Sino-Soviet Summit Ends

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BEIJING — Mikhail S. Gorbachev today ended a summit that broke down the barriers of 30 years of hostility between the Soviet Union and China and was further dramatized by huge pro-democracy protests.

The Soviet leader and his wife, Raisa, left Shanghai to end what Gorbachev called a visit of "epoch-making significance." The Soviet news agency Tass quoted Gorbachev as calling the summit "a watershed event."

A joint communique said "neither side would seek hegemony of any form" in any part of the world. China has long accused Moscow of trying to dominate weaker nations.

It contained a lengthy section on Cambodia, with the two sides expressing different opinions on the conflict that has been the main obstacle to improved Sino-Soviet ties.

China repeated its support for a provisional government led by resistance leader Prince Norodom Sihanouk and including both the three-party resistance and the Vietnam-backed Hun Sen faction.

The Soviet Union, which supports Vietnam in its 10-year war with the China-backed resistance, said only that internal problems, including preparation for general elections under international supervision, should be solved by the Cambodians.

The two sides agreed that with Vietnam's withdrawal, slated for September, civil war should be avoided and outside parties should gradually end military aid to the warring factions.

The communique said the two sides agreed to take measures to cut down troops along their border "to a minimum level commensurate with the normal, good neighborly relations between the two countries."

During the visit, Gorbachev used a major speech to call for demilitarization of the countries' border, now guarded by 600,000 Soviet and 1 million Chinese troops. The countries fought a brief war along the border in 1969. He also suggested regular military consultations such as the Soviet Union has with the United States.

Tass Says China Has 'Lost Control'

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOSCOW — The official Tass news agency waited until President Mikhail S. Gorbachev left Beijing today to report that police in China's capital, confronted by more than 1 million demonstrators, had "lost control."

As Gorbachev spoke at a news conference in Beijing on Wednesday, armies of protesters filled the streets to demand democratic reforms. The rallies spread to at least 20 provincial capitals, including Shanghai, where Gorbachev traveled today to end his four-day trip.

The giant demonstrations, the largest show of defiance in Communist China's 40 years, made headlines worldwide as they disrupted Gorbachev's meetings with top Chinese leaders, the first Soviet-Chinese summit in three decades.

However, a 45-minute report on the Soviet evening television news program "Vremya" on Wednesday on Gorbachev's trip made no mention of the protests, instead shoring him strolling along the Great Wall and joking with young people about Chinese cooking.

With Gorbachev in Shanghai today, Tass began reporting in detail on the demonstrations, saying that in Beijing "police do not take any measures to restore order in the streets and authorities have in effect lost control over the situation."

Continuing the neutral line espoused by Gorbachev on the demonstrators and their demands, Tass reported without comment that protesters supported students on a hunger strike and were demanding the resignation of some of China's leaders.

Since Gorbachev came to power in March 1985, there have been numerous demonstrations in the Soviet Union.

Highlights of Gorbachev's Speech

Sino-Soviet relations

- Soviet-Chinese frontier should be turned into a "border of peace" and a regional security network should be established.
- An earlier Soviet pledge to withdraw 200,000 troops from Asia would be fulfilled by the end of 1990 and would include the pullout of 12 divisions, or 120,000 soldiers, from the China frontier.
- He called for establishment of joint ventures and a new "silk way" linking Beijing and Moscow with the normalization of relations.

Cambodia

- He termed a settlement in Cambodia "gradually taking on a realistic approach."

North Korea

- Gorbachev supports North Korea peace initiatives and said Korea's reunification "obviously requires defusing tensions on the peninsula and the withdrawal of U.S. troops."

Local unrest

- Gorbachev defended socialist countries experiencing unrest and denied they were headed for "the ash heap of history."
- Of massive student protests for democracy, Gorbachev said he would not "presume to assume the role of judge."
- He acknowledged receipt of a letter from the students, saying it was "a very warm letter, full of feelings of support for perestroika."

Counties Will Get Storm Aid

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — President Bush has authorized $12 million in disaster assistance for 11 North Carolina counties hit by killer tornadoes on May 5, Gov. Jim Martin said today.

Additional aid may be forthcoming as the federal government studies additional damage information supplied by state officials, the governor said.

"That's good news," said Martin, who was handed a note midway through his weekly news conference notifying him of the decision, which had been expected since early this week.

Bush authorized individual assistance — such as grants to families and small businesses — for Catawba, Cleveland, Davidson, Davie, Guilford, Durham, Forsyth, Granville, Iredell, Lincoln and Union counties, Martin said.

Four counties — Davidson, Davie, Durham and Forsyth — were approved for additional money to fix damage to public buildings, he said.

Pitt Schools Receive Funds For New Development Unit

By Cherie Evans
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

The Pitt County school system will receive $61,162 to help establish a child development center for 4-year-old children.

Superintendent Eddie West announced the receipt of the money from the Mamie Perkins Trust during the Pitt County Educational Foundation meeting Wednesday.

West said the money is to be used to remodel a facility and to acquire equipment the center would need.

"We're really excited about this," West said. "All of this would not be possible without this foundation. The key is the community and schools working together."

West also said the school system received a $25,000 grant from the Danforth Foundation of St. Louis to help the schools change and be equipped for the future.

Visitors Bureau Releases New Ads

By John Bare
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

The Pitt-Greenville Convention and Visitors Bureau has released eight new television public service announcements designed to encourage residents to help attract meetings and conventions to the county.

At a Wednesday luncheon in honor of National Tourism Awareness Day, bureau officials broadcast three of the new PSAs. The 30-second spots are hosted by East Carolina University theater student Scott Slusarick, who portrays Revolutionary War General Nathaniel Greene, for whom Greenville was named.

The ads carry the bureau's new battle cry: "Be a Flag-Waver. Bring Your Meeting to Greenville and Pitt County." Along with Slusarick, the ads include several area residents recognized Wednesday as "flag-wavers" for their work in bringing meetings to the area.

"We are going to distribute them to all three local TV stations, (WNCT Channel) 9, (WCTI Channel) 12 and (WITN Channel) 7. They are public service announcements rather than commercials. We're kind of at their (the stations') mercy. We hope they show them a lot.

OAS To Mediate Panamanian Crisis

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — In a diplomatic compromise accepted by both the United States and Panama, the Organization of American States called for a transfer of power through democratic means in Panama while leaving the details to a team of mediators.

The plan was unanimously authorized late Wednesday by OAS foreign ministers in a resolution that condemns the "grave events and abuses" by Panamanian leader Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega but which also stops short of criticizing his government.

The resolution, approved in an unusually efficient manner by the 29 delegates present, was sufficiently ambiguous to win the approval of the two biggest antagonists at the session: Secretary of State James A. Baker III and Panamanian Foreign Minister Jorge Ritter.

Baker pronounced himself "very pleased" with the outcome. Ritter said, "I feel fully satisfied."

President Bush, responding to a question shouted by a reporter as he headed from the Oval Office to a helicopter this morning, called the OAS action a "good resolution." Bush left for a four-day trip to New York, Boston and Kennebunkport, Maine.

The key provision empowers the foreign ministers of Ecuador, Guatemala and Trinidad to try to promote a "national accord, within democratic mechanisms and in the shortest period possible, to ensure the transfer of power with full respect for the sovereign will of Panamanian people."

OAS Secretary General Joao Baena Soares was asked to assist the delegation that will travel to the Central American nation. No date

Institute Will Recognize Teachers

By Cherie Evans
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

The Pitt County Educational Foundation will begin its Teachers' Executive Institute in the fall to recognize the outstanding work of teachers in the classroom.

During the board's meeting Wednesday, Larry Seigler, who has chaired the foundation's committee on the institute, said the institute will share the concepts and skills used in business with the 20 teachers to be selected for the first institute.

Teachers participating will visit six companies in the community — meeting employees, touring facilities, learning about the companies and attending seminars designed to strengthen their communication and leadership skills at the companies' expense.

"We're kind of proud of the concept, and I really think it's going to go quite well," Seigler said.

The institute's curriculum includes leadership training, creativity and innovation, listening and non-verbal communication, taking the initiative and interaction skills.

Culminating activities include an banquet in November to honor participants and their spouses or guests, and a weekend retreat sponsored by the North Carolina Center for the Advancement of Teachers in the spring.

Participants are selected on their prior recognition for outstanding achievement, evidence of recent initiative to enhance development and evidence of their ability to inspire intellectual curiosity in their students.

Consideration also will be given to the attendance areas of applicants in order to balance geographical representation.

The selection committee consists of two teachers, two principals, two assistant principals and one representative each from the East Carolina University School of Education and a local industry.

Teachers may apply by completing a form obtained from their principals' offices or from the foundation in Room 403 of the Pitt County office building.

Applications must be completed and returned to the foundation office by Sept. 15.

Sponsors of the institute are Burroughs Wellcome, Carolina Telephone and Telegraph Co., Pitt County Memorial Hospital, Procter & Gamble Paper Products Co., Wachovia Bank & Trust Co., and Yale Materials Handling Corp.

Defendant Charged With Faking Death

A Lenoir County man has been charged with forgery after faking his death in an attempt to dodge a drunken driving charge in Pitt County, authorities said.

Robert Alex Hill, 29, of Kinston was charged with forgery of a death certificate Monday, Sgt. Ed Brown of the Onslow County Sheriff's Department said.

Brown said Hill obtained a death certificate and drove to Jacksonville where he selected the name of a doctor, a Jones County funeral home and a Craven County crematorium from a phone book. He then filed the document with the Onslow Health Department and with the Register of Deeds, Brown said.

The phony document stated Hill died at 3:28 p.m. on April 16 due to a construction accident in Onslow County.

With the certified copies of the death certificate, Hill paid someone $10 to take the document to the Pitt County Courthouse in advance of his April 26 court date for his drunken driving charge, Brown said.

However, Brown said he investigated when someone said they had seen Hill at his construction job since his "alleged death."

After law enforcement officers investigated the scam, Hill appeared in Pitt District Court on May 10 and pleaded guilty to a level 1 driving while impaired charge, which is the stiffest DWI offense. Trooper Jerry Mumford of Greenville had arrested Hill for DWI and several other offenses on March 10.

In exchange for the guilty plea, Pitt County prosecutors dismissed charges against Hill of driving while his licensed was revoked, resisting arrest, driving with a malt beverage container in the passenger area and speeding 67 in a 55 mph zone, according to Pitt court records.

Hill was sentenced to 14 days in the Pitt County Jail. He also received a two-year suspended sentence and was ordered to serve two years on supervised probation.

Mumford's report said Hill fled on foot after he was stopped, and he struggled with the officer during the arrest.

Barclays Wants To Move Branch Office

Barclays Bank of North Carolina is seeking authority from the state commissioner of banks to change the name and location of its downtown Greenville branch at 111 S. Washington St.

John Corbett, city executive for Barclays' in Greenville, said the bank is asking for approval to move the office to 2475 Stantonsburg Road and change the name to the University Medical Park Branch.

"We have not made a final decision" on whether the branch will be a one- or two-story building, Corbett said. "We obviously will wait until approval is received." But Corbett said the bank is "negotiating with the contractors."

Located across Stantonsburg Road from Stanton Square shopping Center, the new office will be "somewhat larger" than the "little less than 3,000 square feet" the downtown branch now has, Corbett said.

Barclays' downtown branch is now located on the first floor of a building owned by Pitt County.

"We hope to be in the new facility no later than the first part of 1990," Corbett said. "We see the hospital area as a growth area. That's the reason we chose that side of Greenville for the new building.

"We feel having a new office, as well as a very modern office, on both ends of Arlington Boulevard ... if and when the road is extended ... will give us real good coverage in the Greenville market."

Barclays' present lease expires Dec. 31, 1990, which gives the financial institution "a year beyond the time we expect to be in the new building as a grace period," Corbett said.

County Manager Kramer Jackson said today that "we haven't heard a word" from the bank about vacating the building. But Jackson said, "We're crowded in the courthouse right now and are looking for space to rent for probation officers ... additional state people.

"I don't know who we'd put over there. We'd shuffle people around however is most advantageous," Jackson said.

The building, at the intersection of Second and Washington streets, was bought by the county in 1987. Barclays Bank has occupied the building since it acquired financially troubled North State Savings and Loan and it became a commercial bank.

'Truth In Preference To Fiction'

Nuts & Bolts

Excellence Requires More Than Basics

Of the $20 million Pitt County's taxpayers will spend on construction projects over the next five years, a big chunk will go for basics. And even at that, some of the most pressing needs of the county's public school system will go unmet, if the schools' revenue projections are accurate.

'A school system — and a county — that sets its sights on excellence, as Pitt must, needs more than rudiments to reach that goal.'

The shortfall is proof that despite good intentions, Pitt is falling further behind on school needs. It is also tangible evidence the county's careful, longstanding devotion to thrift has a big flaw — the problem may cost more than the solution. Big bucks should be spent carefully, but when growth whizzes by planning and resources, leaving a cloud of dust, it takes giant steps to close the gap.

The school board went to work Monday on its 1989-90 capital outlay budget. Board members had asked the county commissioners for a $27 million bond referendum for construction needs but instead got a promise of $4 million for five years. As board members deliberated over which projects to fund and which to cut, two holes in the funding plan appeared — both big enough to drive a school bus through. First, $20 million over five years doesn't come close to covering the $27 million in needs the schools documented. Second, the five-year time frame leaves huge gaps in any practical payment schedule.

To see just how short $20 million falls, take a look at some of the projects that can't be funded. At H.B. Sugg, a cafeteria renovation, air conditioning, land and furniture; at Sadie Saulter, air conditioning and land; at Chicod, a classroom and air conditioning; at Farmville Middle, a computer laboratory and renovation of science classrooms; at W.H. Robinson, rooms for trainable mentally handicapped and visually impaired students, air conditioning and land.

The list continues, but many of the no-goes are repeats — over and over the need for additional property, air conditioning, classroom and special student space are crossed out. Again and again, needs important to excellence are denied.

At the same time, the county and the school system expand — an enviable problem, but one that cannot be ignored. Since Greenville and Pitt County schools merged in 1986, the consolidated school system has grown by 278 students from 16,505 in 1986-87 to 16,883 in 1988-89. Since 1984, pupil growth has totaled 454 students.

Good management dictates that a school be built each time 600 new students are added. Pitt has built but one additional school in the 1980s, Wintergreen, and that expenditure made up for a decade of neglect of an overcrowded Winterville school district.

Yet far too much of the $20 million the board has coming will go for items that won't ease the pressures of growth or improve the learning environment one iota. Far too much will go for nuts and bolts.

Take the issue of trailers as classrooms. Despite funding efforts to eliminate them since consolidation, as many remain in use now as before. The school system will pay $112,000 of its $20 million to move these units around over the next five years — because it needs the space and permanent structures can't be built with existing funds. That may sound like small change, yet according to the proposed budget, four classrooms can be added at Wintergreen School for $264,000 — roughly double the cost of moving the trailers.

Take the item of asbestos removal, which will cost $708,000, and the item of fire code deficiencies, which will cost $183,000 to alter. Neither is optional. Roof repair will claim a half million of the $20 million; kitchen equipment $283,900.

All the expenditures above are basics. They are requisites for a school system, ones without which it cannot function.

But a school system — and a county — that sets its sights on excellence, as Pitt must, needs more than rudiments to reach that goal. Just as quality education requires more than reading, writing and arithmetic, exceptional public schools demand more than essentials. Excellence requires going beyond basics.

To the editor:
Be careful as you go to mail a letter — you or your car may get lost forever in a pot hole at the College Station Post Office on 10th Street. The depth and breadth of one of those pot holes is almost large enough to swallow a VW whole. If you are on a bike or motorcycle, there's little hope you'd ever be heard from again.

Why is the Post Office letting those holes get so large? Is it their fault or is there something we don't know? Somebody do something!!

I'd hate to think that a visitor might want to mail a letter at the 10th Street Post Office. They may be lost forever in the POST OFFICE POT HOLES!

To the editor:
On May 9, many teachers from Pitt County observed National Teacher's Day by taking personal leave to spend the day lobbying for higher salaries in the General Assembly. The teachers that went are committed to education. They demonstrated their desire to continue to have "quality" teachers by going to Raleigh. It cost each teacher the cost of a substitute, transportation, meals, and for some, sitter fees. This amounted to almost $100 for some of those attending the session. Some principals, parents and teachers implied that it was not professional to go to Raleigh on an instructional day. I disagree! Qualified substitutes were hired.

There are no workdays left! We believe salaries must rise significantly to insure that bright young people enter the teaching field. Those willing to endure financial hardship this month by losing money, acted for the good of our profession.

If you know a teacher, assistant, or parent that went to Raleigh, let them know you appreciate all that they do — not only on May 9, but for all of their efforts to make education better for the children of Pitt County.

To the editor:
This is no time for calm reasoning about the merits of the prosecution of Colonel Oliver North. This is time for indignation at that part of Congress which produced the situation in which Col. North acted in defense of his country.

Indignation and anger at that part of Congress that consistently supports Communist positions; that gave our Panama Canal to an unstable country; that actually paid Panama to accept the gift of the Canal; that tied the President's hands in executing his constitutional authority as Commander-in-Chief of our military (the Boland Amendment); that favors a Communist government of an American country; that sees little cause for support of a democracy against its Communist rebels.

Indignation and dismay over that part of Congress that allows the equivalent of "card carrying" Communists to be members of Congress; that not only permits such enemies of our country to be Congressmen but places them in responsible positions (as chairman of the Sub-Committee for Western Hemisphere Affairs);...that attacks the great patriot and national hero, Oliver North, and loses; that then causes a special independent prosecutor to be established by spending $14,000,000 (over $40,000,000 if associated investigations are included) is able to get a jury to convict Ollie North on three counts out of an original 64 (correct?) charges. Ollie North, a private citizen of less than moderate wealth, a patriot with only a few thousand dollars to face the $40,000,000 that Congress supplied (far more than Col. North is accused of transferring to the Contras). Think of it! $40,000,000 spent to persecute (yes!) a private person and in spite of that super-fortune can win only three convictions from 64 charges.

Listless Breezes In Washington

George Will

WASHINGTON — The Bush administration, if there ever is one, may refute the modern assumption that the presidency is inevitably central to America's political system. But Congress, off to a comparably meandering start, is proving that it cannot supply a substitute for energy in the executive.

It is mid-May and the administration has not filled about 80 percent of senior executive-branch positions: An administration spokesman says the delay is, at least in part, evidence of virtue. That is, President Bush's unprecedentedly high ethical standards require exceptionally scrupulous scrutiny of personnel.

Congress, too, is a problem. Bush extended to Congress his hand — on the Inaugural platform, frequently since — and does not seem discouraged by the fact that congressional Democrats continue to gnaw on his knuckles. His first choice for Defense secretary was eviscerated. His choice for ambassador to South Korea is under fire. (He was a Bush aide who was in the Iran-contra loop that Bush was, he says, out of.) Bush's choice to head the Justice Department's civil-rights division — a black Republican — is being attacked by the civil-rights industry because he is unsympathetic to their racial spoils system called "affirmative action."

Congress' energies are being consumed in the War of Purification. House Democrats, moved by fear and armed with embalming fluid, ponder what to do with Jim Wright. He is finished, but will not yet fall down. Demonstrating the derangement that is bred by prolonged immunity from political competition, he sways in the center of the ring, rubber-kneed, throwing phantom punches, a grinning ruin.

Soon he will disappear, like the Cheshire cat, leaving only the grin behind. He will go on his own or the House Democratic Caucus — acting on the most complicated impulse its neurological system can handle: anxiety about re-election — will remove him.

And then soon the War of Purification may grind to a halt.

Rep. Tony Coelho, House Democratic whip, once was one of the boys who bore 'mid snow and ice the banner with the strange device, "Ethics!" He burned with indignation about the "sleaze factor" and that was back when the "sleaze" included Ed Meese's failure to disclose a gift of souvenir South Korean cuff links valued at more than $100.

Coelho is now in the midst of an entertaining series of explanations about who did what for him regarding his purchase of $100,000 worth of junk bonds.

Mutual-assured destruction may be working. We may be near a cease-fire in the War of Purification because the shelling is coming close to Democrats.

And what is Bush doing with this moment of Democratic disarray? Once upon a time there was an English King called Ethelred the Unready. Bush may be remembered in story and song as George the Receding. On one policy after another he has taken positions and then retreated from them, annoying some people in the taking of them and everyone else in the retreats from them.

So far (stay tuned) the issues incude: semiautomatic assault rifles; Boston Harbor (cleanup funds have been cut); the Navy (Dukakis was lambasted for opposing a new carrier and proposing elimination of a battle group; Bush is retiring a carrier and cutting the number of ships to Carter levels); education (the education President's education initiative involves a sum, $441 million, that is more than $100 million less than Michael Milken's 1987 earnings); tuition tax credits (pre-election, "Yea!"; post-election, "Who, me?"); global warming (Newsweek's report begins: "The Bush administration had the greenhouse surrounded last week, taking positions on all sides of this crucial environmental issue."). Can a retreat from opposition to negotiations now regarding short-range NATO missiles be far off?

Bush seems out-maneuvered by the subtle Gorbachev and the brutal Noriega. Like King Canute commanding the waves, Bush commands Noriega to obey and Noriega, like the waves, disobeys. Bush, in his Texas A&M speech, responded to Gorbachev's nimbleness by responding to Bulganin and Khrushchev. He dusted off President Eisenhower's "open skies" proposal from 1955, the year Davy Crockett coonskin caps were a national craze.

The Texas speech revealed a national need. Bush's Inaugural address was liberally supplied with cliches — new breezes blowing, doors opening, pages turning. The Texas audience was buffeted by yet another "new breeze" (blowing across the Russian steppes of course). A grateful nation will thank the speechwriter who stocks the White House pantry with a fresh supply of canned cheerfulness.

However, in a Washington without a decisive center, it does seem that the pages of history are being turned accidentally, not by decisions but by breezes blowing listlessly through negligently opened doors.

Schools Get Funds For Center

and other industry representatives would be involved in the initial stage of planning a school of the future in Pitt County with a wing devoted to a professional development center, sponsored by ECU and the school system.

The school would be equipped with the latest technological equipment and would serve as a pilot center for developing management and teaching styles that best address the needs of students.

The grant of $25,000 may be available for three additional years from the foundation, based on submission of other grant proposals.

Betty Speir, coordinator of the foundation, said that Morgan Printers Inc. has endowed a graphics award of $1,500, and the interest made on an endowment grant from the Lance Corp. will be used to establish a lab where animal specimens may be produced for school experiments.

The Lance endowment is for $1,000 for three years.

A Belk endowment of $1,500 paid for a harpist to perform in several county schools this year, Ms. Speir said.

Kenneth Dews, chairman of the board, said that the Weyerhaeuser Company Foundation presented the board $1,200 to establish the "Corner Store" program for handicapped students throughout the school system. Weyerhaeuser acknowledged the recommendation of the company's Greenville Lumber Facility to fund the program.

Dews also said that the foundation has been selected to receive a Governor's Award for the support of education in Region I. The award will be presented in the fall by the North Carolina Business Committee for Education and the governor in the category of Education Foundation-Alliance.

Patsy Duke, vice chairman of the foundation, presented the chairmen of the foundation advisory councils certificates for their support and work in choosing the 84 minigrant projects from 150 applicants this year.

Those recognized by their attendance areas were: Sandra Andrews and Edwin Congleton, North Pitt; Steve Blades, J.H. Rose; Joy Collins, Farmville Central; Dick Farris, D.H. Conley, and Sue Gaskins and Jean Gibson, Ayden-Grifton.

Linwood Mercer, chairman of the finance committee, said that the foundation has $67,000 in endowed funds and another $61,000 pledged for an expected total of $128,000 in endowments.

As of March 31, the board had $154,688 in its active accounts which include the endowment funds, $79,746 for the Rose athletic complex, $7,237 in interest and money raised by the five school attendance areas, Mercer said.

Two minigrant projects were presented during the board meeting. "Las Chispas," a Spanish-singing group from J.H. Rose High School, performed for the board. Sandra Flowers, a teacher at H.B. Sugg Elementary School, explained "Project H.U.G." (Help Us Grow), which helps students at risk for dropping out of school by tutoring them in various subjects.

Gorbachev Ends China Visit

The communique upgraded talks on territorial disputes to the foreign minister level.

It made clear that the normalization of Sino-Soviet relations "is not directed at any third country." The United States in the past has benefited strategically from the Sino-Soviet rift, but it has welcomed their rapprochement as contributing to regional and world stability.

The summit was the first meeting of Chinese and Soviet leaders since a hostile encounter between Mao Tsetung and Nikita Khrushchev in 1959.

Gorbachev's five-hour trip to Shanghai today was a respite from official meetings and from scheduled events that repeatedly were disrupted by demonstrators demanding political reform.

In Shanghai, Gorbachev met with Communist Party chief Jiang Zemin and Mayor Zhu Rongji and laid a wreath at a monument to the Russian poet Alexander Pushkin.

He also toured the Minhang Special Economic Zone, one of China's areas set aside for foreign investment. The Soviet Union is trying to set up similar areas as it embarks on economic reform.

As Gorbachev left Beijing, crowds of factory workers, government officials and students streamed into the city center in a show of support for students on a hunger strike for democracy. On Wednesday, more than 1 million protesters marched through Beijing's Tiananmen Square to show support for the pro-democracy campaign.

Thousands also took to the streets of Shanghai and at least 20 other cities to support the students.

Gorbachev, whom student protesters have praised for the political reforms he has championed at home, on Wednesday said that a "difficult, painful but political dialogue is going on between the leadership, the youth and the public concerning these events, and it seems to me that we should welcome that fact."

China's leaders have over the past decade introduced free-market reforms that have stimulated the economy but have resisted political liberalization of the sort Gorbachev has encouraged in the Soviet Union.

The Soviet leader said he had received "a very warm letter" from students that endorsed his reforms, which have included the country's first contested elections in 71 years. He had received a petition signed by 6,000 students.

Some have been fasting since Saturday in the latest tactic of a monthlong campaign to press the government for reforms including press freedom and a crackdown on official corruption.

At his Wednesday news conference, Gorbachev defended socialist countries experiencing unrest as they attempt to make reforms.

"If anyone thinks this will lead us to the ash heap of history, I think they will be disappointed again," he said.

Earlier, in a nationally televised interview, Gorbachev said his summit with Chinese leaders went well.

Orientation Held

New Ads Released

This is not a short campaign. We hope to extend it as long as we can," said Al Nichols, executive director of the bureau.

"I think that they will attract some attention," he said. "It's directed to our own community. It's a public affairs audience rather than a marketing audience. But there will be a marketing by-product."

Nichols has repeatedly said that area residents who are members of state or national associations must work to sway their organization to meet in Greenville. Conventions lured to the county by area residents generated $759,000 in new revenue in 1988, he said.

"They can do this so much better than we can, even with our most sophisticated materials. Working together with our professional expertise ... I think we can bring groups in," Nichols said.

Scott Allen, assistant director of alumni affairs at ECU, said ECU students emphasized the friendliness of the area in convincing the Student Alumni Association to hold its national convention in Greenville. Nearly 800 students from across the nation and Canada are set to meet in Greenville in September, making it the largest convention ever held in the city.

"We promoted the friendliness of this county. Those kids sold it for us," said Ms. Allen.

The ECU contingent won the convention at last year's national meeting in Maine. The ECU Ambassadors were the first student alumni group to use a videotape in its presentation, and Ms. Allen said Chancellor Richard Eakin and Mayor Ed Carter appeared in the tape to demonstrate community support for the convention.

Other schools have picked up the videotape trend this year, she said. UCLA and the University of Kansas will make pitches in Greenville to host the 1990 convention.

ECU graduate Suzanna Hudson was named a flag-waver for her work in bringing the student convention to Greenville. The educational conference will include over 70 seminars and motivational speeches.

Greenville has been unable to land many large conventions due to the lack of a large meeting hall, but Ms. Hudson said there is adequate space on campus. Finding a large eating space has been difficult, she said, and meals will be served at Guy Smith Stadium and Minges Coliseum.

The PSAs include one showing the entire group of flag-wavers and seven other that focus on an individual such as Ms. Hudson. The Greenville advertising agency of Adams and Longino produced the spots, Nichols said.

The flags used in the promotional campaign are made up of a green background with a white triangle representing the eastern point on the compass. On the green field, the flags contain a pineapple, which was a colonial symbol for hospitality.

Others recognized as flag-wavers were Dede Carney, Don Dunlap, John Ferren, Diane Gainey, Alymer Knight, Bill Surginson, Jerry Tesmond, Ed Walker, and Tom and Rosa Lee Phillips.

Now those with higher expectations can also expect lower monthly payments.

Compromise Reached

was set for their departure but the envoys were asked to report back by June 5 and it said unspecified "subsequent measures" may be needed after June 5.

Venezuelan President Carlos Andres Perez, speaking today from Caracas on "CBS This Morning," called the OAS meeting "the inauguration of new relations between the United States and the rest of the hemisphere because we have all agreed on a declaration defending democracy for Latin America and we have all condemned the abuses commited in Panama...."

Noriega is expected to tell the envoys that he never has opposed the fundamental purpose of the resolution — a transfer of power through democratic means. He is likely to claim the May 7 presidential elections, which he later ordered voided, were designed to achieve that very goal.

The most divisive aspect of the proceeding centered on whether a direct reference to Noriega was appropriate.

The initial draft of the resolution, prepared by a 10-nation delegation, omitted any reference to Noriega but the United States and other countries strongly opposed to Noriega reversed that omission during a closed session of more than two hours, paving the way for final approval.

The new language warned that the "grave events and abuses" by Noriega "could unleash an escalation of violence" in Panama.

The decision to include the reference to Noriega was approved by a 20-2 vote with seven delegates abstaining. The Panamanian and Nicaraguan delegates opposed the change in wording while the abstainers were from Peru, Uruguay and five Caribbean countries.

The Nicaraguan delegate failed in two efforts to win approval of amendments assailing President Bush's decision last week to send 2,000 more U.S. troops to Panama. Bush's stated purpose was to protect American lives.

Ritter expressed satisfaction with the final resolution, saying it fell far short of the U.S. demand for a condemnation of the Panamanian government. He promised that the OAS delegation would be welcomed by Panamanian authorities.

Gas Hikes Boost Inflation

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — An all-time record increase in gasoline prices fueled a large, 0.7 percent jump in consumer inflation in April, the government said today.

Last month's climb in the Labor Department's Consumer Price Index followed advances of 0.5 percent in March and 0.4 percent in February. It was the steepest one-month increase since an identical 0.7 percent rise in January 1987.

For the first four months of the year, inflation at the retail level ran at a 6.6 percent annual rate, sharply higher than the 4.4 percent annual increases in both 1988 and 1987.

However, analysts said most of the momentum this year is coming from a 30 percent rise in crude oil prices. Once that works its way through the economy, analysts expect inflation to fall back to a 5 percent annual rate.

In April, energy accounted for about 60 percent of the increase. The Labor Department said the 11.4 percent rise in gasoline prices was the largest one-month gain since the agency began keeping track of prices in the 1930s. The previous record was 7.4 percent, hit in January 1987 and in March 1974.

The 5.1 percent advance for all energy costs also set a record and followed a 1.1 percent rise in March.

Last week, stock and bond prices soared when the Labor Department reported that its Producer Price Index for wholesale prices rose a less-than-expected 0.4 percent.

Traders were braced for bad news on consumer prices today so the market reaction was mild. The Dow Jones average of industrial stocks fell 4.95 points in the first 30 minutes of trading but recovered in the second half hour, climbing 2.38 points above Wednesday's close to 2,464.81.

White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater, noting that heavy influence of energy on the report, told reporters traveling with President Bush to Rochester, N.Y., "We think it's kind of like a bulge moving through the economy. Other than energy prices, inflation looks like it's in pretty good shape."

The rate of inflation excluding the volatile food and energy sectors, which analysts say is often a better measure of underlying inflationary pressures, rose only 0.2 percent in April. The comparable figures were 0.5 percent in March and 0.4 percent in February.

In a separate report, the Labor Department said Americans' average weekly earnings, after adjusting for inflation, increased 1.2 percent in April after falling 0.3 percent a month earlier.

Average weekly earnings in April, before adjusting for inflation, were $334.08, up 4.3 percent from a year earlier. Taking the 5.3 percent inflation rate for urban workers into account over the 12-month period, real weekly earnings were down 0.9 percent.

In the price report, the department said food and beverage costs rose a moderate 0.5 percent. Fats and oils were up a sharp 1.0 percent, but sugar and sweets fell 0.1 percent. Meats and poultry, dairy products, baked goods and fruits and vegetables all rose.

The April figures left the overall Consumer Price Index at 123.1 percent of its 1982-84 base, meaning that a hypothetical selection of goods costing $100 during the base period would have cost $123.10 in April, 80 cents more than in March.

Committee Skips Decision On School-Age Proposal

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — North Carolina high school students would be required to stay in school two years longer under a bill sent to the House Appropriations Committee despite worries that it will cost too much to implement.

The House Subcommittee on Elementary and Secondary Education voted to send the bill out Wednesday without prejudice, taking no stand on its merits and leaving its fate and a possible $150 million price tag to the Appropriations Committee.

"I don't think we're in a position at this point in time to fund it," said Rep. Joe Hege, R-Davidson. "If the information given to us this morning ... is correct, we have some $15 million and that's it for expansion."

The bill to increase the mandatory school age from 16 to 18, sponsored by Rep. Don Dawkins, D-Richmond, is one of several measures designed to curb high school dropouts. Others would limit the hours students can spend at a job when school is in session and require that a student remain in school to get a driver's license.

Dawkins said his bill could cost up to $150 million by keeping in school the 27 percent of students who currently drop out.

"I don't think we need to be so gloomy here," Dawkins added. "There's a 1 percent sales tax that will arise here and I hope that we will have some good needs established when that does become available."

Gov. Jim Martin has proposed the sales tax increase to pay for higher salaries for teachers and state employees. If the tax increase is improved, there would likely be money left over after funding a 6 percent raise.

But Rep. Art Pope, R-Wake, said he had objections that had nothing to do with money.

"Sometimes it is better for a 17- or 18-year-old to drop out of school and go elsewhere," he said.

In other legislative action:

The Senate State Government Committee delayed action on a bill to require that a flag commemorating American prisoners of war be flown over the state Capitol.

Several committee members questioned who had decided what the official flag for POWs and Americans missing in action should be. And Sen. Larry Cobb, R-ecklenburg, said he wasn't sure the Capitol had room for another flag on its flagpoles.

Youthful Offenders Find New Life In The Forests While Doing Time

By Robin P. Teater
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CROSSNORE, N.C. — The "marriage" of the state prison and forestry divisions is being consummated with the construction of a facility for young inmates who chop away at their sentences by chopping trees in the North Carolina mountains.

"That's a good crew right there," said Gary Poole, a Division of Forest Resources project leader, pointing to five young inmates skimming the bark off a pine tree at a makeshift sawmill. "They actually hunt work to do."

Nearby, several young men use hammers and handsaws to put the finishing touches on one of three buildings resembling vacation lodges that are perched on a hillside along N.C. 194, about 15 minutes by car from Linville Falls.

The buildings, located in Avery County, the Christmas tree capital of the world, will permanently house up to 50 inmates in the BRIDGE program — an acronym for Building, Rehabilitating, Instructing, Developing, Growing and Employing.

BRIDGE inmate Tony Walker, who is serving a three-year sentence for breaking and entering, had never seen a sawmill before, but Poole said he "had him sawing in 15 minutes.

"It's a lot better than sitting around all day," said Walker, 22, of Hickory, who entered the program about four months ago from Polk Youth Center in Raleigh and has about seven months left. "It sounded pretty good, so I thought I'd try it out ... they treat you just like you're at work."

Inmates ranging in age from 18 to 25 learn such skills as carpentry, forestry, logging and fighting forest fires in the state's three mountain districts, said Rebecca Richards, a spokeswoman for the Division of Forest Resources.

Some inmates are chosen to work on the "helitack crew," which fights forest fires from a bright yellow Army helicopter equipped with a collapsable water bucket.

While they're building the BRIDGE camp facilities, the program's 26 inmates are temporarily housed at the Burke Youth Center about 40 miles away.

Instructors from nearby Mayland Community College have provided training in carpentry and masonry, but no professional contractors have been hired.

"A lot of it we just beat and bang and learn ourselves," Brittain said.

Harry Layman, director of the Division of Forest Resources, said the young prisoners have a chance to develop life skills, such as carpentry and plumbing, and they are also attracted to the program because they are treated less like inmates.

"Our nicest compliment on the program was one young man gave up his parole to stay in the program," Layman said. "The kids begin to feel part of something. We treat them with respect."

Since the program was begun in 1986, it has taken in 206 inmates from Burke, Polk, Cameron Morrison Youth Center in Hoffman and the Sandhills Youth Center near Aberdeen.

The youths volunteer for the program and are carefully screened before they are chosen, said Dale Brittain, BRIDGE camp supervisor.

"You've got everything from DWI's to dope to breaking and entering to stealing hubcaps," he said.

"They're not Boy Scouts," added Carl Johnson, who directs the BRIDGE program from Raleigh. "They did something wrong. But if you treat them well, you get something back."

Layman compared the BRIDGE program with the Civilian Conservation Corps program begun by President Franklin D. Roosevelt during the Depression.

"It's using the forest as remedial," he said. "There is something healing about taking them out in the woods and letting them work with nature.

"We cut down the logs, then build the camp ourselves with our forestry supervisors and the inmate labor," he said.

Layman said the program was begun after a fire in Burke County destroyed 47 homes built on "little switchback roads." He said it was born a union of the state's prison and forestry divisions.

The program is the first of its kind in the state and one of just two east of the Mississippi, state forest officials said. The other program in the East is in Florida.

Modeled after similar programs in California and Oregon, the BRIDGE program uses only young, minimum-custody prisoners.

Buddy Watson, 19, of Lenoir, has been in the BRIDGE program about a year and expects to be paroled this month. He admits it has been hard work but he enjoys working outdoors. Watson also has completed his high school diploma since entering the program.

"It's boring sitting in the camp 24 hours a day," said Watson, who serves on the helitack team.

Melvin Bruton, 21, of Winston-Salem, has been in the program 19 months. He has earned 674 hours of gain time and has nearly completed a 13-year prison term for breaking and entering.

"You hear of forest fires on TV," said Bruton. "They offered it to me, and I thought it would give me a change from regular prison."

Bruton has learned carpentry, landscaping and the operation of heavy equipment, such as bulldozers and a "knuckleboom loader" used by the logging industry. He also spent 18 months on the helitack team.

"I've learned so much," he said. "I didn't know nothing before I came in."

Brittain said he'd like to see more inmates stay in the program long enough to gain the experience Bruton has collected.

"There's a high turnover rate, which ties up your staff in training," Brittain said. "Because of the state Prison Cap we get hit hard ... We need the longer sentences to get them the experience they'll need later on."

Brittain credits the BRIDGE program's success with incentives. In addition to gain time, the inmates wear different uniforms and special logging boots, are photographed for a special display at Burke, and get a break from prison food by eating at local restaurants on the road between Burke and Avery counties.

Senate Leaders Offer Tax-Free Education Plan

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — Senate leaders have balked at using a 1-cent sales tax increase to raise salaries for teachers and state employees, but their tax-free alternative drew criticism from educators.

A $159 million windfall from the takeover of RJR Nabisco and a tax amnesty plan would provide most of the $308 million needed for a 6 percent pay raise, said Sen. Ken Royall, D-Durham, at a news conference held by key Senate Democrats Wednesday.

Royall said the 5.25 percent gasoline tax increase being contemplated for a 12-year, $8.6 billion highway improvement plan and a 1 cent sales tax increase, taken together, would mean more than $1 billion in annual tax increases. That would move North Carolina from a moderate-tax state to a high-tax state overnight, he said.

"The plan we are proposing provides a far less painful way to meet the state's education improvement needs and to (fund) employee pay raises," Royall said at a news conference.

But Paul Pulley of the North Carolina Association of Educators said teachers deserve better than a 6 percent raise with an uncertain future.

"This plan treads water with the national average (for teacher pay), he said. "It won't gain an inch.

"I'm concerned about the signal it sends when we're willing to raise $8 billion in taxes for roads but none for teachers," he added.

Sen. Henson Barnes, D-Wayne, president pro tem of the Senate, said the proposal isn't intended to set out priorities.

"It simply says there are available funds without raising the sales tax at this time to fund the schedule we're putting together and to fund the teacher salaries we're talking about," he said.

Royall said he had informed Gov. Jim Martin and the House Appropriations chairman of the plan but did not say whether they would endorse it. The plan does not include funding for statewide implementation of the career ladder incentive-pay plan for teachers endorsed by Martin.

Martin, in a prepared statement, welcomed the proposal, saying, "it is far from certain that any other plan previously on the table, including my own, would win adoption ..."

