Soviet Ocean Liner Hits Iceberg; Passengers Safe

By Doug Mellgren
 THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

OSLO, Norway — A Soviet ocean liner with more than 950 people aboard rammed an iceberg in arctic seas and took on water today, but all passengers were evacuated. Some crew members stayed aboard to try to keep the ship afloat.

A Norwegian coast guard vessel and helicopters rescued passengers from the 630-foot Maxim Gorky and others who already had fled to lifeboats and ice floes. Most of the passengers are Western European vacationers.

The cruise ship radioed northern Norway's Rescue Central at 12:27 a.m. that it was listing after hitting an iceberg about 300 miles east of northern Greenland, a coast guard spokesman said.

The Soviet news agency Tass said the accident occurred in fog.

Norwegian and Soviet officials reported no injuries, and passengers said the evacuation was orderly.

"There was no panic at all," said West Germany passenger Winfried Prince. "The Russian crew has worked perfectly in disembarking passengers into lifeboats, and also the Norwegians who picked us up... have done a wonderful job, so nobody has been hurt or even worse," Prince told NBC's "Today" show in a radio-telephone interview from a rescue ship.

Norwegian officials said a pump keeping the Soviet vessel afloat failed at noon, but four or five Norwegian military experts went aboard with new pumps to try to save the ship.

The commander of a coast guard boat Senja, Sigurd Kleiven, said 253 crewmen were being kept on board, and the ship could go down if the pump was not repaired or replaced. About 120 crewmen were rescued.

The Senja reached the stricken ship early today and picked up hundreds of passengers who had jumped into lifeboats or scrambled onto ice floes in near-freezing temperatures and light rain, said Kjell Larssen of the north Norway Rescue Center at Bodoe. Others were rescued by helicopter from the ship or ice floes.

Norwegian officials and the Lloyds insurance company of London said none of the passengers were missing or injured.

Bid On School Work Approved

By Jerry Raynor
 THE DAILY REFLECTOR

A low bid of $424,886 for construction work on an addition at Sadie Sautler School was approved by members of the Pitt County Board of Education at the board's meeting Monday night.

Eastern Construction Company was low bidder for the general contract work at $324,150, with the heating and air conditioning bid at $62,866 by White's Heating's, and the electrical contract at $37,870 by D.L. Johnson Electric.

In the workshop session prior to the board's official meeting, one of the possibilities relating to school facilities was that of moving Sadie Sautler students into Third Street School. The move would have entailed a total projected cost of $631,200 in necessary additions and renovations.

Such a move would have also resulted in a change of attendance lines, and would have necessitated halting construction at the Sadie Sautler addition.

John McKnight, deputy superintendent who presented the facilities report, noted that halting the construction would result in forfeiting $25,000 in architect fees and that contractors would lose money spent on bidding. McKnight added that "county commissioners

BW Is Seeking Bypass Shift

By John Bare
 THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Officials at the Burroughs Wellcome pharmaceutical plant in Greenville have asked the state Department of Transportation to move the planned Northwest Bypass south to allow the plant to establish an access road.

Company officials have met with state, county and city agencies, said County Manager Kramer Jackson, and representatives of Burroughs Wellcome are set to present their case to County Commissioners on June 27 and to the City Council on June 28.

The company is looking for a show of local support for the project, which would shift a planned stretch of U.S. 264 about 150 feet south. The new stretch will be one of the later phases of the completion of the U.S. 264, and it is to be included in the Northwest Bypass around Greenville.

The highway is to cross N.C. 11 and U.S. 13 near the Burroughs Wellcome plant north of the city and provide a link with the existing Eastern Bypass. If the state chooses to move the new road to the south, a stretch of the existing Eastern Bypass could be utilized as an access road.

Such a plan would benefit Burroughs Wellcome by helping to unclog a busy intersection and improving the flow of traffic around the plant.

The state has not provided county officials with projections on how the change would affect the cost, Jackson said. DOT Board Member Randy Doub of Greenville said there should be some cost estimates available next week. He said he has initially opposed the change because it will delay the project.

"This project has been the No. 1 project requested by Pitt County and the city of Greenville probably for the last six to eight years, and I'm just not willing to allow a delay in the project unless local governing bodies have input into that (change)," Doub said.

Doub said DOT officials have conducted several public hearings on the project in recent years and met with Burroughs Wellcome officials in 1985, and the company has not previously objected to the plan. He first learned of the company's request about eight weeks ago, he

Attendance Lines

The Pitt County school board at a workshop meeting Monday night referred the attendance lines issue back to the ad hoc committee which will reconsider the situation and make further recommendations to the school board to be considered at an early meeting.

The closure of Third Street School beginning in the 1990-91 school year will necessitate some changes in the attendance lines for several schools.

Gibb Chauncey, director of Management Information Systems for the county schools, explained that the primary change in attendance will center on 130 students living in the Moyewood area. These are students in grades K-5 now attending Third Street who will be reassigned to Falkland Elementary.

Totally, about 300 K-5 students currently attend Third Street. Chauncey said that the remaining

Board OKs Road Improvement Program

By Stuart Savage
 THE DAILY REFLECTOR

The Department of Transportation's secondary road improvement program for the 1989-90 fiscal year — which could pave as many as 12.57 miles of unpaved roads in the county — was approved Monday by the Pitt County Board of Commissioners.

At the annual hearing on the DOT's secondary road plan, Randy Doub of Greenville, a member of the state's Board of Transportation, told commissioners that "I feel we're very close to the (proposed) Highway Bill becoming law." The bill has been passed by the House, Doub said, and it is "now in a Senate committee."

If the bill receives final approval of the General Assembly, Doub said, Pitt County will receive a "110 percent increase in... secondary road money" in the coming fiscal year — from $899,7668 this year, to $1,965,494 in 1989-1990.

There are now 216.45 miles of unpaved secondary roads on the state system in the county Doub said.

"Ninety percent would be paved by the year 2001, with the remaining miles improved by the year 2004," if the Highway Bill becomes law, according to the transportation board member.

But since the Highway Bill is not yet law, Doub said commissioners would be asked to approve two secondary road plans — one based on the county's proposed secondary road allocation under the new law and one based on the allocation under the present law.

Otis Potter, the DOT's district engineer in Greenville, said the $1.96 million allocation under the bill now before the General Assembly would pave all subdivision roads on the state system, including:

Swindall Found Guilty

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ATLANTA — A jury today found former U.S. Rep. Pat Swindall guilty of nine counts of perjury for lying to a grand jury about a money-laundering scheme.

The 38-year-old Republican, who served two terms in Congress before being defeated in November, faces 10 months to five years in prison plus fines of up to $250,000 on each count.

The jury deliberated 17 hours over four days after hearing nearly four weeks of testimony.

Swindall was indicted in October on 10 counts of perjury. One count was dismissed during the trial by U.S. District Judge Richard C. Freeman.

Chinese Students At ECU Support Effort Back Home

By J. Ward Best
 THE DAILY REFLECTOR

The violence in China two weeks ago sent a wave of reaction rippling across America and Greenville.

Just as the students in Beijing's Tiananmen Square sought to pressure their government for democratic change, the ECU students hope to encourage greater pressure from the United States government on the communist regime in China.

A small group of Chinese students at East Carolina University have taken up the fight of their fellow students nearly half way around the world. Monday the three Chinese students registered at ECU set up shop at Mendenhall encouraging other students and visitors to write to North Carolina's representatives. "We want people to remember what happened in China," said Zhi Liu, a graduate student in physics.

The Peoples Army of China opened fire on demonstrators in Tiananmen Square June 3 after two weeks of student protest against the government and occupation of the square.

Liu said he hoped the Congress would step up pressure on the Chinese government. And the group offered pre-printed postcards addressed to Sen. Jesse Helms and Sen. Terry Sanford and Rep. Walter Jones Sr. decrying the violence.

The postcards and local pressure would "tell the people in China that the people here care about the peo-

Consulting Firm Trying To Collect $60,000 Bill

By John Bare
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Three years after Lawrence Behr Associates Inc., redesigned a communications system for Elizabeth City State University, the Greenville consulting company is still waiting for someone to pay the $60,000 bill.

"That's the problem with (dealing with state) government," said company President Lawrence Behr. "We have the resources — even though it was damn uncomfortable to have $60,000 salted away — and we could make it. But for some companies it would absolutely kill them. That's really rough on a small business."

ECSU failed to pay the bill in the fall of 1986, court records said, and the company demanded payment from the state Department of Administration's State Office of Construction in August 1988.

When the office disputed whether paying the bill fell under its jurisdiction, Lawrence Behr Associates filed a complaint Oct. 4, 1988, requesting an administrative hearing. The company challenged the decision by the state Construction Office not to pay the bill.

Four weeks ago, an administrative law judge dismissed the case, citing the company's failure to properly file a bill with DOA.

Behr claims his company followed all of the state's guidelines in billing, and he said he could probably win an appeal. However, because the administrative law judge declined to address the issue of which state agency is responsible for paying the bill, any appellate victory would only result in another administrative hearing to ferret out more answers.

It is a bureaucratic merry-go-round Behr said he wanted to stop, thus there will probably be no appeal. Instead, Behr said his attorneys are studying other possibilities, which include filing suit against ECSU and its officers or seeking payment from another agency that might have jurisdiction over paying the bill.

"We're pretty well caught in a bureaucratic tangle here, one of these things small businesses get into," said Behr.

The consulting firm was founded 25 years ago in Greenville, and the company has no offices outside the city. It specializes in telecommunication research and development. The company contracted with ECSU on Dec. 1, 1985 to prepare a study to upgrade the university's telephone and communications system. Behr said the initial fee of about $20,000 was paid.

But another bill of $60,044.57 went unpaid after some contracts were extended, and the university authorized the company to perform additional work to implement the plan, Behr said.

He said everyone involved agrees the work was done, and the company is due to receive the money; the administrative law judge ruled that the company was a qualified contractor.

The conflict is over who has to pay the bill. The company's work overlapped with two state agencies: the Office of Construction, and the Purchasing and Contracting Division. Behr said the situation appeared to cause confusion over which department has responsibility for paying the bill, and the administrative law judge declined to rule on that issue.

Behr contends any internal discrepancy between state agencies should be resolved without harming the contractor. Such problems are stifling to small businesses that may not have the legal staff or lobbying force needed to light a fire under state officials, he said.

"We shouldn't be spending thousands and thousands of dollars to wind these things through (the court system)," he said.

The state should have a central office to handle such complaints and conflicts involving small businesses, he said. Such an office could relieve part of the burden from small businesses by resolving disputes such as what agency is responsible for payment, he said.

Venezuelan Visitors Enjoy Their Stay In Greenville

By Jerry Raynor
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Except for the surprise element of the hot, humid June weather of eastern North Carolina, six young Venezuelans have nothing but high praise for their visit and reception in Greenville.

All spoke of the impression of lovely greenery, of friendly people. But they agreed that Caracas, the tropical capital city of Venezuela where all of them currently live, is considerably cooler.

"This, I think, is because of the fact that Caracas is situated in the valley and mountains not far distant from the Atlantic Ocean," said engineer Freddy Reyes. Seeing a few Greenville men in shirt-sleeves, he shed his coat at the earliest moment that "good manners permit."

The six, visiting Greenville as guests in a Rotary Group Study Exchange sponsored by the Rotary District 737, have been in Greenville since Saturday morning and are scheduled to leave today. From here they will go to Jacksonville, N.C. for several days.

Since their arrival mid-day Saturday and getting settled down, they have been feted and given area tours by various hosts in Greenville. One of the outdoor activities for the group was a Saturday picnic at River Park North, where they were treated to typical southern outdoor gourmet fare.

Sunday was devoted to opportunities to visit and to shop in Greenville. One of the main shopping enticements was purchasing cassettes of music — for some classical releases, for others jazz and rock.

Monday hours were taken up in a schedule of time spent at the Voice of America facility and a morning visit to the School of Business, East Carolina University.

At noon Monday, the group was guests at a luncheon at the old Rotary Building. Jon Petersen, personal representative of the governor of Venezuela's Rotary District 437, commented on "the wonderful friendship you have given us in Greenville. We are looking forward to returning this warm welcome when your Rotary group from Greenville will visit us soon."

Petersen, fluent in English, presented the local Rotarians with a trio of small colorful banners depicting Venezuelan Rotary emblems.

Guest speaker at the noon luncheon was ECU Chancellor Dr. Richard Eakin. He gave an overview of achievements at the university and mentioned the naming of new personnel to replace retiring ECU officials.

On Monday afternoon, four of the six — Daniele Marchioro, Alexis Montes de Oca, Fernando Villanueva and Petersen were taken on tours of Burroughs Wellcome and Empire Brushes. Two of the group, Reyes and Caracas journalist Manuel Abroz, opted for a tour of The Daily Reflector.

The final official activity for the visiting six was a farewell dinner given in their honor by area Rotarians.

The Norwegian news agency said the passengers were from West Germany, the Netherlands, Austria, Britain, Italy, Switzerland and Sweden.

Tass quoted Vladimir Nekhoroshev, chief inspector for the Ministry of the Sea Fleet, as saying 575 tourists and 377 crew members were on board.

The rescue center said it had received conflicting figures, but said there were 379 crew members.

The liner was 185 miles west of the Norway's Spitsbergen archipelago.

Rescue efforts were aided by the 24-hour summer daylight of the Arctic.

Several other Soviet and Norwegian boats were within 300 miles of the distressed ship, which was at 77 degrees 33 minutes northern latitude, 19 minutes eastern longitude.

Norwegian helicopters ferried rescued passengers from the Senja's deck to Longyearbyen, the administrative center on Svalbard island, the largest in the Spitsbergen archipelago. Airplanes were picking them up and taking them on to the Norwegian mainland.

The liner had originated in Bremerhaven, West Germany. It cruised to Iceland and was to pass the Spitsbergen islands before making its way south along the Norwegian coast on its way home, the Norwegian news agency NTB said.

Hospitals in northern Norway and on the Spitsbergen islands were on emergency alert. The Svalbard hospital was awaiting Norwegian medical teams dispatched by helicopter.

Cash Reported Stolen

Greenville police said a dozen thefts, including more than $750 worth of property from a Forbes Street address and $640 in cash from a safe at the Dodge Store on Memorial Drive, were reported to Greenville police on Monday.

Commissioners Continue Work On County Budget

By Stuart Savage
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Pitt County property owners are still facing the possibility of 6 cents increase in the property tax rate as county commissioners continue work on the proposed 1989-1990 budget.

The board, at a budget workshop meeting Monday afternoon, agreed to add $20,700 for the Farmville Child Development Center to the list of proposed expenditures for the coming fiscal year, which begins July 1.

But no action was taken to cut anything from the list of proposed spending, which County Manager Kramer Jackson would take a tax rate of 69 cents per $100 valuation to fund.

The present county budget totals just over $33.91 million, while the working budget for 1989-1990 is a list of expenditures totaling more than $35 million, including a 5 percent pay hike for county employees, a 6 percent pay increase for teachers and an 8 percent increase — more than $800,000 — in new money for the public schools' current expense budget.

But if all the items the various county departments and agencies have asked for were included in the budget for the coming year, the list would total more than $72.95 million.

