Council To Let People Rule On Mayor's Vote

By J. Ward Best
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Along with choosing council representatives and a mayor in November, Greenville voters will also have the option of adding another voting member to the City Council.

The decision will not add to the number of people on the board, but could allow the mayor to vote on all issues before the council.

The council decided Tuesday in a call meeting to take the issue to a public hearing July 20, and then allow voters to decide officially during the election.

Mayor Ed Carter, who is up for re-election in November, strongly supports giving the mayor a voice in all issues, and called the mayor's vote "critical."

"I think it's imperative that he has all the necessary tools to carry out the mandate of the people," Carter said.

Not all of the council agrees. And a potential candidate for Carter's position believes the issue is one of Carter's own making.

"I just don't see the big hassle over changing the way we have it now," said Council member Nancy Jenkins, who has said she has received strong encouragement to run for Carter's position.

The mayor now votes only in the case of a tie among the six council members.

Although opposing the mayor's vote, Ms. Jenkins said she favored taking the issue before the public during the July 20 council meeting, and then allowing voters to decide the issue.

In his support of the proposal Carter said the mayor' vote would provide a representative voice for all of the city, not just a single district. The vote would also allow the council to decide issues when a quorum of four council members do not attend the meetings.

The lack of a quorum delayed decisions on eight issues in the past year, Carter said. Allowing the mayor a vote would better ensure having enough votes to decide an issue during council meetings.

And Carter said the vote would allow the citizens to identify the mayor's political leaning.

"I think the people have a right to know where the mayor's coming from — where he stands," Carter said.

Ms. Jenkins said she believed the vote was in Carter's interest, and said she did not think the vote would give the mayor any more power on the council.

"I think there are far more important issues," Ms. Jenkins said.

Pitt Tobacco Crop Springing Back After Rain Delays During Planting

By John Bare
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Despite heavy rains earlier this year that pushed back the tobacco planting season several weeks, the 1989 crop is developing well, the director of Pitt County's Agricultural Extension Service says.

"Considering the obstacles we've had to overcome, I think the tobacco crop looks pretty good," said Mitch Smith. "Tobacco thrives in this kind of weather. Our soil moisture situation could probably be described as adequate, and tobacco responds well to sun, water and humidity."

Late winter ice storms coupled with heavy rains throughout the spring forced farmers to delay transferring plants from seedling beds to the field. Standing water trapped under the plastic-covered beds threatened to cut off oxygen to the plants. Rains created muddy fields too unstable to support heavy farm machinery.

Such problems have put tobacco growers about three weeks behind schedule, Smith said. But now, one week into summer, it is still too early to tell exactly how the delay will affect the harvesting and marketing seasons.

Currently, area growers are fighting the disease Granville wilt and working to top the plants, he said.

Granville wilt is the No. 1 disease that affects plants in Pitt County, he said, and once it infects the plants there is not much farmers can do. Growers work to find plants resistant to the disease.

The second problem, controlling the flowering portion of young plants, can be accomplished by breaking off the top of the plant. This prevents the flower from drawing nutrients away from the leaf. Topping helps ensure high-grade quality and body in the leaf, he said, and it stimulates root growth.

Topping also allows offshoots of the plant, known as suckers, to grow in the place of the flower, he said, which may increase the plant's leaf output.

"We need to do all we can to try (and control suckers) considering the lateness of our season," he said.

For growers interested in learning more about curing tobacco, Smith said the extension service is sponsoring a workshop Thursday at 7:30 p.m. at the extension office. S.N. Hawks, a retired tobacco specialist with North Carolina State Uniersity, will teach the session.

City Board Backs House Road Plan

By J. Ward Best
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

A proposed highway package which could bolster eastern North Carolina's development posture may stall with some critical changes proposed by the North Carolina Senate.

Tuesday the Greenville City Council passed a resolution opposing the Senate version of the highway bill which would extend construction time on the project by three years and divert part of the $8.6 billion cost of the package for teacher and state employee pay raises.

"I certainly hope there is no diversion," said Mayor Ed Carter, "and I hope there is no delay in the program to 15 years."

Carter said the council, the League of Municipalities and the Pitt County Commissioners have all expressed support for the House version of the bill. The bill, which cleared the House of Representatives June 1, proposes a 13-year construction project and leaves the total $8.6 billion project cost intact.

The House bill waits in the Senate finance committee while the differences between the two bills are hashed out. The Senate bill has moved to the House.

Under the Senate version of the bill $335 million from a 3 percent auto sales tax would be diverted to the general fund in the first two years of the project.

Randy Doub, the regional representative for the North Carolina Department of Transportation, agreed with Carter's stance on the Senate proposal.

"The consensus is: The people who use the highways pay for it," Doub said. He called the proposal to take part of the funds for projects other than highway construction "an unfair bargain."

Carter also thinks support for the highway plan splits along regional boundries. The central and western part of the state do not have as much to gain from the package and are not as enthusiastic about its passage, Carter said.

Carter said the state should look for alternative ways to fund teacher raises and other projects. He cited diversion of some Powell Bill funds which come from gas taxes across the state and the proposal by Gov. Jim Martin which would raise the state sales tax by one cent.

Carter said the eastern North Carolina governments would push for public support of the House bill to pressure it through the state Senate.

Economic Gauge Dips 1.2 Percent

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The government's chief economic forecasting gauge plunged 1.2 percent in May, the biggest decline since the stock market crash in late 1987, the Commerce Department reported today.

The decline in the Index of Leading Economic Indicators was the third in the last four months, as the gauge designed to foretell economic activity six to nine months into the future continued to flash strong signals of a significant decline in economic activity.

The 1.2 percent decline was significantly steeper than analysts had been expecting. However, economists generally believe the economy can escape a recession this year, although they are looking for a major slowing in economic growth accompanied by rising unemployment.

The 1.2 percent drop in May followed a 0.6 percent gain posted in

City Charges Pitt Deputy In Unreported Car Wreck

By John Bare
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Greenville police have charged Pitt County Deputy Frederick Tyrone Alston with failing to report an automobile accident he was involved in on June 18 near Carolina East Mall.

Greenville Police Capt. Nelson Staton said Alston was charged Monday with the misdemeanor offense after an officer completed an investigation into the wreck. The offense carries a maximum penalty of 60 days in jail or a $100 fine, or both. He is to appear in District Court on July 19.

According to records from the state Division of Motor Vehicles, Alston had been involved in eight previous accidents since 1984. The records do not indicate who was at fault, but DMV Spokesman Vernon Morton said the records show Alson has hit a utility pole and a stop sign and twice has rear-ended cars. Alston has no convictions of traffic violations, Morton said.

Alston, who has previously worked with police departments in Bethel and Greenville, has worked as a deputy about four years.

Chief Deputy Brooks Oakley, who has been conducting an internal investigation into the incident, said the inquiry has revealed that after the rear-end collision June 18, Alston initially told a sheriff's dispatcher that he did not have an accident.

Alston has been taken off driving duty pending action by Sheriff Ralph Tyson, and Tyson said there are no plans to reinstate the deputy to car duty. He is working in the jail. Tyson said there will be no decision on whether to dismiss Alston until after the case is handled in court.

"We're going to wait until the court action is over with until we make that decision on ... his employment," Tyson said.

Alston has had at least three other wrecks involving sheriff's cars, Oakley said.

Vickie McLawhorn of Winterville said last week that Alston was driving his patrol car when it struck her vehicle in the rear near an intersection of a Carolina East Mall entrance and Memorial Drive.

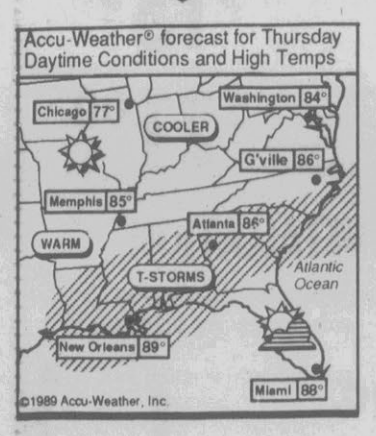

She said she twice asked Alston to call police to the scene, but he did not respond. He took down her name and address and told her that he would come by her home that afternoon with repair information, she said. When she arrived home, she said her husband called police, and she returned to the accident scene and filled out a report for an officer.

Staton said the accident report indicated Alston was at fault and committed an unsafe movement. No charges were filed at the time because Alston was not at the scene when the officer was there, Staton said. Officer Phil Worthington conducted the subsequent investigation, he said.

KGB Chief Says American Spy Committed Suicide

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOSCOW — A U.S. Navy intelligence analyst who spied for the Soviet Union and defected was a delicately tempered man who broke under the pressure of his work and committed suicide, the head of the KGB said today.

Glenn Michael Souther, 32, rose to become a major in the Soviet KGB, yet "his nervous system could not stand the pressure. This was apparent even in his homeland," where life as a spy was far from simple, Gen. Vladimir Kryuchkov told reporters outside the meeting hall of the Soviet legislature.

Kryuchkov, in a rare admission of Soviet spying, said Souther took his life last week and left a note thanking the Soviet government for what it did for him personally.

"The motive was not political," Kryuchkov said. "He long ago started to show a nervous state of mind. He was a gifted, emotional, caring, sensitive person. He was easily hurt."

The spy chief would not say how Souther committed suicide.

He said the U.S.-born Souther began working for the KGB "several years before he came to the Soviet Union."

When Souther defected in May 1986 the FBI was investigating him on charges of spying. He appeared on Soviet television in July 1988, when the Soviets announced the defection, and said the FBI was harassing him.

A Soviet obituary, which appeared Tuesday in the military newspaper Red Star, identified Souther first by the Russian name of Mikhail Orlov, which he took when he arrived in the Soviet Union, Kryuchkov said.

The name had led to speculation that he was a Russian mole rather than an American defector.

Kryuchkov said Souther was born in the United States and that his parents, brother and sister had traveled to Moscow for the funeral. He said Souther was buried Monday in the military section of Kuntsevo Cemetary, the resting place of the late British traitor Kim Philby.

The FBI said Souther was born in Hammond, Ind., and went to high school in Cumberland, Maine. He served in the Navy in the 1970s, and then went to work as a civilian intelligence specialist in the Navy's 2nd Fleet headquarters in Norfolk, Va.

"I am very sorry he died at the age of 32," Kryuchkov said. "It was also a personal loss. I met him several times."

Souther left an American wife in the United States when he defected. He married again in the Soviet Union; it was not known if he divorced his first wife. He left a Russian wife and an 18-month-old daughter.

PCC Combines Two Divisions

Two administrative changes — one combining the student services and academic services divisions — were approved by Pitt Community College's board of trustees Tuesday.

Dr. Charles Russell, PCC's president, said that following the Oct. 31 retirement of Dr. Ed Bright, dean of instruction, the student and academic services divisions will be merged, with Dr. Edgar Boyd appointed to head the new Student Services-Academic Division.

The board also named Garrie Moore the new dean of students at PCC.

"As our college continues to grow to meet the demands of business and industry," Russell said, "we must change our administrative leadership style to meet the challenges of the future. I believe that these changes will enhance our services and improve our planning and decision making process.

"The appointments of these administrators are the first steps in our reorganizational plan which will be implemented about Nov. 1," Russell said.

In addition to directing the new administrative division, Boyd will assist Russell with daily management operations. Boyd has served as dean of students at PCC since 1978. Prior to that time, he had served as the director of occupational extension from 1975 to 1978, director of general adult education from 1972 to 1975, and as an instructor and department head in training agricultural chemical technicians from 1967 to 1972.

Boyd received his B.S., masters of education and doctor of education degrees from N.C. State University.

In addition to his roles at PCC, Boyd has 27 years' service as a commissioned officer in the U.S. Army. Presently a colonel, Boyd is deputy chief of staff for resource management with the 120th U.S. Army Reserve Command.

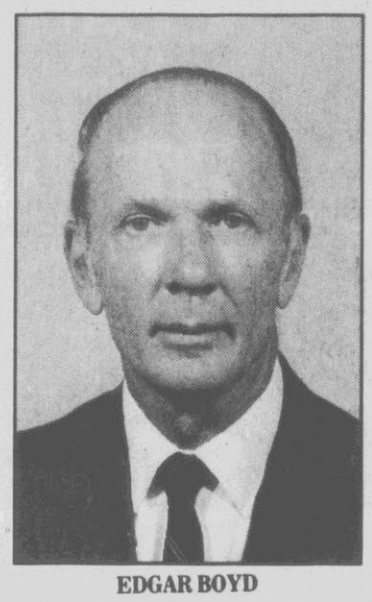

As dean of students, Moore will manage and provide leadership for all student services functions including admissions, counseling, career planning and placement, recruitment, financial aid, veterans affairs, marketing, Student Government Association, community outreach and athletics.

He has been chairman of the radiologic technology department at PCC since 1975. For a year prior to that time Moore served as a radiology instructor at Pitt County Memorial Hospital.

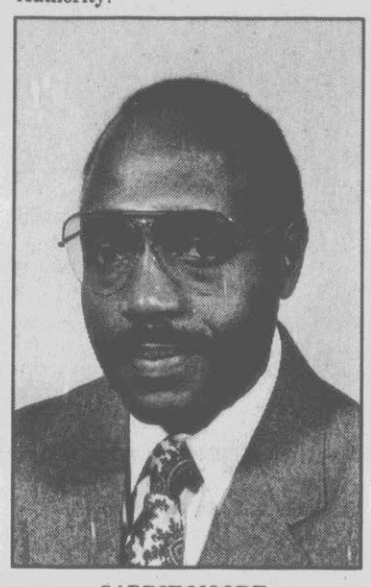

He received his B.S. degree from East Carolina University, an A.A.S.degree in radiologic technology from Quinnipiac College in Hamden, Conn., and a diploma from the school of radiologic technology at Yale University Medical Center.

From 1969 to 1970 Moore was a general-operating room technologist at Yale University Medical Center, then was an instructor and director of the U.S. Army school of radiologic technology from 1970 to 1972. He also was a supervisor and general purpose technologist at the Yale University Medical Center and a radiology instructor and supervisor at Danbury Hospital in Danbury, Conn.

Currently working on a masters degree at NCSU, Moore has been a member of the board of directors of the Pitt County Boys Club and the Pitt County United Way and has served on the Pitt-Greenville Airport Authority.

Farm Scene

By Al Hight
AGRICULTURAL EXTENSION

Japanese beetles are out and feeding on trees, shrubs, vegetables, and, of course, your favorite roses.

Plants affected will have leaves that have been "skeletonized." The beetles eat the leaf tissue but not the veins. Control involves spraying every few days with carbaryl (Sevin), malathion or methoxychlor (Marlate) and covering prized plants with light netting. Be sure to follow pesticide label directions carefully.

Adult Japanese beetles are shiny, metallic green with coppery brown wing covers about 1/2 inch long. The larval stage is the most common white grub that feeds on grass roots and entices the moles to come in search of a free meal.

First introduced to the United States in 1916, the Japanese beetle now occurs in over 20 states from southern Maine southward to Georgia and westward into parts of Kentucky, Tennessee, Illinois, Michigan and Missouri.

Japanese beetle grubs over winter in cells within 6 inches of the soil surface. In spring, they move up, almost to ground level, where they finish feeding and pupate.

Adults emerge in June and July in eastern North Carolina. Throughout the summer, the beetles attack the fruit and foliage of over 275 plants; preferring plants with light-colored blooms. Soon after emerging, females deposit eggs which hatch about two weeks later. The newly emerged larvae feed until cold weather forces them into hibernation.

Traps available in garden and farm supply stores may catch up to 75 percent of the beetles that approach them. Populations can be reduced by as much as a third in neighborhoods where each homeowner has a trap.

If you are the sole person trapping beetles in your neighborhood, you may increase the number of beetles on your plants with traps. Traps, if used, should be placed at least 30 feet from plants to be protected. Hang traps on a post or stake that is accessible from all sides. Clean out or replace the bag when it is full of beetles.

Treatments for white grubs in the lawn are best applied in mid-August when grubs are small and actively feeding. Milky spore, a bacterial disease of Japanese beetle grubs, is a safe, relatively long-lasting control. Contact insecticides are also available. Treating for grubs will not eliminate problems with adults Japanese beetles.

'Truth In Preference To Fiction'

Shame!

Don't Gnaw At The Constitution

Love the flag Mr. President, but leave our Constitution alone!

President Bush expressed his concern about the Supreme Court decision protecting the burning of the American flag by calling for a Constitutional amendment to prohibit desecration of the flag.

It is political grandstanding. It is obvious from the public discussions following the court ruling that 99 percent — or more — of America's citizens love the flag, would not use it improperly and certainly would not burn it. In light of that the other less than one percent of kooks and misfits hardly matters. Certainly that little group doesn't deserve the attention of something so solemn and serious as an amendment to the Constitution.

That Constitution is one of the great documents of all time. It provided for a democratic government that has worked to protect individual rights and freedoms. It has guided a once small nation to become the greatest in the world and it is still a nation where citizens live as free as anywhere.

The framers of the Constitution made it difficult to amend it. Consequently only the issues of the greatest consequences to a democracy have survived.

It is easy for politicians to call for constitutional amendments whenever they spot a Supreme Court ruling that strikes a vein of unpopularity. It is the height of irresponsibility for a president to take that tack.

If we fall into the trap of amending the Constitution every time there is a court ruling some group doesn't like, it will become a little less difficult each time to insert frivolous amendments.

What a mistake that would be. Wisely the framers wrote a Constitution which was very broad. It is a living document which is open to interpretation as events unfold that were unforeseen on Sept. 17, 1787.

Shame on you, Mr. President, for opening a press conference with yet another call to amend the Constitution to death. If you succeed and prevent a handful of misfits from burning the flag only to see this document chipped away by amendments, America's loss will be huge.

You are our elected leader, Mr. President. Maintain respect for the flag through leadership, not by gnawing away at our great Constitution.

It's Relative

Miserable? Just Wait, It Gets Worse

At first it's barely perceptible. Everything has a little fog around it, like you're peering through a dirty window. The sun's quite dim, yet there are no clouds in the sky. There's a glazed, mirror-like smoothness to the landscape.

Then you step outside and the air is as thick as cotton candy and twice as sticky. Walking to the car, mailbox or store leaves you wet as a duck dog. Breathing is an exercise in survival.

Don't be frightened, this is nothing new. It's just humidity, the payback for short, mild (so we're told) winters. Welcome to summertime, eastern North Carolina style. The livin' ain't easy.

Humidity. Haze. Heat. All the good things about life near sea level. Here in the East near the ocean where sea breezes rush moist air in off the Gulf Stream and swamp fusion continuously emits dampness (no kidding) humidity is a fact of life. It's here all the time but, like the sun, it hits its peak in summer.

For the unseasoned newcomer, humidity Down East can be a tad scary. The out of doors feels like an oven turned on bake. When you step out it sucks your breath. Suddenly, the amicable climate you enjoyed while gardening has mutated into a snarling monster. This was not in the brochure, you're thinking.

The seasoned easterner who's used to the weather, however, knows that all humidity is relative. That is to say the amount of moisture in the air is always equal to the maximum amount that the air could contain (Murphy's first law of summertime). That's scientific talk for how wet you get while working in the yard or walking the dog or, if you're crazy, jogging. A seasoned easterner also knows the relative humidity in these parts is usually exceeded only by the temperature (Murphy's second law of summer).

Oh, and one more thing. The humidity of June is the harbinger of dog days — an interminable period of July and August when it rains every day and highs are guaranteed to push 100. Add an ample supply of steam into an already vaporous landscape.

Move the fan a little closer, please. Cut up the air conditioning. Roll those car windows down. Push up those shirt sleeves and learn to like ice cream. The humidity isn't going away. Summertime, eastern North Carolina style, is here to stay.

Oh, and one more thing. It will get worse.

The Real Big Chill

Ellen Goodman

BOSTON — Now at last, a courtroom drama starring a real Oscar-award-winning actor. Live and in color, brought to you directly from our television studio, uh, courtroom, in Manhattan: It's William Hurt vs. Sandra Jennings!

Roll the credits please.

Sandra Jennings: A former ballet dancer, and mother of six-year-old Alex Hurt. She claims that she was as-good-as-married to the father of their child. Five years post-split, she wants half of the $7 million he has earned since 1982.

William Hurt: Father of Alex, but now husband of Heidi Henderson. He admits he was more than an accidental tourist to the relationship, but says they were never as-good-as-married. He claims the money is all his, except for $65,000 a year in child support.

Now for the plot. As unraveled in court, it reveals all the traditional themes of Western drama: love, sex and money. It also reveals some nontraditional themes: When is a relationship as-good-as-married?

According to the highly emotional testimony, Hurt met Jennings while he was still married to wife number one. In 1982, they took their love show on the road to South Carolina. On location in that state, Jennings worked to produce Alex, while Hurt worked to produce "The Big Chill."

In retrospect, this movie setting must seem particularly ironic to the actor on the witness stand. For one thing, Hurt was playing a burn-out who had lost his reproductive organs in the Vietnam War.

For another, "The Big Chill" was destined to be the quintessential movie about the counterculture trying to grow up. It's the story of a bittersweet reunion of Sixties souls and Sixties attitudes in the Eighties. Furthermore, in the course of the movie, one friend loans her husband to another friend for the purposes of a highly nontraditional breeding.

Back to the courtroom plot. Jennings dates her as-good-as-a-marriage to the ten weeks she spent with Hurt on this location. South Carolina, at least off-screen, is no hotbed of counterculture or of liberal living arrangements, but it recognizes common-law marriage.

So Jennings, who was freely loving Hurt and consciously having a child out of wedlock, now says that their unwedded bliss in South Carolina made them married in the eyes of the law. Hurt, on the other hand, who once allegedly proclaimed "a spiritual marriage in the eyes of God," now has affidavits from "The Big Chill" cast saying that things weren't so cozy in the state.

Before this story line gets far too intricate (I haven't even introduced Jenning's flamboyant lawyer or his valet in the pink turban), a word about what's going on. We have here enough clashing cultures, flashbacks and fast forwards to confuse even the most devoted fan of relationship history.

It appears that Sandra Jennings entered into a relationship and motherhood in nontraditional Eighties style and left it in the same style. Freely. It was a choice she had made. Just like in the movies.

Now she is reaching back into the past to use the most hidebound traditional statutes, those in which the state declares the unwed to be wed. Furthermore, she wants to use traditional law to get what's only available under the most modern divorce laws: a half-share of the marital take. Going from one time zone to another, it's enough to give you relationship whiplash.

In a recent column from San Francisco, I wrote about Domestic Partnerships and the new semi-official categories of relationships. About five million Americans live together without being married. Most states no longer join these couples by the fiat on common-law marriage statutes.

We assume that modern couples who live together chose the state of unmatrimony. Surely Sandra Jennings of Manhattan and Big Chilldom understood the choices. They were written into the script.

It seems to this member of the audience a bit late to call for a rewrite. Remember this closing line. On the day Jennings was packing her bags to leave Hurt, she testified, "He said we were more married than married people. I said my mother had trouble with that."

Well, guess what. Mother knew best.

No Bridging Some Differences

David Broder

LONDON — A few nights before Christmas, the lights blazed bright at the Washington residence of Chinese ambassador Han Xu. After dinner, the guests went into the drawing room for an unexpected treat. Two members of the Embassy staff led the company in singing Christmas carols. The singing was in both languages, and there was much laughter and joshing as the Americans stumbled over the phonetic Chinese in their song sheets and the Chinese tried to get their tongues around the accelerating English lyrics of 'The 12 Days of Christmas.'

It was a memorable scene, made more so by the fact that at the center of the circle, clearly enjoying the fun and fellowship, were Barbara Bush and her husband, the President-elect of the United States.

This was a private occasion, not a state function. It was an invitation the Bushes chose to accept, from the hundreds available to them, because of their feeling for the ambassador and his wife and for China. It was, unmistakably, an evening of friendship, almost a family gathering, which ended with warm affirmations, on both sides, of a desire to share more such protocol-free gatherings during the Bushes' White House years.

That scene has returned often to mind as the President wrestled with his response to the sickening slide of events in Beijing. This is not just a foreign-policy problem for Bush. It is not just a calculus of how to maintain opportunities for trade or a balance of power in Asia.

It does more than test his commitment to human rights against his recognition of the value of the Chinese sites from which we monitor Soviet space and missile launches. It challenges him in a poignantly personal way.

China is THE nation in the world, aside from the United States, which has a strong hold on the affection of the Bushes. It was the one experience they found unreservedly enjoyable and uplifting in the decade of the 1970s, a ten-year span which began with his loss of a Senate race and ended with his defeat for the Republican presidential nomination.

Compared to the experience as chairman of the Republican National Committee during Watergate, which came before the sojourn in China, and rebuilding the Central Intelligence Agency from the Nixon-era scandals, which came afterward, the interlude in Beijing, as head of the U.S. liaison office, was a delightful respite.

Barbara Bush went cycling through the city and the countryside, making friends as she went. George Bush used the tennis court to meet people who would otherwise have been out of reach for an envoy to a government with which the United States did not have formal diplomatic relations.

Although they were called home early when President Ford needed help at the CIA, the Bushes were fondly remembered in Beijing. In the first year of the Carter administration, when few Americans imagined that George Bush might have an important role in the nation's future, the Chinese extended hospitality. The Bushes were invited back, as private citizens, received by Deng Xiaoping and allowed to visit all the sites in the country they had requested — including Tibet. The traveling party included James A. Baker III, now secretary of State, and James Lilley, now ambassador to China, so the Chinese knew what they were doing.

The Bushes went back to China several times during his vice-presidential years and, over the objections of some State Department bureaucrats, dropped in on Beijing in the first month of his presidency after attending Emperor Hirohito's funeral. To those officials who insisted there should be a reason for visiting a communist capital, and careful preparation for the talks, Bush replied, in effect, that he felt it would be rude to be in the neighborhood and not pay a call on old friends.

> 'The Bushes were never blind to the philosophical gulf between communist ideology and the value system that underlies our concept of democracy.'