"While I remain committed to the career ladder program, I must acknowledge that in the remaining weeks of this session, we may not win a majority for it in the legislature," Martin said, but he added that he hopes the Senate will hold the plan in reserve "until it becomes clear that no permanent financing package can be enacted."

The $159 million would come from taxes owed on profits North Carolina shareholders reaped when RJR Nabisco stock soared prior to its takeover, Royall said. That money would be poured into capital projects, freeing up other funds for salaries.

A bill to give North Carolinians three months to pay outstanding taxes without criminal penalties would bring in at least $52 million, although the smaller state of Massachusetts pulled in $85 million in its amnesty program, Royall said.

Those two revenue sources, when combined with budget cuts and money already set aside for salary increases, would more than cover the cost of the pay increase for one year, and lawmakers could revisit the issue next year to see whether a tax increase might be needed to continue the work.

"We hope a tax increase will not be necessary, but it will depend on the economy," said Barnes.

Senate leaders outlined one more piece of the financial puzzle — a tax simplification plan that would take 700,000 poor North Carolinians off the tax rolls while piggybacking state tax returns on the federal form. The bill would be revenue neutral at a 6.5 percent tax rate, but could raise $26 million in 1989-90 and $57.5 million in 1990-91 at a rate of 6.6 percent, Royall said.

Sen. Marshall Rauch, D-Gaston, chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, said the change would mean higher taxes mainly for people earning more than $40,000 a year. He said someone earning $150,000 a year would owe another $900 in taxes, but could write off $300 against federal taxes. He said someone earning that much money would likely pay more than $600 to have an accountant prepare the state tax return — something that no longer would be necessary thanks to the simplified form.

Missing Son Found Charged In Murder

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MORGANTON, N.C. — What could have been a dream come true for a Morganton woman who hadn't seen her teen-age son for 1½ years has turned into a nightmare.

Two weeks ago, Nancy Beck saw her son's face on national television. Then she realized he had been charged with first-degree murder.

"We thought we'd probably never see him again," Rhonda Pearson said of her brother, Kelly Joe Luckadoo. "We knew as soon as we saw the pictures that it was Kelly."

A relative called Mrs. Beck, telling her to turn on the television.

"I just automatically burst into tears," Mrs. Beck said. "The first thing I thought: 'They found Kelly and he's dead and they can't identify him.'

"When I heard he was charged with murder in Arizona, that actually made me that much sicker."

Luckadoo faces first-degree murder charges in Arizona, where he is claiming amnesia. He was featured on the television show, "America's Most Wanted."

Two weeks ago, 17 Morganton residents — including Mrs. Beck — recognized Joshua Stone's picture on the television show and called in to identify him as the 18-year-old they knew.

Since then, Arizona, California and North Carolina authorities have been comparing Stone's and Luckadoo's photographs and dental records, said Detective Don Kennom of the Scottsdale Police Department in Arizona.

Mrs. Beck and her daughter, Ms. Pearson, were positive Stone was Luckadoo. About 5:15 p.m. Tuesday, Kennom said it was true.

Mrs. Beck, who last saw her son in mid-December 1987, said she will fly Thursday to Arizona, where Luckadoo is awaiting a trial next Monday.

"I've been told my son may not know me or he may not know who I am," Mrs. Beck said. "First, I want to see if he knows me."

Police said Luckadoo, a computer and mathematics whiz, disappeared from Morganton on Dec. 14, 1987, the day after they questioned him about a stolen car.

Couple Arrested

MONTGOMERY, Ala. (AP) — A North Carolina couple was arrested on federal kidnapping charges in the abduction of an 8-month-old boy from his home last month.

Larry Wayne Tarlton was unharmed and should be returned to his Greensboro, N.C., home today, said FBI agent Pat Mitchell. He said the infant was taken April 29. The baby was in the custody of the Montgomery County Youth Services Wednesday night, he said.

Charged were Terry Michael Blackburn, age unavailable, and Sheri Dawn Blackburn, 26. They were being held in the Montgomery City Jail after their arrests Wednesday.

The Blackburns, who had been living in Montgomery for about three weeks, were arrested after authorities received an anonymous tip, Mitchell said.

Board Sues

GREENSBORO (AP) — The Federal Home Loan Bank Board has filed suit in Greensboro to prevent a group of dissident Southmark Corp. shareholders from gaining control at the company's annual meeting in Atlanta on Friday.

The dissident group, headed by Herbert Parks of Greensboro, has nominated three representatives for Southmark's board.

Management has nominated four representatives who, if elected, would increase the board's size from three to seven members, but the bank board has expressed concern that the Parks group could gain control.

The bank board has asked U.S. Judge Eugene Gordon for a temporary restraining order blocking the election of the slate offered by the Parks group. Gordon said he would issue a decision today.

Exports Attacked

WASHINGTON (AP) — A member of the anti-tobacco forces in Congress says the government's zeal to export cigarettes is indirectly hurting other American exports, such as textiles and high-technology products.

Rep. Chet Atkins, D-Mass., said Wednesday that the office of the U.S. trade representative has threatened some Asian countries with trade sanctions unless they allowed American cigarettes to be imported and aggressively marketed.

The pressure has irked some foreign officials, particularly the Royal Thai Government, and has weakened the bargaining position for other American goods, he said.

Pullout

THOMASVILLE, N.C. (AP) — The president of a furniture company owned by the same group that has quit selling furniture from four of its manufacturers in North Carolina said he would continue business dealings in the Tar Heel state.

And one of the four companies that said earlier this week it would no longer sell to North Carolina furniture retailers appeared to have backed down from its earlier stance.

J. Smith Young, president and chief executive officer of Lexington Furniture Industries, said his company will keep selling furniture in North Carolina.

"Our distribution policies and our regulations are completely different from our associate Masco companies," Young said. "While we're sympathetic to their needs and we understand them, each Masco company has the freedom to make a choice for what they consider is in their best interests."

Lexington Furniture is owned by Masco Inc., the Michigan-based company that owns Drexel Heritage of Drexel, Henredon of Morganton, Hickory-Craft of Hickory and La Barge of Holland, Mich. Those four companies said earlier this week they would no longer sell to N.C. retailers.

Sanford Stocks

RALEIGH (AP) — Sen. Terry Sanford, who says he wants to rid himself of business dealings that could distract him from his Senate work, last year sold off stocks worth $157,000 to $440,000 and real estate interests worth at least $150,000.

Still, the Democratic senator held more than $1 million in assets, according to his 1988 financial disclosure form filed this week in the Senate. His 1988 income exceeded $500,000, with the real estate sales and various retirement funds accounting for much of the total.

Sen. Jesse A. Helms declined to release his 1988 financial disclosure statement before Friday, when the Senate makes all of them public. House members' disclosure forms are to be released next week.

No Candidacy

GOLDSBORO, N.C. (AP) — U.S. Rep. Martin Lancaster, D-N.C., said Wednesday he is not interested in running for the Senate and does not anticipate any such interest in the future.

The congressman's name recently was mentioned among possible Democratic Party candidates to challenge or succeed Republican Sen. Jesse Helms, who is up for reelection next year.

Lancaster said the costs and demands of a statewide campaign and managing a large staff did not appeal to him.

Indictment

HIGH POINT (AP) — A High Point man has been indicted by a Guilford County grand jury in the March 25 slaying of a High Point woman and her daughter, authorities said.

The grand jury indicted Bill Jones Jr., 41, in the shooting deaths of Betty Sellars Dunlap, 45, and Cynthia Denise Dunlap, 27. Both had been shot in the head at close range in an apartment complex parking lot.

Jones is charged with two counts of first-degree murder. His girlfriend, Queen Zimmerman, was indicted Monday on two counts of accessory after the fact.

Wife Convicted In Coach's Death

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SANFORD, N.C. — A jury was to hear evidence today to decide whether Barbara Stager will be sentenced to death or life in prison for the slaying of her husband, Durham High School baseball coach Russ Stager III.

With her parents and sons behind her, their hands locked together in a human chain, Ms. Stager gasped and sobbed Wednesday after she was convicted of first-degree murder. The Lee County jury deliberated for only 48 minutes.

Prosecutors are seeking the death penalty in the trial and plan to submit at least one aggravating factor for the jury to consider in its sentencing.

"Tomorrow will be the victory," Durham County District Attorney Ron Stephens said Wednesday.

Prosecutors contended that Mrs. Stager was motivated to kill her second husband because of mounting debts she was unable to pay — debts that could be paid by credit insurance and life insurance when her husband died.

In North Carolina, committing first-degree murder for financial gain constitutes an aggravating factor — one that tends to support the death penalty. Jurors must weigh any aggravating factors with any factors that mitigate Ms. Stager's case, such as a lack of criminal history, for instance, to determine her sentence.

The defendant, a former secretary at Duke Medical Center, was charged with the Feb. 1, 1988, slaying of her second husband, Allison Russell Stager III. Her first husband, James Larry Ford, also died in an unexplained shooting in 1978 in Randolph County.

Jurors could have found Mrs. Stager innocent or guilty of first-degree murder, second-degree murder or involuntary manslaughter.

The trial was moved to Lee County from Durham earlier this year after the defense argued that publicity had made finding impartial jurors in Durham County impossible.

Three Men Charged In Fatal Stabbings

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SPRING LAKE, N.C. — Three men who shared a room at a Spring Lake motel have been arrested and charged with beating, shooting and stabbing to death two New Jersey women in what police called drug-related killings.

Records show Joseph Edwin Bromfield, 27, and Everett Monroe Jr., 36, each were charged with first-degree murder, and Michael Breaux, 31, was charged with accessory to murder.

They are charged in the deaths of Annanrita Jackson, 21 and Arlena Elizabeth Redd, 28, both of Atlantic City, N.J.

Monroe was charged on Tuesday, while Bromfield and Breaux were charged on Wednesday, authorities said.

Officials said the women were believed to have been killed early Tuesday in the living room of their rented two-bedroom Spring Lake home.

Police said vials of crack, a concentrated form of cocaine, were discovered in the women's pockets and beneath their bodies and that receipts for drugs bought and sold at the house also were found.

"We believe Monroe and Bromfield went over to the Kaye Street address because the women had cheated them on some drug deals for several thousand dollars," Spring Lake Police Chief Gil Campbell said Wednesday.

Ms. Jackson was shot in the face, stabbed numerous times and suffered broken arms and a broken hip from being beaten with a blunt instrument, believed to be an ax-handle, Campbell said an autopsy report indicated. Ms. Redd suffered a severe head injury from a blunt instrument and had multiple stab wounds, Campbell said.

Ms. Redd's two daughters, ages 8 and 9, were in another bedroom at the home.

Spring Lake officers had received information that drugs were being sold at the home but officers did not have enough evidence to make arrests, Campbell said.

But he said the tips helped lead officers to Monroe and Bromfield.

"We got lucky and things fell into place," he said. "In this case we had names and good descriptions and other agencies listened to our (request for help)," he said.

Officials said Breaux allegedly drove Bromfield and Monroe to a bus station in Raleigh after the murders and that Bromfield and Monroe were detained by State Bureau of Investigation agents and Raleigh police as they prepared to leave for New York.

Airports Warned

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LONDON — The government has warned British airports and airlines to watch for containers of a Middle Eastern candy that could contain plastic explosives.

The Transport Department said in a statement Wednesday that it issued an alert after the discovery of a brand of marzipan containing Semtex, a plastic explosive made in Czechoslovakia.

It gave no other details, but a Transport Department security memo published in British newspapers today identifies the confectionery as Halawi, a sweet, fudge-like paste similar in color and texture to Semtex.

The explosive is odorless, hard to detect and can be molded into any shape.

British investigators say plastic explosives probably were used in the bomb built into a radio-cassette player that destroyed Pan Am Flight 103 over Lockerbie, Scotland, on Dec. 21. All 259 people on the New York-bound plane and 11 on the ground were killed.

The memo, published in full in the Daily Express newspaper, said the explosive is apparently moulded to the shape of the circular candy tins 8 inches in diameter, 6 inches deep and "large enough to contain all the components of an IED (improvised explosive device)."

Protesters Gather At Exxon Meeting

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PARSIPPANY, N.J. — Exxon Corp. Chairman Lawrence G. Rawl faced shareholders today for the first time since an Exxon tanker caused the nation's worst oil spill, and said the company had done its best to clean it up.

"The accident itself cannot be undone," Rawl told shareholders and others packing the company's annual meeting.

"In time when the job is done I'm confident that it will be evident to every fair-minded person that our employees met this major challenge with a high level of commitment and professionalism.

"We're determined to show through deeds that we really care about the environment and wildlife," Rawl said before introducing a 30-minute film about the March 24 spill from the tanker Exxon Valdez in Alaska's Prince William Sound.

About 50 demonstrators gathered outside the suburban hotel, some 35 miles west of New York City, where the meeting was held. They were kept from the entrance by about three dozen police officers.

One demonstrator, Isabel Byrd of Trenton, N.J., wore an overstuffed tuxedo and a pig's nose. She identified herself as a "pig from Exxon," and said her outfit represented Exxon's corporate mentality.

"We just came to say we don't have to care, because we're Exxon," Ms. Byrd said. "We're greedy and we're pigs."

On Wednesday, oil was spilled into a dry fountain in front of Exxon's Manhattan headquarters. A caller identifying himself only as an Alaskan told The Associated Press that he and a fellow Alaskan dumped 50 gallons of oil in the fountain so Exxon executives "might feel a little closer to the story."

Federal hearings began this week into the causes of the spill, which has fouled hundreds of miles of Alaskan waters and coastline and killed numerous fowl, fish and sea mammals.

Derby winner Sunday Silence works out at Pimlico

Sunday Silence Healthy

Derby Winner Is Set For Running Of The Preakness

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BALTIMORE — The Preakness looks "pretty much like a two-horse race" to trainer Charlie Whittingham, and he's got his half of that field healthy again.

Sunday Silence, the Kentucky Derby winner, is fully recovered from a sore right forefoot that cost him two days of training earlier this week, and he's ready to renew his duel with 2-year-old champion and Derby runner-up Easy Goer on Saturday.

"We've got pretty much the same horses that were in the Derby, only about half as many," Whittingham said. "I think the smaller field will help us.

"Of course, there are a few horses you can't rule out entirely, and racing luck has a lot to do with it, too."

Eight or nine are expected to be entered today for the $350,000-added Preakness over 1 3-16 miles at Pimlico. The probable entries include seven of the 16 3-year-olds that were in the Derby — Sunday Silence, Easy Goer, Dansil, Hawkster, Houston, Northern Wolf and Awe Inspiring. The other two possible starters are Pulverizing and Rock Point.

Whittingham sent Sunday Silence out for a 1½-mile gallop on Wednesday, postponing a half-mile workout one day because rain made the track sloppy.

"This kind of track isn't perfect for a work," Whittingham said. "We only lost two days, but you can see that after galloping 1½ miles, he's not even breathing hard. It won't affect this horse."

Whittingham said the injury probably was caused by a shoe nail too close to the tender part of his foot, but it also could have been a bruise caused by a stone. The foot was soaked in Epsom salts, and Sunday Silence galloped on Wednesday wearing bar shoes, which have a protective piece of metal across the open end.

"He's 100 percent right now if nothing else happens," Whittingham said.

Shug McGaughey trains both Easy Goer and Awe Inspiring. Awe Inspiring, who was third in the Derby, is expected to be scratched from the Preakness unless his stablemate is unable to run for some reason.

"Sunday Silence should be the favorite," McGaughey said. "Easy Goer probably will be the favorite because he's better known around here among the bettors. But Sunday Silence deserves to be the favorite."

Easy Goer, ridden by Pat Day, went off a 4-5 favorite in the Derby but, on a sloppy track at Churchill Downs, found himself sixth at the head of the stretch and unable to keep pace with Sunday Silence when jockey Pat Valenzuela moved him to the front.

Afterward, McGaughey said he could think of no reason for the 2½-length loss other than the track condition.

"I can't be as confident as I was before the Derby," McGaughey said. "We've got to prove we can come back and beat Sunday Silence. It's the same as if you had a fight with a guy, and he beat you up. If he beats us again, I'm not going to make up anymore reasons. ...

"It's supposed to be a fast track Saturday, and maybe we'll run back and be second again," McGaughey said. "At least if that happens, we'll know we're second best. I've had to wonder for the last 10 days now whether it was a bad track or what."

After his Derby victory, Whittingham predicted Sunday Silence would go on to win the Triple Crown, which consists of the Derby, Preakness and the Belmont Stakes on June 10. He still predicts it.

"At least we're the only ones with a shot," Whittingham said.

And he's not worrying about it one bit.

"If you worry, you get gray hair," he said, lifting his cap off his bald head, "and I don't have to worry about that."

Lazier Family Not Quite An Indianapolis Tradition

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

INDIANAPOLIS — Family tradition runs strong at the Indianapolis Motor Speedway, but the Laziers are not the Unsers or Andrettis, nor the Vukoviches or Bettenhausens.

Buddy Lazier, a 21-year-old rookie, is the son of Bob Lazier, who made his only appearance in the Indianapolis 500 in 1981, came back the next year with a car that fell apart almost every time he drove it and went into semi-retirement from racing after that.

The elder Lazier, 50, is the owner of the 2-year-old car Buddy hopes to qualify this weekend for the May 28 race. Unless they find another few miles per hour in practice, however, the Indy second-generation club doesn't figure to add another member.

The slowest driver among the 26 who qualified last week is Davy Jones at 211.475 mph. Buddy Lazier has struggled for almost two weeks at around 206 mph, slower than more than a dozen other drivers still hoping to fill the final seven spots in the lineup.

"I got lots of good advice from my father, to just take it slowly," Buddy Lazier said. "I don't worry about what everybody else is doing. You're racing against yourself until you get up to speed.

"I'm ready, but we've had problems with the car. We haven't had as many miles as I'd like. The equipment hasn't been up to specifications," said Buddy, the champion of the inaugural American Indy Car series last year. He led the series for older Indy cars with non-turbocharged engines with six victories.

Buddy, the youngest rookie entered in the 500 this year, is driving a Cosworth-powered March race car that carries No. 35, the same number his father had when he placed 19th eight years ago.

"A driver's a driver," Bob Lazier said Wednesday outside the team garage while his son's crew hurriedly readied the car for practice. "Buddy's a kid who has given me tremendous confidence as a team owner and a father.

"He's never crashed a chassis. He

Race Week Gets Adrenalin Going

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHARLOTTE — Race Week is here and stock-car racing fans from across the country have begun their annual pilgrimage to Charlotte for 11 days of racing, fireworks, a parade, concerts, a golf tournament and black-tie balls.

"This is when the adrenalin gets to pumping," Ed Clark, vice president of event promotions at Charlotte Motor Speedway, screamed over the roar of Darrell Waltrip's practice run on Tuesday. "We've been working for 11 months to get to this point. I think we have as much fun as the competitors."

Outside the track, early arrivers were setting up camp in the grassy fields. The races and other events will draw more than 500,000 people who will spend well over $100 million at hotels, restaurants and shops before they leave town after the Memorial Day weekend.

THE DAILY REFLECTOR

A number of local prep baseball teams have already locked up playoff spots, but things are still up in the air for D.H. Conley and Farmville Central.

Rose, Greene Central and Ayden-Grifton have all clinched playoff spots. Rose and Greene Central are the top seeds in the Big East 4-A and Eastern Plains 2-A, respectively. Ayden-Grifton will be the second seed in the EPC.

Farmville may have qualified by defeating South Lenoir, 6-4, Wednesday to move into a three-way tie for third and final playoff spot in the EPC.

The Jaguars, with a record of 6-6 in the EPC, are tied with South Lenoir and C.B. Aycock. Which team will get the bid is unclear. School officials are awaiting a decision from Chapel Hill. A decision is expected sometime today.

"That's what we're depending on right now," Farmville coach Bill Davis said. "Some people interpret the handbook saying one thing and other coaches interpret it saying something else. We called Dick Knox in Chapel Hill to get an interpretation of the handbook."

D.H. Conley, meanwhile can still qualify for the playoffs in the Coastal, but a win over first-place East Carteret would be a big help.

For Conley, though, things are far from settled. The Vikings missed a opportunity to enhance their position when they lost to Havelock, 3-1, Friday. That gave the Rams a sweep of Conley during the regular season, a decided advantage when the playoff race is as tight as it is in the Coastal 3-A.

Conley then made things even more uncertain with a 5-2 loss to West Craven Tuesday that clinched the Coastal title for East Carteret, 9-2 in the conference.

Conley (11-5 overall) and Havelock are tied for second at 7-4 and Washington is third at 6-5.

Things should clear up after today pending Conley's game with the Mariners and Havelock's matchup with Washington.

"We can go from finishing second outright or in a tie for third and not going to the playoffs at all," Conley coach Allan Wilson said.

For Thursday's game and the playoffs, if the Vikings qualify, Conley will be without pitcher/outfielder Brian Bullock, who had an injury last week and then quit the squad.

The third-place team from the Coastal will take on the number-one squad from the Tar Roanoke 3-A, SouthWest Edgecombe. The second-place Coastal team will play the number-two team from the Triangle 3-A, East Wake.

Rose will take on the number-three qualifier from the Mid-South 4-A, either Douglas Byrd, Pine Forest or South View.

Greene Central will face the number-three team from the Capital Area 2-A.

The Chargers entered the final stretch of their regular season needing to win at least two of their final four games to remain in the hunt for one of the EPC's three playoffs spots and Ayden-Grifton won three of those.

Ayden-Grifton will play the number-two team from the Northeastern 2-A, either Roanoke Rapids, Hertford County or Northampton East. The EPC's third-place team will take on the number-one team from the NEAC.

Rose coach Ronald Vincent, who guided his team to the state 4-A championship finals last year before falling to Charlotte Harding, the playoffs are a whole new ball game.

"For lack of anything better to say, it's do or die," he said. "In the playoffs, it's sudden death. It's not like the regular season where you can experiment and play for tomorrow."

Rose wrapped up the Big East title Saturday with a 15-0 win over Wilson Fike as Maurice Hines hit for the cycle.

Vincent has been worried about developing his pitching staff all year long, but he feels things have come together for the Rampants down the stretch.

"I feel like our pitching is better than it has been all year," he said. "Hines is coming along. (Walter) Gatlin and Jamie (Brewington) are all pitching well. They are throwing strikes."

In the EPC, Greene Central (15-6 overall and 10-2 in the EPC) dropped two games last week, but coach Jim Fulghum's squad still clinched the conference championship with the win over Farmville.

"That was very important," Fulghum said of the win over Farmville. "Ayden-Grifton beat us on Wednesday night. Farmville played well (in the loss) and South Lenoir beat us on Friday. We were on a tailspin. We faced pretty good teams that had to win to get in the playoffs.

"This is about the way we played early in the year. We just have to pick the pace up a little. Our hitting's kind of tailed off."

The Rams likely opponent will be either Wake Forest-Rolesville or Fuquay-Varina, which tied for third place in the Capital Area 2-A.

Whatever the Rams do, they will have to accomplish it without catcher Walt McKeel who is academically ineligible. Fulghum will look to pitchers Reggie Hill (6-2) and Scott Sutton (4-0) in the playoffs.

Ayden-Grifton, 10-11 and 7-5, got the three wins it needed last week in order to qualify for the postseason, though the Chargers lost to South Lenoir, 6-3, Tuesday.

"We've really overachieved in the last week," Ayden-Grifton coach Chris Ross said. "We took three big victories the past week. We played well against Pamlico County and kind of upset Greene Central and took one in 11 innings over Farmville Friday.

"We've got good pitching from (Jay) Tripp, (Scott) Chauncey and (Brian) Haddock in those three ball games. All three kind of combined together. We haven't been getting any flashy hitting," Ross added. "We just got the right hits at the right times. We just found offense at the right times."

Farmville won the two games it had to win this week to make the playoffs after close losses to Greene Central and Ayden-Grifton last week.

"We came back and won two must games back to back (defeating Pamlico and South Lenoir)," Davis said. "If we had lost either one, we would have been out. The boys regrouped and are playing well now.

"We just had a mental lapse midway through the season," Davis added. "We went through stretches where we weren't mentally ready to play and lost three games. It was a must-win situation (this week) and the boys pulled through. They've done what they had to on the field."

Walters And Bloom Seeking A New Trial

CHICAGO (AP) — Attorneys for convicted sports agents Norby Walters and Lloyd Bloom are seeking a new trial for their clients, contending a federal judge made errors.

In motions filed with the U.S. District judge, George M. Marovich, the attorneys said he made erroneous rulings concerning evidence and testimony.

They specifically complained that Marovich barred them from cross-examining a key prosecution witness about his involvement in several murders.

Walters, 58, and Bloom, 29, were convicted last month on charges of racketeering, fraud and conspiracy.

Rose's Friend Testifying For Grand Jury

CINCINNATI (AP) — A prison inmate who has been linked to a federal grand jury's income tax investigation of Pete Rose was transported from jail to a grand jury session Wednesday, a jail officer said. The grand jury, which works in secret, is said to be investigating whether all of the Reds manager's gambling earnings were properly reported as income for tax purposes.

Michael Fry, who is serving an eight-year prison term for drug and tax convictions as a reputed member of a cocaine trafficking ring, was taken from the Boone County Jail in northern Kentucky to Cincinnati, Sgt. John Richardson said. Federal marshals at the Cincinnati federal courthouse where the grand jury meets told a reporter that Fry had been brought to the building.

Fry was called to the grand jury's opening session two weeks ago, but later said in an interview that he did not testify at that time and expected to be called back. Fry said in a published interview last week that he expected to tell the grand jury that Rose gambled through a bookie and knowingly associated with wealthy drug traffickers.

Rose has denied wrongdoing. There has been no suggestion that he was involved in drug trafficking.

Fry is serving his prison term in the Medical Center for Federal Prisoners in Springfield, Mo. He has been temporarily housed in the northern Kentucky jail to be accessible to the grand jury, Richardson said.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Anthony Nyktas declined to return a reporter's telephone call about the grand jury.

Farr, Herandez Fail In Save Bids

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Ten times Steve Farr accepted the assignment and came through. Guillermo Hernandez met the challenge seven times.

Wednesday night, they both failed.

Farr, the ace of the Kansas City bullpen, and Detroit reliever Hernandez failed in save situations for the first time this season. Minnesota rallied for a 4-3, 10-inning victory over the Royals. Chicago scored five times in the ninth inning to beat Hernandez and the Tigers 10-7.

Charlie Leibrandt carried a three-hitter and a 3-1 lead into the ninth when Kirby Puckett singled with one out. Farr came in and immediately yielded Gary Gaetti's game-tying home run.

"He's been perfect all year," Manager John Wathan said. "It would be hard not to go to him in that situation, and I'll do it again. What hurt him was getting behind (to Gaetti) in the count. But again, he's been perfect all year and it was bound to happen sometime."

At Detroit, the Tigers led 7-5 and the White Sox had one out when Harold Baines singled and went to third on Ron Kittle's double. Ivan Calderon was given an intentional walk to load the bases. Pinch-hitter Carlos Martinez doubled off the left field wall for two runs. Steve Lyons was walked intentionally, loading the bases for Manrique, who doubled off the center field wall to make it 10-7.

"Willie (Hernandez) made a good pitch, but he has to give me credit," Manrique said.

Hernandez wasn't saying much, except "the show is over" as he brushed past a knot of reporters.

Elsewhere, California beat Boston 5-0 as rookie Jim Abbott pitched a four-hitter for his first major league shutout. Also, it was Cleveland 6, Toronto 3; Baltimore 8, Texas 2; Oakland 8, New York 3; and Milwaukee 9, Seattle 6.

Twins 4, Royals 3

Danny Tartabull, who always does well against Minnesota, hit his 14th career homer against the Twins as Kansas built its 3-1 lead. Then Gaetti struck against Farr.

"When you get a guy that's shutting you down pretty good, it's not all rah-rah and 'everybody grab a bat,'" Gaetti said. "But we hit some balls pretty good before."

Gaetti hit his 365 feet to left field. Puckett's hit went between shortstop and third base off Jeff Montgomery, ending Kansas City's winning streak at five.

"I wanted to keep the ball down and I did, but he got a hit," Montgomery said. "I didn't want to get into a situation where I had to throw him a good pitch. He hit it where we weren't. That's baseball."

Puckett deflected the credit to Gaetti.

"You got to love that," Puckett said of Gaetti's homer. "He's come up with some big hits for us lately. That was a great breaking ball, and anybody else would have bailed out. He stayed right in there and drilled it."

White Sox 10, Tigers 7

Hernandez got drilled after Mike Heath hit his first two home runs and Keith Moreland went 4-for-4 for Detroit, which blew a 7-4 lead.

For Chicago, it was the third time in less than a week that it came from behind to win.

"Can you believe that game? I've never been on a team that has come back like this one," Manager Jeff Torborg said. "Not even the good Yankee teams. I mean, time after time."

Angels 5, Red Sox 0

While Abbott was allowing four singles and getting solid defensive help in the form of four double plays, Roger Clemens lasted only two innings in his shortest outing of the year.

Abbott, 3-3, who was born without a right hand, struck out four and walked two. The shutout was the Angels' ninth this season — they had nine all of last year.

Clemens, 5-2, gave up a three-run double to Chili Davis and a two-run homer to Lance Parrish with two outs in the first inning, sealing his first loss at Anaheim Stadium after four wins.

Athletics 8, Yankees 3

Oakland had 15 hits, including four by Terry Steinbach and Mark McGwire's long two-run homer. The A's fell behind 3-0, rallied in the second when Billy Beane singled home a run and Luis Polonia drove in two more on a two-out triple that hit off the face of Yankees center fielder Roberto Kelly, who dove for the sinking liner. Left fielder Rickey Henderson ran down the ball and relayed to shortstop Alvaro Espinoza, who threw out Polonia at the plate trying for an inside-the-park home run.

Tony Phillips, who entered the game in the first inning when shortstop Walt Weiss left with a sprained right knee after turning a double play, hit his second homer of the year after Beane singled with two outs in the third.

Oakland relievers held New York hitless the final four innings. Anchored by Dennis Eckersley's AL-leading 12th save, the A's bullpen has a 6-0 record with 15 saves and 1.58 ERA in holding opponents to a .158 batting average.

Indians 6, Blue Jays 3

At Toronto, Joe Carter's three-run homer climaxed Cleveland's six-run third inning as the Indians handed Toronto its first loss since Cito Gaston took over as Blue Jays manager Monday.

The six-run inning was the second in as many nights for the Indians.

Brook Jacoby started the inning against Dave Stieb with a walk and singles by Andy Allanson and Felix Fermin loaded the bases. Oddibe McDowell singled in Jacoby and Jerry Browne followed with a two-run single. Carter then knocked out Stieb with his fourth home run of the year, giving him nine RBIs in his last seven games.

Orioles 8, Rangers 2

Baltimore had 14 hits, including Mickey Tettleton's 429-foot homer, the longest at Arlington Stadium this season. Former Ranger Dave Schmidt allowed five hits in seven innings and retired nine straight Rangers from the fifth through the seventh innings before getting relief help from Mark Williamson.

Charlie Hough's ERA swelled to 6.64, second-highest in the American League, after allowing four earned runs. Hough shut out Detroit on opening night, but he's allowed 24 runs and 36 hits in his last five starts.

Brewers 9, Mariners 6

At Seattle, Jim Gantner sparked a four-run third inning with a two-run double and Terry Francona, Charlie O'Brien and Paul Molitor homered for the Brewers. Molitor opened the game with a home run for the 25th time in his career — and the second time this season, but left in the ninth with an ankle injury.

The Mariners scored three runs in the bottom of the first, but Francona tied the score with a two-run homer in the second.

Race Week...

Other highlights include the 600 Children's Charity Ball Friday night and Fan Appreciation Day on Saturday. There also will be concerts by the Coasters and the McCarters and dozens of other activities.

But the real draw is racing — with names like Dale Earnhardt, Bill Elliott, Rusty Wallace and Richard Petty.

Early Sunday, there's the 100-lap Winston Open, with the winner earning the right to enter The Winston later that day. The Winston is NASCAR's version of the All-Star game, pitting the sport's top 20 drivers.

"It's been compared to all-star games in other sports but it's different," Clark explained. "While in baseball it's looked at as fun, this is serious business."

The race has an unusual format designed to produce a thrilling finish. It is run in three segments of 75, 50 and 10 laps, with breaks in between to give the teams a chance to make adjustments to their cars.

The Winston finish of 1987 is still a controversial subject in some camps. That's when Earnhardt, Elliott and Geoff Bodine played bumper cars in the final 10-lap segment.

Earnhardt won the fender-banging duel by scooting across the infield, dodging the spinning cars of Elliott and Bodine.

Immediately after the race, tempers flared and NASCAR handed down fines to the three drivers.

On May 27, the track will be the site of the Grand National Champion Filter 300. One day later comes the big finale — the Coca-Cola 600, the Winston Cup Circuit's longest race.

The Coca-Cola 600 will be televised nationally on WTBS out of Atlanta. As always, it goes head to head with one of racing's premire events — the Indianapolis 500.

After the Indy, which draws 400,000 spectators, the Coca-Cola 600 is the best-attended sports event in the country with about 170,000 fans.

Speedway officials say they have modeled their pre-race activities after the success of the promoters in Indianpolis.

"The fact that the two largest-attended events in the country are held on the same day speaks well for the sport," Clark said.

Last year's Coca-Cola 600 drew stock-car racing fans from 46 states and six foreign countries, he said.

"I've gone to a lot of other Winston Cup cities and I think the people of Charlotte do more to welcome the fans than anyone else," Clark said. "The hotels don't knock up their rates and the restaurants don't change their menus. I don't think we would be as successful if it weren't for those people."

Reuschel's Birthday Near Perfect

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Instead of a perfect birthday present, Rick Reuschel got a very good one.

The San Francisco pitcher had a perfect game going against Philadelphia until Tom Herr singled with two outs in the seventh inning Wednesday night.

Herr was thrown out trying to stretch the hit into a double and Reuschel pitched a hitless eighth inning before reliever Jeff Brantley completed the Giants' 6-0 victory.

Reuschel, who turned 40 on Tuesday, won his 200th game last week. But none of the victories have been no-hitters.

"You don't think about perfect games or no-hitters at my age," he said. "But when you get in that neighborhood, it's nice."

Herr moved Reuschel out of the neighborhood with a clean single past first baseman Will Clark.

"I was going to battle him, get some good swings," Herr said. "I figured if he got by me, he might have a shot at it. I was trying to find a hole somewhere."

Reuschel asked Manager Roger Craig to take him out after eight innings.

"He told me he was getting tired and didn't want to pitch the ninth," Craig said. "He's a rare breed. He once told me he didn't care about complete games or shutouts. He just wanted to win."

Elsewhere in the National League, it was Cincinnati 5, Pittsburgh 4 in 10 innings; San Diego 6, Montreal 5; Chicago 4, Atlanta 0; Los Angeles 4, New York 3 in 10 innings; and Houston 3, St. Louis 2.

Reuschel, 7-2, struck out six and walked one in becoming the first seven-game winner in the National League. Phillies starter Ken Howell, 4-2, gave up six runs on five hits in four innings.

Reds 5, Pirates 4

Bill Landrum walked Bo Diaz with the bases loaded and two outs in the bottom of the 10th inning to force in the winning run.

Landrum, 0-1, gave up a two-out single to Paul O'Neill, then walked Todd Benzinger and Rolando Roomes. Diaz, hitting just .150 with one RBI, then took four straight balls to force in O'Neill and give John Franco, 1-0, his first win since last August 30th.

Reds' starter Jose Rijo, who had won four straight, allowed just two hits over the first six innings and singled home the run that put the Reds up 4-3 in the fourth.

Padres 6, Expos 5

Rob Nelson's three-run homer snapped a sixth-inning tie as San Diego swept the three-game series.

Mark Grant, 1-1, pitched four shutout innings in relief of Bruce Hurst for the victory and Greg Harris got the last out with the bases loaded for his second save.

Harris relieved Mark Davis, who failed to get a save for the first time in 14 opportunities after giving up a run-scoring fielder's choice by Andres Galarraga and an RBI single by Hubie Brooks in the ninth.

Montreal starter Pascual Perez, 0-6, struck out 10 in six innings but was hurt by four unearned runs.

Cubs 4, Braves 0

Jeff Pico pitched seven shutout innings in his first start of the season as the Cubs swept the Braves at Wrigley Field for the first time since 1984.

Pico, 2-0, allowed four hits, walked three and struck out three before getting relieved by Pat Perry, who pitched the final two innings.

Pico, who has 13 relief appearances this year, was named the Cubs starter after Rick Sutcliffe developed back spasms on Monday. It was Pico's first win as a starter since he beat Atlanta last Aug. 27. He has pitched 21 straight shutout innings against the Braves.

Astros 3, Cardinals 2

Pinch-runner Eric Yelding slid home with the winning run on Craig Biggio's ninth-inning grounder as the Astros rallied to beat the Cardinals for their fifth straight victory.

It was the fifth straight loss for St. Louis.

Bill Doran and Glenn Davis singled off starter Joe Magrane, 3-3, to start the two-run rally in the ninth. Cris Carpenter relieved and gave up an infield single to Kevin Bass to load the bases.

Billy Hatcher's groundout to third baseman Terry Pendleton scored Doran with the tying run. After Ken Caminiti was intentionally walked, Biggio hit a slow roller down to Jim Lindeman at first base. Lindeman stepped on the bag and then threw home, but Yelding, pinch running for Davis, slid under the tag for the winning run.

Dodgers 4, Mets 3

Rick Dempsey drew a bases-loaded walk from New York pitcher Rick Aguilera with two outs in the 10th inning to give the Dodgers their third straight victory.

Aguilera took over to start the 10th and made a throwing error on a chopper by leadoff batter Mike Sharperson. Mariano Duncan grounded into a forceout and Willie Randolph flied out before Mike Marshall's hit-and-run single sent Duncan to third.

Lazier Family...

He said the difference between father and son in intensity is like "night and day. He's far more intense. If I have any criticism, he's too serious, and that can hardly be a criticism. When I was racing, I was also supporting a family and building businesses. Buddy is only a race driver."

The younger Lazier started racing Formula Fords and motorcycles. He won three Formula Vee and one Formula Ford race and ran three Can-Am races in 1986. Two years ago, he drove the Canadian American Thundercar series. Earlier this year, he co-drove a Porsche to ninth in the Daytona 24-hour sports car race.

Bob Lazier, who has businesses in Colorado, returned to Indianapolis in 1982 "but the car simply wasn't staying together. It kept breaking halfshafts. I could not in good conscience take the car out there on the track. It was a danger to everybody."

"Once you leave Indianapolis, it's hard to get another ride," the elder Lazier said.

He admitted he still gets the itch to drive now and then and last year drove three races and was competitive in the AIC series in Buddy's backup car, but his business interests "are such that I couldn't drive Indy cars fulltime. This isn't for amateurs."

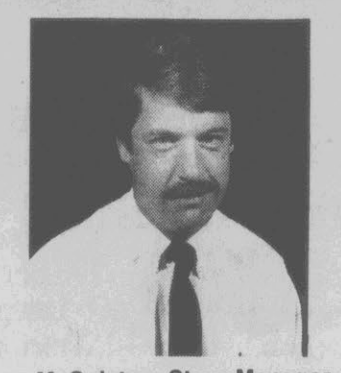
RIDOMIL® at lay-by means peace of mind for tobacco growers



Tony McCuiston, Store Manager, Says:

Just a quart of Ridomil per acre applied to the soil at lay-by (if you applied 2 quarts or less before transplanting) will give your tobacco crop sure protection against blue mold all the way to harvest.

It will keep black shank under control, too.

Knicks Hoping To Pull Off Rare Rally

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHICAGO — The New York Knicks are still fighting for survival. If successful, they would succeed in pulling off a rarity in the NBA playoffs.

Only four times in history have teams come back from a 3-1 deficit in the playoffs. The Knicks took a step in that direction when they defeated the Chicago Bulls 121-114 to cut the Bulls' advantage to 3-2.

The Boston Celtics twice came back from 3-1 deficits to win playoffs, against Philadelphia in 1968 and again in 1981. Los Angeles did it against Phoenix in 1970 and Washington did it against San Antonio in 1979.

After the Bulls won consecutive games in Chicago last weekend to take their 3-1 lead, Patrick Ewing said: "We're not dead yet. We have a good basketball team. We'll put this behind us and start again."

Ewing, the 7-foot center, and Charles Oakley keyed Tuesday night's victory. Ewing scored 32 points and had 11 rebounds. Oakley scored 18 points and had 13 rebounds.

Now the Knicks must win Game 6 in Chicago Stadium Friday night to force a seventh and final game in New York on Sunday.

"The pressure is still on them," Jordan said.

The Bulls returned home Wednesday morning for a welcome day of rest before resuming regular practice sessions today.

"They need the rest," Bulls coach Doug Collins said. "They're up against a good team and they've been playing their butts off. It was a tough loss (Tuesday night). But I am very pleased with our effort."

