Captors Say They Executed U.S. Hostage

By Riad Kahwaji
 THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BEIRUT, Lebanon — Pro-Iranian Shiite Moslems claimed today they had executed Lt. Col. William R. Higgins and released a videotape purporting to show the U.S. Marine hanging from a makeshift gallows. They said the execution was carried out in retaliation for Israel's kidnapping of a Moslem cleric. The videotape showed a man the captors identified as Higgins dangling from a gallows with both his hands and feet tied by rope. The victim wore a white blindfold, and his head was tilted forward. A typewritten statement in Arabic signed by the Organization of the Oppressed on Earth said the 44-year-old hostage was hanged at 3 p.m. (8 a.m. EDT). Both the tape and statement were delivered to a Western news agency an hour after the deadline.

The group had threatened to kill Higgins, calling him a "proven spy," if if Sheik Abdul Karim Obeid were not freed. The influential Moslem cleric was kidnapped in a raid by Israeli commandos on Friday.

There was no way to immediately verify today's claim by the Moslem group and whether the hanging had occurred today.

A diplomatic source told The Associated Press the United Nations received unconfirmed reports that Higgins was shot to death after the shooting down of the Iranian airbus by the U.S.S. Vincennes on July 3, 1988. At the time, no specific date for the death was given.

In Chicago, President Bush said he has no independent confirmation that Higgins has been hanged and said he would first try to learn what had happened to Higgins, and then "figure out what might conceivably be done" in response.

A Pentagon official, speaking on condition of anonymity, also said the Defense Department has no independent confirmation that Higgins has been executed. The source said it was his understanding that there are some pictures, but they are indeterminate, showing a body.

The 30-second videotape was of extremely bad quality and there was no indication when it was filmed.

The tape released in Beirut apparently was taken in two sequences of 15 seconds each.

In one sequence, the man purported to be Higgins appeared dangling from a scaffold and tied to a ceiling with his head tilted to the left and the body swirling slowly. He was wearing a white blindfold.

The second sequence showed him without a blindfold, his eyes bulging. He was barefoot and wearing a dark jacket and light trousers.

Higgins, of Danville, Ky., was serving as head of an observer group attached to the U.N. peacekeeping force in south Lebanon when he was seized Feb. 17, 1988. His captors accused him of spying for the CIA.

Spokesmen for Israel's Defense and Foreign Ministries refused to comment immediately on the report of Higgins' death.

Benjamin Netanyahu, deputy foreign minister, said on Israeli radio: "We have no proof of this message and we hope it is not true. It is our intention to free the hostages: first and foremost the Israeli prisoners."

In Jerusalem earlier today, Defense Minister Yitzhak Rabin of Israel proposed trading all his country's Shiite Moslem captives for all captured Israeli soldiers and foreign hostages held by Shiite groups in Lebanon. Rabin made the proposal in an announcement broadcast on state-run Israeli radio.

Bush Wants Summit On Education

By Christopher Connell
 THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHICAGO — President Bush, in a speech overshadowed by reports of the execution of an American hostage in Lebanon, today summoned state governors to a September summit to search for ways to improve the nation's educational performance.

Bush tendered the invitation to the Sept. 27-28 meeting in a speech at the National Governors' Association summer meeting here, then cut short a planned two-day speechmaking trip to return to Washington to check on the execution reports and "figure out what might conceivably be done" in response.

The president spoke soon after Shiite Moslem captors of Marine Lt. Col. William Higgins claimed they had hanged the officer, who was assigned to a United Nations peacekeeping force in Lebanon, in retaliation for Israel's kidnapping last week of a Moslem cleric and two aides from south Lebanon.

From Chicago, Bush's originally planned to fly to Las Vegas, Nev., to speak before the Disabled American Veterans and to Oklahoma City, where he was to address a convention of the Fraternal Order of Police on Tuesday.

Instead, the president headed back to the capital after delivering his speech to the governors and taking questions from them.

In his remarks, Bush predicted that the education summit will be "an historic meeting," only the third time in history a president has convened a gathering of the governors.

The Education Department has already been providing pilot funds for school districts trying school reforms embraced by the governors' association.

In his speech, Bush did not offer any new financial aid to education, saying only that "federal dollars should be targeted to those most in need." He reiterated support of "choice for parents" in where they want to send their children to school.

The president also enlisted the governors' help in combating other social problems, from crime to drug abuse to welfare dependency, that he portrayed as undermining America's progress.

He said he shares with the chief executives of the 50 states "common challenges and responsibilities."

"To cure our nation of illiteracy, drug abuse and crime, we must act in tandem, president with governor and governor with mayor, up and down the line," he said. "In short we must find our collective will as a nation."

"Today we do not meet in a spirit of immediate crisis. The nation is sound," Bush continued, "but the decline of our educational system, the threat of crime and drugs, the economic dependency of so many — these problems threaten to endanger the very leadership position of America in the next century."

"... A nation in which a half of our youth is ignorant of geography, in which drugs are rampant, in which a substantial proportion of the population knows little hope — such a nation will not long remain competitive," he said.

"Improving our schools, driving out drugs and bringing hope and opportunity to those who need it most — these are issues of our national well-being, even our national security," he said.

Bush promised during last year's campaign to convene an education summit, and discussed it with the governors' executive committee at the White House in May.

Only twice before have the nation's governors met en masse with the president on an issue of vital national importance, Bush said. The first was a conference on conservation called by Theodore Roosevelt

ECU Requests Would Be Cut Under Expansion Budget Plan

By John Bare
 THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Members of the state House are set to consider an expansion budget package Tuesday that would provide only a smidgen of the funds which East Carolina University has requested.

The House is scheduled to reconvene tonight at 8 p.m., and members will be presented with an expansion budget package. The measure will likely go to the House floor Tuesday, said Rep. Walter Jones Jr., D-Pitt.

The House expansion bill calls for $1.3 million in planning money for an addition to Joyner Library and provides no dollars for a proposed conference center.

In the Senate bill, which has already passed, ECU would receive $6.3 million for the library.

The university and the Board of Governors have requested $24 million for the project, stating strongly that the new library is far and away ECU's greatest need.

The Senate bill would provide $2 million for the first phase of the regional conference center, which would eventually include an exhibition space and a sports arena.

Last year lawmakers appropriated $500,000 for land acquisition, and ECU's Regional Development Institute has conducted a detailed feasibility study of such a project.

The first phase is projected to cost about $12 million, with the total complex to cost about $25 million.

Barring a major surprise, the House and Senate conflicts will be worked out in the coming days by a conference committee, lawmakers said. The committee members will be appointed by House Speaker Joe Mavretic, D-Edgecombe, and Presi-

Oil Rig Flips Over In Gulf; 7 Trapped

By Mary Foster
 THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW ORLEANS — An oil rig capsized early today as it was being towed ashore to escape a storm in the Gulf of Mexico, and seven workers were feared trapped inside, the Coast Guard said.

Six of the 13 workers believed to have been aboard were plucked from the water by fishermen and a Coast Guard helicopter, said Chief Petty Officer Michael Robling.

Petty Officer Steve Guy said some workers "may be trapped inside the rig below the surface of the water."

The rig, a work barge with legs that can be extended to the bottom, is of a type in which the crew quarters can be sealed, but it wasn't known if the missing workers were in a sealed part of the vessel, said Lt. Steve Hardy.

"They usually have watertight doors which should have been secured if the vessel was under way," Hardy said.

Air trapped inside would be the only oxygen for any survivors, Hardy said. He said he couldn't estimate how long the air supply would last.

Rescue efforts were hampered by 10-foot seas, 35 mph wind and heavy rain from the fringes of Tropical Storm Chantal. The Coast Guard flew divers to the rig, and helicopters and a patrol boat were dispatched.

The vessel, leased to Chevron Oil Corp., had been ordered ashore because of the storm, said spokesman Jonathan Lifa.

The rig was in about 25 feet of water 25 miles off Morgan City. The accident was reported about 5:20 a.m.

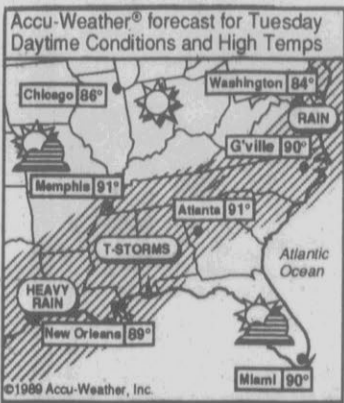

"We have no idea how it capsized. The workers on the rig are suspected to have been asleep" when the rig fell over, Guy said.

Seas were about 3 feet when the order came to move, but the weather at the time wasn't known, said Lifa.

Petty Officer Rich Muller said the rig belonged to Lafayette Lift Boat and was managed by Avis Boug Co. of Folsom.

Lafayette has no listing, and a woman who answered the phone at Avis said officials were on their way to the scene and unavailable to comment.

Gas Prices Set To Jump Tuesday For N.C. Drivers

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

North Carolina drivers will pay at least 5 cents per gallon more at the pumps when a state gasoline tax increase goes into effect Tuesday, making the surcharge the second highest in the country, officials said.

While some analysts said a gradual increase would be more likely, most oil distributors said they would pass the 5.25-cent-per-gallon hike directly to consumers.

"Something like this, there's no choice," said David L. Weaver, vice president of Cary Oil Co. Inc. "Everybody midnight Monday night will raise their prices 5.2 cents."

Donald W. Colclough, general manager of Kenan Oil Co. Inc. said he doubted oil companies would be willing to take losses to lessen the tax burden on customers.

"At our stations you're going to see an immediate increase of 5.25 to 6 cents a gallon," he said. Kenan Oil distributes to 29 service stations in the state and about 15 in the Triangle.

The gas tax increase received final approval from the General Assembly on Thursday, as part of a $9.1 billion package for highways and pay raises.

A survey of statewide prices for unleaded gas at self-service pumps in early July showed the average to be $1.076, said Quentin G. Anderson, spokesman for the Charlotte-based AAA Carolina Motor Club, which periodically compiles such figures.

At 21.15 cents per gallon, the state's gasoline tax will be the second highest in the country, slightly behind Nebraska's 22.3 cents and slightly ahead of Tennessee's 21 cents per gallon, Anderson said.

Combined with a federal tax of 9 cents per gallon paid by motorists in all states, North Carolina drivers will pay a combined total of 30.15 cents in state and federal taxes on each gallon purchased, according to AAA's report.

Colclough said the price increase at the pumps could go as high as 6 cents after the 5.25-cent tax hike because gas stations don't price by the quarter of a penny and wouldn't want to give that money to the government.

But Al Dorsett, executive director of the North Carolina Service Station Association, said distributors might choose to lower the price of the gas they sell to service stations in order to offset the tax and avoid shocking the market.

Oil company officials said that if the increase were gradual, it would still reach at least 5 cents within a week or two after Aug. 1.

Washington Summer Festival Viewed As 'Fabulous Success'

By Carol Tyer
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

An official of the Washington Summer Festival said that the weekend event, held along the waterfront of Washington, N.C., was "a fabulous success," despite an environmental organization's staging of a mock funeral for the Tar River.

"This is the sixth year the festival has been held and we had a great weekend," said Bo Lewis, executive director of the Washington Chamber of Commerce, which sponsors the annual event.

"We estimate that more than 70,000 people attended. There were about 32,000 here for the 'Bill Pinkney and the Original Drifters' performance Saturday night," he said.

At one point during the festival, members of the Pamlico-Tar River Foundation staged a "funeral" for the Pamlico River, complete with a casket and grieving widow.

"I thought it was in bad taste," Lewis said. "We drew the crowd and they took advantage of it. They always make themselves seen at Washington, as if this is where the river's problems originate. I think they originate a lot further up and I don't see why they don't demonstrate in Greenville, Tarboro and other places. Why always in Washington?"

Lewis said putting on the festival cost the Chamber of Commerce about $40,000. He said this money has been raised through selling of permits for vendors' booths, T-shirts and other favors.

"We'll just about break even," he said. "Once we get the T-shirts that we have orders for and deliver them."

"This is the biggest festival in the east except Wilmington's Azalea Festival," he said. "We think people really appreciate coming out here on the river and having a lot of fun free. It's a lot of work, but we'll probably do it again next year."

Approximately 150 vendors were selling "everything from Polish sausages to silk ties," Lewis said.

Lewis said some 52 law enforcement officers provided security and parking and traffic problems were kept to a minimum by these people.

Lewis said a fine arts show was held from 9 a.m. Friday through Sunday afternoon in the renovated train station which houses the Beaufort County Arts Center.

He said throughout the three days — Friday afternoon to Sunday evening — the crowds were heavy along Washington's half-mile of waterfront.

Presentations included a cannon-firing re-enactment by the Washington Gray Civil War cannoneers group; an 1860's fashion show, a ski show in the river, karate demonstrations, visits by both Pitt County Memorial Hospital's East Care Air Ambulance and an air-sea rescue helicopter from Camp Lejeune.

Carnival rides were available from Friday afternoon on, as were performances by many music groups, including a National Guard band called The Troubadours, the Southern Breeze Band, a jazz band and others.

Weekend Thefts

Eight thefts, including a number of electronic items, were reported to Greenville police over the weekend.

Officer B.W. Lewis said radios were taken from four vehicles parked at Eurasian Imports at 105 W. Greenville Blvd. in an incident reported at 4:04 p.m. Saturday, while Officer S.A. Bass said six steaks were taken from the Food Lion store on East 10th Street in an incident reported Saturday at 7:48 p.m.

Officer E.A. Tyson said four hubcaps were taken from a car at 47 Golden Road in an incident reported at 9:53 a.m. Sunday, while Officer L.E. White said a three-wheel Honda motorcycle was taken from 101A Emma's Place in an incident reported at 12:30 p.m.

Officer C.M. Credle said a camcorder valued at about $900 was taken from Lowe's on Greenville Boulevard in an incident reported at 3:34 p.m. Sunday, while Officer J.G. Bridges said a 1988 model Honda scooter was taken from 104E Lakeview Terrace in an incident reported at 4:50 p.m.

Officer C.A. Curtis said a compact disc player and a radar detector were taken from a car parked at Pair Electronics on Trade Street in an incident reported Sunday at 5:26 p.m., while Officer S.A. Bass said a television set, video cassette recorder and a cable-television box were taken from 309C Tobacco Road in a break-in reported at 5:43 p.m.

Larceny Charges

Greenville police arrested two men on larceny charges Sunday in connection with a 4:30 p.m. theft incident at Roses at The Plaza mall.

Officer Alexander Batts said Emil Todd Williams, 20, and Michael

Jones, 21, both of Wilson, were charged in connection with the theft of a video cassette recorder and VCR tape.

Multiple Charges

Eric Earl Mercer Moore, 19, of Greenville was arrested on multiple traffic charges after he allegedly tried to outrun officers in a stolen car early today.

Officers B.W. Lewis and R.C. Allsbrook said Moore was charged with failing to stop for a blue light and siren, speeding, driving while his license was revoked, driving while impaired, careless and reckless driving, possession of a stolen vehicle and auto larceny.

The officers said Moore was charged after the car he was driving hit a utility pole at the intersection of Skinner Street and Myrtle Avenue about 1:29 a.m. as he tried to elude police.

The investigators said the car Moore was driving, a 1988 model vehicle, was reported stolen about three weeks ago.

Leaf Outlook Favorable

There should be plenty of good tobacco ready to be sold when Greenville and other Eastern Belt markets open for another auction season next week, a county farm agent said this morning.

Mitch Smith, a tobacco expert and head of the Pitt County Agricultural Extension Service office, said "1989 has been a year growers have had to overcome some tremendous obstacles — leaf spot and a tremendous amount of excessive moisture. It's been a challenge getting to this point."

But, "despite all things," Smith said, "we'll have some good quality tobacco to put on the market floor," when sales begin Aug. 8. "Oh, yes. There will be plenty of good tobacco, plus some carry-over from last year will guarantee a good supply of quality leaf."

Smith, who said the drier weather over the past couple of weeks "has helped ... it really has," suggested that opening sales should be better than last year's opening average.

"Georgia averaged seven cents (a pound) above last year," when sales opened there last week, Smith said. "I think our (opening) will be comparable to that."

No Claims Yet

ROANOKE (AP) — A fund designed to compensate the families of babies born with brain damage and to protect obstetricians from immense lawsuits has yet to have a claim against it.

Now physicians and legislators believe the legal definition of what babies qualify for the fund should be expanded.

The criteria for coverage under the program, passed by the General Assembly in 1987, needed to be conservative to limit the number of claims, said Dr. Daniel Crooks, head of the Virginia Society of Obstetricians and Gynecologists and a member of the panel that administers funds for the program.

"Otherwise, we would have broken the fund in the first two or three months of operation," he said.

"I think we're going to need to modify the definition in the act to better capture the population of babies we intended," Sandra Kramer, an attorney for the Medical Society of Virginia, told the Roanoke Times & World-News.

Free Market Health Care System Has Backing

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — North Carolina health care system needs a dose of free-market competition and one way to impose the competition would be to eliminate the state's certificate-of-need program, say lawmakers, administrators and consumer activists.

They say the state's 10-year-old program has failed to prevent an excess of hospital beds, a shortage of nursing homes and a medical arms race, the Greensboro News & Record reported in Sunday editions.

The program has been the state's chief weapon against rising health costs and unnecessary services. But some legislative advisory panels — including the Study Commission on Aging and the State Goals and Policy Board — have called for the program's repeal. Legislation has been proposed to either restrict or abolish the program.

The program's role is to estimate how many services will be used, the financial impact and how many similar services already exist before giving hospital and nursing homes the go-ahead to build, expand or buy equipment.

The federal government, which once mandated the review process, has cut off funding assistance and adopted a hands-off policy.

The Federal Trade Commission has urged states to drop the certificate-of-need program, arguing it has failed to curb health costs and may actually increase costs by inhibiting competition.

Thirteen states have followed the commission's advice, five are poised to do the same, and 22 states — including North Carolina — have sharply limited the agency's control over health-care spending.

Likewise, state health planners who guide the certificate-of-need process question its effectiveness and impact.

"I have mixed feelings," said health planner Jim Bernstein. "It probably has had an effect on keeping nursing home census fairly high. That allows nursing homes to run a financially feasible operation with out cutting quality."

"I don't think it inhibits acute-care hospitals much. Most of what they want to do they can do within the system. Most of them are not looking to build new beds."

But N.C. Department of Human Resources officials argue that unlike other products, health care does not respond to the economic Darwinism of a competitive marketplace.

Lee Hoffman, chief of the certificate-of-need section, points to other states — particularly Arizona and Utah — that have dropped the review process to experience staggering growth in nursing home and hospital construction.

While state health planners offer little evidence of money saved through the review process, human resource officials warn that without the program, the state would face an additional $50 million Medicaid bill because of uncontrolled nursing home construction.

No matter how crowded the market, there are always out-of-state entrepreneurs who believe "I can do it better" and will gamble with duplicate services, Ms. Hoffman said.

"Health care is a very fragile kind of market," she said. "It's not like selling Popsicles or computers, though it's viewed that way."

Ms. Hoffman said most medical consumers are insulated from rising costs through third-party payers such as Medicare or Blue Cross Blue Shield and have little incentive to make cost-effective choices.

