Teachers' First Day

Pattie Leary, a teacher at D.H. Conley, places a corsage on Pearl Frizzell, the school's bookkeeper, as a welcome back on the first day back for teachers today. Conley Principal Ike Baldree spoke at an assembly welcoming the teachers and staff to the upcoming school year.

U.N. Truce Accepted In Lebanon

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BEIRUT, Lebanon — The leader of Lebanon's Christian forces has agreed to a U.N. call for an immediate halt in fighting with Syrian and allied Moslem troops, a spokesman said today.

The Christian army commander, Gen. Michel Aoun, said he will accept the truce called for Tuesday by the U.N. Security Council. "The general welcomes without any conditions the U.N. Security Council resolution," said an Aoun spokesman, who demanded anonymity.

Aoun's statement was issued one day after the Syrian army and allied Moslem factions vowed to join forces to defeat the Christians. Sources today reported a buildup of troops and ammunition around the embattled Christian heartland.

There was no reaction to the U.N. cease-fire demand from rival Syrian and Moslem forces. The Security Council had called for the truce during an emergency meeting ordered by Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar.

The 15-nation council unanimously passed a declaration that "urgently appeals to all the parties to put an immediate end to all operations and to all firing and all shelling on land and at sea," said Algerian Ambassador Hocine Djoudi, president of the body.

Arab League ministers also renewed their call for an end to the fighting. Arab League committee members King Hassan II of Morocco, King Fahd Bin Abdul-Aziz Saud of Saudi Arabia and Algerian President Chadli Benjedid called in a statement for "an immediate and global" cease-fire.

Police said 19 people had been killed and 104 wounded in the fighting since Tuesday, when Christian forces fought Syrian troops with tanks and artillery along the southern, eastern and northern edges of the Christian enclave north of Beirut.

Syrian gunners also pounded the 28-mile-long Christian coastline, the only escape route for the area's residents.

By police count, 760 people have been killed and 2,050 wounded since the latest round of fighting in Lebanon's civil war began March 8.

Since then, shelling day and night has largely destroyed Beirut and

Bush Says Cuba Must Do More

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MIAMI — President Bush today ruled out normalization of U.S. relations with Cuba unless President Fidel Castro installs "more freedom for his own people."

In remarks prepared for a fundraiser on behalf of Republican congressional candidate Ileana Ros-Lehtinen in a city long a magnet for Cuban emigres, Bush said he will look for indications that Castro will follow the moves toward openness now exhibited by his Soviet-bloc allies.

"Someday I'd like to see improved normalized relations with Cuba. But that cannot and it will not be as long as Castro violates the human rights of his own people; as long as he, almost alone in the entire world now, swims against the tide that is bringing sweeping change to closed societies around the world," he said.

"As president, I will look for signs that Castro wants to move away from subverting his neighbors and towards more openness, more freedom for his own people. But until I see such change, there will be

Weather Holds Key To Eclipse

By Kevin Boughal
 THE DAILY REFLECTOR

There will be no bad seats for the lunar eclipse tonight, says Dr. Rahul Mehta, assistant professor of physics at East Carolina University, as long as the weather cooperates.

Usually if you want to see a star, it is better to go away from the city lights, Mehta said today. However, as the moon is so big, observers will be able to see it from almost anywhere, he said.

He said 15 binoculars and telescopes from the ECU Physics Department will be available for public use at the River Park North picnic shelter tonight for the eclipse.

"We try to make the telescopes available to the public whenever there is something interesting to watch," Mehta said. "We will have a bunch of different telescopes at the park and we will try to photograph and videotape the eclipse. The largest telescope we will bring out is a 14-inch reflecting telescope and with the right lens, it can magnify up to 100 power. We just hope to have clear weather."

The other telescopes that will be in the park include a three-inch refracting telescope, a powerful pair of binoculars and reflecting telescopes ranging in size from four inches to the big 14-inch one.

A lunar eclipse occurs when the earth's shadow projects on the surface of the moon. By timing and measuring the shadows on the surface of the moon, scientists measure the depth of the creaters on the moon, said Mehta.

The eclipse will begin at about 8:23 p.m. but Mehta said people

Star Drug Agent Arrested

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BOSTON — A decorated U.S. drug agent whose undercover work goes back to the French Connection days was himself arrested in a sting by colleagues after he allegedly walked into a setup carrying 62 pounds of cocaine.

Edward K. O'Brien devised some of the federal Drug Enforcement Administration's best undercover operations during an 18-year career, said fellow Agent John J. Coleman, who described himself as a friend of O'Brien's.

O'Brien, 44, was arrested late Monday at Logan International Airport while delivering suitcases filled with cocaine to informants, authorities said.

"This is a very sad, sad moment in drug enforcement," Coleman said Tuesday.

Coleman said he and O'Brien worked together in southern France trying to uncover heroin labs in the 1970s.

"Those were the hotbeds of activity in the French Connection days," he said.

Coleman said O'Brien's knowledge of how sting operations worked made his arrest particularly difficult. To conduct the sting that netted O'Brien, the DEA used private citizens who cooperated with the agency, Coleman said.

"You're dealing with someone in every respect who would be knowledgeable of everything," Coleman said.

O'Brien headed the DEA's Springfield office from 1982 to 1988 and received a special citation from Gov. Michael S. Dukakis in 1984 for

Inky Discharge Stains Sidewalk

By J. Ward Best
 THE DAILY REFLECTOR

The same ink that sometimes turns your fingers black as you read the paper also turns the sidewalk black outside the printing room of The Daily Reflector.

Chemicals used in printing the paper, including some ink residue, are escaping from the newspaper's press room through an overflow from a drain beneath the press, blackening the sidewalk and the gutter on Reade Street. The seepage, involving five gallons or less a week, is less than two blocks from the Tar River.

The chemicals released through the plant may contain potentially hazardous materials, and the state has recommended the paper tie its drain in with the city sewer system.

According to D. Jordan Whichard III, general manager of The Daily Reflector, the discharge from the press room has occurred sporadically since the newspaper's office was renovated last fall. And when the black sidewalk came to light, the paper began to look for ways to end the discharge.

Whichard said the paper believes the discharge was mostly from a "fountain solution" used to wash printing plates and some ink residue. The discharge may also contain some cleaning solution used on the presses.

"We're pretty sure it's coming from the press," Whichard said.

The Division of Environmental Management, responding to complaints about the discolored sidewalk, took soil samples from near the drain pipe in October. Lab results of the samples, released in June, show a heavy concentration of organic chemicals in the soil.

But an analysis of the actual discharge, performed by a lab in Cary for The Daily Reflector, revealed detectable concentrations of methylene chloride.

EPA lists methylene chloride as a chronic and persistent carcinogen with environmental, developmental and reproductive toxin.

Environmental scientists disagree as to the danger of the chemical without knowing the final diluted concentration in the environment. The discharge's proximity to the Tar River, however, could be cause for concern.

"If that material in quantity were getting into the tributary, it could be bad news," said Doug Rader, senior scientist with the North Carolina Environmental Defense Fund.

The difference between the soil sample and the discharge analysis is not clear.

The concentrations of organic chemicals and alkanes such as dimethyl ethyl benzene and tetra methyl butyl phenol in the soil could have come from a cleaning solution or could have accumulated in the soil over a period of years.

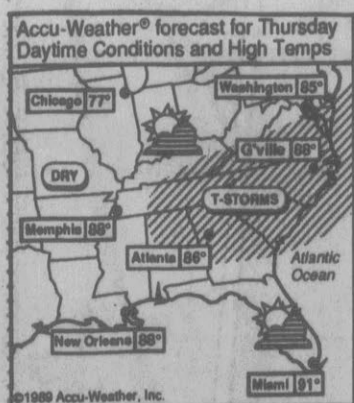

From its analysis, the state concluded the discharge was not toxic, but recommended the paper connect its discharge to the city sewer system.

Whichard contacted the Greenville Utilities Commission following the state's recommendation, and the lab analysis was performed on the request of GUC.

"What we hope is that we will pay to plumb this into the sanitary sewer system," Whichard said.

Hospital Shows Monthly Profit

By Carol Tyer
 THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Pitt County Memorial Hospital had more revenue than expenses in July — $118,007. This is the first time in several months that the hospital has made more than it spent, Valerie Dixon, assistant vice president for financial services, told hospital trustees Tuesday.

Ms. Dixon said that the reversal was primarily because of having a full Medicaid rate available as of July 1. Also, teaching and bad debt funds were available as of July 1 from the East Carolina University School of Medicine.

Outpatient income continued to offset fewer patient days that had been budgeted, Ms. Dixon said. She said the total patient days this year were 3,781 below budget, while outpatient visits were above budget by 175.

The board voted, subject to approval by financial advisers Ernst and Young, to establish a self-insurance plan to provide employees' medical coverage. It voted to amend the 1990 budget to allow spending of some $200,000 to complete the funding of the self-insurance program if Ernst and Young give the go signal.

The board approved the spending of $68,500 for auditing services of Ernst and Young. This amount is a 10 percent increase over the amount paid the same firm for auditing last year, the board was told.

Housing Funds Made Available

The North Carolina Department of Commerce has announced that Martin County Community Action Inc. has received an additional $117,500 from the Commerce Department's Energy Division to weatherize homes of low-income, elderly and handicapped citizens.

The non-profit agency now has funds to weatherize 116 homes in Martin, Pitt and Beaufort counties this program year. The agency received an initial $53,500 grant in June.

"The purpose of the weatherization program is to increase the energy efficiency of the home, thereby lowering monthly heating costs while providing more comfortable and healthful living conditions for the occupants,"

Doug Culbreth, director of the energy division, said.

The funds, part of the federal Weatherization Assistance Program administered at the state level, will be used to buy and install items like weather stripping, caulking, duct and water heater insulation, and storm windows on homes of residents whose income does not exceed 150 percent of the poverty level ($18,150 for a family of four). On average, the grant is expected to fund about $1,400 in energy-conserving improvements to each home weatherized.

For information on how to be considered for weatherization, call Martin County Community Action, toll-free, 1-800-682-5268.

Tuesday Thefts

Eight thefts, ranging from cash and a car to flowers, were reported to Greenville police Tuesday.

Officer R.L. Smith said $300 in cash was taken from a car parked at the intersection of 11th and Forbes streets in an incident reported at 12:16 a.m., while Officer R.C. Allbrook said a radar detector was taken from a car parked at 10A Sara Lane in an incident reported at 7:35 a.m. and a television set and video cassette recorder were taken from St. Gabriel's Catholic School at 1101 Ward St. in a break-in reported at 2:27 p.m.

Officer R.G. Mendenhall said a 1977 Datsun 280Z was taken from Plantation Apartments in an incident reported at 8:29 a.m. and a total of $46 in cash was taken from three offices at the Pitt County Mental Health Center at 2310 Stanfordsburg Road by a 12-year-old in an incident reported at 9:34 a.m., while Officer K.M. Lang said a wallet containing $22 in cash was taken from the Courtside Cafe at the intersection of Third and Evans streets in an incident reported at 11:31 a.m.

Officer D.R. Best said a man's diamond ring was taken from 122C Woodlawn Ave. in an incident reported at 4:54 p.m., while Officer R.S. Sawyer said 12 petunia plants were taken from a yard at 903 Douglas Ave. in an incident reported at 7:56 p.m.

Miss USA Is Urging Kids To Keep Trying

By Amy Gavigan
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Gretchen Polhemus, the reigning Miss USA, wants to send a message to children to be the best they can be, no matter what the odds.

Miss Polhemus, in a visit to JC Penney at the Plaza Tuesday, said she enjoys speaking and interacting with children.

"I have a theme of 200-1," Miss Polhemus said. "When I was competing in Alabama (for Miss USA), a guy from Austin gave 200 to 1 odds (for me) to win. So, what I talk to talk to these kids about now is not sizing themselves down.

"Don't listen to somebody else," she said. "If you have the desire, go out and try. The worst thing that can happen is you didn't try hard enough."

Miss Polhemus also visited the children's ward at Pitt County Memorial Hospital Tuesday morning and was able to spend some time with the patients.

Although she knows she is not able to help cure the children, she feels a little happiness will carry them a long way.

"There was a 4-year-old little girl, going through chemotherapy," Miss

Speaker Scheduled

The Rev. James Louis of Pleasant Park Hill will speak at Deliverance Center, Ayden, today at 8 p.m.

Polhemus said. "There wasn't anything I could do, but just to get a hug from her — little things like that — anything to make them a little happier.

"People ask a titleholder all the time: 'What can you do to save the world?' There's nothing," she said. "But, with little kids, I think it matters to them just to know that someone cares about them."

Prior to competing in the Miss USA pageant, Miss Polhemus held the title of Miss Texas USA 1989.

As Miss USA, she will represent the pageant's producer, Madison Square Garden Television Productions and its sponsors, primarily JC Penney and Procter & Gamble.

Miss Polhemus has been traveling, mainly for JC Penney, since the first of March. During her first visit to North Carolina, she has visited Wrightsville Beach and will go on to Wilson and Raleigh.

She said she was impressed with North Carolina beaches, trees and the friendly people.

"All the JC Penney stores I've been in and talk to people, they're so friendly," she said. "I kind of feel like I'm at home."

Home to Miss Polhemus is Fort Worth, Texas, where, before winning the pageant, she worked as a horse and cattle broker and real estate agent. After her reign, she plans to return to her brokerage and real estate career, according to a release by JC Penney.

Ayden Budgets Funds For Kids

By Carol Tyer
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

AYDEN — Town Commissioners have agreed to budget $18,000 for its Police At-Risk Kids program.

The program provides for town police officers to work with public schools in identifying and serving children who appear to be headed toward conflict with the law.

The board also voted Monday night to close an alley behind Ayden Free Will Baptist Church. This action was taken when there was no opposition from anyone present at a public hearing on the matter.

Consideration was given to requests for annexation from The Anointed One's Church and the Pitt County Group Home. Ralph Ford, town clerk, was directed to investigate the petition and see if the petitioners are owners of record. He is to report at the commissioners' next meeting, at which time public hearings on both annexation requests probably will be set.

The board accepted the 1989 tax levy and turned the list over to Ford for collection.

There was discussion of ways to encourage owners of downtown business places to improve their buildings. It was pointed out that any building which changes purposes now has to be reinspected by the county. One of the reasons for this is that many storefronts are now being changed into places of assembly and codes for assembly places are more stringent than for retail stores.

Board member Susan Moody was congratulated by her fellow board members on being elected vice president of the Electricities organization of which Ayden is a member municipality.

Church Service

Eldress Ella Grimes will preach at Faith Deliverance Outreach, on Second Street, Ayden, today at 8 p.m. facilities will be closed to the public Aug. 23 for a day of in-service training for library staff.

Church Convention

The Overcoming Faith Southern Convention will begin Thursday and continue through Sunday with services at Church of Faith, 1205B West Fifth St.

Services will be held at 7:30 p.m. each night from Thursday through Saturday. The Sunday service will be at 11 a.m.

Surgeon Elected

Dr. James W. Carter of Greenville was recently elected president of the North Carolina Chapter of the American College of Surgeons.

Carter, a partner in Pitt Surgical, P.A., provides general, thoracic and vascular surgical services.

Carter is a member of the medical staff at Pitt County Memorial Hospital and is the vice chairman of the department of surgery. He is the director of surgical residency and a clinical associate professor of surgery at the East Carolina University School of Medicine. He received his undergraduate and medical degrees from Johns Hopkins University and completed his internship and surgical residency at Vanderbilt University.

driven out 90 percent of the city's 1.5 million residents.

The fighting between the 20,000 mostly Christian troops under army Aoun and Syria's 40,000 soldiers slackened early today to intermittent shelling.

But Moslem security sources speaking on condition of anonymity said the Syrians were reinforcing their troops opposite Aoun's lines in Beirut, the central mountains and northern Lebanon.

One source said, "Syrian trucks were observed early in the day bringing in troops and ammunition to positions facing Aoun's lines."

He said Druse warlord Walid Jumblatt's Progressive Socialist Party and Palestinian guerrilla groups from Col. Saeed Mousa's Fatah-Uprising, bankrolled by Syria, also sent reinforcements to their positions in the wooded mountains southeast of Beirut.

The buildup began after a seven-hour meeting in Damascus of the heads of virtually all Lebanon's fractious Moslem groups.

The Syrians summoned their Moslem and leftist Lebanese militia leaders to Damascus for a council of war in what appeared to be a move to escalate the campaign against the Christians.

The leaders of 16 factions, including Iranian-backed Shiite groups and radical Palestinian guerrillas, attended. They issued a statement late Tuesday saying they would close ranks to bring down Aoun.

"The solution must be on the basis of ending the Israeli occupation, and blowing up the sectarian regime from its roots," it said. "But to bring down Aoun is the priority, as well as blowing up all the imaginary red lines."

The border of the Christian enclave is often referred to as a "red line" that would provoke international intervention if crossed by Syrian forces because it would represent a major escalation in the fighting.

Syria has used its militia allies to do most of the ground fighting while Syrian artillery and armor provide support, giving Damascus room for diplomatic maneuvering.

International pressure was building for a cease-fire.

Pope John Paul II said Tuesday from Castelgondolfo, Italy: "In the name of God, I turn to the Syrian authorities, asking them to stop the bombardment that aims to destroy ... the whole country."

Perez de Cuellar called the emergency U.N. meeting when none of the Security Council's 15 member nations acted.

The U.N. charter allows the secretary-general to call such meetings when international security appears in serious danger.

An aide to Aoun, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the general was not seeking "merely a cease-fire" but a "package deal" that includes a schedule for the withdrawal of Syrian troops.

"Any violation of the cease-fire by the Syrians will be a challenge to the United Nations," the Aoun aide said without further elaboration.

British Deport Pro-IRA Lawyer To United States

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LONDON — Pro-IRA activist Martin Galvin was deported to the United States today after violating an order barring him from British territory, the government said.

Galvin, publicity director for the New York-based Irish Northern Aid Committee, or NORAI, was flown out of Britain on a Royal Air Force flight heading to Washington, the Home Office said.

The 39-year-old New York lawyer was arrested Tuesday in Londonderry, Northern Ireland, after taking a walk through the city on the 20th anniversary of the deployment of British troops in the troubled province.

"He was flown out on a regular RAF flight to the United States," said a spokesman for the Home Office, speaking anonymously in keeping with British custom.

"It was a point that we wanted him out of the country as soon as possible and the RAF had a plane available at about 5 a.m."

Galvin has been banned from entering British territory since July 1984 when he gave a speech endorsing violence one day after a soldier was killed in Londonderry.

A month later police tried to arrest him during a public appearance in west Belfast. Galvin fled, but a young man was killed by a plastic bullet fired by police trying to break up fighting in the crowd of Irish Republican Army supporters.

Galvin has visited Northern Ireland illegally on at least three other occasions.

He said Tuesday he had been in the province for three days before police in bullet-resistant vests arrested him. He was flown Tuesday night to Royal Air Force base Brize Norton, about 50 miles northwest of London.

During his walk, Galvin was accompanied by Martin McGuinness, vice president of Sinn Fein, the IRA's legal political wing, and by several local IRA leaders. They openly walked past a security checkpoint on their way to the mainly Roman Catholic Bogside area of Londonderry.

Sinn Fein President Gerry Adams said Galvin was not permitted to speak to lawyers before being deported, but would be challenging the exclusion order on his return to the United States.

support and outreach services, reported that an auction of the hospital's no-longer-needed equipment will be held Oct. 6 at 10 a.m. at ABC Moving and Storage Warehouse 7.

The board approved capital requests of $111,820. Included were $14,000 for a manual surgical bed for labor and delivery; $29,000 for an instrument washer for Central Services; $19,130 for a recorder for an EKG monitor for neonatal intensive care; $12,750 for a sterilizer and $12,000 for bronchoscopes, both for operating rooms; $14,950 for an EEG monitoring system for Critical Care Unit 3; and $9,990 for a metabolic monitor for the catheterization lab. All of these but the surgical bed were budgeted items exchanged for items of about the same price previously budgeted for.

Also approved was the spending of $934,000 for computer expansion ($694,000) and network expansion ($240,000).

The total spent on capital improvements this fiscal year so far has been $8,412,490. With a month and a half until the new fiscal year begins, the balance of the capital budget for the year is $171,646, board members were told.

Charles Fennessy, vice president for human resources, reported that the hospital's program to combat child abuse is progressing. He said a master's-level social worker and a clinical nurse specialist to work in the program will be hired soon.

probably will not be able to see anything until about 9:20 p.m., when the moon will begin to be covered. It will be completely covered between 10:20 p.m. and 11:56 p.m. The moon will be completely out of the shadow by 1:53 a.m. The telescopes should be in place between 8 p.m. and 9 p.m.

Because there have been no significant volcanic eruptions during the last few years, the earth's atmosphere should be clear and so the moon will appear to be copper or brick red, Mehta said. If the atmosphere was filled with dust, then the moon would just appear dark. The moon will appear red because of the way that the light is refracted in the earth's atmosphere.

Besides the lunar eclipse, observers will be able to see Saturn, Uranus and maybe Neptune in the south-southeast sky. Saturn will be visible to the naked eye but, if seen through the telescope, one will be able to see the rings and even some craters on the surface, Mehta said.

Weather forecasts call for a 30 percent chance of showers this afternoon and this evening.

Discharge Studied

Since about June, Whichard said, the paper has been collecting as much of the discharge as possible and running it through the sewer system. Depending on GUC, a permanent system will be installed to connect the drainage to the city's sewer. If GUC does not accept the discharge, the waste will be collected and sent to a waste site.

Officials at GUC expect a decision by the end of this week.

Barrett Lasater, industrial services coordinator with GUC, said the amount of discharge projected to come from the paper, approximately three to five gallons a week, would not cause a problem in the city's treatment system. But he could not say definitely if the waste would be accepted.

"I would expect a definite answer by the end of this week," Lasater said.

Stalemate

Find Funds To Revitalize BEP

A step forward should be cause for pride, especially if it is a step toward better public education. But if that advance is accompanied by a step backward with the other foot, the result isn't progress, it's a stalemate.