Collins said it would have been "so easy for the guys to pack it in" when the Knicks opened up a 19-point lead early in the fourth quarter.

"But they kept their poise and battled back," he said, referring to his team's comeback that cut the deficit to three points with 40 seconds left. "We had real chances to win the game. You have to feel good about that."

Jordan put on another dazzling performance in New York, but in the end it was Ewing, who had been outplayed by former teammate Bill Cartwright in the first four games, who took charge.

While Jordan was leading the Bulls' fourth-quarter comeback, Ewing scored nine of his team's last 11 points. He also blocked a 3-point attempt by Jordan with 39 seconds remaining and turned it into a layup after the Bulls had cut the lead to three points.

"I was real hungry," said Ewing. "I wanted the ball and my teammates got it to me in good position. I hadn't been playing well and I wanted to play well."

Collins also gave credit to Oakley, who the Bulls traded to New York last year for Cartwright.

"Oakley played the best game against us since he's been with the Knicks," said Collins. "He was tough getting the rebounds, making the big plays."

Jordan conceded the Knicks "gave us a chance to get back in the end. But they made the clutch shots and plays when they had to."

Collins said the Bulls cannot allow themselves to get complacent about the series.

"The only way a 3-1 lead is insurmountable is if you have two of the next three games at home," said Collins. "When you have two on the road, a 3-1 lead is not that commanding. It's a big difference."

The Bulls must forget about the loss and look ahead to Friday's game, Collins said.

"Now we have to respond in the big game," he said. "We've done that all season, and now we have to do it again."

The series could come down to Jordan versus Ewing.

"Michael can take over a game because he has the ball in his hands," said Ewing. "With me, I've got to rely on others."

The winner of the series advances to the Eastern Conference finals against the Detroit Pistons, who swept the Milwaukee Bucks in four games to win their conference semifinals.

Chelios Helps Canadiens Even Stanley Cup At 1-1

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CALGARY, Alberta — A great player has the ability to pick up his teammates, place them on his back and carry them to victory.

Chris Chelios is a great player.

"I think Chelly won it for the team," Montreal coach Pat Burns said Wednesday night after the Canadiens defeated the Calgary Flames 4-2 to send the Stanley Cup finals to the Montreal Forum tied at a game apiece. Game 3 is Friday night.

"In my eyes," Burns added, "he's one of the best hockey players I've ever coached."

Chelios, the Canadiens' leading playoff scorer after a superb regular season, gave an inspirational speech in the dressing room after the second period and then practiced what he preached.

Then, 1:34 later, he fed Russ Courtnall, who wristed a shot from the left faceoff circle over Vernon.

Chelios also assisted on Bobby Smith's second-period goal and played almost every minute while Montreal was either on a power play or killing a penalty.

If Burns would have let him, he probably also would have volunteered to drive the Zamboni between periods.

"I just want to contribute," Chelios said. "I'm just another part of the team, and we're successful because everyone contributes."

Some contribute more than others.

"He's definitely an asset to our team," Burns said. "He plays 30, sometimes up to 40 minutes a game."

Burns, an ex-cop, said it would be a crime if Chelios doesn't win the Norris Trophy as the NHL's top defenseman.

"He might not get all the respect for the Norris because if you give Chelios a shot, he'll give you one back," the coach said. "But I don't think the Norris is something you decide on points. It's for an all-around defenseman."

The Canadiens had plenty of soul-searching to do after the second period.

Goals by Larry Robinson and Smith had given Montreal a 2-0 lead and Montreal, the league's top defensive team, simply doesn't blow two-goal leads. But the Canadiens don't often have to play a team with the offensive firepower of Calgary during the regular season.

As they did in their 3-2 loss in Game 1, the Canadiens frittered away another early lead.

Calgary dominated the second period, outshooting the Canadiens 16-4 and getting goals from Joe Nieuwendyk and Joel Otto. The Flames also had several near misses.

"We hit a lot of posts, and those kinds of things haunt you," Calgary coach Terry Crisp said. "We missed the net by inches. We hit a few posts. We had the chances.

"We came back and were taking it to them."

Having survived the onslaught to take a 2-2 tie into the locker room, the Canadiens regrouped. After Burns read his team the riot act, a few players, including the normally quiet Chelios, had their say.

"We had a good talk in the dressing room," Burns said. "We've been in these situations before. We're not the type to panic, to go down the tubes.

"Chelly is one of the guys who was up in the second period, showing a lot of leadership and saying there's no way we're going to lose this game."

Said Chelios: "I didn't want everybody to get frustrated. We needed some voices in here just to get our heads up. All I said is if we win, we win it together, and if we lose, we lose it together."

Chelios wasn't about to let them lose it together. He helped kill off a penalty and then, with the teams at even strength, he took Brian Skrudland's pass, strode over the blue line, wound up and fired the puck past Vernon.

"It was a big goal, no doubt about it," Vernon said.

Actor-Turned Director Kevin Costner Finds New Role Behind The Scenes

By Bob Thomas
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — Kevin Costner, clad in his customary costume of jeans, T-shirt, sweater and day-old beard, arrived late for an interview but presented a valid excuse: He had been picking up tips on film directing from movie giant Steven Spielberg.

"I need all the help I can get, and who could be a better teacher?" remarked Costner, who starts directing himself in a film next July.

Costner's modest office at Raleigh studios, where he once worked as a laborer, displays evidence of the new project. On the walls are dozens of note-pad pages detailing each scene of the film, as yet untitled. Next he plans to storyboard — an artist's concept of each camera angle.

"I need to have that backup," he explained. "I'll leave a window for new things to come in (during filming). I need to communicate to many people what I'm trying to do. Those ideas can be built upon."

Costner gave no specifics on what he had learned from Spielberg, but said both men had been "dancing around each other" in search of a mutual project. "The only time I worked for Steven was when I did an 'Amazing Stories' for him," the actor said, referring to the old TV show.

Three years ago, Costner was known mostly for playing the corpse in "The Big Chill." Then came "Silverado," "The Untouchables" and "No Way Out." For his new film, "Field of Dreams," he reportedly was paid $2.5 million. So why take on the added labor of directing his next film?

"I have to maintain interest in what I'm doing. This particular subject generates a certain amount of interest for me. When this project was born, it was not on the surface a very commercial movie. Yet I believe it's very commercial.

"The theme of it is people who want to talk to each other but can't, because of the language barrier (between white settlers and Indians). It's a period piece set in the 1860s. This is not a movie to set the record straight, or to reinvent what happened. It's just a theatrical piece, but it's more than that, too. There's a lot of action in it."

There's not much action in "Field of Dreams," a baseball fantasy which some critics have described as Capra-esque. Costner plays an Iowa farmer who heeds a mystery voice and builds a baseball diamond in his cornfield; soon the ghosts of the infamous Chicago Black Sox team show up to play.

Costner acknowledged that the script, based on the novel "Shoeless Joe" by W.P. Kinsella, was a tough sell. Writer-director Phil Alden Robinson worked on it for six years before getting it made.

"I didn't have to be convinced of it," Costner remarked. "The minute I read it, I thought that I would want to do this movie.

"Why? I don't know. I make movies, and you need to have subjects. The amount of movies I'll do in my life are numbered; it's a finite number. As a script passes over me, it has to reach me emotionally. I don't care what genre it is, comedy or action or something else. Those don't dictate what I'll do. But it just has to have a certain amount of poignancy.

"'Field of Dreams' did. It also had what I'm always looking for: other strong, strong characters. So I knew that we would be able to attract good actors." Among them: James Earl Jones, Burt Lancaster, Amy Madigan, Ray Liotta.

Costner was born in a Los Angeles suburb, son of a power lineman who was part-Cherokee (which helps explain his next project). His father's work required repeated moves, and Costner recalls of school, "I was always on the outside." He studied marketing at California State University, Fullerton, but also acted in a community theater.

After marrying his college sweetheart, Cindy Silva, a former Snow White at Disneyland, Kevin quit a marketing job to try Hollywood. He spent six years as a set worker at Raleigh Studios, studying at night in acting workshops. After his flashback scene was cut from "The Big Chill," Lawrence Kasdan cast him as the hell-raising gunslinger in "Silverado." He clicked immediately.

Because he believes he should support all his films, Costner did the New York media whirl for "Field of Dreams." He readily admits that he doesn't enjoy it. He is an extremely private man, yet he doesn't dwell on his loss of privacy.

"As many doors that close to you, there are others that open up," he reasoned. "I don't think anybody has been able to resolve the privacy issue. You still see people who have a certain amount of fame and don't know how to deal with it.

"There's no good answer for when something that is unique to an individual — their privacy — is taken away. ... When you experience the loss of that, it's something you'll never ever get back in your life."

Bassist Dean Estus Arrives Early So He Can Put In His Frisbee Time

By Hillel Italie
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — As the bassist and songwriting partner of George Michael, Deon Estus is used to playing to capacity crowds. But the Detroit native has also learned to appreciate an empty arena.

Estus, who now has a hit single of his own with "Heaven Help Me," likes to arrive early for the evening's concert so he can pursue his favorite hobby: Frisbee.

"On the road I carry about 40 Frisbees with kneepads and gloves," he said. "As they set up the equipment before the show, either in the stadium or outside the arena, there are no people around. When we played the Orange Bowl in Florida, we had a ball. Everybody joined in."

Between playing for one of the world's most successful recording artists and making his debut solo album, "Spell," Estus has needed to stay in shape. He is already at work on another record and will collaborate with Michael on the singer's next project, a double LP.

"We understand each other," said Estus, who referred to the singer as his best friend. "We get along, we go out and have dinner. It's very easy to sit down and come up with a song. We just sit down and write good music. He's very professional and so am I. He's not in competition with me."

Estus, whose parents both hold graduate degrees in music, had any number of instruments to chose from as a child, remembering the drums, bass, guitars and piano his father brought home. He quickly mastered them all but admitted to having no such luck playing the saxophone.

"I got rid of it, eventually," Estus said. "It just used to kill me. It just wasn't for me. It sounded like people when they screech chalk on the blackboard."

Estus settled on the bass and was playing professionally by age 12.

"I used to play house parties in the summer and got 20 bucks each time. That was a lot of dough."

Detroit in the 1960s was home to the Motown record label and Estus took full advantage of the local talent. He became friends with Marvin Gaye but turned down the opportunity to play on the late singer's last album, "Midnight Love," released in 1982.

"That was a time when I was busy recording. I didn't have any idea he'd be leaving us so fast," said Estus, referring to Gaye's murder in 1984. "I thought I'd see him again. Everybody had troubles but I didn't sense that anything like that would happen."

Estus referred to Motown bassist James Jamerson as "my teacher." Jamerson, who died in 1983, was instrumental to the Motown sound, creating memorable bass lines on such hits as "Reach Out I'll Be There" and "Ain't No Mountain High Enough."

"He's the man who brought syncopation to the bass," Estus said. "'My Cherie Amour.' Listen to the bass parts on that. He was a mind-blower. I just never heard bass put like that — the expression. When you listen to records today you hear his influence."

Estus' first band was "Brainstorm," which toured in support of the Whispers and the Brothers Johnson among other groups. He moved to Europe in the early '80s, and lived in Belgium and Ireland before eventually settling in London, his current home.

"I think I've been influenced by everywhere I've been," Estus said.

"Dublin, for instance. When I first worked there I'd listen to these local bands. The harmonies were really tricky. I was listening to this rhythm and thought this was the thing closest to black music I'd heard. I learned a great deal from it."

Estus was the silent partner of "Wham!," the British band that featured Michael and Andrew Ridgeley and had hits in the mid-'80s with "Careless Whisper" and "I'm Your Man."

After Wham! broke up, Estus stayed with Michael, working on the singer's best-selling "Faith" LP. He found time, however, to record "Spell" and served as Michael's opening act on the world tour.

"Heaven Help Me," which features Michael on backing vocals, is a catchy mid-tempo ballad, but Estus rated the title song of "Spell" as his favorite.

"I got a chance to produce it and I like the orchestration. It's a fun song, a strong song. Some songs on 'Spell' are more danceable than others, some are poppy, some are soulful."

He appeared unconcerned that having a hit record of his own could jeopardize the partnership with Michael.

"If I had a No. 1 album and he had a No. 3 album and he asked me to open for him, I would say, 'Yes.' If this album sold 2 or 3 million, I would still play with him. It's just dealing with egos."

FBI Director Asks Producers To Keep Agency's Image Going

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. — The White House, Pentagon and other governmental agencies have suffered television's bite, but the FBI has enjoyed broadcasting bliss, and the agency's director wants it to stay that way.

In a speech before several hundred television producers, FBI Director William Sessions urged them Wednesday to continue their largely favorable depiction of the bureau.

"FBI stories are very much a part of television history," Sessions said. "I would like to think that future FBI chronicles on television might reflect current issues ... and crime problems that the FBI faces in the closing years of the 20th century."

Sessions enthusiastically recounted the FBI's successful investigation of the Chicago gang El Rukns, sprinkling his account with colorful images of an omnipotent and clever FBI.

Encouraging the producers to make more FBI-oriented programs, Sessions said, "Our investigations of the last 10 years, I believe, are more intriguing and have more intriguing facets than ever before."

Sessions specifically thanked the makers of NBC's "Unsolved Mysteries" and the Fox Broadcasting Corp.'s "America's Most Wanted."

He said both programs, seeking tips on current law-enforcement investigations, "help to demonstrate the depth of the responsibility (of) the FBI ... I would say the portrayal (on these shows) gives a sense to the American public of the difficulties we face in trying to bring these people back."

One of the most successful TV series was "The F.B.I.," on ABC from 1965 to 1974. The show starred Efrem Zimbalist Jr. as the Inspector Lewis Erskine, and the show never failed to portray the FBI in anything but a glowing light.

Former FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover gave "The F.B.I." full cooperation and opened up the agency's headquarters for occasional filming of background scenes. Many episodes concluded with requests for information on the FBI's most-wanted list, including a 1968 appeal for Martin Luther King assassin James Earl Ray.

"The F.B.I." was updated by ABC in 1981, but "Today's F.B.I.," starring Mike Connors, lasted less than a year. The sequel also had the approval of the FBI, which gave the show's makers real FBI files.

ABC Dramatizes Real-Life Story Of Jessica McClure

By James Endrst
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

Cissy McClure was preparing chicken and dumplings for some guests the other night — just an average night — in Midland, Texas.

And looking back on the events of October 1987 when Chip and Cissy McClure's 18-month-old daughter Jessica lay trapped in an 8-inch-wide water well for 58 hours before being rescued, one is tempted to wish the McClures nothing but average nights.

Chip, 19, and Cissy, 20, said in a telephone interview from the family's Midland home the other day, "We're already pretty much back to normal." But that is sure to change Sunday night when ABC broadcasts "Everybody's Baby — The Rescue of Jessica McClure."

It was inevitable that such a movie would be made with or without the McClures' help. Baby Jessica, for better or for worse, belongs to the nation, thanks to the media attention the rescue efforts drew.

People want to touch her, to kiss her and to have their pictures taken with her, and often act surprised when they see her on the street in Midland with the McClures.

"Most people come at her from the point of view like she's a movie star ... kind of like seeing the president of the United States walking down the street or something," Chip says.

Jessica, apparently, likes that just fine.

"She knows she's the baby that fell in the well," adds Cissy. " 'Yeah, I'm Jessica, I fell in the well,' " Cissy says, imitating her daughter's toddling bravado and adding, "But, I mean, she doesn't even know what a well is."

Roxana Zal and Will Oldham portray the McClures and Laura Loesch plays Jessica in the TV movie, while Patty Duke gets top billing (for marquee value) as Carolyn Henry, the victims' assistance volunteer who helped the McClures through their ordeal. Beau Bridges and Pat Hingle also star, respectively, as Police Chief Richard Czech and Fire Chief James Roberts, the two men who organized the rescue operation in the economically depressed oil community.

If it had been up to the McClures, however, there never would have been a TV movie.

"Originally, we were against it," Chip says. "We didn't think there was enough content there for a movie, that they would have to dramatize it and add to it to make a movie and we didn't want that, of course."

Cissy worried most that "it wouldn't be accurate; that it would be all a lie; that it would be something they would throw together; that they would put stupid things in to make it sell; that it would be something you wouldn't be proud of; that people would watch it and say, 'Gosh, were these people really that way?' "

"If there had been a point where we could have said, 'No movie, period,' " concludes Chip, "I think we would have rather had that."

But it was not up to the McClures. That became obvious when, not long after the ordeal, one production company stirred up some unrest in Midland (much overstated in the press, according to the McClures and Carolyn Henry) trying to lock up rights to the story.

Eventually, the couple signed with Interscope Productions, which made the movie for ABC, because, says Cissy, the company waited to be invited by the McClures.

This story, like almost all fact-based movies, is a combination of real-life drama and TV-movie necessity.

"I'm sure there's going to be a lot of things that are different," says Chip, though the couple had script approval. "But the movie's not based on my point of view. It's based on an accumulation so there's no way that it can be accurate to any one person's point of view."

The McClures, unlike TV critics, had not been provided with a preview of the movie. Both said, however, they would watch it and decide later when and if Jessica should see it.

"It'll be tough," admits Chip, who runs his own commercial tractor service and says money that the couple earned from the film has improved their financial lot only slightly.

"First I was dreading it but now I don't know," he says. "I'd like to hope that it's as special as the rescue itself was."

Kenny Rogers To Introduce 'Western' Video On Special

By Jerry Buck
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — Actor-singer Kenny Rogers believes he's found a theme in the song about cowboys in space, "Planet Texas," that will become as fruitful as his song-turned-movie "The Gambler."

His $600,000 video of "Planet Texas," a high-tech Western, will have its debut on his NBC special Saturday. The special was taped at a concert with Dolly Parton and Willie Nelson at the Johnson Space Center in Houston. It's called "Kenny, Dolly and Willie: Something Inside So Strong."

The song, written by John Andrew Parks III, is also the lead tune on Rogers' new album, "Something Inside So Strong." The video, which is loaded with special effects, was directed by Julien Temple, who directed the current movie "Earth Girls Are Easy."

"The Gambler," an earlier Rogers hit song, was expanded into three highly successful television movies.

"It's the most unique piece of music I've heard in 20 years," Rogers said of "Planet Texas." "It may be a new genre. It has to do with space and time travel, but it's also a Western. These alien cowboys pick me up and take me to a planet called Texas.

"We may do this as a movie for NBC, but we're also toying with the idea of trying to attract a Steven Spielberg or George Lucas and making it a feature film. It's such an unusual concept and offers the same limitless possibilities that 'The Gambler' did.

"It's easy to find projects," said Rogers. "It's hard to find projects that allow you do things that are unique and have no comparisons. If I do any kind of acting my acting is questioned. I'm not an actor. If I do something unique people get caught up in it and are less apt to scrutinize my work.

"This is uncharted territory. There's nothing to compare it to. My own philosophy has been that if you give us a little success we'll make it a big deal. We did that with 'Lucille' and we did it with 'The Gambler.' This can be a whole new career move."

He said "Planet Texas" was brought to his attention after Parks was turned down for a record contract by Capitol Records.

"I was offered this terrific song and recorded it," he said. "Then Capitol signed Parks to a contract. The only bad news is that he has his own album coming out and I won't get his new songs. This kid can sing. But it worked out good for him. He never could have gotten a $600,000 video done."

Rogers had just flown to Los Angeles that morning from his 1,200-acre farm near Athens, Ga. He talked about the special before going to NBC for an appearance on "The Tonight Show." Afterward, he planned to give a concert at a private party in Palm Desert, then fly back to Georgia.

He and his wife, Marianne, and his son, Christopher, 7, moved to the farm two years ago. But, with his own private jet, he makes regular jaunts for concerts, commercials, movies, charity appearances and to look after his many investments. He's building his own 18-hole golf course on the farm.

"I may sell the whole thing," he said. "I'm basically a builder. The fun is creating it, not living in it. I've overbuilt every house I've had. It keeps me creatively busy."

Plans for Rogers' syndicated talk show have been pushed back to 1990. His manager, Ken Kragen, believes that by then, viewer and advertiser rebellion against so-called "trash" television will open up a market for late-afternoon shows.

Rogers has also signed a new two-year contract to do commercials for Dole, which also feature his wife and young son. Some of the commercials were filmed on the island of Lanai, in Hawaii, which is owned by Dole. Rogers is building a new home on the island.

An older son, Kenny Rogers Jr., is also a singer and a host on the "Channel One" program that is shown in schools.

Capitol Concert

WASHINGTON (AP) — Oscar-winning composer Marvin Hamlisch entertained a group of Democratic senators in the Capitol Hill office of his longtime friend, Sen. Howard Metzenbaum of Ohio.

Metzenbaum moved a piano into his office for a celebration for Hamlisch and his fiancee, Terre Blair, who will be married this month in New York City.

Hamlisch was perfoming when the Republican senators were pulled away by a White House summons to discuss minimum wage legislation.

Storms Sock Texas With 20 Tornadoes, Rain

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

DALLAS — More rain fell today in the saturated South after deadly storms unleashed more than 20 tornadoes across Texas, shattering one town and forcing hundreds to leave their homes in low-lying areas.

One tornado killed a woman, and three people were swept their deaths in swollen creeks. Fifty people suffered storm-related injuries.

Thunderstorms lingered over southeastern Texas, eastern Oklahoma and western Louisiana this morning. Rain was forecast for today from the Mississippi Valley across eastern portions of the Central Plains, Oklahoma, eastern Texas, western Mississippi, western Tennessee, western Kentucky, Illinois and Wisconsin.

Elsewhere, the low pressure system that brought persistent rains to the Northeast moved out to sea on Wednesday.

A predawn tornado Wednesday ravaged the small Texas town of Jarrell, killing a woman who had been asleep in her mobile home. The twister roared through the town of 1,000 people 40 miles from Austin, demolishing 33 houses, 12 mobile homes and 16 businesses, said David Barham of the state's emergency management office.

Thirty-nine homes were damaged, along with the school gym roof.

The tornado sheared utility poles, pulled down power lines, uprooted trees, overturned several cars and trucks, including six trucks on an interstate and spread debris along a seven-mile path, authorities said.

About two dozen people were injured and treated at hospitals.

"I heard a bolt of lightning and it wasn't more than five minutes before all hell broke loose," said W.G. Schurhammer, whose apartment house was damaged. "By the time I heard it, I dove for the corner and the windows broke."

A tornado Wednesday afternoon cut a quarter-mile-wide swath for as much as 30 miles through east Texas, destroying homes and injuring at least nine people. A twister near Houston injured eight people, authorities said.

Another twister touched down six miles northwest of Lufkin, destroying eight homes in Allentown, said Angelina County sheriff's officers. At least nine people were injured, they said.

On Wednesday, flooding forced hundreds of Dallas-Fort Worth area residents to leave their homes. Floodwaters caused a levee failure along the Trinity River in Dallas and rising tributaries were forcing more evacuations today.

"You could hear the roar of the creek right behind our trailers," said Don Reiter, who escaped high water Wednesday in Kennedale. "We didn't take anything because it came so fast. Our cars are gone, our boats are gone. What we have on our back is just what we have."

In south Dallas, a car driven by a 56-year-old woman stalled as she tried to cross a bridge. Firefighters barricading the bridge urged her not to attempt the crossing, said firefighter Dennis Ground.

Ground said the woman scrambled to the top of the car and was told to stay there. But "the water got so rough it just knocked the car off. Whether she had been hit or on top of it, it still would have occurred," Ground said.

The body of 73-year-old Grand Prairie man was found in his truck, which had been swept into a flooded creek branch. A man was killed when his car was swept into McAnear Creek south of Fort Worth.

Rescuers plucked people from yards, trees and car tops. The pilot of a radio station helicopter pulled two girls and their mother from the roof of their car just before it was swept away in a rain-swollen creek in Cleburne.

Bobby Valentine, manager of the Texas Rangers baseball team, sought help from a radio station helicopter to reach two of his horses that were trapped by rising waters behind his Fort Worth home.

He was able to lead the horses to safety, but his son's pony drowned.

"It was something, jumping off the helicopter into water waist-deep," Valentine said.

In some parts of the state, more than 6 inches of rain fell, boosting monthly precipitation totals already far above average. The Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport has received more than 7½ inches of rain this month, compared with its average of 4¼ inches for May. The record for May is 13.7 inches.

Tutu Seeks Bush Help On Racism

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Nobel laureate Desmond Tutu today urged President Bush to "take the moral leadership" toward ending South Africa's apartheid policies of racial separation and said he was enouraged Bush had a "warm openness" to that cause.

"We do not want to be overly optimistic," Tutu told reporters, adding he had been impressed that Bush appeared to genuinely abhor apartheid, that he wanted to be "a catalyst for change" and "a positive influence."

Tutu and two other anti-apartheid leaders, Revs. Allan Boesak and Beyers Naude, who met briefly with Bush at the White House, did not disclose the specifics of their conversation. Tutu indicated, however, they did not ask for specific initiatives other than that Bush urge Pretoria to negotiate with its opposition.

Asked about the discussion, Tutu said: "We said we wanted to help the United States ... to take the moral leadership of the world in helping to end apartheid and bringing the South African government to the negotiating table, which is our primary end."

Although the White House said a day earlier that Bush does not intend to back further sanctions against Pretoria to press for social change, in essence maintaining the policy of President Reagan, the leaders were upbeat after the meeting.

"I think there is a very warm openness and we think the door stands ajar. No door has been slammed in our face," Tutu said.

The leaders said Wednesday they want Bush to impose more economic sanctions on South Africa to help pressure the white-ruled government to let the country's blacks vote.

The meeting itself was seen as a small victory for the anti-apartheid activists.

Under President Reagan, whose veto of anti-Pretoria sanctions was overridden by Congress, "we had the idea that here was a position that was taken and there was no further possibility of even discussing the issue. Here we have a feeling that the president has not closed his mind to any possibility of how he could best be helpful in the South African situation," said Boesak.

"And the very fact that he values the opinion of those of us who represent black people in South Africa, that in itself is a sign that we did not get in the same measure from the previous administration."

The White House session was scheduled as U.S. officials were preparing for the visit of F.W. de Klerk, who is expected to succeed President P.W. Botha after Botha resigns in September. De Klerk would be the first top South African leader to officially visit here in 30 years.

Police officer leads James from courthouse after hearing

Boy, 12, Pleads Guilty To Murder

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BIDDEFORD, Maine — A 12-year-old boy fidgeted at the defense table and clutched a stack of baseball cards as he pleaded guilty to murder and arson in the death of his babysitter.

Blond, crew-cut Scott James frequently grinned at his attorney and District Court spectators after changing his plea Wednesday in the Dec. 31 death of Raymond R. Lauzon.

Lawyers for both sides said they hope the boy can receive treatment that will help him turn his life around.

"Scott needs a lot of help and it's time he got it," defense attorney Thomas Van Houten said. "Scott needs some very significant intervention in his life."

The boy, who was 11 when he set the fatal fire, will be released from custody by his 21st birthday at the latest because he was tried as a juvenile. Judge Alexander MacNichol tentatively set a May 30 court date for determining what will be done for Scott.

Van Houten said the boy likely will need to be sent to another state for treatment because Maine lacks the services he requires.

"The focus will be on treatment, with the understanding that security will be a factor," Van Houten said.

"Arson and murder certainly imply a kid who's pretty troubled and dangerous, but we hope he's salvageable," Assistant Attorney General Eric Wright said.

Shortly before the murder trial was to begin, the young defendant told the judge he started the fire.

But the boy disputed the prosecution's contention that he told his younger brother he wanted to see what it would be like to burn the house and kill the man.

Wright said Scott started the fire after the 53-year-old Lauzon caught him trying to steal some money from his wallet. Scott and his brother, Jason, were staying in Lauzon's apartment while their mother, Janet Sullivan, went to a pub with Lauzon's son, Ronald, on New Year's Eve.

The judge ordered the Biddeford boy returned to the Maine Youth Center in South Portland pending the May 30 hearing.

During the brief hearing, the judge asked the boy: "Did you start the fire?"

"Yes, I did," the boy answered.

"And you knew at the time you started the fire Mr. Lauzon was upstairs in the house?" the judge asked.

"Yes, I did."

"And you knew you could hurt him?" MacNichol asked.

"Yes, I did."

Scott pleaded guilty to felony murder and arson. The prosecutor agreed to drop two additional murder charges, each based on different theories of what happened.

Magazine Raps Ford Bronco II

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Car buyers should avoid purchasing the Ford Bronco II because two of its wheels leave the ground during accident-avoidance tests, according to Consumer Reports.

In its June issue, Consumer Reports said the sport-utility car handled poorly, though deeming it better handling than the Suzuki Samurai, which the magazine said last June rated "not acceptable."

The magazine's tests showed that the Samurai had a greater propensity to roll over than the Bronco II. But statistics compiled by the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration indicate that fatal rollover accidents are much higher with the Bronco II, it said.

Ford disputes that conclusion.

The magazine said that federal statistics on deaths in rollovers in 1987 indicated there were 19 fatal rollovers for every 100,000 Bronco IIs, compared with six per 100,000 in Samurais.

The magazine, while critical of the Bronco IIs handling, emphasized that the Ford vehicle's behavior "was still a far cry from the not acceptable performance of the Suzuki Samurai."

"Considering the Bronco II's rollover fatality record in combination with its poor emergency handling — and considering the wide availability of similar vehicles with better handling and better accident statistics — we think it's wise to avoid the Bronco II," the magazine said.

Conservatives Want Reagan On Rushmore

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Some conservatives, certain of Ronald Reagan's place in history, are talking up the idea of finding a place for him, too, alongside the granite faces of four great presidents at Mount Rushmore.

And they think they've gotten a wink from the man himself.

At least Reagan smiled when an artist's sketch was presented last summer showing him alongside the Rushmore visages, says R. Emmett Tyrrell Jr., a promoter of the movement to add Reagan.

"He seemed pleased," said Tyrrell, editor-in-chief of American Spectator magazine, a monthly conservative review.

Tyrrell sounds half serious — and half unserious — about the idea. But people are taking him entirely seriously, he said.

"It won't happen," he said.

The society raised the funds for the original project 60 years ago. The faces of Washington, Jefferson, Lincoln and Theodore Roosevelt, drilled and dynamited into a mountainside of the Black Hills in South Dakota, are the largest carved figures anywhere; Washington's is as high as a five-story building, bigger than any sphinx in Egypt.

"The simple fact is there is no more suitable rock to carve anyone at Mount Rushmore," Griffith said in an interview from Rapid City, S.D.

"Why fool with a masterpiece?" he asked. "Would you paint another figure next to the Mona Lisa?"

Tyrrell said he is creating a Committee for Monumental Progress to promote the idea. He said he has just written to Reagan "asking him to please consider allowing us to get a proper mold of his nose and at least one ear."

If Tyrrell is only semi-serious, the Young Americans for Freedom are three-quarters there.

To test sentiment, they put a ballot into a fund-raising letter sent to 23,000 "average American citizens" and will promote the idea if the response is enthusiastic, says Tom Lizardo, executive director of group.

"The heat of the response, not just numbers, is the key thing," said Lizardo. Ballots will be opened in June, he said.

Donald Devine, a former Reagan officeholder, said he has signed a Reagan-to-Rushmore petition, although he thinks it may be early for so bold a move. "Ten or 20 years from now might be better," he said.

"The whole country burns with interest," said Tyrrell. "We've had threats — 'Touch that mountain and we'll bomb you,'" he said. "And other people with tears in their eyes — 'Oh, Mr. Tyrrell, thank God someone's thought of it.'"

Griffith said additional faces have been proposed over the years — Franklin Roosevelt and Susan Anthony have had a number of champions.

Bush Vows Again To Veto Wage Bill

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — President Bush promises to veto "faster than the eye can see" a raise in the minimum wage and Republican lawmakers are confident Bush will win his first domestic-policy clash with Capitol Hill's majority Democrats.

"There are enough votes in the Senate to support a presidential veto," Senate Republican leader Bob Dole said Wednesday before the Senate gave 63-37 approval to legislation increasing the minimum wage for the first time in eight years.

Dole's prediction was borne out by the fact that the final vote was four votes short of the margin that would be required to enact the bill over a Bush veto.

Democrats pushing the measure vowed nonetheless to press their case with the president and, while refusing in advance to concede defeat, said they would advance another bill if Bush's first veto is sustained.

Moments later, Bush, who before the vote had said a veto was "going to be inevitable," made clear he meant it.

When the bill reaches the White House, Bush will veto it "instantly faster than the eye can see," presidential spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said.

The Democratic leadership does not want to send the bill to the White House immediately.

Addicts Demand Drug Treatment

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BOSTON — Hundreds of recovering drug addicts and their supporters marched to the Statehouse demanding drug treatment on demand and chanting "We want what Kitty got."

The advocates charged Wednesday that, contrary to assertions by Gov. Michael S. Dukakis during his presidential campaign, drug programs in Massachusetts reach only a fraction of those in need.

"Governor Dukakis, we are here to call you on your promise. We want treatment now," Gregory Davis, a recovering addict who heads Metro Boston Alive, told the rally on the Statehouse steps. He said addicts are not interested in clean needles or methadone but do want treatment.

Davis reminded his listeners that during the presidential campaign, Dukakis said no addict in Massachusetts seeking help would be denied. State officials concede that only about 4,500 addicts are in treatment on a given day, out of an estimated 40,000 addicts statewide.

But Dukakis administration officials note that public and private programs combined handle some 20,000 admissions a year. They say they are seeking funds to achieve the goal of treatment on demand.

Public Health Commissioner Deborah Prothrow-Stith drew cheers when she told the crowd that the number of addicts in treatment has risen in two years from 7,000 to 15,000.

"Everybody deserves treatment when they need it," she said. "We've come a pretty long way."

The advocates, however, booed and jeered her superior, Human Services Secretary Philip Johnston. Johnston, who was representing Dukakis, who was nearly drowned out by chants, "Put your money where your mouth is."

After accepting some 2,500 petitions favoring treatment on demand, Johnston tried to assure the crowd that Dukakis considers drug treatment a top priority.

Throughout the rally, advocates chanted "We want what Kitty got" — referring to the governor's wife, Kitty Dukakis, who has acknowledged a lifelong chemical dependency.

She was treated for addiction to amphetamines five years ago and spent the month of February in a private, residential treatment program in Rhode Island to address an alcohol problem that flared up after her husband lost the presidential election.

Jury Clears Jim Beam

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SEATTLE — Jim Beam Brands Co. was cleared of negligence in a lawsuit by a woman who said her son suffered birth defects because she drank its whiskey during pregnancy.

Harold and Candance Thorp of Seattle were seeking about $4 million in damages for lifetime assistance for their 4-year-old son Michael, who is retarded and deformed.

Mrs. Thorp, 39, testified she was an alcoholic who drank up to a fifth of Jim Beam a day during her pregnancy. But she and her husband insisted she would have stopped drinking had the bottles carried a warning label for pregnant women.

"We're obviously disappointed with the verdict, but the jury system operates," said their lawyer, Barry Epstein.

Epstein said the U.S. District Court jury's verdict was not a total loss. He said he didn't think Wednesday's decision would set a precedent for similar cases.

"We feel that this litigation has created an awareness in the public that, if it saves one child, it will all be worth it," he said. "We hope as a result of this case ... that (news of) the dangers of alcohol will be spread far and wide."

He said no decision had been made on an appeal.

Shannon Stafford, Jim Beam's chief lawyer, said he was "obviously pleased" but declined further comment.

During the trial, Epstein had argued that Beam had an obligation to warn the public about the health risks of alcohol consumption by pregnant women.

But witnesses for Beam said Mrs. Thorp had been warned repeatedly by relatives and friends about the dangers of drinking alcohol while pregnant and that she and other alcoholics would not have heeded a warning label.

Beam also contended that the boy's problems were caused by heredity and neglect, not by his mother's alcohol abuse.

The decision "seemed so obvious," said Staci Gilbreth, a 22-year-old juror who had a baby in December. "I was surprised they were suing Jim Beam."

Marijuana Crops Increase In U.S.

LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — U.S. marijuana growers, thwarting government efforts to destroy their crop, expanded their production by 38 percent last year and are now virtually tied with Mexican growers as the world's second largest producers of the drug behind Colombia, according to government estimates released Wednesday.

At the same time, marijuana prices have reached their highest levels ever — as much as $300 an ounce in some instances — in part because of increased cultivation of sinsemilla, a seedless strain of the crop that is far more potent than traditional "commercial grade" marijuana, according to figures contained in a report by the National Narcotics Intelligence Consumers Committee (NNIC.)

The 101-page NNIC report also states that cocaine prices continued to fall last year and street purity increased amid signs that worldwide production of the drug has reached record levels. Cocaine sold for as low as $11,000 a kilogram in 1988 compared to $30,000 in 1985.

But the panel for the third year in a row decided not to include any estimate of the total cocaine market in the U.S. because there is no agreement on how large it is. "It would be another piece of speculation," said Thomas G. Byrne, the NNIC chairman who also serves as deputy assistant administrator of the Drug Enforcement Administration's Office of Intelligence.

NNIC, a committee consisting of members from 11 federal agencies, provides the only official government estimate of illict drug supplies in the country. The report paints a broad portrait of an overall drug problem that is worsening, including a dramatic jump in cocaine-related hospital emergencies reported by the National Institute of Drug Abuse's DAWN system.

The number of such emergencies was projected to climb to 42,491 in 1988-up from 32,578 the year before and about four times the figure only three years earlier. But there is also contradictory data. The number of cocaine overdose deaths reported by DAWN dropped to 1,290 from 1,805 the year before.

"What we are trying to get across here is a general trend pattern," said Byrne. "Each one of these things in and of itself doesn't mean a whole hell of a lot."

In recent years, some critics have charged that the NNIC's figures have been influenced as much by political considerations as hard data. This has been particularly true of the domestic marijuana estimates, which critics say have been understated in order to avoid embarrassing the State Department when it pressures Latin American governments to destroy their drug crops.

However, the new report continues a trend in recent years of gradually increasing the estimate of both the size of the U.S. crop and its proportion of the total amount of marijuana consumed in the country.

New Process Forms Ultrathin Microchips

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — A new process for forming ultrathin components of microchips eventually will allow significantly more information to be stored on them, University of Texas researchers say.

They announced Wednesday that their process lowers by hundreds of degrees the temperature at which thin layers of crystalline silicon material — the building blocks of microchips — can be grown.

Although the process won't be fully felt in the microelectronics industry for a decade, university officials called it a major breakthrough.

A.F. Tasch, a developer of the process and a professor of computer and electrical engineering, said using lower temperatures for crystalline silicon growth would allow much smaller transistors to be built and many more transistors to be put on a single microchip.

The result: a chip that could hold substantially more data while remaining the same size.

He called it a major step in paving the way for the microelectronics industry to go "from millions to billions of devices on a single chip."

"If you want to make integrated circuits that have greater computing power or store more information, you have to make transistors smaller and smaller," Tasch said.

"The industry ... is reaching a point where these transistor structures we are using today cannot be shrunk any smaller.

"In order to come up with new transistor concepts which work at even smaller dimensions, whatever you build has to be done with lower temperatures."

Tasch and his University of Texas colleague, S.K. Banerjee, worked with a team at the Research Triangle Institute in North Carolina to develop the process.

Traditionally, making microchips involves a series of steps at temperatures often exceeding 1,400 degrees Fahrenheit. The new process ailows single-crystal growth at temperatures as low as 300 degrees Fahrenheit.

Tasch said the old heat level has limited the number of materials and the size of the transistors that can be combined on a single chip.

"If you have high temperature treatment like that used in traditional fabrication, you cannot maintain these small dimensions," Tasch said. "All the details get washed out. The high-temperature process causes the materials to mix."

Shrinking the size and improving the capacity of computer chips topped a list of 22 technologies designated by the U.S. government in March as critical to national security.

Florida Joins Effort To Block Abortion

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — The state has joined in efforts to get the U.S. Supreme Court to prevent a pregnant 15-year-old and other Florida teen-agers from having abortions without the consent of parents or a judge.

A state law requiring such consent was ruled unconstitutional by a state appeals court last week. But U.S. Supreme Court Justice Anthony M. Kennedy on Tuesday blocked the girl from getting an abortion, ruling on a request by a lawyer appointed to represent the girl's 12-week-old fetus.

At a closed session today, the full Supreme Court was expected to review Kennedy's order and determine whether the consent requirement should remain in effect until the Florida Supreme Court hears the case in September.

The Florida attorney general's office filed papers Wednesday with the high court asking that the state be considered a party to the case because it involves the validity of its abortion consent law.

"The state is not interested in whether this minor can prove her case," said Assistant Attorney General Jerry Curington. "We're simply trying to uphold the statute itself."

The abortion consent law, which went into effect in February, requires unmarried girls under age 18 to obtain permission from their parents or a judge to have an abortion.

The 15-year-old girl asked a Lake County court for permission to get an abortion without her parents' consent, saying she could not approach her parents without fear of emotional or physical abuse.

