B-2 Bomber Makes First Flight

Test May Determine If Congress Will Fund Stealth Plane

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PALMDALE, Calif. — The $500 million stealth bomber roared into the air for the first time today, soaring above the Southern California desert on a flight that could decide whether the bat-winged aircraft lives or dies.

The B-2, designed to evade enemy radar, was arrayed with reflective material to allow test personnel to keep track of the plane and its two pilots during the 2½-hour flight.

The sinister-looking, black jet raced down an 11,000-foot runway at the secretive Air Force Plant 42 and lifted off at 6:37 a.m., with two F-16 fighter jets giving chase through the still and cloudless desert sky.

The plane's landing gear remained down, as is standard practice on test flights in case of malfunctions. The B-2 was to fly to nearby Edwards Air Force Base after performing test maneuvers over the Mojave Desert.

The plane taxied out of Plant 42, the Air Force's primary research and development facility, located in the desert 40 miles north of downtown Los Angeles.

The stealth bomber's only previous flights have been on a computer flight simulation; Air Force and Northrop officials say no other aircraft has been tested more thoroughly without having been flown.

The flight was seen as vital for the future of the bomber, which is already 18 months behind schedule. At a budgeted price of $500 million each — the Air Force wants 132 of the planes — it is the most expensive plane in history.

A key congressional committee has voted to withhold further funding until the plane proves itself in the air.

"If that plane doesn't fly, the debate is over," Senate Armed Services Committee Chairman Sam Nunn said Friday. "It is far too expensive to be a stealth taxi."

As the plane took off this morning, the "Star Spangled Banner" was sung on the runway by Alis Clausen, a member of the staff of a local cable TV station. Air Force Capt. Tess Taft unfurled the Stars and Stripes, which was held by a tearful Linda Tokish.

"It feels great. It feels just fantastic. A lot of work has gone into this. Millions of man hours, with people working seven days a week, 24 hours a day. We feel just great," said Air Force Col. Douglas Kennett.

"It feels great, I was speechless. I was overcome with emotion. I was so thrilled when I saw the wheels go up. I'm just so excited to know that it's up there now and I pray that it lands safely," Taft said.

"This represents the technology of tomorrow," said Maj. Pat Mullaney. "It gives us the opportunity to stress deterrence. ... It represents a new generation of technology and it's the way you're going to see airplanes look tomorrow."

The bomber's maiden flight had been scheduled Saturday, but a low fuel pressure gauge reading aborted the flight.

After the flight was canceled, workers checked the aircraft and discovered a problem in a device called the heat exchanger in the bomber's fuel system. The problem was fixed, but no other details were available, said Air Force Lt. Col. Jerry Ferguson.

So-called stealth technology combines advanced materials and a special shape to create a plane undetectable by enemy radar. Though the bomber is still being developed, stealth fighters have operated several years.

Cocaine Washes Ashore

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHARLESTON, S.C. — More than 150 pounds of cocaine with an estimated street value of $7.5 million has washed up on South Carolina's beaches and plucked from offshore waters during the past two weeks, an official said today.

James McGivney, agent in charge of the Drug Enforcement Administration in Columbia, said the bales of contraband may have been from an unsuccessful air drop by smugglers.

"Right now we're in the position of trying to determine whether it was a vessel that kicked them (the bales) off or an air drop that went bad. We don't have any indication either a vessel or an aircraft sank," he said.

Smugglers sometimes bring drugs north on small planes and then drop them to be picked up by others.

"They look like they were part of an air drop ... that went bad," McGivney said.

The cocaine was wrapped in Styrofoam, which floats, and baled in burlap bags.

"Several bales were picked up from as far south as Edisto Beach and from as far north as the Little River area," a distance of about 120 miles, McGivney said.

Some of the bales were found on beaches while others were picked up offshore by charter fishermen. The Coast Guard found one bale floating in the water off Little River, which is located near the North Carolina border, McGivney said. He did not know exactly how many bales were found.

The wholesale value of the cocaine was at least $1.5 million. At $100 a gram, the drugs have a street value of $7.5 million, McGivney said.

Humid Weather Causing Rare Disease In Tobacco

By Carol Tyer
 THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Hot, humid weather, combined with frequent rains, is taking its toll on the Pitt County tobacco crop, Mitch Smith, county agriculture extension agent, said today.

Smith said the heat and humidity has caused rhizoctinia leaf spot, a tobacco fungus seldom seen in this area before, to flourish this year.

"It's usually a lower stalk disease," Smith said. "But this year, we're even seeing it on leaves on up the stalk. It's in just about every tobacco field in the county. It's going to really cut into the weight of the crop. And the sad part is that there's nothing we know of that prevents or stops its spread. It's like mildew. Certain heat and humidity conditions just allow it to grow and grow rapidly."

Corn and peanut crops seem to be enjoying the wet weather, Smith said.

Saturday temperatures in the county ranged from 68 to 86; Sunday, from 71 to 82. There was no rain Saturday, but 1.31 inches fell at the Greenville Utilities water plant Sunday, according to records kept there. The Tar River at Greenville rose all weekend from 3.1 feet above sea level at 8 a.m. Saturday, to 3.6 feet at 8 a.m. Sunday to 4.9 feet at 8 a.m. this morning, a spokesman for the water plant said.

Thunderstorms during the weekends caused little damage to the Greenville Utilities electric system, electric system director Roger Jones said. "There was a fuse affected here, a transformer there," he said, "but nothing that kept any customer without power very long at all."

Jones said there was an outage that affected several hundred customers, many of them commercial ones, Friday about 4:30 p.m. This was caused by the accidental cutting of a cable on Charles Boulevard by a private contractor. He said most customers in the area had power restored in about 30 minutes.

Bush Predicts 'Freedom' Will Win In Europe

By Terence Hunt
 THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LEIDEN, Netherlands — President Bush rang the curtain down on his European odyssey today vowing to end East-West divisions and predicting that "ultimately, whatever the odds, freedom will succeed."

Bush said Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev already is "moving in our direction, coming our way" and he urged the Kremlin to chart a course "that brings it into the community of nations."

Bush spoke hopefully of the prospects for political and economic reforms throughout Eastern Europe in a speech delivered in this historic North Sea city where Rembrandt worked, Hugo Grotius formulated theories of international law and the Pilgrims sought exile before sailing for the New World.

"The challenge we face is clear," Bush said. "We must work together toward the day when all of Europe, East and West, is free of discord, free of division."

Thousands of cheering Dutch people lined Bush's motorcade route through Leiden waving American and Dutch flags. A banner strung over the route read, "Leiden is Georgeous." Other hand-held signs criticized U.S. policy in Central America.

Bush arrived in the Netherlands, the last stop on his 10-day European tour, after visiting Poland and Hungary and attending economic summit talks in Paris, where the seven richest industrial democracies received a Gorbachev proposal for integrating the Soviet economy with that of the West.

Saying that dramatic changes were under way in Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union, Bush cited Gorbachev's letter as "only the latest example of the Soviets' moving in our direction."

Tracing the rebuilding of Western Europe from the rubble of World War II, he said that "the 'other Europe' — the Europe behind the wall — endured four decades of privation and hardship, persecution and fear."

Said Bush: "Today that 'other Europe' is changing. The great wheel is moving once more. Our time — the exciting time in which we live — is a time of new hope, the hope that all of Europe can now know the freedom that you all in the Netherlands has known, that America has known, and that the West has known."

"Our hope is that the unnatural division of Europe will now come to an end, that the Europe behind the wall will join its neighbors to the West, prosperous and free," said Bush, making the first visit to the Netherlands by any American president.

He said Poland and Hungary are moving at the forefront of political and economic reform, traveling farther over the past year than anyone in the West once thought possible.

Delivering the last major speech of his European trip, Bush spoke before several hundred people in Pieterskerk, the Church of St. Peter, a huge cathedral dating to the early 12th century, after conferring with leaders in The Hague, the nearby seat of the Dutch government.

He received an ovation at the conclusion of the speech.

The president said that during his visits in Eastern Europe, he heard "new voices full of new hope. There were the faces of pilgrims on a journey, fixed on the horizon, on the new world coming into view."

Should Teens Earn While Learning?

By Jill Lawrence
 THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — To work or not to work? The question never comes up in Japan, where school is considered the only job fit for students.

But American teen-agers are working in droves, much of their cash going for cars, clothes, beer and sometimes drugs. They are perhaps learning the work ethic. But they are also learning conspicuous consumption, and some critics say they are compromising their education as well.

When she was named National Teacher of the Year last April, Mary Bicouvaris singled out working students and asked them to put a priority on school. "They are very busy people," she said. "What I find deplorable many times is they work school into the business schedule rather than fit business into the school schedule."

Most studies have shown little or no effect on school performance if students keep their work time to 20 hours a week. But the studies are based on averages that don't apply to individual students. Plus, there are no federal hourly restrictions on teen-agers of 16 and 17, and many work far more than 20 hours.

The National Assessment of Educational Progress, which surveys tens of thousands of students on academic proficiency and recently added questions on work, estimates that more than half of all 11th graders and two-thirds of high school seniors have jobs.

Teachers all have their stories about students whose work lives have eclipsed their school lives, who leave the classroom to work seven hours at a fast-food restaurant and show up the next day unprepared, their heads nodding onto their desks.

"They will tell you, 'I just don't have time to do that assignment. I have to work,' and they expect you to buy that," says Patrick Welsh, an Alexandria, Va., English teacher who has written a book about high school.

"I don't buy it," he adds. "But what happens is a gradual and subtle erosion of standards and the amount of work you're going to hit kids with. It's happening all over the country."

A Wisconsin study of four high schools did indeed find teachers were making less demands on students than they had made five years before, at least partially in response to the students' work schedules.

Work also has been associated with increased drug and alcohol use. Working kids have more money, are under more stress and may come into contact with older teen-agers more likely to have such habits, says Laurence Steinberg, a Temple University researcher and psychology professor.

"If your only outcome measure is test scores or grades, you may be missing something," says Steinberg, co-author with Ellen Greenberger of a book called "When Teenagers Work."

The book describes a 1982 study of 531 Orange County, Calif., teen-agers in which the authors found that work in excess of 15 to 20 hours a week tended to cause lower grades and diminished involvement in school.

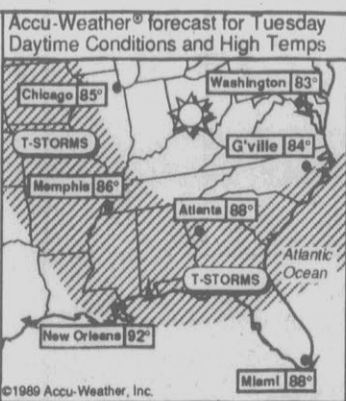

"Earning and Learning," a recent report by the National Assessment of Educational Progress, said a review of other studies turned up no comparable results and added that "there is no cause for alarm concerning the academic performance of students who work."

But Steinberg said his and Greenberger's earlier results have been confirmed in a much larger study of 10,000 students in Wisconsin and California that has not yet been published.

Paul Barton, author of the NAEP report, said he did not mean to suggest that "this is a rosy situation for all students. The averages show no association between school and work, but individual circumstances should be taken into account. There are probably lots of kids buried in

Farm Scene

By Phillip Rowan
AGRICULTURAL EXTENSION SERVICE

Livestock, just as we humans, suffer when exposed to high temperatures and humidity as we've experienced over the past week or so. Unfortunately for livestock producers, when their animals undergo stress it also affects their profit potential.

Swine seldom die from heat stress, but substantial losses in performance and reproductive efficiency can result unless some type of cooling relief is provided. Boars subjected to high temperatures may have reduced semen quality resulting in a reduced fertility rate for four to six weeks after the stress period. Females bred to boars that have been subjected to heat stress during hot summer months may have a lowered conception rate and summer litter sizes.

Temperatures above 85 degrees F will delay or prevent the occurrence of heat, reduce ovulation rate and increase early embryonic deaths in gilts and sows. Growing-finishing pigs undergoing heat stress consume less feed, gain more slowly and convert feed into meat less efficiently.

Obviously you must take steps as a swine producer to alleviate the problems affiliated with heat stress on swine. Common ways to keep hogs cool in the summer are to provide shade, utilize a sprinkling system and use ventilation or fans as a means of cooling. In confinement housing, adequate insulation in the roof or ceiling is essential to minimize heat build up in hot weather.

Sprinkling systems work best that are on a thermostat and timer to come on about two to three minutes of every 10 minutes when temperatures reach the 80-85 degrees F range. This system allows the water to evaporate on the hog's skin to provide evaporative cooling. Air movement enhances this type of cooling. Ventilation rates for a sow and litter are only 20 cubic feet per minute (cfm) in cold weather but 50 cfm are recommended for the sow and litter during hot weather.

Other methods of cooling swine are concrete hog wallows, zone cooling (blowing cool air directly around the animal's head), evaporative cooling systems (incoming ventilation air is passed through a moist pad) or refrigerated air systems. The best method for cooling sows in the farrowing barn is the drip emitter system. It works the same as a sprinkler system, but is designed to only drip water on the sow's shoulder so baby pigs will not get wet. This method, of course, can only work effectively on a slatted floor or woven wire type floor so water does not accumulate in the farrowing crate.

Swine producers must utilize a number of these approaches to alleviate the stress to swine during these hot times. It is also important to keep fans, air inlets, curtains and all other equipment clean and in good working condition during the summer. Most of all, make sure all animals have access to plenty of cool, fresh water.

ECU Asthma Study Awarded Fellowship

Dr. Robert H. Fisher, an assistant professor of the East Carolina School of Medicine's section on allergy and immunology, has been awarded a $25,000 Thomas H. Davis Fellowship by the American Lung Association of North Carolina.

Davis, founder of Piedmont Aviation Inc., presented the award.

Fisher is conducting in-depth studies on exercise-induced asthma, a relatively common disease often associated with the co-expression of allergies. This association suggests that allergies may play a role in the development of exercise-induced asthma.

Findings from Fisher's experiments might provide insight as to how moderate to vigorous exercise induces airway narrowing in nearly all asthmatics.

The Davis Fellowship is, in addition to several other research grants, given annually by the American Lung Association of North Carolina. The research grants provide funding for scientists who are doing promising research in lung disease.

DR. ROBERT H. FISHER

The American Lung Association of North Carolina is the oldest voluntary public health agency in the state. It was founded in 1906 to combat tuberculosis.

Sanford Defends Globe-Trotting

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — Sen. Terry Sanford has defended his rank as the Senate's fifth most globe-trotting member, saying his seven trips to 14 countries in 1987-88 were justified and worthwhile.

"As far as I'm concerned, these trips abroad are hard work and necessary," the North Carolina Democrat said in a statement last week.

The tax-exempt group Public Citizens, founded by Ralph Nader, reported that 386 members of Congress made 1,053 trips abroad in 1987 and 1988, costing taxpayers at least $13.5 million. The report questioned whether some of the travel was justified or "merely junketeering."

Among senators, Sanford tied for fourth in the number of trips, seven. He visited the fifth-highest number of nations, 14. Five of his trips were associated with his work on Central America, where he is the founder of the International Commission for Central American Recovery and Development.

He also went to the Soviet Union in August 1987 and to Italy, Kenya, Zambia and Spain in January 1988. He said of the four-nation trip, "I traveled to the front-line states of southern Africa to gain a better understanding of an area of the world that is potentially explosive and strategically important to the United States."

"I'm not surprised that I rank high on the travel list," he told The News and Observer of Raleigh. "I've always worked hard. ... I also tied for first in the number of hours presiding over the Senate."

North Carolina's other senator, Republican Jesse Helms, made no trips at public expense in 1987-88. Helms, however, sometimes travels abroad at the expense of private groups.

Teen Drowns

LUMBERTON, N.C. (AP) — The body of a 14-year-old boy who apparently drowned after diving off a bridge was retrieved from the Lumber River on Sunday morning, authorities said.

Bruce Lee Chavis of Lumberton drowned after diving into the river at a swimming area called the "drop-off" five miles east of Lumberton, said Lumberton Rescue Squad Chief Ray Cox.

The search for Chavis began about 8:45 p.m. Saturday but was discontinued because of a severe thunderstorm, Cox said. The search resumed at 8 a.m. Sunday, and the boy's body was found in the middle of the river three hours later, he said.

The river is about 12 feet to 16 feet deep where the body was recovered, Cox said.

Soviets Deny Nuclear Submarine Was On Fire

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

OSLO, Norway — Norway accepted an explanation from the Soviet Union today that no fire occurred aboard a nuclear submarine that belched black smoke.

But Norwegian officials complained that the Soviets should have reported what they called a defect in the ship's nuclear power system that forced it to the surface of the Barents Sea on Sunday.

Soviet Defense Minister Dmitri Yazov said the smoke that appeared to come from a fire on board the Alfa class submarine was the exhaust from the ship's diesel engines, the Tass news agency reported.

"There were no accidents or other emergencies," The Soviet news agency quoted Yazov as saying.

"We have to believe them on that," Arild Isegg, a Norwegian Defense Ministry spokesman, said. "Norway will take note of it," but Oslo still wanted a written explanation.