There is debate whether the certificate-of-need program or an excess of empty hospital beds has prevented new hospital construction at a time when hospitals and physicians scramble to secure the latest in high-tech equipment.

Records from 1981 to 1984 show that the certificate-of-need agency let six hospitals in Guilford and Forsyth counties — all within 30 minutes of each other — buy CT scanners, a diagnostic imaging machine.

When a more sophisticated body imaging machine — the MRI — came on the scene a few years later, four hospitals and a physicians' group in Guilford and Forsyth counties won certificate-of-need approval to buy the $2 million machine.

Duncan Yaggy, chief planning officer at Duke University Medical Center, said medicine can justify the use of any new technology and that costly overuse is almost impossible to prove.

"The physicians are the experts and the regulators ain't — and both of them know it," says Yaggy, a former certificate-of-need official in Massachusetts.

"Anytime you get a new toy, a lot of people want to play with it," he says. "If the stuff is there, it gets used, frequently unnecessarily."

State health planner Jim Bernstein believes the value of the certificate-of-need program has been to limit outpatient surgery centers — lucrative businesses that private doctors start to siphon off insured patients.

That kind of competition can squeeze a community hospital, forcing it to eliminate some costly services to make up for the loss of profitable services.

"There's just so much that can be split up before you start eroding the integrity of a medical center," Bernstein said.

Most smaller community hospitals support the review process because it protects them from outside competition, says Pete Roy, an N.C. Hospital Association spokesman.

But that kind of protection smacks of anti-trust, critics say.

"Because CON regulation delays or reduces the prospect of new entry and expansion, it increases the likelihood that providers will exploit whatever market power they have ... to raise prices or reduce quality below the competitive level," said Keith Anderson of the Federal Trade Commission.

Officials See Extended Arsenic Probe

By Paul Nowell

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BURLINGTON — Even though he has spent most of the past month examining her past, Alamance County Sheriff Richard Frye says accused killer Blanche Moore remains an enigma to him.

"We're talking about an average, ordinary, neighborhood lady," he said. "If she had walked into my office a couple of weeks ago, I would not have known her."

Mrs. Moore, 56, and a mother of two, is accused of poisoning her current and a former husband and a former boyfriend, two of whom are dead. Investigators are probing the deaths of six other people.

"This investigation is headed a long way from here," said Burlington police Lt. Detective Steve Lynch.

She is scheduled to be arraigned Aug. 28 on the murder and assault charges. Mrs. Moore has not been charged in any of the new investigations.

Her attorney says Mrs. Moore maintains her innocence.

"She told me this whole scenario is like a nightmare stalking her," her attorney, Mitchell McEntire, said after visiting Mrs. Moore in the Alamance County Jail. "It keeps stalking her."

"The investigation is ongoing and it will continue as long as police receive information," said District Attorney Steve Balog.

Mrs. Moore is being held without bond in the jail, charged with using arsenic to kill her first husband, James Taylor, in 1973, and her boyfriend, Raymond Reid, in 1986.

Besides the two murder charges, Mrs. Moore also is charged with assault with intent to kill in the arsenic poisoning of her present husband, the Rev. Dwight Moore, who continues to recover at a Greensboro hospital.

Balog declined to elaborate on possible motives in any of the cases, saying it was too early in the investigation. He also would not provide details on how the poisonings may have occurred.

On Friday, Dr. John Butts of the state medical examiner's office said an autopsy on Mrs. Moore's father, Parker D. Kiser Sr., showed he had injected arsenic in the weeks before his 1966 death, but that his death was caused by heart failure.

Lynch said the investigation of Kiser's death remains open.

"No immediate charges are planned until the investigation is complete and the district attorney has an opportunity to evaluate the case," he said Friday.

"She's a good Christian lady who has lived her whole life quietly," said her attorney. "Now people are pointing fingers at her."

Police began investigating Mrs. Moore after Moore was admitted to North Carolina Memorial Hospital in Chapel Hill in May with arsenic poisoning.

Investigators with the county sheriff's department and the State Bureau of Investigation began checking into the past of his new wife.

The probe raised questions about four deaths of people linked with Mrs. Moore. They included her father, Taylor, Reid and a former co-worker, Mabel Jessie Parsons.

On Thursday, the list of possible victims grew to nine with the addition of Mrs. Moore's mother-in-law. The bodies of Taylor, Reid and Kiser have been exhumed for autopsies by the state medical examiner.

Mrs. Moore, who declined a request for an interview, maintains through her attorney that she is innocent.

"She has a great deal of determination," McEntire said. "When she is found not guilty, she wants it to be the end of it. She is prepared to face what's coming."

Meanwhile, the medical examiner is reviewing medical files of other deaths.

Her mother-in-law, Isla Taylor, 83, died Nov. 25, 1970, in Alamance County Hospital of apparent cerebral hemorrhage brought on by hypertension and cardiovascular disease, according to her death certificate. No autopsy was performed at the time of her death.

Lynch said Isla Taylor's medical records will be sent to the state's chief medical examiner, who will determine if her body should be exhumed for arsenic testing.

Earlier this week, Burlington police announced four new death investigations. On Wednesday, Lynch sent to Butts the medical records of Mrs. Parsons, 61, and Joseph M. Mitchell, 57, both Mrs. Moore's co-workers at Kroger; Ina P. Vinson, a retired Southern Bell employee, and John W. Reiber, 77.

Mrs. Parsons died of lung cancer in October 1988.

Mitchell, a Kroger meat cutter, died in July 1985 of what doctors described as an inadequate flow of blood to his brain.

Ms. Vinson died of apparent heart failure in August 1977. Investigators have not said how she is linked to Mrs. Moore, and McEntire says his client doesn't even remember meeting the woman.

Reiber, a member of Dwight Moore's Carolina United Church of Christ near Hopedale, died of liver failure in February 1988. In another twist, Reiber's son sat on the grand jury that indicted Mrs. Moore. That has prompted McEntire to say he will file a motion to have the indictment overturned.

McEntire said he asked Mrs. Moore whether she had anything to do with the cases in which she is charged.

"She said if the evidence is that they died of arsenic poisoning, they either ingested it accidentally or someone did it in a fashion to make it appear she did it," he said.

Campus Recruiter A Mystery

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ALBEMARLE — A recruiter for Stanly Community College was reassigned to work out of her home after pursuing a grievance against the school's president three years ago and since has rarely been seen on campus or at the high schools where she says she recruits students.

Linda Funderud, who is paid $20,904 with state money, is one of three marketing coordinators who recruit students for the school. The other two work on campus. They give campus tours, introduce prospective students to faculty members and help arrange student placement testing.

But Ms. Funderud doesn't. The situation troubles many faculty members. "We don't know what she possibly does to earn the money," said Kathy Page, head of Stanly's general education department.

"Something doesn't look right," faculty chairman Gary Cattell said. "It's so disappointing to work so hard for so long and then find out that somebody has potentially not worked at all."

"I've worked as hard as anybody in the last five years to make this school what it is. I'm proud of the school and proud of the people who work here. At the same time, I want it to be right."

In an interview, Ms. Funderud denied that she was told to stay off campus. She said she works out of her home, recruiting students from Cabarrus County and part of Mecklenburg County. She wouldn't give details.

After The Charlotte Observer raised questions about her job, Stanly Board of Trustees Chairman Elbert Whitley Jr. said she is being reassigned to work from the college's Union County satellite campus, where she'll have daily supervision. And she'll be permitted on the Stanly campus.

He declined further comment about the situation.

But N.C. Community College System President Bob Scott said "it does appear irregular and seems to warrant the state auditor to look into it."

The school's president, Charles Byrd, 49, refused to meet with reporters and didn't respond to most written questions.

Ms. Funderud, 39, has worked at Stanly since 1980. She's been a marketing coordinator since 1982.

In The Balance

The East Has Stake In Open Market

The crashing end to the reign of Prime Minister Yasuhiro Uno will have a far-reaching impact on Japan and it will also be felt on the farms of eastern North Carolina.

The prime minister resigned after his Liberal Democratic party suffered an electoral defeat and lost control of Parliament. It ended 34 years of control by the Liberal Democrats.

Part of Uno's defeat was personal. The ire of newly liberated Japanese women was raised by allegations of extramarital affairs and maintaining a geisha. The women exercised their new-found clout and helped oust Uno.

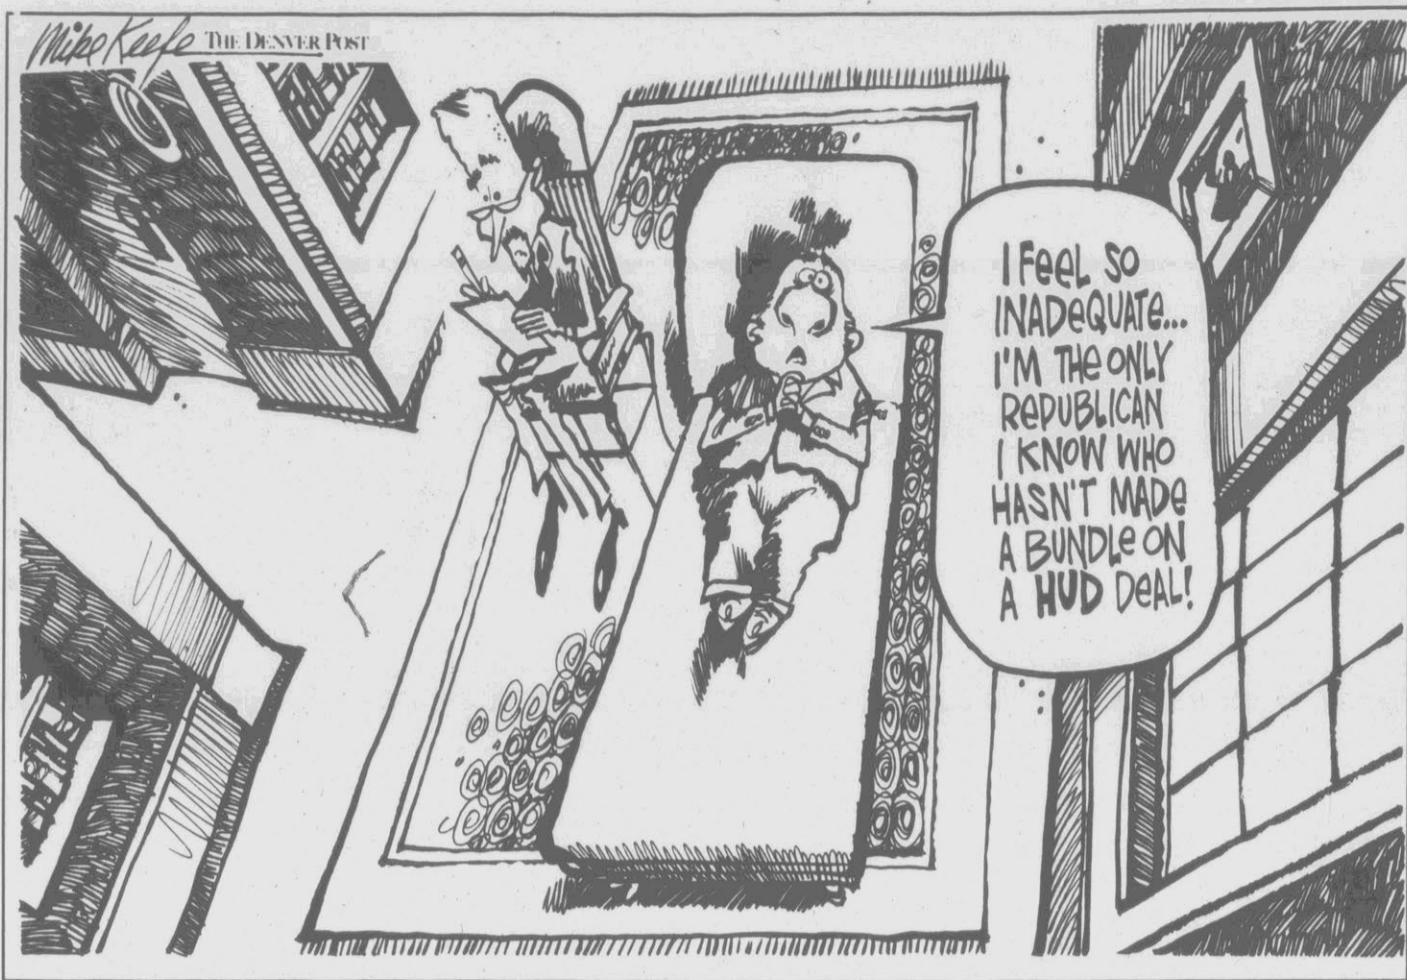

But the Japanese were also upset by a new 3 percent sales tax.

And what might affect eastern North Carolina most was the liberalization of agricultural imports. Japanese farmers have protested that his last move has affected their markets.

Whether a new government will stand behind the increasing of agricultural imports remains to be seen. If a new government adopts restrictive policies toward imports then American farmers will lose a recently opened market. Equally important the United States will lose an important lever for reducing the imbalance of trade between our country and Japan.

Japanese politicians undoubtedly now are attempting to determine how much Uno's downfall was due to scandal, and how much the sales tax and farm policies figured in it.

Thus economic relations between the two countries are uncertain. The United States can ill-afford to see a decrease in agricultural exports to Japan while imports of Japanese goods continue unabated. And for eastern North Carolina tobacco farmers an important potential market also hangs in the balance. The same is no doubt true for other segments of the United States' farm economy. It is important to the nation to keep this market open.

Settle For The Right Deed

WASHINGTON — The arguments about whether to cut the capital-gains tax are piled up on one of those plates of intellectual spaghetti served in Washington when the real reasons for doing or not doing something are gorgeously tangled and smothered beneath a sauce of politics.

The loyal opposition, the Democrats, are making opposition to the cut a test of party loyalty. Lenin once defined communism in terms of electrification of the countryside. North Korea is dotted with signs saying "Communism is Rice." Odd how hard it is to define political creeds. But not for the world's oldest party, the venerable Democrats. Rice is boring and America's countryside has been electrified, but being a Democrat means dying on the barricades in opposition to a capital-gains cut.

Of course, immutable principles are not. Imutable, that is, President Kennedy tried to cut the capital-gains rate. In 1978, President Carter signed a bipartisan cut. But in the 1988 campaign, which a grown-up could not watch without wincing, the idea of a capital-gains cut produced one of the few serious disagreements about something you could not salute or put in jail. So now the issue is highly charged with political meaning out of proportion to its importance.

Some Democrats, for whom "rich" is a four-letter word, believe that life is a zero-sum game in which anything that helps the rich hurts the rest. True, the rich have more capital and so have more capital gains. But people of modest means — down-at-the-heels Democrats who sell a house or a farm or a nest egg of securities — would benefit, sometimes more than the rich, relative to their total incomes.

However, the fear that the rich might be having fun is powerful. So Republicans, who understand greed (it is envy with its sleeves rolled up), should seduce Democrats, for whom envy is a political philosophy. Republicans should say, in a soothing tone of voice, this:

A cut would be, in the short run, progressive. (The word "progressive," in the context of taxes, especially, causes Democratic pulses to race.) The rich would rush to take lots of gains they otherwise would not take. Thus, there would be a gusher of revenues — billions — to the Treasury, easing restraints on domestic spending for the non-rich. And the gusher will help the next evasion of what are amusingly called the Gramm-Rudman deficit-reduction "requirements."

Richard Darman, master of the budget and designated thinker of the Bush administration, may use that argument to win the cut, but he should have the grace to blush. He recently delivered himself of a (this is not an oxymoron) sprightly jeremiad against "now-nowism," America's pandemic impatience and collective shortsightedness. Historically, he said, America has been future-oriented: an educating, investing, risk-taking, building society. But now we are "consuming the fruit of overplowed ground." There is such a thing as creative impatience, but our impatience is merely self-indulgence.

The budget deficit, which Darman calls "public policy wilding," is a "backward Robin Hood" transaction, robbing the future to give to the present. In a democracy, the future is always at a disadvantage relative to the present because the future's voters are not represented. However, today's deficit is an unusually reprehensible "expression of contempt" for those who will bear the burden of it. At $45,000 and rising for every family of four, the national debt is "like a second mortgage, but without the house."

Actually, the best argument for the capital-gains cut is future-oriented, but it cannot be uttered in polite society because it is elitist, as trickle-down arrangements must be. This argument is:

A restless, capital-acquiring, capital-moving elite makes the economy's motor hum, for the benefit of society generally, although not for all sectors of society equally. The increase in the capital-gains rate, as a trade-off in 1986 for reductions in personal income-tax rates, contributed to the continuing anemia of American investing, which is now the worst (relative to GNP) among industrial nations. Cutting the capital-gains rate would churn the economy. It would impart a general acceleration to the velocity of capital surging hither and yon in pursuit of the most productive investment. And let there be no nonsense about a "yo-yo" cut, down for a year or two, then back up. That would be to nakedly cynical in stealing from the future.

Would a cut work? Beats me. Worth a try? Sure, because the theory is plausible and the short-term revenue surge is certain. But let any Democrats who want to do so support the cut on the grounds that it will siphon revenues from the rich and help re-fill the social pork barrel.

Political moralists are forever quoting T.S. Eliot's silliness: "The last temptation is the greatest treason: To do the right deed for the wrong reason."

Rubbish. Settle for the right deed.

Europe's Iron Lady Finds Steely Match in EC Leader

By Leonard

BRUSSELS, Belgium — In its nearly 32 years of existence, the Commission of the European Community has had eight presidents. Nobody doubted that the first of these, West Germany's Walter Hallstein, was a great man. He led the community imperiously and well for nine years until 1967, when insuperable personality and policy clashes with French President Charles de Gaulle led to his resignation.

Only one other former president made much of a mark: the British Socialist Democrat, Roy Jenkins, who launched the European Monetary System during his four-year term, 1977-1981. The other half dozen ex-presidents may best be characterized as "worthy but dull."

The current incumbent, Jacques Delors, is half a year into his second four-year term. It has long been obvious that he was the strongest president since Hallstein. Since last month's historic EC summit at Madrid, when his plan to lead Europe into an economic and monetary union was endorsed by all 12 heads of government, including Britain's extremely reluctant Margaret Thatcher, it has been necessary to revise this estimate upwards. There is no doubt that Delors is the most creative and effective leader that the European Community has ever had.

It was largely an accident that he came to Brussels at all. In 1984, when he was first appointed, the member states were pretty well agreed that it was West Germany's "turn" for the presidency, and they looked to Chancellor Helmut Kohl to propose a suitable candidate. Kohl failed to oblige, and President Francois Mitterrand took advantage of the vacuum this created to head off a problem of internal rivalry in his Cabinet.

Delors, who had been his highly successful financial minister, was disappointed at being passed over for the premiership to a much younger man, Laurent Fabius. Fearing he would not get on, Mitterrand offered Delors the presidency, which he accepted with alacrity.

Now a youthful-looking 63, Delors has had an unusual career. The son of a minor official at the Banque de France, he followed his father into the bank and missed out on his university education in the process. He made up for this by studying philosophy and political science in evening classes, while working his way up from the bottom, simultaneously involving himself in the Roman Catholic trade union movement. He spent 17 years in the bank, then left to become head of the social-affairs department in the government planning commission. He subsequently spent five years as an adviser on social affairs to the Gaullist prime minister, Jacques Chaban-Delmas. It was not until he was 49 that he joined the Socialist Party, and the only election he has fought was for the European Parliament in 1979. He was fished out of Parliament to become finance minister two years later.

