Chinese Communists Hint Of More Purging

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BEIJING — China's Communist Party celebrated its 68th birthday Saturday by announcing an investigation into how its members behaved during the recent protests for democracy. It said some could be severely punished.

Thousands of people took vows as new party members in Tiananmen Square. Tourists flocked to the Gate of Heavenly Peace, which overlooks the square and was opened to civilians for the first time since the military crackdown last month.

With the party's image at a new low because of widespread corruption and the crackdown, party leaders turned to aging veterans of the 1949 revolution to lead the internal investigation.

Newly appointed party chief Jiang Zemin told a gathering of several dozen semi-retired officials, most in their 70s or older, that they were expected to help in an "earnest rectification extending from ideology to (party) organization."

The meeting was shown on national television. Not a single youthful official was seen as the camera panned the room. Many of those present wore hearing aids or slumped wearily in their chairs.

The party newspaper, the People's Daily, signaled in a front-page editorial that the shake-up would not be restricted to the party's top levels, where it began with the recent ouster of party chief Zhao Ziyang.

Some party branches, it said, were "weak and lax, and did not carry out their roles as fortresses in battle."

"The recent turmoil ... severely tested every party member," the editorial said. "It is necessary to strictly check on the performance of every party member in the struggle.

"Those deserving criticism and education should be criticized and educated, and those deserving sanctions should be punished," it said, adding that discipline should be severe. "The strength of the Communist Party is not in its numbers, but in the quality of its members."

Since the army entered Beijing on June 3-4 and used tanks and machine guns to quell student-led protests for a freer society, party units have held frequent meetings to study the new party line defending the crackdown.

However, there have been no reports of party members being purged on the grass-roots level. Many party members took part in the student-led marches, and punishment has been expected.

The Chinese Communist Party was founded in 1921 by a dozen men who gathered surreptitiously in a girl's school and had flee to a rowboat in the middle of a lake when police learned of the session.

The People's Daily acknowledged that some Chinese have lost confidence in the party in recent years, partly because many members use their privileged status to sell favors or siphon off official funds.

Holiday Activities Planned

By Carol Tyer
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

The Greenville Jaycees have spent this week putting finishing touches on plans for the "biggest and best" celebration of Independence Day Greenville has ever seen."

"A Drug-Free America" is to be the emphasis, but many other causes besides drug prevention education are set to benefit from the events planned for the celebration which lasts from 6 p.m. to 11 p.m. Monday and from 8 a.m. until after the 9:15 p.m. fireworks Tuesday.

A special feature Tuesday evening will be the grand finale fireworks display synchronized with music that will be broadcast live on WDLX (93/3) radio for those out of earshot to hear as they watch.

Event chairman Fred Keith said additions to the lineup were made this past week. He said a search-rescue helicopter from Cherry Point Marine Air Station will be flown in about 1:30 p.m. Tuesday. Five Marine officers will be on hand until about 4:30 p.m. to explain the craft.

Jason Edwards and other members of the cast from "The Pump Boys and Dinettes" show under way at ECU Summer Theater will make an appearance Tuesday afternoon.

Keith urged participation in the dunking booths, the proceeds of which will go to a community fund for a Greenville man who needs a bone marrow transplant in Nebraska that costs $125,000. Volunteers working on Ron Chance's behalf will be manning the dunking booth and community celebrities will let themselves be dunked for this cause.

Some 26 police officers are scheduled to be on duty. The Greenville Police Department will be assisted by officers from East Carolina University, the Pitt County Sheriff's Department, and the N.C. Highway Patrol, plus military police from Seymour Johnson Air Force Base and Camp Lejeune Marine Air Station.

Gorbachev Urges End To Unrest

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOSCOW — President Mikhail S. Gorbachev appealed Saturday for an end to ethnic strife among Soviet nationalities and said the state will not tolerate those who stir up unrest.

Gorbachev spoke for the first 25 minutes of the nightly television news show Vremya in a rare personal appeal to the nation that is home to more than 130 nationalities.

Gorbachev called on all Soviet citizens to bring an end to ethnic strife that has emerged in several Soviet republics over the past two years.

"As president of the U.S.S.R. Supreme Soviet, I consider it my duty to warn you about the mounting danger" of exacerbating ethnic tensions, Gorbachev said in the speech. He also warned of "related consequences for society, for every family and every person."

Gorbachev's appeal follows outbreaks of violence in the republics of Kazakhstan, Uzbekistan and Georgia. Last year, ethnic clashes erupted in the republics of Armenia and Azerbaijan.

The most recent violence was in Kazakhstan. Four people died in the city of Novy Uzen last month when rioters attacked immigrants from the Caucasus region, accusing them of setting up private business and finagling privileges in housing and other benefits.

In June, violence between ethnic Meskhi Turks and native Uzbeks in the republic of Uzbekistan left about 100 people dead, officials said. Josef Stalin ordered the migration of the Turks to the republic in 1944.

In April, 20 Georgians died in clashes with Soviet troops sent in to end a a pro-independece demonstration.

Legislature Runs On: Politics Or Sound Thinking?

By Stuart Savage
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

The General Assembly missed its goal for adjourning the 1989 session on Friday, and House and Senate members disagree on the reasons for the delay — was it just politics, or solid disagreement on how to generate revenue.

The goal was missed at least in part because there seems to be no viable plan for funding a 6 percent pay raise for teachers and state employees in either the House or Senate and the chambers are not in agreement on how to fund a highway package that would build a system of four-lane highways linking all sections of North Carolina even though most legislators agree both are needed.

A Senate-passed plan to fund teacher salaries died in the House on Wednesday after debates that at times turned into shouting matches between members of the bipartisan coalition loyal to House Speaker Joe Mavretic and Democrats who opposed him.

The coalition opposes the Senate's use of a proposed auto sales tax in its budget plan because the House has passed an $8.6 billion highway construction program that calls for the same tax increase.

If the Senate plan were approved, the auto sales tax would go into the budget's general fund for at least two years, after which, Senate leaders say, they would divert the tax to the highway program. Critics contend the move would cripple the highway program and say that other revenue sources should be used for the general fund.

Sen. Tom Taft of Greenville said at week's end that "the House action in killing the Senate revenue proposal was a disappointment and was done in a way that didn't demonstrate recognition of legislative realities.

"I think their basic hangup is that it's a Senate proposal. All during the session," Taft said, "the Senate has been moving along with its work (while) the House has done nothing constructive on the revenue issue.

"I really think it's more politics than policy."

But Taft said, "I hope that the two houses can now come together and find a solution that will give us a highway plan and adequate pay raises for school teachers and state employees and meet the critical needs of the state.

"It's extraordinarily frustrating and it's time for this legislative session to finish its work and go home."

Sen. Bob Martin of Bethel, who said "for all practical purposes we in the Senate are about to get through," suggested "it's just a

Drug Raids Net 1,500 In Florida

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. — Undercover police officers posing as drug dealers arrested nearly 1,500 people in a weekend crackdown on crack from the Florida Panhandle to the Keys, officials said Saturday.

Officers at times made nearly 100 arrests an hour, and it was expected the total could top 2,000 before the 48-hour operation concluded after midnight Saturday, Broward County sheriff's spokesman George Crolius said at the command center here.

Nearly 1,000 officers in 61 of the state's 67 counties participated in "Operation Rock Pile," which was organized by the Florida Sheriffs Association.

"From now on, it's going to be war," said Broward Sheriff Nick Navarro.

About a third of the arrests were in the south Florida area from Key West to Fort Pierce, including Miami and Fort Lauderdale, said Crolius.

But authorities were surprised by the more than 320 arrests Friday and Saturday in the rural western Panhandle.

Conservatives, Communists To Form Greek Government

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ATHENS, Greece — Conservative and communist parties ended a two-week political deadlock Saturday and agreed to form a coalition government. It was the first time communists have played a role in determining the formation of Greece's government.

It appeared, however, that the coalition would govern only three months and that its sole task would be to clean up Greece's scandal-ridden political system.

The decision by the communist-dominated Coalition of the Left and Progress to join with the conservative New Democracy Party gave that party's premier-designate, Tzannis Tzannetakis, the support needed for a majority in the 300-member parliament.

President Christos Sartzetakis announced that Tzannetakis, a New Democracy parliamentarian since 1977, would be sworn in Sunday.

In the June 18 general election, New Democracy won 145 seats. The Coalition — an alliance of the Greek Communist Party, disenchanted socialists and the Eurocommunist Greek Left — won 28 places.

Premier Andreas Papandreou's Panhellenic Socialist Movement, or PASOK, lost after eight years in power, taking only 125 seats.

Late Saturday night, the 62-year-old Tzannetakis announced the first of his Cabinet posts. Only two of those he appointed — the justice and interior ministers — were non-parliamentarians affiliated with the leftist Coalition. Most others were from the New Democracy Party.

Named as deputy foreign minister was George Papoulias, currently the envoy in Washington.

In negotiations leading up to the agreement, New Democracy leader Constantine Mitsotakis had offered the Coalition the Justice and Interior ministries.

The agreement came 40 years after the communists, in their bid to seize power, were defeated in a civil war by U.S.-backed government troops.

Papandreou, 70, who was in a hospital for treatment of a heart and kidney condition, reacted bitterly to the pact between the two political forces.

"This alliance is without principles. It violates the popular will," he said.

Papandreou had called on the Coalition to join PASOK so the two parties could set up a government. But Coalition leader Harilaos Florakis said he didn't want to be associated with a scandal-tainted group like the Socialists.

A multimillion-dollar scandal allegedly involving key ministers in Papandreou's government, and his open affair with a woman half his age while he was married, contributed to Papandreou's downfall.

Mitsotakis and Florakis agreed that their coalition would have a three-month life span and that its work would be limited to restoring democratic institutions and cleaning up Greek politics.

Florakis said at the end of the three months, "we will re-examine our position and act accordingly."

But because of the wide gap in the two sides' political ideologies, it appeared unlikely the coalition could survive after its task of purging former PASOK ministers and officials accused of involvement in scandals.

If the coalition falls apart, the president will appoint a caretaker regime to lead the country to natonal elections.

A newly elected government is needed to deal with pressing economic problems and complete negotiations with the United States over the future of its four major military bases in Greece.

"I just don't know what the problem with the House is, although each body has its own ideas about the budget process and they disagreed with us.

"They have their own conception of what ought to be," Martin said, suggesting that the House "thinks more taxes need to be levied." But Martin said, "We are doing it from within the infrastructure ... raising a little extra money and eliminating some things.

"Frankly, I'm opposed to any new sales tax at this time," Martin said, "because the money needed can come from within. I'd rather see some things eliminated rather than go for a one cent sales tax.

"I'm not going to vote for a sales tax,' Martin said.

According to Martin, "All of us want the highway bill. We just have different approaches on how to get it. The problem is how do you arrive at solving those needs — raise taxes or make some conservative moves and come to the same answer. I think we can make some cuts here and there and get out all right."

House member Walter Jones Jr. of Farmville said that, "I guess really" the biggest stumbling block in the path toward adjournment is "how to raise the revenues" needed to fund the budget. "The leadership in both House and Senate have different ideas on how this should be accomplished.

"It's obvious that we are still in the discussion period on both sides. The Senate is coming forth with their budget. The House is working on theirs.

"I hope by the end of next week we're closer to looking at the final days."

According to Rep. Ed Warren of Greenville, "The way we are right now, we don't have anything on the table. We'll have to start over to some degree. We've got to meet the state's needs ... address the needs of education and salaries of state employees and teachers in addition to adding new highways."

Warren suggested, "Education should be a priority in this state, and I've always been committed to that. And we need good roads.

"I'm hoping we can work out a package to have both. That's what I plan to pursue," Warren said.

"I think the time is upon us to stand up and address these needs."

Behavior Studied

Strengthening the 47 million-member party is a "matter of life and death," it said.

The party also celebrated its birthday in a more lighthearted manner with dancing and singing in Tiananmen Square, which was opened to organized groups that had obtained permission from authorities. The vast square, where students demanding reform staged rallies in April and May, was filled with people taking party vows and soldiers who sang, "Without the Communist Party there would be no new China."

The ornate 17th-century Gate of Heavenly Peace — Tiananmen in Chinese — overlooking the square was reopened to all civilians for the first time since the crackdown. More than 2,200 tourists, nearly all Chinese, flocked to the gate, getting autographs from Gen. Wang Fuyi, one of the army commanders who brought troops in to quell the protests.

The party's birthday celebration coincided with an American birthday party as the U.S. Embassy celebrated Independence Day early.

As it does every year, the embassy threw a party American residents in Beijing. But many Americans fled Beijing when the army moved in, and only about 200 people attended the bash, compared with 1,500 last year.

Eight Chinese police with submachine guns took up posts outside the embassy but refused to say why they were there. They may have hoped for an appearance by dissident Fang Lizhi and his wife, who are wanted by police and have been hiding at the embassy.

Education officials, meanwhile, said more attention would be paid to "political attitudes" when approving student applications to study abroad, the official China Daily reported. The step appeared part of a series of measures to prevent people accused of joining the protests from leaving the country.

China sends about 8,000 students abroad to study each year.

Official newspapers also announced the start of the trial of three men accused of throwing paint May 23 on the portrait of Mao that hangs from the Gate of Heavenly Peace. The People's Daily said they were charged with counterrevolutionary actvities.

The three — a magazine editor, a teacher and a factory worker — were turned over to police by student protesters who condemned the defacing. Authorities hung a new Mao portrait hours later.

The trial, like most in China, was closed to foreign media.

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — Temperatures in Tehran hit a scalding 106, the hottest weather in the Iranian capital in 19 years, the official Islamic Republic News Agency reported Saturday.

Harris ruled the death accidental.

Insurance Firms Seek Rate Hike

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — North Carolina drivers would pay an average of 8.3 percent more for automobile liability insurance if insurance companies win a rate increase they have requested.

The N.C. Rate Bureau, which represents the auto insurance industry, filed for the rate increase late Friday afternoon, citing increases in claims due to higher costs for injuries and property damage.

If approved, the rate increase would allow insurance companies to collect an additional $51 million a year in premiums from Tar Heel motorists.

While liability insurance would rise 8.3 percent, overall insurance costs would increase 4.2 percent. The increased liability costs would be offset by a 1.5 percent reduction in physical damage coverage.

State law requires all drivers to buy liability insurance. Physical damage coverage is optional but is required for most car loans. About 70 percent of the drivers in the state carry bothy liability and physical damage coverage.

The impact of the rate increase would vary among North Carolina motorists. A Raleigh motorist who drives a 1988 Chevrolet Celebrity, has no insurance points and carries the minimum amount of insurance would pay an additional $17 a year. His annual premium would rise to $503, up from $486.

"After reviewing the latest data available, we concluded that current rates will not be adequate to cover costs for policies that will be written during the year beginning Jan. 1, 1990," John W. Watkins Jr., general manager of the Rate Bureau, said in a statement.

Community Appeal

A Washington, N.C., native now teaching in Wilmington is taking a coast-to-coast bicycle trip to raise money for the Eastern North Carolina Spinal Cord Injury Association.

Michael Bowen, paralyzed from the neck down in a motor vehicle accident three years ago, has recovered to the degree that he is able to undertake the 3,500- mile bicycle trip expected to take two months. He completed a similar fund-raising "Ride to Recovery" in 1986, traveling from Wilmington to Florida in 16 days.

As a founding member of the Eastern N.C. Spinal Cord Association, Bowen plans for his trip to raise at least $4,000. He also plans to visit other spinal cord injured people in 22 rehabilitation centers along the way. He is a physical education teacher at Myrtle Grove Elementary School in Wilmington.

Bowen began riding a bicycle as therapy at a time when he could not walk and now rides at least 50 miles a day, part of the distance on a computerized stationary bike. He also lifts weights.

Anyone wishing to help sponsor Bowen's trip may contact the Eastern N.C. Spinal Cord Injury Association, P.O. Box 731, Winterville, N.C. 28590. Donations are tax-deductible.

Arab Envoy Says U.S. Has Double Standard

By J. Ward Best
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

The United States needs to eliminate the duality in policy toward the Arab nations which professes open dialogue and improved relations in all of the Middle East while giving blanket approval to all Israeli actions, said the chief representative of the League of Arab States.

"There is a basic discrepancy between America's judgment and America's policy," said Clovis Maksoud, the permanent observer of the League of Arab States to the United Nations and the leagues' chief representative in the United States.

Maksoud came to Greenville Friday as part of a two-day conference at East Carolina University on Arab-American relations. The conference, which aims to better prepare area high school teachers to present information regarding the Middle East, would help eliminate some of the "bias" toward Israel, Maksoud said.

Maksoud said the alleged U.S. bias toward Israel over the Arab nations was "shameful."

"This discrepancy itself is the problematic in Arab-American relations," Maksoud said.

America's reaction to Israel's deportation Thursday of eight Palestinians accused of rioting provides Maksoud with support for his claims, he said.

"There is a traditional built-in permissiveness on the part of the United States' government toward Israel's behavior," Maksoud said. "The United States' administration can be critical of Israel's behavior but its critical position is declaratory and not action-oriented. It is declaratory and not penalizing."

Because of its action, Maksoud said, Israel "is on a head-long confrontation with international consensus."

Because of its relations with both Israel and the Arab nations, Maksoud said, the role of the United States becomes critical maintaining stability in the Middle East.

But Maksoud said the Bush administration has given some encouraging signs toward bettering relations with the Arab world.

"There is no doubt the Bush administration is less dogmatic, and therefore more flexible, and (has) a better ability to communicate with the Arab world," Maksoud said.

But the ambassador warned that the president needs to resolve the differences between American words and actions. He said the pro-Israeli lobby in Congress can interrupt dialogue with the PLO and other Arab nations.

For any meaningful improvement in relations, Maksoud said, America has to eliminate the paradoxes in its policy and deal fairly with both the Israelis and the Arabs.

One of the first steps would be a withdrawal of American support for what Maksoud called the "public relations gimmick" of the Israeli-proposed elections in the West Bank, and a call for withdrawal of Israel from the occupied territories.

Greater information about the Arab world would help to eliminate what Maksoud called the double-standard in American policy.

He lauded the efforts of the Arab-American Affairs Conference last week at East Carolina University.

The conference, designed to prepare area high school teachers to present information about the Middle East, attracted experts on the Arab world to the two days of lecture and seminars.

"I feel the work like this seminar is a conscious-raising to throw some light on these contradictions and to make the American public more aware of these flaws that are presented by the discrepancy," Maksoud said.

Playboy Publisher Marries Centerfold

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — Playboy publisher Hugh Hefner married Kimberley Conrad, 1988's Playmate of the Year, in an outdoor ceremony Saturday afternoon as helicopters chattered overhead and photographers jostled for a better shot of the Playboy mansion.

The 30-minute, non-denominational ceremony took place in front of the wishing well where Hefner, perhaps the nation's best-known playboy, proposed to Miss Conrad.

The wedding was heralded by the sounds of trumpets. About 200 guests, including Bill Cosby and Tony Curtis, were on hand when Hefner tied the knot.

The couple plan to honeymoon at the mansion. When asked how long, Bjay Turner, a Playboy publicist, said "probably a lifetime."

Miss Conrad already has gotten one of her wishes, with the mansion's comely entourage politely dispatched from the 5.3-acre Playboy Mansion in the city's Holmby Hills section.

"She's made it clear that this is her home and people just can't wander in and out now like they always have," Playboy spokesman Bill Farley said several hours before the afternoon ceremony. "They must be cordially invited."

As for Hef: "I can tell you with certainty that he is pacing around the mansion with a bottle of Pepsi in his hand as we speak," Farley said.

Hefner passed on holding the traditional bachelor party before the wedding, and Farley quoted him as saying: "Bachelor party? I've had a bachelor party for 30 years, why do I need one now?"

Early Saturday, workers were making last-minute preparations for the traditional ceremony between the 63-year-old founder of Playboy magazine and the 26-year-old Miss Conrad.

Farley said workers were winding garlands of flowers down the banister of the mansion's grand staircase where Miss Conrad would make her entrance wearing an off-white taffeta gown, with a train embroidered with the couple's initials.

Farley said the marriage captures the spirit of the 1990s.

"Hugh Hefner, the perennial bachelor, is getting married at a time a lot of his magazine readers are getting married," he said. "The trend for the 1990s is commitment."

Hefner was married once before, for 10 years to Millie Williams, and they had two children — Christie, 36, and David, 34. "I am, most important, excited about it because he's so happy," said Ms. Hefner, who is chairman of Playboy Enterprises.

Outside the mansion on Saturday, a huge white tent had been erected alongside the home's exotic grotto and workers were arranging the imported cheeses and smoked fish the 450 wedding guests would munch on while dancing to a 25-piece band, Farley said.

The news media was not invited to the event. An advisory issued last week detailed how pictures by former White House photographer David Hume Kennerly and a news release would be distributed. And a half-hour of taped highlights of the wedding was scheduled to be shown on the cable Playboy Channel's pay-per-view service July 15.

Hefner was tamed in part by a mild stroke in 1986. He stopped smoking his pipe and he switched to caffeine-free Diet Pepsi, but he still wears his trademark purple silk pajamas day and night.

County Property Taxes Going Up In N.C.

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHARLOTTE — Property taxes soared Saturday for many North Carolina residents.

Raising new money to pay for schools, garbage disposal and social programs, residents in nearly half of North Carolina's 100 counties face tax increases.

— In Burke County, an 8-cent increase is the highest in more than 15 years.

— In Mecklenburg County, officials raised taxes for the fourth year in a row, boosting the tax bill on a $100,000 house by $33 to a total of $660.

"It makes it awfully difficult for senior citizens and retired individuals and families who are on fixed incomes to continue to live in a community where the tax goes up so frequently," said Mecklenburg County commissioner Jerry Blackmon.

For people such as Peggy Coleman of Hickory, a tax increase means squeezing pennies from already tight family budgets.

"When property taxes go up, it slaps me like everybody else," said Ms. Coleman, 44, a single mother raising four handicapped children. "It's going to hurt a lot of people.

"There's nothing I can do but pay it."

Some North Carolina counties still must adopt a new budget. But the N.C. Association of County Commissioners estimates at least 45 counties will raise rates this year, at an average 5- to 7-cent increase. Last year, 42 counties increased tax rates.

"It appears at this point to be a statewide trend," said the association's assistant director, Ed Regan.

No Pork Barrel Funds For '89

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — House and Senate leaders, at odds over almost every other issue this year, agree there's no money in this tight-budget year for local appropriations — better known as "pork barrel."

And one long-time Senate budget leader said that once it's gone, pork barrel may never return.

"You can say flat out, 'This year, we're not going to have pork barrel,'" said Senate President Pro Tem Henson Barnes, D-Wayne. "There's just no money. This is a lean year."

Earlier in the legislative session, Barnes held out hope that the General Assembly would find the money for charities and agencies in each members' district.

But House Speaker Joe Mavretic, D-Edgecombe, announced in April that "pork barrel" was dead — at least as long as he was speaker.

He reiterated that position this week: "Pork barrel as a fixed amount of money assigned to some members to spread in their districts as they see fit is over."

If that House-Senate consensus holds for the next several weeks, hundreds, maybe thousands, of local agencies and charities won't get the state aid they've grown accustomed to receiving every year.

Rep. Pete Cunningham, D-Mecklenburg, who introduced several local bills, said the legislature should continue to make such appropriations a priority.

"The record shows this money is spent for legitimate needs, for people needs," he said.

If the pork-barrel system is dismantled this year, it may be gone forever, said Sen. Ken Royall, D-Durham, chairman of the Senate Appropriations Committee. "It'll be awfully hard to bring it back," he told The Charlotte Observer.

Nature Has Made North Carolina's Outer Banks An Open And Shut Case

By Bob Geske
VIRGINIAN PILOT, LEDGER-STAR

SALVO, N.C. — The bleached, crumbling timbers of the New Inlet Bridge on Hatteras Island won't support a car anymore. The ramps collapsed into the shallow waters of a fisherman's cove years ago, and the south end has lost its decking.

But it provides shelter for the shellfish and fingerlings that feed in the tidal gut. And it shades the great white egret that hunts among its weathered timbers.

"She doesn't go anywhere," said Salvo postmaster Edward L. Hooper, 67. "It's just there."

The two-lane bridge hasn't had a purpose for 54 years — since the restless sands of the Atlantic coast closed New Inlet, the short-lived coastal breach that had been opened by the storms of 1932.

Within three years, a ridge of drifting sand had sealed the surging ocean pass that separated Pea and Hatteras islands. New Inlet was a memory, its bridge a curiosity.

The birth and death of inlets has been repeated hundreds, possibly thousands of times over the past 5,000 years as the forces of wind and sea reshaped the fragile barrier island chain skirting the North Carolina coast.

Inlets, the home of ports and commerce, are no more permanent than the migrating dunes.

Historians say that since the first settler arrived in the late 1500s, more than 25 inlets have been cut and survived long enough to be given names, 22 of them closed naturally, and one major inlet was closed by man during the 1960s.

Historian David Stick, who has chronicled the sands and people of the Outer Banks, said, "There is hardly a section of the entire Banks which has not, at one time or another, been cut through by an inlet."

Hooper, who has lived on Hatteras Island since birth, has seen two major inlets form in his lifetime.

Both — New Inlet in 1932 and the inlet that broke through on Hatteras Island just north of Buxton in 1962 — cut him off from neighbors for weeks or years.

But Outer Banks natives take inlets in stride.

"Things like that just happen here," he said. "They come with the storms."

To Mother Nature, inlets are tools of convenience, pressure valves created to drain tens of billions of gallons of trapped sound water daily into the ocean.

There are three major inlets on the Outer Banks between the Virginia state line and Portsmouth Island. Two of them — Hatteras and Oregon — opened just prior to the Civil War. The third, Ocracoke Inlet, has been open as long as anyone can remember.

But there have been others — Loggerhead, Drum, Whalebone, Swash, Trinity Crow, Caffey's, Gun, Providence, Hatorask and Musketo. They have helped shape the history and the lore of North Carolina's barrier chain.

At times, seven to 10 small inlets were open simultaneously, but for the past 150 years, Oregon, Hatteras and Ocracoke have provided adequate circulation, said Professor Robert Dolan of the environmental studies department at the University of Virginia.

"The three we have today are the lowest in recorded history," Dolan said, "but they are quite efficient."

Dolan said inlets, their openings and closures, are caused during the gradual westward creep of barrier islands, all of them moving to eventually rejoin the mainland.

Every day, the surf gnaws away the sands of the ocean beaches, Dolan said. Then wind, tides, overwashes and inlets deposit the sand inland or onto the seaside beaches.

Ocracoke Inlet, the granddaddy of Outer Banks inlets, was the passageway for ships that brought Sir Walter Raleigh's ill-fated Lost Colony settlers to Roanoke Island in the 1580s.

A century later, when the British tried to settle the Outer Banks colony, there were three available routes — Ocracoke, Old Currituck Inlet near the Virginia state line and Roanoke Inlet, then located at the north end of Roanoke Island in the area that became the town of Nags Head.

Old Currituck and Roanoke, the largest of the two, were labeled as "ports" by the ambitious lords of the colonies. But Roanoke Inlet, which allowed ships to pass to the town of Edenton, lost its shipping channel as sand gradually silted over. Currituck Inlet, home for a handful of privateers prior to the Revolution, also began closing in the 1700s.

For the next century, commerce centered around Ocracoke, and that island dominated the Outer Banks shipping and political communities. Political and economic power came and went with the inlets.

But the Ash Wednesday storm of March 1962, a raging northeaster, forced geographers to completely remap the Atlantic Coast.

Although the winds only reached 50 to 55 miles an hour, heavy surf pounded the beaches at the cape for six days until the ocean breached the dunes north of Buxton and created a 600-foot-wide inlet, 20 feet in depth.

The inlet formed in a popular windsurfing area now known as the Canadian Hole.

"One morning somebody came by and said there was an inlet between here and Buxton," Hooper said. "It shocked the tar out of us. We never thought such a thing."

By 1962, a paved road ran the length of Hatteras Island and tourism was a major part of the economies of Buxton, Frisco and Hatteras. The new inlet was not welcome.

An Avon-Buxton ferry was established to transport the island's high school students to Buxton. The state built a bridge that summer, but the bridge was washed away by a fall storm, said Ephriam O'Neal, who was then a commercial fisherman.

The National Park Service, which owns the Cape Hatteras National Seashore, decided not to intervene. It wanted to let the ocean have its way, O'Neal said.

Then the determined Hatterasmen appealed that decision, dramatically.

"The people here, and I was one of them, started taking old cars and anything they could find and throwing them in the inlet," O'Neal said.

Raymond Basnight, a former Dare County deputy sheriff, said even the cells of the old Hatteras Jail went into the inlet, but all for naught. The inlet was moving south rapidly, migrating as much as one-quarter of a mile in less than a year, Basnight said.

But by fall, the Park Service decided to close the inlet. A dredge was brought to Buxton Inlet and sand-bag barriers were laid on the south end. The beach reformed in a matter of months and the area was back to only three major inlets.

Although Ocracoke, Hatteras and Oregon have remained open, their depths and locations change daily as swirling tides alter the channels.

Oregon Inlet, least stable of the three, has given man most trouble. Its channel has moved about two miles south since in opened.

"Oregon Inlet is trying its rear off to migrate southward," said Tom Jarrett, coast engineer for the Wilmington office of the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers.

The channel is unreliable and the the Corps of Engineers dredges 365 days a year to keep its 14-foot channels open to the fishing fleets of Wanchese and inland harbors.

Longer Trailers Spark Battle Between Truckers And Critics

By Dennis Patterson
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — Drivers who get nervous passing tractor-trailers on North Carolina's highways will soon have five more feet of trailer to worry about as they travel through the state.

The Senate this week approved a bill already passed by the House that will let trucking companies use 53-foot trailers for light, bulky freight on interstates and other designated highways.

The debate over that measure sparked what trucking supporters called an attack on the industry, but opponents say they are just concerned about safety.

"I'm not anti-truck driver any more than I'm anti-car driver," said Sen. Jim Ezzell, D-Nash. "As long as they drive safely, I can live with them."

But Ezzell said the 53-foot trailers are continuing a pattern he has seen as long as he has been in the Legislature. Ezzell said he voted to allow "double-bottoms," or twin-trailers, on the state's highways, and it is one of only two votes he has cast in the General Assembly that he wishes he could call back.

"When twin-trailers first came up, the idea was that they would only run on the interstates," Ezzell said. "The extra trailer would be dropped at a yard at the cloverleaf and the single trailer then would go around town to make deliveries. "But that grew from just interstates to interstates and highways designated by the U.S. Department of Transportation," Ezzell said. "Now it's also on road designated by the state Department of Transportation, and they're allowed to go three miles off the interstate to reach terminals.

"It just keeps growing and the trucks keep getting bigger and bigger," he said.

The 53-foot trailers will be limited to the same highways as twin-trailers, but Ezzell said he does not expect that restriction to last five years. The trucking industry, he said, eventually will want to increase the weight allowed for tractor-trailers to let the trucks carry more freight and expand the number of roads they are allowed to use.

"And whoever is in the Legislature in 1999 probably will be looking at whether to allow two 48-foot trailers to be pulled together," Ezzell said. "But only on the interstates, of course."

Some Western states that have mile after mile of straight, flat highways already allow a single tractor to pull three trailers. But that won't happen in North Carolina, said Sen. Bill Goldston, D-Rockingham.

"I just don't see triple trailers coming here," said Goldston, who owns a trucking business and chastised senators for attacking the industry during debate on the longer trailers.

"We held off moving to 53-footers for several years," said Goldston, who was excused from voting on the bill because of his interest in trucking. "But North Carolina cannot afford to be an island. The states bordering us have already approved them and economically we cannot afford to keep them out."

Goldston said truck drivers don't like twin-trailers or the 53-foot trailers, but they are a "necessary inconvenience."

"It's like the power companies," Goldston said. "People may not like nuclear plants or the smoke from coal-powered plants, but when they turn on that light switch or microwave oven or air conditioner, they expect the electricity to be there.

"You trade off an inconvenience for something you want," he said.

"In the case of trucking, people may not like tractor-trailers, but they want their food, their clothes and the other products they use," he said. "Without trucking, they wouldn't be there."

School Secretary Shot At Desk

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SHELBY, N.C. — A 17-year-old secretary at Shelby Senior High School was shot to death as she sat at her desk Friday, and police were seeking her estranged boyfriend for questioning.

Virginia Tynese Wilson of Kings Mountain was struck by at least four bullets in her face and neck, said Shelby Police Chief James Fish.

No students were at the school at the time of the shooting, officials said. School employees told police they saw a man run from the building and speed away in a black 1984 or 1985 Buick with a red racing stripe.

Officers were seeking Andrew Tuft, 25, of Shelby. He was described as a black man, 5 feet 8 and 300 pounds.

Fish said the shooting followed a dispute over custody of the couple's 4-month-old child, Tiara LaShay Wilson. The infant has been placed under the care of social workers.

Police said they have filed a first-degree murder warrant against Tuft and planned to issue a bulletin across the Eastern half of the United States.

"We're putting out the APB (all points bulletin) because he told friends within the last 24 hours he was going to see some friends in Detroit or around there," Shelby Detective Sgt. Mackie Ashe said Friday night.

Friday afternoon, a man walked through the unlocked glass doors of one entrance at the school about 2:45 p.m., Ashe said.

Cheapest Burger

ORIENTAL, N.C. (AP) — For inquiring minds that want to know where the cheapest burger in the country can be found, it's at Red Lee's Grill in Oriental.

The 25-cent hamburgers available at the grill located on the corner of NC 55 and North Street have attracted the attention of The National Enquirer.

Georgie Powell, Red Lee's daughter, said that after reading an item in the The National Enquirer about the most expensive burger in the country, she wrote the tabloid to tell them about the least expensive burger.

"I couldn't let that go," Ms. Powell said. "They told me they'd check it out and it checked out. They called back and said these are the cheapest hamburgers in America."

Roadside Shooting

WASHINGTON, N.C. (AP) — A 48-year old Washington man was shot twice in the back Friday as he was walking to work, Beaufort County Sheriff Nelson L. Sheppard said.

Police said Willie Dixon was shot at approximately 3 a.m. while walking along U.S. 17, one mile south of Washington. Dixon died at the scene.

Sheppard said police do not have a suspect or a motive for the shooting, which was reported after a truck driver noticed Dixon's body lying on the highway overpass. He said Dixon's wallet and jewelry remained on the body.

Sheppard said Dixon was apparently walking to work at the Singer Furniture Co., approximately three miles outside of Washington in Chocowinity.

Post Exchange

FORT BRAGG, N.C. (AP) — Fort Bragg's $6.9 million main post exchange near the Spring Lake entrance to the Army post probably will be open to customers by Memorial Day 1990, officials said.

The facility will replace the 38-year-old Main Exchange on Reilly Road which is becoming increasing expensive to heat, cool and maintain and has buckets throughout the sales area for the leaky roof, officials said.

The new site will have 850 parking spaces and will be an improvement over the present PX's parking lot which also serves a post office, bank, bowling alley, pharmacy and other stores, officials said.

The present PX serves about 200,000 active-duty military personnel, reservists retirees and their dependents from as far away as Raleigh and Fort Jackson, S.C., and transacts about $2.2 million per month, he said.

Mobil Drilling

WASHINGTON, D.C. (AP) — Actions in the U.S. House last week could slow, but not stop, the Mobil Corp.'s drive to drill for natural gas off the coast of Cape Hatteras.

The House has approved a bill that would require an environmental-impact study before Mobil may begin exploring any of the 24 tracts off Cape Hatteras that it leases from the Interior Department. Mobil has said that a full environmental review is not needed.

Also, the House Appropriations Committee included $500,000 in the Interior appropriations bill to study the currents off the coast of Cape Hatteras. The study was requested by Rep. Walter B. Jones of Farmville.

Incineration

RALEIGH (AP) — The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency says it will use portable incinerators in the cleanup of a federal Superfund site in Moore County.

Kay Crane of the EPA in Atlanta said the agency's plan calls for burning 55 million pounds of pesticide waste and contaminated soil at an abandoned industrial landfill at The Pit golf course near Aberdeen.

In a move contested by the Clean Water Fund of North Carolina, the EPA plans to bury the heat-treated soil at the site during the 18-month cleanup.

House OKs 40 Pct. Threshold For State Political Primaries

By John Flesher
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — A bill allowing North Carolina candidates to win their party's nomination without a majority vote probably would not lead to a flood of black and female nominees, but should have some impact, a state lawmaker says.

"It's a question of trying to remove the racial barriers," said Rep. Mickey Michaux, D-Durham.

Under the bill, a first-place candidate who receives at least 40 percent of the vote in the primary will be declared the nominee without a runoff. Previously, North Carolina was one of 10 states — all Southern — that allow the runner-up to call for a second primary if the front-runner failed to gain more than 50 percent of the vote in the first primary.

Blacks have long sought to abolish second primaries, claiming they hurt blacks and women who often finish first in a multi-candidate primary but lose in a one-on-one runoff against a white male. The bill originally called for abolition but its sponsor, Sen. Ralph Hunt, D-Durham, accepted the 40 percent threshold as a compromise.

Michaux, who is black, has fought the runoff system since the early 1970s. He describes himself as a victim of the system, because in 1982 he received 45 percent of the vote for the Democratic nomination for the 2nd District congressional seat but lost in a runoff to Rep. Tim Valentine, who is white.

He said he did not plan to challenge Valentine in next year's Democratic primary.

The policy that has stood since 1915 cleared its final hurdle Friday, gaining final House passage without debate.

The vote was 98-6. The measure, which cleared the Senate earlier, will become law Tuesday when signed by House Speaker Joe Mavretic and Lt. Gov. Jim Gardner. It takes effect with the 1990 elections.

"I think it will lead to at least the nomination, and the election, of more blacks and woman because they are the ones who have suffered more from the 50 percent (rule) and this gives them the chance," said Michaux, chairman of the Legislative Black Caucus.

The runoff issue has been divisive for Democrats, particularly since the civil rights movement spawned more black political activism. Many conservative, white Democrats — especially those from eastern North Carolina — have defended the runoff system, saying it guarantees that the strongest candidate will be the party's nominee.

They say many Republicans have aided black Democrats in their battle against runoffs because the GOP thinks its candidates will fare better against blacks or women than against white males.

Sen. Bob Swain, D-Buncombe, warned during Senate debate of the bill that it would "destroy" the Democratic Party.

Friday's House vote was a distinct anti-climax to years of heated debate. The only discussion was by Rep. Milton Fitch, D-Wilson, a black and the House majority whip, who urged the bill's approval and called it "something we've needed for a long time."

No one else rose to speak, and the vote immediately followed. The entire process took about three minutes.

Michaux said the absence of a fight resulted partially from months of intensive lobbying by the 16-member Black Caucus, whose clout has been enhanced by the loss of party discipline and cohesiveness since former Speaker Liston Ramsey's defeat. Another factor was solid Republican support, he said.

Many Democrats were "between a rock and a hard place" on the bill, Michaux said — a likely factor in a bizarre vote shuffle that took place after the bill's lopsided passage.

The measure originally passed 9.-5, with four of the five negative votes cast by Democrats. Seventeen legislators — 12 of them Democrats — left the chamber before the vote or did not follow the rule requiring them to vote on all bills when they are in the chamber.

Michaux said some Democrats who personally favored the bill but were under pressure from their constituents to oppose it agreed to "take a walk" during the vote.

After the vote was announced, however, some Democrats who failed to vote earlier moved successfully for rules suspension allowing them to vote for the bill. Among the Democrats so requesting were Majority Leader Dennis Wicker, D-Lee, and Reps. Gerald Anderson, D-Craven; Howard Chapin, D-Beaufort; John Church, D-Vance; and Alex Hall, D-New Hanover.

House GOP leader Johnathan Rhyne, R-Lincoln, missed the vote, while Rep. George Robinson, R-Caldwell, received permission to cast a late "yes" vote and Rep. Brad Ligon, R-Rowan, switched his vote from yes to no.

Rep. Dan DeVane, D-Hoke, one of the Democrats who voted against the bill, charged that some of the late votes were cast by lawmakers who wanted to see the result before committing themselves.

DeVane said he opposed the bill because he was elected to the Legislature with help from a runoff. "I didn't feel I could vote against the method that brought me here," he said.

Mavretic Says Tax, Career Ladder Dead

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — Gov. Jim Martin's top two budgetary goals — a 1-cent sales tax increase and statewide implementation of the career ladder program for teachers — appear dead for this year, according to House Speaker Joe Mavretic.

"We simply have not been able to generate the support we need, and now we are going to look at other areas for the revenues that we need for the expansion budget," Mavretic said at a news conference Friday.

The expansion budget pays for new and expanded state programs that do not involve transportation, for which there is a separate budget. It would include the 6 percent salary increase for teachers and other state employees and the continued Basic Education Program implementation that legislative leaders say arary increases and school improvements and adjourned for a long weekend on what had been targeted as the session's final day.

The bill passed 44-3 and a final vote was scheduled for next Tuesday. If approved the measure will go to the House, which probably will reject it because it contains elements of another Senate revenue package the House voted down earlier this week.

That would lead to establishment of a joint conference committee to work out a compromise.

The Senate bill would raise the tax on gasoline by 5¼ cents, the vehicle sales tax from 2 percent to 3 percent, the tax on boats, planes and locomotives from a maximum of $300 to $1,500, and the tax on vehicle rentals from 2 percent to 8 percent. It also would boost several minor fees, such as university tuition and a regulatory levy on utilities.

Supporters say after two years, revenue from the vehicle sales tax increase would be diverted to the proposed $8.6 billion highway construction program.

Amendment Delays Profanity Proposal

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — A bill to ban profanity on school grounds has taken a turn toward athletics, but not because of the colorful language sometimes associated with football.

Sen. Marshall Rauch, D-Gaston, Friday asked to add a provision to the bill the would allow high school golfers and tennis players to use equipment given to them by companies wishing to promote their products.

The amendment was so far from the original issue of the bill — profanity on school grounds — that the Senate had to take the unusual action of suspending the rule that requires an amendment be relevant to the original bill.

"I have no specific case in mind with this, no situation I'm trying to affect," said Rauch, who said he intended the measure to help parents of disadvantaged children who might not be able to bear the expense of golf or tennis.

"In football or basketball, you have one ball and one pair of shoes and you can play a whole year or even several years," Rauch said. "But that's not true in golf and tennis. A tennis player can run through 10 or 12 rackets in a season and they are expensive. Golf equipment is expensive.

"Some fortunate parents can afford to buy this equipment, but others aren't so fortunate. That may keep more disadvantaged youngsters from being able to participate in these sports," Rauch said.

But Sen. Larry Cobb, R-Mecklenburg, said companies often make equipment available to high school programs for use by players who can't afford it.

"I think you're looking for trouble when you let 14-year-old players start using Titleist because ... companies want to promote their equipment," Cobb said. "I think you're starting to approach professionalism there."

Rauch agreed some equipment for golf and tennis is available to prep programs "but not in the quantity or quality that a national class athlete needs. And these days, we're talking about world class tennis players being 13 or 14 years old."

After other senators questioned whether the North Carolina High School Athletic Association should be consulted, Rauch agreed to let the bill and his amendment go to the Senate Education Committee for study.

The bill, as originally written, would have made outsiders subject to arrest for using profanity on school grounds in the presence of students. But some legislators questioned why the bill should apply only to outsiders and not to school personnel.

The bill, as revised in the Senate, would make it a violation to use profanity "in a loud and boisterous manner" on school grounds, similar to another law banning such language on highways.

Abortion Protesters Arrested In Durham

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

DURHAM — Seven abortion protesters were arrested and released a short time later Saturday after they sat in front of the doors of a Durham medical center.

The seven were arrested on trespassing charges and then released on $100 bond.

They were part of a group of more than 50 people who held signs, sang and prayed at the gate to Westgate Plaza, just west of South Square Mall, and in the parking lot in back of Westgate Shopping Center, a short distance from the entrance to the Medical Care Center.

Protesters began assembling about 7 a.m. at Westgate Plaza and picketed in the right-of-way next to the curb. They tried to offer anti-abortion literature to people driving into the plaza.

About 8 a.m., a group of about 20 pickets walked through the Westgate Shopping Center parking lot to the back. About nine people sat in front of the clinic's front and back doors.

Officers arrested one man as he walked toward the center while the others were being arrested.

Those who chose to remain offered no resistance as they were placed on a stretcher and carried to patrol cars.

Ms. Higginbotham said she didn't disagree with the protesters' right to demonstrate, but said the protesters were violating the right of women to obtain medical care they need.

"I'm pretty frustrated right now with how they've been coddled by the police," Ms. Higginbotham said.

"I feel like we're the victims here, and put on trial. It's still legal, you know."

One of the protesters who offered literature to people entering the plaza, Martha Daugherty, said she had had an abortion in 1973.

"I suffered the guilt of a murderer," Ms. Daugherty said. "Then I became a Christian and received forgiveness.

"I knew if there had been somebody like me at the clinic, I wouldn't have done it."

HUD Increases Rents In Durham Project Despite Local Objections

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development increased the rents 10 percent for a politically connected HUD-backed housing project in Durham, a decision that officials say will cost taxpayers $1,129,860 in the next 15 years.

HUD's Washington headquarters approved the 150-unit project in May 1985 over the objection of its Greensboro office. A few months later, HUD waived regulations requiring supporting documentation for the rent increase.

The project involved the rehabilitation of an old hosiery mill and the conversion of the building into housing for the elderly. Residents pay 30 percent of their income, regardless of the rents HUD established. By increasing the rents, HUD in effect ensured a higher federal subsidy to the developers.

Under the Section 8 Moderate Rehabilitation program, HUD allocated 150 units to the Durham Housing Authority. Durham selected MyersonAllen and Co. Inc. to renovate the Durham Hosiery Mill.

John L. Allen of Boston, president of MyersonAllen, confirmed two weeks ago that he had hired two prominent Republicans as consultants — Lou Kitchen of Atlanta, a leader of former President Reagan's campaign organization in the South, and state Rep. Harold J. Brubaker of Asheboro, who was co-chairman of the North Carolina Reagan-Bush campaign in 1980.

Allen said he had hired Kitchen in the early or mid-1980s. Brubaker said he had put the developer in touch with Kitchen. Records in the Durham City-County Planning Planning Department say Allen paid $40,000 to Kitchen in 1987 and 1988 and $12,500 to Mr. Brubaker in 1987.

The hosiery mill project had been stalled for years, until mid-1985, when it was approved in a matter of days, The News and Observer of Raleigh reported on Saturday.

At that time, the demand for Section 8 units was at least 10 times the supply. Records in the Greensboro HUD office say only 5,000 units were available nationwide to be developed in fiscal 1985. Unmet requests left over from 1984 totaled more than 50,000 units.

On May 14-17, 1985, the Greensboro office reviewed the Durham Housing Authority's application for subsidized housing units under the Section 8 program. And the office concluded that the project was "not approvable," in part because rehabilitation of an old hosiery mill would not be economically feasible.

But HUD officials in Washington apparently had already made up their minds. In early June, the Durham Housing Authority was officially notified that it would get the Section 8 units.

School Survey Upsets Parents

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. — A survey of 500 students in the Chapel Hill-Carrboro City Schools was withdrawn after parents complained that many of the questions were too personal or sensitive, officials said.

The survey, obtained Friday by The Chapel Hill Newspaper, contains more than 200 questions about feelings, health, friends and family.

The survey was given to students at Carrboro and Estes Hills elementary schools in mid-May. The school system had planned to give the survey to all students in grades two through eight, but cancelled that plan after parents objected to some of the survey questions.

The survey was designed by Janice Kupersmidt, an assistant professor at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, to find out what kinds of stresses children have that may affect their academic performance, said Gerry House, superintendent of the school system.

Before the survey was given to the students, parents were sent a letter about the survey, saying they should sign a form and return it to the school if they did not want their children to participate, House said.

Many of the questions about the students' health concerned parents. While some of the questions probably would not be considered an invasion of privacy by most parents, others were thought to be too personal.

Girls in grades four through eight were asked if they had grown taller in the past six months. They also were asked if they had begun to menstruate, if they had body hair, and if their breasts had started to develop.

Boys also were asked if they had body hair, if their skin had started to change, if they had hair on their faces.

In a questionnaire section called "My Family," students were asked who lives in their homes and what they would change about their house.

Other questions included events that were more personal: I became pregnant or got someone pregnant; my parents fought a lot with each other; a member of my family attempted suicide; a parent had trouble with alcohol or drugs; and a parent was arrested or went to jail.

Students were told their answers would be kept secret, but that a summary of general information would be provided to help the school make plans for the next year.

N.C. Officers Take Charge Of Hatcher

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SAN FRANCISCO — Indian activist Eddie Hatcher has lost his fight against extradition to North Carolina, where he is charged in the takeover of a newspaper office and where he says his life is in danger.

Hatcher, acquitted of federal kidnapping charges but then indicted on state charges, will be returned to Robeson County, N.C., sometime today, said David Guth, spokesman for the North Carolina Department of Correction.

The 31-year-old Tuscarora Indian was turned over to authorities from that state late Friday, after the 1st District Court of Appeals refused to block his extradition. He was held in "a secure facility" outside San Francisco on Friday night, Guth said.

Hatcher's supporters were disappointed by the extradition but were working on setting up a defense committee for him in North Carolina.

"We want to send Indian and non-Indian supporters into the county to make sure his safety is assured," said Antonio Gomez Gonzales, a spokesman for the International Indian Treaty Council in San Francisco.

Hatcher is charged with kidnapping 14 people in connection with the the 10-hour takeover of the The Robesonian newspaper's newsroom in Lumberton, N.C., on Feb. 1, 1988.

In the takeover, Hatcher and fellow Tuscarora tribesman Timothy Jacobs said they were trying to draw attention to local law enforcement's alleged involvement in drug dealing.

Hatcher has said that because of what he knows about the alleged drug ring, his life would be in danger if forced to return to stand trial.

He and Jacobs both were tried and acquitted on federal kidnap charges. But last December, after the acquittals, the grand jury in Robeson County indicted the pair on state charges.

Companies Scramble To File Air Reports

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

North Carolina industries scrambled this week to meet Saturday's deadline for listing their toxic air emissions with state and federal authorities.

The reports are part of a federal disclosure program that requires industries to reveal the amount of toxic chemicals they discharge into the environment. The program is commonly known as the "right-to-know" law.

As many as 900 North Carolina industries are expected to submit reports this year, said Vance E. Kee, assistant director of the state Emergency Management Division.

By Friday afternoon, the agency had received about 550 forms from across the state, Kee said. Last year, 842 companies reported their toxic discharges.

"Because the deadline is midnight tonight (Saturday), a lot of the forms will go out tonight," Kee said. "So we won't get them all until Wednesday."

The state's textile, tobacco and furniture makers helped push North Carolina into 10th place nationwide for the amount of toxic air pollution emitted during 1987, according to a report prepared from disclosure forms filed last year.

Among those filing by Friday was Glaxo Inc., which reported discharging 184,712 pounds of methylene chloride and 74,976 pounds of isopropyl alcohol into the air at its Zebulon plant during 1988. The plant makes pharmaceutical tablets and packaging for other Glaxo products.

The disclosures are based on an inventory of 300 chemicals classified by the EPA as toxic. Employers who have at least 10 workers and who manufacture, process or import or use 50,000 pounds or more of any toxic chemical must file the disclosure forms with the state and the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency.

"The goal is to eventually reduce inventories (of toxic chemicals) and get industries to begin using non-toxic compounds," Kee said.

A set of regulations to further control toxic air emissions has been in the works for the past five years, said N. Ogden Gerald, air quality section chief in the Division of Environmental Management. Now only a handful of air pollutants are regulated.

Gerald said the air-toxin regulations could be on the books as early as December and would help reduce health risks for the general public by establishing concentration levels based on the toxic effects of a given compound.

