Bush Joins World Leaders At French Bash

By Terence Hunt
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PARIS — President Bush, buoyed by his landmark visit to Eastern Europe, joined other world leaders today for a spectacular Parisian party celebrating the 200th anniversary of the French Revolution.

On his way to the French capital, Bush voiced hope that his tour of Poland and Hungary had "given encouragement to those who want to go the path of reform, political change, economic change" in those communist nations.

The gala events preceding a summit meeting of the world's seven largest industrial democracies contrasted sharply with the president's trip to Poland and Hungary, where he promised to help both communist nations with major economic reforms.

Bush was greeted by French President Francois Mitterrand at the inaugural bicentennial event at the Place du Trocadero commemorating the Declaration of the Rights of Man. That statement, issued in August 1789, set forth the French Revolution's aims of liberty, fraternity and equality for all people.

The world leaders sat on a blue and white grandstand listening to a young man and woman who took turns reading the 17 articles of the declaration. A children's choir dressed in white sang a "song of joy," played games and threw peace laurels, flowers and children's toys on the esplanade.

At the end of the ceremony, the leaders burst into applause as a flock of doves flew over the palace. Then, chatting amiably, they left for a lunch given by Mitterrand, who sat next to Bush during the ceremony.

Before leaving Budapest for the French capital, Bush told Hungarian leaders that "as your economy modernizes, you will play an even greater role in the evolution of a new Europe, a Europe that is whole and free."

Bush told his Hungarian hosts, "you are proving, here in the heartland of Europe, that the Rights of Man are the proper birthright of us all."

In an impromptu news conference on Air Force One during the flight to Paris, Bush said his East European visit "has been watched by the people of other Eastern European countries and hopefully given encouragement to those who want to go the path of reform, political change, economic change."

Bush also dismissed a Moscow spokesman's statement that Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev is unable to meet a NATO target date to reduce conventional military forces. And he said the United States will not overhaul its Middle East peace policy in response to political turmoil in Israel.

He said that in Poland and Hungary, "the thing that is so impressive is the determination of all of these leaders to move towards economic freedom and political freedom."

Bush said he had stressed publicly and privately that reforms, including austerity measures, are essential to building strong economies.

"There is no point going there under false colors and to try to have everything sweetness and light," he said. "It's a message that it isn't going to be easy, but that's part of the message."

The president said no one expressed disappointment over the rela-

Cubans Executed

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MEXICO CITY — Cuban war hero Arnaldo Ochoa and three other former army officers were executed by firing squad today for shipping tons of drugs into the United States, the official Cuban news agency said.

The executions in Cuba ended a court-martial and appeal process that revealed a ring in the army and Interior Ministry engaged in drug trafficking, black marketeering, smuggling and other crimes.

The Prensa Latina news agency said the four were executed at dawn. In addition to Ochoa, a former army general, they included former Col. Antonio de la Guardia Font; former Maj. Armado Padron; and former Capt. Jorge Martinez.

They were sentenced to death last week, stripped of their military ranks and thrown out of the Communist Party.

Ochoa, 57, fought in the guerrilla war that brought Fidel Castro to power and was made a Hero of the Revolution, Cuba's highest honor, for heading Cuba's 50,000-man expedition in Angola and an earlier one to Ethiopia. Ochoa also headed a mission to Nicaragua's leftist Sandinista government.

Rain Brings Some Relief

By Lane Dunn
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

High temperatures scorched the state for about a week and while area residents were hoping for a little relief, that respite from the heat came Wednesday night in the form of heavy rains, lightning and wind.

Bud Greer, chief water plant operator with Greenville Utilities, said that at midnight Wednesday the plant had recorded .46 inches of rain. Greer said that the south side of Greenville apparently received more precipitation.

Greer said the temperature in Greenville reached 99 degrees between 3 p.m. and 4 p.m. Wednesday and had dropped to 73 degrees around midnight.

Roger Jones, director of electric systems for Greenville Utilities, said there were "a lot of scattered problems but nothing major" in the GUC service area.

Jones said Greenville Utilities had 10 or 11 transformers out and three poles damaged during the thunderstorm. He said there were 100 to 200 customers without power for short periods of time but all of the problems were corrected by 3 a.m. today.

Jones said that most of the problems occurred south of the Tar River.

A spokesman at the Pitt County Emergency Services office said that no reports of storm damage were received by the office, but at least one Pitt County resident said he was affected by the storm.

Carl Tripp reported that high winds blew a tree over onto his car at his home on Arrowhead Drive,

Habitual Felon Gets 50 Years

By John Bare
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

A Greenville man has been sentenced to 50 years in prison for common law robbery after a Pitt County jury found him to be a habitual felon.

Superior Court Judge William C. Griffin Jr. of Williamston sentenced Sebastian Williams, 32, to the 50-year term on Wednesday after a jury of six men and six women found Williams guilty of hitting and robbing an elderly man in September 1988 at a Greenville filling station.

Though the maximum prison term for common law robbery is 10 years, Griffin said the jury's finding that Williams is a habitual felon allowed him to increase the punishment as prescribed by the habitual felon statute.

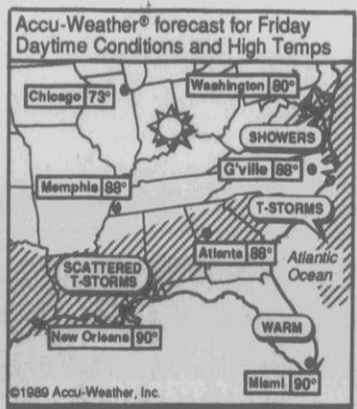

After the initial trial, the same jury heard evidence that Williams had previously been convicted of, or had pleaded guilty to, three unrelated felonies: breaking or entering and larceny in 1975; breaking and entering an automobile in 1979, and breaking and entering an automobile in 1987. The jury deliberated less than five minutes before returning a verdict that Williams is a habitual felon.

It is the first time a Pitt jury has found a defendant guilty of being a habitual felon, District Attorney Tom Haigwood said. The crime carries a maximum penalty of 50 years, or life in prison, and a minimum term of 14 years.

Prior to sentencing, Assistant District Attorney Clark Everett read a list of eight misdemeanor convictions Williams had between 1980 and 1986 involving shoplifting, resisting arrest, larceny, breaking and entering, trespassing and tampering with a motor vehicle.

Officers Say They're Losing The Speed War

By Martha Waggoner
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

There's a war on North Carolina roads between law enforcement officers and defiant drivers who routinely break the speed limit, and traffic officers say they have no doubt they're losing.

"We just don't have the manpower to compete with speeders," said 1st Sgt. Fred Davis of the N.C. Highway Patrol's research division. "They've got us outnumbered."

"We know there's definitely a problem with speeding, and we do as much to focus our emphasis on that violation as we physically can," he said. "We're stretched so thin right now that we cannot keep up with the demand from the public. We don't have enough people to combat it. We are in the business of enforcing the traffic laws, and one trooper can only do so much in an eight-hour shift."

The patrol is allocated 954 troopers to work the roads, but not all of those positions are filled, he said. In addition, the patrol is operating at about the same manpower level as it was in 1973, he said.

Sgt. Jack Barbee of the Highway Patrol's Raleigh office said "people have gotten to the point they will pass marked patrol cars. ... This is excessive speed to the point they have lost control of their vehicle."

Charlotte Police Capt. Earl Smith said a driver passed him going 50 mph in a 35 mph zone. "I thought 'something's got to be wrong here.'"

Smith stopped the man, who said no, nothing's wrong. "That's the way I always drive," he quoted the man as saying.

"Some of the streets in Charlotte — if you don't drive the speed of everyone else, they'll run over you," he said. "They don't pay much attention to marked patrol cars anymore."

Interstates used to be among the safest roads, but no more, Barbee said.

"People have disregard for the speed limits on them (interstates), they're getting agitated with each other, they're making dangerous maneuvers and taking the safety factor away," he said.

"I get four to five complaints each day. The average citizens are just terrified. People are passing in medians, passing on paved shoulders. I've even got people who will come off the ramp get on I-40 and stay on the shoulder, go up the next ramp and down the ramp, and get back on the shoulder."

But when the majority of the traffic violations are taking place — rush hour — is also the same time when the majority of wrecks occur, he said. "We're not able to be the deterrent we need to be because we're so busy," Barbee said.

Statistics from the state Department of Transportation show 93 people were killed on N.C. rural interstates in 1988, compared with 82 in 1987 and 66 in 1986. Injuries were 1,823 in 1986, then climbed to 2,204 in 1987 and 2,502 in 1988.

A survey which ended in October 1988, showed that 19.4 percent of the drivers went over 65 mph, the speed limit on most of those roads. On urban interstates, where the limit is 55 mph, 63.9 percent drove over that limit.

James Lynch, a DOT traffic engineer, said speed have been increasing about 1.2 miles per hour a year for several years, at least along interstates. "Where it's going to stop, I don't know," he said.

"We had this same gradual in-

The Water You Drink Tar's Problems Start At The Top

By J. Ward Best
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Part of the danger to the Tar and Pamlico rivers comes from the facilities intended to protect the waters.

State records show that some of the same wastewater treatment plants designed to treat waste going into the river also regularly pollute the waters — dumping human waste and industrial pollutants directly into the Tar River with little or no treatment.

The Tar River is the source of nearly all of Greenville's drinking water. And farther downstream, the marine life and the fisherman making their living from the waters of the Pamlico are suffering from the pollution flowing in the Tar.

The Rocky Mount wastewater treatment plant operates a permitted bypass, which dumps chlorinated waste into the river. But accidental dumpings at other facilities also add to the pollution of the Tar, and come to light only through citizen complaints or inspections of the plants.

Problems start almost at the head of the Tar River at Oxford in Granville County and continue beyond Rocky Mount to Tarboro.

But officials in each of the cities say their municipalities are working on expanding their treatment facilities and improving the quality of the waste going into the river.

Oxford, the first large municipality along the Tar, operated three treatment plants on the river banks until recently. Two of the facilities handled domestic wastes from the city, one treated industrial sewage.

The city's plans to renovate the industrial plant to handle all of the city's waste are nearly complete, according to City Manager H.T. Ragland, and the two domestic plants have been shut down.

Federal clean water regulations forced the city to upgrade its facilities, and Ragland said, "All these renovations we knew we had to do."

The city has received citations from the state Division of En-

In addition to the breaking, entering and larceny charge, Eastman was charged with the unauthorized use of a motor vehicle.

Seniors Compete In National Olympics

By Amy Gavigan
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Some Greenville seniors are showing the young folk how it's done.

Six seniors recently participated in the U.S. National Senior Olympics in St. Louis, competing against 4,000 other seniors representing 47 different states, according to Alice Keene, local coordinator for Greenville-Pitt Senior Games.

"These six had to qualify for the nationals by placing first, second or third in the local games, and then placing first, second or third in the state games in Raleigh," said Ms. Keene, past president of the N.C. Senior Olympics Board of Directors.

"We're extremely proud of these people representing our community," she said. "They are wonderful models for all of us. They've seen the real benefits of physical fitness in their lives."

A variety of sport events are featured in the Olympics including track and field, swimming, tennis, table tennis and shuffle board.

Competition is broken down into age groups, 55-59, 60-64, 65-69, 70-74, 75-79 and 80 and up.

According to participant Jack Edwards, there was no shortage of the older competitors.

"When it gets to the 80-year-olds, they aren't broken down into age groups any more," Edwards said. "You'd be amazed how many 80-year-olds there were."

Edwards, who swam in the 65-69 age group, placed fourth in the 50 meter back stroke, fourth in 100 meter back stroke, and fifth in 200 meter back.

"It didn't satisfy me," he said, "but, in sports, you're never satisfied."

"In the 50 meter, 43 entered and I got fourth place. In the 100 meter, there were 26 entered and I got fourth place. In the 200 meter there were 20 entered and I figured I would better ... I did worse."

Eleanor Ford, who was fourth in the 1,500 meter walk in the 70-74 age group, has made exercise a part of her life.

"I'm a race walker," she said. "I walk four miles every morning between 6 a.m. and 6:30 a.m."

"I do it because I want to stay healthy," said Ford.

Ms. Ford, who has been competing for four years, took part in the first national competition for seniors in 1987 and placed fifth in the nation. She plans to attend the next Senior Olympics to be held in Syracuse, N.Y.

Dr. William Waugh made his first trip to the Senior Olympics this year.

"I became interested in competing when my son was in high school and in athletics," Waugh said. "I was hoping to be an indirect stimulus to him."

Waugh also competes in a different organization.

"I've competed with Masters Track and Field, which is for people 40-years-old and up, the last five years," he said. "I was just in a meet over in England and did quite well. I got a bronze medal in shot put."

Other competitors were Annie Lee Hardee, competing in table tennis and swimming; Leonard Hignite, tennis singles and mixed doubles, and Kelly Abeyounis, tennis singles.

Despite his disappointment Edwards loves what he's doing and wishes to inspire other seniors to become involved in the senior games.

Edwards swam as a teen-ager and then quit for 45 years.

"The emphasis on physical fitness in the last few years inspired me to get started about four years ago," said Edwards. "When I first started, it was all I could do to get up and down the pool."

"The key is to realize that you have to attack it gradually. Rome wasn't built in a day," he said.

Edwards now holds two state records in the 60-64 age group for the 25- and 50-yard back stroke events.

"I was 64 swimming against those 60-year-old whipper-snappers," said Edwards. "Now, I'm the whipper-snapper."

Inmate Graduation

Sixteen inmates from several correctional institutions within a 21-county area of eastern North Carolina graduated recently from the Pre-Release and Aftercare Program in ceremonies held at Evangelistic Tabernacle Church, U.S. 264 bypass, Greenville.

The program is operated by the State Department of Corrections. Inmates attending classes are housed in the Goldsboro Prison Unit.

Melvin McLawhorn, training coordinator for the program, said the graduates were among the 94th group to complete the program since its inception 10 years ago.

Guest speaker was retired educator Jean Darden, who stressed the importance that each graduating inmate take advantage of opportunities available to them.

Persons interested in volunteering to assist in the program may contact McLawhorn or Elbert Buck at 756-8400 or visit the office, 108 Dexter St.

Two Reappointed As ECU Trustees

By Stuart Savage

Max Ray Joyner and W.E. (Bill) Dansey, both of Greenville, have been reappointed to the East Carolina University Board of Trustees by Gov. Jim Martin.

Both Joyner, who has served as chairman of the board for the past year, and Dansey said this morning that they were notified of their reappointments two weeks ago. They were first appointed to the board by Martin in 1985.

ECU officials today also said Joyner and Dansey have been reappointed.

The governor's press office has for the past three days declined to confirm the reappointments at ECU and to announce board appointments at other campuses in the University of North Carolina system.

Dansey is president and owner of WEDCO Enterprises Inc., while Joyner is regional agency manager of Jefferson Standard Live Insurance Co. Both men are ECU graduates.

Three new ECU board members — William C. Baggett, William P. Furr and Valeria Olliver Lovelace — whose appointments by the University of North Carolina Board of Governors were announced earlier, were attending an orientation session today. A tour of the campus and a luncheon at Chancellor Richard Eakin's home were included as part of the program.

Ms. Lovelace, of Teaneck, N.J., received her bachelor's degree from ECU in 1973 and earned her master's degree and doctorate from the University of Michigan. She has been director of research for the Children's Television Workshop's Sesame Street program for several years.

Baggett, a Lillington native and ECU graduate, is regional vice president and regional executive for the Eastern Region of Wachovia Bank & Trust Co. in Greenville, with responsibility for offices in 23 cities.

Furr, a 1965 ECU graduate, is a native of Statesville. He lives in Denver, N.C., and is the owner of Cumulus Fibres Inc.

The new members will take the oath of office at the board's 2 p.m. meeting Friday at Mendenhall Student Center on the ECU campus.

MASONIC NOTICE

The regional meeting for the Eastern District will begin Saturday at the Regency Inn West, Goldsboro, at 9:30 a.m.

Pinned In Car

The Daily Reflector/Shannon Wolfe

Rescuers provide medical stabilization for Mark Natale, 24, of Route 5, Greenville, after working for 40 minutes to release him from the car in which he was pinned in a 1:10 p.m. accident Wednesday. The one-vehicle accident occurred on the Old Creek Road near its intersection with secondary road 1525. Trooper Brad Ward said the car went off the road to the right into a deep ditch, apparently without braking. The Pactolus Rescue Squad answered the call and summoned assistance from the EastCare Air Ambulance Service of Pitt County Memorial Hospital. Natale, a shift manager for McDonald's Restaurant, was listed in serious condition at PCMH this morning. Ward said no charges will be filed.

Farmville Board Votes To Annex Nursing Home

By Carol Tyer
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Farmville commissioners honored the request of the owners of Guardian Care Nursing Home by annexing the nursing facility's property south of Farmville, effective immediately.

Town services to the nursing home will begin immediately, with taxation to begin Aug. 1. The action followed a public hearing Tuesday night in which no dissent was voiced. In other matters, the board enacted an ordinance to amend the charter of the town to state that its form of government is council-manager, rather than mayor-council. This was done according to the wishes stated by a majority of Farmville voters in a June 13 referendum.

In a separate action, the abstract of votes in the June 13 election was officially accepted.

Police Chief William Waters was authorized to buy a FAX machine for the police department. Information on the purchase will be made at the next board meeting, the board was promised.

Board members made plans to sell at public auction on Aug. 19 at 10 a.m. three pieces of property — two lots at Wallace and George streets and a lot on the north side of Wallace Street.

Approval was given for the town to take part in utility construction for a proposed subdivision behind the present Clairmont subdivision, in accordance with a new policy approved in June. Consideration of similar participation in a new development to be called Mayfield was tabled until the next workshop meeting of the board.

Participation in each subdivision is expected to amount to about $60,000.

The board approved bid-taking for a 1989 two-ton cab and chassis for the utilities department. Also approved was the purchase of $6,431 worth of poles for the department from Thomasson Lumber Co.

Mayor Edna Earle Baker was authorized to execute an agreement for emergency assistance among municipal electric systems of the state. This is a plan for towns to share manpower and equipment when their electric systems have been damaged by weather or other adversity.

Mayor Baker was also authorized to certify a roster of 36 volunteer firemen for the N.C. Firemen's Pension Fund plan.

Bylaw changes for the fire department were approved. An upper-age requirement for beginning volunteer firemen was eliminated and a rule that firemen not be a member of any other voluntary emergency service organization operating within the membership jurisdiction of the fire department was added to the bylaw.

Mayor Baker's appointment of Mary Morrison Dixon and Donna Griffin Mathews to the town's Library Board was approved. Both citizens will have terms lasting until Dec. 31, 1992.

A resolution of respect was enacted for Everette L.D. Parker, who retired May 25 from the town's public works department.

A Wobble In The Wheels Of Education

A school board is supposed to keep the wheels of education rolling steady, not deliberately cause them to wobble. The school board has made those wheels shake in Pitt County by unnecessarily delaying a decision on personnel transfers.

Ten principals and assistant principals in Pitt County don't know where to go Aug. 16 when the 1989-90 school years begins. Technically, they've been transferred from the schools they served last year — told to report to another school.

At a school board meeting Monday a handful of citizens opposed the transfers. In the face of public controversy, the school board refused to approve the changes. No more board meetings are scheduled until September, so unless a special session is arranged for this one issue, the adjustments are in limbo.

That is not a sound way to conduct the business of a public school system. The men and women on the school board were elected by the citizens of Pitt County to oversee the business of public education. Their duty is to enhance the process, not snarl it. But they've muddled the assignment to avoid contention. There is no reason the principal and assistant principal transfers couldn't have been approved Monday, as were other recommended personnel moves.