Delors was responsible for the austere financial policies that restored the equilibrium of the French economy after Mitterrand's ill-judged dash for growth following his first election in 1981. He also insisted that France should follow liberal trade policies within the EC rather than attempt the "fortress France" protectionism favored by some other Socialist ministers.

'The current incumbent, Jacques Delors, is half a year into his second four-year term. It has long been obvious that he was the strongest president since Hallstein. Since last month's historic EC summit at Madrid, when his plan to lead Europe into an economic and monetary union was endorsed by all 12 heads of government, including Britain's extremely reluctant Margaret Thatcher, it has been necessary to revise this estimate upwards. There is no doubt that Delors is the most creative and effective leader that the European Community has ever had.'

With this record behind him, he was initially very acceptable to the more right-wing EC leaders such as Kohl and Mrs. Thatcher, as well as to moderate Socialists such as Italy's Bettino Craxi and Spain's Felipe Gonzalez. He lost little time in restoring a sense of direction to the Community, which had been drifting for years in a sea of "Euro-pessimism." It was he who formulated the 1992 program for completing the EC's internal market, and he gave full backing to the former British commissioner, Lord Cockfield (later sacked by Mrs. Thatcher) who had the responsibility for its implementation.

A workaholic who is reputed to be in his Brussels office "from 8 a.m. when the Danes get to their desks until 10 p.m. when the Spaniards leave theirs," he nevertheless retains a range of outside interests. These include the cinema — a poster of "Citizen Kane" decorates his office wall — jazz (particularly Count Basie) and sport (cycle racing and football). In his younger days he played scrum-half at rugby. He lives modestly in a small apartment, a 10-minute walk from the EC headquarters, with his wife, Marie. Their only daughter is now married; their son was tragically killed in a road accident some years ago.

With his sharp analytical mind, Delors dominates the other 16 members of the EC Commission, and he now seems to have established a comparable ascendancy over the 12 heads of government, with the single exception of Mrs. Thatcher. She seems to have decided about a year ago that he was a dangerous Socialist firebrand who needed to be severely curbed. Many observers then predicted that Delors was heading for a fall.

But the Iron Lady's campaign badly misfired. She found no allies in the other member states, and her attempt to characterize Brussels' initiatives as "Socialism through the back door" was repudiated by many in her own Conservative Party. The party's defeat in last month's Euro-elections was almost universally attributed to the stridently anti-EC tone that she personally injected into the campaign.

It was, accordingly, a chastened Mrs. Thatcher who turned up at the Madrid summit, where she found that the effective choice facing her was to participate in preparations for a monetary and economic union, with eventually a European central bank and common currency, or watch the other 11 member states go ahead without her. A similar dilemma will face her at the next EC summit, at Strasbourg in December, when the other states will certainly endorse Delors' other current project — a social charter to buttress the 1992 program with new guarantees of workers' rights.

Mrs. Thatcher may still be able to delay Delors' plans and water them down. But it is clear that she has lost her battle to prevent the enlargement of EC competence to new fields formerly reserved to the different nation states.

As these competences grow, so inevitably will Delors' authority. He is set to become a dominant figure in European politics, and may well continue as commission president even beyond his second term, which ends in 1992. Unless, of course, he is summoned back to France as the obvious successor to Mitterrand. More and more Frenchmen are now convinced that this is what the future holds.

Here's A New Tax, But Where's The New State Revenue?

Paul
O'Connor

RALEIGH — It must be the legislative equivalent of a nightmare. You impose a new tax and take the political heat for doing so. But then the new tax doesn't generate any revenue for you to spend, so you don't receive the offsetting gratefulness of a thankful constituency.

That's what's happened last year when the General Assembly expanded the sales tax to cover interstate mail orders. The bill's sponsor anticipated as much as $54 million a year in new revenue — money that would have been most welcome in this tight revenue year — but little money is being collected, and all of that must go into a reserve account.

The U.S. Supreme Court has ruled that the states don't tax these sales because the tax would interfere, unconstitutionally, with interstate commerce. But that ruling came more than 20 years ago and many states want the court to review its decision. If the court will alter it, then states will have new leverage to force the catalog companies to collect the taxes. The catalog companies don't want to do this because they'd lose a price advantage they enjoy over local merchants.

Rep. George Miller, D-Durham, who proposed the tax, said he'd hoped that the high court would get the opportunity to make such a ruling when it handled a North Dakota case. But that case was settled out of court. Now the best hope is for Florida, which has a very strict tax collection law, to generate a lawsuit that would make it all the way to the Supreme Court.

There had been hope that the Congress would set up a mechanism for states to tax these sales and thus get around the whole concern about an interference with interstate commerce. But Miller says the chances for that development are much reduced now that the catalog companies have created a major lobbying push.)

Miller argues that the taxing of an interstate sale does not interfere with it. If the states tax interstate sales the same as they tax intrastate sales, then the tax should pass constitutional muster. He also asserts that the catalog companies, with their aggressive marketing strategies, have actually created a commercial presence within North Carolina. If the court would accept that assertion alone, then the state could force the catalog companies to collect the tax even under the old Supreme Court ruling.

The sales tax on catalog sales became North Carolina law in January, but Miller says collections have been quite small.

The N.C. Department of Revenue (DOR) is under-staffed and simply does not have the auditors and lawyers to pursue the large catalog sales companies. (It should be noted that some are voluntarily complying with state law. Just look at your record club's bill, for example. The money which comes in, however, is being put aside in a separate account and is not being budgeted.)

A tax amnesty bill which goes into effect later this year should help, Miller said. In addition to creating a period when taxpayers can come forward and pay delinquent taxes, the bill also puts new money into DOR. That money will be used to hire more auditors and examiners. Miller said he's been promised that some of those people will work on interstate catalog sales.

By the time that the 1991 General Assembly convenes, the Supreme Court may have had a chance to review the issue. Miller suspects that once that review is made, the legislature will have a new source of revenue to help pay the bills.

The Unanswered 'German Question'

Marc
Fisher

Mikhail Gorbachev sweeps into one capital after another preaching his vague but optimistic gospel of a "common European home." George Bush counters with rousing references to a "Europe whole and free."

The two leaders are speaking of the same hope, consolidation of a continent that emerged from World War II split into armed camps. Both presidents envision closer economic ties between East and West. Both expect political reforms to grow up along the eroding ideological divide.

Smack in the middle of all this lie the two Germans, one the dominant economic power in Western Europe, the other an increasingly solitary holdout against the reformist tide in the East.

Despite the obviously central role the Germans would play in a redefined Europe, neither superpower has defined how Bonn and East Berlin might fit in.

"The genuine opportunity exists for all of us to build a Europe which many thought was destroyed forever in the 1940s," Bush told the Polish Parliament earlier this month. "That Europe, the Europe of our children, will be open, whole and free."

The president's remarks "imply that Europe, including East Germany, should be free," said Robert Gerald Livingston, director of the American Institute for Contemporary German Studies at Johns Hopkins University. "But does it imply that the two Germans should be made whole again? That is left unsaid."

From the State Department to the corridors of the West German chancellery, diplomats and politicians agree that the vagueness is intentional. According to diplomats familiar with the planning of the president's trip to Eastern Europe, talk of German reunification was left out of Bush's texts to allow West Germany to take the lead on the issue and because reforms in the East have not progressed sufficiently to allow intelligent speculation on the future of the Germans.

"We're moving in very uncharted waters," said Pierre Shostal, director of the State Department's Office of Central European Affairs. "I think we're seeing the breakdown of an ideology, and any detailed prescription would be premature."

Yet the president and other U.S. politicians speaking on the "German Question" continue to call for the destruction of the Berlin Wall and eventual reunification. Today, despite decades of similar rhetoric from Bonn, such statements meet with an increasingly chilly reception in West Germany.

"All this talk of reunification is crazy nonsense," said Egon Bahr, a leader of the West German Social Democratic Party, which has only recently eased away from its long-held position in favor of reunification. "Both sides know it's not in the cards. The United States is the only country that could live with a united Germany because you are big and powerful enough to handle it. None of our neighbors want it. It is absolutely impossible for Gorbachev to give up" East Germany.

"Mr. Bush has the same difficulty explaining his united Europe as Mr. Gorbachev has explaining his common European home," Bahr said. "But one thing is clear: If you speak of European unity and West European economic union, you do not speaking of German unification."

West Germany has its own corollary to the Gorbachev and Bush slogans on Europe's future. It is Chancellor Helmut Kohl's "European peace order."

"We put the emphasis on reform, and the West Germans put the emphasis on engaging the East Germans, increasing human contacts — things that will help stabilize the regime," said a State Department official. "Our policy and theirs are potentially in conflict, but that's not inevitable. There is a middle ground."

"Bonn's approach is very German," Livingston said. "Their emphasis is on order. The last thing they want is a mess on their border."

Despite the vagueness of the president's concept, his approach has been welcomed as a recognition that the future of Europe will be defined to a great extent by those who live there. Bush is "the most European-oriented president there has been for years," said Joep de Boer, foreign affairs spokesman for Dutch Prime Minister Ruud Lubbers' Christian Democratic Appeal party. But de Boer found it necessary to take advantage of Bush's visit to the Netherlands to warn the president about the emergence of West German nationalism — an issue that has heightened European concern about Bonn's dominant role in the European Community.

A peculiar constraint has developed in West Germany, virtually paralyzing political debate on reunification. Under the West German constitution, the country is committed to reunification, but official statements on the topic have become less frequent and less emotional of late — "ritual incantations," U.S. diplomats call them.

If Bonn shies from supporting destruction of the Berlin Wall or from other actions that could destabilize East Germany, how does that jibe with the stated West German goal of reunification? "The West Germans themselves don't know what they want," Livingston said.

Nesbitt, right, talks Rep. Dan Blue, D-Wake, about veto issue

Liaison For Martin Predicts Veto Measure May Have House Votes

By F. Alan Boyce
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — A measure that would place the question of veto power for the governor before North Carolina voters will have enough votes to pass the House, predicted Gov. Jim Martin's legislative liaison.

Ward Purrington also said he hopes to have the measure amended so that a referendum could be held in time to let Martin be the first North Carolina governor to have the veto.

"This is a major campaign item for the governor for the past four years," Purrington said. "The people responded very favorably to the governor. The argument that you shouldn't increase the power of an office someone has been elected to doesn't hold water."

The constitutional amendment will likely come up for a House vote Wednesday. Purrington said supporters would have the necessary 72 votes to pass the amendment. A similar measure has passed the Senate.

Opponents in the House Judiciary Committee, particularly those displaced when House Speaker Joe Mavretic was elected by a coalition of Republicans and disenchanted Democrats, said the governor already has far too much power.

"The governor has virtually taken over the House with the coalition politics," said Rep. Martin Nesbitt, D-Buncombe, who backed former Speaker Liston Ramsey's losing reelection bid. "If anything was out of balance, it isn't anymore."

Democratic opponents of the veto amended the proposal in the House Judiciary Committee last week to postpone a vote until 1992, saying that would ensure greater voter turnout and would remove personalities from the issue.

But Purrington said it was Martin's personality that made it an issue in the first place.

"The people should be allowed to express at the ballot box what has been clearly expressed in public opinion polls," he said.

Purrington said there is no truth to the rumor that Martin would be just as satisfied to have the veto as a campaign issue as to actually wield the power.

"The governor is for that position," he said. "He very strongly believes that the governor should have the veto, as it is in every other state."

But Purrington added, "If he does not get it, it remains a very potent political issue."

Nesbitt said House members are not hiding from the veto issue, regardless of the political heat.

"It's going to be a campaign issue," he said. "Our delegation knows that better than anybody."

Nesbitt agreed that some opponents have worked to keep the matter off the floor.

"I don't think anybody wants to take a stand on a complicated issue unless they absolutely have to," he said.

Rest Home Fire Kills 1

NEW BERN (AP) — A resident of a New Bern rest home died in an early morning fire, and 10 others were taken to the hospital, officials said.

A fire was reported at the Mission Rest Home at 12:27 a.m. Sunday, according to New Bern Fire Chief Allen Broome. There were 26 residents at the home, he said.

The name of the victim was not released, pending notification of next of kin. Ten residents were taken to Craven County Hospital, and six were admitted, many for smoke inhalation. Five firefighters also went to the hospital, suffering from smoke inhalation and one was admitted, Broome said.

The cause of the fire, which started in a patient's room, was under investigation, Broome said. No cause had been determined Sunday night.

Broome said the residents were evacuated in an orderly fashion and were taken to a nearby church, where cots had been set up. Some residents went to stay with family members.

was taken to Wake Medical Center, where she was listed in critical condition Sunday night.

Police said they had a suspect in the shooting but had not made an arrest. Investigators cordoned off the school area Sunday afternoon to search for evidence.

Police said that three people leaving a church meeting held at the school's gymnasium found Ms. Gorham lying on the ground near the rear of the school.

Ms. Gorham apparently was shot late Saturday night. Police said they weren't sure whether she had been shot at the school.

Police said Ms. Gorham told the ambulance crew that she knew her attacker, but that she was in shock and unable to provide them with details of the incident.

Carlton Blalock Giving Up Post With Tobacco Group

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — When Carlton Blalock retires from the Tobacco Growers Association of North Carolina today he will leave behind an example his successor says will be hard to follow.

"It's going to be a tough pair of shoes to wear because he was a super leader," said Charles A. Harvey. "He has great depth to his thinking. He's a good analyzer and planner."

Blalock, 64, is the only paid staffer ever to work for the association, a statewide group of tobacco growers and supporters formed under his guidance in 1981. He is credited with helping devise the 1986 reform of the federal tobacco program and will leave behind a market and product that he says are strong enough to survive.

"It was a mess," Blalock said of the federal tobacco program. "The program was on a dead-end collision course. It would have bankrupted itself in a few years."

But the reforms pushed by the Tobacco Growers Association worked, he said. "The net return to the grower at the warehouse has gone up over the past two years, and I think it will go up again this year," he told The Fayetteville Observer.

Blalock said foreign countries are willing to pay premium prices for good American cigarettes, so if growers keep up the quality of their leaf they will have a foreign market. Blalock grew up on a tobacco farm in Wilson County, but did not work directly with the tobacco industry until he retired as director of the state agriculture extension service in 1981.

"I started out with the (tobacco) association with the idea that maybe I'd work two or three years with them, then retire," Blalock said. "There just didn't seem to be a good time to turn loose."

Finally, he said, he felt the association and the tobacco industry were in such good shape that he could leave without having a guilty conscience.

"The current board of directors of this association is the strongest I've ever worked with, and I've known a lot of them in 40 years of working in agriculture," Blalock said. "I feel real comfortable leaving it in this situation."

Jackson For Mayor?

CHARLOTTE (AP) — Jesse Jackson wouldn't say whether he would run for mayor of Washington, but the subject kept coming up during a weekend visit to Charlotte.

Jackson, a former presidential candidate, said his family began moving from Chicago on Friday. He already had announced that his National Rainbow Coalition would relocate from Chicago next week.

"We have moved to Washington as a family and as one rainbow coalition," Jackson said. "We're moving to Washington ... under the presumption that Washington requires that kind of time, that kind of focus."

About 250 people, including Jackson's mother and grandmother, crowded into a banquet room to hear his speech to the North Carolina Black Leadership Caucus of Charlotte on Saturday.

Holshouser Says He Didn't Profit From HUD Deals

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — Former N.C. Gov. Jim Holshouser said that even though he and two political aides received loan guarantees from the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development he did not make a lot of money on the deals.

"If the bottom-line question is, have we really cleaned up, the answer is clearly 'No,'" Holshouser said.

HUD insured loans totaling $18.7 million for Holshouser and two political aides to develop land in three cities: Wilmington, Cary, N.C., and Huntsville, Ala. Holshouser, who was governor from 1973 to 1977, said he didn't know if his political connections had helped in obtaining the money.

Congress is investigating the use of political influence by prominent Republicans nationwide in connection with various HUD programs. Earlier this month, department Secretary Jack F. Kemp suspended the Title X program, which assists land developers, saying it was "riddled with abuse" and that it "appears overwhelmingly to benefit up-scale developers and the consultants they hire."

The former governor employed Louis L. Kitchin, a key campaign leader for former President Ronald Reagan in the South in 1980, as a consultant to help him apply for loan insurance under the agency's now-suspended Title X program.

In an interview last week with The News and Observer of Raleigh, Holshouser said of Kitchin: "I always thought that there were certain things a consultant could do that were worth the money, in terms of helping you and advising you. But I never viewed him as one who could make legal barriers go away. He might have done that for somebody else, but I don't think he did it for us."

The three projects in which Holshouser had an interest have been sold to various investors who now are in default on the HUD-backed loans.

Kitchin said he never improperly used his political connections to help clients obtain subsidies or loan guarantees from HUD.

"I am totally proud of everything I've done" in the housing area, he said.

Kitchin said his standard fee was 1 percent of the loan, which would have been about $187,000 for the three Holshouser projects.

Holshouser said he knew Kitchin because of the consultant's work in presidential campaigns.

"I knew he was doing some work with HUD and, you know, what he basically told me was that ... it could take two, two and a half years for the paperwork to get done," Holshouser said. "I'd call maybe once every three or four weeks, say, 'Am I doing this right?' this sort of thing. If I'd hit a snag, I'd say, 'What do I do about this?'"

"As far as I know, he didn't pull any strings as far as contacting people," Holshouser said.

L. Gene Anderson, who managed Holshouser's 1972 gubernatorial campaign and later served as his top assistant, and Joseph R. Balak Jr., who was the governor's driver during the campaign and was later employed in his administration, also were investors in the three projects, according to Holshouser.

Other investors in the Cary project included two of Holshouser's former Cabinet members: George W. Little, who was secretary of natural and economic resources, and Donald R. Beason, who was secretary of commerce and is now a lobbyist for Gov. Jim Martin.

Holshouser said he had made $30,000 to $40,000 on the Cary project, in which he had a 3.75 percent interest, HUD records show. Holshouser said he had owned 12.5 percent of the Wilmington project and 25 percent of the project in Alabama and he had made no profit on them. He said he stands to lose money on those two developments if the new owners are unable to pay loans he had personally guaranteed.

"I hate to have people realize how poorly we came out in these deals," he said.

Payments on all the HUD-insured loans for the projects are in default, and lenders have turned over the Cary and Huntsville loans to HUD because the current owners are so far behind on payments.

The federal government hasn't lost money on the three deals and it might not. The new owners may be able to sell the remaining property and pay off the loans, or HUD may foreclose and sell the property itself.

William R. Henderson, a Raleigh developer who had a 50 percent interest in the Cary and Wilmington projects and who is still a part owner of both, said he might lose money on them, but that HUD probably would not.

"If I was in a buying mood today, I'd be glad to pick up both properties at what the loan is," he said.

Wildfires Continue To Rage In Western States

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS
 Ranchers fled their homes and turned livestock loose on the range as a raging forest fire advanced on a sparsely populated rural area in Oregon. Meanwhile, hundreds of wildfires raged out of control in Idaho and California.
 Hundreds of western wildfires — most caused by lightning last week — have destroyed about 90,000 acres in five states since Wednesday.

