By John Pomfret
THE ASOCIATED PRESS

BEIJING — Soldiers stormed Tiananmen Square early Sunday and crushed a three-week student sit-in for democracy, shooting and beating their way through crowds in clashes. A hospital doctor estimated at least 500 people died.

The helmeted troops violently cut a swath through the heart of Beijing to get to the the central square, rolling through barricades and surging masses on surrounding streets.

The crackdown came two weeks after the government declared martial law in an effort to end the student occupation of the square that began May 13 for a freer China with less corruption.

By 3:30 a.m. (2:30 p.m. EDT Saturday), soldiers and riot police surrounded Tiananmen, boxing off several thousand students and supporters inside.

A half hour later, lights were turned out. The square was in darkness.

"You have to give up all hope," students said over their loudspeaker at the monument. "You have to give your life to the movement."

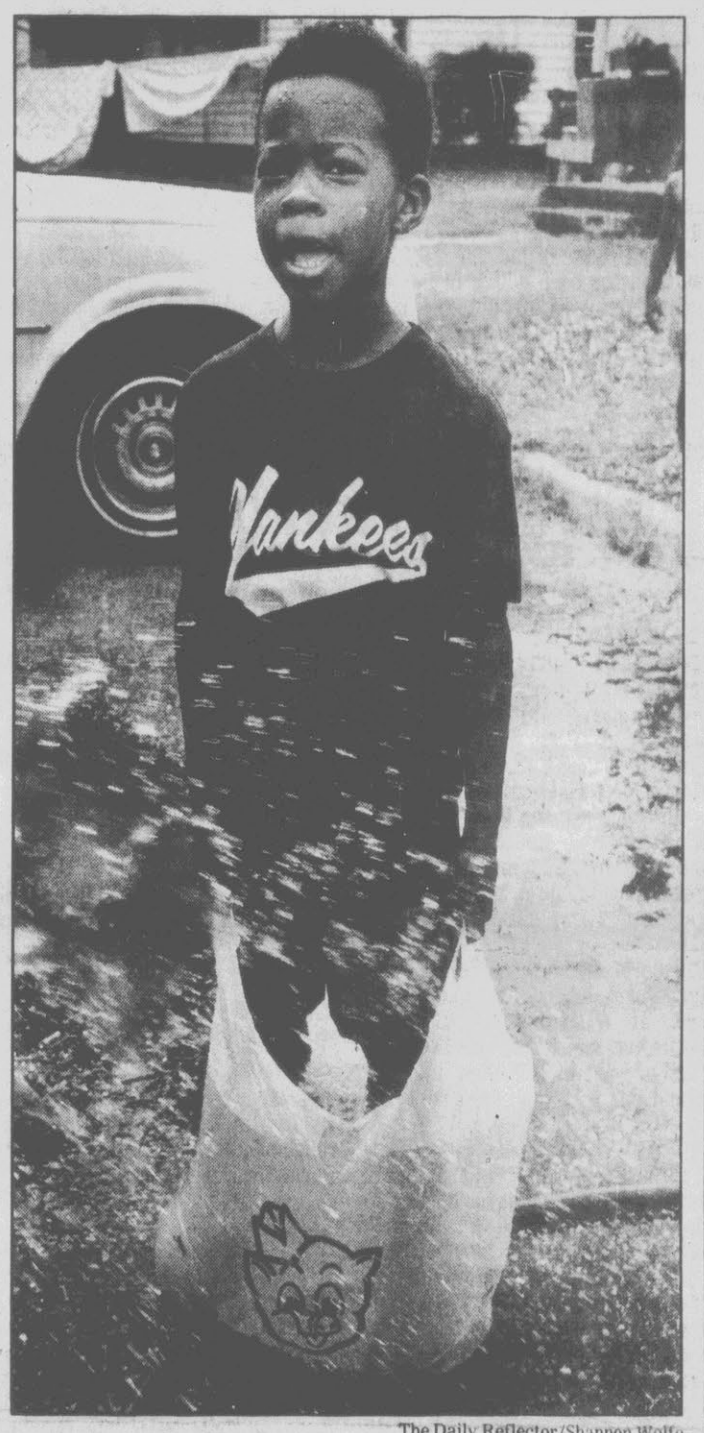

But two hours later, weeping students holding each other's hands began filing out.

"There is no more time. We can't let any more blood flow," a student announced over their loudspeaker. "We must leave."

Some sang the "Internationale," the communist anthem. Others gave a V-for-victory sign as they marched past troops.

About eight tanks then moved onto the square, and soldiers, their rifles raised, moved onto a monument to revolutionary heroes in the center. A

Chinese Students Declare Shock, Anger

By Howard Goldberg
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Chinese students and Chinese-Americans around the United States reacted with anguish and anger Saturday to bloodshed in their homeland and called on President Bush to condemn the military assault on protesters in Beijing.

"Oh my God! Oh my God!" cried Choi Soon, 32, breaking into sobs as she listened to radio reports in a park across from San Francisco City Hall. "How can the government kill? Those are my brothers and sisters in the square and they are being murdered."

About 300 protesters gathered at the Chinese consulate in San Francisco.

Chinese and Chinese-Americans also took their fear and anger to the streets in Los Angeles, New York, New Orleans, Houston, St. Paul, Minn.; and Buffalo, N.Y. In Connecticut, the state House held a silent tribute.

"It's so horrible," Lea Liang said during a rally at the Chinese consulate in New York by more than 300 chanting, screaming and weeping protesters.

"I can't believe they used the army — the People's Army — on the people," said Ms. Liang, a Chinese-American. "This hurts very much."

A smaller demonstration, attended by Mayor Edward I. Koch and U.S. Rep. Bill Green, R-N.Y., was held in lower Manhattan within sight of the Statue of Liberty.

"All of us here must say no to the government of China and to the military suppression in China," organizer Alfred Lui told the crowd.

"Down with a government that kills students," said a sign carried by accountant Ivy Ng.

In Los Angeles, about 50 people staged a sit-in on the steps of Chinese consulate, weeping as the protesters played a recording of what they said were telephone conversations with relatives and friends

Eye Doctors Support FDA's Warning Label Stance On Contacts

By Amy Gagivan
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Area eye care specialists say they support the Food and Drug Administration's request that manufacturers produce labels warning patients not to wear extended-wear contacts for more than one week without cleaning the lenses.

In fact, they say they have been making the recommendation for some time.

"The FDA decision makes sense," said Dr. Don Bode, an ophthalmologist with Holland and Bode Ophthalmologists, P.A. "Wearing the extended-wear or the disposable lenses for more than one week is not a good idea.

"People get a little lazy, lose track of time and get into trouble," Bode said.

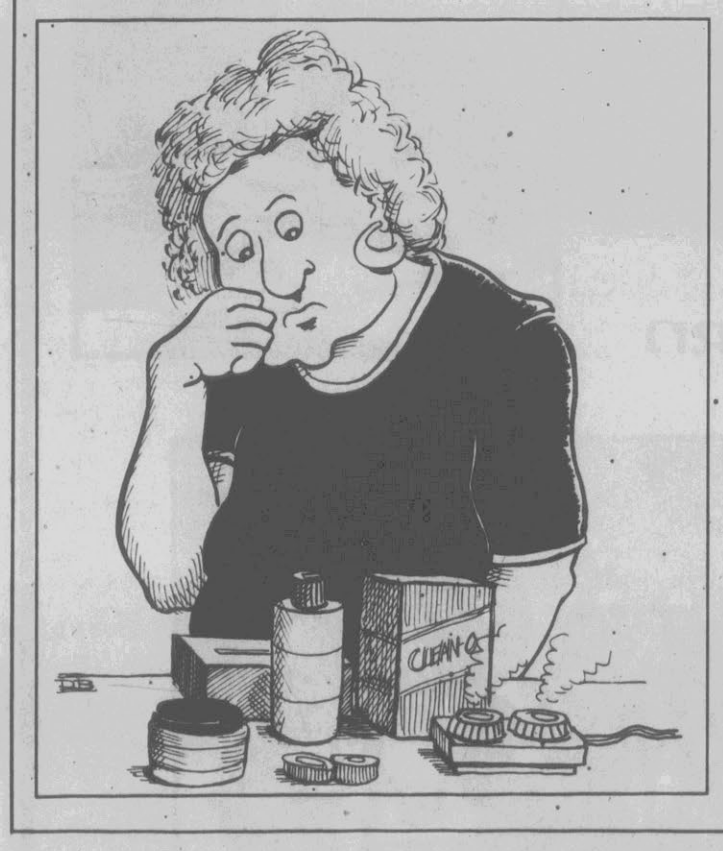

Bode said, "It's a little early to know whether the disposables will be the cure, but it makes sense because they are removed often.

"Nothing will take the place of good hygiene and proper care," said Bode.

Dr. William Monroe of Greenville Eye Clinic Inc. agreed, but the ophthalmologist said he feels there was an important omission in the FDA recommendations concerning the use of homemade saline solutions.

"Doctors are now recommending that people not make their own saline solution," Monroe said. "People should use the commercially-prepared saline only."

Khomeini Dead

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — Tehran radio reported early Sunday that Iran's spiritual leader, Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini, has died.

The report, monitored in Nicosia, gave no other details.

Khomeini, 86, underwent surgery last month for digestive system bleeding. He had been reported recuperating but on Saturday Iran's state-run radio and television stagions said complications had developed and his health was deteriorating.

Democrats React To Wright's Move

By Stuart Savage
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Local Democrats seem to differ in their feelings about House Speaker Jim Wright's announcement last week that he would resign his speaker's post and end his 34-year career as a representative from Texas.

Wright had been under fire for alleged House rules violations since May 26, 1986, when Rep. Newt Gingrich, R-Ga., filed a complaint with the House ethics committee asking for a probe. The investigation led the ethics committee, on April 17, to charge Wright with 69 rules violations.

"I think it's very unfortunate," 1st District Rep. Walter Jones of Farmville said after Wright's Wednesday afternoon announcement.

Jones characterized Wright as "a man who has given so much to Congress and in my opinion has been an outstanding speaker.

"It's hard for me to believe he would intentionally do any thing wrong," Jones said. "But the evidence was very strong against him."

Wright "did the right thing in resigning ... leaving a clean slate," without facing an ethics committee hearing, Jones said.

Without having to face long ethics panel hearings, Jones said, Congress should now "get on with business important to the people of this nation."

Jones' feeling is that the Wright controversy may have "hurt the Democratic Party temporarily."

But Jones said that since the party and Congress are "willing to clean up ... do what's necessary to straighten out irregular matters," that will "fair well with the public.

Pipeline Spews Oil Into River

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CRAIG, Colo. — A ruptured pipeline spilled about 13,200 gallons of crude oil into the Yampa River, home to two endangered species of fish, officials said.

The Amoco Pipeline Co. line near here broke open early Friday, said Moffat County Sheriff Jeff Corriveau. It was discovered when an oil slick was spotted on the Yampa three miles below the point where the pipe crosses the northwestern Colorado river.

Amoco officials immediately turned off the pumps to the 6-inch diameter line, stopping the flow of oil within a few hours, said Jerry White, the company's area manager in Casper, Wyo.

Amoco officials estimated that about 300 barrels, or about 13,200 gallons, spilled into the river.

Boy Rescued After Being Buried Under Crushed Stone

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

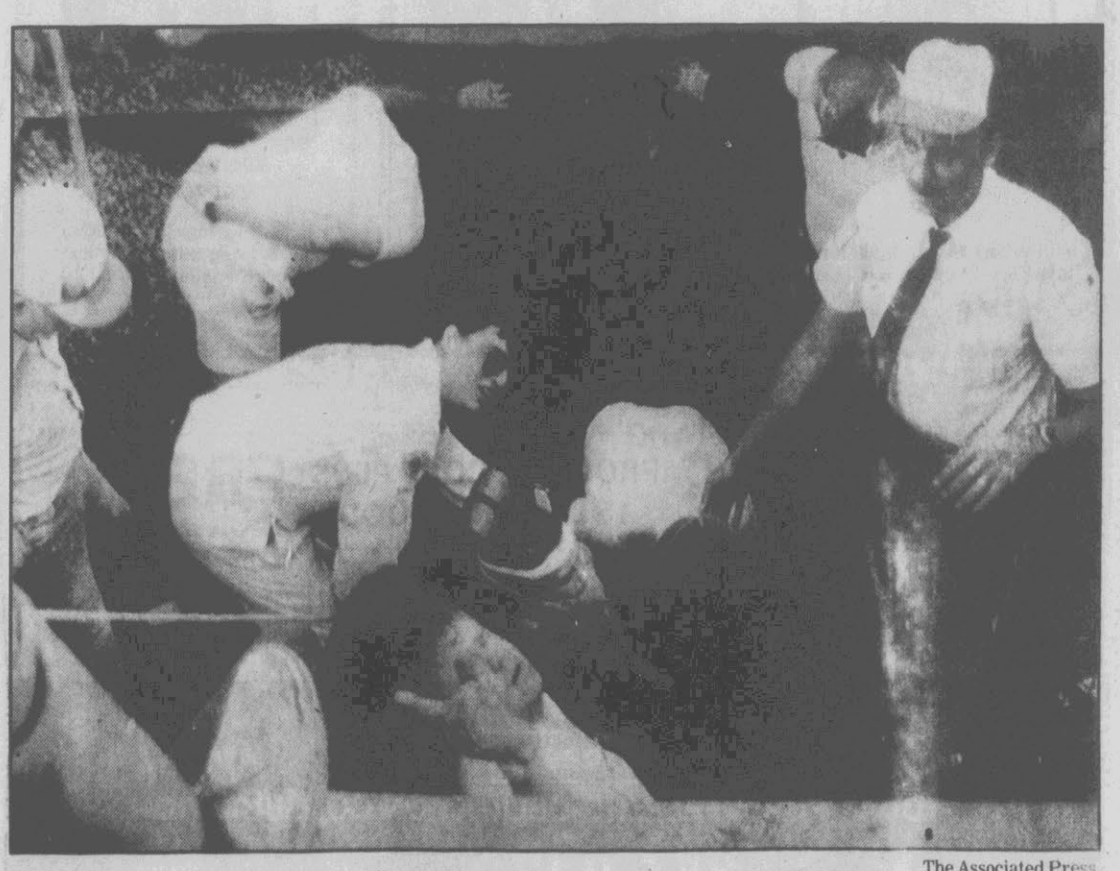

BOONE — A 9-year-old boy was buried in a hopper of crushed stone Saturday as rescue personnel worked for more than an hour to free him and one police officer, credited with saving the youth's life, kept an air pocket open.

Aaron Bledsoe of Creston in Ashe County was released after treatment at Watauga County Hospital and was home watching cartoons by late Saturday morning, said his father, Tom Bledsoe.

"He's very lucky little boy," said Karen Steele, the nurse in charge of the hospital emergency room.

Aaron seemed to almost enjoy his adventure, which began at 7:30 a.m. at Watauga Ready Mix-Greene Construction Co. in Boone.

Doctor Estimates At Least 500 Are Dead In Tiananmen Clashes

complete armored division, with some 20,000 troops, headed into Beijing from the east.

A Beijing Youdian Hospital doctor, who spoke on condition of anonymity, estimated at least 500 people died in the clashes. He based the conclusion on reports from 10 hospitals.

"This is vicious behavior," the furious doctor said. "My government has gone insane."

"There are people who have been shot in the head, chest, stomach, legs and eyes," said a nurse at Beijing Union Medical College, which reported 24 dead and hundreds injured.

CBS said eight hospitals reported a total 150 dead and 325 wounded. CBS correspondent Richard Roth and a cameraman were taken away by soldiers, the network reported.

State-run radio and television acknowledged some deaths without giving numbers. It said: "It was necessary to undertake that action to save lives and property."

Government-run television said more than 1,000 soldiers were injured.

Armored personnel carriers had first entered the square at 4:30 a.m., and troops then began moving slowly toward several thousand students clustered around the monument.

At the same time, troops shot into crowds on the outskirts of the square. One man was shot in the back in Tiananmen, another in the head.

Ambulances and bicycle pedicabs hauled away the wounded.

An official loudspeaker on the square announced troops were moving in to clear the area.

At that point, Ho Te-chien, a Taiwanese singer who defected to China in 1983 and has been active in the student movement, urged the students to leave. "We're not afraid to die, but we've already lost too much blood," he said over a student loudspeaker.

After a verbal vote, the students agreed to depart. "If we don't leave now, they're going to fire on us. They just don't care," said one 22-year-old protester.

NBC News reported that a 33-foot-high replica of the Statue of Liberty, set up by students last week, was torn down.

The main streets leading to the Tiananmen, China's symbolic political center, were sealed. Thousands fled from the square, where hundreds of thousands of people had gathered to support students in the third week of a sit-in.

The assault came two weeks after Premier Li Peng declared martial law in Beijing and sent troops to the city. Hundreds of thousands of residents responded by blocking roads with trucks and their bodies.

In Kennebenkport, Me., President Bush said he deplored the action of Chinese troops.

"We have been urging and continue to urge nonviolence, restraint and dialogue. Tragically, another course has been chosen. Again, I urge a return to non-violent means for dealing with the current situation," he said.

The standoff between troops and protesters had been tense but largely peaceful for weeks, with soldiers seemingly reluctant or unable to move against the crowds until the first widespread violence broke out Saturday afternoon.

A doctor from the Fuxing Hospital in western Beijing, where troops began firing on people in the street, said the hospital had taken in 15 dead and so many wounded they had to be put in garages.

"There are people who have been shot in the head, chest, stomach, legs and eyes," said a nurse at Beijing Union Medical College, which reported 24 dead and hundreds injured.

Students React To Bloodshed In Beijing

in Beijing as they witnessed the Army sweep of Tiananmen Square.

"We are very disappointed and angry with the Chinese government," said Richard Leung, a protest organizer and student at the University of California-Los Angeles. "We urge the U.S. authorities to make every effort to support human rights and stop the bloodshed."

President Bush said in a statement from Kennebunkport, Maine, Saturday, "I deeply deplore the decision to use force against peaceful demonstrators and the consequent loss of life." He called for "nonviolence, restraint and dialogue."

It was early Sunday in Beijing, 13 hours ahead of the eastern United States, when Chinese troops stormed through masses of pro-democracy protesters in Tiananmen Square, shooting and beating hundreds of people. At least 500 were reported killed.

In St. Paul, about 250 Chinese students marched around the Minnesota Capitol. Wearing black armbands and green and white ribbons, a Chinese symbol of mourning, they bowed their heads in memory of the slain.

At a rally at Louisiana State University Medical Center, Gan Xia Ge, a 31-year-old graduate student, said, "I'm worried about my brother. The army is just shooting people. He may be dead."

"I'd like to be there with them, but I think we can also do something here in America," said Philip Lam, a Los Angeles demonstration organizer. "I hope we get people outside of China to support this movement, which is not for or against any political party, but just for democracy."

About a dozen organizers, most of them students and professionals from Hong Kong, distributed blue ribbons to passers-by at the Sun Yat Sen Memorial Statue in Los Angeles' Chinatown.

"The ribbons stand for freedom, dignity and hope for the students in China," said Leung.

An Iowa state senator who returned Friday from a three-week exchange program in China said that when his group of U.S. politicians met with the protesters they seemed to be bracing for confrontation.

"You could sense that there was an uneasiness," Sen. Paul Pate said. "They said they knew that there was a crackdown coming."

Judith Shapiro, a scholar who met husband Liang Heng in China during the 1970s and wrote two books about that country with him, said the violence created a serious potential for civil war.

"I think that until today many students and intellectuals believed that the Communist Party was genuinely trying to reform itself from within," Ms. Shapiro said.

The crackdown could badly damage China's ability to attract needed dollars through tourism, exports and investments, a professor said.

CBS Correspondent, Cameraman Held

By Larry Neumeister
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — A CBS News correspondent and cameraman were detained by the Chinese army while an NBC News crew had to dodge police and bullets during the bloody suppression of the protest in Beijing early Sunday.

It was not immediately clear whether any of the journalists were formally arrested or were being detained to prevent coverage of Chinese troops that stormed Tiananmen Square, killing and wounding scores of people.

"It's been very intense and tragic. They're seeing acts of heroism that I don't think anyone expects to see in a lifetime," Joseph Angotti, senior vice president of news for NBC, said of journalists at the scene.

"I've never heard the kind of strain in people's voices I've heard today. A lot of fear is coming through on the phone lines," he said.

Angotti said an NBC cameraman and sound man were unable to contact the network for more than four hours after they got caught in the chaos while recording events on the southern end of the square.

"They got trapped on one side of the square," Angotti said. "They literally had to go block by block taking cover in houses as they went along because police kept clearing the streets. They were shot at twice by police before they could get a couple of miles to the hotel."

Boy Rescued Saturday After Ordeal In Hopper Of Crushed Stone

"When I was down in there, it wasn't too fun, but when they started rescuing me and got some of the stuff out of my hair, it seemed sort of fun," Aaron said of his 1½-hour adventure.

Aaron said he was "pretty scared" when he first fell in but was in no pain and could breathe underneath the rock. He said the accident occurred when he was "standing there, and they had started up loading the truck and it just went down with me in it."

Aaron had ridden with to the company with his father, who was picking up concrete, said Skip Greene, vice president of the construction company.

"Nobody knows when the boy stepped in (the hopper)," he said.

Aaron was buried, his arms outstretched, in about seven feet of the rock, said Joe Maples Jr., chief of the Watauga County rescue squad.

"His head was under the gravel about 30 inches or so," Maples said.

Boone police Sgt. Johnny Reese, who was the first emergency person to arrive at the scene, said he was simply told someone had fallen.

"When I pulled up, I saw a man on top of a gravel pit, yelling at me that his son was underneath the gravel," Reese said. The only problem, he said, was there was "no sign there was anybody underneath the gravel."

Reese stretched his arm into the rock and used his hand to form an air pocket around the boy's face. Aaron remained conscious throughout the rescue operation and followed Reese's instructions, said the officer, who is also an emergency medical technician.

"I told him just to keep his mouth shut, keep it closed and just to breathe easily from where he was," said Reese, 30. Reese said he told the boy not to talk but the officer spoke continuously to him, calming him as workers dug.

Forming the air pocket was frustrating, he said, because the gravel kept caving in. "I would get to his head, but the gravel would gave back in," he said. "It was like I wasn't getting anywhere. Once, I did make the airway and it caved in on me again. I made several attempts to get to his face."

Reese used his arm as a guide to feed a tube supplying oxygen to the boy after other emergency personnel arrived.

Greene said the bin is about 14 feet high and was filled to about one foot from the top. "It was completely full when they (construction company workers) started this morning," he said.

A welder who was one of three employees at the concrete plant when the accident occurred cut small openings near the bottom of the bin to allow some of the 60 to 65 tons of rock to gradually escape. Emergency workers then dug around Aaron to his feet, Reese said.

The rescue workers tied three ropes around Bledsoe to hold him steady and to eventually pull him out.

Greene praised everyone's efforts but credited Reese with saving the boy's life.

"That's Gen. Reese," he said. "I know he's just a sergeant now but I'm promoting him to a general."

But Reese said Aaron was the real hero.

"He stayed calm and listened to everything I said," Reese said. "I explained to him why I was doing what I was doing."

"It's a good bunch of people there that really worked hard," he said.

Tom Bledsoe said his son had "few, little scratches on his forehead" but otherwise was fine.

"He's doing real good," Bledsoe said, adding that Aaron was watching cartoons.

But he said it's doubtful that Aaron, who often rode with his father to the construction company on Saturdays, will make any return visits in the immediate future.

But Aaron said it appeared that he was in little trouble for his escapade.

"Mostly, everybody's glad I'm OK," he said.

Reaction To Jim Wright's Decision Varies

J.B. Spilman, former chairman of the Democratic Party in Pitt County said, "I think short range" the Wright affair "might hurt a little bit."

But Spilman said, "The Republicans had (Vice President Spiro) Agnew and (President Richard) Nixon both resign" in the face of investigations over alleged wrongdoing. "In fact, the governor (Jim Martin) is inviting Nixon to North Carolina, so I think we'll (the Democratic Party) get over Jim Wright.

"I think they ought to hear him out. If he's wrong, he's wrong. If he's right, he's right."

Another Pitt party member, former party vice chairman D.D. Garrett, said, "I think he's done a good job and think really what has happened, the Congress is so busy picking at one another they are ceasing to do the job they were sent there to do. I don't think (Wright) was treated right. I think he has taken a whipping, really," Garrett said.

As for the problems facing the Democratic Party as a whole, Garrett said, "What I think is happening, they are reflecting a moral decay that is taking place in the country. People in high places are doing and getting away with things and it's a reflection on the way the country really is. The Democrats are just getting the rough end of it at this point in time."

Party member Janice Faulkner said Friday, "I watched the entire resignation speech (Wednesday) and an hour-long interview yesterday (Thursday) and he (Wright) seemed convinced he has violated no code or no law. And I think that he put an inordinate amount of refuting evidence into the record."

But Mrs. Faulkner, who has held local and state party leadership positions, said, "I agree with his decision to resign, because when you're under that kind of suspicion of wrongdoing, you're not an effective leader.

"In terms of the problems of the Democratic Party, they're many, and they don't seem to have immediate solutions," Mrs. Faulkner said. "If we're talking about the national level," Mrs. Faulkner said, "the important focus ought to be holding on to the majority in the House of Representatives and the problems of some members of the Congress are not going to make that easy."

Charles Horne, another active Pitt Democrat, said "I think Wright was correct in stepping down, just as I thought Nixon was right in getting out for the good of the nation and (former Attorney General) Edwin Meese was right in getting out ... leadership ought to step aside and let the issue be resolved."

Wright's resignation, Horne said, will allow "our nation to go on and build our congress back up" and allow it to operate "as it should."

According to Horne, while the Democrats in the House are in the majority, "the House is more than the Democratic majority. It's got to function, to enact proper legislation. It needs a leader that can keep it together and I believe Jim Wright could not do that under the present circumstances.

"There are a lot of accusations going around. There always will be in a two-party system," Horne said. "It is very easy to do that in politics ... pointing fingers without any fact behind it. I think some of that has been carried on.

"Sure, the Democrats have got problems. The Republicans have got problems in their party.

"It's our form of government ... constantly changing, shifting, though one way or another it makes our system work. It's certainly better than Communism ... the bureaucratic way of running Russia," Horne said.

Doctors Favor Label

Dr. Peter Hollis, an optometrist with the Optometric Eye Care Center, said, "There is absolutely no place for homemade saline solution."

The homemade solution is prepared with salt tablets and distilled water, according to Monroe. It was used by wearers of contact lenses because it was cheaper and it did not contain preservatives found in the commercial saline solutions that irritated the eyes of some people.

Monroe said amoebae, bacteria and fungi commonly cause ulcerative keratitis, which is an inflammation of the cornea. A particular ameoba, acanthamoeba, is specifically associated with the homemade saline, he said. It causes a certain corneal ulcer which occurs infrequently but is painful and extremely difficult to treat. It's effects are devastating, Monroe said.

The doctors agreed there is risk involved in any type of lens wear. They all had their preference of lens types.

Monroe still recommended the extended-wear, the disposables and the daily-wear lenses combined with meticulous care.

"I highly recommend the disposable lens," he said. "They are, so far, the best lenses in terms of comfort, vision and safety, with the proper care."

Bode put the daily-wear lenses at the top of his list, followed by disposables and extended-wear contacts.

Bode said he wears gas-permeable lenses and he considers them to be healthier and easier to maintain. Bode said gas permeable lenses are usually given to patients who have an astigmatism.

"The eye is supposed to be round, like a basketball, not like a football which is, basically, what an astigmatism is," he said. "The soft lens conforms to the shape of a ball, not to a football.

"The gas-permeable may take longer to become accustomed to, but they give sharper vision for those with astigmatisms," said Bode.

Hollis said he preferred the disposables and the daily-wear lenses, but does not specifically recommend the extended-wear lenses.

"I am not an advocate of extended-wear lenses," Hollis said. "The only patients of mine that still wear them are those who have worn them for years and have had no problems.

"They wear them on a weekly basis and I have them replaced every year, regardless of the appearance of the lense."

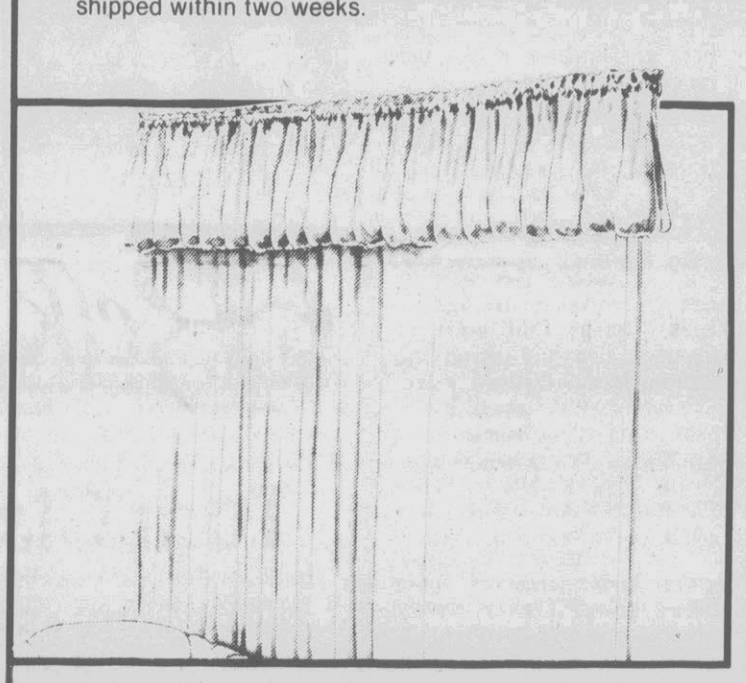

Hollis says he fits the disposable lenses frequently. "They are as safe as daily wear lenses, if not safer," he said.

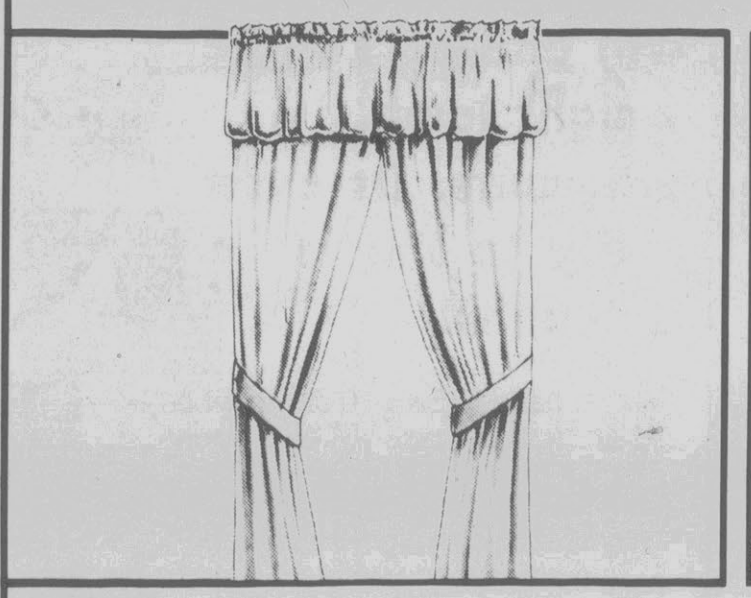

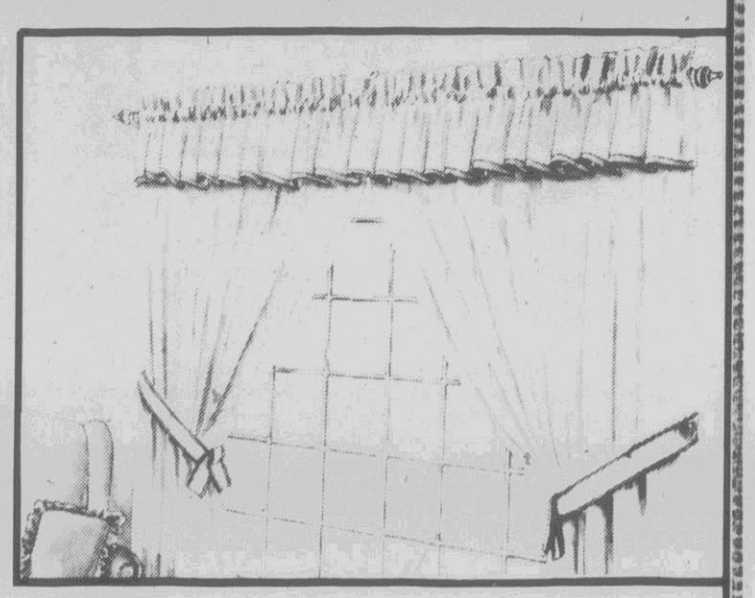

While each doctor had his own preference, the doctors interviewed said maintenance and care were the key factors in reducing the risk of infections.

"Lack of patient compliance, in cleansing and length of wear, is the major problem," said Hollis. "Once a person has a problem, they tend to ignore it."

King New PCAE President; Educators Present Check

The Pitt County Association of Educators installed a new president, made a check presentation and honored retirees and 25-year members at Friday night's annual banquet in Greenville.

Samuel King of Grifton took the oath as the association's 1989-90 president during installation ceremonies at the Ramada Inn. King is an algebra and geometry teacher at Ayden-Grifton High School.

The organization presented Kate Phillips, representing the Ronald McDonald House in Greenville, a check for $5,000 that will be used to furnish a room at the facility in memory of Mark Potter and Gail Bunch. Mark was the son of Josh and Alberta Potter, both Pitt County educators, and Mrs. Bunch was a teacher at Pactolus Elementary School.

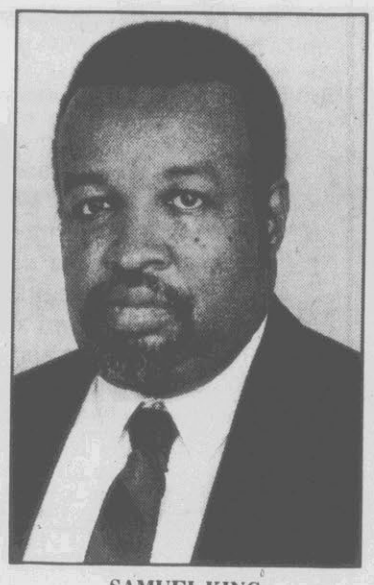

The check presentation ended a three-year drive to raise the money. The group secured the funds through contributions, bake sales and walk-a-thons, according to Ruby Jackson, 1988-89 president of the organization.

Mrs. Bunch's husband, Preston, and their three children attended the banquet.

Other officers installed Friday were: William "Rock" Morgan of Rose High School, president-elect; Vivian Covington, Farmville Central High School, secretary; LaVeta Weatherington, Wahl-Coates School, treasurer, and Donna Moore, Belvoir Elementary, assistant treasurer.

Ms. Jackson said that 56 people were in attendance at the annual banquet.

She said that there are more than 46,000 members in the N.C. Association of Educators and more than 600 members in the Pitt County association.

DARE Graduates Learn Lessons To Last Lifetime

By Cherie Evans
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

As the first courses of the Drug Abuse Resistance Education program are culminated with graduation activities this spring, law enforcement officers say the program is providing students with lessons to last a lifetime.

DARE officers across Pitt County are graduating fifth- and sixth-graders who have participated in a series of activities geared toward helping them resist using alcohol and drugs.

"The program has been wonderful," said E.C. Moore, DARE officer for the Farmville-area schools.

"I would not give it up," he said. "It means too much to me. Not only have the children learned, I've learned a lot."

The program helps the students learn how to resist peer pressure, tells them ways to say no to using drugs, and encourages them to feel good about themselves, Moore said.

Sgt. Mitchell Whaley, the DARE officer in Ayden, said the program has been positive.

"My students have all worked real hard," he said. "They've put forth a lot of effort. It's had a positive impact in the community as well as the schools."

"We've been involved in the regular DARE lessons which consisted of learning ways to say no to using drugs. We used skits and plays. We covered lessons which would help them to build their self-esteem, to help them stay healthy and to learn the alternatives to drug abuse," Whaley said.

Students in Greenville have been creating their own commercials that advertise ways to say no to drugs and alcohol, said Cynthia Sharpe, the DARE officer in the Greenville schools.

"I think it was very successful," said Jeffery Graham, DARE officer in Bethel.

In addition to participating in activities centered on dealing with peer pressure and self esteem, the students learned to develop a support system, he said.

Family, friends, teachers or "someone to give them support when they're down" are important, Graham said.

The DARE program is a 17-week course taught by trained law enforcement officers.

Sheriff's deputies and police officers approved for the program participate in two to three weeks of training. After training, each officer spends at least one day a week teaching fifth- and sixth-graders in each assigned school. They also visit other classes in the school, conduct faculty workshops and present programs to the school's parent group.

To implement the program, each municipality in Pitt County agreed to assign an individual to work with the local school personnel, to pay for officer training, lodging and meals, and for classroom materials needed for students and teachers.

Rick Fisher of the Pitt County Sheriff's Department is the DARE officer for schools in the county.

The scholarship was established by Joseph E. Pogue to recognize outstanding achievement among minority students in North Carolina.

Recipients are chosen based on superior academic work, leadership, citizenship and extracurricular activities. They have an average of 1,200 on the Scholastic Aptitude Test and rank in the top 3 percent of their class.

Ms. Bembrey is the granddaughter of Clarence Bembrey and the niece of Edith Outterbridge, both of Falkland.

She is involved in various activities at Farmville Central, including the National Honor Society, yearbook co-editor, math club, student government, Keywanette Club, Project Exodus and the Awards Committee for Education.

MONIQUE E. BEMBREY

Ms. Bembrey also participated in the 1987 Governor's School, was named in Who's Who and was chief marshal. She also is the inter-club chairman.

She plans to major in psychology at UNC-CH.

Council Sets Agenda

A study of the electrical system at City Hall will be one of the items to be considered by the Greenville City Council at a workshop session Monday at 6 p.m. in the third floor conference room of City Hall.

The recently completed study, conducted by the consulting firm of Dibble & Associates, was precipitated following two electrical power failures last summer.

At a council workshop on May 8, a representative of the consulting firm presented a report to the council along with several options for updating present system. Those options regarding system upgrading range in cost from $38,138 to $145,068.

In a May 30 memorandum to the council, City Manager Greg Knowles indicated that the city staff recommends the council select an option estimated by the consultant to cost $69,468.

Knowles also indicated in the memo that it is important a decision be made quickly regarding the matter for several reasons, including that "the city is exposed to a greater degree of potential liability as a result of having an inadequate electrical system serving the needs of the building."

Also to be considered by the council is a resolution opposing limitations on mortgage interest deductions and those items on the agenda of the council's regular monthly meeting Thursday at 7:30 p.m. at City Hall.

Scout Earns Honor

Chris Moore, 15, a rising freshman at D.H. Conley High School, has earned Scouting's God and Country Medal.

Moore, who holds the rank of Life Scout, gave 10 hours of community service as part of his medal project and was also required to work with and learn about the Bible, learn how the church works, and learn how church, faith and community work together.

The recipient, son of Mr. and Mrs. Ken Moore, has been in Scouting for four years and has earned 30 merit badges as he progresses to Eagle Scout. He is in the honors band and chorus at A.G. Cox School and made the all state festival chorus in Winston-Salem.

Moore attends Winterville Christian Church and is in the church choir.

Reflector Scholarship Awarded To A-G Senior

Cheryle Ann Groet, a senior at Ayden-Grifton High School, has been named as the recipient of The Daily Reflector Memorial Scholarship.

Ms. Groet, daughter of Julia O. Groet of Ayden, is active in the 4-H Horse Club and has played volleyball at Ayden-Grifton for four years. She plans to attend East Carolina University in the fall and hopes to transfer later to North Carolina State University to concentrate in its veterinary science program.

The scholarship is given in alternate years among the five Pitt County high schools and is awarded each year to a graduating senior. The $750 annual scholarship is given for four years of study.

Drought May Have Eased, But Food Prices Still Headed Up

By Steven P. Rosenfeld
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

DES MOINES, Iowa — May rains have eased farmers' worries about another drought and have lowered grain prices, but consumers can probably still expect the biggest rise in food prices in eight years, economists say.

"It's 200 percent better. Last year was grim," says Doug Miller, who farms 350 acres in St. Joseph County in north-central Indiana.

Generous spring rains provided a breather from drought in the Midwest and sent grain prices tumbling on commodity markets, but they haven't come close to replenishing parched soil deep down or washing out predictions for a food price increase of up to 7 percent.

The drought of '88 reduced corn yields 30 percent nationwide and soybean production 20 percent. Then, a dry winter, coupled with dust storms and sub-arctic freezes, devastated winter wheat production, with 39 percent of that crop now deemed either in poor or very poor shape as the harvest approaches.

Then came the rainy spring. Conditions have been so wet that planting has been delayed in such 1988 drought battlegrounds as Indiana and Ohio. And the rain ensured that seeds that had been planted got the chance to germinate.

"We're not desperate," says agronomist Garren Benson at Iowa State University. "The pressure is off for the time being."

Drought still plagues some parts of the country, "but with the rain we've had in the Corn Belt, we know it certainly isn't going to be like last year," says economist Ralph Parlett at the Economic Research Service of the U.S. Department of Agriculture.

The rains also have taken the edge off a drought-inspired rally in grain markets, where prices rise when a scarce supply is forecast and fall with each bit of good news from the fields. The rising dollar also has been a factor in depressing grain prices.

On the Chicago Board of Trade, contracts calling for September delivery of this summer's crop fell 9 percent for corn and almost 12 percent for soybeans between May 5 and Friday.

At the height of the 1988 drought, corn for September 1988 delivery reached $3.64 a bushel. On Friday, the September 1989 contract closed at $2.42¾. Soybeans peaked at $10.70 a bushel nearly a year ago, but wound up last week at $6.50¼.

But while the drought scare has diminished and commodity prices are retreating, economists are not rushing to rein in forecasts of rising prices at supermarkets and restaurants.

The USDA's Economic Research Service recently revised upward its forecast for the consumer price index for food to a climb of 4 percent to 7 percent in 1989. In November, it had predicted a 3 percent to 5 percent increase in 1989 food prices.

If inflation for food surpasses the 4.1 percent level of each of the past two years, it will hit the highest mark since the 7.8 percent level of 1981.

Parlett says drought aftereffects from 1988 are partly to blame. With rising costs for feed grain, egg production was cut back, pushing prices higher. Processed vegetable supplies also are tight because of the drought.

The drought's lingering effects on pastures in cattle country also are taking their toll on food prices, by boosting feed costs and forcing ranchers and farmers to reduce herds. The 99.5 million head of cattle in the United States as the year began was the lowest since 1961.

To help beef producers, the Agriculture Department on Friday announced steps to make some erosion-prone land available for grazing and hay cutting.

Factors unrelated to the drought that are contributing to higher food prices include strong consumer demand and rising energy costs, which increase processing and transportation expenses.

Sung Won Song, chief economist at the Norwest Corp. in Minneapolis, said May rains have not changed his inflation outlook.

"The drought outlook for this year is yet to be seen," Song said.

Many regions are still powder dry below the top inches of soil, he noted. Subsoil moisture is rated inadequate in at least 80 percent of Kansas and the Dakotas, more than 90 percent of northern Missouri, and virtually all of Iowa and Nebraska.

For corn and soybeans, June is a crucial month because it normally is one of the wettest times of the growing season. A dry June spells trouble in July and August, when such row crops are developing quickly and need plenty of moisture.

"We had a lot of rain in the spring. Now it's so dry, I keep planting, hoping it's going to rain," said former major league pitcher Jim "Catfish" Hunter, now a soybean farmer at Hertford, N.C. "We don't need 4 or 5 inches. We just need a little bit."

And in Kansas, rains were too little and too late to save much of the winter wheat crop. Central, north central and northeast parts of the state still are plagued with drought.

"A lot of people are thinking the drought is over," says Jack May, meteorologist in charge of the Topeka office of the National Weather Service. "In May we had normal precipitation, and one month of normal precipitation does not a drought break."

Bus-Car Accident

A school bus that had finished its route collided with a car Friday afternoon near Grifton, according to Trooper C.S. Raines. He said a car driven by Christopher Dale Jones of Route 3, Ayden, attempted to pass a car and the school bus as the bus was turning into a driveway. Both vehicles were headed east on rural paved road 1110, Raines said. The empty school bus was driven by Dorothy Hines of Route 1, Grifton. Raines said Jones was charged with driving while impaired in the accident. Jones was not injured, while Ms. Hines received minor injuries, the trooper said.

Activists Hold Rally

By Michael Mokrzycki
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

HAMPTON, N.H. — More than 4,000 anti-nuclear activists gathered Saturday on a beach within sight of the Seabrook nuclear power plant for a rally, prelude to a civil disobedience protest planned for Sunday.

Traffic lined a highway that runs by the seaside plant, and many of the cars sported anti-Seabrook signs. At Hampton Beach State Park, less than two miles from the plant, protesters heard speakers denounce the plant and promise to continue fighting to prevent it from ever operating commercially.

Longtime Seabrook opponent Steve Comley drew cheers when he told the gathering he had hired planes pulling anti-nuclear banners to fly over the beach Saturday and about 40 miles up the Maine coast to President Bush's home at Kennebunkport on Sunday. Bush was spending the weekend there.

"The nuclear industry and some of the people in Washington believe this fight is over," Comley said. "I'll tell you, we're just starting."

The anti-nuclear Clamshell Alliance is organizing the protests, which it hopes will be the biggest since May 1977, when 1,414 people were arrested outside Seabrook's gates. About 2,500 arrests have been made in protests at the plant since construction began in 1976.

Officials in neighboring Massachusetts also have sought to block the plant by refusing to cooperate with emergency evacuation planning.

Groups Differ On Tobacco Growers Funding

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WILMINGTON — A relatively new tobacco growers' association is once again at odds with North Carolina's largest farm organization over philosphical differences on tobacco policies.

Growers who disagreed with positions of the N.C. Farm Bureau Federation formed the Tobacco Growers Association of North Carolina in 1981, and the two groups occasionally have differed in their approaches to tobacco issues.

Tobacco Growers is currently blaming Farm Bureau for blocking a Senate vote last month on legislation that would change the way Tobacco Growers is funded.

The proposal pending in the Senate would allow Tobacco Growers to hold a referendum of its members to see if they are willing to pay an assessment to the organization, based on the amount of tobacco its members produce.

Currently, the group is supported by producers' membership fees and contributions from the industry.

"I was disappointeed at the Farm Bureau's actions, but not surprised," said the president of Tobacco Growers, John Vollmer, in a June newsletter published by the group.

"We have been on opposite sides on many issues in the past," Vollmer said.

John Parker, assistant to the president of Farm Bureau, declined to comment on the rift between the two organizations, the Wilmington Morning Star reported in Saturday's editions.

The differences began in the mid-1970s as a tobacco surplus began to build while there was a decline in quotas, the amount of tobacco that farmers are permitted to grow, said Carlton Blalock, executive vice president of Tobacco Growers.

Backers of Tobacco Growers wanted to lower price supports and increase quotas as a means of making U.S.-grown tobacco more competitive on world markets, Blalock said. The approach was intended to make more tobacco quotas available for farmers who rent them from land owners and to eliminate fierce competition among farmers seeking to grow the crop, he said.

Other growers, Blalock said, thought foreign customers had to buy U.S. tobacco because they were unable to get the quality elsewhere. Though the U.S. grows the highest quality tobacco, buyers can purchase a slightly lower quality at lower prices from other countries that grow flue-cured leaf, primarily Brazil and Zimbabwe.

"We took a different approach on tobacco reforms than they did," Blalock said of Farm Bureau, adding that that was the "first major difference in philosophy that surfaced."

Tobacco Growers put together reforms that were supported by Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., and were approved as part of the 1985 farm bill.

Nation's Largest Hurricane Drill Set

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — Emergency management experts in 38 North Carolina counties will participate in what they described as the nation's largest hurricane drill next week, but one key ingredient — residents — will be missing.

The exercise will involve all 18 of the state's coastal counties and a second, inland tier of 20 other counties, said Joseph F. Myers, director of the state Division of Emergency Management. The 1989 hurricane season opened Thursday and runs through Nov. 30.

"This exercise will be the largest exercise in the history of the country, that we are aware of," Myers said at a news conference in Raleigh. "The play will be limited in some counties and in some counties it will be a full-blown exercise."

The public will not be affected by the drill, he said, but about 300 local, state and federal emergency experts will react to a hurricane scenario the National Weather Service has developed and will begin broadcasting on Wednesday.

The ideal rehearsal would include coastal area residents, an estimated 80 percent of whom have never faced a hurricane, officials said.

"We'd really like to get the public involved," said Dennis M. Decker, another weather service meteorologist. "There is just no practical way to do it."

Instead, the public must be educated about the dangers and what action to take in the event of a storm, he said.

In some counties, shelters will open and police and state troopers will direct traffic at key intersections. Most of the action will involve decision-making by local and state officials who would have to determine what areas to evacuate and when, if an actual storm approached.

State experts will work out of the Emergency Operations Center in the basement of the Administration Building in Raleigh, coordinating efforts in the 38 counties.

Joe M. Pelissier, a weather service meteorologist at Raleigh-Durham International Airport, said county officials did not know what kind of situations the weather service had concocted. He said he could not discuss details before the exercise set for Wednesday, Thursday and Friday.

Training and hurricane-awareness programs are critical, the National Weather Service has said, because North Carolina faces a greater threat from hurricanes than any other state along the Eastern seaboard.

Since 1886, more storms have passed within 75 miles of the Outer Banks than along any other coastal segment of the Atlantic.

The state has not taken a hard, direct hit from a hurricane in several years, but forecasters said too much storm activity on the coast this summer could damage beachfronts and buildings left exposed by savage winter storms.

"One rather unique situation that we are faced with this year is that last winter the coastal sections of North Carolina, particularly north of Cape Hatteras, took a tremendous battering from storms," Decker said. "What that has done is made many coastal areas much more vulnerable to a storm surge in a hurricane."

Farmers Using Manure Testing Service

By David Reed
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BLACKSBURG, Va. — Farmers trying to cut commercial fertilizer costs while reducing agricultural pollution in the Chesapeake Bay and other waterways are taking advantage of Virginia Tech's free manure testing service.

Farmers like Dale Boitnott of Boones Mill, who found he had to use little or no commercial fertilizer after spreading manure from his cattle on his cornfields. But his Franklin County neighbors were snooty about the change in odor.

"A lot of people complained about the smell of the manure but they also complain about what goes into Smith Mountain Lake," Boitnott said. "I'd rather have the smell than the pollution."

Virginia Tech's manure testing service is a part of a regional effort to reduce the nitrogen and phosphorous, that flow into the Chesapeake by 40 percent. The nutrients, from cropland runoff, sewer systems and other sources, cause excessive algae growth and rob the water of oxygen.

Virginia's top environmental officials were briefed last week on the water quality programs of Tech and its extension service.

Changes in farming techniques, often stemming from technical assistance and financial incentives from the state, already has led to a 10 percent reduction in agricultural pollution in the Chesapeake, Roland Geddes, director of the Soil and Water Conservation Division, said.

Some farmers considered manure as a waste requiring disposal rather than a valuable resource, Eldridge Collins, an extension agricultural engineer, said. "They would spread it on the fields and then still spread the full complement of commercial fertilizer."

The manure testing service, which university officials say is unique in the country because it is free, began in 1987 with funding from the Chesapeake Bay Cleanup Program.

Craig Eddleton, manager of the Department of Agricultural Engineering's Water Quality Laboratory, said his friends rib him about testing manure. "They see it as an interesting line of work, I guess."

After a slow start, 800 farmers had their manure tested last year and more than 1,200 are expected to send in samples this year, Eddleton said.

"At first, people were hesitant. They're taking a chance, sort of. It's a new thing. They're used to commercial fertilizer and know just what it will do," Eddleton said.

Extension officials attempt to convince farmers that they can maintain or increase their yields by relying more on manure and at the same time increase water quality.

"The people who have worked with it, once they see how much money they can save, it can really sell," Collins said.

Farmers get a sample bottle from their extension agent and a questionnaire asking them what type of manure it is, what kind of crops they are going to grow, what was planted on the land in the past and how it was fertilized. The agent, after getting the results from Eddleton's lab, then works out a new fertilization plan with the farmer.

Boitnott said the benefits of manure are obvious when he walks to his cornfields and compares a test plot fertilized with just manure and a plot with commercial fertilizer.

"The manure helps out. The land is really loose," he said, adding that the ground without the organic fertilizer "is cracked open in half inches. It's as hard as a brick. The land which had manure on, no problem."

As for the problem with the odor, Boitnott chuckled and said, "It's just that country smell."

Student's Balloon With Note Traveled More Than 250 Miles

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

GREENSBORO (AP) — A 9-year-old Guilford County girl apparently caught ideal wind conditions when, on a whim, she released a balloon with a note attached to it that traveled more than 250 miles — to the beach.

Chessie Ferrell, a rising fourth-grader at Summerfield Elementary School, was given a balloon while at a Hewlett-Packard company picnic with her parents May 20. When Chessie got home, she attached a note to the balloon with a piece of string.

"Hi, I'm Chessie Ferrell," the note said. "If you find this balloon please report to Greensboro News." Then she let it go.

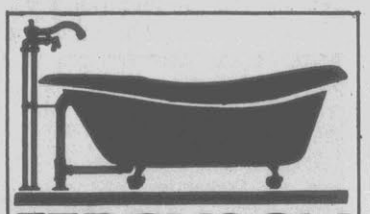

Two days later, Cindy Rhodes found the balloon while walking along Carova Beach collecting shells. The beach is located along the northern Outer Banks, about one mile from the Virginia state line. Rhodes sent the note, along with a letter, to the Greensboro News & Record.

