Dead Pigs Lead To Neighbors' Cries Of Alarm

By J. Ward Best
 THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Many little piggies at the East Carolina stockyard didn't make it to market. And the aftermath of the porkers' misfortune left residents of a rest home located nearby upset with the smell.

A distress call from an area resident Thursday sent Greenville Mayor Ed Carter to investigate the receiving yard for East Carolina Stockyards on N.C. 11. Carter found not just live pigs in their pens, but dead pigs lying around the yard.

Carter estimated he saw nearly 30 dead pigs in and around the pens. "It's an awful situation," Carter said. "I don't think anyone should be living around that condition."

Rosa Bradley, the owner of Rosa Bradley's Home for Adults, said dead pigs in the yard were common. She said the smell and flies were overpowering at her home, which is located approximately 100 yards from the stockyard operation.

"We can't even stay around because the stinking stuff out there," Ms. Bradley said.

Carter and Ms. Bradley both said they would like to see the operation moved. Carter said he would talk to the city attorney about the yard, and said the city should have greater monitoring of the operations.

"If there's anything anybody can do about it, we're going to do it," Carter said today.

The pigs apparently died from heat exhaustion, according to the owner of the stockyard, Bryan Hargett, who said the company hired to remove the pigs did not make its usual stop at the yard on Wednesday.

Hargett and a worker at the receiving station said some pigs generally die from the heat. Hargett said his company contracted with Duplin Recycling of Clemmons to remove the dead pigs on a weekly basis.

When Duplin Recycling did not show Wednesday, Hargett said he sent his own workers to remove the pigs. "We have taken steps to correct the problem," Hargett said.

Iran Offers Help In Ending Crisis

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BEIRUT, Lebanon — President Hashemi Rafsanjani of Iran today offered to help find a solution to the hostage situation but said the United States must pressure Israel to release a kidnapped Shiite Moslem cleric, Iranian media reported.

President Bush said he would explore the offer "to the fullest" but that he did not want to raise the hopes of the hostages' families. Bush also refused to confirm reports he had planned to take military action if another hostage had been killed. One hostage was reported killed Monday.

Israel, meanwhile, was awaiting a list of prisoners that a Shiite Moslem group in Lebanon wants freed.

"I tell the White House, the problem of Lebanon has solutions, the freeing of the hostages has solutions, reasonable, prudent solutions," Rafsanjani said in a speech carried on official Tehran radio.

"These bullyings, arrogant approaches and tyranny will not solve the problems. Come let us approach the problem reasonably. We too will help solve the problems there, so the people of the region can live in peace and harmony," he said in the broadcast monitored in Nicosia, Cyprus.

Rafsanjani's comments were made during the weekly Friday prayer session at Tehran University.

He said if the United States wants hostages in Lebanon freed, it must take the initiative by asking Israel to free Sheik Abdul Karim Obeid, a Shiite Moslem leader abducted by Israeli commandos one week ago.

who is the local prayer leader. Obeid also is reputed to be a spiritual leader of the pro-Iranian group Hezbollah, believed to be the umbrella for factions holding most of the 16 foreign hostages in Lebanon.

The Organization of the Oppressed on Earth claimed it hanged Higgins in retaliation for Israel's refusal to release Obeid. Israel claims Obeid instigated attacks on Israel.

Another pro-Iranian group, the Revolutionary Justice Organization, threatened to kill another U.S. hostage, Joseph Cicippio, but announced Thursday it had suspended the death order.

It also demanded that Israel free

Fiery Finale

A motorcycle driver was injured in an early morning collision today on West Fifth Street that saw the two-wheel vehicle dragged seven-tenths of a mile by the car that struck it before both vehicles burst into flames.

Officer F.G. Pruitt said Michael Ray Joyner of Route 1, Bolivia, was headed east on Fifth Street when a car driven by Johnnie Lee Daniels, 59, of 202 Nash St., headed west, turned into the path of the motorcycle and knocked Joyner to the pavement at the Sheppard Street intersection.

The impact of the collision wedged the motorcycle under the car. Pruitt said Daniels drove on to his Nash Street home, dragging the motorcycle as he went.

After the two vehicles arrived at Daniels' home, according to Pruitt, a fire erupted which burned both vehicles.

Pruitt, who said Joyner suffered serious injuries from the 1:31 a.m. collision, said Daniels was charged with driving while impaired, hit and run driving and driving while his license was permanently revoked.

Pitt Schools Report Drivers Will Be Older, Buses Will Be Newer In '89

By Kevin Boughal
 THE DAILY REFLECTOR

With the 1989-90 school year just around the corner, parents of Pitt County school children will be happy to know that this year the school bus drivers will be older and most of the buses will be newer.

A 1988 ruling by the U.S. Department of Labor which required that all school bus drivers must be at least 18 years old left the state with some driver shortages at the beginning of the year. However, this year state officials say they expect no trouble fielding the 13,200 buses and drivers needed to meet the school systems' demands.

Pitt County does not anticipate any driver problems either, at least not in the early part of the school year.

Because the Pitt school system has had two months to recruit drivers and substitutes, no problems are expected at this point, said Rodney Bullock, director of transportation for Pitt County schools.

"We will have trouble as the year goes on with driver turnover," said Bullock.

This will also be one of the last years that school buses manufactured before 1977 will be used throughout the state. Officials say buses built before 1977 lack the safety features that the newer buses have, such as reinforced roofs and caged fuel systems.

Right now there are about 1,300 pre-1977 school buses in operation statewide and 31 of the 215 Pitt County buses were built before 1977, according to Bullock. The state expects delivery of 1,100 to 1,200 new buses this year, reducing the total number of pre-1977 buses statewide down to under 200.

Even though the state has enough drivers and buses, officials say there is a big need for substitute drivers. Many schools are being forced to rely on school employees such as teacher assistants, cafeteria workers and coaches to double as substitute drivers.

"School systems need a list of people who could fill in when a bus driver is sick or has jury duty or for some other reason cannot work one day," said Norfleet Gardener, transportation director for the N.C.

Life Center Gets HUD Funding

By Amy Gavigan
 THE DAILY REFLECTOR

The Greenville Community Life Center has received a $155,000 grant from the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development to fund renovations at the old Agnes Fullilove School to provide transitional housing for the homeless.

Classrooms at old school building, located on Chestnut Street, will be renovated into apartments to serve those presently homeless, as well as those who are making a transition from institutional care into the community, said Dr. Helen Grove, who is serving as coordinator of the housing program.

The school's gym and cafeteria facilities now serve as the city's shelter for the homeless.

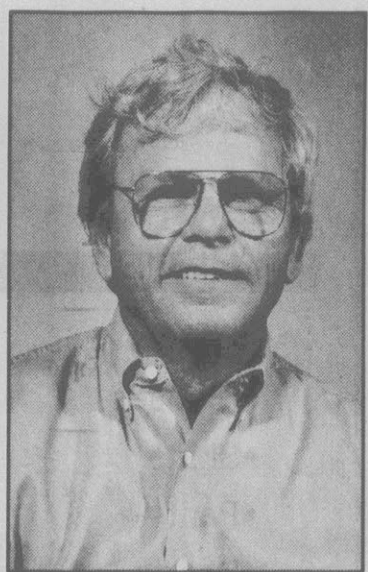

"As with most grants, we had to match the amount with community resources," said Dr. Grove, who is dean of the School of Home Economics at East Carolina University.

"We have received funding from public and private resources," she said. "The county commissioners committed $30,000 and the N.C. Housing Finance Agency $22,500."

Various community groups, such as a group of employees from Burroughs Wellcome and some from the university and area churches, including Jarvis Memorial United Methodist, St. James United Methodist and St. Gabriel's Church, and the local chapter of Vietnam Veterans, have volunteered labor and cash.

"As we worked, we were delighted

Three Candidates File For Council

Three local residents filed today with the Pitt County Board of Elections as candidates for seats on the Greenville City Council in the November elections.

Chuck Autry will oppose incumbent Lorraine Shinn for the at-large seat on the panel. Thomas W. Harwell will challenge Blanche Forbes for the District 5 seat vacated by Nancy Jenkins, who filed earlier as a candidate for mayor.

Milton Sutton filed for the District 2 seat held by incumbent Rufus Huggins. Sutton filed for the council seat five minutes before the noon deadline. Sean Casey Dobyns also has filed for the District 2 seat.

Autry, owner of Chuck Autry's Paint and Body Shop, said in a prepared statement that he would "like to see Greenville continue to grow, with no new taxes." He said he wants to see Greenville have a larger airport and "would like to see Greenville job positions filled by Greenville residents."

Autry said he would "like to see downtown Greenville business restored."

Autry is a veteran of the Korean War and earned a Silver Star and Purple Heart. He attends Reedy Branch Baptist Church and is a member of the Chamber of Commerce. He is a member of the Moose Lodge and the American Legion.

Piedmont Will Say Goodbyes Saturday

By Stuart Savage
 THE DAILY REFLECTOR

The red, white and blue Piedmont Commuter airplanes, which have flown in and out of Pitt-Greenville Airport since May 1985, will begin to change their colors and logo to those of USAir Express after Saturday when Piedmont Airlines' merger with USAir is complete.

But Eddie Bacon, a spokesman with CCAir of Charlotte, which operates the commuter airline, said it could be as long as a year before all CCAir-operated airplanes are repainted with the new dark blue, red and light blue USAir colors.

"We'll start painting our planes next week," Bacon said. While he had no estimate of what it will cost to repaint CCAir's fleet, Bacon said it usually takes about 10 days to two weeks to repaint one plane.

Bacon said the only change for CCAir due to the Piedmont-USAir merger will be a change in name. "We'll be doing business as USAir Express," Bacon said.

"We'll still have the same number of flights at Pitt-Greenville ... the same aircraft." Just the name will be different. And it will be a while before even the name on the airplanes will be different.

Bacon, who said USAir Express will have two flights to Raleigh and 11 to Charlotte each day, said the commuter boarded 3,705 passengers at Pitt-Greenville during July, the last full month as Piedmont Commuter.

The July boardings, Bacon said, were the second highest number of boardings for any month since the commuter airline began service to Pitt-Greenville in August 1980 as Sunbird Airlines, and 305 more than the 3,400 boardings recorded in July 1988. Sunbird became Piedmont Commuter in May 1985.

Farm Aid Approved

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House approved a compromise proposal today to provide $895 million to farmers suffering crop losses this year from drought and other weather-related damage.

The House passed the measure on unanimous consent, without a recorded vote, and sent it back to the Senate, which was expected to endorse the package.

The action virtually assured that lawmakers would complete work on the farm assistance package and send it to President Bush before leaving on a month-long recess.

Key eligibility and payment provisions in the assistance package are identical to legislation approved Wednesday by the Senate, and the final agreement between the House and Senate was hammered out during negotiations that stretched into the early morning hours today.

Pitt Marijuana Drive Ends

By Kevin Boughal
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

The Pitt County Sheriff's Department, in conjunction with area law enforcement officials and other agencies, wound up a 10-day marijuana spotting and extraction program Thursday that netted 2,191 marijuana plants with an estimated street value of $3,505,600.

The officers, with the aid of National Guard and State Bureau of Investigation aircraft which flew over fields, found the plants scattered all over the county in small plots, according to Sheriff Ralph Tyson. The largest concentration was found near Bethel where officers reported finding three plots containing about 2,000 plants ranging in size from three to eight feet.

"We have not made any arrests because when people see the (aircraft) they scatter," said Tyson.

The program was funded by the state and was a joint effort between the Pitt Sheriff's Department, SBI agents, members of the National Guard, members of the Greenville and Farmville police departments as well as other area authorities.

Although this phase of the program is officially over, Tyson said he still expects to periodically send up aircraft in search of more marijuana plants.

"We'll still be flying every once in a while to keep a check on (the marijuana fields)," said Tyson. "Some of the plants are too small to spot right now so we have to wait for them to grow a little."

elementary schools recently completed a four-week leadership development program at East Carolina University.

The program is part of a privately funded effort to broaden the skills of elementary school teachers across the state. A grant from the Glaxo Foundation of Glaxo Inc., a research-based pharmaceutical firm in Research Triangle Park, supports the effort.

ECU is one of four universities selected to provide the training. North Carolina A&T, UNC-Chapel Hill and Appalachian State University also are participating in the program. Some 96 school teachers are involved in the project, which is expected to take a year to complete.

Service Improvements

Carolina Telephone announced that it will introduce Saturday in Grifton new computer-controlled digital electronic switching equipment that will enable customers to have new and improved telephone features.

Jackie Morris, district commercial manager, said that for an additional cost, customers will be able to choose from several features, including call forwarding, call waiting, three-party conference and speed calling.

Morris said dialing habits for Extended Area Service and local directory assistance will change for Grifton customers beginning Saturday.

He said customers will no longer need to dial "7" first when making an EAS call, and the local directory assistance number will change from 1-411 to 411.

"The new 2,160-line switching equipment at Grifton cost about $685,000," he said. "This cost included the new digital equipment, building modifications and outside plant facilities."

Trucking Costs

GREENSBORO (AP) — North Carolina's trucking industry will pay an extra $29 million a year in state gas taxes as a result of the gas tax increase of 5.25 cents a gallon, the state's trucking association estimates.

While trucking companies may absorb the increase initially, the extra tax costs will be passed on to shippers, and ultimately consumers, trucking officials say.

The trucking industry supported a tax package with the gas tax increase as its centerpiece because it will fund a $9.1 billion, 13½-year highway construction program that will widen and pave thousands of miles of highways trucks use.

The gas tax increase became effective Tuesday, with the state tax at 21 cents. The motor vehicle title fee also increased from $5 to $35. On Oct. 1 the sales tax on motor vehicle rises from 2 percent to 3 percent, with a limit of $1,000 through 1993 and a limit of $1,500 after that.

Amateurs Learn Way To Dig Historic Sites

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PEE DEE, N.C. — In a flat, grassy field along the Pee Dee River in Anson County an Asheboro police lieutenant is searching for clues in a 1,200-year-old case.

Bob Crutchfield is working on an archaeological dig — sifting dirt, taking notes and swatting mosquitoes — hoping a few shreds of evidence will pay off. A few fish scales and a handful of charcoal could help archaeologists piece together how an American Indian group lived.

But Crutchfield and a half-dozen others working at the site have another mission. They're the first participants in a program that trains amateurs to help professional archaeologists document North Carolina's rich archaeological history.

"At the very least, maybe we're taking the first step to enhance the knowledge of archaeological procedures, the richness of the area in archaeology and how fragile it is," Lewis Edwards, director of continuing education at Randolph Community College, the course's sponsor, told The Charlotte Observer.

At stake is a wealth of archaeological data in North Carolina, Edwards said. On just one 600-acre farm in Randolph County, for example, there are more than 100 separate sites where Indian artifacts have been found. Many major sites litter the Piedmont.

Edwards said he wants to boost the awareness of thousands of archaeology amateurs and collectors, hoping to prevent cases such as the one decided this summer in Rowan County Superior Court.

In that case, two men pleaded guilty to selling 1,000-year-old Indian skulls for $100 apiece and displaying human remains. It was the first test of a 1981 state law to prevent grave desecration.

The two men said they were trying to preserve the remains. But state officials said the men were motivated by profit, and they testified that the two ruined many artifacts, as well as the site itself, with haphazard digging.

"This is the antithesis of the Rowan County case," Billy Oliver, a state archaeologist, said Wednesday, standing in a shallow excavation at the Anson County site. "We've had a number of avid collectors go through the course and come out like someone had taken them by the hand and shown them a new way. There was a complete turn-about in philosophy."

Oliver hopes those who complete the course — called archaeology technicians — will be helpful to professional archaeologists.

The course began last year with 30 hours of classroom work about the history of Indian culture in North Carolina.

China Says Dissent Policy Isn't Threat To Intellectuals

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BEIJING — China said today that its crackdown on dissent will not endanger intellectuals, but it also announced that a prominent dissident holed up in the U.S. Embassy has been fired from an academic board.

Also today, the government declined to comment on a report that senior leader Deng Xiaoping is seriously ill with prostate cancer. The official Xinhua News Agency's Hong Kong office described the report as a mere rumor.

An unsigned commentary in the Communist Party newspaper People's Daily said China will continue to respect its intellectuals' knowledge and talent, even though some participated in the recent pro-democracy movement that the government calls a "counter-revolutionary rebellion."

"China needs a strong intellectual force for modernization. ... We should thoroughly implement Deng Xiaoping's policy to 'respect knowledge, respect talent' and use intellectuals to achieve the modernization goal," it said.

The crackdown ended a period of relatively free political debate. Chinese now are urged to report on friends and family and must participate in political study sessions reminiscent of the ultra-leftist 1966-

76 Cultural Revolution.

The commentary called those who took part in the student movement "scum" and "enemies of the party and of the people." It said, "It is in the interest of the workers, peasants and intellectuals to punish them."

"Those who were under the influence of the wave of bourgeois liberalism ... will elevate their understanding and continue to make contributions" to China's modernization program, the commentary said. Fang Lizhi, the dissident who evaded arrest by seeking refuge at the U.S. Embassy, has been relieved of his position on the Academic Degrees Committee under the State Council, China's Cabinet, is no longer qualified to tutor doctoral students, Xinhua News Agency reported.

Fang, who entered the U.S. Embassy with his wife shortly after the June crackdown on the pro-democracy movement, already had been relieved of his posts at the Natural Dialectics Research Society but apparently still retains his main job at the Beijing Observatory.

Several other dissident intellectuals also have been removed from peripheral positions.

The government issued arrest warrants for Fang and his wife, professor of physics Li Shuxian, for allegedly inciting the pro-democracy protests, and has demanded that the U.S. Embassy turn them over to Chinese authorities.

China's Foreign Ministry refused to comment on the report by Japan's Jiji Press today that Deng is seriously ill with prostate cancer.

Quoting unidentified Chinese sources, the Japanese news agency said the senior Chinese leader's condition had suddenly worsened a few days ago. Emergency medical personnel were sent to care for him at his summer resort near Bo Hai Bay, east of Beijing, Jiji said.

An employee at the Foreign Ministry's Information Department said he had received many queries about Deng's health but could respond. There was no answer tonight at the Communist Party's news office.

Deng was last seen in public June 9, when national television showed him congratulating top army officers on having ended the pro-democracy protests. He spoke in a strong voice and appeared more alert and healthy than he had for some months.

Bush Encouraged By Iranian Offer

not only Obeid but also Palestinian and Lebanese prisoners "within days." The group did not say if the death sentence would be restored if Israel did not comply.

There are eight Americans among the 16 foreign hostages in Lebanon. Cicippio was acting comptroller of the American University of Beirut when he was abducted Sept. 12, 1986. The hostage held longest is Terry Anderson, chief Middle East correspondent for The Associated Press. He was abducted March 16, 1985.

In Washington, Bush was asked if the latest developments suggested a break in the hostage crisis. "I'm encouraged, but I don't want to get the hopes of the hostages' loved ones up once again to have those hopes dashed," he said. He added that had been engaged in "an extraordinarily broad exercise of diplomacy" over the last several days on behalf of the hostages.

Had another hostage been killed, The New York Times reported today that Bush planned to target for attack the Baalbek base of 4,000 Iranian Revolutionary Guards in eastern Lebanon. The guards work closely with Hezbollah.

Asked about the report, Bush responded, "If I had made such a decision, I expect this would be the last place I'd be talking about it."

In Jerusalem, Defense Minister Yitzhak Rabin said Israel would examine the new demands "on a positive basis." Four top Israeli leaders, including Rabin and Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir, met today in Jerusalem to fashion a response to the Shiite radicals' demands.

A spokesman for Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir said Israel was awaiting the list of prisoners the Shiites want freed.

The International Committee of the Red Cross said it was willing to transmit to Israel the demands for the prisoner release.

Israel has offered to trade Obeid, 33, and other Lebanese Shiites it holds for foreign hostages and three Israeli soldiers held in Lebanon.

Hezbollah has rejected such a swap. Sheik Na'im Qassem, a Hezbollah leader, said there had been no direct or indirect negotiations with Israel on a prisoner exchange and would not be.

The Revolutionary Justice

Organization granted Cicippio a reprieve 45 minutes before the deadline Thursday that it had set for killing him.

It was the third time the group held off on its death threat.

