Spy Suspect Had Access To Top National Secrets, Sources Say

By Lee Byrd
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — A top career diplomat suspected of collaborating with Soviet agents in Vienna had access to some of the nation's most sensitive non-nuclear secrets and once ran the U.S. embassy in that espionage-rich city before he was sent home for insubordination, sources said Saturday.

Meanwhile, Felix S. Bloch, former deputy chief of mission at the embassy in Austria, has received FBI approval to leave his Washington luxury apartment. But the surveillance of Bloch continues at a new, unspecified location, ABC News reported Saturday.

Bloch, who has not been charged with any crime, is the highest-ranking U.S. diplomat ever identified as the target of an intelligence investigation involving the Soviet Union.

The government is keeping close tabs on Bloch so he won't flee but ABC said that federal officials also are concerned that he might try to hurt himself.

Bloch was last seen by fellow residents of his apartment building on Thursday. Since then, they say, a heavy contingent of government agents, whose surveillance of Bloch had been obvious to his neighbors for weeks, apparently has departed as well.

The FBI declined comment Saturday about the status of its investigation, which was brought to light the previous night by an ABC News report which said he had been videotaped passing a briefcase to a Soviet KGB agent in Vienna.

That incident, according to sources who declined to be identified, occurred early this year, more than a year after Bloch was reassigned to a largely bureaucratic post in Washington.

The report said Bloch has been interrogated two times and claimed he would cooperate. But one government analyst told the television network that Bloch's cooperation has been "extremely limited."

A team of government psychologists, ABC said, does not believe that Bloch spied for money.

Sources told ABC that Bloch claimed he spied because he fell into a Soviet sex trap but investigators have discounted that story.

The government has not charged

Census Figures Will Be Watched Closely

By Stuart Savage
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Pitt County may top 100,000 in population, Dare and Carteret should show good growth, but the 1st Congressional District could include more counties following the 1990 census.

In just a few months, the U.S. Census Bureau will begin counting heads and gathering other information for the 1990 census.

The material gathered by the every-10-year census has many uses. It lets those interested know where people live, how much they make, what kinds of jobs they have, and on and on.

Population figures — how many people live where — are used by governments to allocate funds for any number of programs.

And population figures — based on the one-man one-vote doctrine — are used to establish congressional districts, state House and Senate districts, even county and municipal election districts.

East Carolina University's Regional Development Institute is in the process of taking projected population figures for North Carolina counties and comparing them with 1980 census figures to see how things might change.

"What we're trying to do," Janice Faulkner, RDI's director, said last week, "is do a projection to have some idea whether the counties in the east are losing or gaining," and to have "some gauge as to the accuracy of the census," when the final 1990 figures are in.

The RDI projections are also "preliminary work" on a census-based atlas to be published by the development institute, Mrs. Faulkner said. "We published an atlas based on the 1980 census," she said, "and we're going to do one on 1990.

"We get many requests for projections," she said. "The reason we do this is that policies have to be developed," based on the information the census generates. "Business decisions have to be made on good information.

"We are the source," many businesses and local governments rely on for this kind of information

Study Says Bid For Congress Costly

By Richard L. Vernaci
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Any outsider thinking about running for Congress better plan on spending more than a quarter of a million dollars or forget about it, according to a campaign finance study released Saturday.

Even then, a challenger would face long odds and probably still could not raise more money than an incumbent, said the study of the 1988 elections by the Center for Responsive Politics.

"House challengers who spent between $250,000 and $500,000 found the odds against them to be 11-to-1 on election day," said Larry Makinson, the author of the study. "Even those who spent more than half a million dollars had only one chance in six of winning."

He added that "those who spent less than $250,000 had a perfect record: They all lost."

In the Senate, the average election last year cost $3 million, according to the study.

Last year, 98 percent of the House members running for re-election won, while in the Senate, 85 percent of the incumbents running were successful.

The study is based largely on computerized financial information compiled by the Federal Election Commission, but it also compares that data with voting statistics and historical material.

In House races where the challenger spent $100,000 to $250,000, the incumbent spent an average of $520,255. If the challenger spent more than $500,000, the incumbent spent an average of $904,704, according to the study.

Still, having deep pockets is no guarantee of a seat in the House. Of the 10 biggest-spending challengers, only one, New York Democrat Nita Lowey, won an election, and she spent more than $1.3 million.

The average financial lead of incumbents over challengers has widened over the last few years, from $172,002 in 1986 to $264,104 last year. In 1974, the gap was just $16,532, and in relative terms, the challengers have been losing ground, the study said.

"I think the reason is people are seeing it is a very bad investment for half a million dollars," Makinson said.

The Center for Responsive Politics is non-partisan group, funded by private foundations, that does research on congressional and political trends.

County's First Female Magistrate Appointed

By John Bare
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

The first female magistrate ever to serve Pitt County is set to take her oath of office Monday in the Pitt County Courthouse.

David E. Reid Jr. of Greenville, Pitt's resident Superior Court judge, has appointed Cheryl Yvette Tyson, 26, of Winterville to the position of magistrate.

In a news release, Reid said Ms. Tyson will be the first woman magistrate in Pitt County since the position was created in 1968.

"I am proud to have the privilege of appointing Pitt County's first woman magistrate. Ms. Cheryl Tyson is personally committed to serving the people of Pitt County and has the educational training qualifying her to be a top-flight magistrate," Reid said in the release.

A Pitt County native and a graduate of D.H. Conley High School, Ms Tyson earned a degree in criminal justice from North Carolina Central University in 1981. William Nicholls Jr., trial court administrator for Pitt County, said Ms. Tyson will be the

City Eyes Unlawful Assembly

By J. Ward Best
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Greenville has positioned itself to curb problems associated with after-hours assembly in downtown parking lots.

The City Council will consider a proposal Monday to ban unlawful assembly in downtown city-owned parking areas and privately-owned lots.

City Attorney Mac McCarley, the author of the proposed ordinance, said he hopes it will lessen problems of vandalism, drug sales and drunk and disruptive behavior that come with large congregations of teenagers and young adults.

The ordinance is part of the city's ongoing effort to control drug and vandalism problems, Mayor Ed Carter said.

"We feel that we must get a handle on this to minimize the opportunities for illegal activities," Carter said.

The measure is aimed at groups that congregate in the city lots. It does not establish a curfew for parking.

The ordinance would make it illegal for one or more people to use city lots for any reason except for lawfully parking a vehicle and leaving the lot "without delay."

The law allows patrons to re-enter the lot "without delay and proceed and "it has to be the most accurate we can gather."

Many people feel that the residents of the 1st Congressional District, which now includes 21 eastern counties, may, in a sense, lose representation when districts are realigned based on the 1990 census because more counties may have to be added to the district, based on the one-man one-vote rule. On the other hand, residents of the Piedmont area may gain representation with smaller districts through greater population growth.

What do the RDI figures show?

"That's a loaded question," according to Talmadge Page, an economic development specialist with RDI, who has been doing research and putting the projections together.

"It's almost impossible to tell" at this point, Page suggests. "It would take several days to look at the figures and see if they tell you anything."

But Page said, "The general consensus, I think, is that the Piedmont has grown much more than eastern North Carolina in population," and as a result, will have "more representatives. Whether or not that will come to pass in this census, I don't know."

Page said that according to the projections, "in general, everything in the state is growing. I feel safe in saying the Piedmont area is certainly growing faster than the eastern area. My problem is I just don't have the time to try to come up with anything I could back up, so to speak.

"The way the Piedmont is growing, they're going to have the majority of representatives in that area. I agree with that. I just have trouble coming up with something I could back it up with."

In general, Page suggested, population projections for the 1st Congressional District suggest that "we still have an out-migration from poor areas to more affluent areas.

"In my opinion, all around Halifax (county), that area, there's a decrease in population due to lack of jobs, education, while Elizabeth City, Manteo, are probably growth areas. I do know that Carteret and Dare (counties) are two with good increases population-wise, with people coming in ... many retires coming out of Tidewater Virginia.

Number-wise, according to the projections, Pitt is by far the leader among 1st District counties. In 1970, the county had 73,900 residents, while in 1980 the population was 90,146. The 1990 projections place Pitt's total at 103,190.

Dare and Carteret are also fast growers. In 1970, Dare's population was 6,995 and 10 years later 13,377. The 1990 projections put Dare at 22,501.

Carteret, with 31,603 in 1970 and 41,092 in 1980, is projected at 54,043 in 1990.

Some counties with little projected change between 1970 and 1990: Bertie (20,528-21,171); Camden (5,453-6,040); Gates (8,524-9,996); Hyde (5,571-5,771); Martin (24,730-27,144); Tyrrell (3,806-4,208); Washington (14,038-14,604).

According to Page, total population of the 1st District in 1970 was 473,777, while in 1980 the figure was 535,810. Projected population in 1990 amounts to 601,550.

"It's interesting," Page said. Projections suggest that "Mecklenburg (county) increased more than all 21 counties in the First District" since 1970.

Mecklenburg's 1970 population was 354,656, while the 1980 census credited the county with 404,270, according to Page. Projections for 1990 credit Mecklenburg with 489,877.

The 1st District's growth from 1970 to 1990 is projected at 127,777, while Mecklenburg's projection is 135,221; from 1980 to 1990, the 1st District projection shows an increase of 65,740, while Mecklenburg's increase is some 85,607.

Newspaper Founder Dies

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LAS VEGAS — Herman M. "Hank" Greenspun, founder of the Las Vegas Sun newspaper, a one-time gunrunner and political activist, died Saturday after a battle with cancer. He was 79.

Greenspun, who had been ill for more than a year, died at home, said Ruthe Deskin, a longtime employee and assistant to the newspaper publisher.

A gunrunner for a Jewish self-defense organization that helping establish the nation of Israel, Greenspun challenged some of the nation's most famous people in his newspaper, which had a circulation of 99,000.

His "Where I Stand" column was a front-page fixture of the morning newspaper from its inception and he used the platform to promote a variety of causes.

Greenspun gained national attention in the 1950s when his newspaper went to war with Sen. Joseph McCarthy. He was charged with — and later acquitted of — publishing and mailing matter "tending to incite murder or assassination."

The incident arose over a newspaper column predicting the assassination of McCarthy by one of the people he bullied, and recommending he commit suicide first.

Greenspun was closely allied with Howard Hughes in the 1960s when the eccentric billionaire holed up in Las Vegas and bought a television station from Greenspun and several hotel-casinos.

Agencies Warn Spill May Have Long-Term Effects

By J. Ward Best
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

In spite of assurances from Weyerhaeuser Co., residents living along the Roanoke River may long feel the effects of a spill of pulp waste from the paper plant in Plymouth.

The immediate effects of the spill — possible fish kills and an overloading of nutrient in the water — worry scientists and researchers less than the long-term effects of the toxins in the waste. Federal and private agencies warn against the dangers of dioxins contained in the pulp waste.

The Weyerhaeuser plant in Plymouth on Wednesday spilled nearly four million gallons of untreated pulp waste in Welch Creek, a tributary of the Roanoke River, when a power outage knocked out pumps to the waste treatment plant.

Recent heavy rains saved the creek and the river from an immediate fish kill in the area by diluting the spill and washing the waters, officials said.

Doug Rader, senior scientist with the North Carolina Environmental Defense Fund, called the pulp waste from paper mills such as the Weyerhaueser plant "probably the most complex industrial waste that exists."

"It's a veritable witch's brew of toxic substances," Rader said.

He also said the dioxins contained in the waste are "one of the most extremely toxic carcinogens known to man."

The dioxens, known as tetrachlorol dibenzoparadioxen, or TCDD, come from the chemicals used to bleach paper products.

Officials at Weyerhaeuser admit to releasing dioxens into the waters on a regular basis, but contest the claims of danger from small amounts of the toxin.

John Pritchard, technical services manager for Weyerhaeuser, said the Wednesday spill would have little impact on the river or its inhabitants.

"What went into Welch Creek was extremely, extremely minimal," Pritchard said.

He also contested reports of danger from dioxin contamination in the fish. Pritchard said Weyerhaeuser released approximately one gram of dioxen per year through its waste treatment. And the levels do not present any problems to the fish or people eating them, he said.

"I certainly would not hesitate to eat them," Pritchard said.

Rader feels differently.

Scientists warn that even low levels of dioxins can cause cancer in humans.

"I wish I had better news for the people out there about the safety of those fish," Rader said. "Right now it's suspect at best."

The danger from dioxins, Rader explained, comes from its accumulation in fish feeding near the plant.

Bottom feeders and larger fish store the dioxins in their tissue for as long as 12 years, the half-life of the contaminant. Because of its stability, dioxins levels in the fish continue to climb until they die or are consumed.

Pritchard claims that scientific evidence is insufficient to prove a real threat to humans of dioxins causing cancer.

Dr. Debdas Mukerjee, senior science advisor with the environmental criterion office of EPA in Cincinnati, said anyone claiming low levels of dioxins are safe does not know what they are talking about.

Mukerjee said researchers now have ample evidence of danger to humans from dioxins even from small doses. And he said, "the data is becoming more strong."

He also said evidence from independent research carried more weight than in-house studies from companies hoping to show "everything is fine and dandy."

Mukerjee said dioxins are a known carcinogen in animals, and lead to human problems such as chloracne, liver dysfunction, loss of libido and cancer.

A state analysis released last year indicated some of the highest levels of dioxin contamination of fish in the nation near the Weyerhaeuser plant in Plymouth.

The Division of Environmental Management, one of the three state agencies responding the Wednesday's spill, does not routinely monitor industrial waste discharge for dioxins, but requires certain industries, including Weyerhaeuser, to supply self-monitoring reports on dioxin releases and contamination.

Rader said the continued threat from pulp and paper mills presented a challenge to the public to call for not only cleaner but also safer waters.

Unlawful Assembly Pondered

to a lawfully parked vehicle and then leave."

The ordinance does not define "delay."

There are several exceptions, including allowing parking for lawfully permitted public events such as parades, fireworks displays, demostrations or picketing. There are also exceptions for emergencies and to turn a vehicle around to travel on the same street in a different direction.

Private property owners may prohibit unwanted assemblies in their downtown lots by posting signs announcing that trespassing is banned between certain hours and on weekends.

The city's public works department has agreed to produce signs for businesses to post, and the ordinance would make it illegal for unauthorized persons to enter or remain in the private lots in the prohibited time periods.

McCarley said the ordinance also hopes to address a little seen or publicized problem — trash.

"The public doesn't realize how much litter is out there," said Mayo Allen, Greenville's director of public works.

Public works operates a one-man litter patrol eight hours a day, seven days a week. That one trash collector can cover the entire city in one shift except on weekends.

Each Saturday and Sunday the litter patrol begins at 5 a.m. and spends four hours cleaning the lots frequented by the youths. The lots on Cotanche and Fifth Street draw the big crowds — and most trash, Allen said.

Sometimes public works hires an assistant to help with the clean-up. The department also cleans private lots occasionally because the trash left from the night before demands attention.

"Wouldn't it be nice if everybody would just say, 'I'm not going to leave any litter.' These signs would probably never have come about," Allen said.

The ordinance has drawn support from city agencies, downtown merchants and Evergreen, the downtown revitalization group. But McCarley knows support from one group does not always translate to compliance by another group.

"Trying to enforce this thing is going to take some manpower and some real persuasive power," the attorney said.

The ordinance could encounter some weighty legal snags as well. The United States Constitution guarantees the right to peaceably assemble.

Knowing the law, McCarley said he strictly defined the illegal activity to avoid any problems with the fundamental law of the nation.

"Governments have the right to reasonably restrict the time, place and manner of assembly," McCarley said. The Constitution does not protect the destructive and sometimes illegal behavior taking place in the parking lots, he said.

"If they want to raise their constitutional objections to this ordinance," McCarley said, "they will have their opportunity in District Court."

The maximum penalty for the misdemeanor is six months in jail or a $500 fine.

McCarley conceeded that state courts may overturn the ordinance as unconstitutional, and the gatherers may just move to other areas of the city. But he said that with citywide support for the ordinance, enforcment by the police and a little parental guidance, the ordinance can solve some of Greenville's late-night problems.

"We are confident that we have a shot at success," McCarley said.

first Pitt magistrate to hold a criminal justice degree.

Most magistrates are male, but Ms. Tyson said she knows of a few other female magistrates across the state. Nicholls said Craven and Carteret counties each have a woman serving as in the position.

Ms. Tyson said being a woman should not present any problems for her on the job.

"None at all," she said. "I feel like it will be a great challenge. I'm honored to be the first female to be appointed. Criminal justice is an open field, and being a magistrate will put me in touch with many different aspects of criminal justice."

Reid said Ms. Tyson will be an asset to the county's court system.

"I am confident she will soon be recognized as a vital resource of our court system. I'm pleased to welcome her to a career of public service," he said.

She has interned at the Durham County Courthouse and the Troy Halfway House and served as a volunteer at the Pitt County Mental Health Detox Center. She is set to attend a training school at the Institute of Government at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill on July 31.

Reid is scheduled to administer the oath of office at a ceremony Monday at 8:30 a.m.

Rose Kennedy Celebrates 99th

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

HYANNIS PORT, Mass. — Rose Kennedy celebrated her 99th birthday Saturday night with roses, Irish tunes, chocolate cake and her great granddaughter, Rose Kennedy Schlossberg, age 1.

More than three dozen members of the Kennedy clan gathered at the family compound on Cape Cod for the celebration, which included a special Mass and Mrs. Kennedy's favorite cake.

A pianist played the Irish tunes she loves, including "Sweet Adeline," which was the theme song of her father, former congressman and Boston mayor John F. "Honey Fitz" Fitzgerald.

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy presented his mother with 99 pink roses and a note "to the rose of all roses and the greatest mother of them all."

Mrs. Kennedy is the mother of a nine children, including slain president John F. Kennedy and Sen. Robert F. Kennedy. She can no longer walk, and her vision is poor, but she is still alert, her doctors said.

Cardinal Bernard Law, the archbishop of the Boston Archdiocese, visited Mrs. Kennedy earlier in the day, and her daughter-in-law, Ethel, took her for a walk in her wheelchair along the compound drive.

Family spokeswoman Melody Miller said Mrs. Kennedy's seat for the birthday celebration was in the center of the room, next to the piano, so she could see all her grandchildren and great grandchhildren and hear everything.

Residents Evacuated

FREELAND, Mich. (AP) — A CSX Transportation Inc. freight train derailed Saturday, igniting a fire in a tank car loaded with toxic chemicals and in at least one house, officials said. More than 400 people were evacuated.

Diplomat Suspected Of Being A Spy Had Access To Top Secrets

Bloch, hoping that he will voluntarily tell investigators the extent of the information he provided to the East, ABC said.

In New York City, former Ambassador Ronald S. Lauder, a candidate for the Republican nomination for mayor, said Saturday that he demanded in 1987 that Bloch be recalled to Washington because "He went outside of channels ... he went around me" in dealings with the Austrian Foreign Ministry.

Lauder said, however, that he had no indication that Bloch, an Austrian native, had been dealing with the Soviets.

Lauder, a political appointee as ambassador who himself has been criticized for his service in Vienna, said he inherited Bloch as his top deputy when he arrived at the embassy in April 1986.

Bloch had been there for six years already, and was in charge of the embassy during a lapse between the departure of Helene Von Damm and Lauder's confirmation, Lauder said. A congressional source, meanwhile, speculated that Bloch was the effective day-to-day chief of the embassy throughout the time that Ms. Von Damm, also a political appointee and widely criticized as a social butterfly, was there.

Lauder said he grew increasingly dissatisfied with Bloch over "insubordination" and demanded that he be recalled in July 1987. The State Department complied within a matter of "days or weeks," he said.

Lauder said he knew nothing of the current investigation before hearing news reports Friday. He said he has since spoken with the State Department about the case, but declined elaboration.

"I thought he was a poor member of the staff. So I got rid of him. If I thought he was a spy, I would have had him arrested," Lauder said.

Lauder said Bloch did have access to "a great deal" of classified information, and that he "could do severe damage." But "At this point we do not know" whether that has occurred.

"It could have potential impact, a great deal of impact on the United States," Lauder continued. "He had a great deal of access."

Asked specifically whether Bloch had access to names of CIA agents in Europe, Lauder said "that was not part of his job" but he couldn't say whether Bloch did or did not. The Vienna embassy, according to sources, houses a major CIA contingent.

Lauder described Bloch, who joined the foreign service in 1958, as "very dour."

Asked for specifics of the alleged insubordination, Lauder said:

"He went outside of channels and he spoke with the Foreign Ministry without my permission. ... He went around me. He went directly to the Austrian foreign ministry ... on State Department matters dealing with Austrian-U.S. relations."

Lauder said Bloch was too close to the Austrian government, and "extremely close to the foreign minister."

Bloch was born in Austria, and his wife, Lucille, runs an Austrian-American institute in Washington.

Bloch has not returned since Thursday to his elegant Washington apartment, according to fellow residents of the building. Calls to his answering machine were not returned.

"As far as I know, he's in the Washington area," State Department spokeswoman Anita Stockman said Saturday. "But I would have to defer to the FBI."

Ms. Stockman confirmed the previous night that the department, in conjunction with the FBI, is "pursuing the inquiry thoroughly in order to identify the compromised security which has occurred and the appropriate legal steps." Another department official, Richard Boucher, said Bloch, currently the director of one of the 11 offices of the Bureau of European and Canadian Affairs, has been placed on leave and his building pass and security clearance have been withdrawn.

At the White House, spokesman Steve Hart said President Bush, who was spending the weekend at Camp David, Md., had been notified about the probe, but didn't know precisely when.

Key members of the House and Senate Intelligence Committees declined comment, but sources indicated the panels had been briefed on the case.

Meanwhile, a Senate Foreign Relations Committee source said that while that panel has yet to be notified of the investigation, members are particularly concerned at the circumstances surrounding Bloch's tenure at the Vienna embassy.

As deputy chief of mission, Bloch routinely would have had access to most department cable traffic between European embassies and Washington, and also would have seen a daily compendium of intelligence information and the department's key political reports on Moscow and the Warsaw Pact nations.

The embassy is known to be the site of a sizable CIA station, and sources said Bloch would have had at least general knowledge of the agency's activities in Vienna, a traditional hotbed for espionage.

Vienna also has been the site of the long-running and largely unfruitful negotiations on conventional arms reduction in Europe, known the Mutual Balanced Force Reduction talks, and a wide variety of other East-West meetings. Bloch and other embassy officials were responsible for providing support to the U.S. teams.

Sources expressed doubt that Bloch would have had access to particularly sensitive nuclear secrets, since the embassy has had little involvement with the strategic arms talks. But they reiterated that he would have known a great deal about U.S. strategy regarding the conventional arms talks and political and economic issues.

The Senate Foreign Relations official noted, moreover, that Bloch served under Ms. Von Damm and Lauder, both of whom have drawn fire as lackluster political appointees and were unpopular with the embassy staff. That increased the odds that Bloch was "the hands-on, day-to-day guy who sees everything," this source said.

Normally, a diplomat of Bloch's rank and service could expect to step into an ambassadorial post, and some officials speculated he may have been embittered at not having been so rewarded.

Preston Pitts, who lives in the same apartment building, said Bloch recently "told me he was being considered for an ambassadorial position in Central or Latin America," and that when government agents first appeared outside the building 3½ weeks ago, "I first assumed they were for his protection."

Pitts said he last saw Bloch and his wife on Thursday, when the agents "were like ants outside the building. I saw five or six cars with two people in each of them." He said he asked Bloch 'Are you in any danger?' and he said 'No, I don't think we are in the least.' That was the last time I saw him." And this morning, there was no sign of the agents."

"I am absolutely flabbergasted. He was such a gentleman," Pitts said. Collins Bird, another neighbor, said, "You never know who you're living next door to. He's a very nice, pleasant man."

Bloch, who turned 54 Wednesday, holds a bachelor's degree from the University of Pennsylvania and a master's degree from the University of California at Berkeley.

An administration official familiar with Bloch's career said he worked in East Berlin as an economic counselor in 1974-75, the first two years following the opening of a fully fledged U.S. embassy there since World War II.

The new 53-unit East Carolina Inn on Stantonsburg Road near the hospital is scheduled to open early next week

East Carolina Inn Nears Opening Date

The hotel, independently owned by East Carolina Inn Inc. with headquarters in Jacksonville, is scheduled to open early next week.

"There are 53 units in the hotel which will accommodate approximately 200 persons," said Chuck Middleton, general manager. "There are two rooms designed for handicapped persons — with wider door entrances, bathrooms with grab bars and room accessories are lowered for easy accessibility. These room connect with adjoining rooms. Two efficiency rooms have small sinks, refrigerators and microwaves," he said.

The social room is equipped with entertainment centers, card tables, accent tables and chairs, reading lamps and book shelves. The room is highlighted by a large stained glass panel which will be changed seasonally, according to Middleton.

"Future plans include a restaurant and the final phase will be the addition of 180 rental units, Middleton said.

Guest amenities include a continental breakfast served in the lobby area, 30 percent of the rooms are designated for non-smokers, remote cable television and free local telephone calls.

"The color decor in the rooms is mauve and green and room focal points will be bedspreads and draperies with dark oak furniture. The lobby area is decorated in mauve with gray accents with jade upholstered furniture, off-white ceramic lamps, and live and silk plants," Middleton said.

The hotel management is being handled through Gallery Hotel Management Co. of Huntersville. Sandy Shifflett of Grimesland is assistant manager. The staff includes five front desk staff and eight housekeeping-laundry personnel.

"Our purpose in location is to cater primarily to the local and medical facilities. We are looking forward to being a part of the city of Greenville and its future growth," said Middleton.

NOW Abortion Rally Draws 3,000

The Associated Press

A crowd of pro-choice activists march through Cincinnati

By Joe Kay
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CINCINNATI — About 3,000 supporters of the National Organization for Women marched through crowded downtown streets Saturday and vowed to pressure lawmakers to support a women's right to an abortion.

About 300 anti-abortion demonstrators lined sidewalks along the route, exchanging chants with the NOW marchers. Police on horseback stayed between the groups and reported no incidents or citations.

In Michigan, Southern California, Ohio and Boston, meanwhile, more than 200 anti-abortion demonstrators were arrested during protests at abortion clinics.

The NOW throng, in Cincinnati for the organization's annual convention, stretched for more than three blocks, tying up traffic and temporarily stopping music enthusiasts listening to a downtown jazz festival.

A recent Supreme Court ruling giving states authority to regulate and limit abortions was the focus of both the NOW marchers and anti-abortion demonstrators.

"If our elected officials are not pro-choice, then they will not be elected," Cincinnati NOW chapter President Shirley Rosser told the rally. "I want you to realize: No matter how good they are on other issues, if they're not right on the issue of choice, they will be defeated."

"This whole thing is going back to the state legislatures, the political arena," said Joseph Scheidler, executive director of the Chicago-based Pro-Life Action League, who was one of the anti-abortion protesters at the rally. "I think it's going to be the issue. They (politicians) know it, and they dread it.

Although delegates at the NOW conference addressed various issues related to women and civil rights, abortion took center stage. The conference, attended by more than 1,000 delegates, runs through Sunday.

Before the march, NOW President Molly Yard said the organization is developing legislation to prevent states from restricting the rights of women to have abortions. She also announced a "freedom caravan" to various state capitals and a Nov. 12 rally in Washington, D.C., to show support for legalized abortion.

Ms. Yard said participation in the 200,000-member NOW has grown in recent weeks as women, angered by the U.S. Supreme Court's July 3 ruling on abortion, joined the ranks.

In Salinas, Calif., 109 anti-abortion protesters were arrested after blocking the entrance of a Planned Parenthood clinic in a demonstration police described as generally peaceful.

Those arrested in the Operation Rescue protest were taken to the Monterey County jail, where they were booked for investigation of trespassing and resisting officers, both misdemeanors, said police Lt. Scott Miller.

In the Boston area, police said 74 anti-abortion demonstrators were arrested in two protests at abortion clinics.

Elsewhere, in the Boston suburb of Brookline, police arrested 38 people when Operation Rescue, an anti-abortion group, set up blockades at three abortion clinics.

At least 36 anti-abortion demonstrators also were arrested after they blocked the entrance to an abortion clinic adjacent to the Boston Common, police said.

About 175 anti-abortion protesters in Bordentown City, N.J., forced the closure of an abortion clinic Saturday morning by blocking its entrances and telling would-be patients not to undergo the procedure, police said.

Two of the demonstrators affiliated with New Jersey Central Area Rescue Effort were arrested and charged with trespassing, police said.

Gonzalez Eyes Meeting

MADRID, Spain (AP) — Prime Minister Felipe Gonzalez is planning a meeting with President Bush this fall in which they'll talk mostly about culture, Spanish National Radio reported Saturday.

The radio, citing government sources, said the visit would be Oct. 19. It would be the first official meeting between the two heads of government since an eight-year U.S.-Spanish defense agreement took effect May 4, in which the United States agreed to withdraw 72 F-16 fighter-bombers.

Taggart Case Should Go To Jury This Week

By Paul Nowell
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHARLOTTE — A federal jury will decide this week if two former aides to televangelist Jim Bakker knowingly evaded $525,000 in income taxes after spending nearly $1.2 million in PTL money on personal luxuries such as condominiums, jewelry and designer clothes.

After a delay Friday in the 11-day trial of brothers David and James Taggart, the government is scheduled to call its rebuttal witnesses on Monday.

Following closing arguments, the jury will begin deliberating in the trial that began July 5. If convicted, the Taggarts each could be sentenced to 25 years in prison and face fines of more than $1 million.

U.S. District Judge Robert Potter gave no reasons for postponing Friday's session. Court observers speculated that the delay may have been granted to give prosecutors time to call Jerry Falwell, who took over at PTL following Bakker's resignation in March 1987 amidt revelations of the Jessica Hahn sex-and-money scandal.

Falwell spokesman Mark DeMoss said Falwell would not be called by the government to testify Monday, despite the fact that he was subpoenaed several weeks ago.

"There was a time when we thought he would be called," DeMoss said in a telephone interview from Lynchburg, Va. "He's not scheduled to testify."

Friday's delay came following two days of testimony by the defendants and a dramatic appearance by Bakker Wednesday when he refused to answer any questions.

Defense attorney Ben Cotten's case could hinge on his contention that Bakker authorized David Taggart, his personal assistant for seven years, to take large cash advances and use PTL funds to pay for personal items on a personal American Express account belonging to the Taggarts.

On Wednesday, Cotten was unable to elicit any testimony from Bakker, who took the Fifth Amendment when he was asked several questions, including whether he even knew the Taggarts.

During six hours on the witness stand Thursday, David Taggart said Bakker enticed him back to the ministry with a pledge that PTL would pay all of his travel and vacation costs.

He recalled telling Bakker, "I want access to the same resources that you have."

Taggart and his brother, James, are charged with evading $525,000 in federal income taxes. Prosecutors contend the two used nearly $1.2 million in PTL money for their personal expenses from 1984 to 1987.

The defense rested Thursday following two days of testimony from the Taggarts, who joined PTL in the late 1970s as piano players.

Within a few years, David Taggart, 32, was Bakker's top personal aide. His brother, James, 35, was the interior designer at PTL's Heritage USA Christian retreat just south of Charlotte.

David Taggart said Bakker gave him a deal he couldn't refuse to return to PTL after a six-month absence in 1983.

"He told me 'David, you've killed yourself for the ministry for $25,000 a year (as assistant music director from 1978 to 1980 and from 1980 to 1983 as Bakker's personal assistant). Now the ministry is in a different position and I'm willing to pay you $100,000 a year,'" Taggart said.

Prosecutor David Brown said, "If you want us to believe your were not a power figure at PTL, how could you demand from Jim Bakker the same financial deal he had?"

"I did not get everything Jim Bakker got," said Taggart. "I think Jim Bakker had a better deal then I did."

With a series of questions, Brown suggested Taggart had power over Bakker because he knew of his boss's 1980 sexual encounter with Jessica Hahn and of PTL's 1984 and 1985 efforts to pay Hahn to remain silent.

Taggart also said proper record keeping would have helped determine whether sums of money he drew from PTL accounts were taxable or not.

Taggart said his way of accounting for the $1.2 million was either to submit documentation to justify it, receive a tax form from PTL that called the cash advances income or that the cash advances would be considered a loan which would be converted into a bonus.

"Can you tell me one other person at PTL who was treated like this?" Brown asked.

Taggart said he could not.

"You must be pretty special," Brown said. "Didn't you tell PTL financial officers that you spent the money on official PTL business? Now you want to say you had a sweetheart deal with Jim Bakker to spend money hand over fist for your own personal purposes."

Taggart said that on his return to PTL, he had authority to take large cash advances, which he said were used primarily for trips by the Bakkers on ministry business. He said he needed large amounts of cash on hand at all times.

"Many times on a trip I would advance Tammy Bakker some cash and she would reimburse it," he said.

Taggart conceded that he and his brother did owe some taxes.

"I agree each of us owes some taxes and that needs to be debated on the civil side," Taggart said.

But Brown replied that the issue "won't be debated on the civil side until this case is over, I can assure you that."

Taggart was unable to explain how his and his brother's net worth grew from less than $150,000 in 1984 to nearly $1.7 million by 1987.

The question of Taggart's documentation has been one of government's key points in the trial. James Taggart testified earlier that as PTL's interior decorator he was an artist who left the business dealings to his brother.

"I always have been lax about documentation. It's never been a priority," David Taggart said.

Rose Seeks Dismissal Of Lawsuit

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHARLOTTE — Congressmen ranging from the U.S. house speaker to the minority leader have joined Rep. Charlie Rose, D-N.C., in asking a federal court to dismiss a Justice Department lawsuit against Rose on the grounds it violates the Constitution.

House Speaker Tom Foley, D-Wash., and a bipartisan group of House leaders joined Rose in contending that the suit violated the constitution's doctrine of separation of powers. That doctrine defines the role and powers of the judicial branch, the legislative branch — Congress — and the executive branch, in this case represented by the Justice Department.

They also said it violated federal law defining Congress's power to discipline its members, The Charlotte Observer reported in Saturday's editions.

The suit, they said, amounted to "second-guessing and overriding the internal ethics procedure of the House of Representatives."

The House Ethics Committee last year wrote Rose a letter publicly rebuking him for failing to fully disclose loans to him from his campaign committee and other financial dealings on his financial disclosure form. The form is required of all members of Congress and high-ranking federal officials.

Then the Justice Department sued him last May for $30,000. It contended that Rose knew he was breaking the law and therefore that it was entitled to prosecute.

Rose said the suit was encouraged by allies of his political enemy, Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C.

Arsenic Test Results Awaited

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MEBANE — Results from tests for arsenic poisoning performed on the body of Blanche Taylor Moore's father could be ready next week, but the woman's attorney said she had very little contact with the man before his death.

"We were told that the father absented himself from the family for the 10 years prior to his death," attorney Mitchell M. McEntire said.

"I do believe ... that there might have been a visit during his last illness, but certainly there were no regular visits or sustained visits."

The body of Parker D. Kiser Sr. was exhumed Friday from Oakwood Cemetery and later reburied. Authorities say Kiser exhibited symptoms consistent with arsenic poisoning.

They are trying to determine if Kiser died Sept. 18, 1966, after a heart attack or whether he was killed.

Mrs. Moore is charged with murder in the poisoning deaths of her first husband and former boyfriend and has been charged with the attempted murder of her current husband by feeding him arsenic.

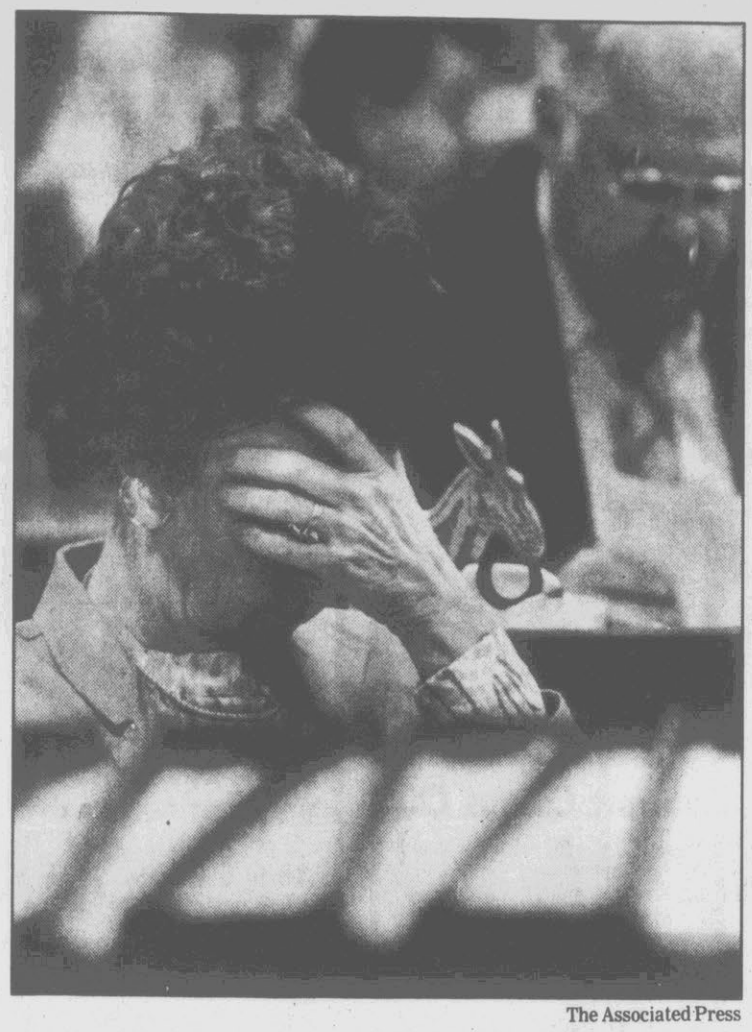
Highway Package Sees Compromise



The Associated Press

Rep. Peggy Stamey, D-Wake, listens to adjournment debate

By Dennis Patterson
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — House and Senate negotiators traveled a long trail before finally reaching their destination — agreement on a highway package.

After spending a full day in discussions, both sides came to terms on a a $9.1 billion, 13.5-year highway package that includes a key provision from the Senate for financing 6 percent pay raises. The agreement ended a two-week stalemate stemming from a Senate proposal to use increased vehicle sales taxes for the next two years to fund the raises.

The House last week agreed to that proposal, then yanked its offer after Gov. Jim Martin and House Republicans objected.

Shortly before 11 p.m. Friday, the House panel voted 6-4 to accept the two-year diversion.

"There were no alternatives to that," said Rep. Sam Hunt, D-Alamance, chairman of the House panel. "We felt like it was time to move on."

Hunt said the vote on his committee was 6-4, with the panel's four Republicans voting against the proposal.

Despite the lack of GOP support on the committee, Hunt said he expected the bill to win bipartisan support on the House floor next week.

"I think you'll have significant Republican and Democratic support," Hunt said. "I have talked to a number of Republicans who have told me they plan to vote for the package.

"I think the vote (in committee) showed that the Republicans worked hard for their position," Hunt said. "There were a number of alternatives discussed, but never anything we could pass this session."

The highway program, the largest in the state's history, would put a four-lane road within 10 miles of most Tar Heels, pave thousands of miles of rural roads and build "loop" freeways around seven urban areas.

The program will be financed by increasing the gasoline tax by 5¼ cents per gallon, increasing the automobile title fee from $5 to $35 and raising the tax on automobile rentals from 2 percent to 8 percent.

The package also contains a "sunset clause" that says the tax increases used to pay for the program will end when all contracts have been let and the money is available to complete them.

Sen. Marshall Rauch, D-Gaston, the chairman of the Senate negotiators, said his panel had voted 10-0 to accept the House proposal. The package is scheduled to be presented to both chambers Monday night and could be approved by Wednesday.

With the highway package over a hurdle, lawmakers can aim toward approval of a budget for new and expanded state programs and adjournment.

"I think two more weeks ought to do it," Rauch said.

The Senate originally had proposed a 15-year highway program, but later offered to cut the time frame to 14 years. The original House plan called for a 12-year project, but the offer was expanded to 13 years Thursday.

The original Senate plan called for the two-year diversion of sales taxes on vehicles to finance salary increases. The House had considered a 1-cent sales tax increase sought by Martin to pay for those raises, but leaders said there were not enough votes to pass it.

Rauch told the House panel Friday morning the Senate's proposal for the two-year diversion was "set in concrete" and continued that stance through more than eight hours of negotiations.

The House had stuck by a proposal to allow the transfers for only one year, leaving a decision on how to finance salary increases for the 1990-91 fiscal year until the short session of the legislature.

Workers Get Wages

WINSTON-SALEM (AP) — Two hundred production workers at R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. who were demoted last week and told that their wages would be cut will now have their lost wages restored under a new policy.

In a letter to employees on Friday, James W. Johnston, chairman and chief executive of the tobacco company, said he changed the policy because more employees will soon be demoted as part of a staffing study.

"Our current staffing studies will also result in the need to reassign other valued employees to lower job classifications. With this in mind, I have reviewed with management the company's past practice of reducing affected employees' pay rates in line with their new assignments," the letter said. "We have concluded that no employee's pay rate will be reduced for any reason. Instead, if reassigned, their pay rates will be maintained at current levels until 1992."

Delinquent Taxes

DURHAM (AP) — The federal government, not known for its forgiveness toward delinquent taxpayers, itself failed to pay the city of Durham more than $16,000 in electric bills during the past 10 years.

The oversight was discovered recently when the National Weather Service asked to renew its lease to operate an antenna at the city-owned Huckleberry Springs Reservoir, said Frank Parker, director of the city real estate office.

The previous lease called for the weather service, a division of the U.S. Department of Commerce, to repay the city up to $150 a month for electrical costs.

The interest charged by the Internal Revenue Service on the same amount of money during the same time period would have ammount to about $13,000.

The total, $16,231, will be repaid montly over the next five years without interest, Parker said.

In the new lease, the city will bill the Commerce Department a flat rate of $250 a month for electricity.

Group Files Complaint

RALEIGH (AP) — The rock group The Who, concerned that bootleg merchandise bearing the band's name may appear at Thursday's concert in Raleigh, has filed suit for an injunction against the practice.

Lawyers for The Who, its members and a concessions company licensed to sell The Who T-shirts and other items filed the complaint Friday in U.S. District Court in Raleigh. The Who, on a 25th anniversary tour, is scheduled to perform at Carter-Finley Stadium.

Seawall Plan Endorsed

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — Some state officials are backing a proposal to build a $7 million seawall to shield the Civil War earthenworks at Fort Fisher from erosion, despite coastal rules that prohibit such structures.

The Division of Archives and History is backing the plan designed by the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers in 1976 as the only way to preserve the fort, which has already has lost most of its towering man-made knolls to the Atlantic Ocean.

"There is not the choice of moving the fort," William S. Price Jr., director of archives and history, said Friday. "That's not an alternative."

For a seawall to be built at the New Hanover County site, the state would have to except itself from a strict rule against any new "shoreline hardening" along the seashore, passed in 1985 by the state Coastal Resources Commission. The commission prohibited seawalls because they eventually lead to the loss of beach in front of the wall and contribute to erosion on surrounding beaches.

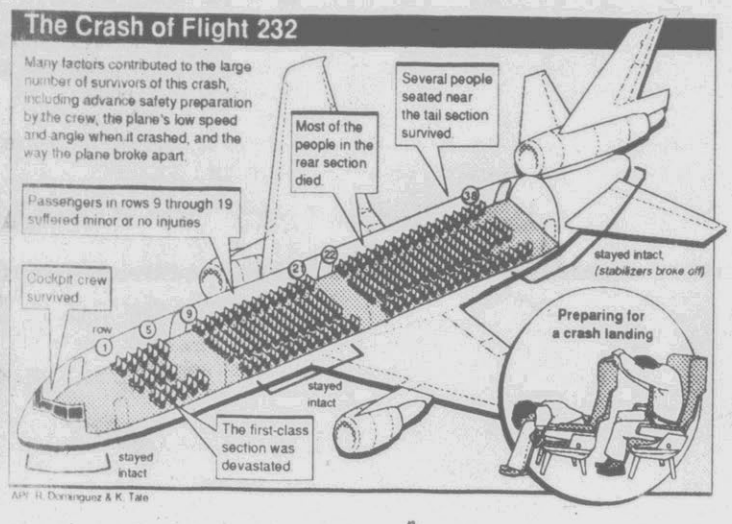
Authorities End Search For Crash Victims



By Sharon Cohen
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SIOUX CITY, Iowa — The search for victims of United Airlines Flight 232 ended Saturday with the death toll still not firm. United, meanwhile, announced it is visually inspecting all engines in its DC-10 fleet.

"We feel comfortable enough that ... the search has been terminated for victims," said Gary Brown, spokesman for the Woodbury County Emergency Services.

While officials were confident that all of the bodies had been recovered, there still was disagreement on how many were killed when the DC-10 jetliner cartwheeled and burned at the Sioux Gateway Airport. A city official said it was 110 and the National Transportation Safety Board maintained it was 111.

A doctor at one of the hospitals treating the injured said more patients could die and that the survivors might have permanent injuries.

At a news conference here, meanwhile, a United Airlines official said the airline has initiated "a visual inspection of all engines in (its) DC-10 fleet. A prudent person would do some additional looking and we are."

James Guyette, executive vice president of operations for United, said the inspections should be completed on Monday.

So far, they have uncovered "very, very minor" flaws, he said, adding that DC-10 airplanes in the United fleet are not being grounded during the check.

The wreckage of the wide-body jet remained sprawled over the airport Saturday as NTSB crews sifted wreckage for clues to what caused the tail engine to disintegrate in flight.

NTSB spokesman Jim Burnett said four cranes were moved in to steady a giant hunk of fuselage in the cornfield next to the runway. Inspectors were able to determine that no bodies were underneath, he said.

A spokesman said officials would not move the fuselage section, which landed in a cornfield, but workers used a crane to shift the shattered tail section slightly in order to get a better view.

City Manager Hank Sinda said Saturday that one of the injured victims whom he did not name died overnight, bringing the death toll to 110. By his count, there were 186 survivors, and he said local rescuers and the FBI agreed with the numbers.

But NTSB spokesman Ted Lopatkiewicz said his agency was holding to its conclusion that there were 297 persons on board, and gave the breakdown as 186 survivors and 111 fatalities.

Asked about the discrepancy, Lopatkiewicz said, "I don't know. The numbers have been changing every day."

Guyette said United's count ag ees with the one released by city officials. "There could be a discrepancy, but we don't anticipate that," he said.

So far, the airline has positively identified 19 dead and tentatively identified 29, and hopes to have 80 percent of the bodies positively identified by Sunday, Guyette said. "Great care has to be exercised to make sure a mistake is not made," he said.

Forty-five people were still hospitalized Saturday. Nineteen, including four in critical condition, were at St. Luke's Hospital and 26, including five listed as critical, were at the Marian Health Center. Marian confirmed that one patient had died there overnight but would not give a name.

All four members of the flight crew, including one off-duty pilot who left his seat in the cabin and to help in the effort to control the plane, were being treated at Marian. Their injuries were not critical, according to spokeswoman Jennifer Denning.

Brown said there was no need to look for other victims at the airport.

"The numbers match, the numbers balance," he said.

Dr. Mike Wolpert, director of trauma services at Marian, said the five patients in critical condition are still in danger. "They're not stable by any means," he said.

"There are a lot of broken necks and broken backs. Some of them might be permanently disabled. Some of them have definite brain swelling now but it's going to be quite a while before we know if that damage is going to be permanent."

He said patients listed in serious or guarded condition have multiple fractures but are not in life-threatening condition. A large number of them, he said, have ankle injuries.

The airport is open but large pieces of the doomed jet are strewn over the area. Still in a cornfield is the large piece of the fuselage from which survivors were able to crawl to safety, and the charred remains of the tail section, which flipped over the other wreckage as the plane broke up.

"There's a lot of documentation left to be done," said Lopatkiewicz, declining to predict when investigators would leave the scene. "It takes a long time to document an aircraft as big as this."

The drama of the final moments in the cockpit was detailed Friday as NTSB spokesman Jim Burnett said the off-duty pilot, hearing the explosion in engine No. 2, bolted to the cockpit to see if he could help.

Burnett said the off-duty pilot, identified by The Washington Post as Dennis Fitch, found the airplane nearly unmanageable since the tail engine apparently threw wreckage through the airplane's hydraulic systems.

Without control of wings or tail surfaces, the pilots' only recourse was to crudely steer the plane by varying the thrust of the two remaining engines.

"The only control mechanism that the crew had was to use engine thrust," Burnett said. The off-duty pilot "was on his knees manipulating the throttle."

"What you have here is a situation of two men desperately trying to get whatever control they can out of the aircraft," he said.

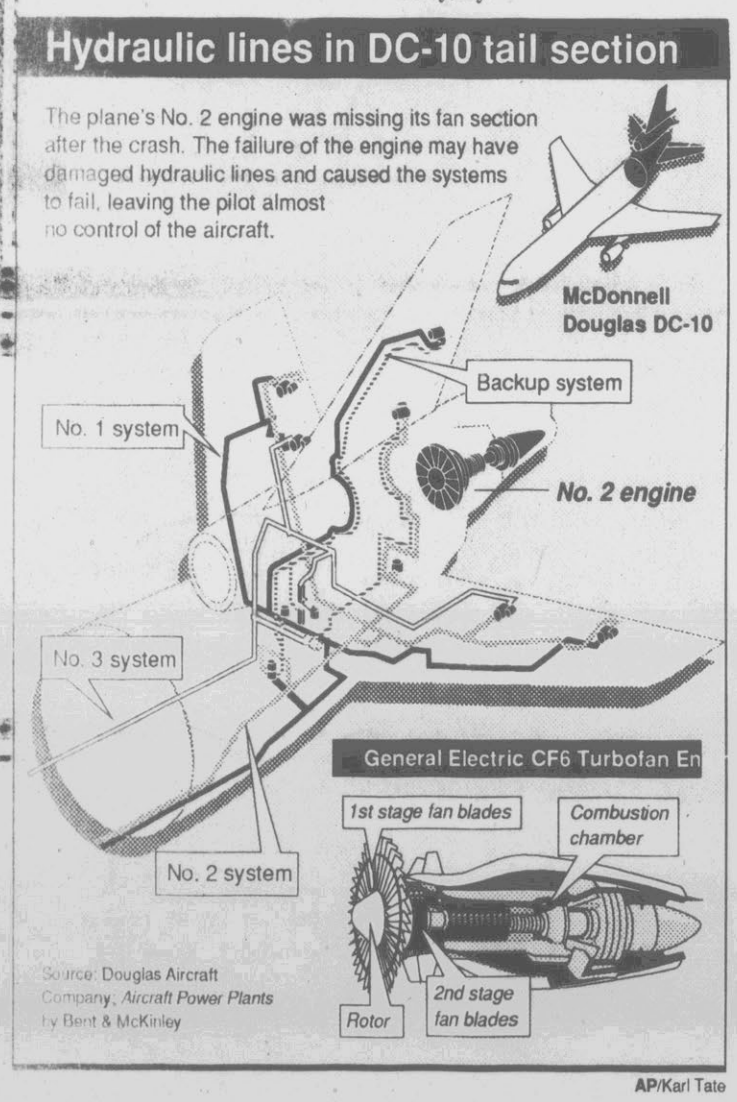
The plane's No. 2 engine was missing its fan section after the crash. The failure of the engine may have damaged hydraulic lines and caused the systems to fail, leaving the pilot almost no control of the aircraft.



Boy Pilot Successful

COSTA MESA, Calif. (AP) — An 11-year-old boy successfully finished his bid Saturday to become the youngest pilot to circle the globe, landing safely at home after a trip that took him across the far reaches of the Soviet Union.

Tony Aliengena touched down under bright, hazy skies at about 2:30 p.m. and turned off the engine of his plane at Orange County's John Wayne International Airport, where he started his "Friendship Flight '89" seven weeks and 19,000 miles ago.