When the 1989 General Assembly raised state teachers' salaries an average of 6 percent, North Carolina took an important step toward improving its public education system. But when lawmakers slashed funding for the Basic Education program nearly in half, that progress was negated. One step up; one step back. That amounts to a standstill.

A public school system requires excellent teachers. Attracting excellence demands good pay and good working conditions, North Carolina's teachers hadn't had a pay raise since wages were frozen early in the decade in an effort to balance the state budget. That put the state unacceptably far behind in teacher salaries — 28th in the nation. There's no way of knowing how many top quality teachers either left the profession or selected other careers because of this lag. The raise approved by lawmakers correctly addresses this issue.

But although salaries moved forward, state legislators couldn't seem to find the money to fully fund the fifth installment of the Basic Education Program, a long term effort designed to provide each school child — rural, urban, rich, poor — with an equal education. The state's public schools got a token $69 million for the BEP instead of the $112 million originally scheduled.

Exactly what does that cutback mean? Well, there will be 250 less counselors and school social workers available to help kids choose courses, make college plans, make decisions about sex or work out family difficulties. In addition, 1,271 lab and classroom assistants won't be giving teachers more instructional time by assuming paperwork and clerical duties. Part of the beauty of the BEP is the fact it gives teachers more time to teach. But that help is on hold — thanks to the cuts.

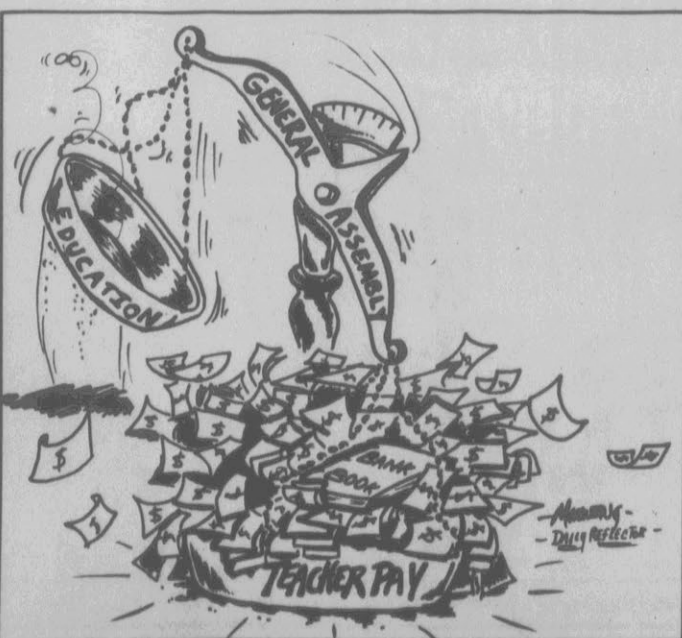

The BEP is a long term commitment to improving North Carolina's public school system. It is a tangible means of enabling students in poor school systems to have the same education students in wealthy systems receive. That's why its implementation should be kept on track.

This was a tough budget year for lawmakers. They struggled with shrinking revenues, woefully inadequate teachers' salaries and the need to fund massive roadbuilding.

But the state's public school system may be the most important investment North Carolina makes, and the BEP is the key to making that investment pay dividends. It should not be shortchanged.

Legislators made a significant pledge when they conceived and approved the BEP. That was no small resolution.

Their devotion to education is in serious question, however, after this year's cutbacks. When the 1990 short session of the General Assembly convenes next year it is the lawmakers' responsibility to find the funds to revitalize that commitment.

Bribe Somebody Else To Do It

Art Buchwald

"What on earth is going on in the Soviet Union?" I asked Sochek, my shoe repairman.

He replied, "All we are seeing is the expected. Communism doesn't work and it never has. In addition, there doesn't seem to be any way for the Communist leaders to switch to another system without losing their jobs."

"I grew up hating Communists. If they disappear, I am really going to miss them," I told him.

"The Soviet people have had it up to here," Sochek said. "Gorbachev knows this so he is hoping to change the system without toppling the entire party. One of the worst things is the corruption. No matter what is going on, someone always has his hand out demanding a bribe."

"Can Gorbachev make a difference to that situation?"

"No, but they will print his picture in the newspapers showing him in a crowd, (ital) promising (unital) that he will."

"Why did you leave Russia?" I asked.

"I was in charge of manufacturing shoes in Minsk. My responsibility was to get them made before winter set in. You have to know a lot of people to get shoes made in Russia. It was no fun, but I did it. I had only one major problem — I couldn't get any heels for my shoes."

"So, I called the Lenin Rubber Heel Works in Pinsk. They said that they didn't have any heels at the moment and told me I should call back in two years.

"This is why the system stinks. Even corruption doesn't work in a Communist country. The bureaucrats are too corrupt to let it work. In a democratic society if you bribe somebody, he stays bribed."

"How much will you take under the table for the heels you don't have?" I wanted to know. "The manager told me, 'Four hundred rubles a heel. If you don't want them, the Smolensk Moccasin Cooperative will take all the heels they can get.' I paid him under the table for the rubber."

"Where did you get the money to pay him?"

"Anyone in Minsk who wanted a pair of shoes had to pay me under the table."

"Nobody could complain about that as long as they got their shoes."

"That's the problem," Sochek said. "They didn't get the shoes. Some big shot in Moscow ordered that my shoes be sent to his brother-in-law in Kiev."

"For which," I wondered aloud, "he was paid under the table?"

"This is why the system stinks. Even corruption doesn't work in a Communist country. The bureaucrats are too corrupt to let it work. In a democratic society if you bribe somebody, he stays bribed."

"Did you get into a lot of trouble because you couldn't honor your contracts for the shoes?"

"The party chief in Minsk attacked me on local television for letting Marx and Engels down. He claimed that I was part of the Brezhnev era's do-nothing managers, who deserved 20 years of hard labor in Finsk."

"That sounds serious. What did you do?"

"Just what any loyal Soviet citizen would do. I bribed someone in the Ministry of Emigration to get me out of the country."

"I'll bet you didn't mind paying that final bribe."

"It wasn't the last bribe. What makes you think that you can get on a Russian airliner for just the price of a ticket?"

"It sounds as if Gorbachev has his work cut out for him. In order to change the Communist system you have to change the people who are running the country. How do you get them out of office?"

Sochek's eyes lit up. "The only way is to bribe somebody else to do it."

Of Man & Islands

David Broder

BEAVER ISLAND, Mich. — Next Saturday is a big day in the history of this island at the top of Lake Michigan, west of the Straits of Mackinac. In the past 125 years, it has been a Mormon agricultural kingdom, a flourishing Irish fishing and lumbering community, a depressed area and, most recently, a growing vacation and retirement center with severely strained sewage and road facilities. Next Saturday, it may get a focus on what the next phase in its life will be.

A big turnout is expected when the final version of what is called the Wade-Trim Economic Development and Planning Report is made public by the consulting firm of that name. The firm has been retained with state funds to help chart where things stand and where they might go.

These are vital questions here. When a preliminary version of the report talked about condominium developments on the harbor, a conference center and golf course on other beaches, some people were outraged. This is a place where fist fights can break out (as happened recently) over traffic on a private dirt road.

But these are not just parochial concerns. Last month, a part-time resident of Beaver Island, William J. Schneider, was a witness at a congressional hearing on Capitol Hill. House Interior Subcommittee Chairman Peter H. Kostmayer (D-Pa.) spent a morning listening to testimony on "America's Islands — Open Space at Risk?" It was part of a series Kostmayer is holding to assess the federal role in protecting the natural and recreational assets of the nation.

Islands are an important focus, he noted, because almost 3 million of the 8 million acres of islands outside Alaska "lie within 25 miles of urban populations of 50,000 people or more, a startling statistic when...open space and recreational resources are becoming increasingly stressed."

Schneider, the president of the newly organized Beaver Island Property Owners Association, which has about 250 family members, told how that stress could affect this island, 26 miles offshore from the fastest-growing section of the state. Lake-front lots on the mainland opposite here now sell for $4,000 a front-foot, compared to $300 on the island. "That makes a $45 round-trip plane trip quite a bargain," Schneider observed.

Obviously, developers are eyeing such a site. And the local governments — two separate (and sometimes contentious) township boards of busy citizens, with no staff help — are hard put to deal with the conflicting demands.

At that, Beaver Island is better fixed than Hilton Head, S.C., was when the developers moved in and made it one of the most popular resorts on the East Coast. The Barrier Island, 15 miles long and five miles wide, was home to egrets, herons and cranes; descendants of freed slaves grew rice, indigo and cotton. Then, in 1956, a two-lane bridge was built linking it to the mainland and serious development started.

As John R. Evans, president of the Hilton Head Land Trust, testified, there was no local government on the island from 1956 until 1983. Politicians in office in Beaufort County, "one of the poorest counties in the south," could see what was happening on the island only in terms of the tax revenues it produced. By the time the island formed a city government, Evans said, three-fourths of the natural wetlands had been lost to development, marinas were polluting the oyster and clam beds, 20 golf courses were each taking 250,000 gallons of water a day from the aquifer and the average summer day saw 52,000 people crowd onto Hilton Head.

'Incredibly, just over a century ago, the Maine legislature ordered all the coastal islands sold at public auction. They went at prices averaging $3.25 per island. Let's hope this generation is not as shortsighted.'

Only now is the island being protected by land-management and tree ordinances and benefiting from the two-year-old Land Trust that acquires sensitive areas like Hooping Crane Pond.

It doesn't have to be like that. Kostmayer heard Luther Propst of the Conservation Foundation describe how foresighted residents of Sanibel Island, Fla., 15 years ago halted development long enough to create a comprehensive plan "that allowed substantial development while creating a system of marsh and mangrove conservation, restoring wetlands, conserving native vegetation and protecting beaches and water supply aquifers...demonstrating that effective land-use planning and implementation of growth-management strategies can indeed reconcile development and conservation."

Similar examples were offered by developers and local officials in North Carolina and Pennsylvania, but there were also cautionary tales of weak, fragmented planning efforts endangering both development and conservation in the Thousand Islands of the St. Lawrence River and other sites. Planning and zoning is mostly a local and state function and Kostmayer is not certain what the federal role should be.

But anything that raises peoples' awareness of the stakes in these islands is worthwhile. Today, Maine is developing an Island Trail, a 325-mile camping waterway using sites on offshore islands. Incredibly, just over a century ago, the Maine legislature ordered all the coastal islands sold at public auction. They went at prices averaging $3.25 per island.

Let's hope this generation is not as shortsighted.

DOT Gives Top Priority To Paving Dirt Roads In New Highway Plan

By Dennis Patterson
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — The state Board of Transportation has identified dirt roads as the first beneficiaries of a $9.1 billion road construction package passed by the General Assembly.

The board has allocated nearly $33 million from the Highway Trust Fund to pave dirt roads across the state.

"In our county, we're really going to be glad to get those roads paved," Randolph County manager Frank Willis said Tuesday. Randolph's allocation from the trust fund is $875,846, bringing the total for secondary road paving to $2.5 million this year.

DOT figures show that Randolph County is second behind Wilkes

County in the number of unpaved roads.

"We never got enough money to pave roads that were unpaved," Willis said. "We got money to stabilize them, or maybe straighten out a curve, but our problem has always been unpaved roads. We've got a lot of old subdivisions that have unpaved roads in them."

The $9.1 billion highway package approved this summer calls for paving 10,000 miles of dirt roads by 1999, with the remaining secondary roads to be paved by 2006.

Wilkes County got $992,247 in new allocations from the trust fund Friday, the most of any county in the state. For the year, the county leads the state with $3.2 million scheduled for secondary road paving.

The annual allocations made so far represent about 85 percent of the total funding for the year, DOT officials said. Additional funds will be allocated if revenue projections on which the budgets are based hold true.

In addition to Wilkes and Randolph, four other counties went over $2 million in allocations for the year with the trust fund money.

Surry County received $791,742 in trust fund money, pushing its annual allocation to $2.37 million. Henderson County received $749,737 in new allocations, making its total for the year $2.05 million. Buncombe County got $758,106 in additional paving money, for a total of $2.03 million. And Ashe County got $694,485 from the trust fund, for a total of $2.36 million.

The boost from the trust fund, when combined with increases already included in the regular highway budget, means the state will spend at least $101.6 million on secondary road paving this year.

Lead Discovered

ASHEVILLE (AP) — The water from nearly a fifth of the school fountains and kitchen sinks tested by a University of North Carolina at Asheville researcher exceeded a federal standard for lead contamination.

"Every school system that we've looked at has had at least some sources that were high," said Richard Maas, an environmental scientist leading the study.

Lead is a toxic metal that can be harmful even at low levels. It can damage the brain and nervous system and young children are at greatest risk, researchers say.

Nearly 20 percent of the 2,000 school fountains and kitchen sinks tested so far exceed the federal recommended standard of 10 parts per billion, said Maas.

The study, conducted by UNCA and the Clean Water Fund of North Carolina, also found that nearly 11 percent of 3,000 school fountains and home taps tested so far exceed the EPA's current standard of 20 parts per billion for school water fountains.

Helicopter Crash

FORT BRAGG, N.C. — Army accident investigators from Alabama probed the wreckage of a helicopter and talked to witnesses as they led the probe aimed at finding the cause of a crash that killed three soldiers.

A spokesman for Fort Bragg said the OH-58A helicopter crashed about 12:10 a.m. Tuesday while on a training mission. Identification of the victims and their unit was withheld pending notification of next of kin, the spokesman said.

The four investigators were expected to concentrate on equipment, human and environmental factors, said Lt. Col. Herbert Banks, public affairs officer for the Army Safety Center at Fort Rucker, Ala.

Debris from the helicopter was scattered across the width of a tank trail in a pine and scrub forest. Practically no parts were recognizable.

Leaky Roof

DALLAS, N.C. (AP) — The Gaston County Police Department will be forced out of its headquarters for as long as a year because of a leaky roof that could trigger problems with asbestos, officials say.

In a special meeting Tuesday, commissioners authorized up to $110,000 to rent a minimum of 10,000-square-foot for the department for at least six months.

The move was prompted when heavy rains Monday collapsed a portion of the police department's ceiling and exposed asbestos fibers.

Three Killed

ASHEVILLE (AP) — A Henderson County woman and her two daughters were killed Tuesday and the girls' grandmother critically injured when their car collided with a jackknifing tractor trailer on a rainy stretch of N.C. 191.

Killed in the accident were Valerie McDougal, 40, and her daughters, Kristen Beth McDougal, 15, and Lyndsay McDougal, 12, of Etowah, according to N.C. Highway Patrol Trooper Chris Phillips.

The children's paternal grandmother, Anne McDougal, 67, of Hollywood, Fla., was listed in critical condition at Memorial Mission Hospital in Asheville on Tuesday evening, according to Phillips, the investigating officer.

Mobil Drilling

RALEIGH (AP) — The oil spill from an Exxon tanker in Alaska last spring has prompted the oil industry to improve its ability to handle large spills, said a Mobil Oil Corp. official to a state panel reviewing the company's plans to drill off the North Carolina coast.

William C. Park III, a former U.S. Coast Guard officer who works as an environmental consultant for Mobil, said the industry was caught off-guard when the Exxon Valdez hit a reef in March and spilled 10 million gallons of oil into Prince William Sound.

The oil industry reacted to that incident, he said, by creating the Petroleum Industry Response Organization (PIRO) to deal with oil spills. The new group, based in Washington, will have five regional centers for responding to major spills.

The group also plans to establish 15 coastal staging areas, including ones in Wilmington and Norfolk, Va., where it will store equipment for containing and cleaning up spills.

Earl Ruth

SALISBURY, N.C. (AP) — Earl Baker Ruth, who served three terms in Congress and was the last appointed governor of American Samoa, died Tuesday at his home. He was 73.

Ruth, a Spencer native who grew up in Charlotte, began his political career in Salisbury, where he served three terms on the city council and was mayor pro tem in 1967-68.

In 1968, he resigned from Catawba College after 22 years with the school, changed his voter registration from Democrat to Republican and ran successfully for the 8th District congressional seat.

While in Congress, Ruth served on the House appropriations, veterans affairs, education and labor committees.

He was defeated in 1974 by Democrat Bill Hefner.

Spangler Meets With NCSU Leaders As Probe Broadens

By Tom Foreman Jr.
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — University of North Carolina system president C.D. Spangler Jr. said he will use information gained from a meeting with N.C. State Chancellor Bruce Poulton and head basketball coach Jim Valvano when deciding what to do about allegations of academic abuse in the school's basketball program.

Spangler and members of a panel he set up to investigate the allegations involving the basketball program met with Poulton and Valvano on Tuesday.

"The purpose was to help answer questions that had been raised and to seek more information," Spangler said in a telephone interview. "It was information I needed to prepare my report for the board of governors."

Also present at the four-hour meeting were Raymond H. Dawson, the UNC system senior vice president for academic affairs; Samuel H. Poole, chairman of the panel that has been investigating the basketball program; Robert L. "Roddy" Jones, chairman of the UNC Board of Governors; and N.C. State counsel Becky R. French.

Spangler would not divulge the results of the meeting, except to say a full report would be given to the board of governors at a meeting in Chapel Hill on Aug. 25.

"I will be talking to the board of governors ... to what I have determined and what solutions and recommendations I will make to the board of governors," he said.

The recommendations will be based on his conclusions and not any made by the commission, Spangler said.

"The Poole commission was not expected to make recommendations," he said. "It was to look into the matters which I asked them to look in to."

He praised the work of the commission, but said the information it presented to him in a final briefing July 17 raised "things I wanted to pursue further."

Spangler said he had read the entire book since its release.

"In many ways, it's a sad book," he said. "It's not a book that I would have read except in my responsibilities as president of the University of North Carolina, and having responsibilities in the areas of athletics and academics," he said, declining to elaborate when asked to interpret the word "sad."

Court Blocks Insurance Order

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — The North Carolina Court of Appeals set aside a cut in automobile insurance rates, saying the state insurance commissioner had not clearly explained his basis for ordering the reduction.

The ruling on Tuesday stemmed from Insurance Commissioner James E. Long's decision in February 1988 to order a rate cut averaging 3.9 percent for autos and 2.6 percent for motorcycles. The insurance industry had sought a rate increase, and appealed the decision.

Quayle Urges SCLC To Fight Drugs, Social Problems

By Lee May
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

ATLANTA — Vice President Dan Quayle on Tuesday urged a mostly black audience to combat social problems, particularly illegal drugs, which he called "the modern equivalent of slavery."

Addressing the opening of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference's 32nd national convention, Quayle combined a spirited defense of the Bush administration's record on civil rights with exhortations to continue the struggle for equality.

Bush "has a great sensitivity to those without hope or opportunity," Quayle told the crowd of 2,000. "He not only cares about them, he desperately wants to help them."

Quayle's appearance, following his speech to the NAACP in Detroit last month, was part of an effort by Republicans to reverse eight years of hostility between minorities and the Reagan administration.

In his 30-minute address, which was greeted with polite applause, Quayle referred to black Bush appointees and to a litany of social ills — teen-age pregnancies, school dropouts, unemployment, poverty, crime, rundown housing, drugs — in an effort to connect with the SCLC delegates and guests.

But his speech also demonstrated the difficulty that a white conservative Republican faces in making appeals to black people steeped in years of antagonism to the party's policies.

Quayle's reference to two black Bush appointees — Louis Sullivan, secretary of health and human services, and Colin Powell, newly named chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff — were well received. Powell attended the lunch and at one point stood and received a standing ovation.

But later many delegates complained that Bush has lagged in appointing representative numbers of black administration officials. And during the speech, each mention of a black hero or civil rights victory, which some felt came in spite of opposition from Republicans like Quayle, caused many eyes to roll and frowns to appear.

Quayle said that "I know that there are concerns among you about the growing number of incidents of racial and religious harassment and violence around the country. And I stand with you. There is no place for the Klan, for neo-Nazis, for Skinheads or any other such hate group in our society."

The vice president said that "family and values" would serve well in the war on social ills and that a "partnership between the government and the private organizations" is essential to victory.

Quayle thought his appearance went well.

Woodstock Farm Draws Spirited But Light Crowd

BETHEL, N.Y. (AP) — The crowd was smaller, the musicians amateur and Saabs replaced sandals as the favored form of transportation, but hundreds of people donned tie-dyed shirts to conjure the spirit of Woodstock anyway.

Twenty years after Richie Havens opened the Woodstock festival before 400,000 people, the late Max Yasgur's old farm filled with revelers Tuesday to celebrate one of rock 'n' roll's most sacred anniversaries.

"It was a deeply spiritual experience and certainly people would want to come back," said comedian Wavy Gravy, the only one of Woodstock's original performers.

Gravy, wearing a beanie with a propeller and carrying a walking stick topped with a pig's snout, waved to festival veterans before being ushered into a forest of satellite dishes for one of dozens of interviews.

More free enterprise than free love was evident at the upstate New York meadow as tourists could choose between T-shirts emblazoned with "I survived the Woodstock Reunion" and "Was I Late?"

"I really honor the people whose spread this is for allowing this to take place," Gravy said. "It's very folksy."

It wasn't without a price. A man who said he was a relative of the field's new owners, Louis Nicky and June Gelish of New York City, asked a $5 "field restoration" donation from each carload. Police said the owners squabbled with merchants who tried to sell their wares.

True to the spirit of the original Woodstock, when fans swarmed over fences to transform it into a free concert, some motorists just waited until the landlord looked the other way and snuck their vehicles onto the field.

Police were on hand to make sure traffic kept moving. There were no arrests, said Sgt. Charles Kulick of the Sullivan County Sheriff's Department. He estimated the crowd at about 600, the largest of a celebration that had been building for a week.

The most tension came when television reporters, nervously approaching 6 p.m. deadlines, competed for space near the commemorative plaque that is the only permanent fixture on the alfalfa field.

"I didn't really know what to expect," said Ralph Corwin, a resident of upstate New York who said he attended the original show and has returned every year since. "I'm just thankful that they let us go back. The numbers have fallen down but the spirit hasn't died."

