Gorbachev Accepts Soviet Blame For Sino Coldness Students Force Welcoming Ceremony To New Site

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BEIJING — On the first day of a historic summit disrupted by student protests, Mikhail S. Gorbachev said today that the Soviet Union must share the blame for a cold war that divided the two countries for three decades.

"Very probably we are also responsible for that period to a certain extent," the Soviet leader told China's President Yang Shangkun.

China's leaders moved the welcoming ceremony to the airport from a central Beijing square to avoid a confrontation with tens of thousands of rebellious students camped out on the plaza for a third day.

In remarks broadcast on Chinese television, Gorbachev expressed "sorrow and regret" for the bad blood of the past and said "this period has come to an end."

Gorbachev, 58, arrived today for the first Sino-Soviet summit since Nikita Khrushchev met Mao Tse-tung in 1959 in acrimonious talks that contributed to rapidly deteriorating relations.

The two nations nearly went to war after border fighting broke out in 1969, and have since been at odds over the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan, Moscow's backing of Vietnam's involvement in Cambodia and what China has called Soviet "hegemonism."

Both sides agree that Gorbachev's meeting Tuesday with 84-year-old senior leader Deng Xiaoping will normalize government and party ties and help spur economic, cultural and academic contacts.

"The way towards this meeting was not an easy one," Gorbachev said at a later banquet speech. "It required from both sides wisdom, responsibility and perseverance in removing the negative aggravations and prejudices that marred our relations for so many years."

Gorbachev also stressed that "the improvement of Soviet-Chinese relations is not directed against any third country. In the final analysis, the entire world community stands to gain from that improvement."

The United States, which in the past has benefited strategically from the Sino-Soviet split, has welcomed their rapprochement, saying it will contribute to stability in the region and world.

But the summit got off to a rocky start as up to 150,000 people, half of them students, occupied Tiananmen

Pick-Up Collides With School Bus

A pick-up truck collided with the rear of a Pitt County school bus this morning, sending the bus driver and five students to Pitt County Memorial Hospital for observation, said Trooper Steve Raines of the Highway Patrol.

Raines said the accident occurred when the Wellcome Middle School bus driven by Cathy Michelle Moore of Bethel slowed while traveling north on N.C. 903 near the Pitt-Martin County line to make a right turn. The trooper said Bobby Ray Whitehurst Jr. of Robersonville braked his small 1987 pick-up, which skidded into the back of the bus.

The accident happened about 7:40 a.m. Ms. Moore and students Ivan Carr, Kelvin Clark, Calasha Langley, Victoria Ross and Kim Wainwright were observed and released at PCMH, Raines said. A passenger in Whitehurst's car, Donald Ray Matthews, also was treated and released, he said.

Damage to the 1986 bus was estimated at $300, while damage to the truck was about $4,900, Raines said. Whitehurst was charged with failure to reduce speed to avoid an accident, the trooper said.

Shopping, Dining Add Zest To Mother's Day

By Carol Tyer
 THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Grocery check-out lines at 12:30 p.m. Sunday were comprised largely of last-minute Mother's Day shoppers.

Some supermarket customers might have been buying an extra like a balloon, greeting card or flower bouquet to their gift for Mom. Others were making that major purchase of a Mom-pleaser, from non-food items or ingredients for a strawberry shortcake to a several-course meal.

While some cooked breakfast, lunch or dinner for Mom, many took her out for a meal. Restaurants were crowded. Acheson's Family Buffet served nearly twice as many people as on a usual Sunday — 1,451 to be exact, manager Rickie Ferguson said.

The Hilton Inn moved its Sunday buffet into the hotel ballroom as it does only when large numbers are expected on special occasions. Some 350 people were served, according to Sunday manager Stan Walser.

The flower business flourished all last week and especially Saturday. There were lots of last-minute — Saturday — orders, Robert Causey of John's Flowers, said. Mother's Day is a real delivery time, he said, with out-of-town residents having flowers sent to their mothers in the Greenville area. He said extra personnel had to be added over the weekend. This Mother's Day week was from 5 percent to 7 percent more profitable than any other ever before.

Moore's Florist in Farmville, which ordinarily has three designers, had five working hard the last of last week, according to Magdalene Phillips. She said, "It's nice at Mother's Day that all the children who grew up in and around Farmville know us, (and) call us back from wherever they are and order flowers for their mothers. Not all, but many of our customers, we've known and served this way for many years." She said an extra delivery person also had to be used to fill all the flower orders.

Business at Cato's on Evans Street was "hectic" Saturday, with many shoppers buying garment gifts for their mothers, Jan Jones said. Robin Mallmood, manager of Fabricate Too women's apparel shop, said several purchases made at her shop were for mothers. Jennifer Little of the Golden Gull dress shop said most of her store's Mother's Day shopping occurred Thursday and Friday. She said summer outfits, jewelry, scarves and handbags, with mothers in mind, all seemed to sell well.

Furniture and home accessories are often choices as Mother's Day gifts, according to Bill Laughinghouse, owner of Bostic-Sugg Furniture Co. Favorites, he said, are porch rockers, recliner

Two Sailors Die In Carrier Fire

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NORFOLK, Va. — An explosion and fire killed two sailors on the 24-year-old aircraft carrier USS America in the third deadly blaze on a U.S. warship in 25 days. But the Navy said the events appeared to be unrelated.

One of the two killed Saturday night may have died while looking for his crewmate after hearing the explosion, a relative said.

The latest deaths occurred in a pump room for jet fuel as the Norfolk-based carrier cruised hundreds of miles off North Carolina, said Lt. Cmdr. Mike John, a Navy spokesman.

Firefighters on the vessel extinguished the blaze with no additional casualties, the Atlantic Fleet said in a statement.

A team of investigators, including structural and fuel experts, was to be flown today to the ship to assess damage and determine the cause of the explosion, said Lt. Cmdr. Steve Burnett, another Navy spokesman.

The Navy spokesmen would not speculate on possible causes of the blast, but said the oil-fueled carrier was continuing its mission, a six-month deployment to the Mediterranean Sea and Indian Ocean. The 1,047-foot-long America, which was commissioned in 1965, left Norfolk on Thursday with a crew of about 5,000.

Basnight Pledges To Give East Fair Share Of Funds

By John Bare
 THE DAILY REFLECTOR

The state Senate's top budget official said today in Greenville he will work to see that eastern North Carolina receives its fair share of funding, but he said he could not promise that a regional activities center is on the way.

"We have not received what has been our fair share over the previous decades," said Marc Basnight, a Democrat from Dare County who chairs the Senate's Budget Committee.

"I think it's our responsibility (to change that). We, as a unit, have discussed that many times, to see that there is at least a fairness in government," Basnight said, referring to his work with the five state lawmakers representing portions of Pitt County.

Basnight spoke to about 70 community leaders this morning at the Ramada Inn in Greenville at an event sponsored by the Pitt-Greenville Chamber of Commerce. In attendance were members of the Greenville City Council, the Pitt County Commissioners, Sens. Tom Taft and R.L. "Bob" Martin and Reps. Gene Rogers and Ed Warren.

Basnight, in his third term in the General Assembly, said he is considering a 1990 run for the 1st District Congressional seat currently held by Walter Jones Sr. of Farmville, but he will not announce his decision until the fall.

Boone, Raleigh and Greenville are pitching for lawmakers to fund regional activities centers, and Basnight assured the group that Greenville will receive the same consideration as North Carolina State University in Raleigh.

"If that happens (a center is funded for NCSU) ... you in Greenville, North Carolina, will not be left out,"

U.S. Says H-Bomb Crushed By Sea

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOKYO — A U.S. hydrogen bomb was crushed by sea pressure when it fell into the Pacific Ocean off Japan 24 years ago and its nuclear material has dissolved harmlessly on the sea floor, the United States has told Japan.

The material poses no environmental hazard, the U.S. Defense Department said in a report given to the Japanese Embassy in Washington on Friday.

A copy was given to The Associated Press today after Cabinet members said Japan would check for possible environmental dangers.

The Foreign Ministry later formed a team to evaluate the U.S. report and decide whether more studies are needed. The experts come from the Defense Agency, the coast guard, the Environmental Agency and the fisheries authority.

The only country ever attacked with nuclear weapons, Japan is sensitive to the nuclear issue. Since the 1965 accident was disclosed last week, several demonstrations have been held and opposition members of Parliament have pressed the government to get a full explanation from Washington.

Japan also still was asking whether the aircraft carrier Ticonderoga had been sailing to a Japanese port when one of its A-4 Skyhawks accidentally fell into the sea while carrying the one-megaton bomb.

This country bans nuclear weapons from its territory but is thought to look the other way in the case of port calls by U.S. vessels likely to be carrying nuclear bombs. The Navy does not comment on whether its ships carry nuclear weapons.

Japan asked the United States for an explanation last week after details of the 1965 accident were disclosed in Washington by William Arkin, a researcher for the liberal Institute of Policy Studies.

Arkin said the B-43 bomb was not in danger of exploding but its 33 pounds of plutonium could threaten the environment as the structure of the bomb deteriorated.

New Bern, Dunn Named To All-American List

By David Rocks
THE Associated Press

CHICAGO — Tupelo, Miss., hasn't had a lot to brag about since Elvis Presley died.

Until Saturday night, that is.

Tupelo was among 10 cities honored at the 40th annual All-America City Awards for programs ranging from drug-abuse prevention efforts to building soccer fields.

"A lot of people ask me, being from Tupelo, is Elvis still alive," Jack Marshall, mayor of Elvis' hometown, said in accepting the award. "Elvis is dead but the spirit lives on — the spirit of Tupelo."

The nine other winners were: Phoenix, Ariz.; Inglewood, Calif.; Greeley, Colo.; Peoria, Ill.; Salina, Kan.; New Bedford, Mass.; Dunn, N.C.; New Bern, N.C., and Roanoke County, Va.

Gregg Petersmeyer, a White House staffer with the Office of National Service, said all 30 cities chosen as finalists in the competition should be proud.

"The 30 finalists represent communities that have chosen to pour themselves into common problems," Petersmeyer said in a speech to the awards dinner.

Officials from the finalist cities went before the 12 judges Friday and Saturday and presented a 20-minute program on five criteria: community leadership, citizen participation, government performance, civic education and community volunteerism and philanthropy.

Peoria Mayor Jim Maloof was applauded for his civic improvement program.

Maloof said that when he took office, he faced a local unemployment rate of 16 percent and that it is now down to 6 percent.

"We put people back into the process of finding the problems in our city and offering solutions to the problems we have," Maloof said. "All these people have come together to discuss and makes things better."

Phoenix Mayor Terry Goddard credited the business and civic leaders in his city for winning.

"Part of the value is getting a group of civic leaders to sit down and make the presentation," Goddard said. "It makes people talk."

Inglewood Mayor Edward Vincent said the award showed his city's perseverance in fighting drugs. The city won for a program of drug-abuse prevention, anti-drug police force and anti-drug educational efforts.

"In the city of Inglewood, we have no discrimination," Vincent said. "We arrest the users, the buyers and the sellers" of drugs.

The 30 communities, drawn from a pool of 109 applicants, ranged in size from Palmer, Alaska, with a population of 3,000, to Phoenix, with more than 1 million residents.

Some of the projects for which the communities were honored are:

— Phoenix: Neighborhood projects to stop blight and a strategic planning that involves the public and private sectors.

— Greeley: A project called "Dream Team" that keeps children in school, a "Christmas Year Round" project that encourages charitable giving throughout the year.

— Peoria: A program called "Forward Peoria" that secured millions of dollars in development funds, and the development of a downtown medical center.

— Salina: A downtown redevelopment project and the establishment of a local history museum.

— New Bedford: A job training program and a program that helps find employment for people with disabilities.

— Tupelo: The construction of a new water supply system and the largest soccer complex in the Southeast.

— Dunn: Saving a failing hospital and conversion of a historic mansion to a museum.

— New Bern: Urban renewal and historic preservation, including the restoration of nearly 200 pre-revolutionary buildings.

— Roanoke County: Restoration of a housing project and construction of a library.

Calculus attracts bacteria, which cling to it and multiply, causing the gum disease to spread, increasing the threat to gums and teeth. Master Stone Artists Pick Their Way Through White House Restoration Job

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — On a muddy hilltop in Rock Creek Park, Vincent Palumbo picks his way among the mossy, broken blocks of sandstone that once were part of the nation's Capitol.

Brush grows over the weathered pile. A fallen tree blocks his path.

With a hammer and a chisel, Palumbo breaks off a sample from one stone, then shakes his head and turns away. He tries another, this time marking it with a bold splash of orange dye.

This stone will now become part of the White House.

Palumbo's work this day is one step in the complicated process of restoring the stones of the presidential mansion, some of them intricately carved, to their original glory in time for the White House bicentennial in 1992.

The $2.4 million project includes the removal of at least 39 accumulated layers of paint that have been slathered onto the building over almost two centuries.

The National Park Service, which maintains the White House and its grounds, awarded the contract to Stone Carving and Restoration Enterprises Inc. of Washington.

Overseeing the work as technical adviser is Palumbo, master carver of Washington Cathedral, the seat of the capital diocese of the Episcopal Church and one of the city's landmarks.

Palumbo, who came to this country from his native Italy at age 26, has worked on the unfinished cathedral as a stonemason since 1961. He succeeded his father as master carver after his father's death in 1966.

Several years ago, Rex Scouten, then the head usher of the White House, asked Palumbo to repair a fireplace. Later he was asked to restore the columns of the North Portico when it was repainted in 1984. The East wall of the building had been restored in 1980.

In the current project, the remaining sandstone walls are being exposed for the first time since 1797, when the White House was first painted.

In an interview in his shop at the cathedral, surrounded by gargoyles and blocks of marble, Palumbo says, "It's a national thing. There is some kind of pride in being involved in restoring the residence of the president of the great nation. Here you have this immigrant who came over with almost nothing, and to be called to restore the White House is a great honor."

The restoration, officials say, is much needed.

Until 1980, the White House had been repainted about every four years. After a study requested by Scouten and the National Park Service in 1976, the Bureau of Standards recommended that all the paint be chemically removed. Each section of wall is left bare for several months to allow the porous surface to dry. In the meantime, damaged stonework is restored.

The sandstone for the White House was quarried from Aquia Creek in northern Virginia.

The cornerstone was laid in 1792 and the walls were built and decorated from 1794 to 1798, the work being done by 10 to 12 stonemasons from Scotland.

"The walls represented the finest stonework yet produced in the United States, and portions of them survive today, the only examples of 18th-century craftsmanship that remain in the building," architectural historian William Seale wrote in his 1986 book, "The President's House."

"It's still a good solid building," Palumbo says as he guides a visitor along a scaffolding on the North wall. "It's just that the surface of the stone has been corroded."

Gary Walters, who succeeded Scouten as chief usher, agrees. The Coast and Geodetic Survey examined the house in 1976 and attested that it was stable and not moving.

Removal of the paint has disclosed both beauty and damage that were not known to be there.

"There are 39 layers of paint that are identifiable," Walters says. "There may have been more than that. They just took the paintbrushes and crammed the paint in there and we'd find it 38 of an inch thick in some of this stonework. It just hid a lot of this."

Carved swags of foliage, dogwood blossoms, fish scale designs and roses surround the windows. Rich scrollwork tops the Ionic columns.

All in all, the work has added up to more than they expected. Congress has appropriated $2.4 million for the job, and Walters says more money may be needed.

Walters is saving chunks of crumbling stone to take with him to the next appropriations hearing.

Center Uncertain

he said. "What occurs at N.C. State will occur at East Carolina in Greenville."

However, he said he does not know whether the state will choose to fund a center for Raleigh. That would leave Greenville to push for its own center, but Basnight said he does not know how lawmakers would handle that.

"We're going to have to look at that when it happens," he said.

The University of North Carolina Board of Governors has included a request to fund an activities center in Greenville, but it is not likely that the money will be available this year. ECU officials have put top priority on funds needed to expand Joyner Library, and Basnight said he is confident $24 million will be approved for the project.

There is no guarantee any activities center will be funded this session, he said, and he could not speculate whether or not the projects in Raleigh or Greenville will be funded in 1991.

