Census Holds Answer To Shifts In U.S. House

By Donald M. Rothberg
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Armed with batteries of computers and brigades of lawyers, Republicans and Democrats are skirmishing for control of the political shakeup that offers the GOP its once-in-a-decade opportunity to dent Democratic control of Congress.

"If we want to be competitive in the House, we have to get a good shake on redistricting," said Charles Black, the political consultant who is chairman of the Republican National Committee's advisory committee on redistricting.

"Right now, given the strength of incumbency, there are only two times you get a chance to pick up any congressional seats," he said. "One is when the seats are open, and two is when you redraw the lines."

For Republicans, redistricting is a chance to break out of their depressing status as a seemingly permanent minority in the U.S. House.

Democrats control the House by a margin of 260 to 175. While voters in recent presidential elections have preferred Republican candidates by landslide margins, Democrats now hold 18 more House seats than they did when Ronald Reagan was inaugurated in 1981.

Democrats claim the capital's political split personality comes from voters' desire to have Congress act as a balance to GOP presidents. Republicans claim the split is rooted in the Democrats' drawing the lines for most current congressional districts.

Redistricting is the once-a-decade reshuffling of the nation's congressional districts. It is a three-pronged battle — technical, political, and legal.

Every 10 years, the U.S. Census counts everyone living in the country. This time, the day for the count is April 1, 1990.

For politicians, the most important Census information is not how many Americans there are, but where they live. For while the population increases, the size of the U.S. House remains at 435 voting members.

By Dec. 31, 1990, the Census Bureau will announce each state's population. And the bureau will reveal the reapportionment of the U.S. House — the number of representatives for each state, based on a complicated mathematical formula.

Then comes redistricting at the state level — redrawing the boundaries of congressional districts to fit the new population.

Gone are the days when cigar-chomping politicians matched up Census data with voting lists and redrew lines to help their friends and punish their enemies.

They're still helping their friends and punishing their enemies, but now the politicians do it with computers that produce highly sophisticated plans to do in a legislator with subtle shifts of city blocks.

But computers have little value to politicians who don't have the votes to get their plan adopted.

The two parties are considered on a par technologically, but the Democrats control 28 state legislatures, while Republicans have only 8. In 13 states Republicans control one legislative chamber and Democrats the other. Nebraska has a unicam-

Two ECU Officials Appointed

East Carolina University vice chancellors for health services and business affairs have been named by the University of North Carolina Board of Governors, which also approved planning for a new ECU master's program.

The governors named Richard Brown to be ECU vice chancellor for business affairs. He is a certified public accountant and has been the associate vice president for Campus Finance and Management at the State University of New York at Stony Brook.

Brown, 41, succeeds C.G. Moore who is retiring at the end of June.

Dr. Alastair McCrae Connell was appointed to the position of vice chancellor for health sciences and professor of internal medicine. Connell is director of health ethics at the Medical College of Virginia, Virginia Commonwealth University in Richmond, Va.

Connell succeeds Dr. William Laupus, who is leaving his administrative position but will remain with the ECU School of Medicine as a professor of pediatrics and preventive medicine and public health policy.

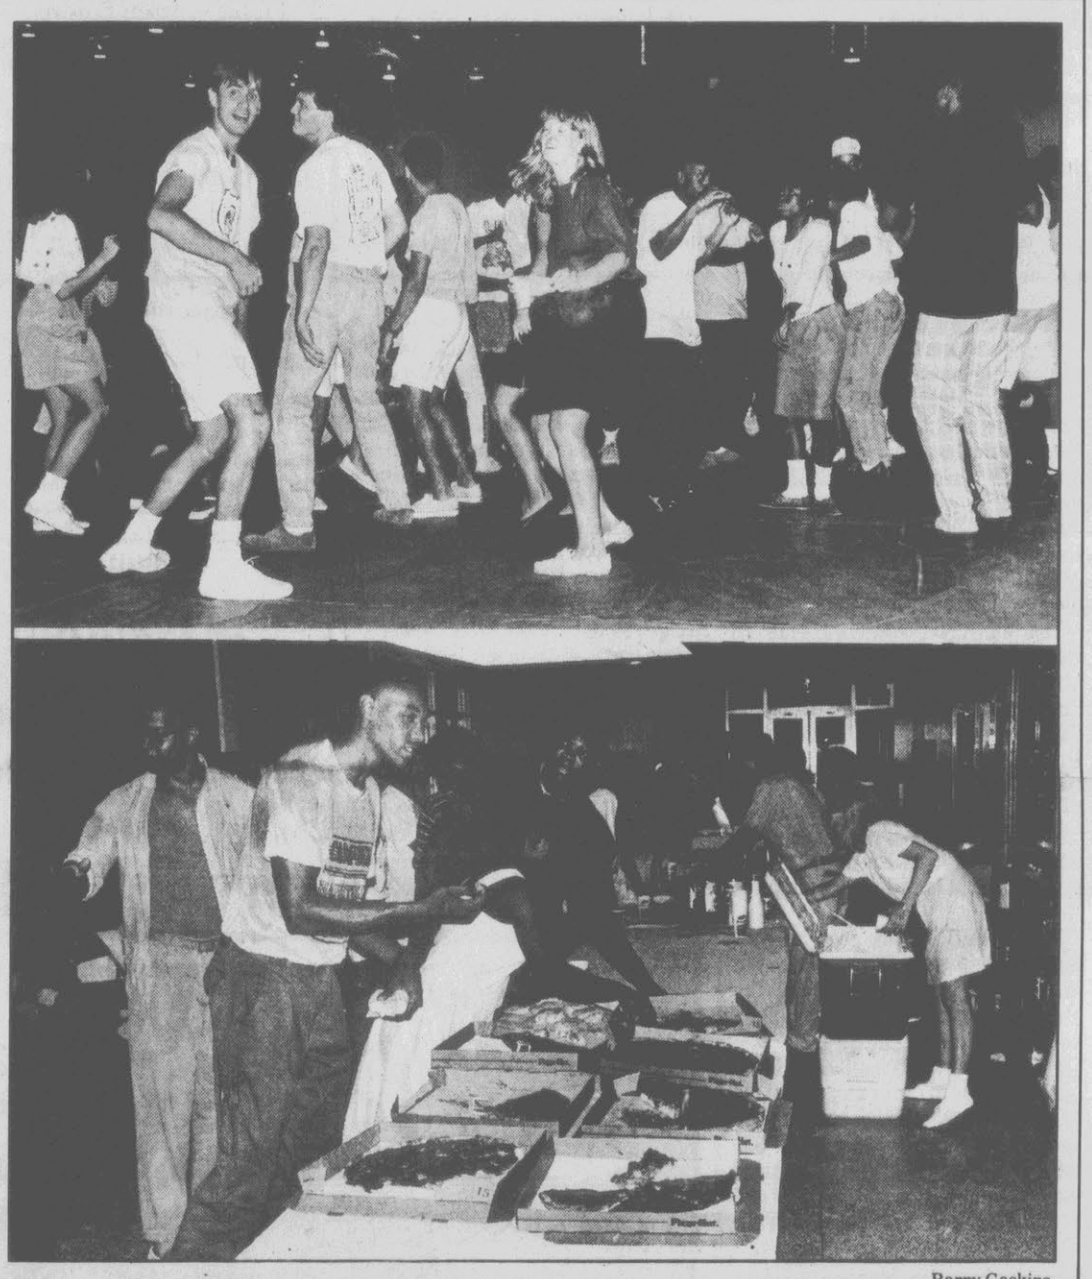

Both appointments are effective July 1.

In other action, the UNC board approved the planning for a master's degree program in physical therapy at ECU.

The two new vice chancellor appointments culminate a year-long process that included a national search to fill the positions.

Brown is a graduate of the State University of New York at Binghamton. He received a bachelor's degree in accounting in 1970 and graduated

Soviets To Trim Top-Level Posts

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOSCOW — Premier Nikolai I. Ryzhkov on Saturday announced plans to abolish 18 state agencies, slash the number of Cabinet posts, and surrender some power to the republics in the biggest government overhaul of the Gorbachev era.

President Mikhail S. Gorbachev has been streamlining and decentralizing the Soviet bureaucracy because he blames it for impeding his economic reforms.

The Cabinet, or Council of Ministers — which Ryzhkov heads — has been widely accused of ruining the economy and slowing the changes.

Speaking to a joint session of the nation's new two-chamber legislature, the Supreme Soviet, Ryzhkov said of the 100 Cabinet members appointed in 1984, only 10 will remain.

He also told the session, broadcast live on state-run radio and television, that of the 50 key ministries overseeing industries, construction, transport, agriculture and defense, only 32 would remain.

One of those eliminated will be the Ministry of Light Industry, which oversees production of chronically scarce consumer goods.

Ryzhkov, a 59-year-old technocrat re-elected premier on Wednesday, said the remaining ministries in Moscow would abandon day-to-day management of the country's industries and focus instead on long-range planning as well as scientific and technological work.

Gorbachev, who came to power in 1985, has said his goal is to rid Soviet society of a half-century of top-

Court Spillover Goes To Farmville

By John Bare
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Heavy caseloads on criminal and civil dockets have forced Pitt court officials to move a session of Superior Court to Farmville this week.

It will be the first time Superior Court has ever been held in Farmville, according to trial court administrator Bill Nicholls. David E. Reid Jr. of Greenville, Pitt's resident Superior Court judge, will preside over the court.

With a criminal term of Superior Court, a civil term of District Cort and two criminal District Courts in session, the four courtrooms in the Pitt County Courthouse will be occupied this week, Nicholls said. There also will be a one-day term of Juvenile Court on Tuesday.

The civil session of Superior Court was originally scheduled for Greenville, he said, but when the district landed a special term of criminal court to help ease the caseload, the civil term was moved to Farmville.

With criminal defendants having to be brought up from the jail, it would have been more difficult to

Hearing Set Thursday On Plans To Safeguard Tar And Pamlico

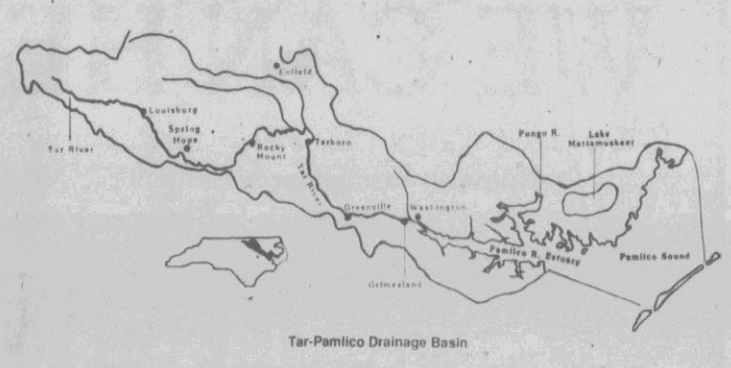

By J. Ward Best
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

The Tar River and the surrounding lands have supported human life for more than 10,000 years. But the chemicals seeping, raining and spilling into the Tar and Pamlico rivers are destroying the productivity of the waters and surrounding river basin, according to state environmental studies.

The state Division of Environmental Management Thursday night will present its management plan for the basin of the Tar and Pamlico rivers, and recommend classifying the area as nutrient sensitive waters. The agency will take public comment on the classification during a public hearing at 7 p.m. in Jenkins Auditorium at East Carolina University.

But a scientist with the North Carolina Environmental Defense Fund says the agency's recommendations, which are aimed at capping the levels of damaging nutrients that go into the rivers, don't go far enough. "We've already got a problem," said Douglas Rader, senior scientist with EDF. "The status quo is not acceptable, period."

The nutrient sensitive waters classification restricts to present levels the concentration of nitrogen and phosphorous, two chemicals believed responsible by some for excessive algae growth and subsequent fish kills in the Tar and Pamlico. Once the rivers come under that classification, DEM then plans to study the amounts and impacts of the chemicals and methods of reduction. The proposed limits may be strengthened in 1992 to seek specific reductions in the chemical levels.

Tar-Pamlico Drainage Basin

But the EDF also plans to make a few recommendations at the public hearing, Rader said — including a suggestion for immediate and stronger action.

The nutrient sensitive designation would impact farmers and city governments in nearly 4,500 square miles and 17 counties in the Tar and Pamlico rivers' basin. Eventually, it would make municipal and industrial waste disposal more expensive. With no immediate plans to expand its present system, Greenville could be hardest hit by the proposals.

Treatment plants, identified as point sources of nitrogen and phosphorous into the rivers, would have to begin nitrogen reduction plans for new or expanded sewage treatment plants. Existing plants are exempted, but proposed new treatment plants would be controlled by stricter regulations.

The recommendations encourage stricter limits on identified non-point sources, such as farmland and cropland runoff.

Rader says the proposed DEM recommendations will not reduce or hold the present nutrient levels as the agency claims. "Actually, we're going to be losing ground," he said. Unidentified sources of nitrogen and phosphorous loading, such as air pollutants, greatly increase nutrient levels, according to Rader.

Airborne pollutants, especially ammonia, greatly increase nitrogen levels in the water, said Rader. And the projected increases in aerial loading will more than offset the potential gains.

David B. Williams, an environmental engineer with the water quality planning branch of DEM, agreed that aerial nitrogen loading in the rivers would increase over the time of the study. But he said classification of the Chowan River in 1979 as nutrient sensitive and implementing similar restrictions achieved a nearly 30 percent reduction in the nitrogen levels of the Chowan. The agency set a goal of reducing nutrients in the Chowan River by 35 to 40 percent when the classification was accepted.

The Neuse River basin was also classified nutrient sensitive in 1988. Williams said the classification has not been in effect long enough to show any results.

"You have to have a little bit of time to have those people to change

Satellite Launched On Sixth Attempt

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — A high-tech navigation satellite designed to tell U.S. and allied military forces where they are within 50 feet anywhere on the globe — on land, sea or in the air — rocketed into orbit Saturday.

The three-stage Delta 2 rocket finally made it on the sixth launch attempt. Bad weather wiped out four tries, and the fifth was aborted at the last second when an engine valve failed to open. The valve was replaced.

The Delta 2 blasted off its launch pad right on schedule at 6:30 p.m. and left a fiery trail in a clear sky as it darted over the Atlantic Ocean.

The Air Force reported that the 12-story-tall rocket had performed flawlessly in launching the Navstar satellite into an initial elliptical orbit ranging from about 100 to 11,000 miles above the Earth.

"We had normal spacecraft separation. Everything appears to have gone extremely well with today's launch," said Lt. Col. Ron Rand, the Air Force launch commentator.

On Tuesday, an on-board motor is to fire to shift the satellite into a circular orbit about 11,000 miles up.

The $30 million rocket carried a $65 million Navstar Global Positioning System satellite.

Paper Says Six Hostages In Iran

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LONDON — The Observer newspaper, quoting unidentified sources, reported Sunday that six Western hostages in Lebanon — five Americans and one Briton — have been moved to Iran to ensure their safety.

The weekly identified none of the Americans but said the Briton was television journalist John McCarthy. Quoting unidentified sources in Beirut, Damascus and Tehran, it said McCarthy and two of the Americans were disguised as injured Lebanese, transferred to the Syrian capital May 24 and flown to Tehran.

The newspaper said three of the seven other Americans abducted by Iran-backed Moslem extremists since 1985 were moved to Iran on May 29.

The Observer quoted the sources as saying Iran's interior minister, Ali Akbar Mohtashami, decided to move the hostages after intensified fighting between Moslems and Christians since March that has left hundreds of people dead. The newspaper said Mohtashami "has powerful leverage with Lebanese kidnap gangs."

McCarthy, 32, was snatched by gunmen as he headed to Beirut Airport after five weeks on a Middle East assignment for London-based Worldwide Television News. The abduction took place two days after the U.S. bombing raid on Libya. No group claimed responsibility.

Altogether 15 Westerners, including nine Americans, are believed held by pro-Iranian Shiite Moslem extremists in Lebanon. The longest-held is Terry Anderson, chief Middle East correspondent for The Associated Press, kidnapped March 16, 1985.

Soviets Trim Jobs

heavy, bureaucratic management "by command" epitomized by dictator Josef V. Stalin.

In earlier phases of Gorbachev's program, ministry staffs were cut by thousands, and several ministries were consolidated into a superagency for agriculture.

In March, however, the leadership decided to abolish the superagency, which was blamed for mismanagement of food production and distribution that has left some grocery shelves bare.

Ryzhkov said some economic management functions will be transferred to the 15 Soviet republics, many of which are campaigning for greater control over their affairs.

He mentioned specifically that the ministry of Construction Materials would be abolished and that republics would control building supplies. Several lawmakers have complained that shortages of construction materials cause long delays in projects.

Despite the proposed reductions, two committees will be formed — one to handle natural and manmade disasters and another to plan economic reforms. Leonid Abalkin, a prominent economist, will handle the economic panel.

The government ministries were frequently criticized during 13 days of debate by the new Soviet Congress of People's Deputies, which ended its session Friday.

At one point, Deputy Anatoly Miloserdov of Byelorussia blamed the Cabinet for short-sightedness that he said led to "the disappearance from sale of the most basic consumer goods."

Gorbachev urged deputies to grill ministers on why they are dragging their feet on reforms. He acknowledged complaints that the agencies "are restructuring very slowly, if at all."

"We have to find out what is wrong," he said.

The Soviet Union suffers from a budget deficit projected to reach $162 billion this year, inflation estimated last year at 8 percent to 9 percent, and poverty that affects millions of people.

Ryzhkov on Saturday announced nominees for the 10 Cabinet posts that will remain. Supreme Soviet committees are scheduled to hold confirmation hearings beginning June 19.

Among those nominated to remain in their posts are KGB secret police chairman Vladimir A. Kryuchkov and Defense Minister Dmitri T. Yazov.

The full Supreme Soviet is to reconvene June 26 to vote on the nominations and then draft legislation in a session that will last a month and 10 days, Vice President Anatoly I. Lukyanov announced.

In other work Saturday, the Supreme Soviet named heads of 14 committees to oversee such areas as state security, law enforcement and farming in addition to economic reform.

Communist maverick Boris N. Yeltsin was named head of a committee on construction and architecture.

Reid was dating Blanche K. Taylor at the time of his death in October 1986.

Ms. Taylor, 56, is married to Dwight W. Moore, 54, a pastor at Carolina United Church of Christ near Hopedale. On Friday, Moore was listed in good condition at North Carolina Memorial Hospital after suffering from arsenic poisoning.

Greenville police Capt. R.M. Nichols said Ms. Small was arrested by Lake Mary police and Seminole County sheriff's officers about 3 p.m. Friday.

Carney was found dead at his home on the night of June 3. Police said his throat had been cut.

Detective J.E. Nichols said earlier last week that a warrant had been issued for Ms. Small, whose last known address was Kimberly Avenue, New Haven, Conn. But he said the woman had been at various places in North Carolina for the past five months and had been visiting relatives in Greenville.

"She knew him and he knew her," the detective said.

Capt. Nichols said Greenville investigators would be sent to Florida over the weekend to interview Ms. Small, but he said he did not know when the woman would be returned to North Carolina.

"If she waives extradition," the officer said, Ms. Small could be returned early this week. However, if she does not agree to return voluntarily, it could be several weeks before Ms. Small is returned to Greenville.

Nichols said investigators believe robbery was the motive for the killing and estimated that "around $1,000" was taken from Carney's home after he was killed.

North Pitt High Wins Use Of Computer System For Ninth Grade Science Classes

By Cherie Evans
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

North Pitt High School has been awarded computers and software with a total value of $91,325 from Apple Computer Inc. for the school's ninth grade science program.

Connie S. Bright, a science teacher at the school, submitted a grant proposal, "A Model for Science Classrooms," to the Apple Education Grants' Equal Time program. She recently was notified that the school is one of 20 in the nation chosen from among 2,000 to receive the equipment this summer.

The computers integrated in the science courses are intended to help ninth graders become more interested in the subject and more interested in staying in school, Mrs. Bright said.

"We lose so many students each year in the ninth grade," she said. "Ninth graders have the highest drop-out rate and comprise 34 percent of the school's student population."

The project addresses the students at risk for dropping out of school who need extra stimulation to stay in school and to maintain an interest in science, Mrs. Bright said.

The ninth-grade physical science classes were targeted for the grant because they have the highest drop-out rate in the school and the greatest need for the extra incentive, she said.

Schools have not changed much in 45 years, Ms. Bright said. "Most students state that the schools do not meet their needs and, therefore, they drop out.

"They need to develop positive self images so that they will be motivated to be successful in school. Ninth graders fail physical science at an alarming rate because they have not been taught to understand the many abstract concepts in the state curriculum guidelines," she said.

Having individual computers for the students, as the grant provides, will help the students learn by doing, Mrs. Bright said.

"This grant would give all my students an opportunity to become proficient at data gathering, experimenting and hypothesizing," she said.

The success of the proposal will be determined by the rate of ninth graders who stay in school as compared to previous years' rates. Also, the number of students who pass their ninth grade science course as compared to those who passed in previous years would denote the success of the project. These same students will be tracked and, in the third year, data will be gathered to determine if the use of computers in the classroom has encouraged students to register for a third year of science by choosing science as an elective.

The students in Mrs. Bright's class also will be compared with other science students taking the course with different teachers, and they will be given a test that will monitor changes in their attitudes from the beginning and the end of the year.

According to the grant agreement, the project will be completed in September 1991 with a final report being made to Education Grants. The agreement says that "upon determination by Education Grants that the project has been satisfactorily completed, Education Grants shall waive its right to recover the equipment, and title to the equipment shall thereupon pass to the grantee."

The grant provides 21 computers in addition to keyboards, modems, software, disks, cartridges and other related equipment.

Applying for the grant was a group effort, Mrs. Bright said. Teachers throughout the school added their expertise in putting the proposal together.

To make the project a success, various teachers and administrators at North Pitt will be involved in addition to parents, East Carolina University, the state Department of Instruction and the Microage company in Greenville.

Pitt Graduates Receive Diplomas, Look To Future

By Cherie Evans
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Pitt County schools have graduated more than 1,000 seniors in commencement exercises across the county.

Dressed in caps and gowns, the graduates Friday night turned their tassels symbolizing the end of their childhood and adolescent years and the beginning of all the challenges and opportunities that lie ahead.

Student speakers reminisced with their peers about their high school days and showed signs of maturity as they encouraged them toward their future endeavors.

Paralleling her comments to the list of the do's and don'ts of classroom behavior often featured prominently in schools, the salutatorian of North Pitt High School created her own list for her classmates to live by.

"Remember to thank God often for your physical and mental health, your family, friends, opportunities, accomplishments and freedom," Sandy Andrews said.

"Do not forget one of the largest and greatest groups of loving and loyal friends you will ever have, the members of this graduating class," she said.

Miss Andrews also advised her classmates to remember to express their love and appreciation often to their parents and other family members; to accept and work with the limitations of others; to not blame others for their faults; to never cease educating themselves, and to never shirk their responsibilities as citizens of the United States.

North Pitt's valedictorian talked about the school pride that was instilled this year through several activities. Jeffrey Bell also encouraged his classmates to "make our alma mater and its future students proud of us."

"Let's be determined to try even harder than we have tried in the past to show ourselves and others what we are really capable of," he said. "Let's not always settle for the easy way, but instead let's insist on the best way. Let's not give up when obstacles come our way, but instead let's find ways to surmount them and come away from them with memories of victory, not defeat."

Speakers at Farmville Central High School gave their classmates the formula for success and reminded them to show their appreciation for those who have motivated them.

"The only way to measure your success is to evaluate yourself and to consider all aspects of your life," said Allen Lewis.

"Seniors, it is about time to begin evaluating yourselves," he said. "Your best years are ahead of you. We have been taught well, and we should strive to make those who have shaped and molded us proud. But more importantly, you must make yourself proud and then, hopefully, everyone else will join you in the way you feel about yourself."

After thanking those who contributed to the development of the students at Farmville Central, Monique Bembrey said, "we will and we must prove to the world that we are able to support our belief that Farmville Central has produced a group of students who are willing, who are able and who are determined to take their places in a world of progress."

Lisa Brewer helps Johnny Wynne of North Pitt High School get ready for graduation

Neosha Hough of J.H. Rose High School told classmates they have experienced the unity of an education.

"When we first started school, education was primarily to form basic skills and discipline," she said. "All the while we were developing our individual special talents, learning how to communicate better, and beginning to express ourselves in many different ways."

Receiving an education is a long and continuous process, Miss Hough said. "The diploma we receive tonight is a measure of our efforts and the support of others, but it soon becomes history as we strive forward in our lives."

Kia Hardy told the Rose graduates that graduation is a milestone that begins their future.

"During our lives, there will be many people, places and circumstances that will tell us we can't, but we have to know within ourselves that we can," she said. "If we conceive it, and if we can believe it, we can achieve it."

She encouraged her peers to set goals that are purposeful, useful and realistic.

Speakers at Ayden-Grifton High School spoke to their classmates about time — "Time Is" and "Time Was."

Jessalyn Woods cautioned her peers to use time correctly and to take advantage of it.

"Time is priceless," she said. "It cannot be measured; it cannot be bought; nor can it be purchased with a bribe. Time is gained by individuals who make things happen."

She also told them that time is essential, producing, rewarding and impatient.

"We can do what we want with time, but the key lies within us. Take advantage of it," Miss Woods said.

Cheri Groet talked about how time was through the many events that influenced the graduates during high school — the efforts of the spacecrafts Discovery, Voyager 2 and Challenger, the approval of a drug to prolong the live of AIDS patients, the rescue of a girl from an abandoned well.

"What time was gives meaning to an individual depending upon the obstacles and events encountered in the process of growing up," she said.

"I ask each of you to hold on to your high school memories we have shared together, always remembering time was may be in the past, but it will continue to affect our lives as to what time will be. Our hearts will always say time was one of the memorable parts of us."

Cameron Cox III described the different steps students at D.H. Conley High School climbed to reach their graduation.

"At this point, we will decide whether we will quit the climb, or if we will climb to newer heights," he said. "People say that we are the future. We say we are the present. What we make of our lives, the number of steps we climb — that determines whether we will be the future. Each of us has the opportunity to climb higher."

Shannon O'Geary schooled her classmates on how to make the best choices in their lives.

"I have found that the best choice is the choice that we find within ourselves," she said. "When we come to accept ourselves and learn how to make our decisions by drawing from within ourselves, then others around us will respect us regardless of the choices we make."

Miss O'Geary also made some wishes for her classmates.

"First, I wish you all the happiness in the world. I hope you experience more happiness that you ever dreamed possible," she said. "Secondly, I wish you success, your own individual definition of success, whether it be money, family, you job or love.

"And finally, I wish you love," Miss O'Geary said. "Love is extremely important, and it makes life worth living. And remember, it is always best to go through life holding hands."

Students Protest Tuition Hike Plan

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — Student representatives are crying foul over proposals to boost tuition in the University of North Carolina system by as much as 20 percent, but a legislative leader says everyone must sacrifice in a lean budget year.

"We are not being asked to pay our fair share of improved facilities and services; we are being treated as a cash cow by some members of the General Assembly," Brien Lewis, UNC-Chapel Hill student body president, said at a news conference outside the Legislative Building.

"The bottom line is that before we begin balancing the budget on the backs of North Carolina residents attending public universities, other sources of revenue need to be explored," said Brooks Raiford, president of the N.C. State University Student Senate.

The Education Subcommittee of the House Appropriations Committee has recommended boosting UNC tuition by 20 percent for North Carolina residents and 15 percent for out-of-state residents. The increases would add $19.9 million to the tight 1989-90 budget.

The Senate's education budget subcommittee proposed an 8.5 percent tuition increase for all UNC students, which would raise $10.2 million next year. The UNC Board of Governors recommends an 8.5 percent increase for out-of-state students and no increase for North Carolina residents.

Greenville Doctor Expresses Shock Over Killings In His Native China

By Carol Tyer
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Greenville resident T.K. Lee says he was horrified June 3 as he watched a television screen showing soldiers firing on students in Beijing's Tiananmen Square.

"I knew things were bad in China," he said, "that there has been for many years terrible political and economic repression and so much corruption among government officials. But never in the 40-year history of the People's Army have soldiers fired on civilians. I never dreamed it would happen. I was and I am shocked."

Lee, 55, is a research assistant professor in the radiation oncology department of the East Carolina University School of Medicine. When he was interviewed Thursday, there were on his desk several copies of a Beijing newspaper, all describing the Tiananmen Square student protests at different stages prior to June 3. He expressed dismay as he talked of the events leading up to and during the last two weeks in his home country.

"Many thousands of Chinese people have been killed in various political conflicts over the past 40 years," he said, "more than the number killed during World War II, but never — never — have soldiers under orders done the killing. It makes me very sad that soldiers have been obliged to slaughter their own people."

Lee was born in Shanghai and was educated at Shanghai First Medical College, graduating in 1955. His own life is, in a sense, a parallel of the ups and downs of the 40 years of Communism in China. His career and his personal life, in many ways, have reflected the hardships that the Chinese people have endured because of political repression and upheaval during these four decades.

He remembers in his country times of great famine when millions of people died of starvation and causes related to food deprivation. "I know what it is like to be hungry," he said, "why a young girl would sell her body for a morsel of bread. People who have not been hungry cannot understand how desperate is that feeling."

The cultural revolution which started in 1966 he remembers as a time when productivity was virtually absent in China. "Schools were closed," he said. "Factories did not produce anything. Everybody had a salary, but nobody was doing anything and there was nothing to buy. It was a waste of human energy."

China is a country of class distinction, he said, for all the talk about "the People." "I was born into the group of people in China known there as the intetllectuals," he said. "Mao hated intellectuals."

From 1967-71 he lived in a prisoner-like situation in which he was forced to lay down his medical instruments and go to the country and perform tasks like shoveling manure — both livestock and human — for fertilizing the fields. "The idea was," he said, "that I should be re-educated, reborn, if you will, as a laborer. A laborer was, according to Mao, the most glorious state of man."

Once he was returned to the medical school in Henan Province where he spent most of his working years in China, he was still largely unproductive, he said. There was little equipment and no climate for true achievement in a scientific career. His great enthusiasm was in tumor pathology and he could do very little to practice it.

In the late '70s, after Mao's death, feeling toward intellectuals had eased enough that he was able to think of pursuing a fulfilling personal life.

"I began to think of getting married," he said. "And a lady who was a friend of my mine and a former classmate of my wife's mother introduced me to Yuan, who was 6 years younger than I and teaching music in Shanghai. We were married in 1974."

Their son, Hao, was born in 1975.

"From the time we were married I lived apart from my wife and son most or all of each year," he said. "While we were all in China, conditions were so bad in the area where I was teaching that I refused to take my wife and child there. I traveled the thousand miles to see them every vacation I had, but Americans cannot understand how poor conditions can make you unwilling to take your family into a difficult situation. I just knew that they were better off in Shanghai."

By 1980, conditions for intellectuals had improved enough that Lee was able to secure a fellowship for work-study at Bowman Gray Hospital in Winston Salem. He was not working in the pathology field there, he said, but the people in the school were appreciative of him and he was happy on all counts except that his wife and son were far away. His wife began applying for visas for herself and their son, but kept getting turned down.

It gradually became apparent that the only way she and Hao were going to be able to join Lee was for him to apply for permanent residence in the United States. He did so in 1984 and, in 1985, the family was reunited, after five years' separation, at the Greensboro Airport.

A few months later they moved to Greenville where Lee had been recruited to work — finally in his field — in the uninhibited pursuit of tumor pathology. He became a part of the faculty of the ECU School of Medicine.

"You hear that life begins at 40," he said. "For me, life began at 50. That's when I began to live for the first time with my wife and child and when I started to practice the work I love. Now my mother is with us here in Greenville, too, and I am so happy."

He said his happiness is tempered only by the sadness he feels when he thinks of the repression under which his brothers, engineers in China, still live. And when he thinks of his colleagues at the medical school in Henan still unable to do what they need to do to be accomplished in their fields. And when he thinks of the thousands killed over the years for having expressed the currently unpowerful political ideology.

"I am Chinese," he said. "I teach my son that he is Chinese. China is the country of our birth and I love it. But there is so much more opportunity here that I will be happy when, possibly by this December, I will be an American citizen.

"Even as I am content for myself, my wife, my son, my mother, I weep for my people, all the Chinese people, but especially those idealistic students demonstrating for democracy in Beijing.

"Do you know what Tien-An-Men means? It means Heavenly Harmony."

European Changes Noted

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LAKE JUNALUSKA, N.C. — Changes within the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe present "dire dangers" but also "great hope," said a former foreign service officer who spoke to the annual conference of western North Carolina Methodist Church on Saturday.

"A lid has been lifted and life is stirring," said Jack Perry, director of the Dean Rusk Program on International Studies at Davidson College. "There is a liberalization for the press and of religion, but no changes in law to ensure that it continues. Economic conditions are bad, and there is a resurgence of nationalism."

Perry spoke before more than 2,200 delegates to the conference. His remarks came following a recent trip to the Soviet Union.

A service was held Saturday to recognize and reaffirm 1,021 people who have joined the church this year.

The conference was scheduled to end Sunday following a sermon by Bishop Bevel Jones.

"(Soviet President and Communist Party leader Mikhail) Gorbachev is giving us the opportunity to turn to a new foreign policy agenda, mostly concerned with saving money for the poor and saving the planet's health," Perry said.

"That is what a Christian approach to foreign affairs should concern itself with," he said.

Court Bulging

move the criminal term out of town, he said.

"Because of the security measures, when we got the criminal Superior Court added, it's just a lot better for the week of (criminal) court to be here, rather than out in Farmville.

"That's a very, very nice courtroom facility, one of the nicest ones outside the county seat you'll see anywhere," Nicholls said.

Farmville's courtroom is part of the town's new municipal complex, which opened earlier this year. Currently, the courtroom is usually occupied a few days each month with a criminal session of District Court cases related to Farmville.

Despite the opening of the fourth courtroom in the main courthouse in Greenville last fall, space continues to be a problem.

Last month, motions for a hearing on a death penalty appeal were held in the law library in the courthouse. Also, Domestic Court and other proceedings are still held frequently in the City Council chambers in the City Hall building, located a few blocks from the courthouse.

"We are there (in City Hall) fairly often, basically because we've got more court than the four courtrooms in the courthouse can accommodate," Nicholls said.

The advantange of holding court in City Hall is that attorneys are near the main courthouse and can appear in other courts to dispose of cases. Once attorneys are 30 minutes away in Farmville, it is difficult for them to move back and forth to Greenville courts.

"We do what we can to keep it all down here. We use City Hall instead of going out there (to Farmville) with domestic cases for that reason," Nicholls said. "Having it centrally located makes for much greater efficiency."

However, when a civil trial involves a specific set of witnesses and attorneys, Nichols said it is better suited to the Farmville courtroom. Because the same participants are tied up with one case for several days, they usually do not appear in other courts.

Because of the overcrowding, he said the Farmville courtroom will be utilized more in the future for civil sessions. Chief District Judge E. Burt Aycock Jr. of Greenville is scheduled to preside over a wrongful death suit set for Farmville on Sept. 11.

Also, if a medical malpractice suit — which could take four weeks — goes to trial, it is set to be conducted in Farmville in late October, he said.

Fund Says Tougher Rules Needed For Tar

over," Williams said about the imposed regulations on point and non-point sources.

Rader contends Williams' own statements offer support for the EDF proposed recommendations.

The DEM proposals do not set any reduction goals for the Tar and Pamlico as the agency did for the Chowan and Neuse rivers. "It's the only one in the country purported to control nutrients that does not seek to reduce the amount of nutrients," Rader said. The former head of the Albemarle-Pamlico Estuaries Study said DEM should seek a minimum of 30 percent decrease in nitrogen loading from point and non-point sources.

Under the nutrient sensitive classification all farmers in the Tar River basin would automatically qualify for cost-share programs for best management practices. The best management practices include grass-filter strips to limit crop land and containment devices for animal waste runoff — two of the largest non-point sources of nitrogen loading.

Williams said, "It's a strong incentive because it helps (farmers) do a lot of things they want to do but can't afford to do."

Williams said DEM has adopted a "hold the line" policy on nutrient loading from waste water treatment plants.

"The impact of the nutrient control system is a downhill slide," Rader said about DEM's proposals.

"What we ought to be looking at is integrated control of both point and non-point sources of pollution," Rader said. "And we ought to be looking to the economic efficiencey in order to optimize pollution abatement."

Rader said the practice of setting limits and regulations is the wrong approach to guiding the program. Regulations only punish violators, and do not provide incentives any measures other than meeting the minimum requirements.

"Our pollution control is based on the stick instead of the carrot," Rader said.

Rader said EDF plans to recommend incentives for meeting its proposed goals during Thursday's meeting. The first and primary motivator for meeting those goals, Rader said, is money.

As more nitrogen is removed by waste water treatment plants it becomes more expensive and more difficult to remove the remaining nitrogen. By encouraging decreased nitrogen and phosphorous loading by all sources, taxpayers will save money through decreased funding for treatment plants and ecology reclamation measures. And by reducing farm runoff, streams and rivers will contain less choking silt and farmers will keep more of their fertile topsoil to work.

Along with the recommending reductions in nitrogen loading, Rader said EDF would also encourage further reductions in phosphorous, and means to reduce atmospheric loading of each chemical.

Rader also said the state needs to tighten controls on all 21 waste water treatment plants in the basin, and make the plants, not the state, responsible for reducing nitrogen in the system. Again, the proposed solutions would provide economic incentives to the state and municipalities to keep the cost of water treatment as low as possible.

Williams said DEM will accept comment on its recommendation to classify the Tar-Pamlico river basin at Thursday's meeting and will accept written comment on the proposal until July 15.

No Agreement Set On Bonner Bridge

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

A gathering of federal and North Carolina officials moved discussions closer to an agreement on how to curtail erosion threatening a bridge which spans Oregon Inlet and links Hatteras Island to the state's mainland.

"We agreed to some things, but there was no final agreement on how it would be settled," Fish and Wildlife Service spokesman John Oberheu said after the meeting in Atlanta Friday.

"There was a thorough discussion of the problem," Bill Jones, a spokesman for the N.C. Department of Transportation, said about the meeting with James Pulliam, regional director of the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service. "They are still working on it and will meet again next week."

Oberheu would not detail what was agreed to but said a settlement could be reached by the end of this week.

The state delegation was headed by Thomas Harrelson of the DOT. Also at the meeting were representatives of the National Parks Service and the Army Corps of Engineers.

For weeks, federal and North Carolina officials have been searching for a way to break an impasse over the erosion problem.

Last week, the state transportation department rejected a proposal by the Fish and Wildlife Service to build a seawall along N.C. 12 and pump sand on the northern end of Hatteras Island to protect the Herbert C. Bonner Bridge.

Before that, the federal agency rejected a state plan to build a rock seawall and small jetty to protect the bridge. The state Board of Transportation has already made $15 million available for the project.

The vulnerable northern end of the island has been receding about 180 feet a year since 1980. Now the ocean is threatening to cut the bridge off from N.C. 12.

March storms washed away about 200 acres of the island's tip, making the bridge more vulnerable in a major storm. Estimates have put its replacement cost at between $50 million to $60 million.

The land is part of the Pea Island National Wildlife Refuge and is managed by the Fish and Wildlife Service, an agency of the Department of Interior. The service would have to approve any plans and issue a permit before any work could begin.

Warring Factions Agree To Discuss NCAE Differences

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — Directors of North Carolina's largest teachers group, divided over the firing of its executive director, have agreed to try to resolve their differences at the group's next board meeting rather than in court.

The two camps of the 47,000-member North Carolina Association of Educators agreed Friday in Wake County Superior Court to delay further court action until after the board of directors meets June 23.

Eleven board members sued the other 13 last month, contending that the board acted improperly May 20 in deciding not to renew the contracts of Thomas Husted, executive director, and Frances Cummings, associate executive director.

The 11, including NCAE president Karen Garr, said the meeting was called without proper notice, and they asked the court to declare the action invalid.

On May 23, the court temporarily stopped the 13 from carrying out the firings, scheduled to take effect July 1. On Friday, the judge extended that order until June 26.

In a joint statement, the board said: "The parties to this suit have signed a consent order and have agreed to review issues which led to this legal action at the June 23 board meeting. Despite their internal disagreements, all parties are committed to the association and to the interest of educators. We believe the consent order allows us to continue to work together for those interests."

Should the meeting not resolve the dispute, the suit still could be pursued.

Judge Donald Stephens of Raleigh told both sides the matter appeared to be one better handled by the association than the courts. He said he hoped they could resolve it among themselves.

Rex Gore, an attorney for the 13, said they fully backed the order and would have no other comment until after the meeting.

Ms. Garr said she did not know what would happen at the meeting regarding the administrators' contracts.

Ms. Garr said she hoped there would be no need to return to court.

Some board members have said the May 20 meeting reflected disgruntlement with the heavy-handed leadership of Ms. Garr, The News and Observer of Raleigh reported. Others have said the meeting reflected a tendency by some board members to exceed their authority as policy-makers and meddle in administrative issues. The division is largely along racial lines: Ms. Garr and nine of her supporters are white; 10 of the other 13 board members are black.

Ms. Garr said the dispute had no effect on policy matters, such as the NCAE's support for the Basic Education Program and its opposition to merit pay for teachers.

$1.2 Million Trauma Judgment Ordered

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — A U.S. magistrate has ordered the government to pay $1.2 million to a Wake Forest woman who he said suffered devastating psychological wounds when a Navy recruiter's car swerved into her lane, after which her car ran off the road and overturned.

U.S. Magistrate Alexander B. Denson, who previously ruled that the accident was caused by the recruiter's negligence, ordered the payment on Thursday.

The accident occurred on July 29, 1985. Until then, Treamanda Spivey was a contented wife and mother who enjoyed working in her flower garden, singing in the church choir and entertaining friends. Her husband, Richard Spivey, considered her his best friend.

Since the accident, she has become withdrawn and unhappy, spends weekends alone in her bedroom and has stopped singing in the choir.

"I've lost my best friend," her husband testified in February.

The wreck left Mrs. Spivey, 37, with chronic post-traumatic stress disorder, which has caused her major depression and the loss of ability to enjoy life, Denson ruled. Her physical injuries from the accident were minor.

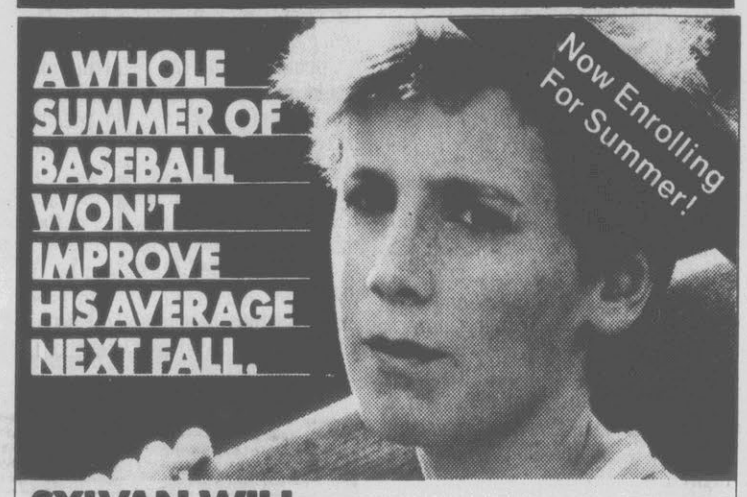

"Mrs. Spivey's PTSD has been devastating to her and to Spivey," he wrote. "A pall has been cast over nearly every aspect of their lives."

Post-traumatic stress disorder is triggered by a psychologically distressing event. Mrs. Spivey's symptoms, the magistrate found, include anxiety, panic, memory loss and a tendency to relive the trauma.

The mother of two refuses to ride in a car with anyone but her husband. Medication gave her tardive dyskinesia, a disorder that involves uncontrolled movements and twitches, Denson wrote.

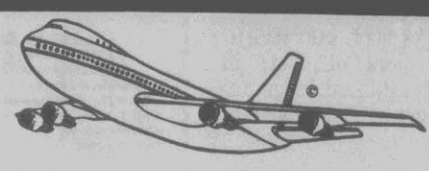

The disorder left her unable to cope with tragedies from her childhood, including abuse, he said.

Trial Set In Slaying Of Pierce

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Family members of a Pembroke man who goes on trial Monday in connection with the death of an Indian activist who was killed as his campaign for Robeson County Superior Court judge gained momentum say the wrong man has been charged.

"I have prayed all the time that the truth will be known," said Dorothy Lowery, Sandy Chavis' aunt and one of the organizers of the Sandy Chavis Defense Fund. "Whoever it is, whoever is involved, I hope the truth will come forth out of this ... the truth hurts some times, it can hurt bad.

"I think that is the only way this sore can heal."

Sandy J. Chavis, 25, of Pembroke was charged with first-degree murder in the slaying Julian Pierce. Investigators said he was an accomplice rather than the trigger man.

Chavis was arrested March 29, 1988 — four days after Pierce was blasted three times with a shotgun — and held under a $300,000 bond until May 17 when family members used property and cash to free him.

He has been staying with his parents while awaiting trial in Smithfield. Family members have maintained that Chavis is innocent and was not at the Pierce home the night of the slaying.

Fayetteville attorney Wade E. Byrd and former U.S. Attorney General Ramsey Clark of New York represent Chavis. They could not be reached for comment.

James J. Coman, an assistant state attorney general, has been appointed as special prosecutor in the case. He could not be reached for comment, but earlier he had said he would not seek the death penalty.

He was called into the case because Pierce had been running against then-District Attorney Joe Freeman Britt. Local activists had been railing against the judicial system and Britt at the time of the slaying.

They claimed the killing was politically motivated, and Sheriff W. Hubert Stone originally described it as an assassination. But a few days later, when Chavis was arrested, the sheriff and other investigators said the shooting had stemmed from a domestic dispute that pitted Pierce against John A. Goins, 24, of Pembroke.

They said Goins had been dating the daughter of Pierce's girlfriend, and that Pierce had ordered him to stay away from her.

Police said Goins had fired the shots. They said he had killed himself shortly before being arrested the same morning Chavis was arrested. Investigators said they had found Goins' body in a closet at the home of his father. He had shot himself, they said.

Goins and Chavis were lifelong friends, Ms. Lowery, the aunt of Chavis, said Friday.

"I could never say Johnny was anything other than just a model boy," she said. "He had fine parents, he was trained well, but things like this have a way of coming about ... I can't accept the theory Johnny did this to himself.

"Neither can I accept the theory that Sandy played a front role in Julian's death. And Julian was one of my very dear friends."

Jury selection probably will begin about 10 a.m. Monday, said Will R. Crocker, the clerk of court in Johnston County. He said Judge Anthony M. Brannon was scheduled to preside.

Higher State Beer Tax May Be Brewing

By F. Alan Boyce
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — If legislative proposals to raise the sales tax and the gasoline tax aren't enough to get you down, Senate leaders have a plan that could make you cry in your beer.

Lawmakers are considering a list of fund-raising ideas that may include the first increase in the beer tax since 1971. And that idea is brewing considerable opposition from those who note North Carolina's tax on beer is already sixth-highest in the nation.

Sen. Henson Barnes, D-Wayne, president pro tem of the Senate, said a lot of lawmakers can't accept Gov. Jim Martin's proposal to increase the sales tax by a penny to fund higher pay for teachers and state employees — especially on top of an $8.6 billion, 12-year highway construction program keyed by a 5¼-cent gas tax increase.

Opponents of the Martin plan would prefer to cut exemptions to the current sales tax and possibly increase the amount levied on luxury items such as planes, boats and automobiles. But raising the beer tax also figures prominently in their thinking.

"The taxes being proposed by the governor and lieutenant governor and Republicans would cost $600 a year for the average household," Barnes said. "The Senate does not want to put that kind of taxes on the people of North Carolina."

The Senate is considering raising the beer tax by 2 cents a can — up from the current 5 cents, Barnes said. The tax on liquor is already 28.5 percent, he said, "but beer has been getting a free ride all these years."

Similar sentiments prompted Rep. Coy Privette, R-Cabarrus, to file a bill calling for an increase of 5 cents per can.

"You just imagine all the other tax increases there have been on other items in that time," Privette told the House Human Resources Committee last week.

Privette's bill has encountered resistance not only because the increase would be so steep, but because he has detailed how some of the resulting $66 million a year would be spent. While $44 million would be available for general state spending, $6.5 million would pay for alcohol and drug education, $9.7 million would fund programs in the Division of Mental Health, Mental Retardation and Substance Abuse Services, $6.5 million would be available for local community drug-abuse prevention programs and $600,000 would pay for alcohol-elated research.

Privette said there was no point in seeking only a 2-cents-a-can increase because distributors would likely round the increase upwards.

"They're not gonna sell you a beer for 57 cents," he said.

Both proposals are strongly opposed by North Carolina Beer Wholesalers, although their spokesman, Chris Valauri, acknowledges it may be a losing battle.

"It's been frequently mentioned and I have no reason to believe that it's been taken out of consideration," he said.