The board's indecision leaves the individuals involved with two choices. They can report to their new jobs without official assignment — which they're doing. Or they can return, also without official assignment, to the schools they served last year. If they do that, some schools might be short a principal or assistant principal next year. Neither option is acceptable.

Personnel transfers, especially principals, are always controversial. Communities and faculties grow fond of good leaders and are understandably reluctant to relinquish them. Sometimes their objections are downright militant.

In a well-run school system — and Pitt is such a system — personnel transfers are seldom capricious moves. They are needed to fill vacancies and most often, they are carefully designed adjustments essential to improved education. Sometimes, they are requested by the individuals involved for professional reasons — reasons that make good sense to administrators but might not be readily understood by the community.

Whatever the basis, administrators need the flexibility to make these adjustments as they deem necessary.

And a school board must possess the fortitude to make important decisions in a timely and forthright manner.

The Finest

Olivier's Acting Was Superb Art

There are names in every field which signify the finest.

The mention of Laurence Olivier brings forth memories of perhaps the finest actor of modern times.

At age 82, Olivier died peacefully this week. His legacy is riveting acting which thrilled those who experienced it. Some were stage performances which can only be treasured in memory. But he also left behind television shows and films which will preserve his extraordinary acting skills for the enjoyment of future generations.

Olivier played Shakespearean roles. He played in such lasting films as "Wuthering Heights." He mastered the art of television performances as the medium developed at midlife for him.

Olivier was a born actor, performing in makeshift theatres as a youth. From then on acting was all consuming and he was regarded as the master of that demanding field of endeavor.

He was knighted in 1947 and raised to life peerage in 1970. As an English actor, his ability to play Shakespearean roles was perhaps his greatest challenge. Olivier did this to perfection in such plays as Henry V, Hamlet and Richard III.

Mankind produces great scientists, national and political leaders, philosophers, mathematicians and engineers at surprisingly opportune times in world development.

Sir Laurence Olivier was the quintessential actor of the times. His performance raised art in theater to its highest level. He gave the world performances which may never be equaled and set standards for all actors who will follow him.

The Wobble Is Real

LONDON — A three-month sabbatical in this city is a great way to clear your mind and revive your spirits. Like many a previous visitor, I head home bearing assurances that the British remain indelibly, well, British.

The best evidence of their unquenchable self-assurance came during the controversy in May over the government's refusal to let Britain participate in a project by European Community nations to encourage the teaching of each other's languages. There was a great outcry in the letters columns, with some saying the policy smacked of short-sighted chauvinism and could make the next generation of Britons functional illiterates compared to their counterparts across the Channel.

But the argument ended, for all practical purposes, with a letter from the 75-year-old Earl of St. Germans to The Independent.

"Dear Sir," he wrote. "There are more people learning English as a second language than speak it as their first. It is therefore discourteous to address a foreigner in his own language, since it deprives him of the opportunity to improve his English. Should an English person wish to speak a foreign language, he can always go abroad and speak English."

The monumental confidence of that assertion perfectly mirrors the spirit Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher has sought to imbue in her constituents. There was a time, not all that long ago, when the United Kingdom was united only in its misery. The "British disease" was shorthand for pessimism and listlessness.

But now London bustles with commercial projects and artistic energy. And, seemingly, no one embodies that confidence to a greater degree than Thatcher herself. She knows what she thinks about everything and she never hesitates to tell other people what to do.

Yet, as this reporter packs his bags to go back to American politics, there are unmistakable warning knocks coming out of the engine of the British economy and out of Thatcher's political machine. Inflation, which brought her to power a decade ago and which she managed — at great social cost — to vanquish early in the Eighties, has reared its ugly head again.

The London real-estate market, in which fortunes have been made, has gone soft. As inflation has doubled in the past year to 8.3 percent, interest rates and mortgages moved up to 14 percent. There's more labor unrest than at any time in the past five years.

One gets a clear sense that 10 years is a long time to govern, even for, or perhaps especially for, someone as intense as Thatcher. She is relentless and she insists that others in her government match her pace.

Seventeen of the 22 Cabinet members have held office since she came to power in 1979. Though few are in the same jobs, the pace takes a toll, not just physically but on their judgment. The Prime Minister is not immune. The cameras now catch Thatcher yawning. And often this spring and summer, her political reflexes have seemed slow, her instincts faulty.

Both in the NATO and the European Community summit meetings, she was not the agenda-setter of the past, but the person on whom the others were waiting for reluctantly given agreement — always a step behind the consensus. Here at home, some of her own allies say, she has the opposite problem, constantly offering solutions for problems others are not sure even exist. Her insistence on shifting the revenue base for local government to the much-despised and highly regressive poll tax has fed a political rebellion in Scotland, where it is now in effect. Many Tory politicians fear it will do the same in England when it goes into effect here.

She shows no signs of backing off on the poll tax. But other parts of her third-term program are in trouble. The Lord Chancellor has just capitulated to opposition from large elements of the organized bar to key sections of his proposal for reorganizing the practice of law.

The doctors and hospitals have mobilized an effective public-relations campaign against her plans for introducing tighter budget and management policies into the National Health Service. And the big brewers have forced the trade minister to seek a negotiated compromise on proposals to make them to give up ownership of thousands of pubs.

In challenging these Tory constituencies of business and the professions, Thatcher clearly seems to have overreached. And others outside her party — the striking workers, and the grumbling civil servants and teachers, especially — are beginning to think that the lady may be for turning.

All this has led to probably premature talk of the last days of Thatcherism. She still has her 100-seat majority and she still has a relentless urge to press forward.

But the wobble in her command is real, not imaginary. What may come next is another story, and I'll use my final letter from London to discuss that.

A Tale Of Two Revolutions

WASHINGTON — On June 22, 1812, at the beginning of his invasion of Russia, Napoleon was on a reconnoitering ride when a hare darted between his horse's hoofs. Startled, the horse threw Napoleon to the ground. To some it seemed an ominous omen. "A Roman," wrote one of Napoleon's aides, "would have abandoned the expedition." But Napoleon was a modern man.

The invasion of Russia, one of history's huge acts of overreaching, was the quintessential Napoleonic act — folly on a grand scale. And Napoleon was the vessel of the French Revolution, the concentrated essence of its spirit.

The Revolution spread an exhilarating, energy-releasing sense of emancipation from superstition and old, retarding structures. It proclaimed an enlarged scope for shaping events by the human will, the will enlightened by reason. No omens would be seen in hares.

The evil of the Revolution was in its disproportion: hubris, overreaching. It had an irrational confidence in reason shorn of the legacy of tradition that should inform reason. The Revolution quickly became a rage to wipe clean the social slate so the state could write whatever it willed. The citizenry would be so much clay in the hands of the strong-willed.

But crumble the cake of custom, smash the crust of restraining tradition, and what bursts forth is molten willfulness. Julien Sorel, protagonist of Stendhal's "The Red and the Black" (1831), is one of the first modern men in fiction, upwardly mobile with a vengeance — like the Corsican who became the emperor Sorel so much admired. "Man's will is powerful, I see it written everywhere," Sorel exclaims.

Written in blood. By the time Napoleon was a spent force, millions of French citizens and Europeans had died. Was what began at the Bastille "necessary"? No.

The best aspect of this bicentennial is a book, "Citizens," by Simon Schama. This history of the Revolution restores to the story the central history-making role of the speech and conduct of a self-conscious political elite. Schama argues that the Revolution was not predestined, not determined by economic forces. Rather, it was made by the political choices of strong-willed men moved by ideas.

History told from "the top down" is truthful but offends leftist historians. Their agenda requires "history with the politics left out," the disparagement of greatness, choices, ideas as mere

George Will

"epiphenomena." Such disparagement elevates the importance of the masses. And, even more, it inflates the self-importance of the priesthood of academics who decipher ("deconstruct") the hidden and impersonal forces of history.

The great lesson to be underscored by bicentennial meditations is that individual men and women, and the ideas they choose, matter. The ideas and example of the Revolution have mattered, terribly.

There have been many subsequent terrorists for virtue, using practical evil to pursue a speculative good, beggaring the present generation for the sake of the future (Burke's words), attacking despotism and all institutions that might prevent despotism from recurring (De Tocqueville). Such modern menaces trace their pedigrees to July 14, 1789.

Two 18th-century Julys gave the world two models of revolution. The first was the success.

The American Revolution was a conservative act, arising organically from a tradition it aimed to recapture. It began as a demand for the ancient rights of Englishmen. It became a real revolution when it ruptured institutions and loosed ideas that would shake other regimes. But it was a moderate revolution, conducted in the name of the morality of a process of government-popular sovereignty.

The French Revolution was hardly fastidious about the means to its extravagant and ultimately preposterous ends. When Napoleon emerged to "pick a crown from the gutter," he embodied the Revolution's ideal of an enlightened despot. As Felix Markham, a biographer of Napoleon, notes, Voltaire deplored the restoration of the Parlements, Rousseau said a great Legislator must educate the public's general will (that was Robespierre's rationale for the Committee of Public Safety), and in 1790 Mirabeau urged Louis XVI to lead the Revolution.

An emphasis on results over process elevates willfulness over persuasion and produces the reign of force, then chaos. The greatness of the soldier who waged the American Revolution was that he would not accept all the power he could have had. H.M.S. Bellerophon carried Napoleon into exile. Washington rode to retirement in Mt. Vernon.

Visitors to Napoleon's tomb see words carved in marble. They are the names of battles. Visitors to the Jefferson Memorial — Jefferson, whose pen put the American Revolution in motion — see words carved in marble. They are passages from Jefferson's acts of persuasion, his philosophy of freedom. The difference speaks volumes about why it is wise to celebrate July 4 and deplore July 14.

Senate Committee Rejects DWI Bill, Calls For Talks

By John Flesher
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — While disagreeing on whether North Carolina's drunken driving laws are tough enough, members of a Senate committee voted unanimously to recommend negotiations with the House on the issue.

The Senate Judiciary I Committee voted 5-3 Wednesday not to accept a bill the House approved last week that would strengthen the 1983 Safe Roads Act. Several senators said the bill would go too far.

"I think the (current) drunk driving law is a very strict law," Sen. Frank Ballance, D-Warren, said.

Sen. Bob Swain, D-Buncombe, the committee chairman, said there was no evidence that toughening the punishments would have any impact on impaired driving. "If it would cut it out we could make capital punishment of it, but I don't think it would cut it out," he said.

But Sen. Jim Johnson, R-Cabarrus, said the Senate should at least agree to have a conference committee study the bill or face the political consequences of letting the bill die. "It's going to be laid at our door," he said.

The committee agreed unanimously to recommend a conference committee. The full Senate was expected to consider the matter today.

Identical versions of a bill recommended by a joint legislative commission after an 18-month study were introduced in the House and Senate, but the two chambers approved radically different versions.

The Senate removed most of the substantive provisions and added a couple that critics said actually would make the law more lenient.

The House restored the provisions the Senate removed and added two others sought by Gov. Jim Martin that even the study commission rejected as too stringent. One would ban open alcoholic beverage containers in non-commercial vehicles' passenger areas and the other would extend from 10 days to 30 days the period for which a driver's license is suspended immediately upon a DWI arrest.

In its current form, the bill would also:

- Raise the fines for all five levels of DWI. Level One, the most serious, would be punishable by a $5,000 fine instead of the current $2,000. Level five, the least serious, would carry a $500 fine, up from the current $100.
- Reduce the threshold for classifying a regular driver as impaired from the current 0.10 blood alcohol level to 0.08. For drivers of commercial vehicles such as trucks and buses the threshold would be cut to 0.04.

- Make it easier to introduce Breathalyzer results as evidence in court.

Ballance said the House proposals would impose hardships on working people and the poor.

"I'm not speaking in favor of a driver being impaired ... but I do think it's wrong for us to sit back and take away the right of a person to drink a beer in a vehicle on the way home from work," he said.

The proposed fine increases are "unreal," Ballance said. "I don't know who we think drunken driving convicted people are, but it's unbelievable to expect them to pay that kind of money."

Sen. Fountain Odom, D-Mecklenburg, countered that strong measures are needed to deter impaired driving.

"The results of the carnage on the highways that we've seen in increasing numbers over the last 25 years compels us to emphasize more than ever that driving is a privilege and not a right," Odom said.

Rep. Dennis Wicker, D-Lee, the bill's House sponsor, acknowledged that some of the House's provisions would have to be sacrificed to get a bill passed.

"We're willing to trade some things," he said. "I just want to get a bill that will be effective."

House Panel Removes Legislative Terms Issue From Veto Package

By F. Alan Boyce
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — A House committee continued twice-a-day meetings on a proposed constitutional amendment, to give North Carolina's governor the veto, but there was little sign of a consensus that might win approval of the full House.

For weeks, the House Judiciary Committee has avoided the balance-of-powers issue. But with adjournment nearing, lawmakers rolled up their sleeves and began entertaining a raft of amendments Wednesday.

One of the first changes adopted removed the issue of longer legislative terms from a list of issues designed to counterbalance the added gubernatorial power of a veto. That could mean the loss of much of the Democratic support for the package.

"There's nothing left for the legislature in there now," said Rep. Beverly Perdue, D-Craven. The bill still would let the voters decide three issues: the veto, limiting the House speaker to two consecutive terms and shifting statewide elections to even-numbered non-presidential years.

Rep. Roy Cooper, D-Nash, House sponsor of the package, said there were at least six more amendments that might be considered before the panel sends anything to the floor. Among those amendments was one to delete the switch to non-presidential years and another controversial provision to extend the terms of all statewide officeholders by two years.

Ms. Perdue said the latter amendment would force Republican Gov. Jim Martin to choose between remaining governor or quitting to run against Democratic Sen. Terry Sanford for U.S. Senate. However, if Martin chose to resign, that could allow Lt. Gov. Jim Gardner, another Republican, the chance to be appointed to the unexpired term, giving him the benefit of incumbency in the next election.

The amendment was suggested by Rep. Dan Blue, D-Wake, who also proposed that the governor be limited to two-year terms in an effort to compensate for the increased power he would gain through the veto.

Blue denied any partisan motivation, saying the one-time extension would simply provide a mechanism to shift elections to non-presidential years.

"I'm not trying to protect Sanford," said Blue. "I'm just trying to get an orderly transition."

Most of the debate Wednesday centered on changing the current two-year legislative terms to four years.

"I think this is the least popular issue in the whole package and I think that this removal of the four-year term gives the entire package a chance to pass this legislature," said Cooper.

Opposition to removing the four-year term provision centered on whether it would be best to let the voters decide that issue when they vote on the veto and the two other proposed amendments.

"What it does is removes the opportunity of the people of the state to vote on whether we have four-year terms or not," said Rep. H.M. "Mickey" Michaux, D-Durham.

But Rep. Art Pope, R-Wake, said the people voted down a similar proposal in 1982. And he noted that if four-year terms were voted in, there would be only two legislative elections between the time new districts are drawn in 1991 to reflect the latest census data and the year 2000.

Rep. Martin Nesbitt, D-Buncombe, sensing the amendment would pass, moved to return the package to a subcommittee that had worked for months on it. That motion was defeated 18-15 and the amendment was approved 25-8.

The committee hit another snag in deciding whether to use a single six-year term or a two-year term to shift statewide elections to non-presidential years.

Cooper said he preferred to use the two-year term and "err on the side of more frequent elections."

But Ms. Perdue preferred the six-year term without succession. And Michaux agreed he would rather see that than a case in which someone could run for the transition term plus two four-year terms.

However, the committee voted down Perdue's proposal, leaving in the possibility of having the same governor for 10 years.

The veto under consideration would be effective in 1991 if approved by the voters. A veto could be overridden by a three-fifths vote of legislators present in each chamber. It would not apply to local bills, constitutional amendments, redistricting or legislative appointments.

The switch to non-presidential years for statewide elections would bring North Carolina in line with 34 other states. Currently only nine, including North Carolina, hold them in conjunction with presidential elections.

Abe Holtzman, a North Carolina State University political science professor, told the committee there is no reason to adopt a veto in a state that has no history of legislative corruption.

"What you are doing is going to weaken tremendously the power of the legislature in passing legislation and increase the power of the governor," he said.

In the other 49 states with the veto, governors veto an average of 5 percent of the bills passed, Holtzman said. Of those vetoed, only 3 percent are successfully overridden, he said.

In addition, a governor gains power through the threat of a veto, Holtzman said, sometimes trading issues through a "hidden agenda." That power can reduce the checks and balances between the legislature and the executive branch.

Al Adams, a former state representative, called for further study of the issue, saying the governor is already powerful enough thanks to his "complete domination of the media."

Compromise Offered

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — House leaders are offering a deal that Senate leaders have not endorsed but are hailing as the first step toward a compromise on the thorny debate over financing teacher pay raises and highway construction.

"I think it's a breakthrough, I really do," Sen. Bill Goldston, D-Rockingham, said Wednesday. "They make some major concessions in there."

The House delegation to a 22-member joint conference committee submitted a compromise package that would raise $779.2 million next year.

Its centerpiece is acceptance of a Senate proposal to use revenue from a sales tax increase on vehicles for a 6 percent pay raise for teachers and state employees, continued implementation of the Basic Education Program and other non-transportation spending for the next two years.

In exchange, the Senate was asked to endorse the House's combination of tax and fee increases that would raise $8.6 billion for highway construction over the next 12 years. The Senate leadership prefers a 15-year timetable for the road program, which would be the biggest in North Carolina history.

In making the offer, House leaders essentially flip-flopped on an issue that last month inspired them to engineer a defeat of the Senate's $422.1 million budget bill.

"We felt like the ball was in our court," Rep. Sam Hunt, D-Alamance, chairman of the House conference committee delegation, told reporters. "We had to do what was best to get the ball rolling."

House Speaker Joe Mavretic, who has criticized the Senate's position in stinging terms, said a concession was necessary to achieve the House's foremost goal: an $8.6 billion, 12-year highway program.

"If we have to give up on something else, that's what conference committees are all about," Mavretic said.

Appeal May Slow Bridge Project

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — An appeal of a decision to build a $15 million project designed to protect the Herbert C. Bonner Bridge from erosion would cause a crucial delay, state officials say.

"We regret that another roadblock has been placed in the path of building the groin, which is designed to protect N.C. 12 and the Bonner Bridge," said Bill Jones, a spokesman for the N.C. Department of Transportation.

Six environmental and conservation groups requested a hearing Wednesday to appeal a state permit for the project which officials wanted under way before the storm season arrives in the fall.

"Any delay slows us down. Any delay is crucial," Jones said. "The more we delay the less likely we are to get it started. If we have another storm season like we had last season that will really place the bridge and N.C. 12 in jeopardy."

The groups filed the request with the state's Coastal Resources Commission, which granted the permit last month. Chairman Don Besse has 15 days to decide if a hearing before a state administrative law judge is justified.

"We're asking for an opportunity to allow public input," said John D. Runkel, attorney for the Conservation Council of North Carolina who delivered the appeal to the office of the Division of Coastal Management, parent agency to the Coastal Resources Commission.

Seeking the hearing are the Sierra Club, The Wilderness Society, the Defenders of Wildlife, the Conservation Council of North Carolina, the National Parks and Conservation Association, and the N.C. Dune Buggy Association.

The DOT can't begin construction of a rock seawall and small jetty — also called a groin — until Besse rules on the request. If he grants an appeal, construction would be delayed until a judge holds a hearing and makes a recommendation.

The commission, which sets development policies on the beach, didn't follow proper procedures when it granted the permit, said Sandy Goldberg, an attorney with the Sierra Club's Legal Defense Fund in Washington.

