Baltic Protesters Plan Human Chain

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TALLINN, U.S.S.R. — Thousands of people rallied in Lithuania to mark the 50th anniversary of the pact that turned the Baltic nations into Soviet republics, and a million more prepared to link arms today in protest.

Planners say up to 1.5 million people were to join hands along a 370-mile route from the Gulf of Finland to Vilnius to mark the Aug. 23, 1939, anniversary of the non-aggression treaty between Josef Stalin and Adolf Hitler.

Eight days after the signing, Adolf Hitler attacked Poland and started World War II.

About 50,000 people gathered Tuesday in Vilnius, the Lithuanian capital, to mourn the Soviet takeover. Hundreds gathered again today with signs denouncing the Soviet Union as imperialist and paraded effigies of Hitler and Stalin.

Leaders of the Lithuanian People's Front activist group in Vilnius today approved their most explicit demand for independence. About 170 leaders of the group voted to call for "the creation of an independent democratic Lithuanian republic not under the power of the Soviet Union."

The vote followed criticism today in the Communist Party daily Pravda, which accused People's Front leaders of distorting history and seeking full secession from the Soviet Union.

Activists Tuesday in Riga, Latvia, demanded that Moscow and the world recognize the absorption of the Baltic lands by the Soviet Union was a crime carried out by Stalin and Hitler.

PARIS — An Air France plane with 123 people aboard was hijacked today after it took off from Paris, and it landed in Algiers, the airline said.

The official Algerian news agency said the hijackers demanded that an international conference on the war in Lebanon be convened. The news agency, which quoted unidentified sources, did not identify the hijackers.

An airline spokesman who demanded anonymity said the Airbus plane with 110 passengers and a crew of 13 landed in the Algerian capital at 3:20 p.m. (9:20 a.m. EDT).

BOGOTA, Colombia — Police arrested five men suspected in the assassination of Luis Carlos Galan, the presidential hopeful whose slaying sparked a government crackdown on Colombia's notorious drug traffickers.

Also Tuesday, police said they had started proceedings to extradite the reputed finance chief of the Medellin drug cartel to the United States, where he faces conspiracy and drug trafficking charges.

The arrests in Galan's slaying created additional security headaches for a nation under a years-old campaign of terror by drug traffickers and their hired hitmen.

The men were not known members of the drug trafficking community, which authorities say routinely hires killers and helps finance the training of shadowy death squads in association with right-wing extremists.

Several men are believed to have participated in the killing of Galan Friday at a campaign rally in Soacha, a town outside Bogota.

Witnesses and police say one man pumped five bullets into Galan's abdomen and legs as he stood on a small stage, while at least four other men raked the air with automatic weapons fire to spark panic and allow the triggerman's escape.

Traveling City Workers Can Eat With The Best Of Them

By J. Ward Best
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

As a result of action by the City Council, Greenville city employees on business trips can sit and eat with the best of their municipal counterparts.

The City Council increased the per diem meal allowance for city employees traveling on business from $17 per day to $26. The approval Monday netted the employees a 53 percent increase and seated them at the head of the table above many other city employees in the state in terms of meal allowances.

Only one other city surveyed today reported a higher meal allowance for employees.

During Monday's council meeting, City Manager Greg Knowles presented a recommendation to increase meal allowances to the state's figure of $26 for meals during out-of-state travel. He also included an additional $4 in the allowance for miscellaneous expenses, which would have put Greenville in line with the highest figure in the state.

"As far as the set amount is concerned, we are at the upper end," said Assistant City Manager Ron Kimble. But he emphasized that many other cities are allowing employees to exceed the set amount with department approval.

Greenville employees are bound to the $26 allowance, no exceptions, Kimble said.

Cities similar in size to Greenville either have a lower standard for meal expenses or none at all, leaving the dollar amount to the employees' discretion and what their department heads consider reasonable.

Williamston allows $14 for meals on short business trips, according to personnel clerk Paula Goodwin. Reimbursement for meals on business trips outside of the area is based on a "reasonable amount with receipts," she said.

Williamston employees are allowed $3.50 for breakfast, $4.50 for lunch and $6 for dinner.