Valauri said the real issue is that the tax was extremely unfair when it was enacted and still has North Carolina sixth in the nation after years of other states catching up. Today the tax is three times the national average of 40 cents per case, he said.

"What we're saying is, imagine how high it was in 1969," he said.

If the price goes up enough, it could sharply reduce sales, which have been flat for several years, Valauri said. That would mean fewer taxes than anticipated.

"We're going to kill the goose that laid the golden egg," he said.

Barnes acknowledged that the current beer tax "is well entrenched. It's hard to get an understanding and shake it loose."

But Senate Finance Chairman Marshall Rauch, D-Gaston, said it remains more palatable than a sales tax increase.

"It hasn't been ordered for dinner, but it's definitely on the menu," he said.

Barnes admitted there might be a public fallout from beer drinkers if a tax increase comes out during the long, hot summer.

"Sure I'm worried about it," he said. "But I am also worried about the fellow who gets hot working and comes home and has to pay $50 a month like the governor wants him to do."

Indictment

ASHEBORO (AP) — William Joe Black, the founder and former fire chief of West Side Volunteer Fire Department, has been indicted on eight felony counts that allege he embezzled $750 from the firefighters' fund.

He was also indicted on charges that he defrauded an agency that loans surplus federal property to organizations like fire departments and schools.

Black, 52, of Asheboro, was indicted last month by a Randolph County grand jury on six counts of obtaining property by false pretense, one count of embezzling $750 from the firefighters' fund, and one count of converting property owned by the fire depart ment to his own use.

Black has repaid the $750, West Side chief Kermit Williamson said Thursday.

Black has pleaded innocent to the charges. If he is found guilty, he could face up to 80 years in prison. Contacted at home Friday, Black declined comment.

Cook Charged

WILKESBORO, N.C. (AP) — Mickey Alton Phipps, a North Wilkesboro man who was a part-time cook at Adams Seafood and Steakhouse, has been charged with the May 7 stabbing death and robbery of the restaurant's night manager.

Phipps, 26, was charged by North Wilkesboro police and the State Bureau of Investigation with one count each of murder and armed robbery with a dangerous weapon.

Phipps was denied bond in Wilkes District Court.

Aussies Win

FAYETTEVILLE (AP) — Australia took top honors in Airlift Rodeo '89 at Pope Air Force Base, and the Military Airlift Command's commander in chief pledged to continue the event.

Sponsors say the event annually boosts the local economy by almost $2 million.

The Royal Australian Air Force's 36th Squadron from RAAF Richmond, Australia, won he award for best overall wing, the highest honor in competition testing aircrews' ability to use airdrop delivery to resupply ground forces when landing is not feasible.

The Australian team also walked away with awards for best foreign aircrew and best C-130 aircrew in competion with 40 teams from the United States and seven foreign countries.

Pope's 317th Tactical Airlift Wing, which was host for Airlift Rodeo '89, won this year's award for best joint airdrop inspection team. The 317th Tactical Airlift Wing won the award for best overall wing in 1980.

More than 1,600 airlifters participated in the week-long event which was sometimes delayed by thunderstorms and low ceilings, officials said.

Dedication

WINSTON-SALEM — Robert L. Pate was known by many simply as the "river man," but his closest friends remember him as a tireless crusader for the preservation of the environment.

On Sunday, the Yadkin River Trails Association will commemorate Pate's efforts to increase awareness of natural resources.

The group plans to dedicate a new access site at 2 p.m., along the Yadkin River, just south of the Huntsville Bridge on Shallowford Road in Yadkin County.

The Bob Pate Memorial, which is sponsored by the Yadkin County Board of Commissioners, will be the 19th access site on the Yadkin River.

Rescuers Pull Toddler From Deep Hole

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

GREENSBORO — A 20-month-old girl was trapped in a deep hole at a country club for nearly 30 minutes before rescue workers pulled her dirt-dusted body to safety.

Kristin Nicolette Cox was walking with her mother, Kim Cox of Durham, and a family friend, Tod Martin, about 5:20 p.m. Friday when she slipped into a 10-inch-wide, six- to eight-foot-deep hole near tennis courts at Starmount Forest Country Club, said Sgt. D.B. Wood of the Greensboro Police Department.

When her mother screamed for help, Tim Scott of Charlotte ran to see what was going on. He reached in and tried to pull Kristin out.

"Every time she moved, dirt kept falling on top of her," Scott said. "If she would have reached her hand up, I could have got her. But she just kept holding on to (a) tennis ball and saying 'mama, mama, ball, ball.'"

When rescue workers arrived, dozens of people had crowded around to watch.

Some workers started digging to widen the hole while others held back the dirt so it wouldn't suffocate Kristin. Others tried to find out who was the mother.

Once rescue workers had widened the hole, they held firefighter D.E. Hayes II by the ankles as he reached into the hole, upside-down, to reach girl.

"She just murmured and cried," said Hayes. "I finally convinced her to let go of the tennis ball. I knocked it out of her left hand and was able to pull her up."

Kristin was treated for small scratches to her back and chest at Moses Cone Hospital and released, said Sgt. D.B. Wood of the Greensboro Police Department.

The hole near the court was created when a light pole was taken out 10 days ago, said Starmount's attorney, Gus Meyland.

Utilities Contributed To Nuclear Campaign

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

COLUMBIA, S.C. — The state's three private electric utilities donated at least $40,000 to an unsuccessful — and bitter — campaign to keep a troubled California nuclear reactor from shutting down, officials say.

Sacramento, Calif., residents voted this past week to shut down the Rancho Seco nuclear power plant, the first time in history voters forced an operable nuclear power plant to close.

The vote came despite intense lobbying and spending by nuclear utilities, including Duke Power Co., based in Charlotte, N.C., South Carolina Electric & Gas Co. and Carolina Power & Light Co., based in Raleigh, N.C., nuclear power advocacy groups and nuclear suppliers, like such as Westinghouse Electric Co.

Utility officials said Duke donated $25,000, CP&L $10,000, and SCE&G $2,500 to Citizens for Affordable Energy, a Sacramento-based group that fought to keep the 15-year-old reactor operating. A spokeswoman for Westinghouse refused to reveal how much the company contributed to the group. But, she said, "It was a very little amount, in the SCE&G range."

The utilities' contributions came from shareholder accounts, which means rate payers will not have to absorb the cost, officials said.

"We were trying to look at the big picture," Duke spokesman Michael Mullen said. "That plant produced 900 megawatts of badly needed electricity. The plant had proven that in the absence of political interference it could run safely."

Of all the utilities in North Carolina and South Carolina, Duke had the closest ties to Rancho Seco. A Duke subsidiary, Duke Engineering and Services Inc., had several contracts with Rancho Seco's owner, Sacramento Municipal Utility District to provide support when the reactor was restarted last year after a 27-month outage. During its peak involvement, Duke Engineering and Services had 25 people working at Rancho Seco.

Duke also negotiated with SMUD in 1986 and 1987 for the contract to operate Rancho Seco. A contract was never signed, however, and Duke never operated the plant.

Duke owns and operates seven nuclear reactors — five in South Carolina — that provide two-thirds of the electricity the utility distributes. Duke is widely regarded as a national leader in the design, construction and operation of nuclear reactors.

As for SCE&G and CP&L, spokesmen said Citizens for Affordable Energy solicited donations to help defeat the referendum calling for Rancho Seco to close.

"Mr. Warren was contacted by Citizens for Affordable Energy and asked for the company's support for an educational effort," SCE&G spokesman Brian Duncan said. John Warren is chief executive officer of SCANA Corp., the parent of SCE&G.

"As the owner and operator of a nuclear facility, the company supported that campaign."

Hypnosis May Identify Driver Of Car In Wreck

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

DELAWARE, Ohio — Officials may consider hypnotizing witnesses to identify the driver of a car that triggered a fiery collision in which four people from North Carolina were killed and two others were injured.

The driver could face charges of vehicular homicide and leaving the scene of an accident, State Highway Patrol Trooper Edward White said.

A minivan collided with a tractor-trailer rig on Interstate 71 Friday and burned. All of the victims were in the minivan.

White said hynosis of witnesses who saw the car's license plate will be discussed with the Delaware County prosecutor's office.

James Pickard, 42, of Doylestown, Ohio, was driving a car that was forced onto the median as an unidentified car spun out of control about 9:30 a.m., White said. Pickard saw the license plate and might be able to identify the driver.

The driver of a tan or yellow car lost control after it passed a southbound tractor-trailer and Pickard's car on rain-slick I-71 just south of the Ohio 61 interchange, White said.

The car spun several times, and the truck and Pickard's car veered into the grass median, where they collided. Pickard was not injured.

The unidentified driver continued southbound.

The tractor-trailer traveled across the median into the northbound lanes, where it collided with the minivan, forcing it into a northbound tractor-trailer, White said. The minivan burst into flames.

The patrol's Delaware post identified the dead, all of Asheville, N.C., as driver Mary A. Charlton, 31; her husband, Andrew Charlton, 39; Jenna Seibert, 7, and Laura Seibert, no age available.

White said Laura Seibert was pregnant.

Steven Seibert, 34, an Asheville chiropractor, was taken to Ohio State University Hospitals in Columbus, where he remained in critical condition Saturday afternoon. A son, Shawn, 5, was taken to Grady Memorial Hospital in Delaware and was treated for minor injuries.

Steven Seibert also was Jenna's father, the patrol said.

The patrol could not verify the relationship between Steven Seibert and Laura Seibert.

The Seiberts and Charltons were en route to Willard, Ohio, to visit Steven Seibert's parents, White said.

Democrats Intense In Hunt For House Party Posts

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — They haven't bought television time or full-page newspaper ads, but the campaigning is still intense in the precinct of the House of Representatives where Democrats are trying to fill their top leadership posts.

Even at this weekend's Paris Air Show, junketing lawmakers may find their gourmet meals interrupted by telephone calls from the candidates seeking their votes in next Wednesday's election.

Two of the top three officers the Democrats re-elected just six months ago have resigned their leadership posts because of questions about their personal finances.

Speaker Jim Wright stepped down rather than continue his struggle against charges by the ethics committee that he violated House rules on outside income and gifts. The No. 3 Democrat, Majority Whip Tony Coelho of California, said he would step down rather than face inquiry into a junk bond deal.

Last week, Democrats elected Thomas S. Foley of Washington, the former majority leader, as speaker of the House.

But even before that vote, the campaigning for Foley's old job and the whip's job had already begun. In the personal campaigning of Congress, the first person to ask for a member's vote is considered likely to get it.

"If you wait more than 37 seconds after there's a vacancy you're 27 votes behind," quipped Rep. Dennis Eckart, D-Ohio.

The two candidates seeking to replace Foley as the No. 2 man — and become the natural successors to the speakership — are Reps. Richard Gephardt, D-Mo., and Ed Jenkins, D-Ga.

Gephardt, who is considered the favorite by most people including Jenkins supporters, gave up a post in the House leadership to run for president in 1988.

He announced his campaign for majority leader with a presidential-style press release, declaring he was part of a "new generation" that will lead the House and the Democratic party into the future.

And in the current ethics climate, one of Gephardt's strongest cards is the feeling that he is certified "clean," because running for president would have exposed any skeletons in his background. He has promised, if elected, he will not run for president in 1992.

Jenkins is from the more conservative side of the party, and he says it's time Democrats include that viewpoint in the top leadership. If not, "We shall continue to lose in national elections. It's that simple," he said.

Both Jenkins and Gephardt are members of the Ways and Means Committee. Jenkins enjoys the support of that panel's powerful chairman, Dan Rostenkowski, D-Ill.

Jenkins said late last week he would reassess his chances on Tuesday, and discussions were already underway for installing a conservative as a top leadership deputy if he didn't win. But "I will not be satisfied personally" by that, he said.

The whip's race is a three-way event with each candidate already in a prominent party role.

Rep. William H. Gray III, D-Pa., is chairman of the House Democratic Caucus. Rep. Beryl Anthony, D-Ark., is chairman of the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee. And Rep. David Bonior is the chief deputy whip.

Gray's campaign has had to battle news reports that his personnel practices were under scrutiny by the Justice Department. His office sent videotapes to House Democrats on the issue, Gray held a press conference attacking the news leaks, and he released affidavits from his staff supporting his claim that he is not the subject of an inquiry.

However, the reports appear to have cut the momentum many expected would lead Gray to a big win. His supporters still contend he's ahead, but they're not confident a first-ballot victory and Gray is running hard.

Gray recently reached a delegation of lawmakers visiting Turkey. One of his top aides said late last week that he was already on the telephone to Paris, where about six dozen lawmakers were attending the big annual aviation gathering.

Both Bonior and Anthony also were burning up the telephone lines, although one top Bonior staffer expressed some jealousy at Gray's success in overseas calling.

"We're trying to save the taxpayers money. We're not doing a lot of overseas calling," she said, smiling.

Bonior's people claim to be within about 10 votes of Gray, and said they could beat him on a second ballot if no candidate received a majority in the first round.

But predicting a winner in the secret-ballot contests — except in a case like Foley's where he's unopposed — is a risky business.

"I think uncommitted is a very popular candidate," Eckart said.

Lawmakers Use Obscure Ways To Win OK For Local Projects

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — When the trees in Sims Park in Euclid, Ohio, began toppling into Lake Erie, officials in the Cleveland suburb turned to their congressman, Rep. Edward Feighan, for help.

But when the Army Corps of Engineers proved reluctant to build off-shore barriers to block the waves battering the park's shoreline, Feighan chose the best way he knew to get the message across that he wanted the job done.

He composed a single paragraph stating that the Corps "shall undertake" the project and inserted it into legislation Congress hopes to complete next week rushing billions of dollars to veterans, foster care providers and other programs running low in funds.

"This is a bill that is certain to see enactment in some form or another," the Ohio Democrat said last week in explaining why his provision ended up in the spending measure.

Feighan was not alone. Dozens of lawmakers have sought to use the spending measure as a way to get favorable treatment for local projects, a Capitol Hill ritual with bills that are seen as must-pass.

The Senate approved a $3.3 billion version of the legislation last Wednesday, two weeks after the House approved its own $3.7 billion measure. The money is for the rest of fiscal 1989, which ends Sept. 30. Bargainers from the two chambers plan to try to work out a compromise package next week and ship it to the White House for President Bush's signature.

But sprinkled into the so-called dire emergency spending bill are provisions from senators and representatives calibrated to elicit smiles back home.

There is $75 million to rebuild a crumpled radio telescope in Greenbank, W.Va., home state of the Senate Appropriations Committee Chairman, Democrat Robert Byrd.

The Federal Aviation Administration is ordered to spend up to $360,000 for aviation research it conducts with the University of Minnesota in the district of Rep. Martin Olav Sabo. And Senate Minority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., obtained $275,000 for Kansas State University to help farmers cope with drought.

The net worth of the special projects comes to just a small fraction of the overall bill. But they come under fire from critics who say they add to the federal deficit and show a visceral inability by lawmakers to just say no to spending taxpayers' dollars.

"They're like a bunch of kids in the candy store," says Carol Cox, president of The Committee for a Responsible Federal Budget, the bipartisan group that advocates deficit reduction.

Cox complains that when lawmakers from the two chambers hash out their differences over the bill, few projects for the folks back home are likely to drop out.

"They say, 'I'll take yours if you take mine,'" she says.

Lawmakers involved in the process take umbrage at such criticism.

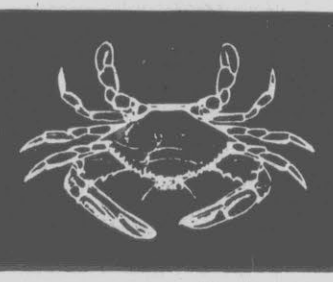

House Appropriations Committee Chairman Jamie Whitten, D-Miss., says federal spending on local problems increases the national wealth. And he concedes that the practice is so widespread that he has so far received more than 3,500 requests from colleagues who want special projects placed in next year's spending bills.

"They represent their districts," Whitten says of his fellow legislators. "They know what's there."

In an era of tight budgets, lawmakers have perfected several ways of helping their districts without ordering new federal spending.

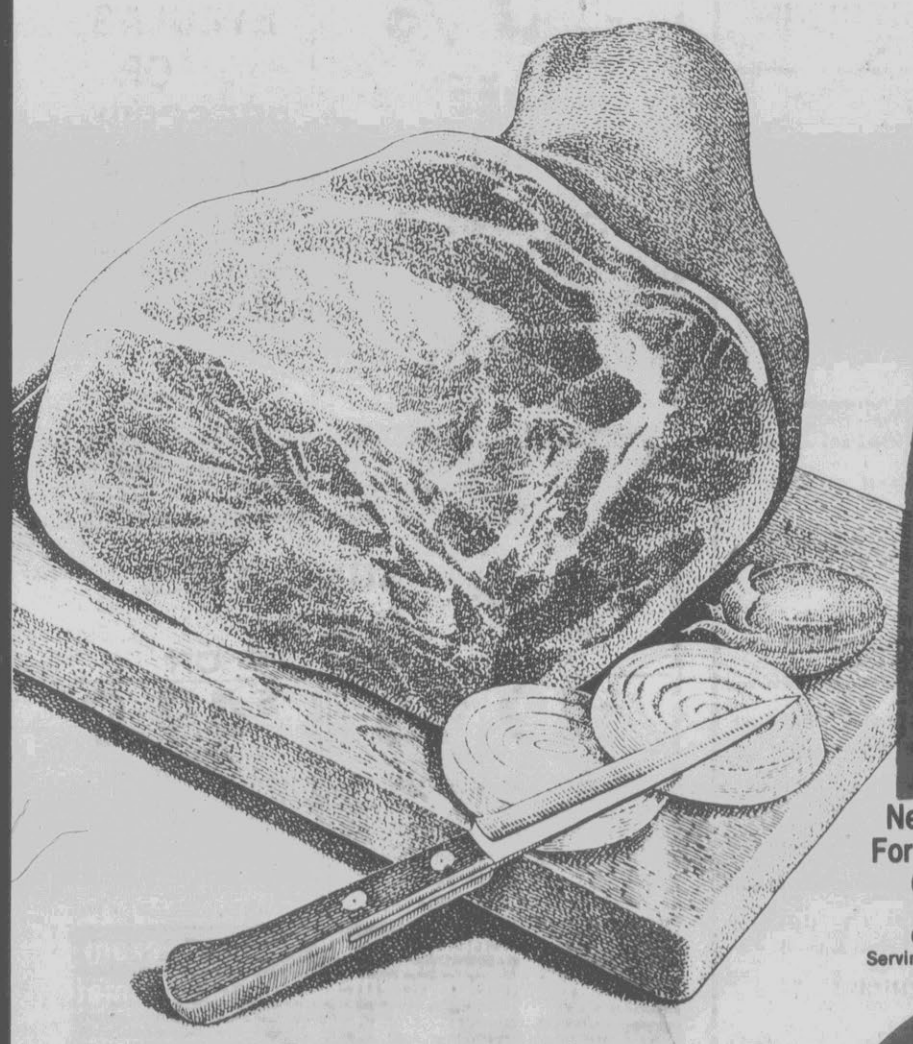

Some provisions order federal agencies to set aside portions of their budgets for particular projects. Thus, language by Wyoming GOP Sens. Malcolm Wallop and Alan Simpson requires the U.S. Forest Service to delve into its coffers for $400,000 for research into last summer's forest fires in Yellowstone National Park.

Other clauses command bureaucrats to do what Congress wants. That is the case with Feighan's provision, which in effect orders the Corps of Engineers to start a $1.7 million project it has so far declined to undertake.

Couple Married 80 Years

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

GILROY, Calif. — Eighty years after Ernie Scott rode his horse across the South Dakota Badlands and arrived late for his wedding with Maud Seidler, they still disagree about what kept him.

Ernie, 101, says he paused after getting the marriage license in Pierre to see a jailed ax murderer. Maud, 97, says he stayed to watch the hanging.

Both agree he got back before dark, they married that evening on June 16, 1909, and settled down in Nowlin — a prairie town that no longer exists.

The anniversary next week of one of the world's longest marriages will be a time for memories and visits Sunday from four generations of descendants. The Guinness Book of World Records lists two 86-year marriages, one beginning in 1753, the other in 1853, as the world's longest, but doesn't list the current longest surviving couple.

"I think we're lucky to be married 80 years and still have our complete family circle. That's kind of a record itself," Mrs. Scott said.

The Scotts, who have three daughters, 16 grandchildren, 48 great-grandchildren and 34 great-great-grandchildren, have led quiet, honest, hardscrabble lives.

They shared most of the 20th century living in Minnesota, South Dakota, Georgia, Michigan, Indiana and California, with stops along the way. They couldn't afford a honeymoon and never went any place more exotic than Canada.

"Old Age Is Not For Sissies," reads an embroidered kitchen wall-hanging.

Ernie and Maud are no sissies, and the phrase on the wall reflects their no-nonsense approach and the humor they say played a big role in their marriage.

"I like funny things," she said. "He used to come out with the funniest expressions, and he was witty as could be. He's not that way anymore."

Scott, hard of hearing and confined to a wheelchair, may not be the quipster he was, but he's still sharp. He has a full head of white hair, a strong voice and keen memory.

"All I thought about when I was younger was having a good time," he said. "I thought when you laughed and had a good time, it added to your life. It did, I guess. Something kept me going."

Their youngest daughter, Gwen Crippen, 72, said one reason her parents got along so well is that they often lived in different places and couldn't hear each other much when they were together.

"It was always happy when they got together, but next thing Dad would be off working someplace else," she said. "He wasn't satisfied. He was always looking."

Scott was born in Minnesota and picked corn as a youth. He became a barber, charging 10 cents a shave and two bits a haircut, and says he had a brief amateur boxing career at 18 and 19.

"I had about 200 bouts and I never was marked," he said proudly, with nobody around to dispute him. "I never got knocked down. I never was hurt. They put my picture up in the (barber) school. I had a smile on my face and they said, 'It was the smile you couldn't knock off.' I think I could box a little yet."

He farmed in South Dakota and played the fiddle at dances. But he and his wife left the prairies during the Great Depression, when the Dust Bowl took over the land.

"We was dried out and we was froze out," he said.

Scott became a railroad car inspector in Gary, Ind. He returned to Minnesota as a house mover, and worked in a Detroit factory during World War II.

When Mrs. Scott got sick in the cold of the North, she and the kids moved to Atlanta and she worked as a hotel clerk.

She met Babe Ruth when the New York Yankees stayed at the hotel, but was disappointed that he was much shorter than she expected. During World War II, she joined the Coast Guard, working aboard Great Lakes boats.

Mrs. Scott moved to California in 1951, but Scott stayed in Minnesota and built houses, visiting during the winter. In 1965, he retired and joined her.

"Nobody is always happy, but we had our share of good times," he said.

Seabrook Protesters Win Wish, Now Face Criminal Charges

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SEABROOK, N.H. — Fifteen protesters against the Seabrook nuclear power plant, seeking a day in court, got themselves arrested Saturday on a more serious charge than normal for such demonstrations.

"We feel fine about that. We've been trying to do that for three years," said Lee Wheeler, a spokesman for the anti-nuclear group, Clamshell Alliance.

Twelve adults and three juveniles were arrested shortly after 7:30 a.m. as they tried to block traffic at a gate to the stalled $6 billion plant, police said. The adults were released on bail or personal recognizance and the juveniles were held until their parents took them away.

All 15 were charged with misdemeanor criminal trespassing, an offense that carries a maximum penalty upon conviction of a $1,000 fine and a year in jail.

A three-day demonstration last weekend at Seabrook resulted in 734 arrests, although most of those arrested — some more than once — were charged only with a criminal trespass violation. A violation is a summons, like a parking ticket, that carries a maximum $500 fine and does not have to go to trial.

Wheeler said the purpose of Saturday's blockade was to get tougher charges filed so the group could get a court hearing.

"This was basically in response to some TV news shows Tuesday and Wednesday where the police, etc., were saying that people wouldn't do this if the charges were more serious," Wheeler said.

Wheeler said the demonstrators hoped to be tried as a group and with a jury.

A hearing was scheduled for July 10 in Hampton District Court.

The Seabrook reactor was completed nearly three years ago, but federal regulators and objections by officials in neighboring Massachusetts help up issuance of a license for low-power tests until last month.

Seabrook's operators had hoped to start the first chain reaction last week, but won't be able to do so before at least the middle of this week. Three faulty safety valves had to be taken out for modification by the manufacturer. They have been returned to Seabrook and were being re-installed Saturday, said Seabrook spokesman Ron Sher.

GREAT BARRINGTON, Mass. (AP) — A disc jockey's effort to drum up money for the county's bare coffers has netted some unusual donations, including trout worms and batch of silver dental fillings, but not much cash.

"I started Tuesday taking up a radio appeal, so far having raised $35.18," said Mark Brueckmann of radio station WSBS in Great Barrington.

Southern Baptists Setting Up 'Evangelistic Blitz' In Las Vegas

By David Briggs
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LAS VEGAS — Sin City is about to meet its Maker.

The first contingents of up to 18,000 Southern Baptists began arriving this weekend for an "evangelistic blitz" in the nation's gambling capital. They hope to leave behind 12 new churches and tens of thousands of religious tracts by the end of their annual convention.

"I embrace the old philosophy, if someone gives you a lemon, you make lemonade," said John B. Wright, a convention organizer.

Las Vegas, which has welcomed conventions of strippers and swingers in recent years, is ready for the Southern Baptists.

"We want all the conventions we can get and we don't give a damn who they are," said John Reible, a spokesman for the Las Vegas Chamber of Commerce.

The site represents a marriage of convenience for Southern Baptists and the city built on the vices they condemn.

The 14.8 million-member Southern Baptist Convention has more than doubled its membership in a quarter century and surpassed the United Methodist Church as the nation's largest Protestant denomination. Las Vegas, a desert town of 5,600 little more than five decades ago, is growing at the rate of 3,000 people a month and there are now about 700,000 people in the region.

Las Vegas is one of only 15 U.S. cities that can provide the hotel rooms and exhibit space for a Southern Baptist convention, said Alvin C. Shackleford, a convention spokesman.

"It just seemed sooner or later we would accept the invitation of the people of Las Vegas to come," he said. There are about 22,000 Southern Baptists in 71 churches in Nevada.

Six years after the denomination voted to meet in Las Vegas, the decision still evokes controversy, and many Southern Baptists have decided to stay home.

While conventions in recent years have drawn as many as 45,000 people, estimates for the convention running Tuesday through Thursday range from 13,000 to 18,000.

Reasons include the reluctance of Southern Baptists to expose their children to the gambling scene, the city's remoteness from the denomination's strongholds in the Southeast and an apparent lack of burning issues as the struggle between the denomination's moderates and conservatives stretches into its 11th year.

Southern Baptists leaders say Las Vegas offers an opportunity to put aside internal battles and emphasize evangelism.

"The choice of Las Vegas was deliberate in that the Southern Baptist Convention hopes it can do sort of an evangelistic blitz in Las Vegas," said Stan Hastey, executive director of the Southern Baptist Alliance, a moderate group.

A series of revivals in city churches led up to a campaign Saturday in which about 2,000 Southern Baptists were expected knock on doors around Las Vegas.

To keep the focus on evangelism when the meetings begin, convention President Jerry Vines said he is seeking postponement of a controversial proposal by conservatives to create a Religious Liberty Commission. The commission would lobby Congress on issues such as organized prayer in public schools and tax credits for tuition paid to parochial schools.

Church leaders said the internal struggle has taken a toll on the evangelistic efforts of the denomination, where membership has increased barely more than half a percent in each of the last two years.

"The main thing is to keep the main thing the main thing," said Jay Strack, president of the Conference of Southern Baptist Evangelists.

On Wednesday, the conference plans to lead thousands of Southern Baptists down the gambling Strip to distribute 10,000 New Testaments and 20,000 gospel tracts, Strack said.

Las Vegas officials and some church leaders say the city variously known over the years as Sin City, Sin City West and Lost Wages is undeserving of special attention.

"Las Vegas is probably no more notorious in its pagan qualities than any other city," Hastey said.

Robert Powers, a spokesman for the Las Vegas Convention and Visitors Authority, said life in the residential areas outside the Strip is little different from anywhere else.

In addition to bringing in up to $15 million in revenue, the Southern Baptist convention should help the city's image, Powers said.

"I think it's good for the city that a group like this is meeting here," he said.

Wilder Nominated By Virginia Demos

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RICHMOND, Va. — L. Douglas Wilder, in his quest to become the first black governor since Reconstruction, was tapped Saturday as the Democratic nominee at the party convention.

"You had the courage to stand with me four years ago," Wilder said, in reference to his 1985 underdog campaign that made him the first black elected to statewide office in Virginia.

Also nominated were businessman Donald S. Beyer Jr. for lieutenant governor and Mary Sue Terry for a second term as attorney general.

Under state law, Democratic Gov. Gerald L. Baliles cannot run for a second consecutive term.

"The experts said it couldn't be done," said Wilder, a 58-year-old father of three whose daughter Lynn, an artist, gave one of the seconding speeches for his nomination. "But together, we did it."

Ms. Wilder said her father taught her to be undaunted by risks.

A Wilder victory on Nov. 7 would make him the first elected black governor in U.S. history. At least one black served as governor, but not as an elected governor, for a time in the South during the period after the Civil War.

His Republican opponent will be chosen Tuesday in a bitterly contested primary from among former U.S. Sen. Paul S. Trible Jr., former Attorney General J. Marshall Coleman and U.S. Rep. Stanford E. Parris.

Polls released last week showed the three GOP contenders neck-and-neck and each slightly leading Wilder in a head-to-head contest. But the Democratic ticket has swept all three offices in the last two statewide elections, including Wilder's precedent-setting victory as lieutenant governor four years ago.

"The people of Virginia do not want to turn back," Wilder said. "They know Virginia is moving in the right direction. They want to continue our progress and prosperity."

Wilder praised Baliles and his predecessor, former Gov. Charles S. Robb, even though he has publicly feuded with both men on issues ranging from tax policy to giving credit for election victories.

At the convention, the three men clasped hands and raised them as the 5,300 delegates and alternates cheered.

Robb, now a U.S. senator, said in a seconding speech for Wilder that their differences "pale by comparison to what those Republicans are saying about each other." He said he might not have been elected lieutenant governor in 1977 and governor in 1981 without Wilder's help.

Jury Convicts Harvard Student As Ski-Mask Robber In 6 Thefts

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SANTA ANA, Calif. — A onetime altar boy who escaped the barrio to become a Harvard University student was convicted of pulling six armed robberies during college vacations.

Jose Luis Razo, 22, showed no emotion as he was convicted Friday by an Orange County Superior Court jury.

"I think that none of us wanted to find him guilty," said juror Dean Montanye. "But there was just too much evidence on most of the counts. And we couldn't get his excellent memory out of our minds."

The prosecution rested heavily on a videotaped confession in which Razo recounted with vivid detail the holdups by a gunman in a ski mask. Defense attorney John Barnett maintained it was a false confession given in a stupor induced by the drug phencyclidine, better known as PCP or angel dust.

Jurors, who deliberated three days, acquitted Razo of four other robbery counts, including two that he had confessed to. But they also convicted him of trying to escape from police after his arrest in 1987.

He faces a maximum sentence of 15 years and four months in prison. Sentencing is scheduled for Aug. 4.

Razo was charged with committing 10 armed robberies between December 1985 and June 1987. In the confession, Razo told detectives he robbed fast-food restaurants, grocery stores, a dairy and a drug store. Razo testified that he confessed to the robberies in a drug-driven schizophrenic episode, describing crimes actually committed by a friend and drug dealer, Richard Longoria.

When Deputy District Attorney Ravi Mehta pointed out that the friend was in jail during three of the robberies, Razo's lawyer suggested those holdups were committed by his client's younger brother, Albert.

Pregnant Mom Delivers Valedictory Speech As School Drops Objections

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

HOUSTON — The top student at Jack Yates Senior High School, who has a child and is seven months pregnant, delivered the valedictory speech Saturday despite earlier doubts school officials would allow her to do so.

"You and I are special," Carrie Mae Dixon told 400 classmates during commencement ceremonies held at Texas Southern University. "We made many sacrifices and some of us even went against all odds."

Miss Dixon, 18, became a center of controversy in April when an article about her for the school paper was killed by Principal Chester Smith. The article, titled "Against all odds ... Student becomes valedictorian despite motherhood," detailed Miss Dixon's first pregnancy, and how she was shuffled among relatives after her mother died and her stepfather deserted her and eight siblings.

Smith said the school newpaper article was too personal. He cited a U.S. Supreme Court ruling in January 1988 that upheld the right of school authorities to censor school newspapers.

Miss Dixon said she doubted school officials would allow her to give the valedictory address since she was pregnant a second time. But officials later said there was no policy preventing her from giving her speech.

The petite student, wearing a bright red cap and gown, had to pause and start her speech over as Smith lowered the microphone for her.

"There were almost 1,000 of us that rushed through the halls of Jack Yates Senior High School at the sound of the bell," in 1985, she said.

"In less than four years, over 50 percent have disappeared. Where did they go?" she asked. "You and I are special. Special because we didn't give in to drugs, alcohol or peer pressure."

Miss Dixon, who shared the stage with other honor students, including Mark Nealey, her boyfriend and father of her unborn child, was first to receive her diploma. She also was recognized as an honorable mention for the award of outstanding graduating girl.

Miss Dixon attained valedictorian status by maintaining straight A's in such honors classes as physics, calculus and economics. She plans to attend the University of Houston to study chemical engineering and has $17,500 in scholarships.

Before and after the ceremonies, Miss Dixon eluded reporters and photographers.

The publicity about her graduation has helped Miss Dixon financially, said Shuronda Robinson, editor of the school paper.

"People have sent money and offered things. I think it helped her know that there are still people out there who care about other people in this world. That everybody makes mistakes. She's gotten letters from girls who are in her same situation."

"And I think her story also lets others know that they can beat the odds," she said.

Student Tammi McCall, who wrote the censored story, said Miss Dixon's scholastic achievements belie stereotypes that pregnant teen-agers can't go far in life.

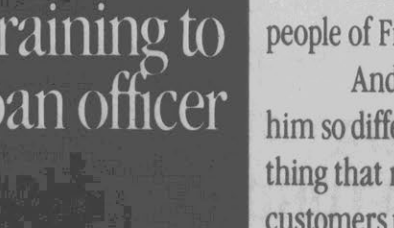

Miss Dixon and her daughter, 20-month-old Terrisha KeAndrea, are living with her boyfriend's family.

Nealey, a National Merit Scholar, was vice president of the graduating class.

Gorbachev To See Capitalism At Work During Four Day Visit To W. Germany

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BONN, West Germany — When President Mikhail S. Gorbachev of the Soviet Union visits West Germany this week, he'll look a lot more like a budding capitalist than a communist.

With superpower relations rapidly improving, Gorbachev is turning his attention to improving his nation's faltering economy.

The inquisitive president will find there's much to learn from West Germany, one of the world's richest countries and the global leader in exports.

"Mr. Gorbachev's main target is to improve the situation of the Soviet population. West Germany has high-tech know-how and high-quality machinery that would be useful for this," says Peter Pietsch, an economist at the Commerzbank in Frankfurt.

Moscow is eager to intensify economic relations with West Germany, says Ivan Silayev, a deputy premier in the Kremlin. Soviet officials said in Moscow last week that an estimated 40 million Soviet citizens live in poverty, and warned the country could face economic collapse in the next years.

"Economic cooperation with the Federal Republic (West Germany) is of great importance. It is the basis on which the whole field of relations between the U.S.S.R. and the Federal Republic will be broadened," Silayev wrote in an article for the June 6 editions of West Germany's Die Welt newspaper.

The four-day trip starting Monday takes Gorbachev to Baden-Wuerttemberg, the country's richest state, for demonstrations of high technology and talks with local leaders.

Baden-Wuerttemberg is home to Daimler-Benz, the country's largest company. The state-owned Soviet transport company already uses Daimler-Benz trucks.

The visit also will take Gorbachev to the Ruhr region, once Germany's industrial heartland and now a leader in retooling for high-tech businesses. In addition, Gorbachev will see the Hoesch steel factory, a new Ruhr-area rolling mill that sells to the Soviets.

Recent polls show that Gorbachev is immensely popular in West Germany, and the growing "Gorbymania" will be in evidence wherever the Soviet president reaches out to ordinary citizens.

Chancellor Helmut Kohl and other political leaders will be keeping that in mind when they discuss arms control and other international issues with the Soviet chief.

"Gorbymania" is such an overriding factor that the mass circulation Bild newspaper even asked Kohl if the visit would help the chancellor's conservative party in this month's European parliament elections.

"Oh, come on now!" Kohl snapped. "The dates have nothing to do with each other."

There has been some concern in the United States and other countries that West Germany is growing fond of Gorbachev.

Poland To Get More Help From Britain

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LONDON — Polish leader Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski, still smarting from his Communist Party's stunning electoral defeat, received promises Saturday of economic assistance from Britain.

He was greeted at the start of his two-day visit by pro-Solidarity demonsrators who demanded he resign.

Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, after a 3½-hour meeting with Jaruzelski at her home in Chequers, promised economic aid to encourage progress "on the path of democracy and reform," according to a statement issued by Mrs. Thatcher's office. It said the measures include a $7.75 million annual contribution to a managerial fund to train Poles in "a more market-oriented economy."

British sources said the promised help fell short of Jaruzelski's hopes for new direct credit lines.

Supporters of Solidarity, the free union movement that won scores of victories in Sunday's election, demonstrated outside the Polish Embassy and draped a statue with banners in Solidarity's red and white colors.

Jaruzelski commented on the election in an interview with Britain's Channel 4 television network.

"We went into the election as a very fragmented front, in contrast to Solidarity," he said.

"Perhaps because we are burdened by a kind of complex of guilt for so far not having sufficiently applied all sorts of democratic procedures, we wanted to be super-democratic, super-pluralist," he added.

Jaruzelski, speaking Polish with his remarks translated into English, also said "the reforms are irreversible and we're going to carry on with them."

The statement from Mrs. Thatcher's office said she told Jaruzelski she welcomed the communist authorities' promise to stand by the election results.

Mr. Thatcher also said Britain will play a role in getting Poland's $38 billion foreign debt rescheduled by Western creditors, according to the statement released after the meeting. But it said Britain will encourage new loans only under an International Monetary Fund economic reform program.

Outside the Polish Embassy, Tadek Jarski, leader of the British-based movement Solidarity with Solidarity, said Jaruzelski's visit was a "massive publicity stunt" by Polish communist authorities.

"They have lost and he has no right to come here as a representative of the Polish people," said Jarski. "If he claims he wants to restore democracy then his first step must be to resign and have really free elections."

Jarski compared Jaruzelski with the communist leaders responsible for crushing the pro-democracy movement in China.

"We have not forgotten that it was Jaruzelski who sent troops to crush democracy in Poland" said Jarski, who referred to the killing of striking ship workers in 1970 at the Gdansk shipyards and the imposition of martial law in December 1981.

China Begins Arresting Protest Chiefs

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BEIJING — Authorities on Saturday began a nationwide political crackdown, announcing the arrests of more than 600 workers, students and other participants in the movement for democracy.

Leaders of the student campaign in Beijing and officials of independent labor unions in the capital and Shanghai were in custody, the state-run news said. Other protest leaders were ordered to surrender themselves to police or face "serious consquences."

Scores of people also were arrested in the provincial capitals of Jinan, Lanzhou, Chengdu, Xian, Harbin, Shenyang, Changsha and Nanjing. Disturbances broke out in all of these cities last week.

The arrests came as authorities intensified a propaganda campaign that blamed "troublemakers and counterrevolutionaries" for confrontations last weekend in which the People's Liberation Army killed hundreds of unarmed citizens in Beijing.

The moves were further proof that hardliners, engaged in a power struggle with moderates, have gained control of the government. The re-emergence Friday of 84-year-old leader Deng Xiaoping with other aging revolutionaries served to bring the point home.

On Saturday, troop trucks with loudspeakers drove through central Beijing. "We love the people, we love the capital," they blared. Soldiers in the back of the truck trained their AK-47s on passers-by.

Troops near the bustling Wangfujing intersection detained one youth who appeared to be a student. After searching his bags, a soldier pulled him to a military tent pitched nearby. Two other similar incidents were witnessed by Associated Press reporters.

The evening television news reported the arrest of 26-year-old Gua Haifeng, a history student from Beijing and a leader of the United Association of Beijing Universities. The group led the seven weeks of pro-democracy protests that preceded last weekend's violence.

Authorities said Gua, who had extensive contacts with Western reporters, was arrested as he attempted to set fire to an armored personnel carrier.

They said he and the labor leaders were being investigated for "counterrevolutionary crimes," which carry a sentence of 15 years to death.

The same news program broadcast footage from an American television report in which a middle-aged Chinese man told of soldiers gunning down scores of civilians in central Beijing.

An announcer accused the man of "rumor-mongering," a crime under martial law regulations in force in Beijing, and urged the audience to help in his arrest.

Hot lines have been set up in every city district so citizens can inform on "counterrevolutionaries." Beijing Radio said city officials had received 167 "important" reports by Friday.

Mayor Chen Xitong of Beijing, meanwhile, ordered security forces to confront anyone found breaking the martial law regulations, in effect since May 20.

"Wherever these hoodlums are engaging in illegal activities, the police must battle them with the stern fist of the dictatorship of the people," he said.

He also said that Beijing industries lost about $108 million during the first seven days of June. Chen blamed traffic problems but wildcat strikes had been widespread.

Chinese media said more than 400 "scoundrels" had been put in jail for burning military vehicles and beating soldiers during the army's invasion of the capital last weekend. On the television news, police were shown interrogating one man at gunpoint.

In Shanghai, about 200 students staged a sit-in to protest the arrest of nine labor leaders. The city government issued a warning saying there was "a limit to the restraint of the people of Shanghai."

More than 150 people had been arrested there, official reports said.

Foreigners and those Chinese who could continued their flight from the country.

The U.S. Embassy sent a convoy to nearby Tianjin to evacuate 89 foreign tourists, students, scholars and oil technicians. Most were Americans.

Huang Yasheng, an officer with the World Bank, was among the Chinese who fled.

"The government has gone completely mad," he said before he arrived in Hong Kong on Saturday. "They are living centuries in the past and refuse to recognize that the world is changing. I wanted to help China but I see now that there is no hope."

Chinese media criticized the Voice of America and U.S. television networks for their coverage of the violence in Beijing. And the first foreign reporter was expelled from the country.

The Xinhua News Agency criticized the VOA for reporting that 3,000 people had died and said the network's reports, widely popular in China, were aimed at "instigating hatred and resistance."

The Voice of America dismissed the criticism.

"The VOA checks its information prior to broadcast to be sure the facts are confirmed," said a statement released in Washington by VOA news director Philomena Jurey.

Peter Newport, a correspondent from the British Independent Television News, was thrown out of Shanghai for "acting in a way incompatible with his visa," according to ITN in London.

Mass Honors Students

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — The bishop of Shanghai, jailed for 30 years by the Chinese Communists until his May 1988 release, called for freedom and peace in his homeland during a memorial Mass on Saturday for the students slain in Beijing.

Bishop Ignatius Kung, who was released from a Chinese prison for medical reasons, made his comments shortly after the secretary of the interior laid a memorial wreath at the Statue of Liberty "as an eternal reminder of the cause" for which the students died.

In Washington, 500 to 600 people protested outside the Chinese Embassy, and erected a 20-foot plaster replica of the Statue of Liberty in a nearby park. The statue, however, was barely visible from the embassy because it was largely shielded by tall bushes.

About 200 Chinese students and supporters demonstrated in the northern New Jersey city of Morristown under banners with such messages as "Give Me Freedom Or Give Me Death" and "Students In Beijing, We Stand On Your Side."

The two ceremonies in New York marked the second consecutive day of pro-student activities in the city in the wake of last weekend's shootings in China. On Friday, more than 15,000 people packed Dag Hammarskjold Plaza outide the United Nations after a memorial service and mock funeral procession through Chinatown.

VOA Rejects Chinese Barbs

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The Voice of America on Saturday rejected a complaint from the Chinese Communist Party, which criticized the broadcast service for carrying a report that 3,000 residents died during the crackdown of pro-democracy demonstrators.

"The VOA checks its information prior to broadcast to be sure the facts are confirmed," said a statement released by VOA news director Philomena Jurey.

The People's Daily, the Communist Party newspaper, accused the U.S. government-backed VOA of being "irresponsible" in its reporting. The newspaper said the U.S. broadcast was aimed at instigating hatred and resistance.

At the State Department, an official who spoke on condition he not be identified noted that there have been "many credible reports" of civilian deaths in last week's disturbances.

Doctors and witnesses have estimated that thousands were fatally shot along the road and in the square, and U.S. intelligence reports have estimated the death toll at about 3,000.

Chinese Red Cross officials estimate 3,600 people were killed and 60,000 injured, according to the Union of Chinese Students in the Federal Republic, a Chinese group in West Germany.

Shifting Population Will Reduce Northern Domination Of House

eral nonpartisan legislature.

The other key players are governors — 28 are Democrats, while 22 are Republicans.

Elections this year and next will determine who controls redistricting. In the states expected to gain or lose the most seats, neither party is in control, promising fierce battles for governor and legislative seats.

The 1990 Census will certify the shift to the Sunbelt that will have Congress speaking with a decidedly more Southern and Western accent. Based on current estimates, 17 House seats will head South and West.

California will be the big winner, gaining six seats with an outside chance of picking up seven. With 45 members in the current House, California already has by far the largest congressional delegation.

Other winners are Florida, expected to gain four House seats, and Texas, likely to pick up three. Likely to gain one each are Arizona, Georgia, North Carolina and Virginia.

The losers are a familiar lineup — mostly Northern industrial states that have seen their congressional representation erode in recent decades.

If current trends hold, New York will lose three seats and Pennsylvania, Michigan, Ohio and Illinois two each. Losing one each would be Kansas, Iowa, Kentucky, Massachusetts, West Virginia and Wisconsin.

With redistricting clout in the balance, the high-profile races for governor are in California, Texas, Florida and Illinois — all of which are now in GOP hands. But George Deukmejian of California and Bill Clements of Texas are not running for re-election and Bob Martinez of Florida is regarded as vulnerable. Jim Thompson of Illinois hasn't announced yet whether he will seek a fifth term as governor.

In addition, the battle for control will be fought in countless legislative contests.

For example, in Michigan, Democrats would control the process if they capture the state senate where Republicans have a narrow majority. In Pennsylvania, Republicans control one chamber by four seats and Democrats the other by three.

After the politicians draw the district lines, the battle will move to another arena, the courts.

At some point in the 1980 process, redistricting plans in all but three states ended up in court, says Kimball Brace, president of Election Data Services, a consulting firm that works on redistricting for Democrats.

Thus Republicans and Democrats are recruiting teams of lawyers to defend their plans or attack the opposition's in federal and state courts.

The guiding legal principle stems from the Supreme Court's "one man, one vote" ruling that mandated that legislative districts be substantially equal in population.

Brace cited a Michigan plan that ended up in court. Republicans offered a plan with congressional districts differing in population by no more than four people. But the court ruled in favor of the Democrats' plan which was drawn with each district identical in population.

How long do districts remain identical in population? Probably not more than a day or two after the Census is taken.

People are born, people die, people move.

Those 18 Michigan districts started out with a population of 514,560 each in 1980. As of July 1, 1986, according to the Census Bureau, the population of the 13th Congressional District in Detroit had declined to 444,600. The Fifth District, which includes Grand Rapids, had grown to 552,000.

Population isn't the only criteria. In states with a history of racial bias, redistricting plans must be cleared by the Justice Department to assure they don't discriminate against minorities.

Whatever the process, cries of "gerrymander" are certain to be heard across the land from politicians who didn't have the votes to get their own redistricting plan approved.

The term comes from Massachusets Gov. Elbridge Gerry, who is better remembered for the redistricting bill he signed in 1811 than for the fact that he also signed the Declaration of Independence. The redistricting bill, designed to help Democrats and weaken Federalists, created a salamander-shaped district that was immediately dubbed a "gerrymander."

But the general rule is: better to be accused of gerrymandering than to be gerrymandered.

Republicans cried gerrymander frequently in the early 1980s, pointing often at the most notorious recent example of the genre — the California plan attributed to the late Rep. Phil Burton. It redrew congressional lines in a manner that Republicans claimed cost them five seats.

At the time, the governor of California was a Democrat and the party controlled both chambers of the legislature. The Republicans were nothing more than injured bystanders who appealed unsuccessfully to the courts for redress.

While Republicans cry foul about Democratic redistricting, Democrat Ann Lewis says the first partisan shot came from the GOP.

"The Republicans of Indiana began the redistricting year gloriously by using their political strength to eliminate one Democratic congressman and endanger others," said Lewis, then political director of the Democratic National Committee. "And the Republican Party spent the rest of the year complaining that Democratic majorities were trying to act in a partisan fashion."

Republicans entered 1981 with high hopes. Reagan had just taken office and dreams of a historic political realignment were dancing in GOP heads. The 1980 Census had found a major shift of population from traditionally Democratic industrial states to the more conservative Sunbelt.