Still, Basnight acknowledged that the center is a must for Greenville to continue to prosper.

"If Greenville is going to be the hub of eastern North Carolina, you bet you ought to get a convention center," he said.

Locally, the push is growing for a regional activities center. ECU's Regional Development Institute has studied the idea and said such a center in Greenville would provide a multimillion-dollar boost to the economy. Last summer, the General Assembly appropriated $500,000 for ECU to acquire land for the project.

The Pitt-Greenville Convention and Visitors Authority has discussed the project each month this year, expressing a need to continue lobbying for the center. Without the facility, the authority has not been able to attract conventions that need a large meeting space or exhibit hall.

The authority has also agreed to pay for any board member to attend a $60-per-person reception next week in Raleigh for state lawmakers. The chamber of commerce is hosting the event, and board members said their attendance will demonstrate the importance of the activities center.

Greenville attorney Phil Dixon, past chairman of the chamber of commerce, told Basnight that Greenville deserves the activities center.

"We don't have anything to serve the citizens of eastern North Carolina and to bring things to them," he said.

If an activities center becomes a reality, Basnight said ECU officials should not be concerned that such a center would cut into the university's operating budget or compete for academic funding. If a decision must be made between the center and academics, he said the center would not be built.

A request currently before the General Assembly calls for lawmakers to provide $12 million in matching funds, but Basnight said he understands that a matching system is not practical. Still, he said, it is important to work for the funding, then overcome the barrier of matching funds.

Los Angeles Teachers Go On Strike As Schools Near End Of Class Year

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — Teachers in the nation's second-largest school district went on strike today for the first time in 19 years, threatening to create chaos for nearly 600,000 students in the final weeks of school.

"The education process will come to a complete halt," warned Don Schrack, spokesman for the teachers union, United Teachers-Los Angeles.

The union, representing 22,000 teachers, is demanding a 21 percent pay hike over two years and more control over classrooms. Although district administrators said schools would remain open with substitute teachers, union President Wayne Johnson called that "a joke, at best."

The first picket lines formed at about 2 a.m. today when about 30 teachers marched in front of district warehouses in an attempt to block Teamsters union drivers from delivering food later this morning.

"For too long teachers and students have been at the end of the pecking line instead of at the front where they should be," said one of the pickets, Leo Hildebrand, a fifth grade teacher at Garvanza Elementary School.

Last-minute talks failed to resolve longstanding differences. More talks were scheduled today, but Johnson sounded pessimistic about the prospects for a quick settlement.

"We are talking back and forth all the time and proposing 'what if, what if,'" Johnson said. "I think we will keep pushing ... but it may take more time than we've got."

Board of Education President Roberta Weintraub, speaking for the majority on a deeply divided school board, said the district would not budge from what she termed one of the best contract offers for teachers in the nation.

"The lines on this issue have been clearly drawn and the ball is in the union's court," she said.

The strike deadline was pushed up two weeks, from May 30 to May 15, when Superintendent Leonard Britton refused to authorize pay for teachers who failed to turn in final grades.

About 500 hastily hired substitutes and another 500 credentialed administrators lined up to teach the district's 594,000 students.

Johnson ridiculed the plans, saying, "The district can't provide enough substitutes on a normal day."

With five weeks remaining before summer vacation, the strike threatened to create havoc at the schools, with high absenteeism, large and unruly classrooms, and students' final grades determined by substitutes.

"We are really hoping we can keep our schools open as safely as possible, and to that end, of course, the district will be working night and day," Weintraub said.

Teachers stood by their demands for higher pay and more say in how schools are run.

United Teachers-Los Angeles, which represents 22,000 of the 32,000 teachers, nurses and counselors, has been locked in a contract battle with the district for more than a year.

The union has been adamant in its demand for a 21 percent pay increase over two years and the elimination of unpaid, non-teaching duties such as school yard supervision and after-school meetings. It also seeks to give teachers more influence in how their classrooms are run.

The district has offered teachers a 21.5 percent pay raise over three years — with the possibility of more money if an anticipated increase in state revenue materializes.

The sprawling Los Angeles Unified School District, with a student body that speaks 85 languages, is second in size to New York City and hasn't been struck by teachers since a 23-day walkout in 1970.

Memorial Service Is Held For Sailors Killed In Fire

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ALAMEDA NAVAL AIR STATION, Calif. — The bodies of six sailors have been returned to their families, who were told the deaths in a ship fire were a "jolting reminder" of the dangers faced by the armed forces.

"We want you to know that we share your deep pride and your equally deep sorrow in these fateful days," Navy Vice Admiral Robert K.U. Kihune told relatives of the USS White Plains crew members at a memorial service Sunday.

Six sailors were killed, and five others were injured Tuesday, when a fire broke out in the engine room of the supply ship in the South China Sea. The fire on the Guam-based ship, part of the battle group assigned to the aircraft carrier Constellation, remains under investigation.

The blaze on the White Plains was the second of three fatal Navy ship fires during the past 3½ weeks.

An honor guard met the six flag-draped coffins, flown here by a C-141 Air Force cargo plane from Clark Air Base in the Philippines. Pallbearers carried the caskets single-file into a hangar at the Navy base on the east side of San Francisco Bay where the half-hour service was held.

About two dozen family members, some weeping and hugging each other, and nearly 150 other people attended the service.

The men honored were: Petty Officer 3rd Class Muoi Cao of Ventura; Fireman Apprentice Darryl D. Edwards of Flossmoor, Ill.; Fireman Apprentice Todd A. Follis of Lake Nebagamon, Wis.; Fireman Baxter Lesarley of Santa Fe, N.M.; Fireman Apprentice Paul D. Novotny of Howells, Neb.; and Petty Officer Second Class Jon D. Ruhmel of Elmira, N.Y.

"The sacrifices made by these men is another jolting reminder of the danger faced by those who fly, (those) at sea, and those who give freely of themselves to protect our freedom, our heritage and our responsibility to bring justice and peace among all people of the world," said Kihune, commander of the Naval Surface Force Pacific.

On April 19, 47 sailors were killed in an explosion and fire in a gun turret aboard the Norfolk, Va.-based battleship USS Iowa off Puerto Rico. On Saturday, an explosion and fire off the coast of North Carolina killed two crewmen on the Norfolk-based aircraft carrier USS America.

 TEN REASONS WHY I SWEAR

- It's been said that profanity makes ignorance audible, and from that statement you've probably guessed that I'm deviating from my usual discussion of cleaning topics and starting to meddle again. But when I read this the other day, I couldn't resist passing it on to my readers.
- If you decide to pass it on to your children or friends (especially the younger ones), you can let them know that you know of at least one company that discriminates in its hiring practices. You see, I just don't feel that I can afford to send anyone into your home that you wouldn't be pleased to have as your guest. The way they act and talk, therefore, is a critical factor in the hiring process.

'Truth In Preference To Fiction'

Ready

When A Crisis Comes, N.C. Troops Go

When trouble develops around the world it is often military personnel stationed in North Carolina who are quickly alerted and shipped off to face untold dangers.

It is that way with the Panama crisis. With the threat to American civilians growing in the canal zone, President Bush ordered additional troops into the area.

At Camp Lejeune Marines packed up to go and it wasn't a normal type military move. The Marines were in full combat gear, news reports said, and light armored vehicles were being sent with them.

Once the troops left on ships from North Carolina ports. Now they are likely to be airlifted to trouble spots. The group going to Panama left on C-141 transports and would be at their new stations within a matter of hours.

Most are young and have never faced actual combat, although their daily training is designed to prepare them for combat.

This mission to Panama will mean they will face unknown conditions. Perhaps there will be fighting, perhaps not. Still the Marines know that their predecessors have gone on similar missions, some to fight and die. Most are aware of the Marines who died in Lebanon on a peace keeping mission.

It may be that a prolonged worldwide war will never be fought again. We can certainly hope so.

There are certain to be crises which threaten American lives and our security. It is the modern military's ability to respond with lightning quickness that may mean the difference in containing such threats.

As always, though, it will be the troops who face the danger and, as frequently happens, they will come from North Carolina military bases.

'It will be the troops who face the danger and, as frequently happens, they will come from North Carolina military bases.'

Micropolitans

Good Place To Be In Next Era

Good news, people who live in America's smaller cities: yours is the place to be in the next era.

A population researcher, G. Scott Thomas, says the smaller cities will be attractive as people leave big cities and suburbs alike. Business will follow them in search of new markets. Thomas in an interview quoted by the Associated Press said people are tiring of the central cities crime rate. The suburbs of those cities have high housing prices and crowded schools. People want more control over their lives and smaller cities are influential in their own regions.

The micropolitan area would be a county with at least 40,000 population and a core city with at least 15,000 population. They are away from metropolitan areas. Not surprisingly many of the micropolitans are in the Sun Belt.

Well, eastern North Carolina is made up of micropolitans and we've been saying for years this represented the best quality of life situation.

There have been signs that eastern North Carolina's smaller cities are being discovered. There is much effort to attract affluent retired people to such cities as Washington, N.C. and Greenville. Of course, military retirees have settled around Jacksonville, Goldsboro, Havelock and Fayetteville for years.

There is adequate room for the additional population in the east and those who come will indeed find they can make a difference in the directions their communities take.

Eastern cities won't have to expend tremendous energy selling themselves in the next couple of decades. Our task will be maintaining the quality lifestyle that is such an attraction now. That will take planning and tackling of minor problems before they become large ones.

Be Careful What You Pray For

WASHINGTON — "I've been saving something for you," the cabbie said, handing me a slip of paper that looked like it might have been salvaged from a Chinese fortune cookie. "Read this."

"I did. 'Be careful what you pray for,' it read. 'You might get it.'"

"I don't get it," I said.

"Aren't you the guy that said Jesse Jackson ought to run for mayor of D.C.?" he asked.

I admitted that, some months ago, I had written a column suggesting that if Jackson could get himself elected mayor of this city, he might solve a lot of his problems and at least one of ours.

"I just left LeDroit Park in Northwest D.C., and Jesse's got people fixing up that house he bought up there," the cabbie said. "I guess that means he's about to establish residency here and run for mayor. Looks like your prayers are about to be answered. Don't say I didn't warn you."

"Okay," I said. "Who are you campaigning for? Or did Mayor Marion Barry offer to put you on the Public Service Commission?"

"I'm not campaigning for anybody yet," the cabbie said. "All I'm saying is that you Jesse backers better know what you're asking for."

It wasn't the first time I'd heard misgivings concerning a possible Jackson candidacy for mayor. But it did occur to me that the prospect held some advantages. I enumerated a few.

"What were the two biggest raps on Jackson when he ran for President?" I said. "That he had never been elected to public office, and that he had never run a major organization. If he ran for mayor, he could cure both problems."

William Raspberry

"Just think of it: He'd have to prove his ability to attract competent staff and give them major responsibility — something he's never had to do at Operation PUSH. He'd have to show that he can get along with both the White House and Congress. He'd have to demonstrate his ability to deal with budgets, balance competing demands, raise revenues, improve education, clean up the dope problem. In other words, he couldn't prove his administrative ability without also doing a lot of good for the city...."

"Including getting Marion Barry out of City Hall," the cabbie interrupted. "I've thought about all that, but I've also thought about the way Jesse flits from one headline story to another: the Eastern Air Line strike, the Virginia coal miners, the farm crisis, South Africa, the drug traffic. He even flew to the West Coast to go on a hunger strike with Cesar Chavez for about 15 minutes. In fact, I can only think of two stories that were on Page One for two days or more that Jesse didn't get involved in: the Alaskan whales and the oil spill. How's he going to keep his attention on D.C.?"

"That's the beauty of it," I said. "Since his presidential ambitions would require that he be an effective mayor, he'd have to stay put once he got elected. It would be his big chance to prove that he's got follow-through. It would be in his own interest to be the best mayor he's capable of being."

"The cabbie seemed to be thinking it over. 'Let me ask you something,' he said at last. 'Why don't we just re-elect Barry?'"

"Well, the man is in his third term. Should we elect him to a fourth term? A fifth? Even if he has been a pretty good mayor, there comes a time when he ought to just move on. I think he would move on if he had an alternative career. As it is, it's starting to look like he wants to be mayor for life."

"And what about Jesse?" the cabbie said. "If he doesn't make it as President, what would be his alternative career? He's going to go back to Chicago and run PUSH? Move to another state and run for Congress? What does he do after we elect him mayor?"

I admitted it was a good question. "Darned right, it is," the cabbie said. "You put Jesse Jackson in City Hall, and what have you got? Another mayor for life, is what. Like the man said, 'Be careful what you pray for.'"

Jim Wright & Louis XIV

WASHINGTON — Here is what I did. I took the Washington Post story about John Mack, House Speaker Jim Wright's former top aide, and showed it to a friend who had not read it. With patience, as if she had been put upon, my friend started to read and then, in a moment, gasps came from her — gasps and then more gasps and then, really, a cold fury from her eyes.

In that moment, any observer could have known that for John Mack, 16 years after he bludgeoned and stabbed a young woman, the other shoe had finally dropped.

My little experiment had a purpose. On the day that a long account of Mack's crime was published in the Post, several readers called me in outrage. They were all women and their fury far exceeded that of men with whom I discussed the incident. In fact, not a single man called. In a way, I was hearing from potential victims.

If the primary obligation of a physician is to first do no harm, then that of a member of Congress is to win re-election. To that end, he (or she) massages his congressional district. He stays in touch. He meets with constituents and overwhelms them with mail. And should a Social Security check go astray, the staff will neglect the momentous issues of the world — war and peace, feast or famine — and try to find it.

And yet it is stunning to see on occasion how out of touch Congress can be. Earlier this year, for instance, it was stunned by the reaction to a proposed pay raise. In fairness, not a single member of Congress thought the voters would applaud the pay hike, but (also in fairness) they were surprised by the vehemence of the opposition. Out on a limb, Congress crawled back: Thanks, $89,000 a year will do quite nicely for now.

The Mack affair is more of the same. As a young man (19), he lured a customer into the back room of a store in which he worked. There, he bludgeoned the woman with a hammer, slashed her repeatedly with a knife, dumped her into her car and left her to die while he went to the movies. The woman, Pamela Small, escaped death and, in so far as this is possible, recovered. Her body is scarred and her mind, it's safe to say, is not at ease.

For this crime — both inexplicable and heinous — Mack served 27 months in the Fairfax County jail. He was freed when Wright, whose daughter was then married to Mack's brother, wrote a letter to the court and offered Mack a job. Sixteen years later, Mack had risen from file clerk to become Wright's premier aide.

To the charge that Mack got off easy, Wright and others in Congress respond, "Don't you believe in rehabilitation?" It is a fair enough rejoinder, but it misses the point. The question is not whether Mack should have spent the rest of his life in jail, but whether he should have been offered a job in the House of Representatives. Both Wright and House whip Tony Coelho (D-Calif.) seem not to understand that. Years of privilege have given them a Louis XIV mentality: "I am the state." Wright and others are more modest. They merely think they are the Congress and they treat it as if it were a family business: Here, kid, we have a job for you.

The stunner is that politicians whose job it is to stay in touch could be so out of touch. These are the same men who, under different circumstances, will sympathize with the rights of victims and will give voice to the public concern that too many criminals get off too easily. And yet, they put Mack on a payroll that is publicly funded and, when the crime was revealed, defended him.

They did so even though Mack has never offered his victim any restitution. He has paid his debt to society, his defenders said. But society — whatever that is — does not have to go to the beach in a bathing suit that reveals the hideous scars of an awful crime.

And worse in some ways, these men of the House came pretty close to adopting a boys-will-be-boys defense of Mack. He was hired as if his crime had been tax evasion and not, as women know, one of misogynist rage. Would Mack have been hired had he attempted to lynch a black person? Would he have been one of the most important men in Washington if he had scrawled a swastika on a synagogue or, even, been caught torturing a cat? The answer, thrice over, would be "no."

In the end, Mack quit at the insistence of women House members — Reps. Patricia Schroeder (D-Colo.), Lynn Martin (R-Ill.), as well as others. Rep. Olympia Snowe (R-Maine) had drafted a letter calling for Mack's dismissal. For Wright, Coelho and others in the House who have both praised and defended Mack, the indignation of women must have come as a surprise.

