County Court Takes Up Case Of The Bouncing Checks

By John Bare
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Nearly 600 worthless checks bounced into Pitt County District Court today.

Prosecutors in Greenville faced a monstrous calendar, with over 150 defendants charged with writing 599 worthless checks and committing 15 assorted property crimes.

Many defendants were charged with passing a handful of bad checks, while two others were charged with writing 63 worthless checks. Several were charged with five to 15 counts. Nearly all cases stemmed from bad checks written this year, but there were some holdovers from 1988.

George M. Dawson of New Bern, charged with writing a $1,249 bad check to Dollar Automotive Sales and Leases on Sept. 8, 1989, has had his case continued eight times since November. On each occasion, either his attorney, John Harmon of New Bern, was not able to be in court, or Dawson requested additional time to raise the money, court records said.

On the other end of the scale, one person was charged with writing a bad check earlier this year to Piggly Wiggly for $1.35.

Melody Roughton, office manager for Dollar Automotive, said it is aggravating to take a day off from work to sit in court, only to have the case continued because the defendant did not show up, was not summoned or did not have enough cash on hand.

"That has happened quite a few times, and then you get frustrated," she said.

Worthless checks are a burden on her business because few debts are repaid, she said.

"Just a few," she said. "I can have someone write me a bad check. I can have his address and know he lives there ... and when his parents come to the door and say he doesn't live there ... I'm out of my money. There's nothing I can do to make him come to court."

Ms. Roughton said the business would rather win a judgment than send someone to jail for a short time and receive nothing. But, even when she wins a case, she said there is no guarantee the defendant will follow the judge's order and pay the debt.

"All you get is a judgment," she said.

Judges handle the sentencing differently. Some require the person to pay the debt immediately or go to jail. Others allow time for the person to pay the amount through their probation officer or through the clerk's office.

Judgments have worked a couple of times, Ms. Roughton said, when the defendants went elsewhere to buy a car and were not able to make the purchase because their credit rating reflected the court debt. They had to repay Dollar Automotive to clear their record, she said.

Pitt District Attorney Tom Haigwood said he would look into why Dawson's case has not yet been resolved.

In general, he said, merchants usually would rather have the case postponed briefly if there is the prospect that they will eventually receive payment, instead of having the person serve jail time and make no compensation.

Under state law, writing worthless checks is a misdemeanor. If the amount is less than $50, the crime is punishable by 30 days in jail. If the amount is higher, the maximum penalty is six months in jail.

Official Killed

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador — Unidentified gunmen killed a cabinet minister today as he was driving through the city, a hospital source said.

Jose Antonio Rodriguez, the minister of the presidency, died shortly after arriving at the Zaldivar Hospital, said a nurse who demanded anonymity.

Rodriguez, considered the chief of staff, was a member of the rightist Republican Nationalist Alliance of President Alfredo Cristiani, who took office June 1. Rodriguez was killed in western San Salvador, the source said.

Sources in the presidency and the party told The Associated Press they had heard reports of an assassination but could not confirm Rodriguez was killed.

No further details were immediately available.

Goodbye For The Summer

Teresa Hendricks, a student at Sadie Saulter School, waves goodbye to her teacher today as she boards the school bus on the last day of classes for students in the Pitt County schools. After spending a couple of months off from school during the summer, students in the county school system will begin classes for the 1989-90 school year on Aug. 28.

Inflation Roars As Prices Climb

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Wholesale inflation came roaring back in May after a two-month lull, rising a steep 0.9 percent, the government said today.

The increase in the Labor Department's Producer Price Index primarily reflected higher prices for cars, fresh vegetables and gasoline.

For the first five months of the year, wholesale inflation for goods one stop short of the retail level was running at a 9.4 percent annual rate, more than double the 4 percent rise in 1988 and quadruple the 2.2 percent 1987 gain.

The index troubled economists earlier this year, when it soared 1.1 percent in January and 0.9 percent in February. But moderate rises of 0.4 percent in both March and April had been seen as a sign that inflation had retreated at least a bit.

In advance of today's report, many economists were predicting a moderate-to-brisk 0.5 percent gain.

Financial markets, which have been rallying in recent weeks on evidence that the overheated economy is cooling enough to produce milder price pressures, turned down modestly in early trading today. The Dow Jones average of 30 industrial stocks dipped about 1½ points in the first hour of trading.

Energy prices in May rose 3.3 percent, a steep increase but less than half April's 30-month record of 7.2 percent. For the past six months, energy prices have surged at a 43.3 percent annual rate.

In May, the increase was propelled by a 5.2 percent jump in gasoline prices, which followed a 13.4 percent jump in April. Natural gas prices rose 3.4 percent, while heating oil costs declined 7.7 percent.

Food prices, which had posted a rare 0.6 percent decline in April, rebounded 0.8 percent in May. The price of vegetables skyrocketed 26.4 percent as celery and tomato prices doubled and cabbage prices rose by one-third.

There were also significant increases for eggs, rice, pasta and chicken. Prices for beef, pork and fish declined.

For the past six months, food prices have risen at an annual rate of 7.3 percent. But analysts expect that trend to moderate, barring a repeat of last year's drought.

The price of goods excluding the volatile food and energy sectors, often taken by analysts as a truer reflection of underlying inflationary pressures, rose 0.5 percent last month following an unusual 0.1 percent decline in April.

The increase in May was largely driven by a 1.8 percent rebound in auto prices following a 2.8 percent decline a month earlier.

The April drop was produced by manufacturers' incentives to bolster sagging sales, while a Labor Department analyst said the rebound was driven by price increases fnd 0.9 percent in February. But moderate rises of 0.4 percent in both

Burroughs Wellcome Denies Risk

By John Bare
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

In response to a report released Thursday stating that the Burroughs Wellcome plant in Greenville produces toxins that pose a cancer threat for area residents, company officials said today they present no health threat to the community.

"We are confident that the Burroughs Wellcome Co. plant in Greenville, North Carolina, poses no threat to our employees or the community," Senior Vice President Dr. Gabriel R. Cipau said in a prepared statement.

"It's unfortunate that public concern has been unnecessarily raised by the inappropriate use of EPA data. Burroughs Wellcome Co. has an ongoing program to evaluate and control emissions and considers employee and community safety a high priority," Cipau said.

According to the statement, Environmental Protection Agency spokesman David Cohen has said that the data released Thursday by U.S. Rep. Henry A. Waxman were compiled to develop computer models to compare health risks from one plant to another.

Cohen stressed that the numbers should not be used to demonstrate actual health risks in the community, the Burroughs Wellcome statement said.

The EPA has identified more than 200 industrial plants in 37 states that is says release enough toxic chemicals to pose a severe cancer risk. Risk estimates for those exposed are a thousand times greater than the risk level most policymakers consider acceptable, environmental officials say.

The estimates are based on risks of a person living at a location of maximum exposure for 70 years.

Six plants in North Carolina — including Burroughs Wellcome in Greenville — were identified as having a risk of at least 1 in 1,000, but less than 1 in 100.

For example, a risk estimate of 1 in 1,000 means that one person out of 1,000 could be expected to contract cancer from maximum exposure to a single pollutant.

But in Cipau's statement, he said that the state Department of Natural Resources and Community Development has studied the level of emissions of methylene chlorides from the Greenville plant in 1987 and 1988 and found no dangerous exposure.

"Based on the results of this analytical investigation and the model-

City Council's Infighting Heats Up

By J. Ward Best
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

An undercurrent of divisiveness on the City Council spilled over Thursday night into the usually routine appointments to city commissions. And the political fighting among council members began heating up today.

Four nominations to the Planning and Zoning Commission by Lorraine Shinn, council liaison to the planning board, drew a prepared statement from Council member Inez Fridley and a split vote from the board.

Mayor Ed Carter, who was not present at the first part of the meeting, later decided the vote in favor of Ms. Shinn's nominations.

Although the mayor's vote decided the nominations, the rift on the board was far from healed.

Members on both sides of the nomination issue have claimed political maneuvering by other members of the council.

Ms. Shinn nominated Bruce Flye, an architect, and J.B. Surles, a developer, to two voting positions on the board. Flye, originally appointed to the board by Ms. Fridley, now serves as a non-voting, alternate member. Ms. Shinn also recommended appointing Bruce Sauter, a real estate appraiser, and Annie Graham, a secretary, to two alternate positions on the board.

The council split along pro-development and anti-development sentiment toward the nominations.

"There is a group of people on that board who have worked hard to create divisiveness on that board," Carter said today.

Carter declined to name the members of the board he was referring to, but he said, "I think the issue will identify who they are ...

Photographer Says Arctic Becoming Garbage Dump

By J. Ward Best
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Lenny Kohm spent six months photographing the people and animals of the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge. He now travels the United States with his photographs, raising the national conscience about Alaska's wilderness.

The Cypress Group of the Sierra Club brought Kohm and The Last Great Wilderness, a Boone-based environmental group, to the biology auditorium at East Carolina University on Thursday night to make their case against proposed oil exploration in the Alaskan wilderness.

Words nearly fail Kohm when he tries to explain his feelings about the area. "Photographing this area is ... amazing," he finally said. He rattled off a list of animals native to the refuge — caribou, polar bears, and more than 100 species of birds — which he says are endangered by proposed oil drilling in the area.

"The Arctic regions are in danger of becoming a garbage dump," Kohm said. He said the oil spill in Prince William Sound, and the air pollution in other oil-producing areas of Alaska could destroy the refuge, and could happen in North Carolina with the proposed offshore drilling. "It's not an area we should be messing with," Kohm said.

Louie John, a member of the Gwich'in Nation, is also traveling with Kohm and asking for preservation of his nation's homeland.

"I'm just a spokesman for several thousand people," Louie John said. "We are environmentalists for 30,000 years. We respect the tundra."

Louie John said the 7,000 members of the Gwich'in Nation, who depend on the Porcupine caribou hunt for survival, opposed any change to their lifestyle. "I don't think we want to see any change," Louie John. "We are happy the way we are."

Kohm and Louie John, part of The Last Great Wilderness environmental group, are focusing their opposition to three bills before the federal legislature - two pro-development bills and a compromise bill proposed by Rep. Walter B. Jones Sr., a Democrat from Farmville.

Jones, who chairs the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee, proposed setting aside 260,000 acres of the wilderness as caribou calving grounds while opening the rest of the 1.5-million acre refuge to oil exploration.

Jones' bill, now in the House, would also equally divide revenues from the leasing and resources royalties between Alaska and environmental projects serving the rest of the states.

"This bill offers realistic answers to the many questions involved in ANWR (the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge)," Jones said in a prepared statement about the bill. "It recognizes the importance of preserving wildlife habitat as well as the need to look for new sources of oil to feed our energy-hungry nation."

Louie John said greed was driving the pressure for oil exploration in his homeland. "We are environmentalists," he repeated. "We took care of the land. We don't have no big cash. But we have riches."

A spokesman for Jones said the representative planned to send a staff member to report on the presentation Thursday night.

"I think he (Jones) should be there to listen to human rights issues," Louie John said Thursday afternoon.

The Last Great Wilderness opposes the Jones bill as unrealistic. The group contends that any exploration will lead to total ruination of the environment, and the caribou are not confined to one mark-off area. "Now we just have to get the caribou to read the mail," Kohm said.

Kohm and Louie John plan to continue traveling the United States and pitching the survival of the Artic National Wildlife Refuge.

"I intend to stay with it until the issue is resolved," Kohm said. "In our favor, of course."

Theft Arrests

Greenville police arrested two people on theft charges Thursday.

Officer K.L. Hadnott said Brenda Moye, 34, of 411 Paige Drive was charged with shoplifting in connection with the theft of $56 in meats from Farm Fresh on Greenville Boulevard at about 12:09 a.m.

Officer N.B. Rice said Ralph Delano Elliott Jr., 24, of Clemson, S.C., was arrested on two counts of breaking, entering and larceny from a vehicle in connection with incidents at the Econo Lodge on Memorial Drive that were reported at 5:47 a.m. and 6:16 a.m.

Rice said in the first incident, $640 worth of tools were taken from one truck, while in the second incident, $335 worth of tools were reported taken from a second vehicle.

Rice said Elliott was also charged with failing to pay cab fare in connection with another case reported to the department.

Students Named

Cecilia W. Caldwell and Bruce E. Eckert, both of Greenville, were among 50 students named to the Martin Community College academic list for spring quarter.

Caldwell was named to the dean's list, which requires a 4.0 grade point average, while Eckert was named to the honors list, which requires a grade point average of at least 3.5.

Meeting Planned

The Pitt County Solid Waste Task Force will meet Wednesday at 7 p.m. at the county office building, 1717 W. Fifth St.

Included on the agenda for consideration will be the selection of consultants to be contacted for proposals on a solid waste master plan and a recommendation to the board of commissioners on participation in a regional landfill.

Health Fair

The Plaza mall will sponsor a summer health fair Saturday from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Six Arrested In Drug Raid

Greenville police arrested six people on multiple drug charges in connection with the search of a McKinley Avenue apartment late Thursday night.

Captain R.M. Nichols said officers assigned to the department's special investigations unit, in an 11:45 p.m. search at 603E McKinley Ave., confiscated 40 viols of "crack" cocaine, four small bags of marijuana, three pistols, several knives, $737 in cash and a quantity of drug paraphernalia.

Those arrested in connection with the raid include Wilson Earl Gay, Donald Ray Brinkley, Shirley Gay, Gregory Richardson and Thelma Gay, all of 303E McKinley Ave., and Shawna Parker, who police say lives next door to the McKinley Avenue apartment searched by officers.

All those arrested were charged with possession with intent to sell and deliver cocaine, possession with intent to sell and deliver marijuana, conspiracy to possess with intent to sell and deliver cocaine, conspiracy to possess with intent to sell and deliver marijuana, and possession of drug paraphernalia.

In addition, Shirley Gay was charged with maintaining a dwelling for the purpose of selling a controlled substance.

Officers assigned to the special investigations unit said the apartment was searched after information was received that drug transactions were being made at the residence.

Student Exchange

Nacel Cultural Exchanges, a nonprofit teacher organization, is seeking host families for high school students from France, Germany and Spain. The participants will spend one month in North Carolina starting July 16.

The students are fully insured, have their own spending money and have spent a minimum of four years studying English.

For more information, call Nacel Cultural Exchanges at 355-3114 or 1-800-553-6998.

Graduations Set

The five Pitt County high schools will have commencement exercises today beginning at 8 p.m.

Ayden-Grifton, Farmville Central, D.H. Conley and North Pitt high schools each will conduct their graduation services on their campuses. Exercises will be held on the schools' athletic fields or in their gynasiums, depending on weather conditions.

If D.H. Conley High School is forced to conduct its graduation exercises in the gymnasium due to inclement weather, only those with red and white tickets will be able to attend the graduation, according to a spokesman.

J.H. Rose High School will conduct its service in Minges Coliseum, East Carolina University.

Students Recognized

Latasha Wooten received the Good Citizenship Award, presented by the Daughters of the American Revolution, while Jayme Bell, Pattie Davenport, Jonathan Newton and Renee Waters received the President's Academic Fitness Award.

Those with the highest academic averages in their grade levels were Todd Dawson, sixth; Steve Wicker and Alan Stancill, seventh, and Jayme Bell, eighth.

Students who made the principal's list all year and those winning North Carolina writing awards also were recognized.

Honorary Degree

The Rev. William S. Wade recently accepted an honorary doctorate of divinity from the University of the South.

He is the son of Carl and Ann Wade of Greenville.

Ronald McDonald To Burn Mortgage

By Carol Tyer
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

The second birthday of the Ronald McDonald House of Eastern North Carolina will be celebrated Sunday from 2 p.m. to 5 p.m. with a "Burn the Mortgage" party at the house.

During the party, visitors will be welcomed to the house which serves as a home-away-from-home for families of children hospitalized at Pitt County Memorial Hospital. The mortgage-burning ceremony is set for 3 p.m., Children's Services of Eastern North Carolina president Betty Allison said.

Mrs. Allison, a Wilson resident, said the birthday party will also celebrate the completion of a fund-raising campaign that promises to pay off the house's original $350,000 mortgage. She predicts that some $50,000 will have been raised by Sunday and said the amount raised will be matched by McDonald's owners and operators, who told the regional board that they would match anything raised up to $50,000. She said birthday cake and ice cream will be served.

According to Mrs. Allison, the house cost $1.2 million and enough had been raised when it was opened that only $350,000 had to be financed.

Several campaigns since then have reduced the debt to $97,000. This campaign will retire the mortgage.

"From now on," she said,. "We will have to raise only operating and maintenance funds. These will always be considerable, because of the very mission of our house.

"We serve families who are living through often the most traumatic times of their lives. Most don't have the money to pay even our non-break-even $10 a night fee. And we never turn anyone away for money reasons. Some donate to us later as their circumstances change; some do not."

Mrs. Allison said the latest campaign has taken about 10 weeks to complete and response from throughout the 32-county region the house serves has been wonderful.

She said the house has served more than 700 families since its opening. Some of these families have been served numerous times, she said. One family visited the house some 30 times this past year, she said.

The house was opened on Father's Day 1987. This Father's Day a golf tournament in support of the house will be held. Also on Father's Day, local churches are being asked to accept special offerings from their congregations in support of the house. For information, call 830-0062.

Divisiveness Shows Up In Council Debate

Council members Bill Hadden, Nancy Jenkins and Ms. Fridley voted against the planning board nominations.

Ms. Jenkins said today it was not appropriate for her to announce a decision about running for mayor until July, but she said, "I'm getting a lot of encouragement - quite a lot of encouragement to consider it."

But she said her decision during Thursday's council meeting had no political undertones. "That's ludicrious," Ms. Jenkins said. "That's not a political issue, that's a value judgment."

Ms. Jenkins said she wanted more time to consider the board nominations. "My feeling was I wasn't voting yea or nay."

But Ms. Shinn agreed with the mayor, saying today, "It was an attack in an area, I think, for political purposes."

She also said she was trying to balance the board with her planning board nominations to counter a voting body that now leans toward favoring East Carolina University and the medical school. "I spent quite a while trying to put in people who would balance this thing," Ms. Shinn said.

Ms. Fridley, who appointed many of the present members, said her main concern was with the future decisions of the board, and not political maneuverings.

"My issue is," Ms. Fridley said, "most people in this town, the only thing they have is their house."

With Ms. Shinn's appointments accepted by the mayor's vote, Ms. Fridley said, "I think we're going to have to look at every single decision they make."

Carter said he was disappointed that Ms. Fridley would openly challenge another member of the council, and any problems should have been resolved during the workshop Monday.

Carter also contended Ms. Fridley's actions were based on an anti-business and anti-growth sentiment that he said Ms. Fridley, Ms. Jenkins and Hadden share.

"I think Ms. Fridley and Ms. Jenkins showed their true colors last night," Ms. Shinn said. "I think (Ms. Jenkins) definitely cut her line last night, and it definitely wasn't pro-business.

Ms. Jenkins said she would stand by her record as supporting positive growth for the city. "I would be foolish to be anti-development," Ms. Jenkins said.

A majority of the board has sided with either Ms. Jenkins, Ms. Shinn or Carter over the planning and zoning appointments.

Ms. Jenkins called the mayor's comments "insulting."

Hadden said today after learning of the mayor's comments, "I've never been angrier in my political life."

Hadden also called the mayor's late decision on the matter "a most dictatorial and misguided political direction between City Council and the mayor."

Council members Rufus Huggins and Mildred Council were not available for comment this morning. Both voted in support of Ms. Shinn's nominations.

The mayor's response to the board's action Thursday night: "I think we should be about the serious business of running this city and not trying to make fools of each other."

Ms. Shinn said she was prepared for a battle with the other members of the board if the rift continues. "If they want a fight," she said, "they're going to get one."

Candidates Poised For Fight Over Southern Baptist's Future

By George W. Cornell
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Both say that they want to cool it, to stop the battling. Both take a fundamentalist view of the Bible. Both affirm friendship. But they're poised for a fight over the nature of Southern Baptists.

