Israel Rejects Cicippio Appeal

BEIRUT, Lebanon — The kidnapers of Joseph Cicippio extended the deadline to kill him by four hours today and released a videotape on which the American hostage read a statement urging freedom for a Shiite Moslem cleric held in Israel.

The Revolutionary Justice Organization, which holds Cicippio, said the deadline was postponed until 10 p.m. (3 p.m. EDT), at Cicippio's request.

Israel said that despite the appeal, it would not free Sheik Abdul Karim Obeid until Israeli soldiers and foreigners held in Lebanon are freed.

The White House said President Bush had not decided whether to take military action if Cicippio was killed. Spokesman Marlin Fitzwater welcomed the reprieve, saying, "Any delay is good news."

U.S. warships were reported moving toward the Mediterranean, but the Pentagon said today the moves were nothing unusual.

A Shiite Moslem leader threatened a "ruthless" reprisal in the event of a U.S. attack.

U.N. envoy Marrack Goulding was in Lebanon searching for the body of U.S. Marine Lt. Col. William R. Higgins. Goulding told ABC's "Good Morning America" that some people told him Higgins may still be alive.

A Shiite Moslem group claimed it killed Higgins on Monday to avenge Israel's refusal to release Obeid, the Shiite Moslem cleric who was kidnapped Friday.

There has been speculation Higgins was killed last year, but Israel's Defense Ministry today quoted Obeid as saying Higgins may have been alive a week ago.

"I appeal to each person having honor who can move to release Sheik Abdul Karim Obeid ... Don't be late, because they (the captors) are very serious," said the statement read by Cicippio.

Cicippio, with a bushy beard, was shown from the waist up. He was wearing eyeglasses and a blue track suit and looked haggard and distressed. The statement's poor English suggested his captors wrote it.

"So to help me move, I demand from the American people, oblige Israel to release Sheik Abdul Karim Obeid immediately because his kidnapping is not human," Cicippio said, reading slowly.

Hurricane Dean Veering Past Islands Out To Sea

SAN JUAN, Puerto Rico — Hurricane Dean, packing 85 mph winds, veered away from Puerto Rico and the U.S. Virgin Islands today on a wobbly course in the Atlantic Ocean, forecasters said.

The National Weather Service lifted hurricane warnings for all the islands of the eastern Caribbean, including Puerto Rico and the U.S. Virgin Islands.

Forecasters said Dean was moving farther out to sea and that the worst affects of the storm would probably miss the islands.

A flash-flood watch remained in effect for the Virgin Islands, but it was lifted for Puerto Rico, where the National Guard earlier had been preparing to evacuate 2,000 people from flood-prone areas.

At 9 a.m. EDT, the hurricane's center was located at latitude 19.4 north and longitude 63.1 west, or 210 miles east-northeast of San Juan.

The weather service in San Juan said if Dean remained on its current course it would pass 125 miles north of the Virgin Islands and 150 miles north of Puerto Rico.

Dean, the second hurricane of the Atlantic season, strengthened overnight as it moved irregularly in a

House OKs Abortion Funding

WASHINGTON — The House today passed legislation liberalizing abortion restrictions in the District of Columbia, a measure that pro-choice advocates view as a turnaround that will gather political steam nationwide.

On a 238-189 vote, the chamber approved a bill providing $532 million in federal funds for the district's government that contained the abortion provision. The bill now moves to the Senate.

In a dramatic roll call that stunned lawmakers on both sides, the House voted 219-206 Wednesday against an amendment banning public financing of all abortions in the District of Columbia. As the final tally became apparent, pro-choice lawmakers on the chamber's floor embraced each other and roared with emotion.

It was the first congressional showdown on the issue since the Supreme Court decision last month enhancing state authority to limit abortion, and a reversal of a 222-186 House vote on the same question last summer.

Deadline For Area Races Falls At Noon On Friday

Area candidates for municipal elections have until noon Friday to file notice of candidacy.

Four of the six members of the Greenville City Council — Inez Fridley, Lorraine Shinn, Mildred Council and Rufus Huggins — filed for re-election.

Present Council member Nancy Jenkins has filed for the mayor's office and the Rev. William Hadden chose not to seek a new term.

Mayor Ed Carter has also filed for re-election to his post in the city government.

Two candidates have filed to challenge Mrs. Council and Huggins in their respective districts in November. Daniel T. "Danny" Brew put his name on the books in July for Ms. Council's District 1 seat and Sean Casey Dobyms filed Wednesday for the District 2 seat held by Huggins.

The District 4 seat vacated by Hadden is the only other contested race in the election as of this morning. Tom Johnson Jr., Jimmie Lee and Louis H. "Buddy" Zincone all filed in July for the seat.

Blanche Forbes is the only candidate so far for the District 5 Council seat being vacated by Mrs. Jenkins.

Farmville will hold its municipal balloting on Oct. 10, using the non-partisan election and run-off system. If necessary, the runoff will be held Nov. 7. Registration for the Farmville election will close Sept. 11, according to the Pitt County Board of Elections.

All other Pitt municipalities use the simple plurality method of election and will hold their municipal elections on Nov. 7. Registration books for the Nov. 7 election will close Oct. 9.

The elections office has prepared a municipal elections guide for Pitt County candidates. The guide includes information on handbill ordinance and posting campaign signs, and general information on each

Dobyms Seeks Seat In Council District 2

Sean Casey Dobyms filed Wednesday to challenge an incumbent for the District 2 seat on the Greenville City Council in the November elections.

Dobyms, the banquet manager at the Ramada Inn, said he felt it was time to involve the average resident in city government, and he called for a new generation of leaders for Greenville.

"I'm basically like most District 2 residents," Dobyms said. "I'm looking to get the common person involved in the government."

Dobyms said city government needs the participation of all parts of the community, and at all times. "I want to see that the public is getting involved in city government between elections, not just during elections."

Dobyms, a Greenville resident for the past year and a half, praised incumbent Rufus Huggins' civic record. "I feel like he (Huggins) would do a good job, but I feel like it's time to hand the reins to a new generation."

Dobyms said that with the growth of Greenville, the city has the potential to attract outside money from tourism. And he said the city needs to develop some attractions, such as the proposed convention center, to bring that money to the city.

Dobyms said the thrust of his campaign and service to Greenville if elected would be "to make the city government user friendly."

He is a member of the Pitt-Greenville Chamber of Commerce, and founded the Pitt-Greenville Restaurant Association.

Dobyms and his wife, Tammy Lynn, have a son, Michael.

Pitt Schools Award Diplomas To 34

Students, faculty and administrators from area schools coordinated their efforts to make Wednesday night's ceremonies for graduates of the countywide summer school program memorable.

The ceremonies were held in the D.H. Conley High School auditorium for 34 seniors who participated in and completed the Pitt County schools' summer program.

"The main reason we did this was for motivation and inspiration for children," said Ella Harris, summer school principal for grades nine through 12. "Since they didn't have a graduation in June, we gave them one in August. This milestone in their life should be recognized in some sort of ceremony."

Approximately 250 friends and family members were present for the ceremonies, according to Ms. Harris.

Seniors participating in the program from the county schools volunteered to have speaking roles in Wednesday's activities.

Graduation speakers were Tammy Hardee, D.H. Conley; Kyle Jarman, D.H. Conley, and Annette Keyes, J.H. Rose. Their respective topics centered around the past, present and future.

Amy Bell, a student from North Pitt High School, lead the invocation, while Anglea Guion, a D.H. Conley student, welcomed special guests.

Following the student speakers, Charles Ross, associate superintendent of instruction for Pitt County schools, spoke to the graduates on the topic "Think Big."

The graduates are: Cedric Prayer, Ayden-Grifton High School; Kristina Cooper, Paul Dixon, Angela Guion, Tammy Hardee, Mayfield Hugee, Kyle Jarman, Wanda Jenkins, Jeffrey Martens, Jerry McGowan, Bobby Owens, Joseph Scott and Toishea Wilson, D.H. Conley; Travis Ebron and Jonathan Moore, Farmville Central; Steve Fonville, Michelle Gray, Pam Jones, Annette Keyes, Mauricio Monk, Ken Pearson, George Robinson, Chris Savage, Helen Spell, Louis Tyson, Carol Williams and Tawana Worth, J.H. Rose; Amy Bell, Fredrick Best, Jeffrey Bradley, Andre Dixon, Angela Everett, Antonio Nelson and Nathaniel Smith, North Pitt High School.

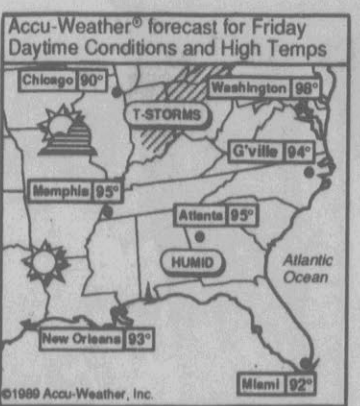

Two faculty members, Dennis Teel and Samuel King, provided music for the ceremonies.

The 34 seniors were among approximately 500 students from various grade levels in the Pitt schools who participated in the program, which ended Aug. 2.

The countywide summer school began June 27 at three Greenville schools. Grades one through three met at Eastern Elementary, grades four through eight at Wahl-Coates and grades nine through 12 at J.H. Rose High School.

The program is supported by the Basic Education Program, enacted by the General Assembly to fund a remedial summer school. In the past, summer school was self-supporting.

Neonatal Units Operating At Capacity

By Lane Dunn
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Neonatal intensive care units throughout North Carolina are operating at 100 percent capacity or more and the unit at Pitt County Memorial Hospital is no different, according to the director of neonatology at PCMH.

But Dr. Arthur Kopelman said that while overcrowding at the Pitt Memorial unit is a "very severe problem," the dilemma has been caused by a shortage of nurses willing to work in the unit, not by a lack of bed space or facilities.

The Associated Press said today that, according to a study, the 11 newborn intensive care units in the state routinely operate at more than 100 percent and average at least 98 percent of capacity.

"Being a nurse in the (neonatal intensive care) unit is rewarding but also can be extremely stressful," Kopelman said. "Especially when the nursery is overcrowded."

He said the neonatal intensive care unit at PCMH, which serves 29 counties, is equipped with 35 beds but there are only enough nurses to handle 24 patients. He said that sometimes that number is stretched to 28.

Based on the 24-bed capacity as dictated by available nurses, "We're always at 100 percent, sometimes over 100 percent," he said.

Kopelman said the hospital employs specially trained nursing assistants and respiratory therapists to take the workload off of the nurses.

The unit admits about 50 infants each month and sends them back to their area hospitals as soon as they are stable, Kopelman said. He said babies have been discharged from PCMH weighing as little as 2 1/2 pounds.

"Sending them back is essential for opening beds for more critical infants," Kopelman said.

Kopelman said that PCMH has one neonatologist and two full-time nurses that work with the other hospitals in eastern North Carolina. The staff at the hospitals are well-trained and there have never been any problems with sending infants back, Kopelman said.

He said that the problem is not just in this area but across the state. Last month PCMH received 18 calls for infants that it couldn't take. He said 15 of them were placed in North Carolina hospitals, some as far away as Winston-Salem.

He said the remaining three had to be placed in Virginia hospitals because there was not a "single bed open in the entire state."

Kopelman said that one infant died recently after a "several hour delay" while PCMH was trying to find a hospital with an open bed.

The hospital is trying more innovative efforts in recruiting nurses to work in the neonatal intensive care unit, Kopelman said.

But he said, "There are no quick and easy solutions."

Dr. Edward Lawson, director of neonatal-perinatal medicine at N.C. Memorial Hospital in Chapel Hill, told the Associated Press that his hospital discharges infants at 4.4 pounds, and that is below national standards.

Lawson told the news service that the intensive care nurseries for newborns in the state are dangerously crowded and more premature babies are being born.

Lawson termed the result a "revolving door" situation where babies often are sent back to smaller hospitals that are not properly equipped or staffed to take care of them.

"We've recently completed a survey that showed that the 11 newborn intensive care units in North Carolina often operate at 98 percent," Lawson said. "That is remarkably high when one considers that hospitals like to operate at about 80 percent capacity."

Lawson said he was not aware of babies dying for lack of ICU beds, but he said that could happen at any time, especially considering the state's growing population.

He told the news service that part of the problem is that while North Carolina officials for financial reasons have emphasized preventing premature births, they have all but ignored newborn intensive care in a state that ranks 46th in infant mortality.

Infant mortality rose from 11.6 deaths per 1,000 live births in North Carolina during 1986 to 12.1 deaths per 1,000 live births during 1987, according to the news service.

Forty-one other states have better infant-mortality rates than North Carolina.

Meeting Set

The Greenville Environmental Advisory Committee will meet today at 5:30 p.m. in the third floor conference room of the Community Building on the corner of Fourth and Greene streets.

Early Payment

Greenville residents can cut 2 percent off their 1989-90 city property taxes by paying their bills early, according to Floyd Little, city revenue collector.

Tax bills were mailed July 28. Taxpayers will receive a 2 percent discount if the bill is paid before Sept. 1. The tax collector's office in City Hall will be open additional hours from 5 p.m. until 7 p.m. between Aug. 28 and Aug. 31.

Support Group

A support group for people caring for a disabled spouse or other loved one in the home will meet at St. James United Methodist Church, 2000 E. Sixth St., at 7:30 p.m. Tuesday.

Freda Cross, a social worker at Pitt County Memorial Hospital, and Susan Redding, a nurse at the Creative Living Center, are leaders of the group.

Respite services for the one-hour meeting are available. To make reservations, call the Creative Living Center at 757-0303, from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. a day in advance.

Wednesday Thefts

Investigators said five thefts were reported to Greenville police Wednesday.

Officer S.C. Locke said two two-way radios with a combined value of $2,000 were taken from the Greenville Housing Authority office at 1103 Broad St. in a break-in reported at 6:59 a.m.; four tires and rims were taken from a car parked at Greenville Square Shopping Center in an incident reported at 11:18 a.m., and $350 worth of food was taken from 206B New St. in a break-in reported at 1:50 p.m.

Officer M.T. Scheid said $10 in change — half from a coin-operated drink machine and half from a cash register — was taken from 1502 N. Greene St. in a break-in reported at 7:40 a.m., while Officer H.D. Hines said three blank checks and a pager valued at $250 were taken from a car parked at 1106 Clark St. in an incident reported at 3:28 p.m.

Larceny Charge

Alton Lee Bell, 18, of Grimesland was arrested on larceny charges by Greenville police Wednesday.

Officer M.A. Jordan said Bell was charged in connection with the theft of $17.81 worth of merchandise — batteries, tire valves and a cassette tape — from the K mart store at Greenville Square Shopping Center at about 5:18 p.m.

Marijuana Found

In a joint operation, area law enforcement officers confiscated 33 marijuana plants in the south end of Pitt County on Monday.

Members of the Pitt County Sheriff's Department, the Greenville Police Department and the Farmville Police Department extracted the plants, which had an estimated street value of $52,000. No arrests have been made.

Dance Planned

The Teen Center will sponsor a dance Friday from 8 p.m. to midnight. Refreshments will be provided.

For more information, call 830-4566.

Board Meeting

The town of Grimesland will have its regular board meeting at 7 p.m. Tuesday at the town hall.

Pitt Students Join ECU Science Camp

ECU NEWS BUREAU

Several students from Pitt County were among the 209 academically gifted students in grades 7-10 that attended recent sessions of East Carolina University's annual summer science camp for gifted students.

The camp consisted of two week-long sessions, each designed for specific age groups. Each session featured small-group instruction in the students' choice of such areas of science as computers, photography, astronomy, analytical and creative chemistry, ecology/field biology and geology.

The camp also consisted of free and structured recreation periods and a nightly lecture series. The campers were lodged in a university dormitory and took their meals at the College Hill Dining Hall.

Campers were selected from among applicants on the basis of school recommendation, grades in science and math courses and achievement test scores.

Dr. Floyd Matheis is director of the science camp. Applications for the 1990 AG camp sessions will be accepted next spring, with an early May deadline.

Greenville area students participating were Shannon Casey, Frances Collins, Bronwyn Ito, Safa Hamze, Matthew Leggett, Patrick Weaver, Paayal Mehta, Greg Pear-sall, Luchara Sayles, Julie Wondolowski, Christopher Macleaga, Clark Gibson, Kevin Allegood, Jonathan Ames, Mary Beth Gray, Jessica Mega, Adrienne Murrell and Edward Rampersaud.

Attending from area towns were Elizabeth Smith, Ayden; Anna Foster, Route 2, Ayden; Sandra Moore, Route 1, Farmville; Rochelle Carlton, Route 3, Grifton; Nathan Barnhill II, Route 1, Bethel, and Shane Hudson, Route 1, Winterville.

Nancy LeAnn Crabtree, a junior accounting major in the East Carolina University School of Business, placed sixth in a national business students' competition recently in Orlando, Fla.

Ms. Crabtree won sixth place in an accounting skills competition held at the national leadership conference of Phi Beta Lambda honor society for future business leaders. Some 60 other winners of state and regional contests also competed in the event.

Ms. Crabtree had previously placed first in a similar competition held at the honor society's North Carolina Leadership Conference in Charlotte last spring.

The daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Crabtree of 1306 Tulip St., Clayton, and a 1987 graduate of Clayton High School, Ms. Crabtree will be president of ECU's Omicron Chapter of Phi Beta Lambda during the academic year 1989-90. She is also a member of Gamma Beta Phi and Phi Eta Sigma honor societies and of Zeta Tau Alpha social sorority.

Upon graduation from ECU, she plans to continue her studies toward the Master of Business Administration degree in accounting.

Cicippio Makes Televised Appeal For Release Of Shiite Cleric

"We the American people are always the victims of Israel's politics, and President Bush has not helped to free us."

Cicippio, choked with emotion, ended the statement with a message for his Lebanese wife, Elham.

"Goodbye, my wife. If you don't hear my voice and see my face again I want you to look after yourself and don't be sad and always remember me."

The handwritten statement from Revolutionary Justice Organization said in Arabic: "In response to Cicippio's request to delay the execution until 10 p.m., in the hope that his appeal would be fruitful and useful, it has been decided to grant a delay in the new deadline."

A Shiite source noted that Revolutionary Justice has threatened to kill hostages in the past but is not known to have carried out the threats.

A bearded man delivered the statement and the 90-second tape to a Western news agency in Beirut this afternoon.

Cicippio's captors had said they would kill him unless Israel freed Obeid by 6 p.m. Tuesday (11 a.m. EDT). The group then extended the deadline 48 hours.

Israel refused to free Obeid and offered to trade him for three Israeli soldiers and foreign hostages in Lebanon. The pro-Iranian Hezbollah, of which Obeid is reputed to be a member, rejected a swap.

Hezbollah is believed to be the umbrella for factions holding most of the 16 foreign hostages in Lebanon. The captives include eight Americans.

Yossi Ben Aharon, a senior aide to Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir, today said Israel was not changing its policy on Obeid. "We took this gentleman for purpose of release of our three prisoners, and this remains the objective," he said.

Cicippio, 58, of Norristown, Pa., was acting comptroller of the American University of Beirut when he was abducted Sept. 12, 1986.

The hostage held longest is Terry

A. Anderson, chief Middle East correspondent of The Associated Press. He was kidnapped March 16, 1985.

Shortly before the deadline was extended, U.N. envoy Marrack Goulding held a closed-door session in Beirut with Sheik Mohammed Hussein Fadlallah, Hezbollah's spiritual guide.

In south Beirut, where most of the hostages are believed held, Sheik Abbas Mousawi, a senior Hezbollah leader, said his group's response would be "ruthless" if the United States took military action.

"President Bush must think a million times before embarking on such a reckless adventure. I don't think he has forgotten the truck-bombing of the American marine base at Beirut airport," Mousawi said, referring to the 1983 attack that killed 241 U.S. servicemen at a military base in Lebanon.

Pentagon officials said the USS Belknap, flagship of the U.S. 6th Fleet, and the fleet commander canceled a visit to the Soviet city of Sevastopol in case Bush needs them, but that a military strike was unlikely. The aircraft carrier America cut short a visit to Singapore and headed to the Mediterranean.

Goulding, interviewed by telephone by ABC, said he had met two Shiite leaders and the charge d'affaires of the Iranian Embassy today. "Some of them have told me that Col. Higgins is probably dead, others have said to me they think he may still be alive. And I pray to God the latter group is right," he said.

"Let me make clear that my mission is not confined to Col. Higgins only," he added. "But I'm also here to say whether the U.N. can do anything to get under control the hostage crisis."

Higgins, of Lexington, Ky., was part of a U.N. observer force in Lebanon when he was kidnapped February 1988. His captors, the Organization of the Oppressed on Earth, accused him of being a spy and said in July 1988 that he had been sentenced to death.

Foreign Study

Greenville residents Vilma Lucille Deitering of 147 Birchwood Sands and Patrick Stanforth, of 2205 E. Fifth St. were among 33 persons who participated in this year's East Carolina University-sponsored summer sessions of study at the University of Costa Rica.

The program included courses of study in Spanish language, Latin American biology and anthropology with optional independent studies in the individual students' areas of interest.

Course Planned

The Greenville Recreation and Parks Department will offer a lifeguarding update course Monday through Aug. 17.

The 15-hour course will be taught from 6:30 p.m. to 8:30 p.m. at the City Pool on Myrtle Avenue and will include CPR and first aid.

Class size is limited to 15. A current Advanced Lifesaving Certificate is required before taking the course. For more information, contact Ben Whisner at 830-4563 from 9 a.m. to noon.

Permit Issued

The city of Greenville has issued a solicitation permit to Greenpeace Action for lobbying and fund raising.

The environmental group is permitted to canvas all areas of the city between 5 p.m. to 9 p.m. on weekdays and from 1 p.m. to 5 p.m. on Saturdays during August. The fund raising and lobbying is for environmental issues such as air and water pollution and off-shore drilling and nuclear reduction.

'Truth In Preference To Fiction'

Information, Diplomacy Are Weapons

Out of a confused, muddled Middle East comes yet another crisis for the United States. What to do about the alleged execution of Lt. Col. William Higgins by terrorists and death threats for other American hostages in Lebanon? How to walk the tightly strung terrorist tightrope without losing balance and tumbling?

There are no easy answers. Frustration outweighs facts; perceptions blur certainties. Under the hand of terrorism, the United States is caught in a powerful vise grip — smashed, immobile, between forces it can neither comprehend or effectively manipulate diplomatically.

Again, hindsight dictates better avoidance of such situations. But in reality being a victim of terrorism isn't always controllable. The hostages are already in captivity; the question at hand is how to keep them alive — if indeed they are alive — without bowing to the demands of terrorists.

'The sources of terrorism must be found through an effective intelligence network and eradicated.'

The answer lies within the strength of the United States' intelligence and diplomacy operations, because without better information, firepower is impotent.

A Shiite Moslem group, the Organization of the Oppressed on Earth, claimed Monday it hanged Higgins in retaliation for the Israeli kidnaping of Sheik Abdul Karim Obeid, a Shiite Moslem cleric, on July 28. The organization released a videotape showing the alleged body of Higgins swinging from a makeshift gallows. Then another Shiite group, the Revolutionary Justice Organization, promised to kill another hostage, Joseph Cicippio, by 11 a.m. today. By now, Cicippio may be dead and another hostage's life in question.

Because of the uncertainty of who is responsible for Higgins' death, and exactly when it occurred, military retaliation is not a viable solution. How can you strike an enemy whose name, face and location aren't known? It can't be done without wiping out one-fourth of the globe.

For that reason, this latest dilemma is a stringent test of how reliable and effective the nation's intelligence network really is. Those responsible must be identified with certainty if both preventive and punitive measures are to be effective.

It is also a test of the US-Israeli friendship. Israel is an American ally in a turbulent region — an ally whose actions helped create the problem. When that nation kidnaped Sheik Obeid, Israel's leaders must have known that action would place its allies in a vulnerable position.

Israel bears a portion of the blame for the dilemma. It must therefore accept some responsibility for unraveling the tangled string of events. Part of the terrorist strategy is to drive a wedge between America and Israel. While the United States should not let that occur, it should prompt its friends to help solve the problem. Israel, accordingly, should accept its role as an American ally.