Circuit Judge Jerry Lockett, who appointed a lawyer to represent the girl's fetus, denied the permission but ruled the consent law was unworkable and unconstitutionally vague. A state appeals court also ruled it unconstitutional.

Kennedy's order blocking the abortion came hours after the state Supreme Court said it would allow the girl to get an abortion and that it would rule this fall on the law's constitutionality.

The request went to Kennedy because he is assigned to the 11th U.S. Judicial Circuit, which includes Florida.

The girl's attorney, Jerri Blair, wants the stay lifted. She said some clinics won't perform abortions after the 13th week of pregnancy because of a greater risk of medical complications.

U.S. Toughens Fuel Economy Standards

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHICAGO — The federal government has toughened fuel economy standards for 1990 cars, a move praised by a consumer advocate as a "clear break" from the Reagan administration.

An analyst, however, said the plan will have a minimal effect on U.S. gasoline consumption, and General Motors Corp. said it could result in job cuts.

Manufacturers must improve overall fuel economy by 1 mile per gallon over 1989 models, to 27.5 mpg, Transportation Secretary Samuel Skinner announced Wednesday.

"I'm hopeful this will be an incentive to (carmakers) to explore better ways to develop better engines and get better mileage," Skinner told reporters.

"We've got to get beyond where we are today, in miles per gallon, if we're going to deal with this energy crisis."

Skinner said the United States is importing more than 8 million barrels of oil a day for the first time since the 1970s.

Congress in 1975 gave the Transportation Department authority to set the fuel economy standards for passenger cars sold in the United States. The standard, known as the corporate average fuel economy, is measured over an automaker's entire fleet.

"The energy problem is such that every bit helps," said Con Hitchcock, a lawyer for Public Citizen, a Washington, D.C.-based consumer group founded by Ralph Nader. "The automobile is the single largest user of petroleum and any saving will be helpful."

Hitchcock, noting that the U.S. government had lowered the standard to 26 mpg for 1986-88 models, lauded the higher standard.

"It is a clear break with the Reagan administration policy," he said. "This is a sign that the Bush administration is more concerned about energy and the environment than its predecessor was."

But David Cole, director of the University of Michigan's Office of Study of Auto Transportation, said the new standard will not make much of a difference in overall U.S. fuel consumption, or have a big effect on car prices.

"From a consumer's standpoint, it's probably not going to make that much difference," Cole said in a telephone interview. "In terms of the industry meeting the 27.5, it's real do-able because they're real close already."

William Noack, a GM spokesman in Washington, said the new standard could endanger U.S. jobs by restricting the number of family-size American-made cars.

What's A Father To Do?

Single Men Find Offspring Stir Their Need To Nurture

By Beth Ann Krier
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

LOS ANGELES — He was a Jewish-Unitarian minister hitchhiking in Los Angeles. And he had no idea the woman who picked him up had long sought to be what she considered a "politically correct" single mom.

Before meeting him, she had even placed an ad for a man to father her child in the liberal Mother Jones magazine, figuring "men of the political left were more open to alternate forms of parenting."

But years later, after failing to woo a set of desirable genes with her classified come-on, Carolyn Reuben, health editor for L.A. Weekly magazine, had given up classified ads for serendipity.

She remembers reading the hitchhiker's apparel accurately: "Professional man temporarily stranded without a car." She pulled over. He hopped in. As she recounts what followed, the two 38-year-olds fell instantly, magically in lust — possibly even love.

"We just both knew this was it. ... We started trying to have a child right away. We were sure we were going to be a family," says Jonathan Reich, the hitchhiking clergyman who worked at the Unitarian Society Los Angeles West when the couple met in late 1985.

By May of '86, they had created a pregnancy. And by August, they had split up.

"It turned out that we didn't get along, that we could never make our relationship work. But she really wanted to have the baby," says Reich, now 42.

Dr. Kyle Pruett, a clinical professor of psychiatry at Yale University and author of the recently published The Nurturing Father, reports that since his book has come out, "I've heard of, well, I guess the adjective is a startling number of stories of men who have considered themselves rather casual biological donors, witting or unwitting.

"I guess the one thing that I would want to emphasize is that no matter how casually a man may think about this at the begining of the relationship or non-relationship, it comes as quite a surprise to many men to learn that a donation of spermatozoa often carries with it more than protein," Pruett says. "And that the emotional interest in the fetus, its health, its growth and development and its eventual birth and delivery have captivated more than a few of them, even when they're not emotionally involved with the women.

"The idea that their genetic contribution takes shape in another body haunts many of them emotionally, many more than you would think."

In the case of the minister and the health editor, the relationship quickly turned disagreeable. However, both agreed they "weren't committed to each other, but we were both committed to the child," Reich says. Thus he attended natural childbirth classes with Reuben, took pictures during the birth and cut their daughter's umbilical cord.

Though both parents acknowledge there were hot fights over visitation scheduling — and threats of solving the problem in court — the two eventually worked through their differences on their own.

Keith Vacha is a gay man who lives in San Francisco. Clearly, he was not in love with the lesbian woman for whom he agreed to father a child, but he had been wanting to have a child for about 10 years.

"I have a nurturing side of me that needs to be fulfilled," he explains. "I didn't believe the fact that I'm gay should be an obstacle in stopping me from loving a child. And having known so many people from 'broken' homes where there's been ugly divorce and they seemed to survive, I thought it was possible to have a two-household family where there was a lot of love for the child."

After discussing this possibility with several heterosexual women, Vacha says that he was distressed to learn that their first questions seemed to center on money: "How are we going to do this financially?" Vacha claims that he was not opposed to contributing child support but after he gave his name to the leader of an group called Lesbians Considering Motherhood, he found the potential mothers there "more financially independent" and concerned about the emotional welfare of a child.

With one of them, he wound up discussing the possibility of a co-parenting arrangement, a discussion that continued off and on for 2½ years before it reached fruition.

"We had similar temperaments. I felt we were able to resolve conflicts. She was actively looking for a father to be actively involved. That was the only way I'd do it," says Vacha, 37, a social service administrator, writer and author of Quiet Fire: Memoirs of Older Gay Men.

A simple, at-home artificial insemination was arranged, with the woman using an eyedropper of Vacha's sperm. "A lot of people are under the impression they have to go to a doctor's office when it's the oldest, easiest thing to do," he points out.

Because Vacha and the mother of their child have been open about their birthing and parenting arrangement, theirs is not the sort of clandestine arrangement chastised in Baran's book — which argues against keeping donor insemination pregnancies a secret from the offspring and others.

But that is not to imply Vacha's co-parenting experience has been entirely problem-free.

"I think our problems are the same as any parents ... trying to bring up a healthy child in a difficult world. You want the child to feel free and good about herself, for instance, and know she has unlimited potential. But at the same time you have to turn around and say, 'No, you can't throw things against the wall.' I think everyone goes through that."

But what about the men for whom Father's Day greetings are either nonexistent or excruciating reminders of battles lost, feelings ignored, rights denied?

"For many of the guys I get (coming to United Fathers of America), becoming a father is not voluntary. They're not told that in the beginning," says Rod Bivings, president and founder of United Fathers of America, which is based in Los Angeles. "I have yet to get a case in which a woman has asked a man to father her child. Usually it stems from the normal series of (sexual) events."

Bivings' organization represents fathers with all sorts of paternity, visitation and custody disputes, and he estimates that between 25 percent and 30 percent of the group's 1,000 paid members are single men who have fathered children the old-fashioned way — through physical intimacy — and who have then been denied what the organization considers to be their father's rights.

He acknowledges that "the responsibility for birth control should belong to both men and women," and points out that as a result of deceptions, today's men are "becoming more careful about it."

"(The issue has) become a very hot topic," Bivings continues. "I hear about some of those it turns out well for, but men don't come to see me unless they're in a world of hurt and need a way to solve their problems. This is sort of like their last resort."

One Los Angeles man in such a world of hurt says he unwittingly fathered a child after a brief sexual relationship with a woman. The man, who agreed to speak only on condition of anonymity, claims the woman broke off their sexual relationship after she became pregnant and eventually told him to get lost.

He says that his attorney has advised him that it might not even be worth it for him to gain legal visitation rights — because the mother had demonstrated her willingness to lie about his conduct during court hearings, and because she apparently is intent on fighting an expensive, emotionally draining legal battle.

Even if he won visitation rights, the man says that his attorney warned him that the mother could continue to lie to the court about his behavior with the child, and he could easily face additional trauma and aggravation during the child's first 18 years. Or the mother could move out of state, in which case he would still have to pay child support — which is automatically adjudicated with visitation rights — yet have a difficult time seeing his child.

Currently, the man, who says he was duped into fathering the child, is upset that he has no visitation rights and is unhappy with his attorney's advice.

"I could be in this for years, paying money to an attorney while paper is floated back and forth and I still wouldn't be able to see the child. It's cruel. It's beyond sad," he says. "I have to treat this as though my child is dead. I am in a serious period of grief and nobody cares. I love my child. I was trying to do something decent, being a father."

The man says his attorney has advised him to walk away, find a wife, start a new life and have another child — all for his own good.

His response?

New Questions Raised About Sperm Banks

By Beth Ann Krier
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

Though men may be increasingly recruited by single women for sexual encounters that will lead to conception, experts point out that far greater numbers are becoming fathers in a simpler, more anonymous way.

They donate to a sperm bank — in some cases, hundreds of times.

Though theirs is a field not monitored by the Guinness Book of World Records, such fathers might well find their champ in Paul, a slender, blue-eyed, blond now living in Northern California.

Not only is his family medical history free of killer diseases, he is a clean-cut college grad with military service, all noteworthy commodities in the sperm business.

And as a bonus, the guy did time in the Boy Scouts.

Paul — who asked that his last name not be used for fear that countless sperm bank babies searching for their natural fathers might seek him out — claims he made about 300 donations of spermatozoa between 1976 and 1984. Based on statistics that he said he was given, that approximately 1-in-8 donations results in a child, he figures he probably has between 35 and 40 offspring.

Paul was retired from service at age 35, over the reproductive hill in the view of the sperm bank with which he last dealt. And though he made about $9,000 from his donations (he recalls being paid $25 per donation in the early days, $35 more recently), he insists he didn't do it just for the bucks.

"I also donate blood," he offers. "I probably would have done the same thing (donate sperm) for free. I considered it a service. ... I still think the net result of what I did was a benefit, but I think the (sperm banking) system could be improved."

Initially, Paul says, he worked with a private physician he had gone to see about an unrelated health matter. The doctor informed him there was a shortage of healthy, educated, blond, blue-eyed sperm donors.

After donating sperm through the doctor for a few years, Paul then worked directly with a sperm bank. In the beginning, he remembers being reassured when he was told his identity would never be revealed.

"I'm not a lawyer and I had no idea what my responsibilities might be," he explains.

But now Paul believes there should be a registry of sperm donors so that children may learn their true genetic, medical, cultural and personal heritages: "Children should be told (that their fathers were sperm donors) and they should have the option of consulting with the registry."

What would he do if somehow his children discovered his identity and wanted to meet with him?

"I think I would agree to meet with a child, but probably not more than once a year. As a child gets older I think they'd think up new questions," he replies.

"... I'd be concerned about the role they'd expect me to play. I would be willing to provide them with information. ... I would not want much involvement. It's sort of like dealing with new relatives. If I liked the kid, though, maybe I'd be interested in spending more time."

Occasionally, Paul acknowledges he's "somewhat intellectually curious to see how my children turned out, but it's not a big craving." He admits he does feel a little strange, though, when he passes a school yard and sees a few blue-eyed towheads and wonders if they might be his kids.

And now that he's heard arguments that donors should be permitted only three offspring before their sperm is retired from service (to avoid such possibilities as unwitting incest in a small or even large town), Paul has begun to think that 35 or 40 sperm bank children with the same father might be too many.

"(Los Angeles psychologist) Reuben Pannor's view is that you shouldn't do it (donate sperm) for more than three children or about 24 donations," Paul says. "But I could see five or 10 children — probably half of them wouldn't be interested in having more than one or two meetings with their father."

Paul met Pannor at a recent San Francisco Bay Area seminar on artificial insemination at which Pannor, co-author with Annette Baran of the recently published Lethal Secrets, the Shocking Consequences and Unsolved Problems of Artificial Insemination, was a speaker.

After interviewing 37 sperm donors (as well as 19 donor offspring and 70 husbands and wives in donor-insemination families), Pannor and Baran say they found "a morass of legal, emotional and societal complexities."

"The important thing is that the donor be known (to the offspring)," Baran emphasizes, adding that at present no such legislation exists in the United States. "No one considers the lifelong effect donor insemination will have on the feelings of the donor offspring. We're hearing about sperm banks rethinking their positions (supporting anonymity) on this. In Australia, Sweden, New Zealand and England, for instance, all donors must now be registered and must be able to be known when necessary."

Brain Waves Are Targeted By Cassette Recordings

By Bill Baskervill
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NELLYSFORD, Va. — "Let this relaxation sink inward, let it sink inward, let it flow into your brain," intones the soothing, mellifluous voice as a low-frequency tone resonates in the background.

"Feel it sinking inward easily and calmly until your entire brain feels more and more relxed, more and more relaxed."

Robert A. Monroe, founder and executive director of The Monroe Institute, is guiding his listener on a 30-minute journey to dreamland via an audiocassette tape called the "Catnapper."

The tape, one of a series of Monroe's "Hemi-Sync" recordings, "recharges and aids recovery from lost sleep or jet lag; relieves anxiety before exams, meetings and speaking...," according to a brochure.

The institute, tucked away in the Ragged Mountains between Charlottesville and Lynchburg, also sells tapes it says can improve concentration and memory, reduce stress, help break the smoking habit, improve one's tennis or golf game or aid in recovery from major illness or surgery.

There are a number of companies that market audio-guidance systems, said Leslie J. France, director of the institute's professional division, but those "don't use the specific, carefully modulated frequences that we do."

Behind Monroe's voice, each tape has a different audio tone the institute says manipulates brain waves to produce a desired behavior. The tapes "create an auditory environment in which people can relax very profoundly and have extremely focused attention," said Ms. France.

Professionals ranging from a best-selling mystery writer to an orthopedic surgeon swear by the tapes, but a leading biofeedback and brain-wave authority says a person can achieve the same results without using Hemi-Sync.

"The danger is that it shortchanges people," said Dr. Elmer E. Green of the Menninger Foundation in Topeka, Kan. "I have been telling everybody to burn the tapes and start depending on yourselves."

The Menninger Foundation, a psychiatric center that studies human behavior, trains people "to help themselves instead of programming them," Green said. "We want people to know power is centered in themselves, not in a procedure."

Monroe, 73, said his interest in using sound to influence behavior evolved from a long broadcasting career that included a top post at Mutual Broadcasting System and ownership of radio stations and a cable TV operation.

Monroe found that certain audio patterns can lead the brain into various states; he got a patent on the discovery in 1975. That finding led to a system of "binaural beats" in which separate signals are fed into each ear through stereo earphones to produce a synchronization of the left and right hemispheres of the brain, a focused and coherent state that Monroe called "Hemi-Sync."

Brain synchronization happens naturally, but only for random, brief periods, Monroe said.

"Rhythmic tones similar to what he has on the tapes have been shown to produce a synchronizing effect on brain waves," said Dr. Lester Fehmi, head of a behavioral clinic in Princeton, N.J. "You can produce a specific effect."

Still, a Hemi-Sync user has to be receptive to get the maximum benefit, said F. Holmes Atwater, director of the institute's brain-mapping project. "A Monroe tape will not work unless you want to cooperate with it. There's a lot of psychology involved, but also physiological changes."

Best-selling mystery novelist Phyllis A. Whitney uses the concentration tape to jump-start her imagination. "When I have a question that stumps me, I sit in a chair and turn on the tape. In a startlingly few seconds the scene comes. I use it again and again. It works. I get better ideas more quickly."

Dr. James M. Thomas Jr., a clinical psychologist in Ponca City, Okla., has used Hemi-Sync tapes for two years as part of his work with delinquent adolescents. "It has reduced violent behavior by one-half."

"I was very skeptical about this entire thing," said Thomas. "I have found it to be a very helpful clinical tool... I am convinced there is really something to it and not just a placebo effect.

"It's real, it's not mystical, but I sure don't know what's happening."

Dr. Robert Roalfe, an anesthesiologist at Merritt Hospital in Oakland, Calif., has been using Monroe's "emergency series" tapes for three years to help reduce preoperative anxiety and postoperative pain.

"I have seen a number of cases where patients are extremely anxious before surgery and within five minutes they are asleep or resting very comfortably. "It probably reduces the amount of anesthesia and definitely reduces the amount of postoperative medication required," said Roalfe, who emphasized that he does not use the tapes in lieu of anesthesia.

"I think we're on the verge of seeing a tremendous number of cases in medicine where techniques that at the moment seem borderline in acceptability will become very acceptable," he said.

Dr. Peter W. Kozicky, an orthopedic surgeon at St. Luke's Hospital in Bethlehem, Pa., uses the emergency series tapes in the operating room during surgery and in the recovery room afterward. The patients wear the earphones in surgery to permit "positive suggestions throughout surgery" because Kozicky believes patients "are aware of what's going on under anesthesia."

Through electroencephalograms and brain-mapping, Kozicky said he has drawn a "clinical correlation to what Hemi-Sync claims are. It relaxes people."

Dr. Michael M. Dullnig, a Sacramento, Calif., psychiatrist, uses the tapes as part of a program of holistic therapy to fight depression among men infected with the AIDS virus and has found they "felt better, could sleep better."

The advantage of Hemi-Sync "is there is no side effect to it. Medications very often have side effects that can be life-threatening," Dullnig said.

'Proud Mother' Has Ignored The Gift Of Reason

Dear Abby
Abigail Van Buren

Dear Abby: I just came across something I cut out of your column in the Citizen-Advertiser in Auburn, N.Y., in 1975.

I believe the message of 14 years ago needs to be heard again. I hope you agree. — Ruth Comstock, La Jolla, Calif.

Dear Ruth: It does. Thank you for sending it, and here it is:

Dear Abby: You were much too easy on "Proud Mother," who was proud of the fact that "God" had given her 13 children. (Why blame God alone? Surely she had a husband.)

"Proud Mother" resented being criticized for the size of her family, saying she didn't ask anyone else to raise or feed them. If she is so proud of 13, perhaps she would be twice as proud with 26. Even if she quit with 13, consider the possibilities (and you will need a calculator) if each of her children multiplies at the same rate. In two generations she will have been responsible for 182 people! This number becomes significant when one considers the amount of food and gasoline they will consume in their lifetimes.

While the good lady has been busy making use of God's gift of procreation, she's ignored God's additional gifts of reason based on accumulated knowledge.

Overpopulation and the exhausting of unrenewable natural resources are everybody's business. — Concerned In California

Dear Concerned: You are not the only one who expressed concern over "Proud Mother's" attitude.

Briefly, since the world's resources are limited, we can't continue to provide for a population that daily produces 185,000 new mouths to feed. Obviously, we must either decrease our birth rate or increase our death rate. The choice is up to us.

Dear Abby: I am an undergraduate student, preparing myself for a career as a divorce lawyer. In a recent column, to stress the importance of a prenuptial agreement, you stated that half the marriages end in divorce. Not true.

The September '88 issue of Psychology Today discussed the miscalculation of the divorce rate during the past decade. You see, analysts have for a long time divided the divorce rate by the marriage rate. They tell us that in '81 some 2.4 million couples married, and 1.2 million couples divorced. Their statistics concluded that 50 percent of all marriages during '81 ended in divorce.

However, this conclusion is a fallacy because they failed to consider the fact that 50 million other marriages existed in that same year. Therefore, during '81 only about 1 in 50 marriages ended in divorce.

The current trend indicates that couples are choosing to remain married, and the divorce rate continues to decline. This is wonderful news for married couples, but perhaps a little disheartening for aspiring divorce lawyers. — Tedd A. Branstetter, Seattle

Dear Abby: I just read the letter from "Dorthea Redwine," whose husband is a banker in Fayetteville, Ga. He told her that folded and creased checks play havoc with the high-speed equipment used in processing checks.

This has been discussed in our office frequently. We aren't supposed to fold checks, but what should we do when businesses send bills accompanied by addressed return envelopes that are too short for a regular company check?

Thanks for letting me have my say. And tell Mrs. Redwine I love her last name! — Lisa Richwine, Pasco, Wash.

If you would like to write to Abby, send your letter to Abigail Van Buren, P.O. Box 69440, Los Angeles, CA. 90069. For a personal, non-published reply, enclose a self-addressed stamped envelope.

Parents of the bridal couple are Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Summeral Mobley Sr. of Robersonville, and Mr. and Mrs. Paul Graham Jordan Sr. of Erwin.

The bride was given in marriage by her father. Phyllis Sorrell Mobley of Clayton, sister-in-law of the bride, was matron of honor. Bridesmaids included Deborah Jordan Phillips of Wilson, sister of the bridegroom; Lynn Mobley Kennedy of Clemmons, cousin of the bride; Anna Fernandez-Edwards of Durham, and Susan Elizabeth Spain of Raleigh. The father of the bridegroom was best man, and the ring bearer was Jordan Phillips of Wilson, nephew of the bridegroom. Ushers included Ralph Summeral Mobley Jr. of Clayton, brother of the bride; Thomas Wayne Jordan, brother of the bridegroom, and Hal Warren Plonk, both of Raleigh, and Charles Dennis Phillips of Wilson, brother-in-law of the bridegroom.

The bride wore an Oscar de LaRenta gown of candleglow silk taffeta fashioned with a portrait collar, short sleeves and full skirt which flowed into a chapel train. Clusters of silk roses accented the collar, sleeves and bustle bow. Her silk Juliet cap was adorned with matching silk roses, lilies of the valley, sprays of seed pearls and three-tiered chapel-length veil of silk illusion. She carried a cascade bouquet of rubrum lilies, calla lilies, tulips, stephanotis and ivy.

The attendants wore ballerina-length gowns of black and white taffeta and carried bouquets of pink tulips cupped in white satin. The flower girl wore a paperwhite ankle-length gown and carried a white wicker basket trimmed with silk rosebuds, greenery and ribbons.

The couple will live in Raleigh after a wedding trip to the Hawaiian Islands.

The bride graduated from the University of North Carolina with a pharmacy degree. The bridegroom graduated from Applachian State University. She is employed with MediSave Pharmacies, Inc., and he is employed by Kendall Healthcare Products Co., both in Raleigh.

Mom, Dad Need Quality Time

At Wits End
Erma Bombeck

I receive a lot of letters from parents who are upset that their children aren't spending enough "quality time" with them. Every day, adults come home to an empty house ready to share their feelings, and no one is there to share them with.

If adults watch television and pig out on junk food, they are criticized for wasting time and spoiling their dinner. Their offspring expect them to do a list of chores ranging from "Drop my clothes off at the cleaners" to "Save my dinner" (which, of course, they never do).

No wonder parents are running wild.

One woman said she had to chip a tooth to get her daughter's attention. She said if her kids didn't want to spend time with Mom and Dad, they shouldn't have had parents in the first place.

It's a problem many mothers and fathers are facing and is brought on by children who "want it all." They want to go to school, they want to date, and they want to have a job for extra money. In addition, they want to spend time with their contemporaries, do volunteer work, keep their bodies in shape and have a good time. There just aren't enough hours in the day for them.

My daughter dropped by the other week. I reached out to touch her face and said, "Who are you, dear?"

"It hasn't been that long, Mom," she said tiredly.

"It's just like the old days. I used to sit there with milk and cookies every afternoon waiting for you, and you were out playing records at a girlfriend's house."

"Mom, are we going to argue or are we going to bond?"

"If I wanted 'bonding,' I'd go to my dentist. Ask me how I've been,"

"How have you been?"

"I don't want to worry you. You're busy."

"Mom, I'm here to spend some quality time with you. Do you want to play Scrabble or anything?"

"What, and miss "The Love Connection"? Yesterday one of the women called her date a piece of worthless slime. She's going out with him again to see if it gets better."

"What about my reading you a story?"

"We did that last week. Want to hear a joke?" I asked. She nodded. "Did you hear about the kid who came home from school and said he had a part in a school play? When his mother asked him what he was supposed to be, he said, 'A Catholic daddy.' She told him to march right back to that school and tell them he wanted a speaking part!"

"That's very funny," said my daughter. "Anything else you want to share with me?"

"I don't think so."

Following a very long silence, she asked, "What is quality time?"

Grieving Mother Turns Spotlight On Farm Safety

The Associated Press

Mrs. Adams holds a picture of her son, who suffocated in grain held in the wagon behind her

By Sharon Cohen
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

EARLHAM, Iowa — Marilyn Adams sees hidden killers in peaceful farm country. They're around the barns, the tractors and even the golden grain that proved deadly to her youngest child, swallowing the boy like quicksand.

Keith Algreen was 11 years old when he died in a farm accident. His mother aches for him. She is also determined her loss be a lesson so other families will not face such tragedy or suffer such sadness.

Mrs. Adams has formed an organization to preach the gospel of farm safety. It's an all-consuming cause, taking her from classrooms to Capitol Hill, talking with children, homemakers, lawmakers and anyone else who'll listen.

"I've let this become my entire life," she said quietly. "I guess this is my replacement for Keith's life."

"Farm Safety for Just Kids" is essentially a one-woman campaign with a common-sense message: Beware of everyday dangers — tractors that roll over and crush, pesticides that poison, flowing grain that can suffocate.

Often these things "are overlooked because of the familiarity," Mrs. Adams said. "A lot of people accept farm accidents as way of life."

Children are particularly vulnerable, she said, because they work side-by-side with their parents.

"We give children an adult responsibility (and) ... they're just not old enough to handle it," she said. "An 8-year-old or a 10-year-old is not qualified to be a heavy equipment operator, but yet we have 8- and 10-year-old tractor drivers out there. There is a definite attitude change that needs to come about. That has to start at home."

Keith had stayed home from school that October day to help his stepfather unload corn. He was supposed to turn the tractor power off when the corn emptied from a gravity wagon that holds 250 bushels, about three tons of grain. The grain falls through a funnel-shaped chute into an auger that carries it into a bin.

Mrs. Adams isn't sure how it happened, but Keith fell into the wagon and was sucked down into the flowing grain. He was found near the chute about 20 minutes later by his stepfather, who had been working in the field.

At the hospital, corn and corn chaff were found in Keith's lungs. He was declared brain dead.

"I could tell when it was finally over," his mother said. "It was 3 o'clock in the morning. His little body just shook the whole time ... and then he stopped trembling."

Keith died of suffocation. His eyes, heart valves and a kidney were donated to five people.

His death devastated a family that was so safety conscious that Keith wore a life-jacket when he went fishing and frogging in the pond on their farm.

Mrs. Adams, 38, who has two surviving daughters and three stepchildren, saw painful reminders everywhere. She quit a bookkeeping job because the fire department-rescue squad was outside her window. She left a bank teller's position because it hurt so much when children Keith's age came in to make little deposits.

After about six months, the mother's anguish turned to activism. She started calling manufacturers, gathering information to figure out what happened.

Mrs. Adams then decided to design safety decals for gravity wagons and, with financing from her employer at the time, Firestone Tire & Rubber Co., distributed 50,000 of them. Two companies now use her decals on their wagons or augers; two others have their own.

Mrs. Adams also began testifying before congressional committees and addressing farm groups. She now seeks a sponsor to pay for educational materials for schools and hopes to have chapters of "Farm Safety for Just Kids" set up around the country within six months.

Mrs. Adams has memorized the sobering statistics.

The National Safety Council estimates about 1,600 people died and 160,000 suffered disabling injuries in 1987 in agriculture-related incidents.

As for children, a 1987 Mayo Clinic study said 300 die and 23,500 are injured annually in farm-related accidents.

The Mayo study, which reviewed accidents involving 87 farm children, also found the greatest number of injuries occur at age 3 and age 13. About two-thirds of the accidents surveyed were caused by grain augers and tractors.

Still, the problem didn't receive much attention until Mrs. Adams "grabbed on to the issue like a bulldog," said Kelley Donham, a University of Iowa professor and chairman of the National Coalition for Agricultural Safety and Health.

He said Mrs. Adams provides a special perspective as a victim's mother.

"Her experience has ... put a lightning rod on the whole issue," he said.

Her friend, Fredi Juri, president of the Iowa Organization of Women for Agriculture, agrees. When Mrs. Adams talks, "all of a sudden the statistics have a name and a face," she said.

"It's very easy to sit back and say, 'I can't make a difference,'" she added. "She has the gumption to at least try."

It isn't always easy.

Mrs. Adams, a slender, bespectacled woman, still grieves for the little boy with the earnest grin who wanted to become a minister.

Keith's drawings of spaceships and helicopters are in a brass chest. The calf he fed and tended was never sent to market. His red bicycle gathers cobwebs in the barn. Ten ounces of "fool's gold" he found are stored in a pouch, except one nugget his mother wears around her neck.

"Birthdays and family dinners, that's when I miss him the most," Mrs. Adams said. "I still have a lot of tearful nights."

Horoscope

From The Carroll Righter Institute

FORECAST FOR FRIDAY May 19

ARIES (March 21 to April 19): Gallop through this day with the greatest ease. Follow your desires, but keep your exuberance in line with attainable goals.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20): The focus is on romance, relationships and loving companions. You are a human dynamo and are raring to go. Enjoy yourself!

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21): Accent is on work! You are not in the mood but have the ability to handle matters. You get a second wind which energizes your evening.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21): In your haste you can rush off and leave something important behind. You feel great, humorous, centered and self-sufficient.

LEO (July 22 to Aug. 21): You have an untapped reservoir of good feelings. Update your fashion image so that it reflects your avant-garde spirit.

VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22): You may be challenged but prefer not to compete. Put your stamp of approval on a new business consideration.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22): Check market prices and financing, and do your homework before you make a major purchase decision. Excess time leads to sluggishness.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21): You can play with a full deck today and win at whatever you undertake. Explore heretofore unexploited entertainment turf.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21): A prophet of doom may attempt to talk you out of a creative business idea. A relationshuip intensifies, but love is elusive.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20): You do not like to be the new kid on the block, but rather prefer an established reputation. A clandestine diversion may have a sting.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19): Make an important contact—the one you have been putting off—and get positive results. Evening fun is successful.

PISCES (Feb. 20 to March 20): Be sure to whom you bear your secrets. Romance blossoms, but don't trade your soul for transient affection.

South	West	North	East
1 ◇	Pass	1 ♠	Pass
1 NT	Pass	3 NT	Pass
Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Three of ♠

Don't discuss suit combinations in isolation. The right play in a particular suit could be the wrong action if you take the whole hand into consideration. Take this hand, for instance.

The auction was routine. When South showed a balanced hand of fewer than 16 points and, with no 4-4 fit in spades, North simply made the value bid.

West led a low club and declarer, impressed by the fact that he could ensure two tricks in the suit, followed low from the board. East took the king and, had he routinely continued with a club, declarer would have coasted home. However, East shifted to a heart at trick two, and suddenly declarer found that he had to guess the location of the queen of diamonds for his contract.

Perhaps it was only fitting that he should misguess. As a result, the defenders collected four heart tricks, one diamond and one club for down two.

In light of the heart threat, declarer should rise with the ace of clubs on the first trick. With five tricks in the other suits, declarer needs only four diamond tricks to get home. Therefore, he can afford to make an avoidance play to keep East off lead. Since South's queen of clubs is safe from attack as long as West is on lead, declarer should cash the king of diamonds at trick two and then run the jack.

West can take his queen, but he cannot harm declarer. Whatever he returns, declarer wins and cashes out his tricks. When the spades divide evenly, he makes a well-deserved overtrick.

Li Orders Crackdown On Chinese Students

Pro-Democracy Protests Bring Martial Law

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BEIJING — Premier Li Peng declared martial law in Beijing early Saturday to end more than a month of student demonstrations that have shaken the communist leadership.

The declaration came after the student campaign for democracy evolved into a nationwide movement and disrupted Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev's visit to China.

President Yang Shangkun attended, but Communist Party General Secretary Zhao Ziyang was not immediately seen in the national television broadcast of the speech. Sources said Zhao, who opposed a crackdown on the students, offered to resign Friday.

Li's announcement came after the State Council, China's Cabinet, banned demonstrations as of midnight. Earlier, Li had warned that measures would be taken if thousands of students did not end a hunger strike in central Beijing's Tiananmen Square.

Students decided to end the six-day hunger strike but vowed to continue a pro-democracy sit-in in the square.

At midnight, crowds rushed from the west toward Tiananmen Square, shouting that soldiers were coming, although no troops were visible.

No one in the crowd said they had seen troops, but a Cable News Network reporter said he saw about 50 army trucks more than a mile west of the square. He said people were urging the soldiers not to move in.

The decision to end the hunger strike came after at least 2,400 participants were taken to hospitals. Most returned to Tiananmen Square after being revived, but doctors reported hepatitis and other infectious diseases in their damp and dirty squatter camp.

"We have achieved a great victory," said student leader Zhang Boli. "We will change from 3,000 hunger strikers to a sit-in of tens of thousands. Our struggle ... hasn't ended."

The official Xinhua News Agency called the strike halt temporary, but it did not elaborate. Students did not say the halt was temporary.

Judge Polls Jones Jurors About Effect Of TV Report

By John Bare
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

After questioning jurors about whether they had seen television accounts of the rape trial in which the group is sitting, a Superior Court judge in Greenville today allowed attorneys to continue with closing arguments.

Out of the presence of the 12 jurors and two alternates, Judge David E. Reid Jr. told prosecution and defense attorneys he was concerned that the jury may have inadvertently seen a TV news story Thursday night that he said could have jeopardized their role in the trial of Charlie James Jones.

All 14 jurors on the panel later informed Reid in open court that they had no knowledge of the TV news report, and all said they neither heard nor saw the story. Reid reminded the panel of his earlier instructions not to read or watch media accounts of the trial.

The trial marks the third time in three years Jones has stood trial on the charges. He was convicted on all counts in 1986 and sentenced to life in prison, but the state Supreme Court granted him a new trial last summer, claiming the trial court erred by admitting prejudicial testimony.

At the second trial in March, the jury deliberated six hours before announcing it was hopelessly deadlocked. Judge G.K. Butterfield of Wilson then declared a mistrial, without asking whether the jury had reached a decision on any of the five charges.

Reid said the televised report stated that the jury in the second trial reached a guilty verdict on one count of indecent liberties but was deadlocked on all other counts. Reid said the court file does not reflect that any verdict was reached.

Pitt N.C. Scholars Feted At Banquet

By Cherie Evans
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

The chief executive officer of a High Point company has given Pitt County's North Carolina scholars the formula for becoming successful.

Nido R. Qubein of Creative Services Inc. told the more than 120 students and their parents at a banquet Thursday night in Greenville that the difference between a successful person and an unsuccessful person lies in one word.

"The word is system," Qubein said. "Successful people simply have a system in their life. They know where they are, they know where they're going and they know every guide post along the way."

Qubein said, "All the great people I've ever met in my life seem to have a spirit of gratitude, a spirit of thankfulness."

He said ethnic groups come to America from all parts of the world and do well because "they're grateful to be a part of a private enterprise system where if they work hard they can be successful."

That concept sometimes is hard for people born in America to grasp because of the unlimited opportunities offered here, he said. "It's tough to be living in this world when we have no frame of reference except influence," he said.

Qubein advised the students to be more cautious about what they say. It's important to "say what you mean and mean what you say."

Qubein said he came to America in 1966 from Lebanon and did not know any English. In learning the English language, Qubein said he realized Americans need to pay more attention to what they say.

He entertained the group by giving examples to make his point. In one, Qubein said a church announcement read: "This afternoon there will be meetings in the south and north ends of the church. Children will be baptized at both ends."

"Life is like that," he said. "We say things like this everyday."

Other key ingredients for success include realizing that "the founda-

Marcos Critical

HONOLULU (AP) — Deposed Philippine President Ferdinand Marcos was in very critical condition today following kidney, cardiac and pulmonary failure, hospital officials said.

His successor, Corazon Aquino, said she would not permit Marcos to return to the Philippines to die despite an appeal from Marcos' wife, Imelda. The Philippine government has not decided whether to allow Marcos to be buried in his homeland.

Marcos, 71, suffered kidney failure Thursday morning and underwent surgery to prepare him for kidney dialysis, according to Gene Tiwanak, assistant administrator at St. Francis Medical Center.

"The prognosis is very poor and his condition is very critical," Tiwanak said Thursday.

Marcos was conscious before the operation and was lapsing in and out of consciousness later, said a hospital source who asked not to be identified.

Ground Broken For Airport Project

By John Bare
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

About 24 hours after bulldozers arrived to begin moving tons of earth, Pitt-Greenville Airport officials tossed a few shovels of dirt today at a ground-breaking ceremony for the $1.3 million terminal expansion project.

After months of reviewing plans, awarding contracts and jockeying for federal dollars, heavy machinery arrived at the airport Thursday to clear land north of the existing terminal facility.

"The contractors have started work here today (Thursday) and started to strip everything," airport Manager Jim Turcotte said.

Members of the Airport Authority were on hand for the groundbreaking, as well as members of the City Council, the Pitt County Board of Commissioners and a representative from the state Department of Transportation's Division of Aviation.

Mayor Ed Carter, Commission Member Eugene James and DOT executive Will Plentl addressed the crowd of about 75 people gathered on the work site.

Completion of the new building — which will be more than twice as large as the present terminal — is expected to take about nine months. The new structure will have vaulted ceilings, sky lights and brick walls to match the existing terminal.

The new 10,700-square-foot facility will be built as an addition to the existing terminal, connecting through the north wall. Once the construction is completed, the old and new terminals together will exceed 14,000 square feet.

"There certainly will be more space. The airline ticket offices will certainly be more accommodating. It will allow more people to stand up in queue," Turcotte said.

Currently, people standing in line at airline ticket counters may be colliding with those in line at rental car counters. Both lines also extend into the area that serves as the departure lounge. The expansion will separate the activities.

"It separates all the functions and gives them much needed space and allows for the continued growth of our commercial service," Turcotte said.

Nursing Degree Pioneer Speaks To PCC Graduates

By Cherie Evans
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

The textbooks of nursing students at Pitt Community College came to life Thursday as the person who laid the foundation for the associate degree in nursing nationwide visited Greenville.

In an interview Thursday afternoon on the PCC campus, Dr. Montag said the associate degree program for nurses resulted, in part, from her dissertation at Columbia University where it was used to develop a grant proposal for a five-year project.

The project encouraged "seven community colleges to develop a new kind of nursing program which would lead to a nursing degree," she said.

The programs were conducted in community colleges in New York, New Jersey, Michigan, California, Utah and Virginia.

"They were in different parts of the country and had different financial arrangements" for support from city, county and state funds, Dr. Montag said.

In 1952, there were two programs nationwide for students receiving an associate degree in nursing, while now there are about 800 programs in the United States, Guam and the Virgin Islands, she said.

There are two main differences in the associate degree and baccalaureate nursing programs, Dr. Montag said.

"There is more liberal arts in the four-year baccalaureate program, and the nursing content is different," she said. "It's more extensive in the baccalaureate program.

"The A.D. program is aimed at the person working at the bedside where more technical applications are used," Dr. Montag said.

"One isn't better than the other," she said. "They're just different, and there can be quality programs in both of them."

The associate degree program has expanded the opportunities for those wanting to become a nurse, she said.

"There's a wider age group and there are more men in A.D. programs than the national average," she said.

Also, people in the college's community do not have to move away to get nursing training, Dr. Montag said. "It's available to the older person and not just the immediate post-high school graduate."

In watching the nursing profession as it has progressed, Dr. Montag said nurses are beginning to get the respect they deserve.

"In general, nurses at last are coming into their own, being recognized for the important contribution they make to the patient's recovery," she said. "While we haven't achieved the ultimate, nurses are more recognized and have more autonomy."

PCC graduated 50 nursing students this year, said Judith Kuykendall, director of PCC's Allied Health Division.

The 21-month associate degree program at the college began in 1974 and graduated about 20 students, she said.

"We prepare a generalist — a bedside nurse prepared to go into the hospital to work," Ms. Kuykendall said. The students are instructed in various areas including obstetrics, pediatrics and psychiatrics and surgical, but are not specialized in a particular area.

"The majority of our students are staying in our area," she said.

Police Studying Theft Response

Greenville police are conducting a two-pronged internal investigation in connection with an early morning jewelry store burglary Tuesday in which $15,000 worth of gold chains were reported taken, according to Chief Jerry Tesmond.

"We didn't send cars (to the scene of the break-in at Royal's Jewelers at Carolina East Center) as quickly as we normally do and we've taken appropriate action to insure that will not happen again," Tesmond said.

"We're still investigating it," the chief said, but "my philosophy is if we're wrong I'll say it, and it's unfortunate."

Tesmond said that a patrol officer who was relieving the regular dispatcher for a short time was "working a crime-in-progress call, offenders trying to break into cars, and talking to the victim and talking to (the patrol) cars when the (jewelry store) alarm went off. He reset the alarm and forgot it.

