Summit Leaders Stand Together On Democracy

By Martin Crutsinger
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PARIS — Leaders of the world's seven richest industrial nations, striving to project a united front, voiced support Saturday for democracy behind the Iron Curtain and condemned repression in China during a gathering that even attracted the attention of Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev.

(Related stories on A10)

In a surprising development, the leader of the Soviet Union called on the summit chiefs to link his country's economy to their own.

The extraordinary appeal became the principal subject of discussion at the summit leaders' dinner meeting, according to French spokesman Hubert Vedrine. He called Gorbachev's letter totally unexpected.

Aside from the Soviet leader's appeal, the economic summit was so harmonious the world leaders decided to end their three-day meeting several hours earlier than scheduled Sunday, the first time any of the 15 annual gatherings was cut short.

The letter from Gorbachev was read to the leaders by French President Francois Mitterrand. Gorbachev said it "is obvious that the rest of the world can only gain by the opening to the world economy of a market such as that of the Soviet Union."

He petitioned the West to consider the reforms he is making in the communist Soviet economy and to let his country play a larger role in world economic affairs.

Any disputes that did occur among the leaders of the United States, France, West Germany, Japan, Britain, Italy and Canada were either papered over or ignored as the summit nations issued a political communique Saturday.

The second day of discussions was held on the 35th floor of the Grand Arch, an avant-garde marble and glass office building offering a spectacular view of Paris.

Secretary of State James Baker, in a briefing for reporters, called his ninth consecutive summit "the most harmonious and one of the most productive summits that I have attended."

The rich nations were lavish in their encouragement for political and economic reforms in Poland and Hungary, but they did not back up the kind words with any specific commitment of money.

But Bush indicated that he was pleased with the support provided by his fellow summit leaders, saying the commitments they made had "vindicated" his approach to fostering economic and political reforms in the communist East bloc.

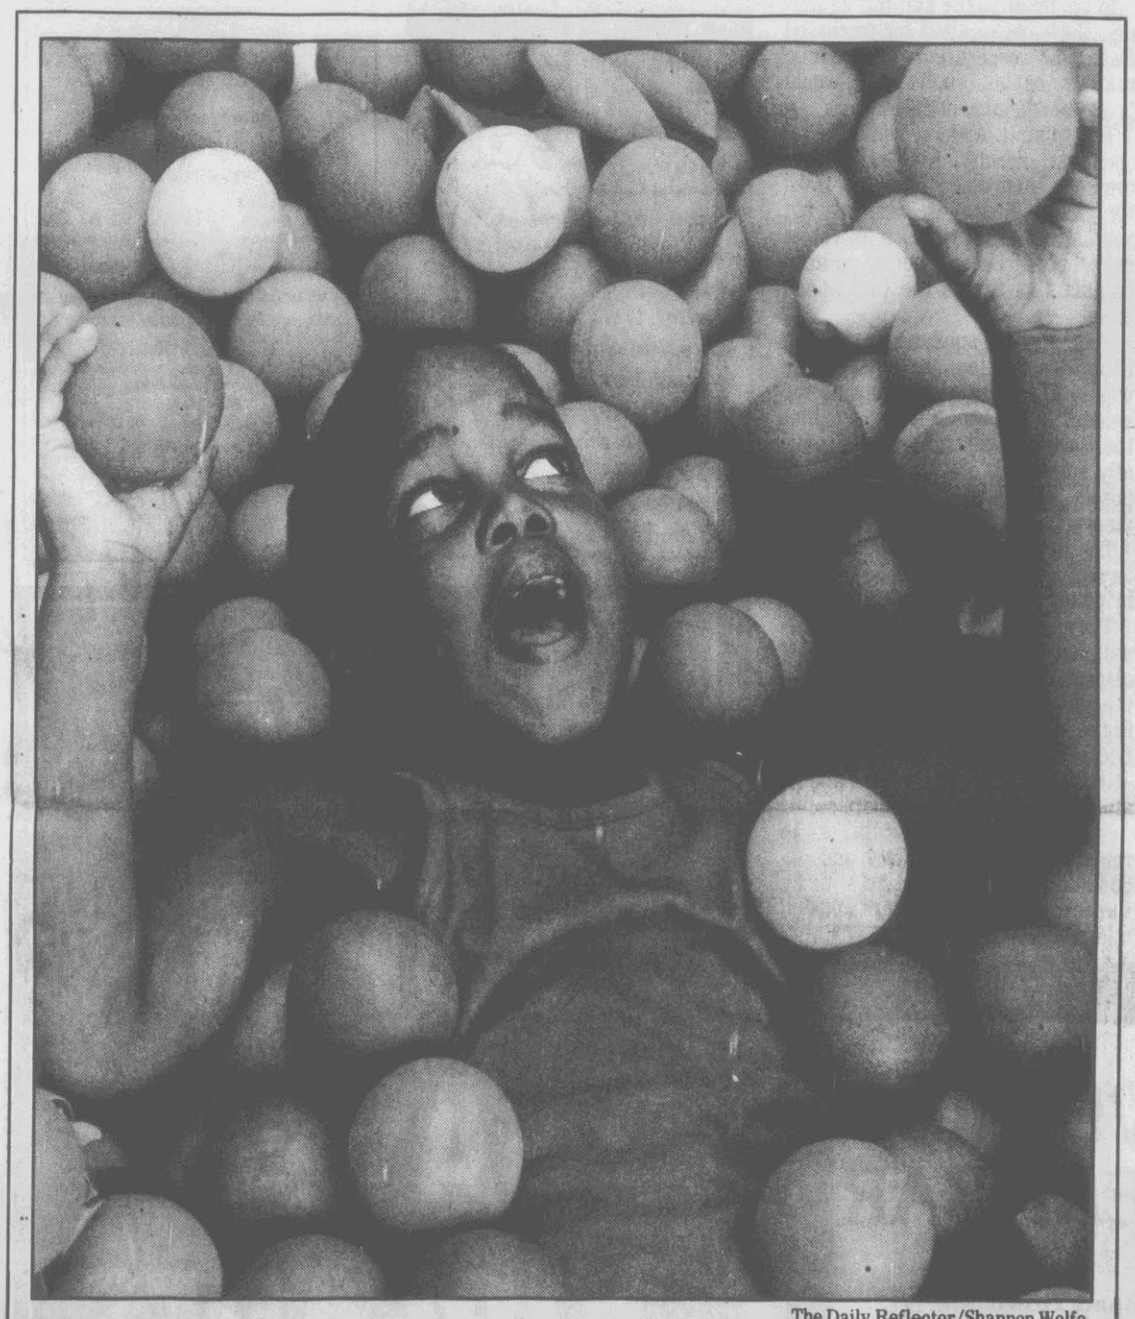

Bush was attending the summit at the end of a history-making trip to Poland and Hungary, where he unveiled a $140 million package of aid to the two nations.

British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher said that all of the summit nations were "very anxious to help. We are all helping, each in our own way."

The annual economic gathering was interspersed between the pomp and pageantry of the 200th anniversary of the French Revolution. Mitterrand, who considers himself a champion of Third World causes, invited more than two dozen leaders of developing countries to rub shoulders with the Summit Seven during the festivities.

But the French president gave up an effort to get his summit partners

Pilot Says He Doesn't Recall Gunshot, Flight

By Dan Sewell
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

HOLLYWOOD, Fla. — A pilot told investigators Saturday he didn't know how he was shot and has no recollection of his 800-mile, apparently unconscious flight down the East Coast in his small plane, officials said.

Federal investigators talked to Thomas Root in his hospital room for the first time since the lawyer was rescued Thursday in Bahamian waters where his single-engine plane crashed. Afterward, authorities learned Root had been shot.

Root told a federal air safety investigator in a 40-minute interview that he did not recall the shooting. He was interviewed separately by an FBI agent.

"We have no reason to disbelieve him at this point. We have some questions. There are some inconsistencies," said Andrew Alston of the National Transportation Safety Board. "He doesn't remember a gunshot wound and we see one. That is a large inconsistency that we hope to resolve."

Root, a gun collector, told Alston that he kept a loaded .32-caliber Smith & Wesson revolver in the glove compartment of his plane. Root said he doesn't remember anything after a radio conversation in which he reported having difficulty breathing, the NTSB investigator said. Root's plane ran out of gas and crashed about four hours later.

"His statement to me was indicative of an oxygen deprivation situation," Alston said. "The next thing he remembered was waking up and seeing water coming

Jones Praises Mobil Pact; Environmentalists Critical

By J. Ward Best
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

An agreement which would allow Mobil Oil Corp. to proceed with offshore drilling near Cape Hatteras drew the praise of U.S. Rep. Walter B. Jones, D-N.C., but reaction from environmental groups was either cautious or negative.

The 1st District representative from Farmville called the agreement, which was announced Friday by Gov. Jim Martin, "a significant achievement for North Carolina.

"I am pleased with the agreement and believe, as does the governor, that it responds to the many questions and concerns raised by the state and our citizens about the Mobil drilling," Jones said in a prepared statement.

Jones, chairman of the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee, had earlier proposed requiring an environmental impact statement on the Outer Banks before allowing any exploratory drilling. With the agreement between the state and Mobil Oil, Jones has dropped the impact statement from a bill on California marine sanctuaries.

Under the agreement the federal Minerals Management Service, the agency that regulates offshore drilling, would have to conduct an environmental review of the area. The study area would include more land than required by the environmental impact statement — 189 square miles compared to only nine square miles.

The state agreement also includes provisions for at least six public hearings on the drilling beginning in August. Greenville has been chosen as one possible sight for the initial hearings.

The agreement, signed Wednesday by Martin, Attorney General Lacy Thornburg and Mobil Oil, allows the company to begin exploratory drilling as early as May 1, 1990.

Personnel Matters On Board's Agenda

By John Bare
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

The Pitt Board of Education is scheduled to conduct a special meeting at 4 p.m. Wednesday to consider personnel matters, which could include action on 13 proposed transfers and promotions or discussion on whether to retain Superintendent Eddie West for the final year of his contract.

The board met July 10 but failed to take action on 13 personnel changes West has recommended. The moves include the naming of four principals, six assistant principals and three administrative changes.

Also at the meeting, the board spent at least part of its three-hour executive session discussing the status of West's four-year contract. He is in the final year of the pact which pays him $95,000 a year, and the board could opt to buy out the last year. The group took no action on the contract, but board members said they expected to debate the topic again at later meetings.

The board is expected to meet in executive session when it convenes Wednesday's meeting on the third floor of the county office complex on West Fifth Street. A news release announcing the meeting does not specifically state which personnel

Revolution Bicentennial Peaks With A Storm Of Sound, Color

By Mort Rosenblum
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PARIS — France brought its glory days to a crescendo Saturday by saluting its revolution's bicentennial with a storm of sound and color over the city many French regard as the capital of the world.

A 45-minute spray of 170,000 rockets over the Eiffel Tower at nightfall followed early morning fireworks.

On Friday night, a parade, created by advertising maverick Jean-Paul Goude, presented a whimsical blend of history, folklore and the outer limits of French fancy. Goude described it as two hours of controlled madness.

A million people mobbed the mile-long Champs-Elysees to see the Florida A & M University marching band dance the California worm, a Russian ballarina waltz on ice skates with a polar bear, and lancers fling flowing French tricolors like batons.

Bronx drummers flanked a full-size locomotive, banging its sound on 55-gallon steel barrels. Chinese students wheeled bicycles, solemnly jingling their bells, under a banner reading, "We Will Continue," a reference to the crushed pro-democracy movement in their homeland.

On one gigantic float, a conductor-witch doctor in a tux gyrated atop a rolling mountain of pounding African drummers. At the summit, six undulating Senegalese women, dressed in blue, white and red gowns, depicted a waving French flag.

Halfway through, diva Jessye Norman electrified the heart of Paris with La Marseillaise, France's

GUC Officials Say Drinking Water OK

By J. Ward Best
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

With cities, towns and industries upstream dumping wastewater into the Tar River and with fish dying downstream, just how safe is the drinking water in Greenville?

With a relatively new facility and a highly trained staff, officials at Greenville Utilities Commission say the water is not only s but good. And they have awards to prove it.

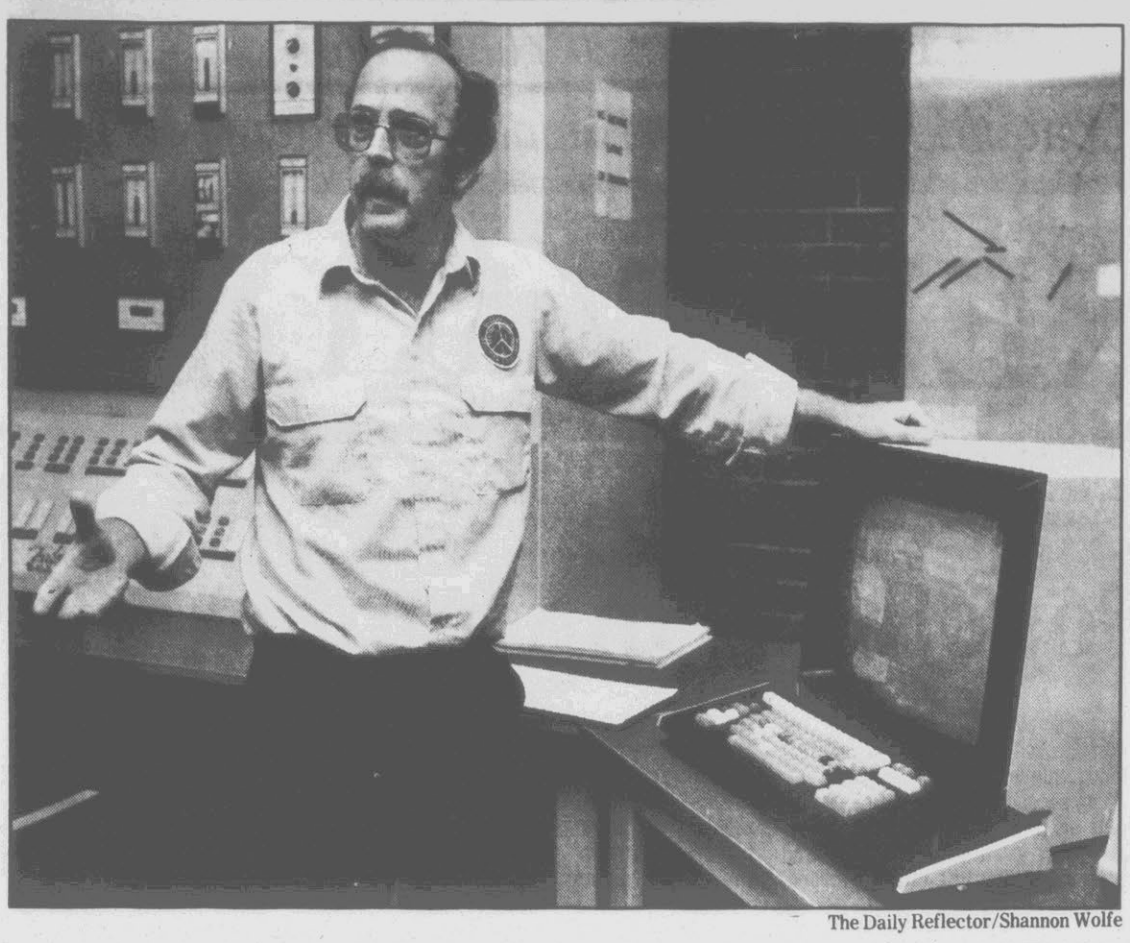

Two underground pipes pump nearly 80 percent of Greenville's drinking water directly from the Tar River. And before entering houses in and around the city, the raw water passes through a series of screens, filters and chem al treatments.

Raw water fr n the river first settles in a holdi tank before going through filtering and treatment. The water passes through a three-stage filter which includes sand, gravel and coal. Chemical treatment of the water includes adding liquid sodium hydroxide, chlorine carbon and alum.

"I'm proud of oth of our plants," Wadie Lewis, C water resources director, said of JC's water treatment and waste ater treatment facilities. "I'm probably more proud of our water plant.

"I'd put both c staffs up against any in the state," ewis said.

Officials Assure Water Is Safe

At the annual conference of the American Water Works Association and Water Pollution Control Federation each participating member in the state faces off in a water tasting test. In 1985 GUC brought home third place in the contest. The following year Greenville beat all other treatment plants in the state.

"We consider that an even more cherished prize because we're so far downstream and it's (the river) already had so many discharges," Lewis said.

The discharges from upstream worry environmentalists — not only for the health and safety of the river, but also for the health of the residents drinking from the river.

Wastewater treatment plants, including Greenville's, as a matter of practice regularly discharge treated waste into the Tar.

The treatment facility in Rocky Mount, which operates a bypass to its plant, has discharged more than 933 million gallons of partially treated sewage into the river this spring alone.

The state and federal government require testing for pollutants in the river, and treatment of the water before pumping it out to customers.

Inside GUC's facility, a bank of monitors takes up nearly half of one room. The control monitors and readouts continuously check chemical levels of the water coming into the plant, leaving the facility and at varying stages of treatment.

Behind the monitors, sit six tubes with water of varying colors flowing through them. Chemists at the plant can sample water from each stage of treatment without leaving the lab.

GUC also tests 60 water samples from around the city throughout the month. The state requires 50 samples and doesn't specify when they have to be taken.

Quality control at the treatment plant follows federal and state guidelines in testing for heavy metals — annually; surface and groundwater — every three years, and total coliform, a bacterial pollutant indicator — daily.

More important to GUC chemist Jesse Chadwick, the water leaving the plant also enters the employees homes.

"We're not going to put something out that we're not going to drink ourselves," Chadwick said.

Gas Explosion Kills Man

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — A four-story apartment building apparently rocked by a gas explosion collapsed Saturday, killing one person and injuring six others.

Rescue workers pulled the body of a man from the rubble in northern Manhattan, said Fire Department spokesman John Mulligan. The victim had been thrown through a wall and covered with bricks, he said.

The man, who was not immediately identified, was pronounced dead at the scene.

The victim's brother was taken to the hospital with injuries from falling debris and burns, Mulligan said. Another man suffered serious injuries and four people outside the building suffered cuts from flying debris, officials said.

Audrey Singleton, who lives nearby, said the explosion at about 3:30 p.m. sounded like "a bomb."

"Everything blew out of the building," she said. "Half of the stuff blew across the street. ... My whole house shook. It blew out my windows — all of my kitchen windows and two bedroom windows.

Leaders Support Democracy

to endorse a call for a North-South summit between rich and poor countries to address the economic plight of poor countries.

The summit will conclude Sunday with a round of meetings and the issuance of a final communique, expected to focus on such issues as Third World debt and a pledge to clean up global pollution.

At the urging of West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl, the document on political issues was amended Saturday at the last minute to include a proposal to convene an emergency meeting within the next few weeks to deal with the "urgent need for food assistance" for Poland.

Officials said the session could be used as the launching pad for a massive foodlift to shortage-plagued Poland.

European nations are currently stockpiling surplus meat, sugar, grain and some dairy products that could be used to ease the economic difficulties of the Poles.

British Foreign Secretary Sir Geoffrey Howe, briefing reporters, said that it was envisioned that the conference would organize both food and cash contributions for Poland but it was unclear just how much food aid would be forthcoming.

The leaders also reaffirmed their support for easing Poland's $39 billion foreign debt burden but skipped specifics on how much relaxation in the repayment schedule they were willing to finance.

On China, the seven democracies called on Beijing to "cease action against those who have done no more than claim their legitimate rights to democracy and liberty" but the leaders stopped short of announcing any stiffer sanctions in response to the bloody crackdown on dissent.

In his letter to the summit gathering, Gorbachev called for increased East-West cooperation on economic matters saying such links would prove beneficial to both sides.

The summit leaders, while not responding directly to Gorbachev's message, expressed their approval for easing East-West tensions but said Moscow "remains a threat to each of us" because of a military balance that favors the Communist bloc.

Presidential spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said that the Soviet letter was read by Mitterrand during the leaders' afternoon session and that the Bush administration was generally supportive of Gorbachev's proposals for greater economic coordination.

The leaders also condemned international terrorism and vowed to bring terrorists to justice.

They called for stepped up international efforts to protect against aircraft hijackings and sabotage in the wake of the bombing of Pan Am flight 103 that killed 270 people in Lockerbie, Scotland, last December.

In a clear reference to Iran and its allies in Lebanon, the leaders called "on those holding hostages to release them immediately and unconditionally and on those with influence over hostage-takers to use it to this end."

Quayle Slips Up

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Vice President Dan Quayle mistakenly credited a moon landing to a congressman convicted of a sex charge, amusing a crowd of Young Republicans at the group's national convention Saturday.

"This next Thursday, July 20th, will be an historic date for America as America celebrates the 20th anniversary of Neil Armstrong and Buz Lukens walking on the moon," Quayle said.

He meant to say Edwin "Buzz" Aldrin, who followed Armstrong to become the second person to walk on the moon on the Apollo 11 mission.

Donald "Buz" Lukens, a Republican congressman from Ohio, was convicted in May of having sex with a 16-year-old girl.

Lukens, 58, was sentenced last month in Columbus to 30 days in jail and fined $500 on the misdemeanor charge of contributing to the unruliness of a minor. He is free on bond pending appeal.

Quayle, who spoke from index cards during remarks at the Nashville Convention Center, appeared to realize his mistake after the crowd began laughing at the reference to Lukens. The vice president did not correct himself but did exchange glances with his wife, Marilyn, who was also on the stage.

GOP Chairman Lee Atwater said he decided not to mention the gaffe when he spoke to Quayle later, but the vice president brought it up.

"He said, 'Buz Lukens, oooh,'" Atwater said, grimacing in imitation of Quayle.

The convention of about 1,200 Young Republicans began Friday and ends Sunday.

Trustees Give Joyner New Term As Chairman

By Stuart Savage
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Two Greenville men were elected as officers of the East Carolina University Board of Trustees at a meeting Friday afternoon.

Max Ray Joyner was elected to a second one-year term as chairman of the board, while William E. Dansey was selected as board secretary. Sam Wornam of Sanford was re-elected for a second term as vice chairman.

As part of the board's reorganization, three new members and three reappointed members — including Dansey and Joyner — took the oath of office for new four-year terms.

New trustees William C. Baggett of Greenville, William P. Furr of Denver, N.C., and Valeria O. Lovelace of Teaneck, N.J., new appointees of the University of North Carolina Board of Governors, were sworn in, as were Sandra P. Babb of Raleigh, who was reappointed by the Board of Governors.

The meeting also saw trustees name the ECU Medical School's cancer center in honor of the late Chancellor-emeritus Leo W. Jenkins and — correcting a long-standing oversight — name Memorial Gym for John B. Christenbury.

Jenkins, who died earlier this year, headed the university as president and chancellor for 17 years before his retirement in 1978. During that period the former U.S. Marine Corps officer led the fight for the creation of the medical school at East Carolina.

Trustees officially named Memorial Gym on East 10th Street as the John B. Christenbury Memorial Gymnasium. Christenbury, a former coach at the university, was killed in a 1944 explosion in California while serving in the U.S. Army.

The gymnasium has been known a Christenbury Memorial Gym since it was dedicated in 1953 to honor all ECU graduates who lost their lives in World War 11. But no official action on the naming of the sports facility was ever recorded in the minutes of the board.

In other action, the board voted to establish diabetes center at the medical school and approved funds for a number of facilities improvements, including the leasing of 5,100 square feet of office space for the school of medicine.

In a report to the board, Dansey said the board's health sciences committee recommended the action in light of the fact that eastern North Carolina has a high death rate from diabetes.

According to Dansey, the national death rate from the disease is 15.10 per 100,000 population, while the death rate for North Carolina is 14.27. In the counties served by ECU, the diabetes death rate is 18.34 per 100,000 residents.

According to Dansey, the center will be a multi-disciplinary effort dedicated to research into the cause and cure of diabetes; the education and training of health care professionals and diabetics, and the development of model care for diabetic patients.

Capital improvements costing an estimated $314,500 to Aycock, Belk, Scott and Tyler dorms were approved, as was the cleaning and sealing of the exterior of the old portion of Mendenhall Student Center, which is expected to cost about $98,300.

And trustees voted to rent 5,100 square feet in the BB&T building at 200 Venture Tower Drive for medical school offices for three years at $48,000 a year, as well as purchase a new sound system for Wright Auditorium at a cost of $75,000.

In other action, the board — with three members voting their opposition — approved a new logo for use on letterheads and all other university documents.

Chancellor Richard Eakin explained that a committee worked for almost a year before deciding on the arches motif, with the words East Carolina University on separate lines below it, suggesting education, as well as "access to education ... entry through the portal." Eakin said the task force, in testing of the new logo, "had very good response to it."

"I just don't see it," said board member Craig Souza of Raleigh, Trustee Howard Rooks of Alexandria, Va., agreed with Souza.

In his regular report to the board, Eakin said 125 high school students participating in a program on campus earlier this summer sponsored a beautification project and picked up 65 pounds of paper and other forms of trash on the campus.

The chancellor also told trustees that while there should be an increase in enrollment at ECU in the coming school year, the number of freshmen entering school in the fall will be smaller than in the past because of more stringent admission standards.

The next meeting of the board is tentatively scheduled for Sept. 29.

Department Head Retires From Post

ECU NEWS BUREAU

An East Carolina University professor who helped establish the department of physical therapy in the School of Allied Health Sciences has resigned as chairman of the department and a search for his replacement has begun.

George F. Hamilton, who became the department's first chairman 20 years ago, said he will continue to teach, conduct research and practice his specialty in a physical therapy clinic that was opened last year. His resignation was effective July 1.

Mary Susan Templeton, a member of the physical therapy faculty, will serve as acting chairwoman of the department while a national search is conducted to fill the position.

Under Hamilton's leadership, the department grew from its original eight students in 1969 to 32 student entrants per year in 1989. Eight faculty are employed in the department. A total of 303 physical therapy practitioners have received degrees in the program.

The department was recently granted provisional approval to plan a graduate program that will award master's degrees in physical therapy. Hamilton said the graduate program is in keeping with the current national trend to teach physical therapy at the post-baccalaureate degree level.

Last year Hamilton also established a full-time clinical services unit, the Back and Limb Clinic, offering therapy for persons with pain or disability in the spine, joints and muscles. The clinic is located in Carol Belk Allied Health Sciences Building.

Hamilton is involved in both the state and national association for physical therapists. He has served in administrative positions for both organizations.

In clinical practice he has specialized in hand rehabilitation and orthopedic physical therapy. He has taught numerous courses and workshops in these areas and has spoken to conferences in the U.S. and in foreign countries.

Debris Too Much

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PINEY CREEK, N.C. — The state's practice of dumping logs, old tires, tin cans and other rubbish back into the river instead of hauling it all away amazes — and concerns — some Ashe County residents.

But officials with the N.C. Department of Transportation said this week that it would cost too much and take too much time to dispose of the debris any other way.

"Right now there is no good alternative to get rid of such a large volume of debris. ...," said Dan D. Holderman, the department's supervisor of bridge maintenance for Division 11, which includes Ashe County.

"It's the lesser of two evils, it seems, to let it go on down and get rid of it that way because nobody wants it," he told the Winston-Salem Journal.

Ashe County suffers from the problem more than most counties in North Carolina because of its 15 low-water bridges on the south and north forks of the New River.

School Board Sets Special Meeting To Consider Personnel Items

matters are to be discussed.

Under state law, the group may privately discuss personnel matters and job performance of employees. But the board must reconvene the open meeting if it is to take any action.

As for the personnel recommendations, West first presented the proposals to the board at its June 19 meeting. But the board has not acted on the issues.

The employees began their new jobs upon West's recommendation, but the board must ultimately approve or deny the requests. Board Chairman George Williams would not comment last week on whether the personnel decisions were linked politically to the board's stance on West's contract.

Without the special meeting, the board's next opportunity to consider the personnel moves would come at its regular monthly meeting set for Aug. 7, just nine days before teachers are to report for work.

Despite the delay, Stephen D. Blades, a member of the board of directors of Citizens for Excellence and Equity in Education in Pitt County, said the recommendations came in such haste that the board acted responsibly in delaying action for additional consideration.

Blades questioned West's handling of the recommendations, saying there was not enough planning and communication. Neither the employees nor the board members were properly involved in the process, he said.

"Traditionally, there's been more communication between the superintendent and the board," he said. "It's not fair to anybody. Decisions just shouldn't be made that way.

"I feel very strongly in support of the board. At least some of the actions were taken not in an appropriate manner. The board should take its time in reviewing the decisions," he said.

As for West's contract, the board may vote at any time in this fiscal year to buy out the last year of the pact and dismiss the superintendent. West has held the post since 1982.

The current contract expires June 30, 1990, and the board must inform West by April whether it intends to renew the deal or let him go. At least six of the 13 board members have refused to say whether they support West.

CEEEPCO has not taken a position on West's job status. However, Blades said the group supports the board, and there is too much second-guessing going on concerning West's job situation.

"I think the position CEEEPCO would like to say is it supports the board and its activities. I think they've made some wise decisions, and they're obviously grappling some very difficult issues, including the role of the superintendent," he said.

The personnel recommendation that education observers have cited as the most harmfully abrupt is the transfer of 12-year Agnes Fullilove principal Johann Bleicher to the post of substance abuse coordinator. The alternative school serves at-risk youngsters, and Bleicher developed model programs that have received national recognition.

Blades pointed to Bleicher's situation as an example of why there should have been more planning and communication in connection with the personnel proposals. Adequate preparation could have allowed the board to either approve or deny the changes before Bleicher and others actually assumed their new jobs, preventing people from working weeks unaware whether the move will be permanent.

"Obviously there is some controversy in some of the decisions ... ," he said. "I also like the fact that the board certainly encourages public comment. I think they are doing this by having another meeting (Wednesday) to deal with this issue.

"I think there's come credence to the fact that he (Bleicher) may have been mistreated about this whole process," Blades said. "The administration hadn't made any effort to contact any other groups involved with Agnes Fullilove."

Blades, who works with family medicine at the East Carolina University School of Medicine, said the change at Agnes Fullilove is the most drastic because so many agencies outside the school system are linked to the school's programs. He said several parents have alerted him of their worry.

Under a recent grant, Blades said he was working on a new program with Bleicher until the sudden change of leadership. Such sudden changes cannot help but affect the school, he said.

"All of a sudden there's a change, and we didn't even know about until we read about it in the paper," Blades said.

CEEEPCO was formed two years ago, and the non-profit organization now has about 200 members, Blades said. Its goal is to work for excellence in education for all students in the county, he said.

through and around the windshield."

Alston said officials will conduct further tests, including checking for carbon monoxide in a blood sample, and talk to the gun manufacturer about possible causes of the shooting.

Root was in stable condition at Memorial Hospital in Hollywood, north of Miami. He had been under heavy sedation Friday.

"It's an odd story all right," Root's brother-in-law, Brett Geer, said after a visit Friday. "With this wound and him not being able to recollect how he got it, I'm sure there is reason for an investigation."

"Even though there are a lot of unanswered questions, the one thing we are certain of is that he did not make any attempt on his life," said brother W. Todd Root of Burlingame, Calif.

"He's a very lucky guy," said Dr. Robert Cohen, who operated on Root. "I don't know if he wanted to be lucky. We'll find out sooner or later."

Root, 36, of Alexandria, Va., apparently became unconscious while piloting his Cessna from Washington National Airport to Rocky Mount, N.C.

The plane was on autopilot and military pilots shadowed his aircraft for nearly four hours. The plane ran out of gas and crashed in mile-deep waters 14 miles west of the Bahamian island of Eleuthera. Root swam to a raft, where rescuers pulled him to safety.

Geer said Root told him the bullet wound was not self-inflicted and could have occurred when the impact of the crash triggered the pistol.

Jones Likes Pact

vironmentalist off guard and garnered criticism.

"It's just very rushed," said Tom Perlic, N.C. Sierra Club coastal conservation chairman.

"The Sierra Club is a little disturbed that the agreement was reached with no input from environmental groups," Perlic said.

The Sierra Club and other groups had been working toward requiring an environmental impact statement. But with Jones dropping the requirement from his bill, Perlic said the group would push for a moratorium on offshore drilling.

"It is still possible for North Carolina to get into the moratorium. Although it's going to take a lot of effort on our part and on the congressional leaders' part," Perlic said.

"You're looking at North Carolina being one of the few states in the country without some protection for offshore drilling activities for the next year."

Doug Rader, chief scientist with the Environmental Defense Fund and a member of the governor's working group on coastal drilling, said he was also disappointed in the decision.

But Rader said, "I'm cautiously optimistic, but optimism is required."

Rader cautioned that the drilling for natural gas might only be the first impact on the North Carolina coast.

"We're looking to industrialize the middle tier on the Atlantic coast," Rader said.

Rader said the agreement "greased the skids" for oil and gas production which would follow any positive explorations.

"I believe firmly that we are at a crossroads in the development of the coast of North Carolina. I believe that's a fundamental switch where the people of North Carolina should have some say so," Rader said.

Rader also said the time schedule for completing the required environmental studies accurately was nearly impossible.

"I don't see how they can answer the real concerns of the people of North Carolina," Rader said. "But they say they can meet it."

But he added that the public now needed to get involved with the project to assure the greatest protection of the coast.

FOCUS 2·0·0·7

Sharpen Your Outlook And Capture The Future
There are many different ideas of how Pitt County will grow and prosper. And, many say Pitt County will grow by itself. This may be true, but, in what direction will we grow and can we make it better. Let's not sit back tomorrow and say "we should have" or "if only we had realized." Let's make sure we move ahead and know where the next twenty years will take us.
A group of dedicated citizens have developed a strategic plan for Pitt County. It's called Focus 2007 and we want to make it a reality. If adopted, Focus 2007 will affect all of us. You, your family and your friends. Now is your chance to share your visions of Pitt County in the year 2007. But we can only get there if we sharpen our outlook today.
Capture the future and attend a series of public meetings for all the citizens of Pitt County to focus on 2007.

Plan Would Have 8 States Share Waste Treatment

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — Legislators from across the South will discuss during the next few days a proposal that would share the burdens of hazardous-waste treatment among eight states in the region.

The plan — the first proposed regional agreement for waste disposal in the Southeast — would have a treatment center, an incinerator, or both, in North Carolina in exchange for South Carolina and Alabama keeping their landfills open for the region, state and federal officials said.

Rep. Joe Hackney, D-Orange, chairman of the House Environmental Caucus, said Southern legislators will be discuss the proposal during a meeting Sunday through Tuesday in Baltimore.

He said he is encouraged by the plan, but added, "I don't think it's going to make it any easier to site an incinerator in North Carolina."

House Majority Leader Dennis A. Wicker, D-Lee, said Gov Jim Martin laid out the proposal in an hourlong breakfast meeting with six House and Senate members who worked to pass a major waste-treatment bill May 30.

"I think we're getting down close to agreement," Wicker told the Winston-Salem Journal, expressing support for the proposal, which arose from an eight-state meeting June 29 in Atlanta with officials of the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency.

The discussion Friday came just before members of the N.C. Hazardous Waste Management Commission met to reopen the search for volunteer counties to play host to treatment plants.

The commission agreed to send another round of letters to the 100 counties in an effort to attract takers with an incentive package estimated at up to $625,000.

But few predicted success, citing rejection by 20 counties that had sought more information in the past year before withdrawing from consideration. .

"I know what our county manager will do — drop it in the waste basket," said Mary H. Odom, a new member to the commission. "And I suspect many counties will do just the same. They just know what they read in the paper and it sounds horrible."

James B. Blackburn III, an attorney for the N.C. Association of County Commissioners, agreed.

"There's a bonanza for some county, but in order to get to that bonanza some elected officials are going to change the minds of some people who feel, rightly or wrongly, very, very strongly about these issues," he said.

"It's political suicide, but sooner or later somebody is going to get the big enchilada."

State officials say the regional agreement could help the recruiting effort.

"That's the nicest thing about it — no landfill," said Linda W. Little, executive director of the Governor's Waste Management Board.

David G. Prather, a spokesman for Martin, said a rough outline of the plan calls for three incinerators, three aqueous-treatment plants and two landfills to serve the North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Tennessee and Kentucky.

"North Carolina could choose from an aqueous-treatment plant or an incinerator, or both," Prather said. "South Carolina and Alabama would agree to keep their landfills open for the ash and residue from the region's treatment plants."

Under the recently passed legislation, any regional agreement involving North Carolina would have to be approved by the N.C. General Assembly.

The pending plan is an effort to meet a federal requirement that all states have a plan in hand by Oct. 17 that would show that they are capable of meeting their disposal needs for hazardous waste for the next 20 years.

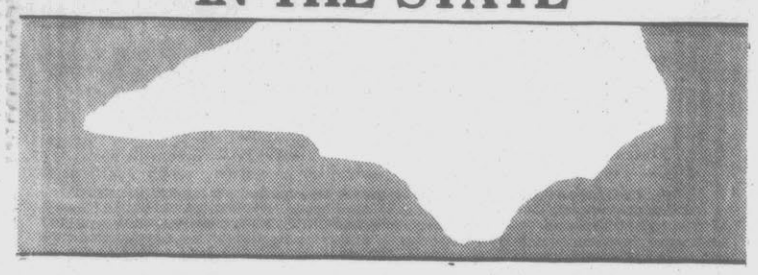

Otherwise, the EPA is empowered to cut off federal Superfund money that is used to clean up priority hazardous-waste sites, 21 of which are in North Carolina.

Caron B. Falconer, an analyst for the EPA's regional office in Atlanta, said the states are to send representatives to Atlanta on Thursday for a meeting to discuss areas of agreement.

"As it is, each state has something to offer, but no state alone is capable of meeting all of its needs," she said.

Georgia and Florida are considering offering treatment plants, and Tennessee has a private incinerator and two treatment plants, she said. In addition to the landfill at Pinewood, S.C., there are two incinerators in South Carolina, she said.

Pond Drownings

ROCKY MOUNT, N.C. (AP) — Three people apparently drowned when their car ran into a farm pond in Nash County, officials said Friday.

Ruby Braswell, 52, Betty Ricks, 24, and Wilk Taylor, 65, left their Rocky Mount residence around 6 p.m. Thursday to go fishing, a sheriff's spokesman said.

Sheriff's officials say divers found the car and two other bodies.

Foul play is not suspected, but autopsies have been ordered, officials said.

Hardee's Plan Recall

ROCKY MOUNT, N.C. (AP) — Hardee's Food Systems Inc. will voluntarily recall a promotional item called "Ghostblasters" because the toy contains small parts that may be swallowed by children if dislodged from the unit, company officials said.

The noisemaking toys were distributed at tne end of June and all of July in the hamburger chain's 3,100 restaurants as a promotional tie-in with the "Ghostbusters II" movie.

Hardee's said it initiated the recall with the help of the U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commission after receiving at least 15 reports of children ingesting small batteries dislodged from the toy.

Hardee's advise consumers who have "Ghostblasters" in their homes to take them away from children under three years of age and return them to a Hardee's restaurant for a full refund.

Approximately 2.8 million "Ghostblasters" were sold, company officials said.

Foul Play Suspected

DARIEN, Ga. (AP) — An autopsy conducted by the state medical examiner discovered that a one-legged man whose body was found floating in the Champney River earlier this month was shot in the head.

Tommy Tindale, a McIntosh County sheriff's detective, said the man at first was thought to have drowned.

"I think we can assume it was foul play," he said. "I think we can assume that the shooting happened first."

Tindale said family members have identified the man as Joseph Paul Phillips, 59, of Siler City, N.C., but authorities are looking for confirming details, such as a match of dental records or the artificial leg worn by the man, before making the identification official.

Year-Round School

RALEIGH (AP) — Wake County teachers involved in a year-round schedule said the idea would have no effect on the content of their classes, but it would change their approach, including reducing the need for review at the start of each session.

"It will force us to be more organized in our teaching," said Nancy Miles, a third-grade teacher at Kingswood Elementary in Cary. "We'll be more aware of time passing and that we have to move on. I think we'll get more covered."

Classes start July 26 at Kingswood — Wake County's first year-round school.

Students at the year-round school will attend class for nine weeks and then take three weeks off. When the school reaches its full enrollment of about 400 students, the nine-week periods will be staggered so one group of students will always be on a three-week break, officials said.

The approach allows 25 percent more students to attend the school over the course of a year.

Wife Was Bought

ASHEVILLE (AP) — An Asheville woman who pleaded no contest to drug selling last week said her husband did not buy her for 20 pounds of marijuana, but instead paid a $5,000 ransom to rescue her from her common-law husband.

"If it wasn't for Eddie, I'd be dead right now," Angela Villa, 26, said of Eduardo Villa, 28, whom she married four years ago.

Villa of El Paso, Texas, remained in federal custody Friday, awaiting sentencing in September on two counts of possessing marijuana with intent to distribute it. He pleaded guilty to the charges Thursday. Mrs. Villa is free on $10,000 bond.

State Bureau of Investigation agent Mike Bustle testified during the hearings Thursday the Villas were arrested May 27 after they offered to sell him 72 pounds of marijuana for $62,600 in a Maggie Valley motel room.

Bustle also said Villa "bought" his wife four or five years ago from her then-husband by giving him 20 pounds of marijuana.

Bustle said he learned of the transaction from a trusted confidential informant.

Farmville, Washington Among Safe N.C. Cities

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHARLOTTE — Fifty-five cities in North Carolina and South Carolina have been recognized by the AAA Carolina Motor Club for their record in pedestrian safety.

Five cities — Brevard, Edeton and Garner, N.C., and Dillon and Maudlin, S.C. — won top awards for outstanding safety records.

Edenton, at 15 years, has gone longer without a pedestrian fatality than any other competing city in either state.

Southern Pines, N.C., which has not had a pedestrian fatality during the past 12 years, and Walterboro, S.C., where a pedestrian has not bee killed in 11 years, also were singled out for special praise by the 67-year-old safety-oriented motor club.

Throughout the United States during 1988, there were a total of 8,800 pedestrian deaths, an increase of 200 from 1987. But pedestrian fatalities and injuries decreased in both North Carolina and South Carolina during the year.

In North Carolina, deaths dropped from 231 in 1987 to 218 in 1988. In South Carolina, they declined from 122 to 118. Injuries fell from 1,963 to 1,882 in North Carolina and from 1,183 to 1,146 in South Carolina.

"While we always think we could do better, and that even a single pedestrian death during the year is too many, I would like to say that we are encouraged by the decrease in fatalities and injuries in both our states," said Ralph Peters, president of the motor club.

The group also presents awards to all cities participating in the program which have not had a pedestrian fatality in at least one year.

North Carolina cities receiving these awards this year are: Washington, nine years; Newton, seven years; Morganton, six years; Farmville, five years; Kings Mountain, Rockingham and Selma, four years; Burlington, Chapel Hill, Dunn, Plymouth and Roxboro, three years; Clinton, Concord, Lumberton, Mooresville and Waynesville, two years; and Albemarle, Belmont, Fayetteville, Hendersonville, Kinston, Rocky Mount, Shelby and Tarboro, one year.

S.C. cities being recognized are: Chester, seven years; Abbeville, Marion and Newberry, six years; Aiken and Hartsville, five years; Clinton, Forest Acres, Greenwood, Laurens and Mullins, four years; Bennettsville, Camden, Clemson and Darlington, three years; Beaufort and West Columbia, two years; and Anderson, Columbia, Conway, Lancaster and Rock Hill, one year.

Cities with populations of 5,000 or more are eligible to participate in AAA's Pedestrian Protection Program. Communities are evaluated against other cities of comparable size and characteristics.

Defense To Begin Case Monday In Taggart Trial

By Paul Nowell
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHARLOTTE — David and James Taggart, on trial on charges of taking more than $1 million in PTL money to bankroll their extravagant lifestyle, will finally get the chance to tell their side of the story this week.

After more than a week of compelling testimony from prosecution witnesses in the brothers' federal tax-evasion trial, defense attorney Ben Cotten will begin his case sometime Monday.

"I think there will be some surprises, just as there have been some surprises on the prosecution side," Cotten said during a short break in the trial on Thursday.

It's been more than two years since the Taggarts were fired by PTL following the resignation of Jim Bakker, the founder of the television ministry which once took it more than $175 million in annual donations.

Cotten also did not rule out an appearance by Bakker, who was the defendants' boss and close friend during the years the Taggarts were charged with evading $487,000 in income taxes.

Bakker and Richard Dortch — his former top deputy at the now-bankrupt television ministry — are scheduled to go on trial in Charlotte Aug. 28 on 24 counts of wire and mail fraud and conspiracy.

U.S. District Judge Robert Potter gave the jury the day off Friday.

The prosecution is expected to rest its case after about two hours of additional testimony Monday morning.

The Taggart brothers joined PTL in the late 1970s as piano players. Within a few years, David, 32, was promoted to Bakker's top personal aide and James, 35, became PTL's interior decorator.

Both were fired when Jerry Falwell took over at the television ministry following Bakker's resignation in March 1987 following revelations of the Jessica Hahn sex-and-money scandal.

Following a 16-month grand jury investigation into PTL's operation under Bakker's leadership, the Taggarts were charged with tax evasion and conspiracy last December.

Specifically, they are accused of diverting more than $1.1 million in PTL money to their own use by taking large cash advances and by using blank ministry checks to pay off their personal credit card bills.

Government prosecutors David Brown and Joseph Bender have presented the jury with piles of documents to support charges that the defendants took huge sums of money between 1984 and 1987 without claiming it on their tax returns.

Beginning July 5, testimony from dozens of New York shopkeepers and friends of the Taggarts showed the defendants went on spending sprees in the most exclusive stores in Manhattan, Florida, California and Europe.

They always stayed at the nicest hotels and dined in the most expensive restaurants, prosecutors say. On one occasion, they chartered a private jet to take them and a friend to dinner at a restaurant in Laguna Beach, Calif.

Prosecutors charge the Taggarts also used money donated to the tax-exempt religious organization to buy a $640,000 condominium in the exclusive Trump Tower New York skyscraper on 5th Avenue.

All the while, they lavished themselves and their friends with expensive jewelry, minks and trips to Europe, prosecutors allege.

When anyone asked the Taggarts about the source of their wealth, they were told fictitious stories of inheritances from their family back in Michigan.

Their father, Henry Taggart, took the stand early in the trial, saying the claims of family wealth were false. Reports that he owned several automobile dealerships were not true, the elder Taggart said.

For about seven years, David Taggart served as Bakker's personal aide for all but a short time in 1983, when he left PTL for several months. Older brother James was an interior decorator whose firm was paid more than $1.2 million over three years by PTL.

If convicted, the Taggarts each could be sentenced to 25 years in prison and face fines totaling more than $1 million.

On Thursday, the assistant manager of a Charlotte bank testified the Taggarts' combined net worth grew from $171,000 to nearly $1.7 million from 1984 through 1987.

The information was included in a personal financial statement the brothers provided to NCNB bank for an unsecured line of credit, said Judy Bailey, who was the assistant manager of the bank's SouthPark branch. During those years, their reported taxable income was about $830,000.

The prosecution's case has focused on the expensive tastes of the Taggarts. The jury has heard about a $96,000 ring and an $85,000 diamond and sapphire pin purchased at Cartier in New York.

They've also heard about trips on private jets and the Concord, European vacations, mink coats, luxury automobiles and other items.

Besides their New York condo, the Taggarts also owned a $330,000 home in Charlotte and regularly purchased hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of jewelry and designer clothes, prosecutors say.

PTL financial officers have testified in the trial that David Taggart routinely took large cash advances and failed to provide receipts to substantiate the advances, which was PTL policy.

Peter Bailey, who was PTL's vice president of finance during most of the time the Taggarts were at the organization, testified that he once wrote off $215,000 in unsubstantiated cash advances to David Taggart.

Bailey also testified the younger Taggart used four blank PTL checks to pay $140,000 in American Express bills.

During the trial, witnesses also have testified that James Taggart was paid $10,000 a month for his design work at PTL's Christian retreat in nearby Fort Mill, S.C.

According to prosecutors, James Taggart also had a guaranteed contract to be paid at least $100,000 and as much as $250,000 by PTL.

Stones' Tickets Gone

RALEIGH (AP) — Ticket sales records have been broken all over North America for the Rolling Stones' historic tour this year, and North Carolina was no different Saturday.

Tickets for the rock group's "Steel Wheels" tour appearance Sept. 16 at Carter-Finley Stadium were sold out in about four hours, promoters said.

Tickets sellers at various outlets remarked about the wide range of ages of ticket buyers, from teenagers to couples in their late 40s. And officials said phone lines were tied up at ticket outlets for hours.

The opening act for the Rolling Stones will be the rock group Living Colour.

The Rolling Stones are being presented in Raleigh by C & C Entertainment, in association with The BCL Group, the North American tour promoter.

Rains May Hurt Leaf Quality

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

FAYETTEVILLE — The heavy rains this year have been a welcome sight for corn and soybeans, but crops such as tobacco and sweet potatoes may be a washout, agriculture officials say.

"If you're a farmer considering the rainfall, you're pleased right now, basically," said James Goff, agricultural extension director in Harnett County. "It would depend on the crop and what stage it's in.

"Probably, the rain has hurt tobacco as much as any crop in our area. If it kept on raining, it could ruin our sweet potato crop," Goff said. "Corn and soybeans ... are probably better off."

Goff said the rains will likely diminish the quality of the tobacco crop.

The wet weather also increases the risk of disease and other moisture-related complications for crops.

The rain has caused more outbreaks of tobacco diseases such as Granville wilt, black shank and brown spot, officials said. It also has washed away fertilizers and nutrients such as nitrogen and sulfur from some fields, leaving tobacco prematurely yellow, they said.

"You see those problems every year," Peter Hight, an agronomist for the N.C. Department of Agriculture, told The Fayetteville Times. "I would say they're probably a little worse than normal because wet conditions favor infection."

Waterlogged soil tends to cut off oxygen to the root system of crops, effectively drowning part of the root, Hight said. That forces the plant to seek food and water with a limited root system, he said.

"If you see a problem in the upper part of the plant, you can bet there is something going wrong underneath," Hight said. "There is some good tobacco around, but I don't think this will be one of the best years."

Police Have 'Viable Suspect' Following Green River Search

By Tim Klass
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SEATTLE — Authorities obtained a court order to search the homes of a Green River serial killings suspect because they hoped to find records detailing aliases he may have used, a top police commander said.

But what police took Wednesday from two Spokane residences used by William Jay Stevens II were 55 cartons and bags of materials including 1,800 videotapes, travel receipts, police uniforms, more than two dozen firearms and about 100 police badges.

Police suspected Stevens, a one-time Gonzaga Univerity law student who has been jailed since January on unrelated charges, of using aliases that could not be checked out without obtaining records from his house, said King County police Capt. Robert C. Evans, commander of the Green River Task Force.

"That was the only reason we did the search warrant," he said in an interview in Saturday editions of the Seattle Post-Intelligencer. "We know he kept a lot of records."

Stevens, 38, has not been charged in any of the deaths and disappearances and denies any involvement in the case. But in a court document released Thursday, he was labeled a "viable suspect" in what has been called the nation's worst unsolved serial killings case.

Evans said it would take a month to examine the large amount of material taken under search warrant from two Spokane homes used by Stevens. One thing was ruled out, though, he said: The items did not include any clothing, jewelry or other effects from Green River victims.

Police would not comment on the contents of the videotapes found in the two residences, except to say that at least some of them were homemade.

The Green River killer, named for a stream south of Seattle where some victims were found, has been blamed for the deaths of as many as 48 Northwest women, many of them prostitutes, beginning seven years ago this month.

Evans said the search warrants of the homes were sought because Stevens' attorneys had not allowed their client to talk to police.

"We tried not to have to do this," Evans said. "We made over a dozen efforts to interview him so we wouldn't have to go through this process."

But Craig Beles, a lawyer for Stevens, accused the task force of "grasping at straws" and said his client "is concerned he's being singled out as the answer to a longtime investigation."

He said Stevens "is a colorful character, but he's no murderer."

In a lengthy affidavit used to obtained a search warrant, friends of Stevens are quoted as saying he believed prostitutes were spreading AIDS, wanted to make films of hookers being dismembered and told others the killing of Green River victims had been filmed.

Stevens is jailed in Seattle, serving a one-year term for the burglary of a police equipment supply store in 1979 and additional time for walking away from a work-release center in 1981.

While police identified Stevens several years ago as someone to check, Evans said "Manhunt," a nationally syndicated television show broadcast last December about the Green River killing, prompted a phone call directing investigators to Gonzaga University.

Polluted River Burns

MOSCOW (AP) — A peasant threw a cigarette butt into an oil-polluted Ukrainian river and set it on fire Saturday, destroying two bridges and burning himself, the official Soviet news agency Tass reported.

The Nuren River in the Zhitomir District had been contaminated by an oil spill five days earlier, Tass said. About 105,000 gallons of oil flowed into the river after a bulldozer split a pipeline near the village of Malye Moshki.

The stream blazed for five hours along a distance of several miles, the news agency said.

Exxon Valdez Leaking Oil

By Dennis Georgatos
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SAN DIEGO — New tests confirmed that the crippled tanker Exxon Valdez is leaking crude oil as it sits offshore in rough seas, but the oil is decomposing, the Coast Guard said Saturday.

"We do have some very weathered and degraded traces of crude oil in the slick," said Coast Guard Lt. Larry Solberg. "There's also heavy concentrations of organic components."

Microorganisms and plankton made up some of the organic compounds found with the crude, Solberg said. More tests are being conducted to determine the toxicity of the materials.

There was no immediate word on how the results of the test would affect plans to repair the Exxon Valdez, which ran aground March 24 in Alaska and spilled nearly 11 million gallons of crude oil into Prince William Sound.

The tanker was towed 2,500 miles to California for extensive repairs to its shredded hull. It has been barred from enteritg port, however, because five steel plates that peeled from the ship's frame during the voyage must be cut off before it can fit through the bay channel.

The new round of tests were ordered after the Coast Guard and state Fish and Game Department arrived at different conclusions after analyzing one of the sheens created off the coast of San Diego.

Wildlife officials concluded the 18-mile-long slick contained traces of petroleum products, but the Coast Guard tests determined it consisted of unidentified organic matter and was oil-free.

The discrepancy prompted a second test by the Coast Guard.

The tests were conducted on samples from the slick spotted near the Valdez when it arrived off the San Diego coast Monday.

The ship, about 60 miles offshore, is still discharging a small amount of a blue-brown slick into the water, Solberg said. But it has been confined to the immediate area of the ship and dissipated rapidly.

Meanwhile, sea conditions have worsened in the area and the Valdez crew, along with the tugboat towing it, were trying to move the vessel to a new position to better withstand the 10-foot swells and six-foot seas, he said.

State Attorney General John Van de Kamp on Friday filed a precautionary lawsuit Friday in San Diego Superior Court which seeks to ensure that the tanker remains outside California waters until officials are satisfied it's free of toxic materials.

Although Exxon Shipping Co. has shown a willingness to cooperate, Van de Kamp said he filed the lawsuit to ensure the existence of "an enforcement mechanism for whatever agreement we are able to reach with Exxon."

Exxon spokeswoman Jan Cool declined to comment on the state's action, saying company officials hadn't yet been able to review it.

Chevron Tanker Hits Bottom

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PASCAGOULA, Miss. — A Chevron tanker carrying 16.5 million gallons of crude oil ran aground 10 miles south of here, but there was no oil leakage or damage to the vessel's hull, a Coast Guard spokesman said Saturday.

The 785-foot tanker, the R. Hal Dean, became stuck in mud about 6 p.m Friday and was refloated by 10:15 a.m. Saturday, said Cmdr. James Gormanson of the Coast Guard office in Mobile, Ala. Five tugboats were used.

"Beginning about 4:30 a.m., they took 125,000 barrels off the vessel to raise the vessel from the mud," Gormanson said. "No spill was noted."

"We know of no oil in the water," said Larry Shanks, manager of operations at Chevron's Pascagoula refinery.

The tanker had been en route to the refinery when it ran aground near the junction of the Pascagoula and Horn Island channels. The Coast Guard closed a channel while crews refloated the vessel.

The tanker continued on to the refinery after being refloated. Its hull will be inspected by divers before the ship puts out to sea again, said Petty Officer Scott Green of Coast Guard's Mobile, Ala., office.

The R. Hal Dean is a "lightering vessel," which off-loads supertankers in the Gulf and carries the crude oil to port, Shanks said.

Sunburn Index Added

DALLAS — Weather forecasts here will have something new beginning this week — the "scorch factor," which two local physicians hope will remind folks of the dangers of skin cancer.

With a shoebox-size device on the roof of a Baylor University Medical Center building, Alan Menter and Chuck Phillips can calculate how long it will take the sun's ultraviolet rays to start burning unprotected skin.

The physicians have begun reporting to the National Weather Service ultraviolet readings at 10 a.m., noon and 3 p.m., along with the number of minutes a sun-sensitive person can be exposed without harm.

One Dallas television station will add the roast quotient to its evening weather reports starting Monday, and several other TV and radio stations have expressed interest in the index.

Twenty Years Since Armstrong Took 'Small Step'

AP/Karl Tate

By Howard Benedict
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — "That's one small step for a man, one giant leap for mankind."

Twenty years have passed, nearly a generation, since Neil Armstrong called those momentous words down from the moon.

Two decades since Earthlings watched those flickering television images, saw that tentative first step on the dusty surface and looked on in wonder as two Americans hopped about in weak gravity, planted and saluted their flag, picked up bits of lunar treasure and spoke with their president a quarter million miles away.

Most people living then can tell you today where they were when astronauts Neil Armstrong and Buzz Aldrin took those first steps on the moon Sunday, July 20, 1969.

They were realizing a goal that John F. Kennedy had set in frustration and desperation.

Kennedy came to office in January 1961 with a pledge to "get this country moving again." The economy was sluggish, Fidel Castro had taken over Cuba, and the United States trailed the Soviets in the highly visible arena of space.

The space chasm widened April 12, 1961, when Soviet cosmonaut Yuri A. Gagarin blasted into orbit, the first man to fly in space.

American prestige was rocked again five days later. On April 17, a brigade of Cuban exiles, sponsored by the Central Intelligence Agency, stormed the beach at Cuba's Bay of Pigs in an effort to overthrow Castro. His forces routed the ill-equipped exiles, leaving the United States and its young president in shame and disarray.

Kennedy accepted the blame and decided bold action was needed to restore America's honor. Space was the answer, he concluded, and he gave Vice President Lyndon Johnson the task of determining what could be done.

On April 28, the National Aeronautics and Space Council, which Johnson chaired, submitted a preliminary report to the president. "The moon is a good target for us," it said.

Even as the president and his advisers were discussing moon trips, some in the administration were concerned about the first U.S. man-in-space flight, now set for May 2. With everything going wrong for the nation, the impact of a failure could be devastating.

But Kennedy let the launch date stand, and, on May 5, after a three-day weather delay, astronaut Alan Shepard rode a slender Redstone rocket and a cramped Mercury capsule 115 miles up and 302 miles down the Atlantic tracking range on a 15-minute suborbital flight.

America heaved a sigh of relief. The Soviets were still ahead, but the United States was on the move.

On May 25, four months after taking office, Kennedy delivered a special State of the Union message on urgent national needs. It covered many subjects, from the economy to disarmament. It also dealt with space.

"I believe this nation should commit itself to achieving the goal, before the decade is out, of landing a man on the moon and returning him safely to Earth. No single space project in this period will be more impressive to mankind, or more important to the long-range exploration of space; and none will be so difficult or expensive to accomplish."

The project was called Apollo — after the Greek archer-god, the god of light and truth, bright-shining, far-shooting.

Christopher C. Kraft Jr., who would become flight operations director for Apollo, was a NASA engineer working on the Mercury project.

"I thought he had lost his mind," Kraft said of Kennedy and his bold commitment. "We had a total of 15 minutes of manned spaceflight experience, we hadn't flown Mercury in orbit yet, and here's a guy telling me we're going to fly to the moon. ... Doing it was one thing, but doing it in this decade was to me too risky."

Despite the doubts of Kraft and others within NASA, America's biggest, costliest and most ambitious technological effort began with virtually no dissent. Before it was achieved, more than 20,000 industrial contractors and 420,000 technicians, engineers and other skilled persons would be involved.

While the hardware of Apollo was being developed and tested, Americans and Russians were learning to live and work in space and to perfect the rockets, spaceships and techniques for going to the moon.