 In Idaho's Boise National Forest, three blazes exploded into a single firestorm overnight Saturday, generating cyclonic winds and outracing firefighters, destroying 25 buildings in the resort hamlet of Lowman.

The Oregon blaze, near Baker and about 50 miles from the Idaho border, grew from about 5,000 acres on Saturday to at least 14,000 acres Sunday, officials said.
 "You look out the window here and there's columns of smoke in every direction," Kathy Aplin, a spokeswoman for the Oregon Department of Forestry in Baker, said Sunday evening.

 Evacuation of about 30 families in the area began Saturday night.
 Ken Dunleavy, a spokesman for the Baker County sheriff, said ranchers cut fences and opened gates to allow their cattle and sheep to escape as flames threatened grazing lands.
 "They're trying to get their livestock out of there like crazy," he said.

 About 1,200 firefighters battled the fire, which jumped state Highway 245, closing the road.
 An air tanker dropped fire retardant on one ranch home, and a bulldozer plowed a firebreak through the front yard of another.
 About 2,000 firefighters fought at least four other major forest fires and several smaller blazes in eastern Oregon. One fire threatened the watershed that serves as the main water supply for La Grande, a community of 11,435 people in north-eastern Oregon. In all, fire burned about 27,000 acres in Oregon in recent days.

Elsewhere, hundreds of wildfires engulfed more than 23,000 acres of tinder-dry forest and range land in central and southern Idaho. About 39,000 acres of Idaho land has burned in the latest fires, officials said.
 About 400 firefighters, aided by bulldozers and a helicopter, struggled to halt flames burning in Lowman, about 60 miles northeast of Boise. But national forest spokesman Pat Entwistle said they were too late to prevent the fire from destroying much of the small mountain community.
 Among the 25 buildings destroyed late Saturday was the Haven Lodge, a popular retreat in the town of about 150 people.
 No injuries were reported. Firefighters lost one of four tanker trucks while fighting the blaze Saturday, and Entwistle said a 25-mile portion of Highway 21, the main route into Lowman, was closed Sunday.
 The fires grew to 10,000 acres at midday Sunday, from 1,200 acres the day before.
 In the central Sierra Nevada foothills of California, investigators said an arsonist lit a fire that has raged out of control for three days, destroying seven homes and filling the area around Auberry with thick smoke.

 The "Powerhouse" fire, about 200 miles east of San Francisco, also destroyed 16 outbuildings and scorched 11,350 tinder-dry acres.
 By late Sunday, about 1,900 firefighters had encircled 60 percent of the blaze and expected full containment by 6 p.m. today. Three firefighters were injured, none seriously.
 Meanwhile, some of the 2,500 people forced to evacuate the area were allowed back to their homes. Many roads remained closed.

In southern California, a 5,000-acre wildfire in the Cleveland National Forest was 40 percent contained on Sunday, while a 1,200-acre brush fire northwest of Los Angeles forced about 100 residents to evacuate. The brush fire later moved into an old toxic waste dumping ground.
 About 760 firefighters saved 11 homes and structures in the Cleveland forest blaze Sunday, said U.S. Forest Service spokeswoman Rosalinda Ewen. A house and a travel trailer were destroyed.

In Washington, a forest fire in the northern Cascade mountains was held to 800 acres Sunday. Firefighters reported the blaze in the Okanogan National Forest 55 percent contained, said U.S. Forest Service spokesman Greg Thayer.
 In western Montana, near the Idaho state line, lightning set several dozen small fires over the weekend. Timber was so damp, though, that firefighters quickly had most of the blazes under control.

Exxon Valdez Set For Repairs

By Dennis Georgatos
 THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SAN DIEGO — The crippled tanker Exxon Valdez arrived in San Diego Bay for repairs and possibly a name change four months after its disastrous oil spill fouled Alaskan waters and miles of coastline.

"Everything went like clockwork. It was a piece of cake," said Capt. Edward J. Silva Jr., the senior harbor pilot who brought the Valdez in Sunday.
 Tugboats nudged the ship to a pier at the National Steel and Shipbuilding Co. for a nine-month, $25 million repair job, ending a 2,500-mile trek from Prince William Sound.

The docking closed a chapter in a grim environmental saga that began when the 970-foot ship rammed Bligh Reef in Alaska's Prince William Sound on March 24.

The hull tore open and about 11 million gallons of crude gushed into the sound. Thousands of animals were killed and miles of coastline were stained. The cleanup continues.

When an 18-mile oil slick coincided with the Valdez's arrival off California on July 10, the Coast Guard barred the ship from the harbor.

Tests from slick samples revealed degraded North Slope Alaskan crude and concentrations of marine organisms that inhabited the shredded cargo tanks.

Coast Guard Lt. Larry Solberg said no further discharges were spotted Sunday.

Exxon Shipping Co. President Frank Iarossi continued to deny the Valdez was responsible for the earlier slick and at least two others off the coast, as charged by state Department of Fish and Game officials.

"There was no oil on that ship. People are losing sight of that fact," he said.

Reed Smith, a Fish and Game department response coordinator, said he was not impressed with the denial.

"How do you discuss with him how to prevent more oil spills when he's not admitting he had one at all?" Smith said.

Hundreds of people watched from shore as the Valdez entered the bay and rounded North Island, sailing past waterfront hotels and Navy warships.

Coast Guard and Harbor Patrol boats guarded a security zone around the tanker. Ships with pollution containment and salvage equipment followed.

Greenpeace boats shadowed the vessel. Activist Kelly Quirk said Greenpeace was protesting "a fossil-fuel energy policy that is not only destroying the ocean but the atmosphere."

The Valdez will be moved to dry dock after an underwater survey of damage. Iarossi said 30 percent of the hull is either gone or cannot rest on the blocks that usually hold up a vessel in dry dock.

Iarossi also disclosed that Exxon may try to remove the stigma from the ship by changing its name.

"Rechristening wouldn't be in order, but we are considering whether we should start a new career for the vessel with a new name," he said.

The repair job stirred excitement at the shipyard, which expects to add 300 people and boost its work force to 3,000.

Ship's Capt. Tom Hill said that getting the crippled vessel into port was an accomplishment enough.

"We did everything humanly possible to save this ship without impacting the environment," he said.

Under an agreement with state agencies, the Valdez had to be leak-free for 24 hours prior to entry and accompanied by a pollution response vessel.

Exxon put $20 million in a bond and a trust account to cover cleanup costs in the event of a spill in local waters.

Planes Hit; 7 Killed

ALLENTOWN, Pa. (AP) — Two small airplanes collided only moments after one had dropped parachutists at a hot air balloon festival, and all seven people aboard the planes were killed, authorities said.

One person on the ground was injured slightly from falling debris, officials said.

The planes collided Sunday over a shopping mall about a mile southwest of the Queen City Airport, which was hosting the balloon festival.

Senate Eyes A Defense Bill Similar To President's Plan

By Donna Cassata
 THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The Senate is aiming for a defense bill that closely resembles the blueprint sought by President Bush, unlike the House version that rips apart the administration's strategic weapons programs.

In a rush to complete its work before the recess that begins Friday, Congress tackles a full plate of appropriations bills this week with the Senate trying to produce a defense package that serves as a counterbalance to the House version.

In final action late Thursday, the Democratic-controlled House approved a $295 billion defense bill that severely curtails production of the B-2 stealth bomber, slashes $1.8 billion from the Star Wars budget and restores two planes — the F-14D Tomcat jet fighter and V-22 Osprey — that Bush planned to kill.

The last cut came as Alabama Republican William Dickinson joined forces with Massachusetts liberal Democrat Barney Frank and succeeded in eliminating all $100 million earmarked for the Midgetman missile.

"Yesterday was not the House's most memorable moment," Bush told reporters Friday. "But we're going to keep fighting on for what we believe in."

The president said he is counting on the Senate to produce a bill that keeps White House defense priorities in order. The chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, Democrat Sam Nunn of Georgia, has given every indication he will do that.

"We are watching the strategic position of the administration unwind step by step on the floor of the House," Nunn said Thursday night as the House stripped all money for the Midgetman. "It is important that we not emasculate this program."

"If the Senate does not come out with a reasonable budget on all strategic programs, then we are going to be going to conference in a hopeless situation," he added.

To date, the Senate has followed the administration's line, approving an amendment that largely endorses the B-2 bomber program and makes a modest cut of $300 million from Bush's $4.7 billion B-2 request.

On Thursday, the Senate narrowly turned aside an amendment to freeze research and development of the Star Wars anti-missile shield. Bush has requested $4.9 billion for the Star Wars program.

Bush also expressed the administration's desire to work with the chairman of the House Armed Services Committee, Democrat Les Aspin of Wisconsin, who "does not want to see the defense bill gutted," according to the president.

Prior to committee action on the bill, Aspin urged his Democratic and Republican colleagues to accept Defense Secretary Dick Cheney's procurement budget without any add-ons.

"While the budget may not be perfect, it's a darn good product — especially given the 39 days Dick Cheney had to put it together," Aspin had told the procurement subcommittee, which narrowly accepted the chairman's argument.

But shortly after the House voted 261-162 to adopt the defense bill, Aspin assessed the situation.

"We got a Michael Dukakis defense bill," the Wisconsin Democrat told reporters, referring to the Massachusetts governor who lost the 1988 presidential election to Bush.

"No Midgetman. No rail MX ... Big cuts in SDI, and slow up the B-2 bomber," Aspin said in reference to Dukakis' campaign pledges.

House and Senate conferees will meet after the August recess to craft a final defense bill, which also includes $10 billion for the Department of Energy for a $305 billion package.

Another Armed Services panel member, Rep. John Spratt, D-S.C., said too much was being made of the House version which was merely a "position in the process."

In other action this week:

—The Senate Judiciary Committee is expected to vote Tuesday on the nomination of William Lucas as the nation's chief civil rights enforcer. Bush's choice for the post has come under attack from the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and other civil rights groups, who complain that Lucas lacks experience.

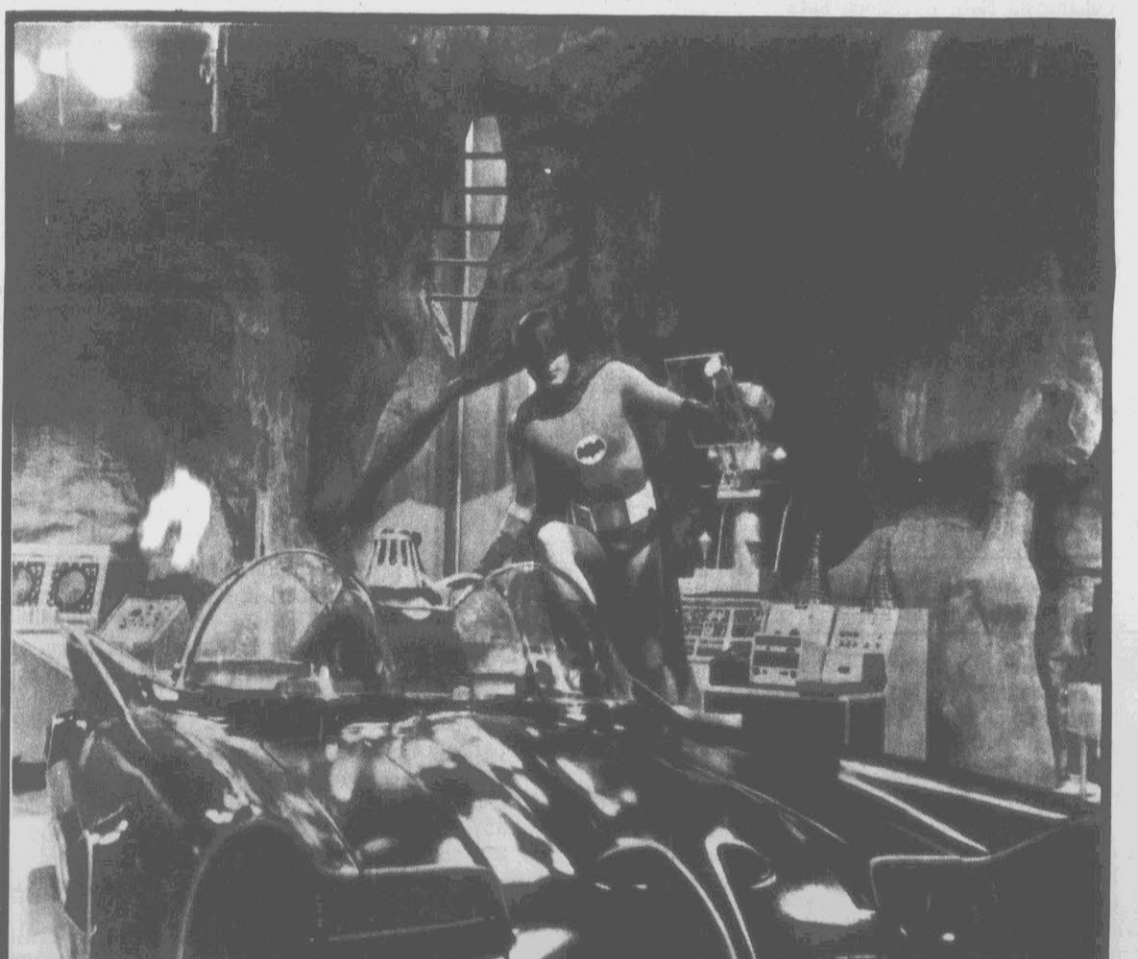

—The House and Senate consider bills expanding the government's borrowing authority through Oct. 31 by $70 billion. The amount is a temporary extension of the $2.8 trillion debt ceiling.

17 Killed As Rockets Hit Areas In Kabul

By Edith M. Lederer THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

KABUL, Afghanistan — Rebel rockets hit a hospital, a crowded bus stop and a bicycle factory today, killing at least 17 people and injuring 16, hospital officials and U.N. sources said.

One rocket hit the railings outside U.S.-built Avicenna Hospital, showering shrapnel onto a passing mini-bus and pedestrians and shattering windows in the hospital, witnesses said.

A second rocket dug a crater at the edge of a bus stop about 100 yards away, spraying shrapnel on a bus and nearby shops, eyewitnesses said.

A third rocket hit a bicycle assembly plant in eastern Kabul, killing nine people, U.N. sources said, speaking on condition of anonymity.

Dr. Mohammad Basir Hasan, president of Avicenna Hospital, said eight people died and 16 were injured in the attacks on the hospital and bus stop. Some victims were believed to have been taken to other hospitals.

Among the dead was the hospital's pharmacist, Haji Sher Mohammad, who was riding to work on his bicycle, Hasan said.

At the bus stop, crowds gathered later around a hastily dug grave at the side of a shop, where parts of the victims' bodies had been buried. On top was one torn black leather shoe and a chunk of metal from the rocket.

In front of the crater was the mangled wood and straw remains of what witnesses said was a stall that sold chocolate and other sweets. U.S.-backed guerrillas are fighting to overthrow the Soviet-backed Marxist government.

The casualties raised to at least 200 the number of people killed in rocket attacks on the capital this month.

Foreign Ministry spokesman Mohammad Nabi Amani on Saturday accused the guerrillas of increasing rocket attacks on Kabul to "have something in their hand" for the start of U.S.-Soviet talks on Afghanistan in Stockholm today.

Soviet troops withdrew from Afghanistan this year under a U.N.-sponsored accord after a nine-year intervention to prop up the pro-Soviet regime.

Sakharov, Yeltsin Chosen To Lead Opposition Group

By Mark J. Porubcansky THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOSCOW — Andrei D. Sakharov, picked to help lead a new opposition coalition in the Soviet Congress, says the nation's "empire-like" structure must be dismantled to end a wave of ethnic unrest.

Sakharov and populist Boris N. Yeltsin were among five lawmakers chosen Sunday to lead a 390-member faction in the 2,250-member Congress of People's Deputies. It is the first Soviet opposition coalition in 70 years.

Yeltsin, a former alternate member of the ruling Politburo who has remade himself into a populist reformer, won the most votes among 13 candidates for the five-member governing board of the Inter-regional Deputies' Group.

The group gave itself the bland name in part to allay suspicions it is an opposition party in a country where the Communist Party has been the only legal party since the early 1920s.

On Sunday, when the group was to work out its program, it managed to agree only on calls for several parliamentary commissions.

They include commissions to investigate responsibility for the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan and to study ethnic unrest in the republic of Uzbekistan in December 1986.

In an interview published Sunday in the weekly Ogonyok magazine, Sakharov reiterated his respect for President Mikhail S. Gorbachev but said the country is on the verge of economic catastrophe and that he considers a military or right-wing coup a possibility.

Sakharov said the Soviet Union must tear down the centrally controlled system built by Josef Stalin and start all over again.

"Our starting point is a forced, empire-like structure and we cannot dismantle it partially. It has to be done completely and reassemble the pieces into a whole new structure," the popular weekly quoted him as saying.

The 15 Soviet republics and other homelands set aside for the Soviet Union's more than 100 ethnic groups "should get independence to the maximum degree," Sakharov was quoted as saying.

"Their sovereignty should have the minimal limits of common defense, foreign policy, transport and communications," he added.

About 390 Congress deputies, including most of the best-known political and economic reformers, have joined the new group. About 260 of them took part in a two-day meeting that ended Sunday, but by Sunday afternoon just 155 were around to take part in the voting.

Yeltsin received 144 votes for the governing board, followed by historian Yuri Afanasyev with 143, economist Gavriil Popov with 132, scholar Viktor Palm from Estonia with 73 and Sakharov, human rights activist and winner of the 1975 Nobel Peace Prize, with 69.

Yeltsin said he did not foresee the group eventually becoming a majority in the Congress, which was elected this spring in the country's first contested elections in seven decades.

He said the group "was created for the protection of the minority," adding that "the minority is now organized and solid enough, and we will help fight for each other's positions."

picked to lead the party because of his experience, international stature and "He is a very good fighter ... and wants to change the situation so that the party will get up from its knees."

The opposition newspaper Gazeta Wyborcza noted today that in the Soviet Union "110 morally and physically worn-out members of the Central Committee" recently were retired, while in Poland, Kubasiewicz and Gorywoda were promoted.

The newspaper also sharply criticized the food price plan, calling on authorities and legislators to "put everything in order" or things will "blow up..."

Chileans OK Reforms

By Eduardo Gallardo THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SANTIAGO, Chile — The government and opposition both say the voters' decision to approve a package of far-reaching constitutional reforms will help revive democracy after 16 years of military rule.

But the opposition is promising to push for more reforms, including a clause that would prevent Gen. Augusto Pinochet from continuing to run the army after he steps down as president next year.

The 54 reforms approved Sunday included amendments that would lift a ban on Marxist activities, end political exile and reduce the powers of the president.

The government said the final tally was 5,735,032 million votes in favor and 550,888 against, meaning 85.7 percent of the voters approved of the amendments. Void and blank votes totaled 408,868.

Government officials and opposition leaders said approval of the 54 reforms, which were the result of an unprecedented agreement between the military regime and its foes, should help stabilize the political system.