She said the permit violates the state's Coastal Area Management Act, which prohibits "hardened structures," like seawalls and groins, from being built on the beach. The commission also failed to study alternatives, Ms.

Goldberg said. "Clearly it's in the public interest to hold a hearing because appropriate public comment was not available and a full study was not done of the impacts and potential impacts, which can be very serious," she said.

The DOT proposes to encase the northern end of Hatteras Island behind a seawall and extend a 2,000-foot groin into the Atlantic Ocean.

The project is designed to stop erosion on the southern end of the Oregon Inlet before the bridge is cut off from N.C. 12. The bridge carries the only road to Hatteras Island.

The inlet, created by a hurricane in 1846, must be continually dredged to keep open a navigational channel for commercial fishing boats and others which come and go from the Pamlico Sound.

House OKs Spanking In Day Care Centers

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — The state House struck what supporters called a blow for religious freedom, passing a bill that would let church-run day-care centers resume corporal punishment.

A vote for the bill was a vote for religious freedom and parental rights, said Rep. Michael Decker, R-Forsyth, who sponsored the measure.

Rather than encourage violence, as some opponents had charged, spankings teach discipline, he said.

"We don't always come out into this world with a great deal of self-control," Decker said. "If spanking made you violent, how many of us would not be bank robbers?"

The bill, approved 62-45 on Wednesday, was sent to the Senate, which is not obliged to consider it because of its late passage. However, Decker said similar action might be taken by the N.C. Day Care Commission, which originally banned spankings in day-care centers. The commission voted 8-6 to implement the spanking ban, Decker said. That could change with the appointment of three new members by Gov. Jim Martin.

"I believe they will repeal the rule," he said. "I think the governor supports that type of idea. He doesn't support the ban on discipline."

House opponents emphasized the potential dangers of letting poorly supervised day-care workers administer discipline.

"We are giving church schools the opportunity to use whatever discipline that they deem necessary and none of us can touch them," said Rep. Pete Cunningham, D-Mecklenburg. "The state has a responsibility to protect all its citizens, and that means little children."

IN THE STATE

'Worst' Senator

WASHINGTON (AP) — Readers of the Washingtonian Magazine have ranked Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., as the nation's worst senator for a third time.

Helms, who has been elected as many times, shrugged off the ranking. "If they had come up with anything nice to say about me, it would be highly unique and I would be highly concerned," Helms said.

This year's lists of worst Senate and House members also included Sen. Ted Kennedy, D-Mass., and former Democratic House Speaker Jim Wright. The voters' favorites were such moderates as Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga.; Rep. Constance A. Morella, R-Md.; and Rep. Frank R. Wolf, R-Va.

Three Charged

DURHAM (AP) — Three men have been charged with murder in the slaying of a 41-year-old Durham man shot at least 10 times with a shotgun and a rifle.

Thomas Ross Couch was killed Tuesday at the Durham home of Tommy Elbert Garner Jr., 42, and his son, Tommy Elbert Garner III, 20, said Durham police Lt. R.D. Buchanan.

The two Garner men and Harry Arliss Jordan Jr., 33, of Pittsboro, had their first court appearances Tuesday afternoon on murder charges. No bond was set.

Buchanan said Couch was shot at least twice with a shotgun and eight to 10 times with a rifle. Shots also were fired at him with a 9-millimeter handgun, but none of those bullets hit him.

Drug Conviction

WILMINGTON (AP) — A federal jury decided to believe a cocaine dealer's testimony and convict a Zebulon man for helping finance a major drug operation.

Gary Lincoln Young was convicted of conspiring to distribute more than 5 kilograms of cocaine. He could be sentenced to between 10 years and life in prison.

Curtis Ray Johnson, a former Wilmington cocaine dealer, was the primary witness against Young. As part of an earlier plea agreement, Johnson testified that Young frequently gave him money to go to Florida and buy cocaine by the kilogram.

Johnson was arrested in April 1988 at a Wilmington motel where 2 kilograms of cocaine were found. He is now serving a seven-year sentence after testifying against alleged members of his drug ring.

Robber Sentenced

ASHEVILLE (AP) — The gunman in two Asheville bank robberies in February 1988 was sentenced Wednesday to 13 years, four months in prison.

Judge Richard Voorhees ordered the term served while Michael Ormus Neville completes an 11-year, five-month sentence for robbing two banks in Texas soon after the Asheville holdups. Neville, 38, has also confessed to robbing a bank in Seattle, Wash.

Voorhees recommended Neville remain in the federal witness protection program and also be placed in a federal penitentiary wing where inmates are housed individually and guarded.

The judge said Neville's testimony against three Asheville people who helped him rob the banks would make it dangerous for him in prison.

Kayak Fire

ALMOND, N.C. (AP) — A fire fueled by 600 fiberglass kayaks awaiting shipment to new owners destroyed the headquarters of the nation's second-largest producer of kayaks on Wednesday.

The blaze sent a hazardous cloud of dense smoke rising hundreds of feet into the air, prompting the evacuation of 17 residents for more than three hours.

Vladimir Vanha, founder and owner of Noah International, placed the loss at around $500,000. The kayaks, not manufactured at the site located west of Bryson City, retail for $750 each.

Naturalists Give Trees A Bath

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

GATLINBURG, Tenn. — Naturalists are working to preserve what they can of the once-extensive Fraser fir stands in the Great Smoky Mountains National Park and efforts include giving the trees a bath.

Park employees and volunteers this week are spraying the few stands of trees they can get to with a potassium-based soap designed to control the balsam woolly adelgid.

Fraser firs once grew throughout the park and dominated 625 acres, mainly atop mountain peaks.

But the fir populace has been dwindling for years under the relentless attack of the adelgid, a European import that entered the park in 1963 and began its destructive work.

Although the insecticide soap may slow the demise, park workers say they don't really expect to stop the destruction of the firs.

"We're just making little micro-refuges in the park," said Keith Langdon, natural resource specialist with the National Park Service. "We're trying to protect this genetic material until something comes along. If not, we'll keep them going as long as we can and use the cones for research."

Fannie Mae Alters Rules To Make Refinancing Of Mortgages Easier

By Dave Skidmore
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Homeowners seeking to take advantage of falling interest rates this summer should be able to refinance their mortgages faster and more cheaply under a new program offered by the nation's largest mortgage buyer.

The Federal National Mortgage Association, known as Fannie Mae, said Wednesday the changes would offer lower closing costs and speedier approval to homeowners replacing fixed- or adjustable-rate mortgages with new fixed-rate loans.

"What we're trying to do here is grease the skids and make it easier for people to refinance," said economist David W. Berson of Fannie Mae, a congressionally-chartered, shareholder-owned company that provides money for home buyers by purchasing mortgages from lenders and packaging them into securities for sale to investors.

Lenders are anticipating a surge in refinancing this summer because fixed-rate mortgages have fallen by about 1/4 percentage points since March and are expected to fall by another quarter of a point by fall.

Fixed rates are below 10 percent for the first time in more than a year. One-year adjustable rates have edged down in recent months, but not by as much, and still are about a percentage point higher than a year ago.

Berson said he expected roughly 300,000 homeowners to refinance in the July-September quarter. He said about $90 billion in fixed-rate mortgages would be written in the quarter and between 25 percent to 35 percent of those likely would be refinancings. Fannie Mae helps finance one of every eight mortgages.

Much of this summer's refinancing activity will come from homeowners who took out discounted, adjustable-rate mortgages and are now facing higher payments. For instance, home buyers who took out an adjustable-rate mortgage at a 7 1/2 percent rate in 1987 are probably now paying 11 1/2 percent.

That would, on average, increase their monthly principal and interest payments from $699 two years ago to $990 now. Refinancing to a fixed-rate mortgage at 9 3/4 percent would lower the payment to $859.

During the last refinancing boom in 1986 and 1987, homeowners often had to wait three months before getting approval for their new loans, Berson said. The waiting period has dropped to about six weeks and the company's new program could shorten the process by another week or two, he said.

With certain restrictions, Fannie Mae will waive a new home appraisal, saving homeowners several hundred dollars. In that case, the new loan must come from the original mortgage lender. However, the waiver will not apply if the current loan is backed by the Veterans Administration or Federal Housing Administration.

Also, Fannie Mae for many loans will not require borrowers to go through another credit and income check. Those loans must be for a one- or two-family main residence or a second home. The new mortgage must not exceed 90 percent of the home's value, or 95 percent with mortgage insurance.

Homeowners will not be allowed to take more than 1 percent of the new loan in cash. They will be permitted to borrow the money to pay for the closing fees of the new loan, thus eliminating most up-front costs.

Friends Testify Taggart Brothers Said Their Wealth Was Inherited

By Paul Nowell
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHARLOTTE, N.C. — Friends of former PTL aides David and James Taggart testified in their tax-evasion trial that the brothers' wealth came from a family inheritance and described being taken on trips to California, Florida and London.

"They told me about growing up in Detroit, that they got an inheritance from their grandfather," said Penny Hollenbeck, who became friends with the Taggarts when they worked together at PTL in the early 1980s.

The Taggarts are on trial on charges of evading $487,000 in federal income taxes from 1984 to 1987.

During the trial, prosecutors have argued that the Taggarts lied to even their closest friends about the source of their wealth in an effort to conceal what they were doing at PTL.

Federal prosecutors say the brothers diverted $1.1 million of ministry funds to their personal use by taking cash advances on PTL credit cards and using blank ministry checks to pay the credit card bills.

Eugene Shelton IV, a former assistant to Dortch and a personal friend of the Taggarts, said Wednesday he asked David Taggart about his money while the two were on a trip to Florida in 1985.

"I believe I was blunt, I came out and asked," Shelton said. "He told me he had received a trust fund from family ... I believe from his parents. It was $6 million — $3 million each."

Two women who described themselves as longtime friends of the Taggart brothers also testified about expensive trips to California, Florida and London.

Lucinda McLellan and Darlene Peterson said they sometimes accompanied the brothers on trips that included $3,000 hotel bills, dinners costing $600 each and shopping sprees that cost several thousand dollars.

Under questioning by federal prosecutors, television evangelist Rex Humbard testified that he keeps tight spending controls in his ministry.

"It's quite regimented, isn't it sir?" Justice Department prosecutor David Brown said in questioning Humbard about his ministry's finances.

"It has to be," Humbard responded. "Nobody in our organization is authorized to spend more than $10,000 outside the budget without authorization from the board of directors."

Humbard, a former PTL board member whose ministry is headquartered in the resort town of Boca Raton, Fla., appeared briefly as a prosecution witness in the case of David and James Taggart, two former PTL executives.

At the end of Wednesday's session, U.S. District Judge Robert Potter indicated to prosecutors if they could finish their case Thursday, he would give jurors Friday off. That apparently means the government would finish its case without calling Tammy Faye Bakker or the Rev. Jerry Falwell to testify.

Mrs. Bakker and Falwell haven't arrived at the courthouse, while several witnesses who have testified, showed up in Charlotte a day or more before being called to the stand.

Humbard testified that he hitched a ride on a private jet from Charlotte to Florida with PTL executives after appearing on the PTL Club television show, but said he did not know the trip was charged to David Taggart's personal credit card.

Humbard, who has been a television evangelist for 36 years, said he had a ticket on a commercial airliner. But he said he was offered the private jet flight with the Taggarts and Richard Dortch, the top assistant to PTL founder Jim Bakker.

Brown said Taggart charged the $3,899 flight, which included a $200 tip, on his personal card and then sought reimbursement from PTL.

In afternoon testimony, a representative from a New York fur shop said the Taggarts spent about $35,000 on mink coats and other furs for themselves at her store. A salesman for a New York shoe store said the Taggarts spent nearly $100,000 from 1982-86 on shoes for themselves.

Two former co-workers at PTL testified that they also were given expensive gifts by the brothers. The witnesses spoke of first-class airline tickets, stays at expensive hotels and meals at posh restaurants, all paid for by the Taggarts.

In the 10 days since the trial began, prosecutors have examined a parade of witnesses who testified that the Taggart brothers had expensive tastes in clothing, jewelry and restaurants.

They also have interviewed former PTL employees who testified that David Taggart routinely refused to turn over receipts or documentation for hundreds of thousands of dollars in cash advances and credit card purchases.

If convicted on the tax evasion charges, the Taggarts each could be sentenced to 25 years in prison and face fines totaling about $1 million.

Jury Indicts 13 In Housing Fraud

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

HAUPPAUGE, N.Y. — A grand jury indicted 13 people on charges they conspired to defraud a federally subsidized housing program that was designed to help low-income residents become homeowners.

The indictments, which followed a two-year investigation of a Brookhaven program called Save-a-House, were handed up Wednesday. Two of the 13 charged are former law enforcement officers.

"We're talking about people that would steal the pennies off a dead man's eyes," said Suffolk County District Attorney Patrick Henry.

The charges come at a time of numerous reports of fraud, corruption and influence-peddling in similar programs funded by the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development across the country.

Under the Save-a-House program, 18 houses were designated to be sold to low-income families for $500 each.

The indictment alleges that 14 of these homes were fraudulently obtained for between $500 to $5,000 by people representing themselves as eligible recipients under the HUD guidelines.

"These people are devoid of any conscience," Henry said. "The sad part is that they deprived deserving families of a roof over their heads."

A source close to the investigation who spoke on condition of anonymity said that the investigation was proceeding into all housing programs in Suffolk County that received federal funds during the past eight years.

More indictments are expected, the source said.

All of the people who allegedly bought the houses fraudulently were either close friends or relatives of three of the defendants: Thomas Brazier, 43, of Westhampton, a former U.S. Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms agent; Albert Iannuzzi, 45, of Smithtown, a former Suffolk police officer; and Garrett Story, 50, of Bellport. They were charged with grand larceny.

The three defendants still control the houses through their real estate companies and rented out the houses for an average of $800 a month, in some cases to people whose rent is subsidized by welfare.

Black Judge Says His Chances Minimal To Keep Seat On Bench

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Judge Alcee L. Hastings, fighting to save his seat on the federal bench in a Senate impeachment trial, says his chances of winning are a long way from bright.

"The political reality is not good," the Miami jurist said during a break in the impeachment trial Wednesday when reporters asked how he thinks he will come out in the long run.

"I think I'll get a fair hearing, but I understand politics in America," Hastings added. He expressed hope, however, that there will be a surge of grassroots support for him that could improve his chances.

Hastings, 52, the first black federal judge in Florida history, is accused of plotting to receive a $150,000 bribe, lying to a jury that acquitted him of criminal charges in 1983, and improper disclosure of information obtained from a federal wiretap.

Hastings is accused of plotting with Washington attorney William Borders to get the payoff in exchange for returning $845,000 in forfeited cash to two convicted racketeers and keeping the two out of prison.

Hastings was impeached by the House a year ago and now is on trial in the Senate. If convicted, he would be removed from the bench and deprived of his judicial salary of $89,500 a year.

A panel of 12 senators is hearing evidence in the case and will report later to the full Senate, which will make the final decision.

Panel members on Wednesday donned earphones to monitor tapes made by the FBI when undercover agent H. Paul Rico met twice in

JUDGE ALCEE HASTINGS

September 1981 in Miami with Borders, a friend of Hastings.

Rico — a former agent called out of retirement for the assignment — was posing as Frank Romano, one of two brothers in the restaurant business convicted of racketeering in connection with a Teamsters pension fund loan and sentenced by Hastings to three years in prison.

The real Frank Romano, who has since died, did not respond to overtures sent by Borders through a go-between, according to witnesses.

On the tape, Rico arranged what he and Borders called a demonstration of Borders' influence over Hastings.

While Borders was in Las Vegas at a boxing match, Hastings was to have dinner at the Hotel Fontainebleau in Miami Beach. Hastings did have dinner at the hotel at the appointed time on Sept. 16, 1981. He denies it was on Borders' instructions.

The following Saturday, however, Rico met Borders at Miami International Airport and is heard to say he is handing the attorney $25,000 in cash in what prosecutors call a down payment on the payoff.

Borders did not discover that "Romano" was actually Rico until several weeks later.

STAMFORD, Conn. — Three gunmen shot at least 11 people on a crowded street before leading police on a 12-mile chase that ended when their vehicle smashed into patrol cars at a roadblock, police say.

Witnesses said the Wednesday shootings appeared to be indiscriminate.

"All of a sudden I saw these dudes coming down the middle of the street, shooting up in the air," said one witness, Ernie Dumas. "They were saying things like 'You think you're bad.'"

Stamford Deputy Police Chief John Perrotta said at least 11 people, possibly 12, were shot. "None of the injuries are life-threatening although some are more serious than others," he said.

After firing at the people, the gunmen led police on a circuitous, 60-mph car chase that ended in New Canaan when their car crashed into two police cruisers and a stone wall, said New Canaan Police Capt. Christopher Lynch.

One of the suspects was listed in critical condition at St. Joseph Medical Center in Stamford, a hospital official said. The other two suspects are in serious condition.

Charges were pending against the men, who have not been identified, Perrotta said. "We're pretty sure they're not from Stamford," he said.

Five of the gunmen's victims were in serious but stable condition today at St. Joseph Medical Center.

Boy Born Without Brain 'Just Glows' Now That He's 5

By Bill Bakservill
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RICHMOND, Va. — Doctors said he would never smile and would be lucky to live more than a few weeks, but a boy born without a brain is now 5 years old and laughs at Disney Channel programs, says his adoptive mother.

"Andrew just glows," said Kaye J. Vandal. "He laughs, he giggles, he smiles. He has an outgoing, bubbly personality that really draws people to him."

Doctors "said he would never smile, never respond, never grow," Ms. Vandal said. "All those things have proved to be untrue."

Andrew, who celebrated his 5th birthday Wednesday, is in excellent health, said Ms. Vandal, a pediatric nurse who lives in Wallingford, Conn.

"He had not even had a cold until this past year when he developed the flu," she said in a telephone interview. "But he got over it in normal fashion and went back to nursery school."

Soon after Andrew was born in Roanoke, doctors ran tests that showed he had no brain. A cyst had formed at the stem of the brain and kept the rest of it from forming, leaving his skull filled with fluid — a condition known as hydranencephaly.

He survived because the brain stem contains the nerve center that controls breathing and circulation. The parts of the brain that allow humans to think and coordinate muscular movement — the cerebrum and cerebellum — never formed.

Dr. Robert T. Leshner, a professor of neurology and pediatrics at the Medical College of Virginia, said there is no known treatment for hydranencephaly and that the prognosis for such patients is poor.

Most children with the condition "don't make it past the first year of life," he said. The cause of the condition is not known.

Andrew's biological mother had decided before his birth that she would give up her child for adoption.

Foster parents took care of the boy for five months while the Richmond-based Children's Home Society of Virginia, a private adoption agency, searched for prospective parents.

"Andrew was the hardest adoption I ever did," said Sharon E. Peterson, the society's director of development. "We decided we're not putting this kid in an institution. We're going to place him."

Ms. Vandal sought to adopt Andrew after reading a newspaper story about him.

Andrew, who is 3 feet tall, weighs 32 pounds and has golden, curly hair and blue eyes, will start his third year of nursery school in the fall, Ms. Vandal said.

"Other children treat him wonderfully. He participates in all activities other children do, and is very much a part of everything," she said.

Ms. Vandal has two girls with conditions similar to Andrew's. One is 12 years old, the other 3. She said all three will never walk or be able to sit or stand unsupported.

Andrew "is constantly on the move," she said. "He lies on the floor on his back and kicks around the floor. As soon as we open the sliding glass door, he heads right out the door and onto the porch."

Andrew cannot speak and is cortically blind, which means images are being seen but not interpreted.