Friends have they plenty in Beijing, not only among the top officials, but among the younger generation of foreign-office and central-government bureaucrats, who have served as escorts and translators for the Bushes and the many family members and friends they have urged to visit China.

As some of those aging top officials order purges and public executions in an effort to stifle dissent, the Bushes' thoughts must turn to those younger Chinese friends, men and women the ages of their own children, people who must be cruelly trapped between their duties and careers on one side, and their sympathies on the other.

The Bushes were never blind to the philosophical gulf between communist ideology and the value system that underlies our concept of democracy. They knew how tough a nut Deng Xiaoping had to be to survive. They also knew there was a long Chinese tradition, which the Communists continued, of indifference to human life. But until now, all their personal experiences with the Chinese made them believe that friendship, freely given and eagerly reciprocated, could bridge those differences.

It must be hard — agonizingly hard — to recognize that may not be the case.

The Career Ladder: Expensive, Bureaucratic & Flawed

Paul O'Connor

Analysis

RALEIGH — The polls show that merit pay for teachers is very popular with the public. The polls also show that Gov. Jim Martin is very popular with the voters.

But before taxpayers begin to associate their affection for both merit pay and Martin with Martin's merit pay program, they may want to take a second look at what he proposed. The program, as attached to House Bill 1806 by Rep. Johnathan Rhyne, R-Lincoln, carries a huge price tag, may lack a political patron at its time of most crucial need, and could take some of the state's very best teachers out of the classroom.

The plan calls for the hiring and training next year of 838 new employees to work in the evaluation process. Of these, 602 would serve — at $39,281 a year — as the evaluators who grade teacher performance. Another 118 would be evaluator coordinators — at $41,166 a year — and another 118 would be secretaries — at $15,324 a year.

These positions raise two serious questions. First, is the state creating an entire new bureaucracy of administrators? The state already pays principals and assistant principals, and a big part of their work is supposed to be the supervision of teachers. Democrats and some education lobbyists who opposed the plan ask why these new people must be hired, at an annualized cost of nearly $41 million, when principals could do the job.

Second, most of these positions will be filled with teachers, probably some of the best teachers in our state. Rather than keeping good teachers in the classroom, the first effect of the Career Ladder program will be to move 720 of the best teachers out of the classroom.

Rep. Johnathan Rhyne, R-Lincoln, House minority leader and chief advocate of Martin's plan, says, "I can't over-emphasize the importance of the evaluations. If they are flawed, the whole program is flawed." Therefore, Rhyne argues, the state must have a trained corps of evaluators who are not responsible for any other duties and who have experience in the classroom themselves. Rhyne said evaluators will return to teaching after two or three years. But that defies human nature. How many will want to take a pay cut to go back to teaching?

Money is another problem with the Career Ladder as Rhyne and Martin envision it. Their plan would be phased in. In the third year, the program demands about $120 million and the fourth year about $230 million. That third year would be Martin's last full year in office and he'd be gone by the fourth. Long term education funding programs, like the Basic Education Program (BEP), lose steam when their primary political sponsors leave office. Would the same happen here? Would the 1993 General Assembly come to town with different ideas for spending money and thus leave the state with a half- complete Career Ladder program? Rhyne responds that Martin, in his tax increase proposal, has provided for enough growth in revenue to pay that tab. It should also be noted that the Career Ladder is a GOP issue, and while Martin will be gone, his party could be expected to continue to push it.

It is ironic that legislative Republicans, who have attacked the BEP because it commits so much new money each year and because it requires the hiring of so many non-instructional personnel, have now offered a plan that hires 850 evaluators and commits the state to an extra $240 million in spending four years down the road.

Waving The Flag On The Campaign Trail

Tom Raum

WASHINGTON — When the Supreme Court upheld flag burning as a protected form of free speech, George Bush heard fire bells and was back on the campaign trail once more.

As Bush has been fond of saying (quoting baseball philosopher Yogi Berra), it seemed like "deja vu all over again."

Bush used the flag — in particular, Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis' veto of a state pledge-of-allegiance bill — to great political effect in 1988.

Now, he's mounting yet another campaign in defense of the flag — one to amend the Constitution to set aside last week's 5-4 Supreme Court decision and forbid flag-desecration at the federal level.

Amending the Constitution is extremely difficult. In the 200-year history of the document, thousands of amendments have been advanced but only 26 ratified.

However difficult the process, the call for a pro-flag amendment was politically an easy one. It doesn't increase the federal deficit, doesn't affect federal services, doesn't cost the president political support, doesn't alienate most special interests. And it once again puts Democrats on the defensive.

It was a safe campaign tactic for Bush a year ago, and a safe presidential pronouncement for him now.

Many Democrats, still smarting from Bush's 1988 attack on Dukakis on the flag issue and their own failure to respond quickly enough, joined congressional Republicans in denouncing the court's decision last week. But they were treading with extreme wariness on Bush's proposal.

House Speaker Thomas S. Foley, D-Wash., balked when reporters suggested that Democratic failure to endorse Bush's call for a constitutional amendment could give Republicans a partisan issue.

"I'm sure people will play politics with any emotional issue ... playing the most cynical politics ... for the most base and crass political purposes," Foley said.

Such partisanship would be "reprehensible and disgusting," Foley continued, as if he hadn't gotten the point across. "I'm condemning those who are doing it."

Just who might that be? Foley didn't say.

Bush was asked about his own partisan use of the flag issue at a hastily called news conference on Tuesday, held a day after he told the New York Times in an interview he was undecided on how best to respond to last wek's court order and had asked aides to study the issue for him.

Given his "renewed concern" about proper reverence for the flag, Bush was asked, did he think it helped the situation for him, or any other politician, to make the flag "an instrument of partisan politics as it was in your campaign?"

"I don't view that as partisanship," Bush responded. "I think respect for the flag transcends political party and I think what I've said here is American, it isn't Republican or Democrat, it isn't liberal or conservative."

Asked whether he disputed that he used the flag for the purpose of advancing his political campaign last year, Bush replied candidly: "Everything I did last year was for the purpose of — everything I did politically — advancing my election ..."

"But I didn't put it on the basis that Republicans are for the flag and Democrats are not."

Bush's comments sounded similar to his response during the campaign when asked whether he was challenging Dukakis' patriotism. No, not his patriotism, Bush insisted, he was only questioning the Democrats' judgment.

At issue was a state law requiring Massachusetts public school teachers to lead their classes in the pledge of allegiance. Dukakis vetoed it, claiming that his legal advisers had said the measure was unconstitutional.

Had he been governor of Massachusetts, Bush said during the campaign, he would have figured out a way to make the law stick.

He paid a well-publicized visit to a flag factory in New Jersey to drive home his message, and throughout the campaign surrounded himself with rows upon rows of waving flags.

Last Wednesday's Supreme Court decision — in which two conservative members of the court joined the majority — gave Bush an easy chance to do just what he condemned Dukakis for failing to do: find a way to make a flag law stick.

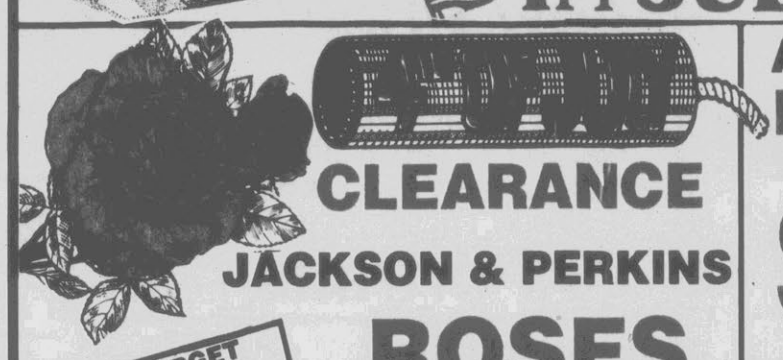

Civil liberties groups blasted the move. "It should come as no surprise that the president who made the pledge of allegiance the centerpiece of his campaign is now willing to make flag-burning his chief domestic initiative. It is triumph of politics over policy," said Arthur J. Kropp, president of People for the American Way.

But Bush's stand was warmly received by Republicans and conservative Democrats in Congress.

And the president himself had no difficulty defending his outspokenness on the flag issue while remaining silent on other recent constitutional issues, including court decisions making it harder for minorities to bring discrimination suits against employers.

WHEN THE CRISIS IS OVER
We live in a "crisis management" society. Once a crisis is over, we act as if the problem has been solved. This is also true for families.
Some couples have the ability to seek help at times of upheaval. Shortly after counseling begins, the "edge" wears off the problem and things feel better. The biggest problem facing marriages and families today is making the kinds of structural and communication changes necessary to avoid crisis.
Many marital crises occur because one party feels that the other is not adequately considering his or her needs. Many couples have not developed the techniques which make it comfortable to talk about these needs and cannot do so unless things seem extreme. Therefore, if a couple is to avoid generating crisis after crisis as the only way to address problems, it is essential to learn to communicate needs earlier and to have the partner listen and understand.
In many instances, the pattern of crisis is not obvious, and the observations and assistance of an experienced counselor become essential.

Senate Declares Flag-Burning 'Shameful' Act

By Dennis Patterson
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — The same logic that makes it illegal to yell "Fire" in a crowded theater should be used to forbid people from burning the American flag, the state Senate says.

The Senate on Tuesday branded flag-burning as a "shameful act" and called on Congress to overturn a U.S. Supreme Court decision last week that said burning the flag was protected by free-speech rights.

"We hear so much these days about the First Amendment and free speech," said Sen. Joe Johnson, D-Wake. "Free speech has never been an absolute right in this country. ... We do not allow people to paint swastikas on synagogues, and under that same rationale, we should not allow people to desecrate our flag."

The unanimous vote on the resolution came after Senate Majority Leader Henson Barnes, D-Wayne, led the senators and visitors to the chamber in the Pledge of Allegiance. Sen. Ollie Harris, D-Cleveland, who sponsored the resolution asked for the pledge.

Harris said not only the senators, but "also every page, every person in the clerk's office and every secretary in our offices" wanted to sign as sponsors of the measure.

Sen. Dennis Winner, D-Buncombe, chairman of the Senate Rules Committee, said the panel usually takes a restrictive view of resolutions that tell Congress what they should do. But not in this case.

A copy of the resolution will be sent to the North Carolina congressional delegation.

In other legislative action:

The Senate approved a House amendment that its supporters say might ensure longer treatment for people found innocent of murder by reason of insanity.

The law, as rewritten, would presume that a person who takes another's life, but is found innocent by reason of insanity, is dangerous to himself or others.

The person would have to prove he is no longer dangerous in order to be released from a mental institution. Under current law, such a person has to be released as soon as a psycholgist tells the court he is no longer dangerous.

"I am absolutely opposed to convicting somebody of a crime that involves murderous intent when he has not got the ability to form that intent," said Sen. Bob Swain, D-Buncombe, when asked if the change creates a "guilty, but insane" verdict. "This is the closes thing I can support to that."

The Senate agreed to hold two House bills that apparently were approved after a May 11 deadline for measures that do not involve use of state money.

Sen. Dennis Winner, D-Buncombe, the chairman of the Senate Rules Committee, recommended that bills be held. One orders that sexual abstinence be taught in public schools as the best method for avoiding acquired immune deficiency syndrome, and the other involves regulations on zoning.

The House Finance Committee approved a bill that would let county commissioners impose a tax on each telephone customer to buy the equipment for emergency 911 service.

The tax could be levied after a referendum or by a vote of the commissioners after a public hearing.

The funds could be used to buy computers that would automatically trace calls on the emergency line and give dispatchers the address of the caller. Rep. John Kerr said the special tax could not be used to hire dispatchers for the system.

The state would be able to condemn abandoned railroad rights of way and hold the property for future railroad use under a bill approved by the House Finance Committee.

The measure also would allow cities and counties to buy or accept gifts of abandoned railbeds in their areas if they believe the land could be useful for rail service in the future.

The House Government Committee, with virtually no debate, approved a bill that would make any male who does not register for the draft as required ineligible for college loans or state employment.

Consumers Fighting Back With Stickers

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The feeling of self-respect and vindication you get from a Consum-Alert sticker is exhilarating, according to the founders of the consumer fight-back tactic.

"The big mistake is really not bringing poor service to the attention of the management," said High Point radio announcer Bill Flynn. "It's tongue-in-cheek, but it has a real point behind it."

The black and gold flourescent stickers are the idea of Flynn and Greensboro ad agency owner Greg Fischer.

The stickers can be applied on the window — or the employee if you're that angry — of the offending business. They aren't permanent — they are static cling and can easily be removed and leave no sticky residue.

"I can only say there have been ample opportunities in my life in the last six months where I could have used one of these things and felt justified in doing so," Flynn said in a telephone interview Tuesday. "We live in a time where it's so easy to be treated like a number."

Fischer remembers a recent incident in a shoe store. He asked a clerk for assistance in finding a particular shoe size, but the clerk told him he had to organize the stock. After five minutes, Fischer had no satisfaction.

"I tried to be congenial, but I ended up walking out and not buying a thing," he said.

"The ultimate goal is to just be able to vent ourselves," Fischer said.

For $2.25 purchasers get six decals to an order, and they'll tell you if an establishment is slow, dirty, insensitive, rude or just plain bad. Black letters tell the buyer and merchant he has been stickered with a "Consum-Alert Warning! This Business Has Been Targeted By Your Fellow Consumer For" one of four offenses.

White letters on a black background indicate a specific business has been cited for "Slow Service," "Poor Service," "Bad Attitude" and "Poor Hygiene." There are two Poor Service stickers and two Bad Attitude stickers.

The stickers are to be placed, according to the instructions, in a "high-visibility, eye-level location for your Consum-Alert. Put that sucker where everyone can see it!"

The instructions don't encourage confrontation. The pleasure of relieving frustration should be sufficient. "You've joined the ranks of Robin Hood and The Lone Ranger. Be proud."

Church Assault

FAYETTEVILLE (AP) — A man who allegedly robbed a minister, kidnapped a church member, stole a car and then raped a woman on Monday night has surrendered to police, authorities said.

Ronnie Bernard Bell, 30, was arrested Tuesday after calling from a pay phone on U.S. 301 in Fayetteville, police Lt. Robert Sanford said. Bell, who is unemployed, was charged with robbery, kidnapping and rape, according to records.

Sanford said the Rev. Floyd Bryant was robbed in the pastor's study at St. Luke's Holiness Church on Monday night. The intruder later forced his way into the car of a church member and made her drive him a distance before she escaped, police said. The man then drove away and allegedly raped a 21-year-old woman at knifepoint, police said.

Bell was being held Tuesday night in the Cumberland County Jail on $15,000 bail pending a District Court hearing, officials said.

Soldier's Death

FORT BRAGG, N.C. (AP) — A Fort Bragg soldier died after a parachute training accident in Puerto Rico, a spokesman for Fort Bragg said Tuesday.

The soldier was identified as PFC Jim Devore, an infantryman assigned to the 82nd Airborne Division's Co. B, 3rd Battalion, 504th Parachute Infantry Regiment.

The spokesman said Devore died as a result of injuries sustained during a parachte jump on the Caribbean island on Saturday.

A native of Guam, Devore, 19, was in Puerto Rico on an exercise in support of reserve component training, the spokesman said. Army safety officials are conducting an investigation of the accident, the spokesman said.

Meteorologist

RALEIGH (AP) — The North Carolina area manager of the National Weather Service and meteorologist-in-charge of the Raleigh-Durham Forecast Office will leave June 30 to take a position in the agency's Washington headquarters.

In Washington, Robert E. Muller will be the senior meteorologist on a program development team that will restructure the National Weather Service in an effort to integrate new technology into operations more readily. The program goal is to develop a system that will provide the nation with the best possible, cost-effective weather service.

Muller is a 21-year veteran forecaster at Raleigh-Durham International Airport. He was appointed supervisor of National Weather Services activities in North Carolina in 1982.

Joseph Pellesier, Muller's deputy, will become acting area manager until a permanent replacement is named. Pellesier came to the Raleigh Durham Forecast Office after over a decade's service with the National Hurricane Center in Miami.

Oil Spill

YANCEYVILLE, N.C. (AP) — Environmentalists continued an effort Tuesday to clean up Rattlesnake Creek, which was contaminated over the weekend by an undetermined amount of fuel oil from a tank that serves the Caswell County Sheriff's Department and other county government offices.

Caswell County Sheriff J.I. Smith said an automatic switch malfunctioned on Friday, causing a pump to run continously and spill an undetermined amount of oil. He said the spilled fuel oil ran down a storm drain to the creek.

The fuel spill was discovered when oil began showing up Saturday in the creek.

Murder Charge

JACKSONVILLE, N.C. (AP) — Police have charged a Jacksonville woman with first-degree murder in connection with the June 19 death of her 13-month-old daughter.

Rachael D. Darby, 18, was charged Monday after police received an official report from the state's medical examiner that concluded the child's injuries were not consistent with an accident the mother said the child had suffered.

Chief of Police Roger Halbert said police were called to the Darby residence about midnight June 17 to assist Emergency Medical Service personnel with an injured child.

The child, Keshia M. Darby, was transferred to Pitt Memorial Hospital, where she died on June 19, Halbert said.

The child's father, Billy Ray Darby, 23, was charged on March 10 with felony child abuse in connection with injuries to Mrs. Darby's 2-year-old son by her first marriage. He is free on $5,000 bond.

Drowning

SPRING LAKE, N.C. (AP) — The body of a Cumberland County man was found in the Lower Little River north of Spring Lake on Tuesday, authorities said.

Terrance Dale Robinson was discovered by youths in the river off N.C. 210 about 11 a.m., Cumberland County Sheriff's spokesman Hershell Barbour said.

Robinson apparently drowned, authorities said. An autopsy is to be conducted.

The body, which was snagged in river bushes, was recovered about 2:30 p.m. by members of the county Rescue Squad, Spring Lake police, county firefighters and deputy sheriffs, Barbour said.

House Will Vote On Second Primary Bill

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — A bill that would allow a candidate to win his party's nomination with as little as 40 percent of the primary vote is headed for a vote on the House floor after a subcommittee dramatically reversed itself on the plan.

The full Judiciary Committee on Tuesday approved the bill without dissent, one day after a subcommittee that had earlier voted 6-0 to raise the victory threshold to 45 percent voted 5-0 to return to 40 percent.

Increasing the percentage had infuriated runoff foes, who said it would make the bill virtually toothless. It touched off a lobbying campaign by black leaders to restore the 40 percent provision.

"A few people got some calls, and some folks in the (black) caucus went by to talk to (subcommittee members)," said Rep. Mickey Michaux, D-Durham.

On Monday, the subcommittee held an unscheduled meeting on the House floor around the desk of the chairman, Rep. Walter Jones Jr., D-Pitt. The group voted to reverse itself on the 45 percent threshold.

Rep. Beverly Perdue, D-Craven, who offered the 45 percent amendment last week, said she did not vote during Monday's meeting.

She denied that pressure from black leaders or anyone else influenced her decision not to fight for her amendment, saying she received only a handful of calls from constituents on the matter.

"The votes in the Judiciary Committee just were not there," Mrs. Perdue said. "I tried to offer a compromise position that I felt would enable both parties to nominate their strongest candidate... But 45 didn't help anybody, evidently."

She said she had heard that Gov. Jim Martin pressured the subcommittee's three Republicans to support the 40 percent threshold. But Tim Pittman, Martin's communications director, said the governor had not gotten involved in the dispute although he supports modifying the runoff system.

"He has absolutely not lobbied anybody about it," Pittman said.

Rep. N.J. Crawford, D-Buncombe, a subcommittee member who requested Monday's meeting and made the motion to reconsider the vote, said "no one spoke to me at all" about the bill and that he acted on his own.

Asked how he accounted for the subcommittee's sharp reversal of opinion, Crawford said, "I think they just kind of slept over it, maybe."

Black leaders have long sought to abolish runoffs, which are held only in Southern states. They contend the system is discriminatory because blacks often finish first in a multi-candidate primary but lose in a runoff against a single white opponent.

Defenders of the current system say runoffs help both parties nominate the strongest candidate.

The issue is particularly divisive for Democrats. Black Democrats have pushed party leaders to support the change and succeeded in having the state party's 1988 platform amended to endorse abolishing runoffs.

Other Democrats say changing the system would result in weaker tickets for their party. They say that's why many Republicans are friendly toward the pending bill.

Michaux acknowledged that many feel Republicans can defeat black Democrats easier than white Democrats. "My answer to that is the Democratic Party is the majority party and if people stick with the party, we'll win," he said. "If Democrats are going to desert the party because of skin color, they should lose."

Rep. Art Pope, R-Wake, a subcommittee member, said the proposed change would "help conservatives, and most Republicans are conservative."

Dean Says Patrol Will Survive Despite Steroid Scandal

By Tom Foreman Jr.
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — The public's perception of the state Highway Patrol won't change despite North Carolina's investigation into allegations of steroid use within the patrol's ranks, officials say.

Three troopers resigned Tuesday and two were fired after an internal investigation found they had obtained or used illegal steroids in a Raleigh gym, authorities said.

"We have a huge organization from Murphy to Manteo. We have 60 years of history," said Joe Dean, secretary of the state Department of Crime Control and Public Safety. "This was not done by any of these five men because they wanted to get high. They did it because they thought it would be helpful. ..."

Anabolic steroids are used to help athletes bulk up, and were at the center of the controversy which cost Canadian sprinter Ben Johnson his medals at the 1988 Olympic Games at Seoul. Possession of anabolic steroids is a misdemeanor.

Possession of such steroids is in violation of patrol policy and resulted in the dismissal of the troopers, Dean said.

Dean identified the three troopers who resigned as T.L. Bailey, 25, Melvin Bullock Jr., 24, and M.G. Pope, 26, all stationed in Raleigh. The two fired troopers, identified as T.S. Collins, 30, and A.R. Holmes, 27, were offered the option of resigning, Dean said.

Collins was assigned to the governor's security staff, Dean said.

A sixth trooper, whom Dean would not identify, was found innocent in connection with the probe and has returned to duty. All six troopers were assigned to the Raleigh district.

Asked if the troopers might have been using steroids in order to meet the Highway Patrol's guidelines for fitness, Dean said it shouldn't be a factor.

"It doesn't matter how much you can bench press," he said. "It deals with your heart rate and your general wellness. We have had people go through the wellness test and we've not had a heart problem. We've caught some physical problems that they've been able to correct."

The Highway Patrol does not have mandatory drug testing once a trooper is hired, but Dean said there could be a time when testing becomes a requirement.

"I believe it's been put off for a while because of the availability of labs," Dean said.

"This is an isolated incident, confined to Wake County," Dean said at a news conference. "I have no reason to feel like it extends beyond Raleigh."

All six had been suspended pending the outcome of the investigation, Dean said.

Collins told The News and Observer of Raleigh that he chose to be fired instead of resigning so that he will be eligible to appeal the decision and be reinstated.

"I'm just trying to exercise my rights as far as I can," Collins told the newspaper. "I've been on (the force) 10 years, and I have a clean record from front to back.

"I felt that the patrol did what they thought they had to do and I respect them for that," he said. "Hopefully I'll appeal, and we can meet in the middle. I just wished things hadn't worked out this way."

The probe, which was sparked by information from U.S. Customs agents as well as the Internal Revenue Service, involved a Raleigh gym that Dean would not identify. He would not reveal the status of the investigation, but said the state's version of the probe was concluded Tuesday.

Physicians Debate AIDS Test Before House Panel

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — Doctors who have lobbied to treat AIDS tests as other diagnostic blood examinations say they are not satisfied with revisions to an anti-discrimination bill that lets them order the tests in specific situations.

Dr. Milton Quigless, a Raleigh surgeon, said Tuesday the wording of the revision does not address his concerns about patients filing civil suits against doctors who order tests that turn out positive.

"Never, ever has informed consent been used in connection with a blood test," Quigless said after the House Judiciary Committee debated the bill for an hour. "What has happened is that the dread consequences of this test have moved the legal community to say that the messenger should be beheaded."

The committee is scheduled to consider two amendments today which would shield doctors from legal retribution for ordering the tests for acquired immune deficiency syndrome without a patient's consent.

The amendments would alter an AIDS dsicrimination bill that has already passed the Senate. A similar amendment was added in a Senate committee, but removed on the Senate floor.

"Approving this bill is the best thing you can do this session to stop the spread of AIDS," Sen. Helen Marvin, D-Gaston, told the House committee. "It is an attempt to get people tested by removing the fear of discrimination. That fear is the biggest stumbling block to testing."

Dr. Don Chaplin of Burlington, a member of the State Medical Society's AIDS task force, said the society "encourages informed consent."

"We would appreciate your support for an ethical approach to HIV testing," Chaplin said. "We believe that with an issue of this magnitude, a physician should sit down with a patient and explain the consequences."

Under rigorous questioning by committee members, Chaplin said the medical society's delegates had backed the broad issue of informed consent, but had not endorsed a specific bill when they met last fall.

Chaplin said surgeons already have the right to order an AIDS test, although they may face legal repercussions.

"This bill does not alter the ability of a surgeon to order an HIV test before surgery whether he has the consent of the patient or not," Chaplin said.

Rep. Skip Stam, R-Wake, proposed an amendment that would specify that doctors could order the AIDS testing when it is required "in the reasonable judgment of the physician." A second amendment would allow doctors and hospitals to treat AIDS patients differently from other patients if the purpose was to protect hospital personnel or the patient.

The committee adjourned without taking action on Stam's amendments or a motion by Rep. Martin Nesbitt, D-Buncombe, that the revised bill be approved by the panel.

Senate Gives OK To Long Trailers

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — North Carolina would become the last state on the East Coast to allow longer tractor-trailers on its highways under a bill that has won tentative approval in the Senate.

Supporters of the measure Tuesday fought back amendments that called for studying the safety of 53-foot trailers and withdrew another amendment that would have exempted drivers from any penalties if they were caught driving the logner rigs off designated highways.

