Bush Offers To Cut U.S. Troops By 20 Percent

By Terence Hunt
 THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BRUSSELS, Belgium — President Bush today proposed a 20 percent cut in U.S. combat troops in Europe and challenged Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev to order comparable troop withdrawals to "transform the military map" by 1993.

"Here we go now, on the offense, with a proposal that will test the Soviet Union," said Bush, clearly seeking to seize the initiative in East-West relations at the opening of the two-day NATO summit.

Finessing a divisive quarrel among Western leaders over the issue of modernizing short-range nuclear missiles, Bush countered Gorbachev's recent disarmament proposals with a major plan to achieve balance between the conventional forces of NATO and East-bloc Warsaw Pact armies.

Challenging Gorbachev at a televised news conference after he outlined his proposals for 15 other NATO leaders, Bush asked: "How serious are you? Do you really want to reduce the imbalance ... or do you just want rhetoric?"

Bush's plan included a ceiling of 275,000 troops each for the American and Soviet sides in Europe, which would require a 20 percent reduction in U.S. troop strength and a withdrawal of 325,000 Soviet troops to achieve the same level.

U.S. troop levels in Western Europe now range between 305,000 and 325,000, while some Western estimates put Soviet troop strength in Central and Eastern Europe at more than 600,000.

The 20 percent reduction applies to the 150,000 U.S. combat troops stationed in NATO countries. Once an additional 150,000 support personnel are taken into account, Bush's cut-back would affect about 10 percent of the U.S. military force in Europe.

After first briefing the Western allies privately, Bush sent Gorbachev a letter on Sunday outlining the U.S. proposals.

Today, Bush won an enthusiastic response from Western leaders who had been pressing Washington to regain the offensive from Gorbachev.

British Prime Minister Margaret

Thatcher said Bush's proposals had "transformed the summit," and West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl — a key figure in the missile dispute — hailed the president's "great initiative for rapidly reducing conventional arms."

Bush thus succeeded in taking the summit spotlight away from West Germany's demands for early East-West negotiations to reduce and perhaps eliminate short-range nuclear missiles in Europe.

Bush ruled out any such negotiations soon, at least until a comprehensive conventional arms agreement is implemented, and said he would never accept the idea of a nuclear-free Europe.

The president said a NATO working group had been established to seek a compromise on the missile dispute.

In another major move, Bush said he was recommending that the West drop its nine-year automatic ban on transfers of computers and other high technology to the Soviet Union. This economic sanction was imposed after the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan in December 1979.

Americans Join In Paying Honor To Their War Dead

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

U.S. and German soldiers reunited in Chicago, flags adorned a highway in rural Nebraska and a memorial to Vietnam veterans was dedicated in Baltimore as the nation paused to honor its war dead on the Memorial Day weekend.

Massachusetts Gov. Michael S. Dukakis was scheduled to attend ceremonies today in Beaufort, S.C., to bury the remains of 19 black Union soldiers missing in action since 1863. The remains are believed to be those of members of the 54th Massachusetts Regiment — the first black regiment in the nation's history.

Revelers enjoying the start of the summer vacation season flocked to the nation's parks and beaches Sunday. Thousands attended the Jambalaya Jam festival in Philadelphia, while hundreds lined a beach in Wildwood, N.J., to watch the East Coast Stunt Kite Festival.

In many places, however, traditional observances were altered to provide moments of solemn reflection on the sacrifices made by Americans who lost their lives in wartime.

In New York, several thousand people stood quietly as a fireworks display ended with a lone bugle playing "Taps" as a barge off of the South Street Seaport was enveloped in red smoke and fire.

"This isn't to make the drunk guys with hot dogs cheer. Anyone can do that," said Bruce Bassman of Garden State Fireworks of Millington, N.J. "But to get them to cry, to bring them to some kind of feeling."

And there were no parades, bands or speeches at a ceremony at the Tidewater Veterans Memorial in Virginia Beach, where participants received flags bearing the name of a serviceman who died in combat.

"Last year we had speeches and bands," said Harold Heischouer of the Disabled American Veterans. "This is a little different. This is the people's day. The people are the ceremony."

In western Nebraska, travelers passing the Paxton Cemetery along Interstate 80 could view 109 flags representing veterans who had a connection to the rural community. Many of the flags had draped a veteran's casket.

In Chicago, about 150 U.S. Navy veterans joined with their former adversaries to commemorate the only capture of a German submarine during World War II.

"Many of the men in this engagement, both American and German, have been transferred to another realm by our supreme commander, but we must remember them and honor them, for they will always be a part of us," retired Adm. Earl Trosino, who led the boarding party during the capture, told the crowd, which included three of the German sailors who were on the U-505 submarine captured June 4, 1944 off the coast of west Africa.

About 3,500 people attended the dedication of a monument to Vietnam veterans at a memorial service in Baltimore. Family members and friends rubbed the names of loved ones onto paper at the memorial, modeled after the wall commemorating Vietnam veterans in Washington.

In other Memorial Day activities around the nation:

— Vice President Dan Quayle was among an estimated 400,000 people at the Indianapolis 500 Sunday. Brazilian Emerson Fittipaldi won the race.

— Tuan Tuong Nguyen, a much-decorated captain in the former army of South Vietnam, will be among the participants today at a service at the Oregon Vietnam Veterans Living Memorial.

— More than 1,000 people gathered in a sea of candlelight in Los Angeles Sunday night in memory of their friends and relatives who have died of AIDS.

Nakasone Leaves Party But Stays In Parliament

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOKYO — Former Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone resigned today from the governing Liberal Democratic Party to take responsibility for an influence-peddling scandal that brought down his successor.

Foreign Minister Souseke Uno is now expected to replace Prime Minister Noboru Takeshita who will resign soon because of the Recruit Co. scandal.

Also today, prosecutors charged four aides to senior politicians with illegal handling of money in the Recruit scandal. The prosecutors said their charges marked the end of the investigation into political donations and stock dealings of the information services conglomerate at the heart of the scandal.

Nakasone, who headed the Liberal Democratic faction to which Uno belongs, resigned from the party but refused opposition demands to step down from his seat in Parliament because of the scandal.

"I made the decision (to leave the party) the day before yesterday, which was my birthday," Nakasone told reporters today.

The decision came after Nakasone acknowledged before Parliament on Thursday that he had accepted $322,000 in political donations from the Recruit Co.

But he denied any wrongdoing in the scandal, which occurred mainly during his 1982-87 term as prime minister.

Nakasone met Takeshita today and conveyed his decision to resign from the party to take responsibility for his link to the Recruit scandal.

Those charged today were Tsuneo Hattori, an aide to former Finance Minister Kiichi Miyazawa; Fumio Shimizu, an aide to Liberal Democratic Secretary General Shintaro Abe; and Kikuo Katayama and Masayoshi Sakamaki, aides to former Agriculture Minister Mutsumi Kato.

The four allegedly violated the Political Fund Restrictions Law by failing to report Recruit donations in excess of $10,500. Each of the four could face a fine up to $1,400.

Prosecutors have charged 17 people, including two politicians and four political aides, with bribery and violations of laws on securities and political funds.

Greenville Stores Busy On Holiday

By Stuart Savage
 THE DAILY REFLECTOR

While most government offices were closed today and school attendance was off because of the Memorial Day holiday, a survey of several major department stores suggested that some people were doing a little more shopping than usual for a Monday.

Barry Gaskins, a spokesman for the Pitt County school system, said "it's safe to say that attendance is down slightly today. A spot check of several schools," he said, suggested that "for the most part attendance is down ... not only today but Friday also. People are making a long weekend."

"We have always gone to school on Memorial Day, for the past 20 years," Gaskins said. "With the weather cooperating the way it has, a lower enrollment was to be expected."

Gaskins estimated that enrollment across the county this morning was down "10 to 20 percent."

Dr. William Bloodworth, acting vice chancellor for academic affairs at East Carolina University, said "no problems have come to my office" this morning because of the holiday. "I have no way of knowing if attendance (in classes) is good or not," he added.

At Belk's at Carolina East Mall, spokesman Tildon Brittle said at

Veterans Bunting, Waldrop and Conde meet near monument on Greenville's Town Common

Memorial Honors Pitt's Military Veterans

By Jerry Raynor
 THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Dedication of Pitt County's newest memorial for its veterans took place Sunday afternoon at the Town Common in Greenville.

A simple standing granite monument, inscribed "In Honor Of American Veterans" and engraved with the seals of America's five military services — the Air Force, Army, Coast Guard, Marines and Navy — symbolizes, according to Paul Waldrop Jr., "our way of honoring all American veterans in all branches of service from 1776 on to those serving their country today."

Waldrop is president of the Pitt County Veterans League, which represents memberships in the area's veterans organizations — the American Legion, Vietnam Veterans of America, Disabled American Veterans, Veterans of Foreign Wars and the Air Force Association.

Waldrop said the keynote speaker Sunday, Air Force Lt. Col. Charles Holsen of Seymour Johnson Air Force Base, Goldsboro, "stressed the importance of all who have served in all the nation's wars and in times of peace as part of our nation's heritage."

A Navy veteran of World War II, Waldrop retired as a chief machinist mate in 1967 after active duty and additional service in the Naval Reserve Program.

His father, the late Paul Waldrop Sr., was also a Navy veteran who served both in World War I and II.

Two others representing Pitt County veterans at a press conference on the monument site this morning were Army veterans Jim Conde and David Bunting.

Conde, a veteran of 20 years' active duty, retired with the rank of chief warrant officer 3 in 1975. He spent three tours in Vietnam — the first two with the Green Berets, the last as a helicopter pilot.

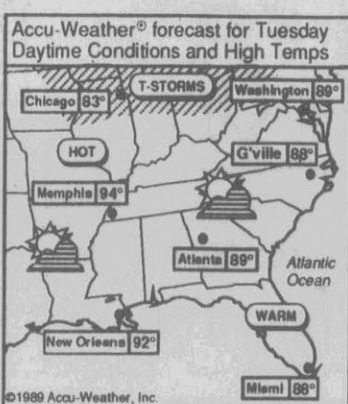

Bunting, a native of Robersonville, is a veteran of five years' service during the Korean conflict.

In addition to the dedication service of the new monument located before the circle of flags in the Town Common, members of the American Legion and the Vietnam Veterans of America, along with a few representatives of other organizations, placed American flags on the graves of known veterans in cemeteries throughout the county.

"A number of children and members of the ROTC unit at D.H. Conley also helped a lot in this annual commemoration of deceased veterans in this Memorial Sunday observance," Waldrop said.

UNC Prof Excels As Political Analyst

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. — Dr. Merle Black of the University of North Carolina remembers the day Lyndon Johnson came to Sulphur Springs, Texas.

The loud, husky president-to-be set down in a helicopter — a big deal for Sulphur Springs in 1948 — and announced to the crowd, "I'm Lyndon Johnson, and I want to be your senator."

Boy met politics and got hooked. Four decades later Black, 49, is a top analyst of Southern politics, perhaps rivaled only by his twin brother and collaborator, Dr. Earl Black at the University of South Carolina.

Black has been at UNC since 1970, but the bearded, low-key professor is moving to Emory University in Atlanta this summer.

It gives him the opportunity to work in a city that has become the center of Southern politics and at a university that hosts the library of former President Jimmy Carter.

And the mid-sized, private school also made Black a financial offer he couldn't turn down. He will be the Asa B. Candler Professor of Politics and Government.

Emory made a very attractive offer, he said recently in his office, which is cluttered with books and political paraphernalia.

Georgia is nirvana for a political scientist specializing in the South, he said. It's the home of two possible presidential candidates, Mayor Andrew Young and Sen. Sam Nunn, as well as House Republican Whip Newt Gingrich and powerful Democrat Sen. Wyche Fowler.

"It's a chance to take a position at a fine university in the most important city in the Southeast," Black said.

Black's colleagues at UNC say his loss will have a major impact at the University.

"We're talking about him as if he has died, when he's only going to Atlanta," said Dr. Richard Richardson, chairman of the political science department and a longtime friend.

UNC made a strong counteroffer to Black, including an endowed professorship, Richardson said. But Black was set on moving to Atlanta. His departure will be felt throughout the University, Richardson said.

From a public relations standpoint, he has given over 1,000 interviews to national media, Richardson said.

The actual number of interviews is about 1,500, Black said, with most coming in the last five years. His name has been a fixture in publica-

Kids Like Violence In Their Cartoons

By Hoyt Harwell
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TUSCALOOSA, Ala. — Most children who watch cartoons think that getting socked in the nose or banged on the head is funnier than less violent humor or action.

That holds true for almost all demographic groups in the 5-9 age bracket, according to a university study that based its scholarship on cartoon space creatures called "Itsy" and "Bitsy."

Geography and economic background did make some difference, said Jennings Bryant, broadcasting professor at the University of Alabama, who conducted the study along with Robert Musberger of the University of Houston.

They found that violence got the greatest response from inner-city and rural children of lower socioeconomic groups.

The study, funded by the National Association of Broadcasters, used 400 children who viewed four short animated videos produced for the project. They were asked to rate them as "yukky," OK, pretty good or wonderful.

Although the study was made in rural, urban, suburban and town locations in the Southeast, Bryant said the children were representative of a national demographic profile.

"Violence was rated most enjoyable by rural and inner-city children, by minority children, by males and by younger children," he said.

"Humor works as well as violence, and in some cases better, for kids in the upper socioeconomic groups, those living in suburbia with better educated parents. Partly, I'm sure, it's a case of differing socialization."

For younger children, especially, violence is funnier than humor, he said.

"When it comes to TV entertainment, if you want to make kids laugh, the formula is clearly that you give them heavy doses of violence, especially with young kids, and you make it primitive kinds of violence," such as a punch to the nose or a bang on the head, Bryant said.

He said there is a real danger the nation is raising a generation of children who respond better to violence than to other stimuli, but that it is difficult to say whether the response to violence is encouraged by TV, by other factors in a child's environment, or by our "natural, primitive instinct."

Bryant has conducted extensive research in children's reaction to television and other entertainment. Since he published a book, "Children's Understanding of Television," in 1983, he has been consulted often by various studios, advertising agencies and their clients.

Farm Scene

By Sam Uzzell

PITT COUNTY FARM AGENT

Farmers and homeowners are being given the opportunity to safely and conveniently dispose of empty pesticide containers and unwanted pesticides in Pitt County.

The disposal of suitably prepared pesticide containers is a part of the existing solid waste management plan. The Pesticide Disposal Assistance Program is administered jointly by the North Carolina Department of Agriculture and the North Carolina State Agricultural Extension Service. The proper use of both these programs can be a significant contribution to local efforts to conserve landfill space, reduce detrimental environmental effects, and clean up supplies of potentially hazardous materials.

Since Jan. 1, 1989, there have been five manned solid waste container sites throughout Pitt County. These locations have been set up to accept household and other refuse for recycling. They accept aluminum, paper, cardboard, glass, and household garbage at these areas and have been successful in helping citizens in recycling certain items. More are planned in the future, and one very important benefit of these sites is that the recycling habit can become a part of every day life for local folks.

These five sites have also been designated as areas where empty metal pesticide containers can be disposed of if they have been triple-rinsed, crushed and punctured so they cannot be used again. Glass containers can be triple-rinsed, and placed in the bin designated to accept glass. Only metal containers of five gallons or less in size can be accepted. Prior to Jan. 1, pesticide containers had to be taken to the landfill to be disposed of. The operating hours for these sites are 7:30 a.m. to 6 p.m.

Plastic pesticide containers must also be triple-rinsed, crushed and punctured. These must be taken to the landfill and should not be placed in the solid waste container sites. At present, there is no county maintained facility to handle metal containers larger than five gallons. Drums of 30-55 gallons must be handled differently and on an individual basis.

Beginning in late June, the NCDA and the Pitt County Agricultural Extension Service will be cooperating in a program to collect and dispose of unwanted pesticides. People who have pesticides that are no longer legal to use, or excess amounts, now have a safe way of getting rid of them. This is a one-year trial program that will operate one day per month until May 31, 1990.

Pesticides will be accepted on June 23 from 9 a.m. until 11 a.m. at the lower parking lot adjacent to the Pitt County Office Building. It is also intended that the fourth Friday morning of every month will be a collection day.

Disposal limits are 200 pounds to 300 pounds and/or 35-40 gallons per person per year. Requests that exceed these quantities are subject to approval from the NCDA. Also, none of the following can be accepted: 2,4,5-T, silvex, pentachlorophenol and fumigants. The only fumigant that can be accepted is ethylene dibromide. All containers must be the manufacturer's original container less than five-gallon in size. All containers whether metal or glass must have a legible original label such that the active ingredients or the EPA registration number can be clearly established.

Lids and metal surfaces must be leak-free and show no signs of major rust or corrosion. In some cases, leaking containers can be accepted if they are overpacked in a 5-gallon plastic pail with a secure lid. Similarly, fiber bags if torn or damaged, must be wrapped in two heavy duty plastic bags and secured at the top. A label must be affixed to the outside designating the percentages of all active ingredients and the weight of the container.

For more information, contact Sam Uzzell, Pitt County Agricultural Extension Agent, 830-6374.