"It's what's reasonable," Ms. Goodwin said. "Normally we like to keep it within that range — $3.50, $4.50 and $6."

Most Greenville council members agreed that city employees need more money than Williamston allows, and more than the $17 allowed by Greenville. But Council members Lorraine Shinn and Nancy Jenkins voted against the increase to $26, saying the cost is just too high.

Washington Joins Pilot Drug Fight

By Lane Dunn
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Officials from Washington, N.C., met Tuesday with Lt. Gov. Jim Gardner to discuss plans to make Washington part of a pilot program that will fight drugs by stepping up police patrols in public housing districts.

Gardner said the programs would be established in Washington, Asheville, Greensboro and Raleigh at a cost of $200,000 to $300,000 a year.

The lieutenant governor, discussing the program in a conference call with media representatives, said that in order to clean up the drug problem in the state, "We have to get control of the public housing communities."

This will require extra law enforcement personnel and more funding, according to Gardner, who said that he hoped the costs could be divided evenly among state, federal and local governments and the private sector.

Gardner said he is meeting with Jack Kemp, secretary of the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development, Sept. 12 to discuss federal funding.

Gardner said he hoped to announce firm plans for funding by mid-September, and the pilot programs would begin shortly after that.

"The federal government is getting ready to take some aggressive moves on the war on drugs," Gardner said. But the federal government has made it clear that states will have to take some local initiatives, he said.

The programs could put North Carolina "on the leading edge of the new federal fight against drugs," he said.

Gardner said that law enforcement alone won't stop the drug crisis. In addition to more enforcement the plan will try to instill community pride among the citizens of public housing. Athletic programs will be a big part of that, said Gardner.

"For the first time it gets back to the neighborhood concept," Gardner said. He said that ideally the people

Officers Hold Regional Strategy Talks On Drugs

By Lane Dunn
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Law enforcement officers from 23 counties, the State Bureau of Investigation, FBI and the Drug Enforcement Administration met Tuesday in Greenville to discuss plans for combating crack and cocaine.

The conference, called "Focus: Crack, Cocaine," was the first of eight being set up by the state attorney general's office across North Carolina.

Bill Godley, the supervisor of the Northeastern District of the SBI, said the conference amounted to a "strategy meeting."

Pitt County Sheriff Ralph Tyson would not say exactly what was discussed at the session but he called the discussions "very productive."

Tyson said he feels that in order to control the drug problem, more personnel will be needed. He said that crack and cocaine are a concern for every law enforcement agency and it will take them all to fight it.

"It's growing faster than we can catch it," Tyson said.

Greenville Police Chief Jerry Tesmond said, "They keep mentioning the drug war. Any war that I've been involved with had two armies of equal size and equal resources. That's not the case with law enforcement."

Wayne Gay, sheriff of Wilson County and president of the North Carolina Sheriff's Association, said Tuesday that crack and cocaine is the nation's No. 1 drug problem and he called crack the "choice of the streets."

Gay said that a way to fight the problem is through communication between different agencies involved with stopping it.

"There are no magic solutions," he said.

The first PTA meeting and membership drive will be held Sept. 25 at 7 p.m. in the school gym. An open house will follow.

Auditions Scheduled For Choral Society

Auditions for the Greenville Choral Society will be held from 2 p.m. to 5 p.m. Sunday in the choir room at St. James United Methodist Church, 2000 E. Sixth St.

The Choral Society is a community-based organization that has been active in presenting major choral/orchestral works in Greenville for 15 years. The group is directed by Dr. Rhonda Fleming, a member of the East Carolina University School of Music faculty. With about 75 members, the Choral Society draws its membership from throughout eastern North Carolina.

The group presents two concerts yearly. The annual Christmas Concert will feature the festive Bach "Magnificat," and the society will present Norman Lockwood's "Carol Fantasy" this year.

This year marks the beginning of an expansion of the Choral Society's efforts through the establishment of a regional chamber orchestra for professional musicians, the New Carolina Sinfonia.

The Sinfonia, directed by Hernan Murno, will accompany the Choral Society on the Bach and the Lockwood, as well as on the group's spring concert. In addition, the Sinfonia is to present two orchestral concerts on its own, in November and February.