They are, it seems, deaf to half the population. If they were not, they would have heard the gasps.

A Constitution In The Pits, Scrubbed From The Race

Paul O'Connor

RALEIGH — When an automaker redesigns an engine that has worked relatively well for years, he doesn't offer to sell consumers each new engine change independent of the others. Instead, after redesigning elements of any engine, he packages those changes in different workable combinations, and sells on the basis of features a consumer wants the most.

For example, the automaker may create one package for fuel efficiency with a feature like an aluminum engine, an another package for power, with a feature like a turbo-charger. But he won't offer those two features independently for fear that a consumer, picking and choosing, might match them together. The result would likely be a blown engine.

There's a lesson in there for the state leaders currently arguing over a series of changes in the state constitution. Automakers design engines because therein lies their expertise. They know that when you fidget with one valve here, you have to fidget with another valve over there to compensate. Otherwise, engines don't run.

The state's political leadership is fidgeting with some parts of the constitution, but it can't decide if it will package all the fidgeting into one combination that keeps working. Unlike the automakers, these leaders don't want to use their expertise to redesign a package. They want the public to pick and choose.

Gov. Jim Martin wants a straight up or down vote on the issue of gubernatorial veto, and there is strong sentiment in the state Senate for such an approach. If the governor of this state is given the veto, however, without other powers being given to the legislature, then the balance of powers in this state will be tipped.

In the House, there's sentiment for packaging several proposed constitutional amendments together for one up or down vote. Ostensibly, the House position is to provide voters with the opportunity to endorse the veto, but with other changes accompanying it that would assure a balance of powers. The problem with the House position is that it smells like a self interested rat, like nothing more than political opportunism to get the public to finally endorse an amendment for four-year legislative terms.

There was a middle approach between the Senate position, which leaves constitutional balance to an electorate that probably hasn't given the issue much thought, and the House position, which allows incumbent legislators to sneak through a goodie for themselves on the coattails of veto popularity. But that middle approach — a constitutional convention — dies with the bill passage deadline last Thursday.

For a convention, non-legislators would have been chosen to study the constitution, and propose to add some new powers and take some others away. Voters would have been asked to okay or reject a package that maintained the traditional checks and balances. A convention would have greatly reduced the change that a dominant legislature, or dominant governor, would emerge from the constitutional voting.

The General Assembly is considering at least a half-dozen constitutional changes. If all go to the voters independently, the voters will stand in the voting booth as confused as many of us are when we talk to auto mechanics. Any of a combination of amendments could pass and the Constitution could end up as non-functional as the racing car my mechanic saw in Atlanta recently. If had an aluminum engine and a turbo-charger, and it was sitting in the pits, scrubbed from the race.

For Once, Republicans Aren't Fighting With Each Other

John Flesher

RALEIGH — Tom Fetzter, the unsuccessful Republican nominee for the 4th District congressional seat in 1988, stood at the microphone and gazed up and down the head table during last week's fund-raising dinner for Sen. Jesse Helms.

Seated side by side were Lt. Gov. Jim Gardner and former Gov. Jim Holshouser, bitter enemies in the 1972 gubernatorial primary. Now, Holshouser is a paid Gardner adviser.

"A dozen or so years ago," Fetzter said to Holshouser, who recently had a growth removed from his forehead, "if some of the folks in this audience had seen you sitting ... with Jim Gardner and (Helms strategist) Tom Ellis, they would have thought that scar on your head was from a frontal lobotomy."

The wisecrack was good for a belly laugh from the crowd of 1,000 at a Raleigh hotel, but it conveyed a serious message. From all outward appearances, the North Carolina GOP — for the first time since it's had enough members and clout to matter — is not plagued by internal strife.

The two primary factions within the party — traditional, business-oriented Republicans typified by Holshouser and Gov. Jim Martin, and Helms loyalists more concerned with moral issues such as abortion and pornography — have settled into a comfortable partnership, no longer fighting for supremacy.

"There's less discord than any time I can remember," said Larry Cobb of Charlotte, minority leader of the state Senate.

The rift dates from 1972, when Holshouser beat out Gardner for the GOP gubernatorial nomination and went on to become the first Republican governor of the century. Its most recent manifestation was last year's fight for delegate slots to the national convention between party regulars and Pat Robertson supporters, many of whom were relatively new to politics.

Helms did not get involved in the dispute and the National Congressional Club, his political organization, backed Jack Kemp for president. But club leaders sympathized with the Robertson supporters and accused state GOP Chairman Jack Hawke, a Martin ally, of mistreating them.

But consider these post-1988 election developments:

•The Helms wing has decided not to challenge Hawke's election to another two-year term as chairman. In 1987, after lengthy negotiations failed to produce a consensus, Martin endorsed Hawke and the Congressional Club backed Helms protegee Barry McCarty, who withdrew shortly before the state Republican Convention was scheduled to vote.

•Jack worked with us fairly in the Fetzter campaign, and ... Jim Gardner wanted Jack to continue as state chairman, and that suited us," Congressional Club director Carter Wrenn said. "We've had some things we've asked Jack to help us with in the Helms campaign, and he's done it."

•Martin and Gardner have declared Helms' re-election their top priority for the 1990 election and promise to campaign vigorously for the senator.

•The Congressional Club has had little to say about Martin's support of two major tax increases this year — one for highway construction and the other to establish a merit-pay program for teachers. In 1981, the Club sponsored television commercials attacking a much less ambitious tax increase sought by Democratic Gov. Jim Hunt, who unsuccessfully challenged Helms in 1984.

"We personally disagree with the tax increases," Wrenn said. "But that doesn't mean we have to come to blows over it. It would be unproductive ... because there are a lot of things we might agree with Jim Martin on."

Republicans also have discovered the thrill of victory — not just in statewide races, but in campaigns for the General Assembly and local offices as well. To continue winning and expanding, they need to stick together. With Helms up for re-election next year, his supporters have particular incentive to be on their best behavior.

"Certainly, Senator Helms wants Governor Martin's help next year," Cobb said. "We had discord when (former Sen. Jim) Broyhill ran (in 1986), and he lost."

A Means To An End

Haynes Johnson

WASHINGTON — Once again, television news cameras have brought home to Americans shocking pictures that have the power to alter international events.

Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega may continue to rule as Panama's dictator for the short term, but it's hard to see how he will maintain power indefinitely after what the world has just witnessed.

Noriega's response to the overwhelming defeat of his hand-picked candidates in this week's elections was to have the results nullified. After announcing that, the Noriega-controlled Electoral Tribunal made a statement of breathtaking arrogance even for a dictatorship. Nullifying the popular results would "contribute to returning tranquility to the country," it said.

This cynical statement followed televised scenes of vicious assaults on Noriega political opponents. Bands of what Arthur H. Davis, the U.S. ambassador to Panama, described yesterday as "Noriega's paid goons" were seen attacking opponents with lead pipes, steel rods and baseball bats.

By savagely suppressing his opponents through force to thwart a clear expression of the popular will, Noriega has ceded any claim to legitimacy. He is acting out of weakness, not strength. Historically, such actions precede the fall of regimes.

From the U.S. standpoint, there are two main questions. The first, and obviously most critical, is how Noriega will be removed. Deep suspicion and resentment of past U.S. military and economic intervention in Central America make it difficult and unwise to employ U.S. power unilaterally to overthrow him. Concerted action of many nations is required.

For the United States, Noriega was a means to an end. The desired end was secret help for the Contras. Whatever means were necessary to accomplish that end were deemed acceptable. Now the United States is facing some of the consequences of such an official end-justifies-the-means philosophy.

New Sheets Planned For Leaf

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Southeastern tobacco farmers have bagged a plan which will literally provide their crops with better coverage this growing season.

A new program, funded through a 75-cent assessment on every pile of tobacco sold — 25 cents each from farmers, warehouses and tobacco companies — will provide quality burlap sheets to bundle the leaf.

Last February, industry officials created the Flue-Cured Container Corp., a Raleigh-based organization that will buy, repair and distribute sheets for flue-cured tobacco farmers, warehouses and processors.

"The sheet situation had gotten into such a terrible situation that we knew we had to do something to remedy the situation and this plan ... looked like it would work," said Mac Dunkley, the corporation's managing director. "It finally got to where something just had to be done."

Dunkley said the corporation will buy new sheets, repair old ones and deliver them to the warehouses for distribution to farmers.

"I do think that it is in the farmer's interest to have a solid sheet that is not losing tobacco, strewing tobacco as the sheet is being handled," said John Parker, assistant to the president of the N.C. Farm Bureau Federation and one of nine corporation directors. "Likewise, the buying firm doesn't need that tobacco being lost between the scales and their processing plant."

Dunkley said an average pile of tobacco will contain about 195 pounds of leaf this year. Officials estimated the 25-cent assessment will cost farmers $2.50 to $3.25 per acre of tobacco.

Until now, farmers bought their own sheets or received them from warehouses, but there was no system for repairing or replacing sheets damaged by moist tobacco, forklifts or hoists, officials said. There also was no way to ensure there would be enough sheets to go around.

Faced with perennial shortages of quality sheets at the peak of the sales season, the tobacco industry created an informal "sheet committee" 10 years ago to find solutions, Dunkley said.

The result was the container corporation, which will track the number of sheets and maintain a cycle that keeps them in good condition and in the hands of those who need them.

The corporation has ordered one million new sheets for the upcoming tobacco season and has contracted with Harper Crawford Bag Co. of Charlotte to mend and distribute sheets already in use, Dunkley said.

The sheets will be circulated through warehouses in the five states that produce flue-cured leaf — North Carolina, South Carolina, Virginia, Georgia and Florida.

Dunkley and Parker said the assessment may drop as the program becomes established.

"Once we get it up to an acceptable level, we're very confident that the cost will come down, because we're only working on a maintenance program then," Dunkley said.

Mrs. Bush reacts to a comment by Robert Chiles, trustee chairman for Bennett College

Barbara Brings Down The House At Bennett

By Art Harris
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

GREENSBORO — Not since Eleanor Roosevelt addressed an integrated audience here beneath the giant elms and oaks shading Bennett College in 1945 had the historic black women's school seen the likes of it: a first lady making waves on campus.

But here was Barbara Bush, America's first mother on Mother's Day, their commencement speaker, preaching the gospel of education, advancing her passion for learning as a way out of "slavery" — along with some motherly advice for the 92 women who graduated here Sunday in the class of '89.

"Like your mothers, I gave advice to my gang," said Mrs. Bush, 63, who has five children and 11 grandchildren. "Like 'Clean your plate, remember the starving Chinese ... don't put that in your ear ... don't cross your eyes, they'll freeze that way ... don't put that in your mouth, you don't know where it's been.'"

But there are other useful lessons to take into the world, she said, borrowing from the best seller "All I Really Need to Know I Learned in Kindergarten." Like "Play fair, share everything, wash your hands before you eat, put things back where you found them, don't hit people ... don't take things that aren't yours, say you're sorry when you hurt somebody, clean up your own mess, and warm cookies and milk really are good for you."

Beaming in a black cap and gown, she warmed them with a smile a lot of them couldn't stop talking about later. Many said they were touched that she had chosen Bennett's over an undisclosed number of invitations to speak at other college graduations, a first lady stumping for the kinder, gentler America her husband has been talking about.

"Whether you young women end up as computer whizzes, teachers, doctors, chemists, accountants, U.S. senators or presidents, whatever, these guides for living aren't really bad," she said. "(These) are things we tell children that could help adults live better lives."

An outspoken advocate of literacy programs, she conjured heroes from black history: Frederick Douglass, who learned to read as a slave; a black woman surgeon born an orphan; a once-illiterate typesetter who now heads literacy campaigns and tries to help others escape their "bondage. I can't tell you all the people I've known who have escaped the bondage of ignorance," she said. "You graduates have recognized this. And I urge you to help the young ... out there today ... enslaved by ignorance, to learn their ABCs. ..."

There was more: "Another thing most of us were taught early in school that we shouldn't forget when we get older is: Help your classmates ... help your fellow human beings."

Like Eleanor Roosevelt, she brought down the house, as 2,500 students, relatives, and faculty members gave Barbara Bush a standing ovation, shouting for her to turn so they could take her photograph as she left with an honorary degree after the nearly three-hour ceremony. "Mrs. Bush!" they yelled, as she waved. "Mrs. Bush!"

"It's a wonderful Mother's Day present for me," she had said to the graduates of her welcome. "And what a present for your mothers!"

The idea of attracting Mrs. Bush to Bennett began with Gloria Randle Scott, the college president, who met her at a United Negro College Fund dinner in New York, then went to Washington in January to meet the president-elect and explore his education goals.

Aware of Mrs. Bush's interest in education, Scott fired off a packet of information on Bennett — and an invitation to speak at graduation. Two months later the first lady, who has been deluged with more than 2,600 invitations to appear at various events since she hit the White House, signed on to address the 615 students at one of the smallest colleges in North Carolina.

Her press secretary Anna Perez declined Sunday to name schools that had been rejected. "That would be rude," she said. So why Bennett? "She was invited, it fit into her schedule, and she had learned about some really terrific literacy programs for young children and single mothers the college is doing."

Mrs. Bush was also quietly lobbied by Greensboro resident William J. Trent Jr., a former head of the United Negro College Fund who has known the Bush family for more than 40 years. He "told her what a wonderful institution it was," said Ms. Perez. During his tenure at the UNCF, Trent once asked a young Yale student, George Bush, to act as campus coordinator for the organization, and the future president accepted. That was in 1947. And now he was asking Mrs. Bush to visit Bennett, founded in 1873 as a coeducational school, then reorganized in 1926 as a four-year liberal arts college for women.

Beneath the black gown, Mrs. Bush wore a bright red suit and three strands of the Kenneth Lane imitation pearls she favors. It was an important speech for her, said Ms. Perez, and she had spent at least two hours polishing it after a granddaughter's White House birthday party Saturday.

As far as Mother's Day went, only a family dinner was planned, said Ms. Perez, nothing special. One son, Jeb, had sent red roses. She didn't know whether the president had gotten his wife a card, not that it really mattered. "Every day for them is Mother's Day," Ms. Perez said.

Taft Says Deadline Like College Exam

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — It seemed like the last days of a college semester to State Sen. Tom Taft.

The Senate had adjourned for the week last Thursday night and most members had left, but Taft was among those few awaiting the status of negotiations with the House over the meaning of the May 11 deadline for getting bills through at least one chamber.

"This reminds me of sitting up all night to study for an exam," Taft, D-Pitt, said. "That same funny feeling."

There were other feelings, too — occasional displays of frustration during the marathon committee meetings and floor sessions, which on three nights dragged on until almost midnight.

Lawmakers did have a sense of humor about it, passing around a House resolution that made the rounds Thursday night.

"Whereas, if it moves, we have legislated it; if it slowed down, we have regulated it; and if it stopped, we subsidized it; Now, therefore, be it resolved ... that the last four legislators not running for speaker would like to invite you to ... party," read the tongue-in-cheek "resolution." It was signed by Reps. Sharon Thompson, D-Durham; Harry Payne, D-New Hanover; Joni Bowie, R-Guilford; and Vernon Abernethy, R-Gaston.

Legislators return to Raleigh today and resume a more normal schedule, with such major issues as the state budget and an $8.6 billion highway package on the table. But committees also will wrestle with dozens of bills hastily passed by the other chamber in the deadline crush.

Some lawmakers admit, will need considerable reworking. "Fortunately, they'll be scrutinized again," said Rep. Mickey Michaux, D-Durham.

That raises a question: Is a mid-session deadline for getting bills through one chamber or the other a good idea? Would the Legislature do well to scrap the idea and moving at the same deliberate pace until the last week or two of the session, which inevitably is hectic?

Despite fatigue, few lawmakers appeared to support such a move last week.

"It's a good idea to have deadlines," Michaux said. "If you didn't, you'd see a lot of wild stuff get passed."

Graduates Told To Lend A Hand

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

College seniors who completed their education this weekend were told that they should consider sharing what they know with those who were not as fortunate at commencement exercises across North Carolina.