Still, said Ms. Vandal, "he laughs when he watches the Disney Channel on TV."

Ms. Vandal, a single parent, lives with her parents. They help care for the children.

"We let him do what he wants to do," she said. "The more he does, the more he gains. I'm not sure how long that will go on, but it hasn't stopped yet. We're giving him the best quality of life for however long he lives."

Judge Halts Drug Sales

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ST. LOUIS — A federal judge has ordered a prescription painkiller removed from the marketplace because it never was approved by the Food and Drug Administration.

The order was issued Monday by U.S. District Judge William L. Hungate but was not immediately made public.

The drug — Esgic with Codeine — has been distributed nationally by Forest Pharmaceuticals in Maryland Heights since 1986. It contains 50 milligrams of butalbital, 30 milligrams of codeine, 40 milligrams of caffeine and 325 milligrams of acetaminophen. It is described as an analgesic for coping with moderate to severe pain.

Ken Goodman, vice president of finance for Forest Laboratories, the parent company in New York, refused to answer any questions about the drug, saying the matter was in litigation.

The company contended that the drug was generally recognized by experts as safe and therefore not a new drug requiring approval by the FDA.

But the FDA contended that it was not widely recognized as safe because there were no published studies on the drug or any similar product.

Hungate noted that the company failed to cite any published studies to refute the FDA's argument, and he concluded that "where there are no published studies, there can be no general recognition" of a drug as safe.

Second NASA Official Will Leave Post

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Yet another high-ranking executive is leaving NASA, and like some others he blames a new government ethics law that takes effect Sunday.

The resignation of Robert O. Aller, effective Saturday, adds to the management problems facing National Aeronautics and Space Administration chief Richard H. Truly, who was sworn in only two weeks ago.

Aller's resignation will come less than a week before the 20th anniversary of the first moon landing on July 20, 1969.

Truly himself had first filled in as acting administrator because the agency's No. 1 and No. 2 officials, James C. Fletcher and Dale D. Myers, resigned in the spring.

Aller, head of the Office of Space Operations, becomes the ninth high-level resignation in the agency this year and the third to say publicly he is leaving because of the law.

"Frankly, it's so vague and undefined that I'm not aware of anybody in government or on Capitol Hill or in industry that really understands its implications," Aller said after his resignation was announced Wednesday.

"For one that had planned at some point in time to go into private industry, (the law) almost insists that you resign before the 16th of July," he said.

The ethics law, aimed at curtailing the "revolving door" personnel relationship between some federal agencies and private industry, takes effect that day.

Workers stand before some of the 'art' displayed at an unusual museum filled with garbage

Museum Shows Trash Doesn't Disappear

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LYNDHURST, N.J. — This is not another one of those jokes about New Jersey. It is about a museum filled with garbage.

The Hackensack Meadowlands Environment Center's museum will feature windows, tires, bottles, paper cartons and toys once destined for landfills in New Jersey, which produces 26,000 tons of trash daily — enough to fill nearby Giants Stadium to the top of the scoreboard every 2½ weeks.

"The fundamental purpose is educational. We want to show people that garbage doesn't just disappear. That it's not just by magic," said Robert Grant, a spokesman for the center.

The plans for the museum come at a time when communities across the nation are considering ways to recycle some of their trash. A third of the country's 6,000 dumps will close during the next five years, driving up disposal costs.

The exhibit, which will be permanent and will be operated by the Hackensack Meadowlands Development Commission, is under construction. An official dedication is planned for October.

From the garbage-filled entry, visitors will move to viewing holes where mirrors show the trash producers themselves.

There's a display showing something that won't decay — a glass bottle. Another display will explain disposal options, such as making a compost pile at home or recycling motor oil. And computer games on trash are planned.

"The purpose is to show the public what is thrown away, what could be recycled, and what their responsibilities and concerns should be to reduce the waste," said Grant.

Each American generates an average of 3.5 pounds of refuse a day, adding 160 million tons to the nation's trash pile each year. Only 10 percent is recycled; the federal government has set a goal of 25 percent in four years.

"We are trying to change habits that have been with us since man first walked upright. ... What society has done is to find a useless piece of land and fill it up, then find another piece of land," Grant said.

"People still think you put it out on Tuesdays and Thursdays and, 'Poof!' it disappears."

The development commission, created 20 years ago by the Legislature, is responsible for environmental education, overseeing garbage disposal has four northern New Jersey counties and managing surrounding wetlands.

The solid waste museum is one of three planned for the new 7,000-square-foot exhibit area, being built mostly with money from the New Jersey Sports and Exposition Authority, which funds the environment center.

House Cuts Funds For Arts Agencies

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — A congressman outraged over artworks depicting explicit sexuality and religious desecration says the House's decision to strip $45,000 from the federal arts budget is "a slap on the wrist."

The House approved the cut in the National Endowment for the Arts budget after attempts to first take away all the agency's money and then reduce its budget by 10 percent failed.

"I'm afraid the long and the short of it is that they will get a message they can get away with anything and take nothing but a modest slap on the wrist," said Rep. Richard Arney, R-Texas.

The action Wednesday came as an amendment to the $11 billion Interior Department appropriations bill, which was eventually approved by a 374-49 vote. The Senate has not voted on the Interior appropriation.

The fight over arts funding, heightened by recent controversial exhibits that had federal money behind them, was debated for five hours before the amendment trimming the NEA's budget was approved 361-65.

The bill earmarked $144.2 million for the endowment, which provides grants to artists, writers and art exhibitors.

"We were concerned about the way the endowment was moving on certain taxpayer-funded projects," said Rep. Charles Stenholm, D-Texas, who proposed the funding cut.

Stenholm's amendment was an alternative to one offered by Rep. Dana Rohrabacher, R-Calif., that would have wiped out the NEA's entire appropriation, and another by Arney that would have cut the NEA budget by 10 percent.

Arney said the vote would force the "arrogant" NEA to use "standards of taste, decency, sensitivity, tolerance" in its arts funding decisions.

But Hugh Southern, acting endowment chairman, said the NEA takes congressional concerns seriously.

"We shall continue to work with the Congress to assure the integrity and effectiveness of the arts endowment processes and to maintain the independence of the peer review system and its affirmation of diverse aesthetic views and expressions," he said after the vote.

The fight centered around a photograph by Andres Serrano of a plastic crucifix submerged in a container of the artist's urine, and an exhibition of photographs by the late Robert Mapplethorpe that included depiction of homo-eroticism, child nudity and sadomasochism.

Italian Firm Says It Wasn't Trying To Corner Soybeans

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHICAGO — A giant Italian agricultural company denied attempting to corner the soybean market and said a Chicago Board of Trade order to liquidate big soybean futures positions "undermines the reliability" of its contracts.

Soybean futures prices nosedived Wednesday on the heels of the unusual order from the commodity exchange. That order was widely seen as aiming to blunt an attempt to corner the market, in which one party buys enough of a commodity to control its price and drive it higher.

Exchange spokesman Raymond Carmichael said only that the order was issued late Tuesday to correct a wide disparity between the number of contracts outstanding and the actual supply of soybeans available.

The Chicago Sun-Times, quoting unidentified analysts and trading sources, reported that the order was targeted at Ferruzzi SpA, Western Europe's leading grain trader and one of the world's largest soybean processors.

In a statement released Wednesday in Milan, Italy, Ferruzzi said its "accumulation of beans was undertaken so that the group could assure the uninterrupted operation of its processing plants ... and to satisfy export commitments, particularly to the Soviet Union."

Ferruzzi said it had been accumulating soybeans openly in compliance with exchange rules because last year's drought could have caused a shortage. It did not say how much it had bought.

The statement also said the exchange's action would "undermine the reliability of the contracts" of the Board of Trade.

Soybeans are used for products ranging from tofu and cooking oil to cosmetics and animal feed. Futures are binding contracts to buy or sell a set amount of a commodity at an agreed-upon price at a later date.

Activity in the Board of Trade's soybean pit, the world's largest for that commodity, was heavy at the beginning and end of Wednesday's session as traders tried to sort rumor from fact.

One trader said the sale of 3 mil-

Cornering the Soybean Market

1 A trader buys as many soybean futures contracts as possible to get control of a significant percentage of the total supply. A futures contract is an agreement to buy or sell a stated amount of a commodity by a given date.

2 Instead of selling the contracts when they are due, the trader takes delivery and stores them.

3 When the supply runs low for other traders selling contracts, they are forced to pay the price set by the person controlling the majority of the commodity.

4 When the number of contracts delivered to one trader gets too high, the Chicago Board of Trade can take action to prevent a commodity from being cornered. The Board can order traders to limit the amount of the commodity that can be stored by one trader, thereby forcing the majority holder to liquidate his supply at reasonable prices.

Growth Hormone Improves Healing

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BOSTON — An ointment that makes skin grow faster can speed up nature's healing process and could capture a substantial share of the billion dollar market for wound care products, researchers reported today.

The experimental treatment is based on a natural substance called epidermal growth factor that is produced through gene splicing.

In a report on the New England Journal of Medicine, doctors found that it could cut more than a day off the healing time of people undergoing skin grafts.

"It had always been taught in medical school that you could not stimulate wounds to heal faster," said Dr. Gregory L. Brown, who directed the study. "We set out to show that you could."

The hormone was produced for this experiment by Chiron, a biotechnology firm in Emeryville, Calif.

"To the best of our knowledge, no one has ever before made a claim for a prescription drug on the basis of its favorable effect on wound healing," according to an editorial in the journal.

The editorial, by Drs. Thomas K. Hunt and Frederick B. La Van of the University of California, San Francisco, said the latest research appears to be the long-awaited first carefully conducted study showing that the approach actually works.

"The annual market for products used in the care of wounds in this country is more than $1 billion, and a successful growth factor-based product would be expected to capture a substantial share of the market," they wrote.

Brown and colleagues conducted the study on 12 people being treated for burns and broken legs at Emory and Vanderbilt universities. Each patient received separate applications of cream on side-by-side wounds where skin had been removed for grafts. One application contained the growth factor, the other did not.

In every patient, the wound getting the hormone healed faster. The healing time varied from person to person, but on average the wounds getting the growth factor completely healed in about 11 days, while those without the treatment took 1 1/2 days longer.

Bomb Injures 7 GIs In Honduras

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Seven U.S. Army soldiers were wounded early today when an "explosive device" was thrown at them as they were walking through a village in northern Honduras, the Pentagon said.

The condition of the soldiers was not immediately available, but they are being treated in a local hospital, said a Defense Department spokeswoman, Army Maj. Kathy Wood.

She said nine soldiers were involved in the incident, but only seven were injured. She said the military personnel apparently were off duty and were walking through the village at the time of the attack.

"They were just walking down the street in La Cieba," the spokeswoman said. "Some sort of explosive device was thrown at them."

She said she had no specific information about the identities of the personnel, their specific units, rank or sex.

"The facts are very sketchy," she said.

The soldiers are based at Sotocano Air Base, near Comayanga in central Honduras, where the United States has temporary facilities.

U.S. personnel are currently involved in a road-building exercise near La Cieba, a northern coastal town, Maj. Wood said, but she was not certain whether the wounded soldiers were assigned to that task.

The spokeswoman said various reports have come in about the incident, and that one said the explosion occurred at 2:30 a.m. EDT.

She said some 1,200 U.S. military personnel are assigned to the Sotocano Air Base, a Honduran-owned facility.

The United States has its personnel assigned there on six-month rotating tours, the spokeswoman said.

Besides road-building, they are involved in medical services and civil affairs activities, she said.

Today's attack came three months after unidentified assailants used gunfire and an explosive to attack a jeep convoy carrying 11 U.S. and six Honduran soldiers outside Olan-chita, a town near La Cieba.

One jeep was disabled in the April 11 attack, but no injuries were reported.

Honduras has been the scene of frequent U.S. Army military exercises over the years, particularly during the mid-1980s during former President Reagan's administration Spokesman Dick Burket said the company had no comment Wednesday.

A trading source who insisted on anonymity told The Associated Press the situation began as a battle between Archer Daniels and Ferruzzi.

"They started butting heads for export business," he said, "but Ferruzzi was smart enough to cover itself by getting supplies from the cash market and the futures market."

as a demonstration of American resolve in Central America.

The exercises were intended partly as a political signal to the Sandinista government in Nicaragua, which borders Honduras to the south.

Some elements of the Honduran population strongly resent the increased U.S. military role in the Central American nation, as well as the use of Honduran territory by the Contra rebels battling the leftist government in Managua.

Honduras was used by the U.S.-supported Contras in their attacks against the Sandinista forces.

U.S. military aid to the Contras was cut off about 17 months ago, and U.S. assistance to the Contras has been limited to humanitarian aid.

Thousands of Contras still live in the border area, but fighting has declined substantially as a result of a cease-fire agreed to in March 1988.

Ozone Loss Detected Over Arctic

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Scientists said today they have found a high-altitude deficit in ozone over the Arctic, revealing what may be an early step toward periodic ozone depletions like those seen over Antarctica.

Arctic depletions would be smaller than those forming the annual "ozone hole" over Antarctica, said D.J. Hofmann, a University of Wyoming physicist and an author of the study published in the British journal Nature.

But "anytime man can perturb the natural ozone profile in any way I think we should be worried," he said. "Then we're in a situation where we (can) better know ... exactly how we're doing it, so that we can correct it."

Manmade chemicals such as chlorofluorocarbons are blamed for destroying ozone, a form of oxygen found high in the atmosphere. Ozone blocks ultraviolet rays that cause skin cancer, so scientists are concerned by signs of ozone loss.

The Antarctic hole is an area in which up to 50 percent of atmospheric ozone disappears for a limited time. In the Arctic, perhaps 25 percent could disappear under highly unusual worst-case circumstances, said Hofmann, who conducted the study with scientists from France, Japan, New Zealand and the University of Houston.

Previous studies also have suggested ozone depletions over the Arctic.

The study does not prove that the observed deficit is an early step in ozone depletion, but it is very suggestive, said James Friend, an atmospheric chemistry professor at Drexel University in Philadelphia.

"I think they're probably right, but they have a lot of suppositions," Friend said.

The new observations were made by balloon-borne instruments launched last January in northern Sweden. The instruments detected the apparent ozone deficit at altitudes between about 14 miles and 16 miles.

The Antarctic ozone hole develops as such high-level deficits spread to lower altitudes, where most polar ozone is found, Hofmann said in a telephone interview.

But the Arctic atmosphere presents obstacles to that process, Hofmann said.

One is that a funnel-like wind pattern needed for the deficits to spread tends to break down in the Arctic, in contrast to its stability in the Antarctic. In fact, researchers reported, this pattern disintegrated soon after the high-altitude ozone deficit was discovered.

One of the largest problems facing the growing city, Powell said, is transportation.

"Up until now, all our efforts have been getting (U.S.) 264 four-laned around Greenville," Powell said, "Now our concern needs to be getting around in the city."

Powell also said that the railroads cutting across the county could provide a major commuter network for the expanded urban area.

According to the group's predictions, the city will stretch almost to the county border to the north, west and south.

Lynne James, Greenville strategic planner, said the cooperative planning effort "is going to be very important to the city of Greenville and the county."

She said the city is looking at ways to best provide services to an extended city. Expanding city services such as police and fire protection, garbage pick-up and utilities represents "one of our major problems," she said.

"Intergovernmental cooperation is going to be very important to this effort," Ms. James said.

Focus 2007 also includes input from East Carolina University's planning and institutional research personnel. The group plans on an expanded university, and hopes to "provide an educational system committed to excellence, access and equity."

In its planning effort, Focus 2007 will also look at crime and substance abuse, recreational and cultural activities and research and development in the county.

College Closes

ASHEVILLE (AP) — Black Mountain College, which attracted intellectuals ranging from Albert Einstein to poet William Carlos Williams, has closed after a one-year revival and may be searching for another home.

Two men connected with the spring revival of the arts college on the grounds of Camp Rockmont said Black Mountain College Inc. founder D. Marc Herring has left the state after closing the college in May.

Offering a wide-ranging, no-degree curriculum in the arts, the college provided instruction in an open setting free of the restraints of traditional college academic life. The revival attracted some 30 faculty and students from across the country.

The college was founded in 1933 at Blue Ridge Assembly by dissident faculty members and students from Rollins College in Winter Park, Fla.

tively modest aid programs he proposed for Poland and Hungary. "I think that they understand that we are restricted in what we can do in terms of dollars" Bush said.

In Paris, Mitterrand greeted each leader arriving by limousine at the ceremony site near the Eiffel Tower. The crowd in the street cheered when Philippines President Corazon Aquino appeared. Other guests included Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi of India, President Robert Mugabe of Zimbabwe, President Mobutu Sese Seko of Zaire and other African leaders, U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar, Brazilian President Jose Sarney, Mexican President Carlos Salinas de Gortari and Uruguayan President Julio Maria Sanguinetti.

The French festivities will feature concerts, fireworks and parades. Both literally and figuratively, Bush was bringing the key to the party.

He was carrying the historic key to the Bastille prison, the site where the French Revolution began when the Bastille was stormed in an uprising against the crown on July 14, 1789.

Bush planned to present the large iron key to Mitterrand for display through July 22 at the new Bastille Opera house, adjacent to the site of the famous fortress.

The key was given to George Washington nearly 200 years ago by the Marquis de Lafayette. Since 1797, the key has never left Washington's estate in northern Virginia.

Since 1858, the historic artifact has been in the possession of the Mount Vernon Ladies' Association, the private, non-profit organization that owns and operates Washington's home. The association is loaning the key to France for the celebration.

For France's festivities, Mitterrand invited more than 30 heads of state and government from nations rich and poor.

The leaders were gathering at the historic Elysee Palace for an elegant luncheon and meeting again at the Orsay Museum for a formal dinner.

When the party reaches its peak Friday, the Champs Elysee will be the site of a parade featuring Britons marching under artificial rain, Russians dancing with a bear on ice and an American band strutting backward all the way down the famed avenue.

Amid extraordinary political uncertainty in Poland and Hungary as they struggle with democratic reforms, Bush devoted the first half of his 10-day European journey to encouraging advocates of change.

Aside from strong messages of moral support, he left behind packages of U.S. aid of $100 million for Poland and $25 million for Hungary to spur development of private enterprise.

"Your challenge is enormous and historic: to build a structure of political change and decentralized economic enterprise on the ruins of a failed Stalinist system," Bush said in a speech Wednesday at the Karl Marx University of Economic Sciences.

Imre Pozgay, one of Hungary's four communist leaders, told Bush the changes in his country were "irreversible" and added the government would "accept the results of free elections" set for next year and step down if defeated.

Equal Access Phone Service Scheduled

Carolina Telephone on Saturday will implement equal access service in Farmville and Fountain, enabling customers to be served by their choice of the participating long-distance companies in these areas, said Jackie Morris, district commercial manager for the company.

Morris said that with equal access service, customers can make calls by dialing 1 plus the telephone number when using the services of any available long-distance company. Previously, it was necessary to dial as many as 20 digits when using the services of some long-distance companies, he said.

Also Saturday, Farmville and Fountain customers will be introduced to 0 and 00 dialing when they need assistance with their calls. Customers can dial 0 for assistance on a local call or on a long-distance call placed within the Carolina Telephone long-distance calling zone that contains the Farmville and Fountain exchanges, he said.

An explanation of long-distance calling zones and a list of communities in each zone are in the Calling Guide in front of the telephone directory.

The 0 operator will handle emergency calls, give assistance on misdialed or disconnected calls and give information for calls in the customer's Carolina Telephone calling zone, Morris said.