It is not necessary for those who audition to prepare a solo, but experience in reading music is desirable. The society rehearses Tuesdays from 7:30 p.m. to 9:30 p.m. at Memorial Baptist Church. Yearly dues are $15. Members are also responsible for paying for music.

For more information, call Rhonda Fleming at 756-3618.

Poster Child To Visit

Selene Faer-Dalton Kumins, poster child for the North Carolina Muscular Dystrophy Association, will visit Greenville on Thursday.

Miss Kumins will appear on the WNCT television show Carolina Today at 7:40 a.m. and will make a presentation to the National Association of Letter Carriers at the Main Greenville Post Office at 8:30 a.m.

Accompanied by her mother Noel Kumins, she will visit City Hall at 9 a.m. and begin a tour of Pitt County Memorial Hospital at 10 a.m. During her hospital visit, she will speak to patients in the Children's Hospital and will be interviewed by WNCT radio.

Miss Kumins, a Durham resident, has had Werdnig-Hoffman spinal muscular atrophy since birth and has been in a wheelchair since 1987. She is an honor student in the Durham public schools and is active in the schools' music programs.

Former Greenville resident Mamie Jo Harrell, program director of the 40-county eastern region of the N.C. Muscular Dystrophy Association, is coordinating the visit of Miss Kumins and her mother.

Per Diem Raised

state travel figure comes in under Greenville's new plan, but the state capital allows up to $30 for meals on out-of-state travel, according to Suzon Rhoads with the city's personnel department.

The state allows its employees $21 per day for meals for in-state travel. North Carolina serves up $5 more for employees traveling out of state.

Most other cities come in under the $26 amount.

Goldsboro sets a $20.50 per diem for meals, but allows more for higher expenses with receipts verifying the costs.

Goldsboro City Manager Richard Slozak said the city tries to keep employee meal expenses around the $20.50 standard. "They basically have to stay around that," Slozak said.

According to Morehead City Manager David Walker, the coastal city reimburses its employees for $25 in meal expenses. But he said, "That's the maximum we allow." Any other expenses come out of the employees' pockets.

Kinston holds its employees to "customary and reasonable" meal expenses, according to Kai Nelson, the city's finance director.

He said the city has no set figure for its employees, but those sent for police and fire training out of state are held to a $20 per diem.

Rocky Mount also has no set per diem for its employees traveling on city business. But, according to City Manager Bill Batchelor, employees must provide receipts for expenses and have the reimbursements approved by their department heads.

The same holds true for Salisbury. Finance Director John Sofley said the city pays for employee meals "as long as it's reasonable for where you're at."

Knowles told the City Council that city employees need a fair amount to travel, and having one amount payable without providing receipts would simplify the city's finances, he said.

According to Bernita Demery, the city finance director, last year's travel expenses totalled $105,650.25, which included travel for employees, council members and the mayor. The figure also included costs for mileage, hotels and training.

No separate figures were available for meal expenses, Ms. Demery said. And she said she had no estimate on the increased costs to the city with the additional $9 for feeding city employees on the move.

Knowles was not available this morning for a comment on how much the increase might cost the city.

'Truth In Preference To Fiction'

The Only Path

Poulton's Resignation First Step

A university's integrity is only as solid as the integrity of its leaders. When the judgment of those who guide it is in question, so is the institution's future.

When he resigned as chancellor of North Carolina State University in response to an athletic department scandal, Bruce Poulton chose the only path leading to a sound future for the institution.

During his tenure at N.C. State, a pattern of placing athletics before academics has emerged — allegations of grade changing for athletes, tutors who were asked to perform assignments for athletes and waiving academic standards for talented basketball players. Poulton's role in this intolerable policy is unclear, but as chief administrator for the university, he bears the primary responsibility for any misjudgments.

The scandal has marred the reputation of a fine university. N.C. State is a distinguished school, as well known for its research prowess as it is for winning basketball games. The allegations cast a long shadow on this academic might — a shadow which must be removed. Poulton's resignation is critical to restoring the reputation for excellence that North Carolina's largest university has earned.

But N.C. State cannot overcome its troubles unless athletic director and basketball coach Jim Valvano also resigns. His judgment and leadership at N.C. State is clearly in question. As long as he remains, doubts about the integrity of both athletics and academics will also linger. If Valvano does not quit, the University of North Carolina Board of Governors should remove him from his two posts when it meets Friday to release a report about wrongdoings at N.C. State.