Pinochet, in a speech on national radio and television late Sunday, called the vote "historic" and said the amended constitution is "the most efficient way to consolidate an authentically democratic system."

Opposition leaders, while insisting that further reforms are needed, praised those passed Sunday as a step toward the restoration of full democracy.

Patricio Aylwin, the opposition candidate to succeed Pinochet in national elections set for Dec. 14, said "the reforms will make the task easier for the future government to rebuild democracy, and will aid to the reconciliation among Chileans."

Aylwin, favored by most opinion polls to win the election, said Sunday's vote also showed "that the people want agreement among Chileans rather than confrontation," a reference to the fact that the reforms were agreed upon by the government and the opposition.

Aylwin and other opposition leaders said they would seek other constitutional changes after voters choose a new congress in the Dec. 14 elections. The new government would take office March 11.

One of the main changes approved Sunday would make it easier for congress to effect further constitutional reforms, which could aid the opposition plans.

Pinochet, however, has made clear he is not prepared to easily allow more changes to the constitution, which was written by his military regime.

Vietnam Returns Soldiers' Remains

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BANGKOK, Thailand — Vietnam today gave a U.S. military team what may be the remains of 15 American soldiers killed in the Vietnam War, an official Vietnamese radio broadcast said.

A representative of Vietnam's Office For Seeking Missing Personnel gave the remains to the team from the U.S. Joint Casualty Resolution Center, the Voice of Vietnam reported.

The broadcast, monitored in Bangkok, said it was the 25th repatriation since March 1974, and 391 sets of remains have been returned in all.

In the past, remains have been returned in a U.S. military ceremony at Hanoi's Noi Bai Airport and then flown to an Army laboratory in Hawaii for analysis.

Vietnam returned what it believed to be the remains of 28 Americans on June 21. It has stepped up repatriations since an August 1987 agreement in which the United States pledged to help Vietnam seek humanitarian aid.

A spokesman for the U.S. Embassy in Bangkok, Jim Williams, said U.S. experts were also to begin today their seventh joint search to account for missing Americans. Their effort is to last 15 to 20 days.

The experts are from the Joint Casualty Resolution Center and the Army Central Identification Laboratory, both based in Hawaii. They are to search crash sites in the Vietnamese countryside and interview villagers with the cooperation of the Vietnamese Office for Seeking Missing Personnel. Remains have been recovered on previous joint searches.

About 2,350 Americans are listed as missing from the war that pitted the South Vietnamese government and its U.S. ally against communist forces from the north. The war ended in a communist victory in April 1975.

Vietnam also has stepped up cooperation on other humanitarian issues as part of what U.S. analysts describe as efforts to improve the climate for establishing diplomatic ties with the United States.

On Sunday, the United States and Vietnam announced an agreement for former political prisoners and their families to be resettled in the United States, with the first group of 3,000 expected to leave this year. The U.S. government had sought this program since 1982.

After the communist victory, hundreds of thousands of people were put into the camps for manual labor and political study because of their ties with the old regime.

Two Are Executed

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BEIJING — Authorities executed two men who allegedly killed two people and stole guns while robbing a home during this spring's pro-democracy protests, a report in the official media said.

The government also said Communist Party committees met nationwide during the weekend to discuss how to implement an anti-corruption order. Ending official corruption was a key demand of the pro-democracy movement.

A brief report by the official Xinhua News Agency late Sunday identified the executed men as Yu Chunting and Guo Zhenghua of the central city of Wuhan.

It said they killed a pregnant woman and a girl while robbing a home during the "turmoil" of the student-led protests.

The government has attempted to portray the protesters as common criminals and has tried to link any non-political crimes committed during the upheaval to the protesters in order to discredit them.

Poles Rush To Fill Cupboards Before Controls On Prices End

By John Daniszewski THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WARSAW, Poland — Panicky Poles stood in lines for hours today to stock up on supplies of meat and sugar the day before the government ends price controls and sends costs soaring.

Also today, it was announced that Interior Minister Gen. Czeslaw Kiszczak has been chosen the ruling Communist Party's candidate to become prime minister and head the next government.

Kiszczak, who represented the government in the April talks that led to the reinstatement of Solidarity and a series of democratic reforms, was picked by the Communist Party Central Committee on Saturday, the state-run PAP news service said.

Newly appointed party chief Mieczyslaw F. Rakowski appeared before Communist lawmakers today to urge Kiszczak's candidacy, PAP said.

President Wojciech Jaruzelski was expected to formally nominate Kiszczak, his confidant, to parliament later today, assuming the candidacy did not meet opposition within the Communist coalition.

If the coalition agrees on Kiszczak, his election would be assured because it holds a 299-161 edge in the Sejm, parliament's lower house.

Meanwhile, consumers stood in line for hours to buy meat and sugar before price controls and rationing are lifted Tuesday and costs soar.

The controversial food price move was endorsed by Rakowski, but criticized by the Solidarity free trade union movement and some Communist economists.

A critic of the plan, Politburo member Wladyslaw Baka, said it could raise food prices fourfold and turn the public against reforms unless it is introduced more cautiously. Baka lost a policy fight to delay the plan at the weekend Central Committee plenum.

Long lines formed in front of grocery stores in the capital today, with people reporting standing in line two hours to buy 2.2 pounds of sugar — the maximum allowed. Lines for low-cost rationed meat were even longer.

The plan to eliminate meat rationing and price controls to encourage farmers to produce more underlines the growing complexity of Poland's political changes.

Rakowski, a pragmatist who gathered support from party conservatives to win election as party chief on Saturday, supports the bold reform step and got the party to endorse it.

Solidarity, the main opposition, backs the reform generally but opposes it now because it feels the groundwork has not been laid. It fears that when the already-high food prices rise they will fuel unrest and could lead to strikes.

Communist party spokesman Janusz Bisztyga, discussing the election today, said Rakowski was

Chileans OK Reforms

By Eduardo Gallardo THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SANTIAGO, Chile — The government and opposition both say the voters' decision to approve a package of far-reaching constitutional reforms will help revive democracy after 16 years of military rule.

But the opposition is promising to push for more reforms, including a clause that would prevent Gen. Augusto Pinochet from continuing to run the army after he steps down as president next year.

The 54 reforms approved Sunday included amendments that would lift a ban on Marxist activities, end political exile and reduce the powers of the president.

The government said the final tally was 5,735,032 million votes in favor and 550,888 against, meaning 85.7 percent of the voters approved of the amendments. Void and blank votes totaled 408,868.

Government officials and opposition leaders said approval of the 54 reforms, which were the result of an unprecedented agreement between the military regime and its foes, should help stabilize the political system.

Pinochet, in a speech on national radio and television late Sunday, called the vote "historic" and said the amended constitution is "the most efficient way to consolidate an authentically democratic system."

Opposition leaders, while insisting that further reforms are needed, praised those passed Sunday as a step toward the restoration of full democracy.

Patricio Aylwin, the opposition candidate to succeed Pinochet in national elections set for Dec. 14, said "the reforms will make the task easier for the future government to rebuild democracy, and will aid to the reconciliation among Chileans."

Aylwin, favored by most opinion polls to win the election, said Sunday's vote also showed "that the people want agreement among Chileans rather than confrontation," a reference to the fact that the reforms were agreed upon by the government and the opposition.

Aylwin and other opposition leaders said they would seek other constitutional changes after voters choose a new congress in the Dec. 14 elections. The new government would take office March 11.

One of the main changes approved Sunday would make it easier for congress to effect further constitutional reforms, which could aid the opposition plans.

Pinochet, however, has made clear he is not prepared to easily allow more changes to the constitution, which was written by his military regime.

Island's Elusive Stars A Delight To Tourists

By Randy Kraft
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

ASSATEAGUE ISLAND NATIONAL SEASHORE, Md. — When seen in a farmer's pasture or at a country fair, ponies don't rate a second glance from most adults.

They are too domestic, too ordinary.

But at Assateague Island National Seashore, off the coasts of Maryland and Virginia, ponies are elusive stars.

They are wild animals in an exotic location. And, although it is hard to believe it because they look so gentle, they are dangerous. A frequent sight on the island are signs reading: "Wild ponies bite and kick. Keep your distance. Do not feed."

Still, they are a welcome sight to many.

"You can see horses anywhere," remarked one skeptic who recently visited the island.

"But not wild ones!" responded his 11-year-old niece.

Wild horses, insisted her 8-year-old brother, "are more prettier."

Assateague is visited by many people vacationing in nearby Ocean City, Md., back on the mainland. The national seashore's visitors center is only nine miles from town, and the island is reachable by bridge from there. Admission: $3 per car.

"With luck, you will see ponies during your visit," states a sign at the visitors center.

During a recent rainy morning, a park ranger at the center advised visitors that 150 ponies roamed about 20 miles of island. Since most visitors see only a tiny portion of the island, the odds of spotting a pony were great.

But visitors were in for a pleasant surprise that day. Not only did they see a couple of ponies, but they got much closer to the animals than they expected.

Both were just off a short path. Only a low snow fence separated the people and the horses.

"Mom, I'm scared. What if he jumps over the fence?" a boy asked his mother. His dad replied: "I'd throw you to the pony and I'd run."

While a brown pony grazed, a spotted one barely moved. It looked statuesque, bravely poised atop the highest dune with its back to the ocean.

"He looks fake," one youngster said. "Yeah," agreed his dad, "a little motor in his behind makes his tail move."

Another visitor said the pony was sleeping standing up. When she made a sound like a horse, it laid down.

"They may not get to see the ponies as well as they would like, but most visitors do get to see them," said Larry Points, chief naturalist at the national seashore.

Two herds live on the narrow, 37-mile-long island. They are separated by a fence at the Maryland-Virginia boundary. More than half the island is in Maryland.

Pine forests provide shelter for ponies and other wildlife. Some visitors spot whitetail deer and Sika deer, small oriental elk released on the island in 1923.

The ponies are descended from domestic stock grazed on Assateague by colonial farmers as early as the 17th Century. The island served as a natural corral. There are legends that the first tough little ponies to inhabit it were shipwreck survivors. But the National Park Service says no documented evidence has been found to support those claims.

The ponies are smaller than other horses because of the harsh environment and low nutrition of salt marsh grasses. They even eat poison ivy. They may look fat because of their diet and the large amount of water they consume. The salty diet makes them drink twice as much as domestic horses.

And although they are cute enough, the ponies are indeed wild; they take care of themselves without the help of people.

One of the biggest problems is visitors who refuse to believe the ponies are wild. Every year at least 10 people report getting kicked or bitten so severely they required hospitalization. Points believes many more cases go unreported.

While most people visit the island specifically to see the ponies, others go just to enjoy its uncrowded, undeveloped beaches.

In the early 1950s, a developer began building homes on 9,000 lots on the Maryland portion of Assateague. But in 1962 a storm destroyed most of the 200 homes that had been built. Land values dropped and the park service was able to purchase the property. A few individuals still own property on the island, but their rights to the land will expire in 11 years.

In addition to pony searching, swimming, hiking, camping, biking, bird-watching, surf fishing, crabbing and clamming are popular activities on the desolate island. No camping is allowed on the Virginia side of the island, but commercial campgrounds are on nearby Chincoteague Island.

A French Love Affair Jefferson's Home 'A Glorious Legacy'

By Stanley Meisler
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. — This bicentennial year of the French Revolution may be the most fitting time to visit Monticello, the home of Thomas Jefferson. Jefferson, who witnessed the beginnings of the Revolution, spent only a few years in Paris, but France had a profound influence on his taste ever after.

In fact, a love affair in Paris may have contributed to the feature most associated with Monticello — the wondrous dome that overlooks the verdant hills of central Virginia. It was the first dome erected over a private home in America.

In 1786, Jefferson, then the American minister (or ambassador) in Paris, met Maria Cosway, a 27-year-old English-born, Italian-educated painter, at the Halle aux Bleds, the new and expansive grain market in central Paris.

Its enormous dome was the architectural delight of the city. But Jefferson, a 43-year-old widower, seemed at that time less interested in the dome than his new friend, whom he described later as "the most superb thing on Earth."

Biographers do not agree whether the friendship flamed into a love affair, but if so, it did not last long. Maria returned to London with her husband after six weeks, then made another visit to Paris in 1787 for three months, but did not see Jefferson very often that time.

Historians believe it significant that Jefferson, when he rebuilt Monticello after his return to the United States, modeled some aspects of the dome after the Halle aux Bleds.

"Jefferson, in tearing down and rebuilding Monticello after the pattern of the place where he first met Maria Cosway," wrote Fawn M.

Brodie, one of his biographers, "may have been unconsciously defining and redefining the ideal woman, which he had clearly not yet found in his own life."

Monticello, a glorious legacy of early America, stands on an 867-foot hill a few miles east of Charlottesville, home of the University of Virginia, which Jefferson founded and designed.

Tourists are always fascinated by the home, for its crannies and gadgets and art and design reflect all of Jefferson's intelligence and sensibility and attention to detail. It is an idyllic monument to the voracious curiosity and sweeping knowledge of a remarkable statesman.

But visitors do not always understand the French influence fully. Jefferson represented the Continental Congress as minister to France from 1784 to 1789, during the transitional period between the end of the Revolution and the adoption of the Constitution. It was the only time in his life that Jefferson spent any time outside North America, and the future president was clearly enthralled by France and the French.

"A more benevolent people I have never known," he wrote years later. "Nor greater warmth and devotedness in their select friendships. Their kindness and accommodation to strangers is unparalleled."

French liberal friends such as the Marquis de Lafayette tried to draw Jefferson into their politics of reform, for he was known throughout France as the author of the American Declaration of Independence.

Although Jefferson resisted taking part, he did commute to Versailles frequently to hear the debates in the new National Assembly, which was challenging the authority of King Louis XVI. He witnessed some of the major moments of the French Revolution, and heard firsthand accounts on the same day of other events, like the storming of the Bastille on July 14, 1789.

Pair Married Saturday

RAEFORD — Dorcas Gore Hostetler and Mark Hamilton Douglas were married Saturday in the Raeford First Baptist Church. The Rev. Max J. Evington officiated the double-ring ceremony.

The bride, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Anderson Hostetler Sr. of Raeford, was escorted by her father and given in marriage by her parents. The bridegroom is the son of Dr. and Mrs. Edgar Smith Douglas Jr. of Greenville.

The bride wore her mother's formal wedding gown of bridal satin with a fitted bodice and sweetheart neckline with Italian seed pearls. Alencon lace enhanced the puffed sleeves and the skirt was accented with a three-layered bustle and cathedral train. Her waltz-length veil was attached to a headpiece of lace and pearl sprays. She carried a bouquet of trumpet lilies bound with ivory netting.

The maid of honor was Susan Senior of Greensboro, cousin of the bride. Bridesmaids were Nancy Douglas, sister of the bridegroom, and Rebecca Pittman, both of Greenville; Cynthia Gibson and Kimberly McNeill of Raeford; Sharon Moriarty, Donna Wilson and Martha Register of Raleigh, and Donna Phelps of Lumberton. They wore black and white taffeta dresses. The bridesmaids carried star gazer lilies.

The mother of the bride wore a long chiffon gown of silver and sapphire. The bridegroom's mother wore a long gown of claret.

The father of the bridegroom was best man. Ushers were Gordon Douglas of Phoenix, Ariz., brother of the bridegroom; Spencer Hill III and brother of the bride, Anderson Hostetler, both of Greensboro; Kelly Kee, Kenneth Barnes and Henry Hostetler, brother of the bride, all of Greenville; Mike Long of Durham, and William Sneed of Raleigh.

Peterson Hostetler of Greensboro was ring bearer.

Wedding music was presented by organist Mrs. Glenn Langdon, soloists Charles Hottel and Christopher McKeel and trumpeter Tim McKenzie. The wedding was directed by Jeanette Fiore of Fayetteville.

The bride is a graduate of Flora MacDonald Academy and Meredith College. She has been a resident director at Meredith for the past year. The bridegroom is a graduate of J.H. Rose High School and the University of North Carolina. He is employed by Burroughs Wellcome Co.

The couple will live in Durham after a wedding trip to Hawaii.

The bride's parents entertained at a reception at their home, and the bridegroom's parents entertained at a rehearsal dinner and dance. A wedding luncheon and bridesmaids luncheon were held prior to the wedding.

Keep Children Away From Parked Cars

Dear Abby: How ironic and tragic! The same day you had the letter in your column about the 5-year-old child who had accidentally locked himself in her family's car parked in front of her home, and was found dead 30 minutes later of heat prostration, The Orange County (Calif.) Register reported this similar tragedy:

A 3-year-old girl had climbed into the unlocked family car parked in front of her home. All the windows were shut, the doors were child-proof and the afternoon was blistering hot. A few hours later, the girl was found dead due to the intense heat inside the car.

Curled up on the floor behind the tilted passenger seat, the girl's tiny body was well hidden from parents, neighbors and the police who searched the neighborhood. Her father had even used the car while searching for her.

The girl's death was the second in two months in that community involving a child and a parked car.

In May, a 4-year-old boy lost his life after his mother had partially opened the window of her car to cool it off. She went into her house for a few minutes when the boy tried to climb into the car, apparently slipped and caught his head in the partially open window, hanging himself. His mother found him dead when she returned.

Dear Abby Abigail Van Buren

Abby, please print this as a warning to others. — Karen Cole, Fountain Valley

Dear Karen: Thank you for a valuable addition to this column.

Readers: Most children are fascinated with cars, so please never leave a window down, never leave the keys in the ignition and never leave the doors of your car unlocked.

I realize that this item is far from an upper, but if it saves one small life, it will be well worth the space in this column.

Dear Abby: My daughter, "Selma," is 28 years old. She has been married for two years and has a 1-year-old son. She and her husband were married on the spur of the moment by a justice of the peace.

Now Selma wants to have a big church wedding with all the trimmings — floor-length white gown, bridesmaids, flower girl and ring bearer, plus a reception. Since she is going to be married in the Catholic Church, it will not be considered a renewal of their original vows, but actually their "true" wedding, as the civil ceremony is not recognized by the church.

Our problem? My husband has spent a fortune on Selma — having her teeth repaired and providing a rent-free home for her since the day she married. He also promised her some additional money, which he invested for her in some cattle. He won't get the money back on the cattle until October, and Selma wants to get married in August. He's angry and feels he has done enough.

I would like Selma to have the church wedding as a memory for the rest of her life. What do you suggest? We are ... Hog-Tied

Dear Hog-Tied: As a Catholic, this will, indeed, be her "first wedding." However, your husband does not have to foot the bill. An elaborate wedding is a gift, not an obligation. Since Selma knows the cattle money won't be coming until after the sale, tell her she had better plan to get hitched in November.

Requests Would Be Slashed

dent Pro Tem of the Senate, Henson P. Barnes, D-Wayne.

Max R. Joyner Sr. of Greenville, chairman of the ECU Board of Trustees, said it is doubtful the university would ever receive the entire $24 million for the library in one session, thus the board is hoping to get a large chunk of the money this year and more in the short session next summer.

"Our top priority is the library. Our next priority is the administration building over there. We are working on those two.

"We were hoping to get a good portion of the $24-and-a-half million it's going to take to build the addition to the library. We're not looking for them to give us $24 (million) in one short session," Joyner said.

ECU Chancellor Richard R. Eakin said the university needs full funding by this time next year to begin construction on schedule.