While commissioners earlier this month agreed to fund a new $12 million to $15 million jail through a lease-purchase arrangement, the board has indicated that some of the big-ticket items requested for the coming budget year — such as $25 million for public school capital improvements and $22 million for capital projects at Pitt Community College — might be dealt with in the form of a bond issue or other methods of financing, after the budget for 1989-90 is adopted.

Commissioners, earlier this year, agreed to fund a pay-as-you-go school capital projects program of about $4 million a year over the next 5 years. And the proposed budget includes $4.2 million as a first installment.

But Jackson, the county manager, suggested Monday that no tax increase would be required to pay for a $25.7 million school bond issue over the 20-year pay-back period.

Jackson said while the total pay-back — including interest for a $25.7 million issue would amount to about $48.57 million, state money earmarked for school construction and revenue from a half-cent sales tax designated for schools could be used to repay the bonds.

In fact, Jackson said, those revenues over the next 20 years should total about $57.59 million.

In the five year period on a pay-as-you-go plan, Jackson said, the county would put some $4.01 million in local property tax revenue into the program, which would give the schools a total of some $20.7 million. State funds for the period would total more than $4.99 million, while $11.69 million would come from the half-cent sales tax.

Going the bond route, Jackson suggested, would give the schools $31.63 million over five years, with no property tax revenue going into the program.

The annual payment of the bond debt, Jackson said, would be about $2.42 million over 20 years.

In other budget related business Monday, commissioners appropriated some $282,811 to pay for a shortfall in this year's Department of Social Services budget.

DSS Director Ed Garrison said the shortfall resulted from expenses in the mandated Medicaid, Aid to Families with Dependent children and other assistance programs.

Garrison also warned the board that the money proposed for assistance programs in the coming budget may not be sufficient to meet the need in the coming fiscal year. He suggested that the latest figures suggest that the proposed DSS budget for 1989-90 might be some $290,000 short.

The board also approved an additional $87,212 more in this year's budget to meet the costs of food for the jail and for state safekeeping of prisoners.

The money for both the DSS and jail shortfalls came from a $1 million reserve set aside in this year's budget for a new jail.

Another budget workshop has been scheduled from 9 a.m. Thursday.

Man Is Sentenced

he was sentenced to life in prison for the murder, 20 years for the armed robbery, 10 years for the breaking and entering and 10 years for the forged checks.

He was arrested in December in Florida on vagrancy charges, State Bureau of Investigation Special Agent J.M. Wilson testified today, and he has been held without bond. Florida authorities matched his fingerprints with those on a national list of fugitives.

Stocks, a retired farmer, had been a night watchman at Keel's for four years. Ward had been employed at the warehouse one week when Stocks was killed, Wilson said, and he had daily asked for pay advances from his bosses. Ward did not show up for work the Monday following the weekend murder, he said.

Ward appeared in court today in gray slacks and a white sports shirt. He consulted briefly with his attorney, Public Defender Robert L. Shoffner Jr., before answering questions from Judge David E. Reid Jr. of Greenville concerning the plea arrangement. Members of Stocks' family sat behind the prosecution's table.

Wilson said Stocks was found lying in the lobby of the warehouse. An autopsy revealed he had been hit about the head with a hard object, and Wilson said investigators found a partially shattered Pepsi-Cola bottle near the body. Fingerprints on the neck of the bottle matched Ward's, he said.

The autopsy indicated the cause of death was a gunshot to the head, Wilson said.

The body was discovered the morning after the murder when Stocks' son went by to visit his father, Wilson said. It was customary for family members to visit Stocks there when he worked long weekend hours.

Several blank warehouse checks were stolen in the incident, and Wilson said First Citizen's Bank notified investigators when two checks had cleared the bank.

Ward chased one check for about $200 at an IGA store in Ayden, and the cashier knew Ward, Wilson said. The second check was cashed at a convenient mart in Greenville, and the clerk also said Ward was the person who brought the check in, he said.

Investigators talked with a Greenville man who said that on the Saturday afternoon of the murder Ward told him he could pay off a debt if he could get to a store to cash a check, Wilson said.

The man said Ward also offered to give him a revolver in exchange for lowering the debt.

would not view forfeited architect fees fondly."

The new construction at Sadie Sautter will add eight new classrooms, bathrooms and accommodate some interior renovation. McKnight noted that the addition will occupy a corner of the small three acres campus and thus minimize loss of usable campus space. Also, seven mobile units will be removed which will add more campus space.

In a second action by the board, attorney James A. Wynn, Jr. was appointed as a trustee to the Pitt County Community College board. The Pitt County Board of Education is required to appoint two individuals to the community college board. Phil Dixon now serves in one of the two school board appointees.

Wynn holds a BA degree in journalism from UNC-Chapel Hill and the juris doctorate from Marquette University, Milwaukee, Wis.

The workshop session dealt with a summary of options relative to the priority of school facilities. Primary among the options is that of projections to construct a new school to replace Rose High. It was noted that the $3.5 million anticipated from the sale of Rose property to East Carolina University cannot be part of an actual working budget until such time as transfer of the property is made. Board members hope for early action to get construction of a new Rose High facility under way, especially since major renovation will be required at the school at a fairly early date — the cost of which can be avoided by the Pitt school board if sale is made at the earliest possible date.

In this connection, McKnight presented a request to county manager Kramer Jackson seeking a loan of $3 million from county commissioners to facilitate a construction project for the new high school. If approved, the loan would be repaid in July, 1992, the projected completion date of the new school and the sale date to ECU.

McKnight reported that he had discussed the request before county commissioners Monday afternoon, and the school board will have to wait until commissioners take action before the school board can do further planning.

Expressions were also made by school board members of having the proposed construction of a new school at Stokes moved to a higher priority, from 1992-94 to 1990-92. General agreement at this point is that the need there is particularly pressing due to the condition of the present facility.

Shift Is Sought

said, and he would only support the change on four conditions.

One, that Burroughs Wellcome donate any land needed for rights-of-way for the modifications and the existing plans. Two, that the company pay any additional costs for the change. Three the County Commissioners give its support, and, lastly, the City Council give its support.

DOT engineers estimate that shifting the project could delay the opening of the highway for at least nine months, he said. At least one resident would lose their home if the highway is moved, he said.

The state is currently acquiring land south of the proposed highway for right-of-way and was to begin in September to acquire land for the northern portion. Under the current plan, it could be open for traffic in mid 1994.

If Burroughs Wellcome's request is granted, the opening would be pushed back to early 1995.

"What Burroughs Wellcome is concerned about is their internal traffic flow out there around the plant," Doub said. He said the company is also concerned about the closeness of interchange to the plant.

Falkland, according to Chauncey, can increase its student body from 264 to 393. The 130 students, after completing the fifth grade at Falkland, would then be moved back for attendance in grades six and up at Greenville Middle, Aycock Junior High and eventually Rose High.

Another student move will involve only two students — these two are residents of the Hillsdale area near the airport who this year were assigned to Pactolus after previously being at Belvoir. The two will be returned to Belvoir for the coming school year.

Patchwork

Barnes' Plan Is Poor Thinking

North Carolina Senate leaders have come up with a terrible plan for meeting teacher salary increases and education improvements.

President Pro Tem Henson Barnes, D-Wayne, announced a package which would tap the new highway construction funds and delay the massive $8.6 billion road program by stretching it out from 12 to 15 years.

The Senate leader's plan is stop gap and demonstrates incredibly poor thinking on how to best finance North Carolina's diverse needs.

Highway taxes are, after all, user fees that motorists, trucks and other vehicles pay to have the use of modern and safe roads. While no tax is popular, construction of highway projects is and users understand that the expensive work has to be financed. Thus they pay through gas tax and other motor vehicle taxes.

Senate leaders wish to trade on this public enthusiasm for better highways to use new transportation taxes for other purposes.

It is a bad plan and it tells us that Senate leaders simply are not prepared to look at North Carolina's total needs and finance them in a proper manner.

Our state this year has the unique opportunity to move North Carolina into an era of better roads and improved teachers salaries and education. We won't do either with a waffling Senate and its patchwork financing proposals.

In the House, where a reasonable highway financing bill has already been approved, leaders are vigorously protesting the Senate leaders' meandering on this matter. Gov. Jim Martin is strongly protesting. Well they all should protest and so should the public. Senate leaders need an elementary lesson in government financing.

Public Forum

To the editor:

In the June 14, 1989 edition Public Forum, an article pertaining to the Roanoke River National Wildlife Refuge was printed. That article stated that Governor Martin needs to be reminded, etc. I doubt that the Governor needs to be reminded.

The area does need protection from development, however, to indicate "members of a few private hunting clubs" see this as their personal domain might imply that the same members have no regard for the land and water, nothing could be further from the truth. I will concur there are those "slob" hunters as well as "slob" hikers, campers, etc. who can leave litter to scar the landscape.

The sportsman that takes game in a legal manner and/or his limit is not the one to blame for water quality or the clear cutting of several hundred acres of beautiful hardwoods and swamps.

However, I have been to areas that the United States Fish and Wildlife Service owns and seen the abuse as well.

Indicating just that hunters are guilty of misuse of the land and its bounty is a falsehood.

There have also been instances where educational programs are allowed in the Roanoke River Basin. To imply this has not happened is plain silly. The area has been used by North Carolina State University for projects.

When growing-up in Martin County our elementary school allowed field trips to certain areas.

I personally have noticed boy scouts and other campers floating the river photographing nature, and camping on private land with the owner's permission.

Don't blame sportsmen or penalize them because wild, remote areas are disappearing. One reason the habitat/wildlife has remained undisturbed is because timber companies, landowners, and hunting clubs do regulate (the same as USFWS will do) access to these areas and this is their privilege.

Being a hunter or member of a hunting club is not a dirty word, nor should it be made to sound as such.

To the editor:

The Reflector reported June 15 that Senator Sanford voted to delay or kill the Medicare surtax while Senator Helms voted to preserve it. How could any rational American, schooled in fairness and democratic principles, vote for any kind of surtax leveled against the elderly by the Catastrophic Health Care Act passed by Congress last fall?

It is generally assumed that this Act will solve the health problems of the elderly, but it provides catastrophic health care for only 7 percent of the elderly. It also takes away or reduces many benefits that Medicare recipients had before the Act passed, and it increases the deductibles for drugs, hospitalization and out-patient care.

For example, prior to this Act, Medicare paid 80 percent of the approved charges for drugs used in therapy following Medicare-covered organ transplants, but beginning in 1990, because of the Catastrophic Health Act, Medicare will pay none of the drug costs until the transplant patient has paid the first $550 and then will pay only 50 percent of the "approved charges."

Also the Act does not provide for nursing home care which is one of the greatest health needs of disabled elderly persons. Further, instead of giving elderly persons unlimited hospital coverage, the Act requires Medicare recipients to pay the first $564 when admitted to a hospital. Also, beginning in 1990, a Medicare patient will have to pay $1370 plus the regular Medicare deductible before receiving any benefits for doctor's care or other outpatient services, and then Medicare will pay only 80 percent of "approved charges."

As the surtax rises from 15 percent of the federal income tax of each elderly person in 1989 to 28 percent in 1993, the elderly will have to pay even larger deductibles while receiving, in many instances, fewer paid health services. So the elderly are being had!

Happy Second

A Long Way In A Short Time

The Ronald McDonald House of Eastern North Carolina had a particularly happy second birthday.

It was "Burn the Mortgage" time for the birthday celebration commemorating the retirement of $350,000 in debt. The $1.2 million structure opened across Moye Boulevard from Pitt County Memorial Hospital on Father's Day in 1987. When it opened, much of the construction cost had been paid through donations and the $350,000 mortgage was assumed. Since then a series of campaigns for capital funds to retire the mortgage has been under way. In the final drive McDonald's matched funds raised up to $50,000. The goal reached, the mortgage was retired on the House's second birthday.

What a singular achievement! Individuals, civic organizations, businesses and industries of the area have all done their part to pay for the Ronald McDonald House. Now that is a reality.

The importance of the facility cannot be overemphasized. It is a place where families of ill children can stay when a child is here for treatment at the Childrens Hospital component of Pitt County Memorial Hospital. Because of its affiliation with the East Carolina University School of Medicine, PCMH increasingly is the referral center for seriously or critically ill children from throughout the east.

The Ronald McDonald House provides the special facilities which families need while they are in Greenville. The presence of other families here under similar stresses also provides support to those who stay at the House.

Even though the mortgage is paid, fundraising will continue for the Ronald McDonald House. The budget for operating the House is large and every effort is made to keep cost down for families which are already in crisis situations. One event was the Michael Jordan Celebrity Golf Classic held here over the weekend.

The Ronald McDonald House of Eastern North Carolina has enjoyed exceptional support from both Pitt County and other counties in our region. What has been done helps families as they undergo the most critical test they can experience — the serious illness of a child.

While continued funding will be needed, the Ronald McDonald House now can operate without debt on its facilities. That's quite a source of pride for eastern North Carolina.

History Sheds Light On China's Paroxysm

Steve Tropicli

When I lived in Beijing from mid-1986 to mid-1987, where I worked for the state-run English language newspaper, China Daily, my young Chinese co-workers had a humorous nickname for the aged veterans of the revolution among China's leaders.

"Coffin fillers," they would call them, when one of the old leaders would appear on the television screen in our newsroom during the evening newscast. Then everyone would laugh at their own irreverence. The leaders, usually walking stiffly and slowly, often appeared to be barely participating in the increasingly ceremonial duties assigned to them.

China's old guard became coffin fillers of quite another sort this month. Now, as the hard-liners consolidate control and reprisals begin, two questions linger: Why would the leaders resort to tactics that would cost them so much at home and abroad? And why, in the face of such hopeful developments over the past 11 years, has a liberalization once again brought with it the curse of another repression?

It is insufficient to explain away the massacre solely as the response of men who panicked; or of old men grown out of touch with the essentially reformist (as opposed to revolutionary) demands of the demonstrators; or as the ingrained response of those to whom the gun has been both a survival tool and adjunct to power.

The historical and world view driving the leaders has received short shrift in the Western press. While no excuse for their actions, it goes a long way toward explaining them.

On leaving China, I took with me what has turned out to be an especially pertinent and revealing look at that view. "Student Unrest: What Is It All About?" was published by the government after the student demonstrations of 1986-87 which resulted in the downfall of Hu Yaobang. The parallels to the current situation, in which Hu's death sparked student-led demonstrations that led to the massacre, are striking.

Two sections of the 50-page propaganda booklet deserve to be quoted. The hard-liners held sway then as well, and displayed their fears of change and an erosion of Party supremacy by saying:

"Should China give up its efforts to build socialism, the emergence of serious polarization would be unavoidable; money would line the pockets of a few while the overwhelming majority would be suffering from poverty and hardship; some would roam the streets, our country would revert to a semi-feudal, semi-colonial society. ...

"Precisely because China has a poor foundation to start with, a large population and a backward economy, if the socialist system were abandoned, developed capitalist entities would quickly enter the Chinese market and China's national economy would be destroyed. If China were included in the capitalist system, it would inevitably be controlled by others economically and politically and would not be able to remain independent diplomatically. That is our historical experience."