Banks of computers were set up at the Republican National Committee as party leaders predicted technology would provide a substantial advantage.

But in state after state, the Democratic politicians outwitted the GOP's computers.

"They had three computers, $4 million and a staff of 40," said Lewis. "I had two typewriters, one and a half staff people and no budget allocation at all....

"But I had more friends than they did, I had more legislators than they did and ultimately we were able to produce more votes than they did."

Rich Bond, a Republican consultant and former RNC political director, still gnashes his teeth when reminded of the 1981 redistricting.

"The Republican National Committee thought it had a technical edge and talked about it a lot and it flopped," he said.

Redistricting can be an unsettling experience for politicians who normally are among the nation's most secure elected officials. Most congressmen, while on the ballot every two years, have what amount to ten-year terms. For example, 99 percent of the House members who sought another term in 1988 were re-elected.

Listen to Tom Hofeller, redistricting expert for the House Republican campaign committee:

"You're not really a veteran in redistricting until you've sat down at a strategy session during the middle of the process and said, 'We know we're safe here. They can't possibly screw us here.' And had the Mack truck come and run right over you."

JUNEAU, Alaska (AP) — Graduation processions barely lasted through one refrain of "Pomp and Circumstance" at 19 Alaska high schools for they had students in a class by themselves.

Alaska, the nation's largest state, has more one-student graduating classes this month than any other state, statistician Harvey Cromett of the state Department of Education said Friday.

His research showed the schools were mostly in native villages across the sparsely populated state. The schools include Diomede High School on Little Diomede Island near the coast of Siberia, and Pelican High, an island school 1,220 miles to the southeast in the Alaska Panhandle.

"We have a lot of really small villages out there who have just a few students in them," Cromett said. "I think we have about 100 village schools that probably have less than 30 students in them."

Crisis Brewing For Adjustable-Rate-Mortgage Home Buyers.

NOT SO FOR CUSTOMERS OF JIM WALTER HOMES

10% APR Fixed-Rate Financing

VICTORIAN
3 bedrooms — 2½ baths
1583 sq. ft. living area

According to the nationally circulated newspaper, USA TODAY, a crisis is brewing for home buyers with adjustable-rate mortgages. Monthly payments are going up DRASTICALLY. This news comes as quite a shock to 12 million families because, according to USA TODAY, "ARMs (adjustable-rate mortgages) have artificially low 'teaser rates' the first year, practically guaranteeing a hike (in the rate and in payments) the next year." In many cases, the "hike" will undoubtedly result in families losing their homes.

Now for the good news

Jim Walter Homes continues to offer 10% a.p.r. FIXED-RATE FINANCING. This means that, when Jim Walter builds and finances for you, your payment remains exactly the same throughout the entire term of the mortgage. Jim Walter GUARANTEES it! Even if you sell your home, the new owner will have the same payment.

NO DOWN PAYMENT to qualified property owners

What's more, with Jim Walter there are NO "points" and NO closing costs to inflate the cost to you. Neither is there "third party" red tape to delay construction. Credit approval is usually a matter of 24 to 48 hours, not days and days.

Over 20 Homes & Cottages. 2 to 4 Bedrooms. 1, 2 & 2½ Baths. 1 & 2 Story Models

We'll build on your property to almost any stage, from the "shell" (unfinished inside) to 90% complete, including central heat and air. You tell us where to stop then finish the rest yourself to save money. The more you do, the more money you'll save. In addition to our low 10% a.p.r. FIXED-RATE FINANCING, we offer an additional credit of 15% of any cash payment made at the time of purchase, either down payment or total price. Our representatives have complete details for you. 'Truth In Preference To Fiction'

A Capital 'E'

It Stands For Education, Excellence

It's right there, on the Pitt County seal, for all the world to see: Education with a capital E. That's one of the three resources the county touts.

And that's what citizens talked about over and over at last week's public hearing on the county's 1989-90 budget. Schools are our priority, they said, our future, our greatest hope. We want this on the public record, they said: pretty good just isn't good enough. Pitt has to have excellence.

'There are few investments better than public schools. No resource prompts progressive, prosperous growth more than a quality education system.'

The voices were 64 strong, and their message was quite clear. It sounded like a broken record, but one a progressive community would want to play over and over, then commit to memory.

The time to pinch pennies on school spending is past, they said. Instead, it's time to dig deep and pay the bill so Pitt's dream of an unsurpassed public education system can come true.

That is not a new message. The statement has been made before. It's been said at PTA meetings by parents. It's been uttered endlessly in campaign rhetoric by school board and county commission candidates. It's been said right here in this opinion column, time and time again. But the truth of this particular message gives it fresh relevance and poignant urgency.

Sixty-four citizens appeared before the county commission at that meeting. In a county where elected officials usually outnumber voters two-to-one at public meetings, that's a mandate. Many of these citizens were asked by school board members or principals or teachers to come to the meeting and speak on behalf of improved funding for Pitt's schools. That doesn't make their presence any less impressive. They came in support of a cause they believed worthy. They represented a cross-section of the community — businessmen, police officers, doctors, education advocates, community political actions groups.

All questioned whether the county could afford not to fund the schools' request for $3.2 million in new current expense funds, as well as a $25 million bond issue for capital improvements. Their point is well taken.

The latest offer from the county commission increases the schools' current expense budget by $800,000 — $2.61 million less than the request. That, along with another million dollars in additional projects would require a 6 cents per $100 tax increase. That's a bitter pill for taxpayers, but if it's necessary to fund the county's needs, it must be done. The public must, however, demand accountability for their sacrifice from both the county commission, the school board and other public agencies.

Still, even with the tax increase, the schools' deficiencies aren't satisfied. The additional $800,000 in current expense money doesn't address construction needs, which are steep. Neither does the $4 million a year for five years — earmarked for building — promised schools by the county commission.

Leaders can't be expected to solve all a community's problems in one year. That would overwhelm the taxpayer. But there has been no dialogue on the request for a $25.7 million school bond referendum. If commissioners can't address a reasonable bond issue in the 1989-90 budget, they should use the time before the next budget to explore it.

There are few investments better than public schools. No resource prompts progressive, prosperous growth more than a quality education system. That's why Pitt County has Education with a capital E on its seal. It's time for the county to be true to its stated ideals.

To the editor:

Your June 5 editorial reveals the true colors of the owners of the paper and the owners of its editorial page. In bad-mouthing State Representative Walter B. Jones Jr. you attempt to trivialize the position and the vote of one of the precious few persons of courage, vision and compassion who represent the "man on the street," the struggling young families and elderly poor of our state.

The editor knows that Walter B. Jones Jr. is 100 percent in favor of an ambitious road-building program and the benefits it would bring to the entire state. The editor also knows that Walter Jones Jr. is 100 percent against putting an unfair financial burden on families and individuals of modest means while allowing the editor and the "country club" set to get off light.

The editor knows that the well-to-do, the contractors, the fat cats, etc. will reap major benefits at minimal cost, as compared to ordinary citizens who work at low-wage jobs but pay proportionally higher taxes under the bill passed in the House of Representatives.

In China a progressive, courageous, young citizen might simply be shot or imprisoned. In Pitt County we are more delicate. We just tell lies, stab him in the back and feed the public a two-faced line of propaganda calculated to kill Mr. Jones via the voting booth. But I have faith that our people down East recognize baloney when they read it, which is quite regularly.

To the editor:

Tax and spend! Tax and spend! When will the Democrats let it end?

Why single out the Democrats? Thirteen Republicans (28% of the House Republicans) and twelve Democrats (16% of the House Democrats) (including our own Walter B. Jones Jr.) voted against the $8.6 billion highway improvement proposal Thursday. This bill included a 5.25 cent gasoline tax increase (which would place N.C. with the highest gasoline tax in the nation), an automobile tax increase, and an automobile registration tax increase. Representative Jones is to be commended for his courage as he has once again demonstrated how valuable he is to our district. What about the others? Do the other members feel they have tenure and are irreplaceable? Since only 16% of House Democrats voted against this bill it would appear most Democrats have failed to wake up and face reality since their recent loses to Governor Martin, Lt. Governor Gardner, and the N.C. Republican Party. The people voted for change but the Democrats continue to use the failed policies of the past. 1990 is quickly approaching!

The most interesting aspect of the proposed highway bill is our legislators say we need more money to improve our roads and increase teacher pay. N.C. needs more money? A cruise along 264 or any other major highway reveals new wildflower beds along the highways and new trees by our overpasses courtesy of the Department of Transportation research. Our tax dollars fund the Department of Transportation. Highway needs should be first. Highway beautification last!

Doctors say too much fat is harmful to one's health. Our legislators might consider a leaner budget that provides for our needs without a tax increase. If not, the healthier alternative will be to vote Republican in 1990!

To the editor:

The Reflector ran an informative article on bicycling and bicycle safety (May 21, 1989). I am a firm believer in bicycling, not only as entertainment and exercise but as an excellent source of transportation. Bicycles can and should be utilized more in the U.S. as an important transportation source. A bicycle lane should be provided on the main thoroughfares of every city.

Bicycling would increase Americans fitness and help to decrease pollution and oil consumption. Greenville, particularly, being a university town (a university with almost nonexistent parking) would greatly benefit from a bicycle lane throughout the city.

In search for alternate forms of energy, more attention should be focused on human muscle power. For trips around town and even to get to work, bicycles could help to ease many problems.

To the editor:

Three cheers for Representative Walter Jones' stand on the road construction bill. He is the only elected official who realizes that the taxes being pushed on the citizens must eventually result in a tax revolt.

In the last few years there has been an increase in sales tax of 25 percent, a tourist tax which has primarily resulted in a big party for the 'give-it-aways' and an increase in city taxes.

Stick in there Walter. We know you will not use inside knowledge to profit on road construction paid for by over-taxed citizens. Others have, and we will eventually vote them out.

We already have a four-lane highway to Raleigh. Why two more?

W.B. Whitehurst

To the editor:

For decades, the League of Women Voters (LWV) has been concerned with tax equity and has traditionally supported progressive taxation. During this session of the North Carolina General Assembly, taxation has been the topic of frequent discussion and of some action.

Recently, a comprehensive roads bill plan was passed in the House. The source of funding included a cap of $1000 on the motor vehicles sales tax which would put the burden of the highway fund on the poor and middle income people. However, an amendment to totally remove the sales tax ceiling on motor vehicles making it a progressive, equitable tax was voted down.

Voting in favor of the amendment was Representative Walter B. Jones Jr., whose action supported the local, state, and national league's position in taxation.

Static On A Stormy Summer Night

Alvin Taylor

Sunday Morning Notes

Give radio credit for durability. If it helped kill vaudeville, it has avoided being killed by television.

In fact, radio is alive and thriving. Probably it is most accessible to most of us in the automobile.

Which is all a way of noting that on a trip to Raleigh last week your columnist tuned in WPTF at 680 on the AM dial.

Though WPTF may be one station on the crowded radio dial these days — a dial which gives us access to AM and FM broadcast — it was once a prime source of entertainment and news for much of eastern North Carolina.

No doubt most who weren't even born in the 1930s and '40s know that variety shows, drama and even soap operas once emanated from the radio speaker.

Some of the entertainment greats gained their popularity on radio. Bob Hope, George Burns, Fred Allen, Lucille Ball, Red Skeleton, Fibber McGee and Molly, they were all around in the days when radio was king of the entertainment sector.

Unfortunately in this section of eastern North Carolina, the stations which carried NBC and CBS programs weren't as easily tuned in as today's television stations which carry the major network programs.

Eastern cities had their local stations but for the most part they were affiliated with the Mutual network which carried commentary, news and some other programs.

WPTF was a powerful station — 50,000 watts. But, so I was told, its power was directed north-south. Thus its signal could be heard better in Florida than eastern North Carolina.

Still, it was the closest affiliate of NBC and many a family huddled around the radio at night to hear Bob Hope, Jack Benny and North Carolina's own Kay Kyser. On summer nights the crackle of static, caused by lightning frequently drowned out the punch lines and there was always the concern that lightning would strike the antenna line and destroy the radio.

Many of the major shows were on CBS and finding that was even more difficult. Usually the best bet was WBT in Charlotte. No, I don't recall what programs were on which network. In fact some stars defected to the competing network during the heyday of radio. And yes, I know there was an ABC network. That one was almost impossible to find on local radio sets.

Anyway there was something reassuring about hearing WPTF again. The letters stood for We Protect The Family. They may still. It had to do with the insurance company which owned the station.

I listened to the mostly talk format as I headed east last week. Somewhere east of Wilson the same old problem developed. On the stormy afternoon the signal turned to static. Anyway an old friend of my childhood is still there, and I've since learned you can pick it up in Greenville — if the weather isn't too bad.

Commentary

This Isn't Hardball, It's Spitball

Richard Cohen

WASHINGTON — I commend you, dear reader, to the nonexistent swine flu epidemic of the Gerald Ford era. Having noticed something like a disease, having given it a compelling name, the government then ordered up an antidote. The result? The cure killed far more people than the disease.

Something like has happened with the rumor that Tom Foley, the new Speaker of the House, is either gay, bisexual or something for which no term yet exists. It is a foul rumor that seemed to come into town along with the seasonal humidity and has hung around ever since. Democrats blame Republicans for spreading it while Republicans say Democratic allies of former speaker Jim Wright originated it to keep their man in office. At the moment, the body count stands at one: An official of the Republican National Committee has resigned.

But as with swine flu, the cure has been far worse than the presumed disease. By now, every man, woman and child knows of the rumor. Foley, a man who seems to come with his own pedestal, has been reduced in stature. The rumors, once limited to the family that is official Washington, is now the stuff of conversation in Peoria. Out where it counts, people must wonder.

And so the damage has been done and those who now profess apology and have, in one case, cleaned out their desk, have really done what they set out to do. They did it with the cooperation of a press that, as if to contradict the media conspiracy theory, handled the rumor in every way imaginable — and none of it very well.

The New York Times, writing for the infinitely patient, reported in the 18th paragraph of a story that Foley had privately assured his colleagues that he is, dammit, "a heterosexual." The New York Daily News took a different approach. In a column by Lars-Erik Nelson, it quoted an aide to Rep. Newt Gingrich as saying about Foley, "We hear it's little boys." Nelson, obviously disgusted, did not identify the aide, except for saying she was "apparently not very bright."

The Washington Post did name a Gingrich aide: Karen Van Brocklin. She asked reporters if they were going to look into Foley's private life. Even assuming she's not Nelson's source, she ain't too bright, either.

And there you have the relevant background for a four-page memorandum issued by the Republican National Committee to party leaders around the country. The memo was headlined "Tom Foley: Out of the Liberal Closet" and compared his voting record to that of Rep. Barney Frank (D-Mass.), an acknowledged homosexual. If, as the saying goes, it takes one to know one, Frank says that Foley is not one. "I never heard anything about Tom," he said.

The Republican National Committee, straining for the Guinness Book of Hypocrisy, said no smear was intended. The memo's author, communications director Mark Goodin, said Frank was chosen because he is one of the House's most liberal members. His boss, RNC chairman Lee Atwater, initially backed him up — until George Bush changed his mind for him. Within hours, Atwater had apologized to Foley and Goodin, finger to wind and protesting that no harm was intended, resigned.

Playing the dumb, injured party ill-suited Goodin. Instead, he should have noted the recent performance of Jim Wright and acted perplexed. He might have said something about adhering to the rules as he understood them. After all, the Bush presidential campaign, where Goodin had worked for Atwater, had managed to pander to racism with Willie Horton and had impugned the patriotism of Michael Dukakis by making an issue of the Pledge of Allegiance. Then, too, the obvious was denied with a huff.

This is the Washington version of having your cake and eating it, too. The rumor has done its vile work — and now everyone waxes apologetic. Not good enough. If Foley has been damaged, then so should those who set out to damage him. If this stuff is to cease, then a public execution — a la Wright — is what's called for. Why stop with Goodin? How about Atwater and that purveyor of slime in Gingrich's office? Goodin is merely the Ollie North of partisan politics: Convinced he was doing what his superiors wanted, he took the fall when things went wrong.

For months Gingrich and Atwater have been pointing a finger at the Democrats and shouting bloody murder about ethics. But ethics is not just about money. It also about playing fairly, acknowledging that private acts that have no public consequence are not fit subjects for debate and, finally, rejecting the ethically vacuous belief that winning is everything. It's not.

How you play the game still counts and the one some Republicans are playing is not hardball. It's spitball.

Throw the cheaters out of the game.

Poland's Example

George Will

WASHINGTON — Shortly after the end of the Second World War, "Chips" Channon, a Conservative Member of Parliament, attended a society wedding in London with Lady Cunard. Gazing upon this gathering of the upper crust, and marveling at the speed with which life had returned to normal, Channon said contentedly, "After all, this is what we have been fighting for." Lady Cunard replied dryly, "What? Are they all Poles?"

Poland is back in the spotlight and is, for a change, a pleasing sight. This is Poland's third turn at center stage. The first two were problems for the democracies, which wished Poland would go away. It did, twice, in tragedy.

In 1939, Britain, having refused to resist Hitler when resistance would have been effective concerning the Rhineland and Czechoslovakia, joined its fate to Poland's. The futility of that led, five years later, to a second futility. At Yalta, the democracies insisted on free elections in Poland, behind the lines of the Red Army. The devouring of Poland's democratic forces was Stalin's declaration of Cold War.

Now, however, Poland is back in the headlines, in triumph, with elections in which communists running unopposed managed to lose. These elections cause one to wonder merrily whether Poland has sped from a one-party (Communist Party) state to another one-party state (Solidarity by a landslide) without pausing for the novelty of democratic factionalism.

Solidarity is trying not to run up the score against the candidates of the pathetic regime, which has humbly petitioned for electoral mercy in the form of a fix — some parliamentary seats handed to it on a platter. Poland's indigenous democratic culture is required to show extraordinary subtlety. Today in Poland there is an unprecedented coexistence of totalitarian and democratic forces. This poses for Solidarity a problem anomalous to the politics of parliamentary systems. How does Solidarity, enjoying the overwhelming support of the majority of the people, act like a subordinate force, a loyal opposition?

For now, however, Marxist theorists must execute yet another revisionist somersault. Socialism, according to Marxist orthodoxy, is the transitional stage between capitalism and communism. Now it seems that Bonapartism — the replacement of politics by military administration — is a transition stage back from socialism to capitalist pluralism. On Dec. 13, 1981, Bonapartism came to Poland when martial law was imposed by Gen. Jaruzelski.

Jaruzelski, lacking greatness and unable to locate anyone willing to be led, has enjoyed only the prominence of a ship's figurehead carved from wood. However, history may accord him the grudging respect sometimes granted to one Napoleon — Louis Napoleon, who came in handy for France after the disturbances of 1848.

Marx was referring to Louis Napoleon when he said that historic personages occur in history twice — first as tragedy, then as farce. But it is foolish to call Louis Napoleon farcical merely because he was not like his namesake. He was a social conciliator whose regime was a stew of monarchial trappings, republican ethos and political absolutism leavened by economicpliberalism.

Jaruzelski's authoritarianism also was an incoherent jumble. It was force ostensibly in the service of, but actually required by the evaporation of, communist ideology. It was authoritarianism devoid of authority, a regime rendered irrelevant by Polish society's astonishing ability to generate a political system apart from the state. If Jaruzelski's regime negotiates itself into an accommodation with Solidarity, and then dissolves into democracy, his bland Bonapartism will have been a small wave that carried Poland toward a better future. Europe has recently been rich with such surprises.

In the mid-1970s, with many capitalist economies mismanaged into stagflation, it seemed that "Eurocommunism" might be the wave of the future in, say, Italy. There, the 1948 elections had produced a crucial Cold War victory over communism. But the real drama was soon to be played out on another peninsula, the Iberian, where "Eurocommunism" proved to be less important the Neo-monarchism.

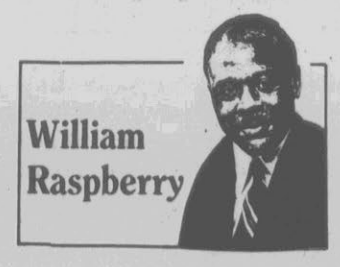

Spain, guided by King Juan Carlos (now more than ever he deserves the Nobel Peace Prize, for his example), became, with Portugal, the first European nations to pass from dictatorship to democracy without first suffering military conquest. Portugal's passage may offer a closer parallel to Poland's because Portugal's was not guided by a royal figure of national unity. A lovely thought: In Poland, the monarchic function was fulfilled by a trade unionist.

Old Europe, it seems, has surprising reservoirs of novelty, and a sufficiency of the ancient virtues of prudence, subtlety, patience and magnaminity.

Why Fervent About China But Patient About Apartheid?

William Raspberry

WASHINGTON — Most Americans, shocked and outraged by recent events in China, are applauding President Bush's quick imposition of sanctions against that chaotic government. But if you hear the sound of one hand clapping, that would be Henry J. Richardson III.

"Certainly I applaud what the President has done," says Richardson, an international fellow at the Joint Center for Political Studies. "But I can't help being struck by the glaring difference between the way the executive branch is looking at China and the way it continues to look at South Africa."

South Africa? With the attention of the whole world focused on the historic implications of what is happening in China, how can Richardson be thinking of South Africa which, except for a recent U.S. visit by three of its most famous anti-apartheid activists, has been reduced to yesterday's news?

For Richardson, the connection — and the contrast — is irresistible. Americans are deeply moved by the life-risking determination of the Chinese students to gain some measure of freedom in their homeland, and horrified that the Chinese government should resort to such unbridled violence against them.

Well, black South Africans are no less determined to have their freedom, no less willing to risk their lives for it and no less subject to the most violent government repression.

"The one issue that comes to the fore," says Richardson, on leave from a law professorship at Temple University, "is the alacrity with which sanctions were applied against China. The violence erupted over the weekend and, by Monday, Bush had announced the imposition of military sanctions and was threatening additional sanctions as well. It took a U.N. resolution to get us to suspend military cooperation with South Africa."

Moreover, he notes, congressional leaders of both parties have called for even tougher action, including economic sanctions, against China. Sen. Jesse Helms (R-N.C.) vowed to force a Senate vote on suspending trade and other U.S.-Chinese ties if the bloodshed continues.

But it took a hard-fought congressional battle and the overriding of a presidential veto to get the United States to impose economic sanctions against South Africa. Helms, who never met a white supremacist he didn't like, was in the anti-sanction minority on both votes.

"What I find distressing," says Richardson, "is the inconsistency of the executive branch on the question of human rights. It is willing to move firmly and quickly for the purposes of controlling communism, or in response to the particular behavor of communist governments — Poland, for example. But when the evil is racism, proposals to impose sanctions are met with every excuse as to why we can't do it, or why it would be counterproductive, or hurt the people it is supposed to help."

Nor is it just the question of sanctions that marks the inconsistency. "Bush invited Chinese students directly into the Oval Office at the early stages of the Chinese crisis, going right around the established government in China," Richardson observes. "Contrast this with the rather persistent efforts of the U.S. executive to give the Pretoria regime every benefit of doubt, to insist on dealing with them. Look how long it took (former Secretary of State George) Shultz to even recognize the ANC (the banned African National Congress) as a player in the South African equation. President Reagan refused to meet with the ANC's Oliver Tambo, and President Bush spent as much time with unknown Chinese students as he did with Archbishop Desmond Tutu, the Rev. Allan Boesak and the Rev. Beyers Naude.

"Remember when the Lawyers Committee for Civil Rights was trying to call attention to the plight of South African children — up to 20,000 in detention, hundreds of them killed — and brought several of the children here to give direct testimony before Congress? There was no move that I'm aware of to invite these children to the White House. The inconsistency is dismaying."

Richardson's powerful point would be more powerful still if there were more human-rights consistency among the American opponents of apartheid.

Many who are quick to demand official U.S. response to government repression and anti-black violence in South Africa react with embarrassed silence when both the victims and perpetrators of state violence are black: as in Uganda, Liberia, Ethiopia, Burundi. Richardson says it is because of the fear that calling attention to black-on-black violence will provide ammunition for pro-South Africa conservatives here.

But that reticence, no matter how mistaken I believe it to be, hardly diminishes Richardson's main point: that the U.S. government, instantly alert to human-rights violations perpetrated by communist states, reacts with saintly patience to the everyday horror of apartheid.

AIDS Expert Gives Optimistic Assessment Of Ongoing Fight

By Paul Raeburn
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MONTREAL — In 1982, a homosexual man with AIDS had a 30 percent chance of living for 18 months.

In 1987, he had a 60 percent chance of living that long.

In 1982, doctors had only a vague idea of how AIDS was spreading and no idea what was causing it. Today they know its cause, they have a drug to fight it and dozens more under study.

"None of us can be satisfied until no patient dies of AIDS, but there is some progress," said Dr. Samuel Broder, director of the U.S. National Cancer Institute and a principal developer of the drug AZT, the only one so far approved to treat AIDS.

He spoke at the fifth International Conference on AIDS, which ended Friday. It drew 11,800 people, including 1,320 journalists and hundreds of activists, to Montreal to discuss the scientific, social and human sides of AIDS.

The conference's organizers were forced to turn away others because Montreal's convention center couldn't accommodate any more.

Broder's surprisingly optimistic assessment of progress toward better AIDS treatments contrasted with the pessimistic viewpoints expressed a year ago at the last international AIDS conference, in Stockholm.

Many researchers there expressed disappointment with experimental drug trials and efforts to develop a vaccine. But a year has passed, and the picture has improved.

"Things are moving much more quickly now," said Dr. Anthony Fauci, director of the AIDS program at the National Institutes of Health in Bethesda, Md.

This year's conference was also distinguished by the participation of several hundred AIDS activists who demonstrated inside and outside the convention center every day.

They booed government officials for not moving faster against AIDS. They demanded anti-discrimination protection, access to experimental treatments and more money for research.

Some of them were people with AIDS, or PWAs, as they often call themselves. Their message was simple. As their hand-lettered, cardboard signs said: We are all living with AIDS.

Some scientists said they were unhappy that AIDS interest groups were allowed to attend because the protests distracted the scientists from their work. Others welcomed the reminder of the human side of the disease.

In the scientific sessions, several groups reported initial success with AIDS vaccines in chimpanzees and monkeys. Among them was Dr. Jonas Salk, who attracted media attention as the world-famous developer of the polio vaccine, but whose research findings were said to be no better than those of several other research groups.

Some of the most promising research dealt with the development of new drugs for AIDS.

AZT is extending the life span of AIDS patients, but it has toxic side effects. And in a disturbing development, studies have shown that the AIDS virus can develop a resistance to AZT, making the drug no longer effective.

"The surprise is it took this long to discover it," said Dr. Robert Yarchoan of the U.S. National Cancer Institute.

On the other hand, the virus strains resistant to AZT do not seem to be resistant to other AZT-like drugs now under study. "That's been a surprise on the good side," Yarchoan said.

AZT is one of a class of drugs called reverse transcriptase inhibitors. It mimics genetic building blocks needed by the AIDS virus to link with genes inside cells to make more virus.

Two newer drugs under study, ddC and ddI, work the same way and are among the most promising new agents, said Dr. Thomas Merigan of Stanford University, a member of the committee overseeing federal drug trials in the United States.

As with cancer treatment, the use of a combination of drugs might maximize their beneficial effects while minimizing their side effects, he said.

Perhaps the most exciting new drugs are so-called soluble CD4 and its relatives. These drugs interfere with the process by which the AIDS virus invades cells.

"They have to add up to one of our best prospects," Merigan said.

Studies are just starting to show that CD4 can reduce levels of virus in the body, he said. Whether that will improve the health of infected people is not yet known.

Some drugs that have been tested have flopped. They include dextran sulfate, which looked promising a year or two ago, and AL-721, a drug that many AIDS patients had pushed for.

Merigan said he doubted the usefulness of dextran sulfate from the start, but that 50 patients were used to study the drug in response to pressure and criticism from Congress.

"It means that our ddC study would have been 50 patients ahead if we didn't have this pressure," he said.

But, Merigan said, researchers are working as quickly as possible to evaluate new drugs.

Broder predicted that the experimental results and the AIDS patients' survival curves would be even better next year and the year after that.

Beer Ban

NAIROBI, Kenya (AP) — President Daniel arap Moi on Saturday banned the brewing and drinking of homemade beer in Kenya, state radio reported.

"I am not prepared to lead a drunken nation," the Voice of Kenya quoted Moi as saying. "From today, June 10, all brewing and drinking of traditional beer, even during traditional ceremonies, must cease."

Moi, a church-goer and a teetotaler, made the announcement at a fund-raising event in Kericho, the headquarters of the tea-growing region in western Kenya, 160 miles from Nairobi.

Easy Goer jockey Day acknowledges crowd after win

Easy Goer Silences Critics

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Easy Goer got the message Saturday when Pat Day showed him the whip — and there went Sunday Silence's bid for the Triple Crown.

Easy Goer flashed home eight lengths in front of Sunday Silence in the second fastest Belmont Stakes ever run.

On the turn, it looked like Sunday Silence and Easy Goer were about to hook up in another spine-tingling stretch duel, as they had in the Preakness three weeks ago.

The Belmont was a one-horse show — and it wasn't the horse that won the Derby and Preakness and was the 4-5 betting favorite to become the 12th Triple Crown winner and the first since Affirmed in 1978.

"At the three-eighths pole, I got my horse to go but he didn't seem to run very much," Day said.

"Then I turned the stick up and he took off in a hurry and I knew that unless someone very fast came from behind us, we were home."

Easy Goer's redemption for his 2½-length loss in the Derby and nose defeat in the Preakness was achieved in 2:26 for the 1½ miles. The only faster Belmont was 2:24, and that's when Triple Crown winner Secretariat romped home by 31 lengths in 1973.

"Easy Goer ran by Sunday Silence so fast I didn't have much time to see if there was much fight in Sunday Silence," Day said. "I didn't want to look him in the eye — I looked him the eye for a quarter of a mile in the Preakness."

Day also said he was happy to still be riding Easy Goer.

"I just want to say thanks to Mr. McGaughey for the confidence he

Magic May Miss Game Three

INGLEWOOD, Calif. — Magic Johnson said Saturday his chances of playing in Sunday's third game of the NBA Finals are less than 50 percent.

"The chances of me not playing are greater than me playing," Johnson said following the Los Angeles Lakers' practice at Loyola Marymount, in which he did not participate because of a strained left hamstring.

Johnson said that if he does play, it won't be a half-speed or token appearance against the Detroit Pistons, who lead the Finals 2-0.

"I'm not a decoy and I won't go in for a minute to charge the fans up," he said. "I'd rather hurt it playing hard than play soft. I just can't play that way.

"If I don't go hard for a rebound, someone else might get it. My mind just won't let me go half-speed."

Johnson said he can't make a decision about playing until just before Sunday's game because he hasn't had a chance to test the severity of the injury.

"They didn't let me do anything in practice, so it's hard to say how it feels," he said. "It's sore and tender, but I don't know if it's less sore."

Coaches Pat Riley of the Lakers and Chuck Daly of the Pistons are preparing for the game with opposite outlooks toward the hamstring injuries to Johnson and Byron Scott.

"I'm planning for them not to be there," Riley said. "You have to plan for the worst. You can't make up for their absence. You have to just play basketball with what you have. But I think the team will be more relaxed than it's ever been."

"We assume they will play and prepare with the idea they will play," Daly said.

Johnson, who was injured in the third quarter of Thursday's loss to the Pistons, said the decision whether to play will be difficult.

"I might be my own worst enemy because I want to play so bad," he said.

If neither Johnson nor Scott can play, Riley must decide whether to start Michael Cooper and Tony Campbell in the backcourt or move forward James Worthy to guard and put Orlando Woolridge into the lineup.

"I don't know yet," Riley said. "There are a lot of alternatives. I could go big or small."

Almost certain to get some playing time is rookie David Rivers, who saw action in only 47 regular-season games for the two-time defending champions.

Jordan Golf Set Next Weekend

The Fifth annual Michael Jordan Celebrity Golf Classic will be held next Sunday at the Greenville Country Club — and thanks to the Detroit Pistons, Jordan will be on hand.

Jordan, the former University of North Carolina basketball star and currently one of the National Basketball Association's top players, nearly led his Chicago Bulls team to the NBA finals. Detroit, however, rallied from a 2-1 deficit to win three straight games to surge past the Bulls and is currently facing the Los Angeles Lakers for the NBA title.

Had the Bulls made it to the finals — and the finals gone past four games — Jordan would not have made his own tournament.

Prior to this year, the tournament has been known as the Eastern Carolina Celebrity Golf Classic, and has benefited the Greenville Ronald McDonald House, a home-away-from-home for the families of children hospitalized at Pitt County Memorial Hospital.

Jordan, who played in one of the earlier tournaments, served as the honorary chairman for the 1988 event, and was asked if he would serve again this year, according to Deborah Hughes, tournament director. Jordan, however, asked that he would like the see the tournament expanded to serve all four of North Carolina's Ronald McDonald Houses, including those in Chapel Hill, Winston-Salem and Durham.

That point was agreed to, and; in addition, it was decided to change the name to honor Jordan and to gain state-wide exposure.

Forty celebrities are expected to join 160 teams for the tournament. At last report, all but 18 of the playing positions had been filled and Hughes said she expects those to be gone by tournament time.

In addition to the public portion of the tournament, on Sunday, a number of private functions have

Arantxa Sanchez reacts to victory in French Open

Arantxa Sanchez Captures French

PARIS — For once, history was not on Steffi Graf's side.

Graf's hopes of becoming the only woman to win the Grand Slam twice were erased in the French Open final Saturday by Arantxa Sanchez.

Instead, it was the 17-year-old Spaniard who made history by becoming the youngest woman to win the French title. She also became the first Spanish woman ever to win a Grand Slam tournament.

Hustling all over the court and forcing an ailing Graf into 68 backcourt errors, the seventh-seeded Sanchez won 7-6, 3-6, 7-5 in two hours and 58 minutes.

"This is a wonderful day for me," said Sanchez, who had not won a set off Graf in their three previous matches. "I beat the No. 1 in the world. I fought for three hours to win the tournament of my life, the one I've been dreaming about."

On Sunday, Michael Chang of the United States can match Sanchez's achievement by becoming the youngest male winner of the title.

Chang, who meets Stefan Edberg in the final, already is the youngest male finalist in any Grand Slam

Can Pitt County Handle A Boom?

By Tom Morris
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

(Editor's Note: See related stories, bottom right and B-11)

Take a trip to any one of Pitt County's five golf courses on an average weekend, and you'll see there's no shortage of available foursomes getting ready to tee off.

Nationwide, the popularity of golf continues to grow each year, and Pitt County is no exception to the boom on the links. Golf is a sport that attracts the young and the old, and each year the courses seem to get a little more crowded.

The reasons for golf's popularity are varied.

"It's gotten a lot of good television exposure, and the tournament boys are winning a lot of money," Ayden Golf and Country Club pro Tim Smith said. "It's fun. You don't have to be a certain age, or a good athlete. You never have the same shot twice. It's always different. You can't believe you can be so bad so, (so) you've got to get better."

The National Golf Foundation in Jupiter, Fla., estimates that 21.7 million people played golf at least once a week last year.

The number of golfers across the country increased 7.4 percent in 1988, from 20.2 million to 21.7 million, according to NGF figures.

"We look at golf course development lagging behind the growing demand for golf," Bill Burgaum, vice president of communications for the NGF, said. "Right now we have 23.4 million golfers in the United States. It's about a 25 percent increase over the last three years.

"We see if the current rate continues even half of what expecting, we're probably going to need an additional 4,000 (courses) in the United States by the year 2000," Burgaum said.

In North Carolina, the Wilmington-Brunswick County area is one of the fastest growing areas for golf course development with 12 courses having been built in the last three years and another three presently under construction.

In a lot of the larger metropolitan areas across the country, tee times at public courses are extremely hard to come by.

Even here in North Carolina, golfers that don't belong to a country club face long waits in their efforts to play 18 holes during the weekend in cities like Charlotte and Raleigh.

Area pros have also seen an increase in interest locally, but not to the point of saturation.

"Yes (the game is growing), but not quite as quickly here in Greenville," Brook Valley pro John Lamonica said. "Our membership isn't full. Within the next two years, we'll probably have a waiting list."

Two of Pitt County's five golf clubs, Greenville Country Club and Brook Valley, are private and don't allow open greens fee play.

Farmville Golf and Country Club, Ayden Golf and Country Club and Indian Trails Country Club in Grifton are private, but they do allow the public to play.

"The percentage of walk-on play is increasing all the time," Smith said. "It is not so bad we're having to turn play away yet. We're still getting play around at a good pace, even on the weekends."

An old city landfill, pictured here, has long been proposed as the site of a public golf course, but would it work?

Opinions Vary On Landfill Course

City-Owned Land Could Be Made Into A Course, But Only For 9 Holes

By Tom Morris
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Most people would not argue the Greenville area needs a public golf course, but opinions vary on the feasibility of turning an old city landfill into a nine-hole course.

"From time to time over the last 10 years it's been mentioned Greenville needs a public golf course," Boyd Lee, executive director of the Greenville Recreation and Parks Department, said.

"The Chamber of Commerce did a survey on it, and there was tremendous interest. Everything points to a situation where we need a public course. As far as the city goes, our best position to have one is the old landfill. We've looked into it. The problem is it's only 60 acres, so we can only put nine holes in. That's one of the drawbacks."

The landfill, located near the end of East Fifth Street and the Tar River, closed in 1982. Over the last 10 years there has been speculation on whether or not the area could be turned into a public nine-hole golf course.

An 18-hole course requires more than 160 acres to develop.

Presently, Pitt County has five golf courses: Greenville Country Club; Brook Valley Country Club; Farmville Golf and Country Club; Ayden Golf and Country Club, and Indian Trails in Grifton. Of the five, GCC and Brook Valley do not allow any open greens fee play.

"It would be nice to get a public course in the area," Brook Valley pro John Lamonica said.

Pitt Tops Edenton By 6-4

By Tim Chandler
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Pitt County used the strength of two offensive innings to notch a 6-4 win over Edenton in American Legion baseball action Saturday.

Post 39 scored a trio of runs in both the fifth and eighth innings to seal the victory.

Heath Clark and Travis Williamson sparked the two key innings for Post 39 as Clark finished the game 3-3 with a pair of RBI and a run scored and Williamson was 2-4 and scored two runs.

"Heath has just been on fire," Pitt County coach Grant Jarman said. "He and Travis did a good job of hitting the ball tonight."

The win pushed Pitt County's mark to 4-1 for the season, while Edenton dropped to 0-5.

"This was the best game we've had hitting this year," Edenton coach Lynn Jordan said. "Nash (Long) did a good job of pitching for us also."

Long went the distance on the mound for Post 40, giving up 10 hits and striking out four.

Edenton jumped out to a 1-0 lead in the top of the first inning as Derrick Rogers had a two-out single and then scored following a error on a grounder by Al Pierce.

Post 40 stretched its lead to 2-0 in the third inning.

Long led off by receiving a base on balls. After moving to second on a wild pitch, Long scored on a single to center by Thomas Alexander.

Pitt County took the lead for good in the bottom half of the fifth with its first three-run burst.

Grant Harmon led off the inning with a walk. Williamson then singled putting runners at first and second. Clark brought home the first run of the inning with a double to left-center.

Pinch hitter Jamie Brewington then knotted the game with a sacrifice fly to left field, scoring Williamson.

"I felt like one of the keys to the game was the sacrifice fly by Jamie," Jarman said. "He came in and had a two-strike count on him and after fighting off a couple of pitches, he hit a sacrifice fly to tie the game."

David Leisten knocked in the final run of the inning with a fielder's choice grounder to short.

Pitt County stretched its lead to 6-2 in the top of the eighth.

Tim Moore, Williamson, Clark and Rod Gorham all had hits in the inning for Post 39.

Gorham, who came on in relief of starter William Gibbs, then held Post 40 to two runs in the top of the ninth to ice the win.

Pitt County returns to action Sunday at 7:30 p.m. at Snow Hill. Edenton will face Wayne County Monday on the road.

Snead, Mast, Grady Tied

HARRISON, N.Y. — J.C. Snead managed a 1 under-par 70 Saturday and moved into a three-way tie for the lead after three rounds of the Westchester Classic.

Snead, 48, completed three trips over the rain-soaked Westchester Country Club course in 205, eight under par.

"Rather boring, really," said Snead, who scored the last of his eight career victories in this tournament in 1987.

With 18 holes to go in the chase for a $180,000 first prize, Snead shared the lead with Dick Mast and Australian Wayne Grady.

Mast, who has yet to win in nine seasons of PGA Tour activity, and Grady, not yet a winner in the United States, each matched par 71 in the gusty winds.

Scott Hoch, a playoff loser in the Masters, and Mark Lye were next at 207, six under par.

Hoch scored an eagle-3 on his final hole and matched the best round of the day with a 67. Lye had par 71.

A group of seven followed at 208, placing a dozen players within three strokes of each other going into the final round.

Easy Goer Captures Belmont Stakes...

showed in me. It's a pleasure and a blessing to ride a horse like this that's so well prepared. I know he had to come under some heavy guns the last two weeks."

The victory, on a track that was fast despite torrential rain Friday night, kept Easy Goer from joining his sire Alydar as the only 3-year-old to finish second in each of the three racers.

Asked if he was disappointed, Charlie Whittingham, the Hall of Fame trainer who conditioned Sunday Silence, said:

"If you worry about disappointments, you won't live long — he was second, he wasn't last."

Whittingham is 76 years old.

The runner-up finish was worth $1 million bonus to Sunday Silence based on five points to the winner of a Triple Crown race, three for second and one for third. He finished with 13 points to 11 for Easy Goer.

However, it was a costly defeat since the winner of the Triple Crown gets what is called a $5 million bonus, although it includes the winning shares from each of the three races.

"My head is better than my pocketbook," Whittingham joked.

On Friday, Sunday Silence reared up while being led to the track and clipped Whittingham on the right side of the head, badly bruising him.

A crowd of 64,959, the largest crowd at the Belmont since 65,415 watched Affirmed beat Alydar, saw Easy Goer recover some of the prestige lost in the first two races.

"Sunday Silence ran a good race," Whittingham said. "We don't have any excuses. He just got outrun."

"He ran a good race," jockey Pat Valenzuela said, "but Easy Goer ran a great race. Give credit to him and his people."

It was a big victory for Day, who was criticized for riding too defensively in the first two races, as well as 38-year-old trainer, Shug McGaughey, and Ogden Phipps, the 80-year-old owner-breeder of Easy Goer, the 1988 2-year-old champion who was considered something special after he won his first three starts this year.

"I never lost confidence in Pat," McGaughey said, "and I thought today would be our day. I wanted him to be aggressive today and with the track the way it was, everything worked out perfectly."

Easy Goer returned $5.20, $2.80 and $2.40 while Sunday Silence, losing for the first time in six starts as a 3-year-old, returned $3 and $2.60. Le Voyageur, whose previous six starts had been on the grass in France, returned $4.60.

Sunday Silence became the 12th 3-year-old to win the Derby and Preakness, only to lose in the Belmont. He was the fourth to fail in a bid for American racing's most prestigious prize since Affirmed won in 1978.

The other three were Spectacular Bid in 1979, Pleasant Colony in 1981 and Alysheba in 1987. Alysheba also is a son of Alydar.

tournament at 17 years and 3½ months.

Graf's loss came on the same court where she captured her first Grand Slam tournament two years ago, beating Martina Navratilova in the final.

Last year Graf became only the fifth person in history to sweep all four Grand Slam tournaments in the same calendar year and she capped achievement by winning the Olympic gold medal in Seoul.

Graf, who won the Australian Open in January for her fifth straight Grand Slam title, was heavily favored to win in Paris and reach the halfway mark toward a second consecutive Grand Slam.

"I wasn't thinking about that at all during this match," Graf said. "It's just so hard to win four tournaments on different surfaces. To do it twice in a row is practically impossible."

Graf snapped at a reporter who suggested she can no longer handle the pressure of being No. 1.

"I've been living with it now for 1½, 2 years," she said. "I don't have any problems. There is no reason, just because I lost a match."

When the two-time defending champion netted a backhand on match point, Sanchez fell on her back on the Center Court at Roland Garros Stadium and burst into tears.

Sanchez had trailed 3-5 in the final set but won the last four games of the match in fiesty style, pumping her fists and shouting "vamos" — let's go — after winners and smiling even when things didn't go her way.

Graf, who committed twice as many errors as Sanchez, said she was suffering from menstrual cramps.

"I felt weak at the end," said Graf, who ran off the court and into the locker room during the final changeover. "I started to have cramps."

Graf, who will be 20 next week, also said she suffered from food poisoning earlier in the week after eating a pizza.

"I couldn't eat the next day," she said. "I lost three kilos (6.6 pounds) in the last few days. That didn't help either."

But Graf said Sanchez was a deserving champion.

"She was rally playing some unbelievable shots, close to the lines and hitting the lines," Graf said. "She's a really nice person. She's always very nice. I feel good for her."

Sanchez's coach, former Chilean Davis Cup player Juan Nunez, said it was typical gutsy performance.

"Arantxa has a special personality," he said. "She's a happy, sweet person off the court. But on court she becomes a lion. That's what we saw today: the lion Arantxa."

Sanchez showed her claws throughout the match, sprinting around the court for spectacular gets, throwing her body into every shot and slugging her groundstrokes with as much power as Graf.

Browning, Reds Shut Down L.A.

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — Tom Browning pitched a five-hitter and helped his own cause with an RBI single as the Cincinnati Reds beat the Los Angeles Dodgers 5-0 Saturday for their ninth win in 11 games.

It was Browning's first shutout since last Sept. 6, when he pitched a perfect game against Los Angeles. The Dodgers, shut out by Jose Rijo on Friday night, have not scored in 21 innings.

Browning, 6-5, did not allow a Dodger past first until the seventh inning in winning for the 19th time in his last 20 decisions against Western Division opponents. The left-hander struck out six and walked one.

Barry Larkin, who began the day leading the National League in batting, went 2-for-3 to raise his average to .367.

The Reds took a quick lead with two runs in the first against Tim Belcher, 4-5.

With one out, Todd Benzinger walked and Larkin singled off the glove of third baseman Jeff Hamilton. Belcher hit Paul O'Neill to load the bases and Ken Griffey lined the next pitch for a two-run single to center.

Browning and Chris Sabo walked to start the fifth and Benzinger hit a run-scoring single. Larkin's sacrifice fly scored Sabo.

San Francisco.....1
San Diego.....0

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Scott Garrelts combined with two relievers on an eight-hitter and the San Francisco Giants beat the San Diego Padres 1-0 Saturday despite managing just two hits in eight innings against Ed Whitson.

The Giants snapped Whitson's seven game-winning streak. Whitson, 9-3, allowed only Tracy Jones' infield single in the second and a third-inning triple by Robby Thompson in his first loss since April 22. He walked two and struck out two.

Garrelts, 5-1, scattered six hits in six innings, striking out six and walking none. The right-hander left the game with tightness in his pitching elbow.

Goose Gossage worked the seventh inning, allowing one hit. Craig Lefferts gave up one hit in two innings for his 11th save, equaling his career high.

It was the eighth combined shutout of the season for the Giants, a team record. San Francisco has nine overall.

St. Louis.....6
Chicago.....0

CHICAGO (AP) — Joe Magrane pitched a six-hitter for his first complete game of the season and Tony Pena drove in three runs as the St. Louis Cardinals shut down the Chicago Cubs for the second straight day, winning 6-0 Saturday.

The game was played in front of 38,045 fans, the largest attendance at Wrigley Field since June 7, 1987, when the Cubs also played St. Louis. The Cardinals have won four straight, all on the road.

The Cubs were shut out in consecutive games for the first time this season. On Friday, Jose DeLeon combined with two relievers on a three-hitter for a 1-0 victory. The Cubs entered the series with 13 homers in their last seven games.

Magrane, 4-5, snapped a personal three-game losing streak with his sixth career shutout. The left-hander struck out nine, a career high, and walked two.

The Cardinals scored twice in the third against Greg Maddux, 5-6, whose four-game winning streak was snapped.

Pena walked, went to second on a sacrifice by Magrane, and scored on a two-out single by Milt Thompson. Thompson stole second, went to third on catcher Rick Wrona's throwing error, and scored on Ozzie Smith's single.

Montreal.....9
Philadelphia.....1

MONTREAL (AP) — Tim Raines' pinch three-run double highlighted a five-run sixth inning and Bryn Smith pitched a five-hitter as the Montreal Expos beat the Philadelphia Phillies 9-1 Saturday night for their 12 win in 17 games.

Hubie Brooks had a pair of RBI doubles and Tim Wallach drove in two runs with a double and a single. The Expos had 15 hits, three by Brooks, and tied a team record with eight doubles. The Phillies have lost 13 of 16.

Smith, 6-2, struck out nine and walked none for his third complete game. Bruce Ruffin, 0-3, allowed eight hits and two earned runs in five innings.

The Expos broke the game open in the sixth against relievers Larry McWilliams and Jeff Parrett.