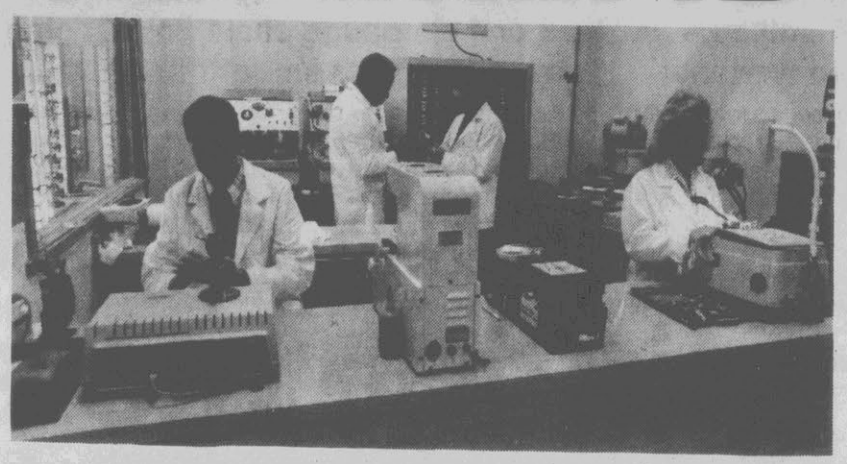

"I thought it popped in the trees," Chessie said when told where the balloon had been found. "I expected it would land in the neighbor's backyard."

"She just had this balloon, and I'm not sure she knew what to do with it," said Barbara Ferrell, Chessie's mother. "She didn't even make a big ritual about it. She came in from outside and said, 'I put my name on the balloon and let it go.'"

Ms. Rhodes, a real estate agent who lives at Carova Beach, said the area where she found the balloon is accessible only by four-wheel drive vehicles. The paved road ends in Corolla, about nine miles away.

"When it's nice, I like to get out and ride and look for shells," Ms. Rhodes said. "How on earth it got that far I'll never know."

Betsy Cochrane May Be Pondering Another 'First'

By John Flesher
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — During eight years as a member of the male-dominated General Assembly, state Sen. Betsy Cochrane has been something of a trailblazer.

Last month, she presided over the Senate during a floor session, becoming the first woman to wield the gavel in the upper chamber.

The experience was gratifying, she said later, but less so than her other milestones: first woman elected to the House from her district; first woman elected to the Senate from her district; first woman to hold a leadership post in either chamber. From 1985 through 1988, Mrs. Cochrane was minority leader of the House of Representatives — a post that gained visibility and clout during her tenure.

Six months into her first Senate term, some political insiders are speculating that she might seek another "first" in 1992 by running to become North Carolina's first female lieutenant governor.

The Associated Press

Sen. Betsy Cochrane ponders another political challenge

"I think Betsy would be an outstanding candidate," said Rep. Theresa Esposito, R-Forsyth. "She handled herself with quiet dignity but with tremendous skill as minority leader. ... She's a great role model."

Others question whether Mrs. Cochrane, relatively unknown outside her district, is enough of a heavyweight for a serious bid for one of the state's highest offices — and whether her gender would work against her.

"She's an exceptionally fine person," said Sen. Jim Johnson, R-Cabarrus. "My major concern would be whether the state is ready to have someone run for ... governor or lieutenant governor who is a lady. The Republican Party, I think, is still too conservative to accept that."

Mrs. Cochrane says she hasn't seriously considered a statewide campaign since 1984, when some party leaders approached her about running for lieutenant governor.

"It would have been a dream ticket for me, to run with Jim Martin," she said. "But I thought it was too soon. I'd only had two terms in the House."

In an interview last week, she paused thoughtfully when asked about taking the plunge in 1992, when Lt. Gov. Jim Gardner probably will be the GOP gubernatorial nominee.

"I guess my party would sure have to talk to me, and they'd have to back it up with some bucks," she said.

The response was typical of a woman who says she has "no master plan" for her political career and was "dragged kicking and screaming" into the arena.

Petite and attractive, Mrs. Cochrane looks schoolmarmish when wearing her large, round glasses. She blends ladylike charm with finely tempered steel, preferring conciliation but occasionally surprising opponents with displays of toughness.

"She reminds me very much of Margaret Thather," Johnson said. "She's a lady but she can kick your ass if she wants to."

Betsy Lane Cochrane was born in Randolph County (she won't say when but says she attended Asheboro High School in the late fifties). Her father was office manager of a hosiery mill and her mother a homemaker and community activist.

Influenced by her mother, young Betsy was a joiner — church, chorus, clubs, high school yearbook staff, cheerleader. In high school, she ran unsuccessfully for student body president — the first girl to seek the position.

She graduated from Meredith College and married Joe K. Cochrane, a businessman and mechanical engineer. They have two children.

Mrs. Cochrane taught kindergarten and fifth grade for 11 years. She joined civic organizations and got involved in politics, working for former Gov. Jim Holshouser's 1972 campaign and for Ronald Reagan in 1976.

A conservative from her youth, she registered Republican — a fact she hid from her staunchly Democratic father until 1976, when she was a delegate to the national GOP convention.

Fearing her dad would learn the truth from the newspaper, she telephoned him to break the news. "I thought he'd rather hear it from me."

Mrs. Cochrane says she didn't plan to seek office until the local GOP began fielding candidates for the 1980 legislative race. Party leaders came calling and "wouldn't take no for an answer."

Overcoming reluctance to be away from her family and concern about her qualifications — "I saw the Legislature as a place for lawyers, and I wasn't a lawyer" — she ran and won. She was re-elected in 1982, 1984 and 1986, leading the ticket each time.

Meanwhile, the GOP's fortunes were improving statewide. In the Reagan landslide year of 1984, 50 Republicans were elected to the 170-member General Assembly — a total that had been matched only once previously in the 20th Century. (Currently, there are 46 Republicans in the House and 13 in the Senate.)

In a three-way race, Mrs. Cochrane was elected House minority leader in 1985.

It was a job that came to resemble a stint in the diplomatic corps.

She was caught between an entrenched Democratic leadership unaccustomed to sharing power with Republicans and a feisty band of GOP freshman unwilling to be seen but not heard — and a new Republican governor, inexperienced in dealing with the Legislature, who infuriated the Democrats with verbal attacks.

Partisan clashes were frequent and fierce. And the outnumbered Republicans nearly always lost.

Mrs. Cochrane tried to strike a balance between accepting what Republicans viewed as second-class status and wasting energy on kamikaze missions.

"My philosophy all along was you had to pick your fights," she said. "We had some really bright, talented people who ... wanted every day to be World War II."

She won another two-year term as minority leader in 1987. Last year, she was elected to the seat vacated by former Sen. Bob Somers, R-Rowan, who retired.

Mrs. Cochrane, who enjoys gardening and reading historical novels in her sparse leisure time, says she'll ponder her political future this fall. Her first decision will be whether to seek re-election next year.

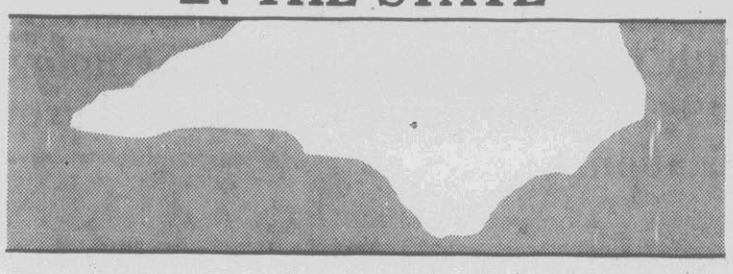

She'll also give some thought to 1992.

"I don't have this burning ambition" to seek statewide office, she said. But she says "the time is fast approaching" when women will be elected to some of the state's top jobs.

"It may be the first woman out won't win," she said. "But if we get out there with the right issues and ... do the grassroots work I've always done to get myself elected from a Democratic district, I don't know why not."

New Home For Gorillas

ASHEBORO, N.C. (AP) — North Carolina's first gorilla family should be roaming a new, 14,000-square-foot home adjacent to their present stomping grounds by early July, zoo officials say.

The $125,000 exhibit will feature lush vegetation, much of which the gorillas will be allowed to forage, a shallow stream, outdoor heaters and two overlooks where zoo-goers and apes can stand face-to-face, separated by thick glass.

The new exhibit, planned and built by the zoo design division, is funded by a grant to the N.C. Zoological Society from the Raleigh-region McDonald's Restaurants and the Ronald McDonald Children's Charities.

When zoo artisans have finished shaping, chiseling and painting, they will have used about 920,000 pounds of concrete to build the habitat's artificial rock boundary, said Les Schobert, general manager of the N.C. Zoological Park.

When Hope, Carlos and baby Kwanza feel like snacking, they can grab cucumbers, watermelons, radishes, green beans or collards from among the 2,500 plants of 56 species. When they get cold, they can huddle together at one of the overlooks, which are sheltered and provide radiant heat from above.

Child Abuser Sought

WILMINGTON (AP) — Police are looking for a Wilmington man accused of pouring hot grease on a 2-year-old child and bruising several areas of the child's body.

A warrant has been issued for the arrest of Albert Ellis, 23, who is charged with felony child abuse and child neglect. Ellis is the boyfriend of the child's mother, Betty Temony, a Wilmington police report said.

The child is listed in good condition at in the Jaycee Burn Center at North Carolina Memorial Hospital in Chapel Hill. Ms. Temoney reported to the Wilmington Police Department that the child suffered burns on his genitals, feet and ankles and bruises on his chest, stomach, thigh and buttocks.

Furniture Acquisitions

HIGH POINT (AP) — The purchase of six furniture manufacturers will vault High Point-based LADD Furniture Inc. into the ranks of the three largest U.S. furniture makers, officials say.

"We believe LADD's acquisition of these well-known furniture businesses will provide unusually attractive strategic benefits for LADD and its shareholders," LADD Chairman Don Hunziker said. "For example, the extensive gallery distribution network established by Pennsylvania House complements LADD's current distribution network."

Under the terms of the agreement, LADD will pay $202.5 million in cash and assume approximately $10.9 million of debt, Hunziker said. Maytag purchased the furniture businesses in January as part of its acquisition of Chicago Pacific Corp.

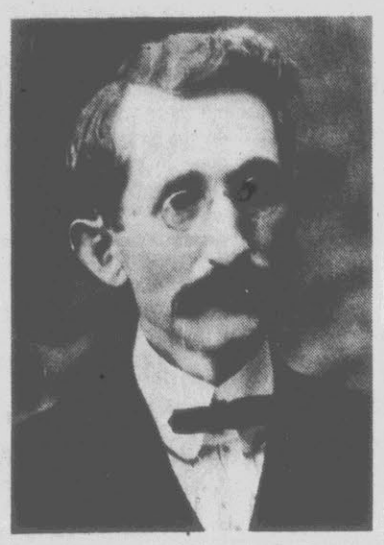

Maytag's furniture division includes six furniture manufacturing companies — Pennsylvania House, Gunlocke, Brown Jordan, Kittinger, McGuire and Charter Group — which serve the residential, office and contract furniture markets.

Our History

The Daily Reflector, a part of the life of Greenville and Pitt County for over one hundred years, has come a long way since December 10, 1894 when founder David Jordan Whichard issued the first daily newspaper in the history of Greenville. Since that time, it has outgrown four buildings and ten presses, and now employs close to one hundred people, both full and part-time. And, with the ever-growing population of Greenville and Pitt County, the circulation of the newspaper has increased to about 20,000 over the past ninety-five years.

Founder of The Daily Reflector, David Jordan Whichard

The Daily Reflector's history began when "L. Thomas and Company" began publication of The Express in 1877. One year later, two brothers, David Jordan Whichard and Julian R. Whichard, came to work for the company, with David later becoming editor at the young age of sixteen. In January of 1882, however, the brothers struck out on their own and began publishing The Eastern Reflector, a weekly newspaper for Pitt County. With his older brother moving away from Pitt County in 1885, David Jordan Whichard became the sole owner and publisher of The Reflector, and began daily publication on December 10, 1894 on a one-month trial basis. Realizing its success, The Daily Reflector continued to be published since that time.

David Jordan Whichard continued as editor and publisher of The Daily Reflector until July of 1919 when he sold it to his son, David Julian Whichard, who, at 94 years of age, is the present chairman of the board for the company. The younger Whichard continued to publish the newspaper, incorporating it in 1948 when his two sons, David Jordan Whichard II and John S. Whichard, now co-publishers of The Daily Reflector, began to assume management responsibilities. D. Jordan Whichard III, representing the fourth Whichard generation, is presently the general manager of The Daily Reflector, having joined the organization in 1985.

Since its very beginning, The Daily Reflector has continued to grow and change to meet the informational needs of its readers. Today is no different. Let us show you how we've changed for the better...all to serve you and our community.

Our Progress

1. The first Reflector Building was located on Pitt Street in Greenville from 1882 until 1896. Then called The Eastern Reflector, a weekly publication, the newspaper was printed in this building which the founder's mother originally used as a schoolhouse.

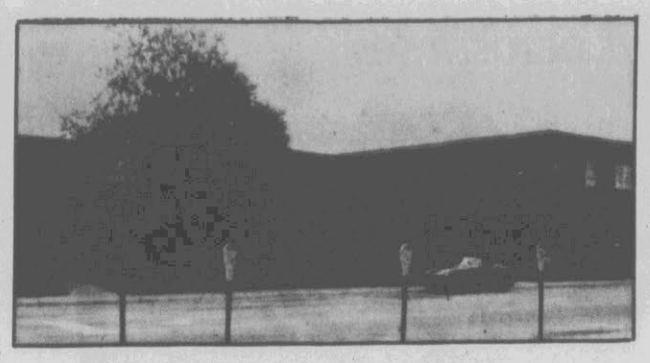

2. The second home of The Daily Reflector was in this building, located on Evans Street just south of Fifth Street in the vicinity of Five Points in Greenville. The newspaper was published in this location until 1900, when The Reflector moved to a newer facility.

3. In 1900, The Daily Reflector purchased a two-story building at the corner of Evans and Third Streets, where it remained until 1956. The move from Five Points was completed just in time for the January 1, 1901 edition to be printed in its new location. Growth and the addition of new equipment, however, prompted the design of a new building for future expansion.

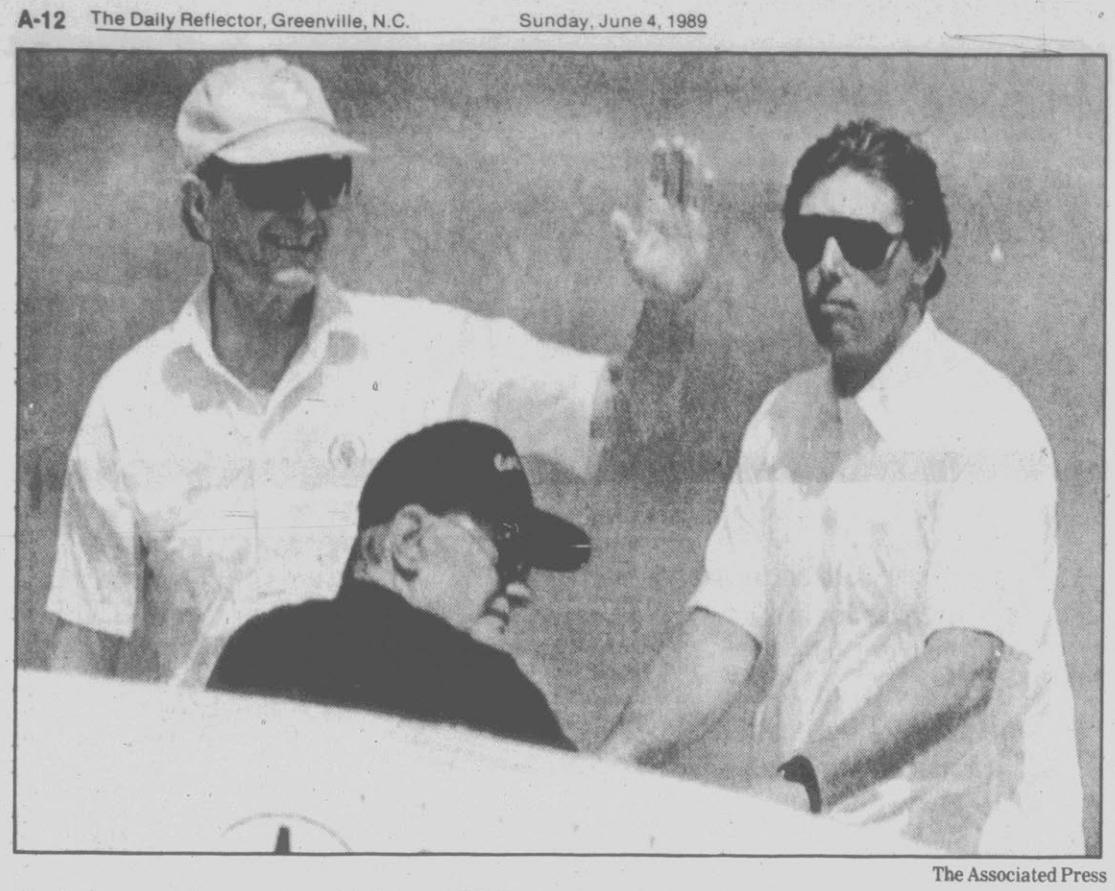

4. The last move for The Daily Reflector was in 1956, when the newest building was constructed at 209 Cotanche Street, its present location. This was the first facility that was actually designed for the newspaper and its needs, all the other locations being in buildings constructed for other purposes.

5. In 1969 and in 1978, additions were made to the building on Cotanche Street to accommodate the growth of the business and the addition of new printing equipment.

Bush Urges Non-Violence And Restraint In Beijing

By Terence Hunt
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

KENNEBUNKPORT, Maine — President Bush said Saturday he deeply deplored the military crackdown in China that resulted in the deaths of peaceful demonstrators and he urged Beijing's government to return to non-violent tactics in dealing with pro-democracy protestors.

"We have been urging and continue to urge non-violence, restraint," Bush said. "Tragically another course has been chosen."

"Again, I urge a return to non-violent means for dealing with the current situation," the president said. Bush made his remarks in a written statement issued from his vacation home here.

Bush, who arrived here Friday from a week-long European trip, did not make any public appearance but was kept abreast of developments in China by Robert Gates, his deputy national security adviser.

He also consulted by telephone with Secretary of State James A. Baker III in Washington.

"It is clear that the Chinese government has chosen to use force against Chinese citizens who were making a peaceful statement in favor of democracy. I deeply deplore the decision to use force against peaceful demonstrators and the consequent loss of life," Bush said.

The president said the United States and China had built a "constructive relationship" during the past 20 years through "great efforts by both sides."

The president added that the relationship had been beneficial to both nations. "I hope that China will rapidly return to the path of political and economic reform and conditions of stability so that this relationship, so important to both our peoples can continue its growth."

After returning from London on Friday, Bush and his wife Barbara spent the day at their seaside estate with their daughter Dorothy and her children, Sam and Ellie.

Robert Gates, Bush's deputy national security adviser and former deputy director of the CIA, was at Bush's compound, providing updates of the developments in Beijing.

In Washington, Secretary of State James A. Baker III called the action in China "extremely deplorable" and said use of excessive force "will disturb the United States government, and will disturb the American people, considerably."

After an early morning jog, Bush spent a quiet day with no public appearances. He had endured a night of fitful sleep because of jetlag.

He arranged a private afternoon meeting with Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell to brief him on the European trip, but neither planned any remarks afterward.

The Maine senator has criticized Bush as being too cautious and timid in dealing with initiatives from Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev, but that was before the president won widespread praise for a new U.S. proposal to reduce American and Soviet troops in Europe.

European leaders hailed Bush as seizing the initiative from the Soviet leader.

Dukakis Says He Regrets Letting Bush Rip His State

By Sonni Efron
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BOSTON — Gov. Michael S. Dukakis said Saturday his greatest regret in losing the presidential race was allowing George Bush to malign Massachusetts, and swore to "give the Republicans a dose of their own medicine."

Dukakis stopped just short of apologizing to the 4,000 Democrats gathered for the state party's annual convention. Though he has been under attack since coming home in defeat to face a mounting budget deficit, many of the delegates said no apology was needed.

"Fiorello LaGuardia, the late, great mayor of New York, used to say, 'When I make a mistake, it's a beaut,' " Dukakis told the crowd. "And I made some beauts in the course of the campaign.

"But what I regret most of all is that George Bush didn't only succeed in painting a distorted picture of Mike Dukakis and what I stood for. He also managed to put you down in the process," Dukakis said.

"He put down this great commonwealth and its people," he added. "And I let him get away with it — and I shouldn't have."

During the presidential race, the Bush campaign attacked Dukakis' environmental record by drawing attention to the pollution in Boston Harbor, and sought to discredit the economic "Massachusetts Miracle."

Delegates interrupted the speech repeatedly with applause. Some waved signs that read "Proud of Michael Dukakis."

Dukakis then lambasted the Republicans with caustic wit that supporters might have wished he'd inflicted on George Bush.

"There's a party whose idea of public safety is Seabrook! ... A party whose environmental hero is James Watt and whose program for cleaning up Boston Harbor was one boat ride last fall," he said.

"They'd probably make Frank Lorenzo secretary of labor," he added, earning a big laugh from labor delegates sporting hats and pins attacking the besieged Eastern Airlines owner.

Dukakis has said he will not run for re-election for governor next year, but hasn't ruled out another bid for the presidency in 1992. He promised to keep Massachusetts Democratic in 1990.

"Let's shake off the doubts and the disclaimers," he said. "Let's give the Republicans a dose of their own medicine."

Reaction to the speech was divided, with some saying Dukakis should have offered more than a tepid apology, and others maintaining an apology would only give "Duke-bashing" critics more ammunition.

"I think it was an important apology," said U.S. Rep. Chester Atkins, chairman of the state Democratic Party. Atkins said the governor's decision to "own up to the mistakes that have been made" was the first step to restoring credibility.

U.S. Rep. Barney Frank said while Dukakis acknowledged mistakes in his campaign, he did not take responsiblity for the deficit that mushroomed while he was away on the campaign trail.

"I think it would have been better to acknowledge error on the financial situation as well," Frank said.

While Dukakis was at the podium, however, some delegates were sizing up the floor, where three potential Democratic candidates for governor were trying to drum up support.

"I think the bashing's over," said state Rep. Susan Tucker, D-Andover. "He's on his way out and people recognize that. The emphasis is on who's going to replace him."

Mrs. Reagan Says White House Life Was Sometimes Frustrating

By Susanne M. Schafer
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Nancy Reagan reported Saturday that life after the White House has its drawbacks.

"In the White House, when you needed a plumber, you could always get one. In private life, you have to wait a little longer," Mrs. Reagan observed, with a rueful smile.

The former first lady, speaking publicly in Washington for the first time since she and President Reagan left for California more than four months ago, offered a few insights into her old and new lives at a Library of Congress and Random House forum on first ladies.

Looking back, Mrs. Reagan told the audience that although the position of first lady offers a tremendous platform, "ironically, in some ways, a first lady loses her freedom of speech.

"There were things I longed to say over those eight years," Mrs. Reagan said, evoking a laugh from the crowd. "But I couldn't. At times it wasn't appropriate, and at other times it would have further complicated by husband's life."

The former actress recalled that in her first stage role, she played a young woman that had been kidnapped and held in an attic, with only a chance to utter one line.

"There were times (in the White House) when I felt I was in the attic again," Mrs. Reagan said. "It was very frustrating."

Mrs. Reagan is wrapping up her memoirs, which will be published by Random House in the fall. While in Washington, the former first lady was also scheduled to appear at the American Booksellers Association to help tout her book.

Entitled, "My Turn," the former White House resident promised it would deal with the major controversies of her eight-year tenure, such as the renovation of the White House, the new "Nancy Reagan red" china, her use of astrology, her battles with chief of staff Donald Regan and her stormy relationship with Soviet first lady Raisa Gorbachev.

Asked if there were any scoops in the volume, she replied with a smile, "The title says it all."

The first lady said that while there is "a certain dignity" to holding silent, she has turned to writing a book for her own peace of mind, that of her children, and in order to help set the record straight.

"I felt I could start rebuilding a private life by writing about some things," she said.

But when asked if she'd ever offer her original, personal diaries to be donated to her husband's presidential library, a horrified look crossed Mrs. Reagan's face.

"I certainly hope not! I mean, there are some things" to be kept private, she responded, as the crowd erupted in chuckles and applause.

Town Hopes Arrest Lifts Cloud From 1971 Crime

By Daniel J. Wakin
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WESTFIELD, N.J. — Eighteen years after authorities say John E. List methodically shot his family to death, people here see an end to the tale that has haunted this quiet, wealthy suburb.

The former Sunday school teacher was arrested in Richmond, Va., last Thursday, where he had been living with a second wife of four years and working as an accountant.

Nearly two decades of lead-chasing in every state, Europe and South America were terminated by a simple anonymous tip following a broadcast of the case on the television show "America's Most Wanted."

Police Chief Anthony Scutti said Saturday the murders left a black mark on the town of 32,000, 25 miles from New York City. The arrest helped fade that mark.

"If they had a giant microphone in town, you would have heard a giant sigh of relief," Scutti said. When the chief went to an awards dinner the night of the arrest, he was greeted with a spontaneous standing ovation.

"I think that reflected the feeling of all of us," he said.

On Dec. 7, 1971, police who had been alerted by worried neighbors found the bodies of List's wife and three children lying on sleeping bags on the ballroom floor of the family's 18-room mansion. Cloths covered the faces of Helen, 45; Patricia, 16; John Jr. 15; and Frederick, 13. The body of List's 85-year-old mother, Alma, was found in an upstairs closet.

All five had been shot in the head. They apparently had been dead nearly a month. List, who had held jobs as an accountant and insurance salesman and was apparently beset by financial and family problems, had vanished.

In many ways, the List case worked its way into the town's consciousness. Teen-agers seeking excitement would cruise by the house, until it mysteriously burned down a year after the deaths. Almost every year, nwspapers would run articles on the crime's anniversary.

And people remembered.

Scutti, then a sergeant, recalled bringing Patricia List to the stationhouse late one night several months before her death. She had slipped out the window and was going to meet a friend.

"Lo and behold, he comes in at 2:30 in the morning dressed in a business suit to pick up his daughter," Scutti said. List, Scutti said, sometimes dressed the same way to mow his lawn.

Claudia Haller remembered being interviewed by List for a teaching job at the primary school connected with the Redeemer Lutheran Church.

The red-brick, slate-roofed church, where List taught Sunday school, was just about the only community tie he had. Church was a constant: He used pastors as references for jobs and a gun permit three weeks before the crime. List met his second wife at a Denver church function in 1977, authorities said. "I felt that he was a very intellectual man. He was just very calm and collected. You could see he was a very religious man, too," Mrs. Haller said. He was also a private man, given to eating lunch alone at work, said Westfield detective Lt. Bernard Tracy.

Now that one mystery — List's whereabouts — has been solved, another remains: why.

List left letters, as yet undisclosed, to his pastor and others explaining his actions. List reportedly believed his family was falling away from their religion and had to be killed for their own good.

A newspaper at the time included quotations from Brenda Taylor, Helen List's daughter by a previous husband who had died in the Korean War. Miss Taylor said the marriage with List was filled with tension because her mother was psychologically unstable and had a drinking problem.

List's Lutheran pastor in Rochester, N.Y., during the early 1960s said more tension was created by Mrs. List's comparison of the meek List with her first husband, "a strong military man."

Toward the end, Mrs. List was bedridden for months and List's financial problems were mounting. He was upset with his daughter's desire to become an actress and attachment to a young man considered in the "wrong crowd," said James Moran, police chief at the time.

The young man for several years left flowers at the family's grave in Fairview Cemetery, where a single headstone records List's wife and children.

"I hope it ends for him more than it does for us," said Mark Pletscher of Fanwood, who was two years behind John Jr. in school. "I hope he comes to grips with this whole thing."

Explosions Level Buildings At N.J. Gunpowder Plant

By Helen J. Simon
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ROXBURY TOWNSHIP, N.J. — Explosions leveled three buildings at a gunpowder plant Saturday, injuring at least 18 people, blowing out windows in nearby towns and shaking houses up to 13 miles away.

The 5 a.m. explosions at the Hercules Powder Inc. plant knocked down trees, tore off doors and damaged many homes and about 80 percent of the businesses in this north-central New Jersey township, about 40 miles west of New York City, officials said. The plant makes gunpowder for military and commercial uses.

"There's absolutely nothing there but dirt and it doesn't even look that there was a building there," said Val Mazzucca, who flew over the site in a helicopter several hours after the blast. "All of the trees are blown over on the sides. It looks like Mount St. Helens."

Three of about 40 buildings at the 6-square-mile complex were destroyed, four others had fire damage and several others were partly damaged, plant manager Dick Best said. He said he did not know the cause of the blast.

Salvatore Rappa said he was working inside the finishing area of the plant when he heard an explosion.

"All I know is that the lights flickered on and off throughout the whole building and in about 15 seconds there was the first explosion," Rappa said. "Everyone hit the deck and there was a major panic."

About 50 employees were working on the overnight shift, Best said. There apparently were no life-threatening injuries.

A supervisor for Dover General Hospital said 12 Hercules employees had been brought in. Nine of them and about half a dozen townspeople were treated and released and three employees were admitted, with injuries ranging from back pains to a concussion. All were in stable condition, said supervisor Barbara Treverrow. An explosion on Feb. 22, 1985, at the company's Sayerville plant, about 20 miles to the southwest, killed an employee and injured four other people.

Best said the material that exploded Sunday was a smokeless propellant used in shotgun shells.

He said that to limit damage, the plant is divided into compartments that each contain no more than 1,000 pounds of gunpowder. The gunpowder plant is located in a somewhat isolated area near several small towns.

"There are windows blown out throughout the area," said Sgt. Mike Hass, of the Randolph Police Department, about three miles from Roxbury Township.

"We're assisting, standing by at the businesses in terms of looting that may occur," Hass said.

Roxbury Fire Chief John Ward said a fire caused by the blast was put out by 8 a.m.

A resident of Flanders, about five miles away from the plant, said he was awakened by four loud explosions.

"It blew me right out of bed," said John Larson. "At 5:05 one went off, then three more went off. The blinds blew right out from the window."

Jay Brown, who lives half a mile from the plant, said: "We saw the flames go up and then we heard an explosion. The first one felt like an earthquake. The second one blew out the windows of my house and busted the garage door right off the frame."

Rudy Spagnola, a State Farm Insurance Co. agent with an office in a shopping center about a mile from the plant, said the explosion shook the blinds at his house in Morristown 13 miles away.

"I'm definitely upset. Who needs this?" Spagnola said. "It's lucky it wasn't a weekday."

First Coca-Cola Wall Sign Being Restored

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ATLANTA — The salesman-artist who painted the first Coca-Cola wall sign was no Rembrandt, but 95 years later his work is getting about as much attention from restorers as any masterpiece.

Preservationists Alison Free and Aggie Ferguson have put in a month of painstaking work on the side of Young Brothers Pharmacy in Cartersville, about 30 miles northwest of Atlanta, to bring to light what Atlanta-based Coca-Cola executives agree is the first of its kind.

Restoring the sign, which says "Drink Coca-Cola," was the idea of the pharmacy's owner, Dean Cox, who said townspeople had told him he had a historic treasure under layers of paint on the store's wall.

"I'd heard the rumor for years," Cox said, "and then I finally got confirmation from Coca-Cola that this was the first painted wall sign."

Coca-Cola representative Randy Donaldson said the original sign was painted in 1894 by salesman James Couden, who set the precedent for what later became a standard offer: Sell Coca-Cola in your shop and the company would paint your wall for free.

"Couden was a salesman first and painter next," Donaldson said Friday night, "so his sign is not quite up to specs. The letters are kind of squashed."

Ms. Free described them as "chunky" and said she found another feature that attests to Couden's amateur status as a painter.

"He left the 'I' out of drink," she said. "It looks like he left it out and then stuck it back in there. It's crammed up with the 'N'."

She and Miss Ferguson, who operate a restoration company called Signs of the Times, had a difficult time getting to the point where they could critique the sign. They said what they had thought would be a five-day job ended up taking almost 30.

The task was made difficult because they could not be sure that the Coca-Cola sign was the first paint put on the brick wall.

"If we had taken all the paint off (except the bottom layer) in the beginning, we could have lost the sign," Miss Ferguson said.

So they used heat guns and spatulas to chip away at a section of the wall that held a modern Coca-Cola sign. After going through layer after layer of Coca-Cola advertising, they found the original sign.

After the oldest Coca-Cola sign was exposed, the painters worked at matching the original colors. They plan to repaint it next week.

The extra work boosted the cost of the restoration project. Cox said the final bill will be $8,000 to $10,000. He is paying most of the tab, but Donaldson said Coca-Cola will pay part.

"I hope the state will put up a historical marker," Cox said. "But if not, I will or maybe Coca-Cola will."

Airport Security Beefed Up

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

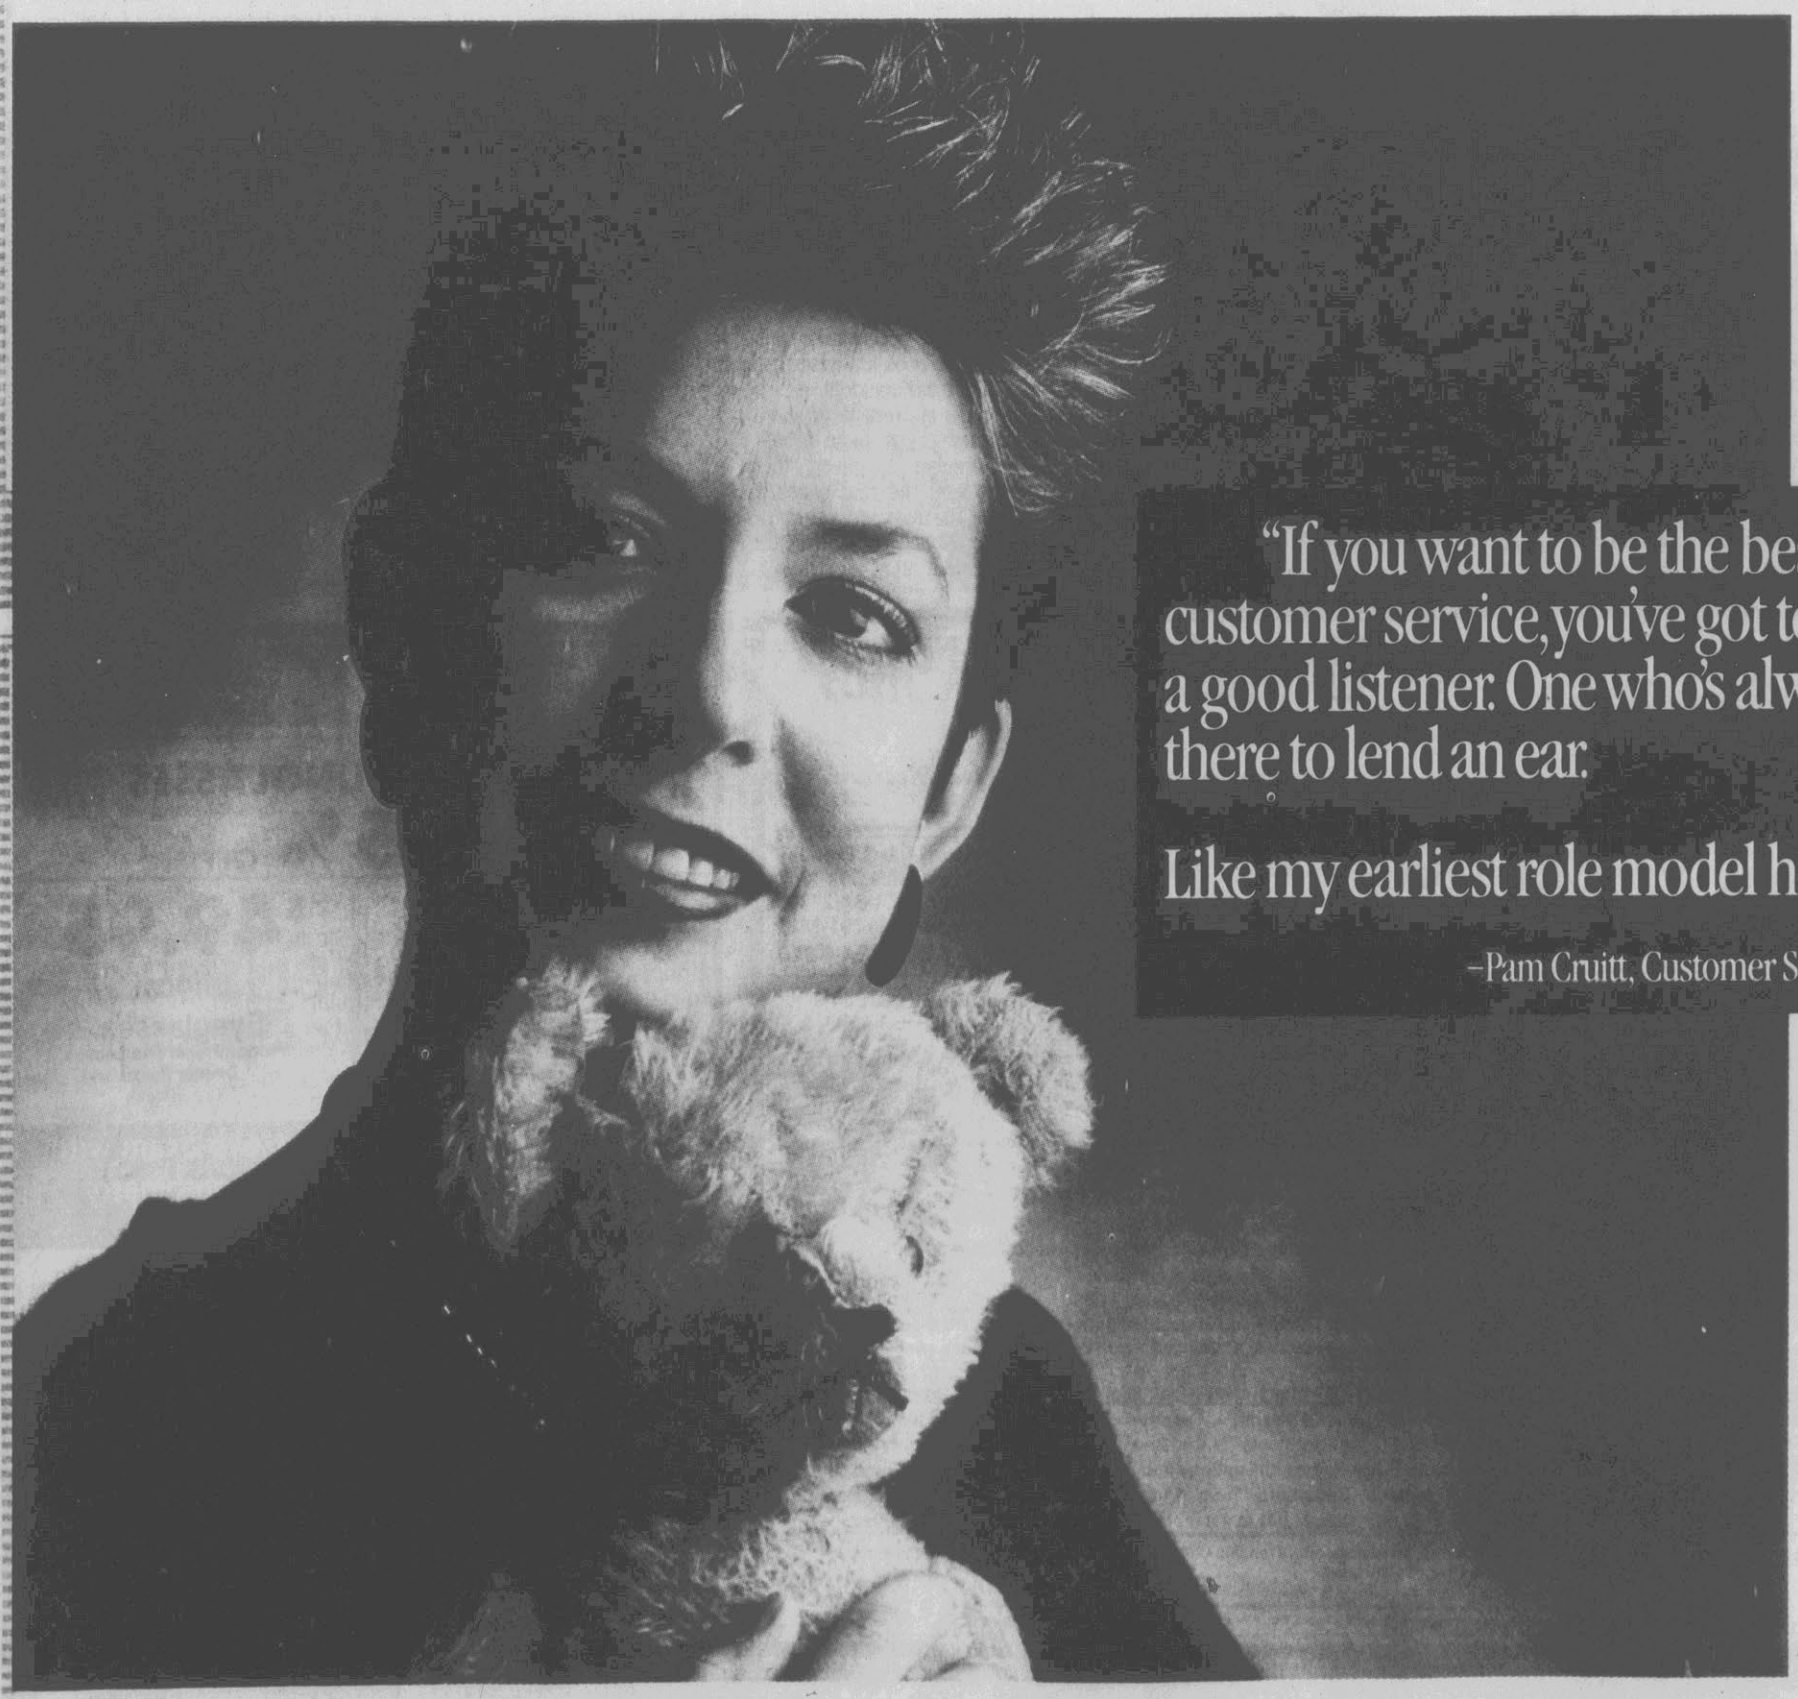

FRANKFURT, West Germany — Authorities have stepped up security at Frankfurt Airport after receiving indications that Middle East terrorists may be planning an attack, a spokesman said Saturday.

Christian Jalezke, spokesman for the Hesse state Interior Ministry, said the alert was linked to the sentencing of hijacker Mohammed Ali Hamadi. Hamadi, a Lebanese Shiite Moslem, was convicted of murder and air piracy and sentenced to life imprisonment on May 17 for hijacking a TWA airliner in June 1985. During the hijacking, U.S. Navy diver Robert Stethem was shot and killed and 39 Americans were held hostage for 17 days.

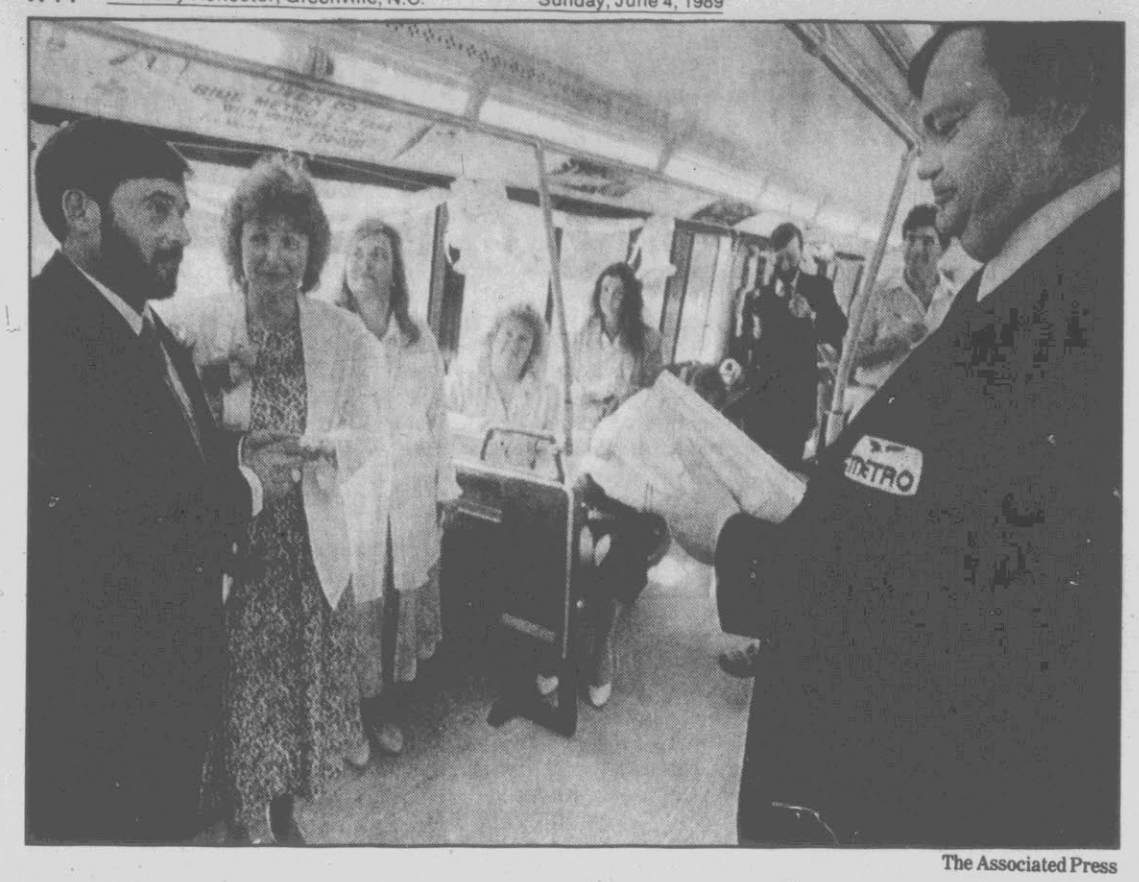

Less than a week after Hamadi's sentencing, authorities ordered all airports in the country to tighten security. Jalezke said the latest alert came after authorities received indications that a Middle East terrorist group he did not identify may be planning a retaliatory attack for Hamadi's sentencing.

City Bus Courtship Leads To Marriage — On The Bus

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PORTLAND, Maine — They met on the bus and became friends on the bus. So when it came to getting married Saturday, it seemed only natural that Claude Methot and Jan Cole should board the Metro to take their vows.

The couple left a wake of smiles and horn-honking motorists as their wedding bus cruised to a luncheon after the onboard ceremony. The bus was decked out with crepe paper, paper bells and strings of tin cans tied to the bumper. And, of course, a "Just Married" sign.

"Both of us are bus people," said Methot, 40, a paper company employee who lives in Portland. Methot said he and his bride became close friends a few months after they met while riding the bus to work together.

"There are some very nice people on the bus, but I never thought I'd meet anyone, and never thought I'd get married, on a bus," said the 41-year-old bride, who works as a salesperson. "It's one of the craziest things I've done in my life."

Metro General Manager Sarah deDoes said she was for the ceremony from the start. "Being a romantic myself, when they asked me, I thought it was just great," she said.

Asked about the couple's honeymoon plans, Methot said, "It won't be Greyhound, that's for sure. We're going to Bermuda in the fall — they have a good bus system there."

$12.1 Million Paid For Desk Sets World Furniture Record

By Catherine Crocker
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — A mahogany desk and bookcase made in the 1760s sold at auction Saturday for $12.1 million, setting a world record for a piece of furniture, Christie's auction house said.

The Chippendale secretary was bought by Harold Sack, a New York dealer, after a three-way bidding contest that lasted about a minute, said Dana Micucci, a spokeswoman for Christie's.

"It was a very dynamic event. People rushed up to Sack. And basically the sale stopped while they applauded him," she said.

The desk, made for Nicholas Brown of Rhode Island, is attributed to John Goddard, a renowned cabinetmaker from Newport, R.I. Nine known Goddard six-shell secretaries are known to exist.

The desk soars to a dramatic 113 inches. The upper section is divided into three blocked cupboard doors, each carved with a shell. The lower case has a slant lid blocked and carved with three shells.

"This particular piece is probably the consummate example of 18th century American furniture," said Dean Failey, head of Christie's American decorative arts department. "It is perhaps America's finest contribution in the history of furniture making."

The auction house had predicted that the desk would sell for $3 million to $5 million. The $12.1 million includes Christie's 10 percent commission.

The previous record for a piece of furniture was held by Marie Antoinette's console table, which sold for $2.97 million last November in London. The $12.1 million is the highest price paid for any art object other than a painting, according to the auction house.

Goddard made the desk for Brown and his wife, whom he married in 1762, Brown family correspondence indicates. The family made its fortune in shipping and commerce in Providence, R.I.

The desk remained in the Brown family until December 1988, when a descendant and namesake of the original owner, retired Capt. Nicholas Brown of Baltimore, donated it to the John Nicholas Brown Center for the Study of American Civilization in Providence.

The center sold the piece of furniture because it needed funds to repair its headquarters, the Nightingale-Brown House, where the family lived until 1983, said Robert P. Emlen, executive director of the center.

Lawyer Argues AWOL Sailor 'Dinosaur' From Another Era

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SAN FRANCISCO — A sailor who went absent without leave during the Vietnam War 20 years ago is a "dinosaur" from a different era, and should not be court-martialed, his attorney argued.

Charles Smith, who walked away from the Treasure Island base and his wife and child in 1969, was tracked down by the Navy last month.

Smith, 40, is charged with desertion and using marijuana. The drug charge was added because Smith tested positive for marijuana when he surrendered May 4, Navy officials said.

If court-martialed and convicted, Smith faces up to seven years in prison.

At a Friday hearing to determine whether Smith should be court-martialed or simply discharged, his attorney, Howard De Nike, said, "The man you see before you is sort of ... a dinosaur, someone from a different era."

When Smith went AWOL from the base near here, he was 19, naive and angry that his wife had been unfaithful, De Nike said.

Smith remarried, fathered five children and became a respected foreman at a paint company.

"Basically, we don't have the same person today that we had then," De Nike said, arguing that Smith should be granted the same discharge AWOL servicemen received under amnesty programs during the 1970s.

The Navy's prosecutor, Coast Guard Lt. Dennis Hoffman, argued that Smith's long absence without leave warranted strict punishment because it was "aggravating."

The presiding officer, Navy Cmdr. David Paul, said he would make a recommendation within two weeks to Smith's immediate superior at the base.

Heaney Elected Oxford's New Professor Of Poetry

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

OXFORD, England — Oxford graduates in their black academic robes gathered among the university's ancient spires on Saturday and elected Irish poet Seamus Heaney to the prestigious post of professor of poetry.

Heaney, an award-winning poet and favorite of the university's arts establishment, was born in Northern Ireland and lives in Dublin and the United States, where he is a professor at Harvard University. He is 50.

None of the poets was present when the announcement was made outside the university's divinity school.

Heaney, who won 316 of the 485 total votes cast Thursday and Saturday, had always been heavily favored for the professorship, one of the university's least arduous posts. It requires three lectures for each of its five years.

Heaney could not be reached for comment. Telephone calls to his office in Boston went unanswered, and his home telephone number was not listed.

The highly regarded and popular poet was nominated by Oxford novelist Dame Iris Murdoch, by three previous holders of the professorship and by Oxford's most influential English literature specialists.

In addition to his poetry, Heaney has published books of literary criticsm and has long experience teaching. A member of the Irish Academy of Letters, he became Boylston Professor of Rhetoric and Oratory at Harvard, in Cambridge, Massachusetts, in 1985.

Competition for the professorship, though dignified, has been intense.

Charles H. Sisson, a 75-year-old poet, author and translator was a notable contender and garnered 96 votes.

An attention-getting outsider was 30-year-old Rastafarian reggae poet Benjamin Zephaniah, who was a candidate for the post of writer in residence at Cambridge University's Trinity College in 1986 and only narrowly missed.

He had the backing of younger graduates but, as columnist Andrew Brown wrote in The Independent newspaper: "Dialect is notoriously difficult to transliterate in English ... (so) his work looks no more than silly on paper, but that is not how he is to be judged."

"He is said to be very impressive in live performance," Brown added.

Zephaniah won 60 votes.

He was followed by Duncan McCann, with nine votes. McCann lost to current professor Peter Levi five years ago.

McCann was so indignant at being referred to as "the barroom poet" because of his nomination by friends from The King's Arms in Oxford that some papers took to calling him "not the barroom poet."

In addition to the three lectures the poetry professor gives each year, he must judge three English poetry and essay competitions for students and give a public oration every other year.

From the establishment of the professorship in 1708 until 1972, the oration had to be delivered in Latin — a task which alone might merit the professor's annual stipend of $4,960.

Yearbooks Recalled

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CLEVELAND — The student yearbook at a Catholic high school was recalled after officials discovered the books contained sexual innuendo and insults directed at faculty members.

Seniors at St. Ignatius High School were told unless they returned their yearbooks, they could not go to graduation ceremonies Sunday, while underclassmen were told they could not advance to the next grade if they failed to return the books, said the Rev. Robert Welsh, school president.

Thirty-eight of the 800 books printed remained unaccounted for Friday night, Welsh said.

"There were unacceptable captions and unacceptable stories," Welsh said. "There were sexual references and there was also bad taste and rather insulting remarks to the faculty."

Welsh said six of eight seniors who worked on the yearbooks apologized to faculty and staff Friday afternoon. Some parents accompanied the students, he said.

"I would say the faculty accepted the apology. As a Catholic school we feel we are called to forgive those who ask for forgiveness," Welsh said.

He said no disciplinary action would be taken against the six students.

The Plain Dealer reported today the captions were apparently written after the yearbook's adviser had been injured in a car accident.

The yearbook staffers later showed the adviser phony page proofs, which the teacher approved, then the students sent the real pages to the publisher, the newspaper said.

Japan's Recruit Scandal

Japan's Governing Party Power: It's Strictly A Game Of Factions

By Eric Talmadge
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOKYO — New Prime Minister Sousuke Uno promises to reform the scandal-tainted government, but he faces the task of fixing a factious political system that not only helped cause his country's crisis but also put him in power.

Soon after Uno was chosen by the governing Liberal Democrats to replace outgoing Prime Minister Noboru Takeshita as party president, the former foreign minister promised "to carry forward political reforms with all my loyalty and strength."

He said the reforms include abolishing the Liberal Democrats' rival factions, which create formidable power blocs but force leaders to raise huge sums of money to support their followers' political activities.

That need for money is believed to have led the party leadership into seeking the quick profits and large donations offered by companies such as Recruit Co. The publishing conglomerate sold stock at cut-rate prices to politicians and bureaucrats it hoped to influence. They made handsome profits after the stock went public, and the scandal forced Takeshita out of office.