Barbara Sparkles In European Debut

By Lois Romano
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

BRUSSELS — Barbara Bush made her European debut as first lady over the weekend, a fast-paced two days that included culture and charity, an audience with the pope and a swim. She arrived here Sunday night for a quiet dinner with her husband before the frenzied NATO meetings begin — probably the couple's last moment of privacy till Air Force One kisses the runway in Kennebunkport, Maine, on Friday.

The first lady hasn't had a second for shopping, though she told her staff she had hoped to sneak in a trip to Ferragamo, the exclusive Italian shoe retailer. Despite her full schedule in Italy, however, she stuck to her plan to maintain a low profile, and her anticipated plans for the rest of the week indicate that's unlikely to change.

She has only one "open" event Monday, a trip to a village for the mentally retarded operated by the Belgian government. She'll be accompanied by Queen Fabiola of Belgium. The press already has been instructed not to shout questions at the queen, a novel concept to the thousands of hungry journalists overrunning this quaint city.

At Mrs. Bush's one semipublic solo stop in Rome, a tour of the ruins of the Arch of Constantine, she attracted a medium-sized crowd and a rather small contingent of the Italian press.

An Italian wire service reporter who was there said that the Italian media were more interested in Mrs. Bush's tour guide, Anna Maria De Mita, wife of the prime minister. "We're here because she's trying to be like an American first lady," explained Fabrizio Finzi.

Regardless, all the local papers dutifully reported on The Original and what one called her seemingly "endless energy." What particularly impressed them was how Barbara Bush took a swim in the U.S. Embassy pool at 3 o'clock on Saturday, had her hair done by one of Rome's trendy hair stylists at 4 and was ready for her tour of the Vatican by 5.

While reporters were not permitted to get too close to Mrs. Bush during her activities, she obliged by telling them later about what she had done.

At the Gift of Mary Center for homeless women, where the first lady donated six dozen sheets and towels, she dished out food for nearly 30 minutes and had a full tour of the facility. "We checked it from head to toe," she relayed. "And I would say it did not smell like an institution. It did not smell."

She also received a private viewing of the recently restored Sistine Chapel ceiling before joining her husband's meeting-in-progress with Pope John Paul II.

"It's beautiful," she told her guide upon leaving the chapel. "Now what are you going to do about my neck?"

Word began circulating early Saturday that President Bush was eager to break out of the cocoon of presidential travel and might make some spontaneous stop. At first it was thought he might visit a cafe, until the Secret Service nixed that idea.

But Sunday he got his wish. On about 10 minutes' notice, the president asked to be flown to the USS Guadalcanal, a helicopter carrier anchored in the Tyrrhenian Sea.

So spontaneous was the trip that the ship's captain was unthinkingly left behind at the cemetery in Nettuno, where Bush had just laid a wreath and delivered his Memorial Day weekend address. And the first person George and Barbara Bush ran into on the carrier was a startled sailor who had just stepped out of the shower. Luckily for him, he was wearing a towel.

At Saturday's audience with the pope for Bush and his official party, it quickly became clear that someone had slipped a couple of extra people into the pope's study. A White House official confirmed later that at least one and maybe two Catholic staffers had been ushered in at the last minute.

As the pope and the president were about to begin their remarks, a little game of musical chairs was being played out in the wings. State Department officials Margaret Tutwiler, Robert Zoellick and Dennis Ross quickly sandwiched themselves into two chairs without missing a beat.

It's not exactly Nancy Reagan redux, but there has been moderate interest in Barbara Bush's wardrobe this weekend.

At her first event in Rome, Mrs. Bush showed up in a perfectly coordinated red suit with matching pumps. Not an hour later, she hopped out of her huge black limo still color-matched, but wearing red tasseled loafers.

"I was the smart one," she bragged to the women she met at the Constantine ruins, all in fashionable heels.

Had she changed into her walking shoes? she was asked. "You bet I did," she said. "Now don't focus on my feet," she warned photographers.

There was also some curiosity

Mrs. Bush holds broomstick witch given to her in Brussels about how she would change from the outfit she wore to meet the pope — a buttoned-up black Scaasi suit — into fancier clothes for the dinner given by Italian Prime Minister Ciriaco De Mita immediately afterward. Practical as ever, the first lady simply whipped off the suit jacket in the car and showed up at the Villa Madama wearing her black skirt and a lacy white top.

The company line on Peter Secchia, the embattled Italian ambassador-designate, hasn't moved an inch. While greeting of U.S. Embassy staffers in Rome, President Bush said of the man whom the Italians now call "the ambassador of dirty words" that "he'll do a good job. ... He knows what he doesn't know. ... I believe the Senate will act promptly on that nomination."

The one fellow not commenting: Maxwell Rabb, outgoing ambassador to Italy, who some speculate did not want Secchia around this weekend to intrude on his swan song.

Bush Makes Offer

If the NATO allies give their expected approval, such transfers would be considered on a case-by-case basis to determine if they posed a threat to Western security.

Facing criticism that he has moved too cautiously in responding to Soviet arms proposals, Bush said, "Here we go now on the offense" with the plan to reduce conventional forces in Europe.

His plan also included NATO willingness for the first time to negotiate limits on combat helicopters and aircraft throughout Europe as part of a convention arms agreement.

Bush also proposed locking in Soviet acceptance of proposed Western ceilings on each side's arsenals of tanks and armored troop carriers, and said a similar ceiling on artillery would be sought.

Bush urged his NATO partners to endorse his plan and send it to allied negotiators in conventional force talks with the Soviet-led Warsaw Pact which began in Vienna, Austria, last March.

He said an agreement could be reached in six months "or maybe a year" if all went well and could be implemented by 1992 or 1993.

The president said Secretary of States James A. Baker III was available to meet with Gorbachev or Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze, "the sooner the better."

"If it were accepted, it would be a revolutionary conventional arms control agreement," Bush said.

"If the Soviet Union accepts this fair offer, the results would dramatically increase stability on the continent and transform the military map of Europe," he said. "We can and must begin now to set out a new vision for Europe at the end of this century."

Early this month, Gorbachev offered to accept ceilings on Soviet forces in all Warsaw Pact countries as well as a ceiling on overall Soviet forces.

Brittle, who said Belk's would be opened until 9 p.m., said: "We have a special promotion running and hope it works."

Officials at Sears, Roebuck & Co. at Carolina East were unavailable for comment this morning, but Dennis Hammock, assistant manager at the K mart Discount Store at Greenville Square Shopping Center, said "hopefully we'll have a good day."

K mart opened at 7 a.m. today and will close at 6 p.m. Hammock said traffic in the store was "slow earlier," but at mid-morning he said the number of shoppers had increased and suggested that the flow of people into the store was "kind of steady."

Bill Hopper, manager of the J.C. Penney Co. at The Plaza mall, said "it looks like it's going to be a very successful Memorial Day."

"We had a very good Sunday," Hopper said, and "the month of May has been exceptionally good."

Open until 9 p.m. today, Hopper said the Penney store is "running a nice increase for the month. We had an exceptional day yesterday and I think we'll have a good, successful Memorial Day."

IICUC CERTIFIED MASTER CLEANER
NOTHING FOR SOMETHING!

"Hold on a second! You've got that one backward!..."

Nope. There are some situations in life in which you get nothing for something—no value for your hard-earned money. Let me explain...

Many manufacturers of brand-name carpet and upholstery protectors have licensing programs whereby they train authorized firms in the proper formulation and application of their product. Then, they spend millions advertising how their product can save you time and money—time, because protected fabric is easier to maintain, and money, because your fabric wears longer and is less likely to be ruined by permanent stains.

Unfortunately, there are many less-than-scrupulous, bait-and-switch cleaners in many communities who advertise good products at ridiculously low prices, or simply, "...thrown in with the cleaning job." Because quality protectors are relatively expensive, and because the price he charges barely covers his costs, the bait-and-switch operator often puts little or no chemical in the solution he applies to your carpet. In fact, lab tests of "protected carpet" analyzed by one major manufacturer found that, "...the cleaner had applied only lemon-scented water."

The Difference?...

So how does the average homeowner tell the difference? The obvious answer is to do business with reputable firms; yet even that isn't an iron-clad guarantee. You should scrutinize the job carefully, especially when carpet protectors are being applied. Then, conduct your own test by putting a few drops of water on the treated fabric (once time for curing has elapsed) to see if it soaks in. If the water beads up on tightly woven or tufted fabrics, the protection is there. If not, it's time to start asking questions; maybe even to get an evaluation from an independent source!

A Challenge

Tax Study Shows Burden Unbalanced

If you are an average family you pay about 36 cents of every dollar for taxes in 1986.

So reports the Tax Foundation.

Since no family is absolutely average, the study reports that households with incomes under $10,000 pay out 49.5 percent of their incomes to federal, state and local governments. The wealthy pay well, too. Those with incomes of $90,000 pay an average of 51.6 percent of their incomes in taxes.

The study shows that poorer families pay a larger share of taxes, not because of income tax, but because excise taxes, gasoline, cigarettes and alcohol taxes take a large part of their income. Wealthier people paid their larger share in income taxes.

For all of us the study shows taxes to be a heavy load and foundation president Robert C. Brown addressed this.

"Demands to reduce the federal budget deficit and to keep state and local spending under control sound loud and clear," he wrote. "At the same time, the cry for continuation and expansion of existing government services — as well as for new programs — shows no signs of abating."

We know that the demands for public services are not going to abate. In the decades ahead there will be more demands for assistance for the elderly. Local governments will have to provide more and better services. Public education will require increased financing.

Yet this study shows most of us carrying a good tax load and some income groups carrying disproportionate shares.

The politicians of the 21st century will have to devise ways to finance public needs, while providing more equalized taxes for all groups.

This may seem impossible, but government will be helped considerably by increased productivity due to technology which brings surprising new developments at regular intervals.

'The politicians of the 21st century will have to devise ways to finance public needs, while providing more equalized taxes for all groups.'

A Day To Remember The Humble

David Trevino is a writer from Grimesland.

Last summer after James Danforth Quayle III received the Republican Party's nomination for the vice-presidency of the United States, hours of broadcast time and miles of column inches scrutinized that gentleman's service with the Indiana Army National Guard during the war in Vietnam. Many felt the intense press coverage was hostile and unfair.

This March when Richard B. Cheney was nominated by President George Bush for the office of Secretary of Defense, comparatively little was said or written about that gentleman's military service during the unpopular conflict in Indochina. Secretary Cheney requested and received two student deferments while studying for his bachelor's and master's degrees at the University of Wyoming. In 1966 Cheney also requested and received a hardship deferment from conscription because he was married and had a child.

The fact that Cheney is still married to that woman seemed to be of greater importance than did his lack of personal experience in the armed forces when his nomination to head the Department of Defense was considered. Of course, Cheney did vote for every effort to increase defense spending while a member of the House of Representatives and he has always been an enthusiastic supporter of the use of military force to protect American interests abroad.

But considering how Secretary Cheney's lack of any military experience during the Vietnam era was relatively ignored, perhaps Vice-President Quayle was indeed treated unfairly last summer. Certainly, no one other than Quayle has had their record of military service during that tumultuous period subjected to such minute inspection and such wide exposure. The fact that this critical appraisal of Quayle's record took place during the passion of a bitterly contested national election may have influenced its objectivity.

Now that the votes have been counted, it may be possible to see Vice-President Quayle's decision to join the National Guard six days before his student deferment expired in a fairer perspective by taking into account what others in this country chose to do, or not do during that divisive period 20 years ago.

For example, Jose Francisco Jimenez was a lance corporal in the Marine Corps serving as a fire team leader with Company "K" of the Third Battalion, Seventh Marines in Quang Nam Province, Republic of Vietnam on the 28th of August in 1969, 101 days after Vice-President Quayle raised his hand to take the oath of enlistment.

On that day, 95 days after Quayle was graduated from Depauw University where he had been a vocal supporter of our involvement in Vietnam, Company "K" was engaged in fierce combat with elements of the North Vietnamese Army.

The lead platoon became pinned down by withering fire from small arms, automatic weapons and an anti-aircraft gun. Lance Corporal Jimenez charged into the elephant grass before him and killed an enemy soldier blocking his path to the anti-aircraft gun. He then rushed across twenty meters of open ground to the gun's position. Using his rifle and grenades, he destroyed the weapon and killed its gunner.

The administration, in league with many of the congressional budget game-players, would like you to believe that the annual deficit figure is declining nicely, just as it is supposed to do under the "discipline" of the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings law. It's not, and Rostenkowski's proposal would force them to admit it by getting an explicit exemption from the law's ceiling each year for the borrowed $50 billion.

Rostenkowski has been outspoken in saying that you can't really reduce the deficit without tackling entitlement programs and raising taxes — things most politicians don't want to do. So they wish he would go away. But he's bullheaded enough to make them listen.

Bluntness is also the hallmark of Ed Derwinski, the Republican who represented the smokestack communities south of Chicago for 24 years in the House. When he was squeezed out by redistricting in 1982, he became a

He continued to advance. He killed another North Vietnamese soldier with a grenade. He killed two more with his rifle at a distance of less than 10 feet.

As the North Vietnamese automatic weapons concentrated their fire on him, Lance Corporal Jimenez shouted encouragement to his fellow Marines and pursued a sixth enemy soldier he had spotted in a tree line. At that point he was mortally wounded by a sniper's bullet.

He was one of 9,856 American servicemen to lose their lives that year in Vietnam. No National Guardsmen suffered such hardship defending the Hoosier State in 1969.

Lance Corporal Jimenez was posthumously awarded the Congressional Medal of Honor. It was presented to his mother by then-President Richard M. Nixon at a White House ceremony in 1970, the year Vice-President Quayle began studying law at Indiana University.

Aside from the different branches of the armed forces in which Lance Corporal Jimenez and Quayle chose to serve, there is another important difference between the two. Quayle was born in Indiana, a member of the family which controls that state's richest and most powerful publishing empire; Lance Corporal Jimenez was born in Mexico, the son of a poor farm worker.

'But on June 7, 1968, Jimenez left the little farming community in which he lived and drove 60 miles to Phoenix to join the Marine Corps. He told his mother, "This country has given us so much, and I must give something back." He gave his life. Vice-President Quayle and Secretary of Defense Cheney are honorable gentlemen serving the nation in esteemed positions of great responsibility, but Memorial Day is a time to remember those like the humble Jose Francisco Jimenez who answered America's call when many of her more fortunate sons did not.'

When he was 10, Jimenez and his four-year-old sister traveled with their mother to Eloy, Arizona in search of a better life. After attending Santa Cruz Valley Union High School where he was elected president of the Future Farmers of America, Jimenez went to work on a nearby ranch where he and his family lived.

Many of Jimenez's classmates were drafted as the war in Vietnam dragged on, but he was not. He was a citizen of the Republic of Mexico and not subject to the draft.

But on June 7, 1968, Jimenez left the little farming community in which he lived and drove 60 miles to Phoenix to join the Marine Corps. He told his mother, "This country has given us so much, and I must give something back."

He gave his life.

Vice-President Quayle and Secretary of Defense Cheney are honorable gentlemen serving the nation in esteemed positions of great responsibility, but Memorial Day is a time to remember those like the humble Jose Francisco Jimenez who answered America's call when many of her more fortunate sons did not.

S&L Bailout Plan Reeks Of Cheap Perfume & Camouflage

LONDON — Forgive the chauvinism, but I'm awfully proud of two of my fellow Illinoisians, Rep. Dan Rostenkowski and Secretary of Veterans Affairs Edward J. Derwinski. They're giving candor a boost in the capital when it needs all the help it can get.

Rostenkowski, the veteran Chicago Democrat and chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, has been leading the battle against the Bush administration scheme to hide the cost of the savings-and-loan bailout by keeping it "off-budget."

The Bush plan reeks of the cheap perfume in which politicians try to camouflage bad news. If you have a debt, you know it represents an obligation you have to repay. The government isn't like that.

It can, when it suits its convenience, move some of its debts "off-budget" by unloading them on invented institutions. Over the years, it's done that with many of its loan programs, and the savings-and-loan bailout plan proposed by Secretary of Treasury Nicholas Brady follows that pattern.

The plan creates something called the Resolution Funding Corporation (RFC) and authorizes it to sell $50 billion in bonds to pump needed capital into the struggling S&Ls. Because the RFC is not technically a government agency (even though the Treasury would pay the interest on the loans), the $50 billion would not be counted as part of the deficit. Neat, is it not?

Rostenkowski doesn't think so. His concept of straightforward financing goes back to the days when his grandfather ran a primitive S&L in Chicago. It was an unguarded cabinet, where on the first day of each month the immigrant families left their mortgage payments in assigned cubbyholes and collected the pre-written receipts that had been left for them.

Rostenkowski despises the subterfuges in the budget game that successive administrations have played with Congress and the American people. While others were celebrating this year's phony budget agreement, he said bluntly: "There is no way we can continue this 'blue smoke and mirrors,' this rosy scenario dance we have been doing, and get our economic house in order."