Both claim to represent the genuine Baptist way, the authentic heritage. But the two candidates for the denomination's presidency disagree strongly about principles essential to that heritage.

It's a conflict that has gone on for a decade in the nation's biggest Protestant denomination, numbering 14.8 million. Its presidency holds sway over makeup of its operating personnel.

Filling that powerful top post is the key decision for the denomination's convention June 13-15 in Las Vegas determining whether fundamentalists will keep the office for an 11th straight year.

Their incumbent candidate, the Rev. Jerry Vines of Jacksonville, Fla., seeks a second term, calling for peace in the ranks.

"I have made a conscious effort to create an atmosphere where healing and reconciliation could occur," he says.

His challenger, the Rev. Daniel Vestal of suburban Atlanta, backed by moderates, also calls himself a peacemaker, a "responsible reconciler, a bridge to call our people back together."

While both speak of "peace," however, both also declare their adherence to differing positions on principles considered basic for Baptists, involving the latitude of condoned doctrinal freedom.

On that, Vines sets certain limits on what is acceptable, primarily about the Bible but impinging on many other issues, while Vestal insists on greater room for acceptable differences.

"We have certain parameters which are overwhelmingly accepted in Southern Baptist life," Vines says, adding that he has confined his appointments to those whose beliefs are within those approved "parameters."

Vestal says this has clamped on "a kind of tight control" demanding allegiance to it. "Our freedom is being threatened," he says. "It has to stop...or we are going to destroy this denomination."

Vines, 51, a native Georgian, has been pastor of First Baptist Church of Jacksonville, Fla., for the last seven years. Vestal, 44, a Texan, led the First Baptist Church of Midland, Texas, for 12 years, before becoming pastor of suburban Dunwoody, Ga., Baptist Church last fall.

Weighing against Vestal's bid is a longtime convention custom, unvarying in modern history, of always giving the incumbent a second term. Vines also is riding a fundamentalist tide.

Park Approved

The City Council has issued the cry of the summer to residents of the Eastwood neighborhood. The council's words: play ball.

During Thursday's meeting the City Council approved construction of a baseball park with two fields behind the Teen Center on 14th Street. Residents of the area had originally opposed the field, but reached a compromise solution with the city.

Under the compromise agreed to by residents and the city, the ballfields will be built without lights for playing, a natural buffer will be built and maintained by the city, and the area will have regular police patrol.

Officer L.E. White said a 1989 model Honda motorcycle was taken from 309 Paige Drive in an incident reported at 9:17 a.m., while a circular saw and screw gun were taken from Eastern Radiology on West Sixth Street in an incident reported at 1:05 p.m.

Officer E.A. Tyson said a radio-tape player was taken from a car parked at 31C Stratford Arms Apartments in an incident reported at 10:42 a.m.

Officer P.W. Worthington said a power equalizer was taken from a vehicle parked at D1 Wilson Acres in an incident reported at 12:05 p.m., while Lt. J.M. Simonowich said a radio-tape player was taken from a car at the intersection of Third and Nash streets in an incident reported at 12:27 p.m.

Officer R.L. Smith said a bicycle was taken from an apartment at 104 Ash St. in an incident reported at 3:51 p.m. and a radio-tape player was taken from a car at 423 Kings Arms Apartments in an incident reported at 7:42 p.m.

Smith also said $70 was taken from 1109A Fairfax Ave. in an incident reported at 7:53 p.m., while Officer R.C. Stroud said a bicycle was taken from an apartment at 211 N. Elm St. in an incident reported at 4:32 p.m.

Officer B.M. Highland said two video cassette recorders with a combined value of $700, a cooler, a jewelry box, a watch and six pairs of earrings were taken from 100 Martha's Lane in a break-in reported at 6:34 p.m., while Officer R.C. Allsbrook said $25 in cash was taken from a person at The Plaza mall in a flim-flam incident reported at 9:57 p.m.

"My experience tells me that most of the businesses want their money, as opposed to somebody going to jail. They're looking for the most part for us to collect the amount of the worthless check," he said.

"There are exceptions, of course, particularly when somebody has an extensive record of giving worthless checks, or somebody who has given a large number of checks over a period of time," Haigwood said.

Even if defendants are sentenced to prison, the time is usually brief, and because of the state's prison overcrowding problem, people convicted of property crimes are the first to be released, Haigwood said. Often they are out in a matter of days, he said.

Most of the time, folks have to be excessively delinquent to have a worthless check case go to court. Many merchants will allow a person to make good on the check, and prosecutors sometimes dismiss a first offense if the person has a clean record, makes restitution and the merchant agrees to the dismissal, Haigwood said.

"Most merchants contact the person who wrote the check trying to get them to pay it, make it good before they bring it down to the courthouse," he said.

Myra Gregory, manager of the Kash and Karry on N.C. 43 South, said she notifies customers immediately and allows them to pay the debt without going to court.

If that effort fails, the store's business office in Kinston is notified. If the person still does not pay, the case is turned over to a New Bern collection agency. If that is unsuccessful, the case goes to court.

"Upon notification, some don't respond to any of us," she said. "And that (court) is the last resort."

There were 27 cases on today's calendar in which people were charged with writing back checks to local Kash and Karry stores, despite the fact that the store issues check-cashing cards to guard against back checks, she said.

People without cards may still be allowed to write checks for medicine, gas, or food, if they fill out a card application, she said.

"It's a little hard to say no to people," she said. "Some people realize their error and let us know. Then we have customers that never let us know and never respond."

Though the docket was longer today than any worthless check calendar in more than a year, worthless check court does not draw the hundreds of people that traffic court or assault court draws. One defendant may be charged with dozens of cases, thus there is not one person in court for every case.

Also, some people may pay off the check before the court date, others have the case continued to gather money to make restitution and still others fail to appear.

'Truth In Preference To Fiction'

No Difference

Who's The Real Bully Here?

There are many forms of wooing. Some are subtle and expensive, hence pleasant. Others are loud and boisterous and uncomfortable. But wooing is wooing, and in politics, any kind amounts to bullying. Maybe it's time to remind state lawmakers of that fact.

A few legislators have expressed disgruntlement at the methods of persuasion used by the state's teachers to convince elected officials to give them a pay raise. Rep. Milton Fitch, D-Wilson, who chaired the House committee considering the issue, was particularly put out.

He complained about teachers marching in the state capitol with placards and putting on t-shirts to "pack" committee meetings. Why those educators were being just plain pesky, Fitch said, deluging lawmakers with mail, phone calls and personal visits.

Imagine the nerve of anyone who would pay a personal visit to a busy legislator.

He also said house members have been harangued, harassed and threatened with political reprisal by teachers. Shame on voters who would blackmail an elected official by threatening not to vote for him if he doesn't represent their interests.

How unfair. No wonder Rep. Fitch felt he must speak out.

On the other hand, there have been few complaints from lawmakers about lavish dinners and receptions paid for by interest groups like bankers, truckers, manufacturers and builders. These events are traditional routes to lawmakers' ears for those who fear pending legislation may harm their cause.

While that style of wooing may not feel like bullying to those being courted, it is. Serving up marinated shrimp is every bit as much pressure politics as marching in t-shirts. It just costs more money.

Which is the point. Teachers don't have much money, which is why they're marching in t-shirts.

The legislators who had their bones jarred by vocal tactics should keep this key point in mind. Maybe if they'd raise their salaries, teachers could afford to praise lawmakers, not bully them.

The Question

Battling Mother Nature's Forces

Nothing exemplifies man's efforts to tame North Carolina's Outer Banks more than the quandary over what to do about the Bonner Bridge which links Bodie island to Hatteras Island.

The issue pits economic interests against environmental concern. In the midst of the conflict is the Atlantic Ocean's relentless surf and Mother Nature's strong will.

The problem is erosion — slow, forceful deterioration of the land surrounding the bridge approaches. The wind, the sea and its tides are undermining the bridge. If left alone, the structure will become unsound. The question that has arisen is whether to build reinforcements to slow the erosion.

Environmentalists and many scientists say no. A plan to build a rock seawall and jetty to protect the bridge would only further damage the environment, they say. There's validity to that argument. The history of North Carolina's coast shows that manmade construction — jetties, seawalls, etc., — usually causes more harm than good. Such structures may slow erosion where they're built, but they hasten it elsewhere.

Yet Hatteras Island has experienced rapid growth since the bridge's construction. Many residents drive it daily to get to work. The tourism industry on the island has escalated sharply since the bridge has been in place.

Whether these changes are positive or negative is a separate issue. As long as there are people making such extensive use of the Outer Banks as a resort area, there can be no question that the bridge will have to be maintained. The dilemma — the question that must be satisfactorily answered — is how to halt the bridge's demise with the least environmental damage.

Since a number of state and federal agencies are involved it has been difficult to devise a plan which will keep the sea from cutting away the highway approaches to the bridge. Such bureaucratic procrastination and squabbling is inappropriate. The focus should be on technology, innovation and protection of the environment, not on jurisdiction.

The project will require the best engineering possible to protect the bridge and the fragile island coast. But if sharp minds can design the splendid viaduct on the Blue Ridge Parkway around Grandfather Mountain, a satisfactory means of protecting Bonner Bridge can be found.

The Rest Test Of Character

William Raspberry

WASHINGTON — If we are experiencing mixed feelings about the political demise of Jim Wright and Tony Coelho, it may be because we are torn between two conflicting, thoroughly American, notions.

The first is that personal sacrifice is noble; the second, that if you have a special talent, a good idea, or a willingness to work hard, you have a right — almost a duty — to translate it into fame, fortune and the other earmarks of success.

The first is the reason we admire people like Ralph Nader, Mitch Snyder and Cesar Chavez. The second is the reason our admiration for these paragons seldom translates into emulation.

We may marvel at their willingness to forgo riches in the interest of service, but we wouldn't want our daughters to marry one.

On the one hand, we claim to admire self-denial. On the other, we are fond of demanding, "If you're so smart, how come you ain't rich?"

Former Speaker Tip O'Neill put the conflict in focus the other day when, speaking in defense of his fallen successor, he wondered whether we are approaching a time when only the dim-witted children of the rich will qualify for public service. His double-barreled suggestion was that only those who are already rich can afford to meet the emerging ethical standards for public service.

There can be no doubt that our notions of ethical behaviour are changing. We didn't count it the least bit strange that Lyndon Johnson could leave the presidency a millionaire, after a lifetime as a public servant, or that Gerald Ford, just another middle-class guy before his accidental accession to the presidency, should now make his home among the certifiably rich in Palm Springs.

I'm not suggesting that these former Presidents earned their money unethically. The point is that it never occurred to us to question its source.

All that is changing. Coelho tried to make some money in junk bonds, and had to step down as Democratic whip. Wright, who tried to exploit a loophole in the law that put a limit on honoraria, is leaving the House in disgrace.

As O'Neill told ABC-TV's Ted Koppel, no one thinks it unethical for a taxpayer to take advantage of a loophole to reduce his tax liability. All we demand is that he not violate the law. Why should a public servant be different? If the law says a member of Congress can earn only so much from public speaking but places no limit on earnings from book royalties, why should Wright be pilloried for cutting an unusually advantageous deal on his book?

Maybe the key difference is this: The taxpayer who exploits the provisions of the tax code doesn't try to keep knowledge of the fact from the Internal Revenue Service. He is in trouble only if the loophole he thought was there turns out not to be.

But the public servant who exploits the margins of the law to enrich himself, no matter how technically legal the exploitation might be, can still find himself accused of an ethical breach.

Is that unfair? Maybe it is. The public servant who violates the law ought to go to jail. Whether he has violated some nebulous ethical standard should be a matter between him and those who put him in office.

Most of the complaints that the emerging ethical standards are too strict have to do with the increasing likelihood that the public will find out what is going on. If that is the problem, then the solution is not to enlist political opponents and the media in a conspiracy to keep the dealings secret but to avoid deals the public exposure of which would mean political disgrace.

It may be true, as someone once said, that the real test of a person's character is what he would do if he knew he would never be found out.

How Faint The Line

Ellen Goodman

BOSTON — The rug has gone to the cleaners. The bowls have been through the dishwasher. The leash has been put away. The leftover food has gone to a neighbor's dog.

Still the house is full of Samantha's shadows and sounds. I hear her tags jingling from the hall. My husband opens the front door carefully, as if she were still sleeping near it. I catch myself before putting a cereal bowl down on the floor. We both instinctively think about letting her out, letting her in.

This, we say to each other, is what people must mean when they talk about a phantom limb. It takes time to get used to what isn't there. What isn't here anymore is Sam.

Sam was no wonder dog. She had no tricks to speak of, unless you count her agility at emptying wastebaskets. She was no candidate for David Letterman unless he is fascinated by dogs that eat apple cores. She did what most of her kind do today: she kept a family company while the kids were growing up. It was her job.

If Disney made films about the lives of ordinary canines, I could contribute a few on the Urban Adventures of Sam. The time she jumped out of my sister's second-story window. The time she was mugged by a more aggressive street dog. The time she was hit by a car. The time she gave birth on the staircase. The time she found her way home across three miles of traffic. The time (times) she wound up in the pound.

Now it seems like such a cliche: the kids leave, the dog dies. Puff the Magic Dragon and 16 years have passed.

Old age came in its time and we saw it in her pace. She simply slowed down. For years Sam would show her impatience with the two-footed species by racing circles around me. Then one year I became impatient at her pace. The next year, she gave up distance running all together. Then she gave up the stairs.

Gradually there were more days when we caught her falling, or leaning against the wall, when she didn't hear us or see us, when she seemed confused and crippled. There were days when we began to think about what the vet had called so discreetly, "other choices." Of which there was only one.

Maybe in the rural societies they take these things more easily. By these things I mean life and death. The power to choose life or death.

Maybe it's the times. Today we confront the questions of mercy killing with a battery of ethicists and double-handed questions. On the one hand this, on the other that. Maybe the same human questions have infiltrated our treatment of animals.

In any case, as Sam noticeably failed, I talked about this with everyone I knew. What are the parameters. How do you know when there is too much misery? Or pain for that matter? Were we selfishly keeping her alive because we couldn't bear to be accomplices in her death? Was it wrong to make a life-and-death decision based on crippling? On incontinence? On confusion? How do you assess your responsibility to a creature in your care?

Many had been through this before, but they offered no certain advice, not even the friend who insisted that I was being excessive in my anxiety. He said to me wryly, "Hey we're talking about a dog. We're not talking about a parent."

But I know no one who found this an easy exercise of their power, their ownership. There are very few guidelines about love and death.

In the end, Sam saved us from uncertainty. It was her last gift. On Friday afternoon, she fell down and couldn't get up. We wrapped her in a blanket and drove her to the animal hospital where the vet told us what we knew: She was dying. We came home without her.

For all the talk, all the vain considering of "choices," the moral decisions came upon us suddenly, in crisis. I suppose that is always true. Suddenly we have to choose between life and death: a few more days of life and instant death. Choose now. This decision was at least clear.

The vet, a kind young woman, tried to ease my way as she eased Sam's. But cradling Sam for the seconds it took for the injection, the seconds it took to stop breathing, I felt, literally in my hands, how faint the line is that we draw between life and death.

Now, maybe, when the rug comes back I won't think of it as hers. Time goes by. But today the house still seems to echo with her tinkling name tags.

Legislative Pact Allows Furniture Industry To Settle Retail Spat

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH (AP) — The furniture industry has been left to its own devices for one year to resolve retailers' claims that they are being unfairly regulated by manufacturers.

A bill to limit the control furniture manufacturers can exert on retailers was put on hold Thursday after both sides announced a "gentleman's agreement" to resolve the dispute.

Rep. Alex Hall, D-New Hanover, House sponsor of the bill, said some manufacturers had agreed to relax rules including a prohibition on telephone sales and the requirement that furniture buyers physically visit a store before making a purchase. But he said there is no industry-wide agreement.

"It may not be as open as the retailers want it but it's much less restrictive than it was two weeks ago," he said.

Gov. Jim Martin, who acted as an intermediary in the dispute, praised the decision.

"I feel very strongly that this is basically a business issue and ought to be solved on the basis of business agreements between business leaders," he said at a news conference.

Hall, however, made it clear he still sides with retailers — particularly after some manufacturers threatened to stop selling in North Carolina because of the bill.

"I'd personally like to just run this bill on through to show the manufacturers that blackmailing the North Carolina General Assembly cannot be condoned," he said. "It (the bill) would not have forced anyone out of business. That's just ludicrous and laughable."

Fred Starr, president of Thomasville Furniture Co., said, "This is a day when I think everyone wins."

He said his company would let North Carolina retailers use toll-free telephone numbers to make sales within the state but still would require that new buyers visit the stores. Starr said he couldn't speak for other companies, but said, "We, as manufacturers, are committed to North Carolina ... and certainly to better relations with our North Carolina retailers."

At least one of the companies that had threatened to drop North Carolina operations over the bill has agreed to keep working here, said Bill Rustin, president of the North Carolina Retail Merchants Association.

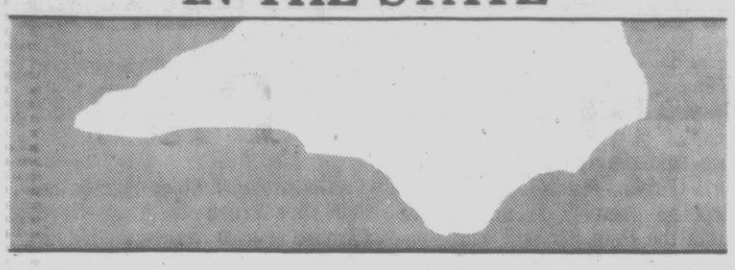
IN THE STATE



Bridge Rescue

HIGH POINT (AP) — A High Point police officer clung precariously to a railroad bridge to keep a struggling woman from committing suicide by jumping into the path of a train, authorities say.

The 30-year-old woman struggled to release Officer Jim O'Connor's grip on her right arm and hair and jump as the train rushed underneath.

O'Connor, 28, was pulled halfway over the safety railing on the side of the railroad bridge, but managed to hold on until three teen-agers ran up and helped him pull her back onto the bridge.

"It seemed like a long time," he said Thursday. "That was the longest train I've ever seen."

The woman was taken to High Point Regional Hospital, where she was treated for scrapes and committed as a mental emergency patient, O'Connor said.

Youth Wounded

DREXEL, N.C. (AP) — A teenager was shot in the arm with a pellet gun Thursday while riding his bicycle, but he wasn't seriously hurt, the victim's uncle said.

Chad Franklin, 14, was taken to Grace Hospital in Morganton for treatment.

"Another student just stuck a pellet gun out of a trailer door and shot him, said Steve Huffman, principal at Drexel Junior High and the victim's uncle. "The kids told him they were playing war. It was intentional."

Huffman said school is out for the year, but that Chad rode his bike to the school after the shooting because he knew his uncle would be there.

The shooting occurred three-tenths of a mile from the school as the youth rode past a mobile home.

Parachute Death

FORT BRAGG, N.C. (AP) — A Fort Bragg soldier died during a parachute exercise on the base Thursday, a spokesman said.

The identity of the soldier has not been released pending notification of relatives.

The soldier was killed after he jumped over Holland Drop Zone at the base at 11:30 a.m. Thursday, said Sgt. Ray Cordell, a Fort Bragg spokesman. An investigation into the accident is under way, he said.

The previous parachute jump fatality at Fort Bragg occurred on Sept. 26, 1988, Cordell said.

Sandpile Death

CHARLOTTE (AP) — A Charlotte boy died Thursday after he was buried for several minutes under a large sandpile.

Jerald S. Stopher, 13, was buried as he and his younger brother were digging a tunnel in the sandpile at Max's Sand & Gravel Co. in northeast Charlotte about 8:15 p.m. Wednesday, police said.

Jerald died about 3 p.m. Thursday at Charlotte Memorial Hospital, officials said.

The younger brother, whose name was not released, was not injured.

"They were playing on the backside of this huge mountain of sand," said Charlotte police Sgt. Terry Sult, and had dug a tunnel about three feet in diameter.

"The 13-year-old was inside," Sult said. "The sand just collapsed."

Jerald's 11-year-old brother ran for help. The father, Stephen Stopher, got the boy out in about six minutes.