"I agree with those who say these are not times to be forever building factions," Uno told reporters Friday. But analysts say that exorcizing the party of its blocs would be a monumental task and perhaps an impossible one for Uno, the first president in the 34-year history of the Liberal Democratic Party to have no faction of his own to fall back on.

Nearly all legislators from the party are divided into six major factions — the largest headed by Takeshita — that have typically been allotted power in the party and Cabinet roughly equal to their number of seats in Parliament. Faction loyalty usually decides how individual lawmakers will vote on important issues.

Leading the second- and third-strongest factions are outgoing party Secretary General Shintaro Abe and former Finance Minister Kiichi Miyazawa, who have both been implicated in the Recruit scandal.

Though Uno stressed that he did not ask each faction to submit a "wish list" for posts in his Cabinet, an accepted party practice, the factional balance of power clearly figured in his appointments.

Joining Uno at the helm of the governing party are Keijiro Murata, of the Abe faction; Kiyoshi Mizuno, of the Miyazawa faction; and Ryutaro Hashimoto, of the Takeshita faction.

The new 21-member Cabinet, including Uno, has six members from Takeshita's faction, five from Miyazawa's, four each from Abe's and former Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone's and one each from smaller factions.

Uno resigned from the faction that was until Wednesday headed by Nakasone, whose 1982-87 tenure covered the period when the Recruit scandal developed. Deeply embroiled in the affair, Nakasone has given up leadership of his faction, the Liberal Democrats' fourth largest, and resigned from the party.

The faction is expected to remain intact under new leadership.

Concern remains over whether Uno will be independent of Takeshita and Nakasone, who will retain his seat in the lower house.

"He will be a Takeshita puppet, because that is where he will get his support," said political analyst and author Asao Yamaguchi. Yamaguchi said that without a faction of his own, Uno has no clear power base and will be forced to rely heavily on those who do.

"There has been no change at all in the basics, or the Liberal Democrats' attitude," Yamaguchi said. "The (party) is now and always will be a coalition of factions. They like it that way."

To end a rift in 1987, Nakasone handpicked Takeshita as his successor, and it was widely believed that Takeshita, in turn, promised to pass the reins on to Abe, his close friend. Abe, too tainted by Recruit money to replace Takeshita now, reportedly hopes to succeed Uno when the Recruit dust settles.

At a news conference on Saturday, Uno denied his government was only an interim one. "It is not an interim Cabinet, and I can tell you that it will be a Cabinet which will be highly appraised," he said.

The most pressing task for Uno will be to reverse low public approval ratings for his party before next month's elections for the upper house of parliament. The Liberal Democrats have controlled both houses of parliament since 1955, but political observers say the party could lose its hold on government as a result of the Recruit scandal.

Of the 17 politicians or aides involved in purchases of cut-rate stock offered by Recruit, 13 were Liberal Democrats.

Ousted Sudanese President Plotting Return To Power

By Dalia Baligh
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CAIRO, Egypt — Four years after he was ousted in a palace coup, Sudan's former president, Gaafar Nimeiri, spends his time in large, slightly decrepit villa, plotting to seize power again.

He has aged visibly and put on weight during the years as a political outcast in Cairo. The villa and the guards patrolling it with automatic weapons are courtesy of the Egyptian government, which granted Nimeiri political asylum after he was stranded in Cairo by his defense minister's coup.

Nimeiri had just returned from an aid-seeking visit to Washington on April 6, 1985 when Gen. Abdul-Rahman Swareddahab sided with civil disobedience campaigners to oust him.

Nimeiri had been in power 16 years.

During a rare interview Friday, the former strongman wore a white suit instead of the military uniform or traditional flowing white robes he favored as president of Africa's largest country.

He spoke of his anger at his defense minister's betrayal, his life as an exile, the "government of thieves" ruling his country and his advice to Sudanese supporters: "Take over the power."

The 59-year-old Nimeiri said he socializes mostly with Sudanese who live in Egypt or visit Cairo and has little contact with his Egyptian benefactors other than requesting renovations for the villa.

His kinky hair has turned almost totally white behind his receding hairline. His waistline has expanded into a pot belly.

Nimeiri claimed overwhelming support in Sudan and urged his countrymen to overthrow Prime Minister Sadek Mahdi, elected in 1986 in balloting overseen by Swareddahab's transitional military government.

"I have felt hurt by the news I get from Sudan and about the suffering of the Sudanese people," Nimeiri said.

"Those who were deceived now call for the regime of Gaafar Nimeiri. ... I have received numerous letters and people, all asking me to save Sudan after it has fallen in a deep abyss as they put it."

Sudan was near bankruptcy when Nimeiri was overthrown, and little has changed. Experts blame a succession of weak coalitions' reticence to undertake reforms and work decisively to end a civil war that began in 1983.

Sudanese appear disillusioned by Mahdi's lack of progress, and some have been heard to speak wistfully of the Nimeiri era, but there is no visible support for the ousted president on the streets.

Nimeiri insisted in the interview that the Sudan he ruled was among the world's most democratic and prosperous countries. But in 1985, thousands of Sudanese danced in the streets after demonstrations against high prices, Islamic law and Nimeiri's iron-fisted security policies led to the coup.

Similar demonstrations have rocked the country this year and, under pressure from the military, Mahdi was forced to form a broader-based coalition and prepare to negotiate with the rebels.

Mahdi's government has convicted several members of Nimeiri's military regime for corruption and has a standing request that Egypt return the field marshal for trial. President Hosni Mubarak has refused, invoking Egypt's long tradition of providing political asylum.

Thailand Tests Apples

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BANGKOK, Thailand — Thailand will test all apples imported into the country following the discovery that some apples from the United States and other countries contained excessive levels of the chemical Alar, a Thai Food and Drug Administration official said Saturday.

Pakdee Pothisiri said the agency has fixed the maximum safety limit of Alar, the trade name for daminozide and used to regulate the ripening of apples, at 20 parts per million. Those found to exceed this level will be taken off the market, he said.

The United States is the largest apple exporter to Thailand.

In Washington, Uniroyal Chemical Co. announced Friday that it was voluntarily halting domestic sales of the chemical because it wanted to calm consumer fears.

The Environmental Protection Agency has said it plans to ban the use of daminozide in food products because tests in laboratory animals have linked a byproduct of Alar with cancer after the chemical is heated. Final action on the proposed regulation is not expected until next year.

Some apples from the United States, Canada and Australia recently tested by health inspectors had a higher content of Alar than this level, Pothisiri said.

Local newspapers said apple sales in Thailand have recently dropped by 80 percent following warnings from the Public Health Ministry about apples contaminated with excessive Alar.

Solidarity Confident, Party Wary Before Elections

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WARSAW, Poland — Solidarity appeared confident Saturday on the eve of the freest elections in the East bloc in 42 years, while the Communist Party braced for a possible poor showing.

Poles, who have been living under the communist system since the end of World War II, will have their first chance to choose opposition candidates on Sunday when they elect a Senate in which Solidarity candidates are vying for all 100 seats.

Surveys projected that 80 percent of the nation's 27 million eligible voters would cast ballots. The national election commission says final results might not be available until Wednesday or Thursday.

Opposition representatives serve on the commissions conducting the elections, and Solidarity recruited more than 100,000 poll watchers to make sure the vote is honest.

"It may be treated as the first credible test of the real political geography of Poland," said Jacek Moskwa of the Solidarity Citizens Committee campaign.

At Solidarity headquarters Saturday, workers scrambled to identify polling places and set up an unofficial, semicomputerized vote tabulation system.

In the past, the government posted the location of polling places on apartment entrances, but Moskwa said the information had yet to be released.

"We want to fight for an end to the government policy of disinformation. ... We must fight to inform people where to go," he said.

Communist party leader Wojciech Jaruzelski, in a rare TV address Friday night, stressed accommodation and said the party would be interested in forming a "broad, post-election coalition."

Solidarity leader Lech Walesa, in an interview taped for broadcast Saturday night, urged restraint, saying too much emotion could frighten the other side and "destroy us."

Last-minute campaign skirmishes continued Saturday. A party spokesman accused Solidarity of rejecting a moratorium on campaigning Saturday and Sunday.

But the union denied there was such a proposal, and Solidarity candidates held rallies as rain drenched the city.

At election headquarters, several union supporters did a brisk business selling colorful Solidarity buttons, posters, and bumper stickers.

A large photo of Jane Fonda flashing a V for victory sign hung in one office.

While the Senate voting is fully democratic, the existing parliament — made up of one chamber called the Sejm — will remain in the control of the party by virtue of a deal authorities made with the Solidarity-led opposition on April 5.

Independent candidates were permitted to run for only 161, or 35 percent, of the 460 Sejm seats. The rest were reserved for candidates from the party and its allies.

But the party could end up with fewer seats than the 65 percent expected if voters reject the "national list" of 35 prominent politicians running unopposed. The list includes No. 2 in the party, Jozef Czyrek, Prime Minister Mieczyslaw F. Rakowski and Interior Minister Czeslaw Kiszczak.

If the national list candidates do not receive at least 50 percent of the vote, their seats will not be filled.

It a worst-case scenario for the party, it would have only a three-vote majority when the Sejm and Senate convene to choose a president next month. That would put the party at the mercy of increasingly independent coalition members.

Party leaders seemed to become aware of that possibility only in the last days of the campaign and began stressing that the national list candidates should be elected for the sake of the April agreement.

"When one appeals to cross out the national list, then the campaign becomes a confrontation," party Secretary Stanislaw Ciosek said Saturday in the party daily Trybuna Ludu. "I would like to point out that we are not calling for the rejection of the opposition candidates. We are saying: 'Pick the best.'"

Czyrek, in an interview, said rejection of the list would lead to a constitutional impasse that might have to be resolved in court, because the constitution says the Sejm should have 460 members.

As part of the April agreement between the government and the opposition, Solidarity regained legal status after a seven-year ban imposed during a martial law crackdown in December 1981.

The two sides have waged a vigorous campaign.

The opposition hit the campaign trail; started an election newspaper and posted election placards in virtually every city and village in Poland.

Western observers touring Solidarity's election headquarters appeared impressed by the campaign.

"It's a fascinating election — not a true parliamentary system, but nevertheless, the possibility of the beginning of a multiparty system," said Herbert Alexander, a political scientist from the University of Southern California.

Pope Appeals For Christian Unity And Morality In Iceland

By Edith M. Lederer
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

REYKJAVIK, Iceland — On a lava field where Christianity was proclaimed in Iceland nearly a thousand years ago, Pope John Paul II appealed Saturday for Christian unity and primacy of moral values.

The pope focused on the weakening of family life and reconciliation among Christians in this country where 2,300 of the 244,000 people are Roman Catholic, and where more people play than worship on Sundays.

Iceland was the second stop on the pope's five-nation visit to Scandinavia, a Lutheran stronghold where the 16th century Protesant Reformation swept away Catholicism and the current affluent lifestyle has eroded traditional values of the church.

He chose an ecumenical service at Thingvellir — where the world's oldest parliament was founded in 930 and Christianity was proclaimed the national religion over paganism in 1000 — to urge all Christians to "heal the wounds of division and re-establish unity."

He spoke in English peppered with a few words of Icelandic to the congregation of several hundred seated against a backdrop of spectacular snow-covered mountains:

"It is essential to recover an awareness of the primacy of moral values, to reflect on the ultimate meaning of life and its transcendent destiny ...

"The fact is that families are facing new and serious pressures which can only be met by a renewed and deeper respect for life and love."

Peter Sigurgeirsson, bishop of Icelanders, many people live together in Norway without getting married.

Police at Tromsoe detained four people — two fundamentalist women protesting ecumenism and two men criticizing the Vatican's human rights record.

When the pontiff arrived at Keflavik Airport for the 24-hour stop in Iceland, Prime Minister Steingrimur Hermannsson welcomed him "as a true servant of the God in whom we believe, regardless of the church to which we may belong."

Iceland and leader of the Lutheran church, said he didn't want "to belittle" issues dividing the Christian churches.

"But in actual fact, the importance of the things that separate dwindles when viewed in the light of that which unites. It is the faith in Christ which unites us," he said.

Some of Iceland's 17 women Lutheran ministers boycotted the service. The Rev. Hanna Maria Petursdottir said they were protesting the Catholic Church's refusal to allow women into the priesthood.

Bus Crash Kills 15

SUKKUR, Pakistan (AP) — A speeding bus full of wedding celebrants overturned on a curve near this southern Pakistani city, killing 15 people and injuring 25, officials said Saturday.

Police, speaking on the usual condition of anonymity, said the accident occurred early Friday when the driver apparently attempted to make the turn while traveling too fast.

The driver fled the scene and was being sought for questioning, officers added.

Thirteen people were instantly killed and two others died later, hospital officials said. All the victims, who reportedly belonged to the Panhwar tribe of Pakistan's southern Sindh province, were celebrating a wedding.

Test-Tube Potatoes

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — India scientists are experimenting with the test-tube potato in an effort to speed up production and develop virus-free seeds, United News of India reported today.

The Central Potato Research Institute in the Himalayan hill town of Simla has collected 500 potato genotypes to produce plants in vitro, the news agency said. It quoted an unnamed institute spokesman as saying potato germ plasm had been collected from plants in India and eight other countries since 1984.

Barrages Make Beirut Christian Area Ghost Town

By Donna Abu-Nasr
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

JOUNIEH, Lebanon — The once-bustling Christian enclave north of Beirut is a ghost town. Daily shelling by Syrian forces has driven most residents underground and sapped the life from the region once known as the Monte Carlo of the Middle East.

The barrages have eased since the Arab League called for a cease-fire May 11, but a gas shortage has paralyzed the region, adding to the problems of a Christian population outnumbered and outgunned by Syria and its allies.

"If it's not shelling, it's gas, and if it's not gas it's something else," said Samira Khater, a secretary.

An air of stupor hangs over the 310-square-mile enclave, home to about 1 million Christians.

There is hardly any traffic. Business is slow. Factories that survived 11 weeks of ferocious shelling limp along with skeleton staffs and whatever fuel they can scrounge.

Restaurants are lucky if they get 10 customers a day. Half the shops, hidden behind sandbags and earth-filled oildrums, are shuttered.

The night life that once throbbed in the clubs, bars and restaurants along the Mediterranean coastline is dead.

The famous Casino du Liban, where oil-rich sheiks and high rollers from around the world gambled, is closed.

It was a regular target for Syrian gunners who have battled the forces of Christian leader Gen. Michel Aoun since March 8 in some of the most savage battles of Lebanon's 14-year-old civil war.

The Syrians maintain their blockade of the Christian enclave, ringed on its landward sides by hostile Moslem forces.

Small cargo ships run the gauntlet of shellfire to bring in food and ammunition for the Christians, so there is no shortage of those items. But the blockade runners don't try bringing in gas.

Supermarkets bulge with imported goods — pink chamapagne, passion fruit tea, 10 brands of whisky, cookies, chocolates, hams, cheeses.

Fruit and vegetables are in short supply, but available for a price. Before the fighting, most produce came from Syrian-controlled areas. Now they are smuggled in at night by mule train from the north.

The enclave's fuel reserves went up in flames when a Syrian barrage blew up the seaside Dora depot in east Beirut two months ago.

The French, Lebanon's colonial rulers until 1943 and the Christians' traditional protector, shipped in 4,000 tons of fuel to reactivate closed power plants a few weeks ago.

But there's precious little gasoline around. Only about one-fifth of filling stations bother to open.

Police said two people have been killed and 10 wounded in gunfights over gas.

A worker at one filling station, who did not want to be identified, said it opens "only when the army can send a tank to maintain order."

"That's why people have to wait for days in front of the stations, and all they get in the end is 10 liters," a little more than two gallons, he said.

Gas costs about $3.50 for 5½ gallons, but on the black market the same amount is going for $50 — a month's wages for many Lebanese.

"Filling station owners pump out the gas from their tanks and sell it on the black market for 10 times the price," said one motorist.

Long lines of cars, some extending for a mile, sit outside many stations.

"At first, everyone used to wait for days in their cars, even during the shelling," grocer Samir Madi said. "Now we take turns to wait for a station to open.

"When it does, whoever's keeping vigil telephones everyone else and they all rush to the station."

The casualties and damage wrought by Aoun's "war of liberation" to drive the Syrians out of Lebanon has turned many Christians against the man many hail as their hero.

"Aoun has used the Christian people," said one young man who declined to be identified. "He's led them into a dark tunnel of hunger, death and siege because of his personal ambition to become president."

'Ed's Party' Product Of Good Intentions, But Some Lockerbie Citizens Disapprove

By Robert Barr
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOCKERBIE, Scotland — "Ed's Party," planned as a step toward getting on with life, brought some unwelcome notoriety Saturday to the town where Pan Am Flight 103 crashed.

"Let's party!" said Ed Blaus, 14, of Sicklerville, N.J., for whom the event was named.

To some relatives of the 270 people killed by the terrorist bomb that felled the Boeing 747 on Dec. 21, a party seemed inappropriate, especially because of Pan Am's involvement.

London's Daily Telegraph called it "a bizarre attempt to make up for the airliner disaster," leaving the town's leaders defensive Saturday.

"Given the circumstances of this town, the party is unusual, but it is being supported by the vast majority of the local people, not to cause distress or anguish but to prove to themselves and the world that whereas we mourn those who died, they are determined to repair their town, rebuild shattered lives and ensure a special and sacred place in their hearts for 270 people from 24 nations," said Alex McElroy, chairman the local Community Support agency.

Response was enthusiastic, with families and groups of children heading toward the football ground as early as 9 a.m. for a day of hamburgers, hot dogs, bagpipes and rock bands in the sun. All wore red "Ed's Party" badges to distinguish townspeople from reporters.

Pan Am was not represented.

Ed Blaus said he had written to the airline asking if Christmas presents could be sent to the children of Lockerbie, whose holiday was blighted by the disaster.

The first he heard of a party, he said, was when Pan Am invited him, his parents and three brothers to Lockerbie.

Moses Kungu, a Lockerbie pharmacist and regional councilor, said Pan Am raised the idea of a summer Christmas, but townspeople suggested the party instead.

"The idea is not Pan Am's. It is from the community," Kungu said.

Joe Horgan of West Point, Pa., a member of the Victims of Pan Am 103 group, was quoted by The Dumfries and Galloway Standard as saying, "It is good for them to have a party, but Pan Am's involvement is despicable. We see this purely as a public relations exercise on their part." Horgan's brother-in-law was among the victims.

The group said it would demonstrate Saturday afternoon outside Pan Am's New York headquarters.

Scottish police say they believe the plane was blown apart by a bomb hidden in a radio-cassette player in the hold.

Complaints from relatives led the Disney Organization to cancel plans to send Mickey Mouse to the party, and the Hebrew National company decided against supplying hot dogs.

"The party doesn't mean that we are going to forget what happened on Dec. 21, but everyone must remember that (it) is primarily for the children," said Elma Brockbank of Lockerbie.

"There is a feeling that perhaps the Americans haven't thought enough about our children — after all, they were looking forward to meeting Mickey and Minnie Mouse," she said.

Kungu said children between 8 and 14 were affected most by the tragedy, especially in the Rosebank neighborhood where the plane's engines jammed into the ground.

"Bodies were scattered all over the place. Children have seen that," he said.

Among special guests was Syracuse University football coach Dick McPherson. A number of Syracuse University students died in the bombing.

"Why am I here? People are telling me that we can help," said McPherson, who brought helmets and other American football equipment to show the children.

"If they ask you to do something, if you don't you're damned, and if you do perhaps you're damned as well," he said.

Alan Nicol, who brought his two children, said the party was a positive experience.

"It'll be a day for the children to remember and a day when everyone has got together on a happy occasion, when we can begin to put the past behind us," he said.

Tom Carson, who lived in the Sherwood Crescent area where 11 neighbors died, said: "We in town are very much in favor of this party."

He added: "Grief is a very individual thing. We grieved with the American families when they were over here."

Newspaper: Botha Says S. Africa Is Ready To End Discrimination

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BONN, West Germany — South African Foreign Minister Pik Botha says his government is eliminating racial discrimination and is ready to share power with the black majority, Welt am Sonntag newspaper reported Saturday.

"Apartheid has to be removed. The supremacy of whites must be ended," the conservative newspaper quoted Botha as saying in an interview.

But Botha said this must done slowly to avoid chaos, it said.

"We are in agreement among us on this. We find ourselves in a reform process and we accept that the supremacy of the whites has to come to an end. Our government is in the process of removing apartheid," Botha reportedly said.

Botha said his government must examine closely laws governing racially separate residential areas and the registration of people by race. "The racial discrimination that the blacks see in these laws has to be removed.

"I am not saying that this can be achieved simply from one day to another. If we lift these laws, a state of chaos would result. As far as the lifting of discriminating laws is concerned, the South African government has to make sure that the new situation is not worse than the one we are trying to remove," Botha was quoted as saying.

Botha was quoted as saying Western countries should give South Africa the time and chance to build and consolidate a system reflecting its specific situation.

Welt am Sonntag also quoted Botha as saying his government constantly considers freeing jailed black nationalist leader Nelson Mandela.

"We would be glad to release him, if it could happen in such a way that it would not cause renewed violence and conflicts," Botha was quoted as saying.

He also rejected talks with the African National Congress guerrilla movement or any other groups that use violence.

Mandela, the African National Congress leader, many times has refused Pretoria's offers of freedom because they are tied to a renunciation of violence.

Welt am Sonntag released the text of the interview in advance of its publication Sunday.

Open Eyes

Not The Time For Thinking Small

If the county commission thinks Pitt can wait another year for a new suit of clothes, they're wrong.

Its coat is tattered; its shoes too small. And if its elected officials can't see that a growing county has worn out its revenue wardrobe, their eyes are shut. At Monday's public hearing on the county's 1989-90 budget, the people have an opportunity to unseal their leaders' eyes. And the people know firsthand what the view with open eyes is like.

That view is of a county with burgeoning needs — needs that are side effects of vigorous expansion; needs that have stretched revenue to the limit and threaten to spoil Pitt's vision of progressive growth and a bright future.

The county must find the money, and it must find the money now — in 1989. That is a task requiring bold steps, but as the county commission approaches the wire on the 1989-90 budget, it is a job that can and should be accomplished. This is not the year for thinking small and living in the past.

Consider the imperative need for a new county jail. That $13 million project is not optional. The current facility, built in 1964 and never enlarged, is inadequate and beyond capacity. A temporary, expensive satellite jail sucks money out of county coffers — and still offenders are turned away. A community can't get tough on crime without a place to house criminals.

Consider the need for a new landfill. That's not optional either. The Allen Road dump will be full by 1993 and must be closed and capped. On the other hand, trash is going to keep coming. A new landfill will cost $5 million; to operate a new landfill, because of high-cost, high-tech environmental regulations, will be expensive.

Consider Pitt's overburdened and understaffed social service and health departments. Their financial requests aren't unreasonable. They're just asking the county for the manpower to adequately serve the community's greatest asset — its human resources. Squeezed by a federal government that for nearly a decade shifted funding responsibility for this task to local shoulders, these departments have reached a crisis stage.

Finally, consider the unquestionable needs of public school system and a community college stretching to reach excellence. Pitt County has quite an investment in education — 80 percent of its budget is devoted to it. But that amount has fallen far short in a community that is uncompromising on quality. Pitt County schools have $27 million in documented construction needs. Pitt Community College has $25 million in building needs. These aren't just wish lists. They are projects that can tangibly improve public education.

Tax increases and bond issues are the kind of issues elected officials talk about in hushed voices, usually out of earshot of their constituents. Those issues make the short-sighted squeamish, but they make those with vision — those leaders who know when and how they should be used — strong.

The county's needs can't be met in one year. That would not be reasonable or feasible. But if they are to be addressed at all, the solution must begin in 1989. The old suit just won't last another year. Growth just keeps on ripping the seams.

A Champion

Pepper's Greatest Honor In Life

The elderly, the poor and the disadvantaged have lost a long-time champion with the death of Rep. Claude Pepper.

In death he was accorded the nation's highest honor — to lie in state in the Capitol Rotunda. His greatest achievement, however, is to be remembered as one who fought for a better life for those Americans who have little.

As a member of the U.S. Senate in depression years he helped shape the social legislation of the time — Social Security, minimum wage and medical assistance for the elderly and handicapped. After his return to Congress as a member of the House he fought against cuts in Social Security and, as an elderly citizen himself, championed the rights of the elderly.

Pepper was one of the first in the Senate to perceive the threat of Adolf Hitler and cast early unpopular votes for aid to the Allies. Later the country would join overwhelmingly in opposing Hitler in war.

Rep. Pepper was a grand old man of Congress in recent years. It was his service in the senate, however, years before many Americans were born, that helped change the nation to the modern society it is.

Rest Assured There Will Be News

Sunday Morning Notes

You can tell when its summer in any newspaper office.

Summer officially begins when editors and reporters begin to complain about the dearth of news.

The newsman's summer hasn't quite yet begun. There is still high school graduations, municipal and county budgets ... and don't forget that the State Legislature is still meeting in Raleigh.

On the other hand, the universities and colleges have graduated and some other news making activities have hibernated for the summer.

Pretty soon all the budgets will be made, school will be out and public officials will be scarcer than hen's teeth as they use up their accumulated vacation time.

Now news people don't make up news during slack times. Rather they work on what we call feature stories and also develop those stories we've wanted to do, but lacked the time during the winter and spring months.

Thus in the dailies most of us read you won't see stories like, "Eighty-One Year Old Woman Gives Birth to Two Headed Baby" or "Prehistoric Monster Roams Earth After Earthquake Release."

Surprisingly there is news in the summer, even though government goes into a slow mode after budgets are made and school dismisses.

Weather and tragedy never take a holiday. Thus during the summer there is always the chance of storms, including tornadoes and even hurricanes in this area.

And of course the wrecks and fires occur no matter what.

The condition of farm crops is critical to our economy and readers can count on reports on the condition of tobacco at any given time during the growing season.

And there's Summer Theater, Sunday in the Park, July 4 and a number of other summer activities which will make the news.

In sports, college and high school football, basketball and spring sports are replaced locally by summer ball leagues. To us it's all important. And never fear, football practice will begin long before summer leaves us.

Well, rest assured we'll have enough material to fill up the papers through the summer months ... but sometimes a story about a human who was raised by bears in the deepest swamps of eastern North Carolina sure would come in handy.

Democrats' Solution Is On Capitol Hill

David Broder

LONDON — The Democrats have lost more, and gained more, in the forced overhaul of their House leadership than even they may know.

The imminent departure of Speaker Jim Wright (D-Texas) and Majority Whip Tony Coelho (D-Calif.) takes out of action the two men who, probably more than any others, have provided backbone for the opposition party's policies and politics in this decade. Without exonerating them for the private financial dealings which cost them their jobs, a reckoning of the political consequences has to begin by acknowledging what they furnished their party besides embarrassment.

Wright was a strong Speaker (and before that a capable Majority Leader) whose personal tenacity and embedded political beliefs gave a desperately needed sense of cohesion and discipline to a band of legislators often on the verge of a rout. When Ronald Reagan was riding high, a great many panicky House Democrats sought to survive politically by camouflaging themselves in conservative clothes.

Wright fought that cowardly reflex, at least as hard as then-Speaker Tip O'Neill — and at greater risk. It was easier to buck Reagan from a Cambridge, Mass., seat, as O'Neill did, than from Wright's perch in Fort Worth.

When Wright became Speaker in 1987, he moved aggressively to put a Democratic stamp on a surprisingly successful legislative program. It included an overhaul of the basic welfare law, the biggest expansion of Medicare in 23 years to cover "catastophic" illnesses, strengthening of two major civil-rights statutes, of programs for the homeless, drug addicts and victims of AIDS and new protections for workers facing mass layoffs.

While Wright was providing much of the inside leadership for the House Democrats, Coelho was marshaling the outside resources. At the same time Reagan took over the White House, the younger Californian took over the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee. He made that largely moribund operation a modern, efficient political machine, raking in money from political-action committees and less self-interested sources and grinding out commercials and propaganda for his candidates.

At a time when there was serious speculation that a Southern political realignment could deliver control of the House to the GOP, Wright and Coelho (who were never close personally) pooled their forces in 1985 to win a crucial special-election victory for the Democrats in east Texas. That event, almost as much as the 1986 Democratic recapture of the Senate, turned the tide of the national political struggle in the 1980s, and brought the Democrats to the close of the decade as a viable political force.

What is notable about the likely new House Democratic leadership of Rep. Thomas S. Foley (D-Wash.) as Speaker and Rep. Richard Gephardt (D-Mo.) as Majority Leader is its demonstrated ability to play the outside game as well as congressional cloakroom politics. Foley is a man of immense charm and high intelligence, probably the Democrats' most at-ease television performer since John F. Kennedy. Few American politicians are better known or more admired by his peers in Japan and Western Europe, where Foley has traveled for years.

Gephardt made a creditable debut on the national scene as a 1988 presidential contender. His energy and organizational skill and occasional eloquence almost compensated for his shortage of funds and too-frequent switches of themes. Though Foley supported Gephardt's bid for the nomination, they have sharp differences in such policy areas as trade and farm policy, where the former is aristocratically disdainful of Gephardt's populist quick-fix proposals.

It remains to be seen how well they will work together, or whether the consensus-seeking Foley and the collegial Gephardt will show the stomach for the tough political fights on which Wright and Coelho positively thrived.

But one thing is clear. The Democrats are in a rare position. For the first time in the television era, the opposition party will be led on both sides of the Capitol by men whose skills could translate easily into the wider world of presidential politics.

The new Senate Majority Leader, George Mitchell (D-Maine), already enjoys a national television following from his commanding performance as a member of the Iran-contra investigating committee in the summer of 1987. Previously, Mitchell had demonstrated Coelho-like skills as the principal national fund-raiser for the 1986 campaign that returned the Democrats to control of the Senate. Now he appears steadily more confident in the Majority Leader's role he assumed last January.

But for a party which seems notably short of national figures among its governors and mayors, it is at least a solace — and perhaps a solution — to be able to look to Capitol Hill. If no star falls on Iowa or New Hampshire in 1992, some Democrats may ask: Why not let our leaders lead?

Past Acceptance & Resistance, On Toward Building Bridges

William Raspberry

WASHINGTON — Anyone who has worked with a large organization has seen the types. One woman will play her gender stereotype to perfection: deferring to male coworkers, taking little offense in their offhanded sexism, and trying hard to "fit in" in a situation that routinely undervalues her potential.

Another will be forever reacting to unintended slights, quick to point out the sexism she sees at every hand, refusing to "let them get away with it." And a third, while clearly aware of the sexism around her, will find a way to have her contributions taken seriously as she climbs the company ladder.

The same patterns manifest themselves among racial and ethnic minorities. Some will play their assigned ethnic roles, others are forever on some civil-rights crusade or another, and still others seem able to surmount the endemic racism.

What is happening? Is it personality, upbringing, social sensitivity or mere pragmatism that leads different players to react so differently to identical circumstances?

One group of researchers — William Cross, Rita Hardiman, Gerald Jackson and Rita Jackson — has concluded that our reactions are determined by where we happen to be in our development of social-group identity. (I have not seen their work, only a brief summary in a year-old issue of the Training and Development Journal, from which the quotations in this piece are taken.)

These researchers list five stages of development:

•NaiveNo Social Consciousness. This stage, occupied solely by small children, is characterized by a near-total absence of consciousness as to racial, ethnic or gender-group membership.

•Acceptance. In this stage, individuals accept the socially assigned roles of their group, including the positive and negative stereotypes.

"Males at this stage would support male dominance, and females at this stage would accept their fate as second-class persons in a male-dominated world. White males in this stage have great difficulty in working with minorities and females in anything other than subordinate or stereotypic roles....Minorities and females at this stage are unlikely to challenge racism and sexism and are more likely to want to assimilate into the (prevailing) culture defined by males."

•Resistance. This stage, largely a reaction against the second stage, is characterized by a heightened sensitivity to racism and sexism, whether in one's own attitudes and behaviors, on the job, or in the general environment.

"Because they frequently challenge racist and sexist attitudes and practices in the workplace, racial minorities and women at this stage of development are often termed 'hostile,' 'militant,' or 'oversensitive' to issues of oppression. Similarly, white males also go through a stage of resistance where they begin to be aware of and sensitive to racism and sexism which, in the extreme, can lead to a 'save the world' complex."

•Redefinition. In this fourth stage, members of various social groups redefine themselves in ways that transcend the negative stereotypes they formerly either embraced or overreacted against.

•Building Bridges. Those who reach this stage of social-group identity look for ways to build bridges between themselves and the people and organizations around them.

"Rather than acting as barriers against communication, the new identities are open to diverse and multicultural social discourse, especially in the workplace."

The Training and Development Journal article focuses on the hot new topic in American industry: workplace diversity. But the implications of the stages seem to apply equally well to social relationships.

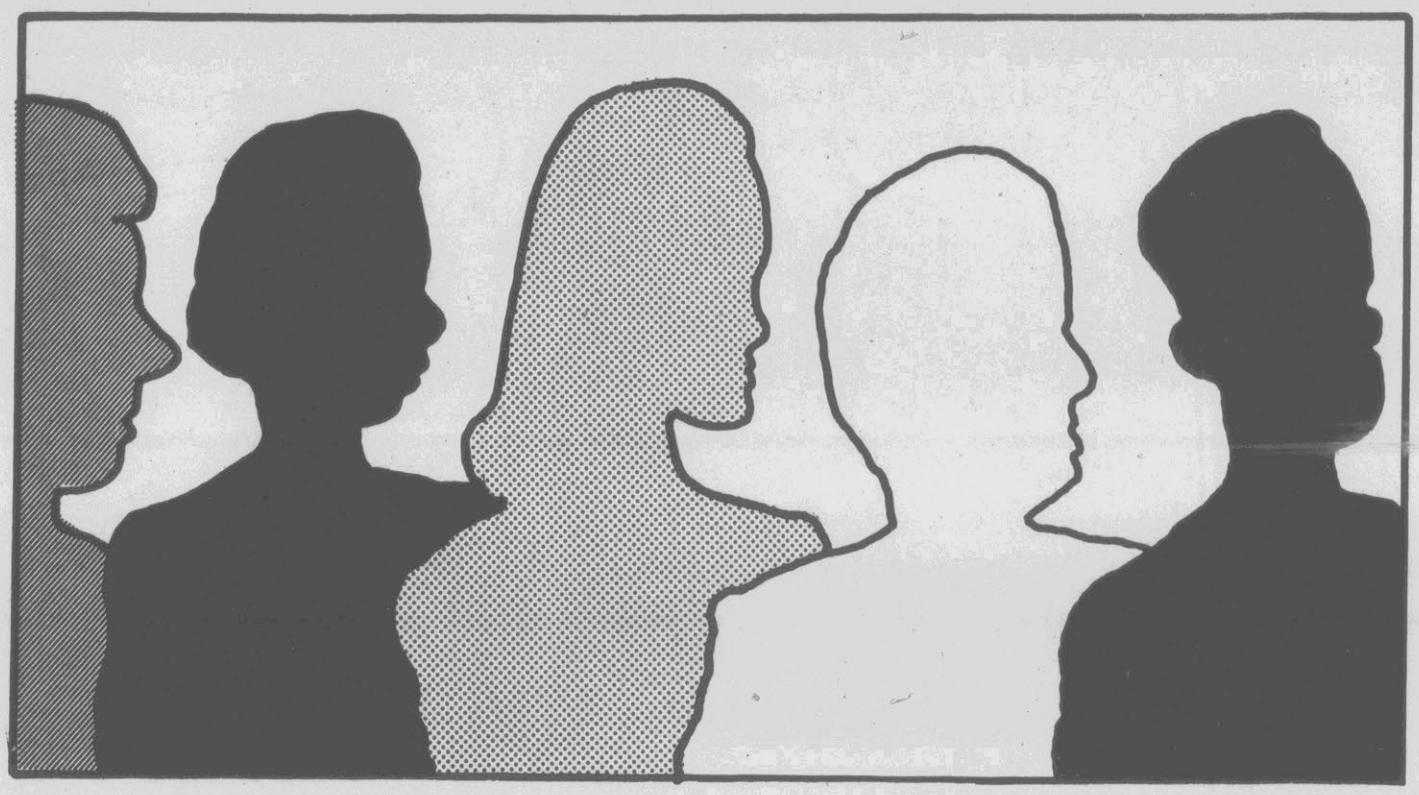

Are they valid? It's easy enough to determine where other people fall on the development ladder. The complaisant woman who works at making the men around her feel comfortable is clearly in Stage Two, while the supersensitive filer of multiple discrimination complaints against a succession of employers is marked as a Stage Three.

But I suspect that most of us vacillate among several stages, perhaps imagining ourselves to be bridge-builders (Are we really only Stage Two?) while not wishing to accommodate obvious racism or sexism (Does that place us in Stage Three?).

Is the five-stage progression supported by research? Is it possible to skip stages? Would understanding the various stages help to accelerate one's movement through them? These are among the questions I'd like to put to the researchers, if I can ever find them.

But even on the basis of the summary I've seen, it seems clear that getting as many of us as possible to move toward the fourth and fifth stages is a worthwhile undertaking, both in the interest of real workplace diversity and in the interest of ridding America of its still-too-prevalent racist and sexist attitudes.

A Sunny Park

Ellen Goodman

BOSTON — The Tour de Sol isn't as famous as the Indianapolis 500. Not yet anyway. Nor is James Worden a race driver of the same stripe as Emerson Fittipaldi. Indeed, his car went about a hundred miles an hour slower than the Penske PC-18's average of 167 mph that won the famous prize. And his pit stops are a bit longer as well. Worden has to wait for the sun to charge up the batteries.

Nevertheless, on Memorial Day weekend, while millions of Americans watched 500 ear-splitting, gas-guzzling, air-polluting miles end with a bang-up finish, James Worden slipped over the line known as Nerd Crossing at MIT. The 22-year-old had won the 210-mile, three-stage race from Montpelier, Vt.

The Cambridge crowd on hand to greet him was small by Indy standards, but the victory was pure, sunny and sweet. Worden isn't just going for a trophy after all. When he is graduated from MIT next Monday, this young scientist isn't going into supercomputers or the military-industrial complex.

He and his teammates are going to pursue what he unabashedly calls the dream: "We want to mass-produce solar cars." He doesn't blush at the suggestion he might become the next Henry Ford. It's his straight-ahead plan.

So to those who have become dubious about the trade-offs of science, cynical about progress, sure that there is a price to be paid for every advancement, the James Wordens of the world are as refreshing as a Commencement Day. He is one of the breed of hi-tech environmentalists, people who don't think we have to choose between modern life and the ozone layer. Who believe that we "can do," without screwing up.

Not surprisingly, Worden made his first solar car while he was in high school. It is memorialized, or at least stored, in the garage behind the house in Arlington, Mass., where he grew up, the middle of five children born to a lawyer and microbiologist. On the day after victory, the Worden home bore a flag in the front and a nest of finches in the back. But in the driveway was the Worden centerpiece: a solar-powered commuter car. It's a commuter car, not a racing car, that he wants to produce.

"It's kind of crude, and it's really dirty," Worden apologized as he ushered me in for a test drive through the neighborhood. This was a five-year-old version, aluminum on the outside, radio and tape deck on the inside.

The car runs on silicon solar cells, a battery and a motor. One full day of sun will store up to 50 miles of power. Not a lot, but then the average commute to work is 10 miles. This crude model goes 35 miles an hour, a fact that James proves as we tool the neighborhood.

But the real beauty, he says, is that "if you're sitting in a traffic jam in the sun, this car isn't using power, it's gaining power. There's no pollution, no noise. That's the most amazing part."

There is something about this scene that sounds too Huck-Finn-ish, too backyard-ish, to compete in the modern world of GMs and Fords. But Huck Finn didn't go to MIT and Worden's team is not the only one that has seen the handwriting on the wall or the hole in the ozone.

"The automakers are saying they can't meet the lower emission standards," Worden says. "The environmentalists are saying that low emissions standards aren't good enough. I put A plus B together and say we've got to have solar cars."

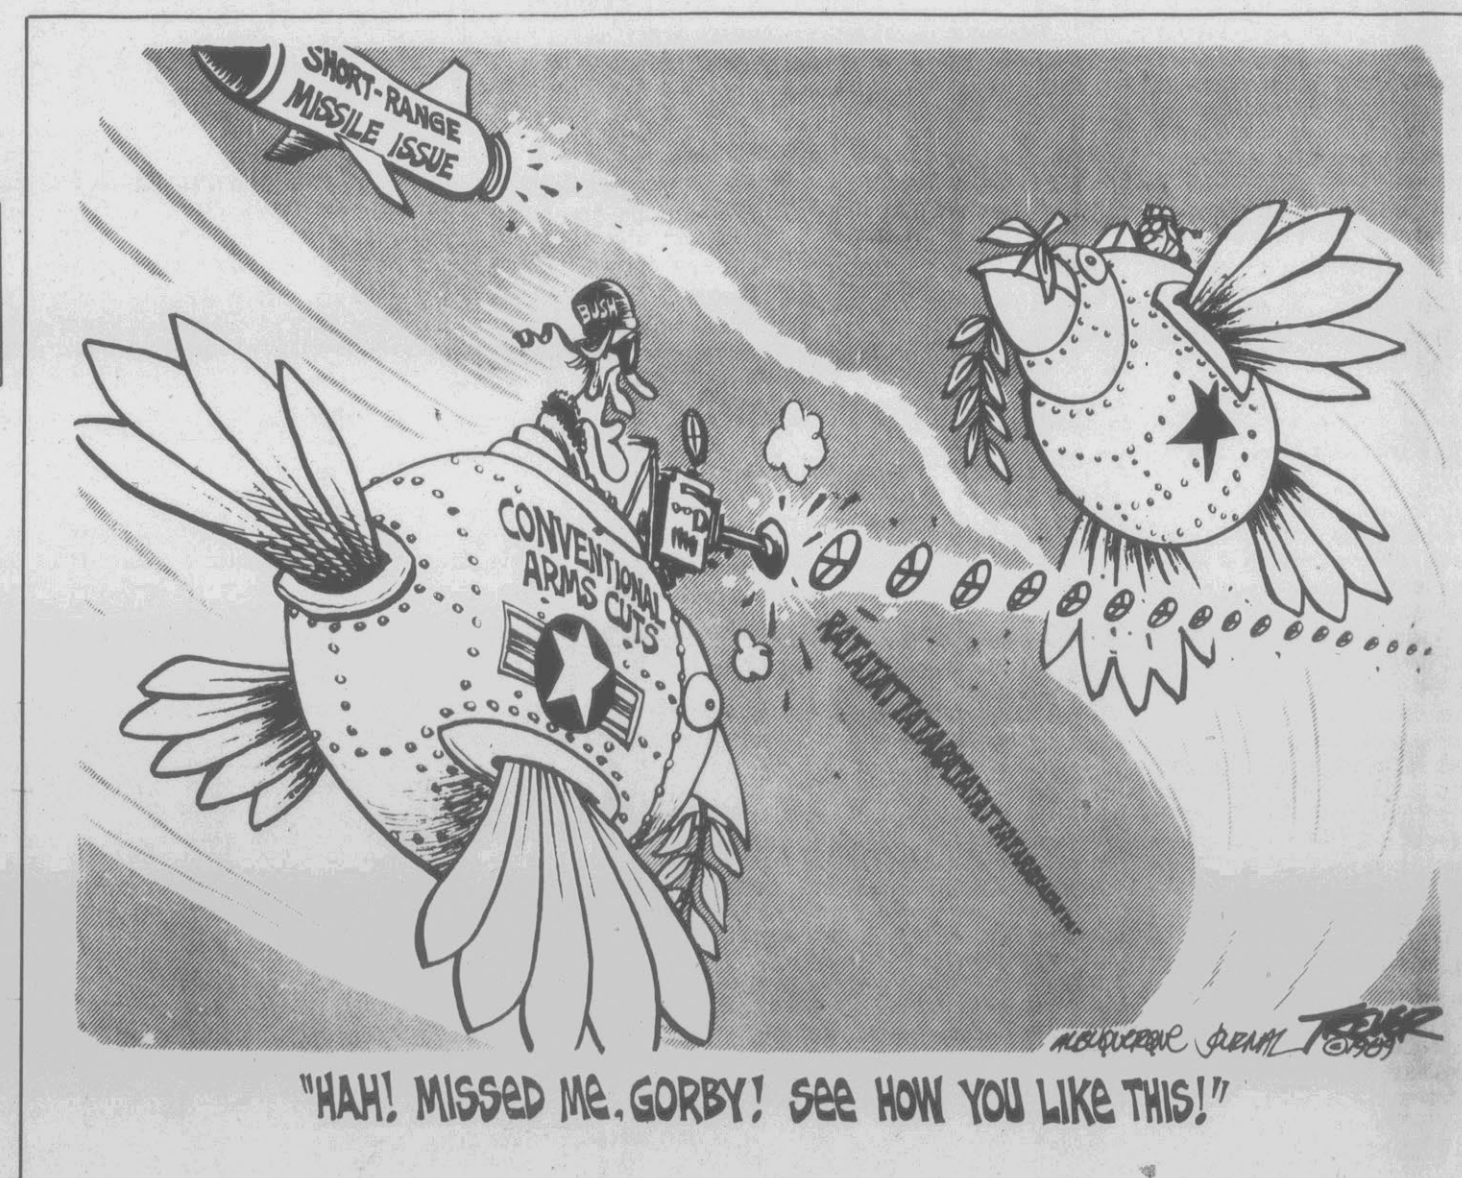

So this summer, along with Anita Rajan, his classmate, senior project adviser and fiancee, Worden's Solectron Corp. will begin to build a "sleek-looking" two-seat sports car that they hope will have a range of 200 miles and a speed of 60 miles an hour. In its early stage, they expect it to sell for $15,000.

The idea of solar cars has been around. So have the prototypes, including GM's $8 million version. But the hot cars on the market this year are as archaic as fossil fuels: big and bad. They are in lethal conflict with the environmental laws popping up in places as distant as California and Vermont.

The conventional car is the environmental equivalent of the cigarette. It's the equal-opportunity pollutant. Every one of us gets a chance to pollute the air on the way to grocery store. The Big Three car makers may be too big and too few to change. Perhaps it takes environmental entrepreneurs in their backyards to start tinkering with solutions.

But before he begins manufacturing, James Worden is getting ready for one more race. "If I can cross the country in ten days on the sun, then, by golly, anybody can go to work on the sun." When you get there, simply pick a sunny place to park.

"HAH! MISSED ME, GORBY! SEE HOW YOU LIKE THIS!"

Either Way, He's A Winner

Richard Cohen

WASHINGTON — At Yale, George Bush played baseball and in the White House, he pitches horseshoes. In Maine, the President boats, in Texas he hunts and everywhere, until recently, he was a runner. But if Bush is a natural at anything, then it has to be football. As he proved at the NATO summit, "Crazy Legs" Bush is the greatest broken-field runner of all time.

In Brussels, Bush took the ball and scored. He announced a Gorbachev-like plan to reduce U.S. forces in Europe from 305,000 to 275,000 men and called upon the Soviets to reach the same level — a reduction of 325,000 for them. He proposed reducing the number of both offensive and defensive fighter aircraft and again called on the Soviets to do the same.

Clearly on a roll, Bush patched up the spat with Germany over short-range nuclear missiles and then, in Germany itself, called upon the Soviet Union and the East German regime to tear down the Berlin Wall. "Let Europe be whole and free," the President said, offering the vision (yes, a vision!) of a continent undivided by walls or mine fields.

West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl beamed. NATO heaved a sigh of relief and, nearly overcome with relief, communiqued its joy to the world. The Soviets, tentatively and cautiously, welcomed Bush's arms-reduction plan. The President himself was characterized as buoyant. Even Margaret Thatcher, still in shock after Ronald Reagan offered at the 1986 Reykjavik Summit to abolish all nuclear weapons, professed herself pleased.

Now, once again, we have learned something about this President. He is the worst of playmakers, the best of broken-field runners — a man almost totally of the moment. Recall the presidential campaign. There was Bush in Iowa, campaigning in a regal manner, distancing himself from both the press and the people. But after losing to Sen. Bob Dole (R-Kan.), a new Bush emerged in New Hampshire. He was at the wheel of a truck. He was folksy, almost intimate, just another guy: Shucks, have some pork rinds.

That pattern has now been repeated many times and by now it is familiar. First Bush enunciates a position, characteristically oversells it and then changes course at the last minute. Nowhere was this more evident than in the disarmament plan Bush unveiled in Europe.

It's possible, in the manner of Marc Antony, to both praise Bush for what he said in Europe and to worry about why he said it. As player-coach of the Western Alliance, he devised the equivalent of a running game, a cautious and niggardly approach to Mikhail Gorbachev's stunning initiatives. Up to the NATO meeting, the President's response to Gorbachev amounted to nothing more than disinterment of Dwight Eisenhower's "Open Skies" plan — a proposal so unimaginative, so irrelevant and so anachronistic as to be downright silly.

Then came an accretion of criticism in the press and, more significantly, from European leaders. Was it this that prompted Bush to hastily come up with his plan? Was he once again reacting or was he all along playing the cleverest of diplomatic games, drawing out Gorbachev and then giving him an offer that would, in a year, eliminate the Soviet advantage in troops?

What's coming from the White House now is the leaked assurance that Bush proceeded according to plan. But there is scant indication of that. Instead, it seems Bush did what he always does — abandon a position he once espoused.

In Washington, this is called "pragmatism" and nothing is more valued. Elsewhere, it's called "opportunism" and its practitioners are distrusted.

Either way, he's a winner. Crazy Legs Bush has done it again.

Britain Charged By Soviets With Planting Bugs

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LONDON — The Soviet Union on Saturday accused Britain of bugging its trade delegation building in London and the apartments of Soviet diplomats.

The Foreign Office denied the allegation, which further strained relations between the countries.

Two weeks ago, Britain accused eight Soviet diplomats and three journalists of spying and expelled them. The Soviet Union responded with identical charges and expulsions.

Soviet diplomats said at a news conference at their embassy on Saturday that construction work on the trade delegation building revealed that it was "honeycombed" with bugging devices planted in the concrete walls and even deep underground.

Soviet Ambassador Leonid Zamyatin went to the Foreign Office in the afternoon to deliver "a vigorous protest," the diplomats said.

The Soviets claimed the electronic devices were so powerful that they would harm the health of Soviet citizens and Britons living nearby. He did not explain how.

First Secretary Alexander Smaguin said some of the alleged bugs "were discovered very recently."

"They were discovered during maintenance and repair work carried out over some period of time by Soviet construction workers," he said.

"Obviously these devices could only be installed during the contruction of the building about 15 years ago," said Nickolai Kossov, another first secretary.

The Soviets displayed photographs of the alleged eavesdropping devices, graphics of where they were found and examples of the devices themselves.

Reporters and photographers later were taken by bus to one of the diplomat's flats where the devices were allegedly found.

A statement issued by Soviet Counselor Gregory Karasin said: "Facts show that in Great Britain there remain active forces, keen on bringing our relations back to the times of the Cold War, reanimating the 'enemy image' of the Soviet Union."

He said the surveillance amounted to "rude intrusion in private lives of Soviet citizens working in Britain."

"By expert opinion, the mode of operation of many of the discovered devices involved the use of high-powered directional radio emissions damaging to the health of both Soviet personnel and British people living locally," Karasin said.

After Zamyatin's 10-minute meeting with Sir Patrick Wright, permanent secretary at the Foreign Office, the department issued a statement that said Wright was certain the British government had nothing to do with any bugging devices found on Soviet property.

"Devices of this sort are widely available both in this country and, indeed, in Moscow," the statement said.

Soviets Aim Cartoons At U.S. Audience

By Bryan Brumley
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The Soviet people have long thrived on so-called black humor, biting satire that make light of some of the more onerous aspects of a life characterized by shortages and corruption.

Now the editors of the leading Soviet humor magazine, "Krokodil," have published an English-language collection of satirical cartoons the magazine's editor, Aleksey Pyanov says he hopes will help "destroy the myth that Soviet people are gloomy, withdrawn and stern."

The weekly "Krokodil" reaches an enormous audience in the Soviet Union, with a circulation of 5.3 million. By comparison, Time has a circulation in the United Sates of 4.7 million and Newsweek 3.3 million.

The wide-ranging collection of 185 cartoons from "Krokodil" — covering topics from marital humor to environmental problems — is being made available to American readers in the book, "Soviet Humor."

The most poignant sketches, ones that may surprise Western readers, are those depicting social problems, such as alcoholism or prostitution, the housing shortage, lethargic bureaucrats and workers.

All are topics that "Krokodil" embraced satirically before it was politically safe to tackle them directly in official Soviet newspapers.

Several selections reflect the terror of Stalinism, when a midnight knock at the door could mean a one-way ticket to Siberia. In one, a wife consoles her husband that a noise from the next room is "not the police. It's just burglars."

In another, three road workers idle beneath a sign alerting motorists to beware of roadwork. In the final frame, the laborer depicted in the sign climbs down and bends his back to work, to the amazement of the idlers.

Americans with memories of a bad restaurant meal might identify with the "Krokodil" cartoon of a slovenly chef handing a plate to a waitress with the comment: "Palm this off on somebody — I am afraid to taste it."

Royal Intruder

Christina, 45, and her husband Tord Magnusson were not at home when the incident occurred last week, the Stockholm daily Expressen said.

The man was found in her bed by friends of the couple that had been invited to stay. He had broken into the 18th century house through a window on a day when the burglary alarm had been shut off, Expressen said.

A police spokesman confirmed "an incident" had taken place at Magnusson's home but said they were not prepared to comment further.

Expressen said the intruder was taken to a mental hospital. It said he was known to have a fixation on the princess, the older sister of King Carl XVI Gustaf.

The paper said he told police: "I want to see the princess, I have always loved her, I have to meet her."

In 1982, Britain's Queen Elizabeth II was surprised in her bedroom by a man who passed all security installations in London's Buckingham Palace. She was unharmed in the incident, which caused a scare in England.

Chang-Lendl Matchup Is Set

Teenage Sensation Earns Crack At Lendl In French Open

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PARIS — Michael Chang has beaten Ivan Lendl in an exhibition, but he has no illusions about doing it again at the French Open.