First lady Barbara Bush, who is active in literacy programs and is honorary chairperson of the National Advisory Council of Literacy Volunteers of America, challenged the 92 graduates of Bennett College to "help the young, modern Frederick Douglasses out there today who are enslaved by ignorance. Help them learn their A-B-C's and escape."

Television correspondent Roger Mudd also asked the approximately 5,000 graduates of the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill to lend a hand.

"Sen. Terry Sanford was here in April and he said that the difference between North Carolina and other states was UNC and its graduates," Mudd told the crowd of 30,000 at Kenan Stadium.

"That's true, of course, as far it goes. But unless you regard 'making the difference' a personal commitment, being a graduate of UNC is no mark of distinction. You must work at it and you must work at it every day," said Mudd, who received his master's degree in history from UNC-CH in 1953 and is now congressional correspondent for the "MacNeil/Lehrer Newshour" on PBS.

Stephen Jay Gould, evolutionary biologist and professor at Harvard University, condemned "the sorry and tragic state of science education in primary and secondary schools" as he addressed the crowd of 16,000 at Wallace Wade Stadium at Duke University.

"In a world of increasing dependence on technology, a world in which everybody has to know how to run computers or might want to know how a digital watch works, knowledge of science becomes ever more important in a practical sense," he said, noting that half of the high school teachers in the United States are not trained as scientists.

In Boone, Mecklenburg County Superintendent of Schools Peter Relic encouraged graduates of Appalachian State University's College of Education to be a part of the "revolution in education."

After education, ethics was the next most popular commencement topic.

Plane Crash

TROY, N.C. (AP) — A small private plane crashed Saturday night in Montgomery County next to the homes of three volunteer firefighters who helped pull the pilot from the burning wreckage, officials said.

The unidentified pilot, who was alone in the plane, suffered serious burns and was flown by helicopter to North Carolina Memorial Hospital in Chapel Hill, said Troy Assistant Fire Chief Joe Huntley.

Huntley said the quick actions by the firefighters and the immediate presence of the portable slide-on pumper on Creger's forest service truck may have saved the pilot's life.

"It was a good place to go down," Huntley said.

Prison Death

SALISBURY, N.C. (AP) — The State Bureau of Investigation and the Rowan County Sheriff's Department are looking into the "suspicious" death of an inmate at Piedmont Correctional Institution, a state correction spokesman said.

Rufus Coley Watson, 35, of Eden was discovered dead in his cell at 12:45 p.m. Saturday, said N.C. Department of Correction spokesman David Guth, adding that the death was of a "suspicious nature" but said he could not provide any other details.

"All I can say at this time is, of course, the investigation is in the hands of the sheriff's department and the SBI," Guth said. Officials handling the investigation were not available for comment.

Watson was serving two sentences, both stemming from second-degree murder convictions, Guth said.

Suspect Killed

KNIGHTDALE, N.C. (AP) — An unidentified man who was pointing a gun at passing motorists on U.S. 64 was killed by a Knightdale police officer after the man shot the officer in the arm, police said.

Knightdale Patrolman C.E. Lambeth was treated and released from a Raleigh hospital about noon Sunday for a bullet wound in his left arm, said Sgt. R.N. Pope of the Knightdale Police.

Police have not identified the gunman, described as a black man in his mid-30s, he said.

New River

RALEIGH (AP) — A state environmental panel has decided to reclassify 25 miles of the New River that flows through Ashe and Alleghany counties — a move that is designed to protect the stream from pollution.

Under plans approved by the N.C. Environmental Management Commission, most of the South Fork of this country's oldest river will be reclassified this summer to a Class B trout stream.

Tax Refunds

RALEIGH (AP) — People who waited until April 17 to file their North Carolina tax returns might not see their refund checks until the fourth of July.

Although the average check should take eight weeks, some will take up to 11, said Edward West, assistant director of the individual income tax division of the N.C. Revenue Department.

"It's running on schedule, about the same schedule as we had for last year," he said. "Our goal is to have all the refunds that were filed by April 17 mailed by June 30."

So far, this year's average refund is $248.72, an $8.75 increase — 3.6 percent — over last year.

Auto Insurance Rules Change Today

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Starting today, one ticket for a minor traffic offense won't mean as much to individual auto insurance rates as it used to, but it's the second ticket that will be costly.

Until now, rolling past a stop sign in North Carolina could send a driver's insurance premiums soaring by 50 percent or more for three years. Today, one minor offense will raise rates by about 15 percent. Two tickets in three years, or a major offense, will still bring a stiff increase — but probably not as big as in the past. Drunken driving, though, will bring a higher insurance penalty than ever.

"In general, the legislature has said you can mess up approximately one time every three years," said Ann Spragens, general counsel for the N.C. Insurance Department in Raleigh.

The one-ticket grace policy is part of a major overhaul that takes effect today in North Carolina's auto insurance rating system. Drivers will notice the changes the next time they renew their insurance.

When the General Assembly approved the overhaul in 1987, it was part of a package aimed at making the insurance system less punitive. Consumers had complained that they were hit with high premiums for an occasional traffic ticket.

Insurance companies accepted the revision, although they sought to make sure it wouldn't reduce the overall amount they collected from the driving public.

That change illustrates the complexity of insurance revision in the state. It's different in California, where voters approved an initiative — Proposition 103 — that, over vehement protests from insurers, ordered rates rolled back at least 20 percent and will bring restrictions on how companies can set premiums.

changes, some policyholders will pay less for insurance and some will pay more. Some — those with clean records and no inexperienced drivers in the house — won't be affected unless they get a ticket.

Among those who will pay less are drivers who get their first ticket in three years. Also benefiting will be people with safety airbags in their cars, those who commute more than 10 miles one way to work and some drivers who are convicted of traffic violations, but are granted sentence deferrals, called prayers for judgment continued.

Drunken drivers will pay more, along with people who commute less than 10 miles one way to work. In some cases, drivers who have had their licenses less than three years also will pay more.

Insurance Firms Can Reject For Any Reason They Choose

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — If you've undergone mental health treatment, that's reason enough for certain insurance companies to reject applications for health insurance, and there's no law on the books in North Carolina to prevent it.

"They can do it for any reason," said Vince J. LoMonte, a consumer specialist with the state Department of Insurance. "They can turn you down if you're fat. We can't force a company to insure anybody."

Many times, those who are rejected have applied for individual coverage. But insurance companies generally have the right to refuse anyone for any reason as long as they do not discriminate on the basis of race, gender or religion, LoMonte said.

"If they really want to check into your life, if they see you stay out late at night, booze around town and chase women, they can turn you down," he said. "A lot of people are turned down medically, and the company won't tell them why."

An Aetna representative says it is routine to turn away individual applicants who have had marriage counseling in recent years.

"We normally do not write anyone with that type of history," said Melinda D. McKee, supervisor of health marketing at Aetna's Charlotte office.

A corporate manager at Aetna's headquarters in Hartford, Conn., said the company had followed such a rule for the 19 years he had worked there.

"We ask people about everything from their height and weight to their family history," John O'Mahoney, manager of health underwriting, said.

Counseling can be a sign that a person is under stress, he said, but mental health experts in North Carolina dispute that rationale.

"That implies that if you receive marital counseling, you are a poor health risk," said Ann J. Searcy, chairman of the N.C. Coalition for Mental Health Care. "We don't feel that statistics are there to support this."

More typical complaints, mental health experts say, are from people who say they were rejected for insurance because of more serious emotional problems that require longer-term treatment.

A study commission drew up a bill, later introduced in the General Assembly, that would prohibit insurance companies from denying health insurance coverage to people because they've received counseling or treatment for mental illness or drug or alcohol dependence.

The bill, sponsored by Rep. Sidney A. Locks, D-Robeson, was approved by the House last week.

"We don't know the full impact of it," state Insurance Commissioner Jim Long said in an interview.

The revision is the latest in a series of adjustments in the state-approved mechanism that insurance companies use to set premiums. While a premium rate schedule is submitted for Long's approval, insurers are free within limits to assign drivers to various rate categories or offer certain discounts.

Democrats Consider Hunt Again

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — In the same place where Sen. Jesse Helms edged closer to announcing a re-election campaign, North Carolina Democrats tried to figure out who would challenge the conservative Republican if he did run.

The name mentioned most often was former Gov. Jim Hunt.

He arrived at the North Raleigh Hilton an hour and a half before the Jefferson-Jackson Day dinner and about 24 hours after Republicans gathered at the same site for a fund-raiser.

Hunt said he had not yet decided whether he would take on Helms, who defeated him 52 to 48 percent in a grueling 1984 campaign.

"I said I'd make a decision by summer and it's getting closer."

Hunt said as he entered the hotel. Many Democrats at the receptions said they expected Hunt to run again, and were not sure who would challenge Helms if the former governor decides to forgo the race.

"You've got to really want it," said state Rep. Billy Mills, D-Onslow. "You've gotta have that drive to win a race like that. Jim Hunt has it."

N.C. Agriculture Commissioner Jim Graham said a number of people have expressed some interest in challenging Helms, "but I think Jim Hunt is going to go for it."

U.S. Rep. Martin Lancaster said few people in the party have as high a profile as Hunt, but a high profile might not be an advantage in a race with Helms.

"It could be, if Hunt decides not to run, that we need to look for someone with a good record in business with a profession or the professions, but not necessarily a legislative or political background," Lancaster said.

"Somebody in Congress or in the legislature has a voting record that can be exploited and manipulated, but a person with an impeccable background and a record of success in another field might be the kind of person to take on Helms."

A number of Democratic organizations and leaders hosted receptions in the North Raleigh Hilton before Saturday night's annual Jefferson-Jackson dinner. The dinner marked the first time that neither a Democratic governor nor lieutenant governor sat at the head table.

Honesty Is Best Policy, Even When Telling Age

Dear Abby: Your advice to "Desperate in Skokie" was right on target. She was faced with the dilemma of admitting her true year of birth (1919) to Social Security and to her husband, who thought she was born in 1925. You told her to come clean, starting with the people at Social Security. She — and others who have falsified their year of birth in order to make themselves younger — should remember that honesty is the best policy.

There is little reason for embarrassment or worry about explaining the age discrepancy to Social Security officials; we've heard that story many times. Also, she can rest assured that her husband will not find out from us. This is confidential information, protected from disclosure by the Privacy Act. As long as she can establish her true birth date, via birth certificate or other convincing documents, she'll have no problem. But more important, we want her to receive exactly what she is entitled to — no more, no less. — Lawrence Keillor, Dept. Health and Human Services, Chicago

Dear Mr. Keillor: Thanks for a letter that will undoubtedly "put a few years on" a number of people who have taken a few years off to make themselves younger.

Dear Abby: You were prematurely apologetic to "California Schoolteacher," who picked on your statement, "All men do not cheat on their wives," saying that what you meant to say was that not all men cheat on their wives, but what you did say was: There aren't any men who cheat on their wives.

Dear Abby Abigail Van Buren

Abby, that was an unfair accusation. You said what you meant to say, but you also allowed ambiguity. Examples of ambiguous sentences: They are cooking apples. I dislike his painting. The fish is ready to eat. She decided on the boat. They invited many old men and women.

All the above sentences can be interpreted in more than one way, depending on the intonation and context.

Students, teachers or writers cannot avoid ambiguity unless they understand its nature. Few readers devote much attention to this issue. — Unambiguous At UCLA.

P.S. You may print this — maybe? Dear Unambiguous: I did print it. Obviously.

Dear Abby: I was very much annoyed to see "Wife of a Slob" compare her husband to a pig. Several days later, you published a letter from "Mother of a Slob." In your answer, you told her to give her son an ultimatum — that he could no longer live "like a pig" under her roof.

Abby, if her son lived like a pig, she'd have no problem. She'd have a son she could be proud of. Pigs are very clean. They do not smell. They do all their "business" in one location. Sure, their table manners aren't all that great, but it's difficult to eat with only a snout — and no hands.

Pigs wallow in the mud to cool off. They can't pant like dogs; they don't have an "air conditioning system" as humans do.

Pigs are very intelligent — smarter and more loyal than some dogs.

If you want to cite an example of a creature that's really filthy, try the sparrow or pigeon. Now they are truly dirty! — Lisanne In Chicago

Dear Lisanne: Sorry, I didn't mean to vilify the pig, but that old analogy "dirty as a pig" came to mind. Somehow, "dirty as a sparrow" — or even pigeon — doesn't paint as vivid a picture.

Dear Abby: The letter about the habit some people have of saying "you know, you know, you know" brought back some memories of my childhood.

When I attended Franklin Elementary school on Goethe Street, Mrs. Mortimer, my English teacher, told the class she was trying to break the "you know" habit in some of her students. I will be 82 years old this August, so that habit is nothing new.

I have enjoyed you for years in the Boca Raton News. Keep up the good work, Abby. — Elmy In Boca Raton, Fla.

Dear Elmy: Thank you. Keep reading, Elmy, and I'll keep writing.

If you would like to write to Abby, send your letter to Abigail Van Buren, P.O. Box 6940, Los Angeles, CA. 90069. For a personal, non-published reply, enclose a self-addressed stamped envelope.

Wilder Sees Life Differently

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Comic actor Gene Wilder, back on the big screen after a three-year break to help wife Gilda Radner overcome ovarian cancer, says the struggle has made him appreciate life much more.

"Life is very short," he said. "You hear it, you know to say it. Everyone says, 'I know, I know,' but ... if they knew they'd stop doing what's unimportant and do what is important. There's no time for anything else. And it's too sad to learn it when it's too late."

Wilder is busy promoting his new movie, "See No Evil, Hear No Evil," in which he again teams up with Richard Pryor. He said he is "more instinctively attuned to" Pryor than any other actor.

"I don't know why it is," Wilder said in an interview in May 29's US magazine. "I find that it's more sexual than it is artistic, and when I say sexual, I mean the response is emotional: pleasing, caring for each other."

Wilder said Radner's bout with cancer nearly drove him crazy.

"Only when I did the movie did my sanity start to come back," he said.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials rose 2.75 to 2,442.45 in the first half hour of trading.

Gainers outnumbered losers by about 3 to 2 in the early tally of New York Stock Exchange-listed issues.

Volume on the Big Board came to 27.35 million shares as of 10 a.m. on Wall Street.

The NYSE's composite index of all its listed common stocks gained .07 to 175.20. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index was up .03 at 348.33.

On Friday the Dow Jones industrial average rose 56.82 points to 2,439.70, its highest level since the October 1987 stock market collapse and the biggest daily gain since a 74.68-point rise on May 31, 1988.

Advancing issues outnumbered decliners by about 10 to 3 in nationwide trading of NYSE-listed issues, with 1,214 up, 360 down and 410 unchanged.

Big Board volume came to 221.49 million shares, up from 151.62 million in the previous session.

Soviets Pull Out Equipment

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOSCOW — Trains loaded with tanks and missile systems began leaving Mongolia today in the second stage of a partial withdrawal of Soviet troops, officials said.

It coincided with the first day of Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev's visit to China to improve relations at the first Chinese-Soviet summit in 30 years.

Soviet troops were sent to patrol the Mongolian border with China in the mid-1960s when relations between the communist rivals broke down.

"Now we don't have such conditions," a Defense Ministry spokesman said at a news briefing.

Over the next two years, about 50,000 troops will be withdrawn, about 75 percent of the force deployed in Mongolia, Maj. Gen. Yuri Markelov said.

Their withdrawal is part of an overall reduction of 500,000 Soviet troops promised by Gorbachev at the United Nations last December.

"About 50,000 servicemen, 5,000 tanks, 1,000 infantry vehicles, 190 aircraft and 130 helicopter gunships will be withdrawn from Mongolia," Markelov said.

Tass said more than 820 artillery systems will be dismantled.

It said the pullout "has been brought about by new political thinking and better relations in the region."

Last year, an infantry division was withdrawn from Mongolia, Markelov said. This year, a tank division and other military units will be pulled out and next year, one infantry division and one tank division will be recalled, he said.

"The troops were stationed in Mongolia at the request of the government and the withdrawal is also at the request of the Mongolian government," he said.

"At this time, we see no reason to cut the mission short," John said. "The vessel is able to continue."

Burnett said he was uncertain how the carrier's air operations might be affected by the damage.