Mike Fitzgerald led off the sixth with a single and advanced one out later on Smith's sacrifice. Smith was safe on the play when McWilliams mishandled his bunt and Otis Nixon walked to load the bases.

Raines, who had sustained a minor hamstring injury Friday night, doubled over the bag at first to clear the bases. RBI doubles by Brooks and Wallach gave the Expos an 8-1 lead. Nixon had a run-scoring single in the ninth.

Pittsburgh.....6
New York.....5

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Rey Quinones hit a two-run homer off relief ace Randy Myers with one out in the bottom of the ninth to rally the Pitsburgh Pirates to a 6-5 victory over the New York Mets on Saturday night.

The Pirates, who had squandered a 3-1 lead early in the game, rallied to beat the Mets for the second night in a row after losing seven straight.

Barry Bonds singled to start the Pirates ninth and moved to second on Jeff King's sacrifice bunt. Quinones, who had doubled and scored in the eighth, then hit a 1-1 pitch into the left-field seats for his third homer.

Myers, 5-2, had allowed only two runs in his previous 23 appearances and had an 0.31 ERA in his last 28 2-3 innings. Myers had pitched out of a bases loaded one-out jam in the bottom of the eighth with the Mets leading by a run.

Bob Kipper, 1-3, pitched a scoreless ninth.

Consecutive run-scoring extra base hits by Andy Van Slyke, Bobby Bonilla and Barry Bonds gave the Pirates a two-run lead in the fourth, but the Mets tied it in the fifth against Randy Kramer, making his first start since one-hitting Cincinnati on May 16.

Kramer retired the first two hitters in the inning before Howard Johnson walked and stole second. Dave Magadan hit an RBI double to left and scored the tying run when Quinones threw wildly at short on Kevin McReynolds' apparent inning-ending grounder.

Houston.....1
Atlanta.....0

HOUSTON (AP) — Jim Clancy allowed five hits in 7 1-3 innings as the Houston Astros beat the Atlanta Braves 1-0 Saturday night for their 15th victory in 16 games.

The Astros, who have won five straight, have taken 11 straight games decided by one run.

Clancy, 4-4, struck out three and walked two. Dave Smith, the third Houston pitcher, got the last three outs for his 12th save in 13 opportunities.

John Smoltz, 7-5, had retired 14 straight before Billy Hatcher singled with one out in the Houston sixth. One out later, Bill Doran doubled down the right-field line to score Hatcher.

Tigers Hold Off Blue Jay Rally By 11-8

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TORONTO — Chet Lemon's three RBIs and Keith Moreland's three runs scored helped Detroit build a 9-0 lead and the Tigers held on to beat the Toronto Blue Jays 11-8 Saturday.

The Tigers won for just the second time this season on artificial turf; they have nine losses.

Each team had a pair of four-run rallies: Detroit in the third and fourth innings, Toronto in the fifth and seventh. The Tigers had 15 hits, three each by Gary Pettis and Pat Sheridan, and tied their season high for runs scored.

Both starters were gone by the fourth. Detroit's Jeff Robinson walked three in 1 1-3 innings, leaving with a 1-0 lead. Jimmy Key, 6-5, lasted just three innings for Toronto, allowing five runs on six hits.

Frank Williams, the Tigers' fifth pitcher, shut down the Blue Jays in the eighth and ninth innings, allowing one hit, and was given credit for the victory, improving to 3-2.

Mike Heath hit a sacrifice fly in the second and the Tigers batted around in the third and fourth innings to take a 9-0 lead.

Mike Brumley opened the third with a single and scored on Pettis' double. Two outs later, Moreland lined an RBI single, Gary Ward walked and Lemon doubled home two runs.

NEW YORK (AP) — Roger Clemens rebounded from a first-inning injury and the Boston Red Sox backed him with 19 hits Saturday, beating the New York Yankees 14-8.

Every Boston starter had at least one hit. Nick Esasky, Rich Gedman and Luis Rivera each homered, Wade Boggs singled four times and Mike Greenwell drove in three runs. Boston, winning for just the third time in eight games, got season highs in runs and hits.

Clemens, 7-4, got a scare when he was hit in the left knee by Deion Sanders' hard one-hopper leading off the first. Clemens sat on the mound while he was examined and the game resumed five minutes later.

Don Mattingly hit a two-run double later in the Yankees' first, but Clemens settled down and allowed only two more runs in the next six innings.

Clemens improved to 8-3 lifetime against New York, including 5-0 at Yankee Stadium. He gave up eight hits, struck out five and walked four in seven innings.

Mattingly hit a two-run single in the eighth for his first four-RBI game since last July 4. Bob Stanley also gave up Mel Hall's RBI single and Bob Geren's third homer.

Rich Dotson, 2-4, lost for the fourth time in five decisions. He was tagged for six runs on seven hits in 3 1-3 innings, his shortest start of the season.

Esasky, who also had three hits, tied the score at 2 in the second inning with his ninth home run.

An error by Mattingly at first base opened Boston's five-run fourth. Danny Heep hit a two-run single that finished Dotson, Boggs met Chuck Cary with an RBI single and Greenwell followed with a two-run single.

Boggs, who has 22 hits in his last 45 at-bats, had a run-scoring single in the sixth. Greenwell had a run-scoring grounder for his 10th RBI in eight games and Ellis Burks doubled home a run that made it 11-3.

Seattle.....3
Cleveland.....1

CLEVELAND (AP) — Randy Johnson pitched three-hit ball for 7 2-3 innings Saturday night and home runs by Henry Cotto and Jim Presley led the Seattle Mariners past the Cleveland Indians 3-1.

Johnson, 3-0, struck out seven and walked four before Mike Schooler finished with hitless relief for his 14th save in 14 opportunities.

Johnson, a 6-foot, 10-inch lefthander, was wild in the first inning, giving up a hit and three walks to help the Indians take a 1-0 lead. But Brook Jacoby struck out to end the inning, beginning a string of 15 consecutive hitters Johnson retired.

The 25-year-old Johnson was 0-4 for Montreal this season before joining Seattle last month as part of the trade that sent Mark Langston to the Expos. Johnson was 3-0 for Montreal last September in his first trip to the majors.

Cotto led off the eighth with his third home run, giving Seattle a 2-1 lead. Presley led off the ninth with his fifth homer.

John Farrell, 3-7, lost for the sixth time in seven starts, allowing six hits in 8 2-3 innings.

Jerry Browne started the first with a line-drive single just over the glove of shortstop Omar Vizquel, and walks to Felix Fermin and Pete O'Brien loaded the bases with no outs. One out later, Cory Snyder hit a sacrifice fly.

Luis Medina walked to reload the bases before Jacoby struck out, and Cleveland didn't have another runner until Joe Carter walked with two outs in the sixth. Dave Hengel singled with two outs in the seventh and Browne added a leadoff single in the eighth.

Milwaukee.....6
Baltimore.....0

BALTIMORE (AP) — Don August pitched a five-hitter for his second career shutout and Gus Polidor had three hits Saturday night, leading the Milwaukee Brewers past the Baltimore Orioles 6-0.

August, 6-6, won his third stright start, striking out two and walking four. His previous shutout was last Aug. 11 against Boston.

Jeff Ballard, 9-2, lost for the first time in seven starts, allowing four runs and six hits in three innings. He was replaced by Mark Huismann, who allowed one run in two innings before leaving with a strained right shoulder.

Baltimore, which lost for the third time in 11 games, was shut out for the sixth time this season.

Milwaukee took a 2-0 lead in the first on Glenn Braggs' RBI double and Polidor's run-scoring single. Robin Yount's run-scoring groundout in the third made it 3-0.

Kansas City.....5
California.....4

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Danny Tartabull hit a two-out home run off Greg Minton in the eighth inning Saturday night, lifting the Kansas City Royals past the California Angels 5-4.

Minton, 1-2, relieved Bert Blyleven to start the seventh and allowed his first home run this season.

Tom Gordon, 7-2, pitched two innings, allowing two hits, walking two and striking out two. Steve Farr pitched the ninth for his 12th save as the Angels lost for the fourth time in five games.

Bret Saberhagen took a one-hit shutout into the seventh. Devon White and Wally Joyner singled and Brian Downing's single scored both runners and chased Saberhagen.

California tied it in the eighth off Gordon. Dick Schofield led off with a single, Claudell Washington walked and Gordon's wild pitch moved up the runners. White then singled in two runs.

Oakland.....5
Texas.....1

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — Storm Davis, making his first start since May 17, increased his career record against Oakland to 12-1 as he led the Athletics past the Texas Rangers 5-1 Saturday night.

Davis, who missed three weeks with a strained left hamstring, struck out six in five innings, allowed two hits and walked one. The only run he allowed was a second-inning homer by Ruben Sierra. Sierra has 10 home runs this season and five in his last nine games.

Davis, 4-3, threw 72 pitches before Todd Burns came in to start the sixth. Burns allowed two hits in 2 2-3 innings, striking out four, and Rick Honeycutt finished with hitless relief.

Bobby Witt, 5-6, gave up seven hits and all five runs in 7 1-3 innings. He walked seven and struck out four.

Oakland scored four runs in the first. Witt walked Luis Polonia, Dave Henderson and Mark McGwire to load the bases. Ron Hassey hit a two-run double, Carney Lansford followed with an RBI single and Hassey scored on Tony Phillips' sacrifice fly.

Minnesota.....11
Chicago.....8

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Jim Dwyer hit a grand slam off Bobby Thigpen with two outs in the eighth inning Saturday night as the Minnesota Twins rallied from a four-run deficit and beat the Chicago White Sox 11-8.

Minnesota, which trailed 7-3 and 8-5, began the eighth down by two runs. Thigpen, 0-3, opened the inning by hitting Dan Gladden with a pitch.

After Kirby Puckett flied out, Carmen Castillo and Gary Gaetti singled to make it 8-7.

Thigpen walked Gene Larkin on four pitches, loading the bases, before getting ahead 0-2 on Dwyer.

Dwyer sent Thigpen's next pitch off the facing off the upper deck in right field for his second home run this year and third career grand slam.

It was Minnesota's first homer in five games and only the second blown save in 12 chances for Thigpen.

Juan Berenguer, 3-2, the fourth of five Minnesota pitchers, got the victory. Jeff Reardon struck out the side in the ninth for his 10th save.

The White Sox had 12 hits, giving them 25 hits and 16 runs off Minnesota in two games.

Harold Baines, whose 441-foot homer into the right-field upper deck highlighted Chicago's 8-3 victory Friday, took a 3-2 pitch to almost the same spot in the first inning against Francisco Oliveras. This time, it was measured at 447 feet. It was Baines' eighth homer of the year and fourth in eight at-bats.

After the Twins tied it in the second on Greg Gagne's RBI double, Dave Gallagher's third-inning RBI single put the White Sox ahead 2-1.

New Pitching Rule Gets Good Reaction

By Woody Peele
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

A change in the baseball pitching rules is getting generally positive reaction from coaches throughout the area.

The new rule, passed by the North Carolina High School Athletic Association, which governs the athletic programs of most of the state's high schools, limits the number of innings and the number of appearances a pitcher may make during a three-day period.

For those schools blessed with several good pitchers, it means little change. For those who struggle with one or two, it could bring on a number of problems.

The new rule, which takes effect with the 1990 season, limits a pitcher from throwing more than 12 innings over a three-day period. A pitcher can also make only four appearances over those three days.

A pitcher will be considered to have pitched an inning if he throws as many as one pitch in an inning. And a pitcher will have been deemed to have made a new appearance if he leaves the game for a relief pitcher, then later returns in the same game.

As an example, a pitcher starts a game, throws for two and a third innings, then is removed. In the sixth, he returns with one out and finishes the game. He is considered to have thrown five innings and made two appearances.

Schools in the 1-A classification are likely to feel the greatest impact from the rule, Coach Jerry Ange of Jamesville believes. Jamesville, like many other 1-A schools, doesn't have the numbers that larger schools have, thus less of a pool for pitchers.

"But it's best for the kids," Ange said. "Usually I try to develop two kids to work one game each a week. Then, I have another who can come in and help some.

"But there are some coaches who will work a kid too much," Ange said. "Twelve innings is enough in three days. It's a situation they needed to deal with, but it will cause some problems for teams that don't have several good pitchers."

Nolan Respess, the veteran coach at Roanoke, will see his school move from the 2-A to the 1-A ranks next year, and he admits that it could be hard on school's his size, too.

"It's a good rule; something had to be done. I don't believe I've ever pitched a kid too much except may one time. I've had kids come to me and ask to pitch every opportunity, and I've done it, but I've seen kids throw their arms out, too. Coaches sometimes get into the heat of battle and don't think about those things.

"But this day and time," Respess said, "we have better coaching and better conditioning. If a kid is in good shape, he's not going to hurt his arm (in 12 innings). Still, you have to go with the individual. I've had kids who could throw every day and not get hurt and others who could pitch one day and not be able to throw again for a week and something had to be done to protect them."

Bill Davis, the coach at Farmville Central, was a high school pitcher himself and is happy with the new rule. "It's good because there are some (coaches) out there who will abuse (a pitcher's) arm," he said. "I don't think there are many of them, but you have some. Most are not going to (hurt someone), but there are some who would pitch a kid with a good arm every chance they get."

Accompanying the new pitching rule is another that would allow teams to play four instead of three games in a week, and Davis is not happy with that. "Right now, I think three games in a week is enough. Most schools don't have the pitchers to play more than three. More than three is just too much for high school kids."

Allan Wilson, coach of 3-A D.H. Conley, had mixed feelings about the new rule, however. "I think the number of innings should be a little bit higher than 12," he said. "You have a lot of kids who can pitch more than that. I would like to see it at least 14 (innings).

"I've had pitchers who could pitch seven innings today and come back tomorrow and do a good job. I would hop that a coach would be responsive to the limitations of a kid and not purposefully hurt a pitcher's arm. I just don't know where they came up with 12 (innings)."

Ronald Vincent, the coach of 4-A Rose High School, says his classification would probably be hurt the least by the rule. "I'm in favor of it, very much in favor of it," he said. "But it won't affect me at all because I've never done it.

"I do see too many pitchers used up trying to win one relatively unimportant ball game. But you would think that it would affect the larger schools the least," Vincent said.

The NCHSAA has also approved a state-wide rule for breaking ties, and will allow non-conference meetings between conference teams to come into play where needed.

This rule would be used when the two teams split during their conference meetings (as in basketball or baseball). If they met in a non-conference game, such as in an in-season tournament, then the results of that game would decide the issue.

This would make the Pitt County Christmas basketball and the Pitt Easter baseball tournament's more important in the future, since some of those games could decide a tie which might occur later in the season.

Wichita State Wins NCAA Title

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

OMAHA, Neb. — Wichita State won its first NCAA baseball title Saturday as Greg Brummett tied a record with his third College World Series triumph and Pat Meares hit a two-run homer in a 5-3 victory over error-plagued Texas.

Brummett, 18-2 for the season, allowed six hits and one earned run in becoming the seventh pitcher to get three tournament victories. Brummett, who beat Arkansas 3-1 and 8-4 earlier in the tournament, struck out six and walked four.

"I have my best stuff probably of the whole series," said Brummett, who was the tournament's Most Valuable Player. "Three days rest was not enough. I was throwing on guts out there."

Meares' second homer of the tournament and ninth of the year with one on in the fifth provided the winning margin for the Shockers, 68-17.

"These kids, they tried so hard," Wichita State coach Gene Stephenson said. "They're everything America stands for. To overcome everything we had to overcome — (outfielder Jeff) Bonacquista out for the season and (shortstop Mike) Lansing out for the season — it was just incredible. I'll be numb for weeks."

Texas ended its season 53-18.

"We didn't play well but you have to credit Brummett for a fine job," Texas coach Cliff Gustafson said. "The best team is the winner. They did it the hard way."

Wichita State lost to Miami in its only other title game, in 1982. It was the eighth title game for Texas, which has won four times.

Brummett started slowly, walking Lance Jones and giving up a single to David Tollison to put the first two batters on first and third in the first. But he picked off Tollison and struck out Scott Bryant and Arthur Butcher.

Bryant, Texas' starting pitcher, was plagued by control troubles, walking four leaving after 2-3 of an inning trailing 1-0.

Jim Audley walked to lead off for Wichita State, but was caught stealing. Bryant then walked P.J. Forbes, got Mike McDonald to fly out and walked Eric Wedge. Bryant Winslow, playing on a stress fracture in his right leg, followed with a single to left that scored Forbes.

It was the first hit in two series games off Bryant, who allowed five walks in 4 1-3 innings in a 12-2 win over Miami on Monday. When he walked Meares following the single, he was relieved by Brian Dare.

Wichita made it 3-0 in the second with the help of three Texas errors.

Mike Jones led off with a grounder that bounced off third baseman Craig Newkirk for a two-base error. Mike Wentworth singled him to third.

Then Audley grounded to third but Newkirk, who threw to the plate, dropped the ball during the rundown and Jones scored. Wentworth scored when second baseman Tollison's relay to first on a potential double play grounder by McDonald skipped past first baseman David Lowery.

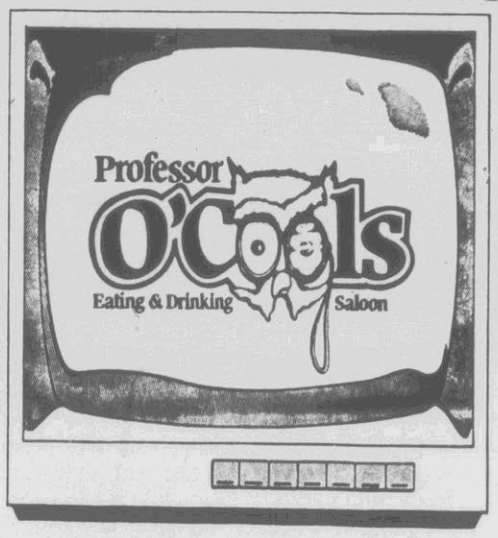

Texas cut it to 3-2 with two unearned runs in the fourth.

Bryant, who remained in the game as a designated hitter, singled with one out after Todd Dreifort dropped his foul pop and Butcher and Newkirk singled to load the bases. Bryant scored on Lowery's sacrifice fly and, after a walk to Jeff Shults, Butcher scored on Winslow's error at first.

Lance Jones led off with a bunt single in the Texas fifth and collided with Winslow at first, reinjuring Winslow's stress fracture and forcing him to leave the game.

Wilson, Winslow's sub, singled with one out in the fifth and scored when Meares hit his ninth homer of the season and second in as many days at the CWS well over the left-center fence. Meares also had a solo homer in the 12-9 win over Florida State Friday night that put the Shockers in the title game.

Massey Grabs Bradley Lead

By Tom Foreman Jr.
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

HIGH POINT — It was Debbie Massey's day to be first in the Pat Bradley International — first off the tee, first to finish and, most importantly, No. 1 on the leaderboard.

Massey's 13 points held up through a mid-afternoon challenge from local favorite Nina Foust Saturday and gave her a one-point victory in the third round of the $400,000 tournament.

"I just feel good every year when I play here," Massey said. "I come out with that kind of a feeling that everything's going to be alright."

Massey, playing in a group that teed off at 7:10 a.m., won $6,000 for shooting the best score in the field of 72 at Willow Creek Golf Club. Foust, 70th on the LPGA money list, won $3,000.

The top 36 scorers advanced to Sunday's final round, where they will battle for $62,500 first-place money. The 36 players who went home each received $1,000.

Under the modified Stableford scoring system, Saturday's scores will not carry over to the final round.

Massey, in her 13th year on the Tour, had her first round stretched out over two days because of rain delays. After leaving the course Friday night with four points, she had packed her bags, thinking she had missed the cut. A late phone call from her caddy gave her the good news, and on Saturday, she cashed it in.

"Today, I came alive again. I had five birdies and two bogeys and played the kind of round it takes to do well in this tournament," Massey said. "I feel like I live at this golf course."

Massey, who spends the entire week of the tournament in the High Point area, played in regulation through the first four holes before hitting a 6-iron shot to within 12 feet at the fifth hole for a birdie and three points. Using good shots with her fairway irons, Massey birdied three of the next four holes for 12 points through the front nine.

On the back side, Massey bogeyed two of the first three holes to fall back to 10 points. She sank a 10-foot putt at 13 for a birdie and her final total. She has only two victories on the Tour, the last one in 1979.

Massey said she will not alter her approach for Sunday's final round.

"I really cannot look at this tournament as a different way of playing golf. I think that's one of the reasons I seem to have played pretty well," she said. "You just go out and play the type of golf it takes to win a golf tournament."

Foust, who grew up about 30 minutes from the Willow Creek course, took the lead with 14 points after making a short birdie putt at the par 4, 14th. A bogey at 15 tied her with Massey, but she three-putted from 25 feet on the 18th green and fell back into second place.

Foust said the strategy for Sunday's final round will be different. Instead of playing for early birdies and coasting, she and the rest of the field will have to charge each hole from start to finish.

"You can go from first to last pretty easily in this format, so you can't relax," she said. "You have to play 18 holes of golf."

Kathy Postlewait, Lisa Walters and Dawn Coe had 10 points apiece. Sarah Anne McGetrick scored 9 and five more players were at 8.

Defending champion Martha Nause, who survived a five-way playoff at sunrise for one of the final two spots in the third round, earned no points and missed the cut.

The tournament is being played under a modified Stableford scoring system, in which a golfer gets five points for eagle, three points for a birdie and none for par. Golfers lose a point for bogey and three points for a double bogey and worse.

Myra Blackwelder, the official leader in the first round after a scoring error was detected, scored minus-4 points and missed the cut.

Golf Notebook:

The Atlantic Coast Conference has committed to play its annual championship tournament at Rocky Mount's Northgreen Country Club for the next three years.

The tournament was played at the Rocky Mount club for several years before being moved away because of the club's alleged restrictive membership policies. Those problems, however, were cleared up and the tournament returned there this past April.

Gene Corrigan, the commissioner of the ACC, recently notified the club that because of the "outstanding job" it did with the 1989 tournament, it would host the event for the next three years also.

The entry deadline for the Insurance Youth Classic is Thursday. The tournament is open to amateur golfers under 18, and one of the state's regional tournaments is to be held at Brook Valley Country Club on July 10. Entry forms are available at most Independent Insurance Agents, and at Brook Valley.

Regional winners will advance to the state tournament at Foxfire Resort & Country Club on July 22-23, with the winner and the top three runners-up qualifying for the national tournament, to be held in Texarkana, Ark., Aug. 3-8.

Golfers must not have reached their 18th birthday by Aug. 9, 1989, to be eligible.

Brook Valley Country Club will be one of the qualifying sites for the 15th annual Michelin National Long Driving Championship.

The tournament, which is open to both amateurs and professionals, will be held on June 26 at noon. An entry fee of $5 per three balls is charged, but there is no limit on the number of entries a person may purchase. Proceeds benefit the PGA of America's Junior Golf Foundation.

More than 10,000 competitors took part in the event across the nation last year with Raleigh's Jim Maynard, a 6-6 sales director, winning the title with a drive of 334 yards in the finals.

Local qualifiers will advance to one of 15 district sites in July. From there, 25 will be selected to move on to the nationals Nov. 4-5 at Ruby Golf Course, Bahamas Princess Resort & Casino, Freeport/Lucaya, Grand Bahama Island, The Bahamas.

Brook Valley Country Club

Brook Valley Country Club held its annual club championship this past weekend with Don White Jr. taking first place in the men's championship flight. White carded a 142 for the 36-hole event. Tee Davies took second place with a 145.

In the first flight, Julius Budacz took first place with a 153 while Jeff Cargile was second at 155. Charlie Mitchell won the second flight with a 154, with Stacey Whittington, second, at 155. Al Haverty took the third flight, carding a 162, while Enoch Reid was second at 163. Jerry Brookshire was the fourth flight winner at 161, followed by Robert Amerson at 167.

Jay Collie won the 50-59 Seniors Division at 154, followed by Horace Topping with a 160. Willard Wilson won the 60-and-over division with a 157 while Joe LaMotte was second at 162.

Greenville Country Club

Peggy Barnes and Sue Castellow took low gross honors at a recent Ladies Day tournament at Greenville Country Club. Barnes had the low score for nine hole players, while Castellow had the low score for 18 holes.

Carol Irons had low net for nine holes, while Betty Lou Howard took low net honors for those playing 18 holes.

A number of junior events are scheduled for the coming week. A junior clinic will be held Monday through Wednesday. It is open to junior members, ages 8-17, boys and girls, at no charge. Instruction will be given from 9 to 10 a.m., with play from 10-11:30 a.m.

Monday afternoon, a Teen-ager Captain's Choice Tournament will be held for nine holes. On Tuesday at 1 p.m., the junior putting championship will be held, while on Thursday, a best-ball of pair tournament for nine holes will be held. These events are open to junior members ages 13-18.

The Michael Jordan Celebrity Golf Classic will be held Sunday at the club and the course will be closed to other play. Participants will also have precedence on the course on Saturday for practice rounds.

Moody Pulls Out To 6-Shot Lead

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PONTE VEDRA, Fla. — Orville Moody pulled away from the field with a course-record 64 Saturday, taking a six-shot lead after three rounds of the Senior Tournament Players Championship.

The 1969 U.S. Open winner had eight birdies and no bogeys on the par-72, 6,646-yard TPC at Sawgrass Valley Course to finish with a 54-hole total of 16-under-par 200, also a record for the $700,000 Senior PGA Tour event.

Charles Coody had a 66 and Lou Graham had a 67. But that was only good enough to tie them with second-round leader Gary Player for second place at 206. Player birdied the last two holes for a 72.

Al Geiberger, Butch Baird and Miller Barber were next at 209.

"Orville's sitting in a good position. It's his tournament to win or lose," Graham said. "If he plays well, we can't catch him. And even if he plays poorly, everyone else will have to play exceptionally well."

Moody's 64 broke the previous course record of 65 set by Don January in the third round of the 1988 Senior TPC. Arnold Palmer and Chi Chi Rodriguez held the previous 54-hole record of 10-under-par 206.

Moody, who won four tournaments last season but has yet to win in 1989, birdied three holes on the front nine to open a two-shot lead over Palmer, then left everyone behind with four consecutive birdies to start the back nine.

"You start doing well and it seems you can't do anything wrong," said Moody, whose birdie putts ranged from two to 20 feet. "I felt like I was in a trance, like I could birdie every hole."

Player, the 1987 Senior TPC winner, started the day with a one-stroke advantage over Baird and a two-shot lead on Moody, Palmer and Barber.

But he faded with bogeys on No. 3 and No. 7, while Palmer stayed close to Moody for eight holes before falling apart on the back nine.

Palmer, a two-time Senior TPC champion, double-bogeyed No. 14 just before a 97-minute weather delay. He double-bogeyed No. 15 when play resumed and then bogeyed No. 16 to fall 12 strokes back.

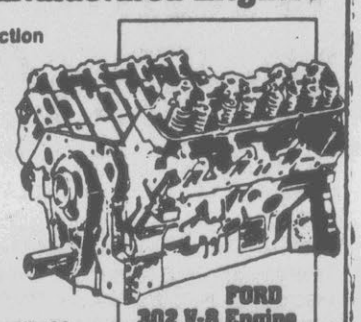

Palmer rallied with an an eagle on the par-5 17th hole, but bogeyed No. 18 to finish with a 75 and was at 211 entering the final round.

"I feel terrible about what happened to Arnold the last few holes," Moody said. "He had played so well, but a few bad shots really cost him."

River Plantation Set To Open Work

By Tom Morris
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Originally, River Plantation, a planned golf/residential development near Falkland, hoped to be under construction by March.

Now more than three months later, it appears ground-breaking could be four to six weeks away.

The development was announced this past winter and developers hoped to have it ready by the spring of 1990.

The course, country club and living community will be located between Otter Creek, the Tar River, N.C. 43 and N.C. 222. Officials hope to add another 18 hole course in the future.

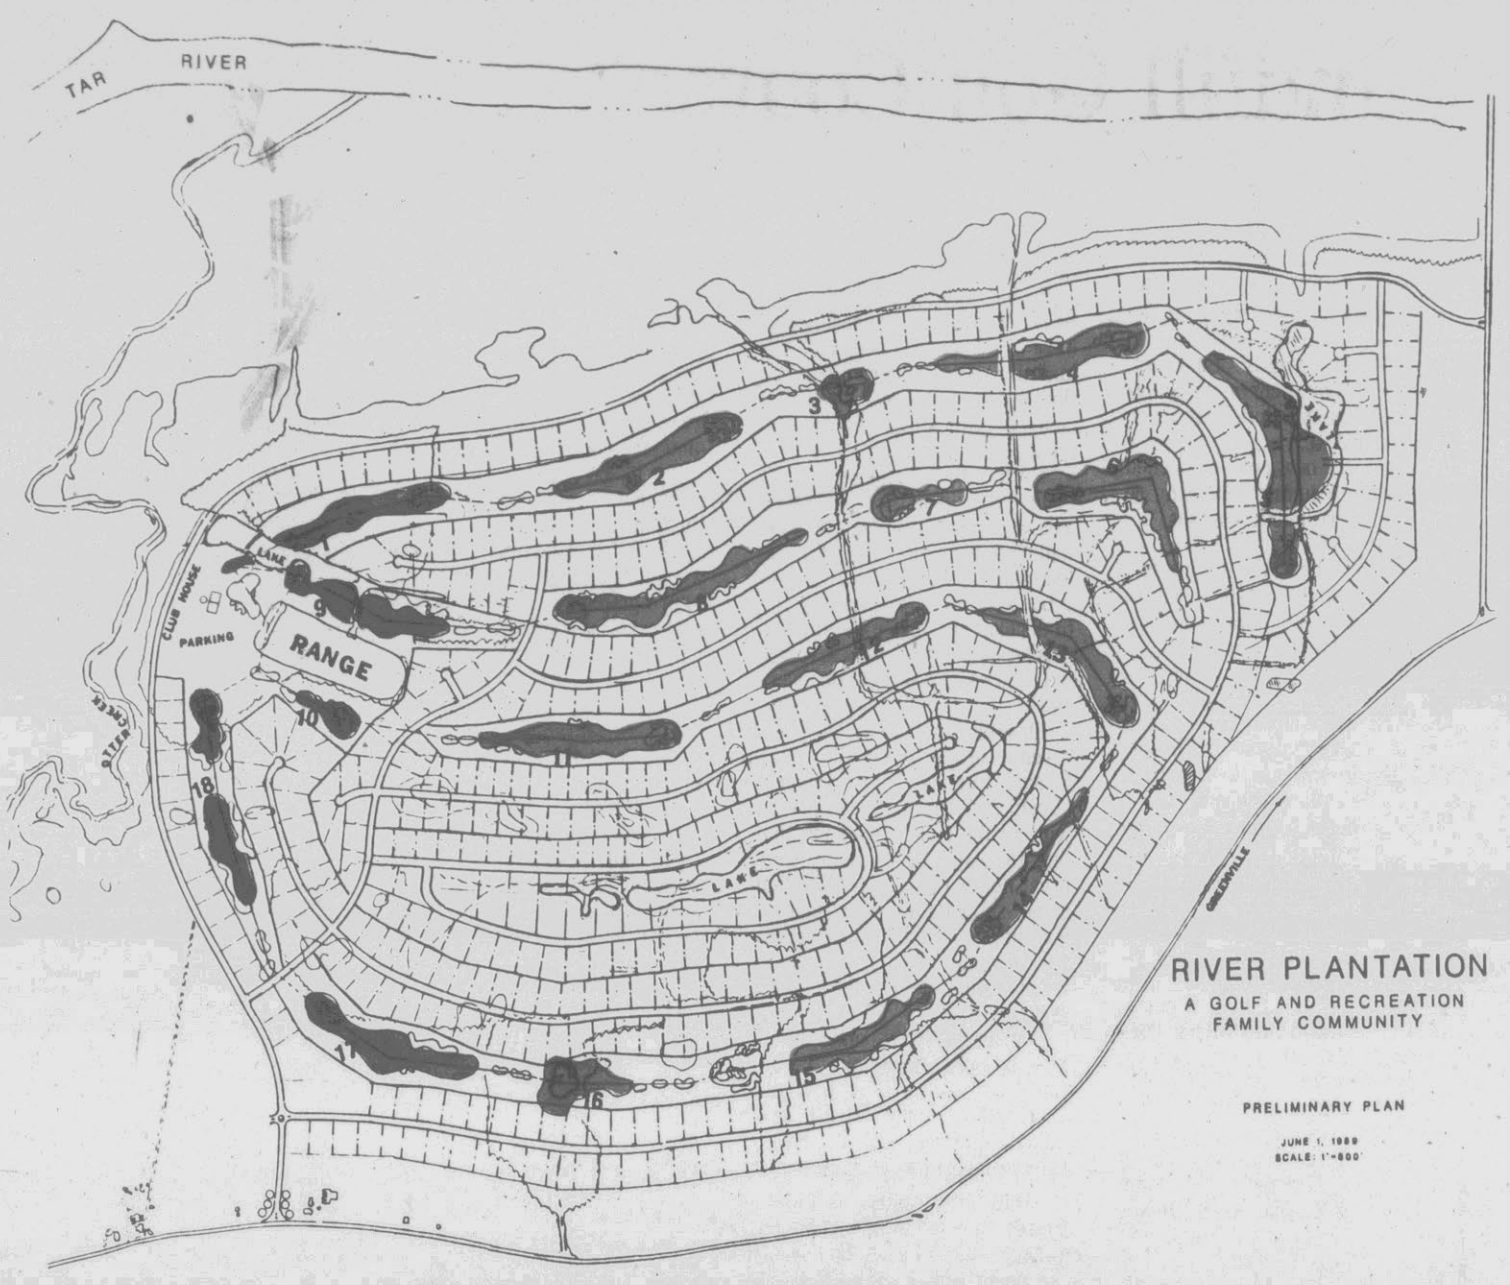

"We're making a lot of progress," Steve Gwaltney, president of Golf Development Corporation. "There was a lot of red tape (with) permits and environmental concerns. In general in 1989, it's getting more technical and more in depth and it's going to continue. The laws are getting stricter, which is good."

River Plantation officials are awaiting results of an Army Corps of Engineers survey and, after that, approval by Pitt County officials.

"We should have a final plan in the next couple of weeks," Gwaltney said. "It's taken us a little bit longer than expected. That's not bad. A lot of times, things can slow you down for more than a year."

Initially, environmentalists including Dr. Vincent J. Bellis, an ECU Biology professor, raised concerns about the effect of development on the Otter Creek wildlife habitat located nearby the proposed course.

Gwaltney said River Plantation officials worked out those concerns with environmental officials. The plans for River Plantation are for very low density development that is more suitable to preserving the area, he added.

Local Golf ...

Adds Farmville pro Tom Braswell, "Our outside play has increased tremendously in the last five years and our membership has grown.

"The population is on the increase in the county. As population grows, increase in golf and recreational sports grows."

While it's still not hard to get a tee time at any of the local courses that allow open play, that could change.

"I'm sure more courses will be needed within the next 10 years, one that would allow open greens fee play," Smith said.

"We've always had it as a form of generating extra revenue. Probably a good third of our budget is based on outside play."

One alternative for Pitt County area golfers is a new golf development near Falkland called River Plantation. The development was announced this past winter with developers hoping to have the course ready for play by the spring of 1990.

The private course and a planned residential area are to be located between Otter Creek, the Tar River, N.C. 43 and N.C. 222 near Falkland. One 18-hole course will be built initially with another 18 holes to be added later.

Originally, River Plantation was to be a member-exclusive club, but officials from the club have decided to allow open greens fee play on the course, at least initially.

"Greenville has been in need for at least another 18-hole golf course," River Plantation pro Ken Worthington said. "At first, particularly, we are not going to advertise we're open to the public, but at the same time we will be. We want to show people the property and let them see the lots. It will be years down the road before it would be so private we won't allow people to play."

River Plantation officials hope to begin construction on the golf course in the next four to six weeks.

Another alternative for new links is converting the old city landfill located between East Fifth Street and the Tar River into a nine-hole public course.

The city already owns this land and could develop it into a nine-hole course for roughly $500,000, according to Boyd Lee, executive director of the Greenville Recreation and Parks Department.

As for the city or county developing a new 18-hole public golf course, the possibilities are remote at best. The costs are just too high.

"It takes so much land for a golf course without it being a real estate development like we're doing," Worthington said. "It's not feasible to pay the high price to build a golf course. Public courses are lagging behind because of that."

According to NGF figures, building an 18-hole golf course can cost between $1 and $4 million, sometimes more depending on land costs — a lot of money to borrow from a bank.

"It may be more risky because of the upkeep of the course. It requires constant attention," Frank Krajewski, a business services officer with BB&T in Raleigh, said. "There is a lot more to developing a golf course/real estate project than your normal real estate/development.

"Cash flow for the project is a big determinant of the viability of a golf course to gain and repay a loan."

Of late, developers are finding that only when a course is combined with a housing development, like River Plantation, can some of the costs be deferred.

"It's finances and the price of land," Smith said. "Any kind of golf course project now you would have to combine it with real estate to be able to afford it. When you do that, most people don't want it to be open to the public. It's a catch 22. You're going to need $1 million to build a good golf course."

In the past, the government has made funds available in smaller communities to develop recreational facilities. Courses such as Maccripine in Pinetops and Minnesott Beach in Carteret County were developed this way.

"I'd say (that program was done away with) in the sixties. It was an administration thing and cutting back in federal programs," Burbaum said.

So that leaves it up to individual city and county governments to provide the funds, or private companies willing to develop a course and eventually turn it back to a municipality.

Either way, it's anything but an easy proposition.

Landfill Golf Course? ...

an outlet for area golfers either unable or unwilling to join a private club.

"Sixty-five percent of the rounds being played in the United States are being played on public golf courses," said Bill Burgaum, vice president of communications for the National Golf Foundation in Jupiter, Fla.

Of the 211 new courses opened across the country last year, 60 percent were public courses, according to NGF figures.

"That's where the future is," Burgham said. "Of the courses that need to be built, about 60 percent need to be in the public sector. There is a great opportunity for municipal/public golf courses. Here you have customers who want to play and people waiting in the wings to play if there was a place to play."

Set to begin construction in the next four to six weeks is River Plantation near Falkland, which will feature an 18-hole course, country club and residential area. This course will, however, allow open greens fee play.

The topic of building a public course at the old landfill has been introduced at town council meetings in the past, but it hasn't generated much interest.

"When (we) brought it up to council, there wasn't a lot of response," Greenville City Manager Greg Knowles said. "It was kind of low key. it's something we didn't pursue that fast."

In some respects, the idea makes a lot of sense. The biggest deterrent to public golf course development presently is the cost involved. The city won't have to acquire new land since it already owns the tract. In addition, the construction work could be split between the city's public works and recreation and parks departments, which would further reduce costs.

"If the city is ever going to have a course, this is the site to have it. When we designed the landfill, we designed it hoping that someday it would be a golf course," said Mayo Allen, director of public works.

"I'd like to see it done. I don't believe it's asking for too much. You've already got the land, and that's not doing nothing out there. I say put it to use."

Lee said the city has looked into development grants to try and reduce some of the costs involved in the project, but that none were available.

"It would, from all studies, be a revenue producer for the city," he said. "So, we like it from that standpoint. The potential is here with all the college students that like to play. There really is a great number of people here that could support a public course. Everything indicates a public course would go. It's just a matter of getting the revenue to get it going.

"We just at some point have to bite the bullet and make the initial investment. There has also been talk of some private individuals getting into it. Every time we hear it, we encourage it.

"The initial funding is the big kicker," Lee added. "Our biggest problem and maybe the reason we never developed is it's only nine holes. You can't generate the income or get the play you need (on nine holes). You need land for 18 holes."

While the land and location seem perfect for a course, others share Lee's concern over how much play the area could handle since it will only be enough for nine holes.

"Even a first-class, well-operated course can only play 200 to 225 rounds a day," Farmville pro Tom Braswell said. "There's just not enough light in the day to do more. You just can't put any more players out there. With a nine hole course, you would (be) lucky to get 125 rounds. That's not going to solve any problems. But that's only my opinion."

While a nine-hole course wouldn't be much of an outlet for future growth for area golfers, it could still be a benefit, according to River Plantation pro Ken Worthington.

"Nine holes would help a little bit," he said. "But what you would draw there, you wouldn't draw the real avid golfers. They want to play 18 holes. The nine hole course would be for occasional golfers, college students. It would be more for recreation. Oh, yes, it would certainly be a good recreation area, but that is all you could consider it."

But that would offer a viable alternative to the occasional golfer who is lucky to play just a few times a year. At the same time, it might also limit traffic to a certain degree on the other courses for the more serious golfers.

But nine hole courses aren't obsolete either.

Nine-hole Courses in Robersonville, Bayview near Bath and Windsor in Bertie County all do good business. In addition, Washington Country Club, Williamston Country Club, Farmville and Indian Trails all started out as nine-hole courses before expanding to 18.

Speed Paces Qualifying

SONOMA, Calif. (AP) — Lake Speed, driving an Oldsmobile Cutlass, led second round qualifying Saturday for the Banquet Foods 300 at Sears Point International Raceway.

Speed earned the 26th starting spot for Sunday's 75-lap, 300-kilometer race with a lap of 1 minute, 40.963 seconds, an average of 89.855 mph.

That was a considerable improvement from Speed's first round lap Friday of 1:44.239, 87.031 mph.

"I thought I blew it so bad," Speed said. "The (Saturday) lap was terrible. I thought I ran a 1:46."

The fast lap Saturday would have put Speed fifth overall if he had turned it Friday.

"Some places around the track I ran good, but some were so bad," Speed said. "I just choked. We've been fighting a missing motor all week. This is a new car — it's never been on a track before.

"It was set up just about perfect right out of the trailer. Every time we change something on the car, we wind up changing it back to the way it rolled off the trailer."

Terry Labonte, a former Winston Cup champion who spun off-course in first-round qualifying, was second Saturday at 1:42.306, 88.675 mph, in a Ford Thunderbird.

Michael Waltrip, who hit a tire wall and turned his car over Friday, was next. He drove the repaired but still battered Pontiac Grand Prix to a lap of 1:42.633, 88.393 mph, to take the 28th spot in the 42-car lineup.

Mike Beam, Waltrip's crew chief, said his team used 180 yards of duct tape to help hold the repaired car together.

"We considered using our back-up car for a few minutes, but the car Michael rolled was handling so well we figured we'd give it our best shot to repair it," Beam said. "Plus we didn't want to risk tearing up two cars this weekend — the back-up is the one we'll use at Pocono next week."

Another driver who had problems Friday was seven-time Winston Cup champion Richard Petty, who failed to finish a qualifying lap because of a broken differential.

Whitetail Deer Clover Research

According to test results just released by the Whitetail Institute of North America (WINA), the vegetation preferred most by deer in a new clover known as Imperial Whitetail Clover. The Whitetail Institute of North American serves as a clearinghouse of information, research, and other general matters of topical interest devoted exclusively to the whitetail deer.

According to Ray Scott, President of the Institute, this newly developed clover by Cal/West Seeds of California can help attract deer and improve the overall quality of the species, particularly antler development and fawn quality.

"Whitetail deer are just like people. They know what foods they like to eat and they're attracted to them. Our tests and the field testing by scores of hunters across the country have proven that deer prefer to browse this newly-developed closer by a margin of up to five to one over other clovers and other kinds of forages traditionally planted for whitetail deer management," Scott said.

Imperial Whitetail is a professionally formulated Ladino-type closer and was tested for several years against other clover, including Crimson, Regal, Arrowleaf, Osceola, White Dutch, Louisiana S-1, and other clovers commonly planted in North America. The new clover was also field tested by deer and turkey hunters alongside other plantings normally planted as deer attractants. Included were oats, ryegrass and seed wheat.

"While the whitetail really prefer Imperial Whitetail clover," Scott continued, "the real beauty of the clover is its long growing season. It keeps producing all year long and doesn't normally need annual reseeding. When the other clovers die out in the spring, form seed heads, and lose their taste and become tough to chew, Imperial Whitetail remains lush and tender year round. It's always good nipping for deer."

Randall Rogers, a consulting wildlife biologist and Executive Director of WINA, shares Scott's enthusiasm for the new seed variety. "In addition to the extended growing season, this new clover has an exceptionally high protein content. Over the period of a year, protein levels in this clover were tested to average over 20 percent, each month of the year, higher than other plantings observed. The consistently high year-round protein level is a crucial factor in the nutritional development of whitetails, particularly in antler development," Rogers said.

As most deer managers and hunters know, spring and summer are the important seasons in deer development. It's during these peak months that unborn fawns receive the foundations that will determine future growth patters for the rest of their lives. Also, these are the seasons of the year when bucks are growing their antlers. The odds are excellent that a big buck sporting a trophy rack in the hunting season enjoyed a steady and nutritious diet not only in the spring and summer months, but also in the fall and winter.

"We've field tested this new clover all over the country," Scott said. "It's performed well, particularly during the hunting seasons, in attracting deer in the southeastern United States. As far as can be determined, this clover should do well anywhere in the country except in areas with deep droughty soils with low fertility, such as south Texas. Research indicates that successful planting may be expected as far north as southern Canada."

The Whitetail Institute is looking for serious-minded, dedicated "food-plot" and "deep pasture" oriented hunters to be cooperative field testers of Imperial Whitetail Clover and other experimental plantings. Those who would like to participate in the program should contact the Whitetail Institute of North America, Rt. 1, Box, 3006, Pintala, Ala., 36043. Telephone (205) 281-3006.

Rough Week For Fishing

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Rough winds churned up the water along the North Carolina coast earlier this week, but conditions improved by midweek, leaving pier and marina operators hopeful for a smooth weekend.

"The winds have been ... out of the southwest for the last six days and the charter boats can't even get out," said Steve Hissey of Pelican's Roost in Hatteras. "It's really rough."

Hissey said he was hopeful the winds would abate by the weekend and the fish would start biting again.

Here is a look at conditions at selected areas as reported Wednesday:

Hatteras

When the offshore boats can get out, Hissey said, "they're catching wahoos and dolphins. There's a lot of dolphins and a few tuna starting to show up."

Hissey also reported catches of some cobia in the 50-pound range as well as big blues and Spanish mackerel.

"We got a few cobia around," he said. "Last week, they had a pretty good run of trout on the Hatteras Pier. "A few big blues on the Cape Point and early this week the Spanish were real good both at the inlet and Cape Point but now it's too sloppy.

"They're here, it's just too sloppy to fish for them."

Topsail Island

At the Jolly Roger Pier, Hardin Crouch reported a "mixed bag" of summer fish.

"We're just getting a mixed bag down here now, just your regular summer catch of fish," he said. "We're getting spots, a few whiting, grey trout and they did hit the Spanish pretty good here (Wednesday) morning. Some of the smaller Spanish came in and they had a right good catch of them."

Crouch also reported catches of pompano and flounder and said he is still waiting for the king mackerel to show up.

Wrightsville Beach

Rain kept the fishermen away earlier in the week, but Linda Reaves of the Crystal Pier said the fish had returned by Wednesday.

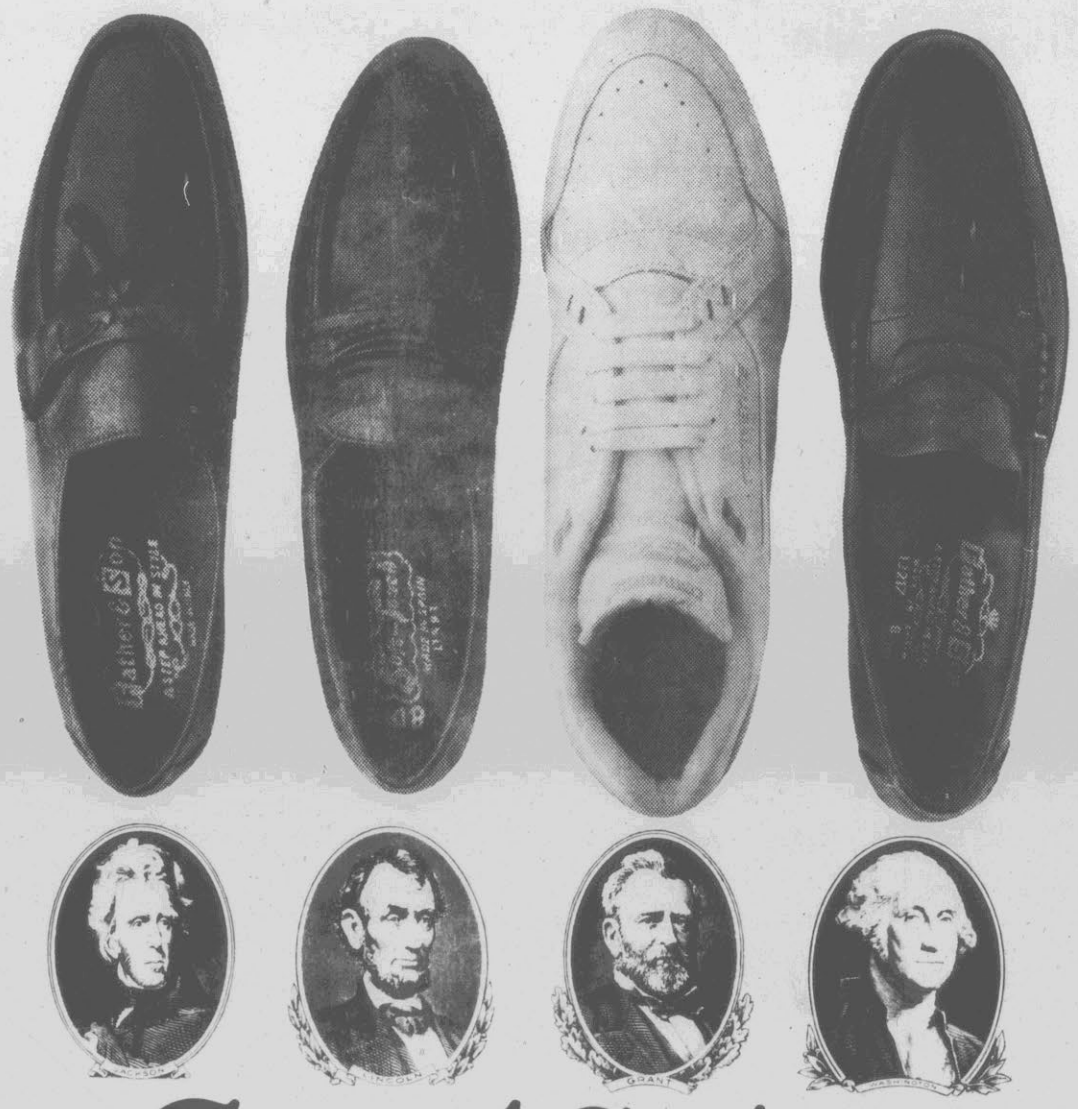

"We've been catching a few Spanish mackerel, a few blues and a few kings," she said.

