ARC as substance users in the throes of intoxication. "We might now be supposed to be detox units," he said. "but that's where we have to start and that's why our medical services are so important. In theory, it is true that now the area mental health programs are to do the detoxing. They do a lot, but then they send their more well-off clients on to a private treatment facility and their ones with no health insurance and little or mo money on to us — as soon as we can take them."

Bill McLean, administrative director of the Jones ARC, confirmed Gamble's assertion. "The lag time that exists between area mental health program detox and getting in here is the problem," he said. "There is such a great need for treatment that we stayed filled up and have to put people on waiting lists. It's very unlikely that anyone getting out of the Pitt County Mental Health Center Detox Program can get in here until at least three weeks later. By that time, most of them are drunk again."

Asked how that situation could be remedied, he said. "I don't know."

Theresa Edmondson, coordinator of substance abuse service of the Pitt County Mental Health Center, backed the ARC officials' stance. "My feeling is that it's going to cost the state 13 times what it's now costing if they turn all rehabilitation services back over to the area mental health units," she said. "I say 13 because, in the eastern region, there are 13 area mental health center programs. You could say 42 times as much if you're talking about the whole state.

"I agree with the state auditors that, if we wanted to do the ideal model, nobody would have to leave their community for substance abuse treatment. But I do not agree with them that it would cost less to put all the rehabilitation back into the individual communities. It's got to be less expensive to have three programs in the state than to have 42.

"The other part that I don't think the auditors understand is that there is always going to be a need for medical-psychiatric services for chemical abusers."

She said the people the auditors are looking at in the private programs are people who haven't gone as far into the ruin of one's life that substance abuse brings on. They probably still have supportive families, sometimes supportive employers and generally stable mental health other than their substance abuse. The people the ARCs treat have usually lost everything or nearly everything and chemical dependency is not their only problem — they are also in need of psychiatric care beyond substance abuse counseling. They need much more work and they're much more likely to have to return for another treatment later on, because they won't have the support they need when they get out."

Since 1986, the ARCs have been designated by the mental health division as 24-hour holding facilities. This designation authroized them to receive involuntarily committed clients and hold them while awaiting court hearings. The hearing must be held within 10 days, so often the stay is much longer than 24 hours and their care much more complicated than that of the voluntary client.

The auditor cites this as a reason the area mental health programs need to take back the responsibility from the ARCs. The ARC officials cite it as a reason they need to continue to have medical services and a reason they, indeed, need to continue to exist and have their budgets augmented.

Opponents of the ARCs continuing to exist point out that the southeastern area of the state opted in 1965 not to have an ARC as did the other three mental health regions of the state. They say they have managed quite well with community programs since.

The proponents of the ARCs continuance say not so — that both the ARC in Greenville and the ARC at Butnear are accepting the more difficult clients from the southeastern region, at the rate of about 400 in 1985-86. The Greenville center serves 38 counties, six of which are considered in the southeastern region.

This study is not the first time that the continued existence of the ARCs has been questioned. The Governor's Efficiency Study of 1985 recommended that they be closed and the services be provided by private contractors.

A major reason the ARCs say they need to keep their medical services is that, without them, they would be unable to obtain Joint Commission on Accreditation of Hospital accreditation. And without this, they would not qualify for reimbursement from third parties like Medicaid, Medicare and insurance companies.

The state auditor's staff argues that a treatment facility which operates strictly a rehabilitative program and contracts for medical services can stay open at an approximate cost of $60 per-day per-bed. This compares to an approximate $93 daily bed cost at the ARCs now. Thus, it says, the annual savings for this state would be $3,147,000. Since Medicare and Medicaid reimbursements amounted to $353,000 in fiscal year 1986-87 and other insurance reimbursement to $492,000, the net savings would be between $2.3 million and $3.1 million, depending on the reimbursements that would be received. They point out, too, that the General Assembly could change the State Health Plan General Statute to allow for reimbursement to a non-medical rehabilitation program.

The auditor makes clear that it is important that the money saved be used in area programs to offset addition of more detox and medical stabilization programs around the state.

The auditor's reports also address the need for more aftercare services, sating that approximately 40 percent of all admissions to the ARCs are readmissions. Mozingo said, "I think that if all the area programs could medically stabulize all their clilents and provide adequate aftercare, it's possible that somewhere down the road we would not need the ARCs."

Evictions Ordered For Drug Dealing

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHARLOTTE — The Charlotte Housing Authority says the rules are simple: tenants can be evicted if they or their relatives engage in drug-related activity.

But John Hayes, director of resident safety for the Housing Authority, says the rules haven't changed since 1975.

The Charlotte agency's position gained an endorsement this month from the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development. HUD proposed even tougher rules to rid public housing of drug dealers. They include speeding up drug-related evictions by eliminating one step in the appeal process.

Now in Charlotte, a tenant first requests a grievance hearing with the Housing Authority, and then may appeal in court. The proposed federal change would allow housing authorities to eliminate the grievance hearing. A tenant such as Ms. Gordon would appeal directly to court.

The American Civil Liberties Union opposes the change, saying it could violate a tenants' constitutional rights of due process under the law.

"Drugs are a significant threat to the people who live in public housing," he said. "We cannot sit back and let the drug dealers and the people who would sell drugs take over these neighborhoods and use the laws to hide behind them."

Test Program Ends June 30

the system has the flexibility to use state funds for needs it has identified, West said.

"It has enabled us to equalize programs during consolidation without that cost being borne locally," he said. "While that should have been the county's responsibility those costs were not assimilated by the county commissioners. The only way to do that was to utilize the flexibility of state funds."

It also has provided the funds to pay for state mandated salary increases for school personnel, West said. Those increases in the last three years have mounted in excess of $1 million, he said.

"The county appropriation to meet those mandates has been only about half that cost. Therefore, the Pilot Finance Project has had to be used to pick up that additional cost," he said.

In 1988-89, for example, the state mandated a 4.5 percent salary increase, which amounted to about $334,800 for the school system. The county appropriated $200,445 for the state mandate, leaving a shortfall of $134,355.

The pilot project also has helped the school system meet increased costs in utilities, West said.

In addition, "It enabled us to get about a year ahead in terms of implementation of the state BEP (Basic Education Program)."

The Pilot Finance Project was the result of years of discussion on allowing some flexibility within the funds the state provides to local school systems, said Howard Maniloff, superintendent of Vance County schools, who was instrumental in establishing the pilot project.

"A number of school superintendents and board members had discussed for some years in the '70s and early '80s about the problem of planning a school program with the limited way the state has of allocating money. It's like trying to plan your household budget when your boss gives you a paycheck telling you how much you can spend for the house, how much on your clothes and how much for entertainment," he said.

In the Department of Public Instruction, "we developed a piece of legislation that was included in the 1983 Appropriations Act. That legislation simply directed the state board to develop a pilot project that provided them greater flexibility in how they use state funds," he said.

The Vance County schools are not involved in the pilot project, Maniloff said, but he cited the benefits of the project in other systems.

A summer school program was established in some systems before the BEP summer school was implemented, while others were able to use the money to provide a librarian in each elementary school and to hire additional English teachers to concentrate on improving the skills of students in that area, he said.

"All that was without any increase in money," Maniloff said. "If you can provide more services for children without spending more money that's a real good sign of success."

A study conducted on the pilot project has found the program worthwhile. Richard King, associate professor of educational administration in the school of education at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, said he did a study several years ago, looking at four small rural districts that got flexible funding from the state and four comparison districts that received no flexibility and little in local money.

"My conclusion ... (was) it, indeed, was an excellent program," he said. "It allowed them to do things they had not done at that point. In no cases did those districts use that money in a dangerous fashion."

For example, accreditation was awarded in one district because the funds allowed it to hire an arts teacher, and some BEP guidelines were met ahead of schedule, he said.

King noted that his study did not include large school systems that receive funding from the local level.

"My view on the policy level is that the program should have been permitted to allow all districts the option," King said.

It is certain the pilot project will not exist as it has in the last four years, West said.

"We anticipate accountability, flexibility legislation," he said. "However, any flexibility which occurs will be restrictive and tied to measurable outcomes" such as being able to meet state accreditation standards and making improvements in test scores, dropout rates and attendance.

"Right now, it's been incorporated in the state superintendent's pursuit of a program looking at greater accountability and flexibility in all of the school systems in the state," said Jim Barber, the controller for the state Department of Public Instruction.

Senate Bill 2, "The School Improvement And Accountability Act of 1989," still is being discussed in legislative process and would allow flexibility through accountability, he said.

"That in a sense would be a vehicle for continuing the finance project. It would be incorporated in this broader base program," Barber said. Through the pilot projects, "I think we've demonstrated that resources do need to have some flexibility at the local level," he said.

Services Held For Two Tar Heels Killed In Blast Aboard Battleship

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Seaman Apprentice Leslie Allen Everhart Jr. and Petty Officer 3rd Class Dwayne Collier "Bobby" Battle, two of the North Carolina sailors who died in the explosion on the USS Iowa, were buried in separate graveside services Saturday.

With thunder sounding in the distance, 15 pigeons were freed during a service on a Richmond County hillside for Everhart, 31, to urge the 80 mourners to look skyward, said Dr. Ben Gault, one of two ministers who presided at the service at Richmond Memorial Park.

Everhart's wife, Lisa Bosworth Everhart of Norfolk, Va., stood by quietly as her daughter, Kirsten Bosworth, put a single yellow iris on her stepfather's coffin.

"May we be strong as we remember this special young man and his fallen comrades and pray for these families and others who were so hurt and devastated by this tragic accident," said the Rev. Charles Stevens of Kernersville.

Two sailors served as honor guards and a third presented the flag that had draped the coffin to Mrs. Everhart. Another flag was presented to Everhart's parents, Leslie Allen Everhart Sr. and his wife, Sarah, of Kernersville.

Gault also read a message from Everhart's wife, in which she said: "He had fulfilled all of his childhood dreams and was looking for more.... Allen was not afraid to live or die."

A service was held at City Lake in Rocky Mount for Battle, 21. Several hundred mourners gathered for the emotional hour-long service.

"He was like a young man looking for a dream," said Everett Taylor, chief warrant officer on the USS Iowa.

Deryck Springer, of New York, a fireman on the Iowa who went to school with Battle, described his friend as "quiet."

"He was always the scholar," Springer said.

"The story of Bobby is a wonderful story, for he gave himself up unselfishly," Rev. Thorne said.

Everhart, Battle and Boatswain's Mate Eric Casey of Mount Airy were among 47 sailors killed April 19 when a gun turret on the Iowa exploded during maneuvers near Puerto Rico.

The explosion and fire were in the second of two forward gun turrets, at the loading position of the middle gun in the three-gun turret.

It was the worst Navy disaster in more than a decade.

Services were held Wednesday for Casey, who was buried at the foot of the Blue Ridge Mountains near his hometown of Mount Airy.

Legislators Are Still On The Search For Access To Pork Barrel Funds

By F. Alan Boyce
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — State legislators continue to tiptoe around the issue of "pork-barrel" funds, trying to keep the discretionary funds for local projects without the political fallout such spending has caused in the past.

Last week, with a bill deadline approaching, state senators began filing generic bills to send $70,000 to each district. The money would go to "a county, a city, a local school administrative unit or an agency or subdivision of the above" as directed by each lawmaker.

Sen. Henson Barnes, D-Wayne, president pro tem of the Senate, originated the change in dealing with discretionary funds, which have been criticized by Republicans including Gov. Jim Martin as a secret way for legislative leaders to keep rank-and-file members in line.

"If there is going to be any discretionary money under the new system that we have, you must have a bill and have it debated in committee," Barnes said. "If there is any discretionary funds paid out to the districts in this state, they will be handled in a logical, expeditious, open and fair manner — everybody knows what the money is going for — and for a public purpose.

"Somebody has got to stand before (the) Ways and Means (Committee) and tell everybody in front of them, all the public and all the press, the good Lord and everybody else. And the committee will vote it up or down."

On the House side, Speaker Joe Mavretic has declared an end to "pork barrel," but members are allowed to file bills to fund local projects such as volunteer fire departments or civic groups with the proviso that they be examined by legislative committees and voted on their merits.

"It's whatever the body wants," said Rep. Harry Payne, D-New Hanover. "It's no longer I have these funds I can spend."

Ward Purrington, Martin's legislative liaison, said both the House and Senate plans are "certainly an improvement," particularly if the money is fairly distributed and goes to legitimate public purposes.

"There would not be anything to hold over their (legislators') heads if it were done in the way it is advertised," he said.

However, lawmakers must consider discretionary funds in light of statewide needs, Purrington said.

"The problem is setting aside 'X' bucks and saying this is immune to whether it is a priroity for the state," he said.

The different approaches could end up pitting the House against the Senate. While the House plan emphasizes the elimination of discretionary funds, the Senate bills boldly announce their purpose and aim only at eliminating the politics of pork barrel.

The Senate plan has the benefit of allotting the same amount to each district, avoiding infighting. Payne admitted that could be a problem in the House.

"You just have to believe that the process ultimately will even out, even in the short run," he said. "If there are inequities, that's the subject of debate."

Meanwhile, the House may reject Senate discretionary funding bills, said Tim Kent, Mavretic's spokesman.

"I know we've got 61 votes on that against the Senate's position," he said.

Some observers said the Senate might be handing the House a hostage that could be used to sway their position on other matters late in the session.

Driver Killed In Car-Truck Crash

WILMINGTON (AP) — A Currie man died instantly Friday morning in his flaming car after a truck hit it from behind on the Cape Fear Memorial Bridge, firefighters said.

Harvey Daniel Hewett Jr., 37, was "burned beyond recognition," on his way to work at Atlantic Packing and Gasket Co. in Wilmington, according to firefighters.

Hewett's car ignited after the truck driven by William Bordeaux, 21, crashed into it, said investigating officer Jason Tyson of the Wilmington Police Department. The car's gas tank exploded after the impact, he said.

Bordeaux, of Route 1, Box 336, Delco, was charged by police with reckless operation of a motor vehicle and death by motor vehicle.

IN THE STATE

NAACP Lawsuit

SANFORD, N.C. (AP) — The local chapter of the NAACP and another group have filed suit against Lee County officials to challenge the way commissioners and aldermen are elected, the plaintiffs said Saturday.

The suit against the Lee County Board of Commissioners, the county Board of Elections, the mayor and Sanford Board of Elections was filed in U.S. District Court in Durham.

The lawsuit charges that the political process isn't equally open to blacks and that blacks have less opportunity to participate and to elect representatives of their choice.

Lee County commissioners have been working since December to restructure the way commissioners are elected. They are now elected at large to four-year terms.

N.C. State Award

RALEIGH (AP) — G. Smedes York, president of York Construction Co. and former Raleigh mayor, has been named the 1989 Distinguished Engineering Alumnus at North Carolina State University.

York, a 1963 N.C. State graduate in civil engineering, was chosen for the recognition by the engineering faculty. The annual award honors an engineering graduate who has distinguished himself or herself by oustanding achievement in the field of engineering.

York was cited Friday as "a distinguished alumnus who has risen rapidly in engineering and business management to become one of the most dynamic leaders in the construction industry and the business sector of North Carolina."

Flag Presentation

RALEIGH (AP) — The presentation of a North Carolina Confederate flag captured in battle in 1862 will highlight the observance of Confederate Memorial Day at the state Capitol on May 7.

The flag was returned to North Carolina last fall from the Library and Museums Association of Springfield, Mass., and will be on display for the first time in the Capitol rotunda.

Worker Falls

ROANOKE RAPIDS, N.C. (AP) — A textile plant worker was killed Friday when he fell from a catwalk and was crushed between the rocker arms of a giant loom, officials said.

William T. Boyd of Roanoke Rapids was on a catwalk about 14 feet above a loom when the accident occurred, said Tandy Fitts, head of corporate relations at the Bibb Company Rosemary Plant.

At the time of the accident, Boyd was trying to help clear a machine blockage, Fitts said.

Fulbright Scholar

CULLOWHEE, N.C. (AP) — A Western Carolina University senior, William David Ballew of Franklin, has been selected for a Fulbright Scholarship to study in the field of cognitive neuropsychology in West Germany.

Ballew will travel to the Ruhr University in Bochum, Federal Republic of Germany, to study with Klaus Schneider on a project exploring the processing of emotional stimuli in the right hemisphere of the brain.

Ballew's Fulbright grant (the Deutscher Akademischer Austauschdienst Award) was awarded after an intensive screening process in both the United States and Germany, with the final selection made by the German board. It pays all expenses, including airfare, tuition, room and board.

Salesman Charged

LENOIR, N.C. (AP) — A Lenoir man has been arrested on charges of illegally selling hearing aids to two Caldwell County residents.

William Francis Lee, 52, was charged with two counts of obtaining property by false pretense and two counts of selling hearing aids without a license, said Caldell Sheriff's Capt. Roger Hutchings.

"The one he sold was $1,500; we have another one here for around $1,300," Hutchings said. "They never received the hearing aids."

Hutchings said the hearing aids were sold door-to-door. State law requires licensing by the N.C. Hearing Aid Dealers and Fitters Board before a person can test for hearing or sell hearing aids.

Smoking Rules

CAMP LEJEUNE, N.C. (AP) — Smokers will have to snuff out their cigarettes in most areas of Camp Lejeune Monday when the base begins following Defense Department smoking guidelines.

"Smoking will be permitted only to the extent that it will not endanger life and property or represent a risk of impairing nonsmokers' health," said 1st Lt. Cathy M. Engels, a Camp Lejeune spokeswoman.

Starting Monday, military personnel, civilian workers, military dependents and visitors will not be allowed smoke in offices, auditoriums, conference rooms and classrooms, libraries, elevators, official vehicles, gymnasiums, child care centers and youth activity centers, Ms. Engels said.

Smoking will be allowed in private offices, she said.

Enforcement Agencies, Schools Meet In High-Stake Battle For Drug Funds

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

North Carolina's top law-enforcement officials are asking for a reprieve from a new federal law that could funnel millions of dollars seized from drug traffickers to schools rather than their departments.

"In real practice, the man on the street ... is just not going to be as concerned and tenacious in getting the (illegal-drug) funds if he knows it's going to go over to the school fund," said Robert Morgan, director of the State Bureau of Investigation and a former U.S. senator and state attorney general.

At issue is a high-stakes battle for cash, airplanes, land and other property seized from drug traffickers.

The North Carolina Constitution specifies that all proceeds from forfeitures, criminal penalties and fines must go to local school systems. But the state's various law-enforcement agencies often sidestep that requirement by funneling their drug-related cases through federal courts.

In return, the federal government will give to those agencies up to 90 percent of the assets seized from drug traffickers, which can include cash, cars, airplanes and land. The money may be used only for drug enforcement purposes.

That arrangement is now in jeopardy. A federal law scheduled to take effect Oct. 1 would prohibit such federal-state sharing in North Carolina and other states where a local provision calls for criminal forfeitures to be used for other purposes.

In Washington Friday, top law-enforcement officials told Senate staffers that law-enforcement agencies would be less inclined to crack down on drug dealers if the schools, rather than law-enforcement agencies, reap the financial rewards.

Morgan, along with Raleigh Police Chief Frederick Heineman, U.S. Attorney Margaret P. Currin and other N.C. law enforcement officials, urged congressional staffers to seek ways to delete or alter the new federal requirement.

They said state and local law enforcement agencies can't keep pace with drug traffickers unless they continue getting the funds, which help them pay for computers, communications equipment, training programs and other anti-drug tools.

But Hal White, a state special deputy attorney general, acknowledged that North Carolina's public school systems are just as eager to get their hands on the money.

"The schools have clearly indicated that they will fight to the end," he said in the meeting with Stef Cassella, senior counsel to the Senate Judiciary Committee.

In fact, the schools already are fighting. The Winston-SalemForsyth County school system is suing the state in federal court over the question of which agency gets seized assets from criminal enterprises.

The school system's lawyer, Douglas Punger, said in an interview that he is bothered by cases in which state and local officials handle all aspects of a drug seizure and arrest, then hand over the assets to federal officials so they can be rebated to the law enforcement agencies rather than to the schools.

"Their only involvement is to act as a conduit" for the assets, he said.

Bush Sets Stage For Debate Over Japanese Plane

By Barton Reppert
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — President Bush's decision to go ahead with the $7 billion FSX fighter deal sets the stage for a heated congressional debate over U.S.-Japanese defense ties, trade friction and America's high-technology future.

In announcing the agreement for joint development and production of an advanced version of the F-16 fighter, Bush sought to allay concerns voiced on Capitol Hill — as well as within his own administration — over the economic and technological impact of the deal.

Bush told reporters Friday that the United States will have a 40 percent share in the development work and a "similar share" of the production run for the 130 planes which Japan wants to deploy in the late 1990s.

Addressing technology issues, the president said that "sensitive source codes for the aircraft's computer will be strictly controlled. Access will be granted to only those codes that are essential to complete the project."

Bush said he was convinced that the agreement "is in the strategic and commercial interests of the United States."

However, several members of Congress said they were still dissatisfied with the terms of the deal and would strive to block it when the agreement is sent up to Capitol Hill for a 30-day review period.

Congress could try to halt the deal by passing a joint resolution of disapproval, but a two-thirds majority of both houses would be required to override a likely Bush veto of such a resolution.

Rep. Richard A. Gephardt, D-Mo., chairman of the House FSX Task Force, declared that "I will lead an effort to ensure that this giveaway of American technology never sees the light of day."

"Once again, the administration has allowed political and foreign policy factors to dominate a decision having a fundamental impact on our economic future," said Gephardt, who last year ran for president on a trade protectionism platform.

Gephardt's St. Louis district is the home of General Dynamics, which is slated to work with Japan's Mitsubishi Heavy Industries in co-developing and co-producing the FSX.

The Missouri Democrat and other critics of the deal contend that Japan instead should buy American-made F-16s "off the shelf," to help ease this country's $55 billion trade deficit with Japan.

The FSX announcement came the same day as the Office of the Trade Representative released a study listing Japan as one of the worst users of trade barriers. According to published reports, the agency recommended sanctions for refusing to open its markets to U.S.-made cellular phones and mobiles radios.

Proponents of the FSX have argued that the deal will give U.S. industry access to valuable technology — particularly in the areas of composite wing construction and advanced radar systems — developed by the Japanese.

However, a congressional source said a classified report sent to Capitol Hill Friday by the General Accounting Office, an investigative arm of Congress, indicates that the United States actually may gain little or nothing from such Japanese technology.

"We don't know ... as to what advanced technologies they (the Japanese) might have. So it's pure guesswork. From what they've been able to estimate from open-source stuff, the U.S. is far advanced in wing composites and is even further advanced in the radar technology," said the source, who spoke on condition he not be identified.

The source said GAO officials also were expected to testify at hearings on the FSX that when the deal was initially negotiated during the Reagan administration, U.S. officials "did not consider any commercial or economic implications. They did not bring in any agencies that do that. ... They did it solely for security reasons, and security was narrowly defined."

After the Bush administration took office, concern over the deal's broader economic implication was voiced at White House meetings by Commerce Secretary Robert Mosbacher and U.S. Trade Representative Carla Hills. This prompted Bush to send the draft agreement back to Tokyo for "clarifications."

Another point that is expected to be raised by FSX critics on Capitol Hill is use of so-called side letters to handle provisions on the U.S. production work share and protection of computer source codes, rather than stipulating these provisions in the U.S.-Japanese "memorandum of understanding" that is the heart of the deal.

This goes to the issue of trust in Japanese willingness to fully live up such agreements. In the past, Tokyo has been accused of failing to adhere strictly to provisions of other side-letter agreements, including in the area of semiconductors.

Sen. Alphonse D'Amato, R-N.Y., commented about the Japanese, "I don't trust them. I think they'll promise you anything, and then do what they want."

D'Amato said he likely will join in a resolution of disapproval on the FSX, even though he doubts the move will be successful in blocking the deal.

Congressional critics also are expected to argue in coming weeks that the FSX deal will provide technology that may help propel Japan's aircraft industry into head-to-head competition with the United States.

"We are giving our strongest competitor in the world marketplace the expertise it lacks to directly challenge America's leadership in international civil and military aircraft sales," said Rep. James J. Florio, D-N.J.

Democrats Shift Their 'Star Wars' Objections To Sky 'Pebbles' Plan

By John M. Broder
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — The ever-evolving "Star Wars" space-based defense program is now staking its future on an embryonic technology known as "Brilliant Pebbles," swarms of new mini-missiles designed to detect, track and pulverize incoming Soviet nuclear missiles in flight.

The new scheme marks a radical departure from previous Star Wars designs and represents, some officials say, the last hope for the costly and controversial anti-missile program, which is formally known as the Strategic Defense Initiative.

Brilliant Pebbles was endorsed by Secretary of Defense Dick Cheney last week as the centerpiece of Pentagon anti-missile research. He indicated that if two years of intensive research on the new concept fail to yield results, the entire Star Wars program would be delayed and would have to be re-evaluated.

Critics immediately assailed the idea as unaffordable and technically impossible, charges they have leveled at all previous Star Wars proposals.

The Brilliant Pebbles idea, devised by weapons scientists at California's Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory, would place thousands of miniature interceptor rockets encased in solar-powered "life jackets" in space awaiting orders to blast enemy missiles as they rise through the clouds on an arc toward the United States.

The three-foot-long, 100-pound rockets would be guided by an electronic "brain" with the capacity of a Cray supercomputer shrunk to the size of a deck of cards. The rockets would hurl 10-pound, non-explosive projectiles — the "pebbles" — into thin-skinned ballistic missiles at ultra-high velocity.

Pentagon officials estimate that the brilliant pebbles interceptors can be built for less than $500,000 each because of dramatic advances in sensors, computers, guidance systems and thruster rockets.

Lt. Gen. James Abrahamson, who recently retired as director of the Star Wars program, estimated that a brilliant pebbles system could be deployed in space for $25 billion, compared to $69 billion for last year's model, known as the space-based interceptor.

Cheney and President Bush are intrigued with the concept, which offers the elusive promise of an affordable and survivable space-based missile defense.

But if "Pebbles" fails to meet their expectations, officials concede, the whole Star Wars program — on which nearly $18 billion has been spent already — could be in jeopardy.

Cheney told Congress last week that if the brilliant pebbles concept does not work out after an aggressive research and testing schedule, the entire Star Wars program will be pushed back two years, meaning the first deployment of a system would not take place until after the turn of the century.

Hundreds Arrested As Abortion Protests Break Out At Clinics

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Hundreds of hymn-singing anti-abortion protesters were arrested Saturday as they and slogan-chanting counterdemonstrators vied for attention at entrances to clinics around the country.

Police reported arrests in Colorado, Louisiana, Massachusetts, Michigan, New Jersey and Ohio, and other large protests were reported in other states including California.

Bob Nolte, a spokesman in New York for Operation Rescue, the group coordinating the anti-abortion protests, said actions were planned in 65 to 70 cities, from Anchorage, Alaska, to Gulfport, Miss. In the group's widest previous protests on Oct. 29, he said, 2,600 people were arrested for blocking entrances of clinics in 32 cities.

By midday Saturday, precise figures on the number of arrests nationwide were not tallied, but they numbered at least 300 in the cities were police gave preliminary figures.

On Friday, Nolte said, 334 anti-abortion demonstrators had been arrested in six states, and the protesters succeeded in closing at least three clinics for the day, one in Charlottesville, Va., and two in Lansing, Mich.

In suburban Detroit, Molly Yard, president of the National Organization for Women, appeared Saturday at an abortion clinic to denounce activists who were blocking doors.

"We call it operation bully, because they bully women," Yard said.

Operation Rescue protesters said they hope to persuade the U.S. Supreme Court to overturn Roe vs. Wade, the 1973 decision legalizing abortion. The court heard arguments last week on a Missouri case the Bush administration has said should be used to overturn the landmark decision, but the justices have not yet ruled.

"People who have sat home ... said to themselves 'My God, we worked for this stuff 20 years ago to stop the deaths of young women,'" Kathy Ayres said.

Anti-abortion protesters sang hymns, held pictures of fetuses aloft and, in some cases, clutched rosaries while kneeling to pray. The pro-choice contingent shouted such slogans as "OK, hear our voice, Massachusetts is pro-choice."

In Columbus, Ohio, at least 10 abortion protesters were charged with disorderly conduct, including four who temporarily chained themselves by the neck to a 55-gallon barrel filled with concrete and rolled into the doorway of a clinic.

Outside the Planned Parenthood clinic in Shrewsbury, N.J., where police reported at least 100 arrests, executive director Phyllis Kinsler said the protesters "just absolutely shoved video cameras in people's faces" as the patients came in for their appointments.

Bob Pawson, a spokesman for the protesters, said the videotapes would not be released for privacy reasons, but were necessary to counter claims by pro-choice advocates that Operation Rescue protests are ineffective.

In Boulder, Colo., where Operation Rescue kept secret the location of its protest until Saturday morning, about 300 anti-abortion protesters and 30 counterdemonstrators turned out at the Boulder Valley Women's Health Center.

'People's Fightback' Attracts 2,000

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — About 2,000 people, representing a hodgepodge of causes ranging from Korean reunification to gay rights, marched from the Capitol to the White House on Saturday to protest Bush administration policies.

Organizers of the "Campaign for a People's Fightback," sponsored by more than 500 separate organizations, had predicted a far greater turnout, but a steady rain muddied their small tent city, established Friday on the Capitol grounds, and doubtlessly thinned the ranks.

As the marchers passed the U.S. Courthouse where the Iran-Contra trial of former presidential aide Oliver L. North awaits a verdict from the jury, many chanted: "North, North. Guilty, guilty, guilty."

Part of the group was protesting U.S. policy in Central America. Others were promoting more federal assistance to the homeless, restoration of student grants and loans, more AIDs research, cutbacks in weapons spending and a variety of other issues.

Overall, said Sahu Barron, a principal organizer of the coalition, the group was seeking the establishment of a "people's fund" of $150 billion, the same amount proposed for a federal rescue of failing savings and loans institutions, "to bail out the homeless, the hungry, and the jobless."

Jesse Jackson Considers Washington Mayor's Race

LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — Jesse L. Jackson has begun active discussion of running for mayor in the District of Columbia next year, a step that would in all likelihood take him out of the race for the Democratic presidential nomination in 1992.

Jackson told The Washington Post Friday, "I have not yet made a determination to run here," but said he is speeding planned remodeling work on a home he owns in Washington and may move here from Chicago as soon as it is completed.

Several Jackson advisers told The Post that in private conversations in the past two weeks he has indicated a strong inclination to skip the 1992 presidential battle and seek elective office in Wasshington — a decision that would drastically alter the national and local political landscape.

It would open the 1992 nomination fight by removing from contention one of the most exciting and controversial figures in the Democratic party. At the same time, it would likely cause all those eyeing the job now held by embattled three-term Mayor Marion Barry to reevaluate their plans.

Jackson said flatly, "I will not run against Marion Barry," and Jackson advisers told The Post that Jackson is encouraging efforts to find a business or academic post to which Barry could retire at the end of his term.

Barry said in a statement Friday that "from all indications I have received, the Rev. Jackson is not interested in running for mayor of Washington, D.C., regardless of whether I run or not."

Barry has said there is a "60-40 percent chance" that he would seek a fourth term, but the mayor has not yet announced the formation of a campaign finance committee, a move that had been expected weeks ago.

Key figures in past Jackson presidential campaigns said that in recent conversations, Jackson has expressed the view to them that it would be a mistake for him to seek the party nomination again in 1992. "He realizes that he could — and probably would — end up a three-time loser at age 51," said one man, "and that would be the end of his national prospects."

JACKSON

Jackson disclaimed that thinking, and said it was "speculative and premature" to conclude that he would seek to succeed Barry. But he pointedly noted that "I have worked herein Washington as much as I have in Chicago," which is his residence and the location of his two principal organizations, the Rainbow Coalition and Operation PUSH.

Jackson has owned a boarded-up property since 1985 when he bought it for $100,000. He recently applied for building permits to perform $180,000 in alterations and repairs.

He said he planned to meet with an architect next week, and that "we plan to have the house in living condition soon." Asked about reports that he might transfer his voting address to Washington as early as this summer, Jackson said, "My family has not made that decision, but we can't move before the house is finished."

D.C. elections officials said candidates for mayor must reside here one year prior to any general election. That would mean Jackson would have to move to Washington by early November this year.

Jackson confirmed what several sources had told The Post about his insistence on a position after the election for Barry, a longtime friend and political ally. Barry would have to be assured what one source called "a comfortable landing place" before Jackson entered the race. "He deserves dignity and he deserves options," Jackson said of the mayor.

Challenger Moves Up As Wright's Clout Drops

By Jim Drinkard
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Nearly a year ago, House Speaker Jim Wright confidently asked the ethics committee to quickly dispose of a list of charges hurled by a pesky conservative, Rep. Newt Gingrich.

The process has been anything but quick. Wright's fortunes have fallen as Gingrich's have risen, and the speaker's supporters now find themselves attacking the same investigators they once encouraged.

Since filing the ethics charges, Gingrich has been elevated to minority whip, the No. 2 GOP leadership post in the House.

Soon, probably within the month, Wright, the nation's highest elected Democrat, is likely to go on trial before the ethics committee. There, Wright will have his first chance to publicly lay out his defense against charges that he violated House rules 69 times over the past decade.

A tough Chicago lawyer, Richard Phelan, will act as the prosecutor. It was Phelan who led the ethics committee's long, $1.5 million investigation that turned over virtually every stone in Wright's 40-year political career.

Wright's defense will rely on a team of lawyers, likely to be announced this week, who will seek to pick apart the legal ground on which Phelan has built his case and cut down witnesses called to testify against Wright.

In addition to Wright's current lawyer, William Oldaker, the team may include such symbols of respect as Democratic patriarch Clark Clifford, and perhaps a hard-nosed trial lawyer like Richard Ben-Veniste, who was an assistant prosecutor in the Watergate case.

But in another sense, the defense already has begun. Wright's supporters, chiefly members of the Texas congressional delegation, have surrounded the speaker and are playing hardball politics with anyone seen as an enemy.

Asked what he would advise two ethics committee Democrats — Chet Atkins of Massachusetts and Bernard Dwyer of New Jersey, who voted against Wright on a key issue in committee — Rep. Jack Brooks, D-Texas, replied, "Pray."

"They are rumps in and horns out," said Rep. Patricia Schroeder, D-Colo., alluding to what she termed a different sort of behavioral standard shared by Texans. "Being from Texas means never having to say you're sorry."

While it will give him an opportunity to mount a point-by-point defense, the trial also is likely to be politically painful to the speaker. Ethics committee chairman Julian Dixon, D-Calif., said the proceeding probably would be open to the public, and the major television networks are pressing for a waiver of committee rules to open the event to cameras — something Wright's supporters fear.

"We think it's in the public interest," said Barbara Cohen, chief of the CBS News Washington bureau and head of a network "pool" that handles matters of mutual concern to the broadcasters. "We certainly would be doing stories on the nightly news, and would like to use the speaker's own words."

Wright's strategy with his colleagues is to align himself with them and the institution, admitting personal flaws but appealing to the pressures all lawmakers feel: conflicts between friendships and public responsibilities, financial constraints, loyalty to the House.

At the same time, Wright and his lieutenants have sought to paint Phelan as an overzealous outsider who is trying to single-handedly rewrite the institution's own rules and who has somehow conned the ethics committee into agreeing with him. Brooks referred to Phelan in a television interview as "an assassin."

But some members in both parties view the effort to isolate Phelan as risky and with the potential to backfire. One Midwestern Democrat notes that Wright himself publicly welcomed the appointment of Phelan, an active Democrat, last July.

Others, both Democrats and Republicans, say the ethics committee enjoys a high level of credibility in the House and that lawmakers will probably accept whatever verdict the committee returns.

"The defense the speaker has put together is absolutely reprehensible," says Rep. Vin Weber, R-Minn., a close ally of Gingrich and a leading GOP spokesman on the Wright case.

"It will not serve them well and it doesn't reflect well on the people around him. Their strategy is basically to commit Democratic members to his exoneration before they have seen the evidence, and to attempt to discredit and intimidate the ethics committee."

Noting comments like Brooks' advice to the ethics committee Democrats who voted against Wright, Weber added, "These are not random, off-the-cuff remarks. These are top-level, powerful Democrats who are close to the speaker. These are threats from the speaker of the House."

Between now and Wright's trial, there also is the likelihood of continued revelations about his business dealings. The ethics committee is scheduled to interview a group of Texas businessmen on Wednesday and Thursday who were participants in a gas well venture that yielded huge profits for Wright's blind trust last year.

And last week it was revealed that Wright failed for four years to pay $8,000 owed for a corporate jet he and others used in 1985 for political fund-raising. The bill was paid Tuesday, only after the plane's owner got wind that a reporter for the Wall Street Journal had found out about the incident, which would have amounted to an illegal and unreported campaign contribution.

Judge Severs Communications With Reporters In North Trial

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Shortly before the jury in the Oliver North trial wound up its eighth day of deliberation without a verdict Saturday, the judge in the case cut off direct communications with reporters covering the case.

"Hereafter, no information will emanate from my chambers," U.S. District Judge Gerhard A. Gesell said in a letter to Carl Stern of NBC News who has been acting as a news media liaison with the court since the trial began.

The judge said a lawsuit filed last week by 10 news organizations for public release of a document has made the press corps a party to the case and therefore put reporters in an adversary position.

Since the trial began three months ago, a copy of most documents introduced in court have been made available to the press and news organizations banded together to reproduce them.

During the jury deliberations, reporters have remained in a press room two floors above the court and relied on Stern's contact with Gesell for information about the progress of the deliberations, including notice when a verdict is reached.

For the first time since the jurors retired to consider the case, reporters were not allowed to wait on the second floor where they spend their day.

Gesell refused to release the paper, a stipulation summarizing intelligence intercepts, on grounds that it "is a classified document." The intercepts, as described in court, were a step-by-step tracking of a shipment of Hawk missiles sent by Israel to Iran in November 1985 with CIA assistance.

The news organizations petitioned the U.S. Court of Appeals after Gesell's refusal and that court ordered the judge to hold a hearing at which a record can be made.

Parties to the news media petition were The Associated Press; Cable News Network, Inc.; Capital CitiesABC, Inc.; CBS, Inc.; Dow Jones & Company, Inc.; National Broadcasting Company, Inc.; National Public Radio; The New York Times Company; The Times Mirror Company, and The Washington Post.

Reporters from more than 20 other organizations on Saturday wrote to Gesell asking that they be excluded from his new rule.

Errant Robot Jason Raised From Ocean

BOSTON (AP) — The errant underwater robot Jason was raised from the deep Saturday, breathing new life into a $7 million international satellite science project whose submersible star had unceremoniously sunk.

"The crew had prepared an understudy for the project, but now the show can go on," said Paul Fontaine of Boston's Museum of Science. "Jason is back."

The 7-foot-long, remote-control robot will be on center stage Monday as the first of 250,000 students in 13 cities across the United States and Canada hook up via a two-way satellite with marine explorers in the Mediterranean Sea.

About 2,000 museum officials, teachers and technicians were testing the system last week when Jason, a propeller-driven submersible equipped with video camera and maneuverable arms, disappeared overboard.

Dr. Robert Ballard's rubber-booted assistants were easing the million-dollar robot overboard off the coast of Italy when the cable snapped and the younger brother of the robot that first nosed among the Titanic's ruins sank 2,100 feet to the soft, silty ocean floor.

"Everybody felt very badly about it," said Fontaine, one of dozens of museums officials nationwide who have worked nearly two years to coordinate the project.

"Jason's as much a member of the crew as anybody. He was on the frontline, though, and everyone knows it's the frontline person who takes the biggest risks," Fontaine said. "It was particularly sad because he hadn't even had the chance to show off his stuff."

But Shelley Lauzon, a spokeswoman for Woods Hole Oceanographic Institution on Cape Cod, said it was not immediately clear whether Jason would be used in this week's explorations.

"But we're hopeful," she said. "Everything seems to be fine. But they'll be looking it all over before making a final decision."

Fontaine said his colleagues and school teachers nationwide would be "ecstatic" to hear the good news about Jason, who has been the focus of lesson plans in grade school classrooms around the country.

Lauzon said the support ship Star Hercules weighed anchor Saturday and started steaming about 120 northeast to the spot where Jason and his mobile garage, Argo, were to explore and broadcast during the science project's first week.

The May 1-14 project, whose sponsors include Woods Hole, Turner Broadcasting System, the National Geographic Society and Electronic Data Systems, will return to broadcast live during its second week from the scene of Jason's unexpected brush with extinction.

The participating museums are The Boston Museum of Science; the Museum of Natural History in Denver; the Detroit Science Center; the Discovery Place in Charlotte, N.C.; the Museum of Science and Industry in Chicago; The Science Place in Dalias; Memphis (Tenn.) Pink Palace Museum; The Franklin Institute in Philadelphia; the Rochester (N.Y.) Museum and Science Center; Mote Marine Laboratory in Sarasota, Fla.; National Geographic Society Grosvenor Auditorium in Washington and Dallas; and the Royal British Columbia Museum in Victoria, British Columbia.

Bald-Headed Men Defying Expectations That They'd Grab Up Hair-Loss Remedy

By Lisa Perlman
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

KALAMAZOO, Mich. — When Rogaine was unveiled last September by the Upjohn Co. as the first scientifically proven hair-loss remedy, financial analysts envisioned desperate balding men running to doctors for prescriptions.

Today, those analysts and many consumers are disappointed, and Upjohn is preparing a new, more aggressive marketing campaign aimed at men whose embarrassment at seeking help for their hair loss may have prevented them from trying the drug.

Upjohn says it is pleased with Rogaine's performance and blames drug-industry analysts — some of whom predicted 1989 U.S. sales would top $300 million — for unrealistic expectations.

"Any new product that saw the sales that Rogaine did in the first few months would be deemed an outstanding success," said Upjohn spokeswoman Kaye Bennett. "We expected to succeed in the long run, while the analysts thought it would be a runaway success."

Disappointed consumers also may have set unrealistic expectations by ignoring Upjohn's warnings that Rogaine wouldn't work for most men.

Though Upjohn does not release sales figures for specific products, drug industry analyst Ronald Nordmann of PaineWebber Inc. estimated domestic sales for Rogaine accounted for $11 million of the Kalamazoo-based company's $755 million in net sales for the first three months of 1989.

While Rogaine's sales were more than double those for the fourth quarter of 1988, Nordmann said he interpreted the figures as disappointing.

"The product has certainly been slow out of the starting gate," he said.

There are many reasons for Rogaine's sluggish sales, researchers and hair-loss specialists say. Among them:

—Upjohn's 8-month-old, $20 million advertising campaign, featuring a man walking along a beach with the "see your doctor" phrase, may have been too low-key and vague.

—The price, about $50 for a one-month supply and the necessary lifelong commitment to its use.

Once you stop using Rogaine, any hair you may have grown back will fall out. If the drug has stopped your hair loss, you'll make up for lost time as soon as you quit.

Most baffling, however, is that companies featuring bogus baldness remedies on late-night television continue to outsell Rogaine by a ratio of about 10-to-1, said Mike Mahoney, president of the American Hair Loss Council.

"The biggest deterrent to Rogaine is that the man has to go to his doctor and admit that he is not comfortable with his hair loss. With the others, he can call a 1-800 number from the privacy of his own home," said Mahoney, whose non-profit organization provides consumer information on hair-loss treatments.

Upjohn's new marketing campaign, beginning in mid-May, will feature a toll-free number. The consumer will be connected with a hair-care specialist to discuss Rogaine and then will receive information on Rogaine via mail.

Like the previous ads, Upjohn still won't refer to the drug by name. U.S. Food and Drug Administration regulations prohibit companies from advertising prescription drugs by name unless there also is a full disclosure of any warnings and potential side effects.

The company has released few details about its new marketing strategy, but says it's designed to identify and target the market for the drug, which was approved by the FDA last August.

Though analysts see the new campaign as Upjohn's reaction to slow sales, the company insists the more aggressive campaign always was part of its marketing strategy.

Some of the blame for disappointment with Rogaine's results also lies with the consumer, who may have been expecting too much. Upjohn warned consumers from the start that the tonic wouldn't work at all for most men.

Rogaine, the trade name for a substance called minoxidil, is recommended for men younger than 40 who have been losing hair for 10 years or less and who have an area of baldness 4 inches in diameter or less on the crown of the head.

Clinical trials showed about 39 percent of men suffering from male-pattern baldness will either grow some new hair back or stop losing hair after six to eight months on the drug.

"If you're going to use this stuff, you've got to be patient and use it for a year," said Dr. David Whiting, medical director of the Baylor (University) Hair Research and Treatment Center in Dallas, Texas. "Otherwise, you'll never know if it would have worked."

Bert Camp, a railroad engineer in Mineola, Texas, saw results after about three months on Rogaine.

"Since I started using it, I've definitely seen some new hair growing," said Camp, 46. "And for 10 years, I've been using everything that I could get my hands on to stop hair loss."

Still, Camp said Rogaine was "too expensive, especially since I'm going to have to use it for the next 20 or 30 years."

At the 2,270-store Rite Aid pharmacy chain in Harrisburg, Pa., spokeswoman Suzanne Mead said Rogaine sales had been slower than expected.

Rogaine may almost double its market if the FDA approves it for use by women. Of the 50 million Americans losing their hair, 20 million are women, and clinical trials have found the drug to be slightly more effective on women, Bennett said.

Vincennes Captain's Wife Settles With School Board

LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

SAN DIEGO — In their first public appearance since the March 10 bombing of their van, Navy Capt. Will Rogers III and his wife, Sharon, said she will not be returning to her fourth-grade teaching position at the La Jolla Country Day School.

Speaking at a news conference, the Rogerses sharply denounced the exclusive private academy for bowing to an apparent act of terrorism.

Under the terms of a severance agreement with the school, Sharon Rogers, a 12-year veteran teacher there, will receive a lump sum payment of $135,000, plus $5,000 for her attorney, and will not return to the campus, where school officials believe her presence would pose a risk to the safety of students and faculty.

The FBI has been investigating the van bombing as a possible reprisal for Capt. Rogers' order to shoot down an Iranian passenger jet that neared his ship, the guided missile cruiser Vincennes, in the Persian Gulf last summer. All 290 people aboard the plane were killed.

"Over the past weeks I have felt many different emotions, but today I am simply just disappointed," said Sharon Rogers, fighting back tears, "more disappointed than I can possibly express. I will miss my relationship with the school. But most of all I will miss my students and their courageous and thoughtful parents."

Both Capt. Rogers and his wife said they believe that the van bombing was an act of terrorism. Mrs. Rogers added that the school, by barring her from campus, was sending out a message that it was bowing to terrorism. "I feel very sad for our country," she said.

Bernie Fipp, president of the school's board of trustees, said in a letter Friday to the school's parents and staff that safety was the prime motivator in the school's decision that Sharon Rogers should not return to teach her fourth-graders.

"The school believed, and continues to believe, that Sharon's presence on campus would pose an unreasonable risk to the children at the school," Fipp said. "The school believes that the presence of the 24-hour federal protection now being offered to Sharon is evidence of the risks involved."

The Rogerses were escorted to the press conference at a Mission Valley hotel by a large contingent of security officials from the Naval Investigative Service. When they sat down before the microphones, the security detail posted itself at both entrances to the room and in the parking lot.

Sharon Rogers maintained that the school would be secure with her there because of the added Navy protection.

Richard Roth, a public relations specialist hired by the school, said the 18-member board's vote Friday morning "was not unanimous but overwhelmingly in favor of approval" of the decision to sever ties with Rogers.

Asked why the board agreed to pay her $135,000, when her current-year contract is for $32,400, Roth said:

"We want to avoid a legal action. Instead of paying legal fees (from a lawsuit), we believe it is more appropriate to provide Sharon with this compensation."

Sharon Rogers said she plans to immediately begin seeking work at another school in the San Diego area.

"I'm going to start pounding the pavement next week," she said. "I'm going to update my resume and hit the bricks on Monday."

U.S. Will Monitor Elections

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — President Bush this week will name an official observer team to monitor Panama's elections as he weighs a series of pre- and post-election actions in case of fraud, administration officials said Saturday.

The team of observers representing the administration will consist of Congress members, administration officials and private sector leaders, but would be distinct from other privately organized efforts to monitor Sunday's balloting, said the sources, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

The membership of the administration's group is not firm yet.

In addition to the team that will represent the administration, the government is encouraging private observer missions in hopes of turning a bright spotlight on what U.S. officials have flatly predicted will be an election rigged by Panama's ruler, Gen. Manuel Noriega.

Recent days have seen a flurry of policy meetings among White House, State Department and military officials to determine what actions should be taken before the election and what stance the administration should adopt toward Panama afterward, sources said.

"All of the options are ones that involve high costs," in the sense of political and international impact, said one official who declined to specify the options.

The deliberations come as officials continue to refuse comment on a U.S. News & World Report article last week that said Bush signed a secret order authorizing the CIA to funnel $10 million in assistance to Noriega's political opposition.

Officials said only that pre-election actions have been discussed.

But with the administration predicting Noriega will steal the election for his presidential candidate, Carlos Alberto Duque, the focus is increasingly on how Bush should react after the balloting.

Bush has said he will not accommodate Noriega, who was indicted in February 1988 by a Miami grand jury on drug trafficking charges.