He objected that the administration bailout scheme would cost the taxpayers an extra $4.5 billion, because the bond buyers could demand higher interest rates from the quasi-governmental RFC than they could on direct Treasury borrowing.

troubleshooter for the State Department. In his first big decision as head of the Veterans Department, Derwinski stunned his bureaucrats and apparently surprised the White House by reversing the government policy on Agent Orange. That is the defoliant which many Vietnam veterans say has damaged their health and shortened their lives.

Ending 12 years of foot-dragging and litigation over the effects of dioxin, the carcinogen in Agent Orange, Derwinski told his departmental lawyers they were not to appeal a federal judge's ruling that the government was using too strict a standard in determining whether Agent Orange caused the cancers, birth defects and other ailments of which the veterans complained.

Derwinski's decision means that instead of a lengthy appeals process in the courts, the bureaucrats will begin writing regulations under which the Vietnam vets can obtain medical benefits for their Agent Orange afflictions. He ordered the regulations ready by October.

The budget bureaucrats who kept Derwinski's predecessors at the Veterans Administration from doing what he has done calculate that it might cost as much as $40 million to treat the Vietnam vets with two types of debilitating cancer linked to Agent Orange but not provably caused by it.

That $40 million is less than 1 percent of the $4.5 billion in extra interest payments that the bond-buyers will get if the Bush administration beats Rostenkowski and succeeds in keeping the S&L bailout funds "off-budget." Those priorities are perversely wrong. Derwinski and Rostenkowski are fighting separate fights, but they have their priorities right — a lot more right than the politicians and bureaucrats who surround them. More power to them.

A Loophole Big Enough To Put A Fist Through

Paul O'Connor

RALEIGH — In the state of North Carolina, you can literally beat someone to the brink of death and, so long as you used only your hands to commit the crime, you'll get off with two years, at most, in prison.

It doesn't happen often, but it happens, and that frustrates a number of court officials. Janet Ward Black, an assistant prosecutor, became so angry about this legal shortcoming that she has lobbied the legislature for change.

According to a story in The Salisbury Post, Robert Larry Pepper Jr. was recently sentenced to two years in prison for beating his wife so savagely that she is now permanently disabled. One assistant district attorney referred to Mrs. Pepper as "a murder victim who did not die."

The defendant received this apparently lenient sentence due to the structure of the state's assault laws. There are three levels of felony assault: assault with a deadly weapon with intent to kill, assault with a deadly weapon inflicting serious injury and assault with a deadly weapon with intent to kill inflicting serious injury. To convict someone on any of those three felony charges, the state must prove an intent to murder and show that a lethal weapon was used.

In the case of the Peppers, the state faced two formidable obstacles set up by that law. First, it is extremely difficult to prove murderous intent. Second, fists don't count as a lethal weapon, even, as in the words of The Post's editorial, "the victim is small and weak and the attacker is big and strong." The prosecution could not overcome those obstacles and so the defendant was convicted of the lesser charge of misdemeanor assault.

But future assailants probably won't be as lucky as Pepper. After Mrs. Black led a campaign to close that loophole, the state House passed such a bill earlier this month by a vote of 94 to zero. At this writing, the bill is before the Senate.

The bill does not specify the use of hands as a deadly weapon. Instead, it would be triggered by the results of a beating. When someone suffers an "extremely serious injury" as the result of an assault, the assault would qualify as a felony. This would be an entirely new section of the law and, according to legislators who amended Rep. Charlotte Gardner's original bill, it would eliminate the loophole for those who use only their hands in an assault.

According to the bill, an assailant will have committed a class H felony when he inflicts injuries that result in a permanent physical or mental handicap or disability, or, when he inflicts injuries that result in protracted hospitalization of the victim.

As such, the bill would continue to draw a line between the assailant who beats someone with a pipe, or shoots someone with a gun, and the assailant that punches someone in the nose during a barroom brawl. The law has long sought to distinguish the punch in the nose from more serious assault, and to treat it less severely.

Deng Must Find His Own Successor

Jim Hoagland

BEIJING — The apparent victory that supreme leader Deng Xiaoping has scored over reformists in the power struggle within China's Communist leadership leaves Deng with two immediate political problems that could determine how history will judge his actions in this crisis.

Having let it be known to party officials that General Secretary Zhao Ziyang has fallen into disgrace and faces serious charges of anti-party activity, Deng must now find a successor to Zhao. And the 84-year-old leader must finally begin to show China that he has begun to move toward appointing a successor to himself.

here by encouraging a battle for influence between the government apparatus and the party, which has not occupied the dominant role that it theoretically should have over the past decade.

If he ultimately prevails in a situation that is still fluid, Deng is likely to want to avoid a repeat of the turmoil China has just endured and unify authority under a new party leader, some diplomatic analysts predicted.

One possible candidate will be Prime Minister Li Peng, who declared martial law and led the efforts ordered by Deng against Zhao and hundreds of thousands of protesting students, intellectuals and workers who turned out daily in Tiananmen Square over the past two weeks to demand the resignations of Deng and of Li, who is 60.

Under one scenario, Li would take the general secretary's job and name one of his own proteges as a new and less powerful prime minister.

Such a move would make Li the most obvious candidate to succeed Deng, who diplomats said has hinted that he really will step down late this year. But as Zhao and others have been identified in the past as possible successors to Deng, this is not a comfortable position to occupy.

Zhao, 70, is the second consecutive party boss who had begun to be more popular than Deng to be pushed aside by the authoritarian Deng, who exercises influence through his post as chairman of the party's military commission.

Hu Yaobang, who like Deng was one of the veterans of the Long March campaign led by Mao Zedong in the Chinese civil war, was ousted from the party job by Deng in 1987 despite their long friendship and political association.

At the time, Hu was accused of being too lenient with students demonstrating for democracy in a number of cities.

Deng then prevailed upon the reluctant Zhao to give up the job of premier and become party general secretary.

As premier, Zhao had been the main proponent of economic change. But as general secretary, Zhao, who is not an ideologue, took on a position that laid more stress on ideology and politics. Zhao was at a disadvantage, because his real strengths are in economic administration.

It is unclear whether Deng ever transferred to Zhao much real power — an ambiguity largely due to a system where power is personality-based rather than constitutionally based.

(c) 1989, The Washington Post

"We are witnessing a tragedy," said an Asian ambassador who has in the past admired Deng. "If he had really retired in 1984, as he announced, Deng would have gone down in history as one of China's greatest leaders."

"We are witnessing a tragedy," said an Asian ambassador who has in the past admired Deng. "If he had really retired in 1984, as he announced, Deng would have gone down in history as one of China's greatest leaders."

"Instead, he turns out to be simply another one of those old men who could not bear to see someone else get enough influence to replace him."

Much of the turmoil that China has faced in the past month is attributable to Deng's refusal to step aside gracefully, and to give enough power to one of his proteges in a way that would have made it clear that he had chosen a successor, diplomats and Chinese analysts said.

Such division of authority has long been a characteristic of Chinese political history. But it has created particular problems in the communist system

Legislature Takes Aim At Last Major Bills

By F. Alan Boyce
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — State lawmakers are focusing their attention on the state budget, a highway funding package and a raise for teachers and state employees as they enter what they hope will be their last month, but some major bills could be lost in the rush to adjourn.

The base budget bill is closest to resolution. A conference committee has agreed on all of its provisions except the way a $20 million fund for small-town road projects will be administered, said Sen. Henson Barnes, D-Wayne, president pro tem of the Senate.

An $8.6 billion, 12-year highway spending package began moving in the House last week. That package and a similar Senate version should reach their respective floors this week, said Barnes.

Rep. Alex Hall, House Finance Committee chairman, said the next step will be finding the money for a 6 percent raise for teachers and state employees — something that has been on the back burner for several weeks.

"It's impossible to focus on two at the same time," said Hall, D-New Hanover. "It looks like that (the highway package) is running along pretty well now, so I'll direct the committee to focus more on funding salaries next."

Key Senate Democrats announced last week a consensus on a funding package that did not include the sales-tax increase proposed by Gov. Jim Martin. But Barnes said that remained the biggest stumbling block.

"There is still considerable debate in our body and ... Senator (Ken) Royall is refining his proposal a little more," Barnes said. "We had a consensus, but as he (Royall) pointed out, it is just a start in putting a package together."

Hall also questioned the Senate proposal, saying the House was unlikely to go along with a plan to use a tax windfall from the RJR Nabisco buyout to help pay for salary increases.

"That sounds an awful lot like the Senate saying they want to use nonrecurring money for recurring expenditures," he said. "That's not like them at all."

Almost lost in the shuffle are proposed constitutional amendments including one to give the governor the veto.

Senate Majority Leader Ted Kaplan, D-Forsyth, typified the hard line being taken in the Senate.

"All we need is the budget," he said. "A highway bill would be nice. A raise for teachers would be real nice. But the veto? That's up to the House. The Senate's already acted on that. We're off the hook."

"When those three things are finished, then we will be able to go home, even though the other bills are not finished, because they would be alive in the short session under the adjournment rules," said Barnes.

In fact, the Senate also approved proposed constitutional amendments to lengthen legislative terms from two years to four years, to allow appointment of appellate judges rather than statewide election and to have the governor and lieutenant governor or run as a ticket. Those proposals and others constitutional questions remained tied up in a House committee last week.

But Rep. Walter Jones, D-Pitt, whose subcommittee approved a package of proposed constitutional amendments, said that, too, will be on the train when the rush to adjournment starts.

"I don't think it's something that's got to pass," he said. "I think it's something that should pass."

Barnes said the legislative gears won't grind to a halt over the veto, even though Martin will likely continue to make it a campaign issue.

"We're concerned about all bills, but it's doubtful that any one bill other than those major bills would hold us here," he said.

Public Forum Says Most Counties Can Increase Support For Schools

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — While many North Carolina counties have compelling needs outside education, an increasing number have the resources necessary to increase their support of schools, the Public School Forum of North Carolina reported.

More than half the school systems in North Carolina can afford to increase their support of public education — a measurement that can help compare the efforts and abilities of all 100 counties to pay for better schools, said John Dornan, the forum's director. That could help local officials find a new perspective, he said.

"I have yet to meet a county commissioner who feels he isn't doing as much as they can for schools, and you rarely meet a school board member who believes that," Dornan said in an interview.

The forum analyzed various state and local data to arrive at two broad measures of school finance: a system's ability to pay for public education, and a system's commitment to pay for public education.

"I think it is a good barometer of commitment to education and how much or how little it's valued by communities and their elected officials," said Dornan.

"We're back to values: Is having a new modern county office building more important than having schools that are educating young people?"

The share of schools found to be meeting or exceeding their ability to pay increased from the forum's first study, released in 1987. That year about 45 percent of the schools showed a greater commitment to support local schools compared with 48 percent this year.

The forum's study analyzed state and local revenue and spending figures, adjusted for differences in county tax rates, tax bases, population, per-capita income and public welfare payments, which tend to hit poorer counties harder.

Key findings in the study include:

— Local spending per student varies greatly, from about $3,698 in Dare County to $299 in Harnett County.

— The per-student tax base, which deter mines how much money school districts can raise locally, varies from $908,943 in Dare to less than $79,219 in the Red Springs school district in Robeson County. In the three Guilf districts, the per-student tax base is $271,404.

— When a county's ability to pay is compared with actual spending, there is often a wide gap. For example, Brunswick County ranks last in its commitment to provide local support for public schools but fourth in ability to pay; Forsyth County ranks fifth in ability to pay but 102nd in commitment.

The report showed many North Carolina counties, mostly in rural areas, are struggling with stagnant property bases and low per-capita income. That situation, combined with required increases in federal and state payments for welfare and other programs, has made it even more difficult for these counties to increase their support for schools.

"Despite the progress over the last four years, and despite efforts to overcome poverty and low tax bases, many counties simply lack the resources needed to provide an adequate level of local school funding," said Peter Leouis, director of policy research for the forum and author of the study.

The study found that local taxpayers, largely through county commissioners, provide more than $1 billion for public schools annually. State and federal spending for public schools is about $3 billion.

Leouis said some local money was freed up by passage of the half-cent local option sales tax in 1986 and the 1987 School Facilities Act, which provided state money to help pay for the construction of local schools by increasing the corporate income tax rate from 7 to 8 percent.

"The 1987 facilities act is part of the reason they've got extra resources," he said.

He said the drop in rank by some districts has come, in many cases, because other districts have made dedicated efforts to increase the money they give to schools.

The Public School Forum, organized in 1986, is a coalition of state and local government officials, business leaders and others concerned about public education.

Long-Running Suit Over J.P. Stevens Bias Still Unsettled

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ROANOKE RAPIDS, N.C. — More than 2,800 former workers and job applicants at J.P. Stevens & Co. are seeking $96 million in back pay for alleged racial discrimination, but their 13-year quest appears no closer to resolution.

Willie Ray Pittman, a construction worker in Weldon who applied for a job at Stevens in 1973, recalls getting the runaround when he applied for any job at the mill.

"It didn't matter what kind of job it was — I just needed a job," Pittman, 41, said in an interview. "But they never got around to me for some reason, and during that time, I think they were hiring three or four whites to one black."

He laughed when asked if he expected to get money from the suit. "No, I don't, because it's been so long," he said. "And besides, Stevens has lawyers, and they are probably going over all the records, and I'll probably be old and retired if I do get anything."

It has been 13 years since U.S. District Court Judge Franklin Dupree said the mills discriminated against blacks and 10 years since the U.S. Supreme Court refused to review that finding. Still, no claimant has received a nickel.

Meanwhile, West Point-Pepperell Inc. acquired J.P. Stevens & Co. last year and sold its Roanoke Rapids assets to the Bibb Co. A corporate raider subsequently took over West Point-Pepperell, which continues to be held responsible with Bibb for the back-pay claims.

On their third set of lawyers, the corporate defendants are fighting the suit, contending race had nothing to do with the vast majority of the claimants' failures to get jobs or promotions.

Dupree still handles the Stevens case. Court officials say he is the only one who knows its intricacies.

Searching through the files is like embarking on an archaeological dig. Legal papers in the suit take up a file cabinet and 21 boxes in the federal courthouse. Employees of the clerk's office know its docket number, 1201, by heart and call it "the case that won't go away."

But the case is significant in several ways, said Richard Seymour, with the Washington-based Lawyers' Committee for Civil Rights Under Law, who prepared and filed the suit in October 1970.

It was one of the first suits to establish the illegality of subjective employment decisions that affect the races differently. And it was the first of its kind in which lawyers used computers to analyze statistics and show that blacks were kept out of high-paying jobs, he said.

The case, Lucy Sledge vs. J.P. Stevens & Co. Inc., was tried in 1972. Stevens had laid off Ms. Sledge, and she said white women had been hired to replace her.

Dupree delayed a ruling for four years, awaiting a Supreme Court decision on a similar case involving the Albemarle Paper Co. mill in Roanoke Rapids.

Finally ruling in 1976, the judge absolved Stevens of intentional discrimination. But statistical evidence showed that discretionary decisions by Stevens' personnel officials had a disparate impact on blacks, he ruled. Whites were getting the mills' better-paying clerical, supervisory and skilled jobs, he found.

Consequently he declared that under Title VII of the Civil Rights Act, Stevens was liable for back-pay claims. The amount of back pay and who should receive it are still being litigated.

Greensboro Youth Shot Fatally

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

GREENSBORO — A 17-year-old Greensboro youth was shot and killed after an argument in a parking lot where hundreds of area high school students had gathered for an after-graduation party, police said.

Shawn Ford was shot in the head and was pronounced dead at Moses Cone Memorial Hospital at 2:30 a.m. Saturday, an hour after he was wounded.

Ford, a rising senior at Ragsdale

High School in Jamestown, was the son of squad leader Tommy Gregory, a 10-year veteran with the Greensboro Police Department.

Clayton James, 24, was charged with first-degree murder in connection with the shooting. James was held in the Guilford County Jail without bond.

A police report indicated that Ford argued with a man and threw a beer bottle at him. The man drew a weapon and shot the victim.

Trial Leads To New Gay Coalition

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SHELBY, N.C. — The acquittal of a white supremacist in the slayings of three men at an adult bookstore has led North Carolina homosexuals to mobilize against anti-gay violence.

A gay and lesbian coalition will ask Gov. Jim Martin to make anti-gay violence a priority for a task force that handles racist and religious violence said Eleanor Holland of Durham. She said the acquittal of Douglas Sheets in the Shelby III bookstore trial sent a message that gay men can't afford to ignore.

"We need to take a stand and voice our protests demanding protection from hate violence," Ms. Holland said.

Sheets, 42, a former White Patriot Party member, was acquitted Friday of three counts of murder, one count of assault and one count of arson in the Jan. 17, 1987, attack at the bookstore — a known gathering place for gay men.

Charges remain against Robert Eugene Jackson, another White Patriot associate who is accused of joining two others in the pre-midnight raid.

While the acquittal sparked demonstrations in some parts of North Carolina, the only public reaction in Shelby came from family members of victims Travis Melton and Kenneth Godfrey, who were killed in the store with Paul Weston.

"I was disappointed," said Mab Segrest of the North Carolinians Against Racist and Religious Violence. "While I felt that law enforcement did a good job, I was disappointed with the community of Shelby for not taking the opportunity to go on the record against this kind of activity."

