Korean DC-10 Falls In Tripoli Early Reports List At Least 78 People Dead In Foggy Crash

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ROME — A Korean Air DC-10 with 199 people aboard crashed in heavy fog today three miles short of Tripoli airport in Libya, hitting homes and cars and bursting into flames. At least 78 people were killed, including four on the ground, news reports said.

Libya's official JANA news agency said the crash, the second in eight days of a DC-10, occurred at 7:30 a.m. (1:30 a.m. EDT). The cause was not immediately known.

The Korean Broadcasting System quoted South Korea's consul in Tripoli, Chang Kyung-soo, as saying the plane attempted a belly landing, indicating a problem with landing gear. It crashed into an orchard, broke into two pieces, and caught fire, officials said.

The pilot was quoted as saying visibility was poor. About an hour earlier, a Soviet jetliner rerouted to Malta rather than land in the fog.

"Early reports from Tripoli indicate that weather may have been a contributing factor," said James Reed, a spokesman in Washington for McDonnell Douglas Corp., which manufactures DC-10s.

The Korean Broadcasting System earlier said the pilot reported engine trouble, but the airline did not confirm this.

On July 19, a United Air Lines DC-10 crashed in Sioux City, Iowa, killing 111 people, after the tail engine blew apart and cut off the flow of hydraulic fluid needed to steer the plane.

JANA said at least 78 people were killed in today's crash. It said at least four died on the ground when the jet slammed into two houses.

Tripoli hospitals were reportedly treating 30 crash victims with unspecified wounds, 17 with burns and 66 who were in "good condition" and would be released within hours. Eight people were treated and released, the agency reported. It said 14 of the 18 crew members survived.

Airline officials in Seoul confirmed only 35 deaths among the passengers. It said 189 of the 199 aboard were South Koreans. The rest were Japanese and Libyans.

Government officials in Seoul said there were no signs the jet was the target of terrorism, as was a Korean Air flight that crashed in 1987.

Italian television showed the plane's tail sticking up from the rubble of a house. Hundreds of rescue workers carried away bodies as firefighters hosed down the smoldering wreckage.

Korean television showed a large bulldozer moving debris and charred wreckage spewed over a wide area. One of the engines lay in a crater.

JANA said the plane also hit cars on a road near the airport, which is about a 40-minute drive from the Libyan capital.

Korean Air in Seoul said Flight 803 left the South Korean capital Wednesday evening with stops in Bangkok, Thailand, and Jiddah, Saudi Arabia, en route to Tripoli.

Korean Broadcasting System said many of the Koreans aboard were workers for Daewoo Corp. and Donga Construction Co., which have projects in Libya.

Airline officials quoted the plane's captain, Kim Ho-jung, 54, as saying: "The airport was shrouded in a dense fog and visibility was poor

Lottery Proposal Advances

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — The Senate Finance Committee voted 13-7 today to approve a bill that would let North Carolinians vote on whether to have a statewide lottery.

The vote came after nearly two hours of debate and public comment on the bill, with most opponents citing moral objections and supporters advancing economic arguments.

Sen. Ken Royall, D-Durham, sponsor of the bill, said it would help raise money painlessly. He said North Carolina already allows bingo and raffles and that the people have a right to do as they choose with their money.

Royall said the lottery would raise up to $200 million in the first year of operation.

Sen. Helen Marvin, D-Gaston, agreed, saying, "North Carolina needs additional revenue to provide for its expanding social needs and to fund the Basic Education Program, the raises for teachers and state employees that are so important to our economy."

Ms. Marvin said people are going to gamble anyway, whether it is on the stock market or in Las Vegas.

"North Carolina should be able to enjoy revenue that could be raised by using this proclivity on the part of its people to engage in games," she said.

But Larry Braidfoot of the Christian Life Commission of the Southern Baptist Convention said lotteries are a regressive tax on the poor, with a lot of the money raised going to out-of-state companies that run the games.

And U.S. Attorney Margaret Curran said lotteries spawn illegal activities.

"State lotteries are to hard-core gambling what marijuana is to hard-core drugs like heroin and cocaine," she said.

Several speakers mentioned the possible impact legalized gambling might have on gambling addicts and children. But Royall said he was not worried about that.

"I've got three fine children and none of them are going to play the lottery," he said. "So if you bring them up right, you don't have to worry about it."

Assembly Prepares For Final Voting On Highway Program

By Dennis Patterson

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — The largest highway building program in the state's history comes up for a vote in the House and Senate today after winning overwhelming support for tentative approval.

Despite some Republican grumbling about using increased vehicle sales taxes for two years to finance salary increases, the $9 billion package was approved Wednesday 95-19 in the House and 39-8 in the Senate.

Both votes came largely along party lines, with Rep. Walter Jones, D-Pitt, the only Democrat to oppose the plan in the House.

"This is not what everybody wanted, but we don't always get all we want in the legislative process," said Rep. Sam Hunt, D-Alamance, who led the House negotiating team to develop the compromise with the Senate.

Gov. Jim Martin personally lobbied legislative Republicans Tuesday to vote against the agreement because of a Senate-backed provision to use increased vehicle sales taxes for two years to finance pay raises for teachers and state employees.

Hunt said the House panel engaged in "open and lively debate, bordering on warfare" over the sales tax issue.

"But when we came up against it, we had no alternative (to raise the needed funds)," Hunt said. "The only alternative we had was to walk

Jones Casts A 'No' Vote

State Rep. Walter B. Jones Jr., D-Pitt, one of 19 House members and the only Democrat voting Wednesday against the $9 billion highway building package, today called the proposal "a very heavy burden on the people."

Jones, contacted this morning in Raleigh, referred questions about his reasons for voting against the program to a June 2 release from his office. The Farmville resident today said his position has not changed.

"I am not opposed to a highway package. I know the importance of good roads. I intend to continue to support reasonable efforts to assure the construction of roads and the expenditure of taxpayer's money in an efficient and responsible manner," Jones said in his release.

"I do feel that this package place such a heavy burden on our working people that I could not in good conscience vote for its approval."

Other area representatives and senators voted in favor of the highway plan Wednesday as it gained overwhelming House and Senate support for tentative approval. Voting for the package were Rep. R. Eugene Rogers, D-Martin, Rep. Ed Warren, D-Pitt, and senators Bob Martin and Tom Taft, both Democrats from Pitt County.

away in a sort of murder-suicide pact and get no bill at all."

House Minority Leader Johnathan Rhyne, R-Lincoln, who had led resistance to the two-year tax diversion, said his wife had urged him in a phone call Wednesday to vote for the package. He said he would vote for it despite what he called "flaws" in the proposal.

"I wanted a highway bill and I'm going to vote for it because my two counties need roads," Rhyne said. But Rhyne said using the sales taxes for salaries would leave a hole in the budget in two years that would have to be filled.

"I think we need to put the Senate on notice that they took a good bill (from the House) and messed it up, and we'll be looking at them closely in two years to solve the problem they created," he said.

"I would like to see us appoint a new set of conferees and start over because I believe the Senate psychologically stamped us," said Rep. Larry Justus, R-Henderson. "I believe that once raided, (the highway fund is) always raided."

House Speaker Joe Mavretic said under House rules if the compromise was rejected, no new conference

Marijuana Plants Found In Pitt

A joint venture involving the Pitt County Sheriff's Department, Greenville police, the National Guard and State Bureau of Investigation has turned up more than $3 million worth of marijuana plants growing in Pitt County this week, according to Sheriff Ralph Tyson.

Tyson said that approximately 2,000 plants were destroyed in four fields near the All Pines area of the county and more than 500 plants were destroyed near Bethel, Penny Hill, Pactolus, Simpson, Black Jack and Ham's Crossroads.

The Penny Hill plants were destroyed Monday, the fields near Bethel and All Pines were wiped out Tuesday and the marijuana found growing in the other areas was destroyed Wednesday, the sheriff said.

Tyson said that the National Guard provided four helicopters for the operation and the SBI provided a spotter plane. He said that about 15 local law enforcement officers were involved in the sweep.

Tyson said the department tries to sweep Pitt County with this type of project at least once a year. He said he viewed this week's operation as a success.

The officers need one more day to cover the county, he said. Tyson said that if weather were to ground the operation today it will be completed "a week or two later."

No arrests have been made in conjunction with the operation, Tyson said.

Public Passes Up Medical Hearing

By Carol Tyer

THE DAILY REFLECTOR

State Department of Human Resources officials held a Greenville area hearing on the State Medical Facilities Plan on Wednesday afternoon, and virtually nobody came.

The hearing was one of six being held this month throughout the state on a draft of the plan for 1990 to be presented to Gov. Jim Martin around Dec. 1. Citizens' comments on any aspect of the plan were invited.

But no Greenville area citizens turned out to officially praise or contest any portion of the plan. The only person who testified was Dr. Howard Strawcutter of Lumberton, who addressed the need for rehabilitation facilities outside regional rehabilitation hospitals.

Ed Haney, one of four writers of the plan, said he believes major changes in the rehabilitation portion of the yearly plan may come in 1991. He said that a task force studying rehabilitation care in the state has been in existence for a year and a half and soon will report.

Besides Strawcutter, there were four others in attendance at the hearing, three from Greenville and one from Hyde County. One of those from Greenville was Roy Selby, administrative consultant to the East Carolina University Medical School and Pitt County Memorial Hospital.

Selby said, not in official testimony, that he feels the plan is an excellent one. He said the eastern 29 counties of the state will be permitted to add 170 nursing home and 30 rehabilitation beds this year. Pitt Memorial could, if it chose, could add 10 child-adolescent beds in its psychiatric unit and be in compliance with the plan, he said.

Haney said the plan was developed by the office of health resources development of the Divi-

EPA Puts N.C. Cities On Dirty Air List

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The nation's skies became more polluted in 1988, with up to 30 million more Americans now living in communities with unhealthy air, the Environmental Protection Agency said today.

New EPA data shows that 101 geographical areas now violate standards for ozone, the chief ingredient of smog, and 44 have unhealthy carbon monoxide levels.

The EPA report said Charlotte-Gastonia, Greensboro-Winston-Salem-High Point and Raleigh-

Durham have moderate ozone pollution and that Fayetteville has marginal ozone pollution.

The EPA report said carbon monoxide pollution in Greensboro-Winston-Salem and High Point and in Raleigh-Durham is in the moderate category.

In addition to identifying polluted areas under current law, the data has major implications for the future if Congress approves new clean air legislation this session.

Any new law would be expected to use the information to establish new deadlines for pollution cleanup, and could determine the severity of measures each area must adopt in order to make steady progress.

The newly compiled figures, when applied to President Bush's clean air proposal, would bump the Chicago-Gary, Ind., area into the top category for ozone pollution, allowing a 20-year cleanup in return for adopting tough, anti-pollution measures.

President Bush previously identified New York-northern New Jersey, Houston and Los Angeles as cities that would be in the two-decade "severe" category.

Another 27 cities under the administration plan would be listed in the "serious" ozone category, and have 10 years to clear their air while undertaking similar measures. A list compiled by The Associated Press on July 19, using slightly older data, identified 19 cities in the "serious" category.

The most polluted areas for carbon monoxide, under the Bush bill, would be New York-northern New Jersey; Steubenville Ohio-Weirton, W.Va.; Winnebago County, Wis.; Los Angeles; and Spokane, Wash. They would have a 10-year cleanup period, during which a change in motor vehicle fuels and tighter vehicle emissions standards would be used to improve air quality. Another 39 areas would be under a lesser category in a two-tiered system, and be expected to meet the standards in five years through the vehicle emission reductions.

The EPA blamed the hot, dry summer of 1988 for pushing the number of ozone violators past the century mark, an increase of 37 smoggy areas from a year ago. Not a single geographical area improved

Bethel Adopts Budgets

BETHEL — The Bethel Board of Commissioners has adopted an $848,033 budget for the town for 1989-90.

The budget reflects no increase in the town's tax rate, which will remain at 49 cents per $100 valuation. The tax rate has been in effect in Bethel since 1983.

Town officials said Bethel's new wastewater treatment plant, which went into operation recently, is the only facility of its kind licensed to operate in the state by the Division of Environmental Management.

The treatment process, called hydraulic control release, is not a chemical treatment plant, rather it utilizes a natural decomposition process — biological treatment — in a new 14-acre reservoir and an old seven-acre reservoir.

A spokesman said the new process of wastewater treatment qualifies Bethel for new funds and represents a pilot process for the state. The spokesman said the process has been used successfully in other Southern states.

Farm Scene

PITT EXTENSION CHAIRMAN

Government inspectors have become everyday occurrences on the tobacco warehouse floor since the inception of the price support program in 1939. In 1987, another type of inspector, pesticide samplers, joined this parade with the adoption of an ASCS program which tested random piles of tobacco for illegal pesticide residues. For 1989, the practice of sampling on the warehouse floor will continue with two new areas being added to the list of potential market detractors.

The random inspection of sheets for nesting represents another area of attention for the USDA-AMS Grading Service. Any pile of tobacco found to be nested cannot be sold on the day the nest is discovered. In addition, that pile must be removed from the warehouse floor, reworked and reweighed before it can be offered for sale on a subsequent day. All rehandlers of tobacco for resale, which is not eligible for price support, shall also certify that to the best of their knowledge all tobacco offered for resale is free of nested tobacco. Penalties for violations can range from fines of not more than $1,000 or imprisonment of not more than one year or both.

Increased testing for excessive residues of Maleic Hydrazide (MH) is also part of the new sampling campaign. The purpose of this sampling effort is to determine the average level of MH used on the crop and to check for possible misapplication or misuse. The more stringent demands of the tobacco export market have brought about the need to reduce the levels of MH residue in US tobacco. Beginning this year, growers whose tobacco is randomly selected for testing this season will receive written notification of its results and if MH residues are detected at exceeding levels, the grower's tobacco will be scheduled for re-testing in 1990.

Potential demand for the 1989 flue-cured crop is strong. The industry must not let the actions of a small number of individuals who abuse the market to impair the reputation of our tobacco and the thousands of farm families who are dependent upon the tobacco program that growers have worked so hard to preserve.

FAA Asked To Check Engine Of United DC-10

when I approached. I lost contact with the control tower for 15 minutes before the crash."

JANA said the airport control tower told Kim the visibility was only 800 feet. A Soviet Aeroflot airliner, informed of similar conditions about an hour earlier, decided to land instead in Malta, said a JANA editor, speaking on condition of anonymity.

The DC-10 crashed 25 minutes before it was scheduled to land.

Reed said McDonnell Douglas' efforts to obtain information about the crash were hampered because the United States has no diplomatic representatives in Libya.

Korean Air is a privately owned national flag carrier and the largest of two Korean airlines. It said the DC-10 was purchased in January 1977.

Formerly known as Korean Air Lines, the airline's Flight 007 was shot down over Soviet air space by Soviet fighters on Sept. 1, 1983, killing 269 people.

On Nov. 29, 1987, 115 people died when a Korean Air flight from Baghdad, Iraq, to Seoul was lost over the Andaman Sea near Burma. South Korea charged North Korea with placing a bomb on the plane. A North Korean agent was sentenced to death in connection with the incident earlier this year.

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The Federal Aviation Administration is being asked to investigate whether scrap parts were used in the engine of the United Airlines DC-10 that crashed last week.

The plane crash-landed at Sioux City, Iowa, killing 111 people.

Rep. John Dingell, D-Mich., chairman of a House Energy and Commerce subcommittee that oversees such investigations, asked the FAA on Wednesday to look into the possibility that General Electric Co. used scrap parts purchased from Kelly Air Force Base in San Antonio.

GE said the parts of the DC-10 engine being investigated could not have come from the Kelly scrap yard. GE manufactures the TF-39 engine that powers the Air Force's C-5A, as well as the similarly designed CF-6 engine that powers the commercial DC-10 and the Boeing 747.

The Air Force routinely throws away engine blades and turbine nozzles that may be good, repairable or unusable, and Dingell explained that "this cornucopia of blades and parts were all going into the disposal, or scrap yard at Kelly Air Force Base."

Investigators for the General Accounting Office found as early as November 1986 that GE and other contractors "purchased condemned Air Force TF-39 engine parts because they were identical to commercial CF-6 engine parts used to power the DC-10," Dingell said.

Dingell's letter to new FAA Administrator James B. Busey IV was first reported on by CBS News and later was made available by an aide. It asked for a response by Aug. 4.

Dingell noted that he had first warned former FAA Administrator Donald Engen in 1986 that scrapped parts might be used in new engines.

GE spokesman David Lane said in Cincinnati: "The part of the CF-6 engine being investigated ... including the fan section, does not employ TF-39 parts. Those parts are totally different and are not compatible."

The fan section disintegrated, and investigators believe shrapnel-like debris severed hydraulic lines, making the DC-10 almost impossible to control.

Ted Lopatkiewicz, spokesman for the National Transportation Safety Board, said the investigation is not focusing on any one area.

"We're investigating this in a number of areas and we will be analyzing all the wreckage very thoroughly. We are trying to recover as much of the engine as we can and we will analyze the wreckage of that engine," said Lopatkiewicz.

Federal investigators have removed the engine from the tail section of the plane and plan to take it to the GE plant near Cincinnati, where it was built, to try to determine why United's fan section disintegrated.

NTSB investigator Jack Young arrived at the GE plant in Evendale, Ohio, on Wednesday to review GE's manufacturing and maintenance records for the rear engine, which was built in 1972. All three of the engines on the DC-10 that crashed in Iowa were built at the plant.

GE manufactured the engine from 1971 to 1981 and the engine established a record of reliability during 17 million flight hours in commercial service, said GE spokesman Dwight Weber.

Bush Backs Ban On Biological Weapons

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The Bush administration, dropping the objections of its predecessor, is supporting proposed legislation to ban the production, stockpiling and export of biological weapons.

The measures being considered by both the House and Senate are designed to enable the Justice Department to prosecute Americans who develop, stockpile or export biological weapons to terrorists or to unstable Third World governments.

This is the third time Congress has tried to adopt legislation that would give teeth to a 1972 treaty outlawing germ warfare. Previous attempts, in 1973 and again in 1980, failed.

The Reagan administration refused to support such legislation, saying existing laws banning export of hazardous materials were sufficient.

"But there's no law that permits the authorities to stop the weapon from being produced in the first place," said Sen. Herb Kohl, D-Wis., one of the bill's sponsors.

Biological weapons, described by some as "the poor man's atom bomb," are relatively easy to produce and a very small amount can cause a widespread outbreak of deadly disease.

The United States renounced biological warfare in 1969 and destroyed its stockpile of weapons.

Highway Death Rate Increases

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The 65 mph speed limit on most rural interstate highways is prompting more fast-car ads, encouraging speeding and killing more people, according to an insurance industry report.

The report presented to Congress on Wednesday by the Insurance Institute for Highway Safety concludes that 550 of the 2,485 deaths on rural interstate highways last year were caused by the 65 mph limit.

A federal highway official also said higher speeds on 65 mph roads may be causing more deaths.

Moving

Slow Steps Toward Societal Balance

Progress often adopts the same languid pace as the proverbial tortoise — so tortuously slow advancement seems imperceptible. Never mind the finish line, but is the beast moving at all?

In the struggle for a balanced society, that gait seems especially sluggish. Despite advances, there are still more men than women in leadership positions; more whites than blacks are elected to make laws. Against the endless backdrop of aspirations, the progress of the current generation seems dwarfed.

But it's there, even if it is hard to see. Small, seemingly inconsequential occurrences prove it.

For example, consider who's going to college these days. A news story last week related how many of the 1990 freshman applicants to North Carolina's state universities — now rising high school seniors — met new, stringent admission standards.

The news for Pitt County was mixed — students from four high schools did better than the regional average; one school scored below the regional average. Only three high schools, however, surpassed the statewide percentage.

But the real story was behind the headlines. Just who are these kids who want to go to college?

In Pitt County, eastern North Carolina and across the state, many of them are young women. According to the data that accompanied the news story, more women than men are seeking admission in fall of 1990 to North Carolina's state universities. That's a far cry from 30 years ago, when twice as many men as women went to college. It's quite a contrast from two generations ago, when there were women's colleges and men's colleges — and the men's schools were three times as big as the women's.

Locally, 55.8 percent of those intending to apply for admission to a state university are female; 44.27 percent are male. In the region, 58.7 percent are female and 41.2 percent male. Statewide, 54 percent are female and 45 percent are male. Confronted with those figures, it will be a lot harder to accurately say "it's a man's world" in the 21st century.

Granted, these percentages only represent admissions to state universities, but they are significant. They portend an improved gender mix on North Carolina's college campuses and hint that the coming generation of teachers, engineers, doctors, lawyers, accountants, etc., will be better balanced between male and female. That may not be bells and flashing lights, but it's solid proof of progress.

The effects on society are far-reaching. Equality, balance, the decline of inaccurate stereotypes. These are goals that can bind a broad, complex society into a more cohesive body.

The rate of progress may be turtle-like but the beast, is, indeed, moving.

'Against the endless backdrop of aspirations, the progress of the current generation seems dwarfed.'

'Progress often adopts the same languid pace as the proverbial tortoise — so tortuously slow advancement seems imperceptible. Never mind the finish line, but is the beast moving at all?'

Politics & Chemistry: A Volatile Mixture

BOSTON — In the wake of the Webster decision, as one state after another takes a second look at its abortion laws, people in search of a safe harbor for legal abortion have turned to ask the same question. What about that pill? The French pill. The abortion pill. What about that?

Those who heard Justice Blackmun's warning — "a chill wind blows" — are talking about taking abortion into their own hands, literally. Can't technology make the law irrelevant or impossible to enforce? Can't women win from the pharmaceutical labs what might be lost in courts or legislatures?

Even those who had experienced the luxury of ambivalence, who had worried that such a pill would make abortion TOO easy, now look to it as they see the specter of clinic doors closing. What, after all, could be more truly private than taking a pill? How could a state control swallowing?

At last, RU-486 — the drug that sounds like a license plate — has moved into a central spot in the abortion debate.

This very day, in France, about a hundred women in the earliest days and weeks of pregnancy will go to a clinic and take three small doses of mifepristone, an anti-progesterone. They will return for a shot of prostaglandin. And in 95 percent of the cases, the fertilized egg will be sloughed off the wall of the uterus.

But RU-486 is nowhere near the American market. In the United States, only one hospital even has access to the drug for abortion research.

For the moment, the company that owns RU-486 has refused to distribute it. Roussel-Uclaf, the developer of the drug, is controlled by the giant international firm, Hoechst. As a descendant of the German company that produced cyanide for the Nazi death camps, Hoechst has been lobbied hard by pro-life leaders and has been frightened by rhetoric about "chemical warfare against the unborn" and by threats of boycotts of other products.

Ellen Goodman

Indeed, RU-486 was briefly withdrawn from France last fall. It was only returned when the French health minister ordered it back on the market, saying: "Morally, this product belongs to women."

By now some 12,000 French women have used it. But Hoechst has ruled that it won't market RU-486 elsewhere, not even to the Third World where as many as 200,000 women die a year from botched, self-inflicted abortions. As Joanne Howes, a political consultant, muses: "They are simply unused to all this noise. They get ten letters and think there's an outcry." Virtually all the pressure on Hoechst has been from pro-lifers; but like much else in the abortion debate, that is changing.