New State Laws Crack Down Harder On Drinking, Drug Use

By Mitchell Landsberg
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

New state laws that take effect around the nation this weekend will make life tougher for drug dealers, rapists, drunken drivers, drunken boaters, smokers and taxpayers.

Children get a break in several states that are banning or restricting teachers' use of the paddle. But two other states are imposing a more diabolical form of punishment on teen-agers: taking away drivers' licenses.

Laws in many states go into effect each year Jan. 1 or July 1, so this Independence Day weekend is seeing a layer added to the mounds of jurisprudence that have been piling up in lawbooks since before the states were united.

Taxes are rising in at least five states, and the usual collection of eccentric laws are entering the books in others.

It's now legal to produce caviar in Montana, but illegal for lobbyists to lend their credit cards to legislators in Tennessee. The gopher tortoise has a new and exalted status in Georgia — it's the Official Reptile of the state. The Chesapeake Bay blue crab is now the Official Crustacean of Maryland, although its only official duty, apparently, is to get eaten.

A survey of the 50 state legislatures suggests, more than anything, that lawmakers are growing more desperate about drug and alcohol abuse.

Georgia has doubled its fines for most drug dealing convictions — the maximum is now $1 million — and has authorized cities and counties to close or demolish buildings used in drug crimes.

Indiana is extending the death penalty to include murders committed during drug transactions. It also is requiring judges to impose special fines on drug dealers and giving police more authority to keep — and use — the property of dealers.

"Police were telling us they were busting drug dealers who had a lot of sophisticated equipment, such as mobile phones and two-way radios," explained Bobby Small, director of the Indiana Criminal Justice Institute. "A lot of the stuff seized ... would be useful to police."

Washington state is enacting a comprehensive, $80 million War on Drugs that includes stiffer prison terms and expanded education and treatment programs. Idaho and New Mexico are imposing taxes on illegal drugs, a ploy that is intended to "take the profit out of drug trafficking," according to Idaho Attorney General Jim Jones.

The new alcohol abuse laws are aimed primarily at keeping drinkers from operating vehicles — on land, on sea and in the air.

A new Tennessee law allows judges to require drunken drivers to equip their cars with ignition locking devices that measure a driver's alcohol level. If it's too high, the car won't start.

Colorado and Virgnia have outlawed drunken boating, while Texas has strengthened its drunken boating law. And under a new law in Georgia, airplane pilots can be charged with a misdemeanor if they fly within eight hours of drinking an alcoholic beverage.

Several states changed their rape laws. Spouses can now be convicted of raping their partners in Indiana and Iowa. Rape suspects in Georgia have been given new ammunition to fight the charges against them — they can introduce evidence in court about the sexual background of the alleged victim.

Three states have decided to spare children the rod, at least at school. Connecticut, Iowa and Virginia effectively banned corporal punishment.

Indiana and Colorado have enacted laws that hit delinquent teen-agers where it hurts — in the driver's license. Indiana high school students will lose their license if they're expelled or suspended from school twice in a year; Colorado teens can be denied a license if they've been convicted of any alcohol-related offense.

New laws in Wisconsin and Minnesota are intended to keep young people from smoking. The Wisconsin law bans the sale of tobacco to minors; the Minnesota law strengthens similar legislation.

Wisconsin state Sen. Joseph Andrea, a pack-a-day smoker who's fought previous efforts to restrict smoking, said he strongly supported the new ban. "I don't like to see anybody smoke," he said.

Those who do smoke will be paying higher taxes in two states. The cigarette tax goes up by 3 cents a pack in Washington state and 4 cents a pack in New Hampshire.

But in Utah, a federal judge Friday issued a temporary restraining order blocking enforcement of a new law barring cigarette vending machines, intended by proponents as a way of further restricting sales to minors.

Gas taxes are up in New Mexico and Kansas. And Connecticut's sales tax, which was already the highest statewide sales tax in the nation at 7.5 percent, goes up another notch to 8 percent.

Police Say Toddler's Kidnapping Hoax

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — A mother who made a tearful appeal on television for the return of a toddler who she said was snatched from a hospital lobby actually staged the kidnapping with a friend, police said.

Marilyn Galvan, 28, was charged with filing a false report, and her friend Sonja Rijo, 33, was charged with endangering the welfare of a child, said a police spokesman, Sgt. Pete Berry.

Ms. Galvan retained custody Saturday of 16-month-old Christopher, who was returned to her unharmed about 12 hours after he was reported missing Tuesday, Berry said.

"The mother and friend planned the hoax kidnapping in an effort to make Galvan's estranged husband feel guilty," Berry said. The husband was not involved, he said.

The child was found by a passer-by on a sidewalk not far from the hospital where the alleged kidnapping occurred.

Airliner Jolted In Stormy Flight

MIAMI (AP) — Two flight attendants were injured during a severe thunderstorm after an American Airlines jetliner was denied permission by Cuban air traffic controllers to change course, officials said.

State Department spokesman Adam Shub said officials were considering filing a formal protest with the Cuban government. He said the incident Thursday night involving Flight 1089 from Miami to Kingston, Jamaica, apparently stemmed from Cuba's recently announced warning that it would shoot down unauthorized aircraft as part of its anti-drug push.

"We have urged the Cuban government to exercise restraint in implementing its announced policy of shooting down unauthorized aircraft that do not land for inspection," Shub said. "While we welcome the increased efforts to interdict narcotics trafficking, the loss of innocent life must be avoided."

About 9:30 p.m. Thursday, the pilot radioed Havana air traffic controllers, asking if the plane could steer away from the sudden storm in a 17-mile-wide air corridor used by foreign carriers flying over Cuba, officials said.

"He asked if he could deviate to the left or right," American spokesman Jim Brown said. "They refused to let him do it."

No permission came, and "as a result, they had to ride it on through. They couldn't have made a U-turn within the air corridor," Brown said.

The 180 passengers were told to buckle their seat belts. The seven flight attendants were tossed by the storm and a lightning strike as they tried to put away food trays and other loose items, officials said.

Ken Van Auken, area manager for Miami's air route traffic control center, said there normally is good cooperation between U.S. and Cuban air traffic controllers.

American spokesman John Raymond said one of the injured flight attendants was treated at a Kingston hospital, but he had no details. The other injured flight attendant didn't require treatment, he said.

Bush Relaxes At Maine Home

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

KENNEBUNKPORT, Maine — President Bush, back at his beloved vacation home for an extended holiday weekend, spent a vigorous Saturday recreating by the sea, entertaining family and encouraging neighbors to watch his fireworks show Monday night.

"Beautiful day," he called out cheerily to neighbors out walking their dogs when he took his 6:30 a.m. jog on dirt roads near his family compound at Walker's Point.

The president was accompanied on the run by daughter Dorothy LeBlond, first dog Millie, a couple of Secret Services agents and a reporter.

He advised the neighbors he jogged past not to miss a fireworks display to be set off on Monday night over Walker's Point, site of the Bush home.

The president's five-day stay was billed as a mostly private time for recreation, but he said he would be going over briefing materials for the upcoming European summit.

Bush was accompanied on the sunny holiday weekend by wife Barbara, some of his young grandchildren, and other relatives.

Oldest Navy Worker Says Goodbye At 89

By Ike Flores
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ORLANDO, Fla. — The Navy's oldest civilian employee, an 89-year-old engineer, has retired and is going back to Germany, where he launched a career in aviation that spanned six decades.

Rudy Ries came to this country in 1928 and worked for 35 years for companies that pioneered in aviation: Fairchild, Convair, Martin, EDO Aircraft and for Fokker in the Netherlands. He helped design pontoons for the planes flown by Charles Lindbergh to China and by Adm. Richard Byrd to the South Pole.

"I've enjoyed my work, all of it," he said sadly at a retirement ceremony at the Naval Training Systems Center on Friday. "I will miss it."

He said he would fly to Bonn, West Germany, this weekend to live with his son, a civil engineer posted with the U.S. State Department there.

The diminutive, soft-spoken Ries worked "only" 26 years for the Navy Department, starting in 1963.

Born in Frankfurt, he joined the German air force during World War I, but he hadn't completed pilot training when it ended. In 1928, he saw the onset of Nazism in his country and came to America.

He became a citizen in 1930, the year he joined EDO on New York's Long Island.

"Lindbergh and his wife were flying to China and he wanted special floats outfitted to the bottom of the plane, with a motor in between, in case he landed in the water," Ries said.

The Lindberghs returned to EDO after their flight to China and had lunch with Ries and other company officials.

"I loaned him my pocket knife to cut his onions with, and I've still got that knife," Ries said.

Another highlight of his two stints at EDO was the design of an all-metal airplane designed to operate at 30,000 feet, a two-seater named the Model-R in his honor. The Depression caused the company to cut back work on it and the Model-R was never flown.

In 1936, Ries went to work for Consolidated Aircraft in California, which later became Convair.

From there, he and 20 other engineers and assistants were sent to the Soviet Union to help in setting up an assembly plant. After spending more than a year in the Ukraine, he got a job at Fokker Aircraft Co. in Amsterdam. But Ries' European stay was cut short with the approach of World War II, and he returned to this country.

A hands-on mechanical engineer, he admitted frustration with his profession's increasing reliance on paperwork, which he called "letters to Santa Claus."

"I enjoy engineering. I think engineering is designing things, creating things," he said. "But one thing we've turned to now is just writing specifications ... for somebody else to build something. I don't like this."

In recent years, he has designed training simulators for the controllers who explode Tomahawk and Harm missiles when they fail to detonate or go off course. He also is responsible for the design of a training aid for the military's newest torpedo, the Mark 50, which can be dropped from an airplane or fired from land or ships at sea.

Computer Art Exhibit Opens

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BOSTON — Neon and videotape have replaced oils and watercolors at an art exhibit devoted exclusively to computers.

More than 50 works by computer artists from around the world went on display Friday at The Computer Museum. The art, including two- and three- dimensional works, kinetic sculpture, animation and poly-dimensional works on videotape, runs until September.

Among the works: the 144 neon lights that form San Francisco artist Karl X. Hauser's "wall-o-fish" and New York artist Lillian Schwartz's chrome-plated mobile "Capricious Constellation."

"The one thing all these pieces have in common is that they've been created by both humans and computers," said museum spokeswoman Gail Jennes.

The exhibit titled "Computer Art in Context" is part of a conference on computer graphics sponsored by Siggraph, one of the world's leading professional associations of computer graphics researchers and practitioners.

Hauser, 34, a glass blower by trade, arranged his neon work with the use of a computer that controls the lighting and shape of the design.

Schwartz designed her giant mobile "Capricious Constellation" with the help of scientist Arno Penzias, who won the Nobel Prize for physics in 1978. The mobile is driven by a computer programmed to move it at random as if blown by winds.

Rule Leaves Small Planes In The Cold

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Owners of small aircraft and several members of Congress are trying to get the government to reconsider a new rule that leaves thousands of planes with no place to land near the nation's biggest cities.

The Federal Aviation Administration said the order requiring altitude signalling devices on all planes flying within 30 miles of the most congested airports "should significantly reduce the danger of midair collisions." The FAA rule took effect Saturday.

But pilots and small plane owners say it will clutter air traffic control screens, effectively bar 40,000 planes from 1,200 airports near big cities, and do nothing to enhance safety.

Under the rule, only planes carrying Mode C transponders can fly within 30 miles of the nation's 27 most congested airports. Mode C sends a signal telling air traffic controllers where the plane is and at what altitude.

The transponders have always been required for planes that use major airports, but they have not previously been required for low-altitude flights past the airports or for access to smaller general aviation airports that fall within the 30-mile "veils."

Patricia Weil, spokeswoman for the 290,000-member Aircraft Owners and Pilots Association, said the order will effectively put off-limits to non-Mode C planes all the airports in the Los Angeles basin, scores of public and private airports and helipads around Washington, D.C., and hundreds of airports near other cities that serve vital business and medical air traffic.

"We can no longer fly under the wedding cake," Ms. Weil said, referring to the air traffic control rules that previously allowed small planes to fly within progressively lower altitudes as they get nearer major airports, like flying under an inverted wedding cake.

Jerry Walbrun of the 125,000-member Experimental Aircraft Association of Oshkosh, Wis., said the rule will overburden air traffic controllers.

"It's a little bit like trying to use computers to control traffic in downtown Washington," he said, adding that the traffic control system is not geared to watch the scores of small planes flying well below the altitude of major airliners.

"The FAA has imposed a situation that will not enhance safety and put it into effect more quickly than their own system can handle," he said.

Many pilots are faced with the prospect of either spending from $900 to $2,000 to equip their planes with Mode C or move their airplanes to more-remote airports.

The FAA, in justifying the new rule, said it "will have a major positive impact on safety by providing air traffic controllers with vital altitude information so potential conflicts between aircraft can be safely resolved."

But last week, 18 House members sent a letter to Transportation Secretary Samuel Skinner calling for him to delay implementation of the rule until provisions can be made for access to smaller airports that fall within the veils.

"The fact is that safety does not require universal installment of automatic altitude reporting transponders," the lawmakers said, adding that government should not impose unnecessary regulations that impose "great cost on private individuals."

The Congress members said that if the Mode C requirement were limited to areas around major airports that are reached by radar, rather than the arbitrary 30-mile limit, it would open up 600 to 700 smaller general aviation airports.

The FAA has exempted from the rule antique aircraft, balloons and other aircraft without electrical systems necessary to run transponders.

The agency also acknowledged last week that many aircraft owners may have postponed purchase of Mode C units awaiting the outcome of an aircraft owners' challenge to the rule, which the FAA rejected only two weeks ago.

To accommodate them, 90-day exemptions are being granted over the phone. Pilots who want to fly within a restricted area can call air traffic control authorities at the individual airport to get the exemptions.

The FAA also indicated longer exemptions could be given for some operators who regularly use airports on the fringes of the veil in areas without radar coverage or for aircraft that cannot be equipped to handle Mode C, but written requests are required.

The transponder rule is to be extended to 111 additional airports at the end of next year.

Aviation maps printed by the Commerce Department already show the forbidden zones, so pilots have known for some time where they won't be able to fly.

20 Years After Apollo II, NASA Still Wonders

By Howard Benedict
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — Buzz Aldrin laments that "the promise of Apollo was never fulfilled," that the American space program languished after he and Neil Armstrong left the first human footprints on the moon two decades ago.

He says he hopes the 20th anniversary of Apollo 11 will "become a catalyst for the country to chart a bold course for human expansion outward."

But given today's political and tight budgetary climate, Aldrin is not too hopeful.

President Bush is expected to voice continuing support for a permanent manned space station and say other nice things about NASA's program when he meets with Aldrin, Armstrong and their command module pilot, Michael Collins, on July 20, the anniversary of the moon landing.

But no matter how many nice things the president says about space, the political truth is that Congress must approve the money. And with the space station already facing a sharp funding cut, Congress is not expected to give much support to new projects.

So the National Aeronautics and Space Administration once again is at a crossroads, as it was when the glory days of Apollo ended.

President John F. Kennedy had committed this nation to landing a man on the moon in the 1960s. The goal was to gain space superiority over the Soviet Union, whose early feats had earned the Russians worldwide respect and shocked Americans.

When the United States won the race to the moon, NASA laid out bold plans for the future.

To a presidential panel, agency head Thomas Paine in 1969 proposed a 12-man space station and a reusable space shuttle in operation as early as 1976, followed by a station in moon orbit, a base on the moon, a 50-man space station in Earth orbit and a manned mission to Mars in the 1980s.

But in a period of unrest due to domestic racial problems and involvement in Vietnam, costly plans to explore space were given low priority.

Only the reuseable space shuttle survived, and its proposed funding was cut deeply.

"Those were tough times," said Paine, who resigned in frustration a year after Apollo 11.

The Ford and Carter administrations were lukewarm toward the space program, but the shuttle was built. It performed capably as a space truck for 24 missions until Jan. 28, 1986, when the Challenger exploded, killing its seven crew members and grounding the program for 32 months.

NASA had gained some hope from President Reagan's endorsement of a strong space program and from his 1984 State of the Union message, in which he backed building the space station Freedom.

In 1985, Congress created a commission to define long-term space goals. Its chief was Thomas Paine, the former NASA administrator.

Six months after Challenger, Paine stood in the Oval Office and gave Reagan a slick leather-bound volume that recommended the space station, a lunar base and manned trips to Mars — essentially an update of Paine's 1969 plan.

Reagan two years later signed a Presidential Directive on National Space Policy that stated space leadership was a fundamental objective. It endorsed the space station and, without being specific, set a long-range goal "to expand human presence and activity beyond Earth orbit into the solar system."

Reagan's policy set in motion a NASA program named Pathfinder whose goal is to test technologies for manned and robotic exploration of the moon and planets, advanced missions in orbit and on planetary surfaces, extended human presence in space, and space transportation to the moon and planets.

Bush has not disclosed his thinking beyond saying he supports a space station. He established the National Space Council, headed by Vice President Dan Quayle, to recommend a comprehensive space policy.

Quayle is expected to have a preliminary outline ready for Bush's anniversary meeting with the Apollo 11 astronauts.

NASA needs a decision from Congress soon on how much money it can spend next year on space station Freedom. A permanent orbiting space station is essential to those ambitious Pathfinder dreams and would serve as a training base and launch pad for flights deeper into space.

Bush has requested $2.05 billion in the budget for fiscal 1990 to continue work on the station. Predictions are that Congress will trim that by $400 million to $700 million, amounts that space officials say could further delay or even kill the project.

The space station project has gone through five tumultuous years. Reagan wanted it built in cooperation with America's major allies, but there were stormy sessions over access to the station before 10 European nations, Japan and Canada agreed to invest nearly $8 billion to build sections of it.

NASA said in 1984 it could begin launching segments of the orbiting laboratory in 1992 and estimated the U.S. cost at $8 billion. In 1987, agency officials revised the pricetag to $14.6 billion. The new figure covered a suddenly scaled-down Phase One, which left off two of the external struts to which experiment modules would be attached. The struts would be added in orbit under Phase Two.

Shortly after that, a National Research Council panel reviewing station costs and technical issues for the White House said the total cost to develop and deploy the first phase would be $25.02 billion, with Phase Two raising the cost to $32.8 billion.

The schedule began slipping. And NASA now says if it receives the proper funding, it could begin assembling the station in 1995.

Some in Congress believe NASA should alter its plans and build a less complex station and, instead of relying totally on the space shuttle, develop a large unmanned rocket to do much of the lifting job.

Orbiting at 250 miles, Freedom would be home to a crew of eight, with astronauts rotating back to Earth after four to six months.

The station would allow humans to study the stars and planets from the pollution-free environment of space. The weightless interior would permit manufacture of new, contamination-free medicines and other products impossible to create on Earth. Astronauts would assemble, service and repair satellites and send them out into space. And the station could eventually be the staging point for man's return to the moon or a journey to Mars.

No one can predict whether these grand plans will come about, but the three astronauts who made that extraordinary Apollo 11 flight to the moon 20 years ago think they should.

"A permanent presence in space is a worthy objective, and I hope that space station Freedom becomes a reality," Neil Armstrong said recently.

"I strongly endorse the station, a scientific base on the moon and eventually manned flights to Mars," said Buzz Aldrin.

Michael Collins, who orbited the moon while Armstrong and Aldrin walked its surface, envisioned setting up a colony on Mars.

"We're a nation of explorers," he said. "We started on the East Coast, we went to the West Coast, and then vertically. Starting with the Wright brothers, Chuck Yeager through the sound barrier, Armstrong and Aldrin on the moon.

"It's in our tradition, it's in our culture."

'Space Plane' Wins Backing

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The National Space Council has decided to urge President Bush to keep the "space plane" alive but limit its development program to the testing of unproven technology.

The program is aimed at the development of a plane capable of taking off from a conventional runway, going into orbit and landing on a regular runway.

President Reagan called it the "Tokyo Express" for the projected two-hour flight time from New York to Tokyo.

Defense Secretary Dick Cheney proposed eliminating the project or transferring to the National Aeronautics and Space Administration most of the $427 million proposed by Reagan in the Pentagon budget for the next fiscal year.

The council recommended the project get $254 million next year, shared equally by NASA and the Defense Department, The Washington Post said in its Saturday editions.

Former FBI Agent Says Murder Suspect, Hijacker Are Similar

SEATTLE (AP) — An FBI agent who investigated the D.B. Cooper skyjacking says there are a number of similarities between Cooper and a man recently arrested in an 18-year-old New Jersey multiple murder case.

Ralph Himmelsbach, who retired in 1980, said Friday that he believes "Cooper" died when he parachuted from a Boeing 727 over southwest Washington in 1971 with $200,000 in ransom. But Himmelsbach, who led the Cooper investigation, still believes John E. List should be investigated.

"I would say he's a major suspect or, at least, I would consider him a major suspect," Himmelsbach said in a telephone interview.

As a fugitive after the killings of five members of his family, List was considered a suspect in the skyjacking from the beginning, Himmelsbach said.

Descriptions of List and Cooper are similar. Both are accused of bizarre crimes, and a fugitive from a mass murder has nothing to lose, Himmelsbach said.

List was arrested June 1 in Richmond, Va., after the television show "America's Most Wanted" ran a program on the "ballroom murders" in November 1971. List's wife, his 87-year-old mother and his three children were shot to death in their Westfield, N.J., mansion. List was extradited to New Jersey on Thursday and is in jail awaiting a court appearance.

FBI spokesman John Eyer in Seattle said Thursday that List was being investigated in the skyjacking, but said it was routine.

David Baugh, List's lawyer in Richmond before he was returned to New Jersey, compared the alleged connection to reported sightings of Elvis Presley.

On Thanksgiving eve 18 years ago, 15 days after the killings, a passenger named "Dan Cooper" on a Northwest Airlines flight from Portland gave a stewardess a note saying he had a bomb. On the ground in Seattle, he released the passengers and most of the crew in return for $200,000 and four parachutes. When the plane headed for Mexico, the hijacker took the money and bailed out somewhere over southwest Washington.

"I would say first of all he (List) does fit the general description," Himmelsbach said. "The photograph of him contemporaneous with the hijacking resembles the artist's conception of what he (Cooper) looked like.

"I understand that List received an inheritance — and spent it — of $200,000 shortly before (the killings). The hijacker demanded $200,000. It might be a coincidence, but it might also be a link."

List also "had absolutely nothing to lose as a fugitive from justice with the heaviest penalty possible hanging over his head. He had nothing whatever to lose by committing a daring and dangerous crime."

Part of the ransom money, $5,800 in $20 bills, was found on a Columbia River sandbar in February 1980. Himmelsbach thinks it washed down from an unknown site where Cooper died.

But the case is the nation's only unsolved skyjacking.

Abortion Foes Gearing Up For New Battles In State

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BLOOMINGTON, Minn. — Anti-abortion activists anxiously awaiting a possible Supreme Court decision Monday on abortion rights are gearing up for what they see as the next phase of their campaign — war in the states.

The National Right to Life Committee, which was winding up its three-day convention here Saturday, is hopeful the high court will, at the very least, return authority to the states to decide whether to restrict abortion.

If that happens, there's a realistic expectation that Pennsylvania, Wisconsin, probably Minnesota and possibly Ohio could be among the first states to consider abortion curbs, said Burke Balch, the committee's state legislative coordinator.

State action on abortion laws would depend on various issues, including timing — many legislatures don't convene again until 1990 or 1991. "What we're talking about is an extremely long, hard struggle here," Balch said.

A Missouri case, Webster vs. Reproductive Health Services, is pending before the Supreme Court and a decision is expected Monday. Missouri's law puts restrictions on abortions and defines life as beginning at conception. Upholding the Missouri law, or even parts of it, could reverse or seriously erode the 1973 landmark decision, Roe vs. Wade, legalizing abortion.

Many abortion opponents here believe a total reversal of Roe is highly unlikely. But they feel this court is their best chance since 1973 to return the issue to local lawmakers and, thus, give abortion opponents the chance to advance their goals on a state-by-state basis.

Restrictive steps that Balch said would be most likely to be introduced are parental consent and notification laws, and measures to give fathers a say in abortion decisions.

A parental consent law that was to have taken effect Saturday in Tennessee was struck down Friday by a federal judge who declared the law unconstitutionally vague.

Abortion foes say that if the Supreme Court upholds even part of the Missouri law, it would be a victory and a signal to forge ahead.

"If it goes in any direction in our favor ... the first step you'll see is politically and legislatively a great push ... in all 50 states," said Paul O'Donnell, a Franciscan brother attending the convention. "The pro-life movement is just going to move forward and intensify."

"This is phase II," he said. "The first phase was 16 years ago," when Roe vs. Wade was decided.

"It's going to be a state fight, whatever happens," said Sam Lee, a Missouri anti-abortion activist and an architect of the measure before the high court.

Abortion opponents already are talking about special legislative sessions, petition drives and increased lobbying efforts.

"The legislators are feeling the faint heat coming down the pike and it's just getting hotter," said Brenda Hucks, director of South Carolina Citizens for Life. "They're (also) going to feel heat from pro-abortion folks and the media. They'll be in the spotlight."

Lawmakers "have had some easy dodges," said Roger Mall, director of the Iowa Right to Life Committee. They'd say, "'Call me when we can start doing something.' Now, they're going to have to come out of the closet one way or another."

The National Abortion Rights Action League said in a June report that both legislative houses in nine states — Alaska, Colorado, Connecticut, Hawaii, Maine, New Mexico, North Carolina, Virginia and Washington — along with the city council in Washington, D.C., favor keeping abortion legal.

The report also said 24 legislatures favor making abortion illegal and governors in 15 of those states support such actions.

But abortion opponents won't make such distinctions.

"We're not counting any state as a loss," said Jacki Ragan, head of the committee's state organizational developmental department. "We're not counting any state as a given. All will be battlegrounds. We're going to give it all we've got."

They also say they're braced for the possibility of defeat — but remain undaunted.

"We're not about to pack up and go away," Miss Huck said. "We're in it for the duration. It's more than a passing interest. It's a bone-deep commitment."

"It's our belief that whatever the result in the Webster case, that the decision in Roe vs. Wade is in fact doomed," said James Bopp Jr., the committee's general counsel. "It is simply a question of when it will be reversed, whether it will be in this case or the next case or the next case. But it is inevitable."

Audits Show HUD Had Little Control Over Agents' Money

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — After David Martin, his wife and his attorney gave up trying to audit the accounts he held as a private closing agent in Atlanta for the Department of Housing and Urban Development, the government decided to take a crack at it.

When HUD auditors finished the math, they said Martin owed the government more than $1.6 million for the period 1984-1987 but had only half that in the separate accounts he was required to keep for proceeds from the sale of single-family homes for the agency.

Martin's story is like dozens of others, tales that together show an agency with little control over its private agents and even less control over its own accounting for the hundreds of millions of dollars the agents handle.

In Martin's case, the auditors decided $839,812 was missing from accounts.

Martin's attorney protested, reminding the auditors they had spent time at Martin's home and should be well aware of his "modest lifestyle and extremely modest financial base."

The attorney, Eugene Novy of Atlanta, said in a letter December 1987 to HUD that Martin could no longer afford to pay for legal services and that the government's efforts to trace the money "are fruitless."

The government disagrees, and is trying to recover the money plus interest in $7.5 million civil suit.

Audits of closing agents in Los Angeles, Tampa, Buffalo, Phoenix and elsewhere produced similar findings: most of the agents were sending HUD its money late; some weren't sending it at all. HUD, already strapped for funds because of Reagan administration cutbacks, was losing millions of dollars a year in interest.

"Delays by closing agents in remitting sales proceeds cost HUD over $16 million in fiscal year 1987," the agency's inspector general's office concluded after a nationwide audit of HUD's sales and acquisitions of single-family homes, one of numerous agency programs. The same report said records for the single-family program had discrepancies involving 38,000 properties and $834 million dollars.

The inspector general's report, and related audits of closing agents in several areas of the country, were obtained under the Freedom of Information Act. They are receiving close scrutiny by law enforcement officials and members of Congress as part of investigations in HUD mismanagement and influence-peddling during the Reagan years.

The documents show closing agents, although required to wire HUD its money within a day of completing a sale, routinely held the money, in almost all cases at first for a few extra days and then, as the mounting indiscretions went unnoticed, for longer periods — weeks then months and in many cases two or more years.

"During a 31-month period, the escrow company remitted $109 million of sales proceeds to HUD an average of 47 days late," a Los Angeles audit found. "The delays cost HUD $1.1 million in lost potential interest income."

That company, U.S. Escrow Co. of Downey, Calif., made just one of the 1,576 payments it handled over the nearly three-year period on time; some were up to 258 days late, HUD records show.

The owner claimed he did not know about the payment deadline; HUD records show it was listed in his contract with the agency and had on other occasions explicitly discussed it with the company.

Melvin Parsons, president of the U.S. Escrow, said in a telephone interview that the company disputed the findings of the audit but settled the case last year for $250,000.

"It was cheaper for us to settle it than to go into court," he said Thursday.

A review of 37 cases in Tampa, Fla., found that late payments cost the government more than $18,000.

In Buffalo, N.Y., an audit of a one-time HUD broker found that he withheld payments, overbilled and paid himself advances from HUD money. When he died two years ago he was almost $73,000 in arrears to the government. His widow later withdrew money from a HUD escrow account according to department records. She has agreed to repay the money, HUD officials say.

In Montgomery, Ala., auditors said Rick's Lind-Davis Real Estate Co. failed to pay HUD $2 million and was late in remitting an additional $3.8 million from sales between August 1984 to November 1987, costing the government more than $320,000 in interest.

Federal authorities still are trying to recover that money, according to HUD officials.

Some of the agents mingled HUD money with private and other checking accounts, conceivably earning interest that should have been going to the government, according to documents.

HUD was not detecting the late payments because of sloppy or nonexistent record-keeping. Some office kept records on index cards; others had so few computers that workers had to go from the first floor to the ninth of a regional HUD office to use one.

Democrats Find Their Coffers Going Empty

By Paul West
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — The payroll is up and fund raising is off sharply at the Democratic National Committee under new party chairman Ronald H. Brown.

Present and former Democratic officials attribute the financial shortfall in part to initial nervousness among major contributors over the leadership of Brown, a former Jesse Jackson aide and the first black to lead a national party.

Brown has had to spend much of his first few months in office reassuring leading Democrats, including conservatives, Southerners, major donors and others, of his commitment to helping the party regain the presidency in 1992. And while he has made substantial progress in easing their concerns, that success has yet to be reflected on the bottom line of the party's funding reports.

If money problems continue, it will be much tougher for the Democrats to compete in this year's gubernatorial and special House elections. Also, preparations for the 1990 elections, when all 435 House seats, 34 of the 100 Senate seats and 38 state governor's offices are up for grabs, could be retarded.

"They're way behind the curve on the fund-raising side," said a former DNC aide. "It's going to be a big problem if the trend continues into the fall."

A sharp drop-off in donations from organized labor, wealthy businessmen and other big givers has prevented the Democrats from building up cash reserves for next year's elections. And with summer traditionally a slow period for fund-raising of all kinds, the chances of rapid improvement are not good.

"We really have been stretched," said DNC communications director Michael McCurry, citing the unexpected expense of having to fund three special House elections this year as one reason.

With three more special elections scheduled in coming months, the national committee's resources will be further strained, at a time when the Democrats' House campaign committee faces serious financial problems of its own.

The DNC spokesman said plenty of money is available to keep the party headquarters operating for the foreseeable future, thanks to an unusually large surplus left over from last year's election. But he acknowledged that the sluggish pace of fund-raising is having an impact on the DNC's political operations, as officials postpone making new hires in order to conserve cash.

Whatever austerity measures have been imposed appear to be somewhat selective, however.

For example, in May, while the party was running an operating deficit of almost a quarter of a million dollars, the DNC ran up limousine charges of $5,107.77.

In all, the Democratic committee spent about $1.5 million more than it took in for the first five months of the year, according to reports filed with the Federal Election Commission.

During April, the party had total contributions of only $251,800, the lowest amount since the DNC began reporting donations on a monthly basis in 1982. And by the end of May, the most recent period for which figures are available, the $5.4 million surplus that the party began the year with had been depleted by almost one-third.

"We're lucky Paul Kirk left us with a nice reserve," said Melissa Moss, the DNC's new finance director.

The Republicans, meantime, have been fattening their bank account, out-raising Democrats by 5- or 6-to-1 so far this year, margins not seen on the national level since the early 1980s. As of March 31, the latest date for which figures are available, the Republican National Committee had a cash surplus of $5.7 million, and an RNC aide said the figure now exceeds $8 million.

Democratic officials say they're confident the worst of their financial slump is over. But it may be October, when the committee's annual fund-raising gala is held, before the party begins taking in more than it spends.

"We're beginning to see the thing turning around," said DNC treasurer Robert Farmer, who set Democratic money-raising records as finance chairman of the Dukakis for President campaign last year.

Party officials point out that it is always difficult to raise money in the year after a presidential election. However, contributions to the DNC for the first five months of this year were down by 39 percent over the same period in 1985.

Expenses, meantime, were up by almost 20 percent. Under Brown's chairmanship, the party is expanding its staff in several areas, including the press and political research offices.

In a private memo sent recently to the party's executive committee, the new chairman outlined his strategy, which requires increased spending for new voter registration and congressional redistricting projects, creation of an in-house polling operation and an expanded communications division.

"Simply stated, to achieve our ambitious political goals, we must build a stronger and financially more secure Democratic National Committee," Brown wrote.

Brown set a fund-raising target of $100 million for the 1989-1992 period, an increase of more than 25 percent over the preceding four years.

Industry Says EPA May Toughen Bill

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Industries with the highest stakes in clean air legislation are lobbying to make sure stringent enforcement provisions aren't slipped into the formal bill submitted to Congress by the Bush administration.

Industry lobbyists say they believe some Environmental Protection Agency officials want to be tougher on industry than does President Bush, who unveiled his clean air plan June 12.

Lobbyists for the auto, electric utility and petroleum industries say they are particularly concerned about tougher standards on acid rain, additional curbs on motor vehicle pollution, and the amount of flexibility that industry will be given to reduce pollutants.

The bill promises to be at the center of a major congressional struggle for at least the next six months.

"We're emphasizing the importance of sticking with the president's program," said Dale Brooks, a Chevron lobbyist who has participated in petroleum industry meetings with administration officials since Bush outlined his plan.

"If they start dragging in cats and dogs ... it will slow down the process considerably," he said.

EPA spokesman David Cohen responded: "If the rumor is we're going off in directions rejected by the (administration's) Domestic Policy Council, that's absolutely false. We're taking a very conservative approach to making the president's idea work."

The industry lobbyists said their concern was inspired in part by an early EPA draft of the legislation, which contained measures industry didn't like, but which preceded Bush's announcement and is now — everyone agrees — outdated. They added that administration officials listened, but made no specific commitments on legislative language.

The industry executives pointed out that Bush only revealed the broad outlines and goals of his plan, while leaving the legislative drafting — where a word or numerical change can make an enormous difference — to technical and policy experts.

"Our concern is the EPA will try to make the bill more stringent than Bush indicated," said one lobbyist for a large utility who participated in one meeting and was familiar with several others. "I would say the effort is low-key, fairly targeted and fairly discreet."

The lobbyist, who spoke only on condition his name not be used, said utilities are concerned with the acid rain reduction plan because Bush did not use precise language on the amount of sulfur dioxide emissions to be permitted by coal-fired power plants.

Bush said his proposal "envisions" an emission standard of 2.5 pounds per million BTUs through 1995. That would be tightened to "approximately" 1.2 pounds per million BTUs through the year 2000.

"Those words give EPA room to wiggle around" in achieving the sought-after 10 million-ton sulfur dioxide reduction, the lobbyist said, noting that EPA has in the past discussed an even tougher standard for the 1995-2000 phase.

The industry official added that at a meeting with EPA officials, "We didn't accuse them of subverting what the president said, but EPA knew why were were inquiring about some of these things."

The auto industry, which says the replacement of old cars with new ones will lower motor vehicle emissions, is wary of new tailpipe standards. The petroleum industry is concerned about how far Bush's plan for alternative motor vehicle fuels will go.

Fire Chief Says Atlanta Deaths Caused By Lack Of Sprinklers

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ATLANTA — The city's top fire official said Saturday that four people would not have died in the worst Atlanta fire in nine years if sprinklers had been installed in the 27-year-old office building.

"In this instance, I guarantee you there wouldn't have been four deaths if sprinklers had been in there," said Acting Fire Chief Tom Perrin.

The 10-story Peachtree 25th building, which housed 1,200 officeworkers including those from six federal agencies, was built in 1962 — 12 years before city codes required sprinkler systems in buildings taller than eight stories, Perrin said.

No laws were passed to force the owners of older buildings to install the sprinklers, he said.

"They (owners) say it costs too much, but how much are these four lives going to cost?" Perrin said. "You know there are going to be lawsuits filed in a fire like this."

A series of powerful electrical explosions set off when an electrical worker was changing a fuse triggered the blaze at 10:30 a.m. Friday. Much of the building was evacuated quickly, but a number of workers were trapped and broke out windows to escape choking plumes of smoke.

They were rescued by firefighters using ladders, but one woman, 20-year-old Cassandra Hayward, leaped from a sixth-floor window to escape the fire. She suffered broken legs, a broken ankle and hand injuries and was in intensive care Saturday at Piedmont Hospital. Seven others remained hospitalized Saturday, one in critical condition.

Sgt. Steve Martin with the Fulton County Medical Examiner's office identified two of the dead as Clifton C. Chandler, 29, of Decatur, a graphics artist with an office in the building; and Victor Tinubu, 36, of Atlanta, whose body was found on the sixth floor. Martin said Tinubu's reason for being in the building was not immediately known.

The other two victims, the electrician who was involved in the first explosion and a woman, had not been positively identified by Saturday afternoon, Martin said.

Sgt. Richard Eskew, another investigator with the medical examiner's office, said autopsies revealed all four victims died of smoke inhalation, with the electrician also suffering severe burns.

Investigators were puzzled about the identity of the woman, identified as black, in her early 30s, about 5-foot-8 and weighing about 200 pounds. Eskew said no one had even telephoned authorities with a missing persons report and she apparently did not work in the building.

"I don't understand it," he said.

It was the worst Atlanta fire since 1980, when five people were killed in an explosion at the Gate City Day Nursery. Four of those dead were children.

Although thick smoke was to blame for the deaths in Friday's fire, Perrin said a sprinkler system would have "certainly" saved three people whose bodies were found some distance from the initial blast.

Even the workman who was badly injured by the explosion was able to move down a hall away from the fire and might have lived had a sprinkler system put out the blaze, he said.

"It might have even saved that fourth guy," Perrin said. "I feel like we probably wouldn't have had any deaths if we'd had the sprinkler system."

Fire officials were focusing their investigation Saturday on whether extensive electrical work being done in the building played a role in the fire and whether some of that work violated city codes.

LANDOVER, Md. — If you fancy a grinning Richard Nixon clown doll or a bas-relief of the Last Supper in bilious brown plastic, the Library of Congress is the place for you.

Famous for its priceless collection of books and manuscripts, the Library of Congress also is the secret repository for perhaps the world's biggest collection of the ephemera of American pop culture.

From birdbaths to Barbie dolls, the Library of Congress has it all.

"We don't critique it, we just collect it," says Frank J. Evina of the library's U.S. Copyright Office, the government's keeper of kitsch.

Here in this Washington suburb, miles from the library's hushed, oak-paneled main reading room on Capitol Hill, the Copyright Office has schlepped enough schlock over the years to fill a cavernous warehouse nearly the size of a domed football stadium.

Stuffed in cardboard boxes and stacked high on metal shelves are millions of wall plaques, plaster busts, T-shirts, games, puzzles, dolls, gaudy fabrics, cereal boxes, posters, lamps, garden fountains, door knockers, wall thermometers, whiskey decanters and other memorabilia of America's throwaway society.

"This is the creative genius of America," said Evina with a wave of his arm. "Isn't it wonderful?"

Until the copyright law was changed in 1978, applicants for copyright protection for their music, writings or artistic designs were required to submit two samples of their work to the Copyright Office.

That created a worsening headache for copyright officials, who had to store all that stuff somewhere, until Congress decided that photographs or written descriptions would suffice.

Although the Copyright Office has copyrighted more than 45 million items since the late 19th century, the bulk of the objects kept at the Landover warehouse cover pop culture of the late 1950s through the 1970s.

For Watergate wallowers, there is the Watergate chess set. Pieces sculpted in white represent the good guys, Sam Ervin and his Senate investigators. Opposing pieces cast in a dark hues include President Nixon in a defiant pose, flanked by his gang of Haldeman, Ehrlichman, Mitchell and Dean.

Music lovers can sample more than 2 million audio tape cassettes of forgettable songs that were copyrighted — but never published — by neighborhood garage rock bands. Sample titles: "Punch a Wall," "Where Does All This Love Come From?" and "Take Me Back to Adolescence."

Among the plaster likenesses of Buddha, Harpo Marx, John F. Kennedy, Don Quixote, Albert Schweitzer, Laurel and Hardy and a snarling German shepherd was a stack of X-rated videos, including "Hot Nights at the Blue Note Cafe," and a box of pornographic paperback novels with titles like "Naughty, Naughty Wife."

Flower pots came in the shape of hippos, lions, snails, turtles and frogs. There was a fire hydrant ice bucket in bright red, a fake gold Miss America trophy from 1955 and a plastic wall thermometer decorated with a woodpecker and a button that's supposed to turn blue for fair weather and pink for rain.

Whiskey decanters portrayed Democratic donkeys and Republican elephants, a Hawaiian warrior, a crank-operated telephone, a pair of combat boots and helmet, antique cars and a pyramid representing the El Kahir Shrine Temple in Cedar Rapids, Iowa.

The collection is closed to the public, but Evina says the Library of Congress probably ought to mount an exhibition of this lowlife Americana some day.

A few mementos from yesteryear, such as once-familiar cereal boxes and toothpaste tubes no longer seen on store shelves, may exist only in the Copyright Office's collection and would be irreplaceable, he said.

"Someday someone will thank us for keeping all these things," said the government's guru of gewgaws.

Few Churches To Honor Author Of England's Historic Prayers

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LONDON — The Reformation liturgy of England will flicker briefly in a few hundred of the country's 11,000 Anglican churches on Sunday, the 500th birthday of Thomas Cranmer, architect of England's historic prayers.

At St. Giles-in-the-Fields, off Charing Cross Road in London, a special peal of bells is planned and the rector, the Rev. Gordon Taylor, will use Cranmer's Book of Common Prayer as he does at all services.

Taylor is one of the few clergymen of the state Church of England who cling to the old prayer book that appeared in 1549, when Cranmer was archbishop of Canterbury.

The traditionalists scorn The Alternative Service Book, written in contemporary English and published in 1980, which was ordered by the General Synod of bishops, clergy and laity ruling the church. The new book has almost entirely supplanted Cranmer's.

"Rapid social and intellectual changes ... have made it desirable that new understandings of worship should find expression in new forms and styles," the editors wrote in the new book's preface.

"I wouldn't think of using anything else but The Book of Common Prayer, and I haven't done so in the 51 years I've been a parson," Taylor said in an interview.

"I don't understand why the old prayers were abandoned. If some people want something else, God bless 'em, but not me," he said.

Anthony Kilmister, chairman of the Prayer Book Society, which has campaigned to keep the old prayers for most of 20 years, said he doubted whether more than a few hundred churches would remember Cranmer on Sunday.

"Cranmer was a liturgical genius who encapsulated ... the Church of England's doctrinal standard, in a heightened English which has become timeless," Kilmister said.

"It is sad indeed that we have not found another Cranmer to write a modern prayer book. Perhaps it will take another 500 years," he said.

Cranmer, as archbishop of Canterbury, dissolved King Henry VIII's marriage to Catherine of Aragon in 1533 and crowned Anne Boleyn queen. The divorce was forbidden by Pope Clement VII, and Cranmer became England's first Protestant archbishop when the king broke with Rome and set up the Church of England the next year.

Cranmer encouraged the translation of the Bible from Latin into English, ordering a copy to be placed in every church, and directed the translation and ordering of the litany from Latin.

He lived in turbulent times and died a martyr.

Cranmer stood by during the king's purges and killings. He was hated by the Roman Catholic Queen Mary I for trying to block her accession. Under pressure, he recanted his Protestant beliefs but finally defied the queen and went to his death at the stake in Oxford in 1556.

Archbishop of Canterbury Robert Runcie has publicly gone on record as regretting the ouster of the old prayer book, which he said was too hurried.

Babies Abandoned By Crack Addicts Crowding Hospitals

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Seven newborns lie sleeping, swaddled in pink and blue blankets and tucked into bassinets in a hospital nursery. Six were born to mothers addicted to crack cocaine and then abandoned.

In the same pale yellow room with green curtains, a 6-month-old girl smiles and gurgles in a swing near two children in playpens. They, too, are "boarder babies," whose addicted mothers abandoned them.

"Sometimes there's not a vacant bed in neonatal intensive care between Richmond and Philadelphia," says hospital director Dr. Haynes Rice.

"See that," he says, pointing to the baby in the swing, right next to the infants. "You shouldn't have them with newborns. But what can we do?"

The material cost for dealing with these children is high — from $750 a day to $1,768. The physical and psychological price is immeasurable.

Statistics gathered by the House Select Committee on Children, Youth and Families suggest that 375,000 newborns a year may be harmed by drug exposure and that last year 11 percent of pregnant women used drugs.

Although hospital officials say the number of boarder babies is growing, the problem is so recent that nationwide statistics aren't available. There's not even a standard definition, although Rice defines boarder babies as infants who are ready for discharge but have not had a parental visit for 30 days.

A recent visit to the Howard hospital found 21 of the abandoned children. They appeared healthy, although some had been born drug-addicted.

"Healthy is a word I'd be careful about using with these children," Rice says. "They're not sick, but some of them will have problems later on. We're told these babies will have problems for the rest of their lives."

Two of the recent infants tested HIV positive, meaning they carry the virus believed to cause AIDS.

In the typical case, a multiple drug user gives birth, stays for three days and goes, leaving behind what Rice calls "these little itty-bitty ones."

"They just leave and you never know if they plan to abandon the baby."

The sign on the nursery door says: "Daily visiting hours restricted between 10 a.m. and 12 noon." But the only visitors many of the infants have are the busy nurses who tend to them when they can.

On another floor, an 11-month-old boy, the oldest boarder baby at the hospital, sits in a carriage eating ice cream in a pediatrics ward covered with wallpaper of clowns and Raggedy Anns. The nurses call him by his name, Terrail, but to hospital officials he is "Baby 3." A sick child wails in the background.

Terrail is not ill but already is developmentally handicapped by a life spent entirely in the hospital. The shortage of staff means he can't crawl and play as youngsters his age normally would, and the nurses say he hasn't taken any steps toward walking.

"It's wrong for a baby to be in a hospital for a year and not sick," Rice says.

Hospitals must swallow the cost of caring for the boarder babies, an expense that eventually is passed along to the public through higher fees and insurance premiums. Meanwhile, hospitals appeal to the welfare bureacracy to find homes for the children.

Nationally, boarder babies' fates vary by circumstance and jurisdiction. After 11 months, Terrail has not been placed for adoption or foster care.

After 30 days the Howard hospital notifies the District of Columbia Department of Human Services about the abandoned children. But the babies wait as forms are filled and papers are processed.

Chinese Troops Watch As Americans Celebrate

By John Schidlovsky
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

BEIJING — Chinese troops armed with submachine guns briefly took up positions Saturday outside the U.S. Embassy here, where American citizens sang "America the Beautiful" at an Independence Day celebration curtailed by the turmoil in Beijing.

A few hours after arriving outside the embassy, most of the soldiers left. As Chinese plainclothes police watched from the street, about 200 Americans went on with the annual Fourth of July party, eating hot dogs, drinking beer and playing volleyball.

Embassy officials said they did not know why the Chinese troops had staged the unusually strong show of force. Since mid-June, soldiers periodically have patrolled the neighborhood in an apparent effort to intimidate any Chinese students or dissidents who might try to take refuge in the U.S. Embassy.

China has vowed to arrest leading dissidents Fang Lizhi and his wife, Li Shuxian, if they emerge from the embassy, where they took refuge June 5 after the massacre by Chinese troops of pro-democracy demonstrators in the area of Tiananmen Square.

For weeks, plainclothes police and armed soldiers have patrolled the streets and corners next to the U.S. Embassy. Chinese video monitors, mounted on lampposts, maintain a 24-hour surveillance of the embassy gates.

In the past month, Sino-U.S. relations have plummeted to their lowest point in years. Washington has imposed sanctions on Beijing in response to the government's crackdown on students and dissidents. China has angrily denounced the moves as "interference in China's internal affairs."

Outside the U.S. Embassy Saturday, about half a dozen soldiers and police, some of them carrying Czech-made submachine guns, appeared about noon. They posted themselves in front of the main embassy building — where the Independence Day party was held — and also outside the separate residence of the U.S. ambassador.

As Americans entered the embassy ground, they had to pass a young, helmeted soldier who pointed a submachine gun at each visitor. Inside the gates, American Marines asked to see U.S. passports of those entering the compound.

The turnout of Americans was far smaller than in recent years. Last year, about 1,500 Americans attended the Independence Day event. But this year, there was a noticeable absence of children and families — the result of last month's evacuation of dependents after the Tiananmen attack.

"We are not under siege," said Raymond Burghardt, the embassy's deputy chief of mission, in a lighthearted denial of a television network's description of the embassy.

Burghardt was in charge of the embassy Saturday in the absence of Ambassador James Lilley, who flew to South Korea last week to spend the holiday with his wife, who was among those evacuated from Beijing last month.

The government's anti-American campaign was reflected in state-run newspapers Saturday, part of an ongoing official attack on the United States that has been aimed at President Bush, the Voice of America, the Associated Press and other American targets.

Saturday, the Liberation Daily lashed out at members of Congress, which voted last week to impose new sanctions on China that are more comprehensive than those announced by Bush.

"Some American congressmen have been playing the 'interfere in China's internal politics' game for a long time. To them, the suppression of the counterrevolutionary rebellion in Beijing was just another opportunity to attack the Chinese government and people. This cannot but incur the indignation of the Chinese military and the people," the paper said.

New Chinese Leader Could Face Insurmountable Woes

By Jim Abrams
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BEIJING — When Jiang Zemin was named head of the world's largest communist Party, he inherited more than a powerful position — he inherited a load of serious problems.

Jiang, successor to the disgraced Zhao Ziyang, must deal with the aftermath of the government's suppression of the pro-democracy movement and with an economy slipping out of control.

He also must live in the shadow of his two successors, the late Hu Yaobang and Zhao, both purged for failing to clamp down on the democratic impulses of youth.

Jiang's political future seems to rest on the health of 84-year-old senior leader Deng Xiaoping and the desires of other party elders who strongly believe in the communist ideology that has ruled China for 40 years.

"It depends, as so much has in the last weeks, on what one old man decides to do. That's where it becomes unpredictable, because it's one old man," said an Asian diplomat who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Jiang already is being compared to Hua Guofeng, China's titular head during the transitional years of political instability between the 1976 death of Mao Tse-tung and the rise of Deng.

There probably will not be more pro-democracy demonstrations in the near future like the one crushed when soldiers drove thousands of protesters from Tiananmen Square on June 3-4.

But the willingness of people to put up with political repression may be tied to how well the economy performs and to living standards.

Premier Li Peng last fall announced a two-year austerity plan designed to slow economic growth to curb inflation, running about 30 percent in urban areas.

Industry was growing so quickly that it was taxing raw material and energy supplies. Also, banks were issuing loans for new construction and expansion without getting old loans back, adding to the inflationary pressures.

Li's plan has had modest success. The industrial growth rate has been shaved from about 20 percent last year to 11 percent, and inflation has dropped slightly.

But factories can't pay their bills because credit has dried up, and exporters are reneging on contracts because they lack the raw materials needed for production.