Ms. Segrest, who sat through most of the trial, praised the efforts of District Attorney Bill Young and the Cleveland County Sheriff's Department. She agreed a lack of physical evidence hurt the case.

Young said the weakest link was not having a witness who could place Sheets in Cleveland County the day of the shootings.

Instead, witnesses testified that Sheets bragged to them about his involvement in the case. Two of them were former associates — White Patriot Party founder Glenn Miller and Bob Stoner, a former White Patriot leader from Fayetteville.

"Having sat through a lot of the testimony, I can say clearly that it was never under dispute that the crime was committed by Nazis," Ms. Segrest said. "The Nazis were just arguing about which one did it."

IN THE STATE

Trooper Spat

WINSTON-SALEM (AP) — The use of the North Carolina Highway Patrol's name in a magazine published by the state Troopers Association has sparked bad feelings among troopers and legislation in the General Assembly.

A bill already approved by the Senate would ban the use of the patrol's name, the term state trooper or any Highway Patrol insignia or emblem in solicitation for magazine advertisements.

Col. Jack Cardwell, the commander of the state Highway Patrol, says that the Troopers Association is misusing the name of the patrol in publishing the magazine.

"This is just something that's fundamentally wrong," Cardwell told the Winston-Salem Journal. "We don't need it. This is a big business, and we're talking a lot of money. It's big money."

Black Equity

RALEIGH (AP) — If blacks are to become full players in American society, they must gain economic equity and political parity, the national chairman of the NAACP said.

Today's civil rights movement can help achieve those goals, said William Gibson, who was in Raleigh for the state NAACP's annual "Mother of the Year" fund-raiser and rally at the Civic and Convention Center.

Gibson, a dentist from Greenville, S.C., said black Americans needed to be represented in government in numbers that equal their percentage of the population.

Graduation

WINSTON-SALEM (AP) — Some 156 high school and college students received degrees from the North Carolina School of the Arts, where the attention was switched briefly from the chancellor controversy to the graduates.

The commencement Saturday was Jane E. Milley's last in almost five years as chancellor at the school. Ms. Milley, the object of much student animosity and protest this spring, is leaving the school June 30.

Patric G. Dorsey, the secretary of the N.C. Department of Cultural Resources, encouraged the students not to set aside their talent, training and goals after graduation. "All art is the creation and reflection of individual genius," she said. "While an artist creates something new, he also draws on the past ... of a society."

Greene County Woman Survives Lost Of Mate, Raises 13 Children

Mother Chose Hard Work Over Welfare, And Made It Pay Off

By Becky Barclay
The GOLDSBORO NEWS-ARGUS

GOLDSBORO — On the day before Christmas many years ago, Bertha Lee Batts' husband was suddenly taken from her in a tragic car accident, leaving her with 13 children all under the age of 15.

But, instead of giving up all hope, Mrs. Batts prayed diligently, putting her whole life into God's hands, and successfully raised all 13 children, plus two of her grandchildren, on her own.

"We lived on a farm in Greene County before the accident," explains Mrs. Batts. "When World War II was going on, we moved to Wilson to the city so my husband could work. But first we had to get a permit to leave the farm because farm laborers were needed to supply food for our fighting soldiers. And just about everybody was moving from the farm to the city to work in the factories there making better pay."

"We had been in Wilson for three months before my husband could get a good job because we had not received our moving permit. In the meantime, he worked odd jobs wherever he could. He finally got a job with Export Tobacco Factory, Atlantic Coast Railroad and Hackney Wagon, working three jobs."

Mrs. Batts explains that after 11 years in Wilson, they decided to move back to a different farm in Greene County. But her husband died before they could make the move.

"So the children and I moved to the Darden Farm in Greene County by ourselves," remembers Mrs. Batts. "Since my husband had worked for three companies, I was eligible for Social Security. But I knew nothing about it and I was wondering what in the world I was going to do. So some people in the community who knew what had happened helped me."

"It was July after my husband died before I began receiving my $179 a month in Social Security. After a while, it went up to $279 a month for me and 13 small children. But I had faith in God that he would show me the way to go."

Mrs. Batts worked diligently on the Darden Farm, but never once neglected any of her children. "They had a hot breakfast on the table before school and I was there with waiting arms when they got home from school." Her three eldest boys dropped out of school to help support the family, but one returned and one is attending Wayne Community College right now.

"During the summer when the children weren't in school, they also worked in the fields at the farm," remarks Mrs. Batts. "They used the money they made to buy their own school clothes for the next year."

Fourteen people have died on North Carolina roads during the Memorial Day holidays, including three killed when their cars sped into trees, the state Highway Patrol reported today.

Sandy Lamont Smith, 19, of Lilesville, died Saturday at 11:30 p.m. when his car hit a tree in Anson County. Darryl Wayne Walker, 22, of Cameron, died at 3:15 a.m. Sunday when the car he was driving hit a tree in Moore County. And John McArthur Brimley, 37, of Roxboro, died at 9:30 a.m. Saturday when the vehicle he was driving sped into a tree in Person County.

In other accidents Sunday, Calvin Wallace Jeffries, 33, of Semora, died at 7:30 a.m. when he was hit by a car while walking north of Roxboro in Person County. Donald Lee Roark, 36, of Iron Station, died when his car overturned in a ditch in Lincoln County at 2 p.m. and Winnie Barefoot Massengill, 74, died in a two-car crash in Johnston County around 8:30 p.m.

Warren Keith Napier, 30, of Taylorsville, died at 10:42 a.m. Saturday when the motorcycle he was operating collided head-on with a car in Alexander County.

Tony Curtis Hines, 29, of Danville, Va., was killed in a three-vehicle accident on Interstate 85 in Davidson County, five miles south of Lexington, at 4:25 a.m. Saturday.

Ola Little Lambert, 68, of Oakboro, died when she was struck by a vehicle on a rural paved road in Stanley County at 10:15 a.m. Saturday.

Joy G. Smith, 51, of Fanner, Tenn., died about 6 p.m. Friday when her car was hit by a vehicle that crossed the center line of N.C. 294, 11 miles west of Murphy in Cherokee County.

John William Dillon, 28, of Greensboro, died at 9:45 p.m. Friday when the car he was driving ran off N.C. 62 east of High Point.

Tyrone Lynch, 39, of Tarboro, died at 2:15 Saturday when he was run over by a car as he lay on N.C. 44 west of Tarboro.

In an accident not reported by the highway patrol, Jeffrey Brent Creek, 16, of Burlington, was killed in a wreck in his hometown at 10:00 p.m. Friday, police said.

So far this year, 518 people have died in accidents on North Carolina roads, compared with 548 fatalities reported at this same time last year.

The N.C. State Motor Club predicted 14 people would die during the holiday weekend and about 1,000 would suffer disabling injuries.

The 78-hour holiday death toll began at 6 p.m. Friday and ends at midnight Monday. Last year, 13 people were killed and 973 injured in the 1,274 Memorial Day weekend traffic accidents in North Carolina, the club said.

According to Mrs. Batts, she was eligible for welfare, but refused it.

Besides working on the Darden Farm and receiving a little Social Security money, Mrs. Batts and her children also had a little farm of their own from which they sold corn and cotton.

But Mrs. Batts also explains that "if it had not been for the help of the Lord, I could not have made it."

"For example, one time we needed an item of food to carry us over for two or three days that I didn't have and couldn't get. Well, I got down on my knees and began to pray, but before I could ask the Lord to help me, there stood Mr. Darden at the door with that item and more, extra that he and Mrs. Darden didn't need. The Lord later spoke to me and told me that he answered me before I could even ask."

"There were problems during those years of raising my kids by myself," says Mrs. Batts. "But at those times, I always went into my room, fell on my knees and gave it to God so I wouldn't have to worry about it. And everything worked out; it always worked out somehow."

Mrs. Batts always managed to keep involved in her children's lives. "I took them to their ball games at school," she explains. "I organized a chorus at church that they belonged to. I was at all of the PTA meetings and did volunteer work in the health room at Nor-Wayne."

After all her children were in school, Mrs. Batts went to work at St. Mary's School doing custodial work. "But I was still always there for my kids," she states.

Not only did Mrs. Batts raise 13 children and two grandchildren, but two of her daughters had girlfriends whose families moved away during their senior year of high school. So the girls moved in with her.

Once grown and out on their own, Mrs. Batts children began doing things for her. They gave her the money for a down payment on a house and even decided to make the house payments for her.

They bought her a 1964 Chevrolet then a brand new 1986 Tempo.

Recently at an appreciation dinner in Goldsboro, all of her children and grandchildren and families gathered to honor Mrs. Batts. "Each one of them got up and said the nicest things about me," she says. "Now I know what my funeral will be like when I die; it will be just like that appreciation dinner."

"I have lived a good and rich life," comments Mrs. Batts. "I love the Lord and I love people."

"God didn't have to take my husband; he could have taken me. But he wanted me to go through all of these tests and each test has made me stronger."

House Democrats Shuffle To Find New Leaders

By Jim Drinkard
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — With House Speaker Jim Wright and one of his top lieutenants on the way out, Democrats face a week of scrambling to reshuffle their leadership and to reimpose a sense of mission on a floundering chamber.

When lawmakers return from their Memorial Day recess, they will face one certain resignation — that of Majority Whip Tony Coelho, D-Calif. — and another that is near certain, that of Texas Democrat Wright.

It is unprecedented for such a turnover, propelled by concerns about ethics, to take place in the middle of a legislative session. The turmoil only adds to Congress' woes over what has so far been a lackluster year.

It will be up to Rep. Tom Foley, D-Wash., the majority leader and heir-apparent to Wright, to turn the disarray into order and to refocus attention on the institution's primary tasks, dealing with the budget deficit and with legislation ranging from the environment to social issues.

Wright himself spent the weekend in seclusion, believed to be drafting a message defending himself before stepping down as speaker. Further pressure on Wright was created by the surprise resignation, announced Saturday, of Rep. Tony Coelho, D-Calif., the party's No. 3 leadership official.

"The Democratic party is not in a crisis," Foley said, already trying to stem the disruption. "We are going to address the legislative issues that face the country."

Rep. Steny Hoyer, D-Md., said Coelho's decision to resign as Democratic whip effective June 15 was a step in that direction. Removing his ethics problems from the agenda "said loudly we need to get about the business of addressing" issues like the deficit, the environment and social concerns.

"In the very short term, the party has clearly been hurt," Hoyer said. But he added: "We have a very deep bench" and will be able to quickly replace the lost leadership.

Soon after Wright's expected resignation announcement, which could come as early as Wednesday, House Democrats will caucus to elect successors.

Rep. Richard Gephardt, D-Mo., is the favorite to replace Foley, although he may face a challenge from Rep. Ed Jenkins, D-Ga. Coelho's spot would likely be filled by one of three contenders: Reps. David Bonior, D-Mich.; Beryl Anthony, D-Ark.; or Bill Gray, D-Pa.

It will be up to Foley not only to deal with the ethics cloud that has enveloped his party, but also to look beyond internal concerns to a list of legislation that has been overshadowed, if not neglected.

Many expect Foley to provide the calming influence the chamber needs. His personal style is far different from those of both Wright and Coelho, who are forceful, deal-cutting risk takers. Foley is seen as more of a consensus politician, more intellectual and conciliatory.

But Republicans, who largely have taken a hands-off approach since the ethics committee formally charged Wright with 69 violations of House rules, now are poised to attack.

"There are going to be a number of Democrats in trouble," said Rep. Newt Gingrich, R-Ga., the GOP whip and Wright's chief accuser. He contends that in their more than three decades in power in the House, Democrats have developed "a habit of sloppiness" when it comes to ethics.

Republicans will put forward an ethics and election reform package and challenge Foley on the issues, Gingrich said in a weekend telephone interview.

"How can you lose two of your top three people and not admit you have a problem?" he asked. "They have to make a decision whether they go for reform or decide to protect the machine."

However, another senior GOP strategist conceded that it is difficult to gain partisan advantage from the ethics issue because Americans tend to see Congress as a single institution, and ethics charges tend to taint all incumbents, regardless of party.

Moreover, Gingrich faces his own ethics investigation over a book promotion deal, and Rep. Donald Lukens, R-Ohio, was convicted last week on a charge related to his sexual relationship with a 16-year-old girl.

"The question is whether they (the Democrats) feel vulnerable on the issue," said the source, who spoke only on condition of anonymity. "It's obviously churning."

Anthony hinted that as soon as a new leadership team is in place, Democrats will seek to turn the tables. "At that point you would say, 'Welcome. Let's see if you can take it like you've been dishing it out. And we'll now give you an opportunity to see how it feels.'"

A pail fell over the Capitol last week as candidates in the Democratic succession race tried to line up support without seeming to trample over the body of their fallen leader, Wright.

Sources close to the Texas Democrat said he was determined to leave office on his own terms. But among considerations in his decision when to resign was an ethics committee meeting scheduled for Thursday.

The panel is to take up a motion filed by Wright's lawyers to dismiss the most serious charges against him: that he evaded limits on outside income through bulk sales of a book he wrote, and that he accepted $145,000 in gifts from a Fort Worth friend with a direct interest in legislation.

The committee appeared unlikely to drop the charges, and allies of the speaker said he would like to forestall any adverse legal action. That has added weight to the belief that Wright will announce his decision on Wednesday, when the House returns.

Researchers Cite Nuclear Sub Accident

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The Navy had a serious mishap 16 years ago with the nuclear reactor inside one of its submarines, despite claims it had never had such a propulsion accident, private researchers charged today.

"The Navy had a major nuclear accident and then lied about it," asserted William Arkin, a researcher with the Institute for Policy Studies, a liberal Washington think tank. "We caught them with their bellbottoms down."

The Navy denied it had ever tried to cover up news of the accident, describing it as a minor mishap in which "there were no serious injuries or radiological problems, the ship remained fully capable to perform any mission required of it and there was no damage to the reactor."

The service acknowledged, however, the incident had never been publicized, and spokesmen were unable to say why the sub's deck logs and official command history made no mention of it.

"According to the deck logs of the USS Guardfish for April 21, 1973, which we obtained, the submarine was 'Underway submerged as before' for the entire day, without incident," Arkin said.

"In fact, the submarine suffered a primary coolant leak ... and then surfaced, ventilated, and decontaminated and repaired its reactor unassisted. Five crewmen were later sent to the Puget Sound, Wash., Naval Hospital for radiation monitoring."

Willis S. Rich, the sub's skipper at the time and now a professor of engineering at Boston University, said in an interview about the report that had he noticed there was nothing in the log about the accident, he would have told the navigator to add the information.

"It was a minor mishap," he said. "Nobody was injured. But it was a primary coolant leak and you can't take that lightly."

Arkin and Joshua Handler, a researcher who heads the Greenpeace environmental group's Nuclear Free Seas Campaign, released their findings today. The Institute for Policy Studies and Greenpeace are about to publish a study of serious naval accidents around the world.

Earlier this month, the two researchers disclosed new details about the loss of a hydrogen bomb off the coast of Japan in 1965.

"The U.S. Navy claims that it has never had a nuclear propulsion accident," Handler said of the Guardfish incident. "But their own documents show how misleading they've been."

Lt. Cmdr. Craig Quigley, a Navy spokesman, responded: "We did not try to cover anything up. Everything about this incident was properly reported through Navy channels."

Forecasters Look Ahead As Storm Season Nears

By Tracy Fields
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CORAL GABLES, Fla. — Forecasters preparing for Thursday's opening of the Atlantic hurricane season wish they could predict the arrival of new technological help they say may be crucial to ever-growing coastal populations.

The Air Force has agreed to fly hurricane reconnaissance flights for two more years, but has made it clear it plans to phase out the missions. And only one satellite is available for tracking hurricanes.

"We just have nothing right now to lean on," says Ken McKinnon, a spokesman for U.S. Rep. Tom Lewis of North Palm Beach, Fla., who has introduced a bill in Congress to keep hurricane hunters flying at least another five years. "We've got one satellite and they're telling us it'll do the job. If it blinks, how do you track weather?"

The Air Force doesn't want to be involved. "We have in the last few years examined our need for manned weather reconnaissance and feel there's no real compelling military reason," said spokesman Lt. Col. Darrell Hayes.

"We're not disputing that the hurricane center and the weather service need the data. We're just saying there may be more appropriate agencies to provide the information," he said, adding that the service had approached the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration about taking over the flights.

Besides the flights, forecasters depend on radar and satellite data.

The single working weather satellite wasn't intended to be alone. A second satellite failed, and a replacement for the failed craft was blown up in a mishap on the launch pad, forcing forecasters to make do.

There are new satellites on the horizon, says Bob Sheets, director of the National Hurricane Center. But they've been due for a long time and aren't expected before late 1990.

"It is a major concern for us," Sheets said.

Forecasters also are worried about a shift in the pattern of hurricane activity in recent years. Since 1985, Sheets said, there seem to be more hurricanes and they're more likely to hit the United States.

"We may be in an upswing," he said, "possibly back to the pattern of the '40s, '50s and '60s when we had a tremendous number of landfall hurricanes."