For assistance with all other long-distance calls, customers will dial 00. If the customer mistakenly dials the 0 operator instead of the 00 operator, the 0 operator will ask the caller to hang up and dial 00.

Morris said the new procedure will not affect the way local calls are placed and it won't change the way direct dialed long-distance calls that begin with 1 and 0 are placed.

Morris said customers several weeks ago marked a ballot mailed to them by Carolina Telephone and selected a primary long-distance company to handle their non-Carolina Telephone-handled calls.

Those primary long-distance companies handle calls that cross state borders or boundaries between calling zones. As required by the Federal Communications Commission, Carolina Telephone randomly assigned a long-distance company to customers who did not return ballots.

Facilities Can Pollute River

Environmental Management since last June for operations violations at the southside industrial plant. And the N.C. Department of Natural Resources and Community Development, the parent agency of DEM, recently fined Oxford more than $27,000 for operations violations at the facility and failing to meet a construction deadline for completed renovations.

NRC cited Oxford for 27 separate violations at the southside plant and fined the city $27,174.20. Since last June the plant released excessive amounts of oil and grease, lead and solid wastes into the river, according to the state. The plant was also fined for violating oxygen demand limits in the water from discharged waste.

The state has issued three notices of violation to Oxford for exceeding permitted limits of oil and grease, lead and suspended solids.

Notices of violation represent the second step in the enforcement process, but carry no fine.

Residents on a tributary downstream from the southside domestic and industrial plants' discharges frequently complained of an unbearable stench to the water.

Scott Garrison, who lives outside of Oxford, wrote to DEM in February 1989, complaining of the odor and poor water quality. "At this point the water in Fishing Creek, adjacent to my home, is opaque, gray-green in color, leaving trails of foam wherever the flow happens to hit a rock. On a recent weekend it smelled noticeably like an open sewer despite an air temperature of 34 degrees F," Garrison wrote.

Like Rocky Mount, Oxford is also under a state order to comply with discharge limits. The order imposed a March 31 deadline for completion of a new facility.

The DEM water quality supervisor, William Kreutzberger, in a December 1988 letter to DEM assistant director regarding complaints about Fishing Creek, said the renovated plant would be completed by February 1989.

In responding to Garrison's letter, Kreutzberger in March revised his earlier estimation of the completion date. "We anticipate the completion of all improvements by November, 1989," he said.

The other two plants in Oxford have not escaped citations from the state. And records show similar, if less severe, problems at the southside and northside domestic treatment plants.

Notices of non-compliance and notices of violations for exceeding permitted effluent limits at the northside plant run back to 1986.

An EPA inspection of the plant in May of 1987 noted the discharge, but said it was "not acutely toxic."

The state issued a notice of non-compliance to the northside plant in June of 1988 for violating permit limits. And a notice of violation went out in November.

On Jan. 14, the northside treatment plant spilled 6,000 gallons of raw sewage into a tributary of Coon Creek off Fishing Creek, state records show.

Ragland said the city has stopped operations at the two domestic plants, and the final upgrade to the industrial plant nearly completed.

"We're sort of in the debugging process," Ragland said.

When the upgrading is complete, both Ragland and Kreutzberger said the problems at the industrial plant should end.

State and federal records of the wastewater treatment plant in Tarboro in Edgecombe County also show a troubled facility working to improve its treatment of the river.

In July of 1988, a state inspection report noted a problem at the Tarboro facility with exceeding permit limits, and the report recommended the town expand its plant capacity.

A series of reports dating back to the early 1980s note coloration of the plant's effluent from dyes entering the treatment plant.

The green, blue and purple colors to the discharged waste at Tarboro's plant do not violate state guidelines, according to Kreutzberger. He said this week that the state applies limits on coloration "on a case by case basis," and tests showed no toxicity from the dyes at Tarboro.

And Sam Noble, Tarboro town manager, said the town regularly tests its effluent for heavy metals, formerly a common component of textile dyes.

Tarboro is also planning to expand its treatment to handle five million gallons of sewage per day. Noble said the town expects to complete the expansion by June or July next year.

With the expansion to a 5-million-gallon capacity, Noble said Tarboro's plant should handle any growth of the town for the next 20 years. "We're in pretty good shape," Noble said.

According to John Chapman, Tarboro's director of public works, the city also plans to build the plant to exceed limits on releasing nutrient pollutants.

Strict limits on nitrogen and phosphorous coming from wastewater treatment plants may take effect under a proposed nutrient sensitive waters classification under consideration by the state.

Chapman also said the city dechlorinates the effluent to protect its receiving stream — the Tar River.

"We feel pretty good about our system," Noble said.

Friday's article will deal with Greenville's wastewater treatment operations.

Child Killed Despite Gun Law

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — An infant was killed with a gun her 6-year-old sister found under their parents' pillow hours after Gov. Bob Martinez signed a bill intended to protect children from accidental shootings.

Ten-month-old Emercida Suarez was shot late Wednesday and died early today at St. Joseph's Hospital in Tampa, police said.

She was the seventh victim of such an accident since June 1.

"The 6-year-old found the .38-caliber revolver laying on their parents' bed under a pillow ... and thinking it was a toy, and fired it one time, striking the girl in the head."

said Tampa police officer S. Middleton.

Possible charges are pending against the girls' parents, Amancio and Reina Suarez, and police are continuing to investigate the shooting, Middleton said.

But the law Martinez signed Wednesday doesn't take effect until October 1 and won't apply in this case, he said.

The law requires gun owners to take reasonable precautions to keep loaded weapons in their homes and businesses out of the hands of children age 15 and younger by using trigger locks or keeping the weapon in a locked box.

"This will assist in protecting our children throughout the state," Martinez said. "The added public awareness will prompt adults to keep guns out of reach."

Wednesday's signing ceremony also came one day after a 9-year-old Clearwater boy shot himself in the finger. Tomy Zemko found the .25-caliber pistol after climbing onto a chair to get some potato chips from atop the refrigerator in his grandmother's home. He was treated for a broken finger.

Three children died and two were wounded in the earlier shootings, inspiring lawmakers to push for the first-of-its-kind legislation during a special session last month.

The law provides for adult gun owners to be charged with a felony, punishable by up to five years in prison and a $5,000 fine, if a child shoots himself or another child because of the owner's carelessness.

If a minor threatens someone with the gun or displays it in public, its owner faces a misdemeanor charge and up to 60 days in jail with a $500 fine.

No grieving parent of an injured or fatally wounded child shot by another member of the family could be arrested until seven days after the shooting.

There are exemptions for hunting and target-shooting accidents and those involving guns taken illegally.

The measure also will authorize the development of a gun safety program in the state's public schools.

Tropical Storm Forms

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MIAMI — Tropical Storm Barry has swirled to life, packing 40 mph winds but posing no immediate threat to land, the National Weather Service said today.

At 6 a.m. EDT, the center of the storm was near latitude 24.5 north, longitude 55.5 west, or about 675 miles northeast of the northern Leeward Islands in the Lesser Antilles.

Satellite pictures indicated Barry became nearly stationary during the night, forecasters said. Some strengthening was expected before tonight, but the storm's steering currents have diminished and its movement was expected to be slow and erratic.

Barry, which had been moving northwest, turned sharply to the north Wednesday night and posed no immediate threat to land, said forecaster Hal Gerrish at the National Hurricane Center in suburban Coral Gables.

The storm formed as a depression earlier this week off west Africa. It became the Atlantic hurricane season's second named storm when its maximum sustained winds reached 39 mph Wednesday.

If winds reach 74 mph, it would become the first hurricane of the June-November season.

The season's first named storm was Allison, which caused widespread flood damage in Texas and Louisiana last month.

crease in the speeds prior to the oil shortage and the national 55 mph speed limit," he said. "Then when the oil shortage came on during '72, '73, and we had gas rationing, and we went to a national 55 mph limit, there was a drastic drop in speed at that point. People really felt things were bad at that point."

Since then, however, "they've lost whatever it was that was keeping them within the speed limit and they're back on the same trail," Lynch said.

Many times speed limits are ignored because drivers don't believe they're realistic, he said.

"From a traffic engineering standpoint, we feel a lot of them are unreasonably low," Lynch said. "But whenever there's a problem (on a road), the public wants to reduce the speed limit. Unless the driver perceives a need for the speed limit, the driver is not going to drive it, and it's not enforceable."

As one way of fighting the problem, the Highway Patrol has begun an Interstate Enforcement Team of 25 troopers, four line sergeants and one first sergeant. The team travels as a unit to catch speeders on North Carolina's 839 miles of interstate, said 1st Sgt. M.H. Stephens.

The majority of citizens' complaints involve I-85 between Greensboro and Durham, he said. But since the team began working there, "complaints have gone to nil on that one section. We feel like we've had an impact there, being very visible."

Although the team can't travel all of the interstate system every day, Stephens said he believes the special troopers can be around enough to make a difference.

"What we're seeing now is they've seen us out there so much, that the guy driving the highway to and from work, he sees us day in and day out, he knows we might have to take a day off, he doesn't know when we're not going to be there," he said.

A Young Mother's Desperate Plea For Help Brings A Volunteer And A New Beginning

By Alice Steinbach
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

Desperate and crying hysterically, Terri De Primo's only thought was to get away from her two small children for an hour or so. The day and evening had been a nightmare.

Steven, 2, had a cold and demanded constant attention; Nikki, 4, wouldn't listen, was all revved up and running through the house. When bedtime came, neither child was able to calm down and go to sleep. And, as usual, there was no relief for Terri from this round-the-clock child care, no family member or friend she could turn to who might give her a break from her kids.

Finally, at 3:00 in the morning, Terri couldn't take it anymore.

She stuffed some diapers into a Miss Piggy bag and shoved Steven and Nikki outside, locking the door behind them. "Get out! Get out!" she screamed at her children. "You don't want to listen? That's fine. You take your Miss Piggy bag and you get the hell out of my house."

It was dark outside, wintertime, and the kids, dressed in their pajamas and jackets, were terrified and crying. "Mommy! Mommy! Let us in! The bogeyman's coming to get us!" they howled, banging on the door.

Ignoring their pleas, Terri went to an upstairs bedroom, covered her head with a pillow and sobbed. Confused and afraid that she might harm her children if she didn't get away from them for a little while, all kinds of thoughts raced through Terri's mind:

Why can't they listen to me? I love them more than anything in the world, but why can't they see I need a break sometimes? Why is this happening? This is exactly what happened to me when I was young, and I vowed when I had kids I would never do this to them.

Depressed and isolated, married to a man who seldom came home, 28-year-old Terri had no friends, no phone, no car. The only thing in life she could count on was being the constant caretaker of her two preschool children. And it was not a role for which life had prepared her. Shunted from foster home to foster home since age 3, Terri knew little of what it was like to have a stable, secure family life.

Terri desperately wanted to give her children what she'd never had. But she didn't have it to give; things were falling apart.

Now, as she became aware again of her children outside, she struggled to gain control of her feelings. After about an hour, she went downstairs and let Steven and Nikki in. The two exhausted children went right to sleep. But Terri couldn't stop crying. By 6:00 in the morning she had made an important decision.

At exactly 8:00 a.m., she went to contact a shelter for adolescent girls where she once had lived. "Call us if you ever need help," they had said. Now she dialed the number and waited. A voice answered at the other end.

"Help me," sobbed Terri into the phone. "Something's not right with my family and I'm afraid. Life's not supposed to be like this."

The phone call was the first step on a path that led Terri and her children to a smart, nurturing, 57-year-old woman named Hettie Richburg who would change all their lives.

It's been five years since Hettie Richburg, then a registered nurse working at the Well Baby Clinic of the Baltimore City Health Department, walked into Terri De Primo's life. She found her way there through her volunteer work at the Exchange Club Center for the Prevention of Child Abuse. The program, started locally in 1982, trains

LAT-WP News Service

Hettie Richburg joins Nikki and Steven De Primo, who are 'like grandchildren' to her volunteers to work on an intensive, long-term basis with families displaying symptoms of abuse and neglect or those at risk for doing so.

Hettie was in the program because she had seen first-hand in the clinic the frustration and difficulties experienced by so many mothers. And since her own children had grown and left the house, Hettie was feeling a bit of the "empty nest syndrome." So when she saw the Exchange Center ad for volunteers in the newspaper, she responded.

It was a perfect match: Hettie was mature, patient and non-judgmental, just the type of person able to develop a trusting relationship and serve as a good parenting model.

Terri De Primo was her first case and Hettie was nervous when the center briefed her on the family's needs. "They told me she was really having a lot of problems, and that she needed someone right away," recalls Hettie, settling back into a chair in Terri's small, neat living room. "They told me there had been a crisis where she had put the children outside in the middle of the night. And that she had called for help."

Hettie's first impression of Terri remains vivid: "When I saw Terri, in my mind I saw this tiny, little frightened girl sitting in a corner trying to be a mommy. I honestly thought the kids were just going to take her over. She was just overwhelmed. She seemed frightened and was crying. But it was clear she wanted to talk. So I just sat and listened through her tears."

Driving home hours later, Hettie found herself wondering how she was going to help: "What have I gotten myself into?" she thought.

Two days later, Hettie arrived at the De Primo house to take the kids apple-picking. As they prepared to leave, Terri approached shyly. "Can I go, too?" she asked. "I think that's something I'd like."

The day was a huge success. "Terri climbed a tree and the kids were so happy," recalls Hettie. "We sat at the lake and fed ducks and it was just so much fun. And it didn't take me long to see that Terri really needed her childhood. I don't think she'd ever had one."

Project Focuses On The Health Of Black Women

By Sonya Ross
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ATLANTA — The National Black Women's Health Project is no clinic. It's a place where women tell what ails them and hugs are the order of the day.

From a rambling, tree-shaded mansion in southwest Atlanta, dozens of ladies set about healing bodies by healing attitudes, heightening health awareness for a nation of women who often pay a heavy physical price just living every day.

"If you are living in a house where you are being abused sexually, physically, emotionally, that is what's on the front of your mind. You couldn't get too excited about your health," said executive director Bylyle Avery.

The project estimates that black women are twice as likely as whites to die of diabetes, three times as likely to die of cervical cancer and 18 times as likely to have organ damage due to hypertension, the project says. In addition, 75 percent of female AIDS victims are black, and nearly half of all black women are mothers by age 20.

Black women also are three times as likely to be molested or raped and four times as likely to be murdered, Avery said. The project's main goal is to "break the conspiracy of silence" surrounding women's health.

With shared experiences, newsletters and films, the project works in the hope that education will pull black women away from social evils that inhibit efforts to seek birth control and better nutrition.

Every month, the project stages programs on topics such as "Mothers Too Early Too Long," which gathered four generations of teen mothers to discuss how pregnancy affected their lives;

"Black & Female: What Is The Reality?" about social issues that affect black women; and "Sister-Reach," which dealt with women's health issues in Belize, a tiny Central American nation.

The project also operates a Wellness Center, providing tutorial and literacy programs, out of an Atlanta housing project.

"We create a safe space where sisters can say whatever they need to say," Avery said. "Where sisters have someone listen to them, and also have someone struggle with them."

And the women come. They laugh and talk. They bring their daughters.

The teen-agers deal with such topics as "Growing Up Is Scary" and "What Is A Real Man?" putting their thoughts in a newsletter.

"What we stress is coming together and taking the risk to start talking openly with each other about the realities of our lives," Avery said. "It's through that analysis that women then learn what to do about certain parts of their health. It helps break down the alienation and isolation that black women feel."

Would-Be Philanthropist Is Ignored In Canada

Dear Abby: In the past 10 years, my wife and I traveled to Canada on various tours, and during those trips we accumulated a fair amount of Canadian coins and currency. I kept putting the coins in a good-sized jar until the jar was full and weighed about nine pounds. I decided to send this jar to some worthy group located as far north in Canada as I could find.

I found a small town on the map, and wrote to the president of a well-known worldwide service club in that town offering to send the club my Canadian coins. I received no response. Then I wrote to the president of the Chamber of Commerce in that town. I never heard from him, either. So I wrote to their international headquarters in Chicago, and received no reply.

Dear Abby

I then personally went to the local chapter of another international service club, showed them my jar of Canadian money and asked if they wanted to send it to their Canadian chapter. Two employees were there at the time, and they both laughed at me!

I was ready to give up, when I thought maybe a church mission could use it, so I wrote to the bishop of the Episcopal church in Whitehorse — in the Yukon area. The bishop responded immediately, telling me of a small mission in his area, so I mailed the jar to the bishop, who forwarded it to this little mission.

Soon after, I received a nice thank-you letter saying they had purchased a pulpit Bible with part of the donation, which they had counted, and it came to $144.27!

So, you see, Abby, two international service clubs missed out on a nice donation by their silence and laughter.

If you use this letter, please don't identify me or my city. I don't want to embarrass anybody. — Well Traveled

Dear Well Traveled: Congratulations on your resourcefulness as well as your determination to put your "hard-to-get-rid-of" Canadian money to good use.

Shame on those who ignored your offer, and double shame on those who laughed at you.

Dear Abby: I bet your mail doubles over this goof! "Dog-tired," describing her guests' badly behaved dog, "Toughie," wrote: "As you probably know, most dogs are housebroken only for their own homes."

Abby, that's errant nonsense, as are most generalizations. Dogs are like children. They know only what they have been taught by their "parents." A dog that is housebroken at home knows what the word "no" means, and its owners should use it more often.

Of course, "Dog-Tired" should let Toughie's owners (and any other "friends" who impose on them) know that he is not welcome, but he's only a dog. They are to blame for his misbehavior.

Thousands of people think that if they read it in "Dear Abby" it's true, so please correct this instance of dog abuse. — Diane Silver, Arleta, Calif.

Dear Diane: All right, I'll go quietly to the dog house and bone up on my canine training. But for the record, my mail not only did not double over that goof, yours was the only letter I received pointing out my ignorance.

Dear Abby: I have read that blood donated in the United States is now routinely tested for the AIDS virus. If the blood tests "positive," is the donor notified of this fact?

Please answer this question in your column because I'm sure many others would like to know. — Fort Smith, Ark.

Dear Fort Smith: If the blood tests "positive," it is tested again. If it tests "positive" a second time, the donor is notified.

If you would like to write to Abby, send your letter to Abigail Van Buren, P.O. Box 69140, Los Angeles, CA 90069. For a personal, non-published reply, enclose a self-addressed stamped envelope.

Mr. Moye and Miss Davis Exchange Vows On July 2

Teresa Davis and William O'Neal Moye were united in marriage July 2 in the Greenville Moose Lodge.

The Rev. Eugene Joyner conducted the candlelight, double-ring ceremony. Wedding music was presented by pianist Duane Maye and vocalists James Diddy, both of Farmville, and Willie Vines of New Britain, Conn.

Parents of the bridal couple are Mr. and Mrs. Johnny Jack Davis Sr., and Mr. and Mrs. Billy Carlton, all of Farmville.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore a floor-length Angelo gown of satin and lace with satin elbow-length sleeves, high neckline trimmed in sequins and pearls and cathedral train. She wore a two-tier, waltz-length veil accented with pearls and sequins. The bride carried a bouquet of lace, roses and baby's breath tied with white streamers.

Dulcey Gorham of Richmond, Va., was maid of honor. Vernita Thompson of Farmville, cousin of the bride, and Gwendolyn Moye, sister of the bridegroom, were bridesmaids. Fatimah Davis was flower girl for her aunt.

Brian Keith Moye of Greensboro was his brother's best man. Ushers included Mack Davis, brother of the bride, and Billy Moye, brother of the bridegroom, both of Farmville.

The wedding was directed by Yvonne Garris of Farmville, aunt of the bride. A reception was held after the ceremony.