"The need for the library is urgent. It's very important that the university have full funding for the library by this time next year," he said. "Our aim is to have the legislature appropriate the full amount in two sessions. The Senate bill is much preferable to us because it certainly begins that process."

With the conference committee, Jones said both projects will likely receive some funding, but the total amount is unclear.

Rep. Ed Warren, D-Pitt, said he likes the Senate expansion bill better than the House version.

"The Senate is really following the local board of trustees' priority list," Warren said. "I like the Senate version, naturally, because they're addressing more money for ECU and for our priorities.

"There's no question the library is our priority, not only here with the local board of trustees, but with the (University of North Carolina) system as well."

Members of the Pitt-Greenville Convention and Visitors Authority have lobbied lawmakers to fund the conference center. The board expressed concern at its most recent meeting that the Senate's appropriation had fallen to $2 million.

Now, the authority is faced with the prospect of being totally left out of the House expansion bill.

"If you get nothing, then that puts it on the back burner, way on the back burner," said authority Chairman Rudy Alexander.

"All of us on the convention and visitors (authority) were very hopeful the legislators would approve enough money to build the conference center portion of the complex. When that began to appear unlikely, we felt very it was essential some money be appropriated to keep the project moving forward," Alexander said.

The funding problem is another example of state-lawmakers' reluctance to support projects in eastern North Carolina, Warren said.

When Liston Ramsey, D-Madison, was in control of the House, he was able to gain funding for a sports arena at Western Carolina University in Cullowhee, and the facility bears his name. That appropriation stung eastern North Carolina voters

Captors Claim They Hanged U.S. Hostage

lied to hold three Israeli soldiers and 17 foreigners, including nine Americans. Israeli security sources estimate 50 to 60 Shiite Moslems from Lebanon are held in Israeli prisons.

In Tehran earlier today, Iranian Foreign Minister Ali Akbar Velayati condemned both the death threat and the kidnapping of Obeid.

Lebanese security sources and Israeli officials say Obeid played a role in the kidnapping of Higgins last year, but Obeid denies it.

In Sunday's statement, which was delivered to a Western news agency in Beirut, Higgins' captors said carrying out the death sentence "will be our first response to the stupid Israeli aggression and the flagrant American support that proves U.S. complicity in the crime."

Hezbollah and the Syrian-backed mainstream Shiite Moslem Amal militia called a general strike in Lebanon today to protest Obeid's abduction.

Businesses were closed throughout Moslem west Beirut and its Shiite-populated southern slums, as well as the cities of Sidon, Tyre, Nabatieh and Baalbek in south and east Lebanon.

Israeli Deputy Prime Minister

Shimon Peres defended the decision to abduct Obeid, whom Israeli officials have accused of instigating attacks on Israel. Peres said Israeli officials hope he can be swapped for three Israeli soldiers missing in Lebanon since 1986 and believed held by Hezbollah.

"I think that anything that prevents terror attacks against Israel, the kidnapping of our soldiers, must be done within the confines of law when there is a state of law," Peres said.

"Unfortunately in the case of Lebanon, it is a wild country and Israel must defend itself," he added.

He would not say what Israel's response to the death threat would be. "I am not willing to relate either to details or to threats," Peres said.

Secretary of State James A. Baker III had condemned the threat to kill Higgins as "outrageous, uncivilized, unconscionable behavior."

"There really can be no explanation for it and no excuse for it," he told reporters in Paris as he headed into a second round of meetings at an international conference on Cambodia.

The group holding Higgins said in a Dec. 12 statement that it had sentenced the Marine to death and said he "made full confessions about his espionage activities."

On Sunday, the group's statement said "we shall carry out by hanging the death sentence handed down against proven spy Higgins at exactly 3 p.m. (8 a.m. EDT) Monday if Sheikh Abdul Karim Obeid and his two brethren have not been freed by then."

Israeli commandos stole into the southern Lebanese village of Jibchit early Friday, kidnapped Obeid from his apartment and flew him to Israel in a helicopter.

His cousin, Ahmed Obeid, and a friend, Majid Fahs, also were seized, Lebanese police said. A neighbor of Obeid's was shot to death by troops when he opened his door during the kidnapping.

Israel described Ahmed Obeid and Majid Fahs as "assistants" of Obeid.

Obeid has denied involvement in Higgins' abduction or in Hezbollah.

But Israeli sources say Obeid was involved in the operation to kidnap Higgins and held the Marine for a time in his home. One source said Obeid was expected to provide information on Higgins.

On Sunday, a leading Iranian official defended the threat against Higgins.

"It is very natural that the Islamic clergy ... and militant groups throughout the world will take action against the interests of Israel and the United States," Iranian Interior Minister Ali Akbar Mohtashemi told a news conference in Tehran. "They and the second a meeting convened by Franklin D. Roosevelt on how to "stem the financial crisis of the Great Depression," Bush said.

"Together we can find ways to strengthen our schools, to enlarge opportunities and to improve our nation's educational performance," he said.

Bush announced that he has instructed his Domestic Policy Council to give the governors flexibility in the rules now being drafted to carry out welfare reforms enacted last year.

The importance of education to the economy was underscored Sunday by Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan, who told the governors, "The major capital of the next century is going to be minds that produce ideas."

"More and higher quality education must be presumed to be crucial in America's competition with our industrial partners for economic world leadership," Greenspan said.

Congress has been slow to act on Bush's proposed $1.2 billion anti-crime package. Bush wants to build more prisons and beef up the ranks of federal prosecutors and agents.

The administration's drug policy director, William J. Bennett, is still formulating a new national strategy to combat drug abuse. By law, the administration has until early September to produce that battle plan.

WASHINGTON — Overall use of illicit drugs dropped significantly in the United States since 1985, but the number of heavy cocaine users jumped, according to a government survey released today.

Academic Rules Were Repeatedly Abused

Tutoring Program Director Claims NCSU Coaches, Officials Were In Violation

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — North Carolina State University's athletic department has repeatedly abused academic rules to keep basketball players on the court, and the administration has permitted the practice, a newspaper reported.

Assistants to basketball coach Jim Valvano and other officials routinely manipulated NCSU rules to keep players out of academic trouble, Hugh Fuller, director of NCSU's academic tutoring program since 1983, told The News and Observer of Raleigh, in a copyright story published today.

"We've got a situation where we've got to win basketball games, and everything else gets distorted," Fuller said in an interview. "It's amazing how clever the people are about the methods of keeping these guys on the floor, and there are a lot of us who have been concerned about that."

Fuller said he complained to Nash N. Winstead, NCSU's top academic officer, without result.

Fuller backed up his statement with memorandums that detailed efforts to keep basketball players eligible despite academic shortcomings.

His remarks supported some allegations made in the book "Personal Fouls." Author Peter Golenbock wrote that high-level NCSU administrators twisted the rules to keep players from flunking out.

Fuller said he told investigators for the University of North Carolina system and the NCAA about the interference in the academic process. A special panel has made a report on NCSU's athletics program to UNC System President C.D. Spangler Jr., who has said he would make a report to the UNC Board of Governors on Aug. 25.

Spangler could not be reached for comment Sunday night.

As director of the university's academic skills program, Fuller, 45, is responsible for arranging for classroom tutoring and other help for all NCSU students. He has been employed as an academic counselor at NCSU since 1977.

In an interview, Fuller said that:

— Academic tutors hired by the athletic department did course work for basketball players, who then turned in the work as their own.

— Athletics department officials abused policies that allow students to withdraw for medical or psychological reasons, in order to keep players academically eligible.

— NCSU officials persuaded instructors to give players who were in academic trouble "incompletes" rather than failing grades, which would allow players to remain eligible.

— Top university officials ordered one star basketball player reinstated in a study hall even after the player had been kicked out for disrupting other students.

— Players were steered to take courses taught by sympathetic instructors.

He said the university's top officials had known about the problems but took no action. "It comes from the highest level," he said. Asked whether he was referring to NCSU Chancellor Bruce R. Poulton, he said he was.

Repeated attempts to contact Poulton for comment Sunday were unsuccessful. A spokesman said he was on vacation for several weeks.

Winstead, the provost, said he was unfamiliar with Fuller's allegations and said the university did all it could to help students graduate.

"Our approach with all students is to try to get them to graduate," he said. "We were doing anything we possibly could to enhance their ability to graduate."

Fuller said he was making his complaints public

New World For 'Pokes These Days

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

THOUSAND OAKS, Calif. — Ed "Too Tall" Jones, attending his 14th training camp with the Dallas Cowboys, knows exactly how different this one is than the previous 13.

"I'm still not used to it," he said after Sunday afternoon's practice. "I'm still not used to looking up and not seeing him standing there."

"Him," of course, is Tom Landry, arguably one of the five top coaches in NFL history. He spends most of his time these days playing golf at Austin, Texas, where he has a home off the 18th hole of the Jack Nicklaus-designed Hills of Lakewood Country Club.

In Landry's place as the Cowboy veterans completed their first weekend of training camp is Jimmy Johnson, installed as head coach when Jerry Jones, his college buddy, bought the team last February and summarily fired the only coach the team had ever had.

Landry's crime? The same one that gets a lot of coaches fired — a 3-13 record.

Judge To Rule Today On Rose

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

COLUMBUS, Ohio — A federal judge is expected sometime today to settle the question of whether Pete Rose has an unfair advantage in his hometown court.

U.S. District Judge John D. Holschuh has said he would rule today on whether Rose can keep his lawsuit against baseball before a judge in his hometown who has sided strongly with the Cincinnati Reds manager in preliminary matters.

It's up to Holschuh to determine whether the Cincinnati court or the federal court system is the proper place to hear Rose's legal challenge to baseball Commissioner A. Bartlett Giamatti.

For more than a month, Giamatti has been blocked from deciding whether Rose bet on his own team. Rose could be banned from baseball for life if Giamatti determines that such wagers were placed.

Rose also has been protected from being fired by the Reds or suspended by Giamatti while his case is being heard. The protections extend for three days after Holschuh's decision.

The question of which court hears Rose's case is pivotal.

Baseball wants the case heard in federal court, in which judges have upheld the commissioner's broad powers in previous legal challenges. Rose wants the matter kept in Hamilton County Common Pleas Court, in which Judge Norbert A. Nadel has shown a willingness to go into what he termed "uncharted waters" in making his decisions.

On June 25, Nadel granted Rose a temporary restraining order protecting him from firing or suspension. The judge said he agreed with Rose's lawyers that Giamatti had prejudged the case against Rose.

Nadel was widely criticized in the media for his unprecedented decision, which prevented the commissioner from doing anything with Rose's case. Some commentators suggested that making the decision

Buick Open winner Thompson gestures after final putt

Thompson Ends 12-Year Drought

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

GRAND BLANC, Mich. — Leonard Thompson's victory in the Buick Open was for all those Bubbas out there, real and imagined.

The 42-year-old Thompson, rumpled and wrinkled and proud of his good 'ol boy image, finished at 15-under-par 273 on Sunday at Warwick Hills to end a long dry spell.

"I like to have a good time," said Thompson, a North Carolina native who now calls Ponte Verda, Fla., home. "I'm not sure I know what a Bubba is, but I know we have a lot in common."

Indeed, on the last hole of the second round, for example, Thompson had to punch a low 5-iron under a tree and run the ball up on the green. When it stopped six feet from the hole for a sure birdie, Thompson spun his cap around backwards and did a nifty two-step up the fairway as the crowd roared.

On the first two holes of the third round, Thompson looked like a hacker at the local driving range, topping one drive 135 yards and knocking the next into the street and out of bounds. But he showed a lot of fight, getting a par despite the first shot and settling for double-bogey on the other.

"If I couldn't be competitive, I'd quit," said Thompson, whose third victory on the PGA Tour was his first in 12 years. "I went out there to play a steady round of golf. I'd been putting well all week and that's what you have to do is putt out here."

Heaven knows it wasn't easy. Thompson got to 16-under with two holes remaining in the $1 million tournament, but had a three-putt bogey on No. 17, a dinky little par-3.

"I played pretty solid except for the putt at No. 17," Thompson said. "I was really choking it. I don't remember even hitting it."

That meant he had to stand and

Labonte's Strategy Was Simple

'Get In Front And Stay There' Brings Terry To Diehard's Victory Lane

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TALLADEGA, Ala. — Terry Labonte's strategy late in the Diehard 500 was simple: go to the front and stay there.

That's exactly what the 32-year-old driver did, finally winning a race on Talladega Superspeedway's 2.66-mile oval, a place that has frustrated Labonte over the years.

"This place has gotten me so many times," he said. "I didn't know until I got down to the (checked) flag and went under it."

Labonte took the lead from Darrell Waltrip 13 laps from the end of Sunday's 188-lap, 500-mile race.

A spin by Davey Allison, who had been running fourth, brought out the sixth and final caution flag on lap 180 and set up a trophy dash to the finish.

When the green flag waved on lap 184, Labonte and Waltrip pulled away from the rest of the contenders, who were blocked momentarily by the lapped car of Bill Elliott.

Labonte then held off Waltrip to the end, driving his Ford Thunderbird across the finish line about half a car-length ahead of Waltrip's Chevrolet Lumina.

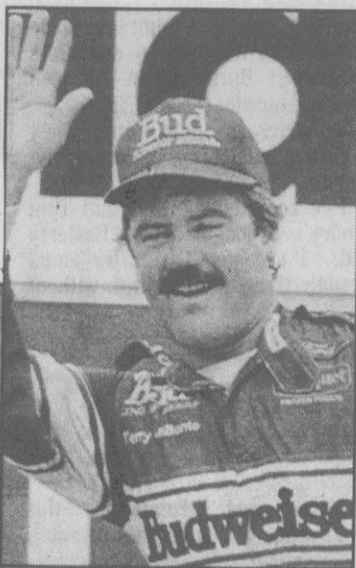

"I was thinking earlier this week that I'd rather win a race here than anywhere else I've ever been," Labonte said. "I've come so close."

"When I came across the line, I said, 'I don't believe it.' I still don't believe it."

Labonte, the 19th different winner in 21 summer races here, had finished second at Talladega three times by the barest of margins, and in 1981 he was third in a finish that saw Ron Bouchard beat Waltrip and Labonte by less than a yard.

"The draft hasn't worked as well as it used to here," Labonte said.

Sports Notes

Bobby Allison Considers His Options

TALLADEGA, Ala. (AP) — Bobby Allison hasn't given up on driving a stock car again, but he is beginning to consider other options.

Allison, who hasn't been behind the wheel since he was seriously injured in a crash at Pocono on June 19, 1988, said he might field a new Buick team on the Winston Cup circuit next season.

"I'm talking around a little bit to see how I end up feeling about it," Allison said of his plans for next year.

Allison said he has "had conversations" with Buick about fielding a team. "I asked them what their situation is," he said. "I asked them what they'd like to look for."

The veteran driver from Hueytown, Ala., said he hasn't given up on driving again.

"Somewhere out there I'd like to recover to the point of getting back into a car," he said. "But I'm going to tell you right here and now I'm nowhere close. I've got such a long way to go."

"And I'm not a youngster. There's that and the severity of the injuries."

Ray Smith, special products field manager for Buick, said he expects Buick will be part of Allison's plans.

"I don't know what Bobby is going to do, but whatever he does we'll work with him. He has been with us a long time. He has been good for Buick. He has sold a lot of cars for us," he said.

"If Bobby does anything, Buick expects to be with him. He has been with us since 1983. And it's even a personal thing. When I got married three years ago he was my best man."

Smith said Buick provides to its teams assistance in aerodynamics (such as access to a wind tunnel), other engineering help, sheet metal and parts.

"We do not pay cash," he said. "We do not go out and grab, say, a Bill Elliott and tell him we'll give him $200,000."

Champion Bull Rider Gored To Death

CHEYENNE, Wyo. (AP) — Cheyenne Frontier Days ended in tragedy when Lane Frost, the 1987 world champion bull rider, was gored to death.

Frost, 25, of Quanah, Texas, died Sunday when a major blood vessel was punctured by ribs broken in the impact with a charging bull, according to Laramie County Coroner Roger Radomsky.

"Frost ... was a favorite with cowboys, spectators and the media," Frontier Days officials said in a news release.

Spectators watching the competition on the final day of the rodeo said Frost was thrown clear of the bull. But as the cowboy walked away, the animal charged from behind and rammed Frost in the back.

Onlookers say the cowboy stumbled, signaled for help, collapsed and appeared to lose consciousness.

Medical crews on the scene reportedly used a defibrillator to attempt to revive him.

"We in Cheyenne are all deeply saddened at the loss of this fine young man. ... Lane was not only one of the best young men at his job, he was one of the finest of people and he will be missed by everyone," Cheyenne Frontier Days chairman Jerry Jesson said.

Roy Cooper, who won the all-around cowboy award on Sunday, felt little urge to celebrate. Frost was a friend.

"It's not good. I'm saying some prayers for him," Cooper said before finding out that Frost had died. The crowd was not aware of how seriously Frost had been injured when he was awarded an 83 score for his ride on a bull called, "K. Walsh."

Frost won second place in bull riding in the finals and came in third in the average on three rides at the rodeo. His Sunday paycheck was $4,700. He had won $461,644 entering the season.

He was quoted in the Professional Rodeo Media Guide as saying, "I slacked off a bit last year, but this year I'd sure like to win the world again."

Frost, a native of Kim, Colo., was sixth in his specialty in the National Finals Rodeo last year.

Frost graduated from Atoka, Okla., High School in 1982, started participating in rodeos when he was about 12 years old, said Dodie Wilson, a family friend.

She said Frost learned to ride as a youngster while his family lived in Wyoming and Colorado. The Frosts, who operate a ranch, moved to Oklahoma about 10 years ago.

Wilson said Frost's parents, a brother and a sister still live in Lane, a small town about 10 miles from Atoka in southeast Oklahoma.

"I thought he was a great person. We're going to miss him," she said.

Massey Signs Pact With New Orleans

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Cornerback Robert Massey, the New Orleans Saints' No. 2 draft choice, ended an eight-day holdout Saturday and accepted what his agent said was "a short-term contract at second round money."

"My initial arguments were for first-round money," said agent Joel Rosenhaus, in a telephone interview from Miami.

"Jim Finks (the team's president and general manager) ... persuaded me the Saints were never going to give me a long-term contract at first-round money. I said ... give me a short-term contract at second-round money."

"We got a two-year contract. At this point, I'm not permitted to disclose the exact numbers," Rosenhaus said.

He said Massey, who played at North Carolina Central, would fly out of Raleigh-Durham on Sunday morning and sign the contract when he arrives later in the day at the Saints' camp at La Crosse, Wis.

It will leave the Saints with two unsigned draft choices, including No. 1 Wayne Martin at defensive end, and four veterans still without contracts. Among the holdout veterans was All-Pro kicker Morten Andersen.

"It's a tremendous contract, one that was worth the holdout to us, one worth the hype," Rosenhaus said of Massey's contract. "Not only did I get him a two-year contract but just as much money as other second-round picks."

"It's historic. The Saints and Jim Finks are not known for providing contracts of this nature."

Mast Captures Old Milwaukee 200

DUBLIN, Va. (AP) — Rick Mast threaded through several multi-car spins, took the lead with 17 laps remaining and won Saturday night's Old Milwaukee 200, his second victory this year on NASCAR's Grand National circuit.