(In the century-plus before the Communists took power, China endured several occupations and invasions by foreigners, including the carving up of the country by colonialist powers following the Opium War of 1839-42 and the brutal Japanese occupation of World War II.)

"To preserve stability and unity, the Party's leadership must be strengthened. ... Without the leadership of the Communist Party and without the socialist system there would be no unified state, no people's unity and no prosperity in the country. Some people have dished up 'cultural revolution' stuff once more (a reference to calls during that period to work outside the Party). If we ignore them and do not boycott them and let them grow unchecked, the Party and government organizations at all levels would not be able to continue their work because of these people's disturbance, and stability and unity would be disrupted. How will it be possible for us to consider reform and (modernization) then?"

The young Chinese workers at China Daily did not lack respect for most Party principles, but for what the Party had become. These journalists, privileged by Chinese standards, all of them Western-educated and fluent in English, simply believed like so many others that times had changed and that the Party would not be able to avoid realizing that as well.

I left China giving Deng Xiaoping more credit than he deserved. It appeared he was pragmatic enough to fully understand that his economic reforms were unleashing forces that would ultimately weaken Communist Party authority. His deals with the hard-liners, including the fall of the moderate Hu in January 1987, appeared to be efforts to buy time for the reforms so that they could take on a life of their own.

What would ultimately happen? I asked. No one can tell, no one ever can tell in these circumstances, and that is the problem, he replied.

The same thing happened again in this crisis. An American friend now working at China Daily, in a letter written before the massacre, wrote:

"We (the paper's non-Chinese staff) went from being called together and told why (the paper wasn't) 'playing up' the situation two weeks ago ... to a quite sudden reversal in which staff reporters were actually going out and covering the news and getting it in the paper. ... At one point three-quarters of the staff was marching in the demonstrations, with flags, calling for freedom of the press and an end to corruption."

'It is insufficient to explain away the massacre solely as the response of men who panicked; or of old men grown out of touch with the essentially reformist demands of the demonstrators.'

With luck, things would end up as they did in 1986 — a leader deposed, a few "agitators" cowed by explicit warnings, a propaganda campaign and a minimum of damage. This time, there was no luck; instead, there was the horror that transpired in recent days.

Millions, including top leaders like Deng Xiaoping, had paid a price for those 10 years, with their lives or their careers, and with massive social dislocation. Most of my Chinese friends believed that everyone in China had an interest in its never happening again — indeed, the specter of new chaos like that seen in the Cultural Revolution had been frequently invoked by the government in its propaganda campaign against the student demonstrations of 1986-87.

But it has happened again. And until China finds a better way of settling internal differences there is no guarantee that the cycles, complete with their tragic endings, will not recur again and again, to China's and the world's great loss and sorrow.

Gardner Said It — So Why Can't Other Republicans?

Paul O'Connor

RALEIGH — Several weeks ago, Rep. George Holmes, R-Yadkin, joined Lt. Gov. Jim Gardner in supporting Gov. Jim Martin's sales tax increase to fund both a major teacher pay raise and the next installment of the Basic Education Program (BEP.)

Last week, Holmes reversed himself and asked a committee of budget leaders to take all BEP funding out of next year's budget.

Holmes flip-flopping — first supporting more education spending and then trying to cut it — is indicative of Republican ambivalence for Martin's education funding plan. Republican legislators are siding with Martin because he is their party leader, and because they know of public support for better schools. But they've never liked the BEP and they certainly don't like raising taxes.

This year's budget crunch offers Republicans an opportunity to attack the BEP. Republican members like Holmes are saying that it is not working well. They complain that it does not stress basics, that new courses take time away from reading and writing. They also complain, as Sen. Don Kincaid, R-

Analysis

Caldwell, did in an interview with this reporter, that the BEP facilitates the hiring of too many unneeded non-instructional personnel.

Holmes, in making his pitch for a delay in BEP funding, argued that with all the questions about the program, it was not a good time to expand it. (It should be noted that Holmes made his motion on a contingency budget that was being readied in case the Martin tax plan fails to pass. In an interview, however, he expressed basic uneasiness with the BEP, regardless of the fate of the tax increase.)

When 28 House Republicans proposed a drastic program of budget cuts in March, they also suggested delaying the BEP. Their leader, Rep. Trip Sizemore, R-Guilford, expressed the same problems with the program at that time.

But there is much inconsistency in the Republican attacks on the BEP.

As Bob Etheridge, superintendent of public instruction, said, next year's installment of the BEP calls for the hiring of many sociologists and counselors, people who will be essential in reducing drug use by children and in lowering the dropout rate, two goals Republicans say they support.

Also, while the Republicans criticize elements of the BEP that are now in place they call for cuts in elements of the plan that are not yet operating. They propose not to fund more counselors because they don't like the music curriculum.

Rep. Dave Diamond, D-Surry, chairman of the House Appropriations Committee, cast a key vote to beat Holmes' motion. But before he did so, he spoke of the need to review the BEP. It was put in four years ago, and has another four annual steps which must be implemented. The legislature should review the first four steps, Diamond said.

North Carolina's schools have tremendous needs. The state's students perform near the bottom in national rankings. Taking a year off on school reform will hardly help the state move ahead, and it may stop the education reform movement entirely. No less a Republican than Jim Gardner said that when he announced his support of the sales tax increase.

Soviet Union Wants Place In 'Common European Home'

Michael Parks

BONN — The Soviet Union, after decades of costly pursuit of superpower status, took a significant step this week toward reintegrating itself politically, economically and culturally with the European continent.

Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev, pledging with West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl that their countries would work together to develop "a peaceful European order," made clear Moscow's preference for a place in the "common European home," as he put it, over the role of a superpower with global interests.

"Although the continent has been divided for decades, the awareness of Europe's identity and common assets have endured and is becoming ever stronger," the two leaders said in a joint declaration. "This development must be encouraged."

"The Soviet Union and the Federal Republic of Germany consider it a paramount objective of their policies to continue Europe's historical traditions and thus contribute towards overcoming the division of Europe. They are resolved to work together in the search to develop a Europe of peace and cooperation — a peaceful European order, a common European home...."

The Soviet Union hopes that such efforts will end its long isolation from the political coalescence and the economic development that have brought Western Europe stability and prosperity and that now threaten to leave Moscow and its allies in Eastern Europe behind completely as the European Community moves to establish a unified market in 1992.

"Gorbachev realized — and it took much insight and integrity to do so — that the Soviet Union had lost in the arms race to the United States, was losing in the economic race to Japan and the European Community and would become a third- or fourth-rank power in 20 or 30 years," a senior European ambassador said in Moscow recently. "The Russian fear is that they will be thought of as Asians, irrelevant to Europe, and just forgotten as we move ahead."

"Gorbachev's best bet, politically and economically, was to return to Europe if the Soviet Union has any chance of keeping up. But that means ending the old thinking of 'We are bigger and stronger than you' or 'We have a better system than you,' and it means more than slogans about peace, friendship and cooperation. If the Russians want a place in Europe, they will have to earn it."

In West Germany, however, Gorbachev found a partner willing — more than Britain and France so far have been — to respond to Soviet needs and accept Moscow's desire to participate in shaping the Europe of the 21st century.

"The 'division of Europe' has a special meaning here," a senior West German official remarked Wednesday, "and while Kohl understands something different from what Gorbachev means when he says it, there is enough common ground for us to cooperate."

A political commentator put it more tartly on West German television Wednesday: "Mikhail Gorbachev was looking for a solid boulder to be his anchor while he winched the Soviet Union into political and economic modernity, and Helmut Kohl said the Federal Republic of Germany would be that boulder."

In return, the Soviet Union has already begun to soften its opposition — adamant and often angry in the past — to the possible reunification of East and West Germany. Talking with newsmen after signing the joint statement, Gorbachev said of that issue: "Let time decide."

"I think that the world is changing, and changing for the better," the Soviet leader said, "and it is opening possibilities for better contacts between all states."

"If we are wise and far-sighted, then a good number of profound changes can take place in Europe and in the whole world."

In October, Gorbachev had told Kohl in Moscow that even talking about reunification was dangerous because it threatened Europe's postwar stability.

On this trip, Gorbachev emphasized that, in signing what has already become known as the "Bonn Declaration," "we are drawing a line on the postwar period ... (and taking) a decisive step in the direction of one another."

For the Soviet Union, the joint statement signed by Gorbachev and Kohl marks a substantial change in the way it views the world — and itself.

As one of the fundamental shifts in Soviet strategy under Gorbachev, the decision reflects a harsh appraisal by the Soviet leadership of the country's problems and capabilities, according to senior Gorbachev advisers.

"We inherited an empire and made it even grander, but we cannot afford it or even run it," one top Soviet foreign policy specialist said here.

The joint efforts pledged by Gorbachev will give a Soviet foreign policy a different focus so that European concerns become far more prominent.

"These are relations between great powers," Vitaly Zhurkin, director of the Soviet Institute of Europe, said in appraising the Soviet-West German summit — diminishing the Soviet Union as he elevated West Germany a bit.

Moscow realizes, of course, that its international responsibility will continue, senior Soviet foreign policy specialists say. Soviet military power remains second only to that of the United States, and arms reduction agreements will require time to negotiate. The Soviet Union is also a major Asian nation, facing Japan and bordering on China, and these interests must be balanced with the new emphasis on Europe.

"We will have a European focus and an Asian focus and a special relationship with the United States," a Soviet political commentator with the Gorbachev delegation remarked, "but the chronic overreaching of the past has ended."

Moscow is hoping, however, that a significant improvement in relations with the West as a whole will follow.

Changes in domestic policies are also implicit.

With its own economic system evolving away from central planning toward "market socialism," the Soviet Union is actively seeking assistance from West Germany and other capitalist countries not just to develop its backward economy but to train market-oriented managers to run it.

"The future is economic integration, not isolation," an economist on the Soviet delegation said. "We thought central planning could do it all, and we were wrong. We thought that by relying on our own resources we could grow faster and become stronger, and we were wrong. And, quite foolishly, we thought we should protect our 'socialist purity' from contamination by the market."

Mistrial Declared In Gibbs Murder Proceedings

By Paul Nowell
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEWTON, N.C. — A jury that considers the fate of James Clifton Gibbs for a second time will hear additional evidence, but events surrounding the deaths of his wife and her friend may remain a mystery forever, attorneys say.

A mistrial was declared Monday in the double first-degree murder trial of Gibbs, charged with pushing his wife and another woman from a Blue Ridge Parkway overlook after jurors, who had deliberated for 20 hours, said they could not reach a verdict.

"This case will never be more than one of circumstantial evidence," said McDowell County District Attorney Alan Leonard. "The real tragedy for both sides is that this case has taken so long and cost so much money."

Defense attorney Ronnie Mitchell described the mistrial as "no victory for either side."

Co-counsel Eddie Harris said the events of last Oct. 17 may remain a mystery.

"I still say only God will ever know what really happened up there," Harris said. "We do know that James did not push them."

Juror Jeff Korn said the panel was split 10-2, favoring conviction, but that no testimony could change the minds of the two hold-outs.

"No matter what we said or did, they wouldn't take it into consideration," Korn, of Maiden, said of the two jurors favoring acquittal.

The jury began its deliberations Wednesday afternoon and had since asked to review several pieces of evidence and testimony. Jurors asked last week to visit the overlook, but Catawba County Superior Court Judge Claude Sitton refused after Gibbs insisted that the panel visit only in the dark.

"From day one they (two jurors) voted not guilty," juror Frank Garriga of Hickory said. "We spent hours drawing on chalk boards trying to change their minds, but it became obvious we were beating a dead horse to death."

Helen Gibbs, 31, and her friend, Susan Haire, 32, of Ladson, S.C., fell to their deaths Oct. 17 from the Chesto View Overlook on the Blue Ridge Parkway. Gibbs, 37, of Fayetteville was charged with two counts of first-degree murder in the two deaths and could have faced the death penalty if he had been convicted.

Prosecutors said Gibbs planned for two months to kill his wife and that he feared losing their three children if the couple separated. They say he pushed his wife and Ms. Haire after taking sunset photographs.

Gibbs has said the women fell accidentally while playing on a 2-foot wall at the overlook.

Prosecutors took six days to present evidence and testimony from rescue workers, family members, witnesses and experts. The trial featured revelations of a love affair by Mrs. Gibbs, a suicide attempt by Ms. Haire and an alleged attack by Gibbs on his wife. Witnesses testified that Mrs. Gibbs told them that she was burned by her husband with a stun gun in an attempt to force a confession regarding the affair.

Jurors Korn and Deborah Herman told reporters they thought the two holdout jurors may have been swayed if the jury had been allowed to visit the overlook. Sitton did not allow the jury to visit the overlook after objections from the defense. "I believe if they had gotten to see the area, the ones in doubt may have changed their minds," said Korn. "But they wouldn't let us." The mistrial was declared after Sitton questioned the jury foreman, Jim Sipe. Sipe told the judge that the jury was deadlocked.

"The court finds that this jury is hopelessly deadlocked," Sitton said. Further deliberations would be useless. There's no possibility this jury can arrive at a unanimous verdict."

Sitton denied bond for Gibbs and did not set a date for a second trial. Gibbs was to be taken to McDowell County Jail.

Prosecutors said they will try Gibbs again sometime this year.

Leonard said he believed his case is strong.

"To us it was revealing that the defense screamed for three weeks about the weakness of our case, and 10 of the 12 jurors who heard it all apparently concluded that Mr. Gibbs was guilty beyond a reasonable doubt," Leonard said.

He also said he "learned some things" in this trial. He said he expects to take the next jury to the overlook.

"I am just sorry there's no verdict," said Katherine Locklear, a sister of Mrs. Gibbs who also testified for the prosecution. "We've been through three weeks of hell."

Before the mistrial was declared, the mother of Mrs. Gibbs said she still had strong feelings for her son-in-law.

"I still love James," Gertha Burnette of Robeson County said outside the courtroom. "He's still my son-in-law. He's got to live with this thing. Nothing is going to bring the girls back."

She also said she would accept whatever the jury decided with "no hard feelings."

The trial was moved to Catawba County from McDowell County because of extensive publicity.

Senate Democrats Back Leadership

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — Although not unanimous, a solid majority of Democrats in the state Senate support the leadership's plan to raise teacher and state employee salaries 6 percent without a major tax increase next year, a spokesman says.

"The Democrats are together," Senate President Pro Tem Henson Barnes, D-Wayne, said Monday after a closed caucus. "Governor Martin's proposed sales tax increase is not supported by the Democratic Party in the Senate."

Barnes was one of three Democratic leaders who put together the latest of at least half a dozen plans that have been floated in the Senate for financing salary increases, education improvements, human service programs and other spending increases in fiscal 1989-90.

The plan, which probably will go before the Senate Finance Committee this week, is based on diversion of $335 million over two years from a proposed fund to expand the state highway system and cut in half next year's Basic Education Program installment.

Its emergence as the Senate Democrats' plan of choice could foreshadow a standoff with the House, where the bipartisan leadership supports Gov. Jim Martin's call for a 1-cent sales tax increase to finance a salary and education package and has ridiculed the idea of tapping the proposed highway construction fund for the purpose.

"Nothing short of highway robbery," said Rep. Alex Hall, D-New Hanover, chairman of the House Finance Committee.

