Bush, Walesa Trade Praises As Poles Cheer

By Terence Hunt
 THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

GDANSK, Poland — President Bush today made a dramatic pilgrimage to the birthplace of the Solidarity labor movement and told cheering thousands their struggle had produced "a time when dreams can live again" in the democratic transformation of Poland.

"For those who say that freedom can never be denied, I say let them look at Poland," the president said in the emotional climax of a two-day visit.

"Poland is not alone. America stands with you," he said, renewing his pledge to help the Poles redeem their shattered economy and seek greater political freedoms. "America stands shoulder to shoulder with the Polish people in solidarity."

"Long live Bush!" came back the reply from the crowd of 25,000 people. Another 25,000 lined the streets of this seaport to cheer Bush's motorcade, and some threw flower petals at his limousine.

The president was introduced to the chanting, flag-waving audience by Solidarity leader Lech Walesa, who said he hoped the visiting American realized "our country should and deserves to be helped. ... God Bless America. May God bless our homeland," Walesa said.

The speech concluded, Bush and Walesa stood together to accept the cheers of the crowd, then turned to the monument to slain workers and held up their hands in a V-for-Victory sign favored by the union movement.

Bush was departing Poland later in the day for a two-day visit to Hungary, another Communist country in the throes of extraordinary political and economic reform. He then travels to Paris on Thursday for the economic summit, followed by a trip next week to the Netherlands.

Bush made the trip to the Solidarity Workers Monument outside the main gate to the Lenin shipyard after a private lunch at Walesa's home.

The president said Walesa had asked for private investment assistance in their talks. "I can give strong support for that standing right here in his yard," Bush said.

Later, introducing Bush at the Solidarity monument, Walesa said Poland needs help to keep its economic reforms from failing. If that happened, he said, "it would be a failure of democracy" and would have a destabilizing effect throughout Eastern Europe.

On Monday, Bush had outlined a program of $115 million in U.S. aid and proposed easier repayment terms for Poland's $39 billion international debt.

He said he would take Walesa's call for private investment to the economic summit starting Friday in Paris, and "we'll see where we come out."

Shouts of "Welcome President Bush!" rang out and hand-held American flags fluttered in the air as the president arrived at the monument to Polish workers killed in an uprising in 1970 during the birth of the labor movement. Thousands lined the route of his motorcade, then massed at the monument to hear Bush's pledge to stand with Poland.

Board Delays Action On West Contract

By John Bare
 THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Despite meeting behind closed doors for nearly three hours Monday night, the Pitt County Board of Education has apparently not reached a consensus on whether to buy out the final year of Superintendent Eddie West's contract.

"I really have no comment on our meeting last night. Basically, we decided last night to take no action. ... I would see further discussion on the topic later on," board member Elbert T. Buck Jr. of Winterville said.

Buck said he would not comment outside of the executive session on whether or not he supports retaining West as superintendent.

Several other board members contacted this morning also refused to say whether they support West, who could lose his $95,000-a-year job if the board votes to exercise its option and buy out the contract.

Under state law, the board may purchase the final year of West's four-year pact, which expires June 30, 1990. The board is required to inform West of its decision by April of next year, but it could take action at any time this fiscal year, which began July 1.

Board Chairman George Williams of Greenville contacted board members prior to Monday's meeting to inform them that West's job performance would be reviewed in executive session, but Williams refused to say last week whether he supports retaining West.

The board first went into executive session about 9 p.m. Monday, and West joined the group for about 30 minutes. The board continued to meet in private until shortly before midnight, when it called West back into the meeting for about five minutes. The group then reconvened the open meeting and adjourned.

The board could discuss West's job performance privately, but state law requires any vote to be taken in an open meeting. The board took no action Monday before adjourning, but several members said the group will probably discuss the issue at a later meeting.

Student Scores Improve

By Lane Dunn
 THE DAILY REFLECTOR

The Pitt Board of Education, which added nearly three hours of executive session discussion to a general business agenda, considered a host of topics Monday night ranging from accreditation standards to lunch prices.

Board members voted to bring Pitt County schools up to state performance accreditation standards and requirements. Accreditation is based on attendance, dropouts, at-risk students and achievement.

Rod Whitley, Pitt schools' testing coordinator, provided testing results to the board. He said Pitt County students performed above the national norm average on the 1989 California Achievement Test in all areas except reading in grades six, seven and eight.

Whitley said that the test scores did reflect improvement but he stressed that it is important that the schools do not become complacent.

Board member Anne McGaughey said that although the test scores were not as high as she would like she was still pleased.

"That (the increase in scores) is the road to progress," she said.

The board approved a 25-cent increase in school lunch prices, from $1 to $1.25 for the coming school year. Board member Jack Collins said the increase is needed in order to achieve break-even status.

In other action the board voted to contract student accident insurance to Youthguard Inc. Youthguard will substantially increase coverage to football players for $13.50 more than what the athletes are presently paying, it was pointed out.

The board appointed the 16 members of the board of directors of the Pitt County Educational Foundation Inc. Marvin Speight had asked not to be reappointed and was the only member not given a new term. Dan Heizer was recommended as his replacement.

Reappointed were Kenneth Dews, (chairman), Patsy Davis Duke, (vice chairman), M.C. Baldree Jr., Dr. Andrew Best, Morris Brody, Erma S. Carr, Lawrence Davenport, T.L. Edwards, James S. Ficklen, Wiley Gaskins, Linwood Mercer, Bennie Rountree, Lawrence L. Seigler, David J. Whichard II and J.C. Whitehurst Jr.

In its review of school attendance lines, the board voted to move students in the Hillsdale area, which is behind the airport between N.C. 33 and the Tar River, from Pactolus Elementary to Belvoir Elementary. The move will only affect two students.

Pitt Delegation Going To Washington

By Greg Laudick
 THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Several Greenville representatives will be among a 49-member delegation from eastern North Carolina traveling to the nation's capital Wednesday for a two-day conference to examine legislative and commercial matters affecting this region.

"The purpose of this trip is simply to learn more about what is going on in Washington, D.C., and to provide an opportunity for information sharing between the participants," said Dick Edwards, chairman of the Pitt-Greenville Chamber of Commerce Congressional Action Committee.

The "Fly-in" is sponsored by the OCTAD group, eight eastern North Carolina chambers organized collectively in 1984. Included in the venture will be officials from Greenville, Kinston, Goldsboro, Mount Olive, New Bern, Tarboro, Washington, N.C., and Wilson.

Edwards, the executive assistant to the chancellor at East Carolina University, said the delegation will begin the tour by visiting the U.S. Chamber of Commerce for a briefing on pending legislation before the Congress.

That appointment will be followed by a meeting with officials at the U.S. Department of Agriculture concerning tobacco and other agriculture-related matters affecting eastern North Carolina.

"We will also be having a congressional luncheon with Congressman Walter B. Jones, Congressman Tim Valentine and Congressman Martin Lancaster, and meetings with Senators Jesse Helms and Terry Sanford," Edwards said.

In addition, the delegation is scheduled to visit the White House, the National Space Museum, and various Senate and House of Representatives committee meetings.

"One of the highlights of the 'Fly-in' will be attending a reception at the embassy of Switzerland," Edwards said. He said the reception is significant because New Bern has a sister-city relationship with the Swiss city of Bern.

"Among the issues which will be discussed and reviewed with U.S. Chamber representatives and our congressional leadership are the minimum wage issue, mandated employee benefits, Section 89 of the IRS Code, capital gains tax rate reduction, higher education funding, water quality control measures, comparable worth, price support programs, agriculture issues and many others," he said.

"These kinds of ventures are very

Forbes Enters Race

Blanche Forbes filed Monday as a candidate for the District 5 seat on the Greenville City Council in the city's Nov. 7 elections.

Ms. Forbes tried for the post two years ago, losing to Nancy Jenkins by less than 300 votes.

Ms. Forbes, the owner of Forbes Realty in Greenville, said she thinks the council needs "more communication with the district representatives and the voters."

The candidate, paraphrasing Abraham Lincoln's Gettysburg Address, said Greenville needs "a government of the people, by the people and for the people. Sometimes we don't have that."

She said she also believes Greenville can continue to grow and prosper in the coming years. "I sell Greenville and I think we can have more things."

Ms. Forbes, who was born in Pitt County, has lived in Greenville for the past 27 years. She served as president of the Greenville-Pitt County Board of Realtors and was elected "Realtor of the Year" in 1983.

She is a member of St. James United Methodist Church and a member of the United Methodist Women at her church.

Mavretic Calls For Study Of State Abortion Laws

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

DURHAM — State House Speaker Joe Mavretic says he plans to name a select committee, probably late this week, to determine if North Carolina should make changes in its laws regulating abortion.

State Rep. Sharon Thompson of Durham, who supports laws permitting abortion, will be a member of the committee, Mavretic said.

Mavretic spoke this morning to about 100 people who attended a "legislative briefing" at the Washington Duke Inn sponsored by the Greater Durham Chamber of Commerce.

Mavretic, in his first term as state House speaker, also lambasted members of the state Senate for their plan to fund teacher pay raises from money that had been earmarked for highway construction.

A conference committee of Senate and House members was to begin meeting this morning to seek a compromise on the highway funding and state employee pay raise issues.

Mavretic said he would appoint House members with varying views on abortion to the House select committee.

The U.S. Supreme Court on July 3 narrowly upheld a Missouri law imposing further restrictions on abortion. The 5-4 ruling has given anti-abortion forces new hope for regulating abortions in other states.

Mavretic said the committee would examine to try to resolve the political issues raised by the Supreme Court decision.

"I think there are ways to make (the abortion issue) less emotional ... and more reasonable," Mavretic said. "I don't think you ought to take it out of the political arena. Abortion is a political issue."

Ms. Thompson, a Durham attorney, said she has become even more adamant in supporting abortion rights since reading the July 3 Supreme Court decision.

"There are some who would like to see (the state law) change," Ms. Thompson said. "There are others (in the legislature) who would like to continue North Carolina's tradition of providing safe and legal abortions, as we've done since 1967."

Ms. Thompson said she has not detected any overwhelming support in the House for changing the state's abortion laws.

Greene Youth Wins State 4-H Project

An 18-year-old Greene County 4-H member was named state winner Monday night for his achievements in a 4-H electric energy project.

Mike Pridgen, son of Ray and Carol Pridgen of Snow Hill, was declared winner in the 4-H electric energy project during ceremonies of the 42nd annual State 4-H Electric Congress in Murfreesboro.

Pridgen wins an expense-paid trip to the National 4-H Congress in Chicago in December where he will compete for national honors and a $1,000 educational scholarship.

Also announced were 11 regional winners and runners-up from the service territories of the four sponsoring power firms were also announced. Pridgen was from Carolina Power and Light Company's service area.

Hunter Quincy, 12, son of Mr. and Mrs. Tommy Quincy of Tarboro in Edgecombe County, was a territorial winner for North Carolina Power Co. Duke Power Co. and Nantahala Power and Light Co. were also sponsors.

In addition to the 4-H delegates, some 45 adult leaders and extension attended the event held at Chowan College.

The Westinghouse Educational Foundation and the N.C. Agricultural Extension Service cooperate with the four power companies in sponsoring and conducting the congress.

Brooks Seeks Seat On Board

GRIMESLAND — Dale Brooks filed Monday for a seat on the Board of Aldermen in Grimesland.

Brooks, making his first run for office, said he wanted to "get involved with the community" and growth of the area.

A 1966 graduate of Greenville High School, Brooks has lived in Grimesland for the past two years and near the town for the past 15 years. He owns Computer Dynamics in Grimesland, a software company specializing in printing.

His family attends St. Gabriel's Catholic Church. Brooks is a member of the Moose Lodge.

Rocky Mountain Spotted Fever and Lyme disease are two potential problems associated with tick bites that you should be aware of during your outside activities this summer. Both diseases may produce flu-like symptoms such as headache, nausea, aches in joints and fever. If you experience symptoms after being bitten by a tick, consult your doctor at once.

Rocky Mountain Spotted Fever is the most common tick-caused disease in North Carolina. Pitt County usually has one or two cases each year. The worst area for the disease is in the upper Piedmont counties of the state. First symptoms of Rocky Mountain Spotted Fever usually appear within two weeks after being bitten. Flu-like symptoms are often accompanied by a rash that starts on the wrists and ankles. Nervousness (inability to sleep or remain still) has also been reported as a symptom. Rocky Mountain Spotted Fever can be cured with antibiotic treatments, so consult your doctor immediately if you or a member of your family shows these symptoms.

Lyme disease is a bacterial disease first identified in Lyme, Conn. in 1975. Since then, it has been found over most of the Continental United States. Thirty-four cases were reported in North Carolina in 1988. The first symptom of Lyme disease may occur from three days to four weeks after the tick bite. First, there is a red circle around the bite that gradually enlarges. The center of the circle often clears, resembling a doughnut. Skin signs include hives, red eyes and cheeks, redness under the eyes and swelling of the eyelids. Flu-like symptoms may also be noticed. Appropriate antibiotics administered by a doctors clear up the rash in days and minimize the chance of later complications. If the disease is not treated, severe arthritis, nervous system or heart problems may develop later.

Preventing Rocky Mountain Spotted Fever and Lyme disease involves protection against ticks and prompt, proper removal if you are bitten. Stay out of tall grass and low shrubs if possible. Tuck your shirttail into your pants and into socks or boots. Use commercial insect repellents on exposed areas of your body and around openings in clothing. A relatively new repellent containing permethrin (marketed under the trade name Permethrin) is excellent against ticks, chiggers and mosquitoes but less effective on other insects. Remove ticks as quickly as possible since several hours are usually needed to transmit disease. Use tweezers and pull the tick straight out. Don't twist or jerk as this can leave embedded mouth parts. Wash the bite area with soap and water and apply and antiseptic.

Schools Delay Drug Screening

The board also decided to sit for 30 days on the issue of drug operations within the schools. An ad hoc committee has recommended that in order to be successful, any under-cover drug project in the schools must be conducted in strict confidentiality.

Pharmacist Accused

WINSTON-SALEM (AP) — A Winston-Salem pharmacist will go before a state board next week to answer charges that he filled or labeled incorrectly at least 18 prescriptions.

The pharmacist, William T. Boyd, 66, has admitted errors to investigators with the North Carolina Board of Pharmacy, a notice of a public hearing says. David R. Work, the board's executive director, said Monday the board began investigating allegations against Boyd late last year.

The notice lists 17 prescriptions that it says Boyd filled incorrectly during the 18-month period from Nov. 27, 1987, to May 15, 1989. At least one other error involved mislabeling.

Board members decided to wait 30 days before voting on a drug screening policy for new bus drivers. Currently bus drivers are the only employees affected by the policy.

"It is OK to differentiate between the two employees because of the safety factor," Superintendent Eddie West said. Meanwhile, several people spoke during the time set aside for public comments. One issue addressed was recommended personnel changes at the Agnes Fullilove Community School. Johann Bleicher, the principal at the school, has been recommended for transfer to another position in the school system.

Several people expressed their concerns over cutbacks at Third Street School. Because of projected enrollment, both the counselor and librarian will be cut from full time to half time.

"Above and Beyond the Call of Duty" awards for Pitt County schools were presented at the meeting to Yvonne Abbott, D.H. Conley, Alice Keene, Sandra Morris and Cindi Parker.

Deborah McKnight, school bus driver for Elmhurst Elementary, was named Pitt County Schools' Bus Driver of the Year.

In other action the board voted to accept the interim budget to continue operations until the budget for the fiscal year is approved.

Bush Praises Solidarity's Role

Bush stressed that hard work and sacrifice are still ahead for Poles as they try to rebuild their economy.

But his main message was one of help and hope that their 40-year struggle — first against the Nazis, then against Communist suppression — will realize the "ancient dream" of freedom. And he did so by referring to President Kennedy's dramatic speech at the Berlin Wall 26 years ago.

In grimmer times, Kennedy had stood outside the barrier between East and West and said that if anyone thought Communism was the wave of the future, "Let them come to Berlin."

Bush put it this way: "Today to those who think that hopes can be forever suppressed, I say let them look at Poland. To those who think that freedom can be forever denied, I say, let them look at Poland. And to those who think that dreams can be forever repressed, I say let them look at Poland — for here, in Poland, the dream is alive."

"It is here in Poland where we can work to end the division of Europe. It is in your power to help end the division of Europe," Bush said. "The people of Poland can show the world what a free people with commitment and energy can accomplish."

Walesa and the crowd seemed reluctant to let the president go.

Bush urged Poles to stay in their country and help with rebuilding, rather than emigrate as so many thousands have done over the years. "Stay with us. Stay with us," they asked him.

Standing in Walesa's backyard after lunch, Bush said, "I clearly salute" his accomplishments toward democratic reforms and "want to work with him and Poland" to achieve economic reforms.

Walesa, who wore a silver Solidarity pin on his black tie, told reporters, "We're not after any loans. We're after cooperation."

He said that if Western banks could open branches in Poland with $10 billion and "could strike a good deal in Poland, that would fix our economic problem."

"This is what I asked Mr. President about. That was my primary appeal and request," Walesa said.

Earlier Walesa said in an ABC-TV interview that Bush's $115 million aid proposals "don't really help." The Solidarity leader said: "It's just a sort of a drop in the bucket. We need shock treatment."

The crowd at the Solidarity monument, which included miners in black uniforms with tall, feather-topped black hats, chanted "Lech Walesa! Lech Walesa!" and "Solidarity! Solidarity!"