Lendl and Chang reached the round of 16 Saturday with straight-set victories, setting up a fourth-round confrontation between the world's No. 1 player and America's newest teen-age sensation.

Despite complaints about the scheduling and court conditions, the top-seeded Lendl beat Darren Cahill of Australia 7-6, 6-3, 6-3. Chang, the 15th seed, downed Francisco Roig of Spain 6-0, 7-5, 6-3.

"Lendl's not going to mess around now," said the 17-year-old Chang, who beat the Czechoslovakian native in an exhibition in Atlanta this spring.

"This is the real thing," said Chang, the youngest player left in the tournament.

"You can see it in his face. He has that look. He doesn't give you anything."

Lendl agreed he's not the same player Chang beat a few months ago.

"The last time I had been playing only four days on clay," he said. "This time I've been playing for six weeks on clay. That's the difference and the result will be different too."

On the second consecutive day of rain delays at Roland Garros, No. 2 Stefan Edberg and No. 4 Mats Wilander of Sweden advanced with straight-set victories.

Edberg, the defending Wimbledon champion who is playing his best clay court tennis, beat Jimmy Arias of the United States 6-4, 6-4, 6-4. Wilander, the defending champion seeking to break an eight-month drought without a tournament victory, outplayed Italy's Omar Camporese 6-4, 6-3, 7-6 (7-2).

Lendl had been scheduled to play the last match of the day on Center Court, but because of a 50-minute rain interruption in mid-afternoon he was moved to a side court.

"They called me at 4 o'clock and said I was the next match," Lendl said. "I said, 'Wait a second you can't just put me in the next match. I just woke up. I need at least two hours before I go out and play.'"

"Then I came on the court and found it was dry, It wasn't wet at all. They refused to water the court. It was very slippery and dangerous."

Lendl won anyway, finishing up as darkness set in.

Darkness forced suspension of the match between fifth-seeded Andre Agassi and fellow American teenager Jim Courier. Courier won the first set 7-6 (9-7), Agassi took the second 6-4 and Courier led 4-2 in the third.

In women's action, with her rival Steffi Graf looking on, second-seeded Gabriela Sabatini came within three points of defeat before rallying to beat Nicole Provis 4-6, 7-5, 6-3 and move into the round of 16.

In the day's major upset, 15-year-old Monica Seles, the darling of the fans, eliminated No. 4 Zina Garrison of the United States 6-3, 6-2, in a match tinged with animosity.

Before the match started on Center Court, Seles offered Garrison a flower, but the American refused and was booed by the crowd. Afterwards, a bitter Garrison blasted Seles' gesture as a "bunch of hype just to get applause."

Jakob Hlasek of Switzerland, the sixth seed, rallied to win his second five-set match, beating Leonardo Lavalle of Mexico 4-6, 6-1, 3-6, 6-3, 6-4. His next opponent will be No. 11 Alberto Mancini of Argentina, who rolled past Paul Haarhuis of the Netherlands 6-4, 6-4, 6-2.

Unseeded Lawson Duncan became the second American to reach the fourth round, beating Jerome Potier of France 6-4, 6-0, 6-4.

In women's action, No. 6 Manuela Maleeva of Bulgaria cruised to a 6-1, 6-2 win over Laura Savchenko of the Soviet Union. No. 15 Mary-Joe Fernandez of the United States came from behind to beat Niege Dias of Brazil 6-7, 6-1, 6-1 and advance to a meeting against Sabatini, whom she has beaten three straight times.

Only one woman's seed was eliminated. No. 16 Susan Sloane, was a 6-3, 6-1 loser to Jo-Anne Faull of Australia.

In the day's opening match on Center Court, Sabatini fell behind 5-4 in the second set. At that point, Graf, the top seed and heavy favorite, came out to see what would happen to the only woman given a chance of challenging her for the title.

Sabatini doubled faulted to make it 15-all in the 10th game. But the prospect of a Graf-Sabatini final was saved as the Argentine won 12 of the next 14 points to take the set. Graf headed back inside, and Sabatini went on to capture the third set.

"Somebody told me Steffi was watching but I didn't know about it, I didn't see her," said Sabatini, who teamed up with Graf a few hours later to play a doubles match.

Provis, a 19-year-old Australian who reached the semifinals here last year, kept Sabatini at bay for most of the first two sets by mixing deep groundstrokes with sharp volleys.

She ended the first set in dazzling fashion with four clean winners, then broke serve at love and moved

Martin To Sit On Bud 500 Pole

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

DOVER, Del. — If Mark Martin gets much more disappointed, he'll be starting every race on the pole.

Martin grabbed his fourth pole of the Winston Cup season and his second straight at Dover Downs International Speedway in qualifying Friday for Sunday's NASCAR Budweiser 500 stock car race.

Although his Ford's one-lap speed on the one-mile oval was well off record pace at 144.387 mph, it withstood Dale Earnhardt's second-best speed of 143.937.

"We had run a good deal quicker in practice. We were disappointed with what we ran," Martin said of his 24.933-second lap.

Rusty Wallace will start third and Morgan Shepherd fourth after qualifying runs Friday that set the first 20 places for the $506,000 race, scheduled for noon EDT Sunday. The rest of the field will be set in today's qualifying.

Only 0.534 seconds — or 3.028 mph — separated Martin and the 20th qualifier, Jimmy Spencer. Martin's speed fell short of Alan Kulwicki's year-old event record of 146.681.

"I didn't think it would stand up," Martin said of his speed. "But, some of the other guys, who had a chance to beat us, slipped up, too. It was slick for everyone out there.

"I expected us and Kulwicki to run faster than what we did."

Martin said he was "over-guarding" after a crash that ended Neil Bonnett's qualifying run, right before Matin's lap.

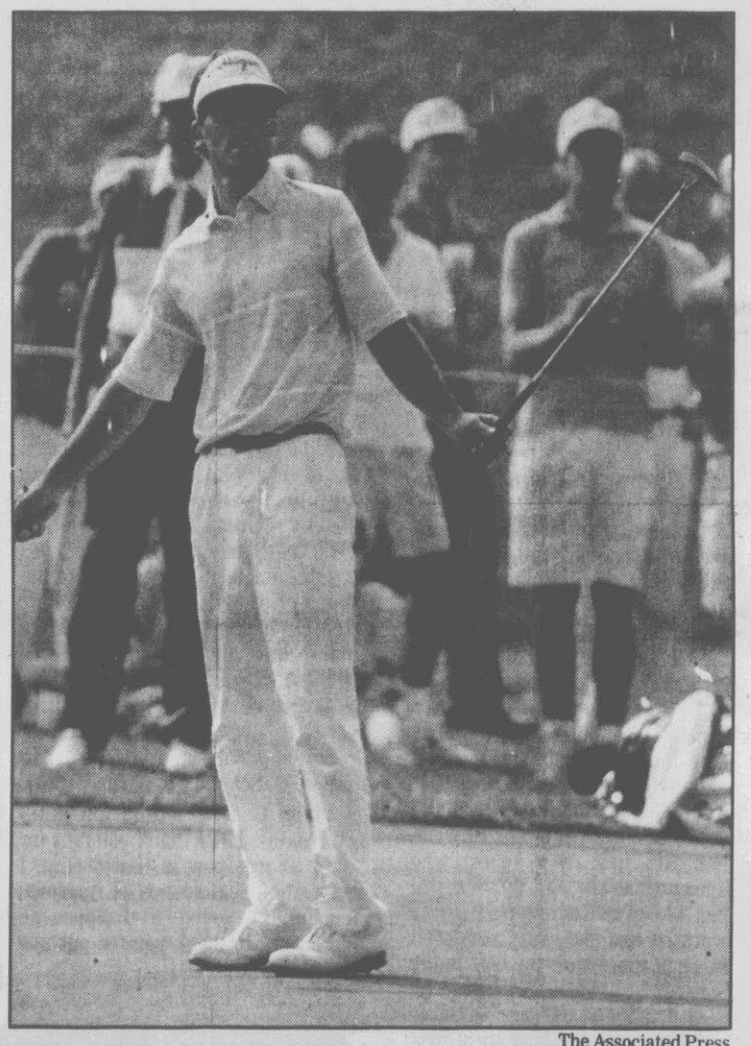

Another driver who thought he should have done better was Rick Wilson, who will start sixth on a 143.535 mph lap.

"It bottomed out, right there in turn one, and it hit hard, too," Wilson said. "We'd run a lot faster than that in practice."

Before this pole, Martin has started no lower than fifth in the first 10 races

Kemper Open leader Tom Byrum watches his putt attempt

Byrum Fires 65 To Take Lead

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

POTOMAC, Md. — Two former college teammates will be chasing the biggest paycheck of their PGA careers in the final round of the Kemper Open.

Tom Byrum shot a 6-under-par 65 Saturday to take a two-shot lead over Tommy Armour III after three rounds of the $900,000 tournament. Both played at the University of New Mexico, and will comprise a friendly twosome Sunday as they vie for their first-ever victory on the Tour.

"I think playing with Tommy will be good for me," Byrum said. "We should have a good time out there. He's a good player and a friend of mine."

Byrum, who had missed the cut in nine of his 16 previous tournaments this year, took the lead with a birdie on No. 12. He parred the next five holes before sinking a 37-foot birdie putt on No. 18 to finish at 13-under-par 200 after 54 holes.

"This is the kind of course where you have to be patient and just play it smart," Byrum said. "There are a lot of bogeys out there, but fortunately, I didn't get many of them."

Byrum had seven birdies and a bogey on the hilly, 6,917-yard TPC at Avenel course. Armour, who has won less than $250,000 in his three years on the Tour, matched the course record with a 7-under 64 and was at 202.

"I played the same way I've been playing all week, I just made more putts," said Armour. "That's as solid a game of golf as I can play."

Jeff Hart, Don Pooley and Mark McCumber were next at 204. Hart shot a 65, McCumber a 66 and Pooley, who started the day in second place, had four bogeys and four birdies in a round of 71.

The last time Byrum took the lead into the final round of a PGA event; he blew a four-shot lead in the 1988 Pensacola Open. Still, he wouldn't trade places with anyone on Sunday.

"I think I was more frightened than what I'm going to be tomorrow," Byrum said. "It's going to be hot and I'm going to be under a lot of pressure,

Edwards, Bridgers Named Top Athletes

By Tom Morris
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

For the first time in a long while, East Carolina's Blue Edwards isn't a shoo-in to make the team.

After virtually rewriting the ECU Basketball record book during two seasons on the team, Edwards now finds himself in a waiting game to see if a National Basketball Association team will choose him in the League's annual June 27 draft.

And with just two rounds in this year's draft, teams will select only 54 players as draft picks.

"A lot of it is sitting and waiting, trying to figure out what's going to happen," Edwards said. "A lot of people have been asking me if I've had any contacts, any tryouts. But when people ask me those questions, I don't think teams will be calling me this early. It will be a down-to-the wire thing. The draft is still a month away. I look at it as a 50-50 chance. The worst thing that can happen is I don't get drafted, and I try to make it as a free agent."

"Back then, that was the first year. I had played organized basketball," Edwards said. "I was saying, 'I'm going to get cut. I'm going to get cut.' Each day, they posted up the cut list, and I was scared to look at it. When I made it, I felt like the hardest part was over.

"During my whole sophomore year I was just glad to be on the team. Everybody came to see the varsity play. Nobody came to see the JV play. I was happy to be wearing the uniform."

Edwards closed out his ECU career as the Colonial Athletic Association Player of the Year. He played only two seasons for the Pirates, but he saved his best for last. In his senior season, he averaged 26.7 points (sixth in the nation) and 6.9 rebounds per game. He set a record for most points scored in a season, and he led the team in scoring in every game but one. He finished the regular season ranked in six different statistical leader categories in the CAA.

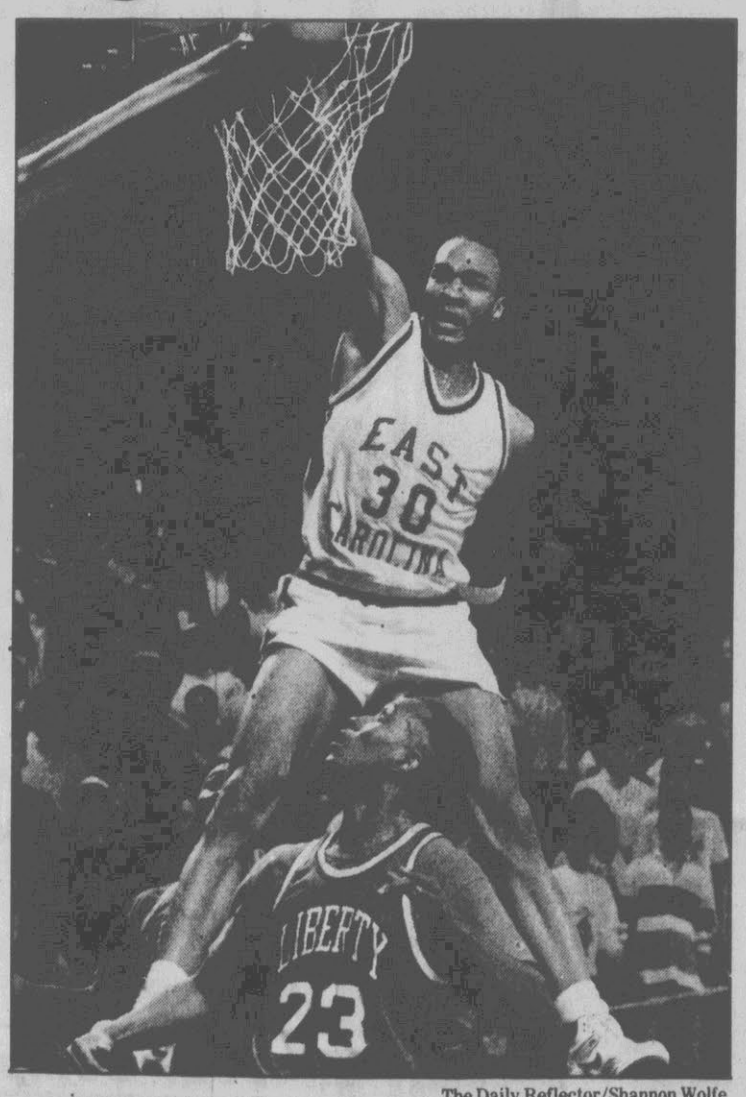

For his two-year career, Edwards averaged 20.7 points and 6.3 rebounds per game as he finished eighth in career points scored and first in career field goal percentage.

That's a long way for a kid who wasn't sure he was good enough to make the team in high school.

"When he was a sophomore I saw he had a lot of potential," Greene Central coach Lewis Godwin said. "We were going to North Lenoir and our starting center got sick. I told Blue he was going to start, and he about got sick himself.

"I saw him do things in that

Blue Edwards slams one home during action against Liberty

By Tim Chandler
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

It wasn't too long ago when Meredith Bridgers was happy to just be good at swimming.

A couple of years ago, the East Carolina sophomore was a high school swimmer which was gaining moderate attention from universities to join their swim teams. Now she is a highly-regarded NCAA Division I swimmer.

"In high school I wasn't that serious about swimming," Bridgers recalled. "I was pretty good, but I didn't reach my potential until I came to East Carolina. In college, I was put in a situation where I had to work harder."

ECU swim coach Rick Kobe agreed.

"She's come a long way," Kobe said. "She was just a YWCA swimmer two years ago. At that time she swam well, but nothing like she does now. She wasn't used to the training here, but she sucked it up her first year and when she came back here last year she was tough.

"She had done a lot of work over the summer months and that was a big key for her," Kobe said. "If a person wants to reach their potential as a swimmer in college, then they have to work in the summer — it's a 12-month process."

Bridgers gives credit for her sophomore achievements to confidence.

"I just came back her feeling really positive," Bridgers said. "I came back in good shape and with a good mental attitude and I worked really well with the coaching staff. It was just a combination of things happening that made everything go well."

In her two years as a Pirate swimmer, Bridgers has put together a list of achievements that most swimmers never have in a lifetime.

This past season, Bridgers was the earliest qualifier in the country for the NCAA Division I championships when she qualified for the breaststroke Nov. 19 against UNC-Charlotte with a time of 2:19.04. That mark set a Minges Pool record for the 200 breaststroke.

The 2:19.04 mark Bridgers set last year in the 200 breaststroke seems even more phenomenal when one considers that her fastest time ever in the event prior to coming to East Carolina was 2:30.06.

Had she not qualified for the NCAA Championships as early as she did, Kobe feels Bridgers may have accomplished even more than she did last season.

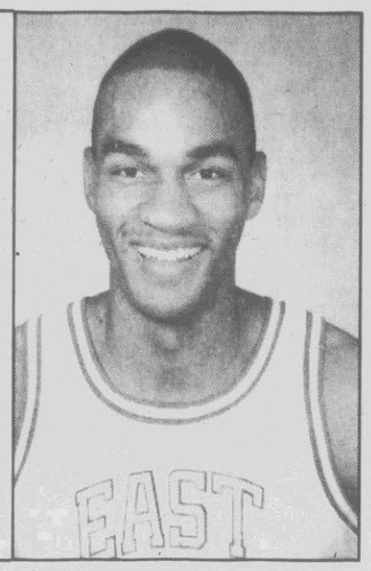

"By qualifying as early as she did, that left her with nothing to work for the rest of the season," Kobe said. "But this year she's going to work hard all year regardless. She's going to be training with the men's team throughout the season. We're game as a sophomore better than the starting center. He didn't have the experience, but I saw in that game that Blue could do a lot of things that you (only) talk about and you coach. I said if this boy works he's got a chance to be a very good college player."

Edwards Was Catalyst For ECU In '89 ...

"I think about it (the draft) quite a bit, but I don't want to get my hopes too high. It's easy to get wrapped up in it. ... it's still (only) a possibility."

— Blue Edwards

Edwards did just that, first at Louisburg College and then at ECU. A muscular 6-5 swingman, he came into his own in his senior year, developing into one of the top offensive players in the nation.

Edwards' game demands attention. He's a dangerous threat on the break who can dunk with the best of them. Off the court, he's the opposite. Neither loud nor boisterous, Edwards isn't the type that stands out in a crowd. But over the course of his career at ECU, he began to do more than just lead by example.

"He's always been quiet," Steele said. "This last year, becoming a senior, he took some leadership roles I don't think he took in the past. In speaking at luncheons and dinners in the past year, people found out he is really an articulate young man."

Much like his sophomore year in high school, Edwards faces another anxious time now. He leaves Monday for the NBA's Pre-Draft Camp in Chicago, which attracts the best 56 players in the nation.

"I think he has an excellent chance to play in the NBA," Marty Blake, scouting director for the NBA, said. "He's no secret. He'll get drafted. He'll get a chance to play. He's a great shooter and a very nice kid. He's a hard worker, and he has a chance."

But for Edwards, there is no guarantee until draft day.

"I think about it quite a bit, but I don't want to get my hopes too high," he said. "It's easy to get wrapped up in it. It would be easy for me to sit around here and not do anything and say, 'I'm going to make the NBA.' But with me, it's still (only) a possibility. I've got to keep running, keep myself in shape and keep playing."

Edwards posted some impressive numbers during his prep career, but received little interest from any Division I colleges.

"I tried to sell him, but nobody saw the potential in him," Godwin said.

He ended up at Louisburg under coach Enid Drake, where he earned All-American honors.

After that, he decided to come home to ECU to play under then-coach Charlie Harrison. He was an instant starter on a team that sizzled early, but fizzled in mid-season after problems and distractions took their toll.

During the season, a number of players were involved in dormitory break-ins over the Christmas Holidays.

Harrison, in the final year of his contract, resigned near the end of the season and was eventually replaced by Mike Steele.

When school convened the following fall, Howard Brown, John Williams, Tracy King and Edwards were all arrested in connection with the break-ins. Brown had been kicked off the squad the previous spring. Williams and King were booted from the team the week before the arrest after arriving late for fall registration.

Edwards' involvement stemmed from possession of stolen goods.

"I didn't break into any rooms and I didn't take any stuff out," Edwards said. "What happened was Howard left some stuff in my room. That's how I came into possession of it. I didn't realize that by having it there later on I was as guilty as they were."

Edwards eventually pleaded guilty and received a three-year suspended sentence, but he had to sit out what would have been his senior year as part of a disciplinary action imposed by the school.

"Having to sit out, looking back, was probably the best thing that ever happened to him," Steele said. "This way, he had a chance to be around his teammates for a whole year and found out there's more to going to school and to life than shooting hoops. He was able to redefine goals. He was appreciative of having a second chance."

It's a topic that has followed Edwards around.

"I think it was an isolated incident." Steele said. "I knew it was. When I called his high school coach Lewis Godwin and his junior college coach, Enid Drake, they were shocked he'd be in any trouble. That's why I didn't have any reservations about going to bat for him.

"People always say, 'it's great Blue Edwards got his act together.' His act was never that out of kilter. He's never been a problem," said Steele, who testified for Edwards at his sentencing hearing.

At the beginning of the season, he was far from favored to win CAA Player of the Year honors or to have a chance to get drafted. But Edwards had a definite impact for the Pirates.

Without Edwards, ECU went 8-20. With him, the Pirates improved to 16-15 to record their first winning season since the 1982-83 season.

Edwards came back hard after the layoff. As the season progressed, he increasingly became the main option on offense. Defenses were primed to stop him, throwing two and three men on him whenever he got the ball. He was a marked man.

"But it was kind of fun doing that — knowing that the defense was going to do everything possible to try and stop you and still be able to beat them," he said. "I think it shows the people what kind of player I was."

Though ECU struggled in mid-season, the Pirates rallied down the stretch and, thanks to their first-ever victory in the CAA Tournament, posted a winning year.

Since the season ended, Edwards has been a busy man. In April, he attended and played well at the Portsmouth Invitational All-Star Games. In late May, he was invited to play in the Japan Classic All-Star Games.

Now, though, it's a waiting game. He expects to travel to Miami and perhaps Cleveland for interviews after the pre-draft camp. In the meantime, he'll work basketball camps at ECU and Louisburg until the draft decides his future.

Bridgers' Battling To Be Best ...

very excited about her potential."

Even in a year Kobe felt could have been better, Bridgers fared well.

She was the 1989 Colonial Athletic Association champion in both the 100 and 200 breaststroke events. In fact, she rolled through the regular season unbeaten in both of those events.

Bridgers broke her own varsity record in both of the events during the 1989 season and was ranked as one of the top five swimmers in the country during the season.

"She gave us a national ranking," Kobe said. "Our girls team was ranked 42nd in the country out of the 200 plus swimming teams. She's brought the girls team a long way. Four years ago we were competing on the Divisi[on]

"[B]... success has also mea... t for the Pirate recr... ling to Kobe.

"Th... g for the girl's t... t it's ever been," Kobe said. "When you're dealing w[ith] the funds we have to deal with, it makes it tough to sale your program. But when you can point out that you have a swimmer in the national championships, it makes it an easier sale. Everybody has dreams of being an All-American or a national champion and Meredith will be an All-American before she leaves here."

Bridgers' freshman season was also chocked full of numerous accomplishments.

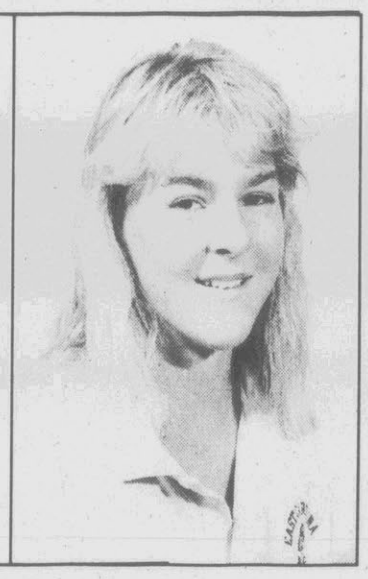

She was the 1988 Colonial Athletic Association champion in the 100 and 200 meter breaststroke events that year also. She set freshmen records early on in the 1988 season at both lengths and later in the season set varsity records at both that she would rewrite this past year.

Bridgers also qualified for the Senior Nationals in 1988 in the 200 breaststroke.

Although Clemson and East Carolina were the only schools seriously recruiting Bridgers out of high school, she had recorded some impressive stats.

"Right now I'm not sure whether I would like to pursue it (the Olympics). ... Some people train their whole life for it, but I never thought I could be this good."

— Meredith Bridgers

In 1987, she was the YWCA national champion in both the 100 and 200 breaststroke and also the state high school champion that year in the 100 breaststroke. Bridgers also took home top honors in '87 in both breaststroke lengths at the Junior Olympics.

"When we recruited her, we really didn't recruit her very hard," Kobe said. We wrote her a couple of letters but never heard anything back from her. Then I saw her at the North Carolina championships and asked her if she was going to come for a visit and she said no that she had already decided to come to East Carolina."

Bridgers began her quest to be a competitive swimmer over 18 years ago when she decided that it was the only sport she could excel in.

"I took up swimming because I was good at it," Bridgers said. "I was never good at anything else. I just don't have the hand-eye coordination to play sports like basketball and softball."

But she may develop the times to become an Olympic-class swimmer.

"I think right now her times are good enough to get in the Olympic qualifying meets," Kobe said. "I believe the NCAA qualifying times are a little faster than the Olympic times for the qualifying meets.

"I think she is definitely capable of making the trials, but then they take only the top two and that's extremely tough," Kobe said. "But if she has the drop (in time) next year that she had the first two years, who knows what she can do. She still has a lot of swimming potential to work on and she could very well be right there with the best in the world."

Although being an Olympic swimmer is something most people dream of their entire life, Bridgers isn't sure whether or not she will pursue that route or not.

"Right now I'm not sure whether I would like to pursue it (the Olympics)," Bridgers said. "It's something that as a swimmer you take year by year. Some people train their whole life for it, but I never thought I could be this good. I'm still wondering how I got to be this good."

According to Kobe, it's because she has done everything necessary to become a great athlete.

"I think what you're looking at in her is probably the finest athlete, before she leaves ECU, that this school has ever seen," Kobe said. "She has still not put in a full year of training at one time. Her potential is incredible."

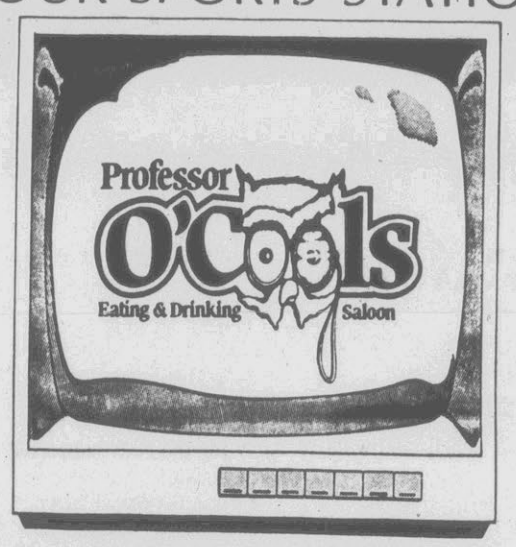

Schmidt Honored

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Mike Schmidt received a two-minute standing ovation Saturday night in his first appearance at Veterans Stadium since announcing his retirement from baseball.

The crowd of approximately 37,000 rose to their feet as he walked to the mound prior to throwing out the first pitch for a game between the Montreal Expos and his former team, the Philadelphia Phillies.

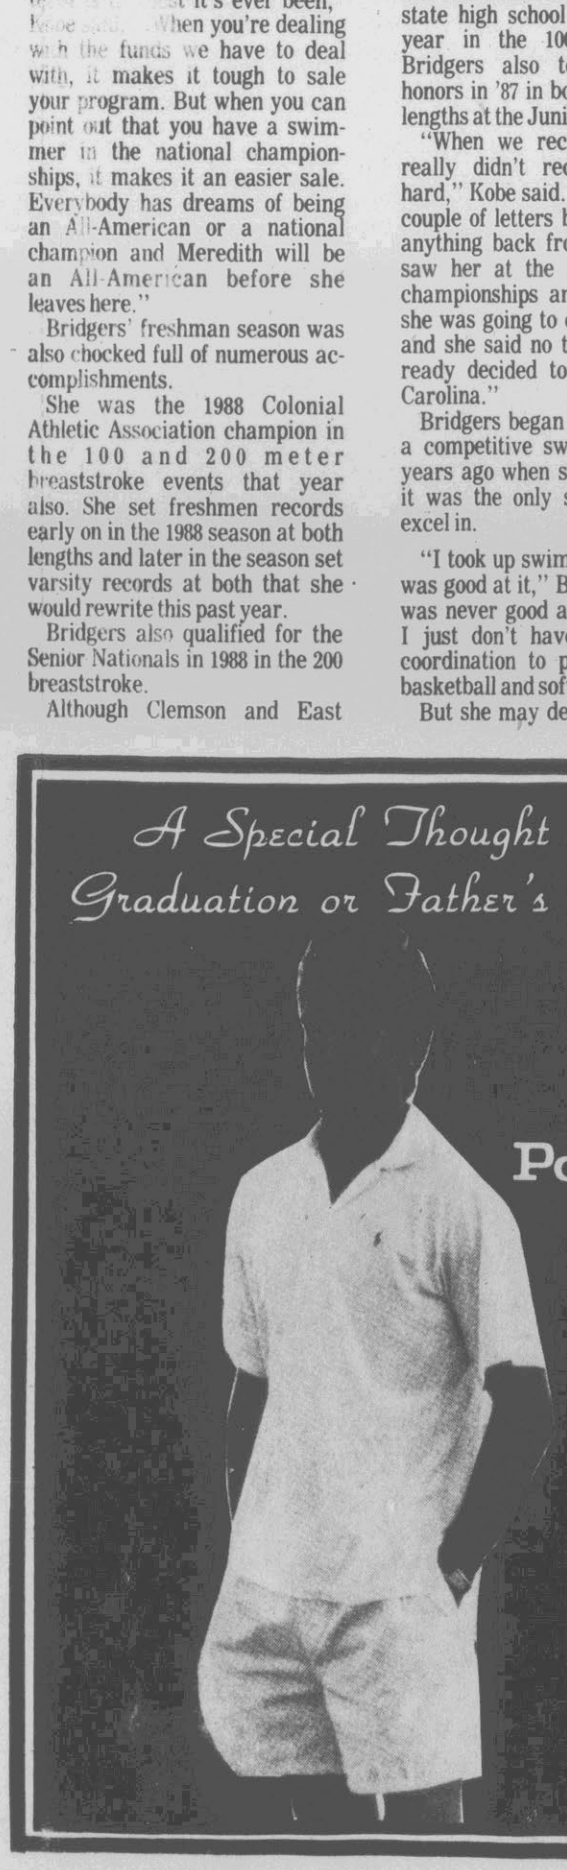

"As you know, we have no control over our lives, all we can do is dream and hope your dreams are fulfilled," Schmidt told the crowd. "I thank God for letting me fulfill my dreams. I also thank you fans for being a large part of that dream. I heard the great sounds of approval and the ugly sounds of disapproval, and I want to thank you for pushing me to the limit."

Streaking Orioles Win Sixth Straight, 4-2

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

DETROIT — Jim Traber singled home the tie-breaking run in the eighth inning Saturday night and the streaking Baltimore Orioles beat the Detroit Tigers 4-2 for their sixth straight victory.

The Orioles, who have won 16 of their last 21, lead the American League East by three games at 29-22. Last year, Baltimore did not win its 29th game until two days after the All-Star break.

Kevin Hickey, 1-0, the third Orioles pitcher, pitched two innings for his first victory since 1983. Gregg Olson worked the ninth for his sixth save in the combined five-hitter.

Doyle Alexander, 4-5, lost for the second time in 11 decisions against Baltimore this decade.

With the score tied at 2, Mickey Tettleton started the Baltimore eighth with a single and Guillermo Hernandez relieved. Joe Orsulak singled and Traber's single put the Orioles ahead.

Orsulak stole third and scored on the play when catcher Matt Nokes made a pickoff throw to first base that hit Traber and bounced to the Baltimore dugout for an error.

Cal Ripken hit a two-run homer, his fourth, that put Baltimore ahead 2-0 in the fifth. After a 21-minute rain delay, Detroit scored twice in the sixth against Brian Holton.

Rick Schu doubled, Gary Pettis walked and Fred Lynn hit an RBI single. Mark Huismann relieved and Pettis and Lynn pulled a double steal, and Pettis scored on a wild pitch.

Twins.....5
White Sox.....4

CHICAGO — Frank Viola allowed six hits in eight innings and Randy Bush homered for the game-winning run as the Minnesota Twins sent the Chicago White Sox to their 11th consecutive home loss, 5-4 Saturday in the first game of a doubleheader.

It's the longest home losing streak in White Sox history.

Bush broke a 4-4 tie in the fifth inning with his seventh homer on a pitch from Eric King, 4-7. The White Sox have been outhomered 31-13 at Comiskey Park this season.

Chicago has not won at home since May 7 and has dropped 13 of 14 games overall, including six straight. In going 6-21 at home, Chicago has been outscored 159-82.

Viola, 4-7 after winning the AL Cy Young Award last season, led the Twins to their fourth straight victory. He walked one, struck out six and retired the last 15 batters he faced. Jeff Reardon got the last three outs for his eighth save.

Chicago tied the score 4-4 in the fourth on Ivan Calderon's leadoff triple and Fred Manrique's single.

Viola also was aided by Jim Dwyer, who stole home in the first inning, his first steal since 1987. Dwyer stole four bases in 1987 and, in his 1,233 major league games, has only 25 steals.

Al Newman led off the game with a single and stole second. Two outs later, Dwyer walked. Gary Gaetti singled home Newman and Dwyer, who had taken third, and Gaetti successfully worked a double steal.

The Twins took a 4-0 lead in the second on Greg Gagne's run-scoring double and a fielding error by first baseman Ron Kittle on Orlando Mercado's grounder.

The White Sox rallied for three runs in the second on Manrique's single, Ed Williams' sacrifice fly and Ron Karkovice's pop fly double that fell between three players in short right field.

King lost his fourth straight game and was victimized by five stolen bases, a pair of errors and a passed ball. King walked seven, with two of them resulting in runs.

Athletics.....7
Indians.....0

OAKLAND, Calif. — Bob Welch pitched eight strong innings Saturday and the Oakland Athletics beat the Cleveland Indians 7-0.

The Athletics had lost their previous two games. They have not lost three in a row all season.

Welch, 7-4, gave up seven hits without a walk and struck out six. Eric Plunk worked the ninth.

Oakland finished with 14 hits and Cleveland had eight, and every hit was a single.

The Athletics got 11 hits in 5 1-3 innings against Tom Candiotti, 6-3. Candiotti made his shortest start of the season and had his three-game winning streak end.

Oakland matched its season high with five consecutive hits during a three-run third inning. With two outs, Dave Henderson and Dave Parker singled and second baseman Jerry Browne lost Mark McGwire's pop fly in the sun as the ball fell for an RBI single.

Terry Steinbach and Ron Hassey added run-scoring hits as Oakland took a 3-0 lead.

The A's chased Candiotti with two runs in the sixth. With one out, Glenn Hubbard and Tony Phillips singled and they pulled off a double steal. Mike Gallego's two-run single finished Candiotti and Stan Javier hit reliever Tim Stoddard's first pitch for a run-scoring single.

Oakland added another run in the seventh when McGwire and Steinbach singled and Browne made an error.

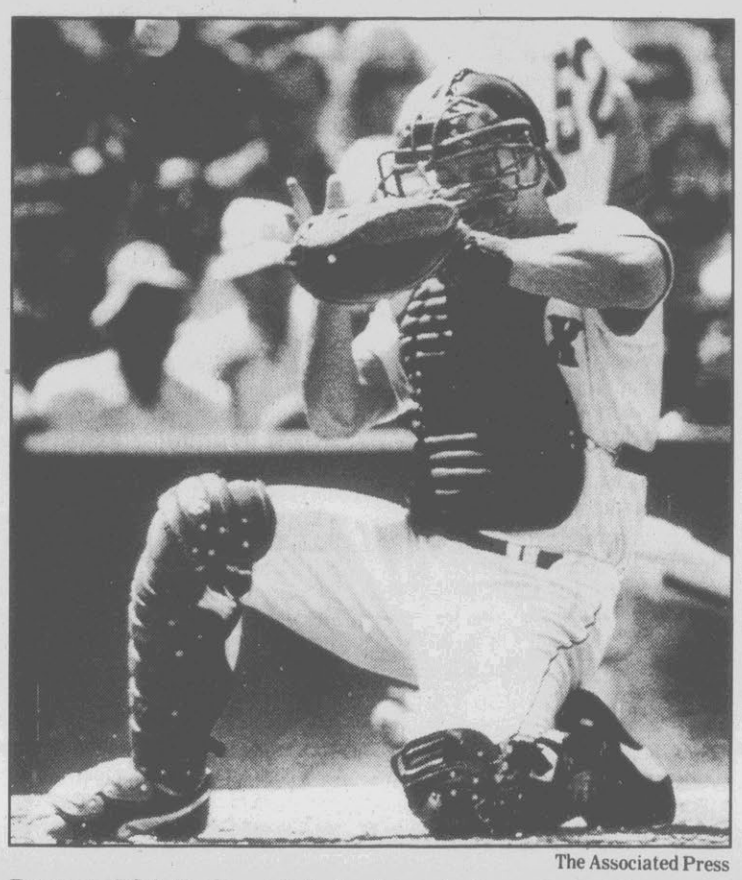

Blue Jays.....10
Red Sox.....2

BOSTON — Junior Felix drove in four runs and, along with Nelson Liriano, fueled a four-run fourth inning Saturday that ignited the Toronto Blue Jays to a 10-2 victory over the Boston Red Sox and their 11th straight victory at Fenway Park.

Felix and Liriano each had two-run, two-out singles in the fourth for a 5-2 lead. They had three hits apiece, and Liriano had three RBIs for the Blue Jays, who have not lost at Fenway since 1987.

Fred McGriff and Lloyd Moseby also homered for Toronto. McGriff's homer, his 12th, led off the sixth inning, and Moseby hit No. 6 with two out and none on in the ninth.

Dave Stieb, 4-3, allowed seven hits and two runs in five innings for the victory. He was replaced at the start of the sixth by David Wells, who pitched three scoreless innings, and Tom Henke worked the ninth for Toronto.

New License Plates May Tout Colleges

By Woody Peele
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Proud of your school and want to show it?

If a bill currently before the state legislature passes, you may be able to tout your college or university on your license plate.

Oh, sure, some folks now manage to get a plate like "UNC #1" or "Go Pack" or "Me & ECU" but under the proposed bill, the state would authorize a license plate which would feature the university's seal or mascot.

Rep. Ed Warren of Pitt County has introduced the bill into the House, while Sen. Wendell Murphy has introduced a similar bill into the Senate. The bills would permit the Division of Motor Vehicles to issue collegiate license plates and, at the same time, aid the scholarship programs of the various schools.

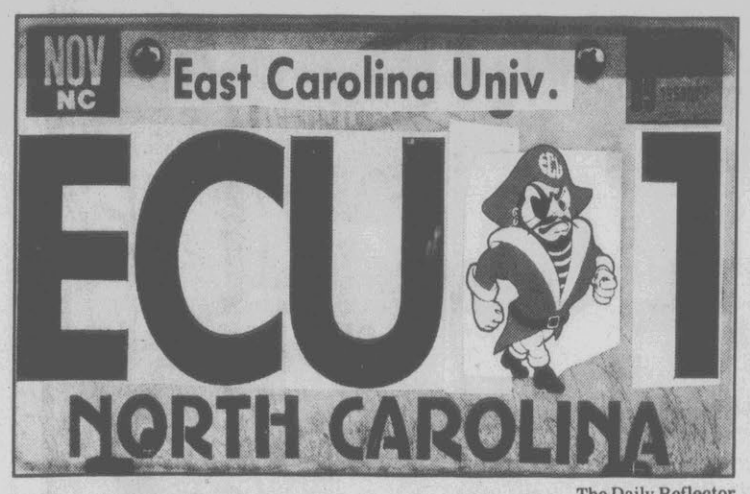

Under the proposed bill, still in committee, such plates would cost $45 annually. Of that, $20 would go for the normal license fee, $10 for the cost of the plates, and the final $15 would be paid into a fund. That fund would be distributed, in proportion to sales, to the colleges and universities involved.

Provision is made in the bill not only for the state-supported University of North Carolina system, but for the independent schools, such as Duke, Wake Forest, N.C. Wesleyan, and the like. Funds distributed would be used for academic enhancement, including scholarships and private fund-raising activities at the participating schools.

It would be up to the DMV to design the plates, deciding on whether the school's seal or its mascot would be used, and how the numbers and letters would be used. The only provision in the bill would be that the words "North Carolina" must appear on the plates.

At first, lawmakers recommended that a minimum of 1,000 plates per school must be ordered before that particular school's plate would be printed and issued. However, since some of the schools have a smaller following, it was decided that only 250 would be required.

If passed, the act would take effect on July 1, 1990.

Workman Named To New Post

Lee Workman, former director of marketing in the athletic department at East Carolina University, has been promoted to assistant athletic director for special events and ticket sales.

Dave Hart, ECU director of athletics, made the announcement Friday.

Workman has been at ECU since 1984 and has served as marketing director for the past two and a half years.

"Lee has done an outstanding job in coordinating our department's marketing efforts and is very deserving of the opportunity to assume more responsibility relating to our collective effort to enhance our funding opportunities as we move into the 1990's," Hart said.

A search has begun to fill the vacancy created by Workman's promotion.

Williams took second in the 100 meters with a 11.3 and second in the long jump with 19-6.

Robbins, competing in the 17-18 age group, took first in the discus throw with a throw of 115 feet and first in the javelin.

Geiberger, Player Tied In Sanders Classic

HOUSTON (AP) — Al Geiberger rolled in a 12-foot birdie put on the 18th hole Saturday to tie Gary Player for the lead after two rounds of the $300,000 Doug Sanders Classic.

Player, the first-round leader, shot a 2-under-par 70, including birdies on the 16th and 17th holes, while Geiberger shot a bogey-free 69. They were tied at 7-under 137 after 36 holes.

"I felt that I hit the ball pretty good today, especially in the middle of the round," said Geiberger, "and making a birdie put on the last hole is always nice."

"I played a lot better today than I scored. I was really frustrated, but it's one of those days when you have to battle on," said Player, who left six or seven puts within one or two inches of the hole, "my patience was pretty good though and this tournament is wide open for tomorrow." The best round of the day was turned in by second-year Seniors' player Homero Blancas who shot a course-record 65 in a round that featured eight birdies and one bogey. Blancas trails the co-leaders by one stroke with a two-round total of 138.

"I played well the last couple of weeks. Today my irons were crisp and I only had 28 putts," Blancas said.

Lou Graham shot the second-lowest round of the day, a 67, and trailed the leaders by two strokes while Tom Shaw birdied the last three holes to finish at 70 and was three strokes behind.

Seven golfers trailed by only four strokes and four others were within five strokes going into Sunday's final round.

Sheehan Retakes Lead In LPGA Event

PITTSFORD, N.Y. (AP) — Patty Sheehan said there's no doubt that her double-eagle on the par-5, 459-yard 17th hole at Locust Hill Country Club Saturday was the shot of her life.

She hit a 3-wood from the middle of the fairway 222 yards from the hole, and it bounced in front of the green, rolled about 15 feet, and, for a moment, wedged between the pin and the lip of the cup, before dropping in for the double-eagle 2.

"Now when I'm asked my most memorable shot, I'll have somewhere to turn and be able to talk about it," said Sheehan, a 10-year veteran of the tour. "I've never made a double-eagle. I've had two holes-in-one but those are nothing compared to that."

It was the first double-eagle on the LPGA tour in more than two years. Chris Johnson was the tour's last player to accomplish the feat, in March 1987 at the Circle K LPGA Tucson Open.

Sheehan's spectacular shot helped her to a 6-under-par 66 and returned her to the lead of the $300,000 tournament going into Sunday's final round.

"It's funny because I was walking down from my tee shot on 17 and I'm thinking, 'OK, let's just birdie this hole and get in good position to come from behind,'" she said. "Then it was like, 'OK, so I'm not coming from behind, I'm leading the tournament.'"

Sheehan, who led after the first round, finished with a three-day total of 9-under 207, one shot ahead of second-round co-leader Sherri Turner.

She had a flawless round on the par-72, 6,126-yard course with no bogeys, three birdies and the remarkable double-eagle.

"I played probably the best golf I played all year," she said. Her best finish this year was a tie for third at the Sara Lee Classic in April.

Turner had her second straight 69 for a three-day total of 208. She led for most of the way Saturday until Sheehan's double-eagle.

Ayako Okamoto, the winner of last week's Corning Classic and the runner-up two weeks ago at the LPGA Championship, was in third place at 210.

Patti Rizzo had a 68 Saturday and was alone in fourth place at 212, two shots ahead of the tour's leading money winner, Nancy Lopez, and Val Skinner.

Second-round co-leader Betsy King, No. 2 on the tour's money list, had a 76 Saturday and fell all the way back to 215.

Davis Leads Reds' To Win Again

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CINCINNATI — Eric Davis hit a three-run homer for the second straight game, powering the Cincinnati Reds over the San Diego Padres 6-2 in a rain-delayed game Saturday night.

Davis, who hit for cycle and drove in six runs Friday night, broke a 1-all tie in the sixth inning with his ninth home run. Rolando Roomes hit a two-run homer later in the inning as the Reds won their third consecutive win.

Davis is 11-for-18 in his last five games with two homers, three doubles, a triple and 10 RBI.

Rick Mahler, 7-5, allowed nine hits in his fourth complete game. He also started the Reds' sixth with a single.

Eric Show, 6-6, has lost his last two starts while trying for career victory No. 93, which would be the most wins in Padres' history. He is tied with Randy Jones.

Mahler singled and Barry Larkin singled with two outs in the sixth before Davis hit the first pitch from Show over the left-field wall. After Paul O'Neill doubled, Roomes hit his third home run of the season.

The Reds scored in the fourth when Todd Benzinger doubled, moved up on a wild pitch and came home on Larkin's sacrifice fly. Tony Gwynn hit his third homer with two outs in the Padres' fifth.

The game was interrupted by rain for 38 minutes in the bottom of the seventh. San Diego scored in the eighth on an RBI single by Marvell Wynne.

Mets.....9
Pirates.....3

NEW YORK — Howard Johnson hit a home run and drove in three runs and Darryl Strawberry hit his 12th homer as the New York Mets beat the Pittsburgh Pirates 9-3 Saturday night for their third straight victory.

Ron Darling, 4-4, allowed eight hits, struck out four and walked two for his first complete game of the season.

Strawberry, who did not play Friday because of back spasms, singled in a run in the first inning off Bob Walk, 5-4, and homered leading off the fourth to give the Mets a 2-1 lead. Of Strawberry's 12 homers, 10 have been with the bases empty and his homers have produced only 14 RBIs.

The Mets, who have troubled scoring runs this season, pulled away with five runs in the fifth off Walk.

With one out in the fifth, Darling singled and scored on Dave Magadan's RBI double. Johnson scored Magadan with a single and moved to second when Strawberry walked.

Kevin McReynolds then doubled home two runs and scored when shortstop Rey Quinones' relay throw to the plate got away for an error.

The Mets made it 9-1 in the seventh off reliever Roger Samuels when Magadan singled and Johnson hit his 11th homer.

It was the most runs for the Mets since scoring 11 on May 10 in Cincinnati.

In the Pittsburgh second, R.J. Reynolds singled with with out, moved to third on Benny Distefano's single and scored on Quinones' sacrifice fly to center, his eighth sac fly of the season.

The Pirates made it 9-3 in the ninth on Reynolds' two-run homer.

Johnson was forced to leave the game at the end of the seventh inning because of a jammed right thumb and bruised right shin. Both injuries were suffered in the fifth inning when he tripped over Distefano at first base.

Expos.....7
Phillies.....5

PHILADELPHIA — Andres Galarraga hit a two-run homer and the Montreal Expos sent the Philadelphia Phillies to their 10th straight loss, 7-5 Saturday night.

The Phillies' losing streak is their longest since 1985, when they dropped their final 11 games of the season. Philadelphia rallied for four runs in the ninth, but fell short.

Kevin Gross, 6-3, went 8 1-3 innings and left with the bases loaded and Montreal ahead 7-1. Von Hayes hit a two-run double off Joe Hesketh, and Tim Burke got his 12th save despite allowing Juan Samuel's RBI single and a sacrifice fly by John Kruk.

Gross is 1-1 this season against Philadelphia, which traded him to the Expos last December. Larry McWilliams, 2-6, gave up two runs in six innings.

Galarraga's two-run homer capped a four-run uprising with two outs in the seventh. After Mike Maddux retired the first two batters, Damaso Garcia singled and Galarraga hit his eighth home run of the season.

Tim Raines singled, went to second on a wild pitch and scored on Hubie Brooks' single. Tim Wallach followed with a single and Mike Fitzgerald hit an RBI double. Fitzgerald had another run-scoring double in the ninth.

Montreal scored in the the second on Spike Owen's RBI double and added another run in the fifth on Garcia's RBI single.

Cardinals.....6
Cubs.....5

ST. LOUIS — Pinch hitter Tom Pagnozzi's bases-loaded sacrifice fly in the 10th inning sent St. Louis over the Chicago Cubs 6-5 Saturday, ending the Cardinals' five-game losing streak.

The Cubs tied it 5 on Mitch Webster's solo home run with two outs in the ninth inning. But the Cardinals came back and won for just the second time in nine games.

Mitch Williams relieved and Pagnozzi hit a fly ball to deep right that easily scored Smith.

Dan Quisenberry, 2-1, the fifth St. Louis pitcher, got one out in the 10th for the victory. Webster hit his first home run of the season, connecting against Ken Dayley and tying the score.

Pendleton went 3-for-4 with a two-run homer as the Cardinals beat Chicago for the first time in four tries this season. The Cubs have lost only five of their last 17.

Dwight Smith hit a three-run double that put the Cubs ahead 4-3 in the third. Ryne Sandberg and Mark Grace drew two-out walks from Ken Hill and Damon Berryhill got an infield hit before Smith doubled to left-center.

Willie McGee and Guerrero doubled and Pendleton hit his second home run, and first since May 5, to give the Cardinals a 3-0 lead in the first against Mike Bielecki.

Braves.....0

ATLANTA — Kevin Mitchell hit his 18th home run of the season, a two-run shot Saturday that sent the San Francisco Giants past the Atlanta Braves 4-0 for their seventh victory in eight games.

Mitchell homered for the fourth time in three games and raised his run batted in total to 53. He leads the majors in homers and RBI.

Three San Francisco pitchers combined on a five-hitter. Don Robinson allowed one hit in three innings before being forced to leave with a pulled muscle in his left hip.

Atlee Hammaker, 5-3, gave up three hits in five innings without a walk. Mike LaCoss pitched the ninth and yielded one hit.

Mitchell connected in the fourth against Zane Smith, 1-8, who lost his fourth decision in a row. Will Clark led off with a single and Mitchell followed with his home run over the center-field fence.

on the 29-race schedule. Martin, 30, has finished in the top six in his last six races with two third-place showings, but is still looking for his first career Winston Cup victory.

"The car's going to be strong up here and it feels good and I think it's up to getting the job done," Martin said. "Luck is standing on every corner for us right now.

"It's just a matter of whether it's going to be Sunday or the next Sunday whether we win or not. It all depends on the luck."

The Batesville, Ark., native now living in Greensboro, N.C., also won the pole here last September for the Delaware 500, where a crash took him out 35 laps into the 500-lap race.

Defending Winston Cup champion Bill Elliott won both Dover races last year. He won the Budweiser 500 by nearly a lap over Shepherd, and the Delaware 500 by 1.48 seconds over Earnhardt.

He will start eighth on Sunday.

Besides Bonnett, a crash also knocked Ernie Irvan out of Friday's qualifying.

Irvan crashed during a morning practice. He said Dave Marcis' car put some oil down on the track, which Marcis said his crew was fixing.

but I wouldn't want to be anyplace else."

Armour was also enthusiastic about his rare visit to the top of the leader board.

"I've played well, but haven't had the hot number that puts you in position to win," he said. "If I'm within four or five shots entering the last round, that's where you want to be, especially when you're playing against guys who haven't won."

Of the top five contenders, only McCumber and Pooley have won a PGA event. Byrum ranks No. 84 on this year's money list, one spot behind Armour. Hart, who has made the cut only twice since January, is No. 155.

Jim Thorpe, Bill Buttner, Lon Hinkle, first-round leader D.A. Weibring and Billy Ray Brown were at 206. Howard Twitty and second-round leader Jay Don Blake were among a group of seven players at 207.

Blake started the day 10-under, but his bogey on the first hole set the tone for a round of 75.

Byrum opened the day three strokes behind Blake, but he shaved three strokes off par on the front nine and birdied Nos. 11, 12 and 18.

"If my putting continues to be good, everything should turn out OK," he said. "If I can be the same person on the course as I was today, I'll do just fine."

Hart, meanwhile, was just glad to see his name among the leaders.

"I've never been in this position so I don't know what to do or how to react," he said. "I've made about $2,000 (actually $2,395) this year, so needless to say, I'm excited."

Hart birdied the first hole, bogeyed No. 3, then birdied the next three to move into contention for the $162,000 top prize.

out to a 2-0 lead in the second set.

But Provis suddenly lapsed into unforced errors and Sabatini regained control in the second set by slowing the pace with spins, lobs and drop shots. After battling out of the 5-4 hole, she ended the set with a superb backhand cross-court drop volley.

Provis had two chances to break Sabatini's serve in the final set, but failed to convert the big points. The Argentine broke serve to end the match, charging to net behind a forehand service return and banging an overhead winner.

"For a moment at 5-4 in the second set, I thought I could lose the match," Sabatini said. "But I decided to concentrate and keep fighting."

"I played very badly today," she said. "Because of the rain I didn't practice much yesterday or today so I couldn't get into the match. Even in the third set, I wasnt' playing well."

Provis said Sabatini's experience paid off in the crunch.

"She's been in many situations like that before and she played a litle better," Provis said. "She started looping the ball higher. Maybe I got a little tense and overanxious. I never thought I had the match won. With players in the top 10, you can never think that way until the last point is played."

Play was suspended in mid-afternoon when a steady rain drenched the red clay courts. But the downpour was brief and the matches resumed 50- minutes later.

Wilander, who was leading Camporese 5-4 before the interruption, came out after the suspension and broke for the set, whipping a forehand passing shot down the line.