Even if the Germans were willing to export RU-486, not a single American drug company is known to have asked the FDA for permission to market it. Nor to test and distribute its chemical look-alikes. Companies that aren't frightened by reproductive liability suits have been scared off by politics.

Not surprisingly, the recent summit meeting of pro-life leaders issued a statement specifically proscribing abortion "through the administration of a drug." If their view — that a fertilized egg is a human life — becomes law, then RU-486, along with the IUD and certain birth-control pills, would be illegal.

What has changed, however, is the focus of pro-choice forces. As NOW Vice President Patricia Ireland said, "In the light of the Supreme Court, it becomes increasingly important that we look at the options that won't require an abortion facility."

It is equally important, Ireland added, that women use such a drug under supervision and not through a haphazard, dangerous black market likely to emerge. So, NOW has begun work to get the drug into the country, either through an established company or, if necessary, by organizing a new company.

Among the many ironies here is the medical one. RU-486 is a known treatment for Cushing's disease and endometriosis. It's being tested now for breast cancer. A ban against the drug could indeed pit the "unborn life" against the born.

Inside Congress, there is a pro-life bill to prevent the FDA from approving RU-486 for use. Outside, there is a growing pro-choice pressure group of Americans who believe what the French minister said: that RU-486 is the moral property of women.

The abortion conflict is simply sprung out of the judicial arena. Today politics and chemistry make a volatile mixture. The new struggle is to see if RU-486 can do what the law once promised: make early abortions a truly private decision.

A Liberal's Work Is Endless

WASHINGTON — Another colored boy (the language suits the moment) is acting uppity in Washington, but there are enough liberals left to lead a lynching. The intended victim is William Lucas, President Bush's choice to be assistant attorney general for civil rights.

Last week Chairman Joseph Biden (D-Del.) and some colleagues on the Senate Judiciary Committee were reportedly "stunned" by Lucas' testimony. Lucas' congressman, John Conyers, Jr. (D-Mich.), who warmly praised Lucas when introducing him to the committee, rushed back to recant his endorsement, so shocked was he by Lucas' testimony.

What Lucas said was that he considered two recent Supreme Court rulings "sound." Can't have that, can we, in the Justice Department, people agreeing with the Court?

Let there be no doubting of the white liberal senators' sincerity. Of course they were "stunned." Blacks are supposed to think what white liberals tell them to think. If insubordination like Lucas' is not nipped in the bud, no telling where it might lead among blacks, the last bloc Democrats can take for granted.

One of the Court rulings Lucas considers sound is that a statistical disparity between the racial composition of the community and that of a firm's work force is not sufficient to demonstrate discrimination. Discrimination must be proved, not assumed. The other Court ruling is that whites injured by reverse-discrimination arrangements that they were not involved in formulating can challenge them in court. Are you "stunned"? Grab a rope, tie a noose, find a branch.

Lucas, son of immigrants from the Caribbean, orphaned at 14, grew up in Harlem and put himself through Fordham Law School while working as a New York City policeman. In Wayne County, Mich., which surrounds Detroit, he ran successfully as a Democrat for sheriff four times and then was elected county executive. He administered a county with a population four times that of Biden's Delaware. In 1986, he changed parties and won the Republican nomination for governor, but lost to the incumbent.

Some opposition to Lucas relates to Michigan politics and his change of parties. Benjamin Hooks, head of the NAACP, has no stomach for resisting his largest dues-paying chapter, in Detroit. Conyers may run for mayor of Detroit. Jesse Jackson, who never stops running (and never runs for an office he might win), endorsed Lucas and then recanted after saying that the Supreme Court rulings were similar to positions taken by China's regime toward the protesters in Tiananmen Square.

The professional civil-rights lobbyists, who sit in Washington acknowledging one another as "leaders" of the civil-rights

George Will

"movement," began, as usual, by feigning "concern" about fly specks on Lucas' record. Then they professed themselves shocked that Lucas has little experience practicing law — this from people who revere Robert Kennedy, who became attorney general with zero experience as a litigator.

Such is the cynicism surrounding these Judiciary Committee spectacles, no one feels any need to tell the truth, which is that Lucas' scarlet sin is deviationism. The civil-rights movement and its poodles on the committee are whip-cracking overseers of the last plantation. They enforce the principle that blacks must be kept in their place, which place is trudging along in lockstep with the orthodoxy defined by liberal thought police.

Lucas is skeptical of reverse discrimination and quotas, the apparatus of the racial spoils system. Let such blacks get away with independent thinking, who will the "leaders" lead? Let the likes of Lucas advance the idea that America is not irredeemably racist, and that blacks should not be wards of the state, what then becomes of the civil-rights lobby that makes its living mediating between the state and its wards?

The Judiciary Committee's role is, as usual, sensitivity-mongering. We have seen this before, in the Bork hearings. Then, committee liberals had the brass to say their concern was "balance" on the Court — no one here but us pluralists. But the Lucas case reveals the real spirit of contemporary liberalism: the choice is orthodoxy or lynching.

So there they sit, a row of white liberal senators, soggy with self-approval, Lucas' moral tutors and sensitivity-trainers, instructing him about sensitivity to black experiences and needs. Senatorial power-grabbing and political cowardice is once again dressed up as intellectual and moral scrupulousness.

What will they do when they have had their fill of the fun of trashing Lucas? They will turn their unspent indignation toward Clarence Thomas, the black Yale law graduate who is President Bush's choice to fill the seat vacated by Bork on the District of Columbia Court of Appeals. Thomas is conservative. More deviationism. A liberal's work is never done.

Another Tough Choice

Paul O'Connor

Analysis

RALEIGH — When state money is as tight as it has been this year, all types of good causes find themselves in ugly fights with each other. Just such a tug of war took place last week as the House appropriations committee leadership worked out its budget.

At the time, the 14 appropriations subcommittee chairmen figured that they had $20.3 million for new spending on higher education this fiscal year. The bulk of that money, $15 million, was earmarked as "enrollment increase" money for the University of North Carolina system. Private colleges were to get an extra $1.3 million for state grants to North Carolina students, and the rest of the money was to go to new programs in nursing and agriculture and to scholarships.

As the number of students in the system grows, the university needs more money just to continue the current programs and services. This is called enrollment increase money. The university has estimated that it would need $18.7 million this year just to stand still on programs and services. So Jay Robinson, UNC's lobbyist, stood up and complained. He asked how the appropriations committee could fund several new programs, and increase aid to private college students, when it was putting the university system in a position where it would be unable to fund existing programs.

Hoping to make up the shortfall, Robinson first focused on the $1.3 million for the private colleges. That money will be used for a $50 increase in the $1100 annual grant given to North Carolina students attending North Carolina private colleges. The legislature had already guaranteed the private colleges that they would receive enough money to provide grants for any increase in the number of students seeking them. Now the budget leaders were offering to increase the size of the grants, too, at a time when UNC would not be able to meet the demands of its new students. That isn't fair, Robinson said.

Nor is it fair, Robinson said, to raise UNC tuition by $19.7 million this year, but provide only $15 million to meet enrollment increases. Robinson claimed that public university students would be paying higher tuition to subsidize their colleagues at private schools.

The private colleges, which have a very strong lobbying effort, didn't have a lobbyist there to joust with Robinson. But, as the budget chairmen sat quietly for several minutes, you could almost hear the oft-repeated justifications for such private grants running through their minds:

*North Carolina students at private colleges are taxpayers also. They deserve some help with college costs, the same as students at public universities.

*If these students flooded into the public universities, it would cost the state a great deal more than $1150 a year to educate them.

*If these grants aren't constantly increased as a form of subsidizing the private colleges, some of them might fail. North Carolina would thus lose the small, liberal arts colleges that often better meet the needs of some students.

*If you, as a legislator, don't support this, the political clout of these institutions and their alumni will be made apparent to you when you go home this weekend.

There's no simple answer to such a debate. Both sides have very sound arguments with the exception, possibly, of Robinson's claim that public students would be subsidizing private students.

This is a very tight revenue year, and this just another one of dozens of hard choices the legislature has to make.

An 'Indian Summer'

Six Months Later: A Look At The Reagan Presidency

Mike Feinsilber

WASHINGTON — Six hours after Ronald Reagan left the presidency, he arrived home for an airport ceremony welcoming him back to California. For the first time in eight years, he was made to look ridiculous before cameras.

Reagan's left finger was in a bulky bandage, having been operated upon

S. Grant: "someone who had substantial public support but left a rather messy legacy."

Greenstein developed the theory of a "hidden hand" Eisenhower presidency. He believes Ike purposely made himself appear out-of-touch while manipulating events backstage.

"Will there be a hidden hand Reagan?" Greenstein asks. "I don't think so. With Ike, we didn't get a dozen kiss-and-tell books and we had Roosevelt. "Coolidge was strong for keeping things from being done," he says, and so was Reagan.

At the same time, he says, Reagan had the Roosevelt touch when it came to communicating with the people.

Rulon draws an FDR parallel as well. He thinks Reagan modeled his presidency after Roosevelt. He compares Reagan's Saturday radio talks to FDR's fireside chats and says, "He loved to joke and tell stories, as Roosevelt did."

Gould winds up assigning Reagan to "the middle or lower-middle ranks" of presidents — in company with William Howard Taft, Coolidge, Gerald R. Ford "and John F. Kennedy, who is sinking among historians with almost every passing year."

Political scientist Charles Dunn of Clemson University says "school is still out" on the Reagan verdict. Much depends upon how detente and the deficit play out. "Reagan's reputation historically will fly upon the wings of Mikhail Gorbachev and George Bush," he says.

Columbia University historian Henry Graff, pessimistic about the country's future, thinks Reagan was the last of a kind.

"As the new century commences, we're going to remember that Reagan gave us an Indian summer," he says. "We glimpse a cold, hard winter coming. ... Reagan will be remembered when all that stuff comes as the fellow who said, 'Hey, let's play a little while longer.'"

Mike Feinsilber has covered Washington since Lyndon Johnson occupied the White House.

'The ex-president was on his own. None of his handlers were with him. He looked awkward and silly.'

a few days earlier. Someone handed him an oversized replica of the California license plate carrying the words, "The Prez." He shoved it under his arm while trying to adjust atop his head an enormous feathery headdress like those worn by the Spartans of ancient Greece.

The ex-president was on his own. None of his handlers was with him. No one had put down strips of tape to show him exactly where to stand. He looked awkward and silly.

Now, six months after he left the presidency, a smattering of historians and political scientists was asked how Reagan will look in history — whether he will be remembered as a majestic president who put his ideology into effect and reversed "the New Deal or as an amiable but ineffective chairman of the board with only a vague notion of what the government was up to.

Some of the answers are surprising, and often contradictory.

"What he did was to save the presidency," offers Philip Rulon, a historian at the Northern Arizona University who describes himself as a liberal Democrat and faults Reagan for sweeping problems under the rug.

But Reagan took office after a succession of failed presidencies, Rulon says, and if Reagan had also failed "we would have had a crisis in government, a crisis in confidence."

Whatever his policy shortcomings, Rulon adds, "He made people respect the president again. He was a great Irish wit. He had grace and style. He is a communicator and a man of integrity and he preserved the office."

Frank Freidel, history professor emeritus at Harvard and the University of Washington, compares Reagan to Dwight D. Eisenhower, complementarily.

"Both were total charmers," Freidel says. "Both clung to the small-town middle America verities. Both were men of principle. Both were to some extent hands-off presidents."

And if the era of warmth with the Russians persists, "we're going to hail him as a man who grasped the opportunity when it was there," Freidel says.

Princeton's Fred Greenstein, whose research caused other historians to raise their ranking of Eisenhower, sees history treating Reagan the way it treats the scandal-tarred administration of Ulysses nothing like Iran-Contra."

Donald McCoy of the University of Kansas, a biographer of Calvin Coolidge, says Reagan is to be compared to no other president because "he tried to lead a peaceful counter-revolution and we have not had that before."

McCoy says Reagan "is probably getting higher rating than I think he will when things settle down."

"What shall we (ultimately) say? So-so, average, fair."

Lewis Gould, a University of Texas historian, compares Reagan to Coolidge and to Franklin D.

Forsyth Art Group Wins State Funds, But Says No

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Forsyth County legislators convinced lawmakers on the state House Appropriations Committee to restore funding Wednesday for a controversial Winston-Salem arts group just hours after the panel had stripped its funds for this year.

But the National Endowment for the Arts, whose funds partially backed the group, lost $45,000 in a similar protest in the U.S. Senate.

The state committee, on a voice vote, agreed to restore $77,977 in state funds to the Southeastern Center for Contemporary Art, but with a provision that none of the state funds be used for an artist award program that had given $15,000 to a photographer who portrayed a crucifix in a bottle of urine.

SECCA communication director Dennis Szakacs said Wednesday that no state funding was used for the National Artists Awards Program, which had financed the award for the controversial photograph.

On Wednesday morning, the panel voted 36-25 to cut the SECCA funds on a motion by Rep. Skip Stam, R-

Wake.

Stam said he was concerned about taxpayer subsidies for offensive art, not censorship.

"I have no wish to keep these fellas from painting anything they want," Stam said. "But I don't think the taxpayers have a responsibility to subsidize these kinds of things."

Forsyth County legislators said they, too, regretted SECCA's decision to give the photograph an award, but believed it would not happen again.

The controversy stems from a photograph by New York artist Andrews Serrano that portrays a plastic crucifix of Jesus Christ submerged in the artist's urine.

In 1987, a five-member panel of nationally recognized arts figures, none of whom are directly affiliated with SECCA, awarded Serrano a $15,000 NEA grant through the SECCA-sponsored fellowship program. The photograph appeared in exhibits last year in Richmond, Va., Pittsburgh and Los Angeles, but never in North Carolina.

Arts administrators deplored the move.

"This sends a disturbing and chilling message to all arts institutions and cultural institutions across the country," said Ted Potter, SECCA's executive director. "It would be unprecedented to censor and deny access to federal money from specific non-profit institutions."

In regard to Serrano, Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., said, "He is not an artist, he is a jerk."

Sen. Alphonse D'Amato, R-N.Y., added, "This so-called piece of art is a deplorable, despicable display of vulgarity."

On a voice vote, lawmakers also adopted a Helms amendment forbidding the NEA to issue funds for materials considered obscene or which may be offensive to particular religions or to any race, sex, or nationality.

In Raleigh on Wednesday, a House appropriations committee voted to cut nearly $78,000 in state funds to SECCA for the upcoming fiscal year, but restored the funding in a later vote.

The funding recommendation in Washington was not final. Sen. Terry Sanford, D-N.C., while calling the artwork tasteless, urged Wednesday that the SECCA punishment be removed from the appropriation bill in an upcoming House-Senate conference committee.

Sen. Robert C. Byrd, D-W.Va., who leads the appropriations committee, agreed to give Sanford's request "due consideration." That agreement was entered into the Congressional Record late Wednesday.

Sanford also had Byrd acknowledge, in the record, that SECCA was being punished for a decision that it did not make. SECCA chose five nationally recognized experts in contemporary art to pick its award winners, and those experts picked Serrano for the $15,000 award, Sanford said.

In an interview Wednesday, Sanford said that his approach was more likely to succeed than if he had tried to take the ban out with an amendment. An amendment would have stirred a fuss on the floor, he said.

Artists and arts administrators have decried the proposed congressional action against SECCA.

Potter stressed he does not regret the Serrano grant, but does regret the photograph's misinterpretation. He said the artist, a devout Catholic, was essentially expressing his displeasure with the exploitation of Christ by televangelists and commercialized holidays.

"This was an artist generally presenting as a protest statement this critical and outrageous issue of religious abuse and exploitation," Potter said. "Fine protest art makes protest visible, and he's done that with this photograph."

Ruth Beesch, director of the Weatherspoon Art Gallery in Greensboro, said the government, while right to fund the arts, has no right to determine what's art and what isn't. Nor should it place conditions upon the money it allocates, she said.

"Artistic expression is about exploration and taking risks and making us think about things we wouldn't ordinarily think about," Beesch said. "It's an intellectual pursuit. And to attach strings to an intellectual pursuit takes away its whole purpose."

Artist Bill Dunlap, who lives in Boone and has received a SECCA grant in the past, added, "Most of the people who are griping are not an audience for art at all. And what they don't seem to understand is that a society and a culture is remembered by its poets and musicians, its writers and artists. And not its politicians."

House Adopts AIDS Bias Bill

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — AIDS victims would no longer face discrimination for such things as continued employment, housing or public services under a bill approved by the House over the objections of a vocal minority.

Prior to the 93-5 passage, Rep. Steve Arnold, R-Guilford, made several attempts to undermine the bill.

"The problem is not going to be solved by the General Assembly treating AIDS as if it were a civil rights problem instead of a public health problem," he said as he offered an amendment to delete all the anti-discriminatory language.

Arnold said "some discrimination is completely justified," noting that people discriminate when they select neckties or choose to eat a ham sandwich for lunch.

But Rep. Sharon Thompson, D-Durham, House sponsor of the Senate-passed bill, said the amendment "basically guts ... the cornerstone of the bill." Her motion to kill the amendment was approved 47-42.

Arnold then offered an amendment to develop mandatory AIDS testing for prison inmates, prostitutes, hospital patients and applicants for marriage licenses, saying that would help protect the public from acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

Ms. Thompson countered that prison testing is already contained in another bill, pre-marital testing in other states was a "total disaster" and the medical community doesn't want to test everyone admitted to a hospital.

She said testing prostitutes was too complicated a concept to approve in a quick amendment, adding, "If you're going to test all convicted prostitutes, you'd better well test all their customers too."

That amendment failed 69-26.

Rep. Coy Privette then proposed an amendment to stipulate that hospital patients not be required to give consent in writing for an AIDS test. Again Ms. Thompson objected, saying it doesn't make sense to treat AIDS like any other contagious disease.

"We all know peoples' reaction to someone who has AIDS," she said. "That is why we need these other provisions. That is why we need to treat this differently ... to encourage people to come in, get tested."

The amendment was defeated 58-34 to set up the final vote. The bill will become law if the Senate agrees to House amendments. Voting against the bill were Arnold and Republican Reps. Michael Decker of Forsyth County, Larry Etheridge of Wilson County, Bob Brawley of Iredell County and Dave Balmer of Mecklenburg County.

In addition to the anti-discrimination provisions, the bill would create the right to sue anyone who engages in discrimination against AIDS victims. Employers still could test applicants for AIDS and could deny employment on the basis of a positive test.

Employers also could reassign AIDS victims if their infections pose a risk to employees or the public or if the infection prevents proper performance of job-related duties. It also would be legal to treat AIDS victims differently from other patients.

The bill would make contamination with the AIDS virus a reportable illness. Currently, only the AIDS disease itself is reportable.

The only significant amendment adopted Wednesday makes it clear that employers may adopt corporate policies to include mandatory annual AIDS testing for all employees.

Finance Committee Backs Plan To Simplify State Tax System

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — A "tax fairness" bill to simplify North Carolina's income tax system and remove some 700,000 low-income people from the tax rolls drew hours of debate as a handful of opponents argued that the middle class shouldn't pay to relieve the poor.

Supporters fended off a bid to kill the bill and Rep. Sharon Thompson, D-Durham, said she started to think her support in the House Finance Committee had evaporated.

"I presumed I had the votes before the meeting," she said. "I just got a little bit anxious as the meeting went on."

The anxiety peaked Wednesday night when Rep. Steve Arnold, R-Guilford, proposed giving the bill an unfavorable report after the chairman, Rep. Alex Hall, D-New Hanover, declined to let the panel adjourn.

Arnold argued that no one should pay higher taxes, particularly after legislators voted for a $9 billion tax package for highways.

Rep. Marty Kimsey, R-Macon, said it was unfair to give equal tax breaks to working people making $18,000 a year and welfare recipients "who are already getting a subsidy of $7,500 a year."

But Ms. Thompson said the low-income families were not receiving that much in federal funds.

As a vote neared, Ms. Thompson told the committee, voice cracking, that perhaps the bill was suffering from too much debate.

"I don't believe in railroading," she said, adding that she'd listened to everyone, laughed at their jokes and accommodated reasonable requests for amendments.

Jan Ramquist of the League of Women Voters of North Carolina criticized committee members who defended some middle-class people who might see taxes go up.

"What this bill will do is take more than 2 million people who are middle-income people and give them tax relief," she said.

The bill will send a message to the working poor: "Yes, we appreciate you supporting yourself rather than going on welfare," she said.

While some people may give up a steak dinner once a month under the bill, a working mother with two children sees things differently, Ms. Ramquist said.

"You're asking her whether to buy shoes for her child or pay the light bill," she said.

The motion to kill the bill failed on a 33-8 vote with Rep. Billy Watkins, D-Granville, the only Democrat voting no. A motion for a favorable report was approved by the same margin. The bill now goes to the House floor.

Earlier, Ms. Thompson noted the bill would be the first major change since the 1930s, when nearly all middle- and low-income people paid no taxes.

She said she was hesitant to offer the amendment to maintain the current exclusion of Social Security income and did so only because of pressure from advocates of retirees. She noted it would be simpler to track the federal government in taxing the income, and she said only 18 percent of those who receive it would be taxed under her bill.

Court Ruling

RALEIGH (AP) — A decision by the N.C. Supreme Court that employers may not fire workers when they refuse an order to break the law may lead to unfounded lawsuits, some attorneys for employers said.

The court ruled Wednesday that Mark R. Coman of Thomasville may sue Thomas Manufacturing Co. Inc. in connection to his firing. Coman alleges that he was discharged from his job as a long-distance truck driver in 1984 when he refused to falsify log books to show compliance with federal trucking regulations.

Associate Justice Harry Martin, writing an opinion joined by all but one of the six other justices, said it's in the state's best interest to "encourage employees to refrain from violating ... public policy at the demand of their employers."

"Providing employees with a remedy should they be discharged for refusing to violate this public policy supplies that encouragement," Martin wrote.

Associate Justice Louis Meyer, in his dissent, said any exceptions to the so-called at-will doctrine should be added by the General Assembly and not the courts.

POW Suit

KINSTON, N.C. (AP) — A dispute between two veterans' groups about the best way to investigate reports of prisoners of war still being held overseas became a court battle when a Vietnam veteran who heads one organization filed a libel and slander lawsuit against the other.

Ted Sampley, chairman of Homecoming II, a 3,600-member group that supports the accountability of the U.S. government for Americans still missing from the Vietnam War, filed the lawsuit Tuesday in Lenoir County Superior Court.

Sampley is a former Green Beret who served two tours of duty in Vietnam and received six decorations in Vietnam.

The suit alleges the National League of Families of American Prisoners and Missing in Action has slandered and libeled Homecoming II.

Arrest

FAYETTEVILLE (AP) — A man arrested Wednesday has been charged in connection with a series of burglaries and sexual assaults in northwestern Cumberland County, authorities said.

Kerry Lynn Williams of Fayetteville was charged with four counts of first-degree burglary, one count of attempted first-degree burglary, two counts of sexual assault and one count of rape, said Lt. Harry Parham, assistant chief of detectives in the Cumberland County Sheriff's Department.

Williams was arrested after a traffic stop in a Cumberland County subdivision, and Parham said a purse belonging to one of the attack victims was found in his car.