UNC-G Gift

GREENSBORO (AP) — Joseph McKinley Bryan has pledged a gift of $666,000 to the University of North Carolina at Greensboro toward establishing a $1 million endowed professorship in the Joseph M. Bryan School of Business and Economics, the school announced Thursday.

The remaining money will come from matching state funds.

In 1987, the school's Board of Trustees named the school after Bryan. It is the first and only professional school at the university named after an individual.

RJR Retirements

WINSTON-SALEM (AP) — About 1,500 employees at R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. will be offered early retirement incentives this summer to trim operating costs, a source said Thursday.

Louis V. Gerstner Jr., the new chief executive of RJR Nabisco, told local business leaders at a meeting last month that tobacco employees will be offered early retirement incentives in the wake of Kohlberg Kravis Roberts' buyout of the company last fall, the source told the Greensboro News & Record.

Other sources at the luncheon meeting, who declined to be identified, told the newspaper that Gerstner told the group there would be some cutbacks but didn't specify numbers, details or a timetable.

Search Ends

HENDERSONVILLE, N.C. (AP) — The search for Jesse Dean Allison, suspected of three recent armed robberies that sparked extensive police manhunts, ended when authorities found him hiding in the closet of a mobile home near Edneyville, police said.

Allison, 22, of Hendersonville, was being held without bond in Henderson County Jail on two charges of armed robbery and two counts of kidnapping, according to Capt. George Erwin of the county sheriff's department.

Allison was arrested without a struggle Thursday, police said.

Originally held under $400,000 bond, Allison appeared in court Thursday morning, where Judge Steve Franks revoked the bond and set a probable cause hearing for June 20.

Court Says All Jury Members Must Be Considered In Picking Foreman

By John Flesher
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — Civil rights and criminal defense lawyers applauded a North Carolina Supreme Court decision as an important statement on the exclusion of blacks as grand jury foremen.

On Thursday, the state's highest court threw out a Northampton County man's second-degree rape conviction because the trial judge chose a white male as foreman of the grand jury that indicted the defendant without considering the other 17 members, 13 of whom were black, for the job.

"As far as we know, it's the first published decision in the country that has actually granted a new trial," said Michael Calhoun of Durham, who had filed a friend-of-the-court brief for the N.C. Civil Liberties Union.

"It has national significance in that this is the first case that has gone through the entire process of saying, yes, this is a legal right, and under the facts of this case, that right was violated. So it will have an impact not only in this state but in other states in deciding the same issue."

"A method of selecting a grand jury foreman that meets the racially neutral standard must ensure that all grand jurors are considered by the presiding judge for his selection and that his selection be made on a racially neutral basis," the court said in a 6-1 ruling.

Writing for the majority, Associate Justice Louis Meyer said there was "not the slightest hint of racial motivation" in Superior Court Judge Richard Allsbrook's choice. But for the judicial system to operate even-handedly as required by the North Carolina Constitution, "it must also be perceived to operate even-handedly," Meyer wrote.

A grand jury indicted Ernest Richard Cofield on charges of rape and felonious breaking or entering July 2, 1984. He filed a motion to dismiss the indictment on grounds of racial discrimination in selection of the jury's foreman.

The motion was denied and the trial jury convicted Cofield, who was sentenced to 33 years in prison.

The state Court of Appeals ordered a new sentencing hearing but refused to overturn the verdict. Cofield appealed to the Supreme Court, which held that he had produced evidence of discrimination in the grand jury foreman selection. The court ordered a Superior Court hearing to allow the state to rebut the evidence.

After the hearing, the judge ruled that the grand jury foreman had been selected in a "racially neutral" manner and allowed the indictment to stand. The judge also reduced the sentence to 21 years.

In its ruling Thursday, the Supreme Court disagreed with the judge, saying the state had not refuted Cofield's evidence.

Allsbrook testified at the hearing that he had chosen the foreman on the advice of the local sheriff, who knew the man. Allbrook said he race was not a factor in his choice, saying his criteria for a foreman included leadership abilities, fairness and ability to follow instructions.

Six of the black jury members testified that the judge made no effort to determine if they were qualified to be foreman.

Associate Justice John Webb dissented from the majority opinion but did not elaborate.

In other rulings, the court:

— Ruled that in certain cases, an insurance company can reduce its payments to an injured person by the amount the client received in worker's compensation.

The ruling stemmed from a case in which a Nash County man injured in an automobile accident received $59,000 in worker's compensation. The company for which he worked carried a business auto insurance policy that included coverage for injuries caused by uninsured drivers.

The Supreme Court, overturning the state Court of Appeals, ruled that an insurance carrier can reduce payments for uninsured coverage in a business automobile liability insurance policy by the amounts paid to a beneficiary in worker's compensation.

— Upheld the first-degree murder conviction of William Young of Wilkes County, who was sentenced to life imprisonment for shooting his wife with a rifle at point-blank range on July 25, 1987.

Young argued the shooting was accidental and the judge erred by failing to tell the jury it could convict him of manslaughter, a lesser charge. The Supreme Court disagreed.

— Ordered a new trial for Robert E. Reed Sr., convicted of first-degree murder in Camden County and sentenced to life in prison in November 1987.

Reed testified he shot Bobby Pearce in self-defense. The Supreme Court ruled that the trial judge erred by refusing to let Reed elaborate on his reasons.

— Upheld the first-degree rape conviction of Shafeeq Waheed Shamsid-Deen, who was sentenced to life imprisonment in a Mecklenburg County case for raping his 20-year-old daughter at gunpoint.

The victim testified that her father had forced her to submit to sex from her childhood. Two of her sisters testified that he also had forced them to engage in sex.

— Reversed a Court of Appeals ruling that State Farm Mutual Automobile Insurance Co. could try to recover some of the money it paid the mother of a 3-year-old girl killed in an automobile accident.

A jury awarded Donna Jean Holland and the estate of her daughter, Alicia, $104,589.02 in damages for the negligence Jo An Wall, driver of the other car. Ms. Wall's insurance company — State Farm — reached an agreement with the dead child's estate to pay $50,000.

Because the jury ruled that Ms. Holland was partly at fault for failing to secure her daughter in a child-restraint device, the second driver's insurance company, State Farm, tried to sue her for $25,000. A Superior Court judge threw out the suit, but the appeals court reversed that decision.

The Supreme Court overruled the appeals court.

Waste Hearing Recessed

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — The battle over North Carolina's hazardous waste law will spill over into next month when an administrative law judge must decide whether the state exceeded its authority in enacting restrictive legislation.

The federal Environmental Protection Agency hearing was adjourned until July 18 on Thursday after testimony that the law actually could allow waste treatment plants larger than half of those used by the nation's largest waste treaters.

Opponents of the law say it effectively forbids the construction of a GSX Chemical Services, Inc. waste treatment plant in Scotland County on the Lumber River. North Carolina says it passed the law in an effort to protect the river, the source of drinking water for Lumberton, from contamination.

Spencer Nissen, an administrative law judge, adjourned the hearing until next month, when North Carolina, the Environmental Policy Institute and the Conservation Council of North Carolina will have their chance to offer witnesses in the test case.

It is Nissen who must ultimately recommend action to Daniel McGovern, a regional EPA administrator in San Francisco, if Nissen determines that the state exceeded its authority in enacting restrictive legislation.

The disputed law requires that there be adequate stream flow for the discharges of new commercial hazardous-waste plants. The dilution ratio is 1,000 gallons of water to 1 gallon of discharge.

Evidence shows that such a requirement would mean that the plant could discharge about 71,000 gallons a day of treated waste into a waste-water plant run by the Laurinburg-Maxton Airport Commission.

But Sam White, a consultant who helped design the proposed plant for GSX, testified that such a rate would ensure failure.

"The facility could be operated at a reduced intake and discharge rate right up to the time it went bankrupt," he said Thursday.

But, under cross-examination, Richard Fortuna, the executive director of the Hazardous Waste Treatment Council, acknowledged that more than half the 75 companies that are members of his organization, and which operate waste plants that empty into public treatment facilities, discharge fewer than 75,000 gallons a day.

Confusion has apparently lingered for more than two years over just how large the plant would be.

UNC Board To Study Schools Of Nursing

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHAPEL HILL — A University of North Carolina system Board of Governors committee has agreed that the system should hire consultants to decide whether any of the state's four-year nursing programs should be closed.

The committee's action comes amid concerns about low enrollment, unsatisfactory passing rates and high costs at some of the system's nine programs.

The committee also voted Thursday to recommend that the nine campuses increase their nursing exam passing rates to 90 percent by 1991. The 1988 rate was 79 percent. Nursing graduates must pass an exam to practice.

Graduates of North Carolina community college two-year programs achieve about a 90 percent passing rate, officials said.

The recommendations approved by the board of governors' planning committee are contained in a nursing report prepared by university system staff members.

Of particular concern are enrollments in nursing programs at UNC-Wilmington and at three historically black campuses — North Carolina A&T State in Greensboro, N.C. Central in Durham and Winston-Salem State.

Nursing enrollment on North Carolina university campuses is down, as it is across the nation. The system's enrollment has declined 25 percent since 1985.

The committee's recommendations probably will go to the full board of governors in August. If they are approved, the university system will ask the nursing programs to project their enrollment through 1994-95 and determine how many resources they'll need.

Bidding For Sears

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

At least one North Carolina politician says incentive offers by two other states may be hard to overcome in the battle to land Sears, Roebuck & Co.'s merchandising headquarters.

"If I wanted to be bold and reckless and make some statement, I could," said Raleigh Mayor Avery Upchurch. "But I think it's too involved. When I hear about the offers being put forth by the states of Texas and Illinois it boggles my mind as to how we fit into that."

Chicago and Illinois have put together a $104 million-plus incentive package to keep the jobs.

Charlotte and Raleigh are among four finalists to be headquarters of the 6,000-employee Sears merchandise group, according to the Chicago Sun-Times. Also being considered are sites around Dallas and a site near O'Hare International Airport in Chicago.

North Carolina Department of Commerce officials have "at least verified that, yes, Raleigh and Charlotte are still under consideration," Marc Jordan, president of the Raleigh Chamber of Commerce, said Thursday. He declined to give details, and said he has had no word from Sears.

Both North Carolina sites have a lot to offer, Upchurch said.

"You have to think about the labor cost and the unemployment rate, and the airline hubs which we have in both Charlotte and Raleigh and the central location," Upchurch said.

Few Students Make It Through UNC Schools On Four-Year Plan

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. — While University of North Carolina system officials would like the numbers to be better, they are quick to point to factors they say retard students' ability to graduate in a timely fashion.

"People tend to assume everyone who starts in college graduates in four years, but that's not what happens," said Raymond Dawson, the UNC system's senior vice president for academic affairs. "They don't in North Carolina. And they don't anywhere in the world.

"People drop out for personal reasons; people drop out for financial reasons; people drop out for family reasons. And a lot of people come back."

Less than 25 percent of the freshmen who enrolled at UNC campuses in 1984 had earned their degrees four years later, according to statistics compiled by UNC system officials.

The statistics show a wide variation in four-year graduation rates at the state's public universities — from 6.2 percent at Winston-Salem State University to 53 percent at UNC-Chapel Hill.

At all campuses, graduation rates improve when students have more time to finish their education. But even after seven years, 49.9 percent of all freshmen enrolled in UNC campuses in 1981 had graduated.

At Fayetteville State University, 22.6 percent had earned their degrees seven years later. At UNC-CH, by contrast, 75.7 percent had graduated in the same period.

Some state legislators are extremely concerned about the graduation rates.

John Tart, co-chairman of the House Appropriations subcommittee on education, is among them.

"I think a lot of us can understand maybe that a student might not graduate in four years," said Tart, a Wayne County Democrat and community college president.

"A lot of students work and have to take reduced loads. But — and this I don't understand — a lot of students apparently are not qualified to enter the university in the beginning, so they have to take remedial courses, which puts them behind.

"It's a drain on the economy. It's a big expense for the state that the state somehow should not have to absorb."

U.S. Department of Education figures suggest that the experience of UNC students is much the same as their counterparts nationally.

The department's study of a sample of 1980 high school graduates from across the country says 48.9 percent of those who enrolled in college had earned their degrees six years later.

That compares with a six-year graduation rate of 49.7 percent for UNC students.

House Tentatively Accepts Resign-To-Run Legislation

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — City, county or state elected officials who want to run for another political office before their term ends would first have to resign the job they hold under a bill tentatively approved by the state House.

"I think this is a bill for good government," Rep. Coy Privette, R-Cabarrus, said Thursday. "Too many people want to go through life with a parachute. Sometimes you need to get on board and leave the parachute behind, which is what this bill does."

The bill, which was tentatively approved 65-34, would require an elected official to resign by the last day of the filing period if he seeks an office that would require him to resign if elected.

"The philosophy behind this interesting little Senate bill is that an elected official who seeks an office makes a compact with the people who elect him to serve for the term of the office," said Rep. George Miller, D-Durham.

The bill only requires an elected official to resign if the post he is seeking would require him to take office more than 40 days before his current term expires.

Some members objected that the measure, which already has won Senate approval, would keep people from seeking elected office.

"This does not prevent anyone from running for anything," Miller responded. "It merely says that if the office you are seeking would require you to resign your current office, that you must go ahead and resign by the end of the filing period to seek that office."

Rep. Bill Brawley, R-Iredell, said the measure was not needed.

"I think the voters are quite capable of making the decision whether a person who wanted to run in mid-term should resign," Brawley said.

Judges and federal office-holders are exempted from the bill. The House rejected an amerdment that would have required judges to resign if they are seeking another judicial office.

The measure was expected to come up for a final vote today.

Senators Study Ban On School 'Cussing'

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — A bill that would make it a crime for outsiders to use profanity on school grounds should be expanded to include students and school employees, some senators say.

"If it's good enough for non-personnel, it ought to be good enough for personnel," Sen. Jim Ezzell, D-Nash, said when the bill came before a Senate judiciary committee Thursday.

The measure, as approved by the House, makes it a misdemeanor for parents or other people not employed by the schools, to use indecent language in front of students on school grounds.

"Can you tell us what reasoning went in to applying this to outsiders, but not to insiders?" Sen. Fountain Odom, D-Mecklenburg, asked the bill's sponsor, Rep. Dan Lilley, D-Lenoir. "It seems to be unconstitutional on its face to apply a penalty to one group of people that does not apply to another group."

Lilley said House members who studied the bill removed students and school employees from the bill because school principals or superintendents have the authority to discipline them internally. But principals and superintendents cannot discipline parents or other outsiders.

That contention drew criticism from some senators.

"The principal can cuss a parent, but the parent can't cuss him back," said Sen. Bob Swain, D-Buncombe, the panel's chairman. "I'm not sure that's right."

Sen. Jim Johnson, R-Cabarrus, questioned whether students should be exempted from the bill, judging from the language he had heard in some schools.

"I've been in service, and in combat, and I'll tell you that some of them (students) could put my tank crew to shame," Johnson said. "To me, the big problem is the kids. We need to do something about their language because that crowd needs it worse than anybody."

"You would be better off to introduce a bill to make everybody go to Sunday school," said Sen. Frank Ballance, D-Warren. "That's what you're dealing with here, a moral issue."

"If you want to include students, is it your intent to put them all in jail?" Ballance asked, pointing out that a conviction carries a penalty of a $50 fine and 30 days in jail. "We already know that kids use this kind of language on school grounds. The only thing I can see the bill is going to do is make your ballgames might empty."

Swain sent the bill to a subcommittee that includes Johnson, Odom and Ballance.

Road Plan Endorsed By Panel

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — A state Senate subcommittee has endorsed a version of the $8.6 billion highway construction program that would take 15 years to complete and rescind its tax and fee increases when the work is finished.

If approved in its form, the bill would clash with the package that cleared the House last week. It calls for building the roads in a dozen years and keeping the taxes and fees in place afterward.

Leaders of both chambers voiced strong support for their conflicting positions Thursday, but predicted eventual compromise and said the bill was not in trouble.

"I think enough people want the bill that we'll sit down and resolve the differences," said Sen. Bill Goldston, D-Rockingham. "We'll have to give some."

The subcommittee of the Senate Finance Committee implicitly voiced support for the 15-year schedule by rejecting Goldston's proposal for a tax and fee combination that would raise enough money to complete the program in 12 years.

The House and Senate bills would authorize construction of an "intrastate" network of four-lane highways by widening 1,800 miles of two-lane roads. They would pave 10,000 miles of rural secondary roads and build "loop" freeways around seven metropolitan areas.

Both bills would raise the gasoline tax by 3 cents per gallon on the retail level and 4 percent on the wholesale level. Currently, the tax increase would amount to 5¼ cents per gallon at the pump.

Also, they would raise the sales tax on cars from 2 percent to 3 percent. Under the House bill, the current ceiling — $200 — would rise to $1,000 until 1994, when it would increase to $1,500. The Senate bill would boost the ceiling to $1,500 for commercial vehicles and remove the ceiling entirely for passenger vehicles.

The House bill also would raise the auto title fee from $5 to $40, while under the Senate bill the fee would increase to $10. The House bill would boost fees on auto registration, vehicle rentals and trucks; the Senate bill would not.

For that reason, Goldston asked the Senate subcommittee to authorize an auto sales tax of 3½ percent to 3¾ percent — depending on how much is needed to ensure that the package generates $8.6 billion in 12 years. Otherwise, he said, the bill would not raise enough money to match the House bill's timetable.

Sen. Marshall Rauch, D-Gaston, chairman of the Finance Committee and the subcommittee, has argued for a 15-year schedule. He contends that a 12-year program would stretch the state's construction industry to the limit, reducing competition and inflating the price tag.

Goldston said the program should be completed as quickly as possible.

"If people are going to be taxed this much, they ought to see a lot of barrels and bulldozers out there," he said.

Bank Workers Foil Impatient Robber

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WILMINGTON, N.C. — Employees in a Wilmington bank foiled an attempted robbery Thursday afternoon by stalling the suspect until he got nervous and left.

Minutes later, Michael Robert Smith, 27, was arrested and charged with attempted common-law robbery.

The incident began around noon when a man walked into a branch of the United Carolina Bank and told a teller to give him "all the money," a Wilmington Police Department report said.

Bank employee Belinda Fowler said: "Excuse me?" and the man replied: "Give me all the bank's money," the report said.

The man, dressed in a T-shirt and slacks, had a knife in his back pocket, but did not pull it out or threaten anyone with it, said Detective J.J. Lightner.

"When I... was trying to stall him, it looked like he got mad, and his eyes rolled back in his head," Miss Fowler told police.

The man repeated his demand over and over again. Miss Fowler told him that she didn't have any money, and asked him if he would like to make a withdrawal.

"This is a bank, isn't it? I want all the money," he said, according to the report.

A bank customer told another employee that a teller was having trouble with someone and the second employee approached the man, the detective said.

The man again said he wanted all the bank's money. The second employee told him she wasn't sure she understood him, and asked if it was a holdup. He repeated his demand.

A teller told the man to sit down — which he did — and signalled to another teller to activate the hold-up alarm, Lightner said.

The man apparently got nervous, Lightner said, and walked out of the bank.

Moments later, a police officer saw a man walking west on Oleander Drive who matched the description of the suspect and arrested him.

POW Search

ASHEVILLE (AP) — Former U.S. Rep. Bill Hendon says he's flying to Japan to interview a Japanese Buddhist monk who says American POWs were still in captivity when he was released from a Vietnamese prison camp five months ago.

Ganshin Yoshida, 65, now in a Sapporo hospital being treated for ailments resulting from his 14-year detention, told the Kyodo News Service that "five or six" American prisoners were at the camp in Hanoi where he was last held.

State Tests Hurricane Preparedness

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Hurricane Lucy may not be real, but the storm is designed to stretch North Carolina's emergency crews to the limit by packing phony winds of 130 miles per hour.

State and local officials kept a wary eye on the mythical storm today and Thursday as a test of the state's emergency plans for the hurricane season.

Officials even set up a Rumor Control Operation.