Two earlier Soviet submarine accidents occurred off Norway since April.

Foreign Ministry spokesman Bjoern Kanavin said the source of the smoke was "beside the point" and that Norway's main concern was the danger of radiation.

"The Soviets have indirectly confirmed that there was a problem with the reactor, and in that kind of situation we want to be informed," Kanavin said.

The Alfa-class ship was spotted pouring smoke from its observation tower Sunday and was being towed by a Soviet tugboat, said Erik Senstad, another Defense Ministry spokesman.

In response to a diplomatic query, Foreign Ministry spokesman Oeyvind Nordstetten said Soviet officials told Norway on Sunday that the smoke was part of an exercise and that the submarine had never been in trouble.

Today, Yazov said the submarine had been on a combat training mission and was shifting its power load to a battery when "one of the cells was short-circuited ..."

"The submarine surfaced. Its diesel engines were fired and produced the exhaust," Tass quoted him as saying.

Norwegian television showed the submarine cruising swiftly under its own power and reported no outward signs of an accident.

The ship was sighted by the Norwegian research vessel Mariatta in the Barents Sea about 75 miles east of the Norwegian town of Vardo and north of the Kola Peninsula. It was 30 miles north of Soviet territorial waters.

Senstad said the submarine may have reached a Soviet Northern Fleet base on the Kola Peninsula today. Norway had no information of casualties on board or damage to the ship's reactors.

Alfa class submarines are powered by two nuclear reactors cooled by liquid metal and have auxiliary diesel engines. They are capable of carrying nuclear-tipped torpedoes and anti-submarine missiles as well as conventional warheads.

The Norwegian Institute for Radiation Hygiene reported no traces of radiation in preliminary tests of samples taken near the site of the incident.

Foreign Minister Thorvald Stoltenberg summoned

Soviet ambassador Alexander V. Teterin late Sunday and said "it is entirely unsatisfactory" that Norway had not been warned.

Defense Minister Johan Joergen Holst was quoted by the Verdens Gang newspaper as saying he is worried about the operations and crew training aboard Soviet submarines sailing off northern Norway.

"It's extremely worrisome to have three incidents involving nuclear submarines so close together ... and I must emphasize that this concerns three different types of submarines," Holst said.

On June 26, a fire broke out aboard a Soviet Echo II class vessel that was sailing 70 miles off Norway's coast in the Norwegian Sea.

On April 7, a MIKE class nuclear sub sank in the Norwegian Sea, killing 42 Soviet sailors.

Stoltenberg said Norway, a member of the NATO alliance, has drafted a treaty that would require the Soviet Union to inform Norway of military accidents. The Soviets have similar agreements with the United States, Britain, West Germany and France.

Korean Lawmaker Charged With Spying

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SEOUL, South Korea — In the most serious such case in South Korean history, an opposition lawmaker was charged today with espionage for allegedly receiving $120,000 over three years to work for communist North Korea.

The Agency for National Security Planning said Suh Kyung-won, 52, was turned over to prosecutors, who have 30 days to produce the indictment needed for trial. If convicted, he could face the death penalty.

A aide of Suh, Pang Yang-hyun, also charged with espionage, is accused of being the middleman in Suh's alleged transactions with the north.

In a televised news conference, held on a national holiday to ensure the widest possible viewership, the intelligence agency said Suh had received a total of $120,000 on 14 occasions between April 1985, when he was allegedly recruited by North Korean agents, and December 1988.

"A shocking and surprising case," said Ahn Ung-mo, deputy director of the security agency, who presided at the news conference.

Suh, a farmer and dissident who became a member of the National Assembly for the leading opposition Party for Peace and Democracy, turned himself in June 25 after first telling party leaders that he had illegally visited the north last August.

He was formally arrested June 28 on charges of violating national security by making the unauthorized visit to talk to North Korean leaders about unification of the peninsula.

South Korea forbids unauthorized trips to the north, maintaining that dialogue on unification must be conducted through official channels.

Eight other people have been formally charged in the case — most with having knowledge of Suh's trip or assisting him in it.

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOSCOW — About 200 people gathered among the damp weeds in a monastery graveyard today to hold the first public requiem in the Soviet Union for Czar Nicholas II, who was shot by Bolshevik guards in 1918.

Police using loudspeakers repeatedly ordered participants to leave the unofficial prayer meeting in Moscow's Donskoi Monastery, but the warnings only made the worshippers sing their Russian Orthodox hymns louder.

Organizers said the service reflected a recent resurgence of monarchism among Soviets who have less fear of persecution and arrest for their views.

A brass band stumbled through "God Save the Czar," and Orthodox priests who conducted the service eulogized the czar and his murdered family as "real Russian martyrs."

In July 1918, soldiers acting on Bolshevik orders shot Nicholas and 10 members of his entourage, including his wife and children. Nicholas, born in 1868, abdicated in March 1917 as revolutionary discontent swept Russia.

"Personally," said Father Vadim, one of the priests conducting the service, "I'm moved to tears that the children were also shot, that they were subjected to terrible humiliation, spat upon and slandered."

Many worshippers came purely out of sympathy for the royal victims, said one of the meeting's organizers, Vladimir Anishchenko. But Anishchenko, a member of the unofficial Commission on the Remains of the Russian Imperial Family, said "there are lots of monarchists here."

The commission is calling for the remains of the royal family to be given Christian burials in the Peter and Paul Fortress in Leningrad, the traditional resting place for the Romanov royal family, he said.

Police and city officials who tried to disperse the prayer meeting drew angry protests from the crowd.

"You're a Russian too, you should understand," one woman shouted at a policeman.

"I'm warning you again," the policeman said through a megaphone. "Stop this meeting and disperse. The organizers will be held responsible."

The main response was the repeated Russian Orthodox chant of "God have mercy."

When the police eventually allowed the meeting to continue, an old woman said with a smile, "God has triumphed in the end."

Teen-Agers Often Work For Own Funds

these averages who work long hours and do poorly, and I'm sure educators see them."

The United States has by far the highest rate of working students in the world, with Canada a distant second, Steinberg says. "Working while one goes to high school is unheard of in Japan," he says. "The Japanese society is organized such that school is the only thing that kids are to be concerned about while they're teen-agers."

In America, parents often approve of and even push their children to work very hard in jobs like waiting tables or pumping gas, and this is a sign of responsibility. But a lot of those kids get very poor grades and a lot of that money goes for beer on weekends," says Susan Dawes of Alexandria, Va.

Susan and David Dawes have raised two valedictorians who went on to Ivy League colleges. A third child with a straight-A average is headed for Princeton this fall. The three, all boys, were never allowed to hold outside jobs.

"They were spending three to four hours a night on homework," Mrs. Dawes says. "My husband never wanted them to work during the school year. He had taken odd jobs during the school year and he just thought it was too much."

Mrs. Dawes says she saw many kids with "a lot of money from their jobs and the parents didn't quite have the control of what the kids spent their money on. I think a lot of it went to alcohol in some cases. ... A lot of times what they want the money for is nothing substantial, a better polo shirt. It's not worth their working."

Statistics back up Mrs. Dawes' impression that most teen-agers are working for discretionary income, not money needed to support their families.

Teenage Research Unlimited, a Chicago-area research firm, found that teens had $31 billion in income derived from jobs, allowances and other money from their parents in 1988. The average teen-ager earns $61.50 a week, the company reported, and it is almost exclusively discretionary.

"Teens now buy products and services ... such as hi-tech televisions, and VCRs, personal computers and automobiles," TRU said. Other high-priority items are cosmetics, clothes, and sports and recreation equipment.

That kind of consumerism irks teachers who understand that while work is an economic necessity for some students, more seem to be earning money for designer clothes, car payments and entertainment.

"They place more value on the instant gratification than on the long-term value of getting a good education," says Mary Futrell, a former high school business teacher who is winding up a six-year tenure as president of the National Education Association.

"You don't want to destroy the work ethic. But at the same time you know full well that this is interfering with their education," she adds. "We need a better balance. We need to make sure young people and their families understand that the primary focus has to be on education. And if the job interferes with the education, they should quit the job."

Teachers and others may bemoan their students' preoccupation with work, but the service sector's voracious need for employees assures that any student who wants a job will find one. Competition is so tough for older teens that employers are dipping deeper into the 14- and 15-year-old age group. In many cases, schools and parents are required to sign off on student work permits, giving them an opportunity to intervene if they think the job will be too much for the student to handle along with school. "As it stands now, most schools don't take advantage of that opportunity," Steinberg said.

He said that is because schools are susceptible to the demands of local industry and the need for good community relations. In California, Steinberg said, principals "told us employers would call them and say, 'We need more students. Can you let more of them out of school early?'"

The press of unfilled jobs led the Reagan administration to propose easing hourly restrictions on 14- and 15-year-olds, who may now work only three hours on school days and no more than 18 hours a week when school is in session.

A Labor Department advisory committee concluded last fall that "the prime responsibility for this age group should be toward their educational and developmental needs" and said permissible work hours should not be expanded. The department is expected to heed the panel's recommendation.

At the other end of the spectrum, New York legislators are pondering proposals to cut back work hours for 16- and 17-year-olds, who are under no federal constraints. Under Gov. Mario Cuomo's plan, they would be limited to four hours of work on school days and 28 hours a week while school is in session.

In proposing the change last May, Cuomo acknowledged that work experience can be valuable and that teen-agers are an important labor pool for state businesses. But he added that "it would be very shortsighted for New York to have any child labor policies that limit our young people's educational achievement."

An Investment

Take The Time To Plan The Future

Can you take a moment to plan your future? Can you spare the time two or three television shows would take to help guide your community? Can you, a citizen of Pitt County, spend one evening looking ahead?

You can't afford not to. And this week provides each citizen four opportunities for such involvement.

To forge a fruitful future, a community must have vision. Not tunnel vision, but broad vision. A well-planned future can't be mapped just by elected officials and public administrators and business. It requires a far-reaching community consensus.

That perspective is the key ingredient of Focus 2007, a panel of citizens who have devised a strategic 20-year plan for Pitt County. After a year of development, that group now wants to share its work with the community and get feedback from the public.

Four hearings will be held this week around the county. They will be opportunities to hear this plan explained and to ask questions. They will also be opportunities to share a vision of what the future should hold; a chance to define what type of community Pitt County will be in the 21st century.

The focus of this planning effort has been broad. It encompasses transportation, education, resources, environment, economic growth and quality of life. These are all areas vital to the county's trek toward progress and continued livability.

Take a moment to calculate the value of such planning. Then, consider the value of your own contribution. Commit to attending one of the public hearing on this effort. You can go tonight to Ayden-Grifton High School or Tuesday to Welcome Middle School. On Wednesday you can go to Farmville Community Center and on Thursday to the upstairs auditorium at the Pitt County Office Building. All meetings begin at 7:30 p.m. and are scheduled to end by 9 p.m.

One and one-half hours to consider the future is a small investment with a big return. Take a moment one night this week and make that investment.

Keep It Safe

Greenville's Water Supply

Whatever problems the Tar-Pamlico waterway may have, the quality of Greenville's water supply is good.

Since so much of the city's drinking water comes from the Tar — 80 percent and rising — that is comforting news. Keeping that abundant water supply safe should be a top priority. That means keeping a close watch on what goes into the water upstream.

The plant, which treats water from the Tar, has won awards for its quality. Wadie Lewis, Greenville Utilities water resources director, expresses particular pride in the water plant operation. The awards — a first place and a third place — have come at the American Water Works Association and Water Pollution Control Federation annual conferences.

While part of Greenville's water comes from deep wells, the Tar River still provides the basic supply. That has been true from the time the first public water supply was provided early this century. While pumps and wells were the original water supply it was only in the last half of this century that the city returned to deep wells to supplement the water supply taken from the river.

The water is constantly monitored before it is pumped into elevated tanks and eventually goes to homes, businesses, industries and institutions. There are various timetables for more complicated tests of the water. GUC chemist Jesse Chadwick notes that the employees drink the water, too. "We're not going to put something out that we're not going to drink ourselves."

Geographically, Greenville is near the end of the Tar watershed. Whatever goes into the river above us has the potential to change the quality at the point where Greenville withdraws water.

While recreational concerns are important for protecting the river, safeguarding drinking water is another vital concern. If it is good now, and it appears to be, protecting it should be a priority.

'One and one-half hours to consider the future is a small investment with a big return.'

To the editor:

This letter is in regard to the fireworks display at the Town Commons on the 4th. I, too, thought the fireworks themselves were better than ever. My biggest complaint was the music which was piped in this year.

Once a year our family looks forward to a good time at the fireworks display, not a concert, a fireworks display.

I was told there would be "synchronized" music, but had no idea we would have to listen to that. Many around us agreed, and if someone could have pulled the plug, there were plenty of volunteers. I heard one group singing patriotic songs, but gave up soon after they, too, were drowned out.

I put up with the drinking (which is of course not allowed), but isn't there anywhere a family can go just to remember Old Glory and independence? Maybe I sound old-fashioned, but we reserve the right once a year to be old-fashioned.

I don't know, maybe next year we'll try somewhere else.

To the editor:

A recent trip took me through 10 states and parts of Canada. I spent a week on an island in Lake of the Woods in Manitoba. The scenery and weather were beautiful, and fishing and wildlife viewing were fabulous.

But I didn't see anything more beautiful than I've seen on my excursions right here in North Carolina. We have beaches that those states don't have. But there was one thing really apparent as I left our state and got further north. And coming south, it was even more apparent — trash here and not there.

Remember the tv ad with the Indian looking at his wilderness with tears in his eyes? I felt that same sadness, when after a week of seeing litter-free forests, shorelines and highways, I returned. It is really a shame that, in this beautiful state, you cannot travel in most areas more than a couple of miles without seeing litter.

Our state leaders need to look at methods that have proven successful in other states. Some states ban drink cans and plastic bottles. They require all-glass containers with a hefty deposit, making it worthwhile to keep and return them.

Think of the impact of banning drive-thru fast food windows and car-pools. Not long ago, driving behind some adults, I counted 18 pieces of trash thrown from the car sunroof in a 10-mile stretch. Maybe we should change the litter fine from a dollar amount to a trash bag pickup amount. Our animal friends deserve more from us than extinction from garbage.

Consider that the only animals that flourish where humans abide are the ones that live chiefly on garbage. I hate the thought of my descendants only being able to see rats, opossums, skunks and buzzards on a Sunday outing.

If other states can achieve litter-free highways, rivers, creeks, campsites and boat ramps, so can we!

To the editor:

Last week I was asked to co-sign for a utility contract for a new apartment for my 21-year-old daughter. I was happy to do so even though she had already been a responsible customer of Greenville Utilities Commission. I can understand a degree of reluctance by GUCO for not undertaking potentially bad risks, but neither of us had proven anything except to the contrary. Think of my chagrin when I was asked to produce two letters of credit and being refused the courtesy of supplying credit references without this written confirmation. I have been a homeowner in Greenville for over 20 years and held the same position for over 20 years professionally and have excellent bank and other credit ratings as reflected on my application.

Greenville Utilities Commission has a monopoly over utility service for this area. By being given that monopoly, the government owes the homeowners the courtesy and respect of getting utility service with relative ease, and this certainly would apply to an individual who has demonstrated a good payment record over a period of years.

Since GUCO has this monopoly, it should be their responsibility to check my credit rating rather than my having to be embarrassed and inconvenienced by being required to produce written evidence of my financial worthiness. If GUCO is allowed to inconvenience creditable taxpayers with this indignity, then some change should be made by our local, state or federal government in dispensing monopolistic power. I wonder if our mayor, our utility commissioners or our state representatives are aware of this new restriction placed on reputable Greenville people July 1. If they are not, then it is high time we, as citizens, make them aware through our voices of the ballot or perhaps even through the court system.

To the editor:

In the July 12th Daily Reflector, in an article about the Pitt County Board of Education, the statement is made that the superintendent of schools is happy with his job and wants to keep it. They tell us that this pays $95,000 a year!

I expect that I would be happy with a job also that pays $95,000 a year. Who said that there is no money in education?

Pitt County taxpayers, you had better wake up and stop such grossly overpaid salaries that are taking your tax dollars. Our taxes will get to be as high as those of much larger cities.

What would the superintendent of schools in the Raleigh area get paid? A million dollars?

A Glance Over The Wall

EAST BERLIN — The Iron Curtain comes down here. And then it lifts in Poland, descends in Czechoslovakia and lifts again in Hungary. The current situation would have taxed the eloquence of Winston Churchill. In 1946, he coined the phrase "Iron Curtain" and said it stretched from Stettin on the Baltic to Trieste on the Adriatic. Now it's a drape that is shredded.

But not here. The East German regime is hanging tough, doctrinaire communists to the bitter end. But "the bitter end" seems to be on the horizon or, more specifically, just over the Berlin Wall. From there and from West Germany itself, come the television shows that 80 percent of East Germany can see — news, films and (a dubious gift of Western culture) a version of "Wheel of Fortune."