Crowned by three crosses topped with anchors, the Solidarity monument commemorates the first three shipyard workers killed by government security forces during 1970 strikes over food prices in which hundreds are believed to have died. Officially, the death toll was 45.

Earlier, during a brief visit to the 14th century Oliva Cathedral in suburban Gdansk, Bush was greeted by several thousand flag-waving Poles who sang "May You Live 100 Years" and tossed red and white roses and carnations at his motorcade.

ride to Walesa's home, the president stood on his limousine's running board and waved to crowds chanting "Solidarity! Solidarity!"

The president spent more than two hours in talks Monday with Communist Party leader Wojciech Jaruzelski and then met with him again over lunch and again at a state dinner.

In a toast to Bush, Jaruzelski said, "May our relations always feature mutual respect, confidence and friendly feelings."

Interviewed later on ABC News, Jaruzelski said he spoke with Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev about the meeting and added that Bush's visit was positive for future relations.

"I really am heartened that the leaders of the two big powers are guided by the same intentions and I feel that this bodes well for the future," Jaruzelski said.

The general, who imposed martial law in 1981 to crush Solidarity and imprison its leaders, said union representatives now share responsibility with the government for Poland's "destiny, its well-being, its position in Europe and in the world."

Solidarity representatives won nearly half the seats in recent parliamentary elections, and Walesa has not ruled out the possibility of running for the new, powerful post of president.

Contract Discussed

Board member Mark Owens of Fountain said he still supports West, but he would not comment on whether he is in the majority.

"What went on in executive session, I'm not permitted to discuss at this time," he said. "I personally still support him ... He's done an excellent job and I want him to continue."

In addition to Williams and Buck, board members Frank Grooms of Greenville, Donovan Phillips of Greenville, Howard Parker of Greenville and Mary Williams of Greenville each refused to say whether they support West.

"Eddie has a lot of positive things. Then there are some problems too ... just like with anybody," Ms. Williams said. "I refuse to comment on which direction I would go at this time."

Grooms refused to give an explanation for his silence. "I just choose not to discuss it," Grooms said. "I don't think that's something I want to discuss at this point in time."

Phillips and Parker also refused to comment on any aspect of the contract talks.

"There is no comment there. I'm not going to say anything," Phillips said. Said Parker, "Since we are working with the contract and all that right now, I'd rather not say anything."

Though Ms. Williams would not give a definite answer to whether she favored buying out West's contract, she said she believes the county needs a superintendent who can address several existing problems.

"One of the things that concerns me most is the children of Pitt County. It's their education and their academics that really bother me," Ms. Williams said. "When you examine test scores and where (the students) are and what (they) are capable of doing, this is what relates to my decision and what I look at when I vote."

Though standardized test scores for eastern North Carolina students are traditionally lower than some urban areas of the state, she said poor performance should not be blamed on geography.

"Our children should be able to read, be able to write and be able to do mathematics. They should be able to perform those at a level at which we are proud of. We have the same materials (as some larger districts). Cultural background (and) geography has nothing to do with children not performing the way they are capable of performing," she said.

She cited community opinion and a superintendent ability to manage faculty and administration as considerations in evaluating West's performance. In addition, she said schools in her district, which includes Bethel, Belvoir and neighborhoods north of the Tar River, have not received the same resources as other districts in the county. She is flooded with calls from parents expressing concern, she said.

"If we have a superintendent who can really provide strong leadership in terms of principals and teachers and demonstrate administrative (ability) in delivering the academics to our children, then we have an administrator we want," she said.

"It's obvious we pay top dollars to our administrator. Then they're (the public) entitled to receive the best for that top dollar. I don't think the board has been stingy in awarding the salary. But then after being so generous, the children and the community should receive the best."

Child's Play?

Time For Progress In Raleigh

Remember the child's game called barrel of monkeys? The object was to hook the monkeys together, one by one, then hold them up in a long line. The trick was, you could only pick up one monkey by hand. The rest had to be carefully hooked together using the tail of the last monkey strung. A tedious, vexing task that seldom worked.

The 1989 session of the N.C. General Assembly has been much like that child's game. Without clear leadership, it has wavered and fro, its chain of progress shaky and uncertain. And as it zig-zags toward adjournment, its headway is just as worrisome as that futile exercise in monkey-linking.

Every year North Carolina's lawmakers postpone decision-making until the last minute, so after seven months of discussion, the lack of meaningful legislation in 1989 isn't surprising. Usually, a coalition — often forged by the dominant Democrats in the House and Senate — falls together at the last minute. Compromises are made, and wham! Bills pass and the session adjourns.

But 1989 hasn't quite worked that way. Lawmakers seem far down the road from an appropriate Highway Bill. They appear nowhere near a consensus on a pay raise for teachers. From the Joe Mavretic takeover in the House on day one to the divisions within the Senate, this year's General Assembly has deviated from the norm.

Even the most political and ambitious lawmakers must realize, however, that it's time to put these machinations past and make tough decisions about the future of North Carolina. The state is replete with change. Each district represented by each legislator has distinct and urgent needs — needs that won't be met by stalling or playing politics or monkeying around. Every district holds high stakes in the outcome of this General Assembly.

For Pitt County, the stakes include a proposed $6 million appropriation for an East Carolina University library expansion and $2 million appropriation for a regional activity center. They include an accelerated completion of a four lane controlled access U.S. 264 and four-laning U.S. 17 to connect the region with Virginia and Interstate 40 to Wilmington — all key components of the proposed and beleaguered Highway Bill. The items by no means fully represent the district's needs but they are representative of Pitt's interest in this General Assembly.

Taxpayers have been patient with this legislative session. It began with flux and uncertainty; it proceeded with maddening inconsistency. Now, it should end with progress — and without further undue delay.

Public Forum

To the editor:

The Daily Reflector has dedicated quite a bit of editorial space to Greenville's need for a convention center. I have read the pros and cons in the editorial pages and have suffered through some really bad editorial cartoons that poke fun at the use of a warehouse for large activities. I've read people's opinions that the money would be better spent on educational facilities, or other projects that merit funding.

The whole truth of the matter is that Greenville could only stand to prosper as the result of such a structure. There is no telling how much money would flow into Greenville, if only we had such a facility. The money that would be generated would also present the city of Greenville with numerous opportunities to increase the budgets for other projects.

I am presently working with two groups that would love to see the "Regional Activity Center" get out of the editorials and get onto the Greenville city map. The Greenville/Pitt County Chamber of Commerce and the Greenville/Pitt County Restaurant Association, are two organizations that are very concerned about the results of this project.

My entire point is that people are wasting their time by writing their letters to the editorial pages. The pros and cons would be more fruitfully expressed to our state representatives, who have the power to either make the "Regional Activity Center" a reality, or just another editorial comment. Please ask your readers to write their state representatives and save the space in the editorial pages for Doonesberry.

To the editor:

The Supreme Court seems to be in the process of dismantling its stand on abortion because of the ideas of those now in political prominence. It is taking the teeth out of this female protective device and spreading it into states rights, meaning a variety of versions and technicalities that may follow. This following the Supreme Court decision to protect those so inclined to burn or desecrate the American flag. If this be Constitutional then the Constitution needs revision to meet 1989 instead of 1789 because the minds controlling the inception of this legal device certainly had not received the basic knowledge that is now evident in its needs.

The word 'abortion' means to miscarry before female cycle completion of a fetus or unborn child. To control overpopulation alone is enough to justify this course. For proof, look at those starving in the world today. Look at the masses of hungry, ragged children while all responsibility is thrown to the state.

Any politician who sanctifies this program feels threatened because he depends on votes and numbers to stay in a lucrative office that the voice of the voters are a necessity. It backfires on everyone.

I have nothing to do with the functions of an abortion, unless something unforeseen happens in my own family, but I want medical protection for those who might be affected, should it arise. I feel the same way about any inclusion of church, state, organization or other wise who might try to control another persons life. This is the sole right of that individual.

To the editor:

This letter is in response to the recent letter in the Public Forum regarding the Supreme Court decision on flag burning.

The writer referred to the flag of the United States as a "piece of cloth."

I am quite sure that the Continental Congress did not expect our flag to be considered a "piece of cloth" when the flag was borne July 14, 1777 with these words: "That the flag of the United States be 13 stripes alternate red and white, that the union be 13 stars white on a blue field representing a new constellation."

During the British bombardment of Fort McHenry, Maryland, in September, 1814, I am certain that Francis Scott Key, while he was writing "The Star Spangled Banner", did not consider our flag a "piece of cloth."

During the Flag Day ceremonies in 1917 President Wilson said: "This flag, which we honor and under which we serve, is the emblem of our unity, our power, our thought and purpose as a nation..." Not just a "piece of cloth."

When the United States Marines raised "Old Glory" over Iwo-Jima at Mount Suribachi on February 23, 1945, I know that they did not consider it just another "piece of cloth." There is a memorial in Arlington National Cemetery to these valiant men.

I sincerely doubt if any mother, father, wife, sister, brother, or other close relative who is presented the United States flag when a loved one has been killed in military services considers it a "piece of cloth."

I do not think that any of the countless soldiers, sailors, marines, and air force personnel who have served this great flag consider it just another "piece of cloth."

Stray Jets

What's Needed Is A Better System

Stray jet fighter planes are as deadly as launched missiles engaged in real combat.

If you don't believe that, ask the family of a Belgian man killed when a Soviet MiG-24 fighter crashed into his home.

The Soviet pilot ejected from the plane shortly after takeoff because of mechanical problems. The aircraft, however, apparently corrected its problem and continued flying without a pilot.

At that point it would have made sense for the Soviet military to have destroyed the aircraft over a rural area. That did not happen and the plane continued flying from Poland across western Europe. It was picked up by United States interceptors who recognized that it was not piloted. The U.S. pilots were not able to shoot it down because it was over heavily populated areas. Finally the plane lost altitude and crashed in Belgium. Unfortunately it hit a house and killed the man inside.

Even at that, it could have been worse. The plane passed over heavily populated areas of West Germany and it was near densely populated sections of Belgium when it crashed.

The Belgians properly have protested that the Soviets gave them no warning about their pilotless fighter. There was also no warning for the other areas along the plane's 560 mile route.

While the Soviets have expressed regret and offered to pay damages, what is really needed is a better system of making certain such mistakes don't happen ... and if they do happen that the jeopardized areas receive quick warning so defensive measures can be taken.

No doubt modern nations have to have their military maneuvers ... but they don't have to endanger innocent civilians.

The Image Of Justice

BOSTON — In the aftermath of the abortion decision, when the Supreme Court opinions had deteriorated into talk-show shouting matches, I began to have a strange feeling that I had missed something. Or someone. Where was Sandra Day O'Connor in all this?

For months, it was widely assumed that the lone female justice on the bench would be pivotal in the Webster case. More than one brief was written directly to her ambivalence. More than one argument was pitched on her wavelength.

In the final count, she was indeed a formidable fifth. She went with one majority in favor of restrictive regulations against abortion. She went with another majority that refrained from overturning Roe v. Wade. But if her vote was powerful, her voice could barely be heard.

Harry Blackmun wrote a stunning, emotional opinion that he read from the bench. Silent Sandra wrote a dry, highly specific, unmemorable, unquotable opinion, and then skipped Court the day the case was handed down.

What happened to the one soprano in the chorus of eight baritones? The only justice who had ever actually been pregnant? It is entirely possible that O'Connor went low-key on the abortion decision precisely because she is the only woman. Any "only woman" knows what it's like to be in the room when a "woman's issue" comes up and every man turns to her. If she took a step back, if she deliberately chose to opt out of this high-decibel exchange, there is a lot of precedent for that.

But when I went back to search for the shade of O'Connor, and reread the opinion, I found another odd and perhaps highly female caste to it. O'Connor comes across in this opinion as the Court's mediating figure, in search of the middle. She is the Justice of the Peace, trying to reduce conflict between her colleagues and perhaps the opposing forces in the country. Even when it means denying conflict.

Does this remind you of anyone you know? Mom, perhaps? The Webster case came at the end of a remarkably contentious session. If the justices are ever to have a cup of coffee together, they may need a mediator. Justice O'Connor begins as if she is talking directly to her warring colleagues. Says Harvard Law School's Martha Minow: "She uses every possible gesture to say, 'Hey, you guys don't really disagree,' and 'Hey, there really isn't a problem here.'"

Non-problem One. The preamble to the Missouri law states that life begins at conception. But O'Connor agreed to uphold this piece of the law because, she said, it's "too hypothetical" to have any real-life effect. No conflict, no problem.

Non-problem Two. The state of Missouri requires doctors to perform tests on 20-week old fetuses to prove their viability. But O'Connor said the state didn't really mean that doctors should do such tests if they were unnecessary. No conflict. No problem.

Non-problem Three. What about using this case to overturn Roe? O'Connor said that the Webster decision didn't actually, really, truly, absolutely challenge Roe. No conflict and no problem.

Justice Scalia, no slouch in the confrontation department, countered with two full pages calling O'Connor a hypocrite. He said that her efforts to write away conflict between the Court rulings of 1973 and those of 1989 "cannot be taken seriously." (Dear Antonin, there must be another way to put that. Can't a woman ever be taken seriously, even on the Supreme Court?)

I would hate O'Connor to drop her conciliatory role and join the anti-abortion quartet. But the tone that infuses this and other O'Connor decisions raises some interesting questions about women and judgments — in and out of the Court.

Many who talk about the need for a "female" perspective in law or government or business value women as peacemakers, mediators, compromisers. It is women who frequently translate their children — uh, colleagues — to each other.

But there can be a downside to this value. It's the other model of mom standing over the fighting kids, insisting, "I don't care who's right, I just want peace and quiet." Prof. Minow describes this downside as "a reluctance to face up to conflicts that are there, to use a strategy of avoidance. And it's a failure to state in clear and certain terms the large governing principles for the future."

In a series of decisions, Justice O'Connor has tried to stake out common ground, a valuable piece of turf in this society. But you can't always find it. And you can't always create it.

On the statues that grace our courtrooms, the image of Justice is a woman. But not necessarily a mom.

Look At The Blue, Look At The 50 Stars Shining Bright

Paul O'Connor

RALEIGH — Austin Allran likes to wrap himself in the American flag, and he likes it when American flags are stitched from American, preferably North Carolina, fabric. But when it comes to the flagpole on which Old Glory flies, Allran apparently would prefer to save a couple of bucks and buy it from Japan or Korea.

Sen. Allran, R-Catawba, sparked a furious patriotic debate in the state Senate last week. He was arguing frugality, free markets and anti-unionism. Sen. George Daniel, D-Caswell, argued good old American patriotism, and that honored principle of every textile district in the Old North State — "Buy American." Daniel won in a breeze.

The issue had nothing to do with the flag — at least not at first. In the Senate Finance Committee, Daniel had amended the highway improvements bill to say that road construction should be with concrete and steel made in the USA unless there was an unreasonable price difference with foreign products.

That prompted Allran to seek to remove the amendment on the Senate floor. He argued that buying American could cost the taxpayers of North Carolina a great deal of money. "The effect of this amendment," he said, "is to support labor unions and high wages in Pennsylvania. It's trivial, it's irresponsible. It's the jingoistic, chauvinistic kind of thing that will cost us money."

Allran argued that labor unions have extracted such high wages from Pittsburgh steel companies that their product is no longer competitive on the world market. But Sen. Fountain Odom, D-Mecklenburg, rose to ask Allran if he didn't know that the biggest steelmaker in the southeast is located in Mecklenburg County.

Allran quickly added that he had nothing against Pennsylvania, noting that he had relatives there and that his wife is a native of the Quaker State. That prompted Sen. Bill Goldston, D-Rockingham, to quip, "I'd certainly rather do what we can to help your relatives in Pennsylvania than to help your relatives in Korea or Japan."

And Daniel got in another lick. "I come from a textile area where we talk about buying American. To just follow the same line of thought, we ought to buy American when at all possible. I think there needs to be a little more patriotic input. I can't think of a better time with all the hype about flag burning."

In an interview, Allran responded to the flag burning question, saying he supported a constitutional amendment to protect the flag. He just didn't buy the idea of protecting high-wage American workers.

There's a lot of textile mills in Allran's district. He was asked, "Don't you want Pennsylvania consumers buying American clothes?" Allran said that was a different matter because it involved private consumption, not taxpayer money.

So, he was asked, how about the Pennsylvania state police?

"Shouldn't they wear uniforms made in America, from North Carolina fabric?" There was no comprehensible answer.

The Senate left the Buy American provision in the bill.

Allran really doesn't like unions. And you get the impression from his comments that if more steel were made in the South and less made in the North that he might not have raised such a stink over the amendment.

But when one wraps himself in the American flag, as does Allran, he needs to look at its field of blue. There are 50 stars, each shining as brightly as all the others.

Campaign Finance Reform Easier Said Than Done

Walter Mears

WASHINGTON — The dilemma for campaign finance reformers is that the only people who can write new rules are the players — and they want to win.

Republicans surely would be more tolerant of what they call the congressional "incumbency protection system" but for the fact that Democrats hold the wide House majority. The re-election rate, which exceeded 98 percent last time, helps perpetuate Democratic control of the House.

Proposals that seem fair and evenhanded almost invariably turn out to have side effects that work to the advantage of one party or the other.

President Bush said he would be outraged at the suggestion that his campaign finance proposals to Congress were intended to help Republicans. But Democratic leaders said that is exactly what the administration proposals would do.

With Democrats controlling both the House and the Senate, the Bush package stands no realistic chance of enactment. But it does provide a starting point for debate and perhaps compromise legislation on a subject that was not on the agenda at Ronald Reagan's White House.