IN THE STATE

Lyme Disease

RALEIGH (AP) — Despite receiving a lot of attention, Lyme disease is not nearly as dangerous, or as prevalent in North Carolina, as Rocky Mountain spotted fever, health officials say.

There were 34 cases of Lyme disease reported in 1988 in 20 North Carolina counties, compared with 108 cases of Rocky Mountain spotted fever in the state last year.

"There's a lot of attention in the popular literature (about Lyme disease), and I think it can sometimes over-dramatize the problem," said Catherine Staes, an epidemiologist with the state.

Lyme disease is more widespread in the Northeast, Northwest and Midwest, she said. "However, it's not nearly as significant a problem here," adding that it wasn't a reportable disease until the end of 1987.

Lyme disease is carried by the deer tick, called Ixodes dammini, which is not found in North Carolina, Ms. Staes said.

Storm Damages

RALEIGH (AP) — Damages from storms that swept through North Carolina Friday night have been estimated at more than $8 million, state officials say.

"Our damage assessment teams have been in the field over the weekend working with city and county officials," Joe Dean, secretary of the N.C. Department of Crime Control and Public Safety, said Monday. "They estimate $8,042,000 worth of damages from the storms."

One person was killed in the storms in Alamance County when a utility pole fell onto the car in which he was riding. Elflist Nataniel Smith, 21, of Raleigh died at Moses Cone Memorial Hospital in Greensboro.

The storms hit several North Carolina counties causing damage in eight. The counties were Alamance, Caswell, Chatam, Guilford, Montgomery, Randolph, Stanly and Union.

Officials said 17 homes in the eight counties were destroyed and 52 homes received major damage, while 346 homes sustained minor damage.

The heaviest damage was reported in Alamance, Union and Chatam counties. In Alamance County, 184 homes were affected by the storms. Eighty-one homes sustained damage in Union County and 62 homes were damaged in Chatam County.

Witchweed Quarantine

WILMINGTON (AP) — Witchweed, a parasitic plant that feeds on the nutrients of such crops as corn, rice, sorghum and sugarcane, has been eradicated from 76 percent of all known infested areas in North Carolina and South Carolina, officials say.

The U.S. Department of Agriculture recently released 15,381 acres from a witchweed quarantine, but 4,056 new acres were placed under quarantine because of new infestations.

Witchweed has been eradicated in 19 of 38 counties in North Carolina and South Carolina, said Haywood Cox, assistant regional director of the plant protection and quarantine division of USDA.

Removed from the witchweed quarantine are portions of Columbus, Duplin, Pender, Craven, Cumberland, Greene, Harnett, Hoke, Lenoir, Sampson and Wayne counties. All of Beaufort County was removed from quarantine.

Areas of Florence, Horry and Marlboro counties in South Carolina were also removed from quarantine.

Jacobs Begins Sentence

FAYETTEVILLE (AP) — Indian activist Timothy Jacobs, who pleaded guilty to charges in connection with the armed takeover of The Robesonian newspaper in Lumberton, was scheduled to begin his sentence at the Western Correctional Center in Morganton today.

Jacobs was sentenced to six years in prison for his role in the hostage-taking siege of the newspaper in February 1988.

Public Banned From Hearing

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHARLOTTE — The public will be barred from today's hearing on whether to move PTL founder Jim Bakker's trial from Charlotte because of unprecedented publicity and "media frenzy" surrounding the case, a federal magistrate ruled.

U.S. Magistrate Paul Taylor, in a 10-page order issued Monday, rejected attempts to open the hearing. The request to open the hearing was made by The Charlotte Observer, Jefferson-Pilot Communications Co. (owners of WBT and radio stations WBT and WBCY), WSOC Television Inc. and the N.C. Press Association.

"Examining the evidence of publicity now in the record, the court is compelled to find, as a preliminary matter, that the publicity in the national and local press regarding these defendants has been pervasive, sensational, inflammatory, and, as a matter of law, prejudicial."

"To rule otherwise in the face of these exhibits would constitute 'newspeak' of Orwellian magnitude," Taylor said.

Ms. Hayes stands in front of her house, one of six built by Habitat for Humanity volunteers

Resident Of Blighted Inner City Gets New 'House Made Of Love'

By James A. Carlson
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MILWAUKEE — Cheryl Hayes says she won't forget the hundreds of volunteers who in one week made her dream of a new home a reality in the heart of Milwaukee's inner city.

"They'll never leave; their spirits will always be here," she said. "It's a house made of love."

Ms. Hayes, 40, a social worker and divorced mother of three, owns one of six homes built last week by the Georgia-based Habitat for Humanity International.

The site is near where 12 people died two years ago in the city's deadliest house fire. Less than three weeks after the blaze, a house fire several blocks away killed six people. The death toll focused attention on housing ills for the largely minority population of the inner city.

Now, Ms. Hayes, who is black, sees the efforts of Habitat as part of a rebirth of the neighborhood where she has lived nearly a decade.

"This is a beautiful neighborhood," she said. "This is going to be THE neighborhood someday."

Former President Carter and Millard Fuller, executive director of the organization, also think so.

Carter and his wife, Rosalynn, spent last week working on one of the homes. For the former president, it was the sixth year he has spent a week pounding nails and putting up walls in a Habitat home.

"I just know what's happened in other places where we've worked; it kind of rejuvenates the people," he said. "The whole neighborhood tries to stay up with them. They kind of set a pattern."

The crews in Milwaukee also renovated eight other homes last week.

Habitat officials said similar work has occurred in about 150 communities around the world as part of efforts to build more than 3,000 homes for low-income people this year.

Habitat, founded by Fuller in 1976 and based in Americus, Ga., is an ecumenical Christian organization that uses volunteer labor and donated material to produce housing for needy people.

The homes are sold for no profit with no-interest loans. The Milwaukee homes cost from $24,000 to $26,000, with principal payments on the 10-20 year mortgages to range from $100 to $250 a month.

Each buyer must put in 500 hours of labor that's called "sweat equity." The buyers work on several homes.

"It has a very positive impact for the families involved," said Walter Farrell, a professor at the University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee and a board member of the First Wisconsin Bank's Community Involvement Corp.

"Beyond that, it's only going to have a neighborhood impact if there are other projects in the area, ... if the houses do not become oases in an area of dilapidated houses."

He said census data show that vacant or substandard housing in the central city is as high as 25 to 30 percent. Officials estimate 800 dwellings are abandoned.

Taking a break from installing siding on a house, Fuller said the whole community should work toward eliminating substandard housing and homelessness by the year 2000.

"This is only one week, but what if we did it every week? What if everybody was concerned every week about everybody having a house? The problem would be solved in a very few years."

Ms. Hayes and Diana Wilson, another of the six new homeowners, said the project stirred interest in the black community. It also stirred their emotions.

Ms. Wilson, 36, a school bus driver and nurse's aide who will live in the house with her two sons, said she arrived at her new home at 6:10 a.m. one day. No one was there.

"I was walking around, looking at the rooms, and I didn't even realize I was crying. The tears were just running down my face," she said.

Investor Packages Deal For Northwest Airlines

By Tony Kennedy
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MINNEAPOLIS — Investor Alfred Checchi has lined up a tidy deal to acquire Northwest Airlines for about $4 billion, making it unlikely a hostile bidder will reopen the bidding, analysts say.

"It's possible, but not likely," said Frederic Malek, a Washington, D.C., merchant banker who is part of the group that struck a $121-a-share takeover deal Monday with NWA Inc., Northwest's parent.

Checchi's Wings Holdings Inc. led a group that includes KLM Royal Dutch Airlines and the Australian conglomerate Elders IXL. The group said it believed it would win the federal approval required for it to complete its purchase of the nation's fourth-largest airline.

The Los Angeles investor said he plans "substantial growth" at Northwest, including the purchase of 138 new planes already on order or option. He also promised to retain current management and keep Northwest's headquarters in suburban Eagan. Malek said there would be no layoffs.

If Checchi can't complete the deal by Sept. 18, NWA said it would pay shareholders a $70-a-share special dividend under a recapitalization, which would cost about $2.1 billion.

Kurt Rivard, an analyst for the brokerage Dain Bosworth Inc. of Minneapolis, said the backup plan would add unattractive debt to NWA, which could thwart a possible hostile tender offer.

In other recent takeover battles including the fight for RJR Nabisco Inc., hostile offers were submitted after the company announced an end to the bidding.

Nabisco was ultimately purchased by the New York takeover firm of Kohlberg Kravis Roberts & Co., which has long been rumored as a suitor for NWA. Kohlberg Kravis has declined to comment on its intentions involving NWA.

Malek said it would take a substantially higher offer to justify the expense of reopening the auction for NWA, which spanned two months and included two rounds of bidding.

Conceding as much, Los Angeles oil billionaire Marvin Davis said he tentatively supports the Checchi deal and was dropping his offer of $2.7 billion, or $90 a share, which started the auction.

Davis, who owns 2.9 percent of NWA's common shares, is one of three known suitors who were outbid by Checchi. The others were Pan Am Corp. and Northwest's 20,000-member Machinists union.

Pan Am issued a statement saying it was disappointed its bid was not chosen. The carrier, which has said it needs to merge with a stronger partner to survive, said it wanted NWA to reconsider its offer if the Checchi bid falters. Pan Am has not disclosed the value of its offer.

The Machinists union did not return telephone calls seeking comment.

NWA said it chose Checchi's offer because it had the highest price, the fewest contingencies and was the most likely to succeed.

NWA stock soared $6.50 a share Monday to close at $114.12½ on the New York Stock Exchange.

Checchi's proposal includes $700 million in equity and $3.35 billion to be borrowed from a syndicate of banks. Significantly, it does not call for the use of high-yield, high-risk junk bonds.

P&G Seeking Ways To Recycle Diapers

By Fred Bayles
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The nation's largest maker of disposable diapers said today it will begin searching for ways to transform billions of dirty dummies from an ecological problem into recycled flower pots, building insulation and lush highway medians.

Procter & Gamble Co. announced it is backing research to see if dirty disposable diapers can be cleaned and their components recycled. The cost of the program was not immediately available.

In a statement issued prior to today's scheduled news conference at Washington's National Press Club, Bob Greene, P&G's associate director of research, said the company hoped to find ways of handling disposable diapers and other materials in municipal solid waste in ways that can bypass landfill disposal and recover valuable resources.

The research, to be done in Minnesota, Wisconsin, Washington, Florida and other states, comes as public concern is growing over the 46 billion disposable diapers dumped annually in the nation's overflowing landfills.

While not the biggest component in the U.S. garbage pile — waste paper, bottles and cans are bigger contributors — diapers cannot be recycled like other trash.

Environmentalists have warned that the plastic-coated disposable diapers do not decompose, making their contents potential breeding grounds for dangerous viruses and bacteria that cause polio, hepatitis, meningitis and other diseases.

As a result, lawmakers in Nebraska have banned the sale of non-biodegradable diapers by 1993 and legislators in Iowa, Washington and Oregon have considered similar action.

The P&G announcement detailed three separate projects. The first, in cooperation with Seattle's Solid Waste Utility and Rabanco Co. of Seattle, will collect used diapers from 1,000 households, wash and sanitize them, then separate them into plastic and pulp.

The plastic will be recycled into flower pots, garbage bags and ersatz lumber used for landscaping. The pulp will be made into cardboard boxes, building insulation and wallboard liner.

"Our aim is not to get into the diaper recycling business," project director Nancy Eddy said. "Rather, we want to demonstrate that the technology is feasible and encourage entrepreneurs to get involved in this business."

In another project with the recycling firm Recomp Inc. of St. Cloud, Minn., diapers will be put through a process that churns garbage into a soil used to reclaim salt-tainted lands along highways.

The diaper giant also will finance research at the University of Wisconsin that, over the next five years, will bury and exhume regular and biodegradable disposable diapers at landfill sites in Wisconsin, Florida and the Northeast.

This landfill archeology will see if products touted as biodegradable actually decompose any faster than the regular disposable diapers made by P&G.

Sub Having Troubles

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A nuclear submarine that pulled a tugboat under, killing a crewman, cut a fishing boat's net two days later, the Navy said.

The USS Houston sliced the net Friday night outside Los Angeles Harbor as the craft headed home on the surface for San Diego after taking part in filming of the movie "The Hunt for Red October," said Lt. Sonja Hedley, a Navy spokeswoman.

Hedley would not give the sub's precise location but said the fishing boat "was in the traffic lane you shouldn't be in... trawling."

However, she added: "If we cut his net, we'll pay for his net and that's all there is to it. People cross fishing nets like that and clip them all the time."

Capt. James C. Card, commander of the Coast Guard's Marine Safety Office, said the fisherman's description of his location would have placed the trawler in a legal spot just outside the shipping channels.

China Claims Return To Normalcy; More Arrested

By Jim Abrams
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BEIJING — China's official media announced more arrests of pro-democracy activists today while insisting that all was normal after weeks of political turmoil, and foreign journalists reported more harassment.

New regulations went into effect today that appear designed to prevent people wanted by the government from fleeing the country.

Also, the Supreme Court issued orders to all lower courts to "severely punish counterrevolutionary elements who have been charged."

The People's Broadcasting radio station quoted the court as saying it was important that those who incited social unrest or participated in riots be dealt with swiftly. The high court said courts should increase their staffs to deal with the heavy case loads.

More than 1,360 people have been reported arrested since demonstrations broke out in cities across China to protest the army's killing of hundreds of unarmed civilians in Beijing on June 4 in crushing the pro-democracy movement.

The Supreme Court advised that people who surrender or report the crimes of others be given lenient treatment.

Premier Li Peng, in remarks Monday, said "counterrevolutionary unrest" had been put down, but "quite a lot of rioters are yet to be apprehended," the official Xinhua News Agency reported. "We can in no way leave them unpunished and let them stage a comeback."

Beijing radio reported today that Liu Gang, 28, one of 21 student activists on a nationwide wanted list, was arrested Monday in Baoding, about 90 miles south of Beijing. Gang, a physics student at Beijing University and one of the leaders of a now-banned independent student union, is the sixth to be arrested or give himself up since the list was announced June 13.

The Communist Party's People's Daily reported today that a student from the Zhejiang Academy of Fine Arts in Hangzhou had been arrested for spreading rumors to the U.S. government-funded Voice of America.

The newspaper said Zhang Weiping told VOA that the provincial government flew the Chinese flag at half-staff to mourn students killed in Beijing when troops drove them from Tiananmen Square, the country's symbolic seat of power.

The VOA office in Beijing confirmed that Zhang had called from the city near Shanghai, but said it did not know whether its Chinese-language service out of Washington ran the item.

VOA, which enjoys a huge audience in China, has been criticized by the government for its "rumor-mongering" reports on the military crackdown. The VOA Beijing bureau chief was expelled from China last week.

The government on Monday said it was expelling another foreign journalist for violating martial law regulations.

Joseph Kahn, an American working part-time for the Dallas Morning News, was stopped by police last week after interviewing people in the countryside outside Beijing, an area not under martial law. He was given 72 hours to leave.

In addition to Kahn and the VOA bureau chief, an Associated Press correspondent and three British reporters have been ordered out in the past 10 days.