John said the investigators would determine whether to repair the vessel during its deployment or wait until it returns to port.

RJR-Lawsuit

GREENSBORO (AP) — An RJR Nabisco employee and three former employees are suing RJR and a management group led by former Chief Executive F. Ross Johnson, accusing them of fraud and breach of duty.

The plaintiffs exercised stock options in August 1988 at $53.50 a share after a written offer by the company to stockholders in March 1988 to purchase its own stock within a trading range of $52 to $58.

In November, New York takeover specialist Kolberg Kravis Roberts and Co. offered to buy most of the outstanding common shares at $109 a share — more than twice what the plaintiffs received.

Sino-Soviet Talks Open In Beijing

Square — China's symbolic seat of power — in a massive protest for a more open and democratic society.

The demonstrators, including about 2,000 students in the third day of a hunger strike, defied police orders to vacate the square, forcing authorities to cancel a planned welcoming ceremony outside the Great Hall of the People next to the square.

Student leaders on Saturday delivered a letter containing 6,000 signatures to the Soviet Embassy requesting that Gorbachev address students.

Gorbachev's motorcade route from the airport, which was to have passed by the square, also had to be changed when thousands of people surged past police lines and spilled out onto the six-lane street in front of the Forbidden City.

Gorbachev's meeting with Yang was also set back by almost two hours because of the change in the welcoming ceremony site. It took place in the Great Hall next to the square, but it was unclear whether Gorbachev saw the demonstrators.

Soviet spokesman Gennady I. Gerasimov shrugged off the schedule changes, saying they "were made upon the proposal of the Chinese side. We are only guests here."

Asked if the visit was being overshadowed by the student protests, he said the summit "is incomparable and a much more important event than actions taken by students."

He noted that "each country has its own internal problems" and the Soviet Union has its share.

The month of pro-democracy sit-ins, marches and other student protests are the largest and most serious China's Communist leaders have ever faced.

Gorbachev laughed and joked with Yang during in the first minutes of their meeting. The 81-year-old Yang, who like many older Chinese studied Russian in his youth when the Kremlin was Beijing's ideological mentor, greeted the Soviet leader in Russian and was praised for his skill in the language.

Later, in a welcoming banquet in the Great Hall, Yang noted that "Sino-Soviet relations traversed a tortuous course in the past. Today, we have come to a new starting point."

Gorbachev, in a statement issued upon his arrival, said the spring season and its feelings of renewal and hope were "consonant with our mood. We hope that the meetings and talks we are going to have with the Chinese leaders will mark a watershed in relations."

He said people of the Soviet Union "follow with keen interest the transformations that are unfolding in China," likely referring to China's decade-old economic reform.

Chinese officials say they will use the summit to press the Soviets to use their influence over Vietnam to help end the 10-year Cambodian conflict.

More than 1,000 Soviet, Chinese and foreign journalists are covering the visit, which will be highlighted Tuesday by Gorbachev's meeting with Deng.

There are unconfirmed reports that Deng, the architect of China's market-oriented economic reforms, will retire from his last official post, as head of the Central Military Commission, after the Gorbachev visit.

He has been criticized by the students for holding onto power too long, and has lost some support because of popular anger over rampant official corruption and inflation.

Gorbachev will also hold talks with Communist Party General Secretary Zhao Ziyang and Premier Li Peng.

On May 9, six sailors died in an engine room fire on the supply ship USS White Plains in the South China Sea.

Six flag-draped coffins containing the bodies of the White Plains sailors arrived Sunday at Alameda Naval Air Station, Calif.

It is highly unusual for the Navy to have three fatal shipboard fires in less than a month, said Navy Lt. Paul Jenkins. But, the spokesman added, "there's no evidence to link these three isolated incidents. The Navy's overall safety record is superb."

Burnett said he was uncertain how often shipboard fires occur on an average basis.

Killed Saturday were Petty Officer 3rd Class Richard E. Childress, 22, of Ham Lake, Minn., and Airman Recruit Larry J. Brunson, 19, of Akron, Ohio.

Burnett said the bodies were flown back to Norfolk on Sunday and transported to Portsmouth Naval Hospital.

Jenkins said Childress and Brunson apparently were working in the fuel pump room when the explosion occurred.

Childress apparently notified the bridge of the problem and was returning to the room when the explosion occurred, Holleman said. Officials told the family that Brunson might have died in the explosion and that Childress might have subsequently died going back into the room, possibly to look for Brunson.

Brunson's aunt, Anne Brunson of Akron, said her nephew "was really proud to be in the service." She said he always wanted to be a pilot and enlisted immediately after graduating from Akron Buchtel High School.

Larry Weigle, a former assistant principal at Buchtel, called Brunson "a real pleasant, nice kid. If there's one thing you could say about Larry, he always had a smile on his face."

Childress' mother, Myrna Holleman, was in Seattle celebrating her 15th wedding anniversary with Holleman when they were notified of her son's death.

"It's the phone call that every parent dreads. The call in the night," she said after returning home to Ham Lake.

Childress' stepgrandfather, Aike Holleman, said Childress joined the Navy shortly after graduating from high school in 1985.

"He was going to take advantage of the GI Bill and go to college when he got out of the Navy, which was to be up in a year from September," Holleman said.

Pirates Survive Late JMU Rally, Win 4-3

By Woody Peele
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

WILMINGTON — East Carolina survived a late inning rally and a controversial play to pull out a 4-3 victory over James Madison in the Colonial Athletic Association baseball tournament Sunday evening.

The win boosted the once-beaten Pirates into the final day of the CAA tournament. East Carolina must, however, win twice Monday in the double elimination event. The Pirates will face George Mason in a 5:30 p.m. game to start the championship round.

Richmond defeated Mason 7-3

Sunday night to give all three teams one loss. The winner of the ECU-GMU game will play Richmond for the title at 8 p.m.

Controversy erupted in the bottom of the seventh inning when a Madison player was called out for interference and JMU coach Brad Babcock was ejected in the argument that followed.

With Jeff Petrucelli on first base, Brad Zaikov laid down a bunt which first baseman Mike Andrews fielded. He waited for Zaikov in the baseline, and when the tag was made, the ball was knocked from Andrews' glove.

The base umpire, behind the play, signaled Zaikov was safe, but the plate umpire called the runner out, signifying that he had thrown a forearm into Andrews, thus interfering with the play. Petrucelli was signaled back to first after the argument that followed.

As it turned out, had Petrucelli reached second safely, he would have scored a run to cut the lead to 4-3, and the run scored by the Dukes in the eighth would have tied it up.

"It was a very big play," ECU coach Gary Overton said, "in the context of the game."

Babcock refused to comment on the play, and would say only that his team "didn't drive in runs and hit the ball. East Carolina just beat us."

Overton said he thought the officials made the proper call. "He went into Andrews hard. It was uncalled for. In football, you would call it unnecessary roughness."

John White gave the Pirates seven and two-thirds worth of good work on the mound, Overton said, and that set the stage for Brien Berkman to come on an earn his third save of the year.

"John did a very good job for us," Overton said. "We were hoping that we could get seven innings from him and then bring in Brien."

As it was, Berkman actually was up in the bottom of the first inning when White got into some early trouble.

"My arm was tired from having thrown so much early in the bullpen," Berkman said. "But I felt good."

Berkman came on with the tying run at second base and two men out. After throwing three balls, he rallied back to strike out the batter.

"He must have thrown seven strikes in a row, because the batter fouled off quite a few before he finally missed," Overton said.

In the ninth, Berkman gave up a long fly ball that Steve Godin pulled in near the fence, then got the next man on a popup. A slow roller let Sam Rose reach first, and Steve Schwartz followed with a fly to deep left that John Adams pulled in to end the game.

"The long fly ball had me worried," Berkman said. "Then, on the last one, I was worried off the bat, but when I saw John wasn't going back to the fence, I knew it was all right."

Madison took the lead in the game in the bottom of the first inning. Rose opened with a single to left, moving up when the ball got past Adams. He then scored on a single by Dwight Rowe.

The Pirates came back with three in the third to take the lead for good. Kevin Riggs got his fourth straight hit of the tournament to open the inning and with one out, David Ritchie singled to right. John Thomas singled in Riggs and Tommy Eason singled to drive in both runners.

Calvin Brown followed with a single and John Gast was hit by a

Lakers Complete Sweep Of Seattle

Bulls Take 3-1 Lead Over Knicks; Pistons Top Bucks, Move Ahead 3-0

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SEATTLE — For the second time in three seasons, the Los Angeles Lakers have swept the Seattle SuperSonics in the playoffs, which could be an omen for the team with aspirations of three consecutive NBA titles.

The last time the Lakers swept Seattle, they won the title. The Sonics think the Lakers are going to do it again.

"As angry as the fans or the management here may get, the bottom line is the Lakers are a better team than we are," Sonics coach Bernie Bickerstaff said Sunday after the Lakers overcame a 29-point first-half deficit to win 97-95.

For the third year in a row, the Lakers may be the best team in professional basketball. The Sonics support that argument after watching the Lakers overcome 41-12 and 43-14 deficits in Game 4.

"I don't see anybody beating them if they keep playing like they did against us," Sonics guard Nate McMillan said.

Now 7-0 in the playoffs this season, the Lakers are going after their sixth league championship — and fifth under coach Pat Riley — in the 1980s. Before beating the Sonics 4-0, the Lakers swept Portland 3-0 in their first-round playoff series.

Magic Johnson, who had 17 points and nine assists Sunday, arrived in Los Angeles off the Michigan State campus as an underclassman in 1979. Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, the greatest scorer in the history of the NBA who will finally retire after this season, has never had it better.

By winning Sunday, the Lakers got to the NBA's Final Four against either Phoenix or Golden State. The Suns lead the Warriors 3-1 and can close out that series with a win in Phoenix Tuesday night.

A best-of-7 game Lakers-Suns series would start at the Forum Saturday and Monday if the Suns win Tuesday night.

In Sunday's game, the Lakers got 33 points from James Worthy, including 12 in the final quarter. In 22 minutes, the 42-year-old Abdul-Jabbar scored six points and had seven rebounds. Mychal Thompson, Abdul-Jabbar's backup, came off the bench to score 15 points.

Bulls.....106
Knicks.....93

CHICAGO (AP) — No one, not even Michael Jordan himself, really believed his groin injury would stop him from another magnificent performance.

"We knew we were in trouble when we heard Michael was hurt," New York Knicks coach Rick Pitino said Sunday after Jordan scored 47 points, leading the Chicago Bulls to a 106-93 victory and a 3-1 lead in their best-of-7 NBA playoff series.

"He once came to New York with an upset stomach and scored 47 points." Hobbling in the early going because of the injured left groin that underwent treatment most of Saturday night and early Sunday, Jordan got it going in the second half when he scored 29 points, including 18 in the pivotal fourth quarter.

Jordan walked with deliberate steps and appeared to lack his usual quickness in the first quarter as the Bulls fell behind 15-10.

"I think the guys on our team needed to see if Michael was OK," Coach Doug Collins said. "When they saw he was OK, it was a big lift."

Jordan himself said he didn't know what to expect despite all of the treatments.

"As I continued to play, it loosened up," Jordan said. "Your natural response is to let it loosen up. Once I did, it was full speed ahead."

Jordan got his 47 points on 12-for-18 shooting from the field and 23-for-28 on free throws. He also had 11 rebounds and six assists.

But he saved the best for the end, when Pitino had said on Saturday he hoped the Bulls would tire.

Jordan scored 18 of his team's last 25 points. After Kiki Vandeweghe cut Chicago's lead to 81-79 with nine minutes to play, Jordan had a field goal and a free throw and set up Scottie Pippen for a basket and an 88-81 lead.

The Knicks managed to cut it to 96-92 on a pair of free throw by Johnny Newman, who topped them with 23 points, but Bill Cartwright hit a pair of free throws before Jordan sealed the decision with a three-point play for a 101-92 lead with 1:33 left.

Cartwright finished with 21 points, 19 in the first half, and his ability to outplay Patrick Ewing was a big factor in the game. Ewing had only 10 points.

Only four teams in NBA history have come back from a 3-1 deficit in the playoffs. They were Boston against Philadelphia in 1968; Los Angeles against Phoenix in 1970; Washington against San Antonio in 1979 and Boston against Philadelphia in 1981.

Pistons.....110
Bucks.....90

Their conditions summed up the feelings of their respective teams, the Detroit Pistons and Milwaukee Bucks, after Sunday's third game of the Eastern Conference semifinals.

Thomas scored 26 points as the Pistons took command of the series with a 110-90 romp that put them up 3-0.

Isiah will be back tonight as the Pistons go for a sweep.

Krystkowiak, however, will be in the hospital, recovering from knee surgery to repair damaged ligaments. He played only 25 seconds Sunday before he went crashing to

Berger Tops Duncan For Clay Court Title

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ISLE OF PALMS, S.C. — Jay Berger came to the U.S. Clay Court Championships seeded sixth, ranked 42nd in the world and having not made it past the first round of his last three tournaments.

But when the weeklong tournament ended Sunday, it was Berger who beat unseeded Lawson Duncan 6-4, 6-3 for his first American championship.

The victory was a welcome one for Berger, but the 22-year-old Plantation, Fla., resident wasn't ready to proclaim it a turning point in his three-year pro career.

"It's a big win, but I don't know if it's a turning point," Berger said. "I think I've been doing pretty well in my career. In order to get to the next step, I've really got to work on some things."

Berger did enough things right to earn the $38,000 that went to the winner. Duncan, 25, who is now 0-5 in championship matches since turning pro in 1984, earned $19,000.

"I think Jay played a pretty good match," Duncan said. "He didn't make a whole lot of errors, and I think I forced just a bit. I missed some balls I thought were very close that possibly could have turned it around. But that's tennis."

Duncan beat Berger last year in the quarterfinals when Berger had to quit because of injury while trailing 6-0, 3-0. Duncan lost in the semifinals to eventual champion Andre Agassi, who did not play in this year's tournament.

This year, Duncan again lost to the eventual champion. Only this time it was in the final, which pitted two former Clemson stars, who did not go to school at the same time, against each other.

Bob Tway celebrates his birdie putt on the 18th green

Tway Snaps 3-Year Drought With Win

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

DUBLIN, Ohio — After three years and a lot of frustration, Bob Tway rediscovered what it was like to win a golf tournament.

Tway, winless since holing a dramatic sand shot on the final hole of the 1986 PGA Championship, birdied the final two holes to pass Fuzzy Zoeller and win the Memorial Tournament by two strokes Sunday.

"It's been three years since I'd won and I'd kind of forgot what it felt like," said Tway, who shot a 3-under-par 69 to finish at 11-under-par 277 at Muirfield Village Golf Club. "I've been hounded by questions of what's wrong with your game and why haven't you won. And I couldn't answer any of them."

He finally came up with the answer by nearly holing two iron shots on the back side and by rolling in a long putt on the closing hole.

Tway started the final round a shot back of Zoeller after rounds of 71, 69 and 68 on the 7,104-yard, par-72 course designed by Jack Nicklaus.

Bogeys on two of the first three holes left him four shots back of Zoeller, who led for most of the tournament's four rounds.

But Tway pulled even with a 35-foot putt on the par-4 13th hole. He took the lead by birdieing the 15th hole with a 9-iron that stopped six inches from the cup.

After Zoeller tied him with a 20-foot birdie putt at 16, Tway took the lead for good by almost holing a 7-iron from 175 yards at 17. His 2-inch birdie putt put him at 10-under.

Tway then locked it up by rolling in a 24-foot birdie putt on the closing hole. But that was not before his drive caught a tree and ricocheted back in-

Theoren Fleury raises hands after scoring the winning goal

Flames Top Montreal 3-2, Lead 1-0

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CALGARY, Alberta — Stanley Cup games are traditionally tight-checking and low-scoring.

Championship series games are usually even more so. And championship games involving the NHL's two best defensive teams figure to be tighter yet.

But just 10:02 into Sunday's series opener, the Calgary Flames and Montreal Canadiens had already split four goals.

The teams then settled down a bit, with Calgary's Theoren Fleury scoring the only goal the rest of the way with 8:15 left in the second period.