The Swede took the second set handily, but found himself in difficulty again in the third. He saved three set points to get into the tiebreaker, which he won 7-2, finishing with a backhand passing shot down the line.

The third set was played in a steady drizzle and gusty winds. At one point, a let was called when a white plastic fastfood tray floated onto the court.

"It was hard to play for awhile at the beginning and also at the end," Wilander said. "If I hadn't won the third set, the match might have been stopped and it's hand to play not knowing whether or not your are going to be able to continue."

CFA Coaches Discuss Scholarships

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

DALLAS — Coaches attending the College Football Association's annual meeting Saturday proposed a formula that would allow all Division I-A schools to reach the allowable number of 95 scholarship athletes in two years.

The proposal will be presented to the CFA's general business session Sunday. If also approved by the athletic directors and faculty representatives, the CFA could draw up legislation for next January's NCAA convention.

"It's the most compassionate, understanding, equality piece of legislation that's had a chance to pass since I've been in the NCAA," said Iowa State coach Jim Walden, who has been pushing such action for three years.

The plan would work like this: Iowa State will have 78 scholarship players this fall, 20 of whom will be in their final season of eligibility.

That would leave Walden with 58 players for 1990 but he can only recruit 25 under current NCAA rules. If he recruits the permissible maximum, he would have 83 scholarship players. If the NCAA approves his appeal, to get to 95 he would be allowed to recruit 31 this year (six over the limit) and 31 next year.

The difference must be made up equally over the two-year period. If it's an odd number, the larger number must be recruited the first year.

After the initial two-year chance for everyone to reach the limit, the right of appeal would apply to a coach who inherits a program that has dropped below 95.

It would not apply to schools on probation. In addition, coaches whose teams are placed on probation would not have the right to appeal.

"In other words, if Barry Switzer and Pat Jones get down in numbers and they stay at Oklahoma and Oklahoma State, they don't get an appeal," Walden explained. "If some other coach takes their place and they're down — new coach, new place — he gets an appeal."

While some schools have fewer than 95 scholarship players by choice, Walden said "probably about 10 (who are) under (don't have) the ability to get to 85. As hard as they try, they're having a tough time getting above 85.

"That's what this is all about — a way to allow 10 schools to get up to 95 at no cost to the 95 other schols. And there's no cost involved with extra money since we're all budgeted for 95. It's just a matter to make life easier and equitable for everyone.

"Every other sport has the right to go the maximum every year. Basketball coaches have the right idea and football coaches don't. It doesn't matter to a basketball coach if he loses eight guys; he recruits eight guys, as long as he doesn't exceed 15.

"It's taken me three years to get people to understand the injustice of having 10 Division I-A schools out there playing with less people because next year, you're gonna have SMU, TCU, me, Kansas State, Kansas, New Mexico, Akron, and it's really an injustice."

Walden said he had 58 scholarship players in 1987 and 70 last year. He suffers under current NCAA rules.

"The better job I do of hanging onto my players — which is what everybody wants me to do — it cuts off my nose. Because if I keep graduating 20 and I'm stuck at 78 and I lose five, which is the natural attrition rate, I'm going to be there forever while everybody else is playing with 95."

The coaches, athletic directors and faculty representatives met in closed meetings Saturday to decide what proposal to bring before Sunday's windup session.

The CFA's proposed 16-team playoff plan has been a major topic all weekend but it's not expected to come up for a vote.

"You don't plant the seed and harvest it tomorrow," CFA executive director Chuck Neinas said. "You need to plant it, water it, cultivate it and let it grow."

Roy Kramer, athletic director at Vanderbilt, cited two serious concerns about a playoff — the effect it would have on the bowls and the absence of the Big Ten and Pacific-10 Conferences, which are not CFA members.

"The athletic directors realize perhaps better than almost anybody that the bowl system has been very good to college football," Kramer said. "We are concerned about losing that if we go to a playoff, particularly in light of the fact that no one at this point really knows what a playoff will initiate, either from the standpoint of money, or pressure, or extended season, all of those things.

Detroit Hoping For Bad Boy Image

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHICAGO — The Detroit Pistons are eager to maintain their "bad boy" image against the Los Angeles Lakers in the NBA Finals, one of the bad boys says.

"We like people to hate us," Bill Laimbeer said. "We will be the underdogs in the Lakers series. It will be the bad guys against the good guys and hopefully the bad guys will win."

Laimbeer was a controversial figure again in Friday night's 103-94 victory over the Chicago Bulls that gave Detroit the Eastern Conference championship in six games.

Michael Jordan had 32 points and 13 assists in the finale, but the Bulls couldn't recover from losing starting forward Scottie Pippen in the first minute of the game. Pippen was hospitalized overnight after he was hit in the head by Laimbeer's elbow as they both jumped for a rebound.

Bulls coach Doug Collins thought the injury was no accident.

"It was another cheap shot from Laimbeer," Collins said. "We lost the battle of attrition."

Replays appeared to show the contact was inadvertent.

Isiah Thomas, who scored 17 of his 33 points in the fourth quarter Friday night, said he is two-thirds of the way to his goal for 1989.

"After we lost the seventh game to the Lakers last year, I said we would do three things this year," Thomas said. "I wanted us to have the best record in the NBA, to make the finals and win the finals. We've done two out of three and now we have to get the third."

The Pistons lost to the Lakers in seven games in last season's finals, but Detroit gets the homecourt advantage this time with four games at the Palace at Auburn Hills, including the first two on Tuesday and Thursday nights.

Detroit had the best record in the NBA this season, 63-19, compared to 57-25 for Los Angeles. "It means a lot to me to play the Lakers again," Thomas said. "I understand what the Celtics and Lakers felt all those years."

The Lakers are 11-0 and the Pistons 11-2 in the playoffs, but Thomas said what has happened so far has no relevance to what will happen in the finals.

"I don't think the series we played against Chicago, Milwaukee and Boston and what the Lakers did against Phoenix, Portland and Seattle has anything to do with the finals," Thomas said. "What beats you in the finals is individual people digging down deep inside. Plays don't beat you, it's people that beat you. And they beat you with their desire to win."

Coach Chuck Daly showed no hesitancy to use his four top reserves — Dennis Rodman, John Salley, Vinnie Johnson and James Edwards — as many minutes as his starters.

That depth and defense enabled the Pistons to win the last three games against the Bulls after Chicago led 2-1 in the series.

Detroit now has gone 15 games without allowing 100 points, including 13 straight in the playoffs.

"It's a tribute to our work ethic and rebounding that we have that streak," Daly said. "Now that streak will be tested against the Lakers. But I'll be happy if we win 112-111."

"We're right back to where we ended it last year," Lakers coach Pat Riley said of the rematch. "This is the way it's supposed to be — the best in the West against the best in the East. They said that they want to play us and now they've got the opportunity. It's going to be a great matchup."

Lakers Had Faith Pistons Would Win

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

INGLEWOOD, Calif — The Detroit Pistons upheld the Los Angeles Lakers' faith in their ability to beat the Chicago Bulls.

The Lakers figured they would play the Pistons again in the NBA Finals, and they will, after Detroit polished off Chicago in a six-game Eastern Conference finals which ended Friday night.

"We pretty much felt for a while it was going to be them and us," said Magic Johnson. "We've been waiting for them. They want us bad."

The Lakers beat the Pistons in seven games in last year's championship series.

Last year's finals are not a factor, according to guard Byron Scott.

"That was a long time ago and for a long time we never thought about seeing them again," Scott said. "All we were concerned about was making sure we got there again.

"But once they got the best record and we started moving through the playoffs, I was seeing the Pistons at the end of the line, and, yeah, that's the way I want it."

Detroit had the best record in the NBA this season, and the Lakers had the best in the Western Conference.

"This is the way it's supposed to be — the best in the West against the best in the East," Lakers coach Pat Riley said. It's going to be a great matchup."

Johnson agreed.

"It's going to be an exciting series," he said. "They have the toughest defense and we'll have to work hard and play well at both ends of the floor."

The best-of-7 series will begin Tuesday night in Auburn Hills, Mich.

The Lakers will be out to win the title for a third consecutive time, and for a fourth time in five years.

But Riley said the Lakers will have to concentrate on playing the Pistons above winning the championship for the third time.

"It's a thought process, more than anything. If you think that winning a championship is your main priority, you really miss out on the competition, the challenge," Riley said.

"They are challenging us more than anyone else has ever challenged us. And you've got to want them more than they want you."

The Lakers will be well-rested. It's been a week since they played their last game, completing their third sweep of the postseason competition by defeating the Phoenix Suns.

Workouts ended Friday, and the players were given Saturday off before flying east on Sunday.

The first two playoff games will be on the Pistons' court and then the teams come to the Forum for the next three. If necessary, they will return to Michigan to finish off the series.

Sabonis Signs

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MADRID, Spain — Arvydas Sabonis, who helped lead the Soviet Union to the basketball gold medal at the 1988 Olympics, apparently has decided to put his NBA career on hold for another year while he makes his professional debut in Spain.

On Saturday, Forum Filatelico of Valladolid in the Spanish League said Sabonis and teammate Valdemaras Homicius had signed one-year contracts.

At the same time, however, the NBA's Portland Trail Blazers, who drafted Sabonis in 1986, said they were told by Soviet sports officials that Sabonis had not been officially granted permission to sign with the Spanish team.

Less than two months ago, the Blazers said they were optimistic of signing the 7-foot-3 center since the International Olympic Committee had cleared professionals to play in the Games. Blazers spokesman John Lashway said on Saturday that team President Harry Glickman still planned to leave for Moscow on June 9 for further discussions concerning Sabonis.

The Blazers had hoped Sabonis would begin play next season, assuming he was sufficiently recovered from a chronic Achilles tendon problem.

"I am going to play with Forum for one year and then I would like to play in the NBA," Sabonis told Spanish television on Saturday. "Maybe I can play in the NBA. It's possible, and I would like it."

Forum Filatelico President Gonzalo Gonzalo said he sealed the deal with the 24-year-old Sabonis for $1 million on Friday in Guadalajara, east of Madrid.

Sunday Notebook:

DURHAM — It was a game that almost wasn't, but thanks to good fortune the skies cleared up and the Durham Bulls were able to take the field.

There's something about a Bulls game that's special. It's more than baseball, it's an event. Unfortunately, on Friday it was almost a non-event.

When game time rolled around at 7:30 there was no ceremonial first pitch. Instead, the field crew entertained the crowd by rolling out the infield tarp.

Still even with the overcast skies and a steady light rain, the park was almost full. As the rain picked up, most of the fans packed into the covered grandstand, lining the aisles to avoid getting wet.

Waiting impatiently for the rain to end, a group of 25 boys who were gathered for a birthday party sat on the edge of their seats quickly running out of patience.

Mark Foster of Raleigh was part of that group, celebrating his friend Phillip's eighth birthday. What's a kid to do when the game is delayed by rain. "I just sit here," Mark said.

Slowly, the rains let up and by 8 p.m. the tarp was pulled back and by 8:15 Jim 'Catfish' Hunter threw out the first pitch — Play ball.

The Bulls have long been a popular past-time for people in the Triangle. With the popularity of last summer's movie, 'Bull Durham' the interest has just increased.

Friday, 4,850 people showed up to see the Bulls play Prince William at rickety, old Durham Athletic Park, more affectionately known as the DAP.

For a lot of people, myself included, going to see the Bulls was part of a college ritual. Students from North Carolina, Duke and North Carolina State have long made the short trek to the DAP to catch a game, eat some nachos and drink some beer. But it's much more than that. Bulls' owner Miles Wolff has a gold mine here. Bulls games are a family event that packs them in all summer long.

Prince William pitcher Andy Cook kept the home fans quiet through most of the early part of the game Friday, as he pitched no-hit baseball through four-plus innings.

Still, the enthusiasm never wavered for the Bulls' faithful. Nachos continued to be crunched, hot dogs munched and beer guzzled.

But the matter wasn't decided until the late innings as Durham had to overcome a Prince William rally by scoring three runs in the eighth to take a 4-2 Carolina League win.

Wolff is in the process of trying to gather funds to build a newer, bigger stadium for his team. As it is now, fans are often turned away at the gate, even during weekday games.

Still, it won't be the same as the DAP. It won't have the same feeling. The original grandstand affords a great view of the game through a wire-mesh fence. At the top of the fence, a baseball is wedged into the top where no-one can get to it.

Down the first and third-base lines, bleachers have been added to increase the stadium's original capacity. On a warm summer night, the third base bleachers are the place to be.

See, the DAP is just a great place to see a game. It's small enough that there's not a bad seat in the house. And the only way to watch minor league baseball is up close.

The double outfield wall has a grass area behind left field where kids shag balls. Behind the right-field fence is the Bull, which was put in for the movie and kept on as a permanent feature. The Bull snorts smoke and moves it's tail up and down for a home run.

For many, half the fun of the game is eating ballpark food. At the DAP, you can get nachos, hot dogs, burritos, polish sausage, pizza, pretzels, popcorn, peanuts and ice cream. Sure, it's not the healthiest food in the world but it sure tastes good.

I try to make it to a couple of Bulls' games each summer, pick out a space near third base on the bleachers, pick up a hot dog and some nachos and sit back and do something I don't get to do too often — just be a fan.

Looking At The Baseball Draft

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

On June 5, 1982, the Minnesota Twins' future looked bright. They had the fourth pick in the baseball draft that morning and when it came their time to select, the player they wanted was still available.

"It was an obvious choice," recalled George Brophy, then the Twins' vice president for scouting. "Bryan Oelkers had been the college pitcher of the year. He was exactly what we needed. So we took him."

The New York Mets had the next pick. They took Dwight Gooden.

"Sure, now everybody asks why we didn't get Gooden," said Brophy, currently a scout for Houston. "But he was still in high school, and I'll bet there haven't been 10 high-school pitchers to make it big. The Mets caught lightning in a bottle that day."

On Monday, all 26 major league teams will try to do the same when the three-day draft begins. The Baltimore Orioles hold the No. 1 pick for the first time and are expected to take Ben McDonald, a pitcher from Louisiana State.

Unlike the highly publicized NFL and NBA drafts, where first-round picks almost automatically make the team and it is easy to project at least a dozen future stars, nothing is certain in baseball's more obscure picking process. Only half of the players taken in the first round will ever be successful because too many things can happen on the way to the big leagues.

The Seattle Mariners thought they had a sure thing when they made Al "Choo Choo" Chambers the top pick in the 1979 draft. Chambers, a big hitter in high school, eventually made it to the majors for a few games but soon disappeared.

That same year, the Los Angeles Dodgers gambled in the 17th round on the third-best starter on the Bowling Green University staff. That was Orel Hershiser.

"He wasn't overpowering, but he had a good arm. Also, there was his makeup and continual pursuit of improvement," Dodgers general manager Fred Claire said.

"You've got to give credit to our scouting staff. He didn't come by accident," he said. "After all, the 17th round is a long way down, but at the same time, that is the 17th-best player you've put into your system in that given year. And that's not a throw-away draft."

In the 19th round the same year, the New York Yankees drafted a high school player from Indiana who had a pretty swing. He was Don Mattingly.

"At the time, I thought I should've been taken higher," Mattingly said. "But when I look back on it, I can see why I wasn't. I couldn't run and I couldn't throw. All I could do was hit, and no one knows if a good high school hitter will ever make it to the majors."

Last year, only eight of the 26 picks in the first round were high school players. But this year, nine of the first 15 picks are expected to come from high school, with Atlanta projected to make outfielder Earl Cunningham the second choice.

In recent years, more teams have selected college players, hoping to get immediate help without so much risk. The California Angels made Jim Abbott the eighth choice last year and Baltimore took Gregg Olson with the fourth pick. The No. 1 player was pitcher Andy Benes, selected by San Diego.

In 1982, Oakland waited until the 15th round to draft a still-developing high school star from Florida — Jose Canseco. Kansas City held off until the 19th round the same year before taking a high school pitcher from Los Angeles who had arm trouble — Bret Saberhagen.

Wade Boggs went in the seventh round to Boston in 1976, Kent Hrbek was Minnesota's 17th-round choice in 1978 and Eric Davis signed after being taken by Cincinnati in the eighth round in 1980.

Amazing Orioles Have Turned Tables

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

DETROIT (AP) — Frank Robinson says he saw it coming. Cal Ripken says the Baltimore manager hasn't seen anything yet.

That's the kind of effect the amazing Orioles are having, both on themselves and on the rest of the American League East.

This is the team, remember, that got off to the now infamous 0-21 start in 1988 and went on to finish 54-107, the worst record in baseball. Today the Orioles lead the AL East at 28-22 and are the only team in the division over .500.

"I saw it coming," Robinson said. "I knew that if the pitching was there, we've have a chance. I knew we weren't going to score a lot of runs. But with pitching, I thought we could scrap and make it happen."

Last year, the pitching staff finished with a 4.55 ERA. This year, after a 4-1 win Friday night over Detroit, the ERA was 3.54.

Symbolic of that turnaround is left-hander Jeff Ballard who was 8-12 with a 4.40 ERA in 1988. This season Ballard is 8-1 with a nifty 2.07 ERA.

"At the end of last season, 1988 was over as far as we were concerned," Ballard said. "Everything was positive in spring training. Everybody was pulling for one another.

"In spring training, there was never a thought about losing. It was, 'How many games are we going to win.'"

The Orioles also have been blessed with a wonderful infusion of youth. The club's average age last season went from 29 in April to 26 in October.

The Orioles' No. 1 draft pick last June, Gregg Olson, is 3-0 with five saves and Bob Malicki, who led the International League with 11 complete games, is 3-5 after a two-hitter against the Tigers on Friday.

"The key is the fact that we're in a rebuilding mode," Ripken said. "We had a lot of talented players in spring training and they're panning out faster than anybody thought they would. It seems pretty simple, but it's not.

"One thing about a young developing team is that we could get better as the season progresses. So you can remain pretty optimistic about that. But it's a long, long season. I don't think anybody's kidding themselves that it's over yet."

USOC To Begin Drug Testing With USSR

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

DES MOINES, Iowa — The U.S. Olympic Committee received the go-ahead Saturday to begin a cooperative drug testing program with the Soviet Union, an effort hailed as a major step toward eliminating drugs from international competition.

"This will level the playing field," said two-time Olympic gold medalist Edwin Moses, chairman of the USOC's drug abuse committee.

If the governing bodies of the various U.S. sports federations agree to details, technicians from the United States and Soviet Union will work together in testing athletes of both nations for drug use.

The Soviets already have approved the arrangement.

A key feature of the program, approved Saturday by the USOC's Executive Board, will allow one nation to demand "short-notice" testing — within 48 hours — of an athlete from the other country. The first tests could be conducted later this year.

The first tests are expected to be conducted late this summer, USOC Executive Director Baaron Pittenger said. And while the board attached several conditions to safeguard the rights of American athletes, Pittenger insisted they would not weaken the effort.

"All of these issues that were included today are things which we had discussed with the Soviets earlier," Pittenger said. "My sense is none of these conditions are going to have a significant impact on the final program."

Dr. Don Catlin, director of the Olympic testing laboratory at UCLA, said the joint effort by two of the world's major powers could go a long way toward promoting a "world of substance-free athletics."

"This goes to the fundamental core of the problem," said Catlin, who noted that East Germany also wants to be part of the arrangement.

"If a major Eastern nation and a major Western nation can sit down side-by-side and develop a program and execute that program and it has an impact on the problem, it would be applicable across all international boundaries."

Pittenger said West Germany and Italy also have shown interest in joining a cooperative testing program.

"Hopefully, there will be other agreements and other players who eventually will supplant this," Pittenger said, "Because it's a worldwide problem. It's not just a U.S.-Soviet problem."

Moses, who won gold medals in the 400-meter intermediate hurdles at the 1976 and '84 Olympics, said eradicating drugs would ease a major concern of many U.S. athletes, who feel they are at a disadvantage when competing against athletes who use performance-enhancing chemicals.

"We know that certain athletes may use drugs," he said. "We don't know who is and who is not, but obviously there is a certain amount of drug use and we want to eliminate it."

Under the agreement, U.S. and Soviet Union technicians will work together in collecting and analyzing samples at labs in the two countries.

"We want to preserve the dignity of the athletes," Pittenger said. "We think the athletes would find it offensive to be tested by an expert for another country."

Initially, those labs would be in Moscow and Los Angeles. While the program gets under way, Soviet technicians would spend four months in the United States and U.S. technicians would spend four months in the Soviet Union.

Both countries will be required to provide a list of athletes who could be called in for short-notice testing by the other nation.

Texas Earns 7-1 Victory Over Long Beach State

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

OMAHA, Neb. — Craig Newkirk drove in three runs to back the six-hit pitching of Kirk Dressendorfer and lead Texas to a 7-1 win over Long Beach State Saturday in the first round of the College World Series.

Scott Bryant, the NCAA leader in RBIs with a school-record 109, had three hits and knocked in two runs while David Lowery had three hits and an RBI for the second-seeded Longhorns, 52-17.

Dressendorfer, a sophomore who improved his record to 17-2, struck out six while limiting the 49ers to six singles en route to his 15th complete game of the season.

The seventh-seeded 49ers, 50-14, took a 1-0 lead when Don Barbara opened the second inning with a single, was sacrificed to second and scored on Todd Lloyd's single to right.

But Texas, making a record 25th appearance in the NCAA Division I championship tournament, took a 3-1 lead in the third inning on a two-run double by Newkirk and Lowery's RBI single off previously unbeaten freshman Andy Croghan, 12-1.

Croghan allowed three earned runs and 10 of Texas' 15 hits while striking out three in 6 2-3 innings.

Texas put the game away with four runs in the eighth off reliever Greg Hayes. Clay King opened with a single and took second on a walk to Steve Bethea. Two outs later, David Tollison singled in King, Bryant added a two-run single and, after a walk, Newkirk singled in his third run.

The victory was No. 1,101 for Texas coach Cliff Gustafson.

Long Beach State, the third-best defensive team in the nation with a .970 fielding average, commited three errors but none figured in the scoring.

Lee Trevino Gets Ready For The Seniors Tour

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

DALLAS — It's coming up on roses time for Lee Trevino.

For almost a quarter of a century, Trevino has swaggered around the globe building a reputation as one of the most popular figures pro golf has produced.

He's been too busy to heed Walter Hagan's advice: "Be sure to stop and smell the roses along the way."

"All my life I've been doing what other people wanted me to do. Now I'm going to do what I want to do," Trevino said.

That, of course, is play golf. But this time he's going to play golf on his terms.

"I've been all over the world, around the world I don't know how many time. But all I've ever seen is the airport and the hotel and the golf course, and then you go back to the airport and fly to another airport and go to another hotel and another golf course," he said.

"This is my last time around. This time I want to enjoy it."

That last time around begins in December for the man who called himself "the Merry Mex" when he burst upon golf's world stage as the upstart U.S. Open champion of 1968, a fast-talking refugee from a desert driving range.

Trevino turns 50 Dec. 1. He will join the Seniors PGA Tour the next week in the Kaanapali Classic on the Hawaiian resort island of Maui.

"I've been looking forward to this for seven years," Trevino said.

So have the Seniors. And the PGA Tour Commissioner. And television's major networks.

It seems something other that coincidental that long-term contracts have been signed for television coverage of such important Seniors' events as the PGA and the Players Championships.

These contracts become effective next year, Trevino's first full season as a Senior.

"He could have the greatest impact on the Seniors Tour of anyone since Arnold Palmer," said Commissioner Deane Beman.

"Lee will certainly be a great added attraction to the Seniors Tour. He will be a definite factor," said Arnold Palmer, whose personal magnetism helped provide the Seniors Tour with its enormous success.

"Lee will be a tremendous asset to the Seniors," said Jack Nicklaus, who has indicated he will play an extremly limited schedule when he becomes eligible for the Seniors in January.

"He's one of the most popular players who ever lived. The Seniors tour has been very successful and Lee will open up a whole new dimension for them," Nicklaus said.

"Lee will be a great asset to this tour," Gary Player said. "We will benefit tremendously. He's a dear friend and I'm anxious for his arrival. There's a good chance he'll be the dominant player."

Beman agreed.

"You'd expect him to win and win consistently," the Commissioner said.

That's what Trevino expects. "I expect to win five tournaments or more the first year. I expect to shoot some very low scores," said Trevino, whose rags to riches saga grew around the peaks of six major victories, two U.S. Open titles, two British Open crowns, two PGA national championships.

Those expectations are based not on hope but on the solid foundation of preparation.

"I've dedicated this year to getting ready for the Seniors," said Trevino, who has dieted away some excess poundage and declares himself "in the best shape of my life."

He's playing a heavy schedule of regular Tour events, perhaps as many as 20 or more before his December debute in Hawaii.

And he's beating hundreds of golf balls a day.

"It's just like when I joined the Tour all those years ago," Trevino said. "I looked at Billy Casper. He was the best player out there in the late '60s.

"I figured he had three times the talent I had. But he didn't practice much. Didn't then, doesn't now. So I said, 'okay, I'll work three times as hard as he does.'

"I still have the talent. It hasn't gone away. And I still have the nerve. You never know if the nerves are still there until you put them to the test, put them under pressure.

"I felt the nerve in Augusta (at the Masters, where he led for two rounds). The nerve is fine. I wanted to be there (in contention). I was glad to be there. That's important.

"I never was a long hitter, but I'm still about as long as I ever was. The Seniors play a lot of short courses, so I should be in good shape there. But on the Seniors, the big thing is chipping and putting. And that's my strength."

His fascination with the Seniors began seven years ago, Trevino said, after a medical procedure — "they burned a nerve in my back," he said — solved a chronic back problem that threatened to end his playing career.

"Of course, at that time, I had no idea the Seniors (Tour) would grow like it has. It's just gotten bigger and bigger and bigger," he said.

So he signed a very lucretive five-year contract with NBC as an expert commentator on golf telecasts. That contract expired two years ago.

"NBC wanted to sign me for five more years," Trevino said. "I said, 'I'll give you two.' Because I knew I wanted to play the Seniors.

"I mean, when I came on the (regular) Tour we were playing for a total fo $8 million. Now, next year, the Seniors are going to be playing for $17-$20 million. That's a helluva difference."

That's one of the reasons — but not the sole, or even principal reason — Trevino is making such a concerted effort to hit the Seniors Tour with as much impact as possible.

"I want to win Kaanapali as much as I've ever wanted anything in my life," he said, "I'm going to go there a week early, play the golf course twice a day.

"Oh, I'll be nervous. Everybody in the world will be shooting at me. I'm gonna be the new kid on the block and they're gonna want to stop me.

"But what I want to do is win that and get in the Tournament of Champions (the kickoff event on the 1990 Tour schedule, with sections for winners from both the regular Tour and the Seniors Tour).

"I'll try extremely hard to win Kaanapali," he repeated, then let that impish grin split the swarthy face.

"But nothing would give me greater satisfaction than to win one out here (on the regular tour) and go to the Tournament of Champions and say, 'hey, guys, does this mean I can collect from both sides of the purse?'"

The pursuit of the dollar has been his prime consideration most of his life, Trevino said. But no longer.

"I've always had all those outings and contracts to do and I was running around the world and not ever seeing anything and I was making a helluva lot of money because that's what the game is all about.

"That's one reason I constructed all my contracts to end in '89.

"For the first time in my life I'm going to be able to do what I want to do.

"And that's play golf. That's all I ever wanted to do, play golf. I'd rather play golf than eat," he said.

His voice then went into a lower register and the quick-quipping jokester known to golf galleries and television audiences around the world was replaced by a thoughtful, vulnerable, yearning figure.

"I love this game so much," he said.

"I'm 50 years old.

"This is my last time around. I want to enjoy it. I want to have fun. I will enjoy it because I'll be with all the old guys I've been with all my life.

"I don't want to have to do any Monday deals, any Tuesday outings. I don't want to have to jump on a plane Sunday and go cut a commercial in Idaho.

"Now I'm in a financial position where I can call the shots. Before, somebody else called the shots.

"This is the frosting on the cake. I knew I'd get the cake. That's the Seniors Tour.

"But this is the frosting. With my new wife, with this baby, this is like starting a new life, starting all over again.

"But starting all over in completely different position. Being financially secure makes it an entirely different thing."

Sunday Silence Hopes For Triple Crown

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — He arrived in the Big Apple without fanfare. Lots of celebrities do.

By 6 p.m. next Saturday, Sunday Silence could be the toast of the town — winner of the Belmont Stakes, champion of the Triple Crown.

sunday silence. Yesterday's news.

Twenty-two 3-year-olds have preceded Sunday Silence to Belmont Park as winners of the Kentucky Derby and Preakness.

At the end of the trip over Belmont's 1½-mile track, half of them became Triple Crown champions.

The last to gain horse racing's greatest prize was Affirmed, who beat Alydar by a head in a stirring Belmont duel after having beaten him by 1½ lengths in the 1¼-mile Derby and by a neck in the 1 3-16-mile Preakness.

Two years ago, Alysheba, a son of Alydar, won the Derby and Preakness, but finished fourth in the Belmont.

This year, Easy Goer, another son of Alydar, finds himself playing the role of spoiler. He finished second as the betting favorite in the first two races, losing by 2½ lengths in the Derby and by a nose in the Preakness. If he finishes second again at Belmont he will join his father as the only horses to be the runnerup in all three Triple Crown races.

Easy Goer appears once again to be Sunday Silence's main challenger, but there will be no shortage of challenges.

No Triple Crown winner has faced more than seven challengers. Citation, 1948, and Seattle Slew, 1977, each beat that many. Sir Barton, 1919, and Count Fleet, 1943, beat two apiece.

A 10-horse field is expected for this Belmont. Entries for the 121st Belmont will be drawn Thursday.

"Where are they all coming from?" Charlie Whittingham, who trains Sunday Silence, wondered Thursday. "But there's nothing you can do. Everybody's in the same boat. We don't care."

Besides Easy Goer, five of Sunday Silence's probable rivals ran in either the Derby or Preakness, or both.

Hawkster finished fifth in both races. Awe Inspiring, Easy Goer's stablemate, finished third in the Derby; Rock Point was third in the Preakness; Irish Actor was seventh in the Derby, and Triple Buck finished ninth in the Derby.

Awe Inspiring won the Jersey Derby last Monday at Garden State Park; Irish Actor finished second in the Peter Pan at Belmont Park the day before, and Triple Buck won an allowance race May 26 at Belmont.

Scheduled to make their debuts in Triple Crown competition are Imbiker, winner of the Peter Pan; Fire Maker, who was fourth in the Peter Pan, and Le Voyageur.

Le Voyageur, owned by Calumet Farm, was sent to France to race, but the colt didn't take to racing on the grass. Trainer Patrick Biancone has been working the colt on a dirt training track at Chantilly and recommended he be entered in the Belmont.

There have been five Belmont winners in this decade who did not run in either the Derby or Preakness. They were Temperence Hill, 1980; Summing, 1981; Conquistador Cielo, 1982; Creme Fraiche, 1985, and Danzig Connection, 1986.

In the 11 Belmonts in which the Derby-Preakness champions were beaten, six of the winners did not start in either of the first two races. They were Bounding Home, 1944; Cavan, 1958; Forward Pass, 1968; Pass Catcher, 1971; Coastal, 1979, and Summing, 1981.

The biggest Belmont field in a near-miss year was 12 when Pass Catcher won and Canonero II, the Derby-Preakness winner, finished fourth.

"I think he'll get the mile and a half," Whittingham said of Sunday Silence.

"He's got speed and speed counts in these races," Whittingham added.

While the Belmont's distance would seem to favor horses who come from off the pace, the winners of 10 of the last 25 Belmonts were never worse than second, and Bet Twice, 1987, was not worse than third.

Bold Forbes, 1976; Seattle Slew, 1977, and Affirmed, 1978, led every step of the way. Riva Ridge, 1972; Secretariat, 1973, and Swale, 1984, were ahead at every pole.

Should Sunday Silence become the 12th Triple Crown winner, he would earn a $5 million bonus, which would include the winner's purse in each of the three races.

If there is no Triple Crown winner, a $1 million bonus would go to the horses with the most points, based on 5 for first, 3 for second and 1 for third. Horses must finish all three races to be eligible.

The only two who can win the bonus this year are Sunday Silence, who has 10 points, and Easy Goer, who has 6. Hawkster can complete the series, but he has no points.

The only way Easy Goer can win $1 million is to win the Belmont while Sunday Silence finishes worse than third. If Easy Goer wins and Sunday Silence finishes third, they would split the $1 million.

When a reporter asked a guard at the Belmont Park stable gate on May 23 if Sunday Silence had arrived yet from Baltimore, the guard replied, "Who's that?"

Told of the incident, Whittingham said, "He's like Rodney Dangerfield. He doesn't get any respect."

Whittingham was joking. A horse who wins the Derby and Preakness gets respect.

Now Sunday Silence is after the loot and the legend.

Easy Goer-Sunday Silence: A Mirror Of Affirmed-Alydar

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Charlie Rose looked at the television screen and the memories came flooding back.

Sunday Silence and Easy Goer, battling through the stretch in the Preakness, were electronic images. The images in Rose's mind were bigger than life.

They were of Affirmed and Alydar going head-to-head in the stretch of the Belmont Stakes in the late afternoon of Saturday, June 10, 1978.

"I sure empathize with Shug and his people," Rose, who was Alydar's excercise rider, said after watching Easy Goer follow in his father's footsteps.

"I guess I'm going to start hearing a lot of Alydar and Affirmed," Shug McGaughey, who trains Easy Goer, said after his colt's nose defeat in the Preakness.

Talk about a sure thing.

Next Saturday in the 1½-mile Belmont, Sunday Silence can become the first Triple Crown winner since Affirmed and Easy Goer can join Alydar as the only horses to finish second in all three races.

"You can see a lot of Alydar in him," said Charlie Rose, who continues as Veitch's right-hand man.

"He's not quite as dark a chestnut," Veitch said of Easy Goer. But he has the same head, same shoulders, same neck."

When it comes to racing style, however, both Vietch and Rose feel Easy Goer is more like his sire's archrival.

"Easy Goer's style of running is more like Affirmed's," Veitch said. "He can do more things."

"This horse seems like a handier horse," Rose said. "Alydar was a one-run horse."

"Alydar had really no versatility," Veitch said.

After Alydar's stretch rallies fell 1½ lengths short in the Derby and a neck short in the Preakness, John Veitch tried to break the mold in the Belmont.

Despite its being the longest of the Triple Crown races at 1½ miles, the Belmont often is won by a horse on or near the lead, so the trainer decided to have Alydar contest the issue from the start.

In the Derby, Alydar was eighth and Affirmed was second after three quarters of a mile. Alydar was fourth and Affirmed first at the same point in the Preakness.

Steve Cauthen sent Affired right to the front. Alydar, ridden by Jorge Velasquez, got away okay and was second with a mile to go.

Halfway down the back stretch, with about three-quarters of a mile remaining, Alydar moved almost abreast of Affirmed.

Watching on television in trainer David Whitely's barn at Belmont was a Whitely assistant, Shug McGaughey.

"He's going to go on," McGaughey thought as Alydar moved on Affirmed.

Alydar didn't go on, but he did hang tough.

As they straightened for the stretch run, the two colts appeared even. The crowd of 65,417 was now completely into the race. Perhaps this would be Alydar's day.

"My horse don't let nobody go in front of him," said Affirmed's trainer, Laz Barrera.

Affirmed was on the rail, and Alydar was so close to him as they approached the finish that suddenly Cauthen couldn't whip right-handed.

The 18-year-old jockey kept his cool.

In trying to explain Cauthen's poise and ability beyond his years, Barrera, a native of Cuba, once said, "It's like he's from another planet. He came here on a flying sausage."

Back at the barn, Shug McGaughey reacted. "I just took my hat off and threw it down."

"It's kind of unfair to compare these two to Affirmed and Alydar," Charlie Rose said. He meant in terms of rivalries.

The Belmont will be the third meeting of Sunday Silence and Easy Goer. The Belmont was the ninth meeting between Affirmed and Alydar.

"It was one of the great rivalries in the history of the sport," Steve Cauthen once said. "I'm proud to have been a part of it."

It almost was nipped in the bud. In the summer of 1977, after the two colts had met two or three times, Admiral and Mrs. Gene Markey, then owners of Calumet Farm, received an offer, through Lesle Combs, then owner of Spendthrift Farm, to sell Alydar.

The interested party was Louis Wolfson of Harbor View Farm, the owner of Affirmed.

Late on the afternoon of April 27, 1978, a station wagon parked near the winner's circle at Keeneland. Inside were the Markeys, who were in their 80s and confined to wheelchairs.

They had come from their nearby farm to watch Alydar race in the Blue Grass Stakes in Calumet's famed devil's red and blue silks, which had been worn by eight Kentucky Derby winners and two Triple Crown winners — Whirlaway in 1941 and Citation in 1948.

Alydar won the Blue Grass by 13 lengths. Calumet hopes were high for the Derby 10 days away at Churchill Downs.

Affirmed had won four of six races against Alydar the previous year, including a neck triumph in the Laurel Futurity Oct. 29.

The strapping Alydar, however, had looked great in winning an allowance race, the Flamingo, Florida Derby and Blue Grass in four starts as a 3-year-old.

Affirmed, who had physically matured during the winter, but was still smaller than Alydar, was taken to California for his pre-Derby races, where his training was hampered by rain.

Affirmed's first start, a victory in an allowance race, came four days after Alydar's second race. His third start, a win in the Santa Anita Derby, was 25 days before Alydar's Blue Grass victory. In between, Affirmed won the San Felipe Handicap.

"I didn't think there was a chance in hell Affirmed could beat us," Charlie Rose said.

Laz Barrera was not lacking in the confidence department.

"May the best horse win," a well-wisher told him.

"Yeah," Affirmed's trainer said. "May the best horse win — again."

With a half-mile remaining in the 1¼-mile Derby, Affirmed was third behind Sensitive Prince and Raymond Earl. Alydar was eighth, 11 lengths off the lead, and Jorge Velasquez was worried.

"He couldn't handle it (the track)," Velasquez said. "He only started running the last eighth of a mile."

Affirmed took the lead on the final turn, but relinquished it briefly at the quarter pole. Alydar circled horses on the turn and was 4½ lengths off the lead turning for home.

Alydar moved to third with an eighth of a mile to go and passed Believe it with 70 yards left, but was 1½ lengths shy of Affirmed at the wire.

"How's he going to beat us in the Preakness," Charlie Rose wondered.

Affirmed took the lead in the 1 3-16-mile Preakness after Raymond Earl, who led through the first quarter, began bearing out. He set easy fractions of 47 3-5 for the half and 1:11 4-5 for three-quarters. Cauthen knew the race had not yet begun.

"My horse and I were waiting for Alydar," he said.

Alydar was sixth, 5½ lengths off the lead, after a half mile and fourth, a little more than 2 lengths back, after three quarters. After a mile, he was virtually even with Affirmed.

"I thought I might win the race," Velasquez said, but once again Affirmed would not yield and at the wire he a neck in front.

"With the distance of a mile and a half in the Belmont, there's no way he can beat us," Charlie Rose thought.

Affirmed and Alydar raced against one another one more time. Affirmed finished 1¾ lengths ahead of his rival in the Travers at Saratoga in August but Alydar got the win when Affirmed was disqualified and placed second. They both raced as 4-year-olds, then were retired to stud. Affirmed was voted Horse of the Year in 1978 and in 1979, but Alydar has been the better stallion. Another of his sons, Alyshba, won the Derby and Preakness and the 3-year-old championship in 1987 and was voted Horse of the Year in 1988.

Steve Cauthen, who went into a horrendous slump in late 1978 and early 1979, started riding in England in 1979 and still is based there. Jorge Velasquez has ridden two winners of the English Derby and three times has been champion rider of England. Velasquez continues to ride in New York, but was based in France for a year in 1986-87.

Laz Barrera, a member of the Hall of Fame, continues to train in California. John Veitch is based in New York and trains for Darby Day Farm.

Duck hunters throughout North America are responding to calls for "voluntary restraint" in a growing effort to save North America's declining duck populations.

The North American Voluntary Restraint program launched last fall by the North American Wildlife Foundation, and its world renowned Delta Waterfowl and Wetlands Research Station, is a grass roots effort by duck hunters to protect the breeding stock of game ducks from further decline. The North American Wildlife Foundation is a non-profit organization founded in 1911 by concerned sportsmen. It is committed through research and education to expanding the efforts to reverse the decline in waterfowl populations. Voluntary Restraint asks duck hunters to forgo shooting a limit of ducks, or to stop hunting temporarily and only shoot with a camera, to ensure that the breeding population is not further reduced. North American Voluntary Restraint Program members who do shoot, only shoot drakes, to allow hens to continue reproducing.

The program in its first year was endorsed by numerous state waterfowl groups, many national conservation organizations, and thousands of duck hunters from coast to coast. The "voluntary restraint" pins worn by participants are quickly becoming a symbol for responsibility and sportsmanship among duck hunters.

"Those who take part in voluntary restraint are making a very positive statement about hunter values. They are sending the message that they will go above and beyond government requirements in order to preserve the sport of duck hunting," said Charles S. Potter Jr., Executive Vice President of the North American Wildlife Federation.

The threat to ducks today is seen as even greater than at any time since the Dust Bowl days of the 1930's. Nearly a decade of drought on the breeding grounds has dried up wetlands, reduced production habitat, and caused duck poulations to plummet. Yet despite record low populations, the governments of the U.S. and Canada have been slow to implemet conservation measures. Now hunters themselves are taking the initiative.

"It is time that we, the hunters, take the necessary action and based upon the broad acceptance of Voluntary Restraint in its first year, we know that duck hunters will do whatever it takes. We hope this fall as Voluntary Restraints statement of sportsmanship and individual responsibility for the preservation of wildfowling continues to spread, that it will be practiced by all concerned waterfowlers," Potter said.

The North American Wildlife Foundation recognizes that Voluntary Restraint by itself will not bring back the ducks, but believes that it is a positive step hunters can take right now to protect the breeding stock until the breeding habitat recovers from the drought.

Steve Camp, a duck hunter from Greenville, supports the concept of Voluntary Restraint. "I want to be able to sit in a duck blind with my son and see him enjoy the sport as I've enjoyed it in the past. I'm a supporter of reduced harvest and a self-imposed drakes only policy."

Another local huner, Stewart Goodson, also supports the policy. "I'm all for shooting drakes only or reducing bag limits, but still want to maintain the opportunity to be able to go duck hunting. I think that it would be hard for a lot of duck hunters to be able to learn to shoot drakes only, but it would be a good idea if everyone that was serious about duck hunting take the time to learn the identity and distinguish ducks on the wing. This would help conserve the fragile duck populations as a natural resource."

Paul Farley, a duck hunter from Benson, also supports the ideas of the Voluntary Restraint program. "I'd rather see a longer season with stricter limitations, a drakes only policy, and reduced bag limits than a short season with higher bag limits. Its much more important to me to just be able to go hunting than it is to see how many I can shoot. I enjoy just being able to get out in the marsh and watch the ducks fly."

For further information concerning this program, hunters should write: National Voluntary Restraint Program c/o North American Wildlife Foundation, 102 Wilmont Rd., Suite 410, Deerfield, Il. 60015. For information, call (312) 940-7776.

Pier Operators Awaiting Mackeral

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The king mackerel has yet to show up in abundance along the North Carolina coast, and pier and marina operators are getting a little anxious.

"We still don't have any kings," said Hardin Crouch of the Jolly Roger Pier on Topsail Island. "We're all wondering what's holding back the kings. They could break loose any day."

Andy McCann of Nags Head Fishing Pier said the kings would show up as soon as the water warmed up and stayed that way.

"As soon as the water temperature gets up and holds for awhile, they'll be in," he said.

Despite the absence of the kings, other summer fish are starting to show up, including cobia and albacore. Also, blues and Spanish mackerel continue to run well.

Hatteras

"They're catching quite a few dolphin, some large wahoo, some nice blue marlin and a few sailfish and some yellowfin tuna," Hissey said.

Closer to shore, Hissey reported the cobia were starting to run and said he caught a 56-pounder on Tuesday.

"Inshore trollers are doing good on Spanish, Atlantic bonito and albacore" as well, he said. A few flounders are showing up as well.

"The surf fishing has been slow," he said. "We've seen a few pompano, a few trout and a mixed bag of small stuff."

Topsail Island

Other than missing the king mackerel, Crouch had a good report.

"The weather is beautfil down here," he said. "Sunday night, Monday and Tuesday morning we've had ... a right good little run of spots. We got just a few of the blues, Spanish and the flounder have been coming in right well. It looks like a good many flounder showed up within the past week."

Crouch also reported catches of whiting and pompano.

Wrightsville Beach

At Crystal Pier, George Fokakis reported one small king had been caught in his area.

"They've been getting a few blues and some Spanish," he said. "They caught a small king (Tuesday) and a few flounders."

Bream Are Fly Fisher's Main Target

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ATLANTA — Fly fishing for bluegills, known as bream in the South, has to be sinful.

Everything else that's as much fun seems to be.

The bluegill, which must be the Lord's favorite fish, because he made so many of them in so many places, is a prime target for light to medium fly fishing gear.

The plop of a "gill" hitting a top-water bug has much more gusto than the slurp of a stream trout feeding on hatching insects.

A 7½- to 8-foot graphite rod that throws a 4- to 6-weight line will do the job. Anything less you're showing off, any more and you're using whaling gear.

While a number of regular trout flies will take bluegills, popping bugs of cork or plastic seem to be the most popular object to hang on to a 4-pound leader tippet.

The bugs' color seems to make a difference. I don't know why, but the fish do.

I have been blanked with a yellow bug, changed to a red one of the same shape and size and started pulling them in by the stringer-load.

Size of the bugs will run between 6 and 12. The shapes are in four basic classes:

—The cupped front that makes a pop.

—The nosecone-shaped slider which leaves a small wake when retrieved in short jerks.

—Flat-faced, longer bodies that react in between those two.

—A new back-sloped face that causes the bug to dip under the surface just a mite like a crippled shiner has been effective for me this season.

Preemptive bidding is a two-edged sword. Sometimes it will force the opponents to misguess at a high level; on other occasions, it will draw a blueprint of the distribution for declarer.

This hand is from a weekly club game at New York's renowned Cavendish Club which attracts most of the city's best players. Sitting South was Edith Sacks. When she jumped in response to her partner's takeout double, he checked to make sure his side was not off two aces before putting her in a spade slam.

West led a diamond, and it might seem declarer would need either an even trump distribution, to allow her to ruff two hearts in dummy after discarding a club on the fourth diamond, or a successful club finesse to get home. However, the opening preempt made both those possibilities remote, but provided an elegant riposte.

Declarer won the opening lead in dummy and drew three rounds of trumps. The rest of the diamonds were cashed, allowing declarer to discard her club loser. Next, declarer cashed the ace of clubs and ruffed a club in hand.

Since West had followed to three rounds of diamonds, two clubs and a trump, and presumably had started with seven hearts, he had now been stripped of all his exit cards. Declarer delivered the coup de grace. She exited with the king of hearts!

West was well and truly end-played. If he led the queen of hearts, declarer would ruff and claim the rest of the tricks; if he exited with a low heart, declarer would run it to her jack, ruff her last heart and then claim.

Proper Equipment, Paints Keys To Sound Exterior Improvements

By Reader's Digest
For THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Painting a home's exterior is time consuming, but with the right paints and equipment you can produce professional-looking results.

Selecting a Good Brush

Brushes come in many shapes and sizes but good brushes all have the following qualities:

— Bristles are "flagged," a term that signifies splits on the bristle end. The more flags the better — they help retain paint. Hog bristle is naturally flagged, synthetic bristle artificially flagged.

— Test for "bounce" by brushing bristles against the back of your hand. They should feel springy and elastic.

— When the brush is gently pressed on any surface, good bristles will not fan out excessively.

— Bristles should be solidly set to prevent fallout while painting. Jar the brush and fan the bristles — any loose bristles will be apparent. The metal band on a brush, the ferrule, is generally stainless steel or aluminum on better brushes.

Types of Brushes

— Both the area to be painted and the type of paint have a bearing on the size and style of brush. For painting large areas, use a flat 3- to 5-inch brush. For woodwork and other trim, a 1- to 2-inch brush is best.

— Calcimine brushes with very long, tough and elastic bristles are best for applying water-thinned paints to large areas. A special brush with very tough fiber or nylon bristles, ranging in width from 4- to 6-inches, is recommended for rough stucco or masonry surfaces.

Rollers and Pads

Rollers come in various sizes and with handles of different lengths. Special extensions help reach ceilings or floors without stooping.

— For average wall or ceiling work, a 7- or 9-inch wide roller is good. Other sizes range from 2-inch up to 18-inch. Special roller shapes are useful for special situations. A cone-shape roller can get into corners and a V-shape will coat two sides of a corner at once.

— The roller cover should be compatible with the paint. Lamb's wool and synthetic fibers are excellent for latex and alkyd paints while enamel requires mohair. Rollers made of synthetic fibers can be used with all flat paints indoors or out.

— The length of the nap of rollers varies from 1-16th to 1½ inches. The smoother the surface being painted, the shorter the nap required. The rougher the surface, the longer the nap required.

— Brush pads apply paint quickly but tend to cause streaks. They are useful on siding, shingles, wide trim and similar flat surfaces.

Spray Painting

Paint sprayers are most suitable for painting large wall areas, fences and railings. Spray painting looks easy when done by a professional but it takes practice to lay the paint on evenly and without runs. Before spraying, mask windows, hardware and trim.

Choosing the Right Paint

Latex is almost everyone's first choice for exterior paint because it is easy to apply, cleans up with water and dries quickly. On top of that, it's long lasting. However, if you don't know what you are painting over, choose alkyd paint. Alkyd will adhere to most surfaces, including chalking ones. Latex is more finicky about what old paints it will bond with. Paint dealers can assist you in making the proper choice and buying the right amount.

Here are some additional suggestions:

Wood Siding: Use oil-based, alkyd-base or exterior latex paint. Latex is the easiest to use since it can be applied to damp surfaces and can be recoated in an hour or two.

Shingles and Shakes: Use shingle stain or special opaque shingle paint.

Masonry: Use exterior latex paint or solvent-thinned masonry paint. On unpainted concrete, use Portland cement.

Trim: Use varnish or alkyd resin-base paints which are enamel-like, glossy and very hard. Similar paints are used for decks, patio floors and terraces.

Gutters: Use asphalt paint on the insides and trim paint for the outsides.

In Colonial days, when Britain had a virtual monoply on iron smelting, nails were so scarce that some builders turned to another construction method — posts and beams fastened together with wood dowels.

This building technique is still around in residential applications. Basically, post-and-beam construction consists of vertical posts in the outside wall supporting horizontal and sloping beams that are part of the roof, ceiling and floor.

Unlike conventional framing of 16 inches on center, posts and beams usually are spaced 4 feet on center. Post-and-beam floors are considered more economical to build than standard floors. Instead of the regular floor joists, solid or laminated beams spaced 4 feet on center are located over posts and supported by concrete piers. The exterior ends of the posts rest on foundation walls. Wood planks or plywood flooring are nailed to the beams.

Besides the economical angle, are there other advantages to post-and-beam construction? We asked Douglas Lindal, executive vice president of a company in Seattle, Wash., that constructs custom-home packages with post-and-beam methods. He replied:

"Our homes are a blend of Western red cedar with contrasting drywall. We use nails with the method. As for the advantages, customers like post-and-beam construction because of its natural look indoors, the vast amount of light made possible by large windows and the open atmosphere that cathedral ceilings offer."

The floors in this method are tongue-and-groove planks or plywood panels placed so the joints between butt ends are staggered. Each plank is usually 8 feet on center so it spans two spaces between floor beams. To compensate for heavy items such as bathtubs and refrigerators, certain areas are braced with additional framing.

Insulation applied under the floor has an R-value of 12, that in the walls an R-value of 22. The walls are 7 inches thick with 1-inch tongue-and-groove cedar planks on the outside applied over ½-inch plywood and a lightweight sheeting of high-density woven polyethylene fibers that greatly reduce heat loss. Inside, on the warm side, the interior layer of insulation is sealed with a vapor barrier. There is an optional wall that raises the R-value to 28.

Unlike conventional construction in which the walls support the roof's weight, it is the posts and beams themselves which support the weight of the roof. Because of this, spaces between the posts are often used for wide floor-to-ceiling windows, though some of these spaces may be framed to provide expanses of solid walls for privacy or furniture placement.

The main components of a post-and-beam roof are the ridge beam, the roof beams and the planks used as the deck of the roof covering. The Lindal system uses horizontal, glue-laminated roof and loft beams of 2-by-4 Douglas fir. Sturdy posts support the roof's weight instead of partitions which are conventionally framed and come with drywall.

There are two basic post-and-beam roof designs — longitudinal, in which the roof beams run the length of the house and are supported by posts at each end, and traverse, in which the roof beams run from the exterior walls to the ridge beam. There are a variety of roof systems, known as Polar Cap 1, 2 and 3, to overcome problems of condensation in warm, humid areas and the need for additional insulation in cold climates.

While our ancestors used post-and-beam construction because of a shortage of nails, the addition of nails, insulation and amenities has made this type of construction even better.

Here's The Answer

By Andy Lang
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Q.— My husband and I looked at a lot of central air conditioners recently, since we intend to purchase one shortly. All of them had the initials SEER followed by a number. Can you tell us what this means?

A.— Sounds as if you did not talk to a salesman, who could have explained that S.E.E.R. stands for Seasonal Energy Efficiency Ratio. It is the measure for cooling energy efficiency applied both to central air conditioners and heat pumps. Under standards developed by the Federal Department of Energy and the Bureau of Standards, all such units must be tested by the same procedures, producing the S.E.E.R. number. The higher the number, the greater the energy efficiency. Those models with eight or higher are considered in the high-efficiency category. The cooling as well as the heating performance of the heat pumps also is measured by these numbers.

Q.— Every so often one of the fuses on our electrical circuit blows and has to be replaced. Before replacing it, I have always taken one of the appliances off the line controlled by that fuse. This means, of course, the line is overloaded. But I recently learned how to add up the watts on the line and I cannot find there is an overload. Can you tell me what the possible cause of the trouble might be?

A. — It's quite probable one of the appliances on the circuit has a large motor which causes the overload when it is turned on. What you may need on the circuit is another fuse of the same amperage as already there but this time make sure it is a time-delay fuse, usually called a Fusetron. If this does not solve your problem, better call in an electrician.