Nags Head

Andy McCann of Nags Head Fishing Pier said the best fishing in his area was in the morning or late in the evening.

"The fishing has not been too good this week, mainly most of the fish

Forester Turns To The Sea

By Bill Schulz
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Michael Rugge, a forester who learned about the sea during two years working on a tugboat, decided its creatures needed more protection than exploitation.

So he moved out of his house and into a trailer sitting on a friend's land and founded the Sea Turtle Center, a small but active conservation group based in Nevada City, Calif. It is dedicated to protecting sea turtles and sea birds along the West Coast.

Rugge rents his home to provide income for the center.

He and his volunteers teach conservation in schools, taking a complete assortment of slides, furs, hides and bone to show students, help provide transportation and supplies for volunteers protecting 400,000 nesting seabirds on Rasa Island off Baja and rounding up volunteers to camp on the beaches of western Mexico to protect sea turtle eggs from poachers.

"We're on the Pacific Coast of Mexico in the State of Michoacan, supporting Laura Sarti's program with volunteers, educational materials and direct donations of camping material and supplies," Rugge said.

Volunteers prowl the beaches at night, collecting loggerhead turtle eggs and bringing them back to the nursery. Later in the season they also release hatchlings, which eventually will grow to be the half-ton turtles, largest of the sea turtles.

During their stay, the volunteers camp in tents.

"It's pretty much a hands-on project, including weighing adult turtles, which average 800 to 1,000 pounds," Rugge said. The volunteers release about 55,000 hatchlings a year, most of which would have been taken by poachers without protection.

Sarti and her volunteers from the University of Mexico have been working on the Michoacan beach for 10 years, protecting turtles and doing research. This year, Rugge said, the Sea Turtle Center was able to bring her to an international symposium on Jekyll Island, Ga., so she could present her work to the scientific community.

The field work is in the winter with leatherback turtles and in the summer with Pacific ridley turtles.

Spring is classroom time.

Using materials confiscated by the U.S. Fish and Wildlife service, Rugge and his volunteers take skins, hides, stuffed animals and other materials to the classroom "to give the kids a first-hand view of what this animal looks like stuffed, dead and skinned. Then we show them slides so they can see what it looks like alive and in its natural habitat."

The center also provides volunteers and some supplies to Mexican researchers on Rasa Island, in the Sea of Cortez.

"They do research and protect the nesting sea birds from poachers," he said. "In 1964, the population was down to 5,000 birds because people kept stealing the eggs. Since 1964, with people from the University of Mexico City on the island the population has grown to 400,000. We want to see this project keeps going."

The center is pretty much a one-man show.

"Funding for the first two years pretty much came out of my own pocket," said Rugge, who has a degree in forestry and also has worked in construction "which I fall back on if I have to."

"I've sold my car and reduced my expenses so I can be in the field most of the year. I've devoted my income to pretty much keeping the center alive," he said. "I'm single, 40, with no family ties. I can pretty much devote what salary I make into the center and travel expense."

In addition, the center has a slowly growing membership and has begun to receive support from the Coleman Foundation. Rugge is seeking more funding from a variety of agencies and foundations.

He's taking a slightly different approach to conservation, and that's helping the people in the field who are doing the grunt work.

"We need those people. They are the ones that are going to be keeping these species alive," Rugge said. "I think it's important we realize how much work these people have devoted in their lives, particularly those lacking funding and support in Third World countries. That's why we're in Third World countries."

will be notified and may pick up their permit at Pungo Refuge Headquarters starting at 4 a.m. on the day of the hunt. Applications must be received by 10 a.m. on Sept. 6, 1989.

Hunters under 16 must have successfully passed a state-approved hunter education course. Proof of such completion must be carried on the person of the hunter and each youth hunter must be supervised by an adult 21 or older.

Songbird Comeback

Amid the bad news about declining numbers of songbirds in North American, ornithologists are finding a bright spot. According to National Wildlife magazine, more than 20 varieties of songbirds seem to be expanding their ranges in this country.

Cardinals, house finches and American robins are among the birds whose home territory is growing. Researchers attribute the songbird spread to the dramatic increase in the number of Americans who put out bird feeders during the winter months.

are being caught early in tne morning or late in the evening," he said. "They're getting blues and speckled trout and we have had some spots in and out.

"Offshore they've been getting dolphin, wahoo, yellowfin tuna and the headboats have been doing real well with Spanish and small bluefish."

Swansboro

"It's kind of slack because of the weather," said John Dudley of Dudley's Marina.

"We're doing good on Spanish and blues. They are still catching a lot of croakers inside and getting some decent catches of flounder drifting in the inlet.

"When the boats can get out there they're doing good with the bottom fishing — snappers, groupers — and they're still catching nice cobia."

Dudley says the fish are out there, but the weather is not cooperating.

"If we had some pretty weather we'd have some good fishing," he said.

Carolina Beach

Fred Phelps of Carolina Beach Fishing Pier said activity was starting to pick up as the weather improved.

"The Spanish and blues picked up today (Wednesday) real well," he said. "They're picking up flounder and Virginia mullet early in the morning and the spots have been biting at nights.

"The spots are starting to show up more and more and getting a little bigger. Hopefully these last couple of days of storms will bring them in. Usually after sundown ... the fishing is great."

Dickerson To Sue Over Toy

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

INDIANAPOLIS — Indianapolis Colts running back Eric Dickerson is suing the NFL Players Association for allowing his likeness to be used on a children's toy and a video game.

Dickerson, the team's highest-paid player, has sued the Players Association, Kenner Products Co. Inc. of Cincinnati and Tecmo Inc. of Los Angeles for unauthorized use of his likeness.

If this hand looks familiar, it's because we started discussing it in Friday's column. The theme of the hand is "discovery," and we'll look at what happened in the other room of an all-expert team match, where the contract was the same—six clubs.

Here, too, West led the ace of clubs to cut down on dummy's ruffing ability, and continued the suit. And the declarer in this room did exactly what his opposite number did in the other—he won the second trick in dummy to lead the king of diamonds in an attempt to find out who held the ace.

But at this table East looked a bit deeper into the situation. The king of diamonds was an unusual play. If declarer had a diamond loser, he probably held no more than one spade, so why didn't he cash the spades for a discard? If declarer was void in diamonds, one discard was unlikely to help him, so East bravely followed with a low diamond.

Declarer ruffed, and thought he had all the information he needed. It looked like the ace of diamonds was with West, and he had already shown up with the ace of clubs. Therefore, East had to have the king of hearts for his opening weak two-bid. So declarer crossed to the king of spades and confidently led a heart to his nine. He was more than somewhat surprised when the finesse lost to West. Down one.

This May Be Good Year To Buy Second Home

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Tom Jackson, owner of a small electronics business in Texas, always dreamed of a vacation hideaway, where he and his family could play tennis or stroll on the beach any time they wanted.

But the 45-year-old Corpus Christi man couldn't afford to do more than look until the developers of a nearby Padre Island condominum slashed the price of their units by at least 40 percent.

He and wife Kay recently snapped up a "buy of a lifetime" two-bedroom, oceanfront condo for $113,000, and received easy financing.

"The only thing I regret is that I didn't buy a three-bedroom condo instead," Jackson said.

A number of equally anxious vacationers won't just be sunbathing at the beach, fishing the lakes and hiking the woods this summer. They're also likely to do some serious sightseeing in the local housing market.

Despite an overall slump in the property business nationwide, real estate experts say this season is turning out to be a hot one for many buyers.

Many parts of the country offer bargain prices due to the fallout from recent tax-reform changes, overbuilding, regional economic downturns and declining interest rates, experts say.

"If I was in the market for a second home ... I would consider now a good time to buy," said Tom Franks, a senior vice president for the American Resort & Residential Development Association, a Washington-based trade group. "There are a lot of good values out there."

Although bargains can be had in just about any state if you look hard enough, the market for the nation's 5.5 million vacation homes varies by region just as with vacation spots.

Some of the standouts this year, Franks and other experts say, include properties located in parts of Florida; the Rockies; the Texas gulf coast; Hilton Head Island, S.C.; Palm Springs, Calif.; and parts of New England.

Condominiums, in particular, carry big price cuts, experts say. Units in the low- to medium-price range, which were eagerly snapped up by investors during the inflationary 1970s and early 1980s, are being unloaded because the Tax Reform Act of 1986 eliminated most of the tax incentives on second homes, particularly for those who rent out their properties.

"There's more demand this year for detached homes, little less demand in condos. That's where I think one can do quite well," said Gary Dionne, an agent with ERA Byse Realtors, a Laconia, N.H., broker that sells vacation homes in resort areas like Lake Winnipesaukee.

He said vacation homes prices, in general, have flattened out in New Hampshire this year after skyrocketing two years ago. Prices range from around $75,000 to $500,000.

Condo prices on Hilton Head Island, S.C., have declined by about 40 percent overall from the mid-1980s, although oceanfront property hasn't been hurt as much, according to local broker Juliana Toon Pawley of Coldwell Banker & Co.

For as little as $25,000, bargain hunters can pick up a modest two-bedroom modular unit on the Atlantic, about a quarter of what they sold for five years ago, Mrs. Pawley said. More upscale oceanfront condos usually start at around $120,000, she said.

Further south, in the northern portion of Padre Island, Texas, where Jackson, the Corpus Christi electrician, bought his vacation home, waterfront units that sold for $200,000 three years ago now go for around $120,000, said one developer, Jack Ponton of Nisbet Ponton Corp.

"It's probably below cost," Ponton said, but added that prices are starting to rebound a bit from last year as the oil-driven Texas economy improves.

Out West, older homes and condos in the Rockies also have been especially hit hard, experts say.

Los Angeles accountant Stan Ross said the three-bedroom house he bought in the popular ski resort area of Park City, Utah, would probably fetch the same price he bought it at seven years ago — around $120,000.

But Ross is taking the market downturn in stride. He said he bought his vacation home as an easy getaway to enjoy and relax, rather than as an alternative to the financial markets.

Experts agree that prospective buyers should consider more than just price when looking for a second home.

What good is owning an inexpensive cabin across the country, for instance, if it costs a fortune to get there?

"Most middle-income buyers should look at some place that can be reached within a day's drive," said Franks. "You shouldn't buy something that doesn't have demand.

"It's kind of like anything in life: A bargain is not a bargain unless it's something you want," said Franks.

John Diamond, senior vice president for Real Estate Research Corp. in Chicago, said buyers should do some careful research before reaching any decision, like tracking local economic trends or making sure the area in which they plan to buy isn't being overbuilt.

It's also important to get a handle on local property taxes. "You want to make sure it is a vacation home," said Diamond. "Some people are shocked when they thought they bought a vacation home ... and found themselves faced with the high cost of providing schools and infrastructure in the far out suburbs."

Furniture Fair Shows Today's Home Stylings Designed For Fun In Living

By Barbara Mayer
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Gone are the days when modern furniture meant austere furniture.

The message from the first International Contemporary Furniture Fair in New York was that modern furniture is fun.

Table lamps that like a child's toy can be rearranged into different shapes, a sofa with a removable back and a chest of drawers treated as a "canvas" for a painting were some of the innovations at the recent trade fair of 188 exhibitors from the United States, Canada, England, Europe and Japan.

The goal during the four days at Javits Center was to provide an edited look at the best of the new, according to Susan Szenasy, editor of Metropolis. The magazine cosponsored the show with George Little Management, Inc., the trade show promoter.

The event unveiled two important new trends in modern furniture. One is the premium placed on originality and variety in materials and styles. The other is the dawn of a new era in distribution: making it accessible to the consumer without going through a decorator.

"This is furniture made by young people for their peers," said Charles Talley, editor of a design trade journal.

Many of the furniture makers represented are under 40. Their work — and that of their elders — shows a wide range of cultural influences and a rich mix of materials in highly personal pieces, many with design motifs from the past.

Besides wood, materials include rope, woven metal mesh, unwoven wool, chunks of granite, and broken glass, the edges polished smooth for safety.

While new ideas were dominant, especially in upholstery combining rounded and straight edges in geometric shapes, respect for the great designs of the past was also evident. Reinterpreting classics is the idea behind the Mondo Collection (by Mondo of Caruga, Italy). It includes a cocktail table based on the traditional Chinese k'ang table, dining chairs taken from a Chinese original and a sofa based on a garden bench favored in the 19th century.

A new concern was shown for comfort and utility, with adjustable lamps by Woka and convertible seating by several firms. A sofa with a moveable back and armrests by the Italian firm, Zanotta, can be a lounge, two-sided sofa or single bed. It sells for $4,000 in leather. The Italian firm, Arflex, showed a $2,000 square flat lounge. It turns up at each corner to provide shape and back support for sitting.

Perhaps the strongest trend at the show was to treat furniture as functional art. Use of unorthodox materials and methods is blurring the once firm lines separating craft, art and industrial design.

An example is Mark Parish's lamps. The New York-based designer showed freeform woven metal mesh shades atop a black metal base with a halogen bulb. His work was inspired by the luminarios of New Mexico, which are candles set in sand in brown paper bags.

Danny Lane's furniture may have been farthest from traditional thinking. The American now living in London was one of 14 exhibitors under the British Crafts Council flag. He brought a lounge made of individual slices of clear plate glass, set on a wood frame and held together with rope lashings. Consigned by the Richard Himmel Gallery in Chicago, it is available for $22,000.

Rob Womack of Richmond, Va., treats old furniture whose shape he likes as a canvas for painted images. Prices range from $1,200 to $7,500.

Not all pieces were blatant. Thomas Stender's classic wood tables, which rely on traditional joinery techniques, are quietly unique. One section of the table is plaited with laminated wood and colored in pastels.

Whereas once designs such as these might have been available in the United Staes only through designers, retailers are now found in many large cities.

The argument against selling adventurous modern pieces except through designers has always been that the public wouldn't buy them. But the growth of stores in major cities, including Los Angeles, San Francisco, Seattle, Chicago, Minneapolis, Detroit, Philadelphia, Boston and New York, proves that is no longer true if it ever was, said Szenasy.

"The direct marketing of high design to the public," she said, "is one of the most important trends."

On The House

By ANDY LANG

By Andy Lang
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Elderly persons, especially those using wheelchairs, often have special housing requirements.

In recent years, many architects have designed custom houses to meet the needs of those with age-related impairments. Remodelers, too, have been requested to make changes that will make life more comfortable for the disabled or those not actually disabled but elderly enough to exercise extra caution in their physical movements.

What must be taken into consideration is that a house is sometimes shared with members of the family who are neither elderly nor disabled nor in need of any special treatment. Such a house must meet the requirements of all its residents.

In that connection, architect Charles Koty of Searingtown, N.Y., has prepared a booklet that is included with the blueprints of any house designed by him specificallyfor a family where at least one member uses a wheelchair. It details all the adaptations recommended for such a person, yet cautions the owner that some of them can be ignored, some expanded and some modified. For instance, it may be decided that only certain bedroom doors must be widened or that only one bathroom requires adaptation to wheelchair use. The owner must always bear in mind the marketability of the house — that is, its potential for possible resale.

In a house he designed for wheelchair adaptation, Koty breaks down the plan into five categories — ramp and entranceway; doorways and hardware; kitchen cabinets and accessories; bathrooms and accessories, and miscellaneous items. These include such things as the elimination of door steps; the enlargement of the entry platform and having it flush with the floor finish; special saddles at the entrance door, and dozens of other moves designed to make it easier for the wheelchair user to move around.

One interesting item is the recommendation that doors to bathrooms should swing outwards toward the hallway or bedroom and be of a certain width. Koty suggests providing a pulley system or some other means to enable the person in the wheelchair to pull the door closed once inside.

In the kitchen, where counters should be about 29 inches high, full-height cabinets are convenient to a wheelchair user. The sink should have an open space beneath it for wheelchair accessibility. The underneath hot water pipe must be covered to prevent scalding. And the base cabinet should be deleted next to the range so the range can be easily used. The range reguires an opening of 30 inches. Where feasible, the windows over the sink should be about 6 inches longer than specified to adjust to a dropped counter top.

The bathroom sink requires an open space below for wheelchair accessiblity. You can install a standard toilet fixture, adding an adjustable seat insert to provide the extra height required.

Here's The Answer

By Andy Lang
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Q. — I am having some remodeling work done on my house this summer and have gotten a date when it will be finished. Some of my friends say no contractor ever finishes his work when he says he will. This has me worried. Are my friends right and will this cause me a lot of trouble?

A. — It can cause trouble, if it happens. Yes, remodeling contractors do have the reputation of often being late in finishing a job, but this is by no means always so. There's a legal angle connected with requiring them to finish on time or very close to the scheduled date, but what you should do is to try to avoid the problem. One way to do this is to hire a contractor who has been recommended to you by somebody who actually has used him for the job. Ask blunt questions. One would be whether the contractor completes an assigned task when he says he will. A dissatisfied customer usually is only too eager to tell you what went wrong.

Q. — I have read how difficult it is to tell which exact spot on a roof is responsible for a leak. That's right most of the time, but a neighbor helped me find the source of a roof leak without any trouble. He merely went into the attic on a sunny day, saw a trace of light coming through and ran a wire up through the opening. It then was easy to spot the wire from the top side of the roof. I thought your readers might be interested in this method.

A. — Many thanks. That's an oldtime method that sometimes works and sometimes doesn't. But if the sun is shining on your complete roof at the time you make an inspection — or even if there is sufficent light without any sun —it often will work.

Yale Materials Enlarging Facility To Meet Growing Forklift Demand

By Greg Laudick
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

In an effort to better meet the increasing demands for forklift equipment, Yale Materials Handling Corp. is enlarging its Greenville facility and adding new equipment.

The project, which began in April and is expected to be completed by the end of 1989, will add about 33,000 square feet to the existing Yale facilities on Greenville Boulevard, said Frank G. Muller, company vice president for manufacturing.

"What we are doing basically is trying to bring our capacity in line with our demand and what we perceive the demand to be in the future," Muller said in an interview Friday.

The $2.3 million expansion project will add 18,00 to the present 356,000 square foot structure and add 14,000 square feet to the 100,000 square foot building where Yale's internal combustion engine trucks are produced.

"The forklift truck industry has enjoyed record levels of demand during 1988 and that demand is continuing at about the same level in 1989," Muller said. "The combination of increased product demand and (the fact) that we have physically relocated some work from Japan to Greenville is why we have seen employment at the Greenville plant grow by over 200 people in the past 18 months and why we have been working significant amounts of overtime in 1988."

The company currently has 825 employees at the Greenville facility compared with 600 at the end of 1987. Muller indicated no additional employees are expected to be hired as a result of the expansion.

Muller said the additional square footage, along with the acquisition of additional machine tools, will enable the Yale facility to increase its efficiency. He estimated operating capacity, or total output of product, would increase by 15 percent at the project's completion.

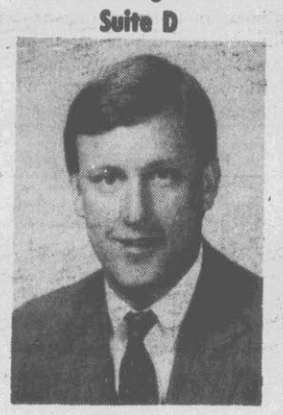

The growth of the Greenville facility is only part of the expansion of Yale's manufacturing abilities. Also undergoing rennovation, he said, is the company's other plant in Lenoir.

"Between both plants, we are spending over $4 million in capital investments in bricks and mortar as well as machine tools," he said.

The Greenville manufacturing plant is Yale's primary truck fabrication and assembly facility.

Among the items produced are electric riders, narrow aisle and motorized hand trucks, and forklifts for gas and electric trucks. Greenville is also the site of final assembly for gas and diesel powered trucks.

New Restaurant Caters To Sports Fans

By Greg Laudick
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Glancing momentarily away from the flow of beer as it pours from the tap, John Hallow quickly scans the perimeter of the bar like a quarterback reading an opponent's defensive coverage.

He checks to see if all the television sets are properly tuned, then gracefully sets the filled glass in front of a patron in a red sports shirt who earnestly believes the Detroit Pistons don't have a chance at beating the Lakers.

"For a long time I always wanted to own a sports restaurant and sports bar," Hallow said, taking a brief moment away from his duties as co-owner at the recently opened Final Score Sports Restaurant and Spirits. "I wanted to create a place where all sports would be shown all the time in a nice atmosphere, filled wall to wall with sports memorabilia."

Located at 2516 E. 10th St., the former location of the Southern Sportsman restaurant has been transformed into a sports-lover's paradise.

Pennants from championship teams, both professional and collegiate, line the doorways while posters of sports legends cover the walls and baseball caps dangle from the ceiling.

Waitresses in referees uniforms fill orders while scurrying around glass cases filled with historic athletic artifacts like footballs, baseball gloves and grass-stained uniforms.

"We've collected most everything here ourselves," said Hallow, who played both football and baseball while attending East Carolina University from 1978 to 1983. "As we were getting ready to open, a few people came by and donated some of the things, like a 1923 football uniform that we have in the hallway."

Prominently situated throughout the restaurant are three wide-screen televisions, along with four 25-inch sets. With both cable hookup and a satelite dish, Hallow said several different games can be aired on different televisions simultaneously.

"This is a very sports-minded town," he said, while emphasizing the word "very."

Sharing that belief is Hallow's co-owners, Greg and Gary Quintard, who own and operate the local Italian restaurant Villa Roma.

"We really felt that Greenville was ready for this type of concept," said Greg, who has had 12 years of restaurant experience with Villa Roma.

"The entertainment aspect of dining out has become extremely popular in the last few years," he said. "That's why we feel that this is such a good concept — especially with all the big-time sporting events on television such as basketball playoffs, college football and basketball and professional baseball.

"What we are trying to do here is the same thing we did at Villa Roma — give good portions, a good quality product and good service at reasonable prices. This way, if the customer is happy and they feel like they are getting a good deal, that's what builds the traffic count, keeps the people coming back and makes regular customers.

"A lot of time people go to restaurants and if they feel they are not getting their money's worth, then they don't come back. And we feel they are going to be getting their money's worth here."

Court Orders OSHA Reconsideration

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — A federal court has ordered the Labor Department to conduct a new review of the cancer risks of exposure to formaldehyde and also to reconsider its decision not to protect the earnings of workers disabled by the gas.

In a decision issued Friday, the U.S. Court of Appeals here said the department's Occupational Safety and Health Administration "has failed adequately to explain" its determination that the exposure limit for formaldehyde it set in 1987 made the cancer risk insignificant.

The court also said OSHA had offered a "feeble" explanation of its decision not to include in its standard for formaldehyde exposure provisions guaranteeing workers will be paid full wages and retain seniority rights during rehabilitation from any illness linked to the substance.

The court, ruling in a suit filed by several unions, upheld OSHA's decision not to require employers to provide annual medical examinations to workers who are exposed to formaldehyde.

Ex-Cops Find Market For Tortillas

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEWTON, N.C. — Three years ago, Chester Brunty and his wife, Christina, were on the Los Angeles police force, a world away from the tortilla factory they now run in Newton.

Brunty patrolled a Hispanic area of the city, a place where "every corner you turn there's a Mexican restaurant or bakery," he says.

But when a large earthquake rocked Los Angeles in 1987, an earthquake Brunty said threw them both out of bed, the two decided they had had enough. So they moved east, to Conover. Brunty's uncle Phil Riddle and his wife, Pat, lived in nearby Hickory.

When he left, Brunty took one piece of advice given him by a Mexican friend: "Find a place that needs tortillas."

That advice has turned into their tortilla factory, Casa Christina.

Both families are originally from California, and both Pat and Christina are of Mexican heritage.

"All we eat at home is Mexican," Christina Brunty says. "Pat and I keep the tradition."

When she was growing up, Christina Brunty said, she knew how to make tortillas by age 7. But the tortillas she found in North Carolina were different from the ones she had grown up on.

"It was a different style of tortilla, die-cut, white, thin and hard to use," she says. "We found it was very difficult for the Hispanic community here to find tortillas."

Brunty got together with Riddle, and the two families opened Casa Christina last August in an old grocery store in Newton. Since then, they have increased production six- or sevenfold and sell to Mexican restaurants all over the North and South Carolina and in Atlanta, she says.

"It's sort of strange, going from law enforcement to tortillas," Brunty says.

The company makes baked corn tortillas, which can be made into taco shells or cut and fried for tortilla chips; and soft flour tortillas for burritos or enchiladas. About 90 percent of the corn tortillas eventually become nachos, Brunty says.

The tortilla-making process is highly automated. The corn or flour dough is placed in a hopper and squeezed onto rollers that flatten each tortilla to the correct size and shape. A conveyor belt carries the tortillas through a hot oven. After baking, they are hand-stacked and packaged.

Christina Brunty, who handles the company's sales, says she sometimes has difficulty convincing restaurants that the tortillas' freshness makes a difference.

"The trouble was trying to convince them the new product was better than what they were getting," she says.

La Paz, a Mexican restaurant in Charlotte, is one of Casa Christina's customers. Marco Pineva, the restaurant's manager, said the product is a welcome improvement over tortillas they have used in the past, which were frozen and up to a week old.

Casa Christina's tortillas are "fresher and only one or two days old," Pineva says.

And unlike die-cut corn tortillas used in the past, he said, Casa Christina's are more like handmade and are easier to work with.

La Paz uses the company's corn tortillas mostly for chips and its flour tortillas for fajitas, quesadillas and sopapillas, he says.

Several Hispanic families in the area also use the factory's tortillas, Christina Brunty says. "Everybody that has come in notices they're very close to homemade."

Right now, the factory is operating at about 50 percent of capacity. In about two months, Chester Brunty says, they will begin selling tortilla chips in local grocery stores and would eventually like to install another tortilla oven.

A MATCH FOR MELISSA

Plucky Pre-Schooler Battles For A Second Chance At Life

By Carol Tyer
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

STANTONSBURG — Melissa Tyson faces a bone marrow transplant this summer that offers the 4-year-old her only hope of survival. She has a congenital blood disorder that disrupts her body's ability to resorb bone.

Whenever they get the call, probably in mid-July, Wayne and Peggy Tyson will take their daughter to Philadelphia Children's Hospital. If all goes well, she will receive the marrow of a Milwaukee man she does not know, and may never meet. This healthy marrow, considered to be a 100-percent match for her own, could bring health to a child who has never known it.

Melissa has osteopetrosis, a rare genetically induced blood disorder. She has always been sick. But she has also had had parents and other relatives and friends who do everything they can to make it easier for her.

And she, in turn, has made her illness easier for them to accept.

"It always amazes us," her mother said, "how she knows so much and yet never seems to get upset about feeling bad at time, about having to go to the hospital, about having to take shots every night, about the constant medicine-taking she has to do. She's so even-tempered about it all that all of us find we can't show too much emotional upset about it."

Those who love her have watched her struggle for breath, yet seem nonplussed by having to learn to talk by placing her finger over the tracheotomy portal in her neck.

They see her hold items she wishes to see to the left side of her head, to view them with the little vision she has left. They know her body often aches, that she has several times lapsed into unconsciousness. They see her distended abdomen caused by an enlarged liver and spleen.

But they also know the dauntless spirit and marvelous learning ability of the 28-pound girl. They know that she doesn't let her stunted growth nor any of her other so-called handicaps stop her. She has lots of energy — some of the time. And when she does, she dances, she plays, she has fun.

"Melissa loves to dance to Elvis Presley songs," her mother said. She loves to play house and doctor with her dolls. She takes pleasure in so many things."

"She loves to come to our house in Farmville and play the organ," her grandmother Margaret Tyson said. "She loves ice cream and cookies. Strawberry-chocolate-vanilla ice cream is her favorite. And, if you don't watch out, she'll talk Heber, her granddaddy into feeding it to her."

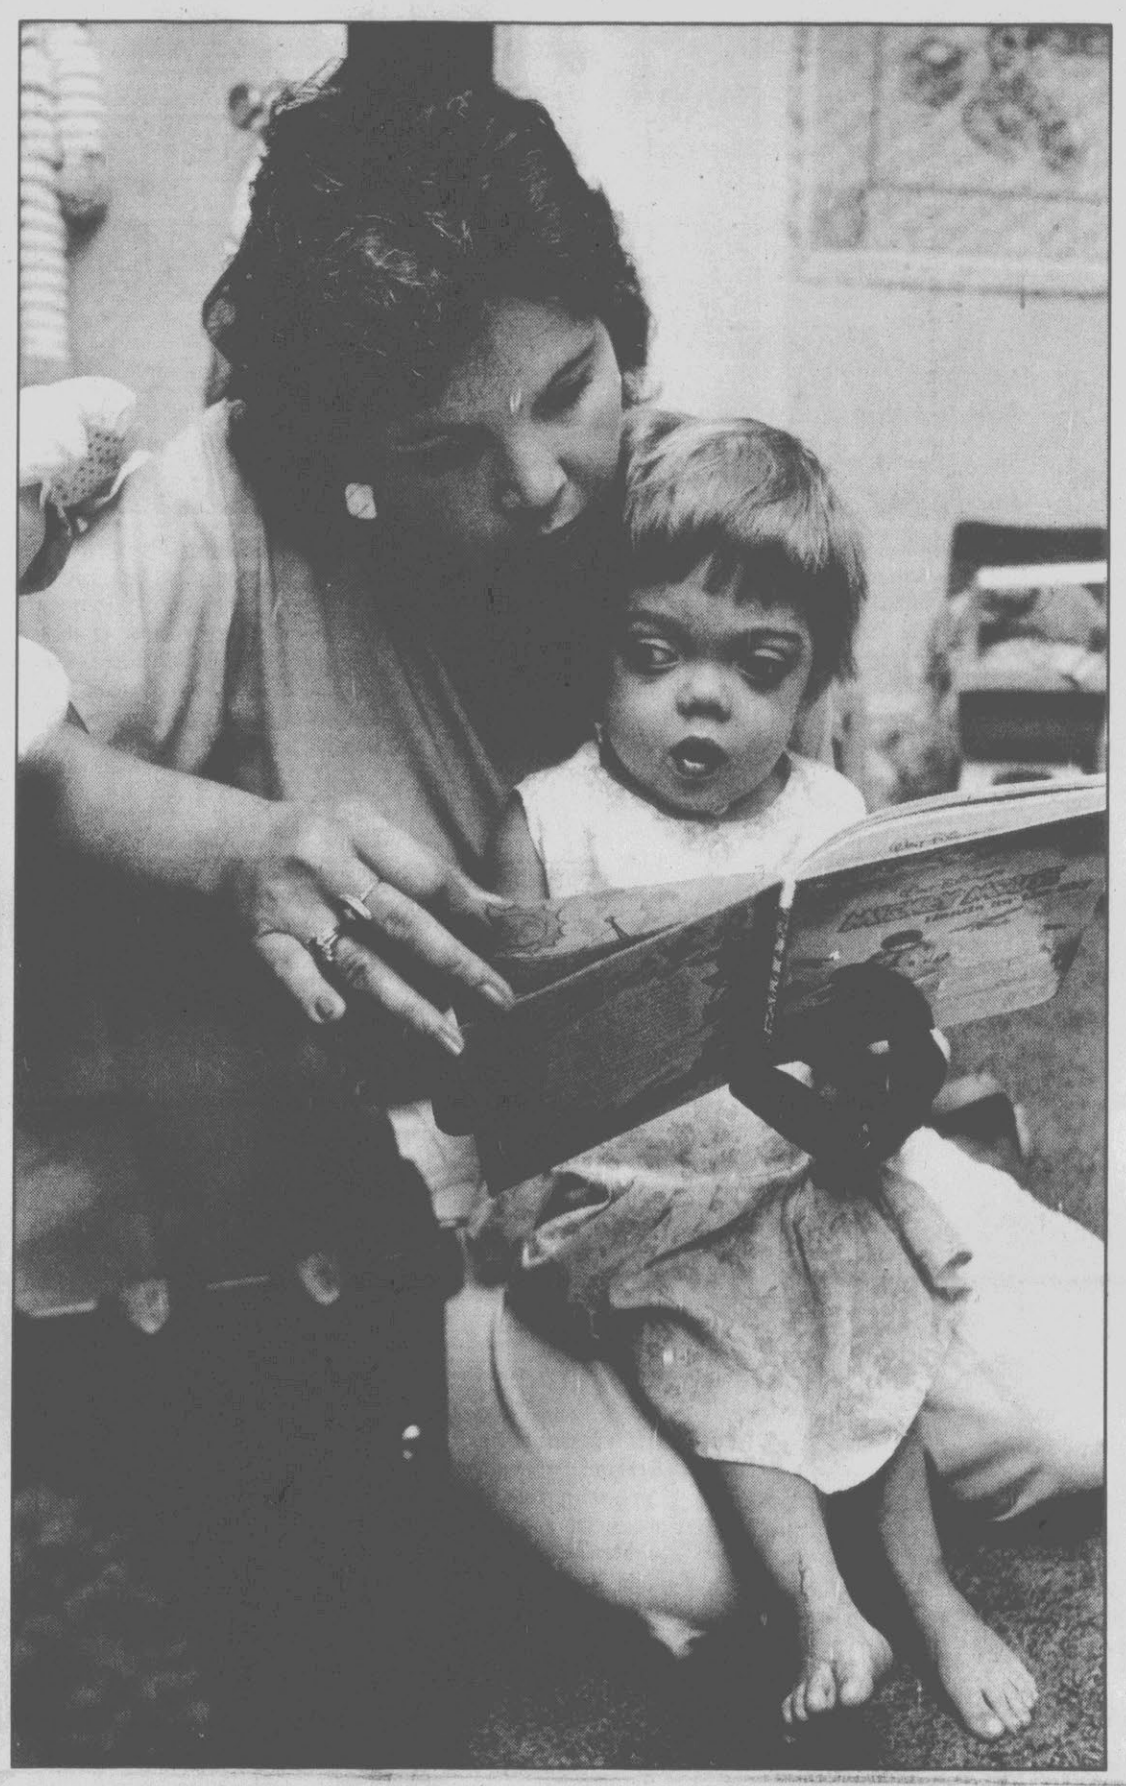

Melissa sings solos in church. And both her parents' fellow members at Mount Nelson Baptist Church in Eureka and the congregation of her grandparents' Beacon Free Will Baptist Church near Farmville praise her renditions of "Jesus Loves Me," "Jesus Loves the Little Children," and "The B-I-B-L-E."

"It's really something," Heber Tyson said, "to see a child no bigger than an 18-month-old stand up there with a microphone and sing before people, not even a little bit nervous."

"It's like Melissa is a wise little old lady inside a tiny growth-impaired body," her mother says.

"I want to say," Margaret Tyson said. "that I know God gave a special child like this just the right parents. My daughter-in-law has been wonderful the way she's dealt both with Melissa's illness and with teaching her everything in the world. She's a smart little girl naturally, but she's brighter because she's had a mother who's taught her so much."

Melissa's visual impairment does not interfere with her ability to take in information. Though she doesn't see television or books, she enjoys the audio of television and her tape recorder. And she loves for her mother or anyone to read to her.

Together

Melissa and her mother enjoy one of the youngster's favorite activities as they keep up with the antics of Mickey Mouse by reading a storybook. Below, a doctor-in-training checks her mother's reflexes with the hammer from her own medical bag.

Dancing for Elvis

She's a pro at meeting people, and at knowing them the next time she's in their presence. She always carefully inquires about names, never forgetting anyone she's met. When people don't tell her their names, she asks. It's important that she keeps up with people.

She is knowledgeable about her condition, thoroughly understanding her treatment regimen — including as much about what to expect in Philadelphia as her parents and doctors have been able to tell her. She can discuss the body's immune system better than most adults.

Until about six months ago, Mrs. Tyson worked as a bookkeeper at Roofing Tools and Equipment Company in Wilson. "I used to leave Melissa more," she said. "But now her respiratory problems have gotten so bad that I can't give anybody but her daddy, my friend Janie Summerlin and her Home Health Service nurse.

"But when I used to leave her, though, it was reassuring that she knew so well what medicine she was supposed to take when. She could correct anybody who might have made a mistake about her medicine or anything concerned with her care."

The Tysons thought when Melissa was born that she was a perfectly healthy baby. But when she was 4 months old, she began having vision problems. That's when their pediatrician spotted a blood disorder and sent them to East Carolina University Medical School pediatric hematologists who diagnosed her disease.

They said this condition was so rare and so complicated that they felt it could be better treated in a larger medical center. So she went to Philadelphia Children's Hospital. They arranged for her to see Dr. Lyndon Key, an internationally recognized authority on osteopetrosis, at Bowman Gray Hospital in Winston-Salem.

Dr. Key explains that osteopetrosis is a condition so rare that there are only about 10 new cases diagnosed per year. "Normally," he said in a telephone interview, "the building up and breaking down of bone tissue is a dynamically balanced process in the human body. But the lack of a particular component of Melissa's bone marrow prevents bone resorption and thus causes the hollow space inside her bones to gradually fill in, interfering with bone marrow production and thus with other functions of her body."

So far, most osteopetrosis patients have not lived past 3 years old, Dr. Key said.

A talk on the phone

All along, Melissa's doctors have told her parents that, if she could survive until approximately 4 years old, she might be a candidate for a bone marrow transplant — now seemingly her only hope for recovery from the progressive degenerative condition. Earlier treatment by Dr. Key with Vitamin D therapy has slowed, but not cured her condition.

So now, it looks as if the time of hope is nearing.

The Tysons and Melissa's two stepbrothers all were tested to see if any of the four could be donors. None were good matches. Mrs. Tyson was the best — a 75 percent match.

But because the matches weren't the best, Melissa's medical information was put into three national networks that list people who have indicated they would be willing to be bone marrow donors.

A 100 percent match was found in Wisconsin — a 40-year-old man. He has been contacted and has indicated that he's willing to give this tiny stranger from North Carolina life-sustaining marrow from his bones.

"I can't tell you," Mrs. Tyson said. "how thankful I feel for this man. I feel like he'll be blessed for his giving to our child."

The Tysons' bags are packed. Whenever they get the call, daughter, mother and father will be on their way. Father will come back home some of the time to attend to his job at Batten's Auto Parts in Wilson. But Mom will be there for as long as Melissa is there. She may stay in the Ronald McDonald House near the hospital some, but mostly she will be at the hospital by Melissa's side.

"I don't know exactly what it's going to be like," Peggy Tyson said. "But I've done a lot of new and different things since Melissa has been born. And I can do this, too."

"We're just so thankful that Melissa has survived long enough to have a chance at this transplant. We have, since she's been in treatment, known other families with osteopetrosis. And we've known some of them to die. One family we know from Florida has lost two children to the condition."

If she's cured, Melissa will be one of the few children ever to survive the condition.

People in Melissa's community have set up a Melissa Tyson Fund to help the Tysons with the numerous expenses related to her illness and frequent hospitalizations. Donations may be sent to Janie Summerlin, P.O. Box 246, Stantonsburg, N.C. 27883. Inquiries may be made of Ms. Summerlin, 238-3543, or Mrs. Tyson, 291-9324.

Self-treatment

Though only 4, this young patient is no stranger to medical apparatus. Here demonstrating a piece of equipment designed to give her added oxygen, Melissa offers instruction for a newcomer.

Is Dry Cleaning Needed?

NCSU NEWS BUREAU

You've just purchased a plain white cotton-polyester blend blouse and the label says, "Dry Clean Only." Can you safely ignore the label and toss it into the washing machine with the rest of your cotton-polyester blouses?

Maybe, says Dr. Harriet T. Jennings, extension clothing specialist at North Carolina State University.

Clothing manufacturers are required by law to put care labels in clothing, but they need to give only one method, even if other methods are safe. By labeling it with the safest method, they protect themselves from complaints and legal claims.

"Use your own judgement when deciding whether or not to believe the label," Dr. Jennings says. "If the blouse is expensive, you may want to ask your dry cleaner for advice. Some cotton garments have trim and should be drycleaned."

Leave Freezer Closed During Power Failure

NCSU NEWS BUREAU

If a thunderstorm leaves you without power, don't open the freezer to check the food. A fully stocked freezer will keep food frozen for about two days after losing power.

A half-full freezer will keep it for about one day. Food in a refrigerator will normally last four to six hours after the power goes off.

Top Jobs Eluding Women

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

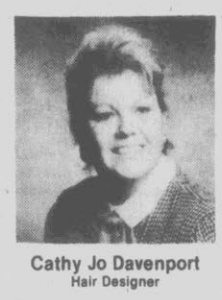

CLEVELAND — Even though women today can aspire to become doctors, lawyers and CEOs, most of the 54.7 million women in the American work force are confined to lower-paying and less prestigious occupations, according to 9 to 5, National Association of Working Women.

It notes that women make up 95 percent of the nursing force compared with 20 percent of the doctors; 98 percent of pre-school and kindergarten teachers vs. 39 percent of college professors; 83 percent of apparel sales personnel compared with 8 percent of "big ticket" items; 99 percent of dental assistants vs. 9 percent of dentists; 88 percent of data entry keyers vs. 29 percent of computer systems analysts.

Use Checklist To Avoid Pitfalls When Buying Vacation Home Site

BETTER HOMES AND GARDENS

There's more to a good vacation lot than a pretty view. Practical matters come into play when eyeing a piece of rustic real estate. Use this checklist to rate choices before signing on the dotted line.

Location: The closer to home, the better. Getting away is easier if the hideaway is only an hour or two away. Distance also complicates logistics if a cabin is being built.

Access: Make sure roads in the area are maintained regularly and there is room for a driveway and adequate parking near the buildable portion of the lot.

Utilities: Most vacation sites include well water and electrical power and phone lines, but few are hooked up to a central sewer facility. Check with the local sanitarian or health officer regarding current regulations.

Other services: Taming an undeveloped site is grubby work. Find out how far the nearest public rest room, ice machine or hardware store are and if there is a doctor's office, hospital or fire department nearby.

Covenants: If the lot is part of a development, ask about covenants governing design and construction of buildings on the property.

BETSY DRAKE LEWIS' DECORATING TIPS

DOUBLE YOUR PLEASURE

There's an easy--and a pretty way--to double the beauty of your furniture and your accessories.

And that's with a mirror placed in a strategic spot. For example, did you ever stop to think that if you place a mirror the right way, you'll see your favorite furnishings in different ways at various angles in different parts of the room. So you'll see both the actual furnishing itself, and its reflected glory.

Incidentally, one good decorating idea is to place a mirror at right angles to a wall near a window to reflect an outdoor scene. It's almost like giving yourself a picture that changes as the light changes. Again, you're getting double pleasure from the actual view--and the reflected view.

Not to be overlooked are two other decorating advantages that the right mirrors can give you. One is that a mirror will bring a sense of more light and more space to a room, and two, a pretty mirror can help a room by itself as a decorative accessory. With all the beautiful mirrors on the market today in all sizes from big to small, and in all styles and designs, you can find several that can enhance your decorating pleasure. We'll be happy to show you a fine selection.

Diet Pills Sweeping U.S.

Doctors Invent 'Lazy Way' to Lose Weight

U.S. Gov't. Approves Patent Claims for New Diet Pill

BEVERLY HILLS, CA (Special)—An amazing new weight loss pill called "fat-magnet" has recently been developed and perfected by two prominent doctors at a world famous hospital in Los Angeles that reportedly "guarantees" you steady fat loss and calorie reduction by simply taking their tested and proven new pill.

The U.S. government has just approved the doctors claims for a hard-to-get patent that confirms "there has never been anything like their fat-bonding pill process before." It is a totally new major scientific breakthrough and is revolutionizing the weight loss industry.

You Can "Eat Normally"

Best of all, "you can continue to eat your favorite foods and you don't have to change your normal eating habits. You can start losing fat and reduce calories from the very first day, until you achieve the ideal weight you desire without exercising".

Flushes Fat Out of Body

The new pill is appropriately called the "fat-magnet" pill because it breaks into thousands of particles, each acting like a tiny magnet, "attracting" and trapping many times its size in undigested fat particles. Then, all the trapped fat and calories are naturally "flushed" right out of your body because they cannot be absorbed.

Within 2 days you should notice a change in the color of your stool, caused by the fat particles being eliminated.

"Automatically" Lose Fat

According to one of the inventors, Dr. William Shell, heart specialist and associate professor of medicine at UCLA medical school, "the new fat-bonding process is a "lazy way" to lose weight because the pills alone "automatically" reduce calories by eliminating dietary fat. It is 100% safe and not a drug."

The fat-magnet pills are already sweeping the country with glowing reports of weight loss from formerly overweight people in all walks of life who are now slimmer, trimmer and more attractive again.

Now Available to the Public

If you are trying to lose 20, 50, 100 pounds or more, you can order your supply of these "no-risk" highly successful fat-magnet pills directly from the doctors' exclusive manufacturer only (includes optional calorie-reduction plan for even better results). Send $20 for a 90 pill supply (+$3 handling), or $35 for a 180 pill supply (+$3 handling), to: Fat-Magnet, 9016 Wilshire Blvd., Dept. W634. Beverly Hills, CA 90211. (Unconditional money-back guarantee if not 100% satisfied.) Visa, MasterCard and American Express OK. (Send card number, expire date, and signature.) For fastest service for credit card orders ONLY call anytime 24 hours, toll free 1(800) 527-9700, ext. W634.

Lovers Of Architectural Antiques Almost Never Discard Anything

COUNTRY LIVING

The people who are one step ahead of the wrecker's ball unearth decorating treasures — mirrored fireplace mantels that make trendy headboards or Victorian gingerbread converted into room dividers.

In the realm of architectural antiques, very little is ever discarded.

Salvage crews now completely strip buildings marked for demolition. From the exteriors of commercial structures come roof ornaments, iron window grilles, ornate stone blocks, wrought iron gates, decorative corbels, fire escapes, even front steps.

From their interiors emerge tin ceilings, fans, lighting fixtures, ceiling rosettes, moldings, wood columns, trim, stained glass windows, floors and doors.

Old houses leave behind mantels, fancy fretwork, gas and electric light fixtures, ceiling beams, floor and fireplace tiles, windows, staircase balusters and bathroom and kitchen fixtures.

Part of the credit for the renewed interest in architectural antiques goes to the new breed of restaurateurs who get their decorating pizzazz straight from the salvage yards.

These trendy eateries feature recycled gargoyles, tiles, lighting fixtures, tin ceilings, corbels, columns and even bars.

Sometimes, an item such as an iron gate is used as it was intended. Other times self-taught decorators will use their imagination and a 10-foot column with wood rot at one end is cut up into four 17-inch coffee table legs.

Nearly every major city now has at least one salvage yard that tracks architectural antiques and saves them from the wrecker's ball. Salvage yards offer a tremendous variety, but rarely at junkyard prices.

Veteran salvage operators can stand knee-deep in rubble and spot unsigned Tiffany windows, George Maher sconces and Grueby tiles faster than many antique dealers.

Built-Ins Add New Space In Many Tiny Apartments

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

As one who specializes in creating model apartments for developers, it is Elaine Lewis's job to show prospective residents how well they can live in a one-bedroom "luxury" apartment not much bigger than a shoebox.

For the past 17 years she has done it, in large part, by creating space with custom built-ins.

Though built-ins tend to be pricey, she says they can be economical if you stay away from luxury materials like wood veneers, marble and brass, and design them carefully.