"In a real situation, we would set up an 800-rumor control number for people to get hurricane information," said Tom Ditt, a spokesman for the State Emergency Response Team. "Just like after (Hurricane) Diana, we had a report that there was a transformer leaking PCB at Long Beach and we found out it was not. In any major situation, we'll set up a rumor control number."

Ditt said the drill involved all the coastal counties as well as some 20 inland counties.

The exercise began Thursday with the issuance of a mock hurricane watch and an order to evacuate hotels, motels and campgrounds at Ocracoke, Ditt said.

Ditt said there were no plans to generate phony traffic jams to create more realism in the exercise.

Several counties set up evacuation centers and some were expecting volunteer evacuees during the exercise.

Joe Myers, director of the state Division of Emergency Management, issued a mock warning that "Lucy has the potential to be a monster storm."

Ditt did not know how many volunteers were playing along with the exercise.

"We haven't had any calls thinking it was the real thing," he said, "But we've had a couple of people ... from within the agency who have called in to play."

United Methodist Group Bans Tobacco Usage In Churches

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LAKE JUNALUSKA, N.C. — United Methodists are rallying behind calls for bans on assault weapons, a state lottery and televised advertisements for alcoholic beverages.

With little or no opposition to those measures and others, the Annual Conference of Western North Carolina moved into the third day of its annual meeting today.

But the conference hit a snag Thursday when it came to slapping one of North Carolina's most sacred industries: tobacco.

The Rev. Joseph Lear, pastor of First United Methodist Church in Canton, proposed a ban on the use of tobacco in church facilities.

The measure passed a legislative committee Wednesday night by a 103-31 margin.

When it came to the full conference annual meeting, Bishop L. Bevel Jones III admonished the more than 2,000 delegates in attendance, "Let's not go up in smoke over this one."

The Rev. Rod Brown, a delegate, said he opposed the measure because church policy already called for abstaining from tobacco. He said banning tobacco from churches could drive Alcoholics Anonymous and other groups from churches.

Robert Cundiff, a delegate from Winston-Salem, where R.J. Reynolds cigarette plants have dominated the economy for decades, tugged at deeper Tar Heel roots.

"Tobacco has made it possible for most of us to be here today," he said. He said the people of North Carolina, and especially those in Winston-Salem, would not be pleased by such action.

Lear, the pastor who suggested the ban, put the matter in context. "I imagined when I introduced this that I might stir some conflict between the Bible belt and the tobacco belt."

He said the church called for personal holiness. "I don't see how blowing stale air in someone's face brings honor and glory to Christ."

David Pendleton, a delegate and an Army chaplain, added, "It is time to stop making excuses for this industry."

A divided vote followed, but the measure passed.

In addition, the conference adopted a resolution calling for Congress and President Bush to use peaceful means to cause the Chinese government to end "the use of armed troops against unarmed civilians."

The church called the action inhuman and barbaric. Conference delegates stood and prayed for China and its people.

The conference also passed a resolution supporting the rating and labeling of rock music, while encouraging Christian rock music.

Also Thursday, the Rev. Jim Gilland, superintendent of the Greensboro district, presented a report on the church for the 14 North Carolina superintendents.

More than 2,000 delegates are attending the conference which began Wednesday and concludes Sunday.

Covenant Posted

CHICAGO (AP) — As a symbolic gesture in reverse of Martin Luther's nailing to a church door his 16th century challenge to Roman Catholicism, a new covenant between Catholics and Lutherans here was posted on a church door.

Signed and celebrated at a joint service, the covenant between local Roman Catholic leaders and the Evangelical Lutheran Church in America affirms that they share much in faith and pledges work for full unity.

To remove remaining barriers, Chicago Lutheran Bishop Sherman G. Hicks advised: "Let us listen to each other in dialogue and admonish one another in a spirit of love and gentleness."

MiG Pilot Goes Home After Crash

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PARIS — Soviet pilot Anatoly Kvochur, injured when he ejected from his MiG-29 fighter jet just before it crashed at the Paris Air Show, was released today from a military hospital, the Soviet Embassy said.

Kvochur, 37, was conscious and talking when he was airlifted to Begin Military Hospital with stomach injuries minutes after his jet exploded Thursday in front of hundreds of reporters, exhibitors and visitors at the air show at Le Bourget airport.

An embassy official said Kvochur was well enough to leave the hospital, and might even visit the air show. He had no further information about the pilot's condition.

Kvochur, described by a Soviet official as one of their best pilots, was making a low-level pass in front of spectators when the afterburners on the single-seat fighter jet failed to ignite.

The plane stalled at about 1,000 feet and plunged to the ground just off the airfield's central runway, away from the spectators.

The air show was inaugurated Thursday by President Francois Mitterrand, and opened to the public today.

The Soviet presence at the show, held every two years, is its strongest yet, with 12 of their most sophisticated planes on display. The MiG-29 was making its second appearance in the West. Kvochur flew it at the Farnborough Air Show in England last year.

Soviet officials at the show announced their planes would continue their schedule of demostration flights, despite the loss of the MiG.

Ex-Spies Gather On Maine's Coast

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

KENNEBUNK, Maine — Maine winters notwithstanding, spies who come in from the cold seem drawn to the Kennebunks.

This coastal town and neighboring Kennebunkport are home to a cluster of former intelligence operatives, analysts and administrators who have chosen the area as a good place to retire or to build a second career.

The best-known former spy master is, of course, President Bush, a lifelong summer resident of Kennebunkport who was appointed director of the Central Intelligence Agency in 1976.

But many of those once involved in clandestine activities have settled here year-round, creating a small and not-so-secretive community of retired spies.

This weekend, several of the world's leading writers on intelligence will be among 130 people expected to gather in Kennebunkport for the fifth anniversary meeting of the New England chapter of the Association of Former Intelligence Officers.

The keynote speaker will be James McCargar, a 16-year intelligence veteran who, under the pen name Christopher Felix, wrote "A Short Course in the Secret War," hailed as a classic in the history of intelligence. Another speaker will be Rupert Allason, a member of Parliament who, as Nigel West, has written extensively about British intelligence.

Bush, an AFIO life member, will be out of town and unable to attend the meeting near his vacation compound.

Four of the chapter's 11 directors are from Kennebunk or Kennebunkport. It's believed that at least a dozen former intelligence officers make their homes in the two towns.

After a 30-year CIA career that took him to places like China and Iran, Ernest Weidul retired to Kennebunkport where his wife is an artist; another CIA veteran, Barbara Storer, is in the real estate business.

Population Studies Look At America As It Will Be

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The future is now for the American population: most of the people who will greet the next century already here, pursuing educations and careers.

The Americans watching the 20th century grind toward a halt are far different than their ancestors who greeted the arrival of the 1900s, an era that has seen the population move south and west and make major shifts in family life, women's status and technology.

"Over 80 percent of the people who will make up the population of the United States in the year 2000 are now alive," reports a new study by the private Population Reference Bureau.

The "next century's first high school graduating class, as well as its drop-outs, are already in grade school; and the elderly of the 21st century are already well down paths that will determine their financial and health-care needs for old age," the independent Bureau observed in a study released Thursday: "America in the 21st Century: A Demographic Overview."

At the same time the Census Bureau issued its "Population Profile of the United States 1989," looking at the current population status of the country.

The aging of America is likely the most discussed and documented trend, with 29.8 million elderly in the country as of 1987, 12.2 percent of the population, and two-thirds of the group being women, the Census Bureau reported.

The agency says the number of elderly will continue growing into the next century, jumping to one American in five when the massive post-World War II Baby Boom generation hits senior citizen status by about the year 2030.

That will critically affect health care and retirement income programs, observes the Population Reference Bureau study.

There will be a relative scarcity of young people to take entry level jobs, school enrollment could shrink and employers will face a different mix of potential workers.

U.S. Burn Team To Aid Soviets

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SAN ANTONIO — A medical team from Brooke Army Medical Center will be dispatched to the Soviet Union today to help treat burn victims from this past weekend's gas explosion and train disaster.

The 15-member team was requested by the Soviet Union on Thursday night, said medical center spokesman Bob Clarke.

"The Soviet government did not grant permission to send any Soviet citizens to the United States for treatment," he said.

Clarke said the burn team will travel from Kelly to Andrews Air Force Base in Washington, and Ramstein Air Force Base in West Germany on the way to Moscow.

"At a minimum, the team will include three surgeons, three registered nurses, six licensed practical nurses and three respiratory therapists," Clarke said. "With the team will also go a large volume of medical supplies and equipment."

Hundreds were killed when liquefied natural gas from a leaking pipeline exploded as two crowded trains were passing on nearby rails in the Soviet Ural mountains.

English Declines

LONDON (AP) — The standard of written English among some Oxford University students is so poor these days that tutoring may be necessary, a professor says.

Jack Pole, Rhodes Professor of American History at Oxford, blamed the decline on Britain's schools, saying they offered pupils no encouragement to attach any particular value to grammar and style in writing.

He said persistent offenders may have to be sent to a tutor, but that most of the students were well-groomed in writing elegant English.

Pole's comments appeared in a weekly magazine, The Times Higher Education Supplement, and was highlighted on the front page of The Times of London with the headline: "English like she is wrote amid dreaming spires."

Whiter Teeth?

AFTER BEFORE

Commonly asked questions and answers concerning this procedure.

Question: "How long does the procedure take?"
Answer: This procedure takes only 15 to 20 minutes to start and the patient completes the treatment at home and to their desired degree of whiteness; however, on your first visit, the dentist must prepare you for the procedure and usually a normal one-hour appointment is sufficient. The results are very predictable when the patient follows the instructions to the letter. Most cases can be completed within a two week period, more complicated cases may require a longer period of time. Patients who follow the instructions properly may see results within the first three days of treatment.

Question: "If this is such a new procedure, how can I be sure it's safe?"
Answer: Although it is a new product, it is based on the older bleaching techniques that have been in use on teeth for over twenty years. When used properly, these techniques have proven to be extremely safe but overpriced for most people. It is a much milder medication than anything ever used before for this purpose and is priced where every patient can now afford to look their very best with a totally different and easier procedure.

Question: "How long will the results last?"
Answer: The procedure can be permanent with occasional and proper maintenance.

How Her Affair Happened Should Not Be A Mystery

Dear Abby
Abigail Van Buren

Dear Abby: I am a 31-year-old female, married nearly five years (no children), and have been having an affair for several months. Late last year I realized that I was not happy. My husband started a new consulting job at that time and worked every evening until 9 or 10 p.m. and all day Saturday. I saw less and less of him, and felt lonely and frustrated. We argued a lot and I kept telling him I was not happy. He told me if our marriage did not work out it would be because I wasn't understanding enough — that he was working for our future.

Innocently enough, I asked one of my clients to a client appreciation luncheon. We had a wonderful time, and after I left him, I felt something deep within my heart for this man. I passed it off as "flirting" fun; then he called me a few days later and invited me to lunch. I felt like a schoolgirl again. To make a long story short, more lunches followed, and I knew he was special enough to risk my marriage for. That's how our affair began.

Now I know that I love this man and want to spend the rest of my life with him. The problem is that I really do love my husband and don't want to hurt him. How did this happen? How can I be in love with two men? Is my affair true love, or am I substituting the lack of love at home for an exciting affair with another man?

We both decided to end our affair on the last day of 1988. It didn't work. We saw each other again because we couldn't stay away from each other.

The guilt is killing me. Meanwhile my husband is working so hard he doesn't seem to notice. Please help me. — In Love With Two Men In Texas

Dear In Love: You need more help than I can give you in a letter. You (and your husband) need to find the time to discuss your marriage and evaluate it. Here we go again — I am recommending a family counselor.

You do not mention whether your new love is married or has children.

How your affair "happened" is no mystery. You were vulnerable in your bored and lonely state and were unconsciously looking for the attention and excitement you hungered for.

There are many unanswered questions here. If you left your husband for this new man, who would be hurt? The answers to your questions can be found through counseling. One thing is certain: There's no free lunch. You can't build happiness on the misery of others.

Dear Abby: Please tell "Mrs. G. in L.A." not to shoot herself — shoot her husband instead. (Only kidding.) She said her husband, age 72, was having a delayed mid-life crisis and is divorcing her. I know how she feels. My husband of 20 years walked out on me shortly after our daughter turned 16. He said he was going to "find himself." (He also took along his 30-year-old girlfriend and her teen-age son!)

I have (mentally) shot him, poisoned him and strangled him at least once a week since he took a hike. I realize I am only fantasizing, but it helps me cope with the anger, hostility and stress I feel.

Tell Mrs. G. to hang in there. Counseling helps — individually, in a group or both. Also, don't shut out friends who want to help but cannot find the words. Keep busy, volunteer, take classes at a local college or trade school. Most of all, remember, time heals — and the pain does diminish.

Thanks for giving me a chance to unload. — Been There In Wisconsin

Dear Abby: You had a valuable piece of information in your column recently. I hope brides-to-be saw it and heeded your advice. You suggested that brides "break in" their wedding shoes before their wedding day. How I wish I had!

I put on my white satin wedding shoes about two hours before the ceremony. It was a hot summer day, and my feet swelled. At first they felt "uncomfortable," but as the day wore on, I became more miserable and was in agony all during the ceremony!

Afterward, at the bridal dinner, I couldn't stand it any longer, so I took my shoes off — and danced in my stocking feet.

Please print this, Abby. You will be blessed from coast to coast! — Helen In Houston

Dear Helen: Thanks for writing. The same message (break in your shoes before your big day) goes for everyone in the bridal party. Bridesmaids will be wearing dyed slippers, which usually "shrink" anywhere from half a size to a full size after dyeing. So buy 'em larger, and dye 'em, and then try 'em.

If you would like to write to Abby, send your letter to Abigail Van Buren, P.O. Box 69440, Los Angeles, CA. 90069. For a personal, non-published reply, enclose a self-addressed stamped envelope.

Value Of Degree Soars In '80s

By Barbara Vobejda
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

As the price of higher education climbs, an old question is gaining new currency: What is a college degree worth?

There is more than one way to answer, but a common method of analysis indicates that the relative value of higher education is far greater than it was in the past.

Frank Levy, a professor of economics at the University of Maryland, cites these figures: In 1950, the income of a 30-year-old man with four years of college was 30 percent higher than his counterpart with four years of high school; by 1969, the gap had closed to 25 percent, and by 1973, it was down to 15 percent.

"The trend was sufficiently strong to suggest that the market for college-educated workers might be saturated and that college was no longer a good economic investment," Levy wrote in a 1988 Brookings Institution publication, "American Living Standards: Threats and Challenges."

For the remainder of the 1970s, the gap hovered between 15 and 20 percent. But in the 1980s it began to widen, and by 1986, college-educated men were earning 49 percent more than high school graduates.

"That's an extraordinary growth," said Richard J. Murnane, an economist at Harvard's graduate school of education. "It's not that college graduates have done so remarkably well, but that for high school graduates, particularly for males, the bottom fell out."

Economists emphasize that the 1970s were difficult times for most wage earners, regardless of education, but that they were more difficult for young, less-educated males.

This group of workers had historically fared well in manufacturing, and so suffered disproportionately when manufacturing jobs declined in the 1970s.

"The Forgotten Half," a study issued last year by the W.T. Grant Foundation, reported that the real earnings of male college graduates, age 20 to 24, dropped 6 percent between 1973 and 1986, but high school graduates lost 28 percent and men with less than a high school degree lost 42 percent.

Fingernails Make The Man

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Fingernails tell more about a man than the clothes he wears, says a man who should know.

"Fingernails are an indication of your ability to manage details," says Paul Glick, his hands immaculate.

"You must have noticed someone with very dirty glasses on, or bad breath, or dirty fingernails. They aren't fully there. You don't make the assessment consciously. But if someone is put together physically we can pretty well assume he is well adjusted."

Glick is accustomed to handling details. He's an image consultant in Chicago and for the past 20 years has counseled men on grooming and general appearance.

Like it or not, he says, how you look is a statement about who you are socially and intellectually, so he advocates being concerned about presentation and making the best of what you have.

How?

"Put a wardrobe together — the right shirts, ties, jackets, shapes of clothing, the right glasses, the right hairstyling, the right management of all your grooming aspects — so that it can all be done swiftly, typically in 45 minutes to an hour," says Glick.

But how do you know what's right?

"The right appearance," he says, "is the one most appropriate for the context in which you will be presenting yourself.

"The right appearance might be jeans and a tee-shirt.

"The right appearance could be a suit and tie.

"The right appearance could be naked.

"It's where you are going and who you are going to be with."

Glick studied advertising and psychology at the University of Illinois and after enduring the pressures of the New York ad world for a while, he went to Paris and studied cosmetology and hairstyling.

Garden Club Has Wine-Tasting

A wine tasting program was presented Tuesday by Bob Simon at the meeting of the Cherry Oaks Home and Garden Club.

Guests included husbands of members.

David and Teana Halby received the yard of the month award.

The next meeting is a family picnic Aug. 26.

Stock And Market Reports

By The Associated Press

HOGS: Market steady to 25 cents lower at N.C. buying stations. Kinston, Spivey's Corner, Murfreesboro, Robersonville, Siler City 44.00; Clinton, Fayetteville, Dunn, Pink Hill, Chadbourn, Ayden, Laurinburg and Benson 44.50; Wilson 44.00; sows: (500 pounds up) Fayetteville 33.00; Wallace 33.00; Spivey's Corner 34.00; Rowland 34.00.

BROILERS: The North Carolina fob dock quoted price on broilers for this week's trading was 65.25 cents, based on full truck load lots of ice pack USDA Grade A sized 2½ to 3 pounds birds. 76 percent of the loads offered have been confirmed with a preliminary weighted average of 65.40 cents. The market is steady and the live supply is adequate for a good to very good demand. Average weights are desirable. Estimated slaughter of broilers and fryers in North Carolina 2,316,00, compared to 2,667,000 last Friday.

HENS: N.C. hen market was higher. Supplies fully adequate for a moderate demand. Prices paid per pound, day of negotiation, generally for slaughter the following week, heavy types, 7 pounds and up, 13 cents at farm buyer loading.

GRAIN: No. 2 yellow shelled corn mostly 4 cents lower, at mostly $2.71-$2.80 in the East; mostly $2.84-$2.93 in the Piedmont; No. 1 yellow soybeans 5-6 cents lower at mostly $6.75-$7.00 in the East; mostly $6.75-$6.94 in the Piedmont; wheat mostly $3.31-$3.42; new crop corn $2.22-2.52; new crop soybeans $5.85-6.16. Exchange rates for P.I.K. certificates were mostly steady and ranged from 97 to 99¾ percent of face value.

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market gave ground today, faced with news of a bigger-than-expected increase in producer prices.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials dropped 6.80 to 2,510.11 in the first half hour of trading.

Losers outnumbered gainers by about 4 to 3 in nationwide trading of New York Stock Exchange-listed issues, with 389 up, 529 down and 549 unchanged.

Volume on the Big Board came to 30.37 million shares as of 10 a.m. on Wall Street.

The Labor Department reported that the producer price index of finished goods rose 0.9 percent in May, substantially outpacing advance estimates by brokerage-firm economists.

Eastman Kodak, riding a wave of continuing takeover speculation, rose ½ to 51⅜. Losers among the blue chips included International Business Machines, down ¼ at 109;; American Telephone & Telegraph, down ⅛ at 36⅛, and USX, down ⅛ at 36⅞.

The NYSE's composite index of all its listed common stocks fell .49 to 181.90. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index was down .37 at 365.63.

On Thursday the Dow Jones industrial average rose 4.59 to 2,516.91, bringing its gain over the past three sessions to 36.21 points.

Advancing issues outnumbered declines by about 5 to 4 on the NYSE, with 832 up, 646 down and 508 unchanged.

Plant

ing results from the previous study, the methylene chloride emissions from this facility are currently below the proposed acceptable limits in North Carolina," Cipau quoted from the NRCD study.

Tom Gilroy, spokesman for the Chemical Manufacturers Association in Washington, D.C., said Waxman introduced the statistics to gain support for an environmental bill he is sponsoring.

"We were pretty distressed at an intentional misuse of an outdated EPA data base," Gilroy said.