"A little while later there was another (telephone) call," Tesmond said, and "the regular dispatcher sent cars to the jewelry store burglary."

About 20 minutes elapsed between the time of the first alarm and the time the first car arrived at the jewelry store at 4:54 a.m.

Tesmond also said, "We're doing an internal investigation, an internal affairs investigation" dealing with part of the property taken in the burglary, "and will resolve that matter as quickly as possible. We're doing a thorough investigation and will take appropriate action.

"If we're wrong," Tesmond said, "I'll say so. If not, I'll say so. I believe in total honesty."

But Tesmond declined to give any details of the internal affairs probe until it is complete, saying, "I'm prohibited by state law.

However, another source close to the investigation said a piece of jewelry believed taken from Royal's was taken to a pawn shop Tuesday afternoon by one of the officers who responded to the break-in call.

The source said "there was definitely a break-in" and about $2,000 worth of the stolen jewelry was recovered from the "sidewalk and pavement" in front of the store where it had been dropped by the robbers. One of the officers responding to the call may have picked up a piece from the sidewalk, the source suggested.

Diamond Ring, Other Items Taken From Car

Investigators said eight thefts, including more than $4,700 worth of property from a car parked at 26J Courtney Square Apartments, were reported to Greenville police on Thursday.

Officer R.D. Andrews said a $3,000 diamond ring, a wedding band, a watch, camera, set of golf clubs, a pair of tennis shoes and 10 compact discs were taken from the vehicle in an incident reported at 7:11 a.m., while Officer A.T. Parrish said a graphic equalizer was taken from a car parked at Budget Tire at 1605 N. Greene St. in an incident reported at 8:05 a.m.

Officer S.C. Locke said the bedspreads and blankets were taken from three guest rooms at Best Value Motor Lodge, 2725 S. Memorial Drive, in an incident reported at 11:19 a.m., while $45 in cash was taken from Best Used Tires at 1009 S. Memorial Drive in an incident reported at 11:45 a.m.

Officer M.T. Scheid said $25 worth of plants were taken from a porch at 1207 Battle St. in an incident reported at 12:39 a.m., while Officer W.E. Davis said a 5-month-old Labrador retriever was taken from 504 E. 12th St. in an incident reported at 2:56 p.m.

Officer T.L. Forrest said the window tinting was taken from a car parked at 1905B Norcott Circle in an incident reported at 2:59 p.m., while Officer R.L. Smith said a motorized bicycle valued at $300 was taken from the 500 block of Cotanche St. in an incident reported at 9:22 p.m.

Airport Breaks Ground

the early 1980s to accommodate 10,000 passengers a year. However, growth at the facility has greatly surpassed that mark. Nearly 100,000 people passed through the airport in 1988.

From January through April 1989, 28,143 people have passed through the airport, a 4 percent jump over the same period last year, despite numerous cancellations in February due to bad weather.

The 1989 passenger totals are 25 percent higher than those from the first four months of 1987.

In 1984, just 8,000 people passed through the facility; the 1988 totals represent a 1,200 percent increase. Turcotte said the construction work should not interfere with passengers arriving at or departing from the airport.

The new terminal building will also provide passengers with a conveyer-driven baggage carousel.

"The baggage claim is certainly going to be one of the big changes," Turcotte said. "It will be what everybody is used to at a typical airport. You've got a carousel and you just pick (the bags) up."

The building will include a security office to be used as an auxiliary station for county and city law enforcement officers. The facility will help accommodate local officers, Turcotte said, while upgrading airport security by making law enforcement more visible. The office could eventually be staffed full time.

Those taking part in ceremony today also included Greenville attorney Randy Doub, a member of the state Board of Transportation, and Jack Duffus, chairman of the airport authority.

Habitats Planned

ASHEBORO, N.C. (AP) — Construction on the first animal habitats in the North America section of the N.C. Zoological Park could begin in early June, members of the Zoo Council have been told.

Bids have been let for the $1.14 million cypress swamp and marsh habitat project. Successful bidders are obtaining insurance and working on contract documents, according to architect Lyn Adams.

Adams said a pre-construction conference is tentatively scheduled for June 1, with construction starting in early June.

Trial Continues

said the news reporter could have only obtained such information from prosecutors. Vincent told Reid he gave no information to the reporter.

Nancy Aycock, chief assistant district attorney, told Reid that a document Butterfield sealed would indicate the March jury reached a verdict in one count. Butterfield had contacted the district attorney's office by letter about the situation, she said, and she had informed the parties involved in the trial, including Vincent.

However, she also said she had not given any information to the reporter. Reid said he was confident neither attorney acted inappropriately.

Reid said he wanted to ask the panel of jurors whether any of them heard or saw the televised account of the trial, and Vincent asked Reid to tell the jurors that the report contained errors.

"This is extremely damaging to my case," he said.

However, after questioning the jurors, Reid allowed Vincent to proceed with his closing argument in the case.

"Let the record reflect that all 14 jurors assure the court they did not see or hear anything about the case," Reid said.

After Vincent completed his statements to the jury, Ms. Aycock was to deliver her closing remarks. After that, the case was to go to the jury for deliberations.

Jones is accused of raping and fondling his stepdaughter while her mother was working and the girl was left in his care. He allegedly threatened her with a knife and a handgun to make her consent to sex. The crimes are alleged to have occurred from late 1982, when the girl was 11 years old, to the fall of 1985.

The girl's mother, Brenda Joyce Jones, is still married to the defendant, and she sat with him through the three-day trial. The girl's sister and other family members also sat behind Jones and Vincent.

Mrs. Jones stepped out into the gallery this morning and warned friends not to speak around news reporters. One of the defense witnesses, Margaret Reid, who is Mrs. Jones' sister, appeared on the TV news story Thursday and said she believes Jones is innocent. Ms. Aycock said opinions voiced by participants in the trial concerned her most.

Vincent told the jury of eight women and four men — plus one female and one male alternate — that they must decide the facts of the case. There is confusion in the state's evidence because the alleged victim has been unable to specify the dates at which the crimes occurred, he said, and the jury must sort out the facts.

If testimony delivered in court does not match the alleged dates of the crime, he told the jury it must find Jones innocent.

'Truth In Preference To Fiction'

Balanced

Now Taxpayers Know It's Possible

The Greenville City Council is looking at a sound budget, a balanced budget, a budget that doesn't raise taxes, yet provides growth in key areas.

There's just one question, however, that must to be asked.

Why can't officials come up with this kind of budget unless they're up for re-election?

Not that the public isn't thankful for it anytime. The budget council members discussed last week, at first glance, is exemplary. It keeps the tax rate at 55 cents per $100 of value. It represents a slow, reasonable increase in spending — 1.65 percent over the previous year. Best of all, it adds manpower where the city needs it most — in departments like fire, rescue and police that provide an essential public service.

'If sound planning became the rule rather than the exception, it might be easier for the public to understand and accept necessary tax increases.'

What a switch from last year, when property revaluation gave council members an opening to force both an administratively top heavy budget and a back-door tax hike on citizens.

What a change from two years ago when a panicky and misguided council froze spending and salaries for a city bursting at the seams with growth.

Neither of these two approaches represents sound fiscal policy. With an expanding population demanding increased services, Greenville can't stop in its tracks. Neither can it afford to unnecessarily fork out tax money on luxuries.

No, what the city needs is a carefully devised, prudent plan for stable growth that shows the mark of a sharp pencil. This budget appears to be such a document.

Taxpayers have the right to expect this kind of economic integrity from every budget. If sound planning became the rule rather than the exception, it might be easier for the public to understand and accept necessary tax increases.

So make it a habit, council members, whether you are running for re-election or not. The city has a manager capable of frugal budget preparation — the proposals for 1989-90 prove it. Put his sparing hand to work every year.

Don't wait for ballots to be marked.

Old Baldy

Another Illuminating Issue For N.C.

An official lighthouse for North Carolina?

It has been proposed for one day at least. A resolution, introduced by Reps. David Redwine, D-Brunswick, and George Robinson, R-Caldwell, was adopted by the House May 9.

Of course the question immediately arises which of North Carolina's famous coastal lighthouses would receive such shortlived recognition? The resolution asks that Old Baldy, the lighthouse on privately owned Bald Head Island at the mouth of the Cape fear River, be so honored.

And what do proponents of the Cape Hatteras, Cape Lookout, Corolla and Ocracoke lighthouses think of that? Not much.

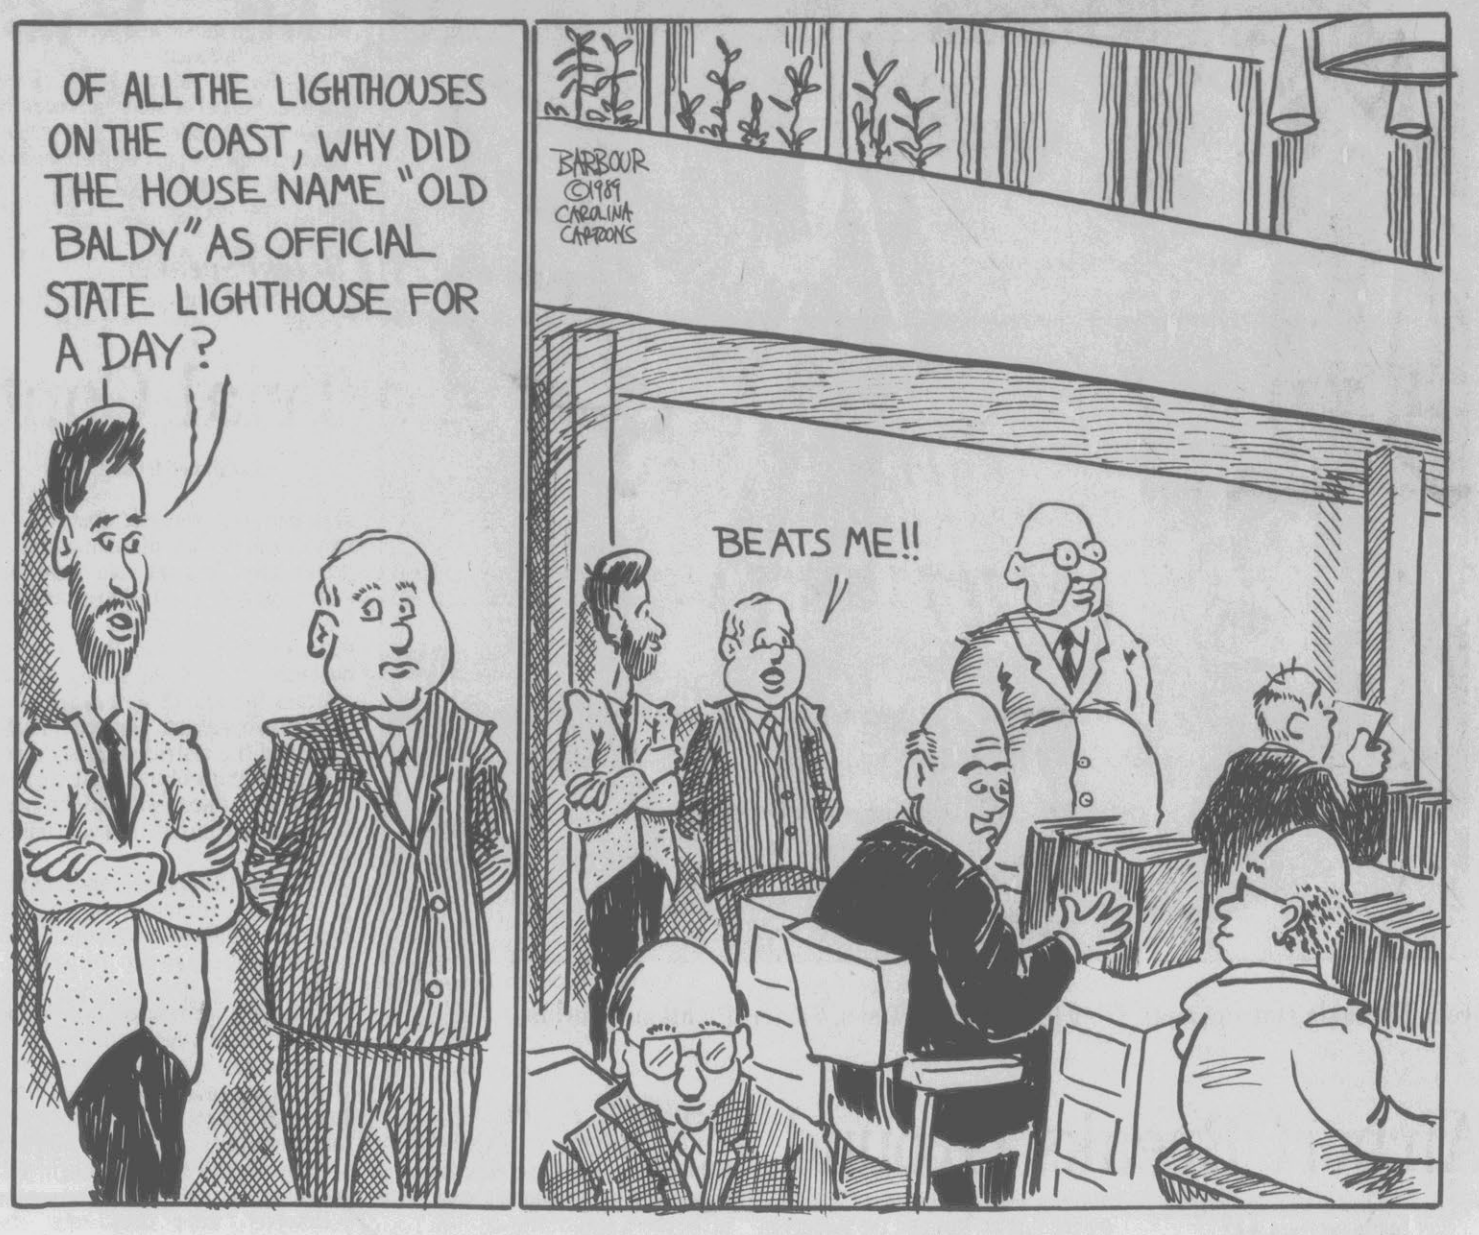
Sen. Marc Basnight, D-Dare has four lighthouses in his district and he says questions would be asked if Old Baldy were chosen over the others.

He points to Hatteras as the equal of any lighthouse in the country.

Upper coastal residents have expressed concern about the Old Baldy resolution. Gov. Martin through his press secretary has said he is neutral on the issue ... a diplomatic stand. The governor's office further said that he has paintings of all the lighthouses.

Somehow it seems prudent that the Legislature follow the governor's lead on this and back off. It's not like choosing a state flower, a state tree, a state dog or a state snake. North Carolina's seacoast is famous and all its lighthouses are, too. To name one of them the official state lighthouse, even for a day, would be to ignore the others. That's neither fair nor logical ... and it's certainly not good politics.

Come to think of it the political way out would be to rotate the honor and let each structure have its day as the "official" state lighthouse. If the legislators ever want to visit the coast as a body again, they may want to find a way out of this one.



The Thumbsucker Report Is Here

Art Buchwald

The Thumbsucker Report has just been released. Written by Dr. Alfred Thumbsucker, the report deals with the problems that parents have communicating with their children, and the inability of those children to communicate with anyone.

"Most parents," he told me, "admit that they didn't have much luck with child-rearing, but they all have the same defense, 'Look what we had to work with.'"

"In your report, what do you consider to be the main barrier between children and their parents?"

"Rock music," he replied. "When teen-agers turned to the Grateful Dead for all their needs, parents lost control over them. It is not generally known, but as soon as a child is born in the United States, the doctor inserts tiny Walkman speakers into its ears. The Walkman is activated when the doctor spanks the baby, and it remains on at full volume right through college."

"You're going to make the front pages with that one."

"As the child grows up he or she spends every waking moment listening to music, and tuning out on everything else. Parents were always under the impression that when a young person shook his head, he was answering either 'yes' or 'no' to a question. They had no idea that the kid was only keeping time to the Rolling Stones."

"Didn't it ever occur to a parent that something other than thinking was going on in their offspring's head?" I asked.

"No, it didn't. Parents were happy to see their children snap their fingers because it meant that they were still alive. Some teen-agers found that the audio level of the Walkman was not strong enough for their rock music habit, so they put large radios on their shoulders to enhance the sound. They also installed loudspeakers in their bedrooms so that nothing else could be heard in the house.

"With so much electronics at their command, it's no wonder that kids have been unable to converse in any spoken tongue. This is the reason that parents never get a response when they shout, 'Why don't you do what I tell you?' The child has no idea what his father or mother is saying."

"How can young people get by without communicating?"

"Most of them have discovered early in life that no matter what they did, they would always be housed and fed. Knowing this, there was no reason for them to try to figure out what was going on in the world."

"At least they know what they want," I said.

"The generations of rock music fans, all of whom are still wired with Walkmans, are now becoming the labor force in this country. They are doctors, lawyers and oil tanker captains, but they all keep time to Bruce Springsteen."

"Did you interview a lot of people for your report?" I asked him.

"I talked to many parents but they were more confused than helpful. The children were something else again. Every time I asked a question, they rolled their eyes and clapped their hands. I would have been worried had I not known that each and every one of them had a Walkman implant."

"Then your findings are based more on your own knowledge rather than on what anyone said to you?"

"That is correct. But it does have substance. I have never met a child who listened more to his parents than he did to Michael Jackson."

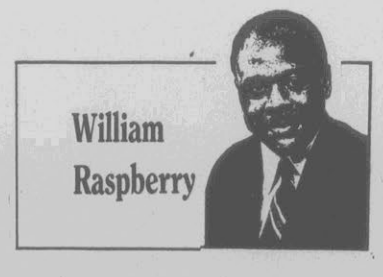
A Wonderful, But Doubtful, Sermon



WASHINGTON — I've just seen the text of William J. Bennett's recent speech at the Washington Hebrew Congregation, and I'm not sure what to make of it.

His analysis of America's drug problem is sound, his toughmindedness admirable, his philosophy of personal and social responsibility compelling. Still, it's hard to see how the nation's anti-drug chief hopes to get from philosophy to effective action.

To begin with the unarguable: What we call the drug crisis, says Bennett, is, at bottom, a "crisis of authority."

It is a crisis of legal and political authority. "The drug user, the drug dealer and the drug trafficker alike believe that the laws forbidding their activities no longer have teeth, and they consequently feel free to violate those laws with impunity."

It is a crisis of social authority. "The family and our schools — those institutions responsible for keeping children occupied with redeeming pursuits and away from the easy, destructive temptations of immediate pleasure — are not performing as well as they should, as well as they once did."

And it is a crisis of moral authority. "The idea that breaking the law is wrong, even when the lawbreaking goes undetected, has lost its power to deter."

It all rings true, as does his summary of what his approach to the series of crises will be: "Consequences and confrontation."

Who can disagree with his assertion that drug dealers can expect to be arrested several times before they face the prospect of doing serious time, or that the reason this is so is that the entire criminal-justice system, from law-enforcement officers to courts to prisons, are overwhelmed?

We must, says Bennett, build more prisons, add more prosecutors and judges and hire more investigators to break up the drug networks. But we must also "reconstitute authority" making those who traffic in drugs understand that punishment upon conviction is "inevitable."

His "consequences and confrontation" approach would reach beyond the hard-core traffickers and addicts to embrace the casual users, minors and their parents: the demand side of the drug problem.

"How do we reduce the demand for drugs?...Taking an aggressive line toward drugs — forbidding their use altogether and using real authority to back up this absolute proscription — is the key to all prevention strategies."

And so the Bennett prescription goes: Confront both sellers and users with the lawlessness, immorality and irresponsibility of their behavior, and hit them with appropriate consequences. These might involve revoking drivers' licenses of youngsters just starting to dabble in drugs, denial of bail and seizure of assets for more serious offenders, and the death penalty for drug kingpins.

There's nothing wrong with any of these things. I've recommended most of them myself at one time or another. The problem is that they are not all going to be done. Both for lack of money and lack of will, we are not going to increase the effectiveness and strength of the law-enforcement agencies; significantly expand the courts and prosecutorial staffs; build enough prison cells to hold everybody we arrest; create enough treatment facilities for all the addicts while at the same time providing not just anti-drug education but also "aid, assistance and instruction for youngsters who have been left without the most elementary lessons of morals and manners."

What Bennett has proposed as drug-policy chief is what he proposed as secretary of Education: a thoroughgoing revamping, reconstitution, and re-education of the American society.

Only a fool would not want to see it happen, but only the most naive of dreamers would expect it to happen.

Given the budgetary restraints of which he is acutely aware, Bennett's everything-for-everybody approach seems almost willfully unrealistic. It makes a wonderful sermon, but doubtful drug policy.

Mavretic Orders Ethics Probe Of Legislators

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — House Speaker Joe Mavretic has directed the House Ethics Committee to investigate the issue of legislators whose family members work in state government, after he learned that Rep. Mickey Michaux reviewed the budget of the agency that employs his daughter.

"Since I have become speaker, I have discovered that it is not unheard of for prominent members of the House to have family members employed by the state," Mavretic said Thursday.

The director of the Office of Administrative Hearings — Bob Melott — controls the employment contract for Michaux's daughter.

No one has accused Michaux of improper behavior, but Michaux's involvement with the agency's budget has sparked concern among legislators.

Mavretic said the investigation was not of Michaux, but of the general nature of how legislators should deal with agencies that employ their family members.

"Certainly, it's worth me asking my ethics chairman (Rep. Don Beard, D-Cumberland) to take a look at this."

Michaux is cochairman of the subcommittee that reviewed the budget of the Office of Administrative Hearings. Last year, the office hired his daughter, Jocelyn Simeon, on a contract basis to investigate cases involving civil rights violations.

The contract calls for Ms. Simeon, 30, a law school graduate, to work 11 months for $23,650. The contract may be extended, and it can be terminated with 30 days' notice.

Michaux, Ms. Simeon and Melott said Michaux did not help his daughter land the job.

"I didn't even know she had applied," Michaux said.

Some legislators have expressed concerns about Melott and the office after a state audit last month accused the office of excessive spending. Later in the month, the legislature reviewed the budget for the office. At that time, Michaux said of Melott: "I think he's doing a good job."

Michaux said his daughter's job did not affect his judgment in evaluating the agency's budget. He said he did not favor the director in any way and even offered a successful motion that cut the director's pay.

"I've probably been one of the harshest critics" of the office, he said.

Legislators are required to disclose the occupation of their spouses, but not of their adult children. Mavretic said the Ethics Committee should study whether legislators should report their children and some other family members who work in state government.

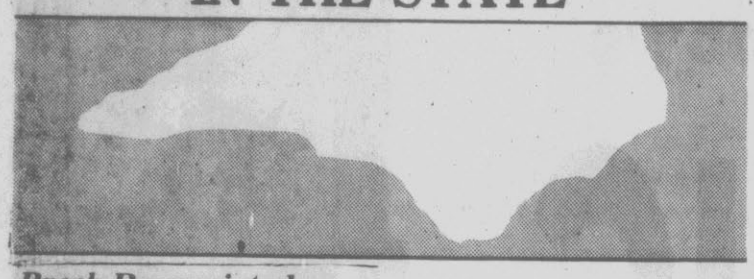
Several legislators have children or spouses who work in state government, including Sen. Larry Cobb, R-Mecklenburg, former House Speaker Liston Ramsey, D-Madison, and Rep. Billy Watkins, D-Granville.

Cobb said there was no need for additional reporting requirements because legislators already were required by law to disqualify themselves in conflict-of-interest cases.

Ramsey, whom Mavretic unseated as speaker in a bitter coup, said he saw no need for the Ethics Committee to study the issue.

"That's ridiculous," he said. "My daughter is 40 years old. Just because a person happens to be related to a person in public office, that shouldn't disqualify them."

IN THE STATE



Brock Reappointed

KENANSVILLE, N.C. (AP) — Alex K. Brock, going into his 25th year as state supervisor of elections for North Carolina, was appointed Thursday to another four-year term.

Brock's reappointment was made by the five-member State Board of Elections at its first organizational meeting ever held outside Raleigh.

The board first elected M.H. Hood Ellis of Edenton, an Elizabeth City attorney, chairman; and Ruth A. Turner of Morehead City secretary. Ellis is a Republican and Ms. Turner is a Democrat.

Dogs Returned

GRAHAM, N.C. (AP) — All but six of the 40 pit bull terriers seized last month from a Mebane man accused of dog fighting will be returned today to their owner, an Alamance District Court judge has ruled.

Over objections of prosecutors, Judge Spencer Ennis ruled Thursday that 34 of the dogs must be returned to Edward Anthony "Eddie" Faron, 41, of Mebane, while Faron awaits trial June 5 on two charges of animal fighting and one charge of animal cruelty, all misdemeanors.

Ennis ordered Faron to post a $5,000 bond on the dogs, which have been held as evidence at two county animal shelters since state and county authorities raided Faron's home April 23.

Bridge Project

RALEIGH (AP) — Gov. Jim Martin was to lead a delegation of state and local officials to Washington today to review technical and legal details of a project proposed to protect the south end of the Herbert C. Bonner Bridge.

Violent storms this spring have eroded sand in front of the bridge, which links Hatteras Island to Bodie Island and the mainland.

Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., will join Martin for a meeting at the White House with Boyden Gray, special counsel to President Bush.

Theft Ring

ROCKY MOUNT, N.C. (AP) — A Tarboro man has been charged with possession of a stolen vehicle in what Edgecombe County officials say is a major auto theft ring.

An investigation by the North Carolina Department of Motor Vehicles and sheriff's detectives so far has turned up nearly $100,000 worth of cars and trucks and about $80,000 worth of heavy equipment in northern Edgecombe County.

Jimmy Bradley, 26, of Route 1, Tarboro, was arrested Tuesday night and held without bond in the county jail.

Sheriff Phil Ellis said stolen vehicles and parts have been coming into the Battleboro and Whitakers area from the Chesapeake Bay-Virginia area.

Satanic Graffiti

DENTON, N.C. (AP) — Satanic graffiti and a makeshift altar were found in a barn near Denton by Davidson County deputies investigating a report of vandalism.

Jim Boggs said he contacted authorities Monday night after finding symbols, an altar and what appeared to be blood stains on a carpet in the barn located on N.C. 49.

Deputies Tony Carlton and Todd Varner said in their report they found an old card table, mildewed carpet and symbols, such as 666, an inverted cross, pentagram and backward writing on the walls.

They could not determine if a stain in the carpet was blood because of the carpet's mildewed condition, the report said.

Pit Bull Freed

CHARLOTTE (AP) — Psycho the pit bull was freed from his death-row kennel before dawn Thursday by someone who cut apart four padlocks on his cage.

The dognapping came a day after assistant city manager Don Steger ordered Psycho to be destroyed next week as dangerous.

Animal control officers seized the 75-pound black dog Feb. 6 after he twice charged at Duke Power Co. meter reader Howard McKinney near owner George Ackers' home. McKinney hit Psycho with an umbrella and sprayed him with repellent; Psycho then attacked and hurt a neighbor's golden retriever.

Kennel workers found the gate to Psycho's pen open and four severed locks. They also found two chocolate snack cakes, stuffed with blue capsules, which police are analyzing.

Russell speculated the cakes may contain a poison or tranquilizer aimed at the shelter's guard dog. It acted normally Thursday but was being checked.

Martin Says 'No' To State Tax Breaks To Lure Sears Complex To N. Carolina

By John Flesher
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — North Carolina continues to set records for business investment and does not need to offer tax incentives to large companies such as Sears, Roebuck and Co., Gov. Jim Martin says.

The governor confirmed Thursday that Charlotte and Raleigh are in the running for Sears' merchandising operations, which the nation's largest retailer might move from the 110-story Sears Tower in downtown Chicago.

Although the state is eager to be chosen host of the operation, which would involve 6,000 employees and up to 1.5 million feet of office space, no package of tax breaks is being offered as bait, Martin said at his weekly news conference.

"North Carolina has done exceptionally well without having to offer major tax incentives," he said. "We have been meeting with their (Sears) officials and ... doing everything we can to support both proposals in both locations of North Carolina."

Chicago officials reportedly have offered a $100 million incentive package to persuade Sears to remain there, and Texas has offered $40 million in tax incentives to lure the merchandising operations to Dallas.

Martin acknowledged that North Carolina's policy of granting no tax incentives in most cases might cost it some business recruits, but said the policy has not thwarted economic growth.

He used his news conference to announce that 1988 was a record year for new business investments in North Carolina, with 595 companies spending a combined $6.2 billion for new and expanded facilities.

The General Assembly in 1987 voted over Martin's objections to offer tax breaks to businesses that locate in the 20 counties with the state's lowest per capita income and highest jobless rates, but few companies have shown interest, he said.

"We will make the best offer (to Sears) that we can," Martin said. "We always have some incentives" for business prospects, such as providing adequate highway connections and training workers at the state's community colleges, he said.

North Carolina industrial recruiters tout the state's well-trained work force, transportation facilities, schools, universties and quality of life, Martin said.

"One of the best selling points we've had, and we've had it for a long time, is that our workers will work," he said. "The work stoppage, absenteeism, is the lowest in the country."

Of the new investments in North Carolina last year, $3.2 billion went into the manufacturing sector and $3 billion into the non-manufacturing sector. New jobs totaled 24,094 in manufacturing and 42,851 in non-manufacturing positions.

On another issue at his news conference, Martin said he was "very disappointed" that the state Senate gutted a bill designed to toughen North Carolina's drunken driving laws.

The bill approved by the Senate last week does not contain the strongest provisions recommended by a legislative study commission, including lowering the impaired-driving threshold from a 0.10 blood alcohol content to 0.08, banning open beer containers in a vehicle's passenger section and toughening penalties for violators.

Supporters of the original bill complained that amendments approved on the Senate floor actually weaken current law.

Martin said he would lobby to restore some of the stricken provisions when the House debates the bill.

"I am convinced from what I have read and from what I heard at several hearings I attended the last year and a half that we need to strengthen the laws that apply to drunk drivers," he said. "The carnage is still too great."

GOP Is Expected To Re-Elect Hawke

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WINSTON-SALEM — State GOP chairman Jack Hawke is expected to be unopposed this weekend when he seeks a second two-year term in the state's top party post, reflecting a new unity and calmness in the party, officials say.

About 1,200 to 1,300 delegates are expected to register for the two-session convention Saturday in Winston-Salem, said Thomas Ballus, state party spokesman. They will gather, as they are required to under party bylaws, to perform what he admits "should be fairly dull stuff."

In addition to electing party officers, the Republicans are scheduled to debate and adopt a 3,500-word state platform and vote on 25 proposed amendments to the party's bylaws.

Some party activists expect a possible attempt to weaken the strict anti-abortion plank in the platform, which declares "The unborn child has the right of life." There also may be an effort to put the party on record as opposing a state lottery; the draft platform that will be presented to the convention is silent on the subject.

The main dispute that could develop stems from a committee's decision to continue the state party's current practice of allowing any registered Republicans — no matter which presidential candidate he or she supports — to become a delegate to a national convention.

State law requires the North Carolina delegation as a whole to follow the results of the state's presidential primary on the first ballot when nominating a presidential candidate. But parties may set their own rules on how the delegates are selected.

That bylaw caused a controversy last year when a group of supporters of the Rev. Pat Robertson were able to become convention delegates, even though the primary results bound the entire North Carolian delegation to support either then-Vice President George Bush or Sen. Robert Dole.

The highlights of the convention weekend likely will have little to do with the official business.

Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., who stopped just short of declaring his candidacy for a fourth term in 1990 during a fund-raising dinner in Raleigh last weekend, is scheduled to deliver the convention's keynote address about 4:30 p.m. Saturday.

Martin Labels Democrats' School Plan Second Best

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — A golden opportunity to restructure the salary scale for North Carolina teachers and implement a merit pay plan may be lost if the General Assembly accepts a budget plan conceived by Senate Democrats, Gov. Jim Martin says.

"I see us with the best chance that we've got to move forward," Martin said. He described the Democrats' program as a stopgap approach that would postpone hard decisions on how to finance a program that rewards teachers for meritorious service.

"I'm concerned that the chances of success after this year are not going to be better than they are this year," Martin said at his weekly news conference Thursday. Legislators would be particularly reluctant to raise taxes next year, a few months before they stand for re-election, he said.

Senate Democratic leaders unveiled their $337.5 million plan Wednesday, saying it would fund the same 6 percent teacher pay raise Martin seeks for 1989-90 without the 1-cent sales tax increase he recommended earlier this year.

Martin said he hopes the Legislature accepts the Democrats' plan only if no consensus is reached on a more far-reaching approach. But Sen. Henson Barnes, D-Wayne, the Senate president pro tempore, said its architects don't regard the Senate plan as a temporary fix.

"This is our plan," he said. "I cannot understand why the governor continues to push a 20 percent increase in the sales tax."

Martin, who supports raising the sales tax from 5 cents to 6 cents to lift a seven-year freeze on the teacher salary schedule and implement a statewide career ladder, also questioned a key component of the Democrats' plan: the assumption that the state will collect $159 million in capital gains taxes from the leveraged buyout of RJR-Nabisco in fiscal 1989-90.

The Democrats say the windfall will enable the state to spend on salaries other revenue that normally would be used only for one-time projects such as constructing buildings.

The state Department of Revenue estimates the capital-gains windfall from the RJR-Nabisco sale will be only $100 million next year, Martin said.

Rep. David Diamont, D-Surry, chairman of the House Appropriations Committee, echoed Martin's concern and said he strongly opposes using the RJR-Nabisco money — which will be available only one year — for a pay raise, which becomes a permanent budget fixture.

"We are not going to spend one-time money for recurring items," Diamont said. "I don't buy that."

Supporters of the Senate plan say economic growth should cause tax collections to increase enough in 1990-91 to continue the pay raise, but Diamont disputed that reasoning.

"Where have we heard that before? That's trickle-down, that eventually the economy will grow enough to catch up," Diamont said. "The feds are still doing that, planning on future growth to make up deficits."

Diamont has not endorsed Martin's tax proposal, said he was becoming increasingly convinced that a major tax increase will be needed to lift the freeze, which he called his top priority.

Woman Took Baby After Miscarriage

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

GREENSBORO — The woman charged with kidnapping a Greensboro toddler last month says she took the child from his mother because she didn't want to disappoint her boyfriend after a miscarriage, FBI agents say.

"She told me that she miscarried and that she never told her husband that she had a miscarriage," said Pat Mitchell, an FBI agent in Montgomery, Ala.

The infant, Larry Wayne Tarlton, was scheduled to leave the Alabama capital city on a commercial airline flight today. FBI agents found him there with his alleged abductors on Wednesday.

Sheri Dawn DeMoney, 26, of Ottumwa, Iowa, and her boyfriend, Terry Michael Blackburn, 42, of Ames, Iowa, were to appear today before U.S. Magistrate John Carroll to determine whether they will be returned to North Carolina. Both are charged with kidnapping.

FBI agents say Ms. DeMoney contended that Blackburn and a professional babysitter in Montgomery were duped into thinking the 8-month-old child was a newborn.

Ms. DeMoney and Blackburn were arrested about 6:30 p.m. CST Wednesday in Montgomery, Ala., when they returned to the baby sitter's house after dinner. The Tarlton baby, whom they were calling "Michael," was seated between them in a car seat, said Pat Mitchell, an agent in the FBI's Montgomery office.

"The baby was very calm, quiet, well-mannered and did not have any misbehavior," Mitchell said.

"It feels like I've had a ton lifted off my shoulders," an elated Susan Tarlton, the infant's mother, said Thursday.

Meanwhile, Guilford County authorities said Thursday that they will investigate how well the boy has been tended by his real mother, who handed him over to a woman who was a stranger twice.

Ms. DeMoney, who authorities said might be using one of numerous aliases, and Blackburn are both charged with kidnapping. Ms. DeMoney is also wanted in Iowa for parole violations.

Why the couple came to Greensboro in late March remained a mystery Thursday, as did some of their actions here prior to an abrupt nighttime departure April 29.

Earlier that afternoon, Susan Tarlton handed her child over to go shopping with a woman she met the previous day outside a medical clinic. The woman, whom Tarlton knew only as "Mrs. York," never returned with the child, despite having taken the baby the day before and returning him.

Louis Bechtel, director of the Guilford County Department of Social Services, said Thursday that the department's protective services division plans to investigate whether Ms. Tarlton's handing-over of the child amounts to neglect or abuse.

"This investigation will help us to determine the best course of action to take as to the care of this child," he said, citing a range of corrective measures that could include removing the child from his home.

"Our preference would be to keep the family unified wherever possible," he added.

Ms. Tarlton wasn't pleased by the announcement.

"I do know how to take care of a young'un," she said, calling her role in the abduction a "mistake" inspired by fatigue, depression and illness.

Farmland's Value Going Up

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — Optimism among farmers and the conversion of farmland to non-agricultural uses have boosted the estimated value of North Carolina farmland for the first time in five years, the U.S. Department of Agriculture says.

A new report set the average per-acre value of farmland and buildings in the state at $1,126, up 6 percent from $1,062 last year. But the value remained 18.4 percent below the all-time high of $1,380, reached in 1984.

Roger W. Hexem, an agriculture economist with the Agriculture Department in Washington, told the News and Observer of Raleigh a bountiful 1988 for most eastern North Carolina farmers helped nudge the estimated value upward.

"For the last couple of years, the real interest rates have gone down, and there's been some improvement in farm income, so there's some optimism right now," Hexem said.

Conversion of farmland into suburbs, shopping centers and other non-agricultural uses, which has boomed along the East Coast, also increased the perceived value in North Carolina, he said.

The estimates were based on a sample survey of each state's farmers, who were asked to gauge the price that they thought their land would bring if sold.

Land prices in North Carolina, as in much of the nation, began skyrocketing in the 1970s and early 1980s.

"Starting in the mid-70s, there was a surge in export markets, and that created some high returns on land," Hexem said.

North Carolina land was valued at $551 in the 1974 survey. By 1982, it had jumped to $1,297 and peaked in 1984 at $1,380. By then, land values in the Midwest had started to plummet.

Hapi The Python Gets New Home

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — The state Museum of Natural Sciences welcomed a 15-foot, 100-pound replacement Thursday for George the python, who reigned as the museum's hit attraction for 25 years.

Dozens of fascinated children watched as state Agriculture Commissioner Jim Graham and three other people hoisted the new Burmese python from its holding cage.

"He just keeps coming," Graham said, as he helped the others pass the beast hand-over-hand into its climate-controlled display cage.

The snake's former keepers, Nanse and Richard Babcock of Greenville, sadly bade farewell to the 5-year-old male snake named Hapi. Mrs. Babcock gently tucked a pink towel — "his security blanket," she said — among his thick coils.

"I'm going to miss him," Babcock said. "He's been my buddy for a long time." Babcock said Hapi was a docile pet that often rode in the car, coiling in the back window.

Hapi, pronounced "HAY-pe," is the name of an Egyptian god of the Nile, Mrs. Babcock said.

Hapi has been the star of many snake shows the Babcocks have taken to schools. But the snake has grown too heavy to handle easily, Babcock said. And at the museum, children will still be able to see and appreciate the snake.

"We had always carried him to people," Babcock said. "Now he's gotten to the size where people need to come to him."

Hapi is a foot shorter than George — but growing. George, who had been a favorite at the museum for 25 years, was put to death last month after he contracted cancer of the jaw.

Graham said George would never be forgotten, but Hapi obviously already was a hit.

"We think he's a worthy replacement for George," he said.

'Apples And Oranges' Debate Slows Vote On Ferret Issue

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — Discussions of pit bulldogs, snakes, chihuahuas and gerbils clouded the issue of a ban of pet ferrets long enough to keep a House committee from voting.

Rep. Fred Bowman, D-Alamance, interrupted debate Thursday in the Human Resources Committee to propose controversial amendments to scuttle the bill. The first would have banned pit bulldogs as pets.

"I hope they don't bring those to a committee meeting," muttered Rep. Marty Kimsey, R-Macon, eyeing several ferrets lining the committee room with their owners.

Rep. Harry Payne, D-New Hanover, sponsor of the ferret ban, opposed the amendment, saying, "I think this may be mixing a little bit apples and oranges." He noted it is already a crime to raise any dog to fight.

When that amendment failed, Bowman proposed including snakes, saying there are "other things besides ferrets that will hurt you if you don't treat them properly."

That led Kimsey, R-Macon, to ask whether it might infringe on the religious liberties of some cults who use poisonous snakes in rituals. Before a vote could be taken, time had run out on the committee meeting and the bill was left in limbo for the second straight meeting.

Earlier, Payne told sometimes smiling committee members, "When this bill was first brought to me, I made some of the same jokes some of you did. 'Next year we'll get the chihuahua and the next we'll get the gerbils.'"

But as Payne handed out photographs of infants who lost ears, noses and fingers to ferrets, he said, "It's not something to joke about."