There are a variety of reform proposals before Congress now. A bipartisan House group is trying to draft a plan both parties can accept.

A half-dozen Senate Democrats have proposed a constitutional amendment to let Congress impose ceilings on campaign expenditures, a step the Supreme Court has held would infringe on free speech.

Campaign scholar Larry J. Sabato of the University of Virginia calls that an example of "a bad reform idea that sounds good," attractive on the surface but likely to tilt the system even more heavily in favor of congressional incumbents.

Sabato notes that Congress, "composed of 535 incumbents who are fervently convinced of the worthiness of their own re-elections," would write any spending ceilings. He said that probably would work to the disadvantage of challengers who need "major expenditures" to catch up with such incumbent advantages as name recognition, staff, free mailings, district offices and constituent services.

In a Twentieth Century Fund study of campaign finance, Sabato suggests free broadcast time as a way to lower campaign costs. He proposes eight hours per station per year, the time to be controlled by the major parties. But similar ideas have been discussed off and on for 50 years.

Sabato concedes the odds against his proposal, saying such plans always have been "consigned to the junkyard of good ideas that were legislatively impractical."

Nor are Democratic calls for public financing of congressional campaigns likely to get anywhere in the face of strong Republican opposition.

Bush said public financing would erode participation in the political process. "I will not support kicking the citizen out of the political process by saying that a citizen cannot financially support the candidate of his or her choice," he said.

Presidential campaigns have been publicly financed since 1976. Bush and Democratic nominee Michael Dukakis each got $46.1 million in federal money to run their 1988 campaigns.

To "free our electoral system from the grip of special interests," the Bush campaign finance plan would eliminate political action committees sponsored by corporations, unions and trade associations, which means most of them. PAC contributions for the 1988 congressional elections went to Democrats $98.6 million to $60.7 million, demonstrating their tilt toward incumbents.

Bush also would limit contributions by independent political action committees to $2,500 a candidate instead of $5,000. His package also includes a 2½-fold increase in the amounts the national parties can give their House and Senate candidates. Republicans have been stronger in national party fund raising; the Democratic National Committee has launched a drive to strengthen its fundraising operations.

The president wants to sharply restrict use of the postage-free congressional mail privileges, an incumbents' advantage Congress recently expanded.

He seeks a federal law to set guidelines for congressional redistricting, due after the 1990 census, so that legislatures can't draw the lines to benefit one political party over the other. Democrats have full legislative control in 28 states, Republicans in 8.

That's why fairness is hard to define, let alone legislate.

Walter R. Mears, vice president and columnist for The Associated Press, has reported on Washington and national politics for more than 25 years.

Lessons From The Deep South

Hodding Carter

WASHINGTON — There were two extraordinary gatherings of Southerners in Washington last month that said just about everything there is to say about both continuity and change in my native region. Both were accurate reflections of realities rather than imagery, realities that are reminders of long distances traveled and long distances yet to go, in the South and in the nation.

The less noticed was a packed reception put on by the University of Mississippi for its new "Encyclopedia of Southern Culture." Ten years in the making, it is a product of the university's Center for the Study of Southern Culture, and at 1,656 pages and $49.95, it is no slight thing.

As a selection of the Book-of-the-Month Club and the History Book Club, it arrives with a certain cachet.

Honors aside, it is an invaluable piece of work, a resounding reaffirmation that the South does indeed exist in fact as well as myth, despite and because of the profound and often wrenching changes of the past three decades.

The fact that Ole Miss sponsored the new encyclopedia is conclusive proof of those changes. Just 27 years ago, President Kennedy had to use federal troops to restore order after two men were killed in a student riot protesting the arrival of the first black student at Ole Miss.

Now its proudest accomplishment, this encyclopedia, features a forward by black historian Alex Haley testifying to "our Southern distinctiveness."

The book launching was festive, an implicit statement that things are both different and better than they used to be in Mississippi and the South.

Three days later Washington was reminded of just how bad things had been in the days of massive resistance. A biracial group came to town to mark the 25th anniversary of the lynch murders of three civil-rights workers near Philadelphia, Miss., during the Freedom Summer of 1964.

Relatives of the three young men — James Chaney, Andrew Goodman and Michael Schwerner — had an unsatisfactory meeting with President Bush, then joined a memorial service in the Capitol's Statuary Hall.

Some of the speeches there were also oddly disatisfying, almost rote statements of the obvious. Some passionately underscored the memorial's thematic point: "The memory endures; the struggle continues."

But it was a speech made by a white officeholder a few days earlier in Philadelphia and remarks not made by President Bush that were the most relevant to the occasion.

The white politician was Mississippi Secretary of State Dick Molpus, one of the state's "new-breed" politicians. Standing with the relatives of the slain young men, he publicly apologized on behalf of the state for what happened on that bloody June night in 1964.

In doing so, he leapt the last great chasm — that void of silence that has marked the white South's inability to admit responsibility for past evil even while celebrating present accomplishment.

And in doing so, he illustrated one of the redeeming features of those now-distant struggles to affirm basic American principles. For most Southerners in the 1950s and 1960s, black and white, there was no escaping the necessity of encounter with the evil of segregation and its consequences. There was no way to avoid choosing.

Just as the segregationists always taunted their opponents, you were either for it or against it, and there were few places to hide.

Today, in Mississippi and in Washington, in Iowa and in Massachusetts, the unaffected and the uncommitted can and do turn away from similar choices without even admitting they exist. White middle-class Americans of whatever region or politics seem inured to the continuing reality of racial injustice.

Unlike the Mississippians of 1964, they don't have to face regularly what injustice produces. They are segregated from the consequences, as segregated in their way as we Mississippians once were by law.

That is probably why Bush was unwilling to join the family members when they met with the press and unable to deal satisfactorily with their concerns. He and his party win elections without referring or deferring to them: the majority to which they look for votes is essentially uninterested in or unaware of racism's enduring legacy.

A minority of that majority would like nothing better than to turn the clock back to the old days, and they are not all to be found in the South.

But it is as surely evil to allow children to go hungry, adults to go homeless and racism to prevail with a rational face as it once was to tolerate unashamed white supremacy.

Mississippi has come a long way, and a good one, from the horrors of the past, and it has done so because it finally could not avoid them. The nation still has a long way to go, not least because it is now all too easy to pretend that today's horrors either don't exist or don't matter.

The writer, a Washington television producer, is a former editor of the Delta Democrat-Times in Greenville, Miss.

Tar Heel Congressmen Don't Blow Much Smoke

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — For most people smoking has very few political ramifications, but that isn't the case for the 13 members of North Carolina's congressional delegation.

Rep. Charlie Rose, a Democrat from Fayetteville, is a former smoker.

"I'm sure in the minds of some tobacco company executives there might be" an inconsistency, Rose said. "Certainly, there isn't in my mind. What I'm concerned about is promoting a legitimate North Carolina product."

"I decided it was becoming a habit, and I wanted it not to be a habit," said Rose, who is the chairman of the House Tobacco and Peanuts subcommittee and the chamber's foremost defender of tobacco.

Six of the 13 members in North Carolina's congressional delegation don't smoke, but they say that doesn't give them a problem in defending the state's top-ranked tobacco industry.

"I don't fly a V22 tilt-rotor aircraft, but I think that it's important to the Marine Corps' mission," said Rep. Martin Lancaster, a Democrat from Goldsboro who has never smoked.

Even though he quit for health reasons, Republican Rep. Cass Ballenger believes he is still justified in defending tobacco.

"Somewhere down the road things are not going to go well for tobacco," he said in an interview. "But I don't think something should happen very quickly. ... I recognize the value of tobacco to the state of North Carolina."

Rep. Tim Valentine, a Democrat from Nashville, and Rose quit smoking years ago.

"I decided it was better for me if I didn't smoke," Valentine said.

Only five of the North Carolina members of Congress smoke cigarettes. Two others smoke only cigars. One cigarette smoker, Rep. Bill Hefner, a Democrat from Concord, said he doesn't inhale.

A Lucky Strike smoker, Republican Sen. Jesse Helms is fond of saying to someone with a cigarette, "I'm from North Carolina, thanks for smoking."

But Helms, "Mr. Tobacco" in the Senate, admits he advised his children not to smoke.

They are now grown and, he says, "none of them smoke, not one of them." That includes his son, Charles, who works in research and development for R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. in Winston-Salem.

Three of the non-smokers, Reps. David Price, Lancaster and James Clarke, never smoked.

Sen. Terry Sanford, a Democrat, and Rep. Howard Coble, a Republican, say they never developed a taste for cigarettes but do smoke cigars. Sanford says he doesn't smoke in the office, though.

Two House members who have cut back or quit say they did so for their health.

Coble, from Greensboro, says he used to chew a pack of tobacco a week and has cut down to four or five packs a year.

"I had gum surgery about five years ago," he says. "It was as painful as anything I've ever had. My dentist told me, 'I can do this again in about eight or 10 years if you keep chewing tobacco.'"

Ballenger said he quit smoking 2½ months ago.

"I went and took a physical," he says, "and my cholesterol was high. They said, 'Of course, you realize smoking compounds this thing.'" So Ballenger gave up smoking.

Though the U.S. surgeon general has said for years that smoking causes cancer, heart disease and other serious ailments, most non-smoking N.C. lawmakers are reluctant to say health is their reason for not smoking. Admitting a link between smoking and health could undermine efforts to defend tobacco from higher excise taxes or plans to kill the tobacco farmers' price support program.

"I don't smoke because I never had the urge," said Clarke, a Democrat from Fairview near Asheville, who also rents out a small burley allotment.

Besides Helms, Jones and Hefner, cigarette smokers in the delegation are Reps. Steve Neal, a Democrat from Winston-Salem, and Alex McMillan, a Republican from Charlotte. None claims to smoke much, however.

"I may smoke a few cigarettes a day to maybe sometimes a half a pack," McMillan said, "and then I may go for weeks without." His favorite brand is Pall Mall.

Neal prefers Winston, made by R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co., headquartered in his district.

Hefner smokes Marlboro, made by Philip Morris, which has a cigarette plant in Cabarrus County in his district.

Although some members of Congress have office smoking restrictions, no North Carolinian has. Several N.C. offices also offer visitors free packs of cigarettes donated by state manufacturers.

Rep. Walter Jones, D-N.C., had stopped smoking several years ago until the day a reporter called. The reporter asked a staffer if it was true that Jones, then chairman of the House tobacco and peanuts subcommittee, had quit cold turkey.

Jones, seeing the potential for an embarrassing story, bummed a cigarette, lit it and returned the reporter's call.

Jones said he told the writer, "I have a lighted cigarette in my right hand. He said, 'You've killed my story.' I said, 'Good.' He forced me back to smoking."

IN THE STATE

Inmate Stabbed

RALEIGH (AP) — A 20-year-old inmate at Morrison Youth Institute in Richmond County was stabbed on Monday, apparently during an argument over money, officials say.

Jimmy Brown of Winston-Salem was stabbed about 1:30 p.m. at the prison in Hoffman for youth offenders between the ages of 18 and 24, according to David Guth, a spokesman for the state Department of Correction. Brown was taken to Hamlet Memorial Hospital suffering from a stab wound to the lower back, Guth said.

Brown, who is serving a 12-year sentence for breaking, entering and larceny, was treated and will be transferred to the Acute Care Hospital at Central Prison in Raleigh, Guth said. He began serving his sentence in November 1987.

Russell Woodell, 20, of Bolivia, N.C., was charged by the Richmond County Sheriff's Department with assault with a deadly weapon with intent to kill inflicting serious injury.

Guth said the incident appeared to be over money that Brown was owed.

Steroid Tests

CHARLOTTE (AP) — Contestants in this September's North Carolina Police Olympics face testing for steroid use, the games' director says.

The decision to test comes in response to widespread requests by police officers, said director Woody Hayes. He said the decision was underscored by the firings or resignations June 27 of five N.C. troopers suspected of steroid use, a misdemeanor.

One of the troopers, Tim Collins of Gov. Jim Martin's security staff, placed second in power-lifting in the 1988 N.C. Police Olympics, Hayes said.

"We don't want any taint," Hayes said, explaining the policy change. Hayes said the cost would determine how extensive steroids testing would be. The Police Olympics is a charity event used to raise money for the Special Olympics. Last year's police games raised $9,655 for the Special Olympics, Hayes said.

Rowan Tumors

SALISBURY, N.C. (AP) — A Salisbury doctor worried about the number of patients with brain tumors in a section of Rowan County has sparked a state investigation.

Dr. Sorrell Wolfson, a radiation therapist, said he became concerned when four county residents with brain tumors were referred to him during a single week in May. All four lived in the same area in southwestern Rowan County, and interviews showed six other people in the area with similar conditions.

"The incidence of brain tumors is one per 25,000 population per year, and four cases for me to treat with radiation therapy in Salisbury, N.C., is a huge number," Wolfson said. "It's a huge number for anybody to see in a week's period of time."

Wolfson contacted the state health division, which will conduct a study in the county.

Helicopter Struck

FAYETTEVILLE (AP) — An Apache helicopter was struck by lightning at Fort Bragg's Simmons Army Airfield, but no injuries were reported, a Fort Bragg spokesman said.

Damage to the parked aircraft had not been determined Monday, according to Maj. Baxter Ennis.

"Around 4:30 p.m. (Friday), we had a couple of soldiers who saw lightning strike an AH-64," Ennis said. The men were about 50 yards away, he said.

A black mark on the aircraft is the only visible damage, Ennis said. The helicopter's electrical system was being tested for damage, he said.

Bakker Trial Remains In Charlotte

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHARLOTTE, N.C. — No useful purpose would be served by moving the trial of PTL founder Jim Bakker and former aide Richard Dortch should be tried together.

Defense attorneys for Bakker and former aide Richard Dortch had asked for the trial to be moved to avoid negative publicity.

But, U.S. Magistrate Paul Taylor ruled Monday that moving the trial would not help avoid the widespread publicity surrounding Bakker's fall from the helm of the PTL ministry in 1987. He also ruled that Bakker and former aide Richard Dortch should be tried together.

"Most cognizant citizens in this country have by now heard about Jim Bakker's resignation from PTL amid accusations of a sex scandal and attempted cover-up involving Jessica Hahn, as well as allegations by Jerry Falwell and other critics of Jim Bakker's immorality and mismanagement while at PTL," Taylor wrote in a 14-page order.

"In many cases," he wrote, "incidents of particularly inflammatory allegations regarding defendant Bakker have been detailed more graphically and sensationally in publications of national distribution."

Taylor noted that Bakker and Dortch voluntarily appeared on such television shows as "Nightline," and "Larry King Live."

Prosecutors had asked Taylor to move the trial to Asheville if he agreed with Bakker and Dortch that they could not get a fair trial in Charlotte.

The mail- and wire-fraud trial is scheduled to begin August 28.

Taylor's order included a graph outlining coverage of Bakker, Dortch and PTL from 1985 through May 1989 in national and local publications, as well as television.

His chart showed that The Charlotte Observer, whose stories about Bakker's sexual liaison with New York church secretary Jessica Hahn led to Bakker's resignation, printed 867 stories about Bakker and PTL from July 1985 to December 1986. The Observer printed 974 articles in 1987, 740 stories in 1988 and 174 stories from January to May 1989.

Taylor charted coverage of Bakker and PTL by The Asheville Citizen, showing the newspaper printed 62 stories in 1987, 39 stories and 1988 and 12 so far this year.

Taylor said attorneys must first attempt to assemble an impartial jury in Charlotte. If a jury cannot be picked, he said, defense attorneys could renew their motions to move the trial.

"At the very least, the passage of nearly two years since the outbreak of the media 'holy war' leads this court to conclude that there does not exist at the present time the 'inherent' or 'presumed' prejudice which would obviate the need to test the existence of 'actual' prejudice ..."

Hardee's To Refit Toys

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ROCKY MOUNT, N.C. — Hardee's Restaurant said it will refit tiny "Ghostbusters" toys in the wake of numerous reports of children swallowing the batteries.

About 2 million of the cigarette lighter-size, noise-generating toys, have been sold at $1.79 each since they were offered at the beginning of July, said John Merritt, vice president of public affairs for Hardee's, based in Rocky Mount, N.C.

The remaining 2 million in inventory will be altered by hand, he said Monday.

"Little 6-year-old Johnny, which this toy is designed for, leaves it lying around and his little brother gets it open and eats the battery," Merritt said.

"The retrofitting will cost us $1 million, but that is a small price to pay for public safety."

The toys are a tie-in with the "Ghostbusters II" movie and were being distributed by more than 3,100 Hardee's outlets, Merritt said.

Senate OKs Bill To Tax Pensions

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — The House and Senate probably will have little difficulty agreeing on a formula for taxing private and public pensions despite the chambers' problems reaching a consensus on other issues, a Senate leader says.

The Senate on Monday gave final approval 45-3 to a bill that would tax pensions of retired state, local and federal government workers at the same level and for the first time would give a tax break to private pensioners. The measure was sent to the House, where similar legislation is pending.

Both bills are in response to a U.S. Supreme Court ruling that states must tax pensions of retired federal, state and local government workers at the same level.

"This is a problem we have to handle; otherwise it costs us $35 million a year," Sen. Marshall Rauch, D-Gaston, said, referring to the amount the state would have to refund to retired federal workers for every year their pension benefits are taxed more than those of their state counterparts. "We'll probably get together sooner or later."

The House took Monday night off, and the Senate's evening session was brief as numerous bills scheduled for action were postponed.

The pension bill's passage came without discussion, in contrast to last week's intense debate before it received tentative approval.