Overall, the figures show that 205 facilities pose cancer risks that may exceed 1 in 1,000 for the most exposed individuals.

Of those, 45, facilities have a maximum individual risk of greater than 1 in 100.

One facility, a Texaco plant in Port Neches, Texas, has a risk of at least 1 in 10.

The EPA said the new, preliminary list is the first of its kind. Waxman, chairman of the House Energy and Commerce environment subcommittee, released the data, and he said there is evidence that the estimates could be too low, the Associated Press has reported.

The information only measures cancer risks, not other potential hazards such as birth defects, nervous system damage, contamination of crops or respiratory disease.

Inflation Soars As Prices Rise

March and April had been seen as a sign that inflation had retreated at least a bit.

In advance of today's report, many economists were predicting a moderate-to-brisk 0.5 percent gain.

Financial markets, which have been rallying in recent weeks on evidence that the overheated economy is cooling enough to produce milder price pressures, turned down modestly in early trading today. The Dow Jones average of 30 industrial stocks dipped about 1½ points in the first hour of trading.

Energy prices in May rose 3.3 percent, a steep increase but less than half April's 30-month record of 7.2 percent. For the past six months, energy prices havergy prices have surged at a 43.3 percent annual rate.

In May, the increase was propelled by a 5.2 percent jump in gasoline prices, which followed a 13.4 percent jump in April. Natural gas prices rose 3.4 percent, while heating oil costs declined 7.7 perceces, which had posted a rar bread, flour and wheat.

Traders in financial markets were looking to today's report to provide an indication of how far and how fast the Federal Reserve Board will lower interest rates.

Earlier this week, the Fed nudged the key federal funds rate — the interest charged banks for overnight loans — down by one-quarter of a percentage point to near 8½ percent.

Stock and bond markets rallied in response, taking the change as evidence the central bank has decided to end its 15-month campaign of fighting inflation with higher interest rates.

Michael K. Evans, president of Evans Economics Inc. in Washington, said today's report means the Fed likely will wait at least a month before loosening credit further.

"I don't think there's going to be any further easing by the Fed until we ... get some good inflation numbers for more than one month at a time," he said.

Still, analysts were optimistic that inflation reports eventually would improve. Economist Donald Ratajczak of Georgia State University said he believed gasoline prices have now more than reflected the the run-up in crude oil prices this spring.

"Gasoline now is priced in terms of $21 (a barrel) oil and oil prices are beginning to trade below those levels. ... Some moderation in the energy component is expected in the next few months," Ratajczak said in a recent newsletter.

His view is bolstered by the deal struck Wednesday by the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, which set a higher target for crude oil production.

Other favorable developments include the strength of the dollar and U.S. business' bullish plans for modernizing and expanding.

Secord's Charges Are Consolidated

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — A federal judge today consolidated two sets of criminal charges against Iran-Contra figure Richard Secord into a single indictment.

Over Secord's objections, Chief U.S. District Court Judge Aubrey Robinson combined three counts of a March 1988 indictment with nine new charges handed up by a federal grand jury in April.

The 1988 charges allege that Secord conspired, offered and paid illegal gratuities to Oliver L. North. As a White House aide, North enlisted Secord to run arms to the Contra rebels in Nicaragua during a congressional ban on military aid to them.

The nine more recent charges allege that Secord lied to Congress to cover up his own profits in the Iran-Contra affair. They also allege that Secord lied to Congress by denying that North received benefits.

Pistons Take 2-0 Lead In Finals

Loss Of Magic Deals Lakers Severe Blow In Bid For Third Title

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

AUBURN HILLS, Mich. — The Lakers lost their Magic touch. Can their championship be far behind?

"The Pistons must be the luckiest team in the country," Los Angeles guard Tony Campbell said, "in the world."

The Lakers chances of becoming only the third team in NBA history to win three consecutive titles sustained a severe blow when Magic Johnson, their leader, was hurt in the third quarter Thursday night.

He didn't come back. Detroit did.

A 10-point run that opened the fourth quarter gave the Pistons their first lead, 94-92, and carried them to a 108-105 victory and a 2-0 lead in the best-of-7 NBA Finals.

It's uncertain whether Johnson can play in Sunday's third game in Inglewood, Calif. Byron Scott, the other starting guard, missed the first two games and said he also would miss the third because of a hamstring injury suffered in practice.

Dr. Robert Kerlan, the Lakers' physician, said Scott's injury is more serious.

Although Los Angeles misses Scott's shooting and defensive quickness, the impact of his loss doesn't compare with that of Johnson, the NBA's most valuable player and the man who directs the Los Angeles attack.

"When Magic's not in the game, it's like when (Larry) Bird's not in the game or (Michael) Jordan's not in the game," said Detroit's Isiah Thomas, who had 13 of his 21 points after Johnson was injured.

Johnson strained his left hamstring with 4:39 left in the third quarter and the score 75-75. He stood at center court while his teammates huddled during a timeout. Then trainer Gary Vitti escorted him to the locker room.

"I felt a twinge early in the third quarter but thought everything was OK," Johnson said. "I pulled it trying to get back on defense.

"Why me? Not now."

Johnson missed five games in February because of a partially torn left hamstring. Los Angeles won three of them.

The Lakers said he would be re-examined Sunday.

"It wasn't a great sight to see him walk off, but I've got a team to coach," said Los Angeles Coach Pat Riley, still one short of matching Red Auerbach's record of 99 career playoff victories. "We've got three games at home and the most dangerous thing in the world is a wounded animal."

With their emergency backcourt of Michael Cooper and Campbell getting 11 points, the Lakers outscored Detroit 17-9 after Johnson left and took a 92-84 lead into the final period.

But James Edwards hit a basket and two free throws, Vinnie Johnson sank two straight field goals and Mark Aguirre made a layup. That put the Pistons ahead 94-92 with 8:32 remaining.

They led 106-100 before Mychal Thompson and A.C. Green made two foul shots each to make the score 106-104 with 32 seconds left. The Lakers got the ball back with eight seconds to go on a 24-second violation.

With two seconds remaining, James Worthy drove to the basket and was fouled by Dennis Rodman. Worthy missed the first shot and made the second, leaving Los Angeles one point down.

"The first one felt better than the second," Worthy said.

Thomas made two free throws with one second left and a desperation heave by the Lakers at the buzzer fell short.

Dumars' Efforts Seem To Go Unnoticed

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

AUBURN HILLS, Mich. — Joe Dumars doesn't fit the mold of the Detroit Pistons' 'bad boy' image.

He's always polite and modest around the media. He gets along with officials and opponents never have a bad word to say about him.

So why doesn't he ever get any attention, even when he plays brilliantly?

He scored 26 points in the first half and finished with 33 Thursday night as the Pistons took a 2-0 lead in the NBA Finals with a 108-105 victory over the Los Angeles Lakers. Dumars is now 21-for-32 from the field in the championship series.

But his accomplishment was almost lost in the attention given Magic Johnson's hamstring injury in the third quarter.

When Dumars scored a career-high 42 points on April 12, it was on the night the Pistons clinched the Central Division against Cleveland.

"Dumars is not a bad boy, he's a great player, one of the best all-around guards in the league," Lakers coach Pat Riley said. "We just could not contain him. When he's hitting from the outside and driving, he's impossible to stop."

Isiah Thomas, who sat on the bench for much of the first half with foul trouble, said Dumars' first-half performance saved the game for the Pistons.

Dumars hit eight of 11 field-goal attempts and 10 of 11 free throws in the first two periods to keep the Pistons close.

"It's good that we're on national television and you're getting to see what kind of basketball player he is," said Thomas, who scored 19 of his 21 points in the second half. "He had 26 in the first half and that's a whole game for most players."

"Isiah went out early and I knew I had to pick it up, especially in the first quarter," Dumars said.

"We have a lot of guys on this team who can fill it up, and this was Joe's turn," Pistons reserve guard Vinnie Johnson said.

The Pistons, trailing 92-84 going into the fourth period, outscored the Lakers 24-13 in the final 12 minutes, matching a Finals record low for fewest points allowed in the fourth quarter.

"We sustained, we held on and came back to win the game," said Dumars, averaging 27.5 in the Finals. "You've got to get it any way you can."

Dumars said the Pistons, who lost the championship series in seven games last year after leading the Lakers 3-2, learned a lot from that defeat.

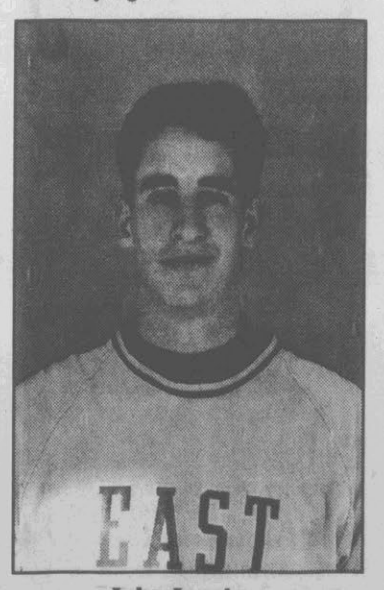
"We've got good character and we have some tough guys," he said. "We're going to hang in there no matter what. That's definitely a sign of maturity."

Ritchie, Jacobs Ink Contracts With Royals

By Woody Peele
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

David Ritchie, East Carolina University shortstop, signed a professional baseball contract with the Kansas City Royals Thursday at the ECU baseball offices.

Teammate Jake Jacobs, a right-handed pitcher, also signed with the Royals at his home in Goldsboro Thursday night.



Jake Jacobs

Both have been assigned to the Royals' farm team in Eugene, Ore., and will fly there today.

"I'm past excitement," Ritchie said. "I just can't explain it. I'm just real happy to be playing."

Ritchie was drafted by the Royals in the 21st round, while Jacobs signed as a free agent. "I went higher than I expected," Ritchie said.

The senior shortstop batted .246 for the Pirates this past year with 29 hits in 118 at bats. He scored 36 runs and drove in 15, hitting one double and two home runs. He walked 22 times and was successful on 23 of 24 steal attempts on the year.

In the field, Ritchie had a .932 average, with 13 errors on 178 chances. He participated in 14 double plays, half the East Carolina total.

Scout Roy Tanner, who signed Ritchie and Jacobs, said that he was first attracted to the Pirate shortstop by his running, then by the way he fielded the ball. "He has good work habits — most of the kids who come out of East Carolina have good work habits and that's a compliment to Coach (Gary) Overton and Coach (Billy) Best," Tanner said.

"(Ritchie) does things well in the field. He has instincts that you don't teach. And he has a chance with the bat."

Tanner said that middle infielders, especially catchers and shortstops, are hard to find. "David can play second, short and third, which gives him a good chance. If you can't play a position, you have to hit a ton to have a chance to make it. So I think he has a chance to play in the big leagues if he can catch up with the bat. He has the tools, he just needs to polish them."

Jacobs, meanwhile, attracted the attention of the scouts while he was still in high school. "Somewhere along the line he learned to pitch. He doesn't back off and can throw the strike in a tough situation. He can pitch. If you can't get people out, you won't make it and so far, he's shown he can get people out."

Jacobs appeared in 15 games for the Pirates this year, recording a 9-1 mark with a 2.43 earned run average. In 89 innings, he struck out 89 and walked 29, giving up 29 earned runs and 72 hits.

Both players, he added, have to make adjustments, one of the biggest of them, to the wooden bat, something neither has been around in years.

Ritchie said he was looking forward to playing in Eugene. "I've never been that far away from home, but that doesn't bother me. Just as long as I'm playing, I'll be happy. I'm not used to being spoiled, so it's no big deal."

However, he is happy that Jacobs will be going along with him. "That will make it easier for both of us."

And while Ritchie has experienced some shoulder problems, he says he's perfectly fit now. "I don't expect it to be easy, but I don't think it's going to be that hard making the transition from college to professional because it's what I want."

And how far does he think he can go?

"I haven't thought about things like that. My biggest thrill is just making it to the pros. The rest would be icing on the cake."

Eugene is a member of what is called a "Short A" league. It includes both rookies and second year players. It plays a 72-game schedule running from June 16 to Sept. 1.

Sunday Silence Heads Belmont Field

The Associated Press

Rider Dave Carroll takes Easy Goer for a workout

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — For the sixth time in 16 years, a horse comes into the Belmont Stakes with a chance to win the Triple Crown.

For only the second time, the field is in double figures. Ten were entered on Thursday, including Kentucky Derby and Preakness winner Sunday Silence.

"I'm not surprised they're in there," said Shug McGaughey, trainer of Derby and Preakness runner-up Easy Goer. "I'm not sure I know why they're all in there, though."

In those 16 years, three horses have won the Triple Crown — Secretariat in 1973, Seattle Slew in 1977 and Affirmed in 1978 — but none has done it in a Belmont field of more than eight. Could the size of the field reflect a lack of belief in Sunday Silence?

"If he wins the Triple Crown, they'll respect him," his trainer, Charlie Whittingham, said. "If they don't, they're stupid and he's rich."

The winner's share of the total purse of $689,200 on Saturday — if all 10 go to post — will be worth $413,520, but that pales against the bonus money Sunday Silence stands to earn. A Triple Crown would be worth an additional $3,987,570, which added to his Derby and Preakness purses would equal $5 million. Even without the Triple Crown, Sunday Silence could win a $1 million bonus by finishing in the money at Belmont.

"Very few trainers have won the Triple Crown," said the 76-year-old Whittingham, winner of more than 500 stakes in his career. "It's something I haven't done. If I don't win it, I'll still live as long, but with a $5 million bonus, I'll be smiling all the way."

Sunday Silence beat Easy Goer by 2½ lengths in the mud at Chuchill Downs and by a nose on a fast track in the Preakness. McGaughey considered scratching Easy Goer in the Preakness if it was an off track, but he said he would run, rain or shine, in the Belmont.

"Belmont's a different kind of off track than Churchill Downs," McGaughey said. "Easy Goer's trained here and run here in slop, and it hasn't bothered him.

"This time, if the track is off, we're going to give it a try."

Heavy rains fell during the week at Belmont with more expected on Friday.

Sunday Silence, to be ridden by Patrick Valenzuela, will start from the No. 6 post with Easy Goer and his rider, Pat Day, right alongside in No. 7.

The field, in post position order with odds, Irish Actor, 25-1; Imbibe, 12-1; Triple Buck, 15-1; Hawkster, 30-1; Rock Point, 12-1; Sunday Silence, 1-1; Easy Goer, 6-5; Le Voyageur, 50-1; Awe Inspiring, 6-5, and Fire Maker, 20-1.

Easy Goer not only went off the favorite in both earlier races, but he also was the early favorite.

All will carry 126 pounds, and Easy Goer will run as an entry with stablemate Awe Inspiring.

Lake Kristi Tournament Set To Open

GRIMESLAND — The Lake Kristi Water Ski Tournament will be held Saturday and Sunday at Lake Kristi near Grimesland.

The event, sanctioned by the American Water Ski Association, will feature competition in slalom, trick and jump. Over 50 skiers are expected to participate in the event which is sponsored by Overton's.

Each participant will be allowed a maximum of four pulls over the two days of competition, and may choose any or all of the events in which to compete. Winners will be determined in each of the 16 age, sex and skill divisions for all of the three events.

Competition begins each day at 8 a.m. and concludes at 5 p.m.

Greenville's Kristi Overton will not be among the competitors in the event due to a commitment to the Coors Light Pro Tour events this summer, which this weekend is set for Oklahoma City.

Greenville's Jackie Rollins will compete in the open division while Jeff Rodgers of South Carolina and J.D. Wiswell of Alabama will take part in the men's division. Tammy Hargis of Angier and Mike Overton of Greenville will be competing in the girls' and boys' divisions, respectively.

Maryland Could Name A Coach In 2 Weeks

COLLEGE PARK, Md. (AP) — The chairman of the search committee looking to find a basketball coach for the University of Maryland says a replacement for Bob Wade could be hired in the next two weeks, The (Baltimore) Sun reported today in a copyrighted article.

"We're moving along," said Irwin Goldstein, vice president for academic affairs. "I would say within two weeks we'll be done."

The Sun reported sources familiar with the search process said the Terrapins could hire a new coach by the end of next week barring complications. The sources also said the interview process has started, but Goldstein wouldn't confirm that report.

Among those reported to have been interviewed Thursday were Jeff Mullins, basketball coach at the University of North Carolina-Charlotte. Mullins is considered a darkhorse candidate.

The Washington Post, meanwhile, reported today that George Raveling of Southern Carolina was interviewed Thursday for the position. Raveling was an assistant coach at Maryland under Lefty Driesell during the early 1970s.

The favorites to replace Wade, who resigned May 12, are believed to be two Maryland graduates: Gary Williams of Ohio State, widely reported to be the No. 1 candidate, and DeMatha High School coach Morgan Wootten. Both enjoy good support within the university and alumni groups.

The Post reported that Williams was believed to also have been interviewed Thursday.

Others expected to go through the interview process include Ed Tapscott of American and Bob Wenzel of Rutgers. The Post said Wenzel was expected to be interviewed today.

American Football Not Part Of Glasnost

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The Soviet Union is making room for many new things under its policy of openness known as glasnost. Big-time American college football won't be included, however.

The so-called Glasnost Bowl between Southern California and Illinois was canceled Thursday because of contractual problems between the host country and the network that had hoped to televise the first American college football game to be played in the Soviet Union.

The game, scheduled for Sept. 2 in Moscow, will be rescheduled for sometime during the first two weeks of September at the Los Angeles Coliseum, said Tim Tessalone, sports information director at Southern Cal.

Raycom Inc. officials in Charlotte, N.C., made the decision to cancel after contractual concerns arose within the last two weeks that couldn't be resolved with Soviet sports authorities. The main concern was availability and quality of hotel rooms and transportation, said Ken Haines, the company's executive vice president.

MLBPA Files A Grievance In Hall Dispute

ATLANTA (AP) — The Major League Baseball Players Association has filed a grievance involving former Atlanta outfielder Albert Hall, who was released by the Braves this spring after he voluntarily sought treatment for alcohol abuse.

The grievance charges that the release was without cause and asks that the Braves reinstate Hall on the major league club. Hall has since signed a minor league contract with the Pittsburgh Pirates and is playing for their Class AAA International League farm team in Buffalo.

Hall, 31, entered an Atlanta rehabilitation clinic Feb. 21 for treatment of alcohol dependency. After completing the 28-day program, Hall joined the Braves in West Palm Beach on March 22, eight days before the club left spring training. He appeared in two games as a pinch-runner before being given his unconditional release March 31.

Arbitrator George Nicolau is scheduled to hear the grievance later this month in Atlanta.

"They haven't got a right to release him," said Eugene Orza, assistant general counsel for the Players Association. "They didn't give him a chance to make the team."

"That's absolutely untrue," said Braves General Manager Bobby Cox. "That's all I can say. Both sides have asked me not to talk."

US All-Star Team Finds Itself In Early Hole

MEXICO CITY (AP) — The United States finds itself in the hole already after losing its opening game in the World Basketball Qualifying Tournament.

The Americans continued their disappointing showing in international competition Thursday night, losing 116-108 to the Dominican Republic. The loss was the first ever by the U.S. against the Dominicanm Republic. It continued the woes for the country which invented the sport.

The United States won the bronze medal at the Seoul Olympics and the silver in the 1987 Pan Am Games.

The opening loss in the 12-team tournament isn't devastating to American hopes of advancing, however, as the top five teams in the field move on to the World Championships next year in Buenos Aries.

The United States, coached by Georgia Tech's Bobby Cremins, led 68-58 at halftime and by 16 points early in the second half before the Dominicans took over.

With 10:31 remaining a basket by Jose Vargas gave the Dominicans the lead for good at 89-88.

La Salle's Lionel Simmons led the United States with 24 points, while Rodney Monroe of North Carolina State had 23 and Syracuse's Billy Owens 22.

Astros Biggio Is Arrested For A DWI

HOUSTON (AP) — Craig Biggio will be fined by the Houston Astros because of his arrest early Thursday on a driving while intoxicated charge.

Biggio, 23, apologized for his actions, saying he made an "error in judgment by choosing to drive after drinking."