The question once posed by a World War I era song — "How ya gonna keep 'em down on the farm after they've seen Paree" must be occurring to East German leaders in a different form: "How ya gonna keep 'em down on the commune once they've seen West Germany?" And, increasingly, millions of East Germans have left — an estimated four million in the last year alone. Mostly, these are pensioners. Many return home, if only because East Germany is where their pensions are.

But they cannot return thinking that this is a worker's paradise. East Germany has the most formidable and most successful economy in Eastern Europe, but that, really, is damning with faint praise. For many, life is clearly better on the other side of the wall — although others, accustomed to a non-competitive, non-market economy, see nothing but a rat race.

More than the Soviet Union, far more than the other East Bloc states, East Germany faces a crisis of legitimacy. Unlike its fellow members of the Warsaw Pact, it is not a true national state. Poland is Poland — a people, a culture, a shared religion, a language, a history. But East Germany is just a part of greater Germany. Its reason for being is communism and without it, it cannot define itself. The legitimacy of the regime would vanish — its ethic and goals. "Communism is still far away," the East German leader, Erich Honecker, told the Washington Post last month. Maybe. But the good life is just over the Wall.

Richard

At age 77, Honecker is not likely to turn reformer. He has been a communist almost as long as there has been communism, and suffered greatly for his commitment — a Nazi concentration camp, for example. Others in the aging leadership suffered similarly. They are hardly now about to slap their foreheads and say, "Boy, were we wrong!"

Instead, the East German regime takes pride in having created the only communist state where lines for food supplies are not the norm. Reform is for other communist countries. "We are well-advised if we do not just copy from other socialist countries," Honecker has said. A younger generation of leaders might have different ideas, but they are not yet in power — nor, as far as Western analysts can tell, even close to it.

Meanwhile, the East German regime has opened such escape valves as trips to the West and permits increasing emigration — 30,000 last year, an estimated 40,000 this year. In the view of both Germans and others, the Honecker regime can rely on the good sense and discipline of its people not to start trouble. Spontaneity is hardly a German characteristic.

The view from Bonn, the West German capital, is that the East German regime cannot hold out indefinitely. It either must reform and face a loss of legitimacy or stay the course and face a crisis. If the latter is the case, then the ultimate question is what the Soviet Union will do. It still stations 300,000 troops here. Will Russia, with its well-earned German phobia, countenance an unreliable or obstreperous East Germany? The thinking is that it will not. The troops will move.

But that is precisely the sort of crisis both the West and reformers in the East want to avoid. Hungarians and Poles know without being told that two things are forbidden: civil chaos and withdrawal from the Warsaw Pact. What is true for Warsaw and Budapest is doubly true for East Berlin. A crisis here could spell the end of glasnost and perestroika — not to mention Mikhail Gorbachev himself.

Who knows what term Churchill would have coined to describe the current situation in Central and Eastern Europe. Two things are certain. The first is that he would have come up with something. And the second is that a glance over the wall would have left him feeling very much at home: Once again, the coming problem is Germany.

One Scout's Interpretation Of The Needs

Paul O'Connor

ST. LOUIS, Mo. — I confess. I goofed off last weekend. Rather than watch House and Senate budget conferees bash each other about the heads, I went to a weekend baseball series between the Cardinals and Giants. And sitting amidst Busch Stadium's sea of red, I almost put this year's legislature out of mind.

But then one of my buddies suggested that the Cardinals make a trade or two. Something flashed in my head: A trade or two, that's what the General Assembly needs. When baseball teams find themselves out of whack, they start moving people to other teams. If they aren't scoring, they trade for a better hitter. If the position is scoring too much, they trade for better defense or a better pitcher.

In 1989, the General Assembly isn't scoring at all. Here it is, mid-July at this writing and they're still flailing around in Raleigh without a budget, a highway package or a school improvements package. If legislatures could make deals, this one would first have to go out and find someone to drive in runs.

The House used to have a pretty good clean-up hitter. He was House Speaker Liston Ramsey and he could make things move, when he decided to do so. But management sent him down to AAA ball this year, and replaced him with a risky prospect. Shoeless Joe Mavretic just hasn't been able to bring the bills home once they get to committee. Ramsey used Rep. Billy Watkins, D-Granville, as his number five hitter, his enforcer. Mavretic doesn't have a legitimate enforcer, just a bunch of light-hitting lead-off men at best, filling every spot in the line-up.

The Senate has a good clean-up hitter in Sen. Ken Royall, D-

Durham. But like any clean-up hitter, he's only as good as the guys who bat around him and the Senate just doesn't have any hitters in those spots. Sen. Henson Barnes, D-Wayne, can't hit Gov. Jim Martin's curves and change-ups, and Lt. Gov. Jim Gardner doesn't even bat because they stripped him of his uniform.

Teams that lack offensive punch often excel defensively and that's surely the case for this assembly.

Analysis

The House, with its three warring factions, has shown that it can throw out any idea that's hit its way. But the House appears incapable of getting hits from any two factions in a row so that a bill can become law.

Like all good losing teams, the House has a lot of locker room discontent. The Ramsey loyalists can't stand the Mavretic loyalists and the Republicans are split between the pragmatists and the 11 guys who only want to play Right Field. There've been near fistfights and the usual complaints about racial animosity.

This teams is so bad this year, that even the umpiring needs help. In a baseball game, the managers can argue all they want but the umpire makes the final ruling. If the managers persist in disagreeing, they can appeal to the commissioner of the league. In the assembly, the House and Senate have been fighting since May over the meaning of the bill passage deadline rule, and there's no one to whom they can appeal.

This legislature has received some pretty good starting pitching. Martin and the many inter-session study commissions had good ideas ready when the session opened. But their bullpen is weak. This team, more than anything else, needs a closer, a stopper — the guy who comes out of the bullpen and ends the game so everyone can go home.

So there's one scout's interpretation of the needs. Now the voters need to go out and make the trades.

Knocking

Barry Schweid

PARIS — Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev, in an extraordinary entree to the host of the Western economic summit, came knocking at the door just as capitalist club members were about to conclude another harmonious session.

They did not ask him in. Whatever the momentum of Gorbachev's economic restructuring, President Bush said Western leaders recognize that Moscow has a long way to go before it will sit at the elite group's table.

Francois Mitterrand, the Socialist patrician who is president of France and host of the economic summit that ended this past weekend, plans to write Gorbachev a polite reply to the Soviet leader's suggestion that Moscow participate more directly in global economic discussions.

"Our perestroika is inseparable from the policy tending toward full and entire participation in the world economy," Gorbachev wrote Mitterrand.

The obstacles are enormous. It isn't only that the Soviet economy is weak — the Western nations have had years, after all. Rather, it is that the Soviet system lacks economic depth or maturity.

Its currency, the ruble, is not traded internationally, a fact which isolates the Soviet Union from foreign trade and monetary relations that are the heart of the Western economic system. A country that will not accept its own currency at hotel check-out is not ready for us who speak the same monetary and trade language. If anything, Gorbachev's letter seeking to link up the Soviet economy with the United States, France, Britain, Canada, Italy, Japan and West Germany is a plea for acceptance in the economic arena.

The Soviet Union belongs to the Second World of Communist nations struggling to keep pace with rising consumer demands. Not a single one of the Eastern bloc states can claim a vibrant economy.

"There's an awful lot that has to transpire in the Soviet Union," before Moscow can claim a position in serious international economic discussions, Bush said at a windup news conference on Sunday. Yet he was encouraging toward Gorbachev.

"We would welcome any movement by the Soviet Union towards market-oriented or Western economies," he said. "There's no question about that. And there's nothing begrudging about our saying that I don't expect Mr. Gorbachev to sit as a member at next year's summit."

British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher wished the Soviets success in their reforms. "But I don't see the time she (the Soviet Union) will join us because of her (having become) a great free-market economic success."

Others were equally skeptical. "Their economy is a basket case," said a key Bush administration analyst. "They've never given aid to the Third World. Their aid to the Third World comes on (military) tracks."

Barry Schweid, chief of the AP's State Department staff, has covered U.S.-Soviet diplomacy since 1973.

Legislators Will Leave Several Items For 1990

By John Fleisher
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — When the General Assembly packs up and heads home this year it probably will leave behind a bumper crop of unfinished business — bills that threaten to make the 1990 "short session" short in name only.

The Legislature historically has done most of its business in biennial "long sessions" in odd-numbered years. But since the early 1970s, the assembly has met for a few weeks in the summer of even-numbered years to adjust the budget and handle odds and ends left over from the previous session.

The list of odds and ends for next year's "short session" threatens to grow as legislators find little common ground on a number of issues.

A showdown over the most emotional issue on anyone's agenda — abortion — already is looming for 1990. That's when Rep. Paul Stam, R-Wake, says he will push a bill that would establish in North Carolina the abortion restrictions recently upheld by the U.S. Supreme Court.

Stam introduced the bill this year, but it has lain dormant in committee.

"I want people to have time to think about it ... and get reaction from their constituents," he said. "We'll take it up next year."

Also waiting in the wings is the equally volatile issue of whether to require parental consent for minors' abortions. The House has passed a parental consent bill for the third time this decade. If the Senate does not vote on it in the waning days of this year's session, the bill will be eligible for next year.

As usual, there will be a budget to adopt in 1990. The difficulty of that process will depend on the outcome of this year's protracted negotiations over education and highway funding.

Another issue that seems increasingly likely to linger until 1990 is the veto. A proposed constitutional amendment to give the governor power to veto bills, subject to override by a three-fifths vote of both legislative chambers, has passed the Senate but seems hopelessly bogged down in the House Judiciary Committee.

"Amendments are backing up, and it looks like the time necessary to finish the job will stretch out for many more meetings," said Rep. Roy Cooper, D-Nash, the committee chairman.

"Next year's short session is going to be one of the longest short sessions in history," Sen. Jim Johnson, R-Cabarrus, said. "And it's going to be right in the middle of an election year. You talk about posturing — oh, my, we could be here forever."

Dozens of other bills have passed one chamber but not the other and will be eligible for consideration in 1990 if they are not killed or enacted before this year's adjournment.

Among them are bills that would:

- Link North Carolina's income tax code with its federal counterpart, which supporters say would make the system fairer by removing some poor people from the tax rolls while making it easier for others to prepare their returns.

- Establish a modified merit-pay system for teachers that would allow local school boards to design their own programs or follow the "career ladder" or "lead teacher" models.

- Repeal the so-called "Hardison amendments," which bar state regulators from adopting environmental protection rules more stringent than those on the federal level.

- Impose stronger sentences for a variety of drug offenses.

- Toughen the 1983 Safe Roads

- Act by reducing the impaired-driving threshold from an 0.10 blood-alcohol reading to 0.08, lengthening from 10 to 30 days the period for immediate license revocation after a DWI arrest, banning open alcoholic beverage containers in vehicles' passenger sections; and increasing impaired-driving fines.

- Consolidate all state environmental and health programs in a single cabinet-level agency.

- Prohibit obscene bumper stickers.

- Curb discrimination against people infected with AIDS.

- Amend the state Constitution to have appellate judges appointed by the governor instead of elected.

Wind, Floods Hit Central Counties

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Windy weather caused some damage in Durham and Bertie counties and thunderstorms swelled creeks, prompting some evacuations, officials said.

A Durham police officer reported seeing a funnel cloud touch down near the intersection of U.S. 15-501 bypass and Hillsborough Road on Sunday. A 50-foot section of a storage building was destroyed in the incident, which occurred about 10:30 a.m.

In Bertie County at about 6 p.m., a possible tornado touched down on a rural road near Merry Hill, emergency management officials said. Trees, and power and telephone lines fell, but no structures were reported damaged, authorities said.

No injuries were reported from either storm.

In Cumberland County, about 20 homes were evacuated at 7:45 p.m. after lightning struck a tree and caused an underground gas line to rupture, authorities said.

Natural-gas vapor dispersed as the 2-inch line was capped, authorities said, and residents were allowed to return after about 90 minutes. No injuries were reported, authorities said.

Residents were evacuated in case lightning or a spark caused the vapor to ignite, said Assistant Chief Stuart Stancil of the Bonnie Doone Fire Department.

Kermit Keeter, a meteorologist with the National Weather Service in Durham, said the cold front that lowered temperatures early last week was to blame for the bad weather.

"Little low pressure systems, as they move along the front, are generating rainfall ahead of them. It's almost a train effect — one low moving down the track, followed by another one."

"If we had not been in such a prolific rainfall pattern for the past couple of months, we probably could handle this rain," he said.

Law enforcement officials in Granville County said some secondary roads, especially west of Creedmoor near Butler and Stem, washed out.

At the coast, a waterspout was reported in the Pamlico Sound between Hatteras and Ocracoke islands Sunday afternoon. Also, a thunderstorm at the Alligator River Bridge caused wind gusts of up to 50 mph, the weather service said.

Keeter said weather service officials could not be certain a tornado had touched down in Durham.

Officer O.D. Gooch said just about any creek in Durham was threatening to rise from its banks.

"It's very bad," he said of the rain. "Mainly right now it's coming in the northern and western part of Durham."

Earlier, residents of one Chapel Hill apartment complex were evacuated as a nearby creek swelled from the heavy rains, officials said.

Some 18 to 20 residents of two buildings in Booker Creek Apartments in Chapel Hill were asked to leave their apartments about 11 a.m. Sunday. The residents were provided shelter in other, vacant apartments farther away from the creek.

"The ground itself was saturated so it didn't take a whole lot to cause the creeks and branches to rise," said Chapel Hill Master Officer J.D. Parks.

Gun Battle

FRANKLIN, N.C. (AP) — A gun battle between Macon County lawmen and a man whom they had stopped for speeding ended Sunday morning when the suspect wrecked his car during a chase and was shot as he ran away, authorities reported.

The Macon County Sheriff's Department and State Bureau of Investigation agents have not released the suspect's name pending positive identification and have released only sketchy details concerning the incident.

According to a news release from Macon County Sheriff Homer Holbrooks, the incident began shortly after midnight when deputies attempted to stop the car on U.S. 441 South of Franklin.

Between nine and 12 shots were fired by deputies, according to Holbrooks.

The suspect was listed in satisfactory condition at C.J. Harris Hospital in Sylva on Sunday.

Skateboard Arrest

RALEIGH (AP) — Three young skateboarders went from ne'er-do-wells to heroes in the eyes of the law when they hopped on their boards and chased a man suspected of shoplifting, trapping him in a nearby abandoned house until police arrived.

"Usually everybody's fussing about skateboarders, but they did real good this time," said Raleigh Police Sgt. L.T. Liggins.

The incident unfolded Saturday when a man ran out the front door of the Lerner Shop on Fayetteville Street Mall with two pairs of jeans and a scarf. While a store employee called police, store manager Sue Tillman chased the shoplifter, followed by skateboarders Andy Slaughter, 15, of Roxboro, Thomas Johnson, 16, of Knightdale, and Patrick Long, 16, of Butler. They trailed him to a house where he eventually was arrested.

Body Found

CHADBOURN, N.C. (AP) — The body of a 15-year-old Chadbourn woman was found in some bushes on the campus of Chadbourn Primary School on Sunday afternoon, authorities said.

Paula Thomas Bryant had apparently been strangled at least 24 hours before her body was found, according to Columbus County Sheriff's Detective Roy Norris. Mrs. Bryant's neck was apparently broken, Norris said.

Two Chadbourn children bicycling through the campus spotted the body between two low-growing bushes, Norris said.

County Coroner Linwood Cartrette ordered the body sent to the North Carolina Medical Examiner's Office in Chapel Hill where the cause of death was to be determined.

Paget Dies

RALEIGH (AP) — Dr. Edwin H. Paget, who claimed to be "History's Most Significant Man," died July 2 in Raleigh.

A retired N.C. State University professor of speech, Paget believed that people should fight the natural decline of strength by increasing their exercise program every year. He exercised vigorously, including climbing Pike's Peak in Colorado nearly 1,000 times.

His daughter, Valeria F. Paget, said her father died of heart failure at Rex Hospital. He was 86.

According to his wishes, no funeral was held. Paget's body was cremated and his ashes will be scattered atop Pike's Peak after a memorial service tentatively planned for the mountain top in August. The family withheld information about the death pending completion of plans for a memorial service.

Chancellor Says Pembroke Should Be Involved In Change In Robeson

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PEMBROKE, N.C. — Joe Oxendine, the new chancellor at Pembroke State University, says the school should play an important role in helping resolve the difficulties faced by tri-racial Robeson County.

"The community holds this institution as a symbol of hope, a symbol of the future," said Oxendine, who became head of the school July 1.

Oxendine, who came to his native Robeson County from Temple University, says he wants to minimize discussion "about who's to blame about what occurred in the past. There's limited value in addressing issues looking backward."

"But we're not going to alienate ourselves from legal and political issues. When something comes up, I want to know about it. And if there's a legitimate way either formally or informally that the clout of the chancellor's office or university can be a positive force, I'd like to address it."

In 1988, when two Indians seized a

Lumberton newspaper to publicize their claims of local law enforcement corruption. Across the nation, people read about Robeson County's population — one-third each white, black and Indian — and of the mistrust among them.