Sen. Daniel Simpson, R-Burke, said he worried that trucking interests, which have said the longer trailers would be used for light, bulky items, would return in a couple of years and ask that weight limits be raised because the longer trailers were carrying mostly air.

"The next thing you know, we'll be running trains on the interstates," he said. "Some of those twin trailers look like trains now when you try to pass them.

"If we get these triple-trailers (which have been approved in some Western states), all you'll need is a caboose and a whistle to have a train," he said.

The amendment to exempt drivers from penalties drew the fiercest debate.

"With this amendment, we are not just letting these monstrosities on our roads, but we are making the person controlling the vehicle not responsible for violating the law," Simpson said. "This makes a bad bill worse."

Sen. Dennis Winner, D-Buncombe, said he was undecided on the bill, which expands the length of legal trailers from 48 feet to 53 feet and limits them to the same highways used by twin trailers. But Winner said he would vote against the bill if the amendment exempting drivers from penalties was added.

"I don't know of any law on moving violations in which the driver is not cited," said Winner. "The responsibility for illegal driving ought to be on the driver.

Congress Will Try To Plug Loopholes In Ethics Law

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Congress is trying to block the route which former Reagan administration aide Lyn Nofziger used to win a reversal of his conviction for illegal lobbying.

Rep. Barney Frank said Tuesday the House Judiciary Committee will consider amending the Ethics in Government Act to revise provisions Nofziger used successfully in appealing his 1988 conviction.

"We saw it as a potential loophole," said Frank, a Massachusetts Democrat.

In a 2-1 decision Tuesday, the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals said Nofziger's conviction must be set aside because it wasn't based on a finding that he had knowledge of each element of the offense.

He was convicted Feb. 11, 1988, of three counts of illegally lobbying top presidential aides on behalf of private clients after he left the White House one year into the Reagan administration. The clients were scandal-plagued Wedtech Corp., a maritime engineers union and the manufacturer of the Air Force's A-10 anti-tank plane.

The appeals court said Tuesday that in order for a conviction to be valid, the prosecution must demonstrate that Nofziger knew the matters on which he lobbied were already of "direct and substantial interest" to the White House.

The proposed amendment would eliminate the provision requiring knowledge of each element of the offense, said Frank, chairman of the House subcommittee on administrative law. Congress passed a similar measure last year but it was vetoed by President Reagan.

Independent counsel James McKay, who prosecuted Nofziger, said he will consider appealing. He could seek a review by the federal appeals court in Washington or by the Supreme Court.

A five-year statute of limitations could make it impossible to bring revised criminal charges.

His conviction was reversed in a decision written by U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals Judge James Buckley, joined by Judge Stephen Williams, both Reagan appointees. The third member of the panel and lone dissenter was Judge Harry Edwards, a Carter administration appointee.

Nofziger, the White House political director in 1981, began lobbying his former colleagues within months of leaving the government. He said he was trying to stimulate their interest in various matters, which would not be a violation of the one-year ban on lobbying an ex-employee's former government agency.

The case against Nofziger was the first major test of the revolving-door provisions of the Ethics in Government Act.

"I don't think I am part of any revolving-door syndrome," said Nofziger. "People lobby in this town; the main industry in this town besides government is lobbying."

Asked whether he thought he got off on a legal technicality, Nofziger said, "Absolutely no ... I think they came after me on a technicality."

Nofziger said he was pleased by the decision. "I think I was innocent from the beginning; I still think I am innocent," he said.

The court ruling won praise from President Bush and other high-level administration officials.

Bush, asked about the ruling at a state dinner Tuesday night honoring Australian Prime Minister Robert Hawke, smiled broadly and said only, "I'm always glad when somebody is found not guilty of something."

Secretary of State James A. Baker III called the decision "terrific," adding, "There's no doubt in my mind and never has been that he did not intend to break the law."

Bush said he had not spoken with Nofziger since the decision, but Chief of Staff John Sununu said he called Nofziger to congratulate him.

"I kind of felt that it was important that he know that at least some of his old friends hadn't forgotten him," Sununu added.

Nofziger had been sentenced to 90 days in prison and fined $30,000. He said that defending himself cost over $1.5 million in legal fees and possibly more than that in lost income.

Airlines Ax 'Rain Man' Scene From In-Flight Movie Fare

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

HOLLYWOOD — A crucial scene from the Oscar-winning "Rain Man" has been excised from the version shown by at least 15 major airlines because the scene about aviation safety was considered unfit for passengers.

In the four-minute "Rain Man" sequence, Dustin Hoffman's autistic savant character refuses to board a plane because he has memorized airplane crash statistics.

Pressured by his brother Charlie Babbitt, played by Tom Cruise, Hoffman's Raymond Babbitt panics and starts screaming and thrashing about.

"I think it's a key scene to the entire movie. That's why it's in there," Barry Levinson, the film's Academy Award-winning director, said in a telephone interview Tuesday. "It launches their entire odyssey across country — because they couldn't fly.

"Without that scene, it comes down to this: You basically lose an enormous impact of the film. That scene tells you that they, mechanically, are forced to drive across country and, secondly, that Charlie can only push Raymond so far because he knows what will happen."

Furthermore, the deletion of the scene makes later references to it nonsensical.

"Rain Man" started showing on airplanes in June and is now being screened regularly on 15 carriers, said Don Sathern, supervisor of visual programming for Sony-Trans Com Inc., the nation's largest in-flight movie service.

"Everybody wanted the scene out," he said. "Usually, plane-crash sequences are automatically out."

One airline spokeswoman said it was the sort of scene that typically could make passengers uneasy.

"It's our policy to remove portions of feature films as they relate to violence, nudity, obscenities or anything that could create discomfort for passengers about being on airplanes," Patricia Graham, manager of in-flight programming for United Airlines, said in this week's People magazine.

Levinson said he didn't have the authority to insist that the scene be restored. "We can't do anything about it," he said. Still, he found the editing ridiculous.

"These airlines don't know that supposedly there is a degree of risk?" Levinson asked. "They've never heard of such a thing? We're saying that over the years, planes have crashed. That is a reality of life." In the airport scene, Charlie, the hustler brother tries to prevail on his autistic sibling to board an airliner. Raymond was adamant.

"Airline travel is very dangerous."

"Don't be silly," Charlie snaps. "It's the safest in the world. You're going to love this. Trust me."

Raymond remains steadfast in his travel phobia, citing 30 air crashes in 1987 and 211 fatalities.

One airline is showing "Rain Man" with the scene intact: Qantas, which Raymond singles out for the best safety record.

"Qantas?" Charlie demanded in exasperation.

"Never crashed," Raymond muttered.

Girl, 7, Survives 12 Hours Trapped In Storm Sewer

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

HOUSTON — Hours after a 7-year-old girl was swept into a storm sewer, rescuers gave up plans to search for her in the fast-flowing water and her mother abandoned hope.

But Latricia Reese managed to cling to cracks in the lining of the sewer for 12 hours while the flood waters from Tropical Storm Allison swirled around her.

"It was a horrible night and a terrible storm, but we found a rainbow at the end," said Karen Resse after two construction workers found her daughter.

"I gave up most hope and everybody kept telling me not to give it up, but I did," Mrs. Reese said Tuesday, while Latricia rested in a hospital bed and watched cartoons.

"I just held on to the crack in the cement," Latricia said, complaining that mosquitos and ants bothered her throughout her ordeal.

Latricia, her hands white and wrinkled and her body covered with scrapes and bruises, was suffering mild shock Tuesday but was reported in good condition at Humana Hospital-Southmore, said spokeswoman Ramona Branch.

The 4-foot-tall Latricia was playing in a flooded ditch near her home around 7:30 p.m. Monday when her cousin saw her lose her footing and vanish into an 18-inch concrete culvert.

"She spent the entire night in the city's major sewer system with all that flood water coming in on her, and hardly had a scratch," said Fire Department spokesman Mike Warnke. "It's just a miracle that she could still be alive."

When the police diving team was called out, the water was still flowing at a rate they believed too hazardous to risk entering the unfamiliar storm sewage system. Police thought the girl would have been swept to where the sewer system empties into a bayou, Warnke said.

"The diving team told me they can't do any more, it's too dangerous for them. They told my friend they thought they should get me a pastor because I would need it and it didn't look too good," Mrs. Reese said.

She and a sister walked around a nearby bayou in search of the girl at daylight Tuesday.

Women's Party Is 'Silenced'

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

REYKJAVIK, Iceland — Iceland's women-only party complains it's being treated like "little flowers" with little ideas. But a rival woman lawmaker says the feminists are not taking politics seriously and degrading Parliament.

Two years ago the Women's List, the world's first all-female party, captured six seats in the 63-member Althing, or parliament, and for a while it looked like a potential power-broker.

But today, says Women's List lawmaker Thorhildur Thorleifsdottir, Iceland's male-dominated society and especially its media have formed "a very great coalition to silence us."

Male and female opponents say the Women's List won't be taken seriously unless it plays politics Icelandic-style — which the Women's List refuses to do, saying it means surrender to a system designed and run by men.

The Kvennalist, Icelandic for Women's List, is radical, anti-nuclear and opposes Iceland's membership in NATO.

This puts it outside the centrist political mainstream, as does its dogged insistence on being non-establishment. It has no hierarchy or leadership, operates by consensus, rotates members in and out of parliament and has an eight-year limit on being a lawmaker.

The Women's List sees these policies as strengths. Political rivals and Western diplomats say they are weaknesses.

"Hierarchy is very much a male thing. Women try to run their homes without a hierarchy and we see this country as one large family," said Sigridur Duna Kristmundsdottir, a Kvennalist founder who served in Parliament for four years.

"We are very concerned about not having power accumulate in a few hands," she said.

Doctors Say Women Over 40 Need Tests

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Routine use of mammography and breast examinations can reduce deaths from breast cancer in women over age 40, a coalition of medical and research groups says.

The groups — including the American Cancer Society, the American Medical Association and the National Cancer Institute — on Tuesday issued recommendations for screening women with no signs or symptoms of breast cancer:

—Beginning at age 40, annual clinical breast exams and mammograms every one or two years;

—Age 50 and older, breast exams and mammograms every year.

Breast cancer is the leading type of cancer in U.S. women and second only to lung cancer in cancer deaths among women. About 142,000 women are expected to be diagnosed with the disease and some 43,000 will die from it this year.

"We would like to recommend (these guidelines) to all women and all doctors in the country as a way of decreasing this great mortality rate from breast cancer in the United States," said Charles R. Smart, chief of the early detection branch at the National Cancer Institute.

The major groups in the coalition had already recommended this mammography schedule, but some of the other groups had called for regular mammograms beginning as late as age 50.

The American Cancer Society and the AMA said they will continue to recommend that women between 35 and 40 have a baseline mammogram for doctors to use as a comparison during later regular screening.

The groups said they agreed on the recommendations to end confusion caused by differing guidelines, which they said has resulted in only about a quarter of physicians routinely recommending mammograms.

They cited mounting evidence that early detection of breast cancer prolongs survival and said mammography has improved greatly as a diagnostic tool since the 1960s.

About half of all breast cancers currently are found in the early stages of the disease, but that could increase to 70 to 75 percent if the recommendations are followed by all women, Smart said.

Heat Melts Delaware River Oil

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Ships scooped up boulder-sized chunks of congealed oil on the Delaware River as a hot sun began to melt the globs from a tanker spill. A seaman at the helm of a second spill refused to testify at an inquiry.

As crews continued efforts to control the spread of pollution from three separate oil spills last week, investigators today were scheduled to hold inquiries into the spills.

In all, an estimated 1 million gallons of oil spilled in the accidents on the Delaware River, Rhode Island Sound and the Houston Ship Channel. Hearings began Tuesday on the Rhode Island and Texas spills.

In Philadelphia, the Coast Guard today was to open a hearing to investigate why a tanker ran aground on the Delaware River.

Delaware officials have criticized the cleanup as being too slow, but cleanup workers on a tugboat tour said continued hot temperatures may only slow the oil recovery.

Temperatures climbed to 93 degrees by 5 p.m. Tuesday, and the heavy oil washed ashore began to melt, soaking into sand or marsh.

Based on new assessments, officials revised downward the number of gallons spilled, from 800,000 to about 310,000. Of that amount, an estimated 106,240 gallons had been recovered by Tuesday night.

"When we've got it in chunks, we can pick it up," said Coast Guard Capt. Larry Murdock. But a sheen of oil poses a greater hazard to shoreline and to wildlife, Murdock said.

Officials hope three waterborne sweeps and a skimmer ship that scoops the oil in through its bow will eliminate much of the oil.

In Rhode Island, Coast Guard officials are asking prosecutors to grant a tanker's helmsman immunity from prosecution under state and federal law to secure his testimony. The tanker World Prodigy ran aground, spilling 420,000 gallons of heating oil at the mouth of Narragansett Bay on Friday.

Storm Leaves 2 Dead In Gulf Coast Sweep

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The slow-moving storm named Allison dumped more than a foot of rain in the Houston area, flooding homes and roads, and spawned at least eight tornadoes in Louisiana that tore into more than 100 houses, officials said.

At least two fatalities were blamed on Allison, which at its height reached the status of tropical storm, one step below that of a hurricane.

Southeast Texas began drying out today although scores of people remained out of their homes because of streams and rivers that continued to flood the area. Rain was expected to continue today in Louisiana.

The tornadoes Tuesday moved along a mile-long path near Monroe, La. No serious injuries were reported, but more than 100 homes were damaged in the Belle Meade and Lakewood Estates subdivisions north of Monroe.

Jachin Little, Ouachita civil defense director, said five of the homes were destroyed and 10 more had damage that made them uninhabitable.

Buddy Sharp, who sought safety in the bathroom of his home when the twister hit, said he heard windows blow out and an outside wall torn off.

"That is some awesome power," Sharp said. "It takes anything it wants, and does what it wants with it."

Meanwhile, a thunderstorm in Wapakoneta, Ohio, on Tuesday toppled scores of trees and damaged several houses, tearing the corner off of one brick home, officials said. No major injuries were reported. Wapakoneta is about 70 miles northwest of Columbus.

"It was overpowering," said Niki Dunham, who saw a 200-year-old walnut tree in her backyard felled by the storm. "It was like a big black ball of smoke. It almost actually pushed me in the house. I was terrified."

In Texas, Harris County Sheriff's Department divers pulled the body of 18-year-old Don Gilliam from rain-swollen Spring Creek late Tuesday. Friends said Gilliam went under while trying to swim across the creek. On Monday, a traffic death in the Beaumont area was blamed on the storm.

But a 7-year-old Houston girl miraculously survived a 12-hour overnight ordeal inside a storm sewer when she was rescued by a couple of construction workers. Latricia Reese suffered only abrasions to her knees and elbows and mild shock and was hospitalized in good condition after clinging to the inside of the drain.

Divers at Beaumont searched for four hours Tuesday for two boys after they disappeared while playing in a drainage ditch. The divers were to continue the search today.

Traffic resumed on Interstate 45 north of downtown Houston at mid-afternoon Tuesday, nearly a full day after the main north-south freeway was blocked by high water.

Europe To Start Monetary Union

LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

MADRID, Spain — In a major step toward European unity, the 12-nation European Community on Tuesday set a deadline of July 1990 to formally begin the process of monetary union.

Leaders of the EC countries decided that the crucial first step in what is expected to be a lengthy journey toward a single currency will start July 1, 1990, with the lifting of all controls on the transfer of currencies between member nations.

They also committed themselves to an intergovernmental conference to chart subsequent steps in the process.

"Movement has been started," Jacques Delors, president of the European Commission, said at a news conference at the end of a two-day summit meeting here. "It is irreversible and will lead to economic and monetary union."

European monetary union, still many years away, would carry major implications well beyond Europe. A common European currency, representing the world's largest trading bloc with an annual trading volume that exceeds that of the United States and is more than twice that of Japan, could quickly become a primary competitor to the dollar on global markets. Such a move would do away with currencies such as the pound sterling, the franc and the Deutschmark.

The agreement to move forward on an idea that only a few years ago was widely viewed as a Utopian dream reflects the unexpectedly rapid pace with which the community is moving toward unity.

The political momentum generated by this pace was seen as instrumental in forcing British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher into concessions that made Tuesday's accord possible.

"I didn't expect a consensus a week ago," said Spanish Prime Minister Felipe Gonzalez, who was chairman of the meeting. "Thank God for Mrs. Thatcher."

At a news conference after the meeting, Mrs. Thatcher left little doubt that she is still deeply opposed to both the idea of monetary union and the process leading to it, but she agreed to the final document committing Britain to both.

Many observers linked her retreat in part to the drubbing her Conservative Party was given last week in elections for Britain's representatives to the European Parliament. The party's campaign and her own stridently anti-EC rhetoric in the weeks before the election were rejected by British voters, who handed the Conservatives their worst defeat in a national election in this century.

Mrs. Thatcher had scoffed at the EC report outlining a path toward monetary union when it was published last spring. She said she would have nothing to do with it. But in the course of the meeting here she detailed for the first time conditions under which she would link the British pound to an exchange-rate mechanism that already binds nine EC currencies in rough parity.

Although Mrs. Thatcher refused to discuss timing, the tone of her comments reflected a willingness to cooperate that had previously been absent. She also agreed to participate in the intergovernmental conference that is to discuss further moves toward monetary union once the first stage has begun.

According to the final communique, the intergovernmental conference could also consider alternative proposals.

Chinese Diplomats Ordered To Return For Mass Meeting

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BEIJING — China's Communist leaders have recalled all their ambassadors from overseas as Western leaders keep up their intense criticism of the Beijing government's violent suppression of dissent.

A cultural attache at China's embassy in Kenya confirmed today that all envoys would be returning to Beijing for a general meeting, although he denied the recall was connected to fallout from the crackdwon on the pro-democracy movement that began June 3-4.

A week ago, China urged the more than 20 Chinese diplomats who have since defected abroad to return home, saying they were led astray by misinformation.

Embassies in West Germany, Italy, Yugoslavia, the Philippines, Australia, Turkey, Egypt, Spain, Poland and Belgium were among those that said their ambassadors had left or would return to Beijing soon.

The most common reason given for the return of the ambassadors was "for scheduled vacation" or "annual home leave."

The Foreign Ministry in Beijing had no immediate comment on the reports.

China has been sharply criticized by many nations for using troops on June 3-4 to drive pro-democracy protesters out of central Beijing, then rounding up pro-democracy activists.

Hundreds of unarmed civilians were killed in the assault on the capital and at least 1,800 protesters and activists have subsequently been arrested. And the government has executed 27 people for alleged roles in anti-government protests that broke out in response to the crackdown.

Today, China's 1.1 billion people were told to rally behind a speech by senior leader Deng Xiaoping in which he praised the military commanders on June 9 for crushing the pro-democracy movement.

All major dailies carried Deng's speech in full on their front pages. The noon news devoted 15 minutes to reading the entire text.

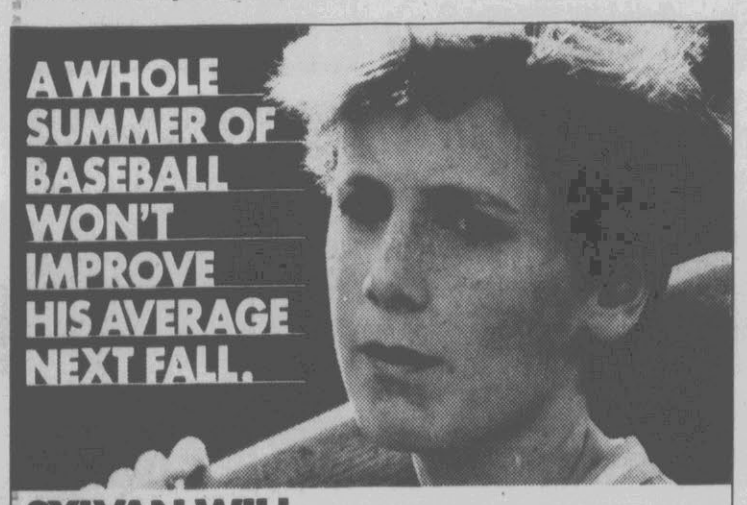

Deng, 84, reportedly ordered the military assault on Beijing, and his speech has become the gospel for hard-liners now seeking to root out all dissent in the party and government.

China's legislature, the National People's Congress, is tc convene a special meeting Thursday to endorse the party line and act on a draft bill that will tighten regulations on the holding of rallies and demonstrations.

Deng contends the student-led movement for democratic reforms turned into a counterrevolutionary rebellion.

China should continue its policy of opening to the outside world and of encouraging free-market economic reforms, Deng said, but must not waver in its opposition to "bourgeois liberalization."

The speech has become compulsory reading in study sessions held in factories and work places around the nation, and was praised at a recent Communist Party meeting that fired party head Zhao Ziyang, 69, for "supporting the turmoils and splitting the party."

Forecast Falls

April. The index had fallen 0.6 percent in March and 0.3 percent in February.

The May decline was the stepest since a 1.8 percent plunge in November 1987. That drop reflected the shock to the economy from the 508-point plunge in the Dow Jones index of 30 industrial stocks on Oct. 19, 1987.

The April increase had allowed the index to steer clear of the traditional signal of a forthcoming recession — three declines in a row. But the May report added to the overall downward trend this year that has worried many economists.

Today's index figure reinforced recent government and private industry reports that show almost every sector of the economy contracting because of the Federal Reserve Board's efforts to raise interest rates to control inflation.

For instance, only two of the 11 forward-looking business statistics that make up the composite index — higher stock prices and increased building permits — pointed upward in May.

The others pointed down: a drop in the money supply; lower prices for sensitive materials, indicating slower demand; the fourth consecutive drop in an index measuring consumer confidence; faster vendor deliveries, meaning declining demand; a shorter average work week; fewer orders for plants and equipment; a decrease in manufacturers' unfilled orders; higher initial claims for jobless benefits; and a decrease in manufacturers' unfilled orders.

The various changes left the index at 143.8 percent of its 1982 base of 100. So far this year, the index has declined at an annual rate of 0.3 percent, compared with an increase of 4.5 percent for all of 1988.

There have been signs recently the Fed has relaxed its grip slightly, but the effects remain. Some economists fear that, unless the central bank eases more, the economy could be pushed into a recession.

"We're still looking for a soft landing without a recession, but we're keeping our fingers crossed," said David Wyss, senior financial economist at Data Resources Inc., in Lexington, Mass., said Tuesday.

Lawrence Chimerine, senior economic adviser for the WEFA Group in Bala Cynwyd, Pa., said: "I still think we'll avoid a recession, but the data probably is a little weaker than any of us had expected."

Economist James Annable of First National Bank of Chicago sees the economy slowing dramatically, but without sliding into a recession.

Hiker Death

GRANDFATHER MOUNTAIN, N.C. (AP) — A 40-year-old Canadian was killed when he was struck by lightning while hiking at Grandfather Mountain on Tuesday afternoon, officials say.

William Michael Canale, 40, of Toronto was hiking with his 15-year-old son, Michael, and his brother Robert, 38, according to Katherine Morton, a spokesman for Grandfather Mountain. Michael Canale and Robert Canale were also struck and burned by the lightning bolt, she said. They were taken to Cannon Memorial Hospital in Banner Elk, where they were listed in good condition.

The men, who were vacationing in the area, were hiking near Attic Window Peak when a thunderstorm struck.

Lenin Attacked

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOSCOW — An official magazine has printed a vehement attack on Vladimir Ilych Lenin that holds the Soviet founder responsible for the political terror generally blamed on his successor, Josef Stalin.

"Lenin — all victories of the party and the state are linked with the name of Lenin," wrote Vasily Grossman in a short novel, "Forever Flowing," published in the June issue of the Oktyabr literary magazine. "But all cruelty committed in the country has become the tragic burden of Vladimir Ilych."

Grossman charges that Soviet political terror and dictatorship were begun by Lenin and not by Stalin, as Communist Party doctrine has maintained since 1956.

Grossman's accusations are strong, even under "glasnost," the greater openness championed by President Mikhail S. Gorbachev, which had preserved a measure of immunity for Lenin.

By printing "Forever Flowing" in the Soviet Union for the first time, the monthly implicitly questions Gorbachev's often-stated view that the country needs only to shake off the totalitarian heritage of Stalinism and return to true Leninist ways to construct a democracy in which the liberty of each citizen is respected.

Perhaps Grossman's most serious accusation is that Lenin directly paved the way for the centralized police state constructed by Stalin and his nationwide campaigns of political terror that led to the deaths of millions of Soviets.

"Things inherited from Lenin, like revolutionary dictatorship, terror and the struggle against bourgeois freedoms, which Lenin viewed as temporary, were used by Stalin for building a foundation ... (and) became a whole with the traditional, national lack of freedom in Russia," Grossman says.

Lenin, who steered the Bolsheviks to power in the 1917 Russian Revolution, was elevated to near divine status by the Kremlin following his death in 1924. His writings and thoughts have served as a touchstone and bible for Soviet Communists, including Gorbachev.

The Soviet founder's preserved body lies in a shrine-like mausoleum at the Kremlin wall. People lining up daily for a glimpse at the remains have worn a path across the cobblestones of Red Square.

Gorbachev, other party officials and Communist doctrine have maintained that Stalin was not the heir to Lenin's work but its perverter. An article in another literary monthly, Novy Mir, last year said Lenin justified the use of terror and made errors in his early economic policy, but that he realized he was wrong and thus merits praise.

of a vehicle involved in a wreck report the accident if there is injury, death or over $500 in property damage. The law states that the driver must report the accident immediately, using the quickest means of communication. Mrs. McLawhorn said her repair estimates are $600 and $700.

In a separate incident, Deputy Troy Boyd failed to report an accident in Hoke County that occurred May 1 when he was transporting a prisoner to Pitt County. Boyd's car struck a road sign, but he said no one was injured.

Tyson said Boyd believed the damage was less than $500, thus he was not required by law to report the wreck, but repair estimates were over the limit. Boyd phoned the Pitt Sheriff's Department and told them of the accident, and he said he was told to proceed back to Greenville. Boyd said he did not call a law enforcement officer to the accident scene in Hoke County.