The president last week accused Noriega of trying to commit "systemic fraud" in the election and said the United States would not recognize his fraudulent election results.

Panama says the United States is meddling in its elections and funnelling millions of dollars to the opposition campaigns.

Salmon Harvest Will Go On Despite Spill

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

VALDEZ, Alaska — Commercial salmon fishing in oil-tainted Prince William Sound will begin next month on schedule, but 30 percent of what should have been a record $50 million catch may be lost, officials said Saturday.

Fishing boats will be barred from many areas of the sound when the season starts May 15, said state biologist James Brady.

At one time, officials had considered canceling the season altogether, just as they had canceled the $12 million herring fishing season and smaller seasons in the sound for shrimp and sablefish after the Exxon Valdez ran aground and spilled more than 10 million gallons of oil March 24.

Instead, fishermen will be crowded into a smaller area in efforts to keep their nets clear of oil that would contaminate whatever salmon are caught.

"I feel confident that we will be able to proceed with our salmon fisheries," said Brady, a biologist with the Alaska Department of Fish and Game. "But we will have to sacrifice some harvest."

State officials will test whatever salmon is brought in by the 760 fishermen, and pledge that no contaminated fish will reach the market. Spotting and smelling fish tainted by crude oil is easy, biologists say.

Also Saturday, skies cleared and the seas were calm, allowing the cleanup to resume after several days of waiting out blustery weather.

Pilots in oil-hunting spotter planes and slicker-garbed crews aboard skimmer boats coordinated their collection efforts as the tar-like residue floated just off or coated shorelines on the Kenai Peninsula.

About 300 people using the USS Juneau as a floating hotel rode landing craft to Smith Island where crews are trying to hose down rocky beaches before pregnant harbor seals haul out to have their pups.

Teams from the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration and from the state Department of Fish and Game toured Sugarloaf and Marmot islands off the Kenai Peninsula. Those may be next on the list to be cleaned for seals, the Coast Guard said.

The sections of Prince William Sound most likely to be closed for the May salmon season include prime fishing grounds along the outer edge where pink salmon arrive still a bright silver after months at sea, Brady said.

U.S. Set To Propose New Round Of Talks On Arms

LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — During his visit to Moscow May 10-11, Secretary of State James A. Baker III intends to propose opening a new session of strategic arms negotiations with the Soviet Union in late June, according to senior administration officials.

The negotiations on a treaty that would cut overall U.S. and Soviet nuclear arsenals up to 30 percent, were suspended last November after George Bush was elected president.

The officials said the administration is still studying possible changes in the U.S. negotiating position but that there is no opposition inside the government to resuming the talks in June.

Soviet officials have not indicated whether this timetable is acceptable, although they previously complained about the administration's delay in arriving at a position on the resumption of the strategic weapons talks.

President Ronald Reagan waited 17 months after his inauguration, until June 1982, before beginning a new set of negotiations aimed at sharply reducing strategic arms. Despite making progress on some elements of a treaty, the Reagan administration and the Soviets could not agree on key issues such as future compliance with the 1972 Antiballistic Missile Treaty or constraints on nuclear-tipped cruise missiles.

Reagan's predecessor, Jimmy Carter, in contrast, plunged into negotiating a strategic arms deal only two months after his inauguration, winning a firm Soviet rebuke for having abruptly tried to alter a tentative accord on land-based nuclear missiles.

Baker told the Senate Foreign Relations Committee in January that Bush "has made it very clear that he wants to build upon the progress that has been made to date" in the negotiations under Reagan.

But the administration has also been struggling, without success, to reach internal agreement on several modifications to the U.S. position.

Under Reagan, for example, the United States insisted on banning mobile land-based missiles, including the deployed Soviet single-warhead SS25 and multiple-warhead SS24, on grounds that compliance with a limit on such missiles cannot be easily verified.

But Bush decided on April 21 to deploy two mobile U.S. missiles, the truck-mounted Midgetman and the rail-based MX, bringing existing U.S. arms control policy and weapons planning into conflict.

One solution under discussion at the White House is to propose banning just multiple-warhead mobile missiles, such as the SS24 and MX, while allowing a specified number of single-warhead SS25s and Midgetmen.

Advocates say that such a plan would limit the military dangers of illicit mobile missile production because single-warhead weapons are less threatening.

But Bush and Secretary of Defense Richard B. Cheney have said mobile deployment of the 10-warhead MX should be given top priority.

Some State Department officials argue that the plan could be presented as a "two-track" decision: the United States would deploy the MX aboard rail cars, unless mobile missiles were banned in a new accord.

"We will probably not have this one resolved (in time) for Baker's visit to Moscow," a White House official said Saturday.

Soviet officials have signaled that they are preparing for the resumption of the talks by stating informally that Ambassador Yuri Nazarkin will be appointed their new chief negotiator on strategic arms, replacing Alexei Obukhov, according to U.S. officials.

Nazarkin has been the Soviet representative at the 40-nation Conference on Disarmament in Geneva since 1986.

Puppies And Kids Replace Glitz At White House

By Susan Page
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — When the official White House dinner for Jordan's King Hussein had ended and the final guests were filtering out the North Portico, a familiar figure was spied sitting on a step at the top of the grand staircase, peering through the banister, holding a pajama-clad toddler in his arms.

President Bush, still in black tie, was giving his visiting 3-year-old granddaughter, Marshall, a glimpse of the fancy guests.

The White House has become a very different place these past 100 days — if not in most policies, then certainly in style. Eight years of Ronald Reagan glitz, glamour and movie-star guests, astrological guidance and family estrangements are gone.

In their stead has come a tumble of children, grandchildren, in-laws and assorted family members the likes of which the White House has not seen since the days of John F. Kennedy. There are newborn puppies in the parlor and a freshly dug horseshoe pit in the back yard. The president telephones two dozen or so friends, advisers, members of Congress and others every day just to keep in touch; the stream of dinner guests and overnight visitors is constant and unannounced.

When White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater walked into the Oval Office one recent morning, he found the president showing off the place to singer Crystal Gayle and a man decked out in camouflage garb.

"I've heard of you; you're Marlin Fitzwater," the man drawled. "I'm Ray Scott; have you heard of me?" No, Fitzwater conceded, he had not. Scott, it turned out, is president of the Bass Anglers' Sportsmen Society, founder of "Bassmaster" magazine and a Florida fishing buddy of Bush. He and Gayle had been invited to dinner at the White House and then spent the night in guest bedrooms.

If Ronald and Nancy Reagan had a rather imperial White House, admired but aloof, George and Barbara Bush seem to have thrown open the tall double doors and invited everybody in.

Bush pulled four children from the line of White House visitors the other day to see Millie's new puppies. The guest list for the formal White House dinner honoring Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir included Ben and Lillian Wagshall, whose family runs a Washington deli the Bushes have long favored. When Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass, attended a dinner in the family quarters, he told the first lady it was the first time he had been invited upstairs since his brother was president.

That same accessibility and emphasis on personal contact marks Bush's relations with the media. He calls reporters by name; he invites them over for lunch. While he has yet to hold a formal, prime-time news conference in the East Room, he has answered media questions in one forum or another every week of his presidency.

Some White House strategists think the low-key, open style of both Bushes has brought about a sort of national good feeling that is largely responsible for his exceptionally high approval ratings. (And Barbara Bush's approval ratings are even higher than his.)

But some of Bush's friends and political advisers also worry that the president's energetic style can seem frenetic, and that he risks making his early welcome wear thin.

"He's extremely active, almost hyperactive," worried Vic Gold, an old friend and aide who helped Bush write his autobiography. "If you don't put some kind of brake on it, a president can suffer from overexposure."

Reagan, in contrast, kept his private time private, appearing at scheduled events and otherwise leading a life that was almost secluded.

Defectors Planned For Their Break Two Years Ahead

ANCHORAGE, Alaska — Two young Soviets seeking political asylum in the United States say they began scheming two years ago to defect, and forged documents that enabled them to travel to Little Diomede Island in the Bering Strait last weekend.

"It was not possible to make it in a legal way," said Anatoly Tkachenko, a 24-year-old journalist from Moscow.

"We are very sorry that we kind of marred and soured the ceremony at Little Diomede, but there was no other way," Tkachenko added.

Tkachenko and Alexander Genkin, also 24 and from Moscow, defected last Sunday while they were on Little Diomede for the signing of a protocol designed to ease travel restrictions between Alaska and Siberia.

Both men worked for a monthly Moscow newspaper that serves the government's international affairs ministry and the Moscow state college for international affairs.

When they learned a Soviet delegation would be traveling to Little Diomede for the signing ceremony, they forged papers authorizing them to cover the event for the newspaper, Tkachenko said at a news conference Friday.

The pair typed an application, obtained a special stamp to verify it had been authorized, and took it to the headquarters of the Bering Bridge Expedition.

The expedition is a team of Soviet and American adventurers skiing and dog-sledding its way along the Siberian and Alaskan coasts. The signing ceremony coincided with their arrival at the international dateline in the Bering Strait between Little Diomede Island and the Soviet island of Big Diomede about three miles away.

"We were very anxious and apprehensive about our even taking part in this delegation" because of the forged permission, Tkachenko said. If the two had been found out, "I think we would have been in prison for three or four years," he said.

Both men called in sick to explain their absence while traveling to Alaska, he said.

Tkachenko, who speaks English fluently, did most of the talking at the news conference and translated for Genkin, who speaks very little English.

Tkachenko said he doubts the defections will affect U.S.-Soviet relations or hamper efforts to open the Alaska-Siberia border.

He said neither man told relatives or anyone else about the plan to defect, and said he didn't think Soviet authorities would retaliate against their parents.

Tkachenko said both men would like to continue working as journalists if their requests for asylum are approved.

"I am very interested in this field, especially in American TV journalism," Tkachenko said. "It was my idea for a very long time to be somehow involved in this field, you know. Maybe I can get a job at any company or channel as an expert in Soviet affairs because I studied international affairs."

He said Genkin wants to work in print journalism once he learns English.

Chinese Students Denounce Talks As Scheme To Destroy Campaign

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BEIJING — In a major concession to a student movement for democracy, senior officials met Saturday with student leaders to discuss their demands. Protest leaders, however, denounced the meeting as a government plot to destroy their campaign.

They said 41 universities in Beijing would continue their week-old class boycott until the government accepts their newly formed student union as the true representative of students. The government has declared the group illegal.

Despite the complaints, the meeting was an unprecedented event in a country where the people and their leaders have little contact.

Radio and television stations carried a lengthy broadcast of the meeting, providing some of China's most eloquent citizens with a rare platform to criticize the government.

"Does Premier Li Peng really fear the people?" asked one of the 45 students present. "If not, why won't he talk with us?"

"Most people I know don't believe the Chinese press. It should be allowed to tell the truth and not used by the party," said another.

The 3½-hour meeting, with State Council spokesman Yuan Mu, State Education Minister He Dongchang and high-ranking officials from the Beijing city goverment, marked the first time government officials have met with student activists since protests began two weeks ago.

Government officials, speaking on behalf of Premier Li, called on the students to return to class. They made no promises to change state policy but acknowledged student complaints and implied that further meetings would be possible.

The appearance of Yuan, believed to be part of the inner circle of the nation's top decision-makers, was an indication of how seriously the government regards the recent unrest.

The meeting was part of a series of concessions and defeats the government has suffered since the protests began.

On April 22, for example, the government was unable to put into effect an order closing Tiananmen Square because 150,000 students and their supporters occupied it to commemorate the death of ousted Communist Party leader Hu Yaobang. It was his death April 15 that sparked the first demonstrations for political reforms and free press.

On Thursday, tens of thousands of students marched through lines of police, defying threats of a government crackdown, in the biggest demonstration in Communist China's 40-year history.

Both Yuan and He cracked jokes and laughed throughout the meeting as they sought to adopt a conciliatory attitude toward the student movement.

At one point, Yuan said the government "understood the patriotic fervor, the desire to push democracy and deepen the reforms expressed by the students in their marches."

The statement indicated a radical change from the shrill tone of an editorial last week in the People's Daily, accusing the students of plotting to overthrow the socialist system. An editorial in the Saturday editions of the People's Daily also expressed sympathy for the students' goals.

The government apparently hopes it can split most of Beijing's students from the leaders of the independent student association that has organized the protest. The government has said the group, the United Association of Beijing Universities, is illegal.

Chains Halt Baby Food Sales

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LONDON — Three British chains took the two top-selling brands of baby food off their shelves Saturday as police investigated more than 300 reports of contamination.

In northern England, a new report of food tampering surfaced when a family was taken to a hospital for treatment after eating hamburgers contaminated with mercury, police said.

Tesco, a supermarket chain with more than 375 stores, and Boots, a drugstore chain with more than 1,000 stores nationwide, said they would halt sales of baby food made by H.J. Heinz Co. and Cow and Gate Ltd.

"We decided to take action now rather than wait, in the interests of consumer safety,' said John Eyre, Boots director for corporate affairs.

The Asda food chain also said it was withdrawing all baby food from the two companies that was packaged in glass jars.

Police said most of the reports of contamination were hoaxes or false alarms. Scotland Yard said several arrests have been made.

Only two cases apparently were the work of an extortionist, who demanded up to $1.7 million from the Pittsburgh-based H.J. Heinz Co., police said.

The family that ate the tainted hamburgers needed hospital treatment but suffered only "mild ill effects," said a police spokesman on condition of anonymity. The family is from Heswall near Liverpool.

Police said they believed the hamburgers may have been tampered with.

Local authorities said they were beginning an urgent search to find who purchased 11 other packages of the frozen hamburgers from the same store in the past two weeks.

Reports of taintings with glass shards, pieces of razor blades and caustic soda began April 7. Most reports involved Heinz or Cow and Gate baby products, but several were in other brands of baby food.

In Springfield, Ill., three grocery stores operated by Shop-N-Save removed Heinz baby food products from their shelves after a woman reported finding straight pins in jars of the food.

Census Shows Urban Trend For Soviets

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOSCOW — Soviet citizens are increasingly fleeing the farms for a better life in the already strapped cities, a troublesome trend that threatens to worsen the country's economic problems, officials said Saturday.

The Soviet population climbed 9.3 percent during the past decade and now stands at 286.7 million, with the largest increases in the central Asian regions, according to census figures published Saturday.

A top Soviet statistician expressed concern the population had not increased faster — which he said was necessary to ensure greater economic development — and that growth rates were low in European regions.

Pravda, the Communist Party daily, devoted an entire page to preliminary results of the nationwide census conducted in January, the country's first since 1979.

The demographic center of the Soviet Union is gradually shifting from the European Slavic heartland — the Russian federation, the Ukraine and Byelorussia — to Central Asia, according to data from the State Committee on Statistics.

Those numbers represent troublesome trends for the Soviet leadership, which has been trying to keep the country's peasantry on the farm and has acknowledged it cannot create jobs fast enough in Central Asia to keep pace with population growth.

The total number of Soviets grew by 24.3 million in the past 10 years and stood at 286.7 million Jan. 12. That represents a growth of 9.3 percent since 1979.

Four traditionally Moslem republics in Soviet Central Asia registered the greatest population increases: a 34 percent rise in Tadzhikistan, 29 percent in Uzbekistan, 28 percent in Turkmenia and 22 percent in Kirghizia.

Israelis Wound 16 In West Bank Clash

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

JERUSALEM — Israeli soldiers shot and wounded at least 16 Palestinians in the occupied Gaza Strip on Saturday, and a 14-year-old boy who was shot by Jewish settlers in the West Bank died, Arab reports said.

Also Saturday, Foreign Minister Moshe Arens accused the PLO of "trying to impose a rule of terror" to sabotage Israeli proposal for elections in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip.

In the West Bank town of El-Bira, Palestinian assailants tried to set afire the house of the Israeli-appointed Arab mayor, Hassan Tawil, and slightly damaged a door, the army command said.

The PLO-linked underground leaders of the uprising have called for the resignation of Israeli-appointed mayors. It was the second attack on Tawil. On June 7, 1988, he was stabbed in the chest.

In the West Bank town of Jericho, attackers firebombed and burned a restaurant belonging to a Palestinian suspected of being a pro-Israeli collaborator, the national news agency Itim said.

Palestinians in the Gaza Strip defied an army curfew and protested the high number of casualties in the seaside strip, home to 650,000 Palestinians.

Merchants in Gaza shut their stores in a commercial strike to commemorate the "martyrs," or Palestinians killed by army gunfire, Arab reports said.

Koreans Stage Mass Arrests Before Rally

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SEOUL, South Korea — Police arrested about 2,200 workers and students Saturday to block a planned labor rally, and the government warned it may take emergency measures to end a wave of strikes and labor unrest.

About 20,000 riot police were deployed in Seoul to try to prevent Sunday's rally, which was called by militant labor groups to push for workers' rights and denounce the government of President Roh Tae-woo. The government has declared the rally illegal.

About 2,000 radical students and workers gathered Saturday at Yonsei University in eastern Seoul to prepare for the rally. Some hurled firebombs and rocks at riot police, who responded with tear gas grenades.

In the southeastern port of Masan, about 2,000 strikers battled riot police in the third straight day of street clashes, according to Yonhap, the South Korean news agency.

Police officials, who refused to be named, said about 2,200 workers and students were detained in Seoul to block Sunday's rally.

Labor and dissident groups vowed to go ahead with the rally, called to mark the May 1 international labor holiday. They claimed up to 100,000 workers would take part, and trade union leaders vowed the rally would be peaceful.

Students and workers at Yonsei rallied throughout the day, denouncing the Roh government and calling for creation of a new government led by workers and peasants.

"Down with Roh Tae-woo!" and "Free labor rights!" protesters yelled.

The two main opposition parties, the Party for Peace and Democracy and the Reunification Democratic Party, urged the government to let workers hold rallies.

The Reunification Democratic Party alleged that police had used electric cattle prods to torture arrested strike leaders and demanded a full investigation. Police denied the charge and demanded an apology from the party.

The government has warned that nationwide wave of strikes and labor unrest are disrupting the economy and fomenting political unrest. Senior officials said Saturday the government was studying tough new measures to end the strikes, but the official refused to give details.

The chairman of the governing Democratic Justice Party, Park Jyun-kyu, said the government may have to consider an emergency decree giving Roh the power to take any necessary measures to end unrest.

"If the problems are still not settled, declaration of a presidential emergency decree should be seriously considered," he said Friday.

Many South Korean workers receive subsistence wages for very long workweeks. A growing number are demanding wage increases, better working conditions and a share in South Korea's growing economic prosperity.

The government says strikes have cost the country more than $3 billion in lost production this year. It is concerned about efforts by radical students and dissidents to build a political alliance with striking workers to challenge the Roh government.

Roh has introduced broad reforms since he took office in February 1988, but dissidents associate him with the authoritarian regime of his predecessor, Chun Doo-hwan.

In addition to Roh's ouster, radicals are demanding the withdrawal of 43,000 U.S. troops stationed in South Korea under a mutual defense pact. They say the troops prevent reunification with communist North Korea.

After 10 Years, Thatcher Becomes An Institution

By Maureen Johnson
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LONDON — Many Britons barely remember life before Margaret Thatcher, and many more can't imagine what Britain will be like after she's gone.

In the decade since she came to power on May 4, 1979, something of a curiosity as Europe's first female prime minister, she has become, in her own words, an institution.

Having begun with uncertain prospects for survival, she has now had the longest uninterrupted tenure in 160 years of British politics.

She dominates national life more than any prime minister since Winston Churchill in World War II. She was asked once what she had changed.

"Everything," she replied.

So all-embracing is the free-market crusade called "Thatcherism" that even the name of her Conservative Party has become something of a misnomer.

Conservatism, columnist Alan Watkins wrote in the liberal weekly Observer, means preserving the old. But "Mrs. Thatcher has not only refused to put the clock back; she has put it forward, turning the hands furiously, so that bells chime unpredictably and clockwork jangles."

She has quelled the labor unions; she has sold off vast segments of the state-owned sector turning traditional money-losers like steel into profitable enterprises and in the process has built an army of new shareholders; she has shifted the entire political agenda rightward; she has achieved the international recognizability of a superpower leader.

Now, after a third consecutive election victory in 1987, she is trying to carry the revolution into the heartland of the old Britain by shaking up the 40-year-old National Health Service, the tradition-cloaked legal profession and the education system.

It has been, says Hugo Young, her latest biographer, "an era in which an ordinary politician, laboring under many disadvantages, grew into an international figure who did some extraordinary things to her country."

It is a formidable legacy and most analysts agree much of it will endure.

"There will never again be moribund nationalized industries," said Robert Worcester, head of pollsters Market Opinion and Research International, said in an interview.

"There will never again be trade union baronies, there will never again be the working class rejection of middle class values by the majority."

The election May 3, 1979, with the final results declared early on May 4, followed a winter of strikes that left the dead unburied and garbage

The Associated Press

piled in cities, and spelled the end of James Callaghan's Labor government.

She began with a prolonged spell of bitter medicine: high unemployment as loss-making heavy industries were pared, state spending curbs, then an onslaught against heavy-spending Labor-controlled local governments.

If miners and steelworkers were heroes of the Labor Party, small businessmen were the heroes of Margaret Thatcher, inspired by her father in whose grocery she helped out while growing up in the north England town of Grantham. Taxes were cut, currency controls abolished and an enlarged police force deployed to deal with strike pickets now illegal under her union-curbing laws.

By 1981 she was rated the most unpopular prime minister since opinion polls began. But the following year came victory in the 74-day Falklands Islands war against Argentina. Her popularity soared and she was re-elected in 1983 with an increased majority.

It enabled her to carry on the revolution, and the fruits are beginning to appear in a higher growth rate, a budget surplus and a sustained consumer boom.

Male average earnings at 273 pounds ($466) a week have risen by nearly one-third in real terms since 1979.

Two-thirds of Britons are homeowners, up from 50 percent in 1979. Trade union membership, down by one-third, is equaled by the some nine million stock holders.

But the number living on welfare has doubled to 9.4 million, or 17 percent of the population, officjal statistics indicate. Unemployment is nearly 7 percent, higher than in most other industrialized countries, and inflation nags away at 7.9 percent forcing interest rates to stay high at 13 percent.

Opinion polls indicate that while Britons don't like her, they respect her. Now she is often accused of going too far.

"Change and reform have become ends in themselves," comments the left-wing political scientist Ben Pimlott in the weekly New Statesman and Society.

"This is a government and, above all, a prime minister, that now believes it can break any convention, dispatch any sacred cow to the abbatoir with absolute impunity."

Critics argue that Mrs. Thatcher has stayed in power on only 42 percent of the popular vote, because opposition parties are divided.

The division between the prosperous south and unemployment-stricken north also has widened in Mrs. Thatcher's decade.

It's not all her fault. The north has always been poorer than the south. The Thatcher era happens to coincide with the decline of heavy industry, the north's traditional mainstay, and the south's closer proximity to the lucrative markets of continental Europe.

But although the state spends more on the north than the south, the predominant feeling among northerners is that Mrs. Thatcher cares little for regions that are not natural Conservative constituencies. Thus the Conservative vote has plummeted in the north and in Scotland, separatist nationalism is at its strongest in 10 years.

Mrs. Thatcher has made the language of debate more combative and divisive. She declares she wants to bury socialism in Britain, and some opponents adopt the trappings of East European dissidents. The latest anti-Thatcherite organization calls itself Charter 88, modeled on Czechoslovakia's dissident Charter 77.

Labor legislator Kim Howells acknowledges that when Mrs. Thatcher came to power, "The left was largely bankrupt of ideas about what to do about British industry. It did not come to terms with the things Thatcher was talking about ... in a sense we became the reactionaries."

Her policies have brought her into conflict with large parts of the establishment: Church of England bishops, the British Broadcasting Corp., the universities, even Queen Elizabeth II. The queen was said to be upset over discord in the Commonwealth, the association of former colonies, at Mrs. Thatcher's refusal to impose tough economic sanctions on South Africa.

The prime minister is also accused of being obsessed with official secrecy and too eager to use the courts to gag disclosures involving sensitive areas.

Mrs. Thatcher is also widely accused of undermining free speech with such measures as the banning of broadcast interviews with the Irish Republican Army and its supporters, and the revision of the 78-year-old Official Secrets Act to make it even harder to report news that the government feels should be suppressed.

Her government's protracted and ultimately fruitless battle to keep the retired secret service operative Peter Wright from publishing "Spycatcher," his memoirs, fuelled charges that she is obsessed with secrecy.

She argues that the ban on broadcasts of IRA interviews is essential to fight terrorism, and that the Wright case was meant to bind secret agents to their life-long secrecy oaths.

But the results sometimes go palpably against the liberal British grain: an issue of Harper's magazine with an article by a former intelligence operative is banned in Britain; a BBC studio is raided by police over a documentary on a secret spy satellite.

"She is destroying, or going a good way to destroy, some of our finest institutions," said James Cornford, former professor of olitics at Edinburgh University who heads a new left-wing think tank, the Institute for Public Policy Research.

Pocketbook Thatcherism

A major theme of Margaret Thatcher's decade as prime minister has been dramatic change in the personal finances of average Britons, through income tax reform and privatization of government-owned housing and businesses.

Whiter Teeth?
AFTER BEFORE
Commonly asked questions and answers concerning this procedure.
Question: "How long does the procedure take?"
Answer: This procedure takes only 15 to 20 minutes to start and the patient completes the treatment at home and to their desired degree of whiteness; however, on your first visit, the dentist must prepare you for the procedure and usually a normal one-hour appointment is sufficient. The results are very predictable when the patient follows the instructions to the letter. Most cases can be completed within a two week period, more complicated cases may require a longer period of time. Patients who follow the instructions properly may see results within the first three days of treatment.
Question: "If this is such a new procedure, how can I be sure it's safe?"
Answer: Although it is a new product, it is based on the older bleaching techniques that have been in use on teeth for over twenty years. When used properly, these techniques have proven to be extremely safe but overpriced for most people. It is a much milder medication than anything ever used before for this purpose and is priced where every patient can now afford to look their very best with a totally different and easier procedure.
Question: "How long will the results last?"
Answer: The procedure can be permanent with occasional and proper maintenance.

Questions Not Adequately Answered

When an experienced judge like Jack Lewis of Farmville has to wade through a primary, a runoff, a general election and a recount to win a seat on the North Carolina Court of Appeals, isn't it time to look at judicial reform?

Lewis had to campaign for office and fund his effort while holding court as a special Superior Court judge. In the end he won, and North Carolina has the benefit of his sound mind on the bench. But because North Carolina elects its judges to office, the state nearly missed out on Lewis' talents.

But would he have fared better under a system whereby judges are appointed to office by the governor? Would an individual with Lewis' obvious expertise have had less trouble obtaining a position from which he can better serve society?

The answer to that question is as turbid as the politics which arguers of each side claim corrupt the opposite position. It is a question that the 1988 N.C. General Assembly has attempted to address with a bill that changes the state's system of choosing judges. The legislation requires a constitutional amendment that would allow voters to choose District and Superior court judges. But it stipulates that appellate and state Supreme Court judges be appointed by the governor and confirmed by the legislature.

Such legislation is an effort to take politics out of the courtroom and eliminate the necessity for judges to campaign and raise money — as well as remove the potential for influence and pressure from large contributors.

On the surface that proposal sounds like a good compromise between a system where the people decide and a system where qualifications count more than votes. But while adjustments in the state's judicial selection are needed, this bill falls short. It is not the right measure and before a sound system is tampered with, the issue needs more thought.

First, the proposed reform does not address one of the most serious drawbacks to the current system — the election of Superior Court judges statewide. Currently, voters in Greenville are not only asked to elect Superior Court judges from their judicial district, they are required to elect those that serve other districts — most very distant. That places the voter in a position of making a decision on someone he or she cannot be expected to know much about. It also requires the judicial candidate to campaign over a broad area — most of which that candidate doesn't serve. That takes money and time.

Electing Superior Court judges locally would eliminate unnecessary voter confusion. For the candidate, it would dissolve the need to spend large amounts of cash and time running for office in other districts. That change could be, and should be, made by the legislature without need of a constitutional amendment.

Second, appointment does not take judges out from under the thumb of politics. Instead, it simply changes political thumbs. Elected judges are accountable to voters and may feel pressure from public opinion. Appointed judges, however, would feel a much stronger pressure from lawmakers and the governor. They would have to remain true to the governor and General Assembly.

Lawmakers can, and should, tangibly improve the current elective system by implementing local elections for Superior Court judges. But the issue needs better analysis. The objections to an elective system are not satisfactorily answered by the current legislation.

Saying "more discussion is needed" is no solution but neither is the bill before state lawmakers. More debate of the foibles of both election and appointment is in order before judicial reform proceeds.

Sunday Morning Notes

The Moving Wall which was brought to Greenville by the George Semick Chapter No. 272, Vietnam Veterans of America was a compelling experience for all who viewed it.

The wall is a half-sized replica of the Vietnam Memorial in Washington, D.C. which sees a constant stream of visitors to mourn the tragedy of that war. The wall and the replica list the more than 58,000 Americans who died in the southeast Asia conflict. There have been few memorials which extract such unexpected emotions from those who visit.

Lest we forget, though, there are memorials in Greenville which we might visit from time-to-time to pay homage to those who gave their lives so that we might live free today.

These are memorial stones set in the grass at the southeast corner of the Pitt County Courthouse square which list all the Pitt County dead of World Wars I and II, the Korean Conflict and the Vietnam War.

Since they are not highly visible most of us pass them without ever giving them a thought. It is only on holidays when the memorials are marked with wreathes or flags by veterans organizations that passersby even note they are there.

The longest list is the World War II. It was a time when the young died so frequently that the only notice their families received was a telegram delivered by a Western Union boy.

Then they died in Korea, and unless we personally knew those who died we simply didn't notice.

The agony of Vietnam took still more Pitt County lives and the frustration here grew here as it did throughout the nation.

All of the dead had something in common, however. They wore the uniform of their nation, they went to war for their loved ones and a way of life and they didn't come back to enjoy that.

Their names are there on those granite slabs and most are still grieved by families, even after many years have passed.

What each of them would have accomplished in life we will not know, but this is Pitt County's smali memorial to the dead of four wars. For all of us who live well today they accomplished a great deal.

No Trick Question From O'Connor

Ellen Goodman

BOSTON — There were no windows in the chambers of the Supreme Court. The justices there were buffered from the sights and sounds of the street, where rights were being defended with such inelegant phrases as "Two, Four, Six, Eight, You Can't Make Us Procreate."

Inside, the argument last Wednesday was cast with far more restraint, far more dignity. But there was drama when Charles Fried took the floor saying, "Today the United States asks this Court to reconsider and overrule its decision in Roe v. Wade."

As the spectators tried to read the lips and minds of the justices there followed a seminal exchange between Fried and Sandra Day O'Connor, the justice who may be pivotal to this case. "Do you say there is no fundamental right to decide whether to have a child or not?" O'Connor asked Fried.

'This was not some trick hypothetical question that professors use to trip up first-year students. It went to the heart of the matter. The government wants the Court to "reconsider" who has the right to decide the question of abortion: the woman or the state. If it's the state, she asked, couldn't a legislature that disallowed abortion today force it tomorrow?'

He answered hesitantly and she pursued. What if, she said, in a future century, we had a serious overpopulation problem. Does the state have a right to require abortions?

This was not some trick hypothetical question that professors use to trip up first-year students. It went to the heart of the matter. The government wants the Court to "reconsider" who has the right to decide the question of abortion: the woman or the state. If it's the state, she asked, couldn't a legislature that disallowed abortion today force it tomorrow?

Fried's response was as quick as it was obtuse. There is a difference, he insisted, between preventing an operation and forcing one. A forced abortion would mean "violently...laying hands on a woman and submitting her to an operation...." A forced pregnancy, however, was what? Nonviolent? Benign?

Such distinctions would seem obscure to a woman pregnant against her will for nine months. They would seem specious to the doctor calculating the medical risks of her condition. But George Bush's lawyer saw nothing intrusive in such a pregnancy.

It was O'Connor alone who raised the issue of coercion. Liké others who have reservations about Roe and about abortion itself, she had concerns as well about individual liberty. If, as she once wrote, abortion was on a collision course with medical technology, then "pro-life" is on a collision course with liberty.

Indeed, the scenario that she described is not as far-fetched as it sounds. We do not have to look to the future or to China to see state attempts to control reproduction. We've made our own.

Earlier in this century, there were numerous forced sterilizations in the United States. It was 1974 before the courts ruled that the poor or mentally incompetent couldn't be coerced into such procedures.

Six years ago, in Massachusetts, a court ruled in favor of a husband who wanted to force his wife into a cervical operation so she wouldn't miscarry. She was only protected from this "violently...laying on hands" by the Roe reasoning of a higher court.

During the 1980s, we have seen as many as 11 Caesarean sections ordered by courts. We have had at least one pregnant woman accused of fetal neglect and had others put in protective custody — protective of the fetus.

Even now there is serious debate about whether a pregnant women could be forced into testing and treatment for her fetus. There are suggestions among those who talk of fetal rights that the government could constrain a pregnant woman's diet and physical activities, stomp out her cigarettes, empty her wine glass...or else.

If that is true today, what if the protection of Roe were shattered, and a woman's rights transferred piecemeal to the government? How freely would the state intervene?

The specter of forced pregnancy is serious enough. There is no real need to tap into Justice O'Connor's fantasy of forced abortion to see the dangers of gutting Roe. But pendulums swing. How hard is it to imagine the first financially strapped state practicing coercive family planning? How hard to imagine another group of eugenicists in a statehouse insisting that the brain-damaged fetus of a welfare mother be aborted?

As Harvard Law School's Larry Tribe says, "There's no principled way to say that the government can use women's bodies against their will to nurture the unborn without accepting the other serious and totalitarian implications about privacy." While the Court deliberates the Missouri case, it is worth remembering that if you take away the right of individuals to make decisions about their lives, you cede it to the state. And that is just the beginning.

The Cost Is Steep, The Battle Zone Unfamiliar

Richard Cohen

WASHINGTON — Her age is 28, her profession is investment banking, but we are not told her name. On April 19, she ventured a nighttime jog through Central Park, skimming the perimeter of Harlem, and was attacked by a group of boys, some as young as 14. They beat her with a pipe, stabbed her with a knife and then gang-raped her. There is a new term for this sort of thing. It is called "wilding."

The police had never heard the term before. The boys used it, though, and when reporters inquired they were told the term is well-known on the street. Merchants report that gangs of kids sweep into their stores, engage in a frenzy of shoplifting and then flee. Security guards are overwhelmed. Now, so is an entire city.

What shall we do? Well, first things first. The boys must be punished and, if possible, their parents asked to account for their kids. We must also distinguish between excuses and explanations. There are no excuses for this sort of thing. Not poverty. Not hostility. Not boredom. Not even the depression and hopelessness that leads some ghetto kids to devalue their own lives and, thus, those of others as well.

And then we must declare war. We have done so with drugs, taking the term literally and calling for the use of the military to patrol certain neighborhoods. We have declared war on cancer, too, although, like drugs, the enemy seems oblivious of our martial pronouncements. But if it is war and we want the place to wage it, it is the inner city.

The crime that has so shocked New York and the nation was one waiting to happen. The American inner-city is a mess. It is depopulated, the ironic victim of racial progress. Middle class blacks have fled; the working poor have left. In whole census tracts, the abnormal, the pathological, the criminal is now normal. Crime, prostitution, drug addiction, unemployment — these are not exceptions, but so routine that the parents of some of the boys arrested for the gang rape apparently could not compete with the street. Islands of traditional values, the parents were swamped by the sea around them.

To make war on drugs only is folly. There is no separating drugs from everything else that ails the inner city and its underclass inhabitants. What good is a drug czar if schools remain lousy, housing is inadequate, unemployment is rampant, welfare is the norm — if, in fact, the very institutions most of us take for granted (the home, the church, the school) have crumbled like some Mayan ruin. The buildings remain as mere memorials to a better time.

Within the Bush administration, some people recognize the problem and want to do something about it. The White House is now considering a proposal to establish a task force to deal with the underclass. The impetus has come from Leonard Garment, a Washington attorney and former aide to Richard Nixon, who was prompted to act after reading a New York Times op-ed piece by Richard P. Nathan of Princeton University.

Among other things, Nathan has proposed recognizing the existence of something called the underclass. Poverty is just one of its problems. So, too, are attitudes, welfare dependency, for instance — a kind of pathetic lassitude. In Washington, entry-level jobs go begging while inner-city residents complain that no work can be found or that the jobs are beneath them. The dignity of honest work, the chance to move up the ladder, have become alien concepts to a whole class of people.

Only a fool could think this war can be won overnight. It will take years — maybe a generation or two. The plan now being studied by the White House would entail the establishment of a task force of nongovernmental experts. The task force would assemble the considerable number of studies already done on the underclass. It would also hold public hearings in various cities in an attempt to educate the public about the underclass. The preliminary focus would be on ways to revive inner-city institutions and to attract bright, public-spirited people into the field. That alone is a daunting task.

It's too early to say what the fate of Nathan's proposal will be. But already the Bush administration seems inclined to deal with problems Ronald Reagan never even acknowledged. Bush has attempted to reach out to black Americans. Maybe most important, his naming of Jack Kemp to the Cabinet is recognition that something must be done. Kemp has been saying just that for years.

America may wish to shy from this war. The cost is bound to be steep and the battle zone is the inner city where most Americans never go. But newspapers proclaim that this is one war that has come to us. On April 19, yet another casualty was found in Central Park.

The Cold Blank Stare

George Will

NEW YORK — "There seem," says a professor described as a specialist in adolescent behavior, "to have been some socioeconomic factors involved." Ah.

More than 30 boys, most under 16, went "wilding." In their rampage, they raped and battered nearly to death a 28-year-old jogger in Central Park near Harlem. They hit her with a pipe, hacked her skull and thighs with a knife, pounded her face with a brick, bound her hands beneath her chin with her bloody sweatshirt, which also served as a gag. Seven or more boys raped her. (One boy says he "only played with the lady's legs" and another says he only felt her breasts and held her down while others raped her.)

Her larynx may have been crushed. She lay undiscovered for nearly four hours, losing three-quarters of her blood. The puddle she lay in hastened hypothermia and her temperature fell to 80.

Various experts say they know why this happeneed. Alienation, anomie, boredom, rage — raging boredom? — peer pressure, inequality, status anxieties, television, advertising.

The professor who says "there seem to have been some socioeconomic factors involved" elaborates: "The media, especially television, is constantly advertising these various things that are necessary to define yourself, to be an acceptable person, and the joggers may represent a level of socioeconomic attainment that the media has convinced everybody is necessary to be an acceptable person. So, to that extent, such people become a target." Ah.

Who is the victim? Well, yes, of course, the woman. But her identity, even her reality, disappears as she recedes into a category: high attainers. The boys, too, are victims. They were provoked by high attainers and disoriented by media-imposed criteria of acceptable personhood.

The fact that the New York Times considers the professor an illuminating source is itself illuminating. It reveals the rhetoric that elite liberal institutions find convincing and comforting when confronted by horror.

Another theorist is heard from: "One doesn't have to excuse sociopathic behavior to notice the contrast of visible, great wealth and massive poverty." Verily, nail your political agenda to every passing tragedy: The "lesson" here is to "do something" about the "underclass." First, of course, a task force.

Never mind the fact that most of the attackers come from comfortable middle- or working-class homes. Four live in a building with a doorman.

Another theorist speaks of the boys' "unfocused rage." The frequent references to the attackers' "rage" are fascinating because there is not a scintilla of evidence of rage. Actually, one of the boys blurted out the reason they did it. The reason he gave is theoretically unsatisfying, politically unuseful and philosophically unsettling, so he will not be heard: "It was something to do. It was fun."

Newspaper reports have repeatedly referred to the "wilding" attacks as "motiveless." But fun is a motive. Policemen, with their knack of the language of unvarnished fact, refer to "wildings" — packs of boys looting stores and inflicting random beatings — as a "pastime." Pastimes are adopted for fun.

In earlier, simpler — or were they? — days, descriptions of an episode like the one in Central Park would have begun with a judgment that today is never reached at all: The attackers did what they did because they are evil.

Today people respond: "'Evil'? such a primitive notion — not at all useful as an explanation." But that response is not real sophistication, it is a form of flinching. It is a failure of nerve. A vanishing moral vocabulary is being replaced by academic rubbish collected reflexively by "serious" newspapers.

We have lost the ablity to speak the language of emphatic judgment. As James Q. Wilson says, "Our habits of the heart have been subverted by the ambitions of the mind."

The ambition of the modern mind is to spare itself a chilling sight, that of the cold blank stare of personal evil. The modern program is squeamishness dressed up as sophistication. Its aim is to make the reality of evil disappear behind a rhetorical gauze of learned garbage.

Until relatively recently in most societies, people who did what the "wilding" boys did would have been punished swiftly and with terrible severity.

Punishment in this case will be interminably delayed and ludicrously light. The boys know that; that is one reaon they were singing rap songs in their jail cells.

A society that flinches from the fact of evil will flinch from the act of punishment. It should not wonder why it does not feel safe.

Abortion, Fusion: Humbling Lessons On Democracy's Limits

David Broder

WASHINGTON — It was pure coincidence — but the kind that makes you stop and think.

On one part of Capitol Hill, the House Committee on Science, Space and Technology was hearing testimony from the two Utah chemists. Their claim of having achieved table-top nuclear fusion has polarized the scientific community and excited the public with the prospect of a cheap, limitless energy supply.

Across the street, at the Supreme Court building, the nine justices and spectators who jammed every inch of available space were listening to lawyers argue whether or when the state should permit individuals to abort the life that results from the special fusion of sperm and egg at the instant of procreation.

If ever there were events that demonstrated the limitations of our political institutions in grappling with the fundamental questions of life and nature, these did it. Men and women have no recourse but to tackle the assignments life hands them. But Lord, we sometimes ask those who serve in government to sort out questions that are almost unfathomable.

Susan Okie of the Washington Post quoted Surgeon General C. Everett Koop as saying of the scientificlegal debate on abortion: "I don't think there has ever been an issue that can rival this one for the psychological overlay, the emotional response of the people who are on one side or the other. That makes any scientific argument extremely difficult."

But science was a critical factor in the original Roe v. Wade decision, which held that viability (outside the womb) was the point at which a fetus became a person entitled to state protection against a mother's decision to terminate pregnancy. Since 1973, when that decision sanctioned abortion on demand in the early stages of pregnancy, the scientific limit of viability has moved back from about 28 weeks to about 24 weeks. The Supreme Court has been told in an amicus brief filed by eminent physicians that there is no prospect of further advances.

But there are powerful political forces propelling the justices to confer constitutional "personhood" on fetuses at earlier stages of development. Some argue that the "right to life" exists from the moment of conception, even though science can distinguish a period before the first signs of "human" cellular distinctions appear.

How the scientific evidence should be interpreted — and what weight it should be given in the final decision — challenges the judgment and the conscience of the nine justices, not one of whom is trained in science or medicine.

At one point in the hearing, three lawyers — Justices Antonin Scalia and John Paul Stevens and Missouri Attorney General William L. Webster — found themselves in a tangled and ultimately muddled argument. It concerned the testing that doctors do to gauge "fetal lungmaturity," an important criterion of viability. They sounded like auto mechanics interpreting a symphony score.

> 'If ever there were events that demonstrated the limitations of our political institutions in grappling with the fundamental questions of life and nature, these did it. Men and women have no recourse but to tackle the assignments life hands them. But Lord, we sometimes ask those who serve in government to sort out questions that are almost unfathomable.'

Even when the emotional overtones are less poignant, as in the congressional hearing on the fusion experiments, the gap in expertise between the scientists and the politicians is awesome and intimidating.

"Quite honestly," said Rep. Claudine Schneider (R-R.I.), a member of the Science Committee, "there's a limited participation by most members of Congress on most science issues. There are no experts up here, so rather parochial interests tend to predominate. We care a lot whether a project goes into my state or yours."

Rep. George E. Brown, Jr. (D-Calif.), one of the senior members of the committee, noted with wry amusement that "the entire Utah congressional delegation" appeared with fusion scientists B. Stanley Pons and Martin Fleischmann "just to bask in the glory." Another committee member pointed out that a move to pass a congressional resolution commending Pons and Fleischmann for their work was under way even before the scientific community had reached a judgment about the authenticity and significance of the experiment.

The problem of politicians making judgments on matters requiring sophistication in science is not a new one. Long ago, British scholar C.P. Snow wrote in an essay called "Science and Government" that "one of the most bizarre features of any advanced industrial society in our time is that the cardinal choices have to be made by a handful of men...who cannot have a firsthand knowledge of what those choices depend upon or what their results may be."

The examples he cited involved weapons systems like the hydrogen bomb and ballistic missiles. But the dictum applies equally well to questions like the multi-billion-dollar super-conducting super-collider, a research tool in basic physics which was battled over as if it were a prime pork-barrel project before it was finally awarded to Texas.

It would be nice to say that the "experts" should make these decisions, but the costs are so high and the consequences so large that if there is to be accountability in a democratic society, politicians answerable to the people must make the final judgments.

Still, watching the justices and the congressmen wrestling with these questions is a humbling lesson on the limits of democracy.

Presidential Descendants Gather For N.Y. Festival

By Catherine Crocker
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — George Washington liked cornbread. And his second cousin five times removed says his illustrious ancestor must have passed the taste on to him.

James Buchanan IV, an R&B musician from Texas, says he inherited from his great-great-great uncle, the 15th president of the United States, not only his name but "a lot of nice furniture," including a teak desk that was a gift from the King of Siam.

"The notion of public service" was Thomas Jefferson's legacy to his family, which today includes many teachers, says John Works, his great-great-great-great-great grandson and a Wall Street lawyer.

The curator, the musician and the lawyer are among descendants of 39 former presidents — all but Ronald Reagan — who will gather at Federal Hall in lower Manhattan on Sunday for the bicentennial commemoration of Washington's presidential inauguration.

The New York City Commission on the Bicentennial of the Constitution said it would be the largest gathering ever of men and women with presidential bloodlines.

Peter Nissen, a freelance researcher, was the commission's official descendant hunter. It took "a lot of detective work," he says. Buchanan's family, for example, was particularly hard to locate.

Phone calls to Buchanans listed in Mercersberg, Pa., where the president was born, first turned up the Buchanan Inn — "they asked if I wanted dinner" — and then Buchanan Tomatoes — "they grow hydroponic tomatoes," said Nissen.

"It sounds like a whole lot of fun!" said Buchanan, 40. "I've got my tux ready for the presidential ball and all the parades, and I chipped in with my sister to buy a new camera for my mother."

The presidential descendants include stockbrokers, a high school student, company executives, lawyers, writers, a teacher and a former U.S. representative to the United Nations.

Some of them describe their ancestors' terms in office with glowing admiration, while others offer a more dispassionate appraisal. But all speak of their presidential forebears with pride.

Robert Fillmore Norfleet, 18, a senior at St. Christopher High School in Richmond, Va., and the great-great-great-great nephew of Millard Fillmore, recently studied the 13th president in his U.S. history class.

"When you hear of Millard Fillmore you think of him as being an ineffective and mediocre person," said Norfleet, a football and lacrosse player, student council member and sports editor for the school newspaper.

But he noted that Fillmore "came from a very prestigious background, was a smart man, well-mannered and liked by a lot of people."

David B. Roosevelt, 47, a New York stockbroker, spoke of the "strength and foresight" of his grandfather, Franklin D. Roosevelt, which, he said, enabled him "to develop policies which, although they may have seemed perhaps radical and at times severe and very unpopular, were vital for this country."

He then tempered his words of praise with modesty. "We were taught to be proud of the heritage and accomplishments of our grandparents but to never use these for personal advancement or gain," he said.

Andrew Jackson IV, an assistant attorney general in Knoxville, Tenn., was impressed with his great-great-great grandfather's "honesty and patriotism."

"I don't think he was the best president but I think he was up there with the better part of them," he added.

His name sometimes prompts jokes, Jackson said: "'I thought you were dead' or 'You're looking fine to be 200 years old.'"

Can Harrison Ruffin Tyler, the president of a chemical treatment company in Ashland, Va., really be the grandson of John Tyler, the 10th president?

Tyler explains: "My grandfather was 63 when Father was born in 1853. Then my father was 75 when I was born in 1928. So, it does add up."

John Tyler, who had 15 children by two wives, set "a presidential record that will never be broken," noted the descendant. "He certainly was a family man."

One of the most common sentiments expressed by the presidential descendants is regret that they don't know more about their famous ancestors.

Benjamin Harrison Walker, 68, a vice president of an insurance company in New York, said as a young man he was embarrassed to ask his grandmother about his grandfather, Benjamin Harrison, the 23rd president who died in 1901.

"Sadly, I didn't talk to them," he said.

One of the most distant of the presidential descendants to attend the bicentennial festivities is Clement E. Conger, of Alexandria, Va., who is the second cousin five times removed of the man whose inauguration is being honored.

Sarah Ball, Conger's great-great-great-great grandmother, was the first cousin of Mary Ball, who was Washington's mother, explained Conger, curator of the diplomatic reception rooms at the State Department and former curator of the White House.

"I consented rather reluctantly to go" to the inaugural commemoration, he said. "I felt someone with the name Washington might have been a better representative."

But Conger, who is in his 70s, is well chosen; he is an expert on Washington's life, from important facts about his presidency to trivial insights into his private life.