'Hero' Arrested

HIGH POINT (AP) — Steve Coleman woke up a hero Wednesday morning, but he was heading for jail that night.

High Point police had been looking for Coleman on burglary and forgery charges when they saw him featured in a Greensboro News & Record story carrying the headline: "Alert man saves girl with CPR."

After High Point Detective Jay Dunbar saw the photo in which Coleman was reviving an 11-year-old girl, he asked Detective Debra Duncan if that was the man she was looking for. Ms. Duncan said it was, and called Greensboro police.

They found him mowing the grass at the motel where he works.

Coleman's charges stem from a sting operation in which officers posed as buyers of stolen property. Coleman, on probation for a forgery conviction, also faces a charge that he violated that probation. Coleman was being held Wednesday under $10,000 bond.

Bomb Scare

ROCKY MOUNT, N.C. (AP) — A bomb scare that prompted a one-block evacuation Wednesday was a hoax, police said.

A mechanic found what appeared to be three sticks of dynamite and a timing device in a car and called police, said Lt. R.E. Baggett of the Rocky Mount Police Department.

A bomb squad from Fort Bragg determined that the device was not a bomb, he said. "They found what looked like a bomb but was not a bomb," he said.

Murder Sentence

RALEIGH (AP) — A 22-year-old Raleigh man has been sentenced to death for the murder of a newspaper carrier.

The Wake County Superior Court jury returned the verdict against Lenwood E. Buchanan on Wednesday just after beginning its third day of deliberations. The jury deliberated eight hours and 47 minutes.

Buchanan showed no emotion as his sentence was announced.

He was convicted last Thursday of the murder of Jerry E. Combs, who was shot to death June 10 and robbed of $10.

Son Of Possible Victim Served On Jury

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

GRAHAM, N.C. — The case against Blanche Moore may have been tainted by the presence on the grand jury that indicted her of a son of a man whose death police are investigating, a defense attorney said.

Mrs. Moore, 56, of Burlington is charged with murder in connection to two deaths and assault in connection with the poisoning of her husband. Police are also looking into the deaths of Mrs. Moore's father and four acquaintances.

Mitchell McEntire, Mrs. Moore's attorney, said he might file a motion to quash two indictments against his client.

"I'm not suggesting any sort of intent on their part," he said. "But in a case of this gravity, they must be extraordinarily careful not to have these kinds of conflicts."

Fred W. Reiber sat on the grand jury that indicted Mrs. Moore on charges of murder in the death of her first husband, James Taylor, and assault in the arsenic poisoning of her current husband, the Rev. Dwight Moore. Police said Tuesday they are looking into the 1988 death of his father, John W. Reiber.

The development prompted Mrs. Moore's attorney to raise the issue of conflict of interest.

"Surely investigators knew when they submitted charges to the grand jury of the existence of John Reiber and his death," McEntire said.

McEntire said he may file a motion to dismiss the charge based on improper makeup of the grand jury.

But Alamance County District Attorney Steve Balog said he did not see any conflict.

"As long as the indictment did not involve Reiber's relative, it's not a problem. But should the grand jury be asked to consider charges in Reiber's death, his son would be excluded," Balog said.

Unlike trial jurors, the grand jury panel is not asked about possible associations with defendants or victims. And their duty is not to decide guilt or innocence, but only if there is enough substance to the state's evidence to take the case to trial.

David F. Hoke, an associate attorney general, would not comment directly on the investigation, but indicated that he generally agreed with Balog's interpretation. "Generally speaking, I don't believe that there would be a conflict — just based on the limited amount of research that I've done. On a strictly general level, I don't see that there would be any problems."

Hoke added, however: "It is an unusual situation."

McEntire said that if a judge dismisses the indictment, "It does not mean the case is out the window and over with."

"It would be up to the state to decide what to do at that point, and one of their options would be to resubmit it and get a new indictment," he said. "I don't see it as a major problem in the overall case. I do see it as some thing that needs to be addressed."

Also, McEntire said Mrs. Moore has the support of several of her first husband's family. He has received word from one of James Taylor's sisters from the Washington, D.C., area that she is willing to testify in Mrs. Moore's defense.

Mrs. Moore's brothers and sisters are also standing fast behind her, McEntire said.

Meanwhile, McEntire said his client is willing to talk to officers about any ties to the victims, but so far, she has not been asked.

"There's an ever-enlarging arena of accusations," he said. "The state seems to be ignoring that there is no financial motive. There's nothing for her to gain from the death of her loved ones."

McEntire said law-enforcement officials are grasping at straws. "The names just came out of the blue as far as we are concerned," he said. "I'm at a loss to understand how this process is working. It's somewhat unwieldy and out of hand."

Lt. Steve Lynch of the Burlington Police Department denied that. "We are certainly not pulling names out of the blue," he said.

Professor Rewrites State History Text

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. — College students who study North Carolina history this fall will study from the first new collegiate history book in 15 years, learning about such facts as the illegitimate brother of Virginia Dare.

The book is by William Powell, professor emeritus at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. Its title is "North Carolina Through Four Centuries."

"It's a complete rewriting, and I've tried to bring it up to date — not only things that have happened since 1975 but also things that happened hundreds of years ago but have recently been discovered," said Powell during a recent interview here.

For the first time, the book notes that Eleanor Dare was 19 when she gave birth Aug. 18, 1587, to a daughter, Virginia — the first child born in North Carolina to English colonists sent by Sir Walter Raleigh.

Also, Virginia's father, Ananias Dare, had left behind in England an illegitimate son when he came to North Carolina.

A new notation from this century describes the polio epidemic of the late 1930s and early '40s.

"They closed schools and swimming pools and theaters, and a lot of churches didn't hold services because they didn't want to bring crowds together," Powell said. Using the computer in his office at Hamilton Hall, the 70-year-old professor emeritus spent about three years updating the narrative of North Carolina's history.

He has added a chapter including incidents that have brought about change in North Carolina's race relations, such as the Charlotte-Mecklenburg desegregation case and the Greensboro lunch counter sit-ins of the 1960s, and the Wilmington 10 incident and the violent "Death to the Klan" rally of the 1970s.

The 652-page book has also been updated with the growth of the Research Triangle Park, Gov. Jim Hunt's appointment of a commission on the year 2000 and the re-election of Gov. Jim Martin — the first time a Republican governor was elected to a second term.

Powell, who has honorary doctorates from Campbell University and Davidson College, has written several books, including The North Carolina Gazetteer, three volumes of the Dictionary of North Carolina Biography and North Carolina: A Bicentennial History.

His 1987 textbook "North Carolina, The Story of a Special Kind of Place" has been used the past two school years by eighth-grade students. State history is part of the curriculum for fourth- and eighth-graders.

He is working on "The Handbook of North Carolina," a reference book of events in North Carolina, which he hopes to complete in a couple of years.

"I have more to do than I'm likely to see finished," Powell said. "But the doctor says my health is good."

North Carolina history is not a required college course, and Powell believes it should stay that way. But he said it is especially helpful to law students and others.

"The dean of the pharmacy school used to recommend it if their students were planning to practice here," Powell said.

The book also will be sold in bookstores as a reference source for the general public.

Powell, who taught North Carolina history to more than 6,000 students before retiring three years ago, dedicated his book to his five grandchildren "in expectation that their lives in North Carolina in the twenty-first century will be as happy as their grandfather's has been in the twentieth."

Report Suggests U.S. Must Talk With Hostage-Takers

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Dealing with Iran remains the best option for winning the release of nine Americans held in Lebanon, but the United States must not rule out talking to the captors or paying ransom, according to a study on terrorism released today.

The Rand Corp. report also contends that Iran continues to overestimate the importance of the hostages to the U.S. government.

"The fate of the ... hostages is a matter of concern ... but it is not a central issue," the study said. "The government is under no immediate pressure from the public to bring the hostages home."

The longest held of the Americans is Terry Anderson, chief Middle East correspondent for The Associated Press. Anderson was kidnapped March 16, 1985.

Veteran terrorist researcher Brian Michael Jenkins said in the report, "Terrorism: Policy Issues for the Bush Administration," that hostages provide a group "with a certain amount of prestige."

Iran, the study said, has lost much of its strategic importance to the United States, in part because of improved U.S.-Soviet relations and because world oil production remains high and comparatively cheap.

"To put it bluntly, in a way that no U.S. official can say publicly, Washington can wait" for a more receptive government in Iran, even as "dealing through Iran remains ... our best bet for getting the hostages released," according to the report.

But Jenkins said there are "powerful forces" in Iran who "continue to oppose any kind of rapprochement with the West."

"None of the alternatives look very promising," Jenkins wrote.

"Threatening the captors or Tehran with military retaliation ... has emotional appeal but is not likely to work and might imperil the hostages. Rescue ... is a long shot, especially if we are concerned with getting the hostages out alive."

"That leaves ransom, a distasteful course of action but one which should not be ruled out entirely," Jenkins said, adding that the U.S. no-concession policy that emerged after the Iran-Contra arms scandal "has become dangerously rigid."

"Most nations subscribe to no-concessions policies in theory," he said. "In practice, however, many of them have made deals to obtain the release of their citizens held hostage, although they may deny that the apparent concessions were part of any deal, or argue that these things were done for loftier purposes."

Even Israel, the nation seen to exemplify the hard line, "has on several occasions made concessions to obtain the release of hostages."

Part of the problem, the report said, is that the captors have not been clear or consistent about exactly what they want in return for the release of the hostages.

The Rand Corp., a Santa Monica, Calif.-based private, non-profit organization, sponsors research, often under government contract, on issues affecting national security.

Though the terrorism study was spawned by an earlier project sponsored by the Defense Department, Rand said it paid for the report out of its own funds.

Next Shuttle Flight Set Aug. 9

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — Space shuttle Columbia is scheduled to lift off Aug. 8 on a mission with five military astronauts and a classified Pentagon spy satellite.

NASA selected the date Wednesday at the conclusion of a two-day flight review that assessed the readiness of the orbiter, payload, global tracking network and all other mission elements.

Columbia will be making the 30th shuttle flight and the fourth solely dedicated to the Defense Department. The astronauts reportedly will release a sophisticated reconnaissance satellite.

For national security reasons, the Pentagon would not permit the National Aeronautics and Space Administration to announce an exact liftoff time or the length of the mission. Once Columbia is orbiting, a news blackout will be in effect until about an hour before landing.

The announcement said only that launch would occur between 7:30 a.m. and 11:30 a.m. EDT on Aug. 8. The countdown will be made public nine minutes before the planned liftoff.

Columbia's crew members are Air Force Col. Brewster Shaw, the commander; Navy Cmdr. Richard Richards, Navy Cmdr. David Leestma, Air Force Lt. Col. James Adamson and Air Force Maj. Mark Brown.

When NASA officials began the review meeting Tuesday, a potential problem with a fuel valve existed. They said that if engineers had to replace it the launch would have to be delayed two or three days beyond the targeted date.

But the problem turned out to be a false sensor reading, and NASA qualified the valve for flight on Wednesday.

The flight will be the eighth for Columbia, the oldest of the shuttles and its first in 3½ years. Following the Challenger explosion in January 1986, Columbia was the last of the three remaining shuttles to receive more than 200 safety and performance modifications.

Changes were completed earlier on Discovery and Atlantis and each has been launched twice since post-Challenger flights resumed last September.

Study Contends Racial Gains Slowed In U.S.

By Deborah Mesce
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Black Americans still lag far behind whites in economic and social status, according to a report released today that says the pace of improvements begun 50 years ago has slowed dramatically since the early 1970s.

"The great gulf that existed between black and white Americans in 1939 has only been narrowed; it has not closed," said the report by a National Research Council committee.

Blacks made their greatest gains during the 1940s and 1960s, but since the early 1970s "the economic status of blacks relative to whites has, on average, stagnated or deteriorated," the report said.

The report said the gains have come chiefly because of a rapidly growing economy that improved the living standard of Americans overall, passage and enforcement of civil rights laws, equal opportunity efforts and political and social activism by blacks.

The slowdown in the U.S. economy since 1973 has taken a bite from the real earnings of all Americans. But it also has increased inequality by hitting hardest the least skilled and those with the lowest incomes — a clear setback for many lower-income blacks, the report said.

Blacks have also been hurt by continued racial segregation and racial discrimination, the report said.

"Under conditions of increasing economic hardship for the least prosperous members of society, blacks, because of their special legacy of poverty and discrimination, are afflicted sooner, more deeply and longer," the report said.

The report discounts the popular notion that blacks are consumed by a self-perpetuating "culture of poverty," saying attitudes toward work and the desire to succeed are about the same among the poor and the better off.

While whites want racial equality in social institutions and in government policy, "many whites are less likely to espouse or practice equality of treatment for blacks in their personal behavior," the report said.

"Full assimilation of blacks in a 'color blind' society is unlikely in any foreseeable future," it said, but added that "integrated participation in public affairs is becoming more acceptable."

The study, begun in 1985, is based on data and research analyses assessing the position of blacks in American society since the eve of World War II. The 22-member study committee included experts in a range of academic specialties.

Blacks gained in income and earnings through the 1950s and 1960s relative to whites, but after that they saw few economic gains, the report said.

Measured in 1984 dollars, mean earnings for black men were $3,833 in 1939 compared with $8,745 for whites. By 1979, the figure for blacks rose to $15,160 and $23,032 for whites. But in 1984, that dropped to $13,218 for blacks compared to $20,457 for whites.

Among women, blacks have all but closed the earnings gap. Mean earnings, as measured in 1984 dollars, have risen from $2,070 for blacks and $5,192 for whites in 1939 to $10,252 for blacks and $10,354 for whites in 1984.

Since 1939, the gap between the races in terms of poverty has remained relatively constant — black poverty rates have been two to three times higher than rates for whites.

Among other findings:
—Political Participation: The proportion of federal, state and local public administrators who are black has risen from less than 1 percent in 1940 to 8 percent in 1980. Blacks comprise 13 percent of the U.S. population.

—Education: "Segregation and differential treatment of blacks continue to be widespread in the elementary and secondary schools," the report said. Also, the odds that a black high school student will go to college within a year of graduation are less than half the odds for a white student.

—Health: Infant mortality rates for blacks and whites have dropped steadily since 1940, but a black remains twice as likely to die in infancy as a white baby.

—Crime: Nearly half of all prison inmates in the United States are black, and blacks are six to seven times as likely as whites to be victims of homicide, which is the leading cause of death among young black males. Blacks are also twice as likely to be victims of robbery, car theft and aggravated assault.

—Children: In 1986, 43 percent of black children under 18 compared with 16 percent of white children lived in households with incomes below the federal poverty line. About half of all black children live in single-parent, female-headed households, compared with one in five white children.

The National Research Council is the principle operating agency of the National Academies of Sciences and Engineering, a congressionally chartered, private non-profit organization.

Nissan Workers Vote Down Union

SMYRNA, Tenn. — Workers at Nissan's only U.S. plant rejected making it the first fully owned Japanese auto plant organized by the United Auto Workers, officials announced today.

The National Labor Relations Board said that 1,622 votes were cast against the UAW, and 711 voted for representation.

Jerry Benefield, president of Nissan Motor Manufacturing U.S.A., was elated by the margin of the UAW's defeat.

"Our employees won this contest with 69½ percent of the vote — better than two-to-one for the pro-company employees," Benefield said. "We're glad the election is over. It's been somewhat disruptive."

Benefield went on to rebut the UAW's main issue: that the pace of the assembly line had contributed to a high injury rate at the plant.

"The pace of production is slower than in some UAW-organized assembly plants," he said. "The vast majority of our people have demonstrated that, even though there's been a lot of pressure to think otherwise, this is a safe place to work."

Following the announcement, UAW organizer Frank Joyce distributed a statement to reporters and refused further comment.

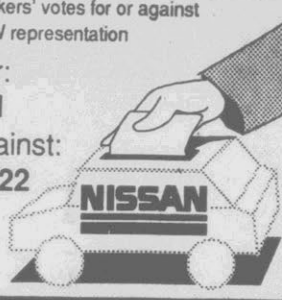

In the statement, UAW President Owen Bieber, Vice President Stan Marshall and Regional Director George Smith said:

"All this election demonstrates is that when a company is determined to operate without a union and is willing to use threats and misrepresentation to an unlimited extent, that company can delay if not escape its day of reckoning."

The union leaders said the election results reflected a "climate of fear that pervades many work places despite the union rights supposedly guaranteed under our labor laws."

At the plant, some 50 Nissan workers waiting for results in the early morning hours cheered and whistled periodically as Benefield spoke. Many wore pro-company T-shirts.

After the vote, Dotty Lockhart, a 29-year-old production technician, explained why she voted to keep the union out: "They can't give us anything we don't already have."

Terry Rucci, a 28-year-old maintenance apprentice who used to work on the assembly line, said:

"It was hard work, but they told you when you came here it would be hard work. I feel that anybody who voted for it (union) betrayed the company by saying, 'Yeah, we can handle the hard work,' then saying, 'We can't.'"

Neither was surprised the union was defeated.

The election followed 18 months of campaign tactics including anti-union videos at the plant and union house calls.

About 2,400 of the plant's 3,100 employees were eligible to vote in the election, which was conducted in two three-hour shifts.

Labor observers characterized the Nissan vote as pivotal for the UAW, which has lost about 33 percent of its membership in the last decade.

Student Faces Federal Charge For Creating Computer 'Virus'

WASHINGTON — A graduate student who officials say unleashed a "virus" that infected thousands of military and university computers is the first person charged under a federal law banning unauthorized computer access.

Robert Tappan Morris was indicted Wednesday in Syracuse, N.Y., on a single count of illegally gaining access to at least four computers and paralyzing their operations. He is scheduled to be arraigned before a U.S. magistrate Aug. 2.

The Justice Department said in a statement here that the case represents the first time that federal prosecutors have brought charges under a section of a 1986 law that prohibits unauthorized computer access.

The indictment followed months of deliberations within the Justice Department about whether to bring felony or misdemeanor charges against Morris, who was a student at Cornell University when the incident occurred Nov. 2.

The charge carries a maximum five-year sentence and a fine of up to $250,000. Morris, of Arnold, Md., could also be ordered to pay restitution to cover damages if he is convicted.

A computer industry group estimated that the virus infected 6,200 computers and caused $96 million in damages. But a Cornell University panel that investigated the incident called the estimate "grossly exaggerated."

The indictment stated that the virus caused damage of more than $1,000.

Defense lawyer Thomas A. Guidoboni said Morris would plead innocent.

The Cornell panel said the virus, or worm, affected thousands of university and military computers hooked up to the nationwide ARPANET network used to transmit non-classified data. The network was shut down for several days, but no electronic files were destroyed.

The panel said the incident was the result of "a juvenile act that ignored the clear potential consequences." But the commission also noted that "it appears to have been an uncharacteristic act for Morris," who graduated from Harvard last year before beginning a graduate program in computer science at Cornell.

Guidoboni said Morris, who has been on leave, has been given a one-year suspension from the university beginning in September.

GM Plant Is Closed

FRAMINGHAM, Mass. — A General Motors Corp. auto assembly plant made its last car and sent its 1,300 workers home, with little hope that the 41-year-old plant would ever reopen.

"We've done a lot of deep thinking about what we're going to do with our lives," said Robert Biscotti, a plant supervisor. "There has been a grieving period, but after awhile you realize: 'What can you do?'"

GM closed the plant Wednesday because demand for its Buick Century and Oldsmobile Cutlass Ciera hasn't kept pace with its capacity to build them.

Dee Allen, a spokesman for the automaker, said at most the door is ajar.

"We haven't precluded the option of opening again, but we have more than enough facilities without Framingham," he said from Detroit.

The plant has had two other layoffs, including about 1,200 last spring, and some temporary closings during the last several years. About 500 workers are staying on temporarily to mothball the plant.

"We've had good years where we've worked six days a week and then days where we don't work at all," said Roland Cole, a 20-year plant veteran and United Auto Workers member.

"It's been a home to a lot of us. We've been like brothers," says Joao DeCruz, a Portugal native who plans to go on unemployment compensation.

Many of the senior employees have opted for early retirement; some have taken advantage of GM, state and federally funded retraining programs or relocation.

Others have accepted a company buyout that union officials say they can't discourage because the prospects for getting rehired are poor. GM offered one-time payments of $40,000 to workers with 10 or more years service and $65,000 to those with 25 years on the job.

Gov. Michael Dukakis, who holds out hope for a resumption of production, said there is not much that can be done if people aren't buying cars.

Dukakis recalled Wednesday how he met with GM President Roger Smith and other top company officials about sparing the plant after the company announced the closing plans in February.

"All I can tell you is what he said to me, and that was that they didn't invest a quarter of a billion dollars to modernize the plant so (GM could) walk away from it," Dukakis said. But, he said, it comes down to economics.

The plant was the largest employer last year in Framingham, 22 miles southwest of Boston. It paid $830,000 in local taxes, spent $19 million on local suppliers and had a payroll of $59 million.

The city of 65,000 is likely to overcome the loss better than many factory towns because of its diverse economic base, which includes computer manufacturing, stationary production and a 375-room hotel.

Atlantic City Mayor Arrested

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. — Mayor James Usry and 13 other people were arrested this morning on charges including bribery and official misconduct.

Usry, 67, a former Harlem Globetrotter and city teacher, is in his second term as mayor. He won the job when former Mayor Michael Matthews was ousted from office in a recall election after his implication in an influence peddling scheme involving casino zoned land.

Christopher Florentz, spokesman for the state attorney general, announced the arrests but would not immediately give details of the charges.

The 14 people arrested were taken to the National Guard Armory in Atlantic City, Florentz said. He did not know where they were arrested.

Also arrested were City Council President Walter Collette, 60; zoning board Chairman Kaleem Shabazz; city councilman Arnold Orsatti; city councilman Gene Dorn, 47; and W. Oscar Harris Jr., former director of the Atlantic City Housing Authority, he said.

Usry, Collette and Dorn all were considered likely candidates in next year's non-partisan mayoral contest.

Wellman, rear, and Corbett celebrate with champagne after completing climb of El Capitan

Paraplegic Reaches Peak Of 3,200-Foot Mountain

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

YOSEMITE NATIONAL PARK, Calif. — With the strength of his arms and the power of his will, a paraplegic completed a weeklong ascent of 3,200-foot El Capitan and said his climb proves the disabled can accomplish great feats.

Mark Wellman, accompanied by his friend Mike Corbett, reached the summit at Wednesday afternoon, seven days and four hours after they left the Yosemite Valley floor.

A nationwide television audience saw them at the mountaintop, and later the U.S. Senate passed a resolution commending them for their "extraordinary feat of bravery and stoutheartedness."

Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kan., disabled himself with a partially paralyzed right arm, offered the resolution.

"My whole thing in life is finding another way to do it, whether that be skiing, kayaking or whatever," said Wellman, a 29-year-old park ranger, at a news conference before dozens of reporters, friends and fellow workers.

Wellman said he performed the climb for personal achievement, not for the disabled. But he said he hoped it would prove that people need not be stopped by their physical disabilities.

"Go out and do it!" said Wellman, who wore the same boots he was wearing in 1982 when he fell 50 feet during a climb of 13,700-foot Gables

Peak south of Yosemite. He was left paralyzed from the waist down.

He said his next adventure will be cross-country skiing using a dog to pull him while he poles with his arms.