For any family fighting the battle of space in a home that is too small for its activities and belongings, she advises adopting the same approach.

— In a living room, dedicate one wall to shelving and cabinetry for home entertainment components, records and books. At least some of the seating can be a cushion-covered plywood banquette. Fill the hollow interior with bulky, rarely-used items like suitcases.

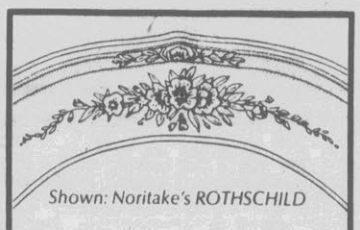

— If there is no space for a standard dining table and chairs, or if you'd rather put the dining area to another use, an eating surface can be cantilevered off the kitchen counter or off a wall, with space under it to accommodate the chairs. This surface can, of course, serve as a desk when not needed for dining.

— In a narrow entryway, hang a shelf or a slender cabinet for items such as the mail and a telephone and phone books. Add a mirror to visually expand the space. Dropped ceilings in the entryway create a feeling of greater height in the rooms beyond it.

— If the bedroom is small, mount the headboard and bedside tables on the wall. Use ceiling or wall-mounted lamps in place of floor or table lamps.

— Make closets more efficient. For example, double hanging bars separated by a number of small shelves and cubbies create more space than a single bar with a long shelf above it. Lewis adds more storage by covering a bedroom radiator with a shelf and building in compartments on either side.

When rooms are small and few, she advises light color schemes and the use of the same color for all the walls and floors. This continuity creates an illusion of space. Use mirrors to reinforce the illusion.

Ceremony Unites Pair

The wedding ceremony of Hedy Lynn Kallweit and Hector Manuel Campos was solemnized Saturday at 5:30 p.m. at The Way Home.

Her fingertip veil of illusion with side poufs was attached to a bandeau of silk flowers, leaves and pearls. She carried a cascade bouquet of white roses, baby's breath, greenery and purple statice.

The honor attendant wore a midnight blue tea-length dress and carried a bouquet of irises, baby's breath and greenery tied with lavender ribbons. The flower girl wore a white dress and carried a bouquet of white silk tearoses.

The Years Don't Change A Classic

At Wits End

Erma Bombeck

I ran across a letter recently that I had started and never finished. With a little updating, the letter was fixable, and I wouldn't have to agonize over composing a new one:

"Dear Lois: Sorry I haven't written sooner, but the war (make that tension in Central America) has made us crazy. I don't know how you've managed with the acute shortage of nylons (scratch that and substitute Retin A).

"Good news from the home front. Our baby is finally toilet-trained (insert employed). We thought it would never happen. Every day I stood in the bathroom, ran water and showed slides of Lake Erie. He finally got the idea. (Add a line: He's a marine biologist.)

"You know how I hate to write letters, but I think I could write a book if I ever got a typewriter. (Insert word processor.) I've heard the more you write, the easier it gets. (Add ha, ha.)

"I know you're busy. Did you have a great birthday? Thirty (substitute between estrogen and death) isn't so bad. Please don't feel you have to sit right down and dash off a response to this letter on the very day you get it. Letters are like wine. I think Red Skelton (substitute Eddie Murphy) said that.

"Yours till Niagara falls. (Make it nuclear wastes.) ..."

OK, so we're not talking Elizabeth Barrett Browning here, but I hate to write letters. It's not as if I'm one of those people who write Christmas newsletters and have great things to report. My kids never conducted the Cleveland Symphony at age 9, nor did my husband spend his summer as a mercenary. We're just boring people! I feel like the friend of my son who spent his entire puberty at our house. Occasionally I'd say, "Call your mother," and he'd go to the phone, dial, mumble "I'm alive," and hang up.

That's the way it is with us. There's never anything dramatic to report about our lives that is worth 25 cents postage. I know when people hear from me they all want to pitch in and buy me a charisma implant.

Psychologists say people who don't like to write letters are very private and resist sharing their personal emotions with other people. That's so much more civilized than saying they're lazy.

Bad news. I just got my revamped letter back, stamped "Addressee has moved. No forwarding address." Wouldn't you have thought Lois could have written!

Short Hair Is Fashionable This Summer

HARPER'S BAZAAR

This summer you can take a short cut to fashionable hair styles.

Short is the direction in which to move, according to an article in the current issue of Harper's Bazaar, and even long hair adapts when pulled back into ponytails and chignons.

Often the front is left slightly tapered for extra flattery. The unifying theme is versatility, sometimes achieved with bangs, possibly cut very short on a bob, to wear softly fringed or slicked back.

Short cuts are clean and classic. They can be chin-length or cropped, said Peter Townsend, international consultant for L'Oreal. A great length for wavy hair is just to the collarbone, with slight layering to release the curl and add softness.

Long hair has plenty of fresh alternatives. Edward Tricomi of the Pipino-Buccheri salon in New York City recommends pulling it back loosely for a free-and-easy look. Try a silk scarf instead of a covered rubber band. Some short pieces snipped around the face add additional shape and detail.

Alan Adler of New York's Vartali salon uses special pinking shears to create texture for both long and short hair.

Gentler chemicals and new processing methods have eliminated the perm frizz and make waves smooth and touchable.

Gone are the tight, corkscrew curls of many earlier perms. Salon experimentation has led to several innovations, some of which are available for at-home use.

Gillette's Epic Waves by Toni offer three formulations aimed at making self-perming foolproof. Try-On works for just two weeks so you don't have to make a commitment. Adaptable allows you to lock in curl exactly as you like it and Anytime is gentle enough to be used up to nine times a year, keeping styles fresh.

For women in a hurry, Redken has Velocity 5, a salon perm treatment that works in five minutes. Aveda's Aromatherapy Permanent Waving System boasts it has ingredients based on pure flower and plant essences that have replaced traditionally harsh chemicals and their unpleasant odors.

New products also allow experimenting with color. Vidal Sassoon's Turnstyles Collection offers three shades — cinnamon, caramel and coffee — that can be applied in varying intensities throughout your hair. Softer shades predominate when hair is brushed one way. Change the part and more intense hues appear.

Geri Cusenza, creative director of Sebastian International, said "the Middle Eastern, exotic trend in fashion translates into the current spicy chilies and golds."

One new look is color meche, a Sebastian concept that involves brushing strips of fine mesh fabric with colors and then pressing them onto hair strands. The result is burnished hints of different shades that flow from roots to ends.

Despite the new techniques, highlighting remains popular.

"Most people like a sun-touched lift during the summer," said Michael Stinchcomb of Yves Claude Bis of New York City. He prefers to play up your color by weaving in undertones in rich, robust shades that take their cue from your skin tone.

Coming Clean On Age Won't Put You In Jail

Dear Abby
Abigail Van Buren

Dear Abby: This concerns "Desperate in Skokie," the woman who had lied about her age for years. You advised her to "come clean" — starting with the people at Social Security. I wish you had included what to expect from the people at Social Security, because there must be an army of women who have falsified their year of birth on job applications, insurance documents, etc. It was not done for the sake of vanity — it was a matter of survival in the job market where age discrimination is rampant at all levels. However, come retirement age, the chickens come home to roost.

What legal problems will those of us who have lied about our ages encounter when we "come clean" to Social Security, insurance companies and banks where we keep our IRAs? Obviously, we are afraid to ask for fear of attracting attention to ourselves.

I know of a man who shaved 10 years off his age 20 years ago, in order to land an executive position when he was 55. He is now 75, and only now can he retire and apply for Social Security, withdraw from his IRA, join Medicare, etc., because once you make yourself "younger," it goes on all your documents and you are stuck!

I am one of many who is sailing under "younger" flags, nearing retirement age. Your response would be greatly appreciated. — Nervous In Boston

Dear Nervous: When applying for Social Security and Medicare benefits, you will encounter no legal problems if you have falsified your age. However, you will have to present your birth certificate to show proof of your true age.

If your birth certificate was issued after the age of 5, additional proof of age, such as a church record of baptism or school records, will be required.

Concerning IRAs: There will be penalty charges if, by age 70½, you have not started withdrawing from your IRA monies. Bank personnel will regard your true age as confidential information.

So, if you have lied about your age and decide to come clean, be assured, you will encounter no legal problems with Social Security, Medicare or your IRA. Pleasant dreams.

Dear Abby: My granddaughter was planning an elaborate church wedding for December, but she just found out that she is pregnant and the baby is due in January.

She changed her plans and has decided to have her big church wedding after the baby is born. Abby, I do not care for that idea, and I told her that unless she gets married before the baby is born, I will not attend her wedding. Am I wrong? — From Another Generation

Dear From: You and I are from the same generation; I also think the wedding should come before the baby. However, I would not deny myself the privilege of attending my granddaughter's wedding — regardless of when it took place.

Dear Abby: I am a 14-year-old girl. I am very mature for my age. I don't smoke or do drugs, and I don't hang out with kids who do. I am proud to say that I am still a virgin and plan to stay that way until I get married.

My problem is my parents. They won't let me date or go in cars with boys. I have never been in any kind of trouble, and this is the only thing I ever fight with my parents about.

How can I prove to them that I am mature enough to date and go in cars with boys? — No Baby

Dear No Baby: As long as you argue, whine, beg and complain, your parents will consider you too immature to date and go in cars with boys. When you accept their decisions without arguing, whining, begging and complaining, they will be more inclined to consider you sufficiently mature to handle adult privileges. Try it. It works. Trust me.

Female Entrepreneurs Bring Madagascar Into Mainstream

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ANTANANARIVO, Madagascar — Women like Monique Ralaimandy and Vero Rasendratsirofo are leading this Indian Ocean nation off Africa out of its isolation and into the economic mainstream.

Ralaimandy, trained as an electronics engineer, lost her job in 1974 when President Didier Ratsiraka embarked on a socialist revolution and closed a U.S. satellite tracking station.

"There were no jobs after it closed so I started making dolls," said Ralaimandy.

She has since branched out from dolls and now has a workshop that employs 300 and produces nearly 1,000 dresses a week for sale in France. In April month she started a second shift.

"When I started banks wouldn't help me," she said. "Now I have a banker as a financial adviser."

Operating in a couple of sheds surrounded by frangipani and oleander, Vero Rasendratsirofo is producing ceramic pots, dishes, vases, piggy banks and ornamental items.

She employs 11 young men and two women at her establishment, called Atelier Vero, and has a hard time keeping up with demand. Last year she won the "Oscar," the island's top award for handicrafts.

Finance Minister Pascal Rakotomavo said the success of these and other female entrepreneurs "is a very encouraging sign."

U.S. Ambassador Patricia Gates Lynch said, "I have been impressed by the initiative and ability of Malagasy women to organize and run a business. There are still many poor people. It will take several years before some of the new enterprises will benefit everyone, but there is a spirit of hope in the air."

Madagascar, formerly the Malagasy Republic, is one of the world's poorest countries, with an annual per capita income of $163.

Why are women taking the lead in setting up small industries?

"That's the big question," said Vero Rasendratsirofo's mother, Elyett. "Maybe it's cultural. Girls learn to be in charge very early, taking care of their brothers and sisters. They fight harder. But you know, I am a woman."

Monique Ralimandy quickly moved from making and selling dolls in 1978 to decorating homes and offices.

In 1986 she took a collection of dolls and baskets to France to test export opportunities. She sold out and got help from French and Canadian agencies to set up workshops.

"I didn't know the technique, only the design," she said. As she couldn't produce on a large scale she looked for a niche and found a good market for "elaborately designed, not cheap, but affordable clothes for young girls."

Most Malagasy women learn to sew as small children so labor was no problem, but the competition from other countries made quality control essential.

Swedish Police Have Their Doubts About Lowering The Speed Limit

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

STOCKHOLM, Sweden - Sweden will lower its highway speed limit to 55 mph (90 kilometers) this summer in an effort to save lives and reduce pollution from auto emissions.

But police doubt it will work. They say it's hard enough to enforce the current 68 mph limit. And Automobile Association officials call the measure too drastic.

The new limit will be in effect June 22-Aug. 20, when traffic usually increases by about 30 percent.

The environment has been a concern in Swedish politics for years and was a key issue in last fall's election. The long-entrenched Social Democrats were returned to power, but the Environment Party won enough votes to become the first new party in parliament in more than 60 years.

Swedish highways join those of Norway and Ireland as the slowest in Europe. West Germany has no top limit on its autobahns, and most other European countries have a 62 to 74 mph limit.

Authorities argue that the lower limit will cut emissions of nitrogen oxides by 35 to 40 percent. Nitrogen oxides cause acid rain.

Tomas Nilson of the Automobile Association, which has 200,000 members, says car emissions "have extremely marginal effects" on the environment.

He says the association has "a certain understanding" for the decision to lower speed limits if it can save lives, "but it is wrong to lower speeds everywhere."

Americans Have Tropical Fish Riding A New Wave Of Popularity

By Lynn Williams
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

They are not furry, they won't come when you call them and they are a total washout in the soft-eyes-and-floppy-ears department. But oh, are they beautiful.

Trendy, too. Tropical fish — the ultimate pet for the stressed-out but stylish '80s — are making, so to speak, a fashion splash. According to pet industry studies, between 7 million and 8 million American households keep fish, and the market share for expensive and high-style items, including both the tanks and the fish themselves, is steadily growing.

Time-pressed executives and other chronically busy types appreciate fish because they are easy-care and require even less supervision than that other independent pet, the cat. Conversely, those who have taken to cocooning value the serenely decorative aspect of aquariums. They fit easily into small urban apartments or condos, and their meditative, blood-pressure-lowering properties have been much discussed.

One factor has caused ripples: the creative development of tank design. Who, looking at today's elegant sculptural aquariums and the flashing, luminescent tropicals inhabiting them, would ever think of that archetypal nerd tending his goldfish bowl?

Goldfish bowls are still with us, of course, as are the rectangular aquariums of our childhood, decorated with plastic seaweed and ceramic castles. More recently, however, the familiar glass tanks have been joined by triangles, hanging spheres and elongated tubes made of acrylic. Plastics technology has also made it possible to build free-standing aquarium towers whose sides and corners are almost invisible, creating the dramatic illusion that the fish and underwater greenery are undulating in midair.

Robert Compton has built a career on water-related decorative pieces such as aquariums and fountains, which he makes both in production lines and as custom orders. (Among his clients is ex-Beatle George Harrison.) The Bristol, Vt., artisan began in the early '70s as a potter, making covered jars and dinnerware. He began to incorporate glass panels in his stoneware jars, so that their contents were visible, and when he developed a method for making these jars waterproof, he began transforming them into unique aquariums.

Hanging aquariums are his trademark, but he has developed other, more elaborate styles, including multiple-tank aquariums with passages through which the fish can swim from one tank to another.

His customers, he says, are not usually hobbyists, but are simply attracted to his aquariums for their aesthetic qualities.

"Most of the people who have bought my work liked the idea of aquariums, but didn't care for the square glass box," he says. "It didn't fit into their lifestyle, or their decorating scheme. They buy (an aquarium) because they like the form. It's a nice-looking sculpture that also has life and motion in it."

For business clients, Jeff Watters and David Lougee of Oceanic Systems in Texas have built customized aquariums that hold up to 5,000 gallons and run into six figures. They've also created thousand-gallon home tanks for "very wealthy people who couldn't care less what it costs, as long as its nice to look at and entertains people," Watters remarks.

Among Oceanic's most titanic jobs have been a free-standing, pyramidal acrylic tank, 8½ feet tall and 12 feet wide on each side, for a building lobby, and an L-shaped tank for a restaurant bar.

"It had 16 sides, all of which were set at different angles and trimmed in brass," Watters says.

The contents of the aquarium can be as important as the tank design, even if you don't require that your fish coordinate with your decor. (As Joan Collins did, when she asked Mike Arnoldy, California's aquarium merchant to the stars, for black and white fish to match her black and white furniture.)

"There's a new craze called the mini-reef system," said Michael Hresko, manager of House of Tropicals in Glen Burnie, Md. "It's a saltwater aquarium set up to simulate a reef, so that you can maintain live corals." Saltwater tanks are hot, he says, because of the gorgeous sea anemones, corals and other invertebrates that thrive in them — not to mention the beauty of the fish themselves, which are more colorful and exotic than freshwater fish.

"It (a mini-reef) is delicate, and requires a different spectrum of light, but if you invest in the right equipment and take some time with it, it's not much more difficult," Hresko says.

Pants For Summer: Ease, Elegance & Unpredictable Mixing!

It's certainly the season for a return to femininity with soft, fluid pants made of complimenting fabrics that seem light as air. "Breezy washed silks have such a special ease," says Nicki Adams of Certain Things in Arlington Village. "They are always soft, always feminine and always appropriate."

Pants have returned prominently in all lengths from shorts to culottes, to the harem-like palazzo pants, which are draped loose and flowing, and often paired with cropped tops and vests.

Shorts are elevated to new elegance for daytime or evening wear as one-half of a chic abbreviated suit.

As skirt lengths rise and fall, pants take the center stage in comfortable, easy to wear shapes. For all occasions, pants play an integral part of summer's new style.

Praying Pigs Still Museum's Top Attraction

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MEMPHIS, Tenn. — Of the hundreds of videotapes, records and pictures on file at the Center For Southern Folklore in Memphis, the film of old Tom Johnson and his praying pigs is still a top drawer item, as it has been for more than a decade.

"Been fooling with them hogs for 35 long years," Johnson says in the film as he rocks on the porch of his modest residence near Bentonia, Miss. "It's just an idea that I took up. It's a play thing. And it put me into something that I didn't get out of too easy and so soon."

The pigs, taught to stand beside their brimming slop trough with heads bowed while Johnson prayed over their food, dug in with gusto when he finally released them to eat.

"Where ever I go to speak, I'm asked to show that film," said Judy Peiser, the director of the folklore center.

Johnson died in 1980, but the four-minute film made by the center in the 1970s is a lasting reminder of his special pig-training talents.

A videotape of the film sells for $29.95 and is one of numerous items the non-profit center markets to finance its research into everyday southern life.

"We're an organization that documents and presents the rich traditional and ethnic cultures of the South," Ms. Peiser said.

The center, with a $300,000 annual budget, stages festivals featuring folk art, music and food; produces educational films for schools, libraries and civil groups; and records the daily lives of the people of the Memphis region and the Mississippi River Delta.

The center's archives, housed in a rambling, turn-of-the-century residence in midtown Memphis, include photographs of dancing girls and bluesmen of old Beale Street.

Lower Prices Available For Popular Videotapes

VIDEO MAGAZINE

Finding bargain prices on prerecorded videotapes is easy, if you know where to look.

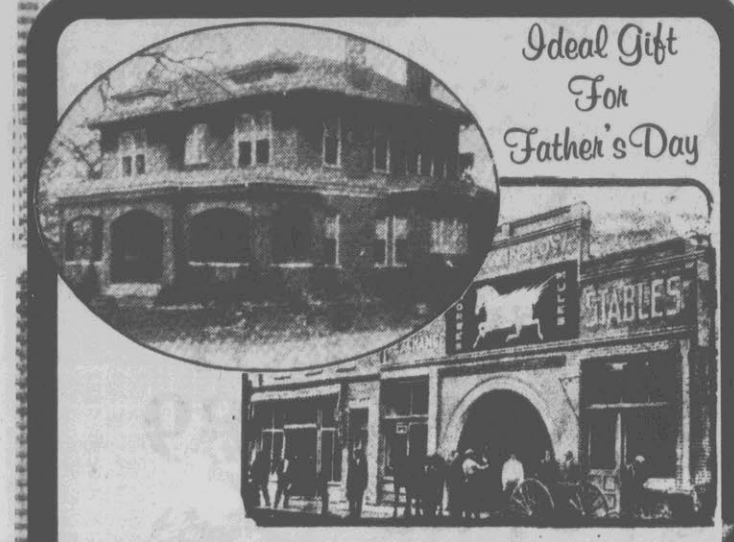

The current issue of Video Magazine features a list of the latest prerecorded videos of feature films that have been reduced in price in a section entitled "Labels for Less."

Videotapes of older feature films or films that begin to experience a decline in sales are often re-issued with a reduced price tag in order to boost sales. Tapes once priced as high as $95 can be found for as low as $19.

Often these reissued tapes are grouped in the same promotion with other tapes with the same label and-or genre. For instance, this month CBS-Fox features a "First Ladies of Film" collection. Available for $19.98 each are performances by Holly Hunter in "Raising Arizona," Sally Field in "Places in the Heart" and "Norma Rae," Debra Winger and Theresa Russell in "Black Widow," Meryl Streep in "Sophie's Choice," and others. At the time of their release these feature films were priced from $59.98 to $79.98.

To spur rentals of Warner's recent release "Running on Empty," directed by Sidney Lumet, Warner has marked down earlier Lumet hits to $19.98. The roster includes such hits as "Deathtrap," "The Morning After" and "Dog Day Afternoon," originally priced at $69.95, $79.95 and $59.95 respectively, at the time of their release.

Charles Whedbee's Outer Banks Magic Has Flowered Again

Charles Whedbee, author of Outer Banks books

Text And Photograph By Jerry Raynor

At a gathering of friends, press and publishing people for a cruise in the Nags Head and Roanoke Island area May 20, Greenville author Charles Whedbee ascribed three degrees of sources for the many stories he has written.

"One third of what I write is actual facts, things I myself have witnessed or experienced," he said. "A second one-third of my material, I consider as basically true, as they are accounts passed on to me by people whose reliability I trust without reservation.

"The last third is strictly fictional, things that I believe might have happened, perhaps did happen, or what I wish had happened, in connection with stories of the Outer Banks and eastern North Carolina."

The festive cruise, complete with a lavish spread of Whedbee's favorite foods — seafoods from the waters of the Outer Banks — was a combination of homage to the artist and a celebration by Winston-Salem publisher John F. Blair. It was given on the occasion of the publication of Whedbee's fifth book, "Blackbeard's Cup and Stories of the Outer Banks."

Carolyn Sakowski, director of sales and marketing for Blair, toasted Whedbee as "the prize performer in our stable of writers. We are most honored and most fortunate in having him write for us."

Guests on the cruise encompassed some of Whedbee's long-time Outer Banks friends, several representatives from Blair Publisher, and media people from Norfolk, Morehead City, Greenville and other eastern North Carolina towns.

As the sun set in a picture-book view of old gold and pearl gray over the near waters of Roanoke Sound and the more distant waters of Albemarle Sound, the cruise ship finished its cruise of friendship and berthed.

A True Story

Before debarking, Whedbee satisfied the curiosity of his fellow travelers about the reward he is offering to see and touch the cup described in the book's title story, "Blackbeard's Cup."

"It is indeed a true story," Whedbee's began in his best storytelling manner. "More than 50 years have passed since I was permitted to attend a secret ceremony at Ocracoke. The details in the story are absolutely as they took place long ago.

"I was still a law student when a dear, close friend invited me to go to Ocracoke with him. Once there, he took me that night to a secret gathering in large white house with a broad porch and a tower on top."

Whedbee had the full attention of his audience as he related the events of that memorable night, culminating in a ritual of drinking potent home brew from a silver-plated cup reputed to be the skull of the pirate Blackbeard.

Whedbee and his young friend Jack were required to take a vow never to mention the night until after the passage of 35 years.

"So now time has released me from that solemn oath, and I've been able to let my readers know about that night.

"And yes," he added, "it's true I have deposited in a Greenville bank the amount of a thousand dollars for anyone who can bring me that skull. I only want it long enough to have a medical man, a friend of mine, to X-ray it to prove its authenticity. Whoever has the Blackbeard skull cup can collect the money, keep the cup and I promise never to reveal the owner's identity."

Television Host

Charles Whedbee's talent to mesmerize an audience, whether by storytelling or in the written word, goes back to the early 1960s. Although a busy court judge of the Third Judicial District, he relished an assignment as host of Carolina Today, the early morning television talk show. Occasionally, he still appears on the show.

When he was a host, Whedbee frequently recounted tales and legends of the Outer Banks as part of the morning's entertainment.

"I'm glad to say the TV listening audience response to these tales was quite good," Whedbee said. "Somewhere along the way, John Fries Blair, the Winston-Salem publisher, became aware of my TV storytelling.

"He came down here to Greenville to see me, asked me to put the tales and legends into manuscript form. He came prepared with a standard author's contract. I had never once contacted him, nor made any effort to publish the tales, so his coming was quite a pleasant surprise."

The First Book

The fruit of that meeting was the publication, in 1966, of Whedbee's first book, "Legends of the Outer Banks."

"It has become something of a North Carolina classic," Ms. Sakowski said, "and it's now in its 12th printing and continues to be in demand."

Whedbee has authored three other Outer Banks volumes besides his newest book. These are, "The Flaming Ship of Ocracoke and Other Tales of the Outer Banks" in 1971; "Outer Banks Mysteries and Seaside Stories" in 1978, and "Outer Banks Tales To Remember," in 1985.

"To date, Judge Whedbee's books have sold over 130,000 copies — a true indication of the popularity of his tales and legends," Ms. Sakowski said.

Whedbee has steadfastly resisted the temptation to go technologically modern in his mode of creating.

"From the beginning of my days of using a typewriter, far back beyond the time of writing my books, I have used the same machine, a typewriter older by far than I am," he said. "It's an Underwood, an ornate item that originally belonged to Harry Skinner, a congressman and U.S. attorney. So the machine dates way back to the years shortly after the Civil War.

"Some people express amazement that I've not gone to something more sophisticated," he said, "but I know what it will do. It doesn't bother me that some letters print above the line, some below."

A Beloved Place

The world of sand, sea and water-surrounded strips of barrier islands known as North Carolina's Outer Banks has been an important part of the life of the 78-year-old retired judge.

"I can't remember when the Outer Banks and its people were not a vital part of my life," he said. "I first went to Nags Head in the arms of my mother when I was an infant. At that time you had to go by private boats from the mainland."

The family cottage at Nags Head was one of the original 13 located at what was then a rather isolated outpost.

"As I grew up, I became friends and was taken into the fold of trust and fellowship by people who were natives of the Outer Banks.

"Of course, so much has changed with the passing of years. It was inevitable, but I can't but help suffer a sense of loss because of all the developments that have taken place during my lifetime."

As the years pass, the storytelling instinct motivating the Outer Banks historian has grown stronger, more urgent. "It's true to say I'm obsess-

Autograph Sessions

Author Charles Whedbee will be engaged in a busy schedule of personal appearances in autograph sessions for "Blackbeard's Cup and Stores of The Outer Banks" within the next several weeks.

Two are scheduled in Greenville — one from 2 p.m. to 4 p.m. June 18 at Waldenbooks; the other from 12 noon to 2 p.m. June 25 at Central Book & News.

Other sessions are scheduled in towns throughout eastern North Carolina during the summer.

Whedbee warns those seeking autographed copies "not to be amazed or confused" in the method he uses in signing his name. "For years while I was a judge, lawyers often handed me pens to use in signing this or that paper. In many instances, the pens would not write. So I devised a method of making preliminary jots to see if it worked, then signed." The result is a series of dots preceding his trademark boldly scrawled signature.

An Exhilarating Account Of Coastal Legends

BLACKBEARD'S CUP AND STORIES OF THE OUTER BANKS. By Charles Whedbee. Winston-Salem, N.C. 175 pp. Cloth, $9.95.

Without reservations, I am going on record to say that "Blackbeard's Cup and Stories of the Outer Banks," the fifth book by Greenville author Charles Whedbee, is, in my opinion, his finest literary accomplishment to date.

There is an old Polynesian proverb that deems the fifth of anything is the best. So perhaps the guiding spirit of an ancient, legendary Pacific sea god has reached far out to another sea to bestow a special magic on Whedbee as he created his newest work.

This volume, as true in Polynesian folk legends, encompasses tales both of land and sea.

In "Blackbeard's Cup and Stories of the Banks," Whedbee has broadened his eastern North Carolina geographical coverage to move further inland for several of the stories. This enriches and enlivens the familiar appeal of his storytelling.

Whedbee himself has given capstone emphasis to "Blackbeard's Cup," the title story in the volume. Undeniably, it is an intriguing account of his personal involvement in an unusual, one could say, rather eerie event that took place in the early years of his life.

For me, one of the favorites of the 16 stories in this volume is "Horace and the Coinjock Charade." Maybe it's because I grew up with and still have a fondness for smelly, cranky mules that I so enjoyed the hilarious escapade of Horace.

Whedee has penned a refreshing, action-filled tale of an elegant Coinjock community lady, half-blind, who in a late night panic over the health of her beloved relic mule, mistakenly administered a bottle of turpentine to the wrong end of the animal. His subsequent speedy stampede from the stable, his

Bill Hallberg: Balanced On The Edge Of Overnight Success

Whether through magic happenstance, years of hardwork, or both, Bill Hallberg seems to be a man balanced on the edge of "overnight success." His first novel, "The Rub of Green," is out and doing well; a movie based on the novel is soon to be released. Only his golf game is slipping a litle, and that's something he can live with.

Hallberg plunks a copy of his new book, "Perfect Lies," down on the table. "Here it is," he says, smiling. "Hot off the press."

We're sitting on Hallberg's Lousiana-style front porch in a "very Republican" Greenville subdivision. There's a For Sale sign on the front lawn. Hallberg and his wife, Vicki, are heading for the country with their two children. "Two children," Hallberg says emphatically. "It seems like four, but actually it's just two."

I pick up his new book, a collection of golf stories written by some of the century's best writers, "edited and with an introduction by William Hallberg."

It's a thick book, almost chunky. On the cover, three golfers of the old school stare stoically into the distance, following the path of one of the golfers' drive. It's impossible to tell from their expressions whether the drive dribbled to a pathetic halt ten yards from the tee, sailed down the center of the fairway, or took the windshield out of the Queen's Bentley.

It's this "lack of histronics," Hallberg later tells me, that has helped make golf as popular as it is today.

I flip the book open. East Carolina University, where Hallberg teaches creative writing, heads the list of acknowledgements.

The table of contents lists 23 stories by some of the century's best-known writers (Walker Percy, F. Scott Fitzgerald, John Updike) as well as stories by writers almost totally forgotten. Hallberg found and read some 500 golf stories — good, bad and indifferent — from which he ferreted out the pieces included in this first-ever golf story collection.

"I'd like for people who don't ordinarily read short stories to find access to short stories through this book," Hallberg says. "By that I mean the people who would rather play golf on Thursday afternoon or Sunday morning than read a book. They may, on a rainy day, pick this book up kind of haphazardly and say, 'Well, hey, this is pretty good,' . . . and perhaps it will break through that barrier.

"Second, I hope it entertains people who really like the sport and who are good readers, but who aren't aware of the possibilities the sport provides within the short story. That's two sort of abstract things I hope the book will achieve.

"I think it's just a darned good book of short stories," he says, "apart from the subject matter."

Actually, "Perfect Lies" is Hallberg's second "golf book." His first, an outstanding novel called "Rub of Green," is about golf in the same sense that Hemingway's "The Old Man and the Sea" is about fishing.

It may sound like an odd combination. But if golf and writing seem to you to be worlds apart, you don't live in Bill Hallberg's world.

"They're both very private experiences," he says. "When you're there at the typewriter and you're having a wonderfully good day, it's a very exhilarating thing. You sort of lose yourself in the story or novel.

"And when you're playing golf and playing well, the game becomes almost automatic. You stop thinking about the mechanics of the game, just as when you're writing well you stop worrying about the mechanics and you write from some sort of inner spirit that sends you on your way. Often you're chasing the story rather than pulling the story.

"I think that works with golf, too. The more you think about it, the more you superanalyze what you're trying to accomplish on the course, the more you're apt to fuddle up the task. In that sense, they're very compatible and metaphorically similar."

A second similarity exists, he says, between the subtleties of writing and the subtleties of golf. And finally, there's the potential in both for out-and-out disaster.

"It's very humiliating to make a public mess of yourself on the golf course," he says, "when you ricochet a golf ball off of your lawyer's garage door for instance. It's also very embarrassing to write a story that, you realize after its come out in print, is not really your best work, although you may have thought so at the time.

"I've been there," he says. "I've done it many times."

Golf was part of Hallberg's life long before writing was. And he wrote long before he began writing about golf. He's published 20 short stories in such noted literary magazines as The Hudson Review, The Southern Review, Ploughshares and The Humanities Review. "And only one of them had to do with golf," he says.

Stories About Life

PERFECT LIES, A Century Of Great Golf Stories. Edited and With an Introduction by William Hallberg. New York, Doubleday, 1989. Hardcover, 364 pages, $18.95.

I'll be upfront with you about this: I'm an avid non-golfer.

I'll be upfront with you about something else: I liked "Perfect Lies" anyway.

The 23 short stories in this collection have two things in common: they all, at least on the surface, are about some aspect of golf. And they are, individually, excellent short stories.

Beyond these two similarities, the stories are as diverse as those in any other good short story collection. They're about love and sex, greed and loneliness. They're about coming of age and learning to die. They are about zen and murder, alienation and hope.

Like all good short stories, they're about life. Golf just happens to be in them.

The stories in this collection span 76 years, from Owen Johnson's "Even Threes," written in 1912, to Les Saniford's "Hustle," written in 1988.

In between you'll find everything from one of F. Scott Fitzgerald's stories of hopeless love to the hallucinogenic prose of Jerry Bumpus.

Because Hallberg has arranged the stories in a loosely chronological order, the collection offers its readers a bonus: a painless look at the evolution of the short story — which is another way to say, the evolution of ourselves.

The stories move smoothly from a strict social form to the emotional, and from there through stories of heroic individual quest to the almost nostalgic alienation of "A Perfect Day for Golf," by Toby Olsen.

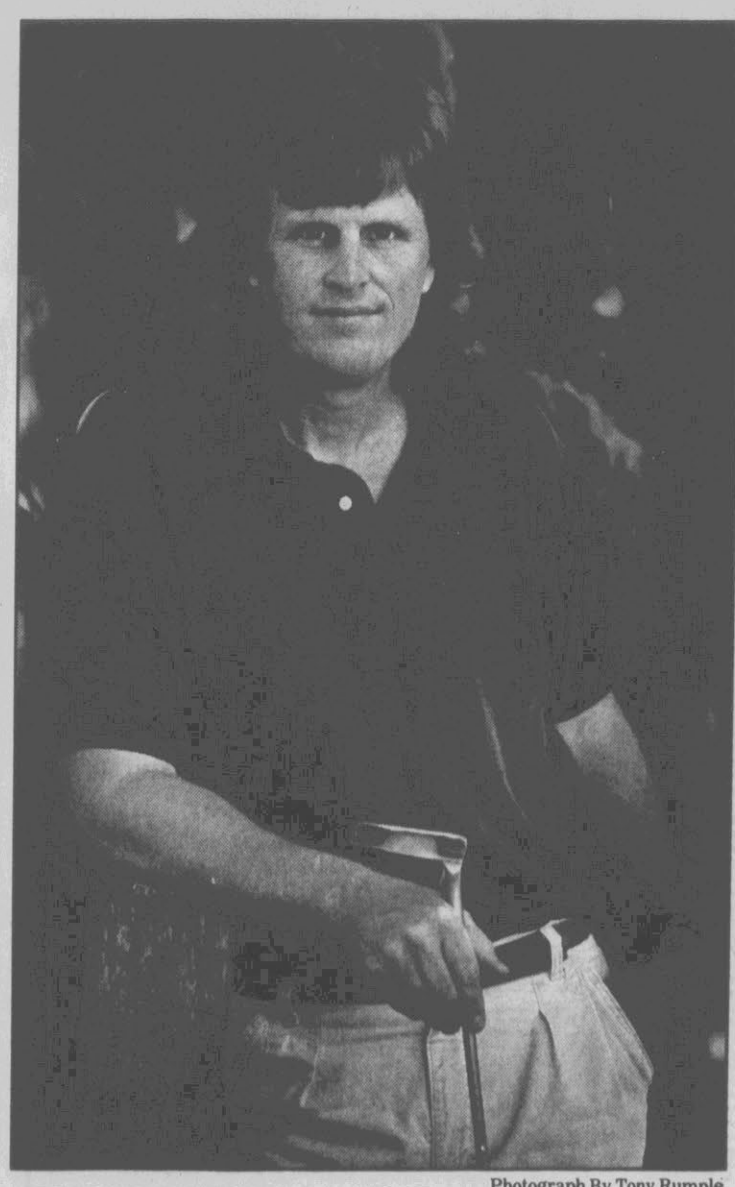

One word of caution: The first few stories rely heavily on golfing terminology and were, for me, slow going. If golf isn't your game, you might want to jump ahead — the rest of the book makes it worth staying with it.

(Note: In Greenville, autographed copies of "Perfect Lies" are available at Waldenbooks and at Central News).

Charges Of Faked Utrillos Shake The World Of Art

By Marilyn August
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PARIS — Maurice Utrillo, the prolific painter who immortalized peaceful Montmartre street scenes, was plagued by counterfeiters — first in life and now in death, his widow's sole heir says.

Jean Fabris, 58, is waging war against the alleged fakes, accusing art dealers, auctioneers and experts of putting profit before art. Critics of his efforts claim he's the one who is after money.

He disrupted auction sales in April at both Christies and Sotheby's in London, crying "Fake, fake." He was removed from the auction houses, and the sales of the 17 contested Utrillos went ahead. His campaign scored a tentative victory in Paris when he persuaded a criminal court judge to confiscate seven alleged Utrillo paintings valued at more than $1 million from well-known Paris auctioneer Guy Loudmer.

Verification of the disputed paintings will be handled by a court-appointed panel of experts. A final decision is not expected until early summer.

Fabris has also challenged the New York market. He has written to Sotheby's and Christie's threatening court action if they do not withdraw nine Utrillos to be sold by Sotheby's and six more by Christie's.

"We're not surprised to learn that he is once again attempting to promote unfounded allegations in the press," said Diana Levitt, a vice president and director of corporate affairs for Sotheby's in New York.

"As we previously stated, and as the courts in France have also found, Mr. Fabris is not a recognized expert in Utrillo's works. We have notified him that we stand by our authentication of the works in our sale and that we intend to offer them for sale on the date scheduled and that if he interferes in our sale, we will take whatever action we think approbriate to protect Sotheby's and our consignors' rights."

The seven Utrillos in the April 4 London sale fetched over 1 million pounds ($1.68 million).

Utrillo's naive street scenes, with their fine sense of atmosphere and composition, have become synonymous with Paris, and especially with artists' haunts in Montmartre such as the famed old music hall "Le Lapin Agile."

Utrillo, who died in 1955 at the age of 72, was known to have been copied widely during his lifetime. Locked into an unusually tight agreement to sell his work solely through his dealer, he reportedly sold paintings on the sly to support his increasingly debilitating alcohol habit.

"Later, when the paintings would surface, he would simply say they were fakes," Loudmer said in an interview. "That was his way of getting extra money."

Fabris, who was called a "longtime devoted friend" by Utrillo's wife, Lucie Valore, when she amended her will to leave everything to him, claims that in addition to the 3,500-4,000 original Utrillo paintings in museums and private collections, at least 3,500 fakes are circulating worldwide.

"Technically, it would have been impossible for Utrillo to paint more than the paintings which have been cataloged," he said in an interview.

Fabris said some of the contested paintings were probably the work of Valore, also an artist but less gifted than her husband.

"Utrillo didn't paint much during the last 10 years of his life," he said. "She would paint, he would sign and that way, madame could have her jewels, her hairdresser and they could keep up their high living."

The disputed works in the Paris court case are "Montmartre," "La Chaumiere d'Henri IV a Montmartre," "Rue Saint-Rustique et le Sacre Coeur," "La Rue Cortot a Montmartre," "Le Moulin de la Galette" and two works entitled "Le Lapin Agile."

Fabris says he determined they were fakes after studying enlargements of details from reproductions printed in the sales catalog.

"The signatures are not normal. The letters are hesitating and overdone, sure signs that they're fakes, when you know that Utrillo signed his name automatically, in a single gesture," he said.

"Montmartre never looked like the painting entitled 'La Rue Cortot.' It may be a street in Saint-Tropez, but it's not the Montmartre that Utrillo loved to paint."

Fabris said he can only guess why Utrillo was copied so much more extensively than his contemporaries — Georges Seurat, Maurice de Vlaminck, Georges Braque and Marc Chagall — who also lived and worked in Montmartre in the early 1900s.

"That's part of the Utrillo mystery. He painted authentic street scenes that captured local people in their daily life. They became stereotypes symbolizing Paris and Montmartre, especially for foreigners," he said. "It was a curse in life, and now a curse in death."

Loudmer and other auctioneers claim Fabris has hurt the future sale of Utrillos in France, where the market already is struggling to compete with other European capitals where sales taxes are lower and regulations on export licenses less restrictive.

"People will take their Utrillos elsewhere," Loudmer said, adding that British auction houses sell $200 million to $300 million in French paintings each year.

Guillaume Duhamel, a spokesman for Christie's in Paris, said two Utrillos were withdrawn from a May 3 sale in Monaco at the request of the owners. Christie's, however, stood by its judgment that they were authentic.

Loudmer and other art world insiders accuse Fabris of trying to replace the existing catalog documenting the painter's complete works. Paul Petrides, Utrillo's dealer and long considered among the world's most reliable experts, compiled it.

"Fabris wants the last word. He wants authentication to go through him — and for a price," Loudmer said. "Mr. Fabris is simply trying to 'get a piece of the Utrillo cake,' which is quite extensive.

"I have no doubt whatsover on the attribution of these seven paintings, all of which have been examined closely by numerous experts."

But Fabris, who says he has spent 15 years sifting through some 50,000 catalogs tracking down original Utrillo works, says he is sure the works are fakes.

"The police laboratory analyses will vindicate me, and this will turn out to be the biggest art scandal of the century," he said. "French experts are a joke. Experts, dealers, auctioneers are all in it together. The Paris art market needs to be purged."

National Parks Coastal Programs Set

MANTEO — Units of the National Park Service along the Outer Banks will soon be starting their summer visitor activities, according to Park Superintendant Thomas L. Hartman.

Programs will be taking place at Fort Raleigh National Historic Site, Wright Brothers National Memorial, and throughout Cape Hatteras National Seashore, and will run from June 18 through Labor Day.

Activities such as evening campfires, fishing programs, and The Beach Apparatus Drill will again be featured on the seashore.

Many park activities will be stressing themes of the biological diversity found along the Outer Banks, and how that diversity of life is beneficial.

A complete program schedule and information about all three National Park Service units can be found in the free NPS newspaper, In the Park. Copies may be picked up at any park visitor center or campground.

Children 13 and younger may earn official Seashore Ranger, Flight Ranger, or Roanoke Ranger patches. Stop in at any park visitor center for details.

Some activities require preregistration one day in advance. Registration takes place at the Hatteras Island and Ocracoke Island Visitor Centers for programs given at these locations, and at the Whalebone Information Station for those on Bodie island. The visitor centers and Whalebone are open from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. daily from June 18 until Labor Day.

The Wright Brothers Visitor Center will be open from 9 a.m. to 7 p.m. and the Lindsay Warren Visitor Center at Fort Raleigh will be open from 9 a.m. to 8 p.m. on evenings when the "Lost Colony" is presented; otherwise closing time will be 6 p.m.

All activities are free, although there is a general park entrance fee of $1 per visitor, or $3 per car load at the Wright Brothers National Memorial.

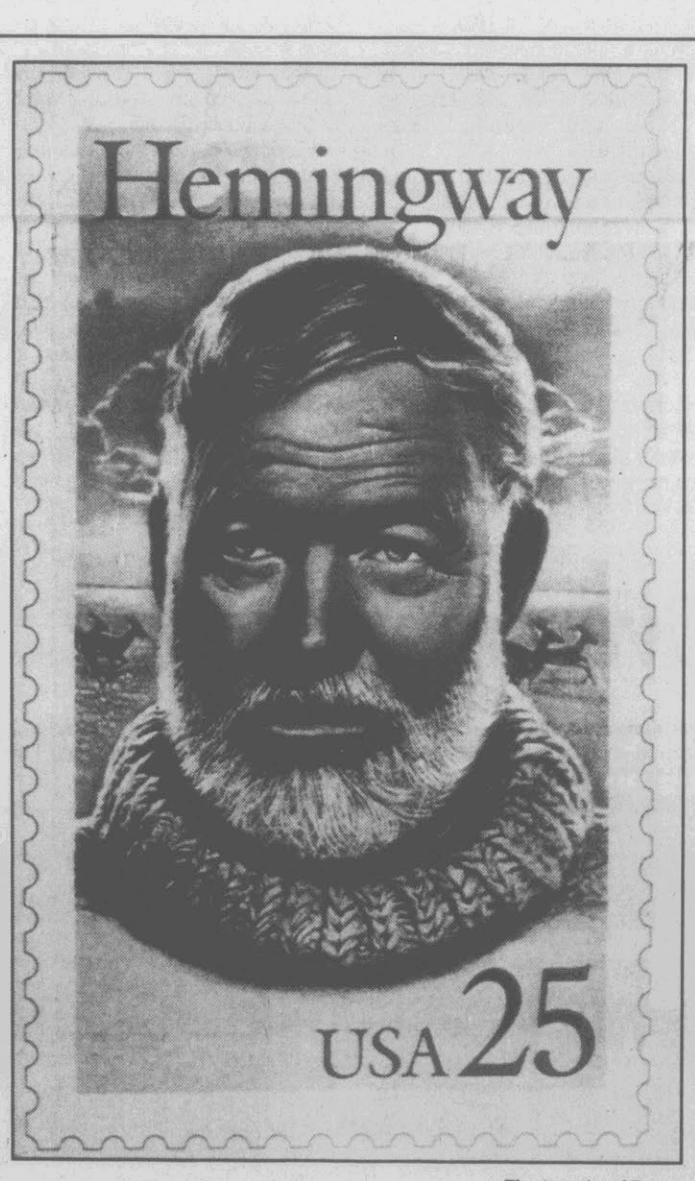

The activities are designed to acquaint area visitors with the national treasures and recreational opportunities available within the National Park units on the Outer Banks. Additional information may be obtained at any NPS Visitor Center, or by calling 473-2111.

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (AP) — What America needs is a revival of amateur music-making, according to Ralph Locke.

Aging Missionary Makes His Rounds On A Primitive Ox Cart

By Robert Weller
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ANTANANARIVO, Madagascar — For 60 of his 89 years, the Rev. Arthur Le Blanc made his missionary rounds in an ox cart. Then in April, his bishop ordered him to stop and assigned him a car.

The bishop was just 3 years old when Le Blanc came here from the United States and even had served as his altar boy.

"I was ordained the year Charlés Lindbergh flew across the Atlantic," Le Blanc said. Then the next year, he himself crossed the Atlantic on a three-month journey that brought him to this island off southeast Africa on July 10, 1928.

He has since endured countless privations, a climate doctors in 1932 said would kill him, and only limited success in converting the islanders to Roman Catholicism. Other Christian missionaries haven't had much success either, since the vast majority of people here still cling to traditional ways and to animism, a belief that inanimate objects have consciousness and personalities.

Le Blanc devoted his life to trying to sow Roman Catholism among them, nevertheless, and if he wasn't a big success at that, he achieved other things that would please a religious man.

Six years ago he almost lost his sight; a surgical implant has helped save it. Earlier, he nearly died from blackwater fever.

But he kept going.

"His persistance is incredible. In the early 1970s 'American' was a dirty word here, but he was so accepted that the difficulties didn't affect him," said the Rev. Joseph Shea, director of personnel for La Sallete Order, to which Le Blanc belongs.

"Priests in the United States don't ed with the desire to record as many as possible of these old stories, the wonderful folk and sea legends, ghost and shipwreck stories, tales of bravery and escapades of people who were originals, real characters," he said.

"I realize that the tradition of passing stories down from generation to generation is dying out. For years, many of the old timers could not read or write. There was ample time to pass on to children and grandchildren the oral history of ancestors, of friends," he said. "But that is no longer true.

"Today's descendants of long established Outer Banks families are becoming fewer and fewer among the growing influx of newcomers. The younger generation has so many distractions, opportunities to seek their fortunes elsewhere.

"What I'm saying is not to their discredit, it's just the way things are," he said. "My efforts to record these stories is, for me, a continuing labor of love."

Still Active, Vigorous

Despite physical ill effects from a near fatal automobile accident in his younger years, Charles Whedbee is exceptionally vigorous. Since retiring as a judge in 1980, he alternates his time between practicing law in Greenville and spending time at his beloved cottage at Nags Head.

"Every spring, summer and autumn, as time is available, I journey down to Nags Head," he said. "Occasionally, I spend time there in the winter months, a time of wonderful solitude and a different kind of Outer Banks beauty.

"I love to swim, to body surf and I swim every day in the ocean when the weather permits. It's invigorating. Sometimes I visit a friend, a fine storyteller in Wanchese or spend time surf fishing."

Because of injuries to his legs, he was unable to fulfill a longing to be a sailor in World War II. "It's been one of the major regrets of my life," he said. "However, I was able to serve in the G-2 intelligence program of the Navy, but never in uniform. I was carried on the Navy rolls as a civilan employee of the Navy."