The Canadian Embassy today requested a meeting with the Foreign Ministry to protest an apparent attempt by plainclothes police to seize Jan Wong, correspondent for the Toronto Globe and Mail. There was no immediate response from the Chinese.

Miss Wong, a Chinese-Canadian, said she was walking home from the her embassy after interviewing Chinese waiting in line for visas when two men grabbed her and tried to force her into a car.

She said she screamed and struggled and escaped when a crowd of pedestrians and bicyclists stopped to watch.

A crew for the CBS television network was detained for 2½ hours this morning on troop-occupied Tiananmen Square. CBS said the crew was lectured before being released.

The new foreign travel rules that took effect today invalidate all previously issued exit permits and require passport holders to obtain new ones before they can apply at foreign embassies for visas. Starting today, Chinese guards outside embassies began barring people without the new permits.

The U.S. Embassy said only three Chinese showed up with the new permit and were able to apply for visas, down from 350 applications on Monday.

Chinese news media, which last week showed hours of graphic tape of crowds attacking soldiers and burning military vehicles during the June 4 assault, emphasized today that the rebellion had been quashed and life was returning to normal.

The national news showed farmers harvesting winter wheat and factories in full production. Foreign tourists and businessmen appeared on every news show as the government tried to emphasize that the political situation had stabilized and it was now safe for foreigners to return.

Thousands of foreign business executives left the country after the military takeover of Beijing, and tourism, source of more than $2 billion in annual revenue, has dried up.

Bo Xicheng, director of the Beijing

Tourism Administration, said tourism in China had been hurt by "rumors" of the recent unrest, but that social stability had been restored and the open-door policy reaffirmed.

"We welcome not only foreign tourists, but also investors," the China Daily quoted him as saying.

City Council Begins Making Plans To Handle Growth

By J. Ward Best
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

The Greenville City Council began looking toward future growth of the city and planning for the machinery needed for that growth.

During Monday's workshop meeting, the council began considering a proposal to provide water and sewer services to developments outside the city's extraterritorial jurisdiction. Under the proposed regulations the utilities commission would provide sewer and water to a development under condition the developer request annexation of the property.

And the council also began reviewing a proposed capital improvements plan which would allow the city to plan for large facilities and equipment needs.

Under the proposed services for annexation trade the city would in effect have power of approval over developments requesting sewer and water services. The council is considering requiring the developers to meet city building requirements.

"I'm not saying this is exactly what the developers want, and I'm not saying this is exactly what the council wants," assistant city manager Ron Kimble said, "but this seems to have gained the most consensus."

Under the new regulations the Greenville Utilities Commission (GUC) could run sewer and water lines outside city limits without the city having to take immediate action on annexing the area.

Council member Lorraine Shinn asked the council and the city manager to look at including sedimentation and erosion controls in with the review of roadways and curb and gutter requirements.

City Manager Greg Knowles said areas outside city control, but likely to become part of the city later, needed stronger regulations, "even if we have to bring it to them."

The City Council and GUC would have review approval of the development before agreeing to accept the annexation request or extend services. The City Council and GUC can also hold the annexation petition for two years or more before acting.

GUC approved the recommended regulations last week.

"They're going to look at the set of circumstances and decide what's best for the city," Kimble said about granting any annexation requests.

All of the requests would be for satellite annexations of developments outside Greenville's extraterritorial jurisdiction limits.

State law restricts municipalities to satellite annexation of no more than 10 percent of the total area of the city. With 19.29 square-miles inside the city, and recent satellite annexations south of the city, Greenville can annex less than one-half square mile before reaching the 10 percent limit.

"They want to be sure not to annex those properties that would exceed 10 percent," Kimble said.

The council also heard plans for outlining the necessary equipment and facilities needed for an expanding city.

Lynn James, a member of the capitol improvements plan task force, reviewed progress of the board, and said the task force would complete a final plan by September.

The plan would prioritize capital improvement needs over five, 10 and 15 year increments. With the plan the City Council could anticipate necessary equipment such as fire trucks and more space for city facilities.

"I think the projection of this is one of the greatest things I've ever seen," said Council member Bill Hadden.

Council member Mildred Council asked how the capital improvements plan would mesh with the 2007 plan also designed to anticipate city growth. Mrs. James and Knowles assured Ms. Council the city would use each plan as a tool to plan for and anticipate growth.

During Monday's session the City Council also approved next year's budget for the city and for GUC.

Knowing the answers to the following questions could save the life of a teen friend or family member. The test was provided by Cumberland Hospital in Fayetteville. Answer the questions with either true or false. The answers follow.

1. Suicide is the second leading cause of death in the 15-24 age group.
2. One young person commits suicide every 90 minutes.
3. Children of divorced parents are more likely to commit suicide.
4. A young person may have the wish to live and the wish to die at the same time.
5. More suicides occur away from home.
6. Haplessness, helplessness and hopelessness are three signs most present in a suicidal teen-ager.
7. Those who talk about suicide usually do not commit suicide.
8. If a depressed teen-ager suddenly becomes happy and peaceful, suicide is no longer a possibility.
9. Talking about suicide with teen-agers is not recommended, as it is suggestive of a negative way of coping.
10. More suicides are committed in the fall, due to the bleakness of dying of leaves and cold, dark days.

Answers

1. True. In the last 20 years, teenage suicide has tripled. Automobile accidents are the leading cause of death in teen-agers, and many single-car accidents are suicides.
2. True. 5,000 young people take their lives each year. It is of epidemic proportions in the United States.
3. False. Although divorce and working are continually blamed, it is the lack of involvement of parents with their children. In other words, quality of time is important, not quantity of time.

4. True. Ambivalence is always present. Sometimes it is so strong that the suicide victim is found with a phone in the hand, displaying a cry for help.
5. False. Suicidal adolescents are the greatest danger at home, as this is where nine out of 10 suicide attempts take place.
6. True. Haplessness refers to things going wrong, a series of bad breaks; helplessness, the teen-ager's ability to deal with his problem, and, with the series of events, hopelessness occurs.
7. False. A very dangerous myth is that those who talk don't take action. Actually, three-fourths of suicide victims have stated their intentions prior to the suicide.
8. False. When someone improves dramatically, it is because a decision has been made: "Enough of this depression, I'm going to kill myself and get this over with."
9. False. It is important to communicate. Ask specific questions: "Is something bothering you; do you sometimes wish you were dead?" Avoid moral judgments, shocked reactions, arguments about the values of life. Instead, demonstrate willingness to listen and understanding of the seriousness of pain.
10. False. Although incidence of suicide is high in the fall, it is the highest in the spring, particularly in April. Depressed people feel dead inside — cold and empty — and spring is bursting with life and full of color. This just reinforces their feelings of being out of step with the world.

Vague Symptoms May Signal A Case Of Borderline Anemia

REDBOOK

If you suffer from irritatingly vague symptoms that zap your energy, you may be among the more than 17 million American women who suffer from borderline anemia.

The symptoms, according to an article in the current issue of Redbook, include unexplained and persistent fatigue, unusual irritability, reduced work performance, lack of concentration and increased sensitivity to cold.

Some doctors are reluctant to classify borderline anemia as a distinct medical condition, but nutrition expert Dr. Victor Herbert disagrees. Herbert, a professor of medicine at the Mount Sinai and Bronx V.A. Medical Centers in New York City, said:

"The evidence shows that nutrient deficiencies not yet severe enough to produce anemia can nevertheless produce symptoms."

Anemia occurs when hemoglobin, the component in red blood cells that carries energy-giving oxygen to the body's cells, falls below normal levels. Cells then are deprived of oxygen.

In full-blown anemia, symptoms can include excessive fatigue, palpitations, shortness of breath, marked pallor of skin and nail beds, pins and needles in the extremities, headaches and gastrointestinal problems.

Among women of childbearing age, the most common cause of anemia is a dietary deficiency in iron, vitamin B-12 and folic acid.

"Be it a full-blown or borderline case, sustained iron deficiency always results in anemia," said Dr. Myron Winick, Williams professor of nutrition at Columbia University's College of Physicians and Surgeons.

Dr. Ray Yip, a medical epidemiologist at the Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta, estimates that of the 70 million women between the ages of 12 and 50, about 5 percent of them, 3.5 million, suffer from full-blown iron-deficiency anemia.

Some authorities further speculate that an additional 25 percent of these 70 million women are borderline anemic.

While most people eating an average diet have little difficulty getting enough B-12 and folic acid, iron is the best nutrient to fight off anemia. Here are some eating tips that will lower your risk of anemia.

Liver and red meat are potent iron sources but they also are high in calories, cholesterol and saturated fat. Compromise by eating liver every week or two and occasional servings of lean red meat, then fill out your iron needs with iron-rich plant foods.

Maudene Nelson, a dietician and nutrition consultant to Metropolitan Life's Center for Healthy Living, said that although the body best absorbs iron from animal products, vegetable sources such as beans, peas and dark leafy vegetables are good if you mix in some meat, fish or poultry in the same meal.

Snooze-Alarm A Nightmare

Dear Abby

Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I have a problem I need your help on. Every night my husband sets his alarm clock for 5 a.m. He doesn't get out of bed when his alarm goes off; he just turns on his snooze alarm, which goes off every nine minutes until 6:30 — when he actually gets out of bed.

I have my own alarm clock, which is set for 6:30 a.m. When his alarm goes off at 5 a.m. and then repeats every nine minutes, it wakes me up and keeps me awake. So I either holler at him (which doesn't do any good), or I leave the room and go to sleep on the couch, or I just stay up.

We both work full time, and he goes to bed anywhere from two to three hours ahead of me, but he just can't seem to get out of bed in the morning. There are times when he wakes me up in the middle of the night for lovemaking, and when I tell him I'm too tired, he thinks I'm a terrible person.

Abby, how can I resolve this? He wasn't like this when I married him. We've been married 14 years and have three kids. I love him dearly, but I'm tired of this snooze alarm business. — Tired In St. Cloud, Minn.

Dear Tired: The "terrible person" in your marriage is the selfish party who wakes up his wife at 5 a.m. when she could sleep for an additional hour and a half. As long as you put up with it, nothing will change.

Give him a choice: Either knock off the snooze alarm, or arrange for separate sleeping quarters. (If you can't sleep comfortably on the couch, get yourself a hideaway bed.)

Dear Abby: Once in a while I read a love story in your column, usually from a couple who met through Operation Dear Abby. Well, I also have a love story to tell.

Several years ago, following a painful divorce, I enrolled in a square dance class. The caller (teacher) said that every year there had been marriages as a result of people meeting there. I didn't find a husband, but I had a lot of fun and met some nice people. Then I dropped out.

Last October, a neighbor encouraged me to enroll in another square dance class, and there I met Richard — an "angel" (that's what they call dancers who come to help beginners). I liked the way he looked and I loved the way he danced so I approached him, just to talk, and before the evening ended, he asked me for a date.

Richard turned out to be the love of my life! I'm no spring chicken (I'm 50 plus) and I never expected to find love again, but did I ever! He's a few years younger than I am, but who's counting?

We're getting married next week, and I've never been happier. Abby, please tell your readers about square dancing. It's good exercise and a wonderful way to meet nice people. — Do-Si-Dolly In L.A.

Dear Dolly: Your letter is a do-si-dilly. Thanks for the tip. Take heed, all you lonesome polecats. Square dance clubs are listed in the telephone directory.

Dear Abby: Please add this to your list of helpful — and possibly lifesaving — items on child safety: My heart nearly stopped the day my 2-year-old son scaled our aquarium stand and had one leg in the 20-gallon tank before I could get to him from across the room!

Until that day, I had never viewed our aquarium as a safety hazard. Now I do. If you think this will help others, please print it. — Vickie L. In Anchorage, Alaska

On A Merry-Go-Round

At Wits End

Erma Bombeck

For Father's Day, my husband received a motorized closet valet. It's a little carousel for ties and belts that runs on two batteries. My husband has about as much use for a merry-go-round for his ties as he does for polo score cards.

He tried to get worked up over it. Once it was installed over the rod in his closet, we all stood around as he pushed the button. The lights went on and the carousel hesitated, then slowly turned as his two ties paraded before our eyes. It was pathetic. "That's great," he said weakly. "It'll really save time."

A few years ago, he became one of a growing army of men in this country who are "hard to buy for." These men are hard to buy for because they never buy anything they don't need, and they don't need anything they don't already have. I have more gift ideas for a Trappist monk than I have for my husband.

Throughout the year, we all watch him like a hawk, waiting for some careless mention of an interest, a hobby, a hook to hang a gift on. When he said he liked chocolate chip cookies, he received five boxes on Christmas. When he went on a health kick, he got every health book and cassette known to man. Running-wise, he has shorts made from a Japanese flag, headphones, shoestrings that glow in the dark, watches so complex that no one in North America can set them, running caps with moose antlers, sweatbands, ankle weights, and designer safety pins to hold his car keys.

When the kids had nothing to go on, they went silly. Sitting around his office are a 6-foot inflatable dinosaur, a giraffe head over the door, a life preserver with "Titanic" printed on the side, and six Opus dolls.

Don't even think of buying him something to wear. I can tell you only that if 1953 comes back, he has the wardrobe for it. According to him, you do not buy another sweater when you already have one that doesn't have a hole in it.

A couple of years ago, I bypassed clothes, hobbies and silly, and went straight to the "what is it" gift. This includes a luggage tag that is disguised as a piece of mending tape to make the luggage look old and patched so no one will want to steal it, and a pair of gloves to read the newspaper without getting your hands dirty. (I didn't expect them to bring tears to his eyes.)

Since anything I buy seems to overwhelm him, I have gone on to gifts for me that I want to convince him he wants too. The kids thought the tie express was a stroke of genius. Now they can sit back and buy ties to put on it. Me? I can hardly wait for Christmas to get him new seat covers for my car he doesn't even know he needs yet.

Turmoil Drove Switzer Away Sooners Decide On Top Assistant Gibbs To Replace Switzer

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NORMAN, Okla. — The University of Oklahoma announced today it is recommending that defensive coordinator Gary Gibbs replace Barry Switzer, who resigned Monday as football coach at Oklahoma.

"Gary Gibbs is one of the outstanding young coaches in the country today," Interim President David Swank said. "He understands the need to succeed in the football program and on the field.

The university's regents will vote on the recommendation Wednesday.

Saying there was "too much water under the bridge," Switzer announced Monday he was walking away from the football program he guided to three national championships.

"I finally decided the time has come for new leadership," Switzer said.

"I received a great football program 16 years ago. I'm passing on a great football program."

In leaving after 16 years as Sooners coach, Switzer said he was frustrated by NCAA rules that do not "recognize the financial needs of young athletes."

Gibbs has been with the Sooners since 1975 and has been defensive coordinator since 1981.

Switzer said Monday he had asked that his successor come from the staff.

"I wanted that consideration, that we retain a winning staff and proven staff, that one of those lead and direct this program at the energy levels that I do not have today," he said.

Switzer had been under pressure since the school's football program was placed on three years' probation by the NCAA in December and after several players were charged early this year with crimes involving drugs, guns and sexual assault.

But Switzer had served notice he planned to remain as coach and talk of his leaving ebbed by the end of spring practice. His resignation caught some former and current players, as well as others in the coaching ranks, off guard.