Q. — I inherited a lot of power tools from my grandfather. Among them is a combination orbital-in-line electric sander. I have used separate orbital sanders in the past but never had a combination type. Can you tell me when I should switch on the orbital sanding action and when the in-line sander?

A. — The orbital action is used for sanding the fastest, but when you get around to the final finishing on the wood use the in-line action. It's important the final sanding be done with the grain of the wood. Use the finest grade of sandpaper for the in-line sanding. Like all power sanders, the machine should be kept in motion at all times. Do not stop it on the wood while the electricity is on or you may get downslopes on the surface. Also, guide the sander with very little downward pressure.

(The techniques of using varnish, shellac, lacquer, stain, bleach, sealer, etc., are detailed in Andy Lang's booklet, "Wood Finishing in the Home," which can be obtained by sending $1 and a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope to Know-How, P.O. Box 477, Huntington, N.Y., 11743. Questions of general interest will be answered in the column.)

Q. The paint is chipping on my wrought iron lawn furniture. Please give some tips on repairing this. What is the best way to clean wrought iron furniture?

A. For scratches and chipping paint, rub the affected areas with fine steel wool to smooth the surface and help the paint adhere. If rust is present, clean the rusted area with naval jelly, wipe it clean and apply thin coats of an appropriate paint such as enamel paint. Make sure the paint is dry between coats. Wrought iron lawn furniture should be washed with a mild soap, rinsed completely and dried. Give the iron a coat of good automobile wax, making sure that the wax gets into the welds, ornaments and scrollwork.

Q. Does the bush called Harry Lauder's walkingstick ever flower?

A. Harry Lauder's walkingstick (Corylus avellana 'Contorta') prduces show catkins in early spring. Primarily the shrub is grown for its extremely contorted branches. The shrub is especially attractive after all its leaves have dropped. It is an excellent choice for a winter garden.

Q. How many calories do you burn while gardening?

A. According to the President's Council on Physical Fitness, general gardening work burns about 220 calories per hour. That is a rough approximation, based on averaging a lot of different activities. Activities such as hoeing, digging poatatoes and pushing a lawn mower burn more calories than transplanting seedlings, gathering a bouquet or cutting the grass with a riding mower.

Lazy Susan Makes Things Handy

By Reader's Digest
For THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Revolving shelves in a cupboard put every item within easy reach.

Simple to make, a revolving shelf or Lazy Susan consists of two plywood disks, crosspieces between the disks, and a swivel bearing. Here are building instructions:

Tools and Materials

You will need ¾-inch plywood (the size will depend on the size of your cupboard), 1-inch flexible metal countertop edging, a 4-inch Lazy Susan swivel bearing (usually available in hardware stores and home centers), white glue, 6-d finishing nails, four roundhead wood screws and four sheet metal screws. The necessary tools are: hammer, screwdriver, electric drill with 3-16th-inch and 3-32nd-inch bits, tinsnip and sandpaper. If you plan to cut the plywood disks yourself, you will also need a saber saw.

Instructions

1. To determine the size of the shelves, measure the inside depth and width of the cupboard. When installed, the Lazy Susan should have at least ½-inch clearance all around.

2. It is easiest to have the lumber dealer cut the disks out of the plywood. If you cut them yourself, draw the two circles on the plywood, with a beam compass or a home-made pin and string compass. Place the plywood at the edge of the workbench or on a pair of sawhorses, then cut the circles using a saber saw.

3. Cut the crosspieces so they are identical in height. Cut one the same length as the diameter of the disks. Cut the other into two pieces, each one half the diameter of the disks, less ⅜-inch.

4. Assemble the Lazy Susan. Attach the crosspieces to both disks with glue and finishing nails. The crosspieces should be perpendicular to each other.

5. Attach the metal edging around the edges of the disks, using the fasteners supplied with the edging.

6. Center the swivel bearing on the underside of the lower disk and mark the location of the four corner holes. Drill pilot holes using the 3-16th-inch bit.

7. Temporarily fasten the bearing to the unit with the sheet metal screws driven from the topside of the lower disk. The swivel should spin freely.

8. Place the assembled unit in the cupboard, make sure it can turn freely and that it has sufficient clearance all around and mark the position of the bearing's bottom on the bottom of the cabinet.

9. Remove the unit, take out the screws and fasten the bearing to the bottom of the cupboard using the wood screws. To facilitate driving the screws, drill pilot holes using the 3-32nd-inch drill bit. Place the Lazy Susan back on the bearing and fasten it permanently to the bearing.

Landscaping Considerations

LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

Individual lifestyles are the key to determining the way a yard should be landscaped. Here are some questions to get you thinking about how the available space should be divided:

Will there be a pool or spa?

Are there children or pets that require special space — an area for playground equipment or an enclosed run?

What other forms of recreation need to be considered? Badminton court, tennis court, horseshoe pit, lawn area?

Should there be an area for outdoor cooking and dining? How frequently will it be used? Will it be just for family or used for entertaining? How large a group must the area accommodate? Does it need to be sheltered?

Does there need to be a space for growing vegetables or herbs? Should there be a growing area for cut flowers? Will there be a greenhouse?

Where will gardening equipment and supplies be stored? What provisions need to be made to handle garbage receptacles? What other storage areas are needed?

Agencies Want To Market City To Selected Firms

By Greg Laudick
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Three local entities are considering combining resources and efforts to help market the city of Greenville to selected non-manufacturing companies who are considering plans to expand or relocate operations.

Representatives of the Pitt-Greenville Chamber of Commerce, the Greenville Utilities Commission and the city of Greenville are discussing the concept of pooling funds to hire a professional recruiter to aggressively seek new businesses to open locations in Greenville.

"Companies get hundreds of letters from cities seeking new businesses each and every day," said City Manager Greg Knowles. " What we need is someone to go out and actually knock on some doors."

In a recent interview with Knowles and Chamber of Commerce President Ed Walker, the city manager said that in commercial recruiting, the cities which corporations respond to are the cities that make the effort to actually come to them in person.

He said many cities, Raleigh for instance, have highly trained professionals, armed with meticulously prepared and up-to-the-minute marketing data, who travel throughout the country, meeting with corporate executives in an attempt to expand the community's commercial base and improve the quality of life.

Knowles said those kinds of businesses which the proposed Greenville-based recruiter would selectively seek include commercial establishments such as restaurants and retail stores. Those kinds of operations are not targeted by the Pitt County Development Commission, which recruits manufacturing operations, providers of manufacturing-related support services and research and development facilities.

But Knowles said the recruiter would not be seeking out just any company to relocate to Pitt County's largest city.

"This will certainly not be random recruitment," he said. "We will be doing extensive market studies which will determine those businesses that have the best opportunity for success here.

"We'll be looking for businesses that would complement the existing businesses in the city and which would favorably add to Greenville's quality of life," he said. "We're not going to go out and just pick any business out there and say, 'Hey, we've got a lot to offer — come on in.'"

Not only would the proposed recruiter be responsible for selling the city's attributes, said Walker, the recruiter would also act as a "hub person," who would assist company representatives through the complex web of agencies and organizations which must be seen when starting a business — agencies such as utilities companies, real estate officials, and issuers of various permits and licenses.

"There are about 10 different steps that new business operators have to go through now to get started. We have a small business division here at the chamber which helps now in that process, but we are not the one source center that this person would be.

"This person would be up on everything that is going on and would take them by the hand and carry them through the whole process," Walker said.

The chamber official said that reducing the red tape and associated hassles will make officials from new companies feel more welcome and make them prone to tell other commercial operators that Greenville is a good place to do business.

Knowles said the concept for the jointly financed recruiter came from the realization that the cost of such a recruiter and the related support efforts were simply too expensive for one organization.

However, if the chamber, utilities commission and the city were each responsible for one third of the proposed $150,000 yearly budget, the concept then becomes affordable, he said.

To ensure that each of the entities has authority and supervision of the recruiter's activities, a board, consisting of two members from each of the three groups, would be formed to manage and oversee the recruitment venture.

Knowles said he has tentatively planned for the city's portion of the $150,000 by allocating $50,000 in a line item expenditure in the 1989-90 proposed budget.

It is the council however, that will make the decision on whether to fund the city's portion of the project. Further discussion of the matter is expected at the council's June 12 budget workshop at City Hall.

Businesses Relocate To Downtown Area

Evergreen of Greenville Inc. has announced that three area businesses have recently relocated downtown and four new businesses have opened or have signed leases to open in the downtown area by August.

Jack Steelman, Evergreen executive director, said businesses which have recently relocated downtown include Robertson Marketing Inc., Dapper Dan's and The Upper Crust Bakery.

Meanwhile, new businesses which have opened or have signed leases to open in the downtown area are Bunny's, Wachovia Bank and Trust Co., Champion Health and Fitness Center and Boulevard Garb.

"We are extremely happy to have each of these businesses join the downtown community," Steelman said. "The process of downtown revitalization may not be as simple or as fast as some would think but, with persistence, it works."

Steelman said the type of assistance provided by Evergreen varied widely for each business.

"In one case, we showed the client properties that we knew would meet their size, financial and locational criteria, and they took it from there.

"In another situation, University Village, we were responsible for coming up with a development concept for the property, recruiting investors, helping to draft zoning ordinance amendments, relocating an existing business being displaced, and then recruiting the new occupants," he said.

Robertson Marketing Inc., a Charlotte-based computer sales and service company, has relocated its eastern regional facility to 302 Evans Mall. The Greenville office, managed by Same Rotunda, serves all of eastern North Carolina from Virginia to South Carolina with new and used computer hardware, peripherals and service.

Dapper Dan's, a vintage clothing and antique furniture dealer, has relocated to 417 Evans Mall. Dapper Dan's, owned by Dan Roberson, was previously located on East Fifth Street in the Hodges Building.

The Upper Crust Bakery, a wholesale bakery located in Winterville, has leased space in University Village, Greenville's first residential mixed-use project located in the Hodges Building.

Upon relocating to University Village, Steelman said owners Greg and Trish Hayes plan to expand their lines of fresh baked daily goods to include morning pastries, muffins and assorted weekly specials. Though currently a wholesale bakery, Upper Crust will also provide a cafe-style retail shop featuring fresh baked goods, coffee and juices.

Bunny's, a new fast-food lunch and dinner restaurant, has opened at 213 E. Fifth St. The restaurant features shish kabob, barbecue chicken, fajitas, shawerma and deli-style sandwiches. Owner Nehad Baker was previously associated with Stephens Oyster and Steak House in Greensboro.

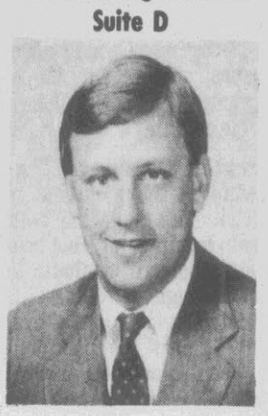

Wachovia Bank and Trust Co. recently opened a new regional training department for its eastern North Carolina employees at 200 S. Greene St. The building was specifically remodeled for a training facility and also houses the regional audit department of Wachovia.

Champion Health and Fitness Center has leased 207 E. Fifth St., where it will locate a full-service health spa. Scheduled for an August opening, the private membership facility will feature a weight and nautilus equipment, aerobics and cardiovascular classes, dressing rooms, showers and lockers.

Complete interior renovations are under way, with construction plans calling for a renovation of the original exterior of the building.

Boulevard Garb, a fashion-oriented women's clothing store, has also leased space in University Village.

Steelman said that owner Kimery Rogers has planned for an opening in August. The business is designed as a contemporary fashion store for college women.

Fuel Tax Jump Could Push N.C. To Top Of List

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

North Carolina could have the highest state gasoline tax in the nation if the Legislature passes a proposed 5¼-cent increase to help fund a massive highway project, officials say.

With a state tax of 15.7 cents per gallon, North Carolina ranked 10th in the nation as of April 1, according to the American Petroleum Institute in Washington, D.C.

But if the Legislature approves an $8.6 billion highway construction package, that tax would increase to 20.95 cents per gallon, exceeding the present Wisconsin state gasoline tax of 20.8 cents per gallon.

Other states, however, such as Georgia, California, Massachusetts, Illinois, Tennessee and Florida are also considering state gasoline tax increases, and North Carolina's ranking could change depending on the action they take, API spokesman Joseph Lastelic told The Asheville Citizen.

In addition to a state tax, every gallon of gasoline sold in the United States also carries a 9.1-cent federal tax and in some states, such as California and Connecticut, there are local taxes as well, Lastelic said.

In state gas taxes, West Virginia follows Wisconsin with 20.35 cents per gallon.

The highway construction program, which passed the House by a 90-25 vote Thursday, would be financed with the boost in the gasoline tax, a "user fee" of 3 percent on vehicles, and increases in fees on vehicle registration, trucks, dealer plates, auto rentals and titles.

Lastelic referred questions regarding an official position on the proposed state gasoline tax increase to the N.C. Petroleum Council in Raleigh.

"Our official position on this is most always the same," said Bill Witherspoon, executive director of the petroleum council. "If the state can make the case for needing additional funds for highways and bridges, etc., and as long as the state's estimates about costs appear to be sound, we do not oppose good roads, we do not oppose safe roads and we do not oppose improved roads."

A spokesman for the National Taxpayers Union in Washington, D.C., a non-profit organization representing more than 200,000 American taxpayers, said his group believes gasoline taxes should be earmarked for roads and should be designed so that people who do the most damage to roads pay their fair share.

N.C. Business Briefs

Economic Performance

CHARLOTTE (AP) — North Carolina's economy has outperformed the region's economy and the nation's economy since 1983, according to the economic forecast from UNC-Charlotte and First Union.

North Carolina's 3.3 percent projected growth rate for 1989 will be down from 4.9 percent in 1988, losing speed with the rest of the nation. But there is no cause for alarm, said David Orr, First Union Corp.'s vice president fore economic research, at a quarterly economic briefing Thursday.

Counterfeit Reeboks

RALEIGH (AP) — A Wilson County businessman has pleaded guilty to making a false statement on an invoice to keep customs officers from discovering that he was importing counterfeit Reebok shoes.

Timothy Lee Inscore, an officer in the family-run Triple I Industries of Elm City, entered the plea under a plea bargain in which he promised to cooperate with a federal investigation of the importation of counterfeit goods.

U.S. District Judge Terrence W. Boyle, who accepted the plea, said he would sentence Inscore in July. The government has agreed not to oppose a probationary sentence and to recommend a fine of no more than $1,000.

Inscore, 33, of Wilson has paid several thousand dollars in restitution to Reebok International Ltd. and has agreed to pay the U.S. Customs Service $1,447 in duties owed on the shoes, said Assistant U.S. Attorney Peter W. Kellen.

Favorable Results

RALEIGH (AP) — Glaxo Inc., a pharmaceutical manufacturer in Research Triangle Park, said it posted nearly $1.5 billion in sales in 1988 and it has accelerated hiring of new employees.

In the last two years, Glaxo's Triangle employment has grown to nearly 2,000 from about 1,500, said James A. Shamp, a company spokesman.

Glaxo in recent months has stepped up its eforts to hire additional employees in its research and development division. Many of those employees will work in the company's 1.5 million-square-foot research and development laboratory in RTP that is scheduled to be completed by the end of 1991, Stamps said.

The company employs about 1,450 people at its RTP headquarters and about 500 people at a manufacturing plant in Zebulon. An additional 2,000 sales and marketing represent the company throughout the United States.

Glaxo likely will hire about 500 more employees to work in the planned laboratory, Stamp said. It also is building a manufacturing plant in downtown Durham that eventually will employ about 200 people.

Panel Ponders Price-Fixing Dispute

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

North Carolina's attorney general has taken the case against price-fixing in furniture and other industries to Washington.

Lacy Thornburg spoke to the U.S. Senate Judiciary Committee on behalf of a bill sponsored by Sen. Howard Metzenbaum, D-Ohio, that would make it easier to win lawsuits against manufacturers that force retailers to sell their products at an inflated price.

That practice, known as "vertical price-fixing," is used by manufacturers and high-priced retailers to eliminate competition from discounters, Thornburg said.

The issue is familiar to Thornburg, whose office has been lobbying for an anti-price-fixing bill in the N.C. General Assembly. That bill would prevent furniture manufacturers from discriminating against stores that sell their goods at a discount over the phone or by mail.

The courts have held price-fixing to be illegal since 1911. But Thornburg told the committee that the amount of vertical price-fixing has increased recently.

Thornburg told the Winston-Salem Journal that several lawsuits and an investigation by his office have focused on "severe restraints that most of the high-end furniture manufacturers have recently imposed on the state's widely known discount retail-furniture industry." The restrictions "directly prevent consumers from shopping with the North Carolina discounters to get the best price," he said

"There is evidence that full-price retailers have induced the manufacturers to adopt these recent restrictions in order to 'take care of' the 'North Carolina problem,' as the discounters are known in some circles." The manufacturers have set limits on the territory where retailers may sell and advertise, and set standards for how products are displayed and sold, he said.

"While the manufacturers have constructed elaborate justifications for these restrictions, it should be open to a jury to determine ... whether their real purpose is to eliminate or curtail price competition," Thornburg said.

Two Republican senators, Warren Rudman of New Hampshire and Slade Gorton of Washington, joined Thornburg in supporting the bill, as did the dean of the Georgetown University Law Center. Representatives of the American Bar Association and the U.S. Chamber of Commerce spoke against it, saying that it is unnecessary and potentially harmful.

Corporate Takeover Business Waking Up

By Rick Gladstone
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Like the bubbling lava burps and smoke plumes of a sleepy volcano, the dormant corporate takeover business is showing signs of pre-eruption life.

The biggest belch came from financier Carl Icahn, who dumped his 17.3 percent stake of Texaco Inc. this past week for $2.07 billion cash in one behemoth trade.

It took three big Wall Street brokerages to handle the record block of 42.32 million shares sold for $49 each. The deal riveted attention on Icahn and raised speculation he would use the money to buy, or threaten to buy, another big company.

A flurry of speculative buying in USX Corp. stock suggested that piggybacking investors reckoned Icahn would chase the oil-steel giant, one of his old targets. He remains a significant stockholder in USX.

Securities Data Co., a research concern that follows takeover activity, says the value of deals tumbled to $74.36 billion in the first quarter of this year from $137.17 billion a year earlier.

Icahn, of course, declined to disclose his takeover agenda. But the cunning investor has become known for bold and unpredictable moves that sometimes have stupefied followers and critics alike.

More than three years ago he outfoxed Texas Air Corp. Chairman Frank Lorenzo to acquire Trans World Airlines. Later he stunned the airline business by making a last-minute though unsuccessful run at USAir Group Inc.

Contrary to widespread expectations, Icahn not only has kept TWA but evidently turned it into a moneymaker. He even has ordered a fleet's worth of new Airbus jetliners, contradicting some union claims that he wouldn't invest money in TWA, which has some of the industry's oldest jetliners.

At the same time, however, Icahn has been using TWA's assets to raise money for other adventurous investments — including his much publicized stake in Texaco as it struggled out of bankruptcy a year ago.

Icahn plans to raise an additional $300 million soon by selling TWA bonds backed by collateral that ranges from airport-landing slots to spare light bulbs. The Wall Street Journal calls the offering "light bulb bonds."

If Icahn combined that money with the cash raised from the Texaco stock sale, he could borrow several times that amount to launch a takeover of a company worth at least $10 billion.

Icahn's maneuvering wasn't the only rumble that stock speculators heard this past week. Unionists at two other airlines, Eastern and Northwest, were maneuvering to align themselves with financiers who expressed buying interest in those companies. Also, a Canadian company chasing Dunkin' Donuts upped its stake in the chain.

And in what some would call the morbid side of takeover speculation, toy giant Hasbro Inc.'s stock shot up on word that chairman Stephen Hassenfeld was hospitalized in intensive care with pneumonia. Such speculation often accompanies serious illness or deaths of top executives.

In other business news this past week:

—Government statistics suggested the economy has slowed, easing pressure on the Federal Reserve to keep interest rates up and rallying the stock and bond markets. Though unemployment fell in April, new-job growth hit a three-year low. Other figures showed construction spending barely rose in April and productivity shrank in the first quarter.

—Retailers reported depressed sales for April, suggesting consumers are cutting back to save money and pay debts. The figures also suggested Sears Roebuck & Co., the No. 1 retailer, suffered from declining shopper interest in its revamped low-price strategy aimed at competing with fast-growing rivals.

—Next-century innovations were announced for two staples of many American homes, the television and the Bible. Nielsen Media Research said it was developing a "passive people meter" that would actually watch viewers to determine which ones were watching what shows and when they left the room. Franklin Computer, a Mt. Holly, N.J. company, unveiled an electronic version of the Scriptures delivered by a new hand-held computer.

If all community water systems had to be replaced, what would it cost? In excess of $175 billion

Catholic School Gives Scholarship To Every Student

By Christopher Connell
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — The unusual story behind the founding of Regis High School is captured in the Latin words engraved in stone above the columns on its classical facade: "Deo et Patriae Pietas Christiana Erexit."

Or, as even the most plodding of Latin scholars who ever trod the corridors of this reknowned Jesuit high school might translate: "Built by Christian piety for God and country."

Seventy-five years after a rich widow anonymously gave her pastor $500,000 to build a free school for Catholic boys, Regis is still giving full scholarships to every student it admits.

It draws the cream of the academic crop, mainly from parochial grammar schools in the five boroughs of New York, the surrounding three-state suburbs and sometimes even farther afield.

"Everyone thinks I'm crazy to come into the city," says Mark Mazzetti, 14, a freshman who spends three hours a day traveling back and forth from Princeton, N.J.

"My friends back home think I live here," says Marty Cassidy, 14, a freshman who rises at 5:30 a.m. to commute with his brother, a sophomore, from New Canaan, Conn.

"The journey can take up to two hours each way, but I don't have any regrets. You can do a lot of homework on the train — or you can just sleep."

For Luis Taveras, 17, a senior who chose Regis over the Bronx High School of Science, the trip to school is a 30-minute subway ride from the Bronx.

"I love it here," Taveras says. "When you come from the Bronx, it's really challenging to grow up in a different kind of world. This school is a meeting ground for people from so many different backgrounds."

Today's 501 Regis students are getting their free education — valued by school officials at over $24,000 — thanks not only to the generosity of the original benefactor and her family who over the years gave millions to keep the school running, but its 7,500 alumni who in recent years have become major benefactors in their own right.

About half the $3.3 million budget comes from interest on the school's investments. The rest is raised each year from alumni, foundations and other sources.

"Each year the costs go up at least $200,000," says the Rev. James J. Fischer, S.J., the president since 1980. "That's not going to end.'

But while other Catholic schools struggle with rising tuitions and contracting enrollments, Regis has been able to pour $5 million in recent years into expanding science labs and other major renovations of its building on East 84th Street, two blocks from Central Park. The top faculty salaries will hover near $40,000 this fall.

Last year's seniors scored an average of 1,273 on the Scholastic Aptitude Test, 369 points above the national average. Many graduates attend select colleges, including 84 who went on to Ivy League colleges in the past four years alone.

More than a third of the students come from families with incomes below $30,000 a year, and 40 percent are the children of immigrants from Ireland, Puerto Rico, China, the Philippines, Italy, Cuba, Haiti and three dozen other countries.

"It's still very much an immigrants' school," says the Rev. Vincent W. Hevern, S.J., the school psychologist.

The school, largely white for decades, now has a 28 percent minority enrollment, including 60 Hispanic students (12 percent), 51 Asian (10 percent) and 28 black (6 percent). Unlike many parochial schools, especially in big cities, it does not admit non-Catholics.

Each fall, on the first Saturday in November, about 900 students take a standardized admissions test. Students also are judged on their elementary school grades, activities and, for the finalists, an interview before the 130 scholarship winners are chosen shortly before Christmas.

In 1978 nearly 1,300 students took the entrance test. The number fell to a low of 770 in 1987 before rebounding. Most of those admitted score in the top 5 percent on standardized tests — a common cutoff for the gifted.

Regis officials, casting a worried eye on the dwindling pool, talk openly of the possibility of admitting girls some day, as all Jesuit colleges and some 10 Jesuit high schools already have done.

"There's no comparable opportunity for Catholic girls in the city of New York," says the Rev. Frederick J. O'Brien, the headmaster. "If the demographics ever became really horrendous, that's one way to broaden the pool."

O'Brien will be succeeded as headmaster this summer by the Rev. James F. Kuntz, who has been headmaster of St. Peter's Prep in Jersey City, New Jersey. Kuntz, a 1966 Regis graduate, will be only the second alumnus ever to run the school.

Fischer says he doesn't think Regis' boys-only status could withstand a legal challenge. "I think someone would crack that tomorrow and we'd have to take in girls if they got a good lawyer."

The school's two top administrators are two of only a dozen Jesuits left on the 50-member staff. A quarter-century ago, more than half the faculty were Jesuit priests or "scholastics" — young Jesuits halfway through the 13-year preparation process leading to ordination. Not a few of them were alumni. In fact, a Regis yearbook marking the 50th anniversary in 1964 noted that almost 10 percent of its alumni were priests.

But few Regians opt for the priesthood these days. Many of the Jesuits on the faculty are nearing retirement, and their replacements are not in sight. It has only one scholastic this semester "and we're not sure we'll get a replacement when he leaves," says Frank Walsh, the assistant headmaster.

Other things have changed at the school. There was a time, says Lynda Blakinship, chairman of the science department, when a Regis student was just a student. "Now he's taking care of the younger brothers and sisters, cooking the meals, doing the wash while the mother works. In my advanced placement physics class, two-thirds of the guys had jobs."

No longer do students flunk out in droves in the sort of educational triage that once characterized many Jesuit schools.

Latin, long the backbone of the curriculum, became optional four years ago.

While that raised the hackles of some alumni, O'Brien says, "we're trying to get needy students in here. We're bringing in kids who very often are the first people in their family to complete high school. They know no reason to study Latin."

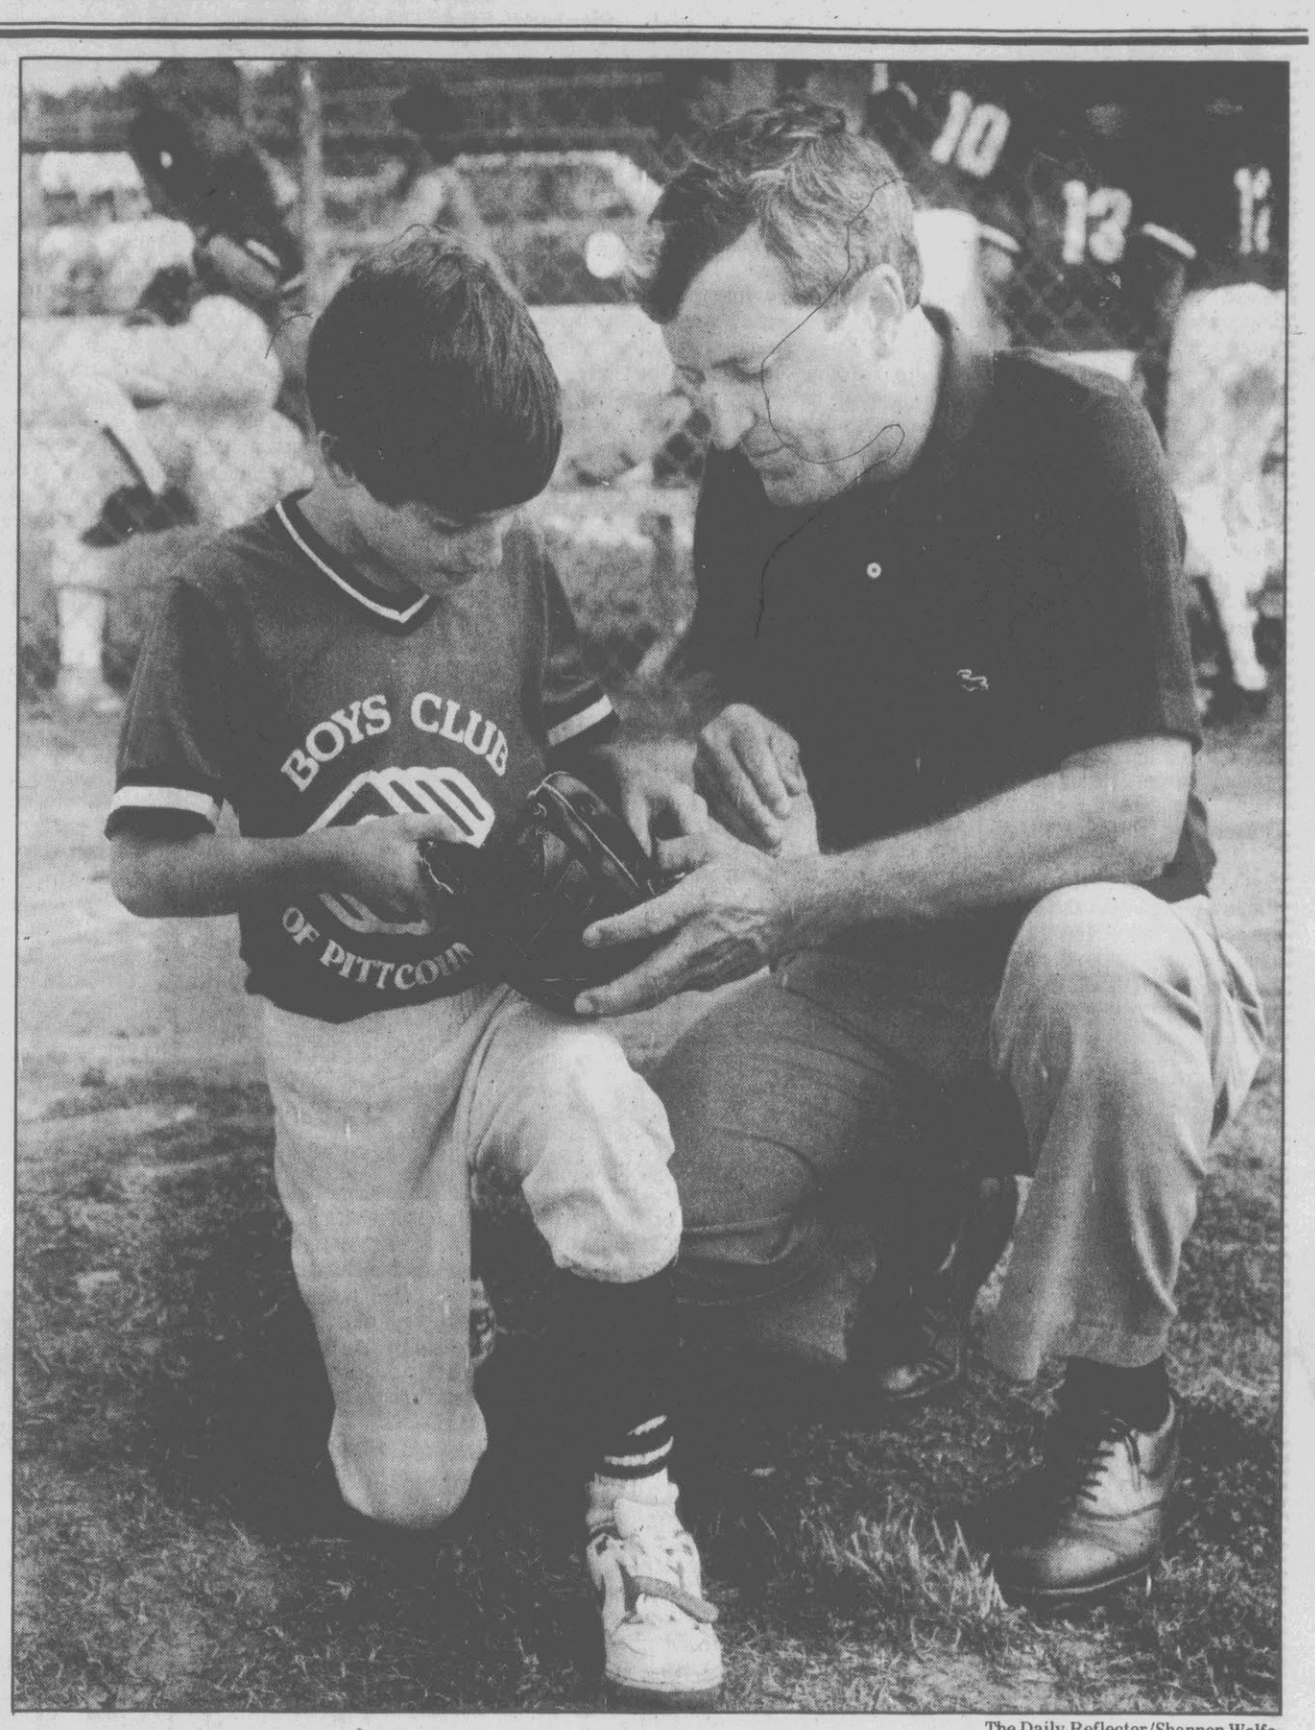

While it is no longer producing legions of priests, Regis does inculcate in its students the value of community service.

Boys Club Director Chet Emerson shares a baseball tip with Jason Cutrell, 9

Like One Of The Boys

Chet Emerson Keeps Family Ties Strong As Director Of The Boys Club

By Priscilla Brown
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

They could tell Chet Emerson was a leader by the time he was 9 years old. Since long before that, he had been involved in all the boyhood activities in his St. Paul, Minn. neighborhood.

"I was held in high esteem," he says.

Other boys would come by to see Chet or one of his four brothers, and off they would go together, just the guys. Breaking and entering, strong-arm robberies. He remembers it well. "I was very insistent on getting what I wanted."

His first trip to a juvenile detention center came at 9, and it was followed by six years of on-again, off-again jail time. But to young Chet, that was all life had to offer.

Social workers and other professionals tried to work with him, finally labeling him a loser — more to the point, a smart-aleck and a thief.

Then came Dale Heffron, St. Paul Boys Club. He sat 16-year-old Chet Emerson down, looked him squarely in the eye and said, "I love you."

Those three words stunned the streetwise Emerson, but eventually, they sank in. And they worked. Today, Chet Emerson credits Heffron with turning his life around.

Emerson has been director of the Boys Club of Pitt County since 1975. And as he travels across the area to raise more than $900,000 for the club's third facility in eight years, he reflects on those days in St. Paul — because many of the youngsters looking up to him now are no different from the boys he knew as a child.

"You don't have to be an adult to feel hurt, pain or unwanted," he says.

More than 750 boys are registered with the Boys Club of Pitt County, many pouring through the doors daily as school ends and the buses drop them off. Come summer vacation, they'll be there all day, shooting pool, watching TV, playing baseball or learning a craft.

But those activities aren't at the heart of the Boys Club, simply because they aren't at the soul of its director. "It's like a family," Emerson says. "Each one who comes in here is a part of my family."

It is a lesson he learned from Heffron. Not long after he wandered into the St. Paul club — looking for trouble — Heffron handed him a broom.

Somehow, he persuaded the young Emerson to take over the Boys Club clean-up detail, one of the most important aspects of Heffron's beliefs about a well-run club.

CHET EMERSON

"He told me it was a good place to start," Emerson remembers. "And he told me how important a clean club was to him.

"You have to realize that there were more bars and saloons on the streets of St. Paul than anything else. I grew up, we all grew up, sleeping wherever we could, with whoever we could sleep with. The Boys Club was the most regular, consistent thing in our lives."

It wasn't long before Heffron moved Emerson into working directly with other boys. "I fit right in," Emerson says. "He didn't just tell me what to do, he showed me how to do it.

"I had never heard anybody talk like he talked."

Heffron shepherded Emerson through high school, sent him to take his Scholastic Aptitude Test and helped him enroll in the University of Minnesota. No one in his family had ever ventured in such directions, but, Emerson says, they were still unmoved.

"There was no reaction, no comments, no help or support. I had to do it on my own, with help from a member of the Boys Club board of directors."

Two years into college, Emerson received a call from Richard Cline, who had left St. Paul for the Boys Club in Anderson, S.C. The mill kids there were rough, Cline said, rough enough to churn through three directors in one short length of time. Could Emerson help?

He could. Emerson bought a Triumph, packed all of his belongings and took off for South Carolina. Cline had sent him a map, outlining the route with magic marker. Emerson, who had never been outside the state of Minnesota, made one unscheduled stop.

"I stopped in Chicago to call my mother," he says. "I couldn't tell her to her face. I told her I loved her and that I would be OK, and I took off."

Emerson later returned to Saint Paul to direct his home club before going back to Anderson again. There, he worked full time at the Boys Club and finished work on his degree at Clemson.

Next stop, Alabama, where his life would be changed in ways he had never imagined.

The south forced Emerson to face racial questions for the first time. Though he had grown up in a multi-racial area, the lines were drawn by neighborhood, not by color. Fights were common in St. Paul, but in Gadsden, Ala., he saw the hot summers of the early '70s bring violence he had not known — certainly not with a young man like Emory Boggs.

Boggs' father was a ranking member of the Gadsden police force, so it was not unusual that his son, working for Emerson at the local Boys Club, would feel it his responsibility to report a theft. When he did, a group of youngsters took exception. One Wednesday afternoon, they poured gasoline on him and struck a match. Boggs burned to death.

For the second time in his life, Emerson was stunned. "It brought a major change in my life," he says. "I saw no good reason for that to happen. It taught me something, though. None of us are guaranteed tomorrow."

In 1975, Emerson accepted the call from Bob Sykes and became director of the Boys Club at 205 W. Skinner St. in Greenville.

It was a hard move. Emerson was the only staff member for a long time, and boys were piling into the Skinner Street facility faster than he could work with them.

"I had a lot of boys with a lot of needs, and sometimes it was frustrating," he says. He was discouraged, but Sykes lifted him up. Just when things looked the worst, a letter came from Emerson's newest mentor and he drew the courage to go a little further. "Stick with it," Sykes wrote.

Days later, Sykes drove up to a Boys Club elsewhere in North Carolina, slumped over the steering wheel and died of a heart attack.

The essays will be divided into two categories. The newspaper will publish two essays by authors up to age 16, and three essays by authors older than 16. All essays will be submitted to a panel of judges, which will make the selections.

Send your essay to Father's Day, The Daily Reflector, P.O. Box 1967, Greenville, N.C. 27835, or bring it to the office at 209 Cotanche St. Your essay must be received by the newspaper by noon Friday. Because of deadlines, no exceptions will be allowed. Employees of The Daily Reflector and their families are not eligible.

Just five days left until the deadline, so put pen to paper and let readers of The Daily Reflector know why you're the most fortunate son or daughter.

Incidence Of Ovarian Cancer Continues To Rise

By Sally Squires
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

When comedienne Gilda Radner succumbed to ovarian cancer in May, she become one more statistic in the growing battle against a disease that mysteriously continues to increase among women in industrialized nations.

Each year, 20,000 women are diagnosed with ovarian cancer in the United States. This fourth-leading cause of cancer in women claims 12,000 lives a year, yet doctors have few ways to detect it early and few clues about what causes it or who is at greatest risk.

As the number of ovarian cases continues to increase in developed countries, only modest gains have been made in life expectancy for those who are diagnosed with the disease. Since 1950, there has been just a 12 percent overall increase in survival — a statistic that translates into about 2,500 lives.

The problem is diagnosis. "It's very difficult to make a diagnosis of ovarian cancer," said Robert C. Young, president of the Fox Chase Cancer Center in Philadelphia. "Symptoms and signs are relatively vague."

Many women with the disease experience uncertain lower abdominal pain, bloating, gas and constipation that can be attributed to a range of gastrointestinal conditions, both serious and benign.

As a result, in 70 percent of women the disease goes undetected until it reaches an advanced stage. "And that's unfortunate, because we now have good ways of evaluating, staging and treating (early) ovarian cancer." Young said. "We don't have nearly as good therapies for advanced disease."

One in every four women with ovarian cancer has stage 1 or stage 2 disease — the most promising to treat. Tumors confined to the ovary alone are called stage 1; those that spread solely to the area immediately surrounding the ovary are stage 2. Almost all — some 80 percent — of women with these two early forms will survive five years.

By the time an ovarian tumor spreads to the abdomen, the disease has reached stage 3. When ovarian tumors run rampant in the body, they reach stage 4. "Only 25 percent of women with advanced ovarian cancer can be cured using existing treatment," Young said.

The biggest stumbling block to treatment is early diagnosis. "The ovaries are in a very silent area of the body," said Maurie Markham, associate chairman of the department of medicine at Memorial Sloan-Kettering Cancer Center in New York. "One can have a fairly large mass that has plenty of time to grow and spread before any symptoms occur."

Papanicolou smears — which can detect cervical and vaginal cancer — are of almost no use in detecting ovarian cancer. At best, Pap smears will occasionally pick up a loose malignant ovarian cell that may be sloughed off and travel down to the cervix.

There is also no clear profile of the woman at great risk for ovarian cancer. She could be 35 years of age or 60. She could be childless or have five children. "Ovarian cancer can happen at any time including during pregnancy," said Michelle Dudzinski, a gynecologic oncologist at the Johns Hopkins Medical Institutions in Baltimore.

Women in industrialized countries, with the exception of Japan, seem to run a higher risk of developing ovarian cancer. Yet no one knows why. "There have been a lot of suggestions over the years; none have been proven," Dudzinski said. One theory is that asbestos-containing talc may account for some of the increased rate of disease in Western countries that emphasize personal hygiene.

Oral contraceptives, which halt ovulation, seem to be associated with a reduced risk of ovarian cancer — a finding that helps add to evidence that ovarian cancer may be a disease of women who have impaired ovarian function. "It's more often seen in never-married, never-pregnant women with more difficult medical histories of intermittent bleeding," Young said. "But there are plenty of women with children who have the disease."

White women are at slightly more risk than black women. So are women of higher socioeconomic class. The greatest number of cases occur in women ages 50 to 70. "But the fact that Gilda Radner developed it in her 30s is not unusual," Dudzinski said.

Genetics also could play a role in a very small number of cases. At Roswell Park Memorial Institute in Buffalo, M. Steven Piver has collected a national tumor registry of 200 ovarian-cancer families, where the disease reappears in each generation.

The risk of developing ovarian cancer is one in 70 or about 1.4 percent for the average American woman. "But if two or more first-degree relatives have it, you have a 50 percent chance of developing ovarian cancer," Piver said. For this reason, doctors now recommend that women with a family history of ovarian cancer have their ovaries prophylactively removed at age 35, he said.

But the disease is not associated with a variety of other risk factors often linked to cancer. "It doesn't appear to be associated with smoking," said Young. "There is no evidence that it is linked to fibroid tumors of the ovaries." Nor is there any suggestion that ovarian cancer is related to diet, alcohol consumption, number of sexual partners or being overweight.

For this reason, researchers continue to look for biological markers that might signal the early presence of a tumor in the ovary. The most promising so far is a marker called CA-125.

An elevated blood level of CA-125 combined with physical evidence of enlarged ovaries is a good bet that a tumor is present. "It's ovarian cancer until proven otherwise," said David Alberts, director of cancer prevention and control at the University of Arizona Cancer Center in Tucson.

But CA-125 is far from perfect. Sometimes, levels don't rise even when there is a malignancy. CA-125 can also rise for other reasons. "It can be elevated in (women who have) endometriosis," Dudzinksi said. It can also creep upward due to pelvic inflammatory disease or fallopian-tube abcesses — none of which is associated with ovarian cancer.

"So we still depend on routine pelvic exams to detect ovarian cancer," Young said.

One problem is that many women don't get yearly exams. Or they have them performed by internists and family-practice physicians who may not be as well trained — or as experienced — in performing the exam. "Most physicians, except for gynecologists, are not good at pelvic exams," Alberts said. "And it's the only way to make an early diagnosis of ovarian cancer."

Treatment for ovarian cancer begins with surgery to remove the ovaries — an operation that doctors call an oophorectomy.

Regis Draws Cream Of Crop

mar schools in disadvantaged neighborhoods, or working in hospitals or nursing homes. Most seniors are freed from all classes during the last trimester to devote full time to such pursuits, or to work on job internships.

Its alumni include several university presidents, including Timothy S. Healy (1942) of Georgetown and Joseph A. O'Hare (1948) of Fordham, as well as banking executives, corporate chieftains and judges — although rival Xavier High School boasts Supreme Court Justice Antonin Scalia.

The alumni rolls are also thick with lawyers who first honed their oratorical skills in the classrooms of Regis and its Hearn Society, a perennial state debating champion.

"We still produce more lawyers than anything else," O'Brien says. "If you teach here for a while you understand that it is not an accident. Our kids love to argue." But the school's best-known graduate is Dr. Anthony S. Fauci, the AIDS researcher and director of the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases whom President Bush has called one of his personal heroes.

Fauci, a 1958 graduate, remembers fondly his four years commuting as a straphanger from Brooklyn to the upper East Side, where he encountered "an academic excellence that really was unmatched in all of the educational experiences I've had since then."

Regis is now run by a board that includes both lay and Jesuit members. Its leaders say it will retain that Jesuit character, even as the numbers of priests on its staff dwindle.

Mazzetti, the freshman from Princeton, said his parents have been pleasantly surprised at how few demands the school makes for money to pay for extracurriculars or anything else.

"At my old school, they always asked for money for every little thing," he says.

But an older student who overheard the remark chimed in knowingly, "Never being asked for money? Give me a break. Wait until you graduate."

Emerson Keeps Club Ties Strong

"In my early life, people had no impact at all," Emerson says. "Then I met some people who had a great impact. Two deaths had as much impact on me as anything in my life. I rededicated myself again. I told myself, 'Something good should happen from this.'"

Heffron. Boggs. Sykes. All baggage to bring to a new Boys Club headquarters at 502 W. Arlington Blvd. in 1981. All a part of who Chet Emerson is.

"The training I got, the education I got is not what brought me here," he says. "Experiences did."

Perhaps that is why Emerson pours himself into every boy. Though he has worked with hundreds of boys in his career, he has but one boy's photograph in his office. A boy he has worked on for five years — a boy, he says, sadly, who has just returned to drugs.

He's not used to losing one. "I feel responsible," he says, "regretful. I just keep telling them, 'No matter when the time comes, I'll be here. You might not need that now, but if you do, the Boys Club will be here for you.'

"It's important for kids to know they're special."

Chet Emerson, however, isn't ready to admit that he is special. "I don't think I'll ever reach personal success," he says. "There will always be something to do here, something undone.

"If success is being happy with what you're doing, then yes, I guess I'm successful — but that isn't ultimate success. Ultimate success is getting to the point that wherever there is a little Chet Emerson in this world, there is someone willing to give some part of themselves."

A wall full of plaques attest to Emerson's willingness to give. The Jaycees, the Kiwanis, Woodmen of the World, the Veterans of Foreign Wars — their signs of recognition hang with a group of others. There's even a plaque from the Red Cross for saving a life. "We just happened to be in the right place at the right time," he says now.

But Emerson's real measure of success will come from a boy. Maybe even a boy he thought he had lost.

As the first youngsters come through the doors of the Boys Club, interrupting the quiet of an early afternoon, Emerson reveals what that measure would be. Softly, almost at a whisper, he speaks.

"I would want him to say, 'He cared. He shared some of himself with me.'

Protect Home Environment During Vacation

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CARROLLTON, Texas — When you go on vacation, make sure your house is well protected.

Even if you have a monitored electronic security system, have a neighbor collect newspapers and mail. Put outdoor lights and at least one indoor light on automatic timers. Let your friends know when you are leaving and when you will return. Consider hiring a house-sitter for extended absences.

Peter A. Michel of Brink's Home Security Inc. offers these other suggestions for year-round protection:

Join a crime-watch program in your neighborhood.

Leave your outside lights on at night. If your neighborhood is dimly lit, lobby for better community lighting or install flood lights on your home.

Keep hedges next to your house trimmed to no higher than the window sill to make burglars more visible.

When you leave the house, leave the stereo or television on. The noise will ward off most would-be intruders.

BETSY DRAKE LEWIS' DECORATING TIPS

SOME ADVICE FROM THE EXPERTS

Regular care will keep your upholstered furniture looking its best, and as a service to you this week, we present some tips from the experts.

Vacuum upholstered furniture at least once a week. Be sure to clean armrests, chair or sofa backs and crevices. A soft, bristled brush may also be used.

Turn cushions periodically. Changing cushions around allows the undersections to breathe and the fabric to wear evenly.

Treat spills quickly. Even if your furniture is protected with a fabric protector, it's a good idea to get at those spills as quickly as possible. Water and oil-based stains will bead up so you can easily "wick" them away with a clean cloth. If your furniture is not protected, and the spill becomes a stain, consult a standard stain removal chart.

Keep upholstery away from direct sunlight. Avoid exposure to the sun. It can cause fabric to fade and deteriorate.

Once a year or so, shampoo upholstery with an upholstery cleaner.

And, when you need new furniture of any kind, stop in at Betsy Drake Interiors. We can show you great furniture selection and value.

"SOMETHING BEAUTIFUL IS ABOUT TO HAPPEN"

Rain Changes Percentages

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — April doesn't bring more showers than any other month, according to The World Almanac and Book of Facts.

Based on records from 1950 to 1980, May and June actually are rainier in 61 percent of 88 U.S. cities studied.

Rain is a big deal in New York City, a walking town, because it usually is accompanied by gusts of wind, a dearth of taxis and a plethora of puddles.

Just what does a good rainstorm do to New York — its residents and economy? According to a vest-pocket poll of pedestrians, 27 percent are late for work because they oversleep, rethink how they'll dress or can't find cabs.

While business suffers from late starts, workers suffer, too. In a downpour, 83 percent say they've had clothing ruined by curbside splashes or shoes ruined trying to jump curbside puddles.

And 58 percent lose at least two unbrellas a year. With all those unclaimed umbrellas up for grabs, why is it that 84 percent have never found one?

The poll was conducted by J&B Scotch.

Cigarette Machines Replaced

Dear Readers: I read the following item in ASH, a publication printed and distributed by Action on Smoking and Health, a national non-profit organization concerned with the problems of smoking and the rights of non-smokers:

"Condom vending machines will replace cigarette vending machines at the University of Virginia, thanks to Dr. Richard Keeling, the university's student health director."

I telephoned Dr. Keeling in Charlottesville to ask when the replacement is scheduled to begin.

"It's already begun," he replied.

I asked what prompted the switch.

"I had a very important double message to deliver by replacing a product that is known to be damaging to one's health with a product that will protect the health — and possibly the lives — of sexually active adults," Dr. Keeling stated matter-of-factly.

"Congratulations, Doctor," I said. "That was very courageous — particularly coming from a Virginian in tobacco country. May I quote you in my column?"

"I hope you do," was his reply. Integrity lives! End of item.

Dear Abby
Abigail Van Buren

Dear Abby: I am a 17-year-old virgin. I've been going with this one guy for two and a half years, and he's always trying to push me into having sex.

The problem is, I'm not ready for that yet. He keeps saying that if I don't have sex with him, there are plenty of other fish in the sea.

I really like him, and I enjoy hugging, kissing and holding hands. I'm not a tease. I want to wait until I get married to have that special night. And since it can happen only once (the first night), I want it to be special.

He doesn't want to wait. What should I do? — Hurting In Sunnyside, Wash.

Dear Hurting: I wish all the letters were as easy to answer as this one. The tide flows both ways. There are plenty of other fish in the sea. Dump him.

Dear Abby: My 27-year-old stepdaughter, "Julia," is having a large, lavish wedding, which my husband, Julia's father, is hosting and paying for. Although I have been married to "James" for 12 years, Julia still feels a great deal of resentment and bitterness toward me because I was the "other woman" in her father's life while she was growing up, which caused her mother much pain and unhappiness. (Her mother died a few years ago; otherwise, obviously, she would be co-hosting the wedding with James.)

I was not mentioned on the invitations (i.e., "Mr. and Mrs. — request," etc.), nor am I to stand in the receiving line following the ceremony. Julia is in charge of all the plans, and James says it's her day and whatever she says goes. I feel that out of loyalty to me, James should insist that we be treated as a couple, but he is bowing to all of her demands.

It has occurred to me to skip the wedding, but James thinks I should be bigger than that, and "rise above it all."

I do not want to spoil a joyous occasion by making demands, but I am finding these put-downs very hard to handle. What should I do? — James's Wife

Dear Wife: Since Julia still feels a great deal of resentment and bitterness toward you, an appropriate wedding gift for you to give the bride would be your absence. This would be a good time to leave town.

If you would like to write to Abby, send your letter to Abigail Van Buren, P.O. Box 69440, Los Angeles, CA. 90069. For a personal, non-published reply, enclose a self-addressed stamped envelope.

Women Just Know Car Sounds

No matter how close we come to egalitarianism, men will always bring up the strained relationship between a woman and her car. The old stereotype of a woman putting her hand out of the car window to dry her nails instead of making a signal to turn will haunt us to our graves.

A group of men were talking recently when one told the story about his wife, Anna, who duly reported to him that her brakes were "mushy." He drove her car around the block and pronounced the brakes to be perfectly normal. Anna still was not convinced. She told her friend Ethel that her brakes were "mushy," and Ethel said she had the same experience with mushy brakes until she put high-test ethyl in the gas tank. The men got hernias from laughing.

At Wits End
Erma Bombeck

I find that story perfectly reasonable. In fact, it all sounds too familiar. I had a "ping" in my engine a while back and told my husband about it. He gave me that look -- you know the one I mean, like he's standing over a puppy who just missed the paper. Then he said, "I'll check it out."

When he came in, he said, "The ping is not under your hood. It's your seat belt flapping against the seat."

"You weren't listening," I said. "A ping is never IN the car. A ping is always UNDER THE HOOD! I know a seat belt when I hear one, and it's not a ping. A flapping seat belt is a blump."

"Just drive it around for a while," he said tiredly.

"Oh sure, and just let the ping turn into a major gekump?"

"Do I have to remind you," he asked, "what happened when you took the car in for a ... what was it you called the noise in the trunk?"

"A boompt."

"Whatever. We paid $102 to find out that a can of creamed corn was banging against your spare tire."

I guess what really ticks me off is the superiority men exude about cars. Don't tell me the male species is born knowing about transmissions and brake fluids. Anyone who believes a man has an affinity for things mechanical has never ridden down a highway in a rental car with a husband who turns on the windshield wipers when he has to turn left and releases the hood when he thinks he's turning on the lights.