Poulton's resignation creates a leadership void at N.C. State that must be filled thoughtfully. This is an opportunity for a strong university to become stronger by setting only the highest standards for leadership. A chancellor of a superior university is duty-bound to place academics before athletics — with no exceptions. The N.C. State Board of Trustees must accept its share of this responsibility by adopting lofty expectations for this new leader and not compromising.

The UNC Board of Governors also bears the burden of quality. After all, the misdeeds at N.C. State reflect on each of the 16 campuses in North Carolina's university system. At its meeting Friday that board is expected to make specific recommendations concerning N.C. State, as well as advocate some changes in student athletic programs for the whole university system. An unquestioned policy of "education first" should be explicitly set.

N.C. State's troubles are by no means insurmountable but they cannot be resolved by simply by cleaning house. Restoring the university's reputation will take time and an unwavering dedication to educating each student equally — whether that student runs patterns on the basketball court or designs patterns on a computer.

The Hope

Pitt Plant Plays Part In Fight

The anti-viral drug AZT, which has been the only one used specifically for AIDS, now offers hope of helping thousands more who have contracted the disease.

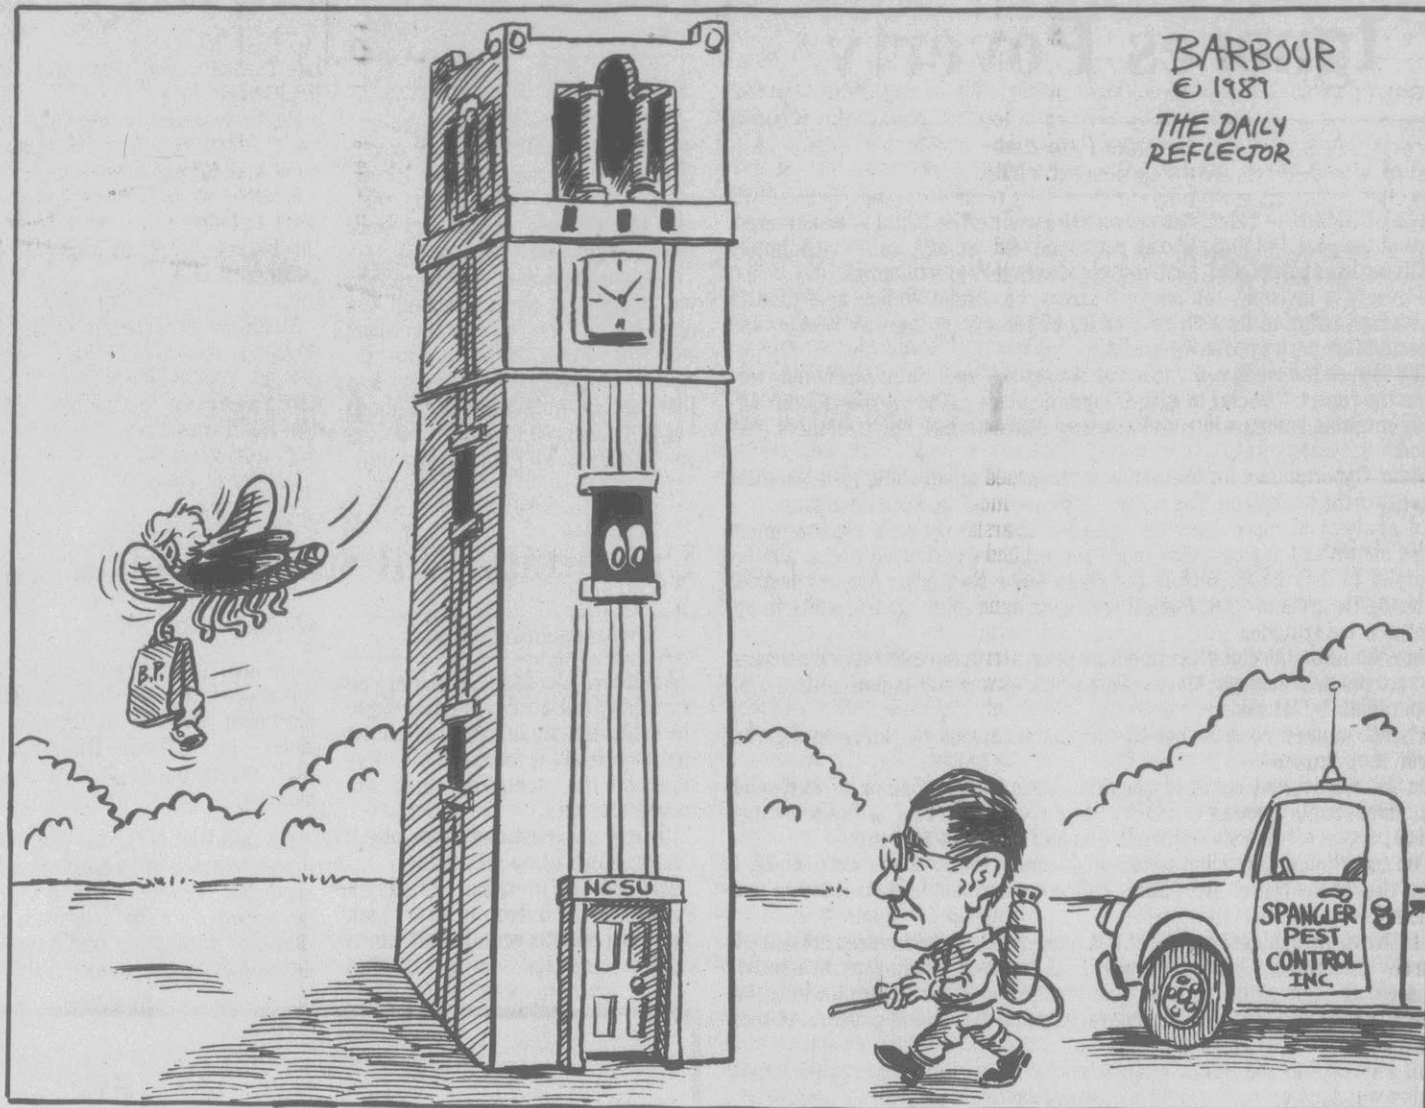

The drug, manufactured by Burroughs-Wellcome at its Greenville facilities, has been shown to halt progression of the disease in patients who are mildly infected.

The results of trials were announced by United States Health and Human Services Secretary Louis Sullivan. While AZT won't cure AIDS, Sullivan and other health officials say trials indicate that AIDS is treatable.