On the same corner where Jimi Hendrix, the Who, the Jefferson Airplane and the Grateful Dead performed 20 years earlier, a makeshift stage was built for stray amateur guitarists. One singer replaced Country Joe McDonald's infamous "Gimme an 'F'" cheer with the more modest L-O-V-E spellalong.

Alaska Files Suit Against Oil Firms

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

JUNEAU, Alaska — In a lawsuit, Alaska accused Exxon Corp. and six other oil companies of deliberate and gross negligence in not preventing and properly cleaning up the nation's worst oil spill.

The lawsuit does not specify damages, but could amount to billions of dollars, a state official said Tuesday.

The state alleges that Exxon Corp. and Exxon Shipping Co., the subsidiary that owned the tanker Exxon Valdez, are responsible for the tanker running aground by failing to staff it adequately and supervise the crew properly.

The lawsuit, filed in state Superior Court at Anchorage, also says Alyeska Pipeline Service Co., a consortium of oil companies that runs the trans-Alaska oil pipeline, failed to take prompt and adequate measures to contain and remove the spilled oil or prevent it from spreading into environmentally sensitive areas.

Alyeska was in charge of the initial response to the spill.

The March 24 tanker disaster left nearly 11 million gallons of crude oil in Prince William Sound.

The lawsuit names Alyeska and each of the consortium companies: Exxon Pipeline Co., an Exxon Corp. subsidiary; Arco Pipeline Co.; BP Alaska Pipelines Inc.; Mobil Alaska Pipeline Co.; Amerada Hess Pipeline Corp.; Phillips Alaska Pipeline Corp.; and Unocal Pipeline Co.

LeResche said he expected the lawsuit would take a decade to resolve.

Democrats Pick Lawyer To Face Cuban-Born Republican In Miami

By Dan Sewell
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MIAMI — In an ethnically tense battle to succeed the late Rep. Claude Pepper, a lawyer won the Democratic nomination using a theme that he's running for "an American seat."

His Cuban-born Republican opponent called his victory ominous.

The winner was Gerald Richman, a 47-year-old former Florida Bar association president making his first run for office. Richman gathered much of his strength from a heavy majority of the diverse district's white non-Hispanic voters in a 61-39 percent victory over Rosario Kennedy.

Richman moves on to an Aug. 29 special election against state Sen. Leana Ros-Lehtinen, Cuban-born as Ms. Kennedy, for the seat left vacant by Pepper's death May 30 at age 88.

"It is this community's victory," Richman said. "Now is the time for Democratic unity ... I cannot understand how being an American can possibly be divisive."

He said he will represent "all the people," not any one ethnic group.

With all of 146 precincts reporting unofficial returns, Richman had 14,411 votes to 9,226 votes for Ms. Kennedy.

Ms. Ros-Lehtinen, a seven-year state legislator, flew to Washington late Tuesday and planned to fly back to Miami today aboard Air Force One with President Bush. The president will lead a fund-raising luncheon for her today.

"I think the victory sends an ominous message that there are some voters who respond to an ethnically divisive campaign," Ms. Ros-Lehtinen said.

Republicans believe they have a strong shot at adding to their 10-8 majority in Florida's congressional delegation by winning the seat Pepper held for Democrats since its inception 27 years ago.

Ms. Kennedy, 44, in her concession speech, called on Richman "to stop this divisive campaign" and warned that an ethnic campaign "can have Claude Pepper's seat in jeopardy."

She said she would meet with Richman today to discuss the general election campaign.

Richman said, though, that he can defeat Ms. Ros-Lehtinen on issues such as abortion — she's anti-abortion, he's for abortion rights — and that he can unify the community.

"She is in the right-wing, extreme element of the Republican Party," said Richman.

"We're going to campaign by going to the people. This is a grassroots campaign," said Richman, who overcame Ms. Kennedy's support by party leaders, the AFL-CIO and The Miami Herald.

Richman said his theme was meant to unify Miami and to rebut Republican national Chairman Lee Atwater's statement that it's time to elect the first Cuban-American to Congress.

"He thinks that Lee Atwater is his opponent," Ms. Ros-Lehtinen said. "I condemned those words the moment they were uttered."

Ms. Ros-Lehtinen, 37, said she will campaign on issues such as crime and drugs and holding down taxes.

"I think voters are going to choose on issues and experience," she said. "I'm certainly proud of my heritage, but I don't campaign on that basis."

Ms. Kennedy carried Hispanic and black precincts Tuesday, but was defeated 4-to-1 in predominantly "Anglo," or non-Latin white, precincts.

Richman, Jewish and Brooklyn-born, stunned Ms. Kennedy, the Democratic front-runner, with a late-charging, 146-vote victory in the Aug. 1 primary, in which five other Democrats were eliminated.

Ms. Ros-Lehtinen, whose resignation as state legislator is effective

Aug. 29, won the four-way race for GOP nomination with 83 percent of the vote. Her campaign manager is Jeb Bush, the president's son.

Little difference on issues emerged between Ms. Kennedy and Richman in their runoff, dominated by discussion of ethnic divisiveness, qualifications and ability to defeat Ms. Ros-Lehtinen.

Democrats are concerned that an increasing number of Hispanic voters — they now make up 40 to 50 percent of those registered — will swing future elections to Republicans.

Richman supporters said he can best energize the vote in black neighborhoods and on Miami Beach to capitalize on the Democrats' continued registration advantage.

Search Expands For N.Y. Toddlers

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — From the same Harlem playground, at about the same time of day, on the same day of the week, two toddlers who lived in the same apartment building vanished.

Investigators now are distributing posters around the country of 2-year-old Christopher Dansby and 19-month-old Shane Walker.

Shane disappeared 5 p.m. Thursday, while Christopher was last seen 7 p.m. on Thursday, May 18.

The two never played together, but authorities say the disappearances may be linked because of the eerie similarities.

Just before they vanished, the toddlers were even playing with the same children.

The two playmates, a 10-year-old girl and her 5-year-old brother, cannot recall seeing anyone take the boys from the busy playground, police said. Authorities have questioned them extensively.

"No one that we have found yet has seen anybody with the child, taking the child by the hand, carrying it, leading it, taking it through a fence, or leaving the playground," said Deputy Chief Ronald Ferrich, head of Manhattan detectives.

He said two black men, "similar only in their dreadlock hair styles" are being sought for questioning. He declined to elaborate.

Christopher and Shane, who both lived in the Martin Luther King Jr. Towers housing project, vanished from the development's large playground.

Rosalee Glover, Shane's mother, said she and Shane went to the playground about 5 p.m. She sat on a bench as Shane played with the two children, she said.

The kidnapping "happened so fast," she said. "I turned my head away when this guy asked me a question." When she looked back, Shane was gone.

Elizabeth Manley, Christopher's grandmother, believes the two cases are connected. "In both cases, the kids were taken right under our very noses," she said.

Manley said she, too, turned her head away for a minute at the playground, "and my grandchild was gone."

The national search includes rewards for the return of the children totaling about $30,000.

Police have searched the area's sewers, roofs, basements, and air shafts of occupied and abandoned buildings, but have found no signs of the boys.

The disappearances also have led investigators back to their files: They've reopened the cases of two other infants kidnapped in the area in the last two years. One theory they have is that Christopher and Shane were taken as part of a conspiracy to steal or sell babies.

But the heads of two private adoption agencies in the city, which place large numbers of black children with adoptive parents, discounted that thought.

Out Of The Past

Alice Wilson, a Washington, D.C., secretary, looks through a purse that was returned to her Tuesday. The purse, stolen from her in October 1970, was found by construction workers in a now-abandoned building where she had been working. Its contents — minus $60 in cash — were intact.

Hills Supports Saving Incentive

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The Bush administration, seeking ways to boost the U.S. savings rate to cure a variety of economic ills, appears to be inching closer to recommending increased tax incentives for thrifty Americans.

U.S. Trade Representative Carla Hills added her support to the idea Tuesday, saying that expanding Individual Retirement Accounts would make her job of reducing America's huge trade deficits easier.

Millions of American savers could benefit through expanded IRAs, which enjoyed great popularity earlier in the decade, but it could cost the U.S. Treasury billions of dollars in lost tax revenue.

Ms. Hills, in an interview with reporters, stressed that she was not signaling an imminent administration announcement on IRAs. However, other officials said a proposed increase in tax incentives for IRAs is high on the list of options being studied by the administration.

Americans' personal savings rate — savings as a percentage of after-tax income — fell to a 40-year low of 3.2 percent in 1987 and increased only slightly to 4.2 percent last year.

By contrast, Japan, the country with the world's largest trade surplus, had a savings rate of 16.5 percent in 1987.

Administration officials said they are planning a fall campaign, to be led by Treasury Secretary Nicholas Brady, focusing on the country's chronic low savings rate and proposing ways to correct the problem.

The huge cost of IRAs was one reason they were greatly scaled back by the 1986 Tax Reform Act. As a result, the number of tax returns claiming IRA deductions fell from 15.5 million in 1987 to 7.4 million last year.

SBA Alters Minority Program

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The Small Business Administration is overhauling its minority set-aside program in response to the Wedtech bribery and influence-peddling scandal.

The regulations, issued Tuesday and effective immediately, put into effect legislation signed nine months ago by President Reagan. They are designed to minimize political influence on the agency's 21-year-old program under which companies owned by blacks, Hispanics, Asians, Indians and economically disadvantaged women are given preference in the awarding of government contracts.

Among the changes: —The director of the program will be a career employee of the agency, rather than a political appointee. SBA Administrator Susan Engeleiter named Erlene Patrick, a former staff aide to the Senate Small Business Committee, to the post. —The person in charge will not have to respond as much to the political pressures," Patrick said.

—Companies that misrepresent their status as minority-owned will be subject to stiffer penalties. The maximum fine was increased from $50,000 to $500,000 and the top jail term from five years to 10 years.

—For the first time, competitive bidding is required among minority-owned companies for manufacturing contracts over $5 million and product and service contracts over $3 million.

—The length of time a company may get special preference was lengthened from seven years to nine years, but companies will be expected to derive a steadily decreasing percentage of their revenues from contracts awarded under the program.

—Owners of eligible companies must have net worth of less than $250,000, excluding equity in their home or business, when they enter the program. The old standard was $750,000, including home or business equity. —The agency must rule on applications within 90 days.

Cannon Found

BRYSON CITY, N.C. (AP) — In the battle against marijuana, Swain County Sheriff's deputies found a new weapon — a homemade cannon guarding a pot patch.

The cannon was discovered last week when deputies found 157 marijuana plants on a raid. The deputies were acting on a tip, said Sheriff Ray Cline.

The officers, armed with a search warrant, found the device set up on the edge of the marijuana behind a mobile home.

Hard Liquor Sales Hit 18-Year Low

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SAN FRANCISCO — Americans, who drink about a gallon and a half per capita of hard liquor a year, hit an 18-year low in average purchases of distilled spirits, according to an alcoholic beverage trade publication.

The report in the journal Impact cited only a few ups among the downs — principally in the sales of "white goods" that include gin, vodka, rum and tequila. Distilled goods shipments totaled 159 million cases in 1988, 4 million under the 1970 level, the report said.

Whiskies, called "brown goods," took the biggest whipping, a challenge the companies regarded as extremely grim as they plot strategy to replace over-50 U.S. whiskey drinkers — estimated as half the total.

Vodka, at 38 million cases distributed last year, was reported the biggest-selling distilled spirit in the country, far ahead of the 21 million cases sold in 1970. Gin ran a poor second with 14 million cases. Rum, with 13 million cases, advanced 7 million over 1970.

The journal blamed the 4.2 percent decline from 1987 on "the cumulative effects of federal, state and local tax increases on spirits and the continuing pressure on the entire alcoholic beverage industry from anti-alcohol forces."

Industry experts have blamed the trend on a variety of factors: growing health consciousness, the aging of baby boomers, and strong campaigns in recent years against drunken driving and drugs.

Pressured by declining sales, spirits marketers last year slashed total advertising budgets by more than $100 million, to $240 million, Impact said.

The whiskey segment, including bourbon, blends, Scotch, Canadian and Irish, declined 43 million cases, to 60 million between 1970 and 1988. Of those "brown goods," bourbon was the biggest loser, dipping 19 million cases from the 36 million figure in 1970, skidding 6.3 percent between 1988 and 1987 alone.

Although Canadian whiskey gained five million cases over 1970, the 19 million-case figure last year was 3.1 percent under the previous year's. The biggest loser between 1987 and 1988 was Scotch, dipping by 8.8 percent to 13 million cases.

N.Y. Phone Striker Killed In Picket Line Accident

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Union members mourned the death of a striker who was killed in a picket line confrontation in a New York City suburb and strikebound telephone companies in four states sought vandals who cut telephone lines.

Representatives of workers striking New York-based NYNEX and Philadelphia-based Bell Atlantic, meanwhile, were expected to resume separate talks today.

But some union spokesmen for the four so-called Baby Bells weren't optimistic about a quick end to strikes. Pacific Bell and Bell Atlantic in Washington, D.C., had informal contract talks Tuesday, but little progress was reported.

"They offered shallow changes," CWA spokesman Bob Schlacter said of the Bell Atlantic meeting. Union officials said tense picket lines led to the death Tuesday afternoon of Edward H. Horgan, 34, who hit his head while a non-striking worker tried to drive his car through a picket line a day before in Mount Pleasant, N.Y., a union spokesman said. No charges were filed.

Nearly 200,000 operators, clerks, technicians and other workers are on strike against four regional telephone companies in 20 states and the District of Columbia.

Minority Parties Back Walesa Bid

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WARSAW, Poland — Lawmakers of two minor parties today endorsed the idea of a coalition government led by the independent Solidarity movement, strengthening Lech Walesa's bid to create the East bloc's first non-communist government.

More than four decades of governmental leadership by the communist Polish United Workers Party appears suddenly in doubt because of the governing crisis stemming from the party's crushing losses in the most democratic elections in the country since World War II.

President Wojciech Jaruzelski on Tuesday proposed a meeting of the country's main political leaders to find "rational solutions," but there was no word today on when the meeting might take place.

In a climate of economic deterioration, a $39 billion foreign debt and public discontent with continuing communist leadership, Solidarity has said that only an opposition-led government will have the social support needed to carry out difficult economic and political decisions.

The proposal has found sympathy with the two minor parties that hold the balance of power in parliament, the Peasants and the Democrats.

But it has alarmed the Communist Party in Poland and the Soviet Union, its superpower neighbor and communist ally, which has said the attempt to form the government could lead to destabilization of Poland and Europe and endanger the Warsaw Pact military alliance.

In a bid to ease Soviet fears, Walesa on Tuesday promised that in any Solidarity-led government, the Communist Party would be given control of the "sensitive" ministries of defense and interior that control the army and internal police.

It was possible communists could receive other ministries as well, union spokesman Janusz Onyszkiewicz said today.

Walesa reiterated his Aug. 7 proposal of a Solidarity-led coalition with the Democrats and Peasants on Tuesday, one day after communist Prime Minister Czeslaw Kiszczak announced he was ready to resign and turn over his unsuccessful attempt to form a "grand coalition" government to Peasant Party Chairman Roman Malinowski.

But Malinowski has not publicly said if he wants to be a candidate for prime minister, and his own Peasant Party legislators declared after meeting with him today that they "fully support Lech Walesa's initiative."

In a resolution, they urged party leaders to "quickly realize" the Walesa coalition plan, party spokesman Jozef Kowalczyk said.

Kowalczyk declined to say what majority the resolution was supported by the 76 Peasant lawmakers, who make up the third-largest parliamentary delegation after the communists and Solidarity. Malinowski returned to party headquarters to meet with party leaders, he said.

Officer Says Inmates Raped, Killed Hostages

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MANILA, Philippines — Soldiers stormed a prison and killed convicts holding a religious group hostage after learning they had murdered male captives and raped the women, the officer in charge of the jail said today.

All 16 convicts and five of the 15 hostages died before troops recaptured the jail Tuesday in Davao City, 610 miles south of Manila.

The dead included a 9-year-old boy and Australian missionary Jacqueline Hamill, 36, of Sydney. One of the captives who was freed said Miss Hamill was raped at knifepoint the night before she was killed.

Officials said most of the hostages were slain by their captors before the assault and that none of the captives died in the military attack.

But in Canberra, Australia's foreign minister said Miss Hamill may have been killed by soldiers when the convicts tried to break out of the jail hours before troops stormed it.

President Corazon Aquino's spokesman said there was no evidence the military bungled the hostage crisis but announced an investigation into the bloody incident.

Lt. Col. Franco Calida, Davao City's police commander and jail superintendent, said civilian officials tried to negotiate with the inmates after they seized the hostages Sunday during religious services at the prison.

A few hours before the attack, the convicts had tried to escape by using hostages as shields. During an exchange of gunfire, one captive and one inmate were killed but five hostages escaped. They told police of the rapes and killings, Calida told Manila radio station DZXL.

"When we learned that the women were raped and that male hostages were being killed, the task was given to us," Calida said. "So the negotiating team was left with no other choice, because the hostages were being killed one by one. That is what the hostages were telling the negotiating team."

The attack began at about 3 p.m. Troops rushed forward firing automatic weapons and secured the downtown jail after about 40 minutes, witnesses and officials said.

Miss Hamill's body was found dumped outside the detention center with a bullet wound in the chest. She had only been in Davao City for a month.

The Rev. Fred Castillo, one of the freed hostages, said Miss Hamill and some of the nine other women hostages were raped. Other freed hostages said they heard the women screaming on Monday night.

"Jackie told me about the incident," Castillo said Tuesday.

In Canberra, Foreign Minister Gareth Evans said it appeared Miss Hamill may have been shot by a soldier during the escape attempt.

"In the doctor's opinion, death was instantaneous and had occurred some hours previously, which would indicate she had been shot during the attempted escape incident in the morning," Evans said in a report to the Australian Senate. "Ms. Hamill was seen to slump as the group retreated back through a gateway to the inner compound."

Evans said he had asked Philippine officials to investigate her death.

Stock And Market Reports

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market opened broadly higher today, shaking off its latest doldrums. The Dow Jones average of 30 industrial stocks was up 13.28 points to 2,701.06 after a half-hour of trading at 10 a.m. EDT.

Advancing issues outpaced declines by nearly 2 to 1 on the New York Stock Exchange, with 647 issues up, 308 down and 500 unchanged.

Volume on the Big Board totaled 24.89 million shares.

Analysts said the market could break out of its recent sluggish mood after having digested interest-rate worries that helped depress bond prices lately.

A Commerce Department report this morning that new housing starts rose 0.8 percent last month had little impact on the market so far, traders said.

The NYSE's composite index of all its listed common stocks was up 0.65 to 192.73.

At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index had gained 1.06 to 380.88.

On Tuesday, the Dow Jones Industrial Average rose 9.86 points to finish at 2,687.78 in sluggish trading.

Advancing issues outnumbered declines by about 6 to 1 in nationwide trading of New York Stock Exchange-listed stocks, with 809 issues up, 689 down and 501 unchanged.

Judgeship

CHARLOTTE (AP) — North Carolina Parole Commission Chairman Sam Wilson has been named by Gov. Jim Martin to replace retiring Mecklenburg County Superior Court Judge Frank Snapp.

Snapp, 70, is retiring after 22 years on the bench.

Wilson was Martin's legal counsel from January 1985 until August 1987, when the governor appointed him to head the parole commission. Wilson, 38, a Charlotte native, is a 1975 graduate of the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill law school. He had practiced law in Charlotte for 10 years before becoming Martin's legal counsel.

Wilson, a former Mecklenburg County Republican Party chairman, was the GOP's candidate for state attorney general in 1988. He lost to Democratic incumbent Lacy Thornburg.

Beached Whales

RALEIGH (AP) — A mother-and-son pair of pygmy sperm whales found beached on Bogue Banks were moved to the Duke University Marine Lab near Beaufort, where workers hope to save their lives.

Beachgoers near Pine Knoll Shores found the pair Monday and kept them wet with seawater while waiting for a team of specialists to arrive, said Gail W. Cannon, coordinator of the Dolphin Watch program at Duke University and the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, also based at the marine lab.

Both whales were loaded onto stretchers and driven to the marine lab, where tanks were fashioned to hold them.

William J. Bowen, area coordinator for the Marine Mammal Stranding Network, a group of volunteers who try to rescue beached animals, said it appeared the mother had become sick and beached herself. She was followed to shore by her baby.

Big Board volume totaled 148.77 million shares, up from 142.01 million in the previous session.

Disgruntled French Gendarmes Air Their Gripes In Public Via Papers

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PARIS — Newspapers are being flooded with anonymous letters from an unusual source — disgruntled gendarmes, the military corpsmen who make up almost half of France's 200,000 police officers.

Government officials have replied by saying reforms will be proposed this fall, and in the meantime the gendarmes should think about the soldier's duty not to air the military's dirty laundry in public.

National and regional newspapers have received dozens of letters, each purporting to speak for a large number of gendarmes who are unhappy about pay scales, long hours and poor living conditions in barracks.

The 90,000 gendarmes are responsible for police duties on most French highways and in rural areas, although they also sometimes patrol in cities. Special squads fight terrorism, monitor river traffic and patrol airports, among other tasks.

The line between the duties of the gendarmerie and the national police is not always clear, and leads to frequent conflict between the two bodies. It occasionally leads to arrests of gendarmes by police or vice-versa.

The gendarmerie traces its origins back centuries to the "Marchaussee," medieval soldiers called to catch bandits and highwaymen. It got its name and current status in 1791, at the height of the French Revolution.

"It's a unique organization that exists in no other country in Europe," Napoleon once said, according to a history of the gendarmes. "It's the most efficient way to maintain the tranquility of a country. ... It's a half-civil, half-military surveillance, spread over the entire territory."

Gendarmes answer to the Defense Ministry. They are trained, paid and expected to work and live like soldiers, while doing exactly the same tasks as police. Unlike police, they cannot form unions, and are not paid overtime.