I'll concede that women may not have the right terminology, but we recognize a boompt or a mushy when we hear one. And let's face it, men still come running to women when the only way they can get the sticker price off the window is to break the glass.

About the ping under the hood? All I know is it went away right after I had my car washed and waxed.

Passengers Should Take Precautions

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Airlines are working to increase travel security, but it could take some time for them to adopt widespread measures.

Here are some safety suggestions from the Travel & Leisure Information Center.

Don't spend any more time than necessary at the check-in counter or in public concourses, restaurants and bars. Terrorists who attack airports usually target such areas.

As soon as you have checked in, go through the security screening station to the departure gate or airline club.

Don't carrry provocative items on the plane. In the Middle East, terrorists have harassed passengers for carrying liquor or publications they considered sexually oriented.

Focus On Needs Before You Buy

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Whether you're scanning the horizon from a cruise ship, going on a big-game photo shoot in Africa, backpacking in a state park or birding from your back deck, binoculars are standard equipment.

Depending on quality, they range in price from about $50 to more than $900. But, says Mark Abrams of Clairmont-Nichols Optics in New York, "only 15 percent of people who come in for binoculars know what type of glasses they should buy to fit their needs."

Before buying, says Bob Meichsner of Swarovski Optik, you should decide their primary use and bone up on binocular-talk. Know especially the meaning of the two numbers the dealer will refer to, ie., 7x42. The first number is the magnification, the "x" is shorthand for "power" and the second number is the objective lens diameter.

A good general-purpose pair of binoculars can be selected from 7x42, 7x50 or 8x30 models.

For more information, send a stamped, self-addressed envelope to "How to Select Binoculars," Swarovski Optik, 1 Kenney Drive, Cranston RI 02920.

Newest Phase In The Rebirth Of Zoo Atlanta Opens Thursday

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ATLANTA — Zoo Atlanta opens the first part of its east African section this week as part of its years-long program to change from an animal dungeon to a place any critter might be pleased to call home.

Two lions moved in first to the new five-acre section of the zoo, the Masai Mara. By the time the exhibit opens to the public Thursday, they are to be joined by zebras, giraffes, gazelles and impalas. African ostriches and two rare black rhinos are expected to go on display later.

Zoo officials say the animals will come from surplus from other zoos, purchases from dealers, plus loans, gifts and swaps.

The three-year-old lions are on indefinite loan from Kings Dominion, a Virginia wildlife park, until orphan cubs can be acquired from east Africa, a process that involves not only availability but a bureaucratic nightmare involving U.S. and foreign governments and professional regulatory agencies.

The zoo modernization is replacing the dank pits and barred cages with a more natural environment. Zoo designer John Coe planned the lions' area of about an acre based on visits to east Africa.

Atlanta's zoo was considered among the nation's worst and began a multi-million dollar renovation project in 1984 with the arrival of zoo director Terry Maple.

The hooved animals such as the zebras and giraffes ultimately will share a 90,000-square-foot area near the lions. "The zebras will be kept apart at first because they are sort of nervous," said Erika Archibald, the zoo's public relations director.

"Eventually they will graze together as they do in the wild," she said.

The zoo's three elephants also will have a new natural area within the new project.

Next year, an exhibit of hippos and crocodiles will be added to the east African area.

While the boulders look and feel real, they are sculpted from Gunite and concrete applied over metal frames.

The east African project will cost about $5 million, much of it paid for by member donations and a diminishing subsidy from the city that expires in 1993.

Discovering Nature, Places, During A Day's Travel

Text And Photographs By Jerry Raynor

A projection of curved wood, doubled in quiet water

A trip from Point A to Point B — for example, from Greenville to the Outer Banks via U.S. 64, can be made with two different approaches in mind. One is to get there in the shortest possible safe time; the other is to make it a combination of getting there within a reasonable time while adding in a few extra hours to explore a little along the way.

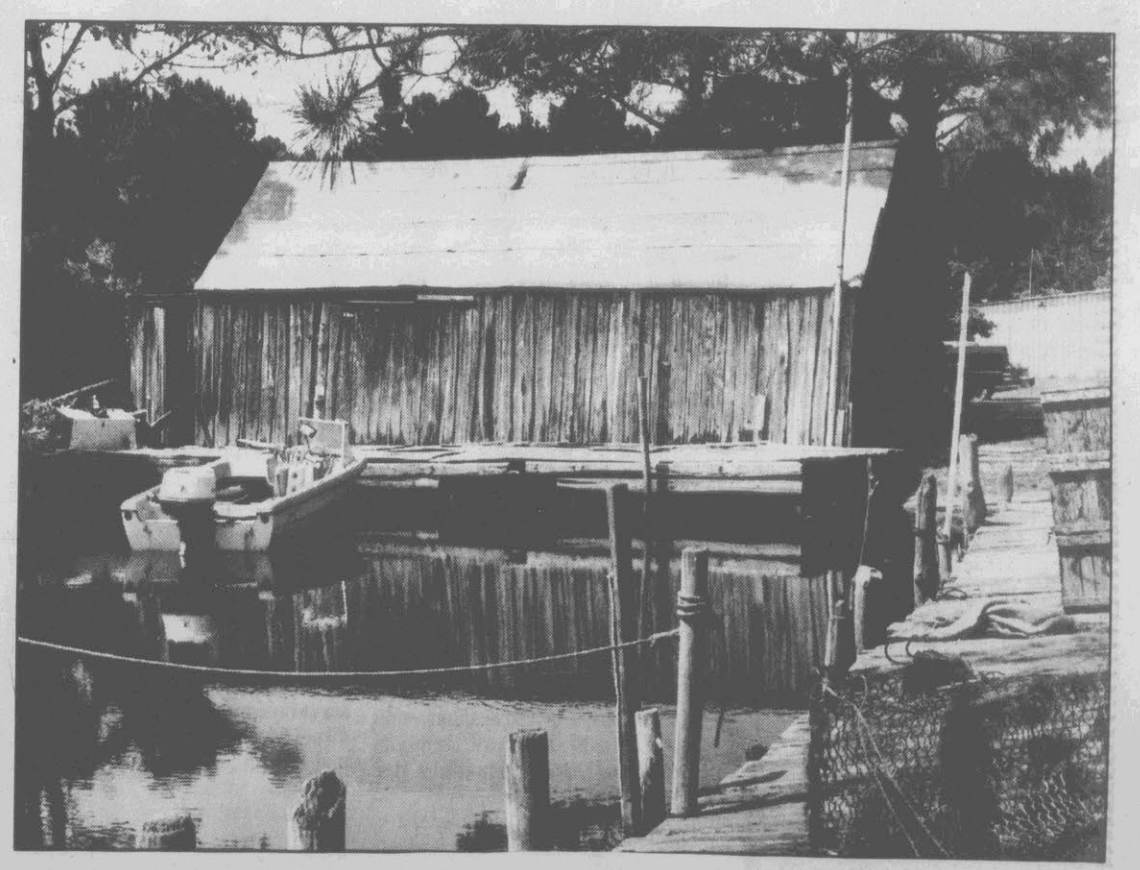

Now, with the longest days of the year at hand, with school out and children eager to be outdoors after months of classroom confinement, the circumstances are ideal to turn an ordinary trip into an extraordinary voyage of discovery.

Assuming that a U.S. 64 trip to the Outer Banks will be on your agenda in the near future, listed here are a few suggestions for a start-and-stop type of trip that will pay dividends.

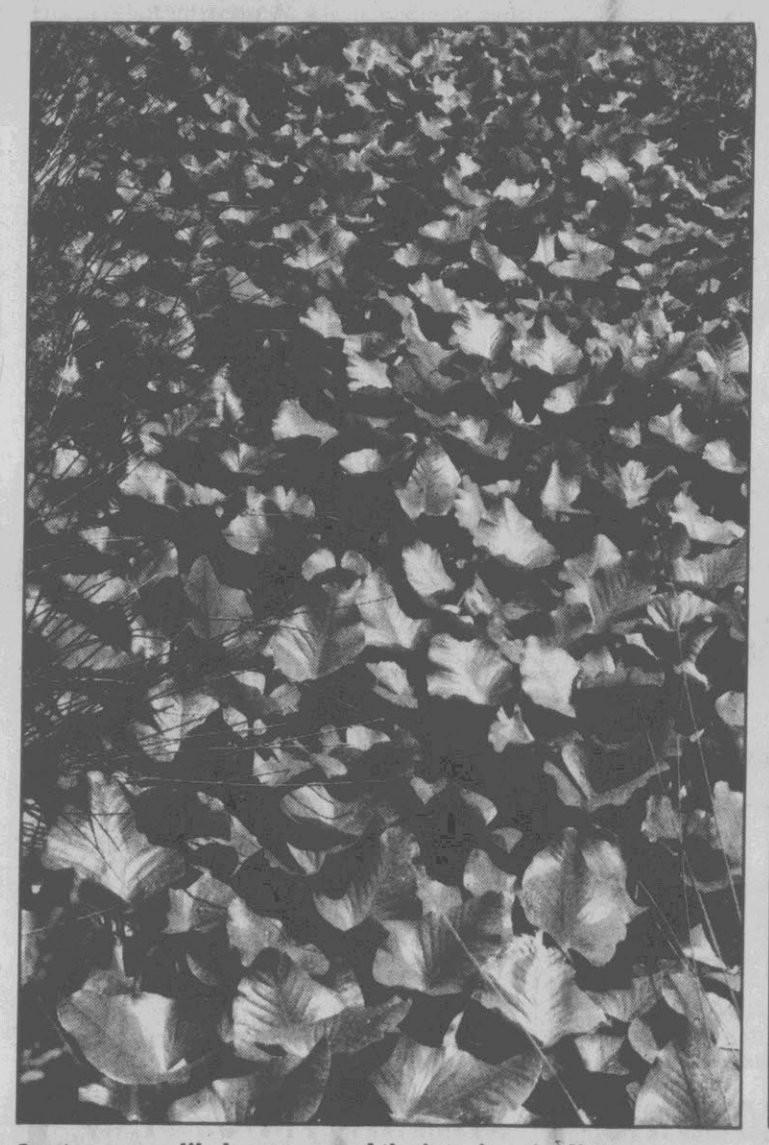

Mostly, it will be a matter of observing the marvels that nature has in store as one approaches the coast. Although only a couple hours away from Greenville, the flora typically seen in Pitt County and the flora found in the area between the village of Columbia and the Outer Banks is remarkably different.

One exception to this rule of difference is the presence this time of year of a spectacular wildflower —

Familiar coastal scene

A rivulet of dark water with dense marsh grass in the background, and a simple boat tie-up point is a scene found at countless sites in coastal North Carolina. The shore structure is also a convenient place to sit and fish or to watch birds and water insects in action.

Summer Operations Begin At Hammocks Beach State Park

SWANSBORO — Summer operation hours are now in effect at Hammocks Beach State Park near Swansboro. The island park is a North Carolina nature preserve type park with day visits and overnight camping available to visitors.

The park's ferry service, bathhouse and refreshment stand will be in operation daily through Sept. 4.

Private boats can be used to reach the beach, located offshore on Bear Island. However, most visitors travel to and from the island by a free pontoon-ferry which carries 38 passengers per run.

The ferry operates on an hourly schedule on Mondays and Tuesday and on a half-hour schedule Wednesdays through Sundays.

Departure times on Mondays and Tuesdays from the mainland begin at 9:30 a.m. and at half past the hour after until the final trip at 5:30 p.m. Departure time from the island begins at 10 a.m. and continues hourly until the last trip at 6 p.m.

Departure times on Wednesdays through Sundays from the mainland are every half hour beginning at 9:30 a.m. until the final trip at 5:30 p.m., with departure times from the island beginning at 10 a.m., with the last trip at 6 p.m.

Pets (except seeing eye dogs) are not allowed on the ferry. No alcoholic beverages are allowed on the island.

Visitors are permitted to take on board the ferry (subject to space limitations) items such as coolers, blankets, fishing gear, surf boards and other beach-related items.

Senior citizens or handicapped persons planning to make a visit to the island are to call 326-4881 in advance, giving the time of expected visit, or to contact the office near the mainland ferry site prior to ferry departure time in order that assistance can be provided at the berthing site on the island.

A number of nature programs are scheduled periodically at the bathhouse on the island. These include films and slides on the sea turtles that nest on Bear Island; hikes along the beaches to discover what the ocean has deposited; bird hikes to identify shore birds; watching brown pelicans, and lectures on various forms of sea life as well as the history of Bear Island.

Special events scheduled during June are: a marsh cruise on June 12 to learn about the marsh and wading birds. Meet at the mainland ferry dock and bring binoculars. The cruise is limited to 36; and June 30, a Legends in the Sky observation and lecture at 9 p.m. at the bathhouse for campers spending the night on Bear Island.

Additionally, the park staff will present, where possible, programs upon reqest for groups. For these, call in advance the park office at 326-4881.

Park Closed Moonlit Nights To Let Turtles Deposit Eggs

SWANSBORO — Hammocks Beach State Park will not allow overnight camping June 17, 18, and 19 to allow loggerhead sea turtles to nest undisturbed. The turtles are included on the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service's list of threatened wildlife.

Extensive studies by the Department of Natural Resources and Community Development, in conjunction with federal and environmental groups, have shown that the island is one of the prime nesting areas for loggerheads and other sea turtles on the North Carolina coast.

Hammocks Beach Superintendant Sam Bland said that only through increased protection can the turtles have a chance of reaching their nesting potential.

The 892-acre park is located near Swansboro in Onslow County.

Day use of the island and beach will continue as usual during this period. Authorized personnel will remain on the island at night to enforce the closing hours. Night closing will also take place July 17, 18, and 19, and on August 15, 16, and 17.

The public is encouraged to help save the loggerhead and other sea turtles by reporting any turtle seen nesting or if they find a dead or stranded turtle on any North Carolina beach. Call the North Carolina Wildlife Hotline 1-800-662-7137 or the Hammocks Beach State Park at 326-4881.

As desert-like conditions steadily take over Earth's arable lands, human misuse annually denudes 25,000 square miles of the planet's surface, says National Geographic.

'Mutiny On The Bounty' Subject Of New Stamps

By Syd Kronish
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The much-publicized and romanticized story of the "Mutiny on the Bounty" is known all over the world. Books, films and even postage stamps have told and retold this real-life drama of the high seas, and the names and places connected with it are still of interest two centuries later.

Not as well known, however, are the ties that exist between the Isle of Man and the individuals involved in the mutiny. Three of the main characters — Capt. William Bligh, Fletcher Christian and Peter Heywood — had roots on this island.

Hence, the Isle of Man has issued a set of five stamps and a souvenir sheet to hail the 200th anniversary of the mutiny and the Manx men involved in it.

Bligh married Elizabeth Betham, daughter of the collector of customs, in Old Onchan Church in 1781. Christian, who led the mutineers, was part of a famous family on the island. Heywood, who was later pardoned and went on to have a distinguished naval career, was also from a prominent Manx family.

As the story goes, Christian and his mutineers landed on Pitcairn Island in the South Pacific, where many of the descendants of the original group live today. Some fled Pitcairn to nearby Norfolk Island, and their progeny are still found there.

The 13-pence Manx stamp shows Bligh outside the church in which he was married, and the 16-pence depicts him and his loyal supporters being cast adrift by the mutineers. Heywood appears on the 30-pence, while the 32-pence has a scene of the Bounty arriving at Pitcairn Island. Shown on the 35-pence is Christian against a backdrop of the refuge at Pitcairn.

Three stamps and a label make up the design of the souvenir sheet. Included is the 35-pence Christian stamp. Since Pitcairn and Norfolk are also celebrating the anniversary, the Isle of Man has reproduced one stamp from each to complete the souvenir sheet. Clive Abbott, the designer of the Manx anniversary stamps, also designed the Pitcairn and Norfolk stamps. The label bears a map of the Pacific region in which the historic events took place.

From 18th-century sailing vessels, we go to spacecraft of the 20th century and beyond.

As we celebrate the 20th anniversary of man's landing on the moon, many stamp collectors are becoming more involved in acquiring stamps with spaceflight themes. Three months after Sputnik I was launched on Oct.4, 1957, a small group of topical collectors formed the Space Topics Study Group, which today is one of the largest, if not the largest, space philatelic club.

The group collects space and rocket stamps, space first-day covers, manned- and unmanned-flight event covers, pictorial cancels, autographs and other stamp items. It is the largest such group within the American Topical Association and is affiliated with the American Philatelic Society.

Four new airmail stamps commemorating the 20th Universal Postal Congress will be released this fall in Washington. The quartet of stamps offers a glimpse of what mail transportation might be like in the future.

The block of four 45-cent airmails together with an imperforate souvenir sheet are part of a series of stamps and stationery items to be released by the U.S. Postal Service during World Stamp Expo '89 to commemorate the Universal Postal Union Congress.

A Celebration Of Bats Set

WILMINGTON — On Saturday at 2 p.m., "A Celebration of Bats," an exhibit exploring the natural history of bats, opens at New Hanover County Museum of the Lower Cape Fear.

Dr. Dave Webster will present a slide/lecture program, "The Truth About Bats," and perform taxidermy demonstrations throughout the afternoon.

Misunderstood world-wide, bats consistently suffer from an image problem. But bats are animals with highly sophisticated behavior and specialized physical adaptations. They benefit humans as predators of insects and pollinators of flowers and their guano makes excellent fertilizer.

Lower Cape Fear Bats include the Red Bat, Seminole Bat, Hoary Bat, Evening Bat and the Southeastern Bat.

Through his photographs, Dr. Merlin Tuttle, founder of Bat Conservation International, attempts to dispel some of the myths about bats and to create a new image of them as highly intelligent, clean, social, and beneficial animals.

His photographs have appeared in National Geographic, National Wildlife, Smithsonian and International Wildlife. The exhibit also examines bat anatomy through skins, skeletons and skulls borrowed from the North Carolina Museum of Sciences in Raleigh.

Dr. Webster, an assistant professor at the University of North Carolina at Wilmington's Biological Sciences Department, will be available to answer all "bat" related questions following his program.

Bread Dough Used In An Ancient Chinese Art Form

One of the least-known traditional Oriental art forms is the creation of lavishly detailed small works of art in dough made from wheat flour or pounded rice.

For centuries an esteemed art in China, this specialized form of creativity in recent years had almost disappeared with the advent of ceremonial art of cheaper plastic and paper. The principal use of dough art has traditionally been for ceremonial purposes, particularly their use in the worship of ancestor and various Chinese divinities.

Fortunately, as Tseng Li-Ling reports in "Temple Figures, Toys and Tradition in Dough," in the May issue of the English language Free China Review magazine, this old art form has experienced a welcome renaissance in Taiwan in recent years. Li-Ling's informative account is amply illustrated with a spread of more than two dozen splendid color photographs by Joseph Chin and Lin Bor-Liang.

The use of dough figures, Li-Ling explains, developed as an acceptable substitute for real food items "on special holidays, such as the birthday of the gods." He notes that "For centuries, the best possible offering, whether to gods or ancestors, was meat. But until recent decades in Taiwan (and up to today on the mainland), meat has been expensive and often unavailable."

Another viable reason for using dough art is that unlike the real thing, it is not subject to quick spoilage — an important consideration "when offerings were expected to remain on the altar for at least 15 days."

Given the extensive time and care involved in this meticulous art form, the condition exists whereby "Few dough sculptors can still earn a living at the art, and their numbers are dwindling." This at the same time that a tremendous resurgence of interest is manifest on the part of the public as exemplified in museum showings of dough art.

One of the masters in this art is Hsu An-tien, a 78 year-old who has perfected the art over a period of nearly 60 years. An-tien boldy expanded his creations to representations of many forms of sea life such as shrimp, goldfish and turtles, and insects like crickets and cicadas. Instead of bold colors, he uses naturalistic hues accurately representing the true-to-life coloration of his subjects.

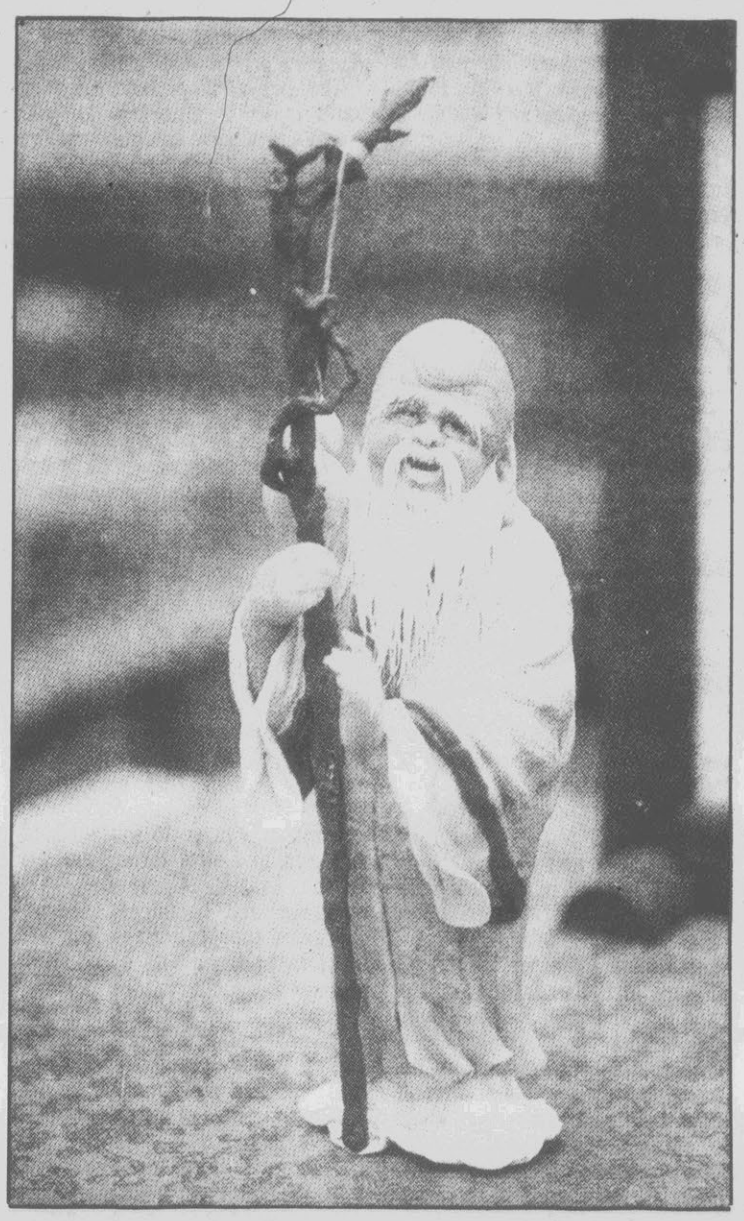

Another recognized master craftsperson is a woman, younger than An-tien. She focuses on classical Chinese folk tales, opera and festivities in painstaking creations. Many of her pieces are inspired by paintings in the National Palace Museum. These art works, in miniature, placed in a stage like setting, capture the exquisite expressions of children, actors, gods and goddesses. Even in small scale pieces, the pliability of dough allows minute details "for such intracies as eyelashes and eyebrows on figures."

A third artist whose output is described in detail is 70-year-old Shih Chin-chiang, who specializes in working with multicolored dough to form works representing legendary figures in a time-honored tradition.

These three, together with a few other practitioners, offer hope that other, younger, gifted artists might keep alive this gorgeous, fragile art — and eventually, lead to an even greater "survival and growth of this art form."

Work Progresses At Crazy Horse Site

CRAZY HORSE, S. D. — Work will begin this season to define a preliminary profile of the Indian's face on sculptor Korczak Ziolkowski's Crazy Horse mountain carving now in progress in the Black Hills of South Dakota.

The precision work will involve some innovative measuring, drilling and blasting technics not used previously on Crazy Horse, or elsewhere.

Crazy Horse's head will be nearly 90 feet high. When completed, the mountain carving will be 563-feet high and 641-feet long. The mountain will be carved on both sides, in the round. To date, nearly 8,300,00 tons of rock have been removed in the process of blocking-out Crazy Horse.

"To say we are going to begin defining Crazy Horse's profile is not to say we are going to sculpt it, yet," says Mrs. Ruth Ziolkowski.

Since her husband's death in 1982, she has directed all work at Crazy Horse, using three books of comprehensive plans and measurements she helped Korczak prepare for the mountain carving, which he knew was too large an undertaking for him to complete in his lifetime.

"In everything we do on the mountain, we are following Korczak's advice 'to go slowly, so you do it right.' This season we will begin bringing out the silhouette of Crazy Horse's profile against the sky, but it will be a preliminary profile many feet in front of what will be the eventual finished surface of the Indian's face.

"Bringing out the 90-foot-high preliminary profile is not something we're going to be able to accomplish overnight, or even in one year. We don't want to build any false expectations about that. But, while we're working on the head, it's going to be exciting for visitors to be able to watch the workers silhouetted against the sky at the peak of the mountain."

This season's plan is for the defining to begin at the top of Crazy Horse's head and progress downward to about to the lips. Rock ledges will provide some work platforms, but much of the calibration, drilling and loading of explosives will be done by workers rappelling on the head 600 feet above the trees. Modern safety equipment has been purchased for the dangerous work.

A three-man crew will concentrate on the Indian's profile all season while four to five people will work elsewhere of the mountain. Ziolkowski family members and other personnel make up the work force on the mountain.

Until experience is gained with the new technics, there is no indication how long it may take for the preliminary profile to begin to emerge. Weather and financing impose major limitations on the progress on the mountain carving.

Crazy Horse is not a federal or state project. It is a nonprofit, educational foundation whose work is financed primarily from an admission fee, contributions and revenue from the sale of Crazy Horse momentos and Indian-made arts and crafts. Contributions may be sent to: Crazy Horse, Avenue of the Chiefs, The Black Hills, Crazy Horse, S.D., 5773-9998.

Nature's Discoveries

Columbia is an ideal point to stop, both for a snack break and for a mixture of scenery and culture. Instead of taking the Columbia bypass, turn left to the business district. Go slow for an almost hidden turn-off on the right into a lovely garden wedged between the old bridge and the new.

Water-loving plants and flowers line the shores on both sides — lush green growth in June flowering. Here too is a memorial to servicemen, a rustic gazebo and across the water, views of Columbia's small waterfront.

In the village itself, pause to observe the harbor beauty of brightly painted boats reflected in water, then proceed downtown to the village's showpieces — the fine old courthouse and on the courthouse lawn, a most unusual Civil War monument.

Not erected until 1902, the monument is dedicated to a woman who nursed wounded soldiers. It has tributes too to local heroes, to Robert E. Lee and to faithful slaves. It's an unusual history study in ornate stone.

The 31-mile stretch of U.S. 64 from Columbia to Manns Harbor is one marked by a scarcity of dwellings and interesting uninterrupted stretches of woodland. For much of the distance, canals border each side of the highway.

At intervals, good safe areas to park for explorations along the canals are afforded by wide spaces where logging or other forest roads branch from the highway.

At a couple such places on a recent trip, a half-hour's lingering and looking time resulted in seeing close-up beautiful purple irises with centers of cream; maroon leaves of water lilies suspended on the surface of dark, near motionless water; three non-poisonous water snakes gliding gracefully along the water; lustrous dragonflies and damselflies darting in flight; a tangle of delicate brilliant orange love knot weeds, and the early-in-the-year song of crickets in the grass. Most exciting of all was the sudden passage overhead of a pair of brightly colored pileated woodpeckers.

Once past the broad Alligator River and the settlement at East Lake, the traveler will observe an increasing manifestation of silvery bush skeletons leaving over and reflected in canal water. These are the filigre remains of native evergeen myrtles that have died.

A final suggestion on the Greenville-Outer Banks trip is to take a short detour at Manns Harbor. Just before the bridge spanning Croatan Sound, take a left turn to Mashoes. Until recently a dirt road, it is now paved all six miles to the tiny settlement.

After the first mile, there is only forest and a turn off to a wildlife access area (worth a visit if time permits). A final curve in the road leads to a scattering of houses. At road's end is a charming weathered fish house, a small cemetery and a poetic vista of brown-gray marsh grasses. A trio of near-fallen fish houses dot the distance within the web of marsh waterways.

Pale pink swamp roses begin blossoming in June; egrets and herons make leisurely flights in the area, and everywhere, red-wing blackbirds chatter and swoop to and fro in noisy congregations.

These sight-seeing suggestions along the Greenville-Outer Banks trip undeniably add two or three travel hours to the 140 mile trip. It is also affirmation that the rewards are well worth an early departure in order to explore the beauties of nature easily overlooked in conventional hurried travels.

The finished product

A pyramid of seven steps of packed earth clay is the finished product of an environmental sculpture by Richard G. Brown III, located in the open area adjacent to the Belk Building west of Charles Street and north of Greenville Boulevard. Constructed within a supporting timber framework, the clay was transported to the site from Beaufort County. Weather will soften the lines of the piece as time goes by. Brown, from Cambridge, Mass., was until recently a visiting artist in the School of Art, East Carolina University.

Exhibition Of Orr Etchings At GMA

By Nelson Britt
GREENVILLE MUSEUM OF ART

The Greenville Museum of Art will be exhibiting the portfolio "The North Carolina Etchings" by Louis Orr beginning Tuesday. On Tuesday, the museum will open the exhibit with a reception from 5:30 p.m. to 7:30 p.m. The public is invited to attend the free reception and exhibit.

In the exhibition, Greenville's Dr. Robert Lee Humber will be recognized for his persuasion of Louis Orr to come to North Carolina to take on this enormous commission.

Orr began his project in 1939 and completed it in 1951, a project 12 years in the making. The original portfolio was sold in volumes of five prints each, and the exhibit will recognize those who purchased each volume enabling GMA to have a complete portfolio of 50 prints.

The Orr etchings have as their subjects notable historic buildings in North Carolina in locations ranging from the mountains to the coast.

In addition to the North Carolina etchings, supplement material such as the original drawings, the etching plates, and a commissioned etching of the United Nations building will be part of the exhibit. There will be also a small number of old photographs of Orr and of Orr and Dr. Humber together.

The supplement material in the exhibition and historical facts were made possible through the cooperation of Dr. John Humber of Chapel Hill and his brother, Captain Marcel Humber, USN, of Virginia, sons of the late Dr. Humber.

The time, effort and cost of this exhibition was made possible through a grant from BB&T Bank.

Louis Orr was born in Hartford, Conn., May 19, 1879. He lived and worked as a printmaker in Paris where Robert Lee Humber and he became good friends.

He was the first American artist to have his work accepted in the Louvre.

Louis Moore was more than just another etcher; he was a fine selector of being in the right place at the right time to draw his subject.

He was an excellent draftsman, and the North Carolina etchings certainly reflect his viewpoint, his draftsmanship and his ability, so that he can be considered a master printmaker.

GMA Receives Grant From Museum Services

By Jerry Raynor
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

The Greenville Museum of Art is the recipient of an $8,573 grant from the Institute of Museum Services in Washington, D.C. The museum is one of ten North Carolina institutions and one of only three N.C. museums of art selected for one of these prestigious grants.

Lois Burke Shepard, director of the Institute of Museum Services, has announced that nationally, 400 museums are receiving fiscal year 1989 General Operating Support grants totaling over $17 million.

The 400 were selected from 1,355 museums and other institutions applying for funds in this annual competitive effort.

Commenting on the grant to the Greenville Museum of Art, director Nelson Britt said: "One thing about the museum business is that nationally museums seek to generate support money to help in the continuing effort to operate effectively.

"Another thing that is important is the fact that directors look on grants as a distinctive acknowledgement, an award if you will, in the recognition of services provided to a community. I, along with the museum's board, can certainly feel honored that the Greenville Museum is one of only 74 art museums throughout the country to receive an operating support grant from this source."

Britt explained that the process of selecting recipients "is in the main achieved through directors of other museums who are appointed to serve as a selection body. These people receive and study the grant requests submitted nationwide.

"Apparently," he added, "they liked what we wrote about the role and the achievements of the Greenville museum over te past year. This evaluating process, as I understand it, is instrumental in the decision of which institutions will receive the grant money allocations."

"And what really please me is that we received the full amount we requested. I think that speaks for itself."

Grants are made to museums of all types and sizes throughout the United States. Aquariums, arboretums and botanical gardens, children's and junior museums, art museums, historic houses and sites, history museums, nature centers, natural history and anthropology museums, planetariums, science and technology centers, specialized museums and zoological parks are among the range of institutions that receive funding.

Grantees include museums with from one staff member to more than 2,000 employees, with annual operating budgets from less than $10,000 to over $70 million. The national competition encompasses museums in urban, suburban and rural areas.

The nine other public institutions in North Carolina receiving awards are: N.C. Botanical Garden, Chapel Hill; Asheville Art Museum; Green Hill Center for N.C. Art, Greensboro; Blount-Bridgers House, Tarboro; Cleveland County Historical Museum, Shelby; Gaston County Museum of Art and History, Dallas; Health Adventure, Asheville; N.C. Museum of Life and Science, Durham, and the Tobacco Museum of North Carolina, Inc., Kenly.

Unusual Exhibits Of Art

ALBANY, Ga. —The Albany Museum of Art is currently showing two unusual exhibitions, both to be on view through mid-July.

One is "St. EOM in the Land of Pasaquan: The Visionary Art and Architecture of Eddie Owens Martin (1908-1986)." This is the first exhibition in 30 years of the self-taught visionary artist and architect who spent the last 30 years of his life at Pasaquan, a four-acre environment of brilliantly painted, sculpted ritual architecture he designed and built in a remote section of Marion County, Ga.

Martin was influenced by the ruined temple complexes of pre-Columbian Mexico with his work modeled on his notion of what the civilizations on the fabled lost continents of Mu and Atlantis looked like.

Object in the exhibition include tables, large mandalas, decorated ponchos, hats, oil paintings and watercolors, a concrete bust, beaded curtains, jewelry and decorative pottery.

The other show is "Projects: Philip Pocock." The artist is well known for his narrative and experimental photograhic depictions of the lower east side in New York.

Historic Bath Open House

BATH — Tours of four historic buildings and living history demonstrations will highlight spring open house at Historic Bath on Sunday, June 11.

From 1 p.m. to 5 p.m. staff and volunteers in period dress will offer guided tours of the 1744 Palmer Marsh House, the 1790 Van der Veer House, the 1734 St. Thomas Church and the 1830 Bonner House.

Visitors also will see various living history demonstrations such as spinning, weaving, quilting, woodworking, rope making, blacksmithing and netmaking.

Bath, North Carolina's first incorporated town, founded in 1705, was a lively trading area during the 18th century. Some of North Carolina's most influential citizens were residents of Bath, including government officials, traders, politicians, settlers and colonial officials.

The present town of Bath is located almost entirely within the boundaries of the original town, designed and laid out by John Lawson, surveyor general to the crown.

It contains several significant structures surviving from the 18th and 19th centuries, preserved, restored and furnished with period furnishings and historic artifacts. Admission is free for the open house day. A tour admission fee is charged at other times.

Varied Coverage In An Area Magazine

NCEast. The Voice of Eastern North Carolina magazine. Winter/Spring. 1989. Greenville, N.C. Thomas A. Williams, editor. Paper, 64 pages, $2.95.

The historic town of New Bern is the lead item in the Winter/Spring issue of the NCEast, the twice-yearly magazine of general interest of eastern North Carolina published in Greenville.

The current issue is available at many area and regional newstands.

In addition to "Rediscovering New Bern," other major articles cover "Economic Challenges," "Entrpreneurs Making It Big," a resume of theater, "Footlights," along with items on dining, history and boating.

Writer Mark Petterson does a fine job in combining his personal responses with the past and present history of the old and new of the town of New Bern. Due credit is given to culture, business and recreation — a well-balanced view. Petterson's article is interesting reading to those who are familiar with the town, and very informative as an introduction for others.

The present and more particularly plans and dreams for the economic future in eastern North Carolina is the topic that writer Sue Hinson deals with. In the article "Region of Two Faces: Eastern North Carolina: Economic Promise and Challenge," Ms. Hinson effectively contrasts the economic growth (and general well-being economically) of cities like Greenville, Rocky Mount and Wilson as contrasted to the plight of the economy in many of the region's rural economies.

There are signs of hope, as she points out, in various programs already established and some promising ones in the making. This perspective is a needed insight into today's economic problems and the dangers that can arise if rural needs are not met with good planning and common sense approaches.

A more upbeat note in one segment of eastern North Carolina life is revealed in Kim Dale's survey of theater throughout the area. It may come as a surprise to many that the area is indeed, as she states, an area where "community theater is alive and well in eastern North Carolina." Covered in the article are more than a dozen active threatrical ventures, both well-established and new in New Bern, Rocky Mount, Wilson, Greenville, Kinston, Ayden, Goldsboro and Farmville.

An inspiring example of achievement is presented in Carine M. Nenno's account of the success realized by entrepreneur Polly Anderson, founder of River Road Galleries. At first skeptical about her dream of owning her own business, Ms. Anderson has reached te point where she can consider branching out into establishments in Greenville and Raleigh. A most heartening success story.

Other equally heartening stories of making good from small beginnings are touched on — the Belhaven Marina; New Bern's Air East; Greenville's Jerry Creech microfilm and mailing business, and Robbie Barrow's Monk's food business.

Boating is increasingly becoming a recreational outlet for many in the eastern area of the state. This outdoor pleasure is explained by Louis Van Camp in "The Coastal Waters of NCEast: A Boater's Paradise." Harbors, inland waterway cruising, river racing and other facets of boating are presented with informational details on where to go for whatever part of boating one might be interested in.

A negative mark must be given to Tom Williams's Fine Dining column — not in the way in which the material is presented — but in telling us about "three fabulous restuarants," then failing to provide an idea of how much it costs to eat in two of the three highly recommended places.

An intriguing touch of past history deals with the question posed by writer Joseph Baneth Allen on Wilmington's Burgwin-Wright House — and that is, "Did Cornwallis Sleep in Wilmington?" After reading it, you must come to your own conclusion, yes or no.

FROM SHEPPARD MEMORIAL LIBRARY

By Sarah Shephard-Swartz
SHEPPARD MEMORIAL LIBRARY

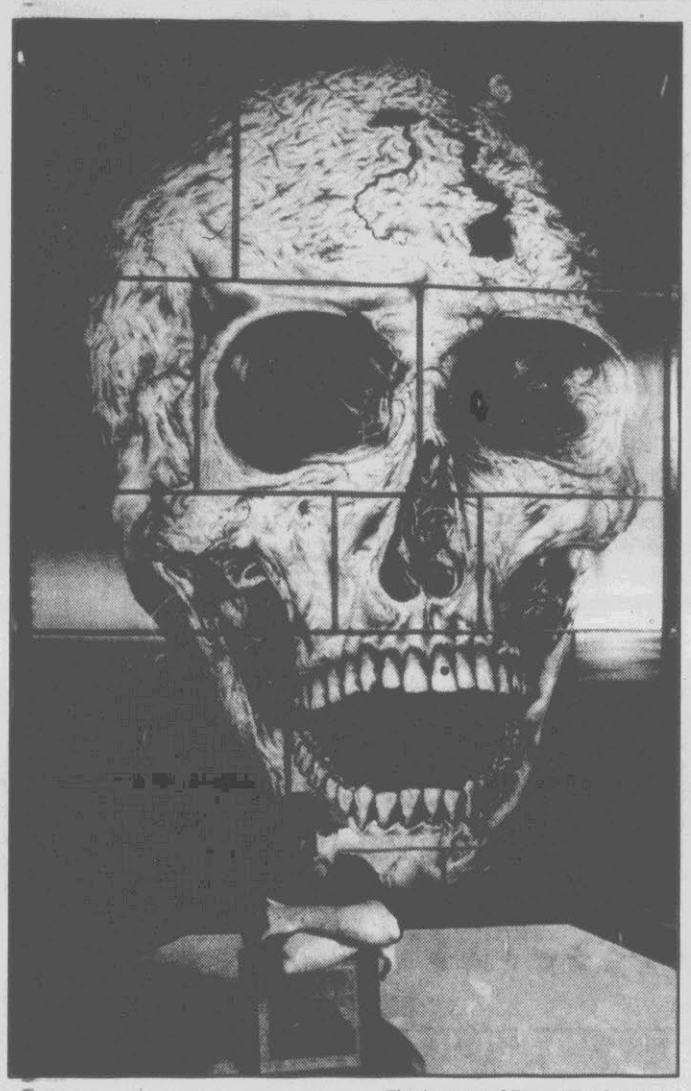

The American public, as a whole, likes to "peoplewatch." Of particular interest to us are the lives of the so-called "rich and famous." Many interesting books about some of our country's more prominent families have been published during the past year; one which should have a strong local following is "The Gilded Leaf" by Patrick Reynolds and Tom Shachtman.

Readers of this absorbing account of the R. J. Reynolds tobacco clan may need to remind themselves that it is not fiction. These are colorful characters, a family rising from 'humble' beginnings to attain fabulous wealth and power, scandal and tragedy wrought by excess — and a most ironic finale.

Among these are Dick Reynolds, quintessential Jazz Age playboy who maried four times and died of the combined effects of excessive alcohol and tobacco use; Smith Reynolds, daredeveil pilot who flew around the world, was married to sultry torch singer Libby Holman, and died of a gunshot wound — possibly inflicted by his wife — at age 20; and R. J. (Richard Joshua), the shrewd but surprisingly civic-minded paterfamilias who built the family fortune.

"The Gilded Leaf," while not especially well-written, is a most fascinating look at the colorful history of one of our state's renowned families. Come by Sheppard soon for this and other exciting new books.

Playwright Amused At His Success

By Soll Sussman
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

OTTAWA, Canada — George F. Walker doesn't hesitate to confess his amusement and elation at his success in his chosen field of drama.

"I just laughed out loud on the subway," he said, recalling a recent ride in his hometown of Toronto. "I'm a playwright — and I have children to support."

He laughed again.

The bearded, 41-year-old Walker never has had as successful a year as the past one, with "Nothing Sacred" a staple on the repertory theater circuit from Los Angeles' Mark Taper Forum to the Hartford Stage Company in Connecticut. Time magazine named it one of the 10 best plays of 1988, although it has yet to be performed in New York.

The play is his 18th, yet Walker recalled that when his first play was produced it was only the second play he had ever seen.

"I was just attracted to the idea that you could fill it up any way you want," he said to explain his attraction to the theater.

The jovial, soft-spoken Walker was in Ottawa for the opening of "Nothing Sacred," in a production very similar to its Toronto origin, at Canada's modern National Arts Center.

Walker keeps the 19th century Russian setting for his version of Ivan Turgenev's "Fathers and Sons," but insists that it now is very much a modern, Canadian work.

He first read the original when he was 17 and said he thinks he was in a bit of a trance when he wrote his version.

"I never meant it to be an adaptation," he said over lunch before opening night in Ottawa. "I wrote it in 10 to 11 days."

Walker wanted to bill the play as "inspired by Turgenev," but then decided that would be "hokey."

"Mostly I thought, 'if I just let it come through me, so the language would be, without being forced, for actors living now.'"

Literature was the starting point for "Nothing Sacred" just as other inspirations have come from something read in the newspaper or a conversation with a friend.

"I'm sure if Ivan were alive, he'd be on my side," Walker said about criticism of his adaptation.

Much of his earlier work was of a more eccentric tone, in line with his development in the Toronto alternative theater scene of the '70s. The appeal of the theater, he said, is its access, that the multimillion dollar budgets required for movies generally are not needed to create plays.

Thinking back 12 or 15 years to his early career, Walker again laughed at the contrast to the days when the crowds were smaller and the theaters less established.

"When you're used to seeing 200 or 300 people come in, and then you see 800 or 900," he joked. "Where are we going to put them all?"

Walker's Toronto agent, Ralph Zimmerman, astutely pitched "Nothing Sacred" last year to American repertory theaters, and there's been some sniping that the success has as much to do with the politics of regional theater as it does with the play.

Time, reviewing the Los Angeles production, said he "persuasively makes the debate among student anarchists in 1860s Russia echo that among Marxist collegians of 1960s America."

The New York Times gave a decidedly mixed review to the production of "Nothing Sacred" at Hartford Stage, saying Walker assumed too much artistic license for a project that could have used a bit more reverence.

On the other hand, Walker believes it's time for the dominant role of New York reviews to be re-evaluated in light of the changing theater scene that is less concentrated on Broadway.

The playwright also said many Canadians gripe about the lack of knowledge in the United States about their country, but he chalked that off to a result of Americans' self-preoccupation.

"They don't know Canada is up here feeling insecure about its culture," he said. The comment has been made that Walker is an example of a classic Canadian case, of gaining legitimacy at home only after being discovered in the United States. But he believes his steady career in Toronto was quite established before productions started of his plays in U.S. theaters.

"I think the message Canadians always had was that we didn't need to develop our own," he said, recalling the days when Canadian theater was dominated by imports from Broadway or London. "Somewhere along the line you go, 'Hey, wait. I can do that too.'"

NCMA Film Festival

RALEIGH — Summer in the Research Triangle Park is synonymous with dance, heat, and the animation film festival at the North Carolina Museum of Art. This year's festival is scheduled for June and includes a review of technological innovations in animation. All films are free and open to the public.

Shown on Wednesday nights at 8 p.m., the animation festival begins Wednesday with "The 20th International Tournee of Animation." For two decades, the full range of animation's potential as art and entertainment has been represented in the Tournees of Animation, a series of annual feature-length compilations of short works from around the world, produced by Expanded Entertainment in Los Angeles.

The series marked its 20th anniversary with a program of 18 prize-winning animated shorts from New Zealand, Belgium, Hungary, England, Poland, Switzerland, China, Italy, the Soviet Union and the United States.

The mediums range from standard inked-cel animation, essentially the same technique Walt Disney used half a century ago, through clay animation, pixilation and stop-motion photography, up through computer animation.

For information about the animation festival, call the museum at 833-1935.

Events At Elizabeth II

MANTEO — This summer, beachgoers can step back in time to experience Elizabethan life.

From June 10 through August 26, visitors to the Elizabeth II State Historic Site at Manteo can see "Sailors, Sea Chanties and Salt Pork: A Day Aboard Elizabeth II, 1585."

Mariners and colonists will present Elizabethan lifestyles aboard the ship and on the shore. At the settlement site, visitors will see the colonists as they were three weeks after their arrival, busy preparing food, erecting tents and completing other camplife chores.

Staff and volunteers in period dress also will demonstrate games that occupied Elizabethans' leisure time, according to Rob Worrell, site manager.

The living history program is offered Tuesday through Saturday, 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Regular tours of the ship are available seven days a week. An admission is charged.

Avant-Garde Films

RALEIGH — The films of Maya Deren, an innovator in American avant-garde film of the 1940s and 1950s, will be the subject of the monthly Film Forum at 8 p.m. Thursday at the North Carolina Museum of Art.

Deren startled audiences who saw her dreamlike films in the '40s and '50s. She was among the innovators who created a new American film movement based on images and feelings rather than narrative. The forum will present five of her brief films, including "Meshes of the Afternoon" and film works that explore dance and motion.

"Meshes of the Afternoon," made in 1943, is perhaps the most influential work in American avant-garde film, with Deren herself appearing as the central figure in the film.

The films will be introduced by Tom Whiteside of Duke University, who will also lead the audience discussion that follows.

1989 ADF Dedicated To Julie Hedgepeth Wray

DURHAM — The 1989 American Dance Festival will be dedicated to Julie Hedgepeth Wray, 1934-1989, a member of the Duke University dance faculty from 1955 onward, and director of Duke Dance from 1981 until her death.

She served as academic liason between the univeristy and ADF. Ms. Wray was also an advocate for dance on the statewide level: among other accomplishments, she helped found the North Carolina Dance Alliance in 1981, and served as its first president.

Her achievments were recognized with a 1986 Shepherd Award from the University of North Carolina, Greensboro. She also received the 1987 Beverly and Laramie Hitchings Award for Dance, an award created by Nobel Prize winner George H. Hitchings in honor of his wife and daughter.

"Julia Wray was devoted to dance," said ADF Director Charles Reinhart. "This year's festival is dedicated to her because of her support and love of dance, and her support and love of the ADF."

The 1989 American Dance Festival opens today with performances continuing through July 22 on the Duke University campus in Durham. This year marks the ADF's 55th year of existence, and its 12th season in Durham.

June Dance Camp At Chowan College

MUFREESBORO — The Carolina/Virginia Dance Camp, featuring a Texas choreographer who has taught ballet in Tokyo, will be held June 19-24 at Chowan College, Murfreesboro. Orientation will be June 19 from 8 a.m. to 10 a.m. in Daniel Recital Hall.

The workshop, co-sponsored by Chowan's Fine Arts Department, Dr. James Chamblee, chairman, and the Academy of the Tidewater Ballet, Norfolk, Va., will include instruction in classical ballet, theatrical tap, jazz gymnastics and modern dance for ages nine and up.

Mrs. Frances Hawkins, artistic director of the Friendswood Ballet, Houston, will teach classical ballet.

Mrs. Hawkins has been involved in training dancers at both the civic and professional level. She was artistic director for the Academy of Vacaville Ballet and Academy of Solano Ballet in California and the Yokota Youth Center Ballet in Tokyo.

Daniel David Deal, who has trained with the Joffrey Ballet School and will continue his instruction with the American Ballet Theatre in New York City, will teach jazz gymnastics and theatrical tap.

He has danced with the Tidewater Ballet Association and has made guest appearances with the Virginia Beach and Petersburg Ballet companies and Williamsburg Dance Theatre.

Tar River Community Band Opens Sunday Series Today

The Tar River Community Band, a group of amateur musicians from the Greenville-Pitt County area, will kick off the Sunday in the Park series tonight with a 7 p.m. concert at the Eugene West Amphitheatre on the Greenville Town Common. This and all succeeding Sunday in the Park concerts are funded by the City of Greenville and are free.

In the event of inclement weather, the rain date for the concert will be at 7 p.m. Monday at the same site.

Those attending are encouraged to bring along blankets, pillows, folding chairs and other items to enhance listening pleasure. It might also be advisable to have along insect repellent in the event mosquitoes make an appearance.

A wide variety of music has been planned by the all-volunteer group, including a P.D.Q. Bach spoof on classical music entitled "Grand Serenade for an Awful Lot of Winds and Percussion;" "Sinatra In Concert," a medley of Frank Sinatra's hits; "Symphonic Variations on Amazing Grace," and John Philip Sousa's "The Stars and Stripes Forever."

Another medley, "Armed Forces Salute," encompasses portions of "The Caisson Song," "Semper Paratus," "The Marines' Hymn," "The U.S. Air Force Song," and "Anchor Aweigh."

The band's trombone section - composed of Ralph Shumaker, Steve Blades, Sue Davenport, Charles Entzminger and Diana Mount, will be featured in John Higgins' "The Trombone Rag."

Harold Jones, chairman of the Instrumental Department at East Carolina University's School of Music, has served as director of the 50-plus member organization since its formation two years ago.

Occupations of the members, who range in age from 20 to 71, are as varied as the instruments they play.

The Sunday in the Park series of concerts is sponsored by the Greenville Recreation and Parks Department.

Bayou Bash Event Saturday

WASHINGTON, N.C. — A Bayou Bash featuring Cajun food and Zydeco music is to be presented on Saturday at the Arts Council and Washington Civil Center, the old train depot, downtown Washington, Main and Gladden streets.

The festivity, sponsored by the Beaufort County Arts Council and Beaufort Community College, will get under way at 6:30 p.m. In the park area, typical Cajun food such as red beans and rice, jambalaya, poor boys and beignets will be available. Lux Farms, a crayfish farming operation in Hyde County, will prepare crayfish using a variety of recipes.

In the early hours of the bash, the Country Kickers troupe will entertain.

This will be followed at 9 p.m. in the Civic Center with Terrence Simine and th Mallet Playboys in a performance of accordion-powered Zydeco music of southwest Louisiana.

The Cajun musicians will use instruments traditionally assocated with Zydeco — the accordion and the frottoir, a corrugated metal washboard worn as a vest and strummed with bottle openers or spoons.

Simien formed his band when he was 18 and has since made numerous appearances nationally in New York and other locales.

This is a return engagement for the group. They performed for several hundred people at Washington's first Bayou Bash last spring.

Tickets for the concert are priced at $7 for adults and $3 for students. For details on the availability of tickets, call 975-6993.

"When You Want Results!"

In His Father's Footsteps

By Bob Thomas
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CAVE CREEK, Ariz. — John Clark Gable, son of the star Hollywood called King, has decided to follow in the profession of a father he never knew.

The 28-year-old Gable is co-starring with James Brolin and Richard Roundtree in the Western "Bad Jim," produced by Menahem Golan's new 21st Century Film Corp.

The movie has been shooting in the desert plains and arroyos northwest of Phoenix, and so far young Gable has drawn high marks from his co-stars and director, Clyde Ware.

"I think he's got a lot of his father in him," Ware said. "He's never really acted before, he's never wanted to act before. He's a race driver. Imagine carrying the load of being the King's son. I think he carries it very well."

The resemblance is hard to fathom. John Clark's face is long and thin, compared to his father's square-jawed look, and his hair is light brown, while Gable's was dark. Their height is the same, but the son is slender and wiry. The greatest similarity is in the voices. Both crackle with no-nonsense authority.

One recent afternoon before shooting began, Gable sat down before a frontier saloon amid a clutter of ramshackle movie sets called Cow Town and submitted to a rare interview.

"Submitted" is an apt word, since Gable does not easily reveal himself. That is natural after a childhood in which his mother, Kay Spreckels Gable, strove mightily to keep him out of public view.

"I am a private person," he admitted, crediting "a little help from my wife." She is Tracy Yarro, and they have a daughter, Kayley, 3, and a son, Clark James, 7 months. But how is he going to cope with the publicity spotlight that's generated as a movie actor?

"Real simple," he said, "just as if I'm a rolling billboard out there in the desert. I'll play it the same way. It's the same as in racing: It's all advertising and product." He is sponsored by B.F. Goodrich and American Racing Wheels in his racing career.

Does he enjoy interviews?

A rare grin: "Please don't put me on a spot like that. Yes and no. It depends."

John Clark Gable was born in 1960, three months after his father died of a heart attack at the conclusion of "The Misfits." The boy spent his first 13 years on the 22-acre Gable ranch in the middle of Encino. The property has since been subdivided into luxury estates, and the Gable house is now occupied by indicted junk-bond king Michael Milken.