To a watching world, it was like a relay race in space. The Russians, with their larger booster rockets and larger manned spacecraft, held the early lead.

John Glenn in 1962 was hailed as America's first orbital champion. Three more Mercury orbital flights proved man could survive and function for at least a short time in weightless space.

NASA moved on in 1965 to the two-man Gemini program, and 10 exciting flights in 20 months tested and proved all the rendezvous and docking and space walking procedures needed to travel to the moon.

The Russians, too, were perfecting these techniques. But by early 1967, as the United States was ready to move into manned Apollo flights, America seemed to have a slight lead, based on superior computer and other technologies.

Then, tragedy.

In a countdown test on Jan. 27, 1967, a month before the planned launch, faulty wiring released a spark that touched off an inferno inside the Apollo 1 cabin. The flames, intensified by the 100 percent oxygen environment, incinerated the three-man crew, Gus Grissom, Ed White and Roger Chaffee.

Three months after the Apollo fire, cosmonaut Vladimir Komarov rode into orbit in a new spacecraft named Soyuz, believed to be a test model for a lunar command ship. After a day in orbit, as he returned to Earth, Soyuz 1 tumbled, became tangled in its parachute straps and crashed. Komarov became the world's first in-flight space casualty.

In both countries, critics brought their guns to bear on both space programs. Each was halted for nearly two years while repairs were made.

Apollo was reexamined, rewired, redesigned and finally flew. Apollo 7 orbited the Earth for 11 days in October 1968, and then, in a bold move, NASA officials decided to fly the three-man Apollo 8 crew into orbit about the moon on Christmas Eve 1968.

They reasoned the flight would provide vital information about navigating to and around the moon, buy time while the lagging lunar landing module was readied, and rob the Soviets of any glory they might reap by looping one man once around the backside of the moon on a translunar trajectory; there was a widely reported rumor that the Soviets were ready to do just that.

The mission was a huge, uplifting success, and two more flights, one in which two astronauts swooped to within 10 miles of the lunar surface, set the stage for the main event, Apollo 11.

More than 1 million people — tourists, congressmen, diplomats, business people, reporters and movie stars — came to watch the launch at the Kennedy Space Center on July 16, 1969. All eyes stared at the sheet of flame as the mighty Saturn 5 rose ponderously from Launch Pad 39A, precisely on schedule at 9:32 a.m., and sent a thunderclap across the scrubland.

In the spaceship on the tip of the rocket were Neil Alden Armstrong, 38, a civilian, the commander; Air Force Col. Edwin Eugene Aldrin Jr., 39, the lunar module pilot, and Air Force Lt. Col. Michael Collins, 38, the command module pilot — ambassadors from planet Earth headed for a target 250,801 miles away.

Fours days later they were in lunar orbit, 60 miles high, ready for the descent to the surface.

Armstrong and Aldrin climbed through a tunnel into the spider-like lunar module they called Eagle, while Collins remained in the command module named Columbia.

The two craft separated behind the moon, out of radio contact with Earth. Tense minutes passed on the ground until the two ships emerged from behind the moon and Armstrong reported: "The Eagle has wings."

Again they passed behind the moon, where Eagle's descent engine was fired, slowing the LM and dropping it into an orbit with a low point just 9.8 miles above the surface.

Once they reached this closest approach, Armstrong had five seconds to decide whether to fire the descent engine again or to abort and fly back to Columbia. He pressed the button to restart the engine.

Landing on the Sea of Tranquillity was 12 minutes away.

Suddenly, guidance computer alarm lights began to flash in the cabin. The computer was overloaded and Eagle was rapidly approaching an abort situation.

A young guidance engineer in Houston, 26-year-old Stephen Bales, saw the computer was being asked to solve too many problems, but by checking altitude and other radio data, he recognized that it was solving all the right problems.

But there was more trouble ahead.

Because Eagle was moving 15 mph too fast due to a navigation error, its landing target was 4 miles west of the intended spot. Armstrong reported they were headed into field of large boulders and craters.

Armstrong needed 90 seconds to find a smooth touchdown spot. The maneuvering dropped the fuel supply dangerously low, and Eagle had only about 12 seconds to spare when Armstrong shut off the engine.

"Houston. Tranquillity Base here. The Eagle has landed," Armstrong reported.

Man landed on the moon at 4:17 p.m. EDT on Sunday, July 20, 1969. That was just 164 days before the end-of-the-decade goal Kennedy had set eight years earlier.

In London's Trafalgar Square, crowds screamed and applauded. In New York's Yankee Stadium, the baseball scoreboard flashed "They're On The Moon!" The stadium filled with cheers, then there was a moment of silence before the 35,000 fans sang "America the Beautiful."

At Tranquillity Base, with no problems and excitement running high, Armstrong and Aldrin asked permission to step outside early, skipping a planned four-hour rest period.

Mission Control agreed and the two moonmen struggled into their boots, gloves, helmets and backpacks. They depressurized the cabin, and Armstrong backed down the nine-rung ladder to the first step on the dusty lunar surface. It was 10:56 p.m. EDT.

It was a sentence he said later had come to him after he was on the moon. "It was a statement that was natural in the sense of the time," he said.

For several minutes, Armstrong carefully tested the firmness of the soil and his ability to move about in a gravity field only one-sixth the strength of Earth's.

He said Tranquillity Base was strewn with boulders and pocked with thousands of small craters.

A television camera they mounted on a post 60 feet away provided more than 500 million viewers with a ringside seat to history.

Armstrong and Aldrin planted a 3-by-5-foot American flag, and Aldrin stepped back and saluted it. Wire stiffeners enabled it to stand out in the airless vacuum. But they made it plain they came as representatives of all nations when they unveiled a stainless steel plaque bearing these words, "Here men from the planet Earth first set foot on the moon, July 1969 A.D. We came in peace for all mankind."

President Richard Nixon spoke to the moonwalkers from the White House, telling them their mission "inspires us to redouble our efforts to bring peace and tranquility to the world."

The astronauts gathered more than 50 pounds of rocks and set up three scientific experiments.

It was after midnight and time to return to Eagle's cabin. Aldrin had been outside 1 hour 44 minutes, Armstrong 2 hours 14 minutes.

After several hours of fitful rest in the uncomfortable cabin, they fired Eagle's ascent engine and blasted off. Eagle caught up with Columbia, and Eagle, no longer needed, was jettisoned, to orbit the moon for several weeks before lunar gravity tugged it down to a crash landing.

Early the next morning, Collins triggered Columbia's engine and drew a bead on planet Earth.

On July 24, eight days after launch, Columbia splashed down in warm Polynesian waters, landing just nine miles from the carrier USS Hornet.

Nixon was on deck but could not shake the hands of the space travelers. They immediately went into an airtight trailer, quarantined for 16 days, to protect Earth from possible contamination from moon germs.

Back in Houston, those in Mission Control cheered, smoked victory cigars and waved American flags. Flashed on the huge display screen were the 1961 words of Kennedy, setting the United States on a track to the moon. Above them: "Task accomplished ... July 1969."

The astronauts traveled to the Lunar Receiving Laboratory in Houston, where eager scientists began studying the rocks they had gathered for clues to the moon's origin.

After the astronauts' release Aug. 10, millions turned out to hail the new heroes during tours that took them to cities around the world.

NASA had hoped to ride the tide of Apollo 11 enthusiasm to chart a bold space agenda for the future. Thomas Paine, the agency's administrator, proposed permanent manned space stations, a base on the moon, a manned flight to Mars before 1990 and a fleet of reusable space planes to shuttle between Earth and space.

But space officials misread the national mood. The public followed Apollo as a race with the Russians and, with Apollo 11, perceived the contest was won.

The country was torn by Vietnam. The racial and campus turmoil of the late 1960s had prompted much of the press and some politicians to view the space effort and its $20 billion pricetag as a symbol of misplaced national priorities.

NASA's dreams were derailed by Congress and the Nixon administration. Only the space shuttle survived, first flying in 1981.

Today the U.S. space program has reached another critical juncture.

The shuttle is flying again following the 1986 Challenger explosion, and the space agency once again has blueprints for a space station and for building a base on the moon and dispatching men to Mars early next century.

President Bush has endorsed the space station, but the project is encountering opposition in Congress because of its high cost.

Bush has asked Vice President Dan Quayle, as head of a revitalized National Space Council, to study all the options and to recommend a course of action.

Aldrin, reflecting recently on Apollo 11, said he hoped the focus on the 20th anniversary would "become a catalyst for the country to chart a bold course for human expansion outward."

EDITOR'S NOTE — Howard Benedict has covered the space program for 30 years and witnessed more than 2,200 launches including the launch of Apollo 11.

Young Pilot Ends Trip

MOSCOW (AP) — An 11-year-old American pilot completed his trip across the Soviet Union on Saturday when he took off from the Siberian town of Anadyr for Alaska, the official Soviet news agency Tass said.

Tony Aliengena, accompanied by his father and a Soviet pilot, dealt with icy wings and flew through mountains at low altitude to become the first private pilot to traverse Siberia, which stretches across 12 time zones, Tass said.

The boy from San Juan Capistrano, Calif., is trying to become the youngest pilot to fly around the globe. Saturday's flight across the Bering Strait to Nome will bring him back to his native land.

But for the world record, he must still fly down the coast of North America to California to return to his starting point in Orange County, Calif.

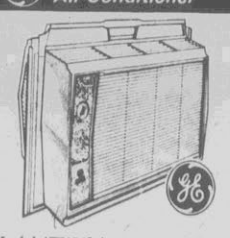

Also flying in his plane and in a second aircraft were his mother, sister, a Russian pen pal and a documentary film crew.

Summit Offers Glimpse Of Mysteries Of Protocol

By Michael Goldsmith
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PARIS — When Britain's Margaret Thatcher and Zaire's Mobutu Sese Seko arrived to view the lavish military parade on the Champs-Elysees marking France's bicentennial, they automatically strode up to the front row, befitting their place as leaders of their countries.

The seating order, the officials explained, was dictated by protocol.

But how that magic formula is determined remains a mystery.

The summit of the world's seven richest nations, the simultaneous meeting of some two dozen Third World leaders and the celebrations for the 200th anniversary of the French Revolution were all ruled by protocol.

A Foreign Ministry spokesman said Saturday the seven were led by France, the host nation, followed in order by the United States, Britain, West Germany, Canada, Ialy and Japan. The spokesman said the order was determined by the years the leader had held his office.

Protocol placed President Bush, barely six months into his term, ahead of the others because he, like Mitterrand, is a head of state and not merely a head of government, like Mrs. Thatcher and the rest.

The official could not give any motivation for the order in which the leaders of the other 27 countries — most of whom went home Saturday — were ranked.

Protocol was invented by the French before the French Revolution as a set of rules for the behavior of diplomats.

As host, French President Francois Mitterrand was able to use protocol to get his message across, putting emphasis where he felt it was due and, perhaps, putting world leaders such as Thatcher in their place.

As master of ceremonies, Mitterrand was able to control events, from how the heads of government lined up for the official photograph to the order in which they made their getaways by limousine.

Mobutu, who was not invited but came anyway, is on the French government's blacklist for his checkered human rights record.

Wearing his trademark leopard skin cap, Mobutu strode to the front row of every meeting, only to find he was seated inconspicuously at the back.

Mrs. Thatcher was booed by the French public Friday for recalling the "incredible terror" of their hallowed revolution and likening it to latter day exterminations in communist lands.

Mrs. Thatcher had a place of honor on Mitterrand's left in the formal group photo taken of the seven; Bush was on his right.

"We could not do anything else, since she was the only lady among the leaders," a Foreign Ministry spokesman explained.

But at the inauguration of the new opera house at the Bastille, Mrs. Thatcher found she had to take a back seat with Mobutu, while Bush was in front, alongside India's Rajiv Gandhi and Brazil's Jose Sarney.

At Friday's military parade, the British prime minister was among the last allowed to leave the bullet-proof enclosure encircling the leaders. Japan's Uno was also in the rear guard.

Mitterrand and his motocycle escort left first, as is the custom for the host.

But the arrangements for the others had not been made clear in advance. So, for several minutes, the leaders sat on their red velvet chairs not daring to move for fear of — what else? — upsetting protocol.

When the order of departure was finally sorted out, President Felix Houphouet-Boigny of the Ivory Coast, a leader of the underprivileged countries, was first out of the gate, followed swiftly by Bush.

In the confusion, the leaders' cars got out of order and some almost collided. President Omar Bongo of Gabon decided to return to his hotel on foot.

Drug Task Force OK'd

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PARIS — Finance ministers of the seven major industrial nations agreed Saturday to set up an internationai task force to trace laundered drug money.

Japanese Deputy Finance Minister Toyoo Gyoten said the ministers expressed grave concern that such laundering eventually "will really undermine the credibility of the financial systems."

The ministers spoke of the problem during talks organized as part of the seven-nation Paris summit ending Sunday.

A British spokesman, who asked not to be identified, said the task force would "presumably" operate under the aegis of the International Monetary Fund, the Bank of International Settlements, and the 24-nation Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development.

Gyoten told reporters, "There was a clear understanding, an agreement that efforts should be strengthened to prevent the utilization of banks and other financial institutions for the purpose of money-laundering."

Canadian Foreign Minister Joseph Clark said the drug problem was a dominant topic among the heads of state at dinner Friday night and lunch Saturday.

"There is a general sense this is a major international problem to which the response is not adequate, that there needs to be more imagination and effectiveness in devising a more effective response both to the demand problem and source problem," Clark told a news conference.

Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher outlined at Saturday's afternoon session her plan to hold an international conference in Britain this fall on ways of curbing demand for drugs, primarily through educational programs.

Mrs. Thatcher regards damping down demand as a key complement to pressure from industrialized countries on Third World nations to curb the production of drugs, particularly cocaine and crack.

Events Draw Media

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PARIS — Slung with I.D. tags and touting lenses worth more than the per capita income of poorer countries, 6,000 journalists descended on Paris to report on the summit of the world's seven richest nations and revel in the glamour of the French bicentennial celebrations.

The summit and the media circus moved into the barely-completed Arche de La Defense, the glittering 35-story cube that crowns the La Defense business district on Paris' western edge.

Camera crews relished the panorama from the 54-step climb to the marble base of the Arche, a structure that forced writers to dust off their architectural vocabulary: the consensus settled on "post-modernist."

Close-mouthed about the cost, the French have splashed out the hospitality for the more than 30 heads of state and the journalists who traced their every move. Open bars and four 500-seat tented pavillions at the Arche offered 23,000 lavish meals to ravenous reporters during the summit weekend.

The timing of the summit — after President Bush's Eastern European tour — and the bicentennial festivities have brought out the media stars.

ABC's Peter Jennings, CBS's Dan Rather and NBC's Tom Brokaw all broadcast from famous Parisian sites.

The festivities and the summit stretched logistics organizers to the limit.

"Each time we try to do smarter and better with less people," says Lloyd Siegel of NBC, which has a team of about 50 on the mission. Like other media organizations, NBC has added staff but mainly to handle the bicentennial side or the economic issues.

The military parades, dance extravaganzas and the fireworks bursting over the summer crowds have provided a colorful finish to Bush's headline-grabbing swing through Poland and Hungary.

ABC network originated its Business World show from here.

ABC's Good Morning America also broadcast a special on the bicentennial from Notre Dame cathedral, while NBC originated Today from the Quai de Tournelle.

Each of the three major networks lined up top Bush adminstration officials for its Sunday morning talk shows — Secretary of State James A. Baker III on ABC, national security adviser Brent Scowcroft on CBS and White House Chief of Staff John Sununu on NBC.

For a crew from Japan Broadcasting Corporation, the two events complement each other.

"What President (Francois) Mitterrand was trying to do involving the summit in the bicentennial makes it more festive," said Takemi Shiga. "But I think if the summit was not held in Paris the bicentennial would not be so much reported."

Shuttle At Launch Pad; Celebration Of Apollo Trip Set

By Howard Benedict
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — Space shuttle Columbia moved to the launch pad Saturday as workers got set to celebrate the 20th anniversary of the lift-off of another spaceship with the same name, the one that carried the first men to the moon.

The shuttle completed a seven-hour trip to launch pad 39B shortly before 5 a.m., and engineers and technicians began readying it for an early August flight with five astronauts who are to release a secret military spy satellite. Meanwhile, others made preparations for Sunday's commemoration of the flight of the first Columbia.

It was July 16, 1969, that an Apollo command module Columbia blasted away from the Kennedy Space Center here with astronauts Neil Armstrong, Edwin "Buzz" Aldrin and Michael Collins. Four days later, Armstrong and Aldrin climbed into the lunar landing vehicle Eagle and descended to the moon.

After an historic 22 hours on the surface, the moonwalkers rejoined Collins in mother ship Columbia for the three-day trip home.

The three were at the Marshall Space Flight Center in Huntsville, Ala., on Saturday for a ceremony there before coming here here to join with thousands Sunday in remembering the launch of the Apollo 11 mission.

Outside the giant shuttle assembly building, where Apollo's Saturn 5 rockets once were put together, the former astronauts will make brief remarks and listen to a tape recording of the final minutes of their countdown.

The "taped liftoff" will occur at 9:32 a.m. Sunday, precisely the time they left Earth.

As the shuttle Columbia moved to the pad, shuttle launch director Bob Sieck looked back at its namesake.

"Twenty years ago there was another spaceship, also called Columbia, and it was out at the pad," he said. "It had an important mission and an important payload. This parallels it. Shuttle Columbia also has an important mission and an important payload.

"It also will prove we have three orbiters, and that is significant," Sieck said.

Columbia will be making its first flight since the Challenger explosion 3½ years ago. The other two shuttles, Discovery and Atlantis, each have been launched twice since flights resumed last September.

After the ceremony here Sunday morning, Armstrong, Aldrin and Collins will ride 20 miles in a motorcade to Cocoa Beach, where they will be honored at a luncheon. On Thursday, the 20th anniversary of the moon landing, the trio will join President Bush for a ceremony at the National Air and Space Museum in Washington.

NASA earlier had set July 31 as the date for launching shuttle Columbia. But agency officials said Thursday that preparations were behind schedule and that a liftoff now is expected during the first week in August. A firm launch date will be set July 26 following a two-day meeting called a flight readiness review.

Columbia's all-military crew is to deploy a classified Defense Department payload believed to be an advanced reconnaissance satellite.

While the counterparts from 1969 are being honored, the shuttle astronauts will fly here Sunday from Houston, in preparation for some practice sessions Monday and Tuesday.

The crew is commanded by Air Force Col. Brewster H. Shaw Jr. The others are Navy Cmdr. Richard N. Richards, Navy Cmdr. David C. Leestma, Air Force Lt. Col. James C. Adamson and Air Force Maj. Mark N. Brown.

Flight Delayed

By Dennis Anderson
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PALMDALE, Calif. — A low reading on a fuel pressure gauge Saturday thwarted the first flight of the B-2 stealth bomber, whose future funding depends on the Air Force getting the radar-evading aircraft off the ground.

The plane, already 18 months behind schedule and budgeted at $500 million each, will make another try in about two days. Senate Armed Services Committee Chairman Sen. Sam Nunn has expressed fears that the most expensive plane in history could become a "stealth taxi."

About one hour after dawn, the flat-winged plane rolled out to its runway near Air Force Plant 42, the desert complex where it was built. Its four engines growled quietly and were revved up and down as the crew awaited final word for takeoff.

During the wait, a Cessna 182 with a Porterville, Calif., schoolteacher and his niece and nephew on board made an emergency landing near the plant after the pilot, Brian Green, told authorities he was off-course and lost.

But Air Force officials insisted it was a low fuel pressure gauge reading on the bomber, and not the private plane landing in the restricted area, that caused the delay.

"During normal aircraft checklist procedures, it was determined that the fuel pressure reading for takeoff power settings were reading too low," said Col. Douglas Kennett, an Air Force spokesman. "In accordance with normal safety procedures, the aircraft returned to the hangar. ... The first flight will occur no earlier than two to three days."

Air Force officials refused to say what measures would be taken to correct the fuel gauge reading. They said they did not immediately know whether it was a problem with the gauge or the system itself.

The aircraft, Northrop and Air Force officials say, is the most thoroughly tested in history without having been flown. It has undergone years of hangar testing in computer flight simulations. However, it is not unusual for problems to materialize when an airplane is ready for flight.

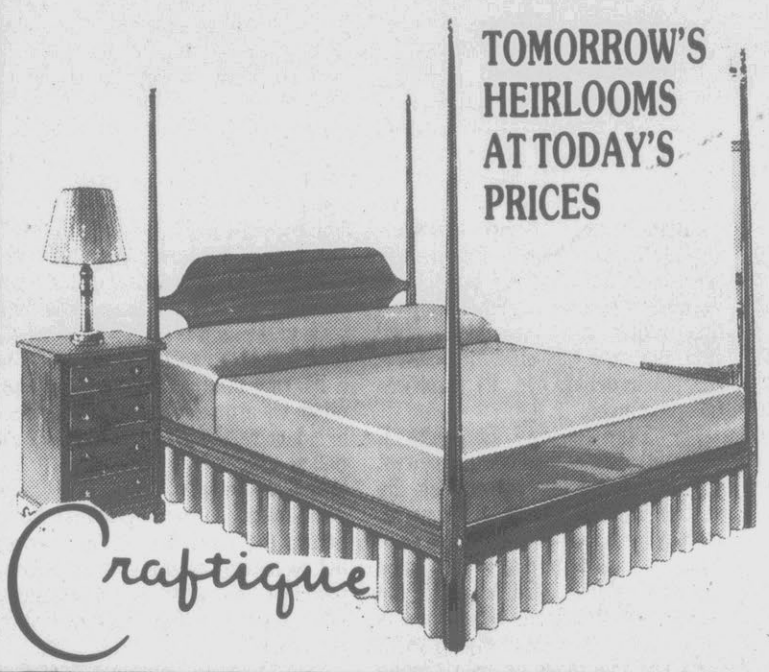

The Air Force spokesman said people were still upbeat after the Saturday maiden voyage flight was canceled.

"We are still ready," Kennett said. "We will be up when it is time. We are still looking forward to the first flight."

CHAPPAQUIDDICK ISLAND, Mass. — It's not even the same bridge anymore. New posts and guardrails have been added, but that was some time ago, and now Dike Bridge is rotting. Gulls fly over and drop shellfish on it to break open their supper.

Not much to it. No signs, no reminders.

But Dike Bridge is on Chappaquiddick.

It lives oversized in American political history because Sen. Edward M. Kennedy drove his Oldsmobile off the bridge into Poucha Pond around midnight 20 years ago.

Mary Jo Kopechne, a 28-year-old Washington secretary, was found dead in the back seat about 10 hours later. Kennedy, then 37, did not notify police until 9:30 a.m., long after he returned to his hotel, across the water on Martha's Vineyard.

He said he and two friends repeatedly dove to the car in unsuccessful rescue attempts, and that he was then "exhausted and in a state of shock."

Since the accident the night of July 18, 1969, Massachusetts voters have re-elected Kennedy four times to the Senate by healthy margins. But most people think the string of events that occurred after he left a cottage party that night probably cost him the White House.

The incident has been an albatross around the island's neck as well.

Like Kennedy, most longtime Chappaquiddick residents don't like to discuss the accident. It is a bitter memory, the day their pastoral existence became the focus of the worst sort of publicity — the heir to the Kennedy family dynasty had sullied not just his reputation but theirs, too.

When asked about the accident and the impact it's had on their lives, Vineyarders who have lived in Edgartown or on Chappaquiddick Island for more than 20 years often become silent.

One Edgartown real estate agent, usually smiling and friendly, momentarily choked up when asked about the accident and then refused to discuss it.

Jane Tomassian, the head of the Martha's Vineyard Historical Preservation Society, has lived in Edgartown eight years. She has sensed some of her neighbors' resentment about the incident.

"Martha's Vineyard, pre-Chappaquiddick, was sort of a quiet vacation spot. The international attention that centered here immediately after the incident and during the trial, and the focus that has been put on the Vineyard since then, has really unfortunately put the Vineyard on the map," Tomassian said.

Kennedy eventually pleaded guilty to leaving the scene of an accident and received a two-month suspended prison sentence. He was placed on probation for one year.

Judge James A. Boyle, who oversaw the nine-month inquest, expressed doubt about key portions of Kennedy's testimony. When Boyle's final report was released in April 1970, the case was officially closed. But public debate over its ramifications continues.

The Dike Bridge connects a beautiful strip of beach with the rest of Chappaquiddick Island, at the eastern side of Martha's Vineyard. In May, tall fences were erected on either side of the bridge — long since closed to vehicular traffic — and the only way to reach the beach now is to drive an all-terrain vehicle south for about five miles before doubling back north.

Town officials are concerned about safety at the bridge, but sporadic arguments over the years reveal another factor in the move to tear it down — embarrassment over the dubious tourist attraction.

Most tourists don't journey to Martha's Vineyard soley to see the scene of what has been called "the most famous traffic fatality in the history of American politics." But, as long as they're down there, it's right across the ferry ...

"Yeah, people ask about it every day," said a teen-age girl running the four-car ferry from Edgartown to Chappaquiddick Island. "We get a car asking on every trip across."

Once tourists get out to Dike Bridge, there's not a lot to see — just a simple wooden bridge across a decidedly uninteresting pond. Beyond the bridge are the dunes, and still farther the vast blue of Nantucket Sound.

"They find themselves very disappointed," said Patric Jamo, a waiter at a restaurant on the edge of Edgartown Harbor. "There's really nothing there."

Linda Malcouronne, the president of the Edgartown Board of Trade and manager of the Colonial Inn, contends the bridge isn't that much of a tourist draw. She says most of the summertime tourists choose the Vineyard for other reasons and visitors might not even be aware of the significance of the bridge.

"It's a whole other time, a time warp," Malcouronne said.

Whether the islanders like it or not, though, the accident is fixed in their psyche. A headline that appeared in the Vineyard Gazette referred to the debate over tearing down the "Kennedy Bridge."

Just up the block from the Colonial Inn is the Shiretown Inn, the hotel where Kennedy stayed on his visit two decades ago. Kennedy had walked through the hotel's lobby the morning of the accident and stood on a balcony talking about yachts with other vacationers before he filed an accident report with the Edgartown police.

The new owners of the Shiretown have taken down a sign that hung behind the front desk telling people not to bother asking about Chappaquiddick, or what room Kennedy was staying in. But they still shun inquiries.

"We have no comment," said a hotel worker who wouldn't give her name. "People don't ask about it. It's not a big thing anymore. We weren't even around then."

Kennedy, who has over the years expressed sadness about the accident, responded with a prepared statement when asked about the incident recently.

"I took full responsibility for the tragedy at the time, and I still do," Kennedy said. "There was a full and complete investigation by authorities, and there have been extensive additional investigations by the press. I have expressed my remorse and responsibility to my own family, to the Kopechne family, and to the people of Massachusetts, and I express those sentiments again.

"I have told everything I know about the accident. I only wish that it were in my power to do something more to ease the continuing pain that I feel and that Mr. and Mrs. Kopechne feel for Mary Jo's loss."

In a recent Associated Press interview, Mary Jo Kopechne's parents spoke mostly about how they still grieve over the loss of their daughter.

Mrs. Kopechne did say she was pleased the foreman in the grand jury investigation of her daughter's death had recently renewed his assertion that officials tried to cover up information to protect Kennedy.

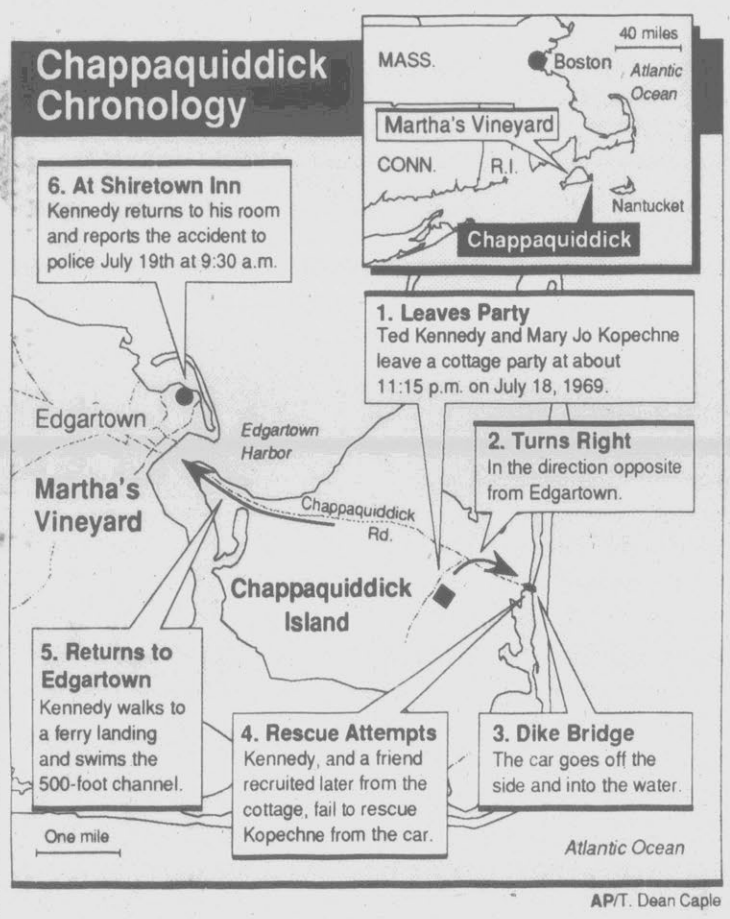

She had little to say about Kennedy, but in another interview with a magazine she and her husband had harsh words for the senator.

"He was worried about himself, not Mary Jo," Joseph Kopechne said.

He said his daughter did not die in vain because it kept Kennedy from becoming president.

Kopechne and his wife, Gwen, said they had had two brief meetings with the senator since the accident.

"Those were really ridiculous meetings," Mrs. Kopechne said. "Nobody told me anything, and I didn't even know what to ask. I want him to tell me what happened. Can't he relieve us of this?"

Expedition To Exhume Cannibal Victims

By Denis Searles
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

DENVER — The century-old legend of an admitted cannibal has become grist for local jokes and promotions, but a legal expert hopes the tools of modern forensic science will lay to rest questions about the case.

Alferd G. Packer admitted eating the flesh of some of his five fellow gold prospectors in 1874, but claimed he did so to avert starvation after the men died while marooned in the San Juan Mountains. He was eventually convicted of manslaughter after two trials nearly a decade later.

On Monday, a group of anthropologists, archaeologists and pathologists will attempt to exhume the remains of the five victims near the mountain town of Lake City, about 170 miles southwest of Denver.

The expedition is the brainchild of James E. Starrs, a professor of law and forensic sciences at George Washington University's Law Center in Washington.

Starrs has used the Packer case as an example in his classes because of the nature of the evidence presented at his two murder trials. He believes scientific examination of the 115-year-old remains will determine whether Packer really killed the gold diggers and then ate them.

Packer's admitted cannibalism has made him a bizarre folk-hero — especially at the University of Colorado Alferd Packer Grill, where annual eating contests mark the end of the school year.

The legend arose out of the Colorado Rockies in the winter of 1874.

Packer, a 42-year-old harness maker plagued with epilepsy, convinced a group of prospectors in Utah he could lead them to the Colorado gold fields. Five men stayed with him until they became marooned in the San Juan Mountains.

On April 16, 1874, a rosy-cheeked Packer walked into the Los Pinos Indian Agency, at what is now the town of Sagauche. Authorities became suspicious when they found he was carrying several neatly wrapped packages of human flesh.

Packer admitted shooting one man, Shannon Wilson Bell, in self defense, but said Bell killed the other four with a hatchet while he was looking for a route out of the mountains. He claimed starvation drove him to eat the flesh of the dead prospectors.

Several months later, Packer fled just before artist John A. Randolph, on assignment for Harper's Weekly, discovered and sketched the five bodies.

Packer was arrested in 1883 in Cheyenne, Wyo., and was taken to the then-new mining camp of Lake City where he was convicted of murdering one of the prospectors, Israel Swan.

The state Supreme Court overturned that sentence. Packer then was retried for all five murders and convicted of manslaughter at Gunnison. In addition to Bell and Swan, the victims included George Noon, James Humphrey and Frank Miller.

In 1886, Packer was sentenced to 40 years. He was paroled in 1901 and died April 24, 1907.

Last summer, Starrs visited Lake City and says he located the burial site of the five men near a bronze and stone memorial to the victims set amid wildlfowers and clover a mile outside of town.

"Until we see a bone ... we can't be 100 percent certain, but the place has been maintained as a grave site since the early part of this century," said Patrick Zickler, editor of Starrs' Scientific Sleuthing Review.

Starrs says the bones should be in good enough condition to determine how the men died.

"From the bones we will be able to see bullet holes and hatchmarks where the skinning knife might have scraped the bones. We'll be able to tell if the victims were cannibalized, if they were struck by a hatchet blow, if they were really near starvation," Starrs said.

"My personal feelings are we'll find more bullet wounds than described," Zickler said. "My pet theory is that Bell and Packer conspired against the others because of the general desperation of the situation. For some reason we'll never know, Packer and Bell had a falling out. Packer emerged victorious — and Bell became a perfect scapegoat for all the other deaths."

Many of the 219 permanent residents of Lake City hope the dig will raise the town's profile as a vacation spot.

At the General Store, proprietor Jack Eisele is selling buttons that read: "Alferd Packer Ate Here-Lake City, Co."

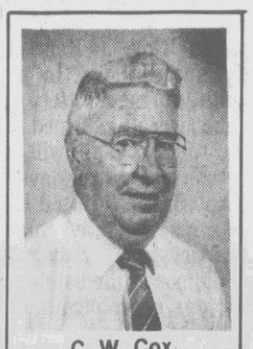

T-shirts for sale in several shops proclaim, "Have a Friend for Dinner," and "Alferd Packer, Serving His Fellow Man."

A theater group from Western State College in Gunnison on Monday will open a three-week nightly dramatization of Packer's trial in the Lake City Courthouse, where the original trial took place.

Mexico Eyes Cuts In Debt

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

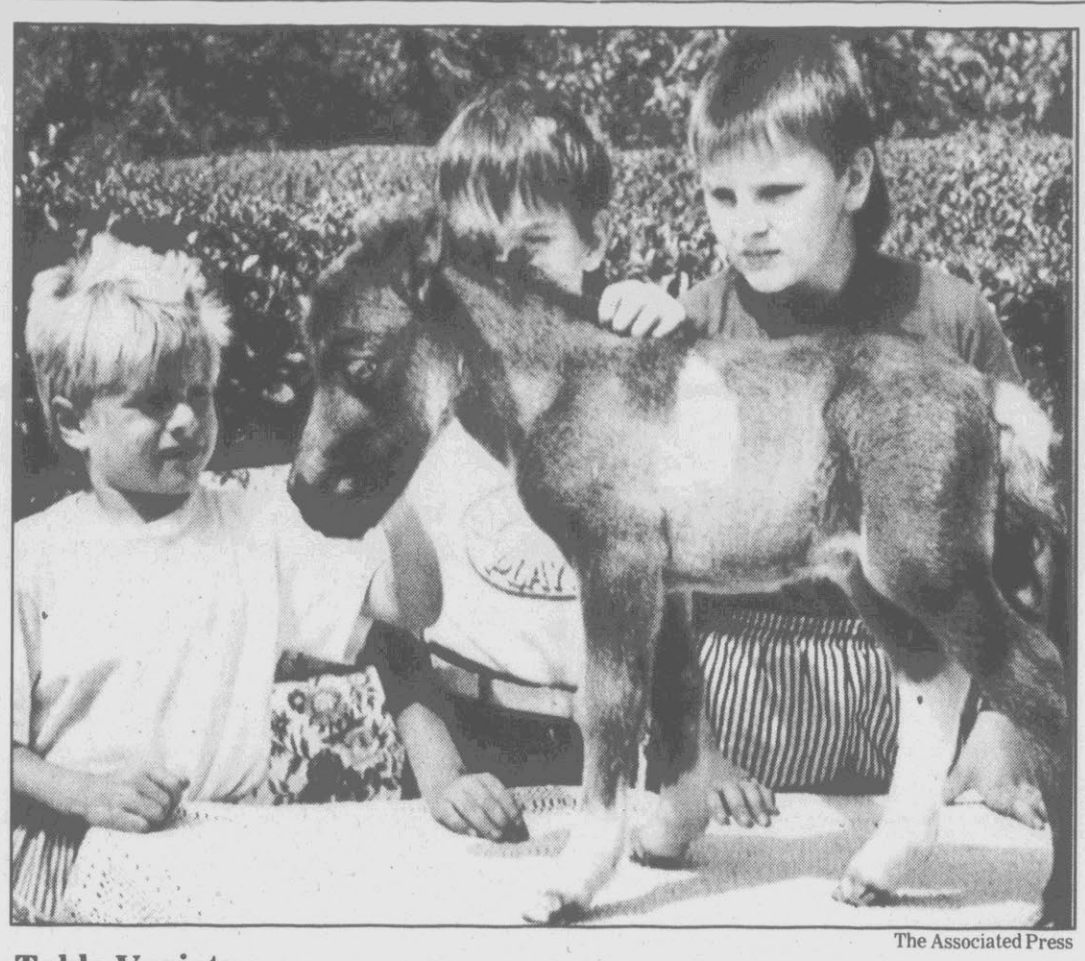

MEXICO CITY — Mexico badly needs the help President Bush is offering to reduce payments on its foreign debt, but even with substantial relief, coaxing the country out of seven years of stagnation may be a slow process.

"Mexican as well as foreign investors are waiting for the starting flag that the solution to the debt negotiations will give," said President Carlos Salinas de Gortari, who met with Bush last week.

Attention was focused last week on talks between Mexico and creditor banks as world leaders gathered in Paris for an economic summit. Bush wanted an agreement as a showpiece for its strategy to redute the Third World's $1.3 trillion debt.

The lengthy negotiations apparently snagged, and Bush tried to give them a boost by offering Mexico a temporary loan of $1 billion to $2 billion. The offer appeared to be aimed at showing banks and other creditor nations the United States would put its moneygwhere its mouth is.

For Mexico, an agreement would mean both money and a psychological boost, two elements needed to reignite growth. Mexico owes $107.4 billion and maintains that its economy is hobbled because it must spend $16 billion every year to pay the interest and principal.

Death Tied To Uprising

By Sergei Shargorodsky
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

JERUSALEM — Masked Palestinians on Saturday reportedly killed an Arab suspected of collaborating with Israeli authorities, and police concluded that the slaying of an elderly Israeli man was tied to the uprising.

The army imposed curfews on the Nur-Shams refugee camp near the West Bank town of Nablus and on several refugee camps and villages in the Gaza Strip.

Nine Palestinians were reported wounded in scattered clashes with Israeli soldiers in the occupied lands. In Jerusalem, four Arabs were injured in Israeli stone-throwing attacks, the national news agency Itim said.

In West Bank town of Qalqilya, masked Palestinians broke into the house of Mohammed Yusef Abu Khader, 60, accused him of collaborating with Israeli officials and fatally stabbed him, Arab journalists and Israel radio said.

The death brought to 564 the number of Palestinians killed in the 19-month uprising against Israeli rule in the West Bank and Gaza Strip.

Most victims died in army gunfire, but more than 70 have been killed by Palestinians who accused them of being collaborators.

Police said that two 16-year-old Palestinians confessed to murdering Zalman Yosef Schlein, 64, in the southern Israeli town of Gan Yavne on Friday.

Israel radio said one of the teenagers stabbed the elderly Jewish man while the other hit him on the head with an iron bar.

Initial reports had said Schlein was slain in a dispute over money.

But Uzi Sandouri, spokesman for the southern police district, said the murder was "a premeditated nationalist killing." Sandouri told The Associated Press the two suspects, whose names were not released, were members of an underground group in Gaza City's Shajaiya quarter.

Mining Strike Emerges As Fight To Gain Control Of The Industry

By Bryan Brumley
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOSCOW — Local Communist Party officials and mine executives have joined strikes in the Kuzbass coal region of western Siberia to protest centralized control over the industry, Soviet newspapers reported Saturday.

Officials from the Mining Ministry and regional party committees appealed to miners in at least nine cities to return to work, according to dispatches from Kuzbass, one of the country's most important coal-producing regions.

Newspapers described a chaotic situation in Kuzbass, which is about 2,560 miles east of Moscow.

The situation has emerged as a battle by miners and mine executives to wrest control from the Moscow-based ministry, the newspaper Sovietskaya Rossia said. The miners want authority to set production levels and improve working conditions and such amenities as housing, schools and food, it said.

"Strike committees have formed in the mines," Sovietskaya Rossia reported. "Most of the people in authority have joined them. That includes many communists, trade union representatives, and party secretaries."

Tens of thousands of miners met Saturday night with Mining Minister Mikhail I. Shchadov on the central square of Prokopevsk, about 1,600 miles east of Moscow, according to Tass and a local mine official.

"The minister is promising help," said Yevgeny G. Koslov, an assistant mine surveyor in Prokopevsk. "They are having a dialogue."

The Communist Party newspaper Socialisticheskaya Industria said two mining executives who joined the strikes were Mikhail I. Naidov, head of a group of mines in the town of Prokopevsk, and I.A. Khamin, director of the Baidayevsky Mine in an unidentified town.

"Independence is just not possible," Naidov said, because Moscow-based ministries make up to 90 percent of economic decisions affecting local enterprises and governments.

"They say, 'You just mine the coal, and we will guarantee the rest,'" Socialisticheskaya Industria quoted Naidov as saying.

"But people do not have what they were guaranteed. People have nothing worthwhile, no housing, no food, no leisure facilities," said Naidov.

"This is intolerable. It is not the mine but the individual who should be the master. The essence of the protest is this: we want to work more effectively," he was quoted as saying.

Strikes have been spreading throughout Kuzbass, despite settlements reported with miners in two cities, Osiniki and Mezhdurechensk, where the strikes began Monday.

Authorities had reported an end to the strike Thursday, but miners then expanded their demands from economic issues, such as food, housing and health care, to broader demands for political change.

On Saturday, thousands of miners and their families held protest rallies in towns throughout the region, newspapers reported.

The crisis was the worst in Prokopevsk, where production was virtually halted, Socialisticheskaya Industria reported.

"Events in the Kuzbass have taken a sharp turn," the newspaper said. Although miners returned to work in Mezhdurechensk, in other mining towns in the "the situation has sharply intensified."

Published reports said miners were striking in nine cities, including Prokopevsk, Novokuznetsk, Kisilevsk, Lenin-Kuznets, and Kemerevo. It was not clear where the other strikes were going on.

None of the reports estimated the number of strikers.

An administrator at one of the mines in Mezhdurechensk said all the miners there had returned to work, but he refused to estimate the number of mines or miners involved regionwide.

"We never had strikes like this before. Never," said the administrator, who spoke in a telephone interview from Moscow and refused to give his name.

Executive Enters Plea

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — A New York executive accused of pumping money into the campaign of a former governor of Guam in exchange for a political favor pleaded guilty Friday to three counts of mail fraud.

Arthur Abba Goldberg entered the plea before U.S. District Judge Jesse Curtis, said Guam's U.S. Attorney, Bill O'Connor. In exchange for his guilty plea, 46 counts alleging bribery, conspiracy, wire and mail fraud, and violation of interstate racketeering statutes were dismissed.

"In dismissing the counts, the Guam issues were dissolved," O'Connor said. "Other issues are on the table if another jurisdiction sees fit to follow through."

Twelve of the counts were related directly to Guam, a U.S. territory since August, 1950, said O'Connor. The balance of the counts related to fraud involving use of the Commercial Bank of Americas in transactions that did not involve Guam, O'Connor said.

Although Goldberg, executive vice president of the New York bond underwriting firm of Matthews & Wright, only pleaded to three of the dozen counts, O'Connor was satisfied with the outcome.

"Mr. Goldberg's plea gave the same latitude of sentencing than if he went to trial," O'Connor said. "We, of course, will recommend jail time and a heavy fine."

Goldberg faces a possible 15 years imprisonment, a $750,000 fine and restitution payments, O'Connor said in a telephone interview from his Santa Ana office. Sentencing was scheduled in Curtis' court Sept. 11.

One of Goldberg's attorneys, Howard L. Weitzman, said he had no immediate comment. A receptionist who answered a call made after business hours to another defense attorney, Bruce Hochman, said Hochman had gone for the day.

The three mail fraud counts concerned $57,500 bilked from the Guam Program Development Fund and a letter assuring fund authorities that transactions were above board, while fraud was taking place.

Sri Lanka Shooting Leaves Four Dead

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW DELHI, India — A soldier in Sri Lanka mistook Indian peacekeeping troops for rebels and opened fire, sparking a gunbattle that killed two Sri Lankan soldiers and two Indian soldiers, an Indian government spokesman said Saturday.

The clash Friday was the first of its kind since Indian troops were sent to Sri Lanka nearly two years ago to quell the civil war, but the spokesman called the gunbattle an accident and said both countries considered the matter closed.

The Sri Lankan soldier fired on an Indian patrol of about 20 soldiers passing a remote jungle camp at 3 a.m. Friday, setting off a brief firefight, said the spokesman, who commented on condition of anonymity.

The shooting occurred near Akbopana, about 130 miles northeast of Colombo, the Sri Lankan capital.

Relations between the two governments have grown increasingly prickly in recent weeks since Sri Lankan President Ranasinghe Premadasa demanded that India withdraw its peacekeeping force by July 29.

The exchange of fire between the two sides "lasted for a short while. It was stopped when the mistake was realized," the government spokesman said.

"It was decided to treat the matter as closed and not to publicize it," he added.

Premadasa's government has enforced censorship in Sri Lanka since July 6.

"Two Indian soldiers were killed and five were wounded. On the Sri Lankan side, two reportedly were killed and a few wounded," the Indian government spokesman said.

Another source, speaking on condition he was not identified further, said two Sri Lankans were confirmed dead.

Sri Lankan Tamil guerrillas, who have attacked both Sri Lankan and Indian soldiers, sometimes wear military-style uniforms and have been known to travel in stolen military vehicles.

The Indian spokesman said the Indian soldiers were on foot.

OAS Arranges Talks

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PANAMA CITY, Panama — Mediators from the Organization of American States said Saturday that the government and opposition leaders have agreed to hold talks to resolve Panama's political crisis.

A statement by the mission from the Organization of American States said the talks were scheduled to begin Sunday "without an agenda, without preconditions and with the commitment that no topic would be excluded."

The Defense Forces will send representatives to the talks as part of the government delegation, the statement said. The Defense Forces chief, Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega, is the nation's de factor leader and is under pressure to quit.

Up to now, the position of the Defense Forces and the government has been that Noriega's situation was not subject to discussion. Saturday's announcement "that no topic would be excluded" seemed to indicate a change of attitude.

It will be the first time that the Defense Forces, government and opposition have held talks.

The OAS delegation arrived Saturday on its third mediation visit since Noriega's regime annulled an election May 7 that international observers say opposition candidates won by a landslide.

Ecuador's Foreign Minister Diego Cordovez is heading the mission, which includes foreign ministers Mario Palencia of Guatemala and Sadeo Badseo of Trinidad-Tobago, and OAS Secretary-General Joao Baena Soares of Brazil.

Opposition presidential candidate Guillermo Endara, backed by a coalition of his own Liberal Party, the Christian Democrats and the Nationalist Liberal Republican Party, is demanding Noriega's ouster and that the government admit it lost the election

The opposition also accuses Noriega of human rights violations, corruption and press censorship.

10 Reported Killed In Mogadishu Clash

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NAIROBI, Kenya — The capital of Somalia was reported calm Saturday, one day after state radio said 10 people were killed and 32 injured when security forces opened fire on locals who attacked them with stones, knives and sticks.

The clash broke out Friday near a mosque in a neighborhood of western Mogadishu, according to Somali state radio.

The casualties included "troublemakers" and members of the security forces, according to a state radio broadcast monitored in Nairobi, Somalia's western neighbor.

A resident contacted by telephone Friday said it appeared troops had opened fire as Moslem worshipers left their place of prayer. Islam is the state religion in the impoverished East African nation of about 9 million.

The resident, who spoke on condition he not be identified further, said gunfire erupted around midday in the capital on the shores of the Indian Ocean and continued sporadically through the afternoon.

Residents contacted by telex from Nairobi said life in Mogadishu appeared to have returned to normal today and that a 6 p.m. to 6 a.m. curfew imposed Friday was lifted.

A statement by the Somali Interior Ministry, broadcast over state radio late Friday, said a group of "troublemakers hiding behind the banner of religion" caused the disturbances.

Security forces tried to contain the situation peacefully, but opened fire after the "troublemakers" attacked them with stones, knives and sticks, according to the government statement.

Ten people were killed and 32 wounded in the clash with casualties on both sides of the violence, said the statement.

Friday is normally the Moslem Sabbath but July 14 also was the occasion for feast and celebration of the hajj, the Moslem faithfuls' pilgrimage to the holy city of Mecca.

There were reports during the week that several Moslem religious leaders had been picked up by the authorities, but it was not known whether the alleged detentions had anything to do with Friday's violence. Further information on the reported arrests was not available.

Last Sunday, an unidentified gunman shot to death Mogadishu's Roman Catholic Bishop Salvatore Pietro Colombo. It also was not known whether the disturbances were connected to that incident. There are an estimated 2,000 Roman Catholics in Somalia.

Somalia, on the horn of East Africa that juts into the Indian Ocean, has been led since 1969 by the autocratic President Mohamed Siad Barre as a one-party state.

Since 1981, Somalia has battled the Somali National Movement, a northern insurgency that demands Barre's removal. Intensified fighting between the insurgents and the government over the last 18 months has driven more than 200,000 Somalis into refugee camps in neighboring Ethiopia.

Buried Treasures Found

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

FLORENCE, Italy — Divers have recovered treasures buried underwater for more than 2,000 years in the wreck of a Roman ship, newspapers reported Saturday.

The expedition, which started nearly two weeks ago, has uncovered a late 2nd century B.C. bronze Grecian oil-lamp in the shape of a deer's head, a fragment of a small wooden statue, and various other items hidden in the seabed around the ship, the reports said.

The 65-foot-long ship, which sank in the Gulf of Baratti 12 miles from the island of Elba, was discovered in 1974, and some of its valuable objects were recovered by private treasure hunters.

Viral Disease Fatal

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia (AP) — Six people have died in central Yugoslavia over the past two months from a viral disease that has hospitalized 126 others, the Tanjug news agency reported Saturday.

Last month, four people were reported to have died from the disease, which is spread by field mice and other rodents and their parasites.

China Moves To Isolate Country From Media

By Jim Abrams
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BEIJING — Authorities raided hotels Saturday to remove foreign newspapers and magazines as the government stepped up its campaign to isolate the nation from outside reports critical of its crackdown on dissent.

Officials fired the publisher of a pro-Beijing newspaper in Hong Kong that had criticized the military assault on pro-democracy protesters in Beijing. The Communist government, acting through its official Xinhua News Agency, dismissed publisher Lee Tze-chung on Saturday. Lee said he would fight to stay at the Wen Wei Po newspaper.

Staff at hotels catering to foreign tourists in Beijing said officials appeared without notice Friday and Saturday and removed all foreign periodicals from bookracks.

They were told there would be no further sales of Time, Newsweek, the Asian Wall Street Journal, the Far Eastern Economic Review and the International Herald Tribune, which have given in-depth coverage to China's crushing of the student-led movement.

"We were very surprised. They came so suddenly," said a staffer at the Jinglun Hotel.

"We're just going backward again," said an executive at the Jianguo Hotel, speaking on condition of anonymity. He said most of the hotel's visitors are businessmen who follow world events and said "already people are complaining" about being cut off from access to the news.

The hotels said the China National Import and Export Corp. would not give a reason for the raid or say how long the halt in sales would continue.

Foreign travelers arriving in Beijing have been told not to take newspapers and magazines off the plane, and transmissions of the U.S.-funded Voice of America radio have been jammed since the democracy movement was extinguished more than a month ago.

Two VOA reporters in Beijing were among seven Western journalists deported for alleged rumormongering and violations of martial law.

Chinese authorities July 1 also cut off satellite transmissions of the U.S. television network CNN to Beijing hotels.

The attempt to limit access to outside reports began shortly after the June 3-4 military assault on pro-democracy protesters and their supporters in central Beijing's Tiananmen Square.

Authorities said about 200 civilians, mostly "thugs" and "ruffians," were killed in the assault, but Chinese witnesses and Western intelligence sources said the death toll may have been as high as 3,000.

The government asserts the use of force was necessary to stop a "counterrevolutionary rebellion" attempting to overthrow the government.

The Communist Party's new chief, Jiang Zemin, on Friday told a meeting on higher education that the nation has failed to provide adequate ideological education at a time when young people have become increasingly attracted to the West.

"As a result, they are not mentally prepared to face the hardships and complexities in the socialist construction and the reform," the official Xinhua News Agency quoted him as saying.

Jiang, named to his post June 24 after moderate Zhao Ziyang was purged for opposing the use of force against the students, also said astrophysicist Fang Lizhi and Fang's supporters are "scum of the Chinese intellectuals." Fang, a frequent critic of the Communist government, and his wife Li Shuxian have been sheltered in the U.S. Embassy in Beijing since June 4.

Fringe Politicians Claim The Airwaves

By Janice Fuhrman
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOKYO — A political party that wants better relations with other planets and a wrestler who believes sports is the key to world peace have captured the fancy of voters wearied by the scandals of mainstream politicians.

Half the seats in the upper house of parliament are at stake this month, and the dominant political party is working overtime trying to clean up its image and raise its approval ratings by promising reforms.

Meanwhile, a variety of fringe parties are taking advantage of the disenchantment with the governing Liberal Democratic Party and the law that liberally allocates the airwaves to political campaigns.

Under the Public Office Election Law, any party producing 10 members who pay $29,000 each as "guarantee money" can claim at least 14 minutes on the Japan Broadcasting Corp. channel and additional radio time, reaching a potential audience of 122 million.

The UFO Party, offering nine candidates, has qualified for four free television appearances and two radio broadcasts. So has the Sports Peace Party and the Slash-the-Number-of-Parliamentarians Party.

The Miscellaneous People's Party, which advocates gay rights, earned two television appearances and one radio broadcast.

About 34 of the so-called mini-parties are supporting candidates in the July 23 elections for 126 seats in the upper house.

Although most candidates read their speeches on a staid blue-and-gray set with a dull monotone and a deadpan look, some have mastered the medium of television.

Haruzo Hanawa, 73-year-old head of the New Sun Party for the Extermination of AIDs and Sexual Disease, sang a self-composed ditty. His song called for legalizing prostitution, and he exhorted young people to develop sexual morality.

Towering former wrestler Antonio Inoki of the Sports Peace Party told voters: "Violence isn't necessary, but a leader should have a certain kind of energy."

Inoki's platform stresses the achievement of world peace through international sports exchanges. The ex-grappler is perhaps best known outside Japan for his widely ridiculed exhibition match 13 years ago with former boxing great Muhammad Ali.

The head of the Slash-the-Number-of-Parliamentarians Party, Kikuo Suda, began his speech with, "Don't you think there are too many parliament members? If we did it the way they do in the United States, we would have only 50 members in the (252-member) upper house."

The UFO party has spent its air time calling for a comprehensive policy to deal with unidentified flying objects, announcing that the British ambassador told them Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher had a strong interest in the subject.

The Japan Youth Association, an ultra-right group, was represented by Toyohisa Eto, who argued against Japan's anti-war constitution and against opening Japan's markets to farm exports.

Party Links Are Restored

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BEIJING — China and Mongolia formally restored long-severed party ties during a visit to Ulan Bator by a Chinese Communist Party delegation, the official Xinhua News Agency reported today.

In a dispatch from the Mongolian capital, Xinhua said Mongolian leader Zhambyn Batmonkh praised the normalization of party links during a meeting Friday with Zhu Liang, head of the International Liaison Department of China's Communist Party.

China and its sparsely populated northern neighbor recently emerged from almost three decades of icy relations caused by the split in 1960 between China and the Soviet Union.

Mongolia, a close ally of Moscow, effectively suspended all contacts with Beijing and invited Soviet troops into the country to patrol its lengthy border with China.

The warming of relations has generally followed the improvement in ties beween China and the Soviet Union. Last May, while Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev was visiting China, the Soviets began the second stage of a two-year withdrawal of 50,000 troops — 75 percent of its forces stationed in Mongolia.

Xinhua said Batmonkh expressed understanding for the recent change in China's party leadership, referring to the ouster of General Secretary Zhao Ziyang, who was accused of being soft on the recent student-led pro-democracy movement.

Talks Off In Korea

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SEOUL, South Korea — The government accused communist North Korea on Saturday of trying to stir unrest in South Korea and called off talks on fielding a joint team at the 1990 Asian Games in China.

In a letter to North Korea, South Korea canceled talks planned for Tuesday at the border truce village of Panmunjom.

The letter accused North Korea of slander and "hostile political maneuvering" aimed at causing civil unrest in South Korea, but said South Korea hoped talks would be resumed soon.

The cancellation reflected the souring relations between the countries over a series of illegal visits by South Koreans to the north.

Trips to North Korea without prior government approval are a crime in South Korea. The government maintains that all contacts and dialogue with the North must be made through official channels.

The last sports meeting, the second in a series, was held in March, but North Korea had refused to resume the talks until recently.

The two Koreas have tried to improve relations through a series of talks that began in 1988, although little progress has been made, with each side insisting on its own initiatives.

Contacts grew chillier earlier this year when North Korea demanded that South Korea cancel annual military exercises with the United States

Seoul since postponed other talks, including those on a long-planned meeting between lawmakers from both nations, and accused North Korea of encouraging secret visits by South Koreans to stir up problems in the South.

'Truth In Preference To Fiction'

Patchwork

The Problems Begin In Raleigh

The problems of the Pamlico River don't begin in Washington or Greenville or Rocky Mount or even Oxford, way upstream on the Tar. The problems of the Pamlico begin in Raleigh, where ragged and nebulous state water quality regulations allow enforcement agencies to apply rules in an ambiguous and inconsistent manner.

That disparity is unpleasantly illustrated by the issue of municipal sewage disposal in the Tar-Pamlico River Basin. The Daily Reflector, in a three-part series published last week, took a close look at how cities in the basin handle their waste. Sewage is high in nutrient pollution, one factor scientists cite in massive fish kills this summer in the Pamlico River.

The Plight of the Pamlico

What the newspaper found was a state water quality policy that resembles a patchwork quilt. State regulations on municipal sewage disposal merely provide a continuum, with "reasonable" at one end and "lax" at the other. Cities are able to choose their point on the continuum and many cities choose points close to "lax."

Alarmingly, The Reflector found there is no uniform policy that determines how and how much waste is dumped in the Tar River, which flows into the Pamlico. Instead, sewage disposal along the river is as varied as the terrain through which it meanders.

Consider the examples of Greenville and Rocky Mount.

Greenville has, for the most part, a clean, efficient sewage treatment plant. It is an expensive, modern facility that operates with a solid environmental record. It fully treats all sewage before releasing it into the Tar River.

Rocky Mount, 75 miles upstream, allows shocking amounts of treated and untreated sewage to flow freely into the Tar River. That city operates a wastewater treatment bypass — a pipe that carries sewage to the river rather than to the treatment plant. When it rains, that bypass allows Rocky Mount to dump millions of gallons of partially treated and untreated sewage into the Tar River — legally.

Both treatment methods are approved by different branches of the same state agency — the Division of Environmental Management.

The result of Rocky Mount's dumping is nauseating, even to the most jaded observer. The Reflector's news stories described human waste lining the river banks where that bypass joins the Tar. Photographs showed condoms and sanitary napkins mingled with dried waste in trees.

To view those photographs was to ask why — a mere decade away from the 21st century — dumping unsuitably treated sewage in a river is legal. And to view them was to ask with anger what can be done to change the scenario.

Rocky Mount is under order by the federal Environmental Protection Agency to clean up its act by 1991. A judicial agreement with EPA requires the city to eliminate the bypass that dumps sewage in the Tar.

But Rocky Mount says renovations to its treatment plant may not eliminate the dumping and the city may request an extension of bypass operations — a request that will likely be granted.

The state DEM — again, the agency charged with protecting the river — says it may even increase the plant's effluent levels or impose two sets of levels — one for normal weather and one for flood periods.