The sources of terrorism must be found through an effective intelligence network and eradicated. Military action is appropriate when and if the correct target can be pinpointed. But until that time, accurate information and deft diplomacy become the nation's big guns against the politics of violence and intimidation.

Getting Off The Bus

Paul O'Connor

RALEIGH — As Gov. Jim Martin answered reporters' questions about the highway program last week, he looked much like a baseball player who has been traded a week before his team clinches the pennant.

Martin appeared happy that the package was about to become law. He just looked sad that he was no longer on the team that pushed it through.

The $9.1 billion highway program that became law last week, and which raised your gasoline taxes by a nickel a gallon, is as much Martin's baby as anyone's. Martin has pushed for a major roads package for at least two years and his Department of Transportation was instrumental in fashioning the compromises needed to win broad acceptance. But Martin jumped off the team bus a month ago when Democratic Senate leaders changed the revenue raising formula, mixing it with teacher and state employee pay raises.

The most astonishing thing about Martin's bus jumping, however, was that he did it alone. People he hired, people he appointed and people he helped get elected to office — in short, his team — stayed on the bus and joined the opposition.

During the last month, Martin's transportation secretary, Jim Harrington, continued to work for passage of the highway package even though Martin had come out against it. At the same time, Board of Transportation members, most of whom are Martin's appointees, continued to lobby for the package. Finally, many GOP House members including the minority leader, had spoken against the package for weeks. But when it came time to vote, they sided not with Martin, but with the Democrats.

'Martin jumped off the team bus a month ago when Democratic Senate leaders changed the revenue raising formula, mixing it with teacher and state employee pay raises.'

Martin was asked how his players could be suiting up for the other team. His answer wasn't convincing.

First, he said that he's never told his department heads that they have to tout his line on issues, only that they must accurately depict his position when they speak at the legislature. "They are free to have their own opinions," he said. "I've never asked them to have a monolithic opinion."

That seems to run headlong into history, however. It wasn't many years ago that Tommy Rhodes, his secretary of natural resources, had to drop his support for a phosphate ban to support Martin's opposition.

Secondly, Martin said that he couldn't demand loyalty from those he appoints to the transportation board. Without them and other supporters, he said, he would have never been elected. He can't ask such people to march blindly to his drumbeat.

That's true. But this was a major policy initiative involving a great deal of money, and a great deal of the governor's prestige. That's the kind of decision upon which a governor's administration is supposed to back him. The public elects the governor to make transportation policy, and should expect that the people he appoints will reflect the trust that they put in him.

Finally, Martin is correct when he says he can't expect loyalty from the GOP legislative delegation. In politics, it's every pol for himself, and these pols obviously thought they'd better stay on the bus.

Which raises another question. If Martin got his roads, and if he managed to keep his favorite issue — the bashing of Democratic legislative leaders — was he really sad about the outcome of the vote?

In baseball, players who get traded during a championship season get a share of the World Series paycheck that their former teammates win. It appears that the same thing happens in state politics.

A Refreshing Look At Governors

CHICAGO — A number of years ago, Charles K. McWhorter, a high-level lobbyist for American Telephone and Telegraph Co. and a man whose passion in life is music, attempted an experiment in bridging the world of politics and the arts. As he told me with wry amusement much later, he invited the then-governor of Illinois, a longtime resident of Chicago, to hear the orchestra of the National Music Academy at Interlochen, Mich., perform at Chicago's Orchestra Hall.

David Broder

The governor accepted the invitation and then asked, "Where is Orchestra Hall?"

That anecdote from the 1960s came to mind when the current governor of Illinois, James R. Thompson, played host at a downtown Chicago hotel to the National Governors' Assn. (NGA) annual summer meeting. On Sunday, the first night of the meeting, he took the governors to dine among the magnificent paintings in the Art Institute of Chicago. The next and final night, he brought the world-famous Chicago Symphony Orchestra from its Michigan Avenue home, Orchestra Hall, to play for the governors and their guests.

To be sure, many of the early arriving governors could be found with Thompson on Saturday afternoon at a shrine of popular culture called Wrigley Field. Some skeptics might mistakenly suggest that the Saturday diversion showed the governors to be incurably low-brow. They would be wrong. The way the Cubs have been playing baseball lately, it's a another art form, every bit as satisfying to the connoisseur as the Art Institute's Seurats and Zurbarans.

Cultural tastes tell a lot about people. In the Sixties and Seventies, the entertainments at these annual governors' meetings were a good deal more lavish than they are today. But they demanded no sophistication, leaning heavily on fireworks, limbo dancing, patter from Bob Hope or songs from John Denver. In Miami Beach, a nightclub comic told a joke that provoked a walkout by Michigan's Mormon Gov. George Romney. In Hershey, Pa., everyone rode the bumper cars.

But in this decade, governors are more worldly and their entertainments reflect the change. Thumbing through the mini-biographies in the convention program, I counted 41 graduate degrees among the 47 men and three women who run state governments. True, most of them are from law schools, but they also hold masters or doctorates in urban planning, economics, political science, journalism, social work, biology, chemistry and dentistry.

There are two who made it to Oxford as Rhodes Scholars and two who came out of Harvard Business School with the M.B.A.s that could have guaranteed them big bucks on Wall Street, had they chosen to go that route. Instead, they picked politics and, within that broad field, state government, as the arena in which to test their talents.

One of the Harvard M.B.A.s is freshman Gov. Buddy Roemer of Louisiana. Roemer has had a notably tough initiation, battling his fellow-Democrats in the legislature over budget cuts and losing a voters' referendum on a massive tax reform.

But after 16 months in office, the 45-year-old Roemer says, "I figure I'm at the peak of my profession. My state's got the highest unemployment rate in the country and maybe the worst dropout rate, so I've got the biggest challenge of anyone in government. What more could you ask?"

In the 1980s, the governors have become the principal catalysts for education reform and the great advocates for investment in the schools. No one is more fervent about education than those who have seen it change their lives, as it did for Govs. Bill Clinton of Arkansas or Garry E. Carruthers of New Mexico, among others. Clinton came out of Hope, Ark., and went to Georgetown, Oxford (as a Rhodes Scholar) and Yale law school. Carruthers grew up on a farm near Aztec, N.M., got two degrees from New Mexico State and finally a doctorate in economics at Iowa State.

'They are two of the 13 governors who have earned credentials in education by spending some of their productive years in college teaching. Their leadership in the Education Commission of the States, one of the principal engines of the school-reform movement, is a natural outgrowth of their earlier experiences.'

They are two of the 13 governors who have earned credentials in education by spending some of their productive years in college teaching. Their leadership in the Education Commission of the States, one of the principal engines of the school-reform movement, is a natural outgrowth of their earlier experiences.

These governors are politically committed and intellectually unimpaired. They invite Federal Reserve Board Chairman Alan Greenspan, who may be the smartest man in Washington, as their keynote speaker and throw probing questions at him. They are anything but parochial. Many of them have come to know European Community commissioners or Japanese trade officials as well as they know their own legislative leaders.

So it's not surprising that they know Manet from Monet and Rossini from Respighi. They are making state government as stimulating as an outing at the Art Institute, an evening with the Chicago Symphony — or even an afternoon at Wrigley Field.

Senate Panel OKs Vote On Lottery

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — Tempers flared briefly in a Senate committee over a proposal to let the public vote on having a statewide lottery, but the measure was approved and sent to the Senate floor.

Sen. Don Kincaid, R-Caldwell, jumped to the attack as soon as the committee began debating the bill, sponsored by the committee chairman, Sen. Ken Royall, D-Durham.

"I still think that this bill is not the best direction for the state to go," Kincaid said. "It's the beginning of state-sanctioned legalized gambling in the state."

Kincaid said a poll of school superintendents in California showed the vast majority believe the lottery there was harmful to education. North Carolina's lottery is intended to channel some $200 million a year to education.

Kincaid said that could lead lawmakers to cut back on other ways of funding schools, leaving education open to fluctuations based on lottery returns.

"The way to go should be, in my opinion, to tighten the budget even tighter than we have tightened it now," he said.

Kincaid also said the General Assembly was shirking its duty by letting the public vote on the lottery instead of enacting the games itself.

Kincaid later tried to bring up the issue of the state budget compromise in which highway construction funds have been diverted for two years to pay for higher salaries for teachers and state employees. Republicans have charged that the Senate engineered the shortfall to pave the way for lottery revenues and increase the chances the lottery will be approved.

Kincaid began to ask what would happen, "two years down the road, if we're short about $300 million..."

But Royall gruffly cut him off, saying, "Senator Kincaid, let's stick to this bill."

When Kincaid tried to complete his sentence, Royall interrupted again, saying, "You've overstepped your bounds now. ... You're out of order. I'm not gonna recognize you."

Most of the other comments on the bill were favorable.

Sen. Jim Johnson, R-Cabarrus, said the time has come for a lottery referendum.

"If the people of North Carolina are intelligent enough to understand the question of changing their constitution, they're certainly intelligent enough to make a decision on a lottery," he said. "Until the lottery issue is resolved, pressures on individual legislators will be untold," Johnson said. "And no matter which side wins, if it's done in the General Assembly, the other side will claim foul play."

And Sen. Helen Marvin, D-Gaston, said Royall's bill specifies that lottery funds will not be used to supplant other education money.

"North Carolina is not California," she added. "There have been no problems with corruption and the Mafia and all of these dire predictions of opponents."

Sen. Bill Goldston, D-Rockingham, said Virginia's recent adoption of a lottery is putting pressure on border counties.

"Our local papers are even publishing the North Carolina winners," he said. "It's a voluntary tax and it could be used for the benefit of the citizens of North Carolina and I much prefer them over the citizens of Virginia."

The bill was approved on a voice vote and will go before the full Senate today.

Currently, the bill calls for a referendum on Nov. 7, 1989 with a lottery commission to begin work in July 1990 if approved by the voters.

Landing gear remains up on left side of Piedmont jet during its landing at the Piedmont Triad Airport near Greensboro

Piedmont Pilot Stays Out Of Limelight

By Tom Foreman Jr.
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

GREENSBORO, N.C. — Passengers praised the pilot of a Piedmont Airlines jet who brought the aircraft down safely after a rubber wheel chock jammed the landing gear — and they thanked God they were alive.

"I opened my eyes, saw the plane was in one piece, thanked God and got the hell off," said Michael Maher, 31, of Washington.

A Boeing 737-400 with 100 people aboard and piloted by a 20-year veteran who wasn't scheduled to make the flight, the plane came to a skidding halt with a wing and engine scraping the runway Wednesday after its left landing gear failed to lower. No one was injured.

"I've had worse landings on regular flights," said Tammy Rudd, 26, also of Washington.

Airline officials declined to identify the pilot of Piedmont Flight 1489, but he was identified by his family as Larry Fuda, a 20-year flying veteran from Rocky Mount, Va., The Roanoke Times and World News reported in today's editions.

Fuda, 48, declined interviews Wednesday night as he rested at his home with his family.

"He's just glad it worked out," said his wife, Margaret. "The whole crew did just what they were supposed to do."

"This time it worked out the way it was supposed to work. Sometimes the crew does the right things and things don't work out as well," she said.

"He says he doesn't consider himself a hero," Mrs. Fuda said.

The plane was bound for Charlotte from Washington National Airport but was diverted to Greensboro after a light on the jet's instrument panel showed the landing gear wasn't locked, said USAir spokesman David Shipley. Piedmont is a subsidiary of USAir Group.

The plane was sent to the Greensboro airport because it has the longest runway in the state and Piedmont has a maintenance hangar and a larger staff with technical expertise there, officials said. The plane circled the airport for more than an hour as the pilot and Piedmont officials on the ground collaborated on ways of shaking the gear loose.

A flash of flame and smoke flew from the engine as it dragged the runway. When it came to a stop, fire crews hosed down the left side of the plane as passengers and crew evacuated by sliding down two emergency chutes shortly before 11 a.m.

"I was praying, I had my rosary, I was saying Mass — I just knew we weren't going to crash," said Marie Fay of McLean, Va., and Narragansett, R.I., who was chain smoking and sweating profusely after telephoning relatives. "God and the pilot were with us."

Phillip Powell, an air safety investigator with the National Transportation Safety Board, said investigators found the chock — a triangular rubber block 30 inches long and 6 inches high used to brace the wheels of parked planes — wedged between two wheels on the left landing gear.

In-flight efforts to shake the wheels loose failed and, after the landing, the gear remained jammed.

Powell said officials did not know whether the incident was an accident or sabotage. It was unknown when the chock was last seen or where the chock was when the plane took off, but officials said it is not normal procedure to place a chock in a wheel well.

Chocks normally are removed by the ground crew before the plane leaves the gate, said Powell and J. Daniel Brock, USAir's vice president of marketing services. They said they had never before seen a malfunction from a wheel chock that jammed landing gear.

Boeing spokesman Tom Cole said a gear-impaired landing is "unusual but it is not unheard of."

"I would have to say that in a gear problem, the probability of a bad accident (is) not very high because the airplanes are designed to handle this," Cole said. "The bellies of the airplanes and the engines themselves are hardened to sustain sliding. ... Landings like this are thought of and precautions are taken in the design of the airplane to allow for it."

The passengers, some of whom broke into tears while others applauded when the plane came to a halt, saved their highest praise for the pilot.

"I can't say enough wonderful things," said passenger Carolyn B. Long, wife of former Louisiana Sen. Russell B. Long. She was traveling to visit her 93-year-old mother in Yanceyville, N.C.

"I went to the pilot when we got off and I stuck my thumb up like this," said passenger Richard Kochan who demonstrated a thumbs-up sign. He said the pilot looked at him and pointed to the sky.

The plane carried 94 passengers and six crew, including the pilot, said Shipley. Piedmont took delivery of the jetliner in December 1988 and has had no problems with it or with the 737-400 fleet in general, he said.

Passengers said the pilot put the aircraft through maneuvers designed to shake loose the stuck landing gear. The jetliner also did a touch-and-go landing on one wheel before it landed in an attempt to shake loose the landing gear.

"It was kind of like a roller-coaster, kind of fun," said Army Sgt. Debbie McDorman of Washington, and the landing "was just as smooth as if he was on wheels."

But Judith S. Spanger, who was going to the Bahamas for vacation, said she did not enjoy the maneuvers.

"It was terrifying," she said. "They told us that the gear was jammed, and then went up and down real fast, and from side to side."

"The plane was really shuddering like we were going to crash."

"It was like an amusement park," said Marlyne Lipferi of Washington, "and I don't like amusement parks."

Fuda was not originally scheduled to pilot the flight, according to Donnie Campbell, a retired Piedmont pilot and neighbor of Fuda's.

"He just picked this trip up," Campbell said. "He was supposed to work Friday night, but they're having a 'Farewell to Piedmont' party in Roanoke Friday night, and he wanted to go to that. So he just picked up a flight that somebody dropped."

Fuda arrived at home Wednesday night and began calling relatives to tell them he was doing well.

"He's pooped," said Margaret Fuda. "I've been giving him kisses and hugs since he got home."

Anti-Drug Drive

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

STATESVILLE, N.C. — A new program will allow Iredell County residents to fight drugs by paying their water bill.

Utilities customers can contribute to a special Crime Stoppers anti-drug fund by adding a donation to their monthly bill as part of a program that exists in only a few areas of the country.

Statesville, Troutman and two Iredell water companies will participate in the program, which was announced Wednesday and starts this month.

"We've made the fight against drugs something all citizens can participate in," said Tip Nicholson, chairman of the Greater Statesville Crime Stoppers board of directors.

If every Iredell water customer donated $1 a month, the fund could reach more than $16,000 monthly and nearly $200,000 yearly.

Proceeds from the National Balloon Rally in Statesville on Sept. 16th also will go to the fund.

Undercover officers will use the money, managed by the Statesville Crime Stoppers board, to buy drugs and pay informants.

"The motivating force in the narcotics industry is money," said Statesville Police Chief Robert Warsaw. "It takes money to fight money."

Crime Stoppers, an Albuquerque-based international program that has more than 1,000 branches worldwide, pays informants up to $1,000 for information leading to an arrest or conviction.

Iredell joins only about six other billing donation plans nationwide, said Tim Kline, president and executive director of Crime Stoppers International in Albuquerque.

Conference Likely To Settle Budget

RALEIGH — A House-Senate conference committee is expected to meet today, Saturday and possibly Sunday in an effort to iron out differences over a $1.4 billion spending bill.

"Hopefully, by Monday, we'll have something we can vote on," said Sen. Henson Barnes, D-Wayne, president pro tem of the Senate.

The bill, passed in June by the Senate, prompted hours of House debate on Tuesday as lawmakers twice voted down a 50 percent salary increase for legislators and approved restrictions on poor women seeking abortions.

Rep. Dan DeVane, D-Hoke, said that would not be an issue in the conference committee because both the House and Senate have agreed to a 12 percent raise.

The House also approved an amendment to make it more difficult for a poor woman to qualify for a state-funded abortion — a budget area to which $424,000 has been appropriated.

The House also voted Tuesday night to defeat amendments to:

— Raise the compulsory school age from 16 to 18 in an attempt to curb dropouts.

— Provide staff for Democratic and Republican caucuses.

— Limit the growth of state government.

— Allow schools flexibility in using funds for new curriculum to reduce class size.

— Pump $500,000 a year to North Carolina State University for aquaculture.

— Add five more SBI agents to expand the drug abuse resistance education program. The bill still would pay for six in the biennium.

— Delete the proposed salary increase for the governor, which would go from $109,728 to $116,316.

— Block funding for any organizations advocating "illegal or immoral" activities, an amendment sought by Rep. Steve Arnold, R-Guilford, to keep UNC funds from gay and lesbian groups.

Much of the bill continues funding of the eight-year Basic Education Program, which would consume $77.4 million in 1989-90 and $188.7 million in 1990-91. About $32 million goes to the Department of Correction, much of it to upgrade prisons in response to federal lawsuits.

The Department of Human Resources would receive $86 million over the biennium, including $6 million for the mentally ill, $3.3 million for aid to families with dependent children and $13.5 million for Medicaid to pregnant women and infants who are below 150 percent of the federal poverty level.

There are major difference between the House and Senate on dozens of Human Resources provisions, many of the Justice Department appropriations and some education funds.

Managers Of Durham HUD Project Report Residents Will Keep Homes

By Robin P. Teater
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

DURHAM — The managers of a federal housing project at the center of an investigation into influence-peddling and mismanagement at HUD have tried to calm fears that their doors may be closing, but some residents say the controversy has disrupted their lives.

"I hope they finish this thing up with HUD so everyone can get back to being a happy family," said Wilma Smith, 54, who has lived at the Durham Hosiery Mill housing project in east Durham for almost two years.

The $15 million housing project, which opened in November 1987, is one of several U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development projects criticized for alleged influence-peddling and mismanagement under former Housing Secretary Samuel Pierce.

Pierce will testify next month before the House Government Operations subcommittee on housing and employment about his possible role in approving funds for the project despite objections by several local and Washington-based HUD officials.

Critics said the project was too expensive, was adjacent to railroad tracks and was believed to be built atop a toxic waste dump.

Pierce has said he had no direct role in deciding what projects the agency funded. But Shirley McVay Wiseman, former assistant secretary for housing, testified under oath that Pierce ordered her to approve money for the Durham project.

HUD records show the project developed by John L. Allen of Myerson-Allen Co. Inc. of Boston ran into financial trouble and languished for six years. Funding was finally approved after Allen hired two Republican consultants.

Allen paid $25,000 to GOP political consultant Lou Kitchin of Atlanta and $12,500 to state Rep. Harold J. Brubaker of Asheboro, according to records in the Durham City-County Planning Department.

Kitchin has said he had not used his influence as southeastern political director of the Bush-Quayle campaign to fund the Hosiery Mill but only helped Allen "put his proposal together."

Brubaker said he only brought Allen and Kitchin together and collected no fees, only reimbursement for airfares and expenses.

Charles Markham, then mayor of Durham, was among the proponents of the project. He has denied using any social ties to convince Pierce to approve the mill renovation in 1985. Markham and Pierce were associated with the same law firm in the 1960s.

"We are not social friends," Markham said in a recent interview.

"My contacts with him in the last 24 years have been very infrequent and very casual."

Markham wrote several letters urging approval of the mill project and met with Pierce's executive assistant Deborah Dean.

"These conversations were for us to set out why we felt this project would be good for Durham," Markham said. "I still think it's a good project."

In light of the HUD investigation, managers of the project recently sent a memo to reassure residents that they would not lose their homes.

"Our concern is that residents will misunderstand," said Janice Daley, a regional manager for Myerson-Allen. "We've been kind of quelling the rumors and doing the best we can. We said 'Nobody is going to make you move.'"

Opponents have criticized the project's location near downtown and adjacent to a section of small, ramshackle houses in what was formerly a mill village called Edgemont. But Ms. Daley said the mill is part of the area's renovation. Nearby older houses are being given a facelift, and new low-income houses are under construction.

"We feel like this is the beginning of revival," Ms. Daley said. "We feel real positive about this part of the city."

Ms. Daley said the complex has been full since spring. The 174 low-income elderly and disabled people occupy one- and two-bedroom and efficiency apartments. The rent is 30 percent of their income.

"The average person probably pays $100 a month," she said.

The housing project bears reminders of the old, red brick mill, which was built in 1902 and shut down in 1936. The original elongated windows flood the building with light, and the high ceilings display the old wooden ceiling joists. Many of the brick walls have been exposed.

In 1907 the mill, which was placed on the National Register of Historic Places in 1978, employed 1,000 workers and by 1910, Durham Hosiery Mills Corp. was the world's largest manufacturer of cotton hosiery.

After it was closed, the complex was used by the American Red Cross during World War II and later as a tobacco redrying and storage facility.

The four buildings of the complex have been connected with glass-enclosed walkways. All of the apartments are carpeted and include private bathrooms.

House Kills Ban On Spanking

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — Corporal punishment will remain the law of North Carolina after the House defeated a bill that would have allowed some school systems to participate in a program that would eliminate spanking for up to two years.

The House on Wednesday voted 56-49 against the bill, which would have set up voluntary pilot programs in no more than 16 school systems. Those school systems would have used only alternatives to corporal punishment, such as in-school suspension, for up to two years.

North Carolina and Florida are the only two states in the country that do not allow school systems to do away with corporal punishment, said Rep. Harry Payne, D-New Hanover. And Rep. John Kerr, D-Wayne, said the law is a good one.

"We're not talking about child abuse," Kerr said. "We're talking about the right of teachers to keep order in our schools."

The program would try to determine "whether or not corporal punishment is a good thing," Payne said. "That's a honest question. We ought not be afraid to look at honest questions."

Payne spoke for the legislation instead of Rep. Marie Colton, D-Buncombe, the bill's sponsor and a longtime opponent of corporal punishment. Ms. Colton had laryngitis on Wednesday.

He warned the legislators that if the bill passed, opponents of corporal punishment would continue to try to weaken the statute allowing spanking.

"If we don't stop it now, we're going to see it again," he said.

Rep. Michael Decker, R-Forsyth, agreed with Kerr.

"Corporal punishment is not there to beat the kids," he said. "It's there to be a deterrent."

Payne reminded the Legislature that participation was voluntary. Principals, assistant principals and teachers would vote in a secret ballot and then the school board would decide whether to voluntary for the program, he said.

The program could be continued for a second year only if the program were approved a second time, he said.

"Surely, if feelings are as strong as you believe, this would be an issue," Payne said.

Drug Tests

CHARLOTTE (AP) — All North Carolina sheriff's departments soon might be required to give drug tests before hiring deputies, an official setting the standards says.

Cabarrus County Sheriff Robert Canaday said he explained the proposal this week to about 78 sheriffs attending the North Carolina Sheriffs' Association Convention in Boone.

"I have been doing it in my department since July or August of last year. It's really not that big of a deal," said Canaday, chairman of the N.C. Sheriffs' Training and Standards Commission, which endorsed the proposal last spring.

A public hearing is scheduled for September to review the proposal. If the commission votes to adopt the policy, it would go into effect soon after, Canaday said.

Library Grant

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (AP) — The Academic Affairs Library at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill has been awarded a $153,000 grant from the National Endowment for the Humanities to preserve manuscripts in the Southern Historical Collection.

The library could receive an additional $25,000 grant from the endowment if it matches that amount through its own fund-raising effort.