Wellman became the first paraplegic to conquer El Capitan. The vertical trek took an estimated 7,000 pull-ups, each advancing him only six inches. He had trained six months for the ascent, making 35 practice climbs on other sheer rocks and training with weights.

To climb El Capitan, Wellman and Corbett, 35, used modified cave exploration equipment that allowed Wellman to pull himself up the face of the cliff, using a T-bar device and ropes set by Corbett.

Wellman and Corbett toted 200 pounds of food and gear including hammocks that were suspended from hooks placed into the rock as they slept.

As they reached the summit, Corbett carried Wellman on his back to a shady spot under a pine tree. The climbers were greeted by their girlfriends, cheering friends and reporters.

Soon, they were sipping champagne and gulping ice water.

On the summit, set against a backdrop of views that included towering peaks of the Sierra Nevada and Half Dome, they were almost nonchalant.

"We didn't really have any scary moments doing this," said Wellman.

Their biggest problem was the wind, which Wellman said gusted from 11 a.m. to 8 p.m. each day, sometimes blowing them 10 feet out from the cliff.

He said the heat was less of a problem, but temperatures occasionally soared to more than 100 degrees on the face of the cliff.

At the peak, he accepted a signed photograph of Yosemite from Corbett, who wrote, "It was an unbelievable experience." Corbett has scaled El Capitan 42 times, more than any other climber.

Wellman rode down from the mountain on a horse, talking with a fellow ranger about everything except the climb.

Corbett walked out briskly, leaving other hikers in his dust.

He had something else on his mind.

His family saw him in the televised coverage of the climb. It was the first time they had seen him in years.

They were to be reunited this weekend, with several family members flying in from Houston.

The anticipation distracted him from the climbing routine. He said he was unable to sleep early Monday because of the memories.

Corbett's girlfriend, Gwen Schneider, said Corbett last talked to his family in 1981 after his parents were divorced.

"I've got to fill my family in on a lot of things that have happened in the last 10 years of my life," Corbett said.

Swede Convicted In 1986 Murder Of Prime Minister

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

STOCKHOLM, Sweden — A 42-year-old Swede with a long criminal record was convicted today for the 1986 murder of Prime Minister Olof Palme and sentenced to life imprisonment.

Stockholm District Court handed down the guilty verdict against Carl Gustav Christer Pettersson after 17 days of deliberations and drafting of the legal judgement. Pettersson was given the most severe penalty possible; Sweden has no death penalty.

Though he was sentenced to life, the government normally commutes life terms to 20 years or fewer in Sweden, a country with one of the world's most lenient penal systems.

Palme, a four-term prime minister and an international leader in social democratic politics, was shot in the back outside a downtown Stockholm movie theater while walking home unguarded with his wife.

The killer fled down a dark side street.

The two judges who served as jurists on the eight-member panel voted for acquittal, saying there was not enough hard evidence to convict Pettersson for the slaying on Feb. 28, 1986. They were overruled by the six other jurors.

Pettersson was also convicted of endangering the life of Palme's wife Lisbeth, who was slightly injured in the shooting. She was a key witness in the case.

The jury reached the verdict a week ago but withheld it while writing a detailed finding. However, they ordered Pettersson to remain in custody.

He maintained his innocence during the five-week trial that began June 5. Even before today's announcement, Pettersson's lawyer said he would appeal a guilty verdict.

Pettersson was arrested Dec. 17 after the biggest criminal investigation in Swedish history.

Pettersson's criminal record lists more than 60 arrests and includes a conviction for manslaughter in the 1970 bayonet stabbing of a man near the Palme slaying site.

He has previously been held in court-ordered psychiatric care and has a long history of methamphetamine and alcohol abuse.

Castro Says U.S. Waiting To Take Control Of Cuba

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CAMAGUEY, Cuba — President Fidel Castro told his countrymen that the United States is eager to exploit recent setbacks in the socialist world and may emulate Nazi Germany by trying to establish a 1,000-year colonial empire.

Standing bare-headed in a drizzle for almost two hours Wednesday night, Castro said Cuba must brace itself for the worst if the world socialist movement collapses.

Castro said the United States might try to invade and occupy Cuba, defeat Cuba in a war of attrition or blockade the island.

When Castro spoke about the "triumphal" attitude of President Bush because of political and economic problems facing socialism, the chief U.S. diplomat in Cuba, Jay Taylor, walked out.

If socialism disappears, Castro said, the "imperialist powers" would divide the world just as they did "in the worst of times" before the 1917 Russian Revolution.

The occasion for the speech was the 36th anniversary of the armed attack that signaled the beginning of Castro's struggle against the dictatorship he ousted in 1959.

By the time he finished his speech, much of his green military uniform was soaked as were many of the tens of thousand who turned out for the speech.

Castro's address was split into two parts. For the first hour and 10 minutes he praised the economic and social progress the revolution has brought to this farming area 300 miles east of Havana.

The second part, lasting just under 40 minutes, represented one of the gloomiest assessments of the world situation that Castro ever has offered.

"Imperialist circles are dreaming about an empire of 1,000 years, as in his time Adolf Hitler did," Castro said.

But he said any such effort would be no more successful than Hitler's.

At a time when tensions between East and West seem to be at postwar low, Castro's remarks struck a somewhat incongruous note.

He not only attacked the United States, he was openly concerned about the ability of the Soviet Union to survive the nationalist uprisings and other problems afflicting the country.

Casino Bus Flips, Kills 1, Hurts 37

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

GALLOWAY TOWNSHIP, N.J. — A mechanical problem may have caused an Atlantic City casino-bound bus to overturn, leaving one person dead and 37 others injured, eight critically, police said.

"I think maybe the bus wasn't in terrific condition," said passenger Francine Pera, 37, of Wayne. "We kept having problems with the air conditioning. The driver stopped once along the way at a toll booth to check it out."

She added, "Personally, I think she was going too fast." Officials at Saddle River Tours, the Lodi company that operates the bus, refused to comment.

All the victims in Wednesday's accident on the Garden State Parkway were from northern New Jersey.

The majority of the injured passengers had minor cuts and bruises and back pains, said Dr. James Bagnell, director of emergency services for Atlantic City Medical Center. The more serious injuries involved broken bones, he said.

One passenger, Blanche Biamonte, 76, of Newark, died Wednesday evening of multiple injuries, said a hospital spokeswoman.

The bus overturned and fell on its side. Police said the driver, Peggy Davis, 52, of Irvington, complained of a mechanical problem with the bus.

"It appears the brakes locked up and in an attempt to gain control, she tipped the bus," said Trooper David Smith, the first officer at the scene. Smith said investigators were trying to determine how fast the bus was traveling at the time of the accident.

"There was quite a bit of panic," Ms. Pera said. "A lot of people were badly injured, and some were unconscious. I pushed a woman off of me and discovered I was bleeding very badly. It took 40 stitches to close up cuts on my head and above my lip."

Korean Student Stages Reunification Protest

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SEOUL, South Korea — A student who traveled to North Korea illegally said today she will not return home unless the government allows her parents to come and get her, and she threatened to stage a hunger strike at the border, news reports said.

South Korean authorities arrested 20 Roman Catholic priests today as they tried to reach the border to greet the student, 20-year-old Im Su-Kyong. She went to North Korea for the 13th World Festival of Youth and Students on July 1-8.

Riot police firing tear gas stormed Seoul National University after about 250 students brandishing metal pipes, clubs and rocks tried to march from the school in a welcome rally for Ms. Im.

Ms. Im had said she would cross the heavily militarized border today

Port Director

GULFPORT, Miss. (AP) — A former executive director for operations of the North Carolina State Ports Authority has been named to head the Port of Gulfport.

The port authority board on Wednesday unanimously approved the selection of William Edwards as Mississippi State Port Authority executive director. Edwards is a North Carolina native with experience in the U.S. Navy as well as with that state's ports authority.

Officials said Edwards brings marketing skills with him to the Mississippi coast — and better marketing is something he said the port desperately needs.

Edwards fills a void opened 16 months ago when Bill Duke resigned. He starts work next week.

VCR Charges

GASTONIA (AP) — The owners of a Gastonia pawn shop and four former employees were charged Wednesday in a police sting involving the sale of stolen videocassette recorders, authorities said.

Kent's Pawn Shop, just around the corner from the city police station, was the target of a two-year undercover operation, police said. The sting resulted in 34 charges against six people.

Pawn dealer Kent Sigmon faces five charges, including a drug charge for allegedly arranging to trade cocaine for stolen VCRs, Sosebee said.

Sigmon, 25, was charged with two counts of attempt to receive stolen goods, pawn-picket violation, pawn-record violation and conspiracy to traffic cocaine. He was released from the Gaston County Jail on $2,000 bond.

as a symbol of unification between North and South Korea. Today is the anniversary of the cease-fire that ended the 1950-53 Korean War.

"I have committed no crime. All that I have in my head is the reunification of my homeland," North Korea's official Korean Central News Agency quoted Ms. Im as saying at a news conference today in North Korea's border town of Kaesong.

Yonhap, the South Korean news agency, quoted unidentified sources at the Unification Ministry as saying Ms. Im arrived at the truce village of Panmunjom, in the demilitarized zone, at around noon with about 500 supporters.

South Korean and foreign journalists based in Seoul were barred from Panmunjom.

"Don't block my way," Ms. Im reportedly shouted to Korean soldiers assigned to the United Nations Command joint security area. "Unless my parents and friends come to pick me up, I will not cross the military demarcation line."

The U.S.-led U.N. Command guards the southern half of the 2.5-mile-wide Demilitarized Zone. The command represents 16 nations that sent troops to aid South Korea in the Korean War.

South Korea said it would arrest Ms. Im on charges of violating national security when she returned. The North and South are bitter enemies, and it is against South Korean law to travel to the North without official approval.

Four sedans carrying the priests were stopped in northern Seoul when about 100 riot police surrounded their cars. After the priests refused to leave their cars, police opened the doors.

Some of the priests were pushed and shoved as they resisted arrest. They were put into four police vans and taken to a nearby police station.

"Sharing the pain of national division, we are embarking on a road toward national conciliation," one of the arrested priests, the Rev. Nam Kuk-hyun, said before the arrests.

Few citizens have been allowed to cross the sensitive border area, and then only by mutual agreement of both sides.

Seoul maintains that talks on unification must go through official channels, and it accuses the North of fomenting unrest by encouraging unofficial visits by radical students and citizens from the South.

Radical students, a small but vocal minority on campuses, have hailed Ms. Im as a "national unification heroine."

A rally in her support was held at Seoul's Korea University. No arrests were reported.

News reports in Seoul said government authorities had been notified as many as 650 participants who joined a peace march across North Korea with Ms. Im might also cross the border in Panmunjom.

North Korea today demanded that the U.N. Command remove guns it said were blocking the march across the border.

The purpose of the plan, Haney said, is to provide individuals, institutions, state and local government agencies and community leadership with projections needed to guide local planning for specific health care facilities and services. Involved are acute-care hospitals, rehabilitation facilities, long-term care facilities like nursing homes, home health agencies, end stage renal disease facilities, psychiatric hospital units and specialty hospitals, substance abuse hospital units, and specialty hospital and residential facilities and intermediate-care facilities for the mentally retarded.

Haney said to request a copy of the plan, interested persons should contact the Health Resources Development Office, 701 Barbour Drive, Raleigh, N.C., 27603; telephone 733-2040.

committee could be appointed and the issue would be dead until at least 1991.

Rep. Michael Decker, R-Forsyth, said he voted against the plan because of its size.

"It's just too big," Decker said. "I think some of us could have supported the road plan if they were built where they were needed, instead of to please certain sections of the state."

That theme was picked up in the Senate, where Sen. Dennis Winner, D-Buncombe, said he believes most people think the bill goes too far.

"I slowly over this whole period of this session have come to the conclusion that the people out there think this bill is too big," he said.

"I think that we have got roads in here that we could have done without."

Winner said he had watched Martin move away from the issue.

"What I perceive is really happening... I think he is a greatly astute politician and I think the governor has perceived that there is some trouble in the populace about the size of this bill and I think he is just stepping aside," he said.

Sen. Bill Goldston, D-Rockingham, agreed there are some concerns with size of the bill. But he said politics played a part in balancing the selections.

"We can't go and just run roads where you think you need them and I think I need them," he said.

Several senators and House members praised the bill as a boon to the state's economy. "This bill is going to do more for the economic development of this state than anything we have done over the past several years," said Sen. Bill Staton, D-Lee.

Sen. Fountain Odom, D-Mecklenburg, said the bill would mean good jobs and a good, growing economy. And he urged Republicans to drop partisan politics over the issue.

"I want to be able to say when I get home that I was able to vote for highways and for education," said Rep. Vernon Abernethy, R-Gaston. "I want to tell my Republican friends that we had a part in it. I truly believe my Republican vote will count for something by voting 'yes' for this bill."

The highway package will raise funds for the construction program with an increase in the gasoline tax of 5 1/4 cents per gallon, an 8 percent sales tax on car rentals, a 3 percent tax on vehicles with a $1,000 cap that later will rise to $1,500 and an increase in title fees from $5 to $35.

A final vote on the package is scheduled for Thursday.

Air

air quality enough to cross the line from violation to compliance.

The worsening situation for ozone was tempered somewhat by a net decrease in areas failing to comply with the carbon monoxide standard. EPA officials credited tighter motor vehicle standards, established under the 12-year-old current law, for the improvement.

The 44 areas in violation represent a decrease of eight following the deletion of 12 non-compliance areas and the addition of four.

But it is the combined impact of both pollutants that demonstrates how the air pollution problem is getting worse.

According to EPA, the total number of Americans living where one or both pollutants exceed allowable limits has increased from nearly 80 million a year ago to a figure as high as 110 million. The precise figure is unknown because the groupings of some geographical areas for counting purposes have been changed over the past year.

"This sharp increase in the number of areas not yet meeting the ozone standard is dramatic proof of the pressing need for a new clean air bill," said EPA Administrator William K. Reilly. "The problem is immense. We must address it now."

Reilly said the legislation proposed by the Bush administration offers "the best chance" of cleaning the nation's air, but environmental groups and their congressional backers have roundly criticized the bill and are supporting alternative legislation.

Ozone is a gas formed through chemical reactions, stimulated by sunlight and temperature. Components of ozone are emitted from motor vehicles, chemical manufacturing, dry cleaners, paint shops and solvents. Ailments associated with the gas include inflammation of the lungs, impaired breathing, coughing, chest pain, nausea and throat irritation. Long-term effects include permanent damage to lung tissues and impaired breathing capacity.

Carbon monoxide is a colorless, odorless, poisonous gas produced by the incomplete burning of carbon in fuels, with two-thirds of the emissions coming from motor vehicles.

When inhaled, carbon monoxide disrupts the delivery of oxygen to the body's organs and tissues, and is especially dangerous to those with heart disease. The gas also impairs exercise capacity, visual perception, manual dexterity, learning ability and performance of complex tasks in healthy individuals.

Water Regulations

RALEIGH (AP) — Groundwater will be more closely regulated in North Carolina under regulations taking effect Aug. 1, state officials say.

"We think that these new regulations will clarify the intent of our groundwater protection program and strengthen it," said Perry Nelson, groundwater section chief in the state Environmental Management Division.

The new regulations bar any agricultural chemical contamination, set standards for 43 compounds not previously regulated and combine all groundwater supplies rather than setting several groundwater categories.

Heavy Artillery Duelling Kills 28 In Beirut Battle

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BEIRUT, Lebanon — Syrian and Christian forces waged a devastating artillery duel across Beirut during the night, killing 28 people and wounding 80, police said. Four died when rockets crashed into a home for the elderly.

The latest casualties raised the overall casualty toll to 481 killed and 1,949 wounded in the 19-week confrontation between Gen. Michel Aoun's Christian forces and Syrian army gunners in Beirut and the surrounding mountains.

It was the heaviest shelling since March 14, when 39 people were killed and 96 wounded.

A police spokesman, who cannot be named under standing regulations, said casualties were higher in Syrian-policed Moslem west Beirut than in the city's eastern Christian sector.

Voice of the Homeland, the most popular Moslem radio station, called on those who "control the machine of steel and fire to stop the massacre at any cost."

The police spokesman said it was "impossible" to determine who started the bombardment. He noted it was "the fiercest ever" artillery attack by Aoun's gunners against the Syrians.

The Christian-Syrian confrontation began March 8 after Aoun blockaded ports operated by Moslem militias south of Beirut. The Syrians and their militia allies retaliated by shelling the Christian enclave north of the city.

Shells today tore gaping holes in apartment buildings, triggering hundreds of fires that blazed out of control because a power outage left the fire brigade without water.

Thuds from exploding shells and the whooshing sound of rockets echoed around the city during an eight-hour duel that subsided into intermittent exchanges at 3:30 a.m.

A police spokesman said shells and rockets rained on residential areas at the rate of 60 per minute. Radio stations interrupted programs to urge civilians to take shelter underground.

Five rockets fired from east Beirut scored direct hits on a Moslem home for the elderly in west

Beirut, killing four elderly people and wounding three, the spokesman said.

The four major hospitals in west Beirut also evacuated patients to underground shelters as shells and rockets crashed into almost every single street, the spokesman said.

Smoke billowed from several gutted buildings and debris and glass shards carpeted streets as anxious residents emerged from bomb shelters to inspect their property.

Hundreds of cars crushed in the barrage littered west Beirut's Kantari district.

Duran Next For Leonard

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Sugar Ray Leonard and Roberto Duran talked about reliving old times at a midtown dance hall steeped in memories.

A mass of media turned out on Wednesday to listen.

Several blocks across town, Mike Weaver also talked about repeating the past. A single reporter listened.

Leonard and Duran will fight for the third time for many millions of dollars sometime in November or early December.

Tonight, Mike Weaver will fight for $7,000 against Phil Brown at Madison Square Garden's Felt Forum. It will be a good night for Weaver. He's even with the IRS, and for the first time in several fights he will get the whole purse.

Because of the twists and turns of boxing, Weaver has been a club fighter for much of his career. He also once was the World Boxing Association heavyweight champion and he made as much as $2.5 million a fight.

The 33-year-old Leonard wouldn't answer an offer for $2.5 million, but it's a neighborhood the 38-year-old Weaver would love to live in one more time.

"Realistically, I think I can get a title shot if I can get in the top 10, maybe Tyson would fight me," Weaver said.

Realistically, the power in Mike Weaver's left hook remains to the point that no one wants to fight him if he doesn't have to. A champion, yes, but he's never had the popularity that forces opponents to fight him.

Realistically, another title shot is not what keeps Weaver fighting.

Here's realism — an unmarried father with six kids ranging from nine months to 17 years.

"I never smoked, never drank, never tried drugs," Weaver said. Then he smiled and added, "My only problem was, I like women. That was the problem."

"I'll still fight as long as they let me fight, as long as the Lord allows me to fight," Weaver said.

"I never tried doing anything else. There's nothing I can do."

Physically, Weaver still is imposing, still looks like Hercules, a name given him before he got a chance to challenge Larry Holmes for the World Boxing Council championship as an afterthought back in 1979. He got $50,000. Network television wouldn't buy the fight.

Weaver had Holmes in serious trouble before being stopped in the 12th round.

Weaver won the WBA title when, hopelessly behind, he knocked out John Tate with 45 seconds left in the fifth round in 1980. He then knocked out Gerrie Coetzee of South Africa in the 13th round in 1980 for that $2.5 million payday.

In his second defense, Weaver got $750,000 for outpointing James "Quick" Tillis in 1981 before losing the title when stopped by Michael Dokes in 63 seconds of a controversial fight for which Weaver got $1.5 million.

Weaver fought Dokes again in 1983 and seemed to get the better of it, but Dokes got a draw and kept the title. Since then his career has resumed its checkered pattern.

In early 1986, Weaver knocked down Carl "The Truth" Williams three times and stopped him in one round. Six fights later, Williams got $1 million for getting stopped in one round by Mike Tyson.

Since the Williams fight, Weaver has won four fights and lost three, all by knockout. In his two bouts this year, he has scored early knockouts.

After getting knocked out by John Du Plooy in the second round in South Africa in his only fight of 1988, Weaver said: "You play, you pay. I was out every night with girls."

Weaver thought about getting out of boxing.

"I went to my church, the Sky Pilot Ministry in Diamond Bar, Calif., where I live," he said. "Pastor Terry Couth told me in 1989 there was going to be good things for me."

"I didn't see it." Mike Weaver wants to. Oh, he wants to.

North State Blanks Beaufort Takes Act To Hudson Monday For State Tournament

By Mike Grizzard
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

The cozy confines of the Elm Street Little League Park have been friendly to the Greenville North State All-Stars. Now they get to take their act on the road.

Behind a four-hit complete game from right-hander Jamie Wilson and another golden glove performance by shortstop Daryl Cherry, North State wrapped up the District IV championship and a berth in the state tournament with a 5-0 shutout of Beaufort Wednesday evening.

North State, the District IV, Area II champion, opened the best-of-three series with Area I champion Beaufort Tuesday with an 18-5 romp.

The seven-team, double-elimination state tournament begins Monday in Hudson, located approximately 10 miles from Hickory. North State's first assignment is against the champion of District I at 1 p.m.

"I'm glad we're going but it just wasn't one person — it was a team effort," said Cherry, who also belted a two-run homer. "Good defense was the key. I was pretty confident we could win today, especially after the way we played (Tuesday)."

Wilson dodged two early Beaufort threats then settled down to hurl one-hit ball over the final four innings. He finished with a four-hitter, striking out four and walking three.

Beaufort managed to hit but one ball out of the infield after the second inning. Instead, the middle infield duo of second baseman Scott Briley and Cherry stayed busy and they responded.

Cherry was credited with five put-outs and four assists while Briley had two put-outs and two assists. They teamed for one double play in the fifth.

"The first three innings it was a tight game and I got of kind of scared," Wilson said. "The double play by Scott Briley and Darryl Cherry helped."

Both teams missed scoring opportunities early.

Beaufort put runners at the corners with two outs in the first and had runners at second and third with one out in the second but failed to scratch.

Beaufort starter John Hunnings worked out of a bases-loaded, two-out jam in the first when Ryan Parker made a nice running catch on Cherry's sinking line drive to center.

North State snapped the scoreless deadlock with a four-run uprising in the third then added an insurance run in the fifth.

Matthew Dellasaga, who finished with two hits, drew a one-out walk and Adrian Jones followed with double down the left-field line. After Dellasaga scampered home on a wild pitch, James Ebron dropped a single into shallow right to bring home Jones.

One out later, Cherry crunched a two-run shot over the center-field fence.

"I got mad because the guy (Parker) robbed me of a hit the last time," Cherry said. "I kind of wanted to hit it out for revenge."

In the fifth, Nabeel Barakat looped

a leadoff single to right, Briley singled and Dellasaga laid down a beautiful bunt for a hit to load the bases with no outs.

North State finished with seven hits.

"We had good defense, real good pitching and timely hitting," North State coach Roy Berbert said. "You have to give Beaufort a lot of credit. They came back after the blowout (Tuesday) and showed a lot of class. It wasn't an easy game."

"I'm real proud of all the boys. Now we look forward to going to the state and hope we have the same results we had here."