The results of the trials could open a broad new market for AZT, subject to Federal Drug Administration approval. Most important it can mean a delay or halt in the deadly progression of AIDS ... and in a society which is frustrated by the relatively sudden development of a strange new disease, that is important.

With so many new patients potentially to be helped by AZT, the question arises as to who will pay the bill. It becomes obvious that it will be far less expensive for government programs such as Medicare and Medicaid to pay for the drug than to wait and pay for more complicated treatment as the disease progresses.

Someday a cure or vaccine for AIDS will be found. Until that occurs, there is every hope now that a drug manufactured in Pitt County will treat the disease and delay its progress. That should provide satisfaction for all who participate in the development, production and distribution process.

Martha Chromosomes Is Right

Art Buchwald

The competition between newspapers and television is getting fierce. Each one is stealing a page from the other's book. For example, when beautiful women became de rigueur on television news shows it was only natural that newspapers would follow suit.

This is what happened at the Daily Beauregard the other day at a news meeting in the editor's office.

The managing editor said, "We're going to need a stakeout for the alleged spy Felix Bloch. It means standing outside his house all night long. Who should we send to cover the story?"

The news editor replied, "Maybe a 6-foot blond. That way she could not only cover the story but CNN might put her on the 5 o'clock news."

"I was thinking along the same lines. What about Mary Strawberry? She writes like dream, and she has deep blue eyes that you want to dive into. She's really the girl next door," said the managing editor.

"I was thinking more of Sara Williams. She not only has the looks but a sexy voice so the people inside the house will eventually come out and talk to her."