The grants are part of more than $15 million in awards by the endowment to 25 U.S. libraries, archives and other repositories for preservation projects. Those awards are expected to preserve the 167,000 embrittled volumes that would be lost because of physical deterioration.

Founded in 1929, the Southern Historical Collection includes diaries, letters, business records, photographs, oral histories and other material documenting the South from the 18th century to the present.

Warrants Issued

GASTONIA, N.C. (AP) — Arrest warrants have been issued for two men who are charged with stealing one of two vans from the Cornerstone Christian Center, where they were taking part in a 90-day alcohol and drug rehabilitation program.

The men had not been located by Wednesday night.

Bill Kauffman, the center's executive director, said the men were supposed to take some old clothes to the county landfill and run a second errand for the center.

The men had been with the program about three weeks.

Brother Killed

WILKESBORO, N.C. (AP) — The brother of the Surry County sheriff was found shot to death in Wilkes County, authorities said Wednesday.

Lonnie Dean Hall, 41, of Dobson was shot four times with a .38-caliber pistol late Tuesday night, said Wilkes County Sheriff's Det. M. Doug Cotton. Hall was a brother of W.R. Hall, the sheriff of Surry County.

Cotton said that the shooting apparently was the result of a domestic dispute.

James Frederick Stevenson, 24, was charged with murder Wednesday morning after surrendering to authorities, Cotton said. He was jailed without bond.

Hall was shot at the trailer of Donna Hooker Stevenson, who had been legally separated from Stevenson for about three months, Cotton said.

Wet Month

CHARLOTTE (AP) — July was one of North Carolina's wettest in recent years, weather and agricultural officials say.

It's been good for some farmers, such as corn growers, but it's been a headache for others, such as those who grow tomatoes and cantaloupes.

National Weather Service stations in several North Carolina cities reported above average rainfall last month, with measurable quantities falling on 16 of 31 days in July in some regions.

The Raleigh area got 5.46 inches of rain last month, 1.08 inches above normal, and had received 34.72 inches of rain for the year, 9.43 inches above normal.

"This is the wettest July since 1985," said Phillip Duncan of the National Weather Service office in Raleigh. "It is not a record month, by any stretch, but it sure has been wet, especially compared to last year."

Conservationists Report Increased Discharges Of Carcinogens In Air

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — Industrial discharges of cancer-causing chemicals increased by 3 percent between 1987 and 1988, despite a modest decline in the total emissions of toxic air pollutants in North Carolina, according to a study.

The N.C. Environmental Defense Fund, a private conservation group that compiled the study from federal records, said the findings showed the need for more stringent controls on air toxins.

"This year's rise in carcinogen emissions is a dangerous warning signal," said Edward H. Norman, an epidemiologist with the group, which has headquarters in Raleigh. "To stop this toxic assault on North Carolina's skies, the state has to adopt tough new air-pollution regulations immediately."

The state Environmental Management Commission has proposed regulations that would control 103 toxic air pollutants that pose the most potential for harm in North Carolina.

Toxic air pollutants are those potentially harmful to human health. They include carcinogens, or cancer-causing pollutants.

North Carolina industries discharged nearly 100 million pounds of unregulated air toxins in 1987, 10th among the 50 states, according to the most recent complete compilation of industry emissions by the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency.

"The most shocking thing is that these releases are now totally legal," Steven J. Levitas, director of the N.C. Environmental Defense Fund, said on Wednesday. "The proposed regulations would require North Carolina industries to figure out how to profit without polluting."

Most state and federal regulations now focus on the primary air pollutants: sulfur dioxide, ozone, carbon monoxide, lead, nitrogen oxides and particulates. Limited controls apply to only seven air toxins: arsenic, asbestos, benzene, beryllium, mercury, radionuclides and vinyl chloride.

The Environmental Management Commission, however, has spent five years developing its proposed air-toxin regulations, which many industries have opposed.

Joe E. Harwood, environmental chairman for the N.C. Citizens for Business and Industry, said industries wanted to make sure that the commission balances the economic costs of the proposed rules with their likely environmental benefits.

"We'll be speaking at the hearing for sure," he said.

The commission probably will vote on the proposed rules this fall. They would set standards effective in December for 82 compounds. But the commission would delay for one year the enforcement of standards for 21 compounds, pending further scientific studies.

"This year is to be used to have a scientific advisory board take another look at the experimental data," said Dr. Russell D. Hageman, assistant chief of air quality planning for the state. "They are all carcinogens on which there are different opinions on the experimental data."

The Environmental Defense Fund report states: "If adopted, these rules would represent a significant first step toward the goal of reducing toxic air emissions and cleaning up the air we breathe."

Norman, who wrote the report, said he was encouraged that many North Carolina industries reduced their total air emissions between 1987 and 1988. But he said he was disturbed that emissions of cancer-causing pollutants had increased during that span.

"There are some good signals from this," he said. "We're not trying to spread the message that everything is getting worse. There are some real reductions. But if you look at some of the most dangerous chemicals, it's definitely getting worse."

The group based its study on a survey of the state's top 100 air polluters last year. It compiled the report from industry reports filed under the federal "community right-to-know" law, which required industries for the first time last summer to report their emissions of more than 300 toxic chemicals. More than 800 North Carolina industries filed such reports with the EPA last year, showing nearly 100 million pounds of toxic air emissions overall and 12.7 million pounds of cancer-causing chemicals in 1987.

Industries were required to file their 1988 emissions reports by July 1.

Total emissions for the top 100 polluters dropped by more than 9 million pounds between 1987 and 1988, according to the report. It credited the decline to more accurate reporting by industries, changes in manufacturing processes, recycling and waste-reduction efforts.

Emissions of cancer-causing air pollutants increased by 3.2 percent among the top dischargers of such chemicals, the report said.

Proposed Law Would Create Agency To Fund Waste Units

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — Counties would get help paying for solid waste disposal through an authority that could issue up to $50 million in bonds, supporters of the proposal said.

Disposal of solid waste is a problem in every North Carolina county, said Sen. Jim Speed, D-Franklin.

"This is a means of addressing the problem in a realistic manner," he told the House Finance Committee on Wednesday. "It's going to cost, no matter how it does."

The bill received a favorable report from the committee despite concerns that it set up "creative financing."

"I hope county commissioners realize this creative financing is going to come back to haunt them one day," said Rep. John Kerr, D-Wayne.

The bill would set up the N.C. Solid Waste Management Capital Projects Finance Agency through $5 million already approved for a revolving loan fund. The agency would establish a Revenue Bond Debt Service Reserve fund that will issue bonds, creating a potential loan pool of $50 million for solid waste management.

"This is another major step toward resolving a big problem in North Carolina," said Rep. Dennis Wicker, D-Lee.

The agency would have the authority to issue revenue bonds and use revenues from bond issues to make loans to local governments for solid waste management facilities.

The loans could be secured by a pledge of full faith and credit from the local government; pledge of revenues generated by the management facility; or a pledge of other non-tax revenues.

Rep. Billy Watkins, D-Granville, said the bill allowed county commissioners to raise taxes to pay for the facility without putting the tax to a vote.

But Rep. Joe Hackney, D-Orange, said fees would be used to pay for the solid waste facility.

"Arguments against this bill seemed to be based on the idea that solid waste is going to suddenly disappear," he said. That, he said, is very unlikely.

Japanese Firm May Buy Peat Lands

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — A Japanese company might buy more than 100,000 acres of environmentally sensitive land above the Pamlico and Albemarle sounds, a move that could rekindle plans to mine peat and produce electricity on the property.

An $8.1 million bid by Nissho Iwai American Corp., a U.S. subsidiary of a Japanese trading company, topped an offer by the Conservation Fund, which had hoped to buy the land to protect it from development.

The fund, a conservation group based in Arlington, Va., had a contract to buy the land for $7 million — if nobody bid more than $7.1 million.

Richard P. Ludington, a Chapel Hill lawyer who works for the fund, said the group was disappointed it fell short in its attempt to buy the land.

"We had worked long and hard to come up with the funds ... and to plan for some of the conservation uses," he said.

Because the current owner, First Colony Farms Inc., is in bankruptcy proceedings, sale of the property cannot be completed until a court approves it.

In the meantime, Ludington said his group was considering another attempt to outbid Nissho Iwai. "We're evaluating whether we want to up the ante still higher," he said.

Wayne S. Leary of New Bern said the Japanese company was providing the money to buy the land in a deal with his company, Peat Energy Inc., and Westinghouse Electric.

He said they were considering using the land for peat mining and a power plant. "But everything is very preliminary," he said. "We don't even know if the property is going to be obtained or not."

Peat is a layer of spongy earth formed by rotted leaves and twigs in boggy areas, about 4 to 10 feet deep.

If the purchase goes through, Leary said, the prospective buyers would consider several uses for the land, including a wildlife habitat.

The 104,000 acres is spread over Tyrell, Dare and Washington counties in two large tracts. First Colony had planned to mine peat on some of the land and use it to fire electricity-producing power plants, but environmental groups contested whether the project should be allowed under federal environmental protection laws.

In August 1988, the Environmental Protection Agency declared much of the land as protected wetlands. Mining on wetlands requires permits from the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers and is subject to public scrutiny.

The pending sale has alarmed environmentalists, who say mining for peat would cause severe runoff problems in nearby sounds.

"That, in my opinion, is a real missed opportunity because that land and what happens to it is going to be real critical to what happens to the Albemarle and Pamlico sounds," said Derb S. Carter, a Raleigh lawyer who represented the national Wildlife Federation in the action that led to the EPA's wetlands decision.

Some of the land borders the Alligator River National Wildlife Refuge and the Swanquarter National Wildlife Refuge.

"That's probably one of the most sensitive areas environmentally in the entire state," said Todd L. Miller, executive director of the N.C. Coastal Federation. "We're talking about thousands and thousands of acres of wetlands."

Helms Amendment On Art Funding Has Broad Range

By Elizabeth Kastor
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — The realization that Sen. Jesse Helms's amendment banning funding of "indecent" and otherwise offensive art would directly affect the Smithsonian Institution, the National Gallery of Art and other organizations sent a ripple of alarm through Washington's cultural community this week.

Although the amendment was specifically aimed at the National Endowment for the Arts, its wording and placement mean it would apply to all agencies funded under the Interior Appropriations bill, Capitol Hill sources confirmed Wednesday.

Other groups affected are the National Endowment for the Humanities and a number of Washington arts organizations directly supported by Congress.

"Is it possible to present the history of the United States Constitution without offending somebody?" asked Roger Kennedy, director of the National Museum of American History, a Smithsonian bureau. "Because that is what it is about. The answer is that it's not."

Helms could not be reached for comment, but a Helms spokesman said, "He did tell me to tell you that he doesn't care if it's the Defense Department, the FAA, the Department of Agriculture or whoever. They shouldn't be able to do this type of stuff."

The amendment would prohibit federal funding to "promote, disseminate or produce" a variety of work, including "depictions of sadomasochism, homo-eroticism, the exploitation of children, or individuals engaged in sex acts... material which denigrates the objects or beliefs... of a particular religion or non-religion" and "material which denigrates, debases, or reviles a person, group or class of citizens on the basis of race, creed, sex, handicap, age or national origin."

Critics, including Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan, D-N.Y., Sen. John Chafee, R-R.I., and a broad range of arts advocates, have pointed to the difficulty of defining "indecent" and "obscene" and assailed the amendment as too broad and intrusive.

Like several earlier House and Senate amendments to the bill, Helms's proposal was a response to criticism over NEA funding for controversial work by artists Robert Mapplethorpe and Andres Serrano. The Senate's bill, passed last Wednesday night, must still go through the House-Senate conference committee.

The amendment is part of a $10.9 billion Interior bill, which allocates money for such agencies as the National Park Service and the Bureau of Indian Affairs. Both of these would be covered by the amendment.

"Heavens — it could outlaw almost anything the (Humanities) endowment funds," said John Hammer, director of the National Humanities Alliance, which represents organizations such as research libraries and scholarly associations. "It could affect virtually all study of religious texts," he said. "The possibilities are endless for what could be done with it, ranging from art criticism to history."

One Smithsonian staff member speculated that a National Museum of Natural History exhibit about evolution or creationism could be considered to denigrate religious or nonreligious beliefs.

The Helms spokesman responded to Smithsonian concerns: "I don't think there will be that much of an effect, if they're portraying something for historical purposes, but then again I don't think there's a necessity to show sadomasochism, homoeroticism, the exploitation of children or sex acts in order to have an accurate reading of history or science or any of the other things. I think you're really going to have to look for an instance where this provision will prevent academic research."

"We do find the ambiguity of the amendment and the absence of standards or definitions something that could prove troublesome," Smithsonian spokeswoman Madeleine Jacobs said Tuesday. "We are informing the appropriate appropriations committees of our concern."

National Gallery spokeswoman Ruth Kaplan said NGA Director J. Carter Brown could not be reached for comment.

Farmers Spend On Operations

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Farmers spent $118.4 billion in 1988 on animals, feed, labor, machinery and other items needed to raise crops and livestock, the Agriculture Department says.

The 1988 figure represented a 7.5 percent increase over the $110.1 billion spent in 1987, the department said Wednesday in the report, "Farm Production Expenditures."

Still, the figure falls short of the record $131.8 billion farmers spent in 1981, just before the general financial crunch that stalled expansion in the nation's agricultural sector.

Annual spending by farmers reached its nadir this decade in 1986 — $106 billion — when many massively cut back their capital investments during a time of plummeting land values and rising debt burdens.

Average expenditures per farm were $54,956, an increase of $4,165 from 1987.

Bush May Veto S&L Proposal

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — President Bush today threatened to veto the $157 billion bailout of the savings and loan industry nearing a final vote in Congress unless it is changed to exclude the cost from the federal deficit.

Bush sent his veto warning to congressional leaders a few hours before the House was scheduled to vote on the plan, which would close or merge hundreds of insolvent S&Ls.

The Senate was expected to vote on the same proposal later today, assuming the House approved it.

The veto message threatened one of the critical pieces of legislation making its way through Congress this year.

Bush's objection to the bailout plan centers on the method for calculating the cost in the federal deficit. The legislation would balloon the budget deficit but the bailout cost would not be included in calculations requiring automatic spending cuts in federal programs.

Bush favors evading the cuts by simply keeping the spending out of the deficit in the first place.

"If the conference report is presented to me in its current form, I will veto the bill," Bush said.

"While Gramm-Rudman-Hollings is not perfect, it represents the only available institutional requirement for fiscal discipline by the Congress and the executive branch," Bush said. He was referring to the law that requires automatic spending cuts if the deficit exceeds specified targets.

"Exempting $44 billion in spending from this budget process... would be unprecedented. It would also seriously undermine the future value of Gramm-Rudman-Hollings as a source of budgetary restraint, risking adverse effects on both markets and the economy," the president said.

He added that he was "prepared to work with Congress to bridge the divergent positions on the financing issue" to preserve the budgetary discipline, and he added, "It is essential to resolve this dispute this week before Congress adjourns for the August recess."

Treasury Department officials have said previously they are open to compromise on the accounting issue, provided the final agreement does not set a precedent for circumventing the deficit-control law.

Candidate Files

CHARLOTTE (AP) — A third black Republican has filed for an at-large seat on the city council.

Darryl Broome, 28, filed Wednesday with about 15 supporters gathered at the elections office, saying he wants "a return to Judeo-Christian moral and family values."

Broome, a conservative who campaigned for presidential candidate Pat Robertson, paid his $120 filing fee in $1 bills, saying he would be a "watchdog" over tax dollars.

At least seven Republicans will compete in a Sept. 26 primary. Four will be the GOP's candidates in the Nov. 7 general election.

Murder Charge

CHARLOTTE (AP) — A Charlotte man has been charged with murder in the shooting death last March of a 20-year-old man.

Darrell J. Ward, 18, was arrested Wednesday night by Charlotte police. He is charged in the March 24 killing of Tracy Grier, who was shot once with a handgun outside a Charlotte apartment building.

No details of the shooting were available.

Truitt and attorney Ellis Rubin appear before House subcommittees at hearing Wednesday

Seaman Says Navy, News Media 'Ruined' Him With Iowa Reports

LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — Gunner's Mate Third Class Kendall Truitt, a survivor of the USS Iowa explosion, accused the Navy and the news media Wednesday of "ruining my life" through what he called unjustified reports implicating him in the blast that killed 47 sailors in one of the battleship's gun turrets.

Testifying before two House Judiciary subcommittees, Truitt said: "Whatever happened to the individual right of privacy? And the right to trial by jury, not by the press? I understand that the press has a right to print, but does that include printing lies?"

Some media accounts, based mostly on anonymous sources, said that the Navy investigation of the April 19 explosion initially focused on the possibility that Truitt may have blown up the turret because of a failed homosexual relationship with Gunner's Mate Clayton Hartwig, who was killed in the explosion.

Later, NBC News reported that the Naval Investigative Service had cleared Truitt of wrongdoing and was focusing on the possibility that Hartwig was a repressed homosexual who committed suicide. Many news organizations carried accounts of that report.

"The press has immunity," Truitt said. "They can report on wild rumors and leaks, period. And they're not held accountable or responsible to anyone. They cast a shadow on you, your family — forever. People don't want to hear, 'No, that's not true, it's a lie.' It's already in their heads. People believe I'm gay, they believe I might have been involved in the explosion."

But, he concluded, his words running together as he choked up: "I'm innocent. I didn't have anything to do with the explosion. I didn't have any prior knowledge. And through the leaks the press has ruined my life, and everything it stands for."

Truitt's lawyer, Ellis S. Rubin of Miami, told the lawmakers that he believed the Navy engaged in a systematic effort to "smear" his client through news leaks in an effort to prove that human error, not a technical defect of the battleship, was responsible for the USS Iowa explosion. As part of that effort, he added, the Navy is now attempting to blame the explosion on Hartwig.

Navy representatives refused to testify at Wednesday hearing. Asked to respond to the charges by Truitt and his attorney, a Navy spokesman issued a brief statement saying, "The Navy has not discussed the investigation publicly and such reports merely reflect the determination by the Naval Investigative Service to explore every aspect of the accident for possible causes."

Members of the subcommittee on civil and constitutional rights and the subcommittee on criminal justice, which met jointly, said that the Truitt case was part of a pattern of government investigators deliberately leaking information about criminal investigations. Among other cases leaked by law enforcement officials, they cited the Felix S. Bloch case of possible espionage and allegations of questionable hiring practices by House Whip William H. Gray III, D-Penn.

The lawmakers said that they are considering legislative remedies to prevent leaks about criminal investigations. Among the options under consideration, they said, are laws giving members of the armed services the right to sue the government for libel, which is currently prohibited; setting up an independent counsel to investigate leaks from the Department of Justice and other federal agencies; and toughening criminal penalties for leaking information.

"What you've gone through is a nightmare," Rep. Charles E. Schumer, D-N.Y., chairman of the subcommittee on criminal justice, told Truitt. "No one should have to go through this."

Chicago Jury Indicts 46 Commodities Traders

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHICAGO — Indictments of 46 commodities traders represent only the opening salvo in the government's crackdown on corruption at the world's two largest futures exchanges, according to the prosecutor.

"This is an ongoing investigation, not a concluded investigation," U.S. Attorney Anton Valukas told reporters Wednesday.

"This is the first step in what we will be doing," he said, adding the investigation "will continue as long as there are viable allegations of misconduct."

After a 2½-year undercover FBI investigation, 46 traders at the Chicago Board of Trade and Chicago Mercantile Exchange were accused of systematically conspiring to skim profits from customer accounts and attempting to hide earnings from the Internal Revenue Service.

"This probe is part of an expansion

Department of Justice crackdown on white-collar crime in all its various guises, from Wall Street to (Chicago's) LaSalle Street to Main Street with all stops in between," said U.S. Attorney General Dick Thornburgh, who came to Chicago to announce the indictments.

"The activities uncovered at these exchanges, the largest of their type in the world, cannot be tolerated."

The four separate indictments, covering 1,275 pages and 608 counts, allege that brokers trading for their own accounts as well as customers' accounts systematically and illegally cheated customers with the cooperation of "locals" — traders trading only for their own accounts.

Sixteen of the defendants were charged with violating the federal Racketeer Influenced, Corrupt Organizations Act, which carries the stiffest penalties, up to 20 years in prison. These charges also empower the government to freeze defendants' assets before trial for seizure upon conviction.

Most of those indicted are charged with multiple counts such as pre-arranged trading, racketeering conspiracy and income tax fraud in schemes that allegedly bilked hundreds of customers out of profits in thousands of trades, said Valukas.

He wouldn't say how much money customers may have lost to the alleged fraud but called the amount "significant."

Fourteen of those charged have agreed to plead guilty and cooperate with investigators, according to government sources, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Some futures traders and defense lawyers characterized most of those indicted as small-time players and guessed that the government was using them to net bigger prey.

"These appear to be small fish who extended the rules and regulations at times that Big Brother was watching," said one trader who spoke on the condition of anonymity.

Attorney Thomas Royce, representing indicted Japanese yen futures trader Gary Wright, said he expects the investigation to widen.

"The government doesn't spend millions — as they did here — and bring in the attorney general and the FBI director if they're only seeking 46 guys," he said.

Thornburgh, FBI Director William Sessions and Wendy Gramm, chairman of the federal Commodity Futures Trading Commission, flew into Chicago for the news conference.

Ms. Gramm called the indictments the "first results of the most extensive and aggressive law enforcement effort in the financial area, ever."

Four undercover FBI agents secretly tape-recorded, observed and even participated on exchange floors in the illegal transactions, the indictments say.

Futures are contracts to buy or sell by a future date at a specified price commodities and financial instruments such as soybeans, pork bellies, Treasury bonds and baskets of stocks.

The charges involve trading in the Swiss franc and Japanese yen currency futures pits at the Chicago Merc and in the U.S. Treasury bond and soybean futures pits at the Board of Trade.

The exchanges were not accused of wrongdoing and neither were any of the scores of brokerage firms whose customers were allegedly cheated.

Valukas said both exchanges "when called upon provided full assistance."

At a news conference after the indictments were announced, Board of Trade Chairman Karsten Mahlmann said the exchange "will not tolerate a single instance of trading abuse in our markets."

The Chicago Merc issued a statement saying its leaders would deal "severely" with any members found guilty. Both exchanges asked members who had been indicted to refrain from all trading except for their own accounts.

Businessman Pays $25 Million Settlement

WASHINGTON — A Taiwanese businessman implicated last year in a major insider trading case with a junior analyst at a venerable Wall Street brokerage house has agreed to pay more than $25 million to settle civil charges.

The Securities and Exchange Commission announced Wednesday that Fred C. Lee, 39, a Taiwanese national living in Hong Kong, agreed to pay $25.1 million in illegal profits and fines to a court-appointed receiver.

The SEC sued Lee in New York last year, charging that he engaged in a $19 million insider trading scheme with Stephen K. Wang, then a 24-year-old analyst with Morgan Stanley & Co.'s mergers department.

Wang pleaded guilty Sept. 7 to one count each of securities, wire and mail fraud for taking about $200,000 to funnel confidential information to Lee about at least 25 takeover deals that were being handled by Morgan at the time. There was no allegation of wrongdoing by Morgan, which suspended and later fired Wang.

In a related development, the SEC settled a lawsuit with Standard Chartered Bank, a British bank that held $12.5 million of Lee's money at its Hong Kong branch.

The SEC got a federal judge in New York to order Standard Chartered to turn over in New York an amount equal to the money Lee had on deposit in Hong Kong. The bank complied but sued, claiming it was being put in a kind of financial double jeopardy because Lee was suing for the release of his $12.5 million in the Hong Kong courts.

The case went to the 2nd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Manhattan, which had yet to rule.

With the surrender of Lee's $25 million, $300,000 was turned over to the bank for expenses incurred in the New York and Hong Kong lawsuits.

"The settlement of the case presents us with the outcome we were seeking and we are therefore pleased that we were able to discontinue our appeal," Martin Hayman, Standard Chartered Group's chief legal officer, said in a statement issued in New York.

The bank has 700 branches in 50 countries.

According to the SEC, Lee, made $19 million on trades for himself and about 30 other people by allegedly trading on the inside information he got from Wang.