A deepening energy crisis is forcing factories to shut down for days each week, and severe shortages of some raw materials have contributed to rampant corruption. Factories often have to pay off officials who obtain materials at low state-set prices and resell them for handsome profits.

Unemployment, which according to official estimates will rise to 3 percent from 2 percent this year, has caused great social despair. Millions of people, mostly peasants from the countryside, have been put out of work by the cancellation of construction projects and have been left to drift from town to town looking for work.

Premier Li's economic measures have all but stopped economic reforms, particularly changes crucial to bringing prices in line with market values and easing serious supply-demand gaps.

The purge of Zhao, one of the pioneers of China's market-oriented reforms, and his followers will deprive the nation of some of its most innovative economists.

"Economic thinkers will at best be under a cloud," said a Western diplomat who spoke on condition of anonymity. "There will be a lot less intellectual energy."

Diplomats also speculated that Jiang will, like Premier Li, be more comfortable with central planning models that Zhao tried to dismantle.

That would not bode well for flagging efforts to restructure China's economic base.

In the first three months of 1989, before students took to the streets to demand political reforms, 22 percent of state-run enterprises lost money. The amount of losses, made up by the state treasury, was the equivalent of $1 billion, up 120 percent from the same period in 1988.

Foreign businessmen who fled when the crackdown began now are returning, but the political turmoil could seriously affect China's foreign business relations.

The United States, Japan and the European Economic Community have urged international lending institutes to postpone new loans to protest the crackdown. Such a move would deprive China of billions of dollars in development money.

The World Bank has deferred consideration of $780 million in loans.

New Military Leader Fires 28 Army Generals In Sudan

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

KHARTOUM, Sudan — Sudan's new military leader on Saturday pledged to end the 6-year-old civil war peacefully and promised to make contacts with the southern rebels. Twenty-eight army generals were fired.

"Our primary goal is peace, and we (the army) are the people mostly suffering from war," Brig. Gen. Omar Hassan Ahmed el-Bashir told a government meeting that was broadcast on official radio. "I will enlist the help of all experts in the quest for peace."

El-Bashir said the peace overtures begun last month by Prime Minister Sadek el-Mahdi, whom he toppled Friday, were "political machinations and not serious."

The war has crippled the economy and led to widespread famine that has claimed hundreds of thousands of lives.

El-Bashir led 15 military officers in the bloodless coup, the fourth military takeover in Sudan's 33 years of independence. The junta, known as the National Salvation Council, imposed a state of emergency, suspended the constitution and dissolved Parliament, political parties and unions.

Hundreds of troops guarded the streets on Saturday, stopping and searching cars and manning barricades. Tanks and armored cars guarded the presidential palace, army headquarters and bridges spanning the White Nile and Blue Nile that bisect the city.

Telex and telephone communications with Khartoum, cut immediately after the coup, were restored.

However, reporters wanting to send stories by telex were ordered to submit their copy for "verification" by officials.

Khartoum Airport reopened for eight hours today for planes carrying Moslem pilgrims to Saudi Arabia for the annual pilgrimage, but it was closed to other international traffic.

El-Bashir, 44, consolidated his power on Saturday by sacking 28 army generals, including Gen. Fat'hi Ahmed Ali, the commander in chief, and Gen. Babu Nimir, the chief of staff and a reputed el-Mahdi supporter.

The junta promoted el-Bashir from brigidier to lieutenant general. He earlier named himself prime minister, defense minister and armed forces commander.

Sources close to the junta said the army detained dozens of political figures after the coup, but there were conflicting reports about el-Mahdi's whereabouts. Egypt's Middle East News Agency reported Saturday that el-Mahdi was in custody.

The sources did not verify that report but said the army is holding Hassan al-Turabi, head of the fundamentalist National Islamic Front; Idris al-Banna, a member of the disbanded State Council; and Mohammed Ibrahim Nugud, secretary general of the Communist Party.

At the meeting, el-Bashir put government undersecretaries in charge of ministries pending appointment of a new Cabinet.

He said he would scrap the peace process begun by el-Mahdi and launch his own peace strategy, but he gave no details.

In May, el-Mahdi opened peace talks with representatives of the Sudan People's Liberation Army, led by former army Col. John Garang, the leader of the anti-government rebellion. The mainly Christian and animist southerners demand more autonomy from the mainly Moslem, northerner-controlled government.

Talks were to have been resumed Tuesday in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, but the junta on Saturday indefinitely banned all official missions abroad.

The talks were based on a tentative peace accord concluded in November and later endorsed by el-Mahdi under pressure from the army and the unions.

Rebel leaders have not commented on el-Bashir's coup.

Also Saturday, the junta released more than two dozen officers whom el-Mahdi's government arrested two weeks ago and accused of plotting a coup.

In the United Arab Emirates, el-Bashir's elder brother indicated that the new leader supported extended military rule. The brother, Mohammed Hassan Ahmed el-Bashir, works as a university translator there.

Solidarity Leaders Rule Out Walesa As Candidate

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WARSAW, Poland — Solidarity legislators decided Saturday against offering Lech Walesa as a presidential candidate because the political system is not yet democratic enough, a spokesman said.

The opposition lawmakers also decided to withhold taking a stand on the communist party's choice for president until just before the meeting of the National Assembly, which will choose the president. That meeting is expected sometime this week.

The legislators said it would be best if there were more than one candidate.

"We are waiting for decisions of the coalition around the Polish United Workers (communist) Party as to what candidate it will recommend. Or rather what candidates," parliamentary deputy Bronislaw Geremek told state television after the meeting.

The leader of the communist party, Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski, announced Friday he did not want to be a nominee and he endorsed Interior Minister Gen. Czeslaw Kiszczak. The party has asked Jaruzelski to reconsider.

"As goes for the candidates from the coalition (communist) side, we will assume our stand on the eve of the election — that is on the eve of the first session of the National Assembly," Solidarity parliament deputy Janusz Onyszkiewicz told a news conference.

During the daylong debate, Solidarity considered putting up its own candidate. The obvious choice would be Soldidarity leader Lech Walesa, Onyszkiewicz said, but he added, "The time is not good for Walesa now."

"We are not in a democratic system and we don't think that Lech Walesa should be the president in this system which is not fully democratic," he said. Walesa said in the past that he would not run for president.

The president, who is limited to two six-year terms, will be commander-in-chief of the armed forces and be responsible for foreign relations. He may dissolve Parliament for new elections and declare one 90-day state of emergency.

The Sejm, or Parliament, and the Senate will convene in separate sessions for the first time July 4. Their first joint session as the National Assembly is expected later in the week. That is when the president will be chosen.

Officials want the president in office before President Bush arrives for a three-day visit July 9.

The communist coalition has a 300-259 advantage, but there are some internal divisions.

Communist party spokesman Jan Bisztyga said Friday a meeting will be held to choose between Jaruzelski and Kiszczak before the National Assembly meeting.

Among the options considered at the Solidarity meeting were the possibilities of finding a party or neutral candidate the opposition could support.

Police Clash With Blacks At Town Meeting, 11 Killed

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa — Police clashed with residents holding a community meeting in the black homeland of Bophuthatswana on Saturday, and nine officers and two civilians were killed, local news reports said.

Officers in the town of Leeufontein, 150 miles northwest of Johannesburg, were investigating an "alleged illegal gathering when they were attacked by a large crowd of people with petrol bombs, axes and stones," the South African Press Association quoted police officials as saying.

In an earlier report, the Press Association said the deaths occurred when police fired on the meeting with automatic rifles and people at the meeting retaliated.

Clashes between local citizens and police have been reported in Leeuwfontein and nearby Braklaagte since they were incorporated into Bophuthatswana last year. In March, police in Braklaagte were accused of beating people who refused to declare themselves citizens of Bophuthatswana.

Critics say such boundary changes in South Africa have deprived thousands of people of South African citizenship and the job opportunities and other advantages that go with it.

Police Col. D.A. George was quoted by the Press Association as saying he was unsure what the meeting in Leeuwfontein was about but that it probably concerned the incorporation issue.

George said that in the "unprovoked attack," four officers were trapped in a police vehicle and burned to death and five others were killed by stones and axes. The two civilians were killed by police gunfire when the officers tried to defend themselves, he said in a statement.

George said an unspecified number of arrests were made and police were patrolling the area on foot and in helicopters.

A spokesman for the Transvaal Rural Action Committee quoted a community leader, Dadelik Majasa, as saying police opened fire during the meeting, killing two or three civilians, and that four or five officers were killed when the crowd retaliated.

Some of Leeuwfontein's 1,500 people have gone to court to contest the incorporation on grounds it was done without prior notice. A similar legal appeal by Braklaagte involving 9,000 rural blacks was rejected by a regional court in March.

Bophuthatswana is one of several tribal areas within South Africa that the white-controlled government has encouraged to become nominally independent, a strategy that in effect helps control the size of the country's 28 million blacks. However, the homelands are not recognized internationally as separate countries.

Bophuthatswana, located in the northcentral part of the country, has an estimated 1.7 million people.

Bus Wreck Kills 50

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — A bus ran off a road and rolled down a 900-foot embankment in Natal province Saturday, killing 50 passengers and injuring 30, press reports said.

As many as 21 people were still trapped in the wreckage, nine hours after the accident near the coastal city of Port Shepstone, said a report from South African Broadcast Corp.

There was no immediate word on where the bus was headed or who its passengers were. There was no indication that any were foreigners.

SABC quoted Lew Corbet, traffic chief at Shepstone, as saying the bus left the road, overturned, and plunged down the embankment.

The region experienced heavy rain at times on Saturday, but it was not immediately known if weather was a factor in the crash.

The reports said rescuers used four-wheel-drive vehicles to bring the dead and injured from the bottom of the ravine to the roadway. The injured were taken to hospitals in Harding, 11 miles away, with some serious cases taken to Durban, 60 miles up the coast.

15 Cubans Face Court-Martial

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MEXICO CITY — A Cuban court-martial formally indicted 15 high-ranking military officers on charges of high treason and trafficking in cocaine, diamonds and ivory, Cuba's official media said Saturday.

The 15, including former Interior Minister Jose Abrantes and former major general and war hero Arnaldo Ochoa Sanchez, were stripped of their rank and expelled from the Communist Party last week.

They were formally indicted by the military court in a meeting late Friday and early Saturday, said the official Prensa Latina news agency, monitored in Mexico City.

If convicted, the 15 could face the firing squad.

The news agency said the court reconvened Saturday afternoon. It said the proceedings were attended by the Cuban press and senior government officials but gave no details.

Dispatches from Havana said the defendants belonged to a secret division of the Interior Ministry that smuggled medicines, hospital supplies and computers to circumvent a U.S. trade embargo.

Prensa Latina said the military prosecutor, Brig. Gen. Juan Escalona Reguera, told the court they conspired for 2½ years to help Colombia's Medellin cartel smuggle cocaine into the United States and also dealt in diamonds and ivory.

Escalona dismissed as "absurd" arguments by Ochoa and some of the other accused that they dealt in cocaine to earn dollars to help Cuba's faltering economy, Prensa Latina said.

The accused made these claims before a separate military tribunal on Tuesday and Wednesday that stripped them of all rank and decorations and recommended a court-martial.

Escalona was quoted as saying the 15 tried to damage "the prestige of the Cuban Revolution and sully the image of the officers of the armed forces and those of the Interior Ministry."

'Truth In Preference To Fiction'

A Far Cry

Different Men, Different Legacies

On Tuesday America marks its 213th birthday. The Declaration of Independence, signed on July 4, 1776, was the legacy of Thomas Jefferson, its author and the second president of the United States.

His words gave a fledgling democracy life and freedom. For over two centuries, they have been read to remind Americans that liberty is their birthright. This was Jefferson's gift to his nation, his bequest of leadership and integrity:

"We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their creator with certain unalienable rights, that among these are Life, Liberty and the Pursuit of Happiness."

Now, some 200 years after Jefferson's era ended, America is slowly unraveling the legacy of a far different president, Ronald Reagan, who left the White House six months ago. The nation's citizens know some of that legacy already. Irresponsible budgeting tripled the national debt during Reagan's term in office. Short-sighted domestic policies created a permanent underclass. Disconcern for justice sideswiped civil rights.

'That scrambled morality is the Reagan legacy. Americans will continue to learn about it, bit by bit. The nation will continue to suffer from it.'

These shortcomings are not forgivable. They left a deep rift in the economic fabric of America and an irreparable scar on its psyche.

But perhaps the most despicable bequeathal Reagan left his nation is the disregard for propriety in government that marked his reign. Piece by piece, the legacy of Reagan sleaze is coming to light.

First came the Iran-Contra affair. The nation learned that Reagan either didn't know what was going on in his cabinet or he didn't care or that he very well knew but the law didn't matter. Comforting thought.

Then there was Attorney General Ed Meese — the nation's chief law enforcement officer. His questionable associates and dubious business deals forced his resignation.

You might remember Michael Deaver, who used his influence in the White House to help his cronies — and himself — make money.

Then there's Reagan's former political director, Lyn Nofzinger, who lobbied presidential aides on behalf of private clients after he left the White House. His conviction, disgustingly, was reversed this week.

Finally, Americans learn former Secretary of the Interior James Watt cashed in on Housing and Urban Development programs meant for the poor. Eight phone calls and a meeting with HUD Development Secretary Samuel Pierce earned Watt $400,000. He said his actions were "moral, ethical and effective." Horsepucky. He helped housing developers make money off the government.

And how about Pierce? He couldn't have been ignorant of the scandal that wracked the department during the four years he nominally was in charge of it. Did he have no clue that HUD programs intended to aid the nation's poor and homeless were being perverted to the benefit of rich developers, or that Republican cronies were earning millions in consultant fees for steering these developers to the HUD goodies? He was called "Silent Sam." Maybe "Blind Sam" would have been more appropriate. He never saw a thing.

All these incidents are examples of disregard for proper conduct by the individuals involved. But beyond that, they represent Ronald Reagan's well-known loathing for government. A President who allowed such disrespect for propriety is not a believer in American Democracy.

That scrambled morality is the Reagan legacy. Americans will continue to learn about it, bit by bit. The nation will continue to suffer from it.

To the editor:
Regarding the Supreme Court action on free speech and the burning of our flag, I cannot connect the action of free speech with the action of burning our flag.

The burning of our flag is by hand action not by freedom of speech, unless a person can blow flames out of his/her mouth to ignite the items held in his/her hands.

In other words, the way the Supreme Court has ruled, a person can hold up a store with a gun and claim the action as a part of free speech.

To the editor:
Recently I attended a graduation ceremony at my daughter's elementary school. I listened with great interest and chagrin to the congratulatory comments made by the principal to those students that had achieved academic excellence over the past, and present years.

The children were applauded for their hard work and diligence. Undeniably, they should receive recognition for their grades, but, what about the "average child" who will, despite all their efforts, never produce more than average work, and average grades! When do these students get recognized for their hard work and honest effort? Much too often the average child gets lost in the academic shuffle because of his "peers" genius!

Often it appears to be the consensus of educators that the academically gifted be singled out for educational advancement.

Every citizen should be concerned with furthering the education of EACH student regardless of their IQ. All children have the right to be challenged, not just the select few who are able to produce high test score averages and honor roll status.

It is the responsibility of everyone in the educational field to provide "top-quality" education to every child, in every school, in every county of this state! For it will not only be the "gifted" that make up our "world tomorrow," it will also be comprised of the so-called "average" person as well.

To the editor:
It was with bitter amusement that I read two front page articles in the June 12, 1989, News and Observer. The first one dealt with the wide margin of approval by the House to proceed with the $8.6 billion Highway Construction package in its current form without alteration. It described a bid by Rep. Daniel T. Blue Jr, D-Wake, to raise the annual allocation for mass transportation. His amendment was defeated, underlined by Rep. Robert C. Hunter's, D-McDowell, statement that 'we don't have the high concentrations of population that would benefit.'

Moving over to the right, the next story announced that the DEM would begin issuing warnings on ozone levels, advising when to stay indoors and avoid strenuous outdoor activity. It went on to outline the ill effects of ozone pollution on the human heart and lungs, as well as crops; not to mention its cumulative contribution to global warming and acid rain.

You don't have to be an environmental scientist to conclude that N.C. does have concentrations of population that would benefit from well-planned regional mass transit systems and light rail service, particularly in the Research Triangle and the Piedmont corridor toward Charlotte. Yet the present Highway Construction Plan largely fosters the problem by making it easier for each individual to drive an automobile for transportation needs.

We must apply legislation that will encourage conservation of fossil fuels and lessening of air pollution. At least .5¢ out of the proposed 5.5¢ state motor fuel tax should be set aside for mass transit and light rail service. This is an opportunity for those entrusted with our leadership to rise above the relative short-term benefit to local governments and business interests for the sake of our long-term physical and economic health, or to prove to us and to future generations that they just don't care.

Complex, Boring & Important

Paul O'Connor

RALEIGH — More boring than leaking gasoline tanks.

More complex than insurance reform legislation.

Is it the state budget? The new Medicaid regulations? The Democratic platform?

No. It's the state's new corporations act. The first rewrite of that statute since Eisenhower was beginning his second term as president.

North Carolina's current corporation law is a quirky, antiquated statute that fails to cover many issues currently arising in business law. Rep. George Miller, D-Durham, says the new law, which has been okayed by the General Assembly and which goes into effect on July 1, 1990, will bring North Carolina into line with the corporate laws of most states. It should also increase the interest major corporations show in chartering themselves here.

North Carolina's corporate laws have always been designed to deal with state's wealth of small, privately held corporations. Certain aspects of corporate law which major corpotations need just did not exist in this state.

For example, the new law will allow North Carolina corporations to indemnify their board of directors against lawsuits. That's important because without that power, Miller said, corporations often have difficulty persuading people to serve on their boards.

Miller said that despite the modernization, state corporate law will maintain its protections for minority stockholders. For example, cumulative voting will continue to be allowed. Using cumulative voting, small stockholders can direct all of their votes towards the election of one board member to assure that they are represented.

The legislators who helped push this bill through the General Assembly did so in the belief that it will help persuade national corporations to charter themselves here. They then hope that those corporations will follow their charter to North Carolina and locate either national or regional headquarters here.

It Worked Then, But Not Now

Sunday Morning Notes

The Wall Street Journal is running a series on important events of the past 100 years as a part of its Centennial observance.

A recent one discussed World War II rationing. The rationing program was beset with problems, but the Journal observes that it worked.

Administered through the Office of Price Administration, the program provided for rationing of all scare items including autos, tires, beef, butter, coffee and shoes.

Then, as now, gasoline was perhaps the major concern of American homefront citizens and most would do almost anything to get enough gas to operate the car. Stickers on the windshield told what category the car operator fitted with "X" being a virtual unlimited use sticker. An uproar was created when it was discovered some 200 congressmen had "X" stickers.

Out in the hinterlands "X" stickers went to physicians, businessmen and others deemed essential to the war effort. Other drivers got stickers allowing various amounts of gas weekly. Strictly non essential drivers got "A" stickers which allowed only 3 gallons of gas weekly.

Of course, the gas went into pre-World War II cars because auto production was suspended with Pearl Harbor and newly designed cars were not to be seen again until war's end in 1945.

There was a black market, of course, but the program largely worked because of patriotism. We were in a war to the death and it was downright unpopular to cheat.

Thus the typical Pitt Countian was patriotic, followed the war news carefully and sent his or her sons off to battle, many of them to die. In relation to the Depression years, which were particularly bitter here, personal lives were better in the relative prosperity of the war years.

One almost forgotten fact of World War II was the price and wage controls instituted along with rationing. Prices could only be raised according to a strict formula. Even with abuses price controls worked, too, and what could have been a time of roaring inflation became one of relative financial stability. We can only shutter to think what inflation would have done to us in the post war years if things had been otherwise.

Would rationing and price controls work now? Not on your life. The patriotic fervor is not there nor is the emergency situation that such a war created. Besides we believe the free market works best in normal times, and generally it does.

Say Anything, Just Keep Hands Off Mr. Madison's Document

George Will

WASHINGTON — President Bush says he feels "viscerally" about flag-burning. That bulletin about his inner life is not helpful because the viscera are not arguments. There is a serious (although unconvincing) argument for Bush's idea, but Bush shows no sign of knowing it. Its crux is that we must draw some lines asserting the general claims of the community against the doctrine of extreme individualism.

It is serendipitous that the flag controversy has coincided with yet another Supreme Court wrangle about abortion. Both issues involve a particularly American tension between the values of individualism and community. Actually, the rights of communities are by now so attentuated that there is not nearly enough tension.

Speaking about the leftist whose arrest for flag-burning started this, Rep. Don Edward (D-Calif.), a liberal, is distressed that "a nincompoop in Dallas, Texas, could do something that could trigger this reaction." Edwards does not understand. Five confused men in robes triggered this.

Their constitutional doctrine (by now it really is this, whether the justices know it or not) is that any behavior expressing an attitude that can be given a political coloration is protected "expression." A congressman wonders if fornication at high noon in Times Square is protected. The answer is that fornication would blend into the background there, but would be protected if the participants said they were trying to shock the bourgeoisie into a higher consciousness.

After half a century of misconstruction, the First Amendment cannot be helped by a piddling-fiddling amendment about the flag. It needs serious thought about why the Amendment's framers, who used words more carefully than the Court does, used the word "speech" rather than "expression." The answer is that speech, meaning the use of words, is the sine qua non of reasoning and persuasion, and hence of democratic government. Democracy is, after all, the point of the Constitution, to which the Amendment is appended.

The fundamental problem is a social atmosphere saturated with a philosophy of extreme individualism. In many manifestations this philosophy is anti-democratic because it overrides the right of the community to speak and act. This philosophy has been absorbed by many judges, including some called conservatives, who have supported the assault on the rights of the community.

The Court's decision that 48 communities — states — and the national community cannot codify their reverence for the flag came 16 years after the Court ruled that 50 communities — the states — could not codify their values regarding abortion. So, is it surprising that a low-level judge overthrows the governance of the community of major-league baseball because he has a hunch that an individual's right to "fairness" might not be sufficiently respected in a process that has not yet taken place?

Where does a judge get such presumption? From the Supreme Court that sorts through Christmas displays to make sure creches are surrounded by sufficient secular symbols. Thus does the community's symbolic life in its public space become incoherent or barren.

Individualism understood as absence of restraint has spawned innumerable new "rights." They are rights against, and preferred over, the community's right to nurture and act on the collective values that give it meaning and vitality.

Bush so loves the flag he wraps himself in it, like Linus, and so loves the Constitution he overflows with ideas for improving it. He favors three amendments (preventing flag desecration, protecting the right to life, requiring a balanced budget), and a fourth if he is serious about a line-item veto.

There is no flag-burning problem sufficient to justify the radical step of amending the Constitution. And conservatives should be especially wary of using amendments as gestures, even to assert that communities, too, have rights. A flag-protection amendment is a gesture on behalf of communities' rights generally. When liberals join in loading the document with gesture-amendments (ERA was one), it will become as long as "Moby Dick."

No words on parchment will stymie litigious individualism. A change of constitutional words without a change of judicial and other minds will be unavailing. Go ahead, enact this amendment: "Nothing in this Constitution shall be construed to prevent states from protecting the flag from desecration." Then stand back. There will be an avalanche of litigation to determine if the use of the flag in advertisements, on clothing, with political slogans spray-painted on it, dragged in the dirt, or whatever, constitutes "desecration."

Conservatives should content themselves with saying that liberals want to read pornography by the light of burning flags. Say anything, just keep your hands off Mr. Madison's document.

The Trouble With Liberals

Richard Cohen

WASHINGTON — Leave it to the Democrats. Responsible for 20 years of treason (Joe McCarthy); out of touch with America but not with San Francisco (Jeane Kirkpatrick), acting like nattering nabobs of negativism (Spiro Agnew) and being out in left field (George Bush) — they are reluctant to join the President in supporting a constitutional amendment to prohibit flag desecration. Not smart.

The new Speaker of the House, Thomas Foley (D-Wash.) cautioned caution and Rep. Don Edwards (D-Calif.), a key congressman on constitutional matters, expressed his outright opposition. Only Rep. Charles Wilson (D-Texas) got it right: "It's silly to give the Republicans the flag." But even Wilson did not show the proper enthusiasm for trashing (just a piece of) the First Amendment.

> 'The Super Amendment would exemplify that most vaunted of Washington virtues, bipartisanship. Democrats would join with Republicans to simply rewrite the Constitution to conform to all silly and politically opportunistic concerns of the moment.'

Democrats ought to go Bush one better. Instead of merely supporting his proposed amendment, the party should revive every crackpot, cheap-shot, demagogic constitutional amendment proposed over the last 20 years. This Super Amendment would, of course, repeal most of the first ten, known to the nostalgic as the Bill of Rights, but it would ensure that the Democratic Party is once again identified with red-blooded Americanism.

The Super Amendment would, in a stroke, permit prayer in the schools; forbid forced busing for the purposes of integration; outlaw abortion in all 50 states (except where the pregnancy results from rape by a felon on prison furlough); prohibit printed pornography, X-rated films and dial-a-porn services; mandate a balanced budget; weaken the Fifth Amendment's prohibition against self-incrimination to permit the drug testing of anyone, any place, any time; and (whew!) update the Second Amendment's quaint language to leave no doubt that a citizen has an inalienable right to pack a rod.

Such an amendment, if passed, would deprive the Republican Party of anything to say until way into the 21st century.

You think I jest. I do not. I am willing to go even further. The all-purpose constitutional amendment would require the saying of the pledge of allegiance in the schools. It would compel the recitation of prayers, forbid homosexuals from exercising the same rights as other people and clear up all confusion about the death penalty. A literal-minded Supreme Court would get explicit directions. Children, the mentally defective and the downright loony could all be put to death because (yet another amendment) we are a Christian nation.

Crass opportunism, you say. Pshaw, I say — and humbug as well. Nosirree. The Super Amendment would exemplify that most vaunted of Washington virtues, bipartisanship. Democrats would join with Republicans to simply rewrite the Constitution to conform to all silly and politically opportunistic concerns of the moment.

Civil libertarians should relax. Each and every proposal was at one time explained as doing no real damage to civil liberties. Each one was accompanied by oaths to the Constitution and, especially, free speech. At each and every turn, we were assured that this wonderful democracy of ours was in peril — but that an amendment would set things right.

Now it's the flag amendment. Let's run it up the flagpole and see if it flaps. It would make the flag inviolable, which is what we all want. It would protect our sacred national symbol, the one for which too many have died in battle. This is the flag Betsy Ross sewed and Francis Scott Key saw by the dawn's early light. It's the one that was hoisted on Mount Suribachi during the World War II battle for Iwo Jima.

It is my flag and I love it. Truly, it sickens me to see it burned or defaced — but not as much, frankly, as when neo-Nazis unfurl theirs. (Another amendment?)

But you and I have survived that ugly incident in Dallas when, at the 1984 Republican National Convention, someone named Gregory L. Johnson doused a flag with kerosene and set it ablaze. His fellow demonstrators chanted "America, the red, white and blue, we spit on you" — and Johnson was arrested for violating Texas' flag-desecration law.

The stupidity of the chant aside, Johnson and his colleagues were demonstrating — exercising their free-speech rights. For Bush to say that prohibiting flag-burning "will in no way limit...the breadth of protest available in the exercise of free speech" is patently false. That's the whole point of his proposed amendment. The flag would be off-limits.

But so what? What's another amendment here or there? When a President, backed by a majority of the people, feels strongly about an issue, then the Constitution ought to be changed to conform. The Democrats, finicky about minority rights, have yet to get the message — and, as a result, the White House as well.

Flag Or Symbol?

Ellen Goodman

BOSTON — Just in time for the Fourth of July, the old George Bush has come bursting out in his star-spangled finest. After merely six months in office, the President hasn't forgotten what the candidate learned:

1. Capture the flag and you win the game.
2. Never sound like a lawyer.
3. Remember that in the politics of values, symbols are more important than substance.

So, for the moment, it's back to the flag factories.

Last week, the Supreme Court ruled that flag-burning is a form of free speech protected by the Constitution. This week, the President came out in favor of amending that Constitution.

The Court's decision was built on an uneasy alliance of liberal and conservative justices. Flag-burning, five of them agreed, may be offensive speech, and it may be disrespectful speech. In the case of Gregory Lee Johnson, who burned a flag at the Republican National Convention in 1984, it may even be adolescent and obnoxious speech. But the right to make a protest statement with a match is protected by the Constitution.

Conservative Justice Anthony Kennedy, admitting that this decision took a "personal toll," struck to the heart of the matter. He wrote: "It is poignant but fundamental that the flag protects those who hold it in contempt."

Nevertheless, this is a subtle distinction that few politicians in the Lee Atwater Era choose to adopt as their own. In the days after the Supreme Court ruling, the congressional veterans of the '80s campaigns rallied around the flag as if its defense were their political self-defense.

On Capitol Hill, they passed resolutions and proposed laws, even tacked a flag defense onto a child-care bill. The lawyers among them kept their degrees under the stars-and-stripes wrappers. Like good generals, the politicians were ready to refight the last war. The campaign of 1988.

Susan Estrich, Harvard law professor and manager of the Dukakis campaign, (two strikes against her) is not the only one to see this summer sequel as "a direct result of what happened last year." From her post, she says, "After any political campaign there's an intense desire not to make the same mistake. There's a real fear of getting on the wrong side of the values issues and the wrong side of the flag."

Last summer, when Mike Dukakis was asked about the Pledge of Allegiance to the flag, he answered like a lawyer rather than a patriot. This summer, the Democrats in Congress matched the Republicans in displays of passion.

Now, just as if the campaign were still on, just as if they were making another ad, the Bush team has outflanked liberals and Democrats on the right. As Democrats happily denounced the Supreme Court ruling, Bush upped the ante and called for an amendment to the Constitution. It was a familiar appeal to the lowest common denominator of "values."

In these times of media politics, the consensus is that there's no time for a complicated essay answer, only a yes or no. What happens when the question is defined simplistically: Are you for or against flag-burning?

As Estrich knows from experience, " It's very hard to take the position that the Supreme Court was right without giving the kind of answer that got Michael Dukakis into trouble. Without sounding like a lawyer."

Can burning the flag be a form of political expression? Yes. That's why it's so infuriating. That's why it's protected. You don't have to be a lawyer to know that the Bill of Rights protects the minority from the majority. The religious minority, the political minority, even the obnoxious minority of one Gregory L. Johnson.

Bush, who might have expressed his dismay and left it at that, has chosen instead and again, to embark on a long and divisive struggle over "the flag." His proposal in effect pits the flag AGAINST the Constitution, freedom of speech, the right to dissent. Against the very values it is supposed to represent.

In the coming weeks, politicians who were eager to capture the flag will have to ask themselves whether they respect the reality more than the symbol. And Americans who grew up saluting the flag, raising it at dawn and lowering it at dusk, who learned how to fold it and saw it draped over coffins, will have to consider Justice Kennedy's paradox: This flag protects even those who hold it in contempt.

Soviet Eyes Turn To Saving The Environment

By Mark J. Porubcansky
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

In a land of vast forests and waterways, millions of people in the Soviet Union are now afraid of the air they breathe, the food they eat and the water they drink. Anger over pollution of the environment has created the first national political issue born of Mikhail Gorbachev's glasnost era. Some activists are even using the issue to question the foundations of Soviet power.

TALLINN, U.S.S.R. — In the shale-oil fields on the Soviet Baltic coast of Estonia, more than 90 children have lost their hair since January to an ailment apparently caused by the dirty environment.

Far to the south in arid Central Asia, irrigation threatens to suck dry the Aral Sea, which once covered an area the size of the Netherlands and Belgium. Rivers that feed it teem with intestinal viruses, dysentery and typhoid, and mothers are advised not to breast-feed their babies to avoid transmitting disease.

Fish caught near the Arctic mouth of Siberia's mighty Ob River reek of oil and are rendered inedible by sludge dumped along the river's more than 1,800-mile path.

In a land with a near-mystical attachment to its endless birch and fir forests and its waterways yielding sturgeon and caviar, millions of people now are afraid of the air they breathe, the food they eat and the water they drink.

Citizens' anger, turned loose by President Mikhail S. Gorbachev's reforms, has created the first national political issue born of the glasnost era — the battle to save the environment. Some activists are even using the issue to question the foundations of Soviet power.

The Chernobyl nuclear power plant accident in 1986 is only the most visible of a saddening series of environmental disasters whose financial and physical toll remains largely uncalculated.

As Soviets re-evaluate dictator Josef Stalin, they blame their polluted land on the breakneck development of heavy industry and centralized control he imposed and which his successors followed. Gorbachev is trying to reverse those policies.

"All ecological problems are rooted in extensive technologies of the use of natural resources, the monopoly of ministries, a lack of effective government control of the use and conservation of natural resources," noted biologist Vladimir Sokolov in the government newspaper Izvestia.

But Ants Paju, editor of the Estonian nature magazine Eesti Loodus, blamed a spiritual emptiness, and the Soviet way of life itself, for the problems. "We have turned into living corpses," Paju said in an interview.

"The worse our internal state, the greater the possibility to do terrible things to our environment," said Paju, who narrowly lost a parliamentary race against a top Estonian official this spring.

"It is not just ecology," added 58-year-old Endel Lippmaa, an Estonian scientist who won election. "Ecology leads to the question of technology, to central planning, politics, constitutional change and sovereignty."

Moscow ministries, pushed to meet planned production targets, "are not interested in the consequences," Lippmaa said. "They are after a quick gain. We want to decide in Estonia what is to be done, what is not to be done."

Writers raised the ecology question shortly after Gorbachev took power in 1985 by successfully challenging plans to reverse northern rivers to flow south and irrigate Central Asia.

Beginning a year later in Estonia, the concern over oil-shale and phosphate mining coalesced into the People's Front movement that led the tiny Baltic republic's government in November 1988 to declare its sovereignty from Moscow in all areas except defense and foreign policy.

In other Baltic republics, the Ukraine, Moldavia, Armenia, Tadzhikistan, Kazakhstan, Uzbekistan, the polluted industrial cities of the Urals and around Siberia's Lake Baikal, citizens have used the Estonian example to tackle not only ecological issues but local ethnic demands and questions of local control.

In a speech in the Ukrainian capital of Kiev in February, Gorbachev welcomed the activity of local environmental groups. However, he added, "Looking the truth straight in the eye, we have to say that we still are far from the desired turn for the better."

As he rebuilds Soviet foreign policy, Gorbachev has stressed that pollution is an issue on a par with nuclear weaponry in the threat it poses to humanity's survival.

The abundance of natural resources and an economic system that regards them as common property with no market price have led Soviets to chronically undervalue the riches their land has been blessed with.

Reformers are now demanding that industries start paying a realistic price for the resources they use and for cleaning up the mess they leave behind. But that squeezes managers as they struggle to operate without government subsidies.

Over the past decade, the Soviet Union has spent $112 billion on envirnomental protection, but that has proven inadequate.

Fifty million Soviets, or almost one-fifth of the population, live in cities where air pollution periodically exceeds acceptable norms by 10 times, says Fyodor Morgun, chairman of the Soviet Committee for Environmental Protection.

Every year 20 cubic kilometers of sewage is dumped directly into Soviet rivers and lakes, he told the weekly newspaper Arguments and Facts.

The Estonian newspaper Kodumaa said 92 children and two adults living in and around the town of Sillamae, population 20,000, had lost their hair from January to mid-April.

It said Lippmaa had determined that the oil-shale layers around the town contained high concentrations of radium. A government commission found increased levels of lead and antimony in their fingernails and saliva.

The paper quoted Estonian Health Minister Laur Karu as saying about 400 chemical compounds could cause the baldness. Experts have not been able to pinpoint the cause of the affliction, nor of a similar loss of hair in the Ukrainian city of Chernovtsy.

A national campaign has sprung up to save the Aral Sea, located on the border of Uzbekistan and Kazakhstan.

The Tass news agency said the shoreline of the sea, once 25,800 square miles in area, has receded drastically. "If things go this way at the same pace as in the past 25 years, the Aral Sea will cease to exist by the year 2010, being converted into a number of lakes with great water salinity," the news agency said.

About 35 percent to 40 percent of the flow of Syr Darya and Amu Darya, the rivers that feed the Aral Sea, is composed of industrial wastes, city sewage and drainage water, but millions of people still depend on the waterways for drinking water, said Mukhtar Shakhanov, a leader of the Kazakhstan Writers Union.

The number of intestinal viruses in the Syr Darya exceeds acceptable norms by thousands of times, he said. Typhoid, dysentery and other diseases also are present.

There have been 65,000 cases of hepatitis among the 500,000 residents of the Kzyl-Ordinsky region in the past 15 years, he said.

"Child mortality on the banks of the Aral is one of the highest in the world. In some regions of the republic, doctors recommend against feeding babies mothers' milk. Mothers' milk is poisoned!" wrote Tulepbergen Kaipbergenov in the Karakapaki region south of the Aral Sea.

Spokeswoman Gafkha Namatova of the informal political group Belik said that an average of 119 pounds of chemicals are used on every 2.47 acres of land in Uzbekistan, and that exposure has caused the infant mortality rate to soar.

"I'm not afraid to use this word — it's genocide," she said in an interview.

Shakhanov said that among the chemicals still used on fields are DDT and Butifos, which he described as a defoliant similar to Agent Orange.

Morgun said the Soviet Union's expenditures on the environment are dwarfed by the United States' estimated $80 billion a year, and that money is in the wrong hands.

"We should not forget that most of the money was spent to build waste treatment facilities by ministries whose factories pollute the environment," he said. "Construction proceeds very slowly and the facilities provide nothing more than minimal treatment."

Morgun's agency, which was created only last year as the Kremlin recognized the extent of the country's pollution problem, has taken in $140 million in fines, brought civil suit against 32,000 people and criminal charges against 46, he said.

Sergei Pegov, head of the Department of Systematic Ecology at the Scientific Research Center, said the goal of a new government antipollution program is to end dumping of sewage by the year 2000, bring water quality up to acceptable standards by 2005, to cut air pollution by half by 2005 and car emissions by 48 percent.

Pegov told Izvestia on May 1 that state enterprises would have to start paying for natural resources and for dirtying the environment.

But he said scientists had not yet had enough time to work out technological options for reducing pollution, and that the plan is weakened by not putting one agency fully in charge of environmental protection.

Pegov asserted the Soviet Union will be able to meet its goals because political reforms will allow officials to deal with the issue rather than ignore it.

But Lippmaa said the Soviet Union is nowhere near turning the corner. "At this point our main problem is not cleaning up, it's avoiding further damage," he said.

Residents Demand End To Nuclear Underground Tests

By Mark J. Porubcansky
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOSCOW — After 40 years of living next to the Soviet Union's largest nuclear test facility, residents of the Semipalatinsk region say they have had enough.

They formed a group named "Nevada," after the U.S. state where American tests are conducted, and demanded an end to the underground blasts in eastern Kazakhstan.

Their effort illustrates how Soviets far from Moscow are speaking more freely under President Mikhail S. Gorbachev's reforms, and how much anti-nuclear sentiments have developed since the April 1986 Chernobyl accident.

"Everyone dreams the test site will be closed," Olzhaf Suleimanov, head of the Kazakhstan Writers Union, said in a telephone interview from the Kazakhstan capital of Alma Ata.

Suleimanov, one of the organizers of Nevada, said people throughout eastern Kazakhstan are worried about the effects of blasts at the Semipalatinsk test site, where the Soviet Union has been conducting nuclear tests since August 1949.

Hundreds of thousands of people already have signed the group's petitions since it was formed at the end of February, he claimed.

The poet said that while on a tour in early May residents of the farming village of Kainar, population about 1,500, handed him a letter saying 160 people there had died of cancer in the past 40 years. Fourteen more died of leukemia and many other illnesses are common. People blame them on Semipalatinsk tests, he said.

Now, because of the improved East-West atmosphere, Nevada believes the number of Soviet tests can be cut, and ultimately eliminated, he said.

"We think that it's possible there will be fewer tests," he said. "There is a possibility to lessen the number and the power of the blasts as a first step."

Suleimanov said he has met with Kazakhstan party chief Gennady Kolbin and other local leaders, whom he said support its goals.

But the final say is up to Moscow. A commission has been formed there, and Suleimanov said his group hopes to hear some good news from it this year.

Concern over the safety of nuclear power spread rapidly across the Soviet Union in the wake of the explosion and fire at the Chernobyl plant in the northern Ukraine that killed at least 31 people.

Soviet scientists say many people suffer from what they call "radiophobia," an unreasonable fear of nuclear power.

Earlier this year, three ports refused entry to the Sevmorput, a nuclear-powered barge carrier, because of worries about possible contamination.

About 135,000 people were evacuated from the area surrounding the Chernobyl plant after the accident.

Davey Allison Wins Daytona; Gives Bobby A New Memory

Martin Loses Gamble When He Runs Out Of Gas

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. — Rarely has anyone driven as fast to pay off a debt as Davey Allison did Saturday.

Allison, who took the lead when Mark Martin ran out of gas with five laps left, won the Daytona 400 for his first victory in a Winston Cup race at Daytona International Speedway.

Watching the race was Bobby Allison, Davey's father and the winner of six Winston Cup races at Daytona.

"It's almost as good as if he'd run second," the younger Allison said.

"I wouldn't be here if it wasn't for him. There's no way I can ever repay him, except to go out and try to win some more races."

Bobby Allison has been sidelined since suffering serious injuries in a race crash in June 1988. He won the 1987 Daytona 400 and beat Davey to the finish line at the 1988 Daytona 500, but the wreck has made it hard for Bobby to recall those races.

"Being as I've got all this room in my memory, Davey may as well go ahead and win a whole bunch of 'em, and then I can store 'em up," Bobby said.

Davey Allison, 28, edged Morgan Shepherd's Pontiac by two lengths at the finish. Phil Parsons and Bill Elliott, both close behind, wound up third and fourth.

Allison's Ford led for only 19 of the 160 laps, but he took advantage of miscalculations by Shepherd and Martin's team.

Shepherd said he didn't try to pass at the end because he failed to see the white flag that signified the final lap. Martin's empty gas tank forced a pit stop with about 10 miles left, and he lost a lap and wound up 16th.

"If we couldn't finish first, it doesn't matter where you finish," said Martin, who was on the pole for the fifth time this season but remains winless in Winston Cup racing.

Allison's team made no miscalculations. He was the lone driver to pit and change two tires during a caution period with 31 laps to go. The stop dropped him to 10th place, but he quickly worked his way back into contention.

"We felt those new tires were gonna help enough to make up the ground we were gonna lose, and it paid off," Allison said. He won $65,000 of the $686,667 purse, averaging 132.207 mph.

McEnroe Wins; Learns Of Threat

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WIMBLEDON, England — John McEnroe didn't know it at the time, but his third-round match at Wimbledon Saturday was a deadly serious matter.

McEnroe, playing under a death threat he wasn't aware of, beat fellow American Jim Pugh 6-3, 6-4, 6-2 to move into the fourth round for the first time in four years.

After the match, which was played under heavy security, it was revealed that an unidentified man had threatened to kill McEnroe in calls to the All England Club and a national newspaper.

McEnroe's manager, Sergio Palmieri, was informed of the death threat before the three-time champion walked on Centre Court to play Pugh. But Palmieri didn't tell McEnroe until after he beat Pugh and completed a victory in doubles with partner Jakob Hlasek.

"We cannot tell yet whether this is a serious threat, but we are treating it with great caution and have taken what we think is the proper action to negate it," said chief inspector Ray Dunn of Scotland Yard.

McEnroe appeared calm during his match against Pugh and didn't mention the threat in his post-match news conference. Instead, he talked about his steadily improving game.

"That was my best match so far," said McEnroe, who was stretched to five sets in the opening round and four sets in the second round. "I felt relaxed out there and I kept my concentration."

While McEnroe breezed to victory, America's newest tennis star struggled to reach the fourth round.

Michael Chang, the 17-year-old French Open champion, used his speed to overcome the power of The Netherlands' Michiel Schapers 4-6, 6-3, 7-5, 7-5. The normally placid Californian got fired up and pumped his fists after saving a set point in the third set.

"There are times when you have to get pumped up," Chang said. "If the adrenalin isn't going, you're not going to win the match."

For the first time since opening day, there were no rain delays. There also were no major surprises, although the No. 8 women's seed, Pam Shriver, was eliminated by fellow American Gretchen Magers.

Defending men's champion Stefan Edberg beat American Scott Davis 6-3, 6-4, 4-6, 6-2 just before nightfall and fourth-seeded Mats Wilander continued his string of straight-set victories with a 6-3, 6-3, 6-3 win over Jason Stoltenberg of Australia.

Also advancing were eighth-seeded Tim Mayotte and No. 16 Amos Mansdorf. Mayotte, who reached the fourth round in all but one of his eight previous Wimbledon appearances, did it again with a 6-4, 6-1, 6-3 victory over fellow American David Pate.

Mansdorf beat a weary Greg Holmes 6-2, 6-4, 6-2. Less than three hours earlier, Holmes had completed a marathon, five-set win over another unseeded American, Todd Witsken, in a match that stretched over three days because of rain delays and darkness.

Sold Tickets Net Trouble

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WIMBLEDON, England — Nicole Jagerman may have obeyed the law but not the All England Lawn Tennis Club. She found out Saturday that, when it comes to Wimbledon tickets, the club has the final say.

Jagerman, a first-round loser in women's singles, sold tournament tickets to a scalper. The tickets came from the daily allotment each player receives free and are supposed to be given to friends and relatives.

"I'm going to get in a lot of trouble for this," said Jagerman, from the Netherlands. "We are always told we shouldn't sell them."

The club, which warns all ticketholders against resale, said it believed Jagerman's explanation that the scalper forced 10 pounds ($15) on her for the tickets after she tried to give them away. It said no disciplinary action would be taken.

Jagerman offered her explanation in the newspaper that broke the story Saturday morning and again in an investigation conducted for the club by Georgine Clark, director of European operations for the Women's International Tennis Association.

Jagerman said she had given the money she received from the scalper to the club "to do with as they wish."

British law permits ticket scalping, and the sidewalks around Wimbledon are filled with men and women hawking Centre Court seats for up to 10 times face value.

Lou Gehrig wipes eyes during farewell speech

The Iron Man Steps Down

50 Years Later, Gehrig's Farewell Is Still Stirring

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — It took Lou Gehrig 14 years and 2,130 consecutive games to write his name indelibly in the baseball record book. But in a few short minutes on July 4, 1939, he uttered a handful of sentences that will never be erased from baseball lore.

On that day 50 years ago Gehrig stood in the same Yankee Stadium he had dominated as a player, weakened now by a disease that was killing him, and told thousands of fans that he was "the luckiest man on the face of the Earth."

When he finished, applause and tears filled the stadium Gehrig had filled with hits. Babe Ruth threw his arms around his old teammate, ending years of animosity between the two great sluggers.

Gehrig walked slowly from the field for the last time. In two years, he would be dead.

Today, the echo of Gehrig's speech still rings in the ears of any athlete trying to say goodbye to the game.

"Fans, for the past two weeks you have been reading about a bad break I got. Yet, today I consider myself the luckiest man on the face of the Earth. I have been in ball parks for 16 years and have never received anything but kindness and encouragement from you fans."

———

Lou Gehrig Day came in a 20-minute ceremony between games of the Independence Day doubleheader between the New York Yankees and the Washington Senators. After tributes from Postmaster General James Farley, New York City mayor Fiorello LaGuardia and Manager Joe McCarthy, the first baseman approached the microphone at home plate.

...I consider myself the luckiest man on the face of the Earth...

Lou Gehrig, July 4, 1939

Gehrig, deeply moved by the other speeches, needed a few words of encouragement from Yankee president Ed Barrow before beginning. When he finished, just a few minutes later, fans and players were openly weeping.

The speech still haunts athletes trying to say goodbye, like Philadelphia's Mike Schmidt, who announced his retirement last month.

"Lou Gehrig once said in similar circumstances, 'Today I'm the luckiest man on the face of the Earth,'" a tearful Schmidt told reporters. "I know that feeling." Gehrig was not yet 38 when he died of amyotrophic lateral sclerosis in 1941. Baseball has been holding ceremonies at major-league ballparks this season and will honor Gehrig at Yankee Stadium on July 4.

His entire speech will be shown on the Diamond Vision scoreboard, longtime Yankee broadcaster Mel Allen will present a bronze statue to the Yankees and a ceremonial first pitch will be thrown from the mound to first.

"Wouldn't you consider it an honor just to be with such great men even for one day?"

———

The Yankees were at the peak of their dynasty, on the way to a fourth straight pennant and World Series title. Led by future Hall of Famers Joe Dimaggio, Lefty Gomez, Red Ruffing and Bill Dickey, Gehrig's closest friend, New York dominated the American League in 1939, winning 106 games and leading by wide margins in hitting, pitching and fielding.

But first base, a position that Gehrig had held unchallenged since 1925, was now occupied by Babe Dahlgren, who stood along the mound with other Yankees, past and present, watching his childhood idol.

"When I got to know he had a consecutive game streak going," Dahlgren recalled, "I was just starting in the Pacific Coast League. I was just 19. I wanted to be like Lou and I didn't miss a game in three years on the Coast League."

"Sure I'm lucky! Who wouldn't consider an honor to have known (late Yankee owner) Jake Ruppert, builder of baseball's greatest empire; to have spent six years with such a grand little fellow as (former Yankee manager) Miller Huggins; to have spent nine years with that smart student of psychology — the best manager in baseball today — Joe McCarthy."

———

He was a manager's dream, hardworking and dependable. For 14 years, 2,130 consecutive games, Gehrig had refused to take a day off. But his reflexes had slowed dramatically over the past year, and Gehrig couldn't bear the idea of hurting his team. He told McCarthy to bench him for the Yankees' May 2 game against Detroit.

———

Audit Shows NCAS Spending Proper

RESEARCH TRIANGLE PARK (AP) — North Carolina Amateur Sports chairman Hill Carrow said there was never any attempt to hide from the public how state money was used by the organization.

The sports organization received a clean bill of health Friday from the state auditor's office, but was criticized for having an incomplete accounting system.

NCAS had come under criticism for failing to release the details of how it spent the funds it received from the Legislature. State Auditor Ed Renfrow's office received a request from the organization to perform the audit and it found no instances of misuse of state funds.

To remedy the accounting problems, Renfrow's office suggested that the NCAS board "obtain the financial services necessary to implement an adequate accounting system and to get their records in a condition that would allow an independent audit to be performed for 1988 and each year thereafter."

Carrow said NCAS would hire a part-time person to help with the implementation of the state auditor's request, and might eventually lead to a full-time person.

"We ... g to make sure we've got all the detail they need and want to see on a r... basis," he said.

While fig... were found for 1985 through 1987, an audit could not be performed for ... and 1989.

"Minor discrepancies were noted which consisted primarily of the lack of proper documentation of certain travel expenditures," Renfrow said in a letter to the NCAS board of directors.

The audit also reviewed NCAS' association with Trace Corporation, which is headed by Carrow, as well as expenditures to Teleconnect and Bennett and Associates, Inc.

"NCAS had legal authority to enter into these contracts and our examination did not reveal any improper expenditures relating to these agreements," Renfrow wrote. "All monies paid to Trace Corporation, Teleconnect and Bennett and Associates came from private donations."

This year, NCAS received $300,000 from the state, which was used primarily in the operation of last week's State Games of North Carolina.

Richardson Said OSU's Top Candidate

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — Ohio State athletic officials could not be reached Saturday to comment on reports that Arkansas coach Nolan Richardson was the top candidate to succeed Gary Williams as the Buckeyes basketball coach.

The Columbus Dispatch, in a story published Saturday, quoted unidentified sources in Tulsa, Okla., and Columbus as saying Richardson had been taken to the Dayton, Ohio, area where he may remain until Monday for a round of weekend meetings with Ohio State officials.