Currently, the state income tax is not levied against pension benefits of retired state and local government employees. Federal pensions are taxed but the first $3,000 of their annual benefits are exempted (that amount rises to $4,000 during the current tax year). Private benefits are fully taxed.

Under the bill, all pensions — public and private — would be taxed but retirees would get a 6 percent credit up to $200 per person. Also, for the first time North Carolina would tax benefits of people who work in North Carolina but move to other states after retirement.

State employees' benefits would be increased to partially offset the taxes they would pay. Most workers whose salary was $35,000 or less when they retired would break even.

But critics say the bill would deplete the state employees' pension fund and would break faith with workers who were hired with the understanding that their benefits would be tax-free.

The biggest difference between the Senate and House bills is the latter would grant exemptions instead of a credit and would phase in the private pensioners' exemption instead of granting it immediately.

Twisters Kill Two People, Leave Hundreds Homeless

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Tornadoes smashed through the Northeast, hurling a trailer through the air, flinging a small plane off a runway and ripping roofs off dozens of homes. At least two people were killed, dozens injured and hundreds left homeless.

The twisters, rare in the area, touched down Monday evening in four states and left thousands without electricity.

A heat wave, meanwhile, scorched the Midwest and at least three cities opened "cooling centers" to give residents an escape from temperatures that hovered around 100 degrees Monday. No relief was in sight, and officials in Illinois worried about drought. Heat was a factor in one death in St. Louis.

In the Northeast, tornadoes roared from northern New Jersey to central Massachusetts. Hardest hit were coastal Connecticut and two southeastern New York towns and a Long Island village.

Scattered thunderstorms boomed over southeastern New York, southern Connecticut and northern New Jersey. In a half-hour, 4.4 inches of rain poured in Oxford, Conn.

A 12-year-old girl was killed in Connecticut when a tree fell on her tent at a campground; three other girls inside were injured, one critically, and taken to hospitals in Waterbury. A man died in New York City when he stepped into a puddle that was electrified by exposed wires at an excavation site.

In Waterbury, Conn., the storm tore off roofs, uprooted trees on the city green, and bent the tip of a flagpole. Streets were littered with glass.

Mayor Joseph Santopietro imposed a 10 p.m. curfew.

John Calamo, deputy director of civil preparedness in Hamden, said 40 to 60 homes suffered heavy damage but no major injuries were reported. The storm also did major damage to an industrial park, a 16-unit townhouse condominium and an auto body shop and the 25 cars inside.

"There's probably three-quarters of a square mile of devastation," he said.

Police dogs were to sniff through the rubble today.

Brian Johnson, a tenant at the condominium, said the tornado demolished his kitchen and sent kitchen knives flying into his livingroom. "My neighbor found her refrigerator in her living room," he said.

Thirty-seven people were treated in New Haven hospitals for minor injuries, and 27 people were treated at Waterbury Hospital for mostly minor injuries, although several people suffered broken bones, officials said.

More than 112,000 people in northwestern and southern Connecticut were without power, said spokesmen for Northeast Utilities and United Illuminating.

Fifty miles north of New York City, a tornado overturned cars and damaged homes in Carmel and Southeast township. Officials declared a state of emergency for all of Putnam County.

At a condominium complex in Carmel, 70 units were damaged, half of them severely, said the county's public information officer, Ken Lott. Dozens were left homeless.

"You're looking at these condos and the front walls are just gone," said Eric Gross of Carmel, a radio station reporter for WVIP in Mount Kisco. "You can look in and see their furniture on the second floor." No serious injuries were reported.

On Long Island, a tornado roared through Spadaro Airport in East Moriches, hurling a trailer into the air and dropping it in pieces across the airfield, witnesses said.

A man inside the trailer, which served as a skydiving school, was blown out and treated for cuts at a hospital.

The wind picked a small plane off the runway and dumped it upside down away into woods 100 feet away. Several other planes also were damaged.

In Massachusetts, a series of "mini-tornadoes" — small twisters 50 to 100 feet in length — knocked out power and telephones, felled trees and damaged homes in the Princeton, Stelling and West Boylston areas.

Most of the damage was in woods, said the National Weather Service.

In New Jersey, twisters left behind downed electrical wires and fallen trees, but no injuries were reported. One tornado was spotted near the George Washington Bridge over the Hudson River.

The Midwest's heat spurred officials to open cooling centers, or large air-conditioned rooms, in Chicago, St. Louis and Cincinnati.

High temperatures Monday included 101 degrees in Chicago; 100 in Moline and Rockford, Ill.; 98 degrees in St. Louis; and 97 degrees in Peoria, Ill.

Weather officials at the Quad City Airport in Moline said Monday was the 28th consecutive day without measurable rain — tying a record for rainless stretches during a growing season that was set in July and August of 1947.

Lake Michigan was popular: more than 240,000 people sought relief at Chicago beaches Monday.

Recovering Woman Identifies Ex-Mate

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CONCORD, N.H. — For nearly five months, police waited outside a rehabilitation center room for Miriam Stoltz-Gurney to say who killed her friend, shot her in the head and left her to die in the woods.

Last week, she remembered and pointed the finger at her ex-husband.

Police arrested George Gurney, 52, and charged him with first-degree murder, kidnapping and attempted murder. He is accused of killing Roger Whittemore, 52, of Swampscott, Mass., and taking his ex-wife prisoner on Feb. 16.

State Attorney General John Arnold said Gurney, of Newburyport, Mass., had been a suspect from the outset.

Gurney denies the shootings and is fighting extradition from Massachusetts. But New Hampshire authorities are confident he'll be in their custody soon.

At a district court hearing Friday in Lawrence, Mass., Gurney pleaded innocent to being a fugitive from the New Hampshire charges.

Assistant Attorney General Michael Ramsdell credits Stoltz-Gurney's willpower for her recovery from near death.

"Her recovery has been incredible," he said. "After being in a coma for one week, she has steadily progressed to the point where she was able to talk about the incidents that led to the shootings."

AZT Tests OK'd On Pregnant Women Infected With AIDS

By Paul Recer
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Pregnant women who test positive for the AIDS virus will be given an anti-AIDS drug for the first time in an experiment to determine if the drug can prevent their babies from developing the fatal disease.

The National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases announced Monday the experiment with the drug zidovudine, more commonly known as AZT, will be conducted on 10 women infected with the human immunodeficiency virus, or HIV, which causes AIDS.

Dr. Anthony S. Fauci, director of the institute, said the experiment is an effort to find a way of treating one of the fastest growing categories of AIDS patients, newborn infants.

"The prognosis for children (infected) with HIV is grim," said Fauci in a statement released by his agency. He said babies born to women infected with AIDS have a 25 to 40 percent chance of contracting AIDS and the disease progresses much more rapidly in infants than in adults.

"Of those diagnosed before their first birthday, half die within six months of diagnosis," said Fauci.

"It is impossible to count the costs in pain and heartbreak, and the social and economic burden of caring for these children is staggering."

Since 1981, there have been 1,600 cases of AIDS among children. Up to three times that number are thought to be infected with HIV.

The institute said little is known about how AIDS is transmitted from mother to baby, but it is thought to occur either during development within the mother, at birth through contact with the mother's blood, or from breast milk after birth.

Most AIDS infants are born to mothers who are intravenous drug users or who have been sexual partners of drug users.

All of the experiments will be on women who test positive for HIV, but who are not showing AIDS symptoms.

In the first phase of the study, researchers will enroll six women with no recent history of drug abuse. After the six have completed their course of treatment, the investigators then will treat four women who are intravenous drug abusers and use methadone, an approved pharmaceutical used to wean patients from illegal drugs.

All 10 women will start the study with AZT injections and then continue through the rest of their pregnancy by taking 200 milligram AZT pills five times a day. When the test subjects go into labor, AZT will again be injected.

Following delivery, the babies will be carefully monitored for 18 months for AIDS and to determine if the AZT treatment affected their development.

The experimental treatment will be directed by researchers from the University of Miami and the UCLA School of Medicine in Los Angeles.

AZT is the only approved antiviral drug now available for general prescription for treating AIDS. The drug can have serious toxic side effects.

AIDS, or acquired immune deficiency syndrome, is a contagious disease that attacks the body's immune system, rendering it incapable of resisting other diseases and infections. The virus most often is spread through close contact with blood, blood products or semen from infected persons.

As of May 31, 1989, AIDS had been diagnosed in 97,193 Americans, of whom more than half, or 56,468, have died since June 1, 1981, according to the CDC. No one is known to have recovered from AIDS.

Chase Trims Prime, Others May Follow

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — A steady decline in interest rates should prompt most major banks to follow Chase Manhattan Bank's lead in lowering the prime rate again, economists predicted.

Chase stood alone Monday in trimming its key lending rate a half percentage point, to 10.5 percent.

"I'm a little surprised that the other banks did not come in with a similar decision," said Robert A. Brusca, chief financial economist for Nikko Securities Co. International. "I suspect some key people who probably make these decisions are probably on vacation."

But Brusca predicted others would follow suit this week.

The prime, which usually lags behind other interest rates, is the rate banks charge customers with the best credit ratings. It also is the benchmark used to set interest on a variety of consumer and business credit, including home-equity lines of credit.

It stood at 10.5 percent at the start of 1989. Banks raised it twice in February to 11.5 percent, then lowered it a half point on June 5. Those movements reflected changing concerns about economic growth and inflation.

Economists have been predicting another prime-rate drop as the Federal Reserve Board shows more signs of loosening its credit in response to a slowdown in growth and easing of inflation.

Last week, the federal funds rates, the market rate of which the Fed has direct control, dipped as low as 8 7/8 percent after hovering at around 9 1/2 percent. The rate is what banks charge each other for overnight loans.

Other credit market rates also have been falling steadily. The Treasury's bellwether 30-year bond, for instance, has tumbled to about 8 percent, its lowest level in more than two years. And 30-year fixed mortgage rates have fallen, dropping last week to an average 10.17 percent, a 14-month low, according to HSH Associates, a Butler, N.J.-based mortgage research firm.

Saving rates also have slipped, with the average yield on the six-month certificate of deposit down to 8.79 percent last week from 8.84 percent the previous week.

Bond and stock prices rose moderately following Chase's announcement Monday, while the dollar was little changed to slightly lower.

Chase said it lowered its prime rate because its cost of borrowing money, including interest it pays on savings accounts or CDs, had declined.

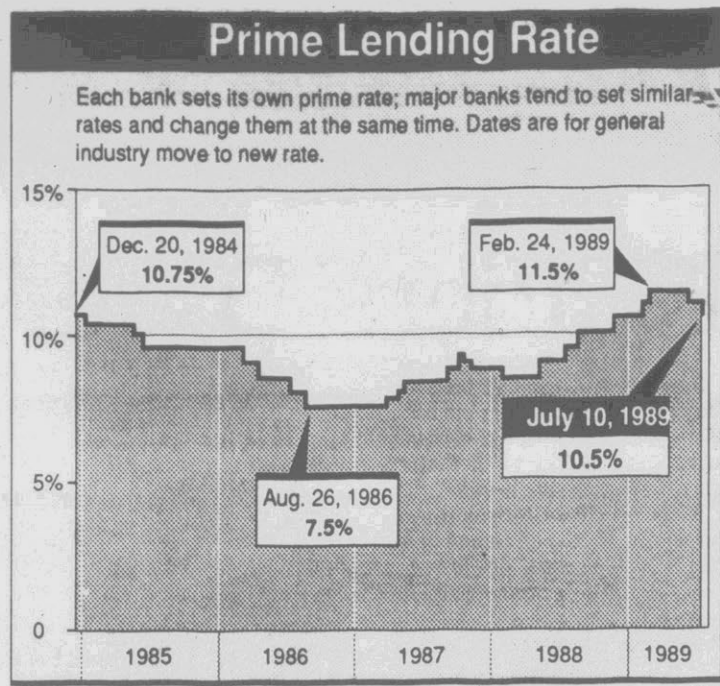

Last week, one small bank, Southwest Bank in St. Louis, cut its prime rate to 10.5 percent from 11 percent. But since then, only Chase has taken similar action.

Although it's not unusual for one or two banks to adjust their prime rates without others immediately following, major banks have essentially worked in harmony in recent years.

For example, Citibank and Chase raised their prime to 7.75 percent from 7.5 percent on March 31, 1987, a day before other major banks started following suit.

The last time Chase went solo was on Dec. 28, 1983, when it lowered the prime to 11 percent from 11.5 percent. Other banks took similar action two weeks later.

"We made an independent judgment," Chase spokesman Fraser Seitel said of Monday's move. "What we base our decisions on as much as anything else is the level of the cost of funds and market rates, and at this particular level 10.5 percent is clearly the appropriate rate."

B-2 Rolls Under Its Own Power

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PALMDALE, Calif. — At a barren desert highway intersection, an informal gathering of aviation buffs celebrated the B-2 stealth bomber's first power tests with foaming beer and a rally round the American flag.

For weeks, an assortment of people fascinated with the all-wing, radar-evading bomber from Northrop Corp. have been turning up around sunrise, waiting in expectation of a glimpse of the costliest warplane in history.

Monday, they were satisfied, when the approximately $500 million-a-copy B-2 rolled ponderously from its secure hangar and taxied down the Air Force Plant 42 runway at about 100 mph.

"It was an awesome sight to see,"

The Associated Press

$500 Million Stealth bomber rolls down the runway in its first power test on Monday said hot dog vendor Norm Masten as he offered up a breakfast frank and sauerkraut to a B-2 watcher. "If I were an enemy of this country and I saw that I would be shaking in my boots."

The sleek, manta-shaped strategic bomber successfully conducted taxi and engine tests for the first time, and in public view, stopping traffic on Sierra Highway, the main desert thoroughfare alongside Air Force Plant 42.

Air Force officials say more ground tests will be conducted this week, and first flight within the next two weeks.

People at the intersection drank beer, sipped soft drinks and munched Brooklyn hot dogs with Coney Island onion sauce ladled out by vendor Masten from his Little New Yorker hot dog franchise. A large American flag whipped in the breeze from above the trailer as Masten fixed franks and dug deep for mustard, sauerkraut and pickles.

Masten was doing a land-office business at the corner of Sierra Highway and Avenue 'N.' An hour after the test, motorists were still stopping to investigate the commotion where rarely anyone stirs among the spiny Joshua trees and desert sagebrush.

Hundreds gathered at various times, wheeling in with motor homes, sports cars and Harley-Davidson motorcycles.

Chief among the watchers was retired Marine John MacWhirter, who had been out on the highway before dawn each morning for two weeks for a glimpse of the stealth from his yellow step-van, which was decorated with patriotic slogans, peppered with salty observations about actress Jane Fonda and Iran. "It looked like a Volkswagen with wings," MacWhirter declared happily, adjusting his red USMC baseball cap. "It looks like Buck Rogers. It looks like Flash Gordon. I wouldn't have any anxiety at all about it flying tomorrow."

Cars stopped for about a mile along the highway so people could gawk at the strange sight of the bomber in the bright desert sunshine.

Jake Brown, a rangy Navy boatswains mate formerly assigned to the battleship USS New Jersey, said that when he heard the stealth was emerging from its hangar he telephoned work to say he'd be late.

"I called my boss and boogied," said Brown, who arrived at the area's favorite aircraft-watching corner just in time to see the V-shaped bomber enter the taxi way and get up to speed.

"We're into airplanes out here," Brown declared as he gazed at familiar skies where planes such as the B-1, the U-2 and the SR-71 Blackbird often conduct tests.

The stealth is the nation's most expensive and controversial, coming into the Pentagon arsenal during a period of increasing budget cuts.

Although many congressional critics have argued that the plane is either unnecessary or too expensive at a $70 billion program cost, Secretary of Defense Dick Cheney has declared the stealth bomber a linchpin of America's strategic defense policy.

Foley Keeps Cool Eye On Pay Raise

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Speaker Thomas S. Foley says he'll keep the House focused on legislation and won't let lawmakers get dragged into another pay raise dispute until there's bipartisan support — and public acceptance.

Foley said Monday that President Bush's proposal last week to raise pay for judges and top executive-branch officials left the door open for Congress to give itself a pay raise, although there was no specific recommendation.

But Foley said that while Bush and former President Reagan supported the increases, they allowed Republican campaign operatives to blame the Democratic-controlled Congress. That shouldn't happen again, Foley told a luncheon of Associated Press executives and reporters.

"I don't want to get into something where the president says yes, and the congressional campaign committee says no," Foley said. "That's unacceptable, that sort of good-cop, bad-cop routine."

Foley said it was also unlikely the House would approve Bush's proposal for 25 percent pay raises for federal judges and top executive branch officials without also considering a congressional pay raise.

Foley opposes such a connection, but said others are not willing to go along.

"There will be ... no disconnection between judges and the executive branch, and Congress. The underlying reality of that, in my judgment, is that the votes do not exist to do it," he said.

A special bipartisan committee in the House is examining ethical questions, including whether congressional pay should be increased in exchange for tighter restrictions on outside income such as speech honoraria.

Readers Differ On Children Making Decisions

Dear Abby: I couldn't believe the letter about the 8-year-old boy who wanted a Mohawk haircut and his parents said, "If that's what he wants, he can have it."

What were those parents using for brains? Since when do responsible parents let an 8-year-old kid get a bizarre haircut because he "wants" one? I thought parents were supposed to guide their children and help them make responsible choices.

What if this spoiled brat decides that he wants to go to school naked? Should his parents let him?