"It came as a complete surprise," said Eddie Foster, an offensive lineman during Switzer's first year as head coach. "After the things that happened in the spring had cooled down, I thought Coach Switzer had put them behind him and would be here this fall."

"I will never coach at another institution. I will never coach at another college level. I promise you that," Switzer said.

He noted his record at Oklahoma and said "anything depletes and detracts from that anywhere I go."

"It's no fun anymore. I'm drained. I don't have the energy level to compete in this arena today," the 52-year-old Switzer said.

Resignation Was A Shock To Many

By Herschel Nissenson
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Barry Switzer, whose three national championships and 12 Big Eight titles in 16 years were overshadowed by the problems he and his players had off the field, decided it was time for him to step down as head football coach at the ultra-successful University of Oklahoma.

Not everyone agreed with the man who once was known as "The King of Oklahoma" and had the fourth-best winning percentage in college football history.

"It's not the right way for him to leave that university," said Chuck Fairbanks, the man Switzer succeeded in 1973. "He's given a lot of his life to that university and it's disheartening to me that he has to finish such an outstanding career in this manner."

Although Oklahoma's biggest newspapers called for his resignation when the football program was hit with a three-year NCAA probation in December and after several players were charged with crimes involving drugs, guns and sexual assault, Switzer emphasized that he did not resign under pressure but rather because coaching no longer was any fun.

"One of the things people should recall is that Barry has been at his best when his back has been up against the wall," a surprised Fairbanks said. "The university is bigger than any individual, so it is going to survive. Barry is a very tough and talented person, and he will survive. Both will come out all right in the long run."

A hint of Switzer's resignation may have come last month when he said on his radio show that he would welcome a chance to coach in the NFL.

"Coaching collegiate football (in the 1970s), you didn't have the problems

Walters, Bloom Receive Sentences

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHICAGO — A federal judge has handed jail terms to sports agents Norby Walters and Lloyd Bloom and "fair warning" to others who would violate the rules of college athletics.

Walters and Bloom were convicted in April of signing athletes to contracts before their college eligibility had expired, and of threatening some of them with harm if they sought to break the agreements.

U.S. District Judge George Marovich on Monday said the involvement of the agents, particularly Walters, with an organized-crime figure weighed heavily in his decision to sentence Walters to five years in prison and Bloom to three years.

Marovich also admonished universities and athletes, saying "there were no heroes" in the trial, which focused attention on how schools enforce the rules of college sports.

"I do want to give fair warning to those who may violate those rules," Marovich said. "You may be playing in a different ball game and it might be called hardball. ... There is a previously unrecognized player on the field — the rule of law."

U.S. Attorney Anton Valukas agreed.

"I think what was displayed here

... will have some impact on college sports," Valukas said after the sentencing. "More importantly, I think it will alert people to the problems of organized crime infiltration into sports activity."

Dan Webb, a lawyer representing Bloom, had argued against a prison sentence, saying Bloom was being made "the scapegoat for all the sins of college athletics."

He said after the sentencing that he was gratified that the judge apparently agreed that "these universities are a cesspool of corruption, that they have destroyed amateur athletics in America."

Both Walters, 57, of New York, and Bloom, 29, now of Sherman Oaks, Calif., addressed the judge before sentencing.

"I wouldn't dream of breaking the law. That's not who I am," an almost inaudible Walters said, at times choking back tears.

"I am deeply sorry for what I've done. If I can be given a second chance, I'd like it," Bloom said.

The judge ordered each to serve five years' probation after leaving prison. Bloom also was ordered to finish paying back $145,000 to Paul Palmer, a running back with the Kansas City Chiefs who had sought to invest the money with Bloom.

Gadd Is Only Remaining Defendant In USC Probe

By Rick Scoppe
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

COLUMBIA, S.C. — Former South Carolina assistant football coach Jim Washburn said he and another assistant coach, Tom Gadd, arranged to get steroids for a player who was having problems gaining weight.

Meanwhile, a Maryland man pleaded guilty on Monday in a plea arrangement, leaving Gadd as the lone defendant remaining of the five men indicted two months ago in connection with the use and distribution of steroids by athletes and coaches at South Carolina.

Gadd's trial began Monday and was to resume today, with former South Carolina linebacker Carl Hill and ex-graduate assistant coach Mark Paulson expected to testify before U.S. District Judge G. Ross Anderson.

Washburn, who called Gadd a "a very good friend," testified he and Gadd helped obtain steroids for Hill, who played at South Carolina from 1984-86. Washburn said the two coaches were in a meeting room in mid-April 1984 at Williams-Brice Stadium when Hill walked in and brought up the subject of steroids.

"I think Carl was frustrated about his inability to gain weight, and he asked us about the possibility of using steroids," Washburn said during nearly two hours of testimony before the nine-woman, three-man jury. "We left it that if Carl was serious, for him to think about it — it was a serious matter — and if Carl indeed wanted to try steroids to come to us."

A few days later, Hill again approached the coaches.

"He said that he had thought about it," Washburn said, "and he wanted to give steroids a try."

Washburn said the coaches also told Hill they would pay for the steroids, although he said he could not recall paying for the drugs. But one of Gadd's attorneys, Wells Dixon, read from a statement Washburn gave authorities in April in which the former coach said he paid Paulson for the steroids.

Dixon also asked about statements Washburn made to authorities after a story on steroids at South Carolina appeared in Sports Illustrated. Washburn said then he knew of no players using steroids and had no information that any coaches had encouraged players to use steroids.

"I was dishonest in the statement," Washburn said.

Dixon also asked Washburn about his use of steroids. Washburn testified earlier Monday he had used steroids once — for about a month during his playing days at Gardner-Webb. But under questioning by Dixon, Washburn said he also experimented with steroids for a short time in 1986.

"I really felt we had a steroid problem on our football team," Washburn said. "It was hard to pinpoint who was using them, how many people were using them. But I knew there was a problem."

Gadd, an assistant at South Carolina from 1982 to 1986, is charged with importing steroids into the state, encouraging players to use steroids and helping to monitor the use of the drugs. If convicted, Gadd could be imprisoned for two years and fined $101,000. Two other counts facing Gadd were quietly dropped by prosecutors before the trial.

In a surprise move, John L. Carter, 25, of Bethesda, Md., pleaded guilty to giving steroids to former Gamecock football player Tommy Chaikin. Three other counts were dropped, including charges Carter gave steroids to three other ex-Gamecock players.

Ferry Hopes Skills Fit NBA Team

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

DURHAM — Former Duke basketball star Danny Ferry says he has no idea where he'll be selected in the upcoming NBA draft, but wants to play for a professional team where his all-around skills will be used.

"I'd like to go to a good team, one that has a chance to improve. I don't want to get caught up in a situation where a team is picking the best athlete available," Ferry said Monday. "I want to get picked because I'll fit into their team."

Ferry stressed the positives of the teams likely to select him next week. The Sacramento Kings, he said, have a strong backcourt. Former North Carolina star Kenny Smith is the point guard, with ex-Celtic Danny Ainge at second guard. And Vinny Del Negro, a former standout at N.C. State, is a top reserve.

"The nice thing is they have good guards," he said. "That'd be a fun-type team to play with. Keeping up with Kenny Smith running up and down the court would be tough — I don't think anyone can — but it'd be fun to try."

The Kings certainly could use help. Rodney McCray, Wayman Tisdale, Jim Petersen and Harold Pressley are the top players on a weak front line.

The Los Angeles Clippers, on the other hand, have talent up front but a key player, Danny Manning, suffered a knee injury last season. Manning is expected back next season.

"They've got a lot of good young talent," Ferry said of the Clippers. "They haven't been the luckiest team in the world. Look what happened to Manning. That hasn't been a lucky organization. That's bound to change."

As for the San Antonio Spurs, Ferry said he has two good friends on that team in guard Johnny Dawkins, a former Duke teammate, and center David Robinson.

Sacramento lost 55 games last season and the Clippers and San Antonio each lost 61, meaning Ferry probably will be involved in more losses this coming season than he has in the last eight combined.

But losing may be tough to handle for Ferry. His DeMatha High School team in Hyattsville, Md., lost only 14 games in four years. And Duke lost just 27 with him, giving him only 41 losses in his past eight years of basketball.

As for the Duke program, Ferry said he doesn't expect it to slide with him gone. Even with the sudden transfer of rising senior Phil Henderson, Ferry said the Blue Devils will be sound.

Rose Wants His Trial In Home Court

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CINCINNATI — Pete Rose wants a court in Cincinnati — not the commissioner of baseball — to decide whether he should be banned from baseball.

Lawyers for the Cincinnati Reds' manager filed a lawsuit in state court on Monday to block baseball Commissioner A. Bartlett Giamatti from deciding whether Rose bet on games involving his teams.

The 38-page lawsuit, accompanied by nearly 200 pages of exhibits, says Giamatti and his investigators have been "unfair and outrageous" in their probe of the gambling allegations against Rose.

The lawsuit also publicly confirms for the first time that Rose has been accused of betting on Reds' games, an offense that carries a lifetime ban under baseball's regulations. It said that Giamatti believes those allegations to be true.

Hamilton County Common Pleas Judge Norbert Nadel was assigned the lawsuit, which also asks for an order blocking Rose's hearing with Giamatti scheduled for next Monday in New York. Nadel scheduled a hearing on the lawsuit for 9:30 a.m. today.

Giamatti said he would fight Rose's request. He said the lawsuit was "wholly without merit," and added, "I trust the court will permit me to proceed with my hearing."

Rose contends that Giamatti has already made up his mind about the allegations, siding with bodybuilder Paul G. Janszen and bookmaker Ron Peters. Janszen claims he ran Rose's bets on Reds' games to Peters.

The lawsuit said Giamatti has shown "bias and prejudice," and should be prohibited from deciding Rose's fate. Instead, the lawsuit asks "that this court determine whether or not Pete Rose has bet on major league baseball, and in particular the Cincinnati Reds."

The lawsuit said Rose wants a trial by jury on the relevant issues. It also asks for punitive damages from Giamatti "in a sum sufficient to punish him for his unfair and outrageous conduct" in the case.

In response to the lawsuit, Giamatti defended baseball's investigation of Rose, which was publicly revealed March 20. Baseball officials have refused to discuss any details of the investigation.

"All my efforts to proceed fairly and to maintain confidentiality have been, regrettably, damaged by the selective use of Mr. (John M.) Dowd's report (and) by the bizarre characterization of some of those excerpts," he said, referring to evidence presented in the lawsuit. "I regret that baseball's business has been subjected to tactics of this sort."

A baseball lawyer, Lou Hoynes, was expected to be in Cincinnati today.

By filing the detailed lawsuit, Rose's lawyers revealed an outline of the accusations against him and the way they've been pursued by special investigator Dowd. The lawsuit said:

— That Dowd's 225-page report to Giamatti on the allegations is based "almost exclusively" on information from Janszen, Peters and Janszen's girlfriend, Danita Marcum.

— That Dowd obtained information from the U.S. Justice Department as part of his investigation. Rose also is the target of a federal grand jury probe in Cincinnati.

— That baseball asked Rose to step aside as the Reds' manager during the investigation.

— That Janszen passed a lie-detector test, as previously reported by the AP, after failing his first polygraph.

— That Dowd's final report includes information that Janszen took three pieces of paper from Rose's home that were alleged to be betting slips. Copies of the slips, described by Dowd as "Pete Rose's Betting Sheets," were included as an exhibit to the report.

The lawsuit questions the reliability of one of the betting slips.

"The first sheet purports to set forth a bet made on an April 9, 1987, game where Cincinnati played at Montreal," the lawsuit said. "Incredibly, Dowd places significant emphasis on this sheet of paper even though April 9 was an off-day for the Reds, and while they played Montreal the previous day, the game was in Cincinnati and not in Montreal."

Peters, in an interview shown Monday on "CBS Evening News," said Rose bet $20,000 a day on baseball games between 1984 and 1987. Peters said that on July 7, 1987, Rose bet $17,500 on baseball games.

"He always bet on his team," Peters said. "He never bet against his team."

Contacted by The Associated Press Monday night, Peters declined to repeat the charges. A lawyer familiar with Peters' situation said Monday that the interview with CBS and another with Sports Illustrated had been given earlier with a specified release date.

"I was totally surprised they even aired it," Peters said of the CBS report.

Peters was sentenced last week to two years in jail after pleading guilty to charges of cocaine distribution and failing to report income from gambling and bookmaking.

Janszen was released from a halfway house in Cincinnati last week after serving four months for failing to report income from the sale of steroids.

Kerr: Olympics A Drug Zone

Canadian Inquiry Hears More Drug Horror Stories

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TORONTO — The Olympics are a playground for government-sanctioned Frankensteins manufactured by surgeons, doctors and chemists, a federal inquiry has been told.

Dr. Robert B. Kerr, the California physician once known as the steroid guru, said Monday that more than 90 per cent of Ben Johnson's rivals use the banned drugs that cost the sprinter a gold medal in the 1988 Olympics at Seoul.

Kerr, who once claimed he had 20 Olympic medalists on banned substances, described a nightmarish world in which stars are treated like laboratory animals for the sake of gold medals.

Drawing on 20 years experience in sports medicine and dealings with experts around the world, Kerr described how some countries use radical surgical techniques and dangerous chemicals such as strychnine and nerve gas to gain an edge.

In three hours of testimony before a half-empty hearing room, Kerr said one Czechoslovak doctor has removed tissue from more than 2,000 athletes. Kerr described that doctor's attempts to customize drug programs and develop specific muscle types in certain parts of the body, and cited the development of a powerful throwing arm and explosive launching leg in a shot putter.

The technique "is actually manufacturing a more exquisite athlete as far as speed, power, strength or whatever," said Kerr, who said he treated 4,000 athletes from 20 countries before he quit prescribing steroids several years ago.

"It sounds like the Bionic Man," observed commissioner Charles Dubin.

"Or Frankenstein," Kerr replied.

Evidence before the inquiry indicates the sprinter's personal physician, Dr. Jamie Astaphan, prescribed a muscle-building drug, probably stanozolol, just weeks before the Olympic race.

And commission counsel Robert Armstrong did not ask Kerr to name any athletes he treated.

Walters, Bloom Sentenced ...

Walters was ordered to forfeit $250,000 to the government.

Walters and Bloom were convicted April 13 of racketeering, conspiracy and mail fraud after a five-week trial. Each had faced up to 55 years in prison.

After the sentencing, Walters and Bloom were released on bond for 30 days, pending appeals. Lawyers for both agents said they would appeal the convictions and sentences.

The agents were accused of: — Paying athletes thousands of dollars to sign secret representation contracts before their college eligibility had expired, a violation of NCAA rules.

— Threatening some athletes with harm, including broken legs, to keep them from breaking the agreements.

— Cheating major universities out of scholarship money through the NCAA violation, which made the athletes ineligible to play.

They were convicted of all counts except two of four mail-fraud charges, which concerned the defrauding of the universities.

Marovich said he was particularly concerned about the link between Walters and Michael Franzese, a jailed member of a New York organized-crime family who testified that he helped finance the sports-representation business started by Walters and Bloom.