In an interview with SEC attorneys in Hong Kong last year, Lee admitted using inside information supplied by Wang.

SEC officials said that until the record $650 million settlement by the investment banking firm of Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc. pushed Ivan F. Boesky down the list to No. 2, the Lee-Wang case was the second-largest insider trading scheme ever prosecuted.

As part of the settlement, Lee agreed to pay $19 million into a fund to reimburse investors defrauded by his scheme.

Lee also will pay $1.5 million in fines and $4.5 million in back taxes with interest on his illegal trading profits.

New Crews To Spell Firefighters

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Crews hustled to consolidate gains against Idaho's raging wildfires today before the expected return of hotter weather by week's end, and additional manpower was en route to support weary firefighters.

"I'm so tired, working all day, cutting trees, making line," said Armando Camairillo, an Oregon firefighter working in the Boise National Forest.

Cooler, moister air eased the immediate danger to two small back-country towns in west-central Idaho, which most residents evacuated earlier in the week.

Carl Gorski, a meteorologist for the National Weather Service in Boise, called the change "just a breather."

Still, the break in dry lightning that zapped the state in recent weeks was enough to prompt stepped-up efforts to hack containment lines around the worst of the fires burning more than 84,000 acres of timber and range.

Big fires continued to burn Wednesday in Idaho and Oregon, while smaller blazes were fought in California, Montana and Washington.

The Boise Interagency Fire Center, the national headquarters for coordinating fire-fighting efforts, said more than 15,400 people were working to suppress fire throughout the West. Almost 206,000 acres had been blackened.

"Things haven't slowed down at all here," said spokesman Kris Long at the fire center. "With supplies and manpower coming in and out, it stays busy."

An estimated $36 million in resources have been destroyed in the Boise National Forest alone, officials said.

Strategists called for at least 70 more 20-member crews to join more than 6,200 firefighters already committed in Idaho. Hundreds of Idaho National Guardsmen also were activated to support the effort.

In the forests, the first priority continued to be protection of small communities and pockets of summer homes and cabins.

Soapy white foam was sprayed on structures, and hundreds of firefighters were diverted from frontal assaults on the blazes to clear brush and other fuel from around private property.

Besides the war on the ground, dozens of helicopters were ferrying buckets filled with water from rivers to hot spots, and air tankers have been dropping about a quarter-million gallons of chemical retardant a day.

10-Year-Old Keeps Great-Grandfather Alive In The Woods

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CENTRALIA, Wash. — The 10-year-old boy's voice dropped to a tired whisper as he told how he helped keep his great-grandfather alive in the woods after their truck ran off a remote logging road.

"I picked berries. I snuggled up by him," Mike Combs said from his hospital bed, where he was being treated for dehydration and exposure.

Mike and his 84-year-old great-grandfather, John C. Eveland, were lost for 4½ days in a remote area in southwestern Washington state. The pair was found by searchers early Wednesday.

Eveland was listed in serious but stable condition after suffering dehydration, and possibly a stroke, said Jennifer Strozyk, a spokeswoman at Providence Hospital in Centralia, 80 miles south of Seattle.

Eveland's great-grandson could be released today, nursing supervisor Molly Oster said Wednesday night.

"As far as I'm concerned, this little fellow saved my daddy," said Joy Norton, Mike's grandmother.

She stroked the boy's hand as he struggled to stay awake long enough to answer reporters' questions. "He's a hero in my book."

The two got lost Friday after Eveland finished a sheep-shearing job in the small town of Doty. They were found about 20 miles to the south, the opposite direction from the boy's home in Centralia and Eveland's in Rochester.

The elderly man backed his truck into a ditch while turning around on a remote road, Lewis County sheriff's officers said, stranding the two without food, water, or matches to build a fire.

When the pair tried to walk out for help, Eveland's knees gave out and he fell down a rock hill, the youngster said. After that, Eveland fell several more times and became increasingly disoriented, authorities added.

Their truck was found by bear hunters Tuesday and a bloodhound helped find the pair about a mile away before dawn Wednesday.

Mike said he remembered his father's advice if he ever got lost in the woods: "Stay close to the road and eat berries." ... That's what I did."

"There was a creek far away but I didn't want to go there," said Mike, adding he stayed close to his great-grandfather.

The two slept under a tree and on the road, he said.

"It rained lots," and the two were often cold and wet, the boy said. Overnight temperatures dipped into the 40s.

"I prayed that someone would come. Last night I prayed that the rescue mission ... would come," Mike said.

Searchers said the pair apparently walked in circles trying to stay close to the old logging road.

More than 100 volunteers helped in the search, family members said.

"We want to thank everybody for all their help from the bottom of our hearts," said Joy Eveland, daughter-in-law of John Eveland.

Navy Successfully Tests Trident Missile

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — Even the captain of an eavesdropping Soviet spy ship seemed impressed by the first successful launch of the Navy's deadly new Trident 2 missile from a submerged submarine.

"My best regards to the skipper of the sub," the Soviet captain radioed after the 44-foot missile roared away from the USS Tennessee, burst to the surface, ignited and hurled a dummy warhead to a target far down the Atlantic tracking range on Wednesday.

The message was radioed to the launch support ship Range Sentinel. Earlier, the Range Sentinel had warned the Russian trawler not to get too close.

"We're not going to interfere with the launch," replied the captain of the Soviet ship, and he stayed about 2½ miles away, just outside the security zone.

For years, Soviet spy ships have observed most launchings from Cape Canaveral.

Greenpeace U.S.A. activists who oppose nuclear weapons at sea halted the launch attempt last Friday by sailing ships into the security zone and refusing to leave, arguing they were in international waters. They stayed away Wednesday, saying they had made their point.

Following the 11 a.m. launch,

Rear Adm. Arlington Campbell, commander of Submarine Group 6, told reporters on the Range Sentinel: "As far as we can tell from our telemetry, it was a totally nominal launch. From all indications, everything has been successful."

The Navy did not disclose how far the warhead section traveled.

Each of the $23.7 million missiles is designed to propel as many as 12 nuclear warheads to different targets more than 4,600 miles away.

The results were far different from those of the Trident 2's first submarine launch on March 21, when the missile cartwheeled out of control and exploded just four seconds after it was launched from the Tennessee.

Investigators reported that failure was caused by a faulty mechanical linkage responsible for moving the rocket motor nozzles back and forth to control direction. The system was redesigned.

"We had one failure at sea," Campbell said. "But these are production evaluation missiles. We're here to learn. They get improved so they are right when they are actually deployed."

The Navy plans seven or eight more underwater tests over the next few months. If all goes as planned, the Navy will send the Tennessee on operational patrol next March with 24 of the nuclear-tipped missiles.

Before the Trident 2 was taken to sea, the Navy conducted 19 flight tests from a land launch, rating 15 of them successful.

Clash Expected Over Defense Bill

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — In passing the $295 billion military authorization bill, the Democratic-controlled Senate sets the stage for a clash with the House over key elements of President Bush's strategic weapons programs.

The Senate, which approved the bill 95-4 Wednesday, left relatively intact the dollars and the structure of the strategic weapons programs. The House last week made deep cuts denounced by the White House as irresponsible both in terms of national security and arms control.

"In my judgment, this will be the most difficult conference in a decade," said Sen. John Warner of Virginia, ranking Republican on the Senate Armed Services Committee. "But I'm confident that we can emerge with a bill which will meet the president's basic policy goals."

"It's going to be very difficult," said Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., the committee chairman. "There are more profound differences with the House than we have had for a long, long time."

Nunn was asked how he will enter the conference that opens Sept. 8. "Well armed," he replied.

How does he expect to emerge? "Alive," Nunn said.

About the cuts made by the House, Nunn said: "We will be very interested in hearing their logic. It doesn't leap out at you."

The Senate bill, which conforms closely to Bush's recommendations, calls for a modest cut of $400 million in the $4.9 billion request for the Star Wars antimissile shield.

'Lonesome Dove' Wins 18 Nominations For Emmy

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

UNIVERSAL CITY, Calif. — The CBS miniseries "Lonesome Dove" dominated television nominations for Emmy Awards today, closely followed by NBC's "L.A. Law" and the ABC miniseries "War and Remembrance."

"Lonesome Dove," based on the Pulitzer Prize-winning Western novel by Larry McMurtry, received 18 nominations, including best miniseries and acting nods to Tommy Lee Jones, Robert Duvall, Diane Lane, Danny Glover and Glenn Headly. It also received nominations for directing and writing.

NBC's "L.A. Law" took 17 nominations as best drama series and in eight acting categories, including real-life husband and wife Michael Tucker and Jill Eikenberry, Susan Dey, Larry Drake, Jimmy Smits, Richard Dysart, Michelle Greene, Susan Ruttan and Amanda Plummer. The show also won two directing and three writing nominations.

Perhaps the biggest surprise was the omission of Roseanne Barr, star of the ABC hit series "Roseanne," in the comedy actress category.

The 30-hour miniseries "War and Remembrance," based on Herman Wouk's sweeping novel of World War II, won 15 nominations, including best miniseries and lead acting awards for John Gielgud and Jane Seymour and supporting honors for Polly Bergen. It also was nominated for directing.

Other major winners of nominations were ABC's "The Wonder Years" with 14 nominations, ABC's "thirtysomething" with 13, CBS' "Murphy Brown" with 11, NBC's "The Golden Girls" with 10 and Fox's "The Tracey Ullman Show" with 10.

The syndicated series "Star Trek: The Next Generation" and CBS' "Beauty and the Beast" each got eight nominations.

The Academy of Television Arts & Sciences handed out 364 nominations. NBC received the most with 103, followed by CBS with 95 and ABC with 85. Other nominations: PBS 32, syndicated shows 21, Fox 12, Home Box Office eight, Disney two and Lifetime, Turner Broadcasting Systems, Turner Network Television and USA cable networks with one each.

The late Lucille Ball has been voted the academy's Governors Award.

Actor John Larroquette and actress Lynn Redgrave made the announcements with academy president Doug Duitman early this morning.

ABC's "The Wonder Years" was nominated as best comedy series and its young star Fred Savage was nominated as best lead actor in a comedy series. Robert Picardo was nominated as best guest actor in a comedy series for his role as the gym instructor Mr. Cutlip and Maxine Stuart was nominated as best guest actress as Mrs. Carples. It also received three nominations for directing and four for writing.

"Murphy Brown" got the only other writing nomination.

Other nominees for best miniseries were NBC's "I Know My First Name is Steven," PBS' "A Perfect Spy" and ABC's "The Women of Brewster Place."

CBS' "Beauty and the Beast," ABC's "China Beach," ABC's "thirtysomething" and CBS' "Wiseguy" were nominees as best drama series along with "L.A. Law."

Comedy series nominees along with "The Wonder Years" were NBC's "Cheers," CBS' "Designing Women," NBC's "The Golden Girls" and CBS' "Murphy Brown."

Selected to compete for the best drama or comedy special were ABC's "David," CBS' "Day One," HBO's "Murderers Among Us: The Simon Wiesenthal Story," ABC's "My Name is Bill W." and NBC's "Roe vs. Wade."

Nominated as best lead actor in a comedy series along with Savage were Ted Danson for NBC's "Cheers," Richard Mulligan for NBC's "Empty Nest," Michael J. Fox for NBC's "Family Ties" and John Goodman for ABC's "Roseanne."

Lead comedy actress nominees were Blair Brown for Lifetime's "The Days and Nights of Molly Dodd," Candice Bergen for CBS' "Murphy Brown," and Betty White, Beatrice Arthur and Rue McClanahan, all of NBC's "The Golden Girls."

Ron Perlman was nominated as best lead actor in drama series for CBS' "Beauty and the Beast," along with Edward Woodward of CBS' "The Equalizer," Carroll O'Connor for NBC's "In the Heat of the Night," Ken Wahl for CBS' "Wiseguy" and Michael Tucker for "L.A. Law."

Perlman's co-star in "Beauty and the Beast," Linda Hamilton, was nominated as best lead actress in a drama series as were Dana Delany in ABC's "China Beach," Angela Lansbury in CBS' "Murder, She Wrote" and Susan Dey and Jill Eikenberry in "L.A. Law."

The 41st annual Emmy Awards will be broadcast live Sept. 17 by Fox Broadcasting. John Moffitt and Pat Tourk Lee will produce the show from Pasadena.

Awards in the creative crafts will be handed out in a televised ceremony Sept. 16.

This year a rules change requires performers to enter their own names before they could appear on a nomination ballot.

Selections of the winners will be made Aug. 26-27 by panels in which actors select actors, directors select directors, writers select writers and so on.

Original cable programming will compete in the competition for the second time. Earlier this year, the Television Academy and the National Academy of Television Arts & Sciences voted to allow cable shows to compete in the daytime Emmy awards.

Last year, only three awards went to cable shows. The cable industry has continued its own ACE awards program.

Work Productivity Increases Slightly During 2nd Quarter

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The productivity of American workers increased at an annual rate of 0.2 percent in the second quarter of 1989, a modest improvement from a decline in the first three months of the year, the government reported today.

The Labor Department's preliminary data for the April-June quarter showed that output in the non-farm sector of the economy rose at a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 1.7 percent, while total hours worked climbed 1.5 percent.

The 0.2 percent gain compared with a 1.3 percent drop in non-farm productivity in the first quarter.

The data showed hourly compensation paid non-farm workers climbed at an annual rate of 5.5 percent in the second quarter but continued to lag behind the rate of consumer inflation.

In real dollars — wage gains minus the toll of inflation — hourly compensation fell at an annual rate of 0.9 percent in the April-June period, the Labor Department reported.

The report is the first look at productivity in the second quarter. The preliminary data often are revised when a final report on the quarter is issued a month later.

Manufacturing productivity increased at an annual rate of 2.4 percent in the second quarter — a seemingly encouraging sign at first glance but also an indication of the slowing economy.

The productivity gain in manufacturing came as output climbed at an annual rate of 2.1 percent and hours worked decreased 0.3 percent.

When broken down, that data showed that productivity increased among manufacturers of durable goods — items expected to last more than three years — but declined among makers of nondurables.

Manufacturing has been among the hardest hit sectors of the economy in the recent slowdown and today's data showed that real wages paid manufacturing workers declined for the sixth-time in the last 10 quarters.

In the second quarter the hourly compensation for manufacturing workers rose at an annual rate of 2.5 percent — down from a 3.1 percent gain in the first quarter and well behind the growth in consumer inflation, which has been climbing at an annual rate of more than 6 percent.

In another gauge that includes the farm sector, the Labor Department said productivity increased at an annual rate of 0.9 percent in the second quarter, with output rising 1.4 percent and hours worked growing by 0.4 percent at seasonally adjusted annual rates. Those figures have been influenced by the rebound from last year's drought.

Soviets Agree To Inspections Before Global Chemical Ban

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

GENEVA — The Soviet Union has accepted a U.S. demand that both countries inspect each other's chemical weapons stockpiles before a global ban on the weapons is agreed to, a Soviet official said today.

Moscow's shift was conveyed in a paper presented to U.S. Secretary of State James A. Baker III by Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze when they met last week in Paris, the official said.

The Soviets agreed with the U.S. position that joint inspections begin before the ban is initiated by the 40-nation Geneva Conference on Disarmament, said the official, a Soviet delegate to the conference who briefed reporters on condition of anonymity.

Moscow previously wanted to allow checks only after the ban was signed, and the shift was aimed at clearing the way for earliest possible inspections, he said. "It is just a matter of time. Initiating comes before signing," the official said, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

The accord must be initiated by negotiators before its formal signing by each country's head of state.

The disarmament conference has been debating a comprehensive chemical weapons ban for more than two decades, but delegates have little hope of getting the draft accord ready for initialing in the immediate future.

Disagreements at the conference include how to monitor compliance with a future ban.

The Soviet shift in Paris was part of separate superpower talks since 1986 on chemical weapons. The United States and Soviet Union, who have the world's biggest poison gas arsenals, say their talks may help the 40-nation negotiations.

Both superpowers reported they agreed to on-the-spot inspection procedures in the latest round of bilateral talks, which ended in Geneva in late June. But they said an accord on exchanging chemical weapons data — which would precede the inspections — was not ready yet. The talks are due to continue in the fall.

The Soviet official said he could not give firm predictions about when data exchanges or inspections may begin.

Moscow expects on-site inspections to back its official position that it has no more than 50,000 tons of chemical armaments. Some Western analysts have said the Soviet stockpile is more than six times bigger.

Death Penalty

CAMDEN, N.C. (AP) — A Camden County Superior Court jury deliberated for about six hours Wednesday before recommending the death penalty for Wade Larry Cole in the death of his girlfriend, who was shot twice and stabbed more than 100 times.

The jury of six men and six women found that Theresa Graham's death was a pitiless, torturous crime, and that Cole's actions were heinous, cruel and atrocious.

Cole, 38, also was sentenced to serve 10 years in prison for involuntary manslaughter in the death of Ms. Graham's 70-year-old mother, Hattie Graham.

Cole silently bit his bottom lip and stared intently at each of the jurors as Judge Donald Stephens polled the jurors to make sure that they all agreed to imposing the death sentence.

HIGH POINT, N.C. (AP) — A U.S. Bankruptcy Court judge approved a plan Wednesday to put up to a dozen former Kenyon Home Furnishings employees back to work assembling unfinished goods.

The judge authorized Bankers Trust of New York to spend a minimum of $300,000 to finish out leather sofas and chairs that are partially manufactured.

J. Brooks Reitzel Jr., a High Point attorney appointed trustee for the Kenyon Chapter 7 liquidation, said it should cost about $2,000 per day to raise about $10,000 a day.

BOG Wants Action Taken Against NCSU

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — A sense of frustration, dismay and impatience is building among members of the University of North Carolina Board of Governors in the wake of reports of academic abuse in the basketball program at N.C. State University, a newspaper reported today.

In interviews Wednesday by The News and Observer of Raleigh with 13 of the 34 members of the board, which oversees the entire state university system:

— Some members were sharply critical of NCSU Chancellor Bruce R. Poulton, whom they thought tolerated actions by the basketball program that kept players eligible to compete at the expense of their studies.

— Three members, including two of the board's most influential members, said privately that Poulton and Jim Valvano, basketball coach and athletic director, should be fired.

— Some members called for a special meeting as soon as possible to act on the findings of a six-month investigation of the program.

Board member Walter R. Davis, a Texas oil millionaire, was adamant in calling for an immediate board meeting. "Because of the controversy and the hemorrhaging of (negative) information, we should call a special meeting and lay this out to the board of governors immediately," he said.

C.D. Spangler Jr., university system president, has said he would discuss the findings of the investigation and his recommendations for remedying any problems at the board's next meeting, Aug. 25.

One board member called that decision a bad mistake.

"He needs to present the information soon, as openly as possible," the member told the newspaper. "Otherwise it will churn for three weeks. It will smell worse. When you have a bad problem, you deal with it directly."

"Who is minding the store? State is responsible for what State did, but the general administration is responsible for the way this thing has been handled. The way they're dealing with it is inappropriate."

In the interim, board members' disgust with the way the basketball program is run has been growing. "I feel very strongly that Valvano and Poulton both should go," said one board member.

Another said: "Anybody who was a party to this should be fired. I'd include everyone that knew they were involved in a violation of the rules."

Asked if he meant Poulton and Valvano, the board member said: "I don't see how they could have helped but know. They should be let go — period — because they've been dishonest with the system."

Board Chairman Robert L. "Roddy" Jones said neither he nor Spangler thought it necessary to call a special meeting.

"It's just an awkward time," Jones said in a telephone interview from Atlanta. "They didn't ask me when they could put the book ('Personal Fouls') out, and that's what has caused the resurgence of controversy."

Jones said that Spangler was writing his report and would be out of town next week on vacation. Spangler did not return telephone calls.

"Personal Fouls," which looks at the NCSU basketball program, appeared in bookstores last week.

On Monday, The News and Observer reported that Hugh Fuller, director of NCSU's tutoring program, had reported abuses by the basketball program to top administrators over a seven-year period. Some memos outlining the problems had been sent by Fuller to Poulton.

That disclosure, some UNC board members said Tuesday, makes it even more urgent that Spangler act promptly.

Jones, the board chairman, refused to say whether he thought Poulton should be fired.

"First of all, that's the president's call in the sense that he hires and fires all the chancellors," he said. "Obviously our board can influence the president's feelings. It's also very important to note that the Board of Trustees at N.C. State certainly has a role in this."

He said he hoped to meet with the NCSU trustees as soon as possible after the meeting Aug. 25 — possibly the same day — to discuss the investigation's findings and the action that would be taken.

Chang Sets A New Goal

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

STRATTON MOUNTAIN, Vt. — After winning the French Open and turning in a grand showing at Wimbledon, Michael Chang is hoping to improve on his last U.S. Open performance.

Sunday might provide a start. Chang won three matches in the 1988 Open before losing in straight sets to Andre Agassi.

With Agassi seeded first and Chang second in this week's Volvo International tennis tournament, the two American teen-agers remained on track for their first tournament meeting since that Open match.

Agassi struggled by Marty Davis 6-1, 3-6, 6-3 in Wednesday's second round and Chang followed with a steadier 7-5, 6-3 victory over Johan Carlsson of Sweden.

In today's third round, Agassi was matched against unseeded David Wheaton, a 6-1, 6-4 upset winner over No. 16 Scott Davis, and Chang faced off against No. 15 Derrick Rostagno, who beat Tim Donovan 7-6 (7-2), 7-5.

A year ago, it was Agassi who faced all the questions about his prospects in the Open. He was on his way to the world's No. 3 ranking after winning six tournaments, including Volvo.

But Agassi has fallen to No. 7 and hasn't won a tournament title this year. Chang has far surpassed expectations, with a Grand Slam title and two match victories at Wimbledon before losing in the round of 16. Now the Open focus is on him.

He already is being asked if he can win it.

"My first immediate goal is just to go in there and try to do better than I did last year," he said. That means getting past the third round, and maybe Agassi.

But if Chang were given a choice of winning another major title, he said he would take Wimbledon "because people don't think I can win Wimbledon."

Tennis experts say Chang's backcourt game is more suited to hard courts and clay than to Wimbledon's grass, which favors serve-and-volley players.

"Again, that's the challenge," he said. "It's like people say you can't do this, you can't win, there's no way you can win this. And I just like to prove people wrong sometimes."

Carlsson also might have felt the challenge — and Chang some newly earned pressure — by jumping on Chang for a 3-0 lead in the first set.

"There's definitely more pressure because people see that you've won a Grand Slam tournament and obviously they are out there to beat you," Chang said.

But Chang showed some of the quickness and steady, unflappable play that thrust him into the spotlight as he slowly took over the match by reaching almost everything Carlsson hit at him.

It was nothing fancy, but Chang's quickness forced Carlsson to try for better shots, and forced errors.

Chang broke Carlsson in the 10th game to pull even and again in the 12th game when Carlsson netted two volleys.

Chang scored the only break of the second set in the second game. Carlsson had a break point in the final game, but hit two backhands wide and a forehand into the net.

Agassi appeared en route to an easy victory against Davis, ranked 121st in the world. But then he said his concentration waned and Davis' serve and volley game soared to force a third set.

NFLPA Completes Drug Testing

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CARLISLE, Pa. — The NFL Players Association has completed independent drug testing of players from all 28 teams, a task designed to assure the accuracy and confidentiality of the league's testing process.

Union chief Gene Upshaw said the tests were conducted on the same day that each particular team administered its regular drug test, as required by the league. The Washington Redskins on Tuesday became the last team to be tested.

Upshaw, in a telephone interview, said the second drug tests were sent to a certified lab at the University of Utah. The union will not be notified of the results, but players who fail the tests will be informed by a medical review officer.

Upshaw said the second test will enable the union to check the league's results.

"We don't trust anything they do — the technique, the procedure, the standard, their labs," Upshaw said. "The NFL had better be darned sure of their results, because now we have a way to double-check them."

White May Follow Ferry To Europe

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

DALLAS — The agent who represents Randy White, the Dallas Mavericks' No. 1 pick in the NBA draft, says his client might follow Danny Ferry to Europe.

"We hope we get a deal done with the Mavericks; it would be a great situation," agent Bill Blakeley said. "But if the dollars are not right, then we have to consider other options, and Europe is enticing."