Tyson said the deputy reported the accident to the Highway Patrol the following morning. Boyd's situation is "entirely different" from Alston's, Tyson said, and he was not taken off driving duty.

How They Voted

WASHINGTON — Here's how area members of Congress were recorded on major roll call votes in the week ending June 23.

HOUSE

TO REJECT SPENDING BILL — By a vote of 201 for and 218 against, the House rejected the conference report on a bill (HR 2072) to increase spending by about $3.5 billion this fiscal year on a variety of programs.

A defeat for the Democratic leadership, this further delayed passage of the fiscal 1989 "dire emergency" supplemental appropriations bill that was said to be urgently needed for veteran's health care and other programs when Congress took it up in March. Later, the House and Senate stripped the bill of some of its most disputed features. The bill then was sent to the White House by a near-unanimous vote in the House and a non-record vote in the Senate.

Largely at issue on this vote was $822 million put in the bill by House Democrats for anti-drug initiatives, money that Republicans and other critics said was not urgently needed because there already is a backlog of unspent fiscal 1989 drug money. The bill also drew criticism for employing gimmicks to disguise certain spending and for funding pet projects of leaders of the House and Senate appropriations committees.

Jamie Whitten, D-Miss., said members opposing the report "are voting against the veterans' program, because it is in here."

Opponent Bob Michel, R-Ill., called the legislation "a shameful example of what is wrong with the Congress. It is late on arrival, mislabeled, overloaded, overpriced and an insult to the American veterans..."

Members voting yes supported the supplemental appropriations bill.

NORTH CAROLINA members voting yes: Walter Jones, D-1, Charles Rose, D-7, W.G. Hefner, D-8, James Clarke, D-11.

Voting no: Tim Valentine, D-2, Martin Lancaster, D-3, David Price, D-4, Stephen Neal, D-5, Howard Coble, R-6, Alex McMillan, R-9, Cass Ballenger, R-10. Not voting: none.

'CARGO PREFERENCE' — By a vote of 186 for and 230 against, the House refused to remove a 'Busy American' and 'cargo preference' provision from a bill authorizing about $23 billion in foreign aid in fiscal 1990-91. the bill (HR 2655) remained in debate.

The language that survived this vote requires that most countries receiving substantial American cash aid spend an equivalent sum on U.S. goods and services. To bolster the U.S. merchant marine industry, it also requires that at least half of those purchases be shipped abroad on U.S.-flag vessels.

Doug Bereuter, R-Neb., who wanted to remove the language, said cargo preferences raise transportation costs and thus "take export markets away from U.S. agricultural producers."

Opponent Herbert Bateman, R-Va., said the American-flag merchant marine "is disappearing unless we do something as a government to encourage it."

NORTH CAROLINA members voting yes: Valentine, Lancaster, Coble, Rose, McMillan, Ballenger.

Voting no: Walter Jones, Price, Neal, Hefner, Clarke.

SENATE

CHILD CARE LEGISLATION — The Senate voted 63 for and 37 against to approve the Democratic version of sweeping child care legislation, a mix of new and expanded initiatives to help low- and middle-income working parents pay for day care and in some health care for their children. The overall bill (S 5) was headed for final passage.

A major expansion of the federal role in child care, the legislation would cost $1.7 billion annually in subsidies channeled through states to parents and day care providers, and an estimated $2 billion annually in Treasury losses as a result of tax credits.

The bill provides vouchers to help poor parents pay for day care, supplies grants to states for increasing the quality and quantity of child care facilities, enhances existing child care tax credits and establishes a new credit to help the working poor obtain health insurance for their children. Also, the bill requires states to develop day care health and safety standards and permits federal subsidies of religious-based day care.

Senators voting yes supported the Democratic child care legislation.

North Carolina Sen. Terry Sanford, D, voted yes. Sen. Jesse Helms, R, voted no.

GOP ALTERNATIVE — By a vote of 44 for and 56 against, the Senate rejected the Republican alternative to the Democratic child care legislation (above). The GOP approach differed mainly in that it relied chiefly on tax credits rather than a combination of credits and federal subsidies to help working parents meet child care costs. Also, it promoted the family unit by helping families with one parent at home as well those with both parents working, required a smaller bureaucracy to administer and would have cost much less than the Democratic plan.

Senators voting yes supported the Republican child care alternative.

Sanford voted no. Helms voted yes.

AMERICAN FLAG RULING — By a vote of 97 for and 3 against, the Senate approved a "sense of the Senate" resolution (S Res 151) objecting to the U.S. Supreme Court ruling that nullified state laws making it a crime to desecrate the American flag.

Supporter Don Nickles, R-Okla., called the decision "a serious mistake which needs to be changed."

Opponent Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., said the court had upheld "the freedoms protected by the Constitution and symbolized by the hallowed flag."

Senators voting yes objected to the court ruling.

Jazz Get Blue

Pirates' Star Taken With 21st Pick

By Tom Morris
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

East Carolina's Blue Edwards would be the first one to tell you he's surprised the Utah Jazz picked him Tuesday in the National Basketball Association draft, but he's not complaining.

"I was kind of shocked," Edwards said after learning the Jazz had chosen him with the 21st pick in the draft's opening round.

"I had just got back from Atlanta this (Tuesday) afternoon, and I felt like I would go to Atlanta. I hadn't talked to anybody from Utah, so Utah never crossed my mind.

"At the time, I was just looking at a paper, marking out some of the people who had already gone," Edwards added. "I had one paper with possible choices that had me going to Atlanta, so I felt good about that. When they announced Utah's pick I didn't even look at the screen because I didn't think I would be going there. Then they called my name."

Edwards is the first ECU player to be chosen in the first round of the NBA draft and only the third Pirate ever drafted by the league. The other two were Oliver Mack, who played briefly for the Dallas Mavericks and the Chicago Bulls in the late 1970s and early 1980s, while George Maynor was chosen in the fourth round by the Bulls in 1979 as a fifth year senior, but failed to make the squad when he joined it in 1980.

The selection capped a hectic week for the 6-5 Edwards, who was the 1988-89 Colonial Athletic Association Player of the Year. Over the last

Hornets Get Inside Help

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHARLOTTE — The Charlotte Hornets, the worst rebounding team in the NBA last year, emerged from the 1989 college draft with two physical inside players.

In what had to be one of the worst-kept secrets in the sport, the second-year team drafted 6-foot-9 North Carolina power forward J.R. Reid as their No. 1 pick in Tuesday's college draft.

Reid's selection was greeted with loud cheers and a few boos by the nearly 16,000 fans who came to the Charlotte Coliseum to watch the Hornets officials make their selections.

Shortly before Charlotte's pick was announced on WTBS from New York City, Hornets general manager Carl Scheer took the microphone.

"In about a minute and a half we are going to announce that we

Kings Make Ellison Top NBA Choice

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — On his chest, Pervis Ellison will wear No. 42, but for one night at least, he was No. 1. And finally, the secret is out.

Ellison's selection Tuesday night ended a month of speculation over how Sacramento would use its No. 1 pick in the NBA draft.

"It's hard for me to say how I feel, how happy I am," said Ellison, a second team All-American from Louisville.

And when did he find out he would become the first of this year's college class to go pro?

"When the commissioner announced it," he said.

All-American Danny Ferry, who led Duke to the Final Four this year for the third time in four seasons, was the second pick, taken by the Los Angeles Clippers. Another All-American, Sean Elliott of Arizona, went third to the San Antonio Spurs. Either could have been No. 1.

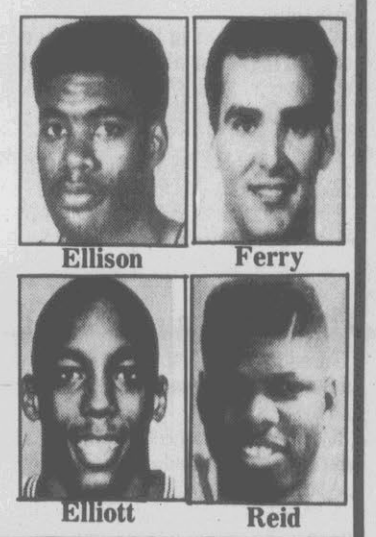

"I was 90 percent sure I wasn't going first," said Elliott, The Associated Press 1989 Player of the Year, "so it didn't bother me at all. I thought I could go anywhere from No. 2 to 6. It was such a crazy draft this year that anything could have happened."

Five of the first six players taken were big men, the exception long-shooting Glen Rice of the national champion Michigan Wolverines, taken No. 4 by the Miami Heat. North Carolina forward J.R. Reid went next, staying in the same state when he was picked by Charlotte. Stacey King, Oklahoma's All-American center, went sixth to the Chicago Bulls.

The first point guard taken in the draft was George McCloud of Florida State, who averaged 22.8 points and 4.2 assists, taken seventh by the Indiana Pacers. Eleven of the 27 first-round picks were used for backcourt players.

Sherman Douglas, the All-American guard from Syracuse, did not go until Miami made him the first pick of the second round, 28th overall. The Big Ten player of the year, guard Jay Edwards of Indiana, was the Clipper's second-round selection, No. 33. The Big East player of the year, guard Charles Smith of Georgetown, was not drafted at

Rose Jokes On Deposition

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Pete Rose wisecracked about his boss, his son and his team's second-place finish even as he categorically denied betting on baseball during his April deposition to baseball investigators.

According to a 359-page transcript of his testimony, the Cincinnati Reds' manager reserved his harshest criticism for his accusers, saying "these guys were all in trouble with drugs," and "they have to sing or they'll be in Sing Sing."

During the two days of questioning on April 20-21, Rose displayed politeness for his inquisitor, John M. Dowd — at one point he said, "Please, call me Pete; Mr. Rose is my dad," — but he also turned sarcastic and impatient at times, insisting over and over that he had no debts.

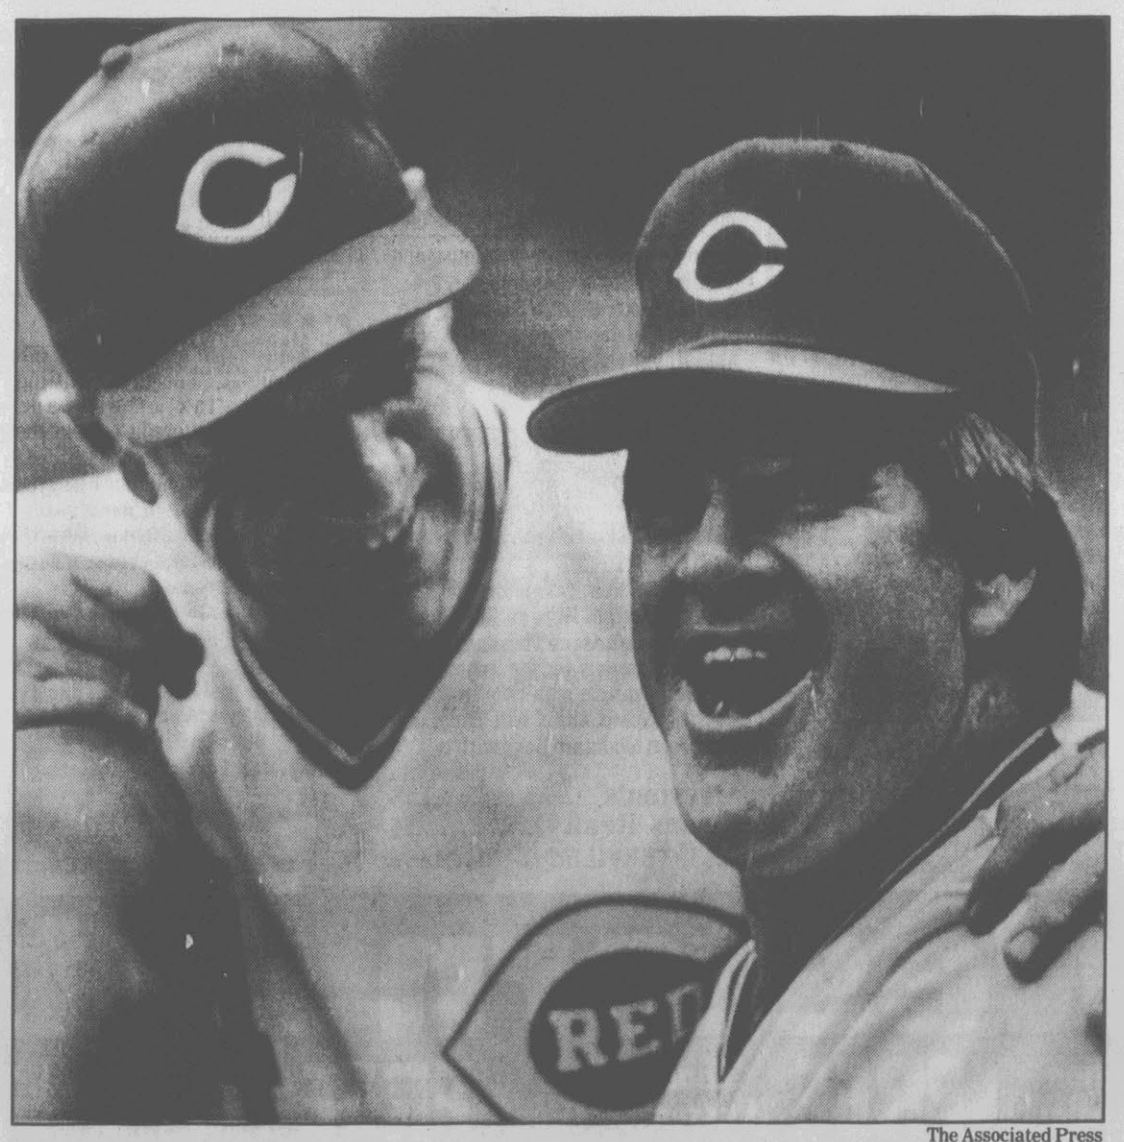

At one point, when Rose talked about his friendship with Gold's Gym manager Thomas P. Gioiosa, he brought up his son, Pete Jr.

"The one who plays ball for the ... Orioles farm club?" Dowd asked.

"The one that struck out four times last night," Rose replied. "The one that's catching a lot of hell ... from the stands."

"Sorry to hear that," Dowd answered.

He said his principal accusers — Ronald Peters, Janszen, Michael E. Fry and Gioiosa — "were all trying to link gambling to me because they were all in trouble with drugs."

Rose's Lawyers Ask For A Stay

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CINCINNATI — Pete Rose's lawyers are trying to protect his court victory and his reputation.

Lawyers for the Cincinnati Reds' manager asked a state appeals court today to preserve a temporary restraining order that keeps Rose's case out of the hands of baseball Commissioner A. Bartlett Giamatti. The commissioner's lawyers are trying to get the order revoked so Giamatti can decide whether Rose bet on his own team.

Rose's lawyers also launched their defense of Rose against a sweeping array of accusations contained in the report on baseball's investigation of Rose.

In statements released Monday as part of the 225-page report by John M. Dowd and eight accompanying volumes of evidence, Rose is accused of:

— Trying to get involved in a cocaine ring to raise money at a time when he was making large wagers.

— Threatening to hurt a bookmaker when he didn't pay off Rose's winnings.

— Calling other managers to check on the status of their players before wagering on their teams.

— Suggesting he might throw a baseball game if he had a large wager on it.

Rose lawyer Robert Pitcairn Jr. said baseball's decision to include all of the accusations in the documents publicly released Monday show the commissioner is being unfair to Rose.

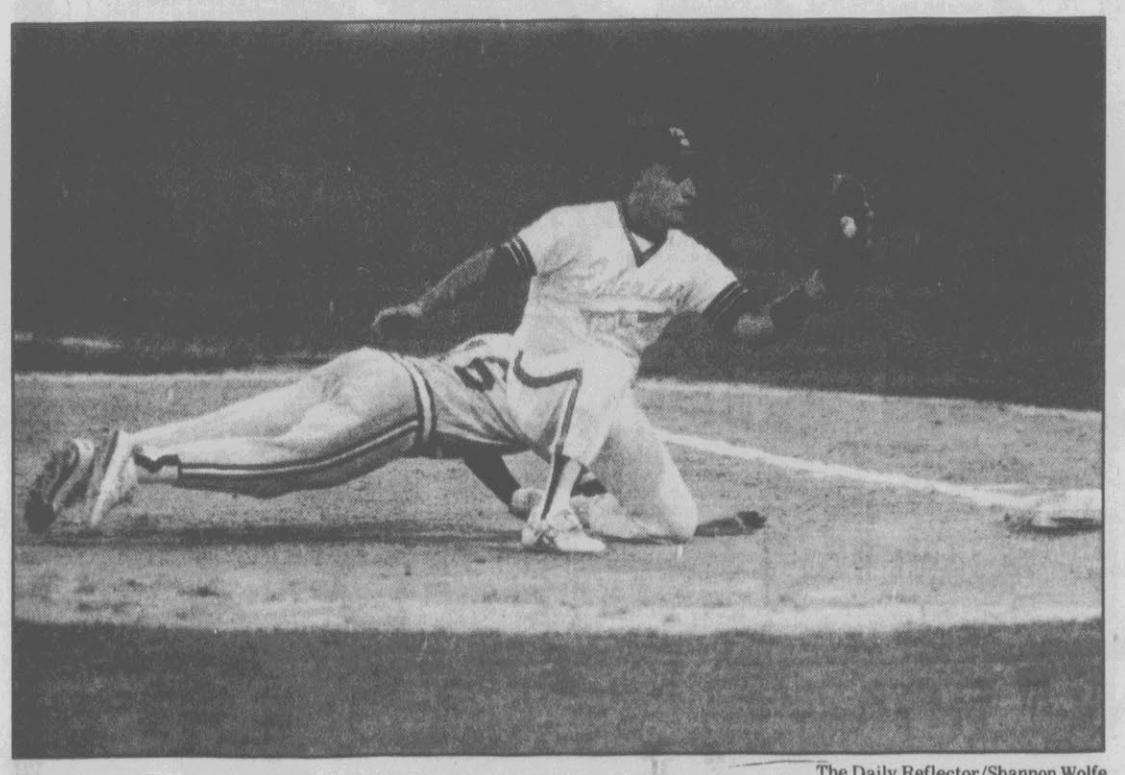

"It's further evidence of the bias shown against Rose throughout this whole proceeding," Pitcairn said. "It's of no relevance to the issues the commissioner was supposed to be investigating. Why Dowd included it (in the report) is totally beyond me."

Rose declined to comment specifically on the allegations Tuesday night following the Reds' 9-3 victory over Atlanta.

"In a couple of days, it'll all die down," he said. "We'll probably have a response next week sometime, around the sixth (of July)."

That's when Rose's lawyers are scheduled to appear again before Hamilton County Common Pleas Judge Norbert A. Nadel, who ruled Sunday that Giamatti has prejudged Rose as guilty. Nadel barred Giamatti from deciding the case until the judge can hold a hearing on a preliminary injunction request.

Pitt County Uses Late Rally For 8-7 Win

Walter Gatlin dives back into first as Edenton's Al Pierce tries for a pickoff

By Woody Peele
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Pitt County's American Legion baseball team kept coming back and finally "stole" an 8-7 baseball victory over Edenton Tuesday night.

The win kept Pitt County in the chase for the Area One East title and for one of the league's two byes in the first round of the playoffs, which start Friday.

Pitt never led in the game until it took the lead at 8-7 in the bottom of the eighth inning. Edenton most of the way. Each time Pitt would rally to tie, Edenton would come up with the runs to regain the lead, finally taking a 7-4 lead in the top of the eighth.

But in the bottom of the frame, Pitt pushed in four runs with Heath Clark stealing home with what proved to be the winning run.

David Leisten led off for Pitt in the eighth, delivering a single to right. Ty Little followed with a hit to left and Derrick Clark drew a walk, loading the bases. Jamie Brewington's grounder to second was errored when the shortstop failed to hold the ball. Both Leisten and Little scored. Heath Clark then followed with a single in the hole at short, scoring Derrick Clark. Chris Christopher's grounder back to the mound forced Brewington at third, and Maurice Hines grounded back to third where Heath Clark knocked the ball away from the baseman, reaching safely.

"We had our chances to get them out and we couldn't do it," Edenton coach Lin Jordan said. "If we had gotten that force out at second (the first error) we would have been in good shape. Then, we had that double play ball knocked away too that could have gotten us out of it."

Jordan had gone to his bullpen, relieving starter Erik Jernigan after Derrick Clark's walk. "The reliever (Jeff Creef) did the job. He didn't walk anybody and nobody hit the ball out of the infield. But we just couldn't get anybody out."

With Walter Gatlin at the plate and the bases loaded, Creef went to a full wind-up and Pitt coach Grant Jarman called for the suicide squeeze.

"Walter missed the sign," Jarman said. Nevertheless, Gatlin had the presence of mind to take a full swing at the ball as Clark dashed down the line toward the plate, easily sliding in under the tag for the steal, giving Pitt the 8-7 lead.

"I just don't think we were ready to play tonight," Jarman said. "Most of the team didn't know we were going to play until mid-afternoon and some of them didn't know until 5:30 or so." The game had been rescheduled at mid-day as the two teams struggled to get as much of the schedule in before the season ends. "We were just not prepared to play, but I'm proud of the way they came back."

Jarman said he thought starting pitcher Rod Gorham did a good job but he didn't get much backing. Pitt made three errors behind him and three of the first four Edenton runs were unearned.

Edenton took the lead in the first with a run. With one out, Duane Byrum walked and Nash Long singled to center. An error on the play allowed Byrum to come all the way around.

Snow Hill Rolls By Rocky Mount

ROCKY MOUNT — Snow Hill continued to march toward the Area One East regular season title with a 12-7 victory over Rocky Mount in American Legion baseball action Tuesday night.

Snow Hill scored first with a run in the second, but Rocky Mount took the lead with two in the bottom of the inning. Snow Hill scored twice in the third and Rocky Mount, once, to leave it knotted at 3-3 at that point.

It stayed that way until the sixth, when Snow Hill broke it open with five runs, taking an 8-3 lead that Rocky Mount never overcame.

Todd Mewborn led off the sixth with a double and Scott Sutton singled. George Burnette singled in Mewborn and Cedric Collins followed with a double, driving in Sutton and Burnette. Ed Stanley walked and an error on Jimmy Hardy's grounder allowed both Collins and Stanley to score.

Burnette, Collins, Stanley and Sutton each collected three hits to lead the Snow Hill attack. No one had more than one hit for Rocky Mount.

Snow Hill improves to 11-4 on the year while Rocky Mount slips to 10-6. Snow Hill travels to Wayne County tonight while Rocky Mount visits Pitt County.

Wooten, along with his father, George, are competing in the Hobie 21 class of the event, which features races at Wrightsville Beach, Newport, R.I., Annapolis and Miami. Their boat is being sponsored by Omar Sails of Beaufort.

Three of the races have already been held. In the latest, at Newport, the Wootens finished 21st in the field. The final event, in Miami, is set for October.

ESPN will telecast the Newport race on Aug. 21.

The nationals attracted over 3,500 participants in all sports from 47 states, Guam and Puerto Rico.

After that, each team is allowed five roster changes a month. Players cut will be allowed to continue to practice, but cannot dress out for games.

McEnroe Rallies To Beat Cahill

Charismatic John Comes From Two Sets Down To Win Three In Row

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WIMBLEDON, England — Trust John Patrick McEnroe.

On a day when everything before and after him was predictable and dull, the world's most charismatic tennis player lit up the world's most famous tennis court with the comeback of his 14-year career.

"I don't ever remember coming back from two sets down before," the mercurial McEnroe said after his 4-6, 4-6, 6-2, 6-3, 8-6 first-round victory over Darren Cahill of Australia on Wimbledon's Centre Court on Tuesday.

"It's great to come back and win the match," he said. "Let's face it, I could easily be out of the tournament."

Technically, the match may not have been of the highest quality. Both players struggled with their first serves. But it transcended tennis. It was pure theater.

"I never really got my game in total gear," McEnroe said after the 3½-hour battle that started in sunshine and finished in evening gloom with a standing ovation for both players. "I don't think it's the greatest match he's ever played either. But for excitement ..."

For excitement, it beat the rest of the day's matches put together. They included straight-set victories for defending women's champion Steffi Graf and her three main rivals, Martina Navratilova, Chris Evert and Gabriela Sabatini.

Graf, playing her first match since losing the French Open final to 17-year-old Arantxa Sanchez, gave up only eight points on serve as she swamped Julie Salmon of Britain 6-1, 6-2. Navratilova opened her bid for a record ninth women's singles title with a 6-3, 6-2 victory over Jill Hetherington of Canada.

Evert, recovered from an ear infection, downed Peanut Harper 6-1, 6-1, while Sabatini conceded fewer games than any of the main contenders by trouncing Diane Balestrat 6-1, 6-0.

But of all the 42 completed singles matches on the second day of the championships, one stood out — the best rally of McEnroe's career.

"I expected a tough match. I didn't expect something like this," McEnroe said. "It's a positive just to be able to sit and dwell on this for a day but I'm proud of this, coming from two sets down to win."

For two sets, the left-handed American, who gave up a large part of the European clay-court season to concentrate on winning a fourth Wimbledon crown, appeared to have wasted all the preparation.

Deserted by his serve — he double-faulted 16 times — McEnroe allowed his 23-year-old opponent, at No. 26 the highest-ranked non-seeded player in the men's draw, to control the match.

Cahill, a dangerous serve-and-volleyer who beat Boris Becker on his way to last year's U.S. Open semifinals, appeared set to become the second unseeded Australian in successive years to end McEnroe's Wimbledon hopes.

Last year, Wally Masur upset the three-time champion in the second round in McEnroe's return to Wimbledon after a four-year absence.

But with the crowd behind him and his temper in check apart from sporadic swipes of his racket, McEnroe dug deep into his repertoire of unorthodox strokes and turned the match around.

As his first serve and returns of serve improved, McEnroe broke Cahill twice in the third set and again in the fourth, passing the Australian with flicked backhands and mixing up the pace on his volleys.