Flames goalie Mike Vernon made some big saves the last two periods, and Calgary had a 3-2 victory, setting up Game 2 here Wednesday night.

"All the hoopla about the two teams and the style that they play and suddenly, bing-bing-bing, you look up and there's four goals scored as soon as you blink an eyelash," Calgary coach Terry Crisp said.

"It was supposed to be a defensive game and they're just going end-to-end-to-end. I know for myself and probably (Montreal) coach Pat Burns, we preach defense all year, and it's 'Wow, where did our defensive style go?'"

Where, indeed. Calgary, which led the league with 117 points, allowed the second-fewest goals during the season and playoffs. Montreal, the league's second-best team with 115 points, allowed the fewest.

But right off the bat, Calgary's Jim Peplinski took a penalty and,

2:43 into the contest, Stephane Richer capitalized.

You want defense? Richer skated around the Flames' best defenseman, Al MacInnis, as if MacInnis was sinking in quicksand. Richer then beat Vernon, who said he "got caught with my feet in concrete."

If the Flames had taken the time to think about being worried, they might have realized that the Canadiens almost never blow a lead.

But just 4:08 after Richer made him look like a statue, MacInnis cranked a slap shot past goalie Patrick Roy to tie it. The power-play goal was the first allowed by Montreal in nine games.

Roy called MacInnis' shot "really hard, well placed, perfect."

Said Burns: "If you would have had a piece of plexiglass, that shot would have gone through."

OK, each team got its early goal. Surely defense would take over now, right?

Wrong. "The game got away from us," Canadiens defenseman Larry Robinson said. "You just can't afford to take chances against Calgary, with their transition game."

Montreal, pressing for the lead, got caught up ice. Peplinski sent Joel Otto, Lanny McDonald and MacInnis on a 3-on-1 break against defenseman Craig Ludwig.

"Craig tried to cut off (Otto's) pass," Roy said. "I made a mistake, too."

Roy's mistake was that he anticipated a low shot from MacInnis, who

Tarheels Hope No One Gets On A Roll

GREENVILLE, S.C. (AP) — Even though North Carolina is the top-seeded team in the Atlantic Coast Conference baseball tournament and already has beaten Duke and North Carolina, coach Mike Roberts says the Tar Heels aren't that good.

"We're not good enough to get on a roll," he said. "We're not that kind of team. We have to make breaks for ourselves and take advantage of them."

North Carolina resorted to the sacrifice no less than five times in a testy 4-2 decision over arch-rival North Carolina State Sunday night.

"Clemson and Georgia Tech, those are teams capable of getting on a roll," Roberts said. "They're strong enough athletically to overwhelm you. North Carolina is not that type of team."

Roberts' Tar Heels awaited the outcome of the Clemson-Georgia Tech game, suspended by rain Sunday night with the Tigers leading 9-3 in the eighth inning.

Duke and Maryland were eliminated in Sunday's action. Wake Forest pounded the Blue Devils 10-0 and Virginia whipped the Terrapins 7-3.

All three of the top seeds relied on pitching and defense, which is also why four of the tournament's first seven games were decided by three runs or less.

In the absence of overwhelming power, timely hitting becomes an important factor. In North Carolina's 4-2 victory over North Carolina State Sunday night, the Wolfpack failed to capitalize on nine walks issued to them by two Tar Heel pitchers. In five of the nine innings, N.C. State left two or more runners on base.

"We kept getting men on base with two men out," Wolfpack coach Ray Tanner said. "You'd like to think that eventually you're going to get a hit to fall, but it never happened."

Virginia head coach Dennis Womack noted the difference between his team's opening-game loss to Clemson and its win over Maryland Sunday.

"Today we got the big hit," Womack said. "You've got to have them if you're going to stay alive in a tournament that's this good."

The closest thing to a power-hitting club in the field is probably fifth-seeded Wake Forest, which erupted for 12 hits and 10 runs against Duke Sunday morning. The Demon Deacons have scored 392 runs this season for an average of seven a game.

"If we can put some runs on the board early, and we're capable of doing that at any point, we'll be OK," Wake Forest coach George Greer said. "It's always difficult to advance through a tournament in the losers' bracket, but we've got a chance if we can swing the bat like we did today."

Roberts would settle for much less. After the win over N.C. State, he said, "We knew we weren't going to score 10 runs. We had to get three, four or five runs. That was our philosophy. Everybody in this league has more power than North Carolina does."

Yet the Tar Heels, at 33-21-1, occupy the favorite's role.

Today's schedule began at 11 a.m. with the completion of the Clemson-Georgia Tech game. Next, Virginia takes on N.C. State, followed by Wake Forest against the Clemson-Georgia Tech loser.

UNC Gets Another NCAA Lacrosse Bid

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. — North Carolina's lacrosse team has been invited to participate in the NCAA Division I lacrosse tournament, making this the 10th successive season in which the team has earned a bid.

North Carolina is the sixth seed in the tournament, which begins May 17, and will play host to Towson State in a first-round game Wednesday on the North Carolina campus. North Carolina, 11-4, is the 1989 Atlantic Coast Conference champion, Towson State will carry a 9-4 record into the tournament.

The winner of the North Carolina-Towson State match will play Loyola College, 10-0, the tournament's third seed in a quarterfinal game on Sunday, May 21.

Other first-round games Wednesday have Pennsylvania at No. 8 Navy, Michigan State at No. 5 Adelphi, and Cornell at No. 7 Massachusetts. The Pennsylvania-Navy winner will play at top-seeded Syracuse next Sunday. The Michigan-Adelphi winner will be at fourth-seeded Maryland, and the Massachusetts-Cornell winner will be at No. 2 Johns Hopkins.

Injury Could Hamper Sunday Silence

BALTIMORE (AP) — The trainer of Sunday Silence hopes to find out today whether a bruised right front foot will keep the Kentucky Derby winner out of Saturday's Preakness Stakes.

Trainer Charlie Whittingham said the injury was minor, but the colt could not afford to miss too much training time for the second leg of the Triple Crown.

"I could miss two days without a problem, but I wouldn't miss any more," Whittingham said. "You don't take shortcuts to big races. ... The only way to play this game is to hope for the best and prepare for the worst."

Sunday Silence, who won the Derby by 2½ lengths over odds-on favorite Easy Goer, missed Sunday's workout, but was scheduled to gallop today and work five-eighths of a mile Tuesday.

Veterinarian Alex Harthill was notified of the injury Sunday morning and immediately flew to Baltimore from Louisville, Ky. to examine Sunday Silence. Harthill said preliminary X-rays did not show any signs of a fracture.

"My gut feeling is that he can make the race," he said.

Whittingham said there was an 80 percent chance of Sunday Silence running in the Preakness after watching the horse walk Sunday. The trainer said the injury could have been caused by many things.

"It could be as simple as the hoof's reaction to a muddy track," he said. "The track has been wet for several days, and a wet track can soften up a hoof."

"Then, too, he got new shoes last week. It could be nothing more than a nail that went the wrong way. That's why we took off the shoe and soaked the hoof in Epsom salts."

Harthill said another X-ray may be taken today.

"Sometimes radiographs don't show what turns out to be an obvious fracture later on," Harthill said.

If Sunday Silence can't go in the Preakness, he'll be shipped back to California.

"If he's all right for the Belmont, we'll run there," Whittingham said. "If he's not, we'll go back and wait. We've got all year long."

Twins Complete Sweep Of Toronto

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

It was double or nothing for the Minnesota Twins in their weekend sweep of the Toronto Blue Jays.

The Twins had 12 doubles, including six by Kirby Puckett, in beating the Blue Jays on Saturday and Sunday in the Metrodome.

On Sunday, Puckett tied a major-league record for doubles in consecutive games and Frank Viola tied a career high with 11 strikeouts as the Twins trounced Toronto 13-1.

Puckett, who had four doubles on Saturday, added two more Sunday to match a record set by 12 players. It was last accomplished by Hank Majeski of the Philadelphia Athletics in 1948.

Viola, 2-5, allowed three hits and walked one in eight innings as the Twins won their fifth straight game.

Viola struck out 11 twice before in his career, the last time on Aug. 8, 1987 against Oakland.

Gary Wayne got the last three outs for the Twins.

Toronto's Mike Flanagan, 2-3, lost only 2 1-3 innings as the Blue Jays lost for the 15th time in their last 18 games.

Indians 8, Tigers 3

Pete O'Brien drove in three runs with a homer and double and Tom Candiotti allowed eight hits in 8 2-3 innings as Cleveland beat visiting Detroit.

The Tigers have lost nine of their last 12 games and have scored a league-low 114 runs in 34 games.

White Sox 8, Orioles 5

Ron Kittle went 4-for-5, including a two-run homer, and Ivan Calderon and Fred Marique added two-run homers, leading Chicago past Baltimore at Memorial Stadium.

Each of the Chicago's season-high three homers came with the White Sox trailing by a run as they won for the fourth time in five games on their current road trip.

Angels 5, Yankees 0

Chuck Finley and Greg Minton combined on an eight-hitter for California's eighth shutout of the season as the Angels beat New York at Anaheim.

Finley, 4-2, allowed seven hits in six innings. Greg Minton relieved after singles by Tom Brookens and Alvaro Espinoza leading off the seventh and finished for his fourth save.

Brewers 2, Athletics 1

Glenn Braggs homered in the second inning and broke a tie in the ninth with a run-scoring single as visiting Milwaukee edged Oakland to snap a four-game losing streak.

Gary Sheffield led off the ninth with a single off starter Mike Moore, 4-3. With two outs, Braggs hit a hard liner that glanced off second baseman Glenn Hubbard and into short center field, allowing Sheffield to score.

Mariners 4, Red Sox 3

Jim Presley snapped a sixth-inning tie with an RBI double and rookie Omar Vizquel hit a two-run triple as Seattle beat Boston at the Kingdome.

Ellis Burks tied the score 3-3 in the sixth inning with a home run, his sixth, off starter Erik Hanson.

Royals 3, Rangers 2

Kurt Stillwell's single with none out in the 10th inning scored Willie Wilson to lift Kansas City past slumping Texas.

It was the Royals' eighth victory in their last nine home games, while the Rangers have lost eight of their last 10 games and finished their nine-game road trip 2-7.

Hershiser, Murray Key Dodger Win

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Another day, another shutout. On this time, the Los Angeles Dodgers were on the winning side.

Orel Hershiser pitched a two-hitter and Eddie Murray homered twice to drive in five runs Sunday as the Dodgers broke a 25-inning scoreless streak and beat Philadelphia 9-0.

Los Angeles was beaten 3-0 and 2-0 by the Phillies in the previous two games. Dodgers manager Tommy Lasorda took to the third-base coaching box for the first time this year in an attempt to help his team break out.

Los Angeles had not scored in a week and had not homered in 66 innings before Jeff Hamilton hit his first home run of the season in the second inning for a 1-0 lead. The Dodgers batted around in the fourth for a 5-0 lead.

Hershiser, 5-3, gave up a third-inning single to Ricky Jordan and an eighth-inning double to Steve Jeltz. He struck out seven and walked four as he pitched his second shutout and complete game this season. It was the 21st shutout of his career.

Murray had one hit in 18 at-bats before hitting a two-run homer in the fourth. He hit a three-run homer in the eighth, his sixth home run this season.

Alex Madrid, 1-3, allowed five hits and five runs in 3 2-3 innings.

Astros 5, Cubs 1

Mike Scott pitched a four-hitter for his 100th career victory, winning for the fifth time in six starts as Houston completed a three-game sweep.

Scott, 5-2, struck out six, walked none and allowed an unearned run in his third complete game this season. He has won six of his last seven decisions against the Cubs.

Reds 5, Cardinals 2

Danny Jackson, 2-6, allowed three hits in seven innings to win for the first time since opening day as Cincinnati completed a three-game sweep. Herm Winningham had four hits and Paul O'Neill drove in three runs.

John Franco pitched the final 1 2-3 innings for his 13th save in 13 opportunities.

Braves 5, Pirates 2

John Smoltz, 6-2, allowed four hits in seven innings, struck out five and walked six to win for the fifth time in six decisions. Atlanta won for the eighth time in 10 game as Joe Boever pitched the ninth for his fifth save.

Doug Drabek, 1-5, lost his fifth straight start. Pittsburgh has scored only seven runs in those five starts.

Mets 2, Padres 1

Luis Salazar's error on Mark Carreon's grounder to shortstop with one out and the bases loaded in the ninth allowed Len Dykstra to score the winning run.

Roger McDowell, 1-1, pitched a two-hit ninth. Dave Leiper, 0-1, relieved Dennis Ramussen in the eighth.

Expos 4, Giants 3

Dennis Martinez allowed five hits in eight innings and Andres Galaraga and Tim Wallach hit run-scoring doubles. Candy Maldonado hit his first two home runs of the season for the Giants, who lost for the third time in nine games.

Mears Earns 5th Straight Indy Pole

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

INDIANAPOLIS — Rick Mears is in a class by himself on the front row in the Indianapolis 500.

When the green flag is waved on May 28 for the 73rd running of the Indy race, Mears will start from the pole position for a record fifth time and from the front row a record-tying ninth time in his 12-year career.

Until Sunday, when Mears smashed the one- and four-lap qualification records at the Indianapolis Motor Speedway, only A.J. Foyt and the late Rex Mays could match Mears' pole-position starts.

Now, with an average speed of 223.885 mph, Mears has established himself as a solid favorite to join Foyt and Al Unser as the only four-time Indy winners.

"That is an honor in itself," Mears said of being the only five-time pole starter. "I didn't really realize it until last year that we were that close. I tried not to think about it, but I'm very excited about it."

Unser, his Penske Racing teammate, appears to present the biggest obstacle to Mears in this year's race.

"It's a battle between myself and the clock when it comes to qualifying. It's not necessarily against an individual," said Mears, the defending Indy winner. "But when we get on the racetrack and race, it's a battle against each other just like any other time."

Unser started Sunday's demolition of the Speedway records with a four-lap average of 223.471 mph, breaking Mears' year-old record of 219.198. But just as he did last week in practice, when Unser upstaged him with a faster unofficial speed, Mears reclaimed quickly the record.

This time, it was official, and it dropped Unser to second place, in the middle of the front row. Brazilian Emerson Fittipaldi qualified at 222.329 for a start on the outside.

Jim Crawford of Scotland, former winner Mario Andretti and Scott Brayton, the only other drivers above 220 mph, qualified on the second row. Bobby Rahal, another former winner, Al Unser Jr. and Brazilian Raul Boesel earned third-row starting positions.

"We got as much out of it as we could," said Mears, who started his four-lap run with a 223.187 mph circuit of the 2½-mile oval and added successive laps of 223.897, 224.254 and 224.204.

His second lap topped the previous one-lap record of 223.803 set earlier in the day on Unser's fourth lap.

"We had to run quite a bit harder to get the numbers we did now," said Mears, who had topped 226 mph in practice on Friday and again Sunday morning before qualifications began. His nine starts from the front row ties an Indy record set by former driver Bobby Unser, who this year will drive the pace car.

Twenty-six drivers qualified, including former winners Mears, Al Unser, Andretti, Rahal, Foyt, Tom Sneva and Gordon Johncock, leaving seven spots to fill in the final two days of time trials Saturday and Sunday. The first scheduled day of qualifications this past Saturday was rained out.

"The grip just wasn't quite there like we had this morning," Mears said. "I really thought the 225 was within the realm, but it wasn't."

Sunday's record-breaking performance earned him $160,000 in cash and prizes. Last year, for winning the pole and the race, Mears took home a record $804,853 for the Penske team from the first $5 million purse in auto racing history.

The front row of Mears, Unser and Fittipaldi put three Penske race cars in the top three spots of the lineup, although Fittipaldi drives for the rival Patrick Racing team. The third Penske team driver, former winner Danny Sullivan, was injured in a crash on Thursday and watched qualifications from the Penske trackside suite after being released from the hospital Sunday morning.

"I feel bad for Danny," Mears said of his teammate, who had practiced at more than 223 mph before the crash. "I'm sure he would have had a good shot at the pole, and certainly the front row. Now we just have to work on getting him ready and into the race."