McKinney Has Seen Vast Changes In College Basketball

By Tom Foreman Jr.
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Bones McKinney earned between $7,500 and $11,500 in the years he coached at Wake Forest, and that's just one of the changes he's seen in basketball in the last 30 years.

Indeed, money is at the top of the list of what's new. What McKinney made then amounts to speakers' fees for some coaches today. But, to listen to McKinney talk, it was a lot more fun when he roamed the sidelines.

"There wasn't any such thing as a shoe contract. We bought our Converse basketball shoe," said McKinney, who was in Raleigh recently hawking his latest book, "Bones."

"Television was just starting and you didn't really make any money. You didn't have your radio shows," he said. "You had some but you didn't make any money."

Athletically, the difference between the 1960s player and the basketball player of the 1990s is vast. On the level of personal relationships, McKinney says players and coaches aren't as close as they used to be, especially as close as he got.

He puts the blame in part on the growth of the sport, which may have put some distance between coaches and players.

"I can't say that we're too big, but I think it's too big for a coach to have as close an association with his players as I had with mine," he says. "It wasn't anything for me to see my players after practice in their dormitory for some reason."

It could be the commitments that coaches make off the court, like campus, speaking engagements and recruiting.

"With all they've got going on, it's pretty tough to have as close an association as I would hope to have with my coach," McKinney says.

Another reason might be the stringent NCAA rules, which makes some types of contact with a player difficult to some.

"It's easier to keep the Ten Commandments than it is to keep the NCAA rules."

There was a time that he chose to go against the rules, however. McKinney feels he had a reason.

"I had a boy whose sister had leukemia. She was nine years old. I flew him home and flew him back," he says. "When she died, I flew him to the funeral and I didn't give a damn if they caught me."

McKinney was an academic adviser, of sorts, when he coached. Today, there would be someone telling him if a player wasn't doing well in the classroom, but he devised a system that kept him in touch with the progress his players were making.

"I had postcards with my name on it addressed to me," he says, noting that he would list the class, the instructor's name and the player's standing and attendance on the card.

One day, he found the system worked.

"I called a boy in one day and asked him how he was doing in Professor Brown's English class," McKinney said. "He said 'Well, coach I'm just getting along fine far as I know.' And I said 'Well, that's strange. You haven't been there in the last three classes' and I had the card saying he hadn't been there."

Crumpler, Fuller Line Up Last Time As Teammates

By Tom Morris
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

GREENSBORO — Rose High's Raleigh Fuller and Carlester Crumpler have been playing football together ever since they can remember, but tonight will likely be the final night the two line up as teammates.

Both have earned starting positions on opposite sides of the line of scrimmage for tonight's East-West All-Star football game, which kicks off at 8 p.m. at Jamieson Stadium.

Crumpler, who will play for East Carolina next year, will start at defensive end for the East. Fuller, who will play for North Carolina A&T next season, is the starting offensive left guard also for the East team.

The two teamed together throughout grade school, junior high and high school. When Rose fell to Fayetteville Pine Forest in the state 4-A playoffs, it looked as if the two had played their last game together.

Neither was selected for the Shrine Bowl game in December. Then, when invitations for the East-West game came out this spring, only two players from one school could be on the team.

That left East coach Ted Perry with a tough choice. He decided to go with Rose's Crumpler and running back Tim Moore, both All-State choices.

Left out in the cold, though, was Fuller, a 6-4, 240-pound tackle.

"Chip (Williams) knew we wanted Raleigh the whole time," Perry said. "We wanted all three, but we could only take two."

Well, in the end, Perry got his initial wish. Moore decided to sign a professional baseball contract in June, opening a spot on the roster.

"This is how I expected it to come out. He (Timmy) was real undecided about what he wanted to do. I'm not saying I was happy something like that would happen, but I really wanted to play in this game bad."

Crumpler agreed. "I had a feeling Timmy would go play baseball," he said. "It was pretty hard at first, but I hope he does well. It's something that is already done.

"Me and Raleigh grew up together," Crumpler added. "We've known each other since we were four years old and we're best friends. I've known him longer than I've known Timmy. It didn't matter which one came. I was going to have fun."

Fuller considered signing with ECU, where he could have stayed teammates with Crumpler, but in the end he decided on North Carolina A&T, where he will play tight end.

"It suits me fine," Fuller said. "They run the option. I'll be doing a lot of blocking. Since I'm around 242, I guess I'll be like a big tight end instead of a small guard."

The game gives both players a chance to get a leg up in preparation for their first college pre-season which begins the second week of August.

Crumpler has been preparing all summer. He enrolled at summer school at ECU and has been running and training with some of the Pirate upperclassmen.

During the past week of practice he has also had to adjust to a new defense from what he was used to in high school.

East-West To Be Decided Up Front

By Tom Morris
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

GREENSBORO — East coach Ted Perry said how his team handles any mismatches up front will go a long way toward deciding who will win the McDonald's East-West All-Star football game tonight.

The West defensive line boasts strength and size in the person of Mark Dixon (6-4, 240), a Ragsdale product headed to Virginia, and Kelly Whitmire (6-7, 231) of Brevard, a South Carolina signee.

"You don't have to remind me," Perry said. "If we can't handle them one on one, we've got big trouble."

"It's not so much the size. It's their strength. We're pretty big too, but their size is more mobile. We're strong defensively, I just don't know if we as strong as they are overall."

If the East offensive line can hold, that could mean an easier night for quarterback Todd Decker of Millbrook, and tailback Derrick Pasley of Southern Durham. Those two figure to see the ball the majority of the time for the East. Decker, a Duke recruit, is a talented drop-back passer, while Pasley, a East Carolina signee, is the fastest back the East has.

West coach Rudy Abrams of East Mecklenburg isn't quite ready to make any predictions of probable keys for the game, preferring instead to let the game dictate his strategy.

"It's almost like going into a ball game totally blind," he said. "I'm just going to see what happens. Whatever happens, we'll go with it."

Both coaches say they're going to throw the ball. Abrams has named Pisgah's Randy Wells as his starter, with wide receiver Shawn Moore expected to be a key target.

Tailback Robby Holloway, who scored 52 touchdowns and rushed for just under 2,000 yards last season at Maiden, is the top threat at running back for the West.

"In a game like this, I'd like to be wide open," Abrams said. "But if we find a running back having a good game, we'll go with him."

"We hope (to go to Holloway) a lot. We had hoped to give him and Dion Summers the ball a lot. But we doubt that Dion will play. He hurt his knee. It's nothing serious, but it's not responding."

Recent rule changes figure to favor the offenses for this year's game. Linebackers can't blitz and have to line up behind the defensive linemen. In addition, defensive backs have to line up five yards off the wide receiver at the line of scrimmage everywhere on the field.

In year's past, defenses have had a tendency to dominate the All-Star game, but state officials are hoping

West's Homer Helps Snow Hill Even Series

SNOW HILL — Chris West hit a two-out three-run homer Wednesday night to lift Snow Hill to an 8-6 victory over Whiteville in the second game of the Eastern North Carolina American Legion championship series.

The victory by Post 94 tied the best-of-seven series at one game apiece. The series will now move to Whiteville for the next three games, tonight, Friday and Saturday, all set for 8 p.m.

Whiteville took the initial lead in the game in the first inning scoring a single run. Matthew Gore walked and moved to third on a single by Randy Best. LeGrand Russell then hit a sacrifice fly to bring Gore in.

Whiteville added three more in the top of the third before Snow Hill finally got on the scoreboard on a solo home run by Walt McKeel in the bottom of the inning. Whiteville's runs included two on a home run by Russell.

Snow Hill closed it to 4-2 with another run in the sixth. Whiteville, however, added two more in the top of the seventh before Post 94 came back with three to cut the lead to 6-5 in the bottom of the inning. Gore hit a solo homer to open the seventh for Whiteville.

Then, in the eighth, Cedric Collins and McKeel drew back-to-back walks with one away. After a second out, West unloaded on a two-strike pitch to drive the ball out of the park and put Snow Hill ahead for the first time and Post 94 held on the rest of the way for the win.

McKeel, West and Prentice Uzzell each had two hits to pace the Snow Hill attack. Byron Ward had three hits for Whiteville while Gore added two.

The winner of the series will advance to the state finals against the western winner.

Pirates Set Five Home Games In 1990

East Carolina University's football Pirates will play five home games during the 1990 season.

In a recent graphic which accompanied a story on Division I-A Independents' problems in scheduling, typographical errors caused some confusion about home many home dates the Pirates had scheduled.

The Pirates, however, will play Louisiana Tech on Sept. 1, Virginia Tech on Sept. 15, Southern Mississippi on Oct. 6, Cincinnati on Oct. 20 and Northern Illinois on Nov. 10.

ECU will face Florida State, Southwestern Louisiana, Georgia, South Carolina, Temple and Memphis State in road games during the 1990 season.

Heat Slips By Hornets, 97-94

MIAMI (AP) — Rookie Scott Haffner hit two shots from the left corner in the final minute to help the Miami Heat beat the Charlotte Hornets 97-94 Wednesday in the NBA summer league.

Haffner, a second-round draft choice from Evansville, broke ties at 92 and 94. After teammate Rony Seikaly added a free throw with six seconds left, Charlotte's Greg Van Soelen and Brian Rowsom missed 3-point shots.

Seikaly had 23 points, nine rebounds and four blocked shots. Haffner added 22 points and John Shasky 15 for Miami, 1-1 in the league.

Rowsom had 16 points and Kenny Drummond 14 for Charlotte, 1-1.

Promoters Look For NFL Sellout

RALEIGH (AP) — When the New York Jets meet the Philadelphia Eagles in Raleigh next month in an exhibition game, perhaps the most important audience will be NFL officials and team owners — the people who will decide if North Carolina is ready for professional football.

"We don't want people to say you had 37,000 people there, is that good or is that not good? We don't want them to question," said Mark Richardson, who is helping coordinate the promotional effort surrounding the game.

"We want them to say there were 45,000 people there. They sold every seat in the house and it was a success. We don't want to leave it up to some judgmental call," Richardson said.

Richardson's father is hopeful, too. A Spartanburg, S.C. businessman, Jerry Richardson is attempting to bring an NFL franchise to the Carolinas. He says he's hoping to have sold all 44,854 permanent seats in Carter-Finley Stadium, which is home for North Carolina State. With additional seating on the grassy bank in the south end zone, as many as 53,000 seats are available.

The game is scheduled for Aug. 20.

"You can go to the corporate community for just that basic support ... which really gives us a chance to succeed. But we've got to have the individuals. We've got to have the people in the seats to make it work," said Mike McCormack, the former Seattle Seahawks coach and executive who is working with Richardson's group.

Approximately 18,000 seats remain for the game, which is also being televised by ESPN, and is Raleigh's first exposure to professional football in nearly 20 years. To sell the rest of the tickets, officials of the Richardson group introduced their expanded advertising campaign at a news conference.

One commercial already appearing locally shows a baby playing with an NFL football. As if on cue, the baby begins to cry as an announcer says that there are some who doubt the Carolinas can support an NFL franchise.

The ball eventually rolls away to the feet of a football player — actually a weightlifter portraying a player — with the announcer urging viewers to "send a message to the NFL. We've grown up."

Hardee's fast-food restaurants has begun a promotional campaign which offers diners a special meal in connection with the game. Food Lion also is pitching in with a special campaign; there also will be a car giveaway and a contest in which winners can win tickets to the Super Bowl.

Richardson is president of TW Services, which oversees the operation of 2,000 restaurants, including some Hardee's restaurants.

The game is to be broadcast on a radio network which, as of Wednesday, included 39 stations in the Carolinas. The sportscasters for the Duke, North Carolina, North Carolina State, Clemson and South Carolina networks will all call portions of the game.

A Charlotte marketing group did go to the corporate community to sell tickets. What Muhleman Marketing got in return was 16 packages sold to area businesses. Included in those packages are 100 tickets to the game, souvenirs and various other goodies.

"We've set the goal that we want to sell the stadium out and that's what we're focused on. It's going to take an all-out effort to get there, but we think we can," said the younger Richardson, who runs Richardson Sports.

"That's why we've saved what little bit of money that we've been able to allocate toward advertising, we've really saved it for the last push. We saved it because we thought that we were still going to have some tickets to sell at this point in time," he said. "We've got to push, but we think we can do it."

Four cities are using the upcoming exhibition season to try and convince the NFL that they, too, can support a franchise when expansion finally occurs. But Richardson points out that the Carolinas hold an edge over Jacksonville, Fla., Memphis, Tenn., and Oakland, Calif., in that its game will be televised and that the surrounding area will be showcased.

Pitts Named To Pembroke State Post

PEMBROKE (AP) — Linda Pitts is not setting her sights low as she starts her job as the new women's basketball coach at Pembroke State.

"It will be extremely tough, but I'm not looking at the magic number 20," she said. "I'm looking at winning the conference championship. We've not won the title in three years."

Pitts was appointed Wednesday to succeed Lalor Jones. "I do not intend to look back over my shoulder because all I see is wins, wins, wins," Pitts said in a telephone interview.

Jones went to North Carolina-Wilmington, the third Pembroke State women's basketball coach to be lured to another North Carolina school.

Of the 15 seasons in which Pembroke State has had women's basketball, there have been two losing seasons. In the last seven seasons, the Braves have averaged 23 victories a year and Jones coached the last five while Pitts sat beside her.

Overall, Pembroke State's women have compiled a 267-115 record in women's basketball for a percentage of .699.

Pitts was already used to success, however.

In addition to her basketball duties, she coached the women's softball team and had winning records during all five seasons. Pitts, whose teams won 107 games during her reign, led her team to a Carolinas Conference title and two NAIA District 26 championships.

A graduate of Judson College in 1979, her coaching career began with an assistant role at Mississippi University for Women. Pitts went to South Florida in 1980 and became a full-time assistant for volleyball and softball.

Pitts, 31, returned to her alma mater for two years in 1982 as head basketball coach before moving to Pembroke State.

Super Flea In The Land Of Giants

5-3 Thurman Attempting To Make Cowboys' Roster

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

THOUSAND OAKS, Calif. — Tyrone Thurman has about as much chance of making the Dallas Cowboys as a bug does of surviving a collision with a windshield.

Yet the 5-foot-3, 145-pound Thurman, a free agent from Texas Tech, keeps making great plays in the land of the NFL giants.

"Super Flea may just have the best hands we've seen in training camp, better even than Kelvin Martin, but unfortunately his hands aren't very large," John Wooten, the Cowboys' top scout, said. "He's a tough little scouter."

As Wooten spoke, Thurman streaked between two defenders to catch a perfectly timed pass from Troy Aikman.

"Tyrone reminds you a lot of Gerald McNeil at Cleveland," Wooten said. "He's a great kick returner and he's an excellent receiver. Of course, he's so short it's sometimes hard for the quarterback to find him."

"He probably has a 50-50 shot to make our team because we have to have aggressive kickoff units. If Tyrone doesn't make it here, then I bet the Canadian teams will gobble him up."

Coach Jimmy Johnson isn't as optimistic as Wooten about Thurman's chances.

"It would be difficult for him to hang on," Johnson said. "He's a hard worker and I like his attitude but he has a lot to overcome."

Thurman knows all this. "I've had the odds stacked against me before," he said. "Realistically, I'm going to have to show a lot of returning kicks if I'm to make this team."

Special teams coach Alan Lowery said it's difficult for a small man to play in the NFL.

"The problem that you run into is that an arm tackle can bring you down," Lowery said. "You get hit with one arm and you're down. Thurman's only weapon is to be able to run away from people."

Thurman is quick. He played point guard in basketball at Texas Tech after shattering most of the Southwest Conference's return records.

He made The Associated Press All-America first team as a kick returner.

Thurman also is strong. He can bench-press 280 pounds and has squat-lifted 435.

If Thurman does make the Cowboys he will be the NFL's shortest player at 5-4. McNeil is 5-7.

"It would be special if Flea made it," Wooten said. "It would be a great hometown deal. But there's not a lot of room for sentiment in the NFL."

At the end of a recent practice at California Lutheran College, Thurman was mobbed by children wanting his autograph. Some kids stood taller than he did.

Mets-Twins Talk Trade For Viola

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Frank Viola used to live a few miles from Shea Stadium. The New York Mets and the Minnesota Twins are discussing a trade that would have him pitch there.

New York, looking for another starter, is talking trade with the Twins for the 1988 American League Cy Young Award winner. And that's fine with him.

"Whatever happens, happens. It's part of the game," Viola said after the Twins' 5-4 victory over Baltimore Wednesday night. "It wouldn't bother me. I've got a home here. I've got a home in New York. I don't think I can go wrong. Sometimes a change may be for the best. I'll tell you one thing, I'll win anywhere I go."

New York is offering three pitchers — Rick Aguilera, David West and Kevin Tapani. Pitching is what the Twins want.

"If you make this kind of deal, you talk about pitching," Twins general manager Andy MacPhail said.

"They're one of the few clubs that can give you pitching."

MacPhail, however, said nothing was close on the deal, although he said he would talk with the Mets again today.

"This is premature, to say the least," he said. "I never really put that high a percentage on it coming (about)."

Viola, a star at St. John's University, has struggled for Minnesota this season. He is 8-11 with a 3.64 earned-run average, although the Twins have not given him great support.

The Mets, trailing Montreal by 4½ games in the National League East, think he would make a great addition.

"This is the time of year when things start to get serious," general manager Frank Cashen said. "I spent all winter trying to acquire Mark Langston because he's a premier pitcher. Anytime you can get a guy like Viola, you would do it."

Buick Open Short of Capacity

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

GRAND BLANC, Mich. — Suppose they had a golf tournament and nobody came?

Sounds pretty far fetched, you say?

Well, consider this: heading into today's opening round of the Buick Open, the automaker was giving away $1 million in prize money and couldn't get a full field of 156 PGA Tour players to tee it up.

The field at 7,014-yard Warwick Hills, a par-72 course about an hour north of Detroit, consisted of 154 pros and one amateur.

"I guess it proves they don't play just for money, doesn't it?" defending champion Scott Verplank said. "I'm surprised they've got a short field, but I guess it's Buick's bad luck to follow the British Open."

Such bad luck was supposed to have been eliminated when the sponsor increased the purse by $200,000 from last year, assuring the winner a check of $180,000 for four days' work. But it didn't happen.

It has been years since the Buick

Open drew such magic names as Arnold Palmer or Jack Nicklaus, but Steve Wright, general chairman of the tournament, didn't feel the sponsor was being snubbed.

"We had 176 committed, which is more than last year," Wright said. "I don't know why individuals had to withdraw. There have been some injuries. There are different situations that arise."

There were 12 alternates listed, which generally is more than enough. But because so many exempt players withdrew at the last moment, many of the alternates had left town or made other commitments.

"Had we known, I have a whole notebook full of names, but people can't change plans at a moment's notice," Wright said.

"It's too bad," Verplank said. "I know 20 guys back home (in Edmond, Okla.) that would love to play here if the PGA would let them. Good players, too; they just don't have a Tour card."

"I think it's the Tour's fault."

In a pro-am Wednesday, Verplank shot 1-under-par 71 and talked afterward about quitting, something that once seemed unthinkable.

"I've thought a lot about doing something else," Verplank said. "It's too hard. I just turned 25 years old. After three years on the Tour, I feel like I'm about 35."

Another Loss Puts Reds Closer To Mark

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

With the Cincinnati Reds one defeat short of matching a 23-year-old low-water mark, Manager Pete Rose says there's nothing the team can do but keep playing — and hoping.

The Reds lost their 10th consecutive game Wednesday night, a 5-3 defeat by San Diego. The Reds can tie a 1966 mark of futility with a loss to the Padres today.

Is there anything the Reds can do to change their fortunes?

"That's the same question we've asked each other the last seven or eight days," Rose said. "Just keep playing, that's all you can do."

"I don't think whether it's two in a row, 10 in a row or 20 in a row it gets any tougher," he said. "Every game was tough to lose. We're just all counting them right now."

Perhaps the most painful aspect of the slide is the inability of the Reds to take advantage of mistakes by the opposition.

"We've had opportunities to win a lot of games in this 10-game streak," Rose said. Alluding to some poor plays by the Padres, he added: "They tried to give us the game tonight."

But the Reds, losers in 31 of their last 41 games, wouldn't take it.

Cincinnati's slump is its worst since an 11-game slide from June 29 to July 9, 1966.

Astros 6, Dodgers 2
Mike Scott used his right arm to become the first 16-game winner in the majors and his bat to drive in two runs. He struck out a season-high 11 batters and had a perfect game through 4 2-3 innings. Jeff Hamilton lined a single to left to end it.

was," he said. "I'm more or less a stand-up end, working on the tight end. It's similar to what the Pirates run. I mainly stop the run and sometimes I go over the pass."

Fuller is happy just to be back in pads, considering he'll spend the final few weeks of August back in Greensboro, sweating it out with the Aggies.

"I'm going to have an advantage going in that a lot of freshmen aren't going to have as far as conditioning and contact is concerned," he said. "I think I'll be a little ahead of the game."

Tonight's game offers both players a chance to close out their high school careers on a relaxed note. With the choice of college already out of the way, all that's left to do is go out and just play football.

"It'll be a little something to put in my scrapbook," Fuller said. "It's something I'll never forget. It's a once-in-a-lifetime thing. I've really enjoyed coming together against people I've played against and heard about."

Crumpler is one of the few players who can call up someone in his family for advice on how to get set for this game. Back in 1970, his father Carlester Crumpler Sr. played for the East.

Still, the two haven't exactly sat down and talked about the situation, other than just to discuss the importance of enjoying the whole experience.

"It's not something you should build up a lot of pressure about," Crumpler said. "You're out there to have fun."

After a week of two-a-day practices, Crumpler and Fuller are ready to play. For the better part of the week, the East and the West have been sparring verbally, with the harshest exchange coming at Monday night's banquet.

"It was just a little showboating," Fuller said. "You could call it a modeling contest at this point. It was just a lot of talk."

this will open the game up more by creating less confusion for the offensive players.

"I don't anticipate the ends and linebackers getting in clean," Perry said. "Last year, there was confusion in the blocking schemes. If (the rule changes) is good in an All-Star game. It's been coming on for years."

Normally a run-oriented coach, Perry said he has little reservation about putting the ball in the air tonight. If nothing else, it might be a must to offset the West's defensive line strength.

"We're planning to throw it a lot," he said. "I've never had quarterbacks like this before. When they start out-manning us, pass blocking is a little easier than run blocking."

Locally, Rose standouts Carlester Crumpler and Raleigh Fuller are starting at defensive end and offensive guard, respectively.

East Carolina signees Jeff Cooke, Levi Beckwith and Pasley will also start. Cooke, who played at Lee County, is a linebacker. Beckwith, a Garner product, will start at cornerback, while Pasley, is the tailback.

Cincinnati's Mariano Duncan grimaces after being hit by a pitch from Dennis Rasmussen

Scott, who allowed four hits and walked one in eight innings, has won 10 of his last 12 decisions.

In the fourth, the Astros snapped a 19-inning scoreless drought against the Dodgers in taking a 3-0 lead against Fernando Valenzuela, 5-10, who has lost five of his last six decisions.

Phillies 4, Expos 3
Down to its final strike, Philadelphia ended a six-game losing streak on a two-run single by Randy Ready off bullpen ace Tim Burke. The loss ended Montreal's six-game winning streak.