"I want to meet President Bush and talk with my parents and see if they will take me to Disneyland," the boy said after landing.

Aliengena's father Gary, who accompanied his son on the flight, emerged from the plane and then lifted his son from the aircraft, along with his sister Alaina, 10, and Tony's Soviet pen pal, Roman Tcheremnykh, 10.

Group Seeks To Recall Gay School Board Leader

By Rich Cartiere
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

FREMONT, Calif. — A group has launched a petition drive to recall the school board president in this San Francisco suburb, accusing him of defrauding voters by not disclosing he is gay until after he had been in office for four years.

The Fremont Family Alliance filed recall papers last week against board president Robert Stipicevich. The group has five months to gather 12,000 signatures for a recall measure to be put on the ballot.

Stipicevich, who was one of the youngest elected officials in California when he won a school board seat four years ago at age 22, says he disclosed his homosexuality at a news conference in May because was tired of constant whispering behind his back.

"I think it's real important to say that I am not living a lie," he said. "There isn't an office in the land or a position in the country that's worth it."

He called Fremont, a San Francisco suburb with a population of more than 130,000, a "diverse community and they're not going to be bothered by this. It's irrelevant to the job I'm doing on the school board."

In addition to defrauding voters, the Family Alliance says, his homosexuality created a conflict of interest, arguing that he should have abstained from voting on the school district's recently enacted AIDS education curriculum.

"We're bombarded by the media emphasizing that it's OK to be so liberal and that since the largest city in the area accepts it, it must be so," said Ron Smith, a spokesman for the group.

"We don't want outside forces dictating how Fremont should be run and the type of politics that should be here," he added. The alliance includes some ministers, but no church organization has officially backed it.

The petition drive has prompted soul-searching in this town, which was named 33 years ago for a pioneer explorer because its citizens considered themselves a progressive community.

His foes say community identity is at stake. Many feel the idea that gay people should be open about their lifestyles in this politically moderate enclave is an attempt to import "gay politics" from San Francisco, 35 miles northeast.

Fremont isn't the only city in the region concerned about gay rights issues. An anti-AIDS discrimination measure faces a referendum in nearby Concord, where similar charges of outside influence have been made.

And in San Francisco itself, a proposal to overturn the city's domestic-partnership law has been placed on the ballot after church groups circulated referendum petitions. The law gives homosexual couples some benefits available to married couples.

"I hope it's a trend," said Smith. "You're finding a backlash because people have just sat still and finally something had to happen."

He said that even though Stipicevich's term expires next year, the group is seeking a recall vote to bring the issue before the public.

Stipicevich, a shipping and mail supervisor for a clothing chain, recently received glowing endorsements from other school board members. At the first board meeting after his announcement, 75 supporters showed up and gave him a standing ovation, and he says he has received hundreds of letters of support from across the country.

But Stipicevich also has received a death threat, a few obscene letters and the recall drive. Former City Councilman Ken Steadman told Stipicevich at one board meeting he was exploiting children because of his "moral corruptions."

State Assemblywoman Delaine Eastin calls the issue needlessly divisive.

"Bob did what he felt he had to do," she said. "I can't make that decision for him."

"The question on balance is if Bob is making good policy decisions, not whether he should have come out of the closet."

727 Has Hydraulic Failure In Landing

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TULSA, Okla. — An American Airlines flight bound for El Paso, Texas, from Chicago lost one of its main hydraulic systems Saturday, forcing the cockpit crew to manually lower the front landing gear before landing safely here.

The loss of the single hydraulic system on the Boeing 727 was far less serious than the reported complete hydraulic failure of United Airlines Flight 232 on Wednesday, said John Hotard, spokesman for American Airlines in Fort Worth, Texas.

The United DC-10 crashed in Sioux City, Iowa, killing at least 110 of the more than 295 people on board.

"Well for one thing, it's a different airplane," Hotard said. "(The pilot) just had one of his systems failure and there are several redundant systems on (the plane.)"

Asked whether the failure of a single hydraulic system was unusual, Hotard responded:

"Certainly it scared the hell out of us." But the pilot "had no trouble landing. He made a routine, perfect landing."

Flight 139 had 110 people on board, including the crew, and was scheduled to make a stop at Tulsa International Airport at 1:12 p.m., The pilot radioed to the Tulsa control tower at 1:19 p.m. that the jet was experiencing hydraulic problems and he couldn't get the front landing gear down, Hotard said.

"There was a failure of what they call the System A hydraulics system, and this among other things controls the raising and the lowering of the landing gear," he said. "And because this system failed — and we do not know yet why it failed — the captain and the cockpit crew had to hand-crank the right main landing gear. ... It's not that difficult to do.

"When System A failed, System B took the backup for the other sytems of the aircraft," Hotard said.

There were no injuries reported in the incident.

The plane, which was just over 40 miles northeast from Tulsa International when it reported problems, landed at 1:58 p.m., Hotard said.

The plane was towed to American's main maintanance facility. The passengers traveling on to El Paso were taken on a separate aircraft, Hotard said.

The 727 will be overhauled and serviced to determine what caused the hydraulic problem, he said.

Quake Rocks Atlantic Island

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PONTA DELGADA, Azores Islands — A moderately strong earthquake shook buildings Saturday on an island in this mid-Alantic archipelago, but no injuries were reported.

Specialists at the Azores University Volcanology Center said the quake measured 6 on the Mercalli scale, which gauges the intensity of a temblor as felt in a specific location on a scale from 1 to 12.

They said the quake's epicenter was near Lake Fogo about 15 miles from Sao Miguel Island's main town of Ponta Delgada.

No injuries or serious damage were reported from the quake, which occurred at 5 a.m.

It was the most serious of more than 100 earth tremors on the island in the past 10 days. Scientists believe the tremors are related to volcanic activity in the area.

The Azores lie near the North Atlantic Ridge, a seismically active north-south line where two plates of the earth's crust are pulling apart.

Truck Slams Into Stopped Cars; 5 Die

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NORRISTOWN, Pa. — A tractor-trailer smashed into a line of cars and trucks stalled by an accident a mile ahead on the Pennsylvania Turnpike, killing five people in the fiery pileup Saturday.

The truck driver and a family of four were killed, while some other drivers apparently were spared because they had stepped out of their cars and were standing alongside the road, police said.

The northbound lanes of the turnpike's Northeast Extension were shut down for more than nine hours between Norristown and Lansdale, both suburbs of Philadelphia.

Police said two men were hurt in the first accident about nine miles north of Norristown. A car driven by Gregory C. D'Amario, 37, of Bayville, N.J., was passing a tractor-trailer loaded with used telephone poles when it went out of control, hit the median guardrail and bounced into the back of the trailer, said State trooper Carl Williams.

The trailer jackknifed and turned over so that the rig ended up skidding sideways, blocking both northbound lanes and the shoulder, Williams said.

D'Amario and Barton Washington, 33, of Philadelphia, were taken to North Penn Hospital in Lansdale, D'Amario for head, neck and back injuries and Washington for back and neck injuries.

Traffic was backed up for about a mile south of the accident, according to Williams, when a tractor-trailer topping a hill plowed into the back of the line.

It hit a tanker truck, knocked it aside, and smashed into five cars ahead. A fire broke out and engulfed the truck and three cars, Williams said. The tanker wasn't involved in the fire.

World Airways To Receive $62.9 Million From MPA

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BOSTON — The Massachusetts Port Authority has been ordered to pay $62.9 million to World Airways for its liability in a 1982 plane crash at Logan International Airport.

Massport officials said Saturday they would appeal Friday's ruling by U.S. District Court Judge Robert E. Keeton, who also ruled the airline could recover an additional $1.6 million from the federal government.

In earlier trials, federal juries ruled that the authority and the Federal Aviation Administration were to blame for the January 1982 crash, which killed two people.

The DC-10, carrying 212 passengers, attempted to land on an icy runway at Logan, but slid off the runway and into Boston Harbor. The nose of the plane was severed from the fuselage and passengers and crew had to swim in the frigid waters to safety.

While the juries determined Massport and the federal government were to blame for not taking adequate safety measures in icy conditions, the amount of the settlement remained to be determined and questions of interest remained in dispute until Friday.

The total set by Keeton takes into account $33 million for the value of the aircraft, interest over the seven years since the accident, and several passenger claims, The Boston Globe reported.

Attorneys in the case told the newspaper that Massport may be able to recover $11 million of the total settlement from the federal government because the FAA was also found at fault.

Other issues in the case still remain unresolved, however. Keeton must rule on motion for a new trial relating to emotional distress claimed by crew members.

The pilot, Peter Langley, and his co-pilot were awarded $2 million in damages in April, but Keeton ruled that that amount was excessive and planned to reduce it by 80 percent, the newspaper said.

Elks To Consider Women Members

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

JONESBORO, Ark. — The national Elks organization will consider this week whether to welcome women into the all-male preserve, but the proposal's sponsor says he wasn't motivated by a desire for equality between the sexes.

Retired Air Force Lt. Col. Hal Detrick says his resolution, approved by the Jonesboro lodge, was prompted instead by the fraternal organization's declining membership and the resignation from the local chapter of a federal judicial nominee under Senate scrutiny.

"I could see then that any young lawyer or young aspiring politician who might aspire to be anything within the federal government might be reluctant to become a member of the Elks, and we do too much good work to make it an albatross around any young person's neck," Detrick, 67, said last week during an interview.

The resolution is to be submitted Thursday at the 125th national convention of the 1.5 million-member Benevolent and Protective Order of the Elks in New Orleans. It would delete the word "male" from the group's national membership requirements, which specify "a male citizen of the United States of America."

Church Shooting Has Los Angeles Officials Baffled

By James Anderson
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — Investigators said Saturday they had no leads into why a hooded gunman burst into a church during a children's Bible study graduation ceremony and shot three people, killing two.

"There's just no apparent reason why. I know the detectives wish they knew so they knew where to turn," said police officer Daniel Rueles.

Police and residents of the area said there was no apparent involvement by the gangs that have terrorized much of the city.

"There's a couple of gangs here but they haven't been active lately," said Officer Steve Carlos as he and fellow patrolman Andy Thedford kept watch on the shuttered Mount Olive Church of God in Christ from their patrol car across the street.

"No gang threats, no retaliation, nothing," Thedford said. "They don't cause trouble. They're never around," said Norma Macias, 18, who lives across the street from the church. "It's kinda quiet here."

Two persons walked up to the church Friday night, according to the police account. At least one of them shot at, but missed, a passerby before one of them entered the building.

He opened fire as about 50 adults and children were singing hymns. The songs were the conclusion to a commencement ceremony for a weeklong Bible study class.

"We were in the church singing a song. A man came in and he started shooting," said 10-year-old Martha Lopez. "I started crying. I was scared."

Police identified the dead as Mae Lee, 76, and Patronella Luke, 35. Mrs. Luke's husband, Peter Luke, 33, suffered a gunshot wound in the left knee and a superficial wound in the arm.

Peter Luke was listed in stable condition Saturday at California Medical Center, said hospital spokeswoman Grace Cheng. Luke declined through hospital officials to speak to a reporter.

A neighbor who declined to give her name said she heard gunshots and looked out from her home to see a gunman crouching by the back door of the church. Moments later, she said, a man carrying a shotgun emerged through the door and the two ran off in different directions.

Witnesses said Mrs. Luke was shot point blank in the face and Lee was hit as she tried to run for cover.

Several people said Mrs. Luke was a professional singer who recently had returned from a tour of Europe. She was attending the commencement ceremony with her husband, 5-year-old son and other family members.

"It's just senseless and crazy. This isn't a killing at all. It's a crazy world we live in," said Officer Thedford, a 21-year veteran. "I'm going to buy me an apartment on the moon."

Exxon Valdez

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Divers removed six of the seven steel plates dangling from the Exxon Valdez's hull that had kept the damaged oil tanker from entering port for repairs.

Representatives of Exxon and the state of California met Friday to settle environmental conditions the company must meet before bringing the ship through San Diego Bay to the National Steel and Shipbuilding Co. yard.

The state wants guarantees from Exxon that the leak-prone Valdez will make a pollution-free passage through state waters, which extend three miles from shore.

"The primary objective is to find a way to get the ship repaired while protecting the resources of the state," said Anthony Summers, a deputy attorney general.

The Valdez was about 54 miles off San Diego near San Clemente Island, where interim repairs were being carried out to allow the tanker to navigate the shallows of San Diego Harbor.

Exxon Shipping Co. spokeswoman Jan Cool said the divers inspected the ship's bottom Thursday night and found a seventh steel plate had peeled away from the frame. Six of the plates had been removed Friday.

Astronomer Says 'No Good Reason' For Moon Trip

By Harry F. Rosenthal
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — In the glow of celebrating the Apollo 11 anniversary with the men who landed on the lunar surface, President Bush proposed a commitment to go back to the moon — "this time, back to stay."

The trip he laid out for the nation would be step-by-step: a space station first, then the moon, and eventually Mars. "Each mission should and will lay the groundwork for the next," the president said.

That's akin to laying the groundwork for a driving trip across country by wheeling around the block for a few years and then gaining experience in the next suburb for a few years more.

Predictably, advocates of exploring with satellites and probes — which don't need expensive creature comforts — were aghast. But manned space flight supporters rushed to praise the Bush outline, delivered Thursday on the 20th anniversary of the first moon landing.

Space station yes. Mars yes. But why go to the moon?

"In my view there is no good reason," said Carl Sagan, the Cornell astronomer who has led the scientific community's fight for sending humans to Mars. "The moon is not much like Mars. It's not any closer to Mars, in the idea of a way station or stepping stone.

"Scientifically it is very different. Mars has an atmosphere, polar caps, evidence of past running water. It has the possibility of ancient life. The moon has none of that. The moon is static, airless, pretty dull."

Lewis Friedman, executive director of the Planetary Society, said: "The case for a moon base has not yet been made. The idea of permanently occupying the moon is one that is not justified.

"We haven't permanently occupied the oceans. The notion that we are going back to the moon to stay, and all that implies, is not yet well founded."

Rep. Bill Nelson, D-Fla., chairman of the House space subcommittee, said he would prefer to send astronauts straight to Mars "unless there is extraordinary scientific value for that being a first step." There's been no such evidence, he said, and "common sense would say it will delay us in time and it will cost us more if we go back to the moon."

The New York Times, in an editorial, called a return to the moon "a failure of imagination and fresh thought" and pointed out that NASA already has a ton of moon rocks.

The president offered neither timetable nor money in his expansive vision for "a journey into tomorrow" whose bills will come due long after he has moved out of the White House. What he offered is American leadership.

"Why the moon? Why Mars? Because it is humanity's destiny to strive, to seek, to find. And because it is America's destiny to lead," he said.

The budding controversy is joined by those who, like Rep. Bill Green, R-N.Y., think only machines belong in space, not humans.

"Currently, Congress is split between science and go-man-go," he said. "I see no scientific justification for putting a colony on the moon and no scientific justification for visiting Mars."

And, he added, one cost of sending men to the moon first is to get to Mars later. "If you're going to Mars directly, you are looking at (the year) 2009. But if you are going to do it via the moon, you are looking at the second decade in the 21st Century."

None of this comes as any surprise to Frank Martin, who heads the exploration office of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration.

"I'm sure we are going to have a nice debate over this in the next six months," he said. "As you can imagine, we put a lot of thought into this. Recognizing in the long term that Mars is sexier, it's the long range view we need to be taking."

Nobody wants to repeat the mistakes of the Apollo program of the 1960s, when getting to the moon and returning home was the only goal: to beat the Soviets.

The moon is attractive as an outpost, Martin said, because "it's possible to have significant achievements in 10 years. When you start asking people to work and asking the nation to focus on something, it's got to be something where the milestone is achievable in some finite period."

Other good reasons, said Martin, are:

— "We know a great deal about the moon, we have ... a good data base of understanding of what's there and how to work with that.

— "It's nearby, it's three days away. When you commit people to Mars you are talking six months to a year just to get there.

— "Mars is one third of the gravitational field of the Earth; the moon is one sixth Earth gravity ... if they do well in the one sixth gravitational environment we know they will do well in one-third G."

In addition, he said, the technical and engineering experiences on the surface of the moon can be used to develop the systems to be used on Mars.

"I understand the institutional reasons for wanting an intermediate goal," he said, "but what worries me is that the milestone may supplant the objective — that the moon may be a dead end. It might gobble up all the fiscal, intellectual and practical resources. There is no test for Mars exploration we can't do more cheaply or safely in Earth orbit or on the Earth itself."

Sagan and Friedman praised the Bush speech.

"It is, after all, the first commitment by an American president to send humans to Mars," said Sagan. "If it contained absolutely nothing else, I'm for it."

Friedman said Bush should be commended "for finally being a president who stepped up to say space has a national purpose to serve the country."

Both scientists said they wished Bush had proposed the Mars journey as an international venture with the Soviets, who have said they wanted to do it that way.

"Missions of this scale cannot be justified to satisfy the curiosity of scientists to provide some vicarious sense of exploration by the American people," Sagan said. "It's too much money. Just as Apollo needed a major political justification, the competition with the Russians, so this needs a major political justification. It can't be just competition; it has to be cooperation."

NASA Denies Nuke-Powered Probe On Shuttle A Danger

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — NASA on denied claims it will endanger the public by launching a nuclear-powered space probe aboard the shuttle in October.

"The mission as designed, analyzed and tested, is safe. Reports to the contrary that have been circulating in the press are not true," said John Casani, a deputy manager of flight projects at NASA's Jet Propulsion Laboratory in Pasadena, Calif.

Managers of the Galileo project showed the spacecraft to reporters in a hangar at the Kennedy Space Center where it is being prepared for flight. At the same time, nuclear power opponents in Washington, D.C., urged NASA to re-evaluate the potential hazards.

The Christic Institute, a Washington, D.C., advocacy group which opposes nuclear power on satellites, told reporters Friday it plans to file a petition with NASA asking the agency to revise its environmental impact statement on Galileo.

"The issue is that the hazards of the Galileo launch have not been explored sufficiently," said Robert Richie, a spokesman for the Christic Institute. Richie said NASA is relying on hazard estimates from the Department of Energy which "have been shown in a number of cases to be flawed."

Galileo is scheduled for launch from the Kennedy Space Center Oct. 12 aboard the shuttle Atlantis. The crew of Atlantis will deploy Galileo on an eight-year mission to explore Jupiter.

Technicians have been assembling the spacecraft since May. They will attach Galileo to the booster on Wednesday.

Galileo will be powered by 131 single-watt radioisotopic thermoelectric generators — RTGs for short — that convert heat created by decaying radioactive fuel into electricity. The 50 pounds of plutonium-238 that will power Galileo has raised fears of widespread contamination from radioactive fallout in the event of an accident.

RTGs have been an accepted source of power for spacecraft since the early 1960s. The intense criticism started when the 1986 explosion of space shuttle Challenger heightened public awareness about the risks of space flight.

To critics, an explosion like the one that destroyed Challenger during liftoff is not the only danger. They are also afraid Galileo will reenter the atmosphere and break apart as it loops Earth on its way to Jupiter.

Atlantis commander Don Williams is undaunted by the safety debate. "We really have looked into this a lot, and I'm convinced it is absolutely safe to fly," he said.

Galileo will perform "celestial gymnastics" on its way to Jupiter, said Spehalski. It will swing around Venus and then loop Earth and the asteroid belt twice in the early 1990s, using their gravity fields to gain speed before heading toward an encounter with Jupiter in December 1995.

About five months before reaching Jupiter, Galileo will release a probe toward the planet. The probe will study the atmosphere and the weather as it parachutes to the surface.

Launching a payload containing radioactive material requires special approval from the federal government, which NASA officials expect to receive for Galileo by Sept. 1.

Copter Crash Kills 6 Soldiers

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

FORT IRWIN, Calif. — A predawn helicopter crash during training exercises Saturday at this desert post killed six soldiers and injured one other, Army officials said.

The soldiers were aboard a UH-60 Blackhawk helicopter when the aircraft went down at about 4 a.m. 14 miles northeast of Fort Irwin's main garrison, said Maj. John Wagstaffe.

All the soldiers involved were from the First Cavalry Division based in Fort Hood, Texas, said Wagstaffe. They were at the 1,000-square-mile base 120 miles northeast of Los Angeles for a three-week training exercise that ended Saturday.

Wagstaffe said no other aircraft was involved in the crash, whose cause was being investigated. The identities of the victims were not immediately available, and likely would not be released until Sunday or Monday, he said.

The injured soldier suffered a broken right leg and a bruised lung, and was listed in stable condition at Loma Linda Hospital in San Bernardino, Wagstaffe said.

Farmville Furniture Company Looking For Oldest Running Kelvinator Refrigerator; Can Mean Rich Prizes

How Old's Your Kelvinator?

The Kelvinator Corporation is offering valuable prizes to the person who has the oldest working Kelvinator refrigerator in the country and Eli Joyner of the Farmville Furniture Company believes the winner could come from somewhere in the area of his company's territory. He bases this belief on the fact that Farmville Furniture Company is one of the oldest Kelvinator dealers in the country and it stands to reason that one of the firm's first Kelvinator refrigerators was sold to someone in this area.

"A refrigerator normally has a useful life of 10-15 years," said Mr. Joyner. "But over the years, we've had many people tell us about Kelvinator refrigerators that were still going strong after 30 years. Not only will this refrigerator hunt help us find out just how long a Kelvinator refrigerator lasts, but it's also a nice way to say 'thank you' to our many loyal customers."

Beginning July 1, Kelvinator dealers across the U.S. began scouring the countryside to find the oldest working Kelvinator refrigerator. To enter the hunt, consumers owning Kelvinator refrigerators can register at Farmville Furniture Company.

The entrant who owns the oldest working Kelvinator refrigerator nationally will be awarded the grand prize, which consists of: Kelvinator's top-of-the-line refrigerator, freezer, electric range, dishwasher, washer and dryer. Additionally, each of Kelvinator's 42 sales territories will award first prizes to the entrant who owns the oldest working Kelvinator refrigerator. These winners will receive the Kelvinator top-of-the-line 21 cubic foot Masterpiece refrigerator.

Six Killed In Syrian-Christian Artillery Duels

By Mohammed Salam
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BEIRUT, Lebanon — Apartment buildings burned out of control Saturday and cars smoldered in streets carpeted with rubble after nine hours of artillery battles across the capital between Syrian and Christian forces.

Police said six people were killed and 52 wounded overnight.

Shellfire severed power cables and plunged the city — which usually gets one to two hours of power a day — into darkness. The only lights that illuminated the skies were the flashes of exploding shells.

Ambulances drove on sidewalks, hugging the walls of high-rise apartment buildings for cover. Through loudspeakers they shouted: "'A civil defense team is in the area. Please notify us if you need any help."

"Over here! Over here!" a man's voice echoed in the densely populated west Beirut neighborhood of Zaidaniyeh. The rescuers rushed in the dark in the direction of the voice to find a family trapped under a demolished house.

In the district of Koreitem, artillery rounds blasted a building while inhabitants were in the underground shelter.

When the shelling eased, Soumaya Medawar emerged from hiding to find her apartment a pile of rubble. Unable to cope with the shock, Mrs. Medawar, 68, suffered a heart attack and died instantly.

The casualties from the shelling raised the toll to 440 killed and 1,836 wounded in the 18-week confrontation between mainly Christian troops under Gen. Michel Aoun, who heads a Christian government, and the Syrians, who back a rival Moslem government.

"Several casualties remained under the rubble for quite a long time, simply because no one had a telephone line to request help from rescuers," a police spokesman said, insisting on anonymity in line with standing regulations.

The divided capital shook as Syrian gunners entrenched in west Beirut operated their Soviet-designed 122mm BM-21 multi-barreled rocket launchers that fire 40 projectiles a minute.

The rockets blasted residential districts in Christian east Beirut, the coastline to the north and hills to the east and northeast.

Aoun's troops opened up with 155mm howitzers and 130mm mortars, targeting mainly Syrian military positions, but many rounds ricocheted to nearby areas.

Thousands of people fled during a morning lull, carrying with them whatever they could salvage of their belongings. Christians fled toward mountain resorts to the northeast, and west Beirut's inhabitants headed toward south Lebanon.

"I'll stay with relatives in the south for a while. I have to find a place where one can get some sleep and stay alive," said Rashid Makkouk, who works at a spare parts shop in west Beirut.

Makkouk, 42, said his wife and two children "went crazy during the shelling last night. Dozens of rockets exploded within seconds in our street setting apartments on fire and destroying cars."

Acting Prime Minister Salim Hoss, a Sunni Moslem who heads a Cabinet competing for legitimacy with the Christian government under Aoun, conferred by telephone with Saudi Arabia's King Fahd, sources in Riyadh said.

Fahd is one of the most influential leaders in the Arab world. The Saudi monarch, King Hassan II of Morocco and Algerian President Chadli Bendjedid are grouped in a an Arab League committee trying to pacify Lebanon.

Saudi Arabia is Syria's main bankroller. It also has good ties with the pro-Western Christians.

The latest round of violence in Lebanon's 14-year-old civil war broke out two days after Aoun clamped a blockade of ports run by Syrian-backed militias south of Beirut in an effort to recoup $100 million annually in lost customs dues.

Aoun, 54, a Maronite Catholic, escalated the confrontation by declaring a "war of liberation" against Syria's 40,000 troops, stationed in Moslem regions under a 1976 Arab League peacekeeping mandate.

Talks Suspended

LUANDA, Angola (AP) — Talks aimed at ending the nation's 14-year civil war were suspended Saturday when the rebel delegation requested consultations with their leaders about a proposal to monitor a cease-fire, according to news reports.

Reports on rebel-run Voice of the Black Rooster radio, monitored in Luanda from the guerrillas' bush headquarters of Jamba, said the rebels asked mediating President Mobutu Sese Seko of Zaire to allow them one week of "necessary consultations."

The talks, held in Kinshasa, Zaire's capital, started Wednesday. It was the second session between the U.S.-backed rebels of the National Union for the Total Independence of Angola and representatives of Angolan President Jose Eduardo dos Santos.

According to reports in Kinshasa the talks are to resume on July 31.

The reports said the rebels wanted to discuss Mobutu's proposals for a "hot line" radio link between Luanda, Jamba and Kinshasa to help monitor a June 24 cease-fire agreed to by rebel leader Jonas Savimbi and dos Santos.

The talks were held behind closed doors but reports from Zaire said the government delegation, headed by armed forces chief Antonio dos Santos Franca, accepted Mobutu's proposal.

There was no immediate confirmation from the Angolan government or the official media in Luanda.

Many West Bank Schools Reopen After Order Lifted

By Eileen Alt Powell
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BETHLEHEM, Occupied West Bank — Nearly 200,000 Palestinian children returned to classrooms in the West Bank on Saturday after the army lifted an order that had kept their schools closed for most of the 19-month uprising.

Israel's Histadrut labor federation called for a two-hour, nationwide strike Sunday to protest the government's handling of the economy. Unions affliated with Histadrut represent 85 percent of Israel's 2.5 million workers.

The nation's unemployment rate rose to 9.6 percent in May, and the Labor Ministry predicts it could exceed 10 percent before year's end for the worst jobless rate since the 1965-67 recession.

Israel radio said that at the Sunday Cabinet meeting Finance Minister Shimon Peres will unveil a public works program aimed at creating jobs.

Thirteen Palestinians were reportedly shot and wounded Saturday in stone-throwing clashes with Israeli troops in the West Bank and Gaza Strip. One victim was a 14-year-old girl hit in the chest with one of the rubber-coated metal pellets the army uses for riot control, Arab hospital officials said.

An army spokesman said soldiers encountered stone-throwers in several early morning raids in West Bank villages and confirmed that one Palestinian youth was shot and wounded in a raid on the village of Nur Shams near Nablus.

At least 572 Palestinians and 37 Israelis have been killed since the uprising against Israeli rule began in December 1987.

Classes opened for elementary schoolchildren and high school seniors, who must sit for mandatory graduation exams in November.

But the army has not yet set a date for the remaining 100,000 junior high and high school students in the West Bank to return to class and said that all institutions will be closed again if violence occurs.

"If you want to learn, you have the opportunity to do so," said Brig. Gen. Shaike Erez, head of the West Bank military government. "If you don't, that is your choice, too."

The army has kept West Bank schools closed for all but two short intervals since the start of the Palestinian revolt, contending they were focal points for violence. They were last open in January.

Palestinians charge it was a form of "collective punishment," and the United States and international human rights organizations have urged that classes be reopened.

On Saturday, the sounds of children reciting Arabic and practicing multiplication tables could be heard in both boys' and girls' elementary schools in Bethlehem.

Studies in the village of Beit Fajar six miles south of Bethlehem were disrupted when tear gas fired by soldiers drifted into the girls' school. The army said troops fired the tear gas to disperse stone-throwers nearby. Otherwise, the opening day passed without major incidents.

School principals said attendance was more than 90 percent, despite a strike called by the fundamentalist Moslem group Hamas, or Zeal, which closed shops and shut down public transportation.

Hamas issued a leaflet exempting students from the strike, and graffiti on walls in Ramallah north of Jerusalem signed by Hamas supporters said: "With stones and pens, the blessed uprising continues."

"I'm glad to be going back," said 9-year-old Lina Humseyeh as she waited in Bethlehem for a private school bus to take her to her third-grade class. "I helped my mother when we didn't have school, but I was bored."

Catholic-Run School Ripped By 4 Bombs

By Annie Cabrera
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador — Four bombs exploded at a Roman Catholic university in the capital before dawn Saturday, wrecking a print shop and a parked bus, officials said.

Police experts also deactivated two more bombs in the print shop at Simeon Canas Central American University, and officials there said employees sleeping nearby narrowly escaped injury from the blasts.

A statement by the rector's office said no one claimed responsibility for the attacks. One bomb exploded under the parked bus and three more inside the print shop, causing part of the building to collapse.

"The family of a watchman and three workers sleeping there miraculously escaped unharmed, even though some the blasts were only two yards away," the statement said.

It said this was the latest of a "a series of attacks" on the university, which is run by the Roman Catholic Church, and "part of an insidious campaign of incitement and slander against the Jesuits who work at this institution."

President Alfredo Cristiani's conservative government and the armed forces have often accused both the Central American University and the University of El Salvador of being havens for sympathizers of the leftist guerrilla movement fighting for power for nearly 10 years.

A guerrilla group July 3 attacked a neighborhood near the university where many army officers live, and some newspapers sympathizing with the military said a number of shots were fired from campus. The rector's office denied the accusation.

Soldiers in battle gear have been ringing the University of El Salvador for the past two months, searching anyone entering or leaving the campus for weapons and guerrilla propaganda.

On July 17, soldiers opened fire on a group of students rallying for a protest demonstration on that campus, wounding eight people.

An estimated 75,000 people have been killed since the civil war began in October 1979.

Kim Hyon-hui is led into Seoul appellate courtroom Saturday

Court Upholds Death Sentence For KAL Bomber

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SEOUL, South Korea — A Seoul appellate court today upheld the death sentence for a confessed North Korean agent who bombed a South Korean airliner in 1987, killing 115 people.

Kim Hyon Hui, 27, looked downward and showed little emotion as Judge Lee Young Il found her guilty of violating national security, criminal and aviation laws and sentenced her to death by hanging.

Government officials have privately indicated that Kim will be pardoned even if the verdict is upheld through the Supreme Court.

Several relatives of victims of the bombing wept and shouted insults when Kim, clad in a white jacket and pants, was escorted by two female security guards into the packed courtroom. An elderly relative collapsed.

"Bring back my son. Why did you kill my innocent son?" one relative shouted.

The judge described the bombing as "atrocious and unethical" and said Kim deserved severe punishment for killing innocent people.

The defense had argued that Kim should be given a lighter sentence because she was duped by North Korean leaders. Defense attorney Ahn Dong Il said he and his client would decide within a week whether to appeal to the Supreme Court.

Kim admitted in several hearings to bombing the Korean Air Boeing 707 that disappeared near Burma on Nov. 29, 1987, on its way from Baghdad, Iraq, to Seoul with 115 people on board.

She told the court that she had planted two bombs, one disguised as a radio and one as a liquor bottle, on orders from Kim Jong Il, son and heir to North Korean President Kim Il Sung, to disrupt the 1988 Summer Olympics in Seoul.

North Korea denied involvement and accused the south of staging the bombing to embarrass the north. The two Koreas have been bitter rivals since their land was divided in 1945, and they fought the three-year Korean War in 1950-53.

Raiders Attack Police; Two Dead

By Ann Imse
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TBLISI, U.S.S.R. — Extremists in an ethnically torn region of Soviet Georgia ambushed a police patrol, killing two cadets, and seized more than 1,500 weapons in raids on police stations across the region, Soviet media said Saturday.

Troops patrolled the riot-torn Abkhazia region, where 19 people have died in a week of violence between minority Abkhazians and ethnic Georgians.

In the capital of Sukhumi, "fear hangs over the city," the Georgian newspaper Zarya Vostoka said.

"The feeling is especially strong at night," the newspaper said. "That's when the gunfire starts in again and the noise is breaking glass, revving tanks and explosions."

The capital has been under a state of emergency since Tuesday.

As a result of the violence, two regional party secretaries were fired and two government leaders in Abkhazia lost their jobs, the official Tass news agency said.

The attack on the police patrol occurred Friday night in the village of Ostapi in Akbhazia, a Black Sea resort area.

Tass said assailants opened fire on the police patrol with hunting rifles, killing two cadets as they roadblocks and confiscated weapons.

Col. Gen. Yuri Shatalin, the commander of the all internal security troops who rushed to the republic to take charge, told the government newspaper Izvestia that Abkhazian and Georgian extremists had attacked eight police stations and two sports shops in western Georgia over the past 24 hours.

"As a result, 1,441 rifles are in the hands of extremists," he said.

Earlier attacks on police stations netted extremists hundreds of weapons, including 56 submachine guns, 40 pistols and three machine guns, Izvestia said.

Shatalin blamed the seizure of the weapons on the "careless or treacherous behavior of police," apparently members of the local ethnic groups. Since the strife began, police have confiscated more than 2,700 firearms.

He described one battle between Abkhazians and Georgians on a bridge in the village of Otap on the Ochamchirsky region last Sunday. "There were 250 to 300 people from each side who took part in it," he said. "I haven't seen such a battle since my service in Afghanistan."

Meetings between Abkhazians and Georgians took place in the cities of Sukhumi and Gagra on Friday, Izvestia said, but did not produce any concrete results and were "characterized by mutual reprimands."

A plenum of the regional party committee of Abkhazia met and fired Mikhail A. Tsuladze and Said R. Tarkil from their jobs as Communist Party secretaries, Tass said.

The Presidium of the Abkhazian Supreme Soviet fired Premier Otar Zugbaya and his first deputy, V.M. Tsugba, Tass said. Those relieved of their posts appeared to include Abkhazians and Georgians, although Tass did not specify their nationalities.

The Tbilisi newspaper Zarya Vostoka said the situation in Sukhumi was tense and that industry was shut down and rail and city transport halted by strikes, apparently by ethnic Georgians complaining that Abkhazians control all key jobs in the region.

It quoted the head of the railroad strike committee, Murman Fkhulukhia, as saying that Georgian leaders were ignoring their demands, which include the resignation of Abkhazian leaders, arrests of the instigators of violence and a change in the personnel policies of Abkhazia.

He said party leader Givi Gumbaridze came to listen to their demands at 3 a.m. last Monday. "He heard us out, but since then, not a single one of our leaders — party or government — has come to see us," he said. "Aren't they interested in the fact that 750 people are on strike, and as a result, the railroads are at a standstill?"

Thousands of tourists were being evacuated from the popular summer resort are of Sukumi. "The safety is fully ensured of vacationing children and adults as they leaving Abkhazia," Tass said.

The news agency said violence also flared Friday in the Republic of Tadzhikistan in Central Asia, 1,500 miles southeast of Moscow, when a fight broke out between two men of different nationalities.

"The fight grew into a conflict between two groups armed with chains, sticks and stones," Tass said. The battle ended when police fired shots into the air, Tass said. Forty-three people were detained.

The news agency did not identify the nationalities of the combatants, although fighting was reported over water rights in the republic earlier this month between Tadzhiks and Kirghiz. Both nationalities are Moslem. The Kirghiz speak a Turkic dialect and the Tadzhiks speak Persian.

At least 132 people have died in ethnic unrest during the past month in the southern Soviet republics of Georgia, Azerbaijan, Kazakhstan, Uzbekistan and Tadzhikistan.

Officials Say Runway Lights Off

By Claro Cortes
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MANILA, Philippines — The pilot of a Philippine Airlines plane that crashed on a busy highway ignored air traffic controllers who warned him not to land in a heavy rainstorm, airport officials said today.

Officials also said that electricians apparently failed to turn on runway lights to assist the pilot as he brought the plane in for landing at the Manila airport.

At least eight people were killed on the ground Friday and 91 others, mostly passengers, were injured when the twin-engine BAC 1-11 jet overshot a runway, plowed through a concrete wall and bounced onto Manila's South Expressway Friday.

The plane, carrying 98 people, slammed into at least four vehicles on the 12-lane highway and careened onto some railroad tracks, witnesses said.

Thirty of the injured remained hospitalized today, one in critical condition, said airline spokesman Enrique Santos.

The plane was attempting to land in Manila after traveling from Zamboanga City, 540 miles southeast of Manila.

"At that time, the pilot was given instructions to pull up, based on the analysis of the controller that he was not going to make it," Rudy Flores, control tower supervisor, told The Associated Press. "The pilot did not acknowledge and instead of pulling up, he continued to descend ... Unluckily enough, he did not make it. He overshot the runway."

Rolando Estabillo, another airline spokesman, declined comment on the allegation. Santos said earlier that the pilot, Capt. Ricardo Misa, had been cleared for landing "when runway is in sight."

Rose Reyes, Flores' deputy, acknowledged that such clearance was given, but said it was before the weather suddenly deteriorated. She said the clearance was given when the plane last radioed the tower while the aircraft was at least 5 miles away.

The instructions were changed when the weather suddenly deteriorated and controllers, who were keeping track of the aircraft, determined he could not make it safely, officials said.

"At that time he was still very high but he was above the runway already," Flores said.

Ms. Reyes said the runway lights were not on because it was mid-afternoon.

China's Economic Future Taxed By Political Woes

By Kathy Wilhelm
THE ASSOICATED PRESS

BEIJING — China's economy, which suffered from political turmoil that turned major cities into battlegrounds, remains weakened even though workers have left the barricades for the assembly lines.

Thousands of hours of production time were lost. Beijing alone suffered $348 million in unspecified "direct losses," according to city officials.

The state, which ran a $2.1 billion budget deficit last year, suddenly faced the unbudgeted cost of transporting armies and tanks to Beijing and repairing the damage caused by several days of warfare between soldiers and angry crowds early last month.

The country finds itself less equipped than ever to deal with its ecomomic problems.

Outside help has dwindled. Most of China's lenders have frozen aid or postponed consideration of new loans while they watch political developments. Trade and investment may also fall off as foreign businessmen weigh possible profits against the political uncertainties.

Debate in economic theory, as in other fields, has been silenced, and several leading economic think tanks face government "rectification" after having sided with now-ousted Communist Party chief Zhao Ziyang.

Reform measures favored by Zhao, such as widening China's tiny but flourishing private sector, increasing stock sales by state-owned companies and streamlining oversized work forces, have been discredited.

Instead, the aging revolutionary veterans who returned to center stage against Zhao are calling for hard work, plain living and self-reliance. There is no more talk of price reform, although even official news reports agree that China's semi-controlled price system is in chaos.

"Privatization of China is likely to reduce social development in terms of education, culture, hygiene, environmental protection and social welfare," wrote Fang Jue, a researcher at the Chinese Academy of Social Sciences.

Recent government policies, he said, "put the public economy at a disadvantaged position, losing ground to the private sector. That is what we are going to reform."

The leaders also have begun a crackdown on corruption, which at least one Western economist said may have been the only thing that kept some markets functioning.

In some industries such as steel, the state-set price is too low to cover costs, and black market sales have become essential, said the economist, speaking on condition of anonymity.

Perhaps most important, the political shake-up has pushed economic problems to second place. From the top leadership down, officials and scholars have been preoccupied with implementing the new political line and rooting out Western-style liberalism.

"It is a time to worry about the economy," the economist said.

A decade of unprecedented growth produced by senior leader Deng Xiaoping's policy of reducing central planning has foundered in a mire of raw material shortages, energy shortfalls, distribution bottlenecks, wild spending, rising prices and stagnant productivity.

Since September, the government has managed to cut inflation from a high of about 36 percent to an annual rate of 25.5 percent by reining in bank credit and reimposing control over some freed prices.

It halted thousands of construction projects and curbed the growth of small collective-owned factories that were siphoning materials and energy away from the state sector. It ordered officials to stop buying cars and other perks and raised taxes on imports.

But the austerity measures have created new problems. Tens of thousands of peasants who came to the cities on construction teams have been sent home without alternative jobs, a policy some economists criticized before the political crackdown.

New price controls have contributed to an average 12 percent drop in profits of state-owned enterprises, which employ three-fourths of China's urban work force. Oil, coal and other major industries are the worst hit, the People's Daily said. China's infant auto industry is reeling under a state ban on new car purchases by most government units.

Agriculture appears to be one bright spot.

The serious drought of the past two years has ended in most areas and the summer grain harvest is up slightly from last year, to 93 million tons. The government is predicting a record harvest for the year of 410 million tons.

Even this good news has a dark side. Most grain must be sold to the state, and the better the harvest, the more cash the government needs to buy it. In May, the Ministry of Commerce said it had only half the $5.4 billion needed to buy the summer harvest.

Accidental Discovery May End Obesity

WASHINGTON — Obesity may be controlled naturally with a new type of pill, discovered by accident, a research scientist confirmed recently.

In studies with potential cholesterol-lowering agents, scientists noted an unusual side efect. Patients receiving an ingredient in what is now being called FS-1 all lost weight, in spite of being instructed not to alter normal eating patterns, while body weight in control groups remained constant.

The director of research and development at National Dietary Research, an organization committed to the investigation and research of nutritional solutions to world-wide health problems, stated, "The mechanism by which FS-1 works to decrease body weight is actually a more complex and sophisticated process called nutri-bonding. When chewed and swallowed immediately before meals, FS-1 releases nutrients with low calorie content into the body, while high-calorie fats are eliminated, thus providing optimum nutrition and a minimum number of calories."

Studies with FS-1 indicate weight loss results clearly superior to products currently available for the treatment of obesity. In a comparative study by NDR, whose research topics have been the subject of articles published in recent medical and nutritional journals, FS-1 was found to be the most effective treatment for obesity and the most acceptable to patients.

The discovery comes as welcome news to thousands of obesity sufferers waiting years for this type of breakthrough. According to a spokesperson at NDR, "FS-1 can be made available to the public immediately, because it is not a drug and contains only natural ingredients recognized as safe. A drug with essentially the same weight loss capabilities might take as long as eight years to be available, due to lengthy delays encountered in the approval process." FS-1 is currently available on a limited basis through physicians and pharmacies.

Guerrilla Attack Leaves 43 Dead

By Dilip Ganguly
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

KABUL, Afghanistan — Moslem guerrillas fired eight rockets into the capital Saturday, killing at least 43 people and wounding more than 100 in the deadliest attack on the city in 11 years of civil war, government and hospital officials said.

"The most obvious reaction on the part of the government would be to retaliate," said Foreign Ministry spokesman Mohammed Nabi Amani.

State-run Radio Kabul, monitored in Islamabad, Pakistan, said 40 people were killed in the attack and 137 injured. Amani, who called it the worst attack on the capital, said at least 40 people were killed and 114 wounded.

Hospital sources, speaking on condition of anonymity, said later that at least three people had died of their wounds.

"Many of the injured are in a very critical condition," said one doctor, as nurses tore strips of cloth into bandages. "There is no way we can save them."

At least 20 people died when a rocket landed at a bus station near the city center, Amani said. The terminal was crowded with people when the rocket hit at 10 a.m., witnesses said.

"I was selling cigarettes when suddenly I heard a loud bang and people around me started screaming," said Mohammad Abdullah, a 16-year-old vendor, as he spoke from his hospital bed. "That is the last thing I remember."

Pakistani-based guerrilla forces had no immediate comment on Saturday's attack.

The U.S.-backed guerrillas have in the past denied responsibility for attacks on civilian areas. They have said the government shells its own capital to throw the blame on them.

Guerrillas have said, however, that rockets meant for military targets sometimes go astray.

Rebels and troops of the Marxist government have continued to battle for control of the country despite the withdrawal of the final Soviet troops last February. The Soviets sent forces to bolster the government, which they continue to support with arms shipments.

One rocket landed 100 yards from the office of Prime Minister Sultan Ali Kishtmand, breaking windows but causing no casualties, Amani said. Casualties were reported from a marketplace and a construction site near the Foreign Ministry, he said.

The government closed off all areas near government buildings and ordered a security clampdown on the city.

"Behind the terrorists who fired the rockets are the blood-stained hands of Pakistan and the United States," Amani said.

Diplomatic sources in Kabul estimate at least 10,000 guerrillas have surrounded the capital. However, the sources believe those forces, used to guerrilla warfare, are incapable of mounting a successful assault on the city.

After the Soviet pullout, the guerrillas concentrated on an offensive at the eastern city of Jalalabad. After more than four months, the city remains in government hands.

Qaribur Rehman Saeed, of the rebel-controlled Afghan News Agency, has said no frontal assaults on Kabul are planned.

He said the seven guerrilla parties headquartered in Pakistan have instead developed a strategy of rotating attacks on military targets.

The previous worst attack on Kabul was on April 27, when 65 rockets were fired into the city and 27 people were killed.

Brazil Gets Funds For Amazon Road

By Jorge Mederos
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BRASILIA, Brazil — A development bank has agreed to loan Brazil money to begin paving a highway in the western Amazon, ending a two-year delay caused by environmentalists worried about the road's effect on the fragile forest.

William Ellis, the Inter-American Development Bank's representative in Brazil, said the bank would finance 40 percent of the $146 million needed to complete the jungle project.

Brazil will receive 80 percent of the money immediately, and the remainder will be released after the government complies wih a promise to create Indian and forest reserves and control forest burning in the region, Ellis said.

At a presidential palace ceremony Thursday, Planning Minister Joao Batista de Abreu hailed the highway as a "salvation" for the remote Amazon state of Acre, which borders Peru and Bolivia about 2,657 miles northwest of Rio de Janeiro.

Work on the highway was suspended in Ocober 1987. When completed, the 312-mile route would link Rio Branco, the capital of Acre, and Porto Velho, the capital of Rondonia.

The bank, which financed the paving of 186 miles of dirt road between the two capitals, cut off the money under pressure from international environmental groups and the U.S. government because of widespread cutting and burning of the tropical rainforest.

It later demanded the government take measures to protect the rainforest and the estimated 16,000 Indians who live in the region.

The sttes of Acre and Rondonia have been devastated at an increasing rate by landless peasants, miners and ranchers who slash and burn the tropical rainforest and settle there.

Environmentalists warn an asphalt roadway would spur an influx of settlers, and lead to greater ecological destruction and disruption of Indian communities.

But state authorities in Acre — the nations' poorest and most underdeveloped state — see the highway as the only way to break the state's isolation from the rest of the country.

Japan's Party Leaders Spar Before Voting

By Eric Talmadge
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOKYO — Prime Minister Sousuke Uno attacked the rival Socialist Party in a final campaign speech Saturday, the eve of parliamentary elections, while the Socialist leader urged voters to "make clear your disgust" with Uno's scandal-plagued government.

At stake Sunday are half the seats in the upper house of Parliament.

A poor showing by Uno's conservative Liberal Democrats could increase pressure on Uno, in office less than two months, to resign and lead to early elections for the more powerful lower house of Parliament.

A Liberal Democratic loss there could bring Japan a Socialist-led government, since the lower house elects the prime minister.

"Socialism does not fit in Japan. Please help us defend freedom in this country," Uno, 66, told several hundred workers of his Liberal Democratic Party. He praised his party's record in raising Japan's status in the world.

Personally hobbled by allegations he kept paid mistresses, Uno made few public appearances during the 18-day campaign and his last was in a secluded parking lot at party headquarters.

By contrast, Takako Doi, chairwoman of the Japan Socialist Party, held her final campaign rally at a main intersection.

"Now is the time we can change politics, and the energy is beginning to move," Ms. Doi said, assailing scandals and a new sales tax. "Tomorrow is your big chance to make clear your disgust."

Polls, analysts and even many Liberal Democrats cast the governing party as an underdog in the voting for 126 of the 252 seats in the House of Councilors. Recent polls by three major national newspapers indicated the party would win only 30 to 42 seats, far short of the 54 it needs to maintain a simple majority.

Final results are expected Monday evening.

An upper house majority remains beyond the labor-backed Socialists' reach, as they would need to win 84 seats and are running only 54 candidates, with expectations of about 40 winners. That would boost their overall total in the house from the current 43 to about 60.

Thus they have led efforts to create an opposition coalition with three other parties — the No. 2 opposition Komeito (Clean Government Party), the Democratic Socialists and the Socialist Democratic Federation, which now has no seats in the upper chamber.

A defeat would be a historic setback for the party that has produced all of Japan's prime ministers and held majorities in both houses since it was formed in 1955.

Without control of the upper house, the Liberal Democrats would find it awkward though not impossible to pass legislation.

The popularity of the governing party began to erode last summer with the first disclosures in a scandal that led to the resignations of three Cabinet ministers and, ultimately, Prime Minister Noboru Takeshita.

The Recruit Co., a publishing conglomerate, was accused of selling millions of dollars in underpriced stocks and making political donations to obtain favors from politicians. With much of its elite tainted by Recruit, the Liberal Democrats were unable to select a new prime minister for more than one month.

Shortly after Uno took office June 2, reports began to appear that he had kept paid mistresses, igniting criticism from women's groups. Uno has said he did nothing immoral.

Meanwhile, the opposition rallied anti-government sentiment against a 3 percent sales tax that took effect April 1, claiming it created an unfair burden on lower-income households.

The Liberal Democrats pushed a tax reform package, including the new levy, through Parliament late last year over an opposition boycott. In a nation where consensus is highly valued, the party was criticized for ignoring opposition views.

The opposition put forward a record number of women candidates to win the votes of women who encountered the new tax in their daily shopping.

Farmers, an important source of Liberal Democratic support, also revolted against government moves, made under strong pressure from the United States, to open Japan's market wider to agricultural products.

A record 40 parties and 670 candidates are running Sunday. Voters will elect 76 legislators in districts and another 50 nationwide. In the nationwide voting, voters write in the name of the party they support, and the 50 seats are apportioned on the basis of each party's percentage of the total vote.

Though the Socialists are headed by a popular chairwoman, they have been widely accused of lacking a realistic and unified platform, partly because of a small but powerful radical left wing.

In the past they have called for Japan to disband its Self-Defense Forces and scrap the U.S.-Japan Security Treaty, under which about 64,000 American troops are stationed in Japan.

Socialist leaders, when pressed, say they would not immediately do away with the armed forces and seek only to revise the treaty. But Ms. Doi and others have said on several occasions that all American warships entering Japanese ports should be carefully inspected and denied entry if nuclear arms are found aboard.

'Truth In Preference To Fiction'

Blueprint

More Than A List Of Intentions

To construct a sturdy house requires a good blueprint. To build a good city demands the same schematic detail.

That kind of outline comes only from sound long-range planning — for cities, an excellent tool for managing growth. Greenville needs such a blueprint, and work began on one last week. But if such an effort is to be fruitful it cannot be euphemistic. Rather, it must realistically and descriptively address pertinent issues.

'A relevant plan identifies the needs and problems of a city without flinching and offers tangible steps addressing them.'

The city has directed a subcommittee of the Planning & Zoning Commission to draft a comprehensive plan for development over the next 20 years. That panel met for the first time last week and discussed the goals for the project. The scope of discussion was broad — transportation, land use, environment, housing, utilities, economics.