"We haven't really tested that market, but we probably will, if not this year, then next."

White, a Dallas native, was the No. 8 pick overall in the NBA draft.

Ferry, a 6-foot-10 All-American forward from Duke, was disappointed when the Los Angeles Clippers selected him with the No. 2 pick overall. He stunned the NBA this week when, rather than join the Clippers, he signed a one-year contract with Messaggero Rome for a reported $1 million.

Blakeley, in a telephone interview from his office on Wednesday, said he wasn't surprised by Ferry's move. "I think now you're going to see more players going overseas," he said.

"Hey, with the tax base, you make more money in Italy. Danny would probably have to make about $1.5 million, at least, in the NBA to equal what he'll take home in Europe."

"And it'll be far less wear and tear on his body. He'll play about 35 games, not the 82 plus playoffs he would in the NBA. And in Italy they give you a beautiful place to live, a beautiful car, great meals. The only thing you pay for is the phone bill."

Italian teams begin practice next Monday for their season which begins Sept. 24.

Randy White

Dallas general manager Norm Sonju, who has been negotiating with Blakeley, couldn't be reached for comment. He is vacationing in New York through Aug. 7, when talks with White are scheduled to resume.

White, a 6-8, 225-pound power forward from Louisiana Tech, will have to be signed by Oct. 5 to attend the Mavericks training camp. He has been playing in the NBA Pro-Am League in Dallas this summer.

Mavericks spokesman Kevin Sullivan said Ferry's decision to forgo the NBA shouldn't have much of an impact on talks with White.

"I really don't think it will have any bearing," Sullivan said. "There's a big difference money-wise between the No. 2 and 8 spots, anyway."

Washington Strikes Out Again
Baseball Sidesteps Expansion Wishes Of Senators

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Nearly two decades after their perennially woeful baseball namesake skipped town, the only senators left in Washington are still striking out in the major leagues.

In a semi-annual ritual that so far has produced nothing but vague promises and veiled threats, baseball's commissioner on Wednesday once again fended off congressional demands to expand major league baseball.

It was A. Bartlett Giamatti's second turn at confronting the special Senate task force representing the franchise hopes of at least a dozen cities.

And like his predecessors, he threw its score of members a gentlemanly curve and still shut them out. "He stood there like a stone wall," Sen. John Warner, R-Va., said in mock disbelief.

The senators, joined by two House members at the closed-door meeting, pressed Giamatti for a commitment to expand the American League by at least two teams and the National League by at least four. The AL has 14 teams, the NL 12.

Giamatti would only repeat the commitment of NL owners to add two teams at some indefinite date in the 1990s.

"In our view, there are six or eight cities which are very strongly qualified" for a major league team, said Sen. John McCain, R-Ariz., who has Phoenix uppermost on that list.

But Giamatti wouldn't budge. "It is a fact that two is not six. It is not eight. It is not 10," he told reporters after the meeting. "Our disagreement is about the pace and about the number."

Several senators, including Democrat Timothy Wirth of Colorado, chairman of the Senate Task Force on the Expansion of Major League Baseball, alluded to the possibility that Congress could repeal baseball's special exemption from antitrust law if owners don't respond swiftly to expansion demands.

That threat has often been aired, but never enacted by members whose constituents don't live in prospective expansion cities.

In a letter presented to Giamatti at the meeting, Wirth said the task force "is preparing to pursue all available avenues to correct the inequities of the existing expansion procedure."

Work continues on East Carolina's new Sports Medicine/Physical Education building

New Sports Medicine Building
Might Be Ready In SeptemberBy Tom Morris
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

The long-awaited completion of East Carolina's Sports Medicine/Physical Education Building will be awaited just a little longer.

J.H. Hudson Construction Company is handling the project, which was originally set for completion August 1, but heavy rains during the winter and spring put work behind schedule early.

ECU officials are now hoping to move into the new building by early September.

"We can't occupy until it's inspected," Henry VanSant, ECU associate athletic director for internal affairs, said. "Then, there is a two week period for furniture delivery. We're talking, if we're lucky, early September and maybe later."

"We're just a little later than expected," VanSant added. "People don't even get into their own (newly built) private homes on time. We had bad rain in February and early March, and it's been a wet spring. The big holdup was getting the masonry work done because of the weather back in the winter and early spring."

VanSant said construction on the top two floors of the three-story building, located next to Minges Coliseum and Ficklen Stadium, is virtually complete.

"As for their moving in, I really can't give you a good answer," George Mathis, project manager of J.H. Hudson, said. "We do have the state office in Raleigh

MacKenzie Leads Ben Hogan Junior Classic

DALLAS, Tex. — Will MacKenzie is in first place at the Ben Hogan Junior Golf Classic after two rounds of play. MacKenzie, competing in the 13-14 age group shot a 74 Tuesday and a 70 Wednesday to top the leaderboard. The tournament, which is being played at the Las Colinas TPC course, has two rounds remaining.

Powell Advances To State Finals

CHAPEL HILL — Greenville's Paige Powell, second-seeded in the North Carolina Tennis Association's Junior Closed Tennis Tournament for girls' 16's, has advanced to the finals. The tournament is being played at the Chapel Hill Country Club. Play began Sunday and will wind up today. Wednesday, Powell defeated Daniela Marx of Goldsboro, the number four seed, 7-5, 6-2, to advance to the finals. There, she will face Shannon Clement of Southern Pines, seeded third. Clement defeated Cara White of Henderson, the top seed, 6-4, 2-6, 7-6 (7-5) to gain the finals.

North State Pitted Against South Caldwell

HUDSON — Greenville North State was scheduled to meet South Caldwell this afternoon at 1 in the losers' bracket of the 1989 North Carolina Little League state baseball tournament in Hudson. South Caldwell, the District 7 champion, dropped into the losers' bracket Wednesday with a 17-5 thumping at the hands of District 2 champion East Rowan. East Rowan will meet defending state champion Cherryville this afternoon at 5 in the winners' bracket finals. Cherryville defeated North State in the opening round and advanced with a win over Mint Hill Tuesday. Also on tap for today is a losers' bracket game sending Canton against Mint Hill. Canton eliminated Fort Bragg Wednesday with a 6-1 triumph. The North State-South Caldwell winner will face the Canton-Mint Hill winner Friday at 5.

Novice Tennis League Play Continues

Wachovia Bank, ReMax and Aldridge & Southerland picked up wins in the Greenville Recreation and Parks Department's Novice Tennis League play Wednesday. Wachovia Bank downed Peoples Bank. The top player in the match was Mike Abessinio while Natalie Thompson took the sportsmanship award. ReMax downed Nationwide-Billy Byrd. Brad Shallow took the outstanding player award while Susie Smith won the sportsmanship award. Aldridge & Southerland defeated McGlohn & Co. with John Powell and Matthew Hungate winning the outstanding player and sportsmanship awards, respectively. In the final match of the day, Clark-Branch and Bowen Cleaners played to a tie. Janet Bunting took the outstanding player award and Wendy Colombo won the sportsmanship award. The final matches of the year are scheduled for Friday.

Rockets Sign Caldwell, Dinkins

HOUSTON (AP) — The Houston Rockets Wednesday signed rookie free agents Adrian Caldwell of Lamar and Byron Dinkins of North Carolina-Charlotte, team officials said. Caldwell, a 6-9, 255-pound power forward, averaged 14.7 points and 10 rebounds per game last year at Lamar. He averaged 9.3 rebounds during the Midwest Revue camp last week in San Antonio. Dinkins, a 6-2, 170-pound point guard, is the fourth all-time leading scorer for North Carolina-Charlotte, and was the 1988 Sunbelt Conference player of the year. He averaged more than 21 points per game in 1988 and averaged more than 17 points and seven assists last season. Both were signed to one-year contracts, and will report to the Rockets when training camp begins Oct. 6, the team said.

Hornets' Salary Cap Jumps $2.5 Million

CHARLOTTE (AP) — The Charlotte Hornets' salary cap jumped more than $2.5 million, and top draft choice J.R. Reid is expected to absorb much of the increase when his contract is signed. The salary cap — the maximum amount a team can spend on player payroll, as established by the NBA — is based on league-wide revenues. Under the collective bargaining agreement, payroll maximums and minimums must approximate 53 percent of league-wide revenues. The league announced Tuesday that this year's cap for established teams will be $9,802,000, up from last year's $7,232,000. The minimum an established NBA team must now pay in player payroll is $7,935,000, up from last year's $6,690,000. The cap and minimum for Charlotte and Miami will be three-quarters of that for established teams. Orlando and Minnesota, joining the NBA this season, will have caps and minimums two-thirds of established teams. Next year, Charlotte and Miami get full payrolls and Orlando and Minnesota get three-quarter payrolls. The Hornets' maximum will be $7,352,000 and the minimum will be $5,951,000. That is a possible increase in the Hornets' cap of $2,579,000. Hornets general manager Carl Scheer was not available for comment. He was in Denver on Tuesday attending a memorial service for Continental Basketball Association Commissioner Jay Ramsdell, who died in the crash of a United DC10 in Sioux City, Iowa.

Sprague Retakes Lead From Guss

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Jack Sprague of Kannapolis has recaptured the lead in the $19 million NASCAR Winston Racing Series, overtaking Ray Guss Jr. of Milan, Ill., with just six weeks remaining in the season. Sprague, leader of the Eastern Seaboard Region, has won 12 of 16 races for a .750 winning percentage. Guss, who heads the Central Region, is second nationally with 25 victories in 37 starts, a winning percentage of .677. The series, designed to determine a national weekly racing champion, divides the country into eight regions and encompasses all 84 weekly tracks. Drivers compete for regional championships through a uniform points system based on the best 20 finishes of each. The driver with the best winning percentage from among the regional champions is crowned national champion. Paul White of Temple, Texas, leader of the Sunbelt Region, is third nationally (.563 winning percentage, 9 wins of 16 starts), followed by Great Northern Region leader Arnie Wheatcraft of East Wenatchee, Wash. (.500, 8 of 16); Mid-America leader Mike Love of Pendergrass, Ga. (.400, 12 of 30); Pacific Coast leader Jim Pettit II of Seaside, Calif. (.324, 11 of 34); Northeast leader Jan Leaty of Williamson, N.Y. (.273, 6 of 22); and Mid-Atlantic leader Larry Ogle of Swannanoa, N.C. (.120, 3 of 25). The series offers $61,000 in post-season awards to the national champion. Each of the regional champions will win $22,500. The season officially closes Sept. 10.

Hokies' Pack To Be Cleared Of Charges

BLACKSBURG, Va. (AP) — A judge said Wednesday that Virginia Tech defensive end Anthony Pack will be cleared of theft charges if he stays out of legal trouble for a year and pays a $50 fine for reckless driving. "I'm going to give you a chance, and if you don't take advantage of it, you'll know who did it," General District Court Judge Thomas Frith told Pack at a hearing. After the hearing, Virginia Tech football coach Frank Beamer reinstated Pack to the team. "My decision is based not only on the judge's ruling, but also on the way that Anthony Pack has conducted himself at Virginia Tech during the past year — personally, academically and athletically," Beamer said. On Monday, Beamer suspended Pack, a reserve, and starting defensive end Jimmy Whitten from playing in Tech games until their separate court cases were resolved. Pack, a sophomore, was arrested June 6 in Blacksburg and charged with stealing car stereos at an apartment complex. Whitten is to appear in court Sept. 6 to face charges that he struck a Blacksburg police officer, resisted arrest and was drunk in public.

Georgia-Bound For Regionals Coastal Plain To Open Against Columbus Friday

By Mike Grizzard
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

The Coastal Plain 16-18 year-old Babe Ruth All-Stars head into the Southeastern Regionals in Marietta, Ga. Friday much like they did the Eastern North Carolina state tournament two weeks ago — in the dark. But one thing they are now armed with is momentum and confidence. Coastal Plain, which is comprised of players from Rose, Ayden-Gritton, North Pitt, D.H. Conley and Washington, opens the 11-team, double-elimination tournament Friday evening at 6 against Georgia state champion Columbus.

A 6 a.m. departure was scheduled for this morning. "Everybody is excited and ready to go," Coastal Plain manager Ted Curtis said Wednesday night. "The kids have showed a lot of emotion and the community is real happy about it and has been tremendous with donations." In other first-round games Friday, Florida faces Mississippi, North Alabama battles Western North Carolina and Virginia plays host East Cobb County. South Carolina, Tennessee and South Alabama drew first-round byes.

The tournament champion advances to the Babe Ruth World Series in Owensboro, Ky., which begins August 19. Coastal Plain qualified for the regionals by blazing to the Eastern North Carolina championship at D.H. Conley. Coastal Plain, which did not compete in the district tournament, dropped its first game of the state tourney but reeled off five consecutive wins for the title, sweeping two games from Albemarle in the finals.

Obviously, Curtis knows nothing about the competition his team will face in Georgia and compares the feeling as the one as the state tournament approached.

"It's kind of like being in the dark," Curtis said. "Going into the state tournament without having played in the district, we went in there in the dark. We didn't know how we match up against that level of competition."

After regrouping from its first loss, Coastal Plain rode solid pitching and an explosive offense that thrived on early-inning uprisings to the title, scoring 71 runs in its final six games.

Curtis said he has confidence the bats will continue to produce and cites pitching as the deciding factor.

"Our pitching was real good and our hitting was outstanding," Curtis said of the state tournament. "Defensively, at times we had some lapses and didn't play real well."

"If our pitching matches up pretty well we should do well. If we see some overpowering pitching we might be in trouble."

Derek Curtis, who tossed a no-hitter and posted two wins in the state tournament, is slated to start against Columbus. Randy House and 6-10, left-handed curve ball specialist Paul Powers are also expected to see mound duty.

The remaining probable starting lineup lists Brian Tuten at first base, Joe DeLoach at second, Roosevelt Hines at third, either Todd Black or Gray Mills at shortstop, Patrick Joyner in center, either House, Craig Willoughby or Jay Tripp in the other outfield spots and Franz Holscher behind the plate.

Willoughby, House and Hines supplied the power punch for the offense in the state tournament. Joyner has been a catalyst with his ability to reach base via the bunt and then running the bases aggressively. He also has a dependable glove in center.

set up for their inspection on the 15th of August. "We will probably be working on punch lists up until that time. What we'll be doing between now and August 15 when the state inspects it is just touch up and accomplishing the final details." The third floor contains a human performance lab, a biomechanics lab and administrative offices. The second floor has an auditorium along with offices. "It's virtually done, other than some little minor things," VanSant said of the top two floors. "They work top to bottom, which makes sense. You get traffic out." The bulk of the remaining work is on the first floor, which will house the sports medicine department along with lockers, the weight room and an equipment room. The sports medicine training center on the first floor will have an extensive injury treatment center, complete with whirlpools, a computerized isokinetic rehabilitation and evaluation machine, exam rooms and a seven-foot deep whirlpool that will allow injured athletes to exercise without bearing weight. The strength-training center will allow ECU to move out of its present aged facility, which is housed in an old roller skating rink on 14th Street. The new weight room will be 5,000 square feet. "We're anxious to get in there and get things functional," VanSant said. ECU officials are also awaiting completion of two additional parking lots around Minges Coliseum. The lots have been built on two grass fields, which are on the side and front of the Coliseum grounds. "That's coming along good," VanSant said. "They've paved the upper lot. The upper lot is virtually finished." In the past, the two grass lots were used for parking during athletic events, but they were unusable during heavy rains.

Broncos' Jones Decides To Retire

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Denver Broncos
Two-time Pro Bowl defensive end Rulon Jones, who led the Denver Broncos in quarterback sacks, retired Wednesday on the eve of his 10th NFL season, saying he had always planned to quit before being told he was "not good enough."

Broncos owner Pat Bowlen called Jones "one of the great players in Bronco history."

Jones' sudden departure from camp on Tuesday set retirement rumors flying.

Those were confirmed at news conference on Wednesday when the 6-foot-6, 260-pound Jones, flanked by Coach Dan Reeves and Bowlen, read from a prepared statement.

"Part of my career has been to set goals and for a number of years one of my goals has been to give up the game before I was told that I was not good enough," Jones, 31, said.

With a new defensive staff this year, Jones had come to camp in top shape hoping to re-establish himself as an impact player. But he reportedly became upset with the way the coaches had become enamored of the newcomers in the defensive line.

He said after one week of training camp he talked it over with Reeves, Bowlen, assistant coach Barney Chavous and his wife and decided retirement was the best thing to do.

Buffalo Bills
Buffalo Bills coach Marv Levy is a generally unflappable sort, but he was clearly annoyed by the continuing questions about the status of injured Pro Bowl defensive end Bruce Smith.

"It's this year's Jim Kelly story," Levy said, referring to last year's persistent reports — consistently denied — that the Bills' star quarterback had a sore shoulder.

As for Smith, "There's nothing seriously wrong with him," Levy said Wednesday.

Levy is tired of talking about Smith, who has missed all of training camp with a leg injury.

Answers about the injury, or just about anything else, are hard to come by from Smith, who treats the media with the same enthusiasm that bats show for daylight.

"I don't have an injury," Smith said Wednesday. "I have a weakness in a muscle."

The origin of Smith's condition, according to Levy, dates back to the AFC Championship game last season, which the Bills lost 21-10 to the Cincinnati Bengals.

In the first quarter, Smith was struck by one of his own teammates and was hobbled for the remainder of the game.

Atlanta Falcons
Nose tackle Tony Casillas strained ligaments in his knee and will miss about three weeks of the Atlanta Falcons' training camp.

"There is no surgery required at this time, but we'll know more about him when we evaluate it," said Coach Marion Campbell.

Casillas, who missed 23 days of training camp last year when he left the team to reconsider his career, hurt the ligaments in a light contact drill.

"Just a big pile came down on me," Casillas said. "There's not much you can say about it. It's so unpredictable."

The three-year veteran will be replaced by Charles Martin.
Rookie Tony Bowick of Tennessee-Chattanooga moves up to the second string.

The players began a series of practices with the Miami Dolphins, which will wrap up with a controlled scrimmage Saturday.

Meanwhile, the Washington Redskins have agreed to contract terms with former Kansas City Chiefs quarterback Bill Kenney, the team said Wednesday.

The Falcons had Kenney in for a workout Sunday and had indicated an interest in signing him as a backup for Chris Miller, who has missed most of the week's practice with an abdominal muscle injury.

New York Giants
Bjorn Nitnmo, a free agent from Appalachian State, isn't looking over his shoulder waiting for Raul Allegre to sign and report to the New York Giants training camp.

But Nitnmo knows he has to either start making more field goals in practice or his chances of becoming the first Swedish native to play in the NFL are nil.

"His kickoffs are excellent," Giants coach Bill Parcells said Wednesday, referring to Nitnmo. "But it looked like he might have had cabin fever in the morning."

Cabin fever is one of those football expressions suggesting that Nitnmo felt the pressure of the rush in practice on Wednesday and was not making his field goal attempts.

"That's an advantage Allegre has," said Nitnmo. "He's had all the experience. That's what a kicker needs. You just have to be persistent and keep on trying."

Allegre, who has not signed a contract, has been consistent in his six-year career, but he is coming off a season in which he missed the final 10 games because of a groin injury. Before that, he made 10 of 11 field goal attempts and all 14 of his extra points.

"As long as I prove myself and do better than he does, then I won't have to look over my shoulder at anybody," Nitnmo said. "I have to prove myself on the field."

Earlier this week, Giants general manager George Young said he did not know whether Allegre was in Texas or home in Mexico, and he was upset he was not in camp.

Allegre's absence gives Nitnmo a chance to make the NFL, something he never could have expected when he came to the United States in 1983 as an exchange student, living in Enterprise, Ala., with the family of a U.S. Army helicopter pilot.

The family eventually encouraged Nitnmo to use his soccer ability to try out for the football team.

In other camp news, nose tackles Erik Howard and Brad Henke missed workouts with tight hamstring muscles while tight end Greg Baty sat out with a pinched nerve in his shoulder. Safety Greg Jackson, the team's third-round draft choice, suffered a hip pointer and his availability is day to day, Parcells said.

Center Frank Winters underwent arthroscopic surgery Tuesday night on his left knee and he probably will miss three weeks, Parcells said.

Parcells waived guard Dean

Tiebouts, a rookie free agent from Western Kentucky.

There was no news on efforts to sign seven veterans, holdout Phil Simms and top draft choice Brian Williams, Young said.

Washington Redskins
It seems that the Washington Redskins' three outstanding wide receivers had an attitude problem last season. Between Art Monk, Ricky Sanders and Gary Clark, there weren't enough footballs for each to get his share of receptions.

"Last year we got kind of selfish, kind of greedy for the ball," Monk said. "We flop positions sometimes, so there would be a fight between us as to who should be the primary receiver. Each of us would struggle to get the ball as much as possible."

The three players had plenty of time to solve their differences during the offseason because the Redskins didn't make the playoffs. They've returned to training camp with a new perspective and a new nickname — The Posse.

"It's the term Coach (Joe) Gibbs uses when he wants three wide receivers in the lineup," Monk said. "We want to show everyone we're together this year, that we all consider ourselves starters and equals. We don't want any of that tension this year, because it just doesn't look good."

Dallas Cowboys
The only thing Eugene "The Hit-tin' Machine" Lockhart loves more than buzzing around on his red motorcycle is striking his fellow man.

"I've always just loved going around and hitting somebody and, boy, am I in the perfect defense now to do it legally for money," said the Dallas Cowboys middle linebacker.

Therein lies the reason why Lockhart wears "No" and "Pity" written on the tops of his shoes.

When the Cowboys puts on pads and scrimmaged the first day of training camp, Lockhart was as happy as an elephant in a peanut patch.

"Believe me, it was my version of hog heaven," Lockhart said. "I don't like all that running around in shorts business. This is football isn't it? I like coach (Jimmy) Johnson's theory of going out and hitting. It brings out my personality and it makes me a better player."

Lockhart will be more of an attack linebacker in Johnson's defensive scheme instead of a "reader" or "cluer" in former coach Tom Landry's "Flex" defense.

"I wish I had been playing this defense all my career (six years)," he said. "I would have been All-Pro in three of them. You can take chances in this defense. You just hit the gap and go."

Lockhart said the "Doomsday Defense" was fine for the Cowboys in the early 1970s but other teams started catching up to it.

"By the '80s other teams had figured out ways to victimize it," Lockhart said. "Well, it's going to take them awhile to figure this one out. The rest of the NFL had better watch out. The Cowboys are back."

Houston Oilers
Allen Pinkett is taking advantage of extra work due to the holdout of Mike Rozier.

"It's different because it's so quiet, we miss all of his screaming and yelling obscenities at us," Pinkett said of the vocal Rozier.

But there is another, more important, benefit for Pinkett and second-year running back Lorenzo White.

the board of governors, said he was shocked and appalled by the information contained in the Fuller memos.

"It certainly appears that some people were not on top of their jobs," said Spaulding, of Durham. "It certainly looks bad on the surface. But at the same time, to make a judgment on whether so and so ought to be fired — I'm not going to do that."

William A. Johnson, a Lillington attorney and former board chairman, said he was "surprised and disappointed that the chancellor did not take appropriate corrective measures when these abuses were first brought to his attention. How could he knowingly permit this sort of thing to go on?"

Jones, the board chairman, said he would consider calling an emergency meeting if he got "an overwhelming request" from a majority of board members.

"Otherwise, I think we'll have it as scheduled," he said.

That approach suited some board members, such as Charles Z. Flack Jr., of Forest City.

"There's nothing to be accomplished in a spirit of haste," said Flack. "Right now if we met we'd be laying it on a person. I think that's foolish."

Board member J. Earl Danieley, former president of Elon College, agreed.

"I think it's the only things to do — wait until the board meeting," said Danieley. "I'm very concerned about the seriousness of the charges reported in the papers. I'm trying very hard to wait until I get an official report regarding the investigation."

Carrier Picks Up Refugees

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

OLONGAPO, Philippines — A U.S. aircraft carrier rescued a boatload of Vietnamese refugees on the verge of sinking, and two fishing boats carrying 111 others landed near Subic Bay Naval Base, authorities said today.

Lt. Joseph Gradisher, a base spokesman, said the USS Ranger picked up 39 refugees Wednesday from the South China Sea after a U.S. aircraft reported the group's boat was about to sink in high seas.