Richardson emerged as the favorite to become Ohio State's 11th basketball coach Friday after two other candidates, Evansville coach Jim Crews and Lon Kruger of Kansas State, withdrew from consideration.

Repeated telephone calls Saturday to the home of Ohio State athletic director Jim Jones went unanswered. Jones last week said he would not comment on the list of potential candidates to succeed Williams, who last month left Ohio State after three seasons to become head coach at Maryland.

Ohio State sports information director Steve Snapp could not be reached for comment early Saturday afternoon.

The Tulsa (Oklahoma) World reported Saturday that Richardson's decision could hinge on developments with his contract at Arkansas, including money earned in his television and radio package and summer camps he operates.

The paper also said there is "a movement under way in Little Rock to sweeten his television contract" and to add a second TV show for him.

The reported $500,000 value on the Ohio State position could double Richardson's current salary at Arkansas, according to the newspaper in Tulsa, where Richardson compiled a 119-37 record as coach of the Golden Hurricane to before taking over the Razorbacks.

The Dispatch quoted an unidentified associate of Richardson as saying Richardson is "about 50-50 on deciding to take the job — which is a lot stronger than he was a week ago," provided this weekend's interviews go well.

But Richardson, who has compiled a 77-46 record at Arkansas, may be reluctant to leave a young team he recruited which posted a 25-7 record last year and is considered a strong contender for a national title next season.

Cy Alexander of South Carolina State on Friday was interviewed for the job by a six-member search committee. Others who have been interviewed and are said to still be in the running were former Tennessee coach Don DeVoe, Ohio State assistant coach Randy Ayers and Mike Newell of Arkansas-Little Rock.

Umpire Misses Game At Minnesota

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — American League umpire Dan Morrison was ill and didn't work Saturday night's game between the Minnesota Twins and California Angels.

A three-man crew called the game, with John Shulock behind the plate, Tim Welke at first base and Jim Evans at third. Welke was scheduled to work at second and Morrison at first.

Morrison also will miss Sunday's game between the teams and the same three-man crew will be employed, according to Twins officials.

The nature the illness was not disclosed.

came in the Winston 5... at Talladega, Ala. Daytona and Talladega are the only tracks where carburetor restrictor plates are used.

Saturday's race was one of the most competitive ever. There were 28 lead changes involving 11 drivers. Fourteen cars were on the lead lap at the finish, tying the record set in 1986.

Elliott led for 50 laps. Dale Earnhardt led for 33 laps before he was slowed by tire trouble.

The race was slowed by 12 caution flags for 41 laps. Most were for wrecks and two were for light rain. No drivers were seriously hurt.

A spectacular wreck with just 17 laps remaining started when Lake Speed lost control of his Oldsmobile, which suddenly flipped onto its roof and then was hit by Dave Marcis' Chevy. The Olds flipped over another 1½ times and went into a spin, and cars driven by Derrike Cope and Jimmy Spencer sustained damage trying to dodge the wreck.

A wreck coming out of turn two on lap 107 involved six cars and knocked four out of the race. The crash started when Rick Wilson lost control of his Oldsmobile. It slid into Larry Pearson's Buick, and both cars hit the wall.

Both drivers were sidelined, as were Dale Jarrett and Harry Gant, whose cars were among four that sustained damage trying to avoid the wreck.

Martin's Team Miscalculated

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. — Mark Martin's team thought his Ford had enough fuel to last at least 10 more laps when it ran out of gas while in the lead with five laps left in Saturday's Daytona 400, car owner Jack Roush said.

The miscalculation helped Davey Allison win the race. Martin had to pit for gas, lost a lap and finished 16th.

"I thought we had at least a five- or six-lap cushion" for the 160-lap race, Roush said. "For whatever reason, the car didn't get the fuel economy we expected, or we didn't get it all the way full."

Martin, who had filled up with 58 laps left, ran out as he crossed the start-finish line with 12.5 miles to go. Allison quickly took the lead and kept it the rest of the way.

"I don't have too much to say about the gas situation, because the gas is not my deal," Martin said. "My deal is to drive the car and get everything out of it that there can possibly be. I did that."

During the final caution period with 17 laps left, Martin had reported to his team that he thought he was running out of gas. But the pit crew thought the car was sputtering only because it was low on fuel and on a steep bank, Roush said.

Martin remained winless in Winston Cup racing, even though he started from the pole for the fifth time this year. The miscalculation cost him a shot at a $98,600 bonus for winning both the pole and the race.

"We don't have time to get frustrated," Martin said. "We'll keep on working on our stuff to make us better, so that we can win."

Bears Might Leave City

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHICAGO — Michael McCaskey, president of the Chicago Bears, is giving credence to talk that the NFL team will abandon their namesake city for Arlington Heights, and the suburb's mayor said Saturday he's all for the move.

"I think the chances are pretty good," said McCaskey.

The talk has been that the Bears want to put a football stadium next to the classy new Arlington International Racecourse, which officially opened this weekend on the site of the old track destroyed by fire four years ago.

"It's a terrific location," McCaskey said, "and now that Arlington Heights has the finest race track in the world, it would be very appealing to put the finest stadium in the world next to it."

The land under consideration northwest of Chicago is part of a 300-acre parcel controlled by racecourse owner Richard Duchoissois.

"Of course we'd be happy to have a conversation with him (McCaskey) if it doesn't upset anybody's apple cart," Duchoissois said Friday.

Arlington Heights mayor William Maki said he's willing to do whatever he can to help tilt the Bears toward a firm commitment to moving to his town.

"We're open and receptive to the idea," he said by telephone Saturday.

However, Maki said he has heard nothing conclusive about the Bears' plans, only that McCaskey is frustrated with slow progress toward building a new stadium in Chicago.

It's been two years since McCaskey and then-Mayor Harold Washington announced plans for a West Side stadium. But there's not been much movement since then.

Ballard Hurls Baltimore Past Detroit

Western Leader Oakland Defeats Cleveland, 6-4; Yankees Down Milwaukee

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BALTIMORE — Jeff Ballard snapped two pitching slumps — his own and Baltimore's — by holding Detroit to five hits in 7 1-3 innings and Randy Milligan, Cal Ripken and Craig Worthington hit solo home runs as the Baltimore Orioles defeated the Tigers 8-1 Saturday night.

Ballard, 10-3, won for the first time since June 5. He had gone 0-2 in four starts since then, allowing 14 earned runs in 12.2 innings and only getting past the third inning once.

In their previous seven games, Baltimore pitchers surrendered 52 runs and 97 hits in 60 innings, an average of 7.79 earned runs and 14.5 hits per game. They gave up 11 runs and 19 hits to Toronto on Thursday night and 16 runs and 18 hits to Detroit on Friday night.

The victory kept Baltimore 5½ games ahead of second-place New York in the American League East.

Milligan and Ripken homered in the second and sixth innings off Charles Hudson, 0 -4, who allowed three runs and six hits in six innings. Worthington connected against Brad Havens in the seventh. Havens yielded four more runs in the eighth on four walks, a hit batsman and Billy Ripken's two-run single.

Worthington's home run was disputed by the Tigers. A fan reached over the top of the left-field wall and attempted to catch the ball. It dropped on the track and the Tigers argued that it would not have been over the fence.

Milligan hit his sixth home run into the left-field bullpen and Ripken got his ninth on a towering drive just inside the left-field foul pole. The Orioles scored their second run on consecutive singles by Billy Ripken, Brady Anderson and Phil Bradley in the third inning.

Ballard blanked the Tigers until the fifth when they scored on Keith Moreland's leadoff double, a groundout and Gary Ward's single.

With one out in the Detroit eighth, Rick Schu singled and Gary Pettis walked. Mark Williamson took over and retired Tracy Jones on a pop foul and Lou Whitaker on a fly ball.

Cleveland.....4

CLEVELAND (AP) — Rickey Henderson's broken-bat pinch single scored two runs and snapped a 3-3 tie in the sixth inning as the Oakland Athletics beat the Cleveland Indians 6-4 Saturday night.

Henderson has hit safely in eight of nine games since rejoining the A's in a June 21 trade with the New York Yankees. He didn't start Saturday night because he was being rested.

Winner Mike Moore, 10-5, gave up three runs and nine hits in 5 2-3 innings and his ERA went from an American League-leading 2.23 at the start of the night to 2.35.

Todd Burns, the fourth Oakland pitcher, went the last two innings for his fifth save. He came on after Rick Honeycutt walked the first two batters in the eighth and Cleveland scored a run on Brook Jacoby's groundout.

Henderson batted for Mike Gallego with runners at first and third and one out in the sixth. He blooped a pitch from Rich Yett into center field to score Glenn Hubbard. Stan Javier went from first to third on the hit and continued home when center fielder Joe Carter's throw to third skipped into the dugout.

Yett, 4-6, allowed four runs, three of them earned, in 4 1-3 innings in relief of injured starter Tom Candiotti.

The Athletics scored twice in the second after Candiotti started the inning by walking the first two batters. Candiotti, who left a game six days earlier because of a stiff right shoulder, took himself out again following the second-inning walks to Mark McGwire and Carney Lansford.

Yett inherited a 2-2 count and walked Hubbard to load the bases. Terry Steinbach singled one run home and another scored when Javier hit into a double play.

The Indians scored a run in their half of the second on Dave Clark's double and a single by Jacoby, breaking their string of 30 consecutive scoreless innings against Oakland. Cleveland took a 3-2 lead in the third on Carter's two-run homer, his 13th.

The A's tied it in the fifth on a walk to Tony Phillips and singles by Dave Parker and McGwire.

Boston.....3
Toronto.....1

TORONTO (AP) — Eric Hetzel allowed three hits and no runs for 5 2-3 innings in his major-league debut and Mike Greenwell homered as the Boston Red Sox beat the Toronto Blue Jays 3-1 Saturday.

Hetzel, 1-0, struck out four and walked four as the Red Sox won their third straight game. Rob Murphy pitched 1 2-3 innings and Lee Smith finished for his 10th save.

The Red Sox took a 1-0 lead in the third off Todd Stottlemyre, 0-4, on Danny Heep's sacrifice fly. Stottlemyre was recalled from Class AAA Syracuse of the International League on Friday.

Dwight Evans doubled in the fourth and scored on Nick Esasky's single and Greenwell hit his ninth homer leading off the sixth to make it 3-0.

The Blue Jays used three straight singles by Nelson Liriano, Junior Felix and Tony Fernandez to score in the seventh against Murphy.

Duane Ward relieved Stottlemyre with none out and the bases loaded in the top of the seventh. Ward got Jody Reed to pop out to short, struck out Kevin Romine and got Greenwell on a grounder to second.

New York.....5
Milwaukee.....1

NEW YORK (AP) — Rookie Clay Parker pitched 6 2-3 effective innings, leading the New York Yankees over the Milwaukee Brewers Saturday night, with a seldom-invoked "fourth out" rule changing the score from 4-1 to 5-1 after the game and depriving Lee Guetterman of a save.

Don Mattingly drove in two runs as the Yankees won their third straight game and again reached the .500 mark as they remained 5½ games behind Baltimore in the American League East. Milwaukee lost its third consecutive game and has dropped eight of its last nine at Yankee Stadium.

Parker, 3-1, who was activated from the disabled list before the game and hadn't pitched since June 8 because of a blister on his middle finger, gave up one run on six hits and lowered his ERA to 2.66. Milwaukee's only run came on Paul Molitor's sixth home run leading off the fifth inning that made it a 2-1 game.

After the game, plate umpire Larry Barnett disclosed that the Yankees had scored an eighth-inning run although Wayne Tolleson's suicide squeeze bunt was caught in the air and turned into an apparent inning-ending double play.

With Mike Pagliarulo at third and Bob Geren at first, both runners broke with the pitch. Tolleson bunted a soft pop to pitcher Jay Aldrich, who caught the ball and doubled Geren off first.

However, Pagliarulo crossed the plate before the third out and Barnett quoted an appeal rule which states that "if the violation occurs during a play which ends a half-inning, the appeal must be made before the defensive team leaves the field."

Had Aldrich thrown to third instead of first, or had the Brewers appealed before leaving the field, Pagliarulo would have been the third out and his run would not have counted.

Parker escaped a jam in the first inning after Molitor opened the game with a single and went to third when right fielder Jesse Barfield dropped Robin Yount's drive for a two-base error. Gary Sheffield fouled out and, after an intentional walk to Greg Brock, Glenn Braggs grounded into a double play.

Eric Plunk pitched 1 1-3 innings in relief of Parker and Guetterman worked the ninth. Neither reliever allowed a hit and Guetterman lost his 10th save because, as it turned out, he came in with a 5-1 lead instead of what everyone thought was 4-1.

Randy Veres lost his major-league debut, allowing four runs, three of them earned, and seven hits in 4 1-3 innings.

Mattingly extended his hitting streak to 14 games with an RBI double in the first inning. He later scored on Barfield's single, only his seventh hit in 42 at-bats with runners in scoring position since joining the Yankees.

Roberto Kelly, who had three hits, doubled in the bottom of the fifth and scored on a double by Luis Polonia. Tony Fossas relieved and his wild pickoff throw enabled Polonia to reach third. Mattingly followed with a sacrifice fly.

California.....6
Minnesota.....1

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Chili Davis homered twice, once from each side of the plate, and Tony Armas once as they continued their hot hitting against Minnesota and led California to a 6-1 victory Saturday night, the Angels' seventh victory in eight games and their third straight rout of the Twins.

With Davis going 6-for-13 with three home runs and five RBIs and Armas going 7-for-12 with two homers and four RBIs, California has outscored Minnesota 23-6 in the first three games of the four-game series. Davis has four homers and four multi-hit games in his last five contests.

Davis, a switch-hitter, hit his first homer batting right-handed off Shane Rawley and his second left-handed off Roy Smith. It was the fifth time he has homered from each side of the plate.

When Davis was with the San Francisco Giants, he had a National League-record three switch-hit homer games. Mickey Mantle holds the major-league mark with 10.

Winner Kirk McCaskill, 9-4, allowed seven hits in the first four innings but benefited from three double plays. He yielded nine hits in eight innings. Bryan Harvey pitched the ninth.

Rawley, 4-7, was hit hard and often in his 4 1-3 innings, giving up eight hits and several line-drive and warning-track outs.

The Angels remained one-game behind first-place Oakland in the American League West.

The fifth-place Twins, who swept a three-game series from Oakland before playing California and got within 5½ games of first place, are now eight back.

California's Devon White and Minnesota's Kent Hrbek traded first-inning RBI singles. Armas' fifth homer put California ahead 2-1 in the second inning.

Davis' 432-foot homer to center in the fourth made it 3-1 and, after White had a fifth-inning RBI triple, Davis hit his 11th homer in the sixth for a 5-1 lead and Wally Joyner had an RBI single in the seventh.

Chicago.....6
Kansas City.....4

CHICAGO (AP) — Harold Baines greeted Kansas City reliever Tom Gordon with a tie-breaking two-run bloop double, capping a three-run rally in the seventh inning that gave the Chicago White Sox a 6-4 victory over the Royals on Saturday night.

The White Sox, trailed 3-0 after 1½ innings, began their comeback on Greg Walker's two-run double in the bottom of the second. They trailed 3-2 in the seventh when pinch hitter Daryl Boston singled off Kansas City starter Luis Aquino, 3-3.

One out later, Dave Gallagher and Steve Lyons singled to tie the score. Gordon relieved and Baines' bloop fell in front of center fielder Willie Wilson as two runs scored. The White Sox added a run in the eighth on Carlton Fisk's third double of the game and Ozzie Guillen's single.

Winner Shawn Hillegas, 4-7, pitched a scoreless seventh inning in relief of starter Richard Dotson, who was released by the New York Yankees on June 22. Dotson, who spent the first eight years of his career with Chicago, gave up the three Kansas City runs — only one earned — and five hits in six innings while walking six.

Bobby Thigpen pitched the last two innings for his 15th save. He gave up a run in the ninth on two walks abnd Jim Eisenreich's double.

Kansas City scored a run in the first inning without a hit. Kurt Stillwell and Kevin Seitzer, the first two batters, walked and Stillwell came around on groundouts by George Brett and Bo Jackson.

The Royals scored two unearned runs in the second after Chicago first baseman Walker fumbled Pat Tabler's grounder. Tabler and Mike Macfarlane, who walked, scored on RBI singles by Frank White and Seitzer.

In the bottom of the inning, Ivan Calderon singled, Fisk doubled and Walker followed with a two-run double.

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — Bobby Witt, 0-3 with an 8.15 ERA over his previous four starts to put him among the least effective starters in the American League, allowed two hits over 7 2-3 innings Saturday night as the Texas Rangers beat the Seattle Mariners 1-0.

Reds Blast Gooden, Mets, 6-2

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CINCINNATI — Dwight Gooden allowed solo homers to Barry Larkin and Kal Daniels before leaving the game in the third inning with a sore right arm Saturday as the Cincinnati Reds beat the New York Mets 6-2.

Gooden, 9-4, pitched two-plus innings — the shortest outing of his career — before leaving with what was diagnosed as sore muscles in the area of his right armpit. He has complained of stiffness in that area on several occasions in the past month.

Jack Armstrong, 1-1, gave up two runs and eight hits in six-plus innings after being added to the roster from Class AAA Nashville before the game. It's the right-hander's second stint with the Reds this season.

Rob Dibble pitched two innings and John Franco finished for his 21st save in 23 opportunities. Franco has been in 28 games this season, and has finished 25 of them.

The Reds scored in each of the first four innings for a 4-0 lead. A fielding error by shortstop Kevin Elster let in a run in the second, and Luis Quinones singled home a run in the fourth.

Cincinnati added two runs in the eighth on Paul O'Neill's two-run double off Rick Aguilera.

Armstrong was chased by consecutive doubles in the sixth by Dave Magadan, Howard Johnson and Darryl Strawberry that produced two runs.

Los Angeles.....1
Pittsburgh.....0

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Jose Gonzalez's grounder bounced off second baseman Jose Lind for a single to score Eddie Murray with two outs in the ninth inning to give the Los Angeles Dodgers a 1-0 victory over Pittsburgh Saturday, snapping the Pirates' six-game winning streak.

With one out, Murray singled off starter John Smiley, 7-2, and went to second on a walk to Mike Marshall. After Jeff Hamilton popped out to second, Gonzalez, who is 14-for-31, extended his hitting streak to 10 games with his single on an 0-2 pitch.

Tim Belcher, 5-8, pitched the ninth for the victory. Dodgers starter Tim Leary allowed four hits in eight innings, striking out five.

Marshall played in his first game since May 31, spending June on the disabled list with a sore back. The Dodgers had Marshall, Kirk Gibson and Murray in the lineup at the same time for only the 19th time in 79 games this season.

The Pirates put two runners on base in the fourth and sixth innings without scoring. Singles by Lind and Bobby Bonilla in the fourth put runners at first and third with two out, but R.J. Reynolds grounded out to second.

In the sixth, Leary walked Smiley to lead off the inning and Lind's infield single one out later brought Andy Van Slyke to the plate with two runners on. But Van Slyke's sharp grounder up the middle was snared by second baseman Willie Randolph, who flipped to shortstop Alfredo Griffin to start a double play.

Chicago.....3
San Francisco.....2

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Greg Maddux allowed two runs in 7 2-3 innings and added two singles and a game-winning RBI to lead the Chicago Cubs past Rick Reuschel and the San Francisco Giants 3-2 on Saturday.

Maddux, 7-7, won for the sixth time in his last eight starts and snapped a career-high, nine-game winning streak for Reuschel, 12-3. Reuschel hadn't lost since April 28.

With the score tied 2-2, Vance Law led off the fourth with a double and scored one out later when Maddux singled to center. Maddux is 12-for-38 (.316) with four RBIs this season.

Maddux's leadoff single in the third sparked a two-run inning for the Cubs, who won their second straight following a seven-game losing streak.

Maddux went to third on Dwight Smith's ground-rule double. With two outs, Reuschel hit Andre Dawson with a pitch, loading the bases, and Mark Grace followed with a two-run single.

The Giants tied the score with two runs in the bottom of the third off Maddux, who had allowed only two runs in his previous 24 innings.

Terry Kennedy led off with a single, moved to second on Reuschel's sacrifice and scored on Brett Butler's run-scoring single. Butler stole second and came home on Robby Thompson's single.

St. Louis.....9
San Diego.....3

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Jose Oquendo had four hits in a game for the first time in his career, including a two-run triple in a five-run second inning, as the St. Louis Cardinals beat the San Diego Padres 9-3 Saturday night.

The Padres' Bip Roberts was on base his first three times up to tie a club record for consecutive times reaching base at nine. Roberts had six hits and three walks in that span, before grounding out to third in the sixth.

Ted Power, 1-2, pitched 4 2-3 innings of shutout relief for his first victory of the season, allowing three hits. Pat Clements, 1-1, a last-minute substitute for Eric Show, who had a bad back, was the loser.

Roberts helped San Diego take a 1-0 lead in the first as he singled, stole second and went to third on catcher Tony Pena's throwing error, and scored on Jack Clark's two-out single.

The Cardinals, who had scored only 22 runs in their previous eight games, scored five runs in the second after two were out.

Tom Brunansky singled with one out, Terry Pendleton walked, and with two outs, Clements walked Pena intentionally to load the bases. But rookie pitcher Ken Hill fouled up the strategy by slicing a run-scoring single to right field.

Vince Coleman followed with a two-run single and Oquendo then hit a two-run triple.

San Diego got a run in the third on Roberts' triple and a sacrifice fly by Roberto Alomar. The Padres made it 5-3 in the fourth as Roberts tied the team record for consecutive times on base with a run-scoring double.

Hill pitched 3 2-3 and allowed five hits and three runs.

St. Louis made it 8-3 in the fifth, helped by two fielding errors by third baseman Tim Flannery allowing three runs to score.

Philadelphia.....4
Atlanta.....2

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Bruce Ruffin won his first game since July 16, 1988, as the Philadelphia Phillies took advantage of shoddy defense to beat the Atlanta Braves 4-2 Saturday night.

Ruffin, 1-3, who was recalled from Class AAA Scranton-Wilkes Barre of the International League on June 3, after starting the season with the Phillies. He allowed one run and six hits in five innings.

Tom Herr singled with one out and went to third on Von Hayes' single. Smith then balked Herr home. Hayes stole third and scored on a sacrifice fly by Ricky Jordan.

The Braves made it 2-1 in the fifth when Jeff Blauser hit his fourth home run.

John Kruk singled with two outs in the Phillies sixth and was replaced by pinch-runner Bob Dernier, who moved to second on Ricky Jordan's single.

The Braves made it 4-2 in the seventh on Dale Murphy's RBI single.

Houston.....4
Montreal.....1

MONTREAL (AP) — Alex Trevino drove in four runs with two doubles as the Houston Astros beat the Montreal Expos 4-1 Saturday night.

Trevino had an RBI double in the fifth inning and a three-run double in the seventh.

Larry Andersen, 2-1, pitched three innings and allowed two hits for the victory. Dave Smith got the last three outs for his 16th save.

With no score, Craig Reynolds singled with one out against Pascual Perez, 4-9, in the fifth inning and scored when Trevino grounded a 3-2 pitch down the left-field line.

Montreal tied it against Bob Forsch in their half of the fifth. Tim Wallach, Tom Foley and Nelson Santovenia singeled to load the bases and Spike Owen drove in Wallach with a fielder's choice grounder.

Houston had runners on second and third with one out in the seventh when Montreal intentionally walked Ken Caminiti to get to Trevino, the eighth-place hitter.

Moody's Eagle Ties Him For Lead

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LIGONIER, Pa. — Orville Moody played so well he could have given Arnold Palmer a stroke a hole.

Literally.

Moody eagled the final hole to finish off a spectacular 64 Saturday and tie Frank Beard for the third-round lead at the U.S. Seniors Open.

Moody's tournament-record 8-under-par effort was 18 shots better than the 82 compiled by Palmer, who was playing before the hometown folks in the hills of Western Pennsylvania where he grew up.

"It's just embarassing," Palmer said of his round.

"I'm sorry to hear that," Moody said when informed of Palmer's score. "He's my hero."

But that was the only thing he had to be sorry about.

"Under the conditions — a championship course and under championship conditions — it's one of the best rounds I've ever played," Moody said after breaking the Seniors Open scoring record of 65 set by Miller Barber in 1982.

Moody, who won the U.S. Open in Houston 20 years ago this month, shared the 54-hole lead with Beard at 7-under 209. Beard birdied the last hole to complete a 70.

Moody's march over the Laurel Valley Golf Club course finished in spectacular style. He birdied the 14th, 15th and 16th holes, then parred the 17th before his eagle-3 on the final hole.

"When I get started on something like that, I just get in a trance, a kind of daze and I just went to go on to the next hole and birdie it," said Moody. "Just one of those days when everything started falling in place."

For almost all the other contenders, though, things were falling apart.

While Moody moved into a share of the lead by going 5-under over the last five hole, Don Bies, the leading money-winner this year, was going 5-over — finishing with a 77 that dropped him out of the title race.

Al Geiberger, two shots in front of the field at the turn, squandered four strokes over those last five holes, shot a 76 and was seven behind at even-par 216.

With those collapses, Australian Bruce Crampton moved into third place at 213 going into Sunday's final round of the chase for an $80,000 first prize.

Butch Baird, Jim Dent, Bobby Nichols and South African Harold Henning were next at 214. Baird shot a 69, Dent a 70, Henning a 71 and Nichols a 74.

Charles Coody and Dave Hill, at 215, were the only others who were under par after three rounds. Coody had a 71 and Hill shot a 73.

South African Gary Player, the two-time defending champion, had a 73 but, at 218, was nine strokes back.

Moody, who went past 13 players with his record effort, said he "was just thinking of maybe shooting two or three under and moving up a little bit."

And he was on that track when he played the first 13 holes in 3-under. At that point, he was five shots back.

But he rolled in a 20-foot birdie putt on the 14th, then flipped a little sand wedge to within two feet and birdied the 15th.

He got his approach in the rough, only about 15 feet from the cup on the 16th, but in a difficult position.

"I couldn't putt it and I didn't want to chip it," Moody said. So, using the blade of a sand wedge, he put a putting stroke on the ball and ran it in the cup for a third consecutive birdie.

After a par on the 17th, he hit a five-wood second shot 12 feet from the cup and closed things out with the eagle putt.

Mark McCumber blasts from a trap on way to tie for Western Open lead

McCumber Overcomes Back Problems To Tie For Lead

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

OAK BROOK, Ill. — Mark McCumber was unsure of his shot selection all day Saturday because of an aching back. He was sure, however, of his place after 54 holes of the Western Open — tied for the lead with former Masters champion Larry Mize.

McCumber, who was tied with Paul Azinger at the start of the round, shot a 1-under-par 71 for a 206 total after three trips around the 7,097-yard Butler National course.

Mize, seeking his first title since the 1987 Masters, had a bogey-free 67 Saturday in his quest for the top prize of $180,000 in the $1 million tournament.

McCumber, who has to wear a corset, had to have cold spray applied to his back on every hole over the final nine so he could continue to play.

McCumber had bogeys on Nos. 3 and 4 and picked up a birdie on No. 7. He had two birdies on the back nine.

Can he play the final round Sunday?

"I've never not played leading before," McCumber said. "We'll wait and see. I'll know when I wake up tomorrow. It's very disconcerting to hit the ball and not know where it's going."

Mize birdied the first two holes, had nine straight pars and birdied Nos. 11, 12 and 15.

"I'm very happy, I've been working hard this week and I've had three solid rounds," he said. "We've been taking advantage of Butler but I'm not taking anything for granted. There are no guarantees."

Azinger, who at one time was 11 under and held a two-stroke lead, finished bogey-bogey for a 72 and dropped into a tie for third with Peter Jacobsen at 207.

"I played very well today except for the last three holes," Azinger said. "I had a chance to make a lot of birdies and could hve separated myself from the field. I'm encouraged but discouraged I lost two strokes to par on the last two holes."

Azinger's second shot on 17 landed under a tree and he had to play his chip shot from his knees. He then missed the green, chipped again and dropped the putt for his first bogey of the day. On 18, he was in the rough and chipped through the fairway, then missed his par putt.

Jacobsen, who lost this tournament last year by one stroke when he double-bogeyed the final hole, had his third straight 69.

Mark Wiebe had a 69 and was alone at 208, followed by Tommy Armour III who had a 68 for 209.

Jacobsen was asked if he were on a mission, considering his loss here a year ago.

"I guess that's true," he said. "I'm playing to prove to myself I can win here. We have a great field and it's nice to be in contention."

Jacobsen had to make a 25-foot putt to save par on No. 18 and said "Maybe No. 18 felt like it owed me something."

Mike Hulbert and Curt Byrum each had third-round 67s and were at 210, four strokes off the lead.

Eleven players were tied at 211 including Lee Trevino, Greg Norman, Tom Kite and first-round leader Chip Beck. Trevino had 67 Saturday, while Norman blew to a 73.

Green Takes Three-Shot Advantage At Du Maurier

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MONTREAL — Tammie Green beat her nerves, the weather and two of her golfing heroines in one day.

"I was playing with a couple of my heroes," said Green after shooting a 2-under-par 70 to take a three-stroke lead after three rounds of the $600,000 du Maurier Classic, the third of the LPGA's four majors.

Green, the 1987 LPGA Rookie of the Year, bested playing partners Betsy King and Nancy Lopez despite a shaky back nine on which she double-bogeyed the 16th hole, only to recover with a 20-foot birdie putt on the 17th. She finished three rounds at 9-under 207 on the rain-slicked 6,261-yard Beaconsfield Golf Club course.

King, the LPGA's top money-winner this year, had a 74 was tied at 210 with 1983 champion Hollis Stacy, Jane Geddes and Penny Hammel. Lopez and Beth Daniel were tied at 5-under, with Patty Sheehan and Laura Davies another shot back.

"I just tried to stay on my ball and play my game," Green said. "It's tough when Nancy starts making putts and Betsy can really turn it on. You can't think about that, though."

Green, who finished in a tie for second behind Juli Inkster at the season's first major, the Dinah Shore, said controlling her nerves will be crucial as she enters the final round with the lead for the first time in her career.

"I'm just going to try to make birdies, play good golf," said Green, who's 22nd on the money list with $82,821. "I haven't been in this situation before. It's going to be new and exciting."

Green said she has battled her nerves in the past, trying to force the ball into the hole, but made a recent resolution to "relax and start having fun out there.

"It's going to depend on how I keep my composure.I'll try to stay relaxed and make birdies. The more birdies I make, the happier I am."

There were no smiles from King, who has won $365,986 and four tournaments, including last week's McDonald's Classic in Wilmington, Del. King started the day one shot ahead of Green but bogeyed the fifth and ninth holes and was unable to recover on the back nine.

"I obviously didn't hit the ball as well and didn't get it going with the putter," said King, who is seeking her 19th career victory.

King said the rain, which fell overnight, again for about an hour in late morning and for 10 minutes as the leaders made the turn, had no effect on her game.

"It didn't change the character of the golf course," she said.

She also warned that with four players only three strokes behind Green, the tournament was far from over.

"At this stage, you don't think of one player who's going to win," said King, who had her first above-par round in three weeks. "I was just trying to get my own game going.

"Tammie's playing well, but the way the par-5's are playing (short), you think you can make those shots."

Lopez, winner of the last major, the LPGA Championship in May, had a 67 Friday and picked up two more strokes on the front nine Saturday before a double-bogey on the 11th. Lopez shanked into a tree and had the ball bounce back to her. She finished at even-par 72.

Hammel matched Nina Foust for the day's best round, a 68, while Stacy shot a 69 and Geddes had a 70.

Three-time champion Pat Bradley recovered from a 75 on Friday with a 69 and was in a tie at 213 with 1987 winner Jody Rosenthal and Sherri Turner.

Babe Ruth League

Peeler's.....19
Pepsi-Cola.....6

Peeler's kept its hopes for a share of the Greenville Babe Ruth League title alive Friday night with a 19-6 romp over Pepsi-Cola.

Peeler's will play league-leading Wachovia Bank Sunday at 2 p.m. in a make-up game that will determine the league title and top seeding for the league's tournament, which starts Monday. A Wachovia win would give it the title outright, while a Peeler's win would tie the two for the title and give Peeler's top seeding in the tournament.

Pepsi took the lead in the game with a run in the top of the first, but the bubble burst after that as Peeler's came back to score 10 times.

Peeler's got the outburst on the basis of just two hits, those at the close of the action. After three walks, Jimmy Rouse reached on an error, scoring two and two more scored on two infield grounders. Walks to Jeffrey Freeman and Adam Charlton brought in two more and Parham Stanley drove in two with a single. Two more crossed on Mitch Jones' single, closing out the scoring.

Peeler's added five more in the third and four in the fourth. Pepsi got four in the second, three of them on a home run by Bryan Hill, and one more in the fourth.

Jones led the Peeler's hitting with two. No one else had more than one for either team.

But in the bottom of the fourth, Coke rallied for two, then scored five times in the fifth to take the lead, 7-5.

Dante Mayo led off with a walk and Jonathan Measamer and Ethan Brinn also walked, loading the bases. A passed ball allowed Mayo to score and Buddy Foley walked to reload the sacks. Chris Smith and Aaron Givens both walked, forcing in two more and Steve Nobles singled to drive in Foley. Jay Moye reached on a fielder's choice, scoring Smith.

Coke added one more in the sixth.

Nobles had two hits to lead Coke while James Witherspoon, Matt Robertson and Jarrett McGalliard each picked up a pair for Everette's.

Two Players Quit Alabama

TUSCALOOSA, Ala. (AP) — Two players are leaving the Alabama football team, leaving an already depleted offensive line with that many more gaps to fill, reports said Saturday.

The Tuscaloosa News reported that part-time starter Sam Atkins and a high school roommate, Ben Holt, both were quitting the Crimson Tide.

Coach Bill Curry said the 6-foot-5, 270-pound Atkins left the squad for "personal reasons," while Holt, who has not played in two seasons in Tuscaloosa, had a bad knee injury.

The News said Atkins has told Curry he plans to transfer to another NCAA Division I school, probably Tulane.

Atkins played in all 12 of Alabama's games in 1988, starting in four. He was listed as the No. 2 offensive tackle in the spring, but suffered an injured left knee in the A-Day game and underwent arthroscopic surgery.

Prep League

Computerland.....13
1st Citizens.....12

Computerland, the regular season champion, scored a run in the bottom of the sixth inning and slipped past First Citizens, 13-12, Saturday in the first round of the Prep League post-season tournament.

Computerland will advance in the winners' bracket to face Crabby Sam's, a 9-4 winner over Legal Eagles, on Sunday at 5 p.m. First Citizens will meet Legal Eagles in the losers' bracket of the double-elimination event Sunday at 8 p.m.

Computerland took the lead with four runs in the first, and both teams scored single runs in the second. First Citizens then scored eight times in the third to take a 9-5 lead. Computerland scored twice to cut it to 9-7 in the bottom of the third. The Bankers added another pair in the fourth to up the lead to 11-7, but Computerland came back with five in the bottom of the inning for a 12-11 lead. First Citizens then tied it up in the fifth.

In the sixth, Jacob Zonn singled and moved up on a hit by Beau Williams. Rob Barnes walked to load the bases and a passed ball allowed Zonn to score.

Zonn led the Computerland hitting with three while Shep Skinner had three and Jon Gavigan and Alan Colombo each had two for First Citizens.

Crabby Sam's.....9
Legal Eagles.....4

Dante Daniels banged out four hits and scored three runs in leading Crabby Sam's to a 9-4 victory over the Legal Eagles in the first round of the Prep League post-season tournament Saturday.

Crabby Sam's will face Computerland in the winners' bracket of the double-elimination tournament on Sunday at 5 p.m. while the Eagles take on First Citizens at 8 p.m. in the losers' bracket.

Both teams scored a run in the first inning, but Crabby Sam's added one in the second for a 2-1 lead. After the Eagles tied it up with one in the top of the third, Sam's put the game away with three in the bottom of the third.

Daniels hit a one-out triple and Wilbert Levette walked and stole second. Both scored when Craig Brannon reached on an error. Brannon, who took two bases on the misplay, went to third on a passed ball and scored on Ashley Hardee's ground out.

Sam's added three in the fifth and one in the sixth. The Eagles picked up single runs in the fifth and seventh.

Jason Tetterton added two hits for Sam's while Dana Parker had two hits to lead the Eagles.

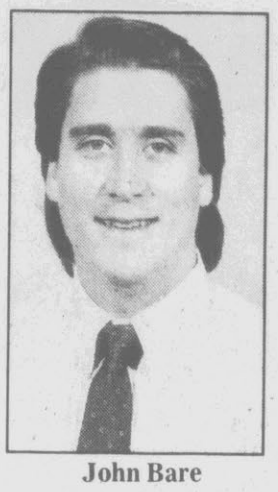
Tom Morris

Sunday Notebook:

Editor's Note: The following is a review of WTBS' coverage of the NBA draft. John Bare has a bachelor's degree in radio, television and motion pictures from the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. He is a guest columnist for Tom Morris who is on vacation.

A bow to Steve Jones' insight in his role as analyst in Tuesday's National Basketball Association two-round draft, which was carried live in primetime by the SuperStation WTBS.

Kudos also to co-analyst Rick Barry, who proved that less is more by slowing down his motor mouth to 33 rpm and providing humorous commentary and explanation of the draft process.



John Bare

Example: he emphasized that Phoenix needed a point guard to relieve Kevin Johnson, who was visibly exhausted in the Suns' sweeping loss to the Lakers in the recent playoffs. Though the Suns drafted forward Anthony Cook of Arizona, they quickly traded Cook to the World Champion Detroit Pistons for Illinois' Kenny Battle, who was the Pistons' top selection, and back-up point guard Michael Williams, the Pistons' second-round pick out of Baylor in 1988.

Presto. There is some sense to the madness.

It was the same with Jones, who has cultivated his delivery and developed a nice broadcast style despite a harsh and raw voice. Over the three and a half hour meat-market festival, he presented several points of interest.

Example: he told all the short kids in America to go to Boston College. With point guard Dana Barros going to Seattle with the No. 16 pick, the Eagles have sent three sub-six-footers to guide NBA teams, he said. This is the same league where 6-9 guys play the point? Yep. Former BC point men John Bagley of the Nets and Michael Adams of Denver were both first-rounders, he said.

He also noted that long-time NBA rivals L.A. and Boston each peeked behind the iron curtain and selected a Yugoslavian player. Both teams are scrambling for help as their stars age, he said, and neither club let the other gain an advantage by reaching overseas. He also correctly cited the language barrier as a problem for coaches and teammates, which interviewer Craig Sager overcame by asking questions through a knock-out brunette who served as interpreter.

She should have hung around longer, for Sager seemed to need an interpreter with all the American guys too.

Sager's weak interviews and host Bob Neal's sometimes nervous, sometimes syrupy, all-the-time teetering comments worked to unravel the good done by Jones and Barry.

Give TBS a B- for effort on what was the first show of its kind: a sleek two-round draft televised in prime time. Give Ted Turner's flagship station a C on product quality.

The show occasionally scored deuces, such as the live shots of screaming Minneapolis fans sinking their teeth into the NBA for the first time since the Lakers scooted West 30 years ago. Yet, it had some of its shots swatted into the stands through gaffs like failing to show highlight clips of lesser known stars such as Jeff Sanders of Georgia Southern.

The most glaring error to local fans was failing to show the backboard mutilating dunk of East Carolina's Blue Edwards, who went to Utah with the 21st pick. Another Turner station, Cable News Network, ran the clip last fall on its sports shows, and Blue Edwards highlights were available. Unforgivable error.

Famous guys like Pervis Ellison didn't need highlight clips. The country has already seen them. It's the second-level stars that fans have yet to see. And TBS kept fans in the dark.

The show also flopped by missing big stories.

First-round selections came every five minutes, allowing fans to catch swatches of Matlock, grab a beer or suffer with Sager. The live shots with Bulls' Coach Doug Collins and Sonics' Coach Bernie Bickerstaff were welcome and successful, but TBS missed out. It could have had many more live interviews or pre-taped stories on the NBA.

How did Seton Hall's John Morton and Missouri's Gary Leonard fell sitting there alone below the stage dressed to the nines while all the other top picks had long since left the seats and put on a baseball cap bearing the name of their new home team? Morton didn't go until the 25th pick. Leonard, a 7-footer, hung around until the second round, going 34th overall.

Morton and Leonard must have grown queasy watching themselves slip further down the draft — and losing signing bonus dollars — but nobody asked them about it.

Another pertinent question: how was Houston affected by being left out of the draft? The Rockets were the only NBA team with no pick in either of the two rounds. The team has fallen from a contender to a nuisance, and it appears there will be no new quality talent in '89 unless there is a major trade.

Did Seattle inch too far out on a limb by picking Shawn Kemp No. 17? He sat out at Kentucky because of academics and never played for a Texas community college in which he enrolled. That's a big gamble for a team expected to pay a guy millions. It smells a little like the draft pick Golden State wasted a couple of years ago on Chris Washburn, who bought a customized Mercedes and drove straight into everyone's doghouse.

Jones correctly predicted Seattle would select Kemp. If it was known he was a likely first-rounder, why not prepare a story on his high school-to-the-pros situation?

And with only two rounds this year, how will teams be under different pressure to sign free agents? Everyone knew it was a different draft this year, and teams may have to scramble for free agents if draft picks falter. Why not prepare a story?

The panel kept referring to the pre-draft camps in Portsmouth and Chicago, yet they only touched on the likelihood that Syracuse's Sherman Douglass fell to the second round because he skipped the workouts. Did he believe his stock was sufficiently high? Was he too lazy? Viewers don't know.

Understandably, draft shows are unpredictable and haphazard. It's not like a sitcom. No one knows the script until it happens. While it would have been impossible to cover every angle and prepare a feature story on every issue, TBS should have done more. The above ideas are just examples. There are an infinite amount of story ideas from which to choose.

The show could have been improved by bringing in CNN Sports guys Fred Hickman and Nick Charles to handle the host desk. After all, Hickman handled TBS' weekly NBA review show during the season.

An ex-coach or front office man — perhaps Frank Layden — should appear on the set at least part of the time. Between a some picks, TBS should interview players on the set two or three at a time to develop a better discussion. Between other picks, there should be taped stories ready to go or live shots from NBA cities.

As for Sager, just get anyone else. He appeared to hurt the feelings of Mookie Blaylock, a Nets pick, in an attempt to crack a joke that the New York area is only big enough for one Mookie — Mookie Wilson of the Mets. Mookie seemed a little flustered and said he guessed he could start going by his given name, Darren. Way to go Sager, kill a nickname.

Jones and Barry both noted that Blaylock is a reserved, small-town young man not used to the big city media crunch. Score one for the crunch.

Sager joked with a Knicks exec who dodged questions about who are likely candidates to replace Rick Pitino instead of pushing him to name possibilities and give a timetable — or even discuss how being coachless might affect how the team decided who to draft.

He failed to ask guys like Danny Ferry, who went to the perpetually inept Clippers, how he will handle losing more games in a month than he has in his whole life. He didn't ask any of them what they plan to do with their millions.

Sager talked more than the interviewees. Also, the dialogue was piped through the PA system at the Felt Forum, allowing 4,000 crazies to scream or boo at every comment — a situation the draftees should not have to endure.

TBS should either create a show designed to entertain the live audience or to inform the TV audience, but it's tough to do both. Just ask NBC's Bob Costas, who once suffered through the network's attempt to include a live audience for pre-game football shows.

The draft show was at once fun — trying to predict what club would choose which guy and seeing college students turned into rich men — and embarrassing — watching Sager schmooze in a set-up handshake between ACC stars Ferry and Tom Hammonds, and hoping Neal didn't fall out of his chair.

In all, TBS has chosen the right course to travel. The show was faster paced than draft shows of pro football, and it attracts great fan interest. The network only needs to utilize the right players and improve its coverage of draft-day features and issues.

Gooden Said Out Two Weeks

Sore Right Shoulder Could Sideline Mets' Mound Ace

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CINCINNATI — The New York Mets probably will lose Dwight Gooden for two weeks because of a sore right shoulder.

The right-hander had to come out of a 6-2 loss Saturday to Cincinnati in the third inning after he failed to get his arm loose — a problem in his last several starts.

Manager Dave Johnson said he didn't want to take any chances with Gooden, 9-4, who has never before had arm problems. Johnson expects the Mets to put Gooden on the 15-day disabled list.

"I hate to do it. It's like cutting off your right arm," Johnson said. "But it's the most prudent thing to do.

"I don't want to take the chance of this becoming a bigger problem than it is. Hopefully, nothing is (seriously) wrong, it's just a muscular problem."

Gooden has had some stiffness and soreness in the area of his right armpit the last few starts. He couldn't get the area loose in the bullpen Saturday, and fared no better when the game began.

"It's real tough to describe," Gooden said. "You don't feel a sharp pain from throwing the ball. It's as if someone hit you with a stick or a hammer, more of that type of pain.

"I've never had this before. It's been going on for a number of starts."

In Gooden's previous start on June 26 in Montreal, he left after four innings as the Expos beat the Mets 5-1. In victories on June 19 against Montreal and June 14 against Chicago, Gooden had complained of stiffness in the shoulder. On June 19, Gooden won his 100th game.

The problem had been diagnosed as weakness in the muscles, and Gooden was given exercises to strengthen the area. They haven't worked.

"He's had problems getting loose about the last five or six starts," Johnson said.

Gooden will return to New York on Sunday for further testing to pinpoint the problem. Johnson will recommend putting him on the disabled list for some rest.

"I hope with all my heart it's just fatigue," Johnson said. "I don't want to take the chance of pushing it any farther.

"The All-Star Game is out (for Gooden). I don't want him coming back until he feels real loose and easy."

Gooden gave up a solo homer in the first inning Saturday to Barry Larkin, an unearned run in the second, and a solo homer to Kal Daniels on his first pitch in the third inning. Johnson then went out and checked on him.

"I said, 'Doc, you can't get loose?' He said, 'No, I can't get loose at all,' " Johnson said.

Dave West, who is expected to replace Gooden in the rotation, allowed two hits and one run over the next four innings. The two-plus innings were Gooden's shortest start in the major leagues.

"Everybody who has an arm problem says they can't get loose," Johnson said.

Johnson also has noticed a drop in Gooden's fastball.

"I didn't think the last two or three times out he had his real zip on the ball," Johnson said.

The Reds noticed that Saturday. Outfielder Eric Davis said Gooden threw more breaking balls, staying away from throwing hard.

"You could definitely tell he wasn't 100 percent," Davis said.

The Mets already have catchers Barry Lyons and Gary Carter and first baseman Keith Hernandez on the disabled list.

"We've lost some good players, but we've got some awfully good players here," Johnson said. "We miss all the guys we lose, but we have other guys here who can pick up the slack."

Washburn's Fans Now Wondering

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

HICKORY— Chris Washburn, 6-foot-9 and 250 pounds in the ninth grade, would come to basketball practice on a moped.

Seven years later, he returned to Hickory's Ridgeview neighborhood in a Mercedes — a North Carolina State star who had made it to the pros.

Then, kids flocked to get his autograph before he shot hoops at the center's gym.

Washburn, 24, was banned for life from the NBA Thursday after testing positive for illegal drugs for the third time. Washburn last played for the Atlanta Hawks two years ago.

He gives up a contract valued at $400,000 a year, although he will be allowed to appeal in two years.

On Friday, hometown admirers wondered what went wrong.

"It's too bad," said Robbie Roberts, 19, who met Washburn at the Ridgeview Community Center's basketball court. "I like Chris. I hop he gets his act together. I think he should have set a better example for the kids around here."

High school coaches and others knew him as a driving center at Hickory High with a ready smile, a boy who towered over his peers, even in the fourth grade.

"Everyone looked up to him for being able to make it," John Wilson, 35, told The Charlotte Observer.

The sixth player to be banned from the NBA, Washburn first underwent drug treatment in January 1987 while playing for the Golden State Warriors.

The Warriors drafted Washburn as the third pick of the first round of 1986 after the 6-11 center turned pro while a sophomore at N.C. State.

At Hickory High, Washburn started on the varsity basketball team his freshman year, leading the Tornadoes to two victorious seasons: 25-2, 23-3, his coach David Craft said.

Even as a freshman and sophomore, recruiters from as far away as UCLA would come to see Washburn play. He left Hickory High after the 10th grad eto go to Fork Union (Va.) Military Academy.

"People called from all over the country," Craft said. "We had letters, we had phone calls. I wouldn't venture to say how many letters we got. It was big-time."

But even then, there were problems.

As a ninth grader, already a hurdler with state championship potential, Washburn and eight other students were thrown off the track team for drinking during a meet, said Hickory High athletic director Larry Whittenberg.

Washburn continued to have disciplinary problems after high school. At N.C. State, his first season ended with a suspension after seven games, the result of a misdemeanor conviction for stealing a stereo from a dorm room.

"He's a hometown boy, he went on to the NBA. How many do we have in Hickory?" said the Rev. Webster Lyle, a city alderman and the Washburn family's pastor. "We hope that Chris will pull himself together and make a meaningful contribution to himself and to society. And, of course, we're all praying for the family."

Streaks Snapped

OSLO, Norway — Calvin Smith spoiled Carl Lewis' 28th birthday by nipping the Olympic champion in the 100 meters and Abdi Bile snapped Steve Cram's "Dream Mile" winning streak on Saturday night at the Bislett Games IAAF Mobil Grand Prix track meet.

Smith, a former world record-holder and a bronze medalist in the Seoul Olympics, was fastest out of the blocks and won the featured event in 10.05 seconds.

It was a new Bislett Stadium record, besting the 10.19 mark Lewis set as a promising youngster eight years ago.

Lewis, running the 100 for only the third time this season, was runner-up in 10.11 with fellow American Dennis Mitchell just one hundredth of a second behind.

Smith has not beaten Lewis often, but he said his victory wasn't that special.

"No, because there are so many other top runners out there," he said. "I don't remember the last time I beat him. I just go out and compete against the best. Dennis and Leroy (Burrell) are very good also. You just can't look at one runner.

"I had a very good start," he said.

Three-Day Match Finally Ends

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WIMBLEDON, England — In what may have been the longest match in Wimbledon history, Greg Holmes defeated Todd Witsken in a 26-game fifth set to win a match that began Thursday evening and ended Saturday afternoon.

The match between the two unseeded Americans, which stretched over three days because of rain and darkness, included 5 hours, 28 minutes of play and the score was almost as long as the match — 5-7, 6-4, 7-6 (7-5), 4-6, 14-12.

But there was no time to celebrate for Holmes, who less than two hours after his victory had to play a third-round match against 16th-seeded Amos Mansdorf. An exhausted Holmes lost in three quick sets, 6-2, 6-4, 6-2 in 1:41.

Wimbledon officials and veteran British reporters said they could not remember any match lasting as long as the Holmes-Witsken marathon, but said it was impossible to check because time records were not kept in early years of the tournament.

"It's certainly the longest in the Open era (that began in 1968)," said John Parsons, tennis writer for London's Daily Telegraph, who has been covering Wimbledon for 25 years.

"Until 1972 or 1973 the players didn't have chairs for the changeovers, so the matches went a lot quicker," Parsons said.

Wimbledon officials and Lance Tingay, who wrote the Guinness Book of Tennis Facts and Feats, also said they had no record of any match lasting that long.

At the Wimbledon Museum, which keeps the most complete records of the tournament, officials with access to timesheets and other pertinent material had left work for the day by the time queries were made.

Before the Holmes-Witsken battle, the longest recorded match in Wimbledon history was a 112-game first-round contest between Americans Pancho Gonzales and Charlie Pasarell in 1969 that lasted 5:12.

The second-round Holmes-Witsken match started at 7:39 p.m. Thursday, with Witsken winning the first set 7-5 and the players tied at 3-3 in the second set when darkness halted play.