The foreign editor disagreed. "I think you're wrong. This job calls for a sophisticated, well-dressed brunette. I don't think we're being sexist when we say that our readers expect us to send out the best-looking reporter money can buy."

The features editor, a woman, said, "I think we might be putting a little too much emphasis on a reporter's looks. What if we send a man to do the stakeout?"

"So we send out a man and ABC sends out Diane Sawyer," said the news editor. "How is that going to look to the circulation department? I'm not saying we assign a woman to this story because she's a woman. I say we do it because she's a good-looking woman. In this dog-eat-dog world we're not only fighting Diane Sawyer, but Maria Shriver and Connie Chung and Leslie Stahl and heaven knows how many others. It's TV's anchor women against our reporters, and I say we go with the best we've got. Therefore I propose we use Debbie Baumgarten, who was the Rose Bowl queen before she covered city hall."

"If we assign stories to women according to their looks, there are going to be a few females on this paper who will never get out of the bullpen," the features editor said.

"We didn't start the beauty contest," said another woman editor. "But we can't ignore it either. After all, people are now getting used to receiving their news from someone who belongs on the cover of Vogue magazine. NBC has an open checkbook for gorgeous anchor women. CBS has sent the word out that if you graduated from a good communications school and you're a size 6 they want to talk to you. Can we as a newspaper stick by the antiquated ways of the past and use women only because of their writing?"

The news editor agreed. "Not if we're going to stay in the news business. This readership survey just came in and it shows that those interviewed want our reporters to look more like Kathleen Sullivan."

The managing editor concluded, "There you have it. Let's get someone to stake out Bloch who looks at least like Cher. Who shall it be?"

The news editor answered, "Martha Chromosomes — but I'm not sure she'll go. Every time we give her a stakeout, she says we are treating her like a sex object."

A Case Of Moral Bankruptcy

SAGAPONACK, N.Y. —

In the Hamptons, where money talks as loudly as it does anywhere, a certain stillness has descended. In the sister town of Quogue, someone spent at least $1 million on a party. That someone was Gayfryd Steinberg, wife of Saul Steinberg, the head of Reliance Group Holding Inc.

For his 50th birthday, Gayfryd showed all the Hamptons that, in the nether reaches of wretched excess, a record still waited to be broken. This was Gayfryd's personal best. Alas for poor Gayfryd, her record may not have lasted the month.

From Tangiers (no Hampton) came reports that Malcolm Forbes, publisher of Forbes magazine, had spent upwards of $2 million on a party. He, too, it turns out was having a birthday — his 70th — and for it he flew a reported 600 guests all the way to North Africa. To paraphrase an old Bing Crosby song, like Webster's Dictionary, the rich were Morocco bound.

What's going on here? What accounts for the fact that, within a single month, $3 million or more may have been spent on two parties? And not secretly, mind you, but in full view of the press. Forbes has permitted at least one reporter (from the Washington Post) to join his guests and Steinberg not only invited Liz Smith, the gossip columnist for the New York Daily News, but agreed to let her write about it. These parties were semi-public events and, from what everyone says, you and I missed a hell of a good time.

Let us not question the professional ethics of journalists who think they can be both guest and reporter. Let us not wonder if the gift they bring is the rave review they later give the event. (Smith on the Steinberg party: "Yes, having money helps, but this party demanded also a rare creativity, good intuition and considerable talent.")

And let us not have our criticism gagged by the rejoinder that these people also give huge sums to charity. So what? We all give to charities. Let us ask, instead, how such seemingly sophisticated people could have had such a lapse in taste.

Neither the Steinbergs nor Forbes, after all, are yokels or rubes, oil-patch millionaires who had a hunch, sunk a well and became instantly rich. These are college graduates who, we may suppose, have a passing acquaintance with both the rules and the literature about wealth. Surely, F. Scott Fitzgerald was on their college reading lists and the term "Gilded Age" would bring a nod from them. Yet they and others of their set have turned "Breakfast at Tiffany's" into a gluttonous event.

Richard Cohen

What produces such behavior? In part, the answer is politics. During the Reagan years, we were told that almost no social problem was amenable to money: To spend is to "throw money at the problem" — as if there is no such thing as spending wisely or, even, experimentally. To complain about inequality is to practice the divisive "politics of envy." The cause of crime is criminals. The cause of teen-age pregnancy is lack of values, the cause of dope addiction is the failure to "just say no" and the cause of poverty is poor people.