If all these factors are explored and included, Greenville's comprehensive plan can be useful. But for it to be productive will require deeper effort.

First, any successful comprehensive plan must be specific enough to provide concrete direction. Often, such a plan becomes a list of good intentions — to build better roads, better housing, better offices. But Greenville needs a detailed look at its future, not a round of resolutions.

A relevant plan identifies the needs and problems of a city without flinching and offers tangible steps addressing them.

Next, any comprehensive plan must be flexible. It should be amenable to regular review and easily adjusted as economics and demographics change. Goals carved in stone only have meaning in graveyards.

Finally, for a long-range plan to work, it should have the unwavering commitment of the public officials charged with making policy. The most dynamic plan in the world can't work if it is never implemented. Zoning, thoroughfare planning and capital spending decisions should all adhere to this working diagram of Greenville's future.

Detail, flexibility and commitment. Those are the ingredients of a constructive plan. Plot the course specifically. Adjust as needed. Then, follow the blueprint faithfully.

Space Exploration Can Pay Dividends

Back to the moon?

President Bush has established a goal for the United States to return to the moon and establish a base there in the 21st century. It will be followed by a manned mission to Mars.

Is the expense worthwhile to mankind? It is if it can be made to pay dividends.

There are benefits to be reaped in space and mankind must be prepared to discover them. If they are not apparent at the moment, bear in mind that the benefits of all economic revolutions were not apparent at their initiation.

There are untold mineral resources in space which can improve life for inhabitants of earth. Manufacturing processes are possible in the weightlessness of space which will revolutionize the products used on earth. There can be medical benefits for some patients to be hospitalized in space clinics.

Finally, it is an astronomical fact that the sun, the star which provides earth with light, energy, warmth and supports its pleasant environment, will burn out. When that happens, billions of years from now, mankind will have to leave planet earth and seek a new environment in order to survive.

The immediate down-to-earth problem, however, is that the United States does not have unlimited fiscal resources to pursue the space dreams. Recognizing that, President Bush has set no timetable for the moon colony or the Mars mission. The nation can only proceed as it can afford to. And, after all, there is adequate time for a deliberate pace.

It is correct for the United States to continue to build on its past accomplishments in space. It is also correct that the nation not attempt an unlimited spending program to reach our goals at a specified time. What is spent must be an investment — and one that will pay great dividends to future generations. Considering the national debt the United States is passing on to those coming generations, can it do any less than make an investment that may help them pay it off?

Try It, You'll Love It

Sunday Morning Notes

Eastern North Carolina barbecue doesn't need describing to anyone who was born here or has spent any time in the area.

But how do you describe it to someone who has never seen it or even heard of it?

Your columnist tried to describe it to an acquaintance from New York who will be locating in the area. Words failed.

I had told him about the pizza, Chinese, and steak restaurants, as well as the home cooking variety that prevails here.

"You'll have to try eastern barbecue," I said with enthusiasm.

"Is it hot?" he asked.

"Well, no, not really," I answered, "although you can sprinkle it with a vinegar and hot peppers concoction which makes it hot enough for anybody."

"Is it sliced or ribs?" he asked.

He obviously still didn't understand.

"Well, you see," I continued, "it's not like a back yard barbecue. You don't put heavy sauce on it and cook it until its blackened.

"To be done properly you barbecue the whole hog using a light barbecue sauce such as is found no where else. When the pork is cooked the meat is chopped and served with slaw, boiled potatoes, Brunswick stew and hush puppies.

My acquaintance seemed puzzled.

"Well," I continued, "you have to try it to understand it. Some people who try it for the first time love it. If you love it then then search goes on for years to find the best barbecue house in the east. Of course, it's a futile search because the 'best' varies with individual taste."

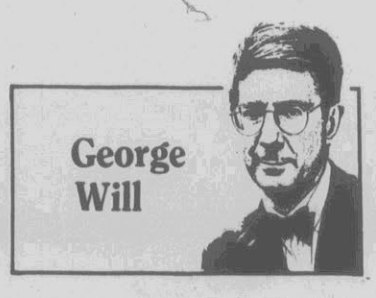
My enthusiasm building, I told my acquaintance he probably wouldn't be able to avoid the local dish while living here. Most political rallies and other large events feature chopped barbecue.

He didn't seem very impressed so I discussed the rapid increase in Chinese restaurants here.

Obviously the only way to introduce newcomers to eastern barbecue is not with words, but with a visit to a barbecue restaurant. Words simply don't do barbecue justice. Even full color photos don't tell the full story.

Anyway no one should come to the area without at least knowing that such a thing as chopped pork barbecue exists. They might mistakenly wander into a barbecue restaurant and be shocked out of trying it. That would be too bad. We easterners well know that to try local barbecue is to love it.

A Bargain ... If It Works



George Will

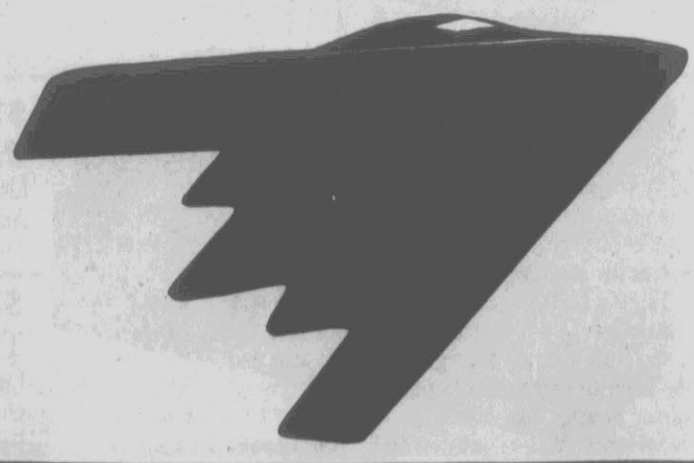
WASHINGTON — The costliest airplane is coming to decision time in Congress at the moment of maximum uncertainty about Soviet intentions. The Stealth bomber comes in a period of severe budget constraints that the President promises to continue (read his lips), constraints that have made Congress eager for a "detente dividend" of defense cuts to finance the pent-up demand for domestic spending.

The B-2 is the 150-ton flying wing, product of 900 new materials and processes, with a million parts and 200 on-board computers, with radar-nullifying technologies that give it a radar cross-section of a goose or (some say) a moth. B-2s cost about $500 million apiece, $70 billion for the proposed fleet of 132.

Can we afford it? About a third of the $70 billion has already been spent on research and development, so the "fly-away" cost would be under $300 million per plane. A Boeing 747's base price is $125 million and it need not be able to penetrate Soviet air defenses that include more than 300 surface-to-air missiles for every U.S. bomber and five fighters devoted to interception for every U.S. bomber. The S&L bailout will cost more than $100 billion. The Air Force argues that the B-2 fleet would deliver 2,000 warheads at a cost-per-warhead comparable to ICBMs and SLBMs.

We can afford what we need, which is stable deterrence. That means retaliatory forces sufficient to survive a Soviet attack and inflict intolerable damage. It means an array of forces that complicates, to the point of paralysis, war planning by a Soviet leader.

The B-2 could contribute to that, but the cost might mean the cannibalizing of the defense budget to finance it (particularly because the Commander in Chief is willing to sacrifice national security on the altar of his anti-tax obsession). The argument for finding the money begins with the basic argument for bombers: They deliver a large variety of ordinance over long distances under close control. Cruise missiles fired from vulnerable stand-off aircraft cannot travel as far, recognize changed situations or report back.



Bombers are long-lived and improvable. The newest B-52 is 28 years old. Improved avionics have doubled the potency of some B-52s in the last six years. The B-2 has been designed to deliver conventional as well as nuclear weapons. One B-2 can deliver more conventional ordinance than all the cruise missiles carried by a 688 class submarine (or a battleship) and a submarine needs two weeks to re-arm and return to station. The B-2 performs with a crew of two.

It can be especially effective striking certain targets that must be held at risk if deterrence is to be strong. These included mobile ICBMs and some hardened sites, such as the deep shelters that the Soviets elite has built for itself with war-fighting in mind.

It is said that the B-2 could be used against terrorist targets. We have fewer overseas bases than before, and use of them for attacks against, say, Libya, can cause political problems in the host country. However, such a use of the B-2 seems like (in Sen. William Cohen's words) sending a Rolls Royce into a combat zone to pick up groceries. And U.S. reluctance to act against the likes of Libya suggests that improved capability would be pointless. However, one reason for the reluctance is fear of diplomatic and domestic political trouble from any U.S. losses. The B-2 could reduce that danger, and hence the reluctance.

Any decision about a strategic system is, fundamentally, a decision about this question: What are Soviet intentions? The plain truth is that we do not know what they are, and whatever they are, they are changeable. Soviet arms production rolls along unabated. It would be folly for the United States to rest its security on faith in the words of, and confidence in the long tenure of, one Soviet leader. Intensifying economic decline, ethnic violence, and now labor unrest, make Gorbachev's future highly uncertain.

This is no time to reduce the pressure. This is a good time to signal U.S. determination to regard the Soviet threat as unchanged until many things more substantial than Soviet rhetoric are changed.

The B-2 would vitiate more than $200 billion of Soviet investment in air defenses. The B-2 would be a dramatic demonstration of U.S. determination to use the leverage of technological superiority to conduct an arms race in which the unreformed Soviet economy cannot compete.

The fundamental hope behind U.S. policy is that economic reform will presuppose, and presage, political reforms that will reduce the Soviet urge for military competition. So Congress should consider this: If building the B-2 would help convince the Soviet Union of the ruinous futility of its militarism, the B-2 would be a spectacular bargain.

Commentary

The Tortoise & The Hare

David Broder

WASHINGTON — Coming home to this capital after three months of reporting in Europe, the first impression is one of deceleration. The Old World is moving faster than the New World, paradoxical as that may seem.

Intrigued by the imminent integration of their separate economies into the single European market, the nations of Western Europe see expanding horizons of opportunity ahead. Freed from the heavy yoke of Brezhnev-era fear and repression, at least some Eastern European countries are dreaming what only a few years ago would have seemed impossible dreams.

The two Europes are beginning to reach out to each other, with Mikhail Gorbachev visiting London, Paris, Bonn and Rome in 1989 and the barbed wire being removed between Hungary and Austria.

A reporter who has watched this from a London assignment for ten weeks and then toured Hungary, France and the Netherlands with President Bush cannot help but be struck by the comparative immobilization of Washington.

It is a bit jarring to find Congress still struggling with the same piece of savings-and-loan legislation that it had atop its agenda at cherry-blossom time. It is even more dispiriting to learn that getting the bailout bill into a House-Senate conference is regarded here as the main achievement of the past three months.

Part of the sense of enervation may simply be climatic. Europe has had a beautiful and bracing spring and summer. Washington is waterlogged from months of rain. The July heat and humidity make people's movements seem tropically lethargic. The same President who was a bundle of energy in Europe goes slack on his return and heads off to Camp David and, soon, a Kennebunkport vacation.

All this is impressionistic, but the statistics from the Organization of Economic Cooperation and Development's (OECD) recent report tell a similar tale. In 1988, the U.S. economy grew faster than Europe's. This year, the growth rates are expected to be identical. Next year, Europe is projected to outpace the United States. The picture on inflation is just the reverse, with the United States accelerating from a pace substantially below Europe's to one markedly higher.

These are not numbers that should breed complacency. But the governments and people in Europe have a clearer sense of challenge and opportunity than we seem to possess at home.

From Ireland to Italy, the 12 nations of the European Community are very much like auto racers on the last warm-up lap before the green flag is waved. They are checking each other's growth rates and maneuvering for the best position they can grab when the last barriers to unrestrained competition go down in 1992.

For Spanish vintners, Scottish cattle raisers, French couturiers and Dutch herring fishermen, and for thousands of other entrepreneurs and businesspeople, the single market means both more competition and more opportunity. New deals are being done every day as manufacturers, distributors and retailers calculate how to leap the soon-to-be-meaningless national boundaries.

In Eastern Europe, particularly Poland and Hungary, the energy comes from the lifting of political constraints. Underground movements like Poland's Solidarity now operate in the light of day. They have power in government approximating their support among the people. Artists and intellectuals are breathing the heady air of freedom and their work — as in the Hungarian production of "Six Characters in Search of an Author" recently seen in London — demonstrates the daring and the vitality of these long-repressed talents.

Beyond them, in the Soviet Union, 1989 has seen even more dramatic change, as Gorbachev challenges 70 years of communist orthodoxy, and in turn is pressed by his critics to make even faster and more tangible progress.

All this makes the United States, historically the great engine and laboratory of change in the world, inevitably seem rather stick-in-the-mud by comparison. On his two European trips, our President has been a cheerleader and, on the margins, a force for change. But at home, George Bush breaks no molds and rejects any suggestion that America needs to alter course or raise its sights.

Clearly, a continent-sized republic like ours cannot duplicate the stimulus the 12 European Community countries derive from their first big step into a larger federal union. Nor can a nation in its third century of democracy find the experience of competitive elections as heady as the Poles, Hungarians or Russians do.

But if we cannot duplicate the sources of Europe's fresh burst of energy, we have all the more reason to find stimuli of our own. In the 1980s, America has generated jobs by incurring vast debts and deficits. That is not a pattern we can safely continue. Our education, environment, social services, economic infrastructure and fiscal discipline all cry out for improvement.

In a changing world, the United States simply cannot afford to be satisfied or static. That's why the languor of Washington seems disturbingly out of place.

From 3 Months To 30

Ellen Goodman

BOSTON — My friend has been home, visiting. She has held informal reunions with college friends, high-school friends, all fortysomething and holding. Holding up that is.

She spreads out the photos before me. What does the old crowd look like to someone who's never met them? Do some look older? Others younger? Could you guess his age? Hers?

What strikes me is not my friend's middle-aging peers, not the range of grays and the width of waistlines, the various shapes that people in their 40s take. It is the ages of the children that lace these snapshots of backyard barbecues and beaches.

The eldest of this pack's offspring is 21, she tells me; the youngest two months. One friend was dropped off by a daughter who needed the car, another came with a baby in a backpack. Two couples at the Kodacolor gathering talked wryly about the costs of college tuition; two others about the price of child care.

I list my own friends' statistics. Children that range from 30 to three months. Biorhythms that range from hot flashes to morning sickness. Has our generation produced, or perhaps re-produced, its own gap?

Those of us who have arrived at midlife did not follow neat patterns. We didn't act like what the demographers call a cohort group. Indeed, if there is something that typifies this generation of individualists, it is the instinct to rewrite the rules. And the expectation to be young for longer if not forever.

While my friend was on vacation, the Census Bureau confirmed what we observe, the trend toward later parenting. Four times as many first-time mothers are over 30 now than were in 1970.

Those who have their first children at 32 or 35 may have their second at 38 or 40. A gallery of women in the current New York magazine fit the category of "Mommie Oldest." In their mid- and late-40s they beat the biological clock.

There is no parallel feature on "Daddie Oldest" because it is less of a biological feat. But older dads are far more common.

Bent over the snapshots, my friend and I look for hidden clues to the meaning of this trend. What do we make of the parents and children spread across what used to be three generations?

We know from experience that it was often harder for couples who started children, marriages and careers in one decade. They and their children had to grow up together. Only now do they look relaxed.

We know that the much-planned, long-desired babies of older parents are often valued as a delicious prize for issues that have been resolved, lives that have matured. Their parents have grown into patience and even wisdom. But we don't know how it will be for these babies later.

For a long time, we have been advocates for later parenting. But now with our own nearly grown children and aging parents we dust off our appreciation for the life cycle.

Families aren't just parents and babies, after all, but relationships extended over time. What will happen to this mini-generation of older parents when they face retirement and college tuitions at the same time? Will the financial crunch facing young families find a new reflection in the older model?

What about the dynamics of a 60-year-old father and an adolescent son? Will rebellion be muted by greater understanding? Or repressed by fear of a parent's age?

The 45-year-old parent is hardly a social problem on the scale of, say, the 30-year-old grandmother. But there is an odd mirror here too. Will the children of older parents have to grow up faster, mature faster to care for parents earlier?

I know how much midlife-Americans pride ourselves on staying younger. We run and diet and monitor ourselves into health. We expect to be physically fit. The postponing generation has done everything later and surely, in fairness, should live healthier and longer. But it doesn't always work that way.

Any way you do the numbers, having children later means having fewer years together. And it means fewer children who have grandparents in their lives.

Surely, there is no perfect moment to have children. Every child is subject to and a product of the parents' fate. For the most part, people have children late because that is finally the "right" time in their lives.

But perhaps we increasingly define the right time, not just for ourselves, but for our jobs or finances or mortgages. We keep one eye on the big sweeping hand of the biological clock that dictates how long we can have babies. But it may limit our view of our life as parents and children together over time.

Looking at these snapshots, my friend and I know pretty much the essential story of young families, their strengths and weaknesses. Now, as more of us come to midlife reunions with babies in their backpacks, we wonder what the pictures will look like through the next and longer lens.

The Sign Is Wrong: Kafka Still Lives Here

Richard Cohen

PRAGUE — His former house, now a bookshop, is marked with a sign in Czech: "Zde Zil Franz Kafka" (Here Lived Franz Kafka). But Kafka's books are not displayed in the window, nor sold inside nor available elsewhere in the city. The sign on his old house has its tense all wrong. Truly, Kafka still lives here.

Some of Kafka's books may soon become available, but no one seems to know just when. (A bookstore clerk visibly flinched when I asked for Kafka. "December," she said.) But even in that December, should it ever come, not all of Kafka will be available — not "The Trial" which gave us the term "Kafkaesque." That book would not be read as fiction here.

The term "Kafkaesque" comes to mind frequently here. A dissident says his brother once edited an animal-husbandry journal. After the dissident was jailed, the brother lost his job. Now he edits a farm-machinery journal.

The modest, but apparently growing, dissident movement is circulating a petition. It is called "Several Sentences," and one of the sentences calls for freedom of assembly. When well-recognized people sign the petition, Radio Free Europe is notified and, soon, the names are known all over Prague. As a result, the regime feels compelled to respond and so it has been conducting a dialogue with itself. Why is there no freedom of assembly here? a newspaper "reader" asks. There is, the regime replies — but not for anti-social demonstrations. In charcoal, Kafka smiles.

Unlike previous petitions, the signatories of the latest one are not all intellectuals or academics. Some workers have signed, as have well-known television and stage personalities, including the country's most popular woman singer, Hana Zegorova. One actor told the dissident, Jiri Dientsbier, that after 20 years in the theater he got the biggest applause of his career when he walked out on stage after Radio Free Europe announced he had signed the petition.

What will happen? In the short run, Western observers think nothing much — not until the economy worsens or a reform element surfaces in the Communist Party or the Soviets pull the plug on the very regime they established after their invasion in 1968. Czechoslovakia is no Poland — or, for that matter, a Soviet Union.

Yet the regime is under pressure. Recently, it relaxed travel restrictions — a presumed safety valve. Now Czechoslovaks can go to the West and purchase goods unavailable here. West Germany is the favorite destination, a former enemy but now a bazaar of consumer goodies like videotape recorders. The West German Embassy is besieged — 6,000 visa applications a day.

But, as in East Germany, the regime seems unbending. It talks glasnost but practices an updated Stalinism. Since 1968, it has purged anyone with the slightest liberal tendency. Both Western sources and dissidents agree: an aging, ossified leadership is waiting for Mikhail Gorbachev to fall on his face. The dissident movement waits on Gorbachev, too. Its fondest wish — a dream, really — is that he will renounce the 1968 Warsaw Pact invasion and Czechoslovakia, once a thriving democracy, will revert to its former self.

Meanwhile, a regime that has banned Kafka continues to operate as if it has read him. The former foreign minister, Jiri Hajek, was arrested recently, apparently to stop him from meeting with a group of West Germans. Within several hours, he was released. The country's best-known dissident, the playwright Vaclav Havel, was jailed for "hooliganism" but since his release has given so many interviews he takes hotel rooms in obscure towns just so he can write.

Another dissident takes Western reporters through Prague's resplendent Old Town and throws open the door to a historic building. Inside, the walls are crumbling and the acrid smell of urine attacks the nose. Like any in Prague, this house also warrants a sign. In spirit, Kafka lives here, too.

'Secrets' Keep Family From Leaving Russia

By Ruth Sinai
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Judith Lurie, her husband and two children had finally received permission to leave the Soviet Union. Emmanuel Lurie quit his job, the children were taken out of school, the airplane tickets were purchased.

Five days before their scheduled departure, the exit visas were revoked. The family was told the permits would be reissued soon. That was 10 years ago, and the Luries are still waiting.

Soviet authorities say Emmanuel Lurie cannot leave because he knows secrets from the two-year period he worked as a young organic chemistry researcher in a government facility 27 years ago.

"He had access to classified information, but he had just graduated from university and had a junior job. And science has changed so much since then, what damage can he do?" asked Judith Lurie, who used a tourist visa to travel to the halls of the State Department and Congress to plead her husband's case this past week.

The Luries are at the top of the State Department's list of Soviet citizens denied permission to emigrate because of their alleged knowledge of state secrets. But in the public eye, their plight has been all but obscured by the unprecedented flood of Jews, Pentacostalists and Armenians flowing out of Mikhail Gorbachev's Soviet Union, with its liberalized political and economic policies.

"The world is enchanted by words like 'glasnost' and 'perestroika,' but people like us continue to live with the horror, and we feel abandoned," said Mrs. Lurie.

In an unusual gesture, motivated perhaps by persistent lobbying on her family's behalf in the United States, Israel and Europe, Mrs. Lurie and her 13-year-old daughter were granted two-month tourist visas so they could travel to visit her ailing mother and married daughter in Israel.

She is one of 10,000 Soviets allowed out as tourists last year, but only one of a handful of "refuseniks" among them. Refusenik is the term coined by human rights activists in the 1970s to denote a person who has been repeatedly refused permission to emigrate by Soviet authorities.

Mrs. Lurie said she resigned her job as a high school English teacher last year after the principal "made life intolerable" because of her dissident activities. She was a founder of a group called Jewish Women Against Refusal and took part last year in a hunger strike to press the refusenik community's case.

The National Council of Soviet Jewry, a U.S.-based group, estimates there are 2,500 refuseniks. Of the 22,151 Soviets allowed to leave so far this year, all but a few were first-time applicants, according to the group.

The Luries first applied to leave in 1979. Emmanuel Lurie, having quit his first job in 1964, was working for the Soviet Academy of Science in an unclassified position. For 11 months, the authorities considered the family's visa application, and then granted the exit permits.

Mrs. Lurie said she does not know why they then changed their minds.

"Whenever I ask them why, they say, 'well, you know better than we do,'" she recounted.

In the meantime, her mother was allowed to leave, as was her married daughter. They moved to Israel, and Mrs. Lurie saw her mother this month for the first time in nine years.

The Supreme Soviet, or parliament, has been rewriting the country's emigration laws to streamline and liberalize them. One provision under consideration would revise the state secrets clause, making five years the amount of time that must elapse before an applicant can become eligible to leave the country.

The Bush administration has promised that once the new law is completed and implemented, it will consider lifting some trade restrictions against the Soviets.

But for Mrs. Lurie, who must return to Moscow no later than September, it may be too late. She has been told the provisions might apply only to new applicants, not retroactively to people such as her husband.

"Many changes have happened in the Soviet Union. But there are still prisoners of conscience, still people in Gulags, still refuseniks like us," she said.

"And meanwhile, our lives pass, times passes, and nothing changes."

Captive Nations Week Set

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — President Bush has pledged unswerving U.S. support for captive nations — peoples and countries that live under foreign domination or "ideologies that are inimical to the ideas of national sovereignty and individual liberty."

Bush proclaimed Captive Nations Week, calling for all nations of the world to guarantee human rights, freedoms and independence for these peoples. He said the meaning of this week is "to live freedom, to overcome oppression."

The president, in a Rose Garden ceremony to mark the occasion, cited "rays of light" worldwide that show changes in the Soviet Union and other countries toward openness and free expression, including the dismantling of the barbed wire fence between Austria and Hungary.

"To all nations, America proclaims the truth cannot forever be intimidated by force. For history shows, and the human will proclaims, that liberty can light the darkest night," he said.

Bush said the Soviet Union's Baltic States of Latvia, Lithuania and Estonia are imbued with a "spirit of renewal" in their movements for independence.

He cited the opposition movements in China, Vietnam, Laos, Ethiopia and Nicaragua and the ethnic Turks in Bulgaria, saying America stands with the people involved in those struggles.

In his Rose Garden remarks, Bush pointed to his trip last week to Hungary and Poland, two East bloc countries that are moving toward economic and politcal reform, saying these are examples that "freedom is in the air."

Inquiry Into Phone-Taps Is Requested

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ATHENS, Greece — The dominant party in Greece's coalition government has asked Parliament to investigate allegations that former socialist Premier Andreas Papandreou ordered politicians' phones tapped.

The request, submitted by 144 deputies of the center-right New Democracy Party, was expected to pass in the 300-seat Parliament with the support of the 28 deputies of the Communist-led Coalition of the Left and Progress, which governs with New Democracy.

The proposal accuses Papandreou of ordering taps on the telephones of President Christos Sartzetakis, political rivals, his own Cabinet ministers and military officials.

It also charges that three former heads of the Ministry of Transport and Communications were involved in the alleged eavesdropping.

Papandreou was premier for eight years but his Panhellenic Socialist Movement lost in last month's general elections. New Democracy and the Communist-led group agreed to form a short-term coalition aimed at investigating scandals that occurred during Papandreou's rule.

New Democracy's proposal to set up a 12-member committee to investigate the phone-tapping charges will be discussed by the unicameral Parliament next Thursday.

"We propose criminal prosecution ... on the accountability of government members and ministers," the proposal said.

Parliament also has ordered an investigation into Papandreou's alleged involvement in a multimillion-dollar financial scandal involving fugitive Greek banker George Koskotas.

A 12-member investigative committee was formed Friday to investigate the charges.

The Koskotas scandal and other charges of widespead corruption and wrongdoing led to the fall of Papandreou's government in the June 18 elections.

The governing coalition says it is carrying out a "catharsis," or clean up of government.

Government spokesman Athanassios Kannelopoulos reiterated Friday that "the catharsis will be carried out in such a time period so that the elections will be held in October."

Watson Chasing Sixth Open Title

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TROON, Scotland — Tom Watson's opponent is Australian journeyman Wayne Grady, but his target is the immortal Harry Vardon.

"It's something I want; something I want very much," Watson said Saturday after he'd come one step — and one stroke — closer to a piece of golfing history: a sixth British Open Golf Championship to tie the record set by Vardon in 1914.

It is a formidable challenge for Watson, who once ruled as the dominant player in the game, then went into a puzzling five-year slide that has produced only one victory.

He goes into Sunday's final round of the 118th British Open one shot back of the stubborn Grady and with a host of younger American challengers in hot pursuit.

And those young Americans know that the 39-year-old Watson is the man to beat, the man they're chasing.

"If I had to pick anybody, other than myself, to win it, I'd pick Tom Watson,' said Payne Stewart, himself only two shots back.

He must fend off those challenges. He must overtake Grady. And he must retain a golf game — so long dormant — that suddenly has regained life and zest on the Scottish links Watson loves so well.

And he showed it.

His head was up, topped by the tweed cap he usually sports in Scotland. His gait was the jaunty stride that was his trademark in 37 previous worldwide victories. The competitive, almost combative, smile was in place as he did what he

European Golfers Coming Up Short

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TROON, Scotland (AP) — Ian Woosnam caught the "yips", Bernhard Langer caught a fever and defending champion Severiano Ballesteros just had a bad day.

The boom in European golf went bust at the British Open Saturday, shattered on the rock-hard seaside course at Troon.

"One day you wake up feeling like you're the best player in the world," Ballesteros said. "The next day, you feel like you've never played the game before."

Since Langer won the Masters in 1985, European golfers have won seven of 18 major tournaments — the Masters, U.S. Open, British Open and PGA. They also have chased the title in at least two others and beaten the United States in two Ryder Cup matches, the first time the Americans have lost consecutively in that competition.

The sudden change in fortune for the Europeans on their home ground was seen as just another twist in a fickle game by at least one American old-timer.

"Doesn't surprise me one bit," said Jack Nicklaus, winner of 18 majors including three British Opens. "It's a fallacy that Europeans play better on links courses than us Americans. They may have four or five great players

Big Return On Indians

By Lane Dunn
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

After two and a half years as owner of the Kinston Indians, Stuart Revo of Long Island, N.Y., sold the minor league team Tuesday for $750,000.

That's triple his original investment — a slightly better return than T-Bills could have provided him.

But the new owners have more than just business aspirations.

"That (the large profit) would make me happy," said Tuck Tucker of Atlanta, one of the new owners. "But Stuart (Revo) has owned the team for different purposes. I do not want to turn around and sell the team as fast as I can to make a buck.

"We're in it to enjoy the game," he said. "It's something I've wanted to do for 10 years."

Revo didn't return phone calls placed to his New York office. But Indians General Manager North Johnson speculated that Revo opted to sell the Indians to acquire cash needed to boost his three other minor league baseball clubs. Revo owns the Williamsport Bills in the

North State Wins

Double Plays Key District Victory

By Mike Grizzard
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

The double play is known to be a pitcher's best friend. Greenville North State hurler Scott Briley had a lot of help from his friends Saturday afternoon.

With the aid of three double plays — two of the unassisted variety by shortstop Darryl Cherry — Briley tossed a four-hitter to guide North State past Greenville Tar Heel 4-2 for the District IV Area Two Little League Baseball Tournament crown.

North State breezed through the five-team, double-elimination at the Elm Street Little League Park in undefeated fashion and now awaits the survivor of the District IV Area One tournamnet which is being staged in New Bern.

Havelock, Beaufort, Southern and Morehead City were still alive heading into Saturday. The winner comes to Greenville the day after the completion of that tournament to decide which team advances to the state tournamnet in Hudson July 31-August 5.

Both Tar Heel losses came at the hands of North State.

"I'm happy for the kids," North State manager Roy Berbert said. "They played good defense — they played great defense.

"They've worked hard and practiced hard and get along well with each other. We just look forward to playing the winner of the other tournament."

Briley fanned five and walked five in going the distance, but was bailed out of trouble in the middle innings by an alert and capable defense highlighted by Cherry.

Cherry displayed tremendous range to either side and was true with both glove and arm.

After handling a routine grounder to leave runners stranded at second and third in the first, the field was Cherry's stage the next three innings. In the second, after Damian Phillips drew a one-out walk, Cherry fielded Jamie Willer's bouncer up the middle, stepped on the bag and fired to first for a double play.

In the third, Cherry snagged two line-drives, the second of which required a dive to his right and a backhand stab. But, perhaps his most sensational play of the day came in the fourth when he fielded

Receivers Searching For Some Chemistry

By Tom Morris
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

This is the third in a series previewing the positions on the East Carolina football team for the upcoming fall.

East Carolina's wide receivers and quarterbacks have been gathering together on the practice field for informal workouts all summer, and receivers coach Dale Steele hopes the extra-credit work pays off in the fall.

"They have to have a sixth sense about them, the quarterbacks and the receivers," Steele said. "The best passing combinations are guys that have the innate ability to know a receiver is going to do this, or going to do this. If you know a quarterback is going to put the ball here, or going to put the ball there, it helps."

When Bill Lewis replaced Art Baker as the Pirates' head coach, he junked the run-and-shoot scheme in favor of the I-formation. That means changes for everybody on the offense and the receivers are no exception.

"I don't think there was as many of those (deep routes)," Steele said of the old scheme. "It was more of a short passing game. We're asking them to run some intermediate routes that maybe they didn't have to perfect in the run-and-shoot.

"Our routes are designed as more snap breaks, with the quarterback throwing before the receiver gets out of the cut. That requires that they make sharp breaks in the cuts. The run-and-shoot was a lot of roll cuts, quick cuts. The ball was thrown as he turned around reading the coverage."

To speed along the transition, quarterbacks and receivers have been gathering on the ECU practice fields whenever possible during summer school, running skeleton patterns and working toward developing better timing.

Senior Walter Wilson (6-10, 180) is the top returnee with 19 catches for 355 yards and four touchdowns a year ago. He figures to have a spot sewn up for the fourth year in a row.

On the other side, junior Al Whiting (6-0, 162) and senior Bojack Davenport (6-0, 174) are locked in a battle that will likely last all fall.

"He and Al are locked in a battle right now over there," Steele said. "I think that's healthy for both of them. They both have different talents and different abilities, and they both have to make a contribution."

They are the only experienced

Butch Brown breaks blocks on John Wooten

John Wooten Can Perform Amazing Feats

By Tom Morris
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

John Wooten pays the bills and then some by letting people pound him with sledge hammers.

Just for kicks, he also pulls large objects such as trailers, busses and trains as far as he can.

This isn't a hobby; it's a death wish. Better yet, it's a ritual of self-imposed torture.

Wooten, who lives in Boston but has several relatives scattered between Greenville and Ayden, has made crazy exhibitions and stunts his life work. He routinely does things to his body that either weren't meant to be done, or seem to be impossible feats of strength.

The World's Strongest Man (he has won The World's Strongest Man Contest a couple of times) does all this despite the fact he has only one lung and one kidney. He lost the lung to cancer and the kidney to a stunt gone bad.

"It's very dangerous," Wooten, 41, said in an interview in Greenville on Friday between stunts. "I would not suggest for young children or young adults to do this."

Words to live by John.

Wooten can lie on a bed of nails and have cinder blocks broken over his chest with a sledge hammer — he actually did it Friday in Gold's Gym. He has pulled a bus, a train, a truck and even airplane.

For his second trick in Greenville, he attempted to lug a mobile home and a truck up a highway, but the up-hill grade got the best of him.

With all this, he makes a pretty good living, at times earning $10,000 per feat.

Sanderson, 9-6, struck out three and walked none and Les Lancaster finished with two-hit relief for his second save.

Mets.....7
Braves.....5

NEW YORK — Pinch-hitter Lee Mazzilli singled home the tiebreaking run in the eighth inning Saturday night and the New York Mets won their fifth straight game, 7-5 over the Atlanta Braves.

The Mets, stung by Dale Murphy's three-run homer in the eighth, came back to win before a crowd of 49,142 the largest of the season in Shea Stadium. New York won for the 18th time in 23 games at home and remained three games behind Montreal in the National League East.

Phil Lombardi, getting a rare start at catcher, singled with one out in the eighth against Jim Acker, 0-4. Kevin Elster followed with a hit-and-run single that sent Lombardi to third and Mazzilli bounced a single over first baseman Darrell Evans for his fifth pinch-hit in 25 tries.

Juan Samuel, who had three of the Mets' 14 hits, drove in Elster with a groundout.

Rick Aguilera, 6-3, got the victory despite allowing Murphy's home run. Randy Myers pitched the ninth for his 15th save.

Don Aase, the third Mets pitcher, retired the first two batters in the eighth before Lonnie Smith walked and Andres Thomas singled.

Aguilera relieved and Murphy, after checking his swing on an 0-2 pitch, homered to deep dead center field. It was Murphy's eighth home run and 342nd of his career, and the first homer allowed by Aguilera in 62 innings this season.

Gregg Jefferies homered, tripled and doubled for New York. He had a chance to become the fifth Mets player to hit for the cycle, but lined out leading off the eighth.

Jefferies hit his fourth home run of the season in the second. He opened the fifth with a double against Tom Glavine and scored on Elster's sacrifice fly, with Samuel adding an RBI single for a 3-2 lead.

Jeff Blauser doubled twice for Atlanta. He and Thomas doubled to tie it at 1 in the fourth, but Sid Fernandez escaped a bases-loaded, no-out jam by striking out Ed Whited and getting Tommy Gregg on a double-play grounder.

John Russell reached on third baseman Howard Johnson's throwing error in the fifth and scored on Blauser's double for a 2-1 lead.

The Mets made it 5-2 in the seventh when Samuel led off with a single and scored from first on Dave Magadan's hit-and-run single.

Reynolds hit a two-run homer in the bottom of the inning, his fourth home run of the season.

AMERICAN LEAGUE

Athletics.....3
Orioles.....1

OAKLAND, Calif. — Jose Canseco hit his second homer in two days and Bob Welch notched his 11th victory as the Oakland Athletics won their fourth straight, 3-1 over the slumping Baltimore Orioles Saturday.

The Orioles, whose four-game losing streak is one loss away from their longest of the season, have scored runs in only three of their last 39 innings.

Canseco's homer in the sixth, a leadoff shot off Baltimore starter Pete Harnisch, gave the A's a 3-1 lead. Since returning from the disabled list following wrist surgery, Canseco has four homers in eight games.

Welch, 11-5, gave up a first-inning run on Randy Milligan's two-out RBI single, but shut down the Orioles with five hits in seven innings to run his home record to 8-1 with his fifth win in six decisions.

Rick Honeycutt and Dennis Eckersley pitched the final two innings, with Eckersley gaining his 16th save. In retiring the Orioles 1-2-3 in the ninth, Eckersley continued a strong performance by the A's bullpen that has seen their relief pitchers retire 19 straight batters over seven hitless innings in the last four games.

Trailing 1-0 in the second, the A's rallied to tie the game as Dave Henderson led off with a single, stole second two outs later and scored on Tony Phillips' RBI single off Harnisch, 1-3.

Phillips, who entered the game in a 3-for-34 sluump, doubled in the fourth after a leadoff walk to Ron Hassey, putting runners at second and third. Mike Gallego struck out, but Rickey Henderson hit a sacrifice fly, scoring Hassey and giving the A's a 2-1 lead.

White Sox.....10
Red Sox.....6

BOSTON — Ivan Calderon hit a go-ahead, three-run homer off Rob Murphy in the seventh inning Saturday as the Chicago White Sox won their eighth consecutive game, beating the Boston Red Sox 10-6.

Chicago, on its longest winning streak since Sept 5-13, 1983, trailed 6-4 in the seventh. Dave Gallagher singled and Steve Lyons doubled off Dennis Lamp and Calderon hit his 11th home run of the season into the left-field screen off Murphy, 1-5.

The White Sox, who matched a season high with 17 hits, added three runs in the eighth off Mike Smithson. Carlos Martinez led off with his third home run and Gallagher and Lyons hit RBI singles.

Gallagher and Harold Baines had three hits each as the White Sox sent Boston to its seventh loss in 11 games. The Red Sox, who walked seven times and hit seven doubles against four Chicago pitchers, stranded 11 runners.

Ken Patterson, 4-1, retired four batters in order and Donn Pall threw three innings of two-hit relief for his sixth save.

Baines' run-scoring single gave Chicago the lead in the first. Jim Rice's RBI double tied it in the second and Danny Heep's RBI double put Boston ahead 2-1 in the third.

Chicago took a 4-2 lead in the fourth as Dan Pasqua hit a two-run double and Martinez an RBI single. The rally was helped by John Dopson's 13th balk of the season.

But Boston came back with three runs in the fourth, taking a 5-4 lead on RBI singles by Rick Cerone and Heep and Jody Reed's sacrifice fly. Kevin Romine's RBI double in the fifth made it 6-4.

Indians.....1
Royals.....0

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Brook Jacoby doubled with two outs in the ninth inning to score Pete O'Brien from first and give the Cleveland Indians and Tom Candiotti a 1-0 victory over the Kansas City Royals Saturday night.

Candiotti, 8-6, in his second start since coming off the 15-day disabled list July 17, allowed only four hits in eight innings to outduel Tom Gordon. Candiotti struck out three and walked one before giving way to Doug Jones, who pitched the ninth for his 23rd save.

Gordon, 11-3, allowed only five hits until O'Brien singled leading off the ninth. Then, after Joey Belle struck out and Brad Komminsk popped out to shortstop, Jacoby lined a double into the gap in right-center.

Bo Jackson singled leading off the Kansas City second, but was thrown out by catcher Andy Allanson trying to steal second. Jackson singled up the middle with two out in the seventh, but Candiotti ended the inning by retiring Bill Buckner on a ground ball.

Felix Fermin reached on an error by third baseman Kevin Seitzer, Dion James singled and Joe Carter walked on a 3-2 pitch. But shortstop Brad Wellman fielded Pete O'Brien's hard grounder behind second base, stepped on the bag and threw to first in time for the double play.

Gordon, who struck out 10 Milwaukee Brewers in his previous start, did not get a strikeout until Komminsk and Jacoby fanned in the seventh. After Komminsk singled with one out in the second, the Indians did not get a hit until James beat out an infield grounder with one out in the sixth.

Twins.....6
Brewers.....1

MILWAUKEE — Roy Smith, backed by a 14-hit attack, gained his first victory in nearly two months as the Minnesota Twins beat the Milwaukee Brewers 6-1 Saturday night.

Smith, 5-4, retired the first 12 batters before Robin Yount singled to lead off the Milwaukee fifth. The right-hander gave up six hits, struck out three and walked one before getting relief help in the eighth from Jeff Reardon. Reardon finished up for his 17th save.

The victory was the first for Smith since May 30.

The Twins, meanwhile, beat the Brewers for only the third time in 11 games this season. Minnesota's victory came before a crowd of 52,908, the second largest of the season at County Stadium.

The Twins took a 2-0 lead in the third as Randy Bush singled, stole second and scored on Kirby Puckett's single. Puckett moved to second on an infield out and scored on Gene Larkin's hit.

Minnesota moved ahead 4-0 against starter Jaime Navarro, 1-3, when Greg Gagne singled and scored as Rob Deer fumbled Doug Baker's double into the right field corner.

Baker went to third and scored on Al Newman's squeeze bunt.

The Brewers scored in the eighth on Mike Felder's run-scoring grounder. Gary Gaetti's two-run double in the ninth gave the Twins a 6-1 lead.

Puckett's two hits gave him a major league leading 43 multi-hit games this season.

Yount extended his hitting streak to 12 games with the fifth-inning single but had his club-record consecutive stolen base streak stopped at 17.

Rangers.....2
Yankees.....1

ARLINGTON, Texas — Ruben Sierra homered and tripled and Mike Jeffcoat allowed six hits over six innings Saturday night as the Texas Rangers won their third straight over the New York Yankees, 2-1.

Jeffcoat, 5-2, matched his career-high for victories in a season, striking out five and walking one before a crowd of 41,647, the largest of the season at Arlington Stadium.

Relievers Gary Mielke and Kenny Rogers worked out of a bases-loaded, no-out situation in the seventh and Rangers closer Jeff Russell pitched the final two innings to earn his 21st save.

The Yankees lost their fifth consecutive game.

Texas took a 2-0 lead off Dave LaPoint, 6-8, on solo leadoff homers by Steve Buechele in the second and Sierra in the fourth.

Jeffcoat was bidding for his third shutout of the season, which would have tied him with Boston's Roger Clemens for the league lead.

The Rangers wasted a scoring opportunity in the sixth when Sierra led off the inning with his 10th triple of the season, giving him the league lead. But Lance McCullers, in relief of LaPoint, got out of the jam, striking out consecutive batters and getting pinch-hitter Cecil Espy to fly to right.

The Yankees loaded the bases with no outs in the seventh on consecutive singles by Don Slaught, Ken Phelps and Roberto Kelly.

But Mielke, in relief of Jeffcoat, struck out Steve Sax and lefty Rogers followed Mielke out of the bullpen to get Polonia to ground into a double play.

The Yankees' Jesse Barfield struck out three consecutive times to run his strikeout streak to seven before doubling in the eighth. Barfield has struck out eight of nine at-bats.

Bankhead On A Roll

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SEATTLE — With eight straight victories, Scott Bankhead has the longest winning streak of any American League pitcher in a season in which the usually woeful Seattle Mariners are finally flexing their muscles.

Bankhead's eighth straight victory Thursday night put him past Mark Langston and two other former Mariners for the franchise record and ran his record to 10-4 this season.

Langston, the AL strikeout leader for three of the past five seasons, was traded May 25 to the Montreal Expos for three young pitchers in a controversial deal that left Seattle without a star pitcher.

But Bankhead, 10-4, wasn't listening to the critics during the 5-2 victory over the Toronto Blue Jays.

"Records are fine, streaks are fine. But the most important thing was to win the game," said Bankhead, a former standout at North Carolina and a member of the 1984 U.S. Olympic team. "We got ahead early and I just kept throwing strikes," he said.

Winning games is something the Mariners, who have never had a winning season in their 13-year season, have been doing regularly, remaining at .500 after 94 games.

The one-man traveling spectacle show of Wooten and his super-strength deeds mustered all the hype and self-promotion he could in his quick appearance in Greenville on Friday.

It began sharply at 1 p.m. Friday at Gold's Gym before a handful of curious weight lifters and reporters.

Wooten was lowered onto his back onto a bed of 2-inch nails with a wood board to shield his face from flying cinders. Nine cinder blocks, totaling about 500 pounds, were then stacked on his chest.

Gold's owner Butch Brown then smashed them into pieces with a sledge hammer in about 90 seconds of destruction.

That done, Wooten was pulled off the sharp bed, and he shook some of the debris off his 6-1, 260-pound frame.

He tossed his head back and forth, showed the nail marks covering his back and immediately began talking about the next feat, pulling a house a hundred or so feet.

It was actually a mobile home attached to a big rig truck, not a full house. Bob's Mobile Homes provided the home, but the futile stunt continued up U.S. 264 well past Azalea Mobile Homes as baffled workers and motorists wondered why a bunch of reporters were standing in the middle of the highway watching a big man lead a truck by a rope searching for level ground.

This stunt didn't work out too well. The mobile home and pulling truck, weighing just around 12 tons, were originally sitting on grass, and the objects were settled into the wet ground.

The stunt then moved out onto the highway. Eight times Wooten tried to pull the objects. The furthest he got was a few feet. Time and again, Wooten directed the driver to pull up a few yards. The driver would get the trailer in motion and then let off the gas. Wooten would then try to maintain the motion, but to no avail.

"Uphill is tough," he said. "Level ground is no problem."

The sequence was repeated enough times that the failed stunt ended well down the highway from Bob's.

In addition to money and publicity, Wooten's stunts benefit Camp Good Days And Special Times, a national organization based in Rochester, N.Y. that sponsors camps for kids with cancer.

During his exhibition Friday, Wooten never missed a chance to give the charity a plug, dropping the name time and time again. There was no big fee involved in his appearance in Greenville. It was sponsored by Gold's and Bob's, but there was no big payoff involved.

Still, even if there isn't a big donation involved, Wooten's biggest asset to the organization is public relations. He gets the name out to the people.

Wooten just didn't wake up one day and decide to risk life and limb performing amazing feats of danger. It came about after an unexpected turn of events.

But after being diagnosed with cancer in 1973 at the age of 28, Wooten lost a lung to the disease.

"When I was in the hospital bed, the doctor said, 'John, you were quite an athlete and football player, but you won't be able to be like you used to now.'," Wooten said.

"Well, I had just gotten out of surgery and I was still groggy and I said, 'I'll show you.' It was just in jest. I had this urge to get back in shape and I didn't want to listen to what the doctor said. I wouldn't stand for being half a man."

Not long after the operation, Wooten met Jack Walsh of Trenton, New Jersey, who had the title of being the World's Strongest Man.

The two hit it off right away and Wooten started training with Walsh. Before the operation, Wooten could bench press over 400 pounds, squat over 600 and dead lift 700 pounds.

But things steadily improved for Wooten, and in 1978 he and Walsh did their first stunt together.

A hydraulic jack from a gas station lifted a car off the ground. Wooten stepped underneath the back. Walsh stepped under the front. The two leaned over and the car was lowered on to their backs.

That's right, the car. An automobile. A huge mass of steel. It was placed square on their backs.

"We had never done it before," Wooten said. "We never did it before the stunt."

It was the beginning of a new, strange, amazingly lucrative and, no doubt, quite painful career for Wooten.

"That's how it all started," he said. "Jack and I competed for the World's Strongest Man title at the end of the year in Boston. I beat him in 13 out of 15 events."

Walsh, who is 5-10 and 185 pounds, is now 61 years old and, mercifully, retired. Still, though, he'll perform a couple of events each year.

One lesson Wooten learned from judo and from watching Walsh perform his feats is that strength can be deceiving. Just being big is no guarantee of someone's physical fortitude.

Wooten said it's based partly on size but also strongly based in genetics along with tendon and ligament structure.

"It is based on kinesics which is based on body motion," he said. "It's completely different than muscle strength."

But even a strong basis in kinesics isn't enough to keep Wooten injury free. He's had a lot hurts along the way, the worst coming when a promotional stunt for a motorcycle store went awry in Charlottesville, Va. May 6, 1986.

As the bike hit the board at 70 miles per hour, the wood split. The resulting impact caused the spikes to drive ½ inch into Wooten's back. It crushed the nerve endings at the root of the spinal column, causing paralysis, broken ribs and a broken pelvis. He lost a kidney in the accident.

The paralysis lasted 10 months, but that in itself wasn't enough of a deterrent for Wooten's attraction to danger.

"Well, I definitely thought about not doing that stunt any more," he said. "One morning my feet moved, and the doctor said it was a miracle. He couldn't medically explain it. He said for sure I can't do any more stunts."

Okay, Doc, see you later, Wooten said, as he went back into training and resumed his stunt work.

Six years after the last accident, Wooten is still at it, but the spectacle is coming to a close.

"I may be retiring now," he said. "The stunts have taken their toll. I've done some movies and some commercials, and I may be just doing that from now on."

Wideouts Set For Season ...

returnees, with junior Charlie Tyson (5-11, 175), a former slotback and defensive back, junior Darren Bynum (5-10, 173), a former slotback, and sophomore Hunter Gallimore (6-0, 166), a former walk-on, figuring as the key backups.

"This spring they ran hot and cold," Steele said. "We'd have one having a good day and one having a bad day. We need to get everybody playing well together. They improved as the spring went on and got more consistent. But we're still not where I want us to be."

Player by Player Evaluations

•Walter Wilson — "Walter Wilson has exhibited the ability to be a big-play type guy in just the spring. He made some catches and was able to do something once he caught it."

•Al Whiting — "Al Whiting had a good spring game, made some big catches. Al does not have pure flat speed. He's not going to run by you. He's going to slip through. He performed for us in the spring. He got better."

•Bojack Davenport — "Bojack missed part of spring practice because he was sick. Anytime you miss some of those 20 days, it sets you back. He came on at the end. He's one of those that needs to be more consistent in his play. He has the ability to be a real good player."

•Hunter Gallimore — "Hunter doesn't have a lot of speed. He's a smart receiver. He's able to find the open area and get open. He's going to run the route he is supposed to run and he's going to catch the ball. Hunter is not a big play receiver but he is dependable."

•Charlie Tyson — "We moved Charlie there right away. It took Charlie a little while to adapt to what we're doing and be a receiver. He'd been at so many different positions."

•Darren Bynum — "Darren returned kicks last year and played spot. He had to adapt to being a player in traffic. He's got good speed and good work habits. His inconsistency hurt him in the spring. He needs to become more dependable at doing the right thing."

Another receiver who might have been a factor is sophomore speedster Terry Bennett (5-7, 140), but he suffered a severe knee injury in spring practice and will miss the entire year.

Steele said junior Cedric Howard (6-2, 190, Jr.) and freshman Larry Farrare (6-4, 185, Fr.) will add depth to the position, but have not yet worked their way into the top rotation.

Highly touted incoming freshmen Clayton Driver, (6-1, 190) from College Park, Ga., and Darren Willis, (6-0, 173) of Macon, Ga., probably won't be much of a factor early in the season, but could contribute by the end of the year.

"The two youngsters we've got we're excited about that," Steele said. "Both have the talent to make good wide receivers in college.

"It's tough for a freshman to come in and play because of the adjustments that you have to make in the secondary. A lot of times in high school, they don't have to read coverage, they just have to run the route and they get open. They are going to have to learn to read coverages.

"We're in such a physical schedule, they are not used to people being right up in their face and put hands on them," Steele said. "That's not to say that I've not seen freshmen receivers that can come in and help you, but it's hard for a freshman receiver to come in and be a starter."