Payne said the lack of a vaccine for rabies transmitted by ferrets and their tendency to attack children made his bill necessary to "preserve the life and health of young people" even though 99.9 percent may be wonderful pets. The bill would not affect ferrets that are already pets, although it would require that they be neutered.

Greg Smith, an epidemiologist with the state, said ferrets are considered wild carnivores that often can escape from their cages and attack the young. He said escaped pets have helped establish wild populations in Massachusetts, California and Ohio.

Rep. Peggy Wilson, R-Wilson, said dogs are also dangerous a small percentage of the time.

"I think it's very unfair for us to take out anybody's pets and say, okay, you cannot have this as a pet," she said.

John Armshaw of the N.C. Ferret Association said he had letters from all 50 states saying they had no wild ferret populations.

Payne said he was satisfied to wait until the next meeting for final action.

Deacon Sentenced

MOCKSVILLE, N.C. (AP) — A 78-year-old Cooleemee church deacon has pleaded guilty to taking indecent liberties with a child in the church he helped found 50 years ago.

Paul R. Hoffman was sentenced to three years in prison Thursday in exchange for his guilty plea to 11 counts of taking indecent liberties with a child. As part of the plea bargain, he was also given a suspended 10-year sentence which takes effect after the three-year term ends.

Hoffman was arrested July 14 in Cooleemee, where for most of his life residents regarded him as a pillar of the community.

Panel Defends Plans For Veterans Statue

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — The Veterans' Memorial Commission is defending a monument planned for the state Capitol grounds against criticism that the plan strongly resembles a monument in Hungary.

In a statement Thursday, Billy Ray Cameron, the commission chairman, condemned the North Carolina chapter of the American Institute of Architects for characterizing the planned monument as a near copy of Budapest's Liberation Monument without interviewing commission members or Richard Amlung, the designer.

Frank A. DePasquale, chairman of the NCAIA Government Affairs Committee, suggested that the Hungarian monument was similar and has described it as "a massive totalitarian work."

Cameron said the commission chose a design in harmony with the Greek Revival design of the Capitol building.

"The many decorated members of the Veterans' Memorial Commission reject the odious implication that their memorial is a copy because of the coincidence that common ancient symbols were used," Cameron said.

Cameron said reports on the memorial "left much confusion" about its dimensions. The statement said the veterans' monument will stand 39 feet 11 inches high and be 37 feet wide and 32 feet deep. He noted the Confederate Monument at the Capitol is about 38 feet square at its base and is 75 feet high.

House Tentatively Backs Waste Bill

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — North Carolina would once more be on track toward building a hazardous waste treatment facility and regaining access to South Carolina's waste plant under a bill tentatively approved by the state House.

Thursday's 102-0 vote made it likely the package will be enacted next week, said Rep. Dennis Wicker, D-Lee.

"I think the questions have been asked through the subcommittees and on the floor," he said. "I feel the bill is in good shape."

Bill Holman, representing the Sierra Club of North Carolina and the N.C. Conservation Council, said environmentalists would like to see more emphasis on waste reduction.

While the bill would allow a new Hazardous Waste Treatment Commission to adopt fee schedules to encourage waste reduction, Holman said the commission will also be trying to make the treatment facility profitable.

"My concern is they're going to get as much waste as they can," he said.

The main floor objection stemmed from a provision to rescind North Carolina's ban on landfilling hazardous waste. Rep. Dave Diamont, D-Surry, said the House has consistently fought against that possibility.

But Rep. Joe Hackney, D-Orange, said that provision was essential in getting South Carolina to drop its ban on accepting North Carolina's waste. And he said the bill focuses on a regional solution to the waste problem that would make it unlikely a landfill would end up in North Carolina.

Wicker also quickly quelled concerns that the bill would exclude any region or county of the state from consideration.

House action came the same day the bill emerged from the House Finance Committee, which defeated an attempt to place limits on the state's regulation of the plant.

Rep. John Kerr, D-Wayne, proposed a controversial amendment to remove a section that would let the state exceed federal safety standards for hazardous waste handling. Kerr argued that a separate bill addresses North Carolina's ability to exceed federal regulations on various environmental standards. He urged the committee not to resort to a "piecemeal approach."

But Hackney said the section was part of a compromise to win enactment of the legislation and thereby convince South Carolina to rescind its ban on handling North Carolina's hazardous waste.

"I can't believe this body would vote not to allow the state to set its own parameters of regulation for hazardous waste that's going to be going up and down our highways and may be disposed of in our soil ...," he said.

Other members argued that state law currently has no prohibition on stricter regulations over hazardous waste. Kerr replied that if his amendment would have no effect, there was no reason not to adopt it. The amendment failed on a divided voice vote. The bill would encourage a regional partnership with other states for toxic waste disposal. Each state would specialize in a different type of disposal facility.

The bill would reorganize the state Hazardous Waste Tratment Commission under a new name — the Hazardous Waste Management Commission — with the governor having a greater role in the waste disposal siting process.

Wicker said he still objects to a provision that would allow the use of landfills for largely untreated wastes and he said he would like to see more specific safety criteria.

Wicker said South Carolina officials have reacted favorably to the version approved by the Finance Committee.

Linares and wife Tamara answer reporters' questions after grand jury rejected indictment

Jurors Refuse To Indict Father In Baby's Death

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHICAGO — The legal ordeal is over for a father who disconnected his comatose son from a respirator and held him until he died, but the act of desperation reveals a gap in laws dealing with euthanasia, experts said.

A grand jury refused Thursday to indict Rudy Linares on a first-degree murder charge for the April 26 death of his 15-month-old son, Samuel.

Linares, 23, pulled a .357-caliber Magnum handgun on hospital staff and kept them at bay while taking his son off a respirator and cradling the boy in his arms until the severely brain-damaged toddler died.

He said he did it "because I loved my son." The child had been in a coma since August, when he accidentally swallowed a balloon, cutting off oxygen to his brain.

Linares pleaded guilty Thursday to a misdemeanor charge of unlawful use of a weapon and was sentenced by Circuit Judge Robert Bastone to one year conditional discharge, meaning he will serve no time in jail.

Bastone told him to get a psychological evaluation and consider counseling.

"As far as punishment is concerned, I think you have suffered enough," the judge said at a brief hearing.

"I'm glad it's more or less behind me now," Linares said. "I want to thank everybody that sent me cards, letters, their prayers, moral support."

Linares, a house painter from Cicero, had been charged with murder, but after the grand jury action, the state's attorney's office said it would not prosecute the charge.

Authorities say Linares also had unhooked his son's life-support system during a December visit, but that staff members immediately re-attached the boy's ventilator and did not notify police.

Groups that back legislation to support parents and other relatives in such cases applauded the grand jury's decision.

"Everybody is really relieved for Mr. Linares," said Fenella Rouse, legal director for the New York-based Society for the Right to Die. "It's the right decision. I'm very glad he'll be able to get back to some relative privacy."

Ms. Rouse said laws and court precedents at the federal and state levels protect parents and doctors in disconnecting life support when children are in irreversible comas.

"This wasn't a gray area," she said.

Prosecutors, the hospital and Linares' lawyers disagreed.

Public defender Kevin Smith said Congress and state legislatures must draft laws to govern such cases.

"The criminal courts are not where this should be dealt with," he said. "There should be an orderly way that a family dealing with a tragedy can end the suffering of a child or another loved one without being driven to an act of despair like Rudy Linares was driven."

State's Attorney Cecil Partee repeated his pledge to form a panel of medical, legal and religious representatives to analyze the issues raised by the case and seek appropriate laws.

Rush-Presbyterian-St. Luke's Medical Center had refused the family's requests to withdraw life support and welcomed prosecution for child abuse or murder because the youngster wasn't brain-dead.

"Serious questions remain for doctors and nurses as to how best to protect the rights of both our patients and their family members," the hospital said after the hearing.

State Rep. Thomas McCracken Jr., who has been involved in euthanasia issues in the Illinois General Assembly, said no laws to clarify legal options posed by the Linares case are on the horizon, and drafting them would be very difficult.

"Something needs to be hammered out," said McCracken, an attorney. "The courts are a bad place to make public policy."

Northestern University Law School professor Daniel Polsby predicted prosecutors would seek charges again if faced with a similar case.

"The one thing that the state's attorney cannot allow to happen is an open invitation for people to start euthanizing their relatives," Polsby said.

Los Angeles Students Listless As Teachers Stay On Strike

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — With no end to the walkout that has hobbled education in the nation's second-largest school system this week, substitute teacher Chris Farmer keeps smiling at striking teachers, but "They don't smile back."

And the juniors and seniors who showed up Thursday at his John Marshall High School classroom were a pretty listless bunch.

One girl thumbed through "Bridal Guide" magazine. A youth read "Coma," a paperback thriller. Three students sat with headphones in their ears. Several students answered questions from a stack of "Trivial Pursuit" game cards.

"It's pretty painful, really," Farmer said. "They're a good group of kids. They just want something to do."

The scene was typical of the 600 schools in the Los Angeles Unified School District, where 2,237 substitutes who crossed the picket lines for a special daily wage of $167 are coping with the workload of 22,000 striking teachers.

Student attendance has declined steadily since the strike began Monday. Of the 551,759 students enrolled this quarter, 283,620 were counted Thursday, down from 329,371 on Monday.

The first formal contract talks in months between the striking teachers union and the school district took place Thursday. Both sides agreed not to comment to reporters.

Farmer, tall and gangly with wire-rimmed glasses, is an erstwhile substitute teacher who doubles as a contract worker at the Jet Propulsion Laboratory in Pasadena. With no current contract at the lab, he has worked every day since the strike by the United Teachers-Los Angeles union began.

Farmer was one of 22 substitute teachers supplementing 17 Marshall faculty members who worked Thursday despite the strike. The staff normally includes 139 teachers.

Marshall is an ornate stone building that has been used as a backdrop for countless movies, commercials and television shows, including "Wildcats," "Grease" and "Room 222."

In 1987, a team from the school won the National Academic Decathlon, a point of pride for Principal Donald Hahn.

"One of the things the substitutes like about Marshall is that it's a good school," said Bill Pitkin, a biology teacher who began picketing at 5:30 a.m. Thursday.

His pride in the school was mixed with bitterness about substitutes whom he views as strikebreakers.

"There's one substitute in there who's an exceptional teacher. ... He's taught some of my biology classes. But we won't ever call for him as a substitute again," Pitkin said.

Teachers, who currently earn salaries of $23,440 to $43,319, are seeking a 26 percent pay increase over three years. The district is offering them a 21.5 percent increase over three years.

A little more than half of Marshall's enrollment of 2,780 students was counted in attendance Thursday. Farmer at first counted 26 students in his class, although another dozen or so trickled in over the next two hours and one bored student walked out.

There are no science teachers and few math teachers, the principal said, and many classes are lumped together. Administrators have scheduled three two-hour classes a day instead of the usual six one-hour periods.

The beginning of the strike was chaos, Hahn said, but "the longer it goes, the better it's going to be for us because we're getting more and more teachers each day."

Still, the shortage of teachers has all but brought education to a halt.

Students enrolled in math analysis, trigonometry and algebra find themselves in one room listening to a lesson that many find incomprehensible and others see as too elementary.

"It's kindergarten work." said senior Alexandra Cervantes, 18. The substitute teachers, she said, "are just sitting there, looking pretty and getting paid a hundred-and-sixty-whatever dollars a day."

Specialized programs also are suffering, said Wanda Fuhrmann, a striking special education teacher.

"The blind students are coming to school, and some are doing OK, and some are bouncing off the walls," she said.

Farmer tried to keep the students in his class busy by asking them to write a haiku, a three-line poem of 17 syllables.

One student responded:

Turmoil in the air
One against the other one
Resolution, come.

FAA Orders Repairs On Old Boeing Jets

LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — The Federal Aviation Administration scrapped its long-practiced method of monitoring the safety of aging airliners Thursday and ordered extensive modifications to older Boeing jets.

The order, spurred by the Aloha Airlines accident last year in which the top third of an older Boeing 737 peeled away in flight, affects 115 older Boeing 727s, 737s and 747s operated by U.S. airlines. Foreign carriers are expected to follow the order as well.

In issuing the order, the FAA abandoned its practice of relying on repetitive inspections of aircraft structures to detect cracks, corrosion and other signs of metal fatigue. Previously, aircraft parts were repaired or replaced after cracks were found. Under the order, aircraft parts will be replaced at a certain age, regardless of their condition.

"What we are clearly doing is setting a life limit on individual parts that we believe are critical structural elements," said Anthony Broderick, the senior FAA official who had headed the effort. "The goal is to get ahead of the development of cracks rather than try and catch up with the growth of them."

The directive combines 161 required modifications to the wings, body and tail for the three aircraft models. For example, the 727 changes involve 74 modifications, including 45 to the fuselage, 12 to the wings, eight to the doors, seven to the tail assembly, one to the landing gear and one to the engine strut.

On the 747, 29 modifications are required. One involves a replacement of an entire section of the aircraft's outer shell from the nose to the forward main passenger entry door. Three years ago, this area of the aircraft was found to be prone to cracking.

Antarctic Spill Reported

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — An environmental group wants Transportation Secretary Samuel Skinner to look into a four-month-old accident and fuel spill involving an Argentine Navy supply ship in Antarctica.

The Environmental Defense Fund says that while the government pushes cleanup of the Alaskan oil spill, little attention is being paid to damage and danger from the Bahia Paraiso, which lies overturned a mile from the U.S. scientific outpost at Palmer Station, Antarctica.

Fund lawyer Bruce Manheim, in a letter Thursday to Skinner, said the Bahia Paraiso ran aground Jan. 28, spilling 170,000 gallons of diesel fuel. But 70,000 gallons remain, posing a hazard because the wreck could be crushed by severe ice conditions which are expected with the onset of the Antarctic winter this month, he said.

Manheim urged Skinner to determine the likely fate of fuel still aboard the vessel, contact Argentine authorities to determine if they plan further action and "implement measures to eliminate further pollution from the ship if a grave or imminent threat of pollution exists."

Manheim said that while the Exxon Valdez spill of 11 million gallons of crude oil on March 24 into Alaska's Prince William Sound has produced a massive cleanup effort, Argentina "has essentially walked away" from the Bahia Paraiso shipwreck.

He asked Skinner to consider acting under international agreements that Manheim said would allow the United States to protect marine life and U.S. scientific interests on the icy continent.

Plutonium Talks Urged

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Sen. Edward M. Kennedy is leading a congressional drive to push the Bush administration into negotiations with the Soviet Union on a mutual halt to production of plutonium, a key ingredient in all nuclear weapons.

Kennedy, D-Mass., on Thursday unveiled a legislative proposal, introduced in both the House and Senate, that would shut down parts of the U.S. nuclear weapons complex unless President Bush pursued such negotiations within six months.

More than 90 congressmen cosponsored the House bill, and the Senate version had seven sponsors. More than 20 environmental, arms control and religious organizations announced their support for the measure.

The United States currently is unable to produce any plutonium because of breakdowns in its weapons production complex, but Bush has proposed spending several billion dollars to modernize and expand plutonium production in the 1990s.

The size of the U.S. plutonium stockpile is classified, but private experts say there is enough to last for hundreds of years without further production.

Kennedy said the unplanned suspension of U.S. plutonium production gives the administration an opening to counter Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev's recent flurry of arms control initiatives.

Inmate Executed For Chief's Death

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

JACKSON, Ga. — A man convicted in the murder of a small-town police chief was executed in Georgia's electric chair despite frantic appeals by lawyers who claimed he was denied a fair trial because of racism.

Henry Willis III, 36, was strapped into the electric chair at the Georgia Diagnostic and Classification Center shortly after 11 p.m Thursday. He was pronounced dead 20 minutes later.

He was sentenced to death for his part in the Feb. 11, 1976, slaying of Ray City Police Chief Ed Giddens. The 29-year-old chief was abducted and shot the day before he was to leave the force to manage orange groves in Florida.

The chief's son, Bill Giddens, said he felt relieved after the execution.

"It's a burden that's removed. It's something I've waited on for years. It's something I never thought would come true," Giddens said.

Willis was the 14th person executed in Georgia and the 109th in the nation since the U.S. Supreme Court allowed the death penalty to be reinstated in 1976.

In their appeals, Willis' attorneys claimed he did not receive a fair trial because blacks were excluded from the jury that convicted him.

The 11th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals delayed the execution for four hours, but the appeals court and the U.S. Supreme Court agreed with a lower court judge who said Willis' lawyers had failed to prove their claims.

Millard Farmer, Willis' attorney, met with the condemned man shortly after the Supreme Court ruling. He said Willis appeared resigned to his fate and deeply regretted the slaying.

Willis was led into the death chamber by six guards and sat rigidly in the heavy wooden chair while they strapped him in. He glanced briefly at Farmer but showed no emotion before a mask was placed over his face.

Willis was one of three men convicted in Giddens' death. The death sentence of another defendant has been stayed by a federal court. The third defendant was sentenced to life in prison.

Giddens was abducted after he stopped a car matching one used in a robbbery. He was taken to a swamp, where he begged for mercy. He was shot once while running away and again in the face before being thrown into the swamp, according to testimony.

Court Refuses To Reinstate Abortion Law

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — The U.S. Supreme Court refused to reinstate Florida's abortion consent law, clearing the way for a 15-year-old girl and other minors to get abortions without permission of parents or a judge.

The high court's action Thursday shifts the issue back to the Florida Supreme Court, which has said it would review the constitutionality of the abortion consent law in September.

"She can legally have an abortion right now and until the Florida Supreme Court rules again, that is the law," said Jerri Blair, attorney for the Lake County teen-ager who is 12 weeks pregnant and has been identified only as T.W.

Following the U.S. Supreme Court action, the state promptly moved Thursday to speed up the state Supreme Court's review of the abortion consent law or allow its enforcement until that review in September.

Under the 1988 law, unmarried women younger than 18 must get permission from parents or a judge before getting abortions.

"If the Florida Supreme Court denies the stay, it looks like the law will be unenforceable," said Assistant Attorney General Jerry Curington.

In papers filed with the state justices, Curington argued there is confusion over whether the U.S. Supreme Court's refusal to reinstate the law means it cannot be enforced statewide.

Although it was struck down by only one of Florida's five district appeals courts, a 1976 precedent apparently means it also cannot be enforced in the other four districts, he wrote.

Therefore, he argued, the justices should expedite their review or else keep the law in effect until they rule on the constitutional issues.

Ms. Blair, noting that the state Supreme Court already ruled Tuesday that abortions could proceed without consent, said, "It appears fairly ludicrous to bring this up again."

A lawyer appointed by the judge in T.W.'s case to represent the fetus obtained an order Tuesday from U.S. Supreme Court Justice Anthony M. Kennedy blocking an abortion.

On Thursday, the full federal court lifted Kennedy's order without comment or recorded dissent. The high court's decision was strictly procedural and did not rule on the merits or constitutionality of the law.

He is considered to hold a pivotal vote in a Missouri case asking the justices to reverse or curtail the court's 1973 decision in Roe vs. Wade legalizing abortion. A decision in that case is expected by late June.

But lawyers on both sides warned Thursday against reading too much significance into Kennedy's earlier order.

"I don't believe his action lends any real insight into his views on Roe vs. Wade," said James Bopp of the National Right to Life Committee. "It shows he takes the Supreme Court cases on parental involvement seriously but beyond that, I don't think you can say much more."

Charlene Carres, an American Civil Liberties Union lawyer in Tallahassee, said the court's action vindicates the ACLU's "initial impression that this was not any kind of sign that Justice Kennedy would necessarily be an anti-choice vote in the (Missouri) case."

Paper Says Sailors Bought Insurance

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NORFOLK, Va. — Authorities have launched a criminal investigation into a tip that two crew members of the USS Iowa had bought life insurance policies before the explosion that killed 47 sailors, a newspaper reported today.

The Virginian-Pilot and The Ledger-Star of Norfolk reported that federal authorities are looking into reports that the crewmen, one of whom died in the blast, took out life insurance policies more than a year ago naming each other as beneficiaries. Both policies were for $50,000, with a double-indemnity clause in case of accidental death, the sister of a crewman killed in the incident said.

She identified the beneficiary as one of the 11 men who survived the gun turret blast. The woman, who spoke on condition of anonymity and asked that her brother's name be withheld as well, said this week that she raised the insurance question with the Navy.

Agents from the Naval Investigative Service and the FBI have questioned crewmen this week and have begun analyzing evidence recovered from the turret, the newspaper said.

Officials contacted about a possible criminial investigation acknowledged that the naval service and FBI were questioning the beneficiary but would not elaborate.

Navy investigators also have learned that the gun turret was significantly undermanned and that a number of those working in the turret lacked required training, the newspaper said.

Turret No. 2, one of three on the 887-foot ship, had far fewer crewmen assigned than either of the other two, despite recommendations from the Iowa's gunnery officer two months before the April 19 explosion that the numbers be increased.

Bush Takes To Maine Retreat To Rest For Mitterrand Talks

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

KENNEBUNKPORT, Me. — President Bush is settling into a short period of rest and relaxation at his seaside home in advance of a meeting with French President Francois Mitterrand to discuss the upcoming NATO summit.

Bush arrived Thursday, and immediately took his powerboat for a spin. His motor got hung up on lobster track lines and he had to hang overboard to untangle.

At one point, the president was almost upside down, with Secret Service agents holding onto his thighs as he worked to unsnarl his propeller.

"Had to lift up the prop to free the line," Bush later told reporters.

Press secretary Marlin Fitzwater said that Bush's "plans are private" for today.

But the president showed no indications that he intended to remain within the confines of his family compound, which sits on a point jutting into the Atlantic Ocean at this resort community in southern Maine.

Barely an hour after his helicopter had landed on the grounds of his residence, Bush was out and about — first taking a motorcade into town to the marina where he keeps his boat when the tides are too low to allow him to use his own dock.

Then Bush was out for several hours at the wheel of his 28-foot Cigarette speedboat, crashing through the waves of the open Atlantic. It was the first time Bush has been out on the boat as president, and he was accompanied by several Coast Guard vessels that stood guard.

After the boat ride, Bush and his wife Barbara went into town for dinner at a Mabels, a local restaurant that specializes in lobster.

Bush and Mitterrand are to meet on Saturday for a session that aides said would focus on the NATO summit in Brussels later this month.

Bush has invited Mitterrand to visit with him for the weekend, and was to take the French leader with him to Boston on Sunday, where Bush was to give the commencement address at Boston University.

High on the agenda of a planned Saturday work session between the two presidents will likely be the issue of short-range missiles in western Europe.

The French leader has voiced general support for Bush's opposition to a West German call for early negotiations with the Soviets for eliminating tactical nuclear weapons in Europe.

However, while reiterating that it was still too early for such talks to begin, Mitterrand said in Paris on Thursday that the NATO allies should allow "time for reflection" and give conventional disarmament talks a chance before deciding to modernize U.S. short-range missiles in Europe.

The decision to update Lance missiles stationed in West Germany — which the United States has proposed — will not become urgent until about 1992, Mitterrand told a news conference.

He said he hoped the issue of short-range missiles, which has split NATO, could be dealt with calmly at the Brussels meetings of the alliance.

"If we have to modernize, then let's do it," he said. "But how do we know it's necessary?"

Still, the French president said he thought "the time has not come, far from it," for a "zero option" eliminating all short-range missiles from Europe.

France, which is a member of NATO but not part of its integrated military command, has already decided to modernize and extend the range of its own short-range nuclear missiles.

Fitzwater said the president was aware of Mitterrand's views from reading news accounts, but had no immediate reaction.

Bush visited an urban magnet school in Rochester, N.Y., on Thursday to build support for his $441 million education package, which calls for spending more than $100 million in federal funds to encourage such schools, which offer special courses.

The school he visited, Wilson Magnet School, specializes in computer, photographic and Japanese language courses and is receiving financial assistance from Eastman Kodak. He praised the photo giant in a later appearance at a Kodak plant for showing "America's public and private sectors can exceed the sum of their parts."

Bush's program has been criticized by congressional Democrats and many educators for not doing enough for education. And Bush on Thursday conceded, "our program isn't a be-all and end-all."

"We're living in times of complicated resource allocation," he said in the speech at the Kodak plant.

But, he added, his plan "is a commitment. A commitment to help business and academia make America much more productive."

WHO Issues AIDS Warning

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

GENEVA — More than 5 million new cases of AIDS could develop during the next decade, the World Health Organization said in its longest-term forecast to date.

The number of people infected by the virus, but not necessarily having the disease, could quadruple by the end of the century from the currently estimated 5 to 10 million people, the U.N. agency said Thursday.

The projections are "much worse than what we have experienced during the 1980's," Jonathan Mann, chief of WHO's AIDS program, told the 166-nation organization's annual meeting.

About 151,000 cases of acquired immune deficiency syndrome have been reported to WHO to date, but the agency estimates the actual worldwide total at about 375,000.

NRC Allows Low-Power Tests At Seabrook Plant

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Low-power tests at the $6 billion Seabrook, N.H., reactor could begin next week now that the Nuclear Regulatory Commission has removed the final regulatory obstacle a decade after the plant was scheduled to go on line.

An emergency court order is the lone remaining hope for Massachusetts Gov. Michael S. Dukakis and other Seabrook foes in their struggle to block a 5 percent power testing license.

The NRC gave its final approval Thursday by refusing to issue a regulatory stay of the license, the last in a series of agency hurdles that has delayed low-power operations for three years.

The commission, as part of its unanimous ruling, said it would not issue the license for seven days to give a federal appeals court time to rule on a request by Seabrook critics to prohibit low-power testing pending further legal reviews. There was no indication when the court would rule on the request, filed last week at the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals here.

NRC Chairman Lando W. Zech Jr. said the agency's staff could issue the license anytime after 4 p.m. next Thursday if the court does not grant an emergency stay. A license could come sooner if the court rules against the opponents' petition. No further commission consideration is necessary to grant the license.

"We have reviewed the concerns," Zech said after the brief vote. "We have determined at this stage low-power license is appropriate."

Zech said a full-power commercial license could be issued as early as late September.

Opponents argue it is impossible to safely evacuate the coastal towns near Seabrook, especially in the summer when beach-goers clog narrow access roads. The 1,150-megawatt reactor is two miles from the Massachusetts border, 40 miles north of Boston.

"How anyone thinks you can evacuate people from that site in a nuclear accident is beyond me," Dukakis said at the Massachusetts Statehouse in Boston.

Critics also say financial problems — the lead owner has filed for bankruptcy protection — and the requisite approval of emergency evacuation plans will block Seabrook from ever getting a full-power license. Therefore, they say, low-power tests would only make the plant more expensive to dismantle, greatly diminish any chance of converting it to another form of energy production and pose a danger to neighboring towns.

Massachusetts Attorney General James Shannon vowed that state officials are "in this fight for the long haul. We have months, if not years, of litigation ahead of us. The commonwealth remains resolute in its opposition."

Seabrook officials say the plant is safe and is badly needed to meet New England's energy needs into the 21st century. They say utility-drafted evacuation plans, written after Dukakis refused to submit plans for the six Massachusetts municipalities near the plant, are sufficient. Seabrook's evacuation plans include alerting Massachusetts neighbors by truck- and helicopter-mounted sirens.

At Seabrook, New Hampshire Yankee President Ed Brown praised the ruling, which represents the biggest victory for a plant that is already a decade behind schedule and billions over budget.

"We've reached a milestone that many people said would never come," he said.

Brown expressed confidence Seabrook officials would win in court and be able to start low-power testing early next month.

tion to everything is our ability to get along with other people," Qubein said. "God gave us talents, and God said let me see you use those in a skill that will be helpful to all man and womankind.

Goals should be consistent with purposes and values, he said. "We only get into trouble when our goals are inconsistent with our values."

Goals also should demand a person's best effort and should balance out as a total person — physically, mentally, psychologically and spiritually, he said.

"You've got to set goals that you can get excited about," he said.

"There's so much to live for but you and only you can find it. There is purpose in life but we can't depend on mom or dad or our boss to find it for us. You've got to find it yourselves,"

Pitt schools Superintendent Eddie West commended the students on their academic performance.

"We wanted you to know how proud we are of you and your accomplishments," he said. "You are the future of our state and county."

West also commended the parents for the nurturing and support they provided for their children.

George Williams, chairman of the Pitt County Board of Education, and Charles Ross, associate superintendent of instruction, presented certificates to the students, who are named state scholars based on their grade point averages and high school credits.

Homecoming

NEW HOLLAND, N.C. (AP) — Former residents of old New Holland, a Hyde County village doomed as a watery ghost town more than 50 years ago, plan to return this month for a homecoming.

The gathering, scheduled for May 27-28 at Mattamuskeet National Wildlife Refuge, was organized by a local historical organization to highlight the area's heritage and gain support for efforts to restore an abandoned lodge at the refuge. Tours, slide shows and a dinner are planned.

People who once lived in the community or worked at a series of unsuccessful ventures to drain and farm the bed of Lake Mattamuskeet will gather along with former employees of the federal refuge and the Civilian Conservation Corps.

CCC workers helped convert a pumping station on the lake into a hunting lodge during the mid-1930s.

AFTER

Commonly asked questions and answers concerning this procedure.

Question: "How long does the procedure take?"
Answer: This procedure takes only 15 to 20 minutes to start and the patient completes the treatment at home and to their desired degree of whiteness; however, on your first visit, the dentist must prepare you for the procedure and usually a normal one-hour appointment is sufficient. The results are very predictable when the patient follows the instructions to the letter. Most cases can be completed within a two week period, more complicated cases may require a longer period of time. Patients who follow the instructions properly may see results within the first three days of treatment.

Question: "If this is such a new procedure, how can I be sure it's safe?"
Answer: Although it is a new product, it is based on the older bleaching techniques that have been in use on teeth for over twenty years. When used properly, these techniques have proven to be extremely safe but overpriced for most people. It is a much milder medication than anything ever used before for this purpose and is priced where every patient can now afford to look their very best with a totally different and easier procedure.

Question: "How long will the results last?"
Answer: The procedure can be permanent with occasional and proper maintenance.

Productive Joyce Carol Oates Is One Author With Two Sides

By David Germain
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TROY, N.Y. — Inside her house of glass, Joyce Carol Oates lives to haunt her readers, writing books with all the anguish of Thomas Hardy and all the breadth of Dickens.

Outside her glass-walled house in Princeton, N.J., there's a different Oates, one who makes fewer demands, one who really wants to be liked.

Oates surprised her audience at a recent literary reading at Russell Sage College in Troy, just north of Albany. The audience knew of Oates' fascination with doubles and alter egos. They also wondered how one writer could churn out two or more hefty books a year while teaching and lecturing. But hearing her on stage, they thought there really might be two Joyce Carol Oates, and that night they got the funny one.

She began with a terse, cryptic piece that was over before the audience had a chance to really tune in. There was a silence, a few coughs. No one was sure if literary etiquette allowed them to applaud.

"If that means nothing to you, you're very lucky," Oates said before moving on to a slightly longer piece. "I feel you're getting strength now and can handle longer work."

Later, when the audience did applaud, she thanked them, but added, "I assume you're applauding to hurry me up."

The audience had come to hear the bookish, 50-year-old Princeton professor who has published 50 works since 1963 — harsh and haunting and lyrical books in which used furniture salesmen fall victim to McCarthyism, and suicide is always an option.

Instead, they saw a lanky woman who told funny stories.

When she first started publishing, she submitted stories under the name "J.C. Oates."

"I had the erroneous idea it was a world inhospitable to women writers," she said. "Editors would assume 'J.C. Oates' was a man. Maybe they were right in some symbolic way."

That leads to her fascination with doubles. The worst day of her life was caused by her alter ego, or "the double who undone me," Oates says. The double is Rosamond Smith, the pseudonym she adopted to publish last year's novel, Lives of the Twins. Oates didn't tell her agent or her publisher, E.P. Dutton. Both were peeved.

"I just wanted a new identity, kind of a freshness, to have a book come out where nobody was comparing it to other books," she said in an interview. "You can't escape your identity. That's very frustrating."

Lives of the Twins deals with twin brothers whose polar personalities merge as they fight for the same woman. Oates has written a second novel as Rosamond Smith — being happily published by Dutton — which centers again on doubles. Soul Mate, due out this spring, is about a Princeton-type professor involved with her opposite, a charming, Ted Bundyish psychopathic killer.

Her latest novel, American Appetites, takes place in a fictional town in New York's lower Hudson Valley. The setting is a camouflaged Princeton, and the main characters live in the same glass-walled house Oates shares with her husband, Raymond Smith.

Like all her writing, American Appetites has an intensity and ferocity that disturbs readers. The main character, Ian McCullough, is tried for manslaughter in the accidental death of hi wife:

"Had he really thought she would be returned to him and their life would continue as always? — as if nothing had happened? — seizing her shoulders as he had, in a paroxysm of murderous rage, and throwing her backward, helplessly backward, into death: into a sheet of glass."

A Princeton colleague has called Oates the fourth Bronte sister, while John Updike suggested Oates was born 100 years too late, that she belonged amid "a race of Victorian word-eaters."

"She has, I fear, rather overwhelmed the puny, parsimonious critical establishment of this country," Updike writes.

She won the National Book Award for her novel, them, received the O. Henry Prize for Continuing Achievement in the Short Story and is a perpetual Nobel Prize candidate.

Even so, critics complain about the complexity of Oates' work and her handling of traditionally male subjects. She's been accused of writing like a man, even of writing too much.

If there's a question Oates hates, it's "Why so much violence?" In her novel Wonderland, a father kills his family before shooting himself. In Expensive People, a young son plans suicide by gorging himself after killing his mother. In Bellefleur, a vulture flies off with a bleeding baby in its talons, and the heir-apparent of a dynastic clan wipes out his family by crashing an airplane into their castle.

So why so much violence?

Most writers have violence in their fiction, Oates says, citing former Princeton colleague E.L. Doctorow's novel Billy Bathgate, about gangster Dutch Schultz.

"It's much more violent than anything I've written," she said. "But I notice in the reviews that (Doctorow) gets, there's never any mention of that. I think that's because he's a male writer."

Oates grew up just outside the Erie Canal town of Lockport, N.Y. Her father, Frederic, was an autoworker and signpainter; her mother, Carolina, a housewife.

JOYCE CAROL OATES

Fred Oates, a former amateur boxer, got his daughter interested in boxing when he took her to Golden Gloves matches in Buffalo in the 1950s. The interest revived when she researched her novel, You Must Remember This, leading her to a friendship with heavyweight champ Mike Tyson and to ringside commentary at fights. Oates also wrote a book-length essay, On Boxing, examining the sport not so much as athletics but as drama or dance.

Felix Stevick, a character in You Must Remember This, is a boxer; Oates' research makes her feel as if she's been in the ring herself.

Blue Jeans Still Tops With Teens

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Make-up is out and '60s fashions are in, according to a poll on teen preferences.

Nearly 25 percent of the teens identify styles of the '60s — miniskirts, bell bottoms and anything tie-dyed — as the trendiest clothes this year, and nearly 30 percent list jeans — faded, washed out or ripped — as the hottest single item.

Baggy, over-sized clothing is also very popular, with cardigans and anything leather among the leaders.

The '60s also influence accessories, with peace signs and happy faces in the fore.

The survey was sponsored by Sunkist Soft Drinks Inc. and included thousands of teen-agers at 250 high schools in 45 states.

Why the '60s, a decade of love-ins and flower children, campus sit-ins and political violence?

"Because our parents say that really was a great period," says Chris David Frank, a senior at Lake Brantley H.S. in Altamonte Springs, Fla. Frank was one of five students in New York to represent a cross-section of students from the survey.

Others were Chad DiNenna, Westlake H.S., Westlake Village, Calif.; Marie Schloss, Grandview H.S., Grandview, Wash.; Amy Klepsch, Morton H.S., Hammond Ind., and Nicol Bradford, Eisenhower H.S. in Houston.

By the way, nearly 70 percent of teens surveyed consider their parents cool or wise.

Phoebe Snow Makes Comeback

Singer's Bitter Life Enters A 'Safety Zone'

By Mary Campbell
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — The 1980s haven't been too kind to Phoebe Snow. But then, nor have the '70s or any other time.

"I've had an incredibly difficult life," the song stylist says, as she lets the world know that Phoebe Snow is back, alive and quite well.

"I feel a little bit like I'm in the safety zone. Things are fairly peaceful compared to how they've been. It sort of makes you appreciate how tenuous life can be and how fragile and how precious.

"I'm afraid to say that too much, afraid the house will fall on me. When you've been scuffling, you don't want to do anything to start trouble in the waters again."

Snow, who describes herself as a former "wandering minstrel," is finding her comeback welcome. Critics and fans hailed her recent performance at the Bottom Line in New York, and her new LP, "Something Real," has received an enthusiastic response. It's her first since "Rock Away" in 1981.

The main reason Snow hasn't been able to pursue her career consistently is because she has been living in New Jersey caring for her 13-year-old daughter, Valerie, who was born severely brain-damaged.

"I have a wonderful woman, since November," Snow says. "She's a blessing from God. We've had some not-so-nice people. ... She spoils Valerie rotten, but that's OK.

"To do what I do most efficiently, eventually I'll have to have more than one person to take care of my daughter."

Her career, which quickly took flight in the early '70s, slipped away just as easily. Inexperienced in the music business, she broke a number of contracts with record companies and others and found herself embroiled in a number of lawsuits and severe financial problems. But her career and all other problems have taken a back seat to her daughter.

"The busiest live year was 1983. I did almost 90 dates that year. It was the Invisible Phoebe Snow Tour. It was the best-kept secret, pretty low budget, not much advertising," she said.

Phoebe Snow: A welcome return

"It was anybody's guess as to whether we'd survive. I was ill. I'm one of those people who feels quite driven to do things and regrets it afterwards. I'll never forget San Francisco. I had bronchial pneumonia. They found a doctor who said, 'Don't worry, I'll get her on stage.' This is not an uncommon story.

"I was so sick I was almost crawling on my hands and knees on stage. I couldn't sing. My throat was completely closed up. I did a comedy routine. I thought, 'I better keep talking or I'm going to pass out.' It was spontaneity based upon desperation. Everytime I looked at the keyboard player he was in tears laughing.

"I can't remember one thing I said.

"I'm going to write a book. Part of it is going to be some of the road experiences. Promoters come up with the doctors: 'You're geting the mystery doctor.' People think this is a glamorous job. Surprise!"

Last year, Snow had a hit duet record with Dave Mason, "The Dreams I Dream." Earlier, she did a featured background part on Joe Cocker's "The One," the B side of his "Unchain My Heart."

She also gave a number of performances at Acme, a downtown Manhattan club. "A lot of my friends were in the house band. Every Wednesday night was blues night. Nothing was allowed but 12-bar blues. Cyndi Lauper came down and jammed one night. John Waite and Carole King and her daughter sang. It was really fun."

At the time her first album, "Phoebe Snow," and hit single, "Poetry Man," came out in 1974, Snow was an insecure person. No more.

"There are turning points in everyone's life where you decide if you're going to sink or swim. My insecurity wasn't serving me well at all. It was really a stumbling block," she said.

"You read up on it. You watch how other people function. Wallowing in insecurity can be a very tiresome thing for yourself and anyone around you. I'm in analysis. You don't like the way things are working, you've got to change them. Searching your soul can also be exhausting.

"I want my life to run as smoothly as it can run. In this business, that's a joke."

There's no man in her life now. "I'm tired of having failed relationships, so I'd prefer not to have any. I don't know if I came out and said that before. I'm saying it now. I'm saying to all the men who've been in my life, 'Thank you very much for the experience. Goodbye.'

"I'm not conventional or conservative. But in that regard, I always thought I'd live with a man who was my friend and partner in life. I believe I will meet a nice man and settle down. That's something I'm striving for. I'm not ready yet."

Snow took a visualization course to help ner reorganize her life.

"You close your eyes, relax your body and see how your life is now juxtaposed with how you'd like it to be. We practiced it every week. There was a lot of humor in it," she said.

"A good percentage of what I visualized is happening now. You can say it would have happened anyhow. But I would recommend visualization. For one thing, it takes your mind off everything else."

Professor Gives Her Lessons Behind Bars

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RIDGEVILLE, S.C. — When Dr. Harriette Magee isn't teaching at Baptist College, she's likely to be in prison.

Magee, chairwoman of the Department of Behavioral Sciences and associate professor of psychology at Baptist College, is one of several professors and instructors who have been going behind prison bars at Liebar Correctional Institution near Ridgeville since the fall of 1986 to offer college-level courses to the inmates.

She teaches general and abnormal psychology at the medium-security state prison. And other teachers, including four department chairmen from Baptist College, offer courses in such areas as English, math, sociology, criminology, and botany.

The program, directed by Dr. Robert N. Stevens, assistant vice president of enrollment management at Baptist College, offers associate arts degrees and 125 inmates have signed up to take courses. Five men, the first to earn degrees while serving at Lieber, are scheduled to receive their degrees this month.