There has been change since the 17-year-old Oxendine left Robeson County more than 40 years ago.

Gone is the segregation that kept Oxendine from any public N.C. college except Pembroke. Pembroke, once the nation's only four-year all-Indian university, now has 2,835 students — 63 percent white, 23 percent Indian and 12 percent black.

But the decades haven't dispelled poverty and racial tensions in rural Robeson County. School dropout rates are among the state's highest. Per capita income was 96th of 100 counties in 1987.

Oxendine talks of attack on several fronts — improve public schools, spur economic development, address social and political tensions.

Oxendine knows he could alienate some people — some Indians, for instance, who may expect him, as an American Indian, to champion their causes.

But he speaks with quiet confidence: "I must guard against becoming one-sided and prejudiced. This university is bigger than one race. Its future is going to depend upon its reaching out to all groups," he told the Charlotte Observer.

On Friday, Oxendine met with community leaders to discuss a new program to help curb drug abuse. He met Robeson Sheriff Hubert Stone, a longtime political power. "We committed ourselves to mutual efforts to resolve tensions and problems," Oxendine said.

Those who know the 59-year-old educator believe he can play an important role.

"If anybody can bring those people together, it's going to be someone like Joe," said Emilie Mulholland, Temple's associate vice president for university relations.

At Temple, where Oxendine was founding dean of the School of Health, Physical Education, Recreation and Dance, he earned a reputation as a peacemaker.

A Lumbee, Oxendine is the second Indian to lead the 102-year-old university founded by Indians. The first, English Jones, was chancellor from 1962 to 1979.

"It's an exciting time for the Indian people, because it's given them a lot of hope," said Dennis Lowery of Charlotte, former Pembroke chairman.

Duke Team Tries To Halt AIDS In Infants

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

DURHAM — Researchers at Duke Medical Center are in the forefront of efforts to treat infants with AIDS and hope to develop techniques to prevent the spread of the virus from mother to child.

Researchers say they are not sure when during a pregnancy the AIDS virus is transmitted to an infant. But they say if it is at the time of delivery, they stand a chance in preventing the transmission.

"If that is the case, and if we could shut down virus replication right from birth by giving a drug like AZT, right in the delivery room and then for a few weeks afterward, you might be able to block the transmission of the virus into the newborn," said Dr. Ross McKinney, an assistant professor at Duke who works at the pediatric acquired immune deficiency syndrome clinic.

Duke Medical Center — one of the few research centers in the nation focusing on children with AIDS — was the first in the nation to use azidothymidine, AZT, to treat a child infected with the AIDS virus. The center has received more than $3 million to conduct the research.

The N.C. Communicable Disease Control Branch has recorded 28 cases of AIDS among North Carolinians under age 19. Duke Medical Center doctors believe the figure is much higher: About 60 of the 80 children treated at Duke for AIDS or enrolled in clinical drug trials have been from North Carolina, said Dr. Catherine Wilfert, a Duke professor and director of pediatric AIDS research.

Nationally, about 1,400 children are thought to have AIDS — a figure expected to double in the next two years. No one knows how many are infected with the virus but have not developed the disease.

"If infection is occurring late in a pregnancy or during delivery, you have a finite time to begin your attack," Wilfert told the Greensboro News & Record. "We know that hepatitis B is transmitted in this way, so there is precedent. If you give vaccine and antibody at delivery, you prevent 95 percent of those infections from hepatitis B."

AZT, which extends the lifetime of adult AIDS victims, is primarily seen as a way to slow down the AIDS virus. Duke Medical Center will soon join several other research centers in giving AZT to very young infants.

While sophisticated testing methods are available for AIDS-infected adults, those same tests are almost worthless to newborns.

The reason is simple: Current AIDS tests do not detect the virus; they detect antibodies the body produces in response to that virus. In adults, the presence of specific antibodies is assumed to be evidence the virus is present. But in infants, the presence of AIDS antibodies means little.

During the first 12 to 15 months after birth, an infant carries the mother's antibodies to many diseases. Mothers infected with the AIDS virus will pass the AIDS antibodies on to their children, but not necessarily pass along the virus. Doctors estimate that in about 70 percent of the cases involving pregnant AIDS patients, the virus is not passed to the baby, McKinney said.

"In only 30 percent of the children does the virus cross the placenta," he said. "But all of the children whose mothers have antibodies, are born with antibodies against the AIDS virus. If we do a test for antibodies, 100 percent will have those antibodies."

"The result is that it makes it very difficult to do studies in infants," McKinney said. "It is virtually impossible to know if a newborn is infected or not."

AIDS infection progresses more rapidly in children than adults, making early detection crucial in the event an effective treatment is someday found.

Duke researchers are also ready to begin another experimental therapy — this one involving a novel compound called soluble CD-4 that may prove effective in protecting infants from the AIDS virus.

The CD-4 compound imitates a specific protein molecule that is found on white blood cells — the one that attracts the AIDS virus.

If that new compound proves an effective decoy — and one that is also non-toxic and easily excreted by the body — it may prove more useful to babies than adults with AIDS.

"The way in which it might ultimately be really useful is if it could prevent infection, not just prevent infection of more cells," Wilfert said.

Pilot Says Gun Fired In Crash

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

HOLLYWOOD, Fla. — Washington attorney Thomas Root said he doesn't know how he passed out during his 800-mile flight down the East coast, and blamed his bullet wound on a gun he said discharged when his small plane crashed in the ocean.

In an bedside interview published today in The Washington Post, Root denied he had been attempting to commit suicide, and said he has become the victim of innuendo as his story mushroomed.

"I'm shocked. I can't understand why this story has blown up, beyond the admittedly unusual circumstances, to end up being a front-page story like this," said Root, listed in stable condition Sunday at Hollywood's Memorial Hospital.

After the four-hour flight on autopilot Thursday, the crash into Bahamian waters, and his rescue by Air Force parajumpers, Root's survival was called miraculous. But the subsequent discovery of a gunshot wound to his abdomen led to suspicion he hadn't meant to survive.

"As I was swimming around out there, hurting a lot, I was thinking about my family and that I wasn't going to see them again," he told the Post. "And I say that to say that I don't think I have the ability, nerve or stupidity to take another life — mine or anyone else's."

Root said he did not know what had caused him to pass out during the flight but confirmed federal investigators' account of his losing oxygen, possibly from carbon monoxide leaking into the cabin.

Refuting reports that he was put on a list of suspected drug smugglers by federal authorities after trips to the Caribbean, the 36-year-old Alexandria, Va., resident also said he had never dealt in drugs and had never even taken his plane outside of the United States.

Root talked Saturday with a National Transportation Safety Board air safety investigator and an FBI agent. NTSB investigator Andrew Alston said he didn't have reason to dispute Root's version of events, but that investigators in several places will try to determine whether evidence matches Root's story.

Alston said investigators were questioning Root's claim he doesn't remember the gunshot, which initial tests indicate was at very close range.

Root has suggested that a .32-caliber Smith & Wesson revolver he kept loaded in the glove compartment fell out and fired when his single-engine Cessna ditched.

Root said the gun could not have fired earlier in the flight because he would have lost too much blood before the plane dived.

But Capt. James Rahman, the Coast Guard flight surgeon who treated him soon after the crash, said Root showed symptoms of peritonitis, which he said would prove he was shot at least two hours before the plane hit water.

Root's explanation will be checked in further tests and discussions with firearms experts and the gun's manufacturer, Alston said.

South Urged To Retain 'Super Tuesday'

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BALTIMORE — There are some cracks in the South's support for another "Super Tuesday" regional primary in 1992, but most of the Southern legislators at their annual convention appeared ready to give it one more try.

The Southern Legislative Conference, meeting in Baltimore through Wednesday, was instrumental in convincing state legislatures in 14 of the 15 states that make up the association to join a regional primary held March 8, 1988. Only West Virginia refused to go along.

Super Tuesday's architects had hoped it would result in the nomination of a more conservative presidential candidate. But the winner last year was Jesse Jackson, and Michael Dukakis eventually held sway. Still, a majority of Southern states appear to be ready to join another regional vote in 1992.

Rep. Robert C. Hunter of North Carolina has been named to head a special panel charged with recommending whether a regional primary should be held in 1992 and, if so, whether some alterations should be made.

Hunter said Sunday he favors another regional primary. "Super Tuesday accomplished most of the goals we had in mind. ... It was never designed to elect a Southerner; that was never the primary purpose. I think what we have to do is look beyond 1988," he said.

Hunter's view was shared by U.S. Bob Graham, D-Fla., who told the legislative conference's executive committee Sunday that Super Tuesday "was the most constructive change that occurred in the presidential process of 1988."

He said the regional primary forced presidential hopefuls to pay attention to the South and its concerns as never before, and at the same time boosted interest in the electoral process among Southern voters.

Graham warned that to return to the region's hodgepodge of primaries and caucuses stretching from March to June would be disastrous for the region and the nation.

Southern political opinion about the regional primary is not unanimous, however.

Already, Arkansas has tentatively decided not to participate in a 1992 regional primary. The primary has many opponents in Missouri, and may be in some trouble in Alabama, Kentucky,

Texas and Maryland. Virginia placed a "sunset" provision in its primary law that automatically returned the state to its traditional caucus method of selecting delegates to the nominating conventions.

Lawmakers said that Georgia, Florida, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, Oklahoma and Tennessee still favor the regional approach.

Hunter said he was not especially concerned about possible defections, adding "if a few states dropped out it wouldn't kill Super Tuesday."

Graham agreed. "The one legitimate criticism (of Super Tuesday) was there may have been too many states. Frankly, if the states that leave are the border states ... I don't think that would be a bad development."

National Teacher Standards Planned

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — National teaching credentials will be offered in 29 fields to qualifying educators, a national education group said today in a move aimed at boosting professionalism in the classroom.

The guidelines released today are the first major step toward achieving "high and rigorous standards for what teachers should know and be able to do," said James A. Kelly, president of the National Board for Professional Teaching Standards.

The certificates will be given to teachers who qualify through essays, interviews, performance and other means, the group said.

"No one has ever tried to do something like this in a profession this size with so many built-in constraints," Kelly said.

The 63-member board, chaired by former North Carolina Gov. Jims Hunt, is scheduled to start awarding the voluntary certificates in 1993.

The nation's 2.5 million teachers may apply for certification if they have a bachelor of arts degree and at least three years of experience.

Teachers will be evaluated on their knowledge of their subject, their competence in teaching techniques and their understanding of child development, according to the guidelines released in Chicago.

Copies also were made available in Washington.

The national board, proposed three years ago by the Carnegie Forum on Education and the Economy, is made up of teachers, government officials, business leaders and representatives of higher education.

Through the voluntary certificates, the board aims to increase teacher professionalism, upgrade children's learning environments and spur improvements in teacher training.

The credential also is expected to make teaching a more attractive career option and give teachers a chance to move into new roles requiring particular expertise.

Certified teachers may also command better salaries, but Kelly said that will depend on local authorities.

"The board has always said we want our certificates to be recognized," he said in an interview. "But it's not the board's business to say how each school district and private school should recognize certified teachers."

Kelly said the board will not limit the number of teachers it certifies and does not anticipate the credential being restricted to an elite group. But he noted that "not everyone who tries will pass. This is not a matter of mailing a transcript to the state capitol and getting a license back by return mail."

Evaluation methods may include multiple choice tests, essays, interviews, simulated lesson plans and parent conferences and observation of the teachers at work, the board report said.

A typical evaluation could involve videotape of an orchestra rehearsal or asking a teacher to come to an assessment center to defend his or her methods, Kelly said.

Cities Lag On Air

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Many major cities won't be able to comply with federal limits on smog-causing pollutants before the year 2000, according to a study released today.

In a report to Congress, the Office of Technology Assessment painted a grim picture of the outlook for urban smog reduction than was offered by President Bush in his proposals made last month for improving the nation's air quality.

Bush had said his proposals by the year 2005 would bring all but about 20 cities into compliance with the standard for ozone, which is created when volatile organic compounds from car exhaust and other sources mix in sunlight with nitrogen oxides that are formed by the burning of fossil fuels such as petroleum.

The Office of Technology Assessment, which spent two years studying the matter, said prospects for ozone reduction were much less bright, particularly in cities such as Atlanta, Dallas, San Francisco, Washington D.C., Boston, Baltimore and St. Louis.

A complete list of cities and their prospects for compliance was not available.

Friedman said it will take another 20 years or more before some cities, such as Los Angeles, Houston and New York, will be able to meet federal air quality standards.

At present, about 100 cities containing half the nation's population are out of compliance with ozone limits, according to the Environmental Protection Agency.

Apollo II Astronauts Celebrate

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — Twenty years after the first moon walk, the Apollo 11 crew called for further exploration of the lunar surface and Mars.

Neil Armstrong, Buzz Aldrin and Mike Collins, at a ceremony Sunday commemorating the anniversary of their spectacular liftoff on July 16, 1969, expressed their hopes for a rejuvenated space program.

On Thursday, the anniversary of the landing, they will join with President Bush for a celebration outside the National Air and Space Museum in Washington, D.C.

There, Bush will deliver a speech on space policy. Some are pressing him to announce a return to the moon, while others are pushing for an exploration to Mars. Many scientists are suggesting a joint U.S.-Soviet exploration for either option. Bush said in Paris on Sunday he was weighing different ideas.

At Cape Canaveral, Armstrong told 6,000 flag-waving space workers and their families Sunday that they should "allow ourselves just a touch of pride, a touch of satisfaction, that we were participants and witnesses to the birth of a new human era."

He said historians in future centuries will identify the 20th century "as the time when the human species broke the bonds of gravity that had heretofore bound them to this planet."

Leaders Set Broad Plans On Environment, Drugs

By Sally Jacobsen
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PARIS — The world's seven industrial giants agree on broad plans to clean up the global environment, fight drug trafficking and ease the debt burden of poor nations, but they are leaving it to others to fill in the details.

President Bush and the other leaders Sunday ended their two-day summit earlier than expected and congratulated themselves on how well they had worked together.

"The summit, in my view, was a clear success," Bush told reporters at a news conference on the manicured grounds of the U.S. ambassador's residence in Paris.

Canadian Prime Minister Brian Mulroney, attending his fifth conference, said it was "the one that achieved the largest degree of consensus."

"It was a splendid summit," gushed first-time participant Sousek Uno, Japan's embattled prime minister.

And Britain's prime minister, Margaret Thatcher, dismissed reports she had been snubbed by the French whose birthday bash for the 200th anniversary of their revolution coincided with the summit.

"Indeed, I have received every attention," she insisted.

The leaders' talks, held annually since 1975 to examine the economies' health, were nearly overshadowed by Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev, who sent a surprise letter urging more East-West cooperation on economic issues.

Bush said the letter, addressed to French President Francois Mitterrand, caught the leaders' attention. "It was just one more manifestation of the changing world we're living in," Bush said.

He and others, however, brushed aside suggestions Gorbachev would find a seat at the summit table next year. "That's a little premature," Bush said.

West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl said he was pleased the Kremlin chief recognized "the responsibility of the Soviet Union in resolving world economic problems."

The summiters — representing the United States, Canada, France, Britain, Germany, Italy and Japan — picked up on growing public worries about polluted air, water and land and devoted about a third of their final 22-page statement to the environment.

"Decisive action," they said, "is urgently needed to understand and protect the earth's ecological balance."

They condemned dumping wastes in the oceans, spilling oil in the seas and stripping forests of trees. They worried that excessive emissions of carbon dioxide and other gases could change the world's climate.

To arrest the deterioration, they called for more scientific research to come up with innovative solutions, urged industry to play its part and supported international efforts to save tropical rain forests.

"This summit marked a watershed in the environment," Bush said.

Environmental groups welcomed the high profile given the pollution fight but complained about the lack of specific details.

"The heads of state have failed to propose the decisive actions necessary to confront the deteriorating trends," said Rafe Pomerance, senior associate at the World Resources Institute in Washington.

The leaders also appealed for "decisive action" to stem the production and demand for illegal narcotics and backed Mrs. Thatcher's call for a conference next year on the problem.

They also agreed to set up a task force to come up with ways by April 1990 to keep drug traffickers from using private banks to launder, or hide the origin, of their illicit profits.

Turning to economic issues, they embraced the latest efforts to help the developing nations in their struggle with $1.3 trillion in foreign debts. The new strategy, unveiled last March by Treasury Secretary Nicholas Brady, emphasizes debt reduction or forgiveness for those countries.

"Our approach to the debt problems has produced significant results," they said, "but serious challenges remain."

They urged bankers to take "realistic and constructive approaches" in negotiations with poorer countries and "move promptly" to wind up those talks on new debt-reduction programs.

Mexico, the developing world's No. 2 debtor after Brazil, is expected soon to reach an agreement with its bankers for a new debt plan. When it does, it will become the first to take advantage of the Brady plan.

The "Summit Seven" said they saw no recession in sight but issued a cautionary note about rising inflation in some countries.

They singled out the United States, Canada and Italy for more work on reducing their governments' red ink. Japan and Germany, they said, should take additional steps to reduce their large trade surpluses.