The rescued Vietnamese, which included seven children, had been at sea for 10 days, Gradisher said. They were turned over to Philippine authorities this morning.

Meanwhile, two boatloads of refugees arrived in the nearby town of San Antonio after surviving two storms at sea, officials said.

The first boat, which carried 79 passengers, arrived Wednesday. Ho Tan Hung, the 40-year-old boat captain, said they left Vietnam a week ago.

The leader of the second group, which numbered 32, said the engine of their boat conked out after six days at sea and they paddled until reaching the shores of San Antonio early today.

Rescuers search through rubble of Kiev post office

Post Office Portico Collapses On Crowd, Causing 11 Deaths

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOSCOW — Workers hunted for more bodies in the rubble of Kiev's main post office after a portico collapsed on a crowd below, killing at least 11 people, Soviet news reports said today.

Dozens of people were standing beneath the huge overhang to escape heavy rain when the structure collapsed, dropping stone columns and bricks on them, Lt. Gen. Ivan Gladush, the Ukraine's interior minister, was quoted as saying in the newspaper Krasnaya Zvezda.

Anatoly Gritsenko, a spokesman for the Kiev City Council, said in a telephone interview the rescuers finished their search early today after removing the bodies of 11 people and pulling out two injured. The site was cleared of rubble, he said.

State television's evening news program, "Vremya," said Wednesday the portico at the front of the building collapsed at 4:20 p.m.

"At this time, there were particularly many people here. Visitors to the post office, passers-by, and people hurrying to the nearby metro station were trapped under the rubble," the TV report said. It said the brown stone rubble pile was 16½ feet high.

The television showed the collapse occurred on the top, or seventh floor of the building, where two broad columns leading vertically up the length of the post office and the balconies between them crashed to the ground.

The collapse did not affect most of the multi-story building, which remained standing.

The building, built in the 1950's, had been under repair. "Vremya" said a construction crew had boarded up the post office entrance with wood, but then had not started repair work, and that heavy rain apparently loosened part of the facade.

It said a commission had been formed to determine the cause of the collapse.

One resident said a woman had been hit by a falling piece of the building last winter, but that reconstruction work did not begin until about a month ago.

Former Dictator Supports Leftist In Bolivian Race

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LA PAZ, Bolivia — Three months of political wrangling over who will be Bolivia's next president has ended, with former military dictator Gen. Hugo Banzer Suarez declaring his support for former leftist Jaime Paz Zamora.

Paz Zamora, who finished third among 10 candidates in May elections, and Banzer Suarez, who finished second, agreed to a coalition government Wednesday.

Under Bolivian law, if no candidate wins an absolute majority in the general election, Congress chooses the president. The Congressional vote is expected this weekend and with Banzer Suarez' support, Paz Zamora's election is virtually assured.

The president is to be sworn in Sunday.

It will be the first time in 25 years that a government has completed its term and turned over the government to a democratically elected president.

"Our priority now is to consolidate democracy and the economic and financial stability of the country," Paz Zamora said.

Paz Zamora, a former Marxist who in recent years has described himself as a Social Democrat, served as vice president in the 1982-85 government of Hernan Siles Suazo.

He has said his government won't stray too far from the success of the free market economic program of President Victor Paz Estenssoro. "I can assure everyone that I will not head a government that will make traumatic changes in the economic field," Paz Zamora of the Social Democratic Movement of the Revolutionary Left said Wednesday.

Paz Zamora, 50, also said his government will respect its commitments on its $4 billion foreign debt.

The decision by Banzer Suarez' Conservative Nationalist Democratic Action Party to support the Social Democrats assures Paz Zamora the 79 votes among the 157 Senators and Deputies needed to become Bolivia's 77th president.

In the May 7 election, Paz Zamora's party came in third with 19 percent of the popular vote. Banzer Suarez garnered 23 percent and Gonzalo Sanchez de Lozada of the ruling Nationalist Revolutionary Movement, 24 percent.

Under the accord, Banzer Suarez' party will receive 10 Cabinet posts, the vice presidency, and presidency of the lower house of Congress. Paz Zamora's party will receive the presidency, leadership of the Senate and eight Cabinet posts.

It is an unusual partnership. Banzer Suarez, 64, jailed and persecuted Paz Zamora and members of his left-of-center party when he ruled the country from 1971 to 1978.

Paz Zamora said "Banzer Suarez has given us an example of love for the country and human qualities in finding the key to solving a deadlock that appeared without solution."

Until Wednesday's announcement, there was concern that a president would not be elected before Sunday's inauguration. Roman catholic church officials last week appealed for a break in the impasse.

Paz Zamora also promised an all-out war against his country's cocaine trade.

Bolivia, an impoverished country of 6.9 million residents, produces an estimated one third of cocaine for U.S. and European markets. About 300,000 Bolivians depend on coca leaf cultivation and cocaine production for their livelihood.

Bolivia, once considered the most unstable country in South America, is in its seventh year of democratic rule.

In 1985, Paz Estenssoro's government implemented tough economic austerity measures that slashed inflation from 20,000 percent annually to just 6 percent.

The measures included a ten-fold increase in the price of gasoline, an end to all price supports, the firing of 23,000 government employees and the restructuring of government-owned companies.

Radicals Loot Police Armory

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

COLOMBO, Sri Lanka — Sinhalese radicals wearing police uniforms raided a government armory and wounded at least five security officers in a shootout before escaping, police said today.

An officer who spoke on condition of anonymity said at least 15 radicals entered the police armory unchallenged on Wednesday and apparently escaped without injury.

He said the radicals took 25 automatic rifles from the armory in the suburb of Thimbirigasyaya. Two vans used by the radicals were found abandoned later about four miles away, the officer said.

Rafsanjani Sworn As Iran's President

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NICOSIA, Cyprus — Parliament Speaker Hashemi Rafsanjani was sworn in today as the Islamic Republic's fifth president, Iran's official news agency reported.

The Islamic Republic News Agency, monitored in Nicosia, said the swearing-in ceremony was attended by the nation's top leaders but gave no other details.

Rafsanjani, 54, is considered a pragmatist who would like to ease tight governmental control of the economy, and resume ties with the West.

Rafsanjani takes over from incumbent Ayatollah Ali Khamenei, who became the country's spiritual leader after Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini's death on June 3.

Rafsanjani won a landslide victory in last Friday's presidential elections, capturing 94.5 percent of the vote.

Constitutional reforms approved in a referendum alongside the election give him considerably enlarged powers by scrapping Prime Minister Hussein Musavi's post.

Earlier this week Khamenei told Musavi in a letter to continue his duties as prime minister until a new cabinet is set up by Rafsanjani.

The presidential elections, originally scheduled for Aug. 18, were advanced by about three weeks to hasten the transfer of power after Khomeini's death.

Khamenei's decision to step down as president before the end of his term appeared aimed at allowing Rafsanjani to move quickly to start reforming Iran's sluggish economy.

Performers Won't Request Asylum

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SAN FRANCISCO — Eight Chinese opera performers who vanished last week amid reports they planned to seek political asylum are "scared to death" by the publicity their disappearance has caused, a spokesman said.

None of the performers plans to apply for political asylum, said Alan Chow, executive director of the Chinese American Arts Council.

The fate of the entertainers, including seven opera stars and a popular actor, has been unknown since they fled the 28-member Kun Opera company over two days last week. Immigration officials in San Francisco said Wednesday they have had no contact with the eight.

Chinese Seek Major's Return

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BEIJING — China demanded today that South Korea hand over a Chinese army major who fled to South Korea with his wife and asked for political asylum.

The South Korean government has said it is investigating the case of Maj. Zuo Xiukai and his wife, who walked into the U.N.-controlled truce village of Panmunjon on Saturday.

The officer had been stationed in communist North Korea as a member of the Chinese delegation to the Korean Military Armistice Commission. China fought on North Korea's side in the 1950-53 Korean War, and is a signatory to the armistice agreement.

A South Korean newspaper said the pair wants to go to the United States.

In its first public comment on the defection, China's Foreign Ministry said in a statement: "It was under the influence of some external factors that the Chinese (People's Liberation Army) man and his wife entered South Korea. The South Korean side should immediately and unconditionally turn them over to the Chinese side."

The ministry did not explain what it meant by "external factors."

Chow, who would say only that he has some connection with the performers, reported that four remained in San Francisco, two are in New York City and two are in Washington, D.C.

All are staying with family members or friends, said Chow, adding that he was uncertain whether the performers had planned to flee the opera group or had acted spontaneously.

Observers have speculated that the performers might be seeking democratic and economic freedoms in the wake of the student-led pro-democracy movement in China this spring.

But Chow insisted the artists will not seek political asylum. It has been common for performers from China, Hong Kong and Taiwan to arrive in the United States with a working visa and then apply for a student visa to study in this country, he said. However, the government crackdown on dissidents has changed such matters.

"It's not too hard to change their visa to a student visa in a regular case," Chow said. "Now it's very bad."

"They didn't know it would be a big issue," said Chow. "They don't really know those big things happened in Beijing. Now they found out and they're scared to death."

Chow met the entertainers when they performed in New York last month. He said none asked him then for advice on how to legally remain in the country.

Victory Claim

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa — Elated anti-apartheid leaders pledged today to expand their nationwide defiance campaign after claiming victory in the first phase, an unprecedented challenge of segregated health services.

Future targets will include whites-only schools, parks and swimming pools, said Cassim Saloojee, a prominent Indian activist.

About 270 black and Indian patients received treatment at five white hospitals Wednesday in a well-organized, peaceful protest that drew a cordial response from hospital staff.

Japan's Governing Party Expected To Throw Its Support To Reformer

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOKYO — Factions of Japan's scandal-ridden governing party were meeting today to decide whether to throw their support to a former Cabinet minister with a reputation as a reformer.

Several major Japanese newspapers said the factions' support was certain to give former Education Minister Toshiki Kaifu enough votes within the Liberal Democratic Party to become party president and its candidate for prime minister.

The party president is assured of being elected prime minister by Parliament because of the party's large majority in the lower house.

Kaifu, a 10-term lower house member, officially announced his candidacy on Wednesday. If no other candidates appear before Saturday's deadline, he could be declared party president without a parliamentary election, currently scheduled for Tuesday, officials said.

The vote in Parliament was expected Aug. 10. Kaifu, 58, would succeed Prime Minister Soudouke Uno, who announced last month he would resign after only two months in office because of the party's heavy losses in July 23 elections for the upper house of Parliament. Uno also was linked to a sex scandal in which he was accused of keeping paid mistresses.

Kaifu normally would be an unlikely candidate for the premiership because he has a small power base within the party and belongs to a faction headed by 78-year-old Toshio Komoto. With 29 members, the Komoto faction is one of the smallest groups in the conservative governing party.

Kaifu has not held key Cabinet posts nor top party jobs that normally are considered prerequisites for the nation's highest office.

But larger factions in the giant governing party decided not to field candidates or were unable to find suitable choices untainted by the Recruit Co. bribery scandal, which toppled Uno's predecessor, Noboru Takeshita.

The power groupings were meeting today and considering Kaifu's candidacy.

Recruit sold stocks in a subsidiary to about 160 influential politicians, bureaucrats and businessmen at bargain prices before the shares were offered for public sale in 1986. The price soared when the stock went on the market and the buyers made huge profits.

Recruit also made large political donations and loans to political figures.

Kaifu acknowledged he had received about $110,000 in political donations during a five-year period from Recruit Co.

But he said the donations had been properly reported, and that he had received no stock shares from the information and publishing conglomerate.

Like many members of Parliament, Kaifu and Takeshita both graduated from Tokyo's Waseda University, and reportedly have maintained close ties.

Party officials said the new prime minister would serve only the remainder of Takeshita's original term, which ends Oct. 31. The party will then hold a new election.

Kaifu told reporters Wednesday it was too early to talk in detail about his policies. "But political reform is the biggest issue that has been raised by the people," he said.

Party members have called for political reform to help restore public trust in the party, eroded by the Recruit scandal, Uno's alleged involvement with mistresses and a highly unpopular 3 percent sales tax the party instituted.

Kaifu has a background as a reformer. He is a member of the reform committee set up by the Liberal Democrats to deal with the Recruit scandal.

From 1974 to 1976, he was deputy chief Cabinet secretary under the late Prime Minister Takeo Miki, who sought to clean up Japan's money politics when he succeeded scandal-plagued Prime Minister Kakuei Tanaka.

Kaifu later served as education minister for two periods totaling about two years.

Writer Says Lack Of Progress Hurts Gorbachev's Popularity

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOSCOW — President Mikhail Gorbachev may be popular abroad, but his lack of success at home has eroded his once-strong support, a writer said.

A. Migranyan wrote in an 18-page commentary in the July issue of the literary journal Novy Mir that Gorbachev was much more popular during his first two years in power. Gorbachev took office in March 1985 and launched his program to make Soviet society more open and reform the economy.

Public opinion polls in many foreign countries show Gorbachev wildly popular. But although Migranyan said the 58-year-old Kremlin chief has proven himself an adept and appealing politician, the picture is different at home.

"It is not enough to maintain popularity and mass support constantly if there are no positive results. Leaders need successes, even small ones, to consolidate their authority," he wrote.

The writer blamed the problems not so much on Gorbachev, but on Communist Party functionaries. Gorbachev himself has admitted his program is faltering, and has lashed out at party officials and bureaucrats resisting his reforms.

He has called for an urgent renewal of party and government ranks from the local to the national level.

Migranyan did not specify how he believes his programs have failed but most Soviets know the problems well.

Soviets continue to be plagued by chronic shortages of housing, food and consumer goods. Crime, pollution and drunkenness are reported on the rise, and the government faces a soaring budget deficit.

Migranyan said Gorbachev is in a difficult position as he tries to reform Soviet society from the centralized, corruption-plagued system of government that has existed for decades.

"He wants to destroy the existing structures ... and at the same time personifies those structures for the public. And certainly, lack of successes which are due to the clumsy functioning of the party and state structures weakens his role as a leader," the commentator said.

The people, he wrote, are impatient and disappointed in perestroika and have become demoralized because they are left with the following picture: "The past is shameful, the present is horrendous and the future is unpredictable."

He called for Gorbachev and the rest of the leadership to take more radical steps to "prevent the further diminishing of Gorbachev's authority."

Poles Plan Police Probe

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WARSAW, Poland — Lawmakers have voted to create a commission to investigate the deaths of nearly 100 people allegedly murdered for political reasons since the 1981 martial-law crackdown, state media said today.

Despite the communist coalition's 299-161 majority in the Sejm — the lower house of parliament — the proposal by Solidarity Deputy Tadeusz Kowalczyk passed Wednesday on a 174-91 vote with 33 abstentions.

Earlier Wednesday the Sejm elected Gen. Czeslaw Kiszczak, head of the nation's powerful police force since July 1981 and a key enforcer of martial law, to be the country's new prime minister.

In a letter to the speaker of the Sejm, Kowalczyk asked the Interior Ministry to clarify the circumstances of deaths the lawmaker blamed on security officials, the official news agency PAP said today.

Clinic Serves Homeless Patients

By Sally Whelan

PITT COUNTY MEMORIAL HOSPITAL

Prevention may be the best medicine, but it is not a viable option to the homeless who lack the money and savvy to tap into the health care system. Thus, an ignored cold develops into pneumonia. A neglected cut becomes infected and may lead to gangrene.

Local physicians, nurses and medical students are combating the dilemma by offering free medical care each Monday evening at the Greenville Community Shelter for the homeless.

The clinic, which served its first patients in December 1988, has two main purposes, according to Dr. William Fulcher, medical director of the Snow Hill Medical Center. It serves as the first step in providing medical care to those who use the shelter to connect them with a primary care physician. It also provides physicians, medical students and other health professionals with experience working with a community's indigent residents.

Each Monday night, the staff sees 12 to 15 people, 75 percent of whom suffer from a combination of drug or alcohol abuse and mental illness. The medical professionals see illnesses of abuse, neglect and malnutrition as well as illness prevalent in eastern North Carolina, such as hypertension. In the winter months, physicians treat exposure and colds. To treat some of these illnesses, most people would go to the medical cabinet, but they are more serious problems to the homeless.

Fulcher has identified a group of physicians who will accept indigent patients. A core of approximately 20 physicians and 20 medical students staff the weekly clinic. Medical students are coordinated by

Medical student Wiley Nifong checks blood pressure of shelter resident Nathan Dupree

Wiley Nifong, a fourth-year student at the East Carolina University School of Medicine.

In addition to meeting their patients' medical needs, the medical professionals also serve as patient advocates. "The clinic improves self-esteem in the homeless as well as promoting the attitude 'Yes, I can lick this problem and be healthy,'" Fulcher explains.

Social workers from Pitt County Memorial Hospital are volunteering their services during the clinic on a monthly basis. Social worker Freda Cross coordinates this service and says there is a definite need.

"Many of the people at the shelter are not aware of the services available in Pitt County," she says. "We can address problems, make referrals and provide follow-up if needed."

The social workers developed a map identifying the location of human service agencies in Greenville. These maps are distributed at the shelter and at other agencies.

The Rev. Nancy Pierson, program director of the shelter, says the clinic has accomplished a great deal in the area of preventive medicine.

"We can start to make long-term changes. These people need to tap into the system. Getting a hand up is what is going to change these people's lives. It takes skill to walk into an office and tell someone what you need. They are used to having doors shut in their faces. By having a clinic at the shelter, on their own turf, they will physically and psychologically have more access to care."

Ms. Pierson sees the clinic as the first step in providing rehabilitation services to the homeless. Other plans include renovating a vacant building located behind the shelter into transitional housing, a larger medical clinic and space for day care for the homeless and for social services.

Through funds from grants, the community and the Pitt County United Way, the shelter has funds to operate but none to expand.

"With limited funds, you have to make choices — maintenance or rehabilitation. Our goal right now is to maintain people. Maintenance is not going to get them out of homelessness forever. It is the rehabilitation services that enable people to change their lives. That's what we are working toward."

never told him, but we could tell he knew," she said. "And all three of us were present, releasing him when he left. We told him Mom was waiting for him. There was no response, but I feel he understood. He finally let go."

To this day, Higuera said, she is grieved by the circumstances of her mother's death: what scholars call a residual grief. Since her mother was expected to recover, none of the family was present at the time of her death.

"Being with my father when he died was so important," Higuera said. "I think one of the things we all fear is dying alone. I still hurt because I wasn't there with my mother. It seems as if that regret will always be around."

Ray Bradbury: Grown-Up Child Is Fiction's Poet

By Jeffrey A. Frank
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

NEW YORK — The red-faced man at the door does not look like someone who ever managed the remarkable feat of time travel. He is, if truth be told, a bit pudgy.

He wears tennis shorts, white socks and sneakers, and there is nothing about him that betrays a careful knowledge of long-ago Illinois summers or post-atomic landscapes or golden-eyed Martians who may lie in wait for innocent Earthlings.

Yet consider the evidence: Almost no one can imagine a time or place without the fiction of Ray Bradbury. It's as if he's always been with us, his books always fresh on the shelves. Isn't that interesting? as Ray Bradbury would say.

The white-haired man, whose stories and novels are part of the American language, talks with question marks. He is pleased to be reminded that since publication of "The Martian Chronicles" nearly 40 years ago, generations of young readers have been seduced by his language and imagination.

These readers may feel vaguely disloyal when they go on to something else, but even the unfaithful never forget. For them, the very titles — "The Illustrated Man," "Fahrenheit 451," "Dandelion Wine," "October Country," "Something Wicked This Way Comes" — are remembered with something like love.

The voyager has come to town to talk about the third season of "The Ray Bradbury Theater," 12 new half-hour episodes on cable's USA Network.

He was brought here by jet plane, which would not be news were it not that Bradbury successfully resisted flying for the first 62 of his 68 years. "I discovered," he says, "what a lot of people have discovered. I wasn't afraid of flying. I was afraid of me running up and down the aisles screaming, embarrassing people. Wouldn't that be awful?"

But if Bradbury has surrendered to flying machines, he still doesn't use a computer. And he may be the only Los Angeles resident who never learned to drive a car, a fact he traces to scenes he says he witnessed during a California childhood.

"I saw five people killed right in front of me, decapitated, that sort of thing," he tells you. "So I don't think you ever get over that — it's like being in a war, isn't it, eh?"

"And then I saw, going to Palm Springs three years ago, the car ahead of me was pulverized by a truck that came over the divider. They never found the bodies. There were no bodies to find. Interesting, eh. Isn't that interesting? They were completely pulverized. And you see one or two things like that, you say, 'Nah, I'll stay in the back seat and cover a lot.'"

A moment later he becomes almost militant, asking, "Where are the parades, where are the marchers for the 100,000 people killed in the last two years in cars? Why aren't there demonstrations?"

No one has ever suggested that time travelers must be fearless.

Ray Bradbury's costume is completed by a grotesque shirt striped green and purple and a blue jacket carrying the legend "Hotel Del Coronado."

He does not, all in all, look like the person science fiction writer-editor Damon Knight called "the poet of 20th-century neurosis ... the isolated spark of consciousness, awake and alone at midnight ... the grown-up child who still remembers, still believes."

Nearly 40 years ago Bradbury was singled out by Christopher Isherwood and Angus Wilson, among others, as one of the more distinctive voices in post-war American fiction. But, as if by unspoken agreement, he has since been consigned to the science-fiction-fantasy genre — and even there, his work is suspect.

Where, ask sci-fi purists, are the prophetic fables of an Arthur C. Clarke, the technical brilliance of an Isaac Asimov, the wizardly pace of a Robert Heinlein? Meanwhile, in the very mainstream, a Clifton Fadiman no longer celebrates Bradbury as an inheritor of Hawthorne.

"I don't exist," Bradbury says. "The New York Review has never acknowledged that I was born. I never had a review there. The New Yorker did one review, 35 years ago. The American Scholar, the magazines that I like the most, have never acknowledged me — I had one review in the Atlantic 30 years ago, nothing in Harper's that I recall, the Saturday Review two reviews. They don't know where my handle is, they don't know how to pick me up. And I don't, either — I love so many things."

This is not said with bitterness. Ray Bradbury has long ago come to terms with this sort of thing, and he supposes that what sets him most apart from the others who write science fiction and fantasy is the richness of his prose and the variety of his subjects.

"I met Aldous Huxley 35 or 36 years ago," he says by way of preamble. "Had tea with him one afternoon. I was introduced to him by Christopher Isherwood. It was a wonderful event in my life, because I'd admired Huxley so many years. And Mr. Huxley looked at me and said, 'You know what you are?' And I said, 'What am I?' And he said, 'You're a poet.'"

RAY BRADBURY

Losing Parent Levels Many Adults

By David Larsen
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

"It happens without you even consciously thinking about it," 44-year-old Ernestina Higuera said. "Maybe you'll be driving to work months afterward, and suddenly you start crying in the car."

For Art Leatherman, 60, "Whenever I use his old power table saw, the memories come back, such as when I was young and he would take me to the beach."

"Almost a year later, I still have dreams about him," Gina Pack, 32, said. "In one dream, I was standing next to him at a party, and I was so glad that he had recovered."

"Don't let them tell you time makes it better," 39-year-old Jewel Novack said. "It doesn't."

All of these adults are talking about an almost universal human experience: the death of a parent.

It would probably come as a shock to hear that the experience that has so imprinted their lives has been relatively ignored by social scientists who study the human condition.

But where much attention has been paid to how a parent's death impacts a child — and there is study after study describing the grim fallout from the death of a child, and what it means to lose a spouse — there seems far less concern about the more common event of an adult finally "orphaned" by the loss of a parent.

"In our society," said Andrew E. Scharlach, assistant professor in the University of Southern California School of Social Work, "it is more legitimate to talk about the problems of taking care of an elderly parent than to talk about one's feelings for that parent after death."

That's something of an anomaly, Scharlach said, in that while a human can have many spouses and many children, everybody gets only one mother and one father.

As one woman said tearfully to a USC researcher after her surviving parent died: "I'm no one's little girl anymore." She was 59.

Higuera had the privilege of living parents for more than 40 years. Then, three years ago, she said, both died within a little more than a month of each other.

Her 84-year-old father had suffered strokes, but, shocking to Higuera and her two sisters, it was their 80-year-old mother — with no signs of illness — who died first.