Speaking out publicly means certain disciplinary action under military rules.

An anonymous letter published in the regional daily Ouest-France complained about "the 120 hours on-call each week, including 60 to 80 hours working, no overtime pay or compensatory time off and no compensation for working weekends and holidays."

Starting pay is $1,135 monthly for the unmarried, and pay increases on a sliding scale for those with families. Several letters said that, once unpaid overtime is taken into account, gendarmes barely get the minimum wage.

A letter published by the national daily France-Soir from an anonymous gendarme's wife who signed herself "Madame X" denounced "the degradation of family life." She said the gendarmerie makes life "abominable for couples, leading many of them to divorce."

Married gendarmes live in apartments built into the barracks, with widely varying amenities.

The first anonymous letters appeared in regional newspapers in eastern France in early August and only gradually attracted national attention. Soon there was a flood, with the French news agency Agence France-Presse counting almost 20 over the weekend of Aug. 12-13.

Gerard Renon, the junior minister in the Defense Ministry, said in a television interview that the letters dealt with "problems we know about and are working on."

Other government officials said a proposal would be presented in the fall to redistribute the work force, upgrade the barracks, assure at least some free time to the gendarmes and possibly increase the number of draftees allowed to do their military service as auxiliary gendarmes.

The director-general of the gendarmerie, Regis Mourier, issued a statement saying he was aware of the problems and was working on them.

Meanwhile, he said, the gendarmes should keep quiet, "not just from respect for the obligations of the military status, but from respect for the institution, its history and its place in the nation," Mourier said.

The call to silence just unleashed more letters.

"It's not by telling us to shut up that the problems will be solved," said an anonymous letter published in the daily Le Populaire du Centre de Limoges in central France. "Watch out, general officers and elected officials, disgust and discontent is getting established in this good old Marchaussee."

Begin Goes To Hospital

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

JERUSALEM — Former Prime Minister Menachem Begin was hospitalized today after complaining of fatigue.

Dr. Jonathan Halevy, director general at Jerusalem's Shaarei Tzedek Hospital said Begin, who turned 76 on Saturday, will be hospitalized for "a day or two."

"He complained for the last few days about some fatigue, but nothing specific," Halevy said. He said initial tests found nothing wrong.

Begin was admitted to the same hospital in April 1987 after complaining of general weakness and was discharged after 10 days.

He suffered several heart attacks when he was prime minister from 1977 to 1983 and underwent prostate surgery in 1986.

Begin seldom speaks in public. His last public statement was July 9.

Elvis' Fans Mark Anniversary

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MEMPHIS, Tenn. — Elvis Presley fans marking the 12th anniversary of his death filed solemnly past his pool-side grave in a candlelight procession early today.

The vigil, which began Tuesday night, drew 3,000 to 4,000 participants, police said. The affair is the largest single event of Elvis International Tribute Week, a nine-day lineup of concerts, memorials and fan get-togethers.

Presley died of heart disease on Aug. 16, 1977. He is buried next to the swimming pool at his white-columned estate, Graceland.

Participants in the vigil marched single file up the quarter-mile drive at Graceland, carrying tapers lighted from a torch fired from an eternal flame at Presley's graveside. Many left roses by the simple marker.

Devotees began lining up at Graceland's distinctive gates — decorated with musical notes and a rendering of Elvis — five to six hours before the procession.

By the time the ceremony began, the highway in front of the mansion was filled with Elvis fans, more than a few with Elvis-style metallic sunglasses, spangled belts or jet-black hairdos.

Paul Campione, 6, of New York, wore a green jumpsuit with a white cape as he posed for snapshots, striking karate poses a la Elvis. "I love Elvis. He was kind and generous and I like his music," the boy said.

His mother, Angela, said her son was entered in an Elvis impersonator contest at a local nightclub.

The graveside vigil has been sponsored by the Elvis Country Fan Club for 11 years. The club has more than 1,200 members worldwide, many of them too young to have been Presley fans when he was alive, said club president Georganna Reynolds.

"One reason for a fan club is to pass the torch, to keep the candle burning," she said.

The 7-year-old Tribute Week is organized by the managers of Graceland, which draws 650,000 visitors a year, including some 40,000 during the anniversary celebration.

Presley bought the three-story residence in 1957 when his rock 'n' roll career began to take off. It was opened to the public in 1982.

Graceland and its 36,000-square-foot souvenir shopping center across the highway take in some $12 million a year and are run for the benefit of Presley's only child, Lisa Marie.

Dravecky Breaks His Arm

Giants' Hurler Injures Arm Operated On Earlier

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

It could be the worst break of all for the beleaguered San Francisco Giants pitching staff.

The Giants, who have had six starting pitchers injured during the season, received another physical blow Tuesday night when left-hander Dave Dravecky fractured his pitching arm, the same one on which he had cancer surgery 10 months ago.

Although Dravecky got credit for the Giants' 3-2 victory over the Montreal Expos, the psychological damage of his loss could be even greater than the physical one.

"It's a crying shame," first baseman Will Clark said. "Dave's first start changed the meaning of the season for us because it's not just about baseball, it's about life."

Dravecky, who won the first start of his comeback by pitching eight innings last Thursday against Cincinnati, dropped to the ground and grabbed his left arm after throwing a pitch in the sixth inning of a game the Giants were leading 3-1. He was taken from the field on a stretcher.

"It sounded like a firecracker," Expos right fielder Hubie Brooks said. "I've never seen anything like it and I hope I never see anything like it again."

Dravecky, who pitched five shutout innings before the sixth, was conscious as he left the field and was taken to Queen Elizabeth Hospital. X-rays showed the fracture in the upper arm near the scar that marked the surgery that removed a cancerous tumor last Oct. 7.

The injury is expected to sideline him for 6-8 weeks, effectively ending his season.

"The odds are in his favor that he'll pitch again," said Dr. Robert Broderick, the Expos team doctor who examined Dravecky. "There is very little damage involving the muscles."

Matt Williams' fifth homer in six games, after a single by Will Clark, gave the Giants a 3-0 lead in the sixth.

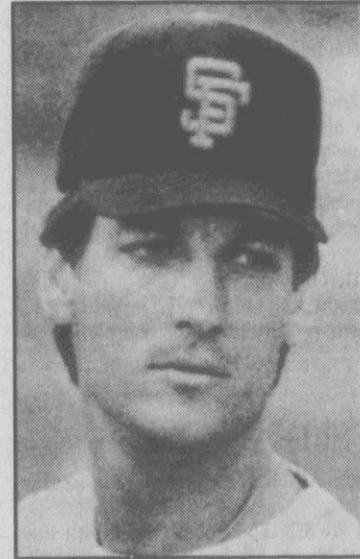

Montreal scored its two runs off Dravecky in the bottom of the inning. Damaso Garcia led off with a homer and Andres Galarraga was hit by a pitch. Jeff Brantley relieved Dravecky and surrendered a sacrifice fly by Tim Raines.

Brantley finished with three hitless innings before Steve Bedrosian pitched the ninth for his 16th save.

Cubs 5, Reds 2

Chicago beat Cincinnati in a game marred by a postgame brawl as Andre Dawson hit rookie Mike Roesler's 0-2 pitch for a three-run homer with two outs in the 12th inning.

Dawson, hitless in his previous five at-bats, hit his 13th homer of the season, scoring Mitch Webster and Mark Grace, who both walked with two outs off Roesler, 0-1, the fifth Reds pitcher.

Cubs rookie Jerome Walton took advantage of the extra innings to extend his hitting streak to 25 games, the longest in baseball this year.

In his sixth at-bat, Walton singled leading off the 12th but was erased on a fielder's choice grounder by Ryne Sandberg, who then was caught stealing.

The victory went to Mitch Williams, 2-2, who pitched two hitless innings.

A postgame argument between first base umpire Joe West and Cincinnati Reds second baseman Ron Oester escalated into a shoving match involving Reds manager Pete Rose, Oester and West.

Rose was suspended for 30 days and fined $10,000 last year for shoving umpire Dave Pallone.

Mets 3, Padres 2

New York passed Montreal for second place in the East, 3½ games behind the Cubs, when Kevin McReynolds tied San Diego with a ninth-inning homer and Kevin Elster later hit an RBI double.

New York, which won for the 12th time in 15 games, trailed 2-1 against Padres starter Ed Whitson before McReynolds homered with one out, his 15th of the season and sixth in August.

Barry Lyons singled and Keith Miller struck out before Elster doubled down the left field line. Third baseman Bip Roberts' relay throw home beat Lyons to the plate, but the ball bounced off Benito Santiago's chest.

The only run Whitson, 14-9, allowed before the ninth was Howard Johnson's 28th homer, a one-out drive in the sixth.

Chris James' home run in the seventh gave the Padres a 2-1 lead. It extended his hitting streak to 18 games.

Astros 3, Pirates 2

Sloan Resigns As 'Bama AD

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TUSCALOOSA, Ala. — Steve Sloan quarterbacked Alabama to the national football title in 1965 under the late Bear Bryant but his signal-calling as athletic director did not suit the school's new president.

"We had differences in management approach and style," University President Roger Sayers said in announcing the resignation of Sloan as athletic director.

Sloan assumed the post 2½ years ago at the same time Bill Curry became the Crimson Tide's second football coach since Bryant retired after the 1982 season.

Sayers said Tuesday that Sloan's departure would not affect Curry, who has been under fire by some Alabama fans since the day Sayers' predecessor, Joab Thomas, hired him in 1987.

Sayers, who succeeded Thomas in an interim capacity last year and was named president last month, said he wanted "to have in place the administrative team of my choosing."

He said that Alabama's faculty chairman of athletics, Tom Jones, would be interim athletic director and that Sloan would stay on the payroll for six months, "working with and through" Jones to complete some projects.

Sloan, in a statement read by Sayers, said that after the six months he will seek another job, possibly a return to coaching.

In remarks Tuesday night to the Nashville Athletic Club in Nashville, Tenn., Sloan said his resignation was not due to differences with Sayers about athletic and academic priorities, but "mainly just management style."

Sloan said he met three times with Sayers.

"We just didn't really agree on the direction that we needed to take," he said. "Consequently we both agreed that he wasn't going anywhere as a CEO (chief executive officer) and, obviously, I needed to go somewhere."

Sloan said in his statement that he and Sayers agreed it was better that they not publicly discuss their differences.

Sayers said he will head a committee, to be named shortly, to seek a new athletic director and that he will encourage applications. "We're not ruling out anyone," he said.

However, Sayers said that the jobs of athletic director and football coach will be kept separate, following "a clear trend" among the nation's colleges.

Sayers said he hopes the search committee will agree on a successor to Sloan in two months or less.

Perkins was one of Sloan's favorite passing targets when the 1965 team went 9-1-1, including a 39-28 Orange Bowl victory over Nebraska that gave the Crimson Tide the third of its five national championships under Bryant, something it hasn't come close to accomplishing under Perkins or Curry.

Sloan was not at Tuesday's news conference, opting instead to leave the statement, which Sayers read.

"Because of my emotional ties with the university, the staff, alumni and friends, I felt that I would be unable to properly articulate my feelings," Sloan's statement said.

Sayers said last month that he would review all the key administrative positions.

"As part of that process, university Athletic Director Steve Sloan and I have agreed upon a course of action that we feel is in the best interest of the university," he said.

"No single event or action has precipitated this decision. We simply have a difference of opinion about the management of the program."

Tim Richmond Is Dead At 34

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MIAMI — Tim Richmond's driving career held so much promise in 1980. Nine years later, the charismatic but troubled Richmond is dead at age 34.

"We had never seen anything like him before, the good and the bad," H.A. "Humpty" Wheeler, president of the Charlotte Motor Speedway, said Tuesday when informed of Richmond's death. "He was the most complex person who's ever sat behind the wheel of a stock car."

Richmond's physician, Dr. David Dodson, said the driver died on Sunday in Good Samaritan Hospital in West Palm Beach. Citing the wishes of the family and medical confidentiality, Dodson declined to give the cause of death or talk about Richmond's medical condition.

Earlier Tuesday, in an interview with the Charlotte Observer, Dodson said Richmond's thoughts at the end "were not of himself, but of his family, friends and racing fans."

Richmond, who lived in semi-seclusion in south Florida, had been hospitalized recently for injuries sustained in a motorcycle accident, Dodson confirmed. He would not say whether the motorcycle accident was related to the death.

He declined to say where or when a funeral would be held.

"The family wanted a small private ceremony," Dodson told the newspaper. "I can't say anything more than that."

Richmond burst on the racing scene in 1980, when a ninth-place finish earned him the Indy 500 rookie of the year award. He was 14th in the race in 1981, but after that abandoned Indy-car racing for stock cars.

He won 13 races in his NASCAR career, including seven in 1986, his best season.

Geoff Bodine was a teammate of Richmond's in 1986.

"We all kind of were waiting for this announcement to be made, but it's still a shock, really sad," Bodine said. "We knew he was real sick. We still don't know what he died of, or if we'll ever know. I can't say what it was, but we're all fairly confident he did have some kind of problem."

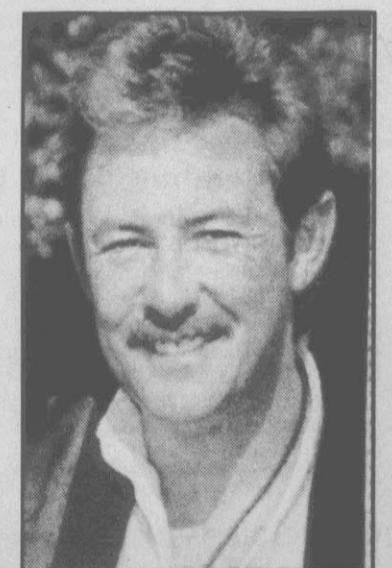

"A lot of people reached out to Tim, because he was a friend and was well-liked by many. We reached out to him, but apparently it was too late. That's the power of certain things; they can take charge of your life and there's no turning back."

"Tim obviously had talent and charisma, and it appeared to everyone that he had it made. Well, appearances fool people sometimes, and it's obvious he didn't have it made. He had some sort of situation that led him astray. What I'd like to see is the true story to come out, how his problem developed and who the people were who got Tim in this situation."

Richmond's career suffered a blow in 1987 when he contracted pneumonia, and ended when NASCAR suspended him before the 1988 season-opening Daytona 500 for failing a drug test. The test showed excessive amounts of two non-prescription drugs found in over-the-counter remedies for allergies and respiratory conditions.

Richmond passed a subsequent test and was reinstated, but he failed to get a ride in stock-car racing's biggest event.

Tim Richmond

Richmond vehemently denied rumors of drug use.

"You've made mistakes in your life," Richmond said. "I've made mistakes in my life. There's been a mistake made on this drug test some way or another. I am not guilty of it."

Richmond, who won $2,228,558 in Winston Cup racing, missed the first 11 races of the 1987 season because of illness. He won his first race back, setting off an emotional scene in the winner's circle at Pocono International Raceway. He won the next week at Riverside, Calif., his last victory.

After six more starts, he abruptly quit the team, citing his health. His last race was the Champion Spark Plug 400 at Michigan International Raceway in August 1987.

"I could find a ride, I think, without a doubt," Richmond said after being reinstated by NASCAR. "But to be honest, I don't feel comfortable or safe on a NASCAR-sanctioned track at this time. If I were to spin or crash, it would just give them more ammunition."

A few days later, shortly before the halfway point of the Daytona 500, a plane passed over the track pulling a banner that said, "Fans I miss you, Tim Richmond."

"He was a very confused young man," said Wheeler, who was one of Richmond's friends on the NASCAR circuit. "There are mental pressures on all of them. Drivers have to be everything to everyone. At times the pressure was hard for him to handle. I know, because we talked about it."

"But when the time came to perform," Wheeler said, "he could always get in the ring and perform. He had it all, and he lost it all."

Argument With Oester Starts Incident Between Manager, Umpire

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CINCINNATI — Pete Rose, already under threat of a lifetime ban for alleged gambling on baseball, could be in trouble again.

Sixteen months after his 30-day suspension for shoving umpire Dave Pallone, Rose was involved in another bumping incident Tuesday night after Cincinnati's 5-2 loss in 12 innings to the Chicago Cubs.

The Cincinnati manager and umpire Joe West shoved each other after Rose came to the defense of Reds second baseman Ron Oester, who also exchanged bumps with West.

Rose was suspended for 30 days last season by then-NL President A. Bartlett Giamatti for bumping Pallone twice and inciting the crowd.

"You saw what they did when I pushed Pallone last year," Rose said, referring to the $10,000 fine and suspension. "Let's see what happens now."

West, who grew up in Greenville, N.C., was involved in a similar incident in 1983. The umpire was suspended for three days and fined $300 for pushing Atlanta Braves manager Joe Torre. Torre, who was fined $200, argued with West in the runway leading to the umpire's dressing quarters in Atlanta Stadium.

The argument started with a call on a 2-2 pitch to Mark Grace in the top of the 12th, which plate umpire Bill Hohn called a ball.

Grace walked and scored on Andre Dawson's game-winning, three-run homer.

"It started on the call on the pitch to Grace," Rose said. "Hohn warned the Reds dugout and West came over and joined in. Oester said to West, 'Just do your job.'"

In the bottom of the 12th, Oester took a 3-2 pitch and was called out by Hohn, ending the game. Shouting followed between Oester and Hohn, and again West joined in.

Words were exchanged and West pushed Oester.

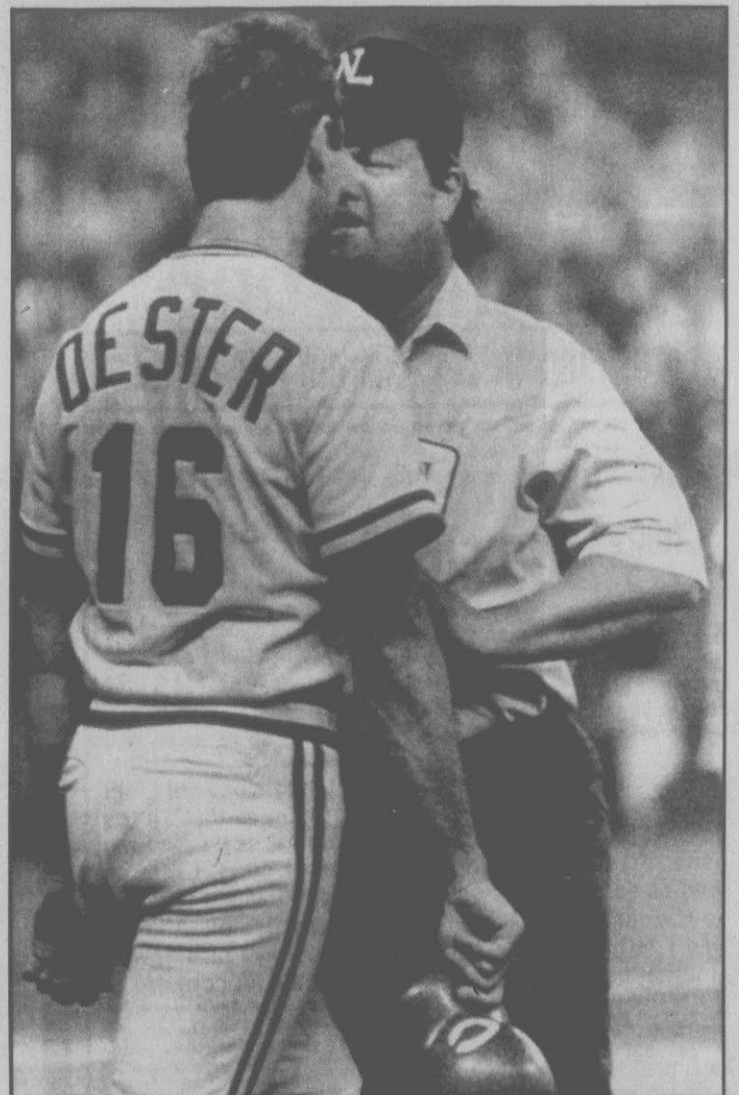

Cubs manager Don Zimmer, who was on the field to congratulate his players, said, "For what reason does West have to shove Oester, not once but twice?"

Oester was restrained by teammates as he attempted to get back at West, who was leaving the field and heading toward the tunnel behind home plate.

Rose also intervened and argued with West, pushing him several times.

"We have no comment, nothing to say," crew chief Jerry Crawford said. "We will discuss it before the game tomorrow."

Rose currently is under investigation by Giamatti, now baseball commissioner, for allegedly betting on Reds game, an offense that, if proven, carries a lifetime ban. A federal court order prevents Giamatti from conducting a hearing on the charges.

NCAA Investigates Clemson Football

ATLANTA (AP) — The NCAA is conducting a formal investigation of the Clemson University football program that could result in the "death penalty" if major rules violations are found, a newspaper reported today.

The Atlanta Journal-Constitution quoted unidentified sources close to the investigation as saying it became a formal probe after National Collegiate Athletic Association investigators found leads on recent major recruiting violations. No details were given.

Max Lennon, president of the school in Clemson, S.C., said Tuesday night he knew of the investigation.

"I'm aware of it, but I think it's extremely premature," Lennon said. "At this juncture, we simply don't know enough. Our interest is in what happened, whether or not rules have been violated. I have received several briefings from our athletic director."

Neither Athletic Director Bobby Robinson nor football Coach Danny Ford could be reached for comment Tuesday.

If a major violation were found by the NCAA between December 1982 and December 1987, Clemson football could be slapped with the "death penalty" because of repeat violations within a five-year period. The program was under a two-year probation beginning in 1982.

The "death penalty" could result in the suspension of the football program for one or two years — including elimination of all scholarships and recruiting for two years.

Lennon, however, said he did not expect that to happen.

"There, we expect to be judged as doing right, and not wrong," he said.

The sources told the newspaper there was no timetable for completion of the investigation.

Rose Season Tickets On Sale

Rose High School will place its All-Sports Athletic Tickets on sale at the school this week.

Student tickets are $15 and adult tickets are $25. The tickets will admit the holder into all regular season home contests in all sports at Rose High School.