Why on earth would any agency funded by taxpayer money adopt such a cavalier attitude toward pollution? Why would either the citizens of Rocky Mount or North Carolina tolerate it? When will North Carolina have municipal sewage disposal regulations with meaning, and watchdog agencies to enforce them?

Those are questions that must be asked of the region's elected officials until they reply. They are questions that demand a direct response from Rocky Mount and from DEM.

The Tar flows softly into the Pamlico River at Washington, N.C. With it flows pollution from broad sources, among them municipal sewage plants. The fish and crabs that have died in nearly every nook and cranny of that waterway in record numbers this year were killed by poor water quality. Pollution is the culprit but flaccid policy is the accessory. If the problems of the Pamlico are to be eased, that feebleness must change to muscle.

Sunday Morning Notes

Todd Harris, sales coordinator in The Daily Reflector's advertising department, has four recreational aims in life.

One is to parachute, another is to obtain a pilot's license, another is to become a certified scuba diver and the fourth is to hang glide.

At age 25, he has accomplished one mission. Todd made his first sky dive about a week ago.

Todd says two friends at his church, Grace Free Will Baptist told him about the joys of sky diving. His interest aroused, he began training with a club at an airport near Farmville. Training involved jumping from the rear of a truck, practicing rolls and tumbles. As a trainee he jumped off backward and learned to protect the rib cage and face.

While most jumpers prefer to pack their own chutes more experienced jumpers did it for the beginners, explaining carefully how it was done.

There is no way to practice that first jump. The day comes and you board the plane and take off into the heavens. That day came on July 8 between 1:30 and 2 p.m. Todd boarded a plane with two or three other jumpers and a jump master. Beginning jumpers use a static line which opens the chute automatically when they jump and that was the case with Todd.

There are some pre-jump jitters and Todd says the blast of cool air when the door was opened had a calming effect. At any rate he was soon out of the plane and stepped off into space. Once the jump is initiated, the certainty is that you will eventually find the ground. Todd says his first impression was that he couldn't find the field and had no idea whether he would hit the landing zone.

As he descended, however, he soon spotted the field and expertly maneuvered the chute into position. He landed where he was supposed to, except harder than he planned.

"It was an exhilarating experience," Todd says. "It was something I wanted to do that very few people have done."

Will he do it again? That he will. He has plans for future jumps and he now has a jump certificate.

His coworkers were shaking their heads on Monday when Todd told of his parachuting experience. At The Daily Reflector he is expected to remain in a very exclusive club.

Off To The Hammock With A Book

Ellen Goodman

BOSTON — This is the year an author finally got a good reason to fear the wrath of a book critic: The Ayatollah made blasphemy a capital offense. Salman Rushdie went into hiding. Just entering a bookstore was, for a time, an act of some daring. And more than one bookstore owner found himself under attack for political and not literary sensibility.

All of this put books in a new light. After all, how many of the stars in the best-seller firmament are worth risking life and limb for? Who among us would throw her body over a stack of Danielle Steel's "Star." Might we not at least approve rapping the knuckles of people who turn movies into non-book books like "Batman"?

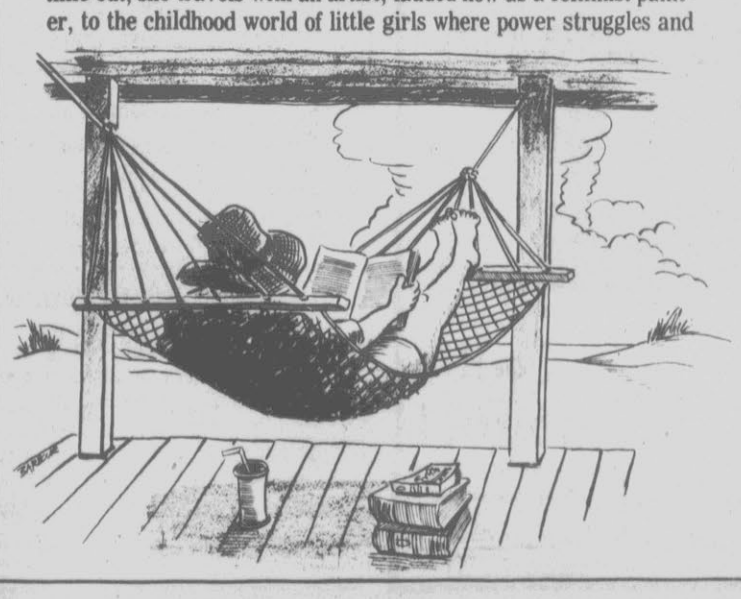

If trash writing were a criminal offense, there would be no shortage of targets among the best-sellers this summer. On the fiction list we have a murder of a gossip writer. On the non-fiction list we have a gossip writer who should at least be in solitary for what he did to "A Woman Named Jackie."

And if, by the way, "All I Really Need to Know I Learned in Kindergarten" why pay $15.95 to find it out?

Thus, the necessity to weed through serious literary offenders just to find a good read brings me to my annual offering: an utterly idiosyncratic summer reading list. What follows are no more or less than the books that I have read and enjoyed. No felons among them.

To begin with, three novels by accomplished female, even feminist, writers that all seem to be pushing against the reassuring cliche: that women form a gentler, kinder gender and their world would be a more loving and peaceful place.

First among these is Margaret Atwood's novel, "Cat's Eye." In her earlier futuristic work, "The Handmaid's Tale," Atwood created a chilling theocratic society and its place for women. This time out, she travels with an artist, lauded now as a feminist painter, to the childhood world of little girls where power struggles and psychological games are more devastating than fistfights. She gets the shifting sands of "best friendships" just right.

Alison Lurie's story also revolves around an artist and around feminism. The main character, Polly Alter, sets out with a list of feminist cliches, determined to write about the oppression of an obscure painter by the men in her life. Instead she unravels, "The Truth About Lorin Jones" — "she was not a very nice person" — and the truth about herself.

The last of this trio is "John Dollar," the dark and rich tale, written by Marianne Wiggins, the wife who is now sharing Salman Rushdie's exile. Wiggins set out wondering what would happen to girls marooned on a desert island. This female "Lord of the Flies" is finally, beautifully unnerving.

After that mystical island, Anne Tyler's Baltimore may seem refreshingly down-to-earth. For my money, "Breathing Lessons," is Tyler at her finest. Her characters, Maggie and Ira, are quirky and ordinary. Their marriage is strong and impossible. Their disappointment as parents is palpable and deniable — and described with great compassion.

Marriage is the subject as well of "Angle of Repose." Wallace Stegner's 1971 novel is the sort of paperback you find on a cottage shelf if you're lucky. The subject — the dueling, difficult and lasting marriage of an artist to an engineer in the Old West — is hearty hammock fare.

Two novelists make their second appearance on this summer's list. Louise Erdrich has written another spare and telling story of Native American life. "Tracks" goes back to the winter of 1912 when the weakened, diminished Chippewa tribe "unraveled like a coarse rope." Fay Weldon, the British writer, goes back to her turf as well, in a rambunctious read about a middle-aged television astronomer who goes off with "The Leader of the Band." Weldon's second best, but it has a nice bite.

There is room for two newcomers this summer. In "The Woman Who Was Not All There," Paula Sharp does for Marjorie LeBlanc, a surviving, rather passive single working mother of the South, what Carolyn Chute did for the Beans of Egypt, Maine. In "The Man Who Knew Cary Grant," Jonathan Schwartz recreates a father and son relationship, through stories that touch the small, ripe moments in their lives together.

Summer reading is for stories, but non-fiction deserves a postscript to this list. Sissela Bok, who has the guts to tackle the big questions (she has already "done" lying and secrecy), took on peace this year. "A Strategy for Peace" outlines a hopeful and solid case for international moral constraints. It's a change from the "hard-headed realism" that points to the inevitability of war.

Jill Ker Conway, an academic who doesn't write like one, has a thoughtful and unusual growing-up memoir about being female and Australian. "The Road from Coorain" is infused with understanding about the mother and life she had to struggle away from.

And lastly, notes from the domestic war front. Judith Wallerstein's "Second Chances" is a welcome revisionist look at the post-divorce fallout. The voices of the children of divorce, even the adult children, are particularly compelling as they struggle with their own relationships in the shadow of their parents' failure.

Thatcher Thrives On Battle

David Broder

LONDON — The political and economic wobbles that have hit Britain as Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher begins her second decade in office have led to predictions that she will be out at the next election. Even though every poll taken this summer shows her Tories losing to Labor by more than 10 points, that judgment is premature by many a mile.

The smart politicians on all sides concede that if she can get inflation, which has doubled in the past year to 8.3 percent, back down to a tolerable level without bringing on a recession, she has many a high card to play. The budget surpluses now being accumulated can be turned into sweeteners for transportation, education and health services, before she calls the next election in 1991 or 1992. Peace and prosperity are always hard to beat.

But if one takes a longer perspective, it seems clear that Thatcher will not — and cannot — dominate British politics in the 1990s as she did during the past decade. At 63, she could go another ten years in power. But politically, her time is running out.

The polls consistently show that a majority of voters find her free-market philosophy insensitive to what they consider important social goals. Despite her well-publicized embrace of environmentalism this past winter, her adamant opposition to European Community standards for clean water and even cigarette warning labels fueled the protest movement that gave the unorganized Greens 15 percent of the vote in Britain in the recent European Parliament elections.

Other constituencies are also getting restive. Business leaders worry about her aversion to the European Economic Community costing London its position as the leading financial and trading center on this side of the Atlantic. Young people find her foot-dragging on that issue puzzling and her moral lectures more than a little patronizing.

Like many other strong leaders, Thatcher has found it temperamentally impossible to groom a successor. Indeed, she has diminished, through leaks and semi-public rebukes, anyone in her Cabinet who might be thought strong enough to replace her.

One of the must revealing moments of my three months here came at a Tory news conference before the European Parliament elections. Thatcher was monopolizing the discussion, as usual. Sir Geoffrey Howe, the Foreign Minister, sitting next to her, murmured a slight correction to one phrase she had used, confusing "the Council of Europe" with "the Council of Ministers." His voice was barely above the level of a stage whisper; but she shot him a withering glance that said, "How dare you?" For five minutes thereafter, you could see the poor man calculating the ways in which he might be punished.

The voters understand that Thatcher will allow them no alternative within the Tory Party, if she has her way. That is why Michael Heseltine, who resigned from her Cabinet three years ago, is so often called the next leader of the Tory Party and the next Prime Minister but one.

'But if one takes a longer perspective, it seems clear that Thatcher will not — and cannot — dominate British politics in the 1990s as she did during the past decade. At 63, she could go another ten years in power. But politically, her time is running out. The polls consistently show that a majority of voters find her free-market philosophy insensitive to what they consider important social goals. Despite her well-publicized embrace of environmentalism this past winter, her adamant opposition to European Community standards for clean water ... fueled the protest movement that gave the unorganized Greens 15 percent of the vote in Britain in the recent European Parliament elections.'

What might come in between would have to be a Labor government. The "third option" that was presented, with much fanfare, by David Owen and David Steele in their Social Democratic-Liberal Alliance of the mid-1980s has petered out.

Owen, as egotistical as he is talented, has reduced his Social Democrats to a tiny personal club. And the old Liberals, under the inept Paddy Ashdown, have had so many changes in identity that they are lampooned as the "We-Promise-We-Won't-Change-Our-Name-This-Week" party.

For better or worse, Britain is back to two-party politics. Many who left the Labor Party earlier this decade to protest its unilateral disarmament, loony-left policies and its subservience to the trade unions are coming home. Neil Kinnock is making it easier for them.

He has shifted the party's policies toward the middle. A few weeks ago, he walked into the convention of the biggest union, the Transport and General Workers, which had just reaffirmed its commitment to unilateralism, and said bluntly that he would not allow its obduracy to cost his party another election.

Kinnock is still judged by a good many critics to lack the temperament and the intellect of a Prime Minister. But for the first time, he is proving more adept than Thatcher at both day-to-day political tactics and at long-term strategy. He has assembled a strong shadow cabinet and a campaign team that may be more skilled than its Tory counterpart.

Labor has had mid-term leads over the Conservatives before, only to see them disappear. Kinnock argued in a recent interview that this one "is much more sustainable," because "people have a much better understanding of what she (Thatcher) is up to" and because Labor is a more credible alternative.

But everything must go wrong for Thatcher in the next two years for Labor to win. Never in its history has it achieved a swing of the size it would need to crack her 100-seat majority and especially her impregnable base in the prospering southeast of England. Labor's deputy leader, Roy Hattersley, recently told reporters that, "If we were 25 seats down, there's no question we'd win the next election. But where we're starting, it's a question if we'll win or just come close."

Whichever it is, Thatcher faces a future with more challenges and less ease. But she is someone who thrives on battle.

The Germans Will Be Staying

Richard Cohen

BONN — With much hoopla and more than a dollop of historical significance, President Bush went to Poland. With no hoopla but possibly more significance, Chancellor Helmut Kohl of West Germany decided not to take a similar trip. He can wait.

Kohl's trip was also scheduled for this month. Like Bush's, it would have been historically significant since the Poles and the Germans were World War II enemies and even today are hardly pals. But Kohl's trip would have been different from Bush's in a significant way: Kohl was packed like an American President of old — suitcases brimming with money. For the moment, they stay snapped shut.

It is not too much to say that West Germany is a burgher of a nation — prosperous and sitting on a horde of cash from an enormous, and growing, trade surplus generated by an incredible economy. It is not too much to say, either, that West Germany intends to use its money to re-establish what used to be its sphere of interest in Eastern Europe. "It is our task to take care of Eastern Europe," said a high-ranking government official. "You take care of Central and South America."

With that statement, the world shifted on its geopolitical axis. West Germany is reasserting itself as a European power of consequence and the preeminent nation of Central Europe. Its power this time is not military but economic, and nowhere is that clearer than in the aid package West Germany has offered Poland. Like the United States, West Germany wants its aid funneled to specific programs. Unlike the United States, though, it is talking big bucks — although how big is yet to be determined. Suffice it to say that a West German official characterized Bush's offer to Poland as "peanuts." Germany, he said, will do much better.

What is true for Poland is true for Hungary — and has been true for East Germany. In due course, Czechoslovakia will follow. These are relatively small countries where West Germany can have an impact and where, in the past, it has.

History is too rambunctious a fellow to repeat itself precisely. Since Germany was last the preeminent European power, much has changed. West Germany's relationship with Poland, for instance, has been immeasurably complicated by World War II. Too many Poles and too many Germans still hate each other — the Poles for the German invasion of 1939 and the atrocities that followed (Auschwitz is the German name for the Polish town of Oswiecim), the Germans for the postwar Polish seizure of German lands. Some of what is now Poland was once Germany.

'What is true for Poland is true for Hungary — and has been true for East Germany. In due course, Czechoslovakia will follow. These are relatively small countries where West Germany can have an impact ... .'

So West Germany's attitude toward Poland is complicated. Guilt feelings remain — that and a keen desire to see democracy flourish in Eastern Europe. But the West Germans, unlike, say, the Americans, want something in return. These are called "cultural" matters and some of them are downright grisly. Poland is littered with German war dead — some 500,000 of them — and West Germany would like the bodies collected and buried in properly maintained cemeteries.

West Germany wants to protect or enhance the rights of so-called ethnic Germans still living in Poland. It wants the Poles to permit German-language newspapers and cultural associations — and to permit Germans to use the old German place-names of renamed Polish towns on their passports.

For many Germans, these are emotional matters. For the government, though, these demands may be more pragmatic. Nearly 500,000 ethnic Germans left Poland for West Germany in the last two years alone, helping to create a West German backlash against immigration and causing the Kohl government no end of political trouble.

The picture you get of the ultimate West German role in Central and Eastern Europe depends on to whom you are talking. Most government officials extol the concept of a united Europe. Poland, for instance, would be aided by a consortium of Western European powers in conjunction with the United States. Others emphasize a unique West German role — its special historic relationship with Eastern Europe — and while they maintain that Germany will never go it alone, they are nevertheless clear that Bonn will call the shots. Much has changed in Europe, but not everything. Money still talks.

German-Polish negotiations are in abeyance, stalling a Kohl visit. Warsaw wants more than Bonn is willing to provide and, anyway, Poland for the moment effectively lacks a government that could conclude the talks. But, in principle, the cultural questions have been settled (in West Germany's favor) and, sooner or later, the money will be forthcoming.

When President Bush was in Bonn last spring, he rhetorically elevated West Germany to an equal of the United States. It was tardy recognition by an American President that a ward had come of age — that, especially as under Ronald Reagan, the traditional view of Britain as the leading European power no longer conformed to reality. Nowhere was that made clearer than in the difference between Bush's trip to Poland and the one Kohl sooner or later will make.

The Americans paid a call. When the Germans come, they will, in effect, be staying.

The Old Testament Prophet

George Will

WASHINGTON — Letting the chips (of other people) fall where they may is an imperative of contemporary journalism. In that scorched-earth, take-no-prisoners spirit, I must report having seen Dr. C. Everett Koop eat a Saturday lunch consisting of a martini, a hamburger and french fries. His departure from kill-joyism was wonderful to watch.

For eight years it has been fascinating to watch Koop, who has just resigned as Surgeon General. He looks like an Old Testament prophet and sometimes seems to be — as some of those scolds were — comprehensively miffed about the way humanity is behaving.

Man is the only animal that needs a Surgeon General because man is the only animal that does not instinctively eat, drink, smoke (ever see an elk light up?) or behave sexually the way he should. As Surgeon General, Koop left office doing what he had done so well so often, calling a lot of bluffs. He did so by clarifying public choices and individual responsibilities about health.

'Man is the only animal that needs a Surgeon General because man is the only animal that does not instinctively eat, drink, smoke (ever see an elk light up?) or behave sexually the way he should.'

Recently, 99 senators and a unanimous House of Representatives urged him to do something about drunk driving. He did. Now they probably regret having urged him.

He has recommended, among many other things, new taxes, restrictions on advertising of beverages, and reduction of the permissible blood-alcohol content (BAC) of drivers from 0.10 to 0.04 percent. His severity gets general support from a RAND Corporation study that argues this premise: Taxes on a particular activity (such as smoking or drinking) should cover the costs of that activity to others.

The RAND study argues that the social costs of smoking (principally health care, lost productivity and fire damage) are almost balanced by cigarette taxes and the savings (Social Security, pension benefits, nursing home care) that accrue to society because smokers die prematurely. (After age 20, a smoker loses 137 minutes of life per pack.)

However, drinking costs society about twice as much as drinkers pay in alcohol taxes. These costs include a huge burden on the criminal-justice system. Many heavy drinkers die very young, before they contribute much to pension funds, and others retire early and become drains on pension and disability funds.

About 24,000 annual traffic deaths (one every 22 minutes) are alcohol-related. These are about half the traffic deaths each year and include approximately 7,400 victims who were not drinking. (Only — only! — about 2,400 people die annually because of other people's smoking.) And 534,000 people (one per minute) are involved in alcohol-related crashes.

Koop's strongest case is for increased taxes on beer, the preferred drink of young people. Drunk driving is the leading killer of adolescents. More than 40 percent of all deaths of people aged 15 to 20 are in crashes and at least half involve alcohol. Federal taxes on beer and wine have been unchanged since 1951, so in many supermarkets a six-pack of beer costs less than a similar quantity of soda.

New taxes and restrictions on advertising are debatable. What is indisputable is that public education — the Surgeon General's principal task — works. In this broadly educated, information-acquiring middle-class country, dissemination of public-health information is the most cost-effective thing government does.

Medicine is reducing the amount of illness that is not behaviorally based. And the dissemination of information is reducing behavior that causes illness. But that reduction is primarily among classes that are skilled at acquiring information and modifying their behavior on the basis of it. As a result, the least educated (and poorest) Americans have an increased proportion of the nation's health problems. AIDS, for example, is increasingly a disease of inner-city intravenous drug abusers and their sexual partners.

There is, then, this paradox. Behaviorly based illness is not the result of bad luck, but of bad choices. As education reduces the role of randomness in public-health problems, society becomes more regressive: The disadvantaged are least able to take advantage of one key to health: information.

Still, information, wrapped in exhortations, is the Surgeon General's business. Koop's campaign — crusade, really — for a smokeless society by the year 2000 has done much to stigmatize smoking to the point that some employers will not hire people who smoke either on or off the job. This practice has provoked tobacco-growing Virginia to ban discrimination against smokers. There is a blizzard of lawsuits accusing employers of violating employee privacy rights, and some smokers are claiming they are handicapped and entitled to special treatment.

All this constructive irritability is part of Koop's splendid legacy. He has quickened the nation's understanding of the connection between individuals' choices and public health.

Sleepy Appearance Doesn't Mask Fear In Beijing

By Katny Wilhelm
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BEIJING — Martial law has not changed the summer rhythm of this dusty city. A hot sun hypnotizes its 10 million residents into slow motion, and soldiers stand sleepily under bright umbrellas.

The soldiers squint and play idly with the safety catches on their automatic rifles. It is possible to catch them napping, stocking feet sticking out the windows of a parked army jeep.

Some people stroll up to them boldly, ask them where they are from and offer them soda.

But despite the mantra-like assurances of city authorities, Beijing has not returned to normal. Arrests continue of people who took part in the student-led protests for democratic reform. Some people are taken away as looking "suspicious," questioned, beaten and released.

A bookstore where liberals used to meet has been closed. The latest issue of a magazine has been halted at the post office because of an article that censors deemed harmful.

Books by scholars who are wanted by police have been banned, and Culture Ministry workers have raided private bookstalls to seize copies.

At least one book has been banned even as it was being published, a Chinese source said.

Countless people pass their days in fear of punishment under the government's harsh new policy emphasizing class struggle and the need to stamp out Western-style liberalism.

"I invited you to come to our home for lunch and we bought beer and things to make dumplings, but I'm sorry, you can't come," a Chinese intellectual said with embarrassment as he met a Western friend recently.

"They said foreigners should not come to our homes," he explained. Even meeting a Westerner in public made him fearful, and he cast nervous glances around him.

"Things will get better, let's wait a few months," he said before merging with relief into the crowd.

He was brave to keep the appointment. Many Chinese have stopped answering their telephones and few are willing to talk to foreigners.

"It's like the Cultural Revolution," said a European reporter who was in China during the 1966-76 upheaval, during which almost all contact between Chinese and foreigners was forbidden.

Asked about the restrictions, government spokesman Yuan Mu said it was for the foreigners' protection "because there are so many Chinese and you don't know who is good and who is bad. It is not written on their foreheads."

All over the city, hundreds of thousands of teachers, doctors, journalists and factory workers who cheered or joined in the 7-week-long protests face investigation.

Most will not be arrested, predicted a Chinese source, but they will spend several tense weeks as Communist Party officials at their work units investigate their cases. At a minimum, they will be required to acknowledge the error of their ways, the source said.

Political education already has begun for work units, protesters and bystanders alike. Graduating college students spent several weeks studying speeches by top leaders condemning the protests as the work of traitors.

Participants were urged to speak their hearts, according to one official newspaper, but several said they just repeated words from the speeches.

Teachers also have had long study sessions. Education appears lightest for production line workers, who are being pressed to make up for the losses of the weeks of protest.

Testimonials from protesters have begun appearing in the official media, confessing their actions but saying they now understand and approve the government's crackdown.

"Motherland, country, we were wrong," said one statement attributed to a group of students.

The relaxed attitude of the soldiers belies the tight security. New plainclothes guards watch comings and goings at foreign apartment compounds and several embassies, including the American Embassy, where leading dissident Fang Lizhi has taken shelter.

Chinese who enter a major office tower must show identification. Switchboard operators at some Chinese government units demand callers identify themselves before putting them through.

Tremors Cost Japan Resort Tourist Trade

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ITO, Japan — Hundreds of hotels and inns closed their doors Saturday after tremors and the threat of a new volcanic eruption caused thousands of tourists to cancel their reservations in this seaside resort.

Hiroko Seki, a spokeswoman for Japan's coast guard, said bubbles were seen Saturday near the site of an underwater volcano several miles off Ito that erupted Thursday.

Nobuo Fukuda, a Central Meteorological Agency official, said more eruptions are likely. Volcano researchers said another much stronger eruption could send ash and stones over Ito.

The meteorological agency said there were more than 100 new tremors Saturday in Ito, a city of 72,000 residents 60 miles southwest of Tokyo. Most tremors were too weak to be felt by humans.

Since June 30, more than 22,800 earthquakes, including nearly 600 strong enough to be felt by people, have been recorded in the area.

Veterinarians said that over the last two weeks, they have treated 65 dogs and cats for disorders caused by the quakes, Kyodo News Service said. It did not explain what disorders the animals suffered.

The tremors and eruption, and the threat of more to come, have dealt a serious blow to Ito's main industry, tourism. Hotel operators say virtually all reservations have been canceled for the next several weeks.

At Ito Station on Saturday morning, no tourists were seen arriving on the special express trains from Tokyo, which ordinarily are packed with a weekend exodus of city dwellers.

Officials said more than 11,000 of 12,000 visitors expected over the weekend had canceled their hotel reservations and most of the remaining visitors were journalists covering the volcanic eruption.

All but about a dozen of the resort's 550 hotels and inns closed their doors because "no one is coming," said a doorman at a beachside hotel.

Mitsuteru Miyazawa, the city's deputy mayor, said all public schools would be closed at least until Wednesday as a precaution.

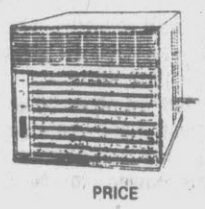

On Thursday, about 200 people left their seaside homes after the eruption to spend the night in Buddhist temples and schools. But most citizens remained in their homes on Saturday, Miyazawa said.

The Japanese archipelago, which was created by volcanic activity, is believed to have about 80 active volcanoes. In January, Mount Tokachi, on Japan's northern island of Hokkaido, erupted several times.

Football Dates Tough To Make

ECU, Temple, Southwest Louisiana, Southern Miss., Cincinnati Face Similar Challenge

By Tom Morris
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

(This is the first of a series examining the challenges and concerns facing five southern and eastern Division I-A independent football programs including East Carolina.)

Some football independents face the wallflower syndrome when it comes to scheduling because it's hard to line up 11 attractive dates each fall.

For schools like East Carolina, Temple, Southern Mississippi, Cincinnati and Southwest Louisiana, one of the biggest tasks for their football programs is developing a schedule which generates big bucks without also sounding the death knoll for your program.

ECU has played each of the four schools at one time or another since 1981.

Out of the five schools, USM has been the most successful, with four straight winning seasons under its belt, including a mark of 10-2 last year. The team was 4-7 in 1984.

Each of the other schools has flirted with success.

USL has gone 6-5 four of the past five seasons, with a 4-7 mark in 1985.

Cincinnati was 5-6 in 1985 and 1986, recording a combined 9-24 mark in '84, '87 and '88.

Temple was 6-5 in 1984, it's only winning season in five years.

Six years ago, ECU went a fan-pleasing 8-3. But since that time the Pirates have posted an overall record of 14-41. It's best mark was 5-6 in 1987.

Other than USM, none of the schools has even come close to putting itself in position for a bowl game and the subsequent recruiting, monetary and exposure rewards that come with such an invitation.

Scheduling for these schools is a Catch-22 situation. If a school is on a down-streak with several years of sub-par seasons, the power-elite programs will not agree to home-and-home series.

In extreme cases, they won't even trade two for one or three for one. On the other hand, if the school becomes successful, some schools won't agree to a schedule for fear of losing the game.

"We have a scheduling problem," Temple coach Jerry Berndt said. "There are some people that don't want to schedule us. We have the kind of program that could beat anybody on any given day.

"Some want to schedule us, but they only want to play us at their place. There are some unfair situations from not being in a conference."

Yet each of these College Football Association schools is committed to trying to achieve success on the gridiron.

A competitive schedule is a must in order to boost attendance. In turn, a big gate is necessary in order to provide funding not only for the football program, but in many ways the entire athletic budget.

One way in which these schools can obtain a big payoff is by traveling to some of the bigger and more powerful schools around the country, against say a Penn State or a Florida State.

That means a big payoff and, in most cases, a sure loss. Add in enough of these big payoffs/sure losses, and it can have a negative effect on your home gate, thus putting you back at square one.

"Scheduling as an independent is a job within a job," ECU Director of Athletics Dave Hart said. "It's hard for people to understand that statement. We're determined to continue to have a competitive schedule, yet we've made a concerted effort to strike a balance."

In year's past, ECU had the reputation of a college football mercenary, going anywhere for a big payoff. In 1986, the Pirates faced top-10 opponents Penn State, Auburn and Miami on the road en route to a 2-9 season.

In recent years ECU has begun to make the schedule more realistic. Next year, the Pirates still face a

ECU's Junior Robinson leads returnees in the secondary

Experience Returns In The Secondary

This might be the year the revolving door of names in the East Carolina secondary comes to a stop.

In a reversal of roles this season, the names in the defensive backfield are the same ones as last year, but it's the coaches who have changed.

This year, however, ECU will likely start as many as three seniors in the defensive backfield, led by all-star candidate Junior Robinson.

The other two seniors are cornerback Ricky Torain, who was named the outstanding defensive player in spring practice, and strong safety Brian McPhatter.

Not since Kevin Walker played for the Pirates in 1985 has ECU had what could be considered a veteran secondary.

Ellis Dillahunt, now with the Washington Redskins, was a standout safety for ECU between 1985-88, but he was often one of the few experienced players in the secondary during the three years he started.

"I would say as a whole they are a pretty experienced group," Pagano said. "I think it's a great group of guys. Not only the first four, but the four after that have a chance to help out and contribute."

Chuck Pagano

Robinson (5-9, 178) started at cornerback before moving to safety last year, while McPhatter (6-2, 203) started at outside linebacker. Torain (5-10, 166) has started on and off for two years at cornerback.

There also is more depth in the secondary than in past years. Backup free safety Ed Brogdon (5-9, 179, Jr.) has been a starter

Fignon, LeMond Still Close

GAP, France — Laurent Fignon and Greg LeMond reached the base of the Alps seven seconds apart Saturday with an important time trial looming in the Tour de France.

Jelle Nijdam of the Netherlands took the 14th leg of the Tour de France Saturday as the cycling classic headed into the mountains.

Fignon, the French 1983 and 1984 winner, and LeMond, the only American champion in the history of the event, stayed 1-2 on the eve of an important individual trial Sunday that could portend the eventual winner.

Sunday's 25-mile leg goes from Gap to Orcieres-Merlette into the mountains, with two climbs rated first category in steepness and difficulty. The second ends the race at 6,003 feet above sea level.

LeMond won the last time trial to Rennes on July 6, putting him in the lead for five days. Fignon paced his Super U squad to victory in the team time trial on July 2.

Fignon took over the overall lead last Tuesday and still has a seven-second margin over LeMond.

Charly Mottet is third overall, 57 seconds back. He and Fignon tried to steal some seconds in the previous stage when they attempted a break, but failed to get away.

"Any time you can gain some seconds, you have to try," Fignon said.

Meanwhile Saturday, Nijdam won in a sprint over French rider Pascal Poisson in the 148-mile journey from Marseille to Gap.

It was Nijdam's second individual stage win of the Tour. He won the fourth stage that reentered France at Wasquehal on July 4.

France's Marc Madiot and Spain's Laudelino Cubino took turns trying to break away from the pack, but the riders gradually were swallowed up.

Poisson and the Netherlands' Frans Maasen made an attempt about six miles from the end before Nijdam caught them and won with a sprint, completing the distance in 6 hours, 26 minutes, 55 seconds.

Hulbert, Sutton Top Busch Event

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WILLIAMSBURG, Va. — Mike Hulbert put together a bogey-free round of 3-under-par 68 and held off a charging Hal Sutton for a one-shot lead following Saturday's third round of the Anheuser-Busch Golf Classic.

Sutton, seeking to break a three-year winless streak, came from four shots off the pace with a 6-under 65.

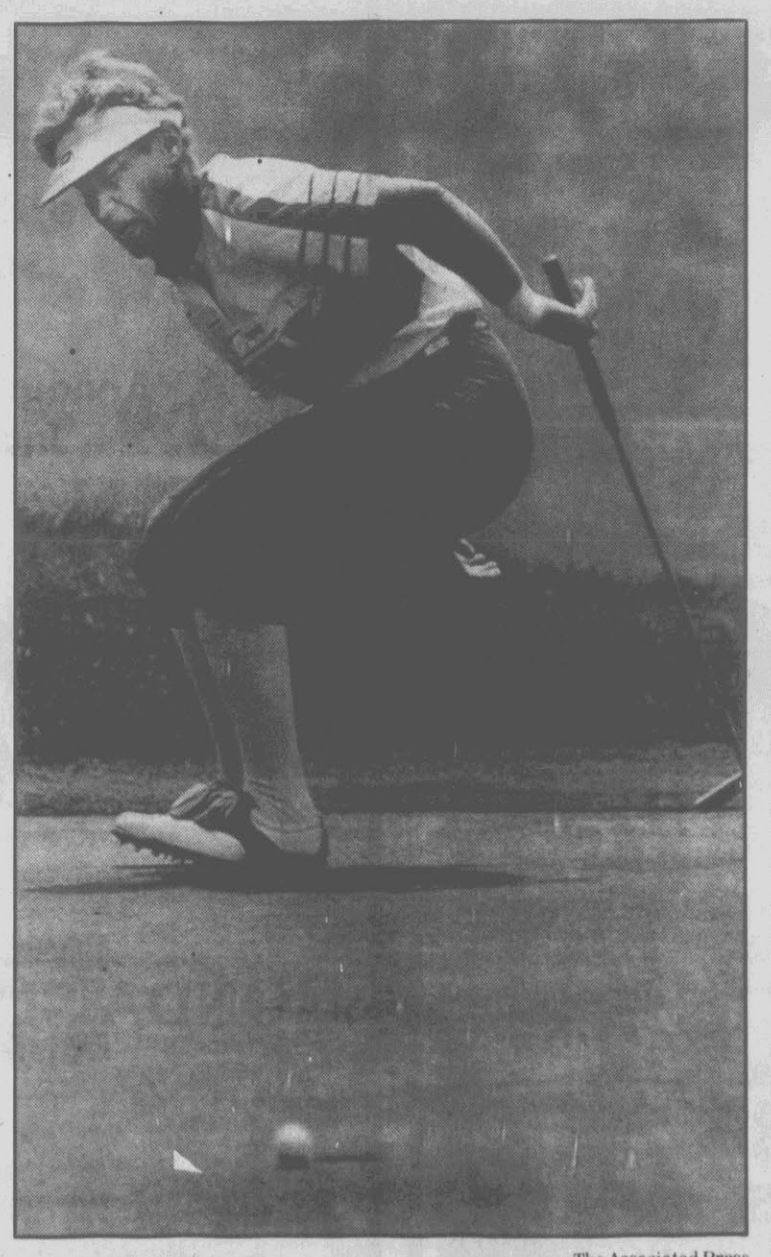

Hulbert, 31, whose lone PGA Tour victory came at the 1986 St. Jude Classic, was at 14-under-par 199 after three tours of Kingsmill Golf Club's 6,776-yard layout along the James River.

Sutton, who won the last of his seven pro titles at the 1986 Memorial Tournament, made his lone bogey at Kingsmill's 438-yard 18th hole. His second shot found a greenside bunker, and he missed a six-footer for par.

Hulbert also had problems at 18, where his drive hit a tree on the right side of the fairway and his 3-wood approach shot landed about 15 yards short of the green. But he chipped to within five feet and sank the par putt.

Hulbert began the day at 11-under with a one-shot lead over Tim Norris

King's Stumble Boosts Sheehan

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LAKE ORION, Mich. — Betsy King learned the hard way that it's impossible to coast in a major championship.

King blew a three-shot lead on the final two holes when she stumbled home with a double bogey-bogey finish Saturday, dropping her into a tie with Patty Sheehan after three rounds of the U.S. Women's Open.

"The way I feel right now, I can't wait until tomorrow night," said King, the hottest golfer on the LPGA Tour this season. "I've been under the gun for a long time."

Sheehan, who shot a 4-under-par 67 in the second round, had 69 Saturday while King shot 72. They are tied at three under for the tournament, two shots ahead of Colleen Walker, the only other golfer under par.

"If 72 is the worst score I shoot, I'll be in good shape," King said.

Marie-Laure de Lorenzi-Taya, a French citizen living in Barcelona, Spain, was next at par, 213.

King, whose only major championship came in 1987, when she won the Dinah Shore Classic, started the day 4-under and got to 7-under with a birdie on the 13th hole before the tough Scottish-style course, complete with knee-high rough, began to strike back.

Sheehan, seeking her first Open title, had been 3-over after the first round and clearly appeared to have momentum on her side heading into Sunday's final round in the $450,000 tournament. She was 6-under since teeing off at the start of the second round.

"I'm a little surprised about my position," said the 32-year-old Sheehan, who twice has been an Open runner-up. "Tomorrow, I'll try to be patient. I'm not putting a lot of pressure on myself this week.

Sheehan's 7-iron to the huge 18th green hit Walker's ball. It was placed about 12 feet from the cup and she got down in two from there.

The 33-year-old King, seeking her fifth victory of the season, began her collapse with a bogey at the 520-yard, par-5 15th hole where she put her drive in the tall heather that lines Indianwood's fairways.

"I missed one shot, at No. 15, and there goes the confidence," King said. "I came off that shot. That was pitiful. I don't know why that is. It comes and goes.

"I'll admit that I'm out there with a three- or four-shot lead and I changed my strategy. The first time it entered my mind was at No. 14. After that, I thought, 'Let's play aggressively.'"

But she couldn't seem to turn it back on.

Gaetti Keys Twins Past Boston

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MINNEAPOLIS — Gary Gaetti's opposite-field homer broke a 2-2 tie in the eighth inning as Minnesota beat the Boston Red Sox 3-2 Saturday, ending an eight-game losing streak, the Twins' longest since 1985.

Juan Berenguer, 5-3, pitched two innings of scoreless relief. Jeff Reardon pitched the ninth for his 15th save.

The Red Sox played the game under protest after umpires ruled that left-handed reliever Joe Price had to face Carmen Castillo in the sixth inning. Price had thrown just one pitch, to Jim Dwyer, who argued a strike call and was ejected.

Boston manager Joe Morgan called in Smithson to pitch to the right-handed hitter Castillo, but the umpires forced Price to stay in the game. They cited a rule which states that any reliever must pitch until at least one hitter is disposed of. Price struck out Castillo.

Minnesota's offense continued to struggle. The Twins entered the game with just 25 runs scored in their last 12 games, 11 of them losses. They needed two Boston errors to get two runs in the second inning.

Orioles.....11
Angels.....9

BALTIMORE — Mike Devereaux's disputed ninth-inning home run broke a 9-9 tie and gave the Baltimore Orioles an 11-9 victory over the California Angels Saturday night.

Devereaux's drive to left was called fair by third base umpire James Joyce and sparked a heated argument from Angels manager Doug Rader and catcher Lance Parrish. Rader was pushed by first base umpire Ken Kaiser during the argument and Parrish had to be restrained by several of his teammates.

Bob McClure relieved Bryan Harvey after Larry Sheets tied the game with a two-run single. Devereaux was the only batter faced by McClure.

Harvey, 1-2, who was charged with three runs in one inning, took the loss. Mark Williamson, the fourth Orioles' pitcher, got the win to raise his record to 6-2.

Royals.....7
Yankees.....1

NEW YORK — Danny Tartabull snapped an eighth-inning tie with a three-run homer and Luis Aquino won his first game in two months, leading the Kansas City Royals over the New York Yankees 7-1 Saturday.

Aquino, 4-4, pitched a five-hitter for his first complete game since last Aug. 14, walked three and struck out one. He retired 15 of the last 16 Yankees.

Lee Guetterman, 2-2, relieved to open the eighth with the score tied 1-1 and allowed hits to five of the six batters he faced. Yankees starter Chuck Cary, making his first appearance since June 14, had allowed two hits in the first seven innings.

Willie Wilson singled for his third hit of the game and Kevin Seitzer grounded into a forceout. Brett, who homered an inning later, singled to put runners on first and third and Tartabull hit his 11th home run.

Singles by Jim Eisenreich and Pat Tabler chased Guetterman and Bob Boone greeted Dale Mohorcic with an RBI single.

Cary, making his second career start after a month on the disabled list with a sprained back, walked five and struck out two. He gave up a run in the first but escaped a big inning with the help of left fielder Luis Polonia.

White Sox.....2
Brewers.....1

CHICAGO — Russ Morman, inserted into the lineup when Ivan Calderon hurt himself before the game, snapped a seventh-inning tie with a run-scoring double Saturday night, leading the Chicago White Sox over the Milwaukee Brewers 2-1.

Chicago won its third straight and is 9-2 against Milwaukee this season, including 5-0 at Comiskey Park.

Melido Perez, 6-10, allowed five hits, struck out two and walked three in seven innings. Bobby Thigpen got the last six outs to finish the combined six-hitter and get his 16th save in 21 opportunities.

Teddy Higuera, 3-4, gave up eight hits in 6 1-3 innings, struck out two and walked none.

With the score tied 1-1, Carlos Martinez singled off Higuera to open the seventh. Dan Pasqua sacrificed and Morman, put in the lineup when Calderon was injured limbering up, doubled down the left-field line.

Indians.....7
Rangers.....1

CLEVELAND — Joe Carter drove in four runs and Greg Swindell pitched a five-hitter for his eighth victory in nine starts to lead the Cleveland Indians over Nolan Ryan and the Texas Rangers 7-1 Saturday night.

Swindell, 12-2, and Ryan both worked on three days' rest after pitching in Tuesday's All-Star Game. Swindell struck out a season-high 10 and walked one in his fifth complete game.

Ryan, 10-5, allowed seven runs and seven hits in 5 1-3 innings, walking a season-high six and striking out seven.

Ryan relied heavily on breaking balls early, and the Indians weren't fooled, scoring three runs in the first. Jerry Browne led off with a double, Dion James walked and both scored on Carter's double.

Carter, who tripled in the fifth and hit another two-run double in the sixth, was thrown out at home by right fielder Ruben Sierra on Pete O'Brien's single, but O'Brien took second on the play and scored when Joey Belle, called up from Class AA Canton-Akron before the game, singled in his first major-league at-bat.

Texas cut it to 3-1 in the fifth but had the rally cut short by a controversial play on which Cecil Espy and Manager Bobby Valentine were ejected.

Jeff Kunkel walked, Jim Sundberg doubled him to third and Espy hit an RBI single, sending Sundberg to third.

Mariners.....9
Tigers.....3

DETROIT — Scott Bankhead won his seventh straight decision to match a club record as the Seattle Mariners beat Detroit 9-3 Saturday night, sending the Tigers to their 10th consecutive loss.

Bankhead, 9-4, allowed five hits and three runs in seven innings, striking out three and walking one. He tied the record set by Glenn Abbott in 1977 and equaled by Mark Langston in 1984 and Roy Thomas in 1985. Keith Comstock finished with two hitless innings.

Detroit, 31-57, is in its longest losing streak since June 1982, when the Tigers also lost 10 straight. Kevin Ritz, a right-hander making his major-league debut, allowed five runs and eight hits in four-plus innings.

Alvin Davis homered and Ken Griffey Jr., Greg Briley and Dave Valle drove in two runs each for Seattle, which has won five straight and 13 of 16. The Mariners had 16 hits and have 33 in their last two games.

Trailing 3-2, Seattle scored three runs in the fifth on Griffey's two-run, go-ahead single and an RBI single by Valle off Mike Henneman.

Blue Jays.....6
Athletics.....1

TORONTO — Fred McGriff went 4-for-4, including his 21st home run of the season, and Kelly Gruber homered for the third consecutive game with a two-run shot to power the Toronto Blue Jays to a 6-1 victory over the Oakland Athletics Saturday night.

Mike Flanagan, 5-6, checked the A's on nine hits over 6 23 innings. He struck out one and walked three as the Blue Jays won for the sixth time in their last seven games.

Dave Stewart, in one of his rare poor starts this season, gave up six runs on nine hits over four innings. Stewart, 13-5, struck out four and walked two.

The Blue Jays took a 2-0 lead in the first as Tony Fernandez homered off Stewart and McGriff singled in another run.

Jose Canseco's second home run of the season, a leadoff shot to deep left on a 3-2 count, trimmed the Blue Jays' lead to 2-1 in the top of the second.

But the Blue Jays came back in the third to tag Stewart for a pair of homers and a 5-1 lead.

NATIONAL LEAGUE

Reds.....5
Expos.....3

CINCINNATI — Eric Davis had three hits, and three RBIs as the Cincinnati Reds broke a five-game losing streak and handed Mark Langston his first National League road loss with a 5-3 victory Saturday night over the Montreal Expos.

Davis hit a two-run homer, his 17th, in the first inning to snap a streak of 15 scoreless innings by the Reds. He added an RBI single in the eighth.

Rick Mahler, 9-8, snapped a personal three-game losing streak with his first victory since June 7. He allowed six hits in eight innings, striking out three and walking two. John Franco pitched the final inning for his 23rd save in 25 opportunities.

Langston, 6-3, was 5-0 in his first six starts on the road after being traded from Seattle to the Expos on May 25.

Paul O'Neill broke a 3-3 tie and put the Reds ahead to stay with a single in the fifth. It scored Rolando Roomes, who had walked and stolen second.

Mets.....6
Braves.....4

ATLANTA — Tim Teufel's sacrifice fly snapped a seventh-inning tie Saturday night and the New York Mets beat the Atlanta Braves 6-4 for their fifth victory in six games.

Dave Magadan opened the seventh with a single off Paul Assenmacher, 1-3, and took third on Howard Johnson's double.

After Darryl Strawberry struck out, Kevin Elster ran for Magadan and Kevin McReynolds was walked intentionally, loading the bases. Teufel then hit his sacrifice fly to deep center field. Mark Carreon added an RBI single in the eighth.

Rick Aguilera, 5-3, got the victory despite allowing an RBI single to Jeff Treadway in the sixth that tied the score 4-4. Randy Myers pitched two innings for his 13th save.

The game was delayed by rain for 1 hour, 11 minutes in the second inning. Jeff Blauser struck out four times for the Braves.

Atlanta scored an unearned run in the first when Oddibe McDowell reached on Tim Teufel's error at second and scored on Treadway's single. The Mets tied it in the second on an RBI single by starter David Cone and went ahead in the third on Strawberry's 19th home run.

New York made it 4-1 in the fourth on another RBI single by Cone and Juan Samuel's run-scoring double-play grounder.

Atlanta cut it to 4-3 in the fifth on run-scoring singles by Lonnie Smith and Andres Thomas.

Astros.....9
Phillies.....6

PHILADELPHIA — Houston took advantage of six Philadelphia errors, including four by third baseman Charlie Hayes, and the Astros beat the Phillies 9-6 Saturday night.

Hayes fell was one error short of the major league record for third basemen, set by David Brain of the Boston Braves on June 11, 1906. Six players have committed five errors in a nine-inning game since 1900. Hayes had two putouts and two assists.

Mark Portugal, recalled earlier in the day from Tuscon of the Pacific Coast League to spell the injured Mike Scott, gave up three runs and eight hits in 6 2-3 innings to even his record at 1-1.

The victory was Portugal's first as a starter since April 19, 1987, with Minnesota. He struck out six and walked two.

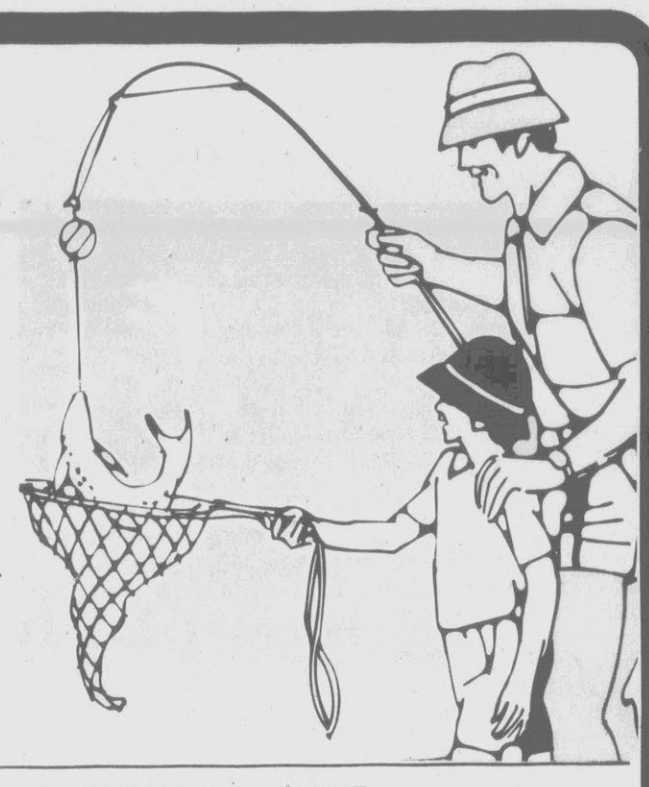

Houston scored five runs in the first inning, three unearned, off Larry McWilliams, 2-9. Billy Hatcher hit the first pitch of the game for a single, and went to third on Craig Biggio's single. Both scored on Bill Doran's double. Glenn Davis walked, and when Hayes threw wildly on Ken Caminiti's bunt single, both runners scored. Caminiti later crossed on another Hayes throwing error.

Sunday Notebook:

The summer college basketball recruiting fest continues this weekend in Charlotte at the opening session of the Prep Star basketball camp at the University of North Carolina-Charlotte.

Jarvis Lang

Farmville Central's Jarvis Lang is making his first appearance on the summer camp circuit and arrived at UNCC Friday. The camp concludes Wednesday.

At the second session from July 24-29, D.H. Conley's Bershaun Thompson and Terry Williams will attend the camp.

Two years ago, Lang came out of nowhere to dominate play in the Eastern Plains Conference.

A long-legged 6-5 sophomore, he led his team to the regular season conference title and was named the player of the year in the league. Last year as a junior, he was again the best big man in the EPC. He picked his game up a notch in the post-season and led the Jaguars to the state 2-A title, earning Most Valuable Player honors in the finals.

His play has attracted quite a few college coaches to Farmville Central High School. Jaguar coach Mike Terrell has found himself spending a lot of time on the phone talking to interested parties from UNC, N.C. State, Boston College, Seton Hall, Purdue, Oklahoma and Northwestern, just to name a few.

"This is a first," Terrell said. "You can coach your whole lifetime and not get a player like Jarvis. He's just got all the natural abilities and the intangibles."

Next weekend, Lang will join a North Carolina AAU team for a tournament in Arkansas to conclude his summer basketball activities.

You can't underestimate the importance of these camps in terms of exposure to college coaches. Over the last few years, the NCAA has limited the amount of contact a coach can have with a prospect. As that contact time has decreased, the importance of camps like this, where a lot of players can be in the same place at one time, has increased.

It can be a make-or-break situation.

One of the more popular summer camps is Five Star, which is held at various colleges around the East Coast in June and July.

Thompson went to a camp at Radford recently and ended up earning MVP honors in the playoffs and a berth on the camp All-Star team. Thompson, a 6-2½ guard, went up to the camp a relative unknown and left as a viable Division I prospect.

"It's more intense," Thompson said. "There are a lot more popular players. It makes you play harder. I just played comfortable. The shots came to me. I didn't have to create my own shot. I said it was my final call. It was the only chance I had to go up there and make myself known."

Thompson, who played on a Conley team last year that advanced to the Eastern 3-A Regionals, has had recruiting contacts from Tennessee and Rhode Island, as well as Fayetteville State and Presbyterian.

Eason Adjusting Well To Cape League

East Carolina baseball player Tommy Eason has barely missed a beat since the end of the collegiate baseball season.

Eason is playing in the prestigious Cape Cod League for a team in Cotuit, Mass.

The Cape Cod league attracts some of the top collegiate players from all over the East Coast for summer baseball with an interesting twist. The league allows only wooden bats. That's a big adjustment for any college or high school player. Aluminum bats tend to give a player more power at the plate than a wooden bat.

Eason, who was an All-Colonial Athletic Association choice as a freshman catcher, has seen action both behind the plate and in the outfield for Cotuit.

After the first 10 games of the season, Eason, who played his high school baseball at nearby Greene Central, was hitting .333, with one home run, seven RBI and a .444 slugging percentage.

East-West Action Coming Up

The annual East-West All-Star basketball and football games are coming up July 25 and July 27, respectively.

Rose High defensive end Carlester Crumpler Jr., bound for ECU in the fall, is the lone Pitt County representative, D.H. Conley coach Steve Craft will be an assistant on that team. Ayden-Grifton guard Ronnell Peterson and Farmville swingman Reggie Barrett will play for the East basketball squad.

In addition, Terrell will be an assistant coach for the East basketball team under head coach Tommy Day of Roxboro Person.

Former Rose high standout running back Timmy Moore was slated to play for the East football team, but he signed a professional baseball contract with the Minnesota Twins in June.

Paul Childress, a 5-10 guard from Albemarle, will play for the West team. Athens Drive's Dennis Morgan, a 6-6 forward, will play for the East team. Both signed with ECU during last fall's early signing period.

This year's basketball game should be a good one. Minnesota signee Arriel McDonald, a 6-3 guard who was a teammate of Morgan's at Athens Drive, is one of the top prospects in the country. He'll be aided by Fayetteville South View's Tim Shaw, 6-5 high-scoring swingman who shunned ECU in favor of Colonial Athletic Association foe UNC-Wilmington.

For the West team, N.C. State signee Donnie Seal, a 6-5 190-pound swingman, should light it up. West center Ethan Albright, a 6-7, 225-pound UNC football signee, is also a strong inside player.

In the girls' All-Star game, ECU signee Gaynor O'Donnell, a 5-5 guard from Southern Wayne, will see time in the backcourt.

Prevention Is The Best Medicine

CHAPEL HILL — Football players can't be told enough how to block and tackle safely, says the head of the National Center for Catastrophic Sports Injury Research at the University of North Carolina.

The center released Friday the results of its annual football study which is based on information from newspaper accounts, the National Collegiate Athletic Association, the National Federation of State High School Associations and about 150 volunteers who monitor sports accidents for the center.

The study found that the number of deaths and paralyzing injuries involving high school and college football players grew in 1988, researchers say deaths and injuries have declined dramatically over the last two decades.

"We are not sure why the increase (last year) occurred, and it may just be chance," said Frederick O. Mueller, professor of physical education at UNC-Chapel Hill and director of the center. "During 1986, however, there were 11 deaths, and back in 1968, there was a high of 36."

Figures show fatalities directly attributable to football increased from four in 1987 to six in 1988, while the number of paralyzing injuries increased from seven in 1987 to 13 last year.

Deaths and catastrophic injuries suffered by football players dropped dramatically during the last 20 years because of better coaching techniques, improved equipment and new rules adopted in 1976 that prohibit using the head as the initial point of contact in blocking and tackling, Mueller said.

"Still, players sometimes get excited and forget the fundamentals in the heat of a game or practice," Mueller said. "That's when these injuries occur, and that's why the players need to be reminded over and over how to block and tackle safely."

During 1988, there also were 11 fatalities indirectly attributed to football, Mueller said. Those resulted chiefly from heart failure, but also heatstroke, asthma and a ruptured spleen associated with mononucleosis.

"Unlike heart failure, heatstroke deaths should be preventable now," Mueller said. "In 1970, there were eight of them, but in the last decade there were several years when we had non."

and Don Shirey, who both had trouble keeping pace.

Tim Simpson, who shared the first-round lead with Sutton, had a 4-under 67 Saturday and was alone in third at 201.

Next, at 202, were Roger Maltbie and Norris. Maltbie, who tied the course record Friday with a 63, had a 67. Norris parred his first 12 holes before getting a birdie on the par-3 13th and wound up with a 70.

Shirey fell off the pace with a trio of bogeys on the front nine en route to a 1-over 72 that left him in a large group at 9-under 204.

Mike Donald, two behind Hulbert through 36 holes, bogeyed the 10th and 11th holes, both par-4s, and finished with a 70.

He was joined at 203 by Webb Heintzelman, Chris Perry and Blaine McCallister. Heintzelman and Perry shot 65s and McCallister carded a 66.

Hulbert rolled in birdie putts on the third hole and on No. 4, a 437-yard, uphill par-4. After sinking a four-footer for birdie on the 452-yard ninth, he stayed at 14-under the rest of the way.

Sutton sank a 20-footer for birdie on No. 1, a 360-yard par-4, and made short birdie putts on the third and seventh holes, both par-5s.

After making a 20-footer for a birdie-3 on No. 9, Sutton made a 2 at the par-3 13th with a four-inch putt and another birdie with an eight-footer on the 383-yard 14th. He moved to 14-under when he sank a 30-foot putt on the 177-yard 17th.

Curtis Strange, the two-time U.S. Open champion who makes his home on the grounds of Kingsmill, teed off nearly three hours before the leaders Saturday by virtue of his 3-under total for 36 holes. Strange three-putted the 18th for a bogey and a 66 that left him at 8-under 205.

Fernandez's Big Game Falls Short

The Associated Press

Sid Fernandez's big show Friday night wasn't enough

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ATLANTA — The only thing that kept it from being the best-pitched game of Sid Fernandez's career was that he lost.

Fernandez turned in a career-high, 16-strikeout performance Friday night, only to see it spoiled when Lonnie Smith hit a 1-0 fastball over the left field fence leading off the ninth inning, giving the Atlanta Braves a 3-2 victory over Fernandez and the New York Mets.

"I'm happy with my performance, but I'd rather have won the game," Fernandez said after seeing his personal three-game winning streak end.

He broke the club record of 15 strikeouts by a left-hander, set by Jerry Koosman against the San Diego Padres on May 28, 1969. It bettered by two his previous career-best set against the San Francisco Giants in 1986.

Tom Seaver, a right-hander, holds the Mets' record with 19 strikeouts against San Diego in 1970, a feat that tied the National League mark set the previous season by Philadelphia's Steve Carlton in a loss to the Mets.

It was the most strikeouts in the major leagues this year. Nolan Ryan of Texas and Chuck Finley of California each fanned 15 in a game earlier in the season.

Fernandez, 7-3, fanned eight of nine batters during one stretch and retired the 16 consecutive batters 12 on strikeouts, before Smith ended the game with his 14th homer of the year.

"I think he threw 119 pitches," Mets manager Davey Johnson said. "It would have been a little hard to hook him going into the ninth.

"It was a tough one to seen him lose, but nothing to be ashamed of," Johnson said.

"He was just blowing the ball by them," Atlanta manager Russ Nixon said. "There wasn't a walk in the game. That's awesome."

Fernandez was asked if it was the best game he ever pitched.

He thought about it a moment and said, "No, because I lost."

Fernandez said he also lost a nicely pitched game to Montreal 2-1 earlier in his career, but didn't have nearly as many strikeouts. He said his all-time strikeout mark was 21 when he was in the minor leagues.

"I have been winning lately," Fernandez said. "I'm pretty happy about it. I've been working hard, I've been running a lot."

After going through a string of five no decisions, Fernandez beat Philadelphia once and Cincinnati twice in three starts before Friday.

"I wasn't even trying to blow some people out," he said. "I was just trying to throw strikes. My arm was nice and free. I'm not going to brag and say I can do that all the time."

He said he was just going to try to hit catcher Mackey Sasser's glove, and continue to throw inside to hitters.

"I knew I had struck out a few people, but I wasn't counting," he said. "A strikeout's a strikeout."

ECU Secondary ...

McPhatter is also being pushed hard by redshirt freshman Derrick Fields (6-2, 191). Junior Donald Porch (5-9, 173) and sophomore Richard Wright (6-0, 186) each saw a good deal of action last year in backup cornerback roles.

Wright, though, missed most of spring practice while running track for ECU and Pagano said that slowed his development and adjustment to the new scheme.

Still, ECU has depth in the secondary, and depth at any position is a valuable commodity, especially on the corners.

"It's the key to your whole scheme," Pagano said. "It's 11 guys (altogether), but you've got to have some guys who can play out there. I feel like we've got some. They are called on to play the deep zones. They are the ones who get exposed most. You need some dependable corners."

Robinson led the team with five interceptions last year. He has been a starter since he became eligible as a sophomore. He also ran track for ECU and was part of a 4x100 relay team that earned All-America honors in 1988.