"Curious" asked you how

Dear Abby

parents could permit such a thing, and you meekly replied, "They must have their reasons." You sure weren't much help, Abby. — Disappointed In Abby

Dear Disappointed: Not all my readers were disappointed in me. Here's one for my side:

Dear Abby: I applaud those parents who let their 8-year-old son have a Mohawk. I believe parents should let their children make some non-life-threatening decisions when they're young. If they are ridiculed by their peers, it will be a good learning experience. Better a kid should fall on his face as a child when he has his parents there to comfort him than to fail as an adult and be faced with some major financial or family problems with no problem-solving skills.

Hair will grow back. If the boy wanted a tattoo, that would have been a different story.

The point is: Let your kids make some decisions themselves. If they make a mistake, they will have learned something from it. If you make all their decisions, they will lack confidence in their own judgment and will not only think they're incapable of making a decision, they'll be afraid to try. — Open-Minded In Dexter, Mo.

Dear Abby: A tragedy recently occurred in our neighborhood, and I hope you will pass this information on to the general public.

A beautiful 5-year-old girl suffocated in her family's new automobile. The irony of this terrible tragedy is that one of the "safety features" that was supposed to protect children actually contributed to her death. The vehicle had child-proof locks on the rear doors — designed to keep children from opening the doors while the car is moving.

Unfortunately, while the vehicle was parked in her parents' front yard, unbeknownst to them, the child went into the car looking for something, and the door closed behind her. She was too unfamiliar with the new car to get the door open, or to sound the horn to attract attention.

In less than 30 minutes the child suffocated in the heat of the Mississippi summer. (Police estimated that the temperature inside the car was between 120 and 140 degrees.)

She was a precocious child, and the kind of youngster anyone would love to have for a daughter. We dearly miss her. — Grieving Neighbors, Ocean Springs, Miss.

Dear Neighbors: Because you took the time to write, other parents will realize that if this could happen once, it can happen again. My thanks to you, and my heartfelt condolences to the child's parents.

Loss Of Life Requires Change And Adjustment

By Constantine G. Kledaras

Loss is a universal and inevitable part of the human experience. Throughout life, each person encounters an infinite number of losses — roles and statuses (through death, divorce, separation), possessions (fire, theft, etc.), relationships (friendships, relatives) — and ultimately the loss of our own life.

It is impossible to predict how a person will react to loss, as each of us are individuals. We do know, however, that loss involves change, and change involves adjustment and adaptation.

Following a loss of a great significance, a person normally goes from a period of acute emotional pain and sadness to a more comfortable psychological state. This is known as the grief process.

Sometimes the progression through the process is blocked. If the person can't resolve the grief within a reasonable period of time (about six months to a year), life-long negative consequences may result.

The duration of the grief reaction can be dependent upon three primary factors: (1) letting go of the deceased; (2) realization that the deceased is missing, and (3) forming new relationships.

Most people think grief is an emotion. But those studying grief found that it is more than a single feeling. It is also a process. The person in the grief process must experience the grief and feelings associated with it so that he or she can move beyond it.

All of us who have had losses (death being one example), experience what is known as "adoptive grieving." In this process, we move through specific stages to a successful conclusion within a broadly defined time period.

Your Mental Health

Dr. Kubler-Ross, an expert in the field of death and dying, depicts the process in the following stages: denial (no, not me) rage and anger (why me), bargaining (yes me, but), depression and, finally, acceptance.

In dealing with those in the grieving process, it is important not to be preoccupied with a stage or timetable.

It is important to rely on the individual to know what is right for him or her, to help the individual cope and experience the loss and move onward. When someone has not experienced grief and doesn't reach the stage of final resolution, that person is said to have "Maladaptive Grief."

When this occurs, then there may be a need for counseling and further professional help.

In dealing with persons who are dying, I find that they are often denied what they need most — open and honest interaction with those they love, including the acceptance of imminent death.

It is often hard for families, physicians and others to deal openly with a dying person. The dying person often knows that death is near and wants to discuss it.

But the family and caretakers often feel uncomfortable and cut off further communication. Respect your feelings but, also, let the dying person have his/hers, too.

The greatest contribution death education can make to life is the gift of love. It is my contention that we cannot know life to its fullest without knowing death — and love itself is intensified and enriched by death.

A central goal in life is for an individual to develop into a self and complete person. This is done only in relationships with other persons.

It is here that if we truly understand death, that death as I see it, makes its greatest gift — the sure and ever-present awareness that I shall die, much sooner than I wish, but others are moving to the same point.

This realization should enhance all human relationships. Length of life is not the key factor, quality of living is the key measurement to life. It is important to consistently remind ourselves that my memory is no shorter or longer than any other persons — I have the present for fullness and completeness.

Here, again is the importance of fullness of experience. I leave you with this ending message: To die, this is the human condition; to live differently and to die well, this is man's privilege.

Dr. Constantine G. Kledaras is associate dean of graduate studies in the School of Social Work at East Carolina University.

Couple Marries In Bessemer City

BESSEMER CITY — The wedding ceremony of Marilyn Patricia Ross and James Quintin Wooten took place at 2 p.m. Saturday in Grace Lutheran Church. The Rev. Robert F. Mitschke Jr. conducted the double-ring ceremony.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert McGill Ross of Bessemer City. Emma Wooten of Farmville and the late Johnny James Wooten are parents of the bridegroom.

Organist Barbara Potter and pianist Alicia Mitschke presented wedding music. Paneer Froneberger, Roger Wall, Doug Elliott and Steve Neely were vocalists.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore a formal gown of satin and re-embroidered alencon lace with a Queen Anne neckline, beaded lace bodice and long, tapered sleeves. The waistline was trimmed in alencon lace. The A-line skirt, hemmed in lace scallops, extended into a chapel train. Her Juliet cap of alencon lace and pearls was attached to a two-tiered veil of silk illusion with lace appliques. She carried a cascade of satin roses, orchids, stephanotis and mixed flowers.

Phyllis Ross of Bessemer City was maid of honor for her sister, Kathy McLeod of Wilmington was matron of honor. Bridesmaids were Ann Cordell of Marion and Marsha Brown of Cherryville. They wore pink tea-length dresses and carried nosegays of stephanotis and orchids.

The best man was James Andrews of Bostic. Ushers included David Ross of Bostic; David Ross of Charlotte, brother of the bride; Tony Sosebee of Bessemer City, and Eddie Murray of Dudley.

Gladys McNair was wedding director.

A reception was held in the church fellowship hall. A rehearsal dinner was held Friday evening.

The couple will live in Henderson after a wedding trip to the mountains of North Carolina and Virginia.

The bride attended Lenoir Rhyne College and Appalachian State University. She is employed by McDowell County schools. The bridegroom attended Mount Olive Junior College and North Carolina State University. He is employed by the U.S. Department of Agriculture Soil Conservation Service for Vance and Warren counties.

East-West winners were, Christ Jones and Dave Proctor, first; Gail McClelland and George Martin, second; Lucy Roberts and V. Srinivasan, third, and tied for fourth were Susan Pittman and Everett Pittman with Willie Cummings and Charles Duffy.

Tournament winners were Dot Corbett and Phil Lewis and Ethel Linton and Lois Sawyer, tied for first, and Bertha Jones and Natoma Owens, fourth.

North-South winners in the Wednesday afternoon game were Kay Arapage and Ray Neeland, first; Dot Corbett and Miriam Martin, second; Al Harris and Beulah Eagles, third, and Delanie Webb and Wesley Webb, fourth.

Dorothy Barnhill and Betty Ann Poindexter were first place, East-West winners. Others included Willie Cummings and Sally Kirkwood, second; Gloria Fentress and Lib Ross, third, and Phyllis McAllister and Jeff McAllister, fourth.

Sally Kirkwood and Willie Cummings place first in the morning game while Phyllis McAllister and Jeff McAllister won second, and Susan Pittman and Everett Pittman placed third.

Reading Pumps Up Brain

I gave birth to a child once who had to be entertained every moment he was conscious. You could surround him with visuals and toys, but unless you twirled them around, wound them up or made them talk, he was bored. He was born to sit in the bleachers and watch the world perform for him.

The kid was a prophet, possibly 30 years ahead of his time. Today, the world's a stage — and nearly everyone is in the audience. Life is just one big television screen.

Want a date? Check him or her out first on a video. Need a house? Your fingers don't even have to do the walking. The choices are cataloged for use on your VCR. There's no need to shop till you drop anymore. You can sit there in your bathrobe and buy everything from appliances to dinner rings as they flash across your screen. You don't have time to sit and turn the pages of a book? Just plug yourself into a cassette player and someone will read it to you.

It was reported that former President Reagan became bored reading resumes, so prospective applicants made videos that were more enjoyable to watch.

Small wonder kids no longer have the patience to listen to teachers lecture. They're used to raisins that dance and talking fruit that sell underwear.

I always remember the story of

At Wits End
Erma Bombeck

Barbara Mandrell. She was a child when her father took her to the Grand Ole Opry one night. In the darkness she leaned over and said, "Daddy, I was never meant to sit in the audience. I belong up there."

It's just a theory, mind you, but maybe that's why we give such rewards to those who are willing to take center stage. Sports figures who are willing to sweat, eat dust and get hit at the knees with the impact of a steam roller. Comedians who risk it all for the laugh. Politicians who are willing to take the heat for a principle. People who try something new, always with the possibility of failing.

Those of you who picked up the paper today are part of a special breed. You have not yet succumbed to having people read the newspaper out loud to you. Reading is not a spectator sport. You have to bring some of yourself to it — imagination, experience, comprehension and intellect.

About the child who was born passive: I had a horror of him growing up, looking at a painting by Chagall and asking, "It's nice, but what does it do?" As toys became more and more sophisticated, we lost the battle for learning how to pretend to play. But we didn't lose the battle of books. He learned that with a book and his imagination, he had a ticket to anywhere he wanted to go. They got him out of the audience and onto center stage.

Correction

Sunday's story about the wedding of Buddy Mills and Frances E. Tripp erroneously reported the officiating clergyman of the wedding, James Avery conducted the double-ring ceremony. Linwood Everett gave the bride away.

Cuban Officers Lose Death Order Appeal

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MEXICO CITY — Cuba's defense minister, Raul Castro, said he was sending an army hero to the firing squad without qualms and recalled how the ex-general had condemned soldiers to death for war crimes in Angola.

Castro said he also affirmed the death sentence for those three soldiers without regret, just as he agreed Sunday to turn down former Maj. Gen. Arnaldo Ochoa's request for clemency, the official Cuban news agency Prensa Latina reported.

"My hand didn't tremble then and it doesn't tremble now," he said as he voted along with the rest of the Council of State to uphold the death penalty for Ochoa and three officers convicted of drug trafficking.

Prensa Latina said Cuban television on Monday broadcast the excerpt of a Sunday night meeting in which the 29-member council, led by President Fidel Castro, unanimously upheld the sentences.

The news agency, monitored in Mexico City, did not say when the sentences would be carried out or whether the president, who for years has denied U.S. charges that Cuba was a way station for drugs, could grant a reprieve.

Pope John Paul II asked Cuban authorities for clemency for Ochoa and three other officers sentenced to die by a firing squad for drug trafficking, the Vatican said today.

Ochoa, Col. Antonio de la Guardia, Maj. Armando Padron and Capt. Jorge Martinez were convicted by a court-martial of helping smuggle tons of cocaine and shiploads of marijuana into the United States.

Ten other officers were convicted in the case, which also involved smuggling of diamonds, ivory and dollars, and sentenced to terms ranging from 10 to 30 years in prison.

Raul Castro, the president's brother, called drugs a capitalist plague and said Cuba must purge itself of "corrosive conduct."

It be would better "for our beloved and beautiful island to sink into the sea like the legendary Atlantis rather than succumb again to capitalism's corruptions," he said.

The arrests and trial constituted the biggest scandal to rock Cuba since Fidel Castro came to power Jan. 1, 1959.

Raul Castro said he had given Ochoa broad powers as commander of Cuban troops in Angola in 1987 and 1988. He recalled how Ochoa had invoked those powers to sentence three Cuban soldiers to death for murdering some Angolans.

He said that failing to apply the maximum punishment to Ochoa and his collaborators would be setting "an ominous precedent of impunity."

Ochoa, 57, fought alongside the Castro brothers in Cuba's rugged mountains during the revolution that overthrew dictator Fulgencio Batista. He went on to become a trusted aide who carried out confidential missions for the president.

He was named a Hero of the Republic, one of only five Cuban officers ever so honored, for his field service in Angola and Ethiopia.

All 14 defendants in the case were officers of the Cuban armed forces or held high positions in the security staff of the Interior Ministry.

They were stripped of all rank and decorations last month and dishonorably discharged. On Friday, a court-martial convicted them of drug trafficking, corruption and treason.

Some of the evidence made public from the court-martial purported to show that in addition to smuggling drugs, the 14 dealt in contraband diamonds, ivory and fine woods, and sold Cuban food and military supplies on the black market in Africa for their own profit.

Witnesses in the trial, which was broadcast on state television, testified that for 2 1/2 years the defendants had helped smuggle Colombian cocaine and Jamaican marijuana through Cuba into Florida.

Laurence Olivier Dies At Age 82

LONDON — Laurence Olivier, the foremost actor of his generation and leader of the giants of the English-speaking theater, died today. He was 82.

He died "peacefully in his sleep," surrounded by friends and relatives, said his agent, Laurence Evans. The cause of death was not given.

Olivier's last professional appearance was in the 1988 movie "War Requiem," based on the oratorio by composer Benjamin Britten.

He was to be buried in a private funeral service, with a public memorial service to be held later, Evans said.

Knighthood, ennobled and revered by the film and theater world, he was Lord Olivier when he died, one of the very few Britons to be given a seat in the House of Lords for his acting prowess.

His Hamlet, Henry V, Othello and Richard III were widely acclaimed, as well as, at age 76, his performance for television of King Lear. He was a tragic film hero in "Wuthering Heights" and portrayed the painful experience of aging in "The Entertainer" on stage and "A Voyage Round My Father" and "Brideshead Revisited" on television.

At the same time, with ferocious will, he fought cancer, pleurisy and a muscle disease that made even handshakes agony. He endured two miserable marriages and years of paralyzing stage fright, contemplated murder and suicide and battled his own rages, guilts and drinking.

tional Theater, which he founded in 1963.

"Awe and wonder, you gave us awe and wonder," actress Dame Peggy Ashcroft told him at the time. Director Peter Hall called him "the genius performer."

For Olivier, life and acting were inseparable. "I have to act to breathe," he said.

By turns, he loved and hated his craft — but never would contemplate retiring from it. Acting simply consumed him.

He was forever searching for new ways to broaden his range and reach the hearts of his audience. For instance, seeking to conjure up as abject a cry of despair as has ever been heard on stage, he would imagine the cry of the arctic seal when it licks the salt laid down by its hunters and its tongue sticks to the ice.

Whatever sex drive he had, Olivier wrote in his 1982 autobiography "Confessions of an Actor," went into his acting. "You can't be more than one kind of athlete at a time. A sexual athlete is not likely to find sufficient energy for work of another athletic kind."

Born May 22, 1907, in the town of Dorking southwest of London, Laurence Kerr Olivier was the third child of an Anglican clergyman who encouraged him to try acting.

His first stage was at home, with footlights made of cocoa cans. At 10, he was Brutus in a school performance. At 15, he donned women's clothes to play Katherine in a Stratford Festival boys' production of "The Taming of the Shrew."

After studying acting in Birmingham, his first professional role was in 1922 in a sketch in a small touring company. In his first London role, in Alice Law's 1924 "Byron," he tripped over a doorknob and fell on his face.

His first marriage, to actress Jill Esmond in 1930, produced a son but ended in divorce. Meanwhile, his career was soaring through Noel Coward's "Private Lives" in London and New York, and Shakespeare's "Romeo and Juliet," in which he and John Gielgud alternated playing Romeo and Mercutio.

With Gielgud and Ralph Richardson, fellow knights-to-be, he formed a partnership that re-made English theater.

Olivier played a dazzling succession of Shakespearean triumphs — Hamlet, Henry V, Macbeth. Movie stardom came in 1939 when he moved to Hollywood and made "Wuthering Heights."

A's Stewart Set To Realize Dream

Dave Stewart

AL Goes With Stewart, NL With Reuschel For Tonight's All-Star Game

By Joe Donnelly
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ANAHEIM, Calif. — Baseball's 60th All-Star Game will be played near the edge of Disneyland Tuesday night. Pitcher Dave Stewart of the Oakland Athletics will realize a career ambition when he starts for the American League, which is seeking to narrow the National's 37-21-1 series lead. The AL has won two of the past three years and hopes to continue that trend after more than two decades of domination by the NL.

Stewart will be opposed on the mound by the Giants' Rick Reuschel, who at 40 becomes the oldest pitcher to start an All-Star Game since Warren Spahn was less than a month older when he started in 1961. Former President Reagan will also get in on the act, returning to the announcing booth to describe an inning of play-by-play for NBC.

But none of those gathered here to perform in this spectacle are more excited than Howard Johnson and Kevin Mitchell. Friends and former rally-cap wearers who were reserves for the '86 Mets, they walked into an All-Star clubhouse for the first time Monday.

Johnson, who will start at third base and bat sixth in NL manager Tommy Lasorda's lineup, isn't bothered by not being voted to the team by the fans. He finished fourth in the third-basemen voting, won by the retired Mike Schmidt.

"The main thing is I feel like I belong here," Johnson said. "I think with Schmidt being voted in, it's acknowledgement of the player he's been. To me, it's the fans' way of saying, 'Don't leave us.' I'm just happy to be here. I didn't care if I played one inning. But starting makes it great."