Once fall rolls around, Steele said he wants to identify a top rotation and see improvement right away.

"I think in the fall we're going to have to come and know how to read the coverages and know how to make the adjustments," he said. "Fundamentally, we're going to have to be sound. The level of competition that we'll be going up against, it all evens up and you have to become a technique player."

Schrader In The Top Spot

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LONG POND, Pa. — Ken Schrader today won the pole for Sunday's AC Spark Plug 500 NASCAR stock car race and a chance at a $106,400 bonus.

Schrader's Chevrolet Lumina toured the 2½-mile tri-oval at Pocono International Raceway at 157.809 mph, edging Geoff Bodine's lap of 157.632 mph, also in a Lumina, in fog-plagued qualifying.

Dale Earnhardt, another Chevrolet driver and the season points leader, will start third Sunday. Alan Kulwicki and Brett Bodine, both in Ford Thunderbirds, will start fourth and fifth.

For Schrader, who had two other poles this season but no victories, this pole could become a lucrative achievement.

Kulwicki had been the fastest driver Friday, when first-round qualifying began. Suspended because of fog after only 15 drivers had been able to run time trials Friday, qualifying again was delayed 2½ hours today because of fog.

Schrader's lap beat the event record of 157.153 mph set last year by Morgan Shepherd. It fell short of Kulwicki's track record of 158.806 mph, set when he won the pole for the June 1988 Miller 500.

Kulwicki had known his claim to the pole was only temporary.

"I won't be sleeping too much tonight," Kulwicki had said, anticipating competitors' efforts to take the pole from him.

Tyson Looks Toward Holyfield

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. — Mike Tyson wants Evander Holyfield.

"I'm sure he will find it very stimulating," the 23-year-old heavyweight champion said.

However, Tyson's next few fights are more likely to be with opponents more on the order of Carl "The Truth" Williams, who found his association with the unbeaten Tyson Friday night at the Convention Center to be brief and controversial.

The 20th punch Tyson threw was the last.

Williams struggled up at the count of eight, but seconds later referee Randy Neumann stopped the fight after only 93 seconds.

Williams protested, and many fans argued the referee's decision long into the night. But Neumann's action was a judgement call and he didn't have all night to make it.

Holyfield, the former cruiserweight champion who is 22-0 with 18 knockouts, would probably be tougher. He has won his only four fights as a heavyweight, including a second-round knockout of Brazil's Adilson Rodrigues last week.

"I would like to match skills with Evander Holyfield," Tyson said after scoring his 37th victory and 33rd knockout.

A major-money match with the unbeaten Holyfield, who is ranked No. 1 by both the World Boxing Council and World Boxing Association, isn't likely until next summer.

Tyson could have two fights before then — against Michael Dokes or James "Buster" Douglas and against George Foreman.

Seth Abrhaham, a vice president of HBO, which televised Friday night's fight, is scheduled to talk to promoter Don King and Tyson's manager Bill Cayton about a fight against Dokes or Douglas in September or October.

It would be the sixth fight in Tyson's eight-bout, $26.5 million deal with HBO, which is interested in signing him to a lifetime contract.

Dokes, a former WBA champion, increased his attractivness as a challenger with a good showing before being stopped in the 10th round by Holyfield March 12.

Douglas, who probably will replace Williams as the No. 1 contender of the International Boxing Federation, was an unimpressive, but easy winner over Oliver McCall on Friday night's undercard.

King also is interested in matching Jose Ribalta, with Tyson for a second-time.

However, Ribalta, a Cuban living at Miami hurt his chances by getting knocked down and looking bad in outpointing Jeff Sims. The 35-year-old Sims was fighting for the first time in 40 months. Tyson stopped Ribalta in the 10th round he became champion in 1986.

There appears to be foreign interest in Tyson fighting Foreman. The 41-year-old former champion has won all 19 of his fights since ending a 10-year retirement, but he has not fought any ranked opponents.

A fight between Tyson and Holyfield would be a pay-per-view, closed-circuit match, with HBO getting the delayed telecast rights.

"There's no man who can beat me," Tyson said. "It's kids' play. I'll fight anyone any place."

Williams landed on the seat of his pants, then fell backward. For a moment it appeared it wouldn't beat the 10-count.

Tyson said he didn't think Williams was badly hurt, but "I would have been all over him. That's when I'm most dangerious."

Neumann didn't allow him the chance.

"I wasn't knocked out," Williams complained. "I think politics were involved.

Neumann, a former heavyweight boxer working the biggest match of his 38-bout refereeing career, said Williams didn't respond when asked if he was okay. He also said Williams was leaning against the ropes and his eyes were blank.

Like most boxing controversies, this one quickly will become academic.

Williams, who got $1.2 million, is just a statistic in Tyson's quest for greatness.

Tyson earned $4 million in registering the fifth fastest victory in heavyweight championship history. His 91-second knockout of Michael Spinks June 27, 1988, at the Convention Center was the fourth shortest title bout.

LeMond Faces Big Challenge

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

L'ISLE-D'ABEAU, France — Greg LeMond, less than a minute behind Laurent Fignon of France after Saturday's stage in the Tour de France, is optimistic about an almost insurmountable problem — catching Fignon on the final day.

After 22 days, more than 87 hours of cycling time through three countries and more than 2,000 miles, Fignon leads LeMond by 50 seconds.

"I feel good. All I have to do is make up 51 seconds Sunday," LeMond said before rushing to catch the train to Paris to prepare for Sunday's 21st and last stage of 15 miles.

For LeMond to win, he will have to ride more than three seconds per mile faster, relatively difficult for riders of this caliber.

The distance from Versailles to Paris is considered too short for LeMond to make up the difference, even if the American is better at this type of race than Fignon, who won the Tour in 1983 and 1984.

Earlier in the week LeMond said he would have liked his chances at a maximum 30 to 40 seconds.

In the two previous time trials this year on the Tour de France, LeMond won by an average of 53 seconds. But both were considerably longer — one almost three times — than the Versailles-Paris journey. Also, the final stage is almost flat except for a modest downhill in the first five miles.

But LeMond will be content finishing second considering that he was almost dead 27 months ago when he was shot in a hunting accident.

"First time back on the Tour since 1986, I can't complain," LeMond said.

He was the first and only American to win the famed cycling classic in 1986 after being third and second the two previous years.

He missed the last two Tours because of the shooting and other misfortune, such as an emergency appendectomy and shin problems.

"If I get first or second I think I've raced as well as Fignon or (Pedro) Delgado," LeMond said. "I had no idea I was going to ride this well. I had some hopes I was maybe going to win a stage, maybe a top 20 finish. I was really going to be happy with that," LeMond said.

Delgado won last year and is third, 2:28 behind Fignon. He, too, was the victim of some bad luck as he arrived 2:40 late for the prologue on July 1 in Luxembourg.

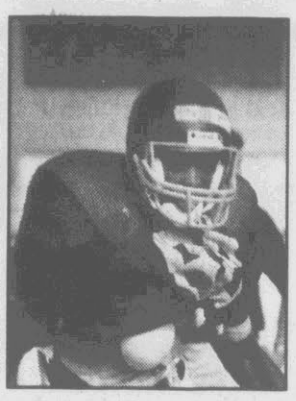
Sunday Notebook:

Davenport Made The Best Of Things

For a good part of the summer, Davenport has been at Fort Bragg in Fayetteville as part of his ROTC requirements. Upon graduation, Davenport, an ECU honor student, will become a commissioned officer in the Army and will lead a battalion next year.



Bojack Davenport

Come this fall, Davenport also figures to be a leader of the Pirates' receiving corps. He is currently listed as a possible starter along with junior Al Whiting at one of the wide receiver spots for ECU.

Four years ago, Davenport was one of the first to feel the effects of proposition 48, which required incoming student-athletes to achieve certain SAT and core curriculum requirements for eligibility as a freshman.

"He has committed himself to excellence in academics," ECU coach Bill Lewis said. "There were a lot of people who looked at Bojack and said, 'You might not make it.' He overcame a hurdle at the very beginning.

"That's not easy for any person to sit out year. Especially a competitive athlete. He set his sights very high. Now he is within a year of attaining those goals. I salute and tip my hat to those people for Bojack and what he has done."

After sitting out his first year, Davenport, whose brother Charles has been a part-time starter at quarterback for North Carolina State, has fared well in the classroom. He earned a spot on the Honor Roll (a 3.0 grade point average or better on a four-point schale) last semester.

Davenport spent three years in junior ROTC in high school and continued that involvement once he got to ECU.

"He's been one of the outstanding cadets of our ROTC program," Captain Steve Jones, professor of military science at ECU, said. "The juggling of (his) time is that once he gets in an ROTC uniform, he is going to let you know he is a good soldier. He doesn't make excuses that he has to be on the football field or has to go study. He is going to be there."

During his six-week stay at Fort Bragg this summer, Davenport will be taking part in final leadership examination. The program encompasses an army physical fitness test (maximum pushups and sit-ups in two minutes, and a two-mile run), navigation, rifle marksmanship and tactical leadership.

Next year, Davenport will return to Fort Bragg in the summer where he will be teaching and preparing the junior students in ROTC program at the base for the same type of programs he went though.

"I think Bojack is a tremendous example of a young man who came in to a university situation and worked extremely hard and worked hard in academics," Lewis said.

"The other side of that is while doing all that academic has put himself in position to make a valuable contribution and be an impact player in our football program. He has proven you can overcome the obstacles he had with proposition 48.

"I'm still a believer in the term student-athlete," Lewis added. "We're not without problems in college athletics. But people like Bojack prove you can excel in the classroom and still have time to excel in athletic competition."

Davenport was in the first class of recruits affected by the NCAA eligibility bylaw. He was one of four players forced to sit out their freshman seasons.

All four — Davenport, Junior Robinson, Anthony Thompson and Denell Harper — are still in school and in good academic standing. That's important to note. They took a situation that could have been a negative and turned it into a positive. Less importantly, they all figure to play prominent roles on this year's team. Robinson is one of the top players in the secondary. Thompson starts at defensive end while Harper will share tailback duties with Willie Lewis.

NBA Signings Could Affect Blue

The signing of two other first-round draft picks this week could have a big effect on negotiations between the Utah Jazz and ex-ECU star Blue Edwards, the team's first-round draft pick.

Friday, the Denver Nuggets signed Todd Lichti to a five-year contract while the Atlanta Hawks signed Roy Marble to a three-year deal.

Terms of Lichti's deal were not announced, but Marble reportedly signed for about a total package of $1 million.

Negotiations had been going slow between Edwards' agent, William Pollak, and Utah General Counsel Phil Marantz. But both Lichti, who was chosen 15tth, and Marble, who was chosen in the 23rd spot, are big guards, just like Edwards, who was drafted in the 21st position. Their contracts could establish a genuine starting point for negotiations for Pollak and Marantz.

Utah officials have been adamant about their desire to have Edwards in rookie camp so he can play on their team in the California Pro Summer League. With these two signings, it may be soon that Edwards can report to the Jazz.

East Carolina wide receiver Bojack Davenport will likely get a reprieve when he arrives for fall football camp in the second week of August.

Strength Center Hotbox

The building's main room lost its air conditioning during the middle of May, with only the smaller weight room maintaining its cool.

The building on 14th Street houses the weight rooms for the ECU football team and the remainder of the Pirate athletic teams as well as the cheerleaders.

The department is set to move into the new sports medicine complex near Ficklen Stadium later this summer, so it would have made little sense to replace the air conditioning at the old building. But that doesn't make it any cooler in there now.

Still, a number of players have been able to slim down since the spring semester ended. Center Chad Martin slimmed down from 290 to 263, while fellow offensive linemen Todd Drugac has gone from 290 to 265, and Mike McCalop went from just over 300 to 265 pounds.

On the other side of the scale, Defensive linemen Joe Holmes has added 12 pounds and is up to 240. Reeves Spainhour has added 15 pounds to list at 235. Greg Gardill has added another 12 pounds to list at 235.

Foreman, Carr Attend Prep Stars

Teammates William Carr, a rising senior, and Morris Foreman, a rising junior, also attended the six-day camp.

Carr and Foreman were key components of Farmville's 2-A state championship team last year along with Lang, and figure to become even more important this year as Farmville attempts to defend its title.

ECU Qualifies All But One Grid Recruit

Tight end Rodney Jones (6-3, 230) of Fayetteville Douglas Byrd was eligible when he signed with the Pirates in February, but he came up one class short in his core curriculum requirement.

Jones was one of the more heralded signees for the Pirates and figured to have a chance to challenge for playing time right away at tight end.

Instead of enrolling at ECU, Jones will attend North Greenville Junior College in Greenville, S.C.

"That was a development that went right to the end." ECU coach Bill Lewis said. "When we signed him, he was passing the class. We felt this was the best thing for him."

Top Prep Recruits At Nike Camp

Shawn Bradley, a 7-5 rising high school senior from Utah, has college basketball coaches acros the country drooling after a big performance at the Nike All-American Camp which ended July 14 in Princeton, N.J.

The camp attracts the cream of next year's recruiting crop and Bradley is at the top of the list. Even though he's 7-5, he reportedly is still growing. He has grown steadily, not in quick spurts, so he has the agility of players much smaller and runs the court extremely well for a big man.

Bradley, who carries a 3.4 grade point average, offers an interesting case. Because he is a Mormon, he will take a two-year leave of absence after his freshman season from whatever school he chooses to perform missionary service.

Bradley has narrowed his choices to UCLA, Brigham Young, Utah, North Carolina, Duke, Arizona and Syracuse.

Locally, Durham Hillside's Rodney Rogers, a 6-7, 220-pound forward increased his standing with scouts at the Nike Camp and should be one of the state's most nationally-recruited players since Chris Washburn.

Kevin Whitted of Wilmington Laney and Jamie Watson of Wilson Fike also attended the camp.

Hot Gyms A Popular Place

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RENSSELAER, Ind. — Although a steamy, sweaty gym isn't a popular shopping location on a humid summer day, it's the only marketplace for college basketball recruiters in search of future superstars.

"If you come here and have a good week, it's an opportunity for a scholarship. If you have a bad week, it's a chance to lose one," said Stan Hardin, director of the B-C basketball camp in this city midway between Indianapolis and Chicago.

At the B-C camp, 480 high school juniors and seniors paid $300 each to jump, shoot and score in front of more than 200 coaches from such college powerhouses as NCAA champion Michigan, Indiana, DePaul, Arizona and Seton Hall.

Similar action began Sunday at another B-C camp in Tifton, Ga., and the Blue-Chip camp in Highland Heights, Ky. Other camps will be held in California, Ohio, Michigan, Pennsylvania and Virginia through August.

The continuous action on five courts is basketball heaven for recruiters: a chance to see some of the nation's top prospects face each other at the same time.

Although NCAA rules prohibit contact between coaches and players at the camp, recruiters make their presence known in obvious ways.

"The kids know you're interested in them by being here," said Ohio State assistant Paul Brazeau, whose shirt provided silent advertising with its Buckeye emblem.

Unlike the prestigious Nike-ABCD camp in Princeton, N.J., which invites only about 125 players, pays their expenses and provides academic preparation for college, the B-C camp concentrates solely on basketball from 9 a.m. to 10 p.m. each day.

Players are divided into 48 teams which competed throughout the week, culminating in a championship tournament and an all-star game featuring the top 20 players.

"Hopefully, I can just show them what I can do," he said. "You just try to outwork the other guy."

That's the best approach for unknowns such as Smith, who are battling hundreds of other players for a recruiter's attention, Drake said.

"You see the little guards dominating these games. That's where the ball starts. If you see more than two passes before a ball goes up, it's a rarity," he said. "The marginal guys get noticed by playing with the really good players."

Critics have labeled these so-called exposure camps as nothing more than high-pressure meat markets, but few of the players or coaches agree.

"I'm not going to be disappointed if I don't make the all-star team," said Smith. "My dad told me just to work as hard as I can."

"It's good competition. You get to see a lot of kids at once," said Tony McAndrews, an Arizona assistant.

Campers are selected on a first-come, first-served basis, and hundreds are turned away each year, said Hardin, who coaches at Fairdale (Ky.) High School.

Marlo Finner, a veteran of previous B-C camps and a player for Chicago Phillips High School, exuded confidence as he named DePaul, Purdue and Iowa as the schools he wanted to impress.

"I can prove to people I belong with the top 10 players in the country," he said.

For lesser players, the camp fulfills a dream of playing before such coaches as Steve Fisher of Michigan, Joey Meyer of DePaul and Lou Henson of Illinois.

Given the NCAA rule that limits coaches' off-campus summer evaluation time to 22 days in July, recruiters are grateful for the massive cattle-call auditions.

"We have some individuals we're looking at and you hope that someone else will jump out at you," said Brazeau, who had four Ohio State scholarships to hand out.

"The numbers don't bother me," he said. "The cream of the crop emerges, the rest of the kids are having a good time."

Ellis' Arrival At Syracuse Has Orange Fans Excited

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SYRACUSE, N.Y. — How excited are people around Syracuse University about the prospect of LeRon Ellis teaming next season with player-of-the-year candidate Derrick Coleman?

One local newspaper columnist wondered last week, only half in jest, how many hotel rooms Syracuse faithful should reserve now in Denver, site of next year's Final Four.

"I don't know if there is a better frontcourt in America," said Jim Calhoun, coach of Syracuse's Big East rival Connecticut. "In fact, I know there isn't a better frontcourt in America."

"That's just an unbelievable amount of talent for one team," added ESPN basketball analyst Dick Vitale of Syracuse's frontcourt. "It's unfair to the other teams. They've just got so much talent."

Ellis announced last week that he will transfer to Syracuse from the violation-riddled Kentucky basketball program. The 6-foot-10, 235-pound Ellis, who will be eligible to playing immediately this fall as a junior, picked the Orangemen over UCLA, UNLV and St. John's.

Among Ellis' other talented teammates at Syracuse will be the high-scoring and high-flying 6-4 Steve Thompson and 6-9 Billy Owens, whose name appeared on virtually everyone's all-freshman team last season.

"LeRon's a terrifically talented kid," Calhoun said. "It gives them another outstanding player, which is what they don't need, as far as the rest of us are concerned."

The 6-10 Coleman, who finished among the top five nationally in rebounding and blocked shots last season playing primarily as a center, says he doesn't care who plays center and who plays forward next season.

"This front line can be the best in college basketball in a long, long time. I'll do whatever they want me to do. Whatever position LeRon doesn't play, I'll play," said Coleman.

It only took a few hours after Ellis' announcement last week for the Syracuse faithful to begin talking up a return to the Final Four, where the Orangemen lost to Indiana on a last-second shot in 1987.

"If they don't win the national championship this year, they'll never do it," said Mickey Gonzales, a cashier at a campus pizzeria.

"This means Final Four resurrection for (Coach) Jim Boeheim," said Syracuse senior Rodney Grey.

"It's everybody's goal to win the NCAA title," said Ellis, the son of former NBA player Leroy Ellis. "Syracuse has an excellent chance. I think if I come in and play hard, I can help them out."

Meanwhile, Boeheim and assistant Bernie Fine are trying to dispel talk of an NCAA championship — for now.

"We don't care what other people expect. We know where we should be. We'll have to wait and see," said Fine.

One transformation that will take place at Syracuse is the shifting of Thompson and Owens from forward positions to guard slots, said Boeheim.

Because of the graduation of all-time NCAA assist leader Sherman Douglas, a Miami Heat draftee, and the transfer of Syracuse's other 1988-89 starter at guard, Matt Roe, Boeheim said he already had decided to move Owens and Thompson to the vacant guard positions.

But the addition of Ellis gives Boeheim more flexibility in his lineups. He could even play even four 6-10 players at one time, with the versatile Coleman handling point guard.

"I think we'll have a lot better depth and a lot of guys capable of playing different positions," said Boeheim.

"We won't have a point guard in the traditional sense," Boeheim said. "We've played with a big lineup before, although this one will be bigger than usual. These guys aren't normal big guys."

CBS Sports basketball analyst Billy Packer agreed that not having a true point guard isn't going to hurt Syracuse.

"The matchup becomes the other team's problem," said Packer. "You can get it up there (the ball from backcourt to frontcourt) any way you can get it up there. You throw it over everybody. Everybody can throw the ball. Everybody can catch the ball. Why dribble it?"

Even if Syracuse goes with an NBA-sized lineup, it won't abandon the running game that led to a 30-8 record last season and a spot in the round of eight in the NCAA tournament, said Boeheim.

"LeRon runs the court extremely well. I think Derrick Coleman and him are probably the two best running big guys in the country," he said.

As for Ellis, wo averaged 16 points and 5.5 rebounds a game last season, he'll be roving the front line like his teammates and not confined to a post-up game.

"We don't really have a center anymore," said Fine. "We don't care about terminology. Last year, we had three forwards. Next year we may have five forwards. We could revolutionize the game."

Becker Puts A Hurting On U.S. Hopes

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MUNICH, West Germany (AP) — All Boris Becker lacked was a red cape and a giant 'S' on his chest.

Playing like Superman, the West German wonder put on a one-man show Saturday that practically destroyed the United States' chances of reaching the Davis Cup final.

Becker beat Andre Agassi in a one-set shootout and then teamed with Eric Jelen to hand Ken Flach and Robert Seguso their first loss in Davis Cup doubles as defending champion West Germany took a commanding 2-1 lead in the best-of-5 semifinal.

That means that the United States will have to win both singles matches Sunday to advance and one of them will pit Brad Gilbert, a substitute for John McEnroe, against a Becker who has been at the top of his game.

Playing before a highly vocal capacity crowd of 12,300, Becker bested Agassi in the fifth and deciding set of a match that had been halted by a midnight curfew on Friday.

Becker had rallied from two sets down to even the contest before it was suspended. When play resumed 14 hours later, the world's No. 2 player broke No. 6 Agassi three times to complete a 6- 7, 6-7, 7-6, 6-3, 6-4 victory.

Eighty minutes later, Becker was on the court again with Jelen. After the losing the first set, the West Germans rallied for a 3-6, 7-6, 6-4, 7-6 victory over Flach and Seguso, who were unbeaten in 10 previous Davis Cup matches.

Becker called his double victory "an exhausting day at the office," but his doubles partner was more effusive.

"I knew Boris was a great player, but what he did today was unbelievable," Jelen said.

"I think he played a perfect match against Agassi — one of the best matches I've ever seen. Then to go right out and play so well in doubles is really amazing."

In Sunday's matches, Agassi plays Carl-Uwe Steeb, who lost to Gilbert Friday, thgen Becker plays Gilbert. Although Gilbert has won three of his four matches against Becker, the West German won the most recent one and will be a prohibitive favorite Sunday on the fast indoor carpet at the Olympic Hall.

Agassi plays Steeb in the first match, followed by Becker against Gilbert. Although Gilbert has won three of his four matches against Becker, the West German won the most recent one and will be a prohibitive favorite Sunday on the fast indoor carpet at Olympic Hall.

Asked if he likes his team's chances, Becker said, "They're sure better than they were last night."

The winning country will play Sweden or Yugoslavia for the Davis Cup championship in December. Yugoslavia staved off elimination Saturday by winning the doubles, but Sweden only needs to split the singles matches on Sunday to reach the final.

Agassi, who had served for the match at 6-5 in the third set on Friday, jumped over the net and the two players embraced. Becker then threw his racket into the stands as he did after winning his third Wimbledon title earlier this month, and waved to the crowd as he ran off the court.

Both men played brilliantly, blasting winners from all over the court. It was like a slugfest between two heavyweight boxers, with Becker getting the split decision.

"I never dreamed Andre could play so good," said Becker, who improved his Davis Cup singles record to 25-2. "Only a couple of points decided the match."

Agassi broke for a 4-3 lead in the final set, but it was the last game he won.

Becker broke right back and then held at love after serving his fifth ace of the day and 28th of the match. Agassi saved one match point in the next game, but Becker gained another one and converted it with a blazing forehand service return.

Chris Ball had three hits, including a decisive three-run homer in the fourth, as the Greenville Tar Heel All-Stars handed Northwest Halifax a 10-3 loss to advance to the finals of the District IV Little League baseball tournament Friday.

Ball's single in the first highlighted a two-run spurt that helped the Tar Heel team gett ahead early. Stallings and D.J. Miles then hit consecutive doubles to open the second as the Tar Heel team went on to score four more runs for a 6-1 lead.

Northwest Halifax countered with two runs in the fifth to pull within 9-3, but that was as close as it would get.

The Tar Heel team added a final run in the bottom of the fifth as Damian Phillips singled, went to second on a wild pitch and eventually scored off a sacrifice fly by Monte Roundtree.

Phillips and Miles added two hits for the Tar Heels.

HOLLYWOOD — Coastal Plains closed strong with four runs in the fifth and four in the sixth to take a 10-1 win over Wilmington in Consolation bracket action from the Eastern North Carolina State 16-18 Year Old Babe Ruth Baseball Tournament.

Randy House was the winning pitcher for Coastal Plains. Brian Tuten, Franz Holscher, House, Craig Willoughby and Pat Joyner had two hits each for Coastal Plains.

In Friday night action, New Bern beat Wilmington 12-6, while host-team Coastal Plains fell to Pemo-Stuart, 10-3.

North State Wins ...

Willer's grounder on the first-base side of second, retreated to get the force at second then gunned to first in time for the third out of the inning.

North State turned its third twin-killing in the fifth and the snatched any hopes Tar Heel had of a comeback in the process.

Ben Hahn and Jason Howard had started a rally with consecutive walks and scored when Monte Roundtree's high-chopper up the middle bounced into center then was thrown wildly after being fielded.

Roundtree reached third on the errant throw, but was nailed at the plate on a strike from first baseman Nabeel Barakat. Barakat wheeled and fired home after taking a throw from third baseman Matt Davis.

North State, which managed seven hits, chalked up two runs in each of the first two innings.

Matthew Dellasega got the first inning started with a one-out single. After an infield error and a single by James Ebron, Dellasega raced home on a wild pitch. Cherry's grounder to second scored Adrian Jones.

A one-out walk to Scott Burrows, another infield error, a bunt single by Dellasega, an infield single by Jones and a sacrifice fly to deep right by Ebron produced the two runs in the second.

Further North State scoring was prevented by a pair of Tar Heel double plays and the relief pitching of Roundtree, who worked out of a bases-loaded, no-out jam in the fifth.

Tar Heel.....000 020—2-4-3

USC-Furman May Renew Football Series

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — Furman and South Carolina may meet in Williams-Brice Stadium in 1991, nine years after the schools' last game, officials sa

Furmar one of several schools under consideration for two openings on South Carolina's 1991 schedule, associate athletic director Sterling Brown said Friday.

Furman officials have agreed to play an Oct. 26, 1991, game in Columbia. But Brown said South Carolina hoped to keep that date open because of the games the Gamecocks have scheduled around it.

The Paladins were scheduled to play Georgia Tech on that date, but the Yellow Jackets dropped the game.

Brown said South Carolina has three open dates for two games in 1991. One of the openings came about when Western Carolina asked to be dropped from its game against the Gamecocks in 1991, he said.

"It shouldn't be this difficult, but it is when you're not in a conference," Brown said. "We haven't sent (Furman) a contract because it's not solid yet."

CINCINNATI (AP) — Highlights in Hall of Famer Johnny Bench's career with the Cincinnati Reds:

1967 — Bench joins the Reds late in the season and bats .163 in 26 games. Manager Dave Bristol says the young catcher is so good defensively "if he hits .220, he'll still be a big asset."

1968 — Five games into the season, Bench replaces Don Pavletich at catcher and goes on to win the Rookie of the Year award, batting .275 with 15 homers and quickly establishing himself defensively with his one-handed style of catching.

1969 — Before the season, Ted Williams autographs a baseball for Bench with the words, "To a Hall of Famer, for sure."

Bench's two-run homer helps the National League to a 9-3 victory over the Americans in the All-Star Game. He finishes the year with a .293 batting average and 26 home runs.

1970 — Bench enjoys his greatest season, batting .293 with 45 home runs and 148 RBIs to lead the "Big Red Machine" to the pennant. He is named the league's Most Valuable Player.

1972 — With the acquisition of second baseman Joe Morgan from Houston and the return of leadoff batter Bobby Tolan, injured the previous season, the Reds rebound to win the pennant and Bench earns another MVP award, batting .270 with 40 homers and 125 RBIs.

After the season, he undergoes surgery for a benign growth on his right lung, but recovers completely.

1974 — Bench leads the league with 129 RBIs but the Reds finish second in the NL West to Los Angeles.

1977 — Bench hits 31 homers and drives in 109 runs, but the Reds slip to second in the NL West behind Los Angeles.

1981 — Bench tells the Reds he no longer wants to catch and spends the rest of his career shuttling between first and third.

Fans Gather To Honor Stars

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

COOPERSTOWN, N.Y. — Thousands of fans decked in red began arriving at the mythical birthplace of baseball on Saturday to say thanks to Johnny Bench and Carl Yastrzemski.

Bench and Yastrzemski will be inducted into the Hall of Fame on Sunday, arriving in very different ways.

While Bench seemed born to be a baseball player, Yastrzemski wasn't sure if he would last more than a year or two in the big leagues.

And who wouldn't be jittery replacing Ted Williams?

"Taking over Ted Williams' spot was the toughest thing I had to do — it almost broke me — really," Yastrzemski said. "The first three months of the season I really didn't know if I could play in the big leagues or not."

Yaz later proved he most certainly could, finishing with 3,419 hits and 452 home runs. He was on 18 All-Star teams, won six Gold Gloves as the Red Sox' left fielder and was named the American League MVP in 1967, when he won the Triple Crown and led Boston to the pennant a year after the club finished ninth.

Williams might not have noticed how good his understudy was, but he sure noticed Bench.

During spring training in 1969, Williams autographed a baseball for Bench with the inscription: "To a Hall of Famer, for sure."

"I didn't even know that Ted Williams had ever seen me play," said Bench, NL Rookie of the Year in 1968. "I remember thinking, 'Are you sure you mean me?' For Ted Williams to even know who I was, that was a helluva deal."

Bench was selected the NL's starting catcher for the 1969 All-Star Game at the age of 22. Before he retired, everybody knew about the Cincinnati Reds' star.

As a minor leaguer, phrases like "future All-Star" and "future Hall of Famer" often were part of stories about Johnny Bench.

Bench hit 389 home runs, 327 as a catcher, and won the Gold Glove 10 times while helping the Reds win four pennants and the World Series in 1975 and 1976. "He was a total player," said Reds coach Dave Bristol, who managed Cincinnati in Bench's first three years. "He was strong and had a good knowledge of the game."

Bench is arguably the best all-around catcher in the history of baseball. He revolutionized the position by catching with one hand, saving his free hand for gunning out runners.

But Bench is also proud of another aspect of his position.

"The thing I did best was calling the game and handling pitchers," Bench said. "If I did anything best, it was probably that. And that was the thing that was just taken for granted."

"Somebody called him a little general," said former teammate Tony Perez, now a coach with the Reds. "That's the way he liked to catch."

Yastrmzemski's self-doubt in his earlier days were compounded by the comparisons with Williams.

"I was only 20 years old and they were calling me the next Ted Williams," Yaz said.

He wasn't the next Ted Williams. He didn't have to be.

"I wasn't the greatest average hitter, but I had 3,419 hits," Yastrzemski said. "I wasn't the greatest home run hitter, but I had more than 450 (452)."

On Sunday, Yaz and Bench will take the same road to the Hall of Fame and share a stage with Williams, Stan Musial and Ernie Banks among others.

"I did it. They can't take that away from me," Yastrzemski said. "Those guys were Cadillacs. I'm a Chevy, but I accomplished that."

Diet Pills Sweeping U.S.

Doctors Invent 'Lazy Way' to Lose Weight

U.S. Gov't. Approves Patent Claims for New Diet Pill

BEVERLY HILLS, CA (Special)— An amazing new weight loss pill called "fat-magnet" has recently been developed and perfected by two prominent doctors at a world famous hospital in Los Angeles that reportedly "guarantees" you steady fat loss and calorie reduction by simply taking their tested and proven new pill.

The U.S. government has just approved the doctors claims for a hard-to-get patent that confirms "there has never been anything like their fat-bonding pill process before." It is a totally new major scientific breakthrough and is revolutionizing the weight loss industry.

You Can "Eat Normally"

Best of all, "you can continue to eat your favorite foods and you don't have to change your normal eating habits. You can start losing fat and reduce calories from the very first day, until you achieve the ideal weight you desire without exercising".

Flushes Fat Out of Body

The new pill is appropriately called the "fat-magnet" pill because it breaks into thousands of particles, each acting like a tiny magnet, "attracting" and trapping many times its size in undigested fat particles. Then, all the trapped fat and calories are naturally "flushed" right out of your body because they cannot be absorbed.

Within 2 days you should notice a change in the color of your stool, caused by the fat particles being eliminated.

"Automatically" Lose Fat

According to one of the inventors, Dr. William Shell, heart specialist and associate professor of medicine at UCLA medical school, "the new fat-bonding process is a "lazy way" to lose weight because the pills alone "automatically" reduce calories by eliminating dietary fat. It is 100% safe and not a drug."

The fat-magnet pills are already sweeping the country with glowing reports of weight loss from formerly overweight people in all walks of life who are now slimmer, trimmer and more attractive again.

Now Available to the Public

If you are trying to lose 20, 50, 100 pounds or more, you can order your supply of these "no-risk" highly successful fat-magnet pills directly from the doctors' exclusive manufacturer only (includes optional calorie-reduction plan for even better results). Send $20 for a 90 pill supply (+$3 handling), or $35 for a 180 pill supply (+$3 handling), to: Fat-Magnet, 9016 Wilshire Blvd., Dept. W634, Beverly Hills, CA 90211. (Unconditional money-back guarantee if not 100% satisfied.) Visa, MasterCard and American Express OK. (Send card number, expire date, and signature.) Kinston Indians Sold ...

AA Eastern League, the Charleston Rainbows in the A South Atlantic League and the Miami Miracle in the Florida State League.

Tucker and Jim Thomas, both Atlanta businessmen, completed their purchase of the Carolina League Southern Division team from Revo on Tuesday after the league approved the sale.

Johnson said that the new owners do not plan to make any changes in the management or structure of the team.

They are considering making improvements to the Indians' home ball park, Grainger Stadium, and will meet with the Kinston officials to discuss possible renovations.

Tucker is not sure exactly what changes will be made to Grainger Stadium, but said the bathroom facilities need improvements and he wants to add an underground watering system, a tarp and a batting tunnel.

But, more importantly, they will keep the franchise in Kinston.

Revo made an unsuccessful attempt to move the team to Raleigh last year, but Tucker said that Kinston is a "great town," and he plans to stay.

Tucker has seen the team play several times, and both men were at the Carolina League All-Star Game in Durham on Tuesday. Johnson said the new owners spent Monday in Kinston and were pleased with the operation.

"They came away more impressed than they imagined they would," Johnson said.

Said Tucker: "They (the players) are excellent. Cleveland has sent us a bunch of good players and they seem to be very enthusiastic.

"Cleveland has made a commitment to send us some good players, and if they keep doing that we should be able to field a winning team every year," Tucker said.

Johnson said the owners were also happy with the team's current standing. The Indians are in first place in the Southern Division of the Carolina League and finished the first half of the season only 3½ games behind Durham.

The Indians' attendance has increased by 200 fans per game this season.

They have an average draw of 1,350 fans. The stadium seats 4,200.

Tucker and Thomas first expressed interest in the team in February and began negotiating around mid-March. He said they came to a basic agreement in April, but had to wait for the league's endorsement.

When the league approved the transaction Tuesday, the two sides hammered out the details and finalized the sale that day.

With the sale completed, Tucker said the day-to-day baseball decisions will be handled by Johnson. Tucker will not be a George Steinbrenner-type of owner.

"North (Johnson) is running the show," Tucker said. "He doesn't need me looking over his shoulder.

Tucker is in the printing business and is going to use his firm to market the team. He said that he will print Kinston Indians posters, pamphlets and other paraphernalia. He will also try to expand the team's season ticket market outside of the Kinston area.

With increased local and regional interest, Tucker thinks home attendance can improve.

"Once you get a newcomer into the ballpark, and he realizes the value of his dollar, we hope he will keep coming back," Tucker said. "The sale will be good for the ball club and baseball in the area as a whole."

Tucker has not set goals for the team except to "get through the end of the season and try to come up with some new ideas."

Alcott Aims Toward Win At Boston Five

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

DANVERS, Mass. — When she was 10, Amy Alcott's mind was filled with thoughts of winning a golf tournament. She may do it Sunday with the help of a song Shirley Furlong couldn't get out of her head.

Alcott shot her third straight 4-under-par 68 and took a two-stroke lead over Furlong after Saturday's third round of the LPGA Boston Five Classic.

With only one bogey in her last 45 holes, Alcott was at 12-under 204 after a day when her top competitors couldn't match her consistency.

Alcott recalled "the little kid that used to putt into soup cans in her front yard," thinking of winning the U.S. Open and other events. "It's nice to know that you can do it in real life, that that dream can come true."

The fourth-leading money-winner in LPGA history is in better position to gain her 28th Tour victory because of distractions Furlong encountered.

"I had a song in my head on the front nine and could not get it out," Furlong said. "When I'd get ready to putt, the loudspeaker would come on" in her mind.

"It was a song by Natalie Cole and I said, 'Natalie, just get out of my head.'"

The song was "Good To Be Back" — and that's the way Alcott feels after enduring shoulder problems that hurt her play early in the year.

In her 15th year on the Tour, Alcott, 33, needs three more victories to get into the LPGA Hall of Fame.

Alcott, whose only other year without a win was 1987, is in good shape to improve on her best finish of the year, a fourth-place tie at the du Maurier Classic three weeks ago.

"I believe that everything is cyclic and people play well in cycles," she said.

"My tee to green game is as good as it's been in a long time. I'm putting pretty well," she added. "I don't dwell on winning. I know it's just a byproduct of going out and playing well."

Furlong birdied the last two holes after bogeying the 16th and finished with 70 for a 206 at the 6,008-yard, par-72 Tara Ferncroft Country Club.

Tied at 207 were Cathy Marino, Jody Rosenthal and Patty Sheehan, who bogeyed the final hole after topping her second shot with a three-wood and rolling it into a pond. Sheehan and Rosenthal shot 68s and Marino had a 71.

Alcott, the fourth-leading money-winner in LPGA history, has won 27 events in her 15 years on the Tour. If she wins 30, she'll make the Hall of Fame. She's in good shape to improve on her best finish of the year, a fourth-place tie at the du Maurier Classic three weeks ago.

The third round began with Alcott, Furlong, Marino and Penny Hammel tied for the lead at 8-under, one shot ahead of Beth Daniel.

Alcott took the lead by herself with a birdie at the third hole that put her at 10-under. She never trailed, although her only bogey of the day and Furlong's birdie, both at the ninth hole, put them into a tie that Alcott broke with a birdie on the 12th.

Meanwhile, Sheehan, who began the day at 5-under, was steadily climbing into contention. Her fifth birdie of the day at the 17th hole put her at 10- under, one stroke off Alcott's lead at the time.

Henning Ready For A Win

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CLEVELAND — Harold Henning has made a comfortable living on the PGA Senior PGA Tour this year without winning. But he's tired of it.

Henning, fifth on the money list with $256,547, has been runnerup in three tournaments and in the top five in four others.

But he's 18 holes away from winning after 4-under-par 68 Saturday left him with a one-shot lead after two rounds of the inaugural Ameritech Senior Open.

"On reflection, (the second-place finishes) are not because I did something wrong. They were taken away from me because of outstanding play," said Henning, winless this year in official Senior Tour events.

"It hasn't been through me stumbling. It just happened that somebody played better than me."

Henning, who was at 9-under 135 after two rounds, said he realized that the rest of the 72-player field would be gunning for him Sunday.

Watson Still In The Hunt ...

had to do in a scramble down the last few holes.

And he said he's ready for the challenge.

"I can't wait to put it to the test again," he said.

"I'm playing well. I don't know why the hell it's happening, but it's happening," Watson said.

His 205 total, 11 shots under par and one behind the leader, put him in the best position he's held in this ancient event since 1984, when he was overtaken in the final round on the Old Course at St. Andrews by Seve Ballesteros.

That marked the first of five British Open victories by non-Americans and ushered in a period in which European players moved to the fore in the world game.

But it was Americans who did the moving on this hot, still day along the Firth of Clyde. It was a massive move to the top.

Of the first 10 players behind Grady, eight are Americans.

"Nobody else has a chance at it, not even if they shoot 66," said Fred Couples, one of those very much in the hunt for the old claret jug that goes to the winner of the most ancient of all the world's myriad golf titles.

Grady, of course, is the chief opponent, and the man Watson will partner over the final 18 holes.

Grady, tied by Watson on three separate occasions during the third round, set up the go-ahead birdie with a brilliant chip shot to within tap-in distance on the 16th, and preserved his round of 69 with a six-foot par putt on the final hole.

Grady, 31, winner of four titles in a 12-year globe-trotting career, completed three trips over Troon's sun-baked fairways of Royal Troon in 204, 12 shots under par.

Stewart, a one-time runner-up in this event, was one stroke behind Watson, and two off the lead, at 206 after a 69 in uncommonly warm 77 degree temperature.

Couples and Mark Calcavecchia, along with David Feherty of Northern Ireland, were next at 207.

Couples, the long-hitting man called "Boom Boom" by his fellow pros, and Calcavecchia each shot 68. Feherty had a 69.

Jodie Mudd, with a 68, and Paul Azinger, 67, followed at 208. Mark McCumber and Steve Pate, each with a 70, and Spain's Jose Maria-Olazabal, 69, were another shot back at 209, seven under par and five behind the leader.

All responded to conditions more commonly found on the American PGA Tour than on the Scottish links and produced the exceptionally low scores more frequently seen in the United States than in the British Open.

Of the 80 men who survived the two-round cut, 46 now are under par for the tournament.

"We're seeing a very kind, benign Troon this week," said Watson, who scored the fourth of his five British Open titles here in 1982. "Maybe that helped me."

But it failed to provide enough help for such international stars as U.S. Open champion Curtis Strange, defending title-holder Seve Ballesteros of Spain or Masters champion Nick Faldo of England.

Strange and Ballesteros shot themselves out of it with scores of 74-218 and 76-221, respectively. Faldo was 10 shots behind at 214 after a 70.

Six men — Mudd, Couples, Calcavecchia and Stewart among them — shared the lead at one point or another before it settled down into a struggle between Watson and Grady over the closing holes.

Watson, two shots behind when the day's play started, birdied the first hole from 15 feet and caught Grady with another 15-footer on the fourth hole.

Grady, who saved par with a 10-footer on the ninth, then started his run with a chip-in from 20 feet on the 10th hole.

That put him in front alone, but Watson responded with a two-putt birdie -four on the 11th. They were tied again, this time at 10 under par.

Grady, playing immediately behind Watson, followed him to the 11th green, pitched to three feet and led again, now at 11 under par.

Two holes later, on the 13th, Watson tied him again, this time with an eight-foot birdie putt.

It seemed as if Grady was certain to drop back on the par-three 14th, where he got his tee shot into a dreadful position in a bunker, had to play away from the flag and was looking at a 40-foot putt to save par.

He made it and they remained tied.

But only until Grady reached the par-five 16th, where he chipped from rough to within a couple of inches of the cup for a birdie-four.

Both parred in from there and Grady retained the most narrow margin possible.

"I had to scramble," said Grady. "I didn't hit my irons very well, not well at all. But that's no problem. I don't expect that tomorrow. It's nothing I can't sort out."

Europe's Woes ...

but we have far more depth. Basically, our players are better."

Of the 45 players who finished below-par at the halfway stage of the tournament Friday, only 12 were from Europe, led by David Feherty of Northern Ireland who was three shots off the pace.

Only two Europeans figured in the top 11 placings on the leader board at the end of the last-but-one day.

Feherty was tied for fourth on 9-under and Spain's Jose- Maria Olazabal tied for ninth on 7-under.

Ballesteros said the unusually warm weather was like manna from heaven for the U.S. contingent.

"The weather has been too good," said Ballesteros, who finished on a 5-over-par 221 for three rounds. "I'm never good at defending my title but if it had been rough weather I'm sure it would have been different."

Like Ballesteros, Langer said the Europeans had been handicapped by the unusually calm conditions, almost the same as those in which America's Tom Watson won here in 1982 and more often seen at tournaments in the United States.

"The Europeans might have done a little better if it had been windy," said Langer, the 1985 U.S. Masters champion. "It's been as calm as I can remember for the British Open. That might favor the Americans."

The West German had a nightmare third round, shooting an 11-over-par 83 to plummet out of contention.

"I had a terrible night," Langer said. "I think I had a fever. Everything was awful today. I felt so weak and could not concentrate. I've never had such a poor round in a major after making the cut."

He fired only one birdie in his 1-over-par third-round 73 and said he had the putting "yips" and felt like giving up.

"My putting has gone completely," said Woosnam, who tied for second at last month's U.S. Open. "I wasn't really bothered whether I made the cut or not. I've not enjoyed it one little bit for the last three days and I'm not looking forward to tomorrow."

Sandy Lyle's 1-under-par 71 was his best round of the tournament to date but was not enough to pull him into contention.

Even Nick Faldo, the Masters champion and 1987 British Open winner, fell away on a sticky, stifling afternoon.

Faldo's normally solid game deserted him on the back nine. He bogeyed the 10th, 12th and 18th holes to finish 4-under for the tournament with a mountain to climb on the last day.

Nicklaus said Troon had never favored European players, only one of whom has ever won the Open here.

"I don't know why it is but Americans have always adapted better here," Nicklaus said. "Arnold Palmer has won here, so has Tom Weiskopf and also Tom Watson. Why is that? Who knows."

Nicklaus said European players were bound to slip up at some stage after having too much pressure heaped on them by the media, especially in Britain.

"You are basically looking at only four or five players — Faldo, Ballesteros, Woosnam, Lyle and Langer," Nicklaus said. "People expect more out of them than is really there. They are very good players but they can't do it all the time."

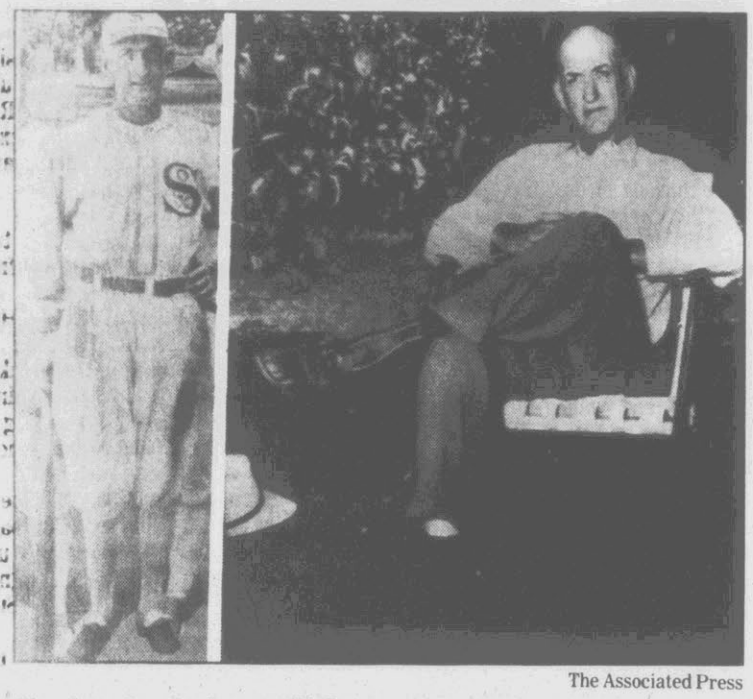
Jackson's Memory Still Endures



The Associated Press

Shoeless Joe Jackson still draws attention

By Rick Scoppe
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

GREENVILLE, S.C. — The wooden grandstands are gone. So are the foul poles and the fences. There is a bare spot where home plate once lay. In the outfield and in foul territory, the weeds are waist high.

But the outline of the ball field remains, now just a deteriorating memory of a time when one of the best players ever to play the game roamed the outfield.

It was here Joe Jackson began what would be an outstanding career — one that ended when he was banned from baseball with seven other Chicago White Sox players in the infamous "Black Sox Scandal."

It was also here he earned the nickname "Shoeless," a moniker that now seems part of the name given him at birth in 1888. Jackson, who died in 1951 when he was 63, earned the nickname after he played one game in his stocking feet because his new spikes hurt.

"He played here as a teen-ager," Jim Mattos, who is one of many now trying to clear Jackson's name, said as he walked among the weeds. "It's all gone now. It's just a bunch of weeds.

"The lay of the land is the same. ... If that tree could talk," Mattos added, pointing to a large oak tree in left-centerfield, "it could tell us a lot."

The stories would be many — from Jackson's humble birth in rural western South Carolina community to his rise as one of the greatest baseball players in the history of the game to his return to Brandon Mill after being banned from baseball.

Jackson, the subject of the recent movie, "Field of Dreams," grew up in Brandon Mill, a mill community near Greenville where his baseball career began. Stories of his exploits on the baseball field spread quickly throughout the textile leagues.

Jackson's star continued to rise in the major leagues. Jackson hit .408 with the Cleveland Indians in his first full major league season in 1911. In his 13-year career, Jackson hit .356 — the third highest average in baseball history, behind only Ty Cobb (.367) and Rogers Hornsby (.358).

While hard-core baseball fans might know that, most people connect Jackson to just one thing: the 1919 World Series, which Jackson and seven of his White Sox teammates were accused of throwing to Cincinnati for money from gamblers.

A jury found the players innocent of trying to "defraud the public," but that didn't keep Commissioner Kenesaw Mountain Landis from banning them from baseball for life.

After Landis' decision, Jackson and his wife, Katie, moved from Chicago to Savannah, Ga., and then back to Greenville, where Jackson ran several businesses, including a liquor store near the baseball field where he learned the game.

Mattos, a 57-year-old state representative from Greenville, said the community saw Jackson as a hero despite the scandal. He recalls riding the trolley that once circled Greenville and seeing Jackson in his old brown felt hat outside his store.

"I can remember people saying, 'That's Shoeless Joe Jackson. That's the greatest baseball player that ever lived,'" Mattos said.

Tut Thomas, 71, helped Jackson out at the liquor store in the 1940s and grew close to the slugger. Thomas said Jackson rarely spoke to him about the Black Sox Scandal.

"He always told me they put that money under his mattress, is where he found the money," Thomas said. "He told me time and again, 'I was not guilty.'"

Thomas said he often read the newspaper to Jackson, who was illiterate. When he was not doing that, Thomas pored over three thick scrapbooks Jackson had — which have since disappeared — while helping out at the liquor store.

Historical Society Out To Clear Name

By Rick Scoppe
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

GREENVILLE, S.C. — The Shoeless Joe Jackson Historical Society thinks its man has suffered enough.

"For 70 years, this has lingered and festered," said South Carolina Rep. Jim Mattos, D-Greenville, a member of the society, which is fighting to clear Jackson's name. "Now's the time to make it right. I think the penalty's been severe enough."

Jackson, who died on Dec. 5, 1951, at 63 in his native South Carolina, and seven other Chicago White Sox players were accused of throwing the 1919 World Series to Cincinnati for money from gamblers.

A jury found the eight innocent of trying to "defraud the public," but Commissioner Kenesaw Mountain Landis issued a statement a few hours later in which he said: "Regardless of the verdict of juries, no player who throws a ball game ... will ever play professional baseball."

But Jackson backers, who want to see their man in the Hall of Fame, said the ban was not justified given the facts.

"All everyone ever associated with Joe Jackson was the fact that he was one of the eight that threw the World Series," Mattos said in an interview. "No one ever said anything about any of his stats, how he played or what he tried to do. Or that he was found not guilty in court."