Freight Train Rams Parked Cars, Kills 2

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

AMARILLO, Texas — A slow-moving freight carrying California fruit to Chicago rammed 30 parked railroad cars, killing the brakeman and conductor and injuring two other workers.

The accident before dawn Sunday flung one of the parked cars into a coal train traveling in the opposite direction. No one aboard the 110-car coal train was injured, said Wayne Beigle of the state Department of Public Safety.

He said it was remarkable anyone had survived in the eastbound train.

"It looked like the front three-quarters of that engine were cut in half," Beigle said.

"I see the devastating damage at 20 mph, I can only imagine what it would have been like at higher speeds," he said.

Beigle said investigators determined the 35-car train that slammed into the parked cars was traveling at 20 mph and the brakes had been applied when the accident occurred as the train entered Amarillo city limits.

"Evidently, they thought the track was clear," Beigle said. "That's still under investigation."

Both trains involved were operated by Santa Fe Railway. The engines damaged in the accident were owned by Burlington Northern.

DPS investigators and Santa Fe officials interviewed witnesses Sunday. The National Transportation Safety Board also will investigate the rail accident because deaths were involved.

WASHINGTON, N.C. — The wedding ceremony of Cheryl Ann Good and Arnie La Verne Nobles took place May 20 at the home of the bride's parents.

The Rev. Charles M. Smith conducted the double-ring ceremony.

Parents of the bridal couple are Lawrence L. and Betty L. Good of Washington, and Joseph Nobles and Mary Nobles of Greenville.

Jeff Shuman was best man and Eric Good, nephew of the bride, was ring bearer. Both are from Greenville. Garry Nobles of Winterville, brother of the bridegroom, and Michael Good of Greenville, brother of the bride, were ushers.

The bride wore an off-white satin gown with a lace overlay styled with a long waistline and satin skirt with a high-low hemline. She wore a bridal hat with pearls and rhinestones over lace with a veil attached in back. She carried a nosegay of sweetheart roses, freesia, roses, bouvardia and greenery.

A reception followed the ceremony.

Husband Should Seek Some Help For His Newfound Preoccupation

Dear Abby
Abigail Van Buren

Dear Abby: My husband started out with girlie magazines, but now he's renting porno VCR tapes, and he is spending more and more time on this stuff. Abby, he is obsessed with this garbage, which turns me off more than it turns him on.

If there is such a thing as a sexual addiction, he has it. Can anything be done about it?

I love him, and I know he loves me, but I don't want to be an "accommodation" to his far-too-frequent demands. — Feeling "Used" In Baltimore

Dear Feeling Used: No woman (or man) should be an "accommodation." And yes, there is such a thing as a "sexual addiction," and your husband has it. I recommend Sexaholics Anonymous, a program for men and women who recognize that their preoccupation with sex is self-destructive.

You say you love him, and he loves you. Well, let him prove his love by giving this program a chance. Sexaholics Anonymous is based on the principles of Alcoholics Anonymous, and all one needs is sincerity to make it work. There are no dues or fees. Interested parties should write to: Sexaholics Anonymous, P.O. Box 300, Simi Valley, Calif. 93062.

All inquiries are strictly confidential. This is a non-profit organization, so please send a self-addressed, stamped envelope for a reply.

Dear Abby: I feel compelled to reply to a letter you printed from Tyler Foshe concerning a recent rock concert at the Santa Monica Auditorium. He compared his experience at that concert to the soccer game in Sheffield, England, on April 15 when 93 people were killed and more than 200 spectators were injured.

I have worked in the field of crowd management at public events since 1967, have been involved in hundreds of rock concerts, including the one Mr. Foshe attended, and have never experienced problems similar to the Sheffield tragedy.

The local fire department determines the safe occupancy load for the building for this type of event. Fire inspectors visit the concert to make sure the limit is not exceeded and the building has proper exits in case of emergency.

Mr. Foshe was contacted by telephone, and admitted that he had never attended a "festival" concert before, and his frightening experience at the Santa Monica Auditorium reflected his individual perspective. Security and fire personnel did respond to his concerns, but they did not see a dangerous situation.

Since you always try to present a balanced view, I hope you will be fair and publish this letter. — Peter C. Kraske, Contemporary Services, Los Angeles

Dear Mr. Kraske: Consider it done, and thank you for your reassuring input.

Carole A. Curtin, manager of the Civic Auditorium, also wrote to say essentially what you have said.

Dear Abby: Thank you for giving your personal stamp of approval to the suggestion that all wedding guests wear name tags — especially when the bride's family members have never met any of the groom's family.

I would add yet another suggestion: Along with the name, indicate "affiliation" — such as "Mildred Shannon, cousin of the groom," or "Paul Brownell, brother of the bride." — Bill Armstrong, Newport Beach

Dear Abby: When my husband died a few months ago, Crystal, my 4-year-old granddaughter, attended the funeral.

After the church ceremony, we drove through the cemetery. The ground was covered with snow, and only the tips of the plastic flowers were showing.

Crystal remarked, "What a beautiful flower garden!"

Her mother said, "That's not a flower garden, honey; that's where Grandpa will be buried."

"Oh," said Crystal, "a buried treasure!" — G.T.L., Portland, Maine

If you would like to write to Abby, send your letter to Abigail Van Buren, P.O. Box 69440, Los Angeles, CA. 90069. For a personal, non-published reply, enclose a self-addressed stamped envelope.

Consumer Price List Tracks Inflation Rate For Retail Buyers

By Nancy Benac
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MANASSAS, Va. — When the price of gasoline here rises, or the cost of a pizza falls, Wall Street and Washington listen.

A filling station and a pizza parlor in this far suburb of Washington are among the 19,000 businesses nationwide that are surveyed every month — along with 57,000 homes — for the tiny bits of information that combine to make up the Consumer Price Index.

The report, receiving extra attention now that price increases are accelerating, is the definitive statement on inflation in America and reflects what people pay for everything from McIntosh apples to Macintosh computers.

Its influence affects the decisions of government policymakers and Wall Street investors, wages and benefits for millions of Americans, school lunch prices and even federal income tax brackets.

At a local gasoline station visited monthly by a part-time Labor Department worker, the manager is nonchalant about his role in compiling one of the government's most important economic indicators.

"They gotta use somebody," he shrugged during a recent visit from the Bureau of Labor Statistics checker. "Our place is as good as any. I got nothin' to hide."

Premium unleaded was $1.28 a gallon, up seven cents from April.

BLS field manager Vera Mitchell, filling in for the part-time employee who regularly checks prices in suburban Washington, listened politely while the manager rambled on about how fuels containing

The Associated Press

Bureau of Labor Statistics checker scans prices for produce in a suburban Washington store alcohol can "mess up your car," then headed for an auto dealership.

There, she waited again. The sales manager had temporarily vanished.

"He goes on a brisk walk around the lot this time of day," explained a fellow salesman.

The sales manager reappeared and gave her information on an auto he proudly described as "a sport utility vehicle on steroids." The price of the identical vehicle is checked at that dealership every other month.

Nationwide, 400 part-time agents track the costs of sets of items in seven major groups — food, housing, apparel, transportation, medical care, entertainment and the catchall "other goods and services," which ranges from haircuts to cigarettes.

Prices on roughly 100,000 items in 85 metropolitan areas are averaged and weighted according to their importance in calculating the index for urban consumers, which covers 80 percent of the U.S. population.

In March, the most recent month for which figures were available, prices rose 0.5 percent. The index stood at 122.3 percent of its 1982-84 base, meaning that a hypothetical selection of goods and services costing $100 in the base period would have cost $122.30 in March.

The Labor Department does not allow public disclosure of the exact businesses, individuals and items surveyed for the index, which costs $28 million a year to compile.

Ms. Mitchell, who herself once worked part time gathering prices for the government, said business people generally are cooperative even though their participation is unrewarded except for a thank-you letter at the end of five years, when a new set of items and stores is selected.

"They don't have to sell me anything and they don't have to buy or refuse to buy anything from me," she said. "I'm probably one of the least pressuring people that walk in there."

From the car dealership, she headed for a grocery store to survey prices on a dozen items. Radishes were on sale at five bags for 89 cents, prompting Ms. Mitchell to wonder "what one would do with five packages of radishes?"

Next on the itinerary was a pizza parlor, where she waited once again while a one-man crew juggled the hungry lunchtime crowd.

Prices were down. A plain medium pizza was selling for $6.99, compared with $8.20 at the last visit. The manager's explanation for the price cuts: "competition."

Ms. Mitchell said conducting price surveys has made her more savvy about getting good buys, especially on cars. But she added that, "after a while, there's such an overload of information you don't remember anything."

Data on housing costs is gathered from visits to thousands of renters and homeowners, which is where Ms. Mitchell said she became "conversant with many dogs" who more typically prey on mail carriers.

The housing survey sends the price surveyers into all sorts of neighborhoods, including areas that have gotten "less comfortable" as violent crime rises, she said.

"I've met some mighty gutsy people living there and raising their kids," Ms. Mitchell said. "You may go from a really poor neighborhood to a really posh neighborhood. To see them smack up against one another, it's just hard to look at."

Recent CPI reports indicate inflation has ratcheted upward from the 4.4 percent levels registered in 1987 and 1988. For the first quarter of 1989, consumer prices rose at an annual rate of 6.1 percent; another sharp increase is expected when April's report is released Thursday.

The recent acceleration in the CPI has come despite a yearlong campaign by the Federal Reserve Board to ease inflationary pressures by pushing up interest rates and restraining economic growth.

The persistent price increases, occurring even as the economy shows signs of slowing, have some analysts worried that the central bank may tighten credit so much to arrest inflation that the Federal Reserve unintentionally pushes the country into a recession.

Others believe the Fed will be able to engineer a "soft landing," in which growth slows enough to rein in the escalating CPI without snuffing out the nation's 6-year-old economic expansion.

While many people are aware of the inflation index's influence on monetary policy, few realize that fluctuations in the CPI can directly affect their own wages, benefits and taxes, said Patrick Jackman, head of the Labor Department's CPI branch.

Wage increases for 3 million workers covered by union contracts are tied to the index, as are school lunch charges for 24 million youngsters and benefits levels for 38 million Social Security beneficiaries, 3 million federal retirees and survivors, and 19 million food stamp recipients.

In addition, the CPI is used to adjust the federal income tax structure to prevent "bracket creep," inflation-induced increases in tax rates.

"Virtually everybody who earns any income is potentially affected by the CPI," Jackman said.

Because the monthly CPI report can send financial markets diving or soaring, the figure is a closely guarded secret until its release at precisely 8:30 a.m. on a weekday in the middle of the following month.

Ms. Mitchell, fresh from her latest canvass of prices, said that when the figure finally reaches the headlines, she "knows the reality of where it's coming from."

Fittipaldi Holds Off Indy Field

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

INDIANAPOLIS — A new name reigns in Victory Lane at the Indianapolis 500, and it's not another Unser or Andretti. It's Emmo, as in Emerson Fittipaldi, self-made millionaire, world traveler and — ah, yes — lover of speed.

Unofficial standings

He looked the new generation in the eye Sunday, and the last time he saw it was in his rear view mirror.

First, Michael Andretti challenged Emmo, only to fall victim to the Andretti luck.

Then, Al Unser Jr. took up the task, only to fall victim to his own brand of bumper car racing.

Three miles from the finish, Fittipaldi and Unser locked wheels as they fought for position for the last-lap duel. It was the luckiest bump of Fittipaldi's career; Unser hit the wall and never made it to the finish.

"What a race! What a race!" said Fittipaldi, who could be Indy's first $1 million winner when the checks are passed out at tonight's victory dinner. "I cannot believe it. I dreamed so much of this ever since I was a little boy."

Fittipaldi is the first foreign-born winner at Indy since Mario Andretti joined today's Old Guard 20 years ago.

Ever since then, Indy has been dominated by what seems like a private club of Americans named Unser, Penske, Foyt, Mears, Rutherford and Johncock, with an occasional guest appearance by a Rahal, a Sullivan or a Sneva.

And Little Al and Michael certainly did their best Sunday to carry on the family tradition.

Little Al had the last shot, but no 27-year-old scion of an American racing family was going to back down a 42-year-old, two-time Formula One champion.

A lap and a half from the end, the two of them went side-by-side through a corner big enough for only one of them.

Only one came out. Emmo.

"When you've got two race car drivers wanting the Indy 500 as bad as we did, you're both going to go into the corner and only one man is going to come out," said Unser, who had taken the lead with four laps to go in his quest to become the first son of a former winner to win at Indy. "This time it was Emmo that came out."

Fittipaldi was on the inside, all four wheels under the white line that is supposed to separate the race track from the apron. Unser was sandwiched between Fittipaldi and the slower car of Ludwig Heimrath Jr.

Fittipaldi moved up, Unser down. Their wheels touched, Fittipaldi's right front to Unser's left rear.

"My car started going a little sideways," Fittipaldi said.

But it was Unser who went into the wall and Fittipaldi who went on to Victory Lane.

"In racing, there are times you don't think about life, you don't think about money, you just think about winning," Unser said. "And at that point, nothing meant more to me than going into that corner first and coming out first."

"It's racing. That's the way it goes."

He should know. At Long Beach, Calif., last month, Unser knocked Mario Andretti out of the race in the waning laps and went on to win.

Last July at the New Jersey Meadowlands, Unser hit Fittipaldi from behind and knocked him out of the race in a late battle for the lead — and won again.

What goes around came around. For Fittipaldi, it came around to his seventh victory since joining the Indy-car circuit in 1984 after a two-year retirement.

No one was within four laps of Fittipaldi or Unser, who still finished

Lakers Complete Sweep Of Suns

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PHOENIX — The Los Angeles Lakers are playing their best basketball at the perfect time and Tom Chambers says their latest performance was the ultimate as far as he's concerned.

"I've never seen a team play better than they played today — never," Chambers said Sunday after the Lakers held off his Phoenix Suns 122-117 to sweep the best-of-7 Western Conference finals. "I'm happy for them, they deserve to make the finals, they really do."

Chambers was pretty good himself, finishing with a career playoff-high 41 points and 13 rebounds. He scored 17 points in the fourth quarter when the Suns got 43. But it wasn't enough, mainly because the Lakers were a perfect 10-for-10 from the free throw line in the final 1:07.

"Every time we'd make a run, they'd respond," said Chambers, an eight-year veteran. "The way they played in the playoffs was an education for us. We still think we can beat them. We'd love to meet them again next year, too."

The two-time defending champion Lakers, winners of a record 11 straight playoff games and 16 overall including the last five of the regular season, thus qualified for the NBA finals for the eighth time this decade.

"Eight times in 10 years, that's pretty consistent," said Lakers coach Pat Riley, who won his 98th NBA playoff game, one short of Red Auerbach's all-time record. "I think we've opened a few eyes."

The Lakers, seeking their sixth championship of the 1980s, will face the Eastern Conference champion — either Chicago or Detroit — in the finals. The Bulls had a 2-1 lead in that best-of-7 series with Game 4 scheduled today in Chicago.

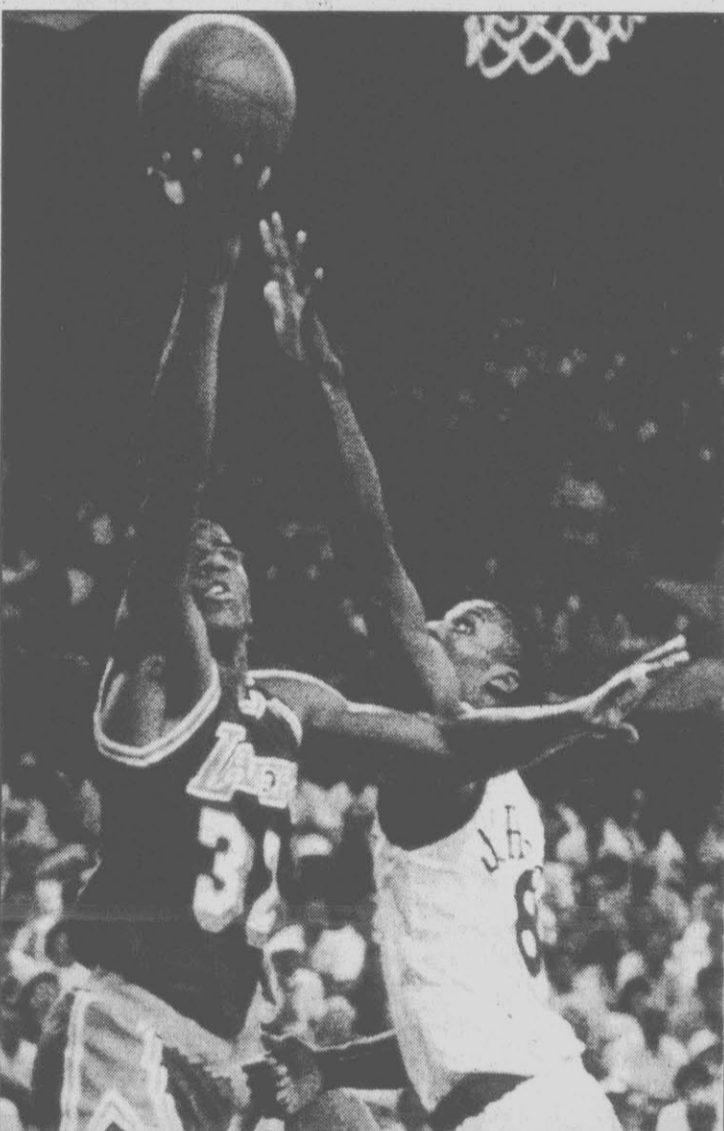

If the Chicago-Detroit series goes five games, the finals will begin Sunday. If the Bulls and Pistons need either six or seven games, the finals will start June 6.