By keeping Robinson at free safety, he gets to play a position where he can roam and use his speed and range to his best abilities.

"We've got him in the spot where he can make all the plays he wants," Pagano said. "He's a good, sure tackler and a tough kid, so we're putting him in the position to make the plays he should. And he'll make them."

Pagano, who played defensive back at Wyoming under Lewis from 1979-83, takes a realistic approach to coaching the secondary.

"You're going to get beat in the secondary," he said. "There is no guy that has ever played back there that hasn't been beat. That's going to happen. I'm not going to get on them for that. I'm going to get on them to see how they come back and compete. We're going to be an aggressive group and an exciting group to watch. We're going to fly around and make things happen.

"I try to instill in them: 'Hey, don't be scared to get beat,'" Pagano said. "Anytime you line up and you're scared to get beat, something bad is going to happen. You line up, play with great confidence and challenge your opponent every snap. Don't play scared."

Part of Pagano's philosophy comes from having been there, having played the position. The other part comes from realizing that a secondary is only as good as the rest of the defense, and vice versa.

"I think there is a misconception," he said. "Every touchdown that is scored, you can take a play and break it down. There might be two, three or four things that add up to that touchdown. Did a guy have the quarterback in his hands? How was the underneath coverage? But don't get me wrong. It's 11 guys every play. As good as offenses are these days, one breakdown and they can expose you. It's got to be 11 guys going all out, all the time.

"It takes a special breed of cat to play back there. You are the only guy back there," Pagano said. "You are in the open. They (the public) don't see the missed sack or the rush getting there late. All they see is the receiver run by you, catch the ball and you're standing there chasing him. We're the last line of defense. If they get by us, that's it. But any true competitor would want to play back there. True competitors want to be in the action."

Pagano came in after the national signing date and didn't actively recruit any of the freshman coming in next year. And he isn't sure any of them will be ready to contribute this year.

"On this level, there are very few that can come in and contribute," he said. "Some have, the Chris Halls and guys like that. The doors are not closed on any freshmen."

Two names to keep an eye on are Levi Beckwith (6-3, 180) from Garner and Travis Render (5-10, 180) of Decatur, Ga. With strong showings in the fall, they likely will get a chance to compete for playing time.

Cary Ties Up Series With Snow Hill

SNOW HILL — Cary broke a 2-2 tie with a run in the bottom of the eighth inning and held off Snow Hill, 3-2, in the American Legion Eastern Championship basegball series Saturday night.

Cary pushed across the winning run when Greg Moss reached on a walk, stole second, went to third on a throwing error and scored on a wild pitch.

Snow Hill led 2-1 after the fifth inning. Reggie Hill doubled to start things off. George Burnette singled and stole second. Hill went home on the throw to second.

The two teams resume play tonight in Snow Hill at 7:30 p.m.

Todd Mewborn limited Cary to three hits while striking out 13 en route to the win.

Snow Hill went ahead in the second. Ed Stanley singled and moved over to second on a sacrifice. Prentis Uzzell grounded out to second, but Stanley advanced to third. Todd Mewborn followed with a single up the middle to score Stanley and give Snow Hill a 1-0 lead.

Snow Hill added another run in the third when he singled in Cedric Collins. Snow Hill made 3-0 in the ninth when Walt McKeel drew a walk to force a runner home.

Burnette, Cedric Collins and Stanley each went 2-4 to lead Snow Hill.

Dumars Signs An Extension

AUBURN HILLS, Mich. (AP) — The NBA champion Detroit Pistons signed guard Joe Dumars to a multiyear contract extension on Saturday.

General Manager Jack McCloskey would not disclose terms of the contract. The latest agreement, he said, means "We will have him, I think, through his entire career."

Maryland Adds Hahn To Hoop Staff

COLLEGE PARK, Md. (AP) — Billy Hahn, a former Terrapin team captain, was named Friday as assistant basketball coach at Maryland, head coach Gary Williams announced.

Hahn, 36, has been the head coach at Ohio University in Athens since 1986, an$ in 1988 took the Bobcats to the Mid-American Conference Tournament finals. His combined record was 42-45.

Cleaner World, Harris, East Group Win

WINTERVILLE — A Cleaner World, Harris Supermarket and the East Group all took wins in Winterville Pee Wee League baseball action Friday.

A Cleaner World defeated Steve Evans Realty, 13-4, as Nathan Joyner and Brandon Mooring each had two hits. Steve Evans was led by Matt Gaylor and Michael Hunnings.

Harris defeated Sunnyside Eggs, 15-8, as David Bundy and Brett Kinlaw had two hits apiece. Sunnyside was led by Craig Cox and Scott Denton with two and one hit, respectively.

The East Group handed Kiwanis a 9-6 loss behind Leanne Cherry had a triple while Erin Gillikan added a double.

Casserly Ready For Job Ahead

Redskins' New GM Is Anxious For Start Of Season

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

HERNDON, Va. — Charley Casserly is sitting behind a huge glass-top desk that is covered with open books, computer printouts and a thick spiral notebook. A few family pictures sit scattered on a shelf behind him, the lone personal touch in his spacious new office.

A couple months earlier, before he took over the job as general manager of the Washington Redskins, Casserly was working in a cramped cubicle. Most of those same pictures were tacked to a bulletin board.

"Got an office with windows, a door and a bathroom. This is great here," says Casserly, who 12 years earlier didn't have an apartment to call his own, let alone an office.

When Bobby Beathard decided to leave the job he'd held for 11 years, he recommended Casserly for the post. Redskins owner Jack Kent Cooke, figuring that anyone who had served under George Allen and Beathard had to know something, hired the 40-year-old Casserly without conducting a search.

"He has been indoctrinated better than anybody to take over the job," Cooke said.

When Casserly joined the Redskins in 1977, his job description included getting milkshakes for Allen and answering phones in the public relations office. He didn't get paid, either, but stuck around because he desperately wanted to make some NFL contacts.

"I stayed at the YMCA for $8 a night," he recalled. "Finally, I quit that because the team kept me on the road and I got to stay at hotels. I learned to survive back then."

Casserly worked under Allen for only eight months, but learned plenty along the way from the coach-general manager who compiled a 67-30-1 record in Washington from 1971-77.

"Before I came here I read every book he ever wrote so I would have a good understanding of where he was coming from," Casserly said. "George was an innovative and thorough guy. I picked up a lot things on how he attacked a problem."

Beathard, meanwhile, played a much more significant role in shaping Casserly into a football executive. When he took off for the beaches of California, Beathard left Casserly much more than merely his office.

"Virtually everything I've learned about professional football I've learned from Bobby," Casserly said. "I couldn't have asked for a better teacher."

Drawing from the experience he gained from his predecessors, Casserly is confident he can tackle any problem that might come his way.

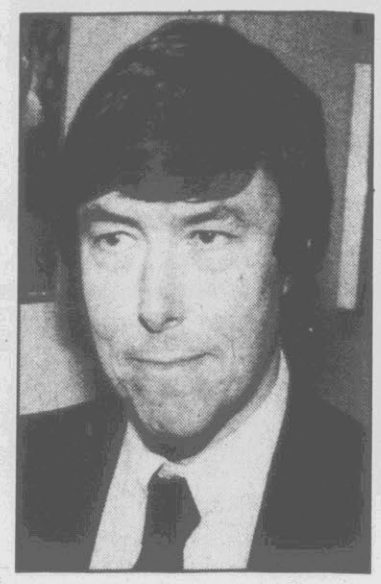

"I've got two people who I worked for that I can sit and think about how they might handle a situation," he said. "Obviously, that's a great advantage because you're dealing with two of the most successful people in the history of the NFL."

Following Beathard will not be an easy chore. After all, how do you replace someone who was, in the eyes of many, a virtual genius in terms of judging talent and swinging a trade?

"There are 27 guys in the National Football League compared every day to Bobby," Casserly said. "So I won't be the only one."

If Casserly is to be respected because of his dozen years experience under Allen and Beathard, one must wonder why some agents have tried to take advantage of him during contract negotiations this month.

"There have been some pretty outlandish requests," Casserly said with a grin. "I figure I'll be getting all sorts of calls from people trying to find out what I know. What you have to be is smart enough to recognize that.

Charlie Casserly

Independent Scheduling ...

number of tough opponents, such as Pittsburgh, Miami and Syracuse. However, the remainder of the schedule includes teams like Bowling Green, Illinois State, Louisiana and Cincinnati.

You need a balance in making it attractive with teams making an appearance in Ficklen (ECU's home field), with a a chance for your program to be recognized, yet with a chance for your athletes to build confidence and learn to win again," Hart said. "That's a heck of a balance to try and meet."

Still, teams can win under these conditions. USM's 10-2 mark a year ago included a win in the Independence Bowl. USL went 6-5 this past season.

On the other side of the coin, Temple went 4-7, ECU went 3-8 and Cincinnati was 3-8. All three have new coaches for next season. Tim Murphy at Cincinnati, Berndt at Temple and Bill Lewis at ECU.

Each of these new coaches finds himself facing the same task as his predecessor — produce a winner.

"It's tough," Murphy said. "In a conference, you're plugged in directly for 10 years. In our case, you don't have the luxury of being as selective. It's hard to find the line between a competitive schedule and a chance for success."

Football schedules are done years in advance. ECU, for instance, has tentative slates set up through the 1992 season. Continuity in scheduling is the goal of any athletic director at a Division I-A independent.

"I think continuity is a problem for everybody with the exception of the cream of the crop in independents, like Penn State and Miami," Rick Taylor, Cincinnati Athletic Director, said.

"The Eastern schools, they pretty much have got the schedules (set) and it's mainly the southern independents that have a problem. We have a problem filling holes in the schedule. The way we're trying to attack it is, we're trying to get fairly long commitments."

If a team is operating from a base of power, it can dictate its scheduling. That power comes from success in the win-loss column.

Hart, for one, would love to play the four other Division I-A schools in North Carolina (North Carolina, North Carolina State, Duke and Wake Forest) each season, but he finds few takers. ECU used to play each of those schools during the 1970s.

UNC and Duke stopped playing ECU in 1980, Wake Forest in 1979. The series with N.C. State continued on before finally ending after a post-game melee involving fans in 1987.

While Hart would like to get the series resumed, he said he will not settle for anything less than a home-and-home series. In the past, all the games with N.C. State were played at Carter-Finley Stadium in Raleigh.

Southern Mississippi Athletic Director Bill McLellan can sympathize with Hart's situation.

"You need the name recognition," he said. "If East Carolina has a rivalry with Virginia Tech or the four North Carolina schools, it helps. That's where you find yourself at a loss."

At USM, there is no regular series with either of the two big in-state schools, Mississippi and Mississippi State.

For Nelson Stokely, USL head coach and athletic director, scheduling problems have been something his administration has had to deal with since achieving Division I status in 1981.

"That's the biggest hurdle we've had to overcome. We've only been in Division I since 1981," he said. "The schedule was in a shambles then. It's always different. You try to build rivalries with schools like East Carolina, Memphis State, Southern Mississippi and the like, but it's always very difficult.

Sheffield Sent Down To The Minors

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

What was supposed to be a banner rookie season has turned sour for 20-year-old Gary Sheffield — the Milwaukee Brewers highly touted shortstop.

In late May, a frustrated Sheffield blasted the Brewers organization, criticizing the way the coaching staff handled him and veteran players treated him.

He demanded to be traded within a month if things didn't change, only to retract that request a few days later after meeting with Brewers manager Tom Trebelhorn and other team officials.

Then came a rash of errors and erratic play on the field. The coaching staff hoped the All-Star break might give the rookie a needed rest, but Sheffield returned Thursday and went 0-for-4 against the Chicago White Sox to extend his batting slump.

In his last 11 games, Sheffield was 5-for-47, a .106 average. In 80 games this year, he hit .248 with four home runs and 29 RBIs.

On Friday, just four months after many experts predicted he would be the American League's rookie of the year, Sheffield was sent down to the Brewers' Class AAA minor league affiliate at Denver.

"We were considering it all along," Trebelhorn said. "But we thought maybe with the All-Star break, he would relax a little bit and come back. But last night (Thursday) he didn't play as well as he's capable of playing."

"I still think he can be a big-league shortstop," he added. "He just hasn't been playing a big-league shortstop."

Trebelhorn kept the clubhouse doors shut for about a half-hour after a 6-4 loss to the White Sox Friday night so he could inform Sheffield of the decision.

Afterwards, Trebelhorn declined to discuss Sheffield's reaction to the move and when asked whether the rookie would report to Denver, responded: "We'll find out."

Sheffield refused to talk to reporters Friday night but told NBC Sports Saturday he would report to Denver.

Sheffield did not play Friday. He was replaced in the starting lineup by Gus Polidor. The Brewers called up another rookie shortstop, Bill Spiers, to replace Sheffield.

"There is a combination to this move," Trebelhorn said. "One is to get the most out of Gary Sheffield. I think he has work to do to fully develop and I think that work can best be done at Denver."

"The other is getting a better defensive infield. There is no guarantee the change will give us any better play. But I think when you have a player of Gary's ability playing below it, you have to do something."

Spiers hit .362 at Denver after being sent there by the Brewers on June 20. Spiers, who was hitting just .229 when he was sent down, was told the Brewers wanted to give him an opportunity to play every day. He is expected to take over the starting shortstop assignment in Sheffield's absence.

Sheffield became the Brewers' starting shortstop last September when Dale Sveum suffered a broken leg. When Sveum still hadn't recovered in spring training, Sheffield kept the starting job.

"The thing is to try and get him back up here as a productive player," Trebelhorn said. "It was a very difficult decision to make."

"Going back to spring training, I never anticipated this. I didn't think it would ever happen," he added.

Show Disabled

The San Diego Padres placed pitcher Eric Show on the 21-day disabled list Saturday, retroactive to July 6.

Show, who missed his last two starts, is suffering from a pinched nerve in his back and hasn't pitched since June 25. Show, 8-6, with a 4.23 ERA in 16 starts, was replaced on the roster by left-handed reliever Dave Leiper.

Leiper was recalled from a 20-day rehabilitation assignment from Las Vegas of the Pacific Coast League, where he had a 2-0 record with a 2.51 ERA.

Hayes Falls Short Of Mark

Third baseman Charlie Hayes of the Philadelphia Phillies committed four errors in the first four innings of Saturday night's game against the Houston Astros, leaving him one short of the major league record for errors in a nine-inning game.

In the first inning, Hayes fielded Ken Caminiti's bunt but made a wild throw to first. Caminiti was credited with a single but went to second on the error. Later in the inning, Hayes handled Gerald Young's routine grounder but threw wide of first.

In the second inning, Hayes booted a hard grounder off the bat of Billy Hatcher, and in the fourth Hayes threw high to first on a groubnd ball by Craig Biggio.

The all-time major league record is six errors in a game. William O'Neill, a shortstop for the Boston Red Sox, made six on May 21, 1904, in a 13-inning game.

David L. Brain of the Boston Braves set the record for third basemen, making five errors on June 11, 1906.

Since 1900, six players have committed five errors in a nine-inning game. The last was Hall-of-Famer Nap Lajoie of the Philadelphia Athletics, a second baseman, in 1915.

Yankees Make Some Moves

Pitcher Dave Eiland, ineffective in his last four starts for the Yankees, was optioned Saturday to Columbus of the International League. To fill his spot, New York purchased the contract of right-hander Bob Davidson from the Clippers.

Eiland, 1-3 with a 5.77 earned-run average, lost the first game of Friday's doubleheader against Kansas City, allowing nine hits and six runs in four-plus innings. He had given up 19 runs and 29 hits in his last 20 1-3 innings.

Red Sox Protest

The Boston Red Sox played Saturday's game with the Minnesota Twins under protest after umpires ruled that reliever Joe Price had to pitch to a batter.

Americans In New Position At Open

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TROON, Scotland — Americans, who once dominated this ancient event, are on the outside looking in at the 118th British Open Golf Championship.

In the 14-year period ending in 1983, American players won this title 12 times.

In the five-year period beginning in 1984, Americans won none.

It's a source of considerable delight in the land that is the birthplace and cradle of the game; a national celebration that British golf again rules the world.

That smug satisfaction was articulated prior to the 1988 British Open when Tony Jacklin, captain of the European Ryder Cup team, predicted:

"I can't see beyond a European victory. We're better than they (the Americans) are now. It's that simple, isn't it?"

And, of course, he was right. Seve Ballesteros of Spain acquired his third British Open crown, a victory that marked Ballesteros' emergence from a lengthy funk precipited by his playoff loss in the 1987 Masters.

Little has changed this year.

The four men who have won the last five British Opens — Ballesteros, Greg Norman of Australia, Nick Faldo of England and Sandy Lyle of Scotland — generally are ranked among the first five players in the world.

Curtis Strange is the other, the lone American in the group.

None, however, has been able to separate himself from the others, particularly in the game's Big Four events, the U.S. and British Opens, the Masters and the PGA. In the last five years, Ballesteros, Lyle, Faldo and Strange have won two majors apiece, Norman one.

"There are five or six players at the top right now. We're sort of handing things around among us," Faldo said. "One year it's this one, the next year that one."

At the moment, Faldo could be the man. In addition to his Masters triumph this year, the tall Briton has won his last four starts (going back to the end of last season) on the European Tour. The streak includes his fourth British PGA title.

"It's been a great run for me," Faldo said. "I'd like to think it has another week or so to go."

Britain's legal bookies suspect it has. They have installed him as a 6-1 favorite to win the tournament that begins Thursday at Royal Troon, an intimidating links reaching through sandhills that rise from the rocky beach of the Ayrshire coast.

Ballesteros, the Spaniard who seems to save his best for the major events, has won twice on the European Tour this season and is listed at 8-1 to make a successful defense of his title.

With Lyle and Norman both experiencing difficulties of varying degrees, little Ian Woosnam of Wales could be among the major challengers in the field of 156 arrayed for the event that is known only as "The Open" everywhere but in the United States.

"With the wind and weather, with te way they set the courses, you can't say who is favorite on an Open course," said Woosnam, a runner-up in the U.S. Open and recent winner of the Irish Open.

Norman, attempting to recover from devastating disappointments in three of the last four Masters, has won only once in the United States in the last three years and needs another major-tournament triumph to retain his standing among the game's elite.

Lyle has been in the deepest slump of his career, missing the cut in six of seven American tournaments at one stretch.

Strange's repeat victory in the U.S. Open confirmed his stature as America's leading player and made him the standard-bearer for the American challenge.

"I'm still not sure what it means, defending my (U.S.) Open title," he said. "But I know it gives me an opportunity to make this a pretty special year," he said.

Azinger won the Hartford Open two weeks ago. When he won that tournament in 1987, he followed with a runner-up finish in the British Open.

And, too, there's Tom Watson, who scored the fourth of his five British Open victories when the event last was held at Troon, in 1982.

Portions of the final two rounds Saturday and Sunday will be televised nationally in the United States by ABC.

Even Hackers Try Out

Group Of No-Hopers Miss The Cut At British Open

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LONDON — Clemens Bayer was disappointed when he failed to qualify for the British Open. Disappointed not that he failed to qualify, but that he failed to break 100.

Bayer, a decorator from West Germany, missed making the tournament by 35 strokes but still had a good time. He wasn't expecting much better.

"I enjoyed it very much," Bayer said."I wanted to beat 100 but I didn't play too well."

Bayer joined a mixed bag of no-hopers who have brought comic relief to golf's oldest major tournament.

Below the illustrious names of Bobby Jones, Walter Hagen, Ben Hogan, Arnold Palmer, Jack Nicklaus, Seve Ballesteros and many others who have won the championship, there is a smaller, less distinguished cast.

Prince Leopold of Belgium, Maurice G. Flitcroft, Gerard Hoppy, Gerald Thornbush and Clemens Bayer have taken to heart the spirit of "The Open," aspiring to display their meager talents alongside the giants of golf.

Bayer, 29, who doesn't even belong to a club, was astonished when his written entry from Berlin for a place in the qualifying rounds of next week's British Open was accepted by the organizing committee of the Royal and Ancient Golf Club.

"We made a boo-boo," an R and A official admitted. "Somehow, he slipped through the net."

Bayer's surprise was matched by those who saw him play Monday at the Langley Park course in Kent in southeast England.

After the fifth hole, officials asked his playing partners if Bayer's obvious lack of ability was causing problems. They said "No" and he continued.

P.J. Has Been A Man On The Move

Seton Hall Basketball Coach Reaping The Benefits Of Pirates' Successful Season

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SOUTH ORANGE, N.J. — Dinner in Jacksonville, Fla., on Sunday, Mike Fratello's camp in Atlanta on Monday, his own camp on Tuesday and Wednesday, and the Nike camp on Thursday.

Pencil in a couple of interviews on each day, an awards dinner here and there, preparation for the Olympic Festival and it's easy to see that P.J. Carlesimo's summer schedule is filled after taking Seton Hall to within a point of the NCAA basketball title.

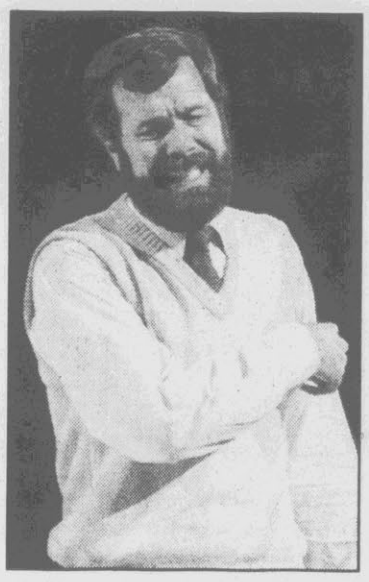

Don't fool yourself though. This is a normal Carlesimo summer. The only thing that is new is that the demand is greater and so is his use of the word, "No."

"There are people who probably think that now that he's gone to the Final Four he just doesn't have time for them," Carlesimo said. "That's not the case. There's just too much now.

"In the past couple of years, I've usually been invited to play in three charity golf events and I would go," Carlesimo said. "Now it's 23 and I still have time for three."

Carlesimo said he has always kept a busy summer schedule, but now the offers are coming in from more distant locations and the demand is greater.

"There are some things that I'll probably never get another chance to do," he said. "Throwing out the first ball at Yankee Stadium, the first ball at a Nets game, giving a Sports Emmy, trips to the Senate and governor's office. In years before, it was the first ball at a high school game or going to a high school awards dinner."

P.J. Carlesimo

Carlesimo said he cannot gauge what the Final Four trip will do for his recruiting until the fall, but assistant coach Bruce Hamburger says he is getting a different feeling talking to recruits on the telephone.

"No question, it's better," said Hamburger. "Before we use to have to sell the program, tell everyone about playing in the Big East, the closeness of New York City, and how good a school Seton Hall is. Now we call a kid and their excited or their coaches want to talk to us about running our fastbreak against Duke. We don't have to sell ourselves anymore. The program speaks for itself."

That's obvious just from the turnout for Carlesimo's summer camp, which is run by Hamburger. Last year, one of three sessions was canceled because of lack of interest. This year, all three sessions were packed.

"The Final Four obviously helped, but we had a good return even before we made it that far," Hamburger said. "We have a lot of people who are coming because of word of mouth and because we run a good program."

There was a time after the Final Four that many felt Carlesimo would be holding his camp in Kentucky.

However, Carlesimo said he was never close to leaving Seton Hall for the Wildcat head coaching job.

Rose's Family Feels Effect

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CINCINNATI — Dave Rose can hear the customers snigger when they spot the promotional picture of big brother Pete hanging over the counter at the Gold Star Chili shop.

"They don't connect me with him," says Dave, ladling out Cincinnati's special brand of sweet, sharp chili from a counter at a suburban shopping mall. "They say some pretty nasty things right here, while I'm fixing their food. Everybody's got him guilty."

There is pain for others in Pete Rose's family, too. Son Pete Jr., a minor league third baseman, has been heckled by fans waving dollar bills. Ex-wife Karolyn has come close to throwing a punch because of comments. And his mother mostly avoids watching TV.

"I get to the point I turn it off," she says. "I'm tired of listening to it."

After years of living in the glare of Pete Rose's celebrity, the family now finds itself in the shadow of his notoriety.

Since March 20, when the baseball commissioner's office acknowledged that the Cincinnati Reds manager was being investigated, his family has watched the allegations mount: associations with convicted felons, tax troubles and gambling on baseball, including his own team.

They hear the voices on radio call-in shows demanding that baseball banish its all-time hit leader.

Now they just want it to end.

"The longer it goes on, the more crap people are going to pull out," Dave says.

Pete's problems have affected more than his brother's pride. Early this year, Dave left a job at one of Pete's other businesses to go in with him on a Gold Star franchise.

But questions raised about Pete's gambling appear to have put the deal on hold.

"I think they're just holding up the deal to see what happens," says Dave, who is a mirror of his brother's pugnacious, bulldog features and fireplug physique. "I guess I understand because of the image point, but it's got me in a bind."

But Bill Stock, chief exectuive officer of Gold Star Chili Inc., said it was the Roses' decision to postpone the deal.

"They came back to us and said that at this time, we would like to put it on hold," he said. "Whatever happens with this business with Pete, it has nothing to do with whether they get a franchise from us."

Once a promising ballplayer himself, Dave was signed out of high school to the Reds' farm system where he played the outfield for two years.

Another kind of draft sent him to Vietnam. He survived a tour of duty as a helicopter machine gunner. Two weeks after he returned home, Dave injured his knees in a motorcycle accident, which ended any hope of a big league career.

There is no doubt he admires his brother. And he has no doubt his brother is innocent.

He talks about "mental toughness" and says it was instilled in the family by late father, Harry, a onetime prizefighter and club football player.

"Pete can tough it out," Dave says. "Believe me from February to October all he's thinking about is winning the World Series. He's not worried about this."

In an apartment in the city's Delhi section, not far from the Westside home where she was raised and where she raised two sons and two daughters, Pete's mom, LaVerne Noeth, won't talk about her son's case.

"The whole family is sick of it," she says. "We just want the thing over with. When I talk to him, he don't say anything and I don't ask anything."

But she will say she is getting annoyed with all this talk of Pete's toughness.

"He's not a tough guy. He was never a tough guy," she says. "He was kind of a mamma's boy until he went away to play ball."

LaVerne, 73, says she's been feeling poorly and hasn't made it to Riverfront Stadium in the two seasons she has been back in Cincinnati. She returned to her hometown from the Tampa, Fla., area after the death of her second husband.

A visitor to her two-bedroom apartment would find little evidence that she is the mother of Pete Rose. There are no pictures, no trophies, no clippings; only a clock with Pete's face on it, a gift from a fan.

"I don't need pictures," she said with a laugh. "I know what the brat looks like."

Brister Decides Against Boycott

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Pittsburgh Steelers quarterback Bubby Brister said he considered but decided against boycotting training camp, claiming the NFL team is offering him less in a new contract than some backups are making elsewhere.

Brister, who has played four seasons with Pittsburgh, cited Cleveland Browns backup quarterback Mike Pagel, who shares agent Jim Steiner with Brister. Pagel was paid $300,000 last season and signed a new contract this week that reportedly will pay him less than $500,000 this season.

"It's disappointing sometimes when you see other guys who are backups earning that when I'm doing the job and working hard," he said. "I guess I'm going to training camp with the attitude I'll play out my option."

Brister is scheduled to make $187,000 in this the option year of a contract he signed after being drafted in the third round in 1986. Brister's backup, Todd Blackledge, is scheduled to make $363,000 this season.

The Steelers made Brister a three-year offer this spring for an undisclosed salary and raised the amount by $50,000 early last week, he said.

"I'm not asking for that outrageous of a contract," Brister said. "They're being sort of stingy."

Brister said he's disappointed also because team officials assured him the new contract would be settled before his option year began, avoiding the distraction of negotiating while he plays.

"When we signed the contract three years ago, we didn't want the option year," he said. "They told us, 'we're good about negotiating a new deal before the option year.' Now I'm in my option year, and I really didn't want it.

"It becomes a topic of conversation every day after practice. 'Is there anything new on your contract?' You can't help but it being on your mind."

Brister said he could prove to be a bargain for the Steelers if they sign now and the team does well this season.

"If we have a good year and go to the playoffs, my asking price will go way up," he said. "If they sign me now, they'll be getting a bargain this year. It's a gamble for both sides."

The Steelers open training camp Wednesday at St. Vincent College near Latrobe.

"I still have confidence at this point they'll get it done," Brister said. "If it's not by the second or third game, I hope they see I'm worth what I'm asking for."

Steve Walsh

Pre-Contract For Walsh?

Dallas Cowboys owner Jerry Jones says he would consider giving quarterback Steve Walsh a temporary contract to get him into camp, but prefers to make a permanent deal with the No. 1 supplemental draft pick.

Walsh's agent, Ron Simon, said a temporary contract, such as one that was used to get Heisman Trophy winner Tim Brown of Dallas into the Oakland Raiders' training camp on time last season, is possible.

"Sure, it's possible, but it is certainly not our intention," Simon told the Dallas Times Herald. "You do not do something like that very often."

Marvin Demoff, who also is representing Walsh, said the Brown deal came about last year because there were too many loose ends to be tied up before a permanent agreement could be reached.

Brown's temporary deal, signed on the first day of training camp, paid him a $300,000 signing bonus and a $150,000 base salary. It gave him spending money, got him into camp, and gave Demoff and the Raiders time to work out a four-year, $2.7 million permanent deal.

Jones said a temporary deal for Walsh is not out of the question, but added, "we still feel very strongly — strongly enough that we can get it done as a regular contract."

Walsh, who played for Cowboys coach Jimmy Johnson at Miami, already has said that he wants a deal that approaches the six-year, $11 million deal the team gave to No. 1 draft pick Troy Aikman.

Other NFL teams have expressed interest in obtaining Walsh.

"I would anticipate if he goes through the first part of training camp with us, he's going to remain with the Cowboys," Johnson said.

Supplementing

Score it NFL 1, agents 0 in the supplemental draft that gave Steve Walsh (temporarily) to the Cowboys; Timm Rosenbach to the Cardinals and Bobby Humphrey to the Broncos.

That's because Rosenbach (13th pick) and Humphrey (17) lasted later than expected. And Walsh, the second pick, isn't about to get anything near the $11 million over six years Troy Aikman got from Dallas as the first pick in the regular draft.

In fact, Rosenbach may have lasted so long because teams were worried that his agent, Gary Wichard, was asking $1 less than Aikman. So Walsh, who most teams considered more impressive in workouts, went ahead of Rosenbach, who throws the ball much harder.

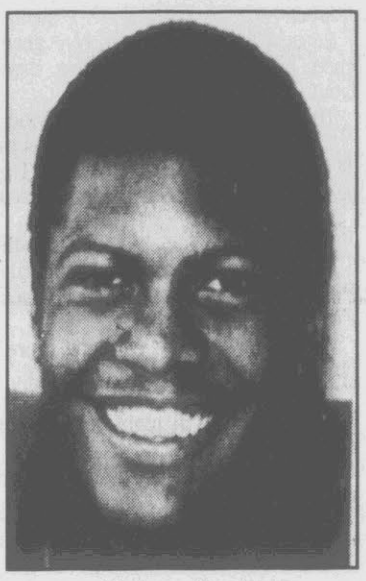

"A lot of people were scared to death by Wichard," says one general manager.

Now Miami, Minnesota, Kansas City and Green Bay all want Walsh from Dallas. In fact, Miami's Don Shula, who already has Dan Marino, bristled last week when someone suggested to him that Walsh was a less than excellent prospect.

Humphrey, who might have been a top five regular pick if healthy, scared teams because he had two stress fractures and reportedly ran just a 4.7 40-yard dash in several workouts.

The fear was that he might be another Keith Byars, thought to be a fanchise runner before he twice suffered the same of injury as Humphrey. Playing on artificial turf in Philadelphia as a pro, he's never run like he did at Ohio State and is at his best as a receiver.

But the Broncos say they timed him in 4.62 and Humphrey says he wasn't in football shape when he worked out. In Denver he'll play on grass for a team that hasn't had a standout runner since Otis Armstrong.

Oilers, Rozier Agree

The Houston Oilers reached a tentative agreement with running back Mike Rozier after nearly 10 hours of negotiations in General Manager Mike Holovak's Washington D.C., hotel room Friday, sources told The Houston Post.

The newspaper reported Saturday that the deal reportedly is worth $5.45 million and, if finalized, would place Rozier among the top six highest-paid NFL running backs with an $850,000 salary for the 1989 season.

"If it sounds right, I will (accept it)," Rozier said Friday.

The Post quoted an unidentified source as saying that the tentative agreement calls for a $600,000 base salary plus a $250,000 advance for 1989. The salary would increase each year of the five-year contract, from $900,000 in 1990 to $1.4 million in 1993, the source said.

None of the contract is guaranteed, the newspaper said.

Holovak, though citing progress in the talks, fell short of saying any kind of agreement had been reached.

"It's not a sure thing. There are still a lot of wrinkles to iron out yet," Holovak said. "The best way to summarize what happened today is that we discussed what they might accept and what we might offer."

Talks were expected to continue Monday, officials said.

Rozier, 28, made a reported $300,000 last season in the final year of a four-year contract. He had been seeking a five-year, $6 million deal with $600,000 in the form of a signing bonus, or at least part of the contract guaranteed.

Rozier has led the team in rushing each of his four years. Last season, he became the Oilers first 1,000-yard rusher (1,002) since Earl Campbell in 1983.

Rashad Replaced By Simpson

Ahmad Rashad, replaced on NBC's 'NFL Live' by O.J. Simpson, will team with play-by-play broadcaster Don Criqui on the network's NFL coverage this season.

Simpson will be a studio analyst on the pregame show, teaming with 'NFL Live' host Bob Costas.

The changes, announced Saturday in Los Angeles by NBC Sports President Dick Ebersol, were made in the wake of the network signing of Simpson and former San Francisco 49ers coach Bill Walsh.

"I don't think there will be any doubt that Bill Walsh will become the best analyst of technical football," Ebersol said. "The addition of O.J. Simpson to 'NFL Live' with Bob Costas gives NBC Sports the most popular and recognizable football pregame in the business.

"O.J. will make a major contribution to 'NFL Live' because he is finally getting the football commentary role that best suits him."

Simpson will act as feature correspondant and in-studio analyst for "NFL Live." He retired from the NFL in 1978.

Other commentary teams for the network's NFL coverage includes Marv Albert with Bob Trumphy, Jim Donovan with Jimmy Cefalo, Dick Enberg with Bill Walsh, Tom Hammond with Joe Namath, Charlie Jones with Merlin Olsen, and Fred Roggin with Lyle Alzado.

Ebersol said analyst Paul Maguire will form a new broadcast team with a play-by-play announcer who will be announced shortly.

Walsh retired from coaching this past January after his 49ers won the Super Bowl, 20-16 over the Cincinnati Bengals. He was subsequently named vice president for football operations for the 49ers.

In 10 seasons with San Francisco, Walsh guided his teams to an overall 102-63-1 record. The 49ers defeated Cincinnati 26-21 in January 1981 for their first Super Bowl title, then downed the Miami Dolphins 38-16 to win the 1985 Super Bowl.

Simpson worked for ABC Sports from 1968 through 1977 while still an active player. He moved to NBC in 1978 and he worked in both the Entertainment and Sports Divisions.

Best Coastal Fishing Is At Night

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Nighttime is the right time if you want to catch some fish along the North Carolina coast.

"You hunt the shade in the middle part of the day. You do your fishing early, late and at night," says Hardin Crouch of the Jolly Roger Fishing Pier.

Then, says Crouch, it takes some perserverance. That's especially true if you're still on the pier at midnight.

"The fellow that stays out and stays with it, it will be there when the fish come by," he says. "I've seen it happen several times a week."

At the Jolly Roger, Crouch says one elderly man stayed out on the pier until midnight and landed 90 spots.

He said fishermen have seen some tarpon, although they wouldn't bite. There have been some nice catches of flounder, a scattering of pompano and some whiting.

Monday brought what Crouch called "an exceptionally good run" of Spanish mackerel.

"There were some fellas coming off with five-gallon buckets full," Crouch says. "The best run we've had in a month and a half."

Elsewhere along the coast:

Hatteras

Dave Hissey at Pelican's Roost says the offshore fishing has been excellent with plenty of bluefish, blue and white marlin, sailfish. There have been catches of dolphin and tuna, some as big as 110 pounds.

"Inshore fishing has slowed down considerably. The water temperature is 80 degrees," Hissey said.

Surf fishing has produced sporadic catches of Spanish mackerel and bluefish as well as pompano.

In the sound, there's some speckled and grey trout, a few flounder and a few puppy drum "and I want to emphasize few."

"The fishing's been off a little bit in the summertime," Hissey says in reference to the heat. "It's great for sitting in the water with a beer in your hand."

Wrightsville Beach

At the Crystal Pier, George Fokakis was echoing his counterparts.

"It's been so hot. They've been catching Spanish and some blues early in the morning and late in the evening," Fokakis said. "Nobody's fishing during the day."

Fokakis said he's seen some spots and croakers, but there have been no king mackerel landed in the last several days.

Nags Head

A change of wind, as well as temperature, would help things at the Nags Head Fishing Pier, says Andy McCann.

"The west wind makes the water cold and doesn't keep it churned up," McCann says.

He says the Spanish mackerel have disappeared as well. They haven't seen any for a week.

In the meantime, dolphin, tuna, wahoo have been the catch of the day offshore. Two blue marlin and one white marlin were caught and both were released.

Spot, croaker and taylor blues are found on both the inshore and the pier fishing. Flounder also are coming in on the pier.

McCann said the water temperature dropped into the 60s last week, and while it has climbed back into the 70s, the swing affects the fish.

Swansboro

"It's too hot. It's just like smothering hot," says John Dudley of Dudley's Marina. "But everybody figures 'What the heck?' They come out and fish.

"They're still catching some nice cobia and some dolphin, more dolphin than I've ever seen," he says.

Dudley says he saw a couple of 25-pound king mackerel and heard about a 41-pounder.

Bottom fishing has been real good and the Spanish mackerel have been good, he says. Closer to shore, there have been good catches of speckled trout.

They could use a change in the wind at Dudley's, too.

"We'd like to have 10 to 12 miles per hour winds. This week, it blew up to 28 miles per hour," Dudley said. "That's just too much wind for comfortable ocean fishing. It's been like that all season and it's just wore us out."

Carolina Beach

Nelson Hedgpeth of Henderson made the week at Carolina Beach Fishing Pier when he hauled in 17 sheephead on Monday and five more on Tuesday. For bait, he used barnacle.

"Right now, we're catching more fish at night than we are during the day," said Fred Phelps at the pier.

Three cobia have been seen in the last two weeks, but most of the catches have been made at night, and they've been spot, mullet, flounder, Spanish mackerel and blues.

"We had a real good Fourth of July week," he said. "Since then, we've had the heat and that's hurt."

Mears Plots Outdoors Escapes

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ALLENTOWN, Pa. — When Rick Mears wants to slow down he escapes to the outdoors — especially the "wet" outdoors.

In Allentown recently to claim title to a new boat, the three-time Indianapolis 500 winner discussed his off-track sporting pursuits, among which is an affinity for water.

"I enjoy hunting and fishing but just getting out on the water is the one way I truly relax," said Mears, looking over his new Sea Ray 250 Sundancer.

"That's why I bought this. Put me on the water and the whole world changes."

Mears, a native Californian who lives in Bakersfield most of the year, also spends considerable time at his second home near Reading.

That's home base for the Penske Racing Team and the place where Mears met his wife Chris. It's also near Blue Marsh Lake, where he occasionally spends time fishing and boating.

Blue Marsh permits unlimited horsepower motors, but even Mears wasn't sure that his new craft would take well to the lake. He was particularly concerned about launching a vessel more suited to the Chesapeake Bay or coastal waters, which he also visits as time permits.

While Mears occasionally runs a bass boat in California, he's more often aboard an even bigger Sea Ray that he purchased with his brother to cruise the Pacific.

"I like as big a boat as I can trailer," Mears said. "On weekdays when everyone else is working I can get a few days off and go to the Chesapeake or the coast and live on it. There I can fish or just relax if I want to."

Mears' new 250 Sundancer is far from a typical "fishing boat" — especially the type seen on Blue Marsh. It includes a lounge, dinette, sleeping quarters, full galley, head and vanity and other options.

The 27-foot craft is churned by a 454-cubic-inch Chevy V-8 engine.

Mears' said the "floating house" will provide a change of scenery and a way to keep his sometimes hectic personal and business life afloat.

"If you want a change of neighbors all you have to do is turn the key," he joked. "Racing infringes on my time to get on the water, but it's been pretty good to me.

"Yet, sometime down the road I plan to spend a lot more time on the boat. In the meantime, I'll have to squeeze in the time as I can afford to."

Mears also likes to hunt. He's taken trophy whitetails and elk, and two years back downed a giant grizzly in Alaska.

His bear story, however, is one with an unhappy ending that's been both embarrassing and educational.

"I was up in Alaska fishing for silver salmon when our guide asked us if we wanted to hunt grizzlies," Mears said. We said 'Sure!' so he made the arrangements.

"We were all licensed and thought everything was in order. I shot a nice bear and so did my partner."

A year later, the phone rang and Mears found out that he'd taken the bear illegally and was under arrest. Alaska law prohibits hunting on the same day that a hunter flies.

Following a morning of fishing after flying to camp on a seaplane, the outfitter spotted some bears nearby, which they stalked and eventually shot.

The guide, he later learned, had been under investigation and surveillance by state and federal game agents.

The bear was confiscated and both Mears and a friend paid $20,000 fines.

"I sure didn't need that kind of publicity," Mears said. "I didn't even realize we'd done anything wrong or we certainly wouldn't have done it."

Several dozen hunters also were fined at the same time. Mears said one person fought the case in court and had his penalty reduced to only $500.

"But he spent $30,000 in lawyers' fees," Mears said. "I just wanted to get it over with so I paid it."

Most of Mears' other hunting and fishing pursuits have been pleasureable.

"I try to get out on my bass boat as much as possible when I'm home (California), but for the past 16 years or so I haven't done it as much as I want to," he said.

"I do what I can when I can. I can't say I have a favorite kind of fishing. Whatever's available — I enjoy it all."

As a boy, he frequently bottom-fished with his parents off the California coast. In recent times, he's cruised the coast and occasionally he sets compass for the waters off the Baja.

Mears' love of precision in boats and race cars carries over into the shooting sports, as evidenced by his affinity for target shooting and the development of loads and rifles to pinpoint his shots.

"Working a load to a particular gun is like tuning a race car," he said. "I like to fool around with different types of powder and bullet weights. It's precision work.

"Even out on the range you have to read the wind or the effect of the sun and mirages on the target range. It's like reading the conditions on the race track. I really enjoy that."

Any discussion of Mears' outdoor pursuits eventually returns to his love of boats and water.

"Speed is only a kick to a certain point," he said of his love of auto racing and big boats.

"Mainly, I like to pack into a trip as much as I can. I don't need a hot rod, but I do like a quality boat that will get me from one place to another as quickly as possible."

After competing in the Marlboro Grand Prix at the Meadowlands on July 16, Mears will embark on his maiden voyage with the new Sundancer — if he already hasn't yielded to whim and launched it on Blue Marsh.

Sons Clint, 16, and Cole, 14 are visiting from their California home for the summer and Mears plans to take a respite from the track and "escape to the water" for a while.

"After winning Indy last year I had to make the best use of it," Mears said. "It's kept me busy doing commercials and appearances — and of, course, racing — and I couldn't plan much.

"But this should encourage me to slow down a bit," he added, patting the shiny blue-and-white Sundancer's hull. "I can't wait to get it wet."

Ban Suggested By U.S. Agency

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

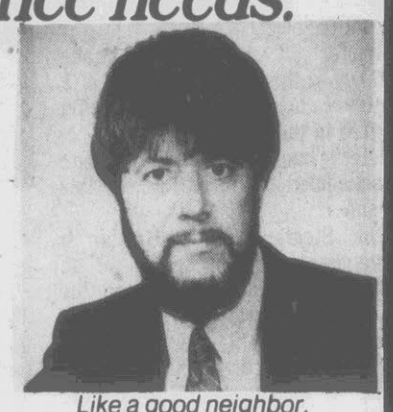

The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service has quietly decided to rewrite a draft environmental impact statement that suggested banning hunting on the national wildlife refuge system.

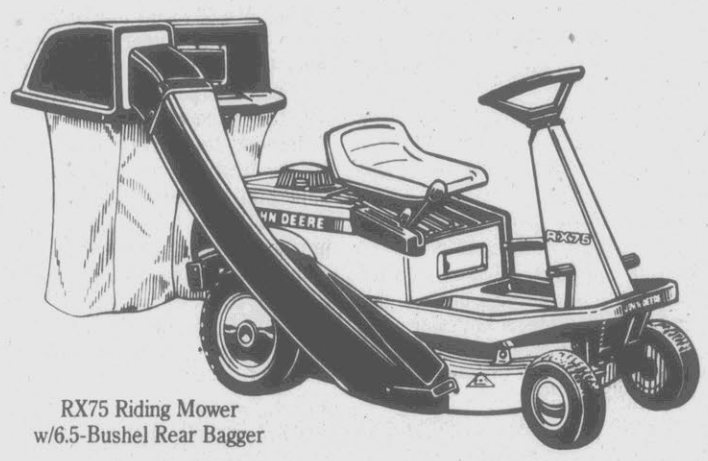

A plan for the future of the 450 refuges, the statement offered four alternatives. They ranged from Alternative A, the preferred choice, continuing present management practices, to management which would ban all hunting, fishing, berry picking and other "consumptive" uses.

The public mailed 28,000 comments this spring, with 27,000 favoring Alternative A, said Sean Furness, who heads the project for the FWS.

"The volume was a great deal heavier than they had anticipated," he said of FWS officials. "There are going to be some significant revisions in that document."

Fans Help Beat Summer Heat

By Reader's Digest
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Fans can do an excellent job of keeping your home comfortable during the heat and humidity of summer months.

They create an airflow that keeps you cool by evaporating perspiration. In addition, ventilating and attic fans reduce temperature and humidity by replacing hot indoor air with cooler night air drawn in from outdoors. By adjusting doors and windows, you can route fresh air through any part of the house. Best of all, fans operate at a fraction of the cost of air conditioners.

Types of Fans

— A ventilating fan changes the air in a room, either by exhausting it outward or by drawing outside air in. It is the most effective fan for overall cooling of a home. The most popular type of ventilating fan is the box fan. Installed in an open window and set on Exhaust, it pulls air through the house from open windows in other rooms. Enclosing the fan with panels improves its efficiency.

When using a ventilating fan, open windows only in rooms you wish to cool. To ventilate a single room that has only a single double-hung window, install the fan on the window sill and press both sashes down on it. Air will be drawn in through the top opening.

— A circulating fan moves the air around within a room, and may be a ceiling fan, ahe cooling power of the air conditioner by distributing the cool air evenly. (In winter, reversed to blow upward, a ceiling fan can reclaim heat by returning rising warm air to floor level.)

— There are two types of attic fans. One is installed in an opening cut in the gable just under the roof. The rest of the attic is then sealed except for a louver through the attic floor to the living area below. Indoor air moves into the attic as the fan moves the attic air out.

The other type of attic fan is placed in the ceiling beneath the attic and pulls air directly from the living area into the attic. The attic air then moves outdoors through ventilating louvers, usually in the gable ends.

Attic fans are rated according to how many cubic feet of air the fan can move per minute. To determine the fan size you need, multiply your home's length by its width by the ceiling height (in feet). Then multiply this figure by the number of floors of living space. The result is the number of cubic feet of air that the fan must move. In the southern United States, the fan should be able to handle this total volume once a minute; in the North, the fan should be able to handle two-thirds of the volume each minute.

Maintenance

Always unplug the power cord before cleaning or repairing a fan, and use only factory-authorized parts when replacing a defective component.

1. Every two weeks of use, vacuum a fan with a crevice-cleaning attachment.

2. At least twice during the summer, sponge dirt from the blades, grille and other external parts with a mild detergent solution. Be sure to keep the motor dry.

3. If the owner's manual advises it, put a few drops of light machine oil in the motor's oil hole. As a rule, oil a fan motor before each cooling season.

Troubleshooting Tips

— Motor Does Not Run or Runs Sluggishly: If the fan does not run, make sure there's power at the outlet. If there is, the fan's power cord may be broken. If the motor hums but the fan does not turn, or runs sluggishly, try lubricating the bearings with a few drops of oil. If the fan operates in some speeds but not others, the switch may be broken.

— Noisy or Unbalanced Operation: If a fan rattles, tighten the screws or nuts around the blade guard or, if it is a window fan, the screws holding the grilles. Also tighten the switch and motor mounting nuts and the blade assembly set screw, if there is one. If a ceiling fan wobbles, try switching adjacent blades, or experiment by switching all of the blades to different positions.

— Check the blade alignment on box fans. Remove the blade assembly and lay it on a table. All tips should touch the surface. If the blades are metal and if any blade is out of line by more than ¼ inch, carefully straighten it.

— Fan Blows Fuses: Too many appliances on a circuit may be causing an overload. Replace the power cord if it is frayed, or if it has bare wires or burn marks. Replace the plug if it has loose or distorted prongs.

— Fan Shocks When Touched: Take the fan to an authorized repairman.

On The House
By ANDY LANG

What's new on the market?

THE PRODUCT — A tape rule with adhesive backing.

Manufacturer's claim — That this metal rule has blades that incorporate a peel-away adhesive backing that enables them to be affixed to most work surfaces for effortless measuring...that there are two models, one 8-feet long, the other 12-feet long...that the measuring blades are ideal for workbench edges, layout and drawing tables, counter top and any work surface where speed and reliability are required...and that both blades are protected with a plastic film for added durability and corrosion resistance.

THE PRODUCT — A 100 percent fabric blind.

Manufacturer's claim — That this product combines the soft, elegant look of textured fabric and a translucent quality with the convenience of a conventional horizontal blind...that the fabric construction permits a gentle level of light to fill the room when the blind is closed and a stream of sunlight when it is open...that there are two types of fabrics available, one richly textured open weave, the other a more tailored design...that the blinds have a custom-crafted fabric valance and a fabric-covered bottom roll...that the blinds are treated with a fabric protector and an anti-static guard to repel dust and dirt...and that the same fabric is available by the yard for special top treatments of the blinds.

THE PRODUCT — A loud alarm to guard against the movement of objects inside the house.

Manufacturer's claim — That this alarm protects against unwanted opening of doors, windows and drawers of any type, as well as against the taking of objects and items from their desired locations...that it is battery operated with no wires, no installation and cannot be turned off except by somebody who knows the security code...that it works with hotel doors, mobile homes, car doors, storage facilities, computers, audio-video equipment, safes, copiers, file cabinets and art work...and that the 9-volt power supply unit is easy to hide from intruders.

Manufacturer's claim — That these thermostats are powered by batteries to allow greater compatibility and reliability with heating and air conditioning systems...that they allow the user to program each day of the week individually to meet the needs of the most demanding lifestyles...that there are four temperature set points per day to provide automatic climate control...that soft-touch keypads are similar to those found on microwave ovens to assure proper registration of programming...that there is a quick-touch temperature override to allow consumers to accommodate changes in heating or cooling requirements...and that the climate control information center features large, easy-to-read liquid crystal displays.

(The tape rule is manufacturered by Stanley Works, New Britain, CONN., 06050; the fabric blind by Window Covering Division, Hunter Douglas, Upper Saddle River, N.J., 07558; the alarm by Hart Technological Ind., 6520 14th Ave., Brooklyn, N.Y., 11219; and the thermostats by Jameson Home Products, 2820 Thatcher Road, Downers Grove, Ill., 60515.)

Here's The Answer

By Andy Lang
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Q. — I picked up an old bedroom bureau at an auction. The auctioneer never actually said it was an antique, but he did say it was very old. The finish on it appears to be in good condition except it is quite dirty. When I asked what the finish was, the man said it undoubtedly was varnish, but he couldn't be sure. Regardless of what the finish is, can I remove it and put on a new finish without harming the bureau?

A. — You should be able to refinish the bureau without hurting it in any way, but it sounds as though only a cleaning may be in order. Try wiping the bureau with denatured alcohol. Try it on a small section first and, if it seems to be doing the job all right, go ahead with the rest of the piece. If the finish is varnish or lacquer, the alcohol will clean it well. If the finish is shellac, the alcohol may cut into it a bit, but you still will be able to refinish the bureau with varnish. Should you desire to apply a lacquer finish, you are better off to remove all the old finish, apply a coat of lacquer thinner and then a final coat of lacquer.

Q. — After taking off the old finish from a coffee table, which I have already done, do I have to put on a coat of sealer before applying regular varnish? The old coat came off pretty good and doesn't seem to have left any color in the wood.

A. — Yes. Putting on a sealer will enable the new coat to go on uniformly. This is especially true if you intend to apply a stain. If so, put on the sealer, then the stain and then another coat of sealer. Some wood finishers skip the second coat of sealer, but it has been our experience that it helps to achieve an excellent result.

Q. — There is a large stain on our dining room table. I have since learned that I should not have placed a plastic container on the wood; that it caused some kind of chemical reaction. Can this stain be removed?

A. — Most of the time, refinishing the wood is the only good solution. But you may be able to disguise the stain quite well by using a paste wax applied and wiped with fine steel wool. Rub carefully back and forth, working with the grain of the wood. Wipe off the excess wax immediately with a clean, dry cloth. Should the stain be very large, work in small sections until the entire area has been handled. The small sections should be about one square foot each. If you are dissatisfied with the result, then a refinishing is necessary, but the attempted camouflage treatment will have done no damage.

Q. — You recently told someone about using powdered pumice to smooth the surface of a piece of furniture that had just been finished. I was unable to get it in my local hardware store, which referred me to the local pharmacy. Sure enough, the drug store carried it. Thought your readers would like to know.

A. — Thanks. While most hardware stores and home center dealers carry the powdered pumice, so do some drug stores and some art supply establishments.

(The techniques of applying varnish, lacquer, shellac, stain, sealer, bleach, remover, etc., are detailed in Andy Lang's booklet, "Wood Finishing in the Home," which can be obtained by sending $1 and a stamped, self-addressed, long envelope to Know-How, P.O. Box 477, Huntington, N.Y., 11743. Questions of general interest will be answered in the column.)

Some Tips On Bathroom Makeovers

By Barbara Mayer
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Alexander Kira has four words of advice for those planning a luxury bathroom: Make it one level.

Kira, a Cornell University professor and author of "The Bathroom," an influential study, says some luxury baths are "accidents waiting to happen" because they incorporate different levels — especially sunken or platform tubs.

Slippery materials, poorly placed controls and use of flooring patterns that obscure steps also contribute to accidents.

Kira, an expert witness in legal cases involving bathroom mishaps, says the lack of grab bars in tubs and the absence of handrails on platforms compound the problem.

He says illustrations of luxury baths in decorating books and magazines should be viewed critically: The tubs are sometimes twice the size of an average bathroom.

The most sought-after materials — marble, tile and granite — convey luxury, but true luxury, he says, "begins when human needs and functional requirements are satisfied."

Kira, who calls getting in and out of the tub one of the most dangerous activities in the home, offers this advice: Sit on the edge of the tub and swing your feet over, holding on to grab bars. Any installation which makes this impossible is unsafe, he adds.

Besides grab bars and hand rails, Kira's other safety tips for planning shower and bath facilities include:

— For a large sunken tub, you should be able to turn on the faucets, clean the tub and check the water temperature without having to climb in.

— A separate shower and bathtub is ideal. A good tub for soaking should be contoured in such a way that there is no safe footing for showering.

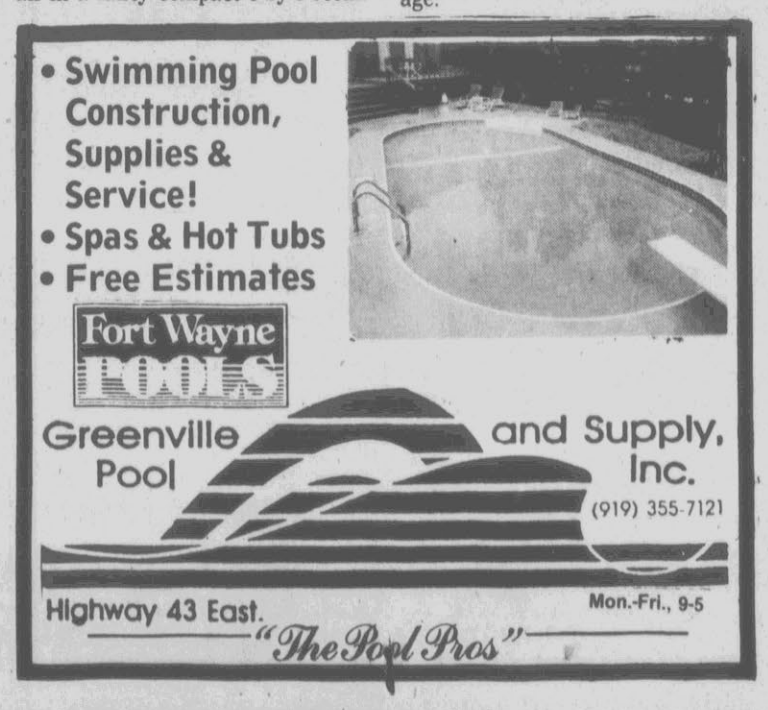

— A shower should have a flat bottom and, ideally, a seat. It should be big enough so you can get out of the stream of water. Controls should be at the point of entry and the flow of water on the opposite wall to minimize the danger of being scalded.

Kira says most pedestal basins are six inches too low. A height of 34 to 36 inches is best. Faucets should release the water to the middle of the sink, not against the back.

Storage is one of the most important — and frequently unmet — needs in the bath, he says. Rather than a pedestal sink, choose a drop-in basin surrounded by cabinets. Plan adequate storage space by listing items to be stowed.

Since the toilet will be used at night under poor lighting conditions, never place it on a platform. Kira suggests taking a mental walk in the dark through the planned bathroom to identify and eliminate potential hazards.

Kira's suggestions are among tips he offered to interior designers during the recent NEOCON show in Chicago. One of the more interesting bathroom ideas at the furniture and accessories show was a bath and fitness center known as Aqua Gym. Assembled from components made primarily in England, it included a tub, toilet, bidet, basin, tanning bed and canopy and exercise equipment, all in a fairly compact 8-by-8 room.

Record Bar Relocating; Store Will Be 'Tracks'

By Greg Laudick
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

The Record Bar in The Plaza mall is scheduled to relocate this week to a recently constructed facility located between the mall and Greenville Boulevard.

And, along with a new location, the retail store will adopt a new identity — "Tracks Music & Video."

"The interior of this location will feature the latest in design for retail operations of this type," said Jackie Brown, public relations coordinator for the Durham-based Record Bar Inc.

Ms. Brown said that in addition to sales of prerecorded music such as cassette tapes and compact discs, the new 4,000-square-foot Tracks store will rent and sell videos.

Vinyl records, however, will eventually be dropped from the store's product offerings, according to Ms. Brown.

"We are currently phasing out the albums, which presently account for only 2 percent of sales," she said.

There are currently about 160 Record Bar or Tracks stores operating in 19 states, primarily in the Southeast. Greenville has two locations; the second store is situated in the Carolina East Mall near Belk.

Ms. Brown said the company plans to change the name of all Record Bar locations to Tracks, a process she says will take approximately two years.

Randy Francis, assistant manager of The Plaza Record Bar, said the relocation of The Plaza Mall store has resulted in the hiring of at least four additional employees.

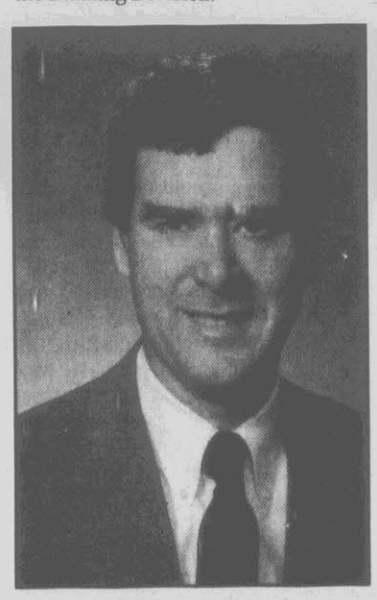

Official Named

The board of directors of Branch Banking and Trust Co. and BB&T Financial Corp. has named John A. Allison IV as chairman and chief executive officer of both the bank and its holding company.