In the fifth set, McEnroe's touch and variation were at their best. But he blew five break points and, serving second, was under continued pressure.

He kept his cool, broke Cahill with a backhand cross-court pass to go up 7-6 and served out the match with a pair of swinging, swerving aces.

Lions.....10
Coca-Cola.....8

The Lions rallied for five runs in the fifth inning and captured a 10-8 win over Coca-Cola, winning the North State Little League playoff championship Tuesday evening.

The victory will advance the Lions into the City Little League Championship best-of-three series against Pepsi-Cola, the upset winner in the Tar Heel Little League. That series starts today at 6 p.m. at Elm Street Park.

Coca-Cola, the regular season winner in the league, was knocked into the losers' bracket of the double-elimination tournament by the Lions, but fought back to beat the Lions on Monday and force the "sudden death" game.

Coke took the lead with three runs in the first on back-to-back homers by Jaime Wilson and Adrian Jones. The Lions came back with two in their half of the frame, only to see Coke score one in the second and two in the third on a two-run double by Brett Charlton. That gave the Lions a 6-2 lead. They added two more in the top of the fourth to make it 8-2.

But the Lions rallied for three in the fourth on a three-run homer by Daryl Cherry. Then, in the fifth, the Lions came up with five runs, climaxed by a two-run double by Bryan Fagundas that gave the Lions the win.

Scott Briley got the win, going the distance. He walked eight, gave up nine hits and struck out nine.

Briley and Trabien Shivers each had two hits to lead the Lion attack. James Ebron had three hits and Jones had two to lead Coke.

have chosen J.R. Reid," he said.

Most of the fans screamed in approval. Others booed and gave thumbs down to the selection.

The pick should have come as no surprise, as many experts predicted the Hornets would go after the North Carolina star. Last week, majority owner George Shinn went on the record saying he wanted to choose Reid.

Following the draft, Shinn said he would have been willing to listen to Scheer and the rest of the staff if they thought another player — particularly Oklahoma's Stacey King — was a better choice.

"It was unanimous," he said. "Everyone agreed we should go after J.R."

The Hornets also completed a deal Tuesday night to obtain 7-foot Indiana Pacers center Stuart Gray by trading their second-round pick, Dyron Nix, a 6-7 forward out of Tennessee.

Gray appeared in 72 games last season, averaging 2.6 points a game. Hornets coach Dick Harter said his statistics do not reflect his talents.

"From one of the weaker teams in the league, now we've got a chance to be a physical basketball team," he said. "There will be more people in the lane."

Orioles 'Walk' Past Blue Jays

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The first major-league game between teams with black managers was memorable. Because of what happened on the field, not in the dugouts.

Frank Robinson's Baltimore Orioles trounced Cito Gaston's Toronto Blue Jays 16-6 Tuesday night in a zany evening at Memorial Stadium.

Toronto outhit the Orioles 13-11. But Baltimore drew 15 walks — most in the majors this season and tying a team record — and took advantage of four errors, three by third baseman Kelly Gruber.

"I didn't wake up this morning thinking about it (the historical significance)," Gaston said. "I woke up thinking about a game between the Blue Jays and the Orioles."

Baltimore won the first meeting of the year between the teams and increased its lead in the American League East to 6½ games. The Orioles matched their season high for runs and ended a three-game losing streak, sending Toronto to its third consecutive defeat.

"I don't know if this was a big game, but it is an important series," Robinson said. "To jump out and score 16 runs is very gratifying, but I don't think we were lucky. We took advantage of the walks."

In other AL games, Minnesota downed Oakland 11-5, California beat Cleveland 2-1 in 10 innings, Detroit rallied past New York 6-5, Seattle routed Kansas City 8-0, Milwaukee stopped Boston 5-4 and Texas defeated Chicago 5-1.

Randy Milligan hit a three-run homer, two doubles and a single, and drove in four runs. Mickey Tettleton hit his 18th homer and also drove in four runs and Craig Worthington had three RBIs.

Milligan hit an RBI double during a four-run first inning, doubled in the two-run third, singled in the three-run fourth and hit a three-run homer in the fifth as the Orioles made it 13-3. Milligan was robbed of another home run in the sixth when left fielder George Bell made a leaping catch above the fence.

"This was the kind of night you dream of but you never expect," Milligan said. "It was a special night. Every player has one in the major leagues and tonight was mine."

Jay Tibbs, 5-0, struggled but wound up with Baltimore's first complete-game victory since April 23. Fred McGriff and Gruber homered in the ninth inning.

Mike Flanagan, 4-6, gave up six runs on six hits and four walks in 2 2-3 innings. Frank Wills and Dewayne Buice followed, and the three combined to throw 220 pitches.

Twins 11, Athletics 5

Kirby Puckett drove in three runs for the second straight game and Minnesota scored eight times in the sixth inning to beat Oakland.

The Twins have won 13 of their last 18 games. Minnesota combined four hits, five walks and an error in their third eight-run inning of the season.

In the sixth, Puckett hit a grounder that went through the legs of third baseman Carney Lansford, allowing two runs to score. Center fielder Dave Henderson lost a fly ball in the Metrodome lights, enabling two more runs to come home.

Gary Wayne, 3-0, got the victory and Juan Berenguer went three innings for his second save. Gene Nelson, 2-3, was the loser.

Mariners 8, Royals 0

Brian Holman pitched a seven-hitter for his first AL shutout and Jeffrey Leonard hit a three-run homer as Seattle beat Kansas City for its third straight victory.

Despite losing its third consecutive game at home, Kansas City's 26-11 record at Royals Stadium is the best in the major leagues.

Holman, 2-2, pitched his second career shutout and the second by the Mariners this season.

Holman, who is lives in Kansas, left 57 tickets for family and friends. His 16-year-old sister, Brandy, caught a foul ball.

Leonard, who hit 10 homers last season, hit his 15th home run of the year. Darnell Coles also connected in the fifth inning against Luis Aquino, 3-2.

Tigers 6, Yankees 5

Alan Trammell's two-run double in the bottom of the ninth inning rallied Detroit over New York. The Tigers have won 11 of the last 12 games with the Yankees at home, including eight straight.

Tracy Jones and Lou Whitaker opened the ninth with singles off Lee Guetterman, 1-1. Trammell followed with a double to left field, and Whitaker barely beat shortstop Alvaro Espinoza's relay to the plate.

Steve Sax went 5-for-5, and his solo home run put the Yankees ahead 5-4 in the eighth. Brad Havens, 1-1, got the victory.

Brewers 5, Red Sox 4

Rookie Gary Sheffield went 3-for-3 against Roger Clemens and helped the Milwaukee Brewers beat the Boston Red Sox.

Clemens, 8-6, lost to the Brewers for only the third time in 11 career decisions. He went 6 1-3 innings, just the third time in 17 starts this season that he failed to go seven innings.

Don August, 7-7, allowed one earned run on seven hits in 6 2-3 innings. Dan Plesac got his 19th save.

Angels 2, Indians 1

Jack Howell led off the top of the 10th inning with a home run and California defeated Cleveland for its fourth straight victory.

Howell hit his ninth homer of the season. The Angels are 9-0 in games in which Howell homered.

Neil Allen, promoted from Class AAA Colorado Springs on Monday, made his first appearance for the Indians and Howell was the first batter he faced.

Rich Monteleone, 2-0, pitched 2 1-3 innings for the victory. Bryan Harvey got his 10th save.

Rangers 5, White Sox 1

Rookie Kevin Brown pitched 8 1-3 strong innings and Texas won in Chicago.

Brown, 7-4, lost his a bid for his first shutout in the ninth inning. Jeff Russell got two outs for his 18th save.

Jeff Kunkel, filling in for injured shortstop Scott Fletcher, drove in two runs. Kunkel is 6-for-17 since Fletcher sprained his left ankle five games ago.

Rookie Greg Hibbard, 0-2, was the loser.

Astros Rally, Snap Giants' String

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

With one swing, Craig Biggio ended a couple of streaks that had the San Francisco Giants thinking the National League West was theirs.

The Giants were four outs away Tuesday from their eighth straight victory over the Houston Astros and a five-game lead in the National League West.

To help them to it, the Giants called on Steve Bedrosian. But for the first time since being acquired from Philadelphia, Bedrosian couldn't hold the lead as the Astros rallied for a 7-5 victory.

Trailing 5-3 with two outs in the eighth, Ken Caminiti doubled and scored on a single by Rafael Ramirez. Bedrosian, 2-4, relieved Jeff Brantley and, after an intentional walk to Bill Doran, Biggio hit a three-run homer.

"When you're looking at a 90 mph-plus fastball like he has, you've got to turn it up a notch," Biggio said. "I knew he had to come in with a good pitch. I knew I hit it good. I was just afraid it was too high and not far enough."

It was.

In his previous five save opportunities with the Giants, Bedrosian had come through each time.

"I gave him a fat pitch," Bedrosian said. "My performance was unsatisfactory. I have to face the music and face the fact I didn't get the job done."

Elsewhere in the NL, it was Montreal 3, New York 2 in 14 innings; Cincinnati 9, Atlanta 3; Pittsburgh 5, Chicago 4; Philadelphia 4, St. Louis 2, and San Diego 5, Los Angeles 3 in 17 innings.

The victory moved the Astros to within three games of the first-place Giants, and Houston manager Art Howe had a tough time explaining the importance of the game.

"Words can't describe their performance," Howe said. "I was just waiting for something to happen. We didn't have much going for us with two outs, but Biggio came through."

Danny Darwin, 7-2, pitched two innings of scoreless relief for the victory, striking out the side in the ninth.

"That was flat gas," Howe said. "He was throwing wall-to-wall heat."

Expos 3, Mets 2

Tim Wallach's single scored Nelson Santovenia with one out in the 14th inning as Montreal beat New York at Olympic Stadium for its fifth straight victory.

The win, the 500th of Manager Buck Rodgers' career, moved the first-place Expos 1½ games in front of the Mets and Chicago Cubs in the NL East.

Santovenia doubled to left off Rick Aguilera, 3-3, with one out and moved to third on Otis Nixon's infield hit. Wallach then lined a 1-2 pitch into center field.

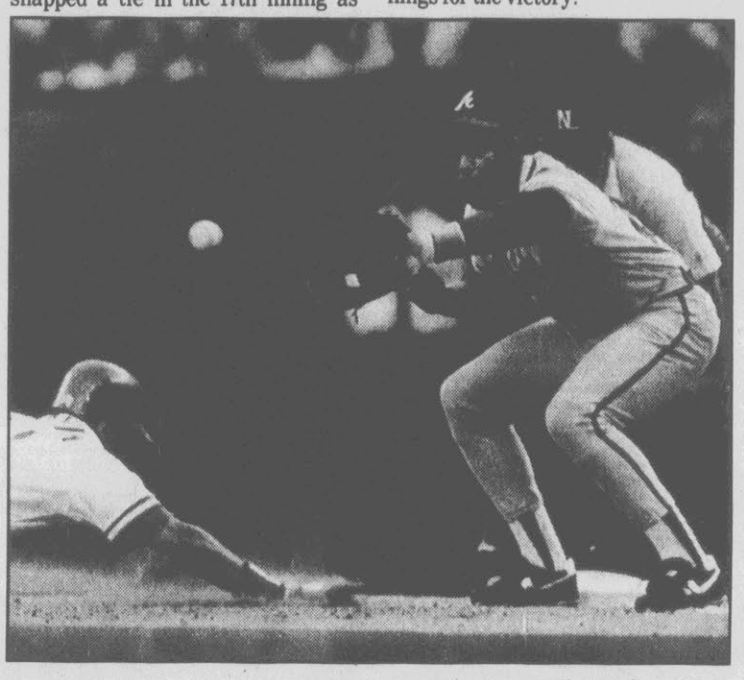

Steve Frey, 2-0, pitched one inning for the victory.

Padres 5, Dodgers 3

Chris James' run-scoring single snapped a tie in the 17th inning as San Diego beat Los Angeles at Dodger Stadium. It was the second marathon game of the season for the Dodgers. On June 3, they lost to Houston in 22 innings.

Tony Gwynn started the 17th with a one-out, bad-hop single and stole second. Tim Belcher, 4-8, intentionally walked Jack Clark before James followed with a single to right. Clark went to third on the hit and scored on Garry Templeton's sacrifice fly to left.

Pat Clements, 1-0, pitched 4 2-3 innings for the victory.

Barry Larkin dives back into first on pickoff attempt

Reds 9, Braves 3

Todd Benzinger hit a grand slam and rookie Scott Scudder allowed no runs and two hits in 6 1-3 innings, leading Cincinnati past Atlanta at Riverfront Stadium.

Barry Larkin extended his hitting streak to six games with singles in his three at-bats to increase his hit total to 99. He was 3-for-4 and leads the National League with a .365 average.

Pirates 5, Cubs 4

Andy Van Slyke and Bobby Bonilla hit consecutive run-scoring triples during a four-run first inning as visiting Pittsburgh sent Chicago to its fifth straight loss.

The first four Pirates' batters in the game hit safely against Rick Sutcliffe, 9-5.

Phillies 4, Cardinals 2

Rookie Dennis Cook allowed four hits in eight-plus innings and drove in a run as Philadelphia defeated St. Louis at Busch Stadium, sending the Cardinals to their fourth straight loss.

Cook, who began the season in the minor leagues, is 2-0 since being acquired from San Francisco on June 18 in the trade for Steve Bedrosian.

Tommy Herr, Steve Jeltz and Darren Daulton also drove in a run apiece for the Phillies.

Baseball Notes

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

San Francisco's Kevin Mitchell, baseball's home run leader, has overtaken the New York Mets' Darryl Strawberry for the top outfield spot in fan balloting for the National League team for the All-Star Game.

Meanwhile, Mike Schmidt, who retired from Philadelphia last month, continued to lead third basemen.

Mitchell, with 25 home runs, has received 897,113 votes, the league said Tuesday. Strawberry, who had been the outfield leader since early in the balloting, dropped to second with 882,322 votes.

San Diego's Tony Gwynn made his first appearance among the top three outfielders, with 515,163 votes.

Schmidt, who will be replaced if he is voted to the starting lineup, had 451,063 votes, compared to 384,037 for runner-up Chris Sabo of Cincinnati.

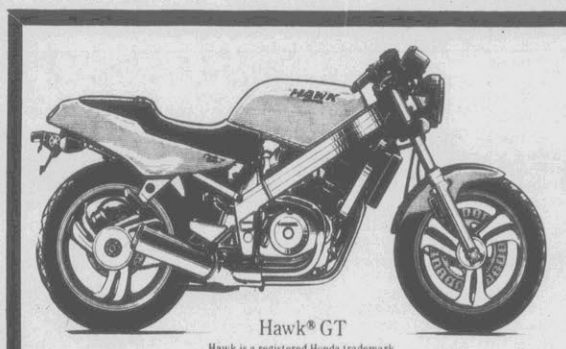

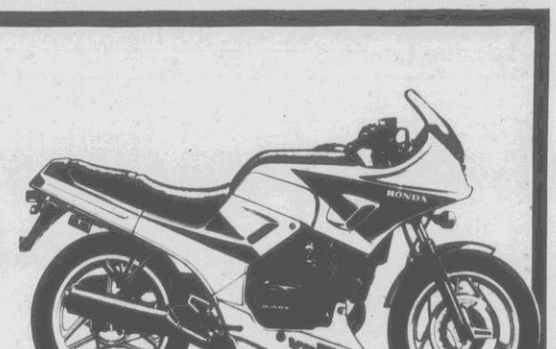

St. Louis shortstop Ozzie Smith, the top vote-getter last year, continued to lead with 1,058,254 votes. First baseman Will Clark of San Francisco was second with 969,109 votes.

Ellison Chosen 1st By Kings ...

all, probably because he only weighs 165 pounds.

Reid, who just completed his junior year at North Carolina, was the first underclassman taken, and Oklahoma had the first doubleheader. After King was selected by Chicago, the New Jersey Nets took guard Mookie Blaylock of the Sooners with the 12th pick.

The Kings earned the No. 1 pick last month in the NBA's lottery. Their choice was a well-kept secret, although Ellison knew Kings vice president Bill Russell was interested.

"I'm glad for the opportunity to learn from a man who I consider the best center ever," Ellison said. "I had talked with Bill Russell, so I knew they were interested in me, but I was still surprised. Most of the players I was talking with today didn't have any idea who was going to be No. 1."

The 6-foot-9 Ellison averaged 17.6 points and 8.7 rebounds last season for Louisville, where he earned the nickname "Never Nervous" Pervis.

"Actually, I wasn't nervous," he said after standing in front of a screaming crowd at Madison Square Garden's Felt Forum as he held up his new, powder-blue jersey. If he felt timid on the big stage, he promises he won't feel the same way next winter.

"It's another level, and I have to be able to exist," he said. "I'm a rookie, but I feel confident in my ability."

After trading centers LaSalle Thompson and Joe Kleine in the same week last season, the Kings were left without a true, everyday pivotman. It showed as Sacramento finished 27-55, next-to-last in the Pacific Division. The Kings needed help up front.

"Management was looking for a big guy capable of doing all facets of the game," Ellison said. "I fit that mold. I'm not great in any one area, but I can do a little of everything."

Last year, the Clippers were the only team worse than Sacramento in the Pacific Division, and they need help of almost any type. Their biggest immediate problem, however, may be lack of experience, and they might be willing to part with Ferry to gain it.

"We might keep the pick or we might move it if we can get a quality veteran," Clippers general manager Elgin Baylor has said.

So, the 6-10 Ferry said that while he thought he could have gone No. 1 after averaging 22.6 points last season at Duke, he won't be surprised, no matter where he winds up.

Louisiana Tech forward Randy White was the eighth selection, by Dallas, and Georgia Tech forward Tom Hammonds went No. 9 to Washington. Pooh Richardson, the UCLA guard, was the 10th selection, going to the expansion Minnesota Timberwolves.

The league's other expansion team, the Orlando Magic, picked 11th, taking small forward Nick Anderson of Illinois, another college underclassman.

The Los Angeles Lakers used their first pick, 26th in the first round, to pick a 21-year-old Yugoslav, 7-1 center Vlade Divac of Partizan Belgrade.

Like Ellison, he couldn't have been happier.

"Magic Johnson is wonderful," he said, and of Los Angeles, he added: "That is the land of movie stars."

Jazz Draft Edwards In First ...

seven days, he traveled to Miami, Phoenix, Seattle, Houston, Orlando and Atlanta for interviews with team officials.

Pre-draft speculation had Edwards, who played his high school basketball at Greene Central in Snow Hill, going to the Atlanta Hawks with the 23rd pick, but a lot of things can change on draft day.

"I was talking to Blue's agent, and he said don't be surprised if someone takes him that hasn't talked to him," ECU basketball coach Mike Steele said.

And that's exactly what happened. The Jazz have a history of selecting lesser-known players from smaller schools.

Point guard John Stockton was the team's 17th choice out of Gonzaga University in Washington, and power forward Karl Malone was the 13th choice out of Louisiana Tech. In addition, the Jazz currently start two players who weren't selected in the first round, center Mark Eaton (4th rounder) and off-guard Bobby Hansen (3rd-rounder).

"We first saw him at Portsmouth, and he didn't play a whole lot," Scott Layden, director of player personnel for the Jazz, told the Deseret News of Salt Lake City. "But something he did caught our eye. When went to Chicago, we really got excited. We haven't mentioned him on purpose. We know he's not as well known. We were excited when it got to the 21st pick and he was still left."

Fans at the Salt Palace in Salt Lake City greeted the selection of Edwards with at best a mixed reaction.

"Oh I didn't think they were saying boo, I thought they were saying Blue. Remember a player we picked a few years ago who was heavily booed. That was Danny Schayes, and I'll tell you what, I wish we had him now (Schayes now starts for the Denver Nuggets).

"And John Stockton, the crowd was stunned when we picked him. They had no idea who he was, and now he's the best guard in the NBA. Their reaction doesn't really matter. Our reaction is that he can play. I think it's to our credit. We do our homework."

Edwards averaged 26.7 points per game and 6.3 rebounds per game this past season for ECU. Though he played down low a lot for the Pirates, he will likely play the big guard position for the Jazz.

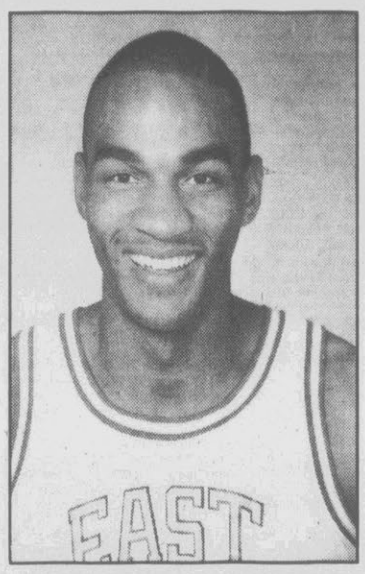

Currently the Jazz employ veterans Hansen and Darrell Griffith at that spot.

"I just talked to coach Jerry Sloan and evidently, they had kept their eye on me and just wanted to keep it a secret," Edwards said.

"Darrell Griffith has been around for a while and he is a good player, but he is getting old. (Bobby) Hansen is a good player. (I hope I can) just go in there and learn behind those two guys and fight for some playing time. Eventually, if I do well, I can earn (more) playing time and do some good things."

Though he had played in the Portsmouth Invitational and the Japan Classic All-Star games in front of numerous NBA scouts, Edwards stock really didn't begin to rise until he went to the NBA Pre-Draft Camp in Chicago June 6-7.

"He went from a guy who was going to be a free agent or at best a late-second round choice to where he is because of what he did in Chicago," Steele said. "He played well. He played with a lot of confidence. Me watching him, he played like he did all year in the conference. When he went to Portsmouth, he didn't play that well. He was a little nervous.

"I just talked to coach Jerry Sloan and evidently, they had kept their eye on me and just wanted to keep it a secret."

— ECU's Blue Edwards on the surprise at being picked by the Utah Jazz with the 21st pick in the first round of the NBA draft.

"(ECU Sports Information Director) Charles Bloom's office, my office, everybody. It's been ringing off the wall because of what he did in Chicago. He played well and showed that he could do more than shoot the basketball. He passed the ball well. His overall game was really good."

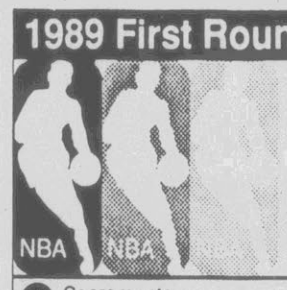

Over the last month or so, there were some expectations that Edwards would go in one of the draft's two rounds, but no guarantees until the past week.

"Up until I had to go to Chapel Hill for the State Games last week, I thought he'd go in the second round," Lewis Godwin, Edwards' prep coach at Greene Central said. "That's what everybody was hinting. Then Monday a guy from the (Los Angeles) Clippers, Jeff Weltman, called. They had the third pick in the second round and he said, 'I don't believe he's going to be around.' I said, 'when do you think he's going.' He said somewhere between the 15th and the 27th."

With Hansen and Griffith in front of him, Edwards is hopeful of a smooth transition to the professional ranks.

"It's less pressure on me," he said. "Going into the NBA is tough enough. Everybody has that transition period from college to the NBA. I think my development can be delayed a little bit because I'm not looked upon to be an (immediate) impact player. I'm more a piece of a puzzle."

Summer Fun

Camp Gives Young Dose Of Summer Fun

By Carol Tyer
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

SWANSBORO — Every one of the 81 youngsters at Camp Needles in the Pines last week has Type 1 insulin-dependent diabetes.

But coping with chronic medical conditions did not keep the campers, ages 8 to 16, from having rollicking fun Sunday through Saturday at this retreat on Bogue Sound.

They sailed, paddled canoes, swam, camped on Bear Island and learned new crafts. And they enjoyed impromptu pleasures like beachcombing, petting the camp mascot, a brown-eyed, blue-eyed part-husky named Mikey, and making funny announcements on the camp intercom.

"Most of all I enjoyed renewing old friendships," said camper Angela Avery, 15, of Farmville. "This is the fifth year I've been to Camp Needles, and I have good friends from all over the state that I don't see much except at camp. I write to a couple of them all year, and we really look forward to getting together for this week during the summer."

This is the sixth year the camp for diabetic children has been sponsored by the Department of Pediatrics of East Carolina University School of Medicine. Housed at the Camp Mitchell 4-H Camp site, it was founded by Dr. James Gutai, once a member of the ECU medical school faculty. Now it is run under leadership of ECU School of Medicine endocrinologist Dr. Alyne Ricker.

While many of the participants were ECU Medical School patients, not all were. Some were from as far west as Charlotte and Hickory.

"This camp wouldn't exist without generous contributions from many sources," Dr. Ricker said. "Many of our campers receive camperships and even the ones whose families pay receive partial support through the school of medicine. Without this support and the wonderful volunteer participation we get, we couldn't do half of what we do."

Students of the Carteret Community College Associate Degree program in recreational therapy coordinated many of the campers' activities. Among their duties were teaching skills such as campfire building and knot tying. A highlight of the week were separate overnight camping trips to Hammock's Beach State Park on Bear Island for the boys 14-16 and the girls 14-16. Both of these trips were directed by the Carteret Tech group.

Camp staff included physicians, students and staff from the ECU School of Medicine, along with nurses from both Pitt County Memorial and Wilson Memorial Hospitals. Several 17- and 18-year-olds who previously have been campers served as junior counselors. The Carteret County Diabetes Support Group also provided volunteers, as did the Marine Wing Support Squadron 271 of Cherry Point.

Parents were invited to bring their children to the site and take part in orientation and debriefing sessions designed especially for parents.

Besides usual camp activities, the participants learned about dietary management, glucose monitoring and injection techniques. For the newly diagnosed, it was a time to become thoroughly familiar with the regimen having the disease creates. For the veterans, it was a time to refine old skills and learn the latest ideas in diabetes management.