They resumed at 3:56 p.m. on Friday, with Holmes winning the second set 6-4 and the third set 7-6 in between four rain delays, and Witsken evening the match with a 6-4 victory in the fourth set.

Holmes and Witsken were tied 9-9 in the deciding set when darkness stopped play Friday night and sent the match into its third day.

Holmes, wearing a knee brace because of a first-round injury that nearly forced him to drop out of the tournament, needed 34 minutes to finally wrap up the match in its 71st game Saturday afternoon.

He then caught his breath before heading out to play Mansdorf.

"In the second set my legs just were real tired," Holmes said. "It was just really tough."

Mansdorf said he could tell his opponent was mentally and physically drained after the marathon match.

"He kept looking up at the sky and hoping for rain, I think," Mansdorf said.

of the Open era at Wimbledon. The score was 5-7, 6-4, 7-6, 4-6, 14-12.

"In the second set against Mansdorf, my legs were real tired," Holmes said. "It was just really tough."

Martina Navratilova, making her 1989 debut on Centre Court, routed Australian Nicole Provis 6-0, 6-3 in 48 minutes.

"Now I feel like I'm really in the tournament," said Navratilova, who is seeking a record ninth women's singles title. "When you play Wimbledon, you always think about Centre Court. I was happy to be there."

Two-time champion Chris Evert cruised into the fourth round with a 6-4, 6-1 victory over Anne Hobbs, the last British player left in the singles competition.

"I won comfortably, but I can play better," Evert said. "I can't afford to start out slowly. That's what I'll have to watch out for in the second week."

Tenth-seeded Jana Novotna, No. 12 Mary Joe Fernandez and No. 14 Hana Mandlikova also won, but Shriver was upset by Magers 2-6, 6-2, 12-10.

Shriver, a semifinalist the past two years but struggling this season, saved three match points in her second-round win over Sara Gomer. But she couldn't pull off another miracle comeback against Magers, ranked 40th in the world.

"It was like a dogfight," Shriver said. "I know I'm not in the greatest condition, but I'm certainly not ashamed to lose to a player of her quality."

Pugh beat McEnroe in a Wimbledon warmup tournament last month, but the doubles specialist was outclassed in Saturday's rematch.

McEnroe, seeded fifth, won the the first three games and never looked back. He broke Pugh's serve once in the first set and twice in the next two, while dropping his own serve just once, when he double-faulted in the fourth game of the second set.

It was one of only three double-faults for McEnroe, who had 24 in his first two matches.

"I feel my serve in more in sync now," McEnroe said. "But all parts of my game are getting better."

Aside from disputing a few line calls and screaming at himself for double-faulting, McEnroe kept his temper in check. His next opponent is Australian John Fitzgerald, who beat Jonas Svensson of Sweden 6-4, 6-4, 7-6.

"He's an excellent grass-court player, but so am I," McEnroe said. "The important thing is, I'm still here and my game is improving. I like my chances."

Chang rallied from 1-5 to win the third set against Schapers, a 6-foot-6 Dutchman with a booming serve. Chang saved a set point in the ninth game with a drop volley, then broke Schapers at love with a running cross-court forehand and served out the set.

"I was lucky to pull that set out," said Chang, the ninth seed. "I just tried to think about winning each point and not giving anything away."

After exchanging breaks at the start of the fourth set, the players remained on serve until the final game, when Chang broke Schapers at love.

"The fourth set was just so stressful," Chang said, who lost in the second round last year. "Everything was close in that set."

After Chang won the French Open, McEnroe said he would pull down his pants on Centre Court if the teen-ager reached the final at Wimbledon. Now McEnroe may have to put up or shut up.

If McEnroe and Chang each win two more matches, they'll meet in the semifinals.

"I'm not worried yet," McEnroe said. "I'll be worried on Friday if he's in the semis."

Shriver, After Defeat, Re-Examines The Future

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WIMBLEDON, England — Pam Shriver is beginning to question her future after yet another failure in a nightmare year.

Shriver, 27 next week, has a reputation as a fun-loving eccentric. But after her 2-6, 6-2, 12-10 defeat by Gretchen Magers in the third round at Wimbledon Saturday, she said it was time to take stock.

Maybe, Shriver said, it was time to take her sport more seriously.

"I was enjoying my tennis. I was having a great time," Shriver, the world's ninth-ranked player, said. "I was having fun playing, the last few months, a lot of social doubles with decent players. I thought ... I could have that sort of social attitude about my tennis and still maintain a kind of decent ranking.

"Well you can't do that any more. You can't do that at all. ... You have to take it like such a serious business-type situation. Right now, with my current attitude for wanting to do a lot of other things, I have to make a choice."

Shriver reached the semifinals at Wimbledon last year for the second successive time, the closest she ever has come to winning the tournament.

But this year, she hasn't got past the quarterfinals in any event and has lost to a number of unknown players.

Sara Gomer of Britain almost upset Shriver in the second round on Thursday but blew three match points and lost 8-6 in the third set.

"Actually I feel like I had a free match today because I could easily have gone out to Gomer," Shriver said. "I knew I wasn't in the greatest condition. But in my mind, I am certainly not ashamed by losing to someone of the quality of (Magers). She's a very fine player. It was like a dogfight."

In a marathon final set, both players held serve until Magers broke for a 10-9 lead and Shriver broke back for 10-10. Shriver then double-faulted twice to give Magers a break for 11-10, and Magers served out the match.

Shriver, who never has won a Grand Slam event in 11 years on the circuit, said her chance may have gone for good because of the sudden rise of the teen-age champions.

"Suddenly the barriers are coming down," Shriver said. "I can feel it. I can sense it ... the mystique is lessening of the seeded players, the top players. We are becoming a little more like the men.

"I think the women through the years have gone out there a little bit frightened. That's starting to disappear, which is great for the game I think."

Hana Is Happy After Victory

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WIMBLEDON, England — Hana Mandlikova has a game tailor-made for grass and talent as rich as that of any woman player in the world.

And, at last, she believes she has the mental and physical toughness to transform those qualities into the prize she craves above all others: the Wimbledon championship.

"Healthwise, I'm 100 percent, eager and fresh," Mandlikova, the No. 14 seed, said Saturday after reaching the fourth round with a 6-2, 6-4 victory over Donna Faber of the United States.

She broke Faber twice in the first set and twice more in the second, when she also dropped her own serve for the only time in the match.

A former U.S. Open and Australian Open winner, Mandlikova has suffered from injuries in recent years. She reached the semifinals of the Australian Open this year before losing in the first round at the French Open.

With Wimbledon halfway through, however, she said she was in her best shape in a long time.

"I'm ready mentally, I'm happy on the circuit. I'm enjoying having fun, which is most important," she said.

A divorce from her Australian restaurateur husband coincided with a six-month layoff because of a hamstring injury.

"A year ago, I just had to get out," said Mandlikova, who left the circuit for the last half of 1988. "I wasn't fit and I just wasn't enjoying myself."

The Czechoslovakian-born Mandlikova, who now calls Australia her home, passed the time by writing a book, entitled "Hana," about her East bloc upbringing, her life on the tour and her relationships, including a long association with former coach Betty Stove.

"I wanted to let the people know what is really behind me and clear up some misunderstandings," she said.

The nature of her personal relationship with Stove had been the subject of speculation for many years. Mandlikova said Stove was her coach and close friend, nothing more.

Scrapbook Tells Tale Of Black Sox Scandal

By Rick Scoppe
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

COLUMBIA, S.C. — The black scrapbook cover is worn and frayed along the edges. The newspapers inside are yellow and brittle. The words are faded but still readable. The tale they tell concerns perhaps the most infamous event in baseball history, the 1919 World Series.

That World Series is remembered as the one that was fixed by gamblers, but George Daubert has kept the scrapbook for another reason. His father, Jake, was an outstanding first baseman for the Cincinnati Reds, who beat the Chicago White Sox in the series.

Daubert, now 83, was a teen-ager in 1919 and recalls hearing his father, who was given the scrapbook in 1921 by a friend, talk about the series. The conversations more often than not focused on Shoeless Joe Jackson and Buck Weaver, two of the eight White Sox players banned from baseball for their part in what became known as the "Black Sox Scandal."

"We had a very close-knit group of friends, and they'd get talking about the World Series after this came out about 'em throwing games. ... My dad was adamant about Buck Weaver and Joe Jackson," Daubert said in a recent interview at his home. "He said they could never have thrown a game."

A jury agreed, finding all eight White Sox players innocent of trying to "defraud the public." But Commissioner Kenesaw Mountain Landis banned them from baseball for life.

Attention has been refocused on the 1919 World Series and Jackson with the movies, "Field of Dreams" and "Eight Men Out." Even the South Carolina Senate has gotten involved, passing a resolution June 19 calling on Commissioner A. Bartlett Giamatti to clear Jackson's name.

Daubert said he never heard his father waiver in support of Weaver and Jackson, a South Carolina native.

"He couldn't understand why Jackson and Weaver were banned from baseball, because their record in the World Series was such that it refuted everything that was said about throwing games," Daubert said. "They played their hearts out in that World Series, and the records show it."

Jackson hit .375 with a record-tying 12 hits for a series and did not make an error in left field. Weaver had 11 hits and hit .321 and made one error at third base.

Bonecrusher Wants Win To Earn Shot At Tyson

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

FAYETTEVILLE — Former World Boxing Association heavyweight champion James "Bonecrusher" Smith is hoping a victory in a match Sunday will put him in line for another shot at undisputed heavyweight champion Mike Tyson.

"I've been having crossroad fights for the last five years," said Smith, 19-7-1 with 14 knockouts. "I'll take it one fight at a time. I don't know if. I'll retire should I lose. I consider retirement after each fight."

Smith fights 23-year-old Donovan "Razor" Ruddock in a scheduled 10-round bout at Cumberland County Memorial Arena. Ruddock weighed in Saturday at 227 pounds, while Smith tipped the scales at 249 pounds.

The fight is scheduled to be televised live nationally by CBS at approximately 3 p.m. The telecast is subject to be blacked out within a 75-mile radius of Fayetteville. Undercard fights are scheduled to begin at 1:30.

Tickets are priced at $100, $50, $25 and $15, according to promoters.

"My sparring sessions have been good," said Ruddock, the Canadian heavyweight champion who has a 21-1-1 record with 15 knockouts. "I'm in the best shape I can possibly be. I have no prediction. I don't like to make predictions, but I didn't come here to lose."

The four-match undercard features 1988 U.S. Olympic team members Anthony Hembrick and Riddick Bowe. Hembrick, a former Fort Bragg boxer and Olympic team captain, puts his 3-0 professional record on the line against David Overton, 8-4, of Erie, Pa., in a scheduled six-round light heavyweight bout. Bowe, a silver medalist last summer in Seoul, Korea, is matched against heavyweight Antonio Whiteside of Lincolnton, N.C., in a scheduled six-rounder. Bowe is 3-0. Whiteside 1-1.

Other matches have unbeaten Billy Bridges, 14-0, of Charlotte, against Ralph Smiley, 15-13, of Ithaca, N.Y., and Richard Burton, 14-4, of New York, against Dwight Hunter, 10-6, of Baltimore in scheduled eight-round bouts in the 160-pound division.

Smith, a Lillington resident, won the WBA title Dec. 12, 1986, with a first-round knockout of Tim Witherspoon, but lost the title less than three months later in a 12-round unanimous decision to Tyson.

Hines Pitches Legion By Edenton

Fans 14 In 6-2 First Round Playoff Victory

By Woody Peele
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Maurice Hines struck out 14 batters and allowed only three hits as Pitt County's American Legion baseball team took a 6-2 victory over Edenton in the opening game of the first round of the Area One East playoffs Friday night.

The second game in the best-of-three series was to be played Saturday night at Edenton. A third game, if needed, would be played Sunday night at 8 p.m. at Harrington Field.

The winner of the series will advance to the second round against Rocky Mount. That series will start Tuesday night at Rocky Mount.

Hines, who had his shaky moments along with his good ones, gave up his first hit in the second inning, then one each in the sixth and seventh, both of the latter to David Perry.

Hines also walked six and went to a full count on a number of batters. He was also charged with two wild pitches, one of them playing a key role in the second Edenton run.

The first run came in the top of the first inning. Mark Raynor led off with a walk and Nash Long drew another. Stan White then grounded back to the mound and Hines threw to Chris Christopher to force Long at second. The relay to first for the double play, however, was off-target, and Raynor came on home on the error.

The other run came in the sixth. Derrick Rogers reached on a fielder's choice and raced all the way to third when Jeff Creef reached on a wild pitch on the third strike. Perry then singled to score Rogers.

"I thought Hines threw a good game," Pitt coach Grant Jarman said. "He threw a few too many pitches, but overall it was a good job. Fourteen strikeouts isn't bad although he did walk six. Then, too, we made four errors behind him that kept him going too. But certainly it was prettier than (Thursday night)." In that Thursday game, Pitt made nine errors as Snow Hill won the regular season title, 16-6, over Pitt.

"We were aggressive tonight on the bases," Jarman added. "We ran better than we have, and even though we got thrown out a couple of times, we were still aggressive. (David) Leisten hit the ball well. His (d)uble in the first got us back into the game and even though he didn't get another hit, he made good contact. John Bolen also did a good job with the bat (a two-run double). Even though we gave them too many outs, we did a good job of keeping the pressure on them offensively."

Edenton coach Lin Jordan said he felt Creef did a good job on the mound for his team and that Edenton played good defense behind him. "But you have to hit the ball somewhere to get runs," he said. "When you strike out that much, you're not getting hits and we had people strike out who usually hit the ball well for us."

Pitt rallied for the 1-0 deficit to take the lead in the bottom of the first, scoring twice. Leisten opened things with a double to center field. Christopher then followed with a single to left, scoring Leisten to tie it up. Christopher moved up on a wild pitch and took third when Jamie Brewington reached on an infield hit. Bolen then grounded out, driving in Christopher with the go-ahead run.

Two more Pitt runners crossed in the third. With one out, Hines beat out an infield hit and stole second, moving on to third when the ball was thrown away on the relay. Brewington walked and stole second, and both runners scored on Bolen's double to left center.

The final two crossed in the sixth. With one away, Heath Clark singled to center and stole second. Travis Clemons singled him to third and Clemons then stole up. An error on the relay scored Clark and Derrick Clark singled in Clemons to make it 6-2.

"Coming back with those two helped us keep the pressure on them after they had cut the lead to 4-2," Jarman pointed out.

Hines and Clemons each picked up two hits to lead the Pitt attack, which saw each of those who played get at least one hit.

Broadcaster Sticks By Rose

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CINCINNATI — Pete Rose says anyone who believes his Cincinnati players can aid an investigation of charges that he gambled on the Reds is "looking for trouble."

The Reds manager, facing a lifetime ban if the charges are proven, got the support of at least one player and the club's radio announcer this weekend in attempting to knock down testimony obtained by baseball investigators.

In testimony by Paul Janszen to baseball investigator John Dowd, Janszen alleged that Rose gambled on Reds games and further charged that several people with the Reds knew about it. Janszen has said he traveled with and placed bets for Rose.

"I spend more time than anybody with Pete Rose," Reds broadcaster Marty Brennaman told the Dayton Daily News, charging that if Dowd "left no stone unturned, how come I was never talked to?"

On Friday, Reds relief pitcher John Franco was linked to the investigation by reports that he introduced Rose to Michael Bertolini, a baseball memorabilia dealer who allegedly also helped Rose make bets. Bertolini and Franco went to the same Brooklyn high school, and Dowd's report to Commissioner A. Bartlett Giamatti says Franco knew of Rose's gambling habits.

Franco told the Dayton paper he met Bertolini once in a Brooklyn restaurant and, asked if Rose and Bertolini were close friends, said: "Could be."

"We all know Pete liked to gamble," Franco said, "but I don't know anything about him gambling on baseball."

Franco called Janszen's testimony laughable. Brennaman said it was true, as Janszen testified, that he knew of Rose's gambling, but "that might be one of the more truthful things Paul Janszen said."

"I have no indication, subtlely or openly, that Pete Rose bet on baseball," Brennaman said.

Rose said it was ridiculous to ask his players what he did off the field "because none of them know; they don't know anything about what I do away from the ballpark."

"I've heard lots of stuff in the last couple of weeks that's ridiculous, but I don't think it's funny," Rose told New York Newsday.

Rose and Giamatti, meanwhile, were set on a collision course in state court this week. Barring intervention by an appeals court, a state judge will hold a hearing in Cincinnati on whether to grant a preliminary injunction that would indefinitely extend Rose's protection against suspension or firing.

Giamatti is barred under a temporary restraining order from deciding Rose's case. He expects to testify when the hearing begins Thursday before Hamilton County Common Pleas Judge Norbert A. Nadel.

There's an outside chance that the Ohio Supreme Court would step in and nullify Nadel's restraining order. Deputy Commissioner Francis Vincent Jr. said baseball hasn't decided whether to appeal to the Supreme Court this week to try to block the Thursday hearing with Nadel.

"That is something that's being discussed," Vincent said.

An out-of-court settlement between Rose and baseball would make the hearing moot, but that possibility appeared remote.

Nadel granted Rose a 14-day temporary restraining order last Sunday that prevented Giamatti from holding a final hearing with Rose and from suspending the manager. Nadel decided that Giamatti had prejudged Rose's guilt.

Rose's lawyers indicated last week that they'd be open to considering any settlement proposal that would give them a victory on their main point — getting the case out of Giamatti's hands. That makes a settlement a longshot.

"The issue is Pete Rose, it's not Bart Giamatti," Vincent said. "We will not talk about or even negotiate about the process of deciding his case. We will discuss everything else."

Rose lawyer Robert Pitcairn Jr. has declined to talk about the chances of proposing a settlement. Vincent said no proposal has been made by Rose's lawyers, but baseball will listen if one is presented this week.

"I think it would be wrong of the commissioner not to listen to any proposal submitted to him, as long as the proposal was realistic," Vincent said. "The only issue that is not negotiable is that Mr. Giamatti step aside and have this issue resolved by someone else."

Gehrig Steps Down...

"Something was obviously wrong," Dickey would later recall. "He was falling down and muffing easy plays and had no power at the plate."

Concerned about his health, Gehrig had checked into the Mayo Clinic on June 13. A week later, a visibly shaken Barrow, with the first baseman at his side, stunned reporters by announcing, "Gentleman, we have bad news. Gehrig has infantile paralysis."

Gehrig was diagnosed as having just a minor case of ALS at the time, but his teammates would soon know better.

"They had been saying he'd be back," Dahlgren said. "He had let us know it was still his job and he was going to go back to first base. When Lou was out there, making his speech, McCarthy passed by and told me, 'Watch Lou, don't let him fall on the ground.'

"We knew he wouldn't be back."

"When the New York Giants, a team you would give your right arm to beat, and vice versa, send a gift — that's something. When the grounds keepers and office staff and writers and old-timers and players and concessionaires all remember you with trophies — that's something."

"When you have a wonderful mother-in-law, who takes sides with you in squabbles against your own daughter — that's something; when you have a father and mother who work all their lives so that you can have an education and build your body — it's a blessing.

"When you have a wife who has been a tower of strength, and shown more courage you know existed — that's the finest I know."

"You knew this was one of the memorable moments in the history of baseball," recalled Allen, who began broadcasting Yankees games that season. "You were in awe of it. Everyone was quiet and sad, shedding tears."

"So I close in saying that I have had a tough break; but I have an awful lot to live for."

As applause and tears filled the stadium, Babe Ruth approached Gehrig and threw his arms around his old teammate, ending years of animosity between the two great sluggers.

Gehrig continued to appear at home games for the rest of the season and in the fall was appointed by LaGuardia for a 10-year term on the municipal parole board.

By the end of his life, however, Gehrig was too weak to hold a pack of playing cards or even light a cigarette. When he died, New York City flags were flown at half-staff and thousands of fans paid their respects at the Christ Episcopal Church in Riverdale.

"Every once in a while, someone would chauffer him up to Yankee Stadium," Allen said. "I remember one time during the 1940 season. He had a hard time walking and you could hear him shuffle down the runway. When he hit the stairway to the dugout, the guys were so happy to see him, but they all had to run out on the field.

"I was suddenly left alone with him. He looked at me, patted me on the thigh, and said, 'Mel, I never listened to ballgames before because I was always playing. Listening to the games now, outside of my wife and family, that's about the only thing keeping me alive.'"

Fishing Picks Up Along Carolina Coast

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Fishing was picking up along the North Carolina coast, with some of the first catches of sheepshead and other summer fish reported recently, pier and marina operators said.

Hardin Crouch of Jolly Roger Pier in Topsail Island said no one fish was dominant, but all were biting fairly consistently.

"We're not getting a whole lot of any of them, but we're still having your mixed summer bag. There are fish here ... if you keep your hook in the water," he said.

Here's a look at how selected areas fared as reported Wednesday:

Hatteras

At Pelican's Roost, Dave Hissey was reporting a lot of activity.

"The offshore fishing has been real good — lots of dolphin, billfish and wahoo," he said. "Inshore, trollers for Spanish mackerel have been real good and back in the sound they're picking up some grey trout and some flounder.

Topsail Island

Crouch said the king mackerel were starting to pick up in his area.

"We're getting a few more kings, cobia and we've been having a few of the ... croakers, spots and whiting," he said. "We still have a few Spanish.

Crouch also reported catches of flounder and grey and speckled trout.

"What's been surprising to me is (how) long these grey trout and speckled trout are hanging along," he said.

Wrightsville Beach

At Crystal Pier, things were a little slow, said George Fokakis.

"They're getting a few in the morning and late in the evening, but no kings," he said. "They're getting a few Spanish and blues, few spots late at night and a few croakers."

Nags Head

Andy McCann of Nags Head Fishing Pier said offshore fishing was excellent, including a 433-pound blue marlin.

"The offshore boats are getting lots of dolphin," he said. "They're also getting white marlin, a few sailfish and some blue marlin."

Closer to shore, McCann reported catches of large sea bass, grouper, Spanish mackerel, flounder, small blues and spots and some "real nice flounder."

Off the piers, anglers are catching spots, croakers, Spanish and sea mullet. He also said the channel bass were hanging around longer than usual and reported catches of a 25-pounder and a 30-pounder.

"I expect a lot more king mackerel, Spanish and blues," McCann said.

Swansboro

At Dudley's Marina, John Dudley said he has seen as many fish in the last two weeks as he has in a long time.

"It's running good," he said. "They've caught a lot of dolphin offshore and still catching a lot of cobia inshore. The Spanish are still biting good.

Dudley also reported catches of flounder, croakers and sheepshead.

"The last two weeks ... they've been doing real good," he said. "I've seen it hold up like this all summer before."

Carolina Beach

"They're catching a lot of sheepshead, lot of croakers," he said. "They caught a nice king yesterday (Tuesday), weighed about 25 pounds."

She also reported catches of spots and croakers at night and flounder, cobia, blues and Spanish during the day.

American Heritage Trust Could Help All Outdoors

By Bill Schulz
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Millions of acres of priceless scenery and wildlife habitat could be acquired and preserved under a recreation funding bill now working its way through Congress.

The bill also provides money for baseball diamonds and tennis courts as well as to preserve pieces of America's past.

It would create an American Heritage Trust, a pool of money designed to yield $1 billion a year in interest. The interest will be used to finance the program.

"The big advantage is that it would give us a stable source of funding, which is something we haven't had over the last 15 years or so," said Don Hellmann, attorney for The Wilderness Society, which supports the plan.

"It's going to allow the federal government to acquire land now, at much reduced prices," Hellmann said. "Land prices keep escalating."

It also would allow the government to acquire choice parcels of land before they are sold for development.

Recommended by the President's Commission on Americans Outdoors in 1987, the trust would replace the Land and Water Conservation Fund as a source of money to fund outdoor recreation.

Both the trust and the fund would be financed primarily by fees paid by oil companies drilling off the United States' coasts. But while the fund allowed Congress to collect and appropriate those monies, the trust would hold them, invest them and use them to generate the interest, which then would be appropriated without ever depleting the trust.

While law allows appropriations of $900 million a year from the Land and Water Conservation fund, Congress has appropriated less than $300 million each year since 1980.

"It's a basic fact of life the Reagan Administration used those funds to reduce the deficit," Hellmann said.

The trust idea gets around that possibility because it would not need annual appropriations once it is fully funded. All that is needed is for Congress to decide how to spend the money.

Legislation approved by the House Interior Committee provides guidelines: 30 percent of each year's appropriation for federal land acquisition, 30 percent for state purposes and 10 percent for urban parks and recreation, with the rest left to the discretion of Congress.

So a single year's appropriation could go to buy condor habitat in California and to build tennis courts in Boston.

The trust, Hellmann said, "would provide guarantees to state and local governments they would have a source of funding for their projects."

The trust would be created by using the $6.6 billion that theoretically remains in the Land and Water Conservation Fund and add the $1.4 billion that remains in the Historic Preservation Fund.

"That's on paper. In actual dollars in the treasury, you're not going to find them," Hellmann said. The initial appropriation would be increased by the annual offshore oil royalties, plus money from sale of surplus federal property and some motorboat fuel taxes.

"I think honestly, they're (congressmen) talking about taking it to $25 billion," Hellmann said.

"The need for these funds is great," Hellmann said. The lands are available. Owners are ready to sell. "It's going to be a long time before we reach the point where there aren't going to be lands that are available for purchase from willing sellers."

Free Agency Not Road To Riches

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Big bucks and free agency.

Those words have gone together in a happy marriage since the days of Catfish Hunter.

Starting this week, however, about 100 college seniors and other NBA hopefuls are finding that free agency is not the road to riches.

For this first time Tuesday night, the NBA draft went only two rounds, giving 27 teams the bargaining rights to 54 players. Just five years ago, 230 players were drafted in 10 rounds.

Anyone not drafted Tuesday is free to sign with any team.

It was the dream of Larry Fleisher, the founder of the NBA Players Association who died two months ago, that the draft would be abolished and all college players could sign with any NBA team.

The best Fleisher could do in the 1988 collective bargaining agreement between NBA owners and players was to see the draft trimmed to three rounds last year and two rounds thereafter.

The compromise wasn't nearly the blow to owners that complete abolition would have been.

Imagine the bidding war if Patrick Ewing or Danny Manning came into the NBA as free agents.

But only three 1988 third-round picks were in the NBA at the end of last season — and third-rounders are the best that this year's rookie free agents would have been under the old system.

"With all the conversation about rookie free agents, reality has to set in," Jerry Colangelo, president of the Phoenix Suns, said. "History says that there won't be too much impact. Rookie free agents are just third-round picks."

Billy McKinney, director of player personnel for the Minnesota Timberwolves, agreed with Colangelo but said that rookie free agency is a great opportunity for an expansion team.

"We have a lot of spots available," said McKinney, who said the team contacted about 15 players in the first 24 hours after the draft. "But a guy who wasn't drafted doesn't have a lot of bargaining power. If he wants to shop around, that's his prerogative, but his spot in rookie camp might close up."

McKinney, who was drafted by Phoenix in the sixth round 12 years ago and went on to a moderately successful NBA career, said he used his experience as a player to map his free agent strategy.

"It was two days before they even called me," he said. "If I had been a rookie free agent then, I would have listened to anyone who sounded like they were interested in me. That's why we had a list a players we called immediately after the draft ended.

"A guy who expects to be drafted and wasn't is shocked. The first call he gets, he's happy someone wants him."

There was some belief among team executives that a rookie free agent is better off than players taken late in the second round.

"A rookie free agent can find a team that plays the kind of basketball suited to his skills," Seattle president Bob Whitsitt said. "If he's drafted late in the second round or not at all, it's hard to convince a player you're really interested."

Around The House

Dome Serves As Home For Mississippi Family

By James Daniels
THE HATTIESBURG AMERICAN

HATTIESBURG, Miss. — To passersby it looks like an Alaskan igloo or a giant UFO. But to the Alvin Dahmer family of the Glendale community near Hattiesburg, the dome is home.

"It's fun to watch the look on people's faces when they drive by and see our dome home," said Dahmer. "One time when we were in the yard, these two cars were driving along the road and wrecked, simply because our house caused them to take their eyes off the road. They plowed right into each other."

Dahmer's brother planted the idea of building a dome home during a conversation in the early 1980s. With the help of several unemployed carpenters, Dahmer completed the home from scratch in July 1988 after five years of construction.

"It really wasn't a big decision to build the dome home," said Dahmer. "I had seen a picture of a dome home which had withstood a horrible tornado in Texas while all the other homes had been destroyed. With all the bad weather South Mississippi has, I thought it would be a good idea to build a home like this."

From the road, only the house's 1,200-square-foot upper level can be seen, but underground lies another 2,000-square-foot level. Grass and earth constitute the downstairs walls, and the home's lighting is supplied by numerous skylights and other forms of solar energy. The incorporation of such natural elements make utility bills extremely cheap while requiring little maintenance, Dahmer said.

"Knowing you don't have to pay wasteful money to fight the heat in the summer is a good feeling," Dahmer said. "The earth allows for a natural cooling, so you don't have to run an air conditioner that much....There are no bricks to be washed and no painting to be done. It's really maintenance-free as far as the outside, except for the roof."

Dahmer said he plans to add a fireplace and a carport and complete the upstairs area.

Dahmer also has plans to include his house in a brochure which will feature dome homes and instruct people how to build them.

"I want to get an architect to make some plans (of the dome home) because I didn't have any plans to go by when I built it," said Dahmer. "I want to make a brochure just to inform people that a dome home is an efficient, durable home which a working man can afford."

Dahmer said that although he wasn't skeptical about moving into such a "space age" home, his wife, Katherine, needed some convincing and reassurance.

"She didn't want to move into it at first," he said. "She couldn't even imagine the idea. But I just stressed the amount of money we would save for upkeep and bills. Once she moved into it, she changed her mind completely. She loves it now."

The only thing Dahmer said he would have changed in his design would have been the bathroom, which he would have made larger. But he said that such a minor inconvenience doesn't affect his enthusiasm about living in the unique home.

"It's different, and that's why we like it," Dahmer said. "Added on to the benefits of the low utility bills, the uniqueness of living in a dome home has made it a fun experience. I think these homes are going to be very popular in the future. In the meantime, I just hope that I don't wake up to find that UFOs have landed in our yard mistaking our home as one of their own ships."

Keep Your Furnishings In A-1 Order

By Reader's Digest
FOR THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Your home's furnishings represent a sizable investment, so keeping them in top shape makes good sense.

These tips and hints will help you keep your leather, metal, marble, wicker and vinyl furnishings in good order.

Leather

— Clean leather chairs and sofas regularly. Remove wax buildup with a mixture of ¼-cup vinegar and ½-cup water. Wash the piece with saddle soap, available at hardware or shoe repair shops. Rub the leather briskly with a soft cloth to restore the shine.

— Don't store leather in damp places. To be doubly safe, use a suitable fungicide to inhibit mold.

Metal

— Use a polish designed especially for the type of metal that needs cleaning; otherwise, you risk damaging the finish. An old cotton sock makes an ideal polishing cloth. Use one side to apply polish, the other side to buff. Remove all traces of polish after an item has been cleaned since any residue will only hasten tarnishing.

— Outdoor brasses will stay bright if you apply a thin coat of paste wax after polishing them. For indoor brasses, use lemon oil. For a homemade polish that's excellent for slightly tarnished brass, make a paste of equal parts of salt, flour and vinegar by combining them in a small bowl. Rub the paste on the brass with a soft cloth. Salt is corrosive, so be sure to rinse the piece thoroughly before buffing it.

Marble

— Marble is easily stained and scarred. Protect table tops by placing coasters under drinking glasses and place mats under dishes. Protect dresser tops from cosmetics with plastic sheeting. Use throw rugs in heavy traffic areas to protect marble floors.

— Clean dirty marble with a damp sponge, then buff dry.

— For stubborn dirt, use dry borax and a damp cloth. Follow with a warm water rinse, then buff dry.

To remove grease and oil stains use a mixture of whiting powder and acetone. For food stains, mix hydrogen peroxide with a few drops of ammonia. Rust stains can usually be removed with liquid rust remover.

In each case apply the required solution to the stain, then cover it with plastic wrap and seal the perimeter with masking tape to keep the solution damp. Let peroxide and acetone solutions stand overnight, the rust solution, a few hours. Sponge off the mixture and buff the surface.

If the stain removal dulls the marble, wet the area, then sprinkle it with some marble polish (tin oxide). Rub vigorously with a thick cloth, then buff.

Wicker

Without adequate moisture, wicker furniture is apt to crack or split. Keep wicker well away from a fireplace, stove or radiator. If a piece becomes brittle, drench it with water. Bring wicker furniture indoors during freezing weather.

Vinyl

Because vinyl can be hardened by oil, avoid oil-base cleaners or polishes. Remove body oil from vinyl by washing it with a damp cloth sprinkled with baking soda or vinegar.

On The House

By ANDY LANG

From various sources come these bits of information of interest to the homeowner:

Even though the construction industry no longer was required to use hardwood flooring in newly built houses from the mid-'60s, more than 4.2 billion board feet of strip wood floors have been installed since that time.

Part of the reason for the continuing popularity of hardwood flooring was the fact that hi-tech urethane finishes and sealers changed the way of hardwood floor maintenance. Some consumers, however, have maintained their perception of past maintenance problems.

Gary Reynolds, president of BonaKemi USA, manufacturer of hardwood floor products, says homeowners who have their hardwood floors refinished make the mistake of not asking about the type of finish or treatment to be used. He suggests such questions as what products are being used, how long can the refinishing be expected to last, whether the job will save on the cost of long-term maintenance and whether some other product or treatment might save time and money in the future? Reynolds says new formulations make finishes odorless, smooth flowing and fast drying, making it possible to stain and finish a harwood floor in one day. These same finishes, he adds, are non-ambering, have better adhesion and are more resistant to wear.

An interesting result of a survey of home improvements conducted by Practical Homeowner magazine was the variance in the choice of people in different cities around the country.

For instance, while an interior facelift was rated first in Atlanta, Dallas, Cincinnati and Salt Lake City on the basis of how it might improve the value of a house, it was far down the list in some other cities. In Seattle, it ranked 10th on a list of 10 such home improvements. What ranked first in Seattle? The installation of skylights, not even mentioned on other lists. Exterior painting got the nod in Los Angeles, central air conditioning in Philadelphia and a swinging glass patio door in San Francisco.

Did you know you are not supposed to remove more than one-third of the surface during any one cutting with the lawn mower? This advice comes from Dr. James Watson, chief agronomist for Toro Co. He says cutting more than a third of the surface in any one cutting reduces its ability to "photosynthesize," the manufacture of food necessary for the growth process. Grass grows from its base, not its tip. Growing points are located at the crown, the surface between the roots and the leaf, rather than at the tips of the blade or stem. Watson says mowing does not harm the plant, as long as no more than one-third of the surface is removed.

The Household Products Disposal Council says aerosol containers should never be thrown into an incinerator or trash compactor. It also says all aerosol cans should be emptied before being put into the trash by depressing the button until no more of the product comes out. Products that go down the drain normally should be disposed of by pouring them down the drain with plenty of water, small amounts at a time.

Snips, most commonly used for cutting light sheet metal, should not be used to cut hardened wire or hardened metal of any kind. The Hand Tools Institute cautions that ignoring this practice damages the snips' cutting edge. In the case of hardened wire, the blade could be permanently damaged, leaving a ragged edge that will end its usefulness.

'B' Insects Cause Squash Problems

By Earl Aronson
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

There are three B's that cauae problems for squash — beetles, bugs and borers. But you may not encounter all of them in the same year.

According to an Extension entomologist at Michigan State University, the worst of the trio, and the most destructive in the garden, are spotted and striped cucumber beetles. They feed on every stage of the plant, from freshly germinated seeds, recently emerged plants and flowers, to leaves, stems and fruits. Severe damage can stunt a plant's growth. These pests also carry the organism that causes bacterial wilt.

Once a plant is infected, the entomologist says, it cannot be cured. For control, he recommends checking the beetles with applications of Sevin, malathion or methoxychlor.

Cucumber beetles overwinter as adults in pastures and woodlots. They feed on asters, goldenrod, willow, hawthorn and apple blossoms until cucumbers, squash or melons are available. Because they don't spend the winter in the garden, a cleanup of fall plant debris is not an effective means of control.

However, sanitation is effective in controlling the squash bug. The entomologist says that, the new adults fron one summer overwinter in garden debris and under boards near the garden. They lay eggs as plants start emerging. Adults and newly hatched young feed together on plants, sucking juices from their leaves and stems. At season's end, they'll even attack the fruit.

Adults are five-eighths of an inch long, ash gray in color and winged.

The scientist says that though squash bugs can be controlled with regular Sevin treatments, you can help by watching for and destroying egg masses in spring. They usually are found between the two main veins on the underside of a leaf. They resemble masses of potato beetle eggs but are yellow to brown, not bright orange.

To help trap squash bugs, place boards near plants at night. In the morning, lift the boards and destroy the bugs. Try burying a cake pan up to the rim in the soil, pour a little soapy water in the bottom and place a board over that. Bugs crawling under the board will fall into the pan and the slippery water makes it difficult for them to get out.

If you apply Sevin, avoid spraying when plants are in flower, advises the entomologist, because Sevin is toxic to honeybees, and cucurbits (squash) depend heavily on bees for pollination.

The other pest, the squash vine borer, is the larva of a clear-winged moth that resembles a wasp. It lays its eggs on the plant stems and the young bore inside, where they feed on the pith. Behind them, the stem runner wilts.

Generally, you find the borer feeding toward the tip of the stem from the wilted area. Once inside the plant, garden insecticides can't bother the borer.

Here's The Answer

By Andy Lang
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Q. — I plan to install resilient floor tiles on a wooden floor. I have tightened a few loose boards and otherwise prepared it for the tile, but after reading a couple of publications, I have decided to put down hardboard underlayment to serve as a base for the tiles. Are there any special nails that must be used for attaching the underlayment?

A. — When you buy the underlayment, ask the dealer to sell you the special coated nails that should be used for the attachment. These should be spaced about 6 inches apart. The sheets of underlayment should not be butted tightly against each other. Allow a tiny space between them — about 1-16th of an inch or so.

Q. — I expect to add an extra room to our house during the summer. I haven't decided yet whether to attempt it myself with the aid of my two sons or hire a contractor. Is it better to put the addition onto the house at the side or at the back?

A. — Most additions of that nature are at the rear, but you may have little choice on the matter. First see what the local regulations are and obtain the necessary permit. The regulations will tell you where the extra room can be added to the house and sometimes even the kind of materials that can be used. In such work, it is important to see the addition blends in with the rest of the house. If it doesn't, it will stand out conspicuously and might just as well be marked: "This is we something just tacked on."

Q. — Thinking about having our house altered to permit solar energy to take over. What is the method by which the heat is stored to be released when necessary?

A. — Not sure what you mean by "to take over." Solar energy is effective or partly effective according to the conditions that exist, among them where you live. Investigate everything in detail. Heat is stored by a number of methods. Among them is a storage unit that holds rocks or pebble beds.

(The techniques of using varnish, shellac, lacquer, bleach, stain, remover, etc., are detailed in Andy Lang's booklet, "Wood Finishing in the Home," which can be obtained by sending $1 and a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope to Know-How, P.O. Riverside Steak Bar Renovating

By Greg Laudick
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

A local steak restaurant located near Pitt County Memorial Hospital will undergo an interior renovation this week.

Riverside Steak Bar, 315 Stantonsburg Road, will be closed through Thursday to allow for construction work which will increase seating capacity by 16 people, said restaurant co-owner Billie Terrell.

"We plan to have a whole new look to the main dining room," Ms. Terrell said in an interview Friday. "The raised platforms in the main dining area on which several tables were located will be removed, allowing everyone to eat on the same level."

In addition to increased seating capacity, she said the renovation will include new paint, wallpaper, carpet, tables and light fixtures. Meanwhile, a new air-conditioning unit will be added to the lounge.

A key fixture of the restaurant which will remain, she said, is the large grill, situated in the center of the main dining area, where customers may prepare their own steaks.

Ms. Terrell said regular customers will also recognize other changes.

"We will be making some additions to the regular night menu," she said. "Starting July 10th, we will be offering baby-back ribs, shrimp that is fried, boiled or broiled, and a shrimp and steak combination."

In other changes, Ms. Terrell said the restaurant has closed for lunch.

Riverside Steak Bar has operated for 4½ years and employs 11 people.

Waste Dump Bidder Asks Legislators To Reconsider Bill

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — Lobbyists for the favored bidder on a $40 million waste facility have asked legislators to reconsider a bill, tentatively approved by the House, that would block the state from doing business with convicted felons.

Chem-Nuclear Services was named Thursday as the preferred contractor to build and run a disposal plant that is to open Jan. 1, 1993, at a site in North Carolina yet to be selected.

But the company said the bill on doing business with convicted felons is so rigid as to block plans for the plants, which would treat low-level nuclear waste from the Southeast as part of a regional agreement.

Also, lobbyists for Westinghouse Electric Corp. asked House members to delete a provision to require the seven other member states in the regional agreement to name a state by 1993 that will succeed North Carolina as a disposal site in the year 2013. The bill is scheduled for a final House vote Wednesday.

David G. Ebenhack, who is Chem-Nuclear's project manager for the contract, said that House Bill 1312, tentatively approved by the House on Friday, threatens plans for the plant.

"The way it is worded, no one could meet it — not even the state, because I'm sure that somewhere among the state's employees someone could be convicted of a felony," Ebenhack told the Winston-Salem Journal.

"Obviously, you want to have a good safe site, and Chem-Nuclear, on its own, could meet the requirements.

"But this bill is analogous to expecting to find a city of 30,000 people without one criminal."

He was referring to a section of the bill that could block the N.C. Low-Level Radioactive Waste Management Authority from awarding a contract if a contractor or one of its directors, employees or subsidiaries is convicted of a felony charge involving environmental law or contract law, such as bid-rigging or antitrust violations, in the past three years.

Rep. Judy F. Hunt, D-Watauga, the sponsor of that amendment, rejected the complaint. "Notice has been made that some of the legislature doesn't want criminals in this line of work," she said. "I don't think the public feels that's too much to ask."

Waste Management of California Inc. and two of its officials pleaded no contest June 16 to an antitrust felony charge in Los Angeles County Superior Court that resulted in a $1 million fine, records show.

Both that company and Chem-Nuclear are subsidiaries of Waste Management Inc. of Oak Brook, Ill.

A review of records Friday from Florida and Ohio revealed two more felony convictions of affiliated companies that appear to apply.

Court records show that Waste Management Inc. of Florida entered a guilty plea to a felony violation of the Sherman Act, a federal antitrust law, in January 1988 in Miami and was fined $1 million.

Another subsidiary of Waste Management Inc., Ohio Waste Systems Inc., pleaded guilty in October 1987 to a felony charge of price fixing and paid a $1 million fine in U.S. District Court in northern Ohio, records show. Ebenhack said Chem-Nuclear made a full disclosure to state officials months ago of all environmental violations assessed against the company or its affiliated businesses.

But Kathryn J. Cooper, a state attorney assigned to the authority, said there was no mention of the price-fixing violations.

"This is new information to us," she said. "We're checking into it to make sure that we know what the facts are."

A related issue developed as the Conservation Council of North Carolina and the Sierra Club asked legislators to require that the seven states that plan to dispose of low-level nuclear waste here be assessed fees and surcharges to help pay for the site.

"The state of North Carolina is the only state in the nation that is risking state tax dollars to finance a regional radioactive-waste-disposal facility," the groups wrote in a letter to Rep. David H. Diamont, D-Surry, the chairman of the House Appropriations Committee.

Diamont, a strong supporter of the pending legislation, said, "I think that's something that needs to be considered by the other side."

He said that his committee has questions about $17 million that the authority wants for the proposed site through June 1991. Tenney I. Deane Jr., the executive director of the authority, said all of the state's money would be recovered.

Ad Awards

Planters Bank has won awards for the nation's best bank advertising in two categories from the Bank Marketing Association.

Planter's won "1989 Best of TV" under $25,000 in commercial production costs, for a television commercial promoting the bank's Planters Prime Account. Planter's second award was "1989 Best of Print," direct mail, multistep mailing for banks under $1 billion in assets, for a series of postcards mailed to customers on various subjects.

The ads were produced by the bank's agency, West, Pausback and Vaughn Inc. of Durham.

Opening Ceremony

Gary Whitley, past president of the National Cosmetology Association, is the owner of the new salon.

Institute Attended

Participating were Frances Faust, executive secretary and staff manager; Gary Clay, manager of the Small Business Council, and Melba Green, office manager.

The Georgia Institute is one of seven annual, one-week sessions sponsored by the Center for Leadership Development, a division of the National Chamber Foundation.

The Institute curriculum included coursework in management philosophy, interpersonal processes, government, law and organization structure, as well as contemporary issues such as economic and environmental concerns.

Goal Completed

New East Bancorp of Raleigh has successfully completed its goal of raising the initial stock offering minimum of $15 million, said bank spokesperson Karen Lanham. The multibank holding company has a charter approved for several banks including the New East Bank of Greenville.

Ms. Lanham said the $15 million raised will enable New East Bancorp to fund its first bank charter, New East Bank of Goldsboro, a proposed full-service bank scheduled to open in August.

She said New East Bancorp has raised more start-up capital than any new bank venture in North Carolina and is continuing efforts to reach its maximum capitalization goal of $40 million in conjunction with its underwriter, Wheat First Securities.

She said New East Bancorp intends to file applications with the North Carolina State Banking Commision in July for charters in Wilmington and New Bern. These applications are scheduled to be decided upon by the commission in September.

Three Graduate

Three real estate professionals from Greenville recently graduated from the May session of the 42nd annual North Carolina Realtors Institute, co-sponsored by the North Carolina Real Estate Educational Foundation and UNC-Charlotte School of Business.

Graduating were Diane Barnes, Walter B. Gray and Edgar B. Wall Jr.

Those completing the course are entitled to use the designation GRI (graduate, Realtors Institute).

Degradable Bag

Rose's Discount Store at the Plaza mall recently began using degradable shopping bags, said Rose's spokesperson, Kay Lasater.

The new photodegradable bag is formulated from a special blend of resin that degrades in prolonged sunlight to help minimize litter, she said. The bag is made from a clear film and water-based ink, with no fillers or colorants, so it may be safely disposed of in a landfill.

Ms. Lasater said Roses expects to be using the new bag in all of its stores by the end of 1989.

Bank Promotion

NCNB National Bank has announced that James F. Buckman IV has been promoted to commercial banking manager in Washington, N.C.

Buckman, 37, joined NCNB in 1974 and has worked for the bank in Washington since 1982.

Death On The Pamlico

The Daily Reflector/Shannon Wolfe

Disease Striking River Brings Ills To Its Banks

By J. Ward Best
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

AURORA — Etles Henries Jr. doesn't have many answers.

Fish from the Pamlico River wash up to the docks behind Carolina Seafood, the business his father started. Some had rotted from floating in the water, some had large sores eating away at the flesh.

This year's shrimp catch is dismal. And now the blue crabs that used to be some of the best in the world come in with their shell eaten away at the end points or above the eyes.

The North Carolina Division of Marine Fisheries recently classified the Pamlico as "commercially dead." The seafood catch from the river can no longer support full-time commercial fishermen.

Henries knows that.

Henries says he doesn't know exactly what choked the life out of the river, killing its inhabitants. But he knows the river is dead.

And if the problems continue this summer, as state scientists and environmentalists predict, Henries says the area faces disaster.

Southern clam and oyster beds were closed when red dinoflagelant algae blooms moved up from the Gulf of Mexico, riding the Gulf Stream. When it died, the algae released toxins contaminating shellfish in the area.

The red tide drew national attention to water quality problems along the North Carolina coast, but other more serious and recurring problems have plagued the Pamlico River.

In 1982, fishermen began to notice open sores on some of their catch. Two years later, the state recognized a serious threat from the ulcerative micosis that caused the sores. Thousands of fish were dying. Nets were filled with diseased, pock-marked fish.

Research scientists at North Carolina State University now believe a fungal disease uncommon to the brackish waters near the mouth of the Pamlico causes the ulcerative micosis.

Then another disease, also unknown in the river, attacked the crabs.

In 1987, crabbers noticed a disease eating away the shell of the crab, exposing its entrails to the water. State researchers blamed a common bacteria for the disease, but can't explain why the crab's natural defenses can no longer fight it. Still, officials have approved the crabs for consumption.

Henries says he wouldn't eat them. He trucks crabs in from the Albemarle Sound and Neuse River to keep his pickers employed.

Henries says his fish house will survive even if the river dies completely. But he adds that he's not so sure about local fishermen and crabbers.

Almost 30 crabbers work out of Carolina Seafood, and Henries says few of them make enough to equal minimum wage. "I don't know what they're gonna do," he says. "Some of them'll go broke."

The fishing is so bad that Henries sends out only one of his three fishing trawlers. "There just isn't any fish out there," he says.

When Henries was a young man, he had plans to become a certified public accountant. He earned a degree in mathematics from North Carolina State University, but those years of education didn't change his love for the river.

Like Never Before

Etles Henries Jr., steering his boat along the Pamlico, above, says the future brings problems 'like you've never seen before,' thanks to disease like that striking the crabs he examines at left, and the algae he holds in his hand, above.

Recipients Never Expected To Need 'Gift Of Life'

By Sallie Whelan
PITT COUNTY MEMORIAL HOSPITAL

Chances are Donald Sharpe will never know the 68 people whose blood saved his life. He may not know their names, but he does know they gave him a special gift, and for that he is forever grateful.

At noon on Feb. 8, Sharpe left the Ahoskie Food Lion where he was employed. One minute he remembers driving toward home. When he awoke, he found himself in the trauma critical care unit at Pitt County Memorial Hospital with his family gathered at his bedside.

Sharpe, a diabetic, learned that his blood sugar had dropped quickly while he was driving, leaving him incoherent and semiconscious. His truck hit a curb and was flipped six feet into the air before landing in a heap of metal. During the two hours Sharpe was pinned in the truck, he lost great amounts of blood.

He was transported to the trauma center at Pitt Memorial by East Care. Surgeons had to amputate both Sharpe's legs which were too severely injured to be saved. He received 38 units of red cells, 14 units of platelets and 16 units of fresh frozen plasma. American Red Cross officials say donations from 68 people were needed to save Sharpe's life. Luckily, all the blood he needed was readily available at the hospital through the Tidewater Regional Blood Services of the American Red Cross.

"I had no idea blood was so important," Sharpe said from his room at the Regional Rehabilitation Center at Pitt Memorial. "But if it hadn't been for the blood those people donated, I wouldn't be here."

Sharpe's use of blood is not unusual. Each year, more than 4,800 Pitt Memorial patients receive a total of 24,600 units of blood and blood products. Depending on the severity of illness or injury, a patient may receive anywhere from one unit to hundreds of units.

Each pint of blood donated is separated into component parts such as whole blood used for replacement of severe blood loss, red cells for most patients requiring blood transfusion, white cells to help chemotherapy patients fight infection, and platelets for patients with leukemia and other blood disorders who are unable to produce this clotting factor in their own bodies to prevent hemorrhaging.

Another component is liquid plasma, which is processed into many different products such as serum albumin and plasma protein faction used to replace fluid loss in the emergency treatment of shock, immune serum globulin for patients who need specific antibodies to prevent infection, fresh frozen plasma which is used in the treatment of blood clotting abnormalities, and Factor VIII concentrate which is essential in the treatment of hemophilia.

A single donation may benefit several patients. And those patients represent all ages, backgrounds and illnesses.

Meet Virginia Oliver. The 63-year-old native and resident of Edenton was told in January that she had acute leukemia. Her physicians immediately started her on chemotherapy, and she went into remission is six weeks. Since January, Oliver has been admitted to Pitt Memorial five times for treatment. This week was her final visit. For the next six months, she will be able to receive follow-up shots at home.