"My mother was eminently interested in history," Conger said. "My brother didn't like cornbread so, of course, I didn't. But my mother would say 'George Washington ate cornbread' and that meant the little Conger boys should eat it.

"I love cornbread now," he added.

Suit Filed

DURHAM (AP) — An attorney representing a Durham police dispatcher — fired as a result of an SBI investigation into an officer's recent drunken driving arrest — has filed suit against the city, the police force and Police Chief Trevor A. Hampton.

The attorney, Alex Charns, said he filed the suit to clear the name of the dispatcher, Della Owens, who lost her job with the force in the aftermath of a probe into the January arrest of undercover police officer Jenkins Hopkins.

The State Bureau of Investigation report found that criminal wrongdoing had occurred during the events surrounding the arrest of Hopkins, who was charged with driving while impaired while on an undercover operation Jan. 10 and was acquitted of the charge Thursday.

Despite those findings, Durham District Attorney Ronald A Stephens has said there is not enough evidence to file criminal charges.

Commissioner Asks Rose To Step Aside

The Associated Press

Pete Rose (right) was asked by the commissioner's office to step down as Reds' manager

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — The baseball commissioner's office wanted Pete Rose to "step aside," as Cincinnati Reds manager until it completed its investigation into his gambling activities, but he refused, it was reported Saturday.

The subject was brought up early in the investigation by someone in the commissioner's office, Hal Bodley, baseball editor for USA Today, said in a telephone interview from his home in suburban Washington, D.C.

"It was a suggestion, not an edict, and not even a request," Bodley said.

"The commissioner's office did not order him to step aside, did not request him to step aside," Bodley said earlier on CNN's Baseball '89. "... but it's one of these things where they would have liked for him to do it.

"Pete said 'no,' I think it was the right thing to say, frankly, because if he had stepped aside, that would have been a clear admission of guilt on his part."

Bodley is a longtime friend of Rose's and the Reds manager was the best man at Bodley's wedding.

"He wrote that last week," Rose said when asked to comment on the report. "Because it was on TV, does that make a difference? How would Bodley know, he wasn't there. To my knowledge, Bodley wasn't there when it happened.

"I spent two days with Bodley last week. He said he wanted something, but I didn't give him that."

Rose was in Philadelphia Saturday, where the Reds played Philadelphia.

"I don't think anything will happen soon," Rose said. "I know you guys do, because we're going to New York next week."

Bodley also said Rose met on April 20 with John Dowd, who heads baseball's investigation into the manager's activities, along with four of Dowd's assistants and Rose's lawyer.

The meeting between Rose and Dowd took place in Dayton, Ohio, Bodley said.

"That meeting was held for most of the morning," Bodley said. "The next day, they repeated the whole thing."

It was believed to be their first meeting, although as the investigation was beginning, Rose came to New York to meet with then-commissioner Peter Ueberroth and A. Barlett Giamatti, who is now the commissioner.

Bodley did not say what was discussed at Rose's meetings with the investigators.

The Cincinnati Post said earlier that Rose would tell investigators that a former friend, attempting to blackmail him, was responsible for reports the manager had bet on Reds' games.

Paul Janszen, a Cincinnati bodybuilder, now serving a six-month sentence for evading income taxes, tried twice last fall to blackmail Rose for $40,000, the newspaper said, quoting four sources.

Rose, the Post said, will tell investigators he rebuffed Janszen, who allegedly first threatened him.

Rose could be barred from baseball for life if he bet on Reds' games, and barred for a year if he bet on other games.

Knicks Nip Sixers, 107-106

Trent Tucker Nails Late 3-Pointer To Cap Comeback

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Trent Tucker's game-winning 3-pointer was a dream come true for New York Knicks coach Rick Pitino and the second nightmarish playoff loss in three years for the Philadelphia 76ers.

"I was watching the baseball game on TV before the game and Rick told me he dreamed that I hit a game-winning 3-pointer," Tucker said after doing just that, climaxing an 11-0 run that wiped out a 10-point deficit in the final two minutes with his only basket.

The 107-106 victory gave the Knicks a 2-0 lead in the best-of-5 NBA playoff series.

"I couldn't sleep and I had this bad nightmare at about 2:30 in the morning that Charles Barkley made a three-point play to win the game," Pitino said. "I woke up and said, 'Hey, I better have another dream.'

"So then I had a dream that Trent had a 3-point shot to win us the game."

The 76ers' home loss had them remembering a 95-94 victory by Washington on April 18, 1986, in which the Bullets rallied from 17 points behind in the last 3½ minutes to win on a 3-pointer by Dudley Bradley.

"We came back to win that series," Maurice Cheeks said. "But it's tough mentally to come back from this. You have to find something inside yourself to come back. It's an empty feeling because I thought we had the better team today."

"It's hard to express in words how I feel after such a devastating loss," Barkley said. "We should have won the game. Now we have to play out of our minds in Philadelphia. The Knicks held up their end of the bargain by winning at home and now we have to."

Game 3 will be played at the Spectrum on Tuesday, with a fourth game, if necessary, on Thursday in Philadelphia. Only two teams in NBA history have come back to win a best-of-5 series after trailing 2-0.

The 76ers, with Barkley and Ron Anderson scoring nine points apiece in the fourth quarter, had a 106-96 lead on Barkley's two free throws with 2:12 remaining. Barkley finished with 30 points and 12 rebounds and Anderson scored 26 points.

Mark Jackson, held to six points until then, came back with a 3-point goal, a free throw and a jumper to make it 106-102 with 59 seconds left.

Gerald Wilkins then stole the ball and hit a baseline jumper with 50 seconds to go, cutting the lead to two. The Knicks then prevented Cheeks from crossing midcourt, forcing a 10-second violation.

"Everybody was walking back to the bench because I called timeout and then the refs say it's a 10-second violation," he said. "One of the refs, I don't know who — was looking right at me when I called timeout."

"When I see Mark penetrate, I try to spread the floor," Tucker said. "Gerald Henderson left me to double-team Mark and I got the ball and made the shot."

Mike Gminski, who scored 18 points, missed an open 20-footer that the Knicks knocked out of bounds with two seconds left. After two timeouts, Gminski's high-arching attempt hit the back of the rim and bounced away, leaving him, Cheeks and Barkley standing in shocked silence on the court.

Pirates' Game Canceled

East Carolina University's baseball with N.C. State, scheduled for Saturday night at Harrington Field, was rained out.

The game will not be rescheduled, according to Coach Gary Overton, because of exams and the scheduling of other games.

The Pirates are scheduled to return to action on Friday with a 3 p.m. game against Norfolk State. They then close out their 1989 home season on Saturday at 7 p.m. against North Carolina Wesleyan.

The regular season is scheduled to end on May 9 when the Pirates travel to Chapel Hill to face the University of North Carolina.

They will then travel to Wilmington for the Colonial Athletic Association baseball tournament, which will begin on May 12. The double-elimination event will send its winner to the NCAA tournament.

Hoch Cards 65 To Earn 1-Shot Lead

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LAS VEGAS — Scott Hoch, a playoff loser in the Masters, shot a bogey-free 65 and moved into a 1-stroke lead Saturday in the fourth round of the five-day, $1.25 million Las Vegas Invitational.

"I played well, but I felt like I left some shots out there. But I've got to be satisfied with a 65," Hoch said after completing 72 holes in 266, 22 under par.

"Seventy-two holes. I win. I wish," Hoch said of the tournamant that runs one day longer than the usual PGA Tour event.

With another 18 holes to go in the chase for a $225,000 first prize, long-hitting Dan Pohl was a single stroke back at 267, 21 under par.

Pohl, who held the third-round lead, had to birdie two of the last three holes to stay close with a 68.

It was another two strokes back to Jim Carter, at 269 after a 67.

Dr. Gil Morgan, lefty Russ Cochran, Robert Wrenn and Craig Stadler were tied at 270, four off the pace and very much in title contention going into Sunday's fifth round.

Postlewait Leads LPGA Event By 1

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Kathy Postlewait, boosted by a 40-foot birdie putt early in her round, shot a 6-under-par 66 Saturday to take a 1-stroke lead over Betsy King and Val Skinner after the second round of the $425,000 Sara Lee Classic.

Postlewait shot a 68 Friday on the par-72, 6,242-yard Hermitage Golf course for a 36-hole total of 10-under-par 134.

The 15-year tour veteran made a move to break away from the field with four birdies on the front nine, including a snaking 40-foot putt on the seventh hole.

King and Skinner, who both failed to make the cut here last year, were up to Postlewait's challenge and stand at 9-under 135 in the chase for the $63,750 first-place check, the richest for a 54-hole event on the Tour.

Looking Back At A Decade Of Derbies

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOUISVILLE, Ky. — The 1980s at the Kentucky Derby was a decade that will be remembered for some up-and-coming young ladies and some been-there-forever older gentlemen.

It was a decade in which there were red roses for chestnut and roan ladies as Genuine Risk and Winning Colors became the second and third fillies to win the Derby.

It was also a decade in which Diane Carpenter became the first woman to train two Derby starters and Patti Cooksey became the second woman to ride in the race.

One of the fantastic females, Winning Colors, also answered one of the most-asked Derby questions — when will trainer D. Wayne Lukas win a Derby? The filly was Lukas' 13th starter in his eighth Derby beginning in 1981.

And Billy Shoemaker at age 54 became the oldest jockey to win the Derby when Ferdinand carried him across the finish line first in 1986. It was the 24th of 26 Derby appearances for Shoemaker and his fourth victory. He also won with Swaps, 1955; Tomy Lee, 1959, and Lucky Debonair, 1965.

Another veteran, Hall of Fame trainer Woody Stephens, 75, won two Derbies during the decade, his second coming in 1984 when Swale won while Stephens watched from a hospital bed with pneumonia. Swale also won the Belmont Stakes, then dropped dead after a morning gallop eight days later.

It was also a decade in which:

— The No. 10 post position produced the most winners, with Spend A Buck in 1985, Sunny's Halo in 1983 and Genuine Risk in 1980.

— Spend A Buck, 1985, and Winning Colors, 1988, were the 20 and 21st Derby winners to lead wire-to-wire.

— Two of the 13 3-year-olds to go into the Derby unbeaten raced in the 1980s. They were Air Forbes Won, who took four wins into the 1982 Derby and finished seventh, and Private Terms, who took seven victories into last year's Derby and finished ninth. Of the 13, the only two to come out of the Derby unbeaten were Majestic Prince in 1969 and Seattle Slew in 1977.

— Gato Del Sol and Swale became the second and third of the 114 Derby winners to start from outside the No. 14 post. Gato Del Sol won from the No. 19 post in 1982, and Swale won from No. 15 in 1984. Clyde Van Dusen won from No. 20 in 1929.

— There was 44 one-hundredths of an inch of rain when Sunny's Halo won May 7, 1983. It was the last rainy Derby Day and the first since 28 one-hundredths of an inch fell when Dust Commander won May 2, 1970.

— The 81-degree temperature when Sunny's Halo won made it the hottest Derby Day of the decade and the hottest since the 87 degrees registered when Majestic Prince won May 3, 1969.

In 1980, the chestnut Genuine Risk became the first filly to start in the Derby since Silver Spoon finished fifth in 1959.

When Carpenter sent out Biloxi Indian to finish 12th in 1984, she became the first woman to saddle a Derby starter since Mary Keim finished sixth with Mr. Pag in 1965. Carpenter finished 14th with Kingpost in 1988.

Patti Johnson had the best finish of the five women Derby trainers when Fast Account finished fourth in 1985.

Cooksey rode So Vague to an 11th-place finish in 1984, 14 years after Diane Crump finished 15th on Fathom.

There were no fillies or female trainers or jockeys expected in this year's Derby.

While Lukas went all out to win — twice he started three-horse entries — trainer Charlie Whittingham ended a 25-year absence from Derby by winning with Ferdinand at age 73.

"There's more recognition for winning the Derby than for any other race," said Whittingham, the only trainer to win more than 500 stakes.

Davis, Kruk Lead Padres To 5-4 Win Over Chicago

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHICAGO — Mark Davis stopped a Chicago rally in the seventh inning and earned his 11th save in 11 opportunites and John Kruk hit a two-run homer, leading San Diego to a 5-4 victory over the Cubs Saturday night in a game marred by 11 errors.

The Padres made a team record-tying six errors leading to two unearned runs and the Cubs committed five errors leading to two unearned runs.

Walt Terrell, 3-2, left in the seventh inning after the Cubs had scored a run on second baseman Roberto Alomar's third error of the game and successive singles by pinch-batter Phil Stephenson and Curt Wilkerson.

Davis came in and Mitch Webster bunted the runners to second and third. Ryne Sandberg reached first on a throwing error by Davis, but the reliever got Andre Dawson to hit into an inning-ending double play.

Wilkerson led off the ninth with his first homer to move the Cubs within 5-4. Davis also also yielded a homer to Mark Grace leading off the eighth.

Terrell had a one-hit shutout going until the sixth when Alomar's error led to an unearned run.

Mike Bielecki, 1-1, took the loss although he allowed only five hits and struck out a career-high 10 in seven innings.

Bielecki didn't allow a hit until Tony Gwynn doubled with one out in the fourth and went to third on a single by Jack Clark.

Benito Santiago then hit what could have been an inning-ending double play to second but Sandberg, who had committed his first throwing error in 248 games in the second inning, let the ball go through his legs for another error as Gwynn scored.

The Padres added another unearned run in the fifth. Alomar beat out a bunt single to third, went to second on Wilkerson's throwing error and scored when left-fielder Gary Varsho dropped Randy Ready's line drive for an error.

It was the fourth time the Padres had six errors in one game, the last being July 31, 1977, at New York.

Phillies.....8
Reds.....0

PHILADELPHIA — Chris James hit a grand slam and Mike Maddux allowed just two hits Saturday as the Philadelphia Phillies beat Danny Jackson and the Cincinnati Reds 8-0 in a game halted by rain in the fifth inning.

The start of the game was delayed 2½ hours by rain. It was stopped in the bottom of the fifth after another delay of one hour, 32 minutes.

Maddux, 1-0, struck out four and walked one in his first start of the season. Jackson, 1-5, lost his fifth straight decision.

James' second career slam came during a six-run fourth inning. Steve Lake drew a leadoff walk and, one out later, Jackson fielded a bunt by Maddux but threw too late to second base for a force play.

With two outs, Tom Herr walked to load the bases and Juan Samuel and Mike Schmidt each hit run-scoring singles. James followed with his second home run of the season.

The Phillies scored a run in the first on Schmidt's RBI single and added another in the second on a run-scoring single by Steve Jeltz

Dodgers.....0

ST. LOUIS — Jose Oquendo singled home the winning run with two outs in the 11th inning Saturday and the St. Louis Cardinals got past the Los Angeles Dodgers 1-0.

Fernando Valenzuela pitched seven shutout innings for Los Angeles and rookie Ken Hill went eight innings for the Cardinals before relievers took over.

Vince Coleman doubled on Ray Searage's first pitch of the 11th and took third on Ozzie Smith's sacrifice. Terry Pendleton and Pedro Guerrero were intentionally walked to load the bases and Tim Crews retired Tom Brunansky on a popup before Oquendo hit an 0-2 pitch to right field.

Cris Carpenter, 1-1, pitched one inning for the victory and Searage, 0-2, was the loser.

Valenzuela, trying to win for the first time since last June 14, allowed just four hits. He struck out one and walked one in his longest outing of the season in five starts.

Los Angeles threatened in the eighth and ninth. Jeff Hamilton doubled with one out in the ninth off Ken Dayley, but Todd Worrell retired Mike Marshall on a fly ball and struck out Rick Dempsey.

Braves.....7

MONTREAL — Tim Raines drove in four runs and the Montreal Expos beat Atlanta 9-7 Saturday, the Braves' fifth straight loss.

Raines singled twice in three at-bats and hit two sacrifice flies. He tied his career-high for RBI in a game. Darrell Evans hit two solo home runs for Atlanta.

The Expos overcame a 6-5 deficit by scoring four runs in the seventh inning. Hubie Brooks drew a leadoff walk from Charlie Puleo and Tim Wallach greeted Jim Acker, 0-1, with a single.

Damaso Garcia's run-scoring single tied it at 6, pinch hitter Wallace Johnson got an RBI single and reliever Paul Assenmacher walked Spike Owen, loading the bases. Nelson Santovenia singled home a run and Raines had a sacrifice fly.

Raines has driven in 15 runs in 14 at-bats with runners in scoring position. He is batting .428 in that situtation.

Raines' two-run single to cap a three-run fourth, and his sacrifice fly in the sixth had given Montreal a 5-3 lead.

But the Braves pulled ahead 6-5 against Hesketh in the seventh when Dale Murphy delivered a two-run double, and Jody Davis added a run scoring single.

Pirates.....3

PITTSBURGH — Kevin Mitchell and Terry Kennedy hit solo home runs in the ninth inning Saturday and the San Francisco Giants beat the Pittsburgh Pirates 4-3.

The Pirates scored in the eighth for a 3-2 lead before the Giants rallied. Mitchell hit reliever Jeff Robinson's first pitch of the ninth for his sixth home run and Kennedy connected with two outs for his second homer.

Mike LaCoss, 1-1, got the victory despite allowing Pittsburgh to score in the eighth. He walked the bases loaded and Gary Redus' sacrifice fly scored the tiebreaking run. Robinson, 2-3, was the loser.

The Giants tied it in the sixth. Brett Butler's RBI forceout with the bases loaded made it 2-all.

R.J. Reynolds' two-run homer in the fourth put the Pirates ahead 2-1. His first home run of the season followed a two-out walk to Bobby Bonilla.

The Giants scored in the first when Butler walked with the bases loaded, ending a streak of 17 innings without a run.

Viola Falls To 0-4 As Twins Lose Again

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MINNEAPOLIS — Frank Viola, the 1988 American League Cy Young Award winner, fell to 0-4 and Minnesota lost its seventh straight game Saturday night as John Farrell allowed six hits in 8 2-3 innings to lead Cleveland past the Twins 4-1.

Luis Medina homered, Oddibe McDowell sparked Cleveland offensively and defensively and Pete O'Brien boosted his major-league-leading batting average to .408 with three doubles and two RBIs in support of Farrell, 1-1.

The Twins have scored only 10 runs for Viola, who was 24-7 with a 2.64 ERA in 1988 but has a 5.26 ERA this season.

All four of his losses have come in the Metrodome, where he once won 19 straight and had lost just twice all last year.

Viola, who started this year in a bitter contract dispute with management before signing for $7.9 million over three years to become baseball's highest-paid player, allowed 12 hits in seven innings Saturday.

Farrell, who began the season on the disabled list with tendinitis in his right (pitching) elbow, left the game when he walked Jim Dwyer with two outs in the ninth. Doug Jones got the last out for his fifth save.

McDowell, who reached base four times, began the game with a bunt single, advanced to third on a wild pitch and a groundout and scored on Joe Carter's bloop single.

The Twins made it 2-1 in the third on singles by Tim Laudner, Greg Gagne and Wally Backman, but O'Brien drove in insurance runs in the fifth and seventh innings.

McDowell led off the fifth with a double, advanced on Jerry Browne's infield hit and scored on O'Brien's third double; Browne was out at home when he failed to touch the plate. In the seventh, McDowell, who beat out another bunt hit, scored on O'Brien's sacrifice fly.

Tigers.....2

OAKLAND, Calif. — Dave Stewart became the first five-game winner in the major leagues and Oakland scored the go-ahead run in the eighth inning on center fielder Ken Williams' error as the Athletics beat the Detroit Tigers 3-2 Saturday.

Stewart, 5-0, is 14-0 in 15 starts in April over the last three seasons. He pitched a five-hitter, struck out one and walked one in the Athletics' first complete game of the season.

The Athletics have won 10 of their last 11. Detroit has lost four straight games.

Luis Polonia opened the Oakland eighth with a blooper that went for a triple when Williams collided with center fielder Fred Lynn. Polonia scored on the play when Williams' throw bounced away from third baseman Torey Lovullo.

Doyle Alexander, 3-1, saw his six-game winning streak end. He lost for the first time in 10 starts since last Sept. 6.

Stewart held the Tigers to one hit for six innings. Trailing 2-0, the Tigers tied the game on Dave Bergman's two-out, two-run single.

The A's scored a run in the third when Stan Javier came home from third on Walt Weiss' double-play grounder. Ron Hassey hit a sacrifice fly in the fourth.

Red Sox.....6

ARLINGTON, Texas — Julio Franco led off the 12th inning with a home run to give the Texas Rangers a 7-6 victory over the Boston Red Sox Saturday in the completion of a suspended game.

Franco hit his third homer off the season on a 2-2 pitch from Rob Murphy, 0-2. Franco's homer gave him 21 RBIs, setting a club record for April.

Cecilio Guante, 2-1, pitched four innings of hitless relief as he struck out seven.

The game resumed in the top of the 11th inning after Friday night's contest was suspended because of a curfew at 1:20 a.m. A rainstorm delayed the game 2 hours and 2 minutes on Friday night.

Texas issued 13, tying a club record. Kevin Brown walked four, Brad Arnsberg four, Drew Hall two, Ken Rogers two and Guante one. The Rangers' record was set at Boston on May 18, 1986.

Scott Fletcher's run-scoring single capped a three-run, eighth-inning rally to send the game into extra innings tied at 6-6.

Marcum Is Up For WVU Post

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MORGANTOWN, W.Va. — West Virginia University officials searching for a successor to Athletic Director Fred Schaus say they should complete their interviews of the six candidates by mid-May.

The number of candidates had declined to five after one withdrew from consideration, but the WVU search committee chairman said the panel invited an alternate to interview.

The sixth candidate now is Robert K. Marcum, a Huntington native and director of administration at Charlotte, N.C., Motor Speedway. Marcum was fired as athletic director at the University of South Carolina in February 1988, The (Morgantown) Dominion Post reported, and has a breach of contract lawsuit pending against the school.

Professor John Fisher, chairman of the WVU athletic director search committee, says Marcum was added to the list after Jim Lessig, Mid-American Conference commissioner, withdrew his name from consideratioin.

Three candidates already have been interviewed, Fisher said. Once the interviews are completed, the search committee will submit three names to WVU President Neil Bucklew, who will select Schaus' successor. Schaus is set to retire June 30.

Bob Goin, associate athletic director at Florida State; Dwight Wallace, WVU assistant head football coach and former AD at Ball State; and Larry Travis, president of operations at Walnut Mountain Venture Development and former AD at Kansas State, already have been interviewed.

Ed Pastilong, WVU associate athletic director; Bob Bockrath, senior associate athletic director at the University of Arizona, and Marcum will be interviewed next week, Fisher said.

Marcum graduated from Marshall University in 1959 and received a master's degree in education at the University of Akron.

He served as South Carolina AD from 1982-88. He also headed the athletic department at the University of Kansas from 1978-82 and was associate AD at Iowa State from 1971-78.

South Carolina President James Holderman cited Marcum's alleged failure to establish an effective drug-testing program for athletes as the reason for the his dismissal, the newspaper reported.

Fisher said the WVU search committee was aware that Marcum had been fired and that a lawsuit was pending, and knew the reasons cited by both the school and the candidate.

CAA Cage Tourney Moves To Richmond

RICHMOND (AP) — The Colonial Athletic Association will hold the conference's annual men's basketball championship at the Richmond Coliseum from 1990-93, the city and the CAA announced Friday.

"The support and interest we have received from city officials has been tremendous and we are already making preparations for our tip-off in March," CAA Commissioner Tom Yeager said.

Richmond was one of several sites considered by the Colonial.

"We are thrilled to be able to attract the Colonial to Richmond," City Manager Robert Bobb said. "The impact that these teams and their fans could have on our community it terms of generating exposure, excitement and revenue is tremendous."

The tournament was held at the Hampton (Va.) Coliseum for the past three years. Prior to that it was held on the campus of various member institutions.

Winterville Pee Wee League Registers

Pirate Relay Sets School Record

PHILADELPHIA — East Carolina's 4x200 relay team set a new school record Friday in the finals of the Penn Relays at Franklin Field in Philadelphia.

The quartet of Ike Robinson, Brian Irvin, Eugene McNeill and Richard Wright had the second best time of the day with a 1:23.52 clocking, setting a new ECU record. Texas Christian University won the event.

The Pirates also qualified their 4x100 team for the finals, but failed to place in the finals.

Ling Heads Second-Day Qualifying

Ling, from Brick Township, N.J., turned a fast lap of 122.532 mph, which would have been good enough to put him in the top 10 if the Busch Grand National series rookie had done it in first-round qualifying on Friday.

"Since yesterday (Friday), we did some things, a lot of them just little," said Ling, who improved from 118.776 in his Oldsmobile. "We did those things and just took the car out of the box and went fast."

The top 20 positions were filled Friday, with 14 Saturday qualifiers and seven provisional starters rounding out Sunday's 41-car field.

Among the starters will be nine regulars from the NASCAR Winston Cup series, including three-time champion Dale Earnhardt, defending race champion Rick Mast and last year's Winston Cup runner-up, Rusty Wallace.

Top West Virginia Player To Fork Union

OAK HILL, W.Va. (AP) — West Virginia's high school basketball player of the year says he will forgo the college route next season and instead attend Fork Union (Va.) Military Academy.

Oak Hill High star P.G. Green, a 6-foot-6 forward who led the Red Devils to a 26-1 record last season and a Class AAA state championship, had been recruited by West Virginia, Louisville, North Carolina and Nevada-Las Vegas.

"This is one of the best things for me," Green said Friday. "I feel like a year of prep school can only help me prepare for college. It will enable me to develop better study habits and to better myself in other ways."

Green, who averaged 33.3 points, 12 rebounds and three blocks per game, said he has not informed any of the schools about his decision and intends to tell them by phone.

"As they keep calling, I'll tell them about my decision," Green said. "Why sit out a year and redshirt when I could go somewhere and play?"

Oak Hill coach Jim Lilly said he supports Green's decision.

"I'm a West Virginian, and I'd like to see him go to WVU, but the consideration of a college education should be first and foremost in his mind," Lilly said.

Cavs, Celtics Face Uphill Battle

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The Cleveland Cavaliers charged into the NBA playoffs with the league's second-best record. The Boston Celtics barely made the postseason.

Both, however, have an uphill battle if they are to reach the second round.

The Chicago Bulls will try to take a 2-0 lead over the Cavaliers in their best-of-5 series in Cleveland Sunday, while the Boston Celtics hope to get one victory against the Pistons at Detroit. The Celtics, who have won 16 NBA championships, haven't lost an opening-round playoff series since 1956 when Syracuse beat them 2-1 in a division semifinal.

In other games Sunday, it will be Portland at the Los Angeles Lakers and Houston at Seattle.

Saturday night, Philadelphia was at New York, Milwaukee at Atlanta and Golden State at Utah.

Michael Jordan had 31 points and 11 assists to lead the Bulls, but it was the 3-point shooting of Scottie Pippen and Craig Hodges that carried Chicago over Cleveland 95-88 in their playoff opener.

"When he shoots like he did, it makes an altogether different ballgame," Chicago coach Doug Collins said of Pippen, who was perfect on all four of his 3-point shots and scored 22 points.

Hodges was 3-for-4 on 3-pointers and scored 15 points after missing most of the past month with a sprained ankle.

"I feel it was a big win, especially because everybody said it would be a (Cleveland) sweep," Jordan said. "We just stayed inside with our defense, kept the pressure on down there and helped out as much as possible."

The Cavaliers had defeated Chicago all six times they played during the regular season. But Cleveland played the opening game without point guard Mark Price, who practiced with the team Saturday for the first time in 11 days.

"I want to give it a try tomorrow," Price said. "I don't know how many minutes I can play, but I'm ready to go."

Price's value to the Cleveland offense never was more evident than in his absence Friday. Without the threat of Price's long jumpers, the Bulls were able to collapse their defense on center Brad Daugherty, who managed just nine points on 4-of-9 shooting from the field.

"Let's make no bones about it. That's not the same team without Mark Price," Collins said. "Without Price really squirting the ball like he does, they lose a lot."

At Auburn Hills, Mich., Detroit's guards and bench led the Pistons over Boston 101-91. Guard Joe Dumars led the way with 25 points.

Forward John Salley led the Detroit reserves with 15 points and registered five of his six blocked shots in the second quarter, a club playoff record for blocks in a quarter. Forward Dennis Rodman added 10 points and guard Vinnie Johnson had two, with only center James Edwards failing to score for the Pistons' second unit.

"Their strength is their backcourt," Boston's Kevin McHale said. "We tried to take the ball out of their hands. We tried to make Rodman and Salley take those outside shots.

"I give John Salley a lot of credit. He and Rodman and Bill Laimbeer, they made those outside shots."

The Pistons put the game away in the second quarter when they outscored Boston 21-10 — tying a playoff record set April 25, 1982, at Seattle when the SuperSonics held Houston to 10 points.

"We've been through a lot this year," Boston rookie Brian Shaw said. "We've faced a lot of adversity. We've been playing like this all year. It's nothing to start making excuses about now.

The Celtics, playing without Larry Bird, were led by McHale, who had 27 points.

"People say this team is old, senile, finished," Lakers coach Pat Riley said. "But we can't allow what people say to affect us.

The Lakers crushed Portland a 128-108 in their opening game at the Forum.

Magic Johnson, who led the Lakers with 30 points and 16 assists in the opener, says the Trail Blazers will play tougher on Sunday.

"Portland is the best team we've played in the first round by far," Johnson said. "They're a very dangerous team. You have to play them as if it's another (later) round."

"It's difficult being on the sidelines in a situation like that, but the guys played great without me," said Ellis, the NBA's third-leading scorer.

Fans Still Showing Faith In Pete Rose

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CINCINNATI — Pete Rose fans find it hard to believe the man whose gritty head-first slides thrilled them for a generation will end up with dirt on his name.

The revelations about Rose's gambling that have filled newspapers for the last six weeks have been largely ignored by local fans, who have a hard time believing the Cincinnati Reds manager would do anything to jeopardize his place in the game.

"Everybody says, 'Where have all the heroes gone?' But all my heroes got shot down, and they're trying to do the same thing to Pete," said Willie DeLuca, who has the bat used for Rose's final hit on display at his restaurant.

No one is pushing to change the street named for him. He still gets lusty cheers whenever he steps on the field. And media commentators have risen to his defense with each new round of reports that his baseball future is in jeopardy.

The reaction has been so sweeping that one columnist thinks it will give Cincinnati a bad name.

"America sees a town that refuses to admit that its sports heroes are human and not inherently humane," Cincinnati Post columnist Mike Bass wrote Friday. "America sees the world's biggest small town exhibiting the world's biggest small-town mentality.

"And that's a shame. This is a decent city that prides itself on its traditions, but now we look like a bunch of rubes."

Regardless of appearances, Reds' fans have a hard time being impartial when they talk about Rose.

"The connection people have with specific teams is big, and the connection with specific individuals is big, and Rose has done that," said Arthur Miller, a social psychologist at Miami University in nearby Oxford, Ohio. "People relate to him emotionally even though they've never met him. The whole thing is a big downer for people."

Since the story of the Rose gambling investigation broke, fans have gone out of their way to express support.

Rose got standing ovations at the team's spring training complex in Plant City, Fla., after the commissioner's office said it was investigating him for "serious allegations." He could be suspended if he's found to have bet on baseball.

Rose got a prolonged standing ovation on opening day in Cincinnati, and hears the familiar chants of "Pete! Pete!" every time he steps on the field at Riverfront Stadium. Radio talk shows crackle at night with the outrage of callers who wonder why the investigation is taking so long.

"The majority of phone calls are in Pete's favor," said Doug Kidd, producer of Bob Trumpy's sports talk show on WLW-AM radio in Cincinnati. "For the most part, our callers are in Pete's corner. But they're also getting tired of the investigation going on so long. They don't think it's fair in that manner. They'd like a decision.

"It really hasn't changed (in the last six weeks). I think they've become angrier that the situation keeps going on longer."

"I wish this whole investigation would get over soon so the city and Pete can concentrate on baseball," said DeLuca, who has been interviewed by baseball investigators because of his friendship with Rose. "It's going on so long; it's like Watergate or Ollie North."

Many fans see Commissioner A. Bartlett Giamatti as the villain in the drama. One restaurant displays a sign that says, "Rose Forever, Giamatti Never."

Miller, a professor of psychology at Miami, said it's not surprising that people have a hard time accepting the reports of Rose's gambling.

"I think many sports fans are used to the corruption in collegiate sports, and they're used to drug abuse in professional sports, but I think Pete Rose has stood, for millions of people, as almost a statue of purity in some sports sense," Miller said. "This whole scenerio is completely at odds with that image that he has had.

"This is just another thing that makes people cynical," he said.

Moose.....3

Abdual Rouse picked up two hits in leading Wellcome to a 5-3 victory over the Moose in the Tar Heel Little League Friday.

The Moose struck first, getting a pair of runs in the first inning. Wellcome came back with one in the second but the Moose countered that in the third for a 3-1 lead. Wellcome, however, scored twice in the fourth to tie it up.

Then, in the fifth, Wellcome pushed over the winning runs. Chad Corey doubled and Kevin Paramore reached on an error. A wild pitch allowed Corey to score and moved Paramore up. He scored when Jarrett Moore reached on an error.

Todd Mitchum led the Moose hitting with two.

Clark Construction.....8

Pat McNally had three hits to help lift the Optimists to a 10-8 victory over Bill Clark Construction Friday in the North State Little League.

Both teams scored twice in the first inning, but Clark took the lead with another in the second. The Optimists tied it up with one in the third, but Clark scored twice in its half of the inning for a 5-3 lead.

The Optimists tied it once more with two in the fifth, but Clark regained the lead with one more in the bottom of the frame, 6-5.

The Optimists then struck for five in the sixth to take a 10-6 lead. Trey Haddock reached on an error and Jonathan Clark walked. Lance Clark singled in Haddock and Aaron Dixon walked, loading the bases. Sean Gordon then hit a triple, driving in all three baserunners. Gordon scored on McNally's sacrifice fly with the final run.

Clark rallied for two in the sixth, but fell short.

Clark and Gordon each added two hits for the Optimists, while Jeffrey Allegood and Scott Selby each had two for Clark.

Coca-Cola.....S
Eveready.....4

James Ebron hit a two-run double to highlight a four-run fourth as Coca-Cola defeated Eveready, 8-4, Saturday in the North State Little League.

Eveready jumped into the initial lead, scoring three times in the opening inning. Coke came back with two in its half of the inning, then pushed over two more in the second for a 4-3 lead. Eveready tied it up with one in the fourth, making it 4-4.

But in the bottom of the inning, Coke scored four times to push over the difference. Steven Salargo led off with a walk and Brett Charlton also walked. Adrian Jones singled in Salargo and Ebron's double scored both Charlton and Jones. Kevin Pilgreen's ground out later scored Ebron.

Exchange.....25
Jarman's Auto.....3

James Willer banged out four hits and scored four runs as Exchange romped to a 25-3 victory over Jarman's Auto in the Tar Heel Little League Saturday afternoon.

Exchange took the lead in the first, scoring twice. Then, in the second, Exchange got two more to put it away.

Jason Lipscomb led off the second with a walk, advancing on a wild pitch and a passed ball. Darin Miles also walked as did Matthew Willer, loading the bases. Ben Hahn singled in Lipscomb but Miles was thrown out advancing. Willer later scored on an error.

Exchange added five in the third, 10 in the fourth, four in the fifth and two in the sixth.

Jarman's got two in the third on a home run by Matthew Pierce, then added another in the sixth.

D.J. Miles had three hits and Hahn had two to add to the Exchange hit total. No one had more than one for Jarman's.

Mother Nature Can Make Or Break Golf

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LAS VEGAS — Jim Colbert gazed across his office filled with golf memorabilia and recalled the tough, expensive lessons he's learned from the whims of Mother Nature since switching from golf pro to proprietor eight years ago.

Today, Jim Colbert Golf Inc. owns or operates 14 public and private golf courses from California to Florida, with the number expected to expand into the 20s by the end of the year.

He's rolling now, but he's learned the hard way that weather can make or break a good golf operation.

"This whole business evolves around water," Colbert said in a recent interview. "You may be plagued with too much or too little. Once a course is built, the only thing left is drainage, drainage, drainage — whether it's yours or the Lord's.

"With our courses in Louisiana, the problem is too much water. In Las Vegas, it's too little."

The exception was in 1984, when a rare Las Vegas flood swamped a course where Colbert's fledgling company had spent $1 million in remodeling work.

"It took $1.5 million and two years to fix it up," Colbert said of damage to the old county-run Winterwood Golf Course. "That was our welcome to the golf course business."

Today Colbert's company has 500 employees at courses in nine states.

Colbert credits a bad back and a decade of duty on the 10-member PGA Tour Policy Board with nudging him into the golf course business.

Colbert served with the leaders of giant corporations, learning how to build companies and golf courses. By the time he left the board in 1984, the organization had built 12 TPC (The Players Club) courses.

The courses are used as a PGA tournament course once a year, and the remainder of the year as public or private courses. They are operated by the PGA tour and "are very good profit centers for the tour," Colbert said.

"Being involved in the building of these courses peeked my interest in golf courses," Colbert recalled.

Colbert, 48, won his first pro title in 1969. By the time nagging back problems forced him to the sidelines 18 years later, he had won eight tournaments and more than $1.5 million in prize money.

"I didn't play half the time," Colbert said of a four-year span beginning in 1976, when the back problems intensified. "It looked like my career was over."

A native of Elizabeth, N.J., Colbert grew up in the Kansas City suburb of Prairie Village, Kan. and attended Kansas State University in Manhattan on a football scholarship from 1959 to 1964, honing his golf skills as well.

He called on old friend Ron Fogler, who'd run the Manhattan Country Club for 23 years, when he cut a deal with the city of Las Vegas to take over the city course in 1981.

"I'd been a touring pro," Colbert said. "I didn't know much about the operational end of things."

Fogler, who had twice served as PGA vice president, took over the management of the company, concentrating on construction and remodeling of courses. He remains a key to the company's operations, utilizing four decades of expertise in the golf course business.

The company took on its second project in 1983, Clark County's Winterwood course. It spent $1 million remodeling the course, located on the east side of Las Vegas. A disastrous flood that swamped Las Vegas in 1984 caused $1.5 million damage to the course, and left a two-year rebuilding challenge.

"The second one almost killed us," Colbert said. "We had to get No. 3 (Phoenix), No. 4 (San Dimas, Calif.) and No. 5 (Tulsa) to pay for No. 2. It was kind of like Murphy's Law took over. Whatever could go wrong did."

Geiberger and Henning Hold On To Lead In Senior Event

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

AUSTIN, Texas — Al Geiberger and Harold Henning held onto their lead in the $650,000 Legends of Golf by shooting an 8-under-par 62 in the third round Saturday.

The pair opened the tournament with consecutive 61s and have been on top since the first round.

"They're both very dangerous players," Henning said. "Two shots really isn't a lead in this game."

Charles and Devlin fired their second 61 over the 6,367-yard, par-70 Onion Creek Club course to pick up one of the strokes they dropped by shooting 64 on Friday. Their three-round total was 186.

Although Geiberger and Henning had four birdies on the front nine, Charles and Devlin made the turn at 6-under 29. That blistering pace cooled, however, as they had six straight pars.

Birdies on the 12th, 13th, 15th and 16th repaired Geiberger and Henning's lead, then Charles and Devlin birdied the last three holes.

"The first six holes on the back nine, we didn't make any birdies. It was a little frustrating," Devlin said.

Three teams were tied for third in the two-man, better ball event. Knotted at 20-under, six behind the leaders, were defending champions Orville Moody-Bruce Crampton, Billy Casper-Gay Brewer and Gardner Dickinson-Dave Hill.

Heat Duels Heat For First Time Sunday

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ARLINGTON, Texas — They live only 40 miles apart in South Texas, throw the baseball 97 miles an hour, make over $1 million a year, and are mutual admirers. On Sunday, heat meets heat.

The Texas Rangers' Nolan Ryan, who has five career no-hitters and just missed on two more this season, and the Boston Red Sox's Roger Clemens, twice a Cy Young award winner, duel for the first time.

Ryan is 2-1 and had no-hitters spoiled in the eighth and ninth innings this year in Milwaukee and Toronto.

Obtained by the Rangers after the Houston Astros let him become a free agent, Ryan has a 2.33 earned run average in 27 innings. Baseball's all-time strikeout king has 38 strikeouts to only 14 walks. Ryan is in his 21st year in the major leagues.

Clemens, playing in his fifth season, is 3-0 and has a 1.89 earned run average. He's pitched 38 innings with 34 strikeouts and only 11 walks.

Despite his age, Ryan can still deliver the smoke. He was clocked on a radar gun this year at 97 miles an hour.

However, Ryan doesn't depend on his sizzling fastball as much as he did in past. He has developed a straight change and a wicked curve. It was his devastating curve that almost carried him to a no-hitter over the Blue Jays last Sunday.

"I've had to become a pitcher instead of a thrower," Ryan said. "I can't just live on that fastball anymore. The fastball takes a toll on your arm."

Ryan said Clemens reminds him of Tom Seaver.

"I've never seen Clemens pitch in person, it's always been on TV but I compare him to Seaver," Ryan said.

"They both came out of high school not overwhelming anybody. Both went to junior college, then major schools, and were very successful. They came out, didn't spend much time in the minors, hit the major league level and never looked back."

Ryan said Clemens, like Seaver, knows how to work the ball to spots.

"Both of them had to learn how to pitch at an early age," Ryan said. "They had excellent ability and it developed with maturity."

Ryan said "I was blessed with the ability to overpower people. That was the only way I knew how to pitch when I came to the big leagues. It took me a long time to be a control pitcher."

Ryan said he won't go about pitching against Clemens any differently than he would anybody else.

"My approach is the same," he said. "I'll concentrate more on the game than the opponent. I'm realistic enough to know that I won't have the luxury of making any mistakes and coming out with a win."

Clemens, who doesn't like to talk before he pitches, has said "Ryan was my idol when I was growing up in Katy. We all wanted to be like him."

Liriano Breaks Up Another No-Hit Bid

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ANAHEIM, Calif. — In an age of specialization, Nelson Liriano of the Toronto Blue Jays may be on to something really unique after breaking up a no-hitter in the ninth inning for the second time in less than a week.

Liriano hit a pinch double on Kirk McCaskill's first pitch of the ninth inning Friday night to keep the California Angels right-hander from recording his first no-hitter.

"We had our secret weapon," Jesse Barfield said. "He broke up two no-hitters this week."

McKeel Leads Rams To 5-0 EPC Victory

PIKEVILLE — Greene Central's Walt McKeel tossed a one-hit shutout as the Rams gained a 5-0 baseball victory in the Eastern Plains Conference Friday night.

The victory gave Greene Central at least a two-game lead over the rest of the pack in the chase for the EPC championship.

McKeel, who was making his first appearance on the mound since early in the season, was on top of the Falcons the whole way. The lone hit off him was a liner off the glove of the Ram first baseman by Freddie Gooding in the third inning. McKeel struck out nine and walked three in going the distance.

"We were down in our pitching and decided to use Walt," Coach Jim Fulghum said. "After that performance, we'll certainly consider using him again."

Greene Central took the lead in the second inning, scoring twice. Jimmy Hardy singled and Ryan Murphy reached on a fielder's choice. Brad Kearney walked and Reggie Hill singled, driving in both Hardy and Murphy.

The other three came in the fourth. Hardy singled and moved up on a passed ball. Murphy singled him in. Hill then closed it out with a two-run homer.

Hill, Murphy and Hardy each had two hits to lead the Ram attack.

Greene Central is not 6-0 in the league and 10-4 overall. Aycock drops to 3-3 in conference play. The Rams play at home against non-conference foe North Lenoir on Monday.

Jaguar Netters Sweep Doubles To Gain Win

FARMVILLE — Farmville Central finished off a rain-delayed tennis match with Greene Central Friday, sweeping the doubles to gain a 7-2 victory.

The match had been rained out earlier in the week with Farmville holding a 4-2 lead after the singles matches.

But the Jags took all three of the doubles matches to capture the victory Friday.

Farmville is now 6-6 overall and 5-2 in Eastern Plains play. Greene Central falls to 5-11 overall, 2-5 in the league. The Jaguars host league-leading C.B. Aycock on Tuesday.

Doubles: Chris Wade/Tommy Murphy (FC) d. Todd Murphrey/Johnny Rouse, 8-3; Matt Mills/John Wade (FC) d. Britt Hardy/Howie Lee, 8-5; Darrell Case/Carney Hedgepeth (FC) d. Eddie Baldree/Scott Vinson, 9-8 (8-6).

Peebles' NFL Stock May Be Moving Up

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TAMPA, Fla. — For Danny Peebles, second-round draft pick of the Tampa Bay Buccaneers, the choice between competing in the Olympics or preparing for a career in pro football was strictly business.

The former Atlantic Coast Conference sprint champion considered himself a good bet for a trip to Seoul last fall. Instead, he elected to put one dream on hold and pursue another that might pay him big money for years.

So far, Peebles appears to have played his cards right. By concentrating on football, he figures he increased his stock for the NFL while still holding a trump — the option of taking up sprinting again in time to seek a spot on the 1992 Olympic team.

"I'd been running since I was seven years old and kind of burned up everything I wanted to accomplish in track at that time," Peebles said after the Bucs made him the 33rd pick overall in last week's draft.

"The reason I gave it up is so days like this could come true," he said. "Pro football — that's what I've wanted to do all my life."

Tampa Bay coach Ray Perkins envisions Peebles, a wide receiver with 4.43 speed in the 40-yard dash, as the deep threat the Bucs have lacked the past six years.

The team's starting receivers, Bruce Hill and Mark Carrier, combined for 115 catches, 2,010 yards and 14 touchdowns in 1988, but neither is the speedy, game-breaking receiver Perkins thinks Peebles can be.

"If you got a guy that can really burn ... well, it does so much for you," the coach said during a two-day mini-camp for draft choices and free agents. "Speed kills. All Peebles has got to learn is how to use it, and how to control it."

Shaking the image of being a track man in a football uniform will take hard work. Peebles caught 65 passes for 1,086 yards and eight touchdowns at North Carolina State, but doesn't feel he reached his potential because track kept him away from spring football practice.

An Olympic berth beckoned last year in the 200 meters, but Peebles declined an invitation to attend the Trials and focused on getting ready for his senior year in football.

Playing on the side opposite Nasrallah Worthen, the Wolfpack's leading receiver, Peebles caught 23 passes for 436 yards and two touchdowns last season.

"I think what helped me the most was that for the first time in my career I became more consistent and I became more confident as a receiver because I was used more often than I've been in the past," he said.

"The main thing is finally playing football all year round, I've become so much better," he said. "I'm two totally different players. I'm that much more confident and that much more consistent."

Peebles attracted the attention of the Bucs and other NFL teams at the Senior Bowl. In the weeks leading up to the draft, Perkins met with the 5-foot-11, 170-pound speedster in Raleigh, N.C., and they liked what they found in each other.

"We have so much in common," said Peebles, who is married, has two children and will earn his second degree from North Carolina State in May.

"We got married at about the same time. We had the same number of children the same number of years in school," he added. "It was pretty spooky when we met because we're about the same height and weight and he played the same position.

New Commissioner Will Need Help

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SEATTLE — New Seattle Seahawks president Tom Flores says one man is going to be able to take over for NFL commissioner Pete Rozelle, but he feels that man will need a lot of help.

Rozelle announced his resignation at a league owners meeting in Palm Desert, Calif., March 22.

"I think it has to be a one-man commissioner, but I also think there has to be one or two more people that help him," Flores said in an interview. "One guy can't do it all. It will burn you out. That's why you have to respect Pete for doing it as long as he did. The game has gotten so big; moneywise and powerwise."

Rozelle, 63, served as the league's commissioner for 29 years. The NFL is looking for Rozelle's replacement, no small task considering where the league was when Rozelle took over in 1960and where it is today.

Many people were surprised by Rozelle's retirement announcement. Flores, former head coach of the Los Angeles Raiders who was in Palm Desert, wasn't.

"Twenty-nine years," he said. "That's a long time trying to keep everybody happy.

"For the league to come this far, it has taken a strong man to hold it together. All the negotiations and the TV contracts will wear a guy down. You could visibly see he was getting tired."

In 1966, the NFL merged with the old American Football League. Flores was still a player then.

A quarterback with Buffalo, Flores also was the player representative for the AFL. Along with Jack Kemp, also a Buffalo quarterback and president of the AFL Players Association, Flores sat down with AFL owners to try to work out a contract before the final merger.

"Looking back, it was amazing," said Flores. "There were eight people in the room and we were negotating this big contract."

One of the eight, he said, was Rozelle, who had been picked to be commissioner of both leagues after the merger. Rozelle was merely an observer, but a powerful one, as Flores found out.

"We had a particular problem we were hung up on," he said. "By today's standards, it was ludicrous, something like a $200,000 problem. Well, Pete worked it out right away. He said we can do this and we can do that. He did it, too."

Flores was greatly impressed. He became friends with Rozelle although he worked for Raiders' owner Al Davis, a longtime Rozelle nemesis who moved his team from Oakland to Los Angeles in spite of Rozelle's objections. Flores remained impressed by Rozelle's leadership in later years.

After Rozelle resigned, each club was asked to submit the name of a candidate — or candidates — to succeed Rozelle.

Flores said he submitted more than one name. Those names are confidential, he said. He said he did not submit his own name.