The United States will host next year's summit. No place has yet been picked but Bush hinted his home state of Texas would be a "distinct possibility."

French Basking After Weekend Of Celebrating

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PARIS — The market for bicentennial trinkets is slack and the streets are clean again, but France and its leaders are still basking in the glow of their wild bicentennial weekend.

Until the final moment, the plans to mark the French Revolution's 200th birthday brought waves of criticism.

The skeptics said Paris would be a nightmare of gridlock, a whacky parade Friday night would be a disaster and the entire show constituted an attempt to glorify Socialist President Francois Mitterrand.

On Sunday, Mitterrand intoned royally: "What counts is the result." Parades and fireworks in the center of Paris attracted the capital's biggest crowds since the city was liberated from the Nazis.

"More than a million Parisians, tens of millions of French people, and hundreds of millions of television viewers in the entire world saw on this occasion an image of France particularly rich in symbols," Premier Michel Rocard said in a message to the chief of the country's Bicentennial Mission, historian Jean-Noel Jeanneney.

Also watching were more than 30 world leaders, including President Bush. They came to Paris for the annual summit of the world's seven richest countries and to attend the bicentennial festivities.

Mayor Jacques Chirac and other conservative leaders snubbed the parades, but even rightist newspapers usually hostile to Mitterrand saluted the commemorations in rapturous style.

"The Triumph of the Revolution," the conservative daily Le Figaro said in a banner headline. In a front-page editorial, it described Friday night's show as "colossal, superb and solemn. With humor as well."

The parade along the Champs-Elysees, a flight of imagination created by advertising specialist Jean-Paul Goude, offered everything from African drummers to Scottish pipers to the Florida A&M marching band moonwalking in the style of singer Michael Jackson.

In a reminder of the price of freedom, hundreds of Chinese studying in the West marched to solemn music, with headbands showing the Chinese characters for the French Revolution's watchwords: "Liberty, Equality, Fraternity."

By Sunday, as festivities grew old, the crowds on the Champs-Elysees also thinned and slowed down.

"Everybody's worn out," said Maguelone Fallot, who wasn't having much luck selling her bicentennial keepsakes on the famous avenue.

"These things are expensive," she said, pointing to her $23 wig in the blue, white, and red of the French flag and a $15 bicentennial tie.

The capital's street cleaners, in their bright green suits, were out early Sunday morning to clean up the confetti and other trash.

The bicentennial ceremonies began Thursday with dramatic readings from the Declaration of the Rights of Man with the visiting presidents and prime ministers in attendance.

China Issues Strong Denouncement Of Comments By Western Leaders

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BEIJING — China today denounced the seven leading industrialized nations for their "gross interference" in calling on China's Communist leaders to end their crackdown on participants in the pro-democracy movement.

The strongly worded response mirrored earlier Chinese reaction to sanctions individually imposed by some of the seven, including the United States and France, after the Chinese army violently crushed the movement on June 4.

President Bush has suspended all military sales to China.

A front-page editorial in the Communist Party newspaper, the People's Daily, called on the Group of Seven to follow a value-free foreign policy based on economic and strategic considerations.

"The actions taken by the Chinese government have in no way offended the West or any other country," it said. "The problem arises simply because certain countries, out of their own likes and dislikes and their sense of value, have in a broad scope directly damaged China's interests and dignity with words and deeds."

The editorial said China has "global strategic importance and can provide an enormous market. The near-sighted practice of keeping China away from the world community may not only undermine world peace and stability, but hurt the interests of the Western countries as well."

For years China crafted its own foreign policy with a heavy ideological content, but in the past decade it has shifted to a more hard-nosed policy based on practical interests. It has shed its isolation of the 1960s and early 1970s, and exchanges in education, culture, science and sports have become routine.

Most important, foreign investment and technology are now key to its ambitious goal of doubling national income by the year 2000. But the editorial said foreign withdrawal of investment would only encourage a spirit of self-reliance.

The Group of Seven — the United States, Great Britain, West Germany, Italy, France, Japan and Canada — included their comments on China in a communique issued at the end of their Paris summit this weekend.

"We urge the Chinese authorities to cease action against those who have done no more than claim their legitimate rights to democracy and liberty," it said.

Hundreds of people were killed when the army attacked unarmed civilians June 4 in clearing central Beijing of pro-democracy protesters. Thousands have been arrested nationwide since and the official media have reported 12 executions directly linked to the protests.

Official Chinese news reports on the summit did not mention the portion of the communique dealing with China, but the People's Daily editorial was read on the radio and the official Xinhua News Agency issued a full English translation.

The editorial did not quote from the Group of Seven statement, but said it "made unwarranted charges" based on the seven nations' "so-called values."

"These groundless charges, which only represent gross interference in China's internal affairs, are certainly unacceptable to the Chinese government and people," it said.

It also reiterated government warnings aimed at Hong Kong residents who support the mainland's pro-democracy movement. The British colony reverts to Chinese rule in 1997.

"You carry out your capitalism and we carry out our socialism, and neither side should poke its nose into the other's affairs," it said. Hundreds of thousands of Hong Kong residents have protested the crackdown and some have helped smuggle mainland fugitives to the West.

"We advise those people not to lift a rock only to crush their own feet," the editorial said cryptically.

Terrorists Arrested

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PARIS — Police arrested suspected terrorists in connection with the summit conference of the seven major industrialized nations, Interior Minister Pierre Joxe said today.

But he gave no information about who was arrested, how many people were detained or exactly when and where the arrests took place. He told a news conference that details of the arrests would be made public "as soon as possible."

Under French law, police are not obliged to make such information available. The Interior Ministry is in charge of the national police, including anti-terrorist forces.

Joxe said his services had received no indication of an "individual threat" concerning any of the 34 chiefs of state who attended the bicentennial celebrations and the simultaneous summit.

Referring to those arrested, Joxe said only that "thanks to the reinforced surveillance, which worked well, the national police were able to make certain arrests."

EEC Plays Bigger Role In Summit

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PARIS — For the European Economic Community, the Paris summit of the world's major industrialized nations is a coming of age for a participant once viewed as a gate-crasher at these annual events.

The summit that ended Sunday asked the EEC to coordinate a sustained Western effort to bring food to Poland and trade opportunities to Hungary to reward these nations for pushing through democratic and economic reforms.

"This is the recognition of the increased weight and importance of the EEC in world affairs," said Claus Ehlermann, the spokesman for EEC Commission President Jacques Delors, who represented the EEC at the three-day summit.

The EEC's executive commission has attended the annual meetings of the leaders of the United States, Canada, France, Britain, West Germany, Italy and Japan since 1977. But to date, the summits have largely ignored the EEC's role as the world's largest trade bloc.

Instead, they focused exclusively on ways to harmonize the economic and monetary policies of the world's seven major industrialized nations.

But in a declaration on East-West relations issued Saturday, the summit asked the EEC to organize, within weeks, a meeting of western nations interested in helping Poland and Hungary.

Sunday's final communique praised the European Monetary System for having brought monetary stability to Europe, stressed that the EEC's plan for a borderless EEC by 1992 will lead to more trade, and welcomed the community's recent initiative to improve trade links with the non-EEC nations in Europe.

On all these points the EEC was mentioned by name.

By comparison, the communique issued after the 1988 summit in Toronto mentioned the EEC only once, in an annex paper.

For the EEC, Paris in 1988 is a far cry from London, 1977, when the EEC first joined the seven-nation summits as an observer, despite objections by then-French President Valery Giscard d'Estaing.

The French leader felt the EEC was pushing its way onto the world stage for no good reason. He boycotted the summit's opening dinner to protest the presence at the table of then-EEC Commission President Roy Jenkins.

At later meals, Giscard d'Estaing rejoined his counterparts as Jenkins was relegated to eat with the foreign ministers who always meet in the margin of each summit.

Referring to the EEC's growing economic clout in recent years, "the psychological climate has changed," Delors told reporters of the EEC's new stature at the summit.

"The EEC is no longer what it was five years ago. The seven (summit nations) have paid tribute to the EMS (European Monetary System) and its stability."

Delors is the key driving force behind the EEC's single market project that is rapidly nearing its Dec. 31, 1992, implementation date.

Husband Is A Loving, Generous, Womanizing Man

Dear Abby: I am an attractive, 49-year-old, professional woman, married for more than 30 years to a charming womanizer. He has had many affairs during our marriage.

He's a loving, generous man. I truly love him, and I know he loves me. But when I question him about his continuous affairs, he says he could die tomorrow, and he intends to enjoy his life fully while he's here and able to do it.

I've decided to continue our marriage, but a major problem is that

Dear Abby

Abigail Van Buren

I'm reminded of reality frequently by women leaving messages for him, sending him gifts and cards, etc. He also talks openly about his exploits to our men friends, and I feel anger at the invasion of privacy, and despair at his insatiable ego. Am I a fool to continue to live with this man? What do your readers who have been in similar situations think? — Pained In Sherman Oaks

Dear Pained: Obviously, your husband has made no secret of the fact that he collects women like a schoolboy collects baseball cards. When he tells you that he intends to "enjoy his life," and you accept his fooling around, that is tantamount to giving him permission.

Every woman has her definition of love, but how a woman could "love" a man who has taken a vow to cherish her and forsake all others, then openly makes a mockery of those vows, is a mystery to me.

Since his shabby treatment pains and angers you, and you continue to hold still for it, you should see a therapist to find out why you tolerate it.

Dear Abby: I need your advice on how I (a mother-in-law) should handle the following problem: Our son and daughter-in-law were married in August 1988. To this date, my friends have been calling me to inquire as to whether their wedding gift was received.

This is very embarrassing. Have thank-you notes gone out of style? I have questioned our son on a couple of occasions where money was the gift, and he told me those gifts have been acknowledged.

How should I answer my friends? — Embarrassed Parents

Dear Parents: I understand your embarrassment, but friends who ask parents if their children have received their wedding gift are putting the blameless parents on the spot.

I suggest that you give those friends the couple's telephone number, and suggest that they call and ask if their gift was received.

If you would like to write to Abby, send your letter to Abigail Van Buren, P.O. Box 69440, Los Angeles, CA, 90069. For a personal, non-published reply, enclose a self-addressed stamped envelope.

Abortion Arrests

CHARLOTTE (AP) — Thirty-four abortion protestors were arrested Saturday after refusing to leave a Charlotte clinic, authorities said.

All were charged with trespassing after they blocked three entrances to the Hallmark Clinic and refused police orders to leave.

They were among about 75 people who met at St. John Neumann Catholic Church at dawn and drove to the clinic in an effort to block women from entering for abortions.

Coastal Program

WILMINGTON (AP) — Three employees will be added to the state's coastal management program, and the program's director plans to hire them without having to pry money out of this year's tight-fisted Legislature.

George Everett, director of the state Division of Coastal Management, has shaken loose $185,000 in federal money — enough to pay three new employees for about two years. The division has suffered from the loss of key employees and a slow trickle of state money for coastal programs. Four employees quit in the past year, including former Director Dave Owens.

Arsenic Reported

BURLINGTON, N.C. — The body of an Alamance County man exhumed two weeks ago showed lethal levels of arsenic, state officials said today, while Burlington police said they have expanded their investigation to include the man's father-in-law.

James Taylor, the first husband of Blanche Moore, "demonstrated an elevated — within a potential lethal range — concentration of arsenic in all organs tested," the State Medical Examiner's Office said in a prepared statement. "It is our opinion Mr. Taylor suffered from arsenic poisoning, that this was the cause of his death."

The poisoning investigation began in May, when Mrs. Moore's present husband, the Rev. Dwight Moore, was diagnosed as suffering from arsenic poisoning. Moore, the pastor of Carolina United Church of Christ, is in fair condition at N.C. Memorial Hospital in Chapel Hill.

Taylor, Mrs. Moore's first husband, died of an apparent heart attack in October 1973 at the age of 45.

A second body exhumed from the same cemetery also showed signs of arsenic poisoning. Medical examiners said Raymond C. Reid, a former boyfriend of Mrs. Moore, was killed by arsenic in 1986.

Reds' Owner Would Like Quick Decision On Rose

But It's Likely To Take Several Months To Resolve

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CINCINNATI — Marge Schott says she's no different than any other baseball fan. She, too, wants a quick resolution to the uncertainty over Pete Rose.

The Cincinnati Reds' owner probably won't get her wish.

It has been 120 days since the baseball commissioner's office announced an investigation of the Reds' manager. Commissioner A. Bartlett Giamatti appeared to be close to making a decision at the end of May, but Rose got a delay in his hearing and then a court order taking the matter out of the commissioner's hands.

While the case languishes in the courts, Rose remains the team's manager, protected from suspension or firing by the court. And legal experts say it could be several more months before anything is settled.

"We're far from halfway through the court case," said Charles Wilson, a law professor at Ohio State University who teaches a course in civil procedure. "The court case is just barely starting."

That means the gambling allegations against Rose could keep overshadowing the game through the World Series.

"It's a shame. It's such a great American sport," Schott said. "I think people are sick of this. I know I am."

Rose won a major victory June 25 when Hamilton County Common Pleas Judge Norbert A. Nadel granted him a temporary restraining order that protected him from suspension or firing and effectively took the case away from Giamatti. Since then, the two sides have been locked in a legal skirmish waged in three different courtrooms.

The case currently is at a crossroads. U.S. District Judge John D. Holschuh in Columbus, Ohio, will make the next big decision: whether to transfer the case to the federal court system or leave it in Nadel's court.

Rose wants Nadel to keep the case. Baseball's lawyers want it moved to federal court, where they have won in previous challenges to the commissioner's powers.

Under a timetable approved by Holschuh, Rose's lawyers were to submit their final brief in the case today in Columbus. A spokeswoman in the judge's office said Holschuh definitely wouldn't decide today.

Wilson said it wouldn't be surprising for the judge to take several weeks, or even several months, before ruling.

"From any perspective you look at it, this can't be the most pressing issue on his docket," Wilson said. "This is a matter where frankly Pete Rose is certainly not being harmed by any delay, because he's getting paid and doing his job."

"And baseball is hard-pressed to argue it's being harmed because it has given him this much time anyway. Baseball is not in a position to argue, 'Judge, you need to move right away because we're being harmed every day.'"

While the legal case drags on, Rose also is being tested by his team's nosedive on the field because of injuries. The Reds have had 10 players disabled by injury, prompting them to fall from first place in the National League West to third, nine games behind San Francisco. The Reds have lost 22 of their last 32 games.

To try to protect his players from the distraction of media covering his lawsuit, Rose has met with the reporters and photographers in a large conference room away from the clubhouse after every game at Riverfront Stadium. During his post-game interview Sunday, Rose showed the strain of a 6-3 loss to Montreal.

"The walk from the clubhouse to here is starting to be a long, long walk," Rose said. "I'm going to invite you writers back into my office."

Schott, too, is showing the strain. She was admitted to a local hospital last month for tests.

Although Schott has declined to reveal the nature of her ailment, she indicated it was related to the baseball stress.

"These are tough times," she said. "It's been a very difficult thing for me, you know."

Holyfield Rips Rodrigues, Sets Sights On Mike Tyson

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LAKE TAHOE, Nev. — Evander Holyfield used right-hand power to beat Adilson Rodrigues, while his manager used a verbal battle in a bid to lure Mike Tyson into the ring.

"He (Holyfield) is a better fighter, a better person and he'd be a better champion," said Ken Sanders, who hopes those are fighting words to Tyson.

The 26-year-old Holyfield did his bit in setting up a battle of unbeaten with Tyson for the undisputed heavyweight title by starring Rodrigues with an overhand right at 1 minute, 29 seconds of the second round Saturday night.

Tyson will defend the title against Carl "The Truth" Williams next Friday night at Atlantic City, N.J.

"I'm the boxer and I feel I'll be ready any time the fight is made," said Holyfield, the former undisputed cruiserweight champion who is 4-0 as a heavyweight and 22-0 overall.

"The fight is inevitable," Dan Duva, who promotes Holyfield, said.

It would seem to be, barring the unforeseen, such as a Williams' victory. A Holyfield fight is the richest on the horizon for Tyson, probably more lucrative than a curiosity match against unranked George Foreman, the 41-year-old former heavyweight champ.

Holyfield would appear to be a much tougher challenge to Tyson's pride than Foreman would be.

Also, Holyfield is ranked No. 1 by both the World Boxing Council and World Boxing Association and is in line for mandatory challenges to Tyson. It is inconceivable that Tyson would allow himself to be stripped of championship recognition by either organization for not fighting Holyfield.

Shelly Finkel, an advisor to Holyfield and Sanders, said he expects serious talks to begin with promoter Don King, who advises Tyson, after the Williams fight and expects the fight to take place next year.

Duva and his father, Lou, who

McEnroe Is Sidelined

NEW YORK (AP) — Because of an injured shoulder, John McEnroe won't play in this weekend's Davis Cup semifinal matchup against West Germany at Munich.

McEnroe, hampered by shoulder problems in his Wimbledon semifinal loss to Stefan Edberg, will be replaced on the United States team by Brad Gilbert, a U.S. Tennis Association spokesman said Sunday from Munich.