"I have a responsibility to the community and I did not live up to that last night," Biggio said Thursday before the Astros played San Diego.

Police arrested Biggio at 2:15 a.m. Thursday on a west Houston street after his car allegedly traveled at 50 mph in a 35-mph zone. According to officer R.E. Myers, the car was weaving so badly it "almost went over the sidewalk."

Edmonton's Fuhr Announces Retirement

WETASKIWIN, Alberta (AP) — Goaltender Grant Fuhr announced Thursday that he intends to end his NHL career after eight seasons with the Edmonton Oilers.

Following a round of golf, Fuhr told a hastily called news conference conducted on his golf cart that he filed his retirement papers because he was fed up with what he called unjustifiable things said about him in the Oilers' dressing room.

"If you can't play this game and have fun and get the respect you deserve, then there's not much reason for going on," Fuhr said.

Fuhr, 26, said he doesn't think he will go back to the Oilers. He's scheduled to leave Friday on a two-week cruise.

Fuhr's goaltending was a vital part of the Oilers' four Stanley Cups in five seasons. He won the Vezina Trophy as the league's top goaltender in 1988 after setting an NHL record by playing 75 games.

He played 59 games this past season, finishing with a 3.83 goals-against average with a 23-26-6 won-lost record. He played all seven games in the opening round of the playoffs, when the Oilers blew a 3-1 lead and lost to Los Angeles in seven games.

Sierra Saves Ryan From Sure Loss

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Luckily for the Texas Rangers, Ruben Sierra was hitting home runs almost as fast as Nolan Ryan was giving them up.

Ryan allowed four homers in a game for the first time in his 22-year career. But Sierra had a pair among his four hits and knocked in five runs Thursday night as the Rangers beat the Chicago White Sox 11-7.

Sierra homered once from each side of the plate, but his second shot, with two men on base in the eighth, wasn't exactly what he planned.

"I'd never hit for the cycle before, so I was looking for a triple on my last at-bat," Sierra said. "I tried to hit it in the gap but I hit it too good. It went very far."

Ryan didn't mind. He allowed home runs to Ivan Calderon, Ron Kittle and two to Harold Baines. The seven runs were the most runs Ryan had yielded in a victory since he beat the Rangers 9-6 as a member of the California Angels on Aug. 4, 1976.

"It was one of those nights and it's a good thing that my club was scoring runs because I needed every run I could get," said Ryan, 7-3. "You hope on the nights you don't pitch well they get you some runs."

Ryan allowed six hits, struck out seven and walked one. He set a club record by retiring 26 consecutive batters over two games before Calderon homered in the second inning. Ryan retired the last 22 batters in his one-hitter against Seattle in his last start.

He wasn't nearly as effective this time.

"They are a free-swinging club and they came out swinging tonight," Ryan said. "I felt fine physically but I didn't have good velocity on my fastball. Three homers were on fastballs."

Yankees 8, Red Sox 7

Boston rallied to tie the game with three runs in the ninth, then flopped with the bases loaded in the 10th and none out.

Don Slaught singled with one out in the 11th off Bob Stanley, 2-2. He moved to second on an infield out and, after Deion Sanders was walked intentionally, Steve Sax grounded a single up the middle to win it.

Earlier, Jesse Barfield, Mike Pagliarulo and Mel Hall hit solo homers for New York. Dwight Evans and Wade Boggs homered for the Red Sox.

Shortstop Alvaro Espinoza's one-out fielding error led to Boston's three-run ninth. Kevin Romine singled home a run with his first hit of the season, and pinch hitter Randy Kutcher doubled in two more off Dave Righetti.

But the Red Sox, who left 17 runners on base, failed in the 10th after Ed Romero walked, Boggs doubled and Mike Greenwell was intentionally walked. Evans struck out, Ellis Burks grounded into a force at home and Romine struck out.

Brewers 6, Orioles 2

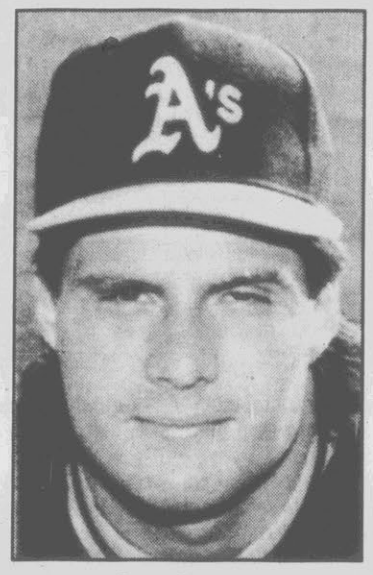
At Baltimore, the first-place Orioles lost their second straight after an eight-game winning streak.

Glenn Braggs had three hits and six Brewers drove in runs.

Trailing 2-1, the Brewers took the lead with runs in the fourth and sixth. Then Braggs drove home Jim Gantner with a single in the seventh and Rob Deer added a run-scoring single.

Mark Knudson, 2-1, picked up the victory with 4 1-3 innings of scoreless, two-hit relief.

Canseco Rolling Despite Injury



Jose Canseco

By Hal Bock
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

What a great player that Jose Canseco is.

Without benefit of a single stolen base, a single home run, not even so much as a single at-bat because of his wounded wrist, the first 40-homer, 40-steal man remains an All-Star with his fans.

Remarkable sport, this baseball.

Canseco's disabled list status apparently does not disturb nearly 62,000 fans whose support has last year's MVP among the outfield leaders in the American League's All-Star voting. Is this the Highway Patrol speaking out for its Man of the Year? Perhaps the handgun lobby?

This outpouring of Canseco support must surely thrill Texas outfielder Ruben Sierra, who is among the league leaders in seven offensive categories but had so few All-Star votes that he did not make it to this week's tally of the top 16.

This is an eloquent statement for the one man, one vote system. Baseball's easy All-Star ballot access is based on the old machine politics: Vote early and vote often. Fans grab handfuls of computer cards and madly punch holes, sometimes producing mad results.

Sierra's not the only one with a complaint.

The AL's top two hitters are Oakland third baseman Carney Lansford and Texas first baseman Rafael Palmeiro. But both are running well back in the balloting, Lansford fifth and Palmeiro sixth. Among those Palmeiro must overtake is George Brett, who is second with nearly 57,000 votes. Those are probably from the Canseco fans, since Brett has been on Kansas City's disabled list since April 30.

The force of habit ballot obviously carries a lot of weight in this election.

Baltimore's Mickey Tettleton, the Fruit Loops slugger with 14 home runs, is a no-show in the catcher balloting where perennial Carlton Fisk of Chicago is fourth with 31,850, despite nearly two months on the DL.

No-hit spoiler Nelson Liriano of Toronto, among the league's leading hitters, doesn't rate with the second base voters — he'd require a write-in because his name is not on the ballot — but almost 40,000 votes were cast for Kansas City's Frank White and his .235 batting average.

This twisted reasoning on the part of the people is by no means limited to the American League. The National League has its share.

San Francisco's Kevin Mitchell, who is ahead of the Babe Ruth-Roger Maris record home run pace, scares the daylights out of pitchers. He barely makes a dent with the voters, though, running fifth among NL outfielders. There are guys who haven't played for weeks, some who won't ever play again, doing better than that.

Mike Schmidt is second among third basemen even though his diminished production caused him to retire last week. Veteran New York Mets Gary Carter and Keith Hernandez, both out of action since the middle of May, are third among catchers and first basemen.

Nearly 79,000 voters punched holes next to Schmidt's name on the ballot. The retired slugger almost certainly wasn't one of them. More than 47,000 wanted Carter behind the plate, despite his .114 batting average. Over 50,000 thought Hernandez ought to be the NL first baseman instead of, say, San Francisco's Will Clark, the vote leader, who has been hitting over .350 all season.

Cincinnati's Barry Larkin, battling Clark for the batting lead, is third in the shortstop balloting and essentially out of the race with 44,433 to 190,499 for Ozzie Smith of St. Louis.

Smith will be a popular choice. You could do worse than the Wizard of Oz at shortstop. But you might do even better with Larkin, one of the game's emerging young stars.

NBA Finals ...

Worthy and Cooper led Los Angeles with 19 points each and Johnson had 18 points, nine assists and six rebounds in 29 minutes. Joe Dumars topped Detroit with 33 points. He had 26 in the first half, but the Lakers led 62-56 at intermission.

"We feel very fortunate to win," Pistons Coach Chuck Daly said. "We got a break when Magic went down. But we did not have quite the intensity."

Nor did they have their usual defense. Detroit's streak of keeping opponents under 100 points in all 14 of its previous playoff games this year was broken.

But in the fourth quarter, the Lakers didn't sink a field goal in the first 8:20 and made only two of 14 shots. They finished the period with just 13 points, matching a Finals record for fewest points in a fourth period. San Francisco set it against Philadelphia in 1967 and Boston matched it against Milwaukee in 1974.

Los Angeles should get some help from its home court but faces a huge challenge even if Johnson plays Sunday.

Only two teams have won titles after losing the first two games. And the Pistons, who have lost just five of their last 45 games, would have to drop four of five for Los Angeles to remain champions.

"It's not over. We've been behind before," said Worthy, who hit 6 of 18 shots in Game 1 and 7 of 19 in Game 2.

"We have to stay intense because Scott could come back and Magic will be back," Daly said. "Guys respond when they get in trouble."

Johnson, unable to play, responded only with soft words and disbelief that he was hurt at such a critical time.

Seated at his locker with his upper leg wrapped tightly after the game, he was asked if he could play Sunday. He thought for a while, then said, "we hope that maybe something can happen."

Another pause.

"They've done it before," he said.

Belmont Stakes ...

Hawkster, trained by Ron McAnally and ridden by Marco Castaneda, is the only horse besides the big two who was in both the Derby and Preakness. Four other horses — Irish Actor, Triple Buck, Rock Point and Awe Inspiring — had experience in one of the two.

Irish Actor, trained by LeRoy Jolley, was seventh in the Derby, then second by six lengths to Imbibe in the Peter Pan two weeks ago at Belmont. Triple Buck, to be ridden by Jose Santos, was ninth in the Derby before winning an allowance race here on May 25, and Rock Point, under Chris Antley, was third in the Preakness. Awe Inspiring, ridden by Craig Perret and also trained by McGaughey, was third in the Derby, then won the Jersey Derby on May 29.

The three Triple Crown newcomers are Imbibe, Fire Maker and Le Voyageur.

Imbibe, trained by Tim Kelly, was second by three-quarters of a length to Fire Maker in the Withers before his Peter Pan victory. Fire Maker, ridden by Jerry Bailey, was fouryh in the Peter Pan after being trapped behind horses.

Le Voyageur, to be ridden by Randy Romero, will be making his American debut after campaigning in France, where he won just one of six starts on grass. He is a son of Seattle Slew out of Davona Dale, who won the New York filly triple crown.

Most of the trainers, however, admit there really are only two horses in the race, and Whittingham likes Sunday Silence's chances of winning the Triple Crown.

"He'll make his own credibility," Whittingham said. "I know what he can do. He knows what he can do. And that's really all we need."

Pittsburgh Blows 10-0 Lead, Loses

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Who says it's rare to blow a 10-run lead? Four days after Boston did it against Toronto, Pittsburgh did it against Philadelphia.

"It was very painful," Pirates manager Jim Leyland said Thursday night after his team took a 10-0 first-inning lead against Philadelphia and lost, 15-11. "It's simple to explain. Their bullpen came through. Ours didn't. Their offense kept the pressure on. Ours didn't."

Pittsburgh's 10-run first was its biggest inning since Sept. 7, 1942. Barry Bonds hit a three-run homer and Andy Van Slyke and Gary Redus had two hits each as the Pirates sent 16 batters to the plate.

Normally, that's about it.

"I heard my players say, let's get a couple at a time and we can come back," Phillies manager Nick Leyva said.

Von Hayes hit two-run homers in both the first and second innings, giving him 12 this year. Steve Jeltz's two-run homer in the fourth chased Pirates starter Bob Walk.

Jeltz, who before May 21 hadn't homered in five years and 1,357 at-bats, hit a three-run homer off Bill Landrum in the sixth and Ricky Jordan's RBI single off Bob Kipper later in the inning pulled the Phillies within 11-10.

"We just wanted to pick away," Hayes said. "We knew we had eight innings to try and get back in it. 'We needed our pitchers to hold them and they did."

Philadelphia scored five runs in the eighth off Jeff Robinson, 2-6. John Kruk singled with one out for the first four-hit game of his career and Juan Samuel and Bob Dernier walked.

Robinson threw a wild pitch that tied the game and Dickie Thon was intentionally walked to reload the bases. Darren Daulton hit a two-run single off Roger Samuels for a 13-11 lead and Curt Ford hit a two-run triple.

Cubs 5, Mets 4

Rick Wrona's squeeze bunt in the 10th inning lifted Chicago to its third victory in the four-game series.

Lloyd McClendon reached with one out on shortstop Jeff McKnight's fielding error. Curtis Wilkerson singled off Don Aase, 1-2, for his fourth hit of the game and Shawon Dunston was hit by a pitch, bringing up Wrona.

Astros 7, Padres 6

Glenn Davis' two-run homer in the 10th gave Houston its 13th victory in 14 games. Danny Darwin, 5-1, pitched the 10th for Houston.

Tony Gwynn's RBI single gave the Padres the lead in the top of the inning, It was his third hit and third run batted in of the game. He has six straight multihit games, going 21-for-38.

Cardinals 7, Expos 2

Pedro Guerrero drove in three runs, including a go-ahead single, and the St. Louis scored five runs on six hits in the ninth. His two-run triple in the first was the only hit allowed by Kevin Gross through the first eight innings.

With one out in the ninth, Milt Thompson, Ozzie Smith, Guerrero and Tom Brunansky got consecutive hits to chase Gross, 6-4.

Reds 3, Giants 2

Lefferts relieved Mike LaCoss, 2-5, and finished walking pinch-hitter Dave Collins to load the bases with none out. One out later, Lefferts threw a pitch in the dirt past catcher Bo Diaz.

Martinez Confident He'll Rejoin Dodgers

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. — Ramon Martinez thought pitching a complete-game shutout against the Atlanta Braves would be enough to keep him on the Los Angeles Dodgers' staff.

It wasn't, but Martinez is confident he'll be back.

"I proved to a lot of people that I can pitch in the big leagues. I hope to be back soon," Martinez said Thursday as he worked out with the Albuquerque Dukes, the Dodgers' Triple A farm club.

Martinez, a 21-year-old right-hander from the Dominican Republic, was called up Saturday to give the weary Dodger pitching staff some much-needed rest. His nine-inning performance proved even more important after the Dodger pitching staff worked 35 innings in two games Saturday night and Sunday against the Houston Astros.

Martinez, 1-3 in six starts for the Dodgers during the pennant run last season, gave up just six hits and one walk, and struck out nine to earn the 7-0 victory en route to a Dodger sweep of the doubleheader in Atlanta.

Chang Wins Berth In French Finals

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PARIS — Michael Chang of Placentia, Calif., outlasted Andrei Chesnokov 6-1, 5-7, 7-6 (7-4), 7-5 in a four-hour baseline battle today to reach the final of the men's singles at the French Open.

The 17-year-old Chang, who saved three set points in the third set, became the youngest-ever men's finalist in Paris and is one step away from becoming the first American to win the French Open men's singles title in 34 years.

"Making tennis history makes me feel good inside," Change said after the 4-hour, 5-minute marathon. "It's definitely a dream. It's something special I'll always have with me. I hope it'll be an encouragement to other young players."

Chang, who ousted top seed and heavy favorite Ivan Lendl in the fourth round, became the 16th American in the history of the tournament to reach the men's final.

He will be the first American finalist since John McEnroe five years ago and the sixth since Tony Trabert won the title in 1955, the last American to do so.

"I went in relaxed because I had gone further than expected, Chang, the 15th seed, said. "I was ready to wait for each point. It was a tough match. Each point was really close. The exchanges were very long.

"It's the type of match you're really happy to pull out."

In Sunday's championship match, Chang will play the winner of the second semifinal between Boris Becker and Stefan Edberg.

Chang, whose previous best performance in a Grand Slam tournament was the fourth round at last year's U.S. Open, started the match in complete command and ripped through the opening set in 28 minutes.

Chesnokov, the unseeded Soviet who upset defending champion Mats Wilander in the quarterfinals, won only 12 points in the set as he struggled to find his timing and rythym, especially on the backhand.

The pattern continued at the start of the second set as Chesnokov dropped his serve twice and was down 0-3.

But the 23-year-old from Moscow, a frequent slow-starter, then broke Chang for the first time and, with the crowd behind him, rallied to take the set and tie the match.

By now, the rallies were long and hard, with most games going to deuce and some lasting more than 10 minutes.

Chesnokov broke Chang for 4-2, but immediately dropped his own serve as the grueling baseline encounter approached the three-hour mark with little drama or sparkle but increasing intensity.

Then came the moment Chesnokov felt he may have lost the match.

With Chang serving to save the set at 4-5, the Soviet had three set points in a game of seven deuces. He put a backhand wide on the first, a forehand inches wide on the second and was beaten by a Chang overhead on the third.

Chang held serve, and two games later took the tiebreaker 7-4 with a smash.

Chang then began to take more risks, rushing the net to put away volleys and forcing Chesnokov out of his backcourt stride and into a stream of errors.

Although he was broken at love to go down 1-2, the American broke back five games later, then saved a break-point to move up 5-4.

LPGA Needs Silver Lining

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

HIGH POINT — The LPGA sure could use a silver lining from the clouds hanging over the Pat Bradley Invitational.

The first round started with the withdrawal of crowd favorite Nancy Lopez, the Hall of Famer and second-leading career money winner, who returned to New Mexico to be with her father while he recovers from colon surgery.

Then, the rains came, which is only natural since bad weather seems to be synonymous with golf in North Carolina. A 63-minute rain delay ended and was followed by just four more minutes of play before more rain came and forced suspension of play for the day.

Finally, while LPGA officials were working out the details of today's action, they were notified of a computer error which knocked Diane Heinicke-Rauch out of the lead and put Myra Blackwelder in her place.

All that on top of the modified Stableford scoring system, which players were praising to the high and rainy heavens before the glitch that changed the leader board.

"None of our group was right," Blackwelder said of the error which actually had the wrong score for her entire threesome. "Plus, there's probably some confusion in the system."

Blackwelder had 19 points through 16 holes to lead Heinicke-Rauch, who played the entire 18 holes, by three points.

Under this version of the Stableford, golfers receive five points for an eagle, three for a birdie and none for par. Bogeys cost a point and double bogeys take three points from a score.

Kristi Albers, Lori Garbacz and Ayako Okamoto all finished the first round with 12 points to hold second place among those who finished play.

Some players were quite happy with the scoring system because it revealed a side of their game some of them never knew they had.

"It was fun really being aggressive. It's just the way you've got to play this tournament, you don't want to hold back at all," Blackwelder said.

"I'm a conservative golfer. I don't know why I am that way, but I just am," she said. "Maybe I've been playing the wrong way."

Heinicke-Rauch liked the system because it reduced stress.

"When you're playing for score and you make a bogey, you think 'OK, I've got to make a birdie,'" she said. "But it's not that way in the Stableford. I made a birdie and a bogey today, but I still had two points. Then I just went from there."

Leader's Been There Before

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

HARRISON, N.Y. — It was the same song, second verse for Tom Sieckmann.

"I've been here before," the 6-foot-5 Sieckmann said Thursday after his bogey-free round of 64 produced a one-shot lead after the first round of the Westchester Classic.

"I just hope that this time I can finish it off," said Sieckmann, who led through the first two rounds of this tournament in 1986 before fading.

Sieckmann, fighting a slump most of the season, did not have a "5" on his card in his 7-under-par effort and took the lead alone with a two-putt birdie-4 on his final hole at the rain-soaked Westchester Country Club course.

"The course is playing very long," he said. "The rough is as high as I've ever seen it here, six, seven inches. And the greens are small."

Early starters also had to contend with dense fog.