The bride and bridegroom attended Farmville Central High School. She attended Pitt Community College. The bridegroom is employed by Collins and Aikman in Farmville. The couple are living in Farmville.

She Just Can't Cook For Two

Because I am so child-geared, everyone expected me to hold a wake when the last offspring left home. Many of my friends visualized me converting the bedroom to a shrine. They had me burning candles in a niche next to a pair of moldy gym shoes and making bookends out of petrified pizzas left under the bed. What do they know? The kid's car wasn't out of the driveway before I had the rug cleaned, the room poster-stripped, and nightly rental rates framed on the back of the door.

Oh, sometimes when I was in overdrive, I'd set the table for three people. Or when I was gathering up laundry, I'd go in the bedroom and feel under the bed from force of habit. It did take a while to get over the shock of going into the garage and seeing my car there, but generally the adjustments came easily.

All except in one area. I am incapable of making spaghetti for two people. In fact, I am incapable of cooking anything for two people. It never looks like enough. I stand there with a sheaf of spaghetti in one hand, looking at that huge pot that once served five people and their friends, and I keep adding. Every time I bring a casserole to the table, my husband says, "Who's dropping by? The NFL?"

At Wits End

Once you are a mother, you can never again buy a small can of anything. You cannot use hamburger in increments any smaller than a pound. Chili is always by the pot and never by the pan. And I buy bread as though man lives by it alone.

Another habit that is impossible to break is buying the favorite foods of those who are no longer there to eat them. I cannot begin to tell you the fresh pineapples that have deteriorated on my drain board awaiting the footsteps of the son who could eat a whole one by himself at a single sitting.

One night last week I really made an all-out effort to cook small. I placed a small casserole of lasagna on the table and served a small salad with it. As we lifted our forks, two of the kids dropped by unexpectedly. There was an awkward moment when they said they hadn't come for dinner, they were going out. Then they observed how nice it must be for me not to have to cook all those big meals anymore.

They left never knowing that the freezer is a monument to my previous life, filled with leftover bean soup, cakes, pies, casseroles, veal scaloppine, baked beans, macaroni and cheese, breakfast rolls, cookies, and spaghetti sauce with 18 meatballs.

They left never knowing that the lasagna we were eating was an old friend that we had eaten on since the fall of '87 when its life was new.

Doctor Calls Proper Shampooing An Art

MATURE OUTLOOK

Effective cleansing tops the list of hair care basics.

Proper shampooing is an art, says Dr. Emanuel E. Mamatas of Pittsburgh, and should be done with care. He offers this advice in Mature Outlook magazine:

— Prerinse hair. This step actually preconditions hair, making it more amenable to shampooing.

— Prerinse, lather and final rinse with warm to very warm water — never hot.

— Use a small amount of shampoo. Too much shampoo damages hair.

— Don't apply shampoo directly to the hair. Pour the shampoo into the hand, rub palms together bringing it to a lather. Then apply gently and evenly to hair and scalp.

— Never use a comb or brush while washing. It can damage the hair.

— Lather once or twice. But as a rule of thumb, lathering hair once and washing more frequently is better for the hair than lathering twice and washing less frequently.

— Don't massage the scalp. Contrary to popular belief, massaging the scalp does not increase circulation and the flow of nutrients to the hair.

Repeat Felon Draws 50 Years

Griffin ruled that Williams' prior criminal record aggravated the crime, allowing him to hand down the 50-year sentence.

Upon hearing the sentence, Williams looked shocked and said to the court: "Fifty years?" Deputies handcuffed Williams and led him out of the courtroom.

Griffin then addressed the group of jurors that had decided the case, saying the state Parole Commission's policy of good time would probably slice the sentence in half.

He also said Williams would probably be eligible for parole in 10 years if he had been sentenced to life, thus the 50-year term would probably keep him in prison longer.

A Pitt grand jury has indicted two other people on the habitual felon charge, Haigwood said. His office is emphasizing the crime in light of state parole regulations and overcrowded prisons that allow many felons to serve only a portion of their sentence, despite the fact that they may have criminal records, he said.

Haigwood said he expects the Church Fire

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (AP) — A fire in the Aldersgate United Methodist Church destroyed several offices but only caused minor damage to the church sanctuary and the education building early Wednesday.

A passerby discovered the fire at about 3:35 a.m. When firefighters arrived at the church, the office area of the church was already engulfed in flames.

Rain Brings Relief

 located off N.C. 43 south of Greenville.

While the storm was causing problems around the area, some people were relieved to see the temperatures tail off.

Gene Paramore, owner of Paramore Egg Farms, said the heat didn't affect his operations too much because of a fogging system that he has available. He said, however, that while the mortality rate of his chickens didn't increase during the period of heat, egg production did drop.

Paramore said the chickens do not consume as much food when it is hot and his broilers' weights have decreased.

Greer said the level of the Tar River dropped from 4.0 feet mean sea level to 3.6 feet mean sea level. He cited the winds as contributing to the decrease in the river level.

"Sometimes the winds have more of an effect on the river than the rain," he said.

Greer said that even if rains change the river level, they usually don't have an effect until 24 to 48 hours after the storm.

Two people in the state were struck by lightning Wednesday in Catawba County, according to the Associated Press. Two men working outside were struck and knocked unconscious. They are being treated in Catawba Memorial Hospital.

The news service said high temperatures were expected to reach into the 80s and 90s today after several days when the mercury reached toward 100 degrees.

Forecasters at the National Weather Service at Raleigh-Durham International Airport said temperatures should continue to cool Friday when a cooler, drier air mass moves across the state. The weekend forecast called for more moderate temperatures, with highs mostly in the 80s.

Robinson Stands By Umpire Complaint

By Mike Littwin
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

BALTIMORE — O.K., it's time to look at this — as George Bush might put it — umpire thing. What are we saying here — that umpires blow the odd call? That they even carry the occasional vendetta? That if you cut them, they bleed?

Is this on the level? Frank Robinson was going to quit the game because of umpires?

You never believed it. I didn't either.

I wanted to put an arm around his shoulder and say, "Frank, if you want a cause, try saving whales. Fighting umpires is like fighting Mike Tyson. You just get bloody." But when I did talk to him, I saw something that made me nervous. I beheld a true believer, always the most dangerous kind.

When he makes his case against the injustice he is certain he has suffered, he is a preacher talking about sin. He is a lawyer pleading for a man's life.

And it really doesn't matter whether he's paranoid or whether people (read: umpires) really are out to get him, the important thing is what Robinson believes and does so passionately. When he said he might quit, he believed it. This was not some cheap, sideshow ploy to give his team a lift in the second half. It was not even just a message he wanted sent out (although it was partly that). It was outrage, pure and simple.

You'd think Robinson is too old to believe in things like truth and justice. But he does. During the All-Star break, he insisted on an audience with American League president Dr. Bobby Brown. He shouted from the mountaintop. He got things off his chest. And though he says he is satisfied now, that's probably the wrong word. What he is, is heard.

And so, he's back in the dugout Thursday night as the second half begins and the Orioles begin to figure out whether the first half was real. What we know for sure is the quality job put in by Robinson, who, not unreasonably, takes no small amount of pride in that. He has said this turnaround means as much to him as nearly anything he has accomplished in the game. And yet, he has become afflicted with umpire disease, a malignancy that eats at your marrow and can drive you slowly mad.

Earl Weaver had it bad, costing him a few brain cells and a few nights of sleep. Probably some ballgames, too. Remember the umpire who once said he didn't care who won, so long as it wasn't the Orioles?

For Robinson, it hasn't reached that point. Not yet. And that's because he doesn't believe umpires are cheating him; he just doesn't believe they're willing to deal with him. Respect is the word Robinson uses a lot.

"I want the same respect other managers get," he says.

"I went to see (Brown) because there were things he had no way of knowing. Some of the things that are said to me. The way I'm treated. Other managers aren't treated the same way. I wanted to be treated with respect."

Robinson says other managers are allowed to argue and he is not. He says Sparky Anderson can wave his

Drug Woes Affect Preps

Charlie Adams says some of the state's administrators once may have ignored the problem of substance abuse in the high schools. Now he says the problem has overtaken them and the N.C. High School Athletic Association.

"It's too massive. We can't do anything about it," Adams, the association's executive director, said in a telephone interview from the association's Chemical Awareness Conference. "There were a lot of us who didn't really know what to do."

The conference has heard from all sides of the issue of substance abuse and what to do about it. Bobby Jones, the former North Carolina and NBA great, addressed the conference at Wrightsville Beach.

The educators, coaches and administrators, more than 100 in all, also heard from John Lucas, the Durham native and guard with the Seattle SuperSonics, who has been battling drug abuse for the last three years. It was addiction to cocaine that nearly ended his NBA career at Houston in 1986. Charlie "Choo-Choo" Justice also spoke to the conference, which ended today.

Adams says the conference has opened his eyes, as well as those of the officials in attendance, to the scope of the drug problem in the state's schools and the effort that must be waged to combat it.

"We have to create the general awareness that this is a problem in our schools," he says, adding that today's closing session would provide some direction to the administrators as they go back to their respective systems.

Dr. James H. Palmer and Dr. Chris Ringwalt of the Alcohol and Drug Defense Program reviewed the results of a February 1989 survey of 11,531 North Carolina students in grades 7 through 12.

That survey showed that athletes are only slightly less likely to smoke cigarettes than non-athletes, are more likely to use smokeless tobacco, and that there is little difference between athletes and non-athletes in terms of alcohol use, except that athletes are more likely to be heavy users.

Palmer said the percentages were of particular concern because alcohol is considered a gateway drug and that few people move to other drugs without first having abused alcohol.

More alarming is the rise in the use of anabolic steroids, and the survey showed that some members of ninth and 10th grades are the heaviest users. The percentage of steroid use in ninth grade and 10th grade was about 3 percent. About 1.5 percent of seventh- and eighth-grade athletes and about 1.5 percent of 11th- and 12th-grade athletes are frequent steroid users.

Stretching For Two Points

Johnny Tyson of Collins & Aikman extends his 6-8 frame to lay in the ball for two points during second-half action from the championship game of the Pitt County Summer League Tournament Wednesday at Rose High. Collins & Aikman beat the Pitt County Driving School, 59-58, to claim the title.

Legal Maneuvering Continuing In Case

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

COLUMBUS, Ohio — Pete Rose contends he cannot get a fair hearing from baseball commissioner A. Bartlett Giamatti, and Giamatti indicates he cannot get one in Rose's hometown of Cincinnati.

Lawyers for Giamatti asked U.S. District Judge John D. Holschuh on Wednesday to deny the request of the Cincinnati Reds manager to send his legal battle with baseball back to Hamilton County Common Pleas Court.

Rose's lawyers now have until noon Monday to file a response to baseball's memorandum.

Lawyers for baseball argued that the commissioner long ago was established as an independent authority with exclusive powers to investigate allegations of gambling and to take appropriate action.

"Courts of the United States have uniformly recognized the power of the Commissioner to investigate, determine, and punish conduct he judges is 'not in the best interests of the national game of Baseball,'" the memo stated.

It described gambling as the capital crime of baseball that infects the game's integrity.

"To police this potentially devastating crime, baseball long ago established an independent, autonomous authority — the Commissioner of Baseball — with sweeping and exclusive powers to investigate allegations of gambling and to take appropriate remedial and punitive action," it said.

Rose is trying to block Giamatti from holding a hearing on gambling allegations. Baseball's career hits leader could be banned from the game for life if he is found to have wagered on the Reds.

Rose, who contends he cannot get a fair hearing from Giamatti, was granted a temporary restraining order by Hamilton County Common Pleas Judge Norbert Nadel in Cincinnati on June 25 to block the hearing.

Baseball lost an appeal in the 1st Ohio District Court of Appeals in Hamilton County, and then sought to move the matter into federal court in Cincinnati. The case was sent to Columbus.

"In this case, as (federal) Judges (Carl) Rubin and (Herman) Weber stated in their order transferring this matter to the Eastern Division at Columbus, the plaintiff is 'not just another litigant' but an individual of 'national reputation closely identified with the Cincinnati Reds and the City of Cincinnati,'" the memo said.

"Because of the extraordinary renown of the plaintiff in Cincinnati, and the daunting publicity this matter has received, the case was transferred to this court sitting in another city in order to assure a fairer environment," baseball said in a 110-page response to Rose's motion.

The memo said it appears the federal court judges in Cincinnati believed that severe local prejudice justified transfer of the case.

"Plainly, this same local prejudice must weigh much more heavily on a state court judge who must be elected and re-elected by the citizens of the locality," the filing said.

The memo, filed on Giamatti's behalf by Columbus lawyer John C. Elam, said it is difficult to understand Rose's objection to moving the matter into federal court.

"It now appears, however, that plaintiff is unwilling to accept the jurisdiction of any court other than one which is most subject to the influence of local pressures produced by his fame, notoriety and close identification with the city of Cincinnati," the memo said.

Strange Savors Wins, Looks Ahead

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WILLIAMSBURG, Va. — Now that he's had the opportunity to savor his U.S. Open title defense, Curtis Strange feels it's time to move on.

"The year's not over yet," said Strange, who was part of the 156-man field in today's scheduled opening round of the Anheuser-Busch Golf Classic.

One month ago, Strange became the first golfer in nearly four decades to win consecutive U.S. Open championships. Now he is pondering the possibility of winning more major tournaments this year.

"I'm thinking more and more about the British Open," he said of next week's event in Scotland. "This year I really want to do well. Last year I was a little overwhelmed, then shot 79 in the first round.

"I'm looking forward to it and the PGA. I have a lot better attitude. I'm more fired up."

Strange, whose Open triumphs represent his only victories in the so-called majors — the U.S. and British opens, the Masters and the PGA Championship — said it's not impossible to win more than one a year.

"But as far as winning all four majors in a year, I don't think it is possible, especially when a guy can't dominate our tour," he said. "Sure, if a Jack Nicklaus came out, it could be possible. It was always possible when he was playing."

Before he goes gunning for another major title, Strange will be confronted by another task that has proved difficult for him in the past: playing well in the Anheuser-Busch.

The event is staged at the Kingsmill Golf Club, a 6,776-yard layout which Strange calls his home course and is built in a sprawling resort where Strange makes his home. Strange, who missed the cut in this event in 1986, said it can be a double-edged sword playing at home in front of large galleries of family and friends.

"If you're playing well, it pumps you up," said Strange, who tied for 14th here last year. "If you're playing poorly, you want to bury your head."

This is the last year the tournament will be staged the week before the British Open. Many of the bigger-name players traditionally go to Europe a week early to prepare for the British Open, and Anheuser-Busch officials, in an attempt to bolster their tournament's field, persuaded the PGA Tour to schedule their event two weeks before the British Open, beginning in 1990.

Guidry Ends Career With Yanks

Former Cy Young Award Winner Announces Retirement

By Jack O'Connell
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

NEW YORK — Ron Guidry took his kids Wednesday to see where daddy worked.

He held 12-year-old Jamie and 9-year-old Brandon by the hand while his wife, Bonnie, carried 4-year-old Danielle during a tour of Yankee Stadium, the only major league ballpark Guidry ever called home.

"I brought them by the office window where you can look out over the field," Guidry said. "It's a view you seldom see when you're a player. I envisioned myself shagging flies in the outfield and being on the mound and wondered if I looked like I knew what I was doing out there. Or did I look foolish?"

Guidry's eyes moistened as he spoke, but he never cried. Always the coolest of customers on the mound, he announced his retirement with the same sense of detachment he brought to his job. There were no crocodile tears from the Gator.

Only once did Guidry come close to breaking down, listening to Bonnie talk about what this day meant to her.

"We made a lot of friends," she said, sobbing.

"We're going to miss that. We have a lot of memories, many wonderful memories. He told me he was going to retire at the end of the season. This is not exactly the way he wanted it to be. He just felt he could still pitch. This is going to be the Yankees' loss."

Bonnie Guidry carried the emotion of the day. Her husband delivered his feelings in the straightforward manner so many witnessed when he toed Yankee Stadium rubber. Yes, he still felt he could get batters out, but, yes, he understood why the Yankees could not find room for him this season.

"I thought back to my first training camp," Guidry said. "It was 1976, and I made the club. At least, I thought I did. I was on the bus, and a coach — I don't remember which one — told me (then manager) Billy (Martin) wanted to talk to me. Billy said the Yankees made a trade for Dock Ellis and Ken Brett and that, being the youngest, I'd have to go down."

"Coming back from Columbus the other day, I realized what all that meant. Someone stood in my way, and now I'm standing in someone else's way. So I'm announcing my retirement because I don't want to Ervin Forbes led the way for Collins & Aikman with a game-high 23 points. Jarvis Lang added 16 while Chris Hunter added 10. PCDS was led by Junior Farrow with 17 points and Bershaun Thompson with 16.

Ben Edwards, a rising junior at D.H. Conley, shot a 72 Monday to win the 15-17 age group of the Insurance Youth Classic at Brook Valley Country Club.

Lee Watson, a rising senior at Rose, was second in the same flight, with a 74.

Edwards and Watson will both go on to play in a sectional tournament in Foxfire June 22-23.

Cowboys' White Announces Retirement

IRVING, Texas (AP) — Danny White, who spent 14 years in the NFL and was the Dallas Cowboys' starting quarterback for most of the '80s, is retiring from the team, a Cowboys spokesman said.

White joined Dallas in 1976 and became the team's starter after Roger Staubach retired in 1980. He led the team to the NFC East Division title in 1985 and led the league in touchdown percentage in 1986. With White as a starter, the Cowboys were 67-35.

White was plagued by injuries during the last three seasons, starting six games in 1986, nine in 1987 and none in 1988.

White's retirement comes five days after the team supplemented its quarterback corps by taking the University of Miami's Steve Walsh in the NFL supplemental draft.

The Cowboys drafted UCLA's Troy Aikman with the first pick of the regular draft and signed him to a six-year, $11 million contract.

Charlotte Has Chance At Davis Cup

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — When the Davis Cup semifinals are held later this year, Charlotte officials won't only be cheering for the United States to beat West Germany, but they'll be pulling for Sweden, too.

If the U.S. team beat West Germany and Wimbledon champion Boris Becker, and Sweden defeats Yugoslavia, Charlotte will host the Davis Cup semifinals in December.

George Shinn, majority owner of the NBA Charlotte Hornets, announced the decision by the United States Tennis Association in a news conference Tuesday.

It is one more coup for a city that has been landing a lot of major sports events in the last week. On Friday, Charlotte was awarded the 1994 NCAA Final Four, and the city is also still in the running for the 1991 or '92 NBA All-Star game.

Casey Will Remain L.A.'s Coach

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Don Casey, who became the interim head coach of the Los Angeles Clippers last Jan. 19, will be the head coach of the NBA team during the 1989-90 season, it was announced Tuesday.

Casey, 52, was an assistant coach for the Clippers when he was named interim head coach, replacing the fired Gene Shue. Casey signed a one-year contract plus an option year late Tuesday, the team said.

"It was a unanimous decision," Clippers general manager Elgin Baylor said in a press release issued by the team. "We believe Don Casey is the best coach for our young team at this time. The players responded very well to him down the stretch last year."

The Clippers were 11-33 under Casey, but won 10 of their last 22 games. Casey was in his fifth season as an assistant with the Clippers when he took over the head coaching responsibilities.

"I'm just thrilled to have this opportunity," Casey said. "This team is loaded with talent, now we just have to work hard and put it all together."

USA's Hampsten Reaches 5th

Unknown American Making A Name For Himself

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BLAGNAC, France — While the big noise on this year's Tour de France has either been the comeback of Greg LeMond or the startling fall and rise of defending champion Pedro Delgado, American Andy Hampsten has been quietly peddling his way among the leaders.