"Me?" he said with a laugh. "Hey, I have a job and I'm enjoying it. You spend some time on this job. But that one is really an all-consuming job. I don't think it's possible to keep everybody happy, but you have to keep almost everybody happy."

Flores was named by Seahawks' owner Kenneth Behring to be Seattle's president and general manager after Behring fired Mike McCormack.

Flores took part in his first NFL draft as the Seahawks' president and general manager last Sunday and Monday.

Now, he will sit down with Frank Fuhrer of Pittsburgh, agent for Seahawks' first-round draft choice Andy Heck, and negotiate his first contract. He said he's looking forward to the challenge. The All-America offensive tackle from national champion Notre Dame won't come cheap.

Flores was out of professional football last season after resigning as the Raiders' coach. He has said he has no aspirations of replacing Coach Chuck Knox, who has three years left on his contract.

"I'm adjusting to my new job," Flores said with a smile. "I like what I'm doing."

Rampants Nip Knights, 6-3

Strong Pitching, Clutch Hitting Key Big East Win

By Tim Chandler
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Taking everyone's best shot is one of the keys to being a successful ranked team.

Rose High School's baseball team once again proved worth of its number eight ranking in the USA Today Friday by holding off a stubborn Northern Nash team and recording a 6-3 win.

The Rampants battled back from an early 1-0 deficit and later broke open a 3-3 game to improve to 15-0 overall and 8-0 in the Big East Conference. The Knights slipped to 7-7 and 3-4.

"This was one of our best efforts of the year," Northern Nash coach Rod Ramsey said. "We didn't swing the sticks the way we should have, but we had a good effort."

One of the reasons the Knights had trouble with the bats was the pitching of Rose ace Jamie Brewington. Brewington went the distance on the mound, giving up six hits, striking out 13 and walking five.

"This is the first game that I've really been pumped up," Brewington said. "It (the speed he was throwing) kind of shocked me."

The Knights also got a good pitching performance as Marcus Nel went the distance and gave up only six hits in the losing effort.

"Marcus battled well for us all night," Ramsey said. "We knew with their power he'd have to keep the pitches low and he did. Marcus is a senior and he wanted to win this game badly and he battled them for every out."

Northern Nash broke out to the lead early in the game with a run in the top of the second inning. Earl Mills belted a one-out single, stole second and then scored on a double to left by Neal.

The Rampants came back in the bottom half of the third and seemed to seize control of the game with a trio of runs to move ahead 3-1.

Heath Clark opened the inning by reaching on a error. Tim Moore then reached and advanced Clark to second with a tailor-made bunt down the third-base line. Following a sacrifice bunt by Chris Christopher, which moved Clark to third and Moore to second, David Leisten ripped a single to left to score Clark and move Moore to third.

Moore then brought home the second run of the inning when he and Leisten pulled a double steal.

After Leisten had stolen third, he scored on a sacrifice fly by Maurice Hines.

Kelsey Evans and Terrell Westry both reached on walks and scored later on a two-run single to left by David Griffin.

The tie didn't last long, however, as Walter Gatlin blasted a solo shot to center in the bottom half of the frame to give the Rampants a 4-3 cushion.

Rose added two more in the fifth as Moore and Christopher led off with singles and scored following a two-run hit to left by Leisten.

"We needed this kind of intense game," Rose coach Ronald Vincent said. "We didn't play bad, it was just that Northern Nash didn't give us anything, we had to work for everything we got. And that's the kind of play we're going to see later."

Tom Morris

When Richt began his college football career as a quarterback at the University of Miami in 1978 he had the unfortunate luck of arriving on campus about the same time as Jim Kelly, who went on to star for four years before moving on the USFL and then the NFL's Buffalo Bills.

"He played a lot," Richt said. "I watched."

But since then, fate has been kinder to Richt, who turned to coaching once his playing days were over.

When Bill Lewis replaced Baker at ECU in December, he asked Richt to become the offensive coordinator, and the Boca Raton, Fla. native found himself following Baker on the professional ladder once again.

"I'm kind of following Art around a little bit," Richt joked as he relaxed in his office at Scales Field House earlier this week. "It probably couldn't have worked out any better for me."

During his time at FSU, Richt helped develop quarterbacks Danny McManus, Chip Ferguson and Peter Tom Willis as the Seminoles achieved a four-year record of 38-9-1 with trips to four straight bowl games.

And it was his success at FSU that attracted Lewis, who announced at his first press conference that he wanted to incorporate a pass-oriented, I-formation offense. In fact, Lewis specifically mentioned FSU's offense as an example.

Richt is typical of the attitude of Lewis' staff. He's young and aggressive, but also a realist in terms of the challenges he and his fellow coaches face in trying to bring a winner to Greenville.

Richt finds the situation at ECU reminiscent of his first year at Miami.

A southern independent just like ECU, the Hurricanes were going nowhere under Lou Saban in the mid-1970s before coach Howard Schnellenberger arrived. There were negatives in terms of scheduling, financing and commitment, but there were also positives.

But since that time, things have turned around completely for the Hurricanes. Granted, it's unfair to compare the two schools because they have different locales, different resources and different strengths. But the bottom line was there were the same lingering doubts during Miami's down days that have hovered around ECU in recent years.

"Oh yeah, those are all things you have to look at," Richt said. "Do you have the means to take the program where you want it to go? I really felt like from what coach Lewis had told me, he convinced me we would have the means to get done what we need to get done.

"It was kind of a similar situation to what it was when I went to Miami as a player," he added. "They had come off a couple of 3-8 years. People were seeming to want to make a commitment. It just reminded me of that situation."

Another factor for Richt was the NCAA's 25-scholarship limit per Division I school. That effectively kept the talent pool open to more than just the established schools.

"There are so many quality players running around," he said. "You take the state of Florida. There might be 250 division I players. If the three main schools take 25, that's only 75. That's happening all over the country."

This is the first full-time position Richt has had in coaching and he knows full well there's a great deal of difference between ECU and some of the schools on the Pirates' schedule.

"It's not going to look like a Florida State or a Miami right off the bat," he said. "It's going to take time to grow with the players."

After graduating from Miami with a degree in finance, going into coaching was the most distant thing from Richt's mind, but sparked in part by a five-week stint in the Miami Dolphins' pre-season camp in 1984, he began to consider that option.

"I didn't make it, but I had a real positive experience with Don Shula and his son, Dave Shula," Richt said. "They're fine coaches and fine people. It just seemed like a good way to go."

But, in fact, his offensive education began long before that. True, he didn't play all that much as a backup to Kelly during his playing days with the Hurricanes, but he did start five games his senior year when Kelly was hurt. Plus, he got to watch one of the nation's top quarterbacks firsthand.

"The first true understanding of the passing game I had came from working with coach Schnellenberger," he said. "And Earl Morrall was my quarterback coach for four years. He was a great pro, 21 years in the league. I was real fortunate."

When he moved on to FSU in 1985, he was put in the unusual circumstance of being a graduate assistant with full-time responsibility as the quarterback coach. It was heady stuff for a 24-year old.

"The biggest lesson I learned is there's more than one way to skin a cat," he said. "I was used to doing things a certain way, being a player at Miami. (By) going to Florida State, (I was able to see) how people can go about things a different way and be highly successful.

"The emphasis at Florida State was more of a play-action type passing scheme, whereas the emphasis at Miami was more of straight drop-back passing scheme. Both were highly successful, and both teams were highly successful," Richt said.

"I just learned the value of the play-action passing game, but I also learned a lot about how to handle people, how to handle players."

Richt has just completed his first spring practice with the Pirates, and he's had the dual role of switching the offense from Baker's run-and-shoot scheme to the I-formation attack he utilized while at FSU while also evaluating a group of six new quarterbacks.

"We did have six guys and gave them all a lot of reps," he said. "We played more QBs than I would have liked, but I felt we needed to be as fair to those guys as we possibly could."

Travis Hunter emerged as number one on the depth chart, followed by Chad Grier and Jeff Blake at number two and then Charlie Libretto.

Quarterback is such a focal point in football, and with only four weeks to get to know and evaluate each prospect, it makes it tough for Richt to rank his signal callers.

In Hunter, he's got an experienced quarterback who is a dangerous runner, but only a so-so passer. In Grier, a transfer from Richmond, he's got a strong-armed, drop-back passer who struggled early in the spring before coming on strong at the end. Blake is almost a combination of the two, a good passer who can also run. Another factor is Libretto, who started with Hunter on and off the last three years.

"Travis did a good job of picking up the offense," Richt said. "His strength is his ability to make something happen with his feet.

"Chad, when you look at him, he has the size and the strength. He's more of what you would draw up if you wanted to put somebody into this offense. He struggled early in the spring ... but he came on strong at the end there. I started to see things that excited me.

"Blake may be the most talented of them all. He's going to be a good quarterback," Richt added. "The only variable is when. Charlie didn't have a great spring. He was a little disappointed as far as the depth chart.

"I don't know what happened to him in the past. He's one of those guys who was probably thrown in there too early as a freshman, and that can hurt your confidence. Without a doubt, he's a guy I would feel comfortable with in a ball game."

Pirates Sweep Pair From Mt. Olive

Jake Jocobs Throws Second Consecutive No-Hitter In Nightcap Win

By Woody Peele
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Jake Jacobs put his name firmly and lastingly into the East Carolina record books Friday night, throwing his second consecutive no-hit shutout as the Pirates swept a pair of games from Mount Olive College, 9-2 and 2-0.

Jacobs tossed the nightcap for the Pirates. It was his first outing since he threw a shaky no-hitter against Atlantic Christian last Sunday.

This time, there were no questions. Although he walked five batters on the evening, he did not come close to allowing a hit. Those five, plus one batter who plainly reached on an error, arrived on base as Jacobs accomplished his second consecutive no-hit gem.

"This one means a whole lot more to me than the first because these are guys from my home town and my dad is a coach on the team," Jacobs said. "I was a whole lot more nervous about it, too."

Jacobs, who did his high school pitching at Southern Wayne, just outside Mount Olive, had several former teammates on the field against him. His father also serves as an assistant coach for the Trojans.

And dad's reaction? "He just told me that I pitched well," Jacobs said.

"I thought I had better stuff tonight that I did last time," he said. "I was just trying to throw too fine (when he walked batters). Most of the time I was ahead of them and let them go. I was trying to throw my slider too hard."

Coach Gary Overton added that he felt Jacobs' slider was his most effective pitch on the night. "He threw a heck of a baseball game," Overton said.

But what pleased him most on the night, he said, was the way the Pirates bounced back after falling behind in the first game. The Pirates went down 2-0 to the Trojans in the fourth inning of the opener, but rallied quickly to score six times in the bottom of the frame.

Jacobs' performance overshadowed another fine outing by John White, who, like Jacobs, upped his record to 7-1 with his win in the first game. White, shaky at the start, settled down to throw a four-hitter, walking three and striking out two in six innings of work. David Willis came on to pitch the final inning of the game.

White walked the first two batters he faced on eight straight pitches, but got stronger as the night went along. Only in the fourth was he touched for runs, and in the final two frames, he retired the side in order.

In the fourth, however, the Trojans got their only action of the night. Todd Miller led off with a double and moved to third on an out. Jeff O'Dell singled him in. O'Dell also moved up on an out and scored on another double, this by Jerrell Johnson.

The Pirates wasted little time in getting on their feet after that, scoring six times in the bottom of the inning. Chris Cauble led off with a walk and Steve Godin doubled. Kevin Riggs grounded out, but that scored Cauble. Mike Andrews beat out an infield hit, scoring Godin with the tying run. David Ritchie walked and John Thomas singled to right, scoring Andrews. An error on the play moved Thomas to second, and both he and Ritchie scored on John Adams' single to right. Tommy Eason's grounder nailed Adams at second, but courtesy runner David Daniels stole second and scored when Calvin Brown reached on an error.

Brown suffered a knee injury on the play and had to leave the game. His status was uncertain Friday night.

The Pirates added three more in the sixth. Thomas opened with a double and Adams followed with his fifth home run of the season. Glen Beck then singled and Cauble walked. Riggs singled to drive in Beck.

Riggs, who went three for four to lead the Pirate hitting, has had one of the hotter bats of recent days for the Pirates, hitting .340 through the doubleheader.

"I'm just happy to be in there," he said, "and I want to make the most of it. I've just been working hard to improve my game." Riggs, who got some early playing time, but then sat on the bench for much of the mid-part of the season, said that nothing is certain in holding his position now. "I just have to do the job every day."

Also of note in the first game, Thomas stole second base in the third inning, his 23rd of the year, tying the school record set in 1977 by Eddie Gates.

In addition to Riggs' three hits, Adams and Thomas each had two. Jerrell Johnson had two for Mount Olive.

In the second game, the story was Jacobs, who did have his shaky moments at times. Mount Olive put runners in scoring position three times, advancing one to third base. That came in the third when Brack Hardee walked and courtesy runner Charlie Long stole second and moved to third on the second out of the inning. But Jacobs struck out the next batter to end the inning.

Things were tough for the Pirates, who had little success against Trojan hurler Tommy Retzlaff, who scattered five hits.

The other run came in the fifth. Ritchie walked and stole second, scoring on a hit by Adams.

Despite the twin loss, which dropped the Trojans to 16-14, Mount Olive coach Carl Lancaster was not at all upset.

"I'm really pleased for my guys," he said. "We knew coming in that we would have to play an outstanding game to have a chance. We just wanted to be respectable and maybe get a break and win a game. But we saw their number one and number two pitchers and Jake no-hits us. Still, I'm pleased with our pitching, to get what we got.

"I'm not disappointed. They have an outstanding club, solid everywhere. It can only help us to know that we can play this well against a team like them as we go into our conference tournament," Lancaster added.

The wins boost the Pirates to 31-7 on the year. They were to return to action Saturday night against N.C. State, then will be off until Friday when they play host to Norfolk State.

Conine Island DU Project Dedicated

A 3,748 acre tract of prime waterfowl wintering habitat was dedicated this past Monday at Conine Island, located in Bertie County. The Conine Island project was the result of a joint effort between Ducks Unlimited, the North Carolina Wildlife Resources Commission, and the North Carolina Nature Conservatory. The $2 million project was assisted by Ducks Unlimited's MARSH (Matching Aid to Support States Habitat) with an appropriation of $200,000 and an additional $15,000 from three DU life sponsors. The remaining balance was financed by the Wildlife Resources Commission.

The Conine Island tract is located two miles northeast of Williamston and includes nine miles of Roanoke River frontage. The area consists of a variety of swamp-woodland habitat including cypress-gum swamp and hardwood flats. The area is one of the prime wood duck production sites in Eastern North Carolina and will also provide vital habitat for black ducks and mallards. There are also abundant populations of white-tailed deer and wild turkey in the area. Controlled public hunting will be allowed on the property in accordance with regulations established by the Wildlife Commission. There will also be opportunities for bird watching activities and nature study.

DU's MARSH program was established in 1985 to make up 7.5 percent of the moneys raised by each state's DU chapters available for local conservation efforts. The funds are directed to state wildlife agencies to assist in the acquisition and development of vital wetland habitat.

The MARSH program is involved in 100 completed projects in the United States with 26 of those located in the Atlantic Flyway. Conine Island is the third completed MARSH project in North Carolina. The two other projects are located at Mackay Island National Wildlife Refuge and Hunting Creek Swamp in Davie County.

North Carolina, with almost 15,000 DU members, ranked seventh in the nation in 1988 after raising almost $1.8 million in support of the organization's North American conservation programs. North Carolina's 109 sponsor events was first in the country, with its 2671 sponsor member total ranking second only to Wisconsin.

Water Temperature and Bass Fishing

Catching bass consistently during this time of year often proves to be a difficult task to the average angler. With all of the changing water levels and fluctuations in temperature in our area recently locating and enticing a bass to strike depend on an angler knowing what a fish's reaction will be to these changing conditions. One of the conditions that should play a key role in achieving success during this time of year relates to the temperature of the water. Only a difference of three or four degrees in water temperature can make a difference in the activity level of a bass. Usually, during this time of year, it is better to fish in the mid-afternoon hours of the day because the sun has had a chance to warm up the water for several hours. This will remain to be the case until the days when the temperature gets too hot during the summer months.

According to a study conducted on water temperatures and their effects on bass, the following was concluded: below 45 degrees, bass are sluggish and difficult to catch (jigging and live bait work best); between 45 and 65 degrees bass are more active but still require slow, careful lure presentations (worms, slow spinners, jigs); between 65 and 85 degrees, bass are at their peak activity level and fast and furious lure retrievals work best (Buzz baits and top water minnow imitations); and above 85 degrees, bass begin to slow down and become less active again (plastic worms, jigs, and natural bait).

With the warmer temperatures that the area has experienced over the last week, look for bass holding closer to the shallows, especially along potential spawning locations. There have already been a number of bass spotted "fanning" out sites.

Coastal Report

Last week was the best week of the season for the Charter fleets from Manteo, Oregon Inlet, and Hatteras areas. All reported good catches of Yellow Fin Tuna and a few dolphin and kings.

Some of the tuna weighed up to 125 pounds. Boats heading out from the Morehead area are reporting good catches of king mackerel but are still having to go out near the 20 mile area.

Trout Fishing Is Good In Minnesota

Anglers Don't Have To Travel To Get Rocky Mountain Experience

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

GRAND FORKS, N.D. — Imagine having portions of a pristine, spring-fed stream all to yourself, with only an occasional wood duck or eagle to keep you company.

Gently flowing water laps against the middle of your chest-waders as you cast a small spinner toward an undercut bank.

Finally, a wily 13-inch brown trout takes the bait. A two-minute battle with the leaping fish ends as you release it back into the depths.

No doubt this type of fishing conjures up images of classic Rocky Mountain trout fishing. But anglers don't have to travel to Montana to experience quality trout fishing because four streams in northwestern Minnesota are just waiting to be fished.

Best of all, anglers who take advantage of stream trout fishing now have a lot of water to themselves while the rest of the fishing fraternity is waiting to reel in walleyes in mid-May.

The stream trout opener in Minnesota kicked off Saturday, April 15. Fishing in the four major streams, however, was poor to mediocre. High water and silt from runoff, plus cold water (between 33 degrees and 39 degrees on some streams), kept most fish inactive. According to fisheries managers for the Minnesota Department of Natural Resources, the best fishing is about now or another week away — plenty of time before the general fishing opener to don a pair of waders and fish for trout.

— The Straight River east of Park Rapids flows for 15 miles. It is one of the premier brown trout streams in Minnesota. The Straight produced a 5-pound, 5-ounce wallhanger and a 3-pound, 8-ounce brown trout on the opening weekend.

The average brown trout is from 9 to 13 inches long. The Straight's upper end near Osage presents the best fishing potential, although most of the river is fishable.

— The Kabekona River is a 15-mile brook trout stream southeast of Itasca State Park. Kabekona isn't as accessible as the Straight. Many anglers enter the river where it crosses U.S. Highway 71 near the intersection with Minnesota Highway 200. Brookies run from 7 to 11 inches long. The lower end of the river provides the best fishing for brookies.

— The Clearwater River west of Bemidji offers anglers a crack at catching both browns and rainbow trout along its spring-fed waters. Most of the river's 12 miles are fishable. The river is easily accessible from points north of U.S. Highway 2.

— Sucker Brook, known for its brook trout, is a four-mile stream that flows near the headwaters of the Mississippi River northwest of Itasca State Park. Although access to the stream is more limited than it is to the other three streams, the two best access points are off Minnesota 200 northwest of the park.

Trout populations in Sucker Book, Straight River and Kabekona River are self-sustaining, according to fisheries managers for the DNR. But the DNR has stocked the streams regularly in the past. Last year, 4,000 yearling browns were stocked in the Straight, and 500 brook trout were added to Kabekona. Sucker Brook will receive some brookies during the next two years, but DNR officials hope the stream can maintain a natural population after that.

Annual stocking will take place only on the Clearwater in the future. The DNR hopes to stock 1,500 browns and 1,500 rainbows as soon as the water temperature hits 50 degrees.

"The Clearwater is pretty much managed as a put-and-take stream," said the DNR's Roy Johannes, area fisheries manager in Bemidji. For April and May, there are browns left over from last year.

Habitat improvement, such as removing beaver dams to improve water flow, is an annual task for the DNR on all four trout streams. Crews annually clear brush along stream banks to improve angler access and fishing.

Anglers are required to have a current trout and salmon stamp in their possession while fishing in any designated trout stream.

Spring Thaw For Soviet Athletes Looking West

By Brian Friedman
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

This spring has seen perhaps the greatest thaw for Soviet athletes seeking their fortune, fame and even a little freedom in the sports arenas of North America.

There's a Soviet hockey player skating for the Calgary Flames in the NHL, tennis star Natalia Zvereva signed with a U.S. agent and boldly criticized her nation's tennis federation over her prize money, progress has been made toward bringing a Soviet player to the NBA next season, and an agreement was reached for 10 Soviet boxers to fight in the United States this year.

Ten years ago, Soviet athletes, ballet stars and chess players who wanted such economic freedom had little choice but to defect. Now they're hiring U.S. agents to market their talents — but keeping their Soviet citizenship and the right to compete for their homeland in the Olympics.

Mikhail S. Gorbachev's reforms have cleared the path to the West for the elite athletes, who before now have played as amateurs in name only as members of the Red Army, or on factory-sponsored teams playing in backwater rinks and courts.

As they turn pro and compete in non-communist countries, however, some of the athletes are exerting their independence and trying to fight a "feudal" Soviet sports system that keeps most of their earnings.

One who is testing the limits of individual freedom — and "glasnost" — is Zvereva. For the 18-year-old tennis star from Minsk, the symbol of success is a "a red Mercedes-Benz, a big one."

At first glance, she certainly seems to be able to afford it. Ranked No. 8 in the world and No. 1 in the Soviet Union, Zvereva earned more than $500,000 since turning pro a year ago.

But she has seen little of the money because the Soviet Tennis Federation — as it does with all its players — has been taking her tournament checks for itself and paying her a weekly stipend of about $1,000.

On April 9, a frustrated and demoralized Zvereva went public. After losing to Steffi Graf at a tournament at Hilton Head Island, S.C., Zvereva said in a televised courtside interview that her $24,000 consolation check was "just a piece of paper," and that she wanted the federation to give her the money she had just won. Later that week, she announced she had signed with the Washington, D.C.-based sports management firm ProServ and would no longer turn over her checks to the federation.

That decision has put her in the middle of a dispute between ProServ and International Management Group of Cleveland, another sports agency that took over the Soviet account from ProServ in January. Both agencies now consider Zvereva their client.

Zvereva, who does not want to defect, has said if the federation refuses to giver her a percentage of her winnings, she'll quit tennis and go back to school.

She returned to the Soviet Union with her coach and father, Marat, to discuss the dispute with Goskomsport, the Soviet Sports Committee. The Tass news agency said the ProServ contract has been put on hold, and Zvereva's father said she would contact experts to study her new contract, with the final decision to be hashed out among Goskomsport, ProServ and IMG.

"Not a word was said about any sanctions against my probably not-very-well-considered step," a contrite Zvereva told Tass last Wednesday. Meanwhile, she said she plans to continue international competition.

"The system of financial incentives for Soviet sportsmen of high qualification performing abroad is quite imperfect now," admitted Yuri Portnov of Goskomsport.

After Zvereva signed with ProServ, Portnov said he believed she acted hastily in breaking away from the federation.

"Zvereva is now worth a good deal, in the literal and figurative sense of the word," said Olga Morozova, head coach of the women's team, adding that the most important thing was to keep Zvereva playing for the Soviet Union.

Garri Kasparov, the world chess champion from the Soviet Union, knows how Zvereva feels and strongly supports her. For years, he's been attacking the Soviet sports establishment, which oversees chess, and he calls it "a feudal system" for the way it pays its players.

At the 1987 world chess championship in Seville, Spain, where Kasparov was supposed to receive half of a $1.85 million purse, he said he received only "$100,000 and the same again in rubles."

"I think what is happening now in sport is very important," Kasparov said in an interview. "It is connected to people's fight for rights in our country, the fight to be able to make decisions for yourself."

The Soviets are afraid more of their athletes will become independent, he said.

"Of course they don't like it." Kasparov said. "They are afraid it could become like a chain reaction."

The rumblings began almost immediately. On April 23, the top Soviet male tennis player, Andrei Chesnokov, said after winning a tournament in Nice, France, that he wanted to do "the same thing as Zvereva."

Chesnokov, 23, of Moscow, said he has won more than $500,000, but has "received maybe $10,000 to $12,000. When I won $59,500 at Orlando, I got 496 bucks from the federation. Do you believe that? $496!"

Hockey player Sergei Priakin has had a somewhat easier time in his pioneering role as the ice breaker in U.S.-Soviet sports relations.

The 25-year-old right wing for the Calgary Flames on March 31 became the first Soviet athlete to play for a professional team in North America. If the Flames continue winning in the Stanley Cup playoffs, his name soon could be etched on hockey's holiest grail, the Stanley Cup.

He has been used sparingly because of the Flames' talented lineup, and probably won't be a real factor until next season. Calgary president and general manager Cliff Fletcher has said Priakin apparently was allowed to play in the West to "test the waters" before allowing other Soviets to do so, although he and others in the NHL don't believe there will be a mass influx.

The only sour note in Priakin's debut came when Dale Hawerchuk of the Winnipeg Jets said he "was not crazy about" a Soviet playing in the NHL. "I hope they're not taking jobs away from North Americans."

Star defenseman Viacheslav Fetisov, who was drafted by the New Jersey Devils, says he and two other players on the Soviets' top unit — center Igor Larionov and left wing Sergei Makarov — were promised word of their possible move to the West by April 13.

"But we didn't get any news at all and we still don't know anything," Fetisov said last week at the World Championships in Stockholm. "Now our team officials tell us that Moscow will inform us by telephone."

Fetisov was recalled to the Soviet team after being dropped from the squad following an argument with head coach Viktor Tikhonov.

"I don't know what will happen after the world championships," he told a a Swedish newspaper before the tournament began. "It might be the salt mine as well as North America."

The Soviet Ice Hockey Federation reportedly has agreed to a three-year, $1.5 million contract with the Devils for Fetisov, who would receive $1,200 a month.

"I'd like to play in the NHL," said Fetisov, who turned 31 in April. "But I want to do it now because time is passing." Devils general manager Lou Lamoriello left Stockholm on Thursday without any comment on whether an agreeement had been reached.

Makarov hopes to join Priakin on the Flames next season. Larionov reportedly has signed with a Finnish Hockey League team in Helsinki, although The Toronto Globe and Mail said Thursday he has reached an agreement to play for the Vancouver Canucks. Vancouver president Pat Quinn denied the report.

Progress has been slower to bring Soviet basketball players into the NBA, although there were encouraging signs in April.

One obstacle was cleared when FIBA, the international basketball federation, voted to allow professional players to compete the Olympics. The move would enable to Soviet players to compete in the NBA and retain their Olympic eligibility, something Soviet sports officials insist upon.

Point guard Sharunas Marchulenis, a member of the Lithuanian club Statiba Vilnius and the Soviets' gold medal team in the Seoul Olympics, is negotiating with the Golden State Warriors and could be playing for them next season.

Marchulenis told the Soviet newspaper Izvestia that Don Nelson, the coach and general manager of the Warriors, had made him an offer. A spokeswoman for the Warriors would only say: "We are working on the situation and we have no comment."

Marchulenis told Izvestia the Lithuanian Council of Ministers approved of his desire to play in the United States, and that commercial arrangements for his contract would be worked out by his club and the state-run Lithuanian export firm Litimpex.

Talks have resumed with Marchulenis' teammate, 7-3¼ center Arvidas Sabonis, and the Portland Trail Blazers, said Portland president Harry Glickman, although he added that there was "nothing new" to report.

"We were told last year that Sabonis is the greatest hero in Lithuania, and they are very reluctant to lose their best player," Glickman said. He added that he didn't believe there would be more progress until after the European championships in June.

An agreement was signed in April to bring six Soviet boxers, a force in Olympic and amateur competition, to the United States for training and professional bouts.

Lou Falcigno, a New York promoter, said the boxers would be selected by October, and two of its likely members will be Alexander Miroshinchenko and Rahat Umerbekov. Among the trainers being mentioned for the Soviet fighters have been Tommy Gallagher, Angelo Dundee, Richie Giachetti and Kevin Rooney. Neither the Soviets, who say they have 277,000 boxers in their country, nor Falcigno would discuss the financial arrangements.

There are some situations that crop up again and again. A veteran declarer doesn't really think about how to handle them—the play is automatic. Consider this hand.

North-South were using a 21-22 range for their two no trump openings. North's three clubs was a probe for a possible major-suit fit, and when a possible heart fit went aglimmering, he leaped straight to what he expected to make.

West led the top of his spade sequence. Declarer could count 11 fast tricks, and the obvious place to look for the 12th would seem to be the club finesse. However, there is an additional chance: A 3-3 heart split will produce a third trick in that suit.

How can declarer combine his chances? If he takes the club finesse and it loses, he cannot give up a heart. If he plays three rounds of hearts, he stands to lose two tricks if the suit breaks 4-2, according to the percentages.

The solution is simple enough. At trick two declarer should lead a low heart and duck it in the other hand, surrendering a trick when the opponents can do him no harm.

Now declarer can test hearts without running the risk of going down. He can win any return and cash the ace and king of hearts. If the suit divides evenly, the long heart is set up for the fulfilling trick. If one of the defenders shows out on the third heart, declarer can still fall back on the club finesse for his fulfilling trick. Two chances are much better than one.

Fannie Mae Tests Loans For Elderly

LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — One of the nation's major buyers of home mortgages announced this past week that it is experimenting with new types of loans that could increase housing options for senior citizens.

The Federal National Mortgage Association (Fannie Mae), which buys mortgages from lenders and packages them for investors, said it has adopted new underwriting standards that will make it easier for senior citizens to borrow money in some instances.

"The elderly have very unique and different housing needs, and I think as a nation we need to begin looking at them in a slightly different light," said William R. Maloni, a Fannie Mae senior vice president.

One of the new arrangements would make it easier for borrowers 62 or older to build additions or "accessory apartments" to existing single-family houses. Fannie Mae has increased the total debt elderly homeowners can assume when they refinance houses in those situations from 75 percent to 90 percent of the house's value.

The self-contained apartments could be rented to generate income for the elderly homeowner or used to house an adult child of the homeowner. Alternatively, adults could use the self-contained apartments to house their parents, Fannie Mae said.

In a variation on the "accessory apartment" idea, Fannie Mae increased the indebtedness homeowners could assume from 75 percent of a house's value to 90 percent so they could build a separate cottage on their property for an elderly relative.

Fannie Mae said it also will increase the borrowing power of senior citizens who take on boarders in their homes. The rent paid by the boarders could be counted toward a potential borrower's qualifying income, thereby making it possible for senior citizens to obtain larger mortgages when buying or refinancing homes.

In the past, only individual homeowners were eligible for Fannie Mae-approved mortgages, but the experimental rules change that. Public agencies and non-profit groups, such as church organizations, would be able to buy homes to rent to senior citizens and borrow against the income from the senior citizens' rent payments.

A fourth new loan package would increase the amount of money a purchaser could borrow to buy a house from a senior citizen if the buyer agreed to lease the house back to the senior citizen for at least five years. Those arrangements would allow elderly homeowners to stay in their homes while using the income from the sale to support themselves, Fannie Mae officials said. Public agencies, non-profit groups, relatives and investors alike could buy houses from senior citizens through this program, Fannie Mae officials said.

The so-called sale-leaseback arrangement is in some ways similar to the reverse mortgage, another kind of loan that has been a subject of experimentation among lenders. Both are designed to help cash-poor but equity-rich senior citizens convert the value tied up in their houses into income.

The four mortgage products Fannie Mae unveiled last week have only been available from lenders "on a spot basis," Fannie Mae spokesman Gene Eisman said. By enabling lenders to sell such mortgages to an investor, Fannie Mae hopes to make them more widely available, Eisman said.

Early Payment On Loans Helps

Better Homes and Gardens
A MEREDITH MAGAZAINE

To reduce interest costs dramatically, Better Homes and Gardens magazine advises homeowners to make an extra mortgage payment every year or two.

Any extra payment will automatically be applied to the principal, thereby reducing the interest owed on the balance and shortening the length of time it will take to pay off the loan.

Some lenders don't accept prepayments, or they allow them only after a specific time period. Other lenders allow occasional payments. Others require a steady schedule — say, an extra $50 a month or whatever sum is agreed on.

Garden Clinic

Q. I recently visited the N.C. State University Arboretum in Raleigh and was overwhelmed by all the different shrubs, trees and flowers there. Are guided tours available? How could I arrange a tour for my garden club?

A. Guided tours of the arboretum are given every Sunday afternoon at 2 p.m. from April 16 to October 22. To arrange a group tour, telephone the NCSU Department of Horticultural Science at 737-3132 weekdays between 8 a.m. and 5 p.m.

Q. What is the name of the large tree with lavender blossoms that is blooming now (April 21)? I see it growing along the highway and in vacant lots in the city. I have not seen it in a forest.

A. The empress tree (Paulownia tomentosa) produces attractive purple-lavender flowers in the spring. It is one of the fastest growing ornamental trees, with up to eight feet of growth a year when young. Although it is sometimes considered a "trash tree," the tree is now being grown commercially since its wood is in great demand in Japan and China.

Winterville Dog Trainer Has His Way With Canines

By Carol Tyer
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Milan Rowe says that virtually every dog, purebred or mongrel, can be trained. But he declares that every one is an individual needing fair and consistent direction, correction and praise in order to become a well-mannered, loving companion for his owner.

The owner of All-Breed Canine Specialists of Winterville, Rowe's first step in dealing with a potential customer and his dog is to assess the temperament of the dog. From many years of working with dogs, he believes that he can readily determine if a dog is overly aggressive, moderately aggressive, underly aggressive or a fear biter. He will train all of them, but will be forthright as to whether each one needs to be trained in class or must be trained privately.

"I've never seen anyone with the instant command with dogs that Milan has," recent client David Barbour of Greenville said. "He's done wonders with my golden retriever Leo. And I saw him meet a friend of mine and her very unruly dog. She told him she knew he couldn't do anything with her pet. He immediately put the dog on a leash and walked up to the end of the block with her. By the time they were back, the dog was walking calmly at his side and starting to understand his commands."

Kinston resident Herman Allcox echoed Barbour's experience. "My wife and I have a little collie that was no pleasure to us," he said. My wife is deaf and I get around with a three-wheeler. All we could do was leave Ginger in a pen in the back yard and feed her and pet her a little through the fence. She would jump up on either one of us and nearly knock my wife down. She was just a nuisance every time we took her out. I finally told my wife, 'We've either got to get her trained or give her away.'"

The Daily Reflector/Thomas Forrest

Allcox located Rowe through his veterinarian and first went to meet him when he was given dog obedience classes at Lenoir Community College. Rowe assessed Ginger, said he felt sure she could be trained and set up biweekly private lessons for her and her owners.

"I've never seen anything like it," Allcox said. "We now have a dog that is just so marvelous to have. She sits calmly on the patio and does exactly what we ask. My wife enjoys sitting and brushing her, so she's getting more beautiful all the time. She walks calmly with my three-wheeler and will even sit quietly outside a store and wait for me when I take her downtown. Getting Ginger trained was the best money I ever spent."

Rowe, an Aulander native who graduated from Manteo High School, said he trained first in mortuary science. "My grandmother convinced me " he said, "that if I'd enter that field, I'd never be without a job. I haven't been without a job, but I've never been a mortician for even a day. I've done other things I enjoy a lot more."

By the time he got out of college, he was a drummer with a band. One night in 1974 as he and his fellow band members were sleeping during a Johnson City, Tenn., gig, all of their sound equipment was stolen out of their truck. "This would never have happened," he and his fellow band members decided, "if we'd had a guard dog."

Milan was assigned to find a guard dog. In educating himself about the choice of that dog, he discovered possibility for a career he could really get excited about.

Soon he was enrolled in a master dog trainer's course at Schutzengel-Haus, a dog training school in North Dighton, Mass., run by a German couple. "The German people," he said, "breed some of the best dogs in the world. And they are masters at all levels of dog training. I was very fortunate to live in the home of and work with the couple who owned the school for several months. They provided me so much knowledge and experience that I have been able to use and enjoy ever since."

The course taught him the basics of dog care and obedience training, as well as how to teach dogs to track, sniff out bombs and drugs, and be guard dogs. As a result of this training he can now offer basic, intermediate and advanced obedience training, advanced training with scent discrimination, personal protection, advanced off-leash attack on command, and compound sentry dog and man-tracking training.

After completing his training, he worked for a command dog school in Connecticut and then operated schools in Virginia.

He uses only a choke collar and authoritative, but never abusive, verbal commands backed up by authoritative body language and praise — "lots of praise" — to train a dog.

"Your tone of voice and intensity are the key," he said. "The dog responds to that."

He urges his students to practice commands, correction and praise with their dogs at least once every 24 hours — more if possible. "Dogs learn and retain by repetition," he said. "Being consistent in your training is the only way to have a smooth-working dog."

Rowe says the age at which a dog is trained is unimportant. He will start a puppy as young as 12 weeks and has taught dogs as old as 11. "I like getting them young," he said. "Then they can give their owners many years of pleasure."

Rottweilers have been his favorite breed for a long time and he has owned a champion Rottweiler that is the upline dam of many of the finest Rottweilers in the United States today. This dog named Champion Roxy Vom Hause Hagele was named the Best of Breed Rottweiler at the Westminster Kennel Club show in Madison Square Gardens in 1983. Rowe now has plans to introduce a new breed into eastern North Carolina. He's debating among several — the Belgian malinois, the Belgian bouvier des Flanders, the German giant schnauzer, or the not-yet-AKC-registered German hovawart.

He said he is working with area legislators proposing to have a law enacted that would require state certification for dog trainers. Also, he is in the early stages of writing a book he will title "How To Be Successful In Your Own Dog-Training Business."

Rowe is now giving Saturday morning basic and intermediate lessons at the home of Pitt County Humane Society President Bobbie Parsons on Red Banks Road near St. Timothy's Episcopal Church. He gives a discount to people who enroll dogs obtained either from the Pitt-Greenville Animal Shelter or from the Humane Society. Each set of lessons is eight weeks in duration, but newcomers may join the basic class at any time.

He will begin a new Monday 7 p.m. class at the Greenville Parks and Recreation Teen Center May 29 and a Wednesday morning children's class at Wintergreen School June 14, the latter sponsored by the Community Schools Program.

Pitt Native Involved In Oil Cleanup

By Greg Laudick
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

While most people in the United States are concerned over the ongoing cleanup of the massive Alaskan oil spill, one former resident of Greenville is directly involved in the effort.

John A. Cartner, a 1965 graduate of J.H. Rose High School, heads one of the company's called in to help minimize the damage created by one of history's worst oil spills, caused by the March 24 grounding of an Exxon Tanker.

Over 10 million gallons of crude were released into Prince William Sound, killing a large number of birds and aquatic animals and fouling the local environment for a period some scientists say could last well into the 21st century.

Cartner is chairman and co-founder of Phillips and Cartner & Co. Inc., a government contractor specializing in a wide variety of maritime matters, including pollution control.

Due to contractual restrictions, Cartner was unable to comment on the progress or the means by which the cleanup effort was being handled, other than saying that Exxon is coordinating the activities.

However, in a telephone interview from his office in Alexandria, Va., Cartner would coment that the cleanup effort has been difficult due to logistical problems of transporting people to and from the cleanup site.

"Also exacerbating the situation is the coldness of that area and, of course, the scope of the effort — the Valdez spill is an exceptionally large incident," he said.

Oil cleanup projects are not anything new to Cartner. His company, in a joint venture with Global Associates, also provided assistance in the cleanup of 250,000 gallons of diesel fuel spilled near Antartica in January.

Both that effort and the current Prince William Sound project came about as part of a U.S. government contract with Global Associates/Phillips Cartner & Co. to provide engineering and support to the Navy's supervisor of salvage.

"About 275 people are directly involved in the joint venture project," he said.

After graduating from Rose High School, Cartner went on to graduate from the Merchant Marine Academy at Kings Point, N.Y., and received a master's degree and doctorate from the University of Georgia.

He is also licensed by the U.S. Coast Guard to command ocean-going vessels of any size.

Cartner is the son of Anna H. Cartner of Greenville and the late John A. Cartner.

White House To Review Consumer Plans

LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — The White House has agreed to review a set of economic-policy recommendations put fourth by conservative public-interest groups that are mounting a challenge to the traditional notion of consumerism.

The proposals, prepared by the newly formed National Consumer Coalition, were received by White House Chief of Staff John H. Sununu — an act that angered liberal consumer organizations whose leaders say they have yet to get access to the Bush administration.

Sununu is the former chairman of Consumer Alert, a major organizer of the 33-group coalition whose members include the Heritage Foundation, Accuracy in Media, the Competitive Enterprise Institute and Citizens Against Government Waste.

The coalition's ideas run in direct contrast to the consumerism philosophy developed under the leadership of Ralph Nader, which places a heavy emphasis on government regulation to reduce and eliminate business misbehavior in the marketplace.

The conservatives, whom Nader this past week called "a clutch of perpetrators masquerading as consumer advocates," think that deregulation in most cases is the best way to serve consumers. The coalition's recommendations call for abolition of federal fuel-economy standards, review of U.S. antitrust laws, elimination of farm subsidies and U.S. trade barriers, assessment of user fees for certain government services and a host of other actions the coalition believes will benefit consumers by removing restrictions from the marketplace.

Sununu, who addressed a meeting of the coalition Friday, seemed to endorse the spirit, if not the content, of the voluminous policy proposals.

"To a great extent, we have seen a philosophy in Washington that one or two people locked inside of the Beltway know what is best for the consumer," said Sununu. But there is "no reason to believe that American citizens are not smart enough or capable enough to make decisions for themselves," he said.

Consumer groups including Public Citizen, the National Insurance Consumers Organization and the Center for Auto Safety criticized the conservative coalition and Sununu's reception of its proposals. In a letter to President Bush, the liberal groups said Sununu's participation in the coalition's event "would send the wrong message to business, to government officials and to all businesses."

Miners' Strike Sends Hundreds To Jail, Grows Bitter

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CLINTWOOD, Va. — A United Mine Workers strike against the Pittston Coal Group has led to more than 1,180 criminal charges, mostly resulting from civil disobedience tactics reminiscent of the '60s civil rights movement.

The 3½-week-old UMW strike against Pittston operations in Virginia and West Virginia grew increasingly bitter last week as a daylong rally shut down this mountain town where coal trucks regularly rumble down the main street.

Miners' families joined in getting arrested and more than 200 high school students walked out to support the union.

"We're not wanting to violate the law," said UMW strike coordinator Marty Hudson. "We just want people to know what Pittston Coal has done."

Union officials say Pittston, the nation's 15th largest coal company and second largest coal exporter, has violated labor laws and refused to bargain in good faith.

Pittston dropped out of the industry's main bargaining group, the Bituminous Coal Operators Association, before talks started on a new contract last year, opting to work out its own agreement with the UMW.

The rest of the major coal producers have reached agreements with the union. But 15 months of negotiations have resulted in no contract for Pittston.

The company canceled health insurance for 1,500 UMW retirees when the old contract expired Jan. 31, 1988. One strike deadline passed earlier this year when the union agreed to a 60-day cooling off period requested by the governors of Virginia, West Virginia and Kentucky.

Both sides agreed that wages are not a major issue in the contract dispute. The sticking points are job security, employee responsibility for paying for health insurance, and Sunday work days.

The UMW finally called a strike April 5, affecting about 1,700 workers in Virginia and West Virginia. It did not strike Pittston operations in Kentucky, citing "strategic reasons" it will not explain.

The uses forms of civil disobedience such as the sit-in to draw attention to its cause, but has updated them with new technology. Union officials carry beepers on the picket lines, and some have car phones. Both sides videotape everything, sometimes aerially, for possible use in court. At times, security guards film pickets filming guards.

Union members wear camouflage on the picket line, presumably to make it more difficult to identify individual miners on videotape.

The campaign began April 18, when 37 wives and widows of UMW members staged a 30-hour sit-in at Pittston's headquarters in Lebanon, in western Virginia.

By Friday, State Police reported arrests on 122 felony charges, mostly throwing rocks at non-union coal trucks, and 1,060 misdemeanors, mostly sitting in roads and blocking entrances to Pittston mines and coal preparation plants.

Authorities did not know how many people were arrested because some were charged more than once.

Arrests Monday sparked a rally at the Dickenson County Courthouse in this community just southeast of the Kentucky state line that was attended by hundreds of sign-toting relatives and supporters of UMW members.

The next day saw a walkout by students at three high schools who staged their own rally at the courthouse. On Thursday, 70 student walked out at Lebanon High School and staged a rally outside Pittston headquarters.

"We have said all along, since when they announced they would use civil disobedience, that it is merely a predetermined excuse to break the law," said Pittston spokeswoman Susan Copeland.

She said the UMW has ignored a Dickenson County circuit judge's order barring mass demonstrations at 17 Pittston operations.

Hudson says the civil disobedience, by keeping union members occupied, has prevented violence.

The union also has urged Pittston shareholders to ask at the company's May 9 annual meeting how long Pittston can operate during a strike, even with replacement workers in some mines.

Union officials say their strike fund totals $100 million and can be boosted at any time by increasing assessments on dues. Striking miners are paid $200 a week from that fund, and the union is providing low-cost hospitalization insurance for those left without benefits.

State Sold Low Wages, Prof Says

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WINSTON-SALEM — North Carolina ranks among states with the highest numbers of working poor because of an intentional economic development strategy promoted by politicians, an expert on economic development says.

Jonathan Sher, the director of school-based programs of the Small Business and Technology Development Center at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill said Friday that "North Carolina sold itself" to businesses and industries from other states.

"'We are going to offer you cheap water and land, lax environmental standards and enforcement, subsidized training, and no taxes or very low taxes .... for years to come. But most of all, we are going to offer you cheap, docile labor.'

"This is a promise the politicians delivered with a vengeance," Sher told a conference on racism, poverty and economic justice sponsored by the North Carolina Council of Churches. "We sold North Carolina and North Carolinians on the block nationally as the place where folks could come and get that cheap labor.

"Folks who are poor and work aren't lazy and shiftless," he said. "They are working the hardest, most dangerous, most demanding jobs we have to offer. Most likely they don't have health insurance, child care and fringe benefits."

Sher said that middle-class North Carolinians wrongly think that they are shouldering the burden of the poor. Instead, the poor are subsidizing the middle class because their cheap labor — by attracting industries to the state — keeps individuals' taxes low, he said.

U.S. Restricts Japanese Trade

LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — The Bush administration decided Friday to order trade sanctions against Japan for failing to keep an agreement to open its fast-growing telecommunications market to American cellular phones and mobile radios.

The move marks the first time the United States has imposed trade sanctions against Tokyo since the Reagan administration ordered retaliatory measures in 1987 after finding that Japan was not keeping an agreement to buy more U.S. semiconductors. It came just days after the resignation of Prime Minister Noboru Takeshita because of a financial scandal, and was seen as a sign the Bush administration intends to maintain trade pressure on Japan even though the government is weak.

Getaway

THE DAILY REFLECTOR

ORIENTAL — When "Uncle" Lou Midgett first settled a Pamlico County town on the Neuse River in 1870, the village was known as Smith's Creek. A few years later, Midgett's wife, Rebecca, uncovered the nameplate of a federal transport that sank near Bodie Island back in 1862. Villagers took the name of the ship, Oriental, and made it their own.

Today, Oriental is a quiet hamlet of about 1,100 residents, including many retirees and sailing fanatics. Located along the Intracoastal Waterway, the town lures visitors from all around the globe.

"You get people from all over the world — England and Australia. We're getting people from every state in the country. People find out about Oriental and they find it some way," said Jim Moye, owner of The Trawl Door restaurant in Oriental, which has won the Diner's Club of America Silver Spoon award for the last five years.

"Numerous people retire to Oriental and the area. They're probably over 400 or 500 big sailboats in the area. We have people from Greenville and Washington, N.C., who drive down for supper," he said. "People find it somehow."

In the past, the restaurant has been a hardware store and grocery store, and Moye coverted it to a tavern in 1978. Shortly after, the business grew to a restaurant, and it now seats up to 150 people.

About 30 miles east of New Bern on N.C. 55, Oriental is nestled between Janeiro and Pamlico on the east coast of the mainland where the Neuse enters the Pamlico Sound.

From Greenville, visitors may take N.C. 43 South to New Bern and turn on N.C. 55 east, which will take them through Pamlico County to Oriental. Or, travelers may leave Greenville on N.C. 33 South, turn on to N.C. 306 in southern Beaufort County and connect with N.C. 55 in Grantsboro.

The final stretch of the drive includes several scenic spots where boats are docked on inland crevices of water that weave their way to the sound. Oriental is also a popular spot for boat travelers making trips to Ocracoke Island, Beaufort, Cape Lookout, Morehead City or other coastal sites.

"From water traffic, you get people from everywhere, just everywhere. We get people from Texas, Maine, Jersey, New York and Florida," said Brenda Harris, a Pamlico County native who returned home 15 year ago to run the Oriental Marina Motel and Restaurant.