Allison, who was vice chairman of the corporation and continues as president of the bank, replaces L. Vincent Lowe Jr., who died recently at the age of 53.

Allison, 40, became president of the bank and vice chairman of the holding company in April 1987. He was elected to the board of directors in 1986.

A native of Charlotte, Allison joined BB&T's Management Training Program in 1971 and took over the management of that program the following year. He has served the bank as a regional loan administrator, manager of business loan administration and manager of the Banking Division.

JOHN A. ALLISON

A graduate of the University of North Carolina with a bachelor's degree in business administration and Duke University with a master's degree in management, Allison also has completed the Stonier Graduate School of banking at Rutgers University.

Gov. Jim Martin appointed Allison to the Southern Growth Policies Board in December. He also serves on the boards of directors of The Medical Foundation of East Carolina University and the Brody Foundation. He is a member of the N.C. Business Advisory Board and the Alumni Council of the Fuqua School of Business at Duke University.

Allison is also director of Children's Services of Eastern North Carolina and capital campaign chairman for the Ronald McDonald House of Eastern North Carolina.

He is married to the former Elizabeth "Betty" McDonald and they have one son.

Committee Selection

Ricky Leggett of Service America Corp. in Greenville was recently named to serve a 12-month term on the education committee of the North Carolina Vending Association, said NCVA President Roger Hester.

NCVA, the trade association representing professional vending and food service companies in this state, is headquartered in Durham.

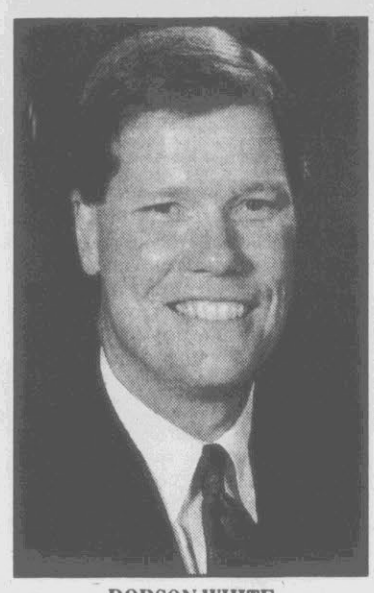

Executive Named

E. Royden Clarke, president of the East Carolina Bank, recently announced the addition of Dorson White as vice president and city executive for the Greenville operations.

Clarke said White's banking experience includes 13 years with Wachovia where he was elected assistant vice president in 1983 and vice president in 1987. Most recently, he served as vice president, business services officer for BB&T, where he was responsible for new business development.

A native of Swansboro and a cum laude graduate of Elon College and the North Carolina School of Banking, White has lived in the Greenville area since 1973. He has served on various committees for the Pitt-Greenville Chamber of Commerce, was past treasurer of the Coastal Plains March of Dimes and is a member of the Greenville Morning Rotary Club.

White and his wife, the former Leslie Kelly of Concord, reside in Greenville and have two children. They are members of the Jarvis Memorial United Methodist Church where White also serves on the finance committee.

DORSON WHITE

Clarke said the East Carolina Bank will open its Greenville branch in early August in Arlington Village next to Davis-Miller Interiors. This will serve as a temporary branch while construction is under way on a new 5,015-square-foot branch office on the corner of Red Banks Road and Arlington Boulevard. The building is expected to be completed by January 1990.

The East Carolina Bank, in business since 1920, is based in Engelhard. The Greenville branch will be the 12th branch in the bank's system.

Convention Attended

Joe and Ruth Rose of Debit One Mobile Bookkeeping recently attended the fourth annual national convention of Debit One franchise owners and their associates held in Kansas City, Mo.

Rose is the owner of a Debit One franchise for an 11-county area in eastern North Carolina.

The three-day meeting featured seminars and training sessions on tax and accounting updates, franchise operations and marketing and client development.

Promotion Announced

John T. Roos has been promoted to vice president, marketing, for Carolina Physicians' Health Plan, Inc. He was formerly director of marketing.

Roos is a resident of Cary and a graduate of Appalachian State University.

CPHP is a group health plan which offers its corporate benefit programs to major corporations and municipalities in the firm's 25-county service area, which includes central and eastern North Carolina.

Manager Named

Lee W. Hauser, a native of Fayettevile, was recently named general sales manager of radio stations WZYC and WBTB, according to station General Manager Benjamin S. Ball.

WZYC, "Z103" is a 100,000-watt FM station serving the coastal North Carolina market including Greenville.

Two Assume New Duties For Belk

Two employees of Belk have assumed new responsibilities, a company spokesman has announced.

Vernon High has been named general merchandise manager for Belk of Greenville effective Aug. 1., while Tildon Brittle has transferred to the Belk Lindsey Group of Florida as merchandise coordinator.

High will supervise the merchandising for Belk, Carolina East Mall, and the new Belk of the Plaza.

A native of Wilson, High joined Belk in Wilson as an assistant division manager in 1977. He transferred to Greenville in 1979 as division manager for shoes, accessories and jewelry. In 1981, he was named division merchandise manager for men's and boys, and in 1982, he was named division manager for ladies fashions.

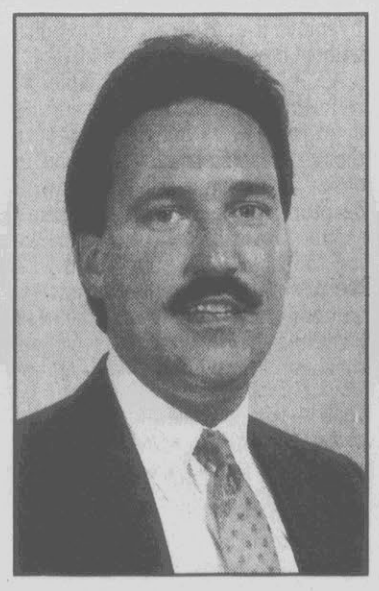

He is the son of Betty High of Wilson.

Brittle, a native of Woodland, joined Belk in Ahoskie as a sales associate in 1967. In 1969, he was named division manager for home fashions and in 1972, he was named to division manager for ladies fashions.

In 1976, he was named general merchandise manager for Ahoskie. In 1982, he transferred to Greenville, where he was named general merchandise manager for Belk of Greenville.

Brittle will transfer to the Belk Lindsey Group of Florida Aug. 1 when he assumes merchandising responsibility for that 32-store group.

Brittle is married to the former Becky Boyd of Scotland Neck and they have two children, Richard and Boyd.

'Cola Wars' Focus May Shift To Arms Dealing

By Sid Moody
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Are the fizzy "cola wars" about to be fought on a brand-new battleground?

Pepsi recently helped the Soviet Union sell 20 warships. That puts them 13 more than seven-up on Coca-Cola. Coke has no navy. So far.

Has arms dealing opened a new chapter in American business? Will Avis try harder by leasing tanks? Will Whoppers come with sesame seed bombs?

Pepsi Cola entered the arms race — backward, actually — by finding a Norwegian scrap buyer for 17 Soviet submarines. Not the kind of subs that in Boston come with sandwich meats, lettuce and dressing. The kind that come with torpedoes.

Pepsi was also middleman for sale of a Soviet cruiser, destroyer and frigate, which is not exactly a glass of carbonated nost. It gives "down the hatch" a new meaning for a soft drink guzzler.

Pepsi scored a Kremlin coup over Coke in 1959 when boss Donald M. Kendall adroitly cooled off the heated and world-televised Khrushchev-Nixon "kitchen debate" by offering the combatants some of his cola. Pepsi has had its toe in the Iron Curtain ever since.

Pepsi now has 21 plants in the Soviet Union. In exchange it helps Moscow import Stolichnaya vodka into the United States, which gives parents pain relief from coping with the Pepsi Generation. Call it fair trade.

Recently Mikhail Gorbachev decided to sell off for scrap and hard currency the 20 outmoded warships. It has been reported Pepsi actually bought them. Nyet. It just found a buyer, for free. Customer relations. Like taking a client to a ball game.

Still ...

EDITOR'S NOTE — Pepsi Cola recently found a buyer for 20 outmoded Soviet warships, giving "down the hatch" a new meaning. Indeed, Pepsi has had its toe in the Soviet Union for years, now operating 21 plants there. In exchange, it helps Moscow import Stolichnaya vodka into the United States.

Normally the weapons of business success in the United States have been a better mousetrap or a smart lawyer. There have, however, been infrequent corporate calls to arms.

The very Associated Press that brings you this dispatch had its origins in 1848 partly because packet boats of rival New York papers hunting the seas for incoming European news began shooting at one another in an excess of competitive zeal. Damn the torpedoes! (and the expense) cried Manhattan's many publishers. Let's buy one packet and pool the news. And the costs.

Fisk rose from circus hand and Yankee peddler after the Civil War to become a boardroom buccaneer, great of mirth and girth and a waxed mustache "the color of a Jersey cow."

When he acquired two steamers that plied between New York and New England, he ornamented the staterooms with 250 singing canaries and himself in the dress uniform of a U.S. admiral further embellished with diamonds that festooned his corpulence.

Admiral Fisk, who his biographer says couldn't distinguish a compass from a capstan, later added a land force, New York's languishing Ninth Regiment. He became its colonel and recruited from his Grand Opera House where he oversaw both his Erie Railroad, whose stock he lavishly watered, and the Demon Can-Can girls whom he as liberally champagned.

He enlisted the Opera House orchestra as regimental band, which saluted him by playing "Hail to the Chief." The colonel-admiral even took the boys with him on bivouac to fashionable Long Branch, N.J., where maneuvers were described by cynics as "a monumental weeklong drunk" in the command post at the Continental Hotel.

Fisk's army, alas, could not protect their leader from being slain by a jealous rival for the pudgy but bejeweled hand of Josie Mansfield, an aspiring actress delicately said to have bartered "purity for subsistence."

Since Fisk's day, the corporate uniform of the day has quieted down to dark suits enlivened by a necktie somber enough to be buried in. Rather than 250 canaries and a regimental orchestra, Pepsi has only Michael Jackson to sing its praises.

But Pepsi has struck first in the battleship biz. While it is helping to recycle old warships, Coke has only its familiar aluminum cans to send to the smelter. Is there an arms racer on the horizon?

Kendall reportedly chortled to Brent Scowcroft, the White House security adviser, that Pepsi is "disarming the Soviet Union faster than you are."

If that is so and nose-tickling cola turns out to be the missing key to world peace, Pepsi can boast it started the dove rolling ahead of Coca-Cola. Somehow Coke is going to have to get into the peace race, strive for the higher ground.

Maybe, for starters, make a bid on scrapping the Iron Curtain.

Ritchie Battles Heavy Odds In Making Bid For Eastern

By March Gordon
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Don't tell Joseph Ritchie he can't buy Eastern Airlines.

The quixotic bidder for the strike-bound carrier may not have experience in the flying business but he's a math wizar who's vaulted over other daunting obstacles to build a successful company from scratch. Along the way, he was a bus driver on Chicago's southwest side, a prison guard and a deputy sheriff.

Ritchie, 42, is principal owner and president of Chicago Research & Trading Group, a leading options trading company, yet has never studied business or economics.

"You make more by paying more," Ritchie said in an interview during a trip to New York. "The more you reward people, the more you're going to get back and the more you're going to make in the long run."

Ritchie boasted that CRT, with around 600 employees, pays many of them twice the industry average.

Eastern boss. Frank Lorenzo, on the other hand, has been locked in a cost-cutting battle with the airline's unions that precipitated the four-month-old strike.

As a manager, Ritchie said he prefers to "turn people loose" rather than control them.

Ritchie, a conservative Republican, is the American partner in JV Dialogue, a U.S.-Soviet joint venture that sells personal computers in the Soviet Union. He attributes its success to "the human side of the equation."

The people who command Ritchie's attention now are the 31,000 pilots, Machinists and flight attendants who worked for Miami-based Eastern before their walkout that started March 4. Since early May, Ritchie, in alliance with Eastern's three unions, has been trying to buy the troubled carrier despite several stinging setbacks.

Ritchie has offered $50 million and the unions have kicked in another $50 million as well as wage concessions totaling $210 million. In addition, the unions have pledged up to $175 million from their wages if certain goals aren't met during the first six months of operation under joint ownership.

Like a modern-day Don Quixote, Ritchie seems to be tilting at windmills. Lorenzo, chairman of Eastern's parent Texas Air Corp., has increasingly gained momentum for his plan to rebuild Eastern as a smaller carrier and sell $1.8 billion in assets to pay debts.

The federal bankruptcy court in New York, where Eastern sought protection from creditors on March 9, has removed Ritchie's buyout plan from consideration, and Lorenzo has dismissed it as a "joke".

Why does he go on?

"I think the people at Eastern understand why," Ritchie answered with a Buddha-like smile. "They've really become like brothers and sisters to me."

Besides, although the bankruptcy court proceedings have turned against him, Ritchie says he believes there's still hope from another quarter: Washington. Despite the impression he gives of farmboy "Aw, shucks" naivete, Ritchie is plugged into the Washington power grid. He makes frequent trips to the capital, where he has attended meetings with White House aides and members of Congress.

He appears to have some reason, at least, to be hopeful. Newt Gingrich, House Republican Whip, recently wrote to Transportation Secretary Samuel Skinner asking him to get involved in Eastern's bankruptcy case.

Some congressmen from both parties are concerned that the disappearance of Eastern as a major carrier could threaten airline competition — already delicate because of the industry's consolidation since deregulation in 1978.

That concern led the aviation subcommittee of the House Public Works and Transportation Committee to hold a hearing on Eastern on June 29, and it extends to some high-ranking members of the Bush Administration, according to Washington insiders.

If the Transportation Department intervened in the case, it could bring at least a temporary halt to the sales of Eastern assets that the bankruptcy court has been approving, Ritchie said.

When he talks about Eastern, Ritchie's dark eyes flash, framed by his silver-white hair and trim mustache. Fresh off the Trump Shuttle from Washington, he rotated his thin, wiry frame in stretching exercises before sitting.

Ritchie lives on a farm 55 miles west of Chicago with wife Sharon and their nine children, whose ages range from 1 to 23. Until now, he has mostly evaded the press, leaving phone calls unreturned and sprinting out of bankruptcy court hearings to a waiting limousine. His testimony at the congressional hearing on Eastern was a rare public appearance; he has never given a press conference.

"My first impression was, 'This man's not for real,'" said a Ritchie associate, who asked not to be identified. "I found him refreshingly naive."

Ritchie says he first got the notion of engrossing himself in the Eastern saga when he read an article in Time Magazine about the strike back in March.

Some sources in the options market say Ritchie's company, CRT, has a reputation for honesty and efficiency. "They're known as being very moral," said a stock options trader who requested anonymity. "They want their employees to become rich, too," he added, noting CRT's liberal profit-sharing policy.

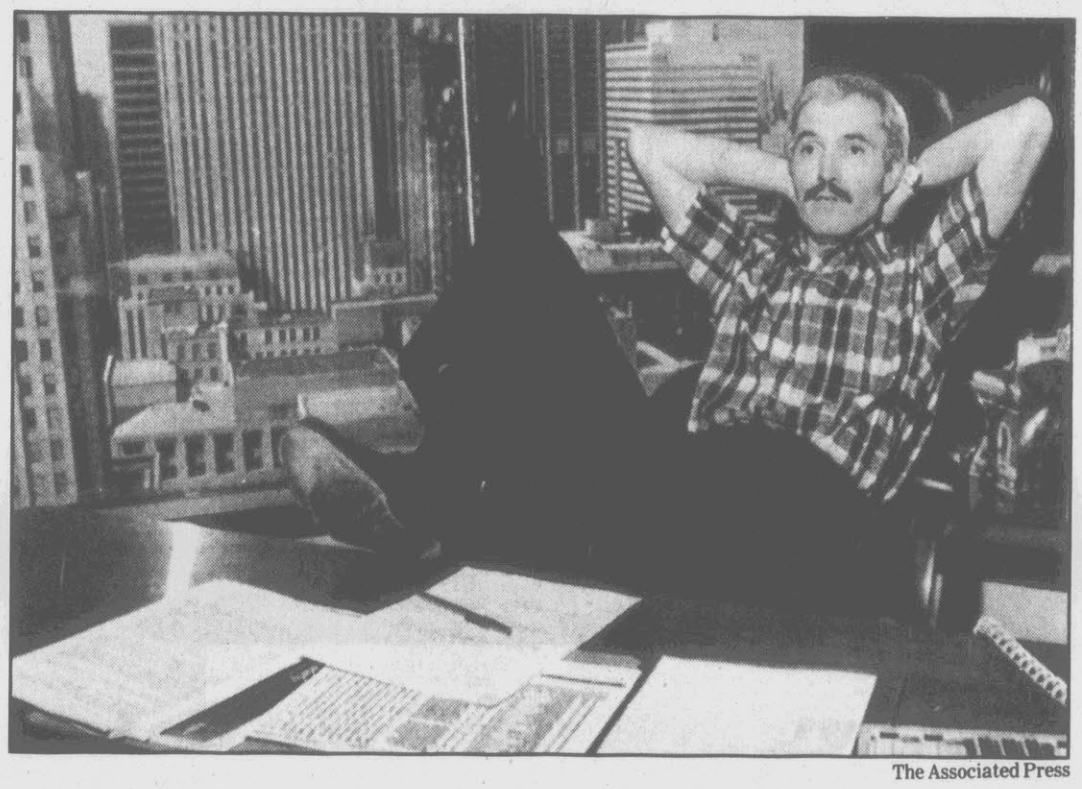

Candidates for jobs at CRT have to pass through an elaborate interviewing process involving encounters with as many as 15 people.

After graduating Wheaton College in suburban Chicago with a bachelors degree in philosophy — "I hated school," he says — Ritchie took the bus driving job in Chicago. That was followed by a 1-year stint as a guard at the Cook County House of Corrections, where he played chess with the inmates.

He became deputy sheriff in 1973 in Du Page County, Ill., where sheriff Richard Doria remembers him now as "very quiet, obviously an intelligent kid."

Ritchie then moved to Los Angeles and started trading precious metals, returning to Chicago in 1975 and starting CRT with a couple of partners in 1977.

He is considered a math whiz who cracked the problem of Rubik's Cube in less than five minutes, and developed a basic mathematical formula for options trading that helped CRT mushroom into a leader in the field.

Appalachian Highway

CHERRY LOG, Ga. (AP) — The final three-mile section of the Appalachian Highway opened Friday, linking Atlanta with Georgia's Blue Ridge Mountains — and cutting the trip down by an hour.

Officials at ribbon-cutting ceremonies said the highway will open tourism to once-secluded areas of north Georgia.

"Now the flatlander foreigners can just pour into our area," East Ellijay Mayor Mack West said, "and see what we and the Cherokee Indians already knew — that this is a beautiful and enchanted land."

The state Department of Transportation credits portions of the highway completed around Jasper, Ellijay, Blue Ridge and Blairsville with creating more than 1,100 new jobs from 1984 through 1987.

Investors Looking For Long-Term Growth Need Look No Further.

Since its inception in December of 1977, Interstate/Johnson Lane's Long Term Growth Portfolio has grown at a compound annual rate of 18.2% while keeping a moderate risk level. Over the same period the Dow Jones Industrial Average grew at a 9.3% compound average rate.*

In addition, there are no fees other than normal commissions charged on transactions you choose to make and you receive a detailed, monthly report about the model, free of charge.

For more information about our listing of recommended stocks chosen for their stability and long-term potential, call us today at 355-2226.

*Calculated through December 31, 1988. Past performance of the model portfolio is neither assurance of, nor guide to, future performance. DJIA returns include dividends but are not compounded; the difference this makes in the comparison is insignificant in our opinion.

FICKLING INSURANCE ASSOCIATES
(919) 756-8300 105 ARLINGTON BOULEVARD, GREENVILLE, NC 27835

Shopping for insurance often means calling all over town, waiting for an agent to return your call and then piecing together all the information you've gathered. While your individual needs fit together like the pieces of a puzzle, buying coverage that way is usually confusing and takes a lot of your time. It is also a dangerous way to protect your business.

Let Us Shop For The Solution To Your Insurance Puzzle.

When shopping, you need the most complete information at hand and a knowledgeable representative to assist you. Fickling Insurance Associates is an independent agency with access to numerous companies. Our wide selection assures the lowest premium while providing comprehensive coverage. Your needs determine the selection made among appropriate policy offerings. It's our business to keep abreast of the industry, and then represent you, the customer, rather than any particular company. Do you sometimes wonder who your agent represents?

Has your insurance agent discussed available options and services with you lately? Can one-company agents maintain true objectivity and provide a comparative view of available coverages? Do they process claims locally and provide audit services? Fickling Insurance Agency does!

Call us today! Let us do the shopping for you. We will help you solve the puzzle of shopping for insurance.

Coal Officials Uneasy As Workers End Strikes

By Kelly P. Kissel
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MADISON, W.Va. — Wildcat strikes waned in the southern Appalachian and Midwestern coal fields Saturday as a union-sanctioned work stoppage expired, but some coal officials worried that a union back-to-work order wasn't genuine.

United Mine Workers President Richard Trumka on Friday called an end to a five-day non-paid holiday and asked 37,000 union coal miners to end wildcat strikes that have idled much of the nation's coal production since June 12.

Miners in Alabama, Illinois and Indiana immediately heeded the call and some returned for light work in the coal fields Saturday. Most aren't scheduled to return to work until Monday.

Illinois had 8,500 miners returning, Alabama had 5,000 and Indiana 1,750.

It wasn't certain on Saturday how many of the remaining wildcatters in Kentucky, West Virginia, Ohio, Pennsylvania and Tennesee would go back to work. Meetings were scheduled in those states through the weekend.

The wildcat strikes began June 12 in support of 1,900 miners in West Virigina, Virginia and Kentucky on strike against the Virginia-based Pittston Coal Group Inc. The strike against Pittston began April 5 in a contract dispute.

In Madison, about 25 miles south of Charleston, UMW District 17 officials met Saturday with more than 400 local presidents and members but were unable to persuade everyone to cease the wildcat strikes. A federal judge has ordered the union to put an end to wildcat strike activities.

"It was about 50-50, but some of them met again after they left our place," said a union official speaking on a condition of anonymity. "Some will start back, and as they see how things are going, others might go back."

The indecision fueled speculation by coal industry officials that Trumka's plea for an end to the wildcat strike wasn't sincere.

"I think the whole situation is very suspect as to whether their true intention is to return to work," said Mark Polen, a spokesman for the West Virginia Coal Association, whose members have lost 15,000 workers to the strike.

Polen said he suspected Trumka's call was not genuine because it included a continued unpaid holiday in some places for no apparent reason.

The union did not say why it extended the holiday period in places, but in the past some districts have been kept out longer in attempts to even out the amount of time that workers were out. This year, District 17 workers in southern West Virginia started the wildcat strikes but those in northern West Virginia's District 31 didn't leave until the third day.

"Only time and the Sunday midnight shift will tell," Polen said.

A spokesman for the Bituminous Coal Operators Association, which includes most major coal companies except for Pittston and holds a no-strike contract with the union, said he wouldn't comment at least until Monday.

The union's international executive board meets July 26 and Trumka's back-to-work request said the miners should return to the coal mines at least until then.

The union's contract allows it to call 10 holidays, or "memorial days," a year. The union used five last week in what was to have been a cooling-off period, but sporadic violence still disrupted the coal fields.

The miners apparently were encouraged that a federal judge in Virginia invited both Trumka and Pittston President Paul Douglas to meet with him Tuesday to discuss why negotiators reached an impasse in early June.

Trumka accepted Judge Glen Williams' offer. Pittston Coal Group President Michael Odom said the company would have no comment.

N.C. Business Briefs

Business Lure

CHARLOTTE (AP) — Charlotte's landing of Lufthansa German Airline will prompt other international carriers to consider Charlotte as a destination, airport and business officials say.

Plans are already under way for luring other international flights, but Charlotte Chamber of Commerce officials wouldn't say Friday whether talks have progressed with other carriers.

Officials announced Lufthansa's intention Friday to provide non-stop service between Frankfurt and Charlotte-Douglas International Airport pending U.S. government approval.

The airport's first international carrier was Piedmont Airlines, which began daily service from Charlotte to London and Nassau, Bahamas, in 1987.

The airport is prepared for more international service because the city several years ago approved several million dollars to build an international concourse, officials said.

Holdings Growth

CHARLOTTE (AP) — NCNB Corp. is likely to kick its 49 percent share in its Texas bank up to 79 percent or even more this month, industry analysts told The Charlotte Observer.

Helping finance the move could be the $410 million NCNB will realize from a stock issue this month, the newspaper reported Saturday.

The company said Friday it will issue another 1.275 million shares in addition to the 7.6 million shares already sold. The securities firms that arranged the issue exercised an option to buy the extra shares.

In buying a greater stake in NCNB Texas National Bank from its majority owner, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp., NCNB would gain more of the bank's surprisingly high profits.

Profitable Company

ITHACA, N.Y. (AP) — Advertising Age magazine's annual list "The 100 Top Leading Media Companies" said Park Communications Inc. was the eighth most profitable media company in America in 1988.

Park Communications publishes 131 newspaper publications, including 41 daily newspapers and owns and operates 10 AM and nine FM radio stations and seven television stations. Park Communications operates several newspapers and stations in North Carolina.

The annual list ranks public and private media companies based on net media revenue and return on sales.

Park Communications rose to 90th from 97th in total net media revenue in 1988 with net media revenue of $149.6 million.

Advertising Age also included Park Communications' 1988 acquisition of nine newspapers in Indiana, Kentucky and North Carolina as third among the top five newspaper groups based on acquisition activity.

Excessive Rents

WASHINGTON (AP) — Rep. Steve Neal, D-N.C., has asked the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development to investigate whether taxpayers are being fleeced by excessive rents at an apartment complex in downtown Winston-Salem.

In a letter sent to HUD Secretary Jack Kemp, Neal said that the rent charged for an efficiency is more than twice the prevailing market rate for the area.

Neal wrote to Kemp recently after learning from an article in the Winston-Salem Journal that the rent is $333 a month for an efficiency, or one-room apartment, at the Winston Apartments.

Journal Of A Journey

Pitt County Native Roberta McKinney Pens Lively Chronicle Of Her Century

The Daily Reflector/Shannon Wolfe

By Carol Tyer
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

HAVELOCK — Think you're too old to do something you've always wanted to do?

Now a Havelock resident, Mrs. McKinney, 100, wrote her autobiography when she was 98. Titled "Journal of Journeys Down Memory Lane: 1888-1987" it's a lively chronicle of 100-plus years of full-out living. And now that the project's done and her century birthday has been noted by a family celebration last November 16, Mrs. McKinney lives on, enjoying life about as much now as she did when she was 20, 30, 80 or 90."

She lives with her daughter, Mary Woollerton, herself a great-grandmother. She credits Mrs. Woollerton with her longevity. "I wouldn't be alive if it weren't for Mary," she said. "She keeps me going."

"Mama keeps me going," Mrs. Woollerton said. "She's lively company to have around — a real sight sometimes."

"Journey" was written mostly in Mrs. McKinney's bedroom when she wasn't playing canasta with her daughter, working on crossword or jigsaw puzzles, reading large-print books or watching basketball games — she's a Larry Bird fan.

Her daughter said her mother used no journal nor other notes while composing her detailed account of her life, relying instead on her unerring memory and her ability to tell a good story. She wrote just as if she were talking.

Mrs. McKinney says she wrote her "simple little story of place and happening along...this long, long trail of mine" mainly for her family — four surviving children, eight grandchildren, 20 great-grandchildren, and 15 great-great-grandchildren.

She wrote, "The beginning of this long journey started at Powell Place, where I was born on Nov. 16, 1888. It was the home of my mother's father and mother, Joseph McLawhon and wife Mary (nee Worthington)."

This was a farm near Ayden her family had bought from the family who, after a losing a son to the Civil War, returned to the North.

For a while, she and her parents lived in a tenant house on the farm of Mrs. Worthington's parents. Later in her childhood, they lived on land inherited by her father about a mile from Rountrees Christian Church.

One of her earliest memories was the illness and death of her brother, Joseph.

"My little brother and I enjoyed playing together for three years, and then one night he was taken with a terrible pain in his stomach and back," she wrote. "Papa went out for the doctor, who was about three miles away. He came and said it was meningitis and gave medicine

Mrs. McKinney, at 6, with her brother Joseph and used hot flannel clothes, but nothing seemed to help, and in about four hours, Joseph passed away.

"I missed him so much...My mother was so heartbroken from losing little Joe that Papa thought maybe a visit to see Grandpap and Aunt Celia might help. So we packed the buggy and started our trip of about eight miles."

She describes her Grandfather Worthington by writing, "Pap didn't believe in education or anything modern, but somehow all his children learned to read, write and count. Aunt Celia said a neighbor taught classes in her home.

She told of pleasant times at her grandfather's, "down by the marl hole at the edge of the swamp," where the family would gather to fish for catfish if they weren't fishing in the creek nearby. They burned rags to keep mosquitoes away, she said.

At 7, she started to school at Rountrees in a one-room schoolhouse near Rountree Christian Church. She said she could already read, write, spell and recite several poems, having been taught by her parents.

But she didn't go regularly, since school was a mile away and she had to walk. "I went often enough to get the books and keep up with the classes," she wrote. "Mom and Dad taught me at home. I did go often enough to have parts in entertainments that were held twice a year. My cousin Blanche and I were in little play-drills, pantomime and as angels holding a crown over someone's head."

She remembers reading enthusiastically, a favorite novel being Mill on the Floss by George Eliot. She also remembers an Authors card game she enjoyed, with cards displaying authors' names and their writings.

She said her family got two newspapers, The Greenville Reflector and The Watchtower, a Christian Church publication.

She said her mother always saw to it that she had pretty dresses, sometimes making them out of her own old dresses. As she got older, she said, she started to sew herself, always having a love for designing and making. "I guess it's always been a natural for me," she said, "and I love it."

A world event she recalls is "The Cuban War." She quoted a song she said was popular at the time, "And Cuba, you'll find you are destined, by fate, to be with us, and Spain can prove no bar. We'll rise in our might and fight, for Cuba, your cause is right. And Uncle Sam says, remember, 'There is room for one more star.'"

She moved to Ayden when she was 10 year old. But she wrote in her autobiography of the Rountrees community, "Somehow I have always thought of Rountrees as my beginning, roots and first knowledge of things and people. I also felt that its impression on me has lasted these many years and has helped my way of life for good."

The family's home in Ayden was on Third Street. Initially, her father worked as a bookkeeper and clerk in a store owned by her Uncle Bob.

She says the faculty of her school in Ayden called Carolina Christian College was a superior one headed by Professor A. J. Manning, "a wonderful teacher, leader and lecturer." She had special instructors in music and dramatics, as well as the basic subjects — plus a business class. She said there were two small dormitories, but she, one of about 100 students, lived at home with her family.

When she was 13, her family built a new six-room house next to their old four-room one.

It was when she was 13 and recovering from chicken pox that she got a note saying that a boy from school whose family was moving out of town wanted to visit her. She agreed and became acquainted with Merrimon McKinney, whose mother had moved his family to Ayden from Hyde County especially so her children could attend Carolina Christian College. At that time the McKinneys were moving to Charleston, S.C.

She recalls that brief meeting and leave-taking, "I went out on the porch with him to say goodbye. There was a big rose bush by the walk. He stooped and pulled off a white rose and brought it back up the steps to me, stood and looked into my eyes about a minute and was gone. This was really the beginning of my whole life, but little did I realize it then."

Music was a large factor in her teen years. She recalls double-dating with her cousin Blanche and the two of them playing piano and guitar while Blanche's date played the violin. She also remembers cantatas at church prepared by her and Blanche for the young people of the church.

She kept a correspondence going with Merrimon and learned that he had chickenpox, presumably caught from her, after his farewell visit. She soon learned that he was at the University of North Carolina studying to be a druggist.

Merrimon's mother later moved back to Ayden and their visits became more frequent and an "understanding" developed. She recalled the first time he kissed her: "He had to go. We were at the door when, all of a sudden, I was in his arms and I received a real kiss, the first I had ever had from a boy. I was speechless, and he was gone."

Merrimon began an apprenticeship in a Washington, N.C., drugstore with a Dr. Blount as his mentor. She went to Wilson along with her school, which was moving there, "raising its standards to a full-fledged college" and changing its name to Atlantic Christian College. Always a mostly-A's student in Ayden, with a special interest in music, she thought then that she'd attend Atlantic Christian two years and then perhaps transfer to the Boston Conservatory of Music.

Her days at Atlantic Christian were cut short by — of all things, a taste of potted ham. "Several girls planned a midnight feast and asked to have it in our room. I didn't like the idea, but they did it and didn't get caught. But sure thing I did the next day. There was about half a can of potted ham left from the sneak party hidden in the window behind the curtain and, without even thinking, I took a few bites. Well, about four o'clock that afternoon I was taken with terrible pains in the stomach and vomiting. The doctor said I had ptomaine poisoning. Next morning I was still sick and someone called my dad to come. Of course, he was there as quick as the train could bring him and the next day he took me home.

She never went back to Atlantic Christian. She continued her relationship with Merrimon by letter and short visits and they began to talk of marriage. She said she expressed to him that she was "afraid of marriage. Afraid I would not make him a good wife as housekeeping and being motherly had never appealed to me. I seemed more the artistic type."

She said her young suitor assured her that he hoped she'd never have to wash too many dishes or be too motherly. "Well, I never did wash too many dishes," she said, "but surely did spend many sleepless night with babies — which I don't regret."

During her continued wait for her fiancee to finish his apprenticeship, she went by train with her parents to the Jamestown Tricentennial Exhibition in Virginia. She recalls that it was "exciting and fun, as was shopping in downtown Norfolk."

She spent three weeks planning her trousseau, she remembers, with the help of Miss Annie Dudley, her friend at the local millinery store. She made her own long silk wedding

Author Mary Higgins Clark Undaunted By Success

By Susan Baer
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — So she signed a record-breaking, $11 million contract with a major publisher. So her latest thriller plopped right smack at the top of the New York Times best-seller list. So she's among first lady Barbara Bush's favorite authors.

So what?

Any time she feels the need for a reality check, she refers to a cherished letter from a 12-year-old fan that she keeps nearby:

"Dear Mrs. Clark,

"You are my favorite suspense writer. I love your books. I love your books so much I don't even mind the boring parts."

Clark delivers one of her generous, expansive laughs. "If that's not going to keep you honest ... "

And these days, with 15 million copies of her books in print in the United States alone, something has to. The letters of adoration, from everyone from 12-year-olds to Pat Nixon, a former first lady, flood her desk. The reviews are generally kind. And all of Clark's reader-friendly, happily-ever-after suspense novels, from Where are the Children? to her latest, While My Pretty One Sleeps, become instant hits.

In that, this devout Irish Catholic with a touch of the Bronx in her voice, finds satisfaction, but little mystery.

"I'm such a mainstream writer, and most of us are mainstream," says the novelist, in town last month for the American Booksellers Association convention. "For all the people who have troubled and terrible relationships, there are many people who are perfectly happy with their families."

Those are the families and characters in her books — normal, happy, mainstream folks like herself, a mother of five and grandmother of four, who are not hunting for dark alleys in their normal, happy, mainstream lives. But in the books, as in the life of the dark- haired, blue-eyed author who lost several family members at early ages, sorrow and trouble find an open door.

"For most of us, trouble comes from outside," Clark says.

"Somebody gets in the car when you're at a red light, somebody breaks into your house, somebody goes to the school and shoots up the children. Most of us do not invite trouble, but trouble comes."

In her case, personal trouble and tragedy account for the sense of foreboding many of her characters carry with them, as well as her own awareness that "you never know what's going to happen from one minute to another."

"Some people live in almost a protective cloud," she says. "They go from womb to tomb without trouble. Flossie and Freddie and Bert and Nan — the Bobbsey twins are all adorable. And they grow up and they marry exactly the right people. They get the perfect job. They retire. They sell the big house for a million bucks. They get the great place in Florida. And now we're having the most wonderful time!

"I've seen people who've never seemed to have a ripple all their lives. And my hat's off to them, but my life was not like that."

For starters, her father, whose Irish pub and life savings were both crushed by the Depression, died when Mary was 10. Her older brother Joseph died of a rare disease months after he had graduated from high school and enlisted in the Army. And her husband, Warren Clark, died of a heart attack at age 45, when Mary Higgins Clark was 36 and the mother of five children. A subsequent brief marriage, many years later, ended in divorce.

But just as her heroes always land on their feet — after "paying their dues throughout the book," she stresses — so has Clark, who in middle age is enjoying storybook success, and the riches to go with it.

She hasn't run out to buy a Mercedes, as her son suggested, with the multimillion-dollar contract she signed last year with Simon & Schuster for four novels and a collection of short stories. But she's buying slightly more expensive clothes, writing faster, worrying less and living well.

Along with a new home in New Jersey, which she recently renovated, she keeps a house by the water on Cape Cod and an apartment in New York overlooking Central Park where a group of writer friends gathers every other Wednesday to discuss and critique each other's works in progress. ("They saved Where Are the Children?" she says of her group.)

On the first Tuesday of every month she meets with a different group of writers in New York, these all mystery writers who gather to talk shop — private eyes, domestic violence, blood and guts and motives, the usual.

But most of the time, if she isn't traveling or attending a criminal trial for ideas and inspiration, she's back at her New Jersey home with the park-like view, holding court with the fashion designers, senators, lawyers and other assorted characters who develop "like a Polaroid" at her keyboard.

"I like to get up at 6 in the morning, make a cup of coffee, carry it into the library, my workroom, and turn on the computer." She pulls open all the curtains, all the blinds — "I love everything open" — and settles in. "I just say, 'OK kids, where were we yesterday?' To be able to sink into that is terrific."

Depression Can Cause Some To Avoid Bathing

Dear Abby
Abigail Van Buren

Dear Abby: This concerns the letter from the woman who stayed on her side of the bed for 40 years because her husband hardly ever took a bath.

I have a brother who is just like him. He came to stay with me for two months last summer, and never took one bath or shower in all the time he was here. I kept checking the towels and washrag every day, and he never used one!

I changed the sheets and pillowcases on his bed every week, and had to hold my nose while I carried them to the washing machine. (I used to sneak into his bedroom while he was sleeping so I could get his socks and underwear in order to wash them.)

This man dressed up like a sport and looked clean, but he was anything but. He splashed a lot of cologne and after-shave on himself, so he must have known that he needed it. I gave him some deodorant, but he didn't get the hint and never touched it.

Why do some folks just hate to bathe? There must be something wrong upstairs. I would appreciate the opinion of a psychiatrist. — Stinky's Sister

Dear Sister: I asked my No. 1 consultant, Dr. Judd Marmor, past president of the American Psychiatric Association, and he said: "Some older people who are chronically depressed will go for long periods — often many months — without bathing. They seem totally unaware that they smell bad, and may become hostile and defensive when told that they absolutely must bathe.

"In cases where there is repressed anger, refusal to bathe is one way of distancing oneself from a spouse or family members.

"People who have very low self-esteem will neglect personal hygiene. They feel loathsome ('Why bother; I'm not worth the trouble').

"If it comes on late in life and hasn't been a lifelong pattern, it may indicate that an organic brain problem has developed.

"In order to determine specifically the reason for refusing to bathe, the person would have to be psychiatrically examined."

Dear Abby: Thank you for printing that wonderful poem Jimmy Stewart wrote about his dog named Beau. It was priceless.

It brought back some fond memories. I am a retired doctor of veterinary medicine and was formerly an assistant to Dr. J.D. Cozzens, who practiced in Westwood Village, Calif., back in 1936-1938. Most of our clients were movie stars, such as Pat O'Brien, Jeanette MacDonald, Gene Raymond, Fred MacMurray, Lloyd Nolan and Jimmy Stewart.

One day we received a telephone call from Jimmy Stewart. He was at the dog pound trying to retrieve his English setter, which had been picked up by the dog catcher. Mr. Stewart needed us to identify the dog — which showed absolutely no recognition of Mr. Stewart when he came to claim him. Because I had handled the dog, Dr. Cozzens sent me down to the pound to verify the ownership of the setter.

As I recall, the dog acted as though he had never seen Mr. Stewart before, which was quite upsetting to this famous movie star.

Anyway, I established the identity, and Mr. Stewart took the dog home. This happened more than 50 years ago, so Mr. Stewart may not remember it, but I will never forget it. — Wallace R. Eagle, D.V.M., Geneva, Ill.

Dear Dr. Eagle: Thanks for sharing a delightful memory.

Dear Abby: Please share an idea with "Worried Mom," whose in-laws fail to buckle up their grandchild in his car seat. Tell "Mom" to borrow a videotape on child safety from her local hospital, or police department, and view it with her in-laws.

Using dummies, these auto safety videos reveal graphically what happens to a young child or infant even in minor accidents.

I saw one of these videotapes in the hospital when our baby was born. Ten years later, I can still vividly recall how the head of the "doll" was crushed in a 20-mph car crash.

We have a rule at our house — buckle up or the car doesn't move! — Lynn Hicks, Olympia, Wash.

If you would like to write to Abby, send your letter to Abigail Van Buren, P.O. Box 69440, Los Angeles, CA. 90069. For a personal, non-published reply, enclose a self-addressed stamped envelope.

Ayden Native, 100, Writes Autobiographical Journal

She and Merrimon had a small home wedding on June 3, 1908, before 8:30 a.m. so they can catch the 8:30 train to Baltimore, where they are to have a 10-day honeymoon.

Their first home was in Belhaven. Their first son, William, arrived in about a year. Later they moved to Baltimore, where Merrimon attended Maryland University studying medicine and worked in Dr. George Bunting's Drug Store on North Avenue. She recalls that the doctor was working on a formula for face cream. "He asked Merrimon to help him with it, which he did very effectively. Well, the doctor was so pleased that he asked him to be his partner in advertising, manufacturing, profit and loss thereof."

"Fate stepped in again," she said. She was pregnant and wishing to be near her parents. So the young couple decided to forego Merrimon's medical studies, move to Ayden and open a drug store there. So much for participation in the development of the cosmetic and what it might have meant.

Their second child, a daughter Hazel was born in 1911 in Ayden. Another son Robert was born 18 months later.

She recalls those days as mostly child-rearing, with the help of a housekeeper and cook, but some outings with her husband. One she especially enjoyed with a visit to a Greenville theater to see the opera Il Travatore. They traveled to Greenville in the "first car in Ayden, that of Dr. and Mrs. William Harvey Dixon." she recalls.

Another daughter Mary Celia — now called Mary — was born in 1916. They moved into a new 11-room house in a new section of Ayden called West Haven. The house was a gift of her parents, and her parents built themselves a house next to theirs. A fifth child, a son Montague, was born in 1918.

The McKinneys prospered during those years. In addition to running the drug store, Merrimon bought a warehouse and became an ice cream maker and ice plant operator. He built a swimming pool for public and family use and acquired a drug store in Morehead City. He also ran a movie theater for a while.

Everything began to slow, she said, in 1923. Merrimon had a kidney stone and was rushed to Johns Hopkins Hospital in Baltimore for surgery. It was a trying time, but he recovered and the two took a short vacation at Seven Springs resort after he was home.

By the 1930's, Merrimon was co-owner and -operator of a real estate business in Beaufort and he and his partner were working toward establishing a beach resort called New Smyrna about five miles from Beaufort. But the world economy was worsening, and business at the drug stores was dwindling.

She said through the Hoover Administration days, times were hard, but she and Merrimon continued made their personal life fulfilling. "We would usually spend Friday evenings together "hanging around the store or we would go to a silent movie picture and sit and hold hands. We were still sweethearts. I always saw him to the door at home and he would kiss me goodbye."

With the eastern North Carolina businesses failing, Merrimon got a line on an opportunity in Greensboro and decided to open a drug store on the ground floor of a hotel there. Both were impressed with the schools available there for the children. All but William, already a freshman at the University of North Carolina-Chapel Hill, were still in preparatory school.

She said goodbye to her father, then widowed and remarried to the former Amanda Muse, a woman she like very much. The next few years, she saw children into and through college, saw children get married and went to stay with daughters having babies. Life was more modest, but still good.

When she was 45, Merrimon died of kidney difficulties. She recalled his last words to her, "Dear, you have been a faithful old girl."

From then on, life was more difficult economically. She had little income of her own and lived at various times with different of her children.

Her son, William, then a civil engineer having worked on the Hoover Dam project, came home ill. He continued in ill health until 1945 when he had pneumonia and passed away.

A widow for 56 years, Mrs. McKinney says she has had satisfying, even exciting times, since her husband's death — visits to World's Fairs, trips to New York City, the Amish Country of Pennsylvania, etc. She has lived in various places from Florida to Washington, D.C., over the years, finally moving to Havelock when she was 96. Her latter years have been centered mostly on her children and their children and grandchildren.

She wrote, "I did not plan to have a large family, but, somehow, as fate would have it, they came along and I am so happy they did. Of course, my children caused me many worries and heartaches. But that is life, and nothing compared with the wonderful, thoughtful and helpful things they have all done for me. Well, they have just made life worth living and I am so thankful."

In the closing pages of her books, she shared "my philosophies I try to live by. Moderation in all things. Do unto others as you would have them do unto you. No grudges and truthfulness. I think kindness is about the nicest word in the dictionary."

Of writing her book, she said, "Bringing back the old times has been a very pleasant trek."

She looked at life from a larger view in the closing statement, "Time and tide are busy ever. Man decays and ages move. But His mercy waneth never — God is Wisdom. God is Love."

Pair Wed Saturday Afternoon

MRS. PETERSON

Teresa Louise Bratton of Greenville and Stephen Greacen Peterson III of Madison, Wis. were married at 2 p.m. Saturday in Jarvis Memorial United Methodist Church.

The Rev. John C. Speight Jr. conducted the double-ring ceremony. Wedding music was provided by organist Jeffrey Hargett, violinist Margaret Garriss and soloist Steve Bratton, brother of the bride.

Parents of the bride are Sue Bratton of Ventura, Ca. and Mr. and Mrs. Charles W. Bratton of Greenville. The bridegroom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Stepen G. Peterson Jr. of Raleigh.

Given in marriage by her parents, the bride wore a gown of taffeta with overlay of candlelight organza originally worn by her aunt. The fitted bodice featured a sweetheart neckline outlined in seed pearls with puffed elbow-length sleeves of sheer organza. The orginal lace was reapplied to the waistline, bodice and front panel of the skirt. A fingertip illusion veil was attached to a floral organza headpiece. The bride carried a nosegay of sweetheart roses, blue delphinium and yellow alstroemeria. She carried a white Bible orignally carried by her mother.

Nancy Nehring of San Francisco, Ca., was maid of honor. Bridesmaids were Linda Peterson of Roanoke, Va., sister of the bridegroom, and Sharla Bratton of Indianapolis, Ind., cousin of the bride. They wore royal blue taffeta dresses and carried yellow roses with blue delphinium and baby's breath.

Chuck Krause of Greensboro was best man. Ushers were Keith Cochran of Chapel Hill; Steve Bratton of Los Angeles, Ca., brother of the bride; Shawn Bratton of Indianapolis, Ind., cousin of the bride, and Cameron Evans of Greenville, step-brother of the bride.

A reception was held in the church fellowship hall. The bridegroom's parents hosted a rehearsal dinner at the Ramada Inn.

The bride attended the University of Kansas, Lawrence, Kan. The bridegroom attended the University of North Carolina at Greensboro and is employed with 2100 Productions of InterVarsity Christian Fellowship, Madison, Wis.

Double-Ring Ceremony Unites Mr. Griner And Miss Boseman

MRS. GRINER

SIMPSON — Cindy Michelle Boseman of Route 2, Grimesland was married to Michael Wayne Griner of Greenville at 2 p.m. Saturday in Salem United Methodist Church. The Rev. C.B. Owens conducted the double-ring ceremony.

Organist Gary Riven bark, pianist Donna Edwards and vocalists Pam Thatcher and Russell Jones provided music.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Paul E. Boseman of Route 2, Grimesland. The bridegroom's parents are Mr. and Mrs. William B. Griner Sr. of Greenville.

Given in marriage by her parents and escorted by her father, the bride wore a formal bridal satin gown. The sweetheart neckline and bodice were adorned with imported lace appliques, seed pearls and sequins. The cathedral length train was accented with rows of ruffles and lace appliques. The two-tiered fingertip veil extended from a back pouf of illusion and the crown was adorned with lace and pearls. The bridal bouquet was a cascade of pink roses, white pixies, English ivy, spider plant and streamers.

Jennifer Boseman of Grimesland and Georgia Parnell, sisters of the bride, were maid and matron of honor, respectively. Bridesmaids were Debbie Griner of Raleigh, sister of the bridegroom; Barb Griner of Apex, sister-in-law of the bridegroom; Laura Davenport of Snow Hill, aunt of the bride; Wendy Tesh of Roanoke Rpids, cousin of the bride; Christy Riggs of Greenville, and Dawn Faulkner of Greenville. Each wore a tea-length gown of dusty rose jacquard and carried a cascade bouquet of pink and white pixies an daisies with streamers.

The mother of the bride wore a pale blue silk dress and the bridegroom's mother wore a tea-length dress of pink chiffon and lace.

The bridegroom's father was best man. Ushers were Bill Griner Jr. of Durham and George Griner of Apex, brothers of the bridegroom; Jeff Parnell of Greenville, brother-in-law of the bride; Bennie Benson, Steve Whaley and Bill Callicutt, all of Ayden, and Jesse LeNeave of Greenville.

A reception was given by the bride's parents in the church fellowship hall. The four-tierd wedding cake was designed and made by the bridegroom's mother. The bridegroom's parents hosted a pig-picking at the American Legion Hall in Greenville.

The bride is a graduate of Greenville Christian Academy and Pitt Community College. She is employed by Eastern Pines Water Corporation. The bridegroom attended Pitt Community College and is a graduate of the police academy at Pitt Community College. He is employed by the Ayden Police Department.

After a wedding trip to Myrtle Beach, S.C., the couple will reside in Greenville.

Mrs. Ayers Is Honored

CONETOE — Fannie Brown Ayers celebrated her 80th birthday Monday and was honored at a party Sunday at her home.

Hosts and hostesses were her children, Margaret and Corbett Batchelor of Scotland Neck, Doris and Joe Keel and Carrie and Richard Harrell, all of Tarboro, Frances and Bill Buck of Greenville, and Claudie and James Earl Ayers of Crisp.

Mrs. Ayers has 18 grandchildren and 19 great-grandchildren.

He Is Donald Trump Of The Forest

At Wits End
Erma Bombeck

I can handle the pressure and stress of city life, but put me in a nice, quiet atmosphere in a cabin in the woods, and I get a little squirrelly. For the last couple of days, I've been staring out into the woods — watching birds mostly. Ordinarily I wouldn't mention this, but I observed my husband hanging up yet another bird feeder.

This man is to the forest what Donald Trump is to New York. Bombeck bird towers dominate every bit of countryside. Each domicile is a monument to cuteness. He has erected apartments for sparrows, ranch-style homes for orioles, plantations for mockingbirds, retirement condos for wrens, and halfway houses for birds who hit the pyracantha and can't fly home.

On this day he was putting up a bird feeder that even I couldn't figure out how to get the seeds out of. It looked like a fat drainpipe with little indentations in the side, and just below each hole was a twig. Somehow I could just imagine two birds watching him and observing:

Cora: "I'd rather grub for worms on a diseased tree than put my beak in that thing. Can't they ever just throw seeds on the ground?"

The feeders drive my husband crazy, not only trying to keep them filled, but having them serve those for whom they are intended. The hummingbirds couldn't figure out how to get to the nectar inside the big red apple that hangs from the tree. The cactus wrens could. The large barracks feeder that has a one-way mirror and hangs from our kitchen window was supposed to attract only birds, but now a squirrel is wallowing in it.

"It's the doggie door all over again, isn't it?" I said. That was a reminder about how my husband got wedged in the doggie door trying to demonstrate to our Yorkie how it worked. It would have been simpler to give the dog his own key.

All of this certainly answers the age-old question, "Do animals laugh?" Wouldn't you?

Conti Coffee Museum Is One Of A Kind

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — Museums may not be everyone's cup of tea, but here's one that's almost sure to provide a stimulating experience.

It's the John Conti Coffee Museum, where objets d'art make way for household items, and there's no musty odor — rather the aroma of roasting java and perking joe.

"We've announced it since we opened, and no one's rebutted us," he says.

In fact, when it was opened two years ago, it was believed to be the only one in the world. Since then, Jones says, Brazil, Canada and Japan have opened coffee exhibits.

The museum, in a coffee-colored building, is an arm of the John Conti Coffee Factory, Louisville's only roaster of fine beans.

Engagement Announced

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Wesley Thacker of Greensboro announce the engagement of their daughter, Patricia Renee Thacker, to Mark Russell McDougal, son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Alan McDougal of Greenville. The wedding is planned for Sept. 2.

Cotton Best Ticking For Comforters

TRADITIONAL HOME

Winter may be months away but it isn't too early to think about cold weather bedding.

Down comforters, a mixture of down and feathers, differ in type and amount of fill, construction and type of ticking, says Brunner. Down is the soft, natural insulator found in clusters on the breasts of ducks and geese. Feathers are flatter and heavier than down and have quill shafts. Most down comforters contain between 70 and 90 percent down, depending upon the comforter's quality. Eiderdown is the highest quality, followed by goose and duck down.

A comforter's ticking should be made of breathable cotton and have a high thread count to prevent the down from escaping. The highest quality ticking, says Brunner, is made from Egyptian cotton.

Comforter construction techniques vary. Baffle construction creates fabric baffles inside the comforter and allows the owner to vary the distribution of down within the comforter. Sewn-through construction, in which the comforter's ticking is sewn togeher, creates closed pockets of evenly distributed filling but reduces loft. Partial-rectangle or honeycomb construction assures good distribution and loft.

Cartier Jewelry Features The Panther In Egyptian Theme

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Purveyors of fine jewels, like those of haute couture, enjoy introducing their latest fashions, and Cartier, like the venerable house of Chanel, tends to assemble an updated collection based on an old motif.

While Coco's motifs included gilt chains, faux pearls and the quilted leather handbag, Cartier's is the panther, the panther and the panther.

This time around, the panther is worked into an ancient Egyptian theme called "Jewels of the Nile."

"The panther is the flagship of the house," says Cartier's Philippe Bessis, a specialist in antique pieces and enthusiastic jewel historian. He and design manager Corentin Quideau were in New York from Paris for the launching of the collection, which is now available in New York and Los Angeles.

Here in the collection's characteristic pale "champagne gold" are panthers marching in relief around a heavy collar reminiscent of something Cleopatra might have worn; panthers dancing in miniature from one of today's favorites, the charm bracelet; and panthers ready to clamp a wrist in versions of the by-now perennial Cartier bracelet, lacquer-spotted, emerald-eyed.

The collection also incorporates falcon and scarab motifs, neither of which is new in Cartier jewelry. Both men stress continuity in the company's work, and tell of research through extensive archives before new designs are made.

"We think we have the most important and extraordinary archives in the world of jewelry," says Bessis, estimating that there are some 350,000 items. These include drawings, photos and mock-ups and records of stones, metals, sales and repairs that document individual pieces of jewelry.

Then there's the "Cartier museum," notable jewelry pieces in a permanent collection; pieces made, sold and bought back in the interest of history. Some of these items will be on show this fall in Paris' Petit Palais, in an exhibition to be titled "L'Art de Cartier," to run from Oct. 20-Jan. 28, 1990 — jewelry, watches, objets d'art and silverware.

The idea for the new collection came from an exhibition, too: one of Egyptian antiquities, "The Golden World of Tanis," mounted in Paris a few years back.

"We were really very impressed by the modernity of the jewels exhibited, their colors, shapes and balance," says Quideau. "They had the spirit of what has been through the centuries the essence of the beauty of jewelry. That inspired us to make this collection."

The designers kept in mind Cartier designs of the 1920s, among other sources, using Egyptian decorative themes, drawing on historical and architectural motifs.

Valuable Antiquities Being Looted From Northern Cyprus

By Kerin Hope
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NICOSIA, Cyprus — Thousands of ancient treasures have been looted from churches and tombs in the Turkish-held north of Cyprus and authorities there say they can't stop a booming trade in stolen antiquities.

Plundered icons — portraits of Byzantine saints — are smuggled out and offered for sale on West European art markets along with 3,000-year-old vases and delicate frescoes stripped from medieval churches.

"Villagers wanting to make some money bring in an icon or pots they dug out of tombs," said an antiques dealer in northern Cyprus who spoke on condition of anonymity.

"There are regular buyers, local and foreign, who get the stuff abroad one way or another."

Cyprus has been divided since 1974, when the Turkish army invaded and seized the northern one-third of the Mediterranean island following an Athens-backed coup aimed at uniting Cyprus with Greece.

The predominantly Moslem Turkish Cypriots unilaterally declared independence in 1983. But their republic is recognized only by Turkey.

After some 200,000 Greek Cypriots fled south, disused churches were stripped of icons and other valuable furnishings. Some churches were converted into mosques and others were used as warehouses or stables.

The European Parliament in December condemned what it called "the continued destruction and pillaging of the Christian and Hellenic cultural heritage" in northern Cyprus and asked Turkey "to respect what is a profoundly European cultural heritage."

Greek Cypriot officials claim more than 7,000 icons are missing, as well as hundreds of ancient objects, including some looted from private collections and others from storerooms of foreign archaeological missions.

Officials in the north insist they don't have the facilities to prevent such thefts.

"Naturally, we're concerned. But we're a small state. We don't have the funds to employ hundreds of guards to look after all the sites day and night," Education and Culture Undersecretary Buhan Tuna told The Associated Press.

"We do try, but the people who steal major items like the mosaics aren't from the island. They're professionals from abroad."

Turkish Cypriot officials say they have about 4,000 icons in storage awaiting display in a new museum and that they don't know of any others. They say the private collections were catalogued and locked up.

But Cypriot icons, along with ancient vases and stone figurines are frequently offered for sale abroad.

Turkish antiques also have disappeared, among them a sword said to have belonged to the Ottoman Sultan Selim II whose troops conquered Cyprus in 1570. It was reported stolen last year from the St. Sophia mosque, a Christian cathedral before the 16th century Moslem conquests, in the Turkish sector of Nicosia.

The Greek Cypriots have sometimes been able to retrieve stolen treasures.

"Experts at some foreign museums and auction houses have been very helpful," said Athanasios Papageorghiou, director of the Cyprus government's archaeological service.

"They've notified us when Cypriot pieces turn up, and the government or a private foundation has been able to buy them . . . but that's only a fraction of what's missing, and more is being taken all the time."

Papageorghiou said that earlier this year, rare 12th century frescoes were removed from the church of Agios Filon in the north.

"We shouldn't have to spend money to buy back our own property," he added. "We can't afford to pay a huge ransom for something."

Since Greek Cypriots cannot enter the Turkish sector, archaeological service officials rely on diplomats, United Nations officials and foreign scholars for information on what's disappearing.

THE DEXTER – BAREFORD 1804 CLASS I SILVER DOLLAR

The Associated Press

Record price realized

This 1804 American silver dollar, one of the most prized coins known to collectors, was sold at auction recently for a world record of $990,000, the highest known amount ever paid for a coin. It was purchased by the American Rare Coin Fund in Los Angeles.

A Zany Book

THE MIDNIGHT EXAMINER. By William Kotzwinkle. Houghton Mifflin. 227 Pages. $17.95.

His real name is Howard Halliday. But he takes no offense at being addressed as Howard Haggerd, Howard Hammertoe, Howard Habana or any other "H.H." combination.

It's part of his job. Halliday is the editor of The Midnight Examiner, one of those lurid tabloids found at supermarket checkout counters in annoying abundance. It features shrieking headlines such as:

"Crazed Husband Eats Wife's Gerbils. They Were Tasty He Says and I'd Do It Again"

"Man Marries Orangutan in Quiet Ceremony. I Love Her Says Groom Even Though She's Hairy"

Since his firm, Chameleon Publications, also puts out a variety of other equally zany publications, Halliday often is called on to do articles for them, thus his need for a variety of noms de plume. A job such as his obviously requires a man out of the ordinary, and Halliday is the man for the job — as are his equally quirky staff members.