During chemotherapy, leukemia patients must receive red blood cells and platelets to replace what the bodies cannot produce. During her treatment, Oliver received 13 units of packed cells and 73 units of platelets.

"I was glad the hospital had it readily available, said Oliver, who volunteers at the blood drives held in Edenton. "I was pleased to know there was a supply on hand." The number of blood donations needed to treat Oliver's leukemia: 86.

Gates County sisters Anne and Dawn Wynne were involved in a devastating automobile accident on April 15, just one week before Anne's senior prom. Dawn, 16, suffered a crushed shoulder, ruptured bladder, lacerated spleen, and a fractured pelvis and hip. Anne, 17, suffered a brain injury, fractures in her pelvis, neck and thigh, a collapsed lung, and spinal nerve damage.

Dawn was hospitalized for 13 days, while Anne was a patient for 40 days. Both are home recovering from their multiple injuries. While hospitalized, Dawn received 4 units of blood and Anne receive 17 units.

Their father, James, is a regular donor at the blood drives in their hometown of Eure. "I never gave it a second thought that I or my family would need blood," he said. Number of blood donations needed to save the lives of the Wynn sisters: 21.

When Michael Paul Suggs was born was born on April 7, he arrived three months too early and weighed only 1 pound, 5½ ounces. Today, young Michael weighs 3 pounds and 14 ounces and continues to thrive in the neonatal intensive care unit at Pitt Memorial. Doctors say he will probably be moved to the newborn nursery in several days.

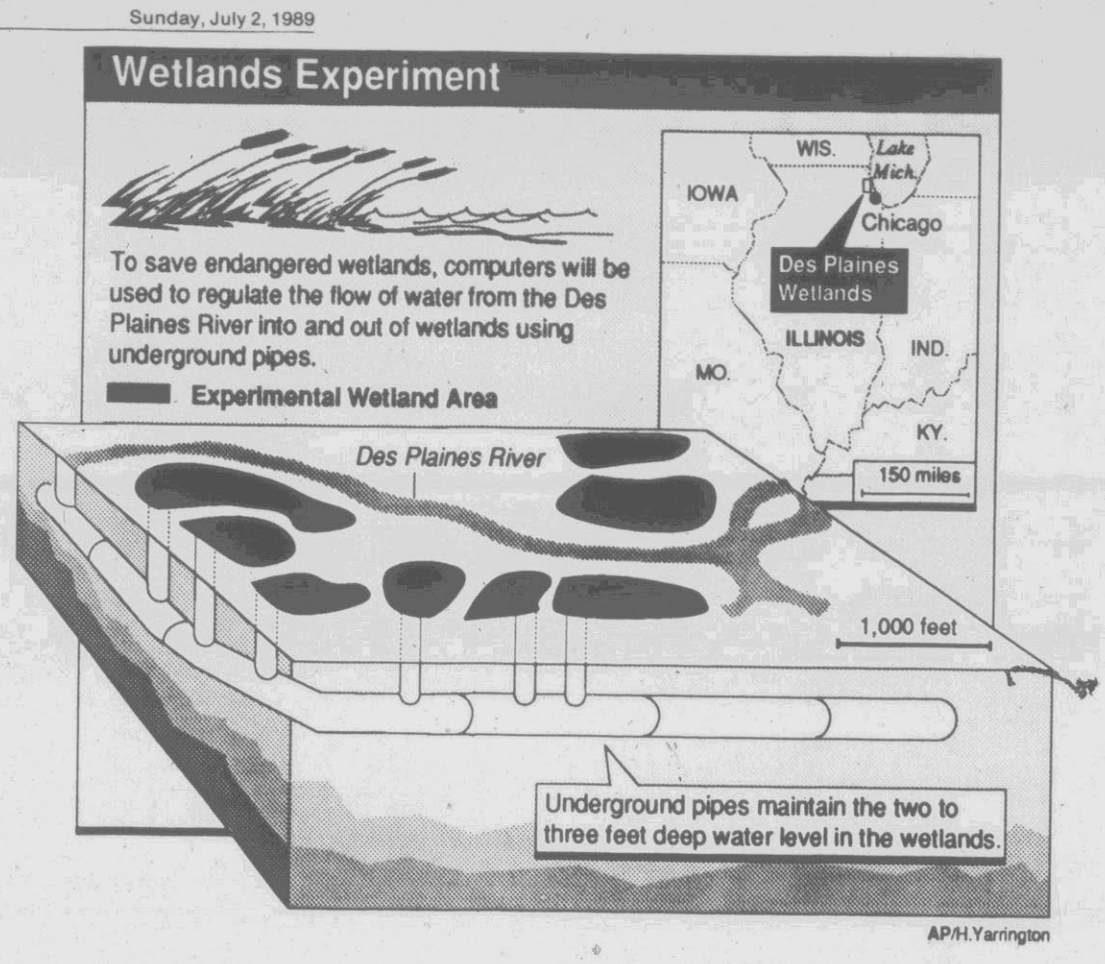
His parents are Mitchell and Wanda Suggs of Ayden, and his father is a regular donor in blood drives at Yale Materials Handling Corp. where he is employed. Like many other people, he never thought he would be on the receiving end. Young Michael has received 13 transfusions of blood. Five donations were needed to save the infant's life.

Donald Sharpe, Virginia Oliver, Dawn and Anne Wynn and Michael Suggs are all alive today because there was a readily available supply of blood. There are hundreds of others just like them whose lives were saved because blood was available. American Red Cross officials hope this will always be the case.

On Monday, a blood drive will be held at the Wahl-Coates School on Fifth Street from noon to 6 p.m. David Parsons, administrator of the Greenville office of the American Red Cross, says 275 pints need to be collected at this drive to meet the current demand.

Historically, there are fewer blood donations in the summer, but the need for blood increases. Parsons is encouraging first-time donors to come and those who routinely donate to give one additional time each year. Free hot dogs and drinks will be available.

Project To Aid Swamps, Marshes



By David Rocks
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WADSWORTH, Ill. — The prairie marshes, ponds and streams near this town just north of Chicago would look familiar to the Europeans who first settled northern Illinois 150 years ago.

But the wetlands today are being fed by a maze of underground pipes with the flow of water from the Des Plaines River regulated by a computer.

It's part of a $10-million project to help scientists better understand wetlands. Researchers worldwide are watching, because the work could become a model for similar projects to restore vital marshes and swamps.

"We're aiming for a natural prairie landscape, so when you look across it you will see what the early explorers would have seen," says Donald Hey, who heads the 450-acre Des Plaines River Wetlands Demonstration Project.

"Most of what we're doing is trying to compensate for the loss of landscape through the introduction of concrete and controls," says Hey, director of Wetlands Research Inc., a non-profit group funded by corporate and government grants.

Nationwide, more than half the 200 million acres of wetlands that existed when European settlers arrived on the continent have disappeared. They continue to be destroyed at an annual rate of 275,000 acres, or more than one-third the area of Rhode Island, according to figures compiled by the federal Fish and Wildlife Service.

Wetlands — marshes, swamps and bayous — can soak up flood waters and help improve water quality, many conservationists say.

"One of the key values of wetlands is they serve as a kind of a filter — some people might call it a kidney — within an aquatic system," says David Davis, director of the Environmental Protection Agency's wetlands protection program.

"We need to be finding ways to restore areas that have been degraded," Davis said in a telephone interview from Washington.

He said the Des Plaines project probably will be examined around the country as a model for other projects spurred by increased awareness of wetlands and their benefits.

The 3-mile stretch of the Des Plaines River, about an hour's drive north of Chicago's Loop, will in the next few years be restored to the kind of flora and fauna that inhabited the site before settlers drained it for farming in the 1850s.

Much of the vegetation that had overtaken the natural plants during the last century-and-a-half has been cleared. That has involved bulldozing the land so it more resembles its natural contour, and taking out many of the trees that settlers had planted.

"It was choked — it was overgrown with trees when we started," Hey says. "I've been amazed that there hasn't been more outcry over the cutting of the trees."

Where the project has been completed, the bullrush marshes are peppered with highlands of oak, making the site a textured patchwork of browns and greys. Since the beginning of the spring, it has begun to turn various shades of green and migratory birds have returned to roost.

Hey hopes to see more of the osprey, heron and bufflehead duck, as well as fox and beaver that have already begun to repopulate the area.

"It's amazing the change we've had in waterfowl," Hey says. "The more we open up the land, the more we'll see the waterfowl coming back."

The site looks like a nature preserve, but with numerous conduits, pumps and monitoring stations hooked up to an on-site computer, the project is also a laboratory for experimenting with various aspects of wetlands management.

"One of the things that is particularly interesting about the project is that it combines both wetlands restoration and applied research," says Davis of the EPA. "It's kind of a living laboratory."

Hey says the project will explore what water depths, soils and plant types are most effective in improving water quality, how long to retain the water, and what kinds of other elements are needed in the system.

So far, with only $5 million of the $10 million price tag for the project raised, Hey and his colleagues have built four experimental wetland areas. They can be filled to any depth, water can be retained for any length of time and then drained in various cycles.

"We're really trying to find out how to make wetlands work, how to restore them, how to keep them running," Hey says. "We really don't know which kinds of plants do the most in terms of water purification."

Plans ultimately call for another four experimental areas by the time construction is completed in early 1990, Hey says. Congress has authorized another $2.2 million for the project, but has not yet appropriated any of the money.

Scientists from many states have visited the site, and in March a group of wetlands researchers from China toured the project.

A documentary film and manual on wetlands restoration are also planned.

Lt. Col. Jess Franco, Chicago district coordinator for the Army Corps of Engineers, said the corps hoped to use much of the data from the project to restore other wetlands.

Scientists Tracking Iceberg Movements

NATIONAL GEOGRAPHIC

SUITLAND, Md. — States the size of Rhode Island and Delaware could easily fit on some of the monstrous icebergs adrift near Antarctica.

"We're currently tracking three bergs in the southern Weddell Sea that measure more than 2,070 square miles," says Franklin E. Kniskern of the Joint Ice Center operated by the Navy and the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration in this Washington suburb. "None of them currently poses a threat to the research vessels that visit the area."

The icebergs form just a small part of the frosty mosaics that the little-known center produces each week for a wide variety of users, including scientists, fishermen, ship captains and wildlife experts.

The center's main responsibility is to map and monitor the massive blanket of ice — most of it in the polar regions — that covers more than 20 million square miles of water. Ice conditions in the Great Lakes are also monitored.

"Two polar-orbiting satellites send back the images that provide the bulk of our data," Capt. Donald E. Hinsman, the center's director, told National Geographic. "Drifting buoys, ship reports, worldwide meteorological information and aerial reconnaissance flights supplement the satellite information."

Aerial reconnaissance flights are especially busy in the arctic each spring, when ships head for the North Slope of Alaska to resupply military installations. "The flights usually operate each spring through June, while the ice is breaking up, and then again in October and November, when the water starts refreezing," says Hinsman.

Trained observers on reconnaissance flights map the locations and concentrations of ice and try to gauge its age and thickness. The information is quickly relayed back to the center.

The information provided by the center is especially helpful to firms such as Ocean Routes, a California company that tries to advise ship captains on the safest and most economical way to their destinations.

"The seas around Antarctica would be a ghastly blank without the ice center's charts," says George Carlsgaard, Ocean Routes manager of Atlantic and Southern Hemisphere routings. "Without them we would have no idea of the extent of ice boundaries down there."

Fishermen in the Bering Sea between Alaska and the Soviet Union are concerned with ice boundaries, too. "They use our information to get as close to the edge of the sea ice as possible, because that's where the crabs concentrate," Kniskern says.

Plant Recycles Fuel Catalysts

BRAITHWAITE, La. (AP) — Making useful products from waste to reduce the need for landfill sites is a challenge for industry.

Waste materials such as the metal-based catalysts used to break crude oil into gasoline, heating and lubricating oil and jet fuel are a case in point. When they "wear out," they usually are desposited in landfills.

But, at a plant here, the metals in the catalyst, plus other coated-on metals that come from the oil itself, are extracted when the catalyst ends its working life. The products derived from this recycling process are resold for use by other industries.

River Faces A Variety Of Problems

But the river's diseases have hit him hard. "I don't enjoy it now. It's gotten to where it worries you."

State researchers and scientists continue to study the problems along the Tar and Pamlico rivers. The Division of Environmental Management has proposed classifying the rivers and surrounding land as nutrient sensitive and holding the line on pollution entering the waters.

But every official emphasizes that the problems are many and complex, and a solution is not in sight.

"We're losing traditional livelihoods that should have been allowed to continue forever," says David McNaught, executive director of the Pamlico Tar River Foundation.

Supported by volunteers, the nonprofit foundation works to protect the waters and provide a long-range management strategy to control pollution inflow into the Tar and Pamlico.

As McNaught points out, the problems of the river reach beyond Carolina Seafood, affecting everyone in the river basin.

"It's not that the fishes' death should make you suffer," McNaught says, "it's an indication that all is not right with the world, so to speak."

McNaught says the whole ecosystem of the river basin faces a spectrum of problems.

The most frequently cited problem is an overabundance of nutrients in the water. The nutrients feed algae which sap the oxygen from the system, smothering the fish.

A massive fish kill hit five tributaries near the mouth of the Pamlico last week. The state says a salt wedge pushed up from the sound, draining oxygen from the water. Algae booms may have compounded the problem.

Henries says he has never found algae floating in Bond Creek near his fish house, but a boat ride last Wednesday showed him something new. Besides the noted absence of fish jumping in the tributary, large clumps of blue-green algae floated by the boat.

"That's what killed your fish right there," Henries says, pointing out the algae. "It's not supposed to be here."

The area in Bond Creek where he is riding should be a nursery area to provide a safe haven for small fish. No nets or crab pots are allowed up in the creek.

Henries says the kills naturally occur in the river and its tributaries, but never so early in the season and not so severe.

"The thing that worries me is when you start seeing flounder," Henries says. "That's affecting your sport fisherman."

He also says the kills will affect other parts of the food chain, including the local supermarket. It costs more for him to truck in crabs for his pickers, and the cost is passed along. He also promises that other seafood prices will climb as long as the fish kills continue.

And he knows that the problems killing the fish may also smother the crabbers and fishermen. But he doesn't have much faith about a solution.

"I don't think anything's gonna be done about it until someone wants somethin' done about it," Henries says.

Domino's Pizza King Raises The Ire Of Islanders

By Paige St. John
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

DRUMMOND ISLAND, Mich. — The way things have been going since the arrival of Tom Monaghan, it was no surprise what happened to his turkeys.

When Monaghan set up his spread two years ago in a decaying retreat on this blue-collar fishing island on Lake Huron, he let the tame farm birds run loose.

It was just going to be a vacation home, Monaghan said. But in two years, he apparently changed his mind and what he has done to the island instead has so angered many of the islanders that one night somebody wrung those turkeys' necks.

Monaghan, king of Domino's Pizza, Inc., and entrepreneur extraordinaire, has converted his Domino's Lodge into a corporate retreat, built Frank Lloyd Wright copy homes for himself and his top executives, cleared the woods to make room for an 18-hole golf course, added a pond and a sewer plant and started building cabins.

He and his associated landholding companies have bought more than 1,700 acres of Drummond Island, excluding two auxiliary islands and other parcels snapped up around the island by land speculators doing business with Monaghan.

Monaghan talked of plans for more — condominiums, marinas, lodges, banks and golf courses. While he pledged his support for conservation by stopping his bulldozers from knocking down a tree with nesting woodpeckers, his workers filled in wetlands.

Island tempers boiled over. The neck-wringing was one more unpleasant reminder that some Drummond Islanders would just as soon see Tom Monaghan pack up his world-class resort plans and take his jobs elsewhere.

That doesn't faze Monaghan, an orphan from northern Michigan who built a pizza empire on a 30-minute delivery guarantee and also owns the Detroit Tigers baseball team.

The harbor dredging is on hold and Domino's island bank has been canned, but Monaghan has kept right on building and buying. Tame rabbits now wander among the shady cedar groves at Domino's Lodge.

Unannounced, Monaghan popped in on the back-to-back Drummond Island Township board and Chamber of Commerce meeting this spring and told islanders what's what.

"For good or bad, things can't go back the way they were," Monaghan said. "Even if we tore Domino's Lodge to the ground and left, Drummond Island would never be the same...It will prosper with or without us."

Monaghan went on:

Island residents can jump on board the boom and build their own motels and restaurants and lodges. Or they can sit by and watch outsiders do the same, he said.

"It's up to the little business to think a little bigger, not just sit back and complain about everybody else," Monaghan said.

He is right, Drummond Island never will be the same, said township supervisor, tax assessor and schoolteacher Frank Sasso.

The change is a shock for the modest island folk who measure their day around the mainland ferry schedule and whose idea of progress was marked recently with the erection of Drummond Island's first four-way stop sign.

"Tom doesn't mean harm," Sasso said. "He just sees potential and we see a place to live."

Before Tom Monaghan, Drummond Island was known mostly as a place for perch, bear and bobcat. The state owns 52 percent of the 9-mile-long island. Its winter population hovers around 700, many of them summer vacationers who stayed on in retirement.

Island economy was built on the back of a limestone gravel pit, but its owners laid off and sold out. Today, Drummond lives mostly off the spending of the sport fishing trade. Cabin rentals are the going thing.

Sasso said he expects the island to be invaded by a new class of people, the walk-and-shop tourist.

"For islanders, it's not what they came here to live for. A lot of people here work for a lot less money than they can get elsewhere just so they can live here," said Sasso, stabbing the table with his finger.

Nobody on Drummond Island is sure how far Monaghan wants to build or how much more land he wants to acquire. The pizza king talks loosely of plans to expand the lodge to 40 rooms, build another lodge and add 40 units around the golf course.

In other talks, he also has mentioned a commercial motel, recreation center, miniature golf course, condominiums and another marina, a mini-car museum, a mail-order trading post and a chapel retreat with 160 bedrooms.

A filing by Domino's Lodge Inc. with the Chippewa County Register of Deeds details a 36-condominium project with the potential for 236 units. The site plan includes such features as Pepperoni Pond and Anchovy Alley.

Domino's community relations director Dick Brunvand said he doesn't know Monaghan's concrete intentions.

"I don't think there are specific plans," he said. "A lot of the talk is speculative."

Domino's continuing quest for island land is an attempt to preserve a woodland buffer around Monaghan's property, Brunvand said.

Monaghan was rebuked once by Michigan's Department of Natural Resources when he tried to trade non-island land for 1,440 acres of state forest next to his golf course.

Domino's Lodge staff and DNR field agents said they expect Monaghan to try again, this time offering island land.

The DNR's interest in protecting the Maxton Plains, a rare bedrock-level plant community on Drummond, is common knowledge, said DNR agent Pat Hallfrisch in Newberry.

"I've heard Mr. Monaghan was purchasing up there," Hallfrisch said. "My assumption is that when he's got enough, he'll be ready to trade again."

"It's possible," said Joe Viilo, an islander who works for Monaghan as head of operations at Domino's Lodge.

No longer a personal retreat, Domino's Lodge is a full-scale business venture that not even Domino's can afford to keep empty.

Wildflowers Can Make Knockout Centerpiece

BETTER HOMES AND GARDENS

Florist's vials and foam can turn any container into a vase.

To create a wildflower bouquet:

— Select wildflowers such as Queen-Anne's lace and wild aster; supplement with phlox and stock from the garden, or use any flowers of the same color.

— Trim all blooms to 8-inch lengths.

— Add water to the vials frequently to keep the flowers fresh.

All forms of roses in a bright spectrum of colors set the scene for an extra-special summer dinner. To create a sweet-smelling blaze to delight the senses, follow these steps for a floribunda rose bouquet:

— Line a hatbox with a watertight container.

Couple Should Read Together

Dear Abby

Abigail Van Buren

Dear Abby: So you've joined the ranks of the "know-nothings," the fanatically anti-intellectual nerds who think it's peculiar to read!

Your answer to "Lonely in San Diego" was a sin and a shame. A man who's worked all his life retires, and at long last he has a chance to catch up on his reading, and you find that abnormal. If his wife had complained that he was a couch potato, watching television all day, you'd have found it normal in our society. But reading! How queer can you get?

Your advice to "Lonely" should have been this: "Your husband has latched on to a good deal. If more people spent their time reading, there would be fewer ax murders disrupting the family scene. Try it. When your husband opens a book, open one of your own. You'd be surprised what congeniality can be established by two intelligent people doing their intelligent thing together."

Dear Richard: "Lonely" wrote to say that her husband is a "readaholic — the only time he isn't reading is when he's sleeping, driving the car or in the shower. He doesn't communicate ... at all; he's too busy reading."

Richard, this wife is lonely because her husband has shut her out of his life — he's hiding behind anything handy to read. And you advise her to open a book of her own — which would create total non-communication. I stand by my answer.

Dear Abby: Your advice to "Michael's Girlfriend" was bad news. (Michael was a girl-watcher, and he looked at pretty girls even when he was with her, which upset her. You told her she was wise to have second thoughts about marrying him.)

C'mon, Abby. All men like to look, but some are more sneaky about it than others.

Fifty years ago, my childhood sweetheart was a girl-watcher. I used to get jealous and complain because it really bothered me. Well, he told me I had better get used to it because as long as he lives, he is going to look.

Well, that was the truth, because we have been married for 48 years, and he still turns his head when he sees a pretty girl. I have gotten used to it, and if he should happen to miss one, I'll point her out to him.

Now it doesn't bother me in the slightest because he's a looker, not a toucher. — Still In Love In Fountain Valley, Calif.

Dear Still In Love: Congratulations. It's a case of mind over matter — if you don't mind, it doesn't matter.

I agree, a little subtle looking is not a major crime, as long as the saliva doesn't run down his chin.

Dear Abby: A neighbor of mine is tring to quit smoking. She's tried everything, but nothing worked for her, so she's now chewing tobacco instead. (I am not making this up, Abby.) She claims a lot of women chew tobacco, but nobody knows it. I can tell when she's got a plug of tobacco in her mouth and it looks terrible.

It's bad enough to see a man chewing tobacco, but a woman chewing tobacco is the pits. I have hinted that it looks terrible, but the poor soul must crave tobacco so bad she just has to have it.

Will you ask your readers to pray for her? — A Friend

Dear Friend: An entire nation could pray for her, but the Lord needs her cooperation. A bad habit never disappears miraculously; it's an "undo-it-yourself" project. And, by the way, ask your friend if she's aware that chewing tobacco has been known to cause cancer.

If you would like to write to Abby, send your letter to Abigail Van Buren, P.O. Box 69440, Los Angeles, CA. 90069. For a personal, non-published reply, enclose a self-addressed stamped envelope.

First Lady Barbara Bush Enjoys Decorative Handstitched Accessories

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

With Barbara Bush in the White House, interest in handstitched home accessories is on the upswing, says Kay Cook, executive director of The National Needlework Association.

The first lady, a devoted needlecrafter, took nine years to complete the 10- by 14-foot needlepoint rug that is now in the family sitting room at the White House. While under construction, sections of the rug, in basketweave on No. 10 canvas, accompanied the Bushes to 17 countries and 36 states. The design includes personal data, such as grandchildren's initials and important family dates.

Barbara Bush, a skilled needleworker, says she undertook the lengthy project because "I wanted something that I wouldn't outgrow. Something I would have forever."

Between photo sessions, Tiegs is needlepointing a mirror frame. She says the personal aspect of the hobby is one of its most appealing attributes. Indeed, she stitches her initials and the completion date into each piece for an "extra personal touch."

White, one of television's Golden Girls, works on needlepoint on the set and in spare moments at home. She is most proud of two rugs she has completed, one with songbirds and another with seashells.

Needlepoint will soon be in the governor's mansion in Cheyenne, Wyo. Jane Sullivan, wife of the governor, is having 24 chair seats in the formal dining room covered with needlepoint designs of Wyoming wildflowers.

Cook estimates that in the past five years needlecraft shops have increased to 60 percent from 40 percent the amount of space devoted to needlepoint, cross-stitch and crewelwork supplies. These are the materials used to create pillows, wall decorations, fireplace screens, footstool covers, chair seats and rugs.

Another indication of increased interest: ready-made accessories are being snapped up by consumers who want the look without the work.

Her fingertip veil of illusion was edged in chantilly lace and attached to a cap overlaid in matching lace. Techniques Can Rule Out Back Surgery

LADIES' HOME JOURNAL

When Elizabeth Taylor was 12, she fell off a horse during the filming of "National Velvet." That was her first experience with the aching and undependable back that has plagued her ever since.

In her 20s, Taylor also developed sciatica. Eventually, she had two back operations but surgery didn't permanently ease her pain.

Taylor is not alone. A recent article in Ladies' Home Journal notes that estimated 80 percent of Americans experience low back pain at some point in their lives. Thanks to a number of recent advances, however, they may no longer be forced to endure chronic pain.

Any patient who is told she needs back surgery should get a second opinion, according to Dr. Fred Brown, director of the spinal and chronic back-pain clinic at the University of Chicago. In fact, more and more doctors are suggesting other options before recommending surgery.

First, they may pinpoint the causes of back stress. New imaging techniques, including magnetic resonance imaging (MRI) and computerized axial tomography (CAT scan), can rule out diseases and disorders of the kidneys, uterus, ovaries, bowel or blood vessels, which can contribute to back pain. Doctors may also analyze a patient's daily activities, such as improper lifting techniques, poor posture, foot problems and curvature of the spine.

In the past, back therapy has often included highly addictive painkillers such as Percocet and Percodan, or muscle-relaxing tranquilizers such as Valium. Today, more and more doctors are relying on anti-inflammatory drugs like aspirin and ibuprofen, which ease swelling and pain. They also use mild muscle relaxants such as carisoprodol and cyclobenzatrin, which stop pain-producing spasms. Acute pain is also relieved with heat, ice packs and massage.

Along with changing their approach to drugs, back specialists are altering their views on physical activity. Today, exercise is the centerpiece of most back-rehabilitation programs. Walking, swimming and water aerobics are recommended, as are stretching, toning and strengthening. In addition to exercising daily, every patient should wear comfortable, sturdy shoes (not high heels), sleep on a firm mattress and sit in a chair that supports the back.

BETSY DRAKE LEWIS' DECORATING TIPS
A WONDERFUL PIECE OF FURNITURE THAT CAN SURPRISE EVERYBODY
In today's furniture world, one of the best designed and most useful pieces of furniture--that's full of surprises--is the sofa sleeper, for several basic reasons.
First of all, when you look at today's sofa sleepers by day, you can't tell they're also a comfortable bed...and, when you sleep on them, you can't imagine they're also a beautiful sofa.
In the old days, you could almost always tell a sofa sleeper from a regular sofa or love seat, but the way they're made now, you really can't. Today's sofa sleepers function so well as BOTH sofas and sleepers, everybody's surprised when you see them and use them both ways.
THEY MAKE GREAT BUYS BECAUSE YOU'RE REALLY GETTING TWO PIECES IN ONE, AND THEY GO SO FAR IN SOLVING SO MANY FURNISHING PROBLEMS.
You can use sofa sleepers in combination as love seats with other sofas and chairs, or by themselves in a living room, den or guest room.
If you haven't seen the new sofa sleepers in person and in action, please accept our invitation to come in and see for yourself. You'll be in for a surprise--and a delightful, practical way to furnish.

Major Battles Soon Fade

At Wits End
Erma Bombeck

It was one of those neat stories that make you smile. A California couple was celebrating 80 years of marriage — not long enough to make the Guinness Book of World Records, but long enough to make it important.

Eighty years, and they are still chewing around about why he was late for the wedding. The husband, who is 101, says he paused briefly after getting the marriage license to see a jailed ax murderer, and his wife, 97, contends he stayed to watch the hanging.

Marriages, the good ones, are like that. You forgive, but you don't forget. It's rarely the big things that do in a union; it's the little things, such as a mosquito in the bedroom that he sleeps through and she can't ... or the time he laughed when the dog wouldn't eat her leftover meat loaf and she didn't.

Whenever my husband accuses me of not knowing anything about anything, I like to remind him of the slotted spoon incident. Since we both work, he has loaded the dishwasher for the last six years. Only he washes the dishes in the sink first. Then he puts them in the dishwasher. This makes me crazy. If a dishwasher is what its name implies, then it should wash the dishes without any help from him.

One night I couldn't stand it. I grabbed all the dirty silverware and jammed it in the dishwasher. He retrieved a slotted spoon that had batter dried on it and said, "This will never get clean in the dishwasher. It will only bake it on forever." I said he was being stubborn and challenged him to try it.

The next morning, I feverishly sifted through the silverware. The slotted spoon was gone. It was three weeks before he admitted that it had come out sparkling. I had won a major victory, and he knew it!

The valet parking battle stands out in my mind because it was major. We were invited to dinner with the late Arthur Godfrey and were late because the world would have come to an end if my husband had turned off the TV set before Dan Rather said good night. As we screeched into the hotel grounds, I said, "Let's go for the valet parking to save time." My husband said, "Nonsense, it won't hurt us to walk a few feet." As I hobbled from the delivery dock around the hotel, I got angrier and angrier.

We tore across the dining room, and Arthur, always the gracious host, stood up and smiled, "And here is the happiest married couple I know." I said, "He's so great! You sit next to him."

Every married couple has its moments of the "worst joke," the "longest night," the "last straw" — that one incident when two hearts stop beating as one and accelerate to the point where they explode.

I suppose in time, such moments fade. Like the time my mother-in-law wore a navy blue dress to our wedding 40 years ago. I've almost forgotten it.

Tiffany Show Opens In Fall

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — An exhibition of rare examples of Louis Comfort Tiffany works is scheduled to open in September at the National Museum of American Art in Washington.

On show will be 65 items — windows, lamps, glassware, jewlery, bronzes, enamels, ceramics, mosaics, wooden objects and paintings. Many of them have not been exhibited or published before — none of the windows — and this will probably constitute the most important presentation of Tiffany's work in the nearly 100 years since his first successes.

Curators say Tiffany's reputation as an artist has often been overlooked by his fame as owner of the Tiffany Studios, which mass-produced domestic items for 50 years.

"The aim of this exhibition is to show him as an original artist, through the best of his work as glassmaker, naturalist and colorist," said Alastair Duncan, guest consultant who was in New York to promote the exhibition.

Little Has Changed In The Channels Island Of Sark

EDITOR'S NOTE — Not much has changed on the island of Sark in the past several centuries, except for the Nazi occupation during World War II, and that suits the islanders just fine. They don't turn tourists away, but they don't court them either. And the island's leaders pride themselves more on what they don't do rather than what they do.

By Marcus Eliason
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SARK, Channel Islands — Trapped in a time warp between England and France, the tiny island of Sark clings to its feudal ways, resolutely shunning such 20th-century delights as cars, planes and income tax.

With high cliffs set in a fickle sea, and a perplexing constitutional setup to keep the foreigners guessing, Sark remains what the Victorian poet Algernon Charles Swinburne called a "small, sweet world of wave-encompassed wonder."

Its 560 people are ruled by a "seigneur" whose privileges include the sole right to keep pigeons and female dogs, and a parliament with 40 hereditary members and 12 elected deputies.

Land on the 4-square-mile island cannot be sold without the seigneur's permission, and every real estate deal nets him a 7.5 percent commission. And if he wished, he could sell the whole island to a new seigneur, subject to royal permission.

Sark is part of the Channel Island archipelago in the English Channel, which makes it British but not part of the United Kingdom. So while London takes care of such trivia as defense and foreign affairs, Sark's parliament wrestles with the major issues, like whether to reroute horse-and-carriage traffic to keep horse droppings off the main street.

There are no paved roads, drugs, sex crimes or pollution.

Sark's sovereign is Queen Elizabeth II, but in her capacity as Duke (not Duchess) of Normandy. It's an anachronism which, like Sark's French place names, attests to the ebb and flow of French and English conquest over the centuries.

Spring sunshine is already brightening the cliffs of Sark as the morning boat from Guernsey finishes its bumpy 7-mile voyage and jostles gently into place against the limpet-encrusted jetty.

Islanders and early-season tourists disembark and wobble up the stone stairs. Some clamber aboard a tractor-towed wagon for a one-minute journey into "town." A lady carrying a potted plant is carried grandly away in a horse-drawn carriage. A few brave souls prefer the footpath up the savagely steep hill, walking through carpets of blue wildflowers.

A short ride by rented bicycle down The Avenue, Sark's main street, leads past the island's one pay phone and mailbox to the Seigneurie, the gardened mansion where 61-year-old Michael Beaumont exerts benign lordship over Sark.

Beaumont inherited the title from his grandmother, the redoubtable Dame Sybil Hathaway who ruled Sark for 47 years and became world-renowned as the woman who kept the 20th century at bay.

She it was who fended off every bureaucrat, mainland or local, who tried to tamper with Sark's ways. It was, she wrote, "a battle for existence" against "men who can take off for the moon but cannot be reasonable and leave people in peace in this world..."

She refused to flee when the Wehrmacht overran Sark, and when World War II was over the captured German occupiers were made to fix the roads their tanks and trucks had damaged.

In 1969 she threatened to abdicate rather than let Chief Pleas, the island parliament, change the law banning cars.

When she died in 1974 at age 90, many wondered whether Sark would finally emerge from its time capsule. But Beaumont has faithfully guarded his grandmother's legacy.

The seigneurship was quite a career change. He was an engineer working on guided missiles in Bristol when, as eldest son of the dame's eldest son, he inherited Sark.

He's an affable, soft-spoken man of 61 who prefers open-necked shirts and believes in hands-off government. "A lot of the power of the seigneur," he says, "is in his ability NOT to do things, rather than to do things."

Does Sark have any problems? He can't think of any serious ones.

Does the island want more tourists? "Well, we don't want to go down-market just to attract people, great leisure camps or Disneylands, anything of that sort."

Nor will there be an airport. Concorde's occasional sonic booms are bad enough. The ban on cars holds firm, and the only motorized vehicle permitted is the tractor. There are 61 on the island, plus 73 horses and 1,102 bicycles. The dame got about in an electric wheelchair when arthritis afflicted her, but it took special legislation in Chief Pleas to make that possible.

Sark was a wild, pirate-infested place until 1565, when a Jerseyman named Helier de Carteret set out to clean it up. He parceled out the land to 40 farmers, giving each a piece of cliff to guard.

Sark passed down by sale or inheritance until a 19th-century seigneur mortgaged it to Dame Sybil's great-grandmother, Marie Collings, to finance a silver-mining venture on the island. He went broke, Mrs. Collings foreclosed, and the present seigneurial dynasty began.

Many of the seigneurial rights have since fallen away. The seigneur's veto over legislation, once absolute, is now limited to 21 days. He still gets his cut, or treizieme, on land sales, but has had to make ends meet by converting part of the seigneurie into vacation cottages for rent.

No longer does each farmer have to render a chicken a year to the seigneur. He'll settle for 85 cents instead.

The seigneur is still entitled to all flotsam and jetsam on Sark's coast, but nothing of value ever turns up. "A few years back an awful lot of wood arrived on the island," Beaumont recalls, "and they did phone me up and ask me if I wanted it." He didn't.

Queen Elizabeth I's charter required the seigneur to pay her an annual rent totaling "one-twentieth part of a knight's fee." It didn't, however, foresee inflation. So the check Beaumont mails to Buckingham Palace every Michaelmas Day is for just $3.04.

Sark has never had income tax. Welfare, schooling and basic utilities are financed by the dame's charities, a $1 landing toll on each of its annual 80,000 visitors, and an annual capital tax.

Its collection is thoroughly informal. Each householder declares his wealth to the douzaine, or 12-member finance committee of Chief Pleas, which takes up to 10 percent. No audits are needed, the Sarkees say, because everyone knows everyone else's worth.

With excise duties non-existent, cigarettes and liquor cost half the mainland price.

The Channel Islands have become prosperous tax havens. But Sark, accessible only by small boat, is unattractive to tax exiles, and anyway, says Beaumont, "I don't think Sark needs any more people, and we're not looking for investment."

Things are quiet on Sark these days. The last serious crime was in 1987, when a tire-slashing war broke out between two rival bike-rental firms.

So with the court idle and Chief Pleas in recess, the greffier, or town clerk, is spending his days transcribing the minutes of Chief Pleas from centuries past.

He copies the handsome, flowery handwriting onto the backs of old calendars, and it will then be typed into a computer by his son Trevor for posterity. He started at 1675 and four years later he is up to 1928.

The greffier, John Hamon, doubles as Sark's blacksmith. He's 64, speaks Gallic-tinged English and can converse in the island's dying Norman-French patois. And what does he learn from the minutes of Chief Pleas past?

"That as things change, you adapt," he says. "You only have to look back a few hundred years at the minutes of Chief Pleas to see that everything that happens today has happened before. So we manage very well indeed and long may it stay that way."

Hosts Needed

More than 200 French, German and Spanish teenagers are due to arrive in North Carolina soon.

Some have been assigned to sponsor homes, but there remains a need for 14 homes in the Greenville area for students scheduled to be in this locale for a month-long visit.

The students, traveling under the auspices of Nacel Cultural Exchanges, are fully insured, have their own spending mony and have a minimum of four years studying English. Families need not have teenagers to apply as a host for a visting student.

The students will arrive July 16 and remain until August 13.

Coordinators for the cultural exchange program in this area are Frederic and Mary Jo Fladenmuller, who are also state coordinators. Frederic Fladenmuller is a French professor at East Carolina University.

Any family interested in hosting or wishing further information is to call 355-3114 or 1-800-533-6998.

Indochina Is Making Overtures To Lure More Tourist Visitors

By Denis D. Gray
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

HANOI, Vietnam — Vietnam, Cambodia and Laos are beckoning foreign tourists to their temples, beaches and battlefields in hopes of accumulating dollars and other hard currencies to strengthen their ailing economies.

Recent reforms have greatly loosened travel to and within the three communist-governed nations, long sealed off by wars and suspicious officialdom.

Some U.S. war veterans have returned to Vietnam in recent years to visit battlefields where they fought the Viet Cong and North Vietnamese, and Vietnam would like to see more of the 2.7 million who served return. But U.S. sanctions might prevent that.

West Europeans are going to Angkor, Cambodia's ancient capital, and tour groups are flying to the former royal capital of Luang Prabang in Laos.

"The potential is tremendous," said H.P. Tuggener who operates a travel agency in Bangkok, Thailand. "The demand will be far greater than they can absorb in the next few years. It's been closed for so long there are thousands just waiting to get in."

Tuggener, who has been involved in Indochina tourism for several decades, said in Bangkok that shortages of hotels, aircraft, tour guides and other services will hold back large-scale tourism. Hanoi, for example, currently has 671 hotel beds compared to 24,000 in Hong Kong and 25,600 in Bangkok, Thailand's capital.

"Our policy now is to be more open, to receive more guests," said tourism official Nguyen Cuong Hien. "But I can tell you, Vietnam as a tourist destination is virgin land."

Vietnam and Cambodia come under the U.S. Trading with the Enemy Act, which means Americans can go to those two countries but cannot spend money there. The intent is to keep U.S. dollars from flowing into the economies of countries still considered enemies. Laos is not affected since the United States never broke relations with it.

The U.S. Treasury Department last year also made it illegal for Americans "to arrange, promote or facilitate group or individual tours or travel" to any country listed under the Trading With the Enemy Act. Others on the list are Cuba and North Korea.

Under its new regulations, the Treasury Department has said it intended to prosecute two veterans — Donald Mills and John Myers of Akron, Ohio, members of the Vietnam Veterans of America — who have organized six tours for veterans since 1984 in a program to heal "old, deep wounds." The American Civil Liberties Union maintains Treasury's regulations violate the veterans' First Amendment rights and says it will defend them if they are prosecuted.

On June 14, a U.S. federal court in Bridgeport, Conn., penalized Lindblad Travel Inc. of Westport, Conn., a total of $75,000 for offering tours to Vietnam and Cambodia.

Exempt from the U.S. sanctions are journalists, scholars or others who have a professional interest in the two countries.

In 1988, some 42,000 travelers came to Indochina, in contrast to neighboring Thailand's 4.2 million. But projections are all upward, with Vietnam expecting 100,000 largely "capitalist tourists" by 1990, compared with 40,000 last year. Tourist visas, which once took up to three months to get, are generally in hand within a week.

Among the poorest in the world, the Indochinese nations hope tourist income will help revive their economies. Hard currency fever is spreading rapidly.

"Dollars, dollars," chanted a taxi driver at Hanoi airport, unable to come up with any other English words. At Angkor, Cambodian officials are charging some of the highest entrance fees in the world: $120 to get into two major temples; transportation, food and tour-guide fees are extra.

Vietnam, Hien said, earned $57 million from tourism last year, but it received about 60 applications from 17 countries for investment in the tourism sector.

Hien said a West German company will build a 14-story hotel in Hanoi while a French-Indonesian group is set to overhaul the Thong Nhat, an atmospheric but quickly fading relic of French colonial days. Others are eyeing Vietnam's often stunning, 1,860-mile coastline and Ho Chi Minh City, the dynamic southern economic hub once called Saigon.

Hien, who heads a department in the National Tourism Agency, stressed that standards of service also had to be radically improved. There are plans to send tourism employees to the West for training, while the country's foreign investment code allows foreign management of hotels.

Cambodia's top draw is Angkor, a complex of magnificent temples dating to the 9th century. There are four other official tourist destinations but a continuing guerrilla war puts large areas of the country off-limits. Only 1,500 tourists came last year, but just a few years ago there were none.

With prospects for a peace settlement, talks have been initiated for air links between Phnom Penh, the capital, and points like Bangkok, Tokyo and Hong Kong. Phnom Penh's hotels are being refurbished, including the elegant Cambodiana on the Tonle Sap River, which is slated to have 200 of its 388 rooms ready by the end of the year.

Although fewer than 600 tourists visited Laos in the first six months of this year, the easy, overland access from Thailand gives it a decided advantage.

Travel agencies are offering group packages, such as a six-day, $590-a-person tour that includes stays in the capital, Vientiane, and Luang Prabang, a temple-studded retreat nestled in a valley of the Mekong River.

Researchers Protect Snails From Engineer's Work Plans

By Fred Messina
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

VICKSBURG, Miss. — To some people snails are slimy things that cause problems in lawns and gardens, while to another group they are a gourmet's delight designed to be cooked with garlic and butter.

But to two scientists at the Waterways Experiment Station, snails, specifically the armored river variety, are things to be preserved, studied and possibly understood.

Andrew Miller, a fresh water expert, or limnologist, and zoologist Barry Payne are keeping between 5,000 and 10,000 of the freshwater snails at the request of the Nashville District Corps of Engineers to protect them from harm while the district works on navigation problems in their natural habitat, the Cumberland River in Tennessee and Kentucky.

The gilled snails, which are huge for freshwater, "must have a hard river bottom such as rock or cobble in fast-moving, highly oxygenated water with a combination of algae, bacteria and other microscopic animals for food," Payne said.

Such conditions are found in many of the bendways of the Cumberland between the river's confluence with the Ohio River and Barkley Dam, located east and slightly south of Paducah, Ky. But many of the narrow bends have huge outcroppings of rock which are a danger to boats and barges trying to make sharp turns. As a result, the Nashville District is planning a $5 million, two-year program to blast the dangerous rocks from the bottom of the river.

In addition to making the river safer for navigation, the work and blasting can damage the snail's habitat, so the animals were shipped to the experiment station for safe keeping and study.

Payne said he and Miller had planned to return the snails to the Cumberland this spring, but high water conditions on that river and the Ohio River may delay their return until some time in June.

He said the snails were collected from an area with an exceptionally high population density and from an area where clearing of the underwater obstruction will be done.

Although not on the federal endangered species list, the armored river snails are believed to be sufficiently scarce to merit a status review and special attention.

Payne said the armored river snail does not look at all like the common pond snail most people see along the banks of lakes, creeks and other small, slow-moving watercourses. Those animals typically have a rather thin shell that is nearly round and flattened in the classic "snail" shape. They are also believed to be descended from marine snails who left the water, developed lungs and then returned to the water after millions of years, retaining the lungs.

Since the armored river snail never left its watery environment, it still has gills and spends all of its time underwater. The pond snail, Payne said, must surface from time to time to take on an air supply.

The river snail has a cone-shaped shell that is very heavy and durable, Payne said, probably an adaptation to protect the animal from being crushed under small rocks and cobbles moved by swift water. The shell is also very thick, more like some of the shells of saltwater snails tourists buy in coastal shell shops and a number of species found in deep African lakes where they had a long time to evolve. The shells are 1-1½ inches long and ½-¾ inch in diameter.

As a demonstration of the durability and ruggedness of the armored river snail, Payne took one of two animals from a small jar in his office and dropped it from more than desk-top height onto a tile-covered concrete floor. The snail hit, bounced and came to a rest. When returned to the water, the animal soon emerged from his durable home and began crawling around, seemingly none the worse for the experience.

Another similarity between the river snails and their salt-water cousins, Payne said, is the knob-like projections on the shell. These, too, are probably an adaptation to the swift-water environment the snails inhabit.

If they become dislodged from their rocky gazing pastures of algae, he said, it is possible the knobs will help the snail become lodged between stones or in cracks in the rock before it is swept into a hostile environment.

He said the armored river snail probably is among a group of snails with the most extreme shell shape.

Since the animals must have a rocky bottom and swift water to survive, he said, they find slower moving water, where silt and sand are deposited on the river bottom, impossible to tolerate.

Payne said the river snails, or similar species, inhabit a number of other areas, including parts of the Ohio River and the Lower Mississippi river. He said he had found the snails on rock dikes in the Mississippi as far south at Matthews Bend or the Worthington Cutoff. The location is about 22 miles downstream from Greenville.

"There's no reason to believe they wouldn't be on more dikes on the Lower Mississippi," Payne commented.

INSULATION INFORMATION

A wood home often requires 30 percent less energy in summer and 20 percent less energy in winter than a house made of other materials, says Georgia-Pacific Corp., a forest products firm.

Because of its high density, wood can insulate a home from extreme summer and winter temperatures.

Horoscope

From The Carroll Righter Institute

FORECAST FOR SUNDAY July 2

ARIES (March 21 to April 19): Compromise and cooperation will help family members exercise their own likes and dislikes. Home activities are a favorite today.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20): Tensions occur over possessions and financial budgets. Easy solutions come when you communicate the true facts. Enjoy free time.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21): It is irritating when demands by others cannot possibly be met. Take a positive approach, but don't neglect your own needs.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21): Thoughts center around your personal life. Focus on changing yourself. Don't let emotions stand in the way—be objective.

LEO (July 22 to Aug. 21): Normal routines are a bore until you decide to do something unusual. Believe in yourself—lay your ego aside for a rest.

VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22): An angry confrontation can exist if you do not direct your energy into something useful. It may be difficult to finish what you start.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22): What you believe could happen, and probably will! You are at a crossroad. Listen to your inner self, and you are on the right track.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21): Adjustments in relationships have a better chance of success today. Put the "nobody listens to me" attitude away, and speak your mind.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21): Lines of communication open. There is reassurance that a relationship problem involving finances will be fixed. Avoid long-distance travel.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20): Family members have you drawn in two directions. Refuse to be part of the confusion. Renew your energy with added rest.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19): Your intuition may seem keen enough to see through walls! Make note of your hunches, and don't discard good ideas.

PISCES (Feb. 20 to March 20): This day was made for romance, if you can find the time. A surprise reunion or social activity is enchanting.

FORECAST FOR MONDAY July 3

ARIES (March 21 to April 19): Apple polishing will work better than arm twisting in solving today's problems. Focus on short trips and exploring new horizons.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20): Watch financial strains. A money dilemma is improving. Time spent at home is rewarding. Renew a relationship that has grown cold.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21): You are ready for any excitement that comes along. An optimistic attitude makes the day shine. A wild spending mood calls for self-control.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21): Home Sweet Home—and you are at your happiest. Surround yourself with family and friends and enjoy a festive feast.

LEO (July 22 to Aug. 21): Now is the time to take a step forward. Plans should be based on a firm foundation. Creativity blossoms and further ideas can be expected.

VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22): Two heads are better than one, unless you disagree! An all or nothing situation develops. It is beneficial to be conciliatory—bend a little!

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22): Express yourself freely and display a pioneering spirit. Your popularity continues and friends are plentiful. Hold fast to your principles.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21): Opposition to a plan makes matters seem impossible. If you can't fight them—join them. A romantic mood can change everything.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21): A new approach to finances develops. Take pride in your accomplishments. Eliminate situations that do not serve a purpose.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20): Competition comes from forceful and aggressive individuals. Develop intuitive powers and a sense of creative projects.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19): You prefer personal isolation and withdrawal. Increase your rapport with and empathy towards others. Find time for creative projects.

PISCES (Feb. 20 to March 20): Use your imagination to inspire and promote financial transactions. Money comes through a secret source. Avoid extravagances.

2 ♣	Pass	4 NT	Pass
5 ♡	Pass	6 ♠	Pass

Opening lead: Jack of ♡

A cool head rather than blind panic is the solution to many bridge problems. It allowed South to bring home a reasonable club slam on this hand.

Note that South, Dorothy Truscott of Riverside, N.Y, had no hesitation in introducing her shabby club suit at her second turn—the alternative of one no trump is never attractive with a singleton in partner's suit and no soft values. Not surprisingly, that excited North no end, and the slam was reached in quick time.

West led the jack of hearts, taken by declarer's ace. If trumps were 2-2, declarer could claim the hand, so the first step was to draw two rounds of trumps. When East showed up with a trump trick and spades failed to break, several declarers threw in the towel and ended up down one.

Mrs. Truscott demonstrated that there was no reason to be bothered by the fact that she had not picked up all the trumps. She cashed her high diamonds, discarding a heart from dummy, and ruffed a heart. After cashing the ace and king of spades, declarer continued with a spade from dummy. Since it would not help East to ruff (declarer would simply discard a loser and claim her contract), he discarded a diamond. There followed a heart ruff and another spade from the table. When East again discarded, declarer simply continued with her crossruff. Thus, declarer raked in 12 tricks, via two spades, two diamonds, a heart, two high trumps and five ruffers. Trick 13 was won by West's queen of spades and East's queen of trumps.

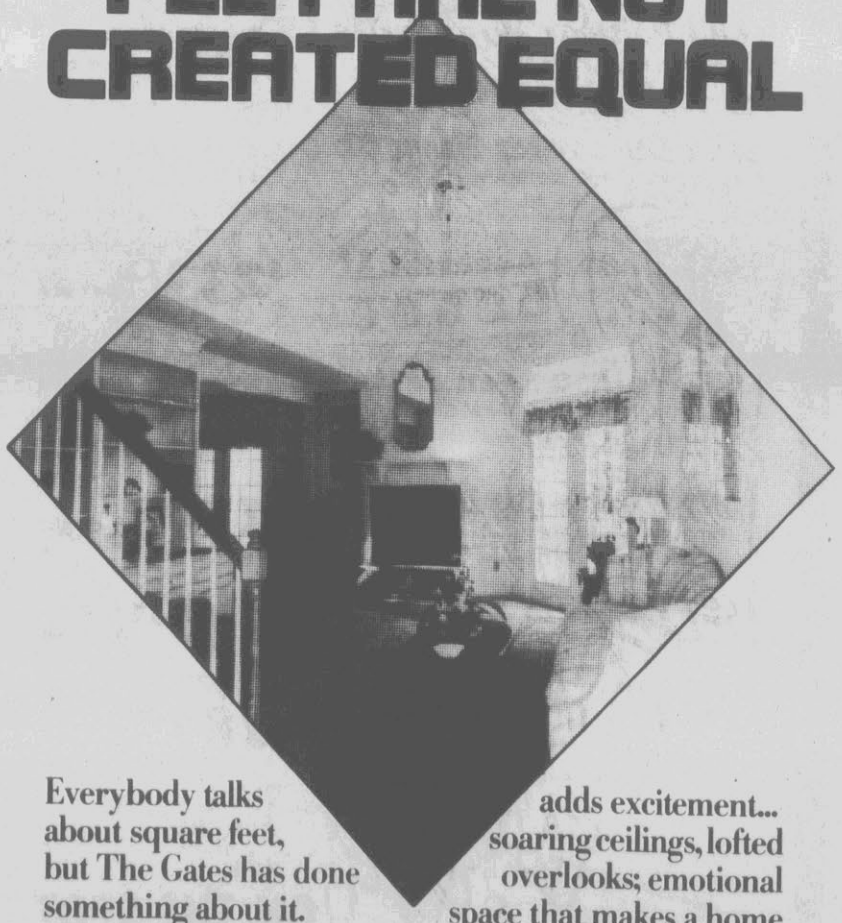
The Gates

ALL SQUARE FEET ARE NOT CREATED EQUAL



Everybody talks about square feet, but The Gates has done something about it. Square footage is a unit of measure in two dimensions only. At The Gates, we add the third dimension—height. Height adds excitement... soaring ceilings, lofted overlooks; emotional space that makes a home more than just shelter. Come visit our model and see and feel what The Gates has done to the square foot.