Bob Dernier led off the ninth inning against Zane Smith, 1-13, with a grounder that was booted by third baseman Tim Wallach. Von Hayes followed with a ground-rule double.

Burke, who has 21 saves in 27 opportunities, came on to retire Ricky

Braves 5, Giants 4
Dale Murphy, with just two hits in 30 lifetime at-bats against Scott Garrelts, brought the Braves back from a 3-0 deficit in the sixth inning with a three-run homer. He added a tie-breaking sacrifice fly against Steve Bedrosian, 2-5, in a two-run eighth.

The victory snapped Atlanta's six-game losing streak.

Kevin Mitchell, who leads the majors with 88 RBIs, drove in a run as the Giants took a 3-0 lead in the first against Marty Clary.

Pirates 3, Mets 2
John Smiley pitched a three-hitter to beat New York for the sixth time in seven career decisions. He also drove in a run.

Barry Bonds led the Pittsburgh attack with two RBIs and a spectacular defensive play as the Pirates, 6-12 against the Mets last season, won for the sixth time in 10 meetings.

Smiley, 9-5, pitched five hitless innings before Kevin Elster led off the sixth with his third home run. Mark Carreon hit his major league-leading third pinch-hit homer — his fourth overall — in the eighth.

Bonds saved the no-hit attempt with one out in the fifth when he leaped high and extended his arm over the fence in the left-field corner to take a home run away from Tim Teufel.

Cardinals 2, Cubs 0
Vince Coleman had both RBIs and stole three bases, and Jose DeLeon extended his streak of scoreless innings to 19 for St. Louis.

Jose Oquendo's hitting streak, the longest in the majors this season, ended at 23 games. He was 0-for-3, and was left in the on-deck circle in the eighth inning.

Coleman drove in Terry Pendleton both times and stole his 48th, 49th and 50th consecutive bases. Coleman, who leads the majors in steals with 44 this season, has not been thrown out since last year.

AMERICAN LEAGUE

Indians 8, Yankees 7
George Steinbrenner and Dallas Green now know what most of baseball realized last winter: the Yankees' pitching stinks.

New York took a 2-0 lead against Cleveland Wednesday night. After falling behind 6-2, the Yankees took a 7-6 lead. Didn't matter. The bullpen got involved and Cleveland won 8-7 for New York's eighth loss in nine games.

After Luis Polonia's two-run homer gave the Yankees a 7-6 lead in the top of the eighth, Lee Guetterman, 2-5, allowed a leadoff single to Jerry Browne in the bottom half.

Felix Fermin bunted and Guetterman's throw sailed 20 feet over first base and rolled down the right-field line as the runners went to second and third. Dion James popped out and Joe Carter was walked to load the bases. Pete O'Brien then popped the ball down the left-field line and Polonia allowed it to drop for a double. O'Brien had three hits and drove in four runs.

The Yankees' bullpen is 0-5 since July 15 with an 11.88 earned-run average.

Athletics 9, Angels 5
Matt Young, 1-3, retired one batter for his first victory since July 19, 1987, as Oakland stopped visiting California's seven-game winning streak.

With the score tied 5-5, Mark McGwire and Dave Henderson started the eighth with singles off Mike Witt, 5-5. Rich Monteone struck out Jose Canseco but Ron Hassey's single scored pinch-runner Stan Javier. Tony Phillips walked, loading the bases, and Mike Gallego hit an RBI groundout. Rickey Henderson and Carney Lansford added RBI singles.

Twins 5, Orioles 4
Doug Baker singled in the winning run in the ninth and Kent Hrbek homered twice as Minnesota overcame a 4-0 first-inning deficit and sent visiting Baltimore to its seventh straight loss. Jeff Reardon, 3-2, got his first victory since June 26.

In the ninth, Tim Laudner and Al Newman hit one-out singles off Mark Williamson, 6-3. Randy Bush was walked intentionally and Baker lined a 1-1 pitch to right.

White Sox 5, Mariners 3
Ozzie Guillen stretched his hitting streak to 16 games with a pair of run-scoring singles as Chicago won for the 11th time in 12 games. The White Sox have won 11 straight at Comiskey Park.

Greg Hibbard, 2-2, allowed three hits and struck out five in 6 2-3 innings and Bobby Thigpen got five outs for his 21st save.

Bill Swift, 6-3, lost his fifth consecutive decision against Chicago since Oct. 3, 1985, giving up six hits and three runs in six innings.

Royals 7, Red Sox 4
Bret Saberhagen, 10-5, won for the seventh time in eight decisions, allowing nine hits and four runs in 6 2-3 innings, walking five and striking out four. Willie Wilson had four hits as visiting Kansas City rallied from 3-0 and 4-1 deficits.

Rangers 11, Blue Jays 1
Julio Franco drove in three runs to take over the American League lead in RBIs and the Texas got 16 hits in Arlington Stadium.

Rookie Kevin Brown, 9-6, allowed seven hits in eighth innings. Mike Flanagan, 6-7, lost for the first time in five starts since June 27, allowing six runs and eight hits in 4 1-3 innings.

Brewers 3, Tigers 2
Robin Yount hit a two-run homer in the first to extend his hitting streak to 16 games and walked with the bases loaded in the eighth off Edwin Nunez, 1-2, to force in the go-ahead run.

Statue Move

RALEIGH (AP) — Sir Walter Raleigh was on the move again Wednesday.

The 11½-foot statue of the English adventurer for whom the city is named has graced the 100 block of Fayetteville Street Mall for less than eight months. Wednesday morning it was picked up with cranes and hauled by truck to a temporary resting place in a city storage facility.

It is the second move in less than a year for the 1-ton bronze statue with the size-20 foot and the cool, arrogant expression.

The statue, owned by the state but on long-term loan to the city, was erected in 1976 on the Bicentennial Mall in front of the Legislative Building. It remained there until December, when it was removed to make way for construction of the new state Museum of History.

Workers had to move the statue again Wednesday to make room for construction.

Opening lead: Queen of ♣

Here's a hand that will give you the opportunity of judging how good a player you really are. Cover the East-West cards and imagine you are declaring a four-heart contract at rubber bridge. The opening lead is the queen of clubs.

Although your hand has good playing strength, you do not have enough to move over partner's jump raise to four hearts. Even if partner brings you a magic hand—the A K Q of spades and ace of diamonds—you rate to have a loser in each red suit. Also, your hand is far too strong for an opening weak two-bid.

After a club opening lead, you can count 10 tricks even if you have to lose one in trumps—five hearts, four spades and the ace of clubs. The danger is you could lose four—three diamonds and a trump—before you collect your due. East is the danger hand; you cannot afford a lead through your king of diamonds.

If you have worked all this out, the play becomes easy. Win the ace of clubs, discarding a diamond from hand, lead a trump, and simply cover any card East produces. West trump, again covering any card East plays.

HBO Special Offers Emotional Story About Woman's Cancer

By Jerry Buck
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — Paul Linke sits for an hour and 18 minutes and talks about his wife's losing battle with cancer in the HBO special "Time Flies When You're Alive."

It is a mesmerizing, mind-blowing experience. Linke talks of hope and despair and love, and it is the latter that binds the special together and makes the painful moments bearable.

Francesca Draper Linke, the mother of three children, died in 1986 at the age of 37. The one-man piece, which Linke first presented on the stage, will be shown on Home Box Office on Sunday.

As he sat down in a restaurant to discuss the special, Linke was affected by a rush of emotion.

"We had a tradition of pre-Christmas lunches for the whole family," he said. "The last lunch we had when 'Chex' was still alive in 1985 was in this restaurant and at this same table."

Linke, who had not selected the site, paused, then added, "I had an inkling it would be her last Christmas. Being here brings it full circle. That's what I was going to call the show at first, 'Full Circle of Love.'"

"Once she had breast cancer and had the mastectomy and started alternative healing, I told her I thought there was a book in our experiences," he said. His wife refused all conventional means of treatment, such as radiation or chemotherapy.

It took some time, and some persuasion, before Linke, who has appeared in movies and in the television series "CHiPs," was ready to go onto a stage with the story.

"I wrote an outline," he said. "As I did I realized I had not completed her dying. She wanted her ashes scattered on Mount Shasta. I rented a van and we all went up and scattered her ashes. After that, I decided I should really go forward with the show."

First, he did a short version at a fund-raiser. "A man in the audience said later a friend had died of cancer 13 years earlier and he had never come to grips with it. ... As I performed I saw that I was tapping into people's hearts and there was a real need for it. It brings dying out of the closet."

Linke is probably best known for his comic relief role of Artie Grossman on "CHiPs."

The character, Linke said, was like a baseball relief pitcher. "He's called in late in the game, delivers a few lines and goes. My part grew."

The series casting director had seen Linke in the movie "Moving Violations." He has another comic role in the movie "Parenthood," but plays a slumlord in the movie pilot for the upcoming ABC series "Capital News."

A "CHiPs" reunion movie is also being planned. Larry Wilcox, who played one of the officers, purchased the rights to the series.

"In all my years in 'CHiPs' I got maybe a hundred fan letters," Linke said. "I wasn't the pubescent girl's fantasy. But this (one-man show on life, cancer and death) generates so much fan mail I can't tell you."

It's no marshmallow roast.

Griffith, in white suit, stands with cast of regulars and extras from Roanoke Island

Andy Goes Home To Film 'Matlock' In Manteo Area

By Robin P. Teater
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MANTEO, N.C. — When Andy Griffith brought his production company to this waterfront town to make the season opener of his television series "Matlock," it gave him the chance to feature North Carolina again.

The 63-year-old Mount Airy native who majored in music at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill nearly put fictionalized Mayberry, N.C., on the map with his popular TV series "The Andy Griffith Show."

"I always wanted to bring a show here," Griffith said Wednesday in a break from filming. "I thought it would be good for the town and good for the company."

Griffith first suggested filming of an episode of "Matlock" in North Carolina last year and had no trouble convincing the producers.

"We took a flight down here and fell in love," said supervising producer Jeff Peters. "He loved the show so much he brought it home. Andy puts himself totally into this, especially in this episode. These are his people and his friends."

The two-hour show, which will air on NBC on Sept. 19, is being filmed entirely on and around Roanoke Island, where the first English colonists landed and where Griffith has maintained a home for more than 30 years.

The episode, "The Hunting Party," has Ben Matlock called to defend a man accused of killing a member of his brother's hunting group. Matlock discovers a hostile environment that may hinder a fair trial.

The company, which began filming July 17 and will end Aug. 4, is using about 20 local residents on the crew and dozens as extras in the cast.

Some of the locals, such as Della Basnight, have special feelings about the project.

"This is a valentine from Andy for the whole community," said Ms. Basnight, whose family has been friends with Griffith since he played Sir Walter Raleigh for five summers in Paul Green's famous outdoor musical-drama, "The Lost Colony."

"Andy has helped to write this thing because he's so intimate with the island," said Ms. Basnight, whose mother, brother and cousins also will appear in the episode.

"I think it's just a wonderful little history that'll be here."

In one scene, being filmed outside the town's historic 1904 courthouse across from the waterfront, the tanned, silver-haired Griffith explained the setting and mood to the extras and gives Ms. Basnight and others direction.

"The trial is over," Griffith yelled from the courthouse steps so the crowd can hear him. "This man has been found not guilty, and everyone is happy."

The scene was taped repeatedly until Griffith and director Robert Scherer believed it was right.

"The first day, he was very hesitant, on edge because he was performing in front of his home crowd," said camera operator Jiggs Garcia.

But Garcia said Griffith soon relaxed and has proven "you can go home again."

"Elvis never did. Andy Griffith is. Some of them (performers) never try it," he said.

In the closing scene, the crowd cheered as Matlock, a big city lawyer from Atlanta, emerged victorious from the courthouse.

Ms. Basnight and a handful of her relatives, who play themselves, descend on Matlock for photos as part of the scene.

"Smile," said Ms. Basnight's 79-year-old mother, Cora Mae Basnight, as she is pushed next to Matlock for a pose.

The scene is completed.

Griffith rushed off to his air-conditioned trailer with his third wife Cindi, to whom he has been married for six years.

Griffith made sure a lot of the local flavor shows through in the episode. Beach scenes were shot at Whalebone Junction in Nags Head, while other segments were shot at the Lost Colony Theater, the Elizabethan Gardens and along the Roanoke Sound waterfront.

"Matlock" is entering its fourth season as "a hit," Peters said, adding that the show has consistently placed 14th or 15th in the Nielsen ratings in its first three years.

"Andy — America loves him," Peters said. "He's got this tremendous following. He's one of those stars who have endured and endeared."

Europeans Want Limit On U.S. TV

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Hollywood could lose big if it doesn't agree to a plan limiting the amount of U.S. television shows such as "Dallas" and "The Golden Girls" that can be shown in Europe, British media executive Sir Robert Maxwell says.

Maxwell, who has extensive publishing and television holdings on both sides of the Atlantic, Wednesday said Hollywood must negotiate or face even more onerous restrictions from European nations determined to build their own film and television production communities.

European Community leaders want to stem the "Americanization" of Europe by U.S. TV programs, he said.

He said the EC is certain to adopt a community-wide quota system for non-European TV shows, and individual nations such as France may set even tougher quotas.

But Hollywood representatives at Wednesday's hearing said they could not live with a quota system that threatens to erode their overseas sales, drive up prices and perhaps lead to other restrictions.

At stake is a significant portion of the $2.5 billion surplus of trade that the U.S. film-TV industry has with the rest of the world — a surplus that is likely to grow as more nations look for programs to feed onto cable TV and satellite delivery systems.

"The American entertainment industry stands to lose a greater portion of the European broadcast market if the (EC) cannot reach an agreement and the decision is relegated to the judgment and controls of individual European states," Maxwell told the House Energy and Commerce subcommittee on telecommunications and finance.

Shows such as "Dallas," with its prototypically "American" family, the Ewings, are very popular overseas, and such programs are relatively inexpensive. But Maxwell said just 5,000 hours out of 105,000 hours of movies and tapes shown on European TV are produced in Europe, with the rest mainly coming from the United States.

That makes it a sensitive issue of money, jobs and preserving Europe's cultural diversity, Maxwell said.

"European citizens will not sit in their parlors watching their culture replaced by images made in Hollywood, Mexico City or Tokyo."

The subcommittee is considering possible U.S. responses to the television provisions of the EC plan to lower trade barriers among its members in 1992. The "Television Without Frontiers" proposal calls for a "majority proportion" of transmission time where practical to be reserved for works of European origin with the 12 member nations.

How They Voted

HOUSE

NATIONAL PARK SERVICE: By a vote of 148 for and 251 against, the House refused to weaken legislation making the National Park Service largely independent of the Interior Department. The vote left intact a bill (HR 1484) granting the park service autonomy over the National Park System in all major areas except budgeting and contacts with the Cabinet.

The bill, which was sent to the Senate, was seen by environmentalists as necessary to insulate the park service from political interference but denounced by the Administration as an invasion of its powers. The amendment rejected by this vote sought to block all of the bill's provisions for an independent park service except for one giving the director a fixed term subject to Senate confirmation.

Sponsor John Rhodes, R-Ariz., said his amendment would correct a bill that is "just plain bad law ... bad public policy."

Foe Bruce Vento, D-Minn., said the bill would end "overt political control and dismemberment" of the National Park Service by political appointees.

Members voting yes wanted to weaken the bill granting independence to the National Park Service.

North Carolina members voting yes: Howard Coble, R-6, Alex McMillan, R-9, Cass Ballenger, R-10.

Voting no: Walter Jones, D-1, Tim Valentine, D-2, Martin Lancaster, D-3, David Price, D-4, Stephen Neal, D-5, Charles Rose, D-7, James Clarke, D-11.

Not voting: W.G. Hefner, D-8.

HAZARDOUS WASTE CLEANUP: By a vote of 98 for and 322 against, the House rejected an amendment limiting the power of states to combat hazardous waste at federal facilities such as military bases and nuclear weapons plants.

The vote occurred as the House sent to the Senate a bill (HR 1506) giving the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency and states increased powers against federal polluters, including state authority to force cleanups at federal sites. The rejected amendment sought to deny states that cleanup authority. The EPA says serious waste pollution exists at hundreds of bases and at Department of Energy nuclear plants.

Amendment supporter James Hansen, R-Utah, said "states already have the authority to force compliance upon any (military) facility that fails to take corrective clean-up action."

Foe John Dingell, D-Mich., said strong legislation is needed to deal with U.S. departments that "have contaminated the air, the soil, the water and the subsurface waters (and) have lied to the Congress about it."

Members voting yes wanted to limit state power to combat hazardous waste at federal facilities.

Voting no: Valentine, Price, Neal, Hefner, Clarke.

Not voting: None.

SPACE STATION FUNDING: By a vote of 125 for and 291 against, the House rejected an amendment to cut fiscal 1990 funding for the proposed space station by $714 million and apply the money to domestic programs such as veterans' health care, pollution control and handicapped and elderly care. The vote occurred as the House sent to the Senate a bill (HR 2916) appropriating $65.1 billion for several departments and agencies. It left $1.65 billion in the bill for developing the manned, orbiting station.

Sponsor Charles Schumer, D-N.Y., said "there is not enough money to fight crime, clean the environment, house the homeless, feed the hungry and educate the young here on earth" and also fund the space station.

Opponent Robert Roe, D-N.J., said Congress must fund both domestic and space priorities because "the future of this country ... of this world depends upon our neighbor space."

Voting yes: Rose.

Voting no: Jones, Valentine, Lancaster, Price, Neal, Coble, Hefner, McMillan, Ballenger, Clarke.

Not voting: None.

SENATE

FOREIGN POLICY PROVISION: By a vote of 57 for and 42 against, the Senate adopted an amendment making it a crime for a member of the executive branch to solicit money to carry out a foreign policy for which Congress has denied funding. The amendment also would make it a felony for a federal employee to use foreign aid to induce a third party to advance an outlawed policy.

The amendment was attached to a fiscal 1990 foreign aid bill (S 1160) later sent to conference with the House. It sought to prevent a replay of the Iran-Contra affair in which Reagan Administration officials used secret funding channels to get around Congress's ban on U.S. military aid to the Nicaraguan contras.

"Ours is a democracy in which all citizens stand equal before the law up to and including the president," said supporter George Mitchell, D-Maine.

Opponent Jesse Helms, R-N.C., called the amendment "a clear, bald effort to usurp the foreign policy prerogatives of the president of the United States."

Terry Sanford, D-N.C., voted yes to support the amendment and Helms voted against the amendment.

TALKS WITH THE PLO: By a vote of 75 for and 23 against, the Senate tabled (killed) an amendment designed to end or sidetrack talks the Administration is holding with Palestine Liberation Organization as part of its Middle East peace strategy. The vote came during debate on the new foreign aid bill (above).

The amendment sought to halt U.S. contacts with the PLO until the president had met the difficult condition of certifying PLO negotiators were free of involvement in terrorism. By a near unanimous vote, the Senate later approved a softer amendment that bans talks with any PLO official known by the president to have had a direct role in terrorism causing the kidnapping or death of an American.

Helms voted no to support the amendment and Sanford did not vote.

SELECTING DIPLOMATS: By a vote of 20 for and 79 against, the Senate rejected an amendment to the foreign aid bill (above) limiting presidents in choosing political supporters over career diplomats as U.S. ambassadors. The amendment required that no more than 15 percent of appointees could come from outside the U.S. Foreign Service.

Sponsor Albert Gore, D-Tenn., said diplomacy should not be left to "amateurs, hacks, people who bring absolutely nothing to the job but their political ties to the president."

Opponent Harry Reid, D-Nev., said the constitutional way for Senate to object to unqualified nominees is to refuse to confirm them.

'Wimpy Slogan' Stirs Candidates

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

AUSTIN, Texas — A plan to print "The Friendship State" on Texas license plates has stirred up gubernatorial candidates, who say Texans are too tough for such a slogan.

"It's wimpy," said Democratic state Treasurer Ann Richards, the first of the gubernatorial hopefuls to join the chorus of opponents to the slogan approved last week by the state Highway and Public Transportation Commission.

Friendship is too generic a term for Texas, where the tough "Don't Mess With Texas" anti-littering slogan has proven so popular, Ms. Richards said.

"I think the reason the 'Don't Mess With Texas' thing has been so successful is that it sort of continues that image that we're great, we're wonderful, we think we are," she said. "The friendly state — you could put that on Kansas, Ohio."

Ms. Richards said she agreed with hundreds of callers who have suggested putting the "Lone Star State" nickname on plates.

Jack Rains, the former secretary of state who launched his Republican gubernatorial bid Tuesday, agreed.

"I kind of like the 'Lone Star State,'" Rains said. "The rest of that stuff looked a little quiche and chablis to me."

Attorney General Jim Mattox, who is seeking the Democratic gubernatorial nomination, said newspapers should run ballots with several slogan options that people could mail in.

"That way, we wouldn't have to go through an expensive ballot proposition of having the public actually vote on the matter, but the people would have the decision-making in their hands," Mattox said.

Indeed, two news organizations have found strong opposition to the license plates.

Some 4,000 people responded to a phone-in poll by The Dallas Times Herald, and 64 percent were against the new plates. In Houston the negative vote was even more resounding: More than 2,700 viewers who called KHOU-TV, and 89 percent said they opposed the new design.

"When You Want Results!"

GNP Shows Lackluster Growth

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The U.S. economy turned in its most sluggish performance in almost three years from April through June as inflation shot up dramatically, the government reported today.

In a report apt to raise recession fears, the Commerce Department said the gross national product, the broadest gauge of economic health, grew at a lackluster 1.7 percent annual rate in the spring quarter.

It was the worst growth rate since a 0.8 percent increase in the third quarter of 1986, the last time the economy skirted close to a recession.

The sluggish growth reflected widespread weakness in big-ticket consumer spending and housing construction and a sharp deterioration in the country's foreign trade performance.

Fashion Designer Karl Lagerfeld Has New Projects

By Nina Hyde
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — One day last month, just before he left for Washington and a fashion show benefit at La Maison Francaise, Karl Lagerfeld got a phone call from his fortune teller. "You will do something very new in September," she told him.

She's never been wrong, he says. She's over 90 now and almost blind but calls him whenever she "sees" something he should know.

"One day I went with my lawyer to sign papers and a half-mile before we got there the car phone rang, and it was the fortune teller. She told me I was going to sign a contract, and on Page 4 there was a mistake."

Lagerfeld asked how she got the car number, and she said she could "see" it. In fact, Lagerfeld says, there was a mistake in the contract. On Page 4.

But now he is curious about his new project for September. There's the couture Chanel collection to be shown in July.

The ready-to-wear collections for Chanel and Fendi as well as his own label in Paris will be shown in October. Plus the advertising campaign and catalog for his own collection. And maybe the start of a new magazine.

The fortune teller unquestionably has special insight for Lagerfeld. But, in fact, something new is always about to happen for him.

Take last month. He produced a special issue of Figaro Madame, the magazine packaged with the Sunday edition of the Paris newspaper. More than 1 million copies were produced.

In recent years single issues of Figaro Madame have been taken over from time to time by film stars including Isabelle Adjani, Christophe Lambert and Isabelle Huppert. Last month they put Karl Lagerfeld in charge.