For both the veterans, like Miss Avery, and first-timers like Nikki Hardison, 14, of Walstonburg, it was a time for experiencing commonality and support.

"I loved being there," Nikki said. "At other camps, in other places where I'm with people my age, I have to get off by myself somewhere and give myself a shot. At that camp, it was just no big deal.

"I loved knowing, 'Hey, I'm not alone. A lot of kids have diabetes. And we get along just fine.'"

Chinese Uprisings Send Student To Poland

By William A. Shires
ECU NEWS BUREAU

Grace Jendrasiak had bought new luggage and had a $4,000 study-abroad scholarship in hand for a semester of study in Beijing this fall. But then on June 3-4 the Peoples Liberation Army quelled Chinese student protests in Tiananmen Square with violence and bloodshed.

The exciting prospect of a semester in China this year thus ended abruptly for the 21-year-old East Carolina University sociology major with that bloody assault and the harsh aftermath of the Chinese government's hardline crackdown on protesters.

"I didn't think it would turn out the way it did," she says. "Naturally, I am disappointed and very sad, very sorry. But the fact that I'm not going isn't important.

"The fact that people are dying there is almost more than I can bear," she said. "I haven't seen anything as tragic in my lifetime."

With the turn of events, Grace Jendrasiak is planning instead to go to Poland to study at the Jagiellonian University in Krakow, one of the oldest and most famous universities in Europe. The alternate plan was worked out quickly by Dr. Maurice Simon, director of ECU's office of international studies who happens to be a specialist in Polish studies.

In early spring Simon assisted in arranging for the study-abroad scholarship which would enable Jendrasiak to study at the Chinese Language Institute in Beijing under a cooperative Asian-African studies program. She would have been the first East Carolina University student to have gone to China to study under this program.

She was recommended by Dr. John Maiolo, professor and chairman of the sociology department, for whom Jendrasiak works as a graduate assistant. Before going to Poland, she now will spend a month on scholarship from Duke University in study and engage in an environmental impact assessment project at the Duke Marine Laboratories in Beaufort, N.C.

"I will go to Poland in the fall nd try to come back and complete my degree work here in the spring," she said. She is an ECU senior.

The daughter of a radiation physicist, Dr. Gordon L. Jendrasiak, an associate professor at the radiation oncology center, ECU School of Medicine, formerly on the physics faculty, Grace Jendrasiak is of a family with Polish ancestry.

She said she sees "some similarities" in the student protest movement in China and the liberal reform movements which have been most dramatic in Poland and Hungary. But, she added, China is "much more hard-line" than is the case with Communist governments in eastern Europe.

And Jendrasiak believes that the Chinese student protesters had targeted "small goals, relatively insignificant" during six or seven weeks of student protest gatherings in Beijing's Tiananmen Square.

But the calls for an end to official corruption in China provoked a crisis that ended with military intervention, gunfire and later mass arrests.

In Poland and Hungary, according to The Chronicle of Higher Education, universities are in the midst of liberal reforms which have brought greater autonomy and more flexibility in setting curricula and in choosing teaching staffs and methods.

"It will be very interesting to be in the midst of this movement," Jendrasiak said. She will be studying Polish language, economics and history and also will travel to Hungary, Czechoslovakia and East Germany.

Cynical? Who's Cynical?

By Don Oldenburg
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

The professor's skepticism got its start during his childhood in the Great Depression, but he'd never given up the flicker of idealism. Recent scandals and resignations in Congress had put that to the test. And his oldest son's hard-edged response troubled him even more.

"Oh, Jim Wright, yeah. It's the same thing you were saying about Nixon 20 years ago," remarked his son, a Columbia University student whose shrug made articulating the obvious unnecessary. All politicians are crooks after all. Nothing ever changes. Why get your hopes up?

"His overriding world view is awesomely jaundiced," laments Donald Kanter, a psychologist and professor of marketing at Boston University, whose recent visit with his son further confirmed his latest research and worst fears about rampant cynicism in America.

Certainly, a little cynicism is to be expected. Indeed, a little cynicism may be a good thing in a dangerous world, acknowledge Kanter and Phillip Mirvis, coauthors of The Cynical Americans: Living and Working in an Age of Discontent and Disillusion (Jossey-Bass, $22.95). The wary attitude does have a longstanding place in American

Artists Share Impressions Of Headaches

By Frank Spencer
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

"Not tonight, dear, I have a headache," may be a familiar excuse for avoiding one kind of self-expression.

But headaches can also inspire creativity. At least that's so for 213 New England artists whose depictions of the relentless, piercing pain of the headache on display last week in Boston.

"It felt like something being pulled out of my head; it was this stretchy feeling," said Raymond Dorow, whose battle with chronic headaches led him to try picturing the sensation on canvas for the exhibit, which coincided with a national medical conference on headaches in Boston.

The conference was held at Faulkner Hospital's John R. Graham Headache Centre, one of two headache clinics in New England. The other, in Stamford, Conn., is the New England Center for Headache.

Like latter-day surrealists, Dorow and his fellow afflicted artists reach for the symbolism of the bizarre, even the grotesque, to tell what it's like to have a migraine or chronic mal de tete.

Not given to understatement, Dorow, a 20-year-old artist from Athol, Mass., and one of 25 winners in a competition open to any headache sufferer with an artistic bent, pictured a hand stretching a fistful of gray matter like taffy from the top of a man's head. The look on the man's face tells it all.

In fact, almost all of the entries, displayed at Faulkner Hospital in the Jamaica Plain section of Boston, draw on an image immortalized by Edvard Munch in his painting, "The Scream." Mouths agape, hands pressed to the temples, these inked characters gripped by splitting headaches have more on their minds than a vague existential horror. This pain is real.

Some 42 million Americans get regular headaches, according to the Graham center. Five percent of those gets headaches daily, said Dr. Eligius L.H. Spierings, director of the Headache Research Foundation at Faulkner.

The tension, or muscle contraction, headache is the most common. Muscles in the face, neck and scalp

Crochet Or Knit Afghan

Baby your favorite baby with a snuggly handmade afghan that Mom will enjoy too. Take your choice of the knit or crocheted version — either is a beautiful baby accessory for you to create.

The lovely, traditional knit afghan features alternating strips of berry stitch and scallop stitch. Done in a worsted-weight acrylic yarn, it measures approximately 28 by 36 inches, including the graceful scallop border. This exquisite afghan will become a keepsake for years to come.

If you're in the mood for a more contemporary look, try your hand at the handsome, easy-to-make plaid crocheted afghan. Fashionably finished with fringe, it combines three colors of a sport-weight acrylic yarn and measures 28 by 35 inches. Today's baby will adore it, and you will have great fun creating it.

To obtain directions for making the Pick One for Baby Afghan, send request for Leaflet No. Z-062589 with $2 and a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope to: Pat Trexler Crafts, The Daily Reflector, P.O. Box 419148, Kansas City, Mo. 64141.

Or you may order Kit No. K-062589 by sending a check or money order for $13.95 to Pat Trexler Crafts at the same address. The kit price includes shipping charges, full instructions and acrylic yarn to make one afghan. Please specify your choice of the knit afghan or crochet afghan. The knit afghan is offered in pink, yellow, blue, peach or white. The crochet is offered in a blue, pink and white combination or a peach, green and white combination.

Want to try your hand at one or more of the pattern stitches used in the featured baby afghans? For either of the knit patterns, cast on 16 stitches and use knitting worsted-weight yarn with medium-to large-size needles. For ease in starting the pattern, work two to four rows of garter stitch first.

Universal Press Syndicate

Berry stitch and scallop stitch make afghan's pattern

For the berry stitch, all odd-numbered rows are worked on the wrong side and all even-numbered ones on the right side. For Row 1, knit the first 2 stitches. Step 1: Knit 1, purl 1, knit 1 all in the same stitch, thus making 3 stitches from 1. Step 2: Bring yarn forward and purl 3 stitches together. Repeat Steps 1 and 2 across to last 2 stitches; end with knit 2 stitches. Row 2: Purl all stitches.

For Row 3, knit 2. Step 1: Purl 3 stitches together. Step 2: Knit 1, purl 1, knit 1 all in the same stitch. Repeat Steps 1 and 2 across to last 2 stitches; end with knit 2. Row 4: Purl all stitches. Repeat Rows 1 through 4 for desired length.

For the scallop stitch, work on a panel of 16 stitches. Row 1: Knit 4. Step 1; Wrap yarn TWICE around the needle. Step 2: Knit 1. Repeat Steps 1 and 2 across to last 4 stitches. Wrap yarn ONCE around needle and then knit the last 4 stitches. Counting the extra wraps as stitches, this gives you 33 stitches.

Row 2: Knit 4. Step 1: Drop 1 wrap stitch. Step 2: Purl 2. Repeat Steps 1 and 2 across to last 4 stitches. Knit 4 (24 stitches). Row 3: Knit 4, knit 2 together, knit 12, knit 2 together, knit 4 (22 stitches). Row 4: Knit 4, knit 2 together, knit 10, knit 2 together, knit 4 (20 stitches).

Row 5: Knit 4, knit 2 together, knit 8, knit 2 together, knit 4 (18 stitches). Row 6: Knit 4, knit 2 together, knit 6, knit 2 together, knit 4 (16 stitches).

Repeat these 6 rows for desired length for pattern.

The crocheted plaid afghan pattern is worked with a definite color sequence in the horizontal crocheted rows and the vertical woven rows. But since the purpose of making a small sample swatch is simply to learn how easy this plaid effect is to create, I suggest that you change colors at random.

To begin, work a chain of 25 stitches. Work a foundation row as follows: Double crochet in the 5th chain from the hook. Step 1: Chain 1, skip 1 stitch. Step 2: Double crochet in next chain. Repeat Steps 1 and 2 across to end of row (11 spaces). Chain 4 and turn. The chain-4 counts as the first double crochet and chain 1 of the next row.

Row 2: Skip first double crochet and work a double crochet in next double crochet. Step 1: Chain 1, skip 1 stitch. Step 2: Double crochet in next double crochet. Repeat Steps 1 and 2 across, ending with a double crochet in 3rd chain of the turning chain. Chain 4 and turn. Repeat Row 2 for desired length, changing colors on even-numbered rows as you choose.

You will establish a plaid by threading triple strands of yarn into a large-eyed needle and weaving them in vertical rows over and under each open mesh space on the horizontal rows. At each end, leave 3 or 4 inches of the yarn strands for a fringe.

Because of the large volume of mail she receive, Pat is unable to answer your letters personally. However, she welcomes all question and hints, and will use those of general interest in the column whenever possible.

Daughters's Children More Thoughtful

Dear Abby
Abigail Van Buren

Dear Abby: I've been reading the letters about grandmothers who are inclined to be more generous to the children of their daughters than to the children of their sons.

Well, I'm one of those grandmothers, and I'd like to explain the reason for my favoritism. I am a widow with a daughter living at one end of the state and a son living at the other end. I'm in the middle.

My son and his wife have six children. They are all adults now, but when they were growing up, I'd send them lovely clothes — always the best. These clothes were soon in rags because the children had never been taught to take care of them. When I visited them, I'd see their clothes on the floor. They would deliberately walk on them — and the dog slept on them! I bought them expensive toys, and they made a game out of who could break them the fastest!

They never said "thank you" for anything. Nor did they write a note of any kind. When they were older and came to visit me, if I asked them to help me with something, they'd ask me how much I was going to pay them.

Now, let me tell you about my daughter's children. They took good care of whatever I gave them. They sent me handmade thank-you notes on which was scribbled, "I love you, Granny," when they were tiny tots. When they were grown, they'd call me just to say, "I'm thinking of you and love you very much." They really made me feel I was loved.

Abby, I love all my grandchildren, but I must be honest, I can't help but favor my daughter's children.

I know there are exceptions in every family, but I have observed that the children of daughters are usually more loving to their grandparents than the children of sons. — South Carolina Grandma

Dear Grandma: My mail confirms what you have observed. Read on:

Dear Abby: There is definitely a good reason why grandchildren are partial to one set of grandparents. I am in a position to know, as I have three sons and two daughters — with a total of 10 grandchildren.

We love all of our grandchildren and have tried not to favor the children of our daughters, but we can't help doing so. Our daughters' children have been raised to be very loving and attentive to us, but I can't say the same for the children of our sons.

Since all three of our sons married local girls, every time they come to town, there is the sharing of time, and the sons' parents are the last to be considered, or so it seems.

A little story helped us to accept the order of things after our eldest son was married. Here's the story: There was a knock on the door. The young son answered the door. The visitor said, "Hello. I'm your Aunt Ellen — on your father's side."

The little boy replies, "Well, I can tell you right now, you're on the wrong side."

So, whenever we begin to feel left out, one of us will quip, "I can tell you right now, you're on the wrong side!" Immediately, a chuckle replaces any possible resentment. — Living And Learning

Confidential To October Bride: A good marriage isn't a matter of luck. It's the result of a conscious and constant effort. It's giving and forgiving, knowing when to talk and when to keep quiet. All marriages are beautiful. It's the living together afterward that's difficult.

If you would like to write to Abby, send your letter to Abigail Van Buren, P.O. Box 69440, Los Angeles, CA. 90069. For a personal, non-published reply, enclose a self-addressed stamped envelope.

Sammy Davis Jr. Makes A Comeback

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — Looking back on the ups, downs and excesses of his 60-year career as an entertainer, Sammy Davis Jr. comments: "I'm probably the only man who was Dr. Franenstein and the monster."

A 60-year anniversary — he started hoofing onstage at the age of 3 — is cause for retrospection, and Davis was in a reflective mood. He also has a new autobiography, "Why Me?" (Farrar, Straus, Giroux, $18.95), an update of his 1965 memoir, "Yes, I Can." He talked openly about his years of excess as he sat at the bar of his Holmby Hills home. Uncharacteristically, he was nursing a soft drink.

"I created my own monster," he said. "Nobody put a gun to my head and said, 'You have to go over the top.' So I had to deal with it. Once I had created this thing, I didn't like who I was.

"I didn't realize it at the time, and it took a bunch of years of self-analysis. I've never gone to a shrink — I'm not proud of that statement. But there were no places for me to go, there was no Betty Ford's or this or that. I had to do it myself.

"I miss booze," he admitted. "There ain't no sense of me lying. Bourbon and Coke — oh, man, please! A bloody Mary on the plane, that was it! I would get on the plane and before it took off I had two bloody Marys. Or two salty dogs. Man, I'm ready. It can crash now, I don't care.

"I always had to have the sip before I walked on the stage. That was my reinforcement. I used to watch the guys go to the bathroom, not knowing they were going for a hit. I never did that. I'd just say, 'Bartender, may I have some more of this?'"

Davis quit drinking a dozen years ago because of cirrhosis of the liver. He told of sitting on a hospital bed while his doctor prepared to drain his bloated belly. "If it comes out cloudy, that's it: The bell's rung," said the doctor. He watched breathlessly and saw that the fluid was — clear.

But by the time he kicked the booze, his career was on the skids. "I had messed up so much in Vegas and Tahoe and other places that it was hard to get the bookings," he recalled.

His salary was cut because of his unreliability. "I'd get on the stage and I didn't know whether I did 40 minutes or an hour and 40."

After the boozing stopped, he played the Las Vegas Desert Inn for four weeks with a full orchestra. The trade realized that Sammy Davis Jr. was back.

His career may have been repaired, but his finances were not. One day Internal Revenue Service agents arrived at the Davis house to announce that it was being placed on lien. His income tax bill amounted to $2 million. His friends offered to help; Frank Sinatra was ready to write a check. So was casino owner Bill Harrah.

"No," said Davis. "Thank you very much, but I got to get out of it." He reached a longterm agreement to repay the government from his earnings.

"Why Me?" tells the whole story: the constant touring as a kid with his father and Will Mastin; the endless racial taunts; membership in Frank Sinatra's Rat Pack; the violent reactions to his romance with Kim Novak and his marriage to May Britt; the 1954 car crash that cost him an eye; the connections with the Kennedys, Richard Nixon and Martin Luther King; the enduring marriage to his third wife, Altovise.

Davis seems to remember everything, but of his show business beginning 60 years ago, he is uncertain: "It gets confusing. I don't know what they've told me about and what the reality is.

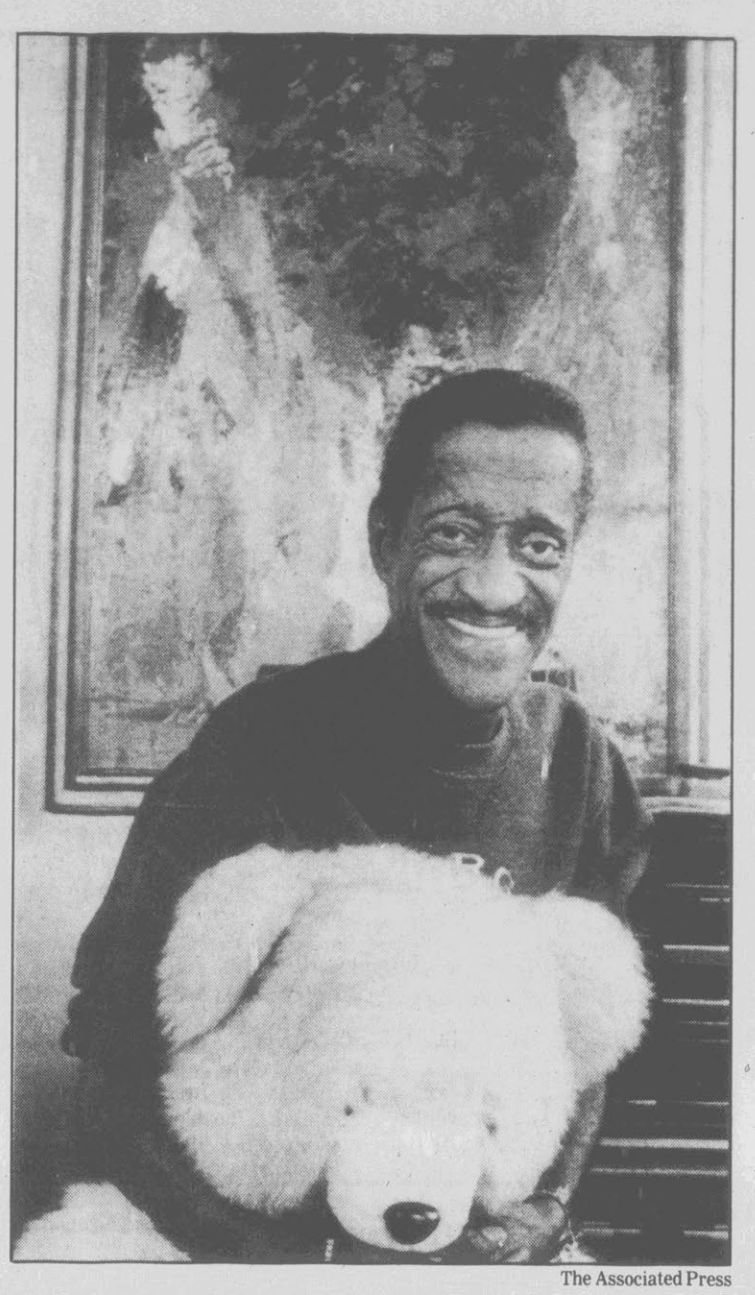

"I do remember wearing long pants. I couldn't have been more than 4 or 5. My dad and Will Mastin passed me off as a 44-year-old midget. I had a rubber cigar in my mouth and they would treat me like an adult. That was the only way we could get around the child labor laws. There was something called the Gerry Society that was strict on kids working.

"It worked for a couple of years until they got wise to us. Dad and Will got busted when we were playing a burlesque house on 42nd Street. Burlesque in those days was the poor man's Ziegfeld."

The major regret of his childhood was missing an eduation.

"I didn't have one day of formal education," said Davis. "I never sat in a classroom in my life. That's the one strict thing I have with my kids: Get an education. Most of them went to junior college, but at least they went. My daughter, Tracy, went to three junior colleges; she's a professional go-to-schooler."

At 63, Davis is riding high. Earlier this year he made his first screen appearance in a long time, drawing good reviews in "Tap" with Gregory Hines.

Opening lead: King of ♢

Many duplicate players are firm believers in light opening bids, especially in third seat. While we do not deny the advantages of getting in and out of the auction early, there are drawbacks as well. This hand is from a tournament in the Washington area.

If there is a good reason for East to open his hand in any seat, we haven't found one. South happened to be an adherent of the theory that fair hands with a 6-5 distribution almost always produce game, so she bounced into four hearts. West doubled to show some values, and there the auction ended.

The futility of East's opening came home to roost when West chose the king of diamonds as his opening lead. Declarer, Nadine Warfield of New York, was now in control. She won the ace, cashed the queen of diamonds and led a third diamond.

West chose to ruff with the six, and dummy overruffed. After cashing the ace of clubs, declarer returned to hand with a club ruff and led another diamond. West ruffed, led a spade to his partner's king and scored another diamond ruff, but that was the third and last trick for the defense. Declarer ruffed the ace of spades, drew the outstanding trump and claimed.

We have fairly simple rules for third-hand opening bids. If we do open light, it is in spite of having a sub-minimum hand, not because of it. We do so either to direct a lead, which can be of considerable aid to partner, or for preemptive purposes. East's hand met neither of these conditions.

'Batman' Blasts The Box Office

By John Horn
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

HOLLYWOOD — Despite mixed reviews, "Batman" earned a record $42.7 million in its first three days and the caped crusader's financial heroics carried Hollywood to an unprecedented $95 million weekend.

Figures released Monday showed the Warner Bros. movie demolished the previous opening-weekend record set the week before by "Ghostbusters II," which grossed $29.5 million.

"Batman," starring Michael Keaton in the title role and Jack Nicholson as the Joker, also scaled new heights for the best opening day ($15.3 million) on Friday; and the biggest Saturday ($14.6 million) and Sunday ($12.7 million) gates in movie history.

Those figures were rounded; the exact figures yielded the $42.7 million gross, according to John Krier of Exhibitor Relations Co., which tracks box-office performance.

Overall, American and Canadian movie fans spent more than $95 million at theaters during the weekend, breaking yet another record by $3 million.

"This is tremendous. It is the biggest weekend ever in the history of the business," said Krier.

This summer's box office take is 14 percent ahead of the pace set last year, when the movie business brought in a record $1.7 billion during the summer. Grosses have been boosted by higher ticket prices, more than $7 in some theaters.

The unprecedented popularity of "Batman" even helped the competition. Moviegoers frustrated by unbearably long "Batman" lines at some of its 2,194 screens dashed to Disney's modest comedy "Honey, I Shrunk the Kids."

"Honey," which is being shown with a new 7½-minute Roger Rabbit cartoon called "Tummy Trouble," collected $14.3 million in its debut to finish in second place in last weekend's box-office revenues. It broke all of Disney's opening box-office records, including those by "Cocktail" and "Three Men and a Baby."

The Disney production enjoyed the third-best opening weekend for any non-sequel movie, trailing only "Batman" and "Beverly Hills Cop," the studio said.

The most noticeable victim of "Batman" and "Honey, I Shrunk the Kids" was Columbia's "Ghostbusters II," with Bill Murray, Dan Aykroyd and Sigourney Weaver, which fell sharply from its own record opening. Finishing third on the box-office charts, "Ghostbusters II" grossed $13.9 million, a collapse of more than 52 percent.

In fourth place was Paramount's "Indiana Jones and the Last Crusade," which grossed $8.2 million. Just five weeks ago, the movie about the liberation of the Holy Grail set a record with $46.9 million in its first six days.

In fifth place was Disney's "Dead Poets Society" ($7.3 million), featuring Robin Williams as a crusading prep-school teacher.

"We are so excited about that picture," said Richard Cook, Disney's president of distribution. "With 'Indiana Jones,' 'Star Trek,' 'Ghostbusters' and 'Batman,' to have this movie performing at the level that it is. ... It's going to be around for a long, long time."

In sixth was "Star Trek V: The Final Frontier," the William Shatner-directed sequel that seems overwhelmed by the summer competition. After opening strongly two weeks ago, "Star Trek V" has disappeared into a box-office black hole, and grossed only $3.7 million last weekend.

Universal's baseball movie "Field of Dreams," with Kevin Costner, was in seventh on sales of $2.1 million. In eighth was the comedy "See No Evil, Hear No Evil," with $1.6 million.

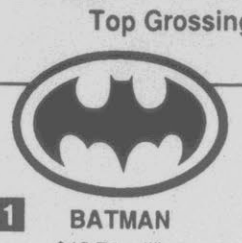

Rounding out the top 10 were "Road House" with $913,093 and "No Holds Barred" with $808,594.

Here are the top movies for the weekend as tallied by Exhibitor Relations, with distributor, weekend gross, number of theater screens, average per screen, total gross and number of weeks in release.

1. "Batman," Warner Bros., $42.7 million, 2,194 screens, $19,465 per screen, $42.7 million, one week.
2. "Honey, I Shrunk the Kids," Disney, $14.3 million, 1,371 screens, $10,403 per screen, $14.3 million, one week.
3. "Ghostbusters II," Columbia, $13.9 million, 2,410 screens, $5,749 per screen, $58.8 million, two weeks.
4. "Indiana Jones and the Last Crusade," Paramount, $8.2 million, 2,103 screens, $3,881 per screen, $136.3 million, five weeks.
5. "Dead Poets Society," Disney, $7.3 million, 1,091 screens, $6,732 per screen, $35.6 million, four weeks.
6. "Star Trek V: The Final Frontier," Paramount, $3.7 million, 2,007 screens, $1,866 per screen, $38.3 million, three weeks.

Dick Clark Productions Signs Burr For Series

NEW YORK (AP) — Quintessential TV lawyer Raymond Burr ("Perry Mason") has been signed as host of a daily, half-hour syndicated series dramatizing court cases.

"Trial By Jury" is slated to premiere on Sept. 11. The Dick Clark production marks Burr's first venture into syndicated television.