Walters raised his voice and pounded the lectern Monday when speaking of Franzese, whom he called a "bum" and a "liar."

Walters represented entertainers for more than 30 years, and sought to represent athletes with Bloom only during the 1980s.

Webb said neither Walters nor Bloom had "the slightest idea what they were doing" when they got into the sports business. But both quickly learned it was usual to make advance, under-the-table agreements with college athletes, despite NCAA rules, Webb said.

Forty-three players who signed with Walters and Bloom avoided prosecution by agreeing to cooperate with the government, to perform community service and to reimburse their schools for part of their scholarships.

Switzer Steps Down ...

Switzer has had the top winning percentage among major college football coaches since 1982 and he has the fourth-highest winning percentage of all time. His teams won three national championships and 12 Big Eight Conference championships in 16 seasons.

Switzer said at one point he would be associated with football in the future and did not rule out the possibility of coaching in the professional ranks.

For the time being, Switzer said he would accept a special assignment with the Oklahoma athletic department. Neither athletic director Donnie Duncan nor Switzer would say what the new duties would be.

"I want this resignation to stand for something and I want it to serve as a public commitment on my part to join with other coaches around the country who are calling for changes in rules to permit universities to provide players with reasonable assistance, perhaps based on financial need as proposed by Dick Schultz, executive director of the NCAA," Switzer said.

"The time has come to change a system where coaches must choose between abiding by certain rules or acting like caring individuals. We made the rules and we can change them."

He said he was "not making excuses but simply giving an explanation when I say it was difficult to turn my back on these young men when they needed help. We have created a system that does not permit me or the program to buy a pair of shoes or a decent coat for a player whose family can't afford these basic necessities.

"How can any coach stick to these rules when a young man's father dies many miles away and the son has no money for a plane ticket home to the funeral?"

Nebraska coach Tom Osborne, Switzer's biggest rival in the Big Eight conference, said he was sorry to hear of Switzer's resignation.

"We have been friends and competitors for a long time and we have shared some great moments in college football," he said.

Calling Switzer "a tremendous coach," Nebraska athletic director Bob Devaney said: "I'm going to feel bad if I find out that this wasn't Barry's idea ... that he was pressured to resign. I just hope he's doing this because he has better things to do."

The Oklahoma football program had been embroiled in controversy even before the action by the NCAA.

In August, a book by former Sooner linebacker Brian Bosworth said players used cocaine and fired guns at the football players' dormitory. Bosworth, who left the team after the 1986 season, also referred to NCAA violations and said the Oklahoma football program bordered on anarchy.

Switzer had called Bosworth's claims sensationalism.

The state's largest newspapers called for Switzer's resignation after five of his players were charged with felonies earlier this year.

Switzer said he was resigning with great sadness. He said no one asked him to resign and that statement was supported by interim Oklahoma president David Swank and state legislators.

"I leave with pride in our football program ... but my greatest pride is in the young men who have come through this program who have worked so hard," Switzer said.

He noted some had made big names while others hadn't.

"But all of them made a valuable contribution to our program and I believe that our program made a valuable contribution to their lives."

Oklahoma Gov. Henry Bellmon issued a statement praising Switzer for posting "an unparalleled record of success in college football history."

"More importantly," Bellmon said, "Coach Switzer and his associates have served as an inspiration to young people demonstrating that hard work and dedication can, and often will, result in excellence."

"In addition, Coach Switzer's impressive victories have been a source of great pride for the university and the state of Oklahoma. I wish him well in his future endeavors."

The controversy started in 1988 by Bosworth's book and fueled by the NCAA sanctions in December escalated early this year.

Sooner Reaction ...

you do today," he said. "Obviously it was more fun than it is today because of all the problems. You've got the restrictions at the NCAA, you've got the drug-alcohol abuse problems that didn't exist at the magnitude that they do today."

"I would be more attuned today to entertain any (NFL) opportunity than I have been in the past."

But he also said that "I still enjoy what I'm doing." Something changed his mind.

"I spoke with Barry last week and there was no indication (that he would resign)," said Tennessee coach Johnny Majors, who was on the staff with Switzer at Arkansas in the mid-1960s. "I'm surprised and shocked."

"It's the end of an era to me," said Larry Lacey, head coach and athletic director at Arkansas State, a long-time pal of Switzer's who was his defensive coordinator from 1973-77 before they had a personal falling-out that lasted several years. "I feel sadness because the guy is a hell of a coach, as good as I've ever been around."

Switzer not only resigned his position at Oklahoma but also bade farewell to college football, saying he would never again coach at the college level. In doing so, he criticized NCAA rules which he said do not consider the financial needs of young athletes, adding that he "never paid one penny" for a player to come to Oklahoma.

"I am not making excuses, I am not blaming the NCAA for any of the problems in our program for my resignation, but simply giving an explanation when I say it was difficult to turn my back on these young men when they needed help," he said.

"We have created a system that does not permit me or the program to buy a pair of shoes or a decent coat for a player whose family can't afford these basic necessities."

Other coaches sympathized with Switzer.

"From what I hear he said, concerning the fact that he was pretty tired, I think anybody can understand that," said Baylor's Grant Teaf, whose team opens with Oklahoma this fall. "Even when things are going good, we in the coaching business have a lot of hills to climb every day."

Notre Dame's Lou Holtz said that "no matter how much money you give some individuals, it won't be enough. No individual is going to have much money in their pocket when they're going to college."

Rocky Mount Rolls Past Snow Hill

SNOW HILL — Rocky Mount was able to score its first seven runs off one hit and went on to take a 12-2 win over Snow Hill in American Legion Baseball action Monday.

Snow Hill's pitchers had trouble finding the strike zone early on and Dan Woods got the first hit of the game in the second inning when he hit a grand slam.

From there, Snow Hill added three runs in the fifth and two more in the ninth to close out the scoring.

Snow Hill falls to 7-3 and returns to action tonight against Wayne County at home.

Braves Sign Prep Star To Huge Contract

ATLANTA (AP) — High school catcher Tyler Houston, the second player picked in this year's draft, has signed a contract with the Atlanta Braves that his agent said makes him the highest-paid draftee in modern National League history.

The deal surpasses the previous record for contracts in the "modern draft era," Houston's agent, Jeff Moorad of San Francisco, said Monday. That record was set last year when a $230,000 bonus was paid to pitcher Andy Benes by the San Diego organization.

Houston will receive a $240,000 package that includes a $232,500 signing bonus and $7,500 to be paid as he moves up the ranks and into the major leagues. The previous Atlanta record was a $211,000 bonus to left-handed pitcher Steve Avery, the third pick in last year's draft.

Tyler Houston

"You always wonder if you could have gotten this much more," said Houston's father, Sam, holding his fingers inches apart. "It's the first time I've ever been in this position. You just want to do what's right for him."

Houston is joining the franchise his father once played for. Sam Houston got as far as Class AA before pulled hamstrings ended his career.

The younger Houston "very much wanted to play for Atlanta, especially with his own father's playing history with the team," Moorad said. He added that the elder Houston "played a strong supportive role in the negotiations."

Moorad said Houston, who will report Wednesday to Idaho Falls of the Pioneer League, plans to donate some of his bonus to his high school and to Arizona State University, which had awarded him a scholarship that he now will not use. Houston also will give a donation to the Cystic Fibrosis Society of Atlanta, Moorad said.

Houston batted .485 with 13 home runs and 66 RBIs in his senior year at Valley High School in Las Vegas. He is primarily a catcher, but has played at third base and shortstop.

Moorad said General Manager Bobby Cox told him the Braves "will bring Tyler along as quickly as they can and expect him to make an impact at the major league level within the next several years."

The Braves have scouted him since his sophomore year.

Earnhardt Extends NASCAR Points Edge

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Dale Earnhardt's third-place finish in Sunday's Miller High Life 500 was enough to extend his lead in the NASCAR Winston Cup standings released Monday.

Earnhardt has 1945 points through the first 13 races of the 29-event season. Rusty Wallace moved into second place with 1755 points. Darrell Waltrip fell to third with 1738 points after engine failure left him in 32nd place Sunday.

Mark Martin is fourth with 1731 points, followed by Geoff Bodine, 1695; Sterling Marlin, 1652; Ken Schrader, 1625; Bill Elliott, 1623; Davey Allison, 1611; and Ricky Rudd, 1589.

"Our goals at this point are to win more races and keep pushing that points lead," Earnhardt said. "You win races and nobody can make up any points on you."

The next race for the Winston Cup teams is Sunday's Miller High Life 400 at the Michigan International Speedway oval. The circuit then moves to Daytona International Speedway for the July 1 Pepsi 400.

"We've got to look to win both of those races and, if we don't do that, then finish just as high as we possibly can," Earnhardt said. "We have the opportunity to take a good-sized lead and make it bigger."

Chisox' Kittle Is Placed On The DL

CHICAGO (AP) — Chicago White Sox outfielder Ron Kittle, troubled by mysterious lower back problems, was placed on the 15-day disabled list Monday, retroactive to June 14.

Kittle, 31, will miss Chicago's upcoming road trip to New York and Milwaukee so he can be examined by Dr. Michael Schafer, an orthopedic specialist.

"It's a nerve irritation in my lower back, but we don't know what's causing it," said Kittle, who has missed time over the past four seasons with a broken toe, as well as neck and shoulder ailments.

"I first felt it about four weeks ago. At first I would take off a day, or miss half a game, but then all of a sudden I couldn't do anything at all.

"I was hoping it would go away, but it just got worse. When I would swing the bat the pain would shoot down my leg and up into my neck."

Kittle, the American League Player of the Month for May, leads the White Sox with 11 home runs and 37 RBIs.

"It makes it more disappointing that I was playing good ball before this happened," Kittle said. "The toughest part is when I see the lineup and I'm not on it."

Gaetti, Lind Named Players Of The Week

NEW YORK (AP) — Minnesota Twins third baseman Gary Gaetti, who homered four times in his last six games, was named the American League Player of the Week. Gaetti batted .360 — 9-for-25 — with eight runs scored and 10 RBIs and compiled an .840 slugging percentage.

NEW YORK (AP) — Jose Lind of the Pittsburgh Pirates, who has 12 hits in his last 24 at-bats, was named the National League Player of the Week. Lind, a second baseman, drove in eight runs, scored five and had five multi-hit games.

Jackson Leads AL All-Star Voting

NEW YORK (AP) — Kansas City Royals outfielder Bo Jackson has moved past Minnesota's Kirby Puckett to lead all American League players in fan balloting for the 60th All-Star Game, the commissioner's office announced.

Jackson had received 375,612 votes to 316,954 for Puckett. Oakland's Jose Canseco, with 231,356 votes, was third in outfield voting.

Oakland first baseman Mark McGwire and catcher Terry Steinbach also lead at their respective positions, making the Athletics the only team with three position leaders.

Baltimore Breaks Seattle Hex

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The biggest surprise about the Baltimore Orioles this season might be that they've played so poorly against the Seattle Mariners.

The Orioles reversed the trend Monday night as Cal Ripken and Mickey Tettleton hit consecutive home runs at the Kingdome in a 9-5 victory.

Baltimore leads the American League East with a 38-28 record, but is just 2-5 versus the Mariners, who are 32-38. Last year, when the Orioles' 54-107 mark was the worst in baseball, they had a winning record against only one team — Seattle.

"We just got knocked around tonight," Mariners manager Jim Lefebvre said. "They're playing very good baseball right now. They're at the top of their game."

Ripken's three-run homer put Baltimore ahead and Tettleton followed with his league-leading 17th home run as the Orioles scored seven times in the seventh inning. Baltimore finished with 14 hits and won its fourth straight game.

In other games, Detroit defeated Oakland 6-4, Milwaukee beat Minnesota 11-8, Toronto downed California 8-1 and Chicago bopped Boston 8-2.

Tettleton had never hit more than 11 home runs in a season. But this year, the unusual has become the usual in Baltimore.

Bob Milacki, 4-6, won despite giving up five runs on 11 hits in 7 2-3 innings. Mark Thurmond finished for his second save.

The Orioles had scored three or fewer runs in nine of Milacki's last 14 starts.

Tigers 6, Athletics 4

Scott Lusader drove in his first three runs of the season and Detroit beat Dave Stewart to give Oakland its first four-game losing streak since last July.

The Tigers ended a three-game losing skid. Stewart, 11-3, failed to become the first 12-game winner in the majors and lost for the first time in eight starts at home.

Frank Tanana, 7-6, has won seven of his last 10 decisions. Mike Hennehan got his first save.

Blue Jays 8, Angels 1

Junior Felix homered and drove in three runs as Toronto won in California for its fourth straight victory.

Kelly Gruber and George Bell hit consecutive RBI doubles during a three-run burst in the sixth that made it 4-1.

Dave Stieb, 7-3, gave up five hits in six innings. Chuck Finley, 7-6, took the loss.

Brewers 11, Twins 8

Rob Deer hit his 16th homer and drove in four runs as Milwaukee tied its season high with 17 hits at Minnesota.

Greg Brock had a two-run homer for the Brewers. Eight Milwaukee players got two hits each.

Bill Krueger, 3-1, was the winner and Dan Plesac got three outs for his 17th save. Francisco Oliveras, 3-3, gave up five runs in two innings.

White Sox 8, Red Sox 2

Carlton Fisk went 4-for-4 against his former team and Chicago averted a four-game sweep by Boston.

Fisk's first four-hit game since Sept. 6, 1985, raised his lifetime average against the Red Sox to .324.

Shawn Hillegas, 3-6, relieved in the first inning and pitched 5 2-3 shutout innings. Don Pall worked three scoreless innings for his third save.

Bedrosian Trade Pays Off Quickly

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

When Steve Bedrosian looked at the scoreboard and saw the San Francisco Giants clinging to a one-run lead, an old feeling began to manifest itself.

"I started getting pumped from the fifth inning on," Bedrosian said Monday night after picking up his first save for the Giants, a pennant contender who saved him from a season of misery in Philadelphia.

Bedrosian, acquired Sunday from the hapless Phillies to fill a void in the San Francisco bullpen, got the final three outs as the Giants beat Houston 3-2 to extend their lead to two games over the Astros in the National League West.

"I just wanted to get in there and get that first one over. When I came on in the ninth, it really was a big moment, with the fans cheering and the players encouraging me," the 1987 Cy Young Award winner said. "I haven't had that feeling for a long time."

It will be recorded as his seventh save of the season, but given the Phillies' lack of pitching and standing at the bottom of the NL East, it certainly must be considered his first meaningful one.

"After (Rafael) Ramirez opened the ninth with a single, I said 'Uh oh, what's going on here?' But then I thought 'Hey forget it, just regroup and come right back and pitch the way you can.'"

San Francisco manager Roger Craig didn't hesitate in using Bedrosian on his first night in a new uniform.

"I know there was a lot of pressure out there and it makes it tough when the first guy gets a hit," Craig said. "But he kept coming right after guys and he was throwing 94-95 miles per hour."

The performance, combined with that of starter Don Robinson, gave the Giants a victory in the first of 18 meetings with one of their principal competitors.

Mets 5, Expos 3

Howard Johnson continued his hot hitting with two home runs to back Dwight Gooden, who became the third-youngest pitcher in modern major league history to win 100 games.