"I went back there once and it made me sick," he said. "I drove up the driveway to my old house and was so appalled at what had been done to it that I turned around and drove away."

Kay Gable protected her son from the press and other intruders, sending him to private schools — Buckley in West Los Angeles and Brooks Prep in Andover, Mass.

"She didn't like the way people handled interviews, and she wanted to protect me," Gable recalled. "She was afraid of possible kidnapping. She always told me that my father told her, 'One actor in the family is enough.'"

Gable spent a year at Aiglon College in Villars, Switzerland, then graduated from Santa Monica City College in 1983. His fields of study included "art, ceramics, a lot of science, art history." Nothing related to the entertainment business.

During his college years, Gable became engrossed in motor cross racing, much to his mother's distress (she died in 1983). He has jolted through the grueling Baja California race for almost 24 hours straight. Twice he has had serious accidents in races; one required seven hours of surgery. After four years of motor cross he switched to class-A trucks.

What's so great about racing?

"I just love it, the excitement of it," he said. "There's nothing like racing across the desert. They used to cross the desert in covered wagons back in the 1800s. We're just modern-day cowboys in full-sized pickups now. It's pretty much the same thing; we just go a little faster and a little harder.

"Fear? I have no fear. I have more fear when I get on a horse."

Two years ago friends saw him in television interviews about his racing and suggested John Clark could make it as an actor. He studied for two years in acting school — "a lot of improvisation, a lot of classroom work, a lot of work on my feet, with other actors or solo pieces, the basic things you learn in acting school."

Ware submitted a script that Gable didn't like, then he was sold on "Bad Jim." Now John Clark would like to do more acting — "especially action and adventure films; I'm not very much into romance or any of that."

John Clark first became aware of his famed father at a home screening of "Gone With the Wind."

"I was 2 years old, and I couldn't sit through the whole movie at that point in my life," he recalled. "I was kind of rambunctious at that age."

On another occasion he threw a glass of punch at the screen when he saw his father kissing another woman.

"I really didn't know my father," he remarked. "I used to love to hear my mother tell stories about him. I was very lucky that I was able to see my father on film — what he looked like, acting, talking, moving. I didn't really know much about my dad except the stories I've heard."

Gable hasn't seen his father's 66 films, but he hopes to see them all some day. His favorites are: "The Misfits," "San Francisco," "Test Pilot" (his very favorite), "Mogambo," "Gone With the Wind" ("of course"), "Mutiny on the Bounty" and "Soldier of Fortune."

He was asked for a capsule portrait of the man who was called King. His reply:

"He was a very rugged, outgoing man. He was very social and generous to people, but he also had a very private life. He loved hunting. He loved fishing. He loved fast cars. He loved motorcycles and horses."

Burkina Faso Films

By Marco Werman
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

OUAGADOUGU, Burkina Faso — Imagine a film director forced to kill off a character he couldn't afford to take along to the next shoot. That happened to Idrissa Ouedraogo while he was filming his award-winning "Yam Daabo" ("The Choice").

Imagine a filmmaker who has to wait two to three weeks to see rushes, while they are sent to Europe for processing.

Problems such as these confront African producers as they seek to compete with Hollywood and the rest of the world in the movie industry.

That Ouedraogo and other African producers have won several awards and a small following in the United States and Europe in recent years indicates there are diamonds in an emerging industry riddled with problems and contradictions.

Ouedraogo won the 1987 Pan African film festival's prize in cinematography for his "Yam Daabo."

Malian producer Souleymane Cisee's "Yeelen" won the the Prix du Jury at the 1987 Cannes Film Festival. The movie also received critical acclaim at the New York Film Festival that year.

Senegalese producer Ousmane Sembene won the 1988 Grand Prize of the jury at the 1988 Mostra Venice festival.

"For a lot of people in Europe and the States — people who don't travel — the cinema is an evasion, and Africa is a new world," Ouedraogo said. "But there also is the discovery, or should I say rediscovery, of human values, relationships and sentiments. These human themes have yet to be abandoned in a large number of African films and are themes that are still fresh for us."

The pace of these films can be slow, perhaps magnifying the universal themes that anchor them: marital infidelity, power and corruption.

"Yam Daabo" follows a family driven from the land by drought and its problems.

Patrick Ilboudo, a Burkinabe journalist, has written a book chronicling how African producers have come this far. It is a history of the Pan African film festival held every other year in this dusty Sahel town.

Independence left aspiring African film producers with balky old equipment, where any was available at all, Ilboudo said. The filmmakers also inherited a film genre that regarded Africans as savage, illiterate natives who were always dancing to drumbeats.

"When the Africans first started making films seriously in the 1960s, they felt obliged to rehabilitate a bastardized image of the black man," said Ilboudo.

Although the filmmakers have mellowed, they remain among the elite in their countries and usually have a statement to make, says French film editor Andree Davanture, who has worked on some of the best.

"Every film that is made in Africa is a sacrifice for the population. ... So if a film is made, it must be well done ... to generate other films," said Ouedraogo.

Finance is the biggest obstacle. Films shown at this year's African film festival cost an average of $1 million, peanuts by Western standards. But for countries unable to pay off their debts, making movies is a luxury.

African films are largely financed by the government of the filmmaker, or depend heavily on joint ventures with cultural cooperation programs of France, Holland, West Germany, Belgium and Switzerland.

Filmmakers in this land-locked West African nation, which is fighting the advance of the Sahara and ranked as the world's third poorest by the World Bank, have the enthusiastic support of their government and are considered among the most productive in black Africa. They annually turn out one or two films.

Kwah Ansah, a filmmaker from Ghana, said his prize-winning "Heritage of Africa" would be his last. He had to go into debt to make it, and is using the prize money to pay bills.

African filmmakers also are limited by materials and a poorly trained crew. Ouedraogo says lack of training is the main problem.

But only by making many pictures can the crew learn the tricks of the trade.

"In the area of technique — lighting, sound, filming editing — you simply have to make an enormous amount of films to multiply your experiences. You can't go to school to learn these things. We don't have many productions so it is hard to accumulate the experiences," Ouedraogo said.

Technical problems slow down the productions. After each can of film was shot while Ouedraogo was filming his new release, "Yaaba" (Grandmother), it had to be immediately transported five hours south to refrigerators in Ouagadougu to avoid the heat and dust, and then shipped to labs in Europe for processing.

A Betty Hay Wright, 65, became the second wife of Rep. James C. Wright Jr. in 1972. As a teenager in St. Louis, she worked as a tap dancer and chorus girl to support herself and her mother. She never made it to the Ziegfeld Follies. She did, however, make it to Washington, D.C., where she was employed by Wright, first as an office secretary and later as an administrative assistant to the House Public Works subcommittee, which he chaired.

In "Everybody Wins," Nolte plays a private eye investigating corruption in a New England town, and Winger plays a lady with a shady past.

A Christopher Reeve to date has never been married. For many years, however, he was engaged in a loving relationship with the British model-agent Gae Exton. That relationship came to an end in 1987, with the pair sharing joint custody of their children—Matthew, 9, and Alexandra, 5—who, incidentally, are citizens of both the U.S. and Britain. Items to the effect that Reeve left Exton for the companionship of Dana Morosini, reportedly a baby-sitter in their household, are not true. Reeve says, "I met Dana in Williamstown, Mass., where she and I were both performing in a theater festival in late June 1987—a full five months after Gae and I had officially separated. Dana was never our baby-sitter." Reeve, 36, has plenty of opportunity to get married if he so desires. The actor is considered a prime catch, both at home and abroad.

A At this writing, Spielberg, 41, is saying nothing about his future personal plans. In the last 15 years, he has directed such hit films as "Jaws," "Close Encounters of the Third Kind," "E.T.," "Raiders of the Lost Ark" and "The Color Purple." No director-producer of his age has been more financially successful. He has been involved in five of the 10 top-grossing films of all time, and his net worth is estimated at $250 million. What portion of his wealth will go to actress Amy Irving—whom he married in Santa Fe, N.M., in 1985—and their 3-year-old son, Max Samuel, has not as yet been disclosed. No doubt Spielberg's financial and property settlements will be magnanimous. He is a man of prodigal generosity.

1.5 million married couples are in business together, and the number is growing fast:

COULD YOU RUN A BUSINESS WITH YOUR SPOUSE?

REBECCA AND DAN Matthias decided to run a business together even before they were married. "I think we discussed it on our first date," says Rebecca, 35. By their second anniversary, she and Dan, 45, had launched Mothers Work Inc., a Philadelphia manufacturer and retailer of maternity clothes that now boasts sales of $8 million.

In contrast, Ellen and Melvin Gordon had been married for 18 years before they jointly took the helm at Tootsie Roll Industries, a 93-year-old Chicago company with current revenues of $170 million. "We'd built a solid working relationship long before we co-managed a company," explains Melvin, 69. He and Ellen, 57, have been making sweet music—and candy—for more than 20 years.

Chris and Christine Waits of San Diego have traveled a somewhat bumpy road as entrepreneurs. Shortly after their marriage 10 years ago, the couple, both 38, purchased a small coffee shop "so tiny you couldn't turn around in it," says Christine. "We worked too closely together, and we got on each other's nerves."

Disenchanted, they sold their business and went to work for other people. "But once you've been your own boss," says Chris, "you can't get it out of your blood." Three years ago, he and Christine became owners of a steakhouse large enough so that husband and wife could manage different parts of the enterprise. It now grosses $1.5 million a year.

These couples have made winners out of their ventures. Take our ten-question quiz to find out if working together could work for the two of you.

Gwendolen Cates

Melvin and Ellen Gordon have run Tootsie Roll Industries in tandem for more than 20 years.

BY ELLEN BRANDT

Different couples, different marriages and different paths to success. Only one thing is certain: Running a business with your spouse is more popular than ever.

According to the Small Business Administration, between 1980 and 1986 (the last year for which statistics have been tabulated), the number of unincorporated businesses operated jointly—mainly by husbands and wives—increased by 62.7 percent. Some experts believe husband-and-wife businesses account for at least 1.5 million enterprises.

Why this phenomenal growth in new-style mom-and-pop businesses? There are several reasons for the trend:

Gary Moss

Christine and Chris Waits' first venture didn't work out, but they tried again.

• The Baby Boomers are gung-ho entrepreneurs. Leon Danco, president of the Center for Family Business, an educational and consulting firm in Cleveland, says that members of the Baby Boom generation, 80 million strong, are "clearly entrepreneurially inclined, excited by the romance of going into business for themselves."

• Wives can pull their own weight. Today's wives are better educated and more business-oriented than ever. Statistics from the American Assembly of Collegiate Schools of Business, in St. Louis, show that in 1985-86 women received 45.7 percent of the bachelor's degrees in business, 31 percent of the master's degrees and 21.6 percent of the Ph.D.s.

• Family togetherness is a renewed priority. "Many couples are seeking ways to integrate their work life and their home life," says Sharon Nelton, a family business expert at the U.S. Chamber of Commerce and author of In Love and in Business (John Wiley & Sons), a study of entrepreneurial couples.

If the idea of running a business with your spouse appeals to you, honestly examine your relationship and your motives. Try to gauge whether working together would improve or strain your marriage. "Lots of couples should not go into business together," says Nelton. "For instance, if one of you has to 'play boss' all the time, the necessary give-and-take of a business partnership probably is not for you."

Think you could make the grade? Based on interviews with successful entrepreneurial couples around the country, we've devised a 10-question quiz for potential husband-and-wife business owners. If both you and your spouse can honestly answer "yes" to the following, working together might well be an option for you. If you answer "no" to any question, see if there are steps you can take now to change your answer eventually.

Ockenfels/Outline

TRY THIS QUIZ:

1. Are you equally enthusiastic about running a business together? "When one partner only 'goes along for the ride,' you can expect trouble ahead," cautions Leon Danco. "Both spouses should be equally committed to making their business a winner."

Marc and Kiki Ellenby of Homestead, Fla., say mutual enthusiasm for their tropical fruit-growing business was a cornerstone of their successful remarriage. "We first married in our early 20s, divorced and were pretty much miserable without each other," recounts Kiki, now 37. Meanwhile Marc, 39, had earned a master's degree in horticulture and founded LNB Groves, a wholesaler of such exotic fruits as atemoyas, star fruit and lichees.

Nine years ago, when the business consisted of a few small trees and some big hopes, Marc hooked up with Kiki again and confided his dreams to her. "She was just as enthusiastic as I was," he says. Today, the Ellenbys have 91 acres of land, three small children and a $250,000-a-year business.

2. Have you worked well together in the past on complicated projects (planning a banquet, redecorating a home, etc.)? For spousal business partners, the past seems to be a pretty good indicator of the future. "If you've had trouble jointly hosting a Thanksgiving dinner, planning to run a company together is probably a poor idea," quips Sharon Nelton.

Before they took the reins at Tootsie Roll, Ellen and Melvin Gordon had raised three daughters together. Although Ellen was primarily a housewife, she'd majored in math and had always been privy to her husband's financial affairs. "There's never been much of a line between our business life and our home life," says Melvin. "We always discussed business at the dinner table."

3. Are your talents complementary—i.e., can you "bring different cards to the table"? Mom-and-pop entrepreneurs seem to do better when their training and talents fall into different areas. When partners' areas of expertise are too much alike, they may have difficulty defining and assigning responsibilities.

Peter and Pat Falcione, both 48, own the Norwalk Aquarium in Norwalk, Conn., one of the largest fish and aquarium retailers in New England. They have capitalized on their complementary skills.

Peter, who's excellent at managing employees, is "Mr. Inside," running the back office and the retail side of the business. Pat is blessed with a low-key, charming personality and enjoys traveling. She's "Mrs. Outside," in charge of the service department, which installs and maintains aquariums at hospitals, restaurants and offices.

4. Do you respect and admire your spouse's abilities? Successful working couples tend to be unabashed fans of one another's talents. "You depend on each other so much," explains Tootsie Roll's Melvin Gordon. "Since you're rarely working side by side on the same project, you need the assurance that whatever your spouse does, it will likely be handled properly."

One of his wife's skills that Melvin admires, he says, is her "almost uncanny ability to zero in on potential problems." For instance, in the '60s, long before the heyday of hostile corporate-raiders, Ellen worked hard to increase the Gordons' share of the company from 25 percent to nearly 50 percent, thereby protecting their control.

Ellen in turn, says her husband's problem-solving skills "completely dazzle me, even today." Recently there was a minor glitch in the machinery constructing paper sticks for Tootsie Roll Pops. "Melvin came at the problem from every possible angle," Ellen relates. "He examined the composition of the paper, its moisture content and imperfections that might affect the production process. He was thorough and methodical and, of course, solved the problem."

Mrs. Fields Cookies—a $180 million success story for Debbi and Randy Fields.

5. Do you "fight fair"? Can you have disagreements without taking things personally or attacking each other? "A business disagreement is just that," says Peter Falcione. "It has to do with the business, not with our marriage itself." Whenever he and Pat differ about a company matter, they try to look upon one another as colleagues rather than as spouses. "Maintaining a sense of humor also helps," says Pat. "And we would never ever argue in front of our employees. That's an absolute no-no."

6. Do you work toward win-win solutions? When faced with a difference of opinion that seems intractable, successful business couples try to negotiate, each "giving in" a little to achieve a compromise.

Dan and Rebecca Matthias of Mothers Work are opposites when it comes to handling conflicts. Rebecca says she hates confrontation: "I'd let myself be cheated rather than pick a fight." Her husband, on the other hand, admits that he's "aggressive, hot-tempered and mercurial."

When they started their company, the Matthiases used to bicker about this divergence of conflict-handling techniques. But they've been able to reach a win-win type of compromise. "When we're up against a recalcitrant associate," Rebecca explains, "we now analyze how tough we have to be. If a 'velvet touch' is required, I'm tabbed to jump into the fray. If a situation calls for a 'heavy,' Dan's the one to handle it."

7. Do you truly enjoy your spouse's success? When Debbi Fields founded Mrs. Fields Cookies, one of the companies responsible for starting the nationwide chocolate-chip cookie boom, she was not yet 21 and had only two years of college. In contrast, husband Randy was 9½ years older and had an MA from Stanford University. He headed a successful financial consulting business.

Today, Debbi is 32, and Mrs. Fields Cookies, based in Park City, Utah, is a $180 million enterprise, with nearly 700 cookie stores around the world. Randy Fields, now 42, works with his wife as co-owner, chairman and chief financial officer. Despite the fact that he's older and has more formal education, Randy says he harbors no resentment that his wife is the company's chief executive and spokesperson. Far from feeling jealous, he is immensely proud of his wife. "I consider her one of the best businesswomen in America," he says.

8. Are your business philosophies and long-term goals similar? Sharon Nelton says she has seen some promising spouse-run enterprises destroyed by differences in direction: "If one spouse hopes to have several employees, for instance, while the other wants to work alone, just the two of them, that may be irresolvable."

Marc and Kiki Ellenby never make a move in their fruit business without discussing it fully and concurring. They both support a scenario of cautious but steady expansion.

The Ellenbys also agree on a close integration of family and business life. Daughters Adena, 6, and Aliya, 3, have helped pick and sort fruit from toddlerhood on, and new baby daughter Jody will undoubtedly do the same.

Randy Taylor

Marc and Kiki Ellenby own LNB Groves in Homestead, Fla. Starting with only a few fruit trees nine years ago, they have followed a plan of slow but steady expansion.

9. Are you able to cope with stress or disappointment in mutually supportive ways? Chris and Christine Waits, the San Diego restaurateurs, say learning to deal with stress was the hardest lesson they had to learn as spousal partners. "When you work for other people, you can come home and say, 'Guess what my so-and-so boss did today?'" says Christine. "But when you're the bosses, there's no one to blame but yourselves when things go wrong."

The Waitses have adopted various strategies for alleviating business stress. They rarely take paperwork home with them. And they are actively involved, as a couple, in several nonbusiness activities. When work problems overwhelm them, they are apt to take off for their rustic mountain cabin for a day or two of fishing and water-skiing.

10. Do you honestly enjoy each other's company? Running a business in tandem, there's no place to hide from your spouse. So you'd better enjoy being together.

Randy and Debbi Fields certainly do. "We relish each other's company," Debbi says enthusiastically. Some would call the couple's penchant for togetherness a bit extreme. "Debbi and I are reluctant to travel alone," reports Randy. "When I have to go out of town on business, I telephone her six or seven times a day."

Store-owners Pat and Peter Falcione delight in the greater intimacy being business partners has brought them. They make frequent buying trips together and attend trade shows and conventions around the world. Peter says their mom-and-pop enterprise has brought him and Pat "far, far closer than we'd ever be otherwise. Our lives are totally intertwined, and business, along with love, is the glue."

Adds Pat Falcione: "At this point, I simply couldn't imagine living any other kind of life."

IT MAY BE HARD TO BELIEVE, BUT THE EVERYDAY PEOPLE WHO DO SO HAVE SOME STRONG REASONS

They Send Gifts To The Government

Patrick McDonnell

BY JACK ANDERSON

THROUGH THE defiance of the '60s, the self-indulgence of the '70s and the greed of the '80s, many Americans have opened their hearts—and their wallets—to Uncle Sam, without being asked.

Their reasons are various and range from the general (wanting to beef up the nation's defense or put a dent in the deficit) to the personal (hoping to wipe out some past guilt) or, simply, to say "thank you."

Whatever the reasons, their generosity adds up to a small cushion of petty cash for the U.S. Treasury. A little more than $79 million has fluttered in unsolicited since 1811, when the first guilty soul sent $5 and an apology during the Presidency of James Madison.

Here are some more recent cases the Treasury Department has shared with me and my reporter Scott Sleek:

• One writer sent $222, confessing to having pilfered that amount while working for the Air Force in the 1950s. "Please excuse my mistake," his letter said, "and rest assured no similar circumstances will ever occur again."

• And there was the person who found a penny on the street, felt uneasy about pocketing it and returned the coin to the authorities who had minted it.

• Wrote one patriot: "I am pleased to be able to continue a custom that I initiated several years ago and, to that end, you will find enclosed my personal check as a birthday gift for my country's 211th birthday. The check, representing the number of years that I have lived, is a poor gift in return for the blessing of freedom but, nevertheless, is a reminder to me of many advantages I have as a citizen of this wonderful nation."

• A retiree returned part of his Social Security payment with this explanation: "I enclose a check in the amount of $15.40. This is the amount by which my Social Security benefit increased in 1987. Will you please give the check to such governmental agency that you think appropriate. [My wife] and I started to draw benefits in March 1982. In April or May of 1984, we had received back everything we had paid in. I see no reason why young workers earning 12 or 15 thousand dollars a year should pay 7.15 percent of their earnings and with no exemption."

If the money is earmarked, it goes to the cause of the donor's choice. If not, it is simply used where it is needed most.

The donations come from grateful immigrants, penitent tax cheats, millionaires who make Uncle Sam their favorite charity, widows who want to share a mite and kids sharing the proceeds from a car wash.

Even Congressmen catch the spirit upon occasion. Had the lawmakers bequeathed themselves a pay raise this year, many publicly vowed to give back the money—as they had following the last pay raise, in 1987.

The Treasury Department has four separate accounts for donations to the government: the Conscience Fund, the Gifts to the United States Fund, the National Defense Conditional Gift Fund and the Reduction of Public Debt Fund.

Some donors mail their contributions directly to the Treasury Department, even naming the specific fund of their choice. Others send the offerings to their U.S. Senators or Representatives, trusting them to place the money in the right hands. If you have a burning desire to send remuneration to the government, here's a little information about the funds, to help you choose your beneficiary:

Conscience Fund—Into this fund goes money from people who say they cheated the government once upon a time. The largest single contribution in this category amounted to $139,000 and was deposited sometime in the 1950s. (Treasury Department records are not clear as to exactly when.) It is probably the most interesting of the funds because of the unexpected revelations it makes about human nature.

For example, a few innovative citizens are convinced that it is more blessed to receive than to give. One wrote this letter: "Dear Sir, I do not owe the 'conscience fund' any money. However, I wonder if I could borrow $1000 from it for 90 days."

Payments for this fund often are accompanied by confessions, usually anonymous. The offenses admitted to are various. Some may have cheated on their income taxes. Others merely have recycled an uncanceled postage stamp or slipped souvenirs or other items past U.S. Customs Service officers without paying duty on them.

Conscience Fund money trickles in in tiny dribs and drabs, although occasionally deposits of several thousand dollars are received. This fund alone has collected more than $6.1 million since it began in 1811. Last year's guilt donations totaled $161,700; in 1987, they reached $219,788.

Who sends them? People like you and me and our neighbors. For instance:

• A former GI, suffering from long-lasting guilt, sent the Conscience Fund $150 last year for unauthorized items he had brought home from overseas after his discharge from the Army in 1946.

• Someone self-described as a "Christian friend" sent $100 for damaging some firefighting equipment at an Army site in Maryland several years earlier.

"I did not report the accident and have thought of taking care of the damage many times," the donor wrote. "I am happy, as a follower of Christ, to send this check to make restitution for a problem of the past where possible."

• A former government worker wanted to make up for falsely claiming some travel expenses several years earlier.

"I have no way of knowing the exact amount, so I am enclosing a check for $250, which I hope will more than cover it," this contributor wrote.

Some of the money comes from mysterious sources:

- "My friend died, and his wife told me to send you $25," said one contributor in a letter to the Treasury Department. "She does not know the reason for this, and neither do I. She does not want to reveal his name. She only knows he owes you this money."
- One citizen donated $1075 for not declaring jewelry to a Customs officer.

Gifts to the United States Fund—In this are deposited donations from people willing to put their money where their gratitude is. Often letters expressing pride in their country and thanks for its opportunities accompany the donations. The fund was established in 1843, and its first donation—$1005—was deposited in 1862, during Abraham Lincoln's Presidency. Since then, the annual intakes have ranged from zero to several million dollars. The fund's largest single gift—$878,872—was received in 1981.

Contributors' letters often reveal some of the best qualities of human nature.

There is one that came from a man who said he had prospered and wanted to "repay some of the benefits I received from my country." Enclosed in his letter was a check for $325.

One fellow, who had arrived from Russia in 1906, sent a most grateful and gratifying $35,000 to President Jimmy Carter along with a letter that said, "With me, it is not what the country will do for me, it is what I can do for the country." John F. Kennedy would have loved that paraphrase of his words.

National Defense Conditional Gift Fund—This, the smallest of the funds, got its largest contribution—$205,588—in 1984. For the entire year of 1987, contributions totaled only $67,330. Last year's total was $105,535. The donors sometimes specify a wish to have the money spent on a particular item or favorite weapon. One donor sent $200 and asked that it be put toward the purchase of a tank. To honor this request, the money was transferred to an Army account for weapons and combat vehicles.

Reduction of Public Debt Fund—Established in 1961, this fund averages donations of $535,000 a year, used to chip away at the huge public debt. In 1985, $1 million came from unspent cash in the Presidential Inaugural Committee's coffers. There also was $276 from a high school bake sale.

It's admirable to want to give money to the government. Still, most of us taxpayers feel that we give plenty every April. But for those who feel they must give more, here's where to write: Department of the Treasury, Financial Management Service, Program Accounts Branch, Room 273-C, 401 14th St., S.W., Washington, D.C. 20227. Send your debt-aiding donations to The Bureau of Public Debt, Dept. G, Washington, D.C. 20239.

Free spirit who inspires a group of boys to question the rules: Williams and followers

Can you imagine having Robin Williams as your high school English teacher? In Dead Poets Society, he plays a free spirit who goes back to a very restrictive prep school where he'd suffered as a child. He wants to inspire this group of boys to question the traditional path and choose their own way to "great deeds, great loves and great passion." A group of boys follows him, and the movie is about this relationship—and what happens when the school tries to squash him and everything he has accomplished.

• Very little of Star Trek V: The Final Frontier takes place on the starship Enterprise, says novice director William Shatner. The familiar crew lands on two different planets, meets up with blue, horselike creatures and confronts a fanatic adversary (Laurence Luckinbill). Beyond that, Shatner is cagey: "Security about the plot is so tight," he insists, "that pages of the script were numbered, and there was a secret code on each page so if somebody released his script we'd know whose script it was... I will tell you, though, that Uhura [Nichelle Nichols] does a fan dance and Luckinbill's character is trying to find a place that all people try to find." Heaven? The Happy Valley?

Team behind I Love Lucy, 1951: Marc Daniels, Lucille Ball, Jess Oppenheimer and Desi (l-r)

At the left is Marc Daniels, who in 1951-52 directed the first 38 I Love Lucy episodes. It was he who pioneered, together with cameraman Karl Freund, the use of three cameras in filming TV programs. This setup permits a show to be continuously filmed in sequence before a live audience and is responsible in large measure for TV reruns as we have them today. Daniels, who died three days before Lucy passed away, also was responsible for hiring Vivian Vance to play Ethel Mertz in I Love Lucy.

Daniels was a talented, low-key director, sensitive and reassuring to his excitable cast. Lucy was hurt when he left after one season to direct the TV sitcom I Married Joan, starring Joan Davis, but she was professional enough to acknowledge that he would have stayed on had she agreed to meet Davis' offer. They remained friendly, however, and it was Daniels whom she chose to direct her final and short-lived series, Life With Lucy, in 1986.

The bald man is Jess Oppenheimer, first producer and—with Bob Carroll Jr. and Madelyn Pugh Davis—a writer of I Love Lucy. Oppenheimer, who died last December at age 75, produced the program for five years. In the 1960s, he sued Lucy to cease and desist from using material from his old scripts in her then-new program, Here's Lucy. Oppenheimer won the lawsuit, and Lucy never spoke socially to him again—although her second husband, nightclub comedian Gary Morton, secretly continued to play golf with him. Once asked what major mistakes he had committed in producing I Love Lucy, Oppenheimer confessed, "When I made Desi executive producer to keep peace in the family."

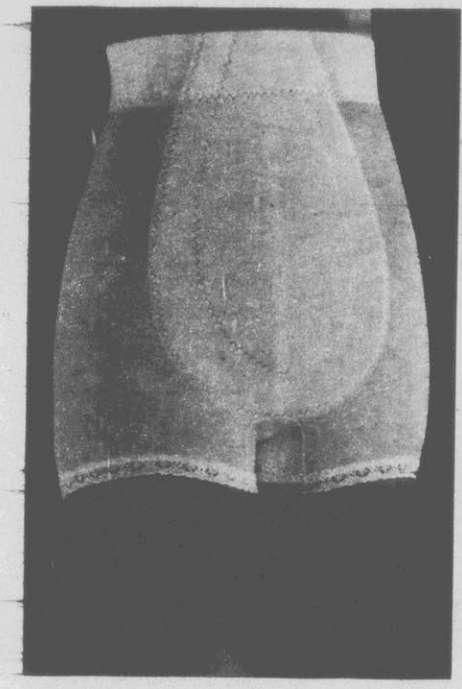

Lucille Ball's first husband was, of course, Desi Arnaz—six years her junior, son of the onetime mayor of Santiago, Cuba. Theirs was a tempestuous 20-year marriage in which Lucy, when angered, justifiably described Desi as "a bandleader who specialized in booze and broads." Following their divorce and her marriage to Morton, she spoke of Desi only in flattering terms. As a matter of fact, in the last years of her life, Lucy spoke of her associates and her public only in encomiums. "I've been very lucky," she would say. "I've had the best directors, the best writers, the best producers and the most loyal fans."

Health Tips

Of the many health letters that come across our desk, we find the Mayo Clinic Nutrition Letter, published in Rochester, Minn., to be one of the most practical. In simple English, it provides helpful, reliable information about nutrition based on the research and knowledge of Mayo physicians and dietitians. From a recent issue, we pass on the following bit of advice on weight-loss:

"To lose an average of a pound of fat a week, the 'rule of 10' will tell you roughly how many calories to consume. Multiply your current weight by 10. For example, if you weigh 160 pounds, your daily calorie allowance will be approximately 1600 calories. This 'rule of 10' is a useful guide if you have less than 25 pounds to lose. If you need to lose more than 25 pounds, ask your doctor for an appropriate calorie allowance."

The Mayo letter doesn't believe in faddish or rapid weight-loss diets and points out that most overweight people have inherited the tendency to gain weight—a tendency they cannot "cure" by dieting but one they can control "through a lifelong change in eating and activity habits."

The letter also recommends a recipe for a yogurt milkshake, which we tried and found delicious. We reprint it herewith:

Fruited Yogurt Milkshake

Boost calcium with this snack

2 cups cold skim milk
1 (3½-ounce) package instant vanilla pudding
8 ounces plain low-fat yogurt
1 cup crushed ice
1/2 medium orange with peel, quartered
OR 1 cup strawberries (fresh or frozen, unsweetened)
OR 1 medium peach, peeled, pitted and quartered

Combine all ingredients in blender container in order given. Blend at high speed for one minute. Makes eight 1/2-cup servings. Calcium per 1/2-cup serving: 139 milligrams.

Nutrient values per serving: 99 calories, 21 grams carbohydrate, 4 grams protein, 0.3 grams fat, 1.5 milligrams cholesterol, 176 milligrams sodium.

A PHOTOGRAPHY CONTEST SPONSORED BY PARADE MAGAZINE AND EASTMAN KODAK

Young America

AN OPPORTUNITY FOR PARADE READERS TO SHARE THEIR TALENT

Play ball or play house? Kelly Wills, 2, has a word or two for Tommy, 4.

Janese J. Wills

David Nicholson

Art Clark

Myrtle White was 92 then; she's 94 now, and still feisty.

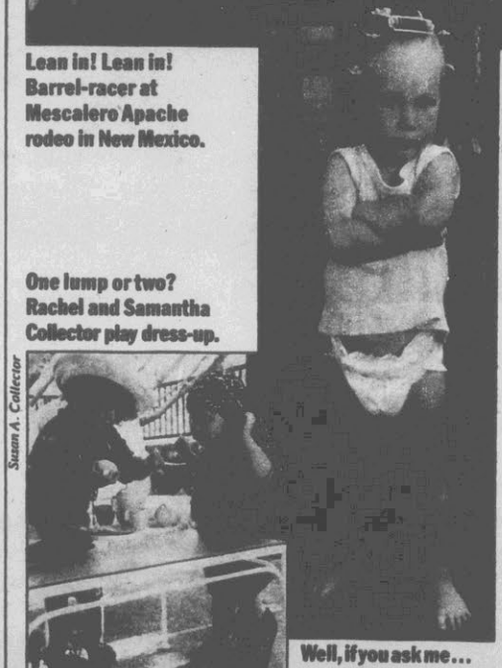

DOES YOUR MOTHER-IN-LAW WATER-SKI? AND IF SHE DOES, CAN YOU TAKE HER PICTURE? PARADE MAGAZINE AND KODAK ARE SPONSORING THE YOUNG AMERICA PHOTO CONTEST—AND WE ARE INVITING OUR READERS TO GET THEIR CAMERAS AND GO FIND THOSE SUBJECTS THEY THINK BEST ILLUSTRATE THAT THEME. PHOTOS OF CHILDREN AND YOUNG PEOPLE ARE WELCOME, OF COURSE, BUT YOUNG AMERICA ALSO MEANS YOUNG AT HEART, YOUNG IN ACTION, YOUNG IN OUTLOOK—VIVACIOUS, ENERGETIC, EAGER. THE ONLY LIMIT TO THE SUBJECT MATTER IS YOUR OWN IMAGINATION. SO GET YOUR CAMERA AND GO!

YOUR ENTRY CAN BE A BLACK-AND-WHITE OR COLOR PRINT. OUR JUDGES WILL SELECT 100 WINNERS, EACH OF WHOM WILL RECEIVE $100 AND AN AWARD CERTIFICATE. SOME OF THE WINNING PHOTOS WILL BE PUBLISHED IN PARADE, AND ALL 100 WILL BECOME PART OF AN EXHIBIT AND, POSSIBLY, A BOOK. ENTRIES MUST BE RECEIVED NO LATER THAN SEPT. 8, 1989. WINNERS WILL BE ANNOUNCED IN OUR DEC. 10 ISSUE.

Stephanie Simmons

Kenneth Mosley

Well, if you ask me... Megan Mosley, age 2.

One lump or two? Rachel and Samantha Collector play dress-up.

Susan A. Collector

THE JUDGES

What the judges look for: In a word, originality. A winning picture might portray a grandmother tossing a Frisbee, a middle-aged man blowing bubbles—or, of course, it might be a photograph of young people themselves.

Ask Marilyn

BY MARILYN VOS SAVANT

A riddle: You throw away the outside, cook the inside, eat the outside and throw away the inside? What is it?
—Cindy Toulou, Fruitland, Wash.

Sounds like good, old-fashioned corn on the cob to me, one of my favorites. However, for the sake of our hearts, maybe the answer should be eggs. You would throw away the outer shell, cook what's inside, eat the outer white as you would a delicacy but throw away the cholesterol-laden yolk.

Is "bad" the opposite of "good"? And is "not good" also the opposite of "good"? If both answers are yes, does "bad" equal "not good"?
—Sue Sheeley, Idaho Falls, Idaho

We can call "bad" an opposite of "good," but we can't call "not good" an opposite. After all, black may be the opposite of white, but "not white" isn't an opposite. The whole rainbow of colors is "not white."

How do loving parents stop grieving over a callous, ungrateful child (age 20)?
—Anonymous

This is a difficult problem, one born of unrealistic expectations raised by the society that encouraged you to bet your happiness on the chance factors that combined to create any particular child. After the fact, I can only suggest that you spend some time developing relationships with people you choose for themselves—and who choose you for yourself—rather than those who happened to be born in your house. There are plenty of fine people of all ages out there to enjoy, and I hope you and your husband find dozens of them.

If you have a question for Marilyn vos Savant, who is listed in the "Guinness Book of World Records" under "Highest IQ," send it to: Ask Marilyn, PARADE, 750 Third Ave., New York, N.Y. 10017. Because of volume of mail, personal replies are not possible.

IN STEP WITH:

BY JAMES BRADY

John Lithgow

"IT IS FEROCIOUSLY HOT," SAID JOHN Lithgow as he called me from his home in Westwood, Calif. Despite the heat, he had just varnished the front door. "Mary and I traveled to Brazil last year on vacation," he said, referring to his wife, a professor of economic history, "and we met this man who hand-carved these wonderful hardwood doors. I just applied a sealant to protect it." Trouble was, said Lithgow, the kids kept going in and out, and the door wasn't yet dry.

When you are an actor, even one as successful as Lithgow, you have time between jobs to travel and to varnish doors. And to ski. "I broke my collarbone in Montana," he said. "My first day skiing. I had postponed learning to ski because there was always a movie or a play coming up."

John Lithgow is a big (6 feet 4), amiable, soft-spoken gent with a large head—an outsized cherub who, like Gene Hackman and Robert Duvall, seems able to disappear into a role. "What fascinates me about acting is playing a character," he said. "Every role is a character role."

Maybe he never had a chance of being anything but an actor. His mother was an actress and his father a theatrical producer, and John began working young. One version says John was 3 and the play was Ibsen; another has it that he was 6 and the play was Shakespeare. Later, at Harvard, Lithgow majored in history and literature but performed in the usual student productions before winning a Fulbright scholarship that enabled him to study drama in England.

But back in New York, Lithgow became just another unemployed actor who paid the bills by driving a cab and, with his height, nearly crippling himself in the process. He once told a reporter that he spent all his tips taking cabs home after work because "I couldn't walk."

His breakthrough film was The World According to Garp, in which he played a transsexual former football player, a role which won him an Oscar nomination. He'd previously earned a Tony for The Changing Room on Broadway. But his performance on the New York stage as the diplomat in love with a beautiful Oriental who turns out to be a man in M. Butterfly may have been his most powerful acting job. If M. Butterfly becomes a movie—a good possibility—Lithgow said he'd jump at the chance to do it.

This month, he can be seen on HBO in Traveling Man, a comedy-drama about a traveling salesman.

I'd read somewhere that his eldest son, Ian, now 17, was considering an acting career. "Right now, he's more into music than acting," Lithgow said. "But, at a certain age, theater exercises a gravitational pull."

Lithgow surely ought to know.

BORN: June 6, 1945, in Rochester, N.Y.
PERSONAL: Married to Jean Tayntor, 1966-80; one son, Ian. Married Mary Yeager in 1981; one daughter, Phoebe, and one son, Nathan.
BROADWAY: Includes The Changing Room, 1973; My Fat Friend, 1974; Beyond Therapy, 1982; Requiem for a Heavyweight, 1985; The Front Page, 1986; M. Butterfly, 1988.
MOVIES: Include All That Jazz, 1979; The World According to Garp, 1982; Terms of Endearment, 1983; The Manhattan Project, 1986; Harry and the Hendersons, 1987; Out Cold, 1989.

Eddie Adams

BRADY'S BITS

I asked about his wife Mary's university professorship. "She's a great expert on economic history," Lithgow said. "She can tell you all you want to know about the Great Depression. Our friends are a mixed bag—some actors, some academics and lots of others. Mary never dreamed she'd be living a life where she was going to the Academy Awards or the Tony Awards." Did they go this year? "No," he said, "we went to a party and watched on television. But I won the pot. I picked 15 out of 23 [Oscar-winners]! Pretty good, don't you think?"

John Lithgow has done everything from "Harry and the Hendersons" to "Requiem for a Heavyweight." This month, he's on television in "Traveling Man."

Cover Story....

'The 43rd Annual Tony Awards'

By Robert DiMatteo

When Angela Lansbury steps onto the stage at New York's Gershwin Theatre to host the 1989 Tony Awards (airing Sunday, June 4, on CBS), one of the classiest ladies in show business will once again preside over the classiest of awards shows. Though the star of the good-natured CBS whodunit "Murder, She Wrote" considers herself a "willing captive" of television for at least one more season, the four-time Tony winner happily acknowledges the role that the theater has played in her varied and durable career.

Why does Lansbury think the Tonys make such an enjoyable TV show? "Because it's live entertainment — precisely what separates theater from TV and movies," she says. "You're seeing the people doing it in front of your eyes — the musicals, the dramas. I think the audience feels that it's seeing something very special. Broadway is a magic word."

Yes, Broadway means magic — when it's at the level of one of Lansbury's carefully chosen and nurtured vehicles like "Sweeney Todd." But what of the languishing, prohibitively expensive Broadway that made up this season? There was such a dearth of musicals that the 10-member Tony nominating committee was forced to eliminate the categories of Best Score and Best Book. And there were so few original shows that the year's top-nominated musicals — "Jerome Robbins' Broadway" and "Black and Blue" — are revival compilations.

"It's desperately disappointing. Desperately disappointing," Lansbury repeats, "that we can't give these shows some competition. But it now costs $8 million to put on a musical. And we must face the fact that we don't have any recognizable stars to play on Broadway — the way Mary Martin, Ethel Merman and Carol Channing were Broadway stars."

A few weeks before the Tonys, Lansbury will come to New York — taking in all the still-running nominated shows. Among current shows, she will get to see the Frenchified evening of classic jazz and blues songs, "Black and Blue," as well as "The Heidi Chronicles," Wendy Wasserstein's richly funny and perceptive view of a woman's journey through the last three decades. It has been nominated alongside "Lend Me a Tenor," "Largely New York" and "Shirley Valentine," for Best New Play and is the probable — and deserving — winner. The brilliantly nostalgic "Jerome Robbins' Broadway" is the surefire winner in the Best Musical category.

The star professes to getting a little nervous hosting the Tonys, reinforcing the view of a lot of actors, who say they're more comfortable hiding behind a character than appearing before the public as themselves. "But hosting is a role," offers Lansbury. "And I just love being around all the kids in the theater and being able to present them to the public." Has she had to suffer through any calamities in her three years of commandeering a live broadcast? "We had a moment last year when I thought I wouldn't be able to see the teleprompter, which was way at the back of the theater," she recalls. "We thought we'd have to use cards down in the orchestra pit, but it would have been awful. I would have been looking down all the time. The general audience isn't aware that we're reading most of the time.

Michele Will Tell

By Michele Marks

Dear Michele: We would like to know more about "Dynasty" 's Stephanie Beacham. In her own way, we think she's something of a sexpot. What's her background, age, marital status, etc.? — ARTHUR ROMERO, NORTH CHATHAM, MASS.

Stephanie Beacham, "Dynasty" 's errant mistress of mayhem, was born in Hartfordshire, England, on Feb. 2 and says she's 42. Her father is a retired insurance executive and her mother is a housewife. She has a brother and two sisters, but she is the only member of her family to enter show business. She studied mime in Paris, under Marcel Marceau's teacher, and attended London's prestigious Royal Academy of Dramatic Arts. Beacham made her film debut in the English movie "Tam Lin," with Ava Gardner. (It was released in the United States in 1972 as "The Devil's Widow.") Her other movies include "The Nightcomers" (1972), with Marlon Brando, "Dracula, A.D. 1972" (1972), "And Now the Screaming Starts!" (1973), "The Confessional" (1975), the recently released "Troop Beverly Hills," with Shelley Long, and the upcoming "The Wolves of Willoughby Chase." She has been one of Britain's top TV stars, but she is most fond of her work on the London stage. Her first starring role in a U.S. series was as Sable Colby in "The Colbys," a "Dynasty" spinoff. After the demise of "The Colbys," a few of its more interesting characters, including Sable, found places on "Dynasty." This fall, she will be starring in the new NBC series "Sister Kate," in which she will play a nun in charge of an unruly group of orphans.

She was married in 1973 to British actor John McEnergy, who starred as Mercutio in Franco Zeffirelli's "Romeo and Juliet" (1968), but the couple separated in 1978 and finally divorced last year. They have two daughters, Phoebe, 14, and Chloe, 12. They attend school in England, but join Beacham in the United States for vacations.

Dear Michele: Whatever happened to Patsy Cline's husband and children? — P. BAKER, DANVILLE, ILL.

Charlie Dick, 54, the husband of country singing legend Patsy Cline, actively promotes his wife's records. (Cline's surviving relatives continue to receive royalties from them.) He met his second wife, country singer Jamie Ryan, while promoting local talent in Nashville. They divorced in 1972 and have a 20-year-old son, Chip.

Cline's daughter, Julie Cline, 30, was only 4 years old when her mother died in a plane crash on March 6, 1963. Divorced and the mother of two daughters, Michelle and Virginia, Julie is said to reside in Nashville. Her 27-year old brother, Randy, has also lived in Nashville and is an aspiring rock musician.

Dear Michele: My husband and I have a $500 bet that the man appearing with Robin Williams on this year's Academy Awards was actor Joe Piscopo. If it wasn't Piscopo, who was it? — MRS. DARRELL ANDERSON, HAMMOND, IND.

Dear Michele: Who plays Zeke on "Tour of Duty," and where have I seen him before? — CHERYL RITA, LAWRENCE, KAN.

Actor Terence Knox portrays Sgt. Zeke Anderson on the CBS Vietnam series "Tour of Duty." Knox appeared as Dr. Peter White from 1982-85 on the NBC drama series "St. Elsewhere" and had a short run as Matt Russell on the 1986 sitcom "All Is Forgiven," with Bess Armstrong.

Dear Michele: Please settle an argument. Who played a judge character on a comedy show, and came on to the chant, "Here come de judge" — Sammy Davis Jr. or Flip Wilson? — HELEN REED, ROSEWELL, N.M.

It was Pigmeat Markham, who was a regular on the hit comedy series "Rowan and Martin's Laugh-In" from 1968-69. But "Here come de judge" became such a popular catch phrase that several other comedians used it in comedy sketches. "Laugh-In" featured sketches and blackouts which spawned a new era of catch phrases, among them: "Here come de judge," "You bet your bippy" and "Sock it tome." Markham died on Dec. 13, 1981.

Soap Scoop

Could this be the year the Emmys love Lucci?

By Connie Passalacqua

Susan Lucci

Yawn! Another year of Daytime Emmy nominations. Will someone please give us a wake-up call?

First, let's answer your most urgent question. Yes, Susan Lucci (who plays Erica Kane Montgomery on "All My Children") was nominated for Best Actress – her 10th nomination. Every time she has been nominated, she has lost, and those losses have brought her much publicity.

On the Best Actor side, all the nominees have either won or been nominated before. In fact, Larry Bryggman (Dr. John Dixon on "As the World Turns"), David Canary (Adam/Stuart Chandler on "AMC"), and Douglass Watson (Mac Cory on "Another World") have won twice each. Meanwhile, A Martinez (Cruz Castillo on "Santa Barbara") is being nominated for the third time, and James Mitchell (Palmer Cortlandt on "AMC") is being nominated for the seventh time.

Let's say it straight out – the Daytime Emmys receive no respect in the daytime community because, with few exceptions, they are not representative of the quality of the medium. The differentiation between nominees for Best Actor and Best Supporting Actor is hazy at best. For example, Marcy Walker, who plays heroine Eden Castillo on "SB," was nominated for Best Actress, while Robin Mattson, who plays Gina Timmons on the same show and has about the same amount of screen and story-line time as Walker, has been nominated for Best Supporting Actress.

The Daytime Emmys habitually skip over many actors who merit nomination. Two surprising missing names are "Guiding Light" 's Michelle Forbes, whose double portrayal of Sonni/Solida Lewis was shattering, and Erika Slezak, a two-time past winner as Viki Buchanan on "One Life to Live."

There are also a few merited nominations, several of which were surprises. David Forsyth has been just grand as haunted Vietnam Vet John Hudson on "AW." He was nominated for Best Supporting Actor. And you don't have to be a Corbin Bernsen fan to root for his mother, Jeanne Cooper, who has deliciously played magnificent dame Kay Chancellor on "The Young and the Restless" for years. She's nominated for Best Actress. A worthy nominee for Best Supporting Actress is Nancy Lee Grahn, who plays Julia Wainwright on "SB."

The 1989 Daytime Emmys will be presented Thursday, June 29 on NBC.

Sports Roundup

SUNDAY, JUNE 4

NBA Basketball (CBS)

Eastern Conference finals, Game 7 (if necessary); or Western Conference finals, Game 7 (if necessary).

Tennis (NBC)

French Open, early-round action, live from Stade Roland Garros, Paris. Ivan Lendl breezed through the field at last month's Tournament of Champions at Forest Hills for his fourth victory of 1989. The only real question about Lendl recently has been his health. He has had surgery twice in the last 24 months. "Don't jump to any conclusions," he told reporters. "I may play another three years or another four years. I'm saying good years. Once I don't feel I can win Grand Slam tournaments I'm going to have to re-evaluate what I can do. Right now, I feel I still can win, and I feel that I still have three or four good years left."

Auto Racing (ABC)

PGA Golf (CBS)

Kemper Open, final-round action, live from Potomac, Md. Tom Kite, who won this year's Players Championship and has been on the leader board almost every week, has enjoyed great fortune at this event. He won it in 1987 and lost a playoff to finish second here last year.

TUESDAY, JUNE 6

NBA Basketball (CBS)

NBA Championship Finals, Game 1.

THURSDAY, JUNE 8

NBA Basketball (CBS)

NBA Championship Finals, Game 2.

Baseball (ABC)

Teams to be announced.

FRIDAY, JUNE 9

Tennis (NBC)

French Open, men's semifinals, live from Paris.

SATURDAY, JUNE 10

Baseball (NBC)

Detroit Tigers at Toronto Blue Jays or Cincinnati Reds at Los Angeles Dodgers.

NCAA Baseball (CBS)

College World Series, finals, live from Omaha, Neb. This is CBS's dry run for next year's baseball package. Coverage will be headed up by CBS mainstay Brent Musberger.

Tennis (NBC)

French Open, women's final, live from Paris. Last year, this was the Steffi Graf hour of power. On the slow red clay, Graf's superior stamina gives her a strong edge over the other women.

Horse Racing (ABC)

The Belmont Stakes, live from Belmont Park, Queens, New York. The final leg of the Triple Crown is the longest and most arduous race of the trio.

Volleyball (ESPN)

Cuervo Gold Crown Tournament, from Clearwater, Fla. Karch Kiraly made his reputation on the hardwood courts of UCLA and in the 1984 and 1988 Olympics, but the two-time Olympic gold medalist learnedhis volleyball on the sandy beaches of Southern California. Now he is back on the beach in two-man pro volleyball.

Sweet Bird Of Youth

Elizabeth Taylor and Mark Harmon will star in "Sweet Bird of Youth," an NBC movie based on the Tennessee Williams play. Taylor plays a faded movie queen, and Harmon portrays a drifter with whom she becomes involved. The play was first performed on Broadway in 1959, and it was made into a feature film in 1962. The TV movie will also feature Rip Torn and Valerie Perrine.

Bloodknot

Jaclyn Smith will star in "Bloodknot," an NBC movie about a woman who returns to her hometown seeking revenge against the man who brutally assaulted her as a child and is still at large. Kate Whately (Smith) is a Chicago police officer who has been tormented by the rape that left her almost dead 20 years before. But when she comes home expecting support for her search, she is met with discouragement instead.

TV Chatter

By Frank Sanello

Burt Reynolds' detective show, "B.L. Stryker," has only been a moderate ratings success thus far, but if the rotating ABC mystery series is canceled, the enduring star can always cling to his latest role as game-show impressario. Reynolds' creation, "Win, Lose or Draw," is the third-highest ranked game show in syndication, right after "Wheel of Fortune" and "Jeopardy!"

In fact, a somewhat embarrassed Reynolds concedes that "Win, Lose or Draw" has earned him more money than all of his other earnings in show business put together. That's an amazing statistic, considering that Reynolds was the No. 1 box-office draw for five years in a row during the '70s. The actor based the show on a parlor game he had played at home for years with friends like Betty White and Dom DeLuise. Reynolds knew he was onto something when he first talked to pal Merv Griffin about turning the game into a TV show. "I asked Merv how much 'Wheel of Fortune' made the year before, and he said $400 million," Reynolds recalls. "After I picked myself up off the floor, I said, 'Let's talk.' "

After a seven-year absence, "Laverne & Shirley" 's Cindy Williams returns to series television in "Just Like Family," a sitcom about a childless yuppie couple who "rent" two youngsters because the husband's boss favors employees with children. The comedy, which stars Williams' real-life mate Bill Hudson as her husband, runs on cable's Disney Channel.

Although Williams has appeared in a handful of TV movies since she left "Laverne & Shirley" in 1982, she has spent most of her time as a housewife taking care of her daughter Emily, 6, and son Zach, 3. And she doesn't regret the time away from the limelight one bit.

• SUN SPOTS! Find a planet in each sentence: 1. Lulu ran us ragged. 2. Elsa turned the dial. 3. Lamar sells soap. 4. Sue will bear the pain.

1. Uranus. 2. Saturn. 3. Mars. 4. Earth.

AUCTION ACTION

Two antique dealers, the story goes, at a public auction, were interested in the same item. "Look here, Aye," said Bee. "We both want that ceramic whatnot. Let's agree that the first to bid $100 or more gets it."

"But one of us could bid $100 right off," said Aye, with a frown.

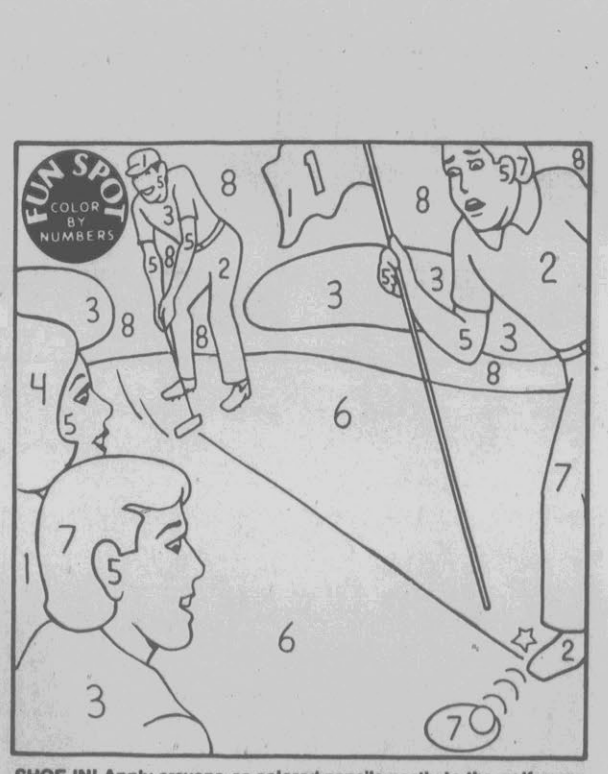

"We will agree that no bid add more than $10 to the previous bid," replied Bee, whereupon Aye accepted the deal.