But that's all changing, Mattos said, thanks to the release of two movies — "Eight Men Out" and "Field of Dreams." The former focuses on the World Series itself and the players' roles in the fix; the latter is a fantasy about Jackson that treats him as a resurrected hero.

"Before the movies, did anybody know what he did in the World Series he supposedly threw?" Mattos said.

Even now, Mattos said, if a person who had not seen the movies was asked about Joe Jackson, the response would be predictable.

"If you asked them, 'How about Joe Jackson? What do you know about him? What did he do in the World Series?' They'd say, 'Let's see, he threw it,'" Mattos said. "'But how'd he play?' They'd say, 'I don't know.'

"That's been the problem all along. The facts are there."

The facts are impressive. Jackson hit .375 with a record-tying 12 hits, including three doubles and the only home run in the eight-game World Series won by Cincinnati. Jackson also had 15 putouts in leftfield and did not make any errors.

What Jackson did or did not do off the field is not so clear. Some claim Jackson took $5,000; others say he found the money in his room and tried to return it to White Sox owner Charles Comiskey, who refused to speak to him.

Jackson added to the confusion by testifying before a grand jury that he refused the money. He later said he did take some money.

Lester Erwin, a distant cousin of Jackson's and the co-founder of the society, said whether Jackson took the money "doesn't matter."

"That's no big deal to me," he said. "The thing that's the real proof to me is what he did on the field during the World Series. If they had that World Series this day and time, he'd be the most valuable player."

Erwin and others in the society feel the time is right to have Jackson's name cleared mainly because of the movies. But while the movies are recent, the movement to get Jackson cleared is not.

The society was formed about seven years ago by Erwin and Ray Allen, a teacher in Atlantic City, N.J., with the purpose of seeing Jackson's name cleared and have him elected to the Hall of Fame.

The society does not collect dues, so there is no membership roll. But Allen said the society counts among its members several lawyers and untold number of grassroot supporters who call Allen about any Jackson-related article, broadcast or other tidbit.

"We want his story before the American public," Allen said. "We know that when the whole story comes out from beginning to end that Joe Jackson is going to be vindicated. Not forgiven. Vindicated. There's a big difference."

The society would like to meet with baseball Commissioner A. Bartlett Giamatti and present the facts as it sees them, in hopes of persuading him to clear Jackson's name.

There's just one problem: Pete Rose. The society does not want to approach Giamatti until the swirl of allegations surrounding the Cincinnati manager is resolved.

"We don't want to throw anything on Giamatti while he's got this Rose case going on," said Joey Bartram, whose grandfather was Jackson's brother. "Number one, we don't think it would be fair to him. Number two, we wouldn't get the attention we deserve."

Bartram and others in the society feel if Giamatti will listen with an open mind, they have a good chance of achieving their goals of having Jackson's name cleared and having him elected to the Hall of Fame.

If that happens, Erwin is willing to give up one of his prized possessions — a bat used by Jackson that was willed to Erwin by Katie Jackson after her death more than seven years after her husband.

"It's been out of my house only a couple of times," Erwin said. "But I would give it up to the Hall of Fame. If they wanted it, I'd give it up to them."

Separate Leagues Held Players Back

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHICAGO — Lou Dials and Bobby Robinson were majestic baseball players of the 1930s who may have been on a par with Lou Gehrig, Mel Ott and Jimmie Foxx, but few fans ever heard of them.

The reason is they spent their entire careers shuttling around Negro League cities on run-down buses, staying in shabby hotels, receiving low pay and getting little recognition.

Used to black stars such as Hank Aaron, Willie Mays, Ernie Banks and Tony Gwynn, it is difficult now for Americans to imagine a time when the sport was not integrated.

But from 1887 until 1947 there was the all-white major leagues — and its minor-league system — and the Negro Leagues for blacks and Hispanics, as baseball mirrored segregated America.

"Lots of black players could have played in the majors then. We'd watch the Tigers play and I can remember a third baseman for Detroit — he couldn't touch me playing third," Bobby Robinson, now, 85, said in a recent interview from his Chicago home.

"Their manager said if I was a white boy, I would be the Tigers' third baseman. I thought about that. It made me feel bad," said Robinson. "White boys made more money, but it was more than that — it was the pride."

Oddly, black and white teams would play exhibitions between seasons in the 1930s and 1940s, and the blacks did well in those games, both players remembered.

"The whites were afraid that if they allowed Negroes to play on the same team with them, the Negroes would dominate the game like they do football and basketball," said Dials, also 85.

Dials, a star outfielder and first baseman, broke in with Rube Foster's Chicago American Giants in 1925, and also played for the Memphis Red Sox, Detroit Stars, Cleveland Giants and New York Black Yankees in the Negro Leagues.

In 1943 — three years before Jackie Robinson played for Montreal — Dials, then 39, was one of three black players offered contracts from the Los Angeles franchise in the white Pacific Coast League.

"But a week before spring training, they told me another team wouldn't let me sign, and there was no place for me no matter how good I was."

Dials said he was glad when Jackie Robinson broke the color barrier.

"I only wish it had been me. I'm quite sure I could have done the same thing," said Dials, a resident of Modesto, Calif., who was in Chicago earlier this summer for the National Sports Collectors Convention. "But I don't know if I could have handled the heckling Jackie had to go through."

"I think he has a good shot at getting into the Hall of Fame, and I collect Hall of Fame signatures," Kloessler explained.

Dials, a 1927 University of California graduate in electrical engineering, thinks his election to the Hall may come next year.

Many records were lost from the old days, but Dials was credited with winning the National League batting title in 1931 with a .382 average, leading the Detroit Stars to the Negro championship.

"I caught the last out of the championship game," said Bobby Robinson. "I had all the players on our team sign the ball. I still have it, and me and Lou are the only ones still alive."

Dials and Robinson — void of bitterness despite playing under racial bias or what was called Jim Crow — look back over their playing days with fond memories.

"I have no regrets being a baseball player. I think about that time every day," said Robinson. "I'd like to see the players one more time."

Dials said the toughest pitcher he ever faced was Wilbert "Bullet" Rogan. "Without a doubt. Casey Stengel said the same thing," said Dials.

The best all-around ballplayer, according to Dials, was Martin DiHigo.

"He could pitch, he could hit," said Dials. "He was a Cuban who played in the Negro Leagues."

DiHigo is among about a dozen oldtime Negro League players admitted to the Hall of Fame since Cooperstown's officials decided to try to right some of baseball's wrongs.

The Negro Leagues had plenty of hardships.

"It was pretty rough traveling by bus, and playing so many games — sometimes two or three games a day," Bobby Robinson said. "You'd ride all night and get up the next day and play."

Robinson broke in with the Indianapolis ABCs in 1925, and later played for the Cleveland Elites, Memphis Red Sox, Detroit Stars, Cleveland Stars and Cleveland Red Sox.

"The most I ever made was between $300 and $400 a month, plus meal money — $1," said Robinson, a brick mason after baseball. "You could get ham and eggs then for 30 cents."

Yet, their salaries were two or three times greater than those of black workers at the time.

Dials still fills with pride over breakthroughs by blacks in and out of sports, including this season's first meeting between black major-league managers, Frank Robinson's Baltimore Orioles and Cito Gaston's Toronto Blue Jays in June.

"It makes me feel elated. Those guys paid their dues," said Dials, who now promotes a line of Negro League baseball cards.

Banking Begins August 4, 1989.

'Baseball Greats Make Plans For Hall Of Fame Trip

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Roy Campanella is flying in from Los Angeles. Ted Williams is cutting short his fishing trip. Ralph Kiner will be absent from the Mets' broadcast booth.

They're all heading for Cooperstown.

Stan Musial will be there this weekend. Warren Spahn, too. Charlie Gehringer, 86, is driving 500 miles from Birmingham, Mich. Johnny Mize is arriving from Demorest, Ga. Billy Williams can't wait to meet his old rival, Willie McCovey, on the golf course.

From all over the country, baseball's greatest players are coming to celebrate America's pasttime and greet the newest Hall of Famers: Johnny Bench, Carl Yastrzemski, Red Schoendienst, Harry Caray and Al Barlick.

"I was very elated with the people that were there when I was inducted," said Spahn, elected in 1973, "and I think it would be kind of empty if there were none of us players there when a new guy was inducted.

"It's a payback thing. I want to extend my hand and welcome the guys to the fraternity."

"I was on cloud nine when I got in so I wanted to go back last year and see how it felt," said Billy Williams, elected in 1987.

"Now, I'm going up to be with the fraternity, those players who have been outstanding in their field. The ceremony, giving your autograph. That means a great deal to me. To see guys who have been inducted in the Hall, to see the new guys getting installed."

There'll be some memories, of course, a few rounds of golf, and most special of all, a dinner Sunday night — Hall of Famers only.

"That's where we all gather around and tell a bunch of lies," laughed Kiner, a seven-time home run champ. "The line drives get harder and the homers go further."

"That is an exclusive affair. We have dinner together and welcome the new inductees," Campanella said. "This is something all the money in the world couldn't buy. It's a group of players that have reached the top, you can't go any further."

"Most of the conversation centers around golf and handicaps and things like that," said McCovey, who works just a few miles away from his old field, San Francisco's Candlestick Park.

"But when we get together in our private session, there's a lot of baseball stories that's interesting to listen to, more interesting than any other sport. I always take a seat besides (Negro League star) Cool Papa Bell and guys like that, just to hear some of those old baseball stories."

They are like high school valedictorians, returning to their old campus to watch the new kids graduate. When Bench and Yastrzemski get up to speak on Sunday, the alumni will be seated behind them, watching. Only a Hall of Famer could understand what this year's class is going through.

Deal Of The Century For Kosar

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Cleveland Browns quarterback Bernie Kosar has made a gold-line stand with his recent contract extension.

Kosar's new deal reportedly will pay him $15 million over six years, making him one of the highest-paid players in the National Football League.

An account of Kosar's big payoff was contained in Saturday's edition of the Cleveland Plain Dealer, which reported that the star quarterback will receive a $3 million signing bonus.

The Plain Dealer said the deal, which goes into effect next season, averages $2.5 million a year, including bonuses and base salary. Kosar will earn $1 million this year, the last year of his original five-year contract.

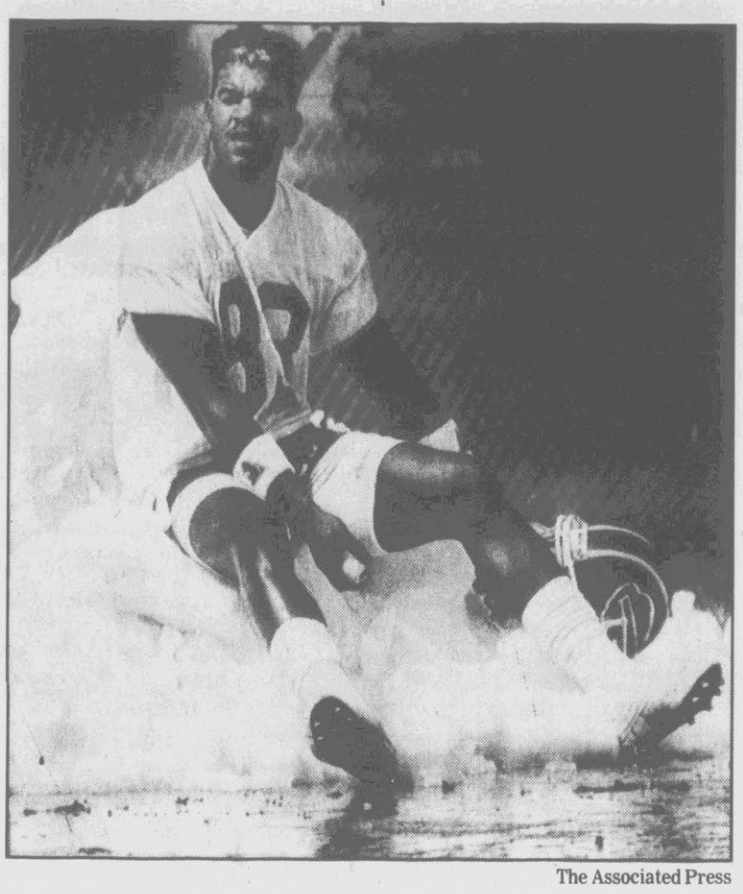
Because much of the signing bonus is spread over the first two years, Kosar could surpass San Francisco quarterback Joe Montana as the highest-paid player in the NFL in 1990.

Montana, who quarterbacked the 49ers to three Super Bowl championships in the 1980s, will make $2.55 million per season from 1990-92. Houston quarterback Warren Moon will earn $4 million in 1993 as part of a $10 million, five-year deal.

The agreement was announced jointly by Kosar and the Browns on July 12. No details were disclosed at that time. Kosar declined to comment on the details on Friday.

"I'm excited about the deal," Kosar said. "We didn't have to haggle over anything. There was a lot of respect between the two parties that led to this happening. It was an exceptional experience for me, as a 25-year-old, to be able to do this.

"I enjoyed the negotiations. I majored in finance and economics (at the University of Miami). You do that stuff in your classes. To do it when it really meant something was fun and a good learning experience."



The Associated Press

Buffalo's Andre Reed cools off after a recent practice

Kosar will be 32 at the end of the new contract, which expires after the 1995 season.

The news of Kosar's deal underscored a day of busy signing activity in the NFL on Saturday.

Cardinals

Phoenix signed three more draft picks, including third-rounder Mike Zandofsky, and a free agent.

The 6-foot-2, 297-pound Zandofsky, an offensive lineman from Washington, reportedly agreed to a three-year contract whose terms were not disclosed.

Becker was a 10th-round selection from Texas Christian while Hunter was taken in the 11th round out of Albany State. Also on Saturday, the Cardinals signed free-agent fullback Ted Petrasky of Wisconsin-LaCrosse.

Jets

New York signed two more draft picks — defensive end Ron Stallworth and receiver Tony Martin.

Stallworth is a 6-5, 262-pounder from Auburn. Martin, 6-0 and 180 pounds, was a quarterback at Mesa (Colorado), but was taken in the fifth-round as a wide receiver project.

The Jets, who signed six picks on Friday, cut five players Saturday — including former Division III star Joe Dudek.

Patriots

New England reduced its list of unsigned players to nine when veteran tight end Willie Scott and both eighth-round draft choices agreed to contracts.

Saints

Fourth-round draft choice Michael Mayes, a cornerback, also signed with the Saints along with sixth-round pick Floyd Turner, a wide receiver; 10th-round choice Joe Henderson, a running back, and 11th-round pick Calvin Nicholson, a cornerback.

Eighth-round pick Fred Hadley, a wide receiver, has agreed to terms but was having difficulty making flight connections.

Jim Mora isn't turning the New Orleans Saints training camp into a country club, but he does plan to ease up a bit on the work load.

Part of the reason for the lighter load is that the newly imposed roster limit of 80 players concentrates repetitions on fewer bodies, requiring shorter practices to get the same amount of work.

But the biggest reason, Mora said Thursday, is that he wants his team to come out of camp more rested than it has in the past.

"I think we got worn out last year, and that probably starts in camp," he said.

The Saints finished 10-6 last season, riding high through a 7-1 start and going to 9-3 before a disastrous three-game losing streak that knocked them out of the playoffs.

The veterans reporting early are mostly those who finished last season on injured reserve, including fullback Craig Heyward, who is rehabilitating an injury to his right knee.

Mora refused to contribute to the running story of Heyward's struggle with his weight. "I don't want to make a big issue out of it," Mora said.

Heyward reportedly got up to 290 pounds during the winter and spring, and has been given a reporting weight of under 255 pounds.

"Craig's a guy who's always going to have a weight problem, and he's always going to have a knee that's not as good as it was 10 years ago," Mora said.

Steelers

Colts

Indianapolis signed three draft picks: linebacker Kurt Larson, an eighth-round pick from Michigan State; quarterback Wayne Johnson, an 11th-round pick from Georgia; and running back William DuBose, a 12th-rounder from South Carolina State.

The Colts also made some roster cuts.

Running back Rotnei Anderson of Oklahoma and wide receiver Welton Morgan of Southwestern Louisiana were waived. Both signed with the Colts during the off-season.

Coach Ron Meyer indicated he originally had no plans for early cuts, but the physical condition of the players involved dictated the move.

Bucs

NFL Notes

Coach Ray Perkins said offensive linemen Ty Granger, a 10th-round selection from Clemson, and Rod Mounts, an 11th-rounder from Texas A&I, decided to quit the team, reducing the roster to 76 players.

Falcons

The Atlanta Falcons signed two draft picks and two veteran free agents Friday.

Falcons Vice President Jim Hay said tight end Troy Sadowski of Georgia, sixth round, and linebacker Chris Dunn of California Poly, ninth round, signed contracts, bringing to six the number of draft choices under contract.

Third-year veterans tight end Danzell Lee and defensive back Elbert Shelley, who were unprotected free agents, also signed new contracts and will report Sunday.

Terms of the contracts were not disclosed.

Rookies are to report for physicals Saturday, with the first training camp practice set for Sunday at 9 a.m.

Run-And-Shoot Scheme Could Be Lions' Savior

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ROCHESTER, Mich. — If the word "guru" didn't already exist, Mouse Davis would have invented it. He's that kind of guy.

Davis and his run-and-shoot offense has been hired to give the Detroit Lions' a religious experience or to raise them from the dead, whichever comes first.

Last year, the Lions finished 4-12 and last among the 28 NFL teams in offense. Darryl Rogers was fired and assistant Wayne Fontes became the coach.

But football people in the other 27 NFL cities had questions. Davis' offense, which the Lions are calling the Silver Stretch, is considered a gimmick that won't fool many NFL defenses.

"First of all, they don't understand it," says Davis, for whom Jim Kelly set 38 USFL records in 1984 with Houston. "They think it's a sandlot game, but we do have discipline.

"Coaches say we can't do all the things we say we can do. They also say the big NFL defensive ends can put too much pressure on the quarterback. It's not true."

In Davis' offense, almost every play is a pass, with four receivers downfield, leaving a big running back to block for a quarterback who has to read the defense and throw on the run.

"On any given route, the receiver might have 10 or 15 different movements," Davis said. "We put our quarterback on display and he becomes the shooter. Our philosophy is we are always going to attack the weakness of any defense at the snap of the ball."

But is there a quarterback to run it?

Incumbent Chuck Long isn't very mobile; Eric Hipple used to be before a series of leg injuries, and Rusty Hilger a journeyman.

In fact, the Lions hope rookie Rodney Peete, who surprisingly lasted until the sixth round in the draft is the man — he's by far the most mobile of the group.

"The stretch offense doesn't require great athletes," Davis said. "You can be small. Obviously, last year, the Lions were buried 28th on offense and we didn't change many people. What we did do was add some burners."

When the Lions opened camp last week, there was one man on hand who could vouch for the success of the offense. He was the first quarterback to run it, at an suburban Portland, Ore., high school where Davis got his first coaching job in 1962.

Jerry Costanzo, director of creative writing at Carnegie Mellon University in Pittsburgh, recalled that his Milwaukie High School team went 7-2 that year, losing the two games by a total of four points.

"They said it wouldn't work every place he went and, look, it's still working," said Costanzo, who is writing a book about his former coach. "You have to have more than a little intelligence. It's not for everybody."

During Davis' six years as coach at Portland State, his teams, which included current Phoenix quarterback Neil Lomax, compiled a 42-24 record and set 20 NCAA Division I-AA records. Later, he took the Toronto Argonauts to the Grey Cup championship game, then moved to the former USFL's Houston Gamblers where Kelly set 38 league records in 1984.

Davis was director of football operations for the Arena Football League when Fontes called him last November.

"Now our game is going to be a two-minute offense where we throw every play," said Hilger, who seems best suited of those in camp to direct the attack. "The only exception is that we'll use a huddle. Mouse is under the impression that this is the way the game should be played.

"Realistically, we can improve 100 percent. We were 28th in the league last year with some of the worst statistics I've ever seen. God knows how good we can be yet. We've got a chance to win our division, in my opinion. But, if things don't go well, we could be last in our division, too."

A Fresh Start For E.J. Junior

Ex-Cardinal Hoping To Find A New Home In Miami

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MIAMI — Defense and drugs were part of the Miami Dolphins' downfall last season, and E.J. Junior wants to help with both problems.

The Dolphins signed the former Pro Bowl linebacker after the Phoenix Cardinals decided his skills had slipped and left him unprotected last spring.

Junior, 29, says he plans to end a three-year slump with big plays for a defense that ranked 26th in the NFL last year. And for a team surrounded by speculation about drug use at the end of the season, Junior says he can provide a voice of experience.

In 1983, Junior went on probation for a felony drug conviction and received a four-game suspension from the NFL. He kicked his habit and became a drug counselor.

"I've been dealing with my problem longer than anybody else that's playing in the league now," he said. "So it's easier for me to understand what they're going through."

With traiping camp just under way, Junior has yet to meet many of his new teammates. What will he tell them?

"Hey, just take one day at a time. The only person that can control your destiny is you.

"Don't throw it all away for a one-night high or a euphoria that's only going to last 10 or 15 minutes. Because once you come down, if you have a problem you're trying to deal with, the problem is still going to be there."

Junior's problem the past three seasons, he said, is that the Cardinals coaches lost confidence in him. He lost confidence in himself, and became tenative.

"If you make a mistake, you ought to make it full speed," he said. "E.J. Junior did not play like E.J. Junior. That's the bottom line. I failed to do what I was capable of doing."

The Dolphins agreed. But, desperate for defense after a 6-10 season, they gave the free agent a contract that pays $750,000 this year if he makes the team. Now, they're hoping Junior will regain the form that landed him in the Pro Bowl in 1984-85.

Cool Weather, Clean Water Help Fishing

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

A combination of cooler temperatures and clearer ocean water has meant some increased action at North Carolina's fishing piers, according to the operators.

"It's cooled down a little bit. Good breeze, fish are biting. Ocean's calm," says Fred Phelps Jr. at Carolina Beach Fishing Pier.

But up the road at Dudley's Marina, some afternoons have been punctuated with heavy thunderstorms and that's cut down on the activity.

"It's been good. We've just had some adverse weather," said John Dudley at Dudley's Marina, adding that "The fishing is decent. The days you can get out and fish, that's it. We've had too much wind this season."

But Dudley's did see a blue marlin brought in on the Andrea Grace III earlier this week.

Carolina Beach

Phelps said there's been good runs of spot and Virginia mullet at night, especially after sunset. The blues and the flounder have been making their runs early in the morning as well as at dusk. Sheephead and flounder have been good, and he said fishermen are hoping that the run of Spanish mackerel will follow with some kings.

Swansboro

Dudley says the weather is good — for now.

"It's a good fishing wind if it stays light to variable," he said.

There have been a few kings, but the highlight of the week so far has been 10 speckled trout reeled in on Wednesday.

Close to shore, Dudley said, the croakers are running well, with the Spanish mackerel and the cobia doing well further offshore. Dolphin are the catch about 12 miles out.

Nags Head

"With this northeast wind, it's really helped the fishing a lot," Andy McCann said.

"We need ... something northeast or north to get things churned up," he said. "These west winds are the worst in the world for inshore fishing."

The change in the wind has stirred up the ocean water and that's brought the fish in for feeding. also brought some increased action.

Things got a little slow Wednesday, McCann said, but the first half of the week brought nice catches of spot, croaker and sea mullet. Flounder have been running near the 3-pound range, and a 42-pound king was landed Monday.

Inshore boats have done well with Taylor blues, a few spots and croakers. Offshore catches have been dolphin, tuna, white and blue marlin with most of them being released.

Wrightsville Beach

Age and weather is a determining factor at Crystal Pier. George Fokakis says the younger fishermen in search of the king mackerel are out during the daylight in the midst of the heat. The older people are waiting for cooler conditions, usually at the beginning and the end of the day.

What they're all seeing is Spanish mackeral in the early mornings and late evenings, and a few blues late in the afternoon. Spots and croaker still are making their late runs.

Topsail Island

Hardin Crouch at Jolly Roger Fishing Pier says if you want to get some Spanish mackerel, now's the time.

"The water is beautiful out there. It's just as pretty as I've ever seen it for Spanish," he said. "Everything looks good for (Thursday)."

There have been a few spots, whiting and flounder, he said, as well as a few blues.

Hatteras

Tom Blevins at Pelican Roost said it's a typical summer with spot and tuna offshore, 2-pound pompano closer to the beach. There are also whiting, blues, spot and croaker.

The weather has been hot, but getting better.

"It's still pretty warm, but there's a nice breeze," he said.

Hi-Tech Fishing

Using Satellites To Map Waters

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW ORLEANS — Glenn Schurr is using high technology to find fishing hot spots.

His fishing maps are reproductions of infrared satellite photographs enhanced by Schurr's own process and labeled with graphic overlays he developed.

The maps, each 24 inches by 36 inches and laminated to protect them from wear and water, mark all of the hot spots in the marshes that merge with the Gulf of Mexico and show landmarks that don't appear on official charts.

For instance, those who fish the waters south of New Orleans know that "The Dope Boat" is a hot spot.

"But you ain't going to find 'Dope Boat' on a U.S. Geological Survey map," said Schurr, 39. His map marks the spot where smugglers scuttled a marijuana mother ship when the Coast Guard caught up with it. Over the years, the sunken freighter became an artificial reef, alive with fish.

"The Rocks," "Sea Deuce Canal," "The Castle," are all among hundreds of colloquially named fishing spots identified on Schurr's maps.

Six of his maps are already in fishing supply stores, and two more are ready for delivery. He figures it may take as many as 20 maps to cover the Louisiana coast from the Chandeleur Islands to the western edge of Vermilion Bay.

"If there's a demand for the Lake Charles area, we'll do that one, too," he said.

Schurr said he realized there was a need for updated detailed maps when he and a friend fished an area off Venice that neither knew well.

"It was a nightmare to get around in. The charts and maps they had weren't up to date, the coastline had changed, and we got lost," he said.

"I had been building image processing equipment for a government contractor. I got the idea, and I took four National Space and Technology Lab shots, put them together, taped them up and used them for my own mapping.

"I did some graphic overlays with the computer system I designed, and every time I turned this way or that way, somebody wanted a copy of it. I lithographed the thing and sold about 600 copies of it the first month I had it out."

Weeks of research go into determining what names will be used to identify landmarks.

"I go to the local marinas and speak to the owners, and I talk to the charter boat captains, and then I talk to the old timers who have fished those waters for a long time," he said.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21): Inner conflicts between self-centered interests and career objectives clash in your mind. The way to get what you want is to ask for it.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21): Enjoy the pleasure principal today by enjoying your leisure time with favorite people. Today you can write your own ticket.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20): You realize that careless spending must be changed. You prefer to save some and spend some! Trim the fat, but don't be stingy.

Making the technically correct play can sometimes reap surprising rewards. Consider this hand, from Eddie Kantar's excellent Defensive Bridge Play Complete. (Available from the Bridge World, 39 W. 94th St., New York, N.Y. 10024, $15 post free.)

After a straightforward Stayman auction, North-South reached the normal contract of three no trump. With 27 high-card points in the combined holding, it might seem that declarer should have an easy time, but ...

West led his fourth-best spade, and the Rule of 11 allowed East to calculate that declarer had only one card higher than the six. It might seem, therefore, that it makes no difference which card East plays. However, it is certain that declarer's one card must be a high honor, for West would not have underled a suit in which he held the three top honors.

Suppose East carelessly inserts the jack. Declarer wins and, since he has only eight tricks, declarer tries in vain to establish a long card in one of the minors for the game-going trick. That leaves only one remaining hope. Declarer exits with a spade. West can take his four spade tricks, but then must lead away from the king of hearts to give declarer his ninth trick.

Look at the difference if East follows with the seven of spades to the first trick. When declarer exits with a spade, West can afford to play low, allowing East to win the trick with the jack. East cashes his two minor-suit winners before returning a spade, and the result is down two!

Wood Finishes Require Protection And Repair

By Reader's Digest
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Chances are that much of your furniture is made of wood. While attractive and durable, wood is vulnerable to scrapes, scratches and stains.

Cleaning

— If you dust wood furniture often with a slightly dampened lint-free cloth containing a small amount of furniture polish, you won't have to polish as frequently.

— Choose a polish that matches your furniture's finish rather than its wood. Liquid polish, oil finish and paste wax produce high luster; cream polish and spray wax provide moderate luster. No matter which type of polish you choose, apply it sparingly. The real secret to a good shine is more rubbing, not more polish.

— Avoid switching back and forth from a polish containing oil to one containing wax. Applying both kinds to the same surface could cause blotches or smudges.

— To remove wax buildup, wipe the surface with a soft cloth dampened with synthetic turpentine or mineral spirits. Or use a liquid polish.

Removing Stains

— To remove water stains from wood, place a heavy, thick blotter over the spot, then press with a warn iron until the stain disappears. If the stain persists, rub it with lemon oil and let it set overnight. Wipe away the excess oil the following morning.

— Alcohol spills from drinks, medicines and cosmetics can dissolve wood finishes. Wipe up spills immediately, then rub the area with a cloth moistend with lemon oil.

— Milk spills can also damage wood finishes. Wipe the spill up, rub affected area with a damp cloth that has been dipped in ammonia and rub dry with a clean cloth. Or rub with small amount of silver polish or wet cigarette ashes, then wipe dry.

— Remove glass rings on table tops by rubbing them with a mixture of mayonnaise and white toothpaste. Wipe the area dry, then polish the entire surface.

Scrapes and Scratches

— Scratches can easily be treated with touch-up sticks. They come in numerous colors and shades and are available at paint shops.

— Hide scratches on mahogany or dark cherry by rubbing them with a cotton swab dipped in iodine. For unshellacked maple and cherry, dilute the iodine by 50 percent with denatured alcohol. To darken a scratch, rub it gently with the meat of a walnut. Rub the kernel of the nut directly into the scratch, not into the surrounding wood.

— For scratches in oil finishes, rub with fine steel wool and lightweight mineral oil or boiled linseed oil. Let the oil soak in, then wipe dry.

— Remove light burns with a thin paste made by mixing rottenstone or finely powdered pumice (available from woodworking suppliers) with linseed oil. Rub the paste in the direction of the grain with a soft cloth. Continue until the burn disappears.

— Repairing deep burns is a bit more involved.

1. Gently sand or scrape away the blackened wood with a single-edge razor or utility knife.
2. Select a wax or shellac stick that matches the lightest grain of the wood. Heat the blade of a curved grapefruit knife by holding it over the sootless flame of a spirit lamp or over an electric stove burner.
3. Hold the stick against the heated blade and let the wax melt into the depression in the wood's surface. Melt enough wax so the hole is filled slightly above the wood surface.
4. Let the wax cool. Then scrape off the excess with a razor blade.
5. To match the grain, use a fine-tipped artist's brush to paint dark streaks.
6. Seal the patch with clear polyurethane or an acrylic varnish spray.

On The House

By ANDY LANG

Do you know how far it is from the elbow to the tip of the middle finger?

If you are an adult of average size, it's about 18 inches. That's a measuring technique used thousands of years ago. But it's the "about" in the sentence relating to the 18 inches that caused trouble. The measuring capabilities were limited because most arms are not equal in length.

Today, thanks to standards and advanced technology, measuring is easier and more precise. Even so, homeowners and do-it-yourselfers sometimes find themselves in a quandary when it comes to selecting the proper measuring tool because of the large number and variety on the market.

The two measuring tool categories are tape rules and squares. Both groups contain measuring instruments with unusual features that make them useful in specific applications.

Tape rules generally incorporate a narrow strip of steel often referred to as the "blade," which is marked off in inches or, in some cases, centimeters, or both. Quality tape rules have a protective film for added corrosion resistance. They also utilize black gradation markings against a yellow backround for high visibility, as well as a "true zero" and hook for precise measuring. Most rules use a steel spring or special cam configuration that enables the blade to slide in or out of the case with relative ease. Basic tape rules include power return rule, push-pull rules and long tape rules. The blade of a power return rule, which automatically returns into the case when released by the user, has a locking control or brake that secures the blade's position to insure accuracy.

The push-pull category includes pocket units compact enough to fit into a pocket. This rule may have a spring but usually does not have a locking device. It can be used to measure lengths up to 6 feet and is ideal for small projects or when shopping for furniture. Steel long tapes can be used to measure distances from 50 to 100 feet. Most of these rules have a hand crank to return the blade, but there are long tapes now available with automatic blade return features. These rules are designed for measuring large areas, such as sports fields and lawns.

Squares are used to perform complicated calculations and to assure the correct determination of various angles. The basic square types include carpenter-rafter squares, combination squares and try squares. A carpenter square, also referred to as a rafter or framing square, is a flat piece of steel or aluminum cut into an L shape with graduated markings. This versatile device can be used to determine the length of any rafter for any given roof pitch. It also comes in handy for figuring the volumn of a board; for finding the circumference and center of a circle; for calculating proportions; and for laying out ellipses, miters and certain kinds of joints.

Combination squares have adjustable metal or plastic handles and are designed for marking right angles; making longitudinal lines on boards; finding the depth of a hole; making a 45-degree angle; and for leveling and plumbing surfaces.

Try squares are also L-shaped, but are smaller than carpenter squares. This type of square can incorporate a steel blade ranging in length from 4 to 12 inches. It is set into a handle and can be used to check wood for squareness and straightness. It also can test a surface or an edge for equal thickness throughout its length and to indicate 90-degree saw cuts on boards.

A recent development of Stanley Tools is a measuring wheel line to perform long-distance measurements vertically; overhead; around corners; from wall to wall; and over contours up to 1,000 feet without stopping or requiring a helper.

While walking off a distance with this measuring wheel, the unit's counter will automatically record the measurement and display it in feet and inches in clear view of the operator. If the operator should "overshoot" a mark, the wheel can be backed up and the counter will read accordingly.

Older Homeowners Get Mortgage Aid

By Catherine Wilson
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Margaret Gregory was dipping into her savings so deeply she was afraid she'd be forced to sell her condominium and move into an apartment.

"I'm 84 years old ... come August and I was using up my savings because I didn't think I was going to live so long, and then I didn't realize what I was going to live on," said Mrs. Gregory, a retired social worker.

Her solution was a reverse mortgage on her San Diego condominium, the opposite of a standard home mortgage. Instead of building equity as she pays the bank each month, the company pays her each month as her equity drops.

The financial tool is available from three companies, a handful of states have offered publicly funded or backed programs, and the Federal Housing Administration this month is launching a pilot program with 2,500 insured reverse mortgages available nationally.

"One way to think about this is there are nearly 19 million elderly households in the country. Eighty-three percent of them own their own home and 73 percent of the owners own their homes free and clear." said Judith May, the chief architect of the FHA program. "Yet at the same time, 1.7 million elderly owners have houses worth more than $50,000 and annual income below $10,000.

"In other words, they could be described as house rich and cash poor, and they could be candidates for reverse mortgages."

To encourage a test of the offerings, the FHA program, set to begin July 24, allows selected lenders almost every option ever thought up.

Borrowers 62 and older can choose from a lifetime reverse mortgage, one that lasts a specific number of years, one that offers a line of credit or a combination. Interest can be either fixed or adjustable. Homeowners can pledge 100 percent of their equity or any portion. Appreciation in home values can be factored in. No matter which options are selected, homeowners can stay at home until they move, sell or die. At that point the lender gets the full amount of equity that was pledged, even if it wasn't all used.

Mrs. Gregory, long divorced and with no children, had maintained a private practice in psychotherapy until last year. She had been living on her Social Security and was spending her savings.

The reverse mortgage on her $135,000 condo is with the Providential Home Income Plan based in San Francisco. She pledged 60 percent of equity and gets about $500 a month as long as she lives to help meet a $1,300 monthly budget. Providential will be repaid the full 60 percent when she dies.

"It's a lifetime program, so the longer you live the more benefit you get from it. If I should die in the next day or two, they would get the benefit of my estate, but if I can live six years or more I will get the benefit."

"It's very good. It really solves my problems," Mrs. Gregory said. "In a year or two, I'd probably have to sell the house and find some other living arrangement that would be cheaper. I didn't want to move."

The same thoughts were expressed by some of the 3,500 older Americans who have opted for reverse mortgages.

"The typical borrower has been about 75 years of age, about two-thirds single women living alone, 25 percent elderly couples. Their average income has been below $10,000 for women and below $14,000 for couples," Ms. May said. She believes the FHA offers the best deal for those with homes worth $150,000 or less. Higher values would bring higher benefits from private plans.

The maximum payout on FHA loans is tied to age, interest, and the form and amount of the loan. A 75-year-old widow with a $100,000 debt-free house would qualify for $812 a month on a five-year fixed-term reverse mortgage at 10 percent interest with no appreciation-sharing.

Florida is about to kick off a program, but outsiders are critical. It only offers term mortgages, people must be 70 or older to apply, payments go down if interest rates go up, and lenders will be allowed to claim contents from an estate other than the house if payments exceed equity.

Lenders and experts familiar with the program have been critical, and administrator Rodney Roberts said the sponsor is re-examining the 70-year age limit. "There will be improvements to this program. There will be improvements to all of the others."

Other state programs operate in Connecticut and Rhode Island. In Virginia, the program was so popular the fund was exhausted; Maryland is launching one, and Pennsylvania and North Carolina are developing programs.

American Homestead Mortgage Corp. of Mount Laurel, N.J., the largest private lender, has written more than 2,500 reverse mortgages since 1983 and now operates in eight states and the District of Columbia.

Capital Holding Corp., of Louisville, Ky., introduced its product in October, and Providential wrote its first loan in November.

"Seniors are a little cautious about doing something this big, and it is a big deal," said Capital Holding spokeswoman Tricia Snoke. "We encourage them to talk to financial advisers, talk to their children, talk to their banker."

"Would you call it the wave of the future? No, maybe a ripple. The likelihood is it's going to remain fairly small," said Ken Scholen, director of the National Center of Home Equity Conversion in Madison, Wis., and generally recognized as the grandfather of reverse mortgages.

"A year ago, we were looking at maybe a dozen states. A year from now, it'll be probably 33 states. In five years, all 50 states."

Here's The Answer

By Andy Lang

Q. — I have to paint a concrete floor and walkway around the area of an outdoor swimming pool. I once did a similar job several years ago with an oil-based paint but found the concrete was a little slippery after it had been done. I have heard this slipperyness can be avoided by using a water-based latex paint. That sounds logical, but what worries me is whether the water-based latex will be as durable as the other paint. May I have your advice?

A. — The water-based latex is excellent for poolside areas. It is very durable and is not slippery. It also has the advantage of being easy to apply.

Q. — Your answer to the adjustment of the tension on a window shade was very good. But I would like you to know that when I was a little girl, more than 55 years ago, my mother took an old silverware fork. She removed the shade and rolled it up tight. She then inserted the flat prong on the top of the shade on the roller into the tines of the fork, then wound it up slowly about five times to tighten the spring. Too much winding makes it spring back. Insert the shade back into the brackets and pull it down. I have used this method many times in the past and it always works.

A. — Many thanks. Our readers thank you, too.

Q. — Just had a wooden deck put in. Can I apply stain at once?

A. — Yes, but for best results you should let the exposed wood weather a bit. Allow 4 to 5 weeks for regular wood, 8 to 12 weeks for pressure-treated lumber. Weathering allows the pores to open so the stain can penetrate deep.

Q. — There's a slight leak of water into our toilet bowl. I checked inside the tank and found the water is not overflowing into the overflow tube, so I know it isn't that. Any ideas?

A. — Water is leaking into the bowl under the rubber ball at the bottom of the tank. Turn off the water to the fixture and work the tank handle several times. See whether the rubber ball is dropping exactly on the valve seat every time. Sometimes all that is required is to adjust the bracket on the outside of the overflow tube. Keep adjusting it until the ball drops perfectly on the valve seat. While you are at it, rub steel wool around the inside of the valve seat to remove any rust, dirt or grit. It's also possible you need a new rubber ball. The new one may not be round, but shaped more like a pear. In any case, it is constructed so it will fit the valve seat. All of this is under the assumption you have an old-fashioned toilet tank mechanism inside your tank. When you start to have a lot of trouble with the equipment inside the tank, a new inside unit may be in order.

Shoppers will be able to enter Belk through two outside entrances and one from the mall

Belk To Open Plaza Store

By Rosalie Trotman
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

A place for today's customer to shop in tomorrow's environment is projected at the new Belk store at The Plaza, according to local Belk officials.

Belk plans to open the new facility for business Wednesday morning.

"The trend in the store is following a very updated, contemporary purpose," said Greenville Banks, vice president and general manager of the Greenville-area Belk stores.

"The feel of the Carolina East (Mall) store is very traditional in nature. Because of its success we know our customers like it. However, we did not want to duplicate that store at The Plaza and that's why we took the modernistic approach. Men's and women's wearing apparel, cosmetics, accessories and shoes are features of the new specialty store," Banks said.

"The color decor is soft-muted pastels accented with wood grains and metallic trimmings, except in the junior and young men's areas where we bring in an upbeat feeling of high tech. Young people today are turned on by technology of all types and computers," Banks said.

"There are a few traditional areas with a bit of nostalgia," said Banks, "for the areas of Ralph Lauren, Ruff Hewn and Gant sportswear. When you add all these ingredients, I think you have a very interesting store."

"The flow of merchandise throughout the store is shown in settings which are individual by design giving a side-by-side shop feel. Each area is personalized by its furnishings, wall hangings and overall decor and colors," Banks said.

"The store exterior is octagon-shaped in off-white masonry with recessed, gray accent bands. The one-level building has 46,268-square-feet of space. The store will have 86 employees," said Warner Rackley, operating store manager.

"The three entrances have a center of interest. For instance, the mall entrance focuses on the cosmetic department and sculptured ceiling and lighting," Rackley said.

"This store is the first of its design in Belk country which includes the Southeast. It combines architectural features such as marble floors, sculptured ceilings, electronics and modern displays," Banks said.

"For instance in the junior department, special interest areas are 16 television screens and the back portion of a 1953 bright red Plymouth station wagon mounted on a ledge above eye level. All the features mesh together in such a way that the merchandise is a focal point," he said.

A ribbon cutting ceremony will start at 9:30 a.m. Wednesday at the Arlington Boulevard entrance. City and county dignitaries will participate in the ceremony.

A special preview celebration featuring music and a mini-fashion show is planned today from 5 p.m. to 7 p.m. for invited guests. The Dream Factory of North Carolina will benefit from the proceeds.

"This is an exciting time for me because this store is a new venture. This is our 101st year of retail operations and I can think of no better way of starting the second century than with a store that projects into the future," said Banks.

Increased Earnings

First Federal Savings and Loan Association of Pitt County recorded increased earnings for the sixth consecutive year, said Burney S. Warren III, president and chief executive officer.

First Federal reported net income for the 12 months ending June 30 of $1,425,825, an increase of 8 percent from the $1,320,022 for the comparable 1988 period. Per share earnings for fiscal 1989 were $3.85 compared with $3.57 for fiscal 1988.

Net income for the three months ending June 30, 1989, increased to $354,650, as compared to $353,590, for the three months ending June 30, 1988.

"We continue to be pleased with the company's financial performance," Warren said. "The results reflect a 1.04 percent return on assets and 17.1 percent return on equity for the year. These measures of profitability compare very favorably with other banks and thrifts in North Carolina."

First Federal, with assets of $141 million, has headquarters in Greenville and offices in Farmville, Ayden and Grifton.

Dividend Reported

The board of directors of Peoples Bancorporation declared a third quarter dividend of 14 cents per share to be paid on Sept. 2 to shareholders of record on Sept. 6.

The ex-dividend date is Aug. 30. The figure represents a 7.7 percent increase over last quarter's dividend of 13 cents per share, Peoples said. Upon payment, total dividends paid per share for the first nine months of 1989 will be 40 cents.

Quarterly Income

NCNB Corp. recently reported net income of $91.5 million for the second quarter of 1989, a 54 percent increase over net income of $59.3 million in the second quarter of 1988, said NCNB Chairman Hugh McColl.

McColl said the current results also represented a 21 percent increase over net income of $75.8 million in the first quarter of 1989.

Earnings per share rose 43 percent to $1, compared to second quarter 1988 earnings per share of 70 cents. The earning were 22 percent higher than per-share earnings of 82 cents in the first quarter this year.

"Our continued strong performance is a measure of NCNB's traditional strength in the southeast as well as the remarkable progress we have made in Texas," McColl said.

"Effective April 1, NCNB Corp. increased its ownership of NCNB Texas to 49 percent. Our increased commitment was promptly rewarded in the second quarter," he said. "The Texas bank, with total earnings of $63.1 million, contributed $28.8 million to total corporate earnings. After interest costs associated with a subordinated debt placement in March and dividends paid on convertible preferred stock, the Texas contribution totaled 22 cents per share," he said.

Employees Recognized

Two employees of Carolina Telephone in Tarboro, Gary M. Morris and Rudy A. Allsbrook, recently completed 20 years of service with the company.

Morris is a master sergeant in the U.S. Army Reserve, where he teaches nuclear and chemical warfare defense at the 3286th USARF school in Garner. He and his wife, the former Gloria Alston of New Bern, have two daughters. The family resides in Greenville.

Allsbrook, a training supervisor in the company's marketing department, also received a service emblem signifying his years with the company.

Allsbrook serves as personnel officer of the 690th maintenance battalion of the North Carolina National Guard. He is married to the former Janice Carson of Tarboro and they have one son.

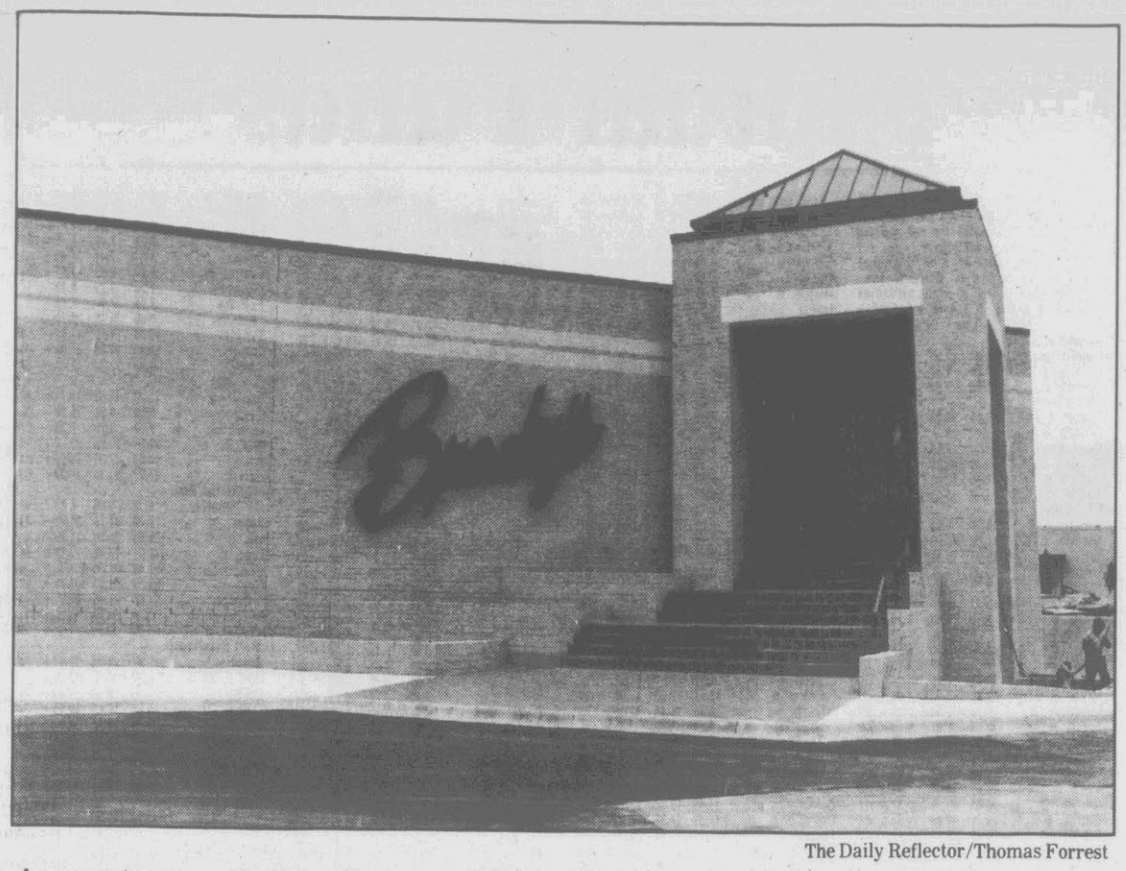
Brody's Phase One Ready



The Daily Reflector/Thomas Forrest

The Daily Reflector/Thomas Forrest

Interior touches include Italian marble, laid in checkerboard pattern, accented with columns

The first phase of Brody's renovation and expansion project at The Plaza is scheduled to open Wednesday, according to H.J. Brody, president of BrodyCo. Inc.

"Our phase one addition opens this Wednesday and we will show the public what the future will look like for the Brody stores," the spokesman said.

Brody said the addition is part of the company's expansion and renovation project that will add approximately 30,000 square feet of selling area, an increase of nearly 76 percent.

The addition at The Plaza store will also house the operations center for BrodyCo. stores, according to Brody.

Designed by Fisher-Gordon Architects of Washington, D.C., and being built by Miller and Davis of Greenville, the total store will encompass 83,000 square feet upon completion. The full project is scheduled to be finished in October, Brody said.

"We are going to gut the entire store with the exception of the men's store, Brody said. "We will not leave anything standing or reuse any of the previous fixtures at all.

"The main gist of what we wanted to do was to open the whole store up. It was too closed, with too many nooks and crannies. With our new addition, we now have a much larger space for our existing departments and the new ones we have added," he said.

Brody said that a high vaulted ceiling and back-lit opaque light panels will give the store an open feeling. Italian marble, laid in a checkerboard pattern and accented with huge, circular columns, will provide a major visual attraction, he said.

Specially designed fixtures within each department are the mainstays of Brody's merchandising scheme, he said.

New departments opening on Wednesday will be a Boy's 8-20 shop, a dress and fur salon, a ladies outdoor shop featuring weekend sportswear, a gift area, a handbag department, an athletic shoe area, a men's shoe department and a jewelry and accessories department.

Old departments with a new look opening Wednesday include the children's area, ladies, lingerie, coats, dresses, suits, better sportswear and shoes.

New departments scheduled to open in about three weeks will be a children's furniture department and a fragrance and skin-care salon. Brody said other new departments will open in October.

J. Scott Johnson, operations manager for BrodyCo. Inc., has announced that Betty Lou Brock of Winterville will be Brody's store manager at The Plaza.

The store will employ over 100 full-time and part-time associates.

BrodyCo. Inc. of Greenville and Brody Brothers of Kinston have operated stores in eastern North Carolina for over 50 years.

Other locations are at the Carolina East Mall, Twin Rivers Mall in New Bern, Golden East Crossing in Rocky Mount, Vernon Park Mall in Kinston, Jacksonville Mall in Jacksonville and Berkley Mall in Goldsboro.

Browning, Whichard On Wachovia Board

Robert R. Browning and D. Jordan Whichard III have been elected to the Eastern Regional Board of Wachovia Bank and Trust Co., according to William C. Baggett, regional vice president.

Browning is the senior partner in the Greenville law firm of Browning, Sams, Poole, Hill and Hillburn. He is a 1957 graduate of Duke University and received his law degree from the University of North Carolina School of Law in 1966.

In addition, he attended the National Judicial College in Reno, Nev., in 1974 and 1977. Browning has been involved in various civic and community programs as well as bar and legal organizations, receiving the honor of Who's Who in American Law.

He is a 1979 graduate of the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, receiving a degree in industrial relations and political science. He also attended the Young Executives Institute at Chapel Hill in 1987.

Involved in various civic and community organizations, he currently serves as president of the Boys Club of Pitt County and is a director of the Pitt County United Way and Children's Services of Eastern North Carolina.