"We'll be ready to play whoever we face, we're just happy to be in the finals," said Magic Johnson, who scored 10 of his 21 points in the fourth quarter and also had 20 assists and six rebounds.

"We're healthy, our bench is playing well. ... Everything is clicking right now. We've just got to keep it going."

The Lakers got it going early Sunday, scoring the game's first 11 points.

Thomas Seeking A Team Effort

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHICAGO — Isiah Thomas wants the Detroit Pistons to play the way they did in their third-game loss to Chicago rather than their Game 2 victory over the Bulls.

Thomas, who scored 33 points in the Pistons' 100-91 win over the Bulls on Tuesday, had only five on 2-for-8 shooting in Saturday's stunning 99-97 defeat in which Detroit was outscored 33-20 in the fourth quarter.

Thomas believes the Pistons, who were to meet the Bulls in Game 4 of the best-of-7 series today, fare better if they don't have to rely on him to carry the load.

"Our offense was working where I didn't have to be the focal point," Thomas said before Sunday's practice at Chicago Stadium. "We were playing well without me playing the way I did in the second game. For 42, 44 minutes, we played the way we are capable of playing. Then for five or six minutes, we lost it."

Two other Pistons starters, Joe Dumars with 12 points on 3-for-8 shooting and Bill Laimbeer with four points on 2-for-9 shooting, also had subpar games.

"Isiah, Joe and I didn't have many points, but we were winning by 14 in the fourth quarter," Laimbeer said. "We were playing well. It doesn't matter who does it as long as someone does it."

Michael Jordan scored all of his 17 fourth-quarter points in the final 7:19 as the Bulls overcame an 86-72 deficit. He finished with 46 points, including an eight-foot bank shot with three seconds left, breaking a 97-97 tie.

"I don't know if the shock ever wears off," Pistons coach Chuck Daly said after what he admitted was a sleepless night. "We just couldn't control Michael. We let him get to the free-throw line 15 times."

Despite the loss, Detroit could regain the homecourt advantage with a victory in Game 4. Two of the three games after that are scheduled for the Palace at Auburn Hills, Mich.

The Pistons won 63 regular-season games and a homecourt advantage throughout the playoffs, but Chicago won the series opener at Auburn Hills.

"We have to win a game in their building somewhere along the line, then protect the homecourt advantage," Daly said.

"We're capable of putting this game behind us and winning the next one and the next one," Laimbeer said.

Waltrip Wins World 600

Five-Time Winner Successfully Defends Title

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CONCORD — Some folks say there are two auto races on Memorial Day weekend, but as far as Darrell Waltrip is concerned, only one really counts.

And he's won it five times.

"Obviously, when you cross the Ohio River, you're going into another country," said Waltrip, who successfully defended his Coca-Cola 600 championship on Sunday. Waltrip also won the race in 1978, 1979 and 1985.

"This is the great American race, right here. There are a bunch of good old boys with American-made automobiles and American technology built in their own garages. I don't see how there could be anything more American than a Winston Cup stock car race on Memorial Day."

So much for the Indianapolis 500.

Waltrip won the race with speed, both on the track and in the pits, and he was able to keep running while his challengers began falling back.

"I didn't know if it was my day, but I knew my job was getting easier," Waltrip said of the final laps.

In nine days of racing at the Charlotte Motor Speedway, Waltrip won one race and finished second in another, and much of the concern in his preparation for Sunday focused on the loss.

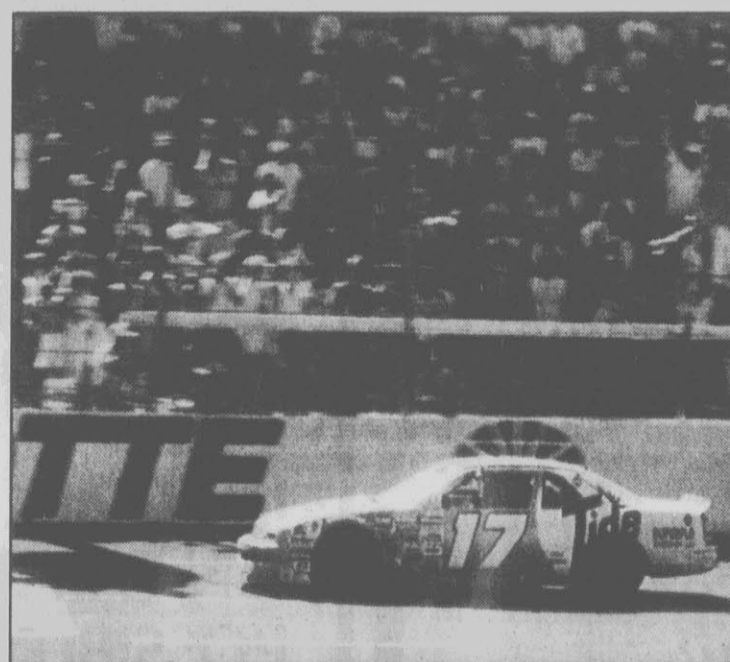

On May 21 in The Winston, Waltrip was leading with one lap left, but Rusty Wallace, who was trying to pass, bumped him, sending him spinning into the infield.

Wallace got the victory in that race, but Waltrip said he got some motivation.

"What it did was it lit a fire underneath about 17 or 18 guys who wear orange uniforms," Waltrip said. "It hurt their pride. It hurt their feelings. That determination they had today will carry on, and every time they get a little bit down, I think we can think about The Winston and we'll pick ourselves back up again."

The victory also vaulted Waltrip into the lead in the Winston Cup points race and kept alive his chances for

Mattingly Denies Reports Of Back Injury

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Don Mattingly says his back is fine, thank you.

When the New York Yankees' first baseman reached his locker Sunday, he discovered a hospital stretcher, a folded newspaper, and a cardboard cut-out sign that read: "We already miss you."

Mattingly didn't understand the source of the pranks until he opened the paper. "I thought maybe I was traded," he said. "I should've known it was worse."

Between tantalizing front- and back-page headlines ("Mattingly's Career In Danger" and "Don's Risk"), a New York Post story speculated that Mattingly's back injury could end his career at any moment — maybe with one swing or one ground ball.

"I can't believe this," he said after reading about his own perils. "This is really amazing. It's crazy stuff. This isn't even close to being accurate."

The story, quoting two unidentified sources, said a 1987 medical report, filed before Mattingly signed his last contract, confirmed the "severity" of the player's lower back problems and that playing could cause a "crippling" injury.

"If I was that bad off, I wouldn't be playing," he said. "I love baseball, but it's not worth ruining the rest of my life. I also love walking normally and the time I spend outside of the ballpark."

Yankees team physician Dr. Stuart Hershon, responding on behalf of the club, said, "He's been examined by myself and several other orthopedists. And to imply that we'd send him out and jeopardize his career is ridiculous and not worthy of further comment."

Mattingly revealed that, on his own volition, he met with California-based back specialist Dr. Robert Watkins on May 11, during the team's West Coast trip. After an examination, according to Mattingly, Watkins told him not to worry, he was fine.

"He really eased my mind," Mattingly said. "He said that, with proper rehabilitation, I could play for as long as I wanted to."

UNC Headed To College World Series

STARKVILLE, Miss. (AP)— North Carolina is going to the College World Series for the first time since 1978, and the Tar Heels got there the Mike Roberts' way.

"Coming in we knew we had to play our way — have good pitching, play solid defense and get the bunt down. That's what our only chance," said Roberts after his team won the NCAA South Regional Sunday night with a 7-1 conquest of top-seeded Mississippi State.

And he might have added have John Thoden on the mound. The junior right-hander threw a six-hit complete game, winning his second tournament game and walked away with the regional MVP award.

It was Roberts' second-guessing himself that led to Thoden pitching in the finale.

"We figured we'd go with our No. 1 — up or down in the final with him," Roberts said.

Originally, Roberts and his staff were going to pitch Thoden in Sunday afternoon's game, but they held him back. It couldn't have worked out better.

"We felt that John Thoden was the man we wanted to pitch the final. Some people second-guessed us, and that gave us a little bit of go," said Roberts.

The third-seeded Tar Heels not only got good pitching, but Brad Woodall and Ryan Howison each drove in a pair of runs, and they played solid defense.

"I felt very strong, my fast ball had pretty good pop," said Thoden. "They just didn't seem to get good metal on the ball, they were off stride."

For a third straight year, it was a disappointment for Mississippi State in a regional it hosted.

"Give Thoden the credit. He a great pitcher. He did what they needed in the big game," said Mississippi State Coach Ron Polk.

North Carolina, 41-16-1, advances to the College World Series for the fourth time.

Thoden won his second game of the double-elimination tournament after Mississippi State, 54-14, forced a decisive 11th game with a 6-0 victory as Pete Young slammed a three-run homer and Bobby Reed pitched eight and two-thirds innings of shutout ball.

North Carolina, the regular-season Atlantic Coast Conference champion, jumped to a 2-0 lead in the first and then depended on its defense and Thoden, who ran his record to 12-0. He was masterful before a crowd of 10,588 — the third largest ever to view a regional game.

Thoden struck out eight and was backed by two double plays. Mississippi State had it chances, stranding 10 runners.

Tom Nevin led off the first with a triple to the left field corner and rode home on Woodall's sacrifice fly. Ron Mauer's single, an error and Dave Arendas' double made it 2-0.

The Tar Heels got an unearned run in the second on Nevin's single and added another in the fourth on Howison's two-strike squeeze bunt.

North Carolina added two in the eighth on a solo home run by Todd Nichols and a run-scoring single by Howison.

Florida State Eliminates Clemson

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (AP) — Teamwork, perseverance and a dynamite seventh inning lifted Florida State to an 8-1 victory over Clemson in the NCAA Atlantic Region Championship.

The top-seeded Seminoles, 52-16, advance to their third College World Series appearance over the last four years. No players remain from the team that last went to Omaha in 1987.

"In 15 years of coaching at Florida State, going back to Omaha this time is more meaningful because of the team concept," said Florida State coach Mike Martin. "This club did it all. They were not going to be denied. When we were behind no one panicked and no one was frustrated."

Clemson pitcher Brian Barnes, 16-3, struck out nine and held the Seminoles to one hit in the first six innings. But Florida State struck back in the seventh, scoring all eight of its runs on five hits and three walks.

Allen Bevis' RBI single scored the go-ahead run and Brad Parker's two-run single ended the Seminole scoring spree.

Mike Brady, 4-2, pitched 5 2/3 innings of shutout relief to earn the win. He allowed only five hits and struck out four.

Clemson, the Atlantic Coast Conference champion, ends its season at 50-20.

Piniella Won't Be Coaching Toronto

NEW YORK (AP) — Terry Bevington and Bob Bailor are the top candidates to manage the Toronto Blue Jays now that Lou Piniella can't leave the New York Yankees.

Bevington, a former minor-league manager, is a coach with the Chicago White Sox, while Bailor manages Toronto's top farm team, Syracuse of the Class AAA International League.

Yankees owner George Steinbrenner refused to let Piniella take the job because the two teams could not reach an agreement on compensation. Instead, Piniella will remain with the Yankees as a broadcaster and coach.

"Lou Piniella is the best hitting coach in baseball today," Steinbrenner said. "Nobody is anxious to lose a guy like that."

Piniella, who has been relieved twice as Yankees manager, was disappointed by Steinbrenner's decision.

"I asked George for permission to talk to the Blue Jays and I wanted to be able to complete those talks," he said. "I've talked with George the last couple of days. He doesn't want me to leave the organization."

Piniella has a three-year, $1.2 million contract with the Yankees that runs through 1991.

The Yankees reportedly were interested in Toronto pitchers Todd Stottlemyre, Duane Ward, David Wells and Alex Sanchez.

Trading a player for a manager is not without precedent. Oakland acquired catcher Manny Sanguillen from Pittsburgh in 1976 for Chuck Tanner and the New York Mets traded pitcher Bill Denehy to the Washington Senators in 1968 for Gil Hodges.

Nichols Claims First Senior Title

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — When Bobby Nichols calls golf a silly game, he's serious.

Two weeks after failing to make a birdie during 54 holes, Nichols made a 12-footer to beat Orville Moody in a playoff and win the $300,000 Southwestern Bell Classic.

Nichols put together back-to-back rounds of 3-under par 69 — he even made an eagle one day — then shot a 1-under 71 Sunday to tie with Moody at 209. He won on the third extra hole, giving him his first individual title on the PGA Senior Tour.

"You never know about this silly game," Nichols said. "I felt I've played better golf as a senior than I did as a junior, but I couldn't beat anybody."

"I had four or five other chances to win before this, and something would happen," he said. "Most of the time it was bad shots."

Nichols, who won 12 times on the regular PGA Tour, including the 1964 PGA Championship, joined the Senior Tour in 1986. That year, he teamed with Curt Byrum to win the Showdown Classic, a junior-senior event.

His $226,000 in earnings last year was the most among Senior players who failed to win a tournament. He lost by a stroke in the Arizona Classic in March, but that had been the highlight.

Texas Rallies Past Twins, 8-6

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Jeff Reardon had no excuses. "I just didn't do my job. All I had to do was get one out," he said after giving up four consecutive hits with two outs in the ninth inning Sunday as Texas rallied for six runs and beat Minnesota 8-6.

Minnesota took a 6-2 lead when Randy Bush led off the eighth with his fifth home run of the season, the first homer for the Twins in 62 innings over seven games.

With one out in the following inning, Cecil Espy singled off Steve Shields. After Jeff Stone struck out and Espy stole second, Scott Fletcher hit an RBI single.

Rafael Palmeiro singled off Reardon for his fourth hit of the game and Steve Buechele doubled to score Fletcher. Julio Franco hit a game-tying two-run double and Rick Leach singled to chase Reardon, 0-2.

"I threw everything I could, but they hit everything," Reardon said. "I felt fine, but they hit the pitches I normally throw."

Leach is 26-for-57 in the Metrodome lifetime, a .456 average. He doesn't know why.

Cecilio Guante, 3-2, allowed two hits in two innings and Jeff Russell finished for his 10th save.

Blue Jays 7, White Sox 5
George Bell hit a two-run homer off Bobby Thigpen in the 10th inning in the final game in Exhibition Stadium. In the stadium's opener on April 7, 1977, the Blue Jays beat the White Sox 9-5.

Toronto, 492-476 in Exhibition Stadium since the franchise began in 1977, moves into the $350 million SkyDome on June 5.

Angels 3, Red Sox 0
Kirk McCaskill pitched a four-hitter as California shut out the Red Sox for the second straight time, extending Boston's scoreless streak to 20 innings.

California, which had nine shutouts all of last season, has 11 in its 31 victories.

Athletics 4, Yankees 3
Mark McGwire hit his first home run in 10 games and Ron Hassey drove in two runs as Oakland completed its first three-game sweep of the Yankees since Aug. 24-26, 1973.

Mike Moore, 6-3, allowed one earned run and seven hits in 5 1/3 innings. Eric Plunk, Greg Cadaret, Jim Corsi and Rick Honeycutt finished with three-hit relief, with Honeycutt earning his third save.

Indians 1, Orioles 0
Joe Carter's squeeze bunt scored the winning run with two outs in the ninth and Greg Swindell pitched a four-hitter. Cleveland snapped a five-game losing streak and ended Baltimore's five-game winning streak.

Bob Milacki, 2-5, allowed two hits over eight innings but walked Felix Fermin to start the ninth. Oddibe

McDowell sacrificed off Mark Williamson, Jerry Browne grounded out, moving Fermin to third, and Carter pushed his bunt toward third and beat Williamson's throw.

Brewers 6, Mariners 4
Terry Francona had four consecutive hits and scored the go-ahead run in the eighth inning as Milwaukee rallied from a 4-0 deficit.

With the score tied at 4, Francona singled with one out in the eighth off Dennis Powell, 1-1, and scored from first when Mariners' left fielder Greg Briley mishandled Paul Molitor's double. Robin Yount then doubled off Mike Schooler, scoring Molitor.

Royals 9, Tigers 5
Jim Eisenreich tripled twice and Danny Tartabull's home run snapped a sixth-inning tie as the Royals completed a three-game sweep.

Kansas City is 19-5 at home. Detroit, which walked 27 batters in the series, is 5-17 on the road, the worst mark in the majors.

Langston Shines In Montreal Debut

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Everyone knew Mark Langston was one of the best pitchers in the American League. Now they know he's one of the best in the National League, too.