Mast, of Rockbridge Baths, Va., averaged 71.229 mph in his Buick on the .416-mile Pulaski County Speedway oval. He won $11,775 from the $75,548 purse.

Thirty-nine of the race's 200 laps were run under caution, and one of the incidents involved leader Chuck Bown.

After taking the lead on the 75th lap and holding it, Bown was hit in the rear by the Oldsmobile of pole-sitter Rob Moroso on lap 153. Bown lost control momentarily, allowing Moroso to surge in front. But NASCAR officials assessed a rough-driving penalty against Moroso two laps later, sending him into the pits for a stop-and-go penalty as a result of the bumping incident.

That moved Jack Ingram to the head of the pack with Mast right behind him. Mast moved around Ingram on lap 183 and pulled away for a 2.2-second victory.

Bown regrouped to finish second. Steve Grissom was third, Kenny Burks fourth and L.D. Ottinger came in fifth.

Moroso spun out twice in the closing laps and wound up 13th, two laps off the pace.

Ingram, who faded to an eighth-place finish, expanded his season points lead to 40 points over Moroso with 10 events left in the 29-race series. Ingram had entered the race with a 22-point margin over Moroso.

Labonte To Start Own Racing Team

TALLADEGA, Ala. (AP) — Terry Labonte ended months of speculation Sunday by announcing that he will start his own racing team next season.

Labonte, the 1984 Winston Cup champion, is in the last year of a three-year contract with Junior Johnson, one of the most successful car owners in NASCAR history.

But the two have combined for only four victories, including one each in 1987 and 1988.

Labonte, who will continue to drive, said moments after winning the Diehard 500 that he has a deal with Oldsmobile for next year and already has a race shop under construction.

Speculation has been that Labonte's father, Bob, will supervise the shop and that his brother, Bobby, will also be a part of the team, running Busch Grand National races. Labonte did not confirm that.

American Record Is Broken

Festival Breaks Revenue Mark; Attendance Falls Short

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

OKLAHOMA CITY — The U.S. Olympic Festival ended in record-setting fashion, which was fitting. It had started the same way.

Hollis Conway of Southwestern Louisiana set an American record in the high jump Sunday when he cleared 7 feet, 10 inches, bettering the mark of 7-9 $\frac{3}{4}$  he had set in the NCAA Championships earlier this year.

Conway's performance came 10 days after the festival officially began in front of a record opening-ceremonies crowd of 76,014. Sunday's closing ceremonies drew 48,571, bringing the total attendance to 423,039.

Total revenue for the festival, which actually began July 17 with swimming, was a record $3,028,043.50.

The closing ceremonies featured country-western entertainers Roy Clark and Crystal Gayle, plus Ray Charles' signature rendition of "America."

Oklahoma City Mayor Ron Norick formally handed the festival torch to Minneapolis Mayor Donald Fraser and St. Paul Mayor George Latimer, whose cities will be co-hosts of the 1990 festival.

"This has been a wonderful festival," said Sheila Walker, director of Olympic Festivals and Competition for the U.S. Olympic Committee.

"It's provided a great start to the new class of Olympians. People who follow this festival have their work cut out," Walker said. "This is far and away the best festival experience we have had."

Conway ended it with a flourish, easily clearing 7-10 after having won the competition on fewer misses at 6-6 $\frac{1}{2}$ . He then failed three times to clear a world-record height of 8-0 $\frac{1}{2}$ .

Conway's record jump came fewer than 24 hours after Cuba's

Javier Sotomayor broke the 8-foot barrier at San Juan, Puerto Rico.

"I was disappointed because I wanted to be the first one to clear it and everybody was rubbing it in," Conway said. "But I knew every time Sotomayor jumps well, I tend to jump higher, too."

"I was hoping to break his record, but I'm thankful for what I jumped."

Conway, 22, will meet Sotomayor on Saturday in the Jack-in-the-Box Invitational at Los Angeles.

"He's coming off a world record and I just set an American record. We'll have to see whether we can maintain that intensity," Conway said.

Conway's leap overshadowed several other outstanding performances on the final day of competition.

Olympic gold medalist Sheila Echols of Baton Rouge, La., was a double winner, capturing the long jump at 21 feet, 4 inches and the 100 meters in 11.20 seconds.

Lynda Tolbert of Arizona State set a festival record in the women's 100-meter hurdles, winning in 13.01. It was her second festival gold. She also won the event in 1987.

The temperature three feet above the surface of the John Jacobs track was measured at 103 degrees early in Sunday's competition.

"It was very hot and humid," Tolbert said. "I'm sweating like a wet puppy, but otherwise it was OK."

Divers found relief from the heat in the new $2.1 million Oklahoma City Community College Aquatic Center, where Matt Scoggin of Austin, Texas and Cokey Smith of Ann Arbor, Mich., won gold in the 10-meter platform competition Sunday.

Smith had never finished higher than second in a national competition before Sunday, when she grabbed the lead with her seventh dive and then held off Darcy Dominick of Boca Raton, Fla.

"I think I proved to myself that I am capable of winning," she said. "It makes me feel a lot better that I can go through a competition and not miss anything."

Bela Karolyi's gymnasts hardly missed anything Sunday, taking eight of 12 medals. Kim Zmeskal, 13, of Houston, who won golds for the all-around and team competition on Friday, got a gold and two silvers this time.

Amy Scherr, 14, of Cincinnati, won a gold on the vault and Erika Stokes, 13, won the balance beam.

Only 12-year-old Shannon Miller, of nearby Edmond, broke up Karolyi's Gymnastics' dominance by winning the uneven bars.

Lance Ringnald of Albuquerque dominated the men's competition, winning four golds and a silver, including the all-around title.

In hockey, Chris Nelson scored two goals Sunday night in leading the West to a 5-1 gold medal victory over the South. Nelson finished with four goals, a record for defensemen in the festival.

"I had no idea what the record was," said Nelson, a sophomore at Wisconsin. "I knew there was probably some record but I didn't bother to look it up. In fact, I didn't even hear them announce it. My little brother told me about it."

As usual, the festival had stars from beginning to end.

Swimmers Sarah Perroni of Bristol, R.I., and Geoff Cronin of Sunnyvale, Calif., each won six medals. Perroni had two golds, three silvers and a bronze, while Cronin had three golds, one silver and two bronzes.

Diver Mark Lenzi of Fredricksburg, Va., made history when he became the first American to try the 4 $\frac{1}{2}$  somersault tuck in competition. He did it twice off the 3-meter springboard and twice more off the 10-meter platform, and received low scores all but once.

America's most famous diver, Greg Louganis, actually had a record erased. Sean O'Neill of McLean, Va., won three gold medals in table tennis, giving him 13 golds during his festival career. Louganis had won 12.

Fast pitch softball — a pitcher's sport — was dominated by Peter Meredith of Elkhart, Ind., and Kathy Arendsen of Holland, Mich. Meredith threw a perfect game, a one-hitter and five shutouts as the East won the gold. Arendsen also had a perfect game and a one-hitter on the East's road to the gold medal.

In wrestling, 1988 Olympian champion Kenny Monday took the longest road to a gold medal, winning 10 matches in the 163-pound class. Monday had to come through a mini-tournament, including a match with 1984 Olympic gold medalist Dave Schultz.

Monday's former teammate at Oklahoma State and another 1988 Olympic gold medalist, John Smith, rolled to the title at 136 $\frac{1}{2}$  pounds.

Perfection came on the bowling alley, where John Vadakin of Wichita, Kan., rolled a 300 game.

But it was the numbers rolled by Conway and the festival itself that were most impressive.

Lopez Captures LPGA Victory

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SOMERS POINT, N.J. — Nancy Lopez was going to one of those Disney places long before she won the $225,000 LPGA Atlantic City Classic.

Lopez and her husband, Ray Knight, made plans to take their girls to the amusement park weeks ago. The fact they are doing it after Sunday's victory is a coincidence.

In fact, Lopez is the last thing Lopez might have counted on this week at the Sands Country Club. It's not that Lopez has been playing poorly, but victory has been very elusive this year for the 32-year-old Hall of Famer.

She had 12 top-10 finishes in 14 events coming into Atlantic City, including five seconds and five thirds.

"I've been playing so well lately and finishing second and third so much," Lopez said after a final-round, 1-under-par 69 produced her second victory of the year. "I was wondering if I was snakebit. You start to wonder whether someone is going to come up and beat you. There was a lot of anxiety out there."

This week's anxiety came courtesy of Vicki Ferguson and Chris Johnson. They started the final round with a one-stroke lead over Lopez and, after 12 holes, the three — playing as the final threesome — were tied for the lead at 4-under-par. The deadlock was forged when Lopez and Johnson both bogeyed the par-4, 385-yard 12th hole.

A battle of survival ensued.

"No one was really making a move today," said Johnson, who was looking to break a two-year winless drought. "Maybe this is the kind of course that you can't get aggressive with."

Cowboys...

ticularly among veterans like Jones, who at 38 is just seven years younger than his coach and a year older than Dave Wannstedt, the new defensive coordinator. Defensive players like Jones, schooled in Landry's 20-year-old "flex" and read defense, like the new scheme, which is called simply: "Attack."

"It's my type of football," says linebacker Jeff Rohrer, the last Yale man in the league now that another known hitter, Gary Fencik of the Bears, has retired.

"In the flex you have to change five times before the ball is snapped. Now you just attack."

On Saturday, the second day the veterans were in camp, the Cowboys did something that never would have happened under Landry — a 40-play full-contact scrimmage. By contrast, the San Francisco 49ers have been in camp for two weeks and there's been nothing like it — incidental contact last week led to a mini-brawl involving wide receiver Jerry Rice, among others.

But Dallas players don't seem inclined to complain about the course of events. Just as Dallas fans blame Jerry Jones more than Johnson for Landry's firing, so the players seem to welcome their new coach as they revered their old one.

For unlike some new coaches, who come in and clean house, Johnson isn't blaming all of the veterans for last year's disaster.

Jones and center Tom Rafferty, the last two players left from the Cowboys' last Super Bowl team 11 years ago, remain starters and so does defensive back Everson Walls. A trimmed-down Herschel Walker is showing new cutback ability and strong safety Vince Albritton, primarily a special teams and nickel back in his previous five years, has been given new life as a possible starter because of his hitting ability.

"With Johnson, the bottom line is getting the job done," Rafferty said. "That's why Ed and I are still around."

None of the veterans are deluding themselves about going from 3-13 to the Super Bowl — particularly since the starting quarterback will be a rookie, either Troy Aikman, the No. 1 pick in the regular draft, or Steve Walsh, the top choice in the supplemental draft. Walsh, who played for Johnson at Miami, Fla., signed last Friday and was reading defenses with aplomb by Sunday.

"We're as far along as I expected us to be," Johnson said after Sunday's workout. "It's not what they're doing as much as that they're working hard. There's a great attitude. I like the intensity and enthusiasm."

The players aren't the only ones who are intense and enthusiastic. Johnson is a loud presence in the middle of practice compared to Landry, who often watched from afar while his assistants mingled with the players.

"Horrible! Horrible!" Johnson screamed during a punt coverage drill Sunday after three defenders let Cornell Burbage cut between them and race for the goal line.

The veterans understand. They had three minicamps before arriving here.

"I've accepted the fact that Tom Landry's no longer here," Rafferty said. "I accepted that after going through three minicamps without him."

Thompson...

watch at the 18th hole as Payne Stewart, also at 15 under, came up the fairway with a chance to win it all. But Stewart, clad in the Honolulu blue and silver of the Detroit Lions — the NFL's worst team — sailed a wedge 145 yards, over the green and into a bunker.

When Stewart missed his 8-foot putt to save par, Thompson wept at the realization that 12 years of frustration were over.

"It wasn't like I died," said Thompson, whose last victory was the 1977 Pensacola Open. "I played some golf. I made enough money that I didn't have to go to the bread line."

Maybe so, but the $180,000 winner's check he pocketed in the Buick Open was more than the $136,985 he had earned in the last two years combined. It also was more than the $138,826 he made in 1980, his previous best year.

"There's nothing wrong with crying," Thompson, the oldest player to win a tournament this year, said. "At Pensacola, on the 18th green, I said to myself, 'Remember this because there's no guarantee you'll be here again.'"

Stewart, who finished in a tie at 14 under with Doug Tewell and Billy Andrade, increased his earnings this season to $552,987, which doesn't include the money he made for finishing in a tie for eighth a week earlier in the British Open.

"I've said I always wanted to be on the last hole putting for a win," Stewart said. On the last putt, "I concentrated on holding my head still. When I looked up, it was left and not going in."

"I'll be back. I'll have my opportunities."

Hal Sutton, paired with Stewart, also was 15 under before succumbing to a double-bogey at the 17th. Both players shot final-round 72s.

"I was aware of Leonard," Sutton said. "He played a good round of golf. I was proud for him."

"I'm playing well. If I had made some birdies, I'd win this golf tournament easy. If either one of us had made a putt, it would have gotten us both over the hump. It was not meant to be."

Not on a Bubba's day, it wasn't.

Astros Top Giants Again; Just 1 Game Out Of First

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The Houston Astros hit balls that fell where the San Francisco Giants weren't. The Giants just didn't hit them anywhere.

"They hit some balls today that I don't think you could have thrown out there any better," San Francisco pitcher Mike LaCoss said Sunday after the Astros beat the Giants 6-2 to move within a game of the lead in the National League West.

Mike Scott became the first pitcher in the major leagues to win 17 games. Scott, 17-5, struck out nine. Danny Darwin, who pitched the last two innings, added five more. They struck out the side in the first, seventh and ninth innings.

"We just haven't been hitting at all, period," Giants manager Roger Craig said. "And in the last 11 games, everybody that we've faced hasn't been a Mike Scott."

The Giants, in first place since June 14, have lost four of five games and seven of 11.

"It was a key to the game for me to get out of the first inning," said Scott, who allowed seven hits and walked one. "They got the first two guys on base and I was able to get out of it."

LaCoss, 5-7, said the Astros — seven of whom he struck out — were hardly an imposing group.

"I know (Glenn) Davis has 22 home runs, but their other guys certainly don't drive the ball," he said. "When those balls like they hit today don't fall in, it's going to be tough on them."

Craig Biggio's two-run single highlighted a four-run seventh inning that broke a 2-2 tie. Rafael Ramirez doubled three times to drive in two runs for Houston.

The Astros loaded the bases to start the seventh on a single by Craig Reynolds, an error by LaCoss that allowed Gerald Young to reach base and a fielder's choice bunt by Scott. All were safe when third baseman Matt Williams' throw to third was too late to catch Eric Yelding, a pinch-runner for Reynolds.

Biggio singled to center, scoring Yelding and Young. Ramirez followed with his third double to score pinch-runner Bill Doran and knock out LaCoss. Billy Hatcher, pinch-hitting for Terry Puhl, drove in Biggio with a sacrifice fly.

An error by Ramirez at shortstop gave the Giants a run in the second. Kevin Mitchell's major-league-leading 89th RBI — on a double in the fifth — accounted for the other San Francisco run.

Cubs 6, Mets 4
Mark Grace hit a two-run homer off relief ace Randy Myers with two outs in the ninth inning for surging Chicago. New York lost for the sixth straight time, its worst slide since 1985. Chicago has won seven of eight.

With one out in the ninth, Jerome Walton beat out a bunt single and advanced on a wild pitch by reliever Rick Aguilera, 6-6. Ryne Sandberg struck out before Myers replaced Aguilera.

Grace hit Myers' second pitch for his sixth homer to make a winner of Les Lancaster, 3-0.

The Cubs had a 4-2 lead in the seventh. With two outs, Gary Carter singled and Kevin Elster doubled to extend his hitting streak to 12 games. Mitch Williams, who leads the majors with 26 saves, relieved Mike Bielecki and gave up a two-run pinch-hit single to Keith Hernandez.

Shawon Dunston, who hit his seventh homer, went from first to third on a sacrifice in the sixth and scored on a throwing error by Kevin McReynolds.

Cardinals 8, Expos 3

Joe Magrane, 12-7, had a no-hitter going until Montreal's Rex Hudler hit a double with one out in the sixth. Magrane, a winner in seven of his last eight starts, allowed eight hits in 8 2-3 innings, struck out six and walked one.

The Cardinals took the lead in the third just before the game was halted for 59 minutes by rain because the retractable roof at Olympic Stadium is not working properly. Tony Pena singled, was sacrificed by Magrane and scored when center fielder Otis Nixon dropped Vince Coleman's fly ball.

Jose Oquendo doubled home two runs and scored on Pedro Guerrero's single as St. Louis made it 4-0 in the fifth against Bryn Smith, 9-4.

Milt Thompson and Terry Pendleton had two-run singles in a four-run seventh as the Cardinals sent the Expos to their third loss in four games.

Dodgers 10, Padres 1

Los Angeles, 11th in the league in batting and home runs, backed Tim Lincecum with three homers — two by Eddie Murray — and 15 hits.

Belcher, 8-9, pitched a four-hitter, marred only by Benito Santiago's sixth homer. Belcher struck out eight and walked four in pitching his fifth complete game.

Franklin Stubbs had a two-run homer and Lenny Harris had three doubles, scored two runs and drove in two as the Dodgers battered Ed Whitson, 14-7, and four other San Diego pitchers.

Murray hit his 11th homer, a two-run shot, in the first inning, and Los Angeles scored three more runs in the second. Murray added a solo shot in the eighth as the Dodgers ended five-game losing streak against the Padres.

Braves 5, Reds 2

Derek Lilliquist won for the first time in a month and Joe Boever picked up his 18th save.

Oddie McDowell paced the Atlanta attack with three hits. He scored two runs and drove in one.

The victory snapped a three-game winning streak by Cincinnati.

McDowell singled to open the first, moved to third on a hit by Jeff Treadway and scored when Lonnie Smith grounded into a double play against Rick Mahler, 9-10.

Darrell Evans hit his seventh homer — and 410th of his career, most by an active player — leading off the second. McDowell singled, moved to second on a groundout and scored on Smith's single in the third.

Rolando Roomes drove in both runs for the Reds.

Phillies 8, Pirates 6

A two-run single by Von Hayes highlighted a five-run sixth inning for Philadelphia.

The Phillies trailed 5-2 when Charlie Hayes drew a one-out walk off Doug Drabek, went to second on a single by Steve Jeltz and scored on pinch-hitter Curt Ford's double.

Relieve Bob Kipper, 3-4, got one out, but walked Tom Herr to load the bases for Von Hayes. A throwing error by Glenn Wilson and an RBI single by Ricky Jordan accounted for two more runs.

Dennis Cook, 5-3, got late relief help from Roger McDowell, who got his 13th save.

Junior Ortiz hit a two-run homer for Pittsburgh, his first since April 30, 1988.

Charlie Hayes homered for the third straight game for the Phillies.

AMERICAN LEAGUE

A's 5, Mariners 3

Nolan Ryan wins more fans,

Frank Viola wins a bigger contract and Roger Clemens wins more Cy Young awards.

But no one in the American League wins more games than Dave Stewart.

Stewart again filled the stopper's role, starting the Oakland Athletics over the Seattle Mariners 5-3 Sunday for his league-leading 15th victory.