Located off South Evans Street Extension.

A line of migrant workers harvest a 26 acre field of cucumbers on the farm of Leon R. Hardee. The field is part of about 2,000 acres being grown this year in Pitt County

Food Crops, An Important Segment Of Pitt's Farm Economy

Historically, sweet potatoes were for years the single food crop most extensively grown in Pitt County as a cash supplement to the traditional money crops of tobacco, corn, soybeans and peanuts.

But that has changed somewhat in recent years, according to Sam Uzzell, Pitt County Agriculture Extension Agent whose specialty is peanuts and other row crops, including commercial vegetables.

"There are indeed indications that we may soon see a resurgence in the cultivation of sweet potatoes," Uzzell said. "Early cultivation of sweet potatoes peaked out 15 or 20 years ago, but since then, in the last ten years, there has been a gradual increase in acreages of potatoes, and prices are good now.

Cucumbers now foremost

"At this time, however, cucumbers constitute the foremost food crop grown in Pitt County," Uzzell said. "Currently, there is about 2,000 acres of cucumbers under cultivation in the county which represents a two million dollar market value in sales."

Several factors are at play in the popularity of cucumber cultivation. "Primarily, it provides the farmer with a cash flow prior to the sale of tobacco and other major money crops. It also allows for the seasonal use of farm labor, local and migrant, in an intensive work situation during the short harvest season.

"Harvesting the cucumber crop at just the right time is critical," Uzzell added. "Most of the harvest here is for pickles. Even a couple of days delay in harvesting can seriously lessen the market value of the crop."

Some of the cucumber harvest is sold to local grocery store outlets and to the Farmers Market near Bells Fork. The major part, however, is sold to Vlasic, a Midwest firm. "The central field office for buying cucumbers is located in Bethel, with a few smaller buying stations here and there," Uzzell said.

Other local food crops

Another increasingly important food crop grown in the county "is what we collectively call the leafy greens," Uzzell said.

"This consists of collards, cabbage and salad greens. Last year, approximately 70 acres of these vegetables were grown, with a market value of something like $70,000."

Most of the leafy green produce is sold to area grocery stores. "Cabbage and collards have long been favorite greens among local people. More and more people are taking a liking to various salad greens," Uzzell said, "so the market for these is stable."

Strawberries constitute the earliest food crop cultivated in Pitt County. "The acreage of commercially grown strawberries is relatively small," Uzzell said, "about 15 acres in five or six locations."

Other food crops currently being cultivated on small acreages in Pitt County include tomatoes, cantaloupes, watermelon and squash.

"At this time, these are not planted in what we term as significant acreages," Uzzell said. "Their cultivation does indicate, however, that they can be grown successfully in this area and that a ready local market exists for a limited production."

This year, because of excessive spring rains, some of the fields devoted to squash cultivation suffered severe damage that resulted in a total loss.

The use of plastic

A recent innovation in growing food crops is the use of plastic covering on the rows," Uzzell noted. "Plastic has significantly increased the yield realized. This is especially true in the case of strawberries. Farmers have found that growing strawberries on plastic covered rows has resulted in a dramatic increase, in many instances quadrupling the yield. Plastic also has the virtue of giving a much cleaner product that is far easier to harvest."

Plastic covering, coupled with irrigation, either the overhead or trickle type, Uzzell said, "is a substantial investment on the part of the grower. But all indications are that it's a wise investment despite its high cost.

"Unfortunately," he added, "plastic covering cannot be saved and re-used. "It has to be removed after a crop is harvested so that the soil can be prepared for another year's planting."

Use of plastic works well for the cultivation of many vegetables. It has proven not totally suitable for sweet corn and peppers.

Fruit cultivation

Peaches constitute the only fruit crop grown to any extent in Pitt County at this time. "About 30 acres of peach orchards are now under cultivation," Uzzell said. "Here at the extension office we feel there is considerable room for expansion in peach cultivation. Peaches are catching on as a viable cash crop. A couple of new orchards have just been planted, and three or four small ones have been put in during the last several years."

Initially, it takes three years after planting for production to begin, with good returns realized from the fourth and fifth years after planting.

"Several developments in the Carolina peach market centered in the sandhills indicate sound reasons for expanding cultivation for local consumption," Uzzell said. "There's no doubt about it, the heydey of the North Carolina sandhills peach production seems to be over. "A

A Reflector Review

Nice Balance Between Prose, Poetry

ST. ANDREWS REVIEW. No. 36. General Editor, Ronald H. Bayes. Laurinburg, N.C., St. Andrews Presbyterian College Press. 100 pgs. $7. (Subscription for two annual issues for $13. For this issue or to subscribe, write to: St. Andrews Presbyterian College, Laurinburg, N.C., 28352 or call 276-3652).

One thing's for sure: the St. Andrews Review is durable.

In an absent-minded hurry the other day, I managed to wash the Review at the laundromat. To my surprise, it emerged unscathed (save for its cover). I took it home, dried it on a flat surface, and after four or five days was able to read its only slightly wilted pages.

But the Review is durable in a more important way as well. While many literary magazines don't make it past infancy, this issue marks the Review's 20th birthday. As founding and general editor Ronald H. Bayes says in an opening editorial, two decades is "ten times the life expectancy of small magazines."

One reason for its longevity may be its ability to attract quality writers. Over the years, the semiannual magazine has published poems, short stories, and essays by Reynolds Price, Ovid Pierce, Kaye Gibbons, Jill McCorkle, Fred Chappell and James Applewhite.

The current issue features work by writers such as Gordon Weaver who recently won a National Endowment for the Arts fellowship; Edward Falco, whose short story in this issue won the Mishima Prize for innovative fiction, and Shelby Stephenson, editor of Pembroke Magazine. (It also includes poetry by Hal J. Daniel III, who teaches in ECU's School of Allied Health, and by former Greenville resident Sam Silva.)

Another reason for the Review's durability may be its mixture of the traditional and the experimental. In this issue, Mary Farr Jordan's short story "The Saints of God" provides a taste of traditional form, unfolding in strict chronological order. On the experimental side, two works blur the distinction between poetry and prose. Alurie A. Spencer's short story "Of Remembering to Swim" is a surrealistic grab bag of thoughts and images that at times reads (and looks) like poetry, while Judith E. Johnson's "For James at the Solstice" is a poem that breaks into patches of prose-like narrative.

Similarly, there's a satisfying range of tone here, particularly in the poetry. Frequent contributor Martin Robbins provides a seriocomic look at (among other things) religion, bureaucracy, and technology in "You've Reached the Celestial Answering Machine:" . . . "Hello, God's not in his or her heaven right now/ But stay on the line, help may be possible," he begins. The poem ends with, "However you put your hand to the plow/ don't look back - please leave a message."

Then there's E. Waverly Land's satiric "Health Profile" with questions such as "Do you have a family history/ of TB or not TB" and "Have you ever wished/ you were a porch railing in New Orleans?"

On the other hand is Judith E. Johnson's mournful "For James at the Solstice," which tells of "Dear James, murdered last year in Thailand. . ." and evokes a picture of both narrator and subject in the lines "Here's a silk/ hankerchief/ for your death, folded plainly/ forthrightly, as you could wish."

Significantly, many of the memorable characters in this issue appear in the poetry. Almost everyone has had a relative like the woman in Mary Yorke Robison's "Aunt Lucille's Living Room," a relative who offers unsolicited advice in a machine-gun onslought of words, a relative who never seems to take a breath: . . . "I chased my mind through bedlam/ like conversation. Aunt Lucille/ told me pickled apricots hold better./ Peaches tend to brown. I must learn/ the Junior League handbook and did/ I still date Michael. A nice boy."

In "Apology to My Sister," Maureen D. Sutton tells of a younger sister who almost drowns at the hands of her older sister. When she's rescued, she displays the fierceness of a pit bull; as her older sister remembers, . . . "You sprang, dripping astonishment,/ pulling breaths longer than your skinny bones./ And mad. Kid, you weren't normal, you didn't hide/ in Mama's skirts. On that day I understood/ you were Somebody."

But the short stories have their share of memorable characters as well, often featuring people who are grappling in some way with conformity. In Gordon Weaver's "The Apotheosis of Neddie Hacke," the title character, a lackluster history professor, rises to deanship because he doesn't rock the bureaucratic boat. In Mary Farr Jordan's ironically titled "The Saints of God," student Deborah Swift rebels against the strict discipline of an Episcopal girls school and thus short-circuits her plans for college.

Edward Falco's "This World That World" presents the intriguing character of Mia, an 18-year-old whose parents are divorced and whose mother is a minister. Her rebellion takes the form of a seduction — but is the young man she seduces a police officer or a devil worshipper?

Although this issue has many more poems than short stories, the amount of pages devoted to each is about equal, giving a nice balance between the two. In addition, the volume — the first of two anniversary issues — includes reviews and literary criticism. All in all, whether you seek serious or lighthearted summertime reading, you'll likely find it here.

FROM SHEPPARD MEMORIAL LIBRARY

By Willie Nelms
SHEPPARD MEMORIAL LIBRARY

"Thunder Gods" is the compelling first-hand account of the pilots who pledged themselves to die for Japanese Emperor Hirohito in the closing days of World War II. Known to the world as kamikaze — divine wind — their suicide attacks on American naval forces caused panic and disruption, but their efforts were born out of the desperation of the Imperial Japanese command, determined to avoid the shame of surrender at any cost.

Weaving the recollections of surviving participants with the documented history of the period, Hatsuho Naito, an authority on Japanese naval history, recreates the kamikaze phenomenon with a human dimension. He tells how the idea for the manned bomb came to an obscure warrant officer, who swiftly persuaded his superiors to make the project operational.

The author portrays the reluctant engineer who designed the plans, the war-weary veterans who trained the young pilots, and the commanding officers whose decisions sealed the fate of those chosen.

Most of all, he recalls the pilots themselves, patriotic young men who loved their families, believed in their country and were willing to die for an ideal. The author shows that these men were not fanatics or automatons but sacrificial victims of the excesses of war. By doing so, the author tells their story and returns to them their humanity. This book, on the New Book shelves at Sheppard Memorial Library, is a welcome addition to the first-hand accounts of World War II.

Pettigrew State Park To Celebrate Anniversary

CRESWELL — In 1939, Pettigrew State Park encircling the shores of Lake Phelps near Creswell became North Carlina's sixth state park.

This year, on Tuesday, the park will begin its 50th anniversary celebration with a history day in conjunction with the fourth of July.

Exhibits of old photographs, books, memorandums, magazines, newspaper articles, and other memorabilia will be on display all afternoon. A lecture will be given by Ronnie Pritchett of Creswell on the park's history at 5 p.m. There will also be a reunion of all former park employees.

Visitors who bring their picnic supper may be entertained by Pritchett, who will play the piano in the picnic area. If one has a certain request for a song, he should bring the sheet music.

At 7 p.m. the Creswell Ruritan Club will sponsor the community's annual patriotic sing. Among those to perform are the Washington County Choral Society, Mr. and Mrs. Jim Cooper, and Jackie Harris.

Other events will be held throughout the year focusing on Pettigrew's history.

In August there will be a program on the rare animals of this area; in September a celebration will be held on Indian Heritage Week; a program on General Pettigrew will be featured in October; and a program about Pettigrew Park's big trees will be on the agenda for November.

Brochures, lectures and other literature has been made possible from a grant from the North Carolina Humanities Council.

For more information on the park and on Somserset Place, the restored plantation home with Pettigrew Park's boundaries, call the park office at 794-4475.

Food Crops In Pitt County

number of factors have contributed to this reversal. Among these have been disastrous seasons because of late spring cold spells, the lack of sufficient labor for harvesting, the predominance of older trees with a lessening of production, and the emergence of increased peach cultivation in California, South Carolina and Georgia."

Other fruit crops — pears, apples, plums, as well as berry crops, Uzzell said, "are not grown commercially, although there is a substantial amount of fruit grown in home plantings of a few trees."

Two types of cultivation

Cultivation and marketing of food crops in Pitt County falls into two general categories. "Commercial acreages of cucumbers raised for the wholesale market, and other produce sold to local grocery outlets account for the greater part of food crop sales," Uzzell said.

"The other category, is that of food crops raised for the pick-your-own produce plots," Uzzell said. "This venture is still somewhat popular, but it has trailed off, both here and nationwide. It seems that more people are willing to pay for already picked produce and less willing to exert the time and labor involved in picking their own to save a little money.

Needed approaches

At this point in the agricultural history of Pitt County — and this is generally true throughout eastern North Carolina, food producers sell mostly to local markets.

"There are no facilities in the county, other than the Bethel cucumber facility, for grading, packing and shipping food produce in bulk levels to more distant markets," Uzzell said. "What is needed is for several Pitt County producers to get together in a cooperative venture to look into measures and facilities as a viable way to enter a much greater potential market. It's about the only way that Pitt County food growers can profit from the large scale produce market."

Uzzell said this situation does not negate the need for some expansion in cultivating food for sale at the local level on a limited scale.

"There is still a little space left in the local markets, but competition for these outlets is strong. Too much emphasis on growing produce for the local markets can easily lead to over-production.

"The Farmers Market near Bells Fork, now in its 11th year, is another instance of where growth can take place as part of the area produce marketing," Uzzell pointed out. "The market is doing well, and the quality of the produce it handles is constantly being bettered. Yet, it could serve a much more vital role if it could reach the point where it was operated on a full daily basis.

"Now," he added, "it's open on Tuesdays and Thursdays from eight in the morning to one in the afternoon, on Fridays from three to six in the afternoons, and on Saturdays from about 7:30 in the morning until one in the afternoon."

Agriculture Extension people agree that to be a totally flourishing market, it needs to be open to serve buyers on a much extended operating basis. "People would use it much more if they knew that at most any time they could go there it would be open and stocked with a good range of high quality, seasonal, locally grown foods. It's something we keep working on, and some day we'll succeed."

Admittedly, the cultivation of food crops in Pitt County is a promising though not yet significant sector of the county's agricultural economy.

"Tobacco is still the strongest cash crop in Pitt County. As long as the tobacco program remains a healthy part of the farm economy, along with soybeans, corn and the winter wheat program, the situation is not likely to change drastically.

"However," Uzzell said, "as a secondary source of cash income, as well as a source of employment other than in tobacco for a relatively large migrant population in Pitt County, the future of cultivation of food crops seems bright."

Summer Theater Opens On Monday

East Carolina Summer Theater kicks off its 26th season with "Pump Bovs and Dinettes" opening on Monday.

The setting is a backroad in North Carolina, Highway 57 to be exact. The action takes place in the Double Cupp diner, where two sassy Cupp sisters and the four pump boys who run the garage across the road sing, cook, drink beer, and hang out.

Since the boys spend all their time at the diner with the Cupp gals, no gas is pumped or repairs made, but they do make a lot of good music.

New York critics call "Pump Boys and Dinettes" . . . "totally terrific" and an evening of "pure fun, bring the whole family." "It's an all-American exercise in how to have a marvelous time in the theater in a way you could never have imagined before."

The show is directed by native North Carolinian Jason Edwards, who will also perform in the production. Edwards' work includes many New York theater credits, film, television, and several appearances as one of the pump boys in various productions around the nation.

The five other cast members, Broadway veterans and "Pump Boys" alumni among them include: Diane Pennington, Deborah Graham, John DiPinto, Steve Rust and Dan Wright.

"Pump Boys and Dinettes" was conceived and developed by the original six cast members — John Foley, Mark Hardwick, Deborah Monk, Cass Morgan, John Schimmel and Jim Wann. Wann is also the co-author playwright of last season's popular hit "Diamond Studs."

• On the matter of future Summer Theater productions, final casting negotiations with Alan Feinstein and Russ Anderson for the remaining three shows in this season's line up have been announced.

Alan Feinstein will be appearing with Karen Valentine in the second play of the season, Tennessee Williams' "Summer and Smoke," opening July 10.

"Summer and Smoke" is to be followed by "Foxfire," starring Kathleen Nolan and Larry Gates, opening July 17. The final play of the season, "Mass Appeal" opening July 24 will star Iggie Wolfington and Russ Anderson.

Season and individual tickets may be purchased at the McGinnis Theater Box Office located on the ECU campus at the corner of Fifth and Eastern. Tickets may also be reserved with Mastercard or VISA by telephoning 757-6829, Monday through Friday, 10 a.m. until 5 p.m. Tickets may be purchased through the mail by writing to: General Manager, East Carolina Summer Theater, East Carolina University, Greenville, N.C. 27858-4353.

Season tickets for the Tuesday through Saturday performance (your choice of weekly performance) are $40 per person. Monday evening season tickets are priced at $35 per person. Individual tickets for "Pump Boys and Dinettes" are $15 for an evening or $12 for the matinee performances. The remaining three plays are priced at $12 for evening or $10 for matinee for each individual ticket. Evening performances begin at 8:15 p.m. Matinees begin at 2:15 p.m. on Wednesday and Saturday for each of the four plays.

Two Bat Movies

WILMINGTON — On Saturday and July 9 at 2:30 p.m. and 4 p.m., New Hanover County Museum will present two bat movies, "Vanpire Bats" and the classic "Nosferatu." The museum is located at 814 Market St.

There are many misconceptions about bats. "Vampire Bats," a documentary, examines the natural history and folklore of bats and clarifies common misunderstanding about these creatures.

"Nosferatu" tells the classic story about the bloody life of Count Dracula. This edited and subtitled version of the 1922 German film, directed by F. W. Murnau, presents the common stereotype associated with bats.

'Worthy Of The Lamb' Drama Now Playing Near Swansboro

SWANSBORO — "Worthy is the Lamb," North Carolina's newest outdoor drama, opened its second season June 16 at the Crystal Coast Amphitheater in Swansboro.

The portrayal of the life of Jesus Christ drew more than 42,000 spectators in its first season last year, with the third highest ticket sales of all outdoor dramas in the state.

This outdoor musical is presented in a waterside amphitheater on the White Oak River by a mostly local cast of both professionals and amateurs.

The drama has a cast of more than 100, including 25 children, as well as an array of live animals from goats, sheep and donkeys to Arabian horses and Dromedary camels.

The play features a lifelike set of the days of Christ. A replication of the city of Jerusalem includes three main structures: the Temple of Jerusalem, the Hall of Pontius Pilate and King Herod's Palace. Handmade wooden fishing boats float in a lagoon that represents the Sea of Galilee. A wooded hillside, the cross on Calvary, Christ's tomb with the stone, the Garden of Gethsemane and the Upper Room complete the setting for the various events of Christ's life.

The drama features authentic-looking period costumes, a soundtrack of the musical score and high tech lighting and special effects. J. T. Adams is the playwright and executive director.

The score was recorded in London by musicians from the Royal Philharmonic Orchestra, with the soundtrack performed by some of Britain's Shakespearean actors. The show also features dancing, with several fast-paced choreographed numbers.

More than 90 percent of the performing cast from last year are back. This season, Texan Rick Robertson returns to the role of Jesus. John Ancellotti of Swansboro portrays King Herod and Swansboro's Cathy Kennedy appears as Herodius, his wife.

Shirely Page of Swansboro returns this year as Mary, mother of Jesus.

The drama is presented in two acts. This nondenominational story starts with Jesus meeting John the Baptist. The first act portrays Jesus and his relationships with the children and with the disciples.

It begins with Jesus' ministry. The latter half of the show begins with Jesus' triumphant entry into Jerusalem, and then relates the story of his last week upon earth.

The second act concludes with Christ's resurrection on the third day after his death, a scene that creates the ascension into heaven through special effects.

The drama runs through September 2, at 8:30 p.m. nightly. Admission is $10 for adults, $8 for senior citizens, $6 for children aged seven to 12 and free for children six and under. Discounts are available for the military and groups of 25 or more.

Advance reservations are recommended. Call 1-800-662-5960 or 393-8373. Call for a free brochure or write: Crystal Coast Amphitheater, P.O. Box 1004, Swansboro, N.C. 28584. The Crystal Coast Amphitheater is located off Highway 58 three miles north of the Emerald Isle Bridge.

Varied ADF Dance Programs

DURHAM — Eight French dance companies will celebrate the bicentennial of the French Revolution in a nation renowned for its revolution in dance: the United States . . . more specifically Durham, North Carolina, home of the American Dance Festival, and also at Becket, Massachusetts, home of the Jacob's Pillow Dance Festival.

The French companies will perform at both dance festivals, as well as at Florence Gould Hall at the French Institute Alliance Francaise in New York City.

Performances by the companies will be inaugurated Tuesday in Durham, with a series of performances at all three locations to take place through July 22. The programs are part of 'Made in France,' a joint project of the American Dance Festival and the Jacob's Pillow Dance Festival.

In addition to the opening evening Tuesday of the July French programs, other performances to be given during the coming week at ADF in Durham are:

• Today and Monday, at 8 p.m. — Six new dances and musical compositions created by artists participating in the Young Choreographers and Composers Program.

• Friday, Saturday and Sunday at 8 p.m. — A series of performances by Sutki, a dance company from Turin, Italy.

Marking the first time America's two most important dance festivals have joined forces, 'Made in France' features six American Debuts.

The Assocation Francaise d'Action Artistique, which is part of the French Ministry of Foreign Affairs, and the Secretary of State for Cultural Action supported the initiation of this project by the Cultural Services of the French Embassy in conjuction with the dance festivals in the U.S.

Participating companies include the Compagnie Jean-Francois Duroure; Campagnie Doussaint-Dubouloz; La Compagnie Claude Brumachon; La P'tite Cie; La Compagnie Ris et Danceries; Lidia Martinez; L'Esquisse and Yves Musard.

All but L'Esquisse and Compagnie Doussaint-Dubouloz will appear at both festivals. Doussaint-Dubouloz will appear only at Jacob's Pillow, while L'Esquisse, which made its American debut at the American Dance Festival in 1983, will appear at the Pillow and at Florence Gould Hall in New York City.

Presenting an ADF/Pillow commissioned premiere, the French choreographer Yves Musard will only be seen at the ADF in Durham.

The companies express the tremendous growth of dance art in France in the past six years and the free-wheeling range of artistic imagination. The variety of points of view range from the theatrical imagination of Lidia Martinez to the virtuosic dancing of Jean-Francois Duroure, to the humor of La P'tite Cie to the elegant Barouque and Renaissance dance of Ris et Danceries.

The unusual breadth of artistic sensibility is further underscored in the compelling intensity of Yves Musard, the mysterious sensuality of L'Esquisse, the almost mystical physicality of Doussaint-Dubouloz and the highly atmospheric work of Claude Brumachon.

Dates and names of companies to perform at the American Dance Festival in Durham during July are: Tuesday, Yves Musard; July 10, Lidia Martinez; July 11, La P'tite Cie; July 12, 13, La Compagnie Ris et Danceries; July 14, Compagnie Jean-Francois Duroure, and July 15, La Compagnie Claude Brumachon.

An official Bicentennial program of the American Committee on the French Revolution, this project is made possible through support from the Florence Gould Foundation, the French Ministry of Foreign Affairs through A.F.A.A. in Paris together with the cultural services of the French Embassy in New York, with additional support from Elf Aquitaine, Inc. and its subsidiary, Texasgulf, Inc.

Greenville's Paula Pyle Cuts Her First Album In Nashville

Greenville songwriter, singer Paula Pyle

Greenville resident and musician Paula N. Pyle has realized a major step toward the fulfillment of her long-held dream. At 36, Ms. Pyle has just recently scored with the cutting of her first album — "Hurt Me One More Time."

The album, cut in a Nashville, Tenn. recording studio, 16th Avenue Sound, contains eight songs from the large number she has penned words and music to since she first made a decision in April, 1987 to become a songwriter.

Once she began writing, all the ideas she had stored away for songs came to the surface in a rush of creativitity — in fact, resulting in the production of 77 songs in a matter of ten days. Since that first onrush of writing, the pace has slowed a bit, but Ms. Pyle now has to her credit over 100 songs.

Ms. Pyle, a life-long lover of music, grew up in a family who loved to sing. In her early years, the general concensus of other family members was that she simply coult not sing, could not carry a tune. These circumstances, however, did not dampen her love of music, but resulted in her putting aside doing anything specific for long years.

But that April day in 1987 was the beginning of a change. To capture the melodies for the songs, Ms. Pyle sang into a tape recorder. Still hesitant from her youthful experiences, she eventually decided to share what she was attempting to do with a close friend, Sandy Cloey of Greenville.

Ms. Pyle asked Ms. Cloey to help her find someone to sing the songs, but Ms. Cloey insisted that Ms. Pyle had the right voice for the songs, that she did indeed sing beautifully.

Later in 1987, the two went to Nashville, Tenn. Publishers there said they were very much interested, asked her to go back home, make a demon tape and return to Nashville. Ms. Pyle waited nearly two years, until March this year before returning to Nashville.

At that time, the studio musicians at 16th Avenue Sound Studio, who praised the quality of the songs, talked Ms. Pyle into producing an album.

The end product is "Hurt Me One More Time." Locally, John Moore of Greenville's radio station WRQR has been the first to introduce songs from the album over the airwaves. Currently, the album is available at the Mall Record Shop in Washington, N.C., at The Record Rack in Goldsboro, with arangements being made to have the album at record stores in Greenville at an early date.

With this first step behind her, Ms. Pyle has gained, according to Ms. Cloey, more confidence — to the extent that she has agreed to appearl on a benefit telethon on Channel 12, New Bern, in early August, and is thinking of accepting other public appearances in the local area.

To sing at Busch Gardens

The Oak Ridge Boys will be in performance at Busch Gardens, Williamsburg, Va. on July 4. The group will sing at 6 p.m. and again at 9 p.m. Admission to the concert is $5 in addition to the single park admission price of $19.95.

Big Band To Play Thursday

NAGS HEAD — The Billy May Orchestra will perform Thursday at the Armada Hotel in Nags Head. The concert and dance will begin at 8:30 p.m. and continue until 12:30 a.m.

May's orchestra is the third in a roster of seven big band appearances this summer at Nags Head. The bands of Artie Shaw and Guy Lombardo have appeared previously; others scheduled to perform at later dates are the bands of Woody Herman, Casablanca, Russ Morgan and Glenn Miller.

The bands are playing for spring, summer and autumn dances under the auspices of the Big Band Preservation Society. The society is an organization which seeks to preserve the musical sounds of the 1930s and 1940 for fans who remember nostagically, as well as providing younger listeners with live exposure to music popular a generation ago.

For details on ticket prices and reservations, call Wally Gray at 461-4644, or write to: Big Band Preservation Society, Box 219, Nags Head, N.C., 27959.

Personality Parade

Want the facts? Opinion? Truth? Write Walter Scott, Box 5573, Beverly Hills, Calif. 90210, or phone (213) 651-3375. Full name will be used unless otherwise requested. Volume of mail makes personal replies impossible.

Q Is it true that Jane Fonda, 51, has traded in husband Tom Hayden for actor Rob Lowe, who is 25?—Felicia Lister, Newport News, Va.

A Not true. Jane Fonda knows Rob Lowe politically, not romantically. He's one of a group of young Hollywood personalities whom Tom Hayden has shrewdly enlisted to support his causes and candidates. Rob is the proper age for Jane's daughter, Vanessa Vadim, who is 20.

Fonda, Hayden and Lowe (l-r): Politics, not romance

Q A recent article said consumer-advocate Ralph Nader is quitting Washington, D.C., and returning to his hometown of Winsted, Conn., where he plans to set up new headquarters. How accurate is that article?—Tom Ryan, Wallingford, Conn.

A Ralph Nader has always been interested in Winsted, where he attended The Gilbert School and worked at his parents' bakery-restaurant, Highland Arms. He has no intention at this point of moving his headquarters, however, though he will aid his hometown as much as possible. Various members of the Nader family, particularly Ralph's late brother Shafeek, have been responsible for civic improvements in Winsted through the years.

A Not much. Kelley—who has penned revealing biographies of Frank Sinatra, Elizabeth Taylor and Jackie Kennedy Onassis—emphatically declares that she does not pay for interviews.

Q Does trumpet-player Herb Alpert make a perfume called "Listen," or is it some company with his name that produces it?—Joan G., Ventura, Calif.

"Listen" and its manufacturer

Q Before the late Richard Burton became Liz Taylor's fifth husband, he was married to Sybil Williams. They had two daughters, Kate and Jessica. Kate is an actress of 31. But whatever happened to Jessica, adoringly beautiful as a child? Is she too an actress?—Gloria Murphy, Mesa, Ariz.

A Jessica Burton is, sadly, no actress. Now 30, she was born mentally handicapped and was 6 before doctors diagnosed her as autistic and schizophrenic. Some of Burton's friends hold that one of the reasons the actor drank so much was that he held himself responsible for Jessica's illness. He was epileptic and believed erroneously that either she had inherited her condition from him or that somehow he had caused it by leaving Sybil, his wife of 14 years, for Elizabeth Taylor. In any case, Jessica Burton has not spoken for 20 years. It has been reported that she lives in a sanitarium in Santa Barbara, Calif., run by the Devereux Foundation, but foundation officials deny it. Her mother, who remarried in 1965, understandably declines to disclose Jessica's location.

A No one knows for sure. Many historians believe, however, that the infamous Martin Bormann was killed sometime between April 30 and May 2, 1945, trying to break through the cordon of Russian troops and tanks surrounding Berlin. At the Nuremberg trials, Bormann was sentenced to death in absentia. Stories that he escaped to Paraguay still appear from time to time but have proved invalid. A good book on Bormann and the last days of the Hitler rat pack is "The Bunker," by James P. O'Donnell, published by Houghton Mifflin.

Williams and new wife, Marsha: Expecting an addition

Q Can you inform me if that marvelous comedian and actor, Robin Williams, has straightened out his personal life? I would particularly like to know if he is married to Valerie Velardi or Marsha Garces. Also, has he sworn off drinking and drugs?—Mona Johnson, Detroit, Mich.

A Robin Williams, 36, star of the old "Mork and Mindy" TV series and the memorable movie "Good Morning, Vietnam," has divorced his first wife, the former Valerie Velardi, 37—mother of their son Zachary, 6—and married Marsha Garces, 32. Robin and Marsha are expecting an infant any minute now, if it hasn't arrived already. Robin has turned over a new leaf as regards drugs and drink.

Commemorating the 200th anniversary of the United States Presidency

THE AMERICAN PRESIDENCY BICENTENNIAL BOWL

An officially authorized work of art, issued under the auspices of the Commission on the Bicentennial of the United States Constitution

A single, limited edition, available exclusively from Lenox

Two hundred years ago, in a simple ceremony at New York City's Federal Hall, George Washington took the oath of office as the first President of the United States—vowing to "preserve, protect and defend" the Constitution of our young nation.

Now, the official Commission on the Bicentennial of the Constitution has authorized the creation of a magnificent commemorative to honor both the office of President and the forty distinguished Americans who served in it.

Elegantly decorated in the style of the Federal Period, The American Presidency Bicentennial Bowl is a distinctive work of art, as beautiful as it is symbolic. Inside the bowl will be a design of thirteen stars of pure 24 karat gold, honoring each of the original states. Around the outside of the bowl are delicate sprays of cherry blossoms in honor of our first President. And, above the blossoms, forty stars of 24 karat gold encircle the bowl. A tribute to each of the men who have served our country in this great office.

The American Presidency Bicentennial Bowl will be issued in a single edition, available only until May 1990, the end of the anniversary year. The base of the bowl will bear the official emblem of the Commission. And each bowl will be accompanied by a signed Certificate of Authenticity, confirming its status as a limited edition commemorative.

A Fourth Of July Message By George Bush, President Of The United States

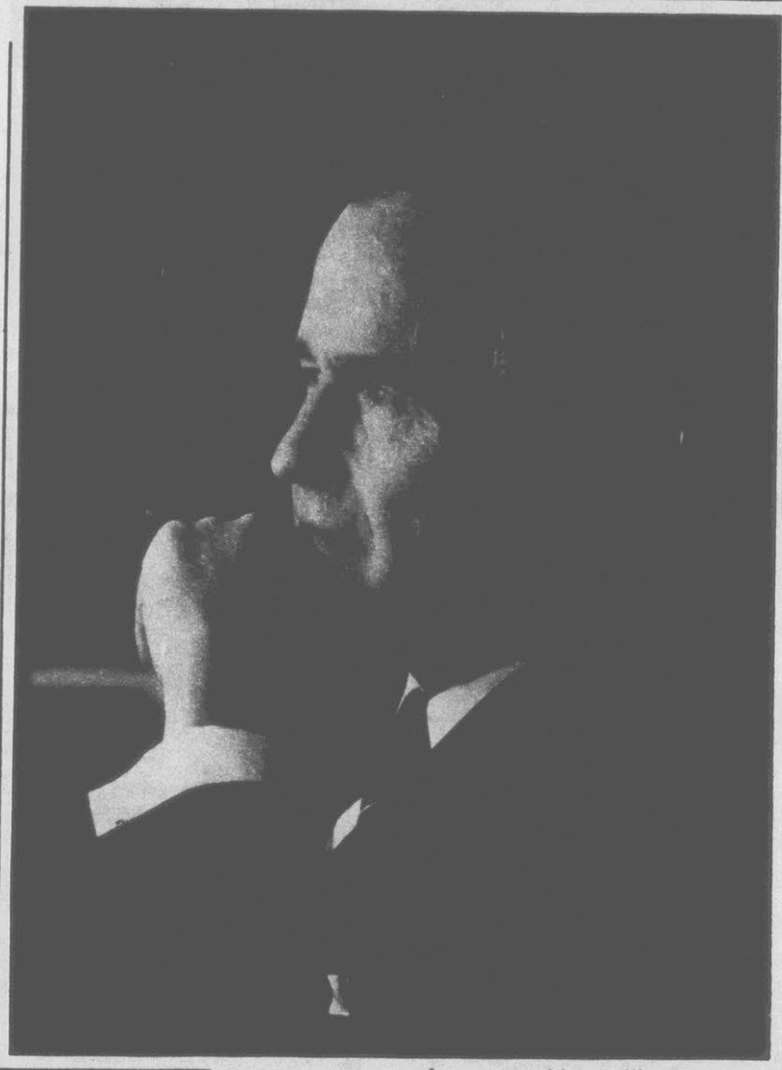
ONE OF MY FONDEST memories is a morning during the campaign when our grandchildren burst into the bedroom, screaming and giggling as they jumped on the bed. They had decided to "surprise" us—and it quickly became mayhem. Someone snapped a picture of that special moment, and I can't help but smile every time I see it. We don't often get the chance to have the whole family together, and I wouldn't trade the times we have had.

Every family has its own spirit of life, a soul of its own, unlike any other. And yet there are experiences that we, as members of families, share as a function of the human condition—no matter what part of the country we are from, no matter what the size and composition of our families.

Most of us know what it is like to see the newest baby in the family come home for the first time, or the laughter and joy of greeting family members around the table for a holiday meal. Most of us know, too, the everyday dramas of figuring out the family budget, of caring for a sick child, helping a lonely friend or relative far away. The concerns that any one of us has had as a parent are the concerns of all parents: that our children grow up in a safe environment with a good education and that they be given the same opportunities as anyone else's children.



Eddie Adams

Volker/The White House

This weekend, many of us are with family and friends, celebrating the holiday in the backyard or at a picnic. The wonder of the Fourth of July lies not only in fireworks and parades, the sparklers and bunting, but most of all in the singular tradition we are celebrating as Americans.

Our philosophy of government and our economic system, while the model for so many others, are truly unique. Our Constitution is the oldest blueprint of government in continual use in the world. We have set a standard for mankind, and, as leaders of the free world, we also have certain responsibilities.

Just as we would protect a brother or a sister or our children, we must keep a vigilant watch against those who threaten our freedoms and those of our allies. Our country was born because courageous men and women sought freedom from oppression, and we must never forget them or their brave deeds. By helping others who are now fighting for freedom and justice, we honor our past and ensure the future.

Next week, I will travel to Paris, not only to meet with our allies for an economic summit but also to join with our French friends as they celebrate their national bicentennial. The struggle for freedom that began 214 years ago at Lexington and Concord was a new breeze blowing across the Atlantic that also inspired the French in their revolution—and now both the United States and France are two of the strongest democracies in the world.

That desire for freedom from tyranny inspired the world and still does. Look on the back of any dollar bill, and you'll see it: The Great Seal of the United States bears the motto novus ordo seclorum, meaning "a new order of the ages." An important new chapter of world history began on July 4, 1776. Our devotion to high principles and our willingness, if necessary, to fight for those principles—for ourselves and others—have helped to secure America's leadership in the family of nations.

One of our greatest Presidents, Teddy Roosevelt, believed this. He told his fellow Americans:

"...the history of America is now the central feature of the history of the world; for the world has set its face hopefully toward our democracy; and, O my fellow citizens, each one of you carries on your shoulders not only the burden of doing well for the sake of your own country, but the burden of doing well and of seeing that this nation does well for the sake of mankind."

Each of us—within our communities, our businesses, our families—is responsible for the greater good of our country. It's the key to winning the fight against drug abuse—by standing up to the threat in our own lives, each of us, individually. It's the key to protecting the environment—by each of us leaving the world better than we found it. It's the key to keeping America competitive—by knowing that the work we do today in our offices and factories affects the nation's output in the world marketplace tomorrow. It's also the key to improving education—by realizing that the quality of each child's education spells the success of the next generation of Americans. For, as with a family, if one of us suffers because of drug abuse, poor education or business troubles, we all suffer.

We must decide individually that we are going to make a difference. For isn't that why we're here—to live a life of meaning?

We must decide that individually we are going to make a difference... That's why we're here—to live a life of meaning

.eal leadership comes from the peop and manifests itself in a responsible and responsive process called governance. But, in the end, each of us must chart a course for our own lives and the lives of our families. If we work through our own communities and our businesses to change things for the better, we will change the nation for the better. We will change the world for the better. Each of us, in our own lives, will do it.

The power of the people to do good—that is what will prevail, for that is what prevailed at the founding of this nation. Those who wanted to change things for the better stood up, spoke out and fought for what they believed in.

Standing up, speaking out and fighting for what is right is the true meaning of responsible citizenship. It is the ultimate power of democracy. And, most important, it is what we as families are celebrating on the Fourth of July—for ourselves, for our children and for the sake of humankind. God bless America and her families.

Mucho macho: Cops Glover (l) and Gibson

Lethal Weapon 2, recreating the $60 million Mel Gibson-Danny Glover chemistry that made the fast-paced original such a 1987 smash, is positioned to be one of the summer's hottest flicks. This time, the two cops, renegade Gibson and by-the-book family man Glover, risk their lives to protect a federal witness from some South African bad guys. Civil Rights and Wrongs

This month we'll get two terrific movies on tape, each with standout performances: Mississippi Burning is the fictional retelling of a true story—the 1964 murders of three civil-rights workers, in Mississippi to register black voters. Gene Hackman plays an FBI man who searches for their killers (Orion, July 27). True Believer, a thriller, stars James Woods as a former civil-rights lawyer who became a cynical defender of drug-dealers. He regains his passion for justice when he is prodded by his sidekick (Robert Downey Jr.) to investigate an 8-year-old murder case—and realizes that an innocent man has been railroaded to prison (Columbia, July 13).

TELEVISION

WHALE OF A STORY

TV anchor Jane Pauley, a mother herself, starts off the new shows on Reading Rainbow this summer by reading children "Humphrey the Lost Whale: A True Story." And host LeVar Burton spends a day at sea, learning the mysteries of the humpback whale. It's this kind of mix that has brought Reading Rainbow happily into its seventh season of inspiring beginning readers ages 5 to 8 to pick up a book for pleasure. PBS.

• Fireworks bursting over the Washington Monument, Pearl Bailey leading an audience of thousands to sing "God Bless America" and "Battle Hymn of the Republic," James Galway playing a flute solo with the National Symphony Orchestra in "The Stars and Stripes Forever"... Truly A Capital Fourth 1989. PBS.

RECORDINGS

From the Orchestras

Georges Bizet wrote brilliant and beautiful music, and some of the best of it is brilliantly and beautifully played on an MCA Classics compact disc (CD) by Rafael Frühbeck de Burgos and the London Symphony Orchestra. Included on this splendid record are the Carmen Suite and L'Arlésienne Suites Nos. 1 and 2.

• A familiar orchestral warhorse, Rimsky-Korsakov's Scheherazade, is freshened up by Zubin Mehta and the Israel Philharmonic on a CBS compact disc that also includes the same composer's Russian Easter Overture. An excellent collection of Mendelssohn Overtures is ably presented by the Bamberg Symphony Orchestra, led by Claus Peter Flor (RCA Victor). Included is probably the greatest seascape in all music, Fingal's Cave or the Hebrides Overture.

• For a 20th-century orchestral showpiece, EMI/Angel has released Prokofiev's Romeo and Juliet Suites Nos. 1 and 2, played with vigor by Mariss Jansons and the Oslo Philharmonic.

WHEN PRISONERS SAVE LIVES

BY MICHAEL RYAN

I MET LARRY MIZELL ON his first day back at work after a wrenching experience. At a church meeting the previous Sunday, his father had been stricken by a serious heart attack that would lead, the next week, to a quintuple-bypass operation. Mizell obviously was relieved that his father was recovering; he was especially grateful to the emergency personnel whose quick action may have saved his father's life. "The Johnson County ambulance service responded," Mizell remembered. "When it's a family member, you really feel good when you see professional care being given."

In a rural area like Johnson County, in downstate Illinois, it isn't surprising that Larry Mizell knew the men who'd helped save his father. What is surprising is how he knew them. Larry Mizell is the warden of the Vienna Correctional Center; the emergency medical technicians of the Johnson County ambulance service were inmates in his minimum-security prison. "Most people are stunned that we do this kind of thing in the community," Warden Mizell admitted.

In fact, most people are stunned when they see the Vienna Correctional Center. Built on a 3200-acre tract of woods and prairie, it is a collection of low-slung dorms, soaring chapels and airy common rooms that many a small college would envy. Inmates earn their way in, by demonstrating responsibility in higher-security prisons. All inmates are required to study and to work at jobs in the prison. They can earn a bachelor's degree or learn a trade. One course at Vienna prepares inmates for the state Emergency Medical Technician (EMT) licensing exam—and that fact became crucial a few years back, when the community around the prison developed a problem.

"Johnson County does not have a hospital," Karen Faulkner explained. Faulkner is the ambulance service's coordinator, the full-time civilian employee who supervises the inmate EMTs. "The nearest hospital is 22 miles away, so you can see the need." Funeral homes once provided ambulance service for the county, but they bailed out

"We have two ambulances," said Faulkner, "and, before the men from the correctional center, they were staffed by volunteers from the community. But the work just wore them down, to where there were just a handful left." Like most farming areas, Johnson County has suffered economically in recent years; there simply was no money to pay EMTs. "Without the men from the correctional center, we'd have nothing," she added.

County officials approached the prison administration and asked for help—but not without trepidation. "I think everybody had some second thoughts about inmates leaving the prison and going to work in the community," said Hartzel Black, who runs the center's educational programs. "Also, there may have potentially been a problem because Johnson County is all white and about half of our inmates are black. But the very first run our EMTs made was for an older white gentleman who had a heart attack right on the town square in Vienna. The inmates went to him—one black and one white, as it happened—and gave him mouth-to-mouth resuscitation and CPR. They got him going, put him into the ambulance and saved his life, and everybody saw it happen. That settled the issue."

I dropped in on Richard Johnson and Stanley Coleman in the ambulance service office, in the basement of the library across from Town Hall. Richard is 23, serving time for robbery; Stanley, 31, was sentenced for burglary. But when they talked shop, it was about a new and better calling.

"When I go back to my room at the institution," Richard said, "I go over the day's runs in my head. You keep asking yourself, 'Did everything go okay? What can I do better for the next patient?'"

"You know exactly what to do," Stanley said. "You have the training. But at that moment of crisis, you can't freeze. You've got to respond."

"We had one case," Richard recalled, "where we picked up a patient at a nursing home, and they wanted us to transport her to a particular hospital. But we took her vital signs and realized we had to get her to a hospital right away. We took her to one that was closer. They told us she had had a myocardial infarction, and the decision we made saved her life."

"I feel really good about that one," Stanley said.

Later, I walked across the street and found Sheriff Elry Faulkner. He was open-minded, to say the least, about the idea of having convicted felons working a few feet from his office. "They're good for the community," he said. "And it gives them a sense they can do something with their lives when they get out." There have been a few minor problems with inmates in the program—none large enough for the sheriff to recall specifically—but Faulkner suggested that inmate EMTs might be less likely to get in trouble again. The statistics seem to bear him out: One study found that 90 percent of the EMTs who had secured employment following their release were still free and employed after one year; about 40 percent of prisoners usually end up back in trouble.

But the greatest benefit of the Johnson County EMT program may be something you can't make a statistic out of: the change in people's hearts. "I've discovered that I like helping people," said Marty Duncan, 24, convicted as an accomplice in a burglary. "It's just a feeling you get when you have an 85-year-old woman hold your hand and look up and say, 'You're such a good man.' It blew my mind the first time I heard that." Duncan will be released later this year. He already has been accepted into a training program for paramedics, and he plans to make a career in the field. "Nothing ever grabbed me like this," he said, a broad smile lighting up his face. "I've got as good a chance as anybody right now."

FIRST MEN ON THE MOON $5 COMMEMORATIVE COIN

ISSUED PRECISELY 20 YEARS AFTER THE APOLLO 11 LANDING

An affirmation of American ingenuity and courage, available at the face value of only $5.00. Now you can hold a piece of history in your hand.

Twenty years ago, America landed the first men on the moon. And this year, the self-confident and heroic spirit that put America's flag on the moon's Sea of Tranquillity will be officially marked with the issuance of the First Men on the Moon $5 Commemorative Coin. This legal tender coin is being issued by the Republic of the Marshall Islands, where America has an important space tracking station.

The coin dramatically depicts the triumphant moment when American astronauts became the first men on the moon. About the same diameter as a Silver Dollar, the coin is even thicker — and painstakingly minted in a brilliant uncirculated finish. Each coin is protectively encased, after passing exacting minting standards, and is accompanied by an authoritative narrative.

This historic coin will be issued on the anniversary date — July 20, 1989 — and it will be minted only in 1989. It will be available only for a short time and in limited quantity. The coin is offered without any premium over its face value of $5.00, plus $1.00 per coin for shipping, handling, and insurance. To assure fair distribution, there is a strict limit of five coins per order.

BY MARILYN VOS SAVANT

I have given this problem to more than 100 people, including people with doctorates in math, and none of them gave me the right answer, even though I repeated it several times. And after I told them the answer, I had to run for my life!

There are two bugs in a gallon jar. Every minute, the number of bugs doubles. If the jar is filled in half an hour, how long is it before the jar is only half filled?

—Sol Lubitsch, West Palm Beach, Fla.

This one is truly a delight. As you know, the answer is 29 minutes. If the jar—no matter what its size—is filled in 30 minutes, and if the number of bugs doubles every minute, there would be only half as many bugs one minute before that.

And can you guess how many bugs there would be if two bugs double only 30 times? About 2 billion!

Who recuperates first, the person who does physical labor or the person who does mental work?

—Anonymous

I'd say it's the person who performs manual labor, because our bodies are far more forgiving than our minds. Our muscles have long forgotten the marathon we ran last year, but our minds will always remember the feeling of finishing last. Or first. Or in the middle, anonymous.

Would you rather be well liked or well respected?

—Charles Hubbard Jr., Fort Wayne, Ind.

I think I'd rather be well respected. Both are positive qualities, but being highly valued sounds far more substantial than being extremely popular. I guess you'd have to count me in as one of those few people who would rather be Isaac Newton than Wayne Newton (except maybe on weekends).

One of the world's most beautiful and unique creatures . . . now portrayed as few people will ever see them. "The Panda," a historic first issue sponsored by the Wildlife Society.

The result of naturalist artist Will Nelson's extraordinary journey to the giant panda preserve in the rugged mountains of Szechwan, China, "The Panda" collector's plate is crafted in full color on exquisite W. S. George fine china. And like exceptional first issues that now command hundreds of dollars on the plate market, "The Panda" appears to have what it takes to go up in value after the edition closes.

Not every plate goes up in value, some go down. But the edition of "The Panda" is strictly limited to a maximum of 150 firing days, and demand is expected to be strong. So if you wish to obtain this plate at the $27.50 issue price, please act soon. I'm curious to know how many telephone numbers one can get out of the digits 1 through 10—not including long-distance numbers. Please tell me how you solved the problem too.
—Denise Kolb, Denver, Colo.

About 9 million, and here's the explanation:

Let's first assume that you mean the digits 0 through 9, because there is no "10" on the telephone dial. There are 10 different digits, then, that can take the first place in the row of seven places (the number of places in the standard telephone number). Each of these 10 can occur with any one of 10 different digits that can take the second place in the row. Therefore, there are 10 x 10 ways of filling the two places. And each of these 10 x 10 can occur with any one of 10 different digits that can take the third place in the row, and so forth. This means that there are 10 x 10 x 10 x 10 x 10 x 10 x 10, or 10 million ways of filling all seven places.

However, telephone numbers never begin with "0," so let's adjust the mathematics accordingly, putting a "9" in the first place. This means there are 9 x 10 x 10 x 10 x 10 x 10 x 10, or only 9 million ways of filling all seven places. Of course, there are other restrictions on phone numbers: For example, we never see the number 100-0000—but you get the idea.

Which is more the case, "Take care of the little things, and the big things will take care of themselves," or "Take care of the big things, and the little things will take care of themselves"?
—Bob Hitz, Lincoln, Neb.

I'd definitely take care of the big things myself. After all, when things take care of themselves, how often do you like the way they turn out?

—Thomas Comis, Troy, N.Y.

Yes, of course. But some are violins, some are fountain pens and some are stethoscopes. And others are just washboards.

'How Long Do You Want To Stay?'

"LOVE IS NOT JUST A word here," Barbara Kuras told me. "Everything here is handled in a loving way." There was a quiet serenity to her face as she said that, a peacefulness that you would not expect from a woman who, in the last two years, had lost her job, been severely injured in a car crash, then reduced to living in the cab of a pickup truck. There was an assurance that, physically, emotionally and financially, she would recover. And finally there was gratitude that, at the worst moment of her life, she had discovered two extraordinary people—Joy and Wayne Davis.

Last fall, homeless and frail, Barbara had knocked on the door of a cream-colored frame building in Loganville, Ga. When Joy Davis let her in, the only question was, "How long do you want to stay?" Barbara had found a place where she could put her life back together.

They open their home to anyone in need. They know all about being down on your luck.

There are shelters for the homeless all over this country—though far too few. There are facilities for people recuperating from illness—if they can afford them. But the place Barbara Kuras came to is not an institution at all. It is the Davises' private home, which they have thrown open, free of charge, to anyone who comes to them in need. Over the years, more than 100 people have stayed here. At times, as many as 14 men, women and children have filled the spare beds and pullout couches and shared the single bathroom of the two-story house. "We like to see a smile on people's faces," Wayne Davis said. "We like to see people enjoying themselves and having peace."