"It's just a big cross-section of people. The common binder is water — people who like to look at it or be on it. It's just some of the prime sailing water on the East Coast. It's an easy place to get into and out of.

"We get a lot of first-timers," she said. "Oriental is becoming quite a little retirement area. There's a certain type of people who like the village atmosphere rather than the sterilized atmosphere. They're always boat peole."

One of the most unique places in Oriental is the Ol' Store, run by Billie and Lucille Truitt. Located across from the town's main boat dock, the place was once a general store operated by Mrs. Truitt's father, Clyde Styron. It sold grocery, hardware, underwear and anything else people needed, she said.

"Everybody sat around the old pot belly stoves and talked politics and whatever," she said.

Styron ran the store through the 1950s, but in 1968, he nailed the door shut, leaving everything on the shelves. Eight years later, Mrs. Truitt gave re-opened doors. She had been making a living by fishing and waiting tables.

"I felt life was too short, so I let my daughter have by house, and we moved into one room in the back of the store," she said. Mrs. Truitt turns 62 this month. "We've got five high chairs, and I feed my grandchildren everyday when they come by. When you give them all a biscuit, you've never seen such a mess. It's just like we're camping out everyday. It's rough, but I like it. The older you get, the less you want and the less you worry."

Coming from a family of fishermen, Mrs. Truitt, has continued the business. She and her husband are now crabbing in the river, and by mid-July they will be shrimping. Also, for two months each winter, Mrs. Truitt paints pictures of the way Oriental looked 60 years ago, with the harbors, boats and waterfowl. She sells the paintings — along with everything else from used books to clothes to dented coffee perculators — at the store.

In the summer, a local country band pops in unannounced to play evening sessions on the porch, and people still gather around the pot belly stove to talk politcs and whatever.

"When you get to Oriental, everybody's the same," Mrs. Truitt said. "It don't matter if you got money or you got a title, everybody is the same.

"People are good here. They'll worry you to death giving to you, because you feel like you can't pay them back. Everbody knows everybody's business, too," she said. "I wouldn't think of running out with some man because everybody in town would know it the next day."

One of the common bonds linking Oriental residents is that they eat well, she said. If someone isn't lucky enough to find a place at Mrs. Truitt's table for Sunday lunch, there are other options.

In addition to The Trawl Door and the newly-remodeled Marina Restaurant, which both serve fresh seafood, visitors may sample Brantley's Village Restaurant, which has a menu and a buffet, or the Whistling Dixie cafe at the town's health spa, The Village Club.

For lodging, the Marina Motel has 18 rooms, with double rooms priced at $45-$55 a night. It is one of two motels in the town. The second, River Neuse Motel, has 16 rooms with overnight, weekend and weekly packages ranging from $29-$44 a night. During the traditional holidays — Easter, Memorial Day and Labor Day — rooms are booked well in advance. Also, Oriental's annaul July 4 Croaker Festival attracts many visitors.

"It's an international clientele," he said. "It's as diversified as your roadside Holiday Inn — people that have relatives here in the county, pepole looking for real estate, or people just hiding for the weekend."

The couple previously lived in suburban Washington, D.C., and the move to Oriental was a drastic change.

"When we came down here, we were considered dropouts. We dropped out of society. We've been here ever since. I guess we're still dropped out," he said.

A walk down Waterfront Street, where Bailey's motel is located, will take visitors along a sidewalk that borders the river, with a New England-like rocky bank stretching several feet to the water. The street includes Victorian homes with wrap-around porches and Charleston-style Southern homes with columns facing the river.

Visitors looking to experience the old houses may choose to stay in one of the town's two bed and breakfasts: the Tar Heel Inn and the Cartwright House.

Black Doctor Is Honored As Myth Is Debunked

Surgeons Battling To Restore The Truth

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

HAW RIVER — For more than three decades, the story about the death of Dr. Charles Drew went like this:

Drew, a pioneer in blood research and teacher of black surgeons, was allowed to bleed to death in 1950 because doctors at the all-white hospital in Burlington refused to treat blacks.

About 50 members of the Society of Black Academic Surgeons gathered recently at the place where Drew was fatally injured in a car crash April 1, 1950, on N.C. 49, two miles north of Haw River. They laid a wreath at a six-foot monument erected in 1986 at the scene of Drew's accident.

"It's in the public interest to break this myth," said Dr. Onye Akwari, a surgery professor at Duke University Medical School and coordinator of a society seminar at Duke. "Historical truth should be very clearly documented. It's especially important for young people to know the truth."

The false story of Drew's death began shortly after the accident. No one knows exactly how it started, according to historian Charles E. Wynes of the University of Georgia. Wynes has written a book, "Charles Richard Drew: The Man and the Myth," published last year.

But the story about the Southern hospital refusing to give Drew adequate treatment wound up in history books, newspapers, magazines, an episode of the "MASH" television series and countless conversations.

"The entire nation, and not just the South," Wynes wrote, "was no stranger to stories about how blacks had been turned away from hospitals for all sorts of facile stated reasons: no money, no room, 'too serious for our limited facilities,' and so on — when the real reason was race.

"Sadly, some of those stories were true, and perhaps because they were, they somehow became attached to Drew. He became a black martyr — the symbol for all those who actually were turned away because of their race."

The true story, Wynes and others say, is that Drew received proper treatment for his severe injuries.

Drew and three black doctors from Washington were driving through Alamance County on their way to an annual clinic at Tuskegee Institute in Alabama when Drew lost control of the car just after dawn. The car skidded into a corn field, threw Drew out and rolled over him.

About 15 minutes later, an ambulance arrived to take Drew and Dr. Walter R. Johnson to the emergency room of Alamance General Hospital in Burlington, Johnson wrote in 1984 for the Journal of the National Medical Association. Another doctor was taken to the hospital by a motorist; the fourth doctor was not injured.

Johnson, of St. Louis, wrote that hospital doctors ordered emergency measures when Drew arrived at the emergency room.

"The treatment at the hospital, routine for accidental injuries in that region and specific for that period of time, suggests that a conscientious effort was made to revive Dr. Drew," Johnson wrote in the journal.

Dr. Charles Kernodle of Burlington has been trying to fight the myth for years. He was one of the three doctors who treated Drew in the hospital emergency room.

Kernodle, now retired, said in an interview that Drew was badly hurt, with head and chest injuries and a nearly severed leg, when he arrived unconscious in the emergency room.

"I knew we did all we could for him," Kernodle said.

Drew, who was only 45 when he died, trained most of America's black surgeons before 1950.

has summer rates of $65 a night for a double room and $55 a night for singles. Rates drop after Nov. 1. The price includes a gormet breakfast prepared by the inn's owners, Dave and Patti Nelson, who moved to Oriental from California.

"We just fell in love with the area and the people and the whole thing," said Nelson, who left his job as an aerospace engineer. His wife taught art.

The front portion of the home, including the front desk and three upstairs bedrooms, was part of the original structure built in 1890. Over the years, the house has served as a grocery store, a milliner's shop and an antiques store, and was restored and expanded in 1984 when it was converted to an inn. The Nelsons bought the property in February 1988.

"The (guests) really are from all over. We've had bicyclers from California that have stayed with us. We've had people from the Midwest. Last week we had some from St. Louis," he said.

Patricia Lutz, on leave from her job as a sales representative for a local television station, opened the Cartwright House on Easter weekend. With three rooms, the rates are $65 for a double and $55 for a single, including a gormet breakfast. If the business remains successufl, she said she plans to expand.

Local real estate brokers send out bed and breakfast brochures to clients, she said, and that has generated much of her clientele. Most patrons have been out-of-state visitors looking for real estate or vacationers from the Raleigh area.

The town's two sailing schools, Oriental's School of Sailing, operated by Don Elliot and John Poole, and Grace Evans' sailing school, also generate business, she said. Oriental's school offers visitors five days of classes or classes spread over three weekends. Both packages cost $485. The school includes classwork in the morning and three hours of sailing in the afternoon. The cetificate is recognized by charter fleets in the U.S. and Caribbean, said Poole's wife, Juliana.

Ms. Lutz's Victorian house was built in 1903, and she has tried to remain true to the period in her decorating. The house is named for a former owner, Jerry Cartwright of Texas, a writer, architect and adventurer who appeared in Nescafe commercials years back as a weathered ship captain drinking coffee from a clear glass mug. He sold the house about five years ago, she said, but it remains known to townspeople as the Cartwright House.

For those interested in a more permanent living arrangement, Oriental presents a nice opporunity to purchase land, said Allen Propst, who established Mariner Realty in June 1987.

"Property values are appreciating very quickly here (about 15-20 percent a year)," he said. "They have been for the last five years.

Man people from the Northeast portion of the U.S., attracted by the high standard of living, retire to Oriental, Propst said. They account for about half of the property sales in the Oriental area. Others from the Raleigh, Greensboro and Winston-Salem areas buy land in Oriental to dock boats and vacation.

At any given time, about 25 homes in the Oriental area will be on the market, he said. Prices for new lots range from $16,000 to $140,000, he said, depending on the size, location and amount of water frontage. An average-size waterfront lot with good water depth for boat launching costs about $70,000, he said. Many people are opting to buy interior lots that include deeds to boatslips at nearby docks. Those cost about half the price of waterfront lots, he said.

London Economic Revival Brings American Invasion

TOWN AND COUNTRY

Americans are invading London by the hundreds, settling into high-priced fashionable flats that often are paid for by their firms.

One reason for the recent emigration is southern England's economic revival and the related emergence of the City of London as an international financial center.

Research by Savill's, one of London's leading real estate agents, reports Americans account for a full 56 percent of their "prime" rental properties, of which 39 percent go to international companies, 31 percent to bankers and 14 percent to media people. Rents average $3,500 a month.

"We have arranged rentals at up to $20,000 a month," said Victoria Mitchell, a director of Savill's, "but many top American bankers who have lived here since 1983 or earlier have bought substantial houses in Westminster, Kensington and Chelsea, for which they have paid more than $2 million."

Unlike the rental market, the sales market in London is largely domestically fueled, with Americans buying perhaps 4 percent of the prime properties and other nationalities another 20 percent.

David Goldstone, a real estate developer who has been called the Donald Trump of Britain, credits confidence in the Thatcher government for the real estate boom.

"Confidence," he said, "is an essential factor in any real estate market ..."

Prices appear to have leveled off, or even dropped slightly, in the past six months, so it may not be impractical for Americans to look into the market. London still has one of the largest selections of choice property for sale of any country in the world, with no restrictions on foreign ownership.

The most fashionable areas, and most expensive, are the neighborhoods bordering Hyde Park on the east and south.

This is Westminster, which includes Mayfair, home of Annabel's, Claridge's, Sotheby's and the antique and jewelry stores of Bond Street; Belgravia, whose Eaton Square and pastel-colored l9th century mansions are the height of residential elegance, and Knightsbridge, site of Harrods and a maze of interlocking gardens and townhouses.

Rents here start at about $6,000 a month. Landlords prefer to rent to companies because they do not have "security of tenure" or qualify for rent control under the British Rent Acts.

If buying, $645,000 is about the minimum for even a small two-bedroom flat, with the more likely price hovering at around $900,000. Houses range from $1.4 million to $5 million and more.

"You can get a very nice four-five bedroom house with a garden in Knightsbridge for about $1.5 million," said David Forbes of Chesterfield & Co., an agency specializing in the upper end of the market.

"But it will be a narrow house, 17 feet wide, with five stories of stairs to climb, and it will be a leasehold, rather than a freehold, with about 48 years left on the lease."

The leasehold system was established centuries ago to allow great land-owning families to avoid selling their land or buildings. Instead, they grant long-term leases, charging tenants an annual rent and regaining possession at the end of the lease.

Many Americans find it difficult to understand why anyone should pay several hundred thousand dollars to buy a house or apartment with only a few years to run on its lease.

Chair Sits For Millions

CONNOISSEUR

One of the world's most expensive pieces of furniture was created in Philadelphia, went on to New York and Maine and wound up two centuries later being sold to another Philadelphian.

The General John Cadwalader hairy-paw foot wing chair two years ago brought $2.5 million at auction ($2.75 million including premium) which was then the most money ever spent at auction for a piece of furniture.

Until the auction at Sotheby's, it had been impossible to determine its value. It had everything going for it — quality, provenance, rarity, history, condition — but few comparable pieces of American furniture had come on the market in decades.

The chair had come a long way since 1770, when Gen. John Cadwalader of Philadelphia, one of the richest men in the New World's largest and most prosperous city, engaged master cabinetmaker Thomas Affleck to make furniture in exuberant rococo style for his refurbished mansion.

After Cadwalader's death in 1786, the chair stayed in Philadelphia through three generations. It moved north in the 1870s when one of the general's great-great-granddaughters married a New Yorker. The only child of this couple, the eminent landscape architect Beatrix Cadwalader Jones Farrand, kept the chair in her house in Bar Harbor, Me., before giving it to a friend, Mrs. Gerrish H. Milliken.

Mrs. Milliken willed the chair to her daughter, Joan Milliken Bolton. (Bolton is a pseudonym for the publicity-shy family that eventually sold the chair.)

It's None Of His Business

At Wits End

Erma Bombeck

It doesn't surprise me a bit that one out of every five married women squirrels away money her husband doesn't know she has. Although the majority of married women pledge that what's his is mine and what's mine is his, there are a few who subscribe to what's his is mine and what's mine is none of his business.

Who are these women who have this clandestine, seedy, back-alley love affair with their own money?

One is little Suzie Sandbox, who lines up every week with her kids to receive an allowance from her husband to run the house. Anything she can cut back on and save is hers. For years, Suzie ate worms and held her breath until she turned blue. Now she is trying to save enough to run away from home.

Another is Paula Grovel, who must extract money from her husband as if it were a wisdom tooth with roots in his feet. Paula could buy Eastern Airlines more easily than she can get money for a bedroom carpet. She yearns for the day when she can roll over her Christmas savings account and split.

Then there's Maria Meaculpa. She started a money stash of her own because with every dime she spends, she has to discuss it in detail with her husband. Maria has made enough confessions to rival St. Augustine.

Sibyl Pink has the perfect financial setup. She and her husband have joint bank accounts, and he never questions her expenditures. So why does Sibyl hide her mad money in an empty Alka Seltzer box in the back of the linen closet behind the heating pad? She's a closet sinner. Her life is an open book and she has never had a mystique. Chances are she will use the money to buy her husband a fishing reel for his birthday, but it will be her "own money."

Debbie Dubious seemingly has no reason to redeem soap coupons for cash and buy toilet tissue at Discount City. Hers is a marriage made in heaven. Her husband worships the quicksand she walks on. But Debbie is suspicious of her husband, who has had a dental appointment three times a week for the last eight years. She is insecure about her future and is putting a little aside.

For the rest of us, it's hard to explain. Our husbands are generous and don't make us feel like "kept women." But there is a popular myth that to be worth something, you get paid for something. I got $3 for the first column I wrote. I would have gone to each of the subscribers of the newspaper and read it aloud for the same price. I had done something that not only carried a price tag, but was actually bought by someone.

For years, my mother has saved all of her loose change in a three-pound Folger's coffee can. She's like a woman of mystery out of an Agatha Christie novel. She never talks about it, and no one knows how much she has until one day she changes from a mild-mannered, retiring housewife into a Donald Trump. "I'm off to Vegas," she declares, "with my own money."

Tips Maintain Walls' Beauty

DECORATING MAGAZINE

Here are some tips from Decorating magazine:

As part of the household cleaning routine, walls should be dusted or vacuumed to remove surface dirt and keep cobwebs under control. When heavy-duty wall cleaning is necessary, however, keep in mind that the same cleaner that works wonders on wood paneling can ruin a fancy glazed wall finish.

To head off trouble, check the labels on paint cans or wallpaper packaging upon purchase for specific cleaning instructions. It's particularly important to use the right cleaning solution for a job.

Test an inconspicuous spot before attacking an entire wall, whether it's painted, paneled, papered or covered with fabric. Don't use strong cleaners on glossy finishes. They can dull the surface. Don't saturate nonwashable surfaces. Use commercial powdered cleaners or blot gently with cleaning fluid.

Remember, too, that applying too much of any cleaner may do more harm than good to wall coverings. Excessive elbow grease or cleaning too frequently can actually shorten the life of a finish.

Here are some tried-and-true cleaning solutions that work on various surfaces:

— Flat paint: 1¼ cup ammonia, borax and white vinegar per gallon of warm water.

— Glossy paint: 1 tablespoon washing soda per gallon of water.

— Mildew: 1 cup chlorine bleach per gallon of water.

These Working Moms Content

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Moms are happier for it. Dads are happier. Kids are happier and may even be doing better in school because of it.

What's creating all the elation?

Work. Mothers working outside the home, bringing home a paycheck, according to the May issue of Working Mother magazine.

Keep in mind, however, that these mothers aren't exactly working to keep the wolf from the door. These are 2,015 mothers who have enough money to buy the magazine, time to read it — and time to respond to its survey. Almost all of the readers who responded are married. They have a high school or college degree, a median age of 32.7 years and a median family income of $44,200.

But, can money really buy happiness? Well, no. Although 98 percent said money is the primary reason for working, income has little bearing on their happiness. In fact, more income often creates more pressure since it often leads to a higher standard of living that they must work to maintain.

The most contented families are the ones with the most leeway in their budgets. And the happiest working mothers are the ones who spend more money and time on pleasure and entertainment. Indeed, 69 percent said that because they are working they are more willing to spend money on themselves.

The most satisfied moms, too, are the ones whose husbands help with housework and child care. Those whose husbands don't help complain that having it all means having to do it all.

According to the survey, published on the 10th anniversary of the magazine and in the month that honors the nation's moms, 71 percent of the husbands who are pleased that their wives have a job help with the housework and children.

Also, 74 percent of the responding mothers said they are as happy or happier working outside the home, and only 15 percent said they would quit their jobs if they could afford to.

Some Pre-Natal Exercise Helps Mothers, Babies

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

OKLAHOMA CITY, Okla. — Women may be doing their unborn children a favor as well as themselves by exercising during pregnancy, according to a University of Oklahoma researcher.

Dr. Allison Welder, who has published numerous scientific papers on the development of the fetal heart, is using an in vitro approach to explore the effects of maternal exercise during pregnancy on the development of the fetal heart. She is combining drugs and heart cells from the offspring of both sedentary and exercise-trained pregnant rats in studying this particular process.

"The preliminary study indicates that exercise during pregnancy is positive for the fetus and development of the fetal heart," she says.

Future research will include looking at the "mechanisms" behind exercise-induced cellular changes to see if effects are lasting in the offspring's heart.

"Women today are exercising regularly during pregnancy, and we don't yet know the impact of that exercise on the fetus," Welder says. "We do know that exercise affects the heart of the adult human and adult animal in a positive way in that it helps prevent heart disease, or is protective against heart disease.

'Greetings And Salutations' Just Won't Work

Dear Abby
Abigail Van Buren

Dear Abby: In this ever-changing world, the use of our language, as well as the language itself, is constantly changing. The reason for this letter is to point out the fact that no one has yet come up with a new salutation for a business letter when one addresses a company or corporation and the gender of the recipient is not known.

"Gentlemen" has been in use for as long as I can remember, even when the letter is addressed to the attention of a woman.

Perhaps you can come up with a better salutation. — Tom Coleman, San Francisco

Dear Mr. Coleman: Many have been suggested; none have caught on. "Greetings" sounds like a summons from the draft board. "Good morning" is not always appropriate — what if the recipient opens the letter in the afternoon or evening? "Hello" sounds like you're answering the telephone. "Sir or Madam" is too stiff and formal. And what's wrong with just jumping in with the purpose of the letter?

If we depart from the standard salutation, how about dispensing with those meaningless sign-offs, such as "Sincerely," "Very truly yours," "Fondly," and especially "Love" — unless you really mean it.

Readers, any suggestions?

Dear Abby: How can I find a good psychiatrist I can trust? After seven years of marriage, I have come to hate my husband. I wish him dead every night! He doesn't deserve it — he's a nice guy. He doesn't drink, smoke, beat on me or abuse me or the children. He's a decent, upstanding professional man. But the truth is, I really hate him, and I don't know why.

Four years ago we went to a marriage counselor and wasted a lot of time and money for no help at all. I don't care to waste any more of either.

My husband is in charge of the money. I have no money of my own, and I certainly can't ask him for $100 a week more without explaining what I need it for. Please help me. — Hates My Husband

Dear Hates: You are a very wise woman to realize that you need to see a psychiatrist. Tell your husband the truth — that you have feelings that seem irrational to you and you would like to understand these feelings. (It's not necessary to be any more explicit.)

Your family physician should be able to recommend a competent psychiatrist. If he does not, contact your state or county medical or psychiatric association for its recommendations.

After treatment, you may still hate your husband — but at least you'll know why.

Dear Abby: I am in love with a married man. (I'll call him Al.) We've been seeing each other for 14 months, whenever we can. He wants a divorce, but his love for his children is standing in the way. Al has two boys, 5 and 7. His wife is giving him a hard time about the divorce — she says she still loves him, but she can't put up with his coming and going whenever he feels like it. She is expecting again in August. (He swears he doesn't know how this happened.)

I am 24, support myself (waitress work) and have never been in love before. I didn't know Al was married when I first met him. He said he didn't want to tell me because he loved me so much, he was afraid he'd lose me.

I am not a tramp, Abby. I have lots of chances to date other men, but I turn them all down. I know Al loves me. He said he never loved his wife. He only married her as a favor to his brother, who got her pregnant but couldn't marry her because he was already married.

What should I do? — Trapped By Love

Dear Trapped: Quit seeing Al. No matter how much you love him, there is no future in this relationship. He's very much married, and if he really doesn't know how his wife got pregnant, he needs a refresher course in reproduction. Wise up, and get this man out of your life — the sooner the better!

If you would like to write to Abby, send your letter to Abigail Van Buren, P.O. Box 69440, Los Angeles, CA. 90069. For a personal, non-published reply, enclose a self-addressed stamped envelope.

Lovick-Ziemba Pair Wed

The Rev. Caswell Shaw officiated at the 4 p.m., double ring ceremony.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Richard John Ziemba of Greenville. The bridegroom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Harold K. Lovick of Fayetteville.

Music was presented by the Rev. Shaw, soloist, and Frances Cain, organist.

The bride was escorted by her son, Steven Sereda. She wore a dress of ivory, silk tafetta with puff pleated short sleeves. The front of the dress was tea-length and the V-back ballerina length with covered buttons and a dropped waist. The top was overlaid with cathedral lace at the neckline. She carried a bouquet cascading with white cymbidium orchids, pink tearoses and feathered fern.

Sherry Clifton of Winterville was her sister's matron of honor. She wore a tea-length peacock blue dress with a lace bodice, back bustle and puff sleeves. She carried bouquet similar to that of the bride.

Immediately following the ceremony, a reception was held at the Cherry Oaks Club House. A dinner buffet was served by the Colonial Inn.

The bridegroom hosted a rehearsal dinner the eve of the wedding at the Three Steers Restuarant. The couple was honored with several showers before the wedding.

The bridegroom is a graduate of South View Senior High School in Fayetteville and East Carolina University. The bride is a graduate of Mitchell's Hairstyling Academy. She is employed by The Salon. The bridegroom is employed by United Parcel Service.

After a trip to Clearwater Beach, Fla., the couple will live in Greenville.

Use Improves Look Of Silver

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

GREENSBORO — Silver flatware, whether it is a family heirloom or a pattern of your own recent choosing, actually improves its appearance with use.

Wear on the finish of silver used daily, says Bob Page, will create a beautiful shine. Page, president of Replacements Ltd., which offers replacement pieces of china and flatware in hard-to-find patterns, cautions that whether used daily or only for special occasions, silver requires special care.

— Store sterling flatware in a case or drawer lined with a soft cloth. Do not use a kitchen drawer that is opened frequently because exposure to air promotes tarnishing.

— Wash flatware immediately after dinner. If this isn't possible, give it a quick rinse to remove food residue. Do not soak.

— It is best to wash silver by hand with a mild detergent. If you do put it in the dishwasher, separate it from stainless flatware. Either way, it should be dried by hand with a soft towel.

— Allow clean flatware to dry overnight before storing. Damp silver can mildew your case or drawer.

— Regardless how often you use your silver, polish it only once or twice a year. Most polishes sold at groceries are safe, but manufacturers provide the best.

Maternity Wardrobe Expensive

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — So you're going to be a mother. You begin thinking about decorating the nursery, hiring a baby nurse, assembling a layette, and the high cost of college takes on meaning.

But there are more immediate costs — obstetrical care, which averages $2,600 nationally, and maternity clothes. Yes, your new profile merits a new wardrobe, and even if you do the smart thing and borrow a few garments from friends, it's no small expense.

Judy Loeb, design director for Jeanette Maternities in New York, estimates a minimum $1,600 shopping spree for a working woman's spring-summer wardrobe. That's assuming your feet don't swell, requiring new shoes.

But it's cheaper than if you were buying regular clothes of comparable quality — 10 to 20 percent cheaper, according to Loeb.

"We're using the same fabric and cutting larger, but there's price resistance because they won't be wearing the clothes as long," Loeb says. "It's a problem for us because we're trying to deliver a quality product."

Loeb says that even though prospective mothers balk at spending on maternity clothes, they should buy what they look good in and feel good in because for six months those few pieces are going to be worn at least once a week.

"You wouldn't ask that of your regular wardrobe, would you?" she queries.

At any rate, Loeb says the most popular fashions for spring and summer are pants, particularly cotton, in both knit and bicycle styles. Two piece dresses and slip dresses also are in demand.

Colors?

The most needed items during the first three months of pregnancy are pants and skirts because of waist expansion, she says. The bulk of the wardrobe will be purchased during the second trimester, while purchases during the final three months will be items to boost the morale, plus nursing garments.

A basic maternity wardrobe, according to Loeb:

First trimester: One pair each of jeans, knit pants, tailored pants. Two basic skirts, one black or navy, one white or tan. One versatile dress.

Second trimester: Lingerie including six pair maternity panties, three pair maternity stockings, maternity slip, three prenatal bras. Three blouses. One blazer or suit. One career dress. One day-to-evening dress. Two fashionable casual outfits such as a sweater knit set, jumpsuit or slacks set. A second pair of knit pants. Bathing suit.

Third trimester: Lingerie including three nursing bras, two nursing gowns, three pairs support stockings, and any morale boosters.

Of course, Loeb has a vested interest in maternity fashions, but she warns mothers-to-be not to buy larger sizes of regular clothing.

"The clothes are not cut to compensate for an expanding stomach," she says, "and will hike up in the front as pregnancy progresses."

Modern, Perhaps, But We Still Need Heloise

By Karol Stonger
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

"Iron the veils on hats....

"Put heavy foil under the ironing board cover....when you iron, the heat from the foil will reflect...."

Heloise Cruse, military wife, included those tips in her first book nearly 30 years ago, but only one can be found in her daughter's latest compendium, "All-New Hints from Heloise: A Household Guide for the '90s."

The tip that helps make ironing faster is one Ponce Kiah Marchelle Heloise Cruse Evans calls "classic tried and true. The hints that everyone needs and everyone uses." Also in that category, and making up about 10 percent of the 396 pages of her latest book, is spot and stain removal.

"No matter how advanced we get," she says, "we're still concerned about getting ballpoint ink out of shirts and ketchup out of the tablecloth."

Heloise, Ponce to her friends, was on the first leg of a 20-city, six-week tour promoting the book (Perigee, April 1989, $9.95). It is the fourth she has written since she took over the publishing venture when her mother died in 1977.

"My mother taught me to write," says Heloise, who has a college degree in math. "She said 'put things in logical sequence and write like you're talking to your friends.'"

In addition to her books, she does a syndicated daily newspaper column and a monthly magazine column. She also is sought f r radio and television appearances and makes at least 25 speeches a year to civic groups and conventioneers.

Home is a sprawling house near San Antonio, Texas, that she shares with her husband David Evans, her teen-age stepson and an assortment of animals. ("Toilet bowl cleaners are a pet peeve of mine because my husband is a plumbing contractor," she says. There's a tip in the book to help keep track of your kids by computerizing their friends' telephone numbers. For pet urine stains, get out the vinegar and read page 216.)

Needless to say, then, Heloise's home is not only her castle and office. It is also her laboratory.

"I test everything," she says. "I personally test it. I don't just read a letter from a reader and say, 'Oh, this is cute. I think I'll use it.'"

She and her researchers also have a reference library (almost up to date) and a Rolodex (oops, she doesn't use brand names) full of experts' phone numbers, particularly for stain removal.

So, hats off, she says she's never had a major goof. Not long ago, though, she did have to rewrite advice on how to jump a car battery because she used an outdated reference manual.

"The way I learned it, and the way the reference manual said it, was 'put positive to positive and negative to negative.' Now the Consumer Protection Agency and the automotive industry says put the negative clip to the frame of the car, not to the battery. If you do it the old way, there is a possibility of the cap exploding and causing acid burns."

Speaking of the old way, Heloise says those old standbys, vinegar and baking soda, are as indispensable today as ever. "What would life be like without them?" she asks. "They're cheap, they're safe to have around and you can do so much with them without having to spend a lot of money on commercial stuff."

Well, is there anything new on the market to make cleaning easier?

"There are some very good commercial spot and stain pre-wash sprays," she says. "Even if you don't do your own laundry, you can do everything from cleaning the glass shower door to cleaning out the kitchen sink to getting sticky price tags off."

Put white gloves on, dip your hands in a sink filled with warm water, liquid detergent and bleach. Wash as if washing your hands, and rinse thoroughly.

'California Style' Is Celebrated

By Barbara Mayer
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Paige Rense, editor of Architectural Digest, laments that when you say "California style," everybody thinks of the swimming pools, picture windows and palm trees of Southern California.

So as editor of one of the few national design publications produced in California rather than New York, she decided to elucidate in the May issue the multiplicity of California design styles.

Bloomingdale's, a department store in the vanguard of style, came up with the same idea and chose to celebrate the California way of life in its 17-store spring promotion.

"They called and asked if we could do something together," Rense said at a celebratory gathering in a New York health club with indoor swimming pool and imported California plants. The result was that three of Rense's favorite California designers — Sally Sirkin Lewis, Val Arnold and Mimi London — were engaged to create model rooms in the store's New York, Kensington, Md., and Boca Raton, Fla., stores.

Rense says her research into California decorating has disclosed a geographic division between north and south.

"There is more tradition and formality in the northern part of the state which has a climate to shut out for part of the year," she says. "In Southern California, the outdoors is a focal point. Neutrals or light, cheerful colors predominate. We really care about comfort, and our casual way of living precludes delicate furnishings."

Val Arnold agrees: "Because of our weather and orientation to the outdoors, we don't need as much furniture as they do in New York, Washington or Minneapolis, so there is a cleaner, barer look here."

If you were to hire Arnold, based in LA and San Francisco, to do "the look," you might get — as did one out-of-state client — bleached floors, plastered walls, a minimum of architectural detailing, cotton Dhurrie rugs, overstuffed white sofas, a round table and four large upholstered chairs in every public room, a media center with an oversized TV set and plenty of home entertainment equipment, large, leafy tropical plants and a few "stage props" such as a large wooden ball or a huge conch shell.

Comparing California style to what's going down in the rest of the country, Sally Sirkin Lewis says: "We have less clutter and use fewer decorative elements, and we don't go against the style of the building. If the building isn't English, we probably wouldn't do an English decorative theme.

"There's an openness in attitude that's related to our climate which is so incredible. We have greens and flowers all year long, blue skies and sun. Many houses face the ocean or the mountains so we don't heavily drape our windows."

Lewis is a native New Yorker who has helped define and popularize the Southern California style since moving there in 1970. Her Bloomingdale's room in the New York store features beige walls and oversize beige upholstered furniture, bleached art deco lounge chairs, a few large paintings, bare floors and "no chatchkas."

BETSY DRAKE LEWIS' DECORATING TIPS
DON'T OVERLOOK DECORATING VALUE OF THE COFFEE TABLE
A lot of people take coffee tables for granted and don't realize how they can magically transform a room.
There are many things to consider when evaluating your coffee table, or in choosing a new one.
The first thing is its beauty, because the right coffee table can become a center of attraction in itself.
Aside from its beauty, a coffee table should compliment the sofa it is in front of, and have the right height and size in relation to the sofa.
Speaking of size, many coffee tables are not adequate for all that you want them to hold. Don't over-crowd coffee tables; if practical, get a larger one, so it can hold flowers and other accessories and still have room for coffee cups, glasses, etc.
Don't overlook the possibilities of the different shapes of coffee tables available. Perhaps a circular one, or a rectangular one, or something in between is better for you. You might want to consider several smaller tables or one large one.
In any case, the choice of your coffee table or tables can do so much for your room, and we are here to assist with a good selection and help in getting the right one, or ones, for you.

Pet Enthusiasts Pick Animals That Are Easiest To Care For

By David Larsen
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

Convenience stores, convenience foods and now — it figures — convenience pets.

That would seem to be the trend. Dog ownership is becoming a thankless task, what with the obligation to walk them and keep them on leashes, to say nothing of the waste problem. And horses, with the high costs of upkeep and the lack of space to keep and ride them, are also fading in the stretch.

Coming on strong are cats, birds, reptiles and fish.

Not only is the time crunch of modern society a factor in this changing taste, so is the reality of economics. Pam Wasson of Los Angeles, who keeps a horse, has noticed something: "An increasing number of horse owners are coping with expenses by leasing out their horses. I would say that almost a third of the owners at (my) center have this arrangement now."

A November-released study of 40,000 American households, prepared for the Illinois-based American Veterinary Medical Association, showed that — apparently for the first time — pet cats outnumber pet dogs.

Since 1983, when the veterinary association conducted its last survey, the pet cat population nationwide increased from 52.2 million to 54.6 million, but the number of dogs decreased from 55.6 million to 52.4 million. The number of households owning dogs dropped to 38.2 percent in the current survey from 42.5 percent in 1983. Households with cats, however, increased to 30.5 percent from 28.4 percent in 1983.

Dr. Richard Polsky, who operates Animal Behavior Counseling Services Inc. in Los Angeles, said that "In the last six years, my cases involving cats have increased from 15 percent to 40 percent."

"Nowadays, when the pet is a dog, there is more and more likelihood that it will be a larger, protective type such as a German shepherd or Doberman," Polsky said.

C. Michael Troutman, president of Charles, Charles Research Group, which conducted the veterinary association survey, theorized on the reasons that meows are replacing barks:

— The nation has more two-income families, which probably means less time available for the care that a dog needs.

— Leash laws have become more stringent.

— Municipalities increasingly are requiring waste cleanups after a dog has been walked.

As for horses, the percentage of ownership decreased the most in the veterinary survey, while pet birds posted the greatest percentage increase: The pet bird population increased by 24.2 percent, cats increased by 4.6 percent, dogs decreased by 5.8 percent and horses decreased by 6 percent. (No statistics on fish were given.)

The survey covered in each state the percentage of households owning the four major pet types and found that Oregon rated highest for cats, Nevada for dogs, Idaho for horses and Wyoming for birds.

Make of the statistics what you will. Many remain loyal to the equine and the canine.

"Sure, Dexter is expensive, but I love him too much to give him up," horse owner Wasson of Los Angeles was saying. She was referring to the horse she has owned for two years, and which she keeps in a stable.

Until recently, she was an advertising executive. Even when she and her husband, Fred, comprised a two-income family (he is with a real estate firm), Dexter was something of a luxury.

Now, in order to help defray part of the cost with one income in the family, she barters her horse-wise services as a barn manager. "The barn has 40 horses, and I do such things as exercising some of them, buying the food, helping the farrier.

"The room and board for Dexter is $240 a month, and I am paying Swedish dressage trainers $400 a month, so I had to do something. Being barn manager pays for the dressage training."

The cost could be even more burdensome. Wasson said her horse is in a lower rent district; owners of animals in stables like those she manages pay $340 a month, which buys such amenities as enclosed stalls and more grooms.

Another owner at the equestrian center, a secretary who asked that her name not be used, said she moonlights selling Avon products in order to help with the $240 monthly boarding expense. "I know of some former horse owners who had to sell recently because their children reached college age, and they had to cut back somewhere," she said.

And though owning a dog nowadays may be fighting a trend, it matters not to people such as Karen Payne, a Los Angeles psychologist. "I prefer dogs over other pets because of their capacity to form bonds and companionships with humans," says Payne, who has a schnauzer and two Shar-peis. "Dogs have a loving nature, and respond to training and love."

And the work? "It's a sacrifice one makes for the benefits one gets. I regard my dogs as friends rather than pets."

Be it a dog or cat or one of the other creatures kept in homes, Los Angeles psychologist Janet Ruckert spoke about something else that is new:

"Not too long ago the scene was that when a child returned home from school, the child would be greeted at the door by the mother and the pet.

"Now, more likely, the child will walk the dog or take care of the cat, and they will be at the door to greet the mother and father coming back from work. In some ways, the pet is child sitting until the parents get home."

Ruckert also said she gets the feeling that more single adults own pets than used to be the case.

"People in Los Angeles, for instance, can be very isolated and lonesome. Pets are a solution to this. And some pets can be a way to meet other single people."

Today's Midwives Shattering Old Stereotypes

By JoAnne C. Broadwater
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

BALTIMORE, Md. — It's not unusual for new acquaintances to express surprise when they learn that Janice Emerling is a midwife.

"The first thing they say is that they didn't know that midwives are still around delivering babies," Emerling said. "They think midwives were only around for their grandmothers."

"They also think we didn't have any formal preparation," added Lisa Paine, another local midwife who expects to earn her doctorate degree this summer from the Johns Hopkins University School of Hygiene and Public Health. "And there's a widespread misconception that we deliver all of our babies at home. In fact, 85 percent of midwife-attended births are in hospitals and 11 percent in birthing centers."

Dodging old stereotypes is an occupational hazard for today's midwives. While providing obstetrical and gynecological care for another generation of women, this new breed of skilled professionals is also working to dispel old images and establish a sound reputation in the field of medicine.

They are not just midwives but certified nurse-midwives. Their business cards display RN's and CNM's and strings of other letters indicating advanced degrees in fields ranging from public health to educational psychology to law. Their resumes list teaching posts at medical and nursing schools, policy-making positions in government and research projects in maternal and child health.

Those with law degrees might be consultants to nurse-midwives in the areas of malpractice or medical ethics. Others may work as missionaries in developing countries to help improve the care provided to mothers and babies there.

Emerling started her nursing career at a Boston hospital and then worked in labor and delivery at the University of Maryland Medical System Hospital for five years. She earned a master's degree in maternal and child health and attended an 18-month midwifery school in England. She then went to Arizona for a refresher course for foreign-trained midwives.

Now she works at a Baltimore clinic providing pre-natal care and family planning services and is on call to deliver babies for a colleague's private practice every other weekend. The 35-year-old native New Yorker is the chairperson of the Maryland Chapter of the American College of Nurse-Midwives, a membership organization that sets standards for the profession through accreditation and certification.

Paine joined the Air Force at age 21 and became a midwife. In ten years of service, she attained the rank of captain, earned a master's degree in nurse-midwifery and taught in the Air Force midwifery program. Now 33 and a civilian, she's director of the Nurse Midwifery Service at the Johns Hopkins Hospital as well as the founding chairperson of the Division of Research of the American College of Nurse-Midwives.

"Nurse-midwives need to take a greater lead in research," Paine said. "We've been criticized as being too low-tech, too voodoo. We've been criticized for using procedures that have not been validated. We need to develop a uniform data collection instrument to document the processes and outcomes of our care."

Paine and her partner, nurse-midwife Carolyn Gegor, have a small practice, delivering between three and five babies per month. Mrs. Gegor is also a sonographer, using ultrasound visualizations to study the fetus in the uterus. She parlayed her skills in obstetrics and sonography into a specialty in fetal assessment. Now she uses ultrasound as one tool to evaluate the health of the fetus and determine if medical intervention — from bed rest for the mother to medication to early delivery — is needed.

The two women are also on the faculty of the Johns Hopkins University School of Medicine.

"There are not a lot of nurse-midwives involved in teaching physicians," Mrs. Gegor, 40, said. "But we're hoping it will be a trend. Midwives are the experts in normal births. Our focus is on what is normal instead of looking at what is illness."

Impressive credentials notwithstanding, the growing popularity of midwives may be a reflection of their low-tech management of normal, healthy pregnancies and births in a world dominated by high technology medicine. Midwives are noted for their personalized attention and the amount of time they spend with each patient, "allowing normal processes to happen" during labor and delivery, one practitioner said.

Until the 1970's, the work of the midwife was confined primarily to remote areas with very poor populations. Then consumers started looking for options in childbirth and the demand for midwife services began to rise. In the decade from 1976 to 1986, the number of nurse-midwives doubled and the total births they attended tripled.

"We're still in the growing stages," said Sandra Hvidsten, communications coordinator for the American College of Nurse-Midwives. And with consumers, hospitals, physicians, health maintenance organizations and clinics all demanding their services, there are more jobs than there are applicants.

At an average salary of $33,000, the nurse-midwife can be "very cost effective," while also "freeing the physician to care for the high-risk patients," Hvidsten said. Nurse-midwives have a professional association with a physician, and a patient who becomes high-risk may be transferred to the doctor's care.

There are about 4,000 certified nurse-midwives in the United States, all registered nurses with advanced education in midwifery. They differ from lay midwives who have learned their trade either through apprenticeships or at a lay midwifery training program. It is illegal for lay midwives to practice in some states. "They are controversial," Hvidsten said. "You don't have a standard to compare them to."

The United States has 24 institutions which offer accredited nurse-midwifery programs that average from one to two years. Most offer master's programs. There are also a few certificate and doctoral programs.

To be certified, a nurse-midwife must pass a national examination and also meet state licensing requirements. Continuing education is mandatory to keep skills up to date, Hvidsten said.

Investigator Spins Doodles Into Artistry

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BALDWYN, Miss. — With pen in hand, Buddy Spight can turn the word "dull" into an art all its own.

It's not quite calligraphy. And it's not quite Old English. It's just the Baldwyn doodler's way of recording his thoughts on paper in a fancy sort of way.

Spight, a criminal investigator for the District Attorney's Office of the 1st Judicial District since 1976, is known for his quick hand in the courtroom. During court sessions, Spight often finds himself with nothing but time on his hands while he waits to testify or for the jury to return a verdict.

So he makes the most of that time by picking up a pen and writing whatever comes to mind.

If you've ever sat next to Spight during a courtroom case, most likely you've walked away with a famous quote, a biblical passage or just your name done in fancy writ.

"I'm no professional," Spight said, taking a flat-head pen from his shirt pocket and positioning it between his fingers. "I can sit down and drink a cup of coffee and I'll be doodling or printing as long as I can get me something to write on."

As a young boy growing up in Lee County, Spight never had art lessons, but he would find himself doodling in class rather than listening to the history lesson, he said.

In the fourth grade, Spight worked for Claude Gentry at the town theater, selling popcorn and tickets. It was under Gentry's guidance that Spight learned to appreciate the art of lettering.

"Claude was one of the few in the state who could do gold-leaf painting," he said. "I would stand there and marvel at him, and that's where I got my love for it."

But it wasn't until Spight was grown that he began practicing his rendition of calligraphy.

Gentry remembers Spight's talent of turning the alphabet into a true art.

"He's good at lettering," Gentry said. "He used to watch me do signs. You don't have to have art lessons to do sign work. I took a correspondence course, so you just have to have the will to do it."

As Spight sat in the empty courtroom, he began twisting and turning the cartridge-filled flat-head pen between two fingers and the fancy lettering began to take form.

Pressing ever so gently, Spight connected bold lines to thin ones, and when his phrase was complete, he placed the pen back in his shirt pocket.

"I'll modify a few of the letters, like the 'G' just so it will look like a 'G,'" Spight said, his voice echoing through the room.

And if he's in someone's office on business, Spight will take in the framed documents around him, noticing the fancy lettering on diplomas and certificates.

Muskogee Still Working To Outlive Country Song

By Jules Loh
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MUSKOGEE, Okla. — According to Police Chief Gary Sturm, most of the robbings and thievings and shootings in this town, as in towns large and small across America, are accountable to the drug trade.

Whoa now, chief. Haven't you heard the song?

Anyone over 35 who owns a radio and has an ear for country music has to believe that if there is one drug-free zone anywhere in the land it has to be Muskogee, Okla.

Twenty years ago — has it been that long? — Merle Haggard, the songwriter and guitar picker, put Muskogee on the map as a place where true Americans lived and had their red, white and blue values well in hand.

Muskogee, he sang, during that era of protest, was where nobody smoked marijuana, burned draft cards or wore hippie sandals. Instead they waved Old Glory, pitched woo and wore manly leather boots.

Sing along with ol' Merle:

"I'm proud to be an Okie from Muskogee,

"A place where even squares can have a ball..."

What went wrong, chief?

"Well, the song didn't describe Muskogee then or now," Carl Sturm was saying the other day. Sturm and has lived here all his life. He was just out of high school when the song was sweeping the charts and making everybody in town a bit dizzy.

Sturm is indeed proud of his hometown and believes its people are as true-blue as any Americans.

But he shakes his head at the irony that Muskogee, of all places, would be singled out for the sake of a clever rhyme as the sort of town that might inspire a Norman Rockwell.

"Of course people smoked marijuana in Muskogee," he says.

"I didn't, but I knew you could buy it in bars and nightclubs around town. It was sold in matchboxes, $5 a box I believe. You could also get amphetamines and barbiturates.

"But marijuana wasn't grown around here. All that stuff was imported.

"I think Merle Haggard understood that Oklahoma has always been slow about picking up on trends from the East and West coasts. Even something as innocent as the price of gasoline. When gas went up to $1.25 in L.A. it was still 80-cents in Muskogee. When it got to $1.25 in Muskogee it was back to 80-cents in L.A.

"Today they've gotten around to growing some of the best marijuana in the United States near here — now that cocaine is big everywhere else.

"We busted some guys recently with some crack that the Los Angeles police department identified as coming from there. So now we have crack here in Muskogee, and it has become a major problem. We're catching guys setting up laboratories out in the backwoods."

"Gary's right," says Jim East, a boyhood friend of the police chief. "What we resented was being pictured as behind the times, although we were. We hated that song."

Jim East graduated in 1972, two years after the town fathers, perhaps sensing a national trend, finally merged the all-black Manual High School with the all-white Central High School into one, Muskogee High School. Jim East now is a reporter in Tulsa.

"Back then," he says, "the term Okie was a put-down, like hick or redneck. Merle Haggard changed that, I'll say that for him.

"But at the time, people taunted us with the song. I was on the Muskogee High wrestling team. I remember one out-of-town match that wound up in a fistfight when the other guys called us Okies from Muskogee. Sang it at us.

"When they put the damn song on the cafeteria jukebox we yanked the cord and shoved the box down a flight of stairs. When we heard that Merle Haggard was coming to Muskogee for a performance, we plotted to hide in the bed of a pickup and waylay him on Highway 69. We didn't, but I didn't go to the performance, either.

"We were prouder of Muskogee being the one-time stomping ground of Ma Barker and Pretty Boy Floyd and other bad people. That was its real heritage."

After 20 years, any bitterness over the song seems to have mellowed.

"I used to tell people I was from Tulsa," says Jim East.

Now Muskogeeans regard The Song as something best forgotten from long ago, like a broken Indian treaty. It was, after all, just another episode in the life of a town that doesn't require a catchy country parody to define its personality and style.

Was Muskogee really the stomping ground of desperadoes?

"Yes it was," says Chief Sturm, "and take a look at this."

He took from a file cabinet a copy of "Men" magazine with a feature titled "Muskogee: Sin Mill of the Southwest." The story detailed wide—open gambling, bootlegging and prostitution.

The edition was dated 1953. That would have been four years after the feds put away Muskogee Sheriff Eddie Briggs, known as the kingpin of Muskogee's bootleggers, and two years after Leslie Scott was elected constable despite three arrests for running gambling operations.

Even during the '60s, Muskogeeans didn't seem to have much truck with reformers. In 1964 somebody dynamited Police Chief Earl Newton's car. In 1968 somebody shot up Police Chief George Spence's home. He quit and his successor was chased out of town along with the city manager and a reform-minded city councilman, whose music store was bombed. That was the real Muskogee.

"Here's another keepsake," Sturm says, fetching a device with dice enclosed in a plastic bubble. "It's called a jiggler. Hundreds of them were made in a garage here in Muskogee. We raided one place that had a 300-pound magnet under the dice table. Jigglers made sure nobody could switch the dice or even touch them.

"There's no more regular backroom gambling now, though. Too risky.

"Our criminals are more inept, too. Not long ago a couple of guys lay in wait for a big winner in a poker game, shot him, and got away with about 20 bucks. They reached in the wrong pocket. He had several thousand in the one they didn't turn inside out.

"As for prostitution, we closed down our last brothel last year. It was run by an old classmate of mine, John Lyman — a massage parlor in the Bambi Motel. Since then the motel burned down. I think the neighbors...probably are glad."

Moonshine? A Muskogeean, Gov. J. Howard Edmondson, put an end to it by persuading Oklahoma voters to legalize liquor in 1960, the second to last state to do so, a step ahead of Mississippi.

"There's still a little moonshining going on," says Chief Sturm, "but just for home consumption. You know, for tradition."

Is Muskogee finally catching up to The Song after 20 years, getting straight-laced? "A nice thought," says Sturm.