Stewart, who has not lost consecutive starts all season, beat the Mariners for the 10th straight time. He helped Oakland pull within 1 1/2 games of California in the American League West.

"It's just a really good roll of the dice, to be honest," Stewart said. "I just happen to always be throwing against them when I'm pitching well, because they're a good hitting ballclub."

Stewart, 15-6, got closer to his third consecutive 20-victory season. The last pitcher to do it in the majors was Jim Palmer from 1975-78 with Baltimore.

Stewart gave up five hits in 7 1-3 innings. He has not lost to Seattle since June 26, 1985, when he was a reliever with Texas.

Oakland outfielder Rickey Henderson also kept a streak going. He has reached base nine straight times, eight on walks.

"I learned from (former Yankees teammate) Don Mattingly to start looking at a strike at the plate," Henderson said. "He taught me a lot of patience."

Henderson leads the majors with 87 walks, 78 runs scored and 47 stolen bases. His .429 on-base average is third in the league behind Seattle's Alvin Davis and Wade Boggs of Boston.

"This team, Oakland, has so many selective hitters," losing pitcher Brian Holman said. "They wait around for you to make a mistake."

Henderson hit the ball only once, and it went for a run-scoring triple in the third inning. Ron Hassey led off the sixth with a home run off Holman, 4-3, for a 4-3 lead.

Greg Briley and Davis hit Seattle's first consecutive home runs this season, connecting with two outs in the sixth for a 3-3 tie. Dennis Eckersley pitched 1 1-3 innings for his 18th save.

Rangers 9, Brewers 3

Nolan Ryan got his 285th victory and struck out 10 and Pete In-cavaglia homered and drove in five runs as Texas won at home.

Milwaukee's Robin Yount went 0-for-3 and ended his 20-game hitting streak, the longest in the league this season. The Brewers had won four in a row.

Harold Baines, acquired Saturday in a trade that sent Scott Fletcher to the White Sox, went 3-for-4 with two doubles and his 1,500th major-league hit. Ruben Sierra homered and drove in three runs for the Rangers.

Ryan, 12-6, gave up four hits and did not walk a batter in 7 1-3 innings. He leads the majors with 189 strikeouts and raised his career-leading total to 4,965.

Ryan struck out at least 10 batters for the 10th time this season and the 192nd time in his career. He began the game with opponents batting just .191 against him this year, the best mark in baseball.

Incavaglia tied a career high with five RBIs. His three-run homer, a 423-foot drive, made it 7-3 in the third against Don August, 9-10.

Both benches emptied in the fifth after Texas manager Bobby Valentine got into an argument with Milwaukee second baseman Jim Gantner. Valentine was on the field to protest a call with umpire Dave Phillips when the dispute with Gantner started, but no punches were thrown.

White Sox 3, Angels 2

Jerry Reuss and Bobby Thigpen combined on a four-hitter and Chicago ended California's 10-game home winning streak.

Reuss, 8-5, gave up four hits in seven innings and won for the first since June 20, a span during which he lost three games and had two no-decisions. Thigpen closed for his 22nd save.

Scott Fletcher, acquired Saturday in a trade that sent Harold Baines to Texas, hit a sacrifice fly in the eighth that put the White Sox ahead 3-2.

Chuck Finley, 12-7, took the loss. The Angels had won 16 of their last 17 at Anaheim Stadium.

Royals 7, Orioles 6

Danny Tartabull hit a two-run single in the eighth inning as Kansas City sent Baltimore to its 10th loss in 11 games.

The Royals loaded the bases with one out in the eighth on two walks and a single. George Brett grounded into a force play at the plate, but Tartabull singled off Gregg Olson, 3-2.

Tartabull earlier hit a two-run homer and a single. Randy Milligan and Phil Bradley homered for the Orioles.

Steve Farr, 1-4, got the victory and Jeff Montgomery earned his sixth save.

Yankees 7, Blue Jays 6

Wayne Tolleson ended an 0-for-24 by singling home the winning run in the bottom of the ninth inning as New York rallied to beat Toronto.

The Yankees, held to three hits through six innings by Dave Stieb, scored four times in the seventh, tied it in the eighth and won in the ninth. New York is 4-41 in games in which it trails after six innings.

Blue Jays right fielder Junior Felix separated his right shoulder when he ran into the wall in the fourth inning.

In the Yankees' ninth, Randy Velarde led off with a drive to right that Tom Lawless dropped when he ran into the wall. Velarde got a triple and scored on Tolleson's ground single to right.

Mel Hall hit a two-run homer in the seventh and had an RBI single in the eighth against Duane Ward, 4-8, for a 6-6 tie. Lee Guetterman, 3-5, was the winner.

Red Sox 5, Indians 2

Relievers Dennis Lamp and Rob Murphy each pitched three shutout innings and visiting Boston beat error-plagued Cleveland.

Lamp, 1-1, took over after Mike Boddicker left with tightness in his right shoulder. Murphy got his sixth save.

John Farrell, 6-10, gave up five runs, two of them unearned, on 10 hits in 4 1-3 innings.

The Red Sox scored three runs in the fifth for a 5-2 lead. The Indians helped Boston with two errors and a passed ball, and have made 20 errors in their last 18 games.

Twins 14, Tigers 3

Jim Dwyer, Greg Gagne and Randy Bush each homered and Minnesota got 16 hits to win at Tiger Stadium.

Dwyer hit a three-run homer and Kent Hrbek had a two-run single as the Twins scored five times in the first inning. Hrbek has 13 RBIs in his last eight games.

Detroit finished 6-21 in July. The Tigers' record for losses in a month is 24, set in June 1975.

Allan Anderson, 11-9, won despite giving up 10 hits in eight innings. Doyle Alexander, 5-11, has lost seven of eight decisions.

Call once. And for all.

had improved the judge's chances for re-election in 1990.

Baseball's lawyers have hammered at the political concerns in their arguments before Holschuh. They accused Rose of balking at having his case decided in any court "other than one which is most subject to the influence of local pressures produced by his fame, notoriety and close identification with the city of Cincinnati."

Rose's lawyers said they want the case to stay before Nadel because that's where it properly belongs. They accused baseball's lawyers of trying to get a more favorable court by going to a federal judge.

The Reds have remained officially neutral in the dispute. But the team's standing in the lawsuit will be one of the determining factors in Holschuh's decision.

Whether the Reds are a spectator in the case — an "innocent bystander," as baseball lawyer Louis Hoynes Jr. called them in court arguments — is a central issue in determining where the lawsuit is heard.

If he decides to keep the case in state court, Holschuh will have determined that the dispute is between two entities that reside or do business in Ohio. That would involve one of two findings: that the case technically is between Rose and the Reds, an Ohio team, or that major league baseball is an unincorporated association doing business in Ohio through the team, and thus subject to being sued in Ohio courts.

However, if Holschuh decides that the dispute technically is between Rose and Giamatti, who lives in another state, the federal courts could have domain.

During oral arguments on July 20, Holschuh did not indicate which way he would rule.

In another memo, the player's English instructor described how the athlete arrived in class with a paper already prepared and spent the class session copying it word for word.

Fuller said if a basketball player was doing poorly in a course, coaches often would arrange for him to seek a medical or psychological withdrawal which would allow made Boston a contender again. Bird had played well in a charity game at Indianapolis on June 25.

Bird's Comeback Is Over Quickly; Back Injured

Celtics coach Jimmy Rodgers said Bird's injury wouldn't change the team's approach to preseason training.

"The biggest problem is that it's a major disruption in his own summer workouts to rehabilitate his ankles," Rodgers said.

The annual camp at Brandeis is primarily for rookies and free agents hoping to make the Celtics, impress other teams or stay in shape. Some veterans usually show up. Bird and Upshaw did.

"I've just come here to play basketball because I haven't played in a long time," Bird said before the scrimmage. "I just want to play against some competition."

He was hurt in the camp's first scrimmage, although he played for a minute after the fall before leaving the court.

"He's made such great progress. He was ready to make the next step, to put the emphasis back on basketball," Rodgers said. "He's not going to be able to do that for a while."

McDonald Still Is Unsigned

BALTIMORE — Talks have again broken down between the Baltimore Orioles and No. 1 draft choice Ben McDonald, who has been seeking a guaranteed contract.

General manager Roland Hemond, club president Larry Lucchino and scouting director John Barr left Baton Rouge, La. Sunday after what were describe as amicable but unproductive talks.

"We were hoping to have it finalized this weekend, but we have no announcement," Hemond said.

No further meetings were scheduled, but both sides said talks could be resumed at any time.

McDonald, a right-handed pitcher from Louisiana State University, was the first player chosen in last month's free agent draft.

You would like to double for penalties, but that action would be for takedown and partner will surely bid some number of hearts. And you have neither a source of tricks nor the strength to bid three no trump. Pass, and hope partner can reopen the bidding.

'Major Dad' Will Anchor CBS' Fall Comedy Lineup

By Kathryn Baker
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — J.D. "Mac" MacGillis' motto, gleaned from a lifetime in the U.S. Marine Corps, is simple — "See the hill. Take the hill."

It probably won't be that easy, though, when Mac, played by Gerald McRaney in CBS' "Major Dad," faces his biggest battle, against a wise-mouthed space alien who lives on a very large hill called NBC.

"Major Dad's" assignment in the fall is to anchor CBS' all-comedy Monday-night lineup. It's an uphill battle. A succession of CBS half-hour comedies have tried and failed to make headway against NBC's powerhouse puppet "ALF" in the 8 o'clock (Eastern) time period.

But after a second season in third place, and with a schedule filled with aging hour dramas or new ones struggling to build an audience, CBS desperately needs a breakout comedy it can move to another night.

The fate of two other new comedies will rely in part on the popularity of their lead-in. "Major Dad" will be followed by a new offbeat fantasy-comedy, "The People Next Door." Sandwiched between last season's hit "Murphy Brown," and the proven "Designing Women" — which, incidentally, stars McRaney's new bride, Delta Burke — is the other new show, "The Famous Teddy Z," starring teen heartthrob Jon Cryer in a sophisticated comedy from the creator of "WKRP in Cincinnati" and "Frank's Place." The venerable "Newhart" rounds out the night.

Most of the television critics meeting here had a favorable reaction to the pilot for "Major Dad," in which the conservative MacGillis and a liberal reporter for the local newspaper (played by newcomer Shanna Reed) fall in love at first sight and decide to marry. He has no experience with children. She has three daughters, 13, 11 and 6.

In his first visit to their house, 6-year-old Casey (Chelsea Hertford) peers at him out the window, then runs excitedly to her mother to announce, "It's G.I. Joe!" Elizabeth (Marisa Ryan), 13, observes over dinner, "This guy has no hair."

"Major Dad" is not a show about the military, said executive producer Earl Pomerantz, who noted, "I'm a Jewish person from Canada, and I know nothing about the Marine Corps," which he said he had heretofore thought of not as fodder for comedy, but "just guns and sharp things."

"I do 'people' shows," he told the television critics. "I like shows with people in them ... rather than pieces of felt. ... That's what we're on against, a piece of felt," said Pomerantz, referring to "ALF." "It's doing very well." "ALF" wins its time period virtually every week.

Pomerantz created the critically praised but short-lived "Best of the West," was co-executive producer of "The Cosby Show" and has written for "The Mary Tyler Moore Show," "Cheers" and "Taxi," among others. He said it is impossible to sit down and create a show with the purpose of being a network hit.

"In 1984, nobody thought 'Cosby' was going to be a hit. ... All the questions were, how are you going to beat 'Magnum, P.I.'? — such a big hit," he said.

Pomerantz and McRaney, who helped come up with the concept for "Major Dad," think the chemistry between the seemingly mismatched lovers will charm viewers.

"I think a lot of people have a notion of a Marine being about as far right-wing as you can go without becoming Genghis Khan, and a lot of other people have the notion that journalists are about as left-wing as you can go without actually pledging allegiance to the red flag," said McRaney.

"So you've got these two extreme differences, and the thing that we would like to carry out in this show is the notion that you can have divergent points of view, but we're all in the same game here. Maybe it's too much of a cliché to say that love conquers all, but it can conquer a lot."

Much of the research for the show was conducted at Camp Pendleton in California and some outdoor scenes will be filmed there, said Pomerantz. But most of it is filmed on a soundstage in front of an audience, some of whom are Marines, he said.

A Marine Reserve officer is an adviser on the show, and the extras are real Marines, said Pomerantz, "because we couldn't get extras to get a haircut for $35 a day."

Marines seem to like the show. "We showed this show to Marines," Pomerantz said. "Actually we didn't show it, all of a sudden it was bootlegged all over the camps, and so when we came down there, they were already talking demographics and can we beat 'ALF.'"

Violinist Jailed On Drug Counts

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BOSTON — Violinist Eugene Fodor Jr., whose intensity and talent won him early rewards at the White House and in Moscow, has landed in jail on charges that relatives said stemmed from a drug problem.

Fodor, 39, was being held on cocaine trafficking, cocaine and heroin possession and breaking-and-entering charges after a judge refused to accept his offer of a 300-year-old violin to guarantee bail. Instead, the judge Friday set $50,000 cash bail.

On Thursday, chambermaids at a Martha's Vineyard hotel found him in a room that was supposed to be empty and called police, who said they found 20 grams of cocaine, heroin, a hypodermic needle and a dagger in Fodor's possession.

Fodor's father said he had no warning that his son was in trouble.

"The first I knew about it was when I read today's paper," Eugene Fodor Sr. of Morrison, Colo., said Saturday. He planned today to travel to Edgartown, where his son was jailed.

Fodor was vacationing on Martha's Vineyard when he was arrested at the Vineyard Harbor Hotel.

A family member in New York who spoke on condition of anonymity said Sunday the arrest likely stems from Fodor's drug use, which she said may be rooted in the same intensity that fires his musical creativity.

"The only explanation I can think of is that he does everything in a thorough way," she said. "He's a genius in his work and he devotes all his energy to his work. He's very intense in whatever he does."

Fodor, who was born in Denver and lives in New York City, began playing the violin at age 8. He made his debut as a young soloist with the Denver Symphony. He has performed at the White House; at Carnegie Hall in New York; in Moscow, where in 1974 he became the first American winner of the Tchaikovsky Violin Competition; at the Paganini International Violin Competition in Genoa, Italy; and most recently in concert halls in South America.

But some colleagues said Fodor had not performed as often in recent years and critics said he never reached the top ranks of virtuosos.

The violinist's ex-wife, Susan Davis, of Vienna, Va., said she was stunned to learn of his arrest and his attempt to use the violin as surety for bond.

Davis said Fodor called her early Friday and sounded frightened. She said his managers have not guided him properly.

"He's a very serious musician, but when he came back from Moscow, they billed him as the Mick Jagger of classical music," she said.

Dr. Buzzard Has Remedy For Cranky Boss

By Robert M. Andrews
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ALEXANDRIA, Va. — If your boss is making life miserable, Earnest "Dr. Buzzard" Bratton says he can solve your problem with a couple of shiny dimes, a teaspoon of black cat oil and an incantation over a cemetery grave, plus $1,200 of your cash.

"A piece of cake," says Bratton, a self-proclaimed voodoo witch doctor in this Washington suburb who says he's licensed by the state of Virginia to administer herbs and potions.

"I have your boss removed from his job," he says. "I give him what I call the hotfoot. It works, no doubt about it. If it doesn't work, there's no dogs in Georgia."

Bratton, 57, a native of Gaffney, S.C., says he was born with magical powers and perfected them with the help of ghostly visions. He boasts he can improve his clients' sex lives, rid them of pesky neighbors, bring them good luck at the racetrack, retire debts, cure rheumatism and banish assorted spells and curses.

He says he can even help President Bush.

"Bush is all right. He's doing the best he can, but he seems a little disoriented, a little shaky," he said. "It would be a good idea for him to come see the doctor. I could give him some breathing room."

Bratton's basement apartment is littered with press clippings, snapshots of Dr. Buzzard with fellow celebrities on late-night television shows, and clumps of stuffing torn from his Naugahyde sofa by his pet cat, Silver Dumpster.

Bratton is proud of his videotape lecture titled "Voodoo Hoodoo Youdo." The Learning Annex, a local university without walls where he lectured recently, declared that "Dr. Buzzard is to voodoo what Jane Fonda is to Spandex." Voodoo's been his business since he was 9.

A table top in his apartment is covered with the tools of his dark trade: candles in the shape of skull and crossbones, a jar of "confusion oil," a bottle of all-purpose "Hoyt's Cologne," a plastic bag of graveyard dirt and another containing small blue stones used for "eliminating ordinary jinxes" during a good soak in the bathtub.

There's a three-eyed coconut for "sending people you don't like out of town," which Bratton says he'd like to use against the Rev. Jesse Jackson, and a "Samson doll" which he claims can save innocent prisoners from the electric chair, with the collaboration of his reclusive black cat.

A dried hawk's claw is helpful in finding missing persons, Bratton says, and such oddments as a buckeye, arrowroot, lodestone and "devil's shoestrings" make dandy good-luck charms when carried in a red flannel sack.

His clients' most frequent complaint is a lousy sex life, and the witch doctor claims he has the perfect cure: drink a potion containing two beaten brown eggs mixed with 7-Up every morning for 12 days. And "to put spice back in your life and keep on truckin'," he says, carry a bunch of medium, brown-skinned onions in the briefcase, purse or car trunk and eat one raw onion within 15 minutes after having sex. "You'll jump up and down like you're in Birmingham," he says.

Bratton says he is capable of using his voodoo powers to have someone killed within three hours. He would take dampened graveyard dirt from a cow horn, inject it into a lemon with a golden-eyed needle, utter some mumbo-jumbo and "it's good-bye Charlie."

But Dr. Buzzard abhors violence and says he'd never take someone's life. Instead, he prefers to find kinder, gentler solutions to life's problems.

Bratton, with his cat Dumpster, stands over some of his voodoo tools in his Alexandria home.

Cows Are Taught To Avoid Eating Poisonous Plants

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Federal scientists have taught cows to avoid eating a poisonous plant, but the cattle acted more like lemmings when gripped by the psychology of the herd.

In newly reported studies, cows that learned to avoid the tall larkspur did fine when they grazed by themselves. But they started to eat it when they mingled in the pasture with untrained animals that were enjoying the tasty plant, which has caused serious losses in some Western herds.

"The peer pressure appears to be very, very strong," said range scientist Michael Ralphs.

There may be ways to fight it, said Ralphs, of the federal Agricultural Research Service's Poisonous Plant Research Laboratory in Logan, Utah.

The training approach may also help with other problem plants, such as locoweed, he said.

He spoke in a telephone interview before presenting the work at the Third International Symposium on Poisonous Plants, which concluded Saturday in Logan.

The tall larkspur may kill more than 2,000 cows a year on high-altitude summer pastures in Colorado, Idaho, Montana, Nevada, Utah and Wyoming, Ralphs said. Ranchers can lose up to 10 percent of their herds, he said.

Cattle relish the plant, which resembles the garden delphinium, said study co-author John D. Olsen.

Ranchers build fences or spray herbicides to fight the problem, but expensive strategies, Ralphs said. Sometimes they pass up the chance to graze cattle on lush grass and other nutritious plants in larkspur-infested pastures.