Plaza On Schedule

The Plaza mall expansion project is proceeding on schedule while leasing efforts continue in full swing, according to John M. Kane, president of J.M. Kane & Co., the firm responsible for the development, management and leasing of the shopping center.

The $35,000,000 expansion project, slated for completion in the fall, will double the center's size, making it over 500,000 square feet and one of the largest shopping centers in eastern North Carolina, Kane said.

"Our leasing efforts have been very successful to date. During the past 18 months, we have successfully shown retailers why Greenville is one of the best locations throughout the state and the country to open new stores," he said.

Kane said that by industry standards, The Plaza will reopen with an exceptional number of stores leased and ready for business.

"We'll have our grand reopening 80 percent leased and are confident that within the next six months, we will be 90 to 95 percent leased," he said.

As of July 15, 60 stores are listed on the center's roster. In addition to Belk, Brody's, JCPenney, Roses and existing specialty shops, other stores planning to open include: Afterthoughts; Burlington Shoes; Cargo Furniture; Carlyle & Company Jewelers; D.A. Kelly; Dollar Tree; Footlocker; Jewel Box; Just Kids; Shoe Show; S&K Famous Brands Menswear, and Szechuan Garden.

Other leases are in various stages of negotiation and will be released as they are finalized, Kane said.

Kane said the local economic impact of The Plaza expansion will include an increase in sales volume from approximately $35,000,000 in 1987 to an estimated $70,000,000 in 1990. Jobs provided by the expanded retail facilities will increase by approximately 500, he said.

How Aggressive is Aggressive Enough?

If you set aggressive goals for your investments, you'll be interested to know about our Aggressive Growth Portfolio, a model portfolio of recommended securities designed for more aggressive, risk-tolerant investors. Since its inception, the portfolio has achieved a compound annual rate of total return of +15.8%.* This is almost 20% ahead of the Dow Jones Industrial Average which had a compound annual rate of total return of -3.75% over the same period. If that's aggressive enough for you, call Interstate/Johnson Lane at 355-2226.

* From inception June 30, 1987 through December 31, 1988. Past performance of the model portfolio is neither assurance of, nor guide to, future performance. DJIA returns include dividends but are not compounded; the difference this makes in the comparison is insignificant in our opinion.

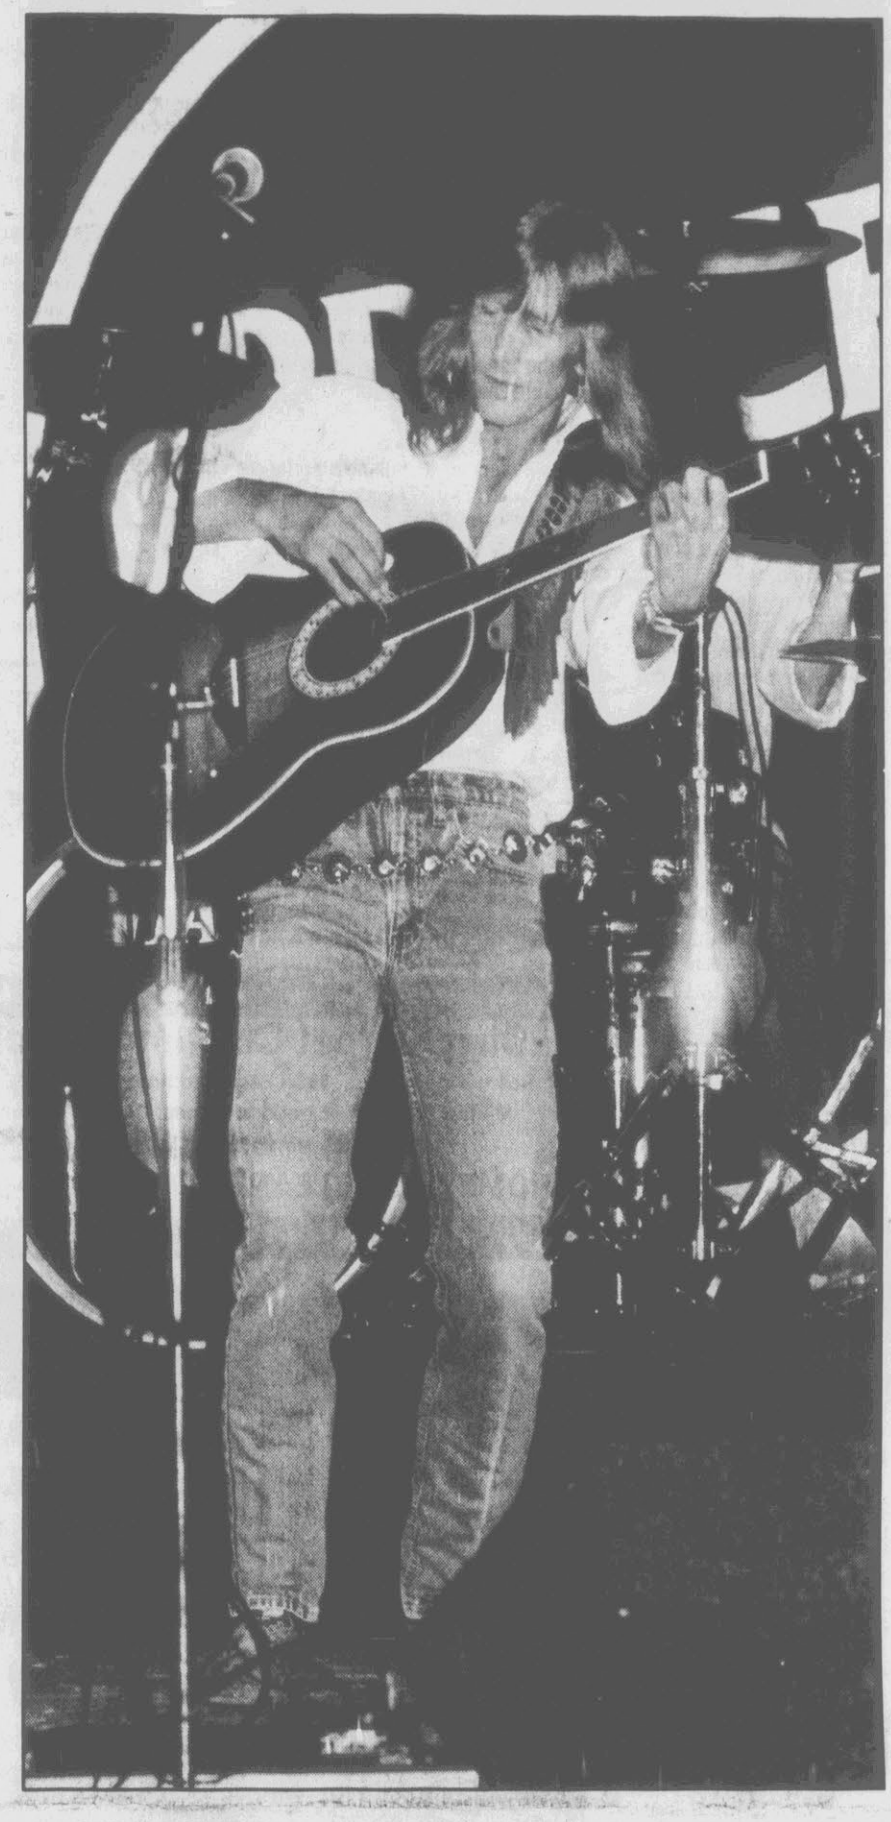
His Love For The Music Keeps Him On The Road



Lonelyrider

The Daily Reflector/Shannon Wolfe

By John Bare
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

About 10 years ago, singer Bruce Frye won a contest and was whisked away to Nashville, Tenn., where he performed at Opryland, met country music king Roy Acuff and recorded a couple of songs on Acuff's label.

Since then, he has sung solo or with his band at clubs, honkytonks and parties from Georgetown to Georgia and all across North Carolina. On Monday night at 9 p.m. he will bring his country-rock and roll show to the Ramada Inn lounge in Greenville for the third of four appearances scheduled there this month.

Playing a bar in Greenville may be a few rungs below the glitter of Nashville. But, for Bruce "Rooster" Frye, 34, it's a chance to entertain. He can swivel his hips, pick his Ovation guitar and sing his heart out for three or four hours.

"I have a ball," he said in an interview in Greenville. "I've been really blessed with being able to make my living at something I enjoy so much.

"As far as loading equipment and all that stuff. That's basically what I feel like I get paid for. I get paid for driving all day to the show, setting up and tearing down. The playing is for me. That's what I do for fun. The other part is work. When I'm onstage, that's the big time."

Al Melofsky, corporate food and beverage director at the Ramada Inn, said having Frye in the lounge has increased his business four-fold on Mondays.

The motel has put Frye's name on its marquee and plans to leave it there a while, he said, so customers will begin to link Monday nights with Frye's entertainment. He said the motel owner wanted Frye for 35 consecutive Mondays, but previous commitments will not allow him to play that many straight weeks.

"We had a good crowd here Monday night," he said. "As far as Bruce goes, I would love to have the guy here every Monday night. He's a real professional. He plays with the crowd and plays whatever they want. He just hangs in there. When Bruce sees them going, he just stays with them. He may go an hour or an hour and a half without stopping."

Guitarist "Too Tall" Tommy Evans, a member of Frye's Lonelyrider Band, will join Frye at the Ramada Inn for a two-man show. Their mix of country and rock has been well-received, Melofsky said, and patrons have applauded the songs and taken to the dance floor.

Judy Parker, manager of Hard Times, said last Wednesday was the first time she has had Frye play her club. She has seen him at other shows and been impressed with how he communicates with the audience.

"I like him musically and the way he is with the audience," she said. "It's more of a personal show instead of just a band up there playing."

Despite such accolades, sometimes it's been a little tough for Frye to make his peace with the results of his first trip to Nashville, and his decision not to follow some advice to take it slowly.

"Stick around Nashville a couple of years. Get to know some folks, and then pitch your songs," Frye was told.

"I might should have done that back when I was a little younger," he said of the experience. "It was just that the writers out there are so consistent in writing, and I'm so inconsistent. I write when it hits me, and that's not very often.

"There are people out there that work during the day and peddle their songs and are just getting by, sleeping on couches. It's hard road to go, man. There's a lot of starving musicians in the world, but there's a whole bunch in Nashville. A whole bunch."

The idea of two or three years of shaking hands and writing songs in an effort to grease the gears of success didn't wash with the Rooster, who still keeps his home base at his parents place in Aberdeen.

So, he left Music City on his own terms, opting to book his own shows and perform for a living instead of trying to eke out a life in Nashville as an unknown songwriter.

"If I can't sing, I don't want to be in this business," he has said of that first Nashville experience.

Still, he said he usually returns to Nashville for a few days each year. In fact, he has four new songs he hopes to peddle next month in another trek to Music City, but it's a chore he performs quietly.

"I've got four songs ready, and I'm going to go out there and start pushing them," he said. "I go about once a year. It's a part of it that gets a little discouraging — go out there and get turned down and come back. I don't talk about that much."

Frye first took to the road 12 years ago. Now, several customized vans and a Ford Bronco after he first started singing, he has a solid following in local clubs and plays three to six times a week.

Several shows each month include his Lonelyrider Band, made up of Evans, formerly of Doc Holiday; base player Robert Kearns, formerly of Sidewinder, and drummer Jason Patterson, formerly of Nantucket. The three worked previously as rock and roll musicians, and the shows with the full band take on much more of a rock and roll sound than Frye's solo or duet performances.

This month, six of Frye's 23 scheduled shows are in Greenville. In addition to the four Mondays at the Ramada and the Hard Times show, he played a night at Grogs.

Other stops this month include Myrtle Beach, High Point, Raleigh, Southern Pines and Wilmington. The pace of 23 shows a month translates to over 275 shows a year. It takes a unique performer to play night after night, mostly in bars.

"I always try to put on a good show, no matter what my state of mind is .... I've been wanting to do some more festival-type playing. It gets old sometimes playing just in bars," he said. "I like to play festivals and stuff where there are people that are really listening that I can entertain without having to entertain over top the noise.

"Still, I like bars. I've always liked bars. I don't know why. I imagine I'll be playing in bars the rest of my life."

As with other local performers, he often hears the question of what's a talented guy like you doing a little place like this?

"Everybody seems to perceive you in a position better than you are," he said. "That always makes me feel good when people say that. If they've got some way to put me in that position, I'm all for it."

Frye's music is his living. He has no second job. He spent a couple of weeks in college way back, he likes to say, and he says his non-musical talent is as an electrician. Though he gave up the day work years ago when it grew impossible to stay up all night singing and then wire houses the next day, he's quick to claim he "can wire anything" when equipment breaks.

He also sings nearly anything.

For the requests shouted from the crowd, there are Jimmy Buffett or Beatles tunes. He plays cover versions of country hits, Steve Earle's rock-country "Copperhead Road," oldies such as "Stand By Me," and a few Elvis Presley standards. He also has more than a dozen original country songs.

"We do from Waylon and Willie to the Beatles to Bon Jovi, and that's a wide variety," he said.

Melofsky said Frye's versatility is one of the keys to his popularity, but his musical range has been a positive and a negative. It's tough to label.

"The songs (I have written) that I've been trying to push down there (in Nashville), they've said either are not country enough, or too rock and roll for country, or not commercial enough, or this and that. So I've been — not trying to change my style of writing that much — but I have been writing some more radio sounding songs, especially for this album," he said.

Frye has hair down his back and a gold guitar-shaped earring with a diamond stud dangling from his left ear. He wears snakeskin boots, a gold chain and often sports suede chaps when performing. Not only that, his band members have longer hair than he does.

"I've had people ask me: 'If it meant your career, would you cut your hair or not? If they offered you a record contract if you cut your hair?' I really don't know. I like my hair long. I always have," he said.

New Tape Planned

By John Bare
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Despite the wide variety of music Bruce Frye and the Lonelyrider Band performs, the strongest theme in Frye's original music is traditional country.

The style will continue on his second cassette tape production, Frye said. He is currently working on the project in a Raleigh studio between performance dates. With fewer shows scheduled next month, he hopes to get more time in the studio.

The production will feature 10 songs from Frye. He said he is holding on to his own style, but he is working to develop "people-oriented songs" relating to ideas or feelings to which everyone can relate.

The lyrics of one, "Barefoot and Running Free," were written by a friend, and Frye said the song always touches someone in the audience with its lines of spending time at a grandmother's house.

"Every show I play it ... young and old come up and say: 'That made me think of my grandmother, I appreciate you playing that.'"

Another new song he wrote, "The Last Prayer," is about a death row inmate's final words with God.

"It's just something I had a dream about, how it would feel to be locked up knowing you would die. It has to be an awful feeling," he said.

The new tape will also include two songs written and sung by Lonelyrider Band guitarist Tommy Evans, who formerly played with the Doc Holiday band. The cuts, "Misery Train" and "You Met Your Match," are a mix of up tempo country, rock and rhythm and blues.

"Tommy is a talented individual," Frye said. "People need to hear his music."

His first album-scale production effort, a cassette titled "Me and Grandma," which came out in 1986, contained songs that followed familiar country themes of heartbreak, women and introspection.

From "Sunlight," included on his first tape, he sang of waking up disoriented in a motel room by sunshine beaming in through a rip in the curtain.

As I look into the mirror, the man I see

The red in my eyes may soon grow

Boardroom Meets Will Determine Fates Of Two Comedy Channels

By Michael Hill
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

LOS ANGELES — In a few months it is going to be dueling comedy networks on cable as HBO and MTV plan to get into the all-comedy, all-the-time television business.

But it turns out that more than timing is involved in this standup-to-standup showdown. The battle of the comedy channels illustrates beautifully how business decisions determine so much of what is shown.

HBO used to be the all-movie network before it started adding sports and series and documentaries. MTV used to be the all-music network before it started adding game shows and comedies. Now they both promise us all-comedy programming.

HBO is calling it's comedy channel, The Comedy Channel, of all things. MTV is calling its comedy channel Ha! HBO says its will start in November. MTV says its will start April Fool's Day, 1990.

In interviews here, executives of both companies said virtually the same things about their plans. Their research showed that comedy was the last remaining specialty niche left on cable. Both had the exact same ambition for their channel, that whenever you had your television on, you would sit there thinking that there was something funny happening right now on the respective all-comedy channel and be tempted to tune in to find out what it is.

The major difference concerned basic programming philosophies as, ironically, HBO seems to be planning a channel that will do to comedy what MTV did to rock music. It is to be based on short clips, many taken from movies of the past and present, others filmed for the channel, with comedian-hosts linking them together with bits that sound much like what what MTV's video-jockeys do these days.

MTV's plans, meanwhile, sound more like an HBO offering as its channel will be programmed with longer form shows, sitcoms and comic movies and the like, many taken from existing stockpiles, some eventually produced for the channel.

So, you figure, great, the more the merrier, bring on the laughs and, if there isn't support enough for two comedy channels, let the funniest one win.

But that's not the way it's going to work. The bottom line is that viewers are going to have precious little to do with which channel survives. We'll never really have a test of which programming philosophy is best.

That's because the survival of these two networks is going to be decided not in the laughs coming from America's living rooms, but in some very unfunny meetings in the boardrooms of cable television companies across the country.

Ted Turner defined the battlefield when, in talking about the future of his channel TNT, he said, "The name of the game in cable for a network is penetration."

Penetration in the cable game refers to the number of homes you can get your channel in. You have to realize that the vast majority of cable systems are all filled up, there are no channels left. So, to get a new channel on, you have to convince the cable operators to kick another channel off.

How do you do that? Well, one way is to convince them, in part by drawing press coverage in events like this, that the public is going to clamor to see your channel and thus its presence on your system will make it easier to attract and keep subscribers.

But that's the hard way. The easiest way is to own a bunch of cable systems yourself. HBO is owned by Time, which is apparently about to merge with Warner, and together they own systems with 5.5 million subscribers. MTV's parent company Viacom owns systems with just one million subscribers. That will be the base for the start of the fight.

HBO is obviously one of the heavies in the cable business and it will weigh in with all its power and prestige as it tries to convince cable operators to take its channel.

The main target of these efforts, which will probably include all sorts of special financial deals to insure that The Comedy Channel is the only all-comedy offering even on systems that have plenty of room left, will be the big MSOs, the multiple system operators, those handful of cable companies that own the bulk of the systems in the United States. It is these big MSOs who will decide the fate of the all-comedy channels, not the viewers.

MTV will counter HBO's moves by offering those MSOs part ownership of its comedy channel, the same move that kept Turner's operation afloat when it ran into financial problems. In large part because so many big cable operators had a piece of the action, TNT debuted with the largest penetration of any new cable channel in history.

HBO has never offered cable operators a piece of its business action, but if Viacom and MTV start getting some operators to sign aboard, that possibility will certainly be considered.

Further muddying the waters is that fact that many cable operators are upset at Viacom for suing HBO on behalf of its movie channels, Showtime and The Movie Channel, charging illegal restraint-of-trade type practices to keep its large lead in the pay cable movie channel business. Such charges raise the specter of federal regulation over cable, anathema to the MSOs whom Viacom is now making nice to on behalf of Ha! HBO will take full advantage of that situation.

One might think that the four-month headstart that The Comedy Channel is getting would be a major advantage, but if Viacom can sign up enough co-owners, that won't make any difference. Indeed, the MTV officials were questioning if HBO would have enough systems signed up by November to even make it feasible to start its channel then.

So, there might be enough laughs for two comedy channels, there might even be enough advertisers, but, since there are not enough open channels on cable systems, there will probably only be one survivor of this business battle.

And you probably thought comedy was supposed to be funny.

Don't Pray Too Hard To Wed Man Who Wants To Be Priest

Dear Abby
Abigail Van Buren

Dear Abby: I am a 27-year-old Roman Catholic woman who is very much in love. I've been seeing "J" for seven months, and he is the love of my life. We are both divorced and have known each other for six years. (Actually, my marriage was annulled and so was his.)

The problem: It's been J's lifelong dream to become a priest. I am willing to let him go if this is his calling, even though I love him more than anything in this world.

I am leaving the choice up to "J" as to whether he wants to give all of his love to the Catholic community or to me. He is uncertain at this point, but he says he will let me know as soon as he makes up his mind.

Meanwhile, I sit here wondering if I should plan for "us" — or should I date others. Please help me with this very important decision. — Praying For Love In Massachusetts

Dear Praying: Don't pray too hard to marry a man whose lifetime dream has been to join the priesthood. (If he should decide to marry you, every marital problem would probably be met with: "I should have become a priest.")

In the meantime, I think you both should have some counseling before even considering marriage. And in response to your intelligent question, "Should I date others?" I vote with a resounding "yes!"

Dear Abby: My wife is a health freak who spends in excess of 25 hours a week doing aerobics.

In addition to that, she has turned our home into a place of business. She is a professional masseuse and gives massages to both men and women.

We have two children under 6 years of age. What effect do you think it will have on these children seeing their mother working behind closed doors? — Concerned Father

Dear Concerned: Your children will not be adversely affected by seeing their mother working behind closed doors — unless someone puts the idea into their heads that there is something murky or evil going on behind those closed doors.

Dear Abby: What should I do? My mother is 84 years old and in relatively good health, but she likes her privacy. She has asked me to let our relatives know that she does not want any overnight visitors. I am the only relative in town, and I take care of my mother's needs.

One niece from out of town called my mother and asked if she and her husband could come stay with her for the weekend. Of course, my mother couldn't say anything but "yes," but she told me afterward she regretted saying "yes," and now she feels trapped.

What should I do about these inconsiderate relatives? At 84 years of age, I think my mother's wishes should be honored. She can't help it if she's a "softy." — Mary In Ohio

Dear Mary: Since your mother is a "softy" and you are the designated "heavy," call the niece who invited herself and disinvite her — diplomatically, of course. Tell her that your mother would enjoy seeing her and her husband, but please, no toothbrushes, nighties or pajamas.

If you would like to write to Abby, send your letter to Abigail Van Buren, P.O. Box 69440, Los Angeles, CA. 90069. For a personal, non-published reply, enclose a self-addressed stamped envelope.

Flag Doesn't Need Our Rhetoric

At Wits End
Erma Bombeck

When I was 9 years old and my sister was 16, we used to tap-dance at VFW clubs and an occasional neighborhood "beer garden" for a few bucks. They were "tough rooms" in the sense that few people wanted to see two scrawny kids in sailor costumes, accompanied by an out-of-tune piano, shuffle off on "The Good Ship Lollipop."

My mother came up with a showstopper. We would do a routine with a patriotic theme. The whole number would be done with our arms to our sides. For the big finish, we would lift our arms to unfurl a flag that was attached to our shoulders by buttons and to our wrists by rubber bands.

It worked. Drunks who had been passed out for three days saw those flags, staggered to their feet and applauded wildly. We were a hit.

The routine and the costumes were retired soon after they first appeared because someone told my mother we were "desecrating the flag" by wearing it. We folded away the red, white and blue and got a new routine on roller skates, until my sister fell and broke her arm.

I was not to hear the word "desecrate" until years later when I was a young mother. I was walking through the house one day and heard someone following me. It turned out to be my legs, which had grown into tree trunks the size of California redwoods. I took my thunder thighs to a YWCA exercise class held in a nearby church. We worked out a few feet from the altar. One day the minister peeked his head in the door, saw all of those postpartum bodies in shorts and was horrified. He told us we were "desecrating" his altar. This brought my promising career of touching my ear to my knee to a screeching halt.

"To desecrate" means to divest of a sacred or hallowed character. I couldn't have done too much damage to the flag or the altar. The flag is still flying, and the altar is still standing, as far as I know.

It has been heartening the last few weeks to see people galvanize and come to the defense of the flag in the wake of the Supreme Court's decision to allow the burning of the flag as a form of protest. But I'm not sure the flag needs our rhetoric.

The things that have survived in this world are those that have weathered the arrows of criticism and the stones of abuse. This flag has been shot at, torched, spit on, trampled, worn as an accessory, and carved in hair on the heads of teenage boys at $16 a crack. Recently it became controversial because its flapping all night long drove neighbors crazy. If some nut sets fire to one, it's still going to rise from the ashes stronger than before.

In retrospect, I don't think my sister and I desecrated the flag by wearing it. The real sacrilege was wrapping ourselves in the symbol of this country just to get a cheap rise out of people -- "using" the flag to milk applause and get attention.

Nobody over the age of 9 would do that today, would they?

Scaasi An Overnight Sensation (Again)

CONNOISSEUR

Fashion designer Arnold Scaasi, who created Barbara Bush's gown for the inaugural ball, has become an overnight sensation — for the third time.

Scaasi was a bright new star on the fashion horizon in the mid-1950s when he started designing, according to an article in the current issue of Connoisseur. He re-entered the limelight when he made the bold move to concentrate solely on couture.

Scaasi — the reversed spelling of his original last name — was born in Montreal and spent some of his teens in Australia. He studied in Montreal and Paris, then followed Christian Dior's advice and moved to New York to work for Charles James, who taught him how to construct clothing.

Scaasi started on his own around 1955, a time of elegance.

"There was a great surge of luxury," Scaasi said. "The artisans of Europe were bringing back fashion. The fabrics were beautiful — cut velvets, warp-printed taffetas — and if you had an eye, the more imaginative you were the more it was accepted.

"One of my first collections was built on the theme of butterflies. One of the mills in Europe wove special butterfly materials just for me."

By 1959 his base of operations was an elegant Stanford White town house, where he designed luxurious women's ready-to-wear. As he grew more successful he added less expensive ready-to-wear, costume jewelry, men's and children's clothes.

In the 1960s, when many New York custom houses closed down, Scaasi gave up his ready-to-wear lines to concentrate solely on couture. The best known example was the see-through black silk jumpsuit he made for Barbra Streisand to wear at the 1969 Oscar ceremony.

In the 1980s, Scaasi's clientele has grown with the revival of formal affairs and an increasing group of women devoting time to meticulous dressing. He began a ready-to-wear Scaasi Boutique line in 1984 and has branched out into furs and wedding dresses.

Scaasi's designs are blends of cut, fabric and color. His dresses are constructed, most often in variations of the hourglass shape, with long torsos highlighting skirts held away from the body in asymmetric curves, bustles, poufs, trumpet shapes and a pouf over trumpet he calls a brioche.

Scaasi sometimes combines fabric, juxtaposing different textures, as in the dark sapphire velvet and satin dress he made for Barbara Bush.

More often he uses extraordinarily decorative imported materials. His favorites are velvets and chiffons applied with diamante traceries, silks woven with self-embroidered three-dimensional appliques, gilt brocades, re-embroidered laces and bold, pretty floral prints.

Scaasi's colors tend to be clear and bright, pairing shades such as apple green with rose, orange with shocking pink, orchid with flame, sapphire with chartreuse or amethyst with citron. When he uses black, it is often highlighted with silver, and his whites frequently are combined with brilliant sunshine hues.

Easy-Care Washable Silk Is Light And Comfortable

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Washable silks have become a popular fashion option the past couple of years. Not only do they look luxurious and feel good, their upkeep won't ruin your budget during hot, humid weather when extra care is needed.

"Washable silk is not only convenient to care for — it is light and comfortable and perfect for traveling," says designer Regina Porter.

Be warned: Read the manufacturer's care label before washing any silk garment. While silk comes in an array of colors and prints, it absorbs a great deal of dye which may be released when the fabric is washed. Unless recommended otherwise by the manufacturer, printed silks are safer if dry cleaned.

If the manufacturer suggests hand washing, test the fabric first to be sure it won't bleed.

Wet a small corner of the item in cool water and then place it on a piece of white fabric. Press it with a warm iron. If the silk leaves no color, then it can be washed.

Silk should be washed by hand in lukewarm water with a gentle liquid detergent. Rinse well, roll in a towel to squeeze out wetness and hang to dry. Dry away from the sun or direct heat. Press on the wrong side with a warm iron while still slightly damp.

If water staining occurs, dip the garment completely in cool water, dry to damp and re-iron.

Silk fabrics that are not washable should not be washed, according to the International Fabricare Institute, because the fiber may be weakened. Silks which should always be drycleaned are taffeta, chiffon, brocade, georgette and organza. Silk ties and printed scarves also should be dry cleaned.

Silk should never be allowed to become too soiled because dirt can break down the fibers. Be sure that your dry cleaner knows that is a silk garment, and if it is stained, tell him what caused it.

Light Colonial Homes Carefully

By Barbara Mayer
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Most people would never put a fluorescent light fixture over a Victorian dining table. Yet, more common errors such as hanging a chandelier over a colonial dining table are just as ludicrous, says Roger W. Moss.

It's also incorrect to hang a small colonial chandelier in an entryway, says Moss, author of Lighting For Historic Buildings, published by the National Trust for Historic Preservation ($12.95). The softbound book describes how early American homes were lit and lists suppliers of authentic reproductions.

"Chandeliers were almost never used in homes in the colonial period and certainly would not have been put in a foyer where every time you opened the door, the candles would blow out," says Moss, executive director of The Athenaeum, a research library in Philadelphia.

To install lighting that could never have actually been used is to subtly undermine the character of a room, he says, and once you become informed, the flaws become glaringly obvious.

Moss, who teaches in the preservation program of the University of Pennsylvania, says one of the most common mistakes is hanging a reproduction 'gas' chandelier from a chain. In the old days a gas chandelier hung from a pipe, which was the conduit for the gas.

Another common mistake is to place period lighting so high that interesting details are lost. Lower the fixture.

A very suitable treatment would be to place wall sconces at either side of a mirror. Mirrors and gilt were common because their shiny surfaces reflected the small amount of artificial light.

Don't hang a chandelier in a New England colonial with low ceilings if you want to create an authentic atmosphere.

"You need ceilings of at least 10 feet for a chandelier to look right," says Moss, adding that normally chandeliers and gaseliers were hung 6½ feet from the floor.

There was no artificial lighting in colonial bedrooms. People either did without or carried a candlestick. Today practicality dictates some lighting, but use wall sconces rather than a ceiling fixture. Bedside lamps should be understated. One of wood and tin would be in keeping with the room's feeling.

Although there are numerous reproduction fixtures, the era from 1800 to 1840 is not well represented. During this time whale oil lit the homes of middle- and upper-income Americans, and light fixtures were based on neoclassical designs then popular.

On the other hand, those who are furnishing a typical post Civil War American farmhouse are in luck. They will find many reproductions as well as authentic kerosene fixtures.

Kerosene lamps, lanterns, sconces and chandeliers were used well into the 20th century, Moss says.

Hochuli-Stoneman Couple Wed

MRS. HOCHULI

SIMPSON — Peggy Stoneman Edwards and Robert Henry Hochuli Jr. were married at 11 a.m. Saturday in Salem Methodist Church. C.B. Owens officiated the double-ring ceremony.

The bride is the daughter of James V. and Barbara Stoneman of Homosassa Springs, Fla. The bridegroom's parents are Mr. and Mrs. Robert Henry Hochuli of Asheboro.

Presented by James V. Stoneman, the bride wore a Victorian-style, tea-length dress with layered lace and embroidery and lace surrounding the high neckline. She carried a bouquet of roses and lilies.

Jeff Morris of Brunswick, Md. was best man. Ushers were John Deal of Charlotte, brother-in-law of the bride, and Greg Eller of Myrtle Beach, S.C.

The bride attended Pitt Community College and is employed at Quixote Travels. The groom received his undergraduate and law degrees from Wake Forest University. He is an attorney with Taft, Taft and Haigler.

The couple made a wedding trip to the Virgin Islands.

Cotton Is The King Of Cool For Summer

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Hemlines rise and fall, styles change, designers come and go, but there is one constant in the fashion world: Wear cotton for maximum comfort in a heat wave.

"Cotton has superior ability for breathability and absorbency," says Mary Louise Hawkins of Cotton Incorporated. "Because of its structure, cotton absorbs body moisture and wicks it away from the skin.

"Body moisture and vapor is absorbed in the interior of the fiber through the various layers or walls and brought to the surface where it evaporates. Anyone who has ever used a cotton towel is familiar with this."

Hawkins, senior director of fashion marketing for the association of cotton growers, says that loose fitting silhouettes allow the body freedom of movement, enhancing comfort. She also says that white is traditional for summer because of its ability to reflect heat, as opposed to darker shades, which absorb color and retain heat.

Dr. Norman Hollies, a researcher at the University of Maryland, says the best rule of thumb for hot weather dressing is to use common sense.

Hollies, director of the university's Comfort and Perception Research Lab, says that making the most of the body's evaporative action is vital to keeping cool. If you have to be out in the heat, he says, it's better to be in slow motion to allow air to circulate around you. Standing still does not allow enough air to circulate.

Dressing to match regional weather conditions is also important. Hollies says that in areas of strong sunlight and low humidity, light colored, protective clothing works best. For hot and humid areas, loose, open knits and short sleeves are important. In all cases, Hollies recommends all-cotton T-shirts next to the skin.

The armed forces also recommend loose-fitting cotton clothing. Norbert Rodil, chief of life support clothing systems and equipment branch for the U.S. Army Natick Research Development and Engineering Center, which tests the comfort of army combat clothing, says that both field and laboratory research has shown that for tropical conditions loose-fitting cotton clothing is the best option for reducing heat stress.

Take Good Care Of Swimwear

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Whether you buy it early spring or during end-of-season sales, today's swimwear is a small investment and deserves the same degree of care as the rest of your wardrobe.

Most swimwear is made of spandex, a synthetic stretch fiber, in combination with polyester, nylon or cotton, and should be rinsed and hung to dry after each wearing, according to Cornell University's cooperative extension.

Although spandex is not affected, sunlight weakens polyester, nylon and cotton. Light colors reflect the rays while dark colors absorb them, so swimwear made of light color fabrics probably will last a little longer.

Chlorine in swimming pools eventually will cause spandex to lose its elasticity and cause yellowing. Yellowing and discoloration also may be caused by body oils, perspiration and sunscreen and tanning products. Most synthetic fibers, particularly polyester, are oleophilic, absorb oils easily and hold onto them with a firm grip. Left alone, they eventually will produce permanent yellowing and color change.

The longer oily soils are present, the more difficult it is to remove them.

Unlike most synthetic fibers, cotton is not resistant to damage from microorganisms. Cotton will rot if attacked by mildew, especially in warm, damp conditions. Even if there is no cotton in your suit fabric, thread, zippers and elastic may support the growth of mildew.

Romance Novel Characters Change With Times

By Dana Kennedy
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BOSTON — They still have titles like Tender Conquest, Prince of Fire, and The Lion's Lady, but the characters of romance novels have undergone a subtle transformation, say the women who create them.

Heroines, once repressed, virginal and more likely to surrender to sex than initiate it, are now likely to be more assertive on the job and in the bedroom.

Even more alarming, for those who like their women meek and virtuous and their men rough-and-ready, is the unmistakable sensitivity creeping into what was once the brooding, dangerous hero of the past.

"The men used to be misogynistic, sadistic types, now they're sometimes sweet, nice guys who own hardware stores," said romance writer Anne Stuart Ohlrogge, 41, of Greensboro, Vt., who has published 32 titles in 15 years.

Exhaustively descriptive sex, taboo in the romance novels of the 1940s and 50s, is said to have peaked in 1986. Predictions for the 1990s hold that such novels will return to gentler feelings and familial values.

But traditionalists can take heart, according to some of the nearly 1,000 romance writers, editors, agents and booksellers who gathered in Boston this weekend for the ninth annual Romance Writers of America national conference.

Some staples of romance book fare, they say, will never change.

Couples will always live "happily ever after," said Laura Parker, 40, of Dallas, who has published 16 books.

The only concession to more complex times is that "there are some loose ends that don't get tied up," Ohlrogge said.

And the love scenes are as likely to contain as many smoldering looks, heaving bosoms and ripped bodices as before.

"Graphic, flaming love sex is always a turn-on and once the characters start, there's nothing an author can do to stop them," said Helen Mittermeyer, 59, of Rochester, N.Y., who sold the first of her 34 books in 1980.

Mittermayer said her career flourished during the Reagan era, although it was a time when "Reagan stifled everything," and work and careers took precedence over matters of the heart.

"I think we have to push against the tide," said Mittermayer. "We're not going to be smothered. There's been this macho, bogus career attitude. But there's real feeling under all that."

Some writers at the convention said they have to ignore politics and reality to concentrate on creating the kind of characters they want.

"I didn't want to read Women Who Love Too Much," said Ohlrogge, referring to a recent self-help book for women. "I was afraid it might hurt the way I write."

Romance book editors at the convention said the industry has changed along with its authors and books.

Hilary Ross, associate executive editor of New American Library, remembers the years when "Gothics were big and we had all those student nurse books. And I can recall when we couldn't write about Australia or the Middle Ages. Now the Middle Ages are in."

Gothics are now "out" and heroines are more likely to be doctors than nurses, Ross said.

"Ten years ago, we had heroines who would faint," said Ross. "Now they're much more feisty."

FBI Agent Tells Mystery Writers About The Dangers Of Personal Ads

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — An FBI agent told a mystery writers' convention that personal ads proliferating in the nation's media are meccas for the Ted Bundys of the world.

Suspense writer Mary Higgins Clark is at work on her next thriller: Loves Music, Loves to Dance about a young woman who answers a personals ad and disappears.

And in its August issue, New York Woman tackles the dark side of personals and dating services. While these forms of socializing are often described as safer than the singles bars, the magazine says "the entire organized dating industry thrives free from regulation by any consumer agency or group; in New York State, in fact, there are more laws affecting the operation of a pizza parlor than a dating service."

Linda Fairstein, chief of the Sex Crimes Unit of the Manhattan district attorney's office, says assaults resulting from personal ads are "severely underreported, even more so than date rape, which itself is underreported." Yet, she says, "the issue comes up virtually every time I lecture to civic groups and rape crisis centers."

Even the rare victim who does report a crime gets little satisfaction. Fairstein says her office has never successfully prosecuted a sex crimes case stemming from personals, and publications carrying the ads are reluctant to pull them based on rumor rather than evidence.

Still, she says, the crimes should be reported. "Although they are difficult to prosecute, only by trying some will we win some."

Short of not reading — and not answering — ads, Fairstein says there are some things that can be done to protect oneself from a stranger. "It is unwise for the first meeting to occur in a private place," she says.

Meet in public. Don't immediately disclose your last name or your home address. Once you have established some trust, continue to play the sleuth. "Be suspicious if he says you can't reach him at work," Fairstein says, warning that a lot of planning can precede any encounter.

In one example in the magazine, the sexual attack didn't occur until the third date — in the woman's home. The attacker told his victim he had placed his ad under an assumed name, corresponded with her through an answering service and an address secured for the purpose and paid for the ad with a money order that couldn't be traced.

One bright note on the dark side of becoming involved with the unknown: Fairstein says serial killers like Ted Bundy generally strike at random rather than after meticulous planning.

Webster's Doesn't Have A Listing For Antidisestablishmentarianism

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CLEVELAND — Two words not in Webster's, or most other dictionaries, are "antidisestablishmentarianism" and "supercalifragilistic...etc."

The first never existed, and the second is nonsense created for the film "Mary Poppins," but writers continue to complain that they can't find them in the dictionary.

The verb "disestablish" is a legitimate word. One meaning is "to deprive (a state church) of official sanction and support of the government." The derived noun, "disestablishment," is also legitimate. According to Dr. Victoria E. Neufeldt, editor in chief of Webster's, there was a disestablishmentarian movement in Victorian England.

Dating Game Winners Rarely Find Romance

By Susan Baer
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — The young man and woman sit side by side in the romantic rooftop lounge atop the Hotel Washington. It is their first trip to Washington. The sun is about to set on this clear summer evening. But what's most clear is that there's more fizzle in the 7-Up she's sipping than there is between this couple.

This is a match in desperate need of a few electrons.

It's not that they dislike each other. "He's fine," she says of the dream date she chose on the "All New Dating Game."

It's just that romance seems as likely to ensue on this July night as a snowstorm.

"What time do the clubs close?" asks Jay Polk, 22, a sophomore at the University of Southern California who is determined to have a grand time on this Friday night and the rest of the weekend.

"Party, party, party!" says Tisha Cruse, 18, rolling her eyes and giving off "You touch me, you die" vibes.

"I have four days here to set a record," says Jay, the former Bachelor No. 2 who won Tisha's heart by saying something about having a nice car. "I want to go home and tell my friends I tore up D.C. Look for me on the 6 o'clock news!"

Tisha shakes her head.

Chaperon Fran Bisharat, a sweet and proper 57-year-old woman who's seen much of the world as a professional "Dating Game" fifth wheel, has little to worry about with this couple as far as what the show calls "morality."

"The big question?" says "Dating Game" promotions director LeeAnn Platner, referring to the vast interest in their couples' sleeping arrangements. "That's not something we have a hard time with. Couples usually never want to stay together. We figure we're doing well if we get them through the weekend and they're still speaking to each other. Usually, by the end of four days, everyone is sitting in a different part of the plane, saying, 'Give me a headset and leave me alone.' "

"Tell me about this club again," says an effervescent Jay.

"I'm tired. I wanna go to bed," says his date.

They decide to change clothes before hitting the town for dinner and dancing on this Friday night, the first night of their four-day "dream date."

Tisha has been given room 806, a glorious suite with a walk-in cedar closet where her clothes — all black and white — are hanging.

She is a petite, attractive student from the San Fernando Valley in California who wants to be an actress and an attorney and plans to attend California State University and study English in the fall. Last year she went on another game show, "Triple Threat," and won $4,200. This time she won a weekend with Jay.

Is true love in the cards?

"Oh, no. I have a boyfriend," she says matter-of-factly while curling her hair. She describes her boyfriend, Chuck, as "big and buff" and says Jay doesn't know about Chuck. Chuck, for his part, isn't worried about the date with Jay because "he saw the show on TV," Tisha says. "He thinks Jay's a nerd. He knows he's not my type. Jay is kind of loud. I kind of like more quiet guys. But they can't be boring."

Tisha and her drama class were in the audience of "The Newlywed Game" when members of the audience were asked to sign up for "The All New Dating Game." Tisha was later called in for an audition. "You have to act peppy and exciting and make small talk. They don't want boring people." On March 23, she taped the show that aired in May.

"I wasn't really paying that much attention to the guys," she recalls. After all, here she was on national television — and she does want to be an actress. So she's chatting away, laughing with the audience, flirting with "Dating Game" host Jeff MacGregor, when it's time to choose a bachelor for her dream date.

She choses Bachelor No. 2., Jay Polk, 22, of Los Angeles. He's kind of cute with his flat-top hair cut and tiny stud earring and bright smile. Very well dressed in baggy pants and a rayon shirt. Not bad, she's thinking. But then he starts dancing and acting goofy and she's thinking, "Ooooh myyyy God."

"They were all nerds," she says. "I did not have any good choices at all. I was mad."

But Tisha, who had just turned 18, would be off to beautiful historic Washington, D.C., for a four-day all-expense paid trip with chaperon — and with Jay Polk.

Jay went on the "Dating Game" looking for "adventure, TV exposure, something different" and a free summer vacation. He has friends in the Washington area and hopes to hook up with them. But more than anything, he's just after a good time. "When I die, I want to be able to say to God, 'It was a bad last day, Jack!' And he's gonna say, 'Jay, I'm glad you enjoyed it. Sit down and tell me about it.' "

But right now, they'd all like to sit down to dinner. The trio takes a subway out to a southwestern restaurant where the owner gives them dinner on the house.

Talk is a little strained at first, but Fran, a laid-back California type, wife of a retired physician and mother of four grown children, does her best to draw them out.

Soon they're talking goals and relationships and even homelessness and abortion — "I'm a deep issues person," says Jay — when a customer stops by the booth. "You guys won the 'Dating Game'? Do you know Monty Hall?"

Tisha's eager to leave, so they skip dessert. After a silent cab drive to a dark and funky New York-style night club, the couple hits the dance floor. Fran stands to the side, holding Tisha's pocketbook, as women in black leather bustiers and men with green hair walk by and a video of amoeba-like cells and organisms plays on a big screen.

Jay is unenthused with the "house music" so, by midnight, they're heading back to the hotel. Tisha and Jay end the first night of their dream date by watching "Major League" on pay TV in his room. But no, he doesn't get to first base. Tisha nearly falls asleep and walks zombie-like back to her room.

On Saturday, they take a sightseeing tour of Washington, all four of them.

"If I were Tisha, I might be a little mad," says Fran of the surprise arrival. Jay and Nichelle, after all, are walking up the Lincoln Memorial steps hand-in-hand. Jay offers his other hand to Tisha, but she politely declines.

The truth of it, however, is that Tisha is relieved. "I didn't want him to put the moves on me."

So if Tisha is happy, and Jay is happy, then Fran is happy. That's the chaperon's goal, after all, to keep the couple smiling. She does what they want to do, when they want to do it. But she's the meal ticket, the bank. If either of them goes off on their own, the "Dating Game" no longer foots the bill.

Romance or not, this date has turned out to be a smashing success, Fran believes. To her delight, their dinner conversations have been substantive — more talk of abortion, as well as discussions of interracial dating, poverty, religion, politics.

Nichelle heads back to New York Sunday morning, leaving the original trio see a film, discuss it, and end their weekend Monday afternoon just as it began — with drinks at the hotel's rooftop terrace. There still aren't any sparks flying. But now there's friendship.

"I thought it was going to be really rough," Jay says. "At first Tisha was more along the lines of 'I don't know him so I'm not going to talk to him.' " But they both warmed up.

"I thought it was going to be real bad," Tisha says, "but it was nice." Washington turned out to be "rad." Jay turned out to be a pretty intelligent and funny guy. And when they flew back home — sitting together — they didn't even ask for headsets.

Trifari Plans To Introduce Paper Jewelry

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Trifari is introducing paper jewelry — cutouts that you can try at home with various hairstyles, necklines, fashions — before buying.

The paper punchouts called Tryons include a necklace, pin, button earrings and drop earrings, all in gold color. The company suggests doublefaced tape to secure the earrings and pin.

Tryons, which can be reused, will be launched in the September issue of a national women's magazine. They also will be available at department store jewelry counters nationwide by mid-August, according to company spokesman Tricia Lee.

"Although we have only four pieces, we feel that women will be able to get a sense of what works," says Lee.

By the way, Lee says pearls will be big news again this fall, and pearls with rhinestones are expected to be big sellers for the holidays.

"Black will also be a very strong coloring for fall-holiday," she says.

Californians Plug In To Fax-Food Connection

By L.N. Halliburton
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

LOS ANGELES — In finger-on-the-pulse Los Angeles, people are ordering their mussels marinara and their chopped liver, hold the lettuce, without having to utter a word. They are zapping their heart's desires, in printed form, over to some restaurant through that infinitely mysterious new piece of high technology — the fax machine.

What's the big deal? When did using the "voice" phone — having to actually speak to another human being — become too "difficult?" (Voice phone: that's what a couple of fax-track restaurateur's called their "older" technology.) Don't get me wrong, I love terrific new, socially sanctioned toys. But do they make life more user-friendly? Or is faxing-for-food just the next fashionable surplus capitalist tool?

As a child, I was mad about the Automat — I thought it was the most modern thing in the world. Then, one day, I saw a cartoon of it in Mad Magazine: behind all those tiny windows and revolving glass doors stood hundreds of employees just waiting to fill the empty slots with franks and beans, noodles and cheese and baked custard in little brown pots. I thought, "This is the new technology?" I remember that revelation now when I hear the fax freaks claim, "It's so easy, so much faster than talking to someone."

In case you're wondering whether the basic time-is-money types around town are faxing their lunch orders in before they arrive at restaurants (in order to avoid wasting time), my random, non-scientific study shows that fax is being used exclusively for pick up or delivery orders to go.

"There's no point in using fax for meals eaten in the restaurant, only for outgoing food," says Bob Spivak, owner of The Grill (with no take-outs) and The Daily Grill (with plenty of them) in West Los Angeles. "I know this from my experience with people who phone in wanting to order in advance. They're in a hurry and think this will help but it never works out right. Timing is intricate: If the meal's ready and the customer hasn't arrived, they end up with cold or overcooked food."

Still, Spivak plans to offer meals by fax at his establishment sometime in the near future. So does the Border Grill, Cabo Cabo Cabo, Junior's and the about-to-open Carnegie Deli; Hugo's and the Columbia Bar and Grill are in the "good-idea-we're-talking-about-it" stage.

Because fax machines are currently in the $800-$3,000 range, the great majority of them are owned by businesses, not individuals (leave Donald Trump with his car fax and yacht fax out of this, he doesn't have to order lunch.) This means faxing is most prevalent at lunchtime, when eaters have access to machines.

Business people familiar with a favorite restaurant's menu send in orders collectively with colleagues, often several times a week. Tutto Pasta, in Los Angeles, owned by Silvio De Mori, serves about 15 large fax orders a day to those in their downtown jewelry district neighborhood. If someone wants a special order, like Angelo's Caesar salad topped with warm chicken breast Milanese, instead of say, the penne with mushrooms and garlic listed on the menu, they have to call in on the voice phone. Tough Luddite luck.

Indeed, the Big Fax Debate seems to be about whether the machines add — or extinguish — the personal touch, whether they provide more service to the customer, or less. Kate Mantilini, the self-described "roadhouse of the 21st century," has been doing fax orders for about four months. The people there say they think it give clients an "easy way to go."

Easy? Only if you know how to follow the rules: Fax orders are only for lunch take-out. The only time you may place your lunch order is between 9 and 11 in the morning. (How do you know, before you've had your coffee, if you'll want meat loaf at 2?) You have to remember to write down whether you have an oven or a microwave, if you're ordering hot food and what time you'll want delivery. All this means you can't change your mind after eleven o'clock. "No telephone orders — thank you," their menu states.

Never Put Up With Nasty Headwaiter, Author Says

By Robert M. Andrews
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Nothing — not a soup spill, a burned filet mignon or a cockroach crawling through the salad — turns a restaurant meal into a disaster quite like a nasty headwaiter, says professional diner John Campbell.

His advice: Don't take it sitting down. Complain to the manager. Or simply walk out.

"The degree of humiliation to which a repulsive maitre d' subjects his patrons and their guests can be the most unforgettable part of the dining experience," says Campbell. "Unfortunately, it happens in some of our better restaurants."

Campbell has been rating lodgings and restaurants for the American Automobile Association for the past 15 years. He says restaurants in New York doubtless are the worst for sneering, snarling headwaiters whose unlucky customers forgot to slip them a sawbuck.

The bearded, Australian-born Campbell, 52, says the hapless victims of sadistic headwaiters "can just get up and leave" if they've been seated next to the kitchen door, insulted and forgotten.

"You don't have to eat bad food, and you don't have to be stuck suffering this self-punishment," he said in an interview.

When the atmosphere turns brutish, Campbell takes the offending headwaiter aside and asks, "What seems to be going wrong here? What is my problem and what is your problem?"

If the situation can't be resolved through quiet reasoning, he says, "I would leave." But don't forget to complain to the restaurant's owner or manager.

"He has a desperate interest in the health of his property, and he will listen," Campbell said. "If you tell him you had an unpleasant experience with Monsieur Jacques, he's likely to say, 'Really?' and Monsieur Jacques might not be there next time."

Campbell, who is based in New York, is one of 60 full-time, professionally trained field representatives who are rating restaurants for AAA, the 30-million-member motoring and travel service organization based in suburban Falls Church, Va.

At a news conference Thursday, AAA officials announced they are going nationwide with their "diamond" rating service, which awards five diamonds for the highest-ranked luxury restaurants to a single diamond for informal, family-style eateries serving "good but unpretentious dishes."

No fewer than 72 rating guidelines, developed with the help of Cornell University's School of Hotel Management, will be applied to nearly 7,000 restaurants annually in the United States, Canada, Mexico and the Caribbean for inclusion in AAA's 1990 tour books.

Officials said that means Campbell and his colleagues will eat an average of 10 to 12 meals in different restaurants every week. Each will be scored on everything from parking lots to table flowers, from the taste of the hors d'oeuvres to how discreetly the waiter delivers the bill.

"It is one of the most onerous jobs in the world, dining out for a living," said Thomas R. Crosby, the AAA's managing director for national travel.