Rob Nelson

Joy and Wayne Davis (at gate) with recent guests (l-r) Corita Lee, Sandra Hicks, Gloria Cary, Barbara Kuras, Stevie Hicks: They've shared their home at times with as many as 14.

Both Wayne and Joy know what it means to be down on your luck. In 1973, Joy came back to Georgia from Germany with three children and a broken marriage to a military man. She had no money and no prospects, but her mother was willing to dig into her savings for a down payment so Joy could buy the house in Loganville. Joy took a low-paying job in a sewing factory. "It was a miserable life," she recalled. Still, when a local woman had marital problems, Joy invited her and her young son to stay at the big old house. Then another woman, a GI bride from Japan with two kids, was deserted by her husband. Joy took them in.

Joy married Wayne Davis in 1976. While they set to work building up the farm they had bought, relatives used the house in town. Joy's kids grew up and moved out on their own. Then came Nov. 19, 1980, which Joy still calls "that fatal day." Wayne had taken a roofing job with a local contractor. He fell from a house

Nicorette® (nicotine polacrilex)

PATIENT INFORMATION

Description: Nicorette is a sugar-free, flavored chewing gum that is used to help you stop smoking cigarettes. Each piece of gum contains 2 mg of nicotine which is released by chewing. The nicotine is absorbed through the lining of the mouth and enters the bloodstream.

Use: Nicorette is used as a temporary aid to help you stop smoking. Your use of Nicorette must be combined with a stop-smoking program that includes education, counseling, and psychologic support under the guidance of your doctor or dentist. This combined approach gives you a better chance of overcoming the social habits as well as the chemical (nicotine) dependency involved in smoking.

NICORETTE SHOULD BE USED ONLY WHEN YOU ARE SURE THAT YOU WISH TO STOP SMOKING CIGARETTES IMMEDIATELY AND COMPLETELY.

Nicorette, because it is a source of nicotine, may decrease the frequency and severity of nicotine withdrawal symptoms which some people experience when smoking is stopped. Some of these withdrawal symptoms are cravings for cigarettes, irritability, anxiety, difficulty in thinking, restlessness, headache, drowsiness, and stomach upset.

YOU SHOULD NOT USE NICORETTE:

1. If you are a child under age 18
2. If you are a nonsmoker
3. If you have problems (muscle or joint) with your jaw, such as TMJ
4. IF YOU ARE OR MAY BECOME PREGNANT.
5. If you are breast feeding.

Current medical opinion considers that nicotine in any form may be harmful to an unborn child. Your doctor may wish to give you a pregnancy test before prescribing Nicorette. If you decide to use Nicorette and are in the childbearing years, an effective form of birth control is advised. If you suspect that you are pregnant, you should stop using Nicorette and talk to your doctor at once. Nicotine in any form passes freely into breast milk and may be harmful to the breast-fed infant.

TO ASSESS THE BENEFIT OF USING NICORETTE AS A TEMPORARY AID TO HELP YOU STOP SMOKING COMPARED WITH THE RISK OF CONTINUING TO SMOKE CIGARETTES, YOU SHOULD CONSULT WITH YOUR DOCTOR OR DENTIST BEFORE USING THE DRUG IF YOU HAVE ANY OF THE FOLLOWING CONDITIONS:

1. Heart disease, a history of heart disease, or believe you are being treated for heart disease
2. High blood pressure, diabetes mellitus (sugar diabetes), thyroid disease, ulcers, or glandular (endocrine) conditions
3. Dental problems, dentures, or bridges (Nicorette, as with other gums, may stick to or damage dental work.)
4. Allergy or sensitivity to any of the ingredients in Nicorette.

Drug Interactions: Stopping smoking with or without the use of Nicorette may affect your response to other medications. If you are taking other drugs in addition to Nicorette, please discuss with your doctor the possible need for adjustment of those medications.

Side Effects: Side effects of Nicorette which may occur include light-headedness, nausea and vomiting, throat and mouth irritation, hiccups, and stomach upset. Most of these side effects are controlled by chewing more slowly. Other effects sometimes seen include mouth ulcers, jaw muscle ache, headaches, heart palpitations, and more than the usual amount of saliva in the mouth. If these effects occur, they usually do so during the first few days of therapy. In addition, the mechanical effects of gum chewing (any gum) may include injury to the mouth or teeth, jaw ache, and belching from swallowing air. These side effects may also be reduced by proper chewing technique. There are other less common side effects which have been reported with the use of Nicorette. Your doctor can answer questions you may have about possible side effects.

IMMEDIATELY REPORT ANY DISTURBING OR UNEXPECTED SYMPTOMS OR CONCERNS TO YOUR DOCTOR.

Drug Abuse and Dependence: You may transfer your dependence on the nicotine in cigarettes to a dependence on the nicotine in Nicorette. After you have used Nicorette for three months, the amount of gum used each day should be gradually reduced to decrease the risk of nicotine dependence, so that before the end of six months, you should have stopped using the gum. Prolonged use of Nicorette for longer than is recommended does not improve your chances of quitting the smoking habit.

THE USE OF NICORETTE BEYOND SIX MONTHS IS NOT RECOMMENDED.

Overdosage: Nicotine overdosage may occur if many pieces of Nicorette are chewed at the same time or one right after the other. Risk of poisoning from swallowing the gum is small because the nicotine in Nicorette is not well absorbed from the stomach and intestines. Signs and symptoms of overdose may include nausea, increased saliva, stomach pain, vomiting, diarrhea, cold sweats, headache, dizziness, changes in hearing and/or vision, confusion, and weakness.

IF AN OVERDOSAGE OCCURS OR A CHILD CHEWS OR SWALLOWS THE GUM, CONTACT YOUR DOCTOR OR LOCAL POISON CONTROL CENTER IMMEDIATELY.

Dosage: The amount of Nicorette gum needed will vary with each person. The gum should be chewed slowly on and off for about 30 minutes whenever you feel the urge to smoke. If the gum is chewed too quickly, nicotine is released too rapidly causing some people to feel light-headed, dizzy, or nauseated, or to have belching, hiccups, or an irritation of the mouth and throat.

Most people require 10-12 pieces per day during their first month of treatment. More or less may be needed by the individual person.

YOU SHOULD NOT USE MORE THAN 30 PIECES OF NICORETTE PER DAY.

Nicorette® (nicotine polacrilex) is the only prescription medicine developed to help you stop smoking. Properly used in a treatment program, Nicorette can double your chances of quitting successfully. See your doctor and ask whether Nicorette is right for you. You may be on your way to quitting for good.

Nicorette should be used as part of a stop-smoking program.

Chances are, you've been smoking for years, and it will take time to break the habit. Along with Nicorette, your doctor or pharmacist can recommend a program that's right for you. You may also call your local hospital about other programs that are available.

and broke his back. During the long months of recovery, Joy milked cows to buy gas for her visits to the hospital. The family sold off their farm equipment, piece by piece, and even parted with their livestock to stay afloat. "People who heard about what happened would come and give us little donations," Joy recalled. "I thank God for the people who helped." Looking back, Wayne said, "I realized then that people don't mind helping when a person really needs it."

The couple moved back in the Loganville house when Wayne left the hospital. They decided then to help others the way they had been helped. Once, Joy had opened her house to a few people in need. Now, they decided their house would be open to anybody who needed a place to stay.

"Isn't it dangerous to take complete strangers into your home?" I asked. "We don't worry," Wayne explained. "We have strict rules—no smoking, drinking or drugs of any kind, on or off the premises. We sit down with people and explain the rules in advance. We find that the kind of people who might cause meanness in here don't want to stay around after they hear the rules."

Sitting in the roomy kitchen, you marvel that the house has stood up so well to all the strangers who have passed through. Joy explained that the people who have benefited from life in this house have also helped keep it in good shape: "We have chores for everyone, every day—clean, polish the furniture and so forth. Everybody is required to clean up his own mess and follow the courtesy rules for use of the kitchen and bathroom."

The Davises believe that encouraging a sense of discipline helps people get back on their feet. "Ninety-nine percent of the people that come in are able to get themselves started again," Wayne said. "With others, if they aren't capable of taking care of themselves, we take them to the health department and the welfare department, help them qualify for assistance and a place to live."

There have been sacrifices, personal and financial. "Once in a while," said Wayne, "there won't be anyone living here, and we have all kinds of privacy, just Joy and me. I miss that sometimes." Joy admitted that she often worries about the cost of groceries and supplies; but with donations and faith, they get by. "I feel that doing this really brings me and Wayne close together," she said.

They both act surprised at the notion that what they are doing is any big deal, anything worth writing about. To them, it just seems natural to open your house to people who need your help. "If every third home in this country could take in just one homeless person and see them through their problems, we wouldn't have a homeless problem," Joy said. That may sound like a dreamer's solution, but if every third home belonged to people like the Davises, it just might work.

CAUTION

DESCRIPTION

Nicorette (nicotine polacrilex) contains nicotine bound to an ion exchange resin in a sugar-free flavored chewing gum base. Nicotine is absorbed through the buccal mucosa when Nicorette is chewed. Each piece of Nicorette contains nicotine polacrilex equivalent to 2 mg nicotine and also contains flavors, glycerin, gum base, sodium bicarbonate, sodium carbonate, and sorbitol. Nicorette is to be used as an adjunct to smoking cessation programs. The chemical name for nicotine is (S)-3-(1-methyl-2-pyrrolidinyl) pyridine.

INDICATION AND USAGE

Nicorette is indicated as a temporary aid to the cigarette smoker seeking to give up his or her smoking habit while participating in a behavioral modification program under medical or dental supervision.

The efficacy of Nicorette as an aid to smoking cessation was demonstrated in clinical studies which showed that Nicorette gum, in comparison to control chewing gums, increased the likelihood of smoking cessation among participants in behavioral modification programs. As used in the context of this labeling, behavioral modification refers to supervised programs of education, counseling and psychologic support. The efficacy of Nicorette use without concomitant participation in a behavioral modification program has not been established.

In general, smokers who have a high "physical" type of nicotine dependence are most likely to benefit from the use of Nicorette. The following subject characteristics are correlated with a "physical" type of nicotine-dependence: (1) smoke more than 15 cigarettes per day, (2) prefer brands of cigarettes with nicotine levels greater than 0.9 mg/cigarette, (3) usually inhale the smoke frequently and deeply, (4) smoke the first cigarette within 30 minutes of arising, (5) find the first cigarette in the morning the hardest to give up, (6) smoke more frequently during the morning than the rest of the day, (7) find it difficult to refrain from smoking in places where it is forbidden, or (8) smoke even when they are so ill they are confined to bed most of the day.

The benefits of Nicorette use beyond three months have not been demonstrated.

CONTRAINDICATIONS

Nicorette is contraindicated in patients during the immediate post myocardial infarction period, patients with life-threatening arrhythmias, and patients with severe or worsening angina pectoris. (See WARNINGS.)

Also, Nicorette is contraindicated in patients with active temporomandibular joint disease.

Current medical opinion indicates that nicotine in any form may be harmful to an unborn child. Nicorette and cigarettes both contain nicotine.

Nicorette may cause fetal harm when administered to a pregnant woman.

Use of cigarettes or Nicorette during the last trimester has been associated with a decrease in fetal breathing movements. These effects may be the result of decreased placental perfusion caused by nicotine. Rare reports of miscarriages have been received, and a relationship to drug therapy as a contributing factor cannot be excluded. Studies in pregnant rhesus monkeys have shown that maternal nicotine administration produced acidosis, hypoxia and hypercarbia in the fetus.

Nicotine has been shown to be teratogenic in mice treated subcutaneously with 25 mg/kg, which is approximately 300 times the human buccal dose. Studies in rats and monkeys have not demonstrated a teratogenic effect of nicotine in doses which would occur during cigarette smoking.

Nicorette is therefore contraindicated in women who are or may become pregnant, and female patients should be advised to take adequate precautions to avoid becoming pregnant. The physician may wish to consider a pregnancy test before instituting therapy with Nicorette. If this drug is used during pregnancy, or if the patient becomes pregnant while taking this drug, the patient should be apprised of the potential hazard to the fetus.

WARNINGS

The risks of nicotine in patients with certain cardiovascular and endocrine diseases should be carefully weighed against the benefits of including Nicorette in a smoking cessation program in these patients. Specifically, patients with coronary heart disease (history of myocardial infarction and/or angina pectoris), serious cardiac arrhythmias, or vasospastic diseases (Buerger's disease, Prinzmetal variant angina) should be carefully screened and evaluated before Nicorette is prescribed. Occasional reports of tachyarrhythmias occurring in association with the use of Nicorette have been reported; therefore, if an increase in cardiovascular symptoms occurs with the use of Nicorette, it should be discontinued.

As the action of nicotine on the adrenal medulla (release of catecholamines) does not appear to be affected by tolerance, Nicorette should be used with caution in patients with hyperthyroidism, pheochromocytoma or insulin-dependent diabetes. Cigarette smoking is felt to play a perpetuating role in hypertension and peptic ulcer disease. Therefore, Nicorette should be used in patients with systemic hypertension or peptic ulcer (active or inactive) only when the benefits of including Nicorette in a smoking cessation program outweigh the risks.

PRECAUTIONS

Nicorette should be used with caution in patients with oral or pharyngeal inflammation and in patients with a history of esophagitis or peptic ulcer.

The dosage form of Nicorette dictates that it be used with caution in patients whose dental problems might be exacerbated by chewing gum. In such patients prior dental evaluation may be advisable.

Nicorette is sugar-free and has been formulated to minimize stickiness. As with other gums, however, the degree to which Nicorette may stick to dentures, dental caps or partial bridges may depend on the materials from which they are made and other factors such as amount of saliva produced, possible interaction with denture adhesives, denture cleaning compounds, dryness of mouth due to other causes and salivary constituents. Should an excessive degree of stickiness to dental work occur, there is the possibility that as with other gums, Nicorette may damage dental work; if this should occur, the patient should discontinue its use and consult a physician or dentist.

The sustained use of Nicorette by ex-smokers is not to be encouraged because the chronic consumption of nicotine is toxic and addicting. The physician must, however, weigh the relative risks of a possible return to smoking versus continued, long-term use of the gum.

Information for Patients: The patient instruction sheet is attached at the end of the professional labeling text. It is intended for detachment by the pharmacist and inclusion in the package of Nicorette dispensed to the patients. It contains important selected information on patient selection, risks and adverse effects and instructions on how to use Nicorette properly.

Drug Interactions: Smoking cessation, with or without nicotine substitutes, may alter response to concomitant medication in ex-smokers. Smoking is considered to increase metabolism and thus lower blood levels of drugs such as pirvocaine, caffeine, theophylline, imipramine and pentazocine, through enzyme induction. Cessation of smoking may result in increased levels of these drugs. Absorption of glutethimide may be decreased, and the "first pass" metabolism of propoxyphene may be decreased by smoking cessation. Other reported effects of smoking, which do not involve enzyme induction, include reduced diuretic effects of furosemide and decreased cardiac output, and increased blood pressure with propranolol, which may also relate to the hormonal effects of nicotine. Smoking cessation may reverse these actions.

Both smoking and nicotine can increase circulating cortisol and catecholamines. Therapy with adrenergic agonists or with adrenergic blockers may need to be adjusted according to changes in nicotine therapy or smoking status.

Carcinogenesis, Mutagenesis, Impairment of Fertility: Nicotine was not mutagenic in the Ames Salmonella test.

Literature reports indicate that nicotine is neither an initiator nor a tumor-promoter in mice. There is inconclusive evidence to suggest that cotinine, an oxidized metabolite of nicotine, may be carcinogenic in rats. Cotinine was not mutagenic in the Ames Salmonella test.

Pregnancy: Pregnancy Category X. (See CONTRAINDICATIONS.)

Nursing Mothers: Nicotine passes freely into the breast milk. Because of the potential for serious adverse reactions in nursing infants from nicotine, a decision should be made whether to discontinue nursing or to discontinue the drug, taking into account the importance of the drug to the mother.

Pediatric Use: Safety and effectiveness in children and adolescents who smoke have not been evaluated.

ADVERSE REACTIONS

Adverse reactions reported in association with the use of Nicorette include both local effects and systemic effects representing the pharmacologic action of nicotine. Rare reports of an apparent severe allergic reaction have been received.

Local side effects: Mechanical effects of gum chewing include traumatic injury to oral mucosa or teeth, jaw ache, and eructation secondary to air swallowing. These side effects may be minimized by modifying chewing technique. Oral mucosal changes such as stomatitis, glossitis, gingivitis, pharyngitis, and aphthous ulcers, in addition to changes in taste perception, can occur during smoking cessation efforts with or without the use of Nicorette.

Systemic side effects: Although the systemic effects seen in trials were generally similar, the reported frequency of adverse drug effects was highly variable, as illustrated by the variation observed in adverse event incidences estimated from the results of two well controlled studies (one performed in the United States, and the other in England) designed to evaluate the safety and efficacy of Nicorette. (See table, below.) Given this variability, the table can be used only as an indication of the relative frequency of adverse events reported in representative clinical trials. It can not predict expected incidences of these effects during the course of usual medical practice.

The only potentially serious systemic adverse effect observed among the 152 patients evaluated in the controlled clinical trials used to support the efficacy of Nicorette was cardiac irritability: a patient displayed what may have been nicotine-induced, but reversible, atrial fibrillation. Cardiac irritability is a well known consequence of cigarette smoking.

A 46-year old male patient participating in a clinical trial of Nicorette was reported to have developed nicotine intoxication requiring his hospitalization. After 4 days, he was discharged, fully recovered. He died suddenly one month later. Nicorette was not used during this one-month interval. The relationship of the patient's death to his prior treatment is undetermined. Since the marketing of Nicorette in the U.S., reports of several other deaths and reports including myocardial infarction, congestive heart failure, cerebrovascular accident and cardiac arrest have been received. A cause and effect relationship between these reports and the use of Nicorette has not been established.

In addition to the reported effects listed above, the following events have been reported: CARDIOVASCULAR–edema, flushing, hypertension, palpitations, tachyarrhythmias, tachycardia; CNS–confusion, convulsions, depression, euphoria, numbness, paresthesia, syncope, tinnitus, weakness; DERMATOLOGIC–erythema, itching, rash, urticaria; GASTROINTESTINAL–alteration of liver function tests, constipation, diarrhea; RESPIRATORY–breathing difficulty, cough, hoarseness, sneezing, wheezing; OTHER–dry mouth, systemic nicotine intoxication.

Rare reports of miscarriages have been received, and a relationship to drug therapy as a contributing factor cannot be excluded.

DRUG ABUSE AND DEPENDENCE

Dependence on the use of Nicorette gum has been reported. Such dependence may result from transference to Nicorette of tobacco-based nicotine dependence. The use of Nicorette beyond three months has not been demonstrated to increase the smoking cessation rate. Use beyond 3 months should be discouraged. To minimize the risk of dependence, after 3 months' usage, patients should be encouraged to gradually withdraw the next 3 months or stop gum usage altogether. (See DOSAGE AND ADMINISTRATION.) In patients who have used the gum for longer periods, gradual withdrawal should be instituted. (See PRECAUTIONS).

OVERDOSAGE

Overdosage could occur if many pieces were chewed simultaneously or in rapid succession. Risk of poisoning by swallowing the gum is small because absorption in the absence of chewing is slow and incomplete. The consequences of overdose will most likely be minimized by the early nausea and vomiting known to occur with excessive nicotine intake. However, toxic systemic effect may occur. Should an overdose occur, the symptoms would be those of acute nicotine poisoning. Symptoms and signs include nausea, salivation, abdominal pain, vomiting, diarrhea, cold sweat, headache, dizziness, disturbed hearing and vision, mental confusion and marked weakness. Faintness and prostration will likely ensue and hypotension may occur; breathing is difficult; the pulse may be rapid, weak and irregular; circulatory collapse may be followed by terminal convulsions. Death may result within a few minutes from respiratory failure caused by paralysis of the muscles of respiration.

The oral LD_{50} for nicotine in rodents varies with species but is in excess of 24 mg/kg. Death in rodents was due to respiratory paralysis. The oral minimum lethal dose of nicotine in dogs is greater than 5 mg/kg. The oral minimum lethal dose for nicotine in human adults is 40-60 mg.

TREATMENT OF OVERDOSAGE

In view of the lack of actual experience in the treatment of Nicorette overdose, the procedures recommended are those that have been suggested for the treatment of acute nicotine poisoning.

If emesis has not occurred, it should be induced with ipecac syrup in conscious patients. A saline cathartic will speed gastrointestinal passage of the gum. In unconscious patients with a secure airway, gastric lavage with a wide-bore tube followed by suspension of activated charcoal will aid in nicotine removal. Mechanical ventilation for respiratory paralysis may be necessary in severe nicotine poisoning. Hypotension and/or cardiovascular collapse may occur and should be treated vigorously.

HOW SUPPLIED

Nicorette is available in 2 mg (beige) square chewing pieces, packaged in child-resistant blister strips of 12 chewing pieces per strip with 8 strips per box. Each chewing piece contains nicotine polacrilex equivalent to 2 mg nicotine. Boxes of 96 chewing pieces, 2 mg (NDC 0068-0045-55). Store at room temperature, below 86°F (30°C). Protect from light.

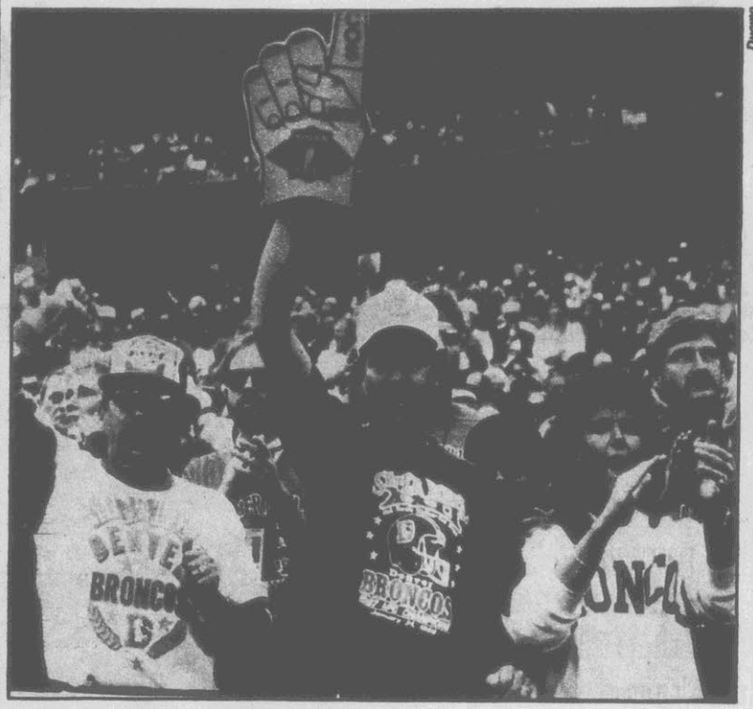
Should we raise the basket? Pay college athletes? Play Japan in a World Series? Here's how thousands of PARADE readers voted on these and other questions.



Photo

The Fans Speak

A total of 31,225 PARADE readers—ticket-purchasing American sports fans all—send this message to the proprietors and players who rake in the profits: The fans want a voice in how the games are played, how the players are chosen and how the fans are dealt with.

Associated SportsFans, an umbrella group comprised of more than 20 fan clubs of professional sports teams and organizations, periodically seeks the views of all fans through a PARADE survey. Here are the results of the latest one, published in PARADE on Nov. 27, 1988:

- Most fans say they don't think the basket in basketball should be raised.
- By a close vote, fans oppose a baseball World Series between Japan and the United States.
- Many fans say they don't think fans should pick all-star teams or select players for halls of fame.
- Those surveyed say they strongly oppose both letting colleges pay athletes and allowing the National Football League to draft them before their college eligibility expires.
- Most fans assert that owners should have the right to move their teams.
- Nearly all fans want baseball leagues to enforce the rules.
- Most want fewer teams in playoffs of the National Basketball Association and the National Hockey League.

Sports Quiz Answers

Here's how they voted on the questions, given below in condensed form:

1. Should fans pick the baseball All-Star team? Baseball's All-Star team once was selected by team managers. But the fans wanted a say; now they choose the starting players (except for pitchers). Many argue that ballot-stuffing by fans in some cities has hurt the chances of players from less popular teams. Should baseball's All-Star balloting still be left to the fans?

Yes 33% No 64% No opinion 3%

2. Should the basket in basketball be raised? The 7-foot-tall basketball player is now commonplace. Is it time to

Yes 46% No 52% No opinion 2%

3. Should college athletes be paid? Major college sports bring in millions of dollars each year for their schools. Yet college athletes go unpaid and often receive inferior educations. Should athletes be paid for playing college sports?
Yes 20% No 76% No opinion 4%

4. Should U.S. and Japanese baseball champions play for a world championship? For a true world championship contest, should the winning American World Series team play the winning Japanese World Series team?
Yes 47% No 50% No opinion 3%

5. Should owners be allowed to move their teams? Baltimore has no National Football League team since Robert Irsay, owner of the Colts, moved his team to Indianapolis. The former St. Louis Cardinals football team now plays in Phoenix. Should owners be allowed to move their teams at will?
Yes 62% No 37% No opinion 1%

6. Should baseball rules be strictly enforced? In baseball, more players are being accused of scuffing balls, corking bats and throwing spitballs. Some fans okay these as traditional. Others say they violate the rules and should be stopped. Should the rules be strictly enforced?
Yes 87% No 9% No opinion 4%

7. Should there be fewer teams in NBA and NHL playoffs? With 16 teams eligible for the basketball and hockey playoffs, some fans find regular-season games nearly meaningless. Should the number of playoff teams be cut back?
Yes 68% No 22% No opinion 10%

8. Should fans pick baseball and football Hall-of-Famers? The Pro Football Hall of Fame in Canton, Ohio, and the Baseball Hall of Fame in Cooperstown, N.Y., are shrines for sports fans. But fans are excluded from Hall of Fame balloting. Should fans help choose?
Yes 28% No 69% No opinion 3%

9. Should the NFL draft athletes before their college eligibility expires? NBA and Major League Baseball teams sign players before their college eligibility has expired. Should the NFL be allowed to do this too?
Yes 33% No 60% No opinion 7%

10. What should be included in a Fans' Code of Conduct? In our first sports fans' survey (April 10, 1988), 77% voted for a code of conduct. Now they've voted on including the following in the code:

A. Limit drinking at games.
Yes 76% No 21% No opinion 3%

B. Immediate ejection of any fan who interferes with play on the field.
Yes 96% No 1% No opinion 3%

C. Immediate ejection or arrest of any fan who causes a fight in the stands.
Yes 95% No 4% No opinion 1%

Donate Your Own Blood

THE FEAR OF GETTING hepatitis or AIDS has meant that more Americans are donating their own blood to themselves before elective surgery. Individuals usually give one unit of blood (just under a pint) a week for up to six weeks.

With your doctor's help, you too can arrange such an autologous donation through your local blood bank. For more information, write for the free fact sheet "Who Donates Better Blood for You Than You?" at the Consumer Information Center, Dept. 69, Pueblo, Colo. 81009.

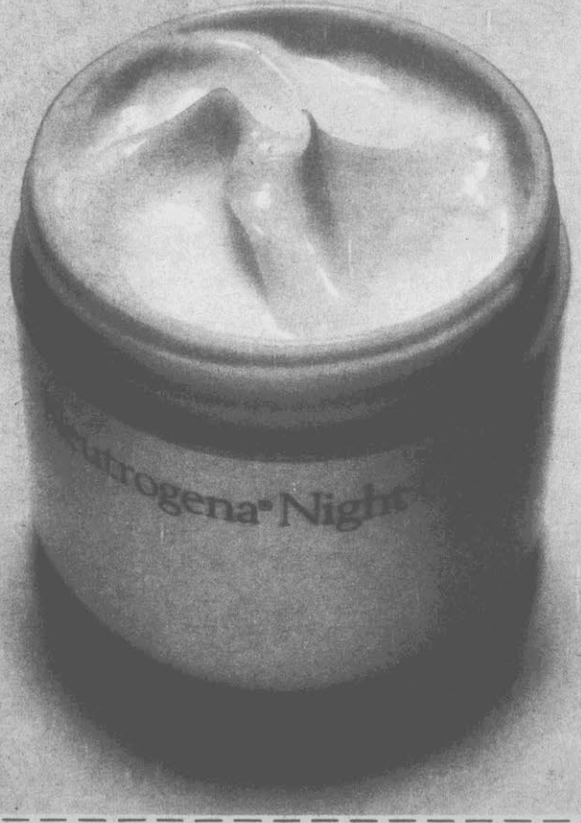
NIGHT CREAM:

Could lighter be better?

Recent tests show that heavy night creams actually may not moisturize well enough to help dry skin recuperate overnight. Worse, they can smother your face in a clogging, irritating film, and could even cause blemishes.

Neutrogena® researchers have found a solution. They've developed a night cream that can double your skin's moisture for 8 hours, yet feel so light, it's non-comedogenic (won't clog pores), and be so safe, your skin isn't just softer and smoother in the morning, it looks healthier.

Look for hypo-allergenic, fragrance-free Neutrogena® Night Cream at your drug store. It's the light night cream that keeps up so well with the increasing demands of time, you'll never be old enough for the heavy ones.



For a limited time, at better drug stores, when you purchase Neutrogena Night Cream, you can send for a free travel-size kit containing samples of Neutrogena® Body Oil, Emulsion, and Rainbath® Shower & Bath Gel ($3.25 value). Just send front carton panel, your sales receipt, and this completed certificate to: Neutrogena Body Care Bonus, P.O. Box 2777, Los Angeles, CA 90051.

Love in Bloom

Steffi and Alex near her home in Germany

Steffi Graf, at 20 unarguably the world's No. 1 woman tennis player, reportedly is involved in her first love match—with Alex Mronz, 24, her handsome, 6-foot-4 countryman, who at this writing is No. 165 in the men's tennis rankings.

According to European sportswriters, Graf was attracted to Mronz when they were playing tournaments in Australia early in the year. Apparently the attraction developed into fondness, and the fondness into something more than that. The couple has been photographed at Steffi's home in Brühl, outside Cologne, and the talk in tennis circles is that they will announce their engagement before the year is out. With homes in Germany and Florida and an expanding portfolio of product-endorsement contracts—to say nothing of her prize-winnings—Graf already is a millionaire. Mronz is the son of a prominent Cologne architect.

Be Grateful

One of the major reasons Europeans like to motor around our country is the relatively low price of a gallon of gas. In England and France, the equivalent of a U.S. gallon will cost you about $3.

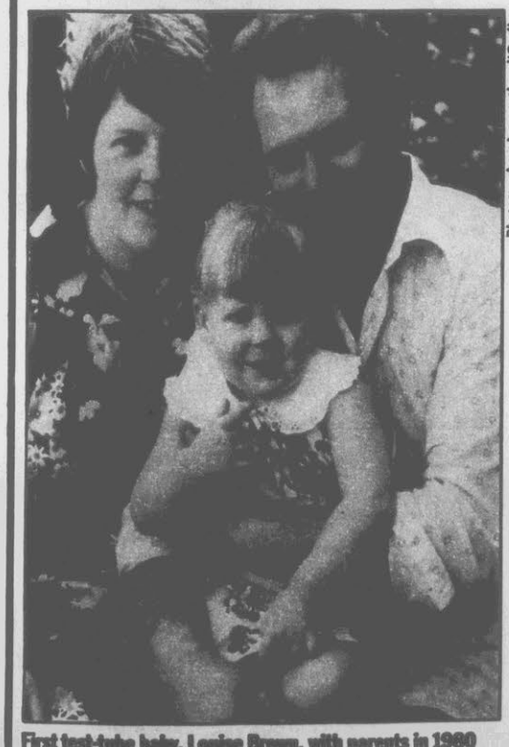
U.S. Universities Branching Out

At least three American universities —Temple, the University of Nevada at Reno and Southern Illinois University—have established branch campuses in Japan, with many more hoping soon to follow suit. Stanford University, for example, plans to open a branch this autumn in Kyoto. The Stanford Center will serve not only its own students but also those from Princeton, Brown, Columbia, Yale, Harvard, Cornell, Michigan and Chicago.

Temple University of Philadelphia, which in 1982 reportedly became the first American institution of higher learning to establish a branch campus in Tokyo, has about 500 Japanese undergraduates enrolled there, as well as 1200 taking its pre-entry intensive English-language course. Temple conducts its classes in English so that the Japanese students develop a high proficiency in the language and can study, if they so desire, at the university's campus in Philadelphia.

The internationalization of Japanese industry and finance has stimulated a rising need for English-speaking Japanese and Japanese-speaking Americans.

Report on Test-Tube Babies



Photographers International/Outline

First test-tube baby, Louise Brown, with parents in 1980

Early in April, about 1300 gynecologists and other fertility experts from 41 different nations convened in Jerusalem at the Sixth International Congress on In Vitro Fertilization. We asked a physician (not a gynecologist) who attended the convention if he had learned anything worth sharing with this reporter. Herewith his reply:

"I learned that since July 25, 1978—when Louise Brown, the world's first so-called 'test-tube baby,' was born in England—there have been approximately 15,000 in vitro births worldwide. Of that number, 5500 children reside in the United States. They were conceived in round, shallow glass dishes named after Julius Petri, a German bacteriologist who died in 1921.

"The term 'test-tube baby' is therefore a misnomer, but it's easier for the layman to picture a test tube than a petri dish in his mind's eye. Anyway, in addition to the United States, the countries that have produced the most in vitro fertilizations—in vitro is Latin for 'in glass'—are England, France, Australia, West Germany, Austria and Belgium, but not necessarily in that order.

"Doctors and scientists in all of those countries, I gathered, are busy beavers, trying to perfect or improve a fertilization method called gamete intrafallopian transfer, or GIFT for short. In that technique, a woman's ovum is fertilized by the man's sperm within the woman's body, rather than in a glass dish. The success rate for in vitro fertilizations ranges from 10% to 15%. In the GIFT method, I was told, the success rate is now 20% and even higher in some university clinics—as high as 30%.

"There is much exciting work being done in the field of donors. For example, one woman who has had her uterus removed had her eggs fertilized in vitro by her husband's sperm. She then had a resulting embryo implanted in another woman's uterus. The woman who donated her uterus hopefully will carry a baby to term, and the couple involved will pay her for her pregnancy. I learned that we're going to have more and more of that sort of thing."

Cloris Leachman

THIS SPRING AND SUMMER, CLORIS Leachman has been traveling America with an extraordinary stage play in which she stars as Grandma Moses—the fascinating artist who took up painting in her 70s, eventually was hailed as a genius of American Primitive art and died in 1961 at the age of 101.

In the production, Cloris ages from 45 to 100. Since I'd seen pictures of the makeup, I asked how long it took to put on. Cloris doesn't necessarily answer the question you ask; she tells you what she thinks is important for you to know.

"In the first act, I'm 45," she said, "wearing corsets and high-button shoes and petticoats and a wig ...and, as soon as the curtain comes down, I have to get out of that. Someone runs me across backstage, starting to undress me as I hit the door, and the dress comes off, then corsets off, and I'm slipping out of the old bra and into another, and I'm putting on facial makeup, base and powder as they dress me. As they finish my face, I do my hands, adding some old age stipple, and then I put on my ears." She paused. "Well, they're ear things, to push my ears out.

"And, at that moment, I become Grandma Moses."

That's how she thinks about acting, getting inside the character. "Like a Southern Baptist, I believe in being totally immersed," she said. "And as far as getting back to a live stage, I'm like an old fire horse. My nostrils flare, and the hair stands up at the back of my neck."

Her next project offers a change of pace—co-starring with Harvey Korman in a new NBC comedy series called Nutt House, written and produced by Mel Brooks. In it, Cloris plays the oversexed head of housekeeping for a family-owned New York City hotel.

She was born in Iowa. "Isolated, out in the country," she recalled. "No other children. So I took to the piano." And to other lively arts. In her teens, she had a radio show. Then came a scholarship to study theater at Northwestern. In 1946, she was a Miss America finalist. The Actors Studio in New York accepted her in 1948. Broadway, movies and a role as the mom in TV's Lassie followed.

In 1971 came The Last Picture Show and her Academy Award, then a continuing role as Phyllis on Mary Tyler Moore's show and a spinoff series of her own. And all the time she was raising five kids, now ranging in age from 23 to 35. Oh, yes, they all plan to see Mom play Grandma Moses when it comes to town.

She's divorced now. "I hate that word," she said. "I do love him for eternity and want him to have a wonderfully happy life. We're inextricably entwined. Ever."

I should have asked the question: "Why aren't you still with him?"

BORN: June 30, 1930, in Des Moines, Iowa.
FILMS: Include Kiss Me Deadly, 1955; Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid, 1969; The Last Picture Show, 1971; Daisy Miller, 1974; Young Frankenstein, 1974; High Anxiety, 1977; History of the World, Part I, 1981.
TV SERIES: Include Charlie Wild, Private Detective, 1950-52; Lassie, 1957-58; The Mary Tyler Moore Show, 1970-75; Phyllis, 1975-77; The Facts of Life, 1986-88.

Leachman in Grandma Moses—An American Primitive.

Cloris Leachman will be playing the painter Grandma Moses from age 45 to 100 on stage this week in Cleveland. Next stop: Pittsburgh.

BRADY'S BITS

"In Hollywood," Cloris said, "they wanted to cut off my nose and change my name. So I opened a phone book and just picked out a name. It was Leavitt. So I left it." She stays in touch with Mary Tyler Moore ("Oh, why can't they give her some good scripts?" she asked), as well as the old bunch from The Last Picture Show. "It's like you're all part of a fraternity," she said, "and you belong to it forever. You know, they wanted me to do Texasville [the Picture Show sequel], but I couldn't just walk out. Not on Grandma Moses."

GUIDE TO Better Fitness

BY MICHAEL O'SHEA, PH.D.

Clemens/International Stock Photography

Training plus balanced diet equals muscles.

Q I lift weights and I want to develop bigger muscles. Would taking protein supplements help?

A I don't believe protein supplements are necessary. In fact, studies have shown that strength and muscular endurance cannot be improved by increases in protein intake. If more protein is taken in than is needed, it will not be used to increase muscle size but will be stored as fat. Also, protein overloading may create side effects, such as kidney dysfunction, diarrhea and abdominal cramps.

You should eat a balanced diet that provides at least .8 grams of protein per kilogram (2.8 ounces for every 22 pounds) of body weight. Increase this amount if your strength-training routine is very intense. Your usual diet most likely provides you with enough protein already. (However, be sure you are getting "complete" protein—found in eggs, fish, poultry, meat and milk products—though eggs, meat and many milk products are also high in fat and cholesterol.)

Taking in an adequate amount of protein from complete sources, combined with a proper weight-training program, is the most practical approach to increasing muscle size.

Cover Story....

'Wimbledon'

By George Robinson

Steffi Graf is probably the least imposing-looking monster in sports, but make no mistake about it, she can shred anyone who stands between her and the fancy silverware that comes with each of the Grand Slam titles: She swept them all last year. This year, she won the Australian Open and still sported an imposing 47-2 match record after the French Open, where she was upset by Spain's Arantxa Sanchez. We will soon find out whether her defeat at the French Open was a fluke, but we think she will probably be unstoppable at Wimbledon.

When HBO and NBC air the 112th All-England Tennis Championships, that is what everyone will be speculating about. NBC coverage this week airs daily through Sunday, July 9.

"There's a tremendous amount of desire and spirit there," says Anne White of Graf. White is best-known for her eye-popping bodysuit appearance at Wimbledon a few years back, but is now a tennis analyst for USA Network. "Not only is she a fantastic tennis player; she is able to reach down from within if she's not feeling well." Graf, she adds, has no discernible weaknesses. "She's improved her volleys so much, and they'll get even better as she plays more doubles. As for her serve, I saw her down in San Antonio, and she was acing people three times in a row, something 'girls' don't do. That's what Becker does. Maybe her backhand (is weaker), but it's hardly a weakness."

If anyone can upset Graf, it might be a name out of the not-so-distant past: Martina Navratilova. But Navratilova's decision to skip the clay-court season and focus on Wimbledon was a controversial one. One former Wimbledon champ told us that it was a serious mistake, that "there is no substitute for playing in tournaments."

The men's field is a lot harder to handicap. With his first Australian title under his belt, Ivan Lendl seemed to have finally begun to slay some personal dragons, but his inability to put away a cramp-crippled Michael Chang in the quarters of the French raises new questions.

In the words of Rodgers and Hart, Mats Wilander's "mental state is all a-jumble." He doesn't seem to like tennis very much anymore. John McEnroe has to make up his mind whether he wants to play tennis or daddy. Wilander's compatriot Stefan Edberg takes a low-key approach to the game, one that is probably a help in the staid, tradition-minded Wimbledon atmosphere. Edberg, the defending Wimbledon champ who lost a hard-fought final in the French Open to Chang, actually lives in a London suburb, so Wimbledon is a short commute for him. Furthermore, his game is far better suited to Wimbledon's grass than the red clay of Stade Roland Garros. Although Chang, a Californian, acquitted himself brilliantly in the French, he may have more trouble on the faster, grass surface of Wimbledon.

Becker would be our choice, however, to win the event. A superb grass player and two-time Wimbledon champion, Becker has played well enough this year to be the No. 2 player in the world in the ATP rankings. He seems to have conquered his own uncertainties and is once more playing the assertive, powerful game that made him a star at the age of 17.

The People Next Door

Jeffrey Jones will portray a successful cartoonist with supernatural abilities in "The People Next Door," a new half-hour comedy series that will air on CBS in the 1989-90 season. His ability to make the fancies of his imagination spring to life creates a rather unusual family situation. The family members, played by Mary Gross, Jacyln Bernstein and Chance Quinn, react in a variety of ways while trying to live a normal, smalltown life.

Michele Will Tell

By Michele Marks

Dear Michele: I always found Billy Crystal an OK comedian, but after viewing the movie "Running Scared," I fell in love. Crystal was delightful! Now, I'd like to know all about him. — STACIE COCHRAN, GAITHERSBURG, MD.

Born March 14, 1947, in Long Beach, N.Y., Crystal is the youngest of three sons of a family that ran New York's Commodore jazz label. Following his 1970 graduation from New York University, he worked part-time off-Broadway and was a substitute teacher at a Long Beach junior high school. Soon, he was on tour with an improv act, but it wasn't until 1977's camp comedy series "Soap" that he got his big break. For four seasons, Crystal portrayed the gay Jodie Dallas on this ground-breaking ABC sitcom. Other early credits include the role of the first pregnant man in Joan Rivers' film flop "Rabbit Test" (1978) and "The Billy Crystal Comedy Hour," a 1982 NBC variety show canceled after just five airings. In the fall of 1984, Crystal became a regular on NBC's "Saturday Night Live,"and audiences were finally given the full scope of Crystal's talent. Since then, he has been on a reel roll, with hits like: "Running Scared" (1986), "Throw Momma From the Train" (1987), "The Princess Bride" (1987) and "Memories of Me" (1988). He married his college sweetheart, the former Janice Goldfinger, in 1970. The couple currently reside in Los Angeles with daughters Jenny, 16, and Lindsay, 11.

Dear Michele: Peter Deuel, who starred as Joshua Smith in the TV Western "Alias Smith and Jones," died in the early 1970s while the show was still in production. Can you tell me exactly when he died and under what circumstances? — SUE BOGGS, REDDING, CALIF.

In the early morning hours of Dec. 31, 1971, Deuel was found dead, sprawled under the Christmas tree in his living room, by girlfriend Diane Ray. He had been shot in the head with a .38 revolver.It was well-known in the Hollywood community that his home was a haven for out-of-work actors. Armed with this information, police initially doubted that it was a suicide and suspected that a jealous transient might have done him in. Later, however, when it was established that only Deuel and Ray were home at the time, suicide was ruled as the official cause of death. Deuel had had a drinking problem and had been subject to bouts of depression. Nonetheless, many insiders feel, to this day, that his death was either murder or an accident.

Dear Michele: I understand that Burt Mustin played Gus, the fire chief, on "Leave It to Beaver," and Joe E. Ross played Gunther Toody on "Car 54, Where Are You?" I haven't been able to locate further information on these two actors or their present whereabouts. — DEREK EUSTICE, LA SALLE, ILL.

Mustin was a retired auto salesman before he began an acting career in films and television at age 67. In addition to "Leave It to Beaver," he starred on "Date With the Angels" (1957-58 on ABC), "Ichabod and Me" (1961-62 on CBS), "The Andy Griffith Show" (as Jud Crowley, 1961-66 on CBS), "The Funny Side" (1971 on NBC) and "All in the Family" (as Justin Quigley, 1973-76 on CBS). In 1976, at the age of 92, Mustin made his final television appearance as oldtimer Arthur Larson on the CBS sitcom "Phyllis." He died Jan. 28, 1977.

A veteran night club performer, actor Joe E. Ross portrayed Mess Sgt. Rupert Ritzik on the old "Phil Silvers Show" (1955-59 on CBS). Following his role as Officer Gunther Toody on "Car 54, Where Are You?" (1961-63 on NBC), Ross appeared as the prehistoric Gronk on "It's About Time" (1966-67 on CBS). Ross died Aug. 13, 1982.

Dear Michele: Is Avery Brooks, the sexy star of "Spenser: For Hire" and "Hawk," married? Where does he live? — ELIZABETH CHANEY, GREENVILLE, N.C.

Brooks was born in Evansville, Ind., and raised in the steel town of Gary, Ind. He made his series debut in 1985, portraying the mysterious Hawk on ABC's "Spenser: For Hire." Prior to his prime-time debut, Brooks taught theater for 13 years at New Jersey's Rutgers University, the last five years as a tenured professor. The actor's wife, Vicki Brooks, is an assistant dean at Rutgers University. They have two children and maintain a New Jersey residence.

Soap Scoop

Daytime soaps gain a few and lose a few

By Connie Passalacqua

Genie Francis

There have been lots of heavy-duty comings and goings as daytime soaps made their last-minute preparations for summer. Appearing (or reappearing) almost out of nowhere on "General Hospital" is Jack Wagner as Frisco Jones. Rumors of Wagner's return have been so rife that they sounded as if they were coming straight from the beak of Chicken Little. But he's back in Port Charles, just in time to ruin the romance and/or marriage of his "widow" Felicia (played by Kristina Malandro) and Colton (played by Scott Thompson Baker).

Leaving "Days of Our Lives" is Genie Francis, who has come to the end of her contract as Diana Colville. Tabloids say that Francis wants to have a baby (she's wed to "Star Trek" 's Jonathan Frakes), but we'd wager that Francis was tired of the constant Sturm und Drang of playing the ever-victimized Diana. Befitting her past as Laura of "GH" 's mythical Luke and Laura, Francis was earning one of daytime's highest-ever salaries on "DOOL."

A real surprise was the leave-taking of Elizabeth Dennehy, who played Blake Lindsey on "Guiding Light." Dennehy was let go because the character is headed in a different direction, according to the producers. Dennehy has been one of the few genuinely interesting young actresses on daytime during the past few years. She received lots of publicity because of her resemblance to Glenn Close and because she is the daughter of actor Brian Dennehy. She continues her co-starring role in off-Broadway's "Tony and Tina's Wedding" and is sure to find plenty of success beyond daytime.

Also gone unexpectedly from "GL" is Nicolette Goulet, who plays Meredith Reade Bauer. Goulet, who is the daughter of singer/actor Robert Goulet and a longtime daytime fan favorite, wasn't helped much by the fact that she and Michael O'Leary (who plays Meredith's husband, Rick) were mismatched as a romantic pair. Goulet looked too mature for O'Leary and that made their characters look a bit, um, strange together.

On top of that, one of daytime's all-time best divas, Beverlee McKinsey (who plays Alexandra Spaulding on "GL"),will be disappearing from the screen – at least for the summer. McKinsey was in contract renegotiation for months and just couldn't come to an agreement with the show.

Sports Roundup

SUNDAY, JULY 2

Boxing (CBS)

Razor Ruddock vs. James "Bonecrusher" Smith in a heavyweight bout scheduled for 10 rounds, live from Fayetteville, N.C. Smith, the first college graduate ever to earn a piece of the heavyweight title, albeit briefly, is now a professional "opponent." Ruddock is a moderately talented Canadian fighter, working his way toward certain destruction at the hands of Mike Tyson.

Horse Racing, Canoeing (NBC)

Cycling (ABC)

Tour de France.

Tennis (NBC)

Wimbledon, early-round action, from Wimbledon, England.

PGA Golf (CBS)

Western Open, final-round action, live from Oak Brook, Ill. Jim Benepe, a product of nearby Northwestern University, won his first tour victory here last year. It was also his first tour start.

Senior Golf (ABC)

U.S. Senior Open, final-round action live from Ligonier, Pa. Bruce Crampton has a well-earned "iron man" reputation. "It started over here before I was married," he explains. "I didn't have a place in the States; everything was at home (in Australia). So for two years in a row, I came over here and played 37 straight tournaments." At home, he would put his clubs away and "wouldn't touch'em for six weeks."

Today, like many of the other players on the Senior Tour, he is mindful that "the Senior Tour is not going to survive if we don't support it." He still plays whenever he can.

MONDAY, JULY 3

Tennis (NBC)

TUESDAY, JULY 4

Tennis (NBC)

Wimbledon, quarterfinal action, live from Wimbledon, England.

TV Chatter

By Frank Sanello

"Anything but Love" was one of the few mid-season replacements to land a berth on the fall schedule, which is a relief for its two stars, Jamie Lee Curtis and Richard Lewis.

For Curtis, whose last film was "A Fish Called Wanda," series work allows her to stay home and take care of her 2-year-old daughter.

"In the last year, my husband ('Saturday Night Live' alumnus Christopher Guest) and I were working in Europe most of the time," she says. "We want to stay home now and take care of the baby. A series is really a 9-to-5 job. Making movies is more often a 5-to-9 job, and I missed my little girl."

Meanwhile, Richard Lewis sighs with relief when he compares the quality of TV work with some of his work on the big screen. "I've made mistakes," he says. "I just finished shooting a movie in Spain, 'Death Satyr 2000.' But I had a relationship on the shoot, so it turned out OK."

After Johnny Carson, Arsenio Hall is the top-rated talk-show host on TV these days, and his popularity is running particularly high with women. Some have been outdoing themselves thinking up creative ways to get into his dressing room.

"I get weird stuff," Hall says. "One woman gave a page a jewelry box and a note where she would be sitting in the audience." You can imagine what was inside. A woman who couldn't get in to the stage where the show was being taped started screaming outside. Hall stepped out and let the woman co-host the show with him.

Even men have done some crazy things to see Hall. "I get a lot of phone calls from guys claiming to be Eddie Murphy," he says. "I took one call and said, 'You still goin' with Lil?' 'Yeah, man.' I said, 'Lil is Eddie's mom, you fool!' Click."

• FAN OUT! Find six words beginning with FAN, see right, each of which is one letter longer than its predecessor. Definitions: 1. Viper's tooth. 2. Kind of notion. 3. Struck out. 4. Trumpet flourish. 5. Lively Spanish dance. 6. Extravagantly superduper.

How quickly can you find the six words?

1. Fang. 2. Fancy. 3. Fanned. 4. Fanfare. 5. Fandango. 6. Fantastic.

• ELEVEN-UP! How to prove you have 11 fingers on two hands: Count backwards on one — 10, 9, 8, 7, 6. Add five for the other hand, for 11.

FIGURING TO A TEE

Tee off in this golf setting by selecting five numbers in the form of the letter T, such as the one indicated by dark circles above. Find the T with the highest total (that is, the sum of the digits), and the T with the lowest total.

T configurations may be upright (as shown), to one side (in either direction), or upside down. Remember, you are asked to find T's with highest and lowest sums.

For your information, the difference between the two amounts is 10.