In his Montreal debut, Langston allowed two runs and four hits over eight innings while striking out 12 as the visiting Expos beat San Diego 10-2 Sunday.

The Expos want him to be a consistent winner and they liked what they saw against the Padres.

Langston was acquired from Seattle on Thursday night by the Expos for pitchers Randy Johnson, Brian Holman and Greg Harris. He turned down the Mariners' final offer of $7.1 million over three years during Thursday's game in Boston and was traded hours later.

Langston had been the subject of trade rumors involving the New York Mets, Los Angeles Dodgers, Boston Red Sox and Padres. He is eligible to become a free agent at the end of the season.

Langston broke in with Seattle in 1984 and three times led the American League in strikeouts, including a career-high 262 in 1987.

In his first start in the NL, Langston also had a run-scoring single and scored a run.

Langston, who walked three, left for a pinch hitter in the ninth and Tim Burke got the last three outs.

Giants 8, Phillies 5
Rick Reuschel became the first nine-game winner in the major leagues this season and Will Clark hit a grand slam in the fourth inning as San Francisco beat Philadelphia to sweep the three-game series at Candlestick Park.

Reuschel, 9-2, pitched 5 1/3 innings, allowing seven hits and two earned runs. He has a 2.15 ERA for the season and was 6-0 with a 0.84 ERA in May. Terry Mulholland pitched three innings and Mike LaCoss got the last two outs for his sixth save.

Dodgers 4, Mets 3
Roger McDowell balked in the winning run with none out in the 12th inning as Los Angeles beat New York at Dodger Stadium.

Cubs 6, Reds 1
Mike Bielecki pitched a seven-hitter and Shawn Dunston's two-run single keyed a three-run sixth inning, leading Chicago past Cincinnati at Wrigley Field for the Cubs' 10th victory in their last 12 games.

Astros 9, Pirates 2
Glenn Davis homered for the third consecutive game as Houston used five stolen bases and four errors to beat Pittsburgh and sweep the three-game series at Three Rivers Stadium.

Braves 3, Cardinals 3
The game between Atlanta and St. Louis at Busch Stadium was called after 9 1/2 innings because of rain. All of the stats count and the game will be made up in its entirety as part of a doubleheader on Aug. 14.

Evert Not Among Field At French Open

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PARIS — If ever a tennis player was conspicuous by her absence at the French Open, that player is Chris Evert.

The 34-year-old American, winner of a record seven women's singles titles at Stade Roland Garros, was several thousand miles away trying to regain her motivation when the famed clay court tournament began its two-week run today.

But while she debates her future at home in Boca Raton, Fla., after a succession of embarrassing losses to low-ranked opponents, the legacy left by Evert at the arena she graced for more than a decade will be sharply underlined by a generation of successors, some almost half her age.

For no matter where you look over the next two weeks, that old Evert trademark — the cracking double-fisted backhand spinning across the slow red clay — will be thrilling the Gallic crowds.

Just about the only top woman player who hasn't reaped success by copying the Evert backhand is defending champion Steffi Graf, who continues her bid for an unprecedented second Grand Slam today when she opens against unseeded Camille Benjamin of Bakersfield, Calif.

Graf, virtually unbeatable for 18 months, is aiming for a third straight French title. Already, the 19-year-old West German has won the Australian Open and six other titles during a season in which she has compiled a 39-1 record. Her only defeat came at the hands of Gabriela Sabatini, and the raven-haired Argentine, still trying for her first Grand Slam tournament title after several near-misses, will be Graf's main rival for the women's crown.

Sabatini was up third on Center Court today, against Akemi Nishiya of Japan.

Also in action is the men's defending champion, Mats Wilander, trying to regain his form against Spanish junior champion Tomas Carbonell after a sequence of confidence-sapping losses.

The Swede, seeded only fourth in Paris in line with his world computer ranking, hasn't won a major tournament since the U.S. Open in 1988, a year in which he also won the French and Australian titles.

In an exhibition charity match Sunday, Wilander's fitness and alertness were tested to the full as he just managed to pull out a 9-8 "pro set" victory against countryman Mikael Pernfors.

After losing in the third-round of the Italian Open two weeks ago to unseeded American Jay Berger, Wilander said he was already concentrating on defending his French title.

"I think my mind is already in Paris waiting for me," Wilander said in Rome.

Ivan Lendl, the men's favorite seeking his fourth title on his favorite surface, also was in action in Sunday's charity event. The Czechoslovakian, who lives in Greenwich, Conn., and is seeking U.S. citizenship, hammered Slobodan Zivojinovic 9-2 with a display as clinically efficient as if he was playing for the championship itself. Lendl is in the same half of the draw as both Wilander and Andre Agassi of Las Vegas, the No. 5 seed and America's best hope of winning the men's title for the first time since Tony Trabert in 1955.

Agassi, 19, gets underway Tuesday, as does two-time Wimbledon champion Boris Becker, trying to cap a steady improvement on clay by winning the French Open for the first time.

Sadly for the French crowd, John McEnroe won't be getting under way at all. The 30-year-old New Yorker withdrew last week with back trouble, saying he was unable to get fit for tournaments as close together as the French Open and Wimbledon.

He chose the grass of Wimbledon and will start his preparation in England next week.

The withdrawals of Evert and McEnroe are not the only no-shows at a tournament where long baseline rallies can be gruelling for anyone less than 100 percent match-fit.

Martina Navratilova, a two-time winner, also has pulled out, concentrating her energies on Wimbledon where she is keen to avenge last year's three-set championship match defeat by Graf.

Pat Cash, Henri Leconte, Paul Annacone, Robert Seguso, Stephanie Rehe, Kathleen Horvath and Pam Shriver are others passing up the $4.5 million event.

But no one will be as missed as much as Evert, who may never be back again.

"I may have finally come to the end of the road," the American said after losing in a tournament in Geneva, Switzerland. "My motivation just isn't there any more."

"I think the public has gotten so used to seeing me, they thought I would go on forever and ever. But nothing lasts forever."

Simpson Takes Win In Atlanta Playoff

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MARIETTA, Ga. — Scott Simpson said he almost didn't enter the Atlanta Classic.

"I felt my game got a little better recently, but I didn't know it was getting good enough to win," he said Sunday after capturing the $900,000 event in a sudden-death playoff with Bob Tway. "I hadn't played very well last year, or the beginning of this year."

"Up until a week ago I wasn't even going to play here."

Simpson used a tap-in par putt on the only playoff hole — the par-3 16th — to dispose of Tway after both had shot closing 5-under-par 67s for 278 totals — 10 shots better than par on the hilly, 7,018-yard Atlanta Country Club course.

It was the first PGA Tour victory for Simpson since he won the U. S. Open in 1987.

"I played real well in 1987 and then things went south," Simpson said. "You begin to wonder if it was a fluke, but I'd rather win the Open and go into a slump than never win the Open at all."

Simpson said he felt his game was beginning to come around in recent weeks. He tied for eighth last week in the Colonial.

"Things went real well today," he said. "I would have been happy to come in second, but definitely happy to have won."

He won this one on the par-5s, playing them 12 under for the four rounds. Tway, the 1986 PGA and Atlanta Classic winner, was only five under on the longest holes on the course.

The fifth victory of Simpson's career was worth $162,000, lifting his season total to $239,954 and his career earnings to $2,185,613.

"A lot of guys had a chance to win out there today," he said.

Jay Don Blake, a nonwinner who led after three rounds, and Davis Love III also had chances to win.

Blake fell out of the running with a bogey on 15 and a double-bogey 5 on 16, before closing with two birdies that earned him a share of third place with Love, who lost his bid with a bogey on the 17th.

Love had a 70 and Blake a 72 to finish at 279. David Canipe and David Peoples were next with 69s for 280.

Simpson scored three birdies on the front side, all from inside 10 feet, and then hit the shot that got him in the title chase — a 40-foot putt for an eagle-3 on the 11th, his first eagle this year.

Waltrip Takes World 600 ...

a $1 million bonus that goes to the driver who wins three of the four superspeedway events. Waltrip has now captured the Daytona 500 and the Coca-Cola 600. The other contender, Davey Allison, went out of the race when his engine failed.

After pole-sitter Alan Kulwicki's Ford blew an engine 30 laps from the finish, Waltrip outran Sterling Marlin to win by nearly one second on the 1.5-mile oval. They were two of only three cars left on the lead lap.

Waltrip went into the pits three times between laps 222 and 225 — all on caution — to replace the right front swaybar. Then he won the battle of attrition in the 400-lap race. Seventeen cars did not finish.

It took a few trips to figure out what was wrong, but Waltrip's crew was able to correct it and still keep him on the lead lap.

After the seventh caution flag of the day came out on lap 363 for debris on the track, Waltrip beat Kulwicki out of the pits to maintain the lead.

But on lap 370, Kulwicki's car dropped off the pace when his engine failed, and he drove straight to the garage.

"The motor blew up," Kulwicki said. "It was really too bad. I think we had the best car on the track. Everything was going just exactly to plan. We were ready to make a run at Darrell."

Ken Schrader, the only other driver on the lead lap, finished third, followed by Geoff Bodine and Bill Elliott. Rounding out the top 10 were Mark Martin, Neil Bonnett, Brett Bodine, Bobby Hill Jr., and Ricky Rudd.

Wallace, who was among the top five for much of the first 300 miles, left the race on lap 307 after his engine failed.

Dale Earnhardt, the Winston Cup points leader coming into the race, dropped out of the race on lap 224 when a valve broke in his Chevrolet Lumina. It was the first race Earnhardt has failed to finish this season, and it dropped him out of the Winston Cup lead.

Waltrip now leads with 1,479 points, while Bodine moved into second with 1,458. Earnhardt dropped to third with 1,430.

Richard Petty, a two-time winner of the event, was relieved on lap 258 by Jimmy Means. Petty said there was not enough air coming through an experimental face mask he was testing. The mask is designed to supply oxygen to the driver.

Even Waltrip did not escape car problems. One of his tires was leaking air in the final laps, and had gone flat by the time he accepted the winner's trophy.

The victory was also the first for the Chevrolet Lumina, which debuted at Talladega earlier this month. Waltrip averaged 144.077 mph.

Lakers-Suns ...

The Suns then scored 16 of the next 19 to take their only lead before a 10-0 Los Angeles spurt made it 24-16.

The Lakers led the rest of the way, although there were some anxious moments near the finish.

"No lead is safe with that team," Johnson said. "Today they kept coming back and coming back. We made the plays to hold them off. I always felt in control."

It was 87-74 entering the fourth quarter. A 3-pointer by Byron Scott, who scored a career playoff-high 35 points, gave the Lakers what appeared to be a safe 91-78 lead with 9:55 remaining. And it was 106-94 when Johnson scored with 5:29 left.

But the Suns outscored the Lakers 11-2 over the next 2:55 to make it 108-105 with 2:34 left. That was as close as Phoenix would come until Kevin Johnson's three-point play with 53 seconds left made it 116-114.

However, two free throws by Michael Cooper with 47 seconds to play, two more by Johnson with 22 seconds left and another pair by Scott with 12 seconds remaining sealed the victory.

"We thought we had a chance to pull it out, but they're too good," Phoenix coach Cotton Fitzsimmons said. "Anytime the clock got down, they still delivered and got what they wanted."

"I make no apologies for the Phoenix Suns. We think this has been a learning experience for us, it's been very successful this year."

The Suns entered the series hot, having won 17 of 19 games — 10-1 to finish the regular season and 7-1 in the playoffs.

Bulls-Pistons ...

"They aren't on the ropes," Coach Doug Collins said at the Bulls' practice facility at Deerfield, Ill. "They know if they can play the way they did Saturday and then close it out at the end, the series will be even and they have two of the last three games at their place."

The Bulls, who won 47 games during the regular season, upset Cleveland and New York in the first two rounds of the playoffs before facing Detroit. Chicago has not been behind in any series so far.

"We're the underdog and they won 63 games," Collins said. "They are much more capable of climbing out of a hole than we are."

"They know they gave the game away and they want to redeem themselves," Jordan said.

Both of Chicago's victories in the series have been helped along by offensive foul calls in the final seconds against self-proclaimed "bad boys" Laimbeer and Rick Mahorn.

With the score tied, Laimbeer was called for an illegal pick with nine seconds left in Saturday's game. Mahorn was whistled for a similar call with Chicago leading by three and 29 seconds left in Game 1.

"We got two major calls," Collins said. "They were crucial calls, and we were able to capitalize on them."

"If you play by the dirt, you die by the dirt," Jordan said.

Daly admitted the Pistons' image could be costing them. "Mahorn and Laimbeer are looked at differently than other players," Daly said. "They have garnered that reputation on their own, so we have to live with it."

Emerson Fittipaldi Wins Indy 500 ...

second. Fittipaldi, who led 158 of the 200 laps, finished at an average speed of 167.581 mph, second-fastest in Indy history behind the 170.722 by Bobby Rahal in 1986.

This was not a race to remember for the Old Guard.

Of eight former winners, five were out before it was half over and a sixth lasted just a few laps more. The only two still running at the end, Mario Andretti and A.J. Foyt, finished fifth and sixth, but seven laps down. No other former winner was better than 23rd.

Roger Penske, whose team has won four of the last five Indys, six of the last 10 and seven altogether, had to settle for having the winning car — even if another team's driver was at the wheel.

The winning car was sold to Patrick Racing for Fittipaldi last winter because of Penske's longtime association with team owner Pat Patrick.

None of his own cars made it to the end. Rick Mears, the three-time winner, defending champion and two-time record-setting pole winner, was 23rd. Four-time winner Al Unser was 24th, and 1985 winner Danny Sullivan was 28th.

The early part of the race was almost too easy for Fittipaldi, eager to improve on last year's runner-up finish to Mears.

Fittipaldi took the lead from Mears on the first turn of the first lap, ran consistently above 215 mph and set a race record with a fast lap at more than 221 mph. Except for his pit stops, Fittipaldi was never out of the lead and was never passed on the track until the 153rd lap, by Michael Andretti.

"Everything was going too smooth, I guess," the younger Andretti said. "I'm feeling pretty low. The car was fantastic ... running the best I ever had."

Alas, like father, like son.

The Andretti luck — the bad breaks that have stopped Mario time and again since his lone victory in 1969 — struck Michael. Leading as he started the 162nd lap, his engine blew at the starting line and his day was done.

"I got a lot from my dad, more than his driving," Michael said. "I think I inherited my dad's luck."

Until then, Fittipaldi and Michael Andretti had the race almost to themselves. "It's like chasing rabbits," said Rick Galles, Little Al's car owner. "We just want to hang in there and see what happens."

When Andretti fell out, Unser picked up the challenge.

Little Al took the lead briefly when Fittipaldi pitted under the yellow light. Fittipaldi went back in front on the next lap when Unser made a pit stop and built his lead to 16 seconds with 20 laps to go.

He couldn't hold it then, either, losing all but a second when the yellow came out after Tero Palmroth lost a wheel. Fittipaldi took another pit stop, but Unser, gambling he would have enough fuel to finish the race, stayed on the track.

"I knew he didn't make a pit stop, because I was talking to my crew," Fittipaldi said. "I asked them, 'When did he stop?' They said they didn't know."

Fittipaldi flirted with disaster himself on the last pit stop when his engine almost stalled as he headed back to the track.

"I realized that and tried to get back to first gear," he said. "The engine was beautiful the whole race."

The green light came out again with 14 laps remaining, and Unser caught Fittipaldi with four laps to go, setting up the thrilling wheel-to-wheel sprint.

Chief Steward Tom Binford said the bump appeared to be unavoidable and he saw no reason to consider a penalty.

"People look at it different ways as to who was at fault or not at fault," Binford said.

Unser led only five laps during the race. The only other lap leaders were Michael Andretti, for 35 laps, and Mario Andretti and Raul Boesel, one lap apiece.

Williams Set For New Album

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Reclusive country music star Don Williams says his new album is the first one he's wanted to talk about in years. "I don't know if I tried any harder on this one. But I will say we had more fun in the studio than ever, which was delightful," Williams said recently.

Williams gave 80 concerts in 1982, cut back to 50 in 1985, then retreated altogether for 18 months to his 90-acre farm about 10 miles northwest of Nashville.

"I was feeling like, maybe it's time for me to hang it up. You know, just forget it," Williams said.

His new album, "One Good Well," has already yielded a hit with the title tune. Williams' other hits include "The Shelter of Your Eyes," "We Should Be Together," and "Til the Rivers All Run Dry."

Williams' songs have been recorded by musicians as diverse as Eric Clapton, Johnny Cash, Pete Townshend, Kenny Rogers and Charley Pride.

Actor Is Virtually Everybody On TV

By Jerry Buck
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — Once a week Joe Alaskey is Beano on "Out of This World," but the rest of the time he's virtually everyone else on television.

He plays Donna Pescow's annoying brother, Beano Froelich, in the syndicated sitcom. He also appears daily on the syndicated game show "Couch Potatoes," and you never know who he's going to be.

The versatile actor-writer-impressionist does voices of characters from Dr. Zorba on "Ben Casey" to Marlin Perkins of "Wild Kingdom" to Earl Hamner, the creator-narrator of "The Waltons." Frequently, he's in costume and make-up on "Couch Potatoes," or he may simply appear as himself, "The Neighbor."