Rose will open the season on Aug. 25, hosting Tarboro.

Pirates Begin Fall Practice Sessions

Tuesday marked East Carolina University football's first full day of practice with both its varsity and freshmen players.

First-year head coach Bill Lewis was pleased with the practice, which was the first look at his 1989 squad at work on the field since spring drills ended.

"For the first day, it was a positive experience," Lewis said. "We had pretty good awareness and intensity and I thought we worked them very hard and they gave us excellent concentration."

Preseason workouts for the Pirates will concentrate on the basic, Lewis added, as he and his staff assess the team.

"We will try to run a basic practice. We're starting at square one, at the beginning of every phase — offense, defense and kicking — and evaluating how much carry-over we've had from spring practice."

Lewis told his team that the practice was "as good a first day as I've seen and I applaud you for your work."

The Pirates will continue with preseason practice as they prepare for their season opener on Sept. 9 against Bowling Green in Ficklen Stadium.

Wyland, Ferguson Top Qualifiers

RALEIGH (AP) — Wendy Wyland, a six-time national platform diving champion, was the top qualifier on Tuesday in the women's platform semifinal of the U.S. Diving Outdoor Championships.

Wyland, who is still recovering from viral meningitis, scored 400.95 points, to outdistance Wendy Lian Williams of Bridgeton, Mo., who finished with 360.30 points. Cokey Smith of Ann Arbor, Mich., the gold medalist at the U.S. Olympic Festival, was third with 360.27.

"I felt good today, and I've been feeling good in training," Wyland said. "The worst thing for me is that my head is throbbing and my endurance has suffered."

Wyland, of Boca Raton, Fla., took the lead on the third dive of the eight-dive competition, and was never seriously challenged. The top 12 divers advanced to the final round.

Defending U.S. champion Kent Ferguson was the top qualifier in the men's 3-meter springboard competition, finishing with 612.18 points.

Olympians Patrick Jeffrey and Mark Bradshaw, both from Columbus, Ohio, captured the next two spots with 594.57 and 592.02 points.

Competition continues Wednesday with the women's 1-meter springboard semifinal and final, and the men's platform semifinal.

ASU's Redding, Frier Ruled Ineligible

BOONE (AP) — Appalachian State sophomore quarterback Lance Redding and junior defensive tackle Mike Frier have been ruled academically ineligible, Mountaineer coach Jerry Moore said Tuesday.

Redding, a 6-foot-3 and 208 pounder from Newport News, Va., played in 10 games in 1988. A starter in two games, Redding completed 33 of 62 passes for 543 yards and six touchdowns. In his first career start, he completed nine of 15 passes for 191 yards against Western Carolina.

Frier, 6-6, 296 pound defensive lineman from Jacksonville, N.C., ranked third in tackles for the Mountaineers last season, starting all 11 games at left defensive tackle.

Georgia's Goff Released From Hospital

ATHENS, Ga. (AP) — Georgia Head Football Coach Ray Goff was released from St. Mary's hospital after two days of treatment for an acute stomach infection.

"He was out the door the minute the doctor arrived this morning," a St. Mary's spokesman said Sunday.

Georgia Sports Information Director Claude Felton said Goff plans to attend a Bulldog Club meeting tonight in Albany as scheduled.

The Bulldogs begin fall football practice Aug. 26.

Goff checked into the hospital Friday morning with an acute viral case of gastroenteritis, or inflammation in the stomach area.

The 34-year-old coach succeeded 25-year veteran Vince Dooley earlier this year. Goff's first game comes Sept. 16 as the Bulldogs meet Baylor.

Hornets-Heat Proceeds To Be Donated

GREENSBORO (AP) — A portion of the proceeds from a National Basketball Association preseason game between the Charlotte Hornets and Miami Heat will be donated to a scholarship fund, it was announced Tuesday.

The Smith Barrier Scholarship Fund, endowed at the University of North Carolina at Greensboro, has been guaranteed a contribution of at least $10,000. Barrier was a former sports editor in Greensboro for more than 40 years who died June 2.

The game will be played in the Greensboro Coliseum on Oct. 29 at 7:05 p.m. It will be the final preseason game for both teams.

The Hornets and Heat were both expansion teams during the 1988-89 season. Charlotte won 20 of 82 games and Miami 15 in their initial seasons. They split the two games they played against each other.

Mariners Beat Odds, Rangers

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Maybe Charlie Hough should try pitching a no-hitter. Obviously, one-hitters don't work.

Outhit 13-1, the Seattle Mariners beat the odds and Hough on Tuesday night, defeating the Texas Rangers 2-0.

Hough has two career one-hitters and has lost both of them. The other came on June 16, 1986, in California.

"The only way it could have been worse was if I had thrown a no-hitter," Hough said.

Harold Reynolds' solid single leading off the sixth was all the Mariners got against Hough, 7-12. The Rangers got plenty of hits against Brian Holman and Mike Schooler, but no runs.

Holman, 5-5, gave up 10 hits in seven innings and Schooler got his 24th save. Texas came within one hit of tying a major league record for most hits in a shutout loss.

In other games, Milwaukee beat New York 1-0, Baltimore downed Detroit 2-0, Oakland defeated Cleveland 5-2, California topped Minnesota 3-2, Toronto trounced Boston 7-2 and Kansas City beat Chicago 10-6.

Hough walked five and struck out three. Reynolds scored in the sixth on a balk, a wild pitch and Jeffrey Leonard's sacrifice fly.

"Good bit of hitting by Reynolds. He's a tough out," Hough said. "I made a bad pitch to Leonard in those circumstances. He hit a knuckleball up and over the plate."

The Mariners scored in the seventh on an error by third baseman Steve Buechele.

"Our guys can't believe it. You just take this kind of win. That's baseball, I guess. This game was just unbelievable," Mariners manager Jim Lefebvre said.

Brewers 1, Yankees 0

Teddy Higuera again beat New York, pitching a six-hitter for his sixth straight victory as Milwaukee got above .500 for the first time since April 26.

Higuera is 12-2 lifetime against the Yankees. His .857 winning percentage is the highest for any pitcher versus New York.

Higuera, 9-4, has beaten the Yankees three times this season. He walked two and struck out five in his first shutout of the year.

Clay Parker, 3-3, gave up six hits, including Greg Brock's RBI single in the fourth inning.

Blue Jays 7, Red Sox 2

Lloyd Moseby led off the game with a home run and Toronto went on to win for the 14th straight time at Fenway Park.

Manny Lee and Rance Mulliniks also homered for the Blue Jays. Mookie Wilson had four hits and Fred McGriff doubled twice for Toronto, which had 15 hits.

The Blue Jays turned four double plays — in remaining unbeaten at Boston since Aug. 10, 1987.

Dave Stieb, 12-7, went five innings for the victory. Duane Ward escaped bases-loaded, one-out jams in the seventh and ninth innings for his 12th save.

Mike Smithson, 6-11, gave up four runs on eight hits and was replaced with no outs in the third inning. Moseby hit Smithson's fifth pitch for his 10th home run and Lee opened the second inning with his third homer.

run shot, his sixth homer in 25 games this season.

Orioles 2, Tigers 0

Rookie Bob Milacki pitched a three-hitter and Baltimore stayed undefeated in six games at Tiger Stadium this season.

Cal Ripken and Joe Orsulak homered in the Orioles' third straight victory.

Milacki, 7-10, has won all three career starts in Detroit. In those games, he has given up just one run on five hits in 25 innings.

Milacki struck out five and walked four in his second shutout. He did not allow a hit until two outs in the fifth inning.

Orsulak hit his fourth home run in the fourth inning and Ripken hit his 15th in the sixth against Doyle Alexander, 5-14.

Angels 3, Twins 2

Bobby Rose got his first three major-league hits and tripled home the go-ahead run in the sixth inning as California won for just the second time in six games.

Rose was recalled from Class AA on Friday after Dick Schofield fractured his hand. Rose singled home the tying run in the fourth and put the Angels in front in the sixth.

Chuck Finley, 14-8, got the victory and Bryan Harvey earned his 18th save. Mike Dyer, 1-3, was the loser.

Royals 10, White Sox 6

Kurt Stillwell hit two triples and drove in three runs as Kansas City won in Chicago.

Mike Macfarlane, who had three of the Royals' 15 hits, and Danny Tartabull each homered. Stillwell hit an RBI triple and scored on Jim Eisenreich's single for a 7-6 lead in the sixth inning.

Terry Leach, 3-3, got the victory. He relieved Charlie Leibbrandt after Ozzie Guillen's two-run triple in the fourth. Tom McCarthy, 1-2, took the loss.

Ryan Shooting For 5,000th 'K'

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SEATTLE — Nolan Ryan is in town, which means the Seattle Mariners are flirting with another piece of baseball history.

In 1986, Roger Clemens struck out a record 20 Mariners in a 9-inning game. Today, Ryan starts for the Texas Rangers against the Mariners needing 14 strikeouts to reach 5,000 for his career.

Seattle's manager is Jim Lefebvre, one of the 1,061 major-league batters to strike out against Ryan.

"It was so long ago I don't remember facing him," Lefebvre said. "Whatever I did against him was uneventful. I'm just one of the many little guys that will put him in the Hall of Fame."

Ryan, 13-7, has 211 strikeouts in 168 1/3 innings this season, running his 23-year total to 4,986.

"I'd like to reach 5,000 but it was never a goal of mine," the 42-year-old right-hander said. "Every player would like to reach a number like this at home, but I will approach this game like any other."

His next scheduled start will be Tuesday against Oakland at Arlington Stadium.

Fourteen isn't an unreachable figure for Ryan, who is averaging 11.3 strikeouts per nine innings this season. He struck out 15 Brewers in an 8-1 victory over Milwaukee on April 12 and 14 in only six innings against the Toronto Blue Jays on July 25.

Ryan struck out 15 Mariners on April 24, 1978 when he pitched for the California Angels. He is 1-1 against the Mariners in 1989, including a one-hit, 11-strikeout performance in the Kingdome on June 3. It is one of three near no-hitters this season by Ryan, who holds the major-league record with five no-hitters.

Von Hayes had a two-run homer and Dwayne Murphy hit a two-run double for the Phillies.

Cardinals 9, Braves 1

St. Louis routed Atlanta behind Jose DeLeon's three-hitter, Milt Thompson's four RBIs and Terry Pendleton's four hits.

DeLeon, 12-11, missed St. Louis' league-leading 16th shutout when Jeff Treadway homered with two outs in the ninth for the Braves.

The right-hander struck out 10 and walked one for his fourth complete game. He also singled home a run and took over the NL lead with 155 strikeouts, eight more than John Smoltz of Atlanta.

Thompson, who had three of St. Louis' 16 hits, had an RBI groundout in the fourth, a two-run single in the sixth and his fourth homer in the seventh, when the Cardinals scored five runs.

Pendleton homered and Tom Brunansky had three hits and two RBIs for St. Louis.

Eric Yelding from second base in the 11th inning.

Glenn Davis, who homered earlier, led off the 11th with a single off Mike Smith, 0-1, and Yelding came in to pinch run. After a sacrifice bunt by Kevin Bass moved Yelding to second, Caminiti singled to left field.

Larry Andersen, 3-3, was the winner, going one inning and giving up one hit and one walk.

The Astros are 29-17 in one-run decisions, the Pirates 13-27.

Phillies 7, Dodgers 6

Ricky Jordan got his 17th RBI in 15 games with his second home run of the night, leading off the bottom of the eighth against Ray Searage.

Reliever Jeff Parrett, 11-4, Philadelphia's biggest winner, pitched three scoreless innings, allowing one hit, for the victory.

The Dodgers got homers from Mike Huff and Mike Marshall in taking a 6-4 lead, but they couldn't hold it.

"When you were little, Grandma, were you the only one in your class with gray hair?"

FORECAST FOR THURSDAY Aug. 17
ARIES (March 21 to April 19): You may be torn between your own thirst for independence and your loyalty to others. Romance could show its beauty tonight.
TAURUS (April 20 to May 20): Remind someone aggressive that there is a time and place for everything. Schedules run smoother, so enjoy your free time.
GEMINI (May 21 to June 21): Maintain honest and sincere ties with those you love. Push ahead with your talents. Put energy into recreation and companionship.
MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21): You could be involved in a plan of action that has far-reaching rewards. Follow your hunches and tune into yourself.
LEO (July 22 to Aug. 21): Your new money strategies are brilliant. You excel in activities that raise you to a position of authority. Remain confident.
VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22): You will have the last laugh with someone who considers you "square" because you satisfy your needs in traditional ways.
LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22): Don't charge into a social scene unless you know you belong there. You may fare best with the regular gang, even though you feel bored.
SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21): Accept others for who they are and at their own level of proficiency. You hate inefficiency, but it is best to give others a chance.
SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21): You gain emotional satisfaction from someone who is honest and sincere. Motivate yourself to help others.
CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20): If tempers flare, take a backseat until the flak cools down. Romance is exciting. Enjoy tender relationships with your mate.
AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19): You still possess magnetism and charm. Do not be afraid to rely on your sociability to get your share of love and romance.
PISCES (Feb. 20 to March 20): You are motivated to seek personal acclaim. It helps to hang out with the right people. Music comforts you when life gets tough.

 Positive inferences can often be drawn from an opposing bid or play. However, even more information can sometimes be gleaned from why a player did not take some action. Call it "the dog that didn't bark in the night" syndrome.

South was certainly going to bid game once North raised spades. However, slam was a slight possibility if North held a magic fit, so South made a try with three hearts. When that brought no sign of interest from North, South settled for game.

West led his lone trump, won in hand with the eight. Declarer cashed the ace of hearts, then led the nine of trumps to the queen, noting West's diamond discard. Since the lead of a singleton trump could be disastrous, declarer concluded that West's holdings in the side suits looked even more unappetizing, so he elected to place West with the king of diamonds.

Declarer drew the last trump with the king, retaining the five in hand, then led a low heart, inserting the ten when East showed out. West won, but had to do something to help declarer. He chose to exit with a club to his partner's ace. East switched to a low diamond, and the hand was at the crossroads.

Spurning the finesse and backing his card reading, declarer rose with the ace of diamonds, cashed the king of clubs and entered dummy with a trump to ruff a club. Then he exited with the queen of diamonds.

West, who had to retain two hearts to guard against declarer's holding, was forced to win the king and lead a heart into declarer's tenace to surrender the last two tricks and the contract.

How They Voted

WASHINGTON — Here's how area lawmakers were recorded on major roll call votes in the days before Congress began its August recess.

HOUSE
TO PASS S&L BILL — By a vote of 201 for and 175 against, the House sent to President Bush legislation (HR 1278) designed to bail the thrift industry and the federal government out of the financial calamity caused by the collapse of hundreds of savings-and-loans in the 1980s. The Senate had passed the bill on a non-record vote.

The first phase of the S&L salvage will be for the government to borrow $50 billion primarily for padlocking or merging troubled thrifts and meeting federal reimbursement obligations to those who lost billions in U.S.-insured deposits. About $10 billion will be incurred by Treasury borrowing and included in the fiscal 1989 budget. The remaining $30 billion will be borrowed by a new government-chartered corporation but not counted on the budget or tallied as part of the federal debt.

Although the thrift industry will have to repay the $50 billion principal, taxpayers will be required to pay borrowing costs. Conservative estimates are that the total bailout will cost at least $160 billion including debt service over 30 years with the average taxpayer supplying $1,000 of the amount. Other estimates double those projected costs.

Supporter Chalmers Wylie, R-Ohio, said: "We are not bailing out S&Ls. We are not bailing out their stockholders or their managers. We are delivering on our promise that the federal government stands behind the safety and the life savings of millions of Americans."

Opponent Sam Gibbons, D-Fla., said the rescue "should have been paid for by taxes, current taxes, a very small tax, but the president could not bring himself to say the word. So we have foisted on our children and grandchildren an unconscionable debt of perhaps $100 to $200 billion..."

Members voting yes supported the bill.

North Carolina members voting yes: David Price, D-4, Howard Coble, R-6, Alex McMillan, R-9, Cass Ballenger, R-10, James Clarke, D-11.

Voting no: Tim Valentine, D-2, Stephen Neal, D-5, W.G. Hefner, D-8.

Not Voting: Walter Jones, D-1, Martin Lancaster, D-3, Charles Rose, D-7.

VIOLENCE, TELEVISION AND ANTI-TRUST — By a vote of 399 for and 18 against, the House sent to the Senate a bill (HR 1391) providing an anti-trust exemption to enable competing television industry executives to meet to discuss ways of making their programs less violent.

Sponsor Jack Brooks, D-Tex., said the bill would "remove the perception, apparently held by many in the television industry, that the antitrust laws are a possible impediment" to less violent programming.

Opponent Don Edwards, D-Calif., said "I have never seen an exemption to the antitrust laws that worked for the benefit of the American people." Members voting yes supported the anti-trust exemption.

Voting yes: Jones, Valentine, Lancaster, Price, Neal, Coble, Rose, Hefner, McMillan, Ballenger, Clarke.

Trident Explodes

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — The second explosion of a submarine-launched Trident 2 missile in five months could again delay Navy plans to send its newest, deadliest weapon on operational patrol.

The original December target was put off until March 1990 by the first failure. Now the March goal is in jeopardy.

One of the 44-foot, $23.7 million missiles exploded Tuesday seconds after it was launched from the nuclear submarine Tennessee while it cruised submerged about 200 miles southeast of Cape Canaveral.

The Navy said the blowup caused no injuries nor did it damage the submarine or a nearby support ship.

Officials said the problem occurred shortly after the missile cleared the surface and ignited, reminiscent of the first Trident 2 submarine launch on March 21. That missile blew apart four seconds after it was launched by the crew of the Tennessee.

Investigators traced the problem in March to a mechanical linkage responsible for moving the rocket steering nozzles back and forth. The faulty part was redesigned.

On Aug. 2, the Tennessee launched a Trident 2 with the design changes on the missile's first underwater success, and Navy hopes were buoyed.

There was no immediate indication whether the two failures were related, and officials said they won't know exactly what went wrong Tuesday until they study radio telemetry tapes of the missile's behavior.

Voting no: None.

SENATE

LIABILITY FOR PLATFORM SPILLS — By a vote of 34 for and 66 against, the Senate refused to limit oil company liability for damages and cleanup costs resulting from spills at Outer Continental Shelf (OCS) drilling platforms. The vote preserved an amendment in support of state laws that saddle the owner with unlimited liability when an offshore rig blows out. It killed a proposed $100 million liability cap for such spills.

This occurred as the Senate sent to the House, by a unanimous vote, legislation (S 686) to help prevent oil spills or, if they occur, to cushion their impact on the environment and taxpayers.

Inspired by the Exxon Valdez disaster, the bill sets up a $1 billion industry-financed cleanup and compensation fund to be tapped in the event of large spills from tankers, terminals or platforms. It imposes tougher safety standards on tankers and other equipment, puts the White House in charge of the first response to a spill, creates regional clean-up teams for immediate deployment and requires alcohol-testing of key tanker personnel.

Sponsor John Breaux, D-La., said the liability cap is needed not by Exxon or Texaco but by "literally hundreds of smaller operators who never will be able to participate in OCS drilling operations if they had to face unlimited liability."

Opponent John Chafee, R-R.I., said state doctrines of unlimited liability have been "a tremendous deterrent to casualness and sloppiness" by oil companies.

Senators voting yes wanted to cap oil company liability for OCS drilling platform spills.

North Carolina Sen. Terry Sanford, D, voted yes. Sen. Jesse Helms, R, voted no.

LIABILITY FOR TANKER SPILLS — By a vote of 52 for and 48 against, the Senate tabled (killed) an amendment to S 686 (above) concerning owner liability when tankers spill their oil. The amendment sought unlimited liability under federal law for damages and environmental cleanup. It went beyond language in the bill allowing high but capped financial obligations on errant tanker owners and repealing legal defenses historically used by owners to insulate themselves from problems of their vessels.

Left undisturbed by the legislation are laws permitting unlimited liability in state courts on owners of oil tankers that cause spills.

Max Baucus, D-Mont., who voted to table the amendment, said that when combined with laws of coastal states setting no cap on damages "the practical effect" of the federal bill is unlimited liability.

Amendment sponsor Slade Gorton, R-Wash., said "corporations can and will behave responsibly if they know the risks are high enough."

Senators voting yes wanted to table the amendment.

Sanford voted yes. Helms voted yes.

TO REQUIRE DOUBLE-HULL TANKERS — By a vote of 51 for and 48 against, the Senate tabled (killed) an amendment to require by law that oil tankers plying U.S. waters be built in the future with double bottoms and sides for added protection against spills. The amendment sought to go beyond language in the bill launching a Department of Transportation rulemaking that could require double-hull construction of many new tankers.

Ted Stevens, R-Alaska, who voted to kill the amendment, said that through the regulatory process "this bill requires double bottoms and double (sides) unless there is a better way."

Amendment sponsor Brock Adams, D-Wash., said passing a law is the only certain method of requiring double hulls on tankers, given maritime industry opposition to such a standard.

Senators voting yes wanted to kill the amendment requiring double-hull construction by law rather than regulation.

A Way Of Life Goes Up In Smoke

By Jo'el Glenn Brenner
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

CLINTON, Md. — Sixty years of tobacco. That's how Henry Miller describes his life. His hands, wrinkled and stained from working the fields, have known nothing else.

"I'm a tobacco farmer," Miller said, nodding his head for emphasis. "My family's been growing tobacco for 150 years." But after generations of harvesting almost 70 acres of the sweet, heavy-scented crop, Miller didn't plant a single acre this spring.

"It's all over now," he said softly. "The Millers won't be growing tobacco anymore."

Like hundreds of other Southern Maryland farmers, Miller has given up a 350-year-old Maryland tradition. Caught between faltering demand for cigarettes and the scarcity of labor needed to work the fields, the farmers have stopped growing the sotweed — once considered the backbone of the state.

But unlike many who were defeated, Miller is trying to hold on to his farm, which locals say was one of the biggest tobacco operations in the state.