"When she said she didn't feel well, we took her to a hospital. Three days later she was gone. Our father was in a convalescent home, and we never told him, but we could tell he knew," she said. "And all three of us were present, releasing him when he left. We told him Mom was waiting for him. There was no response, but I feel he understood. He finally let go."

To this day, Higuera said, she is grieved by the circumstances of her mother's death: what scholars call a residual grief. Since her mother was expected to recover, none of the family was present at the time of her death.

"Being with my father when he died was so important," Higuera said. "I think one of the things we all fear is dying alone. I still hurt because I wasn't there with my mother. It seems as if that regret will always be around."

The Real Billy Crystal Shines In New Comedy

Crystal with 'When Harry Met Sally...' co-star Meg Ryan

By Bob Thomas
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — You've seen him as Sammy, Grace, Tina and Fernando. Now the real Billy Crystal, more or less, stands up in a romantic comedy directed by his best friend, Rob Reiner.

Some friend. Reiner talked to other actors before offering "When Harry Met Sally ..." to his pal.

"It was awkward," Crystal recalls, "because when the project came to me, it wasn't as best friends. It was, 'I think you should do this film.' I knew he had seen other people, and I was just like dying. I didn't know the script, I just knew the age group and who the guy sort of was, and I thought, 'Well, why isn't he giving it to me?'"

"When he called me up to say, 'You got to do the movie,' he said, 'I had to go through the process of seeing other people that any director would do. I wanted you to do it, but I just had to make sure.'"

"I said, 'I don't know if it's any good; I have to read it and make sure.' I called afterward and said, 'I have to do it. But we got to start working together.'"

Nora Ephron ("Heartburn") had written a script about a couple who meet over the years and test his theory that men and women can't be real friends "because the sex thing gets in the way." A lot of the material stemmed from Reiner's own experiences with dating after the breakup of his marriage to actress-director Penny Marshall.

"My job was to get Rob out (of the script) and me in — or Harry in," said Crystal. "It was awkward playing moments that I knew had happened to Rob in his life, and he was on the other side of the camera watching me."

Having been married for 18 years, Crystal could not contribute his dating experiences. But he did inject a bit of Billy into Harry.

"I think in the sense of humor, the deflection of his pain," he said. "Any of us who do comedy know, or just in life find, that a laugh is the best medicine. This character, more than any other I've played, is me."

Meg Ryan plays Sally in the film, which also features Carrie Fisher and Bruno Kirby as the couple's best friends.

Unlike his pal, Robin Williams, who performs maniacally in interviews, at restaurants and on street corners, Billy Crystal is reflective when he doesn't have a mike in front of his mouth. Next year marks his 20th year as an entertainer, and he was asked about the milestones in his career.

"You mean millstones?" he cracked lamely.

"I guess the first was in 1975, being bumped from the first 'Saturday Night Live' as a guest, which hurt a lot. Six months later I was on 'Soap,' Wonderful show. Four years playing the same character. Fine experience working with the talented actors and actresses in that show. Learned a lot about acting there."

do much television. I wasn't doing films at all — I wasn't asked. I went on the road just to make myself better."

"I went back to 'Saturday Night Live' as a host in '84, which was a personal vindication. Then coming on as a regular in '84-'85. Everyone said, 'What are you doing that for? You don't need to do that.' I had to do that. I could do the things I'm doing now, but I didn't have a place."

During that memorable "Saturday Night Live" season, Crystal stretched himself with on-the-nose impressions of Sammy Davis Jr., Tina Turner, Grace Jones and, most famously, Fernando Lamas. Film work followed: "The Princess Bride" (with Reiner), "Running Scared," "Throw Momma From the Train" and "Memories of Me," which he co-wrote and co-produced.

"I don't give up," he said. "I'm a little bit of a pit bull with myself. If something's bothering me about the work and where I want to be in the business, I just latch onto something and I don't let go until it gets better."

Senior Citizens Newest Target Of Banks' Marketing Strategies

By Leslie Dreyfous
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BOSTON — When it comes to the nation's fastest growing population, several demographic truths apply: They are affluent, interested in getting the most for their buck and over 55 years old.

But don't call them senior citizens. "It's instant death," said Marion Williams, who developed Boston Five Cents Savings Bank's program for older customers.

"In the early going, some banks made the mistake of pitching accounts with names like Golden Years," said Marsha Blasco of Florida National Bank Inc.

Since the early 1980s, banks around the nation have been paying more attention to their older customers. Government figures project a 40 percent increase in the number of people over 50 during the next 10 years as the baby boom generation ages. This group earns $900 billion dollars a year and controls 75 percent to 80 percent of financial assets in the marketplace.

"Those are numbers that say this is an important segment," said Thomas Munsell of Shawmut National Corp. in Hartford, Conn. "They're there and have big dollars. But they're sophisticated and elusive."

Munsell, who did considerable research in developing the Shawmut 55 program, said the mature bank customer is anything but an easy sell. They are very well-read and, in some cases, have the time to look into and carefully compare what banks offer. "These people are astute," he said.

Retirement account managers agree the most important point in wooing the over-55 set is they regard themselves as anything but "older."

"Most of these people consider themselves about 10 years younger than they are," said Blasco, an assistant vice president. "They don't feel their age and are much more active than prior generations."

When Barnett Banks of Jacksonville, Fla., in 1982 designed a package of financial and banking services for older customers it was an anomaly, said Denise Martin, retirement market manager. Now, the competition is fierce. "Everybody is finally realizing that it's a very important population."

And the scramble has just begun, said Michael P. Sullivan, a Charlotte, N.C., consultant and author of "Banking on the Mature Customer." "There's going to be some real warfare out there as more and more attractive programs are made available to the seniors. Up till now, most banks have targeted the young urban professional market. But suddenly they're realizing that 60 to 85 percent of their savings balance is held by people over the age of 50."

To appeal to that market, hundreds of banks have adopted programs like Barnett's Senior Partners program. Specialized services have become standard.

Customers over 55 can expect free checking, travelers and cashiers cheques. Special financial planning guides and accidental death insurance have become de rigeur. And any bank worth its salt is liable to have a newsletter addressed to "the mature banking customer," Martin said.

In addition to standard banking discounts, marketing directors said their older customers are interested in travel, entertainment and medical benefits.

"They're no longer acquiring and are instead in the appreciation stage of life," said Williams, an assistant marketing manager at Boston Ives.

A Florida bank offers older customers free memberships to Disney World's Magic Years Club and a pocket-sized computer card containing the client's entire medical history.

But travel perks and dining discounts aren't high on some seniors' lists, and many seniors banking programs require minimum balances of as much as $10,000, excluding many people on fixed incomes, said Barbara Hughes, a consumer affairs specialist at the American Association of Retired Persons.

"Our concern is for those who through deregulation and increased fees have found banking services beyond their budget," Hughes said. "In many places banking services are beyond the reach of low- or moderate-income people."

Engagement Announced

Foster-Hay

Husband Won't Respect Privacy

Dear Abby: What do you and your readers think of the following situation?

My husband goes through my purse whenever the opportunity arises. (He usually does this when I am not at home.) He also opens and reads letters addressed to me.

Abby, I have absolutely nothing to hide, but I resent this kind of behavior. When I confront him, all he has to say is, "Big deal!" — Tired In Arizona

Dear Tired: Let him know that it is a "big deal" to you, and you resent the invasion of privacy.

Regardless of what he says, he's behaving like a man who doesn't trust his wife. To paraphrase a French saying, "A man does not look under a bed unless he himself has been under one."

Furthermore, if your husband continues with this kind of boorish, insulting behavior knowing how you feel about it, he's due to a marriage counselor, lady. Your marriage is in deep trouble.

Dear Abby: My wife and I recently stayed overnight with my parents at their country home. We had a good time, but something bothered me.

Dear Abby

On one occasion, I spontaneously gave my wife a gentle kiss just to say, "I love you." My father said, "Please confine that sort of thing to the bedroom."

I suppose I should mention that both my parents are very uptight about showing affection publicly. (The only affection I've ever seen them show is to their young grandchildren.) Even hugging is not condoned unless someone is arriving or leaving.

My wife and I are quite affectionate, but we don't overdo it in public. We enjoy seeing other couples holding hands or walking arm in arm; it gives us pleasure to know that other couples are as affectionate as we are.

Abby, how do you feel about showing affection "outside of the bedroom"? Or are there some "rules" we're not aware of? — In Love In Florida

Dear In Love: I see nothing wrong with showing affection publicly — within proper limits. But since you know that your parents are uptight about it, simply cool it in their presence.

It's said that "all the world loves a lover," but lovers should control themselves in public, lest some on-looker says, "Why don't you two get a room?"

Dear Abby: As the parents of three adopted Korean children, we would like to offer another way to handle questions from strangers who ask what nationality our children are, and where did we get them. (You said strangers who ask such questions are rude. We say they are naturally curious.)

When strangers question us, we explain how we adopted these children, how old they were when we got them, and how an international adoption works.

We have met some very nice people and welcome an opportunity to educate them. It's led to a better understanding of why and how some people choose to adopt children from another country.

We answer these questions in the presence of our children, and they have not suffered from it. They realize that they are of a different race, and they know that they are adopted. And since these conversations are always friendly, it assures our children that their adoption was positive and good.

So, Abby, our advice to adoptive parents of children of another race is: Don't be offended when strangers ask questions. Answer them honestly. You will meet some nice people that way. We have. — Friends From Iowa

Dear Friends: Thank you. Whew! The things I learn from my readers!

If you would like to write to Abby, send your letter to Abigail Van Buren, P.O. Box 69440, Los Angeles, CA 90069. For a personal, non-published reply, enclose a self-addressed stamped envelope.

Call It 'The Bank' And Leave It At That

Is it my imagination or are the names of stores and banks changing every week? I wrote a check to a grocery store the other day and the cashier smiled and said, "That's our old name. We're part of a chain now." I said, "That's OK; the check I'm writing is on the old name of my bank, which changed its name a month ago."

Remember when you always needed a point of reference to recall the year your children were born? It was always something like, "Jeff was born the year we paid the freezer off," or "Sarah came just before we closed in the patio." Well, now it's, "Let's see, Michael was born just before the hostile takeover of RCA by General Electric." Or, "Wendy didn't come along until the summer that Goldwaters department store became Robinson's."

At Wits End
Erma Bombeck

I don't pretend to know the ins and outs of corporate raiding, mergers and acquisitions. All I know is that banks are driving me nuts. They change their names, their logos and their spokespersons.

After watching a TV commercial for the First Bank of Federal National Statesmen, I said to my husband, "That sounds like a great bank. Maybe we should put our money there."

He said, "We already have our money there. It used to be called the First Premier Bank of the Great Plains."

"What was it before that?" I asked.

"A convenience store," he said. Frankly, I'll be glad when we finally end up with "Trump" on everything with a number behind it. At least I won't get stuck with a stack of blank checks, good for nothing but scratch pads.

Loretta Silk, a reader from Harrison, N.J., is sick of it, too. She threw an envelope in the wastebasket from Westminster Bank, thinking it was an advertisement from England. It turns out it was her bank changing names again.

"I have reached a point," she wrote, "where I can't recall the names of any of my banks, and someday I shall have to scan the newspapers to see if there are some dormant accounts lying about in some bank that I won't recognize because it's changed titles 10 times." (Don't count on it, Loretta.)

She said she wouldn't be surprised if people who save their money in the First Sealy Mattress change its name to First Serta Savings, just to be trendy.

It's a mystery how bank pens have a greater record for longevity than the financial institutions in which they're found. It's not unusual to see a sign in a bank window reading, "A tradition since 1984."

The only sure thing in all of this is that 10, yea 20, years from now, you can count on a gift from my mother in a Goldwaters box!

Real Packrats Cannot Part With Anything

By Jesse Katz
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

CAMARILLO, Calif. — In the 1960s, a middle-aged housewife named Kelton Roberts helped organize neighborhood cleanups as member of Camarillo Beautiful.

But officials in this city an hour northwest of Los Angeles this year found Roberts herself was wallowing in filth. A demolition crew recently was ordered to haul more than 100 tons of festering debris from inside and around her modest duplex, which was condemned last summer after inspectors discovered massive heaps of trash piled in some rooms to within a foot of the ceiling.

When building officials first entered the house — donning protective overalls, rubber boots and breathing masks — they were forced to slog down narrow aisles through stacks of rotting newspapers, magazines, bottles, cans, clothes and leaves, all heavy with dust, cobwebs and rodent feces.

The walls had grown mold from rain pouring through the decayed roof. There was no plumbing, no gas and no heat. Refuse had almost completely buried the bathroom and kitchen fixtures. And Roberts, 64 and widowed, had been literally forced by the odor to find shelter in the backyard, where she had equipped herself with a tarpaulin, an electric hotplate and a garden hose.

Throughout the country, stories like that of Kelton Roberts are repeated with surprising regularity.

In Los Angeles alone, officials last year investigated more than 200 cases of garbage-choked houses, including four deaths caused by flames erupting from rubbish-filled dwellings. Because city inspectors usually don't learn of such conditions until a neighbor or landlord complains, it is estimated that hundreds, if not thousands, of additional cases go unreported.

Yet even in psychiatric circles, where obscure maladies frequently fill volumes, this phenomenon has scarcely been studied and has no commonly accepted name.

Many experts believe that excessive hoarding often is a reaction to fear and loneliness. Sometimes, they say, it is caused by mental illness, such as obsessive-compulsive or paranoid-schizophrenic disorders. Other times, it might be explained by an impoverished childhood or other traumatic loss.

What is known is that those who live in trash-packed homes are almost always elderly, reclusive, distrustful and without friends or nearby family. A few exhibit signs of dementia, but many appear lucid and intelligent. Although most have middle-class roots, their money is usually stowed away or scattered throughout the filth.

Above all, these people's lives are characterized by an exaggerated attachment to their belongings, a bond that creates the illusion of abundance where otherwise there is a void, say mental health experts. Each item, sometimes even urine and used toilet paper, is imparted with an unnatural value, until eventually refuse has run its collector right out of house and home.

Like the sinners in Dante's Inferno who were forced to suffer under the weight of their own excesses, so stew the victims of what one psychiatrist calls the "packrat syndrome." In just the last year, the following cases have come to light in Southern California:

— The Santa Barbara woman who wore diapers she made from plastic trash bags, saving the used ones in the dark garage she called home, along with two dozen large soda bottles filled with urine and a cooler so saturated with spoiled fruit that worms were oozing through the Styrofoam.

— The East Los Angeles woman who collected so much damp, decaying rubbish that everything in the first floor of her home turned to black, silty compost.

— The downtown Los Angeles man who lived in a junk-filled garage with dozens of dogs and cats, as well as several dead ones he had killed in a vain stab at veterinary medicine.

— And the Windsor Hills man who died when flames leapt from the layers of trash in his two-story home, but whose body could not be found until firefighters hauled away more than 50 tons of charred debris.

Mental health experts generally view hoarding with some sympathy, explaining it as a way for the elderly to feel secure at a time when much else in their lives has begun to deteriorate.

"The garbage gives them the idea, metaphorically, that they can meet their own needs," said Carole Lieberman, the Malibu, Calif., psychiatrist who coined the term, "packrat syndrome." "As all their powers are beginning to disintegrate, they're trying to make sure they will have what they need to take care of themselves, to make sure that everything is OK in their own little cocoon."

As, increasingly, older people may live long distances from their children or other family members, some experts fear the problem could become even more widespread. The hoarders, they say, are our parents and grandparents, our aunts and uncles, whom we fall out of touch with, and who, in turn, fall out of touch themselves.

It is nothing new, of course, for the isolated and lonely to collect junk and other oddities.

Perhaps the most celebrated case involved the eccentric Collyer brothers, two elderly New Yorkers whose deaths in 1947 made headlines and drew crowds to the boarded-up brownstone where they had lived in seclusion for nearly 40 years.

The sons of a wealthy Manhattan gynecologist and a domineering mother who read the classics aloud in Greek, Langley and Homer Collyer had amassed an incredible array of musty newspapers, rancid food, rotting clothes and useless junk, all pierced by winding tunnels and guarded by booby traps that would crush intruders with a deluge of garbage.

Homer, 65, who was blind and paralyzed, was found dead, sitting otherwise naked in a tattered bathrobe, after police entered the building on an anonymous tip. Officers foraged through the garbage for three weeks before they finally found Langley, 61, smothered under the weight of one of his own traps.

LAT-WP News Service

Kelton Roberts, obsessed with hoarding her belongings, will not even part with her trash

Such unpleasant ends happen more often than they should because authorities view filthy living conditions, up to a certain point, as essentially private matters.

The garbage, which may be personal refuse or that collected from the streets, is frequently hoarded for years by people who have few acquaintances and who allow even fewer visitors into their homes. Even if a neighbor or relative suspects a problem, say officials, the law allows for a fair amount of filth and eccentricity before a public agency may intervene.

That dilemma has served as a backdrop to the year-long fight by Camarillo to clean the home of Kelton Roberts, who, now barred from the property, has been living on the streets with a shopping cart stacked high with personal effects.

Roberts, a plump, ruddy-faced woman with a keen wit, attributes some of her hoarding to a gypsy-like childhood, in which her parents split up during the Depression. She followed her mother across Europe and around the U.S. for years, living in more than a dozen cities by the time she enrolled in an outdoors-oriented private high school in Colorado.

"We moved all the time and I hated it," she said the other day, as a demolition crew scooped the contents of her house into a dumpster. "I wanted roots, but my mother had a wanderlust you wouldn't believe."

When Roberts and her husband, Frank, an electronics technician for the Navy, bought their one-story duplex in 1954, she believed she finally had a nest where she could keep things around as she never could as a child. "I thought I had a haven here for the rest of my life," she said.

Always energetic, Roberts was an outspoken participant at meetings of Camarillo Beautiful, as well as the Camarillo City Council, the local schoolboard and the Ventura County Board of Supervisors. She also raised her two children, Ronald, now 37 and a part-time landscaper in Santa Barbara, and Richard, 35, a sonar technician in the Coast Guard.

But, in 1967, her husband died suddenly after routine surgery. Not long afterward, her sons moved out. And Roberts, who had always kept the place a little cluttered, began to lose interest in maintaining order.

"I realized that nobody else cared but me," she said, eyes wide behind her antique aluminum glasses. "I kind of got the attitude of 'Why bother?'"

That attitude has frustrated Camarillo health and building inspectors, who say Roberts has failed to meet every deadline set for cleaning the place up over the last year. Even her son Ronald, who was appointed her conservator in January, began to lose patience with his mother's procrastination.

"I don't know if it's by choice or by some psychological problem that forces her to live like this," he said. "But she'll fight to the death to prevent anybody from helping her.... I feel sorry for her, but unless she makes a decision to change, there's nothing I can do."

Henriette Wyeth comes from a family of masters

First Lady Of American Art Came By Her Title Genetically

By Richard Beneke
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SAN PATRICIO, N.M. — From her first moments of awareness as a small child, Henriette Wyeth knew she would be a great artist, and it wasn't just because her father was an American master.

Her powers of observation were evident early. Photos taken when she was a few months old show her focused intently, fascinated, on whatever was at hand. She constantly drew, had read her first work by William Shakespeare ("Henry VIII") by the age of 7, studied at the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts and was renowned as a portraitist by 16.

At 81, she is the first lady of American art.

Newell Convers Wyeth — N.C. Wyeth as he is known for his classic book illustrations and countless other works of art — was the first to recognize his daughter's gifts and later those of her famous brother, Andrew.

The Wyeth children grew up in the nurturing shadow of a giant, where both environment and heredity were optimum. Of the five, three are artists, one a composer who also paints and the other an inventor who holds 23 patents.

"We had the most extraordinary life, really. We were well disciplined, we had the best music and our father talked about everything in the world — and with such enthusiasm!" Wyeth says. "And we were all ... hanging on every word, looking for the first flowers in spring, and that is the way it ought to be for children."

She paints nearly every day in her studio at Sentinel Ranch, the adobe hacienda to which her late husband, artist Peter Hurd, brought her on their honeymoon in an overheated Nash on a moonlit night in 1929.

Her subsequent move to New Mexico from the Brandywine River Valley of Pennsylvania was against her father's wishes.

"He felt I should not let marriage interfere with my painting," she says.

She didn't. As Mrs. Hurd, Henriette Wyeth never stopped finding the essential, haunting character of whatever she painted — from her still lifes of pumpkins and squash to the ethereal "Death and the Child." Her portraits, particularly, zero in on the subject's inner truth, whether or not the subject might want the truth told.

"If you really absorb them — the way this nose is constructed or that shoulder drops — you become the person. I think I have a feeling about the truth of people when I meet them," she said during an interview in the courtyard of her ranch in south-central New Mexico.

Wyeth, who counts early American master Benjamin West among her ancestors, says she always knew she was an artist.

"We all drew, and I was quite certain I would be splendid. Even without my father, I think I would have gone ahead and done my damndest."

"It's all involved in the genes," she said. "All our grandsons — everybody — is painting."

Despite what might seem obviously inherited gifts, genetic transmission of artistic talent remains a largely unexplored scientific field, says Erika Stephens, a Harvard population genetics researcher.

"One of the major difficulties with artistic ability is it's hard to define," Stephens said in a telephone interview from Cambridge, Mass. "These are complex traits. It's highly possible there is some genetic basis for some part of what's involved in being visual or musical or being able to paint, but since nobody has been able to define the traits narrowly enough, we just don't know ... Most of us have a strong intuitive feeling that there's something there, but there's not enough scientific work."

Wyeth says: "I think if you really inherit something tangible, it manifests itself. As a child, I went after flowers and colors."

In a letter to his mother in March 1912, when his daughter was just 4½, N.C. Wyeth reported she was "astounding in her powers of perception. ... Henriette drew a picture of a Japanese lily bulb we have here, and it was fabulously well done."

Polio contracted when she was 3 has left her with a gnarled right hand. It barely slowed her down.

"I can't hold a piece of charcoal in my right hand," she says. "I'm drawing with my left hand and painting with my right hand."

She uses a wrist-braced aluminum walking stick to get around because she injured a hip in a horseback riding accident 16 years ago.

She's More Than A Pretty Face Miss Black America Wants To Have An Impact

By Milton Kent
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — You might think that the first thing you would notice about Paula Gwynn, the newly crowned Miss Black America, is her million-megawatt smile or seemingly bottomless well of enthusiasm and drive.

Eventually you will notice that, but the first thing you spot is her height. Gwynn stands 6-foot-2, and you couldn't miss her if you tried.

"Not many people do (miss the fact that she is tall) if it's no more than, 'Dag, you're tall,'" said Gwynn. "I'm used to it. I've been tall all my life. I was 5-feet tall in the fifth grade."

So you'll be forgiven if you stare, since it seems that everybody else does. It's at that point, the moment where lasting impressions are made, that Gwynn, 22, believes her job of winning you over begins.

And for someone who makes Norman Vincent Peale look like he's down in the mouth, winning you over is a piece of cake.

"You will find out that this is not just a pretty face," said Gwynn. "I want to make a difference. You'll end up someplace where you will find out, or you'll hear through someone or you will read something and you'll find out. I'm not going to let that bother me. People stop and stare at pretty faces, so while they're staring, maybe there's something to say."

"A word is all it takes to spark a conversation and that's all it takes to prove that you're not a dumbbell. You can read a person, you can size them up in a second, sometimes. You can get an overall impression. So, behind a pretty face, you'll find something else if you take two seconds."

Actually, two seconds is a good reference point when you talk about Gwynn, for you wonder if she has that much free time.

Gwynn, who lives with her parents in Kensington, a Washington suburb, works seven days a week, between her weekday role as an associate producer at Black Entertainment Television and her weekend modeling assignments and her hosting of a dance show on Washington-area cable.

Gwynn, who pushed her way out of the University of Maryland a year ago, one year ahead of schedule, has her life on fast-forward towards a goal of becoming the "next Oprah Winfrey."

And everything in her life, from entering and winning the Miss Black America pageant nine days ago in Indianapolis over 45 other contestants from 37 states, to beginning a modeling career 12 years ago at the age of 10, has been pointed just toward that.

"I want to have that kind of status, so I can do something. I want to be able to do something for people. I want to be able to get out here and if somebody needs help with something, you know, help them with that."