After doing a remarkably good, and funny, job of skewering papers in the Examiner's mold, William Kotzwinkle moves on to more hilarious matters. Such as feuding with the Mafia.

How did this come about? Well, there's this gorgeous girl who tires of acting in X-rated movies — made by the Mafia, of course — and seeks asylum in the Examiner offices. Knowing the bad guys will come after her, Halliday and his staff arm themselves. Their weapons of choice are a blowgun, a boomerang, a fly rod, that sort of thing.

When the two sides clash, the outcome is bound to be hilarious. It is, it certainly is.

New Scenic Postcard

By Syd Kronish
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

It's summertime, the time when many vacationers are heading for the seashore. So, too, is the U.S. Postal Service, with the issue of a new 15-cent postcard.

The Seashore is the fifth subject in the America the Beautiful Series of postcards. It was designed by Bart Forbes, who was also responsible for the previous editions — Prairie, Desert, Wetlands and Mountains.

"America the Beautiful" and "USA 15" appear in black below the scene.

First-day cancellations are available in the two usual methods. The deadline is July 17.

The Postal Service gives preferential service to customers who buy the card at a local post office and submit it for cancellation. Self-address the card and send it to: Customer-Supplied Cards, Seashore Postal Card, Postmaster, Cape Hatteras, NC 27920-9991. No remittance is required.

If you want the Postal Service to supply the card, send, for each card ordered, a self-addressed, pressure-sensitive label and a check or money order in the amount of 15 cents per card to: Seashore Postal Card, Postmaster, Cape Hatteras, N.C., 27920-9992.

Summer Offerings

The Postal Service has some new items available this summer:

"Summer 1989 Commemorative Stamp Pack" (Item No. 8906, $2.95) features six recently issued U.S. stamps. It follows the format of the Spring 1989 edition, the first in a continuing series to be released four times a year. Like its predecessor, the tri-fold pack features a four-color cover and background information on each subject. It includes three stamps in the Constitutional Bicentennial Series — the House of Representatives, the Senate and the Executive Branch — and stamps commemorating South Dakota Statehood, Arturo Toscanini and WORLD STAMP EXPO '89.

"Lou Gehrig Poster" (Item No. 8826, $10) features the baseball immortal in Yankee pinstripes. The poster has a reproduction of the Lou Gehrig stamp at the bottom as well as Gehrig's autograph.

"Liberte, Egalite, Fraternite Souvenir" (Item No. 8829, $5.95) is a joint venture with the French government. Featured is a block of four U.S. French Revolution stamps with the July 14 (Bastille Day) first-day cancellation, plus a strip of three French stamps with a special PHILEXFRANCE show cancellation. Also included is an eight-page, illustrated booklet.

These items are available at Philatelic Centers or by mail. Mail orders carry a $10 minimum. Send a check or money order for the correct amount, plus 50 cents handling per total order. Send to: Philatelic Sales Division, Washington DC 20265-9997.

GENTLE GORILLAS

KIGALI, Rwanda (AP) — Gorillas can be viewed in the wild in Volcanoes National Park in Rwanda and in Virunga National Park in Zaire.

Visitors must be more than 15 years old and in good condition in order to hike for hours in rough terrain.

Azores Islanders Are Hoping For An Economic Comeback

By Tony Smith
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LAJES DO PICO, Azores — Silt has built up in the harbor where whaling fleets once anchored. On shore, factories stand derelict. Only a few tourists sip coffee at the Moby Dick Cafe or wander around in the whaling museum.

Since the 1983 international whaling ban, things have been looking bleak for Lajes do Pico and almost all of the 250,000 people living in the Azores, the Atlantic archipelago 740 miles west of mainland Portugal.

But as a Portuguese possession, the Azores now are part of the European Economic Community, headquartered in far-off Brussels, Belgium, and that has rekindled hopes for modernization and a return of some of the prosperity of old.

Even so, Azoreans are in a struggle.

With a per capita gross national product of $1,286 in 1985, they rank among the poorest in Europe, trailing Portugal, with $2,160, and Greece, with $3,280. About 28 percent of islanders work the land.

"All through history, we've concentrated on one product — wheat, then oranges, now dairy products. And that's left us very open to crisis," said Carlos Cordeiro, history lecturer at the Azores University on Sao Miguel, the largest of the nine Azores islands.

Portugal's entry into the EEC in 1986 meant a new source of money. According to government figures, EEC funds will increase from $41 million in the previous three-year period to $511 million, or a quarter of the Azorean budget, for 1989-1992.

The U.S. Air Force base at Lajes on Terceira, the island in the middle, was once a source of vital income for the islands and provided jobs for about 1,500 Azoreans.

But revenue from the U.S.-Portuguese base agreement is becoming less significant as EEC assistance rises.

And regional President Joao Bosco Mota Amaral has set his priorities — modernize agriculture and fisheries, and promote tourism.

Across the water from Pico, the capital of Faial island, Horta, is already booming. Boat crews record their visits with graffiti on the docks and private yachtsmen pack Pete's Bar, ordering drinks in French, English, German and Spanish.

Maria da Graca Sousa, director of two luxury hotels on Faial and Pico, says the Azores will offer 3,000 beds by next year but can't rely on tourism alone.

"The destiny of the Azores in tourism is not cheap — it costs a lot to get here and it's a very specific market — nature, walking and watersports."

Profitable alternatives are hard to find, however.

"Nearly all our main sectors are in crisis — meat and milk are products already in surplus in the EEC," said Mario Fortuna, a leading Azorean economist.

After more than a year of negotiations, EEC officials recently authorized the islands to set up a duty-free manufacturing zone on Santa Maria, the easternmost of the Azores.

Under the plan, companies can operate tax-free through the year 2011 and the government plans incentives for potential shareholders.

"We're hoping to attract manufacturers — electronics, pharmaceuticals, plastics — all light and cheap to transport," said Fortuna, who is chairman of the free-zone administration board ZOFRAM.

"It was difficult to persuade the EEC to make an exception just when it's trying to standardize countries for 1992, but if (the Azores) had to use the same rules as regions in the heart of Europe, that would be unfair competition —exactly what the EEC's against."

High cost of transporting goods and supplies to the Azores is a chief problem and island shopkeepers charge about 15 percent more for wares than stores on the European mainland.

The Portuguese government in Lisbon plans to move some 140 air traffic controllers responsible for mid-Atlantic operations from Santa Maria island to the mainland by 1990. That will mean a loss of purchasing power on the island of 5,000 people and turn its main community, Vilo do Porto, into another Lajes do Pico.

"Many shopkeepers here say they'll close their doors when the controllers leave. They're not optimistic that foreigners will want to come and set up business here," said Luis Pereira of the commercial radio station in Vilo do Porto.

Because of their isolation, Azoreans are superstitious and religious on one hand and open to travel, adventure and foreign ideas on the other. The latter is a main theme of the novel "O Barco e O Sonho" ("The Boat and the Dream") by the Azorean writer Manuel Ferreira.

Recently turned into a popular Portuguese television series, the novel tells of two Azoreans who build a tiny sailboat to cross the Atlantic in search of a new life.

They see the America of the 1950s as "a marvellous world over the sea ... its flag — a shower of stars and dollars."

Emigration has always been a safety valve against poverty, famine and unemployment on the Azores.

Between 1960 and 1980, some 160,000 Azoreans emigrated, mainly for the United States and Canada.

Vintage Auto Place

BAY MINETTE, Ala. (AP) — The overhead at Wayne Tidwell's car lot on U.S. 31 is very low. He's the owner and sole salesman of vehicles that really show their age.

Tidwell sells them for restoration, even though folks in this part of coastal Alabama don't spend much on restoring old cars. They spend on groceries and gasoline.

"I barely make a living," Tidwell said with his foot on the running board of a 1950 Chevrolet pickup truck. His main customers are just passing through, headed for the Gulf of Mexico beaches down the highway.

"Ten thousand cars a day pass by here," he said. He opened in January, but "really got started in March."

Tidwell has about 20 vehicles at his Old Cars & Etc. Shop. The "et cetera" are old bottles, hubcaps, record albums, and other collectibles that he and his wife, Becky, have for sale inside.

"I work on these old cars and get them runable, then let people restore them," Tidwell said. He said he got into the business after he broke his neck in a furniture manufacturing plant years ago. He sells the vehicles "as is, where is," but he said he advises buyers of known defects.

He also sells bicycles and motorcycles, but his main interest is cars.

Among his most expensive cars were a 1954 Cadillac for $2,100 and a 1969 GT Ford Torino convertible for $2,250. He buys some through ads in newspapers and parks others on the lot for local residents trying to sell the family heirloom.

"If it runs good, they'll buy it," Tidwell said. "Some customers are just working folks looking for an old car to drive." He said customers are less suspicious of cars with the original paint. A vehicle that's been painted could have concealed damage, he said.

Searching for old cars takes time and money. He said some old cars advertised could be "a pile of junk" or very valuable. He races to get to the buyer first because of the competition.

He said he only buys from individuals because he can't afford to travel to auctions which require cash for purchases.

That's more in line for Wayne Smith of Montgomery, who operates the more expensive Vintage Autos Inc. Smith said he travels the country in search of old cars that deserve restoring. He found "the other Wayne's" lot in Bay Minette on a trip down from Montgomery.

Tidwell said Smith purchased a GTO.

Smith said there's a growing number of buyers for the 1960s models. The buyers are in their 30s, he said. Many cannot afford a $50,000 Shelby Mustang, he said, but they go for the Pontiac GTOs.

"Basically, they buy the things they didn't have when they were 21 when you couldn't give GTOs away," Smith said. That was because of the high price of gasoline.

Smith said he has about 30 different vehicles on his Interstate 65 lot north of Montgomery. "I've been in the hobby for about 20 years."

He said he started out with Corvettes. "One turned into two and two into three," he said. Smith travels to auctions around the country and does a lot of business on the telephone, he says.

"It's a combination hobby and business."

Aquaculture Is Becoming Important In South Carolina

By Bill Steiger
FOR THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

GEORGETOWN, S.C. — David T. Belanger has big plans for South Carolina. And if his ideas pan out, he says the state could one day become the international headquarters for aquaculture.

Belanger, president and general manager of Sea Island Mariculture, says South Carolina beats out other Southern states as the best place for fish, shrimp and crawfish farming for several reasons:

—Coastal waters in the Palmetto State are, on the average, much purer than waters in the Gulf of Mexico — especially better than those in Texas, a state where aquaculture is quickly gaining popularity.

—South Carolina has many more large tracts of undeveloped land along tidal creeks and rivers than the crowed coastal regions of Florida. Also, Florida has very strict permitting restrictions for aquaculture compared to those imposed by the South Carolina Coastal Council.

—And, because so much attention has been focused on South Carolina shrimp farming during recent years, the state is way ahead of Georgia, which doesn't yet have an aggressive aquaculture program.

Sea Island Mariculture was formed two years ago and operates out of a small office on Sullivan's Island. It consists of Belanger, a professional agriculture consultant; Matthew A. Salinger, a marine biologist; David M. Fuze, a mariculture scientist, and Edwin L. Barnhart, who has degrees in civil and sanitary engineering.

Working as a team, the men have conducted an intensive mariculture site qualification and availability study of South Carolina's southern coast, acted as advisors for a Florida mariculture operation, monitored water quality for some large industries and handled all design and permitting for a 20-acre shrimp operation due to open next spring on South Wimbee Tidal Creek in Beaufort County.

They also are helping develop a shrimp farm on Wadmalaw Island and looking at possible consulting contracts with aquaculture firms in Ecuador, Egypt and some European countries.

In addition, Belanger says, the group is ready to take on one of their most exciting challenges.

"We want to form an aquaculture training facility here in South Carolina where we can teach people to manage the farms. Then we'll send them throughout the nation and to foreign countries to lead their expertise to others," he says.

The team is looking at a 200-acre property in Charleston County to locate the center. If a deal is made, Belanger says, the training facility will include shrimp, clam and fish ponds, a hatchery, a science lab and, hopefully, an old plantation house or other building to be used as a dormitory for trainees and staff.

But Belanger isn't the only person who has high hopes for South Carolina aquaculture.

"People have been raising fish and shrimp in ponds around here for many years but now it's becoming a more commercial business," said Jack Kendree, executive director of the Georgetown County Economic Development Commission.

Since the early 1980s, Kendree has been an advocate of aquaculture, working to convince more and more people to get into the industry and start raising fish, shrimp, crabs and crawfish in former rice fields in the Lowcountry.

"Historically, South Carolina, and Americans in general, have been meat-eaters and relied on pork, beef, and poultry," he said. "While consumers of seafood have been around a long time, seafood was treated as a delicacy for many years."

Recent strides by the state Legislature to encourage more people to take up fish farming have been successful.

The General Assembly's aquaculture plan calls for streamlining the permitting process so more aquaculture farms can start up, identifying sources of financing to help out newcomers to the business, developing marketing programs for the fish raised on farms and promoting research and education programs for aquaculture at state universities.

The legislature also has formed an Aquaculture Permit Assistance Office in as part of the South Carolina Department of Agriculture.

About 250 aquaculture farms operate in the state, with the majority raising catfish, crawfish and shrimp, according to figures compiled by the South Carolina Sea Grant Consortium. Sales topped $2 million in 1988.

Other species that could be produced by local fish farms are hybrid striped bass, hardshell clams, softshell blue crabs and spottail bass, says the consortium's Rick Devoe.

By 1993 fish farming could employ more than 2,000 workers in a $43 million industry, according to a study prepared by Clemson University and the state Department of Wildlife and Marine Resources.

Nationwide, aquaculture production has grown 20 percent a year since 1980, according to the U.S. Department of Agriculture. An estimated 790 million pounds of fish and shellfish, worth about $600 million, were raised in 1988.

DeVoe says that, if the steady increase in the number of aquaculture farms continues, "over the next five to 10 years we may have the chance to be the leader in the production of aquaculture in the Southeast."

Nevertheless, DeVoe warns that "aquaculture has potential but it's not an easy business, or get-rich-quick scheme."

Hikers Fight Planners Over Potential Trail Development

By David Gram
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MONTPELIER, Vt. — Northbound end-to-enders on the Appalachian Trail follow the Green Mountains about a third of the way up Vermont before turning east for the last leg into New Hampshire and Maine.

But just south of that turn at Sherburne Pass, there's a fight in the hills, between hikers looking for wilderness serenity and the East's biggest ski area, citing property rights as it looks to develop another mountain.

The fight is over a federal law designed to provide a 2,140-mile corridor of wilderness for the footpath from Georgia to Maine. At issue is a deal struck by the National Park Service with Killington Ski Area, the six-mountain resort in south-central Vermont, for a section of trail that crosses Killington land.

The Appalachian Trail Conference, Green Mountain Club and other environmental groups say the Park Service failed to take a tough enough anti-development stance in the talks that led to the agreement with Killington.

If Killington proceeds with the three ski trails, one lift and associated buildings and other development allowed in the agreement, hiking the trail will be "more like walking through an amusement park" than a pristine wilderness, said James Dumont, a lawyer for the trail groups.

"The agreement that has been executed in the opinion of the Park Service is in keeping with the trail legislation," said Chuck Rinaldi, project manager at the Park Service's Appalachian Trail office in Harpers Ferry, W.Va.

For the Park Service to have protected the trail to the extent sought by environmental groups, Rinaldi said, "would have required condemnation and the Park Service wasn't prepared to take that step."

All three members of Vermont's congressional delegation have asked the Park Service and Interior Department to reconsider, and trail advocates say they're prepared to go to court to push for a tougher interpretation of the law.

Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., who wrote to Interior Secretary Manuel Lujan in early March asking for a review of the deal, wrote again last week. "I remain concerned that the best professional judgment of Park Service trail managers was ignored during easement negotiations," he said, and warned that he was "prepared to proceed legislatively if necessary."

The controversy is being watched closely up and down the trail because the Park Service is getting ready to negotiate agreements with at least three other ski areas: the Pico ski area adjacent to Killington, Dartmouth College Skiway in New Hampshire, and the Saddleback ski resort in Maine.

Trail advocates say if the Killington agreement is a model, their goal of a 1,000-foot-wide corridor to provide a wilderness environment will be lost.

"This sets just a horrible precedent," said Kevin Peterson, New England representative for the Appalachian Trail Conference.

Rinaldi acknowledged that the law's intent was "to try to create a sense of remoteness for the hiker," but said "some people in the Park Service feel that it's acceptable" for ski trails to intersect the Appalachian Trail.

Trail advocates say they believe the Park Service took a weaker negotiating stance with Killington than other landowners. The Conservation Law Foundation has filed a Freedom of Information Act request seeking documents describing how the deal was struck and how agreements with other landowners were reached.

Killington Vice President Carl Spangler said it was good legal research, not a double standard, that allowed the resort to keep more development rights than other landowners. In fact, he said, the Park Service has "overstepped its bounds" with the other property owners.

Killington hired a Washington law firm that dug into the legislative history of the 1968 National Trail Systems Act and found evidence that Congress had not intended to block ski area development, Spangler said.

"I think the Park Service was taken a little bit off guard. I don't think they had seen this kind of presentation before."

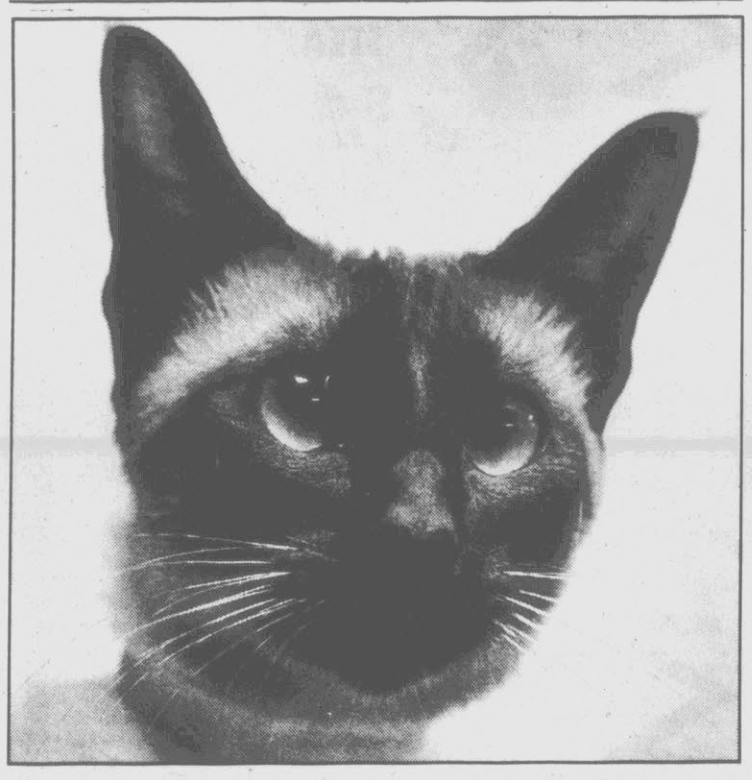

Among the material the lawyers found were excerpts from Senate debate in which backers of the legislation assured Sen. George Aiken, R-Vt., that the rights of ski areas would be, in Aiken's words, "fully protected."

Both sides also cite the trail act itself in saying that, "in selecting rights-of-way full consideration shall be given to minimizing the adverse effects upon the adjacent landowner or user and his operation."

But they differ on whether that applies to development that is merely in the planning stages as well as that which is already in place.

Killington and trail advocates agreed years ago to reroute the trail along the western ridge line of the Green Mountains, to an area Killington hasn't yet developed. But Spangler said the resort wants to maintain its right to develop the land, and that when negotiations began with the government, the resort had already mapped, surveyed, flagged and taken to a state environmental panel plans for a cross-country ski trail crossing the trail corridor.

Horoscope

From The Carroll Righter Institute

FORECAST FOR SUNDAY July 16

ARIES (March 21 to April 19): Impatience can lead to forgetfulness just when you need your keys, wallet, etc. Your happy mood is entertaining.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20): You feel a need for change. The attitude is confusing when you can't decide where to break new ground. Apply yourself to creative projects.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21): Give someone who disagrees with you the benefit of the doubt. Uncomfortable attitudes are best handled by doing things you enjoy.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21): You get excitable because of restlessness, and that leads to an attempt to control others. Use self-restraint and stay on the sidelines.

LEO (July 22 to Aug. 21): Select wisely during this time when so many options are available. Don't spend foolishly, and stay with a favorable money trend.

VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22): Take a wait-and-see attitude. Let others do the planning. You may be a floater in the midst of family activities.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22): You may sail over some rough waters in the morning. Take criticism with a grain of salt. Don't engage in foolish changes.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21): Your lifestyle is improving, and routines should run smoothly for you. Expect others around you to be somewhat scattered and vague.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21): Be discreet in personal activities that involve a close friend. Set aside cash for future, unexpected expenses, and security.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20): You can write your own ticket for excitement and pleasure, but include family members. The lure of the open road may be hard to resist.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19): You can get hot tempered because of delays. Past spending habits need a revision in order to accomplish future goals.

PISCES (Feb. 20 to March 20): If your energy is low, it may be best to take care of things later when you are more organized and industrious. Avoid major changes.

(c) 1989, The McNaught Syndicate Inc.

FORECAST FOR MONDAY July 17

ARIES (March 21 to April 19): Plan your day carefully. Review all options before making a drastic move. Respond to the needs of family members.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20): A lazy day can get you behind in your work. Unless you want to play catch-up, it will be advantageous to take care of basics first.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21): A lighter, more confident mood and an opportunity for advancement are welcomed. A small gift can give someone an emotional lift.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21): Maintain your composure if others are not on the sanme wavelength. Solve an emotional issue by sharing your feelings.

LEO (July 22 to Aug. 21): Deadlines can cause pressure. It may be necessary to seek outside help. A favorable climate exists for property transactions.

VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22): The best investment is in yourself. Build a framework for self-expansion now. Make a commitment to improve your life.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22): Someone will find out you have a strong shoulder on which he can lean. Money involved in a long-delayed matter, resolves a conflict.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21): Forget inhibitions and indulge yourself in romance. Bonds of restriction can be broken. A secret may be hard to keep.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21): Parenting may work best if you see things from your child's point of view. Loving may work better than pushing.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20): Some strong issues face you. Keep to your own ideals and listen to your heart. Plan your strategies carefully. Enjoy a gourmet treat.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19): Know your limits. Stellar influences may be teasing you to take on more than you can handle. Domestic issues are stimulating.

PISCES (Feb. 20 to March 20): Discuss your desires with loved ones. Communicate when others need an explanation of your feelings, concerns, and expectations.

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	Pass	1 ◇	Pass
1 ♡	Pass	4 ♡	Pass
Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Six of ♠

Be careful to win your tricks at the right time. That's all that's required to bring home the bacon on today's hand.

The auction was straightforward. South bid his two suits; North responded up-the-line, then jumped to game when the 4-4 heart fit was located since he had a full opening bid.

West led a spade. Declarer captured East's king with the ace and immediately cashed the high trumps. When West showed out on the second trump, declarer was in a heap of trouble although she didn't yet know it. Declarer played three rounds of diamonds, discarding the spade loser, then ruffed a spade. When she led a club, East won the ace, drew trumps, and the defenders took the rest of the tricks. Down three!

Declarer did not do much wrong; just got one trick ahead of herself. She can afford to lose two trump tricks and a club. What declarer can't afford is to lose control of the hand.

After winning the ace of spades, declarer should draw only one round of trumps. Next, three rounds of diamonds are cashed to ditch the spade loser, and then the ace of clubs is forced out. Suppose East wins the first round and forces declarer with a spade. Declarer simply runs clubs until someone ruffs. No matter how the trumps are distributed, she cannot possibly lose more than two trumps and the ace of clubs. As soon as dummy's fourth diamond has found a parking place, declarer draws a second trump and that's that. Try it if you don't believe us.

As the old proverb says: "Haste makes waste."

With Today's Lower Interest Rates, Treetops Townhomes Make More Sense Than Ever.

Why? Because townhomes in Treetops are affordable. Prices range from only $61,400 to $67,400 for our finely crafted one and two story townhomes. The builder even helps with points and closing costs to make buying your new home easier.

All this doesn't mean you sacrifice location. Treetops is just off Evans Street Extension, just a stone's throw away from homes costing many thousands more. And all Treetops townhomes are secluded in the quiet woods that make Treetops so desirable. The swimming and tennis recreation center and association exterior maintenance round out a lifestyle unmatched for the price.

The Gates

ALL SQUARE FEET ARE NOT CREATED EQUAL

Everybody talks about square feet, but The Gates has done something about it. Square footage is a unit of measure in two dimensions only. At The Gates, we add the third dimension—height. Height adds excitement... soaring ceilings, lofted overlooks; emotional space that makes a home more than just shelter. Come visit our model and see and feel what The Gates has done to the square foot.

Located off South Evans Street Extension.

Mid $70's to $90's

Greenville's Blanche Monroe, Pioneer In The Renaissance Of Marbling Art

After nearly three years of painstaking, innovative experimentation, Greenville's Blanche Kammer-Monroe recently decided "the time had come to meet the challenge I'd set for myself, to test my ability as a master marbler."

The challenge she set was centered on "my wish to create a very difficult feat in marbling, that of designing marbling patterns for silk kosodes, a form of Japanese kimono.

"The design motif is just as important, perhaps more important, than the kimono function as a piece of clothing," she said. "Kosodes are meant to be worn for their designs, a concept akin to our Western idea of fine art."

Mrs. Monroe says she feels that after an extensive apprenticeship in the art of marbling, the four kosodes she has completed "are of museum quality. I'm excited that I have an indication of interest from a gallery in New York that may want to exhibit them."

Giving more details on these robes which entail printing the design on a much larger piece of material than is normally attempted in marbling textiles, Mrs. Monroe noted that the largest pieces of fabric she works with measure 78 by 45 inches. "It is almost impossible to produce the same design twice, let alone four or five times in succession, as I did with these kimonos."

Before trusting the outcome to sheer luck, she worked for three months "in order to produce the successive prints of my original design. Then I was ready to undertake the challenge."

One of the four, a royal purple kimono, is printed on an older piece of Chinese raw silk — the other three are printed on newer Japanese silks.

Once the separate large pieces were successfully printed, the panels were fashioned into kimonos "as a collaborative effort between myself and a Japanese seamstress. Her pattern books are all printed in Japanese," Mrs. Monroe said.

Background colors for the three Japanese silk kimonos are in soft shades — one in green, another in peach-pink and one in mauve.

An ancient art

Marbling, essentially an art to recreate the intricate, abstract patterns found in colored marble worldwide, is an ancient decorative form of art. Most efforts in recent centuries have concentrated on producing marbled paper, although it has been used on leather and other materials.

In ceramics, examples dating as far back as the first century in Rome exist, as well as examples from China in the fourth and fifth centuries A.D. Marbled pottery was created by mixing clays of various colors and applying colored clay slips on the piece.

A renaissance of interest in marbling has been manifested in recent years — one that had called into play efforts to extend the possibilities of marbling as an art form.

"I have always been design and color oriented," Mrs. Monroe said, "so it was natural that marbling with its rich array of designs should exert a special appeal to me. And my love of fabrics naturally led to a decision to try applying marbling to textiles."

The opportunity to study with acknowledged masters in the resurgence of marbling art came from a North Carolina source. "I have studied at the Penland School in the mountains of North Carolina on several occasions," she said. "Periodically, workshops there are conducted by a handful of masters in the field. These teachers were impressed with my work and at my last time there, gave me a studio assistantship."

Exacting processes

Marbling, on whatever surface it is applied, requires careful execution, "but none more so than when applied to textiles," Mrs. Monroe said. "Each step requires very careful attention to detail and extreme concentration."

She notes that "as the modern methods of marbling are just beginning to have an impact on, to hit the American market, all who practice it are on the cutting edge of the rejuvinated art form.

"I'm one of the pioneers at this stage," she said. "Each marbler has his or her own way of approaching the basic techniques.

"Because in the truest sense of the word, every artist practicing the art has developed certain individual variations of basic techniques, we each guard one or two secrets while sharing other aspects of techniques with others."

Mrs. Monroe, like other marblers, has found it necessary to create a big portion of their working tools in the absence of commercial tools.

One she displayed is simply a fragment of a stiff broom that is ideal for sprinkling requirements. Another, which she said "is one that I designed after a number of experiments," is a device that is drawn across the color saturated surface of the water that in turn results in "a basic pattern in my mind when I begin a new work."

Controlled conditions are vital to success. At her studio on Dickinson Avenue near the intersection of 10th Street and Albemarle Avenue, she takes constant precautions against pollutants that could mar the creation of a design — guarding against dust, no smoking and avoiding delicate procedures at times long freight trains are scheduled to pass nearby.

"Basically," Mrs. Monroe explained, "preparations for creating a marbled design can be termed the art of drawing on water."

To show how a design is created, she and her assistant for the summer, Maria McLaughlin, a painting major in the School of Art at East Carolina University, worked in silent harmony. The piece chosen for the design was a square of blue silk 48 by 48 inches. A shallow pan of water of the same size of the fabric was checked to ensure no dust or lint was on the surface.

"I'm going to create a white design on this square of dark blue silk," Mrs. Monroe explained. From a small jar of already mixed colors, she carefully dropped two drops on the water's surface, spacing each drop about six inches apart in rows. This was followed by a single drop of a more opaque white in the center of each of the spreading film-like forms from the first two drops.

Then, with precise coordination, the two drew the instrument with small needle-like projections across the surface designs until the visible pattern desired registered on the water's surface.

The next step involved the two holding the material taut above the tray, lowering it against the design-bearing surface, then gently lifting it and taking it to a large sink to rinse and set the design. The printing process ended by hanging the piece on a line to dry.

Variety of items

The marbled square of fabric described above is a piece destined, in finished form, to be transformed into one of the several items Mrs. Monroe creates.

"I make scarves, men's ties and smaller pieces as well as the kimonos which are my major pieces," she said.

In a move to market her marbled art, Mrs. Monroe has set up shop under the name Marbelous. "My latest effort is directed to using finely detailed, small pieces of marbled designs on chrome paper as watch faces," she said. "These bear my logo. I send the faces off to a company which supplies the watches and install the faces, of which no two are alike."

Another of her creations also involves a joint venture — evening bags designed by Arlene Burke Morgan, a Greenville artist, in which use is made of colorful marbled material.

Other items include marbled paper turned into small boxes and jewelry, including earrings formed from miniature figures folded in the traditional Japanese method, origama. The origama technique is applied also to creating self-standing miniature kimonos, five or six inches high, excellent for bright decorative purposes with an Oriental theme.

Exposure grows

Mrs. Monroe admits that "being an artist, being human, I am naturally excited about the possibilties for exposure of my art outside Greenville.

"I suppose, like any artist, one of the greatest thrills is that of having my art shown to art lovers."

Recently, she has had exhibitions at Susan Edwards Art Gallery's and at a show at Gray Gallery, East Carolina University. The latter was in conjunction with the graduate student thesis requirement.

At an early date, she is having a show of her marbled art in Santa Fe, N.M. "I have received word that the Cooper-Hewitt Institute in New York is tentatively considering showing one of my kimonos, with a possibility that one might also be shown at the Museum of American Crafts."

A prestigious California showplace of creative, one-of-a-kind handcrafted apparel has expressed an interest in seeing examples of her men's ties in marbled silk, and another shop is interested in her scarves.

"Right now, I'm in the stages of wait and see," she said, "but I've really been encouraged by these recent expressions of interest."

Family Support

Support of family and friends has been instrumental in encouraging Mrs. Monroe in her decision to devote herself full time to her marbling art.

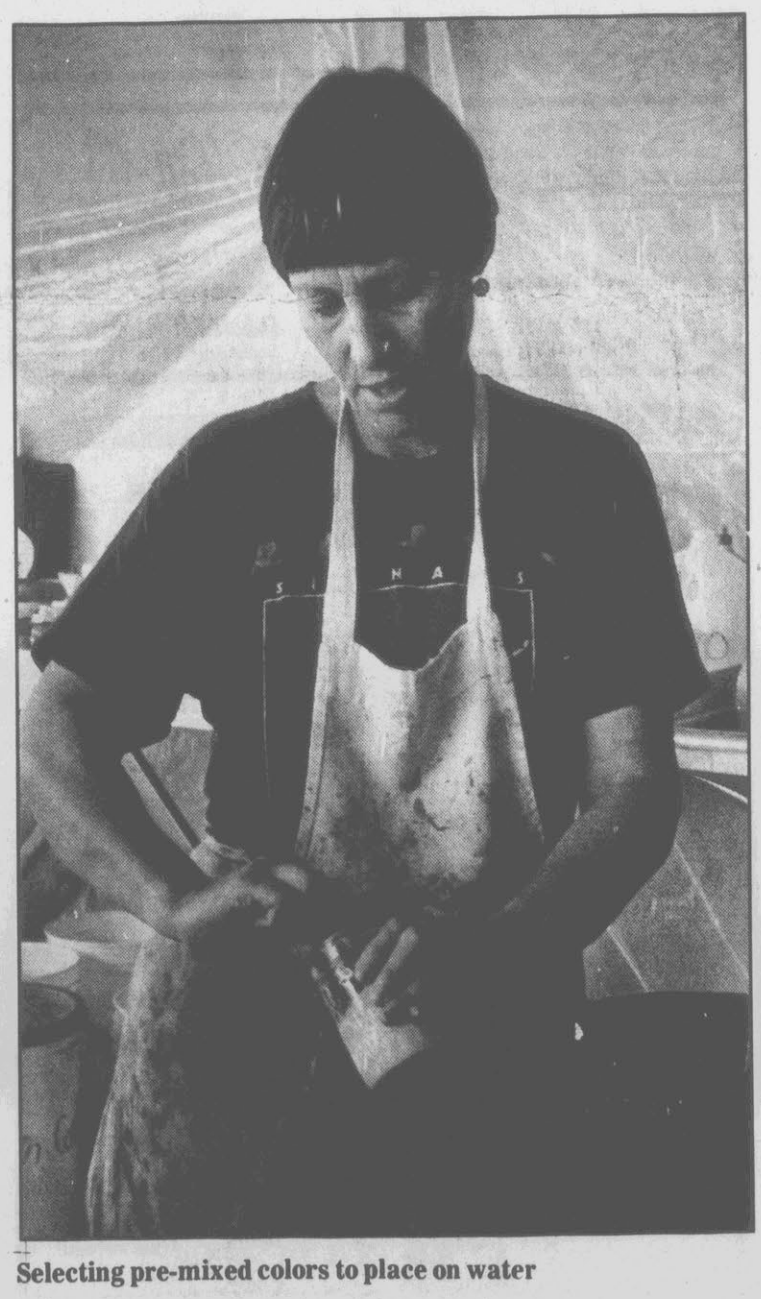

She and her husband, Dr. William Monroe, have been residents of Greenville for nearly two decades, having moved here in 1970.

"Our three children, Will, Christina and Melissa, are now all young adults, so that I have reached the point where I have more free time for myself. They all have confidence in what I'm attempting to do, which is very important to me."

Rich Archaeological Finds In Iraq

By Salah Nasrawi
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NIMRUD, Iraq — Archaeological exploration in Iraq has picked up since the cease-fire in the Iran-Iraq war, yielding rich finds from the era 2,000 years ago when the powerful Assyrian empire dominated the Middle East.

The upsurge comes as President Saddam Hussein's government seeks to bolster Iraq's self-image through excavation and rebuilding at sites like Babylon that symbolize the nation's historical greatness.

"By appealing to history, Saddam encourages Iraqis to view themselves as the heirs of a great civilization that flowered in ancient Iraq while the surrounding world was lingering in prehistory," a Western diplomat said.

Iraq includes much of the "fertile crescent" of ancient Mesopotamia where early rulers developed efficient armies and sophisticated city administrations that rivalled the Pharaohs' Egypt.

Ruined temples and palaces adorned with colossal stone sculptures, archives of inscribed clay tablets, delicate goldwork and ivory carvings illustrate the importance of early Iraqi civilization.

To help build morale during the recent eight-year war with Persian Iran, the Iraqi government recalled Assyrian and Babylonian victories in the first millennium B.C. against the ancient Persians, portrayed as unscrupulous aggressors.

Although the war was halted last August by a United Nations-mediated cease-fire, history is still being promoted, underscoring Saddam's drive to boost Iraq's role in the Arab world.

In addition to the Iraqi teams, archaeologists from the United States, Britain, Poland, West Germany, the Netherlands and Japan were digging around the country earlier this year. Most will resume work in the fall.

Saddam also agreed in recent talks with American businessmen in Baghdad, Iraq's capital, that a selection of ancient Iraqi treasures would tour the United States.

"It's clear there's more than scholarship involved in all this promotion of archaeology ... but the recent finds have been spectacular," said a Western archaeologist, speaking on condition of anonymity.

New excavations at three sites in the Assyrian heartland of northern Iraq have unearthed a gold-filled royal tomb dating from the 8th century B.C., as well as imposing sculpture and architectural remains.

At Nimrud, the Assyrian military capital 250 miles north of Baghdad, Iraqi archaeologists found a stone chamber where two women were buried along with more than 55 pounds of gold jewelry.

Muzahem Mahmoud, the excavation director, said it was "the richest Assyrian burial known."

An inscription on stone in the tomb in wedge-shaped cuneiform writing identified the women as Yabaya and Taliya, possibly the daughter and grand-daughter of King Sargon who ruled an empire that stretched from the Persian Gulf to the Mediterranean.

The inscription also laid a curse on anyone who opened the burial chamber: "If anyone lays his hands on my tomb or opens my grave, I pray to the gods of the nether world that his soul should roam in the scorching sun after death. ... Let the ghost of insomnia take hold of him for ever and ever."

The gold jewelry included diadems, necklaces, belts, bracelets and anklets, and 50 pairs of earrings, as well as a bronze mirror with an enamel handle encrusted in precious stones.

At Ninevah, the Assyrians' administrative capital, another Iraqi team unearthed a stone door carved with four lions that was part of the city's fortifications in its last days.

They also found arrowheads and skeletons of Assyrian warriors who may have died during a siege by the Babylonians and Medes. Ninevah fell in 612 B.C. after holding out for two months and was destroyed.

Outside the ruins, the archaeologists found remnants of an irrigation system built by King Sennacherib a century earlier to increase vegetation around the city, as well as a stone terrace where he constructed what the tablets call "a palace without rival."

Farther north near the border with Syria, British archaeologists tentatively identified a 100-foot high mound as the remains of ancient Tillule, another important military and religious center.

The team found the base of a ziggurat, a temple shaped like a stepped pyramid, that may have belonged to a shrine for the Assyrian weather god, Adad.

They also located sections of two roads believed to be part of highways linking Ninevah with Syria and Turkey.

"Everything here tells us that this is a major settlement," said excavation director Warwick Ball of the British Museum. "It's only a matter of time before we find the clues to tell us that Tel Al-Hawa is the modern name of Tillule."

He said the Assyrians used Tillule as a center for massing troops before launching campaigns against Syria, Palestine and Egypt.

At Babylon, whose kings succeeded the Assyrians as rulers of Mesopotamia, a major project is underway to excavate and restore the whole nine-square-mile area of the ancient city.

The multimillion-dollar restoration will include the palace of King Nebuchadnezzar, the 6th century B.C. king who built the legendary Hanging Gardens of Babylon, one of the Seven Wonders of the World.

The city quickly grew into Mesopotamia's largest population center with around 1 million residents. But Babylonian supremacy lasted less than a century before the city was overrun by King Cyrus of Persia in 539 B.C.

Oyster Festival Tickets

SHALLOTTE — Tickets for the first North Carolina Oyster Festival Dance, to be held Oct. 20, are now on sale. A limited number of tickets is available and may be purchased at the South Brunswick Islands Chamber of Commerce office in Shallotte.

Featuring the Four Lads, the dance will be a semi-formal affair and will be the starting event of the festival.

The Four Lads are known for such favorites as "Standing on the Corner" and "No, Not Much." The group studied five years at the Musical Academy, Saint Michael's Choir School in Toronto. The Lads launched their career in 1950 and received their first Gold Record in 1955.

Lynn Roberts, formerly of the Tommy Dorsey Band, will be performing with the Four Lads. Backing up the Lads and also providing entertainment will be Ray & Dynasty.

The North Carolina Oyster Festival, set for October 21-22, will be held at the junction of Highways 904 and 179 at Sea Trail Plantation. Highlights of the festival include seafood, entertainment and arts and crafts.

Tickets for the dance are $50/couple and $35/single. A limited number of tickets, 250, are available and will be sold on a first-come sis.

General information on the Oyster Festival, including arts and crafts applications, is available from the chamber office, P.O. Box 1380, Shallotte, N.C., 28459 or by phone, 754-6644.

Seashore Photos Contest

MANTEO — The North Carolina Beach Buggy Association in its efforts to promote conservation awareness through Operation Beach Respect is sponsoring a photo contest between July 1 and October 31 on the Cape Hatteras National Seashore.

A total of $700 in prize money will be distributed to the winners in color and black/white photo categories.

The contest has been designed especially for the amateur photographer covering such area topics as surf fishing, swimming or surfing, shell hunting, picnicking or other recreational activities appropriate to the Cape Hatteras National Seashore.

Entries must be sent to: "My Visit to the Beach at Cape Hatteras National Seashore" Photo Contest, c/o Cape Hatteras National Seashore, Route 1, Box 675, Manteo, North Carolina 27954, postmarked not later than November 1.

Lumbees Blocked In Recognition Efforts

UNC-CHARLOTTE NEWS OFFICE

CHARLOTTE — "I wouldn't want to be in the position of having to decide," a University of North Carolina at Charlotte professor said of the continuing debate over who is Indian and which Indians qualify for federal funds.

A bill to speed up the process of qualifying North Carolina's Lumbee Indians for the funds was blocked in Congress recently. Some reports said the legislation was blocked by Cherokee Indians.

But Dr. Rachel Bonney, associate professor of anthropology and an expert on Indian culture at UNC-Charlotte, said she doesn't believe the Cherokees alone have that much clout.

Her inference was that other Indians around the nation might also object to cutting the pie of federal funds for American Indians into smaller pieces by bringing another tribe to the table.

Part of the problem for the Lumbees may be numbers, Dr. Bonney noted. She said the number of Lumbees is between 40,000 to 50,000 as compared to 6,000 Cherokees in the Eastern Band.

But the problem goes deeper than funds. At the heart of the issue is the question, "Who is an Indian?"

Dr. Bonney says the government defines an Indian as: 1) anyone who is a member of a federally recognized tribe that has its own definition but is usually based on a degree of ancestry, or 2) a member of a tribe recognized by a state and which has a tribal roll.

The Lumbees almost qualify under the second definition because they have state recognition, but they lack a roll. The process of completing the roll is under way, but slow, and the congressional bill was sought to speed up the action.

But among Indians there apparently is also a question of who is more Indian. "I did my doctoral work at the University of Azizona right in the middle of Indian country," Dr. Bonney said. "There they live on reservations, speak their native tongue and practice their native religion."

In the East along the coast, however, the Indians first met the white settlers almost 300 years ago, and their culture shows the impact.

Western Indians and even the Cherokees would hold that these Indians, including the Lumbees, have no viable culture. They define Indian culture as using an Indian language, practicing an Indian religion, and living together on a reservation.

Bonney points out that even with the Cherokees there has been a radical change in culture. They study and speak English, practice Christianity, farm and live like white people.

Back to the question of whether the Lumbees are Indians. Bonney said that they were mentioned in the first U.S. Census in 1790 as free persons of color living in Robeson County. All non-English persons were referred to as persons of color. They referred to themselves as Indians and others recognized them as Indians through the years.

The state of North Carolina recognized them officially as Indians more than 100 years ago but at first wanted them to attend black schools. The Indians refused, and Indian schools were established for them.

Education was the key criteria helping them keep a separate identity, Dr. Bonney says.

"If you use racial considerations," Dr. Bonney says, "There was less intermarriage among the Cherokees." The Lumbees on the other hand are referred to as tri-hybrid, Indian-white-black.

"Whatever one concludes about the Lumbees," Dr. Bonney says, "They are an ethnic group. They are self-described as Indians and described by others as Indians. Then who are senators and congressmen to be saying whether or not they are Indians?

The Lumbees have hung on to a sense of Indian heritage for a very long time. They participate in Indian gatherings and pow wows and identify with a particular territory.

A Reflector Review

Lives Narrowed By Tradition And War

WOMEN OF DEH KOH. By Erika Friedl. Washington and London: The Smithsonian Institution Press, 1989. soft cover, 237 pp. Cloth $24.95, paper, $10.95.

Erika Friedl, doing scholarly research for scientific journals, spent many years on the Iranian village of Deh Koh. This book, incidental to the main research, is based on the author's knowledge and insights gained while she was there. Through the stories told to her by the women of Deh Koh, the author reveals to the reader a vivid account of what life is really like for the women of Iran.

It is an account of births (Iran's birthrate is one of the highest in the world) and deaths; of the intricate relationships between women and women, men and women, parents and children; of ancient superstitions that still abound; of sickness and accidents practically unknown in the western world.

Every inch of space in the village is occupied. First floors of the mud houses are barns, sheds, and stables, filled mostly with goats. Above them are the cramped living quarters of the people.

In the summer, on the earth-packed roofs of the houses, children play among the drying hay, fruits and vegetables. Also, in summer, the women use their verandahs or courtyards for their daily activities: cooking, baking, visiting, sewing, weaving, washing, mending, spinning, milking, making butter and cheese, cleaning wheat, pounding rice, nursing children, keeping a close eye on their neighbors' activities.

The author points out that even in this impoverished village there is a tiny percentage of wealthier families who live behind high, solid walls and who grow fruit trees and flowers around courtyard fountains.

These people have the ever-present worry of thieves, revolutionary guards, and spreading the war that they hear about on their television sets and radios. On the poor and illiterate the hand of war falls most heavily and their resentment grows.

Deh Koh women who are without men - husbands, brothers and fathers - have a hard life. They are regarded with suspicion and talked about in whispers. Widows have their children taken from them by their husbands' families. Marriages are made by contract between the families of the bride and groom, and brides without dowries are viewed with contempt - as are childless wives.

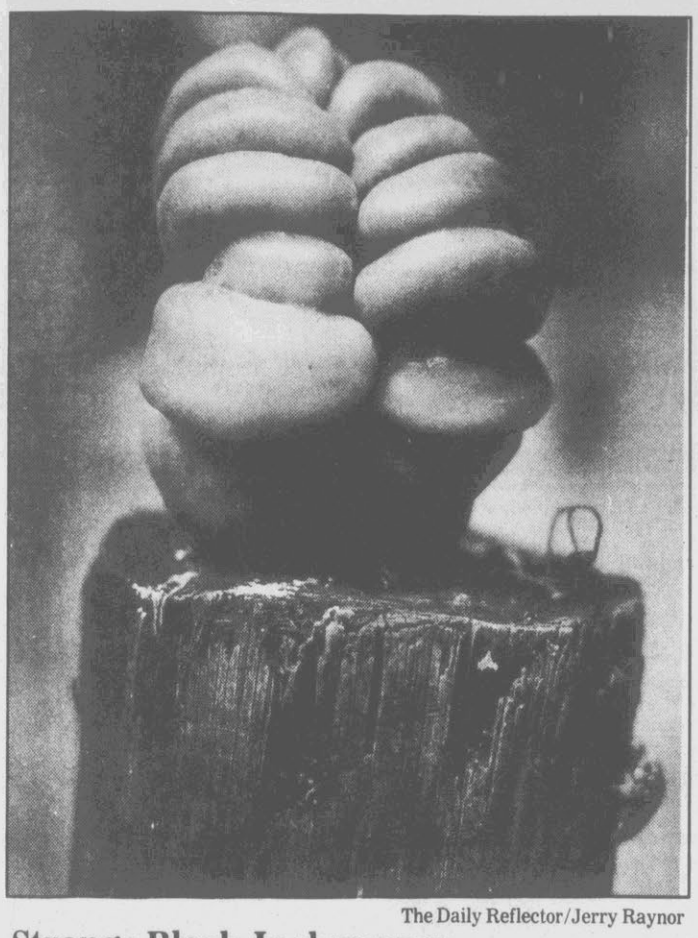

Necklaces and bracelets - except those worn by the rich, who can afford gold ones - are worn as charms against evil: the seashell prevents infants from foaming at the mouth; yellow beads prevent jaundice; the dried eye of the sheep is against the evil eye; white beads strengthen the mother's milk; brown beads prevent diarrhea.

"Beads are powerful. Like words, they have to be used with care. God made these beads and God gave them their power. This is a matter of knowledge." So says Huri, one of the village women.

Deh Koh husbands often beat their wives. This is an accepted custom, and most women feel that the beatings are deserved. Divorce is practically unknown and heavily frowned upon.

This book is extremely well-written. It is especially valuable to hear the voices of women from an alien place — to hear, in their own words about their hopes and dreams, their fears, and their everyday lives as they live them in a place narrowed by tradition and war.

SHEPPARD MEMORIAL LIBRARY

Two new books by North Carolina authors have been received by Sheppard Memorial Library. The first is by a well-known author, T.R. Pearson, who wrote a trilogy that started with the novel "A Short History of a Small Place."

This book firmly established Pearson as a Southern writer. His new novel, "Call and Response," is just as humorous and heartfelt as his previous novels.

This novel begins with the comic scene where Nestor Tudor's daddy is knocked out when a stripper fires a walnut from her "nether regions." The novel then picks up ten years later when Nestor Tudor is a middle-aged widower fond of Ancient Age and has in his possession the family's tailisman, the legendary walnut.

Nestor becomes enamored with Miss Mary Alice Celestine Lefler lately arrived from Berkely Springs, W. Va. Also enamored with her is Tiny Aaron and Dick Atwater. All three of these widowed, middle-aged men start trying to court Miss Mary Alice Celestine Lefler, which sets the stage for hilarious happenings from Tiny Aaron shooting a hole in the floor when he kills a snake, to Nestor Tudor jumping atop a car when he thinks it is out of control only to find out it is being driven by a midget. But soon someone else enters the scene: Raymond, from West Virginia and everything turns into outright laughter as they all go charging after Miss Mary Alice Celestine Lefler.

The second book is by a fairly new author, Ruth Moose. Her book of short stories, entitled "Dreaming in Color," has been critically acclaimed by other North Carolina authors such as Louise Shivers, Fred Chappell, Clyde Edgerton and Lee Smith.

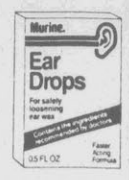

Her stories are wise and funny and often about people we know. Her characters are women plagued by an assortment of problems: bossy relatives, altered loves, door to door evangelists and vanishing friends. They observe the swirl of life around them with intensity, humor, and an often ironic distance. An enjoyment to read.

An Impressive Introduction

SPIDER WOMAN'S GRANDAUGHTERS. Edited with an introduction by Paula Gunn Allen. Boston: Beacon Press, 1989. Hardback, 242 pp, 19.95.

This reader found the author's introduction profoundly more impressive than the collection of Indian stories.

Paula Gunn Allen is a Laguna Pueblo/Sioux Indian and is currently a professor of Native American studies at the University of California, Berkeley. She is the author of seven books of poetry, a novel and a volume of essays.

As one of the foremost Native American scholars, Ms. Allen is a recognized expert in Indian history and folklore. Her "Introduction" is really an excellent abbreviated history of American Indians, as well as an explanation of "where these stories came from, how we compose them, and something of their meaning for us."

The American Indian "has been in a state of war for five hundred years," says the author, and "survives in the face of a brutal holocaust that seeks to wipe us out."

The reader must understand this and the other four fundamental facts of life in order to understand where the Indian female author is coming from: the affinity of humans for all living things; the fact that "in the eyes of Americans, we are extinct or soon will be;" the mindset of America that Indian women are inconsistent; and, finally, that American Indians are "occupied people who have no military power on earth ready to liberate us."

A distinguishing characteristic of Indian literature is the perception of Indian writers that the supernaturals, spirit people, animal people, thunders, snows, rain, fire, water, and all other elements of nature are members of the community.

This characteristic pervades all the stories presented in this book.

In spite of the fact that, in this reader's opinion, the stories are overly simplistic and lacking in conflict and resolution, they have a lyrical quality that is quite appealing. Also, the description and attention to detail are exceptional.

Names of characters are intriguing: Blackcoat, Corn Woman, Blue Bird, Star Elk, Coyote, Owl Woman, Green Blanket Feet.

All of the 17 authors presented in this book are Indian women. They represent many and various tribes: The Crow, Creek, Sioux, Chippewa, Choctaw, Mohawk, Cherokee, Pawnee are some.

These authors tell their stories — mystical, almost singing — of "love and death, poverty and pain, power politics and the power of the sacred."

Greenville Is Featured In State Magazine

The July issue of North Carolina's best known general magazine, The State, carries a feature article on Greenville.

Written by Angela Fracaro and illustrated with six photographs, including a full page one of the Pitt County Court House, it is sub-titled "There's more to the 'capital' of Eastern North Carolina than just the serious business of commerce, medicine and education."

Those three issues are given due consideration, but due attention too is given to old and new landmarks and events in Greenville — including the Greenville Museum of Art, River Park North with its science museum housing an extensive shell collection and center oriented to children, and the park's large acreage of natural attractions.

Other areas touched on in the article are the Town Common, site of Sunday in the Park concerts and other special events; the annual arts festivals; the Village of Yesteryear; musical and drama programs offered by East Carolina University, and some suggestions for dining out.

Dealing With Grief

BABY JAMES: A Legacy of Love and Family Courage. By Thomas and Jayne Miller. San Francisco: Harper & Row. 193 pages. $14.95.

Adoptive parents steeped in the new age philosophy have team-narrated their story about their 18 months with Baby James (Nicholas Lawence Miller), who made medical history April 26, 1986, when he underwent heart transplant surgery.

The Millers begin their story when a San Francisco District Hospital nurse calls Mrs. Miller to inform her that a baby boy has just been born and the mother has consented to let the Millers have him.

Seeing Nicholas within the hour of his birth, the Miller recall: "It was then during those first few minutes that he became irrevocably and forever a part of our family."

Nine hours later the boy developed meningitis and subsequently heart complications. The religious couple stood by Nicholas during his touch-and-go bouts with death.

When the authors started the book they had no idea how it would end. They had hoped their story would end after Nicholas' successful surgery with an "epilogue brimming with hope and bringing the reader up-to-date." Unfortunately, their hopes were dashed.

Although Nicholas appeared to be a happy and healthy baby during his first year, his heart continued to deteriorate. Soon after his first birthday, he became seriously ill again with pneumonia, showed signs of congestive heart failure and was recommended for a heart transplant. In "Baby James," the Millers tell how their search for a transplant facility led them to Dr. Leonard Bailey, the well-known surgeon who performed the first two human-to-human infant heart transplants. Dr. Bailey performed the heart transplant on Nicholas which was intially successful. But because of several episodes of organ rejection, Nicholas died four months later.

Baby James spans 18 months in one family's life. A chilling fact that comes from this family's pain is that 90 percent of parents who lose a child through death get divorced within the first year; however, the Millers, with the help of The Compassionate Friends Organization (a group that works specifically with parents who have lost children), made it through their grief — marriage intact.

If readers can wade through the reality of this account of a family's love and courage, they will discover new ways of perservering during times of crisis and grief.

Local Author's Book Reviewed In World & I

The recently published "Perfect Lies, A Century of Great Golf Stories," compiled and with a forward by East Carolina University faculty member and author William Hallberg, is reviewed in the July issue of The World & I magazine.

The review by Bradley S. Klein, research associate at Harvard University's Center for International Affairs, covers six pages in the magazine's Book World, the section devoted to reviews of outstanding new books.

The review is titled "Remembrance of Swings Past — Seventy-five years of golf short fiction explores the game you love to hate."

One of the comments made by Klein in his review is "What a pleasure to read a golf book that is not about the modern male professional golf tour of about how to cure that nasty slice."

Blacks Losing Land As Hilton Head Develops

By Elizabeth Leland
FOR THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

HILTON HEAD ISLAND, S.C. — For Barry Chaplin, part of the island died the day the fence went up.

Seven feet tall and institutional green, the chain links and barbed wire form a garnish backdrop to the community where several generations of Chaplins have lived.

The family is one of hundreds of black families who have called Hilton Head home since the 1800s. For most of those years they had the run of the island. Until the mid-1950s, only two white families lived there.

But when Hilton Head Plantation built the fence separating its exclusive development from the Chaplins' modest brick home a couple of years ago, the message was unmistakable for 14-year-old Barry: "We don't want you here."

After 30 years of fancy resorts and golf courses, many of Hilton Head's black families have been pushed off or pushed aside.

Some have lost their land to soaring property taxes. Others, who've held on, now find themselves cordoned off like the Chaplins with fences and guard gates and "No trespassing signs."

"It feels terrible," said Emory Campbell, 47. "When I grew up we could go anywhere we wanted to. And we had a very few people on the island. Now, to see thousands of people and be restricted, it's a heck of a change."

When a relative dies, Campbell's family goes to a cemetery on the banks of Calibogue Sound. The gravestones, many hand-carved and dating to 1861, now sit beneath a multi-story condominium complex in the sprawling Sea Pines Plantation.

The only way to get into Sea Pines is to live there, pay $3 for each car or get a special pass.

But nowhere is the tension between old and new as evident as at Virginia Bennett's home.

Now in her 80s, Bennett was born on the island, the second of 11 children. Her large, wrinkled hands tell of years of hard work, shucking oysters in a cannery.

Her little wooden house still stands in the shade of sprawling live oaks on a rutted dirt road, where her husband, Henry, built it many years back. Time has taken its toll on the sagging porch and weathered siding, as it has on Bennett, who walks slowly to her front gate.

"When I first moved here, ain't no neighbors," she said.

Now a three-story moss-gray resort called The Spa on Port Royal Sound towers outside her back door, making the house look older and smaller than it already is. A matching wooden fence and guard gate separate the resort from the surrounding community of unpretentious homes and trailers.

Bennett is matter-of-fact about the changes. "There's a time for all things, but that time went," she said. "All the motels back there — that's white people. They built what they want. That's their business."

Walter Mack has made it his business. He hates what's happened to the sea islands.

Mack works at the Penn Center, a nonprofit community organization on nearby St. Helena Island. He traces his roots in the area to slavery and now spends most of his time helping blacks hold on to the land.

"Hilton Head, to me, is a lost cause," Mack said. "All we can do for Hilton Head is look at it and try to let that serve as a example of what not to do. ... It's a concrete jungle. The way they're building hotels and resorts on the beach, you can't get to the beach because you'll be trespassing on somebody's land, or so they say. I don't want to see that happen to the other sea islands.

"It's more than just the land. It's an entire culture that's being messed up."

Hilton Head is one of a string of sea islands along the South Carolina coast populated mostly by blacks until the surge of coastal development over the past three decades. The island was named for the English sea Capt. William Hilton, who sailed there in 1663, searching for new land on behalf of Barbados planters.

By 1860, 24 cotton and indigo plantations divided the island.

But the Civil War and the boll weevil destroyed the plantations. And for the next 90 years, Hilton Head was left mostly to blacks. They spoke Gullah, the language of the sea island blacks. They crabbed, shrimped, fished and raised crops and chickens. They had the run of the island.

By the 1950s, about 1,000 blacks lived on Hilton Head. Whites owned most of the island, but only two white families lived there. Occasionally, white landowners hunted on their tracts, others cut timber.

In 1952, developers bought most of the land on the 12-mile-long island.

In 1956, workers completed a toll bridge connecting Hilton Head to the mainland. Charles Fraser began to build Sea Pines Plantation, forever changing the face of what was called "The Rip Van Winkle of the Sea Islands."

Developments now strain the roads and the imagination. Earlier this year, people fed up with the growth tried to push through a ban on construction along roads with heavy traffic.

The referendum failed, and construction continues.

Every summer, people knock on Barry Chaplin's door, asking to buy his father's land.

"They say, 'I'll give you a lot of money and build you another house,'" Chaplin said. "We tell them 'No.'"