Mark Lye, one of the first to tee off in the early morning, said on the 10th tee "you could see trees and bunkers, but you couldn't see the fairway."

"I thought it might be dangerous for marshals out there, they might get hit by the ball," Lye said. "We called for an official and asked if he wanted us to play in this stuff, and he said 'Go ahead.'"

But the fog and wet conditions did not prevent the strong field from producing some exceptionally low scores on the hilly course in the northern suburbs of New York.

Rocco Mediate, not yet a winner in four seasons on the PGA Tour, chipped in for an eagle-3 in a round of 65 that left him alone in second.

He was followed by a group of five at 66: Craig Stadler, Fred Couples, Lye, Kenny Knox and Dick Mast.

Ben Crenshaw, former Westchester winner J.C. Snead, Dan Pohl and Japanese veteran Jumbo Ozaki were another stroke back.

Australian Greg Norman was in a large group at 69.

Tom Kite, the tour's leading money-winner, shot 70 using his new cross-handed putting style.

Defending champion Seve Ballesteros matched par 71 as did Tom Watson.

Curtis Strange, who will defend his U.S. Open title next week in Rochester, N.Y., was at 72.

Sieckmann, whose only victory in a five-season career came last year in the Anheuser-Busch Classic, said his early lead was a mild surprise.

The Lions' Dary Cherry tossed a two-hitter at Bill Clark Construction Thursday in gaining a 6-1 victory in the North State Little League.

Cherry struck out eight and walked none in going the distance for the Lions.

Chip Davis took the loss, also going the full six innings. He gave up eight hits, walked two and struck out 10.

Clark took the early lead with a run in the first, but the Lions took the lead in the fourth, scoring three times. They added three more in the fifth to wrap it up.

Scott Briley led the Lions' attack with three hits. No one had more than one for Clark.

Jay Kuykendall banged out three hits, drove in three runs and scored three as he led Pepsi-Cola to a 9-3 victory over Home Builders in the Greenville Babe Ruth League Thursday night.

Pepsi took the lead for good in the first inning, scoring four times. Bryan Hill doubled and Mitchell Brown singled. Hill then scored on a wild pitch. Jason Krause walked and Kuykendall doubled to drive in both baserunners. Cole Yarborough reached on an error which allowed Kuykendall to score.

Pepsi added two in the third, one in the fourth and two in the sixth to wrap up its scoring.

Home Builders got two in the second and one in the third.

Hill added two hits for Pepsi while Brian Fields and Chuck Williams each had two for the Builders.

Marty Whichard got the win for Pepsi.

FORECAST FOR SATURDAY June 10

ARIES (March 21 to April 19): Contemplate a ripe financial move over the weekend. Invite a few guests over who are intellectually stimulating. You will have fun.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20): If you don't feel true love in a relationship, be honest with yourself and the other person. Deliberation will give you the answers.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21): You will be happy if you straighten out your personal affairs. Before you go out, catch up on delinquent paper work, record keeping, etc.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21): You may be in a forgetful mood. Double-check and don't leave anything behind. Handle siblings in a democratic manner.

LEO (July 22 to Aug. 21): Your gracious mood can override any situation today, especially when you must deal with someone who is frivolous and petty.

VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22): Your friendly mood is mischievous which makes you lighthearted and fun to be with. Your devotion is appreciated by family members.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22): You may prefer a mobile weekend with an emphasis on humorous entertainment. Organize yourself early in the day.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21): You are ready for a change of pace. It is worth the effort to please your loved ones. Think big when considering outdoor activities.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21): Domestic harmony may be up and down today. Everything calms down when you let activities fall into place.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20): Focus on money, investments and financial security. It may be hard for you to make up your mind today.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19): Ignore neighborhood gossip making the rounds. Reach an understanding with your mate involving shared resources.

PISCES (Feb. 20 to March 20): Planetary aspects reveal an indulgent attitude along with scattered energy. A drive to new vistas can help to relieve restless energy.

Opening lead: Ace of ♣

Some 30 years ago the noted British author, Terence Reese, wrote about a novel method of finding out about the lie of the cards. By locating a specific card in one hand, you can often place another key card. He named this phenomenon "discovery" plays. To show what we mean, consider this hand from a recent team match.

East-West were using weak two-bids. Thus, East's two-spade opening showed a hand worth less than an opening bid and containing a good six-card spade suit. The rest of the auction was natural, and South ended up declaring a fair club slam.

West was reasonably sure dummy was going to be short in hearts, so he led ace and another trump to cut down on the table's ruffing power. Since he could now ruff only two hearts and a 3-3 heart break was against the odds, declarer felt he needed a successful heart finesse if he was going to make his contract. To help him to decide whether to take a normal finesse against East or a ruffing finesse through West, declarer thought it would be good idea to locate the ace of diamonds. He won the second trump in dummy and led the king of diamonds. East covered with the ace, declarer ruffed and the hand was now an open book.

Since East probably held the queen and jack of spades and had now shown up with the ace of diamonds, he was unlikely to have the king of hearts as well. So declarer drew the last trump, cashed the ace of hearts and ran the queen of hearts through West. Whether or not West covered, the slam was home.

Showtime Offers Innovative One-Man Show On Saturday

By Kathryn Baker
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Steven Banks is not easy to categorize. He's a comedian, actor, rock musician and impressionist. He's very funny — and he has something to say.

His one-man tour-de-force, "Steven Banks' Home Entertainment Center," has been packing them in on the West Coast, and viewers of the Showtime cable network get a look-see beginning Saturday.

The hour-long show was taped on stage at Marines Memorial Theatre in San Francisco. This month, Banks begins an extended run at the Canon Theatre in Beverly Hills.

Set in Banks' slovenly bachelor pad, the show is a series of imaginative comic vignettes, but in a larger sense it's an inspiring story about being stuck in life at thirtysomething and taking a risk to get your dream.

It opens with Banks coming home early from his dead-end job in the corporate maze and donning his jammies so he can delve into his fantasy life as a rock star. He cheers his own entrance with the chant: "Banks! Banks! Banks! Banks! ..."

His telephone messages include repeated and increasingly irritated calls from the office, but also a surprise call from Lance, a high-school pal who's now a rock star.

The eccentric Banks' kitchen shelves are lined with boxes of Duncan Hines cookie mix, the sink is full of dirty dishes, and the walls plastered with posters of his musical heroes. The slightest task, be it talking on the phone or typing, turns into a performance.

Banks is being hounded by his boss, Mr. Buttle, to finish writing a speech that was due that afternoon. Though his intentions are good, Banks constantly distracts himself by any means available to avoid the mundane, and grown-up, job.

At one point, he emerges from his closet in a tacky Vegas jumpsuit, stuffs it with a pillow and launches into a homage to Elvis, "Who Killed the King of Rock 'n' Roll?" Banks' childlike imaginings turn bitingly satiric. "It wasn't me, says Lisa Marie," goes one verse. "I loved my dad and he loved me. ... When I get all of his mon-ey, I'll give it to Scientology. ..."

Banks is also being pressured by his girlfriend, Phoebe, who intends to move in with him. Not only that, the landlord is complaining about the noise from his drums and promises to toss Banks out if there is one more drumbeat from his apartment.

So Banks grabs up a guitar and gets so involved in his impersonation of Bob Dylan, he answers the phone in a nasal, "There's no one here by that name. This is the Dylan residence. ... D-Y-L-A-N. ... Bob. ... B-O-B. ... Yes, it is. ... Why, thank you very much!"

When Lance calls back, Banks thinks he's being offered the chance of a lifetime — Lance's drummer has quit. But Banks' drum audition over the phone only succeeds in costing him his apartment — he's already lost his girlfriend and is on the verge of losing his job. So he does the only reasonable thing — explodes into a punk-rock ode to his own life:

"Twenty-two: degree! Twenty-three: McDonald's! Twenty-four: Unemployment! Twenty-five: Buttle! Twenty-six: Buttle! Twenty-seven, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32! But now I'm 33, I'm tryin' to be cool, I'm jumping around in my living room ..."

The song fades as Banks realizes that's exactly what he's doing and his life is a shambles.

But this is a show with a happy ending, even in real life. The theater audience gives Banks a standing ovation and provides an authentic, "Banks! Banks! Banks!"

Actress' Assailant Is Charged

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — The crazed fan who knifed actress Theresa Saldana may never be freed to pursue his death mission, but she still fears the man will someday get out and try to kill her.

"I am so grateful he will not be walking out next week. It is buying some time," Miss Saldana said Thursday after learning Arthur Jackson's death threats from a prison cell may keep him behind bars indefinitely.

One week before his parole date, District Attorney Ira Reiner charged Jackson with eight counts of threatening the actress and her rescuer in 1987 and 1988.

The new charges carry a total of seven years and eight months in prison, but because of Jackson's mental history the 53-year-old Scottish drifter could be kept in prison or in a psychiatric facility for many years.

"He could receive a life term for this, given his deranged mental state, because the laws have been changed," Reiner said. "Our objective, quite simply, is to keep him off the street."

Jackson, whose obsession with the "Raging Bull" actress led to the 1982 attack, had been given a June 15 good-behavior parole date after serving seven years of a 12-year sentence for the stabbing.

Miss Saldana was attacked outside her West Hollywood apartment and stabbed 10 times by Jackson, whose thrusts bent the blade of his kitchen knife.

'Superboy' Tarnished

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ORLANDO, Fla. — He may leap tall buildings, but motor vehicles pose a problem for Superboy, and straight shooting with the law doesn't appear to be a strong suit either.

John Newton, 23, who plays the lead in the syndicated television series "Superboy," persuaded a local sheriff and a judge in March to withdraw a $52 careless driving ticket, saying his image would be hurt by the citation and claiming he had no previous tickets.

The TV star's rental car had nearly hit a deputy's patrol car in a shopping center in January.

But records show Newton since 1982 had at least four other traffic tickets —three in North Carolina and one in New York — and had his driver's license suspended twice. One of the citations was issued in New York City, the others in North Carolina.

"I can't believe the guy did this. We took the man at his word. I guess a man is only as good as his word," Orange Country Sheriff's spokesman Jim Solomons said Thursday.

No further action against the actor is planned, Solomons said. "You can't reissue a ticket that's been dismissed," he said.

"Superboy" is syndicated by Viacom Enterprises and produced at Disney-MGM Studios in the Orlando area.

Filming was suspended for the summer and Newton could not be reached for comment.

Twister leaves path of destruction in Grosse Tete, La.

Study Says AIDS Cases Underestimated

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — A system used by federal agencies significantly underestimates the number of Americans with AIDS and distorts the proportion of whites and minorities who have the disease, a University of Chicago study concludes.

In a study published today in the journal Science, a survey conducted by the National Opinion Research Center at the University of Chicago says estimates by the federal Centers for Disease Control do not accurately reflect racial distribution of AIDS, nor the true extent of the epidemic in the Midwest.

Edward O. Laumann of the University of Chicago said the distortion occurs because affluent whites can afford to be treated discreetly by physicians who do not officially report the disease. Also, he said, some data collection agencies are slow to compile reports and misfile others.

The CDC makes its estimate based on cases reported to official agencies. An undercount or a failure to report cases could seriously affect the CDC estimate, Laumann said in a telephone interview on Thursday.

"We are contending that there is an undercount, but we don't know the scale of it," said Laumann, who co-authored the report in Science.

"We can estimate the demographic composition, but not the gross numbers themselves. The reason we're being cautious is that this is too small a sample."

To gather data for the study, Laumann and his associates conducted interviews with members of 1,481 households around the country. The households were selected to reflect a cross-section of the population.

Respondents were asked if they knew an acquaintance who had AIDS. To validate the accuracy of the answers, the respondents also were asked if they had an acquaintance who had been murdered.

Using earlier studies on the number of people likely to have known a murder victim, the researchers concluded that answers to the homicide question were statistically accurate. This suggested that answers to the AIDS question would be equally accurate.

The results of the AIDS question "suggest that the white proportion (of AIDS cases) is substantially higher than CDC reports and that a substantially greater share of the cases is in the Midwestern region."

According to CDC figures from March 7, whites account for about 60 percent of the nation's AIDS cases. The University of Chicago study put the number at 72 percent.

The CDC said 26 percent of all victims so far are black and 14 percent are Hispanic. The Chicago results put these totals at 18 percent for blacks and 6 percent for Hispanics.

Cases in the Midwest, according to the CDC, make up only 8 percent of the national total. The Chicago study said Midwest cases actually comprise 20 percent of the national total.

Tornadoes On Gulf Coast Kill Three

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Officials in Florida and Louisiana today mourned five people killed in storms but said they were lucky that powerful twisters blasting out of Gulf thunderstorms hadn't caused more fatalities.

One tornado Thursday night zapped the Florida Panhandle fishing village of Eastpoint, killing a grandmother, mother and son in their house. It destroyed 19 houses and narrowly missed a nursing home.

Cleanup efforts began today in south Louisiana where tornadoes hit seven parishes, killing two people in mobile homes in the town of Grosse Tete and damaging scores of homes there and 15 miles east in Baton Rouge.

"We can't imagine how more aren't dead," said Willie Hurdle, an Iberville Parish official who surveyed the scene at Grosse Tete. "This is devastating. There's about 20 houses that aren't even here anymore."

About two dozen others were injured in the tornado.

Police sealed the town off to prevent looting and dogs searched the rubble for bodies or survivors.

Officials used a chain saw to free an elderly woman from the wreckage of her home.

Gov. Buddy Roemer toured the area by helicopter. He said two companies of Louisiana National Guard soldiers would be sent to help authorities enforce a night curfew to discourage looters.

Baton Rouge fire chief Ron Spillman said four tornadoes touched down 19 times in East Baton Rouge Parish, destroying or damaging almost 70 mobile homes and 25 to 30 houses.

From 400 to 600 people lived in the destroyed or damaged residences, Spillman estimated. A shelter was set up at a high school for those left homeless.

Kimberly Carver was asleep in her mobile home at the Pecue Lake Mobile Home Park when one of the twisters ripped through the neighborhood.

"Somehow, I just ended up between the mattress and box springs. Everything in my bedroom was flying. If I wasn't between the mattress and the box spring, I would have gotten hurt. It happened so fast," Carver said.

Authorities reported three injuries in Baton Rouge, none serious.

Gulf State Utilities crews worked into the morning to restore power to about 3,500 residents in the Baton Rouge area.

John Boss, a photographer for the State-Times in Baton Rouge, and Rita F. Gilmer were caught in the middle of the storm near a bridge over the Mississippi River.

"Two houses blew up right across the levee from where we were," he said. "Limbs were snapping off trees and flying all over us. We were afraid we were going to be hit by all the debris. I was scared to death. It was hell."

Most of the demolished houses in Eastpoint, 85 miles southeast of Tallahassee, were mobile homes, officials said. Eight cars and several utility sheds also were destroyed. A hardware store lost its roof, and a boat building business was demolished.

"It was monstrous — like the tornado in the 'Wizard of Oz,' " said Tracey Hardman after seeing the twister. "It was awesome."

Earlier Thursday, a U.S. park ranger was hurt when a tornado carried away the shelter at Gulf Islands National Seashore in which she had taken refuge.

Bush Says Chinese Leaders Must Recognize Dissent

By Terence Hunt
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — President Bush refuses to fix blame for the massacre in Beijing but says it would be "extraordinarily difficult" to have ties with anyone responsible for the bloodshed.

Bush, in the first prime-time news conference of his presidency, said Thursday night that the United States won't have normal relations with China until the government there recognizes demands for democracy.

Despite a military crackdown that killed hundreds if not thousands of people in Beijing, Bush emphasized Thursday night that he wants to "preserve the relationship" with China.

But for that relationship to be normal, he said, "it will take a recognition of the rights of individuals and respect for the rights of those who disagree."

He said, "I don't want to pass judgment on individual leaders but I want to make very clear to those leaders and to the rest of the world that the United States denounces the kind of brutality that all of us have seen on our television."

Pressed on whether he could maintain relations with anyone who ordered the firing on unarmed students, Bush said, "It would make it extraordinarily difficult."

Bush answered questions at the televised news conference for 33 minutes. He appeared relaxed and confident, joking at times with his interrogators and expressing pleasure when a reporter wished his wife, Barbara, happy birthday on her 64th.

Bush took the opportunity to say the first lady was "doing just fine" after treatment for a thyroid problem.

On other matters, Bush:

—Said he opposed public disclosure of people who test positive for AIDS. "There is a certain right to privacy that we should respect," he said, adding, however, that people who test positive should inform their doctors and sexual partners.

—Said he will tell Polish leaders during a visit next month "we want to work with you" as long as economic and pro-democracy reforms continue. "When a country moves as Poland did, down democracy's path, the United States should respond as best it could," he said.

—Said he would not give up on his campaign to drive from power Panamanian ruler Manuel Antonio Noriega, who has been indicted in Miami on drug-smuggling charges.

Foreign policy issues dominated the questioning.

Bush said he was encouraged by Moscow's response to his proposal for cutbacks in Soviet and American combat troops in Europe to 275,000 each.

He said agreement on that plan could ease tensions in NATO about updating short-range nuclear missiles — a plan that West Germany opposes.

While saying he wants to see Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev's economic reforms succeed, Bush said, "I am going to keep my eyes wide open."

He also urged Iran's new leaders to help free American hostages in Lebanon and to renounce terrorism if they want better relations with the United States.

On the political front in Washington, where congressional Republicans and Democrats are bitterly attacking each other over ethics issues, Bush said "this ugliness of this climate is bad and I don't like it and I'd like to think that I could help."

He said newly elected Democratic House Speaker Thomas Foley, tarred by a Republican Party circular comparing his record to that of a homosexual congressman, had been rendered "a terrible ill service."

Bush said GOP chairman Lee Atwater "looked me right in the eye and said he did not know about" the circular, whose purported author, Mark Goodin, resigned as a Republican press aide on Wednesday.

Discussing China, Bush repeatedly referred to his experience as U.S. envoy to Beijing in 1974-1975 but said U.S. understanding of developments in China was "very, very murky."

Bush said he felt a "sense of personal disappointment" in the government's turn toward violence.

Asked whether Chinese leader Deng Xiaoping was still in charge, Bush said, "I don't know." Pointing around the room of reporters, he said, "And you don't know. And he doesn't know and nobody knows — outside (of China). And that's the way the Chinese system works."

Given his personal ties with China, Bush was asked why he didn't pick up the telephone and call the country's leaders. "The line was busy. I couldn't get through," he said.

Defending his decision not to invoke more sanctions beyond his suspension of military sales to China, Bush said the United States is engaged in diplomatic efforts that he hopes will ease the situation.

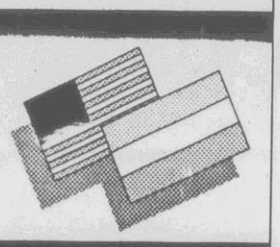
Bush said, "We aren't going to remake the world but we should stand for something. And there's no question in the minds of these students (in China) that the United States is standing in their corners."

Highlights of Bush's Press Conference

CHINA

- Said the United States cannot return to "totally normal relations" with China unless that government ends violence against its own people.
- Hopes to "preserve the relationship" that the United States has built with China, but added that the U.S. denounces last weekend's violence.
- Pointed out that Chinese leader Deng Xiaoping" was thrown out by the cultural revolution crowd in the late '60's, came back in (and) in 1976 was put out again because he was seen as too forward-looking."
- When asked why he didn't just telephone senior officials in Beijing he replied "the line was busy, I couldn't get through."

IRAN RELATIONS

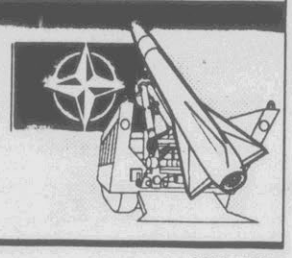


- Said there can be no normalization of relations with the post-Khomeini government unless its leaders renounce terrorism and facilitate the release of the American hostages.

FOLEY MEMO

- Described as "disgusting" the Republican National Committee circular comparing Speaker of the House Foley's voting record with that of a homosexual House member, and added that it was time that Congress adopt tough ethics legislation.