While Hojo's numbers (22 homers, 57 RBI) are solid, Mitchell's are out of sight. When he hit three homers over the weekend in St. Louis' Busch Stadium, the most unfriendly park in baseball for a home run hitter, Mitchell raised his total to 31, one shy of the Cardinals' team total. Consider he also has 81 RBI in 86 games and the productive numbers of all the other All-Stars pale in comparison.

On a day of fun and frolic before Tuesday night's game, Mitchell was the center of attention. The horde of media by his locker wouldn't wilt. When one or two reporters moved out, two or three more dove in to try to find out if Mitchell thought he could catch Roger Maris. Mitchell laughed, a gold tooth flashing in the center of his upper deck, and said, "I don't think about it. I

Minimal Managing Less Is More For The Managers

By Gene Wojciechowski
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

ANAHEIM, Calif. — Tom Lasorda's considerable antacid supply should finally go untouched Tuesday evening as he trades his struggling Dodgers for the National League All-Stars.

As managerial duties go, Lasorda needs only to spell the names right on the lineup card and that should about do it for him. This is a job, according to those familiar with the game, that requires little more than legible penmanship and a freshly laundered uniform.

"A privilege and an honor to be the manager," Lasorda said.

Sure it is, but by all accounts it's also a simple assignment that features a modicum amount of strategy and a maximum amount of diplomacy. Lasorda and his American League counterpart, Tony LaRussa of the Oakland Athletics, admitted that much during Monday's All-Star workout.

"The knack is to make it minimal managing," LaRussa said. "You're here to let the players show their abilities ... and you don't want to get in their way."

To this end, LaRussa and Lasorda have promised to keep their hands off the game except for the necessary substitutions and occasional strategy moves. Otherwise, they plan on spending the evening as uniformed spectators, traffic cops for their respective 28-man rosters.

"You may have one or two calls about a pitching decision or something as far as offense, but basically it's a game for the players," LaRussa said.

You'll get no argument from the players, who consider the managers sort of glorified gatekeepers. Can the managers make the difference?

"Not unless he just completely makes a mockery of thing," said Cleveland Indian reliever Doug Jones.

Said Boston's Wade Boggs: "I don't think it comes down to a strategy maneuver thing."

Better to follow the advice of Minnesota Twin Kirby Puckett who said a manager might want to just "put the guys on the field and let them go."

Actually, depending on the speaker, LaRussa or Lasorda, the difficult part of the managing job is complete — namely, selecting the reserves and pitchers. LaRussa relished the duty while Lasorda, who is making his fourth appearance as the NL manager, fretted about hurt feelings and unfulfilled contract incentives.

Consider what was at stake: 33 of the All-Stars earned $847,500 in bonuses. Devon White of the Angels received $25,000 in incentives when LaRussa named him to the AL team. Houston Astro pitcher Mike Scott is due for a $25,000 bonus and a $25,000 increase in his base salary for the next two years because he was selected.

"As far as I'm concerned, I'd appreciate it if the fans voted for all the players," Lasorda said. "A lot of players resent the fact that they're losing out on that bonus."

How would he feel about an expanded All-Star roster, say, from 28 to 30?

Shoeless Joe For All-Star?

By Ed Schuyler Jr.
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

With the kind of summer Shoeless Joe Jackson is having in movie theaters across the nation, it's a wonder he wasn't voted to start for the American League in baseball's All-Star Game.

After all, it's the least the fans could have done after bypassing Shoeless Joe the year before, when he had a good summer in the movie "Eight Men Out," about the Black Sox scandal of 1919.

This year Shoeless Joe, the great outfielder for the Chicago White Sox, is being portrayed in the film "Field of Dreams." It is a fantasy.

So, obviously, is the makeup of the All-Star teams this year. That, however, is not why the game is being played near Disneyland. It's just the California Angels' turn to host the showcase in Anaheim Stadium.

Mike Schmidt was elected as the National League starter at third base even though he retired in late May after a great career with the Philadelphia Phillies. Has anyone ever played in the All-Star Game wearing a suit and tie?

Just kidding. Schmidt is ineligible to play.

At least he played this season, however. Voted to a starting outfield position on the American League squad was Jose Canseco of the Oakland Athletics.

Canseco was the AL Most Valuable Player with a monster season in 1988. This year, because of a wrist injury, he has yet to bat for Oakland, although he has played briefly in the Southern League. He has kept busy with various off-field shenanigans.

So with a retiree and a no-show on the starting rosters, how come the fans overlooked the ghost of Shoeless Joe? It would have been a nice gesture, a repayment for his being banned for baseball even though he was not involved in the fixing of the 1919 World Series. He was cleared in court but not by baseball.

Sale Of Nuggets Makes History

By Jube Shiver Jr.
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

The Denver Nuggets of the National Basketball Association became the first black-owned major professional sports franchise when they were purchased Monday by Boston investor Bertram M. Lee and Illinois sports facilities manager Peter C.B. Bynoe for a reported $65 million.

At a news conference in Denver, Lee announced that David Checketts, former executive with the Utah Jazz, will become the Nuggets' president and oversee the daily business operation of the club. Checketts, 38, also becomes a minority owner. But most of the franchise will be held by Bynoe, an executive director of the Illinois Sports Facility Authority, and Lee, who in May 1988 was part of a group that sought unsuccessfully to buy the San Antonio Spurs for a reported $50 million. Both men are black.

Jackson Set To Follow Collins Jordan's Presence Makes Transition Period Easier

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHICAGO — Phil Jackson didn't have time to make a list when the Chicago Bulls called him away from a fishing hole to take the coaching job the club had just stripped from Doug Collins.

But if he had, the downside would be this: Why follow a coach who was highly successful, immensely popular and fired under seemingly unjust circumstances?

Yet, if it turned out to be the only asset on the other side of the ledger, the name Michael Jordan would be enough to make most men do what Jackson did — accept.

"It was easy to make the decision to coach this club. But it was hard to think about the circumstances," Jackson said Monday, two years after becoming an assistant to Collins and three years after being passed over for the Bulls' job in the wake of Stan Albeck's firing.

And the reason it was easy, Jackson explained, was Jordan.

"He's got this almost magical power, and the challenge now is to come up with a way where he doesn't have to use it on every play.

... For him to be strong at the end of the season, when we need him most, we're going to have to come up with some kind of offensive scheme that doesn't put all the weight on his shoulders."

The perception that Collins might have pushed Jordan to the point of diminishing returns — leading the NBA in points scored and minutes played and the Bulls in just about every category — was thought to be in part responsible for his sudden dismissal.

Jackson Prepared For Skeptics Knicks Name 33 Year-Old Ex-Aide As New Coach

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Stu Jackson believes his experience as an assistant coach for the New York Knicks is more important than his lack of experience as an NBA head coach.

Jackson, 33, became the NBA's youngest coach on Monday when the Knicks gave him his first head coaching job at any level.

"I may lack years of experience, but having spent the last two years with this team, I feel I'm experienced enough with this team," Jackson said.

Jackson was a Knicks assistant the last two years under Rick Pitino, who resigned in May to become coach at Kentucky.

"One of the big factors in Stu's favor is that he's been here," general manager Al Bianchi said. "He has as much experience in the pro game as Rick had when he became head coach. It's an easier transition when you take a man who is already here. No one was coming in here that I didn't know. There are going to be no more surprises."

To offset the inexperience factor,

Bianchi hired Paul Silas and Ernie Grunfeld as Jackson's assistants.

"We've surrounded Stu with 30 years of NBA experience and if he has a question, all he has to do is ask," Bianchi said.

Silas and Grunfeld played a combined 25 years in the NBA, and Silas was coach of the San Diego Clippers for three years. Grunfeld played for the Knicks for four seasons before becoming their radio analyst two years ago.

Rocky Mount Romps Past Snow Hill

SNOW HILL — Dan Wood, Duane Thomas and Ernie Jones had three hits each as Rocky Mount staved off elimination in the American Legion Area I Championship Series with a 20-3 win over Snow Hill Monday night.

The win narrowed Snow Hill's lead in the best of five series to 2-1 with the teams meeting tonight in game four in Rocky Mount.

The closest Snow Hill got was 2-1 early after Walt McKeel had a solo homer in the bottom of the first.

Rocky Mount came back with four runs in the third and five in the fourth to take firm control of the game.

In the third, Rocky Mount had four hits, keyed by an RBI double by Woods, and also took advantage of three Snow Hill errors.

In the fourth, Snow Hill committed two more errors and Rocky Mount got a two-run single from Thomas along with a triple from Wood and a single from Taylor.

Cedric Collins and McKeel had two hits each for Snow Hill.

Walsh Leaving S.F. For TV Job

NEW YORK (AP) — Bill Walsh has resigned as executive vice president of the San Francisco 49ers to join NBC as an analyst, the network said Monday night.

Walsh, 57, led the 49ers to three Super Bowl championships before quitting as head coach of the NFL team last January. He moved into the front office, leaving the coaching to George Seifert.

When NBC approached Walsh about becoming its top analyst for NFL broadcasts, Walsh accepted.

A statement from NBC Sports president Dick Ebersol and executive producer Terry O'Neil "confirmed that Bill Walsh has resigned as executive vice president of football operations for the San Francisco 49ers to join NBC sports as the No. 1 football analyst, working with play-by-play man Dick Enberg."

The network said further details would be announced Saturday during a news conference at Los Angeles.

"He needs a challenge and misses coaching," Stephen Kay, Walsh's lawyer, said Monday in an interview with KGO-TV of San Francisco.

"They (NBC) said the deal should be completed soon," 49ers spokesman Jerry Walker said. "I can confirm it after talking to NBC, but I can't confirm it from our standpoint because I haven't talked to anyone here."

NBC would not comment on what will happen to Merlin Olsen, who has been Enberg's partner on NFL telecasts. Olsen also is an actor and has indicated he might drop his announcing duties to pursue acting fulltime.

Daniels Hoping For Another Comeback

LAS VEGAS (AP) — Six weeks after he was shot three times on a New York City street, former prep basketball sensation Lloyd Daniels is shooting baskets again and hoping for yet another comeback at the tender age of 21.

One bullet remains in Daniels' right shoulder, but he's working himself back into shape and expects to join a pro team from The Netherlands on Friday when it begins its 10-game tour of the World Basketball League.

The 6-foot-8 Daniels was hospitalized in critical condition after being shot by two men who knocked on his door in Queens and put three bullets in him. Doctors removed two of the bullets, but decided it was better to leave the other one in his arm.

Police blamed the shooting on an old drug debt, a legacy of Daniels' battles with cocaine addiction.

Daniels was a prize New York City basketball player who attended five different high schools before being recruited to play at the University of Nevada-Las Vegas.

His career with the Runnin' Rebels was cut short before it began by a cocaine arrest, however, and he bounced from the Topeka Sizzlers of the Continental Basketball Association to a New Zealand pro league to the L.A. Pro Summer League.

Baker Announces His Retirement

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Offensive guard Ron Baker of the Philadelphia Eagles, the last active member of the club's 1980 Super Bowl team, announced his retirement Monday after one of the best seasons of his 12-year NFL career.

"Age is the main reason," said the 34-year-old Baker.

He called it a career as he stood under a July sun in cavernous JFK Stadium and watched his erstwhile teammates labor through the first day of Coach Buddy Ryan's so-called "voluntary" pre-training camp.

"The real tell-tale sign was at mini-camp (in May) when I was listed third team on the depth chart," said the 274-pound Baker, a 10th-round draft choice of the Baltimore Colts in 1977.

"I woke up one morning to realize the inevitable had happened," Baker said.

"This is enough. I'll go home to Oklahoma and work in my aerobic apparel shop."

Baker said Ryan told him it would be difficult for him to make the team. "I told him I would make it easy for him. I'm retiring."

Ryan confirmed that he told the 6-foot-4 Baker that the guard didn't fit into the 1989 plans.

"He read the handwriting on the wall. I'm glad he did it," Ryan said.

"Some guys wait too long."

SEBRING, Fla. (AP) — A medical examiner said racing enthusiast Craig Arfons died of a combination of internal injuries after his 5,500-horsepower jet hydroplane flew off course at more than 300 mph.

Bulls ...

NBA seasons largely because of his defensive skills and who managed the Bulls' defense for Collins, thinks that's the way to get Jordan more breathing room.

"Defense is the one reliable feature day in and day out. ... We don't need Michael on the defensive board. We've got to get him out of the way of the elbows ... and get him out in front a little more for the easier baskets," Jackson said. "We can do that by extending our defense."

Jordan, asked about the coaching shakeup, wasn't taking any sides.

"There's a little bit of Doug Collins in Phil Jackson," Jordan said. "And, hopefully, Phil can pull it off and give us the leadership we actually deserve and need to take it as far as we want to go."

Jackson's NBA experience as a head coach is limited to one game last December when Collins was ejected. But he spent five seasons guiding the Albany Patrons of the Continental Basketball Association, which named him the top CBA coach in 1985.

Charlotte After New LPGA Event

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHARLOTTE — The Carolinas Women's Open, usually a stop for aspiring LPGA golfers and tour players who don't make the U.S. Women's Open, may be the catalyst for a second women's tournament in North Carolina, according to a Charlotte newspaper.

Jackson ...

perience and Ernie is well-liked," Jackson said. "I think we will have one of the most outstanding staffs in the NBA."

Jackson said his biggest adjustment as a head coach "will be my relationships with the players. My personality won't change, but now I'll be making decisions instead of suggestions. Sometimes those decisions won't be taken favorably."

He said the team doesn't need wholesale changes because it has won 97 games the last two years. He indicated he will concentrate more on half-court offense and defense, but not to the exclusion of a running game.

"In order to be an NBA championship team, you have to be prepared in all areas, be it a running game or a slowdown game," Jackson said. "You can't play one way."

Jackson played at Oregon for Dick Harter, now coach of the NBA's Charlotte Hornets, and was a graduate assistant under Jim Haney for two years beginning in 1981. He later was an assistant at Washington State and Providence.

The Charlotte Observer reported in today's editions that LPGA commissioner Bill Blue was to visit Charlotte today to discuss the possibility of making Charlotte a regular women's tour stop beginning next May.

Blue will meet with organizers and officials of the Carolinas Women's Open, a women's satellite tournament held for five years at Gaston Country Club in Gastonia.

Those officials will present a feasibility study at a Wednesday evening meeting with Blue at an undisclosed Charlotte location. One official was quoted in the newspaper as saying a decision could come as early as the end of today's meeting.

The tournament, which would retain Carolinas Women's Open as its name, will be played over 54-holes and carry a purse of $400,000. It would be preceded by a two-day pro-am.

According to the newspaper, officials plan to hold the tournament in the second or third week of May, and are negotiating with the newly opened Providence Country Club as the site.

Officials are also negotiating with four major sponsors, the newspaper said, with profits going to a charity.

According to a tournament official, the LPGA had received favorable reports dealing with the success of the $50,000 Carolinas Women's Open and were interested in bringing an LPGA event to Charlotte.

The PaineWebber Invitational, a Senior PGA Tour event, is the only major professional golf tournament in Charlotte. The Kemper Open, a popular PGA Tour stop, left Charlotte in 1979. PGA commissioner Deane Beman has indicated the PGA Tour will not hold another tournament in Charlotte.

Should negotiations be successful, it would bring a second LPGA Tour event to North Carolina. The Planters Pat Bradley International in High Point is in its second year and was formerly the Henredon Classic.

The Carolinas Women's Open began in 1984 and quickly became the largest non-LPGA event in the country. It developed into a regular stop for players on the Futures Tour, a series of tournaments for aspiring LPGA players. Among its former champions is Tammie Green, who recently won the DuMaurier Classic in Canada, one of the four major championships in women's professional golf.

The past two years, the Carolinas Women's Open had been played opposite the U.S. Women's Open and attracted LPGA players who failed to qualify for that event. Marlene Floyd, an LPGA Tour regular, was the 1988 champion.

The 1989 Carolinas Women's Open was canceled because of extensive renovations to the clubhouse at Gaston Country Club and a city sewer project that cut through much of the golf course.

challenge," Lee said of the franchise that Sidney Shlenker, the current Nugget owner, bought in 1985 for $19 million.

Lee is president of BML Associates Inc., a Boston telecommunications firm, and a former president and shareholder of WNEV-TV in Boston.

Business associates said Lee, 50, earned about $17 million when he joined with a group of WNEV shareholders that sold about 40 percent of the station for $100 million at the end of 1986. BML Associates, which ranks 27th on Black Enterprise magazine's list of the nation's largest black-owned companies, also owns radio stations in Nebraska and Utah.

"Lee is an expert at investing other people's money," said Toye Brown, a longtime acquaintance who is president of the non-profit social service agency Freedom House in Boston, which Lee once headed. "But he keeps his business very much to himself."

Lee declined to disclose his other investors.

"Peter and I are the largest shareholders," Lee said. "There will be some other people involved, but I don't think it's appropriate to give the ownership breakdown."

Starting Pitchers Bucked The Odds

By Kent Baker
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

ANAHEIM, Calif. — Two pitchers making their first All-Star Game starts will be in the spotlight tonight when baseball stages its annual midsummer classic at Anaheim Stadium.

Both Dave Stewart of the Oakland Athletics, the American League choice, and Rick Reuschel the time-tested wonder of the San Francisco Giants, the National League starter, have bucked long odds to reach a game that will be missing such stars as Jose Canseco, Darryl Strawberry and Mike Schmidt.