USTA spokesman Ed Fabricius said McEnroe dropped out after visiting Dr. Irving Glick, the head physician for the U.S. Open, on Friday.

McEnroe was diagnosed as having rotator cuff tendinitis in his left shoulder. Glick told McEnroe that continued pain and stiffness in the shoulder would prevent him from playing in the five-match Davis Cup event Friday through Sunday.

Gilbert, who has a 3-1 career record against Wimbledon champion and West German star Boris Becker, will join Andre Agassi to play the four singles matches. Ken Flach and Robert Seguso will play doubles for the United States.

Either Eric Jelen or Carl-Uwe Steeb will play singles along with Becker for the West Germans.

Mike Donald Wins Busch On Fourth Playoff Hole

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WILLIAMSBURG, Va. — Mike Donald capped a 10-year quest for his first PGA Tour victory when he birdied the fourth hole of a rain- and darkness-interrupted playoff at the Anheuser-Busch Golf Classic today.

The victory, which came after Tim Simpson missed a 30-foot birdie putt, was worth $153,000 to Donald, 34, of Hollywood, Fla.

As darkness descended Sunday night over the Kingsmill Golf Club, Donald and Simpson eliminated Hal Sutton on the third playoff hole, where he made a double-bogey 6 and they both carded 4s.

Tournament officials then told Simpson and Donald to return this morning to continue the playoff at 427-yard 16th, a dogleg right with an elevated green.

Playing under gray skies and a continuing threat of rain, both players put their drives in the fairway. Donald, hitting first, landed his approach seven feet from the pin and Simpson hit it to 30 feet.

As the players walked on the green, a light rain began to fall, and Simpson, after lining up his birdie try, left it four feet short. Donald then wasted little time in knocking in the winner and going into a mini-victory dance.

Sutton and Simpson, who got the second of his two career victories earlier this year, won $74,800 each.

The three had finished four tours of Kingsmill's 6,776-yard, par-71 layout in 268, 16 shots under par.

Donald closed with a 6-under-par 65. Simpson carded a final-round 67, and Sutton, looking for his eighth title but his first in three years, had a 68.

Mike Hulbert, the leader after the second and third rounds, lost a chance to join the playoff field when he bogeyed the 72nd hole. His 1-under 70 left him at 15-under 269.

Before dusk halted play, heavy showers had prompted two rain delays, the second of which came as the trio carded regulation 4s on the first playoff hole and walked to the 177-yard, par-3 17th.

Simpson and Sutton both put their tee shots on the green about 35 feet away, but Donald was in deep rough down a steep hill beside the putting

Victories Key To Football's Big Bucks

For Division I-A Independents, Wins, TV, Bowls Needed For Financial Success

By Tom Morris
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

(This is the second of a series examining the challenges and concerns facing five southern and eastern Division I-A independent football programs including East Carolina.)

There's money just waiting to be made in the get-rich-quick world of college football, and the surest way to grab the bucks is winning big each fall.

The rising spiral of million-dollar television contracts and bowl game purses has made college football a lucrative business. With athletic costs rising each year, schools are becoming more dependent on that potential windfall from football to provide funding for the entire athletic department.

For independents like ECU, Southern Mississippi, Temple, Southwest Louisiana and Cincinnati, the road to the big money in Division I-A football must be paved with wins. Every loss is a crack in the pavement that slows progress.

A winning season can mean a bowl game, which means television. And that's where the money is.

"That's just a very realistic statement," ECU Director of Athletics Dave Hart said. "A good football season is such a positive springboard. It enables you to have more moneys available as football reaps more revenue."

"The first thing it is available to is the non-revenue sports. It is football's task to be successful to enhance that revenue situation."

Last year, football provided approximately $1.7 million of ECU's total $4.7 million athletic department budget.

ECU didn't appear on television at all last year, other than some delayed broadcast on the Home Team Sports network. Yet as a member of the College Football Association, ECU did receive a payment of $100,000.

Independents are in a unique situation. They are true free agents in a market in which football conferences tie schools to television contracts and split profits.

If the independents appear on TV or go to a bowl game, they don't have to share the money with anybody.

On the other hand, a conference school that doesn't win still benefits if one of its members is successful and goes to bowl game or appears on national television.

"With the exception of a few independents, we all are basically in the same type group, with the only revenue we've got coming in is what you generate yourself," USM coach Curley Hallman said.

Last year, USM went to the Independence Bowl, which is one of the smaller bowls available. The payoff to each team was $600,000.

With football being the big money maker at ECU, success on the gridiron can be a boon for each of the 16 intercollegiate sports the school has.

"If you produce, success breeds other opportunities," ECU coach Bill Lewis said. "When you're not successful, that's when you're in trouble. I've been in the business 27 years, and that aspect hasn't changed."

The eye-popping level of potential revenue has forced independents to search for additional means of funding to keep pace with the richer powerhouse schools that take in millions each year from TV and bowls.

"The biggest challenge we face is expanding our funding base," Hart said. "That's a problem inherent to all college athletics. Everything's relative. But there's no question. Our biggest challenge is expanding in a manner that would allow us to continue to make progress as we have in previous years."

"In 99-and-a-half percent of the schools, football and basketball are obviously asked to carry the total financial burden, and that's a big responsibility," Hart said. "In a few conferences, the ACC for example, basketball plays a bigger role. In most institutions, football is asked to carry a larger portion."

Fundraising can also be affected by Wall Street. Southern Mississippi and Southwest Louisiana find themselves facing a funding problem that is no fault of their own — the fallen oil economy.

Both schools are located in areas whose economic base is dominated by the oil industry, which has been down in recent years. When a local economy is suffering, it's tough for people to justify luxuries like alumni donations to athletic departments and the purchase of season tickets.

"The thing that's hurt us is the

Fuller Named To East-West Game

Greenville Rose High School football player Raleigh Fuller has been named to the roster of the East team for the annual East-West All-State Game, to be played next week in Greensboro.

Fuller was an alternate pick after injuries and pro signings eliminated some of the first picks for the game.

A 6-3, 235-pound lineman, Fuller was considered during the first round picks when teammates Carlester Crumpler and Timmy Moore were chosen. Under game rules, only two players from a school may be selected. When Moore signed a professional contract with the Minnesota Twins, that left an opening and Fuller was asked to play, Rose coach Chip Williams said.

Fuller and Crumpler will leave Thursday to participate in the game.

Lennon Suspended After Charge

WILLIAMSPORT, Pa. (AP) — Patrick Lennon, the Seattle Mariners' first choice in the 1986 amateur draft, was suspended Sunday from the Class AA Williamsport Bills after he was charged with attempted murder, officials said.

Lennon, of Whiteville, N.C., was being held at the Lenoir County Prison on Sunday in lieu of $45,000 bail, according to Frank Anderson, corrections officer.

Lennon, 21, was arrested at his home early Saturday morning shortly after he fired a shot at Robert Victor Strickland in a parking lot, police said.

The two were arguing over a third man's attempt to pick up Strickland's female cousin, police said. Bills manager Jay Ward identified the third man as Calvin Jones, a relief pitcher on the team's disabled list. Jones was not charged.

Lennon also was charged with aggravated assault, possession of a prohibited offensive weapon, recklessly endangering another person, terrorist threats, simple assault, possession of an instrument of crime and disorderly conduct.

Lennon was suspended from the Eastern League team indefinitely, according to Brian Granger, director of player development for the Mariners.

Lennon was hitting .262 in 66 games with the Bills.

Houston Captures NASCAR Event

SOUTH BOSTON, Va. (AP) — Tommy Houston of Hickory, N.C., moved from the 28th starting position to win the Coors 200 NASCAR Busch Grand National race Saturday night at South Boston Speedway.

Houston's Buick was not fast enough in time trials to qualify for one of the original 24 starting spots. However, he was able to earn a provisional position based on his third-place standing in series points.

After making an early pit stop for a chassis adjustment, Houston sped through the field and took the lead from pole sitter Chuck Bown of Portland, Ore., on lap 124. He led the rest of the way in the 200-lap race on the .357-mile oval, winning $9,625.

Tommy Ellis of Richmond finished second in a Buick, three seconds behind Houston, with Bown third in a Pontiac.

L.D. Ottinger of Newport, Tenn., was fourth in a Pontiac with series point leader Rob Moroso of Madison, Conn., fifth. Moroso retained a 64-point lead in the series standings over Jack Ingram, who finished 15th.

Rounding out the top 10 were Larry Pearson, Jimmy Hensley, Ronald Cooper, Kenny Wallace and Joe Therman.

NASCAR Winston Cup driver Dale Earnhardt finished 28th in the race after being involved in an early accident.

Steinbach Rips Blue Jays

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Terry Steinbach always has a grand time against the Blue Jays.

"I don't know what it is about this club that seems to bring out the best in me," he said Sunday after hitting his second career grand slam and leading Oakland past Toronto 6-2.

John Cerutti, 5-5, gave up four hits and two runs in six-plus innings. Leading 1-0, he walked Carney Lansford and Jose Canseco to open the seventh and Duane Ward relieved.

Mark McGwire singled to load the bases and Dave Henderson's grounder forced Lansford at home. Steinbach, whose previous grand slam was against the Blue Jays' Mike Flanagan on July 2, 1988, then hit his fifth homer.

"I don't think he wanted to throw that pitch in that situation," Steinbach said. "It was a slider and I was just trying to hit a fly ball to drive in the run. When I first hit it, I didn't think the ball was out so I rounded first hard. Even if it wasn't out, I didn't think George Bell had a play on it."

In other games, Minnesota beat Boston 4-3 in 11 innings, Detroit beat Seattle 8-5, Chicago beat Milwaukee 2-0, New York beat Kansas City 10-1 in a game shortened to 6½ innings by rain, Cleveland beat Texas 11-5, and Baltimore beat California 3-2.

Mike Moore, 12-5, won his fourth straight start, allowing Toronto six hits in six innings.

"Mike's been a great addition to this club," Athletics manager Tony La Russa said. "It seems like every time we lose a couple of games, Mike puts us back on the winning track."

Todd Burns pitched 2 1-3 innings for his seventh save.

Twins 4, Red Sox 3

Tim Laudner had a two-run single in the 11th inning, after Mike Greenwell's home run off Jeff Rardon with two outs in the ninth sent the game into extra innings.

Ed Romero's RBI single off Randy St. Claire had given visiting Boston the lead in the top of the 11th. Gary Gaetti and Carmen Castillo singled off Rob Murphy, 1-4, to open the bottom of the inning and Gene Larkin sacrificed. Laundry then grounded a single between shortstop and third and into left field.

St. Claire, 1-0, got his first AL victory. Rardon blew his eighth save in 23 opportunities, including four of his last six.

Tigers 8, Mariners 5

Charles Hudson, 1-4, won for the first time since July 4, 1988, as Tracy Jones, Lou Whitaker and Alan Trammell hit home runs at Tiger Stadium. Detroit ended a 10-game losing streak, its longest since June 1982.

Gene Harris, 1-2, allowed four runs and six hits in two innings. He left with a bruised right forearm after he was hit by Dave Bergman's line drive.

Seattle had its five-game winning streak snapped and lost for only the fourth time in 17 games.

White Sox 2, Brewers 0

Richard Dotson, 3-6, didn't allow a hit for five innings and finished with a one-hitter over 7 1-3 innings. Chicago scored in the third on Ivan Calderon's RBI single and right fielder Mike Felder's throwing error.

Dotson, making his second start for the White Sox after the Yankees released him in June, was hitless until Robin Yount's sixth-inning single.

Don Pall gave up a hit to B.J. Surhoff in the ninth and Bobby Thigpen got the last two outs of the combined two-hitter for the 17th save. Visiting Milwaukee finished the year with a 2-10 record against Chicago.

Yankees 10, Royals 1

Greg Cadaret, 2-1, pitched a six-hitter in his second career start. He got a complete game when umpires called it because of rain after 6½ innings at Yankee Stadium.

"Of course, he's going to have to deal with my son and reach an understanding."

"I don't need to co-promote," Dan Duva said.

King and Trump's Trump Plaza hotel and casino are promoting the Tyson-Williams bout.

He outboxed Holyfield in the first round and was going toe-to-toe with him in the second when he was nailed by a right uppercut to the point of the chin.

Holyfield then landed a left hook to the head, dazing Rodrigues, and Holyfield, who weighed 207 pounds, beat the 221-pound Brazilian to the punch with an overhand right that dropped him for the 10-count.

Holyfield retained the WBC Continental Americas title with his 18th knockout victory. He earned a career-high purse of $1.25 million.

Rodrigues, who got $300,000, now has a 35-3 record with 26 knockouts.

Expos Stumble Past Cincinnati

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

If the price of admission to a baseball game was based on its length, 28,348 fans at Cincinnati's Riverfront Stadium got their money's worth. But if quality of play is the true barometer, they should have lined up for a refund.

They were forced to sit through 4 hours, 8 minutes of stumbling and bumbling, which mercifully came to a halt shortly after Nelson Santovenia broke an 0-for-8 slump with an RBI single in the top of the 12th inning Sunday to lead the Montreal Expos to a 6-3 victory over the Cincinnati Reds.

The teams combined for 26 strikeouts, 17 walks, six errors, two wild pitches, a passed ball and 25 runners left on base.

"Today, we stunk up the place," Reds manager Pete Rose said. "We got two runs by way of error and one run with a bases-loaded walk."

He could have been speaking for both sides, but Montreal's Otis Nixon, who added insurance with a two-run double, had the podium for the Expos.

"That was an ugly ballgame. ... I don't know what was going on," Nixon said.

Neither did Cincinnati third baseman Lenny Harris, whose throw home hit Montreal's Tim Wallach in the back, enabling the Expos to tie the game in the fifth.

"When things go bad ... they go bad," Harris said.

The other 129,546 paying customers who watched National League games saw something more representative of the show. In those games, it was San Francisco 3, Pittsburgh 1; Atlanta 6, New York 2; Los Angeles 3, St. Louis 2, and San Diego 4, Chicago 3. Houston at Philadelphia was rained out.

Santovenia's single off Kent Tekulve, 0-3, enabled the Expos to overcome four errors.

Tim Raines opened the 12th with a single and was sacrificed to second. Wallach was intentionally walked to get to Santovenia, who grounded a single through the middle to snap a 3-3 tie.

After Andres Galarraga was intentionally walked with two outs, Nixon demonstrated his speciality — hitting with the bases loaded.

"I wish they could fill them up for me every time," said Nixon, 4-for-9 with 10 RBIs this season with the sacks packed.

Steve Frey, 3-0, allowed two hits in one inning of relief for the victory. Tim Burke pitched the 12th for his 19th save.

Giants 3, Pirates 1

San Francisco has had several pitchers shuffled back and forth between the disabled list and the active roster for most of the season. On Sunday, the Giants got Scott Garrelts back, and he paid an immediate dividend, pitching six innings of two-hit ball in a victory over Pittsburgh at Candlestick Park.

Jeff Brantley pitched two hitless innings and Steve Bedrosian got the final three outs for his 13th save and seventh in eight opportunities since being acquired from Philadelphia on June 18. Garrelts is 7-3.

The Giants broke a 1-1 tie in the fourth when Kevin Mitchell led off against Jeff Robinson, 5-8, with a single, went to second on Ken Oberkell's grounder and scored on Pat Sheridan's single. Will Clark added a run-scoring single in the fifth.

The victory increased San Francisco's lead over idle Houston to three games in the NL West.

Dodgers 3, Cardinals 2

Tim Belcher returned to a starting role and pitched out of jams twice as Los Angeles gained a split of its four-game series with St. Louis.

Belcher, 6-8, started a key double play in fourth inning after giving up both St. Louis runs. An inning earlier, he escaped a bases-loaded jam by striking out Vince Coleman and Milt Thompson and retiring Ozzie Smith on a fly ball.

Jeff Hamilton hit a two-run triple to key a three-run second for the Dodgers. The decisive run came on a bad throw by Thompson. The St. Louis center fielder caught Mike Scioscia's fly ball and overthrew both catcher Tom Paganzzi and Jose DeLeon, 8-9, allowing Hamilton to score.

Jay Howell pitched the final two innings for his 17th save in 18 opportunities.

Coleman stole his 40th and 41st bases for the Cardinals, running his streak of successful steals to 47 in a row. He has not been caught since last Sept. 15.

Braves 6, Mets 2

Darrell Evans hit the 408th and 409th home runs of his career, breaking out of a tie with Duke Snider for 21st place on the all-time list, to lead Atlanta over visiting New York in game delayed by rain three times for a total of 2½ hours.

Evans, at 42 the oldest player in the league, homered in the second inning off Bob Ojeda, 5-9, and in the fifth against Kevin Tapani. The next target for Evans is Billy Williams, who had 426 career homers. It was the second time this season that Evans, who has six homers, has connected twice in a game.

Jeff Blauser had a two-run single to cap a decisive three-run second by the Braves.

Rookie Marty Clary, 3-0, lost his bid for his first major-league shutout in the sixth when Howard Johnson doubled and scored on a double by Kevin McReynolds. Johnson hit his 23rd homer in the eighth.