Magee says she is asked often if she isn't afraid to go behind bars to teach murderers, rapists, armed robbers and the like. And her answer is always a quick "no."

"The inmates are better behaved than most young (freshmen) students at the college," she says. "I've been teaching at Lieber for three years and I have never had a discipline problem."

That does not mean teaching students in prison classrooms is easier than teaching students on college campuses, she says. It's just different.

For instance, she says her style of teaching is to use real-life examples so her students can relate to abstract ideas. But she learned early on she had to develop a whole new set of examples to get her points across in prison. A college student may identify with running down to the corner to get a pizza, but a prison inmate won't.

Also, prison inmates tend to have broader life experiences than do college students, and they don't accept the authority of experts the way young college students do.

They participate "very, very much" in class discussions, but they almost always study alone, unlike college students who often are shy in class but like to study in groups.

But as a group, she says, the prisoners' intelligence level is every bit as high as any college group she has ever taught.

However, there are problems involved with teaching in prison that classroom teachers do not face. For example, security requirements at the prison forbid anyone from bringing chemicals into the prison compound, so teaching chemistry becomes almost impossible.

Also, courses normally require field trips, but field trips are denied to prison inmates for obvious reasons. Botany teachers at Lieber compensate by using plants inmates grow inside the prison walls.

Further, college students have access to well-stocked research libraries. Lieber has a small library but it's designed for the general prison population, not for college-level research. The inmates do the best they can with what they have, and teachers have to take that into consideration when making assignments.

Magee says she got interested in teaching prisoners while working on her doctorate dissertation at the Mosely Diagnostic and Evaluation Clinic, which is the evaluation center for the state's Coastal Work Release Center in North Charleston. While she was there, she began to see how much education could help prisoners.

Education is the way to go," she says. "It can be the major thrust in people's lives. It is the basic to a better life for anyone."

But though her desire is to help people better themselves, she says, she makes a point of not getting involved personally with any student. She knows her students' names, but unless they volunteer information on themselves, she never knows what crimes landed them in prison.

"All I know is they are students," she says. "I don't want to know anything that will influence my feelings, so I never ask."

Despite the special problems associated with teaching behind prison walls, she says, there are also special benefits.

Some of the benefits are spiritual, such as the lift she receives when a prisoner realizes for the first time he can succeed in life on his own terms, by his own merits, without cheating.

And then there are the little things that prove to her prisoners care about what she is doing for them. Take, for example, a little piece of plywood that hangs on her college office wall along with awards for excellence in teaching and outstanding service to Baptist College.

The sandpapered, heavily shellacked plywood is carefully hand-engraved with the words, "Professor of the Year, 1988-89."

Mother Takes On Gangs After Violence Kills Son

By Sharon Cohen
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHICAGO — Frances Sandoval's enemy is mean and tough and lives in a world where life is cheap and death is common. She already knows this foe can kill — her son as a victim.

Gang violence killed Arthur Sandoval. He was 15. His mother mourned, then rose to face the gangs and say enough is enough.

She formed "Mothers Against Gangs," a call to action for those like her who've seen so many young lives destroyed, so much blood shed and so many dreams snuffed out.

"Gangs represent death, pain and suffering," said the 35-year-old Ms. Sandoval. "This is not one family's problem. It's all the families in the community. ... Only together can we send the message we're not going to accept you or tolerate you. It's reinforcing (the fact) we have some control over the destiny of our children."

"Mothers Against Gangs" monitors court cases, lobbies lawmakers, accompanies victims' families to trials and leads campaigns to clean up the graffiti gangs use to mark their territory.

Arthur died in January 1985. He and a buddy had gone to look for the friend's sister and found her talking to five gang members.

A fight broke out and as Arthur and his friend were leaving, a sixth gang member appeared. He stuck a knife into Arthur's heart, pulled it out and stabbed him again.

Ms. Sandoval later tracked down the woman who had cradled her dying son. "She told me she held my son and covered him with a coat," she said. "All he said was he was cold."

Three gang members identified Arthur's killer, Ms. Sandoval said, but he had no job or family to keep him in the area and police weren't optimistic about capturing him.

So a determined Ms. Sandoval appealed for help on English- and Spanish-speaking television and radio. She offered a $1,000 reward.

In less than two weeks, an anonymous caller phoned police and the man was picked up.

The family's pain had just begun. That year, Ms. Sandoval's younger son, Vincent, failed in school. Her daughter, Lydia, attempted suicide with an overdose of epilepsy medication.

"All she knew was her brother was dead and the person who killed him was alive," Ms. Sandoval said. "She completely disassociated herself from the legal system."

In the fall of 1985, the accused, who said he mistook Arthur's fatigue jacket for one from a rival gang, was convicted of murder. Before the judge imposed a 35-year-sentence, Ms. Sandoval turned to Arthur's killer, Juan Lopez Rojo.

"I said, 'You did not know my son and my son did not know you. Animals kill for survival. But you killed for the sake of killing. You pursued him to kill him. You should receive the same sentence as you gave to Arthur.'

"This was a future that was murdered, not just a person," she now says, her eyes welling with tears. Arthur was an honors student who dreamed of becoming a Marine, she said.

Publicity about Ms. Sandoval's plight prompted other victims' mothers to call, most of them seeking help or just a sympathetic ear.

One woman whose son was killed, she recalled, told her she could not face the murderer alone. Ms. Sandoval went to court and saw the mother sitting alone with her two daughters, while the other side was crowded with friends and family of the two accused. "I began to feel there definitely is something wrong," she said.

In the spring of 1986, Ms. Sandoval and a few other mothers formed the group. Initially, it was for victims' families. Then Ms. Sandoval started hearing from gang members' mothers.

One, she said, called and said: "'My son is one of them.' She was crying. 'Please help me. Do you know what it's like to go to the railroad tracks and pick up your son half beaten to death? I know he's going to die. I'm just waiting for the call ... or the knock on the door.'"

These mothers are now part of the organization, which claims more than 700 members in three Illinois chapters. Plans have been made to expand outside the state and spinoffs already have formed. Funding comes from private donations.

"Mothers" seeks to organize neighborhoods wracked by gang violence. "It's necessary they realize they have some control," she said. "The communities have to stop passively accepting that this is the way it is."

Cleaning up gang symbols, for example, she said, "gives them the sense they don't have to sit back and fold their hands."

Those who know Ms. Sandoval, a petite, blunt-spoken woman who's an administrative assistant to an alderman, think she can make a difference.

"What she offers people is a sign of hope and courage," said Timothy McCormick, an ex-priest who once worked with Ms. Sandoval. "She speaks out a lot of times when a lot of people won't. ... Gangs live off others' fears and she challenges them. Many times people want to hide in the shadows. Frances calls you to stand out in the light."

"She has that extra credibility and that urgency," said the Rev. Larry Craig, who counseled Ms. Sandoval and whose church is across the street from where Arthur was stabbed.

Bridesmaid Learns The Cost Of Friendship Too High For Her To Pay In This Wedding

Dear Abby
Abigail Van Buren

Dear Abby: I just learned that a friend for whom I agreed to be a bridesmaid tried to make a profit on the bridesmaids' dresses. "Betty" told me the dress cost $125. When she delivered it to me, I thought it looked rather cheap and poorly made, but I didn't say anything. I paid the $125 in good faith.

Another bridesmaid, Betty's roommate, called to tell me that she just found a sales slip listing the dress as $54, and she was so disgusted, she pulled out of the wedding party. That gave me the courage to call Betty and tell her I was pulling out, too, and why.

I had also planned a wedding shower for Betty, which I canceled. Betty became very defensive and said the store had made a mistake in marking the dresses, which was untrue. I checked with the store.

Betty is now frantically calling around trying to find other girls to be her bridesmaids. She told one girl the dresses cost $125, but she could have hers for $60.

Money is not the issue here. I told Betty that she was not the kind of person I wanted for my friend. She accused me of "overreacting" and making a big deal out of nothing.

I would like your opinion and so would the other bridesmaids who dropped out. — Ex-Bridesmaids In Long Beach

Dear Ex-Bridesmaids: Overreacting? No way. I have heard of petty ripoffs, but I must say that this is a new low. (And people ask me if I make up these letters.)

Dear Abby: After a recent death in our family, I suddenly realized that I didn't have a will.

I intend to make one as soon as possible, but I need to know if it's possible to write a will myself, or must I use a lawyer?

If I write my own will, is it necessary to have it notarized? Also, is there anything else I should know to make sure it holds up? — Roger The Dodger In California

Dear Roger: Each state has its own laws concerning wills, but in California a "holographic" will — one written in one's own handwriting — is legal, providing: It is written on a plain piece of paper with no other writing on the paper. The writer must show a "donative" intent, stating clearly what he wants left to whom. The will must be signed and dated by the author.

A holographic will requires no witnesses.

Dear Abby: I want to comment on a problem I have never seen addressed in your column. I live in Atlanta, and like all large cities, the traffic is heavy and driving is dangerous.

However, in spite of that fact, I see people reading newspapers, business documents, letters and even books while they are driving! How can they read while they're driving, and at the same time concentrate on the traffic?

The first time I noticed this, I thought it was an isolated fluke. But now, rarely a day goes by that I don't see at least one person reading something propped up on the steering wheel.

Dear Man: A partial list off the top of my head:

1. Boredom. (A stupid reason.)
2. Wants to finish an article, letter or document.
3. Cramming for a test.
4. Reviewing material he or she must know at the finish of the drive.
5. A death wish.

Claude Pepper 'Seriously Ill'

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Rep. Claude D. Pepper's condition worsened overnight, his office said, and a personal friend and aide described the 88-year-old lawmaker today as "pretty weak" and in "very serious condition" at Walter Reed Army Medical Center.

"He's pretty weak but he's not in pain or anything," Bob Smith said in a telephone interview from the Florida Democrat's Washington home.

Pepper's office issued a statement saying, "Congressman Claude Pepper's condition has worsened overnight. He continues to rest comfortably ...."

Pepper, the oldest member of Congress, was first hospitalized April 6 for an undisclosed stomach ailment. He recently received treatment at the Johns Hopkins University Hospital in Baltimore but was transferred back to Walter Reed on Monday, Smith said.

Pepper, of Miami, is chairman of the House Rules Committee, the powerful panel that helps the Democratic leadership command the timing and scope of debate in the chamber.

China Declares Martial Law

collapsed fasters to hospitals rang through the city, and marchers and trucks filled with protesters headed for Tiananmen Square, where about 100,000 protest supporters milled.

Student leaders urged their classmates not to respond with force if police or soldiers tried to break up the sit-in. The students said they would stay in the square until the government agreed to their demands, which include a dialogue on political reform, free press, and an end to official corruption.

The hunger strike capped a monthlong student movement and triggered nationwide marches representing the biggest defiance of the government in 40 years of communist rule. More than 3,000 students had been fasting in Beijng, and hundreds of students in other cities also staged hunger strikes. It was not immediately known if they also agreed to end their strikes.

A source in the People's Liberation Army said troops from outside the Beijing region were brought in for "possible action" after the 38th Army, which protects the capital, said it was unwilling to suppress the protests.

But there was no stepped-up police presence around the square late today, and no soldiers were seen.

Zhao, accompanied by Li, visited some of the strikers before dawn, boarding buses where they had sought shelter from a rainstorm.

"I came too late, too late. I should be criticized by you," strikers quoted Zhao as saying. Students of Beijing Normal University said Zhao had tears in his eyes as he spoke to them and autographed their hats and shirts.

He said the "problems you have raised will eventually be resolved," but he made no concrete offer, the students said.

"He was very sincere, he was sympathetic and understanding," said Chen 'ong, a 22-year-old math major, who spoke with difficulty through cracked lips.

Chen showed an umbrella that Zhao autographed. But he and other students said the visit had little significance because Zhao "expressed only his own views and not those of the government."

The students said Li stayed a few minutes and said little.

Two sources said Zhao offered to resign after his four fellow members on the Standing Committee of the Politburo, the party's highest decision-making body, rejected his proposal that they reach an agreement with the protesters.

The committee said the matter would have to be considered by a larger party body, either the entire Politburo or the Central Committee.

Tens of thousands of people arrived by train from0across China today to parade around Tiananmen. Many young people and workers marched along with truckloads of uniformed police and army and navy cadets.

Kentucky Gets A Three-Year Probation

NCAA Sanctions Include No Television Appearance For One Year And 2-Year Ban On Post-Season Play

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LEXINGTON, Ky. — The University of Kentucky basketball program, the most successful in college history, was put on three years probation today by the NCAA, with sanctions to include no television appearances for a year and a two-year ban on postseason play.

Kentucky may also award only three scholarships in basketball for the coming two years. If any current player leaves the team as a result of the sanctions, that scholarship will be lost.

The university will also have to forfeit all of the money it received from participating in the 1988 NCAA Tournament because of the participation of Eric Manuel, who was found to be academically ineligible.

According to a release from the NCAA made available by the university today, Kentucky avoided more serious penalties by cooperating in the investigation of possible infractions.

Among other mitigating factors were the appointment of a new athletics director and the resignation of the entire basketball coaching staff.

Among the most serious violations alleged by the NCAA were:

—Former assistant coach Dwane Casey sent cash to the father of then-recruit Chris Mills. The discovery of that cash in an opened air-express package in Los Angeles in April 1988 began the investigation that culminated with today's announcement.

—Eric Manuel committed academic fraud by cheating on a college entrance examination.

—Casey demonstrated a "knowing and willful" effort to violate NCAA regulations and provided false information to investigators about his role in rules violations.

The NCAA Committee on Infractions said Kentucky's violations would have justified a ban on regular-season play for the Wildcats.

"While breakdowns occurred in the institution's control over the program, the university's president acted forcefully to uncover all relevent information in the case and to set a proper direction for the future of Kentucky's athletics program," the committee said in its report.

The committee credited these actions and so the penalties, "although severe, do not include any limitation on regular-season competition," the report said.

The university may appeal the sanctions, but is not expected to.

The 13-month investigation of the Wildcat basketball program already has several casualties.

Former athletics director Cliff Hagan, a Kentucky basketball star in the 1950s, resigned in November. He was replaced by another former Wildcat, C.M. Newton, whose 30-year coaching career included stops at Alabama and Vanderbilt.

Coach Eddie Sutton and his entire staff also ended their four-year stay at Kentucky in the aftermath of the NCAA inquiry.

The infractions committee credited the departure of Sutton, his staff and others connected to the tainted program for keeping penalties to a minimum.

Newton has spent the last two months searching for a new head basketball coach, but has been stymied by concern among prospective applicants about the NCAA penalties.

A loss of prestige has not been the only cost of the lengthy investigation. The university has spent more than $350,000 conducting its own investigation of the basketball program. Most of the money has been paid to the law firm of James Park Jr., a former Kentucky appeals court judge who has led the in-house probe.

Manley Overcoming Illiteracy

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Watching teammate Joe Theismann's career shattered with a broken leg propelled Dexter Manley to learn to read and write.

"I can recall that vividly," the Washington Redskins defensive end told a Senate panel. "I had so much fear and insecurity. I was saying, I hope to God this never happens to me because what would I do."

Theismann's leg was broken when he was tackled by New York Giants linebacker Lawrence Taylor in a game three years ago.

Although judged to have a second-grade reading level when he enrolled in night classes at Washington' Lab School three years ago, Manley graduated from Houston schools and then attended Oklahoma State University despite a severe learning disability that effectively rendered him illiterate. He left Oklahoma State 45 hours short of his degree.

"Somehow or another, you have to find the will ... to come forward and ask for help. That's the most difficult thing for a human being to do," Manley told Sen. Paul Simon, D-Ill., chairman of the Senate education subcommittee, Thursday. "I had to humble myself. I had to walk into the Lab School and not pretend. Today I can read and write. I have some self-respect."

Manley brought with him a written statement, but with all eyes on him in a hearing room packed with spectators and television cameras, he began to stumble from the first sentence. Sweat rolled down his cheeks and tears of frustration filled his eyes by the time he had reached the second paragraph.

After a long pause, Wally "Famous" Amos, the cookie magnate and a spokesperson for the Literacy Volunteers of America, approached the witness table, put his arm around Manley and spoke softly to him.

"Just tell your story, how it came about," Simon told Manley after Amos had returned to his seat. "Don't worry about that prepared statement. This takes more courage than anything you've done on the football field."

A relieved Manley told Simon and Sen. Barbara Mikulski, D-Md., about receiving 19 grades of "F" in second grade and being placed in a special education class for four years.

"It was very difficult because I felt I was normal, but I was told I was dumb and stupid. I had a lot of rejection in my life," he said. Athletics was the only thing "that built some self-esteem, some self-worth in Dexter Manley. Other than that, I had no identity."

Jordan, Bulls Look To Clinch

Down 3-2, New York Faces A Do-Or-Die Situation

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHICAGO — The latest and what could be the last episode of the David-and-Goliath show is set for Chicago Stadium tonight as Patrick Ewing leads the New York Knicks against Michael Jordan and the Bulls in the sixth game of the NBA Eastern Conference semifinal.

The Bulls bring a 3-2 record to their home floor, and a victory would propel them into the conference final against a well-rested Detroit Piston squad. A loss would send them back to New York for a seventh and deciding game Sunday.

Ewing's size and Jordan's agility have proved to the dominant factors in each team's successes, and Chicago Bulls coach Doug Collins said the sixth game won't likely be any different.

"I think Patrick Ewing is a lot like Michael in that when he's playing well, he gives his teammates the feeling they can win," Collins said Thursday after putting the Bulls throuh a 90-minute workout.

"To win, we have to come up with the rebounds and be that defensive force we've been in most of the playoffs."

If the Knicks do win two more games, they would become the fifth team to rebound from a 3-1 deficit and capture a playoff series. Boston Celtic teams turned the trick in 1968 and 1981, while the Lakers and Washington Bullets managed the feat once each in the 1970s.

Jordan said worrying too much about the Knicks and their vaunted pressure defense may be counter-productive at this stage of the playoffs.

"We have to get ourselves back on track," Jordan said. "We have to get it back together mentally before we worry about their game."

Jordan has been bothered by a groin pull, but said, "Every day off makes the muscles feel better."

The Knicks extended the series with a 121-114 victory in New York on Tuesday night as Ewing collected 32 points and 11 rebounds and dominated the game down the stretch. Charles Oakley added 18 points and 13 rebounds to offset Jordan's 38 points.

Although both the 7-foot Ewing and the 6-6 Jordan have been lighting up the board with baskets, defense figures to be the key in tonight's game, even though Knicks coach Rick Pitino said his team's trapping defense has been minimized by Jordan throughout the series.

"We don't press when Jordan is in there," said Pitino. "He's capable of breaking the press. ... I have never seen a player yet, except Michael Jordan, who you cannot trap."

Jordan acknowledges the praise, but said he expected some new wrinkles in New York's attack.

"They have their backs against the wall and they have to come up with something defensively. I don't think they're going to press as much as they have, and I think we have to be aware of that," he said.

Collins feels that the Knicks will go to Ewing on the offensive end of the floor in hopes of getting Bulls center Bill Cartwright in foul trouble.

"Obviously, they are going to go inside because they realize Bill Cartwright is an important part of our offense and they would like to get him out of there," said Collins.

In the West, Phoenix and Los Angeles begin their best of seven series to decide a berth in the NBA finals.

The regular-season games between the Lakers and the Suns tended to be runaways — both ways.

"We both beat each other bad," Los Angeles guard Magic Johnson said Thursday. "But that was the regular season and that doesn't have anything to do with the playoffs."

After splitting their six regular-season contests, the Lakers and Suns begin their best-of-7 Western Conference title showdown Saturday at the Forum.

The one constant during the regular-season meetings between the Pacific Division rivals was that each proved less than a hospitable host.

Griffey Sr. Sees Griffey Jr.

Off-Day Gives Father A Chance To See Son Play

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SEATTLE — With a day off, Ken Griffey of the Cincinnati Reds flew cross-country to take in a baseball game.

Griffey was in the Kingdome Thursday night to see his 19-year-old son, Ken Griffey Jr., who plays center field for the Seattle Mariners. He doesn't know the next time he'll get an opportunity to see his son play again this year. "It's hard to say when I'll be able to back," Griffey, 39, said before the game. "I haven't gotten much chance to see him play since '82. So every opportunity I get to see him play, I'll fly to see wherever he's at. I just want to see him play and see how he develops."

Griffey, playing in his 17th major league season, was visibly tired as he slumped against a wall behind the Mariners' dugout and answered reporters' questions about his son. He had a flight booked out of Seattle-Tacoma International Airport at 5 a.m. today to return to Cincinnati for a game tonight.

"I don't want to be late for work," he said with a smile.

Trainer D. Wayne Lukas runs his horse through a workout

Experts Picking Easy Goer

3-Year Old Colt May Be Ready To Go This Time

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BALTIMORE — Kentucky Derby winner Sunday Silence may be an early favorite for the Preakness, but horsemen are beginning to think Easy Goer is the horse to beat, again.

"If I had to pick a horse to win this thing, I'd pick that one right over there," trainer Ron McAnally said, pointing toward Easy Goer's stall. "He's ready now."

Sunday Silence and Easy Goer were two of nine 3-year-old colts entered Thursday for the 1 3-16-mile Preakness at Pimlico on Saturday. Sunday Silence upset the favored Easy Goer by 2½ lengths in the Derby two weeks ago in the mud at Churchill Downs, and he is bidding to become the first Triple Crown winner since Affirmed 11 years ago.

Oddsmakers set the morning line at 7-5 for Sunday Silence and 8-5 for Easy Goer, although Easy Goer is expected to be the favorite by post time. Sunday Silence worked a quick half mile in 47 1-5 on Thursday after taking two days off from training earlier in the week with a sore foot.

"Easy Goer wasn't seasoned for the Derby," said McAnally, who is training the longshot Hawkster for the Preakness. "Besides the two days off for Sunday Silence, I think Easy Goer is more seasoned now. He's a good-looking horse anyway, but he looks magnificent now. For the Derby, I think he was a little too relaxed."

From the rail out, the field, with morning odds and jockeys, includes: Hawkster, 20-1, Marco Castaneda; Easy Goer, 8-5, Pat Day; Pulverizing, 50-1, Allen Stacy; Awe Inspir-

Mickle Named To Replace Francis

GREENSBORO (AP) — Tom Mickle, the director of sports services at Duke, was named Thursday by Atlantic Coast Conference Commissioner Gene Corrigan to replace Marvin "Skeeter" Francis as director of the ACC's service bureau.

Francis, who will retire later this year, joined the ACC in 1968 after serving as sports information director at Wake Forest for 15 years.

Mickle, 38, will begin his new duties on July 1. He joined the Duke Athletic Department after graduating from the school in 1972 and was named SID in 1976. He took his current position in 1986.

"We are delighted to have a person with Tom's knowledge and experience join us in this very important decision," Corrigan said. "He replaces Skeeter Francis, who has served the Atlantic Coast Conference with distinction and considerable style for more than 20 years."

Mickle said he was "excited about the opportunity to work for the Atlantic Coast Conference and Gene Corrigan. The conference's reputation for excellence is unmatched anywhere in the country."

Charles Ready To Defend Senior Title

SCARBOROUGH-ON-HUDSON, N.Y. (AP) — Bob Charles has recovered from surgery as well as a scrambling golfer on the way to a par with two shaky shots.

Completely recovered from the double-hernia operation that hampered him at the beginning of the year, Charles was set to defend his title in the $300,000 Commemorative, which was to get under way today over the par-70, 6,545-yard Sleepy Hollow Country Club.

After finishing in a tie for 24th place in his initial Senior PGA Tournament following the surgery, Charles has gone on to a top-six finish in the six tournaments that followed. The New Zealand left-hander won the Suncoast Seniors en route to piling up $139,136 in winnings.

"Obviously, I'm playing well again," Charles said prior to competing in Thursday's pro-am. "The tour, however, has become tougher and tougher each year.

"We're in a competitve business, but it's far more relaxed than the regular tour. In all of our tournaments, everyone leaves with a check. Another plus is the fact that there is no cut. Many pros can't handle having that hanging over their head."

Many seniors are now using the long putter, some reaching 50 inches, to help the older golfers avoid the bending involved in what many consider the most important part of the game. Does Charles have any intention of using it?

"Not at all," he replied. "To me it's a last resort — a crutch. I have confidence in my regular putter.

"I respect Orville Moody for what he has done with the long putter. Orville went from being one of the worst putters to being the best, as I see it."

Billy Casper, who won the U.S. Open 30 years ago, is this year's honoree at the Commemorative. A member of the Senior Tour for those golfers over 50 since 1981, he captured the Commemorative the following year and has amassed over $1 million in earnings.

Joining Charles and Casper in this year's field are four other ex-champions: Lee Elder, who won it in 1985 and 1986, Doug Ford (1981), Miller Barber (1983) and Gene Littler (1987).

Redskins' Butz Steps Down At 38

WASHINGTON (AP) — Washington Redskins defensive tackle Dave Butz has retired.

The oldest starting player in the NFL, Butz, 38, played in 216 NFL games — starting in 189. At the end of the last season, only Tampa Bay quarterback Joe Ferguson was older than Butz.

"It was a good long association with the Redskins, who have always treated me fairly," Butz said. "Many people play in the league and never make the playoffs. I have been fortunate to play in three Super Bowls."

The retirement had been rumored for months. Butz, who had another year remaining on his two-year contract that would bring him $550,000 this season, did not participate in the team's minicamp last week. The team, however, had asked the veteran to take a pay cut and stay in the Washington area during the off-season so his workouts could be monitored.

Butz was drafted out of Purdue and played two seasons for the former St. Louis Cardinals before signing with Washington as a veteran free agent in 1975. The Redskins gave two first-round draft choices and a second-round pick to St. Louis in what is still considered to be one of the largest compensation deals in NFL history.

Butz finished his career with 59½ sacks — second in team history. He had 91 tackles in 1986, but only 50 in the strike-shortened 1987 season. Last year, he had 59, ninth on the team, when he was used only on running situations.

"When I think of Dave, I think of all the great plays he's made for us over the year," said coach Joe Gibbs. "I think of him coming out of the hospital two years ago to play against the New York Jets. He made one of the biggest plays in the game, and then he checked back into the hospital afterward. You start remembering all kinds of gutsy performances such as that one.

Vikings Win, Gain Playoff Berth

Jaguars Lose Playoff Game; Rampants Complete Unbeaten Year

BEAUFORT — D.H. Conley's Vikings, their backs to the wall as far as the playoffs were concerned, upset Coastal Conference champ East Carteret, 11-6, Thursday night to earn a spot in the 3-A state tournament.

The victory left Conley with an 8-4 Coastal record, tying them with Havelock for second place in the standings. However, since Havelock swept the Vikes during the regular season, the Rams will be the league's second seed while Conley will be the third seed.

Conley took the lead in the first inning, then both teams scored three times in the third, leaving the Vikes up 4-3.

Then, in the fourth, Conley pushed over seven runs to wrap up the victory. William Crandol led off, hit by a pitch and was sacrificed up. He scored on a double by Andy Fassett. Fassett moved up on an out and Travis Clemons walked. A passed ball then scored Fassett. Clemons scored on a hit by Scott Seymour. Bill Jenkins walked as did Paul Jackson, loading the bases. Brian Smith's walk forced in a fourth run and Crandol singled in Jenkins and Jackson. Craig Mills then singled in Smith for an 11-3 lead.

East Carteret rallied for one in the fourth and two in the seventh.

Fassett, Vines and Seymour each had two hits to lead Conley. Lewis led the Patriots with three while Daniels and Jones each had two.

Conley ends the regular season with a 12-6 record and will face the Tar-Roanoke champ, SouthWest Edgecombe, in the first round of the 3-A state playoffs.

SNOW HILL — C.B. Aycock jumped on top of Farmville early and rolled to a 19-1 win in a playoff game to decide the final playoff spot for the Eastern Plains 2-A Conference Thursday.

Aycock jumped on top early, scoring nine runs in the first off nine hits. Bob Grant had a two-run homer and Tracy Braswell added a two-run single to key the spurt. That inning chased Jaguar starter Monty King early and he was replaced by Morris Foreman.

Greg Chase went 4-5 with two RBI while Shawn Harris went 3-5.

Aycock added one run in the second and three more in the third to maintain control of the game.

Farmville closes the year at 9-11 overall and 6-7 in the Eastern Plains Conference.

Williamston got two runs in the second when Melissa Coltrain opened with a single and scored of Karen Biggs' triple. Kristy Barber then brought home Biggs with a sacrifice fly.

Williamston scored again in the fourth courtesy of an error for a 3-0 lead and in the fifth Valerie Peel drove in another run to make it 4-0. Williamston closed out the scoring with two more runs in the sixth.

Bonecrusher Bout Canceled Thursday

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

FAYETTEVILLE — The Cumberland County Boxing Commission says it canceled a heavyweight prizefight card featuring former world champion James "Bonecrusher" Smith because the promoter didn't provide updated portfolios on all contestants.

"As of right now the fights are canceled," Commission Chairman Junior Edge said shortly after 5 p.m. Thursday, the deadline the commission gave earlier Thursday to Tri-Star promoter Tom Marino. "We had no choice in that 5 p.m. is what the commission voted on."

"I'm a little disappointed," said Smith, the former World Boxing Association champion from Lillington. He questioned the commission's experience in determining prizefight agendas. Smith, 19-7-1 with 14 knockouts, was scheduled to fight Phil Brown (36-4) of New Orleans.

The nine-member commission, with six members present, ratified five of eight bouts shortly after noon, contingent on Tri-Star Boxing of Cary providing the commission with results from each of the proposed fighters' last three bouts. The commission also insisted that Tri-Star present proof of liability insurance.

Marino could not be reached for comment and did not respond to a telephone inquiry by The Fayetteville Times.

"They're not happy," Edge said of Marino and Art Jaresky, also of Tri-Star. Marino and Jaresky were the principle fight promoters, with assistance from Smith.

Frank Kane of Fairfax, Va., who also manages 1988 Olympian and ex-Fort Bragg soldier Anthony Hembrick, said Hembrick was disappointed in the commission's decision.

The commission did not ratify Hembrick's (1-0) scheduled fight with Danny Wofford (4-1) of Spartanburg, S.C. Commission member Sue Cain argued strongly against Wofford.

Magadan Leads Mets' Victory

THE ASSOCATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Dave Magadan is back at first base for the New York Mets and he hopes he does better the second time around.

Magadan was at first base on Thursday night because Keith Hernandez fractured his right kneecap on Wednesday. His impact was instant.

"Last year, when I came in for Keith, I really didn't take advantage of it," Magadan said Thursday night after tripling and homering in the Mets' 5-3 victory over the Los Angeles Dodgers. "I think I put too much pressure on myself."

With the score tied 2-2, Kevin McReynolds led off the eighth with a homer off Alejandro Pena. Magadan homered on the next pitch, his first home run this season and fifth in 571 major league at-bats.

"I'll never be a home-run hitter," said Magadan, a cousin of former New York Yankees manager Lou Piniella. "But I always hold my own as far as run production."

Not last year.

Magadan hit .277 but drove in only 35 runs in 314 at-bats. He got most of his playing time from June 7 to Aug. 4, a stretch in which Hernandez missed all but one game because of a pulled right hamstring.

"Last year when I was in there we weren't playing well and the whispers were it was because Keith wasn't there," Magadan said. "When you start making this a job and a grind instead of having fun, and think about all the negative things instead of the positive things, then it's no fun."

Magadan won't be the everyday first baseman, not just yet. For now, he's platooning with Tim Teufel. But his performance, which included a fourth-inning triple off the wall in left-center field, impressed Mets manager Davey Johnson.

"I've seen him hit the ball hard before, but never twice in one game," Johnson said. "I don't expect to see him hit home runs, but I'd like to see a bunch of doubles."

Johnson know what Magadan's trying to do.

"Magadan wants to show he can contribute, that last year's not an indication of the way he's capable of playing," Johnson said.

For his part, Magadan was surprised.

"It's a shock to me that I hit the ball as hard as I did tonight," he said.

In the only other National League game Thursday, St. Louis beat the Houston Astros 4-3 in 10 innings.

The consecutive homers were the second for the Mets this season. Darryl Strawberry, McReynolds and Hernandez hit three in a row off Philadelphia's Don Carman on April 17.

"I was looking for something inside and I got it," McReynolds said of the tiebreaker. "If it wasn't something inside, I wasn't going to swing at it."

Pena, coincidentally, gave up consecutive home runs on April 17 to Cincinnati's Herm Winningham and Barry Larkin.

"In a game like that, you can't make any mistakes, fall behind the hitters," said Pena, 2-1. "I have to keep plugging, hoping it'll change."

The Associated Press

Willie McGee is congratulated after scoring for St. Louis

Len Dykstra added a sacrifice fly, giving the Mets a 5-2 lead. The Dodgers scored a run in the ninth as Mike Marshall grounded into a double play.

Strawberry had given the Mets a 2-1 lead with a one-handed, two-run homer off Tim Leary in the fourth inning. Strawberry preserved the lead in the seventh when he leaped above the fence to catch Eddie Murray's potential game-tying home run.

"That catch was the turning point," said Dwight Gooden, 6-1. "You don't see that catch very often."

Gooden increased his career record against Los Angeles to 9-1 by allowing eight hits over eight innings. Randy Myers got the final out for his seventh save.

"I though Doc pitched a great ballgame," Johnson said. "He had a problem late in the game dropping down. That's usually a sign he's tired."

Los Angeles scored in the second on Dave Anderson's RBI groundout. Anderson had missed a squeeze bunt, but John Shelby was safe at third when Johnson dropped the ball for an error.

"We should have won this, a lot of opportunities," said Dodgers manager Tommy Lasorda, who coached third for the fourth consecutive game. "I'm not satisfied. I wanted the sweep."

Cardinals 4, Astros 3

Pinch-hitter Denny Walling singled off Larry Anderson, 1-1, in the 10th inning to score Willie McGree with the winning run. It snapped Houston's five-game winning streak and the Cardinals' five-game losing streak.

Hernandez Out For Two Months

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — A freak injury at second base has left a big hole at first for the New York Mets.

Keith Hernandez, a lifetime .300 hitter and one of the best fielding first basemen in the game, fractured his right kneecap while breaking up a double play and will be out for two months.

"You always hate to lose a key player, especially someone like Keith who is so instrumental to the success of this club," Mets manager Davey Johnson said. "But we have a lot of quality players here, and now we'll get a chance to see them play."

Hernandez, 35, was injured Wednesday night when he collided with Los Angeles shortstop Dave Anderson during the fifth inning of the Mets' 4-3 loss. Hernandez played two more innings, but was removed after he hobbled to the plate in the seventh.

Mets physician James Parkes said Hernandez is now "on crutches and will have to keep the knee immobilized for a period of time" before starting rehabilitation.

Hernandez started slowly this season, but was starting to get hot before the injury. He was hitting .282 with three home runs and 12 runs batted in.

Johnson said he would platoon Dave Magadan and Tim Teufel at first base during Hernandez' absence. Magadan homered and tripled Thursday night as the Mets beat the Los Angeles Dodgers 5-3.

During a two-month stretch when Hernandez was out with a pulled hamstring, Magadan hit .288 but had only one home run and 21 RBIs and was erratic in the field. The Mets, who finished with a 100-60 record, played only .500 ball during that time.

"We won the division and I really didn't feel like I was part of it," Magadan said. "I want to change that this year.

"I'm not going to spend so much time worrying about what other people think of me. I ended up playing too defensively. You hate to see anyone get hurt, but I have to look at this as an opportunity for me. I have to make the most of it."

Seattle Tops Brewers In Wild Game

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

It was a wild night in Seattle.

The Mariners scored three runs on consecutive wild pitches by Milwaukee reliever Mark Knudson in the fourth inning Thursday en route to a 9-5 victory over the Brewers.

After one-out singles by Harold Reynolds and Mickey Brantley in the third inning, Alvin Davis hit his fifth homer on a pitch from Chris Bosio, 5-3, to give Seattle a 3-1 lead.

Singles by Jim Presley and Dave Valle and Reynolds' double scored one run. Davis was walked intentionally by Knudson, loading the bases. Knudson then threw two straight wild pitches.

On the first errant pitch, Valle and Reynolds both scored. On the second one, Davis scored from third by sliding safely under Knudson's tag at home.

"He hadn't thrown a wild pitch in 25 innings, and he threw two in 25 seconds. That's one way to pitch out of a bases-loaded jam," Trebelhorn said.

"I got a great jump, and I was going all the way. I would have been in big trouble if the guy on third had stopped," said Reynolds, who scored from second on the first wild pitch.

Elsewhere in the American League, it was Texas 6, Minnesota 5 in 11 innings; Baltimore 3, Cleveland 2 in 10 innings; Oakland 6, New York 2; and Boston 5, California 2.

The Brewers rallied for three runs in the ninth, but Mike Schooler got the last two outs for his 10th save in 10 opportunities.

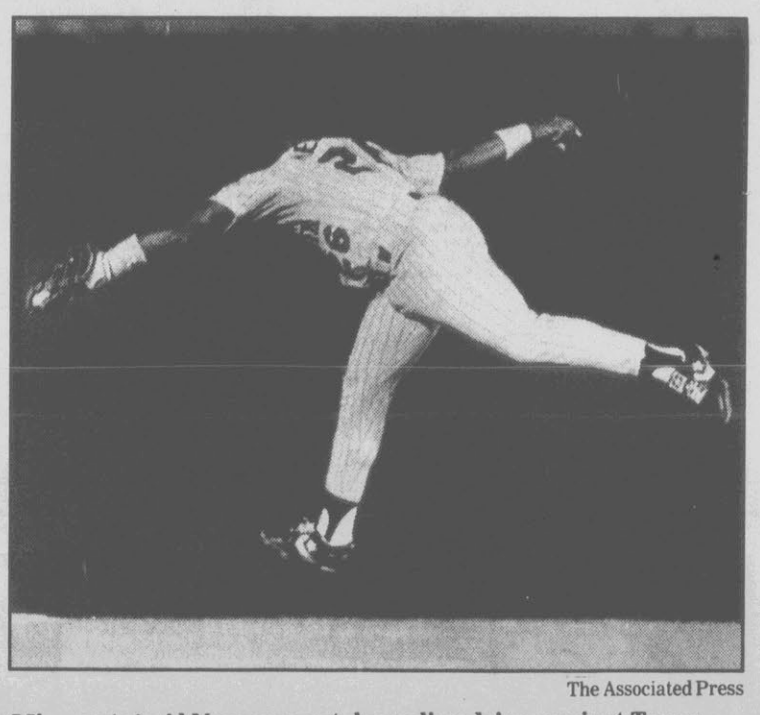
"I'm not throwing the ball any better than last year. Things are just working out," Schooler said.

Things are working out for the Mariners, too. They have won 11 of their last 15 games to improve to 22-19.

"We're a new team. We're the new Mariners. We're rolling," Reynolds said.

Rangers 6, Twins 5

Pete Incaviglia's run-scoring single with two outs in the 11th inning lifted Texas past Minnesota at Arlington.



The Associated Press

Minnesota's Al Newman catches a line drive against Texas

Minnesota tied the score in the ninth on Gary Gaetti's leadoff homer off Nolan Ryan. Ryan allowed six hits, struck out 10 and walked three in nine innings. Ryan leads the AL with 73 strikeouts and has struck out 10 or more 186 times in his career.

Athletics 6, Yankees 2

Orioles 3, Indians 2

Melvin's fly ball over the drawn-in outfield scored Brady Anderson from third base. It was the only hit in the inning for Baltimore, which had loaded the bases on walks, two of them intentional by Keith Atherton, 0-3.

Mark Williamson, 1-2, pitched 2-3 of an inning in the 10th for the victory.

Red Sox 5, Angels 2

Marty Barrett and Mike Greenwell hit home runs as Boston beat California in Anaheim to snap a four-game losing streak. The loss snapped California's five-game winning streak and was also only the Angels' second defeat in their last 13 games at Anaheim Stadium.

John Dopson, 5-2, scattered nine hits in 6 1-3 innings and was helped by four double plays. Rob Murphy pitched 2 2-3 innings of one-hit relief for his first AL save.

Preakness Set ...

ing, 6-1, Day; Rock Point, 12-1, Chris Antley; Dansil, 15-1, Larry Snyder; Houston, 10-1, Angel Cordero Jr.; Sunday Silence, 7-5, Pat Valenzuela, and Northern Wolf, 30-1, Jo Jo Ladner.

All will carry 126 pounds. Hawkster and Northern Wolf will run on the diuretic Lasix.

If all nine go, the race will be worth $679,200 with $441,480 going to the winner. Awe Inspiring probably will be scratched, however, making the race's value $674,200 with $438,230 to the winner.

Shug McGaughey trains Easy Goer for Ogden Phipps and Awe Inspiring for his son, Dinny Phipps. McGaughey may scratch Easy Goer if the track is muddy, so Awe Inspiring is his hedge against the weather.

"That's what I've got to say," McGaughey said. "But that is something I would have to discuss with Mr. Phipps."