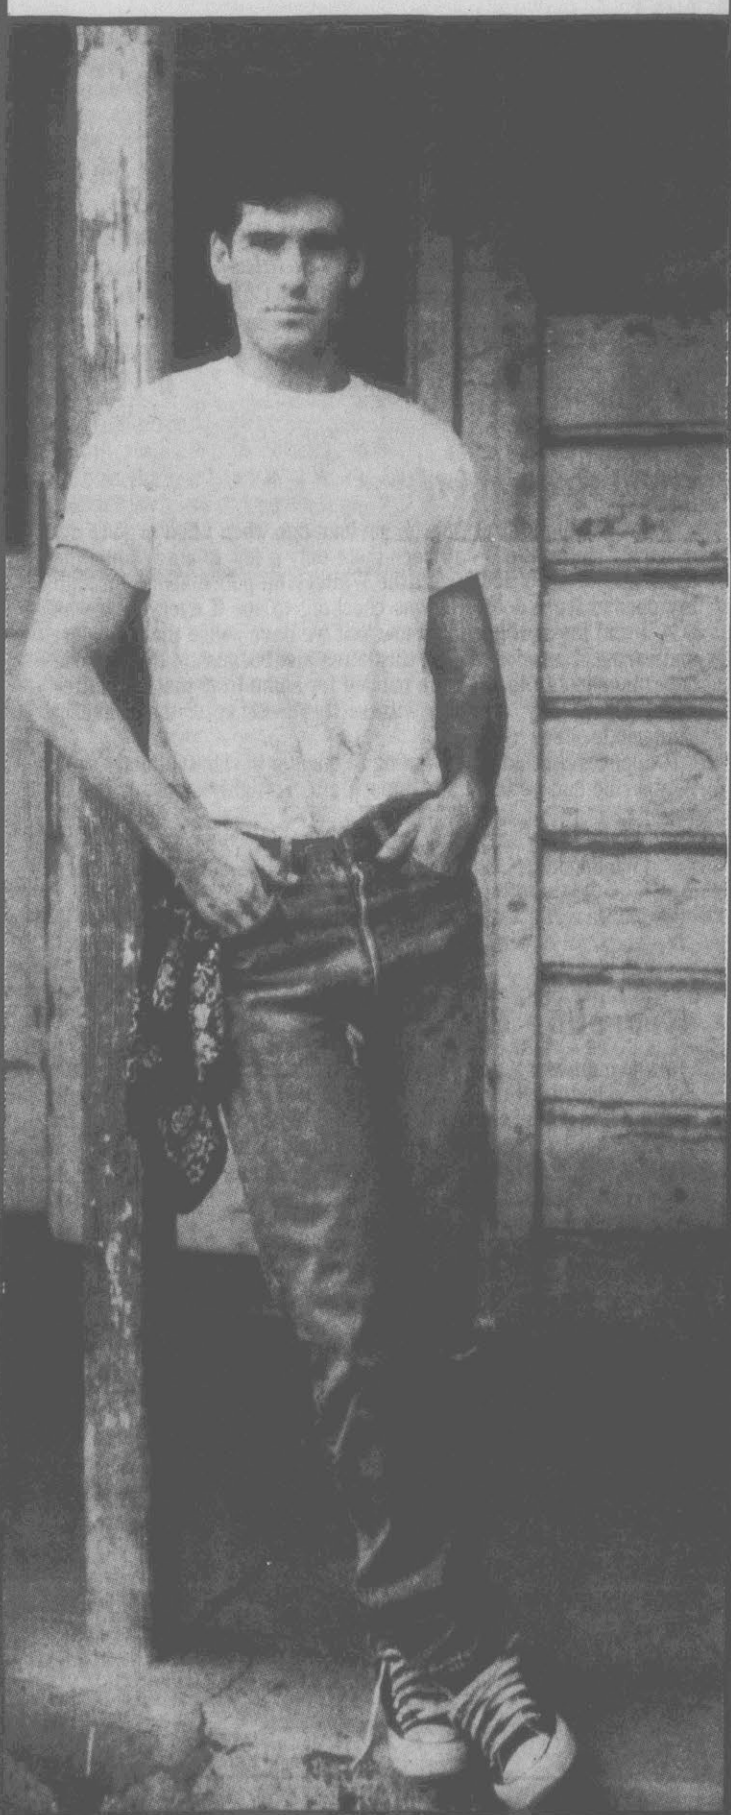

"Out of respect for the intervention by the parties and states with whom America pleaded to mediate and stop the execution, we declare the freezing of the death sentence and its substitution with an initiative," said a statement by the group.

None of the mediating nations was named, but press reports in Beirut have said Iran, Syria and Algeria were believed to have interceded. Algeria helped secure the release of American diplomats taken captive at the U.S. Embassy in Tehran in 1979.

Rafsanjani, known as a pragmatist, has not commented on whether Iran played a role, but a knowledgeable Shiite Moslem source in Beirut, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the final word on Cicippio's reprieve came from him.

Rafsanjani is believed to want to improve ties with the West and to change Iran's image as a sponsor of international terrorism.

'Truth In Preference To Fiction'

Safeguards

More Questions About State Policy

Twice in July industries spilled waste into rivers in eastern North Carolina. Two times in only two weeks last month chemicals would up in local waterways through accidents.

In one instance, the impact was negligible. In the other, however, the damage will be quite serious and long-lasting. Both spills raise serious questions about why better environmental industrial safeguards aren't in place and enforced.

On July 31 latex from a textiles printing plant in Rocky Mount turned the waters of the Tar River milky white. A leak from a holding tank at Thorpe Road Textile Printing Co. released about 300 gallons of acrylic latex into Goose Creek, a tributary of the Tar, through a storm drain.

'Why, when human health, marine life and water quality are at stake, is there no fail-safe system for companies that handle potentially hazardous materials?'

Rainfall and containment minimized the effects of the spill on water quality and marine life. While it discolored the banks of the creek and river, it apparently didn't do irreversible harm.

But the prognosis is not the same for the Roanoke River, where Weyerhaeuser Co. spilled nearly 4 million gallons of untreated pulp waste July 20. A power outage knocked out the pumps at the company's waste treatment plant, allowing the waste to spill. The substance contained dioxins used to bleach paper products. While they're great for making paper white, dioxins are a toxic cancer-causing chemical.

Here's where the permanent damage comes in. Dioxins accumulate on the bottom of a stream. Fish feeding near the bottom store the dioxin in their tissue for as long as 12 years, the half-life of the contaminant. It is a stable chemical, so dioxin levels in the fish continue to climb until they die or are consumed.

That long life means fish downstream from the plant in the Roanoke may not be suitable to eat for some time, since even low levels of dioxins can cause cancer in humans.

Dangers and damage aside, the question that must be asked about both spills is why? Why, when human health, marine life and water quality are at stake, is there no fail-safe system for companies that handle potentially hazardous materials? Granted, accidents are hard to anticipate, but can't a worst-case scenario be anticipated and reasonably provided for?

In any area experiencing development and growth, there are compromises between what's good for the economy and what's good for the environment. Those compromises, if carefully balanced and properly regulated, are necessary. But that doesn't mean the environment should go unprotected and it doesn't mean there should be no responsible, meaningful safeguards — especially for hazardous waste handlers.

Here is another instance of North Carolina's woefully inadequate environmental policy at work. Requiring a fail-safe emergency system for handlers of hazardous waste makes operation more expensive for those industries. But in light of the two recent incidents involving the Tar and Roanoke, rivers, it seems pertinent and worth the cost.

About The Forum ...

Salutes is a new forum for readers of The Daily Reflector Opinion page. The column will be a regular feature on Fridays and will allow readers to recognize extraordinary efforts by individuals or community organizations.

Space will not allow all letters to be published but all submissions meeting guidelines will be considered. Let The Daily Reflector know about the good things in your community by writing to Salutes, The Daily Reflector, P.O. Box 1967, Greenville, N.C. 27835.

Honesty, Support

Several days ago my wallet was stolen. I immediately put a stop on my credit cards and other identification. The Greenville Police Department was most helpful. Their professional attitudes made my experience less traumatic. I would especially like to thank Officer H.D. Hines, who returned my wallet, Sergeant P.W. Scheutzo, who informed me one of my credit cards had been found, and Officer A.J. Dennison, who took my complaint.

Local attorney Frank M. Wooten Jr. found my wallet and turned it in to the police department.

It is nice to know so many people can come to your personal support in a time of concern.

Good Protection

It was one night after 11 p.m. not long ago when I had to go to my office in Winterville. I had been there only a few minutes when the car lights of an officer from the Winterville police shone through my opened front door. He was checking to see if everything was O.K. It did my soul good to know that we have police that are alert and caring. I am not writing this letter just because of this episode but rather to say that I have noticed for some time that no matter what time of day, you can witness the presence of the police in Winterville on the job.

It appears that anyone wanting to engage in criminal activity in Winterville had better make himself either mighty smart or invisible.

Recycling Efforts

As a member of the Greenville Recycling Committee, I would like to recognize Food Lion, Overtons, Farm Fresh, Harris Supermarket and others that I am not aware of, for using paper bags for their groceries. Special recognition should go to Rose's Stores Inc. for their use of photodegradable shopping plastic bags. These firms have made a commitment to reduce the astronomical impact of our ever-increasing solid waste streams.

I would also like to urge every N.C. citizen to support House Bill 1225 introduced by Rep. Joe Hackney, D-Orange. This bill directs the state to pursue three goals: reduce solid waste that goes into landfills by 30% by 1995; implement solid waste collection systems in every county by 1995 and expand markets for recycled goods. Make sure this bill gets full attention from your legislators when it comes before them next session.

Submissions to Salutes should consist of no more than 150 words and should spotlight a good deed or good job that deserves community note. Longer letters will be cut. Signatures, phone numbers and addresses of letter-writers should accompany all letters.

Can Social Woes Be Solved Through Relationships?

WASHINGTON — There's nothing new in what C. Gregg Petersmeyer says on the nature of and the solution to America's social problems. He says what you already know: that the problems stem less from the lack of things than from the absence of viable relationships, and that their solution depends less on what the government does than what the rest of us do.

But because he says it from the office of a conservative President sworn to reduce the federal budget without imposing new taxes, he's not surprised that his message is frequently translated as "don't look to Washington for help."

Maybe that's how it will come out in the end. But whatever the success of Petersmeyer the government official, Petersmeyer the philosopher is right. The 40-year-old Petersmeyer is director of the new Office of National

William Raspberry

Service, the man charged with converting President Bush's "thousand points of light" campaign rhetoric into community-healing action.

"It doesn't really matter," he says, "who's doing the talking — an individual who has put together a successful drug treatment program, a local volunteer effort, or a program to deal with community problems. The thing that runs like a neon thread through their conversations is that at the heart of our most awful problems are essentially good human beings living in disintegrating communities.

"That theme has made it even clearer to me than it was some time ago that what is needed in the lives of many Americans today is not another government program but a series of meaningful relationships."

"The government role is absolutely critical, but it is wholly insufficient. The average citizen knows that. It's not that hard. It's only when you get to Washington, where people think in terms of programs and money, that it becomes difficult. The attitude is that if you don't talk about money, you're not serious. The irony is that if you only talk about money, you miss the point entirely."

Petersmeyer thinks you know that the real problem is that too many young people have given up on their futures. Give them a reason to be hopeful, connect them with wise adults who can help them see that their future need not be limited by their present circumstances, and adolescent pregnancy will pretty much take care of itself.

So it is with drug abuse; crime, joblessness and the generalized despair that afflicts so many inner-city communities.

But if this is true and if, as Petersmeyer insists, most of us know it, why aren't the problems being solved?

He thinks there are two reasons. "The first is what someone called 'trained incapacity.'" He was speaking of the fact that engineers are sometimes incapable of solving certain problems that they would have been able to solve but for their training. "In just the same way, the intellectual culture of Washington makes it difficult to understand many of our social problems. People in Washington, by and large, have a difficult time thinking about issues and problems outside a box called a program."

The other reason is that government programs themselves can interfere with the ability of communities to act in their own behalf. Not only do such programs undercut the efforts of a community's natural leadership — the respected, effective, but uncredentialed neighbors who, until they were replaced by outside experts, managed to produce home-grown solutions to local problems; by defining people in terms of their problems, they tend to exclude them from any role in their solution.

The call to voluntarism of Bush's "thousand points of light," says Petersmeyer, is a call for the well-off to involve themselves in the problems of the less fortunate, but it is more than that. It is also a call for all Americans to get involved.

"Many people believe that one doesn't have the right to call on a young black 15-year-old who is living in circumstances that are unspeakable to give anything to anybody until society solves his problems.

"Nothing could be more wrong. A young person who is not told that he or she has a gift to give, and who is not asked to give it, will come to believe that he or she has nothing to give, or that if they do it isn't wanted."

It's all true. But it is also true that it is easier to get the people involved in tackling their pressing problems if they believe that their government is not neglecting its role.

It isn't enough for the Bush administration to assume the role of cheerleader for voluntarism. The government and the people have to become full, active and committed partners.

Big Losses For The Cliche Hounds In Raleigh

Paul O'Connor

RALEIGH — As if the state doesn't already have enough troubles.

*State revenues were so tight this year that the legislature had to cut back planned education funding.

*The state's landfills are filling up.

*The prisons are bursting with more inmates than beds.

And now, according to a source within the legislature's Fiscal Research Division, the state is facing a new crisis: A metaphor deficit.

"We're just running out of metaphors," the source, who asked that his name not be printed for fear that he could lose his job, said in an exclusive interview. "The old cliches are just wearing out and there's been nothing done to plan to replace them."

State political leaders had hoped that the traditional cliches would carry them through the early part of this year until new legislative leaders could unveil their own tired talk. But that just has not happened.

The biggest cliché loss this year came when Sen. Harold Hardison, D-Lenoir, failed to win the lieutenant governorship. When Hardison left, he took with him the famous "if it ain't broke don't fix it." Sources say that Sen. Henson Barnes, D-Wayne,

Analysis

Senate president pro tem, has let it be known in Senate circles that he'll vigorously protect his old buddy Hardison's proprietary rights to the saying by disciplining any senator who tries to use it.

Much of the blame for the crisis is being laid at the feet of House Speaker Joe Mavetic. Soon after they led the House revolt, Mavetic and House Minority Leader Johnathan Rhyne, R-Lincoln, explained that they were merely "making the House a level playing field." That may have been a good start, but the confusion created by their reorganization quickly wore out some old legislative standards. All used up are: "This is a rudderless ship; The train is off the tracks; The ship of state has run off the rails." Those are big losses for the cliché hounds.

In a typical legislative session, there'll be a few major conference committees to resolve differences between the two houses. This year, almost every major bill had to go to conference. That quickly used up "The ball is now in their court." As proposals were floated and rejected, "That dog won't hunt" died a quiet death from overwork and "that goose just won't honk" was cooked in anticipation of Christmas dinner in the Legislative Building.

As the veto debate stretched on in the House Judiciary Committee, veto opponents tried repeatedly to burden it with other provisions that would certainly doom it either on the House floor, or at the time of a public vote. These used to be called "catfish amendments," but now that the legislature allows electrical shock fishing for catfish, the term has been recalled to the joint Commission on Rules and Cliches to determine if it is still germane. The U.S. Supreme Court ruling on abortion created such a stir that the state's allotment on the saying "litmus test vote" was quickly exhausted. Congress will now have to appropriate another couple hundred million uses of the saying so comparisons can gear up.

So here we are at the bottom line of this column, preparing for a soft landing to the weekend. Legislative leaders, however, are expected to huddle with the governor, lieutenant governor and the public relations people from both political parties. The state currently has no greater need than for a stack of new bromides.

Kidnapping Of Sheik: Israel's Brilliant Disaster

Conor O'Brien

As the late Moshe Dayan once said, "Israel has no foreign policy, only a defense policy."

The Dayan dictum was confirmed by Israel's kidnapping of Sheik Abdel Karim Obeid. As a military operation it was brilliantly successful. In its impact on Israel's foreign relations it is a disaster. And the full scale of the disaster has not yet emerged.

The Islamic response to the kidnapping — the announcement of the murder of U.S. Marine Corps Lt. Col. William R. Higgins — has proved horribly effective, politically speaking. A major objective of Israel's enemies is to drive a wedge between Israel and the United States. And it is now clear that American hostages provide the ideal hammer for wedge-driving. All you have to do is to have an American hostage, threaten to murder that hostage in response to some unbearable Israeli "provocation" and then murder him. Or, if you have already murdered him before the provocation took place, you can produce the proof of the murder after the provocation. Either way, you have produced an effective tap on that wedge.

The proof of that was provided by Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kan., just after the announcement of Higgins' hanging. The Dole statement in relation to Israel was the most scathing made against Israel by any American political leader since 1957. And 1957 was by far the worst year in the entire history of Israel-U.S. relations, up to now.

It is generally believed that Dole consulted President Bush before he made that statement, and that his reference to Israel reflects the feelings of the president as well as of the senator. If so, the government of Israel has cause to be seriously worried, as I believe it now is.

In Iran and in Damascus, and at Palestine Liberation Organization headquarters, the strategists of the struggle against Israel will have studied the Dole statement with close attention. They will rightly interpret it as meaning that there is marvelous political mileage to be made out of murdering American hostages and keeping a threat of murder suspended over other American hostages. A subtle variant is to appear occasionally in the role of "protector" of the hostages held by your clients.

The atrocity against Higgins, committed by the enemies of Israel, might have enhanced American feelings of being "on the same side" as Israel, had the circumstances been different. But as it is, it doesn't seem quite to be working that way. The fact is that America does not appear to possess any effective mode of action against the captors of the hostages. The dispatch of U.S. warships to the Eastern Mediterranean may perhaps impress a part of the American public. But it doesn't impress any of the armed factions of Lebanon. Those factions have seen believe that the release of the sheik will undo the damage done by his capture, and the responses to his capture. On the contrary, it is likely to compound that damage. The unconditional release of the sheik, in the circumstances, would provide certain proof that the holding of hostages on the threat to kill them — a threat made credible by occasional killing — are highly effective political weapons in the war against Israel. That lesson will not soon be forgotten. It is not conducive to a

Every act of self-defense, on Israel's part, will be seen by the Hezbollah as a provocation. And the more successful any such act is, the more unbearable the provocation will be. That being so, the Hezbollah is likely in the future to make repeated use of its not-so-secret weapon: the American hostages. The repercussions in America, in relation to Israel, seem likely to be similar to those reflected in the Dole statement, but getting progressively worse.

Some well-meaning commentators have drawn from the whole affair the moral that it is urgent to get on with "the peace process," which is assumed to be capable of producing general harmony in the Middle East (so resulting in, among other good things, the release of all the hostages). The Bush administration may well draw the same moral. It may well also increasingly interpret "the peace process" in an Arab sense: meaning a Palestinian state in the territories currently occupied by Israel.

If things develop in that way, Israel will be placed in an appalling position. It will be under heavy pressure, from its sole and indispensable ally, to do things that are incompatible with its survival. To hand over the territories, to anyone, would mean a serious danger of civil war inside Israel. The Jewish settlers in the territories, who are now numerous, would have to be uprooted by force. Many of them would put up armed resistance against that, and would be supported by about half the population of Israel and of the defense forces. Israel's continued existence would be at stake.

As for "the Palestinian state," that would mean the creation of a second Lebanon on Israel's borders. The Palestinian state, if and when it

'A major objective of Israel's enemies is to drive a wedge between Israel and the United States. And it is now clear that American hostages provide the ideal hammer for wedge-driving. All you have to do is to have an American hostage, threaten to murder that hostage in response to some unbearable Israeli "provocation" and then murder him.' You have produced an effective tap on that wedge.'

American warships before. They have even seen American Marines. And they have seen the departure of the warships, and of the Marines, without their having accomplished anything.

It is true that there are things that could be done that would hurt Iran — a blockade of their oil exports, for example, but to do the things that would hurt Iran would be much more likely to result in more murders of American hostages than in their release; though that option is not worth much either. There may yet be some American military response to the hostage situation. But if there is, it is quite unlikely to do the hostages any good, whatever else it may do.

Some of the American frustration at this specific incapacity of its enormous material strength is bound to vent itself on Israel, for providing the incident that led to the demonstration of this incapacity and to death. But also, Israel is the only country involved with which the United States has the capacity to exert serious pressure. That pressure can be effective if it is sufficiently motivated and sustained. I believe it is likely to be so, in time, in the case of Obeid.

Israel is likely, under pressure from the United States, to release Obeid unconditionally, contrary to Israel's current intention, but I don't general release of hostages.

The release of the sheik would no doubt nullify those threats against hostages that have been declared to be motivated by the sheik's imprisonment, but other threats will follow, supposedly caused by other "provocations" of Israel. And Israel has really no choice but to continue to supply such provocations. It may well in the future avoid such high-level "spectaculars" as the kidnapping of the cleric, which had such untoward political results. But it has to defend itself against the guerrilla war waged against it by the Hezbollah and its allies.

exists, is supposed to be administered by "the PLO." But the PLO is no more than a name for a number of diverse and conflicting factions, some of which would continue the armed struggle against Israel out of any territory that might be handed over, irrespective of any agreements that might be concluded in the name of "the PLO."

So Israel, having handed over territory at the cost of an agonizing internal crisis, would not get any peace in exchange. But the cost of rejecting "territory for peace" indefinitely and without a credible alternative might include the loss of the American alliance.

If Israel is to weather the storms that lie ahead, the Dayan dictum must cease to apply. Israel needs a foreign policy, as well as a defense policy, and needs it urgently.

Cooper listens pensively as House kills veto bill

Martin Vows To Keep Up His Fight For Veto Despite House Knockout

By F. Alan Boyce
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — Gov. Jim Martin's highly sought gubernatorial veto returned to the ranks of campaign issues as it failed to draw the 72 votes needed to amend North Carolina's constitution.

Martin, who had called this "the year of the veto" in his State of the State Address, said at a news conference the House had failed to heed the will of the people in its 60-43 vote Thursday.

The Republican governor said he was encouraged that 60 percent of the Senate and a majority of the House had backed the idea for the first time in modern history. And he vowed to keep after the issue.

"It will be raised at every opportunity," he said.

Rep. Dennis Wicker, D-Lee, a vocal opponent of the veto, said he expected political fallout.

"I think he's gonna try to make political hay out of it," he said.

The House vote came after three hours of debate, once more denying North Carolinians the chance to join the other 49 states that have the veto. The only time a veto bill has passed the General Assembly was 56 years ago, when the issue never got to the voters because of technical problems.

"Alone among the 50 states, the people of North Carolina have not been trusted to make that decision," Martin said.

Supporters expected to get 66 votes, not counting two House members who could not be on the floor, Martin said. He said he'd hoped to pick up the remaining six when the pressure was on to vote.

"You don't always know how people will vote until they actually vote," Martin said.

In the end, all 44 Republicans on the floor voted for the measure and 16 Democrats joined their ranks. The other two Republicans, Charlotte Gardner of Rowan County and Marty Kimsey of Macon County, had excused absences.

Rep. Roy Cooper, D-Nash, led supporters for the veto in the House debate, saying it would increase the governor's involvement in the legislative process while adding another check on legislation and robbing the governor of a campaign tool.

"Our Republican friends have been brilliant in using the issue of veto to bash Democrats," Cooper said.

Cooper said he regretted that no consensus could be found on a balance-of-powers package including such things as moving statewide elections to even, non-presidential years and legislative confirmation of all gubernatorial appointments. Those proposals and the veto had passed the Senate earlier this session.

But Rep. Joe Hackney, D-Orange, was the first of several opponents who called the issue a power grab that would unbalance state government.

"I do not believe in vesting this much power in one individual," he said. "The pressures that go with that immense power are also immense. ... I say to you that it's raw politics, the reason that it's here before you."

Rep. Johnathan Rhyne, R-Lincoln, argued that the veto being considered is tame compared with those in other states.

"This is not the heavy-handed veto," he said, noting that it did not have the line-item veto approved by 47 states.

Rep. Sam Hunt, D-Alamance, argued that pressure for the veto is growing.

"The veto cat is out of the bag," he said, noting that 40 Democrats have been unseated in the past 10 years. "We've got a new day in North Carolina, a new day politically, we've got a two-party state."

"All this does is deal the governor a hand in the game, and a weak hand at that," Hunt said. "But it does put him at the table. ... If we don't pass it now, we'll pass a stronger veto in the future."

Rep. Harry Payne, D-New Hanover, agreed that the cat is out of the bag.

"So now we've got to look at the cat," he said. "This is not the kind of cat you'd want to leave in the best room of the house."

Wicker said the veto "cuts the heart out of the legislative branch and neutralizes it."

A veto would shift the attention of high-priced lobbyists to the governor's mansion, he said.

Tax Bill Enacted

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — The state Senate enacted a measure that makes major changes to North Carolina's tax laws — a set of statutes lawmakers had barely touched in 52 years.

The changes will remove 700,000 poor people from the tax rolls, simplifies the income tax system and allows married couples to file joint returns.

The Senate voted 26-16 Thursday to concur in House amendments and enact the law. The Senate agreed to several changes approved by the House despite some objections that middle-income taxpayers would be saddled with higher taxes to keep the measure from losing money.

The new law would reduce taxes or keep them the same for 65 percent of taxpayers as it brings North Carolina's tax system in line with federal definitions.

Under the law, a married couple filing jointly and earning $10,000 to $15,000 would see their taxes drop from $281 to $117, supporters said. Those earning $30,000 to $40,000 would save $21 and those earning $50,000 to $75,000 would see an increase of about $140.

Supporters argued that the old law was unfair. North Carolina levied the second highest tax on low-income people behind Kentucky.

Senate Tentatively Approves Bill Allowing Vote On Lottery

By Martha Waggoner
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — A statewide lottery would be one of the items on the ballot when voters go to the polls this November under a bill that received the tentative approval of the state Senate.

But a binding referendum on a statewide lottery was quickly condemned by the governor, who said he would make the defeat of the proposal his top legislative item.

"A lottery would be a tax on the weak, on those who can't resist the compulsion to gamble," Martin said. "It only produces revenue to the extent that you deceive people into thinking they can win."

The Senate voted 26-22 on Thursday to give tentative approval to the bill, which calls for a binding referendum on a statewide lottery. Sen. David Parnell, D-Robeson, objected to third reading, delaying a final vote.

The bill has not yet been considered in the House.

"A lottery is a wonderful thing," said Sen. Ken Royall, D-Durham, quoting from Thomas Jefferson. "It lays taxation only on the willing."

Sen. Donald Kincaid, R-Caldwell, said the lottery took advantage of a person's weakness. "It's an artificial form of revenue," he said. "You're preying on desperation and you're taking money from the poor. It's a tax on the weak."

If legislators support a lottery, they should vote themselves rather than holding a referendum, he said. "This is an issue the members of the General Assembly should face head on," Kincaid said.

But Sen. Ralph Hunt, D-Durham, said the poor were smart enough to decide whether they should buy a lottery ticket.

"I don't think there's a need for us to think any of us are more equipped to make decisions for poor people than poor people can make for themselves," Hunt said.

And Sen. Jim Johnson, R-Cabarrus, said a referendum was the proper way to decide the issue, which he said would continue to be debated in the Legislature until the voters decided.

"Certain issues are so important to the fiber of the state that there's only one place to settle it," he said, referring to the voting booth.

Two amendments were passed by the Senate. One took out the requirement that proceeds go to fund public education. Instead, the funds will go to the general fund which legislators said would let them spend the money on the most pressing needs that year.

The other changed the age at which a person can buy a lottery ticket to 18 years old from 21.

Sen. Franklin Block, D-New Hanover, argued that the state should set a better example for its citizens than it would by endorsing a lottery.

"The lottery puts the state of North Carolina into the gambling business," he said. "And I see that substantially different from bingo or raffle tickets."

If North Carolina sets up a lottery, the state will advertise it as a potential to win millions of dollars, he said. But he asked if the ad will also say that "you have a greater chance of being struck down by lightning than you have of winning that jackpot or a greater chance of getting run over by a car."

A lottery provides "a false hope, a false idea that they have a chance to get rich quick," he said. "It's a way of imposing a tax that is politically palatable" because people thing they're getting something for their money.

Guilty Pleas

RALEIGH (AP) — Two brothers have pleaded guilty in U.S. District Court to burglarizing three U.S. post offices in the Fayetteville area during two weeks in February.

Timothy R. Woolford and Preston E. Woolford, both of Fayetteville, stole about $7,800 in stamps and coins and did $25,000 in damage to equipment, said Assistant U.S. Attorney Richard Moore.

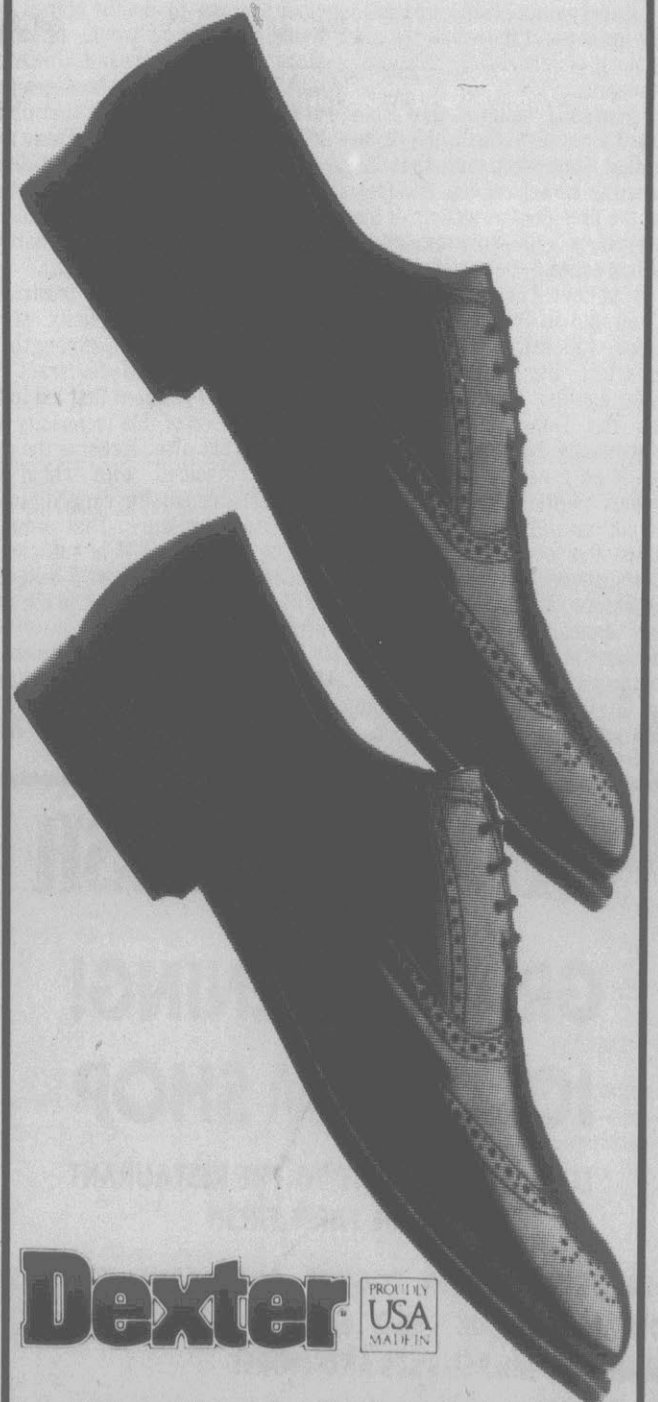

Timothy Woolford received a 51-month sentence, and Preston Woolford got 21 months. Both were ordered to pay restitution and were placed on probation for three years.

Report Says NCSU Teacher Changed Athlete's Grade

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — An North Carolina State University professor changed a basketball player's failing grade in the middle of the 1986 basketball season after a request from the school's athletic tutor, according to a published report that cites school documents.

The grade change to an "incomplete," which was reported a month later to the university's top academic officials, kept the player eligible to play that season. The News and Observer reported in its Friday editions.

The N.C. State records also show that in 1984, N.C. State Provost Nash N. Winstead overruled the school's Faculty Admissions Committee and readmitted three football players who had been suspended for academic reasons. His decision came after Willis R. Casey, then N.C. State's athletic director, wrote that the suspensions would mean that the players "would be ineligible to compete."

The N.C. State records support assertions made by Hugh Fuller, director of the university's tutoring program. Fuller said this week that for years N.C. State officials have permitted the athletic department to violate the school's academic regulations in an effort to preserve athletes' eligibility. He said top university administrators knew about grade manipulations and other abuses but did nothing to stop them.

Stephanie R. Spencer, an art history professor, acknowledged in a letter to Fuller on Feb. 4, 1986, that she had changed the basketball player's "no credit" grade to an "incomplete" after she was called by Joe Brown Jr. Brown worked for Fuller as head of N.C. State's Program of Academic Advancement for Student Athletes which provides academic help for all N.C. State athletes.

The basketball player was enrolled in Ms. Spencer's Art and Photography course. A "no credit" grade is the equivalent of an "F" at N.C. State.

"On the day final grades for Fall 1985 were due, I received a call at home from Joe Brown inquiring if there was any way of changing (the player's) final grade in HA 298A," she wrote to Fuller, who was looking into the incident. "I said that (the player) had not taken either the midterm or the final exam, that I had already turned in the grades, and that I had no reason to change (the player's) grade. I also pointed out that I had tried to rectify the situation earlier by filling out the athlete's academic progress forms and by trying unsuccessfully to get in touch with (the player's) tutor."

Ms. Spencer wrote that she decided to change the grade after the player told her that "extraordinary circumstances" had forced him to miss both tests.

In a memorandum of a conversation he had with the professor, Fuller wrote that the professor told him that Brown had tried to "negotiate" a grade for the player.

In a later memo to Fuller, Brown denied that he had pressured the professor to change the player's grade. Efforts to reach Brown for comment Thursday were unsuccessful.

Ms. Spencer declined Thursday to discuss her conversation with Brown. She denied that she had changed the grade to preserve the player's eligibility.

"Basically what happens is every now and again this has come up," she said. "I indicated to (the player) that I was not willing to let him make up all the work he had missed, but was willing to let him make up part of the work. If he did that, given his good attendance, he would in all likelihood pass the course."

Fuller said the player remained on the team for the rest of the season, although he should have been declared ineligible once the "incomplete" was replaced with the "no credit."

After filing his report, Fuller said, he heard nothing about the incident from the chancellor or any other N.C. State officials. N.C. State Chancellor Bruce Poulton is vacationing in Maine and has not returned repeated phone calls.

In the case involving the three football players, Winstead, who as provost is N.C. State's top academic officer, allowed the athletes to return to school three months after they had been suspended for academic trouble.

Fuller, the tutoring director, said the decision was "an effort to circumvent the spirit of the rules, no doubt about it."

Winstead would not comment Thursday.

The three players were among six football players who in January 1984 were declared academically ineligible for the spring semester.

On Feb. 20, Casey, the athletic director, wrote to the appeals committee that the players should be reinstated immediately because the suspensions would keep them from being eligible to play football in the fall 1985 semester.

Richard M. Myers, then the university admissions committee chairman and a professor of animal sciences, wrote back to Casey on Feb. 28, suggesting that the committee would not reverse its decision. Myers advised Casey to ask either Winstead or Chancellor Poulton to reverse the board's decision if he felt it was wrong.

On March 26, Winstead wrote to Casey to tell him that he had decided to allow three of the four players to return to school that spring, three months after they had been suspended.

The decision came two and a half months after the semester began — just one month before the last day of classes for that semester.

"That's a violation of the (university's) rules," Fuller said Thursday.

FBI Joins Poisoning Investigation

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WINSTON-SALEM — An arm of the FBI has joined the investigation surrounding accused arsenic killer Blanche Taylor Moore.

The National Center for the Analysis of Violent Crime had been asked to "analyze the case and give direction in the investigation," Burlington police Lt. Steve Lynch said Thursday.

Lynch said local authorities met with a representative of the center Wednesday and that the center has already begun work on the case.

"In a case of this magnitude, it's a need to call in all available people to give assistance on the matter," Lynch said. "We're just utilizing the resources that are available to us."

He declined to say specifically what kinds of help his department is looking for from the center, located at the FBI Academy in Quantico, Va. The center was formed in 1985 to help law enforcement understand criminal behavior and to provide advice on investigating and prosecuting violent crimes.

"We're getting them to analyze this case and to give us any sense of direction they deem necessary — analyze every aspect of the case and give us opinions and a sense of guidance," Lynch told the Greensboro News & Record.

Mrs. Moore is charged with murder in the arsenic poisoning deaths of ex-husband James N. Taylor, and ex-boyfriend Raymond Reid. She is charged with attempted murder in the poisoning of her current husband, the Rev. Dwight Moore. Authorities are looking into at least six other deaths. She is being held in the Alamance County jail without bond.

Meanwhile, a Forsyth County prosecutor says his case against Mrs. Moore calls for the death penalty if the 56-year-old woman is convicted in the arsenic poisoning death of Reid who died in 1986.

Forsyth County District Attorney Warren Sparrow said his case against her has two elements that could justify seeking the death penalty.

Mountain Area Suffers Invasion Of Pests During Hot, Wet Summer

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ASHEVILLE — Mold, mildew, fleas and ticks are on the march, encouraged by above-average rains this summer, observers say.

The ranks of every biting pest from mosquitos to fleas seem to be increasing this summer. And greyish-green mold is lounging away on leather shoes, roofing shingles and bread.

Veterinarian D.J. Homolka said the flea problem on pets is the worst he's seen it in his 14 years of practice in Sylva.

"All practitioners are seeing more than normal. The humidity has been perfect for fleas," Homolka said.

Some pest control businesses report they are getting the normal run of calls from homeowners concerned with fleas indoors while some of the smaller operators report their calls for flea control are on the increase.

"The intensity (of flea infestation) is related to the temperature and moisture. This summer it appears there's more moisture. We are getting a lot of calls, but this is normal," said Al Wilson, pest control service manager for Orkin in Asheville.

Allergy sufferers are victims of the grayish-green mold that is attacking most everything in a house that the mold's spores light on.

Dr. Terrell Davis, a Franklin allergy specialist and staff member of Angel Community Hospital, said he is seeing more patients than usual suffering from allergies and bronchitis aggravated by the mold and mildew.

"We've gotten more calls for dehumidifiers than normal," said Vickie Medford of Hayward Appliances in Waynesville.

Farmers have had a difficult time with the wetter weather.

"It's been real difficult in Western North Carolina to put up good hay," said Bob Rollins, Macon County's agriculture extension agent.

Rollins figures 50 percent of the first cutting of hay has been lost because of wet and humid weather and mold.

Not only has yield been down, but there has been a loss of nutritional value due to disease, mold and mildew, he said. On some bottom lands the loss of hay is as much as 80 percent and there is a loss of corn for roughage and forage.

Macon County's Rural Development Council met Wednesday and they agree that farmers have been hurt more this year from the rain than they were from the drought. A farmer is able to irrigate during the drought, but he can't do anything to stop the rain, Rollins said.

At Coweeta Hydrologic Laboratory in southern Macon County, rainfall through Monday totaled 56.52 inches. An average for an entire year is 70.29 inches, the laboratory said.

Rainfall for July was 11.17 inches. The record for the 54 years weather records have been kept at Coweeta was 11.83 inches in July 1938.

Some store managers report they are running short on flea sprays as pet owners try to do battle with the tiny hopping insects that make life miserable for pets and their owners.

Allergy sufferers may have even rougher times to face because the ragweed crop will mature later this year making it a "difficult fall," Davis said.

Homeowners will also find that the mildew and mold problem will increase as they close up their vents under their houses for the winter. Toward the end of summer and into the fall the mildew problem will become worse because moisture will be trapped under the house.

"They've seen nothing yet. All that moisture will be absorbed by the (house) understructure," Wilson warned.

"From personal observation, there are more ticks this year than in years past and there is no shortage of fleas. Certainly, with this kind of weather there's better survival and reproduction and the problem is compounded by the hosts," said D.A. Crosley Jr., an entomologist with the University of Georgia.

There is some good news. Entomologists with the Southeastern Experiment Station of the U.S. Forest Service say the wet summer may be slowing down the Southern pine beetle.

The drought weakened pine trees, which made them more susceptible to the beetle, but the abundant rains this year have strengthened the pines and slowed down the beetle's infestation, said Harold Flake of the Forest Service.

Indian Dropouts

RALEIGH (AP) — North Carolina needs to do more to keep American Indian students in school and should expand programs for the students, a state panel says.

Statewide, roughly one in four students quits school, but statistics show the rate is three times higher for Indians. But the State Advisory Council on Indian Education suspects that rate is even higher for Indians, said Chairman Gerald D. Maynor, head of the Pembroke State University education department.

The 15-member council, which was formed last fall, made recommendations this week to members of the state Board of Education.

The panel found that most of the state's $17,000 Indian students are struggling in the classroom — with a dropout rate three times that of other students.

Firefighters

RALEIGH (AP) — Two 20-person state Division of Forest Resources firefighting crews flew out of North Carolina on Thursday to help battle the fires plaguing Oregon and Idaho.

The crews, led by Keith Suttles and Bob Houseman, departed from the Air National Guard station at Douglas International Airport near Charlotte.

The crew members will bring the number of division firefighters volunteering to go out West to 88. The U.S. Forest Service has requested three 20-person crews and 28 fire specialists from the state division since July 31.

Escapee Captured

RALEIGH (AP) — An inmate at a state minimum-security prison in Raleigh escaped and was captured Wednesday after eight police officers surrounded him, authorities said.

Sharess H. Rolle, 18, escaped about 4 p.m. from the Triangle Correctional Facility, said Beth Workman, a state Department of Correction spokesman.

Rolle had begun serving an 18- to 20-month sentence there June 8 for attempting to escape from the Pasquotank County Jail, she said.

Drug Raids

FAYETTEVILLE (AP) — Three people were arrested and several thousand dollars worth of drug paraphernalia was seized by the Cumberland County Sheriff's Department in two raids on Thursday, officials say.

Deputies with the Special Operations Unit and the Alcohol Beverage Control Division participated in the raids at R's Gems & Rocks Shop and the House of Zonk novelties, authorities said.

Among the items seized were various pipes, a tape called "Marijuana Growers Guide" and publications such as "Cooking With Marijuana" by Evelyn Schmevelyn, "The Super Grass Growers Guide, a handbook for high power pot farming" by Mary Jane Superweed, and "The Cocaine Tester's Handbook ... easy methods for testing the purity of cocaine and detecting the presence of various cuts."

Choking Arrest

CHARLOTTE (AP) — A 23-year-old Alexander County man is in jail on charges he choked his 4-year-old stepdaughter with a bed sheet in June and left the child unconscious, authorities say.

The child spent five days in the hospital after the June 22 incident. She is not believed to have suffered permanent damage, said Kaye Greene, social work supervisor for the Alexander County DSS. David Brent Barber was arrested Wednesday evening in Taylorsville and charged with assault with a deadly weapon inflicting serious injury.

Barber is being held under $100,000 bond.

Soldier Shot

FAYETTEVILLE (AP) — A Fort Bragg soldier was shot when scattered fighting broke out among about 1,000 young people who had attended a concert at the Cumberland County arena, authorities say.

Randy Perkins, about 19, of B Battery of the 5th Battalion, 8th Field Artillery, was shot during a fight involving at least five males, a police report states. He was treated and released at Womack Army Community Hospital, an Army official said.

Investigators Say Wheel Chocks Found In Airliner's Landing Gear

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

GREENSBORO — Investigators say wheel chocks apparently were left in both wheel wells of a Piedmont Airlines jet that made an emergency landing with one landing gear jammed shut.

NTSB investigator Phillip Powell said Thursday that a hydraulic line in the right wheel well was bent as if a wheel chock had been caught between the wheel and the line.

"Someone just flat forgot to take them (chocks) out when handling the aircraft," Powell said.

The National Transportation Safety Board investigator said a 2 1/2-foot wheel chock, used to block the plane's wheels on the ground, was found in the left wheel well. He said investigators believe the chock in the right well was thrown out during maneuvers to shake that gear loose.

Powell said a preflight inspection should have included checking the compartment where a misplaced wheel chock jammed the landing gear.

"Anything foreign to the landing system in the wheel well should be observed," he said. "It is part of the checklist."

Ground crews sometimes stuff the chocks in the wheel well while moving planes from one place to another, Powell said.

"It's not company policy, but if that's what the ground crews have been doing over the years, you really couldn't call it sabotage," he said.

Pilot Larry Fuda told investigators he delegated the walk-around inspection of the plane to First Officer David Curtis before takeoff.

Fuda told reporters that Curtis looked into the wheel wells. He suggested the chock may have been difficult to see.

"That chock was black, what it was laying on was black and it was black in the wheel well," Fuda said.

Powell said leaving a chock in the wheel well "is not a normal procedure."

"There shouldn't be any reason for the chock to be in there," he said.

Powell said the plane underwent routine service before leaving Washington National Airport Wednesday morning.

In Washington, at the headquarters of USAir Group, which owns Piedmont, company officials said there was no indication the chock was intentionally placed in the wheel well. USAir's merger with Piedmont will be completed Saturday, when Piedmont will cease to exist.

"There is no evidence of any sabotage at this time," said USAir vice president David Shipley. "However, the investigation will continue and look at all possibilities."

The pilot also said he knew from the outset that the plane and its 94 passengers and six crew members would be safe.

"I knew from the start that we were going to be safe," said Larry Fuda, a 21-year Piedmont veteran who landed a Boeing 737-400 here Wednesday with 100 people aboard after its left landing gear failed to lower. No one was injured.

"I had no doubt in my mind that we were going to save that aircraft and the lives of the passengers," said Fuda of Rocky Mount, Va.

Flight 1489 originated at Washington National Airport and was bound for Columbia, S.C., with a stop in Charlotte. It was diverted to Greensboro when the crew couldn't get the jet's landing gear down.

In an effort to shake the gear down, Fuda climbed his jetliner to 10,000 feet, put it in a sharp dive and pulled back up. The right gear locked into place.

He later performed "touch-and-go" maneuvers on the runway, but the left gear remained unlocked.

Fuda, meanwhile, said he wanted to play it straight with passengers during the emergency.

Congress Squares Off On S&Ls As Recess Nears

By Merrill Hartson
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The Congress, rushing toward its summer recess, is striving to put the finishing touches on a new, compromise $159 billion savings and loan bailout.

Bush administration and congressional negotiators, working late into the night Thursday, reached agreement on a plan they said would be acceptable to their colleagues and the White House.

A House-Senate split over how to pay for some elements of the relief program had forced new negotiations, raising doubts about whether lawmakers could meet today's target date for starting the annual get-away.

Treasury Secretary Nicholas Brady and budget director Richard Darman took part in the talks.

"Obviously we've only had an opportunity to make a quick review, but based on that review ... in the spirit of which the president sent us here, which was one of compromise, we accept," Brady said.

The pact set the stage for final action today by both chambers, and GOP leaders voiced confidence they could muster sufficient votes to pass the bill and send it to President Bush.

Reflecting lawmakers' growing restiveness in the wake of a series of long work days, Rep. Joe Moakley, D-Mass., chairman of the House Rules Committee, groused at one point during the S&L fight that "90 percent of the people want to get out of here. They have reservations for vacations."

Aside from the S&L bailout, the only legislation that had to be acted upon before recess was a bill to temporarily extend the government's debt limit by $70 billion, to $2.87 trillion.

That was needed to grant the government authority to borrow enough money to function for the next three months.

During a frenetic day of lawmaking, there were these other developments:

—The Senate voted to impose unlimited liability on companies responsible for oil spills at offshore drilling rigs. It acted by voice vote to approve an amendment that eliminated a $100 million ceiling.

—The House approved an $11.9 billion measure to finance Transportation Department operations in the new budget year starting Oct. 1. The measure included language making permanent a ban on smoking on all domestic airline flights of two hours or less.

"This is probably the most popular bill we've passed around here in two years," said Rep. Richard Durbin, D-Ill., sponsor of both the existing and the new restrictions.

—The House, brushing aside a Bush veto threat, gave final passage to a District of Columbia appropriations bill that included a provision easing restrictions on public financing of abortions in the nation's capital.

—The Senate Appropriations Committee approved legislation that would reduce the amount of money Congress is expected to spend next year on mail. The nearly $2 billion fiscal 1990 spending bill earmarks $80 million for lawmakers' postage, compared with $124.7 million in the bill the House approved earlier this week.

—The Senate approved legislation that would give Vietnam-era veterans disability benefits for certain illnesses associated with U.S. use of Agent Orange.

The bill provides payments on an interim basis, through April 15, 1992, while providing for subsequent congressional votes to make the benefits permanent. Benefits would be paid to veterans with non-Hodgkin's lymphoma and soft-tissue sarcoma.

A broader version is pending in the House.

Lawmakers continued to work on 13 government appropriations bills. But they have until Sept. 30 to get them approved, and thus were under no pressure to finish the measures before heading home.

Although much of the argument about financing the S&L bailout was framed around the technical question of whether the budget-balancing act could be stretched to accommodate a $44 billion chunk of the overall price tag, the tinge of partisanship was unmistakable.

Many Democrats were loath to let Bush use off-budget techniques to mask the impact of the new spending on the overall federal budget deficit, which is estimated in the range of $148 billion for the current fiscal year.

Some Democrats still believe tax increases eventually will be necessary to curb the red-ink problem even though Bush has reiterated his "no-new-taxes" pledge of last year's presidential campaign.

The compromise reached late Thursday is a hybrid of two conflicting plans to avoid automatic spending cuts under the deficit-reduction law.

Democrats had wanted to evade the cuts, which are triggered when the deficit exceeds specified targets, by waiving the law. The administration wanted to circumvent the law by borrowing rescue money through a private agency, thus keeping the spending out of the deficit in the first place.

The compromise calls for raising $20 billion this year along the lines Democrats had suggested, through direct Treasury borrowing, which will swell the deficit this year the estimated $148 billion to $168 billion.

The remaining $30 billion would be borrowed "off-budget" in 1990 and 1991 and will not show up in the deficit. The 1989 spending would not trigger budget cuts because the deadline for meeting spending targets has passed.

Solon Offers Bill Linking Driving Right To Schools

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHARLESTON, W.Va. — Teens nationwide would have to hit the books if they want to hit the roads under a proposed bill in Congress that would require states to revoke the driver's licenses of dropouts or risk losing federal highway funds.

Rep. George Sangmeister, D-Ill., introduced a bill Thursday that would revoke driving privileges from teen-agers who drop out of school. The bill, co-sponsored by Rep. Harley Staggers Jr., D-W.Va., is modeled after a West Virginia law passed last year.

West Virginia officials have touted the law's success, claiming it encouraged 2,200 teen-agers to return to school.

But a 17-year-old junior high dropout who lost his license in May is challenging the law. A Kanawha County Circuit judge was to decide today whether the teen-ager must give up his license.

"I took a good look at what was happening in West Virginia. As a result, the dropout rate has been cut by 30 percent," Sangmeister said in a telephone interview from Washington. "There's no question that the high school dropout program is something the Congress had to look at."

In an effort to lower the state's 25 percent dropout rate, West Virginia lawmakers passed a law that requires students under 18 to stay in school if they want to drive. If a student misses more than 10 consecutive days or has 15 unexcused absences, the license is revoked.

"If ever there was an incentive, this is it," Sangmeister said. "It won't correct all the problems, but I think it's something we ought to try. A number of states are starting to introduce it, and I thought we ought to promote it with a bill here."

Florida, Texas and Wisconsin have passed similar measures, and legislation is pending in 13 other states, including Sangmeister's home state.

Michael Means of Charleston, whose 16-year-old wife is expecting their first child this month, is fighting the law. Means says he cannot get a job to support his family without driving privileges.

Griswold Speaks Again Flag Bill

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Two decades ago, Erwin Griswold was urging the Supreme Court to outlaw draft card-burning. He won. Now, the former solicitor general is helping lead the fight against a constitutional amendment to ban burning the American flag.

"I think it would be very unfortunate to start down that road,"

Griswold told reporters Thursday, arguing that such an amendment could lead to restrictions on freedom of the press and other guarantees of the Bill of Rights.

"In my view, this is a situation that calls for statesmanship," said Griswold, 85, a former Harvard Law School dean who spent six years in the Johnson and Nixon administrations as the lawyer in charge of Supreme Court appeals.

Jackson Signs Up

LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — Five days after settling into a Northwest Washington apartment, ex-Chicagoan Jesse L. Jackson walked into the District of Columbia Board of Elections and Ethics office Thursday and joined nearly 220,000 Washingtonians as a registered Democrat.

Coupled with his establishment of a legal residence in the District, Jackson's registration means he is now legally primed to do what he says he has no plan to do: seek to succeed Marion Barry as mayor.

Jackson, who was accompanied to the elections board by his wife, Jacqueline, again skirted the issue of a mayoral campaign, saying in a statement that he would concentrate on winning statehood for the District, improving schools and fighting drugs. "I have no plans to run for mayor or there is no office for mayor or any other office in D.C. open in 1989," Jackson said. He did not rule out a campaign, however.

Papers Say Pierce Mised Congress

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Newly released documents contradict statements that former HUD Secretary Samuel R. Pierce Jr. has made to a congressional panel investigating the scandal-plagued agency, according to reports published today.

The Washington Post and New York Times, citing documents obtained under the Freedom of Information Act, report that Pierce became involved in selected cases at the behest of political associates.

In testimony before a congressional subcommittee in May, Pierce said he didn't do special favors for consultants or developers and had merely instructed subordinates to give personal requests "careful consideration."

Both newspapers quoted a letter from James Watt, in which the former interior secretary thanked Pierce for his support of a suburban Baltimore housing project that was awarded $28 million in Section 8 moderate rehabilitation funds in May 1986.

Pierce faces no charges of wrongdoing, but congressional investigators have questioned the truthfulness of some of his testimony.

Three New Moons Found In Neptune Orbit

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) — Cameras on the Voyager 2 space probe discovered three new moons as it hurtled toward Neptune. Jet Propulsion Laboratory scientists said Thursday.

The announcement by JPL, which operates America's unmanned craft exploring the solar system, raised the number of known Neptune moons to six, including Triton, Nereid and one found earlier this summer by Voyager.

Voyager 2 was 22 million miles from Neptune when the moons were confirmed by scientists Wednesday, indicating there may be more discoveries as the space probe draws closer in the next few weeks.

The presence of the moons may mean that Voyager 2 could find rings of material around Neptune,

Dean Is Threat Only In Ocean

MIAMI (AP) — Hurricane Dean turned away from Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands and moved slowly northward to the open Atlantic today, apparently rendering its 85 mph winds harmless.

All hurricane and flood warnings and watches have been lifted throughout the eastern Caribbean, officials at the National Hurricane Center in suburban Coral Gables said today.

"The main thing is that it did what we wanted it do in that it missed the islands down there," said forecaster Bob Case of the hurricane center. "It appears now that it's going to be a marine problem for the next couple of days."

The waters north of the islands are heavily traveled by local craft and cruise ships, but Case said the vessels will be able to steer around Dean.

"Looking at the satellite, it looks like it's going to drift northward," said forecaster Jesse Moore. Dean won't threaten any land for days "unless something really strange happens," he added.

At 6 a.m. EDT, the storm's center was located 195 miles northeast of San Juan, Puerto Rico, near latitude 20.5 north and longitude 64.0 west. It was drifting generally northwest at 5 mph, and forecasters expected it to move in a more northerly direction today.

A weakening of upper atmosphere winds that steer the storm kept Dean away from the islands on Thursday.

The Puerto Rican National Guard canceled plans to evacuate 2,000 people from flood-prone areas.

Earlier, repeated warnings on television and radio that Dean was headed for the Virgin Islands and Puerto Rico caused a shopping rush as people stocked up on food, drinking water and buckets, batteries, candles and tape.

Dean was not expected to gain much strength today.

"It may pulsate a little bit in strength," forecaster Hal Gerrish said. "Normally when hurricanes slow down they strengthen. In this particular case I think that's being offset by deleterious winds at the upper level."

Dean, the second hurricane of the Atlantic season, became a tropical storm Monday night and on Tuesday passed the hurricane threshold of 74 mph winds.

All 34 Aboard Die In Greek Crash

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ATHENS, Greece — An Olympic Airways twin-engine plane crashed into a mountainside in thick fog on the eastern Aegean island of Samos, and rescue workers said all 34 people on board were killed.

The British-built Short aircraft was on a 290-mile domestic flight Thursday afternoon from Salonica in northern Greece to Samos, off Turkey's western Anatolian coast.

Transport and Communications Minister Nikos Gelesthatis said the plane carried 31 passengers, including an infant, and three crew members. All were Greek, he said.

The propeller-driven plane gave no sign of trouble before it disappeared from radar screens, officials said.

An army officer who headed a military rescue team through rugged terrain to the top of Kournies mountain said no survivors were found among the wreckage.

"There were bodies everywhere in the plane's wreckage. Bloodied clothing and baggage were scattered all around," he said by telephone from the island.

Officials ruled out foul play as the cause of the crash.

"It appears that thick fog in the area at the time played the villain's role as the pilot flew blindly into the mountain," said an Olympic official who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Gelesthatis told lawmakers in parliament today that a terrorist act was out of the question.

The military teams were dispatched to the crash site after a shepherd reported seeing an explosion on the mountain.

The Athens airport duty officer, Emmanuel Fragiadakis, said the control tower lost contact with the plane at about 4:55 p.m., an hour after it left Salonika. It was scheduled to land on Samos at 5:30 p.m.

The plane disappeared from radar screens when it was 25 miles northwest of Samos.

Olympic officials said the pilot, Petros Moutzouras, was a veteran with an excellent flight record.

They said the aircraft was bought in 1981 and was used for inter-island flights.

Democratic Chairman Says Party Was Lax In Seeking Female Vote

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ST. PAUL — The Democratic Party could do more for women, but deserting it for a third party would lead to "self-righteous failure," Democratic National Committee Chairman Ron Brown told female political activists.

Responding to last month's decision by delegates to the National Organization for Women's convention to explore the formation of a political party for women, Brown conceded Democrats did not do enough to garner votes from women in the last election.

"In fact, we blew a major gender gap that might have carried the Democratic candidate for president to the White House," Brown said Thursday.

Brown said he understands "the frustrations of working in the coalition." But he said those who counsel the formation of a third party "ignore the second half of the adage that begins, 'United we stand.'"

"No matter where the struggle for justice ... divided we will indeed fail and fail to reach our goals," he said.

"I have worked in the struggle for civil rights my entire adult life, and I do not deny the problems of advancing a cause through the Democratic Party," Brown told the steering committee of the National Women's Political Caucus.

"But the alternative is self-righteous failure. It may feel good when the first speeches are made, but it will be very, very tragic when the votes are counted."

Brown told reporters later that the creation of a women's political party probably would hurt Democrats more than Republicans, but he added, "I don't think it's going to hurt anybody because I don't think it's going to happen."

No action similar to NOW's is expected at the National Women's Political Caucus biennial convention, according to Irene Natividad, head of the caucus. The convention, which officially convenes today and runs through Sunday, is expected to attract 1,500 delegates and guests.

Brown also touched on what is expected to be a major focus of the convention: the battle over abortion because of restrictions allowed under a July 3 U.S. Supreme Court ruling.

National Joblessness Rate Declines Despite Slowdown In U.S. Economy

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The nation's unemployment rate fell one notch to 5.2 percent in July as businesses added 169,000 new jobs despite the slowing economy, the government reported today.

The Labor Department said the growth was again found predominantly in the service-producing sector of the economy, which added 140,000 of the new jobs.

The civilian joblessness rate declined from the 5.3 percent reported for June. The government also revised its figures on new jobs created in June to 250,000, up sharply from the 180,000 reported last month.

"We have a soft economy but one that appears to have been stronger in July than in May and June," said chief economist Allen Sinai of Boston Co. Economic Advisers Inc. "This certainly should ease fears of imminent recession."

Today's report contained further evidence of persistent wage inflation.

The department said hourly earnings of production and nonsupervisory workers increased 0.8 percent in July — about twice the rate analysts had predicted — while average weekly earnings climbed by 1.7 percent. The jump in hourly earnings followed two months of modest increases.

Goods-producing industries added 29,000 new positions as construction posted a gain of 35,000 jobs, helping to offset a decline of more than 10,000 jobs in the automobile industry.

Manufacturing posted a modest gain of 3,000 jobs last month after three months of declines, according to the Labor Department's survey of business establishments.

In all, 117.4 million Americans were at work in non-farm jobs last month, the government said.

The average work week for production and nonsupervisory employees in private industry increased by 0.3 hours, to 34.9 hours. The factory work week held steady at 41 hours and overtime in July averaged 3.9 hours a week, up from 3.8 hours in June, the Labor Department said.

The jump in hourly earnings brought average hourly pay in the private sector to $9.70 on a seasonally adjusted basis, up from $9.62 in June.

Weekly earnings rose to an average of $338.53 from the June average of $332.85.

The government said the summer expansion of the youth labor force in the past four months has totaled about 3.1 million, about the same as recent years despite a significant drop in the youth population.

The unemployment rate fell last month despite a dip in the number of Americans at work from 117.5 million to 117.4 million. The rate fell because the 169,000 new jobs were created in a month in which the civilian labor force — the number of people who have jobs or are looking for them — fell by 146,000.

Evidence of a number of recent economic developments could be found in today's unemployment report, the first comprehensive look at the economy's performance in July.

The data showed employment in the mining industry fell by 11,000 jobs — the result of a coal strike in Virginia, West Virginia and Kentucky that also has led to wildcat walkouts in other coal-producing states.

The rebound in construction coincides with reports showing a upswing in housing starts and home sales.

And the decline in auto manufacturing follows recent announcements by major automakers that they are cutting production because of sluggish sales.

The 140,000 job growth in the service-producing sector came despite a 25,000 drop in the number of government jobs.

U.S., Soviets End Arms Talks

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

GENEVA — U.S. and Soviet arms negotiators met today for the final full meeting in the latest round of talks aimed at a treaty to reduce each side's long-range nuclear forces by half.

The round, the first since the Bush administration took office, formally ends Monday with a meeting of the two delegation heads, Yuri Nazarkin and Richard Burt.

Both chief negotiators have indicated that while some progress was made in the seven-week session, long-standing differences on major points remain after nearly 4½ years of talks.

The talks, which also include negotiations on defense and space, are due to resume in late September after Secretary of State James A. Baker III meets Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze in the United States on Sept. 19-20, U.S. officials said.

No details on today's two-hour final plenary at the Soviet mission were released under a news blackout in Geneva agreed by both sides.

Burt expressed hope Thursday the round would permit "productive" arms control discussions between Baker and Shevardnadze.

The major publicized initiative in the round was a Bush administration proposal for testing anti-cheating measure before a Strategic Arms Reduction Treaty on long-range forces is completed.

Nazarkin said the idea seems "quite useful" but that the Soviets would still analyze it.

Negotiators made plain that a main dispute remains over Soviet insistence on linking a START accord to what the United States considers crippling limits on its program for space-based missiles defenses, the Strategic Defense Initiative or Star Wars.

And disagreement persists on long-range nuclear cruise missiles based at sea. Moscow wants to include them under START's limits but Washington refuses, saying their presence cannot be monitored reliably.

The United States also wants to ban mobile intercontinental ballistic missiles, which it does not have. The Soviets have the weapon and want to keep it.

The draft START treaty covers nuclear forces with ranges above 3,400, including intercontinental missiles and heavy bombers.

Many details of the 400-page text have been agreed, including limits of 1,600 ballistic missiles and bombers and 6,000 nuclear warheads on each side.

Bishop Launches Drug Campaign

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

HARRISBURG, Pa. — A United Methodist Bishop is heading to the front lines of the drug war in a first time one-year campaign to save a drug-infested neighborhood in the nation's capital.

Bishop Felton E. May of Harrisburg will recruit hundreds of people from across the country to join him in offering a series of educational, counseling and spiritual programs in 1990, church officials announced Thursday.

In a statement, May said he hoped to show that "with God, substance abuse can be beaten, lives can be saved, families healed and communities transformed."

Gerald D. Wagner, communications director for the Central Pennsylvania United Methodist Conference, said final planning, including selecting a neighborhood, will be done in the fall.

If You Have A Habit Of Following The Crowd, We Suggest The Best Crowd To Follow Is The Crowd Going To Church

Accent Smithsonian Shows Secretary's Scholarly Style

By Phil McCombs
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — Speaking at an official dinner last year, Smithsonian Secretary Robert McCormick Adams caused a slight, uncomfortable stir among the institution's Board of Regents by suggesting that "the lives of the homeless on the grates" and what "they carry with them in their packs of shopping bags" might make a suitable museum exhibit.

He went on to say that museums of the future must not merely collect objects but represent the world in a "cerebral, conceptual" way, coupling things "memorably, vividly, even grotesquely."

As an example, he recalled his shock on learning that people actually lived in hovels on a "mammoth, burning Manila garbage heap alongside Imelda Marcos's 3,000 pairs of shoes."

"Imagine an exhibit," he suggested, showing such "extremes of inequality."

Whoa!
"Some said it was inappropriate," recalls Ralph C. Rinzler, Adams's assistant secretary for public service, "but it seems to me entirely appropriate for a leading intellectual to say something arresting about new areas of policy and social responsibility."

The passion that Adams displayed that night was a revelation for some. It didn't quite fit his reputation as a cool analyst bent solely on shaping the vast, dusty sprawl of the Smithsonian Institution into an effective modern organization. No, here was something else altogether — but what?

"Graffiti as an art form, as well as a form of quasi-political protest," Adams continued, musing over possible exhibits. "Contemporary American Indians, in the desperate poverty of their reservation lives. ... The shrunken possibilities of old age, infirmity, or rural poverty. ..."

"This is only the beginning of what museums can continue to do."

In the five years since Adams took over the Smithsonian, the tweedy academic from Chicago has been accused of being boring, unemotional and antisocial.

It's been whispered that he's merely a "caretaker" chosen to consolidate the gains of his flamboyant predecessor S. Dillon Ripley, who, with access to a flood of federal money that has since diminished, built the institution into the world's largest and most unusual collection of museums. The Smithsonian has 135 million objects ranging from the Mercury capsules to George Washington's false teeth, and 5,400 employees including 600 scientists and scholars—many of international repute—working in fields as diverse as astrophysics, art and tropical biology.

But despite what one Smithsonian official says is a "blah" personal image, Adams is a man of great determination, energy and intellectual grasp who has set out to put his stamp on the place.

In the institution's 143-year history — an 1846 act of Congress founded the Smithsonian for the "increase and diffusion of knowledge" — there have been only nine secretaries. Adams has an unlimited contract, and plenty of time to ponder and proceed toward his goals.

At 62, Adams is a tall, rangy, slightly bowlegged man who looks and talks like a cross between Walt Disney and Walter Cronkite. He dresses sloppily by Washington standards, often has a clump of keys hanging from his belt like a janitor, and you get the feeling he'd just as soon hop into a Jeep and be off into the desert.

"He tends to be kind of a loner," says Bob Braidwood, professor emeritus of the University of Chicago's anthropology department, who gave Adams his start in that field and in 1950 took him on the first of Adams's many desert expeditions in the Middle East.

Indeed, the Smithsonian secretary does not disguise his discomfort at socializing. Mostly it's a duty for him, and he's required to do a good bit of it. At the opening of an exhibition celebrating the first Federal Congress of the United States at the National Portrait Gallery in March, Adams helped Sen. Robert Byrd and former chief justice Warren Burger cut the ribbon, then quickly faded into the depths of the exhibit — alone — to study the paintings while everyone else gathered in little clumps to drink and talk.

"It's wonderful," he said, pausing before John Singleton Copley's portrait of John Adams. "This might be the only chance I get to see it."

At other events — the arrival by Concorde from France of the Declaration of the Rights of Man and other revolutionary documents in April, for example — Adams has appeared distracted, even sad.

But if you sit down with him and get him talking on something he's interested in — Fernand Braudel and the Annaliste school of French historians, or the Ur III-Isin-Larsa period of Babylonian history — he brightens right up.

Smithsonian officials in charge of fund-raising — Assistant Secretary for External Affairs Thomas Lovejoy among them — have tried to coach Adams in the charm department, but there's also something undeniably refreshing in his disinterest in toadying up.

He's "a ruminative animal," as a colleague puts it, a guy who simply prefers the life of the mind over putting on any show of amity with French officials on the tarmac at Dulles Airport.

"This is a man who has a genuine passion for ideas," says University of Chicago President Hannah Gray, who made Adams provost there before he came to Washington. "He's constantly renewing his interests and extending that realm of ideas."

Which is perfect for the Smithsonian. It's traditional for the secretary to be an active scholar. Ripley continued working as an ornithologist even while adding six new museums and transforming the Mall into a major tourist attraction.

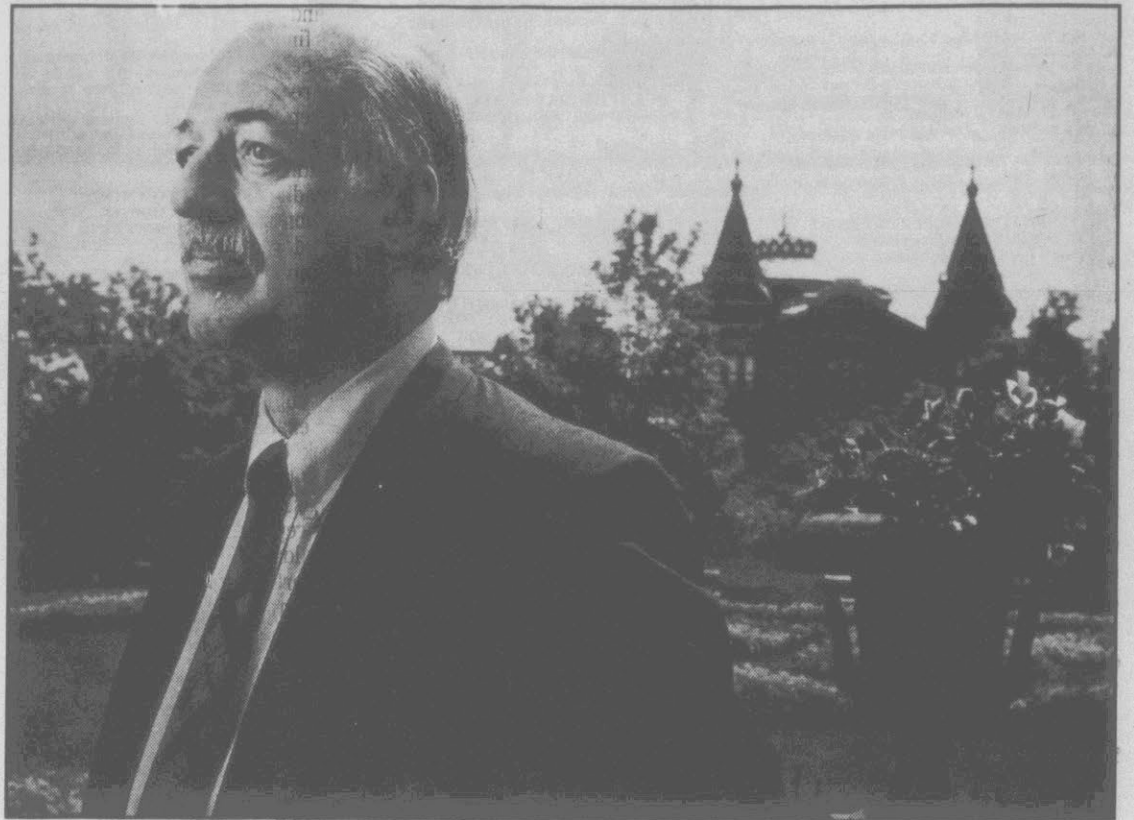

As one observer notes, however, at core Ripley was "full of guile and chutzpah, an opportunist far more than a scientist, though he took great pains to keep his scientific credentials dusted off."

Adams, by contrast, appears to be the real thing. In addition to his Smithsonian work, he teaches from time to time at Johns Hopkins University on the impact of European expansion on the rest of the world since 1500, chairs the Commission on Behavioral and Social Sciences and Education of the National Research Council, and is researching and writing a book on the history of technology.

His books on Mesopotamian settlement patterns — "Heartland of Cities," "Land Behind Baghdad," "The Uruk Countryside" — are respected in scholarly circles.

His thoughtful bent has set a new tone at the top of the Smithsonian.

"I've been in this field 25 years," says Tom Freudenheim, whom Adams brought in from the Worcester Art Museum to oversee the Smithsonian's 14 museums, "and this is the first time I've ever been in a job where there's a significant amount of intellectual content in the discourse. This is not Bob Adams's personal show."

Robert McCormick Adams, Smithsonian secretary for five years, is pictured on the grounds

Ripley, by contrast, operated as "the autocrat at the breakfast table," according to John F. Jameson, assistant secretary for administration, who has been at the Smithsonian three decades. "Adams is very open, very approachable. He likes having a good argument."

When he took over, Adams realized that most people regarded the museums on the Mall as exciting places to spend a weekend with the kids. But he saw something else — outdated exhibits, intellectually shabby presentations, worn-out themes. Natural History, with its splendid animal dioramas, had somehow missed the "whole revolution of modern biology."

A popular exhibit at American History — the first installment of "A Material World" — was "light" fare. Arts and Industries, he felt, might profitably be replaced by an experimental museum. At Air and Space, the most popular museum in the world, he wanted to avoid any addition that would amount to "just another big barn where you put a bunch of air and space vehicles."

"Natural History is a terrible problem," he says, "because it's such a giant museum, and its exhibits are by all odds the most antiquated — you can't find anything on plate tectonics in there, on the fundamental change in our understanding of the way the continents have shifted over the years."

Not only that, the marvelous old building itself, which opened March 17, 1910, is so antiquated that Adams has had to ask Congress for $128 million over 10 years just to install adequate heating and air conditioning.

"There's no way around it," he reluctantly told a congressional oversight committee.

While nobody thought of Adams as a bricks-and-mortar man like Ripley, it now appears that — with strong congressional backing — the Smithsonian will build on the Mall a National Museum of the American Indian, based on the Heye Foundation's collection of artifacts.

As soon as he got the lay of the land, Adams began diverting more funds to scientific research, and at the same time hiring people he thought would take the museums in new directions.

He brought in Frank Talbot, an ichthyologist and specialist in the life of coral reefs from the California Academy of Sciences, to revamp Natural History.

Parents Send 'Money' Letter To Kids

Dear Abby: While going through some files, my husband ran across this copy of a letter we sent to our children seven years ago. Since that time they have all married and purchased their own homes, without any help from us. He thought you might be interested in seeing this and knowing that it has worked well for our family. — Rose E. Stervinou, Rockwall, Texas

TO: Jeannine
Greg Michelle
Renee
FROM: Mom and Dad
DATE: Feb. 22, 1982
SUBJECT: MONEY

Since the subject of loaning money has come up from at least half of you this week, we decided we would let you know our feelings about this.

We will not loan any of you money except in the case of a bona fide emergency (severe illness, accident, etc.). Each of you has been blessed with intelligence, good health, and the ability to earn a living. What you choose to do with your time and money is up to you.

This decision stems from what we think is "common sense," and observing how others have handled this situation and the problems that can occur when, for one reason or another, the money is not repaid. It causes hard feelings between parent and son/daughter and between siblings.

Dear Abby

This probably puts us somewhere between minus 10 and 0 on your popularity scale, but we feel this is the best thing for our family. We love each of you dearly and want to do for you what we think will benefit you most in your lifetime.

Dear Rose: Thanks for sharing a sensible, no-nonsense idea.

Dear Abby: I have a problem that you may feel is too trivial to print, but I'm hoping your love of animals will prevail.

Our family is moving nearly 3,000 miles cross-country, and our problem is our cat. He gets deathly sick while riding in a car — even a 15-mile trip to the vet is a terrible experience for him. I'm not sure if it's the motion, or just plain claustrophobia. The tranquilizers prescribed by the vet make him sick.

I've tried covering his carrier to keep him from seeing out. I've tried putting butter on his paws so he would be preoccupied with lapping it off. I've tried taking him for short rides (a couple of miles each day) to get him accustomed to riding. No luck.

He cannot travel in the carrier. He broke his teeth biting on the door of the metal carrier. (That's when I began to think he might be claustrophobic.)

Abby, this cat is 6 years old and is truly our baby. He's strictly an indoor cat; he never goes outside and is afraid of anything new, so I wouldn't even consider flying him in a plane. I know there are cat psychologists, but none within 200 or 300 miles of our tiny town.

Has anyone had experience with a cat traveling a long distance in a motor home? Perhaps the larger area would make a difference? If there are any cat lovers out there with any ideas, please help. I am desperate for suggestions. — Cat Lover In Maine

Dear Cat Lover: Your vet should be able to provide you with a tranquilizer your cat can tolerate. And if there are any cat lovers out there who have successfully handled this problem, I hope they'll write to me.

Dear Abby: Re those TV viewers who "mute" the commercials: Will you please tell me why the commercials have to be so much louder than the regular program? — Annoyed In Sweetwater, Texas

Dear Annoyed: Because the sponsors want to be sure the viewers can hear the commercials while they're running to the fridge.

If you would like to write to Abby, send your letter to Abigail Van Buren, P.O. Box 6940, Los Angeles, CA 90069. For a personal, non-published reply, enclose a self-addressed stamped envelope.

Children Encouraged To Read Through New Television Club

By Martha Waggoner
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH, N.C. — Loren Stutts of UNC Public Television is still waiting to hear from a few good counties — Swain, Graham, Polk, Mitchell, Avery, Ashe, Alleghany, Tyrrell, and Hyde, to be exact.

Those are the only counties from which 5- to 8-year-olds have not joined the Reading Rainbow book club — a club formed to encourage children to read six books by Aug. 15 and send in short book reports.

The response has been overwhelming, said Ms. Stutts, assistant program manager.

"We were caught a little unprepared" by the response, she said. "You always hope something like this will work this well. We had not really expected the response we have received."

More 4,200 kits have been mailed out and more are being sent. But that doesn't mean all will return book reports. Some of the kits went to teachers and librarians who had children in a summer reading program.

Even Ms. Stutts isn't sure the high response means children are more interested in reading, but she's hopeful.

"It's just like when summer came around, my parents were on me to do something constructive. So I might do it, not on my own, but just to get my parents off my back," she said. "But I hope it's a good indication that children are reading more."

Children must read six books and write a five- to six-line book report briefly describing the book and what they liked about the book. The program officially began June 12; but by that time, Ms. Stutts had already received all six book reports from some children.

Parents have called and asked if they can read the book to younger children, ask the children about the book and write down their response. That's fine, Ms. Stutts said.

"It seems important that the child do the reading, rather than write the book report," she said. "The main goal is to have children read and enjoy reading."

"Reading Rainbow," a 30-minute television show, is the most widely watched children's program from the University of North Carolina Center for Public Television, she said. The show, hosted by LeVar Burton, features a children's picture book and then does segments on the book's subject.

For example, a recent show about a book on dinosaurs included segments that told more about the animals.

The reports are not being graded, but children do receive a small gift and a certificate.

Marian James, assistant director of the Pender County Library, is one of those who sent off for several reading kits. She says the program will be helpful for her library, which is in a temporary location this summer.

"The library used it as a real life-saver," Ms. James said. "We had almost decided we wouldn't have a reading program this summer. It's really worked out great."

Although the television program and the book club can encourage children to read, an interest in books is still mostly up to parents, she said.

"They do watch TV, so to have something like this on TV is good," she said. "Here's a medium that everybody wants to participate in. And here is something that says through that medium, 'but books are wonderful, too.' Here's a medium that everybody participates in, but it encourages this reading."

"I consider it an important adjunct, but it will never be what parental encouragement is."

BROILERS: The North Carolina fob dock quoted price on broilers for this week's trading was 56.25 cents, based on full truck load lots of ice pack USDA Grade A sized 2 1/2 to 3 pounds birds. 36 percent of the loads offered have been confirmed for a preliminary weighted average of 53.90. The market is lower and the live supply is fully adequate for a light demand. Average weights mostly desirable. Estimated slaughter of broilers and fryers in North Carolina Friday was 2,397,000, compared to 2,040,000 last Friday.

HENS: Market 2 cents higher. Supply fully adequate for a good demand. The undertone for next week's trading is weak. Prices paid per pound for hens over seven pounds at farm for Wednesday, Thursday and Friday was 18 cents.

GRAIN: No. 2 yellow shelled corn 4 to 5 cents lower, 2.47-2.62 in East and mostly 2.62-2.72 in the Piedmont; No. 1 yellow soybeans 8 to 24 cents lower at 6.09-6.34 in East and mostly 5.95-6.20 in the Piedmont; wheat mostly 3.42-3.47; new crop corn 2.04-2.40; new crop soybeans 5.24-5.55; P.I.K. certificates steady and ranged from 100 to 105 percent of face value.

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market lapsed into an erratic decline today, responding to a stronger-than-expected report on the employment situation.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials slipped 38 to 2,661.23 in the first half hour of trading.

Losers outnumbered gainers by more than 2 to 1 in nationwide trading of New York Stock Exchange-listed issues, with 314 up, 724 down and 455 unchanged.

Volume on the Big Board came to 28.19 million shares as of 10 a.m. on Wall Street.

The Labor Department reported this morning that the civilian unemployment rate dropped to 5.2 percent in July from 5.3 percent the month before.

Nonfarm payroll employment increased by 169,000, on top of an upward-revised 250,000 gain in June.

The figures were interpreted as evidence of persistent strength in the economy, suggesting that the Federal Reserve might see little need to relax its credit policy further any time soon.

Interest rates jumped in the credit markets. Prices of long-term government bonds fell more than $10 for each $1,000 in face value, pushing their yields back above 8 percent.

The reaction in the stock market was less clear-cut, however. While the news was a negative for interest rates, brokers said, it also helped to ease recent worries about a possible recession.

Farm Aid Approved

The measure is expected to meet with the approval of the White House. Agriculture Secretary Clayton Yeutter informed lawmakers this week that an aid package costing less than $900 million would be acceptable.

In general, the legislation makes farmers eligible for federal aid if they have losses because of drought, flooding, freezing, high winds or similar severe weather. The measure also provides for payments to livestock producers facing drought-related feed and water shortages for their herds.

The legislation is aimed primarily at farmers in portions of the Great Plains and western Corn Belt, which have not recovered from the parching drought of 1988, and in the South, where flooding has destroyed rice and cotton crops.

The bill has different eligibility standards for various crops but in all cases producers would receive payments designed to cover 65 percent of their lost income from crop losses.

In most instances, the projected income levels will be based on federal crop subsidies or average market prices farmers would have received had they not suffered losses.

Heat Kills Pigs

Workers loaded about 10 dead pigs into a pick-up truck for removal this morning.

Hargett said the yard on N.C. 11 was a receiving station for pseudo-rabies hogs from area farmers. The pigs then go to packing plants around the Southeast.

According to Dr. Michael J. House, a veterinarian with Animal Hospital of Pitt County in Greenville, pseudo-rabies is a viral disease common to pigs, cattle and other mammals. But he said the disease was "just a misnomer" and has nothing to do with rabies.

The disease is non-fatal to adult hogs and does not affect the quality of the meat, House said.

But Carter said he questioned the quality of the meat after seeing the dead pigs. Some of the live pigs were weak and disoriented, Carter said.

"I just had no idea we were susceptible to eating this kind of garbage," the mayor said.

George O'Neil, a livestock inspector for the N.C. Department of Agriculture, said he permits the pigs to be sold twice a week as required. He said the yard received 11,000 pigs on Tuesday.

Pitt County and Greenville health officials could not be reached today regarding any potential health hazards from the dead animals.

North State Stays Alive In Hudson

HUDSON — Adrian Jones hurled no-hit ball over the final four innings and took advantage of three errors on the same play to score the winning run as Greenville North State edged South Caldwell 4-3 Thursday to stay alive in the North Carolina Little League state baseball tournament in Hudson.

North State, the District 4 champion, is scheduled to play District 5 champion Canton this afternoon at 5. Canton eliminated District 3 Mint Hill by a 6-5 count Thursday.

Also Thursday, defending state champion Cherryville, representing District 1, defeated District 2 champion East Rowan 1-0 behind Tyrone Young's one-hitter. Young tossed a four-hitter in the opening round when Cherryville defeated North State 10-3.

East Rowan drops into the losers' bracket of the double-elimination tournament and will face the North State-Canton winner Saturday at 2. Cherryville is the lone remaining unbeaten team and awaits the survivor of the losers' bracket to play for the championship.

The state champion advances to the Southern Regionals in St. Petersburg, Fla. later this month.

Jones, a right-hander, yielded four hits and three runs the first two innings but settled down to blank South Caldwell the rest of the way, fanning seven over the last three innings. He struck out the side in the fourth and fanned two batters in each of the fifth and sixth innings.

He finished with 11 strikeouts while walking six.

Davey Edwards, who tossed a no-hitter with 16 strikeouts in his previous outing, took the loss. He gave up eight hits and walked two.

North State got on the board first with two runs in the first inning on singles by Matt Dellasega and Jones, a passed ball and a slow roller to short by James Ebron that was booted.

South Caldwell answered with two runs in the first on singles by Chad Hanes and Gary Crouch, a walk and a single by Marty Hayes then took a 3-2 lead in the second on Crouch's RBI single.

Chris Grover connected for a solo homer in the third for a 3-3 tie. The round-tripper was the first surrendered by Edwards in his Little League career.

Jones scored the winning run in the fifth when he hit a looping single to left, went to second when the ball was mishandled, advanced to third on an errant throw to second and scored when the throw to third was wild.

Police Are Blamed In Soccer Deaths

LONDON (AP) — A "failure of police control" led to the deaths of 95 soccer fans in Britain's worst sports disaster, a government report said today.

The 71-page report said authorities at the Hillsborough Stadium in Sheffield, England, failed to recognize how big their job would be or how to cope with problems when they developed during the opening minutes of an FA Cup semifinal last April 15.

Drinking by "an unruly minority" of fans and "confused and inadequate" signs and tickets issued by the clubs aggravated the problem, the report said. But it placed the primary blame squarely on top police officials.

"Neither their handling of problems on the day nor their account of it in evidence showed the qualities of leadership expected of their rank," the report said. "The main reason for the disaster was the failure of police control."

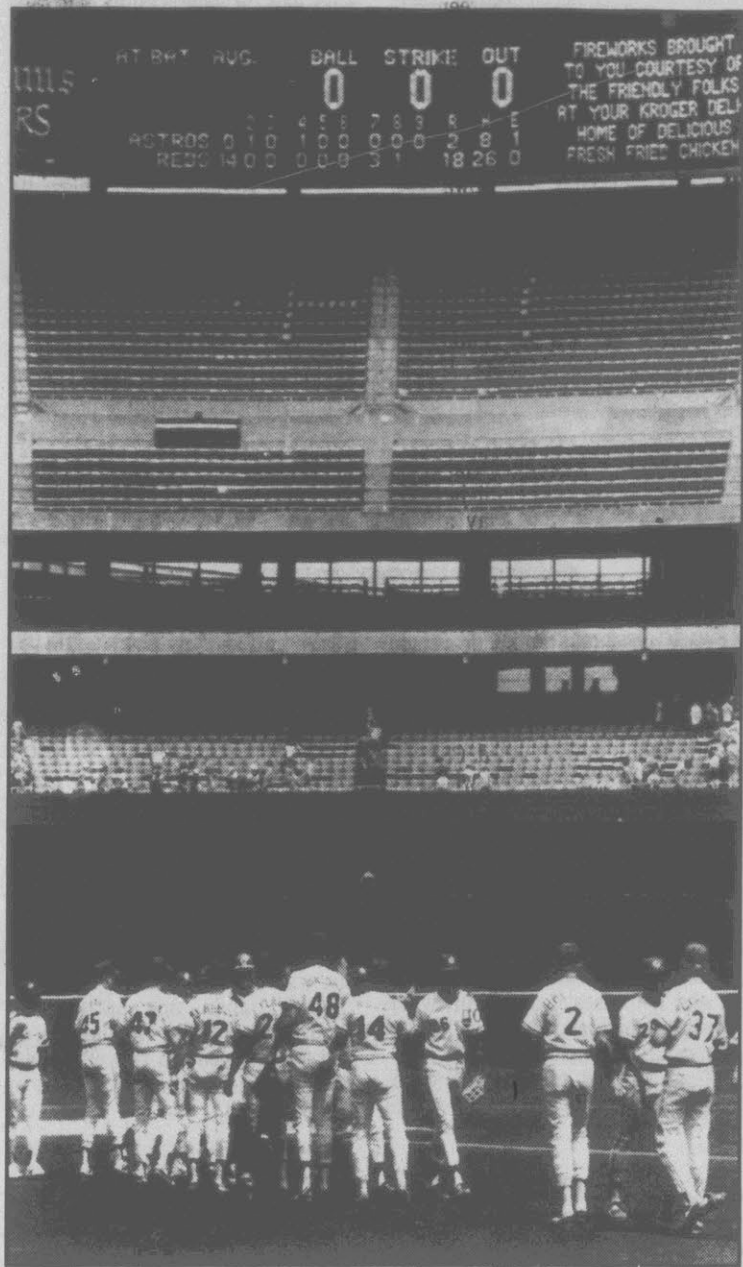

Shortly after the report was released, the top police officer for the Sheffield area, South Yorkshire Chief Constable Peter Wright, submitted his resignation.

"I accepted full responsibility for police action in this event," Wright said.

To try to avoid a recurrence of the tragedy, the report recommended a 15 percent reduction in standing room at all English soccer stadiums and better safety procedures at the perimeter fences installed to keep rowdy fans off the fields. Those fences turned into death traps at Hillsborough.

The report was sent for review to Britain's Home Office, where Secretary Douglas Hurd said officials had failed to learn from past stadium problems, including the Heysel riot in Brussels and the Bradford fire that killed more than 50 people.

"The tragedy would not have occurred if lessons learned in the past had been properly applied," Hurd said. "It is for everyone concerned

The Cincinnati Reds gather after record-setting day

One For The Books Reds Erupt For 16 Hits, 14 Runs In 1st

CINCINNATI — Cincinnati Reds pitcher Tom Browning, in the record books for the perfect game he pitched last season, now is part of a major league hitting record.

Browning wasn't even aware of his role in Cincinnati's record-setting first inning against the Houston Astros on Thursday. In scoring 14 runs, Cincinnati had 16 hits, including 12 singles and nine consecutive hits, the last by Browning. Seven players had two hits in the inning, another record.

Browning didn't see much of the record inning. He spent his time in the stairwell between the dugout and the locker room enjoying the air conditioning while the game went on upstairs in sweltering 85-degree weather.

"All I knew was I had a 14-run lead and (manager) Pete Rose told me I'd have to concentrate more on getting people out. It's easy to let your mind wander with a 14-run lead."

Rose needn't have worried. The Reds won 18-2.

Browning said he heard Rose tell Luis Quinones to bunt after Mariano Duncan had walked to open the first inning. Quinones beat out the bunt for the first of the record-setting barrage. "I heard the cheering," said Browning, who took advantage of the 38-minute half inning to change his uniform. "I did see (Ken) Griffey's homer go out."

The first eight Reds reached base before Browning grounded out. The Reds then got eight more hits in a row off Bob Forsch, who came on in relief after starter Jim Clancy who gave up seven runs and six hits. Then Browning got his hit, extending the string to a record nine in a row, before Forsch retired Duncan and Quinones to end the inning.

"I never expected to be in the record book for hitting," Browning said. "That's amazing."

The Reds set or tied five modern major-league records in the inning.

"It was contagious. Everybody was a superstar today," said Reds outfielder Rolando Rames, who got two of his four hits in the first inning.

"Everybody was hitting each other on the hands. We couldn't wait to get up to hit. I've never seen anything like it."

The Reds, in fifth place in the National League West, have had little to cheer about this year but there was plenty of merriment in the locker room.

"It was amazing," said Cincinnati infielder Todd Benzinger, another two-hit contributor in the first inning. "I looked up at the scoreboard clock after the inning and thought, 'This is going to be a pretty long day.'"

Rookie catcher Jeff Treadway had a home run among his four hits for the day, two of which came in the first. "When you're hacking, things just fall in sometimes. We only had one walk. After we started hitting, nobody wanted to take anything. We were all just hacking away."

Reed, Rames, Benzinger, Luis Quinones, Eric Davis, Ken Griffey and Ron Oester all had two hits in the inning. The previous record of six batters with two hits in an inning was set in 1883 by the NL club in Chicago.

The 16 hits broke the major-league record of 14, which the Boston Red Sox set in 1953 against Detroit. The 12 singles in one inning broke the mark of 11 set by St. Louis against Cincinnati in 1925 and matched by Boston against Detroit in 1953.

Cincinnati also tied two major-league marks, with seven players getting at least three hits in the game and six scoring two or more runs in a game.

The nine straight hits off Forsch tied the NL record for most consecutive hits off one pitcher. Erskine Mayer of the Philadelphia Phillies set the mark in 1913.

Houston manager Art Howe said the Reds had luck, as well as good timing, on their side.

"Most of them were seeing-eye hits and loopers," Howe said. "They just fell in. It was one of the strangest innings I've ever seen."

Davis, who singled and doubled in the first inning, said, "It was just one of those things. We got the pitches and the holes opened."

In his brief stint, Clancy's earned-run average ballooned from 4.43 to 5.04. Forsch, who gave up 18 hits and 10 runs in seven innings, saw his ERA jump from 4.12 to 4.80.

Howe found a silver lining, praising Forsch for saving the Houston bullpen for the second-place Astros' upcoming series against first-place San Francisco.

Memphis St. Football Avoids Death Penalty

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MEMPHIS, Tenn. — Memphis State's new football coach says he's ready to get down to work, now that he knows for sure he has a program to work on.

Until Thursday, Memphis State football faced the possibility of a two-year death penalty from the NCAA. But the NCAA decided on three years probation instead.

"We can now pick it up and go on from here," Coach Chuck Stobart said after the penalty was announced.

The NCAA said a Tiger player was overpaid for a summer job supplied by a booster and then lied about it to investigators.

Investigators also said the player was advised by former coach Charlie Bailey to give misleading information.

Bailey resigned from Memphis State in May, and the NCAA said he must meet with the association's Committee on Infractions if he takes an athletic job with another NCAA school in the next five years.

The NCAA could have shut down Memphis State's football program for up to two years because the Tiger football and basketball programs have been on probation within the last five years.

Stobart said he was concerned about that when he replaced Bailey in June but was optimistic that a lesser penalty would be handed down.

The NCAA said it found no pattern of wrongdoing at Memphis State and noted that the university voluntarily replaced Bailey and suspended the involved player.

Besides the probation, the NCAA also barred Memphis State from bowl visits this year and from TV appearances in 1990, and took away four football scholarships for 1990-91. It also cut from 85 to 55 the number of visits allowed for recruits.

Memphis State hasn't been in a bowl game since 1971, but that doesn't keep the players from dreaming, Stobart said.

"I'm sure we have seniors on our team who had aspirations of going to a bowl game before they finish their college careers," he said.

In resigning from Memphis State, Bailey said he made a mistake involving summer employment. He did not elaborate and the university has refused to discuss the matter.

The player involved in the investigation was paid $10 an hour to run errands for a university booster while co-workers drew $5 an hour for similar work, the NCAA said.

Stobart, formerly the associate head coach at Southern California, said the most bothersome sanction may well be the limit on recruiting visits.

"We're going to have to be selective in the young men we bring in for visits," he said.

He noted that Memphis State already has the NCAA limit of 95 football players on scholarship and only 14 of them are seniors. The NCAA sanctions limit the university to 21 scholarships next year.

Memphis State's football and basketball programs were placed on NCAA probation from 1986 to 1988 because of mishandling of student grants to athletes.

Bailey came to Memphis State in 1985 and led the Tigers to a 6-5 record last year, the first winning season since 1983.

The NCAA death penalty has been invoked only once, against Southern Methodist's football program in 1987. SMU also decided against fielding a team last year when the NCAA barred it from playing any games at home.

TOKYO — Call it football diplomacy.

At a time when U.S.-Japan trade tensions are high, "ko-ta-back" Joe Montana is leading the Super Bowl champion San Francisco 49ers in an effort to export football to Japan.

And the months-long promotion of this high-level mission is culminating this week in a flurry of commercials, billboards and sponsor hype.

Corporate executives in three-piece suits, wearing white "American Bowl '89" caps, have stood by on the sidelines with hands folded at each of the 49ers and Los Angeles Rams practices this week for Sunday's NFL preseason game. The game is a non-profit venture, they claim, but they are watching it with the scrutiny of speculators looking to invest in a new market.

"Since Japan has become so strong economically and there is a lot of friction with the U.S., we'd like to promote better understanding between our two countries," Gyo Ishiguro said through an interpreter wearing a black and silver Los Angeles Raiders cap.

Ishiguro works for the culture and sports promotion department of Yomiuri Shimbun, the world's largest daily newspaper with a circulation of 9.3 million and a co-sponsor of the game.

"Since football is very popular in the States, we'd like to show it to the Japanese public," he said. "It's modern, it requires a lot of knowledge and it's exciting physically, so it has the potential to be a big sport here."

Spreading the word about touchdown passes and safety blitzes translates to greater publicity for Yomiuri Shimbun, Toshiba and Nippon Television, the major sponsors. This is a country where corporate sponsorship has mushroomed far beyond American levels and sports and business are highly intertwined.

The paper already owns the widely beloved Yomiuri Giants baseball team, whose home is the Tokyo Dome, site of Sunday's game. All 12 major league teams have corporate ownership and names, and are run

Four To Be Inducted

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CANTON, Ohio — Mel Blount, Terry Bradshaw, Willie Wood and Art Shell are to be inducted in the Pro Football Hall of Fame this weekend as the Buffalo Bills face the Washington Redskins in the annual Hall of Fame exhibition game.

Blount didn't fit the cornerback mold when he was picked by Pittsburgh for that position in 1970, his college coach recalls.

"Up to that time, most people felt a cornerback had to be short to be mobile and agile enough for the position," said Al Tabor, Blount's coach at Southern University.

"Mel was the first big cornerback. That's probably why he wasn't drafted higher," Tabor said.

The Steelers picked the 6-foot-3, 205-pound Blount in the third round of the college draft. He went on to finish his 14-year career with 57 interceptions, setting a team record and placing him seventh on the all-time list.

"Every player coming out of college thinks he's the No. 1 pick, and I was no different," Blount said. "But I was happy just to be drafted."

Former Steelers quarterback Terry Bradshaw played the same 14 seasons for Pittsburgh as Blount. The two own rings for victories in the 1975, 1976, 1979 and 1980 Super Bowls.

Wood, a Green Bay Packers defensive back, becomes the 18th Packer and fifth free agent to make the hall. He intercepted 48 passes in his 11 seasons with Green Bay and led the NFL in punt returns in 1961.

"When I think about Willie Wood, I think about how many plays he made to turn a game around," former Packer linebacker Dave Robinson said. "He was just a shy person, just a small guy, an average guy, but when he made those types of plays, it would fire the team up."

Shell, an Oakland and Los Angeles Raiders offensive tackle, had 15 seasons with the Raiders starting in 1968 when he often weighed in at 300 pounds or more.

Kelly Places In Jr. Olympic Swimming

David Kelly of Greenville finished fourth in the 50-yard freestyle event in the 13-14 age group at the North Carolina Swimming Long Course Age Group Championships held in High Point this past weekend.

Kelly, 14, finished the event in a time of 27.14 seconds. He also placed sixth in the 100-yard breaststroke with a time of 1:18.40.

Six other members of the Greenville Swim Club participated in the meet, but failed to place. They included Jeffrey Carstarphen, Kenny Ferebee, David Simo, Johnny Carstarphen, Trey Stroud and Josh Glienke.

This weekend, the Greenville Swim Club will travel to Goldsboro seeking to regain the East Carolina Swim League Championship title from the host team in the summer's final meet. Greenville won the title in 1987, but Goldsboro is the current defending champion.

MacKenzie One Shot Back At Hogan Classic

DALLAS, Tex. — Will MacKenzie fell from first to second place after shooting a 79 Thursday at the Ben Hogan Junior Golf Classic at Las Colinas Tournament Players Course.

MacKenzie led the tournament after two rounds, thanks to opening round of 74 and 70.

MacKenzie's 223 total is seven shots better than the rest of the field. The tournament concludes play today.

Powell Finishes Second In Tournament

CHAPEL HILL — Greenville's Paige Powell, seeded second in the North Carolina Tennis Association's Junior Closed Tournament, finished in second place in the Girls' 16 age group Thursday.

Powell bowed to third seeded Shannon Clement of Southern Pines in the championship match, 6-3, 6-1.

Clement earlier defeated Cara White of Henderson, the tournament's top seed. White took third place overall, downing Daniella Marx of Goldsboro in the consolation event.

Lowie Joins Expansion Timberwolves

ST. PAUL, Minn. (AP) — The Minnesota Timberwolves have acquired guard Sidney Lowe, who once played for Timberwolves coach Bill Musselman in the Continental Basketball Association.

Lowe joined the NBA expansion team Wednesday when the Charlotte Hornets did not match the offer sheet the Timberwolves had presented to Lowe 15 days ago. "The deadline has passed, and we are not going to match the offer," Charlotte general manager Carl Scheer said Wednesday night.

The Timberwolves presented an offer sheet to Lowe believed to be for a two-year, $150,000 contract, the St. Paul Pioneer Press Dispatch reported Thursday. The Hornets had 15 days to match the offer or lose the rights to Lowe.

Lowe said he hadn't heard from Scheer on Wednesday, but said, "I heard it through the grapevine. I'm going to be a Timberwolf."

Lowe said he was happy to be reunited with Musselman. "I think it's to my advantage to be with Minnesota because the coach understands my style and I guess a lot of people don't."

"I'm not a big scorer. I do a lot of little things to help the team win. Coach Musselman understands that, and I'm comfortable with his system."

Timberwolves president Bob Stein said Wednesday night when told that Charlotte would not match the offer, "If it turns out that's what happens we will be happy to have signed a player we wanted to sign."

Broncos' Dorsett Suffers Knee Injury

GREELEY, Colo. (AP) — Tony Dorsett, a four-time Pro Bowler and the NFL's No. 2 career rusher, may have suffered ligament or cartilage damage when his knee gave way during a Denver Broncos' workout, and officials fear it could be a career-ending injury.

The 35-year-old Dorsett, who trails only retired Chicago Bears runner Walter Payton in NFL career rushing, was examined on Thursday by Broncos trainer Steve Antonopoulos and a team orthopedic surgeon. Dorsett's left knee gave way while he was running a pass pattern in shorts.

Broncos officials reserved judgment pending further tests — a sophisticated magnetic resonance imaging test — scheduled today in Denver.

"It's a little bit vague," Coach Dan Reeves said. "Until we do more tests, we won't know exactly the status of his knee. The knee is pretty stable and that's encouraging. But we do believe there is some damage in there."

"We realize we could be talking about his career, so we're being very careful."

Dorsett, entering his 13th NFL season, had just returned to the practice field on Wednesday after missing several days of workouts because of a pulled hamstring.

Worley, Steelers Ready To Talk

PITTSBURGH (AP) — With both sides apparently willing to compromise, the agent for first-round draft pick Tim Worley and Pittsburgh Steelers negotiator Jim Boston plan face-to-face contract talks this weekend.

Agent Harold "Doc" Daniels, of Los Angeles, and Boston talked by phone Thursday and will make arrangements Friday for an in-person negotiating session, Daniels said.

The Steelers would like to have the former Georgia running back in uniform for their preseason opener Aug. 12 against Washington, but Daniels said Thursday they must substantially improve their offer.

The Steelers' initial offer to the seventh overall pick in the NFL draft was $1.6 million over four years, the same salary given 1988 first-round pick Aaron Jones.

Daniels' initial demand was for $9.2 million over five years, or four times more than Steelers have ever paid a player.

Asked if the Steelers have sweetened their offer, Daniels said "they must be willing" to compromise if they are ready to sit down and talk.

Coach K: Ferry Decision Not A Ploy

DURHAM — Duke basketball coach Mike Krzyzewski says Danny Ferry did not choose to go to Italy merely as a ploy in negotiations with the Los Angeles Clippers.

Despite reports that Ferry was unhappy with his selection by the Clippers and further reports that he wants to ultimately hook up with his father, the general manager of the Washington Bullets, Krzyzewski said the decision had more to do with Ferry playing in Italy.

"It's something, even before the draft, that I was aware there was some interest there (in Italy)," Krzyzewski said. "In fact, there was interest a year ago when he was thinking of going pro. I would have to say that option has been on his mind for awhile."

Ferry contemplated leaving Duke following his junior season, 1987-88, when he considered offers from Messaggero Rome of the Italian basketball league. But Ferry opted to return for his senior season at Duke and was named the Atlantic Coast Conference Player of the Year for a second straight season.

Krzyzewski said Ferry did not consider Europe as a way to circumvent the draft and eventually play for his father, Bob.

"He never talked about that, nor did his dad mention that at all," Krzyzewski said. "I don't think that necessarily is the ultimate goal here. The ultimate goal is what's in his best interest."

"Any kid who graduated from, say Duke this year, has to get into choosing what's in their best interest. They look for what's going to be best for their development. There are a number of decisions made by each kid and I don't see Danny being any different."

Ferry said recently that he considered a year in Europe to be an excellent cultural experience for him.

Ferry announced this week that he had accepted a contract with Messaggero Rome, reported to be at $1 million.

"It takes a little bit of guts to do what he did," Krzyzewski said. "Danny (Ferry) is that type of person. It shows a lot of confidence. I'm proud of him for going through with it. I know he went through a lot of thinking. It's not any type of spur of the moment thing."

Krzyzewski said he had frequent conversations with Ferry since the 6-foot-10 All-America forward was the second selection in the June 27 NBA draft by the Los Angeles Clippers.

Under NBA rules, the Clippers retain Ferry's rights for one year after he returns from overseas. If the Clippers fail to sign Ferry following the second year, Ferry would again be placed in the draft pool. If he is not drafted, Ferry would become a free agent.

King Surprised By Her Streak

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BETHESDA, Md. — When things are going right for a golfer, the cup seems six feet wide and you can put your tee shot in the woods and still end up with a birdie.

Just ask Betsy King, who's playing so well this year that she has even astonished herself.

"My putting has probably been more consistent than anything," King said. "That surprises me because I used to think it was the weakest part of my game."

Every part of King's game is clicking this year. She has won five events, including the U.S. Women's Open, and has 15 top-10 finishes in 20 tournaments. She has won $503,794, already exceeding the single-season earnings record set in 1986 by Pat Bradley.

"It's been quite a year for me, a career year," King said. "This is the first year where I haven't fallen in any sort of slump."

As a result, King, 33, is playing with the belief that she simply cannot be beaten.

"My confidence level is fairly high," she said. "Golf is funny. Sometimes you can hit one shot badly and it messes you up. But when you have confidence, you can hit bad shots and still win tournaments."

King and 143 other players, including defending champion Ayako

Okamoto, were scheduled to begin play today in the Greater Washington Open, The 54-hole event at the 6,250-yard, par-71 Bethesda Country Club course offers $300,000 in prize money, including $45,000 to the winner.

While King gives much of the credit for her success to the lessons she receives from Ed Oldfield, Okamoto cites her steady frame of mind as the principle reason behind her constant presence in the top 10.

Okamoto, "angry" with the way she was playing, took a four-week trip to Japan this spring. She returned to win the Corning Classic and finish second in two other tournaments, and is currently sixth on the money list.

Eagles' Ryan Taking Time To Sightsee

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LONDON — He's known hereabouts as "Bad Buddy," the big-stomached, baseball-capped embodiment of an American football coach.

That, of course, is what Buddy Ryan does for a living. But this week in London, the coach of the Philadelphia Eagles has been playing another role as well — tourist.

On Wednesday night, Ryan went to see "Phantom of the Opera," one of the toughest theater tickets in London. On Saturday, he hopes to travel about 60 miles northeast of the capital to Newmarket and see the best of English thoroughbreds.

In between, Ryan is getting the Eagles ready for Sunday's NFL exhibition opener against the Cleveland Browns, the fourth annual American Bowl at Wembley Stadium.

"We've made time to see the sights of London, and I'm looking forward to going to the horse farms at Newmarket after our last practice Saturday," Ryan said. "Football is still the main thing for us here, but this is a reward for these guys. Our players have worked hard and earned it."

Unlike their usual training camp in West Chester, Pa., the Eagles don't have a curfew in London. They do have quite a following among the British fans, who have become increasingly knowledgeable about the sport.

A poll by a local football magazine last spring found the Eagles No. 3 in popularity among British fans, following Philadelphia's first playoff berth in seven years.

Their quarterback, Randall Cunningham, also has quite a fan club.

with an emphasis on the company's other operations.

Yoshiaki Tsutsumi, the world's richest man according to Forbes magazine, owns both the Seibu Railways transportation and resort group and the Seibu Lions baseball team. Robert Whiting, who has written two books on Japanese baseball, says that the day after the Lions manager complained of poor attendance, the stands were full.

"The word is you have to buy tickets to do business with him," Whiting said.

A team's primary function, according to the American-born author, is public relations.

"The Nippon Ham Fighters' main purpose in life is to sell pork," he said. "As long as they're on TV every day and in the morning papers, the company considers them a success."

Because of heavy corporate involvement, public interest in football is still hard to gauge.

"I know everyone is aware of this game, but we're 48 hours from kickoff and I honestly can't tell you if it's going over with people here," said Brad "The Animal" Lesley during the 49ers' 90-minute workout Friday. Lesley, a popular ex-pitcher in Japan and with the Cincinnati

Reds and Milwaukee Brewers, hosts a comedy show and a baseball show on television here.

Anyone who watches TV or uses the subway here hasn't been able to miss the hype. Advertisements depict a smiling Montana, a popular weekly TV show on baseball has been devoted to explaining football for the last five months, and commercials show a high-stepping Roger Craig ("ro-ja ku-ray-goo") racing down the field as a Japanese announcer's voice rises to a frenzied pitch.

The game was a quick sellout — two days or two hours, depending on which promoter is talking. But Lesley, working as an announcer for Japanese TV for this game and others, says the general public had no chance at the 43,000 tickets.

If the sponsors have their way, however, the Japanese will see football until they learn to like it.

The 49ers-Rams game will be broadcast by Nippon Television and shown live on 29 stations nationwide. The teams' league openers next month will be telecast on a tape-delayed basis, and they'll be seen at least once a month throughout the season.

Tewell's 63 Leads St. Jude By Two

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MEMPHIS, Tenn. — Brian Watts' write-in campaign is paying dividends at the Federal Express St. Jude Classic.

The 1987 NCAA champion from Oklahoma State failed in his attempt to secure a PGA Tour card last fall and has found himself relegated to foreign tournaments and PGA satellite events.

But Watts took a major step toward improving his status on Thursday, when he fashioned a 6-under-par 65 to stand two shots off the lead of Doug Tewell in the $1 million tournament at the 7,006-yard, par-71 Tournament Players Club course at Southwind.

While Tewell was fashioning a magnificent eight-birdie, no-bogey round that established a course record, Watts moved himself into contention and stole some of the spotlight.

If not for an extensive letter-writing campaign by Watts and his mother, the 23-year-old Oklahoman might have found himself at home this week.

"I have professional representation, but my mother and I personally have written a lot of letters in the last month and a half. I just got lucky," said Watts, who was 20th in last week's Buick Open after securing a sponsor's exemption.

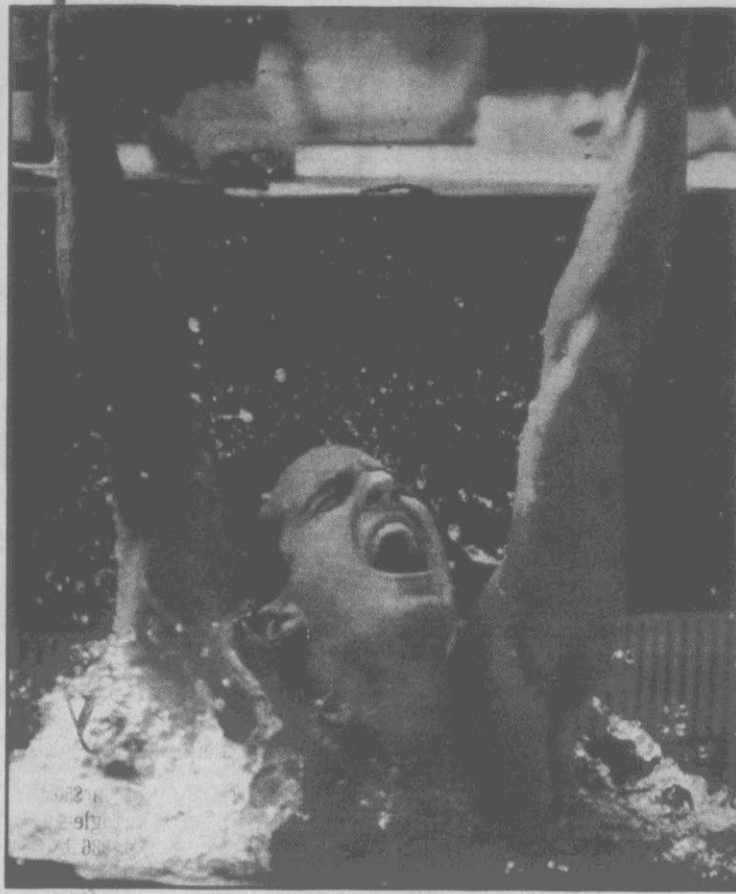

Watts made the turn on Thursday at 5-under-par 31 and had moved to seven under — one stroke off the lead — before taking a bogey-5 at 18.

Watts and veteran Ed Fiori shared third behind Jim Gallagher, who shot 64.

Gallagher started on the back nine and worked hard to make the turn at 2-under 33.

Pivotal to Gallagher's finish was a scrambling par on the par-4, 464-yard 17th hole. He drove into the rough, put a 3-iron approach into a bunker, pitched to within 12 feet and then made his putt for par.

Gallagher had a shot at the lead on No. 9, his final hole of the day, but pushed a 15-foot birdie putt to the right.

Mike Barrowman celebrates world record in 200 breaststroke

Barrowman Sets New World Record

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — Mike Barrowman has discovered the capricious nature of world records.

Barrowman set a world 200-meter breaststroke record of 2 minutes, 12.90 seconds during an eventful qualifying round Thursday in the U.S. National Swimming Championships.

Barrowman, of Rockville, Md., then came back in the evening and won the final in 2:14.74 at Southern Cal's Olympic Pool to earn a spot with the U.S. national team.

The previous world record of 2:13.34 was set in the same lane of the same pool by Canada's Victor Davis during his gold-medal performance in the 1984 Olympics.

"I dove in the water and my goggles filled up with water and I couldn't see out of one eye," Barrowman said after the qualifying heat. "My concentration was broken for the first six or eight strokes."

"I really felt I was pretty far off but people were screaming, so I really gave it all I had that last 50

(meters). I hit the finish wall and waited a few seconds. I heard people screaming and that got me pretty excited. I waited a few seconds and just prayed. I waited, took my cap off and turned around real slowly and just prayed.

"I saw that time on the board and I absolutely could not believe that that was the time. I was a lot faster than it felt. It did not feel like a great swim."

Barrowman, fourth in the 200 breaststroke in the 1988 Olympics at Seoul, was followed in the final by Nelson Diebel of Hightstown, N.J., in 2:15.40, and Kirk Stackle of Tenasquitos, Calif., in 2:16.30.

"I actually could have gone faster than I did this morning," Barrowman, a sophomore at Michigan, said. "It wasn't a perfect race. I'm very happy because this morning I accomplished my goal for the summer already. I'm very satisfied."

"I really felt no pressure tonight because I feel my whole season is successful because of this morning. However, this morning was not my best possible race."

Angels Back In First

Blank Seattle 6-0 To Move Ahead Of A's

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

American League teams are drawing a blank when they try to beat the California Angels.

The Angels pulled back into first place in the West after a two-day absence when Kirk McCaskill beat Seattle 6-0 with a seven-hitter Thursday night. It was his third shutout and the team's 15th of the season.

It was California's second consecutive shutout over Seattle, following Bert Blyleven's 7-0 win on Wednesday. The Angels have had back-to-back shutouts three times this season.

"The guys are throwing exceptionally well," California manager Doug Rader said. "Kirk got out of a couple jams and got stronger as the game went on."

The Angels moved a half-game ahead of Oakland in the West. The Athletics lost 6-4 to the Chicago White Sox.

"We can't control what Oakland does, so I just put my mind on shutting down the Mariners," McCaskill said. "I had heard Oakland lost, but it didn't affect my pitching at all. We're interested in what happens to Oakland, but we're more concerned about what we can do to help ourselves."

McCaskill, 11-6, yielded seven hits and struck out three en route to his third complete game and California's 24th of the season.

Johnny Ray and Devon White each hit two-run homers to support McCaskill.

Indians 4, Red Sox 2

Cleveland moved into second place in the East, 2½ games behind Baltimore, as right-hander Rod Nichols beat Boston for the second time in a week despite allowing 10 hits in seven-plus innings.

Cory Snyder drove in two runs with a single in the third inning after Joe Carter was walked intentionally to load the bases.

Nichols, 2-1, who edged the Red Sox 2-1 in Cleveland last Friday, was relieved by Doug Jones after Nick Esasky's two-run homer in the eighth, his third in three games. Jones got the last six outs for his 25th save.

The Indians, who haven't been as close as two games behind in the second half of a non-strike season since 1974, made it 3-0 in the fourth on three singles off Tom Bolton, 0-1, and a sacrifice fly by Jerry Browne.

Royals 5, Blue Jays 0

Tom Gordon continued his strong bid for Rookie of the Year honors with a three-hitter for his first career shutout and complete game for Kansas City, allowing only one Toronto runner to third base.

Gordon, 12-5, who struck out eight and walked two, allowed a single in the second and a double in the eighth to Fred McGriff and a seventh-inning single by Kelly Gruber. McGriff advanced to third on a groundout in the eighth before Gordon struck out pinch-hitter Lee Mazzilli.

Danny Tartabull led off the fourth with a single, the first hit off Jimmy Key, 7-13, who lost his seventh straight decision. Pat Tabler followed with a double and Bob Boone drove in Tartabull with a sacrifice fly for a 1-0 lead.

George Brett's RBI grounder and Tartabull's RBI single off reliever Frank Williams made it 3-0 in the fifth.

Yankees 8, Twins 1

New York hammered Rick Aguilera in his debut with Minnesota and Chuck Cary pitched a five-hitter for his second straight complete game.

Aguilera, acquired by the Twins from the New York Mets in the Frank Viola trade on Monday, gave up 10 hits and six runs in four-plus innings. It was his first start since July 9 last season.

Cary, 2-0, who pitched 16 consecutive scoreless innings before Greg Gagne homered in the ninth, struck out five and walked none.

Luis Polonia drove in three runs and Mel Hall had three of the Yankees' 15 hits.

Tigers 9, Rangers 6

Detroit and Texas each issued eight walks before Alan Trammell broke a 6-6 tie in the eighth inning with his second RBI single of the game.

Mike Heath started the eighth with a single and Gary Pettis walked. After Kenny Rogers relieved Cecilio Guante, 5-5, with a 2-0 count on Trammell, Rogers got the count to 3-2 before Trammell singled, scoring Heath with the go-ahead run.

Pinch-hitter Tracy Jones' two-run single completed the scoring for the Tigers, who overcame a 3-1 deficit with five runs in the sixth inning before the Rangers tied it 6-6 on Julio Franco's three-run homer in the seventh.

Mike Henneman, 8-4, worked the last 2 2-3 innings for the win.

White Sox 6, Athletics 4

Chicago ended Oakland's four-game winning streak on Ron Karkovice's first career triple, breaking a sixth-inning tie.

Dan Pasqua led off the inning with a walk off Bob Welch, 11-6, and scored on Karkovice's two-out triple off the wall in right-center. It was Karkovice's first three-base hit in 418 major league at-bats.

Rickey Henderson became the first American League player to steal 50 bases in nine different seasons when he swiped second in the fifth inning. Ty Cobb stole 50 bases eight times for Detroit, while Lou Brock had 12 50-steal seasons for the St. Louis Cardinals.

Donn Pall, 4-2, pitched 3 2-3 scoreless innings for the victory. Bobby Thigpen got the last three outs for his 23rd save.

NATIONAL LEAGUE

Dodgers 6, Giants 3

Orel Hershiser beat San Francisco for the 15th time in 19 career decisions, leading Los Angeles past the injury-plagued Giants at Dodger Stadium.

Eddie Murray sparked a four-run fourth inning with a two-run triple and Mike Marshall capped the rally with a two-run homer off Russ Swan as the Dodgers beat their longtime rival for the second straight game. It was Swan's major-league debut.

Hershiser, 13-8, allowed seven hits, struck out seven and walked two over seven innings. Jay Howell pitched the last two innings for his 22nd save, one more than he had last season.

Despite the loss, the first-place Giants maintained a one-game lead over Houston in the NL West.

Cardinals 6, Mets 5

Thompson hit a three-run home run, his third, in the third inning and had a run-scoring groundout in the first. Terry Pendleton had a solo homer for the Cardinals.

Cubs 2, Phillies 0

Greg Maddux, Mitch Williams and Les Lancaster combined on a six-hitter for Chicago's eighth shutout, leading the Cubs past Philadelphia at Veterans Stadium.

Williams relieved Maddux, 12-8, with one out and runners on first and third in the seventh inning. He struck out Len Dykstra and got Tom Herr to fly out.

Padres 6, Braves 5

Tony Gwynn helped visiting San Diego complete a three-game sweep with two run-scoring singles as the Padres beat slumping All-Star John Smoltz and Atlanta.

Gwynn's single broke a 4-4 tie in the fourth, scoring Bip Roberts, who had doubled and advanced to third on an infield grounder.

Gwynn's first-inning single also scored Roberts, who had walked and advanced to third on Roberto Alomar's single. Gwynn was 3-for-5 and raised his average to .337, second in the NL.

Smoltz, 11-9, lost his third decision in a row since the All-Star Game. He allowed six runs and 11 hits in seven innings, walking four. Smoltz has pitched at least seven innings in 16 of his last 18 games.

Pirates 1, Expos 0

Pinch-hitter Benny Distefano's run-scoring single with two outs in the 12th inning broke a scoreless tie and lifted Pittsburgh past Montreal at Three Rivers Stadium, cutting the Expos' lead over Chicago in the NL East to two games.

The victory broke a six-game Pirates' losing streak, and enabled Pittsburgh to avert a four-game sweep by the Expos.

Agassi Folds In 3rd Round

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

STRATTON MOUNTAIN, Vt. — Even his close friends are saying it: when the going gets tough, Andre Agassi gets going. And that's why he's out of the Volvo International Tennis Tournament.

After breezing through the first set in Thursday's third round, Agassi lost a tough second set tiebreaker and seemed to also lose the enthusiasm that envelops his game when he is at his best. He folded his tent in the third set and lost 1-6, 7-6 (7-3), 6-1 to 122nd-ranked David Wheaton.

That assured Agassi, No. 7 in the world and falling, of another week without a tournament victory this year after he won six last year and rocketed to No. 3.

The elimination of the top seed and defending champion put Michael Chang, the French Open winner and No. 2 seed, in the favorite's role for the $114,000 first prize. Chang ousted fellow Californian Derrick Rostagno, 6-3, 6-2.

No. 3 Brad Gilbert also survived with a 6-4, 7-6 (7-4) victory over Wally Masur of Australia.

No. 9 Jim Courier, No. 12 Robert Seguso and No. 14 and Jim Pugh were the other seeded players who made the quarters, along with unseeded Jim Grabb and Glenn Layendecker.

For Wheaton, 20, a pro for one year, his victory put him in the quarterfinals of a Grand Prix tournament for only the second time.

"It feels awesome that I beat a top-10 player," he said, "but I'm sorry it had to be Andre because we're close friends."

After the first set, victory was the farthest thing from Wheaton's mind. "He blew me off the court," Wheaton said. "I thought I was going to get routed."

But he said Agassi gave away several points in the tiebreaker, and in the third set "he didn't play very well and gave me a lot of free points."

Agassi's collapse brought to mind

West German Carl-Uwe Steeb's comment after Agassi's two recent Davis Cup losses. Steeb said there is a growing feeling that Agassi is a great frontrunner who can't come back when he's down.

"I definitely felt that," Wheaton said. "When he gets ahead he's just so good mentally. He's interested. But when he gets behind ... he kind of gets a little bored. ... I don't know if he wants to work as hard to come back."

"Last year when he was working his way up, he came back and won those matches. Now that he's the biggest thing in tennis, it's a little different."

"But I'm sure he'll change that as soon as he loses a few times. He'll start working harder at that."

Divorce Lawyer Found Innocent

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — Jurors found divorce attorney Marvin Mitchelson innocent in a civil lawsuit filed by a former client, who had accused the famed palimony lawyer of legal malpractice in her 1984 divorce from a millionaire.

The jury, which had deliberated since Tuesday afternoon, refused to award any monetary damages to Felicia Gordon.

The panel Thursday chided Mitchelson for failing to exercise the proper care and skill required of an attorney, but found his inattention had not injured Gordon or caused her emotional distress.

Gordon had claimed that Mitchelson's bungling and inattention to her case had cost her half of an estimated $9.9 million in community property.

Later, in the hallway, the two confronted each other. Mitchelson huffed away and Ms. Gordon addressed the cameras.

'Sam And Di' Opens With Gloss But Promise Of More To Come

By Kathryn Baker
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — Well, the earth didn't exactly move, but it wasn't bad, either. Maybe there'll be a second date.

Diane Sawyer opened ABC's ballyhooed new news series "PrimeTime Live" by announcing, "Sam and I are delighted to be here at last."

So, no doubt, were viewers, after weeks of publicity, starting with ABC's high-profile wooing of Ms. Sawyer from CBS earlier this year.

ABC News might have paid NBC News to launch the lame, amateurish "Yesterday, Today and Tomorrow" on Wednesday night. By comparison, "PrimeTime Live" on Thursday looked like prize-winning material. If you wanted a textbook case of what is a good news program and what is not, compare the two.

That's not to say the ABC program was perfect. The scattershot effect of the premiere glossed over some subjects. Granted, however, a live broadcast needs a few weeks to find its rhythm.

The major complaint was that after all that publicity about the pairing of two major media figures, the brashly opinionated Sam

Donaldson and the coolly intellectual Ms. Sawyer, it would have been nice to see more bantering between the two.

They almost got into it at the end of the program after a brief, taped interview with Nora Ephron, who wrote the hit movie "When Harry Met Sally ..." which turns on the question, can men and women just be friends? Donaldson was just launching into a theory about the profundity of male bonding and Ms. Sawyer was just about to take him on when time ran out.

But at a time when news shows are scratching and clawing for exclusive segments, the program made an impressive debut by landing live interviews with Thomas Root, the pilot who mysteriously drifted over the Atlantic before surviving a crash landing in the ocean, and with sitcom star Roseanne Barr, who has been unavailable to the press except for her editorial in The New York Times complaining about heavy-handed treatment by the media.

Ms. Sawyer wasn't exactly the toughest of interviewers, but she got Barr to admit, "I don't think they should leave me alone, or I'd have to go back to Burger King."

"PrimeTime Live" premieres just at a time when network news — notably "Yesterday, Today and Tomorrow" — is "re-creating" news events in order to lure viewers, a la the proliferating syndicated quasi-news magazines. Thankfully, ABC's new program clung to established news formats.

The most innovative thing about "PrimeTime Live" was its use of the studio audience, but it was much closer to Ted Koppel than Oprah or Donahue.

One segment was bumped because another segment that involved the studio audience answering the question of whether they would use force to rescue American hostages in Lebanon ran overtime.

A theoretical rescue plot was devised by two experts, former CIA Director Stansfield Turner and former Deputy Secretary of Defense Noel Koch. And former ABC newsman Charles Glass, who was held hostage in Beirut for two months, was in the studio audience to put in his two-cents' worth. Most of the few who rose to speak opposed use of force to rescue the hostages.

Chief correspondent Chris Wallace was seen live in Jerusalem, for no apparent purpose other than a backdrop, and the show's other correspondent, Judd Rose, was not in evidence.

"PrimeTime Live" doesn't threaten to make journalistic history, but Ms. Sawyer and Donaldson might have some chemistry going once they get past the butterflies of the premiere and settle into the routine.

Senator Says Cable TV Study 'Flawed'

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — A congressional study showing that cable TV charges have increased 29 percent since federal regulation ended three years ago is "badly flawed," a senator says.

The General Accounting Office, an investigative arm of Congress, presented the report to the telecommunications subcommittee of the House Energy and Commerce Committee on Thursday. The panel is trying to determine whether to reinstate some form of regulation.

Sen. Al Gore, D-Tenn., called the study "badly flawed and virtually useless."

Gore, who has introduced a Senate bill to reregulate the cable industry and encourage competition, said the results were out of date and noted that the GAO had surveyed less than 20 percent of the industry.

Members of the House subcommittee were critical of the report because, while it examined rate increases instituted in the 22 months after deregulation, it contained no information about cable companies' capitalization costs, franchise sales, ad revenue or the industry's financial picture.

"It appears from the GAO survey that the majority of cable operators have been responsible and fair," but a small percentage have used deregulation "to take advantage of a captive consumer," said subcommittee chairman Edward Markey, D-Mass.

Markey instructed the GAO to prepare a second study by next spring addressing a wider range of concerns.

"There are some things that need to be looked at in a little more detail than our study shows," conceded John M. Ols Jr., director of housing and community development issues for the GAO. But he said the survey was patterned on instructions from the subcommittee, and said he was confident the data was accurate.

The survey of 1,950 of the nation's approximately 9,000 cable operators was more than large enough to comprise a representative sample, Ols said.

The GAO report found that the average monthly rate for the least expensive basic service increased 29 percent from December 1986, when government regulations were lifted, to October 1988. The average basic fee rose from $11.23 to $14.48 during the period, the GAO said.

Despite the stiff increase for basic service, the GAO said the average subscriber's monthly bill rose a smaller 14 percent, from $21.58 to $24.68.

Industry representatives told the panel that customers are getting a better value for their money because the quality of cable offerings has improved and the average number of channels offered by cable systems has risen from 24 to 30.

'Roseanne' Falls Short On Emmy List

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

UNIVERSAL CITY, Calif. — Proving again that ratings mean nothing when the TV industry decides what's good, the ratings flop "War and Remembrance" starred at this year's prime-time Emmy nominations while the hit "Roseanne" fizzled.

Despite losing more than $30 million and drawing less than spectacular Nielsen numbers, ABC's 30-hour "War and Remembrance" collected 15 Emmy nominations Thursday, third highest of all television shows.

"I'm glad they haven't forgotten us," said Dan Curtis, producer, director and co-writer of the World War II miniseries based on the Herman Wouk novel.

ABC's "Roseanne," last season's highest-rated new show, gathered only three nominations. Roseanne Barr, the show's star, was not chosen, and the show was not selected in the best comedy competition.

John Goodman, the show's co-star, earned the program's only major nomination.

"She's very pleased about John Goodman's nomination and she's disappointed the show didn't get nominated. That's all," Miss Barr's publicist, Pat Kingsley, said.

One of last season's biggest critical and commercial hits, CBS' "Lonesome Dove," led all shows with 18 nominations. NBC's stylish drama "L.A. Law" won 17 nominations and ABC's nostalgic comedy "The Wonder Years" drew 14 nominations.

Nominees with fewer selections were still thrilled with the recognition.

"Are you asleep?" executives of "The Arsenio Hall Show" asked in a 5:30 a.m. conference call to the talk-show host's home. "Yes, I'm asleep," was the groggy response.

"You know we only wake you up when it's real important. You're nominated for three Emmys," they said.

"Well, I've never sat up so quick, it was like the bed was on fire," Hall said later. "This is incredible. I mean, this is a guy from Cleveland. This isn't Dick Clark's son who was raised here in L.A. This is a Baptist preacher's kid from Cleveland."

Joe Regalbuto, who plays Frank Fontana on CBS' "Murphy Brown," was asked by the network to show up at the Registry Hotel in Universal City for the pre-dawn announcements.

"I was very nervous about it and we all had a feeling the show would get a couple of nominations," Regalbuto said afterward. "When I was told the show got nominated I said, 'Great,' and they said, 'No, you got nominated.'"

"I've never been nominated for anything. I am really thrilled. It's what we call an upper. But for the show to come up with 11 nominations, boy, that is beyond imagination."

"I was roused out (of bed) and it was the best thing I heard all day," "Murphy Brown" star Candice Bergen said after learning of her best comedy actress nomination.

Tracey Ullman, whose variety series on Fox Broadcasting "The Tracey Ullman Show" received 10 nominations, was in London and couldn't be reached for her reaction. But Julie Kavner, another of the show's nominees, was delighted.

"Far out," said Miss Kavner. "It's very exciting and extremely well deserved. It's the hardest work I've ever done, but we're having a lot of fun."

Selections of the winners will be made Aug. 26-27 at the Beverly Hilton Hotel by various peer panels in which actors select actors, directors select directors, writers select writers and the like.

Winners will be announced in two ceremonies on Sept. 16 and 17, with the latter show featuring major awards to be broadcast live by Fox.

New Host Set For 'Old House'

LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

LOS ANGELES — "This Old House" will have a new host — 36-year-old Stephen Thomas — when the venerable PBS institution returns for its 11th season in October.

And that means this is going to be a period of rebuilding for public television's highest-rated program.

Thomas will have some sizable work boots to fill in replacing Bob Vila, the host of "This Old House" since its debut in 1979 (Vila parted company with WGBH in Boston in March when the station decided that Vila's numerous commercial endorsements were undermining the program's integrity).

Vila's aloof, patrician manner was a perfect complement to master carpenter Norm Abram's blue-collar brevity. Viewers got the sense that Vila was running the show and Abram was the one getting his hands dirty.

But when critics attending the July press tour at the Century Plaza Hotel in Los Angeles watched a brief sample from the season's opening program, the Thomas-and-Abram team drew some unexpected laughter.

In the clip, which featured a tour of a decrepit 1835 barn in Concord, Mass., that is to be dismantled and rebuilt to create a single-family home, Thomas came off as the cockeyed optimist, a greenhorn whose enthusiasm was dampened time and time again by the experienced Abram. No sooner would Thomas extol some virtue of the barn's original structure than Abram would declare, "Nothing but problems." At one point, Abram wondered whether either one of them should be standing so close to the barn in the first place.

For viewers who have become accustomed to the look and feel of "This Old House," this new team may be as welcome in their homes as carpenter ants.

"We didn't know we were doing comedy," said Russell Morash, creator, director and executive producer of "This Old House," when the screening was over.

New Drug Delays Serious Symptoms Of Parkinson's

By Paul Recer
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — A new drug found to postpone the more serious symptoms of Parkinson's disease could also provide a clue to what causes the incurable disease, scientists say.

Dr. J. William Langston of California Parkinson's Foundation in San Jose reports in the journal Science that a study showed patients in the early stages of Parkinson's who take the drug deprenyl are able to work and function about eight months longer than similar patients who did not take the drug.

Deprenyl already has been approved by the Food and Drug Administration for treating patients in late phases of Parkinson's, and Langston said it will be marketed for that use beginning in September.

But Langston said clinical trials of early-stage Parkinson's patients showed that deprenyl "seemed to slow the rate (of symptom progression) by about half and doubled the time before they needed treatment."

Another expert called the finding "of very major significance."

Parkinson's is an incurable disease of unknown cause that is marked by a progressive loss of some brain cells. The symptoms include palsy, a shuffling gait, difficulty in speech, a fixed expression, and, sometimes, emotional instability. It affects about one person in 50 and strikes patients most frequently in their 50s and 60s. About 500,000 Americans now have Parkinson's.

Progression of Parkinson's can be slowed with a drug called levodopa, or L-dopa. But this drug can have serious side effects and it loses its effectiveness over time so doctors prefer to use it only when symptoms become severe.

Langston said his study determined deprenyl slows the progress of the disease and thus gives patients a longer period of time before being forced onto L-dopa.

The study involved 54 patients, all of whom were evaluated by tests to be at approximately the same early stage of Parkinson's. Half of the patients were treated with deprenyl and half with a placebo, or sugar pill.

On an average, patients receiving placebo required L-dopa therapy within 312 days. But those taking deprenyl did not require L-dopa for an average of 548 days.

This means, said Langston, that serious symptoms of the disease — as evaluated by five different assessment scales — were delayed for more than 33 weeks, on average.

"Overall, there was about a 50 percent decline in the rate of progression," said the researcher. He said this means patients can maintain a good quality of life, and work and function longer.

"If you can allow patients with Parkinson's to work just 10 more days, the estimate is that there would be a saving of $10 million a year to society," said Langston. "The presumption is that if they can go a lot longer without L-dopa, then they can work longer."

Dr. Erwin Montgomery, a professor of neurology at Washington University in St. Louis who treats Parkinson's patients at Barnes Hospital, said the study is "of very major significance" for such patients.

"Reducing the onset of symptoms has a tremendous effect," he said. "This translates into people being employed longer. This can have a great importance in their lives."

Langston said the study did not determine if deprenyl actually delays the death of brain cells that are killed in Parkinson's. But if later studies prove that these brain cells survived longer, this could be a step toward finding a cure, he said.

"If we have altered the course of cell death in Parkinson's and slowed it down, it suggests that we are tapping into the basic mechanism that is causing those cells to die," said Langston. "That's a very exciting clue of the possible cause."

Deprenyl, manufactured by Bolar Pharmaceuticals Co. of Copiague, N.Y., under the brand name Eldepryl, is approved for use with L-dopa. Langston said the drug will be sold for this use only starting in September.

Langston's coauthor in the study was Dr. James W. Tetrad, also of California Parkinson's Foundation. Science, which published the study, is the journal of the American Association for the Advance of Science.

Health Officials Say AZT Shows Benefit For Early AIDS Symptoms

By Deborah Mescé
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — AZT significantly slows the progress of AIDS in victims who have only early symptoms, and health officials say they will move quickly to make the drug more readily available.

AZT, the only government-approved AIDS drug, had previously been used only for patients whose immune system already had been ravaged by the disease or who had advanced AIDS-related complex.

Health officials said Thursday that they were so encouraged by clinical testing of the drug in patients with early symptoms that they were suspending the trial and giving the drug everyone in the test group, including those who had been receiving placebos.

Frank Young, commissioner of the Food and Drug Administration, called the results "real good news," and said his agency would work quickly to evaluate the findings and "translate these important results into wider availability" of AZT for earlier treatment.

The drug is manufactured by Burroughs Wellcome Co. in Greenville, N.C., and is marketed under the name Retrovir.

Expanded availability could potentially benefit an estimated 100,000 to 200,000 people with early symptoms of infection, said Dr. Anthony Fauci, director of the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases.

"It also emphasizes how critical it is that persons at risk for HIV infection be tested and seek prompt medical care," Fauci said.

The trial has been under way at 29 sites since August 1987, according to the Department of Health and Human Services.

It included 713 HIV-infected people with one or two HIV associated symptoms, such as chronic rash or intermittent diarrhea, and levels of immune system cells between 200 and 800 per cubic millimeter. Some participants received placebos and some received AZT over a period of three to 20 months.

As of July, 50 participants had progressed to AIDS-related complex or AIDS. Of those, 36 had been taking placebos and 14 were on AZT.

Fewer than 5 percent of the participants experienced serious side effects from the AZT, said Dr. Margaret Fischl of the University of Miami. Fischl coordinated the trials.

"This study clearly shows that early intervention is important in HIV infection and that (AZT) is well tolerated in persons with early ARC," she said.

It was approved in March 1987 for treatment of AIDS patients who had recovered from Pneumocystis carinii pneumonia — the leading killer of people with AIDS — and patients with advanced ARC.

Also Thursday, the 15 members of National Commission on AIDS selected Dr. June Osborn, dean of the University of Michigan School of Public Health, to head the panel. David E. Rogers, a professor of medicine at Cornell University Medical Center, was chosen as vice chairman.

The commission was created by Congress last year to advise the president and Congress on AIDS issues.

In another AIDS development, the FDA licensed the first diagnostic kit to detect the presence of HIV by detecting the proteins, or antigens, of the virus. Other licensed kits detect the presence of the body's response, the antibody, to these proteins.

The kit is designed to help physicians monitor changes in the infection rate of people with the virus.

Americans' Weight Is Staying On

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ATLANTA — There's an athletic shoe company that urges, "Just do it." But when it comes to losing weight, a federal study indicates that millions of hefty Americans just don't.

The national Centers for Disease Control said Thursday that none of 32 states in a CDC survey could report even half their overweight people taking the recommended twofold approach to losing weight: eating fewer calories and getting more exercise.

The CDC estimates that 34 million

Americans — about one in four adults — are overweight by 20 percent or more.

"The data suggest that significant numbers are eating fewer calories, but it's the physical activity that we don't have enough people doing," said Eddas M. Bennett, a CDC epidemiologist.

In the CDC survey, conducted in 1987 in 32 states and Washington, D.C., an average of 20 percent of the overweight men reported that they were following the fewer calories-more exercise approach. For women, the percentage was somewhat better: 31 percent.

Changes Urged In Elderly Care

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Geriatric experts are calling for changes in government policies they say have led to "deplorable" mental health care for America's 1.5 million nursing home residents, most of whom have disorders ranging from depression to Alzheimer's disease.

A panel of experts told a House committee Thursday that many nursing home residents are improperly drugged or denied proper care because government regulations discourage diagnosis and treatment of mental illness.

"The consequence is the treatment of mental and behavioral symptoms with psychotropic drugs alone, rather than with a comprehensive and holistic approach," said Dr. Barry Fogel of the American Psychiatric Association.

Witnesses told the House Select Committee on Aging that mental disorders affect 50 percent to more than 90 percent of the nation's nursing home residents. The mental disorders can range from behavioral problems to depression to Alzheimer's, a progressive disease that leads to dementia.

Janet Pacatte of the National Mental Health Association said federal policy should be changed to require nursing homes to offer mental health services and to allow community mental health clinics to receive Medicaid reimbursement for offering care at nursing homes.

 "Why do the waves keep foldin' over?"

Horoscope From The Carroll Righter Institute

FORECAST FOR SATURDAY Aug. 5

ARIES (March 21 to April 19): Choose friends who can help you, and eliminate tag-alongs who have selfish motives. Keep your upbeat attitude and stick to your plans.
TAURUS (April 20 to May 20): The mind is stimulated along with your perception of your personal life and its surrounding environment. Jot down creative ideas.
GEMINI (May 21 to June 21): Rearrange the home environment to remove clutter and increase living space. A feeling of renewal calls for a social gathering with friends.
MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21): Check restlessness with stimulating recreation that has a playful challenge. Family contacts are especially important today.
LEO (July 22 to Aug. 21): The fascination of travel calls for a change of scenery. Arrange priorities and then write your own ticket for the day.
VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22): This is your day to use mind power. Focus on self-analysis, problem solving, communications, and how to get your wheels in motion.
LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22): Taking time out for amusements helps to satisfy an unsettled feeling. Don't sit around waiting for things to happen.
SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21): You have a vast reservoir of knowledge at your disposal. Open new avenues of expression. Consider a mentally creative hobby.
SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21): You can get upset when others do not play by your rules. Privacy and a quiet day may be in order. Relax and refresh yourself.
CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20): You are feeling attractive and mentally competent, which makes this a great time to socialize. Encourage others to join in the fun.
AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19): Routine chores may not run smoothly. If minor upsets occur, try to let them pass until the climate improves.
PISCES (Feb. 20 to March 20): Intuition plays a part in decisions you make today. You have the right stuff to succeed as creative efforts fall into place.

The bidding:

Opening lead: ?
 One of the highlights of the British socialbridge calendar is the annual match between the House of Commons and the House of Lords. Started fifteen years ago by Rixi Markus, the House of Lords had an 8-6 lead going into this year's match. They won again, despite this fine effort by Dr. L. Moonie of the Commons, which won him the Briliancy Prize.

At both tables the contract was four hearts. Sitting South for the Lords was perhaps their most accomplished player, Lord Lever. The British still use four-card majors, so the opening bid was automatic. Since a jump raise to three hearts would be invitational in their methods, North chose to jump to game.

With nothing to guide him, West found the devilish opening lead of the ten of diamonds! Not surprisingly, declarer called for a low diamond from dummy, and a startled East found his queen had won the trick. A diamond return went to the ace, and East ruffed the diamond continuation to complete the defensive book. Declarer had no way to avoid losing a trick to the king of clubs for down one.

The opening lead was less inspired in the other room. West led a routine top-of-nothing spade, and declarer had no difficulty in holding his losers to two diamonds and a club.

We have learned that political speeches should be treated with a pinch of salt. Are we going to have to extend this policy to the bridge table as well?