"The first time ever for a fashion designer," he says proudly. Actors or actresses have made suggestions and had input. Lagerfeld did everything.

There are his photographs, his written insights into the art market. He gave one of the columnists' suggestions on whom to interview. There's an interview with Lagerfeld himself on books, plus his sketches for an upcoming children's book — The Emperor's New Clothes — his sketches with an article on the changing shape of women's bodies, a self-portrait and portraits of three young actresses and the roles they dream of playing.

And then there is an article on his good friend Princess Caroline, modeling clothes from 1900, 1914, 1925, all remade in his atelier. "Old clothes really look tired, so we remade them. It was a very expensive thing to do, but these kinds of dresses don't look beautiful old. They need to be fresh."

Included is a coat created for Caroline's grandmother by Chanel, now remade by Chanel. (There was no chance of Caroline's wearing the original; Caroline is taller than her grandmother was.)

Remarkable is a photograph of Caroline in pajamas Chanel herself wore in 1930. Caroline is photographed in the same manner Chanel was when she was photographed wearing the pajamas at the opening of the Monte Carlo beach.

Lagerfeld is obviously thrilled with the results. Unfortunately, only those who bought Le Figaro that Sunday or got a copy of the issue from Lagerfeld could fully appreciate the pictures. Some ran in the weekly Jours de France, but Lagerfeld didn't think much of the reproduction.

It took the Lagerfeld team two weeks to produce the magazine, far speedier than most such magazines are put together. "I have a bigger crew than most magazine staffs," he explains.

He tapped assistants at Chanel and Lagerfeld, including the people who work on the beauty and fragrance products, and those who assist on his advertising campaigns. "I'm used to a fast working speed," he says.

Lagerfeld is proud of the results. "You like it or you don't, but it is well organized. It is not amateurish work. It doesn't look home-made," he says. "And imagine, I've been doing photography just for three years."

That is how long he has been doing his own ads. "I always need something new, but always related to what I am doing," he says. And it is interesting to make your own ads for your own clothes. "It makes you look at them with a different eye. You learn from your own work. You learn what to do and what not to do. It is very important."

From his travels, his friends, his photography, he senses a change coming in fashion. "The old idea of glamor, with high heels, low-cut dresses, jewelry, big shoulders and too much hair is going away. That is all very demode (out of date)."

What is coming, he says, is something far more relaxed, "more refined, more intellectual, less flashy, more subtly sexy than aggressive." He doesn't think anyone needs ball gowns anymore; rather, evening dresses, the kind of easy things they wore in the 1930s, he says — like the pleated shirts and pleated pants that look like skirts that several women wore to the French Embassy dinner and fashion show recently.

Though he likes one look this season, surely he will like something else next. "I always kill my own stuff. Reviving or even continuing things is aging, boring. I wouldn't dare to show something similar, even if women liked it. Besides, I'm not sure I could make it that well again."

And so there must be new projects, as the fortune teller says. It won't be menswear. He has given up his Italian tailor — "I got bored with those clothes, though I still have them." He now makes his own suits, including the tuxedo that he wore here recently. But making them for others? "It doesn't interest me enough."

Lagerfeld's fortune teller called him recently and told him not to hire the couple that he had been considering for household help, and to choose another instead. "Two days later I hear the family that hired the other couple had to let them go for stealing."

Finally he admits he has another project under consideration: an art review to be published four times a year.

Will it happen? "My fortune teller has never been wrong," says Lagerfeld.

American psychologists are studying Rajan Mahadevan for clues to how our memories work

The Memory Man Reciting 31,000 Digits Of Pi Is No Problem

LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

MANHATTAN, Kan. — After I had spent a good deal of time with Rajan Mahadevan — after he had recited, from memory, the first 30 digits of Euler's constant, after he had written out, in his rapid-fire left-handed chicken scratch, a block of 50 random digits he had last seen at 9:15 a.m. on Oct. 5, 1987, after he had told me the row and seat number he was assigned on Air India's Flight 107 from Madras to Bombay nine years ago, after he had spun off the reservation telephone numbers for Braniff, United, TWA, Delta, Southwest, American and Continental airlines, after he had laughed ruefully about the trouble he always has remembering the 31,812th digit of pi — after all that, he told me he'd like to chat again and asked for my telephone number.

Mindlessly, reflexively, I reached in my pocket for a business card. A look of consternation creased Mahadevan's face. "No — I'm sorry! I'm sorry!" he said with alarm. "To use one of your cards for me, there is no need. Just tell me."

Just tell him! Of course! Here I was talking to a living natural phenomenon, a research psychologist's dream come true, one of the more prodigious numerical memorists in the history of recorded science, and I had suggested that he couldn't even remember a telephone number.

I put the card away and told him my number. Mahadevan listened intently, then closed his eyes for a few seconds and fell into deepest thought, rocking to and fro on his chair.

When he opened his eyes and came back into the world, Mahadevan flashed me his big, friendly grin and recited my telephone number, first backward, then forward. "It's an easy number to remember," he said cheerfully. "First place, only 10 digits. Second, (it contains) the series 623, which is reminding me of Avogadro's number, you know, the atomic-weight constant.

"I will never forget."

Somehow, that commonplace promise seemed to carry formidable possibilities when it was uttered by Rajan Srinivasen Mahadevan.

Ambling around the Kansas State University campus in a T-shirt, old painter pants and sandals, slipping off to the grad students' office on the fourth floor of Blumont Hall for a smoke, Mahadevan looks every bit the classic graduate student. He lives in a hopelessly cluttered bachelor apartment and spends his evenings at the campus hangout, a bar and pool parlor called Fast Eddie's.

But the loquacious 32-year-old from Mangalore, India, is also one of the world's half-dozen or so living hypermnestic — people with gargantuan memory powers. A student of psychology, he has such a stupendous memory for numbers that he himself has become a research tool for psychologists.

He is currently the subject of a $157,000 National Institute for Mental Health study aimed at a question that scientists have pondered since time immemorial: How does our memory work?

Among psychologists and neurobiologists — not to mention engineers, who are trying to replicate human mental processes in computer circuits — the machinery of memory is a hot topic of research and hypothesis.

Theories abound, but so far it is still an abiding mystery how something as ephemeral as a fragrance, a feeling, a face, a formula or a trivial fact can lodge somewhere in the mind and stay there forever, available for retrieval minutes or months or years or decades later.

The researchers are trying to determine whether the memory apparatus is a single large network, or whether people have different memories with different capabilities.

Mahadevan, for example, is prodigious with numbers. But he seems to be worse than average at recalling faces; he can never remember where he put his keys.

Another burning question in the psychology labs is why some data pop out of the memory banks instantaneously while others take a while. When you hear the phrase "I can't get no ...," you may have immediate and effortless recall of the rest of the lyric, the melody, the band and the person you were dancing with the first time you heard the song.

But if you were asked, "What color was the door you used most often to enter the house you lived in two houses ago?" — a common question in memory experiments — it would likely take a few moments of hard mental exercise to trace back through the neural network and extract the answer.

Some researchers pursue these inquiries with tests on normal people. Others want to work with certified monster memories — with truly rare birds like Rajan Mahadevan.

Mahadevan has been the subject of study on three continents since his first trip to the United States in July 1980.

"I went to Chicago," he recalls, "and stayed in Room 109 of the Conrad Hilton Ho-No! I'm sorry! I'm sorry! It was Room 1409. The bill was $109. I attended the International Congress on Yoga and Meditation, and there I recited the first 10,000 digits of pi."

The Greek letter pi is the mathematician's symbol for the ratio between the diameter and the circumference of a circle. Most of us learned the value as 3.14, or perhaps 3.14159, but in fact its decimal expansion runs on and on forever; and there is no known pattern or duplication in the endless string of digits.

For that reason, and because the ratio is too difficult to compute on your feet (the familiar shortcut of dividing 22 by 7 gives only a rough approximation), reciting pi is a favorite test of numerical memory.

Abbie Hoffman's Suicide 'Adds Spin To The Story'

By David Streitfeld
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — For a while, it seemed as if Abbie Hoffman was in danger of becoming another half-forgotten relic of the boomer past, keeping company with Twiggy, pet rocks and Howdy Doody. Now, he's bigger than at any time since his Yippie heyday in the late '60s.

"If you die right, you become better as a book or magazine subject," explains Random House editor David Rosenthal, who's seen several proposals for Abbie biographies. "He died ironically, and that adds a certain spin to the story."

Hoffman killed himself with a barbiturate overdose in April. In the obituaries, friends said he had become frustrated in recent years by not getting enough serious attention. His most recent book, Steal This Urine Test, didn't meet expectations. And last winter, when Hoffman wanted to republish Steal This Book, Revolution for the Hell of It and Woodstock Nation — three one-time favorites of the counterculture — he ended up running a classified ad in The Nation.

Only one publisher, a small press named Four Walls Eight Windows, pursued the deal.

Then, after Hoffman's death, he was suddenly eulogized as an American original, a combination of court jester and home-grown radical who never gave up the good fight. People magazine put him on its cover. Friends, colleagues and those who merely scented a good deal talked to their agents. About a dozen different proposals circulated through the New York publishing world.

"If you're going to write a story about the rush to exploit Abbie after his death, you could title it Steal This Corpse," says Jonathan Silvers, Hoffman's collaborator on two books.

"All of sudden Abbie was a commodity, almost," echoes Lisa Callamaro, an associate of Hoffman's literary agent. "There are those that really care about him and his memory, and then there are others who just want the money."

At least two writers already have handsome contracts, and two more seem likely prospects. It briefly appeared that the biggest advance would go to Jerry Rubin, Hoffman's most famous colleague from the '60s and sometime sparring partner on the lecture circuit.

Rubin was in line for $400,000 from Harcourt Brace Jovanovich, but the deal fell apart. "My opinion of them will not be spoken of," says the former radical. "It's just not a pleasant situation, but that happens in the business world."

The book got torpedoed when Jack Hoffman, Abbie's brother, made it clear Rubin would have no cooperation from the family. That struggle may have been the most bitter, but there won't be any love lost between any of Abbie's biographers, each of whom must position himself as the best-placed and most sympathetic chronicler of a complicated life.

Journalist Al Giordano says Hoffman tapped him as authorized biographer last year, and asserts that "while everyone else has been cutting deals, I've been in mourning." Giordano, who is about to begin circulating his proposal to publishers, says he has many hours of taped interviews and better access to Hoffman's friends and associates "than anyone. And people know I'm not going to rape the guy."

But Jack Hoffman maintains that "at least six guys have tapes," and as for the "authorized biographer" claim, "I never saw anything in writing to that effect. ... There are a lot of turf wars — who knew Abbie, who knew him best. If I ever do a book" — he too is finishing a proposal — "I'm going to have a chapter 'The Selling of Abbie.'"

Among the keepers of the flame, Rubin's near deal in particular has caused outrage. Says Dan Simon of Four Walls Eight Windows, which has quadrupled the press run on its omnibus Hoffman collection: "It's amazing that one of the same publishing houses that would not bid on a book of Abbie's own writings — who wouldn't bid a penny on it! — was fighting to bid almost half a million dollars on Rubin. Without a little cynicism, you can't understand it at all."

Says Jack Hoffman: "My first mission after my brother's death was to make sure Jerry Rubin wouldn't write a book about my brother. There's this strange myth that my brother and Rubin were buddy-buddy."

Abbie and Rubin's only encounters in recent years were on the debate circuit, Hoffman says, adding:

"They wouldn't fly on the same plane. Abbie wouldn't stay at the same motel with him."

Harcourt Brace squelched Rubin's deal when it found out that both Jack Hoffman and Johanna Lawrenson, Abbie's longtime companion, would not cooperate. But the topic still appeals: HBJ is giving a contract said to be worth as much as $200,000 to former Yippie "minister of education" Jonah Raskin.

Rubin, now a New York promoter, said in several phone conversations that he didn't want to comment on anything involving either Hoffman. "I really am sorry Jack is making such unfortunate comments. My relationship with Abbie speaks for itself."

As for his own book, he says "at the moment" he isn't doing one.

How will any of these books do? The conventional wisdom on celeb-

Straw's Solo Album Has Cast Of Dozens

By Hillel Italie
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Syd Straw, former lead singer for the Golden Palominos, has a lot more than music on her mind — like dinosaurs and ants.

She keeps maps and pictures of dinosaurs around her apartment. And she won't step on ants because she can't stand the idea of harming living creatures in any way.

Music is her life, but when she picks up a newspaper, the science section is opened first. Straw often wonders about extinction and erosion, what will happen to the world.

She feels the same way about people, priding herself on the diverse group of musicians she assembled for her debut solo album, "Surprise."

"I bend over backwards to make sure the people playing for and with me are enjoying it and feeling good," Straw said.

"That's probably my maternal instinct. ... I feel like I have to sign everything. Whatever it takes to launch this ship, my ship of fools."

The cast of dozens include Richard Thompson, Ry Cooder, Van Dyke Parks, Marshall Crenshaw, Dave Alvin and Michael Stipe. She had high praise for them all, citing Thompson as a "guitar visionary," Parks as making music "too beautiful for this world" and Alvin as "Mr. Ace Guitar."

"I feel like I worked with the best. I went straight to the people I wanted. I don't abuse people. I think that's why some of these incredible people would be willing to have something to do with me," she said.

A steady band would make life simpler for Straw, but she sacrificed stability to play with the musicians of her liking.

"I must have claustrophobia," Straw remarked. "I like an open window. I like an escape route. I like to know I can go. If I found a band that had time to commit to me and me alone, that would be a tremendous sense of security. Unfortunately, I like to play with people who are in demand already."

Dinosaurs are not mentioned in "Surprise," but Straw draws on a wide range of influences, singing rock, pop and country.

"Chasing Vapor Trails (His Turn to Cry)" is the long-awaited answer to Lesley Gore's 1960s teen smash, "Judy's Turn to Cry."

"Sphinx" features Thompson's guitar playing, and the "happy-go-luck accordion" of Matt Irving. Straw recorded "Almost Magic," co-written by former bandmate Matthew Auerbach, with a 103-degree fever, completely blacking out at one point.

She closes Side 1 with Stephen Foster's traditional ballad "Hard Times," and Side 2 with another slow song, her own "Golden Dreams."

"I like to rock, and I like to give the impression of being a sensitive soul also," she said. "I thought a lot about the song order. It's not quite accidental that both sides end in a similar way. I want to leave people thinking."

On "Crazy American," she sings: "Any place I hang my hat is someone else's home." The lyrics recall her years in New York when she depended on the kindness of friends and strangers for shelter.

"I didn't live anywhere for years. 'OK, I'll live in your apartment for two weeks.' 'Oh, you're coming back nine days early? You'll be here in 10 minutes?' Fine. That is a pretty common situation in New York City. A lot of people sort of live around like that," she said.

Straw, whose parents were both actors, grew up in Montrose, Calif., where she enjoyed playing hide-and-seek in her neighbors' yards, and sitting on a wall singing Neil Young's "Heart of Gold."

She headed for New York after high school, taking acting classes and managing several walk-on appearances on "Saturday Night Live." Hearing a local singer perform one night inspired Straw to take up music herself.

"Music saved my life, it gives me a raison d'être," she said. "I wouldn't want to be a non-musical person. I am so musical every minute of my life. I have trouble with people who don't give a damn about music. Usually, they don't give a damn about animals, either."

Her career began to pick up at in late 1985 when she met drummer Anton Fier, mastermind of the Golden Palominos, at the Bitter End nightclub.

"I'd say sparks were flying, some kind of friction was in the air. We kind of took each other and started jousting. That night he walked me home and said, 'You want to sing on my record?' I said, 'Maybe, and I did.'"

She learned quickly to be ready for anything with the Palominos, singing rock, country and avant-garde with an everchanging band behind her. After two albums, "Visions of Excess" and "Blast of Silence," Straw left the group to start a solo career in 1987.

"Anyone as motivated as I am would feel very frustrated; it wasn't enough to live on," she said. "I like being in control of my own music. Previously, I had to answer to Anton because it was his group. He was the one mixing. Now, I'm the one behind the board."

Patient Upset By Word 'Abortion'

Dear Abby: I have one child who is 4 years old. I have tried three times to carry a baby to term, but I had all kinds of trouble and lost them.

The last time, I started to hemorrhage badly, so the doctor had to do an emergency D and C to save me. Knowing that I had done everything I could to prevent this miscarriage, I did not feel guilty, but when I received my bill from the doctor, I felt like I had committed murder! The bill stated abortion!

I called the doctor's office and asked that they remove the word "abortion" from my record and replace it with "miscarriage." I was told that "miscarriage" is not a medical term, and they couldn't do it.

Abby, I would not have let the doctor perform a D and C on me if I had known that it would go on my record as having had an abortion. What can I do? Please save me and others like me from this distress. — Pro-Life

Dear Abby
Abigail Van Buren

Mom

Dear Pro-Life Mom: You need not feel as though you committed murder; you did not. The medical term for "miscarriage" is "spontaneous abortion," which means that your body aborted the baby — you did not intentionally terminate the pregnancy.

Ask your doctor personally to mark your record "miscarriage." God knows that you did not order a D and C to terminate your pregnancy. The doctor performed that procedure to save your life, so please don't feel guilty.

Dear Abby: I received a very disturbing call from my son. He wanted to know if I was leaving him anything in my will, or if I was planning to leave everything to my other child. He made it very clear to me that he felt it was his right to know.

Please understand, Abby, this son is very successful financially — that's why I was truly shocked that he would demand to know what was in my will. I told him that I did not feel comfortable disclosing what was in my will. He again stated that it was his "right" to know.

I am not exactly senile (I am 62) and would like to hear your thoughts on the matter. Also, have other parents been asked this question, and how did they handle it? — Distracted In Chicago

Dear Distracted: You were correct to tell your son that you did not feel comfortable disclosing the contents of your will. You are under no obligation to discuss this very personal matter with your son or anyone else. It is not his "right" to know. On the contrary — it is your right to preserve your privacy.

Dear Abby: How can I get a message across to some very close friends of mine without hurting anyone's feelings? These people are always late. When they say they will be over at 6 p.m., they show up at 7 p.m. When they tell me they will pick me up at noon, they don't get here until 12:45.

I have asked them to please be on time because I am always prompt and make it my business never to keep anybody waiting.

Is it too late to train them? — Frustrated In Phoenix

Dear Frustrated: Yes; they have already trained you. If you want to be on time, don't depend on them for transportation. And if you want them at your home at 6 p.m., invite them for 5 p.m.

If you would like to write to Abby, send your letter to Abigail Van Buren, P.O. Box 69440, Los Angeles, CA. 90069. For a personal, non-published reply, enclose a self-addressed stamped envelope.

Homesickness Knows No Age Boundaries

Homesick. Don't bother to look it up in the medical dictionary or the camp handbook. It isn't there. If it were there, it would be described as "a condition brought on by being dropped into inhumane surroundings, resulting in nausea, extreme yearning for Mother and own bed, and a wish to die."

It can attack anyone of any age, but usually it afflicts children without warning. One minute a child is a happy camper; the next he is sitting in the middle of his bunk with his duffel packed, threatening to crawl 200 miles home if he has to.

There is nothing that will talk him out of his malady. Not the promise of a live snake to put in the counselor's bed, causing her to hyperventilate ... not the titillation of wearing the same underwear for a whole week without changing them ... not even the adventure of putting a mouse in the water system.

There is a rumor that you cannot die from homesickness. I came close. As a child, I harbored a "big family" wish. I knew in my heart that people with lots of kids played outside in the dark, giggled uncontrollably until 2 a.m., and then all gathered in the kitchen for a big snack around 3 in the morning. I begged to spend time with my aunt and uncle and their eight children in the country.

At Wits End

When the decision was made to let me spend a week, I told my parents they didn't even have to come in — just slow down the car and I'd jump out with suitcase and toys and they could head for home. But no, they had to come in and visit. I thought they'd never leave. Finally, the goodbyes were made. I looked around and saw all of those strange people and started to cry. Four days later, I was still crying. The decision was made to come get me before I made myself sick.

Unknown to most children is that the disease is not isolated. From the moment the kids are dropped off at camp or wherever, their parents are afflicted with a homesickness fallout. It's called "empty nest virus." They perspire with remorse at having left their children in a $500-a-week campground with horses, archery, and a new $300 wardrobe of T-shirts. They try desperately to resurrect all the rotten things the children have done all summer to justify their abandonment. Their rooms at home become a shrine visited daily. They maintain a vigil at the mailbox for a card that they have pre-written and stamped. The good news is that when parents and children see one another, the diseases dissipate ... in about three minutes.

Women Married To Older Men Turn To 'Sorority' For Support

By Darlene E. Superville
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RUMSON, N.J. — Beliza Ann Furman has seen few of her old friends since her wedding to a man 15 years her senior.

"A lot of our friends dumped us. We really were very lonely for a couple of years," said Mrs. Furman, who was 23 when she married dentist Samuel Furman in 1971. "When a younger woman marries an older man society has a problem with that and they don't know where to put you, no matter how classy you are."

"You kind of unbalance the dinner table." Last summer, she and two friends also married to much older men were having lunch and discovered they faced similar problems.

"(We) felt kind of isolated. The girls would be looked at as tarts and the guys as kind of being sugar daddies. I said, 'We should form a club.'"

So began Wives Of Older Men — W.O.O.M. for short.

Since its formation in September, W.O.O.M. has enrolled more than 400 "sorority" members in New York and New Jersey, and chapters are organizing in St. Louis, Connecticut, New Orleans, Florida, California and Georgia.

May-December marriages comprised 11.2 percent of all U.S. weddings in 1970. By 1985, 14.8 percent were between women and men who were at least eight years older, said Barbara Wilson of the National Center for Health Statistics.

"Until we formed this organization we all felt ... like something was wrong. I think we kind of took the sleaziness out of it. There's a lot of members in our organization who did not marry their husbands for their money," said Mrs. Furman, who was financially independent and living in Brazil in 1969 when a boyfriend — an orthodontist 18 years her senior — asked her to buy some dental supplies on a trip to her parents' home in Tinton Falls.

When she met Furman, "It was like friendship at first sight. I don't think he'd ever met anybody like me before."

The friendship grew and she eventually returned to the United States. Furman, who was married, introduced her to a friend 20 years older than she. They dated for a few months, then she started dating Furman after he separated from his wife in 1970. "I was really surprised I would fall in love with him. I wasn't setting out to marry someone 15 years older than me."

"I married him for the security of love and trust and happiness."

As more women enter the workplace they will put off marriage, and may seek more mature men, she said. "We have a lot more women today making a lot more money. A lot of women in that category, they find older men appealing to them. Older men are also very supportive of their wives."

"There is a security involved with being with somebody who's lived longer. Age is actually a reality of the mind."

W.O.O.M. members must be eight years younger than their husbands, many of whom also attend the monthly meetings that are more like social occasions than encounter groups. Nonetheless, they do deal with serious subjects, like raising stepchildren or starting second families and coping with embarrassed or unhappy children or parents and the often unsavory comments of others.

"I don't think anybody really feels guilty about their relationship or their marriage but they lose confidence because people are so quick to cut them down," Mrs. Furman said. "No one ever really considers the fact that we're really in love with each other. The age was an afterthought."

"If two people are in love with each other, why not?"