And in Greenville he maintains an old-fashioned ambience in the appearance of his law office. Two rocking chairs, for use, not mere decoration, grace the small porch that angles around his downtown office. The rooms in his office overflow with books, with framed certificates of degrees and honors earned, souvenirs and momentoes from friends and associates.

"This," he said, showing a recently received octagonal silver tray, "completely flabbergasted me. There was no special occasion involved, it was simply a token of friendship."

The tray is inscribed with the names of lawyers, state officials and others he has known for years. "One of these names, Robert Allen, you may not recognize, it's Slim Short's proper name."

Now that the age of 80 is not far away, Charles Whedbee said "I'm into that last quarter of a life's century. My philosophy at this point is to try to do the things that give me fun, that bring me pleasure as long as it doesn't harm anyone else."

Those Coastal Legends

spirited race down the road toward the Coinjock drawbridge, pursued by hounds whose numbers increased with every house he passed on his midnight ride, is ace reportage. The drawbridge keeper, confused and alarmed, opened the bridge. The search to find Horace proved fruitless.

Whether this tale falls into the actual or imaginary, it is a splendid one, surely a made-to-order candidate for inclusion in a film treatment of mules.

The historic town of Edenton is the setting for a turn of the century story of the failure of one man's dream, "Doctor Dillard's Treasure." Centered on a quest for hidden treasure, the plot takes the doctor in voyages to Spain, to Cuba, and contacts with people in Charleston and Norfolk.

Incident by incident the story builds as the good doctor becomes obsessed, squanders a fortune in his quest — all in vain. The tale has the ring of possible truth, and leads one to ponder if there is indeed a valuable treasure cache yet to be recovered from the waters of Edenton Bay.

The timeless lure of mystery. of magic abounds in several of these beautifully told tales. There is, for example, "The Magic Lute," a haunting 17th century Outer Banks legend of romance, of a family tragedy engendered by the jealously of one sister who desires to possess for herself the lover of her sister. The evil of jealously leads to the love-stricken maiden secretly murdering her sister, then worming her way into the affections of the unsuspecting lover.

Alas, all is undone when a wandering minstrel comes from Wilmington to perform at the planned wedding of the scheming bad sister. How this reckoning comes about is a fascinating climax.

Ghostly, unaccountable music is also central to another tale of tragedy, "The Ghostly Hornpipe." It is claimed that to this day, if one will take the trouble to visit a certain place off Portsmouth Island on a November night of moonlight, one can hear the macabre playing by drowned fishermen of the Goodfortune dance.

Other tales and legends in Whedbee's new book takes the reader from older times such as "Ocracoke-vs-the King of Spain" and "Sir William Shakespeare's Wreck" to contemporary days in "East Lake Accommodation," wherein the history of making top quality moonshine in the days of Prohibition is explored.

Today, the pelican, until recently near-extinct on the Outer Banks and in coastal Carolina, has made a dramatic comeback. An interesting legend about this bird is told in "The Legend of the Pelican," which ends humorously with what Whedbee terms as "antebellum doggerel." . . . "What a wonderful bird is the pelican/ His beak can hold more than his bellycan/ He can hold in his beak/ Enough for a week/ 'Though I can't see how in the hellican!"

The more I think about it, the more I'm convinced that perhaps Charles Whedbee has indeed been singled out, anointed by the magic of a far-off Polynesian god. And I do not need to hesitate to say that readers will find "Blackbeard's Cup and Stories of The Outer Banks" to be an exhilarating treasure of North Carolina coastal fare.

The Edge Of Success

But when his separate passions for golf and writing fused, things really began to happen, things Hallberg calls "magic happenstance."

It started with "The Rub of Green."

"My editor and I thought it might sell 5,000 copies and that my neighbors would say how pleased they were for me, and my father or somebody would read it. All of the other stuff," he says, "was just magic happenstance."

Well, maybe the happenstance wasn't totally magic.

Hallberg sent a copy of the manuscript to writer Walker Percy, who Hallberg had never met but admired. A few weeks later, Percy dropped Hallberg a postcard: "Real good book."

The endorsement Percy sent to Hallberg's publishers was more eloquent: " This is a brilliant and highly original first novel," he wrote. "It is about golf, love, jail, and some rare rogues. The golf, as expertly as it is rendered, should not put the non-golfing reader off. For what Hallberg gives us here is not the game but the poetics of the game, which serves as a metaphor for living, loving, losing and winning. I works . . . this young man is a real writer."

His publishers immediatley increased the press run on "The Rub of the Green" from 7,500 to 25,000 copies and had Percy's endorsement printed on the jacket. This book is now in its fourth printing, a fact that even Hallberg, with his Midwestern modesty, can't attribute entirely to Percy's praise or to magic.

The "other stuff" this happenstance kicked off includes the book being picked up by two English publishers. Two Japanese publishers are "about to buy it," Hallberg says, and the Literary Guild has added it to their list.

Paramount PIctures also bought it. The movie should be out "in a year or so. Golf is very hot right now," Hallberg explains. "I think they want to seize on that."

At the moment, Hallberg's main interest in the film is detaching from it. "They may want to make a musical out of it for all I know," he says. "They could cut half of the book away and use one part of the book. They could shoot it in black and white and make a comedy of it, and I wouldn't have much to say about it since I'm not writing the script."

"But I think of it as something else, something apart from what I've done. Right now it's just something that distracts me from the other things I would like to do."

Those other things include a novel-in-progress, tentatively titled "Van Gogh's Ear," "which has nothing to do with golf." Hallberg laughs. "I'm so happy to be able to say that. I'll write about golf until the day I die in one way, shape or form, but I'm interested in other things."

With the attention his first novel received, Hallberg's greatest problem may be that he's a hard act to follow, even for himself.

"My greatest fear is that the book I'm writing now will be a disappointment to the people who were excited about the first book I wrote," he says. "I'm vulnerable to that.

"Writers quite often need to be praised. I think that's why they write, finally. There's an ego defect that they feel they have something important to say. And when someone, whether it's a critic or a body of readers, suggests directly or indirectly that what the writer has said is not so terribly important or is poorly stated, then I think it's a kind of mental thrashing that the writer takes.

"I don't know how I'm going to react to that if it ever happens to me, and it no doubt will if I continue to write.

"I've been writing in such obscurity until "The Rub of the Green" that I've never had to endure negative criticism. And I guess that scares me, to be honest with you."

Scared or not, Bill Hallberg has no intention of retiring his typewriter.

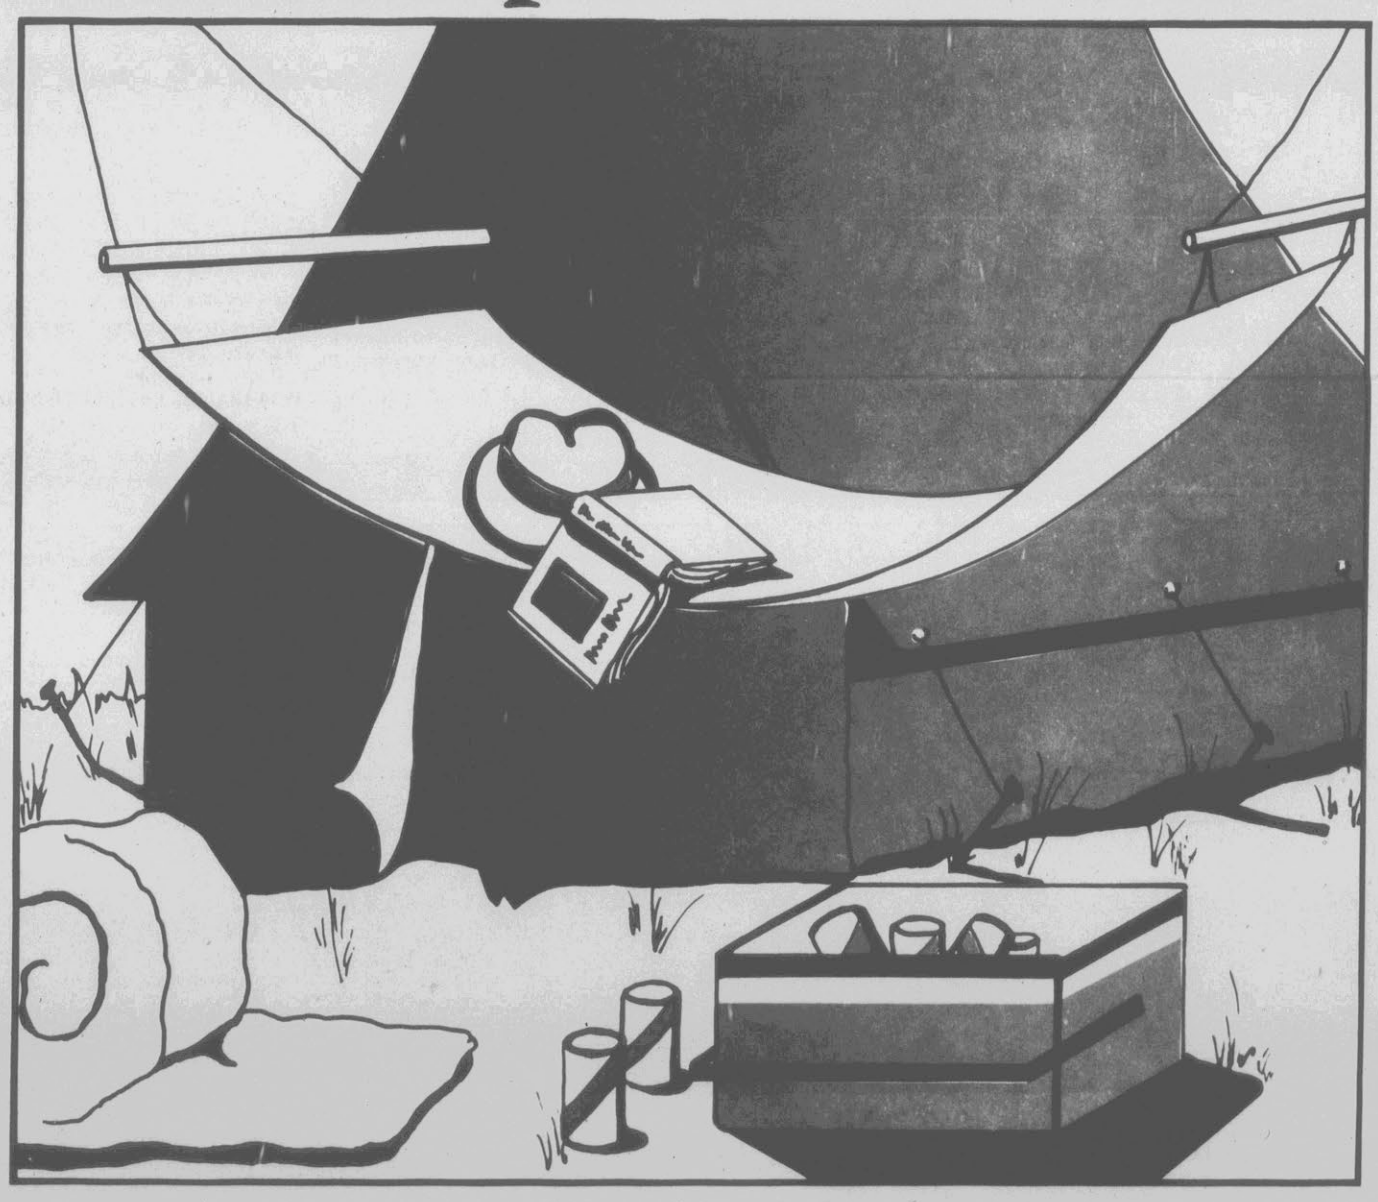

In 20 years, he says, "I would like to be sitting on my front porch, with you, talking about my 15th novel. And I would like to have made some contribution to the way people feel about other people. I guess that sounds kind of high-falutin'.

"I guess that's a writer's goal. To make a statement that can change things and can make people feel in a different way about something they haven't thought about before. So I would like to think that after 20 years I'd matured enough as a writer to actually say something that matters.

"I don't know if that will ever happen. I don't know if I have the intellectual or philosophical heft to achieve that, but it's certainly a worthy goal."

Map Collection At Hope Plantation

WINDSOR — A collection of maps spanning four centuries of exploration and map making in early America is on exhibit at Historic Hope Plantation near Windsor.

Earliest is John White's detailed map of the Outer Banks and the adjacent area from the Chesapeake Bay to Cape Lookout, on display at Hope Mansion.

Engraved in 1590 at Frankfort, Germany, by Theodore DeBry, the map displayed "the most careful delineation made in the 16th century of any considerable part of the North American coastline," according to William P. Cummings, an expert on North Carolina cartography.

Nine maps hang in the King-Bazemore House, a rare example of domestic Colonial architecture built in 1763. The Mercator-Hondius "New Description of the American Provinces of Virginia and also of Florida," published in 1606, relied on the White-DeBry map of the North Carolina coast.

The new name of "Pamlico Sound" appeared for the first time on the 1640 "Southern Part of Virginia and Eastern Part of Florida" map drawn by the Dutch cartographer Willem Janszoon Bleau called, "the most correct map of this area yet to appear" at that date.

A map by the French cartographer Sanson, "Carte General de la Carolina," in which the names were sometimes gallicized, was made for the King of Portugal, the King of England and the King of France.

Henry Mouzon's "An Accurate Map of North and South Carolina With Their Indian Frontiers," published in London in 1775, remained the most complete and authoritative map of North Carolina until the third decade of the 19th century. The Revolutionary War map of the Carolinas was used by both the British and American forces.

Also on display is William Faden's 1787 "The Marches of Cornwallis in the Southern Provinces of North America Comprehending the Two Carolinas with Virginia and Maryland and the Delaware Counties."

Other maps on display at the King-Bazemore House include John Speed's "A New Description of Carolina," 1696; Nickolaus Visscher's world map and map of North and South America, Amsterdam 1660; and Henricus Hondius's "New Virginia Map," 1710, a reissue of the Hondius map first issued in 1638.

Additional maps at the Hope Mansion include the John White-Theodore DeBry "The Arrival of the Englishmen in Virginia," Frankfort 1590; John Lawson's 1709 map of "Part of North America" extracted from his "A New Voyage to Carolina" and William Faden's "The United States of North America with the British and Spanish Territories According to the Treaty," London 1783.

Hope Plantation is the restored 1803 home of Governor David Stone. Also located on the property is the 1763 King-Bazemore House. Both houses are listed on the National Register and contain outstanding collections of period Carolina furnishings. The site is open to the public and guided tours for a fee are available.

Hope Plantation is located on NC Route 308, four miles west of Windsor. For more information write to: Hope Plantation, P.O. Box 601, Windsor, N.C. 27983 or telephone, 794-3140.

Fine Insights Into Winslow Homer's Art Depicting Blacks

A preparatory sketch by Winslow Homer for 'The Unruly Calf'

WINSLOW HOMER'S IMAGES OF BLACKS. The Civil War and Reconstruction Years. By Peter H. Wood and Karen C.C. Dalton, introduction by Richard J. Powell. The Menil Collection. Austin, Texas. The University of Texas Press. Paper, large format, illustrated. 144 pps. $15. (Available at the museum's gift shop for $15 or by mail for $17, including tax and postage. Order by check or money order from: The Gift Shop, N.C. Museum of Art, 2110 Blue Ridge Boulevard, Raleigh, N.C., 27607-6433).

This catalog, accompanying the current exhibition at the North Carolina Museum of Art in Raleigh of paintings, drawings, sketches and cartoons by the 19th century artist Winslow Homer, far exceeds the scope of most art catalogs.

(The exhibition will be in Raleigh through July 2. Admission to the museum is free).

As Richard Powell points out in his illuminating introduction: "Winslow Homer, Afro-Americans, and the "New Order of Things," there is a growing "perception of Homer as one of the few American artists of the nineteenth century to paint black people synpathetically, even though his early links to the popular press certainly made him vulnerable to an undiscerning and mundane notion of Afro-Americans."

He adds, significantly, that "critics — and perhaps the artist himself — sensed that this particular body of work stood apart from 'the average artist's minstrel-show conception' of black people."

This premise is fully explored and justified in the lucid text by Wood and Dalton that focuses on Homer's art during the Civil War and Reconstruction years.

Their extensive research and interpretations of the social and artistic meanings that can be gleaned from Homer's work in this period provide a dimension in Homer's art undoubtedly unsuspected previously by the average art lover more familiar with Homer's better known later works.

Principal among elements revealed in Homer's art is substantiation of the artist's sensitivity in portrayals of blacks and of children in general; his dedication to pictorial accuracy, and the depth of his humanity. His was an innate humanity that consistently reached beyond the strong emotional prejudices that held sway during his lifetime.

Homer's early years as an artist saw him leaving his native Boston to go to New York to find work with Harper's Weekly, perhaps the pre-eminent journal of the Civil War and Reconstruction years. It was on assignments there that he began to manifest "his journalist's sense for selecting and arranging the available facts in a realistic manner"; to significantly develop "his ability . . . his instinct for the decisive moment" of the drama inherent in assignment given him.

The authors feel that though a young artist at the time, Homer "was responsible in part for the way thousands of Americans would visualize" the momentous events taking place in America.

To give a well-rounded survey in the context of Homer's art in war and reconstruction days, the authors have included references and illustrations of other artists prominent in those years — artist/illustrators like Thomas Nast, William Ludwell Sheppard, Sol Eytinge, Jr., Alfred Rudolph Waud and the sculptor John Rogers. The inclusion of Homer's contemporaries add insight into the overall tenor of visual art depicting events of the years spanning the Civil War and the Reconstruction.

For me, the most rewarding area of this fine volume is that of Homer's art in which people, especially children, black and white, are lovingly defined in activities that today we might nostalgically term pastoral. In sketches and paintings of ordinary rural scenes such as the 1875 oil painting, "Weaning the Calf," a work owned by the N.C. Museum of Art, the fruition of Homer's art is borne out.

Homer's mature art in the latter years of the Reconstruction period is exemplified in masterpieces like the colorful grouping of blacks in the oil painting, "Dressing for the Carnival," in the collection of the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York.

Some readers may feel that the method Wood and Dalton used to arrive at their interpretations border on an excessive enumeration of details. Perhaps. Yet the total impact of their careful probing results in the volume being a valuable piece of history rather than just another pleasant visual treatment of art.

The lasting value of "Winslow Homer's Images of Blacks" is further enhanced by 16 pages of helpful explanatory notes by Richard Powell; a chronology in brief form of the artist's life and work coupled with top news events of the day for the period 1850 through 1879, and an exhibition checklist.

All things considered, "Winslow Homer's Images of Blacks" is an excellent and highly informative achievement, both on the life and work of the artist and as a page of American history.

FROM SHEPPARD MEMORIAL LIBRARY

By Julie Hicks
SHEPPARD MEMORIAL LIBRARY

We live in an age when families are constantly confronted and threatened by issues, concerns, and events. Dr. T. Berry Brazelton, a long-time columnist for Family Circle magazine, host of the cable TV show What Every Baby Knows, and author of many influential books, has written still another — "Families: Crisis and Caring."

Noted for his reassuring advice on child care, his newest book advises parents on major family crises: divorce and step-parenting, infertility and adoption, life-threatening illness in a child, the loss of one parent, the single father, and issues of two cultures in an adoption.

Dr. Brazelton candidly explores two other issues of special concern to two-career couples — rivalry between the parents for a child's affection and the role of a nurturing, actively involved grandparent.

Brazelton draws on the lives of five real families to show how each crisis upsets the stability of a family, how each member copes with the problem, and most importantly, how they eventually regain a balance and grow from the experience. An entire chapter is devoted to advice on when, why and how an overwhelmed family can seek help.

Every parent, regardless of his or her situation, will feel encouraged and strengthened by this wise book. In addition, the author includes a bibliography on the topics presented in "Families: Crisis and Caring" for further reading.

Book On Poverty

GREENSBORO — A book by several North Carolina writers on the topic of poverty has been published by the North Carolina Poverty Project. Announcement of the book's publication was made by Sam Ragan at Peace College in Raleigh.

Ragan noted that the book is an outgrowth of a meeting of creative writers who "gathered in Southern Pines to talk about how they could help develop a greater awareness of the problems of poverty in North Carolina."

The first step in gathering material was a request to writers for an article of upwards of 700 words about poverty for distribution to North Carolina newspapers.

Officers of the N.C. Press Association agreed to accept the articles, which were mailed out beginning in September, 1988.

Later, Ragan pointed out that "no one in North Carolina or in the United States has brought together a list of literary works on poverty." Ruth Moose of Albemarle, poet, short story writer, teacher and librarian, volunteered to edit an anthology of such works.

Plans for the publication of a 62-page collection of poems and stories were coordinated by Dr. J. Gordon Chamberlin, executive director of the N.C. Poverty Project.

The collection, titled "I Have Walked," has work by Ragan and Moose. Other writers living in North Carolina with articles in the book include Daphne Athas, Bruce Piephoff, Maxim Tabory, Nancy Frost Rouse, Shelby Stephenson, Debra El-Ramey and Robert Collins, among a total of about two dozen contributors.

"I Have Walked" can be ordered from: N.C. Poverty Project, 515 College Road, Suite 20A, Greensboro, N.C., 27410 for $7.50.

'The Lost Colony' Is Now Open For The 1989 Summer Season

A group scene from a prior production of 'The Lost Colony'

MANTEO — Friday marked the opening of the 49th season of America's oldest and best-known outdoor drama, the late Paul Green's symphonic play, "The Lost Colony."

Once again, the story of the first attempted English settlement in the New World will be presented on the waterfront stage near Manteo at the Waterside Theater on Roanoke Island, with performances nightly at 8:30 p.m. except on Sundays.

Admission prices for the 1989 season are $10 for adults, $4 for children under 12, and $9 for active military personnel, senior citizens 65 and older, handicapped in wheelchair, and for groups of 15 or more adults.

On Monday nights children under 12 are admitted free when accompanied by a family related adult.

Tickets can be charged on Visa and MasterCard by phone, 473-3414 between the hours of 10 a.m. and 6 p.m. Tickets can also be ordered by sending a check or money order payable to The Lost Colony to: The Lost Colony, P.O. Box 40, Manteo, N.C., 27954. Paid reservations will be confirmed and held at the theater box office.

In the event of rainout occurring during the first act, patrons may get refunds or tickets issued for another performance. If rainout occurs during the second act, only tickets for another performance will be issued.

The drama was first presented on July 4, 1937 to commemorate the 350th anniversary of the birth of Virginia Dare on August 18, 1587, the first known white child born on what is now American soil.

Fred Chappell returns for his fourth season as the drama's director. Frank Rey, choreographer, is also back for his fourth season. Music director/arranger Rosalind MacEnulty, who has been with "The Lost Colony" since 1976, has produced a new audio tape for the production.

Principal performers and the roles they are playing this season in the cast numbering more than 100 are:

• Richard Conway Bell as Father Martin. A resident of Culpepper, Va., Bell is making his debut as a cast member.

• Joseph Deese, as Sir Walter Raleigh. Another newcomer to the cast, Deese has worked in TV commercials, films and several theatrical productions, including "Holy Ghosts" in Charlotte recently.

• Kevin Frady, in the role of Uppowac. Frady, a drama student at East Carolina University, returns to "The Lost Colony" for a third season, his first in a principal role. Formerly, he was a dancer in the cast.

• Hank Hale, as Simon Fernando. Another first season performer, Hale is from Atlanta where he has appeared in several dramas.

• Barbara Hird, as Queen Elizabeth I. This is the fourth season the British actress will play this role. Ms. Hird is a frequent performer with the N.C. Shakespeare Festival.

• Pat Hurley, as Old Tom. A graduate of UNC-Chapel Hill and Florida State University/Asolo Conservatory of Acting, Hurley will play the Old Tom role for his second season in Manteo.

• Bryan Jones, as Governor John White. Jones, a veteran actor and entertainer, is another newcomer to the drama's cast.

• Charles Redmond as John Borden. Another cast newcomer, Redmond portrayed Governor White in TV commercials of North Carolina's 400th anniversary and performed in "The Roanoke Voyages," a PBS documentary. He currently is a boatswain aboard the ship Elizabeth II berthed in Manteo.

• Laura Weeldreyer as Agona, the Indian maiden. First appearing in "The Lost Colony" last year as a choir member, Ms. Weeldreyer has previously performed in "From This Day Forward" outdoor drama at Valdese. She is the granddaughter of playwright Paul Green.

ADF Season Is Opening Monday

DURHAM — The 1989 American Dance Festival opens with a week of high-energy dancing from two innovative modern companies, Bill T. Jones/Arnie Zane & Company, June 12-14, and Lar Lubovitch Dance company, June 15-17.

The ADF's opening week also includes a special appearance by the North Carolina Symphony, which will accompany the Jones/Zane performance.

Bill T. Jones/Arnie Zane & Co. is known for acrobatic movement and striking choreographic images. The company's dancers come from all sorts of backgrounds, ranging from gymnastics to acting; from classical ballet to Irish step-dancing. "Forsythis," 1989, a duet to be presented at ADF, plays upon those physical contrasts.

The Jones/Zane company was founded in 1982 by Bill T. Jones, a former participant in ADF's Emerging Generation program, and Arnie Zane, who died in 1988.

The 1988 piece "Absence," to be performed at ADF, deals with the theme of loss. Also on the program is "D-Man in the Waters," which premiered in March at New York's Joyce Theater.

The dancers dive, do backflips and slide across the stage in this spirited dance. "D-Man in the Waters" will be accompanied by the North Carolina Symphony, performing Mendelssohn's "Octet in E-Flat Major."

Bill T. Jones/Arnie Zane & Co. performs at 8 p.m. June 12-14, in Reynolds Industries Theater on Duke University's West Campus. Tickets are $15, and may be charged by calling the Page Auditorium box office, 684-4444.

• The choreography of Lar Lubovitch Dance Company follows on June 15-17. Lar Lubovitch creates intricately patterned, lyrical dances rich in musicality. Trained in ballet as well as modern dance, Lubovitch has choreographed for major ballet companies such as the New York City Ballet and American Ballet Theater, as well as for his own company, which he founded in 1968.

He has created ice dances for Olympic medallists Peggy Fleming, John Curry and Dorothy Hammill. His ice-dancing version of "The Sleeping Beauty" was broadcast in December 1987 on PBS.

At ADF, the Lubovitch company will present "Beau Danube," 1981, "Big Shoulders," 1983, "A Brahms Symphony," 1985, and 1985's "Concerto Six Twenty-Two," set to Mozart's "Concerto for Clarinet and Orchestra," K.622.

The company performs at 8 p.m. June 15-17, in Page Auditorium on Duke University's West Campus. Tickets are $10, $15, and $19, and may be charged by calling the Page Auditorium box office, 684-6444.

The American Dance Festival, founded in 1934 in Bennington, Vt., is now in its 12th year in Durham. This year's festival runs from June 11 through July 22 on the Duke University campus in Durham, featuring 31 performing companies from around the world and 14 ADF-commissioned world premieres. Season subscriptions are available by calling the ADF offices, 684-6401.

Missionary Makes Rounds In An Old Ox Cart

see the results of their work," Le Blanc told a reporter. "Here we do."

Sipping on a small glass of rum during one of his rare visits to the capital, Le Blanc recalled that books, magazines, electricity, even vegetables and fruit, were luxuries most of the time, and he spent many years as the only priest in one of several towns on the west coast.

"Two letters would arrive at the same time, one asking why the other one hadn't been answered," he said.

"When you get interested in your work you can do without things you thought were necessary in the past. You like the people, your companion priests. That's the main thing.

"I'm staying until the end."

He doesn't plan to use a U.S. vacation due him this year; his three brothers and two sisters have died.

Le Blanc talked of his arrival in Madagarscar.

"We had no church or even a house, so we rented a villager's house. It was our dormitory. Our dining room was in another house, a mile away."

Two other priests joined him after he opened the first mission in Morondova, 240 miles by air and until recently a two-day, and sometimes dangerous, drive from Antananarivo.

"We built a wooden cathedral in Morondova. Sixty men went into the forest and cut wood for it. It is still in use because the new concrete one isn't finished."

His first task was to teach himself the Malagasy language, and local children helped. Services were conducted in Latin but the priests read their sermons in Malagasy.

"We'd make all kinds of mistakes but the people were used to that and they were so happy we tried."

Newly arrived priests now get a seven-month course in the language.

His initial forays into the scorching heat of the baobab and tamarind country around Morondava were taken in a palaquin, a covered litter carried by four men who handed him to a second team in shifts, without dropping him.

After the government banned this practice, he began using an ox cart, extremely expensive on the small stipends priests earn but the only reliable form of transport.

"I packed my baggage, cooking gear and Mass materials into the cart, along with coffee and sugar. I carried no food. People gave me rice and chicken," he said.

Most trips were two months or longer, dodging ant hills and seeking shelter from the maddening Ranovory — downpours that occasionally burst from the usually deep blue skies. There were few villages or other rest points en route.

"You wanted to stop, but where?"

Le Blanc reckons he has gone through four or five ox carts and an untold number of oxen. At one point, the U.S. Catholic Missionary Vehicle Association gave him $1,500 for a new cart.

He recalled visiting one village to see a woman who had given up the faith to return to her former traditional beliefs.

"I tried without success to convince her to return and then left her village to resume my trip.

"But my ox died and I had to go back to her village to find another one. The woman said my return was a sign from heaven and she confessed," he said.

"It was thrilling to find one person who seemed to be interested, who asked a lot of questions."

Le Blanc has baptized thousands over the years, but sometimes he would return from a long trip with no new converts or only a handful, news that wasn't well received at church headquarters.

"The people are ferociously individualist and cling to their traditional way," said Shea of the La Sallete Order.

It is estimated that perhaps only 8 percent of the people in the Morondava area are Christians. Most of the rest are animists.

Ancestor worship is widely practiced in Madagascar, an island whose people have oceanic origins.

In the Morondava area several cemetaries display explicit erotic funeral art and funerals somtimes include orgies.

Visitors to the cemetaries are expected to make a donation to the dead, usually a sprinkling of rum, before entering the "spirit domain."

Christian Drama To Open June 16

SWANSBORO — "Worthy is the Lamb," North Carolina's newest outdoor drama, opens its second season on June 16 at the Crystal Coast Amphitheatre in Swansboro.

The portrayal of the life of Jesus Christ is an outdoor musical presented in a waterside amphitheater on the White Oak River by a mostly local cast of professionals and amateurs.

J.T. Adams is the playwright and executive director and Judy Adams is the show's artistic stage director.

The drama has a cast of more than 100, including 25 children, as well as an array of live animals — goats, sheep and donkeys, Arabian horses and Dromedary camels.

The play's set, a replication of the city of Jerusalem, includes three main structures: The Temple of Jerusalem, the Hall of Pontius Pilate and King Herod's Palace.

Handmade wooden fishing boats float in a lagoon that represents the Sea of Galilee. A wooded hillside, the cross on Calvary, Christ's tomb with the stone, the Garden of Gethsemane and the Upper Room complete the setting for the various events of Christ's life.

The drama also features period costumes, a soundtrack of the musical score, and high tech lighting and special effects.

The score was recorded in London by musicians from the Royal Philharmonic Orchestra. The soundtrack was performed by British Shakespearean actors. The show also features dancing, with several fast-paced numbers.

More than 90 percent of the performing cast members from last year are back. Texan Rick Robertson returns to the role of Jesus. John Ancellotti of Swansboro portrays King Herod and Swansboro's Cathy Kennedy appears as Herodius, his wife.

Jim Howell, of Rocky Mount, stars as Caiphais, leader of the Sanhedrin. Frank Fearing, a Peletier resident, portrays Pontius Pilate.

Shirley Page, of Swansboro, returns this year as Mary, mother of Jesus.

The drama is presented in two acts. The first act portrays Jesus and his relationships with the children and with his disciples. The latter half of the show begins with Jesus' triumphant entry into Jerusalem, and then relates the story of his last week.

The act concludes with Christ's resurrection on the third day after his death, a scene that creates the ascension into heaven through dramatic special effects.

The drama runs Tuesdays through Saturdays, June 16 through September 2, at 8:30 p.m. Admission is $10 for adults, $8 for senior citizens, $6 for children ages 7 to 12 and free for children 6 and under. Discounts are available for the military and groups of 25 or more.

Advance reservations are recommended. Call 1-800-662-5960 or 393-8373. Call for a free brochure or write to Crystal Coast Amphitheatre, P.O. Box 5004, Swansboro, N.C., 28584.

Kabuki actor Tamasaburo Bando stars in a film

Chameleon Charms Of A Kabuki Actor

By David Thurber
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOKYO (AP) — Prince Myshkin slumps back in his chair, lifting a shawl from behind him and pulling it over his shoulders. He slips on a pair of earrings, and with a smooth shift in bearing and expression — and no other props — transforms onstage into the glamorous heroine Nastasya.

Tamasaburo Bando, one of Japan's most popular kabuki stars, performs the remarkable change between male and female characters in "Nastasya," a play based on Dostoevsky's novel "The Idiot" directed by the award-winning Polish filmmaker Andrzej Wajda.

For the 38-year-old Tamasaburo, playing more than one role is nothing new. He's handled as many as seven in a single kabuki drama.

But as an "onnagata," or actor who plays women's roles in the male-only world of kabuki performers, Tamasaburo finds the role of Prince Myshkin more difficult than the transformation into a woman.

"At first I felt awkward because I've always played women in the past," he said in an interview. "I felt like I was wearing another layer of clothes — and Western clothes at that."

In the play, an adaptation of the last chapter of "The Idiot," Myshkin and his rival, Rogozhin, reminisce over their past with Nastasya, who lies dead behind a curtain, murdered by the impulsive Rogozhin.

In a series of flashbacks, Tamasaburo changes back and forth between the epileptic Myshkin and alluring Nastasya. Only at the end of the play does he wear a dress, after a kabuki-like lightning-quick costume change offstage.

Wajda staged the play in Poland in 1977 using just the two male characters, with Nastasya only mentioned in the dialogue. But in 1980, while visiting Japan, the Polish director saw Tamasaburo perform a woman's role in "La Dame aux Camellias" and decided to ask him to portray the roles of both Myshkin and Nastasya in a Japanese production.

"I don't know of any other actor who would give me the chance to create both male and female roles on stage without any change in makeup or costume," Wajda said when the play opened.

At a recent performance, the audience sat almost motionless through the two-hour, single-act drama. The gloomy stage, the size of a large living room, is surrounded by the theater's 160 seats, none more than a few feet away. Wajda chose the small theater to preserve the dark, oppressive mood of Dostoevsky's writing.

"Kabuki is really a kind of enjoyable show, with dramatic colors, dance and music," Tamasaburo said. "In that way it's entirely different from Dostoevsky's heaviness. But my goal in both is to link hearts with the audience."

To prepare for the part of Nastasya, Tamasaburo watched old American movies, carefully studying the gestures and movements of such actresses as Claudette Colbert and Greta Garbo.

Despite Wajda and Tamasaburo's disparate backgrounds and language barrier — Wajda directed the play in Polish, though the dialogue was in Japanese — Tamasaburo says they communicated well.

"I could barely understand what he was saying, but people's feelings are expressed not only by words," he said.

Wajda is best known for political movies such as "Ashes and Diamonds," about Poland during World War II, and "Man of Iron," made during the Solidarity trade union's strike at Gdansk shipyard.

"I think, for him, the link between people's hearts and art is the most important thing," Tamasaburo said. "Because he grew up in Poland, he was forced to become involved with politics."

Tamasaburo is graceful in his movements, elegant and, many fans say, beautiful. His popularity resembles that of a movie star or popular singer, and his fan club attracts both men and women.

Like many kabuki actors, his rigid training began at age six.

"As a child, I was interested in anything to do with theater. My parents told me that if I were going to perform in Japan, then I should become a kabuki actor."

The training included dance, classical singing, musical instruments, flower arranging, tea ceremony and calligraphy.

"Because kabuki is closely linked to the arts, every major role involves performing one of the arts," he said.

In 1970, at age 20, Tamasaburo stunned Japanese audiences with his portrayal of Lady MacBeth in a production of the Shakespeare play, becoming only the second kabuki actor to play a female role in a Western drama since the Meiji period, more than 75 years ago.

He performs with the stage name Tamasaburo Bando V, a combination of the names of previous accomplished actors, granted in recognition of his abilities.

Kabuki's history is traced back to 1603, the beginning of Japan's 250 years of self-imposed isolation, when a female shrine attendant in Kyoto led an outdoor performance of dance and mime by a predominately female cast to raise money for shrine repairs.

The theatrical form boomed among common people, but the Tokugawa military shogunate in 1629 banned females from appearing in kabuki after performances became increasingly erotic and linked to prostitution.

Today, many Japanese believe that kabuki "onnagata" are better than women at portraying classic feminine grace and beauty.

"I've played women for 30 years, so I can switch to a female character whenever I want, like switching to a foreign language," Tamasaburo said.

"It's a matter of association. When I put on the shawl, I think, 'I'm a woman,' and unconsciously begin acting like one. Then when I take off the shawl, I return to being myself."

WALKING WATERCOLORS

WASHINGTON (AP) — An exhibition of watercolors painted by English artist Tony Foster while on a 200-mile walk throough the High Sierra in California is on view at the Smithsonian's National Museum of Natural History through Aug. 13.

"John Muir's High Sierra: A Watercolor Diary by Tony Foster" features 28 panoramic watercolors, all executed by the artist during an eight-week hike in 1986. The walk took him from Yosemite Valley to Lone Pine in Sequoia National Park.

Eastwood and Locke before Sondra's smiles turned to fury

Q After living and loving with Clint Eastwood off and on for 10 years, actress Sondra Locke files a palimony suit against him, claiming that he talked her into two abortions and a sterility operation, locked her out of her house and in general did her dirt. An experienced attorney tells me that when a woman throws the book at her husband or lover in such a rough manner, it's usually because "hell hath no fury like a woman scorned." Is it possible that Clint Eastwood has taken up with some other woman, causing Sondra Locke to lose her cool?—M.K., Monterey, Calif.

A There's always that possibility. Eastwood has been conjecturally paired with everyone from Barbra Streisand to the Tooth Fairy.

Q Is there a special reason why Barbara Bush always wears the same necklace of beads? —Marian Pontecorvo, Alhambra, Calif.

A Mrs. Bush does not always wear the same necklace. She candidly admits, however, that one reason she wears beads is to hide her neck wrinkles.

Q How true is the statement that more than 80 percent of the men who play in the National Football League and the National Basketball Association are black?—Bob Turner, Justin, Okla.

A As of this writing, 55 percent of the players in the National Football League and 75 percent in the National Basketball Association are black.

Q Who is or was the (self-made) wealthiest President of the United States?—Ala Johnson, Charleston, S.C.

A Probably Herbert Hoover (1874-1964), who started out in life in West Branch, Iowa, and was never graduated from high school. He took the entrance exams, however, for the newly opened Stanford University in Palo Alto, Calif., and in 1891 was conditionally admitted to its first freshman class. Hoover majored in geology, became a mining engineer and struck it rich by evaluating and inspecting prospective mines throughout the world. By 1914, his fortune was estimated at $4 million. When Hoover was elected President in 1928, he was said to be worth double or triple that figure.

Q In her early Hollywood period, wasn't the late Lucille Ball frequently friendly with various studio executives, directors and actors?—Martha Lerner, Buffalo, N.Y.

A For a time in 1941-42, it was hushed about in studio circles that Lucille Ball had become inordinately fond of Henry Fonda while acting with him in "The Big Street," possibly the most serious and worthwhile film of her career. In "The Big Street," the actress played a selfish cripple with such controlled passion and understanding that director Irving Reis advised her to seek out more melodramatic parts in the future. In any case, Ball's rumored infatuation with Fonda diminished into a pleasant memory. Both players were too commonsensible to endanger their marriages—hers to Desi Arnaz and his to the former Frances Brokaw.

Olivia (l) and Joan in late '40s, when sibling rivalry raged

Q How come the sisters Olivia de Havilland and Joan Fontaine are still feuding after 40 years?—Thomas Hanshaw, Canfield, Ohio

A De Havilland, 72, and Fontaine, 71, are not the feuding sisters they were when both actresses were young and fiercely competitive.

Q On television a few nights ago, one of those "inside entertainment" programs broadcast that the late Marilyn Monroe was bisexual. An actor married to a famous stripteaser said that his wife had partaken in an affair with Marilyn and that he had written about it in a forthcoming book. I have heard an awful lot about Marilyn Monroe in my time, but never that she was bisexual. Was she? —T.A., Las Vegas, Nev.

MM—as in Mostly Males

A Marilyn Monroe was a swinger who, in the course of her lifetime, may have engaged in one or two affairs with a person of her own sex. But she was overwhelmingly heterosexual, concentrating her time, ardor and favors on men. In all her 36 years, Marilyn was alleged to have had an affair with only one woman—a drama coach—and Hollywood put little stock in that rumor.

This week, 1000 disabled artists from 50 states and 50 countries will show their talents in Washington, D.C.

They'll Astonish You!

The author with Willie Britt, who's holding the "Sandals" painting that won him fame.

Barbra Walz

MANY YEARS AGO, MY PARENTS TOOK me to see Stevie Wonder in concert. I was an avid fan of his, so this was a special treat for me. To this day, I remember quite clearly how absolutely amazed I was at Stevie's extraordinary musical abilities. And yet, I believe I was equally amazed that he could have such talent even though he was blind. I was much younger then and couldn't imagine having a disability such as being blind or deaf or having to use a wheelchair. When I saw people with such disabilities, I was filled with pity. I imagine that, like most young people at the time, I didn't really expect that a person with a disability could accomplish anything in life.

But now I too have a close bond with such individuals, because I share the characteristic that makes them "very special"—a disability that challenges me every day of my life. Thirteen was my unlucky year. But in the years since losing one of my legs to cancer at that age, I have gained something worth far more than a leg—a firsthand understanding of the torment, condescension and discrimination that millions of disabled men, women and children endure each day, not because of their disability but because of society's denial of reasonable opportunities for them to reach their potential and lead satisfying lives.

Now, of course, I realize those feelings—of pity and drastically reduced expectations—are the very attitudes that people who are mentally and physically challenged are fighting to change. I have come to know, firsthand, that the most severe limitation people with a disability often face is lack of opportunity—lack of opportunity to participate fully in society, to be regarded by others as an equal and have access to things we all take for granted, like getting a job or living independently in the community.

I have seen new worlds open up when a child first learns to paint, sing or recite

People with disabilities deserve opportunities to participate in all that life has to offer, including the arts. Unfortunately, our society does not place as high a priority on the arts as many other countries do. Often, when there are budget cuts, the arts are among the first to go. Arts programs for people with disabilities are in even greater jeopardy of being eliminated. I am not an artist myself, but I have seen the new worlds that can be opened up when a disabled child first learns to paint a picture, sing a song, recite a poem or perform a dance.

A few weeks ago, I was reminded again of the influence the arts can have on the life of a person with a disability. Though I have been deeply involved with the organization called Very Special Arts for several years, I am always moved, as if for the first time, when one individual achieves a goal that seems to embody our essential purpose. Willie Britt's story is one of those.

Willie Britt's now-famous "Sandals" poster hangs over my desk at home. It depicts row after row of brightly colored but otherwise identical sandals, with one askew. I think it conveys a powerful message about individuality. So, I thought I knew the Willie Britt story. Last month, however, I learned that William Britt—who had spent his first 34 years in the Willowbrook State School, an institution for the mentally retarded—had just graduated from Westchester Community College in New York at the age of 53. I was overwhelmed. I knew that when he had first left Willowbrook in 1974 for the Margaret Chapman School in Hawthorne, N.Y., the prospects for meaningful rehabilitation seemed poor. His counselors reported that he was angry, withdrawn and given to long periods of solitude. Fortunately, shortly after entering the Chapman School, Willie discovered his love for painting. That love soon became consuming, and Willie found his "canvases" everywhere—on the backs of discarded cardboard boxes and on crumpled pieces of construction paper. His talent blossomed.

It didn't take long for the school's director, Eileen Bisordi, to enroll Willie in the state's Very Special Arts program, enabling him to receive formal instruction in art. The talent which had gone unrecognized all his life now found its full expression. Soon his paintings, often of New York landmarks like the State Capitol and the Statue of Liberty, painted from postcards or photographs, were exhibited at the state's Very Special Arts festivals. Then, as part of a community outreach program initiated by the organization, Mrs. Bisordi enrolled Willie in Westchester Community College's fine arts program. For several years, Willie took art courses leading to the diploma he received last month. I am sure that few graduates anywhere this year were more deserving, tenacious or courageous than William Britt in achieving their goal.

In fact, when I think of the challenges I have faced in my own life, Willie is often the standard by which I take my measure. For Willie, the arts make a difference. I will always cherish the memory of whatever small part I may have played in making that transition possible. That's what makes my work with Very Special Arts so worthwhile.

Willie's story is remarkable but not unusual. In this country, there are millions of children and adults with disabilities for whom the arts have special meaning. They may not have such exceptional talents, but they benefit from participation in the arts, which can foster independence and self-esteem. This is so important for those who must rely on others to do everyday things people take for granted. The creative process itself plays a role, since it involves making choices and taking control of a situation, a process which generalizes to other aspects of life. I think that's one reason why the arts so often offer successful alternative approaches to learning where traditional methods have failed.

That's why I think Very Special Arts, one of many efforts that reach out to disabled persons, is such an important organization. Fifteen years ago, when it was founded by my aunt, Jean Kennedy Smith, as an affiliate of the education programs of the John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts, people like Willie Britt were routinely excluded from the mainstream of society. There were few opportunities in the education system or in most communities for those people with disabilities to enjoy the arts or develop their talents.

This year's festivals and programs in dance, music, drama and the visual arts will involve more than one million individuals from 16,000 communities in every state. People with mental and physical challenges will have the opportunity to enjoy the arts and to discover talents they never thought they had. That's important, because we all have disabilities and abilities. Although the public is more aware today of the physically and mentally challenged and their needs, much more needs to be accomplished.

Starting this Wednesday at the Kennedy Center in Washington, D.C., we will sponsor a five-day International Very Special Arts Festival for participants from all over the world. It's going to be exciting. We're expecting more than 1000 individuals with disabilities, both students and professionals, from all 50 states and 50 foreign countries. We will be integrating artists with disabilities into performances by professional artists, so that we can learn from each other.

This gathering demonstrates the power of the arts to take us beyond ethnic, racial, socioeconomic and religious differences. It's also one of the few events that will unite representatives from all different disability groups in a common purpose. The festival will truly be a celebration of the humanity and culture that binds us all together.

Many of the artists at the festival have already made extraordinary accomplishments. We're planning to showcase their achievements in performances, art exhibits, dramatic productions and master classes that will take place all over Washington—at the White House, Ford's Theatre, the Kennedy Center and the Capitol. I'm sure that those who are unfamiliar with what people with disabilities have accomplished in the arts will be astonished by what they see.

Michael Naranjo, for example, is a sculptor of extraordinary ability and accomplishment. When a grenade exploded near Michael in Vietnam in 1968, it ended his eyesight but not his vision. He returned home to the Santa Clara Pueblo in New Mexico, determined to make sculpting his life's work. At first, he got little encouragement, and his rehabilitation counselors urged him to pursue a vocation where he could more easily earn a living. At the time, employment statistics for disabled veterans were grim. However, Michael persevered, and today his sculptures sell internationally for up to $30,000. Having Michael at the festival should send a message of hope to aspiring artists everywhere who have disabilities.

Of course, not all of the artists coming to the festival have attained the recognition that Michael has. Many are young adults with a great deal of talent and a promising future, like Denise Shipler of Burt, Iowa, a gifted 19-year-old singer. Denise was born with phocomelia, which means that several of her limbs were only partially formed. Like other young people with a disability, she often experienced the cruelty of other children who ridiculed and shunned her.

Denise feels that it was music which saved her from despair during those difficult times and gave her a new basis for relating to her classmates. She has won ovations for her performances at the Iowa State Fair, and when she sings at our international festival, people from all around the world will join in celebrating her accomplishments.

Often, one of the most important factors in a person's adjustment to a disability, especially if it comes later in life, is the love and encouragement received from family and friends. I've spoken with several people who became paralyzed as adults from spinal-cord injuries, and all reported experiencing a very dark period of despair when the only thing that kept them going was the support and encouragement of others. Once this period was over, passion for their work—especially where it involved the creative process in some way—was the most important link to participating fully in life again.

I know this was true for Corrie van Hugten, who lost the use of her legs 12 years ago because of a debilitating illness. Previously, Corrie had been a ballet dancer. Even when she learned that she'd never walk again, she was determined to continue dancing. She felt that rhythm is the essential element of dance and that people confined to chairs may have lost the use of their legs but not their sense of rhythm. With her partner, Ondine, she has introduced ballroom dancing, wheelchair style, throughout the Netherlands. There are now 75 official wheelchair dancing groups and 300 qualified instructors in the Netherlands, thanks to Corrie's efforts. Last year, Very Special Arts brought Corrie to the Cotting School in Lexington, Mass.—a school for kids with physical and learning disabilities—to give wheelchair dancing lessons. Since they were having their senior prom the next week, it was an incredible experience and a great success.