He was the voice of Yosemite Sam in "Who Framed Roger Rabbit" and is on the CBS cartoon show "The New Adventures of Mighty Mouse."

His personal favorite is Jackie Gleason. Alaskey hopes to appear as "The Great One" in a film biography.

"I've been impersonating Gleason for years," he said. "I even look a lot like him. I only worked with him once. When the 'lost episodes' of 'The Honeymooners' were found, Viacom hired me to loop his voice on some of the bad sound tracks. I had

Wonder Visits

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Rock singer Stevie Wonder dropped in at Solidarity campaign headquarters and told a group of students and campaign workers he supports Solidarity in its election drive.

At one student's request Saturday, he sang "I Just Called To Say I Love You," with the audience joining in on the refrains.

Wonder arrived Friday and had a concert Saturday night.

After the Communist government reached a compromise with Solidarity leaders, elections were scheduled for June 4. The elections are expected to be the least restricted in years.

to do it as Gleason sounded in the 1950s.

"Gleason picked me from listening to me on tape," Alaskey said, "I also appeared as Ralph Kramden in a 'Honeymooners' sketch on a Suzanne Somers special."

As Beano Froelich on "Out of This World," Alaskey is often the butt of the jokes.

"I'm in on the secret that her daughter, Evie, has special powers because her father is a space alien," he said. "I'm the only other member of the cast who knows, so I'm in all the plots to keep it a secret."

"I'm generally the brunt of Evie's magic. She'll turn me into a sheep dog or a 10-year-old kid. Or I may just stay his grouchy, spoiled self."

Maureen Flannigan stars as Evie and Doug McClure plays the mayor.

Alaskey has lost 80 pounds since starting "Out of This World" in September 1987. The 6-foot-1 actor now weighs 255 pounds. "I'm still losing," he said. "I'll be able to play big guys instead of big fat guys. I'll be more presentable as an actor and stand up comic."

The situation comedy was the first show Alaskey auditioned for when he moved here from Boston. He had been a comedian-impressionist on a morning show on radio station WVBK and worked in Boston as a standup comic.

"I got to L.A. when Bill Scott was on a tour for the 25th anniversary of 'Rocky and Bullwinkle,'" he said. "He came to Boston and we did some sketches on the radio show. Bill's the voice of Bullwinkle. I did Boris Badenov and William Conrad, the announcer. Bill said I did the best version of the voices he had heard."

"He said if I came to Los Angeles he'd help me find work. He was true to his word. He not only found me work but even moved me into my apartment. Then before I knew it I was on David Letterman's show. That got me all kinds of offers from agents. Then I was an actor again."

He recently starred in the movie "Lucky Stiff" and was the voice of Dr. Ziplock in another movie, "Martians!"

Alaskey is writing two one-man shows, one an exploration of human needs called "Q&A," and one called "An Evening with Joe Alaskey." He's also writing and drawing a cartoon book of palindromes, which are words that are spelled the same forward and backward. Examples: "Madam, I'm Adam" and "Sir, I'm Iris."

Newman, Woodward Plan Movie

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Paul Newman and Joanne Woodward will spend about two months here later this year to make a film about the lives of the Kansas City well-to-do in the years preceding World War II.

"Mr. and Mrs. Bridge" is based on Evan S. Connell's novels "Mrs. Bridge" and "Mr. Bridge."

Director James Ivory, whose credits include "A Room With A View" and "A Passage to India," arrived Friday to scout locations for the production, which is scheduled to begin filming in August.

Ivory said the $7 million film is relatively inexpensive by Hollywood standards.

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:

♠84 ♥73 ♦K6 ♣AQJ7632

The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	Pass	2 ♣	Pass
2 ♥	Pass	3 ♣	Pass
3 ♦	Pass	?	?

What do you bid now?

A.—Partner must have a very good hand to be looking for game when he is very short in clubs. Since you have a seventh club partner doesn't know about, as well as a side-suit king, bid five clubs. Don't even consider three no trump. If partner is void in clubs, your hand might produce no tricks!

Q.2—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:

♠AK643 ♥83 ♦AK982 ♣A

The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	Pass	2 ♣	Pass
2 ♥	Pass	2 NT	Pass
3 ♦	Pass	3 NT	Pass
?	?	?	?

What do you bid now?

A.—First set the trump suit and leave as much room as possible for slam investigation, should partner be interested, by bidding three spades. Since partner's jump shift was a game force, he can't pass. To jump to four spades steals your own bidding room.

What action do you take?

A.—You have told your partner you have at least 10 cards in the pointed suits. Nevertheless, he has persisted with no trump. Respect his decision—he surely has enough in hearts to guarantee the contract, but not enough in either of your suits to make a slam viable.

Q.3—As South, vulnerable, you hold:

♠Q92 ♥763 ♦K52 ♣A872

The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	Pass	1 NT	Pass
3 ♦	Pass	?	?

What do you bid now?

A.—First set the trump suit and leave as much room as possible for slam investigation, should partner be interested, by bidding three spades. Since partner's jump shift was a game force, he can't pass. To jump to four spades steals your own bidding room.

Q.4—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:

♠AQJ6 ♥Q ♦KJ10853 ♣K7

The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♦	Pass	1 ♥	Pass
1 ♣	Pass	2 ♣	Pass
?	?	?	?

What do you bid now?

A.—So far you have promised no more than a minimum, so it's time to take some firm action. A jump to three no trump has some appeal, but that would tend to describe a more balanced hand. We like a jump to three diamonds, even though we would have preferred a slightly stronger suit.

Q.5—As South, vulnerable, you hold:

♠AQJ762 ♥95 ♦73 ♣AKQ

Your right-hand opponent opens the bidding with four hearts. What action do you take?

A.—The preempt has done its job. Since your partner will almost surely lack sufficient spade length and high cards to act, you can't afford to pass the decision around to him. Bid four spades, but don't be surprised if you're doubled and have your head handed to you on a silver platter.

Q.6—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:

♠K6 ♥AQ92 ♦Q873 ♣Q95

The bidding has proceeded:

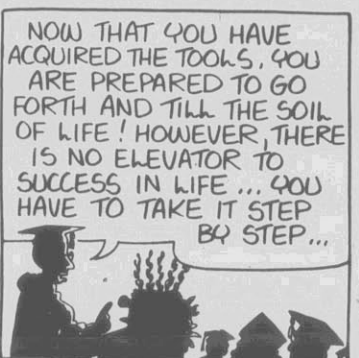

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	2 ♣	?	?

What action do you take?

A.—For once, we would take the same call whether we play negative doubles or not. Double. If negative, it's a red-suit takeout. If positive, there's no guarantee that your side has a game, so suggest to partner that it might pay to go for a penalty. If his hand is unsuitable, he can still run out.

Gorbachev Taps Unknown As Choice For No. 2 Spot

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOSCOW — Mikhail S. Gorbachev today rammed his little-known choice for vice president through the new congress after preventing competitors from being nominated but allowing his man to endure a grilling.

The move in the Congress of People's Deputies came a day after tens of thousands of people rallied in Moscow to protest the defeat of prominent reform-minded deputies in their bids for seats in the standing legislature, or Supreme Soviet.

ANATOLY LUKYANOV

The protesters charged that Saturday's vote by members of the Communist Party-dominated congress was undemocratic, and television news said a poll found half the people surveyed to be dissatisfied with how it was held.

Gorbachev made clear from the outset today that he intended to have the congress confirm his choice of schoolmate Anatoly I. Lukyanov without allowing competing nominations from the floor. But he permitted almost four hours of debate before putting the question to a vote.

Of the 2,250 deputies, only 179 voted against Lukyanov in a show of hands. There were 137 abstentions.

"In the United States of America, they don't vote for the vice president," Gorbachev told the deputies as he pressed for a confirmation vote rather than a closed ballot with multiple choice, which some deputies wanted.

Gorbachev, who tried to get the congress to confirm Lukyanov on Saturday night but gave in to loud objections from weary deputies, opened today's session saying he wanted to "settle the question right away."

But some deputies called for rewriting the body's election procedures. Their motion, though gaining 851 votes, was defeated.

As Gorbachev was trying to bring the nomination to a vote, passions flared briefly with deputies shouting from their seats in the huge Palace of Congresses. They could not be heard on the live television broadcast.

Historian Roy Medvedev said Gorbachev needed a long-term acquaintance he could trust as vice president because policies change whenever the president leaves the Kremlin. Gorbachev and Lukyanov, who already serves as vice president, went to law school together at Moscow University.

Under the new political structure approved last year, the vice president would take over from the president should the president be unable to perform his duties. Lukyanov has no other assigned duties but may be given specific projects by the president.

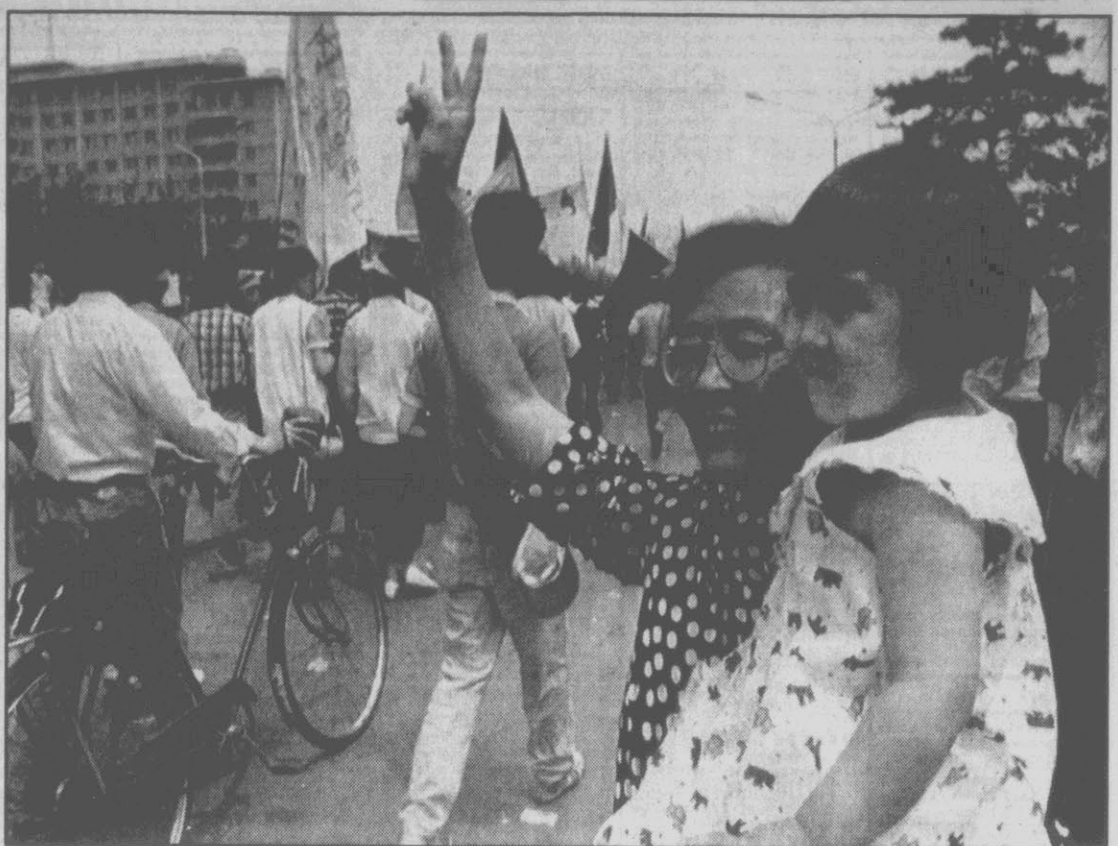

Before the vote Telman Gdlyan and Nikolai Ivanov, a pair of anti-corruption crusaders who have run afoul of Kremlin authorities, quizzed Lukyanov on the sharp rise in crime and his attitude toward a high-level investigation of the two outspoken prosecutors.

Lukyanov, a 59-year-old lawyer, originally was elected vice president in October by the old Supreme Soviet, which was a rubber stamp for the Kremlin leadership. He has been involved in government efforts to rewrite the legal code but is not widely known.

He told the deputies that much of the rapid increase in crime was due to the Soviet Union's poor economic condition, and said legal reforms would make great changes.

The constitution gives Gorbachev the right to appoint his own vice president, subject to confirmation by the congress, and several deputies complained that they did not have a choice.

Maverick Communist Boris N. Yeltsin, who won a landslide popular victory in the spring elections, had been considered a possible candidate for vice president.

Government Pressure Is Taking Toll On Protesters

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BEIJING — Student democracy protesters split today on whether to press on with their three-week occupation of central Tiananmen Square, grappling over how to face the anticipated conservative backlash.

Hardliners who have seized the upper hand in the government have moved relentlessly in recent days toward snuffing out the 6-week-old movement.

Workers were reportedly being fined for taking part in demonstrations — few were seen in a march Sunday by about 80,000 people, most ly students — and troops called under martial law were said to have occupied Beijing's biggest steel plant.

The state-run press, which only a week ago was filled with heady reports of the democratic protests, was churning out propaganda material.

Leading moderates were reportedly in retreat.

Sources said provincial officials have received documents chronicling "the serious errors" of reformist Communist Party General Secretary Zhao Ziyang, reportedly stripped of his post for seeking reconciliation with the students.

Others who similarly advocated political reform or supported compromise with the students are expected to be punished or purged.

"We cannot leave the square!" student loudspeakers blared today. "If the People's Liberation Army suppresses us, we will become an exemplary model for all future movements to come."

The announcement, said by the loudspeaker to be from a leadership group, added to the confusion of who was in control of the movement and whether the students had veered toward a more confrontational stand.

Pope Accepts Castro's Invitation To Havana

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

VATICAN CITY — Pope John Paul II has accepted an invitation by Fidel Castro to visit Cuba, a Vatican official said today. The visit would be the first by a pope to the island nation.

A date for the trip has not been set, and a Cuban diplomat said it apparently would not occur before 1991.

Castro's invitation was extended to the pope on Friday during a private audience he held with Jose Felipe Carneado, chief of the Cuban government office for religious affairs, according to Joaquin Navarro, Vatican spokesman.

Cuba has officially been atheist since the communist revolution 30 years ago that brought Castro to power.

"The date of the visit is yet to be established," Navarro said. "It's clear that it's not in the program yet," he said when asked about reports that the pope would go to Havana in 1991.

Cuba's Roman Catholic bishops recently invited the pope, who has praised improvements in the church's ability to carry out its mission in Cuba.

Havana and the Holy See have diplomatic relations.

A top Vatican official, Cardinal Roger Etchegaray, visited Cuba in December and said later that the Church has enjoyed much more freedom in recent years.

Kidnappers Ignore Prelate's Plea To See Hostages

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BKIRKI, Lebanon — Cardinal John O'Connor of New York today made yet another appeal to the captors of nine American hostages to "permit me to come and see you," but hopes for a positive response were rapidly dwindling.

The Roman Catholic archbishop's visit was nearing its end.

"If your captors will permit me to come to see you wherever you are, if it's physically possible for me, I will come," O'Connor said in an interview with The Associated Press.

He recalled that during a previous visit to Lebanon three years ago, he was given different locations about where the hostages were being held.

"Somebody would say they were in the (Bekaa) valley, somebody would say they're down south, they're in Syria, they're in Iran," O'Connor said.

"But I learned about one year later that at one particular point they were only two blocks away from where I was and they did see and they did hear me and it gave them some hope," the cardinal said. He declined to elaborate.

O'Connor was last in Lebanon in June 1986. A month later, the Rev. Lawrence Jenco, an American Roman Catholic priest, was released after 18 months of captivity.

At present, at least 15 Western hostages are being held in Lebanon, most of them by pro-Iranian extremist factions. The nine Americans include the longest-held: Terry Anderson, Associated Press chief Middle East correspondent, was kidnapped March 16, 1985.

O'Connor spoke at the hilltop Bkirki Monastery, where he has been staying as the guest of Patriarch Nasrallah Sfeir, spiritual head of Lebanon's dominant Maronite Catholic community.

He declared outright support for Christian army commander Gen. Michel Aoun's demand that the Syrian army withdraw from Lebanon.

"I think every person I've met has said that nothing can happen until the forces of Syria leave Lebanon. So I'm not creating this. This is what I hear wherever I go," O'Connor said.

Aoun's 20,000 mainly Christian units have been locked in 11 weeks of fierce fighting with an alliance of Syrian and Druse forces that has left 359 people killed and 1,396 wounded since March 8.

At a summit conference in Morocco last week, Arab heads of states called on all warring factions in Lebanon to "strictly adhere" to a cease-fire proclaimed by the Arab League on May 11.

But Syrian artillery positions in Moslem west Beirut kept on blasting the Christian coast north of Beirut, maintaining a blockade against the 1 million Christians in the beleaguered enclave.

"People in the United States do not know that when the cease-fire came that the Syrians did not stop firing. So I think this is very important that Gen. Aoun's position be made much clearer to the people of the United States," O'Connor said.