Hampsten reached fifth place in the standings on Wednesday as the classic cycling race moved past the halfway point.

Meanwhile, much of the talk has been of LeMond, the American who wore the leader's yellow jersey for five days. LeMond, the 1986 winner, has missed the last two Tours while recovering from injuries and a hunting accident.

Delgado, too, has commanded attention. He came late to the prologue and started the first stage in last place. Since then, he has moved up to fourth.

But Hampsten, regarded as one of the riders to watch before the Tour began, is still in good position with the mountains stages of the Alps to come.

He hopes to be well-placed for those stages which begin this weekend because he is known as a good climber.

"I have been feeling pretty good from the start," Hampsten said, "but I'm here to win."

Hampsten was fourth in 1986, when he helped LeMond win as both were with the same team. He was recruited just for that task.

"In the Pyrenees I did OK. I will try to stay out of trouble in the Alps," Hampsten said. "The only thing to do there is not to panic."

Hampsten won the Tour of Italy last year and was third this year, making up a lot of distance after a poor start when his team fell in the team time trial.

Wendnesday's 11th stage was won by Dutchman Mathieu Hermans, who took advantage of a fall by another Dutch rider, Rudy Dhaenens.

Dhaenens broke away to the lead, but suddenly fell 500 yards from the finish of the leg from Luchon to Blagnac, a distance of 96 miles.

He had escaped from the pack three miles from the finish and was headed to an easy victory. Suddenly, leaning a bit too far, he went down, damaging his bike and he was unable to finish until the pack had passed him.

Hermans won in a sprint ahead of the pack in 3 hours, 47 minutes, 47 seconds.

The Tour de France passed through the wheat-filled fields of the countryside of the Haute-Garonne. The leg ended just outside the capital of the region, Toulouse, known as the "Rose City," where many of the buildings are red brick.

The riders gradually returned to the plains after spending two days in the Pyrenees where LeMond lost the race lead.

LeMond remained seven seconds behind France's two-time winner Laurent Fignon after both finished together in the pack on Wednesday.

Mookie Signs Pact With New Jersey

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — Two weeks after being selected as the 12th player in the NBA draft, Mookie Blaylock has become a millionaire.

Getting the starting point guard job with the New Jersey Nets may take a little longer, coach Willis Reed said.

"I'm going to take it slow with him. If he exceeds that pace, fine," Reed said Wednesday after Blaylock became the first of this year's NBA first-round choices to sign by agreeing to a four-year, $2 million-plus contract.

Listening to Blaylock, one gets the impression he intends to supplant veteran free agent Lester Conner quickly.

"I can play with anybody," Blaylock said in a telephone conference call from the Dallas office of his agent, Bill Blakeley.

Blaylock reportedly will receive $500,000 in his first season, with his salary jumping to $800,000 by the final year. The deal also contains incentives that could bring the value of his contract to nearly $3 million.

"Mookie is the player we wanted all along and we're glad to come to an agreement this quickly," Nets executive vice president Bob Casciola said. "This is as smooth a negotiation as we've ever been involved with."

Blakeley said the Nets' opening offer was very close to what he sought. "We were able to wind through two months work in a couple of weeks," he said. "We were receptive to what the Nets were willing to pay. We were close from the start with the numbers and were able to work it out."

Blakeley said the incentives will be achieved through team orientated output rather individual accomplishments.

However, Casciola said none of the incentives were based on victories.

Canseco Returns To Wrong Side Of Law

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Canseco Ticketed
Jose Canseco and California highway officials exchanged criticism Wednesday, a day after the Oakland Athletics outfielder received a speeding ticket while driving his new Porsche home to watch the All-Star Game on television.

Authorities said Canseco, riding alone in the white convertible that still had paper license plates, was pulled over early Tuesday afternoon and ticketed for driving 51 miles an hour in a 35-mph zone.

CHP spokesman Nick Verhoek, who said Canseco "had a bit of an attitude problem," charged that the slugger angrily asked officer Melody Heilman if she had been waiting to ticket him.

Canseco, however, said Heilman was the one with the attitude problem.

"She told a major league baseball player to get the hell out of there," said Canseco, who insisted that teammate Walt Weiss was following at the same speed but wasn't given a ticket.

When asked if he got a ticket, Canseco, working out Wednesday at the Oakland Coliseum, said, "Me? Not get a ticket?"

Canseco last year became the first major league player to steal 40 bases and hit 40 home runs in a season and was voted the American League's Most Valuable Player.

But Canseco has not played this season because of a broken wrist, and has had numerous run-ins with the law.

The speeding ticket was Canseco's second on Crow Canyon Road, which runs between his home in San Ramon to the Castro Valley-Hayward area. The CHP said the ticket carries a fine of $50 to $100 that must be paid in 30 days.

"We stopped him a couple months ago speeding along through that area," Verhoek said. "But a lot of other people do the same thing. He's not the only one."

In February, Canseco was ticketed in Florida for driving 125 mph in his $75,000 red Jaguar, which had license plates reading "Mr. 40-40." Canseco said later he was doing only 120 mph.

In March, while in Arizona for spring training, he was ticketed again for speeding in the same car. The A's management suggested then that it might be time to trade the car for something less noticeable.

A month later, Canseco was arrested by campus police at the University of California at San Francisco for having a loaded weapon in the Jaguar while parked on the Laurel Heights campus. He was visiting a doctor about his wrist injury.

Canseco, who said he had the gun because of threatening phone calls to his home, has pleaded innocent. A trial is pending.

As part of the rehabilitation of his wrist, Canseco has been playing with the Huntsville Stars, the Athletics' AA farm team in the Southern League.

Canseco was elected by fans to play in the game, but his wrist was still sore.

stand in the way of someone (being) given a chance to do a job he loves."

And so an era ended Wednesday at the stadium, that of a slim, dark-haired, mustachioed Cajun with No. 49 on his back firing tailing fastballs and hard-breaking sliders past hitters amazed so slight a man could be so menacing.

"Louisiana Lightning" was an apt nickname for Guidry, who worked fast, threw hard and fielded his position with tomcat quickness in earning five Gold Gloves.

His record is enviable: 170-91 with a 3.29 ERA over 14 seasons, 2-1 with a 4.03 ERA in five American League Championship Series, 3-1 with a 1.69 ERA in four World Series, the Cy Young Award winner in 1978 (25-3, 1.74 ERA, 248 strikeouts) and runnerup in 1985 (22-6, 3.27 ERA).

After '85, though, shoulder and elbow problems plagued Guidry, who was 17-23 with a 3.91 ERA the past three seasons. This year was to be his last hurrah. He impressed Manager Dallas Green in camp but had to be placed on the disabled list because of elbow surgery. In Columbus, Ohio, his comeback trail was bumpy (1-5, 4.18 ERA). The end of the road was near. It arrived Wednesday.

"I had a lot of time to consider what I am doing,"

Guidry said. "It's funny. When you're starting out in the minors, all you can think about is getting to the majors. About the second day you get there, you start thinking about when it might end."

General Manager Bob Quinn and Senior Vice-President Syd Thrift were at the stadium, but only one of Guidry's former teammates showed up. Dave Righetti drove up from Atlantic City, N.J., where he was vacationing with his wife.

"I wouldn't miss it," Righetti said. "We're losing something special here."

Guidry remembered the last day of the 1978 regular season when the Yankees lost to the Indians, forcing the one-game AL East playoff with the Red Sox. He was seated next to then-manager Bob Lemon in the dugout. Lemon talked to the coaches about the next day's pitcher.

"I just walked by and said, 'Give me the ball,'" Guidry recalled.

He took the ball whenever the Yankees handed it to him, but the offer was not extended this week, other than an invitation to Old-Timers Day Saturday.

"I can't think of myself as an old-timer," said Guidry, who later said he would probably come because, "It'll be my chance to see everybody one more time before I go home, sit on my tractor and start building a new barn. If I can handle this place, I can handle home."

Unique Matchup

Boston at Minnesota (8:05 p.m. EDT). In a matchup of Cy Young winners, Roger Clemens (9-6) pitches against Frank Viola (7-9). Clemens is 15-13 since last season's All-Star break.

Miscellaneous Notes:

The only players to represent four teams in the All-Star Game are Rich Gossage and George Kell. ... During his 14 seasons with the New York Yankees, Ron Guidry went through 15 managerial changes. ... Oakland's Dave Stewart, 13-4, is on a pace to win 20 games for the third straight season. Jim Palmer is the last pitcher to win 20 or more games for three consecutive seasons when he did it four straight times from 1975-1978. ... Julio Franco and Ruben Sierra combined to go 3-for-6 in the

All-Star Game with an RBI. In 17 previous All-Star Games, since the franchise moved to Texas in 1972, Rangers' All-Stars had gone 2-for-18. ... Last season, Los Angeles' Kirk Gibson was the National League MVP with 25 homers and 76 RBIs. San Francisco's Kevin Mitchell enters the second half with 31 homers and 81 RBIs. ... The Los Angeles Dodgers are 6-17 on artificial turf. ... The 1990 All-Star Game will take place at Chicago's Wrigley Field. In 1991, it will be played at Toronto's SkyDome. It will be Wrigley Field's third All-Star Game.

Personnel Moves

Right-hander Tim Stoddard has been released by the Cleveland Indians. The spot on the roster was filled by recalling pitcher Keith Atherton from Class AAA Colorado Springs. The Indians will have to make another roster move July 17, when right-hander Tom Candiotti is scheduled to come off the disabled list. Candiotti went on the 15-day list July 2 because of a weak muscle in his right shoulder. ... Shortstop Kurt Stillwell of Kansas City was placed on the 15-day disabled list Wednesday with a bruised knee.

The Atlanta Braves recalled Jeff Wetherby from Richmond to replace the injured Gerald Perry on the roster Wednesday. The team said that Perry, scheduled for surgery on his left shoulder today, will be transferred from the 21-day disabled list to the 60-day list. Perry's shoulder has been dislocated four times in the last 13 months.

Perry reinjured his shoulder in a game against the Philadelphia Phillies last Sunday.

Wetherby, used primarily as a pinch hitter, had four hits in 10 at bats in an earlier three-week stint with the Braves.

The Charlotte Knights are about to get a former U.S. Olympic player to help them with a Herculean task — climbing out of the cellar of the Southern League's Eastern Division.

Griffin Moves To Charlotte

Ty Griffin, the former Georgia Tech All-American and the No. 1 draft pick of the Chicago Cubs last year, has been added to the Knights' roster. He was to join the Knights for their game in Columbus, Ga., Wednesday night.

"One player won't turn us around; don't expect Griffin to be a savior," Charlotte manager Jim Essian said. "But I'm sure the people of the area will enjoy watching him play."

A second baseman with the Olympians and at Georgia Tech, Griffin was recently converted to third base with Class A Peoria, Ill. He was hitting .287 there with 10 home runs, 64 RBIs and 16 stolen bases in 19 at-bats. He had a .480 slugging percentage and an impressive .395 on-base average. And he led the Chiefs to a first-half Midwest League title.

Griffin is expected to play third for the Knights, who are 8-13 and six games behind Jacksonville.

Essian said Griffin, a switch-hitter who hit .416 for Team USA last summer, was shifted to third because the Cubs' Ryne Sandberg is a fixture at second. He started for the National League in Tuesday's All-Star game.

"He's not considered a bad second baseman, but Rhyno is premier," said Essian of Griffin, who has 17 errors in 82 games. "Now we'll see what Griffin can do against the more crafty pitching he'll face at this level."

Griffin, a 6-foot, 187-pounder, had an outstanding career at Georgia Tech before becoming the ninth overall selection in the draft last summer. With the Yellow Jackets, he stole an ACC-record 127 bases in 140 attempts. He was All-ACC twice and earned All-American honors three times.

Essian said Bob Bafia, the Knights' third baseman and home run leader most of the season, has been promoted to Class AAA Iowa. But Iowa is sending right-handed designated hitter Howard Nichols to Charlotte. Nichols, 25, hit .251 with 13 homers and 47 RBIs last season while splitting time in Class AA and AAA.

Essian also said Iowa is expected to return right-handed pitcher Kevin Coffman, who struggled with Charlotte earlier this season.

Coffman wasn't doing much better at Iowa, where he was 0-2 in 14 appearances with an 8.15 ERA. He gave up 26 walks in 17 innings pitched.

AAA All-Star Game

Mark Lemke brought the lowest batting average to the lineup of the National League side of the Triple-A All-Star game.

But Lemke, who is batting .259 for the Richmond Braves, provided one of the big hits — a two-run single that sparked a five-run fifth inning — in the NL stars' 8-3 victory Wednesday over their American League counterparts in Columbus, Ohio.

"This is probably the biggest night I've had in a game like this," said Lemke, who was named the game's most valuable player. "I was productive when we needed it."

Despite Lemke's average, NL manager Pete Mackanin placed him third in the lineup.

Lemke's single helped the NL stars put the game out of reach. With the NL leading 2-1 in the fifth, Jeff Huson of Indianapolis singled to left off pitcher Adam Peterson of Vancouver. Indianapolis' Junior Noboa followed with a double to right-center, sending Huson to third.

Robinson Has A Beef ...

finger at an umpire like a parent at a small child, but "When I do it, they say, 'Don't point your finger at me.'" He says he has learned over the years to ask questions, not to demand answers, but he still doesn't get a fair hearing.

"Say you're in the dugout," he explains, "and you think the umpire behind the plate made a bad call. What are you going to do? You can't go out there to argue balls and strikes. So you have to what?"

"Yell?"

"Sure, you have to yell to get their attention. It's noisy out there. And when I say something, it's, 'Don't yell at me.' It's one pitch a ballgame, and that's enough to get me in trouble. I see (Milwaukee manager Tom) Trebelhorn argue a call in the fifth inning, and all he gets is a look. I argue a call and I get yelled at. What did I do to deserve that kind of treatment?"

What did Robinson do, if anything? Did he compete too fiercely? Did he offend? Or is he merely imagining it all?

When it's suggested that you can't win against umpires, and that it's always self-defeating to try, Robinson says he isn't attempting to win — and that if anyone thinks so, he has missed the point.

"I know other managers have had problems," said Robinson, who said he doesn't believe race plays any part in this puzzle. "I know other managers have felt the same way I do. I know you also tend to feel that calls are going against you. I understand that."

"When a call does go against me, I just want it explained to my satisfaction. I have a right to an explanation. I have a right to expect fair treatment and respect. I don't think I'm getting that."

It could go a couple of ways. The umpires might, as a group, look into their hearts to see if they have treated Robinson unfairly. Or they might, as a group, hold this outburst against him. Or, it might mean nothing.

The important question is, how will Robinson handle the problem? We know Robinson can manage, but can he cope?

Winfield Finds Jury At Fault

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — Dave Winfield believes a Texas jury made a big mistake by declaring him to be the common-law husband of a Houston woman and he expects the verdict to be overturned.

"This is a charge of common-law marriage on me," Winfield said Wednesday. "It's ridiculous there would be this charge and I would have to go through this judicial process."

"David Winfield, first of all, never asked this woman to be married. David Winfield never lived in Texas and certainly never lived with this woman, and I certainly haven't represented to anybody in Texas or anywhere else that I was married to this woman."

Winfield, the injured New York Yankee outfielder, telephoned The Associated Press to express his outrage, and said the jury's decision of June 28 will be appealed.

"I just wanted to make sure I told some people. I have to tell people nationally," Winfield said. "I have a daughter who is about to be 7 years old that I have taken care of since before birth and up until now."

Tom Alexander, Winfield's lawyer, said by telephone that the case will be appealed to the Texas Court of Appeals in Houston. Alexander said the Houston District Court jury decided that Winfield and Sandra Renfro agreed to become man and wife on April 11, 1982, and after that lived together as man and wife in Texas and represented to others that they were married.

Winfield said the jury was 9-3 in his favor one day and 10-2 against him the next day.

"Some of the jurors stated that their reversal was based upon the instructions," said Alexander, which he claimed "were faulty."

"It's about facts, it's not about sentiment as one juror put it," Winfield said. "They felt sorry for her, so maybe there was a marriage and Winfield didn't know about it.

"I've never lived in Texas. I have always been single. Her (Renfro's) mother and best friends never said that David Winfield said that he is married to this woman, nor did she tell them that we were married."

Winfield, 37, said he has voluntarily given Renfro $1,400 a month in child support since before the birth and allowed Renfro to live in a condominium he owns to raise his daughter, Lauren Shanel Winfield.

Charlotte's LPGA Event May Have Found Sponsor

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHARLOTTE — Charlotte's Oasis Shrine Temple is considering sponsoring a proposed $400,000 LPGA tournament in 1990, and the commissioner of the golf association said he would like to bring the event to the area.

"It is one of the fastest-growing areas in the country," said LPGA Commissioner William Blue.

"We're in a growth mode and women's golf is in a growth mode. We felt (Charlotte) was a logical target for us," he said.

Blue met Wednesday evening with members of the Oasis Temple and organizers of the Carolinas Women's Open. No final decision was reached.

Blue said the mood of the meeting was upbeat.

"Based on what I was hearing (in the meeting) and the level of enthusiasm, and based on previous discussions, this should go on to the next level," he told The Charlotte Observer.

That would be consideration by the Oasis Temple and its 14,000 members. The Oasis Temple would receive the tournament profits, which would go to Shrine charities.

Tom Price, the chairman of the Shrine committee considering the venture, said it would take his group four to six weeks to make its recommendations to the membership.

If the Shriners choose to launch this project, they must enter a three-year agreement with the LPGA, guaranteeing the purse for that period.

Blue said the cost would probably be between $850,000 and $900,000 to host the tournament. It would be held the second week in October 1990 instead of the May dates organizers had hoped for.

"This is all new to us," Price said after the meeting at the Oasis mosque. "We're taking it under consideration. We think it's a good thing."

"We would like to bring it to Charlotte, and we would like the Shrine to sponsor it. But we want to have all the running room we can get."

Blue declined to identify the other two Charlotte corporations which have expressed interest in the tournament but did say they would be willing to participate with Shrine sponsorship.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20): Place an accent on how you look and the impression you make. Plan a getaway with an intimate friend to a new romantic spot.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21): Minor frustrations weave their way into the day's business procedures. Activities are unpredictable and test your talent to adjust.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21): There is a tendency to rush and let transient feelings throw you off course. Slow down, stick to basics and avoid new beginnings.

LEO (July 22 to Aug. 21): It may be necessary to listen to others who are less informed than you. Ignore a prophet of doom who might alter your good mood.

VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22): It is easy to do things today that you may regret later. See the loving side of life—look beyond the artificial walls of negative feelings.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22): People make your world go around. Being in love gives you a sense of security. Be ready for evening social congregating.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21): You are on your own today and may make things happen the way you desire. Stay within reasonable limits.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21): Tend to domestic and family issues that have top priority. A sibling's change of attitude is welcomed. Family unity prevails.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20): You may startle others when you make a last minute decision to have a night out. An early warning will work best if you desire company.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19): You are an ambassador of goodwill today, charged with energy and good feelings. Uninvited circumstances force a change of plans.

PISCES (Feb. 20 to March 20): A friend makes your job easier. A candle-light affair could end up on a passionate note. Let your good feelings be the focal point.

In an exciting final to the San Francisco Bay area Grand National Team event, a team captained by Ed Barlow squeaked by a squad led by Ron Von der Porten to earn a berth in the national final. This hand featured a fine duel between the respective captains.