Stewart, released by the Philadelphia Phillies after arm trouble four years ago, finally gets some overdue recognition after losing out in the Cy Young Award races the last two years despite winning 20 games.

"I always believed I could play and win," said Stewart. "This is a pretty potent pitching staff, and any one of them could have started. I'm just going to try to get them out of there 1-2-3, so I don't have to see Kevin Mitchell."

Mitchell of the Giants is the major-league-home run leader with 31.

Stewart was named ahead of the Texas Rangers' Nolan Ryan by A's manager Tony La Russa to lead off a staff of 10 pitchers who all might work in the 60th All-Star Game, the second at Anaheim Stadium.

The National League won the first, 2-1, in 15 innings in 1967.

"I took the choice very seriously," said La Russa. "To me, starting this game is a great honor. I narrowed it to three and decided the guy most deserving was Dave Stewart."

One of the three considered was Ryan, who shut out his former California Angels teammates, 3-0, last Thursday and received a spectacular welcome home.

"That was one of the highlights of my career, getting that reception," said Ryan, at 42 the oldest player on either team.

"And to pitch a strong game like I did made it even better. But I think they made the right choice to start. Dave certainly deserves it with the first half he had."

Reuschel continues to defy the clock. At 40, he is second in the National League with 12 victories and has pitched the second-highest total of innings (140).

"I'm very excited to be here," he said. "I had other plans last year (marriage) and couldn't be. I appreciate it (the selection) more every year. To be out of the game and come back and be successful..."

"I'm going to stay out there until they drag me off."

This game used to be a gathering to talk about the superiority of the National League, but no more. Through 1982, the NL had won 11 straight, but the Americans have won two of the last three and chopped its overall deficit to 37-21-1.

"The AL has some really good talented young players," said Ryan. "I don't really see any difference in the leagues. It looks to me like in the last few years, some really good ones have come up."

Contrary to earlier reports, Canseco, the reigning Most Valuable Player in the AL, will not be at the site.

"It's very obvious to me he is not ready to play a major-league game," said La Russa, his manager. "We were talking about him coming back Thursday, but that's only 50-50."

"I felt it would be easier for him to work out at the (Oakland) Coliseum."

just go home, get some sleep and come back the next day." Johnson watched his former teammate hold court and felt happy for him. "He's a good guy," HoJo said. "We're still friends. He gave me some batting gloves on our trip to the West Coast."

Neither could have anticipated the season Mitchell is having. "You can't predict what he's doing," Johnson said. "But he obviously had the talent and ability to do these things. He looks like he's just up there swinging. But he's smarter than that. He knows what the pitchers throw. He's on an incredible tear."

Mitchell said a winter of hard work is paying off. "A friend of mine, Tony Wally, is a martial arts instructor in San Diego and he gave me a program," he said. "He had me running uphill with 70 pounds of logs in my arms tied to a chain around my neck. I did it every other day. That increased strength, and he also had me swimming and doing exercises to increase my flexibility."

The All-Star selection hasn't distracted him from his primary goals. He flew home to San Diego from St. Louis after Sunday's game so that he could take batting practice that night in the cage he has in his back yard.

"I wanted to just keep swinging the bat the way I have," Mitchell said. "I knew I was supposed to compete in the home run hitting contest during the workout, and I don't like to do that. You can develop bad habits pulling off the ball. So I thought the session at home in the cage would help guard against that."

And what is the thought process in those backyard swings? "If I think, I get myself in trouble," he said. "I don't have too much to think with."

Lasorda, LaRussa Ready ...

"You can move it up to 50 and there'd still be guys who would be complaining they should be on (the team)," Lasorda said.

So concerned is Lasorda about ill will among those NL players not chosen, that he plans on sending letters of explanation to each near-selectee. It is about the most pressing job he'll have now that his roster is complete.

Meanwhile, LaRussa considered the selection of the non-starters his most important duty. Let the fans choose the starting nine, he said, but let the manager do something.

"Being able to write down names of the great American League stars, trying to look and see who's doing what this year ... I enjoyed it a great deal," he said. "The bottom line is that I never knew one contract, so I don't know who won or lost money because of selections."

LaRussa had fun with his starting lineup, going so far to place Bo Jackson, usually relegated to a power-hitting position in the Kansas City Royal lineup, to the AL leadoff spot. He stuck A's slugger Mark McGwire in the No. 8 spot as "a second cleanup hitter." With that done, LaRussa now sits back and enjoys the scenery.

If there is such a thing as an All-Star managerial dilemma, it will likely come in the later innings, when LaRussa and Lasorda must tinker with the lineups without compromising their chances for victory. Tight games are especially tricky.

In the 1979 All-Star game in Seattle, Lasorda decided to keep Astro pitcher Joe Niekro in reserve, just in case the game ran beyond regulation. It didn't and Lasorda was branded a spoil sport by Houston fans for not inserting Niekro into the lineup.

A year earlier in San Diego, Lasorda pulled reliever Bruce Sutter with two outs in the ninth in favor of Atlanta's Phil Niekro, who had never appeared in an All-Star game. "That year I made everyone in Atlanta happy because I let Niekro pitch to one guy," he said.

New All-Stars Are Enjoying Themselves

Kevin Mitchell

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ANAHEIM, Calif. — Kevin Mitchell, who has collected home runs all season, walked around the National League clubhouse collecting bats.

"I just got Tony Gwynn's," he said, flashing a wide grin. "I got Vince Coleman's."

Baseball's biggest sensation is a souvenir collector of the highest order. And there's no place to get memorabilia like the All-Star Game.

The San Francisco outfielder stood in his stall wearing only purple plaid shorts and three gold chains — one with "Kevin" spelled out, another with a BMW logo and a third with his number "7" and the interlocking "NY" of the New York Mets, the team that traded him after the 1986 season.

"Some players tell me to get it replaced with a 'SF,'" he said. "I tell them I don't know how long I'll be around with the Giants."

Mitchell was talking trade while everyone watched him hold court. He just gazed across the room at the assembled talent.

"I wish I would have gotten here earlier," Mitchell said. "Then I could have watched them all come in."

At a picnic table in the middle of the clubhouse, Atlanta pitcher John Smoltz and St. Louis shortstop Ozzie Smith were autographing baseballs by the dozens.

"I don't know how many there are," Smoltz said. "If they asked me to sign a million, I would."

Mitchell and Smoltz were among the 19 first-time All-Stars.

"I never thought I'd be here," California outfielder Devon White said. "I expected to be at home, watching on TV. When I heard of it, I was overwhelmed."

"It's hard for me to think that I would make this team," Toronto infielder Kelly Gruber said. "There's a lot of guys who had as good an average as I had and are still not here. I'd be just as happy pinch-running as anything."

Baltimore catcher Mickey Tettleton had been thinking about the All-Star Game since he was invited last Thursday.

"The first day I heard about it, we were in Toronto and I started getting nervous then," he said.

Mitchell was more curious than nervous. He wanted to know about Kansas City's Bo Jackson, another All-Star rookie.

"I saw him play football but never baseball," Mitchell said. "He's unbelievable. It's unbelievable how hard he hits the ball. I wish I could talk to him, just to communicate. I think we would have something to say. Maybe I can have my picture with him."

Some, such as New York Mets third baseman Howard Johnson, are reaping the financial rewards of their numbers. He got a three-year, $6.1 million extension on Sunday.

"Howard Johnson didn't need a plane to get out here," said teammate Gary Carter, an All-Star from 1979 through last season. "Not only signing a new contract, but being selected for the All-Star Game."

For Smoltz, it was such a thrill that he brought along his parents, his high school coach and his summer league coach.

"If I never pitch another day in baseball, this is something a lot of people never got to do," Smoltz said.

When he found out last week that he would be an All-Star, Smoltz went for a drive, rolled down the window and screamed in glee.

He couldn't quite do that on Monday, not with mom and dad watching.

"When they saw me here this morning, she gave me a big kiss," he said. "As a matter of fact, then she kissed me again."

"You know," he said, "I can remember three, four years ago, just watching the game on TV and trying to picture myself in this lineup. When it really hits in, it'll probably be a greater thrill. It probably won't hit in until a week from now."

Schmidt, voted starting third baseman by the fans, will be at the game but will not play after his retirement. Strawberry has an injured foot and will be replaced by Eric Davis of the Cincinnati Reds.

La Russa said replacing Canseco in right field with Ruben Sierra of Texas was "one of the easiest calls."

Howard Johnson of the New York Mets will start in place of Schmidt.

"It's been kind of a whirlwind year for me," he said. "In the winter, I was traded to four or five different teams. Then, in the spring, I had to prove my arm was sound. But it's all turned around in a hurry."

Mid-Season Break For Non All-Stars

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ANAHEIM, Calif. — "Playing in the All-Star Game is great. Getting three days off in the middle of the season might be even better."

"I'm looking forward to having time with my wife and kids," said Frank Viola, starting pitcher for the American League last year. "We'll be at a cabin in northern Minnesota, doing some fishing and taking it easy."

Viola was not making definite plans to see tonight's game. Surprising to some, but once most players get away from the field, they are not rabid fans.

For many players, the biggest decision at the break isn't whether to watch the All-Star Game on television, but where to be when it is going on.

Some players prefer to stay at their in-season homes. Many of the Pirates will be in the Pittsburgh area during tonight's All-Star Game. Other players take the break at their off-season homes.

Kevin McReynolds, who was raised in Arkansas and spends his summers in New York, took off for Little Rock when the Mets' game ended Sunday.

"I want to go midnight fishing back home," he said. "We'll also get out the flashlights and go catch some frogs."

Fishing is one of the most popular ballplayers' hobbies. Ten or so members of the St. Louis Cardinals have made a habit of taking their poles to Lake of the Ozarks, a resort in Missouri, on their All-Star vacation.

While few players publicly say it, many of them would prefer to have three days off in mid-July, rather than take part in All-Star festivities. Especially when the game requires a long trip both ways, as this year's event at Anaheim, Calif., meant for many.

Rob Dibble, the Cincinnati reliever who triggered a bench-clearing brawl with the Mets last Saturday, was ready for the brief hiatus.

"I'm going to rest my arm," he said. "That's what I need to do."

Swimming and sunning are favorite pastimes for those who play the national pastime. Chili Davis of California says the main thing is to keep cool.

"We have to make sure we don't abuse these days off. No drinking, not doing anything stupid," he said. "We just have to relax, stay healthy and come back strong."

Bert Blyleven of the Angels figured he should have made the All-Star team. But despite an 8-2 record and leading AL starters with a 2.15 earned-run average, he was bypassed.

Giamatti Wants To Finish Rose Situation

ANAHEIM, Calif. — Commissioner Bart Giamatti said Monday that baseball is determined to take the Pete Rose case to a conclusion, no matter how long that process takes.

"I have nothing to gain by having baseball racked by this controversy, this sadness," he said. "But you can't turn away from these allegations."

The next step in the case comes next Monday in Columbus when a federal judge considers arguments from both sides on the appropriate jurisdiction of the case. Baseball wants the matter in federal court. Rose's attorneys prefer that it be returned to a Cincinnati court where they won a temporary restraining order last month.

In the middle is Giamatti, who insists that all he wants is to give Rose a full and fair hearing on charges that the manager of the Cincinnati Reds gambled on baseball. Rose has argued that the commissioner has prejudged the case.

"Nobody yet has told me why I would be biased," Giamatti said.

The commissioner arrived at the All-Star Game equipped with a copy of the infamous letter that he wrote to a federal judge in support of bookmaker Ron Peters, Rose's chief accuser.

"Funny you should ask about that," he said, as he reached into his jacket pocket for the letter. Various parts of the copy were underlined.

Giamatti said the letter discussed special investigator John Dowd's reception of Peters' testimony, not the commissioner's perception. "It says 'truthful to my counsel,'" Giamatti said, "not 'truthful to me.'"

The commissioner said he wanted Rose to have a hearing before passing any judgment and acknowledged that the case could drag on for some time.

Baseball Notes

"I think it has distracted fans somewhat," he said.

"Everybody knows he was an extraordinary player. This is not about a player. This is way beyond the sports pages."

Sutcliffe Added To NL Team

Chicago Cubs pitcher Rick Sutcliffe was named Monday to replace Mike Scott of the Houston Astros on the National League All-Star team, a Cubs spokesman said.

Sutcliffe was named to the squad for Tuesday night's game at Anaheim, Calif., after Scott strained his left hamstring in Sunday's game against the Montreal Expos, Cubs spokesman Sharon Pannoza said.

Sutcliffe, 10-6 with a 3.50 ERA, will be making his third appearance in an All-Star game.

He joins Cubs teammates Ryne Sandberg and Mitch Williams on the NL All-Star squad.

Expecting that he would not be pitching again until Friday due to the All-Star break, Sutcliffe volunteered to help in the Cubs' bullpen on Sunday.

He pitched 1 1/3 innings in relief, allowing one hit and no runs, in an 11-4 victory over the Dodgers. It was Sutcliffe's first relief appearance since April 20, 1986.

Guidry To Announce Retirement

Pitcher Ron Guidry has agreed to retire and will formally announce the end of his career at a news conference Wednesday at Yankee Stadium, the New York Times reported Tuesday.

Guidry, who turns 39 next month, has been plagued by shoulder and elbow problems in recent years. He began the season on the disabled list after undergoing surgery March 17 to have a bone chip removed from his elbow. He pitched in seven games this season with Columbus, the Yankees' top farm team, but went 1-5 with a 4.18 ERA.

The Times, citing a source close to the team, said Guidry was told by Yankee officials that he would not be brought back to the major league roster.

Guidry has a 170-91 record and a 3.29 ERA in 14 seasons, all with the Yankees, but is only 16-23 since his last 20-win season, a 22-6 mark in 1985. He won 20 or more games three times, including a 25-3 record in 1978 when he won the American League Cy Young Award. He had a 2-1 record in three American League playoffs and was 3-1 in World Series play.

Gubicza Set For Free Agency

Mark Gubicza, a 20-game winner last season and a member of this year's American League All-Star team, says he expects to be a free agent when the season ends.

Gubicza said he has not discussed a new contract with the Royals but did not rule out the possibility of signing for a seventh season with Kansas City. He said he plans to listen to offers from other clubs.

Gubicza, 8-6 with a 2.52 ERA after his 20-8 record last year, said the Royals indicated during spring training that they would not negotiate during the season.

"It's turned out well. We talked twice in spring training and they insisted they didn't want to do anything until after the season. That doesn't bother me. But I guess I'll definitely be a free agent," he said.

Langton Earns NL Honor

Mark Langston of the Montreal Expos, 2-0 with an earned run average of 0.53 and 19 strikeouts in 17 innings, was named National League Player of the Week on Monday.

Winfield Must Pay Out

New York Yankees outfielder Dave Winfield has been ordered by a Texas judge to pay $162,000 annually in maintenance and child support payments to his former common-law wife.

A Texas jury determined last month that Sandra Renfro, 34, had been married by common law to Winfield.

State District Judge Allen Daggett ruled she is entitled to $10,000 a month in temporary alimony and $3,500 a month to support her daughter that Winfield fathered in 1982.

Miscellaneous Information

Nolan Ryan is the oldest player selected for this year's All-Star Game at 42 years, five months. He's the oldest to be selected to an All-Star game roster since Pete Rose was chosen to the NL squad at 44 years, two months in 1985. ... The Baltimore Orioles are 28-for-87 this season with the bases loaded. ... Boston's Mike Greenwell is 1-for-10 with the bases loaded. ... From 1963-82, the National League won 19 of 20 All-Star Games, including 11 straight. ... Robin Yount of Milwaukee has 16 straight steals. ... Jeff Russell of the Texas Rangers was selected to this year's All-Star team as a reliever after making the 1988 team as a starter. He is the fifth pitcher to make All-Star teams as both a starter and reliever.

Zhao's Action Still Under Investigation By Chinese Party

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BEIJING — A government spokesman today said ousted Communist Party chief Zhao Ziyang is still under investigation for allegedly supporting the pro-democracy movement, and refused to rule out that he might be put on trial.

Yuan Mu, the only high-ranking government official who has met with reporters since the army crushed the movement June 3-4, told a news conference that "at this stage" Zhao only was accused of making mistakes that could be dealt with within the party.

"However, the problem is still under investigation," Yuan said. "How the problem will finally be dealt with will be decided according to the findings of the investigation."

In other developments, an American reporter and a Taiwanese journalist left China after being ordered out, and authorities gave a second Taiwanese reporter 48 hours to leave. All were accused of violating restrictions on reporting.

The new party chief, Jiang Zemin, met with a group of Hong Kong leaders this afternoon but both sides refused comment on the discussions.

Jiang was expected to try to reassure Hong Kong residents frightened by the mainland crackdown that China would preserve their capitalist system for 50 years after Britain returns the colony in 1997. However, China also has called on Hong Kong to stop supporting fugitive pro-democracy activists.

When the party Central Committee ousted Zhao on June 24 from the post he held for more than two years, it accused him of "splitting the party" and supporting the student-led protests for a freer society.

However, Beijing Mayor Chen Xitong charged in a recently disclosed major speech that Zhao "connived at" and facilitated the gradual escalation of the protests from April to June, and that his aides collaborated with the students in efforts to overthrow the government.

The report stopped just short of accusing Zhao of taking part in the alleged coup conspiracy by those under him. Such a charge would have to be followed by a trial, which might force party leaders to reveal details of top-level decision-making and might arouse new anti-party sentiment.

Although Zhao did not enjoy wide personal popularity, he has become a symbol of the crushed reformist camp.