As Lonzo "Slick" Smith recalls it, a kid came into his barbecue joint and asked where he could get some grass.

Slick has been in business at the same spot on Shawnee Boulevard for 28 years. His barbecue can hold its own with any in the Southwest, but it is his only product.

"I had some old ratty Mexican cigarettes somebody had given me," he recalls. "They were terrible to smoke and worse to look at. I handed the kid a few of them and he handed me $5.

"He never came back, but the word got out that I was dealing the stuff."

Over the years, Muskogee's politics have been as rollicking as Muskogee's vice. On one Election Day a ballot box was tossed into the Arkansas River lest it be counted.

Other candidates would include, for example, a Muskogee watchmaker named Wilbur Wright. Not a bad name for a politician.

In 1970, the year The Song was at its peak of popularity, Wilbur paid the filing fee and entered his name for labor commissioner, an obscure state office long since without purpose but somehow left on the ballot.

Wilbur won unopposed.

Soon he was caught padding his expense account. He pleaded guilty and resigned.

Not to be dismayed, next election he filed again. His primary opponent this time was a former state trooper named Will Rogers. Not a bad Oklahoma name either.

In a battle of names, the revered airplane inventor, dead 62 years, won over the sainted humorist, dead 39 years.

Bridge 'Aces' Left Their Impact On The Game

By Charles Richards
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

DALLAS — America's top names in bridge credit their success at cards to a wealthy Texan's "play for pay" offer two decades ago.

Dallas businessman Ira Corn, himself a bridge player, got tired of Italy dominating the world bridge championships. So, in 1968, he dealt himself a winning hand.

Corn recruited a handful of players — Bobby Wolff, Jim Jacoby, Mike Lawrence, Bobby Goldman and Billy Eisenberg — and offered them modest pay if they would come to Dallas and "work" full time at playing bridge and honing their games.

"I joined them a year later," says Bob Hamman, now 50 and the world's No. 1-ranked player. "We'd play a lot of tournaments. A computer would deal certain hands so we could practice the type hands we needed work on."

Corn dubbed his recruits the "Aces." They were required to go through a training regimen as if they were professional athletes.

"It was approached in that fashion, as a matter of fact, like an athletic team," Hamman says. "The pay wasn't great. I believe single guys got $800 a month and the married guys got $1,000. But it wasn't bad at all.

"It was great experience, all against top-echelon players. I thought it was terrific, getting paid to do something I liked so well."

A secretary recorded every play they made in their practice sessions, and the spotlight was beamed on good plays and bad alike.

In 1970, the Aces brought the United States its first world bridge championship since 1959. They repeated in 1971.

"In very short order, in respect to American competition, we became professionals against amateurs," Hamman says.

Then, in 1971, the Aces broke up, "and it was back to the pack," Hamman says.

But Corn's project had a lasting influence on the quality of U.S. bridge.

"That's evident if you look at the record of the players on the team since it broke up," Hamman says. "Every player became a rock-solid player and became tougher mentally."

Since the formation of the Aces in 1968, the United States sent a team to the world championship only once without at least one member of the Aces on it.

Jacoby says the standard of bridge also was improved by a wealth of literature about the game, much of it written by Aces members or influenced by their innovations.

Jacoby, who is a stock broker in Dallas, and Wolff write syndicated bridge columns that appear daily in newspapers throughout the United States. Wolff and Hamman tried unsuccessfully to market a computer software program that bridge players could use to improve their play. They couldn't come up with anything that could meet their standards.

Lawrence, who now lives in Berkeley, Calif., was recognized as the bridge author of the '70s and '80s, and a recent survey listed him as the No. 1 bridge author today. He has written 12 books on various aspects of bidding, play and defense.

Lawrence also is regarded as one of the foremost instructors, traveling across the country to hold weeklong seminars for classes of 25 or more bridge players.

"I certainly would be the first to credit Ira Corn for the fact that I am a bridge author at all, or that I ever began teaching classes," Lawrence says.

In 1969, after Lawrence had been with the Aces for a year, Corn told them he was contemplating writing a bridge column and asked each of them to write five practice bridge columns. He liked Lawrence's easy, conversational style of writing and called him in.

"He told me I wrote very well but that instead of a column, he wanted me to write a book," Lawrence says. "A month later, he said, 'Michael, you are going to give a series of bridge classes in five weeks — here are the students who will be in your class, and this is where you are to go.' I was literally terrified, but he made me do it."

From the first book and the first classes came other books and other classes.

Last October, Lawrence began a monthly newsletter — the first major venture of its kind in bridge.

"I am attempting to combine about 80 percent judgment with 20 percent system," Lawrence says. "Hopefully I will find the right combination."

When the Aces were formed, "there were probably no more than 20 bridge books of acceptable tournament standard," Lawrence says. "Now, there are probably 500."

The American Contract Bridge League — the governing body for tournament bridge play — has made a major push to bring new players into the game, as evidenced by a growing number of tournament events in which novices may play only against other novices.

The game is still dominated at the higher levels by the big names of a decade ago. Few new impact bridge professionals have emerged.

"Bridge players are getting better, without doubt, but the same plyers are still the dominant players," Lawrence says. "I'm not really sure why that is."

Some believe it's because there's little financial reward in bridge, such as awaits those who excel in some other competitions.

Hamman and Wolff, both of whom still live in Dallas, are ranked individually as the No. 1 and 2 players in the world and together are regarded as the top partnership in the world.

They were part of teams that won four world bridge championships over the past 10 years.

In October, they teamed with Jacoby, Jeff Meckstroth, Eric Rodwell and Seymon Deutsch to emerge No. 1 from a field of more than 50 teams in Venice to give the United States the only world championship that had eluded it — the World Men's Team Olympiad.

Deutsch, a Laredo, Texas, businessman and the only member of the six-man U.S. team who never before had won a world championship, was ecstatic.

"It's fantastic, it's unreal," he says. "It's the thrill of a lifetime."

Some bridge professionals are on the tournament trail virtually every week of the year. But unlike sports such as tennis and golf, 80 percent to 90 percent of the tournament field is made up of ordinary bridge players of varying levels of expertise.

A trophy is awarded to the player who wins the most matchpoints each year. Neither Hamman nor Wolff has ever come close to winning it.

"If you go after it, it pretty well is a full-time venture," Hamman says. "I play a lot of tournaments, but not 40 a year, which is pretty well what you'd have to play. It gets to be quite a grind, going to Boise, Idaho, one week, and then to Butte, Mont., and then to Chicago."

Still, Hamman concedes that if thousands of dollars in prize money were at stake, "that would be different." He would be in the hunt.

Some financial reward is available. At every tournament, some players pay professionals $400 to $500 a day to be their partners for various two-session events — about seven hours of play.

For the first time in years, Jacoby traveled the tournament circuit last year. Playing sometimes with other pros and sometimes with paying clients, he emerged as an easy victor in the 1988 matchpoint chase.

New Doctors Discovery

Weight Loss Pill Approved for U.S. Gov't. Patent

'Lazy Way' to Lose Weight Already Sweeping U.S.

BEVERLY HILLS, CA (Special)—An amazing new weight loss pill called "fat-magnet" has recently been developed and perfected by two prominent doctors at a world famous hospital in Los Angeles that reportedly "guarantees" you steady fat loss and calorie reduction by simply taking their tested and proven new pill.

The U.S. government has just approved the doctors claims for a hard-to-get patent that confirms "there has never been anything like their fat-bonding pill process before." It is a totally new major scientific breakthrough and is revolutionizing the weight loss industry.

You Can "Eat Normally"

Best of all, "you can continue to eat your favorite foods and you don't have to change your normal eating habits. You can start losing fat and reduce calories from the very first day, until you achieve the ideal weight you desire without exercising".

Flushes Fat Out of Body

The new pill is appropriately called the "fat-magnet" pill because it breaks into thousands of particles, each acting like a tiny magnet, "attracting" and trapping many times its size in undigested fat particles. Then, all the trapped fat and calories are naturally "flushed" right out of your body because they cannot be absorbed.

Within 2 days you should notice a change in the color of your stool, caused by the fat particles being eliminated.

"Automatically" Lose Fat

According to one of the inventors, Dr. William Shell, heart specialist and associate professor of medicine at UCLA medical school, "the new fat-bonding process is a "lazy way" to lose weight because the pills alone "automatically" reduce calories by eliminating dietary fat. It is 100% safe and not a drug."

The fat-magnet pills are already sweeping the country with glowing reports of weight loss from formerly overweight people in all walks of life who are now slimmer, trimmer and more attractive again.

Now Available to the Public

If you are trying to lose 20, 50, 100 pounds or more, you can order your supply of these "no-risk" highly successful fat-magnet pills directly from the doctors' exclusive manufacturer only (includes optional calorie-reduction plan for even better results). Send $20 for a 90 pill supply (+$3 handling), or $35 for a 180 pill supply (+$3 handling), to: Fat-Magnet, 9016 Wilshire Blvd., Dept. W634, Beverly Hills, CA 90211. Hungarian born Elsa Forbes — Dancer, Teacher, Family Woman, Social Worker

Fond Memories Of Show Business, Of Two Good Marriages

Text By Jerry Raynor, Photograph By Shannon Wolfe

Elizabeth "Elsa" Varga Richards Forbes is a firm believer that the good things in life far outweigh life's disappointments, tragedies and regrets.

Greenville has been home to Elsa Forbes for the past 10 years, after increments of time lived in Hungary, New York and California.

"I dearly love Greenville, all except for the pesky mosquitoes," Mrs. Forbes said during a lunch/interview in her sunny kitchen overlooking a green back yard dotted with massive oak trees. "And don't hesitate to make known that I'm fond of Pitt County's golden product, its tobacco. Like Bette Davis, I love to smoke. Of course," she laughed, "don't forget to mention that I'm much, much younger than Miss Davis."

Greenville entered the life of Elsa Forbes through her marriage to Pitt County native Alfred Forbes, Jr. "Don't ever let anyone tell you," she emphasized, "that life can only include one great love. Not so. I was blessed with two perfectly lovely marriages, first to Kink Richards, then to Alf.

"My five years with Alf before he died four and one-half years ago, however, were very special.

"He was my first love," she said, "something warm and dear in the hearts of women, if they are honest enough to admit it. The fact that 38 years passed between our young romance and the time I became his bride made our love a precious thing.

"In years, we were neither young, but our marriage made us young again. We both cherished every moment of our lives together, and I'm grateful for every day we had."

Hungarian Born

Broadway dancer, model, traveler, housewife, mother, teacher, church and social worker, Elsa Forbes was born Elizabeth Varga in the town of Miscolc, Hungary, not far distant from Budapest. "Miscolv is much like Greenville," she said. "It's a small, friendly place, home of a fine technical institute."

The reason she was born in Hungary, not in the U.S., was "because my father, Moritz Varga, who lived in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, was declared personna non grata, labeled a political agitator for 10 years of work to organize unions there.

"My mother, Rose, was quite willing to return to Hungary," Mrs. Forbes said. "She had given birth to two sons in Pittsburgh. The oldest died young, which literally shattered her. Hungarian mothers place great store in their aspirations for the first-born son.

"The second son, Henry, several years older than myself, was for a long time something of a stranger to me until after we were adults, when we became good friends.

"Soon after my parents returned to Hungary, I was born," she said. "A girl was not expected, so within 10 months my brother Carl arrived.

"My childhood in Hungary was a happy time. The friends, the travels, and above all, the exciting festivals and the marvelous gypsy music which still gives me a thrill whenever I hear it."

When Mrs. Forbes was 12, the Varga family returned to America, settling in New York City. "I've never been certain what brought my father back to America, or much about his business," she said. "We lived in a fashionable apartment on Riverside overlooking the Hudson River.

"There I was, overly protected by my Hungarian mother, speaking only a little English. Worst of all, I suffered the hurt those first years of being an outsider, not part of the circle of girls in school.

"I made a commitment to myself then that I would learn to speak the best English in the world, to cultivate a big vocabulary."

She lit another cigarette and for a moment interrupted the story of her life to observe, "English is such a beautiful language, strong, expressive, beautiful. It breaks my heart today to come into contact with young people who do not realize the majesty of English, who limit themselves to oft-repeated, stale expressions.

"It's truly a modern tragedy," she said. "I want them to use, to cherish this grand heritage."

Modeling, Show Business

After graduating from high school, Mrs. Forbes attended college, majoring in education. "One day, shopping for clothes with my mother at Saks on Fifth Avenue, I tried on a neat black-and-white suit," she said. "The buyer happened by and stopped. 'Young lady,' she said, 'you should be a model.'

"That was at the time that clothes emphasizing shoulders were coming into fashion, the kind made popular by Joan Crawford.

"My mother was delighted, and agreed for me to undertake this, provided that it would not interfere with my schooling. I loved it, the attention I received and certainly, it was nice to get free some of the lovely clothes that I modeled."

The modeling at Saks was soon followed by being photographed for shoes to illustrate brochures "for several New York stores, like Lord and Taylor and Bloomingdale's."

It was during this time that "my older brother, Henry, began to include Carl and myself in his social life, when he was no longer the aloof older brother," she said. "Henry took us to see shows, musicals like 'No, No, Nanette' and the gorgeous spectacles such as the Ziegfield Follies, George White Scandals and the Earl Carroll Vanities.

"Several times Henry and Carl told me, 'Elsa, you can sing and dance, why don't you try breaking into show business?'

"I was flattered as any girl would be. Finally, when I realized they were not merely teasing, I decided to give it a try."

Mrs. Forbes' first theatrical venture was a musical, "Five O'Clock Girl."

"It played for a year at the 44th Street Theater on Broadway," she said. "I was elated. Made $100 a week, a phenomenal salary in those Depression days."

When the show closed, she and her best friend, "an Irish girl, Alice O'Brien, summoned our courage to audition for the Ziegfield follies. That was in the last years of Mr.

Special Tribute Paid To Hollywood's Bette Davis

By Bob Thomas
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — The red brick apartment house just south of the Sunset Strip is so handsomely crafted and so venerable by California standards it has been designated a national monument. So has the lady on the fourth floor.

Bette Davis has been accorded almost every honor possible for a film actress: two Academy Awards, the American Film Institute and Kennedy Center awards for lifetime achievement and more. One has been missing, and that was corrected April 24 when she was honored by the Film Society of Lincoln Center.

"This is sort of the last big one I haven't received, and I'm very pleased. It took me a long time to receive the Kennedy Center. So I say, better late than never. I must say I've never gotten blase about honors. It's great, it's wonderful," she said.

The apartment is spacious yet bears little evidence of her studio years. The exception is a large painting of Davis, around 1950 when she made "All About Eve." The room was fragrant with floral bouquets sent for her 81st birthday April 5. "It was a wonderful family day, lots of flowers, lots of calls," she said.

The actress looked stylish in a black top and black skirt filled with yellow daisies. Half a lifetime after the portrait on the wall, her face shows evidence of severe illness. Yet her ash-blonde hair is as lovely as ever, and she retains a regal beauty. The voice still crackles with no-nonsense authority, and she still unapologetically smokes cigarettes.

In a recent interview, she sat in an easy chair, leaning against a small pillow bearing the legend in needlepoint: "No Guts, No Glory." Is that a Davis motto?

"Oh, yes. Totally," she declared. "It's the truth. To dare to be hated — that takes guts."

Her recent history has borne out her credo. She survived a mastectomy and a disfiguring stroke. She weathered an attack by daughter B.D. Hyman in the 1985 book, "My Mother's Keeper." Davis' own book, "This 'n' That" (1987) was rejected by a publisher, but she advertised it in Publisher's Weekly, found another publisher and had a best seller.

Last year, she left "Wicked Stepmother" in the middle of filming to have dental work in New York. Claiming differences with the director, she didn't return, and the thriller was finished without her.

She shrugs off such matters and talks more positively about other things, such as the miracle year of 1939, the greatest outpouring of movie classics in Hollywood history. Astonishingly, she starred in four memorable films that year: "Dark Victory," "Juarez," "The Private Lives of Elizabeth and Essex" and "The Old Maid."

This is also the golden anniversary of "Gone With the Wind," "The Wizard of Oz," "Wuthering Heights," "Stagecoach" and "Mr.

ECU Graduate Juan Carrillo's Dream For Central America

Juan Carrillo has a dream he hopes to see come to fruition in the not too distant future. "I want very much to see, to be part of an increased interest in music, in art throughout the Central American countries. I hope especially to help expand choral music in these countries," he said during an interview in his studio room in the School of Art, East Carolina University.

Carrillo has been studying at East Carolina since August, 1987. He will receive his masters degree in choral music next week, "after which I will leave Greenville to return to Costa Rica. I have a commitment to teach there for six months or maybe a year before I leave again to pursue a doctorate in music."

Choices of places to study for his doctoral degree include three options — the University of Southern California, Los Angeles; the University of Miami in Coral Gables, Florida or the University of Wisconsin, Madison. "I have applications in to these three places, so now I wait to hear."

During his graduate student studies at ECU, Carrillo has served as a teaching assistant.

"I will miss Greenville, the people in the music school and all my friends, but I have work to return to in Costa Rica. And I do look forward to rice and beans and some special vegetables I can't get here."

For years, there has been a close association between ECU and the University of Costa Rica at Hererdia near the capital city of San Jose, with an exchange of faculty and students taking place in several fields of education, including music.

"I chose ECU for my masters study because I liked the good things I'd heard from other Costa Ricans in the program. Every year, this exchange goes on with warm feelings all around."

A small town in the province of Usulutan in the country of El Salvador is Carrolli's place of birth. "I grew up there as a child, then moved to Nicaragua where I attended high school. After high school, I studied one year in Guatemala, and then moved to Costa Rica where I began studying at the University of Costa Rica."

Other than music, travel is "a great joy for me," Carrillo said. I especially like to travel when it's connected with music, like when I visited Europe with a touring Costa Rican chamber choir." Countries visited on the tour included Spain, France, Italy, Jugoslavia, Romania, Hungary, East and West Germany, Czechoslovakia, Poland and the USSR. "I am eager to do more traveling in future years."

Music, Carrillo recalled, "has been in my blood since very early. When I was only seven or eight, I remember very well my father used to sing and play the guitar. He was good, and got me involved and in love with music. When I went to Nicaragua, I kept on studying piano."

Both his mother and father are still living. "I have two sisters, both

Words To Help Write Poetry

WRITING POETRY: WHERE POEMS COME FROM AND HOW TO WRITE THEM. By David Kirby Boston, Mass. The Writer, Inc. 101 pages. Softcover, $7.95.

"I figure poetry is a way of beating the odds. The world is never going to give you everything you want, so why not look elsewhere?" says prize-winning professor of English at Florida State University, David Kirby. His book aims for the novice and practicing poet as well.

In part one, "What is Poetry?" Kirby defines what a poem is NOT. Believing that "hormone-driven adolescents" learned about poetry in an all-is black-or-white manner from a harried schoolteacher in an overcrowded classroom, the author equates the general statement, "Prose is the stuff that doesn't rhyme, poetry is the stuff that does," with the statement, "All humans are male." Both statements are partially true. "Many human beings are not male, and many poems are unrhymed," he says.

Kirby goes beyond traditional definitions found in many of today's "How to's" on poetry writing. He clearly presents the basics of writing and the basics of understanding the nature of poetry. He also demonstrates, with examples of students and master's poems, how to write about those meaningful subjects deep within each of us.

In part two, "How to Write a Poem," Kirby presents rules and suggestions for writing poetry. He believes that "just about every poet of any stature has begun by mastering the fashions of the day and then moving forward from there." Using as examples works of e.e. cummings, T.S. Eliot and other innovators, the author suggests that would-be poets, in addition to the obvious grammatical rules: 1) start with small themes, 2) write about what they remember, 3) be a sponge, learning all they can from their favorite poets, 4) play dumb and stop to figure things out before they begin, 5) reverse their approach when they're on the verge of saying the obvious, 6) work on several poems at once, 7) take enough time with each poem to make it theirs, 8) find a perfect reader, not mother or roommate.

In part three, "The Poet's Toolbox," Kirby offers solutions for overcoming writer's block. He also gives a little advice on how to get poetry published.

Although the third part of the book doesn't tell readers anything they can't read in last year's "How To," it tells them without intimidating them.

The glossary provides definitions to basic poetic terms as well as some found in more advanced books.

In agreement with William Stafford, (that we are all poets as children), Kirby encourages us to get out of our early retirement from writing poetry. He suggests we forget about the world giving us everything we want; he says we need to find the poet within ourselves. In that poetic discovery, we will gain "a life within" the one with which we daily struggle.

FROM SHEPPARD MEMORIAL LIBRARY

By Diane Taylor
SHEPPARD MEMORIAL LIBRARY

Spring is the time of the year when many people do spring house cleaning. It is also the time when people are hit with the urge to redecorate while they are sprucing up their homes. Several new books at the library may help give people some interesting decorating tips.

"Come Home to Country" by Better Homes and Gardens, is more than a book on one decorating style. As the editors explain, country is really a combination of different styles that results in a pleasant, comfortable surrounding that people can feel at home in. From room settings, to window treatments, to folk art, to country gardens, this book shows hundreds of ideas that are sure to help with decorating problems.

People who like the formal look may want to read "Laura Ashley Living Rooms" by Kate Corbett-Winder. This book covers a variety of decorating styles for living rooms, drawing rooms, sitting rooms, family rooms, libraries and garden rooms. The author explains how to choose a style to suit the room, how to choose a color scheme, how to position furniture, what kind of curtains and blinds to use, what to do with floors and fireplaces, and how to choose the proper lighting.

Having plain, white walls may be the reason rooms look nondescript. "Decorating With Paint" by Jocasta Innes explains the different techniques used to create unique backgrounds that turn plain white walls into works of art. Some of the techniques covered are: stencilling, spatter, lacquer, marble, stipple and sponge techniques and trompe l'oeil. The author demonstrates how the use of a transparent glaze or a transparent wash instead of opaque paint can completely change the appearance of a room. The author also shows how to use the same techniques on furniture to create customized furnishings.

Whether one is remodeling a kitchen or simply deciding what to do with that problem wall in the living room, these books, and many others available at the library, should give many helpful suggestions.

New J.W. Rivers Poems Mix Fantasy, Mystery, Reality

THE LADY IN ONCE-WHITE SHOES. Poems of the Colonial Fronter. By J.W. Rivers. Tampa, Florida. American Studies Press. Paper. 54 pages. $6. (Available by mail from: American Studies Press, Inc., 13511 Palmwood Lane, Tampa, Florida, 33624.)

The comparison may not be valid from the viewpoint of many readers, but my personal response to poetry invariably entails equating the arrangement, the ryhthm, and the sound of words to parallel emotions experienced in listening to music.

Thus, J.W. Rivers' new (and fourth) collection of poems, "The Lady in Once-White Shoes. Poems of the Colonial Frontier," evokes a sensation primarily akin to the cadances of music by von Weber. In contrast, Rivers' 1986 magnificant collection, "When The Owl Cries, Indians Die," has left an impression etched in my memory that evokes the soaring, majestic harmonies of Verdi's music.

Musical comparisons or not, whatever format he writes in (and he uses many) the results are consistent in formulating poems that are trenchant in the highest degree. This is true whether the subject deals with people, emotions, landscapes or the idealized, yet often earthy interpretation of historical events.

Like any truly gifted wordsmith, Rivers imparts magic in the way he shapes a poem. This volume deals, like his other poetry, is an astonishing range of subjects.

Rivers, too, has the delightful knack of surprising us with the expected and unexpected in juxtaposition that at first might confound our senses. This habit of challenging us in this manner, however, eventually leads to rewards more lasting than can ever be achieved in conventional poetic approaches.

Consider for example, the title reference to the lady in once-white shoes. Subtly, glimpses of the shoes are scattered here and there, as in the poem with the enticing title, "Basil Norris Recounts to Great-Grandson Leslie Incidents of His Travel in Virginia and Carolina," which begins . . . "Dry leaves cackled,/ Hags who'd survived their wits./ Near a winding worm fence/ Beneath an umbrella magnolia,/ A lady in sweat-damaged dress/ Stared at a wooden rooster. . ."

After a passage in the same poem when the narrator/traveler asks how far to Raleigh, a character named Diggs replies "No farther than to England . . . or to other people's dreams" and then offers a provocative vision by adding "See our young men crouching by creeks,/ Waiting for the nymphs more delicious/ Than belles of the New Bern Court."

Than a couple of verses later, Rivers' tells us . . ."Diggs turned to stare at his wife,/ Beloved and pale in once-white shoes,/ Who'd swallowed a surprise/ Amethyst brooch in the pie./ I checked it for imperfections, said Diggs,/ With a ten power jeweler's loupe.

This poem is typical of many in this volume in that it encompasses both fragments of shadows of a fantasy world — the distance to other people's dreams, waiting for nymphs; and concrete images of places and objects — Raleigh, England, New Bern, young men crouching by creeks, once-white shoes, and ordinary small things from nature — lichens, leaves, pebbles, oyster shells, bones and feathers.

Rivers dares to indulge in any literary format. In "The Passing of Patrick Diggs," for example, he uses a narrative prose form encapsulating a fascinating catalog of things seen on a trip — "Down from Wilmington, up from Charleston to my father's plantation, on dirt-and-shell roads running between twisted live oaks draped with moss, passing by palmetto clumps and towering pitcher plants and Venus-hair ferns and grapevines as thick as elephants' legs, carriages bearing a thousand people made their way. Gentlemen were shaved and groomed, dressed in lordly fashion after old portraits by Van Dyke. Their wives wore paints from China, perfume from Ceylon, lip salve from India."

This prose-style poem is the story of people on the way to the funeral of Patrick Diggs. Any who have ever traveled the coastal route between Wilmington and Charleston will recognize the authenticity of flora observed, and accept as possibly true the references to exotic costumes and cosmetics favored by people in long-ago Colonial days.

Rivers reaches into the web of early American history to suggest to us the complexity of our ethnic heritage — a Portuguese Jew in Rhode Island named Aaron Lopez-Flexner; nostalgia when "Modesty Silsbee Finds Her Father's Bible in a Chest"; the grief of native Americans in the loss of land and dignity, and referring back to the old world, Gottlieb's prayer outside of Lindenhausen.

Touches of the implausible, yet wonderfully imaginative passages are woven into some poems — in "The Marquis de Lafayette Steps Ashore in the New World," the reader is confronted with this startling scenario — "Tawny as sand dunes,/ Lifeguards in flesh-colored briefs/ Pump iron and spread their lats./ Blonds in bikinis rub themselves/ With cottonseed oil./ Azaleas peer from the forest.

In another of Rivers' succinct images of landscapes, the lifeguard replies — "Proceed, sir . . . If you pass burned-out trailer camps/ Reconstructed into mobile home communities,/ You surely are on your way." In Charleston LaFayette discovers — "Seated among ancestral statuary,/ A lady fans herself/ And eats she-crab soup."

J.W. Rivers is a grand storyteller — a dreamer of words who calls on his accumulated memories of years lived in Greenville, in Mexico, in South Carolina, his native Chicago and other places to fashion colorful tapestries of poems that linger in the mind, poems that inform and entertain and always, challenge the reader to think in new ways.

JERRY RAYNOR

(Editor's Note; Rivers, formerly a resident of Greenville, now lives in Winston-Salem. He studied in Mexico, and taught Spanish at Winthrop College, S.C. He publishes poetry and fiction in Spanish langauge journals, and currently is at work on "Distances Between," a new volume of poems, and "Fronteras de vapor," a book of short stories in Spanish about Mexico.)

N.C. CULTURAL RESOURCES

RALEIGH — The public is invited to the gallery opening and dedication of the Outer Banks History Center (OBHC) in Manteo at 2:30 p.m., May 7. The center is adjacent to the Elizabeth II visitor center. The center will contain materials on coastal North Carolina.

Featured in dedication ceremonies will be Dr. William S. Price Jr., director, Division of Archives and History; state Sen. Marc Basnight; William Powell, professor emeritus, UNC Department of History; David Stick, historian and Rhett White, chairman, OBHC Admisory Committee.

After the opening ceremony, visitors will tour the facility.

The Outer Banks History Center has materials, ranging from 400 year-old maps and charts to recent photographs, that are now available to the public. These rare books, maps, paintings, photographs and other coastal North Carolina Materials are parts of the once-private collections of several notable North Carolinians.

The new facility boasts collections of David Stick, well-known coastal writer; the Frank Stick collection of art; and photographs and promotional materials of the late Outer Banks photographer Aycock Brown.

The center is the culmination of 40 years of collecting and four years of development, according to Sue M. Hanes, operations officer.

In 1986, Stick officially donated his historical library of more than 25,000 items to the state. These, along with the other materials, are housed in the new 6,743 square-foot facility. The gallery uses materials from the collection to present an overview history of the Outer Banks.

The center's historical collection is the second largest assortment of North Caroliniana in the state and is the largest and most extensive storehouse of North Carolina coastal history in the world, according to Ms. Hanes.

With all this information concentrated for the first time in a single area, Ms. Hanes and other staff members are looking forward to the center's becoming a major resourse of benefit to the state.

"Although the current collection is sizeable, the stacks are large enough to accommodate substantial growth in the center's holdings. We will continue acquiring pieces of our coast's past, as well as current-day materials that will prove themselves just as valuable in the future," according to curator Wynne Dough.

Hours of operation for the reading room are 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. weekdays. Staff members can be reached weekdays from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m.

For details, write to OBHC, P.O. Box 250, Manteo, N.C. 27954, telephone 473-2655; or to: Larry Misenheimer, assistant director, Division of Archives and History, 109 E. Jones St., Raleigh, N.C., 27611, telephone 733-7305.

Artist Fernando Botero Equates Painting To Cooking

By Maria Tejara
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CARACAS, Venezuela — The first sale Fernando Botero ever made was in his hometown of Medellin, Colombia, back in the late 1940s. He was a 15-year-old who amused himself by doing watercolors of bullfights and matadors.

More than 40 years later, Botero is an internationally famous painter who has returned to the fiesta brava of the bullfight. But don't expect blood and sand and moments of truth: His chubby bullfighters parade around the ring with smiles of anticipation, and even the dignified picadors have the air of a Sunday outing.

Or, for that matter, of his famous self-portrait with Louis XIV, with a tiny Botero in a business suit next to an impressively rotund monarch in full regalia.

"My painting is based on Latin America. It's what I know best," he says. "I could never paint a North American subject, for instance. I don't see myself painting George Washington.

"Of course, what you see in my paintings you won't find in Colombia. One captures the essence. It is not a matter of standing in front of reality and painting a picture postcard. I'm a painter, not an illustrator."

"My uncle Joaquin was a fanatic aficionado, and he would take me to the plaza to see the best toreadors from Spain and Mexico. Manolete, El Cordobes and Dominguin, all the best ones came to Medellin during the winter, when the season is over in Europe. My uncle was such a fanatic, he wanted me to be a matador, too. So he enrolled me in a school in Medellin."

Botero never became a toreador, much less a matador (the highest grade of toreador). He was not a success at the Medellin bull fighting school, and still recalls the terror he felt when he faced his first and only bull. However, he liked the colorful spectacle and, when he began painting at the age of 14, started with watercolors of the corridas and the picadors (horseback riders who direct the bull with long lances, or "picas.")

"There was a craftsman who had a workshop near the bull ring, where he sold tickets for the corridas," says Botero in the introduction he wrote for the exhibit's catalog. "One day, he saw my watercolors and he said, 'Give them to me, I'll put them in the window and maybe someone will buy when they buy tickets.' And that is how I sold my first paintings."

This was before he was expelled from a Jesuit-run high school for writing an article on "Picasso and Non-Conformism in Art" for the local newspaper.

Critics always use the word "humor" to describe a Botero painting, but Botero himself is dead serious about his work and sees himself as a pioneer for "bringing back volume to modern art."

In the 1960s and '60s, when he was living in New York, he had "the courage to try something different in spite of the absolute dictatorship of abstract art, to go against current fashions and what my friends and fellow artists were doing ... the history of painting is the history of those who dare to paint differently."

His technique is painstaking, building up layers and layers of paint, trying to imitate as much as possible the richness and depth of the Italian Quattrocento, the period he most admires.

"Painting," he says, "is very much like cooking. You keep adding ingredients you like — a touch of this, a touch of that, a touch of humor — until you get what you want."

He believes all his fellow Latin American artists should travel and visit museums and galleries abroad, and not stay at home out of misguided patriotism. It's not just that travel broadens the mind, he says. "It's a matter of keeping up standards. If an artist doesn't measure himself against real quality, he stagnates and grows soft."

Botero lives in Bogota most of the time with his second wife, the sculptor Sophia Vari, but spends at least a few months every year in Paris or New York.

As famous as his work is, one painting is renowned throughout Latin America. His "Official Portrait of the Military Junta (1971)," gathers every single cliche about the military dictatorships that have haunted Latin America.

There they are: The Man on Horseback. The Moustachioed Colonel Dripping Medals. The Mistress with Her Mink Stoles.

Carrillo

Carrillo had a solid early background in choral music before coming to study at ECU. "I was conductor of a choral group in Costa Rica and taught choral conducting there," he said.

Asked if there were any particular composers of choral music whose music he favored, Carrillo replied, "Not really. There is much music from the Renaissance to modern that I like. It is the style, the different manifestations of music that I look for, that appeals to me."

The rigor of his studies at ECU, Carrillo noted, "does not give me much time for sports, which I find exciting. I love to play soccer, basketball, to swim and to play chess. I have gotten in some soccer, just playing with friends, not formal games. I can say my pleasure in chess is tied in with my long interest in philosophy. For me, philosophy applies to music."

He voiced high praise for his advisor at ECU, Dr. Rhonda Fleming. "She is not only a fine teacher and advisor, but a person of compassion. When any of her students have a problem, they can go to her for help, for understanding. I shall miss her."

If political and economic conditions in the next few years become more stable in Central America, chances are that before too many years have passed, Juan Carrillo will be well on his way to fulfilling his dream of the expansion of arts and music in those countries.

Art Show Opening Today

WASHINGTON, N.C. — Washington artist Rebecca Brown Boyd will exhibit watercolors in a new show opening at the Beaufort County Arts Council and Washington Civic Center today.

Exhibiting with Ms. Boyd are potters Candace Young and Norm Czuchra, both from Bayboro.

A graduate of Virginia Commonwealth University with a degree in fine arts and printmaking, Ms. Boyd is currently an artist illustrator with the state of North Carolina where she designs covers and logos of publications, posters, brochures and flyers for the various state departments.

Ms. Boyd has exhibited her work in North Carolina and Virginia. Her works in watercolors are being shown in the Belk/Bracy Gallery.

Ms. Young and Czuchra are studio potters in Bayboro where they operate Bay River Pottery. Ms. Young received an Award of Distinction at the 1988 Syracuse Art Festival, Syracuse, N.Y., first in clay at the 1984 Spring Arts Council's Fine Art Show in New Bern and the 1986 Beaufort County Arts Council's Fine Art Show.

Czuchra and Ms. Young use the Japanese technique of Raku to create non-utilitarian pottery which is also suitable as decorative pieces. Ms. Young's major focus is on seascapes in Raku.

Czuchra's work is decorated with bands of design made with impressed lace and other found materials. The Raku glaze and firing process further distinguish his work with copper flashes and lusters which contrast with the black base of the object.

He has received two awards in previous Arts Council shows and exhibits his work in eastern North Carolina galleries.

Ms. Young and Czuchra's show in the Lane Gallery will include functional pierced work and seascapes, and Raku vases, bowls and decorative pieces.

A special display of pottery by students in Bryan Woolard's art classes at John Small School will also be featured. Pinch and coil pots will be on view.

The public is invited to attend the concert prior to the show and to meet the artists at the reception. Both events are free.

Has work in Kinston show

Greenville artist Bob Pittman will be exhibiting paintings in the lower gallery of the Community Council for the Arts in Kinston beginning Sunday May 7 and continuing through May 31. Also being shown in the council show are scholastic art awards for work by Kinston high school students. A reception is being held from 3 to 5 p.m. May 7.

Major Gift To The New N.C. Museum of History

RALEIGH — A major gift for the new North Carolina Museum of History building has been announced by L. Vincent Lowe Jr., of Wilson, chairman of the Museum's building campaign.

"The A.J. Fletcher Foundation has approved a second grant of $75,000 to the new museum, making their total gift $150,000," Lowe said.

Fletcher gift is part of a campaign to raise $3.2 million in private funds to match state appropriations of $25 million for the new state history museum.

The new 172,000 square foot facility will be located on the lot between the State Capitol and Legislative Building in downtown Raleigh. Low bidder for the contract for the new museum was Clark-Morris, of Dallas. Construction is slated to begin on April 24.

The Fletcher gift has been designated for the Fletcher Garden, a large outdoor garden area located at the building's north end, across from the Legislative Building and opening onto the Bicentennial Plaza.

The Fletcher Garden will also be adjacent to the museum restaurant and its projected uses include outdoor dining, musical performances and craft demonstrations.

Exhibition space in the new Museum will be more than three times that of the present museum on Jones Street — 50,000 square feet versus 14,500 square feet. Three underground levels of parking will provide spaces for 650 cars.

PBS To Air Special At 9 Monday Evening

CHAPEL HILL — At 9 p.m. Monday, UNC-Center for Public Television will air "Hitler's Final Solution — The Wannsee Conference," an exact re-enactment of an historical event of horrifying dimensions.

The docu-drama dramatically recreates the meeting of 14 members of the SS, the Nazi party and government bureaus on January 20, 1942, in the Berlin suburb of Wannsee.

That conference of Nazi hierarchy initiated the "final solution" — the complete destruction of European Jewry. Concentration camps had existed and executions had been carried out previously, but the extermination of Jews did not become official policy until the Wannsee Conference.

The murder of six million Jews was legalized in that 85-minute meeting. The genesis of Manfred Korytowski's 85-minute film began when the producer traveled to Israel on the 25th anniversary of Adolf Eichmann's trial.

There he learned of the Wannsee Conference and began extensive research that led to his locating the original meticulous notes from the meeting. Using these notes, letters from Heinrich Himmler and Hermann Goering, Eichmann's own testimony, eyewitness accounts and documents from one of the U.S. prosecutors at the Nuremberg trials, Korytowski formed the basis for his screenplay.

1989 Dance Award Honors Three Dancers

DURHAM — The 1989 Samuel H. Scripps American Dance Festival Award will pay tribute to the achievements of legendary modern dance pioneers Doris Humphrey, Charles Weidman and Jose Limon with the establishment of an annual choreography fellowship in their names.

The award ceremony on June 11 in Page Auditorium on the Duke University Campus will open the 1989 American Dance Festival. The yearly interest from the $25,000 award will be used for young choreographers fellowships.

All three choreographers participated in the development of the American Dance Festival when it first was at Bennington College in 1934 and then at Connecticutt College, where it moved in 1948. They each presented the premieres of several of their most important works during their years at the ADF including Doris Humphrey's "With My Red Fires," Humphrey and Charles Weidman's "New Dance," Weidman's "Opus 51" and "A Song for You," and Jose Limon's "The Moor's Pavane" and "The Traitor," among others.

• Born in Illinois in 1895, Doris Humphrey initially studied ballet and gymnastics in the Chicago area. In 1917, she moved to Los Angeles to study with Ruth St. Denis and Ted Shawn at the Denishawn School and began choreographing her own works in 1920. In 1928 she and Charles Weidman left Denishawn to form their own dance company, Humphrey-Weidman.

"Color Harmony" and "Air for the G String" were among their first dances for the company. In 1934, she began teaching, dancing and choreographing at the Bennington School of Dance.

The pain of arthritis forced her to stop dancing in 1944 but she continued to teach and choreograph, and in 1946, she became the artistic advisor for the Jose Limon Dance Company. She created over 20 dances, perhaps most notably "The Shakers" and "Inquest," as well as "With My Red Fires" — and wrote the classic book the Art of Making Dances.

• Charles Weidman was born in Nebraska in 1901 and danced with Denishawn for eight years. In addition to choreographing for Humphrey-Weidman, Broadway and the New York City Opera, he founded a dance school in New York from which emerged the Charles Weidman Dance Company. "A House Divided," "Fables for Our Time," "Lynchtown," and "Flickers" are among the classic works he choreographed for the this company.

• Culiacan, Mexico, is the birthplace of Jose Limon, born 1908. Originally Limon wanted to be a painter and attended art school in New York. His desire to dance was inspired by a performance by German modern dancers, Yvonne Georgi and Harold Kreutzberg.

He studied with Humphrey and Weidman and joined their company in 1930. Prior to forming his own company in 1947, Limon appeared with several dance groups and theatrical productions. Throughout his dance career he taught at the Julliard School and various colleges.

His most notable works include "La Malinche," "The Exiles," "There is a Time," "Emperor Jones" and "Missa Brevis" as well as "The Moor's Pavane" and "The Traitor."

The largest single annual award offered in dance, the Samuel H. Scripps American Dance Festival Award was created in 1981 to honor the contributions of pre-eminent American modern dance choreographers.

Grant To Fund Durham Dialogue

RALEIGH — The N.C. Arts Council has received a $12,000 grant from the Knight Foundation to fund documentation of Public Art Dialogue-Southeast, a regional public art conference to be held in Durham June 8-11, 1989. This grant will enable the conference organizers to summarize and distribute conference data to an expanded audience.

The Knight Foundation provides grants for educational, cultural, health, and social service initiatives. Formed in 1986 through a bequest by publisher Jack Knight, its principal goal is to assist organizations in the Knight-Ridder newspaper network service area.

This conference will bring together artists, designers, architects, landscapers, city planners, public officials, art administrators, and other interested individuals to examine public art issues in the Southeast.

Public Art Diaglogue-Southeast is co-sponsored by the N.C. Arts Council and the Durham Arts Council. For further information, contact Ann Roth or Elizabeth Morton, 733-2111.

More On Summer Theater

A recent article on the availability of tickets for the 1989 Summer Theater season listed only three of the four productions being offered this summer at East Carolina University.

The fourth production, "Mass Appeal," will be staged at McGinnis Theater on the ECU campus July 24-29.

The Bill C. Davis play unfolds the story of Father Tim Farley, a lover of good things in life, comfortably established as a priest in a prosperous Catholic congregation.

His well ordered world is disrupted, however, by the arrival of Mark Dolson, an intense and idealistic young seminarian whom Father Farley reluctantly agrees to take under his wing.

The play explores their relationship with a combination of humor and humanity.

The three productions preceding "Mass Appeal" are: "Pump Boys and Dinettes," July 3-8; "Summer and Smoke," July 10-15, and "Foxfire," July 17-22.

For information on the prices of season and individual tickets, call the Messick Theater Arts Center at 758-6829.

Fond Memories For Greenville's Elsa Forbes

Ziegfield's life," she said. "During auditions, the great man said nothing, but someone took our names, told us to come back.

"Alice and I were apprehensive, but we both made it, even though we were more petite than most of the tall, long-legged girls chosen. Someone told us we were selected because Mr. Ziegfield had a particular concept of beautiful girls, that the most important thing for him was that legs didn't press together, that there had to be light between the legs.

"I'll never forget the one time Mr. Ziegfield gave me instructions. 'Don't dance, don't sing, just walk,' he said. He must have liked the way I walked.

"Of course," she added, "in the production I did sing, did dance, all the things show girls did in those musical productions. I loved my year there, the association with other show people. I loved making money."

The Big Tour

Mrs. Forbes recalls that when the year's contract was over, "my mother decided it was high time I take the culture tour. So it was off to Europe, the two of us. First, she enrolled me at the Sorbonne in Paris so that I could learn French.

"It was on the ship over to Europe from New York on my first culture voyage that I met young Alfred Forbes, that wonderful farm boy from Pitt County with his soft voice and a wonderful sense of humor.

"We were attracted to each other from the very beginning," she said. "Ours then seemed to be only a shipboard romance. But somehow I knew it was more than that, and so did Alf. Over the years, we kept in touch with each other."

Other mother and daughter trips followed in the years before World War II.

"I was introduced to all the things that were required to shape a young lady into a certain pattern. It was art in Paris, seeing the sights in Venice, hearing music in Vienna and Milan, visiting family in Hungary.

"My mother was the personification of all Hungarian mothers," she said. "It is absolutely true that they groom their daughters to make a proper match, that is, to someone with the principal attraction of having wealth.

"We lived in Hungary for a year. My mother made arrangements for me to marry the son of the owner of a big store in Budapest. I didn't care for him, but she went ahead with plans and wired my father to come to Hungary for the big event.

"Thank God," Elsa said, "that my father promptly wired back instructing that we come back home immediately. There would be no wedding."

The threat of an unwanted marriage ended, Elsa returned to modeling and to the company of her beloved brothers. "Alfred called from Washington, D.C., where he worked, wanted me to elope with him. For me at that time, such an idea was impossible."

Football Player Husband

"Then one day Henry asked me to do him a favor, to go with him on a double date," she said. "My date was Kink Richards from Iowa, a football player with the New York Giants. A beautiful man. He was the only person I'd met who made me feel the same as Alf did.

"Six weeks after meeting him, we were married."

The couple later moved to California. "He gave up football, worked as a junior execktive with Shell Oil Company, and for a while I taught school in Glendale, California.

"Since Alf and I kept in touch over the years, I followed his marriage to a Pitt County girl and the arrival of his two children, a boy and a girl.

The marriage to Richards, Elsa said "brought me the gift of two adorable children, a boy, Jonathan, and a girl, Karol, both still living on the West Coast."

Richards died suddenly, a heart-attack victim. "Later, after the death of Alf's first wife, after the passage of 38 years, Alf again asked me to marry him.

"I had no hestitation. In my heart I knew that Alf, like Kink, was of that golden type of man that any woman is lucky to have.

"Alf opened my eyes to the beauty of North Carolina and the South, both of which he dearly loved. I had never dreamed I'd be content living on a farm, but with him I learned to love it, and I still do."

Mrs. Forbes has long been involved too in the Methodist church affairs. "One of the highlights of my life was an invitation to write a curriculum for elementary people in the Methodist Church. That holds a very special place in the list of things I've achieved."

Though far away from the world of New York show business, she has kept her hand in theater. In recent years in Greenville she was a mainstay in the Playwrights Fund of North Carolina.

"My time now is filled, not just with memories from the past, but with being a member of the Clio Book Club and my work at REAL Crisis Center."

In June, she will again visit Hungary — with her children and grandchildren "as their friend and interpreter."

"When a friend wanted to know why my family couldn't go without me for once, I told them, 'my dear, don't you realize that the only people who speak Hungarian are me and the Hungarians."

Tribute Paid To Veteran Actress Bette Davis

"I don't know," Davis said. "I did about 10 films in a row, starting in 1939, and I was pretty tired when it was all over. But that series of films made this career permanent. Many of them were based on great plays. There are no plays anymore. (Today's films are about) diseases and nonfiction.

"I'll feel very happy, too, that I was a black-and-white-era woman. Oh, yes. It gave you so much more variety; color is so 'pretty.'

"They wanted to make '(Whatever Happened to Baby) Jane' in color. I said, 'I won't make it if it's in color.' I couldn't possibly have worn the makeup in color. ... The shadows and the lights and all of those great cameramen, like Ernie Haller! I happened to see 'All This and Heaven, Too' the other night. Ah! I was a lucky woman. The women of today don't have such cameramen. I don't think people care anymore."

Is she appalled by the coloring of film classics?

"It's worse than appalled. It's heartbroken. I saw 'Dark Victory' in color. The bright pink blouse and the bright blue skirt, and all the faces and the sets are pink. So all the good taste of the set people, the wardrobe people, the actors is ruined."

She was born Ruth Elizabeth Davis in Lowell, Mass., and like Katharine Hepburn, her life has been instilled with Yankee indomitability. After minor stage work, she landed in Hollywood with a Universal contract, making her film debut in 1931 with "Bad Sister." She was fired for having "as much sex appeal as Slim Summerville," the studio's tall, skinny comic.

The young actress was headed back to the stage when an offer came from Warner Bros. The studio used her for leg art and ingenue roles until she was loaned to RKO for "Of Human Bondage" in 1934. Her portrayal of the slatternly waitress was galvanizing. Her first Oscar came the next year for an inconsequential film, "Dangerous," consolation prize for losing in 1934. She won again for "Jezebel" in 1939.

Jack Warner realized he had a major star, and Davis' roles became more formidable. But she was dissatisfied with how she was treated, and she tried to break her contract by fleeing to England. Warner won a suit to force her return.

"Jack was gracious afterward," she recalled. "If you lose a case, you have to pay both lawyers' fees. He did not make me pay his lawyers. He was very, very good when I came home. I got better directors, better scripts."

She remained at Warners for 18 years, leaving after the disastrous "Beyond the Forest" in 1949. Her next movie was "All About Eve," another of her 10 Academy nominations. She has continued working in films, television and lectures, always in the patented Davis style and despite tragedy.

Personal disasters have not prompted Davis to abandon her 65-year passion for acting. Her greatest hope is to make a film on the life of the late beauty tycoon Helena Rubinstein. "I've got a good script, and I'll do it," she said with customary resolve.

She also would like to resume "The Bette Davis Show," a traveling act featuring exchanges between the star and the audience and clips of her movies. She recalled her favorite story:

"I was appearing for three nights at the Palladium in London. A woman at the back of the theater screamed at me: "Miss Davis, have you had your face lifted?'