By and large, the country has gleefully accepted this dopey prescription for what ails us — and George Bush, against his better judgment, has endorsed it. Reagan lowered taxes (Why not? The money would just be wasted) and Bush will not raise them. But the Reagans set the style. They lived lavishly in the White House. It was Nancy Reagan who could not say "no" to designer dresses and who partied with some of the same people who sang happy birthday to Saul Steinberg and Malcolm Forbes. The Reagans celebrated wealth.

Reagan's point, the essence of what was grandiloquently called an ideology, was succinctly stated by Carolyne Roehm, a guest at the Steinberg party: "All of us have worked very hard for our money and we can spend it however we want." Reagan said substantially the same thing: His money was his. He had felt that way ever since, as a movie actor, he was in the 90 percent marginal tax bracket. In his political dotage, Reagan went soft on Russia, but never on taxes.

It probably helps that both Steinberg and Forbes live in New York. The city's problems are so overwhelming, seemingly so intractable, that a person could be forgiven for agreeing with Reagan that money is not the answer. Since it is their own anyway, and since it can do little social good, it might as well be used for a good time. Come to Quogue. Come to Morocco.

There is, however, one final thought. The party spending of the Steinbergs et al is a pie in the face to us all. It produces momentary blindness and then a shock of self-recognition — a sense that there is a bit of the Steinbergs in many of us. They are to the waning Reagan era what Plato's Retreat was to sexual liberation, an extreme that defines an era and also signals its passing.

Steinberg seemed to sense that. In his toast to his wife, he said, "Honey, if this moment were a stock, I'd short it." Short it, nothing. Just declare moral bankruptcy and be done with it.

Get Rid Of The Fleas, But Don't Kill The Dog

Paul
O'Connor

RALEIGH — Several summers ago, my dog carried a few fleas inside. Within days, the house was infested with their offspring and neither flea collars nor sprays got rid of them.

The solution, I thought, was to "bomb" the closed-up house with insecticide. But, when I re-opened the house, I always found the fleas still there, waiting to jump on my ankles.

I felt similar frustration this month when, upon returning from vacation, I found the General Assembly still in town, 45 days after scheduled adjournment.

The record-breaking length of this year's session - 215 calendar days - spurred efforts to constitutionally limit the length of legislative sessions. The proposal, which was voted down, would have limited sessions to 90 days in odd-numbered years, and 30 days in even-numbered years.

But a constitutional limit would only create new problems. The limit would quickly become another tool for keeping issues from getting a fair hearing and vote. Those who sought to squash legislation would only need to delay it. "We ran out of time" would become the legislature's most convenient excuse for failing to bring any major bill to a vote.

For years, the most powerful members of the Virginia legislature used that state's time limit to stall reform legislation. North Carolina could expect to see the same happen here with the limit helping the major business lobbies, and other special interest groups like the lawyers and NCAE.

Putting a time limit on session length would also run counter to the increased openness which the assembly realized this year. In the House, Rep. David Diamond, D-Surry, appropriations chairman, did a fine job of opening up the process. But in doing so, he slowed everything down. A time limit would discourage this openness because open discussion is time-consuming.

If a time limit doesn't work, and the fleas still infest the House and Senate, then what will work?

The legislature's use of periodic deadlines throughout a session could be expanded. Earlier deadlines on the introduction of bills, and the passage of certain bills, would force legislators to get to work immediately.

Internal deadlines might also be employed. That is, committees could be required to return bills to the floor within a set time.

During a discussion with several legislators, the question of stopping legislators pay after June 30 arose but that would only hurt the less affluent legislators. Wealthy legislators would get an upper hand.

Stopping parties might help. Legislators are treated very well in Raleigh, and no doubt, some hate to go home. House and Senate rules could be re-written to forbid lobbyist-paid receptions after June 1.

Future assemblies must get their work done in less time. But imposing a constitutional limit is like killing your dog to get rid of his fleas.