Johnson homered in the first and second innings off Kevin Gross, 6-6, following walks to Dave Magadan to give the Mets a 4-1 lead. Johnson, who has 18 homers and 42 RBIs, has hit in 18 of his last 22 games with 10 homers and 17 RBIs.

Gooden, 9-2, improved his lifetime mark to 100-37 at age 24 years and seven months. Bob Feller reached 100 victories at 22 in 1941 and Frank "Noodles" Hahn won his 100th game in 1903 at 24 years, two months.

Gooden, the youngest modern pitcher to win 20 games in a season when he went 24-4 at age 20 in 1985, allowed five hits and struck out nine in seven innings. Rick Aguilera pitched two innings of perfect relief for his sixth save.

Juan Samuel, acquired Sunday in a trade from Philadelphia, made his debut as the Mets' centerfielder, going 0-for-3 with a stolen base and a run scored.

Andres Galarraga's 10th homer gave the Expos a short-lived 1-0 lead in the first.

Padres 5, Dodgers 1

San Diego's Eric Show outpitched Orel Hershiser and singled to extend the fifth inning to bring Shawn Abner to bat for a decisive three-run homer. Abner's homer, his first since May 16, 1988, snapped a scoreless tie.

Abner's last two homers have been hit off Cy Young Award winners — Hershiser last season and 1985 recipient Dwight Gooden.

Luis Salazar reached safely with two outs when second baseman Willie Randolph committed only his third error of the season. Show, who pitched a six-hitter for his first complete game, followed with a single and Abner homered to left on an 0-1 pitch.

Jack Clark added his ninth homer, his second two-run shot in three games, to account for the final runs against Hershiser, 8-6, in the sixth.

Show, 8-6, struck out eight and walked four. Mike Davis' third homer, in the sixth, gave the Dodgers their only run.

Stars Draw The Fans To 'Batman' Premiere

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — Thousands of fans, including many who staked out viewing spots 24 hours in advance, screamed wildly for Hollywood stars at the full-moon premiere of "Batman."

Sylvester Stallone, Eddie Murphy, Billy Crystal, Don Johnson, Melanie Griffith and the film's stars Michael Keaton and Kim Basinger showed up as "Batman" unfurled his cape Monday night during an old-fashioned premiere.

The Warner Bros. movie opens nationwide Friday. Walking out of the premiere, "Wheel of Fortune" star Vanna White pronounced the Caped Crusader's debut "terrific ... pure fun."

Actor Burgess Meredith, who played the Penguin in the campy "Batman" television series of the 1960s, also showed up for the two-theater Westwood gala.

About 100 of the 15,000 fans crowded on the sidewalk and in the street wore green hair and white face makeup in honor of their favorite character the Joker, the villain played by Jack Nicholson.

'Ghostbusters' Sequel Hot At Box Office

By Richard De Atley
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

HOLLYWOOD — "Ghostbusters II" zapped through a record by collecting $29.4 million in its first three days as the summer of '89 first going like gangbusters at the nation's box offices.

The Columbia Studios' film's $8.3 million on Sunday was the biggest non-holiday Sunday ever, according to Exhibitor Relations Inc., which tallies box-office receipts.

"We are thrilled with the opening weekend's record breaking results and we anticipate that 'Ghostbusters II' will play very strongly in the coming weeks," said Columbia's new chief, Dawn Steel.

The previous three-day record was set earlier this month by "Indiana Jones and the Last Crusade," which earned $21.2 million in its second week.

It also easily topped Columbia's previous three-day record of $13.6 million for "Ghostbusters" in June 1984.

Since the debut of Bill Murray's and Dan Aykroyd's paranormal investigators, Columbia has been spooked by several cinematic clunkers, most recently "True Believer," "The Adventures of Baron Munchausen" and "Physical Evidence."

The company's only hit in recent years was 1987's "La Bamba."

The true test for "Ghostbusters II" comes Friday, when it will compete with the much-hyped "Batman."

Steven Spielberg's "Indiana Jones and the Last Crusade" kept up its charge, selling $11.7 million in tickets last weekend to claim second place on the box-office charts. In just four weeks, it has grossed more than $122 million.

"Dead Poets Society," the bittersweet prep school drama, earned $9.1 million to pass "Star Trek V: The Final Frontier" and move into third place.

"Star Trek V," the first film directed by star William Shatner, slipped badly from first to fourth place on sales of $7.1 million.

In fifth was "See No Evil, Hear No Evil" with Richard Pryor and Gene Wilder, with $2.5 million. The baseball movie "Field of Dreams," starring Kevin Costner, finished in sixth with $2.4 million. In seventh was the wrestling film "No Holds Barred," with $1.7 million.

Rounding out the top 10 were "Road House," with $1.5 million, "Pet Sematary" with $1.2 million and "K-9" with $1 million.

Since Memorial Day weekend, weekend box office revenues have grossed $247.3 million, compared with $220 million for the period last year, an increase of 11 percent, said John Krier of Exhibitor Relations Inc., which tallies the box-office receipts.

"The gross isn't distributed quite the same," he said. "Last year there were more pictures playing and the gross was more evenly distributed. This year the grosses are concentrated in the top two or three movies."

Here are the top movies for the weekend as tallied by Exhibitor Relations, with distributor, weekend gross, number of screens, average per screen, total gross and number of weeks in release.

1. "Ghostbusters II," Columbia, $29.4 million, 2,327 screens, $12,229 per screen, $29.4 million, one week.

2. "Indiana Jones and the Last Crusade," Paramount, $11.7 million, 2,327 screens, $5,039 per screen, $122.3 million, four weeks.

3. "Dead Poets Society," Disney, $9.1 million, 1,091 screens, $8,343 per screen, $22.4 million, three weeks.

4. "Star Trek V: The Final Frontier," Paramount, $7.1 million, 2,202 screens, $3,247 per screen, $31.2 million, two weeks.

5. "See No Evil, Hear No Evil," Tri-Star, $2.5 million, 1,686 screens, $1,512 per screen, $38 million, six weeks.

6. "Field of Dreams," Universal, $2.4 million, 1,077 screens, $2,265 per screen, $44.2 million, nine weeks.

7. "No Holds Barred," New Line, $1.6 million, 1,327 screens, $1,339 per screen, $12 million, three weeks.

8. "Road House," MGM-UA, $1.5 million, 1,435 screens, $1,069 per screen, $23.8 million, five weeks. 9. "Pet Sematary," Paramount, $1.2 million, 923 screens, $1,365 per screen, $52.7 million, nine weeks.

10. "K-9," Universal, $1 million, 970 screens, $1,055 per screen, $36.7 million, eight weeks.

Cliburn Returns After 11-Year Hiatus

By Don Beman
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PHILADELPHIA — After an 11-year hiatus, pianist Van Cliburn resumed his public performances Monday night to thunderous applause with a concert dedicated to two late friends.

The audience called the pianist back to the stage 13 times after he completed his program of Liszt's Piano Concerto No. 1 and Tchaikovsky's Piano Concerto No. 1. Cliburn ended the evening with four encores.

"This is a very sentimental evening for me," Cliburn told the audience before the performance. "This is an evening of remembrance of two wonderful friends."

The pianist dedicated the concert at the open-air Mann Music Center to Eugene Ormandy and Fredric R. Mann.

Ormandy, who died in 1985, was music director of the Philadelphia Orchestra for 44 years. Mann, a former U.S. ambassador, headed the summer concert festival at the music center from 1949 until his death in 1987.

Cliburn played with Ormandy and the Philadelphia musicians within weeks of gaining world fame for winning the first Tchaikovsky International Competition in 1958. The relationship yielded numerous concerts and recordings.

He also played in Philadelphia in 1978, the year he quit performed publicly, weary from a schedule that included 100 concerts a year.

He said he chose the Liszt to honor Ormandy's Hungarian background. The program concluded with Tchaikovsky's Piano Concerto No. 1.

Cliburn spent the morning practicing with the orchestra and the afternoon shopping in Philadelphia.

"It's so good to be back with the Philadelphia Orchestra. It seems like I never left," Cliburn said after the practice session.

Among his favorite venues, Cliburn always listed Mann's theater in Fairmont Park, where he would often play to the audience long after the orchestra musicians had left for the night.

Proceeds from Monday night's concert will help finance the orchestra's free summer series, which Ormandy and Mann began.

Opening lead: Jack of ♣

There's a world of difference between the play of the hand at duplicate and rubber bridge. Here's another example of how divergent the forms of competition can be.

Four spades is an eminently reasonable contract. North is close to a raise to four spades, but since he can't be sure whether his queen of clubs is working, the more conservative three spades gets our vote. South has ample to go on to game.

There is no problem at duplicate. Win the club lead and cash the high trumps. If the suit splits evenly, you discard your hearts on the diamonds and make 12 tricks. As the cards lie, you go down a trick for an average board.

At rubber bridge you have an almost sure-trick line. Cover the jack of clubs with the queen and allow East's king to hold the trick—you want to keep West off play to guard against a lead through the king of hearts.

Suppose East returns a club. Take the ace and lead the ten of trumps. If West follows low, let it ride! You can afford to lose a trick in trumps, one heart and a club. If West produces an honor, win in dummy, return to hand with the ace of diamonds and lead another trump, inserting the eight if West plays a low spade.

Your safety play rewards you handsomely. As the cards lie, you are the one who ends up making two overtricks. In rubber bridge, you should pull out all the stops to secure your contract. At duplicate, you cannot afford to give up possible overtricks in a contract where you are a heavy favorite anyway.

Walsh Says North Deserves Prison

By James Rowley
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Oliver L. North should go to prison because he broke the law during the Iran-Contra scandal, lied about it during his trial and still doesn't show "one iota of remorse," prosecutors say.

In a sentencing memo likening the fired White House aide to the corrupt politicians of Tammany Hall, prosecutors say North "viewed and continues to view himself as being above the law and beyond reproach."

The former National Security Council aide faces a possible 10-year term when sentenced Friday by U.S. District Judge Gerhard Gesell for destroying evidence, aiding and abetting the obstruction of Congress and accepting an illegal gratuity.

Letting North go without a prison term "would be a statement that 15 years after Watergate, government officials can participate in a brazen cover-up, lie to Congress and collect a substantial gratuity and still receive only a slap on the wrist," prosecutors told Gesell in their memo Monday.

"North's view that anything goes in a political controversy would be sustained" by letting him off without a prison sentence, said the memo signed by independent counsel Lawrence E. Walsh. "Instead, since his acts are a serious breach of the public trust, they warrant serious punishment."

Walsh did not make a specific recommendation of how much time North should serve in prison. North's lawyers are likely to file a response to the prosecutor's harsh statement.

Walsh charged that North concocted a false story to help win acquittal on a charge that he pocketed $4,300 in traveler's checks entrusted to him by Adolfo Calero, a Nicaraguan Contra leader.

North's testimony that he purchased a car with $15,000 in cash he accumulated in a box nailed to his closet floor "echoed the flimsy lies offered by corrupt municipal officials in the days of Tammany Hall," Walsh said, in a reference to the New York political machine which ran the city from the mid-19th century into the 1930s and became synonymous with graft and fraud.

Walsh called the steel box story "preposterous" and said "North's perjury represents another indication of his continuing callous attitude toward the judicial process and our democratic institutions."

Throughout the 12-page memo, Walsh repeated the theme that "North has not indicated one iota of remorse for having committed crimes which, because of his position of public trust, jeopardized the constitutional processes of government."

"He apparently sees nothing wrong with alteration and destruction of official national security records," Walsh said.

"His participation in the preparation of a false and misleading chronology (of U.S.-Iran arms sales) has not led to any acknowledgement of wrongdoing," the prosecutor added.

"Certainly he sees nothing wrong with lying to Congress, when in the view of himself and his superiors lying is necessary," Walsh said. "North seems to believe that such activities are business as usual in government or necessary tactics in a 'political firestorm.'"

North's "contempt for Congress and the public is accompanied by venality in financial matters," Walsh said of the retired Marine lieutenant colonel's acceptance of a $13,800 security system from arms dealer Richard V. Secord, an Iran-Contra co-defendant awaiting trial.

Walsh said a prison term is necessary to reduce North's political following that was cultivated on the lecture circuit and "reinforces his lack of remorse."

Walsh rejected North's contention that he is a scapegoat.

"Few criminal defendants have attempted to blame so many others for so many lawless acts," the independent prosecutor said. "North must accept his fair share of responsibility."

Judge Rules Mom Must Stay In Jail

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — A mother jailed since August 1987 in a child custody dispute may not be freed until she produces her daughter for visits with her ex-husband or turns the child over to public authorities, a judge says.

District of Columbia Superior Court Judge Herbert Dixon refused on Monday to release Dr. Elizabeth Morgan, a Washington plastic surgeon who was jailed 22 months ago on civil contempt of court charges.

Morgan has refused to allow court-ordered visits between her daughter Hilary and Eric Foretich, Morgan's ex-husband and the girl's father, contending that Foretich sexually abused the girl. Foretich has repeatedly denied those charges, and Hilary's whereabouts have been unknown.

An appeals court had directed Dixon to review his December 1988 decision to keep Morgan in jail.

Stephen Sachs, Morgan's attorney, has argued that jailing her failed to coerce her into producing her daughter, and that the purpose has turned from coercion to punishment.

But Dixon's ruling said, "The order which causes (Morgan's) incarceration was and continues to be for coercive purposes only, and this has not changed due solely to the passage of time."

"No credible evidence has been received concerning the child's present condition or circumstances, notwithstanding Morgan's declaration that the child is healthy, happy and healing," the judge's ruling said.

Dixon ruled that Morgan should remain in jail because she has not taken the opportunity to go free by turning the child over to the District of Columbia's child custody division.

Sachs called Dixon's ruling "flat-out wrong," adding that Morgan "feels the social services arrangement a booby trap by which the child can be turned over to the father."

Foretich said he hopes the ruling will force Morgan to produce their daughter.

"What he's done here is that he has stated that there is an alternate method by which Elizabeth Morgan can comply," Foretich said. "This option was always available to her, and he has made that possibility very clear."

Tape From Homicide Played For Jury

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PHOENIX — Jurors in the trial of a man charged with stabbing his wife to death heard a tape recording of the woman's plea for help, followed by her husband telling her she was "bleeding just like a stuck hog."

Alfred Lavers, 48, is charged with murder in the May 13, 1988, stabbing deaths of his wife, Mary, and 11-year-old stepdaughter, Jennifer Burns.

The tape played Monday was found by police in a recorder under pillows in the stepdaughter's room. It contained a 90-minute recording of the domestic dispute that culminated in Mrs. Lavers' terrifying screams.

"I'm dying," Mrs. Lavers was heard saying, just after she allegedly was stabbed by her husband.

"I know you are," he said.

"Please help me," she said.

"You're bleeding just like a stuck hog. I love you so much," he said.

The victims' relatives sat fighting back emotion in the front row of the spectators' section as the tape was played. An elderly woman later identified as one of Mrs. Lavers' relatives broke down in tears and was led out.

There was no discernible reaction by jurors, who followed the tape with a transcript.

Lavers, 48, voluntarily removed himself from the Maricopa County Superior courtroom while the tape was played.