"I got down on my knees in back of the footlights and said, 'Come here!' This poor woman and the whole audience was worried. She didn't know whether I was going to punch her or say, 'damn you' or what. So I faced her over the footlights and said, 'If I had, wouldn't I look a lot better?'"

Buck Owens And Ringo Starr Teamed Up In London

By Joe Edwards
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Resurgent country music star Buck Owens says "doodling around" with former Beatle Ringo Starr was a milestone of his long career.

Owens, the former grinning co-host of the "Hee Haw" syndicated TV show, and Starr recently recorded a duet of the song "Act Naturally." Both had separately released the song in the 1960s.

"I've never had so much fun in all my life," the 59-year-old Owens said about his recording session with Starr in London at the Abbey Road Studios, where the Beatles recorded often.

"I'd been out of music for a while and so had he," Owens said. "He played me a little bit of drums. 'Doodling around' we called it. He's very talented."

The much anticipated record will probably be released this summer.

The duet marked another achievement in a rebounding career for Owens, who left "Hee Haw" in 1986 after 17 years on the country music comedy show.

In the past year, he re-emerged as a recording artist after about 10 years away from the studio to concentrate on his business interests. He and rising country star Dwight Yoakam teamed up on the No. 1 country hit, "Streets of Bakersfield."

The song added to Owens' long list of honky-tonk hits, including "I've Got a Tiger by the Tail," "Together Again," "My Heart Skips a Beat," "Love's Gonna Live Here," "Gonna Have You," "Buckaroo," "Only You" and "Before You Go."

As a songwriter, he composed "Crying Time" which was a hit by Ray Charles.

In April, in honor of Owens' many contributions to country music, the Academy of Country Music gave him its Pioneer Award.

Owens, in keeping with his return to the stage, said he'll probably show up on "Hee Haw" again. "I left a lot of friends there," he said in an interview.

"I loved doing it. It was lots of fun."

He quit for much the same reason he ceased his recording career in 1979: too much exposure.

"I felt that doing the same show for that long might be like being married to the same woman too long," he said.

A fateful meeting in Owens' office in Bakersfield, Calif., led to his return to the recording scene. Yoakam showed up one day and he and Owens hit it off immediately.

"When I first saw him, I saw a rebel," Owens recalled. "I saw in him a freshness, an absolute attitude of 'I'm going to play my music my way.' He has great charisma and he could be the next big superstar.

"He could be able to sell as many records as George Strait or Randy Travis or some of the others.

"It's been brewing, this rage toward more traditional country music. You began to see the tip of the cowboy hat and then the hurricane came: Highway 101, the Desert Rose Band, Rodney Crowell and all these people bringing good pickin' and attracting young concert goers."

"I guess I missed it (cutting records) more than I thought I would. I remember my wife saying, 'Get something to do or you're going to kill us all."

So he teamed up with Yoakam and also released the solo album "Hog Dog." He began scheduling concert appearances where his famous red, white and blue guitar could be seen in public again. Then the duet with Starr materialized.

Owens described the "Act Naturally" duet as "his version and my version and our version and a little surprise or two along the way. He gives a little Texas-type yell. I guess you'd call it country rock.

"Ringo sings it better than ever. His voice is much broader than it was when he was with the Beatles," he said. "He was very friendly and posed for pictures with anybody who asked. He was about the most approachable famous person I've ever met.

"I'm thinking about how best the record can be received. I don't want to gimmick it up.

"I've got a good feeling about the song. We did one song only, but we talked about other things. We might do another track and may do a video."

Owens said Starr has a keen sense of humor and would be a good guest on "Hee Haw."

Q Do Jane Pauley and Bryant Gumbel of the "Today" show hate each other? Was Gumbel ever married to a bunny from the Playboy Club named Hatfield? How old is Gumbel? Does he suffer from the "big head"?—W.D., Washington, D.C.

A Pauley and Gumbel are not the closest of friends or warmest of colleagues. Gumbel, 40, was never married to a bunny named Hatfield. His wife's maiden name is June Baranco. Gumbel's detractors describe him as "excessively self-confident," his supporters as "intelligent and industrious."

Q Does "Big Oil" own Secretary of State James Baker III? That view has been widely held for years. Anything to it?—G.B., Galveston, Tex.

A "Big Oil" does not own Jim Baker, but he is a pragmatic lawyer, politician and Texan of whom it can be said: "Big Oil regards Baker as a good friend and supporter, and he returns the compliment."

Q Gerald and Betty Ford have a daughter, married to a former Secret Service agent. What has become of her?—Ann McMann, Eau Claire, Wis.

A Sad to say, Susan Ford Vance, 31, is divorced. She lives in Washington, D.C., with Heather and Tyne, her daughters by ex-agent Charles Vance.

Q "This is the President of the United States. Move over!" Who allegedly made that remark to his bedmate?—D. Keating, Milwaukee, Wis.

A That remark has been attributed to several U.S. Presidents, among them Lyndon B. Johnson, John F. Kennedy and Warren G. Harding.

Q I am very much taken with a young actor, Kiefer Sutherland. I believe he is the son of Donald Sutherland, who starred in "Ordinary People" and other films. I saw Kiefer with Charlie Sheen, Emilio Estevez and other members of the Hollywood brat pack in "Young Guns," and he was just wonderful. Any information about him will be deeply appreciated. Most of all, I'd like to know if he is married.—Carolyn Rogers, Atlantic City, N.J.

A Kiefer Sutherland, 22, is the son of Canadian-born actor Donald Sutherland and actress Shirley Douglas. His parents split when he was 4, and Kiefer and his twin sister, Rachel, were reared by their mother in Canada. His father has lived with the French-Canadian actress Francine Racette since 1972, and they have three children. Kiefer, who quit school at 15 to pursue an acting career in Toronto, New York and Hollywood, is married to actress Camelia Kath, 36. Two years ago, she gave birth to their first child, Sarah. Kath also has a daughter Michelle, 12, by a previous marriage. Despite their age difference and recent rumors, Kiefer and his wife reportedly enjoy a secure marriage.

Toukie Smith and Robert De Niro: Not making plans

A Robert De Niro and Toukie Smith reportedly are close friends. At this writing, however, they have no marital plans involving each other.

Q My husband and I have read several novels by Sidney Sheldon. My husband believes that, because of the style of writing, the author is a woman using a pen name. I say the author is a man. Who is right? A lobster dinner is riding on this bet.—Mary McClintock, O'Fallon, Mo.

A You win the dinner. Sidney Sheldon, novelist and screenwriter, has been a male since he was born in Chicago 72 years ago.

A "Seventh Heaven" is the last and highest of the blissful abodes of those who belong to the Muslim faith. It is the abiding place of supreme rapture. It is also the title of a silent movie starring the late Janet Gaynor. The film was released in 1927 and helped Gaynor to win the first Oscar ever awarded to an actress.

HOW LENA HORNE FOUND THE STRENGTH

SHOW BUSINESS IS notoriously unkind to women performers when they age, but Lena Horne's glamour and artistry seem to grow with each decade. Seven years after a Broadway triumph, Horne is back with a new album, The Men in My Life, celebrating the men she has made music with.

Lena Horne likes to dismiss her enduring success as a matter of good luck and good genes. But the fates haven't always smiled upon her. There have been deep personal tragedies and unique challenges in her career.

Today, she finds herself in a situation she never thought she'd have to face: She is surprised to have reached the age of 71. And, although her 24-year marriage to bandleader/arranger Lennie Hayton ended with his death in 1971, she still feels strangely unprepared to be without a man to share her life.

It is a drizzly afternoon when we meet in an elegant hotel suite in midtown Manhattan. The room, decorated in muted pastels, provides a dramatic setting for the sultry singer, dressed stylishly in black wool pants, a body-hugging black sweater, a dash of red scarf at her neck and a pert beret under which her dark hair spills out in curls.

Despite the personal loss, Lena Horne has lost none of her beauty. Her skin has a luminescent, satiny sheen; her eyes glitter with light; and her famous smile still dazzles, earthy and sensual.

She slips into the chair facing me. We are chatting lightly about the perils of being a single woman over 50 in a culture that makes youth a high-priority requirement for sexual attractiveness. I ask her thoughts about a story in the morning paper—news of a Hollywood star's amour with a younger man. Her response is surprisingly straightforward.

"Maybe it's because I was so desperately in love with my father for so long, but I've always wanted a man who is older, smart and who loves me." With a rueful smile, she adds, "And I can't find my father anymore."

Teddy Horne played many roles throughout his life, but stay-at-home father was not one of them. He disappeared soon after Lena's birth, returning from time to time—a dashing, glamorous stranger. Her mother, Edna, who was ambitious for a show-business career of her own, divorced Teddy when Lena was 3. Lena was moved from city to city, from relative to relative. It was her grandmother, Cora Horne—a suffragette and member of the NAACP—who became Lena's guiding spirit and nurtured in her a love of books and a hunger for learning that continues to sustain her.

Horne's early struggles are well known. As a young entertainer in Hollywood, she was confronted with a prejudice that had forced black performers into stereotyped roles. But her emergence as a Hollywood personality was burdened with something most performers never have to face. Black leaders and Hollywood movie chieftains alike saw that this beautiful young singer could be a valuable asset as a star who was also a symbol—of hope, aspiration, accomplishment—for millions of voiceless people suffering the daily indignities of segregation. Not permitted the luxury of failure, she had to be perfect—superglamorous, supersuccessful, larger than life.

Today Horne admits that it was not until the middle of her life—after she had left Hollywood—that she could think of herself as an authentic person. "I had the Hollywood name and glamour and the mythic thing," she says, "but these had nothing to do with me yet at all. I don't think I really changed and found Lena until the 1960s."

As I look at her, I know why I was drawn to meet her—all those pictures of her don't lie. And for those of us facing the thorny problems that can come in middle age, it is encouraging to know that these years can also be a time of growth and self-discovery. For Lena Horne, they were crucial.

"The '60s," she repeats, closing her eyes, as if running a film in her mind—the civil-rights protests, Vietnam, the women's movement, the assassinations of leaders, both black and white.

"I was in such pain from the social turmoil around us," she recalls. "I felt this inner association with people, like me, who were in pain, who were passionate about something besides a song that I was going to sing on stage, people who were in difficulty and danger. Black and white people together."

Suddenly she brings her hands to her chest. "I began to feel like in those horror pictures, when you see one creature coming out of the chest of another...I began to feel this thing in me painfully coming out." She extends her hands in front of her. "It was also a joining with the other, public Lena, because I knew that, without her, I couldn't get to where I wanted to go. I've never been the same since. It made me less cold. It made me feel more sorrowful about other people. More vulnerable too. I had been insulated by my husband and our tight little world."

That insulation evaporated in the early 1970s, when, within 13 months, Horne lost not only her husband but her father and son, Teddy, as well. I ask about that terrible time.

"I was on the verge of a breakdown," she says, her voice now a hushed whisper. "I had retired. I just couldn't sing anymore, wear clothes I couldn't afford except on the stage, sing only for people who could afford to hear me—do it one more time at the Waldorf."

Instead, Horne traveled for the National Council of Negro Women, doing occasional concerts throughout the South. The experience—slowly, profoundly—changed her.

"I thought at first that I wouldn't survive," she recalls. "I didn't realize that the 'me' that was coming up was just as strong as the 'me' I was pretending to be—probably a little stronger.

"I found that I could still sing, could still perform." She settles back, relaxing, and her voice takes on a drifty, wandering quality—honey-coated. "I discovered I was strong even though they had left me, because they had left me so much. I always had the feeling my grandmother would have just dared me not to be strong, dared me not to be a woman, a person.

"Doing these concerts made me feel useful. I met people who had known me as a little girl, liked me as I was." Her voice rises, and she shakes her head incredulously. "I met cousins who had never met me but never called because they were afraid I'd think they wanted something. Can you imagine?

"I grew more independent. I had been typical—I didn't even know how to write a check or keep track of what money I had. I existed on books. I read and read. Finally, I felt I was the Lena my grandmother would have liked. She left an indelible imprint on me."

That imprint is etched into the fabric of Horne's life. To her, education has never been more important for blacks and other minorities. Recently, she told a reporter, "I hate to think that all the pain that went before was for naught."

Last fall in Miami, receiving an award from the United Negro College Fund, Horne recalled some of the pain that went before: the days when she could perform in posh hotels in Miami Beach but, like other blacks, wasn't permitted to walk the streets after dark; when segregation existed even for stars.

She remains silent for a moment. "I never dreamed I'd live this long," she says softly, with a small smile. "I didn't prepare myself to be 71. I think we should begin earlier to think about later on, because we're all living longer. Perhaps, if I weren't in show business, living this unreal life, I would have had to face what it was going to be like at 71."

"If you could change anything, what would it be?" I ask.

"I would love to have been a storybook mother," she replies at once. "I think I was as good as most working mothers. But there's always that tinge of guilt—that you weren't there. Somebody was, but it wasn't you.

"I feel this possessiveness about my daughter, Gail, and my five grandchildren," she says. "I'd like to lose it. They absolutely have their own lives. But it's very hard for me to cut away from them.

"And I would have liked not to have been a widow."

We are both silent—this has nothing to do with choice. It does have to do with the challenges society presents to older women, challenges that Lena Horne does not take lightly. There's the idea, for example, that older people aren't supposed to have sexual feelings.

"It's really not fair," she observes. "I think the culture makes very tough demands on women. People have an idea that women in their 70s have no desire to be desired." Many of today's popular songs are sexually explicit, and a song that can be sung by Michael Jackson or Whitney Houston cannot, she feels, be sung by Lena Horne. Still, she does speak openly about her own desires. And that creates another challenge:

"My granddaughter phoned me the other day and asked, 'Do you mean to tell me that I have to be embarrassed by all this sexy talk from you? Do you still want it, really, Grandma?'"

Lena Horne chuckles. "I said, 'Of course I want it.' She replied, 'It's very embarrassing to know my grandmother still thinks about sex.'"

I suggest that the attitude toward older women today is vastly different from what it was even 10 years ago.

"It is changing," she replies thoughtfully. "But I think men haven't grown intellectually as quickly as we have. It never occurs to an older man that a younger woman doesn't adore him. He doesn't think, 'She wants my money.' He knows, 'She wants me.'" Enjoying the irony, she lets out a burst of laughter, adding, "I wish we had that kind of ego."

What is she seeking in a man at this time in her life?

"I never want to be in competition with a man, but I don't want to be dumb with him," she answers. "I want to be able to have a closeness with him about a book or music or a walk in the park. If he knows I'm strong but I want him to be stronger, then I have a lot of respect for that."

I suggest that she is facing her problems with singular grace and honesty. "The glamour is going," she replies with a sad smile, "and I'm set for that."

I shake my head in protest. "It's all right," she insists. "I have no illusions about that. I don't want to be working just because I'm able to and just because it would be a sin not to get out on that stage and give people pleasure."

She admires friends like Claire Trevor and Myrna Loy, women who also basked in Hollywood's limelight but now find themselves alone. "They have friends and a social life," Horne says. "If they are suffering, they don't show it."

She looks away. "What else would I change?" Then, nodding to herself, she turns back to face me. "I would like to have been able to change sooner," she says. "The women's movement came a little late in my life. But I like to have a man in my life—yes. I find many women who don't have the need I do. They want to be independent, see somebody when they feel like it—maybe—but otherwise a man is not convenient in their lives. I envy that, but I would like to be married."

Hasn't she said that a woman inevitably loses her freedom in marriage?

"I doubt whether I could make a successful marriage now," she replies. "I've worked out the way I am. Unless..." With a sudden light in her eyes and a wide smile, she adds, "Unless the man was absolutely unique, one who could match my experiences. Maybe...if he was a man who has had as many metamorphoses in his life as I've had."

The thought prompts a reverie—not about battles won or hardships overcome but of travels abroad, the beauty of France, sparkling evenings at Cole Porter's apartment at the Waldorf, wonderful friends. She fixes her eyes on me. "I've had lovely moments," she says. "That's why now I don't settle for anything. It's true—I don't take second best. That's all."

A custom-designed display of hardwood and veneers is included with the collection at no extra cost. And each tankard is accompanied by a Certificate of Authenticity bearing the signature of an official of the issuing brewery.

James Woods: AA members help him

James Woods is a walking encyclopedia on Alcoholics Anonymous since he began preparing for My Name Is Bill W, a two-hour movie about AA's co-founder (with another alcoholic, played by James Garner). "For example," Woods says, "service to others is one of the tenets of AA. A lot of the people working on this show are in 12-step programs like AA. I'm dealing with a difficult personal situation, and they've given me strength. Of course, I also have a very good woman, my fiancée Sarah [Owen], by my side." ABC.

Teenagers in Trouble

"I don't mean to point the finger of scorn at these parents," says Hugh Hudson, director of Lost Angels, about a group of troubled and troublesome California teenagers whose self-absorbed parents pack them off to a private adolescent psychiatric facility. (Adam Horovitz, of the Beastie Boys, and Donald Sutherland are terrific as the hero and his doctor.) "It's terribly painful to be a parent today, as well as a child," says Hudson. "And it works both ways: The child has to be a good child, to respond. Yes, the boy's mother is concerned with herself, but so many of us are. I'm off making films, away from my home…I'm dedicating the movie to my 10-year-old son." Orion.

MOMENTS OF STARK TERROR

"YEAH, ONE TIME MY engine quit," says Dick Folsom matter-of-factly. "When it happened, I was flying real low, over some trees. Up ahead I could see a pond, and if I could have just got there, I would have had a place to put the airplane. But the thing of it is, you don't stretch out the glide, or you'll stall and go nose-down. So you've got to face up to the facts and put the plane into the trees. Hell, I've never known anyone who got hurt putting a plane into the trees—not if it was done right. This time, we went into the crowns of the trees and slid to the ground. I felt a bump, and for a moment I thought we were still in the trees, but we were already on the ground. Everybody walked away from it."

Dick Folsom is of medium height, has silver hair and wears glasses. He owns Folsom's Air Service in Greenville, Maine, on the south shore of Moosehead Lake. It's a spot that's remote, wild and beautiful. Folsom is a bush pilot. That means he flies a small plane (usually with floats so it can land in ponds and rivers), for the most part navigates just by knowing the terrain really well and is able to do some of his own repairs, often in a place other than a hangar. Folsom once had a bad oil leak. He landed in a pond, patched the leak with spruce gum and tape, and took off.

Folsom does the things bush pilots do in Maine: He flies people where they want to go, and he does it in a lot of bad weather. He flies in weather most people wouldn't drive in. "We have a saying in airplanes," says Jack McPhee, a retired pilot. "'There are thousands of hours of boredom and moments of stark terror.'"

These pilots aren't "Top Gun" flashy—but put them up in a plane in a snowstorm, and they'll know just what to do

Bush pilots tend to be low-key about what they do. They lean toward understatement when they talk about the tough situations they've had to get out of. Mostly, they're a pragmatic bunch, and never more so than when they discuss flying in the foul weather they frequently face.

"When there isn't much visibility, you fly low over the lake," says Dick Folsom. "You want to fly a route down low in good weather, because things like hills look different from down low, and you'll want to recognize them when the weather's lousy."

"You can fly in the river valleys when visibility is bad," says Roland Dumond, a retired pilot, "although you want to keep to the right in case someone is coming from the other direction. You can follow railroad tracks, but you want to make sure there isn't a tunnel on the line you're following."

On this sparkling day, however, the weather is perfect. Moosehead Lake is a gas-flame blue. In the distance, you can see islands and promontories all covered with trees. The air has the scent of spruce gum. The lake and the ponds around it are dotted with sportsmen's camps. In the spring, summer and fall, pilots at Folsom's Air Service are busy flying fishermen and hunters in and out. And they keep the camps supplied by bringing in what's needed—things like refrigerators, canoes and bedsprings, which are tied to the floats under the plane.

This part of being a bush pilot is hard work, and there is nothing glamorous about it. "A bedspring is the worst thing in the world to fly with," Folsom says. "Makes the tail shake like crazy."

Flying in northern Maine can seem like something from another age, and for the most part it is. When the weather is good, you fly over country so beautiful as to be at once almost shocking and wonderfully soothing. From the air, in the morning, there are streaks of mist through which the tops of trees protrude. The ponds flash with a silver light from the sun. Moose stand in some of the ponds, chewing aquatic grasses.

But the last half of the 20th century is making itself felt in Maine too. Scotty Skinner, 44, runs Scotty's Flying Service out of Shin Pond, Maine. He learned to fly in his early teens, when he worked as a "chore boy" at a remote hunting camp. He has seen the changes. Ten years ago, he says, there were more than 100 ponds you could only reach by air. Now, thanks to logging roads, there are three.

There have been other changes too. The military has started testing Tomahawk missiles in northern Maine, firing them to a height of 2000 feet. That's the altitude at which a lot of bush pilots do their flying, and Shin Pond is right in the path the missiles take. Pilots have complained, but they have not been successful in getting the missiles fired someplace else. "Do you think I'm going to tell a customer that I can't fly because some missile is going through northern Maine?" Skinner asks. "Of course not. They want to go someplace, and I need the money."

The financial reality of being a bush pilot is that you can't make a living just by flying. There are a limited number of hours you can fly in a year, and it's almost impossible to survive on that. Dick Folsom and his son, Max, 33, rent camps, and they buy and sell airplanes too. Scott Skinner has a store.

In Maine, there are some bush pilots who do get paid full-time to fly. These are men who work for the state's Department of Inland Fisheries & Wildlife as game wardens who patrol from the air.

Gary Dumond is a warden pilot who flies out of Plaisted, Maine. He is a youthful, energetic man in his late 30s. He served in Vietnam, where he received, among other decorations, two Distinguished Flying Crosses. "Being a warden pilot is what I wanted to do when I was a kid," Dumond says, "and something I still want to do now." The warden pilots do a lot of work in wildlife management and game law-enforcement, but perhaps they are best known for their search and rescue activities. "The thing you dread," says Jack McPhee, a former warden pilot, "is a day in hunting season when it begins to snow after the hunters are in the woods. When that happens, you can be almost sure you're going to have a lot of lost hunters."

The warden pilots, flying in bad weather, find them. "One of the nicest times," says McPhee, "is after a successful search. Because you know, beyond a doubt, that you saved someone's life."

Gary Dumond's father, Roland, was a bush pilot too. Now in his 60s, he doesn't fly much anymore, but he recalls once having some trouble in an airplane. The plane was on skis, and when he took off, he ran over a bump in the snow that knocked the skis off. He got airborne all right but knew he was going to crash when he landed.

"So I started thinking things over," says Roland. The first thing he did was to fly to the nearest town with a hospital. When he came to the town, he flew around until people noticed the plane didn't have any skis. The people got the ambulance out to the airfield. And then, as Roland was flying around the field trying to think what to do, he spotted a snowdrift. He thought that if he could put the plane into it, he might make it. He and his passengers walked away from the crash landing.

After a while, it became obvious to me that what separates bush pilots from other pilots is their keen sense of the practical. When something goes wrong, they know what to do. The practicality is severe—but grand too, since it seems to reflect the frankness of the natural world where they spend so much time. That world has taught them a lot. And with each year, it seems to teach a little more.

Although 70 now, Dick Folsom still flies, but his son, Max, runs the flying service. "Airline pilots have the dullest job in the world," says Max. "All they do is push buttons. And they have a lot of help every time they make a decision. A bush pilot makes all his own decisions all the time—like where to land and whether or not to fly in the fog or snow."

A bush pilot has to be resourceful, stay alert and keep a cool head, because he's on his own—but he likes it that way. When I ask Dick Folsom to tell me the one thing that makes a good bush pilot, he replies, "Judgment." Which means, too, that you don't go around looking for trouble. When Folsom heard a younger pilot say, "I like the bad weather. It's a challenge," he smiled like a man who knows the value of clear blue skies and said, "Oh, I'll take the good weather."

Five Years On Planet Earth —And Beyond

Eddie Adams

FOR THE PAST FIVE YEARS, I've been privileged to share my excitement about science with the readers of Parade. I've written about pure science—the joy of understanding this world and others, not for any immediate practical benefit, although there are many such benefits, but for the simple joy of knowing. I've also written on threats to the global environment and the dangers of nuclear war—and this in turn has led me to articles on U.S./Soviet relations and the economic, environmental and social crises that continued high military spending portends for both nations. Parade's 65 million readers have responded enthusiastically. Unfortunately, the number of letters is so great that it's impossible for me to answer every one. So I thought this might be a good time to try to respond to some letters, bring some articles up to date and correct some errors.

The Planet That Wasn't There

In the Jan. 22, 1984, issue of Parade, "Are There Other Planetary Systems?" described the evidence for "a newly discovered companion—probably a giant Jupiterlike planet" circling a star called Van Biesbroeck-8 (VB-8). Scientists had deduced the gravitational tugs of an unseen planet from the wobble in the motion of a faint star 21 light years from Earth.

After the article was written, other scientists, using a completely different technique at another telescope, announced detection of radiation from a body very close to VB-8. The case seemed to be clinched: the first reliably detected planet of another star. Might there be smaller, still-undiscovered Earthlike worlds in the VB-8 system? Then, mysteriously, follow-up studies could find no trace of the supposed planet. Most astronomers now believe that both "detections" were caused by instrumental errors that simulated a planet and then went away. But it's a mighty strange coincidence.

Since then, however, about a dozen other stars are now showing evidence of dark companions—most of them roughly 10 times the mass of Jupiter, the biggest planet in our solar system. The most intriguing conclusion, derived from several lines of evidence, is by C. Martin Gaskell of the University of Michigan: From the bowels of an exploding supernova in a satellite galaxy of the Milky Way, a Jupiter-sized planet was formed in a year; this news has taken 150,000 years to reach us. The planet, made entirely of heavy metals, skims above the surface of the dead star that gave it birth.

By comparison, other recently announced planets of other stars seem tediously run-of-the-mill—giant hydrogen-rich gas spheres rather than immense steel wrecking balls. Right now we are just on the threshold of being able to detect such worlds. Once the detection technology is refined a notch or two, a flood of evidence for other planetary systems may start pouring into our telescopes.

Big Numbers

In my most recent article, "The Persian Chessboard" (Feb. 5, 1989), I recounted the old story of putting a single grain of wheat in the first square of a chessboard, two in the second, four in the third, doubling the number each time ...and being overwhelmed with a total of some 18.5 quintillion grains by the time we get to the 64th square. I gave a rough-and-ready way to calculate this number. But I hadn't realized how seriously Parade readers take their math.

People wrote from all over the country to say I had made a mistake. I had said that the total number of grains on all the squares was $2^{64} - 1$. Many contended the right answer was, instead, $2^{63} + 1$. A man from Des Moines, Wash., playfully wrote: "Doc, that ain't right! Me, the wife and kids stayed up all night counting grains of rice on our checkerboard." A tax accountant argued for $2^{63} + 1$, as did a retired high school algebra teacher and "a housewife from Birmingham." The letters were all very amiable, although one sympathized with my probable embarrassment at having made an error in arithmetic before 65 million readers. Another encouraged me by saying, "What's a few quintillion between friends?" Actually, I don't think I got this one wrong. See if you agree:

There's 1 ($= 2^0$) grain of wheat on the first square, 2 ($= 2^1$) grains on the second, 4 ($= 2^2$) on the third...and, finally, $2^{63}$ on the last. So the number of grains on the first and last squares together is $2^{63} + 1$. But the number on all the squares has to be more. The total number of grains on the whole chessboard is then $2^0 + 2^1 + 2^2 + 2^3 + 2^4 + \ldots + 2^{62} + 2^{63}$, where the three dots indicate all the numbers I didn't want to go to the trouble of writing out. Now, $2^{62}$ is half of $2^{63}$, $2^{61}$ is a quarter of $2^{63}$, etc. So the total number of grains is $2^{63} \times (1 + 1/2 + 1/4 + 1/8 + \ldots$ until I have 63 fractions; the last few are going to be extremely small). The numbers in parentheses add up closely to 2. Indeed, 1 + 1/2 + 1/4 + 1/8 + 1/16 + 1/32 + 1/64 + 1/128 is already 1.992. If this were an infinitely long series, the sum would be exactly 2, and the total number of grains would be exactly $2^{63} \times 2 = 2^{64}$. But the series isn't infinite, and so the answer has to be a little less: It works out to be $2^{64} - 1$.

The Global Environment & Nuclear War

Unfortunately, evidence for greenhouse warming ("The Warming of the World," Feb. 3, 1985) and the depletion of the ozone layer ("A Piece of the Sky Is Missing," Sept. 11, 1988) is mounting. All competent computer climate models show significant rises in the Earth's temperature and sea level in the next century—owing to increasing amounts of carbon dioxide and other greenhouse gases. Human technology is altering the climate on a global scale.

There is debate about whether signatures of this temperature rise are apparent in everyday life—for example, the high temperature and drought of the summer of 1988. But the scientific consensus is: If not yet, then very soon. Mitigating steps—such as requiring much better auto fuel efficiencies, banning CFCs outright and reforesting the planet—will cost some money; but not taking mitigating steps will ruin us. These threats to the planetary environment are at last beginning to be taken seriously by the United States and other governments, but corrective measures are proceeding at a glacial pace.

My second Parade article (Oct. 30, 1983) was on the then newly discovered phenomenon of nuclear winter, the predicted catastrophic cooling and darkening of the Earth from the fine particles lofted in a nuclear war—especially soot from burning cities. The words "nuclear winter" were published for the very first time in these pages.

The subject sparked its fair share of controversy—partly because of its strategic implications (for example, it made the U.S. position on "winning" a nuclear war untenable) and partly because some scientists were predicting less severe (although still very serious) hemispheric coolings. There now seems to be a convergence of opinion. When the same amounts of soot are put up at the same altitudes, all the major computer models get roughly the same answer, close to our first estimates of 1983. In recent reports, the International Council of Scientific Unions, the World Meteorological Organization and the UN all stress the validity of the nuclear winter thesis; current estimates are that billions of people worldwide might survive the short-term effects of nuclear war only to die of starvation later on because of the devastation of crops by nuclear winter. Both the Soviet and the American governments—as well as the leaders of many other countries—have acknowledged the seriousness of nuclear winter; yet there are over 55,000 nuclear weapons on Earth, more than 100 times what it would take to make a nuclear winter. The INF Treaty is a step—but only a baby step—in the right direction. Massive cuts in arsenals are needed.

"Star Wars: The Leaky Shield" (Dec. 8, 1985) contended that Mr. Reagan's Strategic Defense Initiative (SDI) could not possibly protect the civilian population of the United States as it was advertised to do, was ruinously expensive and would increase, not decrease, the chances of nuclear war. These conclusions—shared by many scientists then and now—seem to have permeated into the corridors of power in Washington; funding has been cut back repeatedly (although some $17 billion has been spent on SDI); and many of its proponents seem reduced to talking about protecting silos or shooting down "terrorist" missiles (as if a missile, rather than a suitcase, were the most likely way for a "terrorist" to bring nuclear weapons into the U.S.).

Americans & Soviets

"The Common Enemy" (Feb. 7, 1988) was an appeal to the United States and the Soviet Union, in the face of so many pressing mutual problems, to put aside their quarrels and work together for their common well-being. The article was reprinted (in Russian) in a widely read Soviet magazine, Ogonyok, which has repeatedly and courageously broken new ground in Soviet reportage.

Ogonyok promised both Parade and me that the article would be printed with not a single word changed. What was published must have troubled the Soviet right wing. For instance: "Millions of Soviet citizens [were] killed by Stalin's deliberate policy"—rather than merely "thousands," which was all that had been officially acknowledged up to that time. Such sentences as "For many Americans, communism means poverty, backwardness, the Gulag for speaking one's mind, a ruthless crushing of the human spirit and a thirst to conquer the world" were retained. Less surprisingly, they left in all my criticisms of the United States.

Although the Soviets certainly cannot be accused of wholesale censorship of my article, they did leave things out. For example, I wrote about Soviet forcible annexation of some of the nations of Eastern Europe; the word "forcible" disappeared. I criticized American justifications for intervening in Central America, but Ogonyok left out the phrase that followed: "The deficiencies of the [American] argument would be better understood, however, had the Soviet Union not been in the habit of gobbling up other countries." And the following evenhanded denunciation was wholly omitted: "In both countries, what passes for public debate is still, on closer examination, mainly repetition of national slogans, appeal to popular prejudice, innuendo, self-justification, misdirection, incantation of homilies when evidence is asked for, and a thorough contempt for the intelligence of the citizenry."

I am saddened by what was left out but heartened by what was left in. In accompanying commentary, only partly a rebuttal, the USSR's chief expert on the United States, Georgi Arbatov, described his own struggle with my piece (see box).

"Give Us Hope" (Nov. 27, 1988) was an open letter to President Bush published just three weeks after his election. My co-author Ann Druyan and I, concerned for our daughter's future, advocated a trans-ideological approach to recognizing the grave problems our nation faces; figuring out how to solve those problems, what it will cost and where the money will come from; and then getting to work. We made a large number of specific proposals.

For so opinionated an article on so controversial a subject, the response from readers was astonishingly (about 85 percent) positive. Most of the negative letters volunteered urgent additional problems that need solving; or criticized us for offering a program that might be at variance with the President's so soon after the electorate had spoken; or proposed that there were no secular solutions and that the only hope was in God. And there were a few that went: "If you love that little girl as much as you say, you'll marry her mother," or words to that effect. Actually, Annie and I have been married for eight years, although the article did not take explicit note of this happy fact.

Remarkably, most respondents wrote that our article represented a widely held and deeply felt point of view that is almost never publicly expressed, much less adopted by political leaders. In this particular case, because many of the letters were so eloquent and so carefully thought out, we have answered every one. But in response to many inquiries—no, we have not yet heard from Mr. Bush.

We humans are manufacturing several city-busting nuclear weapons every day. We are destroying an acre of life-giving forest every second. New evidence of the danger we pose to ourselves appears daily. But what gives me hope is the obvious, growing, worldwide determination to change our ways, and soon. In future articles, I hope to discuss some of those changes, as well as further exciting discoveries in science.

A SOVIET RESPONSE TO AN ARTICLE IN PARADE

From "Signs of Change," Ogonyok, March 12-19, 1988, by Georgi Arbatov, Director, Institute for the Study of the U.S.A. and Canada, Soviet Academy of Sciences, Moscow, and a member of the Central Committee of the Soviet Communist Party:

No one would be surprised, I think, if I admitted that as I read the article I agreed fully with Sagan's criticisms of the U.S.A. and occasionally even wanted to add a few points of my own. But it was with a very different feeling that I read what the American scientist wrote about my country, the Soviet Union, either as his own opinion or as a prejudice of his countrymen...

As an historian, I object to Professor Sagan's approach to the arms race in the post-war period. His view can be characterized as "a plague on both your houses"—that is, equal blame is assigned to the USSR and the U.S.A. But that is unfair...

[However,] I caught myself thinking that perhaps my reaction was a reflection of the very thing that had so seriously worried the American scientist: a tendency to apply different standards to one's own country than to another, a desire to avoid "inconvenient" facts, a readiness to savor the details of any false step if it was made by "them" and to strike a pose, as Sagan writes, of wounded pride and professed moral rectitude when "they" say something bad about "us."

Probably, no one is free of this human weakness. Probably, I did not escape it in reading the article. I am certain that many readers of Ogonyok will feel the same way. And, moreover, so will readers of Parade.

[After specifying ways in which, in Arbatov's opinion, I was "twice as hard" on the Soviet Union as I was on the United States, he concludes:]

Sagan is right when he says that the goal is not in selectively glorifying the past or in defending national founding principles, but in finding a path that will lead us through a period of grave common danger...I agree with Carl Sagan that in international relations the old behaviors are mortally dangerous. I think that radical changes are ripening. I hope that they will take place in the near future.

HOW MUCH HAVE WE SPENT ON THE COLD WAR?

In "Billions and Billions" (May 31, 1987), I estimated that by 1989 the U.S. will have spent some $10 trillion on the Cold War (the Soviets presumably spending a similar amount). I wondered how much good could have been done for the nation and the world by spending some of that vast amount of money in other ways.

One syndicated columnist described this estimate as "overheated rhetoric" and "preposterous." He did not propose some alternative figure, nor did he give any reason for rejecting this one. He just didn't like it. Me neither. But it is easy enough to sum up the military outlays made by the United States since 1945 and add to them the military share of the interest on the national debt, nuclear-weapons expenditures by the Department of Energy, "international security" outlays by the Department of State, the military component of NASA, and an appropriate fraction of the Veterans Administration budget. (I neglect monies spent by the intelligence agencies.) If the critic will perform this addition and convert to 1989 dollars, he will, I believe, come to roughly the same figure I gave.

What is preposterous is not the estimate but the expenditures. Sensible security measures are, of course, necessary. But it is time to end the identification of the national interest with military spending and to reinvigorate what it is about the United States that all that defense money was supposed to be protecting.

Newman: Plugs credit cards

If you phone Dentsu, the largest advertising agency in Japan, and ask if it employs any American or British movie stars in its Japanese television commercials, you will be told politely, "We know nothing about it," or you will be referred to someone else who is equally unresponsive, or you will be promised a return call which never materializes.

The truth is that such big names as Paul Newman, Audrey Hepburn, Sean Connery, Sylvester Stallone, Kirk Douglas, Roger Moore and others of that ilk appear or have appeared in Japanese TV commercials, usually for $500,000 and up. Many stars, however, want that fact kept secret and demand severe monetary penalties in case their "Japan-only" advertisements are shown elsewhere—especially in the United States, Great Britain and Canada.

One knowledgeable Tokyo-based cosmetics manufacturer who insists upon anonymity explains, "It's as if the American and British screen stars are ashamed of working for the Japanese. They don't mind taking our money, but they are afraid of their countrymen learning about it. They are supposed to be artists, not men and women of commerce."

This same manufacturer, whose son was educated at the University of Southern California and will probably take over the family's cosmetics business, says:

Madonna: Makes Mitsubishi ads

"Old-timers like Newman, Douglas and Hepburn avoid doing TV commercials in the States because they think it makes them look like money-grubbers or stars on the way out who will do anything for a buck. It doesn't happen to be true, but that's what they think, and they don't want it known that they are advertising Japanese products and corporations in Japan. But there's another tier of movie stars—the young players like Madonna, Charlie Sheen, Rob Lowe, Mickey Rourke, Sting and Arnold Schwarzenegger—who don't feel they're downgrading their image by advertising for the Japanese." They are the ones who believe in marketing themselves globally.

To Cut or Not To Cut—That Is the Question

Circumcision, the most commonly performed operation on males in the United States, has become controversial. The American Academy of Pediatrics, which declared in 1971 that "there are no valid medical indications" for routine circumcision, apparently has altered its view. Citing data on circumcisions performed on newborn males at U.S. Army hospitals between 1975 and 1984, the academy last month issued a statement which concluded that the operation affords "potential medical benefits and advantages" for the infants. It added, however, that there also were "disadvantages and risks" and declined to recommend routine circumcision.

Circumcision is a relatively simple five- to 10-minute procedure which involves the surgical removal of the foreskin that covers the glans, the head of the penis. It is commonly done without anesthesia and is performed as a cleanliness, customary or religious measure, or all three. According to the academy, the largest pediatricians' group in the nation, the surgery offers protection against future urinary-tract infections and may prevent cancer of the penis. Some physicians contend that it also prevents cancer of the cervix in the sexual partner of the circumcised male. And others say that, because it is easier to wash a circumcised penis than an uncircumcised one, the procedure may prevent the contraction of a venereal disease as well. No proven data support these two contentions.

Physicians and nurses who oppose the practice of routine circumcision contend that it is painful and traumatic to the infant, and they ask why he should be exposed to the risk of surgery without valid medical reasons: Why have the baby risk the possible mutilation of his penis, experience a hemorrhage or suffer a local infection?

The cost of circumcision varies geographically in the U.S. In Los Angeles, obstetricians who perform the operation charge between $250 and $300. In Baltimore, physicians say the going rate is $150.

David Keith

YOU AND I MAY THINK OLLIE North was a pious, flag-waving phony. Or a great war hero turned "loose cannon." Or a patriotic Marine who did what the President wanted and did it brilliantly and courageously. Actor David Keith, who plays Colonel North in a four-hour CBS miniseries starting tonight called Guts & Glory, doesn't have any doubts:

"Here was a guy who did what he was told, and I think right now it's Congress that should be on trial. He shook things off the wall. Nobody in Washington has rocked and rolled like this since Bobby Kennedy. I have absolutely no doubts about Ollie. I only wish I could have seen him with his kids. At home. And with his co-workers. A charismatic and sexy guy, people tell me. I flat-out admire him."

A few days before Keith and I talked about North, the movie's producer-director-writer, Mike Robe, said, "Ollie North was a great Marine, but he had no business making foreign policy for the United States."

Said David Keith, "Mike and I did get along, and he did a great job—but on this we disagree."

That's how Keith is—a blunt, candid fellow whose soft Tennessee accent doesn't inhibit his hard-edged opinion. In Guts & Glory, the actor may well have the juiciest role of the year. Had he met any of the Iran-Contra players? "Fawn [Hall, North's former secretary] and I met a couple of times in Los Angeles. She was afraid this movie would be anti-Ollie."

Keith seems destined for tough roles. He played the redneck in Robert Duvall's The Great Santini, Richard Gere's buddy who killed himself in An Officer and a Gentleman and Elvis Presley in Heartbreak Hotel.

He is also very self-contained. When I asked about his next project, Keith said, "I don't talk about it until it's pinned down." He already has directed several films and says he'd like to direct again, "but not for an iffy company like these were."

At the University of Tennessee, Keith intended to become a lawyer, but he started doing college theatricals —working his way up from the chorus to the Yul Brynner role in The King and I. After graduation, it was off to New York with $600 in his pocket. He bused tables at a hotel restaurant and sold quill pens at trade shows. Finally, a stage role came along. The play died, but Keith drew good reviews. His first movie role followed, in The Rose, with Bette Midler. Then came Santini, Brubaker, Back Roads and his biggest hit so far, An Officer and a Gentleman.

Are there any plans to get together with his hero, Ollie North? "His people contacted my agents," he said. "We hope to meet."

CBS-TV

David Keith has the best TV role of the year: as Col. Oliver North in a four-hour miniseries about the controversial "Irangate" Marine.

BORN: May 8, 1954, in Knoxville, Tenn.
FILMS: The Rose, 1979; The Great Santini, 1979; Brubaker, 1980; Back Roads, 1981; Take This Job and Shove It, 1981; An Officer and a Gentleman, 1982; Independence Day, 1983; The Lords of Discipline, 1983; Firestarter, 1984; White of the Eye, 1988; Heartbreak Hotel, 1988.
TV MOVIES: Include Are You in the House Alone?, 1978; Friendly Fire, 1978; The Golden Moment, 1980; Guts & Glory, 1989.

BRADY'S BITS

"I'm not married, and I live out of a suitcase," Keith told me. I got him talking about people he enjoys: the writer John Irving, Howard Cosell and singer Rosemary Clooney. "Her son is Miguel Ferrer," Keith said, "and we were in this movie together, and I told him I was in love with his mother, and so we called her in her hotel in New York. The first thing I said was, 'Will you marry me?' And she said, 'Yes!'" Besides Rosie Clooney, Keith has one other passion: "I come from East Tennessee," he said, "right up against the mountains. The most beautiful country I've ever seen."

'My Name Is Bill W.' Airs On April 30 On NBC

By Robert DiMatteo

"My girlfriend's out there on the beach in a G-string bikini, and I'm in here talking to you and watching greasy guys try to pick her up," says James Woods over the phone from his hotel room in St. Petersburg, Fla. Lamenting the obligations of a newly "hot," much sought-after star, Woods sounded something like the bracingly hard-boiled, edgy characters he plays so well. And what was the most volatile actor in America doing in sedate, retirement-oriented St. Petersburg? He was visiting his mom and getting ready to be married — an event that Woods could only hope would put an end to the kinky rumors involving his purported ex-lover and co-star in "The Boost," Sean Young.

All People magazine innuendoes about Young seem behind Woods now, as he talks proudly of his latest TV venture — Hallmark Hall of Fame's "My Name Is Bill W." (airing Monday, April 30 on ABC). He stars as Bill Wilson, a Wall Street stockbroker who coped with the Crash of '29 by drinking himself into oblivion, then went on to co-found Alcoholics Anonymous. These days, Woods is on a roll, enjoying the success of his recent big-screen thriller "True Believer." There's reason to trust Woods' enthusiasm about the Bill Wilson bio-pic, too: The last television project that he did was the 1986 Hallmark production, "Promise," arguably the best TV movie of the past several years, and one in which Woods was brilliantly cast as a high-strung, lonely schizophrenic.

The new Hallmark production reunites Woods and his "Promise" co-star James Garner, the latter playing Dr. Bob Smith, an alcoholic surgeon and AA co-initiator who, despite his boozing, was as dignified and equable as Wilson was mercurial and rash. On a business trip to Akron in 1935, a desperate Wilson got Smith's name off a hotel lobby bulletin board. When the two drunks met to talk about their drinking and problems, AA was essentially born.

Though the actor says he has never had a serious drinking problem, he suggests diplomatically that others involved in the production may have had more intimate knowledge of the subject. "Let me just say that there were a tremendous number of people on this project who were doing it to serve a higher power than entertainment, if I can say that subtly enough," offers Woods. "We had to do a lot of soul-seaching to make sure we never violated anybody's personal anonymity — except, of course, Bill Wilson's, but he violated his own," continues Woods, alluding to the self-promoting tendencies of AA's father figure. No simple inspirational hero, Bill W. was in fact a name-dropper and a lifelong philanderer, an impulsive head-in-the-clouds type.

Will "My Name Is Bill W." address this darker side of Wilson? "Don't worry," says Woods. "This is not the soap opera version of Bill Wilson's life. There's a scene where I have urine-stained trousers and vomit all over my shirt. I said to the director, Dan Petrie, 'Boy, they're gonna have a hard time with this one in TV land.' But, you know, this is the symptom of this disease."

The Famous Teddy Z

Jon Cryer will star as Teddy Zakalokis in the new CBS half-hour comedy series, "The Famous Teddy Z." Teddy Z is the only worker in the mailroom of Major Talent Agency who doesn't want to become an agent. It seems that everyone from his mom to MTA's agents want Teddy to go to work at his family's bakery — everyone, that is, except the agency's biggest star, who wants Teddy to be his agent!

Michele Will Tell

By Michele Marks

Dear Michele: Please give us a few facts on Mary Stuart Masterson. Is that her real name? What is her age and does she have any hobbies? — LESLIE WELTON, GRAND ISLAND, NEB.

Twenty-two-year-old Mary Stuart Masterson, (yes, that's her real name), is the offspring of Tony-winning actress Carlin Glynn and writer/actor/director Peter Masterson. (They played her parents in the 1987 film "Gardens of Stone.") She made her film debut at age 8 in "The Stepford Wives" (1975). Subsequent features include "Heaven Help Us" (1985), "At Close Range" (1986) and "Some Kind of Wonderful" (1987). Masterson, who attended the posh Dalton School, also studied film and cultural anthropology briefly at New York University. A member of the new generation of Hollywood actresses known as the brain trust, she combines wholesomeness with intellect. Her hobbies are of a serious nature. She waves the banner for social causes and has toured the Soviet Union with fellow actors on behalf of the Committee for a Sane Nuclear Policy. She is romantically paired with actor Tim Ronson, with whom she has shared a pied-a-terre in Manhattan's West Village.

Dear Michele: Are Sammy Davis Jr. and Dean Martin still alive? — MARY DEFLEECE, MT. HOLLY, N.Y.

They may no longer be the hell raisers that they were during their '60s "Rat Pack" days, but both Davis and Martin are very much alive! More than a year ago, they started to tour in "The Ultimate Event" which also starred Frank Sinatra. The 71-year-old Martin had to drop out due to a recurring kidney ailment, however, and was replaced by Liza Minnelli. Martin is now on the mend, and taking it easy.

Davis, 63, underwent painful reconstructive hip surgery last year. Recuperated, he has a hot new film out with Gregory Hines, "Tap," and a new autobiography due in May. He will also continue on tour with Sinatra and Minnelli.

Dear Michele: Whatever happened to Bob Barker's wife, Jo? Is Barker presently married, single or a widower? — HELEN HATHAWAY, LAWRENCE, KAN.

Dear Michele: On the original "Star Trek" series, what was Mr. Spock's first name? — DANZAN BURUSCHKIN, PHILADELPHIA, PENN.

Leonard Nimoy starred as the half-Vulcan, half-human Mr. Spock on this ever-popular cult series. According to various sources, Mr. Spock had no first name. Spock's parents were Amanda, an Earth woman, and Sarek, a Vulcan ambassador.

Dear Michele: Has Johnny Cash ever been in prison? — GEORGE GIBSON, OCEANSIDE, CALIF.

Although he never served hard time, Cash was arrested and jailed on numerous occasions for drunk and disorderly conduct in the 1960s, when problems with stimulants and depressants nearly ended his career. He seemed to have the problem licked in the 1970s, but in 1983, when he found himself backsliding, he checked himself into the Betty Ford Clinic for 44 days and finally kicked his substance abuse.

Dear Michele: Did Thaao Penghlis, of "Mission: Impossible," ever appear on daytime's "General Hospital"? — DORENE FINNEY, CALUMET CITY, ILL.