Lola Falana Back Onstage

LAS VEGAS (AP) — Entertainer Lola Falana, whose career was put on hold two years ago due to a bout with multiple sclerosis, returns to the stage Friday because, she says "I'm not into being a chicken."

Falana, 42, was partially paralyzed when struck by the debilitating disease in 1987.

She was asked in mid-June to play a weekend date at the Sands Hotel.

"They called and asked me 'Can you be ready by Friday,'" Falana said in a telephone interview Monday as she prepared for three days of rehearsals. "I told myself it's now or never — I guess I'll have to be ready. I'm not into being a chicken.

"You'd be surprised how high you can rise above these things if you set your heart and your mind to it. You have to move ahead, and make things happen."

Cynics' Numbers Are Increasing, Authors Say In New Book

tradition, fretting at the edge of American thought where it has been defined as a man who when he smells flowers looks for a coffin. "If you are not a little cynical, something is wrong," says Mirvis.

At least, that's what they thought initially. But after investigating for most of this decade the basic disbelief in human goodness and sincerity, Kanter and Mirvis were tormented by their conclusion. They believe the comely brand of cynicism that has been called "intellectual dandyism" is shifting to a darker and more sinister level of mistrust that has been called "intellectual treason."

Combing through their survey data, the two researchers uncovered so much evidence of misanthropy as to send them back to their statistics fully expecting to find a miscalculation. There was no mistake. Beyond statistics, they found flesh-and-blood verification: employees who don't trust their bosses, store clerks who have contempt for customers, voters too disillusioned to vote, college students out to get theirs however they can, entrepreneurs doing unto others before others do unto them, ordinary people who despise other ordinary people. To put it simply, in the United States, at the close of the 1980s, Machiavelli lives. Kanter and Mirvis say he probably lives next door to you. Or, more than likely, he is you.

For Those Who Trust Polls

"If you track it with surveys, the last 20 years have seen an erosion of trust," says Mirvis. "Everybody has that perception of politicians. And with business leaders, and with charitable groups. The broad presumption is that these leaders and institutions can't be trusted."

Numbers are telling of the fall of confidence. A survey in the late '50s disclosed more than 80 percent of Americans trusted the government. By the mid-'70s, that figure had dropped to about 33 percent. Barely one in four dare admit today to being so gullible. Last November, during the presidential election, the American Association of Retired Persons felt cynicism among older voters had become so serious a problem that the national group spent $400,000 on advertisements to combat the epidemic.

Similar signs show up in the business sector. Twenty years ago, public trust in business and its leaders tallied about 70 percent in polls. Hard to believe? Today, only 15 percent say they trust business. Other polls cited by Kanter and Mirvis specify the proliferation of mistrust of corporate America: Nearly 80 percent believe corporations don't pay their fair share of taxes; 70 percent say business doesn't make sure that its leaders behave ethically; more than half believe the products and services they pay for are poor values.

Suspicions also fester inside corporations — and not just at the shop level. According to figures from the Center for Organizational Effectiveness, fewer than half of male managers and only one in five female managers believe their companies have their best interests in mind.

Kanter and Mirvis admit public cynicism is nothing new. They speculate that it comes and goes in boom-and-bust cycles over the decades. But they are concerned the current boom is more pervasive than any before. Although hard-core cynics remain a minority of the population, by their count cynics are a "substantial minority" whose negativism is making inroads into the majority perspective. Their survey of a demographically representative sampling of 649 employed Americans indicates it won't get better any time soon:

— 60 percent believe (strongly or slightly) that most people will lie if they can gain from it, and 62 percent agree that few people stick to ethical standards when it comes to money.

— 58 percent believe that people pretend to care about other people more than they do, and 53 percent agree strongly that "the average person is not concerned with others' problems."

— 46 percent say most people are just out for themselves, and 53 percent felt unselfish people are dupes.

— 72 percent agree there is a growing loss of basic trust and faith in other people.

"Cynicism has been translated into sort of an individual philosophy of life — that not only can you not trust that generalized 'them,' but that you can't trust everyday people," says Mirvis. "And when money is at stake, you can throw ethics out the window. That's a very cold and jaundiced look at fellow man ... I think that is a profound shift in our philosophy of life in America."

The Cynic Profile

A pundit once wrote that a cynic was "a man who found out when he was about 10 that there wasn't any Santa Claus, and he's still upset." Kanter and Mirvis's research found that today's embittered cynics are upset, but no Santa is the least of their problems.

"It's most pronounced among the lower-middle class and underclass — low education, low income, life's a bitch — and it is," explains Mirvis. "You're not born with this cynicism. It's something you learn for coping with a world that seems threatening and hostile."

Sixty-one percent of the minority respondents fit the cynic profile; 40 percent of whites did. The more education, the less cynicism. The more income, the less cynicism. Widowed and divorced people scored significantly greater cynicism than married and single ones. Those who rent homes are more cynical than those who own. And strains apparently have reversed the notion of carefree country living: Half of the rural residents scored as cynics, compared with 45 percent of the urban dwellers and 38 percent of the suburbanites.

In sexual differences, cynicism is not so clear-cut. Men are generally more cynical than women (47 to 39 percent), but women are more likely to see the world as a cold place and think true friends are hard to find.

The biggest surprise: Cynicism now seems to be defy the traditional partnership of youth and idealism. The survey found it hitting hardest among younger respondents — more than half of those age 24 and under — and less among those age 35 and older.

"Under 24 years old? They think it's all bull," says Mirvis, explaining that typically hopes get hyped, leading to disillusionment, which turns into cynicism. "What distinguishes cynicism today is the 'get it now while you still can' attitude. People are wise to hustle and hype. They've lowered their sights ... What we're focused on is what's real. Money. Period."

At the root of much of the new cynicism is a fractured American Dream. "This is the blue-collar kid who went to maybe a couple years of college, and now is waiting for things to pay off," says Mirvis. "He doesn't find an industrial job. He sees no opportunities for good paying work in the service sector, and when he gets into the service sector he sees nothing akin to a career path or opportunities — you just go to work and bump along. He feels cheated. The system has let him down. He expected to be able to buy a home at some point. Forget that. He expected to have a good secure job. He expected to take his bite out of the pie. But it's not there."

The scenario doesn't bode well for the next generation either. "We are now extrapolating that the future generation is even going to be more cynical because of the events of the last eight years," says Kanter. "Meaning that there has been an institutionalization of greed in this country, where everybody thinks it's a birthright to get his. The answer is not everybody's going to get it. Not everybody can climb the slippery slope. Under the circumstances, we think this is going to make for a lot more disillusionment, which leads to cynicism."

One Way Out

Kanter and Mirvis contend the cynical viewpoint is reinforced and corroborated in almost every aspect of life — from television shows that "deify street smarts," to song lyrics that are nihilistic, to headlines that regularly reflect the fallibility of human nature. Against all odds, the coauthors believe the trend of cynicism can be reversed. Gradually.

However, the point man whom they say is critical to defusing cynicism is more often seen as part of the problem. "The fast and easiest rope to grab onto lies in the workplace, and it has got to start from the top," says Kanter.

Kanter and Mirvis asked surveyed employees if they trusted the CEO in their organization. "When he gets up and says something, do you believe it's the whole truth? We found that only 20 percent of the work force trusts what management tells them," reports Mirvis. "Only one in five."

Perhaps because the work force perceives corporate thinking as "greed over ideals, them versus us," it offers promise for unmaking cynicism. Kanter and Mirvis say they've seen it happen in isolated cases — companies with totally disaffected workers where the CEO stepped forward, spoke honestly, took some flack, and re-created a company compact that reflected legitimate expectations of both sides. What the nation needs, they propose, is a group of "enlightened CEOs" to address the problems of cynicism, to confront its causes in the workplace, to counter people's suspicions and regain their confidence.

But corporate management is a reluctant savior at best, they admit. "We have no illusions that more honest and evenhanded management per se will eliminate cynicism at work," they conclude. "But it may lessen people's sense of disillusionment, neutralize their negativism to a degree, convert a few cynics ...

"Then that's going to be a piece of American life that's improved," adds Kanter. "Not every company. Not every group. But we think this is a bit of a proclamation that says, 'Do it and everybody wins.' It'll make a little difference. Unless we make that difference, this country is going to be in trouble."

Headaches Theme Of Exhibit

tighten, bringing on the dull, diffuse aching that often responds to knocking back a Tylenol or two.

"Half of the people we see suffer from headaches daily," Spierings said. The typical patient shows up at the clinic as a last resort, after suffering on average 15 to 20 years. Most chronic headaches begin in late childhood and adolescence, he said.

The head-splitting migraine is one kind of chronic headache. It is a moderate to severe pain that comes in waves lasting a couple of hours to a few days. The sensation is sharply localized, often on one side of head, with severe throbbing around one of the temples or behind an eye. It can be accompanied by nausea, vomiting and sensitivity to light.

Spierings described the cluster headache, a variety of migraine, as "probably the most painful head experience." Patients tell of "a hot poker pushing behind the eye. It feels as if the eye is being pushed out of the socket." Visible symptoms include profuse tearing and reddening of the eyes and blockage of nasal passages.

Ninety percent of cluster headaches are suffered by men, probably because of hormonal differences between the sexes, Spierings said.

Most migraine sufferers want rest when an attack comes. "They don't want light or noise. They just want peace," Spierings said.

But with a cluster headache, the pain is so intense, patients "don't want to lie down. They pace and go into violent behavior like banging their heads against the wall," he said. Spierings called the behavior an attempt to create a diversion, a "superficial pain, but 'one I control.' "

Common to tension and migraine headaches is the role of stress and the response to stress, said Spierings, a neurologist with additional training in psychiatry.

The artist Dorow, who has had migraines and garden-variety tension headaches since junior high school, said his headaches come on with stress, the feeling that "too many things are going on at one time."

Stress also causes the adrenal glands to release the hormone norepinephrine, which transmits nerve impulses and constricts blood vessels.

When the stressful moment passes, the hormone secretion slackens and the vessels expand, creating pressure on nearby nerves. On comes the headache.

Chronic headaches and migraines may also be linked to an overactive immune system. A team of Chicago-area researchers recently reported their finding that four out of five headache sufferers had immune-system imbalances. Genetics, too, figure in migraines. Sufferers often have a family history of migraines.

Other factors provoking headaches include hormonal changes, menstrual periods, fatigue, too much sleep, alcohol and such foods as chocolate, aged cheeses and red wine.

Such naturally occurring chemicals as phenylethylamine in chocolate, tyramine in cheese, and the combination of alcohol, tyramine and histamine in red wine, can spur an acute release of norepinephrine. As a result, when the body eliminates the surplus, the blood vessels again dilate.

When a patient comes to the Boston or Stamford clinics, other causes for the pain first have to be ruled out before the kind of headache can be diagnosed. A detailed history is taken and physical and neurological exams are given. Even the nastiest migraine will not affect reflexes, so those are checked to detect any neurological impairment. If a problem is found, the patient is put through a CT scan or magnetic resonance imaging, to detect other, possibly dangerous conditions, Spierings said.

The Stamford center also uses brain mapping and electroencephalograms, spokeswoman Patricia Bushie said. Thermography is used to produce a color infrared picture that shows blood flow to the brain.

Parasite Is Killing Scallop Harvest

By Charlyne Varkonyi
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

Grocery shoppers will be paying more for bay scallops because of a mysterious parasite that has wiped out one-fifth of America's scallop production.

The waters off Cape Canaveral, Fla., normally provide nearly all the U.S. supply of calico scallops, a small scallop often mislabeled as "bay" scallops and typically selling for $3.99 to $4.99 a pound.

But the $60 million-a-year industry has come to a standstill since fisherman recently began harvesting empty scallop shells. If shoppers could find calico scallops during the past few months, the prices were as high as $6.99 to $7.99 a pound.

Dr. Norman Blake, professor of marine science at the University of South Florida in St. Petersburg, says that the calico scallop population was doing quite well until last November, when water temperatures did not drop as much they normally do in the fall.

"The elevated water temperature and the fact that the scallops were in ripe reproductive condition may have made the environment appropriate for the parasite to bloom," Blake said. "The parasite invaded the digestive system of the scallops and interfered with the normal digestive process. The scallops were not getting any nutrients and they starved to death."

The culprit, Blake said, is a single-celled parasitic protozoan that he and his colleagues have not seen before. Starting in early December, the fishermen found dead scallops in many stages of decomposition. Many of the shells were empty because decomposition can occur in as little as 12 hours.

He said that there is no danger of parasitic infection to humans even if someone would eat the whole scallop, as they do in France and in some American gourmet restaurants.

The parasite problems in Florida have turned the scallop market upside down. Traditionally, consumers expect to pay twice as much for the larger, meatier sea scallop, a favorite of America's trend-setting celebrity chefs. But many seafood purveyors say that a combination of a good supply of sea scallops and a short supply of bay scallops has made the sea scallops a better buy in most markets.

"Sea scallops have been a better buy than the bays for the past two or three months," says Jim Grinestaff, assistant manager of Silver Seas, a Baltimore fish and seafood wholesaler with mostly supermarket clients. "There is very good supply and they are a good size."

No Cape Cod (bay) scallops may be taken between April 1 and Oct. 1, another factor in higher prices. The prime sources of sea scallops are Maine and Canada. Bay scallops are coming from the coast of North Carolina. Imports of calicos from Panama and Mexico are down significantly.

Despite the fact that sea scallops are a better buy in most markets, Lou Goodwin says there has been some consumer resistance because of a perception that the bay scallops have a more delicate, sweet flavor. His company, E. Goodwin and Sons, has been in the seafood wholesale business for 37 years.

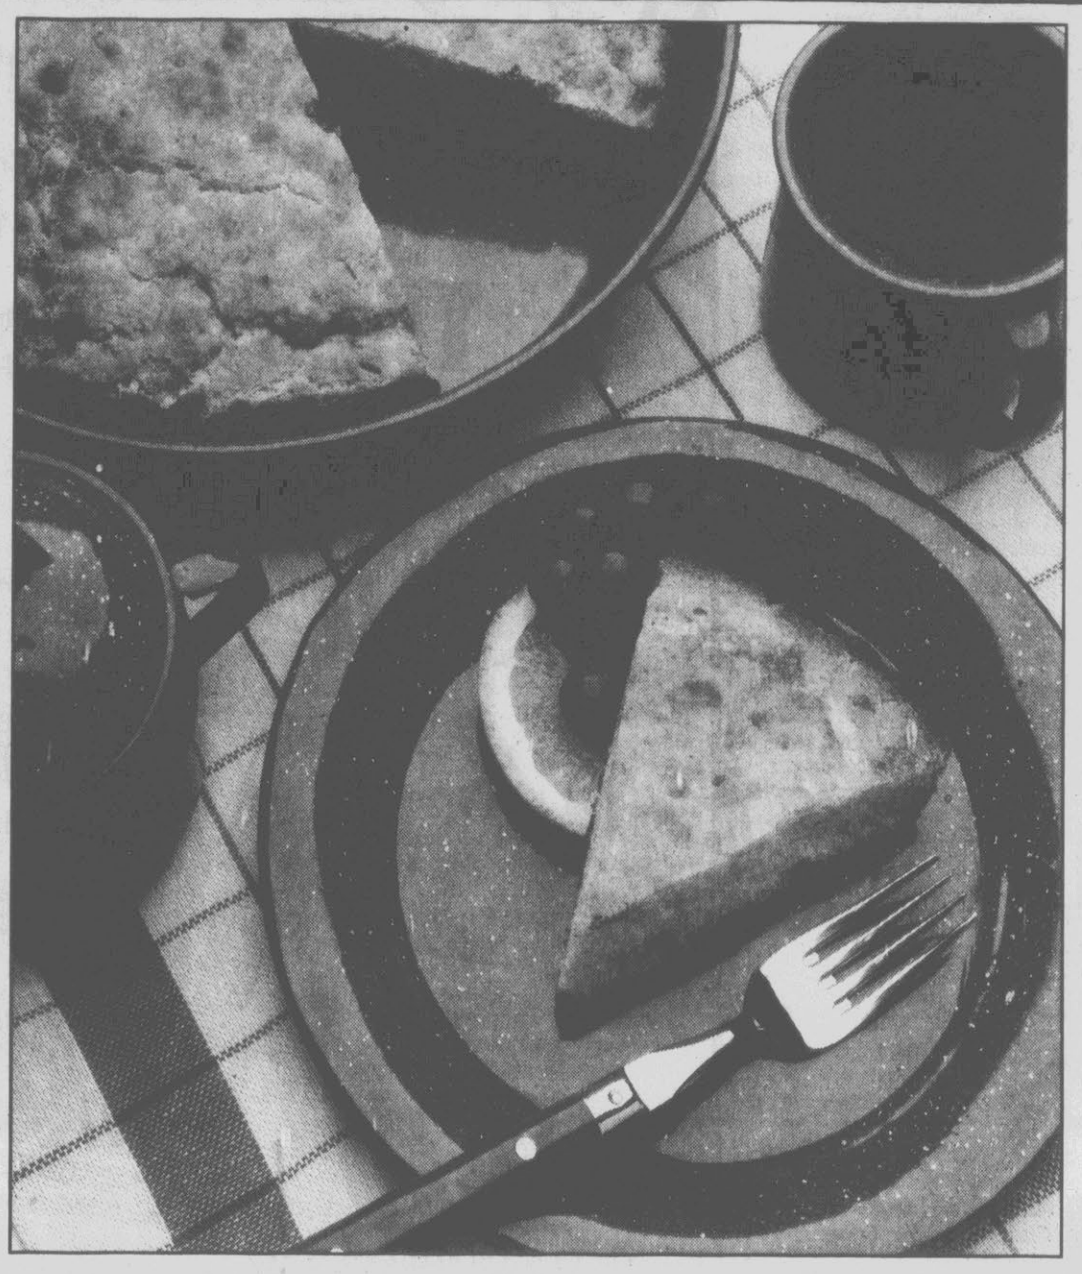

"I recommend buying the sea scallops while they are cheap," he said. "Don't worry about the bays."

While the consumer is deciding between bay and sea scallops, the Florida producers are worrying if they can weather this second setback in three years. The last setback was in 1986 when production dropped to 2 million pounds, down from the record 40 million pounds in 1984.

Canaveral Seafood in Cape Canaveral is one of the five companies whose production has ground to a halt. A skeleton crew is operating the processing plant and fishing boats are still going out to search for scallops. After the parasite invasion on the East Coast, the fishing boats went over to to the Carabelle, Fla., area on the Gulf Coast and did quite well, but fishermen believe that the supply has been depleted.

"Right now it looks like everyone is just hanging on," said Sally Patrenos, a spokeswoman for Canaveral Seafood. About 500 people have been laid off at Canaveral and the four other calico scallop producers.

Hot Skillet Cornbread An Easy Southern Recipe

It's summertime, and the cooking is easy with the right recipe. Hot Skillet Cornbread is one of the dishes that made Southern hospitality famous. Yet many people seem to think that it requires some special skill.

That's not true.

If you can fry up some bacon, mix a few ingredients and pour them into the skillet, you can make Hot Skillet Bacon and Cheese Cornbread.

People in the South bake more than people in other parts of the country. One shortcut they use is self-rising flour and self-rising corn meal. "Self-rising" means that the flour has leavening and salt, so you save those measuring and mixing steps.

The flour is generally softer, so it is better for Southern favorites such as buscuits and cakes. It is enriched, just like all-purpose, so you get the B-vitamins, thiamin, riboflavin and niacin, plus the minerals, iron and an extra bonus of calcium.

Hot Skillet Cornbread makes an authentic country breakfast or a fancy Southern brunch. But since it's summertime, the catfish are jumpin' and the cornbread is risin', try serving it as a side dish to a catfish dinner. There's nothin' like it!

HOT SKILLET BACON AND CHEESE CORNBREAD

6 slices bacon, fried and diced
2 tbsps. bacon drippings (or vegetable oil)
2 cups self-rising corn meal
½ cup self-rising flour
1 tsp. sugar
1 cup milk
2 eggs, beaten
⅔ cup sharp Cheddar cheese, grated

Heat 10-inch ovenproof skillet in 450° oven. Melt just enough drippings in the skillet to coat bottom evenly; reserve remainder. Combine dry ingredients. Sprinkle in cheese and bacon; blend. Add melted drippings, milk and eggs; mix just until blended smooth. Pour mixture into hot skillet. Bake 20 to 25 minutes or until wooden toothpick is inserted in center comes out clean. Serve piping hot.

Mediterranean Recipes Light And Delicious

By Carol Deegan
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Focaccia with sweet red peppers. Tunisian fish soup. Pizza with roasted tomato sauce and mussels. Chicken couscous. Pear ginger flan.

For 20 years, nutritionists have been studying the Mediterranean diet, and they have found a very low incidence of heart disease among the region's inhabitants.

In Mediterranean Light: Delicious Dishes from the World's Healthiest Cuisine (Bantam Books, $21.95), Martha Rose Shulman has adapted the cuisine of the Mediterranean into healthful, low-fat and flavorful dishes to please the American palate.

The main elements of Shulman's recipes — grains, fish, vegetables, beans, pasta, fruit and olive oil — are foods that dietary experts have been encouraging Americans to incorporate into their diets.

Shulman has altered authentic recipes when necessary, making them lighter in fat and calories without sacrificing the characteristics of the dish.

In some dishes, for example, she substituted fatty meats with "meaty" vegetables like mushrooms. "You won't find lamb moussaka or sausages in this cookbook," she says, "but you will find fish soups and stews, chicken couscous, pastas and breads, and lots of salads and starters."

For other dishes, she reduced the oil or substituted plain low-fat yogurt. She also baked some dishes in tightly sealed dishes, with no oil added at all.

"Some olive oil is nutritious and even necessary for a balanced diet, especially if animal fats have been reduced. Since we are concerned with calories as well as fats, I still feel that it's important to keep olive oil to a minimum."

Seasonings include saffron, fresh herbs and a variety of spices — from chili peppers to cilantro. And, of course, garlic. Shulman absolutely adores garlic.

The cookbook covers every corner of the Mediterranean region. Shulman describes many of the recipes as "very humble and very cheap."

"Mediterranean countries tend to be poor countries, and their cuisines take advantage of everything nature has to offer," she says.

Yet "humble and cheap" doesn't mean boring. Her recipe for Baked Fish en Papillote with Vegetable Julienne is flavored with garlic, fennel and Pernod. Her Grated Potato Torte with Onions is embellished with savory onions that have been browned and cooked slowly in red wine.

Shulman grew up in Connecticut. She lived in Texas for 10 years, where she taught vegetarian cooking, set up a yogurt business and did some catering.

Her award-winning The Vegetarian Feast was published in 1979. She moved to Paris in 1981, where she has catered, cooked and written a number of cookbooks. In recent years, she has married, and has divided her time between Paris and London.

SPAGHETTI WITH BROCCOLI, PINE NUTS AND PARMESAN

1 large bunch broccoli (about 2 lbs.), broken into florets
2 tbsps. olive oil
2 large garlic cloves, minced or put through a press
1 tbsp. pine nuts
Salt and freshly ground pepper
1 tsp. salt
¾ lb. whole-wheat spaghetti
3 tbsps. chopped fresh parsley
¼ cup freshly grated Parmesan cheese

Steam the broccoli for 5 to 10 minutes, until crisp-tender. Refresh under cold water and set aside.

Meanwhile, heat 1 tablespoon of the olive oil in a wide, heavy-bottomed skillet over low heat and gently saute the garlic and pine nuts until the garlic is golden. Add the broccoli and stir together over low heat until the broccoli is heated through. Set aside. Season to taste with salt and freshly ground pepper.

When the water comes to a boil, add 1 teaspoon salt, the remaining oil, and the spaghetti. Cook the pasta al dente, drain, and toss at once with the broccoli mixture, parsley and Parmesan. Serve at once on warm plates. Makes 4 to 6 servings.

CHILLED YOGURT AND CUCUMBER SOUP

Use Government Guideline To Rate Diet For Variety

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — How does your diet rate for variety? Take the following quiz, adapted from the federal government's "Dietary Guidelines and Your Diet."

1. How often do you eat: at least six servings of bread, cereals, rice, crackers, pasta or other foods made from grains per day? A serving is one slice of bread or one-half cup of cereal, rice, pasta. (a) Seldom or never; (b) 1 or 2 times a week; (c) 3 to 4 times a week; (d) Almost daily.

Best Answer: Almost daily. Many people believe that eating bread and cereals will make you fat. That's not true for most of us. Extra calories often come from the fat and-or sugar you may eat with them. Both whole-grain and enriched breads and cereals provide starch and essential nutrients.

2. How often do you eat foods made from whole grains? (a) Seldom or never; (b) 1 or 2 times a week; (c) 3 to 4 times a week; (d) Almost daily.

Best Answer: Almost daily. Whole-grain breads and cereals contain vitamins, minerals and dietary fiber that are low in the diets of many Americans. Select whole-grain cereals and bakery products — those with a whole grain listed first on the ingredient label. Or make your own and use whole-wheat flour.

3. How often do you eat three different kinds of vegetables per day? (a) Seldom or never; (b) 1 or 2 times a week; (c) 3 to 4 times a week; (d) Almost daily.

Best Answer: Almost daily. Vegetables vary in the amounts of vitamins and minerals they contain, so it's important to include several kinds every day.

4. How often do you eat cooked dry beans or peas? (a) Seldom or never; (b) 1 or 2 times a week; (c) 3 to 4 times a week; (d) Almost daily.

Best Answer: 3 to 4 times a week. Dry beans and peas fit into two food groups because of the nutrients they provide. They can be used as an alternative to meat, poultry and fish. They are also an excellent vegetable choice.

5. How often do you eat a dark green vegetable such as spinach or broccoli? (a) Seldom or never; (b) 1 or 2 times a week; (c) 3 to 4 times a week; (d) Almost daily.

Best Answer: 3 to 4 times a week. Dark green vegetables like spinach, kale and broccoli are excellent sources of some nutrients that are low in many diets.

6. How often do you eat two kinds of fruit or fruit juice per day? (a) Seldom or never; (b) 1 or 2 times a week; (c) 3 to 4 times a week; (d) Almost daily.