Campbell, interviewed over lunch at a five-diamond French restaurant in downtown Washington, agrees that all that eating and drinking can be a health hazard. When time came for dessert, he passed up the chocolate mousse for a dish of strawberries.

Some of his fellow judges have quit because of gustatory burnout, he says, and one turned into an alcoholic after eight years on the restaurant circuit.

"You can drink so much and eat so much good food — and bad food — that you become poisoned, and your health starts to deteriorate," Campbell said.

"You have to jog a lot and swim a lot. You have to be picky. You learn to stop eating after one bite. You don't have to clean your plate, no matter what your mother said about all those starving children in China."

Expert Says Let Kids Experiment With Own Snacks

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Children should be allowed to experiment with their own ideas and tastes in snacks, even though what they like might make many adults — and other children — queasy.

"Preparing snacks can be a creative learning experience for children, and there are many nutritious foods that children can prepare with the help of an adult," says Rosemary Althouse, author of "Investigating Science with Young Children."

Althouse is professor of early childhood education at Winthrop College in Rock Hill, S.C., and director of its Macfeat Early Childhood Laboratory School. She says she has seen some strange concoctions from preschoolers.

One young boy wanted to try pureed lettuce.

"He put his lettuce and a little water in the blender and said, 'Turn it on high,'" Althouse says. "Later, he said, 'It looks like green slime.'"

He and his young colleagues drank the "slime," but classmates who had not been party to the preparation wanted no taste of it.

When Althouse asked the children what they would stir into mashed potatoes, they suggested butter, salt, cheese — and peanut butter.

Pro-Wolf Forces, Hunters Face Off Over Plan To Reintroduce Wolves

SPORTS AFIELD

There is a plan to reintroduce wolves into the northern Rockies, including Yellowstone National Park, which has pitted pro-wolf forces against some hunters.

The Northern Rocky Mountain Wolf Recovery Plan, according to an article in the current issue of Sports Afield, was developed under the Endangered Species Act to remove the northern Rocky Mountain wolf from the endangered and threatened species list.

This would be accomplished by maintaining for three consecutive years a minimum of 10 breeding pairs of wolves in each of three areas: northwestern Montana, central Idaho and the Greater Yellowstone Region.

Supporting wolf recovery, eminent wolf biologist David Mech said:

"Yellowstone Park is a place that literally begs to have wolves. It's teeming with prey; it used to have wolves. All the species that were there originally should be restored.

"Wolves would add an element to the ecosystem that would help restore it to a more natural state, allowing the public to better enjoy the park."

Others fear that big game herds surrounding the park may be diminished by emigrating wolves and that hunting opportunities may be curtailed as federal land is closed to protect wolf habitats.

"I don't want to see hunting controlled by the federal government, which is controlled by population centers other than those in Wyoming," said Mike Axsom, executive director of the Wyoming Outfitters Association.

Surveys in the Rockies have demonstrated similar polarization. For example, 82 percent of the visitors to Yellowstone in 1985 felt that wolves belonged there. Only 6.3 percent of Wyoming Stock Growers, who might be economically affected by wolves, wished to see the animal return.

Groups supporting wolf recovery include Defenders of Wildlife, the Audubon Society and the National Wildlife Federation. Indeed, 66.8 percent of the members of the Wyoming Wildlife Federation, a group made up largely of hunters, favored the introduction of wolves into Yellowstone National Park.

Opposing groups include the Idaho, Montana and Wyoming Stockman and Woolgrowers Associations, the Foundation for North Anmerican Wild Sheep and various outfitter associations.

These organizations won the support of the Wyoming congressional delegation, which in 1987 pressured the Department of the Interior not to proceed with an Environmental Impact Statement for wolf introductions into Yellowstone.

Both sides would benefit from learning more about the wolf, a large wild dog that weighs, on average, less than 100 pounds. It lives and hunts in packs, roaming hundreds of square miles in pursuit of its favorite food — deer, elk, moose and caribou.

It's OK For Fido To Kiss Kids

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

OKLAHOMA CITY, Okla. — It's OK for kids to kiss Fido and to get a wet tongue on the cheek in return.

"There are some bacterial organisms in animals' mouths," says Dr. Gary White of the University of Oklahoma Health Sciences Center, "but the number is low compared to those in people."

"The chances of getting a disease, orally, from an animal would be much less than the possibility of getting one from a human."

White, director of animal resources and associate professor in the department of pathology, says that to allay fears of pet diseases, owners should take their pets to the veterinarian for yearly checkups.

BETSY DRAKE LEWIS' DECORATING TIPS

NO ROOM IS COMPLETE WITHOUT "CASE GOODS"

Perhaps at some time you overheard someone in the furniture industry talking about "case goods", and like many people who are not in the furniture business, you wondered what they were talking about.

While the general public doesn't use the term "case goods", those in the business use it often--and so you'll know, it means furniture like cabinets, bookcases, storage pieces, desks, and generally all wood furniture pieces that are not upholstered.

The important thing to anyone furnishing their home is to do a good job combining upholstered and wood furniture in a room.

To have a beautifully decorated home, you should strive for both harmony and contrast, in various ways, and the right mix of upholstered and wood furniture is one way to help achieve this.

Another thing to take advantage of in wood furniture is to use the color and texture of the wood itself to help a room decoratively. And for added interest, if it's done right, you can, of course, use different woods within the same room, if you desire, for good effect.

The main thing is, we want you to be as careful in choosing wood furniture, or "case goods", as you are in selecting your upholstered furniture--and know that both are important to the overall look. And for all your furniture needs, we invite you to come see us. Through July 29, all items in inventory are priced near or below cost.

THE ROAD TO SUCCESS IS FILLED WITH STRESS. THE DRIVE TO WORK NEEDN'T BE.

No one ever said that getting to the top would be easy. But getting to the office is an altogether different story.

At least, if you're getting there in the 1990 Acura Integra.

Slip behind the wheel of the new Integra and you'll see exactly what we mean. Bolstered front bucket seats offer excellent support and comfort. An expansive "greenhouse" design makes for extraordinary visibility. And the interior's controls and gauges are easy to reach and easy to see.

All of which will help you make more of the Integra sedan's other interior. The one that contains a powerful 1.8-liter, dual-overhead cam, 16-valve engine. An engine inspired by Formula One racing technology.

So stop in for a test drive of the 1990 Acura Integra. It could give you a whole new outlook on going to work. Not to mention going home.

Greenville's Landscape Efforts Praised

If you are among those who have expressed enjoyment of the beauty of flower beds, flowering shrubs, and trees in many nooks and corners of Greenville, you're right on target with many others of your fellow citizens.

Mayo Allen, director of Greenville's Public Works Department, said "this year, we have been praised like never before on the beauty of these landscaping efforts in Greenville. The program has been under way for several years, but this year is the first time that much of the earlier work is really showing up to good effect, and we've also been able to put out more things than ever before.

"The star performer behind these beautification efforts," Allen said, "is Ken Jackson. Ken's the superintendent of our city buildings and grounds department. He's truly dedicated to making Greenville a more beautiful place and works hard at it, even to the extent of having his own nursery for the beautification effort."

Funds for the program are limited, "mainly a small amount from the city's building and grounds division. That money is substantially supplemented by donations from various clubs and agencies to take care of a particular spot," Allen said.

The hard work of planting, watering, weeding and maintenance, Allen said, "is carried out by a three man crew. The beautification work is only a part of the work assigned them, such as mowing large acreages of public land.

"It's good to see what can be done with nature to make our city more attractive," Allen said.

Industrial Landmarks On New British Stamps

By Brian Hickman
BRITISH POST OFFICE

Treasured landmarks of the technological change which marked Britain's 18th century industrial revolution are to be found in many parts of the country.

The Royal Mail on July 4 issued a set of stamps with examples of this pioneering era in the nation's progress.

As 1989 is officially Museums Year in Britain, it is fitting that the stamps should feature industrial archaeology — covering four main sites of historical significance.

• The 10 pence stamp features the world's first iron bridge, built at Coalbrookdale in Shropshire, by the ironmaster Abraham Darby III. Spanning the River Severn, the 100-foot bridge — cast in 1779 — has been preserved by the Ironbridge Gorge Museum and attracts thousands of visitors each year.

The bridge was built to serve the Coalbrookdale furnaces, the first to smelt iron ore with coke instead of charcoal, a fuel which at the time was becoming scarce.

This discovery of the value of coke as a replacement fuel spurred a massive expansion of the iron-working industry in such areas as South Wales, the Midlands and South Yorkshire.

• The 27 pence stamp in the series features the tin-mining industry in Cornwall which has left an indelible mark on the landscape of this part of Britain. The engine house ruins on St. Agnes Head, depicted on the stamp, epitomise the derelict mines which line the Cornish Coast.

For years tin plate was mainly used for cans, but many are now made of aluminium. Although new industrial uses for tin have been found, they do not require such huge amounts. Demand for tin is now met overseas and, after 3,000 years, tin-mining in Britain is virtually extinct.

• The 32 pence stamp pictures cotton mills at New Lanark in the Scottish region of Strathclyde. These are an outstanding industrial monument to the enlightened attitude taken by employers to the welfare of their workers.

The New Lanark mill became a showplace in their time. A spinning mill was opened there in 1786, taking on many dispossessed crofters, who lost their homes in the Scottish Highlands. They were provided with family housing by their new employers at the mills.

• Completing the set is the 35 pence stamp, which shows the spectacular Thomas Telford's 1,000-foot Pontcysyllte Aqueduct near Llangollen in Wales. This engineering achievement of the canal age carries part of the Shropshire Union Canal over the River Dee.

Canals were the arteries of the industrial revolution, bringing coal and other staples to the manufacturing areas and distributing finished goods. The first canals were opened in the mid-18th century and a network of waterways spread across the country, until the coming of public railways in the 1830's spelt an end to their growth.

The stamps are designed by Ronald Maddox who has undertaken a number of previous commissions for the Royal Mail, including stamps on village churches and historic buildings.

Art By Grassroots Artists Shown In A Summer Exhibition At NCMA

By Anna Upchurch
N.C. MUSEUM OF ART

RALEIGH — Over 100 creations by 19 grassroots artists who live in North Carolina will be on view this summer in "Signs and Wonders: Outsider Art Inside North Carolina" at the North Carolina Museum of Art.

Paintings, sculptures and assemblages on themes ranging from pop culture to patriotism, from earthy to exotic, and from nature to the supernatural will be on view in the exhibition from Saturday through October 1.

"Over the past 25 years, there has been a growing recognition that significant works of art are being created outside the institutions of the contemporary art world," said David Steel, co-curator of the exhibition. "This extraordinary art, sometimes labeled 'outsider,' is made by seemingly ordinary individuals without formal art training, who, intitially at least, often have no conception of themselves as artists or of their creations as art."

Steel said that until recently, this art has been largely ignored by scholars, critics, museums, galleries and art publications because many of the artists live and work away from urban centers and are ignorant of the established institutions of the art world.

However, museums and galleries have increasingly begun to exhibit outsider art, particularly from the Southeast, which seems to be an especially fertile region for generating and nurturing it.

To prepare the exhibition, co-curators Steel and Roger Manley traveled the state for a year visitng outsider artists and collectors, gradually compiling a list that grew to include the names of more that 100 artists.

Manley, a folklorist and photographer, has been involved with outsider art for over 15 years. The result of their research is the exhibition "Signs and Wonders" and an accompanying 110-page,illustrated book with the same title that is the first to document outsider art in North Carolina. Its publication is set for August 31.

Many Unknown

Steel said the works included in the exhibition indicate the extraordinary quality and variety of outsider art in North Carolina, which he and Manley found throughout the state in both urban and rural areas. They narrowed their list of 100 artists to 19 for the exhibition in order to show a number of works by each artist and suggest the range of his or her creativity.

Many of the artists are unknown beyond their communities and a small circle of their admirers, and very few have ever had their work exhibited in a major art museum.

The range of materials used by artists is extensive: wood in the form of trees, logs, roots, plywood, driftwood; stone; cement; animal teeth, claws and hooves; false eyelashes; metal; tar; chicken wire; whiskey bottles; automobile paint; oils; wax crayons and cardboard.

The range of subject matter is equally wide, including human figures — two U.S. presidents, a piano player, a "bad girl," Elvis Presley, bathing beauties, businessmen and women with briefcases, animals, biblical themes, dreams, a butcher shop, allegories, apocalyptic visions, airplanes, abstract compositions, and other themes that are indescribable.

The exhibition has been planned to coincide with "Treasures of American Folk Art from the Abby Aldrich Rockefeller Folk Art Center," on view in the Main Exhibition Gallery at the museum through August 20, to give vistors the opportunity to consider outside works with their more traditional counterparts in the Rockefeller collection.

Buying Fever In The Art Market

By Gary Langer
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Fine art prices are going, going, gonzo this auction season, soaring through the ceiling when the gavel comes down. But even as the art market booms, some experts fear the picture may not stay so pretty.

"A lot of people are being taken in by this sort of fever," said George Goldner, a curator and top buyer at the J. Paul Getty Museum, the nation's richest. "The longer it goes on, the more it resembles a bubble that one day will burst."

For now, the inflation is inescapable, as even Goldner will attest: He paid $32.5 million for a 16th century painting last month, more than tripling the record for an Old Master at auction. And all that glitters is not Goldner's:

—Records were set for more than three dozen modern, post-modern and impressionist painters at sales in May, including $47.9 million for a Picasso self-portrait — an 800 percent increase from its 1981 price. Only one painting has done better, a Van Gogh that drew $53.9 million in 1987.

—An 18 century American bookcase desk sold in May for $12.1 million, quadrupling the record for a piece of furniture. The reported buyer was neither museum nor gallery, but a Texas financier, Robert M. Bass.

—A Catskill Mountains landscape sold for $8.25 million, tops for an old American painting. A Frederic Remington bronze brought $4.4 million, a new height for American sculpture. "The Birds of America" etchings by John James Audubon sold for $3.96 million, an increase of $2 million in less than two years.

Such prices are reflected in thousands of lesser sales, rippling through the art world in a delicious shudder, at least for sellers. Sotheby's auction house, the world's biggest, gaveled off $1.8 billion in goods last year, up by $400 million from 1987. And this year is far bigger.

"It's awesome. It's mind-boggling," said Milton Esterow, publisher of ARTNews magazine. "Art has become an international currency. The market has exploded. It's a revolution, a renaissance, like we've never seen before."

But the glee is not universal. Art experts say the soaring sums are pricing many museums out of the market, leaving them unable to expand or upgrade their collections. Some say auction hype has falsely inflated some prices.

"'It's simple and easy: Buy something and you'll get rich.' This is the message of the auction rooms," said Goldner. "It's the wrong message and people eventually are going to get hurt by it. There will be a day when the market will shake out, and bad modern paintings won't be worth what people are paying for them today."

The reason for art's price explosion is simple: Because of worldwide economic good times, many people have much more money. As some of that cash migrated to art, prices rose — drawing finer art to the market and raising prices even higher. And 1986 federal tax changes limited the benefits of donating art to museums, putting even more works on the market.

Additionally, said Harvey Katz, an art market analyst for the investment firm Salomon Brothers Inc., the auction houses have improved their marketing techniques. Catalogs are less intimidating, major works are sent on tour before sales, bidding is simpler and telephone bids are accepted.

"As the auction houses have become more accessible, they've captured more and more business," said Katz. One result: Christie's auction house is rumored as a takeover target. And Sotheby's is splitting its stock, two for one.

But Goldner said auction house promotions can misrepresent the value of some pieces, particularly costly modern art. And he called Sotheby's practice of lending money to buyers a dangerous trend that inflates the market and increases the perception of art as a speculative commodity.

John Marion, chairman of Sotheby's North America, maintained that buyers still are primarily collectors drawn to certain works, not investors seeking profit. And he said marketing, ultimately, does not create sales.

"What weapons do we use to get people into bidding? They do spend real money," Marion said. Sotheby's willingness to loan buyers some of that money, he added, is no different from a bank's loan to a home buyer.

Another concern is the art boom's effect on public museums, many of which are finding themselves unable to afford major purchases or pressed to sell some works to private buyers, which removes the art from public view.

Such was the case for the Walker Art Center in Minneapolis, a modern art gallery that sold the $8.25 million Catskill landscape, by Frederic Edwin Church, to finance purchases of modern works. The painting was on loan to the Minneapolis Institute of Art, which had it on display. A dealer bought it.

"This was an issue we wrestled with long and hard," said Erwin Kelen, a board member of the Walker and its acquisitions committee chairman. "Is it our responsibility to keep a 19th century painting on public view, even if not in our institution? Or to maximize acquisitions for our own collection?"

While the latter concern prevailed, Kelen said, the painting likely will outlive its new owners and be returned to a museum. Goldner, however, said he feared the growing concept of art as a commodity would work against that outcome.

"The sad fact is that a lot of people who call themseves collectors today are investors," he said. "And instead of giving their collections toward the end of their life to a museum to put on display, they see their apotheosis as being a successful sale at Sotheby's."

Tarboro Exhibition Of Art By N.C. Native Frank London

TARBORO — An exhibit of works by North Carolina native Frank London is on view in the Hobson Pittman Memorial Gallery of the Blount-Bridgers House in Tarboro. The exhibit includes 27 oil paintings, watercolors and drawings of the American realist. It will be on view until Aug. 27, with a reception for the public on Aug. 8, from 6:30 p.m. until 8:30 p.m.

London was born in Pittsboro in 1876, attended the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill and received his formal art training at the Pratt Institute and the William Merritt Chase School of Art in New York City.

From 1904 until 1923 he designed textiles and stained glass. Examples of his stained glass are in the Belmont Chapel, Cathedral of St. John the Divine in New York City and at churches in Pittsboro and Raleigh.

He lived and worked in Paris from 1923-25. During this period and later in New York City, he worked closely with artist Bradley Walker Tomlin, who wrote the catalogue for London's memorial retrospective show in 1948.

London won the Diplome d'Honneur at the International Exposition of Beaux Arts in Paris in 1927, and had a number of one-man exhibits at Montross Gallery in New York. His work was included in the 16th Biennial Exhibition of Contemporary American Oil Paintings, Corcoran Gallery of Art in Washington, D.C., and in the early 1940's was exhibited in Chapel Hill and Charlotte.

After his death in 1945, the Woodstock Art Association presented a memorial exhibition that travelled from New York to the Southeast, to museums in Raleigh, Chapel Hill, Charlotte and Macon, Ga. This exhibition, held in 1948-49 marks the last major exhibit of London's work in North Carolina in four decades.

According to Meade Horne, director of the Hobson Pittman Memorial Gallery, Marsden London, only son of the artist, offered the collection of his father's work for an exhibit in North Carolina. Horne accepted and contacted other museums across the state to share the exhibit. From Tarboro, the exhibit will travel to North Wilkesboro, Durham, Hiddenite, Dallas, Wilmington and Fayetteville.

The exhibit has been funded in part from a grant from the Visual Arts Section of the North Carolina Arts Council and from the Institute of Museum Services, federal agency.

The exhibit is open to the public free of charge. Museum hours are Monday-Friday, 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. and Saturdays and Sundays from 2 p.m. to 4 p.m. The museum is located at 130 Bridgers St. in Tarboro, one block east of Main St. For more information call, 823-4159.

Book News
FROM SHEPPARD MEMORIAL LIBRARY

By Meredith Foltz
SHEPPARD MEMORIAL LIBRARY

New nonfiction in the adult department at Sheppard Memorial Library include "You Must Remember This" by Jeff Kisseloff. This oral history of Manhattan from the 1890's to World War II is arranged by neighborhoods (Lower East Side, Harlem, Greenwich Village, etc.) Everyday life and people — famous, infamous, and ordinary — are described in reminiscences of work, play, food and drink, shopping, politics, entertainment, and crime.

"Born For Liberty" by Sara Evans. The author surveys the history of women in America, focusing on the institutions and activities developed by women to afford themselves a public voice. Her analysis of women's roles and powers extends from pre-Columbian native American women to the women of the 1980s.

"Our Kind of People" by Jonathan Yardley. Yardley, a book critic and newspaper columnist, recounts the 50-year marriage of his parenfs Helen and Bill. His parents' detailed documentation of the major events in their connected lives provided Yardley with the material for an entertaining memoir of his family's life through many years.

"Beyond IBM" by Lou Mobley and Kate McKeown. A long-time employee of IBM notes the highlights of that company's development into an industry leader. He then postulates a "telecratic" style of management for the present and future of the business world. Unlike outmoded autocratic and bureaucratic management systems, a business teleocracy is grounded in corporate purpose.

"Second Thoughts: Former Radicals Look Back at the Sixties." Peter Collier and David Horowitz gather 20 other former activists to re-evaluate the political and social ideas and actions they advocated two decades ago.

These reformed radicals report the course of their personal disillusionment with leftist philosophy. They test their old and new opinions on an old conflict (Vietnam) and a new one (Nicaragua).

"A Country Made by War" by Geoffrey Perrett. The author interprets America's unparallelled success in its wars as evidence that the nation's alleged unpreparedness for war is a myth. Beginning with the American Revolution, he describes our country's soldiers and weapons and the military's position in our society.

Umbrella Show

NEW YORK — "Rain of Talent: Umbrella Art" is an exhibit of over 30 functional cotton umbrellas transformed by potters, sculptors, ceramists, architects and fiber artists.

The show, currently on view at the American Craft Museum, 40 West 53rd St., New York, examines how artists, known for their work in a wide variety of media, when presented with the challenge of working with a specific object, solve both practical and aesthetic problems.

The result is a visual fantasy and whimsical display of 35 handpainted umbrellas by a diverse range of artists including Viola Frey, Kim MacConnel, Robert Venturi, Betty Woodman and Claire Zeisler.

An installation by Phillip Maberry will surround the umbrellas that will be suspended in the main stairwell of the museum. Organized by the Fiber Workshop, Philadelphia, the exhibit will be on view through Sept. 24.

Thomas Hart Benton Naval Art In An Exhibition At Chrysler

By Roger Clisby
THE CHRYSLER MUSEUM

NORFOLK, Va. — Two series of paintings by Thomas Hart Benton are now on view at the Chrysler Museum, Olney Road and Mowbray Arch, Norfolk. (Admission and parking are both free. Museum hours are 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Tuesdays through Saturdays, 1 p.m. to 5 p.m. Sundays, closed Mondays).

Titled "Thomas Hart Benton: Paintings in the Collection of the United States Navy," the exhibition honors one of America's major 20th-century artists and documents his long-standing association with the U.S. Navy.

Commissioned by the Abbott Laboratories in 1943 and 1944, the two series that comprise this exhibition of 25 paintings have been loaned to the Chrysler Museum by the Navy Art Collection of the Naval Historical Center in Washington, D.C.

The exhibition, in the Norfolk Foundation Small Changing Gallery of the museum, opened July 7 and continues through Sep. 7.

Benton began his association with the Navy as a sailor in Norfok and Cape Charles in 1918. His enthusiasm for the World War II art commission is evident in the vigor and energy found in the drawings and watercolors presented here.

Benton was an artist who came out of the heartland of America and returned to the Midwest after studies in Paris and New York and brief periods painting in the abstract styles of Cezanne and Stanton Macdonald-Wright.

Born the son of a respected lawyer in Neosho, Mo., in 1889, Benton began to draw at an early age and eventually was allowed to study at the Chicago Art Institute. His trip to Paris in 1908 brought him into contact with the avant-garde movements of the early 20th century and taught him the depth of commitment needed to struggle through the learning process.

It was during a stint in the Navy in Norfolk in 1918 that he ". . . left for good the art-for-art's sake work in which he had hitherto lived" and turned to objective nature.

The mechanical contrivances of building the new airplanes, the blimps, the dredges, the ships of the Norfolk base drew him to a realistic style that was to gain him a major place in the history of American art.

After serving in the Navy, he returned to the Midwest, where he developed a sinewy figure stule that was well-suited to the powerful narratives depicting the history and legends of a nation trying to come to grips with social concerns and modern folk traditions.

Along with Grant Wood and John Stuart Curry, Benton led the art movement now known as Regionalism, a passionate depiction of the Midwest during the 1920s and '30s. Country fiddlers, river baptisms, revival meetings, hoedown and honky-tonks flowed from his brush, as did the factories and farms of middle America.

Benton did not shrink from taking on large thematic murals that captured the spirit of the U.S. as he saw it. During his life, he painted historical epochs and vast panoramas filled with vignettes of America. Two of his most famous projects were done for New York clients: The "America Today" series, painted for the New School (now owned by Equitable Life Assurance Society), and "The Arts of Life in America" series commissioned by Gertrude Vanderbilt Whitney for the Library of the Old Whiteny Museum of American Ar.

The ceiling panel from the Whitney series, "Unemployment Radical Protest, Speed," is in the collection of The Chrysler Museum and is on view in the second floor hallway opposite the Art Deco ceramic display.

In this attenuated work, the charging diagonal figures slide across the composition in a dizzying spiral. The painting illustrates the wild compositional and thematic challenges that Benton faced in his search for methods to capture the spirit of an entire country. A racing car, a train, an airplane, striking workers fired upon by soldiers from the top of a building and a group of chorus girls dancing are all combined in one artistic swath that plays homage to the social concerns of 1932.

Benton was emotionally drawn into World War II, although he was too old to fight. Shortly after the Japanese bombed Pearl Harbor, he began a series titled "Year of Peril," which documented the atrocities of war in a cartoon fashion.

This series was widely reproduced, and its exhibition at the Associated American Artists in New York drew 75,000 people. The series subsequently was purchased by Abbott Laboratories in Chicago, the same firm that commissioned Benton to do the drawings in the present exhibition.

"The Silent Service" series of 1943 documents life aboard the submarine, U.S.S. Dorado. Benton joined the crew and was able to capture all aspects of daily life at sea while the vessel was in peaceful waters. The drawings and paintings are particularly poignant because the Dorado was lost at sea shortly after Benton's excursion.

In another series commissioned in 1944, Benton was sent to the American Bridge Company in Ambridge, Pa. to record the construction of an LST (landing ship), built at the inland sites to protect them from possible enemy attack. The LSTs sailed down the Ohio and Mississippi rivers to New Orleans, where they underwent sea trials in the Gulf of Mexico and final outfittings at the Navy repair base at Algiers, La.

The dramatic diagonals and tilting perspective of the machine and the ships afforded Benton the opportunity to capture the energy of industry and the activity of the war efforts.

The dynamics of the war industry are contrasted with more humble sketches of sailors going about their daily chores. The poignancy of this contrast between larger views and the single figures is highlighted in the title of a simple line drawing of a man peeling potatoes: "War Isn't All Mechanized."

Benton obviously enjoyed the challenge of capturing the sense of motion and activity in all its aspects. It allowed him to participate in the war in a tangible way and to document his favorite subject, the vitality of the United States.

Catalogue Of American Folk Art Is Beautiful, Informative

TREASURES OF AMERICAN FOLK ART FROM THE ABBY ALDRICH ROCKEFELLER FOLK ART CENTER. By Beatrix T. Rumford and Carolyn J. Weekley. Boston.Toronto.London. Little, Brown and Company, Bullfinch Press, in association with The Colonial Williamsburg Foundation. Large format. Paper, 224 pps. Illustrated, $22.50.

There's still time to see the traveling exhibition of selected American folk art treasures from the Williamsburg, Va. Abby Aldrich Rockefeller Folk Art Center now on view at the North Carolina Museum of Art in Raleigh before its closure on August 20.

And copies of this large, magnificant catalogue of the exhibition are still available for purchase. With 170 color photographs, many full page, all reproduced in exceptionally faithful color and clarity, this catalogue, at $22.50, certainly qualifies as one of the best book bargains anywhere in today's high-priced book market.

Complementing the pictorial riches of the volume is the thorough explanatory (and illuminating) text of Beatrix T. Rumford and Carolyn J. Weekley. The two avoid the trap of convoluted aesthetics one must often wade through to discover essentials in much of the writing directed to art today.

This does not mean the authors in any way shun writing about the tenor of the times in which the art was produced — not at all. They provide a wealth of information based on extensive background information and research coupled with their own well-reasoned, succinct and clearly stated observations.

For example, in Chapter Two, "Down by the Shore," dealing with paintings, watercolors and a goodly representation of bird decoys, the reader is informed that "Decoys, like other forms of folk art, reveal a good deal about American life, particularly as it was lived in rural coastal communities in this century and the previous one. . . As hunters who knew local waters, feeding areas, and market demands, these makers used their craft to earn a living. They took considerable pride in their work and eagerly displayed their individualism, particularly as the market expanded and bird populations inversely diminished. Some makers became well known, their birds favored for their effectiveness."

Thus, we are given the motivation for making bird (especially duck) decoys, and how this form of folk art did indeed reflect elements of commerce in which pride in craftsmanship (art) was also of concern to the makers.

This entry is typical of the forthright and interesting text that accompanies the beautiful pictures — in many instances the text and visual appear on the same page or on nearby pages, thus alleviating the annoyance of excessive page flipping.

"Treasures of American Folk Art" is logically presented in various catgories of art forms based on areas of everyday life that prompted the creation of art by folk artists.

Examples of the art are presented in chapters such as the one headed "The Folks," devoted to portraits of people painted mainly by traveling artists; "Places for Work and Living," encompassing gorgeous landscapes of times gone by.

Another chapter, "Home Sweet Home," ranges from typical folk art items for the home such as woven coverlets and quilts to furniture and paintings of family groups.

Of the eight chapters, my personal favorite is "A Virtuous Life from Cradle to Grave." In this chapter, the native talent of artists, though untrained, is superbly manifested in a collection of folk art items that excel both in exquisite artisty and rich imaginations. Intricately embellished birth and baptismal certificates, a strange Shenandoah warrior hero with a parrot in a nearby tree, pastoral scenes of farm life; and two intriguing works by the noted folk artist Edward Hicks are among offerings in this life cycle category.

Other readers may fancy the fascination of animals, figures and toys presented in the chapter "Whimsies and Toys," or the vivid paintings of fruits and flowers depicted in "Nature's Bounty."

I can pinpoint only one minor drawback to "Treasures of Amrican Folk Art." It's too heavy and unwieldy to read as a lap book. It has to be spread on desk or table for proper reading enjoyment.

Anyone who has a liking for American folk art will want to get a copy of this outstanding catalogue. It can be purchased at the book shop at the N.C. Museum of Art or by mail from: The North Carolina Museum of Art, 2110 Blue Ridge Boulevard, Raleigh, N.C., 27607. The amount to remit for a copy by mail is $26.65, which includes N.C. sales tax and postage and shipping charges.

Immigrant Culture Programs Set

ECU NEWS BUREAU

A series of four community programs on the culture and values of first generation Indian, Hispanic, Chinese and Arab immigrants will be held at East Carolina University beginning in September.

"The program ('First Generation Immigrants: Cultures and Values') will generate dialogue between the immigrants of selected cultures and the people in the area," says Dr. Mohammed A. Ahad, a professor in the ECU School of Nursing and the coordinator for the program. Ahad has received a grant from the North Carolina Humanities Council to produce the series.

Each program will present a discussion by scholars, immigrants and interested citizens. The discussion will be followed by an exhibit of art, artifacts, food and music.

"The overall goal of the project is to develop a sense of understanding as to how immigrants influence American culture and vice versa," said Ahad. In addition he said the program will enable immigrants to interact with local citizens and learn more about the values and life in and around eastern North Carolina.

Sessions will be held in the Willis (Regional Development Insitute) Building from 7 p.m. to 9:30 p.m. The opening program for the series will be held on September 15 and will focus on the culture of India.

Subsequent sessions include Hispanic culture on October 6, Chinese culture on November 3 and Arab culture on December 1.

Scholars from around the country will participate including Dr. Paramatma Saran, an associate professor of sociology at Baruch College, the City University of New York; Professor Yum Kun Wang of the Chinese Academy of Social Sciences; and Ralph Braibarti of the Center for Islamic and Arabian Development Studies at Duke University.

Ahad said he hoped the programs would lead to an appreciation of different cultures and a greater productivity and harmonious co-existence.

Folk Traditions Events At NCMA

RALEIGH — Folk traditions that are part of North Carolina's and the nation's heritage will be presented Saturday from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. at the North Carolina Museum of Art, Raleigh.

Author Talks About Her Work

CHAPEL HILL — Tar Heel novelist Kaye Gibbons talks about her career, her new book, "A Virtuous Woman," and the explosion of best-selling authors in North Carolina with host William Friday on "North Carolina People" Monday at 7:30 p.m. over the 10-channel network of North Carolina Public Television. The program repeats July 30 at 5:30 p.m.

This mother of three young children has managed to publish two books, is working on a third and has movie rights "in the works" for the first book. Despite a chaotic childhood, Gibbons found marriage and children brought, in her words "a stability and order" that allowed her writing to flourish.

Like other Southern writers, "I do believe I write from memory and experience," Gibbons tells Friday as they reflect upon her childhood. Friday pen-points the secrets to Gibbons' writing success — an almost photographic memory of everyday events, and the drive and determination instilled in her as a child. After her parents died in 1970, the then 10-year old experienced death as only an orphaned child can know it.

"The triumph over the memories of death and sorrow will always be in my work because those are the things I know, the unquenchable joy that comes from working through sorrow and death," Gibbons says.

Gibbons became aware of the lifestyles of Southerners while growing up in a rural area of Nash County. "A Southerner's connection with the land and family are two hallmarks of Southern literature," Gibbons explains. Her Novels, "Ellen Foster" and the just-published "A Virtuous Woman," both follow this pattern.

"My books are about a Southerner's need for roots, a need for land," she says. "Southerners have a preoccupation with family." When she sat down to write about the rural landscape and the people on the landscape, the ideas of land and family came naturally.

"But when I see this landscape it's almost like a wasteland," she tells Friday. "I see characters playing out their quiet dramas on this vast wasteland that you can see in the South now."

In her new book, "A Virtuous Woman," Ruby is the character who shuttles back and forth between two worlds, from an urban to rural environment.

"All of the people who are working in this area right now have one foot in the past and one foot in the here and now," she says. "The way we square these two existences, these two ways of being, is to write about it.

"We use our language to make sense of that rural past, which is also in a state of change. I think the change disturbs all of us, thus we are compelled to write about the past and put it on paper before it's gone and the Wal-Marts are up.

"It seemed like where I was growing up in Bend-of-the-River Road in Nash County, that the outside was the outside world; when in reality we were on the outside," Gibbons says.

Her advice to aspiring young writers, "It's tough, even if one has read a lot. It's impossible to pull off any sort of worthwhile writing if you've read nothing, if you've had a diet of television, particularly MTV or something such as that.

"I would tell a student to read and pay attention to what one reads. Read good things, and then learn to see the magic of what goes on."

Unlike "Ellen Foster" which was written very quickly and with almost no editing required, "A Virtuous Woman" took four re-writes. Gibbons attributes the re-writing to the "omniscient point-of-view" she took and "because the book is about characters, it is a character study," she says.

"I often hear writers say they write every day, and they have a very regular schedule. But over the three years of my writing career, I've learned the hard way not to force words onto a page. They don't feel right to me.

She tells Friday that humor is very important, but adds, "I think there is a difference between something that is funny and something that is humorous.

War Off The East Coast

TORPEDO JUNCTION: U-Boat War Off America's East Coast, 1942. By Homer H. Hickman, Jr. Annapolis, Md. Naval Institute Press, 367 pages. $24.95.

The North Carolina coast is the focal point of this detailed account of the first eight months of World War II with Germany.

Cape Hatteras and Cape Lookout were the favorite hunting grounds for a handful of U-boats who sank more tonnage than did the entire Japanese navy during the same period.

Their captains and crews were astounded to see brightly lit towns along the coast and navigational lights still functioning as if in peacetime.

On board the oil tankers and merchant ships, everyone was oblivious to the dangers lurking beneath the sea. No convoys or ship blackouts were instituted until the early summer of 1942.

Who was responsible for this sad era in United States naval history? The answer seems to lie in the orientation and dogmatic personality of Admiral Ernest J. King, then Commander in Chief of the U.S. Fleet. King was a graduate of Annapolis, class of 1901.

His full attention was on the Pacific Theater of war while U-boats prowled unmolested right at his front door off the Chesapeake Bay. Only after repeated urgings of the British Admiralty, for which King had little use, the intervention of President Roosevelt and General George Marshall, did King start convoys and provide adequate forces to escort them.

Hickman uses the U.S. Coast Guard Cutter Dione to represent the small, obsolete warships first used to protect merchant vessels. Although this small ship never sank a sub, its brave crew exemplified the spirit of sailors and merchantmen who never gave up.

Many of these, particularly the coast guardmen, were from coastal North Carolina.

The total loss of American and Allied ships during the first six months of 1942 is astounding: January-February, over 70 ships; March-April, over 85 ships; May-June, over 75 ships. During this period only three German U-boats were sunk.

Perhaps the only criticism of the author's presentation is in his overly-detailed accounts of stalking and sinking of the hapless ships. Too many times the reader searches without reward for a new twist in the same old story: the stalking U-boats, the torpedo launch and the disasterous, fiery explosions.

North Carolinians in particular will relate to the events culminating in the sinking of the HMS Bedfordshire, a British corvette whose crew was subsequently buried in what is now a "British" cemetery at Okracoke Island.

On the night of May 11, 1942, while patrolling off Cape Lookout, the Befordshire was sunk by U-boat 558. No one survived the sinking.

Later the bodies of four crew members were recovered and with Coast Guard assistance, given proper burial on Okracoke Island.

In subsequent years, with the cooperation of the United States Government and citizens of Okracoke Island, this small plot was deeded to the British Government

Finally, as Hickman has aptly demonstrated, had the United States been properly prepared in the early World War II to meet the U-boat offensive and also listened to our British counterparts advice, perhaps the Germans' East Coast offensive would have been a failure instead of a success.

ECU Students At Sorbonne

ECU NEWS BUREAU

The 29 students enrolled in East Carolina University's summer program of study at the Sorbonne in Paris are participating in the gala celebration of the bicentennial of the French Revolution this month.

Among the special events they have attended have been a parade down the Champs Elysee with representatives of most of the nations of the world, the opening of the new People's Opera at the Place de la Bastille, special exhibits and displays and a huge fireworks display on July 14, France's Independence Day. Monuments such as the Eiffel Tower and the Arc de Triomphe have been renovated for the occasion.

The students are enrolled in the "Cours de Langue et de Civilisation Francaises" at the Sorbonne of the University of Paris in the mornings and are taking a special French civilization course in the afternoons. The program emphasizes French art, architecture and history and involves travel to numerous museums, cathedrals and chateaux.

Located in the heart of Paris' Latin Quarter and founded in the 13th century, the Sorbonne is one of the world's oldest and most prestigious universities. Students in the ECU-Sorbonne group are lodged a short walk from campus, across the street from the Luxembourg Gardens.

The program is led by Prof. Karine Sparrow-Ginter of the ECU Department of Foreign Languages and Literatures faculty who began directing study programs in France 20 years ago and has accompanied hundreds of students over the years.

Participants include students from UNC-Chapel Hill, Meredith College, N. C. State University, and Princeton University along with ECU students. The group members departed from Greenville by bus to Charlotte June 26, where they took a flight to Paris. They are scheduled to return August 2.

The ECU-Sorbonne program is recognized as one of the most intense and high-quality language and civilization programs for Americans in France. Enrollment for the 1990 program will begin in late August. Further information is available from the Department of Foreign Languages and Literatures, East Carolina University, Greenville, N. C. 27858-4353.

Germany's Artistic Films

By Carol J. Williams
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MUNICH, West Germany — German filmgoers get action and adventure from directors like Steven Spielberg, most of their laughs from the likes of Mel Brooks and doses of irony and social commentary from the works of Woody Allen.

Throughout the four decades since an independent film industry was re-established in West Germany, American film has dominated the market, pushing German movies to the fringes.

American films have accounted for at least eight of the Top 10 box-office draws this year, vacating a rung only occasionally for German successes such as Joseph Vilsmaier's "Herbstmilch" or Xaver Schwarzenberger's "With the Next Man Everything Will Be Different."

"We don't try to compete with Hollywood," said Bernhard Kock, a film historian and spokesman for West Germany's largest studio, Bavaria Film. "American films always have been the major box-office successes here, and that situation is unlikely to change."

Rather than aiming for the general audiences who love American comedies and dramas, German filmmakers have concentrated on a unique, artistic and often avant-garde genre.

"It's difficult to say what makes a film German, but there is a certain something, a weight that they carry," Kock observed.

A handful of young filmmakers have made some recent forays into more conventional subjects with relative success, helping to boost the share of theater tickets sold for German films to a post-war high of nearly 20 percent.

But in a market that has fallen from 800 million tickets a year in the bleak years after World War II, to about 100 million in the age of video and vast new entertainment options, German film is anything but a growth industry.

Director Doris Doerrie, whose 1986 satire, "Men," was one of the few German box-office smashes of the decade, says the unconventional thread running through many West German films is an outgrowth of the complicated subsidy system that keeps the industry alive.

"Filmmakers are a lot more likely to get grants for artistic productions, and once you get the money, there is no pressure for commercial success," she said in a recent interview.

While that easing of financial and marketing worries allows a freer atmosphere for the filmmaker, it poses little incentive for directors to aim for audiences seeking entertainment over artistic value.

Germany has a rich film legacy, dating back to the expressionism of 1919-30, which produced such landmarks as "The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari," "Nosferatu" and "Metropolis."

In the first years after the Nazi defeat, American occupiers imported Hollywood movies, using them to promote development of a democratic society. According to film historian Thomas Guback in his book, "The International Film Industry," this helped establish Hollywood's grip on the German market.

All German films made prior to 1945 were seized and kept out of circulation while the military governments, encouraged by Hollywood lobbyists to take their time, slowly returned those deemed free of Nazi propaganda to the theaters.

"What also played a role was the financial attractiveness for the allies to block rebuilding of the German film industry and keep the market open for their own films," said film historian Isa van Eeghen.

Recovery has been slow. And despite West Germany's economic prosperity, filmmaking requires government and television revenues to keep production at about 60 new films per year — half the number released during the late '50s.

Some of the most successful contemporary films by West German directors have been co-produced with American and other foreign companies, resulting in a multinational hybrid art form that is beginning to characterize European cinema.

A number of German directors have moved their entire operations to Los Angeles, including Wolfgang Petersen, whose 1981 submarine drama, "Das Boot," was the most successful West German film ever marketed abroad.

But some German filmmakers have found their styles to be incompatible with the more rigid and profit-oriented American system.

Turkish Films Make A Deep Impression

By Terrence Petty
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BONN, West Germany — A new breed of filmmakers is leaving a deep imprint on West German consciousness with movies about Turks trapped between the ways of their new German homeland and traditional customs of their own kin.

"Right now these movies are in the vanguard of German films, they are among the best in the whole country," said Frank Gethke, deputy head of the German Film and Television Academy in West Berlin.

Another movie, Tevfik Baser's "Abschied vom Falschen Paradies" ("Farewell to a False Paradise"), was among the nation's Top 10 films. Baser is Turkish-born, and is building a reputation as one of West Germany's leading film directors.

Turks are West Germany's largest foreign minority, numbering more than 1.5 million. They are often targets of intense resentment by many natives, who see them as unfair competition for scarce jobs and housing.

"These films aim to improve Germans' understanding about the Turkish minority living among them, and I think they succeed," Gethke said.

Baser's and Bohm's films portray young Turkish people not only isolated within Western culture, but also under intense pressure from their conservative families to be wary of Western ideals.

In Bohm's film, a young Hamburg man falls in love with a progressive-minded Turkish girl, Yasemin, but the relationship is an impossible one because of her family's strong resistance.

Baser first impressed critics three years ago with "40 m2 Deutschland" ("40 Square Meters of Germany"), a fictional movie about a woman named Turna locked up by her strict husband in a seedy Hamburg apartment after they arrived in West Germany from Turkey. The German-language film takes its name from the minuscule size of the couple's new home.

Turna revolts against her husband's efforts to isolate her from Western ways, but fails to find freedom even after he dies during an epileptic fit. The desperate woman suddenly faces a culture in which she cannot even understand what her neighbors are saying, and is left completely without friends.

Baser tracks similar themes in "Farewell to a False Paradise," based on the true story about a young Turkish woman who is sent to jail for killing her Turkish husband after he brutalizes her. She finds happiness behind prison walls, totally casting off her family's male-dominated customs.

But in the end, she is to be deported after her release from the "false paradise" of prison, and she contemplates killing herself rather than having to return to a homeland which she now considers completely foreign.

"Farewell to a False Paradise" launched the Turkish-born actress Zuhal Olcay into sudden stardom in West Germany, and she won best actress honors at the German film awards.

Community Support Organization For The Arts Is Established

ECU NEWS BUREAU

A new community-based support organization for East Carolina University's annual Performing Arts Series is being formed. The proposed auxiliary group, chaired by Ilene Cox of Greenville, will assist in fund-raising efforts, subscription drives and other volunteer activities.

The ECU Performing Arts Series, sponsored by the ECU Department of University Unions, was formerly known as the ECU Artists Series. During recent decades it has brought a wide variety of celebrity performers to campus from the worlds of music, theatre and dance.

Among these have been Arthur Rubinstein, Van Cliburn, Elly Ameling, Isaac Stern, the London Symphony Orchestra, Robert Merrill, Andres Segovia, the Rotterdam Philharmonic, Victor Borge, the Atlanta Ballet and several touring theatrical productions, including "Cabaret" and "1776."

Scheduled for the 1989-90 series are 10 performances — ones featuring violinist Itzhak Perlman, the Beaux Arts Trio, the San Francisco Western Opera Theatre in "Carmen," the Cannes Chamber Orchestra with flutist Ransom Wilson, "Shalom '90," an Israeli folk dance troupe and other world class performers.

The auxiliary organization will operate in conjunction with the ECU Foundation, and contributions to the auxiliary will be tax deductible.

Noting that the auxiliary is in the initial stages of organization, Mrs. Cox commented that "it is a time of excitement and vision" regarding "this facet of the cultural well-being" of eastern North Carolina. "We invite interested parties to participate in the founding of this group," she said.

Rudolph Alexander, an assistant vice chancellor at ECU who chairs the campus Performing Arts Committee, expressed pleasure for the "active support" of auxiliary volunteers.

"These volunteers have seen a need and have stepped forward to fulfill it," he said.

Persons interested in the formation of the yet-unnamed auxiliary and in working on behalf of the ECU Performing Arts Series may telephone Mrs. William Cox at 752-3247.

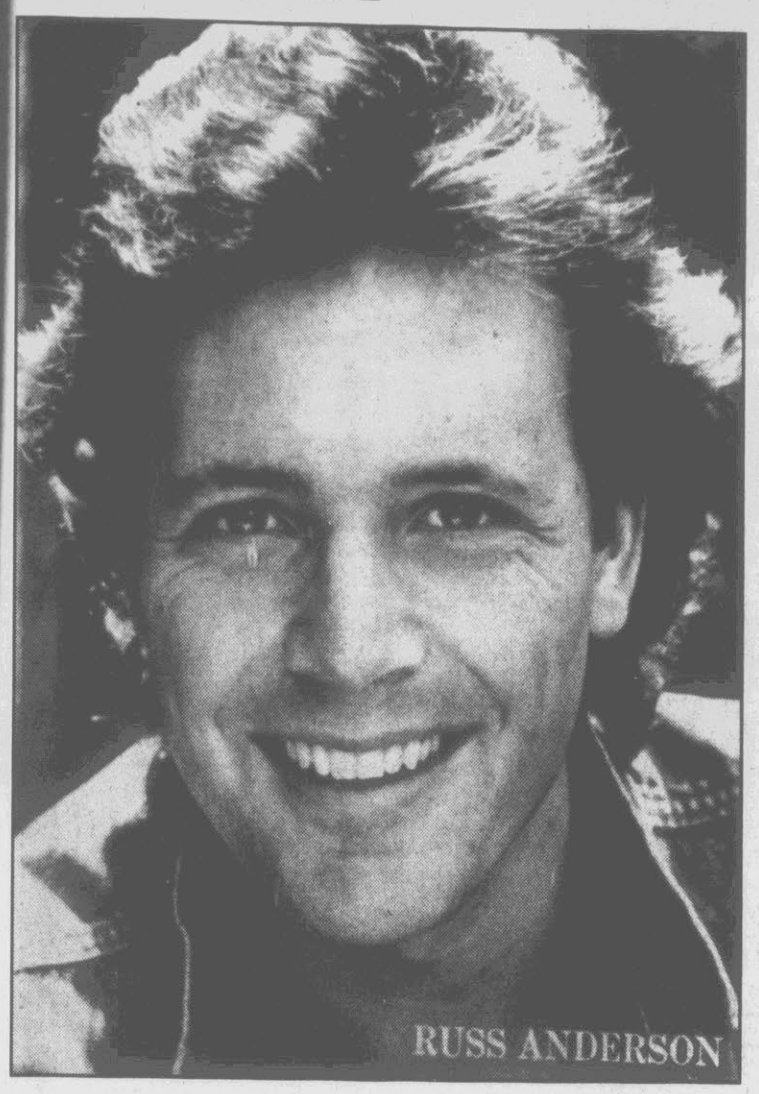
'Mass Appeal' Is The Final '89 Summer Theater Offering



Actor Russ Anderson of "Mass Appeal"

The East Carolina Summer Theater will close its 1989 summer season with Bill C. Davis' "Mass Appeal," a play that Time magazine described as "luminous. It bubbles with surprising laughter."

The play, which stars Iggie Wolfington and Russ Anderson, opens Monday at 8:15 p.m. with additional 8:15 p.m. performances each night through Saturday. Two matinee performances will be at 2:15 p.m. Wednesday and Saturday.

Individual tickets may be purchased at McGinnis Theater box office on the ECU campus or reserved by a MasterCard or VISA by telephone, 757-6829, Monday through Saturday from 10 a.m. until 8:30 p.m.

Tickets are $12 for evening performances and $10 for the matinees.

Iggie Wolfington, who will appear as Father Tim Farley, has had a career that spans 50 years. His first major success was in 1952 in "Mrs. McThing" starring Helen Hayes. In the late 1950s he appeared in the original production of "The Music Man" in which he played Robert Preston's side-kick, Marcelus Washburn.

Most recently, he portrayed the sugar-daddy in the national company of "42nd Street."

Russ Anderson, best known for his role as Steve Holden on ABC-TV's "One Life to Live," will be in the role of Mark Dolson.

Anderson began his career in live theater, and toured with the National Shakespeare Company. On daytime television, he has been in numerous New York-based dramas. His most recent role was that of the Rev. T.J. Jones on CBS's "The Guiding Light." He will be seen in the fall on a CBS movie of the week, "Dead Air," starring Kevin Dobson and Blythe Danner.

"Mass Appeal" is built on a simple and familiar foundation. It tells of the conflict in relationship between a complacent, middle-aged priest and his rebellious young seminary student.

Playwright Davis' characters are full of contradictions and surprises; they are also abundantly capable of change.

Though "Mass Appeal" starts out as a debate between two men on the opposite sides of a generational-theological gap, it quickly deepens into a wise, moving and funny comedy about the nature of friendship, courage and all kinds of love.

One critic wrote that "it is a pleasant change to see a play whose boiler is fired by something other than sex, violence or greed."

Folkmoot To Open Thursday

WAYNESVILLE — More than 325 folk dancers and musicians from around the world will travel to Western North Carolina to participate in the North Carolina International Folk Festival, Folkmoot USA, which opens Thursday and continues through August 6.

Twenty-two performances are scheduled in seven counties by groups representing the countries of The People's Republic of China, Czechoslavakia, France, India, Italy, Mexico, New Zealand, Sweden, Soviet Union, Yugoslavia, and the West Indies.

The performers, with their American guides, will be housed hostel-style in a Haywood County school and will take their meals together in the school cafeteria.