North's double of one spade was "negative," i.e. for takeout in the unbid suits, not penalties. Once the heart fit was uncovered, North-South staggered into a close game. After North raised to three hearts, South felt all his high cards were working and that convinced him to try for game.

Von der Porten, West, led his singleton queen of clubs, East took the ace and returned a club for partner to ruff. West worked out that, if he shifted to a high spade, declarer could win in dummy, draw trumps in two rounds ending on the table and, with the help of a ruffing finesse in clubs and the lead of a spade toward the jack, come to 10 tricks.

In an effort to divert declarer, Barlow, from the winning line, West shifted to the ten of spades. Had declarer risen with dummy's ace in an attempt to catch a singleton honor with East, he would probably have gone down to defeat—we will never know. After considerable thought, declarer inserted dummy's jack of spades. When that held, declarer had no trouble racking up his game. He cashed the king and ace of hearts, then took the marked ruffing finesse for the jack of clubs. In all, South scored two spades, two hearts, one diamond, one club and four ruffs.

'Murder By Night' Stars Kay Lenz As Psychologist

By Jerry Buck
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — Kay Lenz's problem as a police psychologist in "Murder By Night" on the USA Network is that Robert Ulrich is the only witness to the murder and he can't remember a thing.

An even bigger complication is she's falling in love with him and at the same time is becoming suspicious that he's the killer.

"He has amnesia and she's trying to get him to remember," said Lenz. "He doesn't know who he is but everything points to the fact that he's a wealthy but reclusive restaurant owner. We go through his things trying to jog his memory."

"Murder By Night," which will be seen next Wednesday, is part of a package of 24 original motion pictures for USA World Premiere Movie on the cable channel.

Lenz plays Karen Hicks, a police officer and psychologist, Ulrich is Allan Strong, a man without a past who's found at the scene of a murder, and Michael Ironside is Detective Lt. Carl Madsen, Karen's former husband. Paul Lynch directed on location in Toronto from a screenplay by Alan B. McElroy.

"When Karen starts to fall in love with Allan he begins to have nightmares that he may be the killer," she said. "It becomes a problem that attracts the attention of her former husband, who's still protective of her. He feels she's putting her feelings above her better judgment as a police officer."

"As it goes along we do come to find out that Allan is not who we think he is."

Lenz said that because Toronto was standing in for New York in the movie the production company had to take its own garbage along on location filming.

"Toronto is a very clean city," she said. "We took the garbage with us in bags and would scatter it around. After filming, they'd clean it up and take it to the next location."

Lenz has been in about six movies in the past three years, but said before that she had been in a slump.

"It happened when I was getting divorced from David Cassidy," she said. "I was in a movie with James Woods called 'Fast-Walking.' After that I didn't work for 2½ years. It happens, you know. You wake up one day and say, 'I haven't worked for a year.'"

"Without the support and love of family and friends I might not have made it."

Who broke the slump was a call to do an episode of "Insight," the television series produced by Paulist Productions.

"It's done by the Catholic Church and most people donate their salaries," she said. "I was so broke that when they gave me the check I said, 'I'm so sorry. I can't give it back.' After that I did episodes of 'Hotel' and 'Simon & Simon' and then some movies."

She made her movie debut as a teen-age hippie in "Breezy" in 1973, which starred William Holden and was directed by Clint Eastwood. On television, she starred in the 1976 miniseries "Rich Man, Poor Man" and in the regular series spinoff later that year. She was in 13 episodes of "The Monroes" and in the short-lived "Tammy Grimes Show."

Lenz grew up in Hollywood and made her first TV appearance when she was six weeks old.

"My father was Ted Lenz, who was a very famous local announcer," she said. "He was the king of the hard sell and I did many commercials with him. I remember once I came in to do a commercial for a swimming pool. I was about 5 and my memory is that I refused to do it and never did another one."

Zsa Zsa Says Officer Deserved Slap

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. — Actress Zsa Zsa Gabor admits she slapped a police officer, but says he deserved it.

"The policeman is an empty-headed, gorgeous man," she said. Then, in a stream of denunciations, compared him to Nazi soldiers in her native Hungary.

"But the Nazis were smarter; they had the sense to mistreat women in private," said Miss Gabor.

Miss Gabor said she hit Officer Paul Kramer in self-defense because he threatened to break her arm.

She pleaded innocent Wednesday to several misdemeanor charges. Municipal Judge Charles G. Rubin granted Miss Gabor's request for an Aug. 2 pretrial hearing, and set her jury trial for Sept. 11.

When arriving for Wednesday's arraignment, she was met at the courthouse by a crowd of reporters and several relatives, who held signs that said "Free Zsa Zsa."

Miss Gabor was arrested June 14 after Kramer pulled over her Rolls-Royce for an expired registration. She drove off as Kramer was checking for other infractions, then slapped him when he got her to stop two blocks later.

Judge Says Plaintiff 'Forum Shopping'

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MIAMI — A libel suit against pop rocker Daryl Hall has been dismissed by a judge who ruled the plaintiff was "forum shopping" when he filed the lawsuit in Florida.

U.S. District Judge James Lawrence King noted neither Hall nor the plaintiff, fellow entertainment figure John Madera, had any Florida connections.

Madera claimed he was libeled in an interview given by Hall to Music Connection magazine for its November-December 1986 issue.

Hall described the deterioration of his relationship with Madera in the interview. He was quoted as saying, "He had his day in the sun. But he was pretty much a small-time kind of guy."

Madera said Hall's statements damaged his reputation in the entertainment industry.

The judge noted that Hall, whose hits include "Private Eyes" and "Rich Girl," lives in New York and California.

the magazine was based in California.

Madera tried to sue before in New York and California, but the cases exceeded the statute of limitations in those states, King said.

He sued in Miami in May 1988, about 18 months after the alleged offense. Florida has a two-year statute of limitations.

Congress Urged To Toughen Rules On Kids' TV

By Jay Arnold
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Television is sending one message to the nation's most impressionable viewers, says a senator — "buy, buy, buy."

Witnesses urged Congress at a hearing Wednesday to restore restrictions on children's TV programs and join other nations that use television to enlighten rather than exploit the young.

They said that since 1984, when the Federal Communications Commission weakened time limits on advertising for children's shows, the only messages American kids have been getting from U.S. broadcasters are sales pitches.

The barbs at the broadcast industry came at a hearing by the Senate Commerce, Science and Transportation subcommittee on communications on two bills that would restore the restrictions and give the federal government new authority over children's fare.

"Instead of inspiring children to learn, broadcasters are pushing them to buy, buy, buy," Sen. Howard Metzenbaum, D-Ohio, an author of one of the bills, testified.

Metzenbaum said commercials in children's shows have increased since 1984 and some programs urge young viewers to dial 900 telephone numbers to hear taped messages from cartoon characters. Unsuspecting parents then get hit with huge telephone bills.

Dr. Francis Palumbo, representing the American Academy of Pediatrics, contrasted U.S. television with Australia, Japan and Great Britain, where up to six hours of instructional programming for children is offered each day.

"In the United States, our commercial networks may offer one hour each week," Palumbo said. He did not include figures for public television stations.

Sen. Timothy Wirth, D-Colo., — who is sponsoring a bill that goes further than Metzenbaum's — testified that in the wake of the "deregulation frenzy" of the Reagan years, "broadcasters seem to have abandoned educational children's programs altogether."

He said Congress must pressure broadcasters to "transform children's television from a vast wasteland to a source of intellectual stimulation and enrichment for American children."

Wirth's bill includes provisions to:

- Impose tougher limits on advertising time in children's TV shows. Currently, those limits are 9.5 minutes of commercials per hour on weekends and 12 minutes per hour during weekdays.
- Require TV stations, as part of the FCC license renewal process, to show they are providing programming "specifically designed to serve the educational and informational needs of preschool and school-aged children."
- Require broadcasters to give advance public notice of programs designed specifically to educate and inform children.

The bill by Metzenbaum and Sen. Frank Lautenberg, D-N.J., is identical to a measure that passed Congress last year, only to be pocket-vetoed by President Ronald Reagan. A similar measure is before the House.

The Metzenbaum bill would hold commercials on children's shows to 10.5 minutes per hour weekends and 12 minutes weekdays, and require stations to demonstrate to the FCC they are serving the educational and information needs of children through their "overall programming."

Edward O. Fritts, president of the National Association of Broadcasters, said his group supported the Metzenbaum bill, which he called a "fair and reasonable compromise."

He complained that broadcasters are losing young audiences to cable TV and VCRs, while production costs for children's shows are increasing.

"Further restrictions and more stringent programming requirements run the risk of knocking the children's television marketplace even further out of balance," Fritts told the subcommittee.

DeWitt Helm, president of the Association of National Advertisers, opposed both bills. He called the restrictions unconstitutional and said they don't protect children.

Helm said there was no evidence children are any more susceptible to five minutes of commercials than to 15 minutes of ads.

Judge Bars Jury From Movie

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PHILADELPHIA — A federal judge cited parallels between an international money laundering case and the plot of "Lethal Weapon 2" in forbidding a jury to see the film until after the trial.

None of the jurors in the trial of three men — including the Yugoslavian consul general in Chicago — had seen the film as of Tuesday when U.S. District Judge Jan E. DuBois issued his order.

He told jurors to avoid seeing the film, reading reviews of it, and talking to anyone who has seen it for the trial's duration.

DuBois said the order was a "small imposition" to ensure a fair trial, which began June 19. It is expected to last into August.

The film, which stars Mel Gibson and opened in Philadelphia over the weekend, is about an international money laundering scheme involving a South African diplomat and an eccentric accountant who has laundered money for the mob and has decided to cooperate with prosecutors.

The trial has a similar theme. The key prosecution witness is Hubert F. Cole, a chemical engineer and tax protester who aspired to be a money launderer for the mob.

Cole was arrested Dec. 1 at Philadelphia International Airport and in April pleaded guilty and became the prosecution's key witness.

A spokesman for Warner Bros. said the similar plot lines of movie and trial were coincidental. "Lethal Weapon 2" began filming in November and the script was written months earlier.

Michael C. Goode, the attorney for Bahrudin Bijedic, 48, the Yugoslavian consul general on trial, asked DuBois for the order. He said Bijedic was "deeply depressed" after seeing the film. Goode added that he felt the movie could sway a juror against his client.

The others on trial are Vinko Mir, 54, of New York City, chairman of the board of LBS Bank of New York Inc.; Vjeskoslov Spanjol, 31, of Plano, Texas, a naturalized U.S. citizen; and the bank itself.

They are charged in a conspiracy to launder $3.5 million provided by undercover Customs Service agents during 1987 and 1988 in a sting operation.

Spanjol is also charged with violating the Arms Export Control Act by allegedly smuggling two restricted underwater breathing devices into Europe.

Another man, Larry Card, 50, of Chattanooga, Tenn., has pleaded guilty to the scheme.

USA Network's Potpourri Programming Paying Off

By Jay Sharbutt
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

NEW YORK — The network's schedule ranges from reruns of "Murder, She Wrote" and "Miami Vice" to original series such as "The Hitchhiker" and "The Ray Bradbury Theater."

There are world-premiere TV movies and such non-classic oldies as "Cave Girl" and "Horror of the Werewolf." Children can find such cartoons as "She-Ra, Princess of Power" and "Magilla Gorilla," while sports fans can find early-round action of such events as the U.S. Open tennis tournament and golf's Masters Tournament.

While other cable networks have carved out niches for themselves by specializing in one area — ESPN in sports, CNN in news, MTV in music — USA has done just the opposite, providing a mix of programming that is almost as diverse as that on a typical independent TV station.

Almost, because USA does not do news.

The reason goes to the heart of USA's programming philosophy.

"To do a really good job at news is expensive, and remember, we're counter-programmers," explains Kay Koplovitz, president of the USA Network. "We think that during the news block (of our rivals), we can do better with other program formats."

Neither Koplovitz nor her cable network are anywhere as well-known outside the television industry as, say, CBS and its Broadcast Group chief, Howard Stringer, or NBC and its top programmer, Brandon Tartikoff.

But her network, which has 215 employees and is jointly owned by Paramount and MCA, is one of cable's biggies, having steadily, if quietly, grown since its birth in 1977 as the Madison Square Garden Network. Koplovitz, who has worked in the cable industry since 1968, came aboard in 1980 when the venture was renamed USA Network.

Sports-oriented ESPN remains the leader of the cable pack, reaching 57 percent of the nation's 90.4 million TV homes. It is followed closely by Ted Turner's all-news CNN and his Atlanta superstation, WTBS.

Koplovitz' a-little-bit-of-everything empire ranks fourth overall in the latest A.C. Nielsen report, just four percentage points behind ESPN in the number of homes served.

A Milwaukee native, Koplovitz, 44, briefly worked as a producer at WTMJ-TV after graduating from the University of Wisconsin. But she wanted to go into this then-new thing called cable — and on the management side, not production.

"I didn't think I would get a good opportunity in broadcasting," she said recently.

The old-boy, no-women network?

"Yes. I think it was quite apparent," she said. "This was 18 years ago ... and I thought I would have a better opportunity in an environment where things were changing."

When she got a master's degree at Michigan State, she recalled with a slight smile, her thesis concerned satellite technology and "the political ramifications of cross-cultural communications."

When she wrote her thesis, she added, "I believed that the technology would prompt a change in (program) distribution. ... For me, fortunately, it worked out perfectly."

Koplovitz began last season by announcing a $250 million package of original series and 24 made-for-TV movies that would join its schedule. The TV movies have been aired on a monthly basis, but will be shown twice a month this fall, starting in October.

There will be more announcements in Los Angeles Thursday, where she is scheduled to speak to visiting TV writers.

Japanese Drivers Say $85 Bridge Toll Too Steep To Use

By Janice Fuhrman
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

OKAYAMA, Japan — Japan built a high-technology wonder of a bridge to bring a small island into the modern era, but local residents and industries say they can't afford its $85 round-trip toll.

The six-mile Seto Inland Sea Bridge, which opened a year ago to connect Japan's Honshu Island with Shikoku Island, was the final ground link in a long-held dream to connect Japan's four main islands.

But the $85 toll, set to offset the $7.79 billion cost of the bridge, doesn't entice many motorists or truckers.

Excitement and local pride built to a fever pitch at the opening of the bridge in April 1988, because it meant Shikoku's 4.2 million people would have a link to Honshu, Japan's largest island.

During 10 years of construction, they viewed the double-tiered network of six bridges and connecting viaducts as a rite of passage into Japan's modern era.

Residents on both sides of the Seto Inland Sea believe, however, the bridge has given the region a psychological boost.

"Before the bridge, the Seto Inland Sea divided the cultures of the islands, and isolated Shikoku," said Teruo Hamaie, a newscaster on the TV network RSK in Okayama, a city of 600,000 people on Honshu. "But now the two peoples feel integrated."

While the bridge has increased tourism — it has become a curiosity — it has brought little concrete benefit to Shikoku's industrial quarter.

Local fisheries and produce growers looked forward to the bridge because it would mean they no longer would have to rely on ferry boats, often subject to the area's unpredictable weather, for deliveries.

But they say their delivery trucks continue to use the ferries.

Although ferry tolls are also high — about $95 one way for the 90-mile trip from Shikoku to the port of Kobe — regular users get up to 40 percent discounts, and save on the bridge toll, gasoline, and tolls for new highways on the Honshu side of the bridge.

The companies say they save money by transporting their goods by sea as far as possible, and their drivers get a chance to rest.

Katsushige Matsuda, manager of the Kagawa Fishery Cooperatives, said that on bad days, his trucks will wait for hours for fog to lift rather than use the bridge. When Shikoku's new Takamatsu airport is completed this year, the cooperative will invest in air delivery service rather than use the bridge.

"We can't say that the bridge has had any merit for the fishing industry," Matsuda said.

The high bridge toll also has kept regular motorists off the bridge as well.

Less than half the expected daily traffic was recorded in the first year of the bridge's operation. An average of 10,800 vehicles crossed every day, and projected revenues fell short by $137 million.

But railway traffic during the period was higher than expected. For about $2.70 a ticket, about 30,000 passengers rode the Japan Railways trains that speed across the bridge's lower deck 144 times a day in both directions.

The area's tourist industry has benefited from the bridge, however. More than twice as many tourists as in 1987 flocked to Shikoku's Kagawa Prefecture last year, most of them drawn by the bridge itself. In the process, they booked 5,000 more hotel rooms than the year before and consumed thousands of tons of udon noodles, a local specialty.

In the town of Sakaide on Shikoku, a 520-foot tower for viewing the Seto Inland Sea and the bridge was built for the new flow of tourists.

Across the island-studded sea in Okayama Prefecture, a major tourism makeover is taking shape.

The city of Uno, a down-at-the-heel port since the decline of Japan's shipbuilding industry, is the site of a $137 million "Spanish Village," a vast amusement and marine park to open in 1992.

"Century Park Tivoli," a $343.5 million amusement center based on one in Copenhagen, Denmark, is expected to open in 1994.

"These projects wouldn't have come to this region without the interest generated by the bridge," said Douglas Smith, an American who is the coordinator of international relations in Okayama's commerce and industry department.

"There is a sense that 1988 wasn't the big year in Okayama, that there is more to come."

Call Me Madam ...

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LONDON — Upsetting a time-honored tradition of the House of Commons, Deputy Speaker Betty Boothroyd told a legislator to stop calling her Mr. and start calling her Madam.

In accordance with usual practice, legislator Ann Winterton of the governing Conservative Party on Wednesday referred to Miss Boothroyd as "Mr. Deputy Speaker" during a late-night debate in the absence of Speaker Bernard Weatherill.

But Miss Boothroyd told her: "I long to be a female. Vive la difference. I am Madam Deputy Speaker."

Mrs. Winterton replied: "I am a traditionalist and I hope you will not mind, Mr. Deputy Speaker, if I refer to you as Mr."

But Miss Boothroyd did. "While I am in the chair, I am to be addressed as Madam Deputy Speaker," she ruled.

The Commons clings to a variety of strange customs and rituals inherited from the past. The "Mr. Deputy Speaker" tag dates back to the all-male days before 1919, when Lady Astor became the first woman legislator.

Fog Spoils Soviet Navy Exhibition

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ABOARD THE SOVIET CRUISER TALLINN — The Soviet navy sought a high seas show of glasnost, but dense fog obscured much of the Pacific Fleet's two-day maneuvers and hampered its planned display of firepower.

It invited reporters from the United States, Japan, Britain and Australia, who went aboard the anti-submarine vessel Tallinn to watch the exercises in the Sea of Japan. Also on board were officials from India, Malaysia, Vietnam and Indonesia.

The United States rejected an invitation but dispatched the frigate USS Holt and at least one helicopter to keep an eye on the maneuvers, Soviet officials said.

The fog, which rolled in Monday evening and remained for the next two days, made much of the observation of the ships, planes and helicopters impossible. The navy was forced to alter its plans for mock battles and conduct a short-range demonstration of anti-ship missiles, depth charges, anti-aircraft guns and rocket-launched torpedos.

The Soviets also arranged a tour of a destroyer at fleet headquarters in Vladivostok and a launch ride to view the task force at anchor. They allowed reporters to wander about the ships to which they were assigned.

Inquiries about specific weapons and plans were ignored, however, and a request to visit the Tallinn's Combat Information Center, the nerve center of a modern naval vessel, was politely rejected with the explanation that the captain was too busy.

Observers did see two ships ready for inspection. Gray paint, some of it fresh, covered most surfaces on the Tallinn and the destroyer Stoiki. Brass name plates were polished. The portraits of President Mikhail S. Gorbachev and Soviet founder Vladimir I. Lenin were in place along the gangways. In the sailors' quarters, personal belongings were put away and all bunks were made.