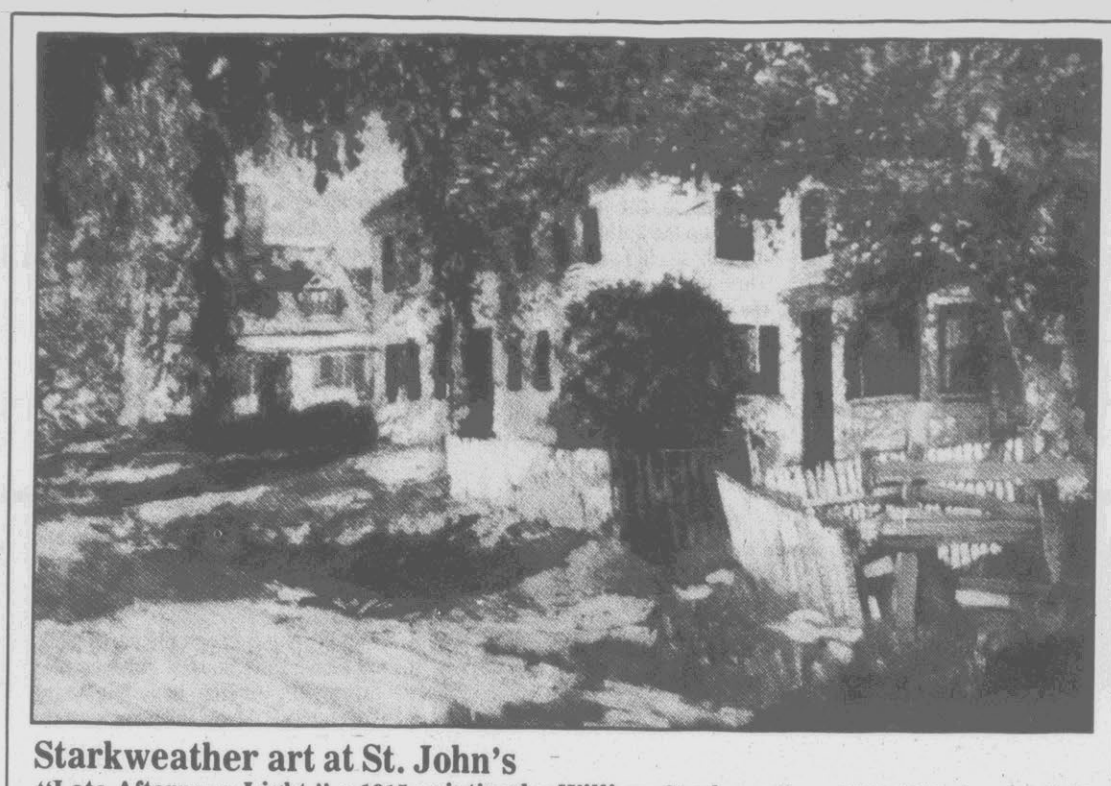

Not everyone can say that. Many blacks. Mack says, have lost their land to rising property taxes.

Property values in Hilton Head average 15 times what they were 15 years ago. The island now has 20,000 residents, most of whom are white, and 1.4 million visitors each summer. Island property is valued at $232 million, up from $14 million in 1973.

"I know a man who lost his home for $33 in back taxes," Mack said. "Development has been a hardship on a lot of people, ecpecially older people who live on a fixed income.

"People hold the land real dear around here. The only thing that they've known is the fish and the farm, and through the land they have a sense of pride and self-sufficiency.

"Once you take that away from them, they have nothing."

Starkweather art at St. John's

"Late Afternoon Light," a 1915 painting by William Starkweather, 1879-1969, is one of 27 paintings by the artist currently on view at St. John's Museum of Art, 114 Orange Street, Wilmington. An American impressionist painter, he was teacher and curator of visual arts at the Hispanic Society of America in New York. His work was shown in more than 60 exhibitions during his lifetime.

Crepe Myrtle Festival Plans

SCOTLAND NECK — Booth space is available for the Second Annual Scotland Neck Crepe Myrtle Festival scheduled for August 12 from 10 a.m. until 6 p.m.

Individuals and groups interested in reserving space for exhibitions, crafts or food have until August 2 to do so.

Ten feet by 15 feet space will be leased at the rate of $10 local and $25 for out-of-town groups or individuals.

Space with electricity is available though limited. Call 826-3373 for more information or to reserve space.

This year's festival is a family-oriented celebration of this community's scenic flora.

Plans are under way to provide games for young and old, musical entertainment, a fun run and road race, amusement rides and specialty food concessions. The Atlantic Fleet Navy Band will also be on hand.

The festival will be held at the Scotland Neck Municipal Complex Park on Main Street along U.S. 258.

Half Fare For Pitt Residents

SNOW CAMP — Residents of eight eastern North Carolina counties are being invited to attend the Friday night production of "The Sword of Peace" at half fare.

Residents of Pitt, Greene, Lenoir, Craven, Pamlico, Onslow, Carteret and Jones County, upon proof of residency, will be admitted at $3.50 for adults and $2 for children 11 and younger.

Reservations must be made by calling 376-6948 prior to 8 p.m. Thursday. Tickets can be purchased at the box office Friday from 5 p.m. until 8:30 p.m. show time.

CULTURAL CENTER

KYOTO, Japan (AP) — For over a thousand years, Kyoto, a city about 230 miles west of Tokyo, has been the center of Japanese culture and civilization.

It became the capital of Japan in 794 and remained the residence of the imperial family until 1869.

Kyoto has numerous historical palaces, temples and shrines containing masterpieces of art, sculpture and landscape gardens. Among its attractions are the Golden Pavilion, the old Imperial Palace, the Hoganji and Sanjusangendo temples and the Heian shrine.

Ranked fourth among Japan's cities, Kyoto was the nation's only major population center to escape bombing during World War II.

AIRPLANE BUSINESS

The president of Stamford Marketing says he flies more than 250 hours a year so he can visit supermarkets in four cities in one day. He says if he used public transport he would be able to visit only two cities a day.

When the strain gets too much, he says, he uses a co-pilot.

Lecture Series At Elizabethan Gardens

Maria Lander's marble statue of Virginia Dare

MANTEO — Three lectures, two on Saturday and a third on July 23, will take place at the Elizabethan Gardens in Manteo.

The lecture series, "Fact, Fiction and Fantasy," will deal with the historical, literary and mythological significance of the artistic ornaments placed among the flowers, shrubberies and trees of the Old World style garden on Roanoke Island adjacent to the Fort Raleigh and "The Lost Colony" theater complex.

The regular admission fee of $2 will be charged for viewing the garden. No additional fee will be charged for any of the lectures.

The first of the three lectures will be given in the Gate House of the gardens at 10 a.m. Saturday by Dr. Biruta Erdmann, faculty member of the School of Art, East Carolina University.

Dr. Erdmann's topic is "Manifesto in Marble," relating to the marble statue of Virginia Dare by Maria Louisa Lander. Sculptress Lander carved the classical-style statue based on her concept of what the first born English child in America may have looked like as an adult woman.

Moderator-respondent for the Erdman lecture will be Mrs. Sam Hutaff, member and treasurer of the board of governors of the Elizabethan Gardens.

The second lecture, at 3 p.m. Saturday, will be presented by Michale Brantley, a Fulbright Scholar at Edinburgh University and former director of education at the N.C. Museum of Art, Raleigh.

Brantley's lecture is on the topic "Ancient Glory of Greek Mythology," which will include on-site viewing and discussion of the iconography of 16th century statuary donated to the garden by the late John Hay Whitney and Mrs. Whitney.

Moderator-respondent will be Mrs. W. Marion Odom, chairman of the board of governors of the Elizabethan Gardens.

The final of the three lectures, at 3 p.m. July 23, will take place at the garden's Overlook Terrace. The lecturer will be Nicholas Hodsdon of the Dare County coastal village of Mashoes, whose subject will be "Gods and Goddesses in Music."

A troubador-musician, Hodsdon will present Elizabethan songs about mythological gods and goddesses using 16th century musical instruments.

Moderator-respondent for Hodsdon's musical lecture will be Mrs. Hunter Sharp, Jr. a member of the board of governors of the gardens.

Following this final lecture, a reception, open to the public, will be held on the Overlook Terrace.

The Elizabethan Gardens are located off N.C. 64 near Manteo and adjacent to Fort Raleigh. The gardens, which feature seasonal flowers and various flowering shrubbery as well as ancient trees on the site, are open daily from 9 a.m. to 8 p.m. For more details as well as a color brochure, write to: The Elizabethan Gardens, P.O. Box 1150, Manteo, N.C., 27954 or telephone 473-2434.

Second Kenansville Play

KENANSVILLE — A tale of murder and suspense unfolds under the twinkling of starlight and glow of spotlights at the Kenan Ampitheater in Kenansville beginning July 26.

"The Runner Stumbles" is a tale of repressed passion that unfolds in a courtroom drama. The drama is set in a remote parish of northern Michigan where a young nun has died mysteriously.

The production is written by Milan Stitt and directed by John Rice, a professor at Kent State University who also directs "The Liberty Cart."

"The Runner Stumbles" plays five consecutive Wednesday evenings beginning July 26. Showtime is 8:15 p.m.

"The Liberty Cart" plays each Thursday, Friday and Saturday at 8:15 p.m. A children's show is set to begin July 30 playing four consecutive Sunday afternoons.

For more information on summer productions, group ticket rates, tour group offerings, or overnight camping, phone 296-0721, or write to: "The Liberty Cart," P.O. Box 470, Kenansville, N.C., 28349.

New Spirit Shown In Local Arts

A new cooperative spirit among local arts groups will make new programs available in Greenville and Pitt County that were never possible before.

A recent example is the July 9th performance of the Charlotte Shakespeare Company. "This performance was made possible because the City Recreation and Parks Department and the Pitt-Greenville Arts Council pooled resources," said Cynthia Marvin, executive director of the Arts Council. It was the first such joint venture for the two agencies.

P-GAC is looking ahead to more cooperative programming in the next few months with the Emerging Artists Program co-sponsored by the Farmville Community Arts Council. This will also be the first joint effort of the two councils, both in Pitt County.

Programs in conjunction with the school system and the Greenville Museum of Art are also in the plans for the future of the council.

The new outlook is the result of a combination of factors: new faces on the local arts scene and, the emergence of a new communications tool — the Arts Roundtable.

The first meeting of the Arts Roundtable was held in March at the Greenville Museum of Art. A decision was made at that time to hold meetings the third Wednesday of the month at noon. The location varies each month with a different arts organization acting as host.

The Farmville Community Arts Council hosted the June meeting.

The Arts Roundtable meetings are open to anyone who is interested in the arts in Pitt County.

Organizations regularly represented include the Actors Theater Southeast, Greenville Suzuki Association, Friends of Rose High Theatre, Ayden Theater Workshop, Art Enthusiasts of ECU, Greenville Museum of Art, Pitt-Greenville Arts Council, and local commercial galleries.

The next Arts Roundtable meeting for the month of July will be held on Wednesday at noon in Room 248 of Mendenhall Student Center. The host for the meeting is Stuart Sector, marketing director of the Department of University Unions at ECU.

For more information on Arts Roundtable or about the overall programs of the Pitt-Greenville Arts Council, call Cynthia Marvin at 757-1785.

'Foxfire' Opens Monday In A Summer Theater Version

East Carolina Summer Theater brings the Appalachian play, "Foxfire" to its stage for a week-long performance beginning Monday as the third of its four productions for the 1989 season.

The play, based on the Foxfire book series, concerns the welfare of an elderly mountain couple, Hector and Annie Nations, as they struggle to hold fast to their way of life and their farm, Stoney Lonesome.

The authors describe their play as a story about the survival of old values in a new world.

Part of that new world is represented by the Nations' son, whose choice to pursue a living as a country western singer is a major source of conflict between him and the father.

The play is sprinkled throughout with Dillard's songs based on his family's mountain life and heritage.

Gene Shalit, of NBC's "Today Show," said that the New York production was: "One of the lovilest, most touching, most enjoyable plays to ever reach the Broadway stage."

The Appalachian couple will be played in the summer theater production by Kathleen Nolan and Larry Gates. Noland and Gates boast extensive theatrical careers and Carolina audiences will quickly recognize them for their television appearances.

Kathleen Nolan starred for six years as the young wife, Kate, on "The Real McCoys," and in recent years has been seen in many feature films and over 500 television shows. Her work has brought her two Emmy nominations and the conveted Crystal Award.

Larry Gates' acting career spans 50 years and includes over 30 feature films, appearances on many of the major prime time series. He currently appears on "Guiding Light" as H.B. Lewis. Gates won an Emmy in 1985 for best supporting actor in a daytime television.

The supporting cast includes Mary Kate Cunningham, Douglas Mitchell, and Christian Keiber, all of whom appeared in "Summer and Smoke." The Nations' son, Dillard, will be played by Jason Edwards, who Summer Theater audiences saw in the season opener "Pump Boys and Dinettes."

Steven Williford, whose past Summer Theater work includes, "Cat on a Hot Tin Roof" and "Foreigner," will direct this production of "Foxfire."

Individual tickets may be purchased at the McGinnis Theater Box Office located on the ECU campus at the corner of Fifth and Eastern streets. Tickets may be may be reserved with a Mastercard or VISA by telephoning 757-6829, Monday through Saturday, 10 a.m. until 8:30 p.m.

The New Dixie Grass Group will perform in Sunday In The Park today

New Dixie Grass Group In Today's Sunday In The Park

The Bluegrass sounds of banjos and mandolins plus guitar, acoustic bass and debro of the New Dixie Grass will be heard in today's Sunday in the Park concert on the Town Common beginning at 7 p.m.

The Sunday in The Park series of entertainment is funded by the city of Greenville with support from the N.C. Arts Council and the National Endowment for the Arts. The concerts are held on the grassy slopes in front of the amphitheater on the Town Common.

Folding chairs, blankets, pillows, etc. are in order for easy listening. In the event of rain, there is no rain date planned for this concert.

The four regular members of the New Dixie Grass group are being supplemented in today's concert with a guest performer. Regulars in the band are: Bobby Cherry, banjo and vocals; Julian Elliott, mandolin and vocals; Simon Perry, guitar and lead vocalist, and Joe Whitaker, acoustic bass. The quartet will be joined in today's concert by Clyde Mattocks on the debro.

New Dixie was formed in the 1970s and has since been in demand for numerous performances. The band won first place in a competition at a festival in Smithfield, Va., and have appeared at The Southern 500 in Darlington, S.C. and at Summerfest in Durham.

The group was one of the attractions in last year's Sunday in the Park roster.

New Dixie Grass has recorded three albums and is now working on their fourth one to be released at an early date.

Final Week Of ADF Dances

Dances Scheduled

DURHAM — Due to unforseen circumstances, Martha Clarke will not be appearing at the American Dance Festival July 19 as previously announced.

Lucas Hoving and Endo Suanda, also scheduled to perform on July 19, will appear as planned. Suanda will present an ADF-commissioned premiere, while Lucas Hoving will perform his autobiographical solo, "Growing Up in Public."

Senta Driver will also have works on the program.

Driver is know for breaking rules and for introducing innovations in male-female partnering. In her choreography women lift men, and dancers pirouette on their heads and dance on pointe in bare feet.

Often the dances are performed to original score created by the company. This will be Senta Driver's fifth ADF commission, including "Resettings," which she set on the North Carolina Dance Theater in 1980 and which is now part of that company's permanent repertory.

Performances will be July 19 at 8 p.m. in Page Auditorium, on Duke University's West Campus. Tickets are $10, $15 and $19 and are available from the Page Auditorium box office, 684-4444.

ADF Commission

DURHAM — This year's Metropolitan Life/American Dance Festival Choreography Commission has gone to Doug Elkins. He was selected from among 77 candidates.

The $8,500 fellowship has been offered annually since 1985 to help ADF in its continuing effort to present new works by promising choreographers.

Elkins, in collaboration with composer Ken Walicki, presented a new piece entitled "just a dumb dream in a foreign bed," on July 2 and 3 as part of the ADF's Young Choreographers and Composers in Residence program.

Elkins combines his experience in the martial arts, break-dancing, mime and clowning to produce energetic works.

His company will perform in Lincoln Center's "Serious Fun!" Program in August.

American Dance Festival/Michael O'Neil

Pilobolus performances

Dancers of Pilobolus Dance Theater, two of whom are shown here, will dance at 8 p.m. Thursday, Friday and Saturday at Durham's American Dance Festival. Pilobolus concludes the 1989 ADF season which began June 11. Other programs this week are: an ADF faculty performance at 8 p.m. today; dances by international choreographers, Monday and Tuesday, and Lucas Hoving and Endo Suanda on Wednesday, all at 8 p.m. For details and tickets, call 684-4444.

NCMA Features Tar Heel Films

By Anna Upchurch
N.C. MUSEUM OF ART

RALEIGH — The film works of two North Carolinians are being featured in the film forum series at the North Carolina Museum of Art in July and August.

The monthly forum series presents screenings of unusual films and videos from around the world on every third Thursday at 8 p.m.

"The Film Forum: North Carolina" screenings will be July 20 and August 17. Tickets are $5 for the two films; single tickets are $3.

The July 20 screening will feature Charles Kesler's video and multimedia Work. Kesler, an artist living in Greenville, has shown his work in many video, computer and electronic arts festivals, including the Festival des Musicvideos in Munich, the invitational Computer Graphics Exhibition in Toronto and the Chicago International Film Festival.

His works include "Nuke the Duke" and "Wag the Flag." Kesler will show and discuss a work in progress involving video and laser art called "Save the Animals." The work is a tongue-in-cheek, soft-shoe and song combination of animation and text featuring an endangered wolf named Red.

The August 17 screening will feature Jay Jennings's Photo Essays. Jennings is well known among television sports fans for his exciting, fast-paced photo essays of sports events. He is a master of video editing that conveys the drama and emotion of a physical contest as well as amazing visual feats of skill.

Jennings will show and discuss his work including "Comeback Wolfpack," which focuses on a 1988 NCSU-Duke game, and "High School Football," based on the 1987 AAAA Championship.

The North Carolina Museum of Art is located at 2110 Blue Ridge Blvd, Raleigh.

Riders In The Sky Rejuvenate The Western Radio Serial

The Associated Press/Mark Humphrey

Riders performers, left to right, Too Slim, Ranger Doug and Woody Paul

By Joe Edwards
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — OK, buckaroos and buckarettes. Return with us now to those thrilling days of yesteryear when cowboys rode into the sunset in a wild, untamed land.

Riders in the Sky, a buckskin singing trio, have rejuvenated the Western radio serial with their weekly Riders Radio Theater on 100 National Public Radio stations.

For 30 minutes each week, the three sing such Western tunes as "Tumbling Tumbleweed," perform zany skits and present serials with old West and contemporary themes.

"We've staked out a patch of range on the airwaves," says Ranger Doug, who calls himself "the idol of American youth."

Ranger Doug, who really is Douglas Green, is joined by cowboy cohorts Woody Paul, "the king of the cowboy fiddlers," and Too Slim, "bassist and mercantilist supreme."

"I think we're bringing back a tradition that had been forgotten for the last 25 or 30 years," said Too Slim, who is Fred LaBour in real life.

Taped in Nashville in the format of an old-time radio show, the program has become one of the most popular on public radio since Garrison Keillor's "Prairie Home Companion."

The show, which airs in Canada and Australia besides the United States, just won awards from the Corporation for Public Broadcasting for technical achievement and general music.

Commercial radio stations are beginning to sign up for the program as well.

"This is a real breakthrough," said Woody Paul, who really is Paul Woodrow Chrisman. He has a doctorate in physics from Massachusetts Institute of Technology, but would rather earn his living playing the fiddle.

Playing cowboy has enabled him and his faithful sidekicks to do battle against the villainous Slocum, their arch enemy on the show since its premiere last October.

In a continuining saga titled "Meltdown on the Mesa," Slocum and other bunkhouse badmen tried to use a nuclear reactor against prairie dogs. They attempted to buy off the good guys by generously offering a condominium.

The trio got able assistance from Sidemeat, their devoted trail cook who bakes biscuits referred to as "the hardest substance known to man."

But the program is more than humor. The trio sing with pristine precision while playing acoustic guitar, fiddle and standup bass.

"Several people say it's the fastest half-hour in radio," Ranger Doug said.

The three, all around 40 years old, say the show has developed a cult following.

"There are people who know the plots and want to discuss them," Too Slim said. "They miss a week and want to know what happened. Some people make up their own plots and send them in, like 'Sidemeat and the Beanstalk.'

"They write long, literate letters about the show," he said. "The public radio audience is quick and appreciative when you do a quality show."

The trio have been donning 10-gallon hats, kerchiefs and faded chaps to sing their Western music for more than 10 years. They perform regularly on the Grand Ole Opry, and were hosts of a Western movie show, "Tumbleweed Theater," for three seasons on The Nashville Network on cable TV.

They have recorded about a dozen albums, including the current "Riders Go Commercial." They were in the movie "Sweet Dreams," about the life of country star Patsy Cline, and in the Kenny Rogers TV movie "Wild Horses."

They also were favorites on "Prairie Home Companion."

The trio believe they have filled a void by representing Western heroes for youngsters. For the past few years, kids have embraced such characters as Luke Skywalker, Han Solo, Indiana Jones and now Batman as their heroes instead of such buckskin baritones as Tex Ritter who were idolized by their parents, the three said.

"They just don't know any singing cowboys," Ranger Doug said. "A kid age 7 doesn't even know Roy Rogers. They know He Man and Batman."

A key to the show has been its family orientation.

"We're in an age where there is not a lot of mass popular culture that parents feel comfortable enjoying with their children," Ranger Doug said. "Riders Radio Theater has something for everybody."

For Woody Paul, his role fulfills a childhood ambition.

"I dreamed of playing a cowboy when I was a kid and here I am," he said. "I ask the kids at the concerts what they want to be when they grow up and they say they don't know. I say I don't know either."

CRADLE OF CARS

LANSING, Mich. (AP) — Lansing, the capital of Michigan since 1847, became industrially important when automobile pioneer Ransom E. Olds built his first steam-powered auto here in 1886.

Seven years later , an Olds steam car was sold to a firm in India and became the first American auto sold abroad. Olds built his first gas-operated car in 1896.

Isaak's Dark, Dreamlike Music

By Elisabeth Dunham
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SAN FRANCISCO — Chris Isaak's dark and dreamlike music has long been a hit with audiences in the San Francisco area, but national fame and a spot on the pop charts have eluded him.

A hit single would be swell, says the 32-year-old singer and songwriter, but it's not the most important thing.

"I like to sing. If I had a hit, that'd be great," Isaak says. "I'd be really overjoyed to have a hit — tickled pink. But I'm not worried about that. I'm more worried about just keeping my job."

Maybe he's not a household word, but Isaak has a solid reputation as someone who borrows the best from country-western and rock 'n' roll to produce an original sound.

His newly released album, "Heart Shaped World," is more upbeat than earlier efforts and possibly his best. Guitarist James Wilsey adds a polished, heavily tremoloed background to Isaak's velvety-soft vocals.

Wilsey is largely responsible for the sound that has grabbed the attention of critics. He has a sharp ear for what works with Isaak's lyrics, but he says a sophisticated computer system is partly responsible for the sound he achieves on stage.

This is the band's third album since 1985, and the third time observers have said Isaak is teetering on the edge of national acclaim.

But the man often compared to Roy Orbison and Elvis Presley, two of his many idols, has a hard time being serious when describing the new album.

"This is pretty much me singing a bunch of songs I wrote — just like the first two albums," he said. "If you liked the first two albums, this is pretty much the same route. If you didn't like the first two albums, this is all different."

If Isaak in person was like the Isaak in his music, one would probably meet a somewhat somber person dressed in black. His songs often speak of lost, or nearly lost, love. One imagines the songwriter sitting in an unlighted room peering out a window at a grimy, pre-dawn city street.

But the in-person Isaak is a regular cut-up. The Stockton, Calif., native talks with a slightly goofy rural California accent — which disappears when he sings — and gets a kick out of telling stories, like the one about how he learned to play guitar by sneaking into his older brother's room.

"Every day, it was forbidden. But he'd go to school and I'd play his guitar. I'd put it back exactly where it belonged," the singer said. "One day, I was sitting there watching TV — I had put the guitar back — and the string just popped. They'll do that sometimes. I heard it go BRR-ROOOIING. I thought, 'I'd been playing it. But I wasn't playing it right now.'

"He worked me over pretty good for that one."

Then there's the one about how he acquired his first guitar, the Silvertone he's played on all three albums and the inspiration for his first band's name. He'd been eyeballing it every day as he walked by a local pawnshop. Finally, he asked his brother for help.

"My brother was better at arguing on prices, so I said, 'Why don't you go see if you can get a deal.' So he called the fire department and told them the pawn shop was a fire hazard, so they had to get rid of a bunch of stuff."

He bought the guitar for $80.

"We didn't like the people at that pawn shop, anyway. They'd sold my mother a single guitar string for $4," Isaak said.

Fans are familiar with Isaak's brand of humor. He often introduces songs with long whimsical tales involving members of the band. He drives a 1964 Nova. At a recent record release party at the Fairmont Hotel, he showed up in a floral-patterned suit made from window drapes.

And for some undisclosed reason, Isaak thinks Tikis are neat. He keeps dozens of the Polynesian idols, big and small, on his dining room table and in his kitchen. He even owns a painting of a Tiki, an awful thing that looks like it might have been drawn under the influence of mescaline.

But the zaniness doesn't carry over into the music.

Isaak has always thought of his style as country-western. However, numerous influences are apparent, including rockabilly and rhythm and blues.

"I try not to make things that are too angry-sounding," he said. "It makes me nervous when I hear music that is just people banging away. If I listen to it, it's got to be pretty, like Bing Crosby."

"I don't like people who can't sing but say, 'I'll make records despite that fact.'"

Critics often speak of the dark side of Isaak's music. One deejay in Washington dubbed him the "Baron of Brood," and singles such as "You Owe Me Some Kind of Love," off his second LP, and "Wicked Ways" off the new album exemplify that lonelier side.

As a young man living in Stockton, a place he describes as "Fresno without all the glitter," Isaak attended the University of Pacific and took up boxing. But like early ideas of being a filmmaker, the boxing career petered out. He went to Japan as a transfer student, and spent much of his time singing and playing the guitar.

Isaak came to San Francisco in 1980 and later hooked up with Erik Jacobsen, who produced his albums and eventually became his manager. Until he met Wilsey, Isaak was the lead guitarist in his band.

"Jimmy and I met in 1982. I had a three-piece band and he said, 'Hey let me in, I can play guitar better than that.'"

Wilsey, who started out running the sound system for Isaak's first band, said he was immediately taken with the budding singer.

"I realized he was the funniest person I'd ever met. It was nice to hang around him and laugh when other things seemed depressing," Wilsey said.

Aside from the music, Isaak has enjoyed a successful sideline career as a film actor. He's appeared in two episodes of the TV show "Private Eye" and had a cameo in Jonathan Demme's "Married to the Mob."

ORIGIN OF VOLLEYBALL

HOLYOKE, Mass. (AP) — The game of volleyball was invented in 1895 by William G. Morgan, who was then physical director at the YMCA here.

Morgan intended it as a recreation for businessmen, for whom basketball might be too vigorous. The game was originally played by teams batting a basketball bladder across a tennis net raised six feet about the court.

Volleyball became an official Olympic sport in 1957.

Ravi Shankar's Latest Album Recorded Live In Moscow

By Mary Campbell
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Ravi Shankar's latest album, "Inside the Kremlin," was recorded live in Moscow last July.

During a short tour in America, in his 50th year of concertizing, the 69-year-old master of the lutelike Indian sitar explains: "There was a one-year festival of India in the Soviet Union. I was asked by both governments to do a closing ceremony, a musical extravaganza, with the central theme peace, love and friendship.

"Bearing that in mind, I composed seven pieces. It was very interesting. I had the Moscow Chamber Orchestra, a huge choir, which is fantastic, a folk ensemble of ethnic instruments plus our 20 Indian musicians I brought with me."

Shankar scored the music and sent it ahead. He says: "Then we worked eight or 10 days together. It was in the 6,500-seat Kremlin Palace of Culture Theater, on a huge stage. It was very exciting and received with a great success."

Private Music Records sent technicians. The record was No. 32 on Cashbox magazine's June 10 best-selling world music chart.

"I didn't make the music sound Russian," Shankar says. "It was based around Indian classical contemporary music. But by using their instruments and choosing some of the scales they have in their Asian part of Russia, some came out very much like Middle Eastern music."

Shankar, whose first love is playing sitar, composed sitar concertos for the London Philharmonic and New York Philharmonic. He also writes music, usually scored for an orchestra, for television and films, including the sound track for "Gandhi." Currently, he says, "I've got this commission from the Birmingham (England) Touring Opera Company to compose a ballet. I saw a few of their productions. I was very impressed.

"They told me to do something based on an Indian theme. I was inspired and I wrote 'A Vision Through a Haze.' It has an anti-drug element in the story; I feel very strongly about drugs. It is mostly ballet, with some songs, maybe a little dialogue. I was a dancer to start with. It gave me a chance to do choreography also, after a long time, with two dancers."

It will premiere Oct. 2 with about 15 shows, including London on Oct. 19.

Shankar says that now that he's 69, "I don't want to do as much as I have been doing. It is very difficult to do less. I'm trying my best to be more in New Delhi, my headquarters, to do teaching and experimental, creative work."

In the 1960s, Shankar's music was lauded by the Beatles and classical violinist Yehudi Menuhin, and he became famous in the West, being adopted especially by fans of psychedelic rock. "I was in a dilemma at that time because I was trying to put things right," he says. "I was telling the kids not to smoke marijuana and not to misbehave, that this is not a pop concert. It is very serious music, like Bach and Mozart.

"It was very sad in my own country; many people were thinking I'm going out of my orbit and making sacrilege of my music, getting to this commercial world. I was caught by managers who took all these engagements in rock festivals and I couldn't get out of it. Many times I had to walk out with my sitar before the end; I felt the crowd was out of control.

"A lot of kids were sincere and serious. The majority had been listening to people telling them to 'tune in and turn on.' Those people have done great harm.

"Gradually it was OK. I got out of it and today they all know I didn't sell myself out. I was very well-known in India as a classical musician. To have become like a superstar in a pop sense, that was a bit too much. Because I was not very young, I could keep my head straight."

Now, Americans show much interest in Indian music, Shankar says. "When I started performing here in 1956, a small group of people came to listen. Now, there are colleges which are having Indian music as regular training. There are people who stayed back from that superficial period of the mid-'60s and they are really seriously involved."

There also is a current vogue in the West for ethnic music. Shankar isn't against that, but he is adamant: "I have a strong dislike for that word when they put Indian classical music in that category.

"At Madras, at a symposium of Indian classical musicians, a very famous musician and musicologist got up and said he would like to pass a resolution: From now on we'll call Western classical music ethnic music in our country.

"Ethnic music is traditional music, with folk roots. It might have been classical once upon a time. It is not a living music. They play the same fixed things.

"Like Western classical music, Indian classical music has been growing and developing and still is. We are always composing new things. To reach a standard for performance level, it takes nothing less than 20 years. To be termed ethnic music is a great insult."

WynTone™ CONDITIONER
For Ladies and Gentlemen of all ages

The WynTone™ Conditioner is a revolutionary, innovative fitness system featuring aerobic and toning benefits of both cycling and rowing. Air serves as the resistance force – the faster you cycle/row, the greater the resistance. The WynTone is aerodynamically designed to provide smooth action with your movement. Additionally, you can cycle or row independently with simple adjustment.

The WynTone Conditioner provides a simple and effective fitness program for cardiovascular and muscular conditioning. Cardiovascular conditioning is efficiently achieved by exercising the upper and lower body simultaneously. Muscular toning and conditioning is achieved by performing movement against a resistance, without the adverse effects of strain on muscle groups or jarring and shock to joints.

As with all Wynmor™ products, the WynTone Conditioner is professionally designed and engineered to ensure a consistently high level of performance over time, and it is firmly supported by the Wynmor warranty ensuring total satisfaction.

MADE IN U.S.A.
With WynTone you can achieve your conditioning goals in a few short sessions each week in the convenience of your own home or office.

The Wynmor™ Conditioning Monitor is a state-of-the-art electronic Ergometer providing the user with accurate feedback on progress through eight modes of operation. The modes are easy to understand:

TIME: Allows you to time your workout.
SPEED: Displayed in miles per hour.
DISTANCE: Displayed in tenths of a mile.
CADENCE: Audible tempo to pace your workout.
CALORIES: Expended calories are automatically computed.
PULSE: Displayed in beats per minute.
PULSE TARGET: You can set a pulse target during the workout.
SCAN: Automatically cycles through the digital displays during your workout.

Lisa Marie and Danny Keogh, who made Elvis a grandpa

Q. Elvis Presley's daughter, Lisa Marie, recently gave birth to a daughter of her own. Was she born in or out of wedlock? Where was she born? And what was she named?—Anne T., Kailua, Hawaii

A. The child was born in wedlock on May 29 to Lisa Marie and her musician-husband, Danny Keogh, at St. John's Hospital in Santa Monica, Calif. She was named Danielle Riley Keogh.

Q. Who is paying the bills—especially the medical bills—of the Ferdinand Marcos family in Hawaii? Are the Marcoses paying with their own money, or are we, the taxpayers of the U.S., footing the bills?—Margot Jones, Fresno, Calif.

A. According to Horatio Paredes, the Philippines information officer in Honolulu: "The U.S. taxpayer is not paying and has not paid the bills—medical and otherwise—of Ferdinand and Imelda Marcos, their family and entourage. It is the position of my government that the Marcos family has more than enough private funds to pay for all goods and services rendered to them." The major "free ride" that the Marcoses, their staff and entourage obtained from the U.S. was their flight out of the Philippines and to Honolulu on Feb. 25, 1986, aboard American aircraft.

Q. What does House Speaker Tom Foley draw in salary? What does ex-Speaker Jim Wright draw in retirement?—L. Daniels, Yuma, Ariz.

A. Rep. Tom Foley (D., Wash.), Speaker of the House of Representatives, draws $115,000 a year—the same salary as the Vice President, to whom he is next in line of succession should the President die in office. Foley, 60, not only is entitled to an office and staff as an elected member of Congress; as Speaker, he also is entitled to an additional and larger office and second staff, on which as much as $900,000 will be spent by the end of fiscal 1989, plus the use of a government limousine and driver.

Colburn/Photoreporters

Tom Foley, head of House

Jim Wright will receive in his first year of retirement a pension of about $83,000, based on the average of his three highest salaries in the government, multiplied by 2.5% and further multiplied by his 34 years of federal service. The pension will be augmented by periodic cost-of-living increases. In retirement, Wright is entitled to an office in his Congressional district (12th-Texas), about $100,000 a year for staff salaries and $67,000 for office expenses. Such entitlements currently are exercised by the other former House Speakers: Carl Albert of Oklahoma and "Tip" O'Neill of Massachusetts.

Q. If Jane Fonda divorces Tom Hayden, will she name Vicky Rideout, who used to write speeches for Mike Dukakis, as her rival?—Angela Fiore, Atlantic City, N.J.

Transworld Feature Syndicate

Ms. Rideout: Jane's rival?

A. Newspaper columnists have mentioned Vicky Rideout, 32, as Hayden's new love interest, but at this writing Jane Fonda is holding her tongue. She is fully aware that a Fonda-Hayden divorce, tried in the news media, will foment harm for all persons involved.

Q. I can't believe it, but I've heard that President Bush showers daily with his dog, Millie. Can you enlighten me on this matter and what it portends for animal rights?—J.C., Washington, D.C.

A. President Bush showers daily, but only occasionally with his dog, Millie, who has no rights in this matter.

Q. When Leonid Brezhnev was No. 1 honcho of the Soviet Union, his daughter Galina lived a privileged life. She had access to the best of everything—clothes, cars, diamonds, even the services of a gypsy lover. In which jail has the Gorbachev regime deposited Galina? Is she in Siberia, pulling time?—Morris Bauer, Venice, Calif.

A. Galina's husband, Yuri Churbanov, has been jailed on charges of corruption and venality, and he may be in some Siberian prison camp. Galina, however, in these days of glasnost and perestroika, reportedly is living in a dacha outside Moscow under the constant observation of the KGB, the Soviet security apparatus.

Q. Rep. Donald Lukens, 58, was convicted of having sex with a 16-year-old girl. Of what race is the girl a member, and to what race does the Congressman belong?—K.L., Eugene, Ore.

The unexpected consequences of our expeditions to the Moon

THE GIFT OF APOLLO

The Earth, lovely and vulnerable, hangs over the lifeless lunar surface in this Apollo 11 photo.

BY CARL SAGAN

IT'S A SULTRY NIGHT IN JULY. YOU'VE FALLEN ASLEEP in the armchair. Abruptly, you startle awake, disoriented. The television set is on, but not the sound. You strain to understand what you're seeing. Two ghostly white figures in coveralls and helmets are softly dancing under a pitch-black sky. They make strange little skipping motions, which propel them upward amid barely perceptible clouds of dust. But something is wrong. They take too long to come down. Encumbered as they are, they seem to be flying—a little. You rub your eyes, but the strange tableau persists.

Of all the events surrounding Apollo 11's landing on the Moon on July 20, 1969, my most vivid recollection is its dreamlike quality. Yes, it was an astonishing technological achievement and a triumph for the United States. Yes, the astronauts—Neil Armstrong, Buzz Aldrin and Mike Collins, the last keeping solitary vigil in lunar orbit—displayed death-defying courage. Yes, as Armstrong said as he first alighted, this was an historic step for the human species. But if you turned off the sound, with its deliberately mundane and routine chatter, and stared into that black-and-white television monitor, you could glimpse that we humans had once again entered the realm of myth and legend.

We knew the Moon from our earliest days. It was there when our ancestors descended from the trees into the savannahs, when we learned to walk upright, when we first devised stone tools, when we domesticated fire, when we invented agriculture and built cities and set out to subdue the Earth. The Moon's waning and waxing symbolized death and rebirth. Its phases correspond so closely to the reproductive cycle of women that it's hard not to wonder if there was once some causal connection—as the word "menstruation" (Latin mensis = "month") reminds us. Folklore and popular songs still celebrate a connection between the Moon and love. The word "month" and the second day of the week are both named after the Moon. Especially when we lived out-of-doors, it was a major—if oddly intangible—presence in our lives.

The Moon was a metaphor for the unattainable: "You might as well ask for the Moon," they used to say. For most of our history, we had no idea what it was. A spirit? A god? A thing? It didn't look like something big far away, but more like something small nearby—something the size of a plate, maybe, hanging in the sky a mile above our heads. Walking on the

Moon would then have seemed a screwball idea; it made more sense to imagine somehow climbing up into the sky on a ladder or on the back of a giant bird, grabbing the Moon and bringing it down to Earth. But nobody ever did.

It was not until a few centuries ago that the idea of the Moon as a place, a quarter of a million miles away, gained wide currency; we're new at figuring out what worlds are and how they work. And in that brief flicker of time, we've gone from the earliest steps in understanding the Moon's nature to actually walking on its surface. We calculated how objects move in space; liquefied oxygen from the air; invented big rockets, telemetry, reliable electronics, inertial guidance and much else. Then we sailed out into the sky.

The Moon is no longer unattainable. A dozen humans, all Americans, made those odd skipping motions they called "moonwalks" on the crunchy, cratered, ancient gray lava—beginning on that July day in 1969. But since 1972, no one from any nation has ventured there. Indeed, none of us has gone anywhere since the glory days of Apollo except into low Earth orbit—like a toddler who takes a few tentative steps outward and then, breathless, retreats to the safety of his mother's skirts.

Once upon a time, we soared into the solar system. For a few years. Then we hurried back. Why? What happened? What was Apollo really about?

The scope and audacity of John Kennedy's May 25, 1961, message to a joint session of Congress on "Urgent National Needs"—the speech that launched the Apollo program—dazzled me. We would use rockets not yet designed and alloys not yet conceived, navigation and docking schemes not yet devised, in order to send a man to a world not yet explored—not even in a preliminary way, with robots—and we would bring him safely back, and we would do it before the decade was over. This confident pronouncement was made before any American had even achieved Earth orbit.

As a newly minted Ph.D., I actually thought all this had something centrally to do with science. But President Kennedy did not talk about discovering the origin of the Moon, for example, or even about bringing samples of it back for study. All he seemed interested in was sending someone there and bringing him home. Kennedy's science adviser, Jerome Wiesner, later told me he had a deal with the President: If the President did not claim that Apollo was about science, then he, Wiesner, would support it. So if not science, what?

There were arguments about "spinoffs," contentions that Apollo was a way to pump American technology. They boiled down to something like this: "Give us $25 billion to put people on the Moon, and we'll throw in Tang, a free cardiac pacemaker and a stickless frying pan." But anybody could see that if we were after orange-juice substitutes or pacemakers or frying pans—or even mainframe computers—we could invent them directly; we didn't have to spend $25 billion and send people to the Moon in the process.

I kept asking. The Apollo program is really about politics, I was told. This sounded more promising. Nonaligned nations would be tempted to drift toward the Soviet Union if it was ahead in space exploration, if the U.S. showed insufficient "national vigor." I didn't follow. Here was the United States, ahead of the Soviet Union in virtually every area of technology—the world's economic, military and, on occasion, even moral leader—and Indonesia would go Communist because Yuri Gagarin beat John Glenn to Earth orbit? What's so special about space technology? Suddenly I understood.

Sending people to orbit the Earth or robots to orbit the Sun requires rockets—big, reliable, powerful rockets. Those same rockets can be used for nuclear war. The same technology that transports a man to the Moon can carry a nuclear warhead halfway around the Earth. The same technology that puts an astronomer and a telescope in Earth orbit can also put up a laser "battle station." Even back then, there was talk in military circles, East and West, about space as the new "high ground," about the nation that "controlled" space as "controlling" the Earth. Of course strategic rockets were being tested on Earth. But heaving a ballistic missile with a dummy warhead to a target zone in the middle of the Pacific Ocean doesn't buy much glory. Sending people into space, though, captures the imagination of the world. You wouldn't spend the money to launch astronauts for this reason alone, but of all the ways of demonstrating rocket potency, this one works best.

There were six more missions after Apollo 11, all but one of which successfully landed on the lunar surface. Apollo 17 was the first to carry a scientist. As soon as he got there, the program was canceled. The first scientist and the last human to land on the Moon were the same person. The program had already served its purpose that July night in 1969. The half-dozen subsequent missions were just momentum.

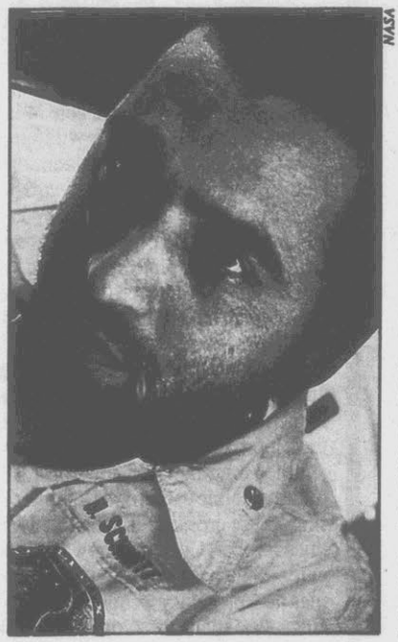

Apollo was not mainly about science. It was not even mainly about space. Apollo was mainly about ideological confrontation and nuclear war—often described by such euphemisms as world "leadership" and national "prestige." Nevertheless, good space science was done. We now know much more about the composition, age and history of the Moon and the origin of the lunar landforms. We have made progress in understanding where the Moon came from. (The best current idea is that it was produced in the collision of a giant asteroid or comet with the Earth around 4.5 billion years ago.) More important, Apollo provided an aegis, an umbrella under which brilliantly engineered robot spacecraft were dispatched throughout the solar system, making a preliminary reconnaissance of dozens of worlds. The last of them, Voyager 2, will encounter the Neptune system this August. The offspring of Apollo are now reaching the solar-system frontiers.

If not for Apollo—and, therefore, if not for the political purpose it served—I doubt whether the historic American expeditions of exploration and discovery throughout the solar system would have occurred. Something similar is true for the pioneering Soviet efforts in solar-system exploration, including the first landings of robot spacecraft on another planet.

Why Explore The Planets? The Practical Reason

"For the first time in my life, I saw the horizon as a curved line. It was accentuated by a thin seam of dark blue light—our atmosphere. Obviously, this was not the 'ocean' of air I had been told it was so many times in my life. I was terrified by its fragile appearance."
—Ulf Merbold, West German space shuttle astronaut

There are three surprising, potentially disastrous threats to our planet's atmosphere and therefore to the global environment. They can be avoided only by deep and long-term cooperation of the nations of the Earth (see PARADE, "The Common Enemy," Feb. 7, 1988):

(1) The assault on the protective ozone layer by CFCs—compounds used in refrigerators, air conditioners, aerosol spray cans and insulating containers for fast foods. It threatens a serious increase in skin cancer and the destruction of the microorganisms at the base of the great food chain, on which all our lives depend (PARADE, Sept. 11, 1988).

(2) The increasing greenhouse effect caused by CFCs and the burning of coal, oil, natural gas and gasoline. It threatens catastrophic global warming, destruction of farmland and coastal flooding all over the planet (PARADE, Feb. 3, 1985).

(3) Nuclear Winter, through the explosion of even a small fraction of the nearly 60,000 nuclear weapons in the world. It threatens precipitous cold and dark, agricultural collapse and the possible death by starvation of billions of people all over the Earth (PARADE, Oct. 30, 1983).

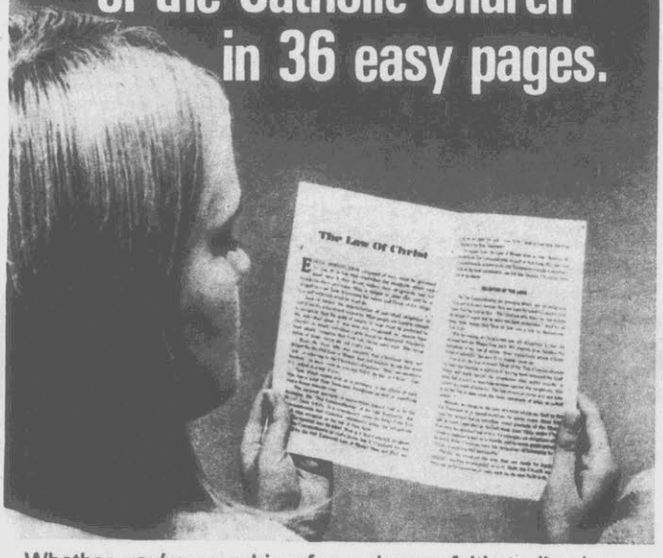

Studying the planets has played a major role in the discovery and assessment of each of these doleful prospects. Fundamental contributions were made by scientists who had cut their teeth investigating other worlds:

- Some of the earliest calculations of ozone depletion relied on studies of the upper atmosphere of Venus, and the chemically antiseptic surface layer of Mars is believed to be due to the near absence of ozone in its atmosphere.
- The clearest demonstration that a greenhouse effect can work a planetwide catastrophe is Venus, with its 480°C (900°F) surface temperature.
- The first step toward the discovery of Nuclear Winter came from the study of Martian dust storms.

What new insights about how to avoid these catastrophes will come from planetary exploration? What new potential catastrophes, brought about by our technological prowess, will planetary exploration help uncover?

There is a case for sending spacecraft to other worlds for reasons of the most practical and urgent utility here on Earth. Even if we were focused exclusively on our Earthbound problems, planetary exploration is a superb investment.

Whether you're searching for a deeper faith to live by or simply want a better understanding of the beliefs of your Catholic neighbors, you will find absorbing reading in our pamphlet entitled, "This Is The Catholic Church."

It answers simply and clearly such often-asked questions as "Why do Catholics go to Confession?"..."Why do they regard the Mass as the form of worship most pleasing to God?"...and "Why do they feel that the organized Church is essential to God's plan for man's salvation?"

You'll learn, too, the origin and significance of the Seven Sacraments and why Catholics attach such vital importance to them...the authority by which the Pope, Bishops and priests guide the Church...and how the Apostles' Creed is, in effect, a summary of basic Catholic doctrine.

APOLLO/continued

Apollo conveyed a confidence, energy and breadth of vision that did capture the imagination of the world. That too was part of its purpose. It inspired an optimism about technology, an enthusiasm for the future. If we could go to the Moon, what else was now possible? Even those who were not admirers of the United States readily acknowledged that—whatever the underlying reason for the program—the nation had, with Apollo, achieved greatness.

But since the end of Apollo, the American space program has been in decline. It has been given no coherent long-term purpose. Like all bureaucracies without real direction from above, NASA has attempted to make do—to maintain existing programs and field centers, to go by slow steps. Predictably, budgets were cut. Morale deteriorated. Other claimants arose for the NASA budget.

Shuttle was developed, although exactly why we need humans in low Earth orbit—when robots are so capable, so much cheaper and do not risk human life—was never made clear. Those whose parents witnessed humans walking on the Moon now thrilled that we were able to launch a shuttle to 200 miles altitude without mishap. An American space station was announced as "the next logical step"—but we heard nothing about where it was a logical step to. What exactly was its purpose? Could we perform those functions without a space station? No one was saying.

The United States, after launching dozens of trailblazing interplanetary missions in the 1960s and 1970s, had not launched a single spacecraft to the Moon or the planets in the last 11 years. This drought has just ended with the successful launch of Magellan, an orbiter for radar-mapping the cloud-shrouded surface of Venus. There is another long-delayed mission just coming out of the pipeline—Galileo to Jupiter—which (my fingers are crossed) is scheduled to be launched this October. Congress now has before it a critically important proposal to reinvigorate the unmanned planetary program called CRAF/Cassini—two spacecraft, one of them designed and paid for jointly with the European Space Agency, to rendezvous with a comet, fly by asteroids, orbit Saturn and send a probe into Titan, a moon covered with the building blocks of life. All this for the price of maybe three B-2 bombers.

Still, something is seriously wrong with NASA, and it's not hard to see what it is: The U.S. space program has lost its way. The responsibility lies fundamentally not at NASA's door but at the President's—several consecutive Presidents. NASA lacks a compelling political purpose of the sort that Apollo provided. NASA needs a Presidentially mandated long-term goal.

I've learned my lesson. Governments do not spend these vast sums just for science, or merely to explore. They need another purpose, and it has to make real political sense. The United States and the Soviet Union have by now amply demonstrated their ability to deliver nuclear weapons over long distances with ballistic missiles. There is no longer any politically coherent purpose for competition in space. What's left? I think the answer is clear: cooperation.

I proposed in these pages (PARADE, Feb. 2, 1986) a long-term program for the exploration of Mars, a program that would culminate in a manned and womanned mission to that planet—spearheaded by the United States and the Soviet Union but including Europe, Japan and other nations. I believe it would consolidate the disparate constituencies of NASA, be technologically a smaller step than Apollo was in 1961 and represent a much smaller increment in the (now much-diminished) NASA budget than Apollo did. It would provide the aegis and justification for a wide range of other NASA activities, including robotic exploration of Mars and other worlds, long-duration human spaceflight and construction in Earth orbit. It would provide a reason for the space station.

But most of all, such an objective could serve an urgent political task: binding up the United States and the Soviet Union in a shared endeavor of historic proportions on behalf of the human species. It can be done in slow steps, with adequate protection by each side against a political change of heart by the other and without dangerous technology transfer.

President Gorbachev has now, on several occasions, invited the United States to join the USSR in just such an endeavor. The House of Representatives voted (in the 1989 NASA authorization bill) for Mars as the long-term focus of the U.S. space program. NASA's new Office of Exploration has called for human exploration of Mars as a major NASA goal, as has the 1988 Republican Party Platform. Democratic Presidential aspirants, including Sen. Albert Gore and the Rev. Jesse Jackson, endorsed joint U.S./USSR Mars exploration. And the Planetary Society's "Mars Declaration" has been signed by a group of Americans of strikingly diverse political persuasions, including six former NASA administrators and the crew of Apollo 11. All that human exploration of Mars needs—as did Apollo—is a Presidential commitment.

But why Mars? Why not return to the Moon? It's much closer, and we've proved we know how to send people there.

Yes, but I'm concerned that the Moon is a long detour, if not a dead end. We've been there. We've even brought some of it back. People have seen the Moon rocks, and, for reasons that I believe are fundamentally sound, they are bored by the Moon. It is a static, airless, waterless, dead world.

Mars, by contrast, has weather, dust storms, its own moons, immense volcanoes, seasonally varying polar ice caps, enigmatic landforms and ancient river valleys indicating that massive climatic change has occurred on a once-Earthlike world. Mars also holds some prospect of past or possibly even present life. None of this is true for the Moon. Nor is the Moon an especially desirable test bed or way station for Mars. The Martian and lunar environments are very different, and the Moon is as distant from Mars as is the Earth. The machinery for Martian exploration can better be tested in Earth orbit or on the Earth itself.

A healthy and successful NASA must broaden its constituency. For one thing, it needs to make a major international effort to monitor the Earth from space, to help preserve our small world. It needs to make a much more serious

Phobos—In Orbit Around Mars

Photograph of Phobos, the innermost moon of Mars, taken by the Soviet spacecraft Phobos 2 shortly before the vehicle lost lock on Earth and tumbled out of control. Much information was obtained, but the mission terminated before its highlight—the landing of two sub-spacecraft on Phobos, a world rich in organic matter and a likely base for the future human exploration of Mars. The Soviets recently have announced their continuing commitment to an ambitious program of Martian exploration by robot spacecraft—including landers, penetrators and exploratory balloons in 1994, and a mission, possibly jointly with the U.S., that would rove over the surface and return samples to Earth around the year 2000.

effort at robotic exploration of other worlds. This is not just a matter of catering to a widespread passion for exploration and discovery; if we didn't have an ounce of adventuresome spirit in us, it would still be prudent and cost-effective to explore the planets (see box).

But, most of all, NASA needs to make the connection of spaceflight with international understanding and world peace. I do not see any other activities—such as Star Wars (SDI), appeals to national prestige or promises of technological spinoffs—that can provide a political justification for NASA suitable for the 1990s. But protecting the environment, forging a common purpose with other nations—especially former adversaries—and re-exciting the exploratory imagination of people all over the world constitute a sufficient political payoff to justify a major, consistently funded American space program.

When you pack your bags for a big trip, you never know what's in store for you. The Apollo astronauts on their way to and from the Moon photographed their home planet. It was a natural thing to do, but it had consequences that few foresaw. For the first time, the inhabitants of Earth could see our world from above—the whole Earth, the Earth in color, the Earth as an exquisite white and blue world set against the vast darkness of space. Those images have awakened our slumbering planetary consciousness; they provide incontestable evidence that we all share the same vulnerable planet—our only home in all the solar system. They remind us of what is important and what is not. The Saudi Arabian astronaut Prince Sultan Salman al-Saud, after his observations of the Earth from the Discovery shuttle in 1985, recalled: "The first day or so, we all pointed to our countries. The third or fourth day, we were pointing to our continents. By the fifth day, we were aware of only one Earth."

We may have found that perspective just in time, just as our technology threatens the habitability of our world (see box). Whatever the reason we first mustered the Apollo program, however mired in Cold War nationalism it was, the inescapable recognition of the unity and fragility of the Earth is its clear and luminous dividend, the unexpected gift of Apollo. What began in deadly competition has led us to see that global cooperation is the essential precondition for our survival.

Travel is broadening. It's time to hit the road again.

Carl Sagan of Cornell University briefed the Apollo crews before their missions to the Moon and in 1969 received NASA's Apollo Achievement Award. He is president of the Pasadena-based Planetary Society, the largest space-interest group in the world.

HUGO MORALES IS A GRADUATE OF HARVARD LAW SCHOOL, BUT HE HAS NEVER MADE MORE THAN $17,000 A YEAR. AND THAT DOESN'T BOTHER HIM A BIT.

HE GIVES THE POOR A VOICE

Max Aguilera-Hellweg

He helped start Radio Bilingue so farmworkers could get news about their world. Now he works 16-hour days as a community organizer. For Hugo Morales, it's not a sacrifice.

IT WAS CLOSE TO 20 YEARS ago that I last saw Hugo Morales. We were both students at Harvard then. I remember him as a genial, outgoing, hardworking young man. He could have used his high-powered education to become a rich man. Many of our classmates have. But Hugo Morales, now 40, has never made more than $17,000 a year—and that doesn't bother him a bit.

We met in a small cafe in a depressed area of Fresno, Calif. There, Morales explained to me why a Mixtec Indian from Mexico, born in poverty, would pass up a gilt-edged opportunity to escape and instead would devote his life to helping his people.

"I grew up in Mixteca, our homeland in Oaxaca," he told me. "I lived with my mother in deep poverty. I never met my father until I was 9. He was in California and was undocumented. Then, when he was legalized, we immigrated to Healdsburg, about 60 miles north of San Francisco. I grew up picking prunes and other crops in what is now the wine country.

"When I was 12 or 13, I ended up in a tuberculosis hospital. When you're poor like that and you're a kid, and they lock you up in a room for nine months, you have a lot of time to think.

"I thought about who I was and my chances of contributing to society. That experience gave me determination. I realized that sometimes there's a perception that people who are poor deserve to be poor. But my parents were poor. They sacrificed a lot and got very little, and I saw a lot of rich people who didn't sacrifice at all and got a lot."

After he recovered from tuberculosis, Morales began his impressive career. At Healdsburg High, he was one of a handful of Mexican-Americans in a mostly white, affluent student body. He rode the bus to school while other kids drove their own cars. But his classmates elected him student-body president, and Harvard offered him a scholarship.

For seven years, he studied in Cambridge, Mass., in the winter and picked fruit in Healdsburg in the summer. "My ambition was with the people I grew up with," he said. "I'm not sure they understood why I returned, but I think they appreciated me coming back and not leaving them. What I did then was important—physical labor, working collaboratively—it has its values. There, picking fruit—on your knees on the ground, with your mother and your father and your brother—you realize that's who you are, not some law-school student in Cambridge."

He never even thought of taking a Wall Street job. "I wasn't tempted, and I didn't want to be tempted," he said. Instead, he moved to Fresno, where he thought he could make the biggest impact on the lives of farmworkers. First, he helped start Radio Bilingue, one of the first bilingual public radio stations. It gave farmworkers a source of information about the world around them, telling them about immigration and legal matters, working conditions and cultural opportunities.

Morales was not content to stop there. He organized a chamber of commerce for Fresno's Hispanic small businesses, then helped found Fresno Tomorrow, a coalition that is addressing the problems of the city's young people. "It's a real challenge to work toward opportunity for those children," he told me. "We could conceivably have a society that basically is divided between white people, mostly males with skilled jobs, and masses of almost illiterate people of color working in menial jobs. That would be an ugly society."

MORALES GREW UP PICKING FRUIT IN THE VALLEY. HE COULD HAVE LEFT ALL THAT BEHIND, BUT HE CAME BACK.

As we drove through the San Joaquin Valley in his aging VW Rabbit, we went past acre upon acre of fruit trees and grapevines, cotton plants and olive groves. And everywhere we stopped, the radio was on and the station was Radio Bilingue. For hundreds of miles up and down the valley, people were listening, knowing that they had a community, that they had hope and a future.

Hugo Morales seemed content as he drove back to the city for the second half of his 16-hour workday. "You talk about my sacrifice," he said. "The fact is it's not a sacrifice. I'm very happy."

Then he added with a smile, "I guess I'll be doing this for a while."

A Sculptural Tribute to America's Indian Youth

BRAVE AND FREE

- Limited edition
- Shown actual size
- Walnut hardwood base
- Hand-painted porcelain

© 1989, Artaffects © 1989 HC

American Indians value harmony with nature above all other virtues. They revere the magnificent animals that share their environment, and have, for generations, passed these values from father to son in their legends and songs.

Gifted painter of native Americans, Gregory Perillo, offers a moving insight into this mutual respect, portraying an Indian child and his eagle companion in one of his greatest works, "Brave and Free."

Among the most celebrated Perillo creations, his "Brave and Free" collector plate rose 500% in value in less than two years. And now Perillo adds a new dimension to this treasured masterwork: the "Brave and Free" figurine. Under Perillo's guidance, each figurine is handcast in fine porcelain, assembled, fired and painted with twenty colors selected by the artist himself, and presented atop a polished walnut hardwood base. Additionally, the edition for "Brave and Free" is limited to a total of 10 firing days.

There is no risk to you in responding, for you may return "Brave and Free" within 30 days for a full refund. Perillo's strong following and the exceptional price rise of the "Brave and Free" plate make the figurine's sell-out a distinct possibility. So you should respond today!