The festival will officially open with a parade down Waynesville's Main Street at 1 p.m. on Friday, followed by an 8 p.m. program by all 11 groups at the Stompin' Ground in Maggie Valley.

Programs are held every night throughout the festival with other all-group programs including a July 30, 6 p.m. program at the Thomas Wolfe Auditorium in Asheville; an Aug. 3 program at 8 p.m. in Maggie Valley and closing ceremonies at 6 p.m. Aug. 6 at Lake Junaluska's Stuart Auditorium.

Folkmoot programs featuring individual or country groups of performers will be held in Asheville, Brevard, Canton, Cullowhee, Fletcher, Franklin, Hendersonville, Highlands, Lake Junaluska, Maggie Valley, Mars Hill, Swannanoa and Waynesville.

Dedication to the preservation of their culture and traditions motivates these dancers and musicians. Costumes are authentic reproductions, sometimes originals handed down from generation to generation as are some of the unusual handmade musical instruments.

Folkmoot is Old English for "meeting of the people," a motto that holds true from the opening day parade from the flag-lined street until the day prior to closing when the street becomes a world bazaar with the countries represented joining 100 food vendors and juried craftsmen.

Named in the top 20 events by the Southeast Tourism Society for four consecutive years, Folkmoot has been lauded for its cultural contribution.

For additional information and a complete schedule check with chambers of commerce, call the Folkmoot office at 704-452-2997 or write to: Folkmoot USA, P.O. Box 523, Waynesville, N.C. 28786.

500 At Suzuki Festival

ECU NEWS BUREAU

More than 500 music students, parents and teachers from 18 states were at East Carolina University July 9-14 for the annual North Carolina Suzuki Institute. Participants came from as far south as Florida and as far west as Washington and Oregon.

The students, ranging from preschool age to teenage, were involved in violin, viola, cello or piano master classes, small and large group lessons, and orchestra and chamber music rehearsals. Nineteen music teachers were enrolled in institute teacher training workshops.

The week's events included daily afternoon and evening recitals, lectures for parents, a mass "play-in" by all string performers and concluding concerts. Participants who came from a distance were housed on campus and took their meals in a campus dining hall.

The North Carolina Suzuki Institute is co-directed by Robert Hause of the ECU School of Music faculty and Greenville violin teacher Joanne Bath. The Suzuki method of music teaching, originated by Dr. Shinichi Suzuki of Japan, stresses early ear training and technique development in children before the reading of music notation is begun. Suzuki music instruction was introduced in North America about 25 years ago and is now practiced in many nations throughout the world.

Thousands of young musicians in the U.S. and Canada participate in Suzuki summer institutes each year. The ECU institute, approved by the Suzuki Association of the Americas, is the only one held in North Carolina.

Madonna and Mr. Beatty: She can take care of herself

Q Friends of mine who are wise in the ways of show business tell me that every time he starts a new picture, Warren Beatty starts a new romance with his leading lady. In that way, the picture gets constant publicity. Is that the true motive behind Beatty's affair with Madonna, his co-star in "Dick Tracy"?—Karen Silver, Joliet, Ill.

A When it comes to women, Beatty's motives appear to be simplistic and not devious, but there are women who have spent considerable time with him, expecting marriage, only to have received publicity. Madonna, however, has been around and can take care of herself in the clinches.

Shirley: On to Prague

Q Would you check on a rumor that President Bush plans to make Shirley Temple Black our ambassador to Czechoslovakia? What are her qualifications to serve in that important post?—Tanya Robinson, Cleveland, Ohio

A President Bush appointed Mrs. Black to be the U.S. ambassador to Czechoslovakia several weeks ago, although the former child star, now 61, has no expertise in Czech affairs. During the Presidency of Gerald Ford, however, she did serve as ambassador to Ghana, a West African country, and later served in Washington as Ford's chief of protocol.

Q Did journalist George Will ever refer to George Bush as a "lapdog" or say he displayed the characteristics of one? Can that be why Will is not as popular with Barbara Bush as he was with Nancy Reagan?—Dana B., Pottstown, Pa.

A In a column dated Jan. 30, 1986, George Will described George Bush thusly: "The unpleasant sound [Vice President] Bush is emitting as he traipses from one conservative gathering to another is a thin, tinny 'arf'—the sound of a lapdog. He is panting along Mondale's path to the Presidency." The above two sentences may constitute one reason why the Bushes do not hold columnist Will in as favorable a light as did the Reagans.

Q In World War II, Gen. Douglas MacArthur had a young son who was widely publicized when he and his mother were evacuated from the Philippines. The son's name was Arthur. He seems to have dropped out of sight. Any idea of his whereabouts?—Dave Gustafson, Huntington Beach, Calif.

A Arthur MacArthur, 51, reportedly changed his name and lives in the New York City area, where he writes poetry and plays the piano.

Q Is Ivan Lendl, the tennis champion, any kin to the late movie actor Bela Lugosi? They sure resemble each other. Don't you think so?—Donna De Santis, Brooklyn, N.Y.

A Frankly, no. Bela Lugosi, who died in 1956 at age 74, was a small, dark Hungarian who starred as Dracula. Lendl is a tall, athletic Czech who was born March 7, 1960, and at this writing is eagerly awaiting his U.S. citizenship.

Q I heard on my car radio that Liza Minnelli was fined $2000 or something like that for smuggling dogs or drugs into Sweden. Which was it?—Lurlean Marshall, Memphis, Tenn.

A In April, in violation of strict Swedish quarantine regulations, Liza Minnelli smuggled her cairn terrier into Malmö, Sweden, via the ferry from Denmark, then to Stockholm, where Liza performed with Frank Sinatra and Sammy Davis Jr. The district court of Helsingborg said Liza admitted bringing her dog, Lilly, into the country and fined her $2000. The 43-year-old singer then had Lilly flown to Paris, where they later were reunited.

Q An unlikely combination of actresses in a movie is comedienne Roseanne Barr and Oscar-winner Meryl Streep. I understand they've just about finished filming together in a comedy, "She-Devil." What's it all about?—Nancy F., Orange, N.J.

A Weary of starring in such melodramas as "The Deer Hunter," "Sophie's Choice," "The French Lieutenant's Woman," "Silkwood," "Out of Africa" and "A Cry in the Dark," Meryl Streep has been searching for a good comedy role for years. She believes she found one in "She-Devil," which in 1987 was made into an award-winning miniseries that aired on Britain's BBC and here on cable TV. Adapted from Fay Weldon's "The Life and Loves of a She-Devil," the screenplay deals with a fat, diabolical suburban housewife (Barr) who wreaks vengeance on her faithless husband and his attractive, sexy novelist-lover (Streep).

Candice Bergen had beauty, talent, glamour and privilege...but for years she couldn't find what she needed most

THE SECRET OF HER SUCCESS

BY CLEVELAND AMORY

ENTERING CANDICE Bergen's duplex apartment overlooking New York's Central Park, I was struck, as always, not only by the view but also by the attractive simplicity of its furnishings. The apartment's chief mementos are not of her career—or that of her husband, the distinguished French movie director Louis Malle—but rather what she calls, after her ventriloquist father's most famous dummy, her "Charlie McCarthys." These range from spoons and salt-and-pepper shakers to cuff links and compacts. They even include—suitable for "his and her" lapels—enamel pins with movable mouths. There is, however, no whole Charlie McCarthy dummy—that resides at the Smithsonian Institution.

As we looked at the mementos, I asked Candice, now 43, if it was true that as a child she regarded Charlie as a competitor, as was often reported in those days.

"Well," she said, "when I was born, the papers called me his sister. And I guess there were times, as I was growing up, when I did feel as if he were my brother. After all, he had a whole room of his own right beside mine. At home, the whole thing was sort of like competition. And in a public sense, he was sort of my nemesis, because when I was on my father's show, I wasn't allowed the laughs. Mostly, the laughs belonged to Charlie." She paused. "I guess that was the beginning of my frustration at not being able to do comedy—that is, until Burt Reynolds gave me a chance in Starting Over."

We sat down, and I asked Candice if she remembered when we had first met. It was a conceited thing to do, but I knew she had a terrific memory. "I do indeed," she said. "It was on the old Dick Cavett Show, and we talked about animals. Animals have always meant so much to me. My brother Kris—he's a film editor now and just about my favorite person in the world—didn't come along until I was 15 years old. So growing up, I was like an only child, and my animals were everything to me. I had dogs and a donkey and horses—even a pig. Also, my father and Walt Disney—Uncle Walt, as we called him—were very close, and I saw all the Disney pictures in his screening room before they came out. They made a big impression on me. Later, I joined the Fund for Animals and People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals and in between movies I spent time in Africa with Dian Fossey and the gorillas she was trying to save."

"One of the biggest fights I ever had with my family was over animals. It started with my berating my mother for wearing furs and my father for shooting ducks. When I told them I had invested my money in a nonviolent leather company—one started by my yoga teacher—that was the final straw. 'One week it's Indians,' my father said. 'The next it's ducks. Now this—and with your inheritance too!' Anything to do with inheritance really set my father off."

Candice got up to prepare some herbal tea, and I asked where her husband was. "He's out," she said. I said I wanted to talk with him about her—alone. "Maybe I'll get lucky," she said, smiling, "and he won't be back until after you're gone." And their daughter, Chloe? "She's out too," Candice replied. "She had a date." A date—at age 3? "At 3," she said firmly.

"Now that I'm a mom," she continued, "I see it from the other side. I only hope that I don't have to go through what the parents of the '60s, mine included, did. The worst thing is, I hear myself not only saying the same things my parents did but even using the same tone of voice. The other day I heard myself say, in exactly my mother's voice, 'How do you know you don't like it if you won't try it?'

"Honestly, the mother-daughter thing is so freighted. One decision I made is not to provoke it more than it already is. But sometimes I think mother-daughter is almost hopeless. It's mano a mano.

"Another thing I do is, when we're in Hollywood, I don't have Chloe come on the Murphy Brown set. Everybody makes too much fuss over her, and I don't want her to take those signals seriously."

Had she taken those signals too seriously when she was growing up? "I sure did," Candice replied. "I was a regular little princess, and I grew up in a very fast lane. After all, my friends were the sons and daughters of the rich and famous. The only poor people we knew were our teachers. By the time I went to the Westlake School for Girls, I had picked up from my father the rudiments of throwing my voice, and I played endless jokes on my classmates. I also learned real voice-changing, and I regularly called the registrar's office pretending to be my mother, so I could get the day off."

"I remember him saying, 'I don't believe in marriage. Relationships have to be reinvented every day.' I added that we both seemed to be confirmed bachelors."

UPI/Bettmann

"What it was," Candice went on, "was makeup at 11, high heels at 12, dates at 13 and going steady at 14. Finally, in desperation, my family packed me off to boarding school in Switzerland. When they came over to see me at Christmas, they never got over the line I greeted them with: 'Let's go down to the bar and have a Bloody Mary. The Burtons are here, and the Aga Khan is coming.' My mother looked as if she was going to faint, and my father looked totally frozen. In the fall, they had left a 14-year-old Sandra Dee; by winter, they found a combination of Forever Amber and Simone Signoret. They couldn't wait to get me back to Beverly Hills.

"The next place they packed me off to was the University of Pennsylvania. This time, I was packed back by the university itself. I can still quote, verbatim, the letter they sent: 'Dear Mr. Bergen,' it said. 'The Executive Committee of the College of Women at its recent meeting reviewed the records of your daughter, Candice, and found that she had an "F" in Art 218, an "F" in Music 30 and an "Incomplete" in Art 140. The committee therefore decided to drop Candice from the rolls at this time. It is hoped that Candice will find success and happiness in some other field.'

"My father had sternly told me that his college years were the happiest of his life, and he took this particularly hard." And how had she taken it? "I was devastated," Candice deadpanned. "I went around showing the letter to my friends. 'Nobody,' I told them proudly, 'flunks Art and Music.'

"I had already been doing a lot of modeling, and I was on the cover of a lot of magazines. My parents didn't really mind that, but when I told them that Sidney Lumet had decided to cast me in The Group and that I would be playing a lesbian, that really took the cake. 'Candy,' I can remember them exclaiming—in unison—'a lesbian! Why can't you start by playing an ingenue?'

"As things turned out," Candice admitted, "they might have been right. One critic said that my only flair for acting was in my nostrils. Meanwhile, I was giving awful quotes all over the place. Right after The Group, when I was asked what was my goal in life, I said, 'Marriage—that's what women are best suited for.' You can imagine what a big help that was when it came to my time with women's lib. People seem to forget that I also said other things, like, 'Men make such jerks of themselves over beautiful women,' and, 'Men say they love independence in their women. But they don't waste a second demolishing it brick by brick.'" She paused. "I guess my favorite quote—which nobody ever seems to remember—is when I said, 'Women have a terrible legacy in relying on a relationship to complete them. A relationship like that never has any legs—it's so precarious. I think it's essential for women to have careers, and I also think men should be the just desserts.'

"Remember," she said slowly, "I had 20 years of traditional thinking before I had 20 years of feminism. Even before Louis came along, I had questions: Were women meant to do everything—work and have babies? Were love and marriage to be thrown out the window?"

With Louis and Chloe, she would seem to have answered these questions. But I wanted to know how it all came about.

relationships through the years," she said. "Just the same, I always seem to have trouble with foreign men. I met the Hohenlohes, the von Furstenbergs, the Poniatowskis and the Pignatellis, but I always seemed to get off on the wrong foot with them. It wasn't easy trying to explain to European nobility what my father did when most of theirs had never done anything except shoot animals. I'd try, 'My father is a ventriloquist.' When they would ask what that was, I'd tell them that he had these dummies—large dolls sort of, and he'd talk to them or make them talk, or actually they'd talk to each other. 'Really?' they'd say. 'How amusing. And where does he do that?' 'On the radio,' I'd say. 'He'd talk to dolls on the radio? How extraordinary!' After a while, I'd just give up. I'd just say my father was in real estate—they liked that.

"Louis was something different. Long before I met him, a friend of mine who knew him predicted he'd be the man I would marry. It didn't seem likely to me. He had been divorced and had two children by two different women he hadn't married. And when we had our first real date, at the Russian Tea Room, I remember him saying, 'I don't believe in marriage. I think relationships have to be reinvented every day.'" She smiled again. "I agreed with him. I added that it seemed we were both confirmed bachelors." This time she laughed. "Just the same," she said, "the lunch lasted four hours." She paused. "He's such a bright, wonderful man, and when I got to meet his children in France and saw how much he loved them, I guess that's what did it."

Almost on cue, as we finished, Monsieur Malle appeared. The distinguished director of My Dinner With André, Atlantic City, Au Revoir Les Enfants and Lacombe, Lucien is short in stature but extremely long in charm. After Candice was gone and we were alone, I found that he had made not only movies in America but also documentaries. "I love your country," he said earnestly. "The way it has been populated by its waves of immigrants and, behind the facade of what foreigners think of as 'American,' your endless variety of subcultures. Truly, it's a paradise for a filmmaker."

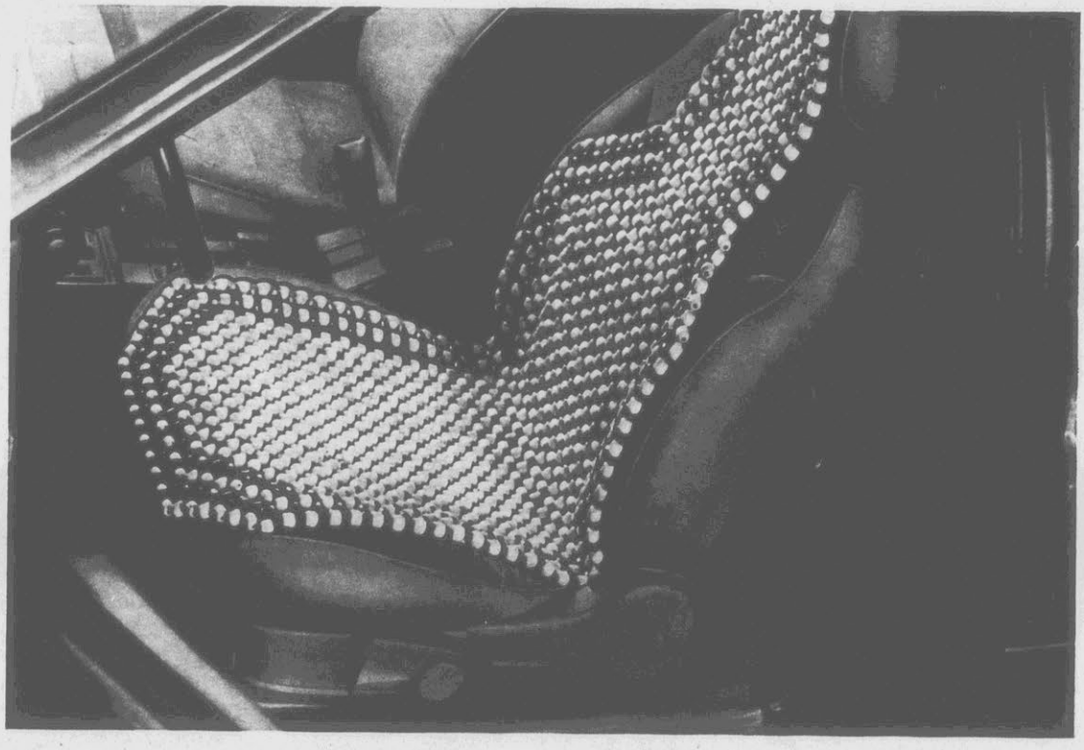
What, I demanded sternly, had Candice and he talked about during that four-hour lunch? He smiled. "Actually," he said, "it was longer than that. We started at one o'clock, and people were coming in for dinner by the time we got up. I was very attracted to her—her looks first, but then her modesty and her brightness and, above all, her humor—particularly about herself. Very few actresses have that the way she does." He paused. "We really didn't fall in love, though, until she came to visit me in France. When I saw how she was with my children, how she loved them and they loved her, that did it. I knew I wanted to marry her."

NEW YORK CITY'S BEADED "SURVIVAL SEAT" BONANZA

The Secret's Out

On the streets of New York City, the word is spreading fast about the beaded "Survival Seat." It's so well designed, so comfortable . . . it's been said it "soaks up bumps, jolts, and potholes." I couldn't believe it—so I tried one!

By Ed Gordon, N.Y.C., NY



Over the past few months, every time I hailed a cab, I began noticing drivers sitting on a strange looking, wooden beaded seat cover. It wrapped around the headrest and all the way down under the driver's thighs.

Naturally, I wondered, "How could something so awkward looking actually be comfortable?" As any typical New Yorker would do, I struck up a conversation with my driver.

At first he laughed. Evidently I wasn't the first to find this "cushion" so interesting. He called it his "Survival Seat." And he went on and on about its many benefits—like "an all-over massage, prevents backaches, relieves tension, and keeps you cool." He mentioned how the beaded seats have been the rage in Europe and the Orient for years. He found it so well designed and comfortable that if necessary, he had no problem increasing his work hour shifts. Now that one was hard for me to believe!

THE "SURVIVAL SEAT" CHALLENGES NEW YORK CITY STREETS!

I started thinking about cab drivers and all the hassles they endure in one working day. These guys sit behind the wheel of their taxis for twelve grueling hours a day, six days a week. In the summertime, the asphalt gets griddle hot beneath them. The traffic is always heavy and slow moving. For them, terrible back and bottom pain must always be a certainty. If a beaded car seat is good enough to soak up a cabby's bumps, jolts and potholes on the road, I figured it must be worth my while to try it!

I'll admit, I was skeptical at first, but after hearing the same positive response from other cab drivers, I came to one conclusion. Short of a miracle drug being invented tomorrow, the "Survival Seat" may very well be the "quick fix" solution to a terrible backache!

After placing one in my car, I found that the "Survival Seat" adds support to those overly-soft sometimes sagging car seats. I found that it really does maintain the proper alignment of my spine while improving my posture. It also gave me great support to my lower back.

Imagine what I discovered—hundreds of smooth rounded wooden beads, rotating ever so slightly with every shift of the body's weight. This is the secret that creates the massaging effect, stimulating circulation and preventing driving fatigue!

New York City streets are bumpy and pothole ridden. One could easily hit countless potholes in a day—jarring one's nerves, and creating aches and pains throughout the body. But the "Survival Seat" helps eliminate stress points that can cause these aches and pains from a rough, rocky ride. I found that it even relieves pressure and tension put on the inner thighs that cuts off circulation in my legs!

Furthermore, the "Survival Seat" prevents sticking to a vinyl seat on hot days. One afternoon, in 90° heat, I hopped into my car prepared to be fried to my seat. Surprisingly, the beaded cover allowed cool air to circulate between me and the car seat!

IF IT WORKS SO WELL IN THE CAR ... WHAT ABOUT IN THE OFFICE OR AT HOME?

What's really amazing is that after months of use, the seat stayed looking brand new! The wooden beads are sanded smooth and varnished for added protection. Then, they're hand woven with extra strong nylon filament. It (approx. 53" long and 17" wide) is guaranteed to take on all sizes and weights!

I was sold! The "Survival Seat" really works! It lived up to my every expectation. I tried it out on my desk chair . . . dining seat . . . it even made my lounge chair more relaxing. The point is, no matter where you use the "Survival Seat," you'll find that it will make your life more tolerable . . . more comfortable . . . and much more enjoyable.

YOU TOO CAN TAKE ON "THE NEW YORK CHALLENGE!"

At the low price of only $19.95, you too can now take on "THE NEW YORK CHALLENGE." If you don't agree that the "Survival Seat" will make your driving more comfortable, relieve tension, and help save your back from excruciating aches and pains, return it for a prompt and full refund—it's as simple and easy as that!

Actress Niamh Cusack and famous co-star on London stage in The Admirable Crichton

Do you recognize the gentleman in the photo? He is Rex Harrison, the international star, making a triumphant comeback on the London stage after beating approaching blindness at age 81. Surgery enabled Harrison to win a lengthy battle against cataracts and made possible his recent appearance in a revival of J.M. Barrie's 1902 comedy The Admirable Crichton.

Best known for his Oscar-winning role 25 years ago as the eccentric elocution professor, Henry Higgins, opposite Audrey Hepburn in My Fair Lady, the actor (real name: Reginald Carey Harrison) has been married half a dozen times. On June 17, Queen Elizabeth finally knighted Harrison, who gratefully acknowledged, "It is a very great honor and one which I am proud to accept."

Sir Rex is tentatively scheduled, along with Glynis Johns and Stewart Granger, to appear on Broadway this fall in a revival of W. Somerset Maugham's play The Circle.

Pedal Power

Although the first practical automobile was built by two Germans—Gottlieb Daimler and Karl Benz—and the Germans still produce some of the best cars in the world, the old-fashioned pedal bicycle is enjoying a resurgence in West Germany.

The number of bicycles in that country increased from 18.6 million to 46.6 million between 1970 and 1984, according to one estimate, and has now reached the point where there is at least one bicycle in 85% of the households. West Germany currently is home to 61 million people. Reasons for the bike boom: In many West German cities, it is easier, cheaper and faster to negotiate a bicycle than a car through traffic, and biking is beneficial to one's health, offering a daily source of exercise.

Useful Information on 'Traveler's Diarrhea'

Some 30 million Americans this year will be at risk of developing traveler's diarrhea as they vacation, study or work in developing countries.

Traveler's diarrhea is usually a short-term ailment, caused by consuming contaminated food or water. The World Health Organization says it "is now a widespread phenomenon affecting 20% to 50% of all travelers." In addition to overly frequent bowel evacuations, its symptoms include abdominal cramps, nausea, bloating, fever and "feeling lousy."

Dr. Stephen Ostroff, an epidemiologist at the Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta, says there are no immunizations to prevent the illness. If you're going to a country whose water supply is known to be unclean, be certain to boil the water before drinking or using it—even to brush your teeth. Boiling water is one handy method of ensuring it to be free of bacteria and parasites. Purification tablets, chlorine and iodine may not kill parasites.

If you're preparing food in a foreign country, Dr. Ostroff advises, cook it thoroughly—especially meat, poultry, fish, eggs and vegetables. If you're eating out, remember that food which is hot to the touch may not be bacteria-free. Don't be shy about asking that any dish you order be reheated to a steaming or piping-hot condition, so that the bacteria are destroyed.

Foods that are meant to be eaten cold should be served cold. Bacteria diminish in hot or cold temperatures but multiply rapidly at room temperature. It's a good idea not to eat foods exposed at room temperature for more than two hours.

Other tips: Don't buy food from street vendors. Don't drink tap water or unpasteurized milk or eat unpasteurized dairy products. Private homes and restaurants known to cater to tourists are probably the best places in which to eat as regards hygienic practices and regulations.

Before leaving home, do not take any antibiotics as preventive measures, since they can foster the growth of antibiotic-resistant bacteria in your body. And if you contract mild diarrhea on your travels (one or two unformed stools within eight hours, accompanied by cramps, nausea and malaise), do not succumb to the temptation to immediately swallow some medicine to stop it. Drink plenty of liquids and give the diarrhea 48 to 72 hours to run its course and rid your bowel of the irritant. For more severe symptoms—bloody stools, fever, continuous diarrhea and serious fluid loss—seek medical help. And should you need an injection, be sure the doctor uses a disposable needle and syringe.

We Can Turn Our Schools Around

A REVOLUTION IS happening in Hammond, Ind. You see it in Joe Craig's eyes when he tells you about his students. You can sense it in Jeanette Misicko's ardor as she deals with her kindergarteners. But if you want to really understand it, you have to talk to someone like 16-year-old Lisa Hart, a real expert. Last year, she was a grade behind in school, cutting classes and almost flunking. Her plan was to drop out—and in almost any other city, she probably would have done that by now. But this year Lisa got A's and B's in advanced classes, showing up for school every day and loving it. "I'm planning on going to college," she told me. "I'm getting the applications now. I want to study history or anthropology—I love the stuff. I'd need a scholarship, but my teacher says that if I keep up the way I'm going, I'll probably get one."

Hammond is a city of about 100,000 residents, with a mainly blue-collar population, 40 minutes from Chicago's Loop. It spends about $3000 a year on each public school student—less than half what some affluent areas can afford—and its teachers don't make as much as their counterparts in some other places. Local people sometimes joke that Indiana legislators think Hammond is really in Illinois and never appropriate enough money for education in the city. But this city has slashed its dropout rate, brought former students back to school and turned uninterested parents into cheerleaders for education. A fact sheet distributed by the school system begins with this injunction to teachers, parents, students and administrators involved in the war against dropping out:

Possess an overpowering sense of purpose, mission and philosophy.

It may not have as much money as some of its neighbors, but Hammond certainly has that sense of purpose.

In Joe Craig's innovative classroom, teenagers who once thought about quitting school are finding good reasons to stay on: (l-r) Michelle Richardson, Craig, Mike Heath, Lisa Hart. Below: School administrator Steve Watson. "This is challenge education," he says.

It is possible to get our children excited about subjects like history, math, English, science. The people of Hammond have proved it.

Steve Watson is the man who runs the school system's program, which it calls At-Risk. He told me that the first step toward winning the war is to see people where others might see statistics: "At-Risk youths are people who have potential but have never recognized that potential. They're not children who can't succeed; they're children who lack direction and support."

Watson explained that in 1987 the superintendent of schools asked him to look into solutions to the mounting problems confronting Hammond's school system. He began by organizing committees of school staff—counselors, teachers, social workers—but the group soon expanded to include people from the community—parents, police, even the students themselves. What evolved out of those committees were seven programs, for preschool-age through 12th grade, each designed to address a specific problem. Under the umbrella title At-Risk, the programs, each with its own acronym, are held at 12 schools.

One of them is the Area Career Center—a vocational school. There, I met Joseph Craig, a veteran teacher who took on a group of high school students on the verge of dropping out. His At-Risk program, called Project STAY (Strategic Teaching Alternatives for Youth), allows students to study academic subjects with him for part of their day, then take vocational courses for the rest.

"They were all average or above average in ability," he told me. "But they weren't going to school, or they were failing every subject. It was a real tragedy; we were losing these kids."

The first thing Craig did was pay attention to his students' needs. He tailored a study plan for each student and persuaded Purdue University to send a group of education majors to the school to do one-on-one tutoring. Now, his classroom is a maze of activity: students helping each other or working with tutors, reading books or watching a Shakespeare video or working at computers. Not everyone is in class. Many of the students go to local elementary schools to tutor children in academic trouble. It sounds strange—teenagers who were in academic trouble themselves just a few months ago now serving as teachers and role models—but it seems to work. "This is not remedial education," Steve Watson told me. "This is challenge education."

Michelle Richardson, 17, is a student in Craig's class who has discovered a love for studying history and English. "I had planned to quit school," she recalled. "My mom asked me, 'Why don't you try this?' I said, 'OK.' At my old school, nobody seemed to care. Here, everybody's nice. It makes you want to do your work."

Mike Heath, 16, another of Craig's students, had been doing poorly at his last school because, he said, "I didn't get along with a lot of teachers." Now, he's taking an architectural drawing class after his regular schoolwork. "I want to be an artist," he said.

At-Risk programs are not only for teenage students. Hammond no longer is content to allow children to flounder through grade school either. "I wish they had a program like this when our oldest daughter was in first grade," Dorsey Dye told me. He and his wife, Rosa Maria, were at a Lafayette Elementary School meeting with Susan Vandemerkt, the school's human-services director.

Like her counterparts in every other school in town, Vandemerkt regularly keeps in touch with the students' parents. She invites them to meetings and asks them to volunteer in school activities. If there are troubles at home, she tries to help. On this day, she and the Dyes were meeting to talk about Elizabeth, their younger daughter. Elizabeth is enrolled in a developmental first-grade class that aims to help her remedy some problems in her learning skills before she becomes discouraged and stops trying. If all goes well, she will be in a regular first-grade class next year.

Isn't first grade a bit early to worry about dropping out? According to the kindergarten teacher Jeanette Misicko, it may be too late. "I could make a list of six or eight children in kindergarten today," she told me, "and if you looked at that list 10 years from now, you'd see that they would be the At-Risk children of tomorrow." Misicko, a gentle, articulate woman, presides over a classroom at Caldwell School in which children are divided into groups that work with language specialists and parent volunteers, who help to remedy areas in which the students lag behind their peers. There is no grading, no competition—just encouragement to strengthen them until they are ready, in a year or two, to join the mainstream. Someday, Mrs. Misicko hopes, these children will sit in a regular classroom and know that they are as capable as any other child there.

And they will know they will live in a city that cares about their future.

Washington politicians are besieged daily by lobbyists for every cause. Here's how one group—tackling the enormous problem of world hunger—got results

THEY DEFY THE ODDS

BY EDWARD KLEIN

THE INTERNATIONAL FUND for Agricultural Development (IFAD) can train an African farmer to grow a ton of food for half the price it costs to ship the same food from America. But in the winter of 1985, this United Nations agency was about to be put out of business because of a squabble between the U.S. and the OPEC oil-producing countries—just at a time when millions were starving to death in Ethiopia, the Sudan and other drought-stricken regions of sub-Saharan Africa.

Shortly before this crisis, a boyish-looking former music teacher had moved from Los Angeles to a shabby basement apartment on Capitol Hill. Sam Harris' vision was a large one: to end world hunger by the year 2000. "I was defying the odds," he says today.

Since the late 1970s, Harris had been working on the hunger problem with an all-volunteer grass-roots group of citizens around the country. His organization, which he called Results, had 40 groups in 27 states by 1984. But that year Harris decided to broaden the lobby's political impact by working out of Washington, D.C. All he needed to get started was a strong issue.

Dan Borris

When Results learned that winter of the threat to the International Fund for Agricultural Development, its members went into action. All over the country, small groups educated themselves on the issue of food relief. Then, armed with facts and figures, volunteers visited dozens of newspapers and talked with editorial writers.

"By July," recalls Harris, "we had initiated 46 editorials and feature pieces and 70 letters to the editor. One day, my phone rang. It was a ranking official at the Agency for International Development. 'You can stop the editorials now,' she told me. 'You've won.'"

Since then, Results has grown to 105 groups in 47 states, plus five foreign countries: the United Kingdom, West Germany, Australia, Canada and Japan. Harris now fields a paid staff of eight and boasts a budget that has increased tenfold, to more than $500,000 (financed by about 2400 private, individual contributions). So far, the group has played a role in the passage of three hunger bills in Congress. This year, it is working for the enactment of the Global Poverty Reduction Act. This bill would direct the President to set specific, measurable goals to reduce the rate of child mortality, raise the level of female literacy and reduce the number of families living in absolute poverty.

"Just think of it," says Harris. "Nearly 40,000 children die each day of hunger and hunger-related diseases. That's as if 100 jumbo jets with 400 children on each were to crash today, killing all aboard.

"It's so easy to be cynical and say politics is the place to make a mess, not the place to make a difference. But that's not true. Very few of us spend any time communicating with our elected representatives. We've lost faith in government, so we don't speak out. We fail to act."

Harris, 42, comes to political activism by way of his parents. His father ran (unsuccessfully) for mayor of West Miami, Fla., and published (successfully) a community newspaper. His mother is a member of the Jolly Walkers, a group of civic-minded ladies whose daily 6:30 a.m. jaunts double as trash-pickup brigades. Harris was involved in The Hunger Project (an offshoot of est, a self-empowerment group popular in the 1970s). "During that time," he says, "I spoke with 7000 high school students. I asked the students the name of their Congressman. Of 7000 students asked, 6800 didn't know. A light went on in my head!"

The idea was to coach small groups of friends to write letters to their Congressman. At first, the response was disappointing—until Harris' activities got some newspaper and TV coverage. "When we learned how to enlist the power of the media," Harris says, "Results came of age."

Harris recruited new members by networking with activist groups around the country, as well as with former members of The Hunger Project. In his lean-and-mean formula, each Results group is composed of four "partners," who attend three meetings a month: the first is a national conference call, where all 400 partners talk to experts in the field of hunger; the second is devoted to learning to speak about the issues; and the third is opened up to interested friends and is when the actual letter-writing takes place.

Sam Harris is often asked what he considers his greatest victory. "People think they don't have the right job or the right education or the right bank account to make a difference," he says. "But Results taught me something very important. Doing things you never thought you could makes you aware of two simple words: I can!" P

Doc Severinsen

THIS WAS EARLY ON A Friday afternoon in California, and Doc Severinsen was getting ready to go to work.

"I get in around 2:30 p.m.," he said, "and we're out of there by 6:30 p.m. I live in Hollywood Hills, and it's about a 12- to 15-minute drive to Burbank. It's close. I always felt it would be pretty hard for a trumpet player to live in Beverly Hills or Bel Air or Brentwood. This is just fine—a nice big house and then a small house, and everyone in the neighborhood gets along. In an average week, we work four days, and one night there's a rerun."

Chris Cuffaro

BRADY'S BITS

When The Tonight Show was broadcast from Rockfeller Center in Manhattan, Doc lived in northern New Jersey. "It was an hour and a half commute," he recalled. "But I enjoyed the drive. It gave me time to unwind, to think. We'd raised the family there, and it was a jolt when the show moved to California. I'm still a New Yorker at heart—worrying about the Knicks, about the Giants." The Severinsens usually return to New York each Christmas, but they didn't last year. "We've got a 14-year-old dog that isn't well," Doc said. "And they know when you're away. They're affected by it. So we stayed home." What kind of dog? "Oh, just a mixed breed."

What Doc works at, and has for the past 27 years, is The Tonight Show on NBC with Johnny Carson. He leads the band and plays trumpet and wears loud, flamboyant clothes that give Johnny material. How did that start? "Well," said Doc, "when you worked in a band, you sat there in a dark blue suit, everyone dressed the same. And when I started on The Tonight Show, I realized I could be a little different. I always liked color, and I started by wearing a bright tie, and Johnny would make a comment, and that's how it started. But honestly, I started out concerned just about the music, worrying about making the music right. The wardrobe just happened."

Are he and Carson and Ed McMahon pals or just guys who work in the same shop?

"I guess Johnny and Ed and I are close friends," he replied. "We couldn't be together all those years and have hostility. You couldn't hide that; it would show through. But we're individuals. We go our separate ways."

Every year, someone takes a competitive shot at Carson, trying to topple the king. This time, it's Arsenio Hall and Pat Sajak. Does that concern Severinsen? "Sure, we're curious," he said. "We want to see what they're doing. Will it impact on us, will it change any of our lives, will we be out on the street? We don't really have any worries, but we pay attention."

BORN: Carl Severinsen, on July 7, 1927, in Arlington, Ore. PERSONAL: Married third wife, Emily Marshall, in 1980; five children from previous marriages. CAREER HIGHLIGHTS: Member of the Ted Fio Rito Band, 1945; Charlie Barnet Band, 1947-49; worked with Tommy Dorsey, Benny Goodman and others, 1950-54; member of band on The Steve Allen Show, 1954-55; member of NBC Orchestra on The Tonight Show, 1962-67; Tonight Show music director, 1967–.

Doc Severinsen is the guy in the loud jackets on "The Tonight Show." But he's lots more than Johnny Carson's stooge. The man is a great musician.

His real name is Carl (his dad was a dentist, and Carl became "Little Doc"), and he was raised in Arlington, Ore. His father, a gifted violinist, pushed music lessons. For some reason, Little Doc liked the idea of the trombone, eventually settling for the only horn in the local music store—a trumpet. By age 7, he was so good he was drafted by the high school band. At 12, he won a national talent contest and, while still a teenage student, was hired by a touring orchestra.

After serving in the Army, Doc worked with Tommy Dorsey, Benny Goodman and Charlie Barnet. In 1949, he went to work with the NBC staff orchestra. He joined Carson in 1962 and became Tonight's musical director five years later.

The man is a serious musician. His next project is a classical album with the Cincinnati Pops Orchestra, and his current album is a big band record with Dave Brubeck, Gerry Mulligan and other American jazz legends. But Doc said, "On college dates, I play more contemporary music. I have a jazz group. And I like rock 'n' roll—the Beatles and some other groups whose names I can't even remember."

Not-So-Nice Doggie

Getting to know you: Hanks and Beasley

In Turner & Hooch, Tom Hanks plays a compulsively neat police detective whose life is turned upside down when he inherits a murdered friend's very unfriendly dog—the only witness to the crime. Dog-trainer Clint Rowe says Beasley, the dog he used, wasn't really vicious: "It was actually hard to get him to clasp his mouth around Hanks' throat for one scene." Well, yeah, but how did Hanks feel? Disney.

Smarties and Debs

What's nice about Wise Guys and Coming Out—two movies shown back-to-back on the P.O.V. (Point of View) series of independent documentaries—is this: Even though the first is a behind-the-scenes look at the Jeopardy! $100,000 Tournament of Champions and the second follows a young woman as she prepares for the annual Washington, D.C., debutante cotillion, the filmmakers leave it up to us whether to admire or giggle at the very intense quiz-show contestants and the earnest deb. Cover Story....

'21 Jump Street' Has A New Day

By Jon Burlingame

Ten years ago, colleagues told Stephen J. Cannell he was crazy to leave Universal Television to start a studio of his own. "You'll go broke," they said.

He almost did. "Tenspeed and Brown Shoe," the first series from Stephen J. Cannell Productions, lasted just 13 weeks, despite nearly unanimous critical praise. But "The Greatest American Hero," which followed, lasted three seasons; "The A-Team" ran five; and "Hardcastle & McCormick" ran three.

Today, Cannell is the largest independent supplier of series to American commercial television. He has also had the last laugh on his old Universal pals. Come fall, Cannell will have more programs — five — in prime time than Universal.

Cannell is an unusual hybrid of Hollywood mogul and regular guy. He likes to write mornings in Newport Beach, close to his yacht but three hours from his office. He has been married to the same woman for 25 years. He values friendships over professional relationships.

Perhaps those values help to explain the middle-America appeal of such Cannell shows as "The A-Team" and "Hunter" and, from his Universal days, "The Rockford Files."

These series rarely pose any intellectual challenge, but they offer a little humor, a lot of action, and strong, sometimes offbeat characters with clear moral codes.

* "Top of the Hill," a new Thursday-night drama on CBS with William Katt as a congressman: "It's about people who come out of his constituency who have problems, and how he deals with those problems while also dealing with the internal workings of Washington, D.C."

* "Booker," a Sunday-night spinoff of Fox's popular young-cop show "21 Jump Street," starring Richard Grieco: "The character's interesting — kind of a bad boy with a heart of gold."

* "21 Jump Street," which moves to Mondays on Fox with renewed emphasis on the original relationship between Hanson (Johnny Depp) and Penhall (Peter DeLuise): "They're funny together," comments Cannell.

* "Wiseguy" returns for a third season on Wednesday nights on CBS: "We're going to try to stick to five episodes (per story arc), then do some free-standing episodes in between."

* "Hunter," Cannell's highest-rated series, is back for its sixth season on NBC Saturday nights: "If you really look at television, it's character-driven, not concept-driven," says Cannell. "With that show, people want to watch Fred (Dryer) and Stepfanie (Kramer)."

Unlike most writers, Cannell is forced to think as a studio executive as well. "One of the greatest conceits that runs rampant in this industry," says Cannell, "is this idea of people anointing themselves as brilliant and geniuses. I just think it's such bull. I can only judge my work by how it stacks up against the other things I've done and how it pleases me as a person. I know that when I'm really good, at the nine or 10 part of the Stephen Cannell scale, that I can please myself real well. And sometimes other people."

Challenger

The ABC movie "Challenger" will recount the tragic story of the failed 1986 space shuttle launching in which seven people were killed. The three-hour drama will focus on the difficulties leading up to the launch and on the heroism of the astronauts, most notably of school teacher Christa McAuliffe (who will be played by Karen Allen). Currently in production at actual NASA locations for broadcast during the 1989-90 season, the movie also stars Brian Kerwin, Joe Morton and Keone Young.

Michele Will Tell

By Michele Marks

Dear Michele: Can you tell me something about the life and career of Gene Tierney? What was the last film she made? — JEAN BACH, CINCINNATI, OHIO

Gene Eliza Taylor Tierney was born Nov. 20, 1920, in Brooklyn, N.Y., and was named after her mother's only brother, who had died in his teens. Her father was a stockbroker, and Tierney was educated at posh private schools. In her late teens, Tierney relinquished her role as a debutante to become an actress. Although she had had no dramatic training, Fox Studios recognized the publicity value of her society background and quickly launched her film career. She debuted opposite Henry Fonda in the 1940 film "The Return of Jesse James." Two of her more important films were "Laura" (1944)and "Leave Her to Heaven" (1945), for which she received her only Oscar nomination. In 1941, Tierney eloped with a then-unknown fashion designer, Oleg Cassini. Their first daughter, Daria, was born deaf, blind, and retarded as a result of German measles, which the actress contracted during her pregnancy. Tierney filed for divorce from Cassini in 1947, but the couple reconciled and had another daughter, Christina, before the union finally ended in 1952.

After her divorce, she was courted by Howard Hughes and a young John F. Kennedy, and also became involved with Prince Aly Khan. When their affair abruptly ended, she suffered a total nervous breakdown and was admitted to a Hartford, Conn., sanitarium. For five years, 1955-60, Tierney was out of show business. During the '60s, Tierney made a few films. Her last, "The Pleasure Seekers," was released in 1964. She has since appeared in the ABC movie "Daughter of the Mind" (1969); published her autobiography, "Self Portrait," in 1979; and appeared in the 1980 miniseries "Scruples." The actress was married to Texas oilman W. Howard Lee from 1960 until his death in 1981.

Dear Michele: Did Ruth Roman appear as Della Street on the "Perry Mason" TV series before Barbara Hale? — ALLIE MAE GRIFFIN, RIO OSO, CALIF.

No. Barbara Hale originated the role of Della Street in 1957 and stayed with the CBS series until its eventual cancellation in 1965. Roman's series credits include the 1965-66 TV series "The Long, Hot Summer" and a short run on "Knots Landing" during the 1986-87 season. In the 1973-74 revival of the "Perry Mason" series, Sharon Acker played Della Street to Monte Markham's Perry Mason.

Dear Michele: Since Dotrice is such an unusual name, are Roy Dotrice, of "Beauty and the Beast," and Karen Dotrice, of "Mary Poppins," related? How old is Karen now? — C. DELISE, STERLING, VA.

Karen Dotrice, who is now 44, is one of Roy Dotrice's three daughters, all of whom are actresses. Karen's sister Michele is married to Edward Woodward ("The Equalizer").

Dear Michele: Michael Keaton was great in "The Dream Team." Can you tell me how old he is, where he is from, and if he's married? — BARBARA PHILLIPS, CLINTON, TENN.

Keaton, who is currently starring as dapper Bruce Wayne and his alter ego in the spectacular "Batman" flick, was born Sept. 9, 1951, in Pittsburgh, Penn. He grew up in nearby Forest Grove, Penn., the youngest of seven children. His father was a civil engineer and surveyor, and Keaton's real name is Michael Douglas. Since that name already belongs to you-know-who, he adopted the name Keatonafter spotting a photograph of actress Diane Keaton in the papers. He married actress Caroline McWilliams, who starred as Marcy Hill in "Benson," in 1982. The couple, now separated, have a 6-year-old son, Sean Willie.

Dear Michele: Can you tell me if there is any relation between actors Kevin and Andrew McCarthy? Are they father and son? — LIZ STICKS, TRENTON, N.J.

Kevin and Andrew McCarthy are not related, although Kevin is the brother of author Mary McCarthy. Andrew, who is the third of four brothers, has described his father as "a stock analyst or something."

Please address questions to Michele Will Tell, c/o this newspaper, P.O. Box 2315, Grand Central Station, New York, NY 10163. Because of the volume of mail received, personal replies cannot be sent.

Miss America

It's almost that time of year again. On Sept. 16, NBC will broadcast the 70th annual Miss America Pageant to determine who will wear the 1990 crown. Gary Collins will host for the eighth consecutive year. With "A Moment in Time" as its theme, the pageant promises to be "second to none in entertainment values and suspense," according to pageant chairman, Leonard Horn.

DICKIE ROOK Presents THE Rook Look AT GARMENT CARE

Perspiration Stains

With summer's hot and sticky weather, perspiring is our body's system to regulate its internal temperature. But if it's healthy for our bodies, it isn't necessarily so for our garments.

Fresh perspiration is an acid that turns alkaline through bacterial reaction, causing a deteriorating effect on some dyes and fabrics. Misuse of deodorants and antiperspirants can also contribute to color.

We suggest that you have your garments cleaned more often in the summer.

Soap Scoop

'One Life to Live' is a study in contrasts

By Connie Passalacqua

Jensen Buchanan

"One Life to Live" continues to be a soap of extremes, producing moments we just absolutely love, followed by moments we absolutely hate. Recently, the show ran two concurrent story lines: One was a brilliant, stinging parody of the Daytime Emmys. The other, centered around dark villain Austin Buchanan (played by David Gautreaux) threatening, raping and stalking fair maid Sarah Gordon (played by Jensen Buchanan), was so melodramatically simplistic it threatened to send soaps back to the days of the silent-movie mustache twirlers.

"OLTL" 's ongoing "Fraternity Row" soap-within-a-soap story line has been a continuing delight for both viewers and soap insiders. But it was never as much fun as at the recent Daisy Awards, which parodied the real-life Daytime Emmys airing on the same day. (Let it be noted that "OLTL" is skipped over every year in the Daytime Emmy nominations and that "OLTL" Executive Producer Paul Rauch is a critic of the whole rotten system.) For weeks, the show primed us with all the intrigue that goes on behind the scenes in the nomination and winning process. Fighting "Fraternity Row" 's own Megan Gordon (played by Jessica Tuck) for Best Actress honors was Megan's personal nemesis Spring Skye (played by Sharon Schlarth), the best bad actress we've ever seen. Spring arrived at the awards in a hot tub inside a limo, and the fun went on from there.

And yes, "OLTL" 's Daisy awards were a lot more exciting and entertaining than the real Daytime Emmy Awards, which aired the same day on another channel. More on both next week.

• What's the difference between playing a good guy and a bad guy on soaps? That's a common interview question which most often draws a response ranging from "the clothes" to "duh?" Finally, there's a really interesting answer from Greg Beecroft, who created a sensation playing blue-collar hero Tony Reardon on "Guiding Light" a few years ago and is now playing Brock Lombard on "As the World Turns."

"It wasn't difficult to memorize the 40 to 50 pages of dialogue Tony had to recite each day, because Tony always told the truth," says Beecroft. "Since Brock lies to everyone and changes his story depending on whom he's talking to, I've found memorizing these lines a lot more difficult and confusing."

MONDAY

MACGYVER

Richard Dean Anderson has the title role in ABC's "MacGyver." In a repeat episode airing Monday, July 24, MacGyver must track down a vial of deadly bacteria stolen from the Phoenix Foundation.

TV Chatter

By Frank Sanello

Judith Light is one of those actresses overweight women love to hate. Every week the glamorous size 4 actress appears on ABC's "Who's the Boss?" and makes ordinary size 12s feel like slabs of pork. But don't despair, all you Ladies of the Refrigerator. At one time, svelte Judith was a size 12 herself!

The balloon days occurred about 15 years ago, when Light was an out-of-work actress who killed time (and stifled depression) by hanging out in front of the fridge. "I'd open the refrigerator door," she recalls. "The light would go on, and I'd do 20 minutes."

In those days, a snack was "chocolate pudding, a half-gallon of ice cream, a box of cookies." Light was never bulimic, however. "How could you spend money on good food and then throw up?" she says. "It's my heritage; don't waste good money."

At one point, her weight reached 160 pounds. "After that, I stopped getting on the scale." So how did she turn into her current reed-thin self? "I got out of the bathtub one day, caught myself in the mirror out of the corner of my eye and said, 'Enough is enough.' In my case, enough was actually too much." Light credits her current figure not to dieting ("I don't diet."), but to daily workouts with a trainer. Women, you can start your exercise bikes now ...

It has been a good year and a bad year for the Rachins family. The Rachins are Alan Rachins and his wife, Joanna Frank, who play the bickering Douglas and Sheila Brackman on NBC's "L.A. Law." Frank is also the sister of the show's creator, producer-writer Steven Bochco.

It has been a great year for Rachins' character, Douglas Brackman, the penny-pinching manager of the law firm. During the first two seasons, Brackman was so mean and cheap he made Ebenezer Scrooge look like the Rockefeller Foundation.

HOCUS-FOCUS

CAN YOU TRUST YOUR EYES? There are at least six differences in drawing details between top and bottom panels. How quickly can you find them? Check answers with those below.

Differences: 1. Nameplate is missing. 2. Sleeve is shorter. 3. Stethoscope tube is shorter. 4. Diploma is smaller. 5. Bottle is smaller. 6. Neckline is different.

• SUM MIX! Twelve mixed numbers are given at right. How quickly can you pick out four of these to produce a total of exactly 100? To speed things up, reduce fractions to their simplest terms. For example, reduce 10/16ths to 5/8ths, etc.

★ 100 ★
$20\frac{10}{16}$	★	$15\frac{17}{51}$
$42\frac{14}{21}$	★	$35\frac{13}{52}$
$12\frac{5}{18}$	★	$33\frac{13}{91}$
$19\frac{4}{10}$	★	$7\frac{27}{36}$
$14\frac{17}{51}$		$19\frac{7}{14}$

$14\frac{17}{51}$, $35\frac{13}{52}$, $42\frac{14}{21}$, $7\frac{27}{36}$, will do it.

• WORD GAME! Find a number among letters of each word: 1. Bone. 2. Flour. 3. Canine. 4. Freight. 5. Thresher. Now add up the numbers. What's the sum?

1. One. 2. Four. 3. Nine. 4. Eight. 5. Three — total: 25.

NAME GAME MAGIC

The magician produces a small pad. He or she asks the audience to call out the last names of friends. As each name is given, the magician jots it down, folds the paper and drops it into a box or hat.

When a dozen or so names have been suggested, a member of the audience is asked to draw one name from the hat.

The magician removes the remaining names from the hat and sets them aside. Then, concentrating hard, he or she states the name that was drawn!