"And, of course, use my talent. I can speak, so I want to speak. If I can act, then I want to act. If I can sing, then I want to sing. Whatever you do, you want to do for the rest of your life, because you enjoy it, hopefully. That's all I want to do. I mean, I want to be famous, not just for the fame, but for the access to help people."

The Paula Gwynn highlight reel begins long before the walk down the runway in Indianapolis. She says that as the oldest of five children, she was always "the ham" in family movies and pictures, always the one with the cheeky smile, as she pushed her younger brothers and sisters on the swings.

And now she jokingly says that since she was crowned last Sunday, she can't get her mother, a certified public accountant, her father, a retired manager for a local clothing store chain, or the rest of her family to "behave."

Gwynn attended small private Catholic schools. She was one of only five black students in her all-female high school and feels that in the process of gaining an education, she missed an opportunity to develop a sense of racial pride within herself.

"I wasn't very black, quote-unquote," said Gwynn. "I learned who Dr. Martin Luther King was in my freshman year of college. I learned who Malcolm X was in my freshman year of college."

"I felt very stupid. I had to go to the Afro-American studies department and I was pulling out books on my own time."

New Gun Laws Put The Pressure On Parents

By John Barbour
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

In Southern California, hundreds of teen-age gangs roam the streets, killing people at the rate of nearly two a day.

In Florida, where gun laws are minimal, pistols, rifles and shotguns abound, stashed under beds, in kitchen cupboards, on the shelves of closets, in reach of children.

In one week in June, those guns, in the hands of children, killed three youngsters and wounded four. Then, on July 12, a 6-year-old girl found a .38-caliber revolver under her parent's pillow, and, thinking it a toy, fired once, killing her 10-month-old sister.

These events have prompted legislatures in California and Florida to enact controversial new laws that would send parents to jail for the acts of their children.

Just hours before the infant was killed by her sister, Florida's new child-gun act was signed into law. It goes into effect in October.

California enacted its so-called "gang mother" law in late 1988. So far no one has been successfully prosecuted, but there has been one arrest.

That was Gloria Williams, 37, mother of three, who lives in south-central Los Angeles with an inner-city sense of peril. She was never in trouble with the law until this year, when she was arrested because her 15-year-old son is a member of a gang accused in a rape case.

Mrs. Williams was placed in handcuffs and jailed. Her mother put her house up to raise the $20,000 bond to get her out. Eventually the charges were dropped.

David Hagan of Orlando, Fla., is a 44-year-old carpenter. Of his five children, three still live at home. Earlier this year his 6-year-old son was trying to put his .22-caliber handgun back in the cabinet over the refrigerator. The gun hit something and went off. The hollow-point bullet crashed through the cabinet and struck his 4-year-old sister, Evie, on the other side. Seriously wounded, she is still recovering. The boy just finished therapy for his emotional trauma.

Under the new Florida law, which was not in place then, David Hagan might have gone to jail for five years, a third degree felony with a $5,000 fine. If Gloria Williams had indeed been found guilty, she could have gone to jail for a year, a misdemeanor, with a $2,500 fine.

Mrs. Williams' attorney, Daye Shinn, says, "The gang problem has gotten so big that nobody knows how to solve it. Chief Daryl Gates doesn't know how to solve it. The sheriff doesn't know how to solve it. The politicians don't know how to solve it.

"So they figured a way to take the pressure off of law enforcement and the district attorney and said, 'Now let's push the blame on parents.'"

The whole idea of sending parents to jail, holding them criminally culpable for the actions of their children, is a relatively new development, an expansion of the civil law of parental responsibility and criminal law aimed at protecting the child from the actions of an adult.

"Traditionally, the law about contributing to the delinquency of a minor meant contributing to the delinquency of someone else's child, not your own," says Los Angeles County District Attorney Ira Reiner. "This law has been slightly modified, so that by the omission of certain acts, your failure to exercise necessary control, you can then be charged with the crime of contributing to the delinquency of your own child."

"It's a good idea," he says, Mrs. Williams' case notwithstanding.

Mrs. Williams doesn't think so. With a nervous laugh, she says, "I don't like that law and how they drew me into it. A parent has duties to her children. But I don't like that law."

David Hagan, sorrowing over what his gun did to two of his children, says Florida's child-gun law is "the rottenest law I ever heard of in my life."

Hagan is the sole support of his family, as Mrs. Williams is of hers. Both think that a law that would deprive children of a parent is a step too far. Education makes more sense to him. "They ought to teach their kids how dangerous they can be and how much damage they can cause, like people used to do in the old days on the farm," he says.

"Sending the parent to jail," Hagan says, "just doesn't sound smart to me...They ought to train the child. That's just plain old common sense."

Mrs. Williams was arrested after her son was charged with the gang rape of a 12-year-old girl who claimed she was abducted from the Williams' back yard.

Armed with a search warrant, police found family photos that showed Mrs. Williams posing with her son and 20-year-old daughter and others the police said were members of the Crips gang. In other photos the son was said to be pointing a gun at the camera and the daughter was said to be wearing a semi-automatic pistol in her belt. Mrs. Williams said it was only a BB pistol.

Charges were later dropped at the insistence of defense attorney Shinn. In the first place, Shinn said, the bond was excessive. Normally, bail would be about $500 on a misdemeanor. Secondly, he says, prosecutors said they would consider probation, if she agreed to go to parenting classes. He pointed out she had gone to parenting classes the year before in an effort to better control her son.

None of the other parents of the gang members involved in the alleged rape was arrested.

District Attorney Reiner has designed a new law broadening the culpability of gang members, patterned after the federal anti-racketeering statutes. Gang members can now be arrested for furthering a gang's activity. "It goes beyond aiding and abetting and gives us the opportunity to target gangs."

But he thinks the "gang mother" law will also be a useful tool against gangs.

Loss Hits Adults Hard

With Higuera, as with many children, there was an initial reaction:

"After the deaths, I moved from my apartment back into their house in Valinda (in Los Angeles)," Higuera said. "The bedrooms are in the rear of the house. At first, I couldn't set foot in those rooms. I made the living room my bedroom. That lasted for about a month."

Higuera, whose mother died Feb. 20, her father March 24, said that: "At first, I went out to Rose Hills Memorial Park on the 20th and 24th of every month. I also went there on their birthdays, on Mother's Day, Father's Day, Christmas. This went on for the first year."

"Now I just go on their birthdays, and on Mother's Day and Father's Day. With time, it becomes easier not to have to go through the ritual. I know this is part of letting go."

Eighteen months ago, Scharlach embarked on a study of this little-examined but much-experienced part of life.

Two hundred twenty people responded to a newspaper brief seeking adults who lost a parent one to five years previously, and all of the respondents filled out questionnaires. Scharlach and his assistants are conducting in-depth interviews with 100 of the participants, and the study is still in progress.

But Scharlach said these preliminary findings have emerged:

—Initial reactions to a parent's death included difficulty sleeping, working, keeping up with normal activities and getting along with certain people.

—One to five years after a parent's death, at least 25 percent of the respondents indicated that they still cry or become upset when they think of the deceased parent. More than 20 percent continue to be preoccupied with thoughts of the parent.

—Other oft-cited residual reactions included finding it painful to recall the parent's memory, and feeling that it was unfair that she or he died.

In an interview, Scharlach (who plans to write a book based on his research) related other impressions from his study:

"That last contact with the parent remains for many people a metaphor for the entire relationship. People add meaning to it that may not, in fact, have had anything to do with the situation. The person may feel that Dad accepted him or her as he never had before — when that may not have actually been the case."

Novack's mother died in 1983, her father in 1984. Seven months later, she separated from her husband, and in 1986 the divorce became final.

"When I got married, my Mom gave us six weeks, but it lasted 10 years. I was in a dead-end marriage, though. If my parents had still been alive, I probably would have eventually gotten divorced, but it probably would have taken me longer to get around to it," Novack said.

"After both my parents were gone, I developed insomnia — only two or three hours of sleep a night. I still have it."

"For a long time, I distanced myself from everybody. I didn't want to see anybody or have anybody around me. I withdrew," she said.

"I miss my mother in particular, because I thought Mom would be forever."

Preliminary research results show that the death of the one remaining parent has a particularly profound impact on adult children, Scharlach said. Especially common responses to that final chapter were:

—An overwhelming sense of feeling orphaned.

—The sense that one no longer fit the role of child, that they not only suffered the deaths of their parents, but had lost "the child within."

For just about all, the issue of their own mortality came into focus. Now they were next at the turnstile. "As long as a parent is alive, there is somebody between us and what we fear," Scharlach said. "We are symbolically protected."

With the passing of both of them, he continued, there comes a realization that time is limited — "some feel the urgency to prioritize all aspects of their lives."

Horoscope From The Carroll Righter Institute

FORECAST FOR FRIDAY Aug. 4

ARIES (March 21 to April 19): Use common sense to cut down on waste. Romantic moods run hot and cold. You may be too critical of those who do not share your ideas.
TAURUS (April 20 to May 20): Seek out extra sources of income. Do what you enjoy doing. Check boredom by planning an entertaining project.
GEMINI (May 21 to June 21): Social interests gain momentum, which is a welcome shift. Turn on the charm to get results. Personal energy is high.
MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21): You may feel like your get-up-and-go has "got-up-and-went." Too much stimulation calls for a low-key approach to leisure time and rest.
LEO (July 22 to Aug. 21): Revive the little child in you who may have been lost long ago. Change the pace, and the excitement won't stop. Be vivacious!
VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22): Recent obstacles are overcome with ease. Do not let sibling squabbles ruin your evening. Let them know what you expect.
LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22): A breezy intellect reflects your lighthearted mood. Try to keep your mind on work. It helps to tackle tough jobs first.
SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21): Stick to the basic powers of your sign—to perceive, imagine and feel. Look for ways to reduce your workload.
SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21): Get chores out of the way before they interfere with your leisure time. Family members may be pulling you in two different directions.
CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20): It is a fast-paced day that will work better if you limit yourself to essentials and tone down your expectations. Visit a friend tonight.
AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19): Explore the powers of your mind and how you can use this natural talent in everyday life. Think in silence to develop intuition.
PISCES (Feb. 20 to March 20): An exciting message can move you to action. You could be propelled one step further in your quest for creative recognition.

 Dear Charlie:
 One of my dearest possessions is a leather card case given to me by my mother. It is inscribed with an anonymous quotation: "Life ain't holdin' the good cards. It's playin' a bad hand well!" I was reminded of this at a rubber bridge game in New York arranged for me by Tannah Hirsch. In that game, I held the South cards and he was North.

We reached three no trump on a fairly normal auction. Had East seen my card case, I would not have made my contract. West made the normal lead of the queen of hearts, won perforce in dummy. I had to knock out West's entry, but did not have a clue which black suit to attack. Eventually, I decided to lead a club.

Had East put his bad hand to good use, he would have risen with the ace of clubs and returned a heart, and the defense would have collected five tricks before I had my nine. But the defender played low and my queen won. As a result, I decided West's entry was in spades, so I shifted the offense to that suit.

West took the ace and persevered with a heart, but now it needed only routine technique to land the contract.

I ducked the jack of hearts, forcing West to abandon the suit. East won the club shift and reverted to hearts, but it was too late. I rose with the king and had nine tricks. Indeed, as the play developed, West discarded two diamonds, so I ended up with an overtrick. As ever,

Michael Wilding Joins The Cast Of Dallas For The New Season

By Jerry Buck
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — Michael Wilding made his film debut as a street urchin when his mother, Elizabeth Taylor, played Kate in "Taming of the Shrew" in Italy.

Richard Burton, his stepfather at the time, played Petruchio in the 1967 film.

"I ran alongside Petruchio's horse on the way to the wedding," said Wilding, who has joined the cast of CBS' "Dallas."

"My brother, Christopher Wilding, was also an extra. I had braces on my teeth and we wore little codpieces and velvet caps. We kept shouting, 'Petruchio, Petruchio!'"

After that beginning, Wilding's acting was put on hold for many years in favor of education. His major role so far was that of Jesus Christ in the NBC miniseries "A.D."

The son of Taylor and the late Michael Wilding Sr. has his mother's violet eyes and dark complexion. His black hair has streaks of gray.

Wilding will play art dealer Alex Barton in the new "Dallas" season.

"He's kind of a Henry Higgins because he finds a young artist and sees a great potential in her," he said of Barton. "He feels he can steer her in the right direction to become a great artist. She's a primitive artist, like Grandma Moses."

The young artist is Callie Harper Ewing, the wife of J.R. Ewing played by Cathy Podewell. A romantic interest develops between the two. Larry Hagman, of course, is J.R.

"I haven't had any scenes with Larry," Wilding said. "So far, J.R. doesn't know anything about us or he isn't interested enough. There's such a contrast between Barton and Callie. He's incredibly worldly and sophisticated and she's a country girl."

"I think he feels he can steer her into becoming a worldly and stylish person with a bit of tutoring. He wants to change her. Personally, I'd leave her the way she is. She's a very sweet lady."

More recently, Wilding had a small role in one of his mother's projects, "Sweet Bird of Youth" for NBC. He plays a movie producer who tries to talk his mother, playing a fading actress, into working in a film.

"In the scene we're on the telephone, so I just played one side of the conversation," he said. "I'm looking forward to seeing the scene put together. When I got the part I thought it would be fun to work with her, but I guess she filmed her part several weeks later. I've yet to act in a scene with her."

MICHAEL WILDING

Actress Has Big Shoes To Fill

By Hillel Italie
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — In Cedar Falls, Iowa — halfway across the country from Hollywood — lives a recent high school graduate with the perfect name for an actress: Annabeth Gish.

She shares the last name of one of the cinema's greatest stars, Lillian Gish, and decided quickly on a career in movies. But walking the streets, she feels pretty much like any other resident, even if some have not forgotten last year's "Mystic Pizza," in which Gish plays a baby sitter who falls in love with the child's father.

"I was baby-sitting for this family at the time," she recalled.

"They saw this movie and thought, 'uh, oh.' I got a lot of razzing about that. When you're in a high school environment and people are seeing you play an older character having more mature things happen, it's pretty confusing."

After her latest movie, "Shag," Iowans may be tempted to award blue ribbons and break into dance upon spotting Gish. The actress plays Pudge Carmichael, one of four high school senior girls in 1963 who sneak off to Myrtle Beach, S.C., in search of a last adventure before going off to college and the "real" world.

The film's title comes from a popular dance that Pudge masters.

"I read the script and just fell in love with the liveliness," Gish said in an interview. "I wanted to be a part of it, and did a lot of background on the Shag because I had never heard of it. It's a very big deal down in Myrtle Beach and it kept getting more and more fascinating."

Gish's brief career in show business has also been far from Hollywood. "Desert Bloom," her film debut, was made in Tucson, Ariz., while "Mystic Pizza" was the setting for "Mystic Pizza."

"Shag" was primarily filmed in Myrtle Beach.

"I went down a little bit earlier and had the luxury of learning from some authentic shaggers," said Gish, a proud member of the Shag Hall of Fame. "It was a different experience for them. I think they were a little bit wary of what this Hollywood movie company was going to represent their dance as."

The cast includes several relatives of Hollywood stars: Bridget Fonda is the daughter of Peter Fonda and niece of Jane Fonda; Tyrone Power Jr. is the late actor's son; Page Hannah is Daryl Hannah's sister; and Carrie Hamilton is the daughter of Carol Burnett.

But Gish is not related to Lillian Gish and set out to be an actress before even knowing the significance of her last name.

"When I was in first grade I went to the Halloween parade as a movie star. When I was in third grade, I wrote that when I grow up I would like to be an actress in the movies. I was very into watching movies. I really enjoyed reading aloud, performing."

By the time the aspiring actress turned 13, she was fully aware of her namesake and wrote for advice.

"She discouraged me from getting involved in the business. She said there was too much talent and not enough work and it was better to stay in an environment where you were loved and cared for."

But the young Gish had her mind made up. She had been acting in community theater since age 8 and fell in love with movies, especially the Cary Grant-Katharine Hepburn screwball comedy "Bringing Up Baby," and Lillian Gish's silent classic "The Wind."

"I think Katharine Hepburn was great, being a strong, individualized woman, playing these great characters," she said.

Gish's stage debut, however, was more humble.

Bradbury Called 'Poet'

"And I hadn't realized, it was just a natural part of my style to deal in fascinating metaphors. And I think that attracts a lot of people, and it makes it easier for them to remember my stories."

Fascinating metaphors indeed! From "The Illustrated Man": "Her hands touched each other like thin, rusted instruments. Her feet were naked and obscene as rain rubbers, and near them sat vials of tattoo milk-red, lightning-blue, brown, cat-yellow."

From "Skeleton": "His spine felt horribly-unfamiliar. Like the brittle shards of a fish, freshly eaten, its bones left strewn on a cold china platter."

From "The Small Assassin," one of his more anthologized — and imitated — stories: "The baby rested in the crook of his mother's arm, shadows of sun and tree changing his face. His blue eyes opened like fresh blue spring flowers. Moist noises came from the tiny, pink, elastic mouth."

Bradbury says "The Small Assassin" was in fact himself — "except I didn't kill my parents." But he insists that he has "total recall to the moment I was born, all the way up through, and I've proven it again and again. ... I'm very lucky genetically."

This assertion, undoubtedly made before, is greeted with some skepticism. But Bradbury, certain of this gift, recalls the birth of his first child nearly 40 years ago:

"When we were home from the hospital three days, the little baby girl was lying in the crib at night and started screaming and yelling. She didn't need changing, she wasn't hungry, there were no pins sticking her. So I turned to my wife and I said, 'Well, she's had a nightmare.'"

"My wife said, 'About what?' And I said, 'There's only one thing you can have a nightmare about when you're 3 days old. Being born.' And I said, 'I can remember lying awake in my crib and remembering being born three days before.'"

"So I called my mother the next day, and I said, 'Hey, how long did you suckle me?' And she said, 'Two days.' I said, 'I remember the flavor, I remember the flavor.' And I said, 'On what day was I circumcised?' She said, 'The fourth or fifth day,' and I said, 'It wasn't at home, was it?' And she said no. And I said, 'You didn't take me to the hospital.' No. 'Did my father take me downtown somewhere, to the doctor's office?' She said yes. I said, 'I remember being laid on the table, I remember the doctor bending over me with a scalpel.'"

When it is recalled that the story ends with the words, "A scalpel," the author's eyes brighten slightly.

"Isn't that interesting?" he asks. Ray Douglas Bradbury was born in August 1920, in Waukegan, Ill., and set out to be a writer at age 12. His father, who worked for the power and light company, became a victim of the Depression and had been out of work for years when the Bradburys packed up and moved to Los Angeles.

Ray was 13, and it was love at first encounter. He hung around the movie studios and at 15 was trying to write radio scripts for George Burns. ("I'm sure he didn't read them, because they were dreadful.") He collected comic strips, science fiction magazines, radio scripts and in high school had a brief correspondence with Edgar Rice Burroughs.

A favorite aunt who'd once designed costumes for the Chicago Opera Company lived in L.A., and so did a favored cousin. ("It's great when you're 12 or 13 to have a girl cousin two years older that you tell ghost stories or play doctor or whatever. Ha-hah-hah!")

What he missed most about Waukegan was a chance to revisit the Chicago World's Fair. World's fairs obsessed him: He built models in his back yard and in 1963 helped plan the American Pavilion at the New York World's Fair.

After high school, working as a newsboy and unable to pay for college, Bradbury set out to educate himself at the public library. "You just run amok in the library," he says now, "and whatever you pick up, you pick up. You fall in love with Charlie Dickens, you fall in love with Evelyn Waugh and with John Collier, and you just go with them."

He sold his first story to a pulp magazine at age 21 and by the mid-'40s was writing radio scripts for programs like "Suspense" and "Escape." In 1947 he published "Dark Carnival," his first book of short stories — a collection that includes "The Small Assassin" and "Skeleton," a tale of a man who becomes obsessed by his bone structure and turns, literally, into jelly.

Three years later came "The Martian Chronicles," a collection bound together in a style that by now was distinctively Bradburyian: "The rockets set the bony meadows afire, turned rock to lava, turned wood to charcoal, transmitted water to steam, made sand and silica into green glass which lay like shattered mirrors reflecting the invasion all about. ... The rockets came like locusts, swarming and settling in blooms of rosy smoke."

It sold a few thousand but went into multiple printings. And when the first paperback appeared in 1951, it sold 90,000 copies, hypnotizing the first wave of a generation to whom the future seemed as dangerous as an H-bomb and as hopeful as the Salk vaccine.

Since then, about 4 million "Chronicles" have been bought, and one imagines that almost every reader is a child of 13 — dreaming, alarmed and struck by how terrifying and peculiar the universe can be. It is to them that one may trace the idea that Ray Bradbury has always been with us.

The older reader returns to "The Martian Chronicles" and finds a new kind of melancholy in the story "Ylla," admiring the sinister indirection with which Bradbury recalls the murder of the first Earth expedition to the fourth planet, and regards "The Third Expedition" anew as perhaps the ultimate tale of fatal nostalgia.

In particular, the returning reader is struck by the imagery of Hiroshima and the Cold War and the Red Scare and other events that suggest even Bradbury could not slip free from the currents of his time. "There Will Come Soft Rains" may have taken its title from a Sara Teasdale verse, but at its core is the flash of the first atomic bomb.

By the mid-1950s, Bradbury was doing other things — films (from Bradbury stories) like "It Came From Outer Space" and "The Beast From 20,000 Fathoms"; John Huston asked him to write the screenplay for "Moby Dick." "My salary for that was $600 a week, and suddenly I was very rich," he says.

"I'd never eaten in a restaurant until then. I'd never lived in a hotel. And all of a sudden we're off to Europe with our kids." (A later Bradbury story, "The Banshee," concerns an older director tormenting a young writer — a precise recounting of the collaboration with Huston.)

But that was half-a-dozen "Twilight Zones" and tens of books and hundreds of anthologies ago. And the time traveler has other things in store.

Ray Bradbury, surrounded by the clutter of a hotel room, ready to head off for a few weeks in France and immersed in French history ("I've got six books on Lafayette alone and his influence on our revolution"), feels he is on the brink of several careers.

Urban designer, for one. In the early 1970s, he published an article in the Los Angeles Times calling for what was then a new kind of shopping mall. It would have things like "a hardware store that would stay open so a pregnant male would waken at 1 a.m. and get this impulse to buy something he doesn't need, eh?"

Los Angeles designer-developer Jon Jerde calls Bradbury "an unbelievable, naive, sensitive, urban designer architect," and says Bradbury sometimes works with the Jerde Partnership as a consultant. "He reminds us of the stuff we should never have forgotten in the first place," Jerde said by telephone.

"I've blundered into things without knowing," says Bradbury, "and that's the best kind of love, isn't it, to suddenly discover that you're so exciting you don't know what you're doing. I've got whole new careers up ahead as an idea creator, huh?"

Well, as a writer too. He has an editorial role in "Ray Bradbury Theater" productions, which this season will include adaptations of some of his most famous stories among them "The Dwarf" and "The Veldt" and "The Pedestrian."

He "just dropped off" a new book with his publisher, to a sequel to "Death Is a Lonely Business," his poorly received 1985 detective novel. And he admits an Ahab-like persistence with an idea that, over three decades, has taken the form of radio drama, play and opera: "Leviathan '99," the Melville-ish tale of a space captain blinded in his youth by a white comet who later sets out to destroy it — "It's going to work eventually."

Optimism — about his work, about the planet — seems at times to overpower him. And for Bradbury, who wrote his first tales in the dawn of the space age, who looked to the skies and laboratories with a belief that all might truly end well, science fiction remains "the growing edge of all the ideas of mankind. It's the most important fiction. It deals with the changing of a dream into a fact, of a concept into a reality. It's the most important fiction that ever has been written because that's our whole history from the cave to here."

He says William Butler Yeats, in the last line of "Sailing to Byzantium," wrote the best description of what science fiction is up to: "Of what is past, or passing, or to come."

Bradbury looks puzzled when asked about that modern branch of fiction that has gotten the name "minimalism" and then says, "Oh no, I think that's dreadful, from the description I've heard of it. I love ideas."

He tells you, for example, that Cervantes and Shakespeare died on the same day — a coincidence he recently discovered.