NATO



- Said if the proposal he made last month to reduce NATO and Warsaw Pact conventional forces in Europe is acted on quickly, another dispute over short-range nuclear missiles could be avoided.

Bush Promises New Clean Air Standards

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — President Bush says the environment is "a moral issue" and he is promising to send Congress new clean air standards that will "significantly improve every North American's quality of life."

The president heard conflicting advice Thursday from industrialists and environmentalists on how to grapple with the issue.

Both sides said the president didn't tip his hand and assured them he had not yet made final decisions.

Administration aides, speaking on the condition of anonymity, said, however, that Bush had already decided on many key parts of the legislation — including tough new standards for cleaning up smokestack emissions that cause acid rain.

The industrialists warned the president against standards so stringent they hurt the economy. The environmentalists said Bush was "shocked" to hear that his resort home town of Kennebunkport, Maine, had dangerously high ozone levels last summer.

Administration sources said the president also has decided on far-reaching, rigid new standards to prevent chemical contamination of the air, extending to hundreds of businesses from paint factories to bakeries.

Power plants and other industries that burn coal in the Midwest, many of which disperse their pollutants through tall smokestacks without technological controls, will be a key target of Bush's clean-air attack, the sources said.

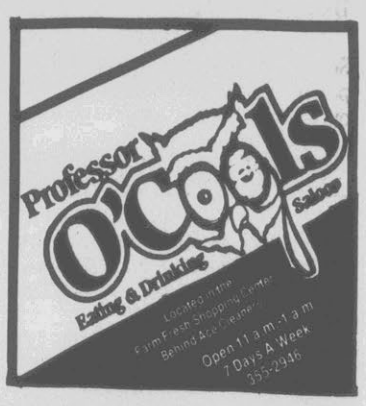
Bush, in a luncheon speech to Ducks Unlimited, a hunters' conservation group, said that on Monday he will unveil "the most sweeping changes to the Clean Air Act since it was last amended 12 years ago."

"It will significantly improve every North American's quality of life," said the president.

He said preventing pollution is far more efficient "than struggling to deal with problems once they've occurred."

"For too long, we've focused on cleanup and penalties after the damage is done," he said. "In the 1990s, pollution prevention will go right to the source."

At the Capitol, Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell, D-Maine, said Bush already "deserves credit" for paying attention to the environment.



Polls Show Tight Race In Virginia

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RICHMOND, Va. — Three polls released in the final week of the high-stakes Republican gubernatorial primary in Virginia show former Sen. Paul S. Trible Jr. in a tight race with two rivals.

The candidates have raised $9.8 million for Tuesday's primary, the first held by the state GOP in 40 years.

That matches the entire budget for both sides of the 1985 governor's race, won by Democrat Gerald L. Baliles, who by law cannot run for a second term.

A Mason-Dixon Opinion Research Inc. poll Thursday of 800 probable voters showed Trible with 31 percent support to 30 percent for former Attorney General J. Marshall Coleman and 27 percent for 8th District Rep. Stanford E. Parris.

On Wednesday, a Washington Post poll showed Trible and Coleman dead even — 31 percent each among 602 likely voters — with Parris trailing at 24 percent.

Trible previously was the frontrunner in the race and earlier polls showed that he alone would be favored in a head-to-head contest with the Democratic contender, Lt. Gov. L. Douglas Wilder, who would be the nation's first elected black governor.

The third poll, released Wednesday by state House Minority Leader Raymond R. "Andy" Guest Jr., who earlier dropped out of the race, questioned that assessment.

It showed Trible leading Wilder 49 percent to 42 percent, Coleman leading Wilder 46 percent to 43 percent, and Parris leading Wilder 45 percent to 42 percent.

The poll did not evaluate the three candidates against each other.

Man Pledges College For 57 Poorer Kids

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ATLANTA — Fifty-seven inner-city children got a surprising elementary school graduation gift: a guarantee of college if they finish high school.

Atlanta businessman John H. McDonald made the pledge at the Minnie Howell Elementary School graduation Thursday night.

In addition to the money involved, the children will get guidance both in and out of the classroom, said Llewellyn Haden Jr., founder of the Atlanta chapter of the I Have A Dream program.

"We want them to have a shot at life like others who have been more fortunate," McDonald said.

He would not disclose how much money was involved in the program, but Haden said money is not the problem in sending the youngsters to college.

Thousands of dollars in national scholarships for inner-city, black youths go unused each year, Haden said, and some of that money can be used to supplement McDonald's sponsorship.

What really counts is opening the horizons for children whose surroundings of poverty and crime often discourage success, Haden said.

Deng Xiaoping Appears To Praise Army Actions

By Jim Abrams
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BEIJING — China's senior leader Deng Xiaoping today appeared in public for the first time in more than three weeks and praised the military for crushing the student demonstrations for democracy.

The speech was televised nationally, as were scenes from demonstrations in several provincial cities, where there were reports that dissidents and supporters of the pro-democracy movement were being arrested.

In Washington, President Bush said Thursday the United States "can't have totally normal relations" with China until its government recognizes the rights of the students who led the demonstrations. But Bush, in a televised news conference, rejected suggestions he impose more sanctions on China.

Deng praised the suppression of the pro-democracy movement in an address to officers of the People's Liberation Army. He thanked them for their actions, which resulted in the deaths of hundreds if not thousands of Beijing residents.

Deng said the people behind the democratic movement wanted to "overthrow communism and do away with the socialist system and the People's Republic of China and establish a capitalist republic."

He said, "Facing a life-threatening situation, our troops never forgot the people, never forgot the party, never forgot the country's interest."

Chinese Red Cross officials estimate 3,600 people were killed and 60,000 injured in the assault, according to a Chinese group in West Germany, the Union of Chinese Students in the Federal Republic. The government says 300 people, mostly soldiers, were killed; Chinese and diplomats say up to 3,000 died.

Deng had not been seen in public since he met Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev on May 16. There have been numerous rumors in recent weeks that Deng was dead or critically ill.

On his right was conservative Premier Li Peng, who declared martial law in Beijing on May 20. On Thursday, Li also praised the soldiers' action in a speech. It was the first appearance by a high government official in two weeks, indicating China's hard-line leaders were gaining control of the situation.

Others listening to Deng's speech included President Yang Shangkun, believed a major figure in ordering the troops into Beijing; former President Li Xiannian and former Politburo member Bo Yi Bo; and former National People's Congress Chairman Peng Zhen. Like Deng, all are in their 80's.

Conspicuously absent was Communist Party General Secretary Zhao Ziyang, who was reportedly stripped of power by Deng after opposing the military crackdown on the students, who were demanding democratic reforms, such as freedom of the press, and an end to official corruption.

Qiao Shi, a Politburo Standing Committee member and a top candidate to replace Zhao, was present, as was Vice Premier Yao Yilin, a conservative economist and Wan Li, current National People's Congress chief.

The television also showed Deng and the others shaking hands with troops inside the Great Hall of the People.

Deng's appearance with the other hardliners gave an impression of party unity as the military extended its control over the capital and police in other large cities began rounding up participants in large-scale disturbances that have occurred since the attack on Beijing on June 3 and 4.

National television showed what appeared to be burned out, smoldering blocks in Chengdu, the capital of Sichuan province. Violent demonstrations broke out in Chengdu following the weekend crackdown in Beijing. Scenes of protest were shown in several other major cities including Shanghai, Changsha, Wuhan and Harbin.

The television showed dozens of people being arrested for alleged destructive acts during the protests.

In Shanghai today, 50,000 students and others gathered in a central square to mourn the deaths of six people who were killed earlier this week when a train crashed through a barricade set up on railway tracks.

A Chinese source said police had begun making arrests at night in at least one apartment complex. The government has reported only arrests of people allegedly caught trying to set fire to buses or engaged in other violence.

"We know they're picking people up all over the place," said one Western diplomat. "Don't let people tell you things are calming down. They're not."

In Beijing, gas stations opened and food was more plentiful in markets. City buses rolled past the tanks on Tiananmen Square for the first time since the military crackdown began in the vast square June 3. There were no reports of soldiers firing on crowds.

More than a dozen tanks and hundreds of armored personnel carriers could be seen on the square, which has been turned into a vast military encampment since the army ousted student protesters with gunfire.

Concern that factional fighting between rival military groups might turn Beijing into a killing field abated as troops from various armies took up stations inside the city without major conflicts.

Those fears prompted an exodus of foreigners from the capital, with most embassies ordering out all dependents and non-essential staff and many arranging special flights out.

The U.S. Embassy said registered Americans in China had dropped from 8,800 before the military crackdown to less than 5,000. Less than 400 Americans were in Beijing, down from 1,500.

Tanks, Guards, Soldiers Replace Freedom Posters

By John Pomfret
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BEIJING — Gone from Tiananmen Square are the pro-democracy banners and the tents of China's freedom movement, replaced by tanks, armed guards and the chants of drilling soldiers.

The army on Thursday allowed the people of Beijing their first glance of the 100-acre expanse since the military swept into the capital six days ago, leaving hundreds dead and crushing a movement for political change.

Troops moved back their barricades, making it possible for city residents to walk to the edge of the square, which for seven weeks stood at the heart of the movement. Buses and bicyclists today were allowed to pass by Changan Avenue, which borders the north edge of the square.

The spot once occupied by the Goddess of Democracy, a 33-foot-high replica of the Statue of Liberty, was taken by a tread-wheeled armored personnel carrier. When students built the statue last week, for a few days it became a symbol of the movement for democratic reforms and an end to official corruption. On Sunday morning, a tank crushed it.

In all, 80 tanks and 40 armored personnel carriers lined the northern part of the square.

The Monument to Revolutionary Martyrs, where the students took a final stand early Sunday, was swept clean. Poems and posters calling for a more open China have disappeared from its sides.

Chinese Red Cross officials estimate 3,600 people were killed and 60,000 injured over the weekend, citing a Chinese students' organization, the Union of Chinese Students in West Germany. The government says nearly 300 people, mostly soldiers, were killed; diplomats and Chinese say up to 3,000 died.

Soldiers drilled in Tiananmen's center, their cadenced shouting echoing around the vast expanse. A crowd of officials stood on the roof of the Great Hall of the People, overlooking the square. From this same roof five days earlier officials watched as a jubilant mass of demonstrators enveloped 5,000 troops and blocked their entry to the square.

Inside the square, soldiers could be seen shuffling about, their uniformed jackets stripped off, wash basins in hand. There was a relaxed air of the inside of an army barracks as unarmed troops carried food and walked slowly together, talking and laughing in groups.

The area once housing students' tents has become a holding area for a huge fleet of troop trucks.

On the southern perimeter, a single line of tanks and a cordon of soldiers blocked the square from the thousands of bicylists who pedaled slowly by, peering into Tiananmen.

Near the square, troops placed barbed wire in front of one street. Soldiers were billeted in a construction site, their laundered fatigues drying on the scaffolding. Next door, troops, their assault rifles slung nonchalantly over their shoulders, stood and chatted outside a discotheque.

"They look like they are settling in," said one local resident. "I hope they know that we still don't want them here."

VOA Becomes Main Source Of Hard News For Chinese

LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — Inside the blue studio Anita K. Tong and Dah H. Lin read over the news script written in bold black Mandarin characters, eyeballed the wall clock and waited for the signal to start.

Then, after a few bars of "Yankee Doodle Dandy," they spiritedly read news summaries slugged "China unrest," "China-U.S. Evacuation" and "Hong Kong-China" to an audience estimated at 200 million people and growing by the hour.

Part of the Voice of America team now acknowledged as the main source of information for the Chinese about the ongoing crisis in China, Lin and Tong are radio veterans, sharing 42 years as American government broadcasters. On the air they are smooth, unruffled and focused. But inside their office cubbyholes, where the teapot is plugged in, the fan mail stacked up and scenes of family and geography give China a fond immediacy, the conversations illustrate their individual distress and sadness, and the tangled threads between their professional duties and their personal lives.

"It's been terrible," says Tong, a four student volunteers to the native of Beijing. "It is really inhumane to kill innocent students. They are only asking for freedom. ... We are all angry, sad and hopeless because we don't know how to help. Now the news is so black. We don't know what is going on." She says she worried about her sisters and brothers in China all weekend.

Lin, who admits to 57 says he, too, tries to keep his emotions in check on the air. But he says it's not easy. "I watched television when the tanks crushed the people. I just feared the worst. And I cried and shook," he said. His emotions, he says, are still churning.

Since Saturday the Chinese branch of VOA has been broadcasting 11 hours of news in Mandarin each day, up from 8½. It also has a daily 30-minute broadcast in Cantonese. Most of the staff has been working 10- to 12-hour shifts. The turmoil in China caught the Chinese section with no staff to spare.

In recent years it has lost highly trained specialists to better-paying jobs and because of budget tightening hasn't filled many slots. The branch has 41 full-time employees, most of whom are Chinese Americans and speak fluent Chinese. In the last few days they have assigned bureau's three shifts; they plan to hire six contract employees immediately and are trying to hire 15 permanent staff people.

For years the VOA, the worldwide radio network of the U.S. Information Agency, has had a loyal following in China and, according to Carlson, "during the darkest months of the Cultural Revolution there was a saying: 'The only school that is opened is the VOA.' " Its three correspondents in Beijing since October 1981 have become household names. The British Broadcasting System is also heard in China, using a powerful signal from Hong Kong, but it airs only two hours a day.

"Chinese media people tell us that there are Chinese government studies that give us a daily audience of 60 to 100 million. We have telephone calls that tell us that now with the agitation ... we have between 300 and 400 million a day. We have reports from every city that all shortwave radios are sold out of all stores. We have reports that they are playing our reports over loudspeakers at the universities," says Hess. "The only other media more pervasive is rumor. It is inaccurate, it's wild and it's emotionally agitated."

Students Have Own Network

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEWTON, Mass. — After 36 hours on and off the phone, Liu Yuan still snaps to attention when the telephone rings, its flashing red light a possible harbinger of news from Beijing.

For nearly a week, Liu and his friends at the 24-hour hot line in this Boston suburb have ferried information in and out of China on three phone lines and a borrowed fax machine, dodging a government blackout with the high-tech tools of the information age.

"We send the materials by fax machine and now we're finding out that's like a weapon," Liu said Thursday.

In China, the state-controlled media initially informed viewers that not one person had died in Tiananmen Square. But the government later said 300 people had died. The Chinese Red Cross said about 3,600 died in the violence.

Bit by bit, horrifying stories of bloodshed and bravery are being beamed across the world by computer, by fax and by phone.

"Networks are invisible. The only thing that will bring a halt to this is stopping the Chinese phone system," said Jessica Lipnack, a researcher with the Newton-based Networking Institute.

In a particularly defiant gesture, the Newton group sent newspaper articles by fax to a company managed by the son of Deng Xiaoping, Liu said. "We believe that people who work for that company ... they should hear the truth," he said.

"We just feel like that's a victory," he added, flashing a rare grin.

Military May Be Uniting As War Threat Subsides

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BEIJING — Despite scattered reports of skirmishes between soldiers, the threat appears to be fading that rival military factions would fight over the attack on demonstrators on Tiananmen Square.

The 27th Army sickened the citizens of Beijing with its bloody suppression of a pro-democracy movement. The weekend attack left hundreds and perhaps thousands of people dead in the city center.

Other units of the People's Liberation Army soon entered the capital to the cheers of the people, who believed the new soldiers had orders to crush the hated 27th, which had remained lodged in Tiananmen Square.

A military confrontation seemed imminent earlier this week with scattered reports of soldiers fighting soldiers inside Beijing and artillery fire.

Different units were said to be loyal to rival politicians, with the 27th supporting hard-line President Yang Shangkun and others favoring moderate leaders who opposed the crackdown.

In addition, the 27th Army's withering gunfire and tank advance not only killed civilians but also took its toll on soldiers from other military units that got in the way, according to a Western diplomat.

But the recent arrivals have not taken up positions of battle. Instead, they have brandished brooms to sweep the streets clean. They have chatted amiably with curious citizens.

The new forces were deployed to win propaganda points for the People's Liberation Army by providing "an acceptable face" to Beijing citizens, not to fight their fellow soldiers, one Western diplomat said.

The introduction of "friendly" troops clearly has helped pacify the Beijing residents, who no longer are gathering in the streets in large numbers to protest the weekend massacre.

The likelihood that some or all of the 27th Army have left Tiananmen Square without battling other troops also suggests units are not about to fight each other.

Tanks of the 27th Army that took up positions on strategic bridges leading downtown were formed not to defend against a rival military force but to deter a "people power" uprising, the diplomat said.

"One would like to think they were factionalized ... but there is no evidence," he said.

Other experts doubt that differences within the military over the imposition of martial law on Beijing to end the pro-democracy movement and the use of force against unarmed citizens will lead to major factional fighting.

"Probably, a majority of the army sympathizes with the students, but they won't shoot each other over it," said Harvey Jencks, a research associate at the University of California at Berkeley who is an expert on the Chinese military.

"The army has always opted for unity," Jencks said. "The instinct of most Chinese soldiers is to unite behind bad policy instead of breaking up."

The latest government policy is an intensified crackdown against the pro-democracy activists.

NOTICE OF SERVICE OF PROCESS BY PUBLICATION
IN RE:
KATHRYN IRENE MORRIS

To the unknown father of Kathryn Irene Morris:

TAKE NOTICE that a pleading seeking relief against you has been filed in the above entitled special proceeding. The nature of the relief being sought is as follows:

1. That the Court issue its order finding the Birth Certificate of Kathryn Irene Morris, as recorded in Volume 75, Page 130, of the Pitt County Public Registry, is erroneous, as the same inaccurately states the petitioner herein as the father of the minor respondent.
2. That the Court issue its order finding that the petitioner, Don C. Morris, is not the legal or natural father of said minor respondent;
3. That the Court issue its order pursuant to North Carolina General Statutes Section 130A-118(2) and/or North Carolina General Statutes Section 130A-118(3) directing the North Carolina State Registrar to delete the petitioner's name from said Birth Certificate and to issue a new Birth Certificate for said minor child.

You are required to make defense to such pleading not later than July 7, 1989, and upon your failure to do so, the party seeking service against you will apply to the Court for the relief sought.

Dying Man Has 'Last Hurrah'

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BOSTON — Elmer Elliott figures he's dying, but first he's going to live it up.

The 84-year-old, with weak hips, a bad heart and cancer, locked up his apartment at a home for the elderly in Rockport, Maine, and had an ambulance driver chauffeur him to Boston for his "Last Hurrah."

With six trunks and on money borrowed from a stepson, he's in Boston this week to savor the scallops at Anthony's Pier Four, buy a new vest at Brooks Brothers, hear Bo Winiker's Orchestra and wander the Boston Common one last time.

He also figures he's got enough time to dine at the Ritz Carlton, browse at The Old Corner Bookstore and take in a few shows.

Elliott made his plans after surviving a cancer operation last winter. He didn't think he'd survive it.

"So when I did ... I decided to do whatever I can — and this is it," the clear-eyed retired businessman said Thursday, kicking back a lunch-hour daiquiri.

"An appreciation of life is about the only reason I'm still here," he said. "People, music, literature, theater are what it's been about."

It's also been about world tours, including cruises in Antarctica, treks up Peru's Machu Picchu and leisurely dinners on Paris' Left Bank.

"Anyone with common sense would recommend careful living," he said. "But I've got no common sense."

No common sense, maybe, but he pays heed to style. His thick, silver hair has a straight part and his mustache is neatly trimmed. He wore a pressed handkerchief in his breast pocket and a snazzy silk tie.

"My stepson told me I had to cut out the hard living or I wouldn't be around much longer," he said. "That was 12 years ago."

Since then, he's criss-crossed the country, moving from Santa Barbara, Calif., to Philadelphia, where his stepson is a philosophy professor at Temple University.

He's been married four times, divorced twice and widowed twice. Elliott devoted his working days to negotiating missile contracts with the U.S. government but retired to the finer things.

Today he's inspired by a Joseph Campbell book on mythology he has just picked up at a bookshop.

"I'm curious and that's taken me a long way," Elliott said. "Some people are content to sit with worry beads ... but people, places and things are my hobby."