One of the interesting things we've learned through our international program is the different attitudes and approaches each country adopts toward people with disabilities and their access to the arts. Clearly, the U.S. is much more advanced than some countries in certain areas, but there also are countries more progressive than we are. Wheelchair dancing in the Netherlands is just one example. There are continual opportunities to learn new approaches and innovative techniques from people in other states and other countries. That's why our international festival is going to be a fantastic educational experience.

Not long ago, my Aunt Jean went to the Soviet Union to begin planning a teacher-exchange program in the arts and in special education between our two countries. The most amazing thing to her was that educators and artists in the Soviet Union knew about our festival and wanted to be involved. So, even the Soviet Union will be sending a delegation to the festival. Talk about glasnost!

I think it goes to show you how important and universal this movement is. On the walls of the Kennedy Center, where the festival will be held, there is a quote of President Kennedy's that I am always reminded of in my work with Very Special Arts. It reads: "I am certain that after the dust of centuries has passed over our cities, we, too, will be remembered not for victories or defeats in battle or in politics, but for our contribution to the human spirit."

When Little Things Go Wrong

LOSE YOUR KEYS? SPILL YOUR COFFEE? GET CAUGHT IN TRAFFIC? NEW RESEARCH SHOWS IT'S NO LAUGHING MATTER...

BY MORTON HUNT

Palmer/The Stock Market

Herwig/The Picture Cube

Experts say the little things—like flat tires and typing mistakes—can wear you down: Don't let 'em.

IT WAS ONE OF THOSE days.

I had suddenly remembered an important appointment—so, naturally, I hurried and dressed, and my shoelace broke; my car was almost out of gas, and there was a line-up at the service station; it was pouring when I got to my destination, I had to park three blocks away, and the wind blew my umbrella inside-out, and... well, you get the idea.

All the same, that evening, when I told friends about my day, they laughed —and I did too. My troubles hadn't been serious, after all; they'd been the kind of petty annoyances which most of us find maddening when they occur but which later seem amusing.

Yet the laugh's on those who laugh at such annoyances, because it's the little things that get you in the long run.

Recent studies by the psychologists Richard S. Lazarus of the University of California at Berkeley, Allen D. Kanner of Stanford University Medical School and a dozen researchers at other institutions show that the ordinary trifling irritations of daily life—the researchers call them "hassles"—can give rise to a wide variety of psychological and physical ailments. That's because hassles are stressful and, astonishingly, have more ill effects than such well-known major sources of stress as divorce, the loss of one's job or a move to a new community. As Ben Franklin put it, long before there was any research on hassles, "Little strokes fell great oaks."

"Come off it! [I imagine you saying] Are you telling me that a normal, healthy person can be made sick by a broken shoelace? Trouble parking? A blown-out umbrella?"

No, not when such happenings are few or intermittent. But when they're many and continual, they add up to a genuine assault on body and mind. As Franklin also said, "Many a little makes a mickle [a great amount]."

For several decades, physicians and psychologists thought the major crises and changes in our lives were very likely to cause such stress-related disorders as depression, suicide, high blood pressure and ulcers. But, in recent years, painstaking statistical analyses have shown far less connection between such major "stressors" and illness than the experts had believed.

That set Lazarus and Kanner (at that time, his graduate assistant) to wondering whether small everyday stresses, the pinpricks of life, were more to blame. The two scientists reasoned that, while we often try to do something about our major sources of stress, many of us simply resign ourselves to accept our hassles.

To test this hunch, Kanner, aided by several colleagues, compiled a long list of ordinary irritations and nuisances, such as traffic jams, silly mistakes, arguments, being given a hard time by a customer or client, having to wait, filling out forms, and so on—117 in all. For good measure, they included some problems that seemed more serious, such as worrying about the meaning of life or about being out of work.

Kanner then got 100 volunteers, primarily middle-aged and middle-class, living in the San Francisco Bay area, to tell him once a month, for nine months, how often life had inflicted any of these hassles on them. They also told him how their health was both at the beginning and the end of the study.

Those studied, he found, averaged 21 hassles a month—some kinds often, others rarely. Surprisingly, seven of the 10 most common hassles seem no more health-threatening than the events of any rotten day. They are: concerns about weight; interior home maintenance; too many things to do; misplacing or losing things; yard work or outside home maintenance; property investment or taxes; physical appearance.

The three remaining "most common" hassles—health of a family member, crime, the rising price of common goods—do sound more serious, but the volunteers overall rated these hassles as not even moderately severe.

However, Kanner's finding—borne out by a dozen other recent studies—was that the more hassles people had to endure, the more likely they were to have psychological and psychosomatic symptoms, such as depression, anger, low morale, stomachache, low energy and fatigue. Other studies showed additional symptoms, including low self-esteem, an overall sense of malaise, poor job performance and absenteeism. Still others tied hassles in with physical ailments.

FLEAS. THEY'VE CLAIMED MORE VICTIMS THAN ALL WARS EVER FOUGHT.

It was called "The Black Death." Plague, transmitted by flea bites. Over 25 million people died of it during the Middle Ages. Today, sulfa drugs and antibiotics largely prevent plague deaths, but fleas and ticks still plague us with other serious diseases. We at d-CON believe you need to know more about fleas and ticks, the threat they may represent, and the best way to get rid of them.

Infamous transmitters of disease.

Fleas and ticks are astounding insects. The tick that causes relapsing fever can live for more than three years in a jar of sand. Some fleas can accelerate fifty times faster than the Space Shuttle after liftoff, and jump 150 times their own length.

Fleas can transmit diseases as serious as Plague, Typhus and Trichinosis. Ticks can cause Rocky Mountain Spotted Fever, Typhus, Tularemia, even Lyme Disease.

They hitchhike into your home.

Fleas and ticks come inside your home on you or your pet. Once there, ticks can live in your carpeting for months. One female flea can lay hundreds of eggs, depositing them on carpeting, furniture and pets. The fleas from these eggs can multiply into thousands more in only a matter of weeks.

d-CON kills fleas and ticks in your home.

Get d-CON® Flea Kill® Fogger. It penetrates deep into carpets and other areas to rid an entire room of fleas and ticks. And a unique insect growth regulator in the formula kills hatching flea eggs before they grow up to bite. Plus, it can prevent reinfestation for up to four months.

d-CON kills fleas and ticks on your pet.

It's bad enough to watch your pet scratch because of fleas. Even worse, scratching makes fleas fall off him onto your carpet or chairs where they can bite you or your children. Get d-CON® Flea & Tick Spray. It not only kills fleas and ticks on your pet, it can also be used on furniture and bedding.

d-CON can help you in other ways.

We at d-CON understand that you might want more information on how to get rid of fleas and ticks or any other insect problem. Please write us at: d-CON, P.O. Box 6250-C, Westbury, NY 11592. We'll be happy to send you our brochure.

Psychologist Anita DeLongis (now at the University of British Columbia) showed, with several colleagues at Berkeley in 1982, that the more hassles people have, the more they are apt to have headaches, colds and the flu.

Summing up, Allen Kanner says, "Just about every health outcome looked at in the studies is related to how frequent the hassles are in a person's life."

What can one do about hassles? Isn't a regular dose of minor exasperations a part of normal life? Yes, but it's the overdoses we're addressing here.

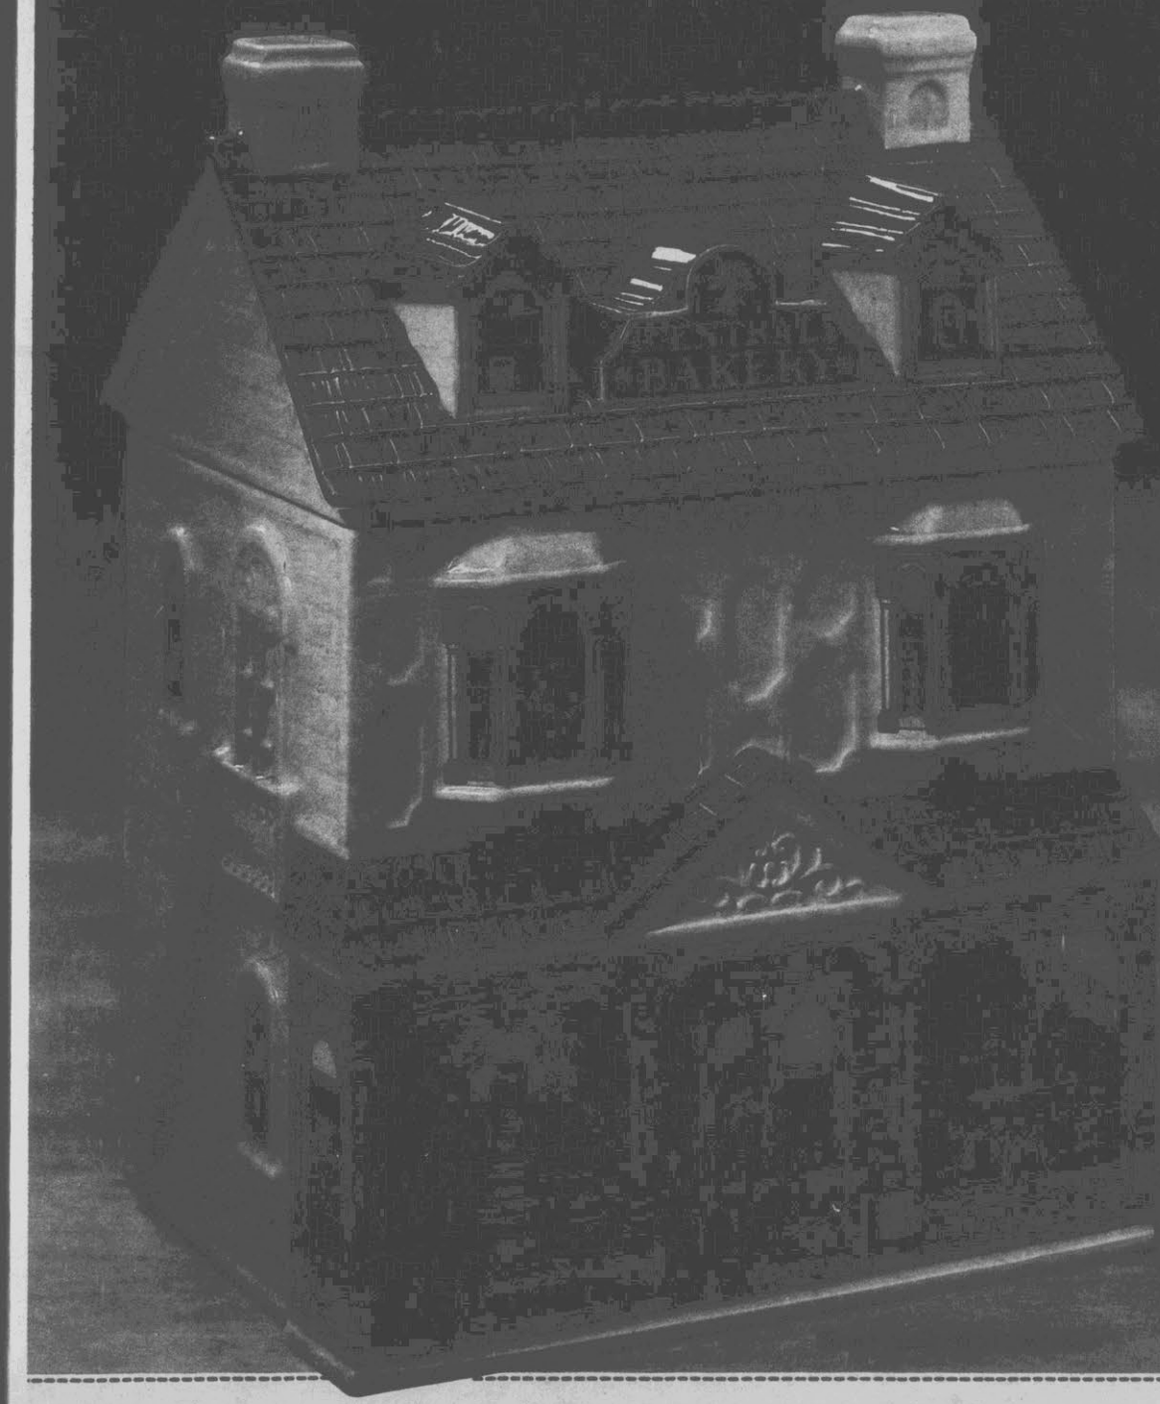

John Zarski, director of the Clinic for Child Study and Family Therapy at the University of Akron, found with three of his colleagues that people who deal with their problems by "forgetting" them or by seeking sympathy and understanding have more hassles than people who think them through and carry out plans to deal with them, such as:

- Make a "hassles list." When I'm hassled by having too many things to do, I write them all down, arrange them in the order of their urgency and cross off a few at the bottom.
- Accent the positive. Psychotherapists teach their patients to change their ways of viewing hassles. For example, instead of thinking, in their usual, downbeat fashion, "I lost the race [or election, or whatever]," they learn to think, "I came in third in a field of 15—not bad!" or, "I didn't do so well, but the experience I gained will help me next time."
- Be prepared to make a few changes. Allen Kanner says that if we can't affect some kinds of hassles (traffic jams, bad weather), we can change our reactions and do things to make them more bearable—such as playing our favorite music while waiting for traffic to move.
- Psychologist Raymond Flannery Jr. of Harvard Medical School, an expert on stress reduction, says that too many people want too many things and strain to the utmost to get ahead and to acquire all sorts of status-conferring possessions. That way of life, he says, often generates many stressful hassles. "One of the most important ways to deal with stress," notes Flannery, "is learning how to live with less, since there is not enough time, energy or money for most people to have it all."
- Give yourself good strokes. Everyday positive experiences such as getting along well with a friend, completing a task, getting enough sleep or eating out—can make us feel good and might offset the ill effects of hassles. In the words of the study by Kanner and others in the Journal of Early Adolescence (Vol. 7, No. 4), "...as with adults, there are many reasons to expect daily uplifts to have a positive effect on the social, psychological and physical functioning of children and adolescents." So, whatever your age, being good to yourself can prove to be good preventive medicine.

Tom Monaghan—founder of "the nation's largest pizza delivery business"—was raised in an orphanage. Now he's worth $480 million.

IF YOU COULD BUY ANYTHING...

Tom Monaghan, of Domino's Pizza, wearing the dough that made him wealthy. He's not your typical CEO.

Brian Smale

COULD IT BE THAT TOM Monaghan—the 52-year-old founder and CEO of Domino's Pizza, the country's largest pizza-delivery business—is a mogul in search of himself?

"I read self-help books and autobiographies," he told me, citing Henry Ford's and Ray Kroc's as two of his favorites.

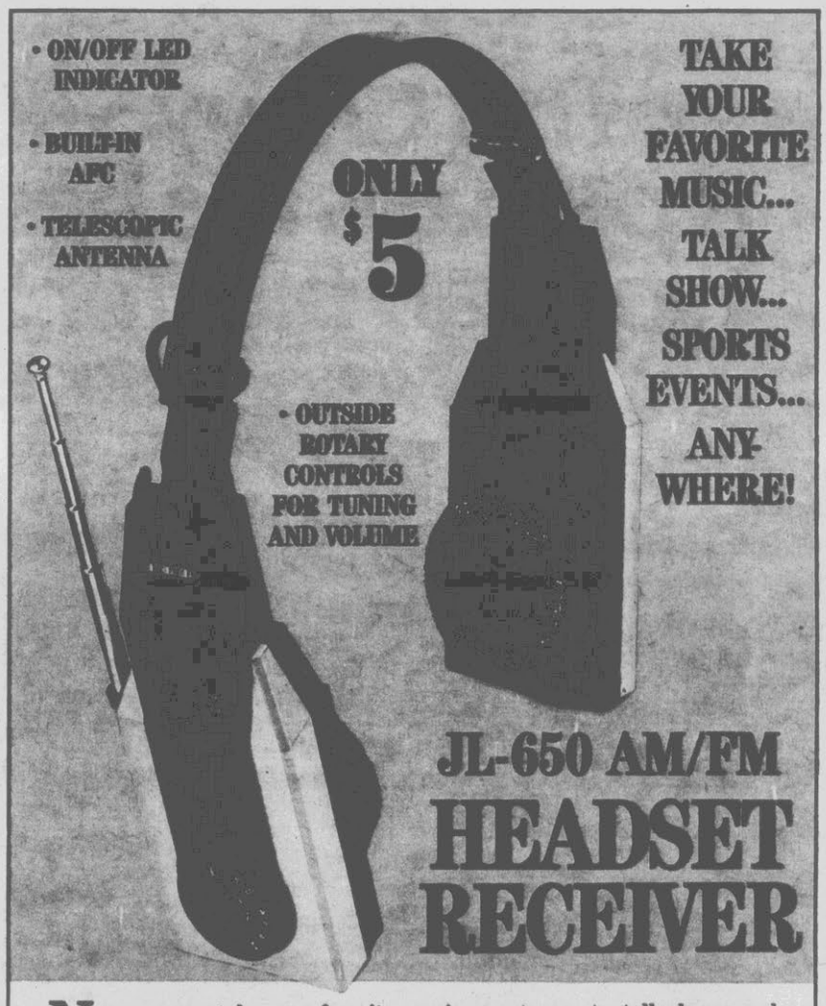

We sat in Monaghan's huge office—a $2 million duplex suite with leather tile floors and silk ceilings—at the company's 300-acre headquarters in Ann Arbor, Mich. On this day, he wore a white-and-blue polyester blend Domino's uniform. Although an enormous round desk dominated the room, Monaghan did not sit within its arc but just outside it, as if the desk almost intimidated him.

Monaghan is not the typical CEO. Not only does he lack a business degree, he has no college degree whatsoever. He is a recipient of the Horatio Alger Award, given to Americans who have overcome adversity—in his case, a childhood spent in an orphanage and foster homes.

Thanks to pizza, Tom Monaghan is a very rich man. Forbes magazine includes him in its register of the 400 wealthiest Americans, estimating his net worth to be approximately $480 million. Yet, despite his wealth, awards and an array of unusual possessions, Monaghan leads a surprisingly unglamorous life.

His launch in the pizza business—itself on few lists of glamorous callings—was inauspicious. After enrolling and withdrawing from the University of Michigan for two consecutive semesters, Tom and his younger brother, Jim, bought a failed pizza parlor in Ypsilanti, Mich., in 1960 with a down payment of $75. "I would have opened just about any business I could with little or no down payment," Monaghan admitted.

While in his 20s, Monaghan repeatedly trusted people he hardly knew, many of whom were common con men, and got bilked. What turned out to be trustworthy were Monaghan's own business theories—seat-of-the-pants stuff—which told him to sell nothing but pizza and soda, despite advice to expand the menu. It worked. By 1973, the company had 76 stores in 13 states. "I turned the corner that year," Monaghan said. He was 36.

The spending came soon after, much of it inspired by boyhood passions. A lifelong attraction to autos, for example, fueled what has become "Domino's Classic Cars," a collection of about 250 vintage autos valued at $30 million.

Does he enjoy them? "You always want more," he said. "They appreciate in value, and I love being around them." On the other hand, Monaghan doesn't drive—in fact, he has allowed his driver's license to expire. "It's a waste of time now," he explained. "I run to the office every day. [He accomplishes the 6-mile trip in 52 to 55 minutes.] An aide or driver takes me around the rest of the time."

As a child, Monaghan said, he always looked forward to the annual orphanage outing: a Detroit Tigers game. In 1983 he purchased his dream team for $53 million. These days—although Monaghan calls owning the team "the greatest thing that ever happened to me"—he seldom attends the games himself and never watches them on television.

One of his best-known obsessions is with the work of the great American architect Frank Lloyd Wright. "I always loved buildings, houses and architecture," he explained. "The first time I was ever in a public library, I took out a book about Wright. I was about 12. I saw pictures of the Robie House, Falling Water and the Johnson Wax Tower, all by the same architect. Who could not admire him?" For the last few years, Monaghan has been one of the foremost collectors of Wright's designs, including furniture, drawings and objects. "I've raised the value of Wright's work," he declared.

There's more to Monaghan's taste for fine design. "I'm an appreciator of feminine beauty," he said. "It's a form of architecture." He listed his all-time favorites: Mary Hart, Ingrid Bergman, Debbie Reynolds, Doris Day, Gina Lollobrigida, Ann-Margret and Angie Dickinson.

Monaghan's holdings also include

Drummond Island, a 72,000-acre private isle off Michigan's Upper Peninsula, where he is building a guest lodge and a golf course, Pepperoni Links (even though he's "not really a golfer"). He also owns a tall ship, The Domino Effect, a Marriott Hotel, travel agency and car-rental company.

Why does this man, who can buy anything, buy what he buys? "I'm not an extravagant person," Monaghan said. "I don't like to spend money on myself. I don't like showoffs, and I don't want to be one." He can justify all his purchases. "The 1931 Bugatti Royale is the greatest car in the world," he said of his $8.1 million acquisition. "Who wouldn't buy it? The car is famous, an investment, like the Mona Lisa. It has been in the Rose Bowl Parade with Gregory Peck. It sells pizza."

Indeed, part of the rationale behind these high-octane purchases seems to lie in the publicity they receive. "Tom has an approach to marketing that few people have," said Don Vlcek, a vice president at Domino's. "He feels that any time his name is in print, it sells pies. He uses himself as a sacrifice."

Monaghan's story, while fun to read about, is inspiring as well, because it was so darned normal for so long. Even now, there's a plain man inside the millionaire. Monaghan's four daughters, for instance, always had to work. No allowances—ever. "The only thing is, we get them a car at the end of their junior year in high school," he said. "But they have to work to pay for gas and insurance." Their mom works full-time too—in accounting, for Domino's.

Monaghan is not exactly modest about his accomplishments, nor does he brag. "Who Tom Monaghan is, to others, is Success," he offered. "But not to me—not 100 percent. He is simply living up to his potential. Everyone should do as much as he can, regardless of his station. I find it very hard to believe that anyone who wants to work can't get work. I had 40 jobs from the time I got out of the orphanage at 12 till I got into the pizza business at 23. I knew I was born to work. I never drew unemployment in my life."

He draws sustenance from his family—Margie, his wife of 26 years, and their daughters—and from his ardent Catholicism. Long a regular at daily mass, he upped himself to three rosaries a day after he bought the Tigers. "I knew I'd need more strength," he explained, "and I wanted my values to stay."

Devout Catholic, pizza mogul, lover of fine forms, hard worker, impulsive acquirer—Monaghan insists that the publicity he seeks has a deeper purpose. "I have an opportunity to express my views," he said. "I like that, because I think they're good."

Play It Safe

USDA warning to backyard barbecuers: Before you bite—beware the rare burger!

Connoisseurs of good food may order their meat "rare" or even bleu, which is French for "blue." But the U.S. Department of Agriculture says such meat frequently is undercooked and does not meet its safety recommendations. According to Susan Rehe of the USDA, meat must reach an internal temperature of at least 160°F to kill harmful bacteria, which can cause severe diarrhea, abdominal cramps and other food-borne illnesses. "Meat ordered 'rare,' " she explains, "is generally heated to a maximum of 140°F. Better to play it safe and order it 'medium' or 'well-done.' " The USDA also recommends that turkey breasts be heated to a minimum of 170°F and other poultry to a minimum of 180°F.

A few months ago, some 40 children in Minnesota became ill and six were hospitalized as a result of eating underheated hamburgers. To prevent such undercooking, the Department of Agriculture advises: "Heat all meat patties until they are hot, steaming and the juices run clear. The center of the patty should be grayish-brown, with no evidence of pink color." The presence of pink in the center of the patty signifies that the meat is undercooked.

If you have questions on the subject, phone the Meat and Poultry Hot Line, toll-free, at 1-800-535-4555.

Slicing the Pie

Each year, our Congress votes billions of dollars to foreign nations. The money is used in a variety of programs, ranging from military assistance to disaster relief. For fiscal 1989, which ends on Sept. 30, some 90 countries will have shared more than $10 billion of American largesse. Listed here are the countries receiving the largest slices of the U.S. bilateral-aid pie—no doubt for supplying services and accommodations and for supporting our needs and policies. The figures represent the most recent estimates compiled by the Congressional Research Service.

1) Israel.....$3.0 billion
2) Egypt.....2.4 billion
3) Pakistan.....627 million
4) Turkey.....624 million
5) El Salvador.....389 million
6) Greece.....351 million
7) Philippines.....270 million
8) Honduras.....209 million
9) Portugal.....163 million
10) Guatemala.....146 million
11) Bangladesh.....130 million

The Sultan Goes Hollywood

One of the world's wealthiest zillionaires, the Sultan of Brunei, reportedly is in the market for property in Beverly Hills, Calif. The sultan —who quietly contributed $10 million (a mere bagatelle) to the Reagan Administration's controversial Iran-Contra program, only to have his check lose its way somewhere in Swiss financial circles—already owns the posh Beverly Hills Hotel, where accommodations range from $190 a night for a single to $3100 a night for a bungalow.

He purchased the 263-room hostelry in October 1987 for about $185 million, then for $10 million bought two houses behind the hotel for his private compound. Real-estate agents say he would like to enlarge the compound. Several years ago, he bought the Dorchester Hotel in London, which turned out to be a profitable deal.

The 42-year-old monarch has three sons and six daughters by his two wives (he's permitted four). His formal name is Sir Muda Hassanal Bolkiah Mu'izuddin Waddaulah, and the independent sultanate over which he rules is about the size of Delaware. Pronounced "broon-eye," it's on the island of Borneo in the South China Sea. It is rich in oil and natural gas, the source of the Islamic monarch's fabulous wealth.

Shame the Drug-Users

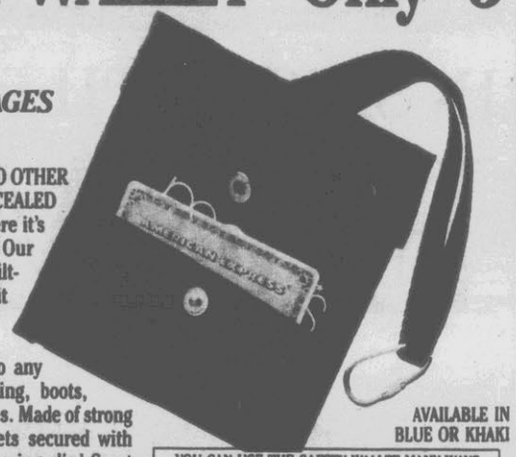

Dr. Herbert Kleber, a Yale University psychiatrist and director of a substance-abuse treatment unit, believes strongly that the names of people caught buying cocaine should be publicized and their driver's licenses confiscated.

"Instead of it being the safe drug that many persons—particularly the young—believe it to be," he asserts, "cocaine is the most psychologically addictive drug we know. Once the 'high' effects of its euphoria wear off, depression, paranoia and impaired judgment set in. These are dangerous conditions, not only to the user of cocaine but to the general public as well —which is why society should shame the abusers of cocaine by both publicizing and penalizing them."

In a recent issue of the British Journal of Addiction, Kleber writes: "The media should be more willing to present stories of ordinary individuals who have got into major difficulty with the drug than titillate the public with stories of famous entertainment figures who get caught up with it and yet appear to manage to lead a glamorous life."

IN STEP WITH:®

BY JAMES BRADY

Elle Macpherson

PRESIDENT BUSH WAS IN NEW York for the day to make a speech to federal drug agents. Barbara Bush was in town on another project, and Dan Quayle was passing through en route to a Republican function. The result? Midtown traffic had turned to molasses, but who cared? I was having a drink with Elle Macpherson up at the Regency Hotel on Park Avenue, and minor discomfiture could be shrugged off.

If she is not the most beautiful woman in the world, Elle will do until one comes along.

Her real first name is Eleanor, and she is exactly 6 feet tall and comes from Sydney, Australia. For three years she was the cover girl on the Sports Illustrated swimsuit issue. You may have seen her on the David Letterman show or chatting with Johnny Carson or sauntering along a beach in a body-hugging bathing suit in a beer commercial. If you have, you are not likely to forget.

Oh, yes, she is also very sweet. People who know her kept telling me that, saying she was "nice." It's an old-fashioned word, but Elle likes it. "You hear, 'She's intelligent...ravishing,'" Elle said. "I like 'nice' better."

Elle was 16, a good student headed for law school, when her family flew to Aspen, Colo., on a ski vacation. A modeling agent spied her there and said she might do very well at the work. "I decided to try it for a month," Elle said. "I thought maybe I could make $1000. I didn't like New York at first. The buildings all seemed to be falling down. And it was cold. I didn't dress right. I didn't know about cashmere and keeping warm. I had all these bulky sweaters with big holes in the weave." Now she considers New York home—in fact, on the day we spoke she'd moved to a new apartment off Park Avenue.

Unlike most models who dislike the work (Paulina Porizkova will tell you she hates it!), Elle thinks of modeling as a profession. "I like it," she said. "I'm there to sell something, and I want to do it well. You are doing something different every day. You meet creative people. I work on one job one day and another the next, and then I'm in Miami for two days. What other work provides that variety? Sure, some of the people are difficult, but you learn to handle it."

She doesn't have any acting ambitions, but what she does want is a career in broadcasting—doing specials and documentaries. Crest Films has floated the idea of an underwater special starring Elle, and CBS seems interested. As to her TV experience so far, she said, "David Letterman is very nice. But he doesn't listen to your answers." And Johnny Carson? "He's a real gentleman. But you don't see him backstage, and then you're out there talking, and it's such a shock to see he's wearing makeup. I kept staring. I couldn't help it."

Chiasson/Gamma-Liaison

BORN: March 29, 1964, in Sydney, Australia.
PERSONAL: Married fashion photographer Gilles Bensimon in 1986.
CAREER HIGHLIGHTS: Ford model since 1986; appeared on cover of Sports Illustrated swimsuit issue in 1986, 1987 and 1988, as well as in many fashion magazines and on TV commercials; under exclusive contract to Biotherm.
INTERESTS: Include running, gourmet cooking.

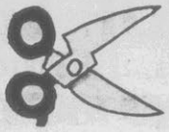

She's beautiful. She's 6 feet tall. She enjoys modeling and wants to do TV. She's Elle Macpherson. Best of all, she's nice.

BRADY'S BITS

Elle doesn't have that familiar Crocodile Dundee Australian twang. "My mother was very strict on that," she said. Her parents split when she was very young, and I asked if that hurt. "From zero to 10 years," she said, "everything affects you." Her own marriage to a French photographer may be in difficulty, but she didn't want to talk about it. Oh, yes, when Elle was first in New York, she and Paulina Porizkova shared an apartment. "I'll bet that was some place," I said. "The phone must never have stopped ringing." Elle grinned. "It wasn't dull."

'Ghostbusters' Again

Uh-oh. "Scientist" Harold Ramis gives bad news to Aykroyd, Murray and Weaver (l-r)

People are so nasty to each other in New York City, says director Ivan Reitman, that an evil spirit is unleashed. And if you don't know who can save the Big Apple, you never saw what came before Ghostbusters II. But times have changed for the old crew since last we saw them. For example, the fearless ghost-zappers Dan Aykroyd and Ernie Hudson now entertain at children's parties, and parapsychologist Bill Murray is host of a TV talk show. The lovely Dana (Sigourney Weaver), married and divorced, is now a single working mother. When her 8-month-old baby boy is suddenly menaced by something weird, whom do you suppose she calls? Columbia.

BOOKS

AMA, A to Z

The American Medical Association Encyclopedia of Medicine (Random House, $39.95) is just what its name suggests—an alphabetical account of diseases, symptoms and medical information in general. It runs to 1183 pages, which gives it room to cover virtually all of the known medical problems. It's not a treatment book, but it is highly informative, useful and up-to-date, with no fewer than five pages, for example, on AIDS, a disease that was identified only in the 1980s. —Herbert Kupferberg

TELEVISION

FOR BUSY COOKS

A person could go from doing dinner every day in the same boring old way to being the creator of elegant and delicious meals very easily, watching Pierre Franey's Cuisine Rapide. Using light ingredients, with little butter or salt, Franey (author of the syndicated column "60-Minute Gourmet") focuses on dishes that can be prepared simply and quickly. For the person with more experience and more time to spend, there is Madeleine Cooks, with the very knowledgeable Madeleine Kamman, great company in the kitchen. Both on PBS. Cuisine Rapide, written by Franey and "New York Times" food critic Bryan Miller (Times Books, $22.50), and Kamman's When French Women Cook (Atheneum, $14.95) and Madeleine Cooks (Morrow, $17.95) are companion books to these series.

Hearing Poetry

Many familiar voices—Alec Guinness, John Gielgud, Richard Burton, others—read Your Favorite Poems. Ranging from the works of early English poets to the contemporary, selections were chosen simply because people have loved them through the years. There's Wordsworth ("I wandered lonely as a cloud…"), Shakespeare ("Shall I compare thee to a summer's day…"), even Lewis Carroll ("You are old, Father William…"). Fitting Facts

How to Avoid Gapping and Wrinkling

If you experience bulge at any part of your bra, the design may be wrong for your figure—or your cup size may be too small. Another sign of improper size is when the cups themselves wrinkle—also an indication that they are too small. A bra that fits should embrace you smoothly in all areas and lie flatly against the breastbone.

What a sale! Now you can own any six movies here for just 89¢ each (plus shipping/handling) with membership in the CBS Video Club. Think of it!—movies for less than the price of movie tickets, even less than the price of many rentals!

Choose from the best, too. Midnight Run, Big and more! And you can even get 2 more movies at a savings of up to $65 each (see Advance Selections box in coupon).

There's no membership fee for joining, nor do you have to buy a lot of movies. Just six more within the next three years. And you'll have no problem in finding six movies you want, because our library holds over 2,500 titles; from the very newest releases to classical favorites. Our regular Club prices currently range from $79.95 to $29.95, plus shipping and handling; and we also offer a selection of lower-priced videocassettes, down to $14.95. Your only obligation is to buy six movies in three years, for as little as $29.95 each—and you may cancel membership anytime after doing so.

How the Club operates: about every four weeks (up to 13 times a year) we send you our CBS Video Club Magazine, reviewing our Director's Selection, plus many alternate movies. And up to four times a year, you may also receive offers of Special Selections, usually at a discount off regular Club prices, for a total of up to 17 buying opportunities.

Choose only the movies you want: if you want the Director's Selection, don't do a thing—it'll arrive automatically. If you'd prefer an alternate movie, or none at all, just mail the card always provided by the date specified.

You'll always have two full weeks to decide. (If you ever receive a tape before having had two weeks to decide, just send it back at our expense.)

Half-Price Bonus Plan: after fulfilling your membership obligation, you'll automatically become eligible for our Half-Price Bonus Plan. With each movie you buy at regular Club prices, the plan currently allows you to take another movie of equal value or less at 50% off.

10-Day Risk-Free Trial: join today and we'll send your introductory movies, along with more details on how the Club works. If for any reason you're not satisfied, return everything within 10 days for a full, prompt refund and no further obligation.

For fastest service: use your credit card and our toll-free number to order. Just call 24-hours a day:

'Hunter' Airs On Saturday Nights On NBC

By Lynn Hoogenboom

When "Hunter" premiered in 1984, it was an obvious knockoff of "Dirty Harry," complete with a catch phrase ("Works for me"), obstreperous superiors, and a car that frequently fell apart. Today, the popular NBC Saturday-night police drama is a pure, unadulterated cop show, the kind that supposedly doesn't work on TV anymore. The gimmicks are gone, and the show has turned into a belated smash hit.

"They wanted 'Dirty Harry' on television," says Fred Dryer, who plays take-charge Det. Rick Hunter with a low-key intensity and wry sense of humor. "But when the camera started rolling, I started doing different things. I wasn't about to try to mimic somebody else's career or somebody else's moniker."

Those trying to explain why the show has become so successful are often at a loss. "When you look at it, it's almost a mid-'60s morality that we're playing," says Dryer, a former defensive end for both the New York Giants and the Los Angeles Rams. "There's nothing high-tech about it. There's nothing contemporary about it."

"I think the only thing that makes this show different at all is the relationship between the two characters, Hunter and McCall," says Stepfanie Kramer, who plays Hunter's tough, in-control partner, Det. Dee Dee McCall. "There's nothing new about this show except for the energy that comes out of the relationship between the two lead characters."

Both Kramer and Dryer have taken an active role in the development of the series. Neither have been shy about making their feelings known when they don't like a script, both have also directed a number of episodes, and this fall Dryer will be producing "Hunter" in conjunction with a partner, Larry Kubik.

"In the last two years, I figured out that I'm going to wind up producing the show," says Dryer. "I look at it this way. I'll wind up at least spending seven years doing this television show, which is half of my football career. In order to put that block of time in, I've got to be able to feel as though when I leave the television show, I'm pulling something away from it other than the experience of being in front of the camera and getting a paycheck. I want to know every single thing there is to know about television production."

His plans for the show? "We're going to improve the show, but we're not going to monkey with the chemistry," promises Dryer.

That chemistry is the most intriguing aspect about the show, and viewers frequently wonder why it hasn't blossomed into romance.

"Why do it?" says Dryer. "Once you open it up, you'd better attend to it. You'd better dig deep and go to all the corners of that relationship. When you do that, it stops being a police show. When you do that, you start having to ask the audience to indulge in a sophomoric television attempt at romance."

Dryer obviously knows enough about TV to recognize its pitfalls. And it's just possible that "Hunter" has managed to survive — and improve — because someone like Dryer has been taking a guiding interest in it.

"There are about 50 cop shows over the last five years that have come and gone," Dryer says. "You look and say, 'God, we made it past everybody — we outlived everybody.' There's a reason for that. I think that the show really appeals to a basic theme of justice that everybody has."

Hound Town

Michael Manasseri, Christopher Rich, Jennifer Darling, Charlie Adler and Miriam Flynn will provide the voices when NBC airs "Hound Town," a new animated comedy-development project. The show will feature Rusty, Napoleon, Muffin, Patton and Sasha a group of dogs that become involved in all manner of trouble in both the human and canine communities.

Michele Will Tell

By Michele Marks

Dear Michele: What can you tell me about actress Linda Darnell? — L. RIGEL, DUNDEE, MICH.

Linda Darnell was born Monetta Eloyse Darnell, on Oct. 16, 1921, in Dallas, Texas, the daughter of a postal clerk and an over-ambitious stage mother. In 1939, after years of modeling, dance lessons, talent competitions and beauty contests, she was signed to a seven-year contract by 20th Century Fox and made her film debut in "Hotel for Women." Darnell went on to become one of the most popular stars of the '40s, and a headliner in 30 films for Fox over a 12-year period. At age 19 she eloped with cameraman Peverell Marley, who had lensed her screen test and earlier films. They adopted adaughter, Charlotte (Lola), but Darnell's affair with Howard Hughes ended the marriage in 1951. After that, Darnell was thrown into a personal and professional decline. Her lifetime savings were embezzled by her manager. Fox let her go, and from 1951-65 she made 14 box-office bombs for other studios. Two subsequent marriages ended in divorce, to Phillip Leibman, 1954-55, and to pilot Merle Robertson, 1957-63. The stress led to alcohol abuse, and while trying to resuscitate her flagging career she was struck with myasthenia gravis, a debilitating muscle disease. In April of 1965, Darnell was visiting her former secretary in a Chicago suburb. The house caught fire while they were watching TV — a rerun of one of her old films, "Star Dust" (1940) — and she was fatally burned. Darnell's ashes were buried in a Pennsylvania cemetery near the home of her daughter.

Dear Michele: Didn't the elderly man on "Amen" appear on the old "Amos 'n' Andy" series as Algonquin Calhoun? — PAULINE MROZKO, HERCULES, CALIF.

You have the right show but the wrong character. Lawyer Algonquin J. Calhoun was played by Johnny Lee on the old, 1951-53, CBS series "Amos 'n' Andy." But 87-year-old Jester Hairston, who portrays "Amen" 's elderly Rolly Forbes, co-starred on both the radio and TV versions of "Amos 'n' Andy" as Leroy, the Kingfish's brother-in-law.

Dear Michele: Who appeared as the first Lone Ranger? The only one I can remember is Clayton Moore. — DEBRA SERMONS, GREENVILLE, N.C.

Clayton Moore is the actor best remembered as TV's Lone Ranger. He played the masked man from 1949-52 and from 1954-57. Actor John Hart played the Lone Ranger during the two seasons in between, 1952-54.

Dear Michele: Where was country singer, better-than-average guitar player and movie star Jerry Reed born? — R.D. REED, MARTINSVILLE, VA.

Reed was born March 20, 1937, in Atlanta, Ga. He made the crossover into acting in the mid-'70s, appearing in pal Burt Reynolds' "Gator" and "Smokey and the Bandit" films. More recently, he has worked as an executive producer and claims he can do more than "good ole boy" characterizations.

Dear Michele: I vaguely remember a Western I used to enjoy as a kid. I believe it was titled "Shotgun Slade." Can you tell me who starred in it, and whatever happened to them? — DANNY L. FINNEMORE, BRIDGEWATER, MAINE

Scott Brady starred as Shotgun Slade in this syndicated 1959-61 Western series. A variety of guest stars appeared in unusual supporting roles, a whiskered Ernie Kovacs as a desert rat, World War II ace "Pappy" Boyington as a wealthy rancher, and country singers Tex Ritter, Johnny Cash and Jimmy Wakely as sheriffs. Brady became a guest-star fixture on television during the '60s and '70s, and appeared in numerous segments of "Police Story." In 1983, he portrayed the role of Ted Tully in the mega-miniseries "The Winds of War." Brady died of respiratory failure April 16, 1985 at the age of 60.

Dear Michele: Is Billy Warlock, who currently plays Frankie on "Days of Our Lives," the same actor who played Roger's younger brother, Flip, on the sitcom "Happy Days"? — J. GEIGER, NEWTOWN, PENN.

Yes, Warlock portrayed the role of Flip Phillips on "Happy Days" in 1982. Since then, there have been no other prime-time roles, and he has been appearing on daytime television.

Soap Scoop

'AW' anniversary bash an affair to remember

By Connie Passalacqua

Anna Holbrook

"Another World" 's 25th anniversary party at New York City's Rainbow Room was a scene that could only happen on a soap opera. You know those glamorous parties, where everyone who's anyone in town shows up dressed to the glittering nines? But was it real ... or was it soap opera?

Hey – isn't that Ann Wedgeworth (Lahoma Lucas, 1967-70)? And, lord, hasn't it been ages since anyone has seen Virginia Dwyer (Mary Matthews, 1964-75)? And the rest of the Matthews: David Bailey (Russ), Beverly Penberthy (Pat), still sexy in a halter top, and Joe Gallison (Bill). Tearily greeting former head writer Harding Lemay were mid-'70s leads Susan Sullivan (Lenore Moore, 1971-76, now Maggie on "Falcon Crest") and Nicolas Coster (Robert Delaney, 1972-76, 1980).

In addition to the oldies, virtually every member of today's cast was there. Normally ethereal Anna Holbrook, who currently plays the super-repressed Sharlene Watts, danced a mean frug on a balcony as everyone stared.

The biggest blast from the past had to be the sight of former daytime superstars George Reinholt and Jacquie Courtney (who played Steven and Alice Matthews Frame) posing for photos together. Both had left the show bitterly in 1975, and no one in the New York soap community had even seen Reinholt since 1977. Meeting Reinholt was enough to make us swear never to listen to – or print – rumors again. He was neither temperamental nor overweight.

"I'm de-lighted to be back on the show (for a few special anniversary segments)," he proclaimed. Reinholt said he'd be open to an offer to return on a more regular basis. As such, Reinholt made nice with the assorted sponsors and backstage personnel around the room. When another reporter told him, "Gee, we heard you were fat and gross, but you look terrific," a nonplussed Reinholt replied, "Three weeks ago, I was 30 pounds heavier. I've only eaten one meal a day since then."

Of course, the party was also a serious occasion, saddened by the sudden death the week before of Douglass Watson (who played Mac Cory). Victoria Wyndham, who plays Mac's widow Rachel, emceed a presentation of old show clips, some of which showed Watson at the peak of his marvelous form. Everyone sniffled.

This wasn't soap opera. It was real.

TV Chatter

By Frank Sanello

As Maggie Seaver on "Growing Pains," Joanna Kerns tries to keep tabs on four children. At home, Kerns has only one child, a 10-year-old daughter named Ashley, but she sometimes finds Ashley a bigger handful than all the Seavers.

"I feel guilty leaving Ashley at home with a babysitter," says Kerns, who is divorced. "You feel like you're missing something. And every day my daughter tries to make me feel as guilty as she can. I'm sure all working mothers feel that way, whether they're actresses or bank tellers."

But Ashley's early years are quite different from those of Kerns, who grew up in a fiercely competitive household. Her sister is Olympic swimmer Donna De Varona; Kerns was an aspiring gymnist. "Thedinner table was like the Dodgers training camp," Kern recalls.

"I guess competitiveness is good if it's acknowledged," she adds, sounding unconvinced. "In fact, my sister never would have won a gold medal without it. Even so, I was jealous at the time. Ashley is not being raised that way. My love for her is unconditional. She doesn't have to be a so-called winner to feel that her mother loves her."

Delta Burke isn't the only former beauty pageant contestant on "Designing Women"; she's just the one who talks about it. Co-star Dixie Carter, the show's feminist mouthpiece, also vied for tiaras during her salad days. "In the summer of 1959 I was runner-up in the Miss Tennessee contest," says Carter, who triumphed in three local contests before losing the state pageant. "I was sure I had that thing won. As soon as I lost one, I quit."

But Carter isn't about to let her daughters follow in those particular footsteps. "They're both raving beauties, but they haven't been in any beauty contests — and they're not going to be," she says firmly.

Shortly After Delivery, Most Direct Mail Will Have Already Reached Its Target.

They promised your message would make it through the front door and they were absolutely right. Through the front door, down the hall and whammo, right smack into the old round file. Unopened, unread and unfortunately, totally ineffective.

Instead of being the exception, this scenario is more like the rule. According to a 1988 study by The Gordon S. Black Corporation, an independent Washington, D.C. media and opinion research firm, of the Greenville/Pitt County adults who report receiving some direct mail literature within a one-week period, 16% throw it away while less than one in five read it thoroughly.

It all comes down to how you define the term, "target customer." If it's a living, breathing, spending human being, then perhaps your advertising dollars should go into something that's more effective in reaching them. Namely, The Daily Reflector. With a paid circulation of 18,300 Monday through Friday and 20,800 on Sundays, let The Reflector work for you. The Daily Reflector reaches 74% of the Greenville/Pitt County market weekly. Most importantly, it reaches them at their request! That means you not only have a better chance of getting their attention, you have a better chance of holding it. Think about it - people paying to read your message at their convenience! Considering all the value you get with The Daily Reflector, don't risk trashing your advertising dollars. For answers to your advertising questions, call your Daily Reflector Advertising Account Executive at 752-6166.

• FIVE OUT! Insert the five missing digits, 4-8, in blank circles at right so that each row of three numbers in a straight line has the same total.

Determine the center number by trial and error and the rest is easy.

Time limit: One minute.

Place 6 at center; 7, 8 on one side; 4, 5 on the other.

• FISH TALES! What chair does an octopus use? An arm chair. What dance does a sardine do? The can-can. What game do goldfish play? Bowl games.

UNCERTAINTY, IN A WORD!

Solve this verse-riddle letter by letter, if you can.

My first is in west,
but not in south.
My second's in tongue,
but not in mouth.
My third's in rain,
but not in pour.
My fourth's in ten,
but not in four.
My fifth's in haggle,
but not in nag.
My sixth's in bend,
but not in sag.
My seventh's in shirt,
but not in gown.
For uncertainty, 'tis certain, I claim great renown.

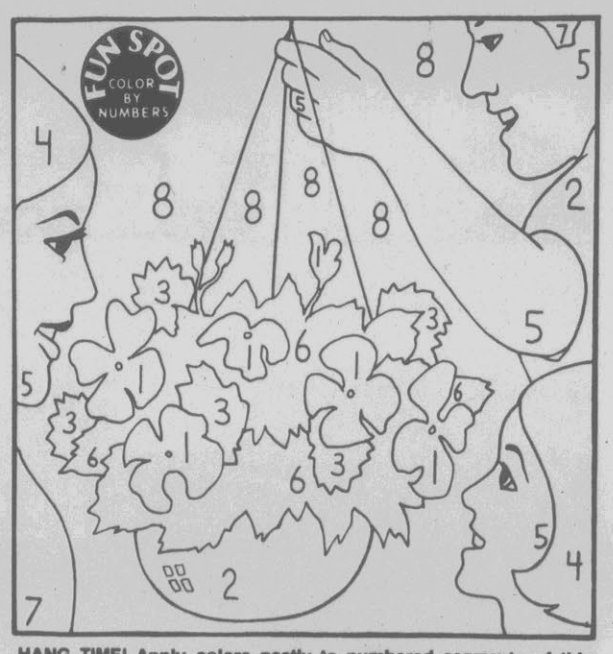

I'm a seven-letter word. What word?

I'm the word weather.