Jackie's Life Is a Best-Seller

UPI/Bettmann

Sovfoto/Globe

Movie Still Archives

Top, Jackie weds wandering Jack, whose most notorious extramarital friend was Marilyn Monroe (r); below, with husband No. 2, Aristotle Onassis, who also had his flings

If by chance you're interested in the abundant, indiscriminate, compulsive extramarital sex life of John F. Kennedy, you may care to read A Woman Named Jackie, the overwritten, 715-page best-seller by C. David Heymann.

Based on 825 interviews, both oral and written, in addition to material gathered primarily by five researchers, the book—at least for this reader—reveals more about President Kennedy, who was assassinated at age 46, than it does about Jacqueline Bouvier Kennedy Onassis, who will reach age 60 on July 28.

Jack Kennedy was a strikingly handsome, intelligent roué—tall, athletic and well-read—who had no intention of marrying until his father, another womanizer, convinced him that a wife was a prerequisite for the Presidency. Whether he ever was truly in love with Jackie or whether he might have married any of a half-dozen other attractive women who pursued him are two unanswerable questions about the 35th U.S. President.

What we do know is that JFK experienced his first sexual adventure at 17 in a Harlem bordello and that thereafter he used women as sex objects. He suffered from Addison's disease, and his cortisone injections may have heightened his sex drive. He anticipated a short life but, whatever the reason—physical or philosophic—the fact is that he was unable to cease cheating on his wife with secretaries, airline hostesses, models and, of course, actresses. Heymann names names and places, making it apparent that actor Peter Lawford, JFK's brother-in-law, served as chief procurer, introducing him to Marilyn Monroe, Jayne Mansfield and other Hollywood swingers.

What effect did such constant, flaunting infidelity have on Jackie Kennedy, a woman of pride and sensitivity? "At intervals," Heymann explains lamely, "she would retreat and mope for long stretches, very aloof from everyone and glacially cold to the President. It was at these junctures that she went on shopping binges, disbursing thousands of dollars on jewelry, designer clothes, paintings; whatever captured her fancy."

Wives have been known to punish faithless husbands by spending their money profligately, but when Jackie married Aristotle Onassis in 1968, she reportedly spent his money as if it were rapidly going out of fashion—albeit he had given up Maria Callas and remained true to his marriage vows, at least in the beginning.

In A Woman Named Jackie, the author draws a straight bead on John F. Kennedy as an obsessive philanderer, but after 631 pages he concludes that Jackie "remains an everlasting mystery." What is so mysterious about her? She always was determined to marry money, and she did. Her two husbands died, leaving her wealthier than she ever imagined she would be. She has reared two fine children—lawyers who don't have to worry where their next dollar is coming from. She owns one of the most tasteful estates on Martha's Vineyard. She is a happy grandmother. Owing to eyelid surgery, she looks much younger than her years. As an editor at Doubleday, she has work to do for which she is paid, admired and respected. And in jeweler Maurice Tempelsman, 60, she has a loyal friend and an escort when she needs one.

A Word of Advice

Are you a retired citizen? Are you thinking of selling your home and moving to another part of the country, where you can be near grown sons or daughters? If so, don't. Such is the advice of Dr. Pat Hanley-Peterson, a clinical psychologist who says, "That's the No. 1 cause of depression in the people we see. It's so common that when instances come up at our weekly clinical meetings, we say, 'Oh, it's another case of moved-out-here-to-be-close-to-the-daughter.'"

Dr. Hanley-Peterson, until recently a director of the Older Adult and Family Research and Resource Center in Menlo Park, Calif., declares that a sizable percentage of elderly people become seriously depressed after moving, say, from New York to California, because they cannot adjust or make new friends or adapt to a different social environment. The result is that they spend many of their days watching television and may also spend many nights suffering from insomnia.

The research center at Menlo Park is looking for older adults in the area who are depressed and willing to take part in a research project designed to help them. If you're interested, phone 415-858-3989 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 4:30 p.m. Pacific time.

Warning

In case you didn't know, the American ban on imported elephant ivory—an effort to preserve Africa's elephant herds—went into effect on June 9. Officials of the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, a branch of the Interior Department, have warned that anyone caught bringing elephant ivory into this country will have it seized and could receive a fine of $5000.

It Had To Be Them

Andy Schwartz

Finding out it's love: Crystal and Ryan

Move over, Woody Allen. When Harry Met Sally... (by the writer-director team of Nora Ephron and Rob Reiner) is a little jewel of a New York romance with laugh-until-you-cry insights into the plight of 1980s singles. Harry (Billy Crystal) and Sally (Meg Ryan), beset by the twin demons of modern relationships (fear of rejection and fear of intimacy), don't dare fall in love. So they become very good friends before they realize they can't live without each other. And what a soundtrack to fall in love by: "It Had To Be You," "Where or When," "But Not for Me," "Isn't It Romantic?" Ahhh...

TELEVISION

Do It Yourself, Indoors and Out

It's amazing how much you can learn to do about the house on TV: Hometime, with Joanne Liebeler and Dean Johnson, is great for easy-to-understand instructions on tackling common home repairs or refinishing furniture or finding out what tools you need for a home workshop. On Make Yourself at Home, host Gordon Jump brings friends and families together to cook, garden and build—a father and son make a picnic table/bench, one neighbor helps another start a garden. And on This Old House, home-improvement expert Bob Vila and master carpenter Norm Abram remodel a house, giving step-by-step instructions and bringing in heating, plumbing or security-systems specialists where necessary. All on PBS. (If you own a VCR, be sure to tape how-to programs, so you can replay them as often as you like.)

• What could men who voyaged to the moon do for an encore? Twenty years later, The Other Side of the Moon tells what happened to eight of the Apollo astronauts—how their extraterrestrial experience affected their lives. PBS.

Stephen Wright took a risk to change his appearance—and learned a big lesson

'I Never Realized What I Had'

Stephen Collector

Stephen Wright, 20, hopes he can use his experience to help other young people.

THE YOUNG MAN waiting for me at the tiny airport in Cedar City, Utah, was beaming with enthusiasm. "What do you think?" he asked, as soon as I walked into the terminal.

"You look great," I told him. "A lot different than the last time."

He grinned. Stephen Wright had spent 20 years learning to deal with a world that sometimes treated him as a freak. Since I last saw him, late last year, he had risked his life—and very nearly lost it—in his quest to make society accept him. But his smile told me that he had won the victory he had dreamed of for years.

Stephen Wright was born with a challenge that many would consider insuperable. But he has used it to become strong, confident—and wiser than many of us twice his age.

"I was 4 when we moved to Cedar City," Stephen said. "I went to school here my entire life. So I've never seen another person with Crouzon's Syndrome."

Crouzon's Syndrome is a rare affliction in which the bones at the top of the skull knit together while the baby is still in the womb. As the infant grows, the brain pushes the skull into odd shapes, usually causing facial deformities. In Stephen's case, Crouzon's resulted in what he called "a comical appearance: shallow eye sockets, shallow cheek-bones and a prominent ridge on the forehead."

If you ask him, Stephen will tell you about some of the problems Crouzon's has caused him—but only if you ask. He will mention the 10 different surgical procedures he had as a child; he will tell you about the man who followed him through a Salt Lake City shopping mall, laughing and pointing at him, and about the kids who called him names. But that isn't really what Stephen wants to talk about. What he wants to do is to reach out to other young people with Crouzon's and similar problems, to tell them that they are not alone and that they can prevail.

"I remember the day I decided it was either swim or drown in this world," he said. "I was in school. We were working on a class project and we had to work together, in groups. I wanted to get an A. Another kid in the group just wanted to squeak by and get a C. I got upset, and I said I didn't want to be in that group. I know I shouldn't have done that.

"The other kid blew up and started attacking me in front of everybody, making fun of my face, saying I was funny-looking. For days after that episode, I was devastated. Then I asked myself, 'Am I going to let this ruin my whole life?' I decided that I was going to be happy in spite of it."

Stephen has always had some extraordinary advantages. He has parents who supported him to the hilt, and seven brothers and sisters who protected him, played with him and let others know that he should be treated as just another kid. With all that going for him, he decided not to let his face stand in the way of his happiness. He went out on dates and, as a junior, went to his high school prom. His keen sense of humor, even about himself, made him popular. "Even though it hurt sometimes," he said, "I decided to turn my face into an asset."

The time came when he had to ask himself, "Am I going to let this ruin my life?"

However, even though Stephen had been able to make the best of his appearance, when he was offered the opportunity to undergo a complicated and risky surgical procedure that could change his looks, he decided to take the chance.

Early this year, he had an operation called a Lefort III, in which the skin of the face is peeled back, the cranium opened and the bony structure of the face entirely rebuilt. Before he had the surgery, Stephen calmly explained to me that it entailed risks of blindness, infection, even death. His jaw would be wired shut for seven weeks. Healing would take six months.

Some of Stephen's friends tried to talk him out of the surgery. "They said they liked me fine the way I was," he recalled. "I had second thoughts,

Nicorette® (nicotine polacrilex)

PATIENT INFORMATION

Description: Nicorette is a sugar-free, flavored chewing gum that is used to help you stop smoking cigarettes. Each piece of gum contains 2 mg of nicotine which is released by chewing. The nicotine is absorbed through the lining of the mouth and enters the bloodstream.

Use: Nicorette is used as a temporary aid to help you stop smoking. Your use of Nicorette must be combined with a stop-smoking program that includes education, counseling, and psychologic support under the guidance of your doctor or dentist. This combined approach gives you a better chance of overcoming the social habits as well as the chemical (nicotine) dependency involved in smoking.

NICORETTE SHOULD BE USED ONLY WHEN YOU ARE SURE THAT YOU WISH TO STOP SMOKING CIGARETTES IMMEDIATELY AND COMPLETELY.

Nicorette, because it is a source of nicotine, may decrease the frequency and severity of nicotine withdrawal symptoms which some people experience when smoking is stopped. Some of these withdrawal symptoms are cravings for cigarettes, irritability, anxiety, difficulty in thinking, restlessness, headache, drowsiness, and stomach upset.

YOU SHOULD NOT USE NICORETTE:

1. If you are a child under age 18
2. If you are a nonsmoker
3. If you have problems (muscle or joint) with your jaw, such as TMJ
4. IF YOU ARE OR MAY BECOME PREGNANT.
5. If you are breast feeding.

Current medical opinion considers that nicotine in any form may be harmful to an unborn child. Your doctor may wish to give you a pregnancy test before prescribing Nicorette. If you decide to use Nicorette and are in the childbearing years, an effective form of birth control is advised. If you suspect that you are pregnant, you should stop using Nicorette and talk to your doctor at once. Nicotine in any form passes freely into breast milk and may be harmful to the breast-fed infant.

TO ASSESS THE BENEFIT OF USING NICORETTE AS A TEMPORARY AID TO HELP YOU STOP SMOKING COMPARED WITH THE RISK OF CONTINUING TO SMOKE CIGARETTES, YOU SHOULD CONSULT WITH YOUR DOCTOR OR DENTIST BEFORE USING THE DRUG IF YOU HAVE ANY OF THE FOLLOWING CONDITIONS:

1. Heart disease, a history of heart disease, or believe you are being treated for heart disease
2. High blood pressure, diabetes mellitus (sugar diabetes), thyroid disease, ulcers, or glandular (endocrine) conditions
3. Dental problems, dentures, or bridges (Nicorette, as with other gums, may stick to or damage dental work.)
4. Allergy or sensitivity to any of the ingredients in Nicorette.

Drug Interactions: Stopping smoking with or without the use of Nicorette may affect your response to other medications. If you are taking other drugs in addition to Nicorette, please discuss with your doctor the possible need for adjustment of those medications.

Side Effects: Side effects of Nicorette which may occur include light-headedness, nausea and vomiting, throat and mouth irritation, hiccups, and stomach upset. Most of these side effects are controlled by chewing more slowly. Other effects sometimes seen include mouth ulcers, jaw muscle ache, headaches, heart palpitations, and more than the usual amount of saliva in the mouth. If these effects occur, they usually do so during the first few days of therapy. In addition, the mechanical effects of gum chewing (any gum) may include injury to the mouth or teeth, jaw ache, and belching from swallowing air. These side effects may also be reduced by proper chewing technique. There are other less common side effects which have been reported with the use of Nicorette. Your doctor can answer questions you may have about possible side effects.

IMMEDIATELY REPORT ANY DISTURBING OR UNEXPECTED SYMPTOMS OR CONCERNS TO YOUR DOCTOR.

Drug Abuse and Dependence: You may transfer your dependence on the nicotine in cigarettes to a dependence on the nicotine in Nicorette. After you have used Nicorette for three months, the amount of gum used each day should be gradually reduced to decrease the risk of nicotine dependence, so that before the end of six months, you should have stopped using the gum. Prolonged use of Nicorette for longer than is recommended does not improve your chances of quitting the smoking habit.

THE USE OF NICORETTE BEYOND SIX MONTHS IS NOT RECOMMENDED.

Overdosage: Nicotine overdosage may occur if many pieces of Nicorette are chewed at the same time or one right after the other. Risk of poisoning from swallowing the gum is small because the nicotine in Nicorette is not well absorbed from the stomach and intestines. Signs and symptoms of overdose may include nausea, increased saliva, stomach pain, vomiting, diarrhea, cold sweats, headache, dizziness, changes in hearing and/or vision, confusion, and weakness.

IF AN OVERDOSAGE OCCURS OR A CHILD CHEWS OR SWALLOWS THE GUM, CONTACT YOUR DOCTOR OR LOCAL POISON CONTROL CENTER IMMEDIATELY.

Dosage: The amount of Nicorette gum needed will vary with each person. The gum should be chewed slowly on and off for about 30 minutes whenever you feel the urge to smoke. If the gum is chewed too quickly, nicotine is released too rapidly causing some people to feel light-headed, dizzy, or nauseated, or to have belching, hiccups, or an irritation of the mouth and throat.

Most people require 10-12 pieces per day during their first month of treatment. More or less may be needed by the individual person.

YOU SHOULD NOT USE MORE THAN 30 PIECES OF NICORETTE PER DAY.

There is a medicine available to make quitting smoking easier.

Ask your doctor

It's not your fault if you can't quit. Cigarette smoking is an addiction, a medical problem. But today, your doctor has a medicine and a program that have helped millions quit more easily and less painfully.

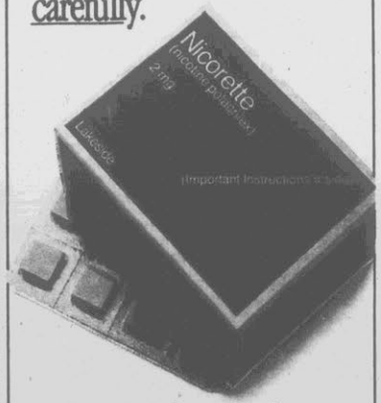

Nicorette® (nicotine polacrilex) is the only prescription medicine developed to help you stop smoking. Properly used in a treatment program, Nicorette can double your chances of quitting successfully. See your doctor and ask whether Nicorette is right for you. You may be on your way to quitting for good.

Nicorette should be used as part of a stop-smoking program.

Chances are, you've been smoking for years, and it will take time to break the habit. Along with Nicorette, your doctor or pharmacist can recommend a program that's right for you. You may also call your local hospital about other programs that are available.

but I knew this was my big chance."

Surgery began around 8 a.m. on a cold day in January. Stephen's father, Larry, told me about it: "The doctors came back about 6 in the afternoon and said that Stephen had almost died. He lost blood pressure, and it took them two hours to bring him back. It was probably the most terrifying thing that ever happened to us."

There was a brief period of anxiety while doctors waited to see if Stephen had suffered brain damage. His mother, Barbara, remembered: "When they finally let us see him, he grabbed my hand and tried to take my rings off. Later, he said, 'It was the only way I could let you know I was still in there.'"

I wasn't surprised that Stephen and his family didn't dwell on the near-catastrophe. They aren't that kind of people. Besides, the surgical team at Salt Lake City's Primary Children's Medical Center had given Stephen the new face he dreamed of. "They moved my eyes together 10 millimeters," he told me. "They pulled my eye sockets forward and used two ribs to build up my forehead."

Stephen showed me a before-and-after video he had made. With his customary humor, he'd dubbed Carly Simon singing You're So Vain onto it. I saw him as a boy and a young man, with the sunken forehead, the protruding eyes, the outsized chin. Then, as he is now, with features the world would consider normal. I have rarely seen anyone as excited.

"I feel less conspicuous," Stephen told me. "I'm proud of my face. I go out without my dark glasses. I feel comfortable." Several times, Stephen has come across longtime acquaintances who didn't recognize him. He was overjoyed by the fact. But the experience that has most enriched his life is an understanding that came to him after his brush with death, while he lay in intensive care, recovering. "I never realized the quality of the life I had before," he said. While his mouth was still wired shut, Stephen wrote his family a letter. It read, in part: "I guess I really did not realize what a valuable, fragile thing life is."

Before the operation, Stephen had planned to be a businessman. Now, he will study to be a psychotherapist, so he can work with young people with craniofacial deformities. As he told me how he wanted to use this experience to help others, I realized that Stephen's friends had been right all along: Though he now looks like what the world considers normal, deep inside he was always just fine the way he was. —Michael Ryan

BRIEF SUMMARY OF PRESCRIBING INFORMATION

CAUTION

Federal law prohibits dispensing without prescription.

DESCRIPTION

Nicorette (nicotine polacrilex) contains nicotine bound to an ion exchange resin in a sugar-free flavored chewing gum base. Nicotine is absorbed through the buccal mucosa when Nicorette is chewed. Each piece of Nicorette contains nicotine polacrilex equivalent to 2 mg nicotine and also contains flavors, glycerin, gum base, sodium bicarbonate, sodium carbonate, and sorbitol. Nicorette is to be used as an adjunct to smoking cessation programs. The chemical name for nicotine is (S)-3-(1-methyl-2-pyrrolidinyl) pyridine.

INDICATION AND USAGE

Nicorette is indicated as a temporary aid to the cigarette smoker seeking to give up his or her smoking habit while participating in a behavioral modification program under medical or dental supervision.

The efficacy of Nicorette as an aid to smoking cessation was demonstrated in clinical studies which showed that Nicorette gum, in comparison to control chewing gums, increased the likelihood of smoking cessation among participants in behavioral modification programs. As used in the context of this labeling, behavioral modification refers to supervised programs of education, counselling and psychologic support. The efficacy of Nicorette use without concomitant participation in a behavioral modification program has not been established.

In general, smokers who have a high 'physical' type of nicotine dependence are most likely to benefit from the use of Nicorette. The following subject characteristics are correlated with a 'physical' type of nicotine-dependence: (1) smoke more than 15 cigarettes per day, (2) prefer brands of cigarettes with nicotine levels greater than 0.9 mg/cigarette, (3) usually inhale the smoke frequently and deeply, (4) smoke the first cigarette within 30 minutes of arising, (5) find the first cigarette in the morning the hardest to give up, (6) smoke more frequently during the morning than the rest of the day, (7) find it difficult to refrain from smoking in places where it is forbidden, or (8) smoke even when they are so ill they are confined to bed most of the day.

The benefits of Nicorette use beyond three months have not been demonstrated.

CONTRAINDICATIONS

Nicorette is contraindicated in non smokers.

Nicorette is contraindicated in patients during the immediate post myocardial infarction period, patients with life-threatening arrhythmias, and patients with severe or worsening angina pectoris. (See WARNINGS.)

Also, Nicorette is contraindicated in patients with active temporomandibular joint disease.

Current medical opinion indicates that nicotine in any form may be harmful to an unborn child. Nicorette and cigarettes both contain nicotine.

Nicorette may cause fetal harm when administered to a pregnant woman.

Use of cigarettes or Nicorette during the last trimester has been associated with a decrease in fetal breathing movements. These effects may be the result of decreased placental perfusion caused by nicotine. Rare reports of miscarriages have been received, and a relationship to drug therapy as a contributing factor cannot be excluded. Studies in pregnant rhesus monkeys have shown that maternal nicotine administration produced acidosis, hypoxia and hypercarbia in the fetus.

Nicotine has been shown to be teratogenic in mice treated subcutaneously with 25 mg/kg, which is approximately 300 times the human buccal dose. Studies in rats and monkeys have not demonstrated a teratogenic effect of nicotine in doses which would occur during cigarette smoking.

Nicorette is therefore contraindicated in women who are or may become pregnant, and female patients should be advised to take adequate precautions to avoid becoming pregnant. The physician may wish to consider a pregnancy test before instituting therapy with Nicorette. If this drug is used during pregnancy, or if the patient becomes pregnant while taking this drug, the patient should be apprised of the potential hazard to the fetus.

WARNINGS

The risks of nicotine in patients with certain cardiovascular and endocrine diseases should be carefully weighed against the benefits of including Nicorette in a smoking cessation program in these patients. Specifically, patients with coronary heart disease (history of myocardial infarction and/or angina pectoris), serious cardiac arrhythmias, or vasospastic diseases (Buerger's disease, Prinzmetal variant angina) should be carefully screened and evaluated before Nicorette is prescribed. Occasional reports of tachyarrhythmias occurring in association with the use of Nicorette have been reported; therefore, if an increase in cardiovascular symptoms occurs with the use of Nicorette, it should be discontinued.

As the action of nicotine on the adrenal medulla (release of catecholamines) does not appear to be affected by tolerance, Nicorette should be used with caution in patients with hyperthyroidism, pheochromocytoma or insulin-dependent diabetes. Cigarette smoking is felt to play a perpetuating role in hypertension and peptic ulcer disease. Therefore, Nicorette should be used in patients with systemic hypertension or peptic ulcer (active or inactive) only when the benefits of including Nicorette in a smoking cessation program outweigh the risks.

PRECAUTIONS

Nicorette should be used with caution in patients with oral or pharyngeal inflammation and in patients with a history of esophagitis or peptic ulcer.

The dosage form of Nicorette dictates that it be used with caution in patients whose dental problems might be exacerbated by chewing gum. In such patients prior dental evaluation may be advisable.

Nicorette is sugar-free and has been formulated to minimize stickiness. As with other gums, however, the degree to which Nicorette may stick to dentures, dental caps or partial bridges may depend on the materials from which they are made and other factors such as amount of saliva produced, possible interaction with denture adhesives, denture cleaning compounds, dryness of mouth due to other causes and salivary constituents. Should an excessive degree of stickiness to dental work occur, there is the possibility that as with other gums, Nicorette may damage dental work; if this should occur, the patient should discontinue its use and consult a physician or dentist.

The sustained use of Nicorette by ex-smokers is not to be encouraged because the chronic consumption of nicotine is toxic and addicting. The physician must, however, weigh the relative risks of a possible return to smoking versus continued, long-term use of the gum.

Information for Patients: The patient instruction sheet is attached at the end of the professional labeling text. It is intended for detachment by the pharmacist and inclusion in the package of Nicorette dispensed to the patients. It contains important selected information on patient selection, risks and adverse effects and instructions on how to use Nicorette properly.

Drug Interactions: Smoking cessation, with or without nicotine substitutes, may alter response to concomitant medication in ex-smokers. Smoking is considered to increase metabolism and thus lower blood levels of drugs such as phenacetin, caffeine, theophylline, imipramine and pentazocine, through enzyme induction. Cessation of smoking may result in increased levels of these drugs. Absorption of glutethimide may be decreased, and the "first pass" metabolism of propoxyphene may be decreased by smoking cessation. Other reported effects of smoking, which do not involve enzyme induction, include reduced diuretic effects of furosemide and decreased cardiac output, and increased blood pressure with propranolol, which may also relate to the hormonal effects of nicotine. Smoking cessation may reverse these actions.

Both smoking and nicotine can increase circulating cortisol and catecholamines. Therapy with adrenergic agonists or with adrenergic blockers may need to be adjusted according to changes in nicotine therapy or smoking status.

Literature reports indicate that nicotine is neither an initiator nor a tumor-promoter in mice. There is inconclusive evidence to suggest that cotinine, an oxidized metabolite of nicotine, may be carcinogenic in rats. Cotinine was not mutagenic in the Ames Salmonella test.

Pregnancy: Pregnancy Category X. (See CONTRAINDICATIONS.)

Nursing Mothers: Nicotine passes freely into the breast milk. Because of the potential for serious adverse reactions in nursing infants from nicotine, a decision should be made whether to discontinue nursing or to discontinue the drug, taking into account the importance of the drug to the mother.

Pediatric Use: Safety and effectiveness in children and adolescents who smoke have not been evaluated.

ADVERSE REACTIONS

Adverse reactions reported in association with the use of Nicorette include both local effects and systemic effects representing the pharmacologic action of nicotine. Rare reports of an apparent severe allergic reaction have been received.

Local side effects: Mechanical effects of gum chewing include traumatic injury to oral mucosa or teeth, jaw ache, and eructation secondary to air swallowing. These side effects may be minimized by modifying chewing technique. Oral mucosal changes such as stomatitis, glossitis, gingivitis, pharyngitis, and aphthous ulcers, in addition to changes in taste perception, can occur during smoking cessation efforts with or without the use of Nicorette.

Systemic side effects: Although the systemic effects seen in trials were generally similar, the reported frequency of adverse drug effects was highly variable, as illustrated by the variation observed in adverse event incidences estimated from the results of two well controlled studies (one performed in the United States, and the other in England) designed to evaluate the safety and efficacy of Nicorette. (See table, below.) Given this variability, the table can be used only as an indication of the relative frequency of adverse events reported in representative clinical trials. It can not predict expected incidences of these effects during the course of usual medical practice.

The only potentially serious systemic adverse effect observed among the 152 patients evaluated in the controlled clinical trials used to support the efficacy of Nicorette was cardiac irritability: a patient displayed what may have been nicotine-induced, but reversible, atrial fibrillation. Cardiac irritability is a well known consequence of cigarette smoking.

A 46-year old male patient participating in a clinical trial of Nicorette was reported to have developed nicotine intoxication requiring his hospitalization. After 4 days, he was discharged, fully recovered. He died suddenly one month later. Nicorette was not used during this one-month interval. The relationship of the patient's death to his prior treatment is undetermined. Since the marketing of Nicorette in the U.S., reports of several other deaths and reports including myocardial infarction, congestive heart failure, cerebrovascular accident and cardiac arrest have been received. A cause and effect relationship between these reports and the use of Nicorette has not been established.

In addition to the reported effects listed above, the following events have been reported: CARDIOVASCULAR–edema, flushing, hypertension, palpitations, tachyarrhythmias, tachycardia; CNS–confusion, convulsions, depression, euphoria, numbness, paresthesia, syncope, tinnitus, weakness; DERMATOLOGIC–erythema, itching, rash, urticaria; GASTROINTESTINAL–alteration of liver function tests, constipation, diarrhea; RESPIRATORY–breathing difficulty, cough, hoarseness, sneezing, wheezing; OTHER–dry mouth, systemic nicotine intoxication.

Rare reports of miscarriages have been received, and a relationship to drug therapy as a contributing factor cannot be excluded.

DRUG ABUSE AND DEPENDENCE

Dependence on the use of Nicorette gum has been reported. Such dependence may result from transference to Nicorette of tobacco-based nicotine dependence. The use of Nicorette beyond three months has not been demonstrated to increase the smoking cessation rate. Use beyond 3 months should be discouraged. To minimize the risk of dependence, after 3 months' usage, patients should be encouraged to gradually withdraw the next 3 months or stop gum usage altogether. (See DOSAGE AND ADMINISTRATION.) In patients who have used the gum for longer periods, gradual withdrawal should be instituted. (See PRECAUTIONS).

OVERDOSAGE

Overdosage could occur if many pieces were chewed simultaneously or in rapid succession. Risk of poisoning by swallowing the gum is small because absorption in the absence of chewing is slow and incomplete. The consequences of overdose will most likely be minimized by the early nausea and vomiting known to occur with excessive nicotine intake. However, toxic systemic effect may occur. Should an overdose occur, the symptoms would be those of acute nicotine poisoning. Symptoms and signs include nausea, salivation, abdominal pain, vomiting, diarrhea, cold sweat, headache, dizziness, disturbed hearing and vision, mental confusion and marked weakness. Faintness and prostration will likely ensue and hypotension may occur; breathing is difficult; the pulse may be rapid, weak and irregular; circulatory collapse may be followed by terminal convulsions. Death may result within a few minutes from respiratory failure caused by paralysis of the muscles of respiration.

The oral LD_{50} for nicotine in rodents varies with species but is in excess of 24 mg/kg. Death in rodents was due to respiratory paralysis. The oral minimum lethal dose of nicotine in dogs is greater than 5 mg/kg. The oral minimum lethal dose for nicotine in human adults is 40-60 mg.

TREATMENT OF OVERDOSAGE

In view of the lack of actual experience in the treatment of Nicorette overdose, the procedures recommended are those that have been suggested for the treatment of acute nicotine poisoning.

If emesis has not occurred, it should be induced with ipecac syrup in conscious patients. A saline cathartic will speed gastrointestinal passage of the gum. In unconscious patients with a secure airway, gastric lavage with a wide-bore tube followed by suspension of activated charcoal will aid in nicotine removal. Mechanical ventilation for respiratory paralysis may be necessary in severe nicotine poisoning. Hypotension and/or cardiovascular collapse may occur and should be treated vigorously.

HOW SUPPLIED

Nicorette is available in 2 mg (beige) square chewing pieces, packaged in child-resistant blister strips of 12 chewing pieces per strip with 8 strips per box. Each chewing piece contains nicotine polacrilex equivalent to 2 mg nicotine. Boxes of 96 chewing pieces, 2 mg (NDC 0068-0045-55). Store at room temperature, below 86°F (30°C). Protect from light.

Polly Bergen

Randee St. Nicholas

Polly Bergen won an Emmy for The Helen Morgan Story on TV 32 years ago. She's still beautiful, still a star—and these days, every time you look around, she's in a new film on the tube.

POLLY BERGEN WAS SLIGHTLY BUSY: "I've done four films in seven months. We've just moved into a tiny new house, and 6000 cartons just arrived. Tomorrow, I'm off to Baltimore to do a new film for John Waters. My housekeeper of 16 years retired. And I just discovered my cat is eating peanut butter." There was a brief pause on the phone and then, plaintively I thought, Polly said, "Why is it that whenever you drop a slice of bread on the floor, it always lands with the messy side down?"

I've known Polly for a long time, and I can tell you—this is how she is, this is what she sounds like.

She is also a perfectly marvelous actress, an enormously successful businesswoman and a delightfully regular guy. So it is nice to see that, at a certain age, Polly is enjoying a tremendous revival as a working actress in a cruel trade where the worst thing you can be is over 40. What has fueled that revival is her brilliant work as Rhoda Henry in the two big ABC miniseries The Winds of War and War and Remembrance—a role for which she almost literally had to fight.

"The last person in the world they wanted to play Rhoda was me," Polly revealed. "I had even paid my own way back to L.A. to test for it. Obviously they cast me because they couldn't get anyone else. But I knew I was perfect for the part."

That's how she is: knowing what she wants and going out and getting it. In The Haunting of Sarah Hardy, with Morgan Fairchild, which recently ran on the USA Network, Polly played an elderly housekeeper. "Did you see that makeup?" she asked. "They sent me the script, and I was immediately caught up in playing this little old lady with support stockings and sensible shoes and wire-rim glasses. So they decided to glamorize the part. My agent said, 'They don't precisely want to pay your dollars, but they'll give you the Giorgio Armani designer wardrobe.' I said, 'Wait a minute. I want my money. Let them keep the wardrobe.' So I played it the way it was originally written, and I got my money besides."

Polly used to have a cosmetics company of her own, which she sold about 15 years ago, but she still controls companies that sell shoes and handbags. Her husband, Jeff Endervelt, is an attorney and businessman who has two companies of his own and who works with her companies as well. For a time, they tried to keep two households going—in New York and Beverly Hills—but, as Polly said, "My work is here in California," so now they're in that "tiny new house" with all the cartons on the floor.

As for those occasional trips back to New York, Polly said, "I'll be a professional house guest. I'll call my pals and say, 'Get that guest room ready.'" Who can refuse Polly?

BORN: Nellie Pauline Burgin on July 14, 1930, in Knoxville, Tenn.
PERSONAL: Married to Jerome Courtland, 1949-55. Married to Frederic Fields, 1956-75; two children, one stepchild. Married Jeffrey Endervelt in 1982.
FILMS: Include At War With the Army, 1950; Warpath, 1951; That's My Boy, 1951; The Stooge, 1952; Cape Fear, 1962; The Caretakers, 1963; Kisses for My President, 1964; A Guide for the Married Man, 1967; Making Mr. Right, 1987.
TV: Includes The Helen Morgan Story, 1957; The Polly Bergen Show, 1957-58; 79 Park Avenue, 1977; The Winds of War, 1983; War and Remembrance, 1988-89.

BRADY'S BITS

I'd interviewed Robert Mitchum, who has the reputation of being difficult, even ornery, and I asked Polly how she and the great man got along in The Winds of War and War and Remembrance. "Don't forget," she said, "Mitchum and I first worked together in 1962 in a wonderful movie called Cape Fear. We became very close. My mom and dad came to visit us in Savannah. He [Mitchum] fell in love with them. My father and he spent many an hour together tippling the bottle. Mitchum is incredibly bright, self-educated. He writes wonderful music, and he's warm and loving. But he doesn't trust easily. He can be so outrageous, you want to kick him in the butt sometimes—but only if you're a friend who loves him. He's a rock, just a rock."

©1989, CBS Records Inc.

Just look at what's happened to the prices on videocassettes! Contemporary hits like Dirty Dancing, have been reduced from $79.95 to $24.95! Classic favorites like The Ten Commandments have come down from $79.95 to $29.95! And while recent hits like The Accused, Big and A Fish Called Wanda are currently selling for as much as $89.95, chances are that their prices will be reduced eventually. So it's become easier than ever to build a library of your favorite movies—at truly affordable prices!

And the most economical way to start your movie collection, or add to it, is by joining the CBS Video Club. As a new member, you may have any 7 of the movies offered here—all 7 for 89¢ each (plus shipping and handling). And you can even save up to $65 on an eighth movie (see Advance Selection box in coupon).

There's no membership fee for joining, nor do you have to buy a lot of movies. Just six more within the next three years. And you'll have no problem in finding six movies you want, because our library holds over 2,700 titles; from the very newest releases to classical favorites. Our regular Club prices currently range from $79.95 to $29.95, plus shipping and handling; and we also offer a selection of lower-priced videocassettes, down to $14.95. Your only obligation is to buy six movies within the next three years, for as little as $29.95 each—and you may cancel membership anytime after doing so.

How the Club operates: about every four weeks (up to 13 times a year) we send you our CBS Video Club Magazine, reviewing our Director's Selection, plus many alternate movies. And up to four times a year, you may also receive offers of Special Selections, usually at a discount off regular Club prices, for a total of up to 17 buying opportunities.

Choose only the movies you want: if you want the Director's Selection, don't do a thing—it'll arrive automatically. If you'd prefer an alternate movie, or none at all, just mail the card always provided by the date specified.

You'll always have two full weeks to decide. (If you ever receive a tape before having had two weeks to decide, just send it back at our expense.)

Half-Price Bonus Plan: after fulfilling your membership obligation, you'll automatically become eligible for our Half-Price Bonus Plan. With each movie you buy at regular Club prices, the plan currently allows you to take another movie of equal value or less at 50% off.

10-Day Risk-Free Trial: join today and we'll send your introductory movies, along with more details on how the Club works. If not satisfied, return everything within 10 days for a full, prompt refund and no further obligation. Act now!

Cover Story....

'Casualties Of War'

By Robert DiMatteo

A decade ago the unwritten rule remained intact: TV stars couldn't be movie stars too. Lucille Ball, Barbara Stanwyck, Fred MacMurray and a host of others might have moved successfully from film to television, but stars weren't supposed to be able to move the other way.

Over the years, the explanation of why TV stars rarely succeed in the movies has focused on how the small screen domesticates a performer, stripping away the elements of mystery and glamour that the big screen favors. In the last decade, however, the movies' closed-door policy to TV stars has been replaced by a veritable revolving door. Last summer, "Moonlighting" 's Bruce Willis flexed his muscles, Stallone-style, in the movie smash "Die Hard." In 1987, Tom Selleck put "Magnum, P.I." behind him with the hit movie "Three Men and a Baby" — a comedy directed by TV's own Mr. Spock, Leonard Nimoy. When he isn't busy with other projects, Nimoy dons his pointy ears for a biennial big-screen reunion with the "Star Trek" clan. The current get-together, the draggy, mystical "Star Trek: The Final Frontier," is in theaters right now.

Why this change from closed-door to revolving door? For one thing, movies need the talent. Since the demise of the studio system, which once cultivated and nurtured movie actors, TV has become the training ground for performers. And the absurdly inflated cost of moviemaking today makes producers unwilling to take chances on unproven talent.

Fred Savage, diminutive star of "The Wonder Years," will turn up in the big-screen comic fantasy "Little Monsters," co-starring with his real-life brother Ben as siblings who discover they have a monster under their bed. To play the monster, the casting department looked no further than another TV show — choosing quirky "St. Elsewhere" alumnus and cable TV comic Howie Mandel.

Sometimes, in moving from TV to movies, actors have stayed close to their small-screen image. Such an approach appears to be working for Selleck and Danson, and, intermittently, for Alan Alda. Some actors have tried to mock their TV images: In "Major League," Corbin Bernsen does a good-natured caricature of tanned narcissist Arnie Becker, the role he plays on NBC's "L.A. Law." Still others, like Willis and Michael J. Fox, deliberately choose movie roles that counter and challenge their video images.

Fox's fans happily followed him to "Back to the Future," a smash comedy hit in 1985, but they were less enamored of Fox's fast-lane Manhattan magazine fact checker in "Bright Lights, Big City." That was a stretch that exceeded the actor's grasp. Fox's biggest test of his audience's loyalty to date comes in Brian De Palma's new Vietnam film "Casualties of War," featuring a moral tug ofwar between Fox's private first class and a tough, macho sergeant played by Sean Penn. Fox is almost as convincing playing a man of principle as he was playing the opportunistic Alex on "Family Ties." Yet the movie looks to be a hard sell. The question is less whether the actor's fans will support him in a change-of-pace role than whether they want to see one more Vietnam movie.

But even if the movie doesn't succeed, it shouldn't hurt Fox's career. In the old days, a TV actor would only have been given one chance to fail in movies. Now, they get to fail over and over again.

Michele Will Tell

By Michele Marks

Dear Michele: Back in the '20s, at age 12, I fell madly in love with movie actress Billie Dove. Being poor, I missed seeing many of her movies. Anything you can tell me — about her career or family — would be appreciated. — R. KULA, ROSWELL, N.M.

Actress Billie Dove was born Lillian Bohney, on May 14, 1900 (some references list 1903), in New York City, and is, at this writing, still living. The former Ziegfield show girl was one of the silent screen's loveliest leading ladies. She made her film debut in "Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford" (1921). Her numerous screen credits include: "Polly of the Follies" (1922), "Youth to Youth" (1922), "Lone Star Ranger" (1923), "Yankee Madness" (1924) and "The Black Pirate" (1926, opposite Douglas Fairbanks). Following "Blondie of the Follies" (1932), she retired from the screen to marry a wealthy landowner. The actress was previously married, from 1923-29, to silent film director Irving Willat. Dove returned briefly to the big screen in a bit part in the 1962 Charlton Heston movie "Diamond Head."

Dear Michele: I just adore Gunilla Hutton, who has been a regular on "Hee Haw" for some time. Where is she from, and how old is she? — B. FOX, ALBANY, GEORGIA

Hutton was born May 15, 1944, in Goteborg, Sweden. For one season, 1965-66, she appeared as Billie Jo Bradley on the CBS sitcom "Petticoat Junction." In 1969, she became a regular on "Hee Haw."

Dear Michele: I know James Dean was born in 1931, but I have never heard or read the full date. Please supply this information. — NELL SHERWOOD, MILTON, PENN.

James Byron Dean was born Feb. 8, 1931 in Marion, Ind. His father, a dental technician, moved the family to Los Angeles when James was 5. Following his mother's death, he moved back to the Midwest at age 8 and was reared on a relative's Iowa farm until his high school graduation. After that, he retuned to California.

Dear Michele: You recently informed us of Barbara Stanwyck's real name. Could you also let us know the original name of Lucille Ball? — R.E. BROWN, BAKERSFIELD, CALIF.

According to numerous sources, the late comedian was born Lucille Ball, Aug. 6, 1911, in Jamestown, N.Y. Her parents, Henry D. Ball and the former Desiree Hunt, divorced when Lucy was just 4. After her mother remarried, Lucy was brought up by her paternal grandparents.

Dear Michele: What is the name of the haunting song from "The Thorn Birds," which starred Richard Chamberlain? — F.R. OLAN, WASHINGTON, D.C.

Music for this 1983 ABC miniseries was provided by Henry Mancini. The song, "Anywhere the Heart Goes," written by Will Jennings and Henry Mancini, was performed by Karen Brooks.

Dear Michele: I'm a big fan of the former Beatles and Ringo Starr. What movies did Ringo appear in after his Beatle days were over? — LORI ANDERSON, BLUE SPRINGS, MO.

The Beatles broke up in 1970. Since then, Ringo has appeared in such films as "200 Miles" (1971), "Blindman" (1972), "Son of Dracula" (1974, which he also produced), "That'll Be the Day" (1974), "Lisztomania" (1975), "Sextette" (1978), "The Last Waltz" (1978, a rock documentary), "Caveman" (1981) and "The Cooler" (1982). Starr directed "Born to Boogie" (1972) and appearedwith his wife, actress Barbara Bach, in the 1983 miniseries "Princess Daisy."

Dear Michele: Where can I write to protest the cancellation of my favorite television program, "Beauty and the Beast"? — MIRIAM V. MOSES, GOULDS, FLA.

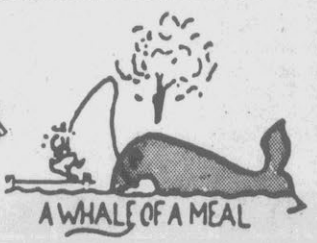

Good news! CBS has ordered 13 more episodes, and the series will be coming back midseason. But fans wishing to protest its absence from the fall schedule, and there are many of you, write to CBS-TV, 51 W. 52 St., New York, NY 10019.

Please address questions to Michele Will Tell, c/o this newspaper, P.O. Box 2315, Grand Central Station, New York, NY 10163. Because of the volume of mail received, personal replies cannot be sent.

DICKIE ROOK Presents THE Rook Look AT GARMENT CARE

Perspiration Stains

With summer's hot and sticky weather, perspiring is our body's system to regulate its internal temperature. But if it's healthy for our bodies, it isn't necessarily so for our garments.

Fresh perspiration is an acid that turns alkaline through bacterial reaction, causing a deteriorating effect on some dyes and fabrics. Misuse of deodorants and antiperspirants can also contribute to color.

We suggest that you have your garments cleaned more often in the summer.

"GREAT AMERICAN BASH '89"
THE GLORY DAYS
LIVE! FROM BALTIMORE CIVIC CENTER
FINALS OF THE TRIPLE CROWN DOUBLE RING, KING OF THE HILL SERIES

The countdown has begun! The super spectacular summer tradition continues when professional wrestling's top contenders collide in "Bash '89." Wrestling fans already know that in the heat of the night tempers will flare, titles will be stripped, egos will be bruised and more than one score will be settled. You can count on "The Glory Days" to continue the NWA tradition of excellence.

Sunday, July 23
LIVE: 4:30-7:30 PM ET
(Pre-Event Show 4 PM ET)
REPLAY: 8-11 PM ET
(Pre-Event Show 7:30 PM ET)

Featuring Top Stars of the NWA

Ricky "The Dragon" Steamboat, "Nature Boy" Ric Flair, "Total Package" Lex Luger, Sting, The Road Warriors with Paul Ellering, The Samoan Swat Team with Paul E. Dangerously and many more of the meanest, mightiest wrestling stars!
Distributed exclusively by Cable Video Store, Request Television and Viewer's Choice.

This event will be available for purchase up until 6:30pm ET for the live show and until 10pm ET for the replay. Remember . . . you can purchase earlier and enjoy the entire show.

Soap Scoop

Two memorable soap stars have passed away

By Connie Passalacqua

Christopher Bernau

Two former soap opera stars, both leading men of special note, died recently: Christopher Bernau, who played Alan Spaulding on "Guiding Light" (1977-84; 1984-88), and David O'Brien, who played Steve Aldrich on "The Doctors" (1967-82). Each actor, in his own way, had a strong hold on the female soap audience.

Due to a long illness, Bernau has been missing from "GL" since last summer, when Daniel Pilon took over the role of Alan. In Bernau's original years on the show, megamogul Alan Spaulding was a commanding, magnetic presence. Bernau's authoritative delivery and crisp diction helped make him the most believable of a long line of soap opera megamillionaires. The character was also a good case study of unapologetic evil. Women fell for the Spaulding charm in droves, including everyone from his sweet, ingenue bride Hope Bauer (played by Elvera Roussel) to the more sophisticated Rita Stapleton Bauer (played by Lenore Kasdorf). Alan and Rita's adulterous love scenes, done on location in the Caribbean in 1981, were perhaps the most passionate scenes on soaps in the last 10 years. Bernau took a hiatus from 1984-86. After his return, the character was ill-used romantically, although Alan did have some wonderful scenes with his equally formidable sister Alexandra (played by Beverlee McKinsey) and son Phillip (played by Grant Aleksander). Before coming to "GL," Bernau was a New York stage actor. His greatest stage success was in the off-Broadway and cable-TV versions of "The Passion of Dracula." Bernau also had a stint as Phillip Todd on that fabled Gothic soap "Dark Shadows" in the late '60s.

David O'Brien put in many years of soap service on "The Doctors," arriving just before the burst of that show's popularity in 1968 and staying with it until its dreary end in 1982. Originally, Dr. Steve Aldrich was a ladies' man, but the love of a good woman, Nurse Carolee Simpson (played by Carolee Campbell and later by Jada Rowland), brought him into line. Their storybook romance started in the late '60s, when Plain Jane Carolee did something new and unusual by befriending Steve, and it was much later that he grew to love her. In 1987, O'Brien played the role of Dr. Alan Glaser on "Another World"; he turned out to be Bay City's campy serial murderer. O'Brien was doing a play in Boston when he died.

Unspeakable Acts

Jill Clayburgh and Brad Davis will star in the ABC movie "Unspeakable Acts," a real-life drama based on the book by Jan Hollingsworth and on court transcripts and interviews with those involved. The story concerns the notorious Miami court case in which child abuse charges were successfully brought against a day-care operator, setting a precedent for similar cases to come.

Sports Roundup

SUNDAY, JULY 16

Auto Racing (NBC)

Meadowlands Grand Prix, from East Rutherford, N.J. With a victory at Long Beach and close seconds at Phoenix and Indy, Al Unser Jr. leads the CART circuit point standings. Unser also had won five street events in a row coming into the Detroit Grand Prix last month, but he dismisses that streak. "I don't think about how many races in a row we've won on a certain type of course."

But street courses do present a unique set of problems. "The reason I love Indy cars is because it is a very precise form of racing. And a street course, where you have walls on both sides of you,is the ultimate test of precision."

Cycling (ABC)

Tour de France. The Tour is usually won or lost in the mountain legs.

LPGA Golf (ABC)

U.S. Women's Open, final-round action, live from Lake Orion, Mich.

PGA Golf (NBC)

THURSDAY, JULY 20

Golf (ESPN)

The British Open, first-round action, live from Troon, Scotland. Troon, perhaps the least-known of the great links courses on the Open rota, is a stiff test if the wind is blowing.

Baseball (ABC)

Teams to be announced.

FRIDAY, JULY 21

Golf (ESPN)

The British Open, second-round action, live from Troon, Scotland. The most famous hole on the course is the 126-yard eighth, dauntingly named "The Postage Stamp." One of the world's great short holes, it was aced by Gene Sarazen during the 1973 Open. He was 71 at the time.

TV Chatter

By Frank Sanello

Wow! Talk about stre' g. The last time we saw British actress Stephani B cham, she was playing the viperish Sable Colby, wh ot pregnant out of wedlock by Dex Dexter (Michael Nader) on the final episode of "Dynasty." Beacham's new job is in the title role of "Sister Kate," an NBC sitcom due this fall about a nun who runs a school for troubled and orphaned youngsters.

Sable tried to knock off Constance Colby (Barbara Stanwyck) by loosening the stirrups on her saddle; Kate has taken a vow of poverty, chastity and obedience. "I must say I'm so lucky to be able to cast off one character and polarize it with another," Beacham says.

Beacham, not surprisingly, claims she's a lot closer in character to Sister Kate than to the dangerous Sable. "I brought Sable as close to me as I dared, but I didn't want her too close, because she was poison," says Beacham. "I think Kate has her faults, but inside she's a good woman."

Ah, fate. If things had gone differently, Sigourney Weaver might have played a reporter on "Lou Grant" instead of playing sidekick to a bunch of ghostbusters.

Before "Lou Grant" went on the air, Weaver read for the role of Billie Newman, the sensitive reporter ultimately played by Linda Kelsey. Weaver auditioned for the series' creators, Allan Burns and James L. Brooks. Brooks went on to direct "Terms of Endearment" and "Broadcast News." She recalls Brooks saying to her, "Still riding on the old man's coattails, huh?" He was referring to her father, Sylvester "Pat" Weaver, the former president of NBC.

Brooks was joking, since Weaver was an established stage actress by then, but he still hit a raw nerve. "I was mortified because I thought, 'Does he really think I ever used my dad's coattails?'" Weaver recalls. "All my dad's friends were so cynical about the business, they wouldn't have helped me anyway. They always told me to get a job at Bloomingdale's instead."

Has Your Yellow Pages Advertising Tied You Down?

We can offer you a more "flexible" solution.

Placing your message in the yellow pages can cost you your advertising freedom. Because with the yellow pages, you can't be flexible. You're stuck for a year. So what do you do when you need to respond to the market? Or promote a special sale? Or build your image? You advertise in the newspaper! And besides, why in the world would you want to advertise right beside all of your competitors?

Unfortunately, the yellow pages is nothing more than a directory of names, phone numbers and addresses that the average person uses infrequently at best. Our readers, on the other hand, open their Daily Reflector each night of the week plus Sunday.

Your yellow pages salespersons can't even tell you how many people are likely to see your ad every week in his directory. But we can tell you that 75% of Pitt County will see your ad in The Daily Reflector 6 days a week. And that kind of coverage can lead to some kind of sales. Especially when you use The Daily Reflector to tell people about competitive pricing, announce a new location or service, or illustrate your clear advantage over the competition...all the things you're not allowed to do in the yellow pages.

So call us for a no-obligation assessment of your opportunities in The Daily Reflector. You'll find the number in our free white pages listing.

(But remember....what just sold you to us was the newspaper.)

The Daily Reflector

"Keeping You In The Know About Your Advertising Options."

Why You Need The All-New Protection Plus Hospital Plan

Hospital care today is very expensive. It's a fact of life. If you've been in the hospital lately, you already know this.

But, if you've been lucky and haven't had to be hospitalized, the cost of hospitalization could take you by surprise. That's why you should consider these startling facts.

- An average hospital stay now costs over $3,200.00.
- Over 99,000 people are admitted to the hospital each day—365 days a year.
- One family in every two will be faced with hospital bills this year.

These statistics from the American Hospital Association show just how common and how expensive hospital stays are.

Of course, you may have a good major medical or group plan already working for you.

But—many plans pay only 80% or less of your hospital bills—after you have paid deductibles of $100 or more. That means the rest is totally up to you.

Think about it. If you were hospitalized tomorrow, would you be able to pay your share of the bill?

Or would you have to dip into your hard-earned savings? Or worse yet, borrow the money?

That's why so many people have turned to the Protection Plus Hospital Plan. It pays cash benefits directly to you—or anyone you choose.

You can use the additional cash you receive from Protection Plus to pay the hospital, the doctor, leftover bills, or even household expenses. The money is yours to spend as you wish!

When you enroll in the Protection Plus Plan you are joining over a million Americans who are enjoying security and peace of mind with Physicians Mutual protection plans.

And that's why we say:

We're here when you need us®

I'd like to share with you this letter I recently received.
Arnold W. Lempka, M.D.
Chairman,
Board of Directors

Dear Dr. Lempka,

For many years my wife and I have been proud and satisfied owners in Physicians Mutual.

Any and all benefits have been paid promptly and correctly.

When those benefit checks arrive with those assuring words, "We are happy to be of service" ... how sweet it is!

I suspect there are some things more painful than being without insurance coverage from a company as good as yours, but at the moment, I can't think what it could be!

Cordially yours,

Edward J. Bryant

Edward J. Bryant

Here's How The All-New Protection Plus Hospital Plan Helps You Beat The Rising Cost Of Hospital Care

These Cash Benefits Are Paid Directly To You

$2,250.00 A Month—$75.00 A Day

For Any Covered Sickness Or Accident

You'll collect these cash benefits whenever you are hospitalized for any reason—even a simple checkup.

$3,375.00 A Month—$112.50 A Day

For A Heart Attack

If you have a heart attack, you'll need more money to cover the extra costs of emergency care, cardiologists, medication, and more. That's why your benefits increase 50% for every day you're hospitalized for a heart attack (acute myocardial infarction).

$3,375.00 A Month—$112.50 A Day

For Cancer

When you consider the American Cancer Society reports that one out of every three Americans alive today will get cancer, you can appreciate what an important added benefit this is. You get an extra 50% when hospitalized to help with the high cost of fighting and treating cancer.

$9,000.00 A Month—$300.00 A Day

Double Benefits For You And Your Spouse

When you and your insured spouse are hospitalized at the same time, you'll suffer even more financial strain. So you'll be glad knowing you both collect DOUBLE benefits when you are hospitalized at the same time —for the same or different accidents.

A Special Note To People 65 And Over

Pays Benefits In Addition To Medicare

To keep your premiums low when you're 65 and over, we pay half benefits for your first 60 days in the hospital. After that, we pay you full cash benefits of $75.00 a day for as long as you're hospitalized—even for life!

With Protection Plus, you don't have to pay for protection you don't really need. And you don't have to join an association or pay membership dues to get it. Your acceptance is guaranteed regardless of age.

You'll receive copies of the North Carolina Buyer's Guides with your policy. If you wish to have the Guides before you enroll, you may request them from the company.

You'll Also Get All These Special Features

- Protection From The Very First Day

  Your cash benefits are paid from the VERY FIRST DAY of any covered hospital stay. No deductible.

- Benefits For A Lifetime

  Your cash benefits are paid for EVERY DAY of covered hospitalization. No matter how many days you're hospitalized, or how many times. Even for life!

- You'll Collect Cash Benefits On Top Of Any Insurance

  That includes group insurance, major medical coverage, workers' compensation, prepaid health plans—even Medicare. And your benefits are not subject to state or Federal income tax.

- Money To Spend As You Choose

  Your checks will come directly to you, unless you tell us otherwise. These cash benefits are yours to use in any way you wish.

- Full Benefits For The Whole Family

  Your insured spouse and children will receive the very same protection you have. One rate provides full coverage for all—regardless of your family size.

- Pays Maternity Benefits, Too

  You'll collect full benefits for normal childbirth when pregnancy occurs anytime after your policy is issued. And at no extra cost.

- Freedom Of Choice

  Your Protection Plus coverage is good at any hospital, anywhere in the world—even federal and VA hospitals. The only exceptions are nursing homes, convalescent, extended care or self-care units of hospitals.

- Quick, Convenient Cash Payments

  Your claims will be settled promptly—and your benefit checks will be sent to you by first class mail.

- Please Note These Limitations

  Old health problems (those that became evident or were treated before the effective date of your policy) are not covered for the first year of your policy. But once that year is up, even a health problem you've had for years is covered!

  If you are 65 or over you will be covered for cancer, heart attack, stroke, hernia, disease or disorder of the prostate, tuberculosis, cataracts, emphysema, cirrhosis or diabetes if your hospital confinement commences more than six months after the effective date of your policy.

  For confinement due to mental illness, half benefits are paid for up to 30 days.

- No Salesman Will Call

  We believe the Protection Plus Hospital Plan is good enough to sell itself. That's why you won't have to deal with a salesman to enroll. Everything is handled directly between you and Physicians Mutual.

- Enroll Today For Just $1.00! Your Acceptance Is Guaranteed

  Simply fill out the brief enrollment form and mail it back to Physicians Mutual along with $1.00 for your first month's coverage. Your renewal rate is based on the plan and option you choose. There is no medical exam required, or health questions to answer. Your acceptance is guaranteed!

The All-New Protection Plus Hospital Plan Gives You The Best Value At The Lowest Rates Possible

While the prices of many things you buy are still rising, we've actually kept this protection at low affordable rates.

So it's important to take advantage of this opportunity now. You'll get much-needed cash protection—for an economical premium. Your premium will stay low, too—because you'll never be singled out for a rate increase.

What's more, you can save over 8% by paying once a year, instead of each month. That's like getting one month of protection free!

Three More Reasons To Enroll Today

1. We Will Never Turn You Down

We guarantee to issue your Protection Plus Hospital Plan regardless of your age, health, or any other reason. Of course we can issue only one policy to you on a guaranteed issue basis. If you are already a Physicians Mutual policyowner and would like information about additional coverage available, please call or write for details.

2. We Will Never Cancel Your Coverage

No matter how many claims you file—or how much money you collect—we guarantee to renew your protection for as long as you wish. Only you can cancel your coverage.

3. We Will Never Increase Your Rate Individually

You will never be singled out for a rate increase. The only way your rate will ever change is if we make the identical change on all policies like this in your state.

First Choose the Plan That Fits Your Needs

With these plans, you can insure family members at one low rate—and all collect full cash benefits!

Individual Plan
Ideal for the single person . . . or for the individual family member who needs protection and wants separate insurance.

Husband-Wife Plan
Designed for the married couple without children or whose children are grown. Pays full benefits for both of you—no reductions for the spouse.

All-Family Plan
Offers protection for the entire family—father, mother and all eligible dependent children—with full benefits for all. Future additions to the family are covered automatically at no extra cost.

One-Parent Family Plan
Created for the special needs of the single parent. Covers you and all eligible dependent children with full benefits for all.

Now—Choose the Cash Benefit Option You Need

Remember—your first month's premium is only $1.00! Then continue at the low monthly rate shown below.

OPTION A

Pays $2,250.00 a month ($75.00 a day) from the very first day of hospitalization for a covered sickness or accident.

	39 & under	40 & over
	(use age of principal insured)
Individual	$18.45	$21.20
Husband-Wife	34.35	39.30
All-Family	44.15	49.10
One-Parent Family	28.25	31.00

OPTION B

Pays $1,500.00 a month ($50.00 a day) from the very first day of hospitalization for a covered sickness or accident.

	39 & under	40 & over
	(use age of principal insured)
Individual	$12.95	$14.95
Husband-Wife	24.35	28.05
All-Family	31.15	34.85
One-Parent Family	19.75	21.75

*NOTE: Your renewal rate does not increase as you move from one age group to another.

Physicians Mutual Rated A+ (Superior)

Physicians Mutual has been awarded the highest rating—A+ (Superior)—from A.M. Best Company, independent insurance analysts, recognizing our financial stability and sound operating performance.

As the company began in 1902, we specialized in health insurance for the medical professions only. Later, we saw the public's growing need for extra protection against rising hospital costs and began offering insurance to all Americans.

Headquartered in Omaha, licensed in all 50 states and the District of Columbia, we are proud of our service record. We currently pay claims totalling over $14,500,000.00 a month on all policies!

No matter how large or how small your claim, you can depend on us ...

"What is a wonderful feeling?

"Having an insurance policy that pays off, and doing it without a lot of hedging around, arguing, or delays. They just send you a check paid in full for every claim.

"Physicians Mutual is that lovely company. These people don't argue with you, they pay you and I love it!

"I know why I like Physicians Mutual, don't you?"

Vincent "Buster" Eilers, Wyoming, Iowa

... to back your policy with fast claims service.

"I shall forever be grateful to you for handling my claim so promptly and efficiently. It was a God-send to me and I want you to know the tremendous relief you gave me right when I needed your help so much. You really live what you preach and I shall recommend you always."