This year, he replaced his tobacco crop with vegetables.

"People have to eat, but they don't have to smoke," Miller reasoned.

Only 8,500 acres of tobacco were planted in Southern Maryland in 1989, according to the U.S. Department of Agriculture. Just seven years ago, more than 24,000 acres were devoted to the crop. While thousands of acres have been sold to developers, there are still many farmers, like Miller, who are trying to make the switch to other commodities. To help ease the transition, Maryland officials have converted the little-used state tobacco warehouse in Cheltenham, near Waldorf, into a retail and wholesale produce market that gives the former tobacco farmers an outlet for their new crops.

Since opening on July 3, the Southern Maryland Regional Farmers Market has swarmed with customers eager for squash, green beans and tomatoes. Virtually all of the 28 farmers who operate the produce stands are former tobacco farmers.

Eileen Shlagel, one of the produce vendors, said the market will provide a desperately needed source of income. "Tobacco was the cash crop in Maryland," she said. "Without it, it's going to be hard to survive." Shlagel and her husband, Russell, plant more than 200 acres on a farm near Waldorf in Charles County. The farm has been in the family for more than 100 years, and until last year, tobacco was always part of the harvest.

"I'd go back to tobacco if I could," Russell Shlagel said. "When you do something like that for such a long time, it's hard to make the switch. But we're going to try."

The Shlagels' farm, once surrounded by other fields and greenery, now is bordered by subdivisions. The encroaching development has made life even more difficult, Russell Shlagel said. "I have to plan my manure spreading around the neighbors' weekend

LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

Farmers George Shlagel, left, and son Russell check a new combine — a symbol of the change agriculture has made cookouts," he said. "Otherwise, we get lots of complaints. That's no way to run a farm."

George B. Roche, marketing specialist with the Maryland Department of Agriculture, said houses are replacing tobacco farms at a rapid rate. "Houses are the number one crop in Southern Maryland," he said. "With all of the developers out there offering such high prices for the land, it's no wonder more farmers haven't sold out." In 1982, there were about 2,400 farms in Prince George's, Anne Arundel, St. Mary's, Charles and Calvert counties, which traditionally make up Southern Maryland's tobacco belt. By 1987, that number had dropped more than 50 percent, to 1,300 farms, according to the U.S. Agriculture Census. Roche and other agriculture experts estimate that another 200 farms have been sold in the past two years.

Gary Hodge, executive director of the Tri-County Council, a government group that represents St. Mary's, Charles and Calvert counties, said he hopes the produce market will keep more farmers from selling their land, thereby halting the rapid growth of residential and commercial development in the area.

"This isn't just a problem for the farmer," Hodge said. "Everybody's complaining about overdevelopment. Unless we convince the farmers to stick around, we won't be able to control the growth."

Hodge is quick to point out that tobacco still is Maryland's third largest crop, accounting for auction sales of $18 million this year and as much as $57 million as recently as five years ago. But the 11.7 million pounds of tobacco that were sold in April still are a drop in the bucket when compared with national production levels.

"In North Carolina auctions, that much tobacco can be sold in one day," Hodge said. Last year, the United States produced more than 2 billion pounds of tobacco, according to the USDA. Although flue-cured and burley tobaccos account for almost all of the nation's production, Maryland tobacco, known in the industry as Type 32, holds a special niche in the marketplace. Maryland's unique variety is valued because of its ability to hold a flame, and it has been particularly popular in Europe, where unfiltered cigarettes are common.

Many packs of European cigarettes make a point to advertise that they contain Maryland-grown tobacco. Luxembourg even has a cigarette brand called Maryland.

"Most people don't realize what a specialty Maryland tobacco is," said Peter Wilby, international marketing specialist with the state Department of Agriculture. "The state of Maryland was formed by the British to grow tobacco. Maryland tobacco was king."

But as health concerns about the effects of tobacco have grown, tobacco use has fallen. And as farmers find other crops and farms give way to suburban development, the age-old way of life in Southern Maryland is slowly and, most say, inevitably coming to an end.

Historically, much of the state's crop each year is purchased by Swiss cigarette manufacturers, although Type 32 tobacco also is used in small portions in some American cigarettes. While export demand for cigarettes is growing, domestic consumption continues to fall.

U.S. cigarette production is expected to decline 2 percent to 3 percent from the 703 billion produced last year, said Bob Miller, a tobacco specialist with the USDA.

At the same time, Europeans are smoking fewer cigarettes than ever before, Wilby said. "The Europeans liked to smoke a heavier cigarette, which got its flavor from the Maryland leaf. But they're changing to a milder blend, and they're smoking less and less," he said.

Wilby estimates that exports account for only 25 percent of Maryland tobacco sales, compared with 50 percent just 10 years ago.

Faced with the continued drop in demand, the Maryland Department of Agriculture is sponsoring trade missions to Asia, where cigarette consumption is on the rise. This year, South Korea purchased about 300,000 pounds of Maryland tobacco, a first-ever sale for the state.

Wilby and others insist that if Maryland tobacco is to survive another decade, new markets must be found. But this year, only $7,500 was appropriated for marketing overseas, Hodge said. "We can't do much with $7,500," he said. "But you can't blame the state for not giving us more, given the market conditions."

The farmers say it's only a matter of time before tobacco disappears from the fields. "I think its time is over," said Mary Stach, who owns more than 400 acres on three farms but stopped growing tobacco this year. "For one thing, we won't have any land to raise it on. And with all the talk about smoking, how can we survive?" Agricultural experts, however, aren't as quick to dismiss the future of tobacco in the area. "I think we've leveled off," Roche said. "No, there won't be any more 60-acre growers. But people will keep planting a few acres each year. There will always be a demand for what Maryland has to offer."

Farmers agree that the demand, though reduced, probably will continue. Still, they say they can't afford the labor to raise the crop.

Tobacco farmers have resisted mechanization more than any other crop grown in the area, Roche said. The seeds are hand-planted in carefully protected beds late in the winter, and transplanted to the fields in the spring. In the summer, the flower buds must be removed by hand.

In the late summer and fall, the plants must be cut down by hand and strung up in barns to cure and dry. After several weeks, the leaves must be stripped off the plants, graded and bundled, all by hand. The entire process takes about 14 months.

The USDA estimates that growing and harvesting an acre of tobacco takes an average of 230 worker-hours, compared with two to three worker-hours for one acre of corn. On the other hand, an acre of good tobacco can be worth $3,000 at auction, while an acre's worth of corn may have a market value of less than $300.

Stach said she couldn't find enough labor to harvest her crop. "It's dirty, sweaty work," she said. "When they can work in McDonald's, where it's air-conditioned, and make the same money, why would anyone want to bother working tobacco?"

So like the other farmers, Stach has stopped planting her traditional 40 acres of tobacco. She's also sold about 100 acres of her land to developers.

David Martin, agricultural extension agent for Anne Arundel County, said the recent tobacco auction proved that there's more than demand at work on the market. In April, Maryland tobacco farmers enjoyed one of their best auction seasons in nearly a decade. Top-quality tobacco sold for about $1.60 per pound, close to the most recent peak years of 1981 and 1982. Despite the high prices, tobacco acreage continued to decline.

"If we don't stop this process now, the whole support industry is going to go under," Roche said. "It reminds me of the strawberry production on the Eastern Shore. In the 1920s, the shore had the world's biggest production of strawberries. You'd never know that now."

Roche is working furiously to see that the produce market succeeds, for in it he sees the future of the tobacco farmers. "The writing's on the wall," he said. "It's been there for 20 years. We're faced with the last hour and we've got to get these farmers to diversify."

Billy Hatfield of Huntingtown appreciates the effort. "I don't want to dump my land. I'm a farmer. That's all I know," he said.

Hatfield has replaced his 60 acres of tobacco with produce and corn. He sold cucumbers and summer squash at the wholesale market last week. "This is going to help us a lot," he said. "I've never sold wholesale before, but I guess I'll get used to it."

South Carolina Basket Makers Weave Link To Past

By Charles Hillinger
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

MOUNT PLEASANT, S.C. — Along a four-mile stretch of U.S. 17 in this Atlantic coastal town, there are 60 family-operated sweetgrass basket stands. Mazie Brown sits on a chair in the shade of Mazie's Sweetgrass Baskets, weaving her latest basket.

Behind the basket weaver are scores of baskets she has created — bread baskets, casserole baskets, fruit baskets, flower baskets, knitting baskets, cookie baskets and planter baskets. They are all made of sweetgrass, a soft pliable wild grass, gathered from sand dunes, swamps and marshes. Priced from $25 to $200, each one is a little different, reflecting the way Brown felt at the time she created them. She stitches in bulrush reeds, pine needles and fiber strips from palmetto trees for added color and design.

Slaves brought the art of sweetgrass basket making from the West African countries of Ivory Coast and Senegal. "This is my heritage, something my ancestors who came from Africa as far back as the 1600s gave to me. It is an art form that must never be lost, for it never lets us forget how our people came to this country in chains and shackles. It is our direct link to Africa," the 46-year-old basket maker said.

In the plantation days, the men made huge baskets for storing and winnowing grain and for shipping cotton and indigo. A few of the large 16th- and 17th-century baskets are museum pieces.

After the Civil War, the art of sweetgrass basket making died out except in Mount Pleasant, where it continued as a family tradition.

"I have been weaving sweetgrass baskets since I was 8," said the basket maker whose mother and grandmother were also named Mazie. "My mother taught me, and her mother taught her, and it goes on and on for generations in my family. My mother did this until she died two years ago when she was 72."

But now the three-century-old legacy is endangered. A year and a half ago, 100 black families, all living in Mount Pleasant, formed the Sweetgrass Basket Makers Association to encourage younger women to take up the craft.

"We formed the association to make certain this tradition does not die," said Mary Jackson, 44, founder-president of the group.

"Most of the basket makers are older women. In many families where basket making has been a tradition, handed down (from) grandmother to mother to daughter, younger women no longer are interested in doing this."

"We are encouraging the younger women, who work at something else, to spend at least a few hours a week weaving sweetgrass baskets and to teach their daughters the art as their mothers taught them," said Jackson, a master craftsman whose baskets sell for as much as $3,000 and are displayed in a number of museums around the country.

Then there has been the gradual disappearance of sweetgrass in Mount Pleasant, because of rapid beachfront development in recent years.

While grandmothers, mothers and daughters have made the baskets, grandfathers, fathers and sons gather sweetgrass in swamps and on dunes along the beaches where the grass grows.

But now those men have been forced to travel hundreds of miles in both directions up and down the Atlantic seashore to find enough sweetgrass to take care of their needs. Last year, they were running so short of the wild grass that the Sweetgrass Basket Makers Association held a conference in Charleston, S.C., to call public attention to the dwindling supplies.

Hearing about the search for new sources of the wild grass, Fred Marland of the Georgia Department of Natural Resources told the basket makers about a private island off the Georgia coast with an abundant supply. The Mount Pleasant basket weavers contacted the owners of Little St. Simons Island who gave them permission to harvest the grass.

"On hearing of our search for sweetgrass, Ben Gibbens, the manager of the island, said he would be delighted to have the men come out and harvest all the sweetgrass they needed," Jackson said.

Vest Combines Feather And Fan Stitches

It's a dynamite combination -- the lovely feather and fan stitch and a beautiful, unusual yarn worked into a knit cardigan vest. Easy to pair with skirts or pants year-round, this vest's cap sleeves and deep V-neck make for a comfortable, easy fit.

The yarn of choice is a textured acrylic with lustrous fibers, giving the design an almost luminous look. The gauge is 4 1/4 stitches to the inch, and easy-to-follow directions are written for petite, small, medium and large sizes with finished bust measurements of 36, 38, 40 and 42 respectively.

To obtain directions for making the Feather and Fan vest, send your request for Leaflet No. Z-081389 with $2 and a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope to: Pat Trexler

Or you may order Kit No. K-081389 by sending a check or money order for $16.95 to Pat Trexler Crafts at the same address. The kit price includes shipping charges, full instructions and yarn in your choice of the following colors: watermelon, turquoise or off-white.

From time to time, it has been my pleasure to review needlecraft books that are of particular interest to my readers. I am excited now to tell you about a brand-new book just off the presses -- "A Collection of Afghans" from Trexler Designs, compiled and edited by Carolyn Sheffield, one of our very talented designers.

Had I been the sole author of the book, I would have found it difficult to review it, but since most of the work was done by others, I can share my delight with you.

Soon after I started writing "Pat's Pointers" 25 years ago, I learned from my readers that afghans are very precious to people -- family treasures cherished as heirlooms and used by generation after generation.

Knowing the popularity of afghans, we decided to compile this collection of our favorite afghan patterns, all shown in lovely full-color photographs. Some are from previous columns and some are new, including an exquisite one pictured on the cover of the collection depicting a colorful cardinal on a tree branch.

Whether you choose to knit, crochet or weave an afghan, there is one for you in this book. You'll find a plaid to knit, a plaid to crochet, a traditional ripple, "granny squares," cables, diamonds, sculptured Aran knits and crochets, and lovely lace designs. Eager beginners and seasoned pros alike will find an afghan to warm the heart and the home. Each pattern is rated as easy, intermediate or advanced to help you choose one for your own skill level or comfort zone.

Although the more than 20 patterns are the highlights of the book, there's more. It begins with a brief but fascinating history of knitting and crocheting, and then gets down to all the basic information you might need to successfully complete any of the projects.

There are chapters on needles, hooks and other accessories, and a comprehensive discussion of yarns as well as tips to help you understand terms, symbols and abbreviations, follow pattern directions, finish and block your projects -- all helpful information for the self-taught knitter or crocheter.

But suppose you don't know how to knit or crochet. "A Collection of Afghans" contains excellent, well-illustrated lessons that will enable you to teach yourself these fascinating crafts. In this "how-to" section, you'll find many helpful tips not usually found in knit or crochet instructions.

For all of you who treasure afghans, we hope this will be a book you will treasure as well. Select your favorite design and begin one of your most enjoyable and rewarding needlecraft experiences.

Tension Over Boat People Coming To A Boiling Point In Hong Kong

By Dan Biers
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

HONG KONG -- As Hong Kong's muggy summer moves relentlessly on, long-simmering tension over the skyrocketing population of Vietnamese boat people in the British colony is coming to a boil.

Hong Kong residents are increasingly bitter about the 52,000 Vietnamese now in camps after sailing in rickety wooden boats from their communist homeland in search of a better life.

And the boat people could become increasingly difficult to control if Britain and Vietnam agree on a program that would forcibly send most of them back.

"I think the Hong Kong people in general are fed up with the problem," said Allen Lee, the senior member of the Legislative Council, which approves Hong Kong's laws. "The reason for this is the continuing influx."

More than 23,000 boat people sailed into Hong Kong from May to July, an 84 percent jump from the corresponding period a year earlier.

Resettlement of the Vietnamese asylum-seekers in third countries has lagged far behind, creating a crisis of accommodation for the new arrivals.

Existing detention centers are overcrowded. Riots broke out in two camps late in July, one after guards tried to prevent boat people from escaping through holes cut in the fence and another after a squabble between Vietnamese women from rival groups.

"When large numbers of people are kept cooped up in camps, particularly in hot weather, there is bound to be a great deal of discomfort and frustration," Secretary of Security Geoffrey Barnes said after the first disturbance.

Meanwhile, government plans to build makeshift camps to house the flood of newcomers have met resistance from Hong Kong residents. In the most recent example, scores of villagers pitched tents on a construction site to stop work on a new detention center in rural Sai Kung.

Reports of boat people escaping, of severe staff shortages at the detention centers and alleged police brutality toward the Vietnamese have added to the crisis atmosphere.

Raymond Chung, an official who represents a Hong Kong district that has a detention center, said his constituents now are more concerned about the boat people than the violent crackdown on dissent in Beijing, which has horrified this territory that returns to Chinese sovereignty in eight years.

Ironically, the hardline stance against accepting the Vietnamese comes as Hong Kong residents are demanding that Britain offer them refuge because of the Chinese communist crackdown on the mainland.

"I think the situation is completely different," Chung said. "We are claiming our rights" as British subjects.

In an effort to end the flood of boat people, Britain decided that all Vietnamese arriving after June 1988, would have to prove they fled their homeland in fear of persecution or face repatriation.

Negotiations with the Vietnamese government to set up a system of forcible repatriation of Vietnamese who fail to qualify as political refugees are under way. A Hong Kong government screening system has determined that roughly four of every five arrivals will be sent back.

The United States is among those criticizing forcible repatriation and this has irritated some Hong Kong people. They say the U.S. position, which they believe stems from a sense of moral responsibility for its role in the Vietnam War, should be backed by promises to resettle more boat people in the United States.

What affect the U.S. opposition will have on the program is not clear, but many Hong Kong people clearly hope repatriation begins soon despite concerns of increased tension in the detention centers.

Boat people already have staged hunger strikes to protest plans for forcible repatriation and hundreds of makeshift weapons have been found during searches of the camps. The U.S. Consulate in Hong Kong received a letter from one Vietnamese who wrote in blood: "Save my soul."

While the number of boat people who have volunteered to return to Vietnam has increased in recent weeks, they still account for only a tiny fraction of the total population.

Chris Bale, the director of the relief agency Oxfam Hong Kong, sees a "potentially explosive situation" in the camps once mandatory repatriation begins.

But he believes efforts should continue on a repatriation program so long as safeguards are in place to ensure that political refugees do not have to return home and that people sent back will not face persecution.

Insurance Benefits Can Be Taxed

By Robert B. Crenshaw
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON -- Life insurance enjoys many tax benefits. One of the best is that the money paid at the death of the insured person is not subject to income tax.

This benefit can be tricky to exploit, however. Life insurance proceeds are subject to estate taxes, and if the policy is found to be part of the dead person's estate, Uncle Sam is quick to arrive with his hand out.

A tried and true strategy, therefore, is to place ownership of life insurance elsewhere. One way to do this is simply to have the heirs or other beneficiaries own the policy. A more sophisticated approach, because it allows more flexibility, is to place the policy in trust for the benefit of the people you want to provide for.

Such a trust would be a taxable entity, but since the death benefit would be considered income no tax would be due on the policy's proceeds.

The key difficulty to both approaches is persuading the Internal Revenue Service that the dead person was not in fact the owner of the policy.

And there is an added twist. Policies that were owned by the dead person within three years of his demise are considered to have been transferred "in contemplation of death" and the IRS can include them in the estate for tax purposes.

This contemplation of death rule was repealed for most other assets in 1984, but Congress left it in place for insurance.

"It was one of the few exceptions," said Jack Porter of BDO Seidman, apparently because the lawmakers felt it was simply too easy to give away a policy at the last minute.

Thus an estate must show not only that ownership of the policy lay elsewhere but also that it had been held by others for three years or more.

Over the years this issue, with slightly different sets of facts, has come before the Tax Court repeatedly, and the decisions provide guidance as to what a person should and should not do to remove a life insurance policy from his or her estate.

Last week, the court decided another such case in such a way as to add a bit of leeway for the person who uses a trust to hold life insurance.

In this case, a Tennessee lawyer named Eddie L. Headrick "skillfully drafted" an irrevocable trust that was, among other things, authorized -- but not required -- to buy insurance on Headrick and pay the premiums.

The trust documents reserved to Headrick the power to remove any trustee at will and to appoint replacements.

Headrick wanted the Cleveland Bank and Trust Co. of Cleveland, Tenn., to act as trustee. Before setting up the trust, he met with an insurance agent to price policies and then with a bank official to discuss the trust.

Headrick left the bank official with the impression that he wanted the trust to act as an insurance trust, but Headrick did not condition establishment of the trust on the bank's commitment to buy insurance.

The trust was executed and Headrick transferred $5,900 to it. Shortly thereafter, the bank applied for a $375,000 policy on Headrick and began paying the $435.76 monthly premiums.

Two years later, at age 33, Headrick was killed in an automobile accident. The insurance company paid off and the proceeds were not included in Headrick's estate. The IRS said they should have been and the case ended up before the Tax Court.

The IRS conceded that the trust and not Headrick owned the policy, but argued that, in the court's words, "decendent's dominance over the trust arrangement indicates that trustee was substantively acting as decendent's agent in acquiring insurance on the decendent's life."

The service argued that Headrick indirectly paid the premiums and thus was, at least at first, the owner of the policy.

That question was the key, since if Headrick had owned the policy at any time within three years of his death -- even though he did not own it at the time of his death -- then it would be includable in his estate.

The court sided with Headrick's estate.

It noted, first, that while payment of premiums was once a definitive test of ownership, it no longer is.

Second, it drew a distinction between Headrick's case and a 1984 decision in which the proceeds were included in the estate. In that 1984 case, the trust documents said the insured person was the "initiator" of the policy and "assign(ed) to the trustees" his rights to the policy.

Further, the person in the 1984 case wrote a check to the trustee for the exact amount of the first premium.

The court said Headrick's case more closely resembled a 1987 case in which a wife bought a policy on her husband and signed the original application as owner though the husband's wholly owned corporation paid the premiums.

The court also sided with the estate in that case, finding no "incidents of ownership" such as circumstances in which the proceeds could have reverted to the insured or his estate.

Headrick also did not possess any incidents of ownership. Therefore the policy was never his so the trust did not run afoul of the three-year contemplation of death rule.

Roadside Markets Cure Fever

By Delores Ballard
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

JACKSON, Tenn. — When the aroma of somebody's new-mowed lawn makes you think of watermelon, and the red ball of the setting sun gets you craving ripe tomatoes, you've got fresh produce fever.

Area farmers and gardeners have the cure, and they'll often oblige by setting up shop right on the roadside. In a high-traffic area, they seldom have long to wait before passing drivers start pulling over to ask, "How much you getting for your sweet corn?"

Summertime, and the eating is easy — despite the heavy rains. The Tennessee crop-reporting service rates 61 percent of the corn crop in good condition and 29 percent in excellent condition. Earlier prognoses had said the rain would hurt the corn crop.

Most customers rate roadside produce a bargain. A dozen ears of sweet corn cost $1.50 at most stands; you can fill your freezer for less than a $10 bill.