Padres 4, Cubs 3

San Diego sent Chicago to its third straight loss when Tim Flannery's pinch-hit sacrifice fly with the bases loaded in the sixth inning climaxed a two-run rally by the Padres. Roberto Alomar singled to tie the score earlier in the inning.

Dennis Rasmussen, 4-6, went six innings for his first victory since June 29. Mark Davis pitched the final 1 2-3 innings for his 24th save in 27 opportunities.

San Diego's Chris James had three hits, including his second homer in as many games. The Padres' Jack Clark extended his hitting streak to 11 games.

Rick Sutcliffe, 10-7, took the loss for the visiting Cubs.

Lloyd McClendon hit his ninth homer, a two-run shot, to give Chicago a 3-2 lead in the sixth.

Aggressive Play Wins Open For King

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LAKE ORION, Mich. — In the hours before the most important round of her career, Betsy King decided she would leave nothing to chance.

"I knew I was going to play aggressively, and I wanted to find out early if I was going to hit the ball well," King said Sunday after a final-round, 3-under-par 68 that gave her a four-shot victory over Nancy Lopez in the 44th U.S. Women's Open.

King, who led through the first two rounds, entered the final day in a tie for the lead with Patty Sheehan. Also there was the memory of a third-round collapse on Saturday, when King lost a four-shot lead by taking two bogeys and a double-bogey over the final four holes.

It was a rare lapse for King, who with Sunday's victory — her fifth this season and 19th overall — became the first woman golfer to top $500,000 in earnings in one season.

A driver and a 4-wood on the Indianwood Country Club course's first hole erased that memory.

"I hit two good shots on the first hole and that was an instant lift," she said. "That was actually the first round I'd even hit the fairway on that hole."

King reached the 462-yard, par-5 in two and two-putted for the first of her five birdies. She followed with consecutive birdies on the par-3 third and par-4 fourth holes, with putts from five and 15 feet.

King three-putted from 65 feet to bogey the 170-yard, par-3 fifth hole and Sheehan, who scored her only birdie of the day on three, was back within one.

No one would get that close the rest of the way.

King birdied again on No. 7, where she hit a 9-iron to within 25 feet, then sank the putt.

Sheehan, who had vowed not to play under pressure in the final round, took a triple bogey on eight, where she hit her second shot — a 3-wood — out of bounds. King's lead ballooned to six shots over her playing partner, and only Lopez, who matched King's 68, came close to mounting a challenge.

Sheehan, a runner-up twice this decade in the U.S. Open, never recovered and finished with a 79.

King's 72-hole score of 6-under 278 was second best in the tournament's history, one shot more than Liselotte Neumann's winning score last year at Baltimore. But 278 was a notably impressive score, given the character of the 6,109-yard Indianwood course, with its narrow fairways, slick greens and waist-high heathered rough.

And while much of the field subdued Indianwood at least once — 16 players broke par on Sunday — only King conquered it.

"I played very, very well this week," said Lopez, whose 282 score was 12 shots better than her second-place finish at Hazeltine National in Minnesota in 1977. "The difference is that Betsy is playing great golf right now."

King, who did not win a tournament in her first seven years on the LPGA tour, has 14 top-10 finishes in 19 tournaments this season. It was her first U.S. Open victory and second major, her first coming in the Dinah Shore Classic in 1987.

"Five wins is probably going to be the year of my life golf-wise," she said.

King earned $80,000 from the $450,000 purse, with Lopez picking up $40,000. That boosted Lopez's earnings for the year to $371,439, second behind King.

Penny Hammel, who closed with a 67, and Pat Bradley, with her second straight 68, tied at 283. Dottie Mochrie and Lori Garbacz were next at even-par 284. Mochrie had a final-round 67 and Garbacz a 70.

The low round of the day was posted by Japanese star Ayako Okamoto, who tied the U.S. Open single-round record with a 65. She lost a chance for a 64 with a bogey on the final hole.

Laura Davies, the 1987 U.S. Open winner from England, finished with a 66 that included eagles on the par-4 seventh and par-5 12th.

surface. At that point, officials halted play for nearly an hour, and when it resumed, Donald chipped his ball to within two feet of the cup and sank his putt. His playing partners two-putted for their pars.

On the 438-yard 18th, Donald and Simpson both narrowly missed birdie putts from the 15- to 20-foot range.

"No matter what happens, I'm going to be really proud of myself," said Donald, who lost the only other playoff of his pro career. "I played some great golf."

Sutton put his drive on No. 18 in the left rough behind two small trees that blocked his approach to the green. His second shot cleared the trees, but came up short of the putting surface, and after chipping to within 25 feet, he three-putted.

The first rain delay occurred as Simpson, playing in the next-to-last twosome, approached the green on No. 18 for the first time Sunday.

Simpson said he had not been watching the leaderboards and was unaware that a par on the final hole would tie him for the lead. Instead, he said, the crowd gave him a different indication.

"With the shouts and everything people were yelling at me, and then when I tapped in for par," he said, "I thought I had won."

Seniors' Newcomer Captures Tourney

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich. — Life on the PGA Seniors Tour was just a beginning for John Paul Cain.

Cain, 53, a Seniors Tour newcomer who never played on the PGA Tour, won the Greater Grand Rapids Open on Sunday. Cain had never seen The Elks Golf Club until last week, but he obviously found it to his liking. He shot a 5-under-par 66 in last Monday's qualifier to get into the 72-man field of the $300,000 tournament.

Once in, he proved why he is a member of the Texas Golf Hall of Fame.

Cain shot rounds of 69 and 68, respectively, on Friday and Saturday. Then after beginning the day three shots off the lead, he emerged from the crowd early on Sunday.

He birdied five of the first nine holes and went on to finish with a 66 and a 54-hole score of 10-under-par 203, winning the $45,000 first prize by one shot over Dave Hill and Charles Sifford.

Cain was only the second qualifier to win a tournament on the Seniors Tour. Larry Mowry did it in the 1987 Crestar Classic.

"I didn't expect to win a tournament this quickly," said Cain, who entered the Senior Tour last fall. The Greater Grand Rapids Open is just his ninth event as a pro.

"I felt if I could just get in the tournaments I could finish the year in the top 30 money winners. This win means an awful lot to me," Cain said.

Cain's earnings for the year jumped to $69,988 with the victory.

Division I-A...

economic situation we're in," Nelson Stokely, USL head coach and athletic director, said. "It's made it difficult the last two or three years. Our budget's gone down. It's a real problem. We're probably operating shorthanded. It's not easy to go out in our area and ask for money. That's probably been the most frustrating thing. We don't have any control. We're trying to make do with what we have."

Bill McLellan, USM Athletic Director, said Mississippi, just like the Houston area, has been economically affected by the oil industry woes of the last few years, and that has brought on some attendance problems and financial concerns.

"That's where you talk about cutbacks," McLellan said. "If you watch your overhead, you can work. If not, you get out of balance. Every sport has its own individual coaches and assistant coaches. Overhead over the years has built up."

So success is tied in directly to funding. In order to win, a school has to have a few things working for it. A school has to be able to recruit the caliber of athletes needed to play on the Division I level. To recruit effectively, a school needs attractive facilities.

And that gets back to funding.

Modern facilities, be it stadiums, practice fields or multi-purpose athletic department buildings cost money.

"Kids need to see that," new Cincinnati coach Tim Murphy said. "In the 1990s, kids perceive tangible commitment in facilities. You don't have to have any ostentatious facilities, but they have to see commitment."

ECU and Cincinnati are both set to open up new buildings this fall that will house the entire athletic departments with everything from weight rooms to sports medicine departments.

"I think we will have a tremendous new plus with our new building," Lewis said. "Number one, for people in program, it's important to have a good facility. We now have a facility for all of the functions. The other part of facility is in the recruiting aspect. Your dealing with young people making a career decision. As they look, they make comparative decisions. We've got a new plus when it comes to that."

Conductor Karajan Is Dead At Age 81

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

VIENNA, Austria — Conductor Herbert von Karajan, the brilliant and revered maestro who stirred millions with his music and inflamed passions with his stormy life, is dead at age 81.

He was perhaps the world's most honored, prolific and well-known conductor.

Karajan, who resigned as conductor of the Berlin Philharmonic on April 24 after 34 years, died Sunday at his home in Anif near Salzburg, said Albert Moser, the president of the Salzburg Festival.

Austrian television said the cause of death was heart failure but festival organizers could not confirm it.

The conductor's membership in the Nazi Party during World War II and his volatile temper made him a figure of controversy throughout his life.

But fellow musicians adored his artistry — and his more than 800 recordings sold 150 million copies, the most by any conductor.

Karajan resigned from the Berlin Philharmonic during a dispute over his contract, but cited health reasons for his decision. He had long been ill and severe back pain made it difficult for him to walk unaided to the podium.

Despite his illness, Karajan had regularly attended rehearsals for the festival, Austria's largest cultural event, and was to have conducted the opening opera on July 27, Moser said.

A black flag hung from the festival building on Sunday, and Austrian television said celebrations that were to follow the premier had been canceled.

Born April 5, 1908, in Salzburg, the son of a doctor, Karajan made his debut at age 5, when he played Mozart on the piano at a charity concert.

A thirst for adventure often put Karajan at the controls of jets, fast cars and racing yachts. He climbed mountains and skied down the snowy summits near the Swiss resort of St. Moritz, where he kept one of his three homes.

Karajan, who considered Arturo Toscanini his idol, studied in Vienna but forged his career in Germany, where his first engagement was at the Stadttheater of Ulm.

In 1946, Karajan became conductor of the Vienna Symphony Orchestra. In 1948, he began conducting at the Salzburg Festival.

Floyd Concert Clogs Venice

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

VENICE, Italy — Historic St. Mark's Square was awash in trash and many Venetians were miffed after rock fans more than doubled the canal city's population for a performance by the group Pink Floyd.

"Venice has been desecrated: excrement on the streets, filth everywhere, violence, and drugs. Venetians can take no more of this," said Augusto Salvadori, president of the Committee for the Defense of Venice.

Saturday's show on a floating stage near St. Mark's drew an estimated 200,000 people to this city of 83,000, among them actor-director Woody Allen and movie star Tom Cruise.

On Sunday, the square was a sea of trash.

Fans at the concert had complained of lack of services, saying the city provided no toilets or emergency vehicles.

HBO To Offer TV Comedy On Basic Cable Channels

By Kathryn Baker
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — HBO, sensing a need for "transactional immediacy," figured to meet the challenge with a 24-hour-a-day "vertical format" in a basic cable milieu.

In other words, a comedy channel that you don't have to pay extra to get.

Beginning in November, HBO's Comedy Channel will premiere on basic cable systems — viewers won't have to buy HBO to get it. HBO executives said they would announce later this month how many cable systems will carry it.

The channel's format is still sketchy, but the plan is that it will offer quick bites of stand-up comedy, movie clips, stage bits and some full-length films.

HBO, which has been bread and butter to a lot of comedians with its "On Location" shows and "Comedy Experiment" series on Cinemax, has already signed a number of comedians to develop regular bits and programs for the new channel. They include Richard Belzer, Rich Hall, Paula Poundstone and Wil Shriner.

HBO will get a head start on MTV, which also announced a 24-hour comedy channel, HA TV, which is scheduled to premiere early in 1990. It's format, too, is still in the planning stages, but will probably more resemble MTV, with "comedy jocks" introducing material.

Dick Behrs, president of HBO's Comedy Channel, explained to a group of TV critics meeting here that viewers have demonstrated a need for "transactional immediacy."

"Consumers want what they want when they want it," he said, citing the popularity of microwave ovens and VCRs, for instance.

Behrs envisions viewers watching a favorite network series, cable show or movie and suddenly getting a nagging feeling that, in the motto of the Comedy Channel, there might be "something funny going on" over there. Zap. Faster than instant coffee in a microwave oven, they have switched over to the Comedy Channel for a quick chuckle.

The "vertical format," he explained, just means you only get one format, such as all news on CNN and all sports on ESPN.

The advantage of comedy programming, he said, is that it can be tempered to meet the time of day. But at no time of day will there be any R-rated language or subject matter, said John Newton, executive vice president in charge of programming for the Comedy Channel. This is, after all, advertiser-supported basic cable, not pay TV where viewers choose to get the material by paying extra each month.

There will be no Sam Kinison or other comedians who depend on working "blue," said Newton. In fact, he insisted that the Comedy Channel will not be "the stand-up channel."

"While there certainly will be some stand-up comedy, we hope to be associated with a more human, open and relaxed kind of comedy. A lot of stand-up is more aggressive, almost violent — 'I have the microphone ... I'm gonna make you laugh,'" Newton said.

A promotional tape showed comedians as hosts of regular features who talked directly to viewers and sometimes interviewed people on the street a la "Late Night with David Letterman."

Behrs said at first HBO planned to make the channel about 50-50 short bits and long-form programs, but cable operators said there was too much competition in long-form programming. Now the channel will be about 85 percent short bits, he said.

As for the comedy clips from movies that HBO wanted to include, that turned out to be a snap. Movie studios jumped at the chance to promote movie sales and rentals by letting viewers get a teasing glimpse of some of the best bits. A promotional tape of what the Comedy Channel might look like included, for example, a snippet of Steve Martin in "The Man With Two Brains," when a police officer pulls him over and gives him the world's most rigorous drunk-driving test.

Ebersol To Head 'Today'

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — NBC sports chief Dick Ebersol will assume control of the top-rated morning "Today" show, said Michael Gartner, network news president.

The announcement of Ebersol's broadened role came Sunday during NBC's annual summer press tour. Ebersol will take the helm of the morning news and features show in mid-August.

"I am not taking over the news department, I am working on one show," Ebersol said. "I think I can delegate well, and both departments will be very well served."

"Today" features hosts Bryant Gumbel and Jane Pauley, with Willard Scott handling weather duties and Gene Shalit covering entertainment.

Gartner also announced that NBC's news and sports departments will collaborate on several sports documentaries.

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
 ♠72 ♥QJ83 ♦J54 ♣Q1043
 The bidding has proceeded:
 North East South West
 1 ♦ Pass 1 ♥ Pass
 2 ♣ Pass ?
 What do you bid now?
 A.—Partner's jump shift is, of course, forcing to game, so you can't pass. It's a question of whether you should correct to three diamonds or bid two no trump. We prefer the latter because, with your soft values, you should do as little as possible to encourage partner.
Q.2—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
 ♠Q9862 ♥7 ♦86532 ♣95
 Partner opens the bidding with one heart. What do you respond?
 A.—Any action you take now is only likely to widen the abyss that is staring at you. Pass. Don't worry about how uncomfortable it will be for partner to be playing one heart. First, it's unlikely the auction will die there. And if it does, you are not doubled.

Q.3—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
 ♠AK97632 ♥73 ♦AQ76 ♣Void
 The bidding has proceeded:
 South West North East
 1 ♣ Pass 3 ♣ Pass
 What do you bid now?
 A.—You are in slam territory, and the answer could hinge on partner's heart control. Blackwood might not reveal his holding in that suit (suppose partner's response shows only one ace, what then?), so the answer is to cue-bid. And you should start with your lowest first-round control, in this case, four clubs.
Q.4—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
 ♠764 ♥A9 ♦842 ♣AKJ76
 The bidding has proceeded:
 South West North East
 1 ♣ 1 ♦ 1 ♣ 2 ♦
 Pass Pass 3 ♣ Pass ?

What action do you take?
 A.—You have a minimum opening bid, but what a minimum! Three honor tricks, a ruffing value and three trumps. Four spades is the minimum you can bid. Indeed, if you play that partner's three spades is forcing, you should cue-bid four hearts.
Q.5—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
 ♠6 ♥J105 ♦A104 ♣AQ9852
 The bidding has proceeded:
 South West North East
 1 ♣ Pass 2 NT Pass
 What do you bid now?
 A.—Three clubs seems so obvious you might wonder why this hand is in a quiz. Nevertheless, we consider three clubs to be a wrong answer; even if partner has a fit there is no guarantee the hand will produce 11 tricks. Our choice would be to play for nine tricks at three no trump.
Q.6—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
 ♠K8762 ♥KQ5 ♦Q7 ♣953

The bidding has proceeded:
 North East South West
 1 ♦ Pass 1 ♣ Pass
 2 ♣ Pass ?
 What do you bid now?
 A.—Close, but not close enough. Even though your queen of diamonds must be upgraded, your hand is riddled with losers. Pass. Partner needs enough for an invitational jump raise to make game a reasonable proposition.

Thornburgh Heads For Power Fight With Congress

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Attorney General Dick Thornburgh is headed toward a confrontation with Congress over lawmakers' insistence that they can disapprove plans to reorganize Justice Department offices.

The dispute was sparked by the FBI's decision this spring to downgrade its Butte, Mont., field office despite lawmakers' objections. Congress then banned any further reorganizations in the department before Sept. 30.

The disagreement reflects traditional efforts by lawmakers to preserve federal facilities in their jurisdictions as well as concern in the executive branch over what Thornburgh regards as a serious separation-of-powers issue.