Penghlis, currently appearing as Nicholas Black on ABC's "Mission: Impossible," is a daytime veteran. He portrayed Victor Cassadine on ABC's "General Hospital" and Count Anthony DiMera on NBC's "Days of Our Lives." During his daytime tenure, Penghlis was named Best Supporting Actor in Daytime Television by Afternoon TV Magazine and was ranked among the top 10 male daytime stars by Daytime TV.

Dear Michele: I have been looking high and low for the movie "Submarine Patrol" (1938), with Nancy Kelly and Richard Greene. Can you offer any help? — RAYMOND J. ADLEY, WILLINGBORO, N.J.

This film is available on videocassette. Check with your local video stores. If it's not in stock, they may be able to order it for you.

TV Chatter

By Frank Sanello

The Oliver North saga was just too juicy for television to wait until the Marine colonel's trial was actually over. CBS is rushing the miniseries "Guts & Glory: The Rise and Fall of Ollie North," on air Sunday, April 30, and Tuesday, May 2, as the former White House aide continues to stand trial for allegedly lying to Congress about the White House's secret funding of the Nicaraguan contras. The trial will not be included, for obvious reasons. The story begins with North's days as a cadet at the U.S. Naval Academy and ends with the start of the Iran/contra hearings.

CBS insists that the miniseries won't take sides on North's guilt or innocence, but at least one person involved in the project believes North is a stand-up kind of guy. That's David Keith, the actor who plays Ollie.

"I won't say whether he's guilty or not," says Keith. "That's up to the jury to decide. But I think he's a national hero and what he did was morally right. You can't use that as a defense for breaking the law. But at the same time if you ever put laws above morals, you're in trouble." Got that?

For the first half hour of "The Bionic Showdown," which airs April 30 on NBC, newcomer Sandra Bullock is stuck in a wheelchair because her character has been paralyzed since the age of 6. Then, she is fitted with bionic limbs and joins the original bionic duo, Lindsay Wagner and Lee Majors, in their mission to thwart an assassination attempt at an international sports meet. Bullock, a 23-year-old New Yorker who grew up in Germany, found that her time in the wheelchair evoked painful memories. Her father, an opera teacher, was confined to a wheelchair for years after being crushed in a bulldozer accident when Bullock was 10.

Soap Scoop

New plots, old friends on daytime television

By Connie Passalacqua

Nancy Addison Altman

Nancy Addison Altman, who played Jillian Coleridge Ryan for almost the entire run of "Ryan's Hope," has joined "All My Children." She's playing Marissa Rampal, mother of David and ex-wife of Jeremy Hunter. (The role of Marissa, an international spy type, was originated by Nicole Orth-Pallavacini.) She is also about the right age to believably play David's mother. We can only assume that Marissa will again cross swords – or fangs – with the current Mrs. Jeremy Hunter, the formidable Natalie (played by Kate Collins). And since David's "Romeo and Juliet" love story with Melanie Cortlandt (played by Paige Turco) looks like it will be "AMC" 's stellar summer story line, mama Marissa will probably have lots of listening to do.

Altman is a daytime fan favorite who has been nominated for several Daytime Emmys. Since leaving "RH," she has been out in California shopping for nighttime roles. (She played Mary Beth Whitehead's sister in "The Baby M Story.") But Altman's husband, Daniel Goldfarb, who works on the syndicated "Inside Edition," is based in New York, as is the "AMC" studio.

The second return is most exciting, even if it is only for a limited time. Coming back to "One Life to Live" this month is one of daytime's most interesting actors, Gerald Anthony. Anthony played Marco Dane though nine delicious years of pimpdom, chicanery and bosom-buddy collusion with housewife-hooker Karen Wolek (played by "Who's the Boss?" 's Judith Light). Since leaving "OLTL" in 1986, Anthony appeared on "Moonlighting" and played a recurring role on "Wiseguy." This season, he has appeared on "L.A. Law" as an adoption agent.

Then there's Gregory Beecroft. After Beecroft left the very popular role of Tony Reardon on "Guiding Light" in 1985, he seemed to vanish into thin air. Now Greg reappears on "As the World Turns" as Brock Lombard.

Also returning to daytime on "ATWT" is Christopher Durham (who played Dakota Smith on "Ryan's Hope" until its recent cancellation, as well as Matt McCandless on the now defunct "Capitol"). He's playing Mark Harrington, cop brother of undearly departed scoundrel Glenn Harrington.

How do you get a role on a soap these days? Only the experienced need apply!

Sports Roundup

SUNDAY, APRIL 30

NBA Basketball (CBS)

Playoff doubleheader. One team that is expected to make a strong impression in the NBA playoffs this year is the New York Knicks, who were 24-58 only two years ago. Much of the credit for the improvement of the team goes to coach Rick Pitino. "I don't think we have peaked as a team yet," he says. "I think we still have big room for improvement, especially in transition defense and a few other areas. I don't think we'll be near our peak for another two years or so." That doesn't mean he wouldn't take a championship this season. "Everybody's so hungry for a championship in New York," he says. "But we understand that we're about three or four years below the average age level of the Knicks when Clyde (Walt Frazier) and all those guys won it (in 1970 and again in 1973)." That age difference takes on added importance at playoff time. "There's no substitute at playoff time for experience," Patino says. "We want to win it, but it's like taking a sophomore team to the Final Four: It's highly unlikely that it's going to happen."

Women's Gymnastics (ABC)

U.S. vs. USSR Gymnastics Meet, live from Columbus, Ohio.

Seniors Golf (NBC)

Legends of Golf, final-round coverage, live from Onion Creek Country Club, Austin, Texas. One of the oldest and most entertaining of the Seniors tournaments, the Legends always attracts one of the best fields on the Senior Tour.

Boxing (ABC)

Pernell Whitaker defends his IBF lightweight title against Louis Lomeli in a fight scheduled for 12 rounds, live from Norfolk, Va., which happens to be Whitaker's hometown.

MONDAY, MAY 1

NCAA Baseball (ESPN)

California at Washington State.

SATURDAY, MAY 6

Men's Tennis (ABC)

Baseball (NBC)

Oakland Athletics at Detroit Tigers or Houston Astros at New York Mets. Hall of Fame outfielder Al Kaline's hair is thinning on top, and his face is a bit older, but he doesn't look that different from the young slugger who won the hearts of Tiger fans 35 years ago. Today, Kaline is one of the Detroit play-by-play announcers. "I think they're going to be very competitive," he says of the Tigers. "All Sparky Anderson teams play real hard. All the players know their roles, and he keeps everybody sharp — gives them enough playing time. I expect the Tigers to be right in it at the finish.

"They may not win it," he concedes, "but I think they're going to be very good." Kaline feels that the team needs "more run production from Keith Moreland or Chris Brown," who were acquired over the winter from San Diego in exchange for Walt Terrell. Kaline is more than just an off-the-field observer of the team. He worked out with the outfielders in the spring, as he does every year,teaching them the skills that made him one of the AL's finest defensive outfielders during his playing days.

NCAA Gymnastics (CBS)

Women's Division I Championship, from the University of Georgia, Athens, Ga. Soon-to-be-Olympian Kelly Garrison-Steves took the individual title, while Alabama took the team title.

NBA Basketball (CBS)

NBA Playoffs continue. Teams to be announced.

Horse Racing (ABC)

The Kentucky Derby, live from Churchill Downs, Louisville, Ky. The Derby has been plagued recently by enormous fields — and the sort of rush-hour traffic that produces unexpected winners. Will this be the long-awaited showdown between top 3-year-olds Easy Goer and Houston? Or will some unknown sneak through to the most coveted title in thoroughbred racing?

TUESDAY
MATLOCK

Andy Griffith stars as a cagey counsel in NBC's "Matlock." He defends a man who attempts to rescue his son from a religious cult, then is framed for the murder of the cult leader. The show airs Tuesday, May 2.

Borders No Boundary To U.S. Sports' Appeal

By Marty Linehan

The wedding of television and sports recently celebrated its 50th anniversary. It began with the first TV baseball game — Princeton vs. Columbia at New York's Baker Field — and there's no divorce in sight. In fact, the success of the marriage is global: Thanks to TV, American sports are everywhere.

Pro basketball, for instance, is one of the most popular TV sports in Australia. In Spain, taped NBA games are seen every Friday night, and in Italy 10,000 fans recently attended a Julius Erving clinic. Fourteen NBA games will be aired in the Soviet Union next year.

Two National Football League teams, the 49ers and the Rams, will play exhibition games in Japan in August. England will host the Cleveland Browns—Philadelphia Eagles game on Aug. 8, and the British will see two Sunday-night games live next season. NFL properties expects to sell $50,000 worth of NFL-endorsed products there next season. And Iceland and Hong Kong televised taped NFL games this year and will continue next season.

The National Hockey League's Stanley Cup playoffs can be seen in all South American countries except Peru and Bolivia this year. Eight exhibition games between the Washington Capitols and the Calgary Flames will be played in the Soviet Union next season.

Baseball has always been popular in Latin America. This year sees NBC's Game of the Week being televised in the Dominican Republic, Mexico, Venezuela and Puerto Rico. And you can add Japan to the list.

• At home, Sunday, April 30, we get an NBA playoff doubleheader on CBS; Women's Gymnastics, featuring the U.S. vs. U.S.S.R. live from Columbus, Ohio, on ABC; and, from NBC.

Selling Your Home And Buying Another

There isn't any quick answer to the question of whether to sell your home first or buy another first. Too much depends on market conditions in your area and on your individual circumstances. Consider several key factors first.

If you sell before you buy:

When there's a seller's market, you have a strong bargaining position. Negotiate for time with the buyer. If your bargaining position isn't strong, delay the closing a few months by making a price concession.

If the buyer must close the purchase right away, ask him to rent the house back to you until you are able to move. To calculate whether it makes sense to pay rent on your own home: Compare the cost of living in temporary quarters, such as a motel. Then, factor in the cost of moving twice plus the storage costs of furniture and other belongings that you will have to pay.

When there's a buyer's market, the seller might be flexible about the closing date. Consider offering the seller a short-term note, secured by a second mortgage on your present home, to cover the down payment on the new place until the old one is sold.

A bridge loan can sometimes provide the cash for a down payment on a new home before you close on the old one. But banks usually require that you have a contract of sale on your old home, unless you or your broker have a very strong relationship with a local bank. Banks also want assurance that you have enough equity in your old home to cover the loan and some sort of escrow arrangement to make sure the loan is paid off when the sale of your old home is closed. Rates for a bridge loan: ½% to 1% above the prime, subject to local rate limitations.

Consider renting out a newly acquired home until your old house is sold and you are ready to move in. Of course, you will have to keep the rent low, since you can only offer a month-to-month tenancy.

Tax break: Otherwise nondeductible expenses, such as depreciation on the house, can be used to offset the rental income. But aside from interest and taxes, do not write off expenses that exceed rental income. Bear in mind that you are not renting the house as an income-producing property, but as a convenience.

Caution: You should not treat the house rental as a profit-oriented activity in order to boost your deduction. Reason: When you sell one home and buy another at a higher price, you can defer the tax on your gain. To qualify, the two transactions have to take place within 2 years, and both the old house and the new one must qualify as your primary residences.

The option solution: You might be able to nail down a deal on a prospective new home without actually taking title to it, and then take your time about selling your old one. Here's how:

First, locate the house you want to buy. Work out acceptable terms with the seller. Then, offer to pay the seller for an option to purchase the house on the terms you have already worked out.

To decide how much to pay for such an option: Compare the cost of your alternatives. How much would it cost to rent temporary quarters, store property, move twice? What would it cost to carry a bridge loan (interest, recording fees, service charges, etc.)? How much of a price concession does your broker think you would have to offer to get a potential buyer of your home to be flexible on the proposed vacancy date?

If the seller is hesitant about offering you an option, point out some of the advantages to him:

If you exercise the option (which you are likely to do), he gets to keep the option fee plus the agreed-upon price.

If you let the option lapse, he keeps the fee and still gets to sell the house.

If the seller is concerned about appreciation in real estate values between the time you purchase the option and the time you exercise it, it may be worthwhile to build in an escalator clause. This could be a flat-rate clause, raising the purchase price by say, ½% for each month. Or it could be tied to a mutually acceptable price index.*

An option arrangement gives you maximum flexibility in selling your old home. Knowing you can purchase a new home on agreed-upon terms makes it easier to evaluate the offers you get for the house you are trying to sell. In addition, there's a tax break: Later on, when you eventually sell your new home, the option cost is added to the purchase price to offset against any gain on the sale.

How A Realtor Can Help In Selling Your Home

Here's how a REALTOR® can help you:

1. A REALTOR® knows the current real estate market and can help you set a realistic competitive price.
2. A REALTOR® is familiar with the local home loan market, knows if seller assistance is advisable and can help you decide the type of financing that's best to expedite your sale.
3. A REALTOR® knows how to figure the approximate net proceeds from your sale, based on types of loans, your outstanding loan balance and closing costs.
4. A REALTOR® knows how to add sales appeal to your home at low or moderate cost.
5. A REALTOR® knows where to find prospective buyers. Most homebuyers prefer to work with a real estate agent and serious prospects are "qualified" as to their affordable price range before they are shown through your home.
6. A REALTOR® can tap an even larger market, if necessary, through referrals and marketing techniques.
7. A REALTOR® frees you from the problems associated with showing your home. The REALTOR® handles all phone inquiries, makes appointments, does the actual showing and follows up. Your time is your own and your home is not exposed to anyone who has not been pre-qualified.
8. A REALTOR® is a skilled salesperson who knows how to merchandise your home effectively.
9. A REALTOR® maintains objectivity in responding to possible criticisms by the buyer and in presenting offers and counter-offers until an agreement is reached.
10. A REALTOR® knows how to help the buyer meet local financing requirements and go about obtaining a mortgage loan.
11. A REALTOR® can familiarize you with the closing procedures by explaining them all in advance. A REALTOR® usually attends the closing with you.

Spruce-up Will Add Dollars To Home Value

By MARTHA KAY SEFF

"For a few thousand dollars, we made lots of cosmetic changes," Beverly says.

Among them, the couple painted the interior of the house, wallpapered the bathrooms, re-tiled the tub, put new carpet in the master bedroom and hung "cute" curtains in the kitchen.

According to the National Association of Realtors, "Decorating will not add to the price of a house, but it will make your home more salable." And short of a major overhaul costing thousands of dollars, there's plenty that homeowners can do with a little money and a lot of elbow grease to make their homes shine at showings.

To begin with, the NAR advises home sellers to take "a buyer's-eye view" of their property. If two houses are similar, for instance, some cosmetic changes and minor repairs can make all the difference to potential buyers.

Since first impressions are important, and many buyers prefer to drive past a house before they decide to look inside, "curb charisma" is particularly important.

Says broker Tom Le Duc, "So many people just drive by. You have to entice them inside to show off the strong points."

The view from the street should be bright and approachable. according to real estate agents. Touch-up exterior paint if need be.

The back yard also should look attractive. For bare yards, you might consider filling a wooden cart with greenery. This will give prospective buyers the idea that they can work in a garden, according to Dawn Reynolds, of Design Line Interiors, a company that does interior design for model homes.

"Contrary to what people say," claims Realtor Ray Edlin, "they don't really want a fixer-upper that takes a lot of work." So, if the entry door or the rest of the exterior needs a fresh coat of paint, consider that.

It's also important to fix broken windows and torn screens. "If the roof leaks, fix it," Edlin advises. "If you need a new roof, it may be better to fit it before you sell. If you can't afford to, tell the sellers and give them a credit."

While we're talking honesty, Edlin adds, "Don't try to mislead people." That doesn't mean if you have a small back yard, you make an issue of it. Instead, Edlin suggest "Just tell people it's low-maintenance."

Incidentally, real estate agents agree that it's best that owners not be present when the house is shown. By leaving the selling to the Realtors, you leave your emotions out of what should be strictly a business deal.

Inside the house, everything should be in good condition. Leaky faucets, squeaky doors, loose doorknobs, sticky drawers, warped cabinet doors and torn wallpaper and draperies need to be fixed.

If drapes are too raggedy, you might consider leaving the windows bare or invest in some inexpensive mini-blinds.

The rooms should look as livable and spacious as possible. That means they need to be clean and organized.

The National Association of Realtors points out the importance of sparkling-clean windows, unmarred walls and shampooed carpets. A coat of paint certainly wouldn't hurt, according to Le Duc. And even if you adore your purple bedroom, you might consider repainting it a more neutral color for the new owners.

Ovens, stove top and floor need to be clean, and nobody wants to look at dirty dishes in the sink. After you finish cleaning, hide tell-tale mops and vacuum cleaner. You don't want to remind prospective buyers how much work it takes to maintain a house.

"If you have pets, potty-train them," Edlin advises without mirth. It's also best, Realtors advises, to confine pets to one room.

Removing clutter also makes a big difference. Extra furniture, piles of newspapers and the like should be trashed or stored elsewhere. Closets will look larger if you get rid of old clothes.

Remember, agents advise, "homey" homes sell better. Open the blinds to allow in as much sunlight as possible.

Buying A Home? Check It Out Carefully

New home or not-so-new, it pays to know what to look for regarding its structure, equipment and surroundings.

Though a final assessment can be made by an inspection service company, this checklist can serve as a reminder of what you should look for - in order to make a wise buying decision.

STRUCTURE OF HOME

☐Foundation. Floors and walls poured concrete. No evidence of water seepage or moisture problems. Minor settling cracks not structurally significant.

EQUIPMENT AND APPLIANCES

☐Hot water system. Type and gallon capacity. How long present unit in service (if older home).

☐Electrical. Standard house current, number of circuits, outlets and circuit breakers sufficient for everyday needs. Conditions of wiring.

☐Plumbing. Good water pressure throughout house. Tie-in to local water supply and sewage disposal system. Pipe joints clean and rust-free.

☐Appliances and fixtures. Range, refrigerator, dishwasher/disposal, laundry facilities, etc. all in working order. Accommodation for gas grill hook-up. Bathroom and kitchen fixtures in good shape.

EXTERIOR AND GROUNDS

☐Lot and landscaping. Grading level or properly contoured. Trees and shrubs sufficient for needs. Fences, walks, patio and driveway in good condition.

☐Doors and windows. Easy to open and close (or replace) for storm/screen removal or installation.

☐Roof. Gutters and downspouts in good condition. If older home, how long have shingles been is use? (Normal 20-25 year lifespan.) Chimney flashing tightly caulked.

☐Garage. Doors or opener in good working order. Sufficient electrical and heating access.

Moving Tips

Arrange for the utilities (gas, electric, water, etc.) to be turned on in the new house or apartment a few days before you move in.

Install the telephone a month before you move (or as early as is feasible).

Open savings and checking accounts promptly at a bank in the new neighborhood.

Notify companies of change of address (insurance, credit card, magazine, etc.)

If you are moving to a new state, check to see if your auto coverage is applicable.

Notify the IRS of the move both at the time of the move and again when you file your income tax.

Have pharmaceutical prescriptions renewed before moving so that adequate amounts of medication will be on hand.

Ask the previous occupants for a list of reliable local service people (electricians, plumbers, carpenters, etc.) and good nearby stores.

Moving outdoor plants to a new home: For a long move, place them in a plastic bag and cover with wet straw or weeds. If you know in autumn you'll be leaving in the spring, use a spade to cut a deep circle around a shrub or young tree to sever the roots and outline the root-ball.

Realtors Can Help In Home Buying

It's probably the biggest investment you'll ever make, with long-term financial ramifications. It calls for many informed decisions and for good advice from a real estate professional.

REALTORS® are real estate professionals who belong to the NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF REALTORS® and subscribe to its strict Code of Ethics. Not all real estate brokers and agents are REALTORS®. To make sure you're working with one, look for the federally registered membership mark REALTOR®.

1. A REALTOR® helps you determine how much home you can actually afford. Often a REALTOR® can suggest additional ways to accrue the down payment and explain alternative financing methods.
2. A REALTOR® can help you work out a realistic idea of the home best suited to your needs - size, style, features, location, accessibility to schools, transportation, shopping, etc.
3. A REALTOR® has access to listings of available homes, can evaluate them in terms of your needs and affordability, and doesn't waste your time on unsuitable homes.
4. A REALTOR® can often suggest simple, imaginative changes that could make a home more suitable for you and improve its utility and value.
5. A REALTOR® can supply information on real estate values, taxes, utility costs, municipal services and facilities, and may be aware of proposed zoning changes that could affect your decision to buy.
6. A REALTOR® has no emotional ties to the homes, can be objective about them and can point out advantages and disadvantages while answering your questions.
7. A REALTOR® is the seller's agent but acts as a liaison between you and the seller to present offers and counter-offers until an agreement is reached.
8. A REALTOR® can tell you if local law requires an attorney at closing and can provide you with a list to choose from if you don't have one.
9. A REALTOR® usually knows the local money market and can tell you about financing. A REALTOR® can also tell you what personal and financial data to bring with you when you apply for a loan.
10. A REALTOR® can help familiarize you with the closing process by explaining it all in advance.

Energy Conservation Checklist

I. REDUCE HOME ENERGY CONSUMPTION

A. Keep water heater clean. Draw off one gallon of water from the bottom of your water heater each month to prevent sediment buildup.
B. Operate dishwasher and washing machine with full loads only.
C. Don't overload refrigerator. Keep grill at bottom clean. Refrigerator should be kept defrosted.
D. Plan meals so that you can use oven for several dishes at the same time.
F. Turn lights off when not in use.
G. A quick shower uses less hot water than a tub bath.
H. Repair all leaky faucets.
I. Keep all basement and garage doors closed during summer and winter.

II. HOT WEATHER

A. Close drapes in the summer to keep the heat out. Close vents in unused rooms. (This does not apply to heat pump systems.)
B. Do not block cold air registers in use. Let the air circulate.
C. Run air conditioner only on really hot days, leaving fan on high. In humid weather set fan on lower speed for less cooling and more moisture removal.
D. Turn furnace pilot off in summer.
E. Replace or clean air filters at least once per season.
F. Keep thermostat at 78 in summer.

III. COLD WEATHER

A. Open drapes during the daytime to let sun shine in.
B. Keep unused rooms and vents closed. (This does not apply to heat pump systems).
C. Close fireplace damper when not in use.
D. Do not block hot air registers.
E. Clean or replace filters at least once per season.
F. Lower thermostats to 62 in winter.

Renovating?

The positive aspects of renovating an old house are enticing: A sense of accomplishment, an outlet for creativity, and the possibility that it will be a good investment. However, the experience of returning a house to its former glory can be frustrating and overwhelming to anyone who attempts it for the first time without proper understanding.

The worst aspects, according to old-home buffs:

Some things to consider when buying an old home to renovate:

Choosing the right neighborhood is the most important element on the investment side. If many homes are being renovated in your neighborhood, chances are good that your choice will be expensive. Best: Find a neighborhood where one or two homes have been renovated on your block and several more a few blocks away. There is a strong possibility that the neighborhood will blossom and values will rise.

Speak to owners of similar homes in your area before you purchase. Concentrate on the steps they took.

Get a good engineer's report about the home, and focus on foundation, plumbing, electrical and mechanical systems. These are the most difficult to restore. Choose an engineer with considerable experience in old homes.

Don't get an architect to draw up a master plan for your house immediately. It usually takes a while to know what you want out of a house. Unless you have lived in it a least six months to a year, you will probably make expensive mistakes.

Learn how to deal with contractors. You can't do everything yourself. You must hire experienced people. Read the contract. Make sure the contractor is bonded. Possibility: If you are fairly handy, call in a professional to do a small portion. Watch carefully. You may be able to finish the job yourself.

Study local zoning laws before you make major changes. Reason: Removing a pipe or a wall frequently requires a building permit. However, after you get the permit, your tax assessment will be raised, probably by as much as the value of the renovation. Important: Be prepared to try negotiating with tax assessor.

Most expensive changes: Changing the location of the kitchen or bathrooms. Why: Plumbing. Don't try it if you can possibly live with things where they are.

Home Security Checklist

•Use door locks with pick-resistant cylinders. A solid wooden door can take a well-constructed mortise dead bolt lock. If there is any glass in the door, or within 36 inches of it, try a double-cylinder locking device that requires a key to get out as well as to get in. Reason: The burglar can't smash a window and open the lock from the inside. Caution: Check with your local fire and building department to make certain there are no regulations that prohibit this, especially in multiple dwellings.

•Window locks. Use an inside jimmy-proof locking device. The window frames should be in good condition. There's no use locking windows if the frame can be jimmied.

In less-populated areas, the breaking of windows may go unheard. Solution: Invest in security glazing material. This permits the outside glass to break, but the intruder runs into one quarter inch of Plexiglas. Unless he's willing to expend a lot of energy, he won't get in. It's expensive, but you don't have to reinforce all windows, just those offering easy access.

•Any windows you never open should be pinned with penny nails placed through holes drilled at edges of sash. Block patio doors with screws in top track.

Secure the garage door from the inside with a padlock through a hole drilled in the track. Don't use photoelectric-cell automated doors. Better: A good bar with a key lock or an electronically operated door with a least two radio frequencies.

•Trim shrubbery around the house to three feet or less, especially around windows and doorways. Reason: Shrubs can act as shields for an attacker, or as an observation point for those looking to see if anyone's home.

•Don't leave anything around the yard that could make entry into house easier. Swimming-pool ladders, lawn furniture, even gardening tools could be used to gain entry.

•Don't leave anything around the yard that could make entry into the house easier. Swimming-pool ladders, lawn furniture, even gardening tools could be used to gain entry.

•A full inventory of your valuables, with photographs, will help police use the National Crime Information Center to track down your lost goods (which probably will be fenced quickly out of state).

•Get a jump on the thief: Ask for a security assessment by your local police department. In many areas, this involves marking valuables with your Social Security number and the initials of the police department. Such identification helps police secure convictions of burglars. Serial numbers are good to know, but too often are accidentally duplicated by manufacturers.

•Stamp "Do Not Duplicate" on keys. It's not foolproof, but it helps to hinder unauthorized key copying. Also use locks that require very hard-to-get key blanks. Some blanks are secure, that is, licensed keymakers don't stock the blanks; they must be acquired from the lockmaker. There is a delay — not long, but worthwhile. Don't leave a key under the doormat or in the mailbox. When keys are lost: Have all locks changed immediately.

•Close your drapes or blinds when dressing or undressing.

•If you lose your purse or wallet go home with somebody. Reason: The thief will know your address and may have your keys.

•Obscene calls. Unanticipated bonus of telephone answering machine: a fast hangup by the caller and no return calls.

•Before letting someone in who says he's from the gas company, cable-television company, or any other service, see proper identification. Never admit anyone who simply flashes a police badge. A police officer must also show his police identification card, which has his photograph on it.

Learning From Realtor

Buying a home is probably the biggest investment you'll ever make, with long-term financial ramifications. It calls for many informed decisions and for good advice from a real estate professional.

Realtors are real estate professionals who belong to the National Association of Realtors and subscribe to its strict Code of Ethics. Not all real estate brokers and agents are Realtors. To make sure you're working with one, look for the federally registered membership mark Realtor.

1. A Realtor helps you determine how much home you can actually afford. Often a Realtor can suggest additional ways to accrue the down payment and explain alternative financing methods.
2. A Realtor can help you work out a realistic idea of the home best suited to your needs - size, style, features, location, accessibility to schools, transportation, shopping, etc.
3. A Realtor has access to listings of available homes, can evaluate them in terms of your needs and affordability and doesn't waste your time on unsuitable homes.
4. A Realtor can often suggest simple, imaginative changes that could make a home more suitable for you and improve its utility and value.
5. A Realtor can supply information on real estate values, taxes, utility cost, municipal services and facilities and may be aware of proposed zoning changes that could affect your decision to buy.
6. A Realtor has no emotional ties to the homes, can be objective about them and can point out advantages and disadvantages while answering your questions.
7. A Realtor is the seller's agent but acts as a liaison between you and the seller to present offers and counter-offers until an agreement is reached.
8. A Realtor can tell you if local law requires an attorney at closing and can provide you with a list to chose from is you don't have one.
9. A Realtor usually knows the local money market and can tell you about financing. A Realtor also can tell you what personal and financial data to being with you when you apply for a loan.
10. A Realtor can help familiarize you with the closing process by explaining it all in advance.

Traps in Homeowner's Insurance

Many home buyers hastily purchase homeowner's insurance to qualify for their mortgage. Problem: They don't understand the choices involved in insuring a home.

Basic insurance: If a fire or other catastrophe destroys your home, you get the replacement cost, which is enough to rebuild the home to its original state, provided you carry at least 80% of the replacement cost. What you don't get: The market value of the home so that you can go out and buy a similar one. Land value and neighborhood are inherent in market value, yet unrelated to replacement cost.

Carry whatever percent of the home's replacement value the insurance company requires. If you don't, you will be penalized by the percentage you underinsure.

Example: You have a $100,000 house and carry only $60,000 on it. That is three-quarters of the $80,000 required. If you have $20,000 worth of damage from a fire, you will get only $15,000 or three-quarters of your damage. If you were insured for $80,000, you would get full coverage.

Most insurance companies will inspect your house if it is worth over $100,000.

Your broker has a replacement-cost guide. This determines the cost of the average home by computing the number of rooms and square feet. It is an educated guess.

Replacement cost versus actual cash value. Replacement cost is only useful when you rebuild your house. If you decide to walk away and buy another house, you will get actual cash value. What it is: Replacement value minus depreciation.

Example: You have a 50-year-old home worth $100,000 and $80,000 worth of insurance. You might get only $40,000 if you decide not to build, because depreciation could take away as much as 50% of the payment. (Depreciation computed by an insurance company is not related to depreciation for taxes. Depreciation is rarely in excess of 50% on a home.)

Inflation protection: Many insurance companies automatically increase coverage by whatever it costs to rebuild a home in your area under an inflation guard endorsement.

Check out: Whether inflation increases are granted annually, semi-annually or quarterly. Problem: If inflation is running 10% and you have a disaster after six months, you may have insufficient coverage. Best: Ask for an endorsement that increases protection quarterly.

Some companies offer an endorsement which guarantees to pay the full replacement cost, even if it is higher than the amount of the policy, provided you insured to 100% of the agreed upon replacement cost at the time the endorsement was issued and you increased coverage when required by company reevaluations, annual adjustments for inflation or alterations to the building. Additionally, the replacement cost will be paid even if you elect not to rebuild.

Other homeowner's policy coverage:

- Contents (furniture, china, clothing, etc.): Coverage: 50% of the insured value of the house.
- The cost of staying in a hotel or renting a temporary apartment or house while your own home is repaired. Coverage: Up to 20% of insurance on the home's contents.
- Third-party liability: Protection in case anyone is injured on your property. Or: Someone is injured through some action of yours off your property.
- Appurtenant structures such as a garage or shed. Coverage: 10% of home coverage.
- Theft away from home: This covers a suitcase stolen from a hotel room. Extended theft: theft from boat or locked car. Caution: Coverages are limited or optional in some states.

Examine policies for restricted coverage on jewelry, furs, silverware, fine art, guns, money and securities. Schedule high-value items so that you and the insurance agree on value before there is a loss.

Seek the broadest coverage possible within your budget. Some homeowner's policies are little more than fire-insurance contracts. Caution: No homeowner's policy covers floods. Flood coverage must be obtained separately. The best policies, known as all-risk policies, cover nearly everything and take the burden of proof of coverage away from you. They make the insurance company prove it is excluded from the contract.

Example: A deer jumped through a picture window and destroyed the entire interior of the house. A standard policy would not cover this incident. Under an all-risk policy, the company must pay unless it can prove the incident falls within a specific exclusion.

Example: You insure your house for $100,000. Instead of getting a $500 deductible you can get a larger credit for a ½% deductible even though it also equals $500. Realize that if the amount of the insurance is raised, your deductible will rise proportionately.

Title Insurance

Insuring the title to property does not mean the title can never be lost. What it does mean: If you lose title, you will be compensated. No matter how thorough a title search is, legitimate claims against it can pop up. Without title insurance, the cost of defense must be borne by the person being sued. With insurance, the cost is borne by the insurance company.

A title search is not the same as title insurance. It's merely an investigation of records to find out who seems to be the lawful owner of a particular piece of property.

Suppose your property is taken away because proof develops that some other party has the rightful claim. Usually you are insured for the price of the property.

Can You Make The Down Payment?

Lenders expect homebuyers to have en enough money available able to make the downpayment of between 10 and 20 percent of the asking price for the house—though FHA and VA loans require smaller down payments (0 to 5)— and to pay their share of the closing costs (3 percent to 6 percent of the loan amount). If, however, you cannot come up with a 20 percent down payment, a lender can make you a loan for as little as 5 percent down. He will, however, require you to carry private mortgage insurance for conventional (not FHA or VA) loans, for which you will pay a premium for the first year an additional monthly fee in subsequent years.

Sources on which prospective homebuyers may draw for the down payment and the closing costs include savings, stocks/bonds, Individual Retirement Accounts (IRSs), pension funds, real estate holdings, life insurance policies, mutual funds or employee savings plans.

Homebuyers may also rely on another source of funding for the down payment—a gift, or money given by a parent or other relative that need not be repaid. A person may give another person up to $10,000 per without either party being. A married couple, therefore, could give a child and spouse as much as $40,000 for a down payment tax-free. Remember, however, if you use gift money for a down payment, you will need to present a letter so stating and signed by both the giver(s) and the receiver(s) to your lender.

Mortgage lenders send a form to the homebuyer's savings institution(s) to verify the amount available for purchasing the house, as well as the amount of outstanding loans with that institution.

Emotional Ties To A Home

By J. GRAY McALLISTER III, M.D.

Whether it is a 22-room mansion in Beverly Hills, a one-room log cabin in the woods or a condominium in the city, owning one's own home has been equated with the American dream for years. Buying a first home is similar to having a child: both can bring worries and problems, but they also can give pleasure and satisfaction.

A house is a tremendous financial and emotional investment. For many people it is the largest financial transaction they may make in their lifetime. After spending many hours looking for finding the "perfect house," making an offer, negotiating the deal and having it accepted, one must then decide on the type of loan, find a lending institution and fill out all the paperwork.

Much of the process may be baffling to the first-time home buyer so it is a good idea to have your lawyer look over any contract before signing to make sure it is in your best interest. Once the contract is signed the other professionals - the lender, the lawyer and the real estate agent - should work together to help the process move as smoothly as possible.

Although there is much potention for stress it seems that homeownership is usually a positive experience, Don't just take my word for it. In asking people how they felt about their first home, one person told me she would "pat it" and say to herself "you are mine!".

Another told with pleasure stories about the construction, changes made in the basic house plan and home improvements spanning 40 years. Others tell of having first bought a small house, then selling it and buying their "family home."

A recent survey by the National Association of Realtors showed that "homeownership still ranks at the top of Americans' list of priorities... Eighty-seven percent of the people surveyed listed it as important to a "good life" and they put a higher value on homeownership than on having a car, a happy marriage, an interesting or high paying job or a lot of money."

Homeownership give a tax advantage, offers a way to save and leads to a feeling of pride and satisfaction. Homeowners tend to take care to their property, become interested in their community.

Income Expenses

Lenders use a set of general standards income/expense ratios which show how much income is used for various expenses) to test applicants for qualification. These standards are based on what experience shows a homeowner can spend to own the home and also take care of other long-term financial obligations, though lenders use their own discretion in making the final decision.

Lenders generally say the housing expenses (including mortgage payments, insurance, utilities, maintenance and so on) should not exceed 25 percent to 28 percent of the homeowner's gross monthly income. With Federal Housing Administration (FHA)-insured loans, lenders use a figure of 35 percent of the homeowner's net effective income (the gross income minus federal income tax). FHA regulations include the following in housing expenses: principal and interest payments; mortgage insurance; homeowners insurance; taxes and special assessment; maintenance; utilities; and homeowner association dues.

FHA/VA LOANS

Housing Expenses = 35%/net effective income
Long-Term Debt = 50%/net effective income

CONVENTIONAL LOANS

Housing Expenses = 25%-28% gross mo. income
Long-Term Debt = 33%-36% gross mo. income

Sprucing Up Your Home....

You also might want to turn on several lights.

In summer, turn on the air conditioning or open the windows to let in the breeze. In winter, crank up the heat or light a fire in the fireplace. To create a pleasant atmosphere, Edlin recalls that one his clients went so far as to turn on the air conditioning while he lit a fire in the middle of the summer.

-Realtor Rey Edlin

Family photos are nice on the walls, says Le Duc. At the same time, real estate agents claim, it wouldn't hurt if the house were permeated with the smell of homemade cookies or bread. Soft music also might add to the mood. And, how about a drop of vanilla on a lightbulb?

Meantime, flowers and green plants should be plentiful. Says Reynolds, "Plants indicate life and give a room warmth." And flowers add a special touch.

Home sellers should emphasize amenities. Yuppies want to know there's plenty of room for their televisions, videocassette recorder and stereo equipment.

An elegantly set dining room table will look inviting. Accessories, like little soaps and neatly rolled towels in the bath and glass canisters in the kitchen, also add a nice touch.

If you have any unfurnished rooms, Reynolds suggests filling them with plants and hanging some pictures on the walls.

Anything you can do to show that you have loved and respected your home will add to its appeal. Says Reynolds "People like to think that the previous owners have taken real good care of the home. If it's well-manicured, you don't have to build respect for it. It's already there.

Mortgage Payment Guide

Use this chart to determine the price of a house you can afford. First locate the interest rate, then read down the column to the figure closest to 28% of your monthly gross income. In many cases, this is the maximum monthly payment (including taxes and insurance) on which lending institutions will grant a mortgage. Then find the mortage figure on the left, and add this amount to your funds available for a down payment. This is the price you can afford.

What Are Your Private Property Rights?

FACT SHEET

As Americans, we have the right to own private property and, in general, use it as we see fit. Our Bill of Rights and the Fifth Amendment protect these rights, and assures us that we cannot be deprived of our property without due process of law. Nor can our property be taken for public use without just compensation.

Federal, state and local governments have rights, too. Government can tax property. It can condemn it, pay a fair price and use it for the public good. The government can regulate property through building codes, housing codes, zoning codes and more. Government also can return ownership to the state when the real owner dies without a will or known heir. As restrictions grow, many people question just how far the government should go in its regulation of property.

For instance, building codes were designed to ban inadequate construction and poor materials. Now, however, some requirements add to housing costs and prohibit the use of new, more economical construction methods. Rent control protects some tenants from exploitative landlords. Yet these controls also can speed the deterioration of existing housing and discourage the construction of new housing.

To protect private property rights, property owners should learn about local government regulations affecting private property. Property owners can help preserve their private property rights by attending city or town meetings; by knowing what's happening on such property issues as zoning, taxation and enforcement regulations that affect private property owners; and, by taking an active part in the local political process and exercising their right to vote.

Private property rights can be defined as an aggregate of rights guaranteed and protected by the government which generally includes the rights to dispose of property in every legal way, to possess it, to use it and to exclude everyone else from interfering with it.

Private property rights are limited by four governmental powers: taxation, eminent domain (the government's right to pay just compensation and condemn property for the public benefit), police power, and escheat, which is the government's acquisition of property when an owner dies without will or heirs.

Over the years, government has imposed some unreasonable limitations on private property rights that have little to do with public good and actually are prohibitive and confiscatory in nature.

Zoning restrictions such as minimum lot size requirements which can boost home prices and interfere with the ability of certain economic classes to purchase a home in a particular neighborhood.

Overly restrictive and unnecessary building codes, such as those that require the installation of burglar alarms or dictate the height of bedroom window sills.

Rent controls which hasten deterioration of housing stock and eventually cause a disproportionate shift of tax burden to single family home owners.

Unrealistic environmental laws which do not accommodate the pressing need for adequate, affordable housing.

Historic preservation laws that can declare any property historic, thus preventing the owner from altering the property without special permission from the local government.

On the contrary, fundamental human rights include freedom and the pursuit of happiness. If the ability to own property is restricted or depleted, the "pursuit of happiness" is likewise affected.

In addition, many zoning practices are essentially discriminatory in nature. Exclusionary zoning is a good example. The preservation of property rights is fundamental to the enjoyment of human rights.

The U.S. has more home ownership than any other country.

Comparatively, in the United Kingdom, only 60 percent own their own homes, with 34 percent owning in West Germany and 47 percent in France.*

Our property rights have enabled us to establish lifestyles unparalleled in the world. They cannot be taken for granted.

What is the NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF REALTORS®?

A STRONGER PERFORMANCE THAN EVER.

As First Federal continues to deliver an enviable financial performance, some of our most important people stay backstage.

But they're not strangers to the citizens of Pitt County. Our list of directors reads like an honor roll of community leaders.

First Federal is guided by high achievers, not high rollers. We've chosen the area's most respected and experienced professionals to help guide Pitt County's community bank.

And it shows. Our balance sheet reads strong and solid. Our employees are proud and positive. And our customers tell us themselves every day: our performance is outstanding.

THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE: MAKING SURE EVERY DOLLAR HAS A PITT COUNTY ADDRESS.

They set First Federal's goals, always keeping in mind the goals and dreams of Pitt County's families. So they take great pride in paying higher rates to depositors, and in investing those deposits in loans within Pitt County.

THE AUDIT COMMITTEE: THEY CAN BE OUR FOUR TOUGHEST CUSTOMERS.

With sound judgment, an eye for detail and a dedication to the highest standards, they strengthen our resolve as a financial institution. They never let us forget that in a strong community bank, the savings come first.

THE LOAN COMMITTEE: FIVE RESPECTED SIGNATURES UNDER EVERY LOAN WE MAKE.

They have the sixth sense of successful businessmen and the cautious optimism of natural leaders. They ensure that every single loan meets our commitment to financial strength, local investment, prudent lending and competitive rates.

LOCAL CONTROL, LOCAL COMMITMENT, LOCAL PRIDE: VALUES CLOSE TO HOME.

These are the leaders of First Federal—experienced businessmen and local professionals steering a steady course into the future. What these confident leaders bring to First Federal is what we, in turn, give back to our local community—a winning spirit.

A spirit that, like First Federal, is now stronger than ever.

Why You Need The All-New Protection Plus Hospital Plan

Hospital care today is very expensive. It's a fact of life. If you've been in the hospital lately, you already know this.

But, if you've been lucky and haven't had to be hospitalized, the cost of hospitalization could take you by surprise. That's why you should consider these startling facts.

- An average hospital stay now costs over $3,200.00.
- Over 99,000 people are admitted to the hospital each day—365 days a year.
- One family in every two will be faced with hospital bills this year.

These statistics from the American Hospital Association show just how common and how expensive hospital stays are.

Of course, you may have a good major medical or group plan already working for you.

But—even the best plans pay only 80% or less of your hospital bills—after you have paid deductibles of $100 or more. That means the rest is totally up to you.

Think about it. If you were hospitalized tomorrow, would you be able to pay your share of the bill?

Or would you have to dip into your hard-earned savings? Or worse yet, borrow the money?

That's why so many people have turned to the Protection Plus Hospital Plan. It pays cash benefits directly to you—or anyone you choose.

You can use the additional cash you receive from Protection Plus to pay the hospital, the doctor, leftover bills, or even household expenses. The money is yours to spend as you wish!

When you enroll in the Protection Plus Plan you are joining over a million Americans who are enjoying security and peace of mind with Physicians Mutual protection plans.

We're here when you need us®

I'd like to share with you this letter I recently received.
Arnold W. Lempka M.D.
Chairman
Board of Directors

Dear Dr. Lempka,

For many years my wife and I have been proud and satisfied owners in Physicians Mutual.

Any and all benefits have been paid promptly and correctly.

When those benefit checks arrive with those assuring words, "We are happy to be of service" ... how sweet it is!

I suspect there are some things more painful than being without insurance coverage from a company as good as yours, but at the moment, I can't think what it could be!

Cordially yours,

Edward J. Bryant

Here's How The All-New Protection Plus Hospital Plan Helps You Beat The Rising Cost Of Hospital Care

These Cash Benefits Are Paid Directly To You

$2,250.00 A Month—$75.00 A Day
For Any Covered Sickness Or Accident
You'll collect these cash benefits whenever you are hospitalized for any reason—even a simple checkup.

$3,375.00 A Month—$112.50 A Day
For A Heart Attack
If you have a heart attack, you'll need more money to cover the extra costs of emergency care, cardiologists, medication, and more. That's why your benefits increase 50% for every day you're hospitalized for a heart attack (acute myocardial infarction).

$3,375.00 A Month—$112.50 A Day
For Cancer
When you consider the American Cancer Society reports that one out of every three Americans alive today will get cancer, you can appreciate what an important added benefit this is. You get an extra 50% when hospitalized to help with the high cost of fighting and treating cancer.

$9,000.00 A Month—$300.00 A Day
Double Benefits For You And Your Spouse
When you and your insured spouse are hospitalized at the same time, you'll suffer even more financial strain. So you'll be glad knowing you both collect DOUBLE benefits when you are hospitalized at the same time —for the same or different accidents.

A Special Note To People 65 & Over
Pays Benefits In Addition To Medicare
To keep your premiums low when you're 65 and over, we pay half benefits for your first 60 days in the hospital. After that, we pay you full cash benefits of $75.00 a day for as long as you're hospitalized—even for life!

With Protection Plus, you don't have to pay for protection you don't really need. And you don't have to join an association or pay membership dues to get it. Your acceptance is guaranteed regardless of age.

You'll receive copies of the North Carolina Buyer's Guides with your policy. If you wish to have the Guides before you enroll, you may request them from the company.

You'll Also Get All These Special Features

- Protection From The Very First Day
  Your cash benefits are paid from the VERY FIRST DAY of any covered hospital stay. No deductible.

- Benefits For A Lifetime
  Your cash benefits are paid for EVERY DAY of covered hospitalization. No matter how many days you're hospitalized, or how many times. Even for life!

- You'll Collect Cash Benefits On Top Of Any Insurance
  That includes group insurance, major medical coverage, workers' compensation, prepaid health plans—even Medicare. And your benefits are not subject to state or Federal income tax.

- Money To Spend As You Choose
  Your checks will come directly to you, unless you tell us otherwise. These cash benefits are yours to use in any way you wish.

- Full Benefits For The Whole Family
  Your insured spouse and children will receive the very same protection you have. One rate provides full coverage for all—regardless of your family size.

- Pays Maternity Benefits, Too
  You'll collect full benefits for normal childbirth when pregnancy occurs anytime after your policy is issued. And at no extra cost.

- Freedom Of Choice
  Your Protection Plus coverage is good at any hospital, anywhere in the world—even federal and VA hospitals. The only exceptions are nursing homes, convalescent, extended care or self-care units of hospitals.

- Quick, Convenient Cash Payments
  Your claims will be settled promptly—and your benefit checks will be sent to you by first class mail.

- Please Note These Limitations
  Old health problems (those that became evident or were treated before the effective date of your policy) are not covered for the first year of your policy. But once that year is up, even a health problem you've had for years is covered!

  If you are 65 or over you will be covered for cancer, heart attack, stroke, hernia, disease or disorder of the prostate, tuberculosis, cataracts, emphysema, cirrhosis or diabetes if your hospital confinement commences more than six months after the effective date of your policy.

  For confinement due to mental illness, half benefits are paid for up to 30 days.

- No Salesman Will Call
  We believe the Protection Plus Hospital Plan is good enough to sell itself. That's why you won't have to deal with a salesman to enroll. Everything is handled directly between you and Physicians Mutual.

- Enroll Today For Just $1.00! Your Acceptance Is Guaranteed
  Simply fill out the brief enrollment form and mail it back to Physicians Mutual along with $1.00 for your first month's coverage. There is no medical exam required, or health questions to answer. Your acceptance is guaranteed!

The All-New Protection Plus Hospital Plan Gives You The Best Value At The Lowest Rates Possible

So it's important to take advantage of this opportunity now. You'll get much-needed cash protection—for an economical premium. Your premium will stay low, too—because you'll never be singled out for a rate increase.

What's more, you can save over 8% by paying once a year, instead of each month. That's like getting one month of protection free!

Three More Reasons To Enroll Today

1. We Will Never Turn You Down

We guarantee to issue your Protection Plus Hospital Plan regardless of your age, health, or any other reason. Of course we can issue only one policy to you on a guaranteed issue basis. If you are already a Physicians Mutual policyowner and would like information about additional coverage available, please call or write for details.

2. We Will Never Cancel Your Coverage

No matter how many claims you file—or how much money you collect—we guarantee to renew your protection for as long as you wish. Only you can cancel your coverage.

3. We Will Never Increase Your Rate Individually

You will never be singled out for a rate increase. The only way your rate will ever change is if we make the identical change on all policies like this in your state.

First Choose the Plan That Fits Your Needs

• ONE OUT! Six of the seven words shown at right share a common characteristic. One word does not. You are asked to study the makeup of the words carefully and see if you can find the "odd" one.

Clue: Check alphabetic order of letters. Certain trios that appear in six of the words do not appear in the seventh. Catch on?

• LEG WORK! My last has two legs; my whole has no more; and yet my first alone always has four. What eight-letter word meets this description?

IT'S A's MOVE TO WIN

Object of this game is for A to capture B in as few moves as possible. Each move consists of a straight-line path to an adjacent numbered or lettered circle.

To capture B, A must land on the circle that B occupies.

A moves first, then B, A again, then B, etc.

See if you can maneuver A to victory.

Remember, A goes first.

If A moves to 3, then 2, then 5, he can't lose.

COUNT BIRDS! How many birds can you find in the picture above? Our artist's tally is 22. Can you find them all?