Retirees Remain Active, Enjoying Part-Time Work

By Jean McNair
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WILLIAMSBURG, Va. — When Chuck Williams retired four years ago from a career that included three decades as a TV producer and several stints as a Broadway performer, he planned to play a lot of golf.

A few months later, though, he found himself in 16th-century garb, serenading crowds at the Busch Gardens theme park four days a week.

"I think it's kept me young," said Williams, 64, who enjoys mingling with the crowds and bestowing kisses on female tourists between shows.

Park owner Anheuser-Busch is among several local employers who have taken advantage of the growing number of business and government retirees settling in planned communities around this small historic city.

Colonial Williamsburg, the College of William and Mary and James City County all have benefited from retirees with decades of experience willing to work part-time for little or no pay.

"What may make it unique is the retirees here are those in the upper-income range," said John E. McDonald, county budget director. "We also see early retirees, retirees in their mid-50s who are still very active people and are still continuing to look for challenges."

McDonald hired one of those, Ted Bickmore, a retired financial manager for U.S. Steel. Working part-time, the 59-year-old Bickmore has helped revise county population estimates and forecast revenues and spending.

"If it hurts your ego to go from managing 200 people to working by yourself, it isn't perhaps the thing you want to do," Bickmore said. "The new interests and so forth I have found very fascinating."

He has no illusions about why retirees are being hired. "We're cheap. We're the people that can afford to do this."

Paul Grehl, a former director of employee relations for General Foods Corp., is among a half-dozen retired executives who work for the School of Business Administration at William and Mary.

"I'm part-time pay and I work about 40 or 50 hours a week. I'm delighted. I'd be willing to pay them to come down here and do what I do now," said the 64-year-old Grehl, who teaches labor relations along with Al Whitehorse, a retired veteran of IBM, Michelin Tire Co. and Sperry and Hutchinson Co.

"We wouldn't do it if it weren't fun," said Whitehorse, who also helps business students find summer jobs. "It helps the school and we enjoy it."

Colonial Williamsburg uses retirees as historical interpreters and research assistants, often in unpaid positions, said spokesman Ken Kipps.

Corey Cooney, 74, a retired librarian from Teaneck, N.J., devotes about four free hours a week to Colonial Williamsburg's library.

"I have enjoyed the staff," said Mrs. Cooney, who moved to Williamsburg to restore a 200-year-old home with her husband.

Busch Gardens, with more than 100 retirees among 2,500 employees, has been recruiting older workers since it opened 14 years ago, said employment manager Lynn Smith.

"They add a diversity, they add good ideas, they're excellent role models for some of the younger people that work out in the park and they have enthusiasm."

Choir Marks Its 60th Year On The Radio

By Peg McEneetee
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SALT LAKE CITY -- At least twice a week for 12 years, baritone Stephen Bardsley has made the 50-mile drive to Temple Square, the "Crossroads of the West" that is home to the venerable Mormon Tabernacle Choir.

He is paid no money, but as a member of the world's largest and best-known choir, Bardsley has sung at presidential inaugurations and the Olympic Games and in tours all over the world.

The commuting might be tiresome, but never the singing.

"Once you sit in that seat, you just get away from the whole world, and you get your soul into singing for the whole world," said Bardsley, 48, a customer service manager at a computer company in Provo.

The choir has been singing for the world for a long time.

Sunday was the 325-voice choir's 60th anniversary broadcast of "Music and the Spoken Word," which with 3,126 live Sunday performances is the longest-running program in the history of American radio.

President Bush and former President Reagan, whose inaugurations featured the choir, delivered videotaped tributes.

The broadcasts are heard by millions on about 400 domestic stations as well as in Europe on Armed Forces Radio Network and in a dozen nations with English-speaking programs. The choir also is seen on scores of syndicated telecasts.

NBC carried the program from 1929 to 1932, when Utah's KSL Radio switched to CBS Radio. Since then, CBS has provided the program to its affiliates as a public service for "a broad range of listeners ... it's very well-received," said John Burrows, a radio network vice president.

The choir had its genesis in 1847 in the arid Salt Lake Valley where Brigham Young led his Mormon pioneers, many of them immigrants who brought along the rich musical traditions of the British Isles.

Indeed, when Young sent bands of farmers out to colonize the surrounding territory, he insisted each group should include a metalworker and a woodworker "and there must be someone who can handle music so that people can sing," said Jerold Ottley, 55, a white-haired tenor and the choir's conductor since 1975.

But Ottley said the choir's identity was sealed in 1867 on completion of the domed Tabernacle, a 250-foot-long, 150-foot-wide auditorium with acoustics so refined that the curved walls will carry a whisper from end to end.

As always, the choir's members must be active in the 6.7 million-member Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. As with the faith's lay clergy, choir service is considered a "calling."

Second alto Jeanette Watkins, 54, is a Salt Lake tax attorney, mother of four and a nine-year veteran who shares the devotion of her fellow singers. She recalls 1988's grueling three-week tour of the South Pacific and a March sojourn to Disneyworld at the peak of the tax season.

"I thought, if the Lord wants me to go to Florida, I'll just get my work done," she said.

The choir itself is a non-profit organization financed by donations and proceeds from tours and more than 116 record albums. The selections range from frontier Mormon hymns and patriotic songs to Handel's "Messiah" and operatic overtures.

Five records are million-sellers, including the disc with the choir's signature piece, "The Battle Hymn of the Republic," which won a Grammy award.

A staff of 24 handles logistics and business matters. The production company is Bonneville International, the church's communications arm and owner of KSL.

Ottley, a Fulbright scholar with a doctorate in music pedagogy, took the podium shortly after the resignation of the choir's conductor of 17 years, Richard P. Condie. Where Condie concentrated on rich tonal qualities, Ottley has emphasized discipline and precision -- no easy task with an average of 290 voices singing 350 pieces in 145 rehearsals and performances a year.

He also implemented rigorous auditions to test a candidate's ability to meet demands on time and energy as well as musical skills, specifically the ability to read and quickly assimilate a part.

By decree of church leadership, volunteers must be at least 30, old enough to have established families and careers. They can serve 20 years or until age 60.

Older singers possess both the discipline and mature voices necessary for a choir that has no doubts

The Associated Press

Choir member sings in Sunday's anniversary broadcast about its place in music.

"The choir has become a part of the fabric of the nation culturally, and a great deal is expected of it because it's been around so long," Ottley said. "We are an amateur organization participating in a professional arena."

"We also are a representative of the church, an ambassador," he said. "We have to represent the church in a dignified, approachable, yet appropriate way. And that requires excellence."

Backing the choir when it is at home is the Tabernacle's familiar 206-rank, five-keyboard Aeolian-Skinner organ with its more than 11,600 gleaming pipes.

By no means the largest or oldest such instrument, the organ nevertheless possesses "dynamic levels, contrasts, subtlety of tonal shadings ... from the softest whisper to the most dramatic fanfares," said John Longhurst, one of three choir organists.

For 40 years, Richard L. Evans delivered the non-denominational sermons that punctuate the half-hour radio program. He was succeeded in 1972 by KSL's corporate news director, J. Spencer Kinard.

For Bardsley, the baritone from Provo, membership in the choir is a privileged extension of the Mormon traditions of spirituality and patriotism.

"In the Mormon faith we have a way of bearing our testimony about the things that we feel, and we can do that through music," he said. "It's just a way of talking to people, of communicating."

Most Bilingual Infants Don't Understand That They Are Speaking Two Languages

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (AP) — Infants who grow up hearing two languages may not understand at first that they are two separate tongues.

Elissa Newport, a psychologist at the University of Rochester.

"When they start speaking one-word sentences, they will have only one word for each idea. They may use the Spanish word for 'milk' but the English word for 'cat,'" says

Newport says they sort things out eventually. By age 2 or 3, a bilingual child intuits which language to speak to Mom and which to Dad, or which language to use at the day care center and which at home.

Antiques Add To New Home

BUILDING IDEAS

Historic architectural antiques, or architectural, as they're commonly known, are finding their way into new home construction as imaginative and unusual building and decorating elements.

According to Building Ideas magazine, part of the popularity stems from a renewed interest in the past, but these pieces are also considered an art form.

Salvage houses around the country sell one-of-a-kind pieces, but antique collectors will also find an assortment of more common antique elements, such as windows, doors, mantels, grates, staircases, newels, columns, pediments, fretwork and hardware. They could also happen upon such unusual finds as marble fountains, bronze street lamps, carved pulpits, courtroom benches, gazebos, domed ceilings and Tiffany chandeliers.

Most urban areas are rich sources of architectural antiques, and dealerships specializing in architectural offer an ever-changing inventory. Dealers usually will send collectors a photograph and dimensions in response to a specific inquiry and most will also ship purchases.

While dealerships are excellent sources for architectural antiques, it's still possible to scour demolition sites in search of architectural. Scan the Yellow Pages for demolition contractors and ask them where they're working, whether collectors will be welcome and what sort of salvage is available. Another good idea is to check newspapers for listings of estate sales.

Authors Raise Ire Of Gays With New Book

By Kara Swisher
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — "The gay revolution has failed."

It's hard to imagine how authors Hunter Madsen and Marshall Kirk could have picked a more inflammatory — or, as some critics have maintained, more attention-grabbing — first line for their new nonfiction book, After the Ball: How America Will Conquer Its Fear & Hatred of Gays in the 90s.

And those words are merely the warm-up for the controversial 400-page book, currently the object of lively debate in the gay community nationwide. Released last month near the 20th anniversary of the Stonewall riot in New York City, when a group of homosexuals rebelled against police harassment (considered by gay rights groups to be the birth of the gay liberation movement), the book takes a look at what appears to be a bleak issue: how homosexuality is unsympathetically viewed by heterosexuals in the United States.

To counter negative perceptions, they wrote the book. Calling it a "gay manifesto for the 1990s," the authors outline a slick "program of unabashed propaganda, firmly grounded in long-established principles of psychology and advertising," to change prejudices mainstream America has against homosexuals. They turn aside more aggressive, "storm-the-barricades" tactics. Write the authors: "Such tactics have proven themselves impractical — ineffective or even harmful — and their day is past."

Such suggestions are hackle-raising for many longtime gay activists, but the sometimes abrasive Madsen and Kirk don't stop there. Included in their analysis is a sharp rebuke to gays themselves. "For 20 immature years, the gay community has shrieked for rights, while demonstrating an alarming degree of irresponsibility," they write, chronicling a litany of abuses, mostly by gay men, ranging from narcissism to misbehavior in relationships. "All the squeaky-clean media propaganda in the world won't sustain a positive image in the long run unless we start scrubbing to make ourselves a little squeaker and cleaner in reality."

Among their assertions is a lightning rod for debate — a call to closet the gay community's more controversial stereotypes, such as bull dykes and drag queens. "The 'fringe' gay groups ought to have the tact to withdraw voluntarily from public appearances at gay parades, marches, and rallies, but they don't seem to care whether they fatally compromise the rest of us," write Madsen and Kirk.

In Washington, reactions are mixed. "The premise that everything we do is for potential public relations is false, and I do not live my life that way, being defined externally," says Mary Farmer, owner of Lammas, a feminist bookstore. "I am as pragmatic as the next person, and I think we have to live with straights — there is a meeting of pragmatism and principles. But leaving less attractive parts of our community out is self-hate, self-hate, self-hate. Times are hard, but not that hard."

"It's a strange and important book and I regard it as valuable to talk about it," says Deacon Maccubbin of Lambda Rising, a gay bookstore, where the book is selling briskly. "It raises important issues in not always the nicest way, but their hearts are in the right place."

"We thought it was controversial when we wrote it, and maybe we lean into it a bit too much," says Madsen, who works for an advertising firm in New York. "But we wanted to get gay people to think hard and boldly confront lazy habits and values in the gay community."

He says neither of them expected the book's fiery reception, especially over the suggestion to free the community of stereotypes. "In reality, they make up a small percentage of gays, but the image is strong-willed, defining what it means to be gay, and creates the tenor that the rest of America sees," he says. "We don't want to get rid of people, and we believe that anyone should live the life they want, but we don't want them to speak for us."

Madsen says he and Kirk decided to write the book when it became clear to them that gays, who make up at least 10 percent of the U.S. population according to widely publicized estimates, were in deep trouble as the community headed into the '90s. In a section titled "A Field Trip to Straight America," the authors paint a stark picture of a country that is less accepting than it seems from the big cities. Calling the problem "homohatred," they sketch a place where most heterosexuals know very little about homosexuality and would prefer to know less, avoid gay news events and issues, and refuse to educate themselves about homosexuality. They conclude that much of the country is engaged in a self-deluded "big lie" — believing that there are not many homosexuals, and that all gays are easy to spot, sinful and insane, sex addicts, unproductive and untrustworthy, and suicidally unhappy. And they outline the effects of these beliefs, including a strong effort to try to prevent homosexuality, deny civil rights and condone public disapproval — even as far as allowing violence toward gays to flourish.

"Some gays, living in their progressive urban environments, think America is tolerant and there is no need to build greater public support. They feel the way now is only through the courts and the legislatures," says Madsen. "They are all good tactics, but they are reversible, as soon as someone — usually on the religious right — fans the flames of public disapproval."

Their plan is a mix of the Madison Avenue campaigns used to hawk margarine and the time-honored methods of many oppressed minority groups. The aim is to derail prejudice by desensitization, jamming of hatred and eventual acceptance. The tools include reaching out to straights, moderating lifestyles, universal coming-out and portraying gays as victims of circumstance and oppression and not as aggressive challengers. In other words: make gays look good.

Madsen and Kirk suggest magazine and television ads, direct mail, public service announcements, reorganization of fractured gay rights groups, fund-raising drives and even a gay credit card. "The dynamics to change all this have been used by other minorities — it's a mass educational process. So we must start the campaign with something heterosexuals can most easily understand and then drive the wedge in slowly," says Madsen. "And as sad as it is, the AIDS crisis gives us the opportunity to establish ourselves as a victimized minority seeking America's special care and protection."

The proposal includes "standard image management techniques," because, as they see it, gays are often judged as a group. Their list of alleged misconduct by gays is long and tough to swallow: persistent lying, rejection of morality, narcissism and self-centered behavior, self-indulgence, self-destruction, misbehavior in bars, irresponsibility in relationships, tendency not to question the movement, and uncompromising belligerence for its own sake.

"For example, (raising the issue of) sex in public places by gays may seem like a silly thing, but it has major repercussions and creates hostility with straights," says Madsen. "Someone in the gay community should stand up and say this is wrong. Like it or not, what straights think of our behavior affects our lives." So as their parting shot, the authors created a detailed "self-policing social code," for relations with straights, gays and themselves.

Memory Man Works On Regaining His Berth In Guinness Book

Mahadevan's assault on pi reflects a recurring quest of his life — the effort to find some practical use, some path to money or fame or accomplishment, in his amazing gift.

"My friends are saying always to me, 'Rajan, how can you use this memory?' And I respond, 'Tell me! I'm looking! Tell me how I can make money, and I will do it.'"

The son of a prominent surgeon in Mangalore, Mahadevan as a boy regularly astounded his school friends by reciting, say, the score of the cricket test match on March 15, 1877, or the complete railway timetable for Calcutta Station. But there was not much to be gained from that kind of display.

Eventually he wrote the editors of the Guinness Book of World Records in London about his talent; they suggested he focus on pi.

Mahadevan found a book-size listing of the constant and went to work. By mid-1980, when he first came to America, he had memorized 10,000 digits. A year later he was ready to try for the record.

On July 4, 1981, Mahadevan stood before a packed meeting hall in Mangalore and started reciting pi from memory.

He raced through the first 100 digits so fast the official observers could hardly keep up. He cruised easily past the famous segment, 762 digits long, where six 9s in a row occur.

After 10,000 digits, he paused for a Pepsi. He paused again at 20,000 digits, and again at 25,000. In all, he recited numbers for 3 hours 49 minutes. He remembered 31,811 digits of pi without a single error.

Why did he stop there? "I just forgot," Mahadevan explains with a shrug. "The 31,812th digit, I don't know why, I am always stumbling over that one."

In any case, 31,811 was enough to earn him a place in the Guinness book — and give him the satisfaction of having scaled a world-class summit.

"People ask me, 'Rajan, why would you want to know 30,000 or 50,000 digits of pi?' he says. "Well, it is the challenge, to meet a challenge. And because the Guinness regulations are such that you have to do this to get in the book."

The psychological community's interest increased after Mahadevan made the Guinness book. "That's when the ballyhoo really started," he says. "And all the tests. That's what's the reason for this big government grant, which is, how the hell do I do it?"

To help answer that, Mahadevan gave me a demonstration of his memory power. "Why don't you write a 6-by-6 matrix of digits, random digits, on the blackboard," he said.

I did so. He stared at the 36 numbers with all the concentration and intensity of a tennis star awaiting the serve on match point. After two minutes, I copied down the numbers and erased the board. The memory whiz still stood there with his face crinkled in deepest thought. He cradled his chin in his hand and rocked back and forth rhythmically from one sandal to the next.

Eventually, he started reciting the numbers, row by row, in his clipped, quick Indian accent that made the word three come out as "tree" and five as "fie":

783124

180279

617453

I checked in my notebook; he had it exactly right. He was right again when he recited all 36 numbers backward. He responded flawlessly, albeit slowly, when I asked him to recall diagonals and individual rows or columns within the square. Clearly he had committed these numbers to memory. But how?

Mahadevan launched into an explanation that was as mysterious as the feat itself.

"I scan the entire thing and start to make associations," he said. "For example, there is '111'; that's called a 'Nelson' because Admiral Nelson had one eye, one arm and one leg. I see a '312' in there: area code of Chicago. There is '1802', which I reduce to 'plus 2' because John Adams occupied the White House in 1800. The '1745' I remember as 39, because Ben Franklin was 39 in 1745.

"I don't know why I make those particular associations. These things come to me. They come to me naturally because I have an incredible knowledge base."

With that, we dropped the 36-digit matrix and moved on to other tests using different numbers. Four hours later, at the lunch table, Mahadevan looked up with a start from his egg custard.

"The most interesting thing has suddenly occurred to me," he said excitedly. "Why didn't I see it before? In that block of 36 you gave me, in the first vertical row, there are the numbers 17, 16 and 33. Well, 17 and 16 add to 33! Why didn't I see that before?"

One reason he didn't see it is that Mahadevan evidently does not have an eidetic, or "photographic," memory; he does not create a perfect mental picture of every block of words or numbers he sees.

If he were an "eidetiker," he would probably have a much easier time than he does remembering words. In standard memory tests, using either random lists of words or hunks of literature, Mahadevan's memory for verbal material rates about high average.

"Words are more difficult for me," he says. "I don't keep them forever." As a boy, for example, he memorized Macaulay's long poem "Horatius at the Bridge"; today he can't even remember the famous first lines ("Lars Porsena of Clusium, by the nine gods he swore").

In fact, Mahadevan's memory is apt to turn verbal material into numbers. Although he is a Hindu, he attended Catholic schools much of his life and studied the Bible. Today he can't recall a word of that book. "In the Bible," he says, "I do know that Psalm 119 is the longest psalm and Psalm 176 is the shortest — No! I'm sorry! I'm sorry! Psalm 117 is the shortest, just two verses. Psalm 119, I think (there are) 176 verses to it."

With all the academic concentration on his gift, Mahadevan, too, became fascinated with memory. He dropped out of engineering school when he was 23 and switched to a career in psychology. He earned a master's degree in India at the University of Mysore, and began thinking about advanced work in the United States.

He eventually applied to Kansas State University ("it was a financially accessible school," he says, with a good reputation in psychology) and moved in 1987 to this small island of campus and town surrounded by a brown sea of rolling wheat fields.

One of the scholars Mahadevan quickly got to know was Prof. Charles Thompson. Thompson has made the subject of memory his professional specialty, and for years has been running tests on volunteer subjects. In a standard test called the "digit span task," he would recite numbers, one per second, and ask the volunteers to repeat all they could remember.

The average person scored seven to 10. In a few cases, Thompson found people with enough memory power to recall a random series of 16 or even 20 digits for a day or so. Thompson had read and reread the much-honored study "The Mind of a Mnemonist" by the Russian A.R. Luria, one of the great psychologists of the 20th century.

At Fast Eddie's, the campus hangout, regulars are teaching the Indian to play pool, and in return he is willing to entertain. Almost every night he is approached by students who rapidly spin off the serial numbers from four or five dollar bills and challenge him to repeat them. He is surprised at their awestruck response when he succeeds. "Those numbers — only eight digits apiece," he says.

The constant pi runs somewhat longer than eight digits, of course, but Mahadevan is still working on that number, too. In 1988 a Japanese memorist, Hideaki Tomoyori, recited 40,000 digits of pi from memory, displacing Mahadevan from his spot in the Guinness book.

Mahadevan is determined to get back in the book. He thinks it will take an even 100,000 digits to win a secure place, so he is currently studying off and on toward that goal. The work is "rather pleasurable," he says, particularly when he reviews segments of the long series that he particularly enjoys.

The other night, for example, he came upon his favorite hunk of pi, the 100-number series running from digit 2,901 to 3,000. "I just love those hundred digits," he told me. Then he closed his eyes, crinkled his face and launched into a joyful, rhapsodic recitation:

"81911979396520614196," he began, moving swiftly in his clipped subcontinent accent. "634287544406437451237181921799839101591956181 —" Here he paused for a moment, thinking hard, and then dove back in.

By then, I was not surprised to see that he got them all right. Nor was it a surprise to see him open his eyes, come back from wherever his mind had been and flash a huge smile.

"I don't know why I love those digits so much," he said happily. "It's like seeing a woman and you just like her from the first for no reason. That series, it is like an old friend. I will never forget."

Hoffman's Death Marketable

rity biographies is that you've got to be the first or the best, and that sometimes even that doesn't help. But the publishers express confidence, and they may have good reason: Death is hot. Andy Warhol, who has a whole shelf of books either by or about him coming out, stands as the best current example.

"To some extent, publishing is intellectual necrophilia," says Doubleday editor Harriet Rubin, who signed up former National Lampoon executive editor Larry "Ratso" Sloman for a "group portrait" of Hoffman and his times. "Look at the Gilda Radner book (her autobiography will be the No. 1 New York Times nonfiction bestseller on July 23). Would it have sold in those numbers had she not died?"

As for Hoffman, she says, "not to get too ridiculous, but there is some sort of great pleasure in closure. It's part of storytelling to see the whole structure of a life and a time. Maybe it's horrible and voyeuristic, but actually it's just human. And maybe the '90s will be the real moment that we can finally see the '60s for what they were."

Rosenthal, the Random House editor, says, "Plus, to put it crudely, absence makes the heart grow fonder. If someone had pitched his biography when he was alive, it would have raised no interest."

Art Grants Threatened By Dispute

WASHINGTON (AP) — The battle over a photograph of a crucifix submerged in urine has escalated to unprecedented proportions, threatening to cost the Southeastern Center for Contemporary Art more than $375,000.

The Senate was scheduled to consider a proposal Wednesday to bar the art center in Winston-Salem, N.C., from receiving grants from the National Endowment for the Arts until late 1994. The prohibition would cost the center at least $375,000 and probably more, officials said.

Congress has never before tried to stop the NEA from giving money to a particular group.