The Justice Department is refusing to promise lawmakers it will abide by their objections to reorganization plans. That, in turn, is drawing threats by Congress to extend the prohibition into the next fiscal year.

Such a move could further delay Thornburgh's plan to merge 14 organized crime strike forces into local U.S.

attorneys' offices, an idea that is opposed by a number of lawmakers.

Justice Department spokesman David Runkel said Thursday the House and Senate appropriations subcommittees' insistence on the power to disapprove reorganization runs afoul of a 1983 Supreme Court ruling that one-house congressional vetoes were unconstitutional.

"It is our intention to work things out with the Congress and not have things come to a stalemate," Runkel said. "But there are certain prerogatives of the executive branch. There is concern that if we are not diligent enough these prerogatives will be eroded."

Rep. Neal Smith, an Iowa Democrat who chairs the House Appropriations subcommittee that oversees Justice Department spending, said Congress will tie Thornburgh's hands unless he heeds lawmakers' objections to reorganization plans.

"There isn't anything to work out," Smith said. "Either they are going to follow the custom or we will write in language when we pass appropriation legislation that they can't do anything."

Under an informal procedure worked out after the 1983 Supreme Court decision, administrative agencies give congressional committees 15 days' notice of any reorganization plans.

Smith said his subcommittee only rarely disapproves of such plans, but government agencies have by and large abided by those legislative decisions.

But recently, Congress has objected to FBI plans to downgrade the Butte, Mont., field office to a satellite office and merge the Savannah, Ga., field office with the agency's Atlanta field office.

The FBI says it will save $1.2 million over five years by transferring many of the 50 employees stationed in Butte to Salt Lake City.

The Senate Appropriations subcommittee that oversees the Justice Department disapproved the plan to close the Butte field office after objections were raised by Montana's two senators, Democrat Max Baucus and Republican Conrad Burns.

But the FBI went ahead with its plans in Butte.

Not only were lawmakers enraged by the breach of a custom, but some legislative feathers were ruffled when first word of the decision was received by a Republican member of the subcommittee, Sen. Warren Rudman of New Hampshire, instead of its chairman, Sen. Ernest Hollings, D-S.C., said congressional staffers who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Congress then voted the ban on further reorganization this year.

Thornburgh, in a recent speech to the American Bar Association, accused Congress of attempting "micro management" of executive departments.

He said the temporary reorganization ban "illustrates at its worst the kind of difficulty" that occurs from such attempts, he said.

Meanwhile, opponents of Thornburgh's plan to close 14 organized crime strike forces are eyeing the dispute as a possible opportunity to tie the attorney general's hand, according to one congressional source.

Opponents contend that closing the strike forces will make the Justice Department less effective in fighting organized crime.

"If they are going to play hard ball," says one congressional staffer, "we have the final way. We can play harder ball."

Two Men Stood By As Toddler Drowns

HOUSTON (AP) — Bystanders did nothing as two toddlers lay drowning in a swimming pool, said an emergency official who was able to save one of the children.

Fire Capt. C.A. Beasley pulled the two girls from the pool Sunday morning. Tiffidie Anne McGough, 15 months old, was dead at the scene, officials said.

Her 2-year-old half sister, Taffidie, was given emergency treatment and was in critical condition today at Texas Children's Hospital, said hospital information coordinator Tina Foster.

Beasley told the Houston Chronicle that two men were standing by the pool at the apartment complex when he arrived. They told him there were "dolls or dogs" in the pool.

"Regardless of what they thought they were, I can't imagine anybody standing there looking at two kids in the pool," Beasley said. "They would be better off out of the pool no matter what."

Officials believe someone at the scene must have called emergency officials.

The children had apparently wandered into the pool while their mother dozed in a nearby apartment, the newspaper reported.

"I don't understand why they didn't" try to save the children, said Tammie Patterson, mother of the two girls. "And I wish I knew who it was."

Patterson, 20, said she learned her children had fallen into the pool when an unknown man knocked on her door.

"I flew right past him, down the stairs and by the pool, and both of my babies were lying there," she said.

Taffidie's grandfather, who asked that his name not be used, was stunned when he heard that onlookers had not tried to save the children.

"It's hard to imagine somebody would do that," he told the Chronicle. "I'd help a dog if he were drowning."

Inventories Rise On Sluggish Sales

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Business inventories rose 0.7 percent in May while sales were virtually flat, the government said today in further signs of slackening economic growth.

The Commerce Department said inventories held on shelves and backlogs climbed to a seasonally adjusted $776.9 billion in May following 0.8 percent rise in April.

Business sales, meanwhile, increased a minuscule 0.02 percent to a seasonally adjusted $517.9 billion after rising 2.0 in April. Sales had held steady in March after falling 0.9 percent in February, the steepest decline since January 1987.

The May business activity produced an slight increase in the ratio of inventories to sales. It was 1.50, meaning it would take 1.50 months to exhaust inventories at the May sales pace. The ratio stood at 1.49 in April and 1.51 in March.

When not accompanied by increases in sales, rising inventories could threaten a recession by prompting manufacturers to cut back production until stockpiled goods are sold.

The May figures were further signs of a slowing economy.

prompted by Federal Reserves credit-tightening measures designed to halt inflation. Business inventories often rise during periods of slow economic growth as production outpaces demand.

The Commerce Department's retail sales figures for June, released last Friday, showed a 0.4 percent decline as consumer spending remained sluggish, particularly for cars and other more costly durable goods. Sales also dropped 0.1 percent in May, producing the first monthly back-to-back drop since the September-October period of 1987.

The automobile industry has seen a recent buildup of unsold vehicles and the Commerce Department said inventories rose 0.9 percent in May. It said sales were off 1.8 percent from April.

Wholesalers registered the only sales increase in May, up 0.5 percent. Manufacturers sales fell 0.2 percent and retailers were down 0.1 percent.

On the other hand, all categories showed an increased inventories in May. Manufacturers' backlogs were up 0.6 percent, retailers' rose 0.9 percent and wholesalers' climbed 0.8 percent.

Oil Samples Taken From Exxon Tanker

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SAN DIEGO — Scientists aboard the Exxon Valdez are collecting samples of the gooey blue substance still oozing from the damaged ship's cargo tanks, preventing its passage through California waters for repairs.

The research team, which arrived Sunday after the Valdez was moved into calmer seas off San Diego, is sampling the contents of eight torn cargo tanks and several more torn ballast tanks at various depths.

The sampling and testing of the materials will take about a week, said Coast Guard Lt. Larry Solberg.

A Coast Guard lab has concluded the material which has appeared near the Valdez since its arrival off San Diego one week ago consists of plankton and other micro-organic compounds mixed with traces of Alaskan North Slope crude.

The Valdez was towed 2,500 miles from Alaska, where it caused the nation's worst oil spill in March. About 11 million gallons of crude spilled in to Prince William Sound when the tanker struck a reef March 24.

Though all of the discharges spotted near the crippled tanker since Friday were small and dissipated quickly, state wildlife officials disagreed with Exxon officials' assessment that there was no potential hazard to marine life posed by the spillage.

Meanwhile, the Valdez was towed about 35 miles to calmer seas Sunday to relieve ocean stress on the ship's increasingly exposed steel framework.

The tanker was about 43 miles northwest of Point Loma and 14 miles northeast of Pyramid Cove.

Cancer Society Wants Poor Protected

WASHINGTON (AP) — The president of the American Cancer Society today called for a "guerrilla war" to extend cancer therapies to the poor and minorities, who have the highest death rates in the country from the disease.

Though survival rates for many cancers have increased dramatically, the poor and minorities are not reaping the benefits "because they are too poor to get early and adequate cancer treatment," said Harold P. Freeman, cancer society president.

"For these Americans, a diagnosis of cancer is most often a needless death sentence," Freeman said in introducing a report based on hearings the society held along with the National Cancer Institute and the Centers for Disease Control in May and June.

The cancer society says that in general, half of cancer patients are expected to survive their disease. However, Americans living below the poverty line have a cancer survival rate 10 to 15 percent below that for other Americans, Freeman said.

The society estimates that 178,000 people with cancer who might be saved through early diagnosis and treatment will die this year.

The regional hearings found that poor Americans are forced to accept substandard health care services and make extraordinary sacrifices to obtain and pay for the care, the report said.

"Based on the findings of this report, we need to declare a new kind of war on cancer — a guerrilla war — that will tear down the economic and cultural barriers to early and adequate cancer prevention, diagnosis and treatment, and dramatically increase cancer survival rates for all Americans," Freeman said.

The society distributed its report to President Bush, congressional leaders and Health and Human Services Secretary Louis Sullivan.

The cancer society also said it is committing $2.8 million for national demonstration programs in Harlem, Miami and Oakland, Calif., to develop cancer education and detection programs for the poor. The funds also will be used to support local education and research activities targeted to the poor nationwide.

"Poor people endure greater pain and suffering from cancer than other Americans," the report said.

Because they lack access to quality health care, their cancer is more likely to be diagnosed in advanced stages when treatment options are more limited and survival rates are lowest, it said.

The poor also are less aware of the warning signs of cancer and the medical system discourages preventive health care, which means patients often wait until their health problems are unbearable before they seek treatment, the report said.

For the 37 million people who have no health insurance and do not qualify for Medicaid, the emergency room becomes their entry to the health care system. They are often referred to hospital outpatient clinics oriented more to teaching than to caring for patients, the report said.

Fewer than 45 percent of those living below the federal poverty level are eligible for Medicaid, the report said. Patients are often driven into poverty to get treatment for their disease, but for many poor and near-poor people, a stigma against public assistance prevents them from applying for benefits, it said.

The poor are also "dumped" in public hospitals that serve the medically indigent and seldom have any continuity of care, a major problem with cancer since the disease often requires long-term treatment, the report said.

Study Says Street People Develop Close Relationships

LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

LOS ANGELES — A new study by University of Southern California researchers found that homeless women need protection so desperately that they often endure physical and mental abuse from a male partner "rather than face the unpredictable dangers of the streets alone."

The three-year study concluded that homeless people — and women in particular — develop social relationships on the street to replace the more traditional home and workplace relationships that provide most people a sense of security, well-being and identity.

The USC study also suggested that government and charitable groups would do well to encourage social relationships among the homeless. To do that, the researchers urged the development of drop-in social centers, free or low-cost restaurants and even the frequently outlawed street encampments as part of a "service arsenal" for the homeless.

The researchers who prepared the study — Jennifer Wolch, a geographer and associate professor in the USC School of Urban and Regional Planning, and Stacy Rowe, a graduate student in anthropology — worked as part of a larger examination of the homeless in Los Angeles undertaken for the National Science Foundation. Their goal was to aid public planners in dealing with the homeless problem.

"Assisting homeless people to rebuild their social networks can empower them," the researchers wrote, "and in so doing, help them in their struggle to re-enter the mainstream of society."

They found that the daily paths of homeless women — from their sleeping places to their designated panhandling corners to the welfare offices where they get money and shelter referrals — use people rather than places as the "anchor points" of their routines. As a result, the researchers concluded, homeless women need and strive for social relationships under conditions that those with permanent shelter might think impossible.

"On the street, sometimes literally you are moving day to day to day," Rowe said "so the relationships that you can form there are a little more tenuous, because there is no guarantee that the other person is going to be there tomorrow."

The researchers found that the most important component of homeless women's social network is their relationship with homeless men. Men outnumber women in the downtown Los Angeles Skid Row area 3-1. Estimates of the female population range from 6.5 percent to 23 percent of the estimated 6,000 to 30,000 homeless people living there.

The gender imbalance, the researchers say, leads many women to feel vulnerable to physical attack. Wolch and Rowe found that homeless women develop a support network of people who have homes.

Most Coal Miners Return To Work

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHARLESTON, W.Va. — Thousands of union coal miners returned to work today, but some wildcat strikers continued their protest, threatening to cloud the goodwill message their leaders want to send.

United Mine Workers President Richard Trumka, who was to meet Tuesday with a federal judge in Virginia and hoped to show the miners' desire to return to work, called for an end to unauthorized pickets and a monthlong wildcat strike.

Most UMW locals east of the Mississippi River met during the weekend and approved Trumka's request, which he issued Friday.

In southern West Virginia and western Kentucky, however, wildcat strikers again disrupted coal production today.

"Man, they're upset," said Danny Wells, a district board representative in UMW District 17, the nation's largest with 6,000 miners. "They are just upset with Trumka's call. They feel that's nothing been won yet."

Up to 46,000 miners in 10 states began wildcat strikes June 12 to support 1,900 other UMW members who have been striking the Pittston Coal Group Inc. since April 5.

Pittston was struck in part for its refusal to sign a contract guaranteeing full medical benefits for pensioners and prohibiting mandatory overtime and Sunday work.

The wildcat strikers also were protesting what they say were excessive fines and jail terms imposed on UMW members and supporters picketing Pittston Coal headquarters in Lebanon, Va.

Coal companies in states other than Kentucky and West Virginia reported no problems today, although their employees were unhappy over the back-to-work order.

"This situation at Pittston is not over, so naturally there is some unhappiness," said Jerry Jones, president of UMW District 12. "Everybody has the same sentiments and feeling. But Trumka has asked everybody to return to work as he tried to get the sides back to the bargaining table, which is what we are doing."

Illinois miners returned to their jobs early Saturday at some of the state's 40 unionized mines that had scheduled weekend work.

Miners working a shift beginning at midnight reported without incident to the Central Ohio Coal Co. surface mine, which covers parts of four counties and employs 700 miners, said Pete Carpenter, a clerk at the mine office, near Cumberland in Guernsey County.

Alabama and Indiana miners also began returning to work during the weekend. Missouri and Virginia miners had ended wildcat protests last month.

In West Virginia, however, pickets showed up outside a Hobet Mining Co. operation near Holden, about 60 miles south of Charleston, and UMW employees refused to cross the picket line. The story was the same at Island Creek Coal Co. mines in West Virginia and Kentucky.

"I don't reckon they'll be working," said a guard at Island Creek's Elk Creek No. 10 mine near Emmett, W.Va. Mine officials contacted said only that work hadn't resumed.

Island Creek's Hamilton Mines Nos. 1 and 2 and its Ohio No. 11 mine — all in western Kentucky — also didn't reopen with the midnight shift, as had been scheduled.

Many miners and their leaders say they are encouraged that U.S. District Judge Glen Williams had written to Trumka and Paul Douglas, chairman of The Pittston Co. — parent of Pittston Coal — and asked for Tuesday's meeting to discuss why negotiations broke down last month.

It was unclear whether Douglas, who has refused previous meetings with Trumka, would attend.

"The people and Mr. Trumka have to prove that the union is sincere about wanting a fair contract," said Lewis Blankenship, president of UMW Local 7970 at Coal Mountain.

"With the letter that Judge Williams sent, we want to show that we're willing to work."

A union official speaking on condition of anonymity said many of the wildcat strikers in West Virginia actually are striking Pittston employees. Under federal labor law, those miners are banned from picketing other sites.

Vatican Establishes Ties With Poland

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

VATICAN CITY — The Holy See and predominantly Roman Catholic Poland today re-established full diplomatic relations, the first time the Vatican has forged such ties with a Warsaw Pact nation.

The announcement by the Vatican and Poland's state-run news agency said relations, cut by the Communists who took power in Poland in 1945, are at the level of ambassador.

Negotiations had been going on for some time, and Polish-born Pope John Paul II indicated recently that an agreement was near. He disclosed a week ago that he intended to send an envoy soon but did not say when.

The Polish government has been eager to re-establish the ties to boost its standings at home and abroad. In the past, some Polish bishops were reportedly reluctant to do this, fearful that the Polish government would seek to go behind their backs and deal directly with Rome on church-state issues.

A major hurdle was cleared in May when the Polish Parliament enacted three bills establishing the legal status of the Roman Catholic Church.

Today's announcement said the agreement takes effect immediately.

The last papal ambassador to Poland left Warsaw on Sept. 5, 1939, at the outbreak of World War II. After a series of high-level visits, the two sides agreed to establish permanent working contacts in 1974.

Typhoon Kills 12

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MANILA — Typhoon Gordon left at least 12 people dead and hundreds homeless as it roared across the northern Philippines and out to sea, officials said today. Eight children swept away by floods were among the dead.

Rescue operations today were hampered by strong winds and heavy rain whipped up by a second tropical storm buffeted Manila and the western coast of Luzon Island.

The eight children killed during the weekend died in flooding near the Amurayan River near Bangar, about 160 miles north of Manila, the government's Office of Civil Defense said.

Nine other people were reported missing in the area, it said.

Four people were killed when heavy rain triggered landslides near the mountain resort of Baguio, 130 miles north of Manila.

In the provinces of Isabela and Cagayan, officials said more than 1,500 families fled their homes to escape floodwaters and more than 1,400 homes were destroyed.

Crop damage in the two provinces was estimated at $15.8 million. A bridge linking the two provinces was heavily damaged by the typhoon, officials said.

Gordon was the strongest typhoon to strike the Philippines this year. It slammed into Luzon, the main Philippines island, early Sunday with winds of up to 116 mph and was reported today heading for China at 14 miles an hour.