Sullivan, who suffered a broken right forearm and mild concussion, is expected to be ready to qualify this week. Geoff Brabham, a former Indy-car regular and now a star on the IMSA sports car circuit, will practice in one of the team cars this week just in case Sullivan can't drive.

The only other active former winner who has not yet qualified is Johnny Rutherford, who warmed up but did not make an attempt.

Foyt earned a tentative spot on the inside of the fourth row by qualifying for a record 32nd consecutive year. Rutherford's 24 previous starts is second-most in Indy history, a number matched in qualifications Sunday by the elder Unser and Andretti.

Andretti's son and teammate, Michael, had to qualify twice to get a spot in the lineup. His first run at 220.940 mph was disallowed when it was discovered his car was 4½ pounds too light. He later qualified at 218.774, giving him a tentative spot on the outside of the seventh row.

CAA Tourney Notebook:

WILMINGTON — The Colonial Athletic Association baseball tournament jinx is alive and well.

In the three previous CAA outings, the top-seeded team has never won. Chalk up another one. Richmond, fourth-seeded, knocked off the number one Seahawks of UNC-Wilmington on their home field Sunday to eliminate them from the field.

East Carolina had handed the Seahawks their first loss in the double-elimination event on Saturday, 6-1.

Thus, for the fourth year in a row, the number one team sits and watches the rest of the tournament.

Unfortunate Ending

James Madison coach Brad Babcock's final game will leave a bitter taste in his mouth.

Babcock is retiring after 19 years at the helm of the Dukes and assistant coach Ray Heatwole will take over next year.

Babcock watched the final innings of this team's 4-3 loss Sunday to East Carolina from outside the playing area after being ejected in the seventh inning.

In the inning, Brad Zaikov threw a forearm into ECU's Mike Andrews as the Pirate first baseman waited for the runner on the first base line after a sacrifice bunt. Zaikov was ruled out for interference and in the argument that followed, Babcock was given the thumb.

Not only that, but because of the interference call, the baserunner bunted up was returned to first base.

It ended up costing the Dukes a run — and maybe the game.

Babcock was honored on Saturday by the CAA in a home plate ceremonies after his team beat William & Mary.

Another New Face

Heatwole may not be the only new face as a head coach in the CAA next year.

Rumors were flying hot and heavy that Richmond's Ronnie Atkins would be returning to the helm of the Spiders next spring. His team won the CAA title in 1986 and was the runner-up last year, but apparently that isn't good enough.

Riggs Has A Hot Bat

East Carolina utility player Kevin Riggs has had a hot bat thus far in the tournament.

In the two games Riggs has played in, he has collected five hits, including two doubles and a triple. He also walked once, and was just put out on a sharply hit infield grounder his last time at bat, making him five-for-six.

Mike Andrews went into Sunday's game with a .571 mark but dropped it after going hitless Sunday to .363.

John Gast was hit by a pitch in Sunday's game. That was the seventh time he's been hit this year, tying him for second place in that category. Dave Winchester, who also played third base for the Pirates, holds the record at nine.

Tournament Future

The CAA tournament is being played at UNCW this year because The Diamond, the professional ball park in Richmond, was not available due to the Richmond Braves being at home.

The tournament, which was played at ECU its first year, in 1986, was played at The Diamond the past two years.

Now, CAA Commissioner Tom Yeager, who was instrumental in moving the tournament to The Diamond, says he likes the on-campus atmosphere.

If so, he has few choices as to where the tournament can be played. With a six-team format, the game must be played on a lighted field. Only UNCW and ECU have lights, and Pirate coach Gary Overton says he doubts seriously if any of the other schools are going to go to the expense of lighting their fields.

Brooks Field at UNCW is a fine facility with concrete stands with molded and backed seats. The stands seat about 1,000 with additional bleacher seats. It has a good press box and two adjacent practice fields, which allow teams to take batting practice while the preceding game is taking place.

East Carolina's Harrington Field is a good field too, seating more, but in less comfortable seating. Areas in which a team might take batting practice are not usually used for those purposes.

ECU is still planning renovations at Harrington, including a new scoreboard and new dugouts.

There has even been some unofficial talk about improving the seating. But that remains to be seen.

Certainly every effort should be taken to ensure that the Pirates get the tournament at least every other year if it is to remain an on-campus event.

CAA Cagers Head To Hawaii

East Carolina isn't the only CAA team that will be making a visit to Hawaii at the end of the year.

The Pirates will be joined in the Chaminade Classic by George Mason. Meanwhile, James Madison will be playing in the Maui Classic during Thanksgiving. Coach Lefty Driesell's team will be joined by North Carolina, among others, making it possible that Dean Smith and Lefty will have another on-the-court meeting.

Cartwright Still A Knick Nemesis

By Hal Bock
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHICAGO — For years, Bill Cartwright was the exclamation mark in the disarray of the New York Knicks. Now he is the punctuation point of still another disappointment for them.

Funny how things can work out sometimes, especially when you're seven feet tall.

Cartwright scored 21 points and held Patrick Ewing to 10 Sunday as Chicago grabbed a commanding 3-1 lead over New York in their best-of-7 NBA playoff series with a 106-93 victory.

Michael Jordan and his aching groin had a routine 47 points, 11 rebounds and six assists for the Bulls.

That was expected. What was not, however, was the way Cartwright handcuffed Ewing inside, forcing New York's center into an ineffectual 5-for-15 shooting day that strangled the Knicks' offense.

"I kept trying to force him out a little more each time," Cartwright said. "Then I tried to throw off his jumper."

Try that some day. Try standing out there throwing up shots with seven feet worth of arms and legs coming at you. It is no simple piece of business, as Ewing learned Sunday.

This is not the way it was supposed to be. Ewing is the monster in the middle, a young, strong giant expected to dominate the position for years to come in the NBA. Cartwright is 32, a constant source of frustration in the years he played — or rather didn't play — for the Knicks, never producing up to his potential.

There were two full seasons lost because of a stress fracture in his foot that did not heal properly. And he was the guy fans zeroed in on as a scapegoat for the shortcomings of the team. He was the perfect whipping boy, too, rather oddly constructed without the kind of fluid build of other big men.

Watch him shoot fouls. He unfolds his frame in sections and is on an angle when he launches his free throws. Watch him under the basket. He looks so awkward sometimes that it's almost painful. There were some gruesome misses in the opening game of the series in New York, including a dunk that hit the rim and brought taunts from Cartwright's old pals at Madison Square Garden.

Goliath had no friends in New York. He was an easy target, the guy with the $1 million contract who played two games in two years. He took the brunt of the blame when things went sour for the franchise. Imagine the nerve he had, breaking his foot. What a spiteful thing to do.

After the Knicks drafted Ewing, Cartwright became expendable. New York spent three years entertaining offers before settling on Chicago's bid of rebounder Charles Oakley and an exchange of first round draft spots, which supplied New York with productive Rod Strickland and Chicago with seldom-used Will Perdue. The trade was hailed as a steal for the Knicks.

There were, however, no complaints in Chicago, where Cartwright supplied a presence in the paint.

"That's something we didn't have last year, that strong play inside, a guy to establish himself there," Jordan said.

Consider it established by the man they booted out of New York. He has been the linchpin of a defensive effort that limited the Knicks to 88 and 93 points in the third and fourth games of the series.

"We've done a big defensive job,"

Chicago coach Doug Collins said. "We've played with awareness, ready to stop what they want to do."

Mostly what the Knicks ordinarily do is look for Ewing, an entirely sensible strategy.

pitch, but Brown, hobbled by a bad knee, was then picked off second base.

"He was trying to be aggressive," Overton said. "He wanted to be able to score from second on a base hit and he got just a little too far off base to get back with that knee of his."

In the third, another base running miscue cost the Pirates more runs, although they did add one. Riggs got a one-out double — five hits in a row — but was thrown out trying to go to third on a ball hit to deep short by Andrews. "He thought that the ball was going to get through," Overton said. "Anytime you make a mistake being aggressive, I can't complain too much."

Ritchie reached on an error, moving Andrews to second and Thomas followed with a single to right, driving in Andrews. Ritchie, however, was caught trying to move all the way to third on the play.

After that, the only threats made were by Madison.

The Dukes had scored a run in the bottom of the third to close within 3-2. With one out, Schwartz singled and Kurt Johnson got a hit. Then, after two were out, Matt Lasher reached on an infield single, driving in Schwartz. An error on the play allowed the other two to move up a base, but an infield grounder got White and the Pirates out of that jam without further damage.

White put the next nine batters down in order. "He got into some early trouble but settled down and threw strong in the middle innings," Overton said of White.

After surviving the controversial seventh, White was finally touched for a third run in the eighth and sent packing. With one out, Rowe singled to right. Then after two were out, Pat Kelly hit what appeared to be only a single to left, but the ball took a bad hop to the left of Adams and went all the way to the fence for a double, scoring Rowe.

Berkman then came on to put out the fire.

"I'm just tickled to get to Monday," Overton said. "It gives us a chance. We've had two very tough wins and today's game was a nail biter. I think we played better in the first two games but we managed to pull it out today."

Riggs and Ritchie each had two hits to lead the Pirates, while Rowe and Rose had a pair for Madison, which ends its season with a 32-21 record.

Earlier in the day, Richmond ousted top-seeded UNC-Wilmington, 5-1, moving on to the night game against George Mason.

to the fairway. From there he played a hook between two trees to find the green. His putter then ended Zoeller's hopes of a playoff.

"Very rarely do you hit two shots that close to the hole in any round, much less coming down the stretch," Tway said. "It was nice not having to grind over (the birdie putts)."

Tway was deemed golf's next superstar after winning four times and collecting more than $650,000 in only his second year on the PGA Tour. But after breaking a tie and breaking Greg Norman's heart with his sand shot in the '86 PGA at Inverness in Toledo, the winning touch left him.

He lost twice in playoffs last year and finished 29th on the money list. This year, through 14 events, he was 78th on the list and his best finish was a tie for 12th at Doral.

"Believe me, it was very frustrating," he said. "I figured if I just kept practicing and kept working hard I'd play good again."

"It's great to get back to the winner's circle."

Zoeller, who led after rounds of 69, 66 and 72, finished with another 72 to close at 9-under 279.

"We went back and forth at each other. You can't ask for anything more," said Zoeller, who collected $96,000. "(But) it's like being a little pregnant. Either you win or you don't. And I didn't do it."

Payne Stewart, who closed with a 65, the day's lowest round, was third at 7-under, four strokes behind.

Mark Calcavecchia and Bruce Lietzke were another two strokes back at 5-under, with Scott Verplank and Mark O'Meara at 4-under.

David Frost, Scott Hoch, Larry Nelson and Raymond Floyd finished at 3-under, with Greg Norman leading four players at 1-under.

Defending champion Curtis Strange, the reigning U.S. Open champion, shot a 73 that left him well back at 288. Nicklaus, the tournament host and founder, had a closing 75 to finish at 302.

The victory was worth $160,000 and pushed Tway's earnings to $222,611 for the year.

the floor on a drive and had to leave the court on a stretcher.

Now Krystkowiak must rebound from an injury that not only ended his season prematurely, but threatens his career. The Bucks must find a way to make up for his absence, something they couldn't do Sunday.

Thomas, who broke his hand in an April fight with Chicago's Bill Cartwright, went into what Coach Chuck Daly called a "shooting mode" and the Bucks couldn't get him out of it Sunday.

Thomas had 15 points in the third quarter when the Pistons took command of the game. He made 11 of 19 field-goal attempts in the game.

The Pistons are playing the basketball that allowed them to have the NBA's best record this season. They shot 52 percent Sunday and had a 50-43 rebounding edge while limiting the Bucks to 43 percent shooting. They led by 22 after three quarters.

Laimbeer, known as one of the NBA's roughest players, was in the middle again Sunday when Krystkowiak went past him for a dunk.

When Krystkowiak went down in a heap, Milwaukee coach Del Harris came racing onto the floor and accused Laimbeer of shoving Krystkowiak. TV replays showed no shove.

Laimbeer said there was no contact. Harris said there was and held his contention after the game. Krystkowiak said he didn't know because it all happened so quickly.

The Bucks are hurting, but Harris insists they still have a chance, even though Krystkowiak, Paul Mokeski and Paul Pressey are out with injuries and Terry Cummings is still subpar with a bad ankle.

went high to give Calgary the lead.

It was short-lived. Robinson got the equalizer when his pass was accidentally put behind Vernon by Calgary defenseman Jamie Macoun.

"I was a little shaky," Vernon said. "What I had to do was settle down and gain confidence. It was a tough start. I was nervous going into the game and it showed out there. I just had to regroup."

He did. Although the Canadiens' scoring ceased, their scoring opportunities didn't.

Three minutes into the second period, Vernon twice stopped Mike McPhee from in close. Midway through the second, he gloved a drive by Chris Chelios.

In the third, he stopped Richer. And his biggest move came with 2:12 to play when he made a spectacular glove save on Petr Svoboda. Vernon finished with 29 saves.

Roy also had some good stops and ended with 31 saves.

One save Roy couldn't make was on Fleury, a 5-foot-5 center who took Macoun's pass and beat the goalie through the pads from the left faceoff circle.

"He's a little guy who plays like a big man," Crisp said. "He's a pest, a little guy with lots of speed. We work him with the big guys on the wing, with the snowplows clearing the path for him."

Nobody cleared a path for Fleury's entrance into the NHL.

The rookie center was passed over in two drafts before finally being taken in the eighth round in 1987. He began this season in the minors before being called up Jan. 1. He responded with 14 goals in 36 games and has added five playoff goals, three of them game-winners.

"It's been a long road, a lot of long bus trips," Fleury said. "I never lost heart. I never lost confidence."

U.S. Film Stirring Cannes Set

LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE
CANNES, France — A year ago, Baton Rouge, La., native Steven Soderbergh was sleeping on a friend's couch in Los Angeles determined to stay in there until either his film career took off or his friend threw him out.

This weekend, the 26-year-old director was the toast of the Cannes Film Festival, facing swarms of mostly admiring international film critics and patiently explaining the history of the movie that some of them have already proclaimed a masterpiece and that has gotten him a deal for a major studio movie that may cost $15 million or more to make.

Soderbergh, a thin man in wire-rimmed glasses who tends to lower his head under the burden of praise, said that he had not thought about the prestige of Cannes until he saw an ad for his picture "sex, lies and videotapes," in a magazine along with all the other films in competition for the Gold Palm.

"To suddenly see my film in context of all these other films, I began to realize that this is a big deal, a big festival," Soderbergh said, "and that I should probably act accordingly."

So far, Soderbergh has not acted accordingly. He is openly startled by his sudden success and has shown a refreshing lack of pretention about his knowledge of film.

When a European critic compared "sex, lies" to the works of John Cassavetes and Eric Rohmer at a press conference Saturday, Soderbergh admitted that he had never seen a Rohmer film and said Cassavetes' "Woman Under the Influence" "makes my film look like Cool Whip."

Andy's Fans Note Differences

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS
MOUNT AIRY, N.C. — Members of the Andy Griffith Show Appreciation Society were quick to spot the differences between Mount Airy and the fictional town of Mayberry.

The name of Aunt Bea's barbecue restaurant is wrong. The real-life eatery is named Aunt Bee, and the difference matters to a person who's watched and videotaped all 249 episodes of "The Andy Griffith Show."

"I noticed that the first thing when I drove into town," said Linda Stewart of Dallas.

Stewart drove in Saturday for the society's annual convention, held in Winston-Salem this weekend. About 350 members took buses 35 miles up the road to Mount Airy, Griffith's hometown and inspiration for some of the names and landmarks of his 1960-68 television show.

Floyd's Barbershop is really named the City Barber-shop, but the man there has cut Griffith's hair a few times. The Snappy Grill, next door on Main Street, really is the Snappy Grill.

"I can die happy now. I can give up the ghost," said Ms. Stewart, 47. "Mostly I can relate to the lifestyle, because we sit on the porch at home and rock, go to church, even eat the same kind of foods. I can't relate to shows today because we don't have cocktails every five minutes."

Selling Records Difficult For Iglesias

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS
MIAMI — With more than 115 million records sold worldwide and his 76th album due in the stores over the next several days, selling records is still tough for superstar Julio Iglesias.