Best Answer: Almost daily. Fruits are nature's sweets. They taste good and are good for you. Choose several different kinds each day.

7. How often do you eat two servings of low-fat milk, cheese or yogurt per day? (a) Seldom or never; (b) 1 or 2 times a week; (c) 3 to 4 times a week; (d) Almost daily.

Best Answer: Almost daily. Adults as well as children need the calcium and other nutrients found in milk, cheese and yogurt.

8. How often do you eat two servings of lean meat, poultry, fish or alternatives such as eggs, dry beans or nuts per day? (a) Seldom or never; (b) 1 or 2 times a week; (c) 3 to 4 times a week; (d) Almost daily.

Best answer: Almost daily. Many Americans include some meat, poultry or fish in their diets regularly. Dry beans and peas, peanuts, peanut butter, nuts, seeds, and eggs can be used as alternatives.

Q. Will you please talk about triglycerides in the diet and how diet affects triglycerides? My doctor has told me my triglycerides are high, but my cholesterol is low. M.F., Greenville

A. The role of diet in treating triglycerides is still controversial. There are people who have high triglycerides and normal cholesterols. There are people who have both high cholesterol and high triglycerides. People with high triglyceride levels alone have been shown to have increased heart disease. So, many think it is wise to treat patients with high triglycerides by changing diets and often medications.

The same dietary principles that are used to treat high cholesterol are used to treat high triglycerides. The most important thing to do is shed excess body fat. If you are overweight, you need to eat less food, do more walking and lose weight. You also need to reduce your total intake of fat, especially saturated fat. You also need to increase the ratio, but not the amount, of polyunsaturated to saturated fat in your diet. You need to increase the amount of dietary fiber. If your triglycerides are high, you need to restrict alcohol. And, if you have high blood pressure, too, you need to use less salt.

The triglyceride is a fat molecule that your body makes or gets from the food you eat. It is used for fuel for your body. If you have too many triglycerides at one time, the extra is stored as fat.

To test your triglycerides, your doctor would order a fasting lipid panel. Triglyceride levels less than 250 mg/dl are OK. Triglycerides between 250 and 500 mg/dl are thought to increase your risk of heart disease, and you may be told to change your diet. Triglycerides over 500 mg/dl are abnormal and mean a person has a high risk of pancreatitis. They also may have abdominal pain. These people probably will need both a diet change and medication.

I have said before that there is no evidence that taking fish oil or fish oil capsules will lower blood cholesterol. As a matter of fact, the Food and Drug Administration last year prohibited the makers of fish oil capsules from making that claim.

But they might help some lower triglycerides. Some doctors tell me they see some benefit for some people with high triglycerides in taking fish oil capsules. Since they are expensive and the doses needed are high, don't take them without talking to your doctor.

Sometimes, exercise and diet change are not enough to bring high triglycerides down. Then, your doctor may suggest you take a medication. If you take medication for triglycerides, remember the medication is intended to work with, not in place of, diet and exercise. You still need to reduce the number one problem in the American diet — fat!

Easy Salad Has Three Ingredients

By Nancy Byal
BETTER HOMES AND GARDENS

Popeye, the spinach-craving strongman sailor of the comic page, would love this side-dish salad because it's full of his favorite food. It's easy on the cook in the galley, too, with just three ingredients plus the zippy dressing.

COTTAGE CHEESE AND SPINACH SALAD

7 cups torn fresh spinach (10 ounces)
1½ cups cream-style cottage cheese
½ cup chopped walnuts
Creamy Dressing or bottled creamy dressing

Place spinach in a large salad bowl. Spoon cottage cheese on top of spinach in a ring. Sprinkle with walnuts. Pour on dressing; toss lightly until spinach is coated. Makes 6 to 8 servings.

Creamy Dressing: In a small mixing bowl stir together ½ cup dairy sour cream, 2 tablespoons sugar, 1 tablespoon prepared horseradish, ½ teaspoon dry mustard and ¼ teaspoon salt. Using a wire whisk, gradually blend in 3 tablespoons herb-flavored vinegar. Cover and chill until serving time.

Nutrition information per serving: 194 cal., 11 g pro., 11 g carb., 13 g fat, 17 mg chol., 368 mg sodium. U.S. RDA: 69 percent vit. A, 23 percent vit. C, 13 percent riboflavin, 12 percent calcium.

Project LEAN Encourages Americans To Cut Fat Intake

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Project LEAN — Low-Fat Eating for America Now — is a national public education campaign designed to encourage Americans to reduce their consumption of dietary fat.

Sponsors are the Henry J. Kaiser Family Foundation of Menlo Park, Calif., and Partners for Better Health, a committee of 30 national organizations including the American Cancer Society, the National Fisheries Institute and the United Fresh Fruit and Vegetable Association.

Diets high in fat have been linked to five of the 10 leading causes of death in the United States, including heart disease and some cancers.

One of the project's main objectives is to help Americans reduce their dietary fat intake from the present 40 percent level to 30 percent of calories consumed.

Project officials recognize this will not be an easy task.

"Many people state they are fed up with all the publicity about which foods are good and which foods are bad. They say they are already cutting back on sugar, salt and caffeine, and cutting back on one more item pushes them to the limit," a LEAN report concludes.

One of LEAN's goals: to come up with some practical steps consumers can take to cut back on fat — without sacrificing taste.

Low-fat recipes and tips for using less fat in food preparation are being prepared by a group of chefs and other professionals, says Sarah Samuels of the Kaiser Foundation, who is project director.

The recipes are being tested at Better Homes and Gardens magazine in Des Moines. Nancy Byal, executive editor of Better Homes and Gardens, is a member of Project LEAN's steering committee. A major feature on Project LEAN is being planned by the magazine.

Samuels, who was among the speakers at a briefing here, says Project LEAN will also be working to stimulate increased consumer demand for low-fat products — and to accelerate the trend toward lower fat-consumption levels.

She says the LEAN campaign will be focused on those consumers who are the most likely to use store coupons, recipes, brochures and toll-free hotlines. The Kaiser Family Foundation's Health Promotion Program supports policy initiatives and community education and information campaigns to reduce the incidence and prevalence of the five major preventable causes of death and illness in the United States: heart disease, cancer, teen-age pregnancy, substance abuse and injuries.

Salad Dressing Has Less Fat

By Nancy Byal
BETTER HOMES AND GARDENS

We've declared war on fat! Better Homes and Gardens is proud to be part of Project LEAN (Low-Fat Eating for Americans Now), a national campaign to alert Americans to the health benefits of reducing the amount of fat they eat. We're helping by developing and sharing recipes that have less than 30 percent of their calories from fat, yet taste delicious.

Here's an example. Most of the fat in any salad is in the dressing. So this salad, which gets only 12 percent of its calories from fat, is made with a fat-free, sweet-sour dressing that tastes great with chicken and fruit.

CHICKEN AND FRUIT SALAD

1 cup long grain rice
One 8-oz. can pineapple chunks (juice pack)
¼ cup packed brown sugar
4 tsps. cornstarch
¼ tsp. garlic powder
¼ tsp. ground ginger
½ cup unsweetened pineapple juice
⅓ cup water
¼ cup red wine vinegar
Two 5½-oz. cans chunk-style chicken, drained and chilled, or 2 cups diced cooked chicken
1 medium apple, cored and chopped
½ cup chopped green pepper
½ cup seedless red grapes, halved
Lettuce leaves

Cook rice according to package directions except omit the salt and margarine or butter. Cover and chill.

Meanwhile, drain pineapple, reserving juice. Cover and chill pineapple. In a small saucepan combine brown sugar, cornstarch, garlic powder and ginger. Stir in reserved pineapple juice, unsweetened pineapple juice, water and vinegar. Cook and stir until thickened and bubbly. Cook and stir 2 minutes more. Cover surface with clear plastic wrap; chill.

Nutrition information per serving: 368 cal., 17 g pro., 63 g carb., 5 g fat (12 percent of calories from fat), 39 mg chol., 325 mg sodium. U.S.RDA: 51 percent vit. C, 18 percent thiamine, 28 percent niacin, 16 percent iron.

Light, Refreshing Soups Make Great Appetizers

By Sherrie Clinton
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

You don't have to give up a delicious bowl of soup just because the weather is getting warmer. The latest trend is to light, refreshing soups served anywhere from ice-cold to room temperature.

These warm-weather soups make lovely appetizers served in pretty dishes, or do what Chef Jeanie Nappo, 26, does at L'Auberage restaurant in Baltimore and serve, for example, the cantaloupe soup in its own container.

Most warm-weather soups can be served — depending on personal taste — at room temperature, slightly chilled or ice cold, according to Lee Bailey, the celebrated cookbook author. But if you do serve a soup cold you may have to add more seasonings because cold temperatures can sometimes make foods taste bland.

Bailey recently published a book, Lee Bailey's Soup Meals, dedicated to serving soups year-round. (Crown Publishers; 1989; $19.95.)

Nappo, at L'Auberage, says that cantaloupe soup is very popular in the warmer months, partly because of the beautiful presentation. The soup is served in a scooped-out cantaloupe bowl and garnished with tiny slivers of red pepper and fresh mint.

Nappo recommends serving the soup ice-cold and she suggests making it the day before you serve it to let the flavors fully develop. Be sure to store the soup in a covered container in the refrigerator. Do not store it in the cantaloupe bowls because the bowls may get mushy. Store the bowls in the refrigerator separately, cover them tightly with plastic wrap.

Beth Dooley includes several cold fruit soups in her recent book It's the Berries (Storey Communications Inc.; 1988; $7.95. Paperback edition).

Dooley, who wrote the book with her mother, Liz Anton, says: "Fruit soups are very refreshing and make a nice appetizer when the weather gets warmer."

For example, she recommends serving her Strawberry Tropical Soup with a light chicken salad at brunch.

The soups are not overly sweet, she says. And that means there is still room for dessert on the menu.

"The colors of fruit soups are especially lovely. The raspberry turns a beautiful bright pink while the blueberry turns a lovely periwinkle blue," Dooley says. You can add yogurt if you want a thicker soup, she says.

In their book Cold Soups, Nina Graybill and Maxine Rapoport have recipes for over 100 different cold soups (Farragut Publishing Co.; 1988; $10.95). They also have ideas and recipes for accompaniments and a variety of attractive garnishes.

Graybill and Rapoport recommend letting cold soups chill overnight or at least 4 to 6 hours. And they suggest covering soups, especially those that might change color like berry soups or avocado, with a piece of plastic wrap placed directly on top of the soup. Then cover the bowl with a second piece of wrap.

In addition to fruit soups, other warm weather soups include asparagus, or nearly everyone's favorite, gazpacho.

CANTALOUPE SOUP

4 cantaloupes
¼ cup granulated sugar, or less to taste
Fresh mint leaves, about one good-size handful, plus some for garnish
Port
Lemon Juice

Carefully cut three of the cantaloupes in half in a zig-zag pattern using a very sharp knife.

Scoop-out and throw away the seeds. Use a melon ball scooper to scoop out the flesh of the melon, take it down to the green part.

Do the same thing with the remaining fourth cantaloupe. It doesn't matter how you slice this one because all you will be using is the flesh.

Place all of the scooped cantaloupe in a food processor. Add the sugar and mint leaves, a splash of port and a splash of lemon juice. Be careful not to over-process the mixture; it should retain some texture.

Garnish with remaining mint leaves. Serves six.

STRAWBERRY TROPICAL SOUP

3 cups strawberries
1 cup frozen cherries
4 cups frozen strawberry juice, diluted
2 tbsps. clover honey or to taste
⅓ cup fresh lime juice
½ cup sweet white wine
½ cup light cream
2 tbsps. cornstarch
2 tbsps. cold water
½ cup sour cream

Mix cornstarch in 2 tablespoons cold water. Simmer strawberry juice, honey, lime juice and white wine until mixture thickens. Stir occasionally as it is cooling. Put strawberries and cream with chilled mixture and blend until smooth. Strain through a strainer. Mix in thawed cherries. Add a dollop of sour cream to each serving. Serves six.

ASPARAGUS SOUP

1½ lbs. fresh asparagus, washed and with tough or dry ends removed ¼ cup (½-stick) unsalted butter
½ cup chopped onion
1 cup carefully washed and chopped leeks (white part only)
½ cup chopped celery
1 small baking potato (about ½ lb.), peeled and cubed
3½ cups chicken stock
1 tsp. lemon juice
Salt and white pepper, to taste
Paprika, optional
½ cup half-and-half
Creme fraiche (can be purchased at upscale grocery stores) or whipped cream for garnish.

Snap off asparagus tips and set the stalks aside. Melt butter in a deep skillet with a cover. Add asparagus tips, onion, leeks, celery and potato. Cover lightly and cook over the very lowest heat until vegetables are soft, 20 minutes or more.

Meanwhile, place chicken stock in a large saucepan with the reserved asparagus stalks, cut into large pieces. Bring to a boil and simmer, covered tightly, for about 30 minutes. Discard stalks and set stock aside.

In a food processor, puree softened vegetables and add to the asparagus stock. Season with lemon juice, salt, white pepper and paprika, if desired.

Allow to cool and refrigerate.

Stir in half-and-half and serve garnished with a dollop of creme fraiche or whipped cream and a sprinkling of paprika, if desired. Serves six.

TART TOMATO AND RED ONION SOUP

1 large red onion, coarsely chopped
3 tbsps. chopped fresh basil leaves
½ garlic cloves, minced
1 tsp. coarse salt, or to taste
1 tsp. sugar
2 tsps. coarse-grained mustard
2 tbsps. lemon juice
2 tbsps. red wine vinegar
¼ cup olive oil
2 cups good-quality tomato juice
1 cup ice water
1 cup sour cream mixed with 2 teaspoons dried dillweed, for garnish

Add tomatoes, red onion, basil leaves, garlic, salt, sugar and mustard to processor or blender and coarsely chop and blend. Transfer to large bowl and whisk in remaining ingredients, except sour cream garnish.

Refrigerate several hours or several days. Taste for seasonings before serving. Spoon a dollop of sour cream in each bowl and pass the rest. Serves six.

GAZPACHO WITH CRAB

3 lbs. tomatoes, peeled, seeded and chopped, about 6 cups
1 cup chopped red onion
1 red sweet pepper, chopped
1 tbsp. chopped garlic
2 tsps. chopped jalapeno pepper or to taste
6 tbsps. coarsely chopped fresh coriander
¼ cup olive oil
3 tbsps. red-wine vinegar
3 tbsps. fresh lime or lemon juice
Salt and freshly ground pepper to taste
1½ cups peeled, seeded and cubed cucumbers
1 lb. lump crab meat, picked over, cooked

Combine all the ingredients except 2 tablespoons coriander, the cucumbers, and crab meat in a food processor or blender and pulse to blend to a semi-coarse texture. Do not over-blend, the soup should have a pulpy texture. Pour and scrap mixture into a bowl. Cover with plastic wrap and refrigerate until cold.

Stir in the cucumbers and crab meat just before serving. Serve in chilled bowls and sprinkle with the remaining 2 tablespoons coriander.

AVOCADO SOUP

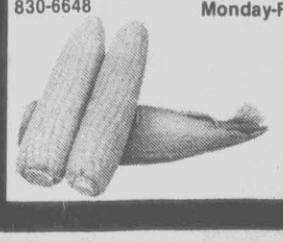

2 medium-ripe avocados, peeled, halved, seeded and diced
1 cup heavy cream
3 cups well-seasoned chicken broth
3 tbsps. dry white wine or sherry
½ to 1 tsp. salt, or to taste
Freshly ground black pepper to taste
1 ripe avocado, peeled and thinly sliced
Tabasco sauce to taste (optional)

Puree the diced avocado in food processor with half of the cream. Add the rest of the cream and process briefly.

Bring broth to a boil in a large saucepan. Reduce to a simmer and stir in the avocado mixture. Stir in the wine and salt and pepper to taste. Simmer for 5 minutes. Gently stir in sliced avocado. For extra zip, add Tabasco to taste.

Healthy Foods Share Space With Sugary Desserts

By Linda Guica
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

As a chef trained at the Culinary Institute of America in Hyde Park, N.Y., Kimberly Snow knows how to turn butter, chocolate and other ingredients into truffles and cakes that will melt willpower quicker than ice on a sweltering day.

Hand-dipped chocolates and freshly baked bread and muffins are among the staple offerings at her shop, Kimberly's Ltd. in Middletown, Conn. Little by little, these foods are sharing space with desserts and muffins that have less fat and cholesterol.

Snow and one of her bakers, Annie Cap, are turning out oat bran muffins made with egg whites and a minimum amount of fat. But the item they are most proud of is a low-cholesterol mock cheesecake made with tofu, yogurt and egg whites, rather than the traditional cream cheese, sour cream and whole eggs.

While Snow and Cap will not divulge the recipe for the cheesecake, they agreed to share their recipe for oat bran muffins, which are made with egg whites and a minimum of fat.

APPLESAUCE OAT BRAN MUFFINS

1½ tsps. cinnamon
2¼ cups oat bran
¾ cup all-purpose flour
1½ tsps. baking powder
¾ tsp. baking soda
¼ tsp. salt
2 egg whites
1 cup unsweetened applesauce
¼ to ½ cup packed brown sugar
½ to ¾ cup buttermilk or yogurt
2 tbsps. vegetable oil

Cover dried fruit with hot water, and stir in cinnamon. Let steep until dried fruit is plump and rehydrated. Drain liquid and set aside.

Mix together oat bran, flour, baking powder, baking soda and salt in a mixing bowl. Whisk together egg whites, applesauce, sugar, buttermilk or yogurt, oil and drained fruit. Add to dry ingredients, and stir just to blend. Fill 12 greased or paper-lined muffin cups, and bake at 375 degrees 20 minutes. These muffins freeze well.

Hot Sandwiches Take 12 Minutes

By Nancy Byal
BETTER HOMES AND GARDENS

On your mark, get set, cook! In 7 minutes preparation time and 5 minutes cooking time, these great-tasting, open-face sandwiches are ready for the table. Turn on the broiler first thing. While it preheats you'll have time for the other preparation steps. To make a meal, add your favorite fresh fruit in season and sherbet.

CANADIAN BACON PIZZAS

¼ cup mayonnaise or salad dressing
½ tsp. dried thyme, dried basil or dried oregano, crushed
⅛ tsp. garlic powder
2 cups torn fresh spinach
6 slices French bread, bias-sliced ½-inch thick
6 slices Canadian-style bacon, cut ⅛-inch thick
6 cherry tomatoes, quartered
6 slices Swiss cheese

Preheat broiler. Stir together mayonnaise, herb and garlic powder. Toss with spinach. Spread mixture on one side of each bread slice. Place bread slices, spinach side up, on the unheated rack of a broiler pan. Place bacon and cherry tomatoes on top of spinach mixture. Broil 3 inches from heat for 2 to 3 minutes or until heated through. Top with cheese slices; broil about 1 minute more or until cheese just starts to melt. Makes 3 servings.

Recipes

4 to 5 tbsps. fresh lemon juice (to taste)
Salt and freshly ground pepper to taste
1 tbsp. chopped mint for garnish
1 lemon, sliced very thin, for garnish

If you're using a food processor, mince the cucumber and garlic together, using the pulse action, until the cucumber is minced very small or like a coarse puree. Add the remaining ingredients except garnishes and blend together in the food processor just until everything is blended. You don't want to lose the texture of the cucumber. Taste and adjust seasonings. Chill several hours. Serve with an ice cube in each bowl and garnish with fresh chopped mint and thin slices of lemon.

If you're mixing the soup by hand, chop the cucumber very fine, or grate it. Whisk together the yogurt and water and stir in the cucumber, garlic, mint, lemon juice, salt and pepper. Chill and serve at once. Makes 4 servings. The soup will keep up to 3 days in the refrigerator.

A TAPA OF MUSHROOMS SIMMERED IN WINE

2 lbs. fresh mushrooms, cleaned and trimmed
1 tbsp. olive oil
1 or 2 shallots (to taste), minced
4 to 6 garlic cloves (to taste), minced or put through a press
1 cup dry white wine
½ tsp. dried thyme
½ tsp. dried rosemary
Salt and freshly ground pepper
½ cup chopped fresh parsley

Cut the mushrooms in half, or quarters if they are very large.

Heat oil over medium-heat in a large, heavy-bottomed frying pan and add the shallots and half the garlic. Saute, stirring, until the shallots are tender, and add the mushrooms and remaining garlic. Saute over medium-high heat until the mushrooms begin to release some of their liquid.

Add the wine, thyme, rosemary, salt and pepper to taste, and half the parsley. Cook, stirring often, over medium heat, until the mushrooms are tender, about 20 minutes. Some of the wine should still be in the pan. Add the remaining parsley, correct seasoning, and transfer to a serving dish.

Serve warm, with toothpicks stuck in the mushrooms if serving as an hors d'oeuvre. This dish can also be cooked and refrigerated, then reheated just before serving. Makes 6 servings.

Microwave Oven Adds Speed, Ease To Mom's Recipe For Potato Salad

By Nancy Byal
BETTER HOMES AND GARDENS

At a potluck picnic, my brothers and I always went for Mom's potato salad. We knew hers was best! One of her secrets was using sour cream and buttermilk in the dressing; another was combining the dressing and potatoes while the potatoes were warm. This easy recipe calls for cooking the vegetables in the microwave and uses Mom's tips for the dressing.

MICROWAVE POTATO SALAD

¾ lb. fresh whole green beans or one 9-oz. package frozen cut green beans
¼ cup mayonnaise or salad dressing
¼ cup dairy sour cream
¼ cup buttermilk or milk
¼ tsp. salt
¼ tsp. onion salt
¼ tsp. Italian seasoning, crushed
¼ cup sliced pitted ripe olives

Scrub potatoes; quarter lengthwise. In a 1½-quart microwave-safe casserole combine potatoes and ¼ cup water. Cook, covered, on 100 percent power (high) for 8 to 10 minutes or until potatoes are tender, stirring once. Drain in a colander; set aside.

If using fresh beans, remove ends and strings. Break into 1-inch pieces. In same casserole, cook fresh beans and ¼ cup water, covered, on high 13 to 15 minutes or until tender. If using frozen beans, cook beans, covered, on high 5 to 7 minutes or until tender, stirring once. Drain in a colander; set aside.

In same casserole stir together mayonnaise, sour cream, buttermilk, salt, onion salt and Italian seasoning. Stir in potatoes, beans and olives. Cover; chill 4 hours or until completely chilled. Makes 6 servings.

Elderly Enjoy Microwave Foods

STAMFORD, Conn. (AP) — According to a new national study, older Americans consume microwave foods and beverages at a rate 52 percent above the national norm.

"Seniors have learned to use microwaves and increasingly depend on the speed and convenience they provide," says Edmond Mozes of MRCA Information Services, a national marketing information firm. "Their tendency to prepare homemade hot dishes by microwaving stands apart.

The MRCA study examines microwave food and beverage trends during the past five years. Among the survey's findings:

— Microwaves can be found in 76 percent of U.S. households, up from 34 percent in 1983.

— The three most popular microwave food items are vegetables, coffee and potatoes.

— Dieters are more likely than non-dieters to use microwaves, and show preferences for small items such as popcorn, muffins and baked potatoes.

Step-By-Step: How To Make Hollandaise

By Joan Drake
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

The United States Department of Agriculture has issued a bulletin recommending consumers "avoid eating raw eggs and foods containing raw eggs." This action was prompted by recent outbreaks of foodborne illness caused by raw eggs contaminated with Salmonella enteritidis.

One of the many recipes effected by this recommendation is Hollandaise Sauce. For years the blender provided a quick and easy way of making this classic sauce, but now the Department of Agriculture warns against using this method because the egg yolks do not undergo any cooking. To eliminate any risk, consumers are advised to use canned or packaged Hollandaise sauce, or prepare it by the traditional method.

In McCall's Cooking School — Step-by-Step Directions for Mistake-Proof Recipes (McCall Publishing Company; 1976, $9.95) Mary Eckley, Food Editor and Mary J. Norton, Associate Food Editor present a method of making Hollandaise Sauce that uses solid rather than the traditional melted butter.

Three egg yolks are placed in the top of a double boiler and beaten with a wire whisk (Step 1). Two tablespoons of cold water are whisked into the eggs (Step 2) just until blended.

The egg-water mixture is placed over hot, not boiling water and whisked constantly until it begins to thicken, about 1 minute. It is important the water in the double boiler be kept just simmering to prevent the sauce from overheating and curdling. Should the water begins to boil, quickly add a little cold water to cool the temperature.

Butter is then added, one tablespoon at a time (Step 3), keeping the water at a simmer. The mixture is beaten continuously after each addition until the butter is melted and the mixture is smooth before the next piece of butter is added. It takes about five minutes to incorporate all eight tablespoons of butter.

Remove the double boiler from the heat and slowly whisk in the lemon juice (Step 4). Then add the salt and cayenne and continue beating until the sauce thickens.

Hollandaise Sauce is best used immediately, but you may keep it warm for a short period by adding enough cold water to the hot in the bottom of the double boiler until it is just lukewarm, replacing the insert with the sauce and covering the top. Use within 45 minutes.

If, while making the sauce, it becomes too thick and looks scrambled or like it is going to separate, remove the pan from the heat, place it in a pan of cold water and whisk constantly until smooth. Should the sauce curdle slightly, it may sometimes be rescued in a blender, although the texture will probably not be as smooth as an originally well-made sauce.

HOLLANDAISE SAUCE

3 egg yolks
2 tbsps. cold water
½ cup butter or margarine
2 tbsps. lemon juice
⅛ tsp. salt
Dash cayenne pepper

Place egg yolk in top of double boiler. Beat yolks with water just until blended. Cook over hot, not boiling, water, stirring constantly with whisk, until mixture begins to thicken, about 1 minute. Hot water in double-boiler base should not touch bottom of insert.

Add butter, 1 tablespoon at time, beating continuously after each addition until butter is melted and mixture is smooth before adding next piece of butter.