Bell peppers may go for as little as 20 cents each. Cantaloupes average about a dollar, and the home-grown tomato — the unquestioned idol, the reigning king, the Elvis of fresh produce — often sells for 50 cents a pound or less.

The prices don't necessarily undersell the supermarket. Stores advertise prices like three pounds of tomatoes for 99 cents, and two cantaloupes for a dollar.

Roadside vendors aren't getting rich off vegetable stands, but many say it gives farmers, particularly retirees, a little extra income, a chance to socialize, and a way to avoid waste when a crop delivers a high yield.

Customers say the payoff is getting food home-grown and knowing it's fresh. Straight-from-the-field seems to have a psychological appeal all its own.

"This helps people out a lot. You can find fresher vegetables this way, and buying directly from them benefits the farmers, too," said customer Pauline Brown of Milan, loading up on cantaloupes and sweet corn at Robert Pope and Charles Powers' roadside market on U.S. 45 south of Milan.

Theirs is basically a tailgate operation. A quilt on the ground, a few peck baskets, an old table and a couple of pickup truck beds are their store "fixtures." But people who want field-fresh vegetables and melons don't quibble.

"We're open seven days a week," said Powers. "We don't start selling on Sunday until after church."

Fresh produce vendors aren't hard to find. They sprout up like cornstalks along major highways, country backroads, even city streets. There's Ernest McBride selling cantaloupes and tomatoes off a truck in Jackson; a quartet of farmers who pool their vegetables under the shade trees in the first sharp eastbound curve on Mifflin Road; at least four between Medina and Milan on U.S. 45.

Their wares include everything from purple-hull peas to mouth-scorching jalapeno peppers, yellow crookneck squash and new potatoes, butterbeans and mellow cantaloupes. Some farmers even fight the thorns, wasps and chiggers to offer fresh-picked wild blackberries.

Fay and Gertrude Barr grow everything but the watermelons they sell at their stand on U.S. 45 south of Humboldt. Right now, Mrs. Barr says, customers want purple-hull peas and peaches more than anything else.

"I had one woman that said, 'I want some purple-hull peas,' and I asked her what kind, and she said, 'Purple-hull peas!'" Barr chuckled. "I never was able to make her understand I had five different kinds of purple-hull peas."

Acknowledging Gifts Is Job For Happy Couple

Dear Abby: As a devoted fan, I have admired your wisdom and solid horse sense. I am also greatly impressed with your gracious willingness to accept criticism when you goof. Well, you goofed.

An embarrassed mother wanted to know how to handle her friends who ask if her son and his bride had received their wedding gift after nearly a year had passed. You said the friends were putting the "blameless" parents on the spot — that the parents should give the friends their children's telephone number so they could ask directly. You missed the point, Abby.

The parents are not blameless! The people who sent the gift are friends of the Parents — not the free-loading children. (They may even be unknown to the newlyweds.)

Wedding invitations are issued by the parents, who are responsible for the good or bad manners of their children.

You should have advised the parents to write a formal letter of apology to the friends whose wedding gift had not been acknowledged — and send a copy to their son, along with a zinger, telling him to get his bride off the dime and acknowledge their wedding presents! — Pasadena Grandpa

Dear Grandpa: I'll take my lumps when I goof, but I stand by that answer. I hold that the parents of children who are old enough to marry are not responsible for their children's bad manners. I venture to say that most children have been taught to say "thank you" when they receive a gift, and if they are negligent or lazy, you can't blame their parents.

Dear Abby
Abigail Van Buren

Also, you suggest that the parents should tell their son to get his bride "off the dime" and acknowledge their wedding presents!

I submit that the wedding presents are his as well as hers, and although the bride usually writes the thank-you notes, the responsibility is not necessarily hers entirely. Today, with the majority of brides working outside the home, acknowledging wedding gifts should be a shared responsibility.

Dear Abby: I am writing my will and must make some decisions. I have two large albums filled with family pictures that go back three generations. I have six children and many grandchildren.

How shall I distribute these albums? I want to be fair. — Puzzled In The Autumn Of My Life

Dear Puzzled: Please don't make the mistake most parents make and leave everything to the eldest, or only to the daughters.

Invite each one of your children — and grandchildren — to review the albums and make notes of the pictures they want. With today's technology, excellent duplicates — as good as or better than the originals — can be made. If money is a consideration, perhaps the heirs will pay for the cost of reproducing the originals.

Dear Abby: During my 10 years as a day-care provider, I have heard every excuse in the book for not picking up a child on time. (The prize was a woman who was supposed to pick her child up at 3 p.m.; she came at 11 p.m. — saying she'd had drop-in company and couldn't get rid of them!)

While waiting for people to pick up their children, I have missed dental appointments (which I had to pay for), my daughter's piano recital, my son's no-hitter, and the funeral of a dear friend, not to mention countless meetings, hair appointments and manicures.

I have tried charging overtime, but charging is one thing, and collecting is another.

It's sad to see how upset and anxious these children are when they have to wait an hour or two for their pickups. It wouldn't be so bad if their moms would call to say they would be late but most of them never bother to call, and the kids are wondering if their mom's been in an accident, had to work late or, worse yet, just forgot them.

About money: There are women who always forget their checkbooks, and others who are "a little short this week" and will pay me on Monday. When I first went into the day-care business, I was told (by a woman who was once in the business) to get my money up front. That's a laugh! I wish I had the money some of my clients still owe me.

I could go on and on, but it's bad for my blood pressure. I really do love children, but some of their parents should have remained childless. — Also Fed Up

Television's 'People Magazine' Strives To Match The Quality

By Larry Neumeister
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — As one editor at People magazine recalls, there was no "burst of pride" among the staff when some of their stories began appearing two years ago on a televised edition of the weekly.

But Hal Wingo, the magazine's assistant managing editor, says "People Magazine on TV" is winning over the more than 150 writers, editors, artists and production staff as it prepares to air its fifth edition on Wednesday.

"Some of them were disappointed in it in the beginning," he said of the staff's reaction. "I believe this next show is the best reflection yet of what the magazine is all about. It feels like the magazine."

The staff was concerned, he said, because a quality TV show would stimulate sales of the magazine, which sells a majority of its copies on newsstands. Generally, no subject airs unless it already was in print.

This time, the one-hour special on CBS includes an interview with Christie Brinkley and Billy Joel in which the singer strikes back at those who claim the couple will split, and a segment about Robert Redford's fight to save an endangered Hispanic community.

It also looks at the case of a woman who has been in jail for two years because she refused to allow her daughter to visit the ex-husband she claims raped the girl.

It takes the viewer to Zambia to hear about the successful efforts of a U.S. couple who went there five years ago to teach local residents the importance of making their government protect wild animals being killed off by poachers.

And it includes an interview with professional tennis player Michael Chang and a first-person narrative from the mother of two 5-year-old conjoined sisters.

Wingo said the mix of celebrity interviews, features and more serious subjects is closer to what the magazine strives to publish each week.

The magazine went through the same sort of search for the best combination of stories when it started, he said.

"Nobody had ever done this before. We kind of made up the rules as we went along," Wingo said.

Duplicating the broad mix of 20 to 25 stories in the magazine was difficult on the televised special, which could only include six to eight segments, and it irritated the magazine's staff, he said.

But Ward Sylvester, supervising producer of the TV special, said he'd "like to think we've always reflected the magazine."

"Many of our stories were covers," he said. "We look at the magazine and try to think of stories that will translate well."

Sylvester said the show has improved since the arrival of KCBS-TV Los Angeles anchor Bree Walker, who was host for the first time when it aired last in April.

"I lean toward the hard news features, that's my bent," she said. "One of the things that they wanted to do was try to make 'People Magazine on TV' a more topical and newsier show. Issue-oriented features will be a bright spot of this next show."

Walker added: "We have to be a little forgiving the first time around on any new show."

'Parenthood' Tops Cash Flow

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

HOLLYWOOD — "Parenthood" pleasures and the deep-water perils of "The Abyss" were box-office favorites this weekend, heading a list that included loony comedies and die-hard blockbusters.

Universal's "Parenthood," starring Steve Martin, took in $9.7 million in its second week of release, according to figures released Monday by Exhibitor Relations Inc.

"The Abyss," with the lesser-known Ed Harris and Mary Elizabeth Mastrantonio, scored a hit with its hardware-heavy tale of close encounters in the deep ocean. The big-budget film earned $9.3 million in its debut week. But the 2-hour and 20-minute running time cost the movie one showing per day in many theaters, contributing to an unimpressive per-screen average of $6,079.

The return of sarcastic slasher Freddy Krueger brought "A Nightmare on Elm Street 5: The Dream Child" to third place in its first weekend of release. "Nightmare" grossed $8.1 million, followed by the Tom Hanks-drooling dog police comedy "Turner and Hooch" in fourth with $6.3 million.

Watermelon Festival

KITTY HAWK — The Wacky Watermelon Festival will be held at Kitty Hawk on Friday and Saturday. Festivities include a visit from the North Carolina Watermelon Queen, Denise O'Sullivan; watermelon games such as dash races, olympic throw, bowling, carving contest, seed spitting contest and a kamikaze throw off the Rogallo Tower, and a Saturday regatta. A live remote will be on hand from noon until 3 p.m. Events begin at noon on Friday and at 10 a.m. on Saturday. The location is at the Kitty Hawk Connection at Mile Post 13 across from Jockey's Ridge. For more details call 441-4124.

Love Warriors

BREVARD — The guitar-vocal duo of Tuck and Patti will perform in concert at 8 p.m. Friday at Brevard College. The couple's latest release "Love Warriors," currently holds a top position on Billboard's contemporary jazz chart. For more details and ticket reservations, call 704/884-2019.

Actor Charged

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. (AP) — Alan Paley, an actor with television credits going back to "Surfside Six" and "Sea Hunt," faces attempted armed robbery charges after suffering a gunshot wound.

Paley, 54, who on his acting resume lists "experience with police '38," allegedly used such a weapon trying to stick up a stranger wearing a Rolex watch and gold ring in a hotel restroom last week, police say.

Fort Myers golfing executive William Donald, 55, said he wrestled the gun away and chased Paley with it, shooting him in the abdomen as he climbed into his car. "He was a pretty good actor," Donald said. "Maybe that's why he felt he could rob me."

The romantic comedy "When Harry Met Sally..." with Billy Crystal and Meg Ryan as best friends who become lovers, finished in fifth with ticket sales of $6.2 million. "Lethal Weapon 2," the police adventure sequel with Mel Gibson and Danny Glover, was next with $6.1 million.

Still going strong in seventh place was "Batman," collecting $5 million. "Batman" has now sold $223 million worth of tickets. It was trailed by the fading Sylvester Stallone prison movie "Lock Up," in eighth with $3.34 million.

Rounding out the Top 10 were the family comedy "Honey, I Shrunk the Kids" with $3.33 million in ninth and the withering "Young Einstein" with $2.1 million.

Here are the top movies for the weekend as tallied by Exhibitor Relations, with distributor, weekend gross, number of theater screens, average per screen, total gross and number of weeks in release.

1. "Parenthood," Universal, $9.7 million, 1,300 screens, $7,440 per screen, $30.3 million, two weeks.
2. "The Abyss," 20th Century Fox, $9.3 million, 1,533 screens, $6,079 per screen, $13 million, one week.
3. "A Nightmare on Elm Street 5: The Dream Child," New Line, $8.1 million, 1,902 screens, $4,266 per screen, $8.1 million, one week.

4. "Turner and Hooch," Disney, $6.3 million, 1,880 screens, $3,357 per screen, $38.9 million, three weeks.

5. "When Harry Met Sally..." Columbia, $6.2 million, 1,171 screens, $5,292 per screen, $45.9 million, five weeks.

6. "Lethal Weapon 2," Warner Bros. $6.1 million, 1,830 screens, $3,318 per screen, $112.1 million, six weeks.

7. "Batman," Warner Bros., $5 million, 1,770 screens, $2,840 per screen, $223 million, eight weeks.

8. "Lock Up," Tri-Star, $3.34 million, 1,384 screens, $2,415 per screen, $12 million, two weeks.

9. "Honey, I Shrunk the Kids," Disney, $3.33 million, 1,451 screens, $2,293 per screen, $108.2 million, seven weeks.

10. "Young Einstein," Warner Bros., $2.1 million, 1,217 screens, $1,686 per screen, $7.1 million, two weeks.

Pest-Fighting Chemicals Leave Roaches 'Forever Young'

By Malcolm Gladwell
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

Ever since civilized man first turned on the kitchen light and spied a cockroach running for cover, relations between humans and the most loathed of household insects have been strained.

Cockroaches have been paralyzed, asphyxiated, doused with every conceivable poison and clubbed endlessly with blunt objects — all in an often fruitless battle to rid the world, or at least the kitchen, of roaches.

But now, in what is best described as a new spirit of roach-man rapprochement, entomologists and pest-control experts have begun to shift their strategy, moving away from extermination and toward managing roach populations at minimal levels and modifying their biology.

Behind the new roach detente are several compounds known as insect growth regulators (IGRs), which offer an environmentally friendly alternative to conventional insecticides that are widely felt to be too toxic, and in some cases too ineffective, for widespread use.

Unlike most existing poisons, IGRs don't try to kill cockroaches outright. In fact, the leading IGRs, known as juvenile hormone analogues, aren't poisons in the traditional sense. Instead, they are chemical copies of hormones that the roach uses to govern its own larval development.

Given to the insect in large enough quantities, the juvenile hormones trap the roach in the insect equivalent of pre-adolescence, leaving it as healthy and vigorous as any other juvenile cockroach, but without the sexual maturity to reproduce.

"We call it the Peter Pan syndrome," said Roger Meola, a roach expert at Texas A&M University. "They're forever young."

The appeal of insect growth regulators is their specificity. While many insecticides are broad-acting toxins poisonous not just to cockroaches, but in some cases, to any other organism they touch, juvenile hormones affect roaches and nothing else.

One hormone known as hydroprene, in fact, is so selective that it is effective only during a 5- to 18-day period just before the roach's final metamorphosis from adolescence to adulthood.

During that critical period, the IGR keeps the level of juvenile hormone in the roach artificially high, just when it is supposed to drop and be replaced by adult hormones that drive the insect's transformation to maturity.

The result is that the cockroach is crippled as its moves into adulthood, with deformed wings and inadequately formed genitalia.

Because these sterile roaches live just as long — in fact longer — than the typical four months of their untreated counterparts, IGR administration can take up to eight months, or two roach generations, to have an effect.

Other IGRs offer more immediate results. One set of compounds, for example, blocks the roach's ability to manufacture the material known as chitin, which makes up the insect's hard outer shell, or exoskeleton.

At each of the cockroach's five molting stages during development, the chitin inhibitor is potentially deadly, since once the roach sheds one skin, it cannot make another.

Unlike many other growth regulators, this one is not specific to roaches. In fact, it works on any organism that produces chitin, which includes most other arthropods such as insects and crustaceans.

For this reason, chitin inhibitors are considered suitable only for agricultural uses that will not allow them into streams or lakes to affect shrimp and other crustaceans.

"Some of the more conventional insecticides will affect the nervous system of a cockroach and will also affect the nervous system of a mammal," said Donald Cochran, an entomologist at Virginia Polytechnic Institute and State University. "But these (juvenile hormones and chitin inhibitors) both attack systems that don't have any parallel in a human."

The big question surrounding IGRs, however, involves their effectiveness. In field trials at the University of Florida, hydroprene was found to be 95 percent as effective as conventional pest-control methods after seven months. The chemical companies currently promoting wider use of IGRs against cockroaches claim high levels of effectiveness for their products.

The catch is that to bring down roach populations significantly, juvenile hormones have to sterilize an unusually high number of insects — more than 80 percent — because otherwise the method simply improves the survival rate and fertility of those unaffected by taking away other roaches with which they would have had to compete.

"We haven't seen the same population crashes that other researchers have," said Michael Rust, an entomologist at the University of California at Riverside. "Juvenile hormones are a potential alternative, but they are not a panacea."

Still, several manufacturers are selling products based on IGRs. Hydroprene, for example, is sold as Gencor by Zoecon Corp. Tree companies make versions of chitin inhibitors — Larvadex by Ciba-Geigy, Baysir by Mobay Chemical, and Dimilin by Roussel Bio.

There is also some doubt about how durable IGRs will be as a form of pest control. Because of the large size of most domestic cockroach populations and their reproductive speed, some mutant roaches always will have the unusual ability to break down any toxin before it can take effect.

Those select few survive the initial chemical onslaught and pass on their unique genetic characteristics to their offspring, creating a new and harder generation.

Even the most potent of chemicals have, over time, seen their effectiveness reduced through this process of natural selection. At first, researchers thought it was unlikely this same scenario would be repeated for juvenile hormones.

While it was understandable, after all, for an insect to have resistance to a foreign chemical, how could there be a roach that breaks down a copy of one of its own hormones?

However, recent research with fleas subjected to the same juvenile hormone techniques as cockroaches shows that resistance is possible, and that in critical stages of development some insects have a higher tolerance for juvenile hormones, an unusually effective method for breaking the chemical down or a particularly adept way of avoiding sources of it in the environment.

"Say the insect picks up the hormone through its feet," said Ted Shapas, manger of insecticides research at American Cyanamid, maker of Combat roach poison. "Then it's not unlikely for it to develop thicker feet. That may sound facetious. But it's the type of things insects do to protect themselves."

"I don't think anything is out of the question with insects," said George Rambo, director of research at the National Pest Control Association. "Especially with cockroaches."

Nags Head Dance

NAGS HEAD — A Raleigh orchestra is the highlight of the Big Band Preservation Society's dance at the Armada in Nags Head Thursday.

The 18-piece Casablanca Orchestra, under the direction of Mark Whitney, is part of a summer series of dances presented by the Big Band Preservation Society. The society hopes to increase interest and preserve America's big band sounds of the 1930s and 1940s.

Throughout the vacation season, the group offers name band leaders for an evening of dancing pleasure, 8:30 p.m. to 12:30 a.m.

Others scheduled are the Russ Morgan Orchestra, Sunday, Sept. 17; and the Glenn Miller Orchestra, Wednesday, Oct. 11, and a special, added attraction will be the Tommy Dorsey Orchestra Thursday, Dec. 7.

Tickets are available in several Outer Banks locations, including the Armada; or by mail from the Big Band Preservation Society, Box 219, Nags Head, 27959; telephone 441-4644.

For details, call Wally Gray at 461-4644.

Help May Be Coming

Your Food Labels May Have To List More Of What's Inside

By Robert Greene
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Supermarket shoppers, unsure what distinguishes "lite" bread from regular or "high-fiber" cereals from others, may be getting some help from the federal government.

Both Congress and the Food and Drug Administration are considering massive revisions in the FDA's nutrition labeling requirements, which date from 1973, when the vitamin and mineral content of foods was consumers' prime concern.

Now, much of the focus of healthy eating has shifted to foods' cholesterol, fat and fiber content — areas untouched by the current regulations.

Even the food industry, until now a foe of compulsory labeling, appears to be going along — for a price.

Says Dr. Frank Young, the FDA commissioner:

"The public is demanding change in this area and deserves nothing less than our maximum efforts to accomplish this change."

Young, testifying before a congressional committee recently, referred to the two biggest driving forces behind the heightened interest in nutrition — the Surgeon General's Report on Nutrition and Health, which cited dietary factors in five of the 10 leading causes of death, including cardiovascular disease and cancer, and the report by the National Research Council, "Diet and Health: Implications for Reducing Chronic Disease Risk."

The FDA commissioner said both reports, issued last year, "concluded that Americans could substantially reduce their risk of heart disease, cancer and many other chronic diseases through specific changes in eating habits."

A survey of shoppers taken this year for a food industry organization found that 94 percent of the poll's participants are concerned about the nutritional content of what they eat. Thirty-eight percent said they were most concerned about cholesterol, a 16-point jump in just one year.

But the FDA and members of Congress disagree on how to give the public what it wants.

Since 1973, when the FDA imposed nutrition labeling requirements for the first time, products to which nutrients have been added or for which a nutrition claim is made:

—Must be labeled with quantitative listings of calories, carbohydrates and protein.

—Must show, by "average" or "usual" serving, the percentages of the federal government's recommended daily allowance of protein, vitamin A, vitamin C, thiamine, riboflavin, niacin, calcium and iron contained in a product.

—Must list calories, protein content, carbohydrates, fat and sodium.

But those regulations were drawn up when vitamin and mineral content was the most prevalent consumer concern.

Now, what many shoppers want most is such information as a product's fat and fiber content, its "liteness" — or lack thereof — and how "naturally" it was made.

Some in Congress contend the FDA has not moved quickly enough to address those concerns.

Rep. Henry Waxman, D-Calif., and Sen. Howard Metzenbaum, D-Ohio, have introduced the "Nutrition Labeling and Education Act of 1989." If passed by both houses, the bill's sponsors say revised labels could begin appearing within 18 months of being signed by the president.

Twenty-three groups, including the American Heart Association and American Cancer Society, have endorsed the bill.

The legislation would require that labels list the serving size and number of servings per container; total calories, and calories broken down by total and saturated fat. Also required would be amounts, broken down by serving, of total, saturated and unsaturated fat; cholesterol; sodium; complex carbohydrates; protein; dietary fiber, and other nutrients.

The bill would also require that any health claims on labels that characterize the amount or relationship of calories, fat, cholesterol, sodium, carbohydrates, sugar, protein or dietary fiber to a disease or condition use terms defined by the secretary of health and human services and that the definitions be supported by a scientific consensus.

Another bill, introduced by Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, is similar to the Waxman-Metzenbaum bill except that it would preclude state labeling regulations.

Perceptions of the two proposals vary predictably.

The FDA says congressional action isn't necessary, that it can meet shoppers' needs without legislation. The grocery industry supports the Hatch bill. Activist consumer groups say any legislation that is adopted will need to address a variety of nutrition issues not now covered.

For its part, the FDA plans to hold five hearings around the country to ask people how they would like to see the current regulations changed.