"It's the worst thing in life to sell records," the 45-year-old performer said in a recent interview. "On stage, you can be better. But ... once the record is in the shops, there's no way to get it back."

"Raices," Spanish for roots, is his latest album, out this month. He and model Brooke Shields recently finished filming a 45-minute music video in Miami based on one of the album's songs. The album will be released in Spanish, French, Italian and Portuguese, but it will be an American sound, Iglesias said.

"It's very lively in a way, but in another way it's completely different in the way we use instruments," he said. "I love very much this album — I hope."

Even after Iglesias has sold 115 million records — a number comparable to Michael Jackson and Bruce Springsteen — he wonders whether he can keep up the pace in record sales. But he has doubts about his success — both in America and overseas.

"Success in life is illogical. There is not a logical answer. If you have an explanation why you have success, you just have to put in a computer this and this and this, and you are going to have success in America. And it's not true," Iglesias said. "So don't ask me why I have success in America, because if I knew why I would doubt it."

After a promising career as a professional soccer goalie in Spain, Iglesias was in a car accident that paralyzed him from the waist down. He underwent four years of intensive rehabilitation, including exercising his injured fingers with a guitar his family gave him.

He vowed to his mother that he would sing at a Spanish song festival, and Iglesias kept his vow in 1968. His singing career was launched.

Another challenge was learning English — at 38 years old.

"In all the Latino roots of languages, like Italian and Spanish, I found my music much more natural," Iglesias said. "What's happened in English, for example, is that the phrasing is completely different."

Iglesias has recorded only 30 songs in English, but some have been hits, such as duets with such artists as Stevie Wonder, Willie Nelson and Diana Ross. The native of Madrid has recorded 150 songs in Spanish, 74 in French, 60 in Italian, 45 in Portuguese and 30 in German.

His black hair slicked straight back and wearing all white, Iglesias said a third all-English album may be recorded sometime this summer.

"It takes two years for me to do an English album correctly," he said. "It takes too much stress out of my life to do an English album. And I love to sing in English."

Iglesias, who is divorced and a father of two sons and a daughter, lives in Indian Creek Village on a private island near Miami Beach. He is part owner of the Miami Heat, the rookie pro basketball team.

He did one worldwide tour last year, and is planning another.

As for his success with the tour — that will be determined by the outbreak of goose bumps.

Mike Hammer Roles Test Keach's Ability On Stunts

By Robert Macy
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LAS VEGAS — Stacy Keach didn't mind the 125-foot parachute plunge into downtown's Glitter Gulch, the motorcycle chase across the desert or squaring off against ex-football terror Lyle Alzado.

But don't ask him to repeat that 50-yard swim in 50-degree Lake Mead — at least not with his shoes on.

Keach spent a week here in early March filming a two-hour movie, "Murder Takes All — Mike Hammer in Las Vegas." The movie will air Sunday on CBS.

"Hammer in Las Vegas" tested the mettle of Keach, 47, who has a penchant for doing many of his own stunts. And it provided a new challenge for Jay Bernstein, the Hollywood producer who stood by Keach when the actor served nine months in an English prison on drug charges in 1985, at the zenith of the weekly detective show's popularity.

Bernstein was determined to keep Hammer alive and Keach a viable commodity in the PR conscious film industry. His tenacity played a major role in salvaging both.

"I put two mortgages on my house and went on the road selling the Hammer series" to the public, Bernstein said in a telephone interview from his Los Angeles office. "I believe in America you only pay once for a debt, once for a mortgage, once for a mistake. We let people have a second chance."

Bernstein says his efforts resulted in an outpouring of 400,000 letters backing Keach. The result: a 1986 TV movie, "The Return of Mike Hammer," and a new Hammer series in the 1986-87 season.

With the series behind them, Bernstein and Keach are looking at three two-hour Hammer movies, the first set in Las Vegas, providing all the action, sex, glamour and excitement befitting Mickey Spillane's famous detective hero.

Keach said he doesn't miss the weekly series. "You can tell a better story in two hours," he said. "Generally you get a better show."

The first day of filming, Keach wafted into the heart of the downtown casino district on a parachute.

"Mike Hammer gets thrown out of a plane and lands in the middle of Las Vegas," Keach explained. "Of course! Why not?"

In reality, Keach was hoisted 125 feet into the air by a crane, then floated down as thousands of spectators watched. The next two days were spent at Lake Mead, filming on and around a 56-foot yacht, the Hilton Hotel's Lady Hilton.

One scene called for Hammer to jump from the yacht just before it exploded, then swim 50 yards to a waiting boat. Keach performed the stunt himself, wearing a wetsuit to help ward off the chill. But he learned in the first take that it was a serious mistake to wear shoes.

"I'm telling you, you almost lost me," Keach told publicist Welton Smith after struggling out of the water. Subsequent takes were shot with Keach swimming shoeless.

"This is as much of a workout as I've had for any Mike Hammer show," Keach said, after a scene in which he confronted Alzado.

In another scene, Keach and a villain wrestle in a surveillance area above the Hilton's giant casino, then crash through the ceiling onto a craps table below. It's one of the few scenes where Keach opts for a double.

Keach said when he first read the script, he figured there would be no chance of doing the scene, "because I knew you'd never find a place in Las Vegas that would let you shoot something like that."

Casino owners are skittish about filming in gaming areas, but the idea was welcomed by Hilton publicity director Bruce Banke, who is interested in promoting use of the hotel as a shooting location for TV and motion picture films.

Bernstein thinks Las Vegas is a perfect locale for Mike Hammer.

"Anything you can do to get Mike Hammer as a fish out of water is good," Bernstein said. "In Las Vegas, you're putting him in another fish-out-of-water situation, this time with neon."

Hammer will really be a fish-out-of-water in two upcoming films with locations planned for Singapore and behind the Iron Curtain.

M*A*S*H Holds Top TV Rating

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — The final episode of "M-A-S-H" remains the highest-rated television show since 1960, according to the latest list compiled by Nielsen Media Research. It had a 60.2 rating when it aired Feb. 28, 1983, on CBS.

The 1980 "Who Shot J.R.?" episode of "Dallas" on CBS is still second on the list. Those shows are followed by the final episode of ABC's 1977 blockbuster miniseries "Roots."

Just for perspective, NBC's "The Cosby Show," the most successful sitcom ever and the most successful prime-time network show in recent years, is only 57th on the all-time list.

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
 ♠AQ975 ♥63 ♦AKJ9 ♣64
 The bidding has proceeded:
 North East South West
 1 ♥ Pass 1 ♣ Pass
 1 NT Pass ?
 What do you bid now?
 A.—With a full opening bid facing a partner who opened, you certainly want to be in game. The question is where? Partner could easily have three-card spade support, in which case the suit contract should be superior since you have an unbalanced hand. Bid three diamonds, and wait for partner's next bid.

Q.2—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
 ♠AKQ ♥AKQ98 ♦7 ♣AJ93
 The bidding has proceeded:
 South West North East
 2 ♥ Pass 2 NT 3 ♦ ?
 What action do you take?
 A.—Beware of a possible freak distribution. Unless partner has reasonable heart support or a long suit of his own, game might be out of reach. Since your demand bid is forcing to game or until the opponents have been doubled, pass and let partner describe his hand. Extracting a penalty from the opponents will be your best bet should he choose to double.

Q.3—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
 ♠K76 ♥AK85 ♦K93 ♣QJ7
 The bidding has proceeded:
 South West North East
 1 NT Pass 2 ♥ Pass ?
 What action do you take?
 A.—Partner's bid says that, opposite a normal no trump opening bid, he expects to make two hearts. Despite your excellent support, you have nothing you have not promised. Pass.

Q.4—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
 ♠K76 ♥AK85 ♦KJ32 ♣A7

The bidding has proceeded:
 South West North East
 1 NT Pass 2 ♥ Pass ?

What action do you take?
 A.—This case is different. Not only do you have a maximum no trump, your ruffing value in clubs improves your hand—it is worth 19 points in support of hearts. Invite partner to go on to game unless he is really broke by raising to three hearts.

Q.5—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
 ♠AQ953 ♥73 ♦KJ62 ♣95
 The bidding has proceeded:
 North East South West
 1 ♥ Pass 1 ♣ Pass
 2 ♣ Pass 2 ♦ Pass
 2 ♥ Pass ?

What do you bid now?
 A.—You were entitled to two forward-going bids, and you've made them. The fact that you do not have adequate support for partner's primary suit does nothing to enhance your holding, so pass while the going's good.

Q.6—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
 ♠K983 ♥KJ1062 ♦K8 ♣73
 The bidding has proceeded:
 North East South West
 1 ♣ Pass 1 ♥ Pass
 2 ♣ Pass ?
 What do you bid now?
 A.—Although you are worth another bid, let's consider what you can do. A rebid of two hearts would show a weaker hand with a longer suit; a rebid of two spades would be a reverse and, therefore, a game force. That leaves only two no trump as a viable option.

Panama's Congregations Denounce Election Fraud

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PANAMA CITY, Panama — People chanted "Justice, Justice" in churches across the nation as clergymen read a letter from Panama's Roman Catholic leaders denouncing electoral fraud and attacks on opposition candidates.

The pastoral letter, which urged Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega's Defense Forces not to use arms against "a defenseless people," was also read during a Mass broadcast on state-run television.

At churches across the capital and in other Panamanian cities, worshippers waved white handkerchiefs, paper, and Panamanian flags and opposition supporters handed out leaflets calling for a general strike on Wednesday.

Also Sunday, an opposition leader rejected any proposals for sharing power with supporters of Noriega, saying the opposition won the May 7 presidential election and that it alone should govern.

The Noriega-controlled government nullified the election on Wednesday, the same day Noriega supporters beat opposition presidential candidate Guillermo Endara and his two running mates with pipes and baseball bats.

Exit polls by the Catholic Church and surveys by opposition poll-watchers put Endara ahead 3-1 over Carlos Duque when the count was stopped. Noriega has not appeared in public since before the elections, which international observers said were rigged by his forces.

U.S. Ambassador Arthur Davis was to leave for Washington today. He was recalled for consultations by President Bush, who on Saturday urged Panamanians to overthrow Noriega.

At Camp Russo, a U.S. base outside Panama City, some of the 1,900 troops flown in last week settled in on Sunday. Bush had dispatched them to step up security at American bases.

"You guys ever have any breeze here?" asked Army Spec. 4 Peter Lucas of Duluth, Minn., as he stood in the steamy, windless jungle clearing.

Noriega has been indicted for drug trafficking in the United States, which has been trying to remove him for more than a year. The general denies the drug charges and contends Washington fabricated them as part of a campaign to renege on its agreement to cede control of the Panama Canal by the year 2000.

At Panama City's Cristo Rey Church, a militant opposition stronghold, the congregation jumped to its feet and cheered on Sunday when opposition vice presidential candidates Guillermo Ford and Ricardo Arias Calderon arrived.

Endara remained hospitalized in good condition with injuries he suffered when he was beaten.

The pastoral letter, issued Thursday by Archbishop Marcos McGrath and the rest of the country's Catholic bishops, was read at all Masses, including one broadcast on government-controlled television. McGrath celebrated Mass on Sunday at an undisclosed location, a church spokeswoman said.

The church has not been as influential as it is in Nicaragua or El Salvador, and its support for fair elections is a new element in Panamanian politics.

The Rev. Javier Villanueva, who celebrated Mass at Cristo Rey Church, said the church "is neither of the opposition nor of the government. The church is where it should be."

There were brief protests at churches in the capital's poor neighborhoods of San Miguelito and Rio Abajo and in the cities of Colon and David.

Churches that sympathize with the opposition have been attacked in the past, but no police were visible and no incidents were reported.

Opposition supporters at many churches handed out leaflets describing alleged government beatings of civilians and calling for the general strike on Wednesday.

"Read, photocopy and pass along our newspaper," said a handwritten note on one leaflet. The opposition press has been closed down in Panama for more than a year.

The crisis showed no sign of easing, although outside churches it was a normal, lazy Sunday.

"The opposition works Monday to Friday, and so do we," said a government official, when asked why troops had been given weekend leave.

Peronists Sweep Elections In Argentina

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina — Thousands of Peronists danced in the streets early today to celebrate Carlos Menem's election to the presidency — the return to power of the party of labor and the working poor.

Sunday's election marked Argentina's first transfer of power between civilian governments in 61 years and capped a long comeback for the populist Peronists, who had been banned for 25 of the past 34 years.

Menem, the charismatic 58-year-old governor of La Rioja province, called for national unity immediately after declaring victory.

The campaign had been divisive and he must cope with a country in economic decline and a restive military.

"I am not more capable than anyone else, but I'm not less capable," Menem said. "The important thing is to get the country moving."

Eduardo Angeloz of the governing

Radical Civic Union, Menem's strongest competitor and a former law school classmate of Menem, later conceded.

"I've defeated an adversary, but I've regained a friend," Menem said.

With results counted from 62,800 of 75,358 ballot boxes nationwide, Menem had 6.6 million votes, or 47 percent, compared to 5.2 million, or 37.1 percent, for Angeloz, the Interior Ministry said today. There were 12 candidates in all.

The Interior Ministry estimated that a record 85 percent of the 20 million eligible voters cast ballots.

Voters also chose a vice president, half the members of the Chamber of Deputies, one senator, legislatures in 14 of the nation's 22 provinces and several thousand municipal officials.

Results for those races were not immediately available. The Peronists control the biggest bloc in the Senate and most provincial legislatures and governorships.

The presidential inauguration was set for Dec. 10, the last day of the six-year term of President Raul Alfonsín, who is barred by the constitution from seeking re-election.

Alfonsín took office in December 1983, ending a brutal military dictatorship that lasted nearly eight years.

Angeloz, 57, governor of Cordoba province, said he wished Menem "all the luck possible ... I leave defeated but will continue working in my province and later I'll see what I can do on the national level."

The voting was calm and orderly in the South American nation of 31 million.

Crusader Tops Ticket For Soviet Parliamentary Seat

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOSCOW — An anti-corruption crusader today defeated more than two dozen other candidates to win a parliamentary seat despite running afoul of the Kremlin for associating top government officials with a corruption probe.

Preliminary returns showed criminal investigator Nikolai Ivanov won 61 percent of the vote in Leningrad, said Lyudmilla Imanenko, deputy head of the Tass news agency in the country's second-largest city.

In Sunday's second round of voting for 198 remaining seats in the 2,250-member Congress of People's Deputies, Ivanov was pitted against more than two dozen other candidates to represent Leningrad.

The congress, created by President Mikhail S. Gorbachev, convenes on May 25 and will choose the president and a new sitting legislature or Supreme Soviet.

Ivanov and his partner, Telman Gdlyan, are known throughout the Soviet Union for a lengthy probe of corruption in the republic of Uzbekistan. Gdlyan won a parliamentary seat in the first March 26 vote, receiving almost 87 percent of ballots in a Moscow district.

But Ivanov ran afoul of the Kremlin in the last days of his campaign by saying in a debate televised in Leningrad that the names of Politburo member Yegor K. Ligachev and other top officials came up in his continuing corruption probe.

In the eastern Ukrainian city Kharkov, officials said preliminary data showed editor Vitaly Korotich of the reform-oriented Ogonyok magazine had easily defeated nine other candidates with 80 percent of the vote.

Strong showings by Ivanov, Korotich and reform candidates in the restive Baltic republics continued a trend set in the March elections, which favored reformist and anti-establishment candidates.

That ballot was the first nationwide multi-candidate election in the Soviet Union in 70 years.

In Estonia, Klara Hallik, a lecturer and expert on ethnic relations at Tallinn Polytechnical Institute, won 50.74 percent of the vote. She was backed by the Estonian People's Front.

In neighboring Latvia, voters handed reformer Merviks Vulfsons a narrow victory in a Riga district. People's Front officials in the republic said their candidates won five of the six races there.

Voters in Kiev narrowed a slate of 33 candidates to two. Economist Vladimir Chernyak, a leader of the Ukrainian People's Front, will face editor Vitaly Karpenko of the official newspaper Vecherny Kiev in a third vote, said local election official Lydia Voronova.

The People's Front grassroots movements seek economic independence from Moscow.