Only senior leader Deng Xiaoping, who once sponsored Zhao's rise to power, could make the crucial decision of putting him on trial.

The last time a top official was accused of plotting a coup in China was in 1976, when moderates and generals arrested the radical Gang of Four that led the Cultural Revolution. They were put on public trial in 1980 and are serving life sentences.

Recent official media reports also have accused Zhao of serious ideological mistakes, including de-emphasizing the role of the proletariat and neglecting party building.

At his news conference, Yuan blamed Zhao for the endemic corruption within party ranks, saying that under his leadership the fight against corruption was relaxed.

Yuan said martial law, imposed in central Beijing on May 20, could not be lifted yet because "the struggle has not ended. Some guns still remain in society and that will be a cause of further unrest."

He insisted, however, that foreign tourists and businessmen could consider Beijing secure and said it would be unwise to make lifting of martial law a condition for returning to the city.

Thousands of Chinese-based foreign businessmen and their families fled Beijing in the week after the army cleared central Beijing of protesters, killing hundreds. Most have yet to return.

Many joint venture companies, which provide capital and technology China needs badly to modernize, remain virtually shut down or operate at much reduced levels.

"Of course there will be a time limit for martial law, but even I can't say exactly when that will be," Yuan said. He said it would be lifted "when things have completely returned to normal and when we feel that all the problems of the rebellion that need to be resolved have been."

He said sanctions imposed by some Western countries to protest the crackdown "will cause some temporary trouble" for China's ailing economy. Among the problems are inflation that Yuan said was running at 25.5 percent in the first half of the year, and growing budget and trade deficits.

"But the Chinese people will not yield to these pressures because of these troubles," he said. "On the contrary, it will inspire a spirit of plain living and hard struggle and relying on our own efforts. So in the long run it will do our country good."

Yuan refused to disclose figures for the number of people arrested since the crackdown began. The Associated Press has counted more than 2,000 arrests nationwide according to official media reports, but Chinese sources said that many were believed to have been arrested in the capital alone.

China today expelled a Taiwanese reporter who was arrested a week ago after he reported meeting with a key fugitive student leader.

Huang Teh-pei of the Independence Evening Post said after arriving in Hong Kong that authorities told him they had arrested the student, Wang Dan.

The Ministry of State Security ordered a second Independence Evening Post reporter, Hsu Lu, to leave within 48 hours, the People's Broadcasting Station said. It said she was accused of violating martial law, conducting illegal interviews and filing distorted reports.

A reporter for the U.S.-run Voice of America, Mark Hopkins, also flew to Hong Kong today after being accused of violating martial law. He was the second VOA reporter and the seventh Western reporter ordered out since the crackdown.

Hungarian Hints Of Military Threat

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BUDAPEST, Hungary — Romania is making military threats against Hungary and soon could become a threat to the security of its Soviet bloc neighbor, Hungary's foreign minister says.

The allegation was the latest sign of worsening relations between the countries, whose leaders met informally Saturday to discuss their differences but apparently only worsened the huge rift between them.

Foreign Minister Gyula Horn, speaking at a news conference in advance of President Bush's visit today to Hungary, said Romanian media had carried "certain military types of threats" against Hungary.

Horn refused to be more specific. Romanian military publications have reportedly devoted considerable space recently to deteriorating Romanian-Hungarian relations.

Horn also implied that Romania might one day threaten nuclear action.

He said that if a nation's leaders claim "they are capable of producing nuclear weapons and that in the not-too-distant future they will start on the manufacture of medium-range missiles, this... will have an impact on the neighboring nation, in this case Hungary."

In April, President Nicolae Ceausescu of Romania said his country has the potential to make nuclear weapons.

Ceausescu and Rezső Nyers, chairman of the Hungarian Communist Party, were involved in a "very sharp" round of talks on Saturday in Bucharest, where the leaders had gathered to attend a Warsaw Pact summit, Horn said.

Horn had said Saturday, after he attended that meeting, that relations between the two nations were now at "a bottom point."

"We took stock of all problems affecting our relations and the only area where agreement was reached was that we are neighbors and better relations are in (our mutual) interest," Horn had said after the meeting.

Horn was quoted Saturday by the state-run Hungarian news agency MTI as saying that "the emergence of certain military threats in recent months also affect heavily our relations. We see such manifestations as if the Romanians were deliberately attempting to incite hostility."

However, on Monday, Horn said, "We do not want to overdramatize this, but we cannot let it pass either."

The nations have been engaged in an escalating war of words over Hungary's allegations that Romania is mistreating its 1.7 million-member ethnic Hungarian minority.

Hungary also is strongly opposed to a Romanian rural resettlement plan that it says could destroy ethnic culture and tradition by moving Hungarians out of their native villages, thousands of which are being razed.

Relations have been further worsened by Hungary's decision more than one year ago to accept refugees from Romania.

Bombs Hit Mecca Pilgrimage

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MANAMA, Bahrain — Two bombs exploded in Mecca as thousands of people took part in the annual pilgrimage to Islam's most sacred city, killing at least one person and injuring 16, the official Saudi Arabian Press said today.

Two of the injured were in critical condition, the news agency said, quoting an unnamed Saudi Interior Ministry security official.

There was no claim of responsibility for the blasts, which occurred at 10 p.m. Monday while hundreds of thousands of pilgrims were praying and walking around the Kaaba, Islam's holiest shrine, inside the Grand Mosque.

The explosions occurred on the main road leading to the Grand Mosque and on an overpass near the mosque. The Saudi news agency indicated the blasts were caused by bombs.

An estimated 1.8 million Moslems from more than 80 countries are in Mecca as part of an annual pilgrimage to the city, birthplace of the prophet Mohammed. During the pilgrimage, known as hajj, Moslems also travel to Medina to visit the tomb of the 7th century founder of Islam.

A pilgrimage is one of the five basic duties of all Moslems.

Iran is boycotting the hajj because of limits on the number of pilgrims who can take part and has called on Moslems to disrupt the ceremonies. Last year, Saudi Arabia began limiting the number of pilgrims to Mecca and Medina based on a country's population.

Security sources refused to link Monday's explosions to the Iranians, saying the investigations were incomplete.

"Only a small number of Iranians came on their own and these were mainly from Europe," said one security source, speaking on condition of anonymity.

In Tehran, Parliament speaker Hashemi Rafsanjani condemned the bombings. Prime Minister Hussein Musavi said they were proof Saudi rulers were unfit to administer the holy shrines.

"They have done this to create a police state in holy Mecca and prevent Moslems from demonstrations against arrogant powers and Israel," he said in the statements distributed by Iran's official Islamic Republic News Agency.

The pilgrimage season has been marred by disturbances since Iran's Islamic revolution in 1979. In that year, religious extremists seized the Grand Mosque in Mecca and held it for two weeks before Saudi forces stormed it.

More than 250 people were killed. Saudi authorities later beheaded 63 more.

The Saudis arrested scores of Iranian Revolutionary guards posing as pilgrims in 1986 when they tried to smuggle in weapons and explosives.

The next year, 402 pilgrims, mostly Iranians, were killed in riots in Mecca that the Saudis say were instigated by fundamentalists.

Saudi Arabia cut ties with Iran in April 1988.

FORECAST FOR WEDNESDAY July 12

ARIES (March 21 to April 19): Actions by an unruly family member can be reconciled. Appreciation or an outright gift comes from someone you have helped.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20): An overactive schedule cuts into family time. Lunar position favors family relationships and the ability to resolve procedures that clash.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21): Articulate your feelings—share experiences with loved ones. Move into a slower lane and you will enjoy the fruits of your efforts more.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21): You are inspired, and your self-esteem has never been higher. Focus on self-enlightenment, devotion and spiritual awareness.

LEO (July 22 to Aug. 21): Career matters interfere with your ability to get other matters concluded. Your employer, however, realizes your value. Slow down.

VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22): You could have the travel adventure of a lifetime if you start planning for it now. Do your own research before consulting others.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22): Negative attitudes are self-defeating and can hold you back. Learn your limitations and build up your strong points.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21): Relationships take on a new vitality. Bonds are deepened and love is strengthened. Add some dazzle to your social life this evening.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21): Take a closer look at your emotional response to minor irritations. Learn to accept them as temporary inconveniences.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20): If you look for bad news, you will surely find it. This will smother an otherwise upbeat day. Concentrate on your own strength of character.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19): Your philosophies regarding your self-improvement are qualities to try to attain. Periodically examine the results of your actions.

PISCES (Feb. 20 to March 20): Intuition is enhanced today. If you haven't learned how to work with intuition, you are missing your most creative quality.

Stars Fail To Shine

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TORONTO — A concert promised to bring together six legends of rock 'n' roll. But two legends did not show up and two others gave less-than-legendary performances.

Jerry Lee Lewis and Fats Domino withdrew at the last minute because of illness from Sunday's show at Toronto's Sky Dome, and Canadian rockabilly star Ronnie Hawkins filled in.

The show went on, but not without its flaws. Fans booed Chuck Berry, who refused to allow his performance to be shown on the stadium's huge TV screen.

The 35,000 fans watched 60-year-old rocker Bo Diddley re-string his signature box-shaped guitar after snapping one in the middle of an aimless, lackluster performance.

The bright spot was Little Richard, who tore through hits such as "Lucille," "Tutti Frutti" and "Good Golly Miss Molly." Frankie Valli, formerly of the Four Seasons, also performed.

Lewis, whose explosive career as the would-be king of rock is portrayed by actor Dennis Quaid in the movie "Great Balls of Fire," blacked out Saturday at his rural Mississippi home.

Cartoon 'Voice' Mel Blanc Dies At 81

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — Mel Blanc, "The Man of A Thousand Voices," including the legions of Looney Tunes stars such as Porky Pig, Daffy Duck, Tweety Pie, Elmer Fudd and that mischievously silly wabbit Bugs Bunny, has died. He was 81.

The originator of such lines as Bugs' "Eh, what's up, Doc?," Sylvester the Cat's "Thufferin' thuccolash!," and Porky's "Th-th-th-that's all, folks" died Monday from complications from heart disease and other ailments.

By his own count, Blanc estimated he had mastered at least 900 different accents and dialects during a career spanning more than 50 years.

Working in an age without high-tech sound effects, Blanc was a human synthesizer, a verbal computer. It has been estimated that more than 20 million people hear his voices daily.

He invented the voices of such characters as Woody Woodpecker, Speedy Gonzalez, Pepe Le Pew, Tasmanian Devil, Road Runner, Foghorn Leghorn, Heathcliff the cat, Speed Buggy, Yosemite Sam and that Oscar-winning rabbit Bugs Bunny.

He also did voices for Elmer Fudd, the Roadrunner and numerous other characters he performed on 850 cartoons for Warner Bros.' Looney Tunes and Merrie Melodies.

He was the babbling Barney Rubble and the hyperactive, yammering Dino, Fred Flintstone's pet dinosaur on the popular Hanna-Barbera series; Mr. Spacely on "The Jetsons" and the Frito Bandito.

"Those voices were part of him, and he loved every moment of it," said Blanc's son, Noel. "When the kids would come to the door or in the studio, he became those characters."

His final cartoon contribution came with 1988's popular animation-live action film, "Who Framed Roger Rabbit," in which he did the voices of Daffy, Tweety, Bugs and Sylvester.

The film's director, Robert Zemeckis, called Blanc a man "whose talent transcended all ages and broke through to the child in all of us."

Longtime friend Mickey Rooney said: "The reservoir of Hollywood legends is extremely low, and Mel Blanc's passing is a deep personal loss."

Born in San Francisco on May 30, 1908, and raised in Portland, Ore., Blanc discovered his vocal skills while in grammar school.

He started his career in 1927 as a musician and radio performer.

In 1928, Blanc — who played the bass, violin and sousaphone — was hired by the NBC Radio Orchestra in San Francisco.

In 1937, he joined Warner Bros.' cartoon studio, which produced one short feature subject each week.

His first Warner character was a drunken bull in the Looney Tunes short "Picador Porky." As legend has it, the actor playing Porky in that short did stutter. A few months later, Blanc took over in "Porky's Duck Hunt," stuttering intact, and created Daffy Duck.

Blanc introduced Bugs in the 1940 short "A Wild Hare," giving the character a combination Bronx and Brooklyn accent. Bugs won an Oscar in 1958 for "Nighty Night Bugs."

Blanc eventually became known as "The Man of A Thousand Voices." But the most Warner ever paid him was $20,000, and the studio retained rights to the phrases Blanc invented.

In addition to working in animation, he was a regular on radio's "The Jack Benny Show," playing Professor LeBlanc, Benny's violin teacher, and the train dispatcher who announced the stops of "Anahim, A-zusa and KOOK-amunga!" Blanc also made the wheezing sounds of the timeworn 1924 Maxwell automobile owned by Benny's skinflint comedy character.

He reprised many of the roles when Benny moved to television.

While recuperating in 1961 from a near-fatal car accident, Blanc once recalled, he tried to count all his cartoon voices. He said he fell asleep shortly after 400.

He said when he came to, his first words to a physician were "What's up, Doc?"

Performers Battle To Keep 'Live' Music In Las Vegas

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LAS VEGAS — The stifling desert heat radiates from the sidewalk outside the Tropicana Hotel where the band that for years provided the music now walks a picket line to protest its replacement: taped music.

Inside the lavish resort, singers lip-sync and dancers kick their legs to recorded music during the popular Folies Bergere show's twice-nightly performances.

Musicians are locked in a fight for survival at the Tropicana and two other Strip resorts, where cost-conscious managers also want to replace live music in production shows.

"The musicians ultimately make the product that puts musicians out of work," lamented Mark Tully Massagli, leader of Musicians Union

Local 369. "Think of the irony of that."

The conversion to tape now affects about 45 full-time musicians, but it has raised passions among many more who feel spontaneous entertainment is being sold out by gaming corporations.

"We can't have this town — which was built on live entertainment — go the other way," said singer Sammy Davis Jr. "Don't let them do this to us."

Davis and a few other big name entertainers gathered recently to back the musicians.

"If we lose live music in this town, we've got serious problems," said comedian Jerry Lewis.

Lewis and Davis were appearing together at Bally's, which plans to replace the 19 musicians backing its Jubilee production show with taped music but keep live musicians in its main showroom.

Hotel officials say musicians are an expensive luxury not found in Atlantic City, N.J., hotels, which allow taped music and synthesizers in place of live performances.

"We're not doing away with musicians in the Celebrity Room," said Robert Ostrovsky, a Bally's executive. But "we feel taped music is appropriate for production-type showrooms."

The 14 union musicians who backed the Folies Bergere show at the Tropicana walked off their jobs June 3, upset over the hotel's unwillingness to budge on the issue. The show was closed while a tape was prepared, and reopened June 25 to what hotel officials say are increasingly full audiences.

"We're doing very well with it," said hotel spokesman Ira David Sternberg.

Musicians at Bally's and the Flamingo Hilton, meanwhile, have stayed on the job despite the refusal of the hotels to increase their offer of two to four musicians at each hotel on the payroll and severance pay to the others.

Officials at the three resorts sent letters to the musicians last week informing them they would not be needed further when they implement their final offer on July 26 and go to taped music.

Perhaps more ominous, however, to the estimated 250 musicians who make a living in the hotels is a plan by the resorts to pay musicians only for the shows they actually perform.

Many entertainers bring their own bands to Las Vegas, limiting work for the Las Vegas musicians.

Under the contract that expired June 1, musicians were guaranteed their $654.71 a week salary for at least 38 weeks a year.

The pickets have tried to rally support by warning that musicians who fill the city's symphony and small jazz bands may be forced to leave town to find work, leaving a cultural void in the city.

They also took out a $12,000 ad in the Los Angeles Times warning tourists of the strike.

And the union has won a few victories in negotiations. Massagli said the Stardust Hotel has agreed to a contract keeping musicians at its long-running Lido de Paris show and the Union Plaza has agreed to live music at its smaller production show.

But the major Strip resorts usually set the trend, and that is where the musicians believe may be their last stand.

"Our entire future is at stake here," Massagli said. "This is for our very survival."

10% Low Price Guarantee Policy:

Lowe's guarantees our everyday low prices. If you find an identical advertised item at any retail competitor currently priced lower than ours, simply bring us written proof of that price. We'll match that price PLUS give you an additional 10% of the difference between the two prices when you buy from us. It must be an identical in-stock item. Closeout, discontinued and other clearance type sale items are excluded from this offer.

Satisfaction Guarantee Policy:

Lowe's guarantees that you will be satisfied with your purchase. If you are not completely happy with your purchase, simply return it along with your original sales receipt to any Lowe's store. We'll repair it, replace it, or refund your money.

Lowe's Raincheck Policy:

If an advertised item is temporarily out-of-stock, we will gladly issue a raincheck (except for items marked limited quantities, discontinued or closeout). When we restock you will be notified so you can buy at the previously advertised price. Some stores may not stock all advertised items; however, every item shown can be ordered for you.

UP TO $1,000 INSTANT CREDIT

Apply For Your Handy Lowe's Credit Card!

Just present your Visa, American Express, MasterCard or Sears card and you may qualify for up to $1,000 instant credit on a new Lowe's card. (Even without these cards, your application will be processed with minimum delay.)

Details on product warranties & Lowe's financing policy are available in store.

Lowe's Low Payment Plan — Terms Of Repayment:

Your credit must be satisfactory. No down payment required. The monthly payment includes sales tax of 5% and finance charges. If sales tax differs in your area, the monthly payment may vary slightly. The monthly payment has been estimated and may vary depending upon state laws and charges. Insurance is available upon request. The APR is as follows:
