Columbia Back In Space On Secret Spy Mission

By Howard Benedict
 THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — Columbia, NASA's oldest shuttle, returned to space for the first time in 3½ years today, rocketing into orbit with five military astronauts on a secret mission to send a spy satellite aloft.

The 125-ton winged spaceship — for years a "hangar queen" that was stripped of parts to keep newer shuttles flying — blazed away from its seaside launch pad at 8:37 a.m. after a blacked-out countdown and darted northeastward.

Nearly nine minutes after liftoff NASA announced that Columbia was in orbit more than 100 miles above the Earth, streaking along at more than 17,400 mph.

"We had a completely clean and smooth ascent. There are no problems whatsoever to report," said launch commentator Brian Welch.

"It's going to be a gem of a bird," said launch director Bob Sieck.

Soon after the shuttle reached orbit, NASA imposed a news blackout. Apart from brief status reports during the five-day mission, silence will be broken in case of a major problem only, NASA said. Crew conversation will not be broadcast.

The satellite to be released by the astronauts reportedly can focus its super-sharp cameras on the Soviet Union and world hotspots such as the Middle East.

Because the mission is classified, the exact launch

Opening Prices On Greenville Leaf Market Please Farmers

By Stuart Savage
 THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Farmers and tobacco experts seemed satisfied this morning with prices being paid for tobacco as sales got under way on the Greenville tobacco market for the 99th year.

"It looks like it's selling right good so far ... better than last year," Philbert Hardy of Route 3, Washington, N.C., said after the first four or five rows of tobacco had been sold at Farmers Warehouse on North Greene Street this morning.

Hardy and his brother have 135 acres of tobacco this year, but none of the 4,200 pounds of the crop to be auctioned this morning had been sold when he said, "hopefully it (the price) will get stronger" as the morning sale continued.

Dick Mills of Ayden, who was waiting for his 6,000 pounds of tobacco to be sold, said of the early sales, "I think it's doing fairly well to be bottom stalk (leaf)," which historically sells for less than the higher quality upper stalk tobacco.

There was a difference in viewpoint between Emma Jean Wood of Ormondsville and her father, Edward Bowen of Route 1, Ayden.

Leaders Reject Hostage Exchange Talks

By Farouk Nassar
 THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BEIRUT, Lebanon — Shiite Moslem fundamentalist leaders today again rejected talks on exchanging three Israeli servicemen and Western hostages for a kidnapped Moslem cleric held in Israel.

Their statements came amid indications that Syria may be authorized by Iran and Hezbollah, Tehran's main ally in Lebanon, to negotiate the release of U.S. hostage Joseph Cicippio and 15 others held in Lebanon.

In Iran, the English-language Tehran Times said Tehran would be willing to use its influence in the hostage crisis if the United States agreed to release billions of dollars of Iranian assets long frozen in New York banks.

They also came as signs appeared of a rift in Iran's new leadership over the hostage issue, pitting hard-line Interior Minister Ali Akbar Mohtashemi against pragmatist President Hashemi Rafsanjani.

In a statement distributed in Beirut, Sheik Sobhi Tofaili, a senior Hezbollah leader said, "There shall be no contacts and no negotiations as long as Sheik Abdul Karim Obeid remains in captivity."

"This is the party's unshakeable conviction and this is what we shall do," Tofaili said, adding, "Hezbollah is not concerned with the question of the hostages or the negotiations revolving around it."

The hostage crisis was triggered when Israeli commandos kidnapped Obeid, 33, from his home in south Lebanon July 28 and whisked him to Israel.

Israel has offered to trade Obeid and all 450 Shiite prisoners it holds for the three Israelis and the Western hostages held in Lebanon but Hezbollah insists the cleric should be unconditionally freed.

Hezbollah's spiritual guide, Sheik Mohammed Hussein Fadlallah, said in a separate statement published by several Beirut newspapers that Obeid's abduction left "the region poised on a powder keg."

"That act of piracy led to the killing of the American officer Higgins," Fadlallah said, referring to the announcement nine days ago by the underground Organization of the Oppressed on Earth that it hanged U.S. Marine Lt. Col. William R. Higgins.

Fadlallah said Israel's refusal to free Obeid and movements of U.S. warships in the eastern Mediterranean after Higgins' death reminded him of tensions that preceded Israel's 1982 invasion of Lebanon.

"I do not rule out the possibility of a large-scale military operation by Israel to get itself off the hook in this crisis which it created," Fadlallah said.

Kaifu New Party Chief In Japan

By Tetsuo Jimbo
 THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOKYO — The governing Liberal Democrats today elected Toshiaki Kaifu party president and successor to Prime Minister Souseke Uno in the hopes of putting behind it a bribery and sex scandal and an unpopular sales tax.

The next prime minister called on fellow Japanese to give his scandal-plagued party a chance to "carry out political reforms and shed our old skin."

As expected, Kaifu, 58, was elected to head the Liberal Democratic Party, defeating late challenges by Yoshiro Hayashi, a former welfare minister, and Shintaro Ishihara, a novelist and former transport minister.

A secret ballot by the conservative party's 404 members of Parliament and one delegate from each of the party's 47 state branches resulted in 279 votes for Kaifu, 120 for Hayashi and 48 for Ishihara, easily giving Kaifu the party presidency on the first ballot. There were four invalid ballots.

Arab Shoots American

By G.G. LaBelle
 THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

JERUSALEM — A lone Arab gunman who infiltrated from Jordan shot and wounded an American and held an off-duty soldier hostage for four hours today before being killed by Israeli troops, the army said.

The siege ended when soldiers stormed a hut on the Kibbutz Lotan collective farm, 12 miles north of the Israeli port city of Eilat and less than a mile from the Jordan-Israeli border.

Hospital officials identified the American as Lauren Rosen, 25, of Birmingham, N.J., who was working as a volunteer at the kibbutz. They said she was slightly wounded by a bullet that passed through her neck.

The hostage was a member of an army unit made up of soldiers who live and work on collective farms. She was not identified.

Army radio quoted armed forces Chief of Staff Lt. Gen. Dan Shomron as saying the attacker was a Jordanian army soldier, but apparently acted on his own. The army denied

Helms, Graham Make Stop At Greenville Mart

By Lane Dunn
 THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., and N.C. Agriculture Commissioner Jim Graham paid a visit to Greenville warehouse floors today as part of an eastern North Carolina tour of tobacco markets.

"You can't imagine how much it means to a fellow who lives in Washington most of the year to come home just to see the folks that really count," Helms said.

Helms and Graham came to Greenville from Kinston where they were visiting tobacco markets earlier today.

Both men commented that the market in Kinston seemed to be drawing a good price. Graham said it was up about 6 cents over last year.

"I'm encouraged by the day yesterday," Helms said. "Of course I don't think anybody is ever completely satisfied."

Graham said he was also pleased with prices and was optimistic about the upcoming year. Helms said that some of the crop that drew high prices though was "carry-over tobacco" from last year.

Council Directs Internal Probe For City Police

By J. Ward Best
 THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Personnel problems within the Greenville Police Department spilled over to the City Council workshop meeting Monday night. But the matter was returned to the department for internal investigation after nearly two hours of closed-door discussion by the council.

Mayor Ed Carter, in a prepared statement, initially called for an independent investigator to look into alleged discriminatory practices.

Following a nearly two-hour council executive session, the mayor's request was dropped and the council returned a unanimous decision to allow Police Chief Jerry Tesmond and City Manager Greg Knowles to conduct an internal investigation.

Regardless of the council's decision, officials with the Southern Christian Leadership Conference said they have contacted the U.S. Justice Department, and will present its case of racial discrimination to Federal investigators.

Problems within the department surfaced Friday when a group of officers and representatives from the SCLC presented charges of racial bias to Tesmond and members of the media. The SCLC and the officer who originally brought the charges, Lyn White, on Saturday called for Tesmond's job and those of two other high-level officers in the department, Captains Randy Nichols and Nelson Staton.

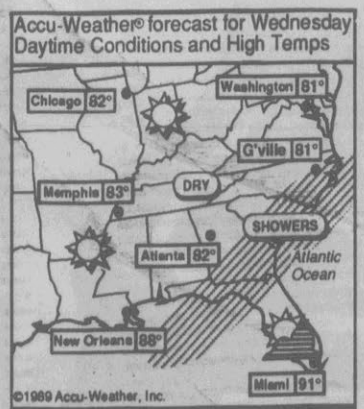

White and the SCLC on Friday presented a petition and a list of concerns to Tesmond. The grievances outlined cited alleged offenses that included favoritism toward whites, especially white females; under-representation of blacks in the detective division, and the assignment of blacks to patrols in black neighborhoods.

White and 12 other black officers in the department signed the petition which called for an end to "jaded discriminatory ploys" in the department.

Council Delays Tar River Talk

By J. Ward Best
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

The Greenville City Council again delayed discussion concerning the state of the Tar River during Monday's workshop meeting.

And the City Council moved to stop storm water from overrunning city streets by criminalizing public dumping into city storm ditches.

Two city commissions, the Environmental Advisory Commission and Greenville Utilities, in July presented opposing positions on the state's proposal to classify the Tar and Pamlico rivers as nutrient sensitive. The City Council has yet to take a stand on the state's proposal, leaving the state with two positions from Greenville.

The nutrient sensitive classification would limit to present levels the nutrient pollution going into the waters, and would put the greatest burden on municipalities planning to expand their waste water treatment facilities.

The environmental commission sent the state hearing officer a letter strongly supporting the classification, in reaction to comments from GUC chairman Malcolm Green during a public hearing on the classification. Green said although he strongly supports protection of the rivers, he said the state should conduct further tests before imposing greater restrictions on the treatment plants.

During Monday's meeting, Mayor Ed Carter said Green had asked to have the discussion removed from the agenda because the utilities commission was meeting with the Division of Environmental Management, the state agency proposing the nutrient sensitive classification.

Council member Lorraine Shinn, who is also the regional manager for DEM's parent agency, pushed for a decision from the council and objected to GUC setting the agenda for the City Council.

"I don't want this to be a stalling tactic by the utilities commission," Ms. Shinn said about the decision to delay discussion of the matter. "I'm not comfortable with that and I'm not comfortable with the utilities commission telling us what to do."

Ms. Shinn also protested the apparent lack of notification of DEM regarding the schedule discussion or its removal from the agenda.

Carter said the lack of notification was an oversight, and said he also did not want to think GUC was stalling the discussion.

"I think the public should be aware if the City Council is using a stalling tactic," said Council member Rufus Huggins, "and we are very, very deeply concerned about this."

But Huggins and council members Nancy Jenkins and Bill Hadden asked for more information regarding the proposal before committing the council to a decision.

The proposed ordinance prohibiting dumping in publicly-owned ditches drew support from the council, but was returned to the city attorney for redrafting of the language.

As written, the ordinance would fine the property owner closest to the ditch. City Attorney Mac McCarley said the ordinance would presume the owner had dumped the trash, and the burden of proof would fall to the owner to show he had not done the dumping.

"This is simply a legal tool to give us a leg up, a place to start," McCarley said.

Council members Mildred Council and Ms. Shinn objected to the presumption of guilt of the owner.

The ordinance returned to McCarley for rewording so that owners closest to the ditch could be held liable for any dumping, but would not necessarily be held responsible or fined.

The City Council also called for a study of the lease granted to Moyewood Social Services Center before granting an extended lease.

Ms. Council questioned the use of the day-care center by local residents, and asked if the building would ever return to use as a community center for west Greenville.

Carter recommended a subcommittee look into Ms. Council's concerns before renewing the lease.

Schedule Outlined

Major steps to be taken if the election is to be held on Dec. 12, include:

- Publication of a notice of intent to hold a referendum no later than Aug. 11.

- Passage of resolutions by the Pitt County Board of Education and Pitt Community College Trustees during the week of Aug. 14 requesting the commissioners to finance the proposed building projects.

- Hold a public hearing on the proposal on Sept. 5 and adopt a resolution calling for a referendum.

The commissioners have proposed that both bond issues, if successful, be retired in 15 years.

County Manager Kramer Jackson said the $25.7 million in bonds for the public schools can be repaid without a tax increase, while the $10 million in bonds for the community college can be repaid in 15 years — $16 million including interest — with a tax rate equivalent increase of 3.52 cents based on current property values.

The commissioners, who took no action on the proposed schedule Monday, are expected to consider items included on the schedule at the board's Aug. 21 meeting.

In other business Monday, the board allocated $12,500 to the Pitt County Historical Society to help with the publication of an historic survey.

LaRue Evans, representing the historical group, told commissioners that the funds would be used to pay an editor for the book, which she said would cost an estimated $55,000 to publish.

Commissioners appropriated $12,000 two years ago to help with the survey of historic buildings in the county and Mrs. Evans said the proposed book would give details about many of the structures identified by the survey.

She told the board that the survey found 1,100 structures in the county that were 150-years-old or older and identified 98 that are eligible for inclusion in the National Register of Historic Places.

"We need to record what we've found," Mrs. Evans suggested. "It will protect the investment you've already made."

In other action, commissioners named Claudie McLawhorn, E.C. Averette Jr. and Floyd Wayne Avery to the Winterville Board of Adjustments and appointed James A. Nelson and Almyra Watson to serve on the Bethel Zoning and Planning Board.

In each case the county appointees would represent the extrajurisdictional jurisdiction area outside the municipal limits.

The board also agreed to hold a series of five regular meetings in other areas of the county.

According to a tentative schedule, the board's Sept. 18 meeting will be held in election District 6, possibly in Ayden or Grifton, while the Oct. 16 meeting will be held in Bethel, which is in District 2.

The Nov. 20 meeting will be held possibly in District 4, Farmville, the Dec. 18 meeting will be scheduled in District 3 and the Jan. 5 meeting will be held in Winterville in District 5.

ty, so it will be a great responsibility," Kaifu, a former education minister with little personal clout, told a news conference shortly after the vote.

As Japan's second new prime minister in two months, he will face the challenge of fending off a surging opposition Socialist Party and recovering the popularity the Liberal Democrats have lost in a succession of scandals and a disliked tax policy.

"I want to carry out reforms and pass reform legislation based on our deep self-reflection," he said, replying to a question about his plan to regain public trust.

He rejected the idea of holding elections immediately, as the opposition demands.

"Through debate we hope to gain the people's understanding of our policies" before a general election, he said.

Kaifu will be elected Wednesday to succeed Uno on the strength of his party's large majority in the lower house of Parliament. He also will face the first test of the new political situation in Japan created by the party's loss of control in the upper house in the July 23 elections.

reports that more than one gunman was involved.

Ms. Rosen was quoted by the radio as saying the attacker shouted in English "It's because of my brother!" before opening fire on her, the soldier and a third woman in a date grove near the kibbutz. The third woman managed to run away.

Soldiers stormed the hut in the date grove where the woman was held after attempting to negotiate with the gunman for several hours, the radio said. It said his only demand during the negotiations was for a copy of the Koran, the Moslem holy book.

The initial attack came at 11:30 a.m. and the building was stormed about 3:30 p.m., the army said.

"A man dressed in military dress came out from behind one of the trees and shot one shot, and that was that," Ms. Rosen told Israel army radio. "I was very, very lucky. I feel just fine."

Professor Says Coaches Intervened For Players

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — The director of N.C. State University's freshman English program said members of basketball coach Jim Valvano's staff had twice approached her seeking special treatment for Wolfpack players.

Barbara J. Baines said she declined to help both times. In the first incident, she said, coaches tried to convince her to let a player enroll in a course five weeks after the semester had begun. In the second, a coach tried to convince her to discuss a player's grade with the player's father.

The coach called her "un-American" after she declined to meet with the player's father, Ms. Baines said.

She said in a written statement to The News and Observer of Raleigh that the two incidents "amount to, at best, highly inappropriate intervention on the part of the coaches and, at worst, pure harassment."

NCSU officials declined to comment.

Ms. Baines is the first NCSU faculty member to come forward with examples that support assertions by Hugh Fuller, director of the university's academic tutoring program. Fuller said last week that members of the athletics department improperly pressured faculty members in an effort to keep players eligible. He said top NCSU administrators had permitted the abuses to continue over seven years.

Ms. Baines, a professor who oversees the English courses that every NCSU freshman is required to take, said on Monday that the two incidents occurred within the past three years but declined to say exactly when or to name the assistant coaches involved.

"My experience has been that assistant coaches intervene and bring pressure to bear on faculty and administrators that is totally inappropriate," Ms. Baines, who has taught at NCSU for 18 years, said in an interview. "My assumption is that they (basketball players) come to the university to get an education. If they're not interested in that, they shouldn't be here."

In one incident, Ms. Baines said, an assistant coach wanted her to permit a basketball player to drop one English course and add another to his schedule five weeks into a semester. Ms. Baines said she refused because the deadline for adding courses had passed.

In her statement, she wrote:

"The player ... had failed English 111 the previous semester and was thus required by university regulations to sign up for the course again. For some reason he had signed up for English 112, a course that requires successful completion of English 111. The coach wanted to drop the player from English 112 and add him to English 111, a request that could have been honored during the first two weeks of the semester but not ... during the fifth week."

Ms. Baines wrote that after she had refused to let the player add the course, she was approached by a different coach who told her that the player had been sitting in on English 111 for five weeks. "The coach reasoned that sitting in on the course somehow entitled the student to register late for the course," she wrote.

The player, Ms. Baines wrote, said he had been attending the English 111 course at its noon meeting time. She checked and learned that no such course was given at that time.

The next day, she wrote, she was approached by two assistant basketball coaches and the player himself, who insisted that he had been attending the English 111 course. Ms. Baines and the two coaches followed the player to what he said was his English 111 course, only to find that the player actually had been sitting in on a science fiction course.

Ms. Baines wrote: "I was left with the distinct impression that for these coaches the player's credibility was still perfectly intact and mine was somehow totally suspect."

She filed a complaint about the incident, which was forwarded to Valvano, she said. Ms. Baines said the NCSU administration handled her complaint appropriately.

John E. Bassett, head of NCSU's English department, called Ms. Baines "one of the top people in the department," and said she had told him of the coaches' involvement in the incidents. "We followed through and the dean followed through with notification to the provost that we didn't want this sort of thing happening again," he said.

Valvano, who also is NCSU's athletics director, did not return telephone calls, the newspaper said.

The second incident involved one of the same coaches, Ms. Baines wrote. A player who had become ill during the final exam period received an "incomplete" in an English course. The "incomplete" would stay on his record until he could make up his exam.

"When he came for the exam," she wrote, "he decided he was not prepared and said that he would benefit from taking the course again. His second attempt at the course resulted in a high 'D' average whereas a 'C' is required for successful completion of the course. Soon thereafter, I was told that the student's father had called and was very angry."

Ms. Baines wrote that she had reviewed the player's grade and found that it was appropriate. She suggested, though, that since the student had done some good work in the course, he might be able to attempt to receive credit for the course by taking a three-hour essay examination usually reserved for transfer students.

But, she wrote, the Wolfpack assistant coach "insisted instead that I meet with the father to discuss the matter. I explained that I ... believed that the student should deal with his problems without interference from coaches and parents. The coach responded that my unwillingness to meet with the father was 'un-American.'

"One might consider ... the message this kind of behavior sends to the players ..." she wrote. "The blame rests with those who allow student athletes to believe that being eligible is more important than being educated. The blame lies not only on coaches and administrators but upon all those in positions of power and influence who cannot imagine anything better in life than a winning team."

NCSU spokesman Albert B. Lanier Jr. said the university had no comment on Ms. Baines' statement.

"N.C. State University is concerned about the allegations that have been and are coming out about our athletic program," he said. "We have been and still are encouraging all interested personnel to express their concerns to the investigative committees which we either invited or agreed to their coming here for the purpose of investigating the program. That being the case, and respecting (UNC system) President (C.D.) Spangler's request, the university is withholding comment on these allegations until the president's report is released on Aug. 25."

Both the National Collegiate Athletic Association and the UNC system have investigated the NCSU basketball team. The NCAA probe is continuing. The findings of the UNC inquiry will be presented to the UNC Board of Governors on Aug. 25.

Bush Draws Praise, Criticism For His Civil Rights Deeds

By Tom Raum

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — President Bush, described by an aide as committed to "breaking down barriers" to civil rights, nonetheless has drawn criticism at an Urban League meeting where leaders say his deeds have not always matched his words.

The president was to address the 70th annual Urban League Conference following appearances by several Cabinet officers. Bush has been considering a visit to sub-Saharan Africa this fall, according to White House officials, and there was speculation of an announcement today.

Before hearing directly from Bush today, several prominent civil rights advocates said the president's record thus far has been weak, though they embraced Bush's role in achieving legislation extending civil rights protection to disabled Americans.

"The civil rights community would give the president high marks for accessibility and symbolism and rhetoric but low marks on substantive civil rights policy," said Ralph Neas, executive director of the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights.

Civil rights leaders cited Bush's acceptance of Supreme Court rulings limiting affirmative action, his veto of minimum wage legislation and his choice of William Lucas to be the Justice Department's top civil rights enforcer.

Frederick McClure, Bush's congressional liaison and the highest ranking black member of the White House staff, said such episodes "have in no way diminished the president's commitment on the civil rights front."

Most of the civil rights movement's agenda "is George Bush's agenda," he said, adding that Bush's priority remains one of "breaking down barriers, economic or otherwise."

Speaking Monday evening by telephone hookup with a league-sponsored town meeting in Fort Lauderdale, Fla., Bush said he was "looking forward to taking a message of hope and challenge" to the Urban League today.

Urban League President John E. Jacob challenged the president to use the speech "to present bold new initiatives that help America's poor people and put us back on the path of racial progress."

Civil rights leaders generally praise Bush for his "offered hand" approach, but fault him on his actions.

"Symbolism is important, but it's not enough," he added. "For six months, there's been strong rhetoric on civil rights but little else."

However, Neas did applaud Bush's role in helping to craft a bipartisan compromise — reached last week — on legislation extending civil rights laws to the nation's 37 million disabled people.

While that measure was well received in the civil rights community, these major irritants remain:

—The Senate debacle over Lucas, a black Detroit lawyer Bush nominated to head the civil rights division at the Justice Department. Lucas was widely criticized by black leaders for lacking experience in discrimination cases and was rejected by the Senate Judiciary Committee on a 7-7 tie vote.

Still, the administration continues to stand by the nomination, including a behind-the-scenes effort by Bush last Friday to get the full Senate to ignore the committee vote and bring the nomination to the floor.

—The administration's refusal to speak out against — or support legislation to modify — Supreme Court rulings last spring that sharply restricted affirmative action and made it more difficult to prove discrimination in the workplace.

—Bush's veto of a new minimum wage bill.

Graduation Held

Summer High School Grads Move On

High school graduation is not just for June anymore.

Some 34 Pitt County students demonstrated that by graduating in ceremonies Wednesday night following the summer school program.

It wasn't a traditional ceremony in the sense of those which are held at individual high school at the end of the regular school year. Rather the summer graduates represented all the high schools of the county in the ceremonies at D.H. Conley High School auditorium.

Ella Harris, summer school principal for grades 9 through 12, said it was a milestone in the graduates' lives which needed to be recognized with a ceremony.

Other than the fact that the new graduates came from all the high schools, it was just like any other ceremony. There were graduation gowns, proud parents, family and friends, speeches by the graduates and words from Charles Ross, associate superintendent of instruction for the county schools.

The significance of the event is that the graduates won't have to wait another school year before they receive their diplomas and proceed with careers or further training. They completed their high school requirements this summer and now have their diplomas in hand.

It should remind us all, too, that education is not only a year 'round endeavor in these times, but it is also a lifetime proposition. As technology progresses so, too, does the need for furthering one's education.

These 34 graduates have toiled through the summer to reach their goals of obtaining high school diplomas. They have succeeded; they can now move on to new accomplishments and they are to be congratulated.

Hostage Hopes

All Should Be Returned In Any Deal

Hopes for hostages in Lebanon have time and again been built on quicksand. Nevertheless there may be some hope that the murder of Lt. Col. William R. Higgins might lead to sanity in that part of the world.

United Nations Undersecretary-General Marrack Goulding has said the situation may be more conducive to a settlement. However, he warned that there would be a long process of "quiet and patient diplomacy."

That the public understands. Nothing has been more frustrating to the west than the holding of innocent hostages in Lebanon. It was brought into focus once again with the senseless and barbaric murder of Lt. Col. Higgins.

Still there are reports that Algeria and Iran may be prepared to help in the negotiations. Any solution probably would involve Israel's return of Moslem cleric, Sheik Abdul Karim Obeid, who was captured by Israel last week.

Israel, of course, will insist on the return of Israeli soldiers being held in Lebanon. The western nations should also insist that all the hostages be returned in good health. There should be no more murders of people who are held captive.

Taking The Proselytizer To Task

WASHINGTON--Sometimes I feel like one of those door-to-door proselytizers. You know, the ones who have glimpsed Truth and who are convinced that if you will only listen to them and think about what they are saying, you, too, will see the light.

It was my notion that it would be plain to everyone, once it was pointed out, that (1) much of what has gone wrong in America stems from the deterioration of the family and (2) that one reason for the deterioration — particularly in the low-income black community — is that black boys learn tragically early to view themselves as expendable.

My proposal: Let's find ways to save the boys.

There's no need to prove that boys are in special trouble. The merest glance at a college, high-school or even grade-school classroom will make clear that the boys are disappearing. A review of the crime, imprisonment and homicide statistics will make clear where they are disappearing to.

The more they wind up in jails or graveyards, the less they will be available to form families. Fatherless households already constitute the poorest category of Americans.

But though a lot of readers share my view that we need to find ways to rescue the boys from their uselessness, a surprisingly large minority take a different view.

Three themes run through their letters. The first is a double-pronged feminism: It is sexist to talk about saving boys rather than saving children. Moreover, my notion that we should train young men to become family providers is backward. As one reader put it, "It is the expectation of males as providers and women as partners who have the option of being providers that is causing men — especially black men — so much trouble."

The second theme is that it is up to young men to save themselves. They can stop being lazy or lawless or irresponsible whenever they choose.

Well, if it's sexist to urge special help for the boys (who are demonstrably in special trouble), then the biblical parable of the lost sheep amounts to reverse discrimination. The point is not to abandon the 99, but to restore the entire flock.

What of the notion that a man's proper role is that of provider? Maybe, as the reader suggests, it is mere socialization. I suspect it runs a lot deeper than that, making it hard for any man who has never functioned as a provider to feel like a man. The inability of so many young black men to see themselves as providers — or even as necessary to their families — may be one explanation for their irresponsible behavior.

Nor does it make sense to me to expect that boys who have never experienced responsible fatherhood can, on their own, become responsible fathers.

The third, and saddest, theme is typified by a letter from a woman who describes herself as "a black single female head of household." She challenges my "bring back the family" notion at its heart.

"I have a family," she says. "How can one bring back that which is here? Be accurate. What you intend to say is, 'Put a black man in the residence of every black woman and her children.'"

"Are you out of your mind? Any bearable black man who is outside a family is so by his own choice. Women who, in order to be physically safe and mentally secure, have removed themselves and their families from the proximity of abusive, destructive males will passionately resist the efforts of anyone to impose this unwanted element on their families and into their lives.

"The theory that improving the employment rate of men is the sine qua non of a healthy community is a simplistic and totally erroneous response to a complex societal puzzle. It ignores the reality that black men in alarming numbers are physical and psychological batterers and abusers of women...Daily, black women attempt to avoid, even flee, situations in which they are demeaned, belittled and stripped of their dignity and humanity. In truth, if the black American community is to survive, black women and girls must learn trades and skills which will enable them to become healthy, independent, self-respecting, competent individuals.

"What should be done to cause black men to become intelligent, responsible, supportive, desirable family members?"

"I don't know, and really don't care."

Another Message: Simplify, Simplify

CASCO BAY, Maine — Visitors have flown in this morning. We are awakened by the noises of two of these transients, seagulls tap-dancing on the roof of the cottage. When their dance is over, they scream their self-satisfaction and leave to cruise the rest of the cove.

I get up slowly, crawl down the length of the bed alcove and reach for the shorts and T-shirt that hang on the wall pegs. I fall into them like an old familiar chair. They have been waiting for me since last summer and the summer before.

There is one style up here: Maine. It only changes with the weather. There is nothing to mix or match. The shoes are relics of earlier musseling ventures on the rocks. The one appropriate accessory is an old baseball cap that is unquestionably a fashion "don't."

We come here to slow up and pare down. There are no travel guides and trip tics and express checks in our summer-plans. We choose to rid ourselves of clutter for a while, to slough off the chores and obligations, the people and things that must be dealt with, the choices and decisions that confront us with their urgency. We want to get life down to a four-room cottage on an island. To simplify.

Wasn't that what Thoreau wrote when he built his home at Walden Pond? I look up his words in the tattered book on the shelf. "Our life is frittered away by detail...Simplify, simplify." His retreat from "details" opened the spaces of his life. And so does ours.

Our vacation is defined in part by what we do not have. These are things that the island does not have: a traffic light, a movie theater, a burglar alarm, a bank machine, a Benetton. These are the things that the cottage does not have: bedroom doors, pantyhose, cloth napkins, neckties, videotapes.

We are not, roughing it by Walden standards. There is electricity and running water in the cottage; a shower of sorts is rigged up to the tub. One of the "staples" of our diet is lobster, the luxurious shrimps and hardshells from our neighbor's traps. And this year we improved the kitchen with a newfangled addition: a plastic trash can.

But here we have happily limited our options the way we limit the items on our dinner menu. We cannot dash out for tacos or frozen yogurt. We can't debate the allure of sushi or pesto sauce. Indeed we chuckle over the Gourmet magazine recipes that call for arugula.

We are just a boat ride away from the mall culture of mainland America. But the waters form a protective barrier against consuming. The loss of access, the downsizing of our home, our community, our lives, defines this time out. Simplify. Simplify.

A few weeks ago, a friend who has been a Moscow correspondent told me what she will miss about her family's time in that capital: the absence of choices. After all her letters describing the shortages and hassles, I laughed. But I also understood.

In her world, there is no consuming to be done, no lawn to be mowed, no extra rooms to be cared for, no lessons to be chauffeured. For a Western family, this temporary less can feel like more. More time. More togetherness.

Up here, I wonder how many American lives, freer and richer, are frittered away by detail. The extra rooms that demand cleaning, the lawns that demand attention. How many family lives are scattered over aisles and miles of choices that become demanding necessities. Places to get to, prices to pay, things to want. How much easier it seems in our four-room cottage to live smaller.

Is this summer talk? Island life is not easier for the teen-agers who take a boat to school or for those who get sick on a winter's night. The pace of our life here has as much to do with leaving work as with leaving the malls and the makeup.

But these are the days we store up. Days when there are mackerel in the cove and raspberries on the bushes and hours in the hammock. They will stay there all winter, permanently hanging in our minds like old clothes on the wooden pegs, carrying another image of life, another message. Simplify. Simplify.

Truly Indecent Exposure

Sarah Conroy

WASHINGTON — Everyone knows that Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., is currently calling down fire, brimstone, the wrath of Congress and an end to National Endowment for the Arts grants on purveyors of photographs whose sensibilities are different from his own.

But he's aiming at the wrong arm of government. He should be pulling the trigger on a more ubiquitous Washington custom: the White House photograph.

All the wiles of an experienced journalist are not enough to find out how much such photographs cost the U.S. government in a year. Even the Office of Management and Budget says the budget for the photo office is buried so deeply in the White House's overall expenses that it can't be separated. But anyone who's ever had an 8-by-10-inch color negative printed knows one thing can be said without controversy: It ain't cheap.

At the White House (not to mention the State Department and all other agencies with official force-feeding functions), voters, promoters and supporters always stand in peril of having their pictures taken. Summoned from their darkrooms and brought into the glare of strobe lights at government expense, photographers practice their arcane art, believed by some cultures to be the stealing of souls. Such actions usually take place in receiving lines, when the White House visitor actually comes face to face with the First Man and the First Lady. The government then, at further expense, mails the guest a picture of him- or herself.

The intention, kindly enough, is to enable guests to prove forevermore that they have been in the Presence! They have been Invited Somewhere! They have been Noticed! And they have gotten a souvenir of the great event without having to steal the demitasse spoons.

Some White House parties, one may well believe, are held for the sole purpose of producing pictures for the guests to put on their office walls, in silver frames on untuned pianos in drawing rooms where no one plays, in leather scrapbooks on coffee tables, or in Mother's Brag Book.

The reasons for such party photographs would make them excusable; forgivable, even; perhaps laudable. Except, of course, that 99 percent of the photographs turn out to be quite indecent.

Surely, if you take an honest look at the party pictures in which you have been a willing or unwilling subject, you will find that most of the photographs would fall within the purview of Helms's Amendment No. 420, if only it applied to the White House:

None of the funds authorized to be appropriated pursuant to this Act may be used to promote, disseminate, or produce (1) obscene or indecent materials, including but not limited to depictions of sadomasochism, homoeroticism, the exploitation of children, or individuals engaged in sex acts; or (2) material which denigrates the objects or beliefs of the adherents of a particular religion or non-religion; or (3) material which denigrates, debases, or reviles a person, group, or class of citizens on the basis of race, creed, sex, handicap, age, or national origin.

What could be more "sodomasochistic" than the picture of some poor wage-earner dressed up in what Sen. Robert Byrd calls a monkey suit, or, in the case of a female voter, hair encased in armor coating, body pinched in here, filled out there and stuffed into instruments of torture called high heels, and taken out to a party that will raise the hapless soul's cholesterol by 300 percent (1,000 percent at the Christmas eggnog parties)? As for "homoeroticism," consider all of those pictures of hugs at parties bestowed on those of the same sex, and for "sex acts," numerous ethical systems would question the act of pressing the flesh at any body appendage. Holding hands is well known to be just the beginning of further exploration.

As for "exploitation of children," consider the pictures of children of members of Congress and diplomats, traditionally made at annual White House children's parties. Think of the blameless young ones pictured with ridiculous hats stuffed on their unwilling heads, while from their mouths party whistles blow curls of paper tongues, or hapless youngsters struggling to escape the embrace of the president or First Lady. And who of us has not felt exploited in later life by relatives dragging out such pictures of our once-innocent state?

Indeed, the religion clause could result in an end to Christmas, Hanukah and Kwanzaa party photographs, depicting revelers, including the First Family, in various unseemly poses, climbing ladders to decorate trees, their guests overindulging themselves at festive tables, or bedecked in Santa Claus suits.

Now when it comes to "denigrating, debasing or reviling a person, group or class of citizens on the basis of race, creed, sex, handicap, age or national origin," who among us would not protest that all portraits of ourselves, no matter how adept or well-meaning the photographer, makes us look like caricatures of our race, creed or sex? As for handicap, consider the worst of all, not having been born looking like Robert Redford (or George Bush) or Jane Seymour (or Barbara Bush). And what person over 15 would not agree that a photograph adds at least five if not 50 years to one's age, which is old enough anyway. Most obscene and indecent of all, of course, are the photographs that, by some expertise of the photographers, look just like you.

So it is not surprising that there is a groundswell of public opinion to amend the Helms amendment to provide that all photographs promoted, disseminated or produced at government expense be banned, burned, shredded or otherwise suppressed.

Could it be that Jesse Helms has not included the White House photographs in his ban because he himself indulges in the despicable practice of having himself photographed with well-meaning constituents? Surely now is the time for Congress to set up an independent counsel to investigate the matter of obscene receiving-line photographs.

Sarah Booth Conroy writes for the Washington Post's Style section.

Congress, Pool Your Tips

William
Brandon

Senators and representatives who supplement their incomes with honoraria for speaking are like waiters and waitresses at a restaurant. Diners who are known to leave large tips get extra attention, though the menu is the same for everyone.

Waiters and waitresses with the seniority, pull or good luck to be assigned to the formal dining room will receive more money than those working in the sandwich bar.

Organizations can enhance their access to legislators by paying generous honoraria — "tips" — for speeches during fancy expense-paid weekends. Although there is little evidence of outright vote-buying, access to decision-makers enables trade organizations, consultants, businesses, unions and other interest groups to express their suggestions, alternatives and objections about legislation. They also gain information that can be crucial to the success of their business.

Like the tips left for waiters and waitresses at certain progressive restaurants, honoraria for our senators and representatives should be pooled. This simple expedient would sever the relationship between speaking to a group interested in legislation and receiving its money.

Any possible taint would disappear if all members of Congress received equal shares of honoraria income as a year-end bonus. The many members who are concerned about congressional ethics should welcome a chance to continue to receive outside earnings while eliminating the ethical and public relations disadvantages of the current system.

The congressional pay raise, which was defeated earlier this year, included a ban on the acceptance of honoraria. Public interest groups such as Common Cause may be right in calling for a ban on outside earnings, but the hope is unrealistic. Until Congress receives a significant increase, it will continue to insist on the right to supplement salaries, which were $89,500 in 1988.

Members can accept an honorarium of any amount but cannot keep more than $2,000 for each appearance, speech or article. The House limits annual income from honoraria to 30 percent of salaries; senators may keep up to 40 percent. Although members may keep no more than $2,000 for each appearance or speech, there is no limit on the number of honoraria a member may earn from a single organization.

Not all congressmen are equal on the rubber chicken circuit. Seniority and choice committee assignments are the rough equivalents for our legislators of the restaurant's formal and informal dining rooms. Where one serves is a good predictor of how easy it will be to supplement the employer's wages.

For example, Dan Rostenkowski, D-Ill., chairman of the powerful House Ways and Means Committee, received $245,000 in speaking fees in 1987.

This amount could have gone into a pool that would also increase the income of such figures as Rep. Louise M. Slaughter, D-N.Y., who took no honoraria in 1988, and Dean A. Gallo, R-N.J., who received $4,600 and gave it all to charity.

New members are more vulnerable to electoral defeat and therefore usually focus on their districts rather than on speaking tours.

A Common Cause analysis of 1988 financial disclosure statements reports that half of the representatives who filed received only 14 percent of total honoraria kept.

These 190 congressmen supplemented their 1988 incomes by an average of $3,421. Fifteen senators and 61 representatives kept no honoraria for personal use.

In contrast, 91 representatives and 57 senators kept more than $25,000. If the high earners' total of more than $1.6 million over limits had gone to two honoraria pools instead of charity, each representative and senator would have received $15,500 and $30,500 respectively.

The value of congressional speech-making should be acknowledged. Rostenkowski needs to be heard by the titans of the American economy. He also needs to take the pulse of the nation beyond the Washington Beltway and his native Chicago.

But some speeches would doubtless remain undelivered if there were no direct remuneration. A 1-435th share of a $10,000 fee is hardly worth the boredom of one's 20th trip to the Anaheim convention center. If so, the member's time is probably better spent in Washington legislating, or in his district talking with constituents.

Honoraria are of course not the only rewards or incentives for representatives and senators to give speeches. Their out-of-town speaking engagements are often little more than expense-paid vacations.

Another virtue of the proposed system to pool honoraria is that it can easily be modified to address the issue of such junkets.

The cost of congressional travel for public appearances could be paid out of the honoraria pool instead of by sponsoring organizations. Mutual self-interest and fiscal prudence would soon lead to guidelines specifying "legitimate" travel expenses — coach-class airfares and reasonable hotel allowances, for example.

Early Eastern Belt Leaf Prices Up From 1988

By Paul Nowell
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

FAIRMONT — Sales on flue-cured tobacco markets were generally 5 cents a pound higher than a year ago, about what many growers and officials had expected.

"For the year we had, I would say it is a fair price," said grower Sammy Allen of Robeson County. "It's not that good a quality. It had too much water on it, and it is thinner than usual."

Tobacco sales opened Monday on the South Carolina-Border North Carolina Belt, and kicked off today on the Eastern Belt.

In early sales today at the Farmers New Dixie Warehouse in Kinston, prices were running about 10 cents a pound above last year. Early sales ranged from $1.25 to $1.55 per pound for primings.

Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., was on hand for opening ceremonies in Kinston, and focused on the quality of this year's crop.

"Forty-six percent of our crop goes overseas and the export market here is very good, so I do emphasize quality," Helms said, adding that Brazil is becoming a top world competitor in the tobacco market.

In Monday's sales, the N.C. Agriculture Department reported primings at the 10 markets holding auctions were selling from $1.38 to $1.51 per pound. Most lugs went for $1.50 to $1.55 — up about 6 cents over last year's opening — and nondescript ranged from $1.30 to $1.35, also up about 6 cents.

"These prices are about what we expected, based on Georgia-Florida sales," said W.C. Williford, sales supervisor of the Lumberton Tobacco Market.

The average for the day was up $14.26 per hundred pounds from opening day 1988, according to preliminary figures from the Federal-State Market News Service. On Monday, 3,932,414 pounds were sold at a value of $6,165,652 for an average of $156.79 per hundred pounds. On opening day last season, 4.4 million pounds averaged $142.53 per hundred and 0.4 percent of sales was placed under loan.

Higher prices provided welcome news to growers troubled this season with cooler-than-usual weather and late rains.

But state Agriculture Commissioner Jim Graham, speaking in Lumberton, said excess rain may have washed away chances for 1989 to be a billion-dollar year for tobacco sales, as had been predicted earlier.

"We might not quite make it, because it's a light crop," he said, meaning the extra moisture robbed some leaf of its body.

The state's top crop has exceeded $1 billion in sales five times in history — 1978, 1980, 1981, 1982 and 1984. Last year, the state's total of 532 million pounds netted about $900 million.

Vernon Ivey, 65, of Fairmont, said many farmers have been hampered by the unseasonable rains which have made it difficult to get their leaf into the barns.

"There's been too much water at times, but the season's been pretty good. Let's wait to see how things go," he said.

Ivey said his costs are up about 20 percent over last year, largely because of labor costs.

"We were late getting started," said Charlie Davis, who has 24 acres of tobacco near Lumberton. "Then we had a problem with our plants yellowing. And now we're late getting it out."

Still, Davis said he plans to stick with the crop.

"There's still more profit in tobacco than there is in soybeans and corn," he said.

But some growers were not happy. "It's selling too cheap. They're stealing it," grower E.J. Sellers said, as he sat on a pile of tobacco in Columbus County Warehouse. "They're like everybody else; they want a handout," he said of buyers.

N.C. House Resurrects Veto Bill

By Dennis Patterson
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — The state House has reversed itself and voted to reconsider veto power for the governor after being told that Gov. Jim Martin would support four-year terms for legislators as part of a "balance-of-power" package.

House Speaker Joe Mavretic, in a memo circulated to House members Monday night, said Martin had "agreed in principle" to four-year terms for legislators. He said the veto measure, which was killed in the House last week, would be sent to the House Rules Committee while he negotiates with Martin.

"The bill that would not die," said Rep. Roy Cooper, D-Nash, the chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, which had labored for weeks to develop the veto package that failed last week.

The House voted 55-29 to reconsider the vote that killed the bill and 55-35 to send it to the Rules Committee.

Mavretic spokesman Tim Kent said members of the Martin administration had approached Mavretic on Friday asking how the veto referendum could be saved.

"The answer was the same as Day One," Kent said, "to put the veto in a balance-of-powers referendum. The ball is now in the governor's court."

Ward Purrington, Martin's legislative lobbyist, said the governor would endorse a package if an acceptable one can be developed in the Rules Committee.

"The next step is in the Rules Committee," Purrington said. "I think if we can get a good plan put together, the governor will certainly go out and stump for it. It's something he has done very effectively in the past."

The Judiciary Committee struggled for weeks to develop a package, but could not find a plan that could attract the 72 votes needed for passage in the House. Since the measure involved a constitutional amendment, it must be approved by three-fifths of the 120 House members.

Mavretic's coalition of Republicans and dissident Democrats is about 10 votes short of the 72 needed for passage, but Kent said the four-year terms could generate the extra votes needed to pass the plan.

Reaching compromises on some details could prove tricky — among them, when the veto referendum would be held, if the veto would apply to Martin, and the timing of legislative elections if legislators obtain four-year terms.

Senate OKs Referendum On Lottery; House Next

By Dennis Patterson
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — After rejecting it twice this decade, the state Senate has given final approval to a referendum on whether North Carolina should establish a state lottery.

The 27-22 vote Monday night sends the measure to the House, where it is expected to face stiff opposition.

Sen. Howard Bryan, R-Iredell, asked senators to vote against the measure, saying North Carolina is a state that has always promoted thrift, and a lottery would run against that tradition.

"If we're selling lottery tickets, we're saying to that poor person to take his last dollar, his last few dollars, for lottery tickets," Bryan said. "We're saying to him that there's his hope to become a millionaire."

"We're sending the wrong message," Bryan said. "I think we should say to people there is a way, there is hope. Take that one dollar and put it with another dollar, save it. That's the way."

But Sen. Kenneth Royall, D-Durham, who backed the measure this year and in unsuccessful attempts in 1983 and 1985, said the bill would only give voters the right to be heard.

"This simply gives the people of North Carolina the right to vote, one of the great privileges we have and one of the great privileges we cherish," said Royall. He said polls indicate that 64 percent to 89 percent of the state's residents favor a lottery, which would raise the equivalent of a 1/2-cent sales tax increase.

Before giving the bill final approval, the Senate agreed to an amendment that would make it illegal for merchants to use lottery tickets as premiums or to sell lottery tickets for more than their official price.

Sen. David Parnell, D-Robeson, asked Royall what it would cost the state to set up the lottery, but Royall said that funding would have to be approved next year if voters approve a lottery this November.

Parnell asked if the measure was an attempt to bind future legislators to spending the money for start-up costs.

"If the people vote for it and you decide not to fund it, that's up to you," Royall said.

Parnell asked that legislative staffers present an estimate of the start-up costs before a vote was taken, but that request was denied.

In other legislative action:

ChemNuclear, the company selected to operate North Carolina's low-level hazardous waste site beginning in 1993, must consider technical factors as well as "public acceptability" in a final site, a legislative panel was told.

The Joint Select Low-Level Radioactive Waste Committee questioned the "public acceptability" standard and whether ChemNuclear would have the final say on such a subjective factor.

Fred Snyder of Ebasco Services, which has done preliminary site selection work for the state's Low-Level Radioactive Waste Authority, said the factor would come into play if technically suitable land included towns, highways or other features that would make it unacceptable.

"True, nobody is going to welcome this facility with open arms," Snyder said. "But the site that is to be picked has to look like it fits the facility."

ChemNuclear is taking over the site selection process from Ebasco Services and will recommend a number of sites as technically suitable.

Postponement Sought

CHARLOTTE (AP) — Citing prejudicial pretrial publicity, attorneys for PTL founder Jim Bakker have asked that his fraud and conspiracy trial be postponed until October.

The trial is scheduled to open Aug. 28, with jury selection set for one week earlier.

In a motion filed in U.S. District Court, attorneys Harold Bender and George T. Davis complained about the publicity surrounding last month's trial of former PTL aides David and James Taggart.

The Taggart brothers were convicted of tax evasion on July 25. They will be sentenced Aug. 25 — three days before Bakker and Richard Dortch, Bakker's former top deputy at PTL, are scheduled to go on trial.

Public Hearing

CHARLOTTE (AP) — Proposed state regulations that would limit the release of more than 100 toxic chemicals into the air are the subject of a public hearing on Wednesday.

The regulations are designed to protect health by reducing the risks of cancer and the chemicals' toxic effects. The hearing will be conducted by Dr. Gladys Van Pelt of Greensboro, a member of the N.C. Environmental Management Commission.

The hearing will be held at 1 p.m. Wednesday in the auditorium of the Mecklenburg County Department of Environmental Protection in Charlotte.

Quake Jolts San Francisco Bay Area

By Catalina Ortis
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SAN FRANCISCO — A sharp earthquake jolted the San Francisco Bay area for 10 seconds early today, shaking buildings, breaking glass and apparently causing one man to jump to his death from a fifth-story apartment window, authorities said.

The quake occurred at 1:13 a.m. PDT and had a magnitude of 5.1 on the Richter scale, according to both the U.S. Geological Survey in nearby Menlo Park and the USGS National Earthquake Information Center in Golden, Colo.

It was centered on the San Andreas fault about 13 miles south of San Jose. The quake was felt throughout a wide area, as far away as San Luis Obispo, about 230 miles south of San Francisco.

An aftershock measuring 4.2 rippled through the area at 1:44 a.m.

Police in Los Gatos, about 50 miles south of San Francisco, said an unidentified 19-year-old man apparently was asleep when the earthquake occurred. Officers believe he was startled awake and jumped out of his bedroom window, dispatcher Lisa Douglas said in a statement.

There were no other immediate reports of injuries.

The epicenter was in almost exactly the same place as a 5.0 magnitude quake on June 27, 1988, said USGS geophysicist Dave Oppenheimer.

The quake occurred as state and federal emergency services officials prepared to conduct a test today and Wednesday of their response to a catastrophic earthquake.

"There was some damage in the Santa Cruz Mountains ... It was mainly broken windows and mirrors. Nothing serious," said Officer Jay Forbes of the San Jose Police Department.

The false ceiling in a vacant Los Gatos business came down, and about half a dozen businesses reported broken windows, police said.

"I felt a little rumble and then all the windows started shaking real bad," said Chris Soliday, 21, a clerk at a 7-Eleven all-night market in Sunnyvale. "Some stuff in the aisles fell down. There's broken glass, dented cans, some beer bottles broken," he said.

The shaking sent rocks tumbling onto state highways 9 and 17, said a Santa Cruz County Sheriff's Department emergency dispatcher who declined to give her name. "They cleared the debris by hand and all roads are now cleared," she said.

Residents shaken awake by the tremor described it as jolting and rolling.

"It felt like I was having my bed rolled around on a skateboard. I woke up and I was moving," said Henry J. Peterson of Santa Clara, next to San Jose.

"It was the strongest I've ever felt," said Bernie Beck, 38, who lives in San Francisco's Haight-Ashbury district.

"I live in an old building that was built after the 1906 quake, and it really had me going," Beck said. "It felt like you were sitting on a saw horse, rocking back and forth."

The April 18, 1906, quake, which occurred before the Richter scale was devised, has been estimated at 8.3 on the scale. Recent estimates say more than 2,000 people died in the quake and the fire it touched off, which burned much of the city.

The open-ended Richter scale is a measure of the energy released by an earthquake, as measured by ground motion recorded on a seismograph.

Each increase of one number, as in a jump from magnitude 5.5 to 6.5, means that the ground motion is 10 times greater. A quake of 3.5 can cause slight damage in populated areas, while a quake of 6.0 can cause severe damage. In March 1964 an earthquake in Alaska hit 8.5 on the Richter scale, killing 114 people.

Contract For New Landing Systems Canceled By FAA

By Paul Page
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The government says it still plans to bring a new generation of landing systems to the nation's airports by the end of the century despite falling three years behind schedule and canceling the main contract.

The Federal Aviation Administration on Monday ended a $79 million contract with the Hazeltine Corp. to build 178 microwave landing systems and said it will ask for new contractors' proposals later this year.

The company was chosen in 1984 to build systems that are to replace the instrument landing systems used for years at most airports.

In a prepared statement, the FAA said engineering and production problems at the Commack, N.Y.,-based company have delayed the program by three years.

But the FAA said it remains committed to putting the new microwave landing systems at major U.S. airports in 1998 and at all airports around 2000.

Hazeltine has delivered two of the systems sought in the contract. One has been installed at the Lebanon, N.H., airport.

The FAA said it will buy 26 systems from other sources, test that equipment and then decide whether to move ahead. The FAA said it plans to award a new contract in 1991.

Hazeltine, through its parent Emerson Electric Co. of St. Louis, said it will sue over the FAA decision.

The microwave landing system is intended to give pilots greater flexibility in their landing approaches at airports and help airports increase their flight capacity.

The system uses high-frequency microwaves to direct planes to landings, allowing them to make curved and steeper approaches outside the strict paths necessary under the current system. The system is virtually immune to weather hazards.

In its letter to Hazeltine, the FAA said the company has "failed to perform and deliver in accordance with the schedule of the subject contract."

But Hazeltine blamed the government for production delays, saying problems involving payments and timing of deliveries were the result of changes the FAA made in the contract after it was awarded.

The agency had planned on putting new microwave systems at the Laconia and Manchester airports in New Hampshire, but FAA spokesman John Leyden said that because of the delays it may put early systems at high-profile, high-volume airports such as John F. Kennedy International in New York.

The FAA plans to buy 750 of the new systems, if Congress approves.

Dognappers Grab Council Member's Pet To Make Point

By Arlene Levinson
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

HOPKINTON, R.I. — Kelly, mother of seven litters and beloved golden retriever of Town Council President Sandra Johanson, is missing, the victim of what looks like a political dognapping.

It started as nothing more than a lost dog story.

But Kelly's disappearance turned sinister after 12 hours when a man telephoned Mrs. Johanson's home and said:

"Get off the council and you'll get your dog."

Monday, one week after Kelly's disappearance, Mrs. Johanson calmly retold the mysterious story, weary from grief-stricken appeals on radio and television and a week of sleepless nights.

Ginger and Chris, Kelly's daughter and former mate, respectively, are upset, Mrs. Johanson said.

"The entire family is devastated. We haven't been right for a week," she said.

It all began the night of July 31. That was the last time anybody saw Kelly. The 7-year-old canine had been let out for her nightly cavort with Ginger to range over the Johanson's 64 acres in this community of chicken and dairy farms and plantations of sod for suburban lawns.

At 9:15 p.m. Ginger came home — alone.

Mrs. Johanson, a Republican housewife and lifelong resident of this town of 6,700, 45 miles south of Providence, said the apparent dognapping is the work of a sick mind rather than a political foe. Rumors have sprung up nevertheless.

The 48-year-old Mrs. Johanson entered politics five years ago by running for the five-member town council. She quickly moved to the top to become the first woman chief executive in this town, incorporated in 1757.

"I shouldn't have any enemies," Mrs. Johanson said, cradling one of Kelly's latest puppies from a litter of nine.

But it has been widely speculated that Mrs. Johanson's missing dog is somehow related to the controversial firing last November of the town dump custodian and the highway supervisor. The latter was later reinstated, then resigned.

Mrs. Johanson refused to comment about this, saying only that her vote for dismissal was just one of five unanimous votes and that the matter is the subject of a court suit over alleged mismanagement of town property.

"I'm not pointing the finger at anybody," she said.

Others disagreed.

The general feeling around town, said Lorraine Russo, temporary town clerk, is "It's a personal vendetta against this woman."

And Police Chief George Weeden has speculated the apparent dognapping had something to do with "hard feelings from somewhere in the past."

Weeden said Monday that he has no suspects but lots of tips. "It's an important case to us," he said. "It's sensitive. It's a family pet."

Mrs. Johanson's fondness for her dogs is well known.

A framed family portrait of Kelly, Ginger and Christopher adorns the kitchen of the Johansons' 18th-century farmhouse.

The dogs regularly play ball on the beach, Mrs. Johanson said. "They go get the newspapers on Sunday mornings. They go shopping, they go visiting with us."

There is a reward for Kelly's return, but Mrs. Johanson won't say how much. "How can you put a price tag on someone who is part of your family?"

The Johansons held a family powwow to decide whether Mrs. Johanson should quit for the sake of Kelly's return. For now at least, they decided against abdicating, dog or no dog.

Plan Sets Deadline For Contras To Demobilize

By John Wright
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TELA, Honduras — Five Central American leaders have signed a plan to disband the U.S.-backed Nicaraguan rebels by December, and President Daniel Ortega called on Washington to respect the Contras' "death sentence."

"In this way the United States can contribute to peace in Nicaragua and Central America," the Nicaraguan leader said Monday night upon returning to Managua from a three-day summit at this Honduran beach resort.

The 120-day plan, laid out in a set of three accords signed Monday, set a 30-day deadline for a combined U.N.-Organization of American States observer mission to organize itself and another 90 days for the Contras to demobilize.

State James A. Baker III said he could not comment because he had not seen a text of the pact.

Baker noted that the Esquipulas agreement, a Central American accord signed two years ago, says any Contra demobilization must be carried out under conditions of safety and democracy in Nicaragua and must be voluntary.

"I don't think the Central American democracies would do anything to change the terms of the agreement that they have put forth," Baker said.

If the full 120 days from Monday were used, Dec. 5 would be the deadline for the new plan. The accords do not mention the consequences of any delay, but deadlines in previous Central American agreements have often been observed more in the breach.

The Central American nations must "find enough will to go along with the accords" if they are to stick, said Costa Rican President Oscar Arias, who won a Nobel Peace Prize for initiating the regional peace process more than two years ago.

It was not immediately clear whether the Contras are willing to surrender their arms, but assuming Honduras lives up to its word the Contras would have no territory from which to operate.

"We have signed a death sentence for the Contras," said Ortega. He called on the United States to support the accords, cease "aggression" and lift its economic embargo on Nicaragua.

The Contras have been reduced to making sporadic attacks since last year, when the United States cut off military aid. Non-lethal aid continues at a rate of $4.5 million a month, with the stipulation that it can be used for disbanding and resettling the Contras.

"This is a very difficult situation for the Nicaraguan people. We have been fighting for 10 years to achieve peace and democracy for our country and now we feel abandoned," Contra spokeswoman Azucena Ferrer said in Miami.

The Central American presidents agreed to ask the United Nations to provide observers and verify the demobilization. Canada, West Germany and Spain already have volunteered to send observers under U.N. auspices.

The accords also call for a cease-fire in the 9-year-old Salvadoran civil war, but have no provisions for enforcement.

The presidents had already agreed to dismantle the Nicaraguan rebels at a summit last February in El Salvador, but a 90-day deadline for working out the details passed without notice.

In the meantime, Ortega set elections for next Feb. 25 and obtained an agreement with his domestic opposition that undermined the Contras by calling for their dissolution.

El Salvador's civil war has left 70,000 dead, according to independent estimates, while the Nicaraguan government says the conflict with the Contras has claimed at least 50,000 dead.

Palmer Says Anti-Nuclear Stance Will Continue For U.S. Warships

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WELLINGTON, New Zealand — The man elected today to succeed outgoing Prime Minister David Lange said he intends to maintain a tough anti-nuclear decree that bans U.S. warships from New Zealand ports.

"Our nuclear policy won't be changed," Deputy Prime Minister Geoffrey Palmer told a news conference after being named head of the governing Labor Party today. Lange, 47, resigned Monday amid party wrangling over economic policy, citing health reasons.

"We want to have dialogue with the Americans, we want to have discussions, but I wouldn't want to suggest that there is going to be any prospect of immediate change in that respect at all," Palmer said.

The U.S. State Department said Monday that it hoped the next prime minister would reassess the policy that led to the collapse of the ANZUS military alliance with America and Australia.

Lange arranged to visit Gov.-General Sir Paul Reeves today to formally submit his resignation. Upon acceptance of the resignation, Palmer was to formally become prime minister.

Helen Clark, 40, who was health minister, will become deputy prime minister.

Palmer, 47, former attorney-general and justice minister, was elected leader of the traditionally left-leaning Labor Party at a meeting of the party's caucus following Lange's sudden announcement that he was resigning after five years.

Lange said he wanted to step down while he was still on top. He suffered a heart attack a year ago.

He noted recent opinion polls show his personal popularity and that of his Labor Party government are increasing.

But observers pointed to party infighting over the economy and last week's reappointment to the Cabinet of Roger Douglas, a conservative archrival of Lange who Lange dismissed as finance minister last year.

Lange's government denied permission for U.S. warships to enter

New Zealand ports in 1984 because Washington refused to confirm or deny whether specific ships carried atomic weapons.

The United States in 1986 retaliated by suspending all military cooperation with the government in Wellington, making it impossible to operate the Australian-New Zealand-U.S. (ANZUS) defense alliance.

State Department spokesman Richard Boucher said Monday: "We are hopeful ... that Prime Minister Lange's successor will reassess New Zealand's anti-nuclear policy."

"We hope he will address with us the differences between our two countries on security-related issues," he said.

There was no immediate reaction to Lange's resignation from France, which was embroiled in a major diplomatic row with New Zealand after French agents in 1985 bombed the environmentalist ship Rainbow Warrior in Wellington harbor, causing the death of a Dutch photographer.

Explosion Kills 18

MOSCOW (AP) — A worker who lit a match in a basement where he was investigating a gas leak ignited an explosion that killed 18 people in the Ukraine, the Communist Party daily Pravda reported today.

The explosion Monday ripped through a five-story apartment house in Mogilev-Podolsky, about 660 miles southwest of Moscow, bringing down part of the building and destroying 20 apartments, the paper said.

Gas had accumulated from a leak in the building's basement, Pravda said. Two maintenance workers were dispatched to investigate, and one, identified as V. Marushchak, "lighted a match, and the explosion followed."

Marushchak was killed, but his companion survived, along with five other tenants, Pravda said.

More than 600 Soviets, many of them children, were killed in the Ural Mountains last June when sparks from a passing train ignited gas that had leaked from a major pipeline.

Ten Believed Dead In Crash

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WELLINGTON, New Zealand (AP) — A twin-engine sightseeing plane carrying four Americans and five Canadians crashed into a South Island mountain today and all aboard are feared dead, police said.

A New Zealander was piloting the Britten Norman Islander, which came down this afternoon near Mt. Aspiring, between Milford Sound and Wanaka, rescue coordinator Bob Randal said.

"It's thought that all those on board perished," he said.

The cause of the crash was not immediately known. Police did not release the names and hometowns of the 10 people on board.

Wreckage from the Aspiring Air plane was scattered about 4,000 feet up a mountainside, and was spotted by a Queenstown helicopter pilot shortly after the plane was reported missing, police said.

Two helicopters with medical personnel went to the crash site and reported from the air that there appeared to be no survivors.

Randal said rescuers hope to recover the bodies later in the day. However, he said there remained the threat of avalanches in the steep, mountainous area.

Weather Satellite Launch Fails

TOKYO (AP) — A three-stage rocket carrying a weather satellite failed to lift off today when one of its three engines misfired during countdown at a space center in southern Japan, officials said.

The $81 million H-1 rocket, capable of sending a 1,200-pound satellite into geostationary orbit, failed to lift off at the National Space

Development Agency on Tanegashima Island, 616 miles southwest of Tokyo, said NASDA spokesman Junji Oda.

It was the space agency's first failure in 20 rocket launchings since the agency successfully sent up the N-1 type rocket in 1975, Oda said.

He said the reason for the mishap was unknown.

Accent Perceptions And Reality Need To Balance

By John Y. Powell

Several years ago the national press reported a tragedy: one of the world's most promising long-distance runners leaped from a bridge during a pre-Olympic marathon race. Like other such news, it was momentarily reported by the national media, but it was soon eclipsed by other events.

Several months later a reporter for a Pulitzer Prize-winning newspaper followed up the story. In a series of interviews, the reporter sensitively helped the former marathoner recall her thoughts and feelings which led up to her fateful leap. It was reported that this athletic, pre-medical student had been a high achiever throughout her life — an "A" student, a leader in school and community, and a fierce competitor who constantly desired to better her past achievements. The young athlete remembered that during her final marathon she fell behind the leaders. While she did not recall jumping from the bridge onto the railroad tracks below, she did remember feeling overwhelmed with despair because she could not live up to her own self-expectations. Fortunately her life was spared, but she suffered paralyzing spinal injuries that confined her to a wheelchair.

While most people would have judged this outstanding young person to be successful whether she won the race or not; in her own self-perception was a "failure." In reality through she was a "winner" — achieving goals that most people only dream of.

Under pressure our perceptions often override reality. We all, at times, suffer from this common human vulnerability. When we blunder we tend to depreciate ourselves with thoughts like, "I'm such a stupid person," when in fact our blunder was only one event amid a pattern of successful accomplishments.

Contributing to the tendency of perception taking precedent over reality are expectations that we maintain or exceed our highest level of past performance. The young marathoner was among the top dozen female runners in the world. Did she have freedom with such a lofty reputation to run an average race?

I have shared her story with my students at East Carolina University. In one class there were several college athletes. I asked how do they feel when they build up records of achievement — so many passes caught in football games or so many points scored in basketball — and then they fail to score up to their usual performance level? One keen student and excellent basketball player said after class, "That example hit me right between the eyes! We get trapped by success don't we?" She went on to exclaim, "I can't afford to make less than my scoring average — in fact I feel compelled to always improve it, and that's a lot of pressure!"

Similar feelings are experienced by salespeople who are not only expected to keep up with last year's performance but to meet next year's sales goal — an increase of 10 percent or so. The honor roll student has "slipped" when a "C" is earned even if it was in a particularly difficult subject area. Children often must live up to goals set by their parents rather than by themselves, or in the case of celebrity parents — up to the expectations of the public. Sometimes the publicity of being a child of a public figure is unbearable. For example, the son of General Douglas MacArthur has changed his name and now lives in anonymity.

I am not suggesting that we lower our personal goals as the quest for excellence is a satisfying and purposeful way of life. However from experience as a counselor and parent, I have learned that we must keep our perceptions in balance with reality. One primary way to do so is to be open with our feelings — especially with those we trust and love. What a difference it can make when we feel defeated to get a hug or words of encouragement. Anxiety and pressure tends to cloud our perceptions of reality, but friendships and acceptance refresh and renew us.

University studies and is preparing for a career in medicine.

Her Marriage Rules Need Counseling

Dear Abby: My wife, an attorney, seems more loyal to her profession than to me. I work at home, while she works downtown with her partner. We earn about the same income.

Here's the problem: My wife works six days a week. Her schedule leaves her so exhausted that she has created "rules" about the time we can spend together. I am not allowed to have breakfast with her, since she eats breakfast with her partner. She eats lunch downtown, and either eats dinner downtown or skips it. I am not allowed to plan any activities with her on weeknights, and am allowed one weekend activity, which cannot last for more than three or four hours. I do most of the housework, in addition to working full time. Don't ask about kids; we have sex every two or three months, if she's not too tired and doesn't have the flu or a backache.

On Sunday of our first anniversary, she stayed home so we could celebrate. But between 8:30 and 10 that morning, she had four phone conversations with her partner (who knew it was our anniversary). Although I told her I didn't like his constant intrusion, she refused to communicate any displeasure to him. Finally, I blew up, phoned him and ordered him to leave us alone for the rest of the day. Then she called him up and apologized for my behavior!

Dear Abby

She refuses to make any change in her work hours; in fact, they are growing longer. I understand that her partner works long hours and demands the same of her. A reduction might jeopardize their partnership. But what about our marriage? Am I "inconsiderate" to resent her rules, and want more of her time and loyalty? — Stumped In Skokie

Dear Stumped: You are not "inconsiderate" to resent your wife's rules — I think Her rules are inconsiderate. It appears that she is more concerned about her business partnership than her marriage.

You say nothing in your letter about love, sharing, caring, and all those things that make a marriage work — only a long list of "rules" telling you what you are not "allowed" to do.

If a couple ever needed marriage counseling, you do. Not all marriages are worth saving, and yours could be one of them — so I suggest you find out now, before either one of you invests any more time in this sad marriage.

Dear Abby: I trust your judgment. A while ago, I invited my grown niece, Janet (not her real name), to my home for a special dinner. I am a registered nurse and cooking is my hobby.

Well, Janet informed me that she was on a diet to lose weight, so if she comes to my home for dinner, I should not expect her to eat anything!

I was completely chagrined and disappointed, so I told her that since she did not intend to eat anything, there would be no point in coming to my home for dinner. Well, to make a long story short, she stayed home.

Afterward, I wrote to Janet, apologizing and explaining that I would have gladly prepared something she could have eaten, but she never acknowledged the letter.

I have felt terrible about this ever since. Tell me, Abby, what can I do to repair our relationship? — Made A Mistake

Dear Made: On her birthday, or perhaps on Valentine's Day or Christmas, send an appropriate "Can't we be friends?" card. After that, the ball is in her court. Let's hope Janet mellows with time. In holding a grudge, she hurts only herself.

Research Could Be Next 'Discovery'

If necessity really is the mother of invention, we all owe Patricia Mertz breakfast in bed for the rest of her life. The professor from the University of Miami is leading a quest for a cure for stinky feet.

"There is nothing like having to suffer from foot odor at home to stimulate research," she is quoted as saying. "I am going to find a cure for my son."

I don't want to overreact, but I'd put her vision right up there next to the discovery of penicillin, rocket fuel and elastic waistbands. How many years did women nurturers have to put up with ring-around-the-collar before a woman suggested, "Wash your crummy neck before you put a shirt on?"

The problem with kids' shoes is that nature is working against you. When kids are small and their feet are growing, you can put up with shoestrings stiff from being wet on and shoes that you don't dare put in the same room with the heat blowing. Parents live for the day when they can bronze them and the odor will be gone.

At Wits End

In high school, the growing process levels off and the same pair of gym shoes is worn to school/work/formal weddings/restaurants/football-games/dances. It doesn't matter how many pairs of shoes are lined up in teen-agers' closets, they wear one pair for three or four years. Does "take your breath away" have any meaning for you?

I suppose there are some cynics out there who think there are more important things to solve in this world than a kid wearing shoes that make your eyes water. I say to them they have never embarked on a vacation by car with all the windows up and a child who has his feet hanging over the front seat two inches from your face. Parents don't want to believe what they are smelling. So they eliminate the possibilities one by one:

— "Margaret, did you put ice in the cooler with the lunches? I smell raw sewage."

— "Did I hit a skunk in the road?"

— "All right, who sneaked the cat in the car?"

— "Raymond, you stepped in something. I'm going to stop the car. Get out and wipe your feet!"

If Professor Mertz comes up with a solution, this could change the way America travels. It could bring the family closer together. It could rid this nation of the major cause of air pollution.

She has already discovered that some foot odor is caused by a microbe that gives cheeses their bouquets. Researchers plan to sniff volunteers' feet to find out if their feet are carrying this germ.

They are the bravest people I've ever encountered.

Probe Ordered

 Carter read his statement over objections from council members Bill Hadden and Inez Fridley before going into executive session.
 "In view of the discrepancies in information disseminated by the concerned police officers and the management of the Greenville city government," Carter said in his statement, "I hereby recommend that the City Council retain an outside consultant who is skilled in conducting non-criminal management investigation, to investigate the concerns of all Greenville police officers."
 Carter recommended hiring Dr. Mike Swanson, a former East Carolina University staff member, to conduct the investigation.
 Hadden called the matter an internal problem for the police, and said the council should allow time for Tesmond to resolve any problems internally.
 "I feel we would be premature if we take any action on this now," Hadden said.
 King Gardner, field secretary of the SCLC, told Hadden the council had known about the problems since January.

"We did have an opportunity to get involved in some complaints," Carter said, agreeing with Gardner before the executive session, "but we elected not to get involved."
 When the City Council returned to open session, Carter said the council had agreed to allow the police department and the city manager's office more time to investigate.
 Gardner told the council of the SCLC's plans to involve the Justice Department, and said the allegations before the council were "just a scratch on the surface."
 Bennie Robert Rountree, the state and local president of the SCLC told the council, "It's way past time for us to be playing with small issues."
 Carter said today that the council had set a time period for Tesmond to solve any problems within the department, but he would not say how long.
 "We allowed them a reasonable period of time to investigate the concerns and initiate corrective actions," Carter said.
 "It is an internal matter and we will follow the directive of the City Council," Tesmond said today. The police chief also said he had "no problem" with the SCLC contacting the Justice Department.

Officials Visit Mart

 Helms cited the increase in foreign markets as a factor that has increased prices slightly. He said tobacco has done a lot for the balance of payments and net exports.
 He said that farmers need to produce the highest quality tobacco possible because if we do not produce high quality tobacco, we will lose our large share of the world market to other countries. Helms said that 46 percent of our tobacco is exported for sale.
 Congress recently passed an $897 million disaster relief bill but Helms said he was uncertain how that would affect North Carolina farmers. He said the uncertainty was because the bill was drafted "so hastily."
 Helms, who is on the agricultural committee, said, "I asked two or three of the other guys, 'Do you know what's on this bill?' and they said 'No.'"
 But Graham said, "I don't look for much of it (disaster relief) to come here."
 He said that a farm bill was in the works for next year but said he doesn't think a new bill needs passed.
 "I've always taken the position that if it ain't broke don't fix it," he said.
 Graham said the North Carolina market was doing much better than Georgia and Florida. He said the crop looks like it may do well but not as well as he had hoped.
 "It looks real good, one of the best ever," Graham said. "We were hoping for a billion-dollar crop but I don't think we're quite going to make it due to the fact that we have had the excessive moisture."
 Graham said it was more important that people don't "write agriculture off." "It's more important now than it was ever was," he said.
 On another issue in Washington, Helms said he was concerned over the events unfolding in the Middle East.
 Helms said he had to say "no comment" to the press for a couple of weeks when Moslem Shiites threatened to hang Lt. Col. William Higgins.
 Helms said that he believed that Higgins had been dead for about a year.
 "It is important that we don't criticize Israel for the way they handled the situation because they are our biggest ally in the Middle East," he said. "That would be like kicking your best friend in the shin."
 Helms said that he did not know who his opponent would be next year in the senatorial race but he wished whoever decides to run "good luck."
 "But not too much good luck," he added.
 Helms and Graham were scheduled to travel to Wilson following the Greenville visit.

family members tend 150 acres of tobacco, including her father's four acre allotment.
 "I listened to the first couple of rows," being auctioned, Mrs. Wood said and "it didn't sound like it was doing too good."
 But her father said, "I think it's selling mighty good."
 Mrs. Wood agreed with her father, however, when he suggested that the tobacco on the warehouse floor "looks better than normal for an opening day sale."
 While the average price paid for tobacco today won't be known until all the sales are ended and the figures can be tabulated, prices paid for piles of tobacco on the first row sold at Farmers Warehouse this morning ranged from $1.45 cents per pound to $1.51 cents per pound.
 Possibly more representative of what the rest of the tobacco sold on the market today would bring were prices paid for tobacco in the third row to be auctioned, where prices ranged from a low of $1.30 per pound to a high of $1.56.
 Of the 67 piles of tobacco in that row, 29 sold for $1.47 a pound, nine for $1.36 a pound, seven for $1.30 and one for $1.56, depending on the grade.

 Last year more than 39 million pounds of tobacco were sold in Greenville for an average of $159.50 per hundred pounds, with opening day sales averaging about $1.27 a pound, Kenneth Allen, sales supervisor of the Greenville market said last week.
 Allen, who had predicted an opening day average this year of about $1.45 a pound, said this morning shortly after the first sales started that today's average might reach $1.49 a pound, because of the large amount of carry-over tobacco from the 1988 season that was being offered for sale at some warehouses today.
 "There's not a lot of carry-over here" at Farmers Warehouse, Allen said. "I haven't seen much here." But gesturing toward the New Independent Warehouse nearby, Allen said "across the street, I bet 65 percent is carry-over."
 The N.C. Department of Agriculture this morning reported that primings on the 10 markets holding sales Monday were selling from $1.38 to $1.51 per pound, while sales of leaf on eastern belt markets which opened today were generally five cents a pound higher than a year ago.

During a brief market opening ceremony at Farmers Warehouse, Eugene James, chairman of the Pitt County Board of Commissioners said "tobacco is the biggest farm commodity in Pitt County," and added, "I hope the buyers will get in here and pay a good price for this tobacco."
 Mitch Smith, a tobacco expert and head of the county agricultural extension service office, told the gathering that great strides have been made over the past few years in improving the image of tobacco on the world market, both in its physical appearance and in terms of how it is produced.
 "This year, as in previous years," Smith said, "the best tobacco is that which is ripe, mature and low in residues and foreign matter."
 "Our farmers deserve a lot of the credit for changing the image of our tobacco. Because of their commitment to quality, export demand for tobacco is high and we are in an opportune position to re-establish the U.S. as the dominant supplier of flue-cured tobacco."
 Pitt County is the number one producer of flue-cured tobacco in the world.
 In 1988, Smith said, farmers raised a total of 15,326 acres of tobacco in the county, while the income from tobacco sales by Pitt farmers was $48 million.

Low Unemployment

RALEIGH (AP) — North Carolina's seasonally adjusted unemployment rate for July was the lowest among the 11 largest states in the nation, according to figures released by the U.S. Department of Labor.
 The rate decreased to 3.4 percent, 0.2 percent lower than last month and 0.2 percent higher than a year ago.
 Nationally, the unemployment rate showed a slight decrease from 5.3 percent in June to 5.2 percent in July, figures showed.
 While North Carolina had the lowest unemployment rate in July among the 11 largest states, Texas had the highest rate at 7.2 percent.

Shuttle Hauling Spy Satellite

 time was not made public until nine minutes before lift-off. Earlier, officials had said only that the launch would take place between 7:30 a.m. and 11:30 a.m.
 Liftoff was delayed about 40 minutes to allow fog to burn off.
 The mission is the fifth shuttle flight since launches resumed last September after a 2 1/2-year hiatus prompted by the Challenger disaster.
 Columbia, which flew the first shuttle mission in 1981, underwent 258 safety modifications after a failed rocket joint caused the Challenger explosion in 1986 that killed all seven crew members.
 The ship's return to space gives NASA a fleet of three orbiters to handle a heavier flight schedule. Three more flights are planned this year and nine in 1990.
 "I think the recovery process is over," said Forrest McCartney, director of the Kennedy Space Center. "We've modified all three birds, we've flown all three birds now, and that's something we can be proud of."
 Columbia's commander is Air Force Col. Brewster Shaw, a veteran of two previous missions. The other crew members are Navy Cmdr. Richard Richards, Army Lt. Col. James Adamson, Air Force Maj. Mark Brown and Navy Cmdr. David Leestma, who flew once previously on a shuttle.
 Although details are classified, sources close to the program said the astronauts will deploy a 10-ton satellite to gather intelligence over a wide area of the globe, including much of the Soviet Union, China and the Mideast.
 The satellite is designed to take highly detailed photographs of troop movements, military installations and other targets of interest.

 The sources said that the shuttle cargo bay holds scientific instruments for military research, possibly for the "Star Wars" missile defense project.
 The flight is the eighth for Columbia, the oldest of the shuttles, but its first since it flew the last mission before the Jan. 28, 1986, Challenger explosion.
 After the accident, NASA concentrated on modifying the newer orbiters, Discovery and Atlantis, using parts from Columbia. Discovery and Atlantis each have made two trips into space since post-Challenger flights resumed.
 During the flight, the astronauts were to check out the safety modifications made to Columbia. The shuttle is to land at Edwards Air Force Base, Calif. The exact day and time will be disclosed during the mission.
 The flight is the 30th for the shuttle program and the fourth dedicated solely to a Defense Department mission.
 The Pentagon had planned at least 13 more military shuttle launches through the 1990s, but after Challenger cut that seven, shifting several payloads to unmanned rockets to get away from reliance on a single launch vehicle.
 The Pentagon contends secrecy is necessary to make it more difficult for Soviet satellites and spy ships off Florida to monitor the flight and know its purpose.
 But critics argue that the Soviets, with their intelligence capabilities, undoubtedly already know a great deal about Columbia's mission and can track the crew precisely and know what it is doing.

Hostage

 But the independent newspaper An-Nahar said today there were indications Syria and Iran would "coordinate and intensify efforts to resolve the hostage issue and defuse the crisis."
 "This is expected to take its final shape when Iranian Foreign Minister Ali Akbar Velayati arrives in Syria soon for talks with President Hafez Assad's government," An-Nahar said in a report from its Damascus correspondent.
 Syria was Iran's main ally in the 8-year gulf war against Iraq, which ended in a U.N.-sponsored cease-fire last August.
 An-Nida, the organ of the pro-Moscow Lebanese Communist Party, quoted unnamed travelers from the Syrian capital as saying the government "may have been authorized by Iran and Hezbollah to negotiate the release of the Western hostages." It did not elaborate.
 Higgins, who commanded the U.N. peacekeeping force, was kidnapped near Tyre in south Lebanon on Feb. 17, 1988.
 Longest held of the U.S. hostages is Terry A. Anderson, chief AP Middle East correspondent. He was kidnapped nearly 4 1/2 years ago.
 President Bush on Monday paid tribute to Higgins during a ceremony at Ft. Myer, Va., to celebrate the 20th anniversary of the War Department, forerunner of the Department of Defense.
 In an emotion-filled voice, Bush said, "We cannot leave here today without pausing to salute one who stands as the symbol of the courage that burns in the breast of every American in uniform, one Marine who has been very much in our thoughts, Lt. Col. Higgins, William Richard Higgins."

Lawyers Say Rose Could Suffer Harm Cincinnati Great May Fall In The Eyes Of American's Youth If Disciplined

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

COLUMBUS, Ohio — Pete Rose will suffer irreparable harm, especially in the eyes of America's youth, if his newest bid to delay baseball's disciplinary proceedings against him is rejected, Rose's lawyers say.

Rose lawyer Robert G. Stachler filed a 20-page motion Monday asking U.S. District Judge John Holschuh to stay any disciplinary proceedings against the Cincinnati Reds manager while a dispute over jurisdiction in his suit against baseball is being resolved.

The motion said that if such proceedings take place and baseball Commissioner A. Bartlett Giamatti bans

Rose from the sport for betting on baseball games, it "will forever brand Pete Rose as dishonest in the public's eyes, particularly in the eyes of the youth of America."

Holschuh did not immediately rule on the motion. Stachler filed his motion just minutes after a closed-door meeting with Holschuh and lawyers for Giamatti.

The hour-long meeting, called by the lawyers for both sides, focused on "scheduling matters," according to baseball lawyer Louis Hoynes Jr. Neither he nor Giamatti's lawyer, John Elam, would elaborate.

Hoynes said, however, that neither side discussed a settlement in baseball's four-month investigation of gambling allegations against Rose.

"There are no plans for any deal, any at all," Hoynes said.

Stachler declined comment as he left the courthouse.

The motion came one week after Holschuh ruled that the Rose's suit against Giamatti belonged in a federal court, and not in the state court. It was in Hamilton County Common Pleas Court on June 25 that Rose won his bid for a temporary order protecting him from being fired and from any further action by Giamatti.

Holschuh's July 31 ruling extended those protections until Aug. 14.

But Rose's motion contends that since Giamatti won in federal court, he feels "no time pressure," and will proceed with disciplinary proceedings scheduled to begin Aug. 17.

Rose wants the stay order to last until there is a resolution of his appeal, which he is expected to file in the 6th Circuit Court of Appeals in Cincinnati this week. Rose, according to the motion, "believes that he is more than likely to win at the appellate level."

The motion also asks a stay in all further proceedings in the case because "the pressing issue to be resolved is federal jurisdiction, not the substantive merits of the controversy between the parties."

Rose's lawyers are expected to ask the appeals court to overturn Holschuh's decision to keep the case in federal court.

Freshmen Reporting For Duty

By Woody Peele
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

East Carolina University is expecting to welcome 22 scholarship freshmen and a number of walk-ons this afternoon as they report for three days of practice before the returning veterans come back.

ECU, under first-year coach Bill Lewis, signed 25 rookies to grants-in-aid, but two of those will not join the Pirates and a third is sidelined by an injury. Tim Moore, a running back from Greenville, signed a professional baseball contract while Rodney Jones, a tight end from Fayetteville, failed to meet Proposition 48 entrance requirements.

The other player, linebacker Jeffrey Cooke, suffered a knee injury in the East-West All-Star game in Greensboro last month, and it is uncertain when he will report.

The newcomers are to check in between 1 and 5 p.m. today, with a team meeting following supper. Wednesday, they will undergo physical exams and will have their first workout on Thursday from 3:30 to 6 p.m.

Two workouts are scheduled for Friday and one on Saturday, when the varsity players return to campus.

ECU has its Media Day scheduled for Sunday, with the annual "Meet the Pirates" day set for 3 to 4 p.m. in Ficklen Stadium that day. At that time, the general public is invited to stop in for autographs and pictures of their favorite players.

Monday, the entire team will work out together for the first time.

East Carolina will open the 1989 season on Sept. 9, entertaining Bowling Green.

No Prop. 48 Were Admitted In ACC

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — A report suggesting that eight Atlantic Coast Conference recruits failed to meet NCAA Proposition 48 academic standards failed to note that none of the players gained academic admission for the 1989-90 school year, conference officials say.

"We tell every player who wants to sign with us that he has to qualify academically in order to receive the scholarship," North Carolina State football coach Dick Sheridan said Monday.

"We didn't bring in a non-qualifier last year, and we aren't bringing in one this season."

Officials at the league's eight schools told the News and Observer of Raleigh on Monday that ACC schools will not admit any recruits who failed to meet NCAA Proposition 48 academic standards for the 1989-90 school year.

The Atlanta Journal-Constitution reported Sunday that a survey found that N.C. State and Wake Forest each had signed three players who failed to meet the Proposition 48 minimum requirements of 700 on the Scholastic Aptitude Test and a C average in college-preparatory core curriculum subjects. The report said Georgia Tech and Virginia each signed one football player who did not meet the requirements.

But none of the eight players was presented to an admissions board, league officials said.

Wake Forest coach Bill Dooley, in a statement released by the school's sports information department, said all of the 21 recruits admitted to Wake Forest met Proposition 48 requirements.

"There was never any question of Wake Forest admitting any individual that didn't meet NCAA requirements," Dooley said. "The fact is that we thought each of these would be able to qualify, judging on their past academic achievement. The fact that they did not meet the college board minimum certainly does not mean they cannot be successful at the college level in the future."

Virginia and Georgia Tech officials said no Prop 48 athletic non-qualifiers had been admitted.

Since 1987, ACC schools have admitted one athletic non-qualifier.

The Journal-Constitution survey of 22 Southern schools found that 30 of 539 football recruits had failed to meet Prop 48 requirements. But the report did not state how many of the players had been admitted as students.

Sheridan said his staff had never signed, or actively recruited, a prospect who did not meet the core curriculum aspect of the Proposition 48 requirements.

"But if a youngster has a three-year classroom average of C — and in many cases a B or even better than that — in the college preparatory courses and hasn't received his college board scores, you do recruit him," Sheridan said.

In basketball, where students are allowed to sign scholarships during a one-week period in mid-November, few prospects have taken their college board tests by the signing period.

"Players in situations where they haven't taken the test or received their score are told that they still have to meet the requirements and go through the admissions process before they can qualify for the scholarship," Sheridan said. "We make that very clear to them and their families."

Among all NCAA Division I football and basketball conferences, the ACC had the fewest non-qualifiers on its rosters for the 1988-89 school year — a total of six in football and none in basketball, according to the NCAA.

Pierson Contract Extended To 1991

By Tom Morris
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

East Carolina women's basketball coach Pat Pierson received a two-year extension of her contract this year, prolonging her original pact through the 1991 season.

Pierson's contract was made available Monday in compliance with a recent Superior Court decision declaring coach's contract at state schools to be a matter of public record.

The Associated Press filed a law suit March '80 asking that contracts of coaches at North Carolina, North Carolina State,

Pat Pierson

East Carolina, UNC-Wilmington and Western Carolina be made available.

Last week, a judge ruled the contracts public record and gave the schools until Aug. 8 to comply. The state attorney general's office released the information Aug. 4.

Over the weekend, ECU made available copies of contracts for Athletic Director Dave Hart, head football coach Bill Lewis and head basketball coach Mike Steele.

Monday, Hart released a copy of the contract of Pierson, while also releasing information on the contract of ECU baseball coach Gary Overton, who is under a joint appointment with the school since he also teaches in the Physical Education Department.

Pierson, who took over at ECU in 1987 and has a two-year record of 23-33, signed a contract March 13 that takes her through March 31, 1991 at a salary of $32,000 a year.

The salary is reviewed yearly. Pierson is also given a courtesy car from the university, which also pays for the insurance costs on the automobile.

Hart said Overton earns $30,000 a year in his duties. He also is provided with a car and subsequent insurance coverage by the university.

Overton, who has a one-year contract, has been a teacher and coach for the Pirates long enough to be considered for tenure, but joint positions are not able to be tenured.

In four years of coaching at ECU, Overton has a 168-66 record, including two Colonial Athletic Association championships.

Pierson's contract is a one-page document. Steele and Lewis both have six-page contracts that spell out salary and benefits; coaches television shows; public appearances; summer camps; commercial endorsements; rules and regulations; public announcements; possible amendments and causes for termination.

Hart said Pierson and all the ECU coaches were under the same rules and regulations; public announcements, amendments and causes for termination.

"It's not a mystery that any violation of NCAA violations would be cause for termination," Hart said. "It's in her's. It's in everybody's."

Los Angeles Hopes Divac Will Fill Jabbar's Shoes

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

INGLEWOOD, Calif. — The Los Angeles Lakers expect a few problems in bringing Yugoslavia's top basketball player to this country, but say his game won't be one of them.

The Lakers became the third NBA team this year to come to terms with an Eastern European player when they signed 7-foot-1 center Vlade Divac, a first-round draft pick who had played for the Partizan team in his hometown of Belgrade.

"Basketball is a game where you can throw a basketball out there and a guy that has the skills and the ability will know how to play the game," Lakers general manager Jerry West said. "We think this is one of his strong points."

"He knows how to play basketball. This is something we don't have to teach."

In the past three seasons with Partizan, Divac averaged about 20 points and 11 rebounds per game and shot 60 percent from the field. Laker officials said more detailed statistics were not available.

Divac, 21, helped lead Yugoslavia to a silver medal in the 1988 Olympics at Seoul, averaging 11.7 points and 6.5 rebounds. In last year's McDonald's Open in Spain, he had nine points and eight rebounds against the Boston Celtics.

"He's more comfortable as a center, but he's adjustable," interpreter Alex Omalev said. "Most of the time he's played the low post."

The Lakers hope Divac's scoring and rebounding abilities can help fill the void left by the retirement of Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, a player whom Divac cited as his role model in the NBA.

The team appears confident that Divac can fit well into Coach Pat Riley's system.

"He obviously is not well known to the people in the United States, but he's one of the premier players outside the country," West said before giving the Yugoslav a jersey bearing No. 12, the number Riley wore when he played for Los Angeles in the early 1970s.

As evidence of his fame in his native country, Divac's wedding this summer to his wife, Snezana, was televised nationally and attended by more than 1,000 guests, West said.

The most obvious barrier to Divac's success in the NBA is his inability to speak English. He understands some but speaks little.

The most he had to say to reporters Monday was to offer his opinion of a Sunday night's charity pro exhibition: "very, very good game."

The Lakers have retained Omalev, a basketball teacher at California State-Fullerton whose parents were born in Yugoslavia, to be Divac's interpreter during his first weeks here.

But following training camp, the Lakers expect their newest player to make it on his own.

"We want him to Americanize," West said. "We do not, frankly, want an interpreter around all the time."

"We don't want to treat him differently. We want him to be like our other players and do the same things our other players are asked to do, knowing there are going to be times when there is a problem with communication," he said.

Beginning Wednesday, Divac and his wife will undergo seven weeks of intensive English training that the team hopes will eliminate much of the language barrier.

A barrier the Lakers said they didn't encounter was in signing the Yugoslav star. Under the terms of his multiyear contract, which were not disclosed, the Lakers paid Partizan for the rights to their player, according to his agent, Mark Fleisher.

"His club general manager agreed to let him leave basically because it was good for basketball in Yugoslavia, and would be good for younger players," Fleisher said.

He said other teams shied from Divac because of the acculturation hurdle.

"When push came to shove they were afraid to take the chance," he said.

Dolphins Release Ex-Buc McKinney

MIAMI — Former East Carolina running back Reggie McKinney was waived by the Miami Dolphins Monday, team officials announced.

McKinney, who played tailback and slot back for ECU, was not drafted in the National Football League Collegiate Draft in May. He signed with the Dolphins as a free agent.

He was released on the same day the Dolphins announced the signing of veteran running back Lorenzo Hampton.

Coroner Orders Toxicology Test For Toran

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Autopsy results showed that Los Angeles Raiders strong safety Stacey Toran died of multiple head and chest injuries after being thrown from his car in an auto accident.

The Los Angeles County Coroner's Office completed the autopsy and ordered several toxicology tests to be run, but results won't be available for several days, said spokesman Bob Dambacher.

Toran, 27, was killed after he lost control of his 1984 BMW on a curve just one block from his Marina del Rey home late Saturday night, police said. He was pronounced dead at the scene.

Arena Coach Back After Punching Show

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Joe Haering was reinstated as the Pittsburgh Gladiators' coach, two weeks after being suspended for punching Arena Football commissioner Jim Foster.

Ray Jauch, the indoor league's operations director, suspended Haering on July 24 for punching Foster in the jaw during a brawl in Sacramento, Calif. Foster had come on the field to urge officials not to eject opposing quarterback Ben Bennett because fans wanted the passer to remain in the game. Haering became angry and hit Foster, believed to be the first time a coach has ever punched a commissioner in any American professional sport.

Warriors Acquire Lister From Sonics

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) — The Golden State Warriors acquired center Alton Lister from the Seattle SuperSonics in exchange for a first-round draft choice in 1990.

Lister has started on and off for the SuperSonics for the last five seasons after beginning his career with the Milwaukee Bucks, who drafted him out of college at Arizona State.

U.S. Women's Team Clinches Title Berth

SAO PAULO, Brazil (AP) — The United States' women's basketball team clinched a berth for next year's world championship by defeating the Dominican Republic 99-58 Monday in the America Cup tournament.

Brazil, Canada and Cuba will also advance; the top four finishers in the eight-team tournament represent the Americas next year in Malaysia.

Venus Lacy led the U.S. with 14 points, Andrea Stinson added 12 and Vicki Hall, the only player from the gold medal-winning team at the 1988 Seoul Olympics, scored 11. The United States is 2-0 in the tournament.

Also on Monday, Janet Fowler's 18 points led Canada to an easy 82-64 victory over Mexico.

Seedings in Malaysia will be determined by the medal round, which starts Thursday and runs through Aug. 13.

Simson Leads Amateur Qualifiers

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — Paul Simson of Raleigh led the field at Monday's sectional qualifying for the U.S. Amateur Championship, shooting a 71 and a 68 for a 5-under-par 139 at the Country Club of Virginia's James River Course.

Six berths to the U.S. Amateur were on the line Monday, and four of the spots went to golfers from North Carolina.

Joining Simson at the national championship Aug. 22-27 at the Merion Golf Club in Ardmore, Pa., will be Fred Widicus of Annandale, John Maginnes of Durham, John Minor of Richmond, Brian McDaniel of Henderson, and Mike Goodes of Reidsville. Widicus carded a 1-under 143, Maginnes and Minor had 145s and McDaniel and Goodes each shot 146.

The first alternate from the regional will be Tallent of Bethesda, Md., who shot a 146, and the second alternate will be Dicky Linkous of Roanoke, who had a 147.

Tom McKnight of Galax, the on-site qualifying medalist at last year's U.S. Amateur in Hot Springs, took a double bogey-7 on the last hole that left him at 147.

McKnight was joined at that figure by Sam Stein of Richmond, who advanced to the round of 16 last year in Hot Springs.

Freshman Arrive At USC, Furman

The waiting is over for South Carolina and Furman.

South Carolina first-year football coach Sparky Woods welcomed 19 freshmen to the campus Monday, while 24 first-year players and eight walk-ons arrived at Furman, the defending NCAA I-AA champions.

"We're excited about the freshmen we have coming in this fall in terms of quantity and quality, and we look forward to seeing how much each player has worked over the summer in preparation for fall drills," Furman coach Jimmy Satterfield said.

South Carolina State first-year coach Willie Jeffries welcomed his first crop of freshmen Sunday, while Clemson's first-year players arrive Friday. The Citadel's freshmen won't report until Aug. 15.

Furman's new players will undergo physicals Tuesday and begin practice on Wednesday. The Paladins veterans report Saturday.

Furman opens the season Sept. 2 at Clemson.

Along with the 19 freshmen, Woods also welcomed three other players to the school — tight end Charles Steward and defensive back Leon Harris, both NCAA Proposition 48 victims a year ago, and receiver Stacy Robinson, a 1988 signee who paid his own way last season while gaining academic eligibility.

"Most new football coaches, the first thing they do is recruit and then coach," said Woods, who was named head coach earlier this year following the death of Joe Morrison. "We're going to coach before we ever recruit."

South Carolina's new players will practice Wednesday. The veteran players will arrive Friday.

South Carolina opens the season Sept. 2 when the Gamecocks play host to Duke.

Bradshaw Book Hits Noll

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PITTSBURGH — Terry Bradshaw said his relationship with Pittsburgh Steelers coach Chuck Noll was often so strained "perhaps it's a miracle we ever went to the Super Bowl, let alone won four of them."

Bradshaw, inducted last Saturday into the Pro Football Hall of Fame and the only quarterback to win four Super Bowls, writes in a soon-to-be published book that Noll abandoned and ignored him after an arm injury cut short his career in 1983.

"When I was injured late in my career, feeling insecure, unwanted and unneeded as a pro football player, like all injured players do, I felt Chuck was turning his back on me," Bradshaw wrote in the book "Looking Deep," to be published next month.

Excerpts were published in Tuesday editions of the Pittsburgh Post-Gazette.

"When the end came, I needed Chuck most of all and he wasn't there. ... I guess what I wanted Chuck to do was say, 'There will never be another Terry Bradshaw, what a great young man he is, what a thrill for this football team to have him as a quarterback.' I guess I wanted him to stroke my ego, to build me up, blow smoke so I could feel good about myself."

Bradshaw said Noll "dragged me around like an animal, screamed at me, wasn't there for me" early in his career, but "you could almost detect how my esteem had grown with Chuck, just by the way he placed his hands on me," as the Steelers began dominating the NFL.

When Bradshaw became a CBS-TV broadcaster, Noll "completely ignored me" on the field before a game.

"(Noll) just snapped his fingers and walked right on by. ... I know that he saw me and it was devastating to have your coach of more than 14 years act as though you were invisible," Bradshaw said.

Bradshaw's CBS-TV contract specifies he doesn't have to broadcast any Steelers games.

Noll told the Post-Gazette that he never intentionally slighted Bradshaw and "doesn't think there is a problem" although the two haven't talked in years.

"I wouldn't ignore him consciously," Noll said. "I may have been in another world before a game, but I wouldn't do that ever. We haven't crossed paths. ... There isn't a problem from my standpoint."

Sanders Is Arrested

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RICHMOND, Va. — New York Yankees farmhand Deion Sanders has gotten a postponement of a court hearing on charges he assaulted two fans, but the outfielder now faces disciplinary action from the organization.

"I'm planning something for him, but I haven't decided what yet," George Bradley, New York's vice president for player development and scouting, said Monday.

Sanders, who plays for the Yankees' Class AAA team at Columbus, Ohio, was arrested here Sunday night, several hours after the Clippers had lost a 16-4 International League decision to the Richmond Braves.

Richmond police charged Sanders with two misdemeanor assault counts for allegedly striking two fans after the game on the concourse of The Diamond, Richmond's park.

Sanders, who was released on a $5,000 bond, made a brief appearance Monday in Richmond General District Court. Judge Jose R. Davila Jr. explained the charges, told Sanders he was entitled to a lawyer, and continued the case until Aug. 17.

Sanders, accompanied by Columbus manager Bucky Dent, declined comment after the hearing.

The two rejoined the team at Richmond International Airport for a flight back to Columbus. In Monday night's game, Sanders hit a two-run, inside-the-park home run as the Clippers beat Scranton-Wilkes-Barre 5-4.

Dent said that Sanders, lifted for a pinch hitter in the ninth inning of Sunday's game, changed clothes and went to the concourse behind the Clippers' dugout, apparently looking for some hecklers.

The manager said Sanders, who was hitless in four at-bats in the game, denied hitting anyone.

"First of all, he's not supposed to leave the clubhouse," Dent said. "That's one mistake right there. You don't get dressed and just go up in the stands."

Bradley agreed with Dent. "But I'm not going to condemn him until all the facts are in," Bradley added. "I know one thing, and that's that Deion definitely did not belong where he was."

Sanders, a two-time All-America cornerback from Florida State, was the fifth player picked in this year's National Football League draft. He is negotiating a contract with the Atlanta Falcons while playing baseball in the Yankees organization.

"Terry, from day one, was outstandingly talented. He could throw the ball like nobody I've ever seen."

Bradshaw called Noll "a jerk" and said he should resign last year when the Steelers were 2-10, but later softened his stance and now hopes for a reconciliation.

Although Noll never called to congratulate him on making the Hall of Fame, Bradshaw credits the coach for developing his talent and now "regrets every negative thing I've ever said about my ex-coach and wish him nothing but the best."

"I want to go back to Pittsburgh and be able to walk out on the field ... stand next to Chuck and tell him I'm there to support him."

Despite their up-and-down relationship, Bradshaw said, Noll once invited him to stay at his house when his second marriage, to ice skater Jo Jo Starbuck, was collapsing.

"Chuck Noll was right in the way he handled me because it made me a better quarterback," Bradshaw said. "I've always responded better to adverse conditions, and Chuck was probably smarter than I gave him credit for being. He knew how to bring out the best in me as a football player, although I always felt he didn't understand me as a person."

In his book, Bradshaw describes how John Stallworth replaced Lynn Swann as his favorite receiver and that Joe Greene "was my best friend on the team ... although we hardly did much together off the field except play a little poker."

Bradshaw also said late Steelers' owner Art Rooney Sr. was his favorite person in pro football and was "the only thread that held me to the Steelers after retirement."

Bradshaw wrote: "Swann and Stallworth ... were superstars who were team conscious (but) were extremely competitive with each other."

He looked more to Stallworth later in his career because after Swann "became a perennial All-Pro, it seemed his dedication slipped."

Greene "deep down had always been a pussycat, but we didn't know that. Joe just wanted everybody to fear him because fear was one of his tools. ... I will always love Joe Greene (because) he came to my rescue as a rookie. He always defended me for some reason."

Rooney "was a Secretariat, a Northern Dancer. A Joe Namath. A first. An original. ... There are not many Picassos in the world. ... I knew only one legend in my entire life and that was Art Rooney."

He admired former Houston Oilers coach Bum Phillips "who had a big heart and was a loving, caring person to everybody. I would have loved to play for him."

Bradshaw also respected Bill Walsh, Joe Gibbs, Don Shula, Tom Landry and Noll's "organizational skills, his eye for detail and his ability to recognize talent."

"If you put the traits of all of these coaches into one man and let him work for Al Davis of the Raiders, I'd love to have the chance to play for him until I was 50 years old.

"That isn't to say I would trade Mr. Rooney for a hundred Al Davises, but I admired his style."

Franco Harris "was without a doubt the most unselfish football player I've ever known. ... It's a shame the Steelers turned their back on Franco because it took some of his heart away."

The Steelers cut Harris in August 1984, a month after he failed to report to camp and demanded his contract be renegotiated.

Noll didn't like former linebacker Andy Russell "because he was smarter than the coach and knew the defense better."

There was no drug problem on the Steelers, but, "I was aware of players smoking marijuana" and once saw a Steeler (former quarterback Joe Gilliam) "snorting cocaine." Gilliam had a well-documented drug problem after leaving pro football.

Joe Montana and Dan Marino were better quarterbacks than him and "I don't kid myself, I'd never match Marino's stats, even in Miami's system."

Former Steelers quarterback Mark Malone, who was booed out of Pittsburgh, "was a phony. ... He was always saying the 'right' things to the press. ... He was just too hip and the players didn't appreciate Malone always pointing the finger at somebody else."

His best game was the Steelers' 35-31 victory over Dallas in the 1979 Super Bowl, when he was named the most valuable player after throwing four touchdown passes.

"This was one game I was supremely confident," he said. "Nothing bothered me. I felt like I had them. This was the only game in my life I ever felt this way."

Coastal Plain Ousts S. Carolina

MARIETTA, Ga. — Coastal Plain will not be accused of being boring in the Senior Babe Ruth Southeastern Regionals.

For the third time in as many games, Coastal Plain was involved in a one-run decision and stayed alive in the 11-team, double-elimination tournament in Marietta, Ga. with a 10-9 triumph over South Carolina Monday afternoon.

Coastal Plain, the Eastern North Carolina champion, dropped an 8-7 decision to Georgia state champion Columbus in its opener Friday then rebounded to nip Western Carolina 6-5 Sunday.

Six teams remain in the chase for a berth in the Babe Ruth World Series in Owensboro, Ky. after Monday night's play. Coastal Plain was scheduled to take on the Tennessee-East Cobb County (Ga.) loser today at 12:30.

Tennessee and host East Cobb, the defending national champion, were scheduled to play in the winners' bracket finals Monday night. Over the past four years, a team representing East Cobb County has captured the Little League World Series crown, a Colt League (Ages 13) national championship, a Pony League (ages 14-15) national title and a Senior League national title.

Against South Carolina, Coastal Plain erupted for six runs in the first inning then added four runs in the fifth after South Carolina had narrowed the gap to 6-4. South Carolina picked up two runs in the fifth and pushed across three in the bottom of the seventh.

Derek Curtis came on in relief of Jeff Likosar to register his second save in the tournament. Brian Tuten, who hurled the first five innings, was credited with the win. He allowed six hits while fanning three and walking none.

In the Coastal Plain first, Craig Willoughby and Tuten laced consecutive singles and Franz Holscher drew a walk to load the bases with no outs. Roosevelt Hines plated a run with a grounder to second then Randy House followed with a two-run single.

After a fly out to center, Gray Mills drew a walk and Joe DeLoach delivered a two-run double. A bunt single by Patrick Joyner and an error on a fly ball to center allowed the sixth run to score.

South Carolina cashed in three Coastal Plain miscues to score two runs in the first then added two runs in the third on Chad Roper's two-out single.

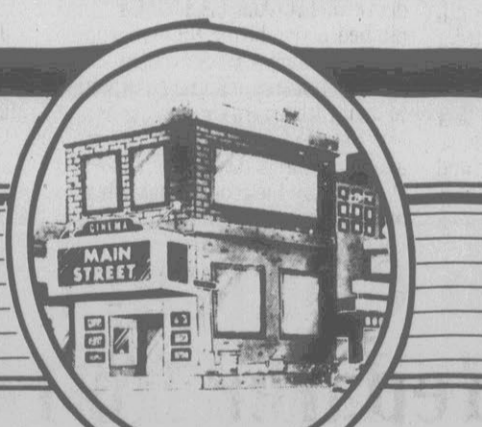

Hines belted a towering two-run homer to left to cap a five-run fifth for Coastal Plain. Willoughby started the inning with a walk and scored when Tuten's hit-and-run singled was misplayed. Holscher singled in Tuten before Hines' blast.

South Carolina brought the potential winning run to the plate in the seventh after a two-run triple by Mike Douglas and a two-out single by Chad Nelson trimmed the deficit to 10-9.

However, Curtis registered a strikeout to preserve the win.

Tuten, House, DeLoach and Joyner each finished with two hits to lead Coastal Plain. House had a triple.

Cubs Take Over 1st Place; Cadaret Misses No-Hit Bid

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The ivy seems a little greener at Wrigley Field, and the bleacher huns a little more rowdy. The Chicago Cubs are in first place, folks.

Chicago took sole possession of the top spot in the National League East Monday night as Mark Grace and Ryne Sandberg each hit two-run homers, leading the Cubs over the Montreal Expos 5-2.

"Feels good," Manager Don Zimmer said. "But we've been there before this year."

The Cubs, who won the NL East in 1984, have not won a pennant since 1945. They have not won a World Series since 1908, when Tinkers to Evers to Chance was the double play combo.

The Cubs and Expos were to play under the sun this afternoon, with Dennis Martinez taking his 12-1 record and 11 straight wins against Mike Bielecki, 11-5. An Expos victory would knot things up again.

It was the fifth straight loss for the Expos, who dropped out of the top spot for the first time since June 25. Montreal had not lost five in a row since May 15-20.

"We lost five straight before but I don't remember when," Rodgers said. "I try not to put things like that in my memory bank."

Greg Maddux, 13-8, gained his 12th victory in his last 15 starts, pitching a seven-hitter for his fifth complete game.

"Going the distance is not important," Maddux said. "Winning is, and getting all those runs helped."

The victory also gave the Cubs a five-game lead over the fourth-place New York Mets, who lost to Philadelphia. Third-place St. Louis trails by four.

Tim Wallach gave the Expos a 1-0 lead with his ninth home run in the second inning. But the Cubs came back with three runs off Pascual Perez, 6-11, in the third.

Jerome Walton, who had three hits and extended his hitting streak to 18 games, led off the third with a triple and scored on Dwight Smith's single. Gra followed with his ninth homer, a drive into the left-field bleachers.

"I'm not a home run hitter," Grace said. "The win let us realize we have the ability to beat these guys. They kicked our butts before. If we're going to have a shot at this thing, we have to beat them ourselves and not rely on other teams to do it."

Walton singled with one out in the seventh and scored ahead of Sandberg's 17th homer off reliever Andy McGaffigan.

"It was a big win," Sandberg said. "We all remember that series when they swept us. They played good ball and we didn't."

Tim Raines also homered for the Expos.

Phillies 2, Mets 1
New York got a break in the ninth and gave it right back in the bottom of the inning, losing to Philadelphia at Veterans Stadium.

Ricky Jordan reached on left fielder Mark Carreon's three-base error leading off the ninth and scored with none out on rookie Charlie Hayes' single over a draw-in outfield, snapping the Mets' three-game winning streak.

The Mets tied the score 1-1 in the top of the ninth off starter Ken Howell with some help from the Phillies.

Howell carried a two-hitter into the ninth and walked Darryl Strawberry with two outs. Carreon singled Strawberry to third, and on a 3-1 pitch to Dave Magadan, Carreon broke for second. Catcher Steve Lake's throw on ball four skipped into center field for an error as Strawberry scored.

Former Met Roger McDowell, 3-5, relieved Howell and struck out pinch-hitter Mackey Sasser to end the inning and earn the victory.

Jordan led off the ninth with a high fly ball to left off reliever Jeff Musselman, 1-2. Carreon was distracted by center fielder Juan Samuel near the warning track. The Mets intentionally walked John Kruk and Jeff Innis relieved. On an 0-2 count, Hayes lifted a fly ball to center that fell in for the game-winning hit.

Cardinals 4, Pirates 0
Ted Power, released by Detroit in spring training, allowed four hits in eight-plus innings and singled home a run to lead St. Louis past Pittsburgh at Three Rivers Stadium.

Vince Coleman and Ozzie Smith each singled and stole second to ignite a two-run first inning against rookie Rick Reed, 0-3, who allowed four runs and six hits in the first two innings.

The Cardinals won for the seventh time in 11 games to climb to eight games over .500 for the first time since 1987.

Reds 10, Giants 2
Ron Oester singled twice in an inning for the second time in five days when Cincinnati scored seven runs in the fifth inning against San Francisco at Candlestick Park. The Giants also had another pitcher injured.

Right-hander Scott Garrelts, the NL earned-run average leader at 2.42, was injured swinging in batting practice and was scratched from his scheduled start against the Reds. Jeff Brantley, who was the 14th different Giants pitcher to start a game this season, replaced Garrelts and lost for the first time in seven decisions.

Oester, who singled twice in the Reds' 14-run first-inning outburst last Thursday against Houston, singled twice, scored and drove in a run during the Reds' big inning against the Giants.

The Reds have won five of six and eight of 11, while the Giants have dropped four of six and eight of 12. It's the first time San Francisco has lost two straight at home since June 30-July 1.

Ron Robinson, 2-1 this season and 6-1 lifetime against the Giants, allowed one earned run in five innings and Tim Birtsas finished.

Padres 5, Astros 2
Chris James had three hits and drove in two runs and Bruce Hurst pitched a five-hitter for his seventh complete game as San Diego beat visiting Houston, sending the Astros to their fifth loss in six games.

Hurst, 11-8, is expected to pitch again on three days rest when the Padres play their only doubleheader of the season, Friday night at San Diego against Atlanta.

The Padres scored off Jim

Deshaies, 10-6, without a hit in the third inning and went on to send the left-hander to his third straight loss.

Braves 1, Dodgers 0
Tom Glavine pitched a four-hitter for his fourth victory against Los Angeles this season, including two shutouts, and Jeff Blauser homered, leading visiting Atlanta past the Dodgers. It was the 13th time the Dodgers were shut out this season, compared to 10 last year.

Glavine, 10-6, is 4-0 against the Dodgers this season after going 0-5 in 1988, and has not allowed an earned run to Los Angeles all year over 32 2/3 innings, allowing 22 hits.

Rookie Ramon Martinez, 3-1, allowed four hits over eight innings with nine strikeouts.

AMERICAN LEAGUE

Yankees 9, Indians 0
Greg Cadaret hasn't been a starting pitcher in the major leagues until this season. All of a sudden, he's making up for lost time.

Cadaret, who didn't make his first start until July 7, seems to be rounding into starting shape with the New York Yankees, as witnessed by his performance against the Cleveland Indians Monday night.

Cadaret had a no-hitter through seven innings and finished with a two-hit beauty in leading the Yankees past Cleveland 9-0.

"I'd have to say for now that Greg has earned a spot in the rotation," Yankees manager Dallas Green said. "He pitched his heart out and gave us a beautiful game."

Cadaret, a longtime reliever who was acquired June 21 by the Yankees in a four-player trade with Oakland involving Rickey Henderson, held the Indians hitless until Brook Jacoby led off the eighth with a single. Luis Aguayo's double in the ninth was the Indians' only other hit.

"I like it so far," said Cadaret, 3-2, who has had five solid starts since his skaky first one in Boston, when he allowed six runs in 5 2/3 innings.

In two previous seasons with the Athletics, Cadaret had made 87 relief appearances. He appeared in 26 games with Oakland this year before coming to the Yankees.

Randy Velarde, Roberto Kelly, Bob Geren and Steve Sax each knocked in two runs apiece for New York. Most of the damage was done against Scott Bailes, 4-7.

"He did the job tonight, but he did throw some pitches I thought we should have hit," Indians manager Doc Edwards said of Cadaret. "They made some great plays when we did hit him hard."

Incidentally, it was the second time that Jacoby had broken up a no-hitter in the eighth this season. On June 25, the Indians were no-hit for 7 2/3 innings by Texas Rangers ace Nolan Ryan before Jacoby took care of that one, too.

Blue Jays 2, Rangers 1
John Cerutti pitched a five-hitter and Toronto capitalized on two errors by Texas shortstop Fred Manrique to beat the Rangers.

Cerutti struck out five and did not walk a batter in pitching his second straight complete game. Texas' only run came on Steve Buechele's fifth-inning homer, his 12th of the season. Throwing errors on consecutive plays in the sixth inning by Manrique allowed the Blue Jays to tie the game. Kelly Gruber drove in the winning run with a sacrifice fly.

The Blue Jays, who started the day three games behind AL East-leading Baltimore, improved to 56-56 overall and are 44-32 since Cito Gaston replaced Jimmy Williams as manager.

Tigers 5-2, Brewers 3-5
Gary Ward's bases-loaded sacrifice fly in the eighth scored Allan Trammell with the go-ahead run, leading Detroit over Milwaukee in the first game of their doubleheader.

With the Tigers trailing 3-2 in the eighth, Lou Whitaker singled off Tony Fossas, 1-2, to score Rick Schu from second and tie the game.

Trammell, who was intentionally walked, went from first to third on Whitaker's single and scored when Ward flied out. The Tigers added another run in the inning when Chet Lemon's pinch-hit single scored Whitaker from third.

Rookie Kevin Ritz, 3-1, gave up six hits and two walks while striking out six in eight innings. He became the first Tigers pitcher to win three consecutive starts this season.

Tom Filer pitched five-hit ball over eight innings and Paul Molitor broke a tie with a solo homer to give the Brewers their second-game victory.

Filer, 3-1, struck out two and walked four. He allowed a two-run homer to Whitaker in the first inning and escaped a big jam in the fifth before getting last-inning relief help from Dan Plesac.

Plesac gained his 26th save, tying Cleveland's Doug Jones for the American League lead.

Paul Gibson, 2-8, was the loser.

Twins 4, Orioles 2
Kirby Puckett singled home the deciding run in the eighth and Minnesota took advantage of two Baltimore errors in the inning to defeat the Orioles.

With the score tied 2-2, Puckett singled off Baltimore starter Jeff Ballard to score Al Newman from second. The hit got past Baltimore left fielder Phil Bradley for an error, allowing Dan Gladden to score from first base.

Minnesota starter Roy Smith, 7-3, continued his mastery of the Orioles, holding them to two runs, one earned, and five hits in seven innings. Against Baltimore this year, the right-hander is 3-0 in three starts with a 2.29 ERA. He is 4-4 with a 4.25 ERA against the rest of the league.

Jeff Reardon pitched the ninth for his 20th save.

Royals 6, Red Sox 4
Jim Eisenreich hit a three-run homer to tie the game, then scored the winner for Kansas City on Bob Boone's single in the eighth after beating out an infield hit.

Boone dropped a short fly in front of center fielder Ellis Burks with one out in the eighth. Eisenreich, who came off the 15-day disabled list Sunday after sustaining a pulled right hamstring, continued on to third as shortstop Luis Rivera went after the ball.

Rivera's throw to third hit Eisenreich in the back of the head and he scored as the ball skipped in to the stands. Frank White then singled home Boone for the final margin.

Mark Gubicza, 10-9, pitched eight innings, winning for the first time since July 18 despite giving up all four runs on 11 hits. Steve Farr earned his 17th save by pitching the ninth.

Greg Harris, 0-1, signed earlier in the day by Boston, was the loser.

Mariners 5, Athletics 1
Rookie Clint Zavaras pitched five scoreless innings to earn his first major league victory and Harold Reynolds hit two doubles and scored twice as Seattle beat Oakland.

The loss dropped Oakland one game behind the AL West-leading California Angels, who were idle Monday.

Zavaras, 1-2, yielded just two hits through five innings in his third major league start. The 22-year-old right-hander struck out four and walked four before reliever Bill Swift came on in the sixth.

Swift and Mike Schooler combined to pitch the final four innings.

The Athletics not only lost the game, but lost outfielder star Jose Canseco to injury as well. Canseco, making a comeback from a wrist injury that kept him out for the first half of the season, led off the sixth with a double and pulled up lame with a pulled quadriceps muscle in his right leg. He remained in the game and advanced to third on a single by Dave Parker before being replaced by Felix Jose.

Dave Henderson's sacrifice fly drove in Jose for Oakland's only run.

Green Prepared To Be Fired

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — New York Yankees manager Dallas Green expects to be fired by owner George Steinbrenner, according to a published report today.

"There's no question we're not going to be around long," Green told USA Today. "This guy (Steinbrenner) is not going to let us be around long, but that's all right. We're prepared for that."

Steinbrenner, who has fueded with his manager and coaches through newspapers the last 10 days, insists Green will remain through the season.

"I'm still supportive of my manager and have no plans to replace him," the owner said from Tampa, Fla.

Steinbrenner downplayed the public squabble. "All I said was if we're to win this thing and be right in the middle of it at the end, the players are going to have to play with the same intensity they showed in two games I saw recently."

"Everybody is going to have to do better and that includes the manager and the coaching staff. That's the fact."

Following a 9-0 victory over Cleveland on Monday night, New York is five games behind Baltimore in the American League East. And Green, who has a contract through 1990, believes the owner's pressure will increase if the Yankees remain in the race.

"I think it will get uglier if we start winning," Green told the newspaper. "If we lose, I think he will bow out. This is his modus operandi. He thinks it motivates people to push them to greater heights."

Canseco Hurt Again
Jose Canseco, who spent the first half of the season overcoming a wrist injury, now must deal with a muscle strain in his right leg.

The Oakland Athletics outfielder strained the quadriceps muscle in his right leg Monday night as he ran out a double in the sixth inning against the Seattle Mariners. He pulled up lame going into second base, but remained in the game after being attended to by Manager Tony LaRussa and a trainer.

Canseco advanced to third base when Dave Parker singled, and Felix Jose was called on as a pinch runner.

"I thought I could stay in after the double," Canseco said. "When I got to third, my leg started to get stiffer. I didn't think I could have scored on a fly ball, so I came out."

Baseball Notes

Key Put On The DL

Toronto left-hander Jimmy Key, who has lost seven straight decisions, has swelling around his rotator cuff and was placed on the 15-day disabled list, retroactive to Aug. 4, the Blue Jays announced Monday.

Key, the runner-up in 1987 for the American League Cy Young Award, has struggled with injuries the past two seasons. In 1988, he missed two months with elbow surgery and admitted Monday he has been experiencing pain since the All-Star break.

"It's gotten worse and worse," Key said. "After my last start, my shoulder had some soreness. "For me, it's a time to back off and try to get back into top form for the stretch run in September. I'll miss two starts and that should be enough time."

In his last start, Key allowed three hits and four walks in 4 1/3 innings against Kansas City on Aug. 3. In his last 14 innings, he's given up 13 runs on 23 hits.

Garrelts Scratched

The San Francisco Giants, already with five pitchers on the disabled list, scratched Monday night's scheduled starter, Scott Garrelts, when he sprained his middle back during batting practice.

Jeff Brantley, the Giants' 14th different starter this season, will replace Garrelts in their game against the Cincinnati Reds. San Francisco is without starters Rick Reuschel, Atlee Hamaker, Kelly Downs, Mike Krukow and Dave Dravecky.

Garrelts, whose 2.42 ERA leads the National League, was hit by a pitch thrown by outfielder Candy Maldonado. Garrelts has already spent time on the disabled list this season with a hamstring injury and left his last start against Los Angeles with a tender elbow. Monday night's injury was not related to either of those injuries.

Valle Hit

Seattle Mariners catcher Dave Valle was hit on the right shoulder by a foul ball in the first inning of Monday night's game and was taken to Seattle's Providence Hospital for X-rays.

Nelson Signs; Numbers Days

Darrin Nelson is no longer a holdout and may never be again. The Minnesota running back signed a pair of one-year contracts Monday, but said his days in the NFL are numbered. "I don't plan on meeting with (Vikings general manager) Mike (Lynn) anymore," said Nelson, 30, adding that the length of the new deal "doesn't mean I'll be here two years."

Nelson made $300,000 last year after sitting out the first few weeks of camp in an unsuccessful effort to renegotiate the contract, then endured a tough 1988 season, missing three games with injuries. However, he still led Minnesota in rushing for the fourth straight season and the fifth time in six years. "He didn't have one of his premier seasons last year because of injuries," Coach Jerry Burns said. "I have complete confidence that he will have a big year."

asking for $2 million a year, remains unsigned. "I'm very confident he'll play in the National Football League this year," Perles said. "We've got a lot of first-rounders who haven't signed yet. That's the way the system is working right now, because of the involvement of the agents."

You reach three no trump after your partner makes a weak jump overall. West leads the queen of hearts, and your task is to collect nine tricks.

Let's assume you win the first trick with the king of hearts and run the queen of diamonds. That wins. How do you continue?

The Swedish declarer tried to create a second entry to dummy by finessing the ten of clubs. That did not prove to be a great success as the cards lay. What South failed to do was first count his tricks. With two hearts, two diamonds and three clubs there for the taking, two spades could be established by force. Declarer should simply continue with a low spade to the nine, and wriggle as they might, the defenders cannot come to more than four tricks.

At the other table the British declarer, also in three no trump, had no chance to strut his stuff. When the queen of diamonds was led at trick two, the Swedish West covered with the king. Now declarer could win with the ace and continue with the ten of diamonds to force out the jack. Since the king of clubs was still on the table as an entry, declarer had 11 easy tricks.

Character On 'Dear John' Has Some Real Qualities

By Jerry Buck
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — Harry Groener says: Don't underestimate Ralph the distressed nebbish he plays on NBC's "Dear John."

"Ralph shouldn't be taken at face value," he says. "Here is Ralph, who we might think of as a lonely, pathetic kind of guy, but he drives a motorcycle. Somewhere in that nebbish soul he's a romantic. He has some Walter Mitty qualities."

"He's a sweet guy. I think his problem arises from the fact that he's socially inept. His wife left him at the reception. She couldn't speak English and apparently only married him to stay in this country. He's a sensitive, caring guy, very smart but very insecure in social areas. Still, I think he has a large capacity for caring for another person."

Groener plays the introverted member of the One-To-One Club, a support group for divorced people on "Dear John." He's tongue-tied around women.

Bunny Rabbit was still there. That was so much fun."

He was born in Augsburg, Germany, but came to this country with his family in 1953 when he was 2 years old. He went back once when he was 14 to visit relatives.

"My father was a concert pianist and composer who was drafted into the German army in World War II," he said. "He spent a lot of his time leading an orchestra and entertaining the troops with skits and parodies. He got as satirical as he could without getting killed."

In San Francisco, his father worked for an insurance company but spent his free time putting on operas and musicals at a German-American club. His mother sang in the operas. Groener got his first taste of performing by playing the drums in his father's Bavarian band at Oktoberfests and other events.

At the age of 12 he began studying dancing at the Conservatory of Ballet and later performed with the Ballet Celeste. He soon lost interest and turned to acting. He studied at the Pacific Conservatory of the Performing Arts and the University of Washington.

Managers Answer Calls As Operators Picket

By John Donnelly
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Callers dialing for operators reached recordings in 15 states and the nation's capital as workers from three regional telephone companies settled in for what many expect will be a long strike.

The companies urged people to dial direct whenever possible to avoid tie-ups. No major delays were reported Monday for those calling numbers without an operator's — or manager's — assistance.

"We do have minor delays in directory assistance," said Bob Chez, a spokesman for Nevada Bell, part of Pacific Telesis. "People are having to wait a little longer. But other than that things are going smoothly."

About 157,000 union workers were on strike Monday, forcing managers at the three companies to work long hours and to learn how to handle the work of many.

The strikes by the Communications Workers of America and the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, which mostly began at midnight Saturday, were over salary increases, the companies' attempts to shift health care costs to workers and a variety of local issues.

No formal talks were scheduled in any of strikes, but informal discussions were held.

"It seems like the sides are so far apart now, it could last three weeks," said Tom Bonelli, a striking nine-year veteran of Pacific Telesis.

Operators, technicians, salespeople and clerical workers struck NYNEX Corp., Bell Atlantic and Pacific Telesis, three regional companies called Baby Bells, which were created by the 1984 breakup of American Telephone & Telegraph Co.'s Bell System.

Arrests were reported in Boston, where 14 people were charged with disorderly conduct for blocking access to a NYNEX building, police spokeswoman Jill Reilly said.

In New York's Suffolk County, police said there were two separate incidents of vandalism against New York Telephone company equipment, but no indication that striking workers were involved. A New York Telephone spokesman, Anthony Pappas, said a flammable liquid was poured into locked phone line distribution boxes and set afire, temporarily knocking out service to 1,900 customers.

At NYNEX offices, 10,000 managers took the places of about 60,000 strikers.

"Things are going as expected. There are delays in directory assistance and other operator types of services, such as people needing help making collect or third-party calls," said NYNEX spokesman John Bonomo.

"We're urging people that direct-dial calls are best."

He said managers are working long hours, but "it's a morale-boosting kind of thing" because people are "working together in a crisis."

The striking workers, however, yelled "Scab!" at those going into the midtown headquarters of New York Telephone, a NYNEX subsidiary.

The workers also urged passers-by not to pay their telephone bills.

CWA has a national strike defense fund containing $17 million to $18 million, and will pay strikers based on need after the second week, CWA spokesman Stephen Early said.

IBEW does not have a strike fund, and several workers Monday said they were committed to the strike but worried about making ends meet.

"The mortgage has got to be paid, and the state isn't in such great shape to go look for other jobs," said Al Brown at a picket line at a NYNEX special service center in Boston.

NYNEX, with 60,000 strikers, serves most of New England and New York state; Bell Atlantic's 52,500 striking workers were in Delaware, Maryland, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Virginia, West Virginia, and Washington, D.C.; and Pacific

Telesis, with 44,500 workers off the job, serves northern Nevada and all of California.

More states could be affected next week, as strike deadlines for three other regional Bell telephone companies, with more than 130,000 union workers, are set for midnight Saturday. They are Ameritech, US West and Southwestern Bell.

A seventh phone company, Atlanta-based BellSouth, reached a tentative agreement with unions representing 60,000 workers over the weekend. That company serves nine Southeastern states.

AT&T settled with the communications unions earlier this year and was not directly affected by this week's walkouts. But most long-distance operators at an AT&T office in Providence, R.I., who happen to work in the same building as NYNEX workers, refused to work Sunday and Monday rather than cross picket lines. The company said they wouldn't be paid but would not otherwise be punished.

Bush Administration Ready To Begin Bailout Of S&Ls

By Dave Skidmore
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The Bush administration is poised to begin pumping money into the nation's failed savings and loan institutions as soon as possible after the president signs the bill on Wednesday.

President Bush intends to enact the historic legislation in a White House ceremony on Wednesday, said administration and congressional sources, speaking on condition of anonymity. The Treasury Department said it will borrow the first $5 billion installment of the bailout on Thursday.

The legislation, passed by Congress on Saturday, authorizes $50 billion in borrowing over the next 26 months to close or merge 500 insolvent S&Ls. Of that, $20 billion must be borrowed in the next eight weeks, before the end of the 1989 fiscal year.

Treasury officials said $15 billion of this year's borrowing will be used to replace high-rate certificates of deposit at some of the 262 failed thrifts already under government control. The goal is to reduce operating losses until regulators can rescue the thrifts permanently.

"The effect ... may be quite significant," said Richard Breeden, Bush's chief adviser on savings and loans. "You're taking some of the institutions that have been rate leaders out of the marketplace. That will reduce pressure on all other institutions, both banks and thrifts, that have had to pay a premium to compete against these unhealthy firms."

The remaining $5 billion raised this year will be used to either shut down or attract new owners to the thrifts in the worst financial trouble. The first of these deals could be announced as soon as this week.

"I think the process will begin very quickly," said spokesman Alan Whitney of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp., which is getting the job of managing the bailout.

However, he said the frequency of rescues will be "more measured" than the frantic pace struck at the end of last year, when the Federal Home Loan Bank Board committed $16 billion in a two-day spending spree to rescue 75 institutions.

The legislation, in addition to funding the bailout, imposes tough new financial standards on savings and loans and triggers the most sweeping overall changes in the regulatory bureaucracy in 50 years.

Among many changes, the Resolution Trust Corp., a new agency headed by Treasury Secretary Nicholas F. Brady, will be created to oversee the FDIC's management of the bailout.

Whitney said an organizational meeting of the RTC board is planned on the same day as the White House signing ceremony and that the board will appoint an executive director. Officials said the board likely will choose someone already within the government as a temporary director until a permanent appointment is made.

The administration originally planned to borrow only $10 billion in fiscal year 1989, which ends Sept. 30. However, as part of a deal struck with Congress just before final passage of the legislation, it agreed to raise $20 billion this year.

That will balloon the 1989 deficit to near $170 billion, the highest in three years.

Pilots Vote To Continue With Strike

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ATLANTA — Local pilots for Eastern Airlines voted by a 4-to-1 margin early today to continue their five-month-old strike, and a spokesman recommended a national airline walkout on Labor Day.

About 500 striking pilots and their spouses met for an informational meeting late Monday with members of the national Air Line Pilots Association, and voted 493-121 not to return to work.

Pilots union leaders will take the results of the straw ballot to Washington later this week where they will be discussed by the group's 20-member master executive council, which will plan future strike action. Pilots were voting in other cities around the country this week.

"There's no compromising," said Dan Klein, a pilot with Eastern for 26 years. "This has nothing to do about money. It's just plain old dignity."

An ALPA spokesman said much of the sentiment in the closed meeting was to urge a national suspension of airline service near Labor Day weekend.

"It's easier to try to shut down the whole country than to continue alone," said Jack Gray, a spokesman for pilots in Atlanta. "It would create political chaos and get presidential intervention."

He said such a suspension was just a tentative plan.

Pilots walked out on Eastern in March in solidarity with the machinists union, which struck Eastern March 4. The airline a few days later filed for reorganization, under Chapter 11 bankruptcy.

Eastern has said that under its reorganization it will need only 1,700 pilots. It said that by the end of last week 380 pilots had crossed picket lines, 300 newly hired pilots had completed training and 700 more were in training.

Shortly After Delivery, Most Direct Mail Will Have Already Reached Its Target.

They promised your message would make it through the front door and they were absolutely right. Through the front door, down the hall and whammo, right smack into the old round file. Unopened, unread and unfortunately, totally ineffective.

Instead of being the exception, this scenario is more like the rule. According to a 1988 study by The Gordon S. Black Corporation, an independent Washington, D.C. media and opinion research firm, of the Greenville/Pitt County adults who report receiving some direct mail literature within a one-week period, 16% throw it away while less than one in five read it thoroughly.

It all comes down to how you define the term, "target customer." If it's a living, breathing, spending human being, then perhaps your advertising dollars should go into something that's more effective in reaching them. Namely, The Daily Reflector. With a paid circulation of 18,300 Monday through Friday and 20,800 on Sundays, let The Reflector work for you. The Daily Reflector reaches 74% of the Greenville/Pitt County market weekly.

Most importantly, it reaches them at their request! That means you not only have a better chance of getting their attention, you have a better chance of holding it. Think about it - people paying to read your message at their convenience! Considering all the value you get with The Daily Reflector, don't risk trashing your advertising dollars. For answers to your advertising questions, call your Daily Reflector Advertising Account Executive at 752-6166.