According to the weather forecast, though, he and Phipps won't have much to talk about on Preakness day. After nearly two weeks of rain, it cleared up Thursday, and it's supposed to be sunny on Saturday.

McGaughey didn't even decide to enter Awe Inspiring until Thursday morning, and he said he could imagine no scenario in which both horses would run in the Preakness, as they did in the Derby.

"At 9:30 I got a phone call from Dinny," McGaughey said. "Dinny said he wanted to protect himself; maybe it'll rain. ... 'Do you have any problem with that?' he said. I said, 'No.'"

Awe Inspiring, who still is stabled at Belmont Park in New York, is being pointed toward the Jersey Derby on May 29 at Monmouth Park.

Easy Goer and Awe Inspring were coupled in betting for the Derby, but they would not be coupled in Maryland because of the different owners. Although Day was listed as jockey for both horses, McGaughey said that if Awe Inspiring got the nod, he would prefer his regular rider, Craig Perret.

"Of course, I would have to wait and see what he is doing that day," McGaughey said, "but that would be what I would be in favor of."

Sunday Silence remained in the barn last Sunday and Monday after he came up with a sore right forefoot the day before. Trainer Charlie Whittingham said he thought the cause was a shoe nail accidentally pounded into the tender part of Sunday Silence's foot.

Griffey Gets To See Son ...

In the first six weeks of the season, the young Griffey has established himself as a top candidate for American League Rookie of the Year. After Thursday night's 9-5 Seattle victory over Milwaukee, Griffey had a .294 batting average with four home runs, 11 RBI and four stolen bases.

Griffey and his son are the first father-son combination to play in the major leagues at the same time. Griffey said his son's instant success in the big leagues in just two years out of high school in Cincinnati didn't make him feel old.

"You're only as old as you think, and I still think young," he said. "I can still outrun him. He can't run that fast. I mean I may need a head start."

Griffey thinks the Kingdome is an excellent ball park for his son, saying he likes "the dimensions, the kind of carry the ball has, the kind of power he has and how well he plays."

Griffey Jr. was selected by the Mariners in the June 1987 draft. He's made the jump to the major leagues after playing just 17 games in Class AA and 58 games in Class A last season.

"I'm very proud of him, very proud," his father said. "But he still has to go out there and perform. As long as I've been in this game, you've got to perform. Just because your name is so-and-so, (you can't) think you're going to get away with stuff."

"He gets that from his mother," Griffey said.

Griffey said he knew his son was going to be a big league player when he was 10 to 12 years old.

"He could catch, throw and run, and I knew his biggest asset was hitting," his father said. "I used to take him in the batting cage and throw the ball about 80 miles an hour and I couldn't strike him out."

Griffey said he continued to play in the major leagues rather than retire because he "loved the game" and not because he wanted to go into the history books. And he says he's surprised by his son's quick rise to the major leagues.

"But he knew what he wanted to do and he believed in his ability," Griffey said.

Major league pitchers will continue to try to figure out Griffey Jr. this season, but it's not going to be easy for them, Griffey said, adding his son already has a psychological edge.

"They know he can hit, and a good hitter will make the pitcher change his way of thinking," he said. "Already, they're thinking that way. So he's made them do what he wanted to do already."

"I'm hitting about .270," he said. "I'm spot starting and pinch-hitting most of the time."

Few Americans At The Colonial

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

FORT WORTH, Texas — Call it the Cape Town Classic or maybe the Singapore Sling, but the Colonial National Invitation seems suddenly inappropriate for the latest million-dollar PGA gala.

U.S. golfers are almost a no-show.

An Aussie, a South African and a Japanese ruled the leader board Thursday after the first round over a wet, windy and wicked Colonial course known as Hogan's Alley in honor of five-time winner Ben Hogan.

Australian Ian Baker-Finch slashed five shots from the Trinity River layout's testy par 70 and rode the 65 to a one-shot lead over Japan's Isao Aoki and South Africa's Fulton Allem.

The visiting tourists slipped off early and largely unnoticed at daybreak Thursday and escaped the full force of the gusting Texas breezes.

"... We talked early in the round about how easy the course was playing and how lucky we were that there was no wind," said Baker-Finch, 28, who holds 10 foreign titles but is a non-winner on the American tour after only a handful of appearances.

He has won but $13,689 in five PGA outings this year.

"It's not as easy to do well on the U.S. tour because there are so many good players," he said. "Just to make the cut here is an achievement."

At any rate, he likes it better than last year's schedule, which nearly qualified him for the funny farm.

"I played 16 tournaments in Japan, seven in Europe, four over here and 12 in Australia," he chuckled. "I played 39 tournaments in all, and they put me in a rubber room at the end of the year."

Allem, echoing Baker-Finch's comments, has collected $78,000 in 15 U.S. tournaments but indicated that it hasn't been easy.

"America is the greatest golfing arena of the world," he said. "When something happens in golf, it happens in America first.

"The quality and depth is what is amazing. There are 100 world class golfers on the American tour. On the others, there might be 10 or 15."

Aoki, who see-sawed through seven birdies and three bogeys, said he is concentrating on the U.S. tour this year because his hectic international travel schedule in 1988 took a toll on his game.

"I'm still not playing well this year," he said.

Americans Clarence Rose and Mike Sullivan hovered two strokes off the pace at 67 while Mark Calcavecchia, the pre-tournament favorite, and Keith Clearwater, the 1987 Colonial champion, were at 68.

Only 13 players broke par, but three Texas favorites were not among them. Leading money-winner Tom Kite fired a 72, Ben Crenshaw a 71 and Lee Trevino a 74.

Haynie, Bradley Top LPGA Field

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MASON, Ohio — Two veterans who have been there before and leading the way once again.

Sandra Haynie, 45, and Pat Bradley, 38, have a one-stroke lead going into today's second round after shooting 5-under-par 67s at the LPGA Championships.

But both have been around long enough to know its a long way from the first round to the end.

"This is just the first hurdle of a very long race," Bradley said. "But it's always nice to have a strong start to any tournament, whether it's a major championship or not."

One stroke back in the second of the women's tour's four major championships are non-winners Susie Redman, an alternate to the 144-player field, and Elaine Crosby.

Two-time LPGA Championship winner Patty Sheehan was joined by Ayako Okamoto, Jane Geddes, Deb Richard and Betsy King at 69.

Haynie, inducted into the LPGA Hall of Fame in 1977, has won 42 tournaments — including four majors — but none since 1982.

Yet she holed a 150-yard 5-iron on her final hole for an eagle-3 to pull into a tie for the lead with Bradley.

Despite winning the LPGA Championship in both 1965 and 1974, she said she has accepted being overlooked as a pre-tournament favorite.

"I've been around long enough I let my record speak for itself," Haynie said. "It's just human nature to talk about the recent champions, winners and money-winners. I don't let things bother me.

"The way the golf course is set up, I did not have 67 in mind when I started the day," said Bradley, who has won 23 tour titles. "I was thinking two or three under would be great. But I got a bonus on the last hole with that putt."

The women's tour's leading all-time money-winner with more than $2.5 million, Bradley didn't finish in the top 10 of any of the 17 tournaments she played last year as she battled hyperthyroidism.

Redman didn't find out until Wednesday's pro-am that she would be a member of the field. Only when Laura Baugh dropped out — the second withdrawal — was Redman included.

Crosby, in her fifth year on tour, bogeyed the 18th hole to also fall a shot off the lead.

In the three games at the Forum, the Lakers won by scores of 125-111, 134-122, and, in the only close game of the six meetings, 118-116.

The Western Conference showdown, the final step to the NBA Championship series, figures to provide the two-time defending champion Lakers with a tough test.

They sailed through the opening two rounds of the playoffs, sweeping Portland and then Seattle. The Suns required just three games to eliminate Denver in the first round, then beat Golden State in five.

The last time a team coached by Cotton Fitzsimmons, now the Suns' head man, won at the Forum, it was a 113-110 victory with the Atlanta Hawks on Feb. 17, 1974. One of the Laker players in that game was Pat Riley, now the coach of the Lakers.

But Fitzsimmons, who probably has many unpleasant memories of the Forum, says history doesn't matter now.

"What's past is past. Most of those years I was going against the Lakers with ponies," he said. "I've never had the horses to get this far before."

"It's going to be a tough series," he said. "Phoenix does a lot of things well. They have an excellent transition game and great outside shooting.

"Kevin Johnson makes it work. He gets down the court so fast. It's going to be up-and-down basketball, that's for sure."

Although Phoenix is winless in all five previous playoff appearances against Los Angeles, and have lost their last 17 times in Inglewood, the Lakers, who barely finished ahead of the Suns in the Pacific Division race, think they may have their hands full.

"They have a great transition game, they have great players," Lakers forward James Worthy said. "They're capable of scoring a lot of points ... and so are we.

"There are a lot of similarities between them and us, and when the matchups are balanced, you win by playing good defense.

"They're confident and consistent," Worthy said of the Suns, "and they have great chemistry. They are able to grow as a game goes on. They keep making good adjustments on the floor."

"Most people in the world never expected us to be where we are today," he said. "So this is our greatest challenge. You have to be realistic about it."

Byron Scott bruised his right wrist on a dunk during Thursday's practice, but the Laker guard said he doesn't expect it to bother him Saturday.

DOT-EPA Report Critical Of Responses To Oil Spill

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The oil companies and the governments who are supposed to clean up after spills did a "wholly insufficient" job of responding to the Alaska oil spill, says a report sent to President Bush.

It was the strongest criticism yet leveled in the wake of the disaster that spilled 11 million gallons of oil into Alaska's pristine Prince William Sound after the tanker Exxon Valdez hit a clearly marked reef.

The 37-page report sent to Bush on Thursday was "critical of everybody," said a Department of Transportation official. "Critical of the state of Alyeska, Exxon, the federal government."

"In view of the fact that everything had been going so well for so many years, I think everybody got a little complacent," said the source, speaking on condition of anonymity.

The report was prepared by Transportation Secretary Samuel Skinner and William K. Reilly, administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency. They visited Alaska five days after the March 24 accident.

While the report criticized all agencies and companies, it also noted that even if had better safeguards had been in place, the largest oil spill in U.S. history was too enormous to contain, the source said.

Skinner "has indicated that there is no technology available today that could really have coped with that amount of oil in that period of time in that particular climactic condition," the source said.

"It escaped in such an incredible hurry, so fast, that even if the equipment had been in place, it wouldn't have been enough," he said.

During their trip to Alaska, Skinner and Reilly directed efforts by the National Response Team, a group of 14 agencies that participated in the cleanup, to prepare a report assessing damage and cleanup efforts. Results of the report were reported in today's editions of The Washington Post.

The review noted that although six contingency plans were available to cope with accidents, their implementation was not coordinated or organized.

Exxon's shipping subsidiary, which owns the Exxon Valdez, had a voluntary plan but "no specific details," the report said.

Cleanup technologies were "primitive" and more research should done in that area, the report said.

Alyeska Pipeline Service Co., which operates the Trans-Alaska pipeline and the shipping terminal in Valdez, had a plan in place to break up crude oil with chemical dispersants. But it failed to take into account that the dispersants were stored in Arizona and would take several hours to reach Alaska, the report said.

"Alyeska was not prepared to respond to this spill," it said, according to the source.

The report recommended that Congress pass laws ensuring that operators of oil tankers create a fund large enough to pay for cleanups. It noted that existing oil spill funds would have been rapidly depleted "if Exxon had not voluntarily assumed financial and cleanup responsibility for the spill."

Earlier this week, Skinner proposed legislation to increase oil spill liability and compensation. The bill would require a fund of at least $500 million, financed by a 1.3-cent-per-barrel oil industry surcharge.

White House officials could provide no details about the report. "I know nothing about a report," a spokesman said.

Also Thursday, Sen. Alfonse D'Amato, R-N.Y., accused the nation's oil companies of taking advantage of the spill to raise gasoline prices.

"I suspect foul play. I say that candidly," D'Amato said at a news conference in his Capitol Hill office. "I suspect an opportunity psychologically that the oil companies felt that they could increase their prices."

The senator released copies of a letter he sent to Energy Secretary James Watkins asking for "an expeditious and thorough investigation and evaluation" of the nationwide gasoline price increases since the spill.

Gasoline prices climbed an average of 11.2 percent in April, the fastest rate on record, from 97.4 cents to $1.098 per gallon.

House Panel Attempting Compromise On Fighter

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The House Foreign Affairs Committee is trying to work out a compromise between the Bush administration and the Senate over the FSX fighter deal with Japan, congressional aides say.

The effort comes after Secretary of State James A. Baker III told the House panel that restrictions contained in the Senate legislation approving the deal could scuttle the $6 billion plan for joint development and production of the new warplane.

In a letter to committee Chairman Dante B. Fascell, D-Fla., Baker said the Senate measure "establishes an unacceptable precedent infringing on the president's constitutional authority with respect to the conduct of negotiations with foreign powers."

"The conditions stated in the resolution would put the entire FSX program and our agreement with Japan at risk. It would require us to reopen negotiations on unnecessary issues," Baker told Fascell.

The Senate voted 52-47 on Tuesday to defeat a resolution that would have scrapped the FSX agreement. But it then voted 72-27 — a margin that would override a presidential veto — to adopt the restriction proposed by Sen. Robert Byrd, D-W.Va.

The deals calls for General Dynamics to join with Japan's Mitsubishi Heavy Industries to develop and produce the fighter, an advanced version of the U.S. F-16, for deployment by Japan in the late 1990s. General Dynamics has headquarters in St. Louis, but most of the FSX work would be done at its F-16 plant in Fort Worth, Texas.

Richard Bush, a staff member of the House Foreign Affairs subcommittee on Asian and Pacific affairs, said the panel is trying to "modify the Byrd resolution in such a way that the administration would be willing to accept it and the president would be prepared to sign it."

He said the "most serious sticking point" appears to be a section that would mandate the U.S. position when negotiations are undertaken with the Japanese several years from now on a memorandum of understanding, or MOU, to set terms for coproduction of the FSX.

The Senate-passed resolution stipulates that the coproduction MOU shall prohibit transfer to Japan of critical jet engine technology and bar Japan from exporting the FSX or "any of its major subcomponents" to other countries.

Linda Krueger, an aide to Rep. Mel Levine, D-Calif., an outspoken opponent of the FSX, said Levine is working with the Foreign Affairs Committee staff to develop modified language that wouldn't require renegotiation of the agreement.

The compromise is expected to be presented to the House committee when it meets to consider the issue next Tuesday.

Baker's opposition to the Byrd measure was underscored by administration officials who testified Thursday before the Asian and Pacific affairs subcommittee.

William Clark Jr., acting assistant secretary of state for East Asian and Pacific affairs, told the panel that if the Senate-passed restrictions became law, "it would have a tremendous impact around the world" in future U.S. negotiations with other countries.

"If I were on the other side of the table negotiating, I would be very reluctant to put a lot on the line," he said.

Rep. Stephen J. Solarz, D-N.Y., chairman of the subcommittee, said that regardless of what Congress does now "this is going to be an issue in the future" in case there are any "major violations" by Japan of the terms of the FSX deal.

But he added that "I don't want a renegotiation of the agreement."

Schools May Face Shortage Of Milk

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — School lunch programs could face milk and cheese shortages as early as this fall because excesses of dairy products have been reduced, says the chairman of the House Agriculture Committee.

Because Congress passed legislation four years ago to reduce excess dairy-farm output, surpluses available for government purchase have been sharply reduced, Rep. Kika de la Garza, D-Texas, said Thursday.

"We had to change the legislation and reduce the expenses of the government ... and once the surplus stock is reduced then we don't have enough for the school lunch and commodity distribution programs for the poor," de la Garza said.

"Food banks, food for the elderly, Head Start, every place that gets butter, cheese, non-fat dry milk is being reduced or will have to be reduced because we don't have the ample surplus," he said.

Jack Parnell, deputy secretary of agriculture, has confirmed that "due to reduced surplus production of dairy goods there will far less milk and other dairy products to distribute to school districts for use in lunch programs across the nation," de la Garza said.

A spokeswoman for the Food and Nutrition Service, the Agriculture Department agency that administers the school lunch program, agreed there will be less dairy products available next fall.

Kelly Shipp, spokeswoman for Agriculture Secretary Clayton Yeutter, said the milk and cheese in question are "bonus" commodities given to schools in addition to what they ordinarily receive.

"The problem is we don't have it," she said. "The stocks (of non-fat dry milk and cheese) are so low, we have a very limited amount."

SEC Chief Will Leave Post To Return To Teaching Job

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Securities and Exchange Commission Chairman David S. Ruder, who was expected to be replaced by President Bush, is resigning after leading the agency through two of its roughest years.

The 60-year-old attorney said Thursday he will return to his teaching post at Northwestern University School of Law in Chicago by the end of August. The precise timing of his departure will depend on when Bush appoints a successor.

Ruder's term expires in June 1991 and he gave no reason for leaving. But Bush had been widely expected to replace him even though senior Democrats in Congress were urging Ruder to stay on.

Had he remained, Ruder faced the possibility of presiding over a commission that could have been increasingly out of step with his views.

Ronald Reagan, a month before leaving the presidency, replaced Aulana Peters, a Ruder ally, with Mary Schapiro, a former futures industry lobbyist. The term of Charles C. Cox, another frequent Ruder ally, has expired and his nomination by Reagan was never acted on.

The list of possible successors includes attorney Thomas A. Russo, a former division director at the Commodities Futures Trading Commission, and Edward H. Fleischman, who already holds a seat on the five-member SEC. Also mentioned are Kraft Inc. Chairman John M. Richman of Chicago and Harvey L. Pitt, former SEC general counsel.

White House spokesman B.J. Cooper said the administration was reviewing the appointment and declined further comment.

Ruder, known for his professorial manner, took over the SEC in August 1987 and two months later found himself embroiled in the aftermath of October 1987 stock market crash, the sharpest one-day drop in stock prices since World War

Also during his tenure, the seeds of the agency's historic investigation of insider trading on Wall Street, planted by his predecessor John S.R. Shad, bore fruit in the largest-ever securities fraud case, settled for $650 million by Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc.

However, one opponent, former Sen. William Proxmire of Wisconsin, who was chairman of the Senate Banking Committee, now says, "I was wrong. ... I think he worked out well."

Ruder won friends among Democrats on Capitol Hill during the post-crash debate over market reform for hewing to a somewhat independent line from the free-market Reagan administration.

The White House and Treasury Department resisted any attempt to combine the regulation of stock and futures markets, which are regulated with a lighter hand by the Commodity Futures Trading Commission.

Ruder, alone among top administration officials, argued that stock and futures markets are closely linked and said his agency should coordinate regulation of both.

Also, in the wake of an outcry from small investors who lost money in the crash, he pushed the securities industry to improve its system of arbitrating disputes with customers and to take other steps to restore public confidence.

"Ruder believes strongly in regulation," Proxmire said. "He believes that securities issuers should be vigorously required to provide information to investors and if they don't they should be penalized, fined or jailed.

The bidding:

South	West	North	East

Opening lead: King of ♡

By and large, it pays to believe your opponents. After all, they ought to be trying their best to defeat you!

North's bid of three diamonds was a limit raise. East was rather pusillanimous in the auction. With his distribution, there is no way we would have sold out at the five-level. Note that five hearts will, at worst, go down two tricks, and only one if declarer guesses the spades.

West led the king of hearts on which East followed with the nine—a suit preference signal for spades. West dutifully shifted to the nine and declarer, naively disregarding all the information at hand, elected to play low in the hope that West was leading from the king. When clubs later failed to break, declarer could not avoid going down one trick.

Declarer overlooked a sure-trick line which he would probably have spotted had he held the deuce of spades rather than the queen. Look what would happen if declarer were to rise with the ace of spades at trick two.

Declarer draws as many rounds of trump as necessary, then ruffs a heart in dummy. He cashes two high clubs to reveal the 4-1 break, then simply exits with a spade.

If it is East who holds the king of spades, he wins but is endplayed. Whichever major suit he returns allows declarer to ruff in one hand while discarding a club from the other. If West has the monarch, he has an extra way to commit suicide—he can lead a club into declarer's combined queen-ten tenace. Either way, declarer loses only one trick in each major.

Humorist Garrison Keillor Returns To Public Radio

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SAN FRANCISCO — No longer woebegone are those longing for a fresh dip in Lake Wobegon.

Garrison Keillor, the folksy humorist and best-selling author whose radio program "A Prairie Home Companion" warmed audiences for 13 years, announced Thursday he will be back on the radio come fall after a two-year absence.

The fictional Minnesota town of Lake Wobegon will be back in his new show, Keillor said at a news conference following his address to a public radio conference, but the "town that time forgot" has undergone changes.

"A lot of things have happened to Lake Wobegon ... it's hard to make them into humor," he said. "Times have been hard back there, as they have been all across the Midwest."

His new, two-hour "American Radio Company of the Air" will be produced by Minnesota Public Radio and distributed by American Public Radio. It will feature Keillor sketches, monologues and a mixture of American music.

Keillor, 46, said the music will include Fats Waller, Aaron Copland, Leonard Bernstein, old hymns and "all the great things that every American ought to hear at least twice."

His new program will be performed before theater audiences in New York, St. Paul, Minn., and other cities in 12-show series in the fall of 1989 and spring 1990. It will be broadcast live Saturday nights starting Sept. 30.

Despite estimates that his show had a following of more than 4 million, Keillor said he has about 13,000 true fans while others "talk about buttermilk biscuits and the 'Home on the Prairie Show.'"

Minnesota Public Radio spokeswoman Susan Jensen in St. Paul declined to comment about the differences or similarities between "Prairie Home" and the new show. Minnesota Public Radio produced his old show, which was broadcast from St. Paul.

Keillor joked that he and Minnesota Public Radio officials talked about doing a new show "as a joke and it was one of those jokes that got out of hand."

But he said that when he envisions himself back on stage, "it's nothing but wonderful."

Two years ago he announced he was leaving his fictional hometown of Lake Wobegon in order to "resume the life of a shy person."

He abandoned Sheila the Christian Jungle Girl, Norwegian bachelor farmers and other Lake Wobegon inhabitants in an attempt to leave an increasing frustration with notoriety and resentment that accompanied his fame and fortune.

Keillor also criticized the media for intruding on his privacy by interviewing his neighbors, photographing his house and printing his address.

"I've always been pleased if people come up and I expect them to, and I get upset if they don't," he said Thursday, adding, "there's a fine line that a person has to defend. Otherwise your life becomes weird."

After his last broadcast in June 1987, Keillor took up residence in wife Ulla Skaerved's native Denmark. But he found it hard to work there.

"I suppose that was kind of embarrassing, too, to have failed so publicly, to have planted your flag so publicly and having to pull it out," he said.

Now he calls Minnesota home again, but has a place in Manhattan and plans to retain his Copenhagen apartment.

"Home is a spiritual place," he said Thursday, "and in some ways I feel closer to Minnesota and Lake Wobegon" living in New York and Copenhagen.

McClure Gets Buffalo Bill Award

NORTH PLATTE, Neb. (AP) — Actor Doug McClure will receive the 1989 Buffalo Bill Award for family entertainment now that Nebraskaland Days has changed its schedule and two airlines have donated air fare to ensure he gets there.

McClure was originally scheduled to attend a brunch June 23, and receive the award at a rodeo that night. But his agent told festival organizers he might be unable to attend because of conflicts with a filming schedule in California.

Executive Director Kim Adle said Thursday the brunch was canceled and the award rescheduled for the rodeo June 24. McClure will also ride in a parade that day in North Platte, which for many years was the hometown of "Buffalo Bill" Cody.

Movie Studios Jockeying For Summer Show Dates

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

HOLLYWOOD — With one eye on the audience and another on the competition, movie executives continue to shuffle summer release dates, confident that last-minute feints and gambits will bring their films the largest possible box office.

Patrick Swayze's "Road House," once set for February and then June, has previewed to test audiences so well it now will launch the summer sweepstakes on May 19, a week before Harrison Ford appears in "Indiana Jones and the Last Crusade."

Another former June release, Clint Eastwood's "Pink Cadillac," has moved to May 26, thereby avoiding a clash with "Ghostbusters II." Meanwhile, the new James Bond movie, "License to Kill" with Timothy Dalton, and "Lethal Weapon II" with Mel Gibson, are heading for a July 14 showdown.

In perhaps the season's bloodiest duel, Paramount Pictures and New Line Cinema are juggling the August openings of their respective horror films "Friday the 13th Part VIII" and "Nightmare on Elm Street 5," hopeful that the first to debut will make the biggest turnstile killing.

Since a strong summer can make a movie company's entire year, the studios have stockpiled their most commercial films for the coming months. The resulting cinematic gridlock means that some distributors have completely fled the summer, saving their better projects for less crowded times.

"There may not be as many titles in sheer bulk, but in quality of titles going in, this summer is as competitive as we have seen," said Barry London, president of Paramount's motion picture group.

"The blockbusters ... are fantasies," said Martin Rabinovitch, Hemdale's executive vice president in charge of marketing. "They're not about real things that happen. So audiences will be ready for a real, personal film such as 'Shag.'"

By releasing "Indiana Jones" as the first of the would-be blockbusters, Paramount could control some of the nation's best movie screens and dominate the entire summer campaign.

Besides "Indiana Jones," three others will open virtually unopposed: "Pink Cadillac" and "Star Trek V: The Final Frontier" on June 9, and "Ghostbusters II" on June 16. The much-talked about "Batman," opening June 23, will be combating only one lesser title, the light comedy "Honey, I've Shrunk the Kids."

"But at some point, you can't move out of the way and you have to open in the face of some other competition, because you want to be in the summer, and take advantage of the holiday audience," said Si Kornblit, Universal Picture's executive vice president of worldwide marketing. Universal's "Renegades," starring Lou Diamond Phillips, will open on June 2 amid a firestorm of other major releases.

Since the average moviegoer rarely sees two films in one weekend, it's crucial that releases be scattered evenly and that similar films never open against one another. Thus, studios watch their rivals with undivided attention: The wrong release date can kill even the biggest mass-appeal project.

"If one studio makes a change, the other follows," said John Krier, president of Exhibitor Relations Co. "It's checkers."

New Line, distributors of the Hulk Hogan action-adventure film "No Holds Barred," knows all about that kind of gamesmanship. "We were going to open 'No Holds Barred' on Memorial Day weekend, when it was just 'Indiana Jones' and that's all," said Mitchell Goldman, New Line's distribution president. "But when Warner Bros. decided to move in there with their Clint Eastwood film, and Fox and MGM threw in a picture, we decided to drop back a week."

Gorbachev Earns Equivalent Of $22,800 Per Year, Loves To Take Walk In Woods

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOSCOW (AP) — Mikhail S. Gorbachev earns the equivalent of $22,800 a year, loves to walk in the woods and was raised in a peasant family where he began working at age 13, the official news agency Tass said.

The Soviet president did not make any startling revelations about himself during an interview in a Communist Party publication that Tass quoted Thursday, but he did provide some details to Soviets wanting personal information about their leader.

That kind of information has been kept strictly secret by previous leaders, but Gorbachev, 58, gradually has been breaking down the barrier with his policy of glasnost.

"Virtually all my time except for several hours needed for sleep are given to work," Gorbachev told the News of the Communist Party Central Committee, a monthly journal. Gorbachev has led the Soviet Union for four years.

"I try to use my rare rest hours to their fullest," he added. "My interests are varied: reading literature, the theater, music, film. My favorite form of rest is walking in the forest. But I have to admit: I manage to do it less and less."

Gorbachev said his schedule is a strain not only on himself but on his family, and he said he valued the support of his wife, Raisa, as well as that of his daughter, Irina, and her husband, Anatoly, who are doctors.

Gorbachev has two granddaughters, Ksenia and Anastasia.

Like any other member of the ruling Communist Party Politburo, Gorbachev said he receives a salary of 1,200 rubles (about $1,900) a month. Candidate members of the Politburo receive 100 rubles ($160) less, he said.

Gorbachev said all the money he has received for his book "Perestroika and New Thinking," 2 million copies of which have been published in almost 100 countries, went to the party budget or to several favorite charities. Among them he named the funds to help victims of earthquakes in Armenia and Tadzhikistan, the Soviet Culture Fund of which Mrs. Gorbachev is a board member, and for construction of a new children's park in Moscow.

Speaking about the technology that keeps him in touch with the Kremlin when he is traveling, Gorbachev said he first learned about the Dec. 7 Armenian earthquake that killed 25,000 people in a telephone call he received from Moscow while on a ferry boat in New York harbor. He was in New York for a U.S.-Soviet summit meeting.

Gorbachev has an apartment in Moscow, believed to be in the Lenin Hills area, and a country house provided by the Soviet government. "Not I, not any member of my family has ever owned a country house anywhere," Gorbachev said.

Gorbachev emphasized his rural roots and said he was proud of his father Sergei's service in World War II. His father was wounded in Czechoslovakia during the war, he said.

Gorbachev said he started doing farm work at age 13 and was working as a helper on a combine when he was 15.

Several months ago it published the text of former Moscow party chief Boris N. Yeltsin's 1987 speech warning that a cult of personality could develop around Gorbachev.

Less than a month after the speech in October 1987, Yeltsin was fired as Moscow party chief. But his speech was not published until early this year.

In another issue, the journal published for the first time in the Soviet Union Nikita S. Khrushchev's 1956 "secret speech" denouncing dictator Josef Stalin.

Its circulation is limited. About 650,000 copies are printed for a country of almost 287 million people.

Soviets Turning To Foreign Money As Supplies Dwindle

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOSCOW — The ruble is fast becoming a second-rate currency in the Soviet Union, with more people insisting on foreign money for their services or bartering for products in short supply.

Salaries have been rising but state stores remain so poorly supplied that a scrap of 1950's-style linoleum is sold by lottery only. With plenty of rubles around but the nation's hard-pressed industry producing little, the ruble has less and less purchasing power.

The Soviet Union has long been a place where foreign currency is highly valued, and barter is a common practice. A pack of foreign cigarettes works better than Soviet cash to convince a taxi driver to accept a customer, and a bottle of vodka has legendary persuasive powers.

But a 60-percent crash since last autumn in the black market value of the ruble is testimony that the ruble's worth is declining faster than ever.

The street rate casually offered to tourists has fallen from 25 cents eight months ago to 10 cents a ruble now — compared to the official rate of $1.56. The exchange rate among Soviets themselves is as little as 6 cents for a ruble.

"Alas, we get our pay in ordinary Soviet rubles, and can't pay for the flight in convertible currency which Glavkosmos needs so badly," a columnist in Pravda complained.

Many of the new cooperative private businesses permitted in the Soviet Union are obtaining permission to collect "valuta," as hard currency is called in Russian.

Even the hijackers who recently threatened to blow up a busload of schoolchildren in Ordzhonikidze if they weren't given a plane to Israel demanded their ransom in foreign cash.

In Moscow, foreign companies like Christian Dior are setting up joint ventures that serve customers only for hard currency. This has left citizens fuming, especially when plans were announced for a new pharmacy that would sell life-saving drugs right in their midst, but only for valuta.

It is still technically illegal for most Soviets even to possess foreign money. But clerks even in government hard-currency stores are increasingly ignoring the origin of customers' hard currency.

"We work, but what do we get for it?" complained one Muscovite. "If I want to use my money to buy a TV set, there aren't any. I have to wait six months."

Only 23 of 211 basic food items are readily available in markets, without using personal connections, ration cards or paying a bribe, according to a survey reported by economist Vasili Selyunin in the newspaper Socialisticheskaya Industria.

That was in April, before sugar rationing started in Moscow and before salt and matches joined laundry detergent and ordinary soap on the list of hard-to-find items. Coffee has long disappeared from the shelves of official stories in Leningrad even that staple of Russian winters, tea, is missing.

Scattered Fighting Rages In Ethiopia

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ADDIS ABABA, Ethiopia — Scattered fighting was reported today between loyal and mutinous troops in northern Ethiopia in a rebellion the country's Marxist leader said had been crushed.

President Mengistu Haile Mariam told the nation on radio and television late Thursday that the situation in the northernmost province of Eritrea was "under full control."

But diplomatic sources in the capital said loyal and dissident units of Ethiopia's 2nd Army clashed today in and around the provincial capital of Asmara, three days after the mutiny began.

"It is not under control," said one Western diplomat. "Obviously, the whole situation is very fluid."

The revolt is the most serious challenge to Mengistu's 15-year rule in Ethiopia, which is the Soviet Union's closest ally in Africa.

The diplomat, who like his colleagues spoke only on condition that he not be identified, said at least six rebellious generals were killed in the factional fighting, including the 2nd Army's commander.

"I think Mengistu may be getting it in hand," he said, "but I don't think he's quite as firmly back in the saddle as his statement last night would indicate."

Relief Workers Continue On Job In Lebanon Despite Strife

By Rima Salameh
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BEIRUT, Lebanon — More than 60 Western relief workers are defying kidnappers and constant shellings to aid Palestinian refugees and tens of thousands of Lebanese displaced by the country's 14-year civil war.

But a recent spate of abductions has raised questions whether the risks are worth it.

Some non-governmental aid agencies have withdrawn their officials in recent weeks after their relief workers, once considered immune from Lebanon's kidnap gangs, were abducted by Moslem militants.

On Thursday, the PLO told four West German relief workers to leave a Palestinian refugee camp after they refused to say who kidnapped some of their colleagues.

Fourteen aid officials — four Swiss Red Cross officials, four West Germans, an Irishman, a Swede, a Norwegian, a Briton, a Belgian and a Syrian — have been abducted since 1985.

Most were released after periods ranging from hours to a month. Three, including a West German kidnapped twice, remain missing, along with 15 other Western hostages. Longest held of the hostages is American Terry Anderson, chief Middle East correspondent for The Associated Press, who was abducted March 16, 1985.

But 20 organizations are still functioning, providing badly needed help to a growing number of homeless people and refugees.

"There's no question of us leaving," said Francoise Derron, spokeswoman for the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC), which has 13 Swiss officials in Moslem west Beirut, the largest foreign relief team in Lebanon.

Like most aid officials interviewed, she declined to discuss security arrangements. But, she stressed, "We're going to continue our work, especially a big program of aid distribution to the displaced people."

More than 750,000 people have fled Beirut's Christian and Moslem sectors since fierce artillery and rocket battles broke out March 8 between army commander Gen. Michel Aoun's mainly Christian forces and an alliance of Syrian troops and Moslem allies.

Ms. Derron said ICRC teams have distributed blankets, kitchen sets and food parcels to 61,000 people whose homes were destroyed by the shelling or who were forced to flee.

The Red Cross pulled out its 30-strong team Dec. 21 following death threats from unidentified extremists. But the Geneva-based organization sent a smaller team back Feb. 7.

The Swiss Terre Des Hommes group has not replaced three Swiss workers it withdrew in December after the Red Cross pullout.

The Belgian-based Medicins Sans Frontieres withdrew its four Belgian doctors and nurses from west Beirut in December. It replaced them with two Spanish doctors last month.

Belgian physician Jan Cools, 32, who worked with the Norwegian aid group NORWAC, was kidnapped nearly a year ago — May 21 — in south Lebanon.

A previously unknown group, "The Soldiers of Justice," claimed it abducted him because he was a spy. He remains missing.

"Despite Cools' disappearance, we've never stopped working and we'll try to continue," said NORWAC coordinator Gretha Jensen.

A West German team working with the ASME-Humanitas group in Sidon, provincial capital of south Lebanon, have become the most recent targets for extremists.

Two of them — administrator Heinrich Struebig and nurse Petra Schnitzler — have been kidnapped twice in the space of two weeks. They and colleague Markus Quint were first abducted May 4 near Sidon by unidentified gunmen.

Struebig and Ms. Schnitzler were freed after a few hours, apparently to relay a message to Bonn that Quint would be freed if a Frankfurt court handed down a light sentence on Lebanese Shiite Moslem Mohammed Ali Hamadi.

Hamadi, on trial for taking part in the 1985 hijacking of a TWA jetliner and the slaying of a U.S. Navy diver, was convicted this week of air piracy and murder and sentenced to life in prison.

But he and Ms. Schnitzler were kidnapped again May 16.

U.S. Hesitant On Israeli Plan

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Israeli Foreign Minister Moshe Arens says he has received support from the Bush administration for a plan to hold elections among Palestinians, but U.S. officials say they still have numerous questions about the proposal.

Arens was scheduled to meet today with Vice President Dan Quayle to outline the plan.

Adopted earlier this week by Israel's Cabinet and Parliament, it calls for elections among the 1.7 million Palestinians who have been revolting against Israel's 20-year occupation of the West Bank and Gaza Strip.

"There is a very large degree of understanding and a very large measure of agreement on the issues we discussed," Arens said Thursday after meeting with Secretary of State James A. Baker III. "I think we have a commitment of the administration here to support ... the entire initiative."

But a U.S. official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said that while the Israeli plan is a good start, it raises many questions about how the elections would be held and who would be allowed to take part.

The official said the United States has been "looking at what opportunities it affords and what questions remain to be answered."

Baker told Arens the next step will be for Israel to start talks with Palestinians in the West Bank and Gaza Strip to discuss details for the elections and the conditions that would be acceptable to each side, said the U.S. official.

Israeli sources, speaking on condition of anonymity, say the United States is pressing Israel to give answers to several questions raised by Baker in a letter to Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir last week regarding the election blueprint.

Among them is whether Israel will agree to international supervision of the elections in the West Bank and Gaza Strip and whether the Palestinians living in Israeli-annexed East Jerusalem could vote.

The Israeli sources said the United States wants answers by the end of June. But Arens denied that Baker pressed him for answers.

Warships Visit China

BEIJING (AP) — Three U.S. warships arrived today in Shanghai for a goodwill visit as major pro-democracy demonstrations convulsed the city.

The U.S. Navy port call, only the second since the communist government was founded in 1949, came one day after Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev visited Shanghai.

The warships were originally scheduled to arrive Thursday but were delayed a day, apparently because the Soviets regarded the coincidence of the port call with Gorbachev's visit a diplomatic affront.

The three vessels sailed up the Huangpu River, common waters for foreign warships at the turn of the century when foreign powers dominated Shanghai with gunboat diplomacy. Decorative flags dotted the masts and sailors lined the rails for a look at China's largest city.

Barry Matney, a press officer for the Seventh Fleet, said the command and control ship USS Blueridge, the cruiser USS Sterett and the guided missile frigate USS Rodney M. Davis will be in Shanghai until Monday.

Israeli Soldier, Three Arabs Killed In West Bank Firefight

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

HALHOUL, Occupied West Bank — An Israeli soldier and three Palestinians were killed today in the first firefight between troops and Arab villagers since the start of the 17-month uprising against Israel's occupation.

The troops opened fire on the Palestinians, who had allegedly killed a suspected Israeli collaborator in the past, authorities said.

Seven other soldiers were wounded, including a high-ranking Israeli officer in critical condition after he was wounded in the head, said an army spokeswoman who was not identified under military regulations.

The clash brought to 487 the number of Palestinians killed in the uprising. It also raised to 22 the number of Israelis who have died in the violence, including eight soldiers.

The incident occurred in Beit Aula, a village of 1,500 residents about 15 miles southwest of Jerusalem. Troops blocked access to Beit Aula, stopping journalists at the nearby village of Halhoul.

Maj. Gen. Amram Mitzna, the army commander of the West Bank, denied the gun battle marked a new phase in the uprising.

Mitzna said the Palestinians were affiliated with the Fatah faction headed by Yasser Arafat, leader of the Palestine Liberation Organization.

Mitzna said the incident began when an alleged Palestinian collaborator from the West Bank village of Nuba near Beit Aula called the army for help, saying he was being attacked by fellow villagers.

Troops responding to the call passed through Beit Aula, and "unexpectedly met a suspect car," Mitzna told reporters.

"There was a chase, and they (soldiers) opened fire. The result was three of the group (Palestinians) were killed, and one of our soldiers was killed, and another one was wounded very seriously," Mitzna said.

The Israeli soldier driving the lead jeep was killed by a hand grenade, an army spokesman said. The battalion commander, a lieutenant colonel, was critically wounded in the grenade blast.

"I was in a vehicle behind the lead jeep. I opened fire ... and shot the terrorist in the front seat," a soldier involved in the firefight, identified only as Capt. Rafi, told Israel radio. "I then saw another terrorist in the back seat holding an M-16 rifle who was also firing. I reloaded and continued firing."

Mitzna said the three Palestinian victims were wanted by authorities. "They acted mainly against villagers who helped Israeli authorities, and those who opposed the rule of the intefadeh (Arabic for uprising)," he said.

An army spokesman said the Palestinians had killed one suspected collaborator.

An army spokeswoman said the three Palestinians had an American-made M-16 assault rifle, an Israeli Uzi submachine gun and a pistol.

Today's Israeli victim was the fourth soldier shot to death during the uprising, but he was the first to die in a full-scale gun battle. The other four soldier's deaths came from stonings and stabbings.