For instance, the agency wants to know how much interest there is in writing definitions for commonly used terms, such as "low salt" or "reduced fat," whether there should be requirements manufacturers must meet in claiming their products help prevent disease; if minimum standards are needed to identify certain foods, and whether the public is willing to pay the added costs that would likely accompany new labeling requirements.

From the comments at those hearings, which haven't been set, the FDA

A lunch from home can provide all the essential nutrients as well as good-tasting food that offers never-ending variety

Brown-Bagging From Home Can Beat Usual Machine-Deli Lunch

By Carol Deegan
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Brown-bagging — it can take on a whole new meaning. You can save money — and calories — when you get your lunch from home, instead of buying it from a deli or a vending machine.

Sounds too boring? Take a break from your everyday sandwich.

You can replace the jelly in a peanut butter and jelly sandwich with fresh fruit slices or chopped dried fruit. You'll add flavor and nutrients, and save on sugar.

Mix flaked, cooked fish or water-packed tuna with fruit, bean sprouts, chopped, cooked or raw vegetables.

Combine chopped, cooked lean meat or poultry with chopped raw vegetables, moistened with plain low-fat yogurt or cottage cheese.

Use a variety of breads such as whole-wheat, rye, pumpernickel or bran; pita pockets, rolls, bagels, tortillas, English muffins and rice cakes.

If you're tired of sandwiches, try different foods.

Low-fat yogurt or cottage cheese can be mixed with chopped and drained unsweetened canned fruits, or chopped or shredded fresh fruits or vegetables.

Rice cracker mix and nuts is a combination of miniature crackers and dried legumes with a spicy Oriental flavor, available in the dried food section of most supermarkets.

Another suggestion: pepperoni, sliced into ¼-inch pieces, and crackers.

Use an insulated lunch box instead of a paper bag when packing cold foods. Use an ice pack or a gel freezer pack to keep hard-cooked eggs, meat and milk products cold.

If lunch just isn't lunch unless it's hot, use a wide-mouth vacuum bottle for soup, chili, chowder or stew; chili or baked beans; casseroles made with pasta or rice.

Preheat the vacuum bottle by filling it with clean, hot water and letting it stand for a few minutes. Empty and promptly fill with hot food. Use a stainless-steel or glass-lined vacuum bottle rather than a plastic-lined one for hotter and safer food.

For beverages: choose low-fat or skim milk and fruit juices instead of soda. Vegetable juices supply important nutrients, but may be high in sodium, so balance these juices with low-sodium foods.

You'll save calories if you bring a naturally sweet fresh fruit such as apples, grapes and pears for snacking and dessert, instead of buying chips and candy bars from a vending machine.

A 1988 survey by MRCA Information Services says 44 percent of all Americans carry food and/or beverages from home. The most avid brown-baggers, the survey says, are children from 6 to 12 years of age, and adults between the ages of 35 to 54. The apple is the most popular brown-bag item, followed by cookies, carbonated soft drinks and potato chips. Chinet, makers of microwave-safe, disposable tableware that is 100 percent biodegradable, recently surveyed office caterers for their tips on brown-bag and eat-in working lunches. Here are some of their ideas:

— Invest in a quality lunch box or insulated bag and a thermos.

— Bring your favorite mug from home or buy one just for the office.

— Stash a few staples in your desk drawer, including salt and pepper shakers, paper napkins and plates. (Chinet's tableware, made of hardwood pulp and individually molded, is sturdy, unbendable, and virtually cut-proof and leakproof.)

— Prepare and pack your lunch the night before, so you won't be scrambling in the morning.

— Clean up leftovers in your refrigerator by packing them for lunch. Slice leftover grilled chicken and top it with avocado, tomato and shredded cheese.

Wrap in a flour tortilla or use your favorite bread.

CHICKEN SALAD SANDWICH

2 tbsps. mayonnaise-type salad dressing
¼ tsp. onion powder
¼ tsp. dried tarragon, crushed
Dash of garlic powder
1 cup chicken, without skin, cooked and chopped
½ cup celery, chopped
8 slices whole-wheat bread
4 lettuce leaves

Mix salad dressing and seasonings in a bowl. Stir in 1 cup cooked and chopped chicken, without skin, and ½ cup chopped celery. Mix well.

Spread about 1-3rd cup of the filling on 4 whole-wheat bread slices. Top each with a leaf of lettuce and 1 slice of whole-wheat bread. Makes 4 sandwiches.

Nutritional information per chicken sandwich: 230 cal., 6 g fat, 1 g saturated fatty acids, 33 mg chol., 387 mg sodium.

Variation: Use 1 cup chopped, cooked lean beef in place of chicken.

Office Appliances Can Add Variety To Eat-In Lunches

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Access to a refrigerator and a microwave can help add variety to your eat-in lunch at the office.

If you have access to a refrigerator, your lunch can include yogurt and fruit; cottage cheese and raw vegetables; tuna fish salad; brown rice salad with cubes of roast or stewed chicken; vegetables marinated in Italian or herb salad dressing; cold cooked pasta with pieces of raw or cooked vegetables.

With a microwave, you can bring leftovers from home and reheat them for lunch. Single servings of food left over from a meal, or planned leftovers, can be refrigerated and reheated. Some examples: macaroni and cheese; chop suey; pot roast and vegetables; spaghetti.

Freezing leftovers is a good way to avoid wasting larger amounts of foods. For easy reheating, store in single-serve containers that can go directly from the freezer into a microwave. For best quality, be sure to use frozen leftovers within 3 to 4 months.

No leftovers? Prepared foods include soups, hot sandwiches and frozen meals. Campbell's Souper-Combo is a line of eight, microwave-only soup and sandwich combinations including Vegetable Soup and Cheeseburger and Tomato Soup and Grilled Cheese Sandwich. Each selection can go from the freezer to the table in 7 minutes or less.

According to Liz Senior, Campbell's project director, 70 percent of all workers now have access to a microwave at their office.

"This is definitely the age of the microwave," she says. If your office has kitchen facilities, you can make your own lunch at work. For an easy minipizza, spread a bagel with spaghetti sauce, top with mozzarella cheese and then heat in the microwave. Bake a potato in the microwave, then top with shredded cheese, yogurt or leftover vegetables. Warm up a bowl of applesauce or a wedge of pie for dessert.

Farmer's Market Source For Produce

Q: Where can I get good produce? A.C., Greenville

A: Several new faculty have asked that question. Our local Farmer's Market is always my first reply. I asked Susan Childress, a dietetic student volunteer working with us, to visit out there and share her report. Here it is:

Kathy Kolasa

Ph.D., ECU Dept. Family Medicine

If you were planning on having fresh fruits and vegetables this summer, but were unsuccessful with a garden, (no thanks to the weather), or you don't have garden space, you can get the "fresh" produce you crave at Farmer's Market near Bells Fork. The market is located off N.C. 43 on Old County Home Road, approximately one mile on the right.

The market is operated by Pitt County and managed by Dr. Provert Lassiter. Dr. Lassiter encourages all local farmers to come and sell their produce at the market. Tables are provided for each vendor to display his/her wares. The vendors have not only fresh produce, but also hand-crafted and homemade items.

On most Friday afternoons and Saturday mornings you can also purchase fresh shrimp. The shrimp is purchased from fish houses in Carteret County to be sold the same or next day at the market.

You can purchase a pineapple upside down cake, crocheted items, Kentucky Wonder pole beans, Silver Queen corn, onions, peas, butter beans, lettuce, cabbage, okra, eggplant, cherry tomatoes, cucumbers, peaches, cantaloupes, watermelons, apples, berries, and all types of peppers. If you like jalapeno peppers (and you like them hot!), you can also buy them at the Farmer's Market. You can also purchase tomatoes (which are very refreshing and rich in vitamins A and C); summer collards (which are high in vitamins A, C and also calcium!), and acorn, banana, pattypan and yellow squash (which are all rich in vitamin A). Remember, good nutrition includes eating six servings of fruits and vegetables daily.

An unusual squash, the kuta squash, is also sold at the market. The kuta squash can be eaten either raw or cooked. If you are unfamiliar with this squash, the vendor will be happy to provide some recipes!

The loofah is another member of the squash family that cannot be eaten when mature. This "vegetable sponge" is also known as the "Dishcloth Gourd." It can be used to scour your pots and pans or wash your car. Years ago, many people used the sponge while bathing to stimulate and clean the pores of their skin.

Most of the fruits and vegetables are grown here in Pitt County. The produce is generally picked the day before it is to be sold at the market. Some of the vegetables are even organically grown. This fall, weather permitting, the market will have tomatoes, peas, apples, squash, cucumbers, onions, Irish and sweet potatoes, grapes, collards and cabbage. The market is open April 30 through approximately Dec. 17; from 8 a.m. to 1 p.m. Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays; and from 1 p.m. to 6 p.m. on Fridays. Go early and pick from the best!

Dear Readers: My younger sister Mary Ellen visited last week. She had a food storage trick I thought I'd pass along. She's found twist ties on food packages a problem, especially in packages she'd like her little ones to get into. So, she buys old-fashioned spring clothes pins to keep bread or cookie or pretzel packages closed. The idea is good for older folks, too.

Coconuts Aren't Hard To Crack

By Joan Drake
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

Opening the inner nut of a coconut is easy with the right tools and a few pointers. To begin with, when choosing a fiber-covered nut in the market, look for one heavy for its size. Shake it to be certain there is liquid sloshing inside and check that the three dots or "eyes" at the top aren't wet or moldy.

To open the coconut, pierce the three dots with a strong ice pick, skewer, awl or screwdriver tapped in with a hammer (Step 1). Drain the coconut liquid through a coffee filter-lined strainer (Step 2) and set aside for use with other ingredients in alcoholic drinks or milk shakes. It is very perishable and must be refrigerated and used within 24 hours or else frozen.

Place the drained coconut on a jellyroll pan and bake at 325 degrees 15 minutes. Time carefully because overheating destroys the flavor of coconut.

Cool the coconut slightly, then wrap in a towel or heavy cloth to prevent shattering when you crack it open. Tap the nut briskly all over with the hammer, until it breaks into pieces (Step 3).

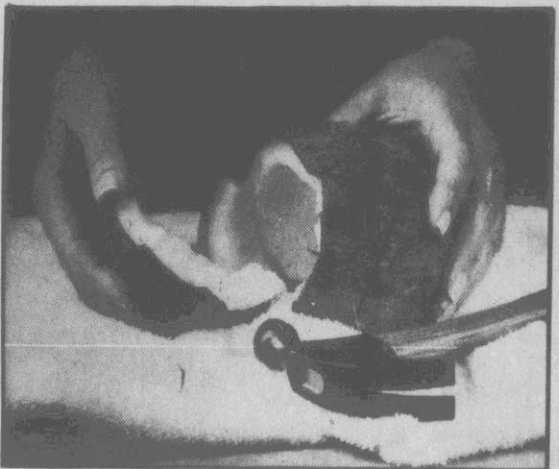

The white flesh may be pried from the shell with a screwdriver (Step 4). The brown peel on the back of the pieces may be pared away with a sharp knife (Step 5) or vegetable peeler, or left on to protect fingers if the coconut is going to be grated by hand. Peeled coconut may be cut into small chunks and chopped or grated in a food processor or chopped 1/2 cup at a time in a blender.

STEP 1: To use fresh coconut, pierce the three dots at the top of the coconut with strong ice pick, skewer, awl or screwdriver.

STEP 2: Drain the coconut liquid through a strainer, lined with a coffee filter.

STEP 3: After baking the coconut, cool slightly, then wrap in a towel and crack it open by tapping briskly all over with a hammer.

To make coconut milk, line a bowl with cheesecloth. Add 1 cup of grated coconut and 1 cup of boiling water, cover and steep 15 to 20 minutes. Gather the ends of the cheesecloth and twist, squeezing out all the liquid. Discard the coconut. The liquid that remains is coconut milk. Coconut cream is made in the same manner, but hot milk is substituted for the boiling water.

To toast flaked or grated coconut, spread a thin layer on a baking sheet and bake at 325 degrees about 10 minutes, stirring frequently. You may also toss the coconut in an iron skillet over medium heat for three to five minutes until it browns.

Fresh coconut is more flavorful and less sweet than packaged. To substitute it for canned, shredded or flaked types, soak covered with milk six hours in the refrigerator, then drain before using. The fresh pulp may be stored, tightly covered, in the refrigerator or covered with coconut milk and frozen.

Nelson Honor

ATLANTA (AP) — The Federation of Southern Cooperatives will honor Willie Nelson, founder and chairman of Farm Aid Inc., Sunday for the help the entertainer has given poor and minority family farmers throughout the Southeast.

The coalition of farming cooperatives has received more than $700,000 from Farm Aid since 1985. The money is for education, hotlines and emergency aid, such as food, medicine and heating to farmers in Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Missouri, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina and Texas.

Tomato Gets New Look

LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

The U.S. Department of Agriculture is advising consumers to alter home canning methods to accommodate the modern tomato's characteristics.

Of particular importance is that the fruit today is "fleshier," or contains more pulp than in the past. As a result, tomatoes require additional acidity and processing time in order to ensure a safe product.

The revised canning guidelines now call for two tablespoons of lemon juice per quart of home-canned tomatoes rather than only two teaspoons.

Processing time is also doubled, from 15 minutes to 30 minutes for the hot-water bath, or when the tomatoes are sealed in jars and then placed in boiling water.

A University of California, Davis researcher, familiar with the recent recommendations, supported the changes.

"If these guidelines are followed (then) canned tomatoes will be very safe," said Kathryn Boor, UC Davis food scientist. "There's no reason to be gun-shy about home-canned tomatoes."

The precautions are necessary because tomatoes, as is true with any raw agricultural product, may contain bacteria. The pathogens, if given the proper conditions to thrive, could multiply and contaminate the food.

says it will revise its regulations and that the process should be finished early in 1990.

The agency's intent is to convince Congress it need not set the FDA's standards, or at least to have revised regulations ready if Capitol Hill orders the agency to change its act.

Young told Congress: "It is unclear whether legislation is necessary to achieve most or all of our shared goals. I believe many, if not all, of the changes contemplated can be made administratively."

The food industry's primary hope appears to be getting federal legislation that eliminates state regulation.

Says Jeff Nedelman, a vice president of the Grocery Manufacturers of America: "We would support a comprehensive reform of the dietary and health information that is provided to consumers if we can come out of this process with national standards."

Seeking to avoid potentially 50 different state standards, the National Food Processors Association says regulations "appropriate for Portland, Maine, are equally applicable to Portland, Ore."

But some consumer groups say states should still have the prerogative to toughen federal standards and note that California and New York, for instance, have often taken the lead in nutrition issues.

Whatever the new regulations are, these activists say they need to reflect a range of specific consumer interests not now addressed in the FDA requirements.

One group in the forefront of the movement to toughen labeling requirements, the Center for Science in the Public Interest, says the regulations should:

—Eliminate or supplement the description of quantities as measured in "grams," a metric term, unless accompanied by defined terms such as high, low or medium.

—Eliminate thiamin, riboflavin and niacin from labels, since deficiencies in those elements are no longer a significant health threat.

—List amounts of fat, cholesterol, "cholesterol-raising" or saturated fats, sodium, starch, dietary fiber and sugar.

—Consider a diagram giving percentages of protein, sugar, complex carbohydrates, total fat and saturated fat.

—List the percentage of a product's major ingredients, such as sugar and flour.

The Recipes

CHOCOLATE PAN CAKE
1 cup (2 sticks) unsalted butter, cut in rough chunks
4 tablespoons unsifted unsweetened cocoa powder
1 cup water
2 cups granulated sugar
2 cups unsifted cake flour
1 teaspoon salt
1/2 cup buttermilk, at room temperature, blended with 1 teaspoon baking soda
2 extra large eggs, at room temperature
1 1/2 teaspoons pure vanilla extract

Chocolate Fudge Frosting
1/2 cup (1 stick) unsalted butter, cut in chunks
2 ounces (2 squares) unsweetened chocolate, chopped
5 tablespoons milk, at room temperature
1 tablespoon light cream, at room temperature
1 box (1 pound) confectioners sugar, sifted
1 teaspoon pure vanilla extract
Pinch of salt
1 cup chopped pecans

Lightly butter and flour a 9- by 13- by 2-inch cake pan; set aside. Preheat the oven to 400 degrees.

For the cake, place the butter, cocoa and water in a large saucepan, set over moderately high heat and bring to a boil. Remove from the heat. Sift together the sugar, flour and salt into the large bowl of an electric mixer. Whisk together the buttermilk, eggs and vanilla in a mixing bowl. Pour the hot butter-cocoa-water mixture over the sifted dry mixture and beat on moderate speed until thoroughly blended. Add the whisked egg mixture and continue beating on low speed until the batter is a uniform color, about 1 1/2 minutes. Pour and scrape the batter into the prepared pan.

Bake the cake on the lower third level rack of the preheated oven for 20 to 22 minutes, or until a wooden pick inserted into the center of the cake comes out clean and dry and the cake shrinks away slightly from the edges of the pan.

About 10 minutes before the cake is done, make the Chocolate Fudge Frosting. Place the butter, chocolate, milk and cream in a large saucepan, set over low heat and cook, stirring occasionally, until the chocolate has melted down completely. Remove from the heat and beat in the sugar by cupfuls with vanilla and salt. Blend in the pecans.

As soon as the cake is done, remove it from the oven to a wire cooling rack. Immediately spread the frosting evenly over the top with a flexible palette knife. Let the cake cool in the pan.

For serving, cut the cake in squares directly from the cake pan.

FRESH PEACH CAKE
2 small ripe peaches
1 tablespoon lemon juice
1 1/2 cups unsifted cake flour
1 1/2 teaspoons baking powder
1/4 teaspoon salt
1/2 teaspoon ground cinnamon
1/2 teaspoon freshly grated nutmeg
1/4 teaspoon ground ginger
1/2 cup (1 stick) unsalted butter, softened at room temperature
1/2 cup less 2 tablespoons vanilla-scented sugar (see above) or plain granulated sugar
2 tablespoons firmly packed light brown sugar
2 extra large egg yolks, at room temperature
1 teaspoon pure vanilla extract
1/4 cup milk, blended with 1/4 cup light cream, at room temperature, OR 1/2 cup Half and Half at room temperature
Confectioners sugar for dusting, optional

Lightly butter and flour an 8-inch round springform pan, set aside. Preheat the oven to 400 degrees. Peel the peaches (dip first in simmering water, then in cold water for easier peeling); slice 3/4-inch thick. Toss with lemon juice and set aside.

Sift together the flour, baking powder, salt, cinnamon, nutmeg and ginger onto a large sheet of waxed paper. Beat the butter in the large bowl of an electric mixer on moderately high speed for 2 minutes. Beat in the granulated sugar and brown sugar; beat for 2 minutes. Beat in the egg yolks and vanilla. With the mixer on low speed, alternately add the sifted dry ingredients in 2 additions and the milk-cream blend in 1 addition, beginning and ending with the dry mixture. Spread the batter evenly into the prepared pan. Arrange the peach slices in a pattern on top of the batter.

Bake the cake on the lower third level rack of the preheated oven for about 30 minutes, or until a wooden pick inserted into the center of the cake comes out without any particles of cake batter clinging to it. The cake will pull slightly away from the sides of the pan when done.

Let cool in the pan on a wire rack for 10 minutes, then remove the hinged ring of the pan. Let cool completely (If you are transporting this cake to a picnic, leave the outer band on for traveling). Dust the top of the cake with a little confectioners sugar, if you like.

picnic or someone else's house, will encounter every pothole in the road, torrential downpours or 100 percent humidity. The fancier the occasion or cake the more likely disaster is to occur.

But there are ways to increase your chances of success. The secret is to choose the right cake because some cakes make better traveling companions than others, says Lisa Yockelson. Yockelson is the author of "Country Cakes" ($10.00; 1989; Harper & Row Publishers), the recently released second volume in her trilogy of country cooking.

Yockelson says that the recipes in her book are all "honest ones," using ingredients most cooks have on hand. Her only fancy recommendation is an old-fashioned one: vanilla sugar.

"This is very simple to make, it's nothing more than putting a vanilla bean in a container of sugar," she says.

Buy a vanilla bean, slit it down the center and place in a large container. Cover vanilla bean with sugar and let sit. Keep a tightly fitting lid on the sugar.

For a picnic, Yockelson recommends her Blueberry Walnut Brown Sugar Buckle or perhaps a fresh peach or nectarine cake.

"These particular cakes enclose fruit and cake in one dessert and for that reason they are easy to slice and easy to transport and they don't need any other embellishment," she says.

"The realm of cakedom expands somewhat," Yockelson says, if the dessert is to be served in somewhat more civilized surroundings, say at a bring-a-dish supper.

In that case, Yockelson recommends her Chocolate Pan Cake with Chocolate Fudge Frosting.

This one-layer cake is a good traveler because it can be transported in the same pan in which it was baked in. Just cut the cake in squares and serve it from the pan.

Most "keeper cakes" that is cakes that improve on standing, also travel well, Yockelson says.

Keeper cakes are those cakes that have a fine grain yet firm texture.

BECAUSE YOUR EYECARE IS SO IMPORTANT TO US

WE'LL PAY FOR
THIS MONTH

It's National Eye Exam Month at Sears, and as a special reminder to take good care of your eyes we're going to see that you get your check-up. We'll pay for your exam. Just come in for an exam by one of the Independent Doctors of Optometry at Sears and we'll deduct the entire cost of your exam from any purchase of eyeglasses.*

*You may also redeem this coupon when buying contact lenses or with a prescription from any other doctor. (Just bring us your exam receipt dated in August.) In these cases, a maximum $40 allowance applies.

*Discount may not exceed 50% of your purchase price and may not be used in conjunction with any other discounts, insurance or vision care programs. Offer ends August 26, 1989. Void where prohibited. Cash value 1/20¢. Available at participating Sears retail stores. Eye exams not available at all locations.

For each exam at Sears this month $1 will be donated to the National Society to Prevent Blindness.

WE have a FREE gift for you.