Soviet Leadership Faces Crisis

Reddaway

WASHINGTON — Soviet leadership is today facing a massive and probably insoluble crisis of authority. Its political weakness, revealed last month by its instant cave-in to striking miners, is threatening to turn into impotence. The political system has started on what seems an irreversible process of breakdown.

Party officials are quite aware of the problem. There are signs of reaction by conservative forces in the Soviet media, where more and more discussions about "restoring order" are appearing. But despite their familiar bluster, these conservatives cannot alter the circumstances that are challenging the party's authority.

Crisis such as these occur when citizens sense that a regime's authority is much less than they previously thought, and when the number and depth of the rulers' problems preclude recouping their lost authority. This is roughly the scenario which led to the fall of Czarist Russia, and which is now underway in Poland and Hungary as well.

The Soviet regime's crisis of authority has been long in the making. In 1917 the Bolsheviks promised freedom, prosperity, and social harmony, and after 72 years have failed to deliver any of them. The crisis has been exacerbated by Mikhail Gorbachev's efforts to address these failures, especially his attempt to transfer power from an unredeemable Communist Party to a revamped hierarchy of popularly elected soviets, or councils, headed by the Supreme Soviet. In the last five months, while the party has been demoralized by the first stages of this transfer, the councils have not yet been able to take over much of the Party's role — and are poorly equipped to do so. The result, as the miners' strike and its resolution revealed, is a vacuum of power and authority throughout the Soviet system.

There is much evidence of the steep decline in the party's authority. Best known in the West is the failure of numerous established party figures to get themselves elected to the new Congress of People's Deputies last March, even though most of them had contrived to run unopposed and needed only 50 percent of the vote. The party has since experienced a cascade of dispiriting events.

When the Central Committee met for a post-mortem the next month, the mood was angry, confused and defeatist. When one member said that in his region not a single party official was prepared to stand in the forthcoming elections to local councils because defeat seemed certain, no one rose to paint a happier picture of any other area. The elections were duly postponed.

The Congress of People's Deputies met in May and June for two weeks of tense, hard-hitting, continuously televised debate. Deputy after deputy — most of them communists — had harsh words for the party's record and its policies. Prime Minister Nikolai Ryzhkov later rebuked his colleagues in the party politbureau for having kept silent in the face of this barrage, and charged them implicitly with cowardice.

On July 18, some 200 leaders of the party apparatus throughout the country met to discuss what the party's new role should be. No one dissented from the view that its authority had plummeted.

Moreover, there was no agreement on how best to try to rebuild some authority. Some argued that the party should cooperate with the plethora of newly formed unofficial groups. Others saw these groups primarily as enemies, and advocated cracking down on them. Some thought the party should recruit energetic young people. Conservative colleagues were more concerned to organize a purge of all communists who had betrayed the party by criticizing it. Most were for a sharp clamp-down on glasnost, but a few raised the wrath of the majority by insisting that this would further alienate people from the party.

The pervasive atmosphere at this key meeting was one of disorientation and pessimism. The few speakers who sounded confident that the party's authority could be restored stood out sharply from the many who expressed uncertainty or helplessness. Gorbachev and others insisted that members should stop "panicking."

There was also something new at the meeting: an ominous undercurrent of emotion stemming from increasingly strained relations between Gorbachev and the party apparatus. The meeting had a palpable air of confrontation. Most of the 26 speakers made comments which implicitly criticized Gorbachev, and remarkably, not a single one spoke warmly of him, not even through the traditional device of prefacing a point with "as Mikhail Sergeyevich wisely stressed in his opening speech..." or some similar formulation.

Their main complaints against him were that his impatient, impetuous style of rule was causing growing chaos in the party, the administration in general, the economy, society, inter-ethnic relations, and local and national politics, and that although he sometimes curtsied in their direction he was still not listening to their complaints and was obstinately refusing to change course.

That course, they feared, was to transfer so much power from the party apparatus to the councils that the party would be left as little more than a debating club. This was not only threatening to them as loyal and, until recently, powerful party stalwarts, but was also, some of them believed, politically unworkable. As Yegor Ligachev, Gorbachev's conservative rival in the politburo, pointed out, the party is the one organization which can hold the otherwise centrifugal federal system of the U.S.S.R. together.

Those present seem to have suspected Gorbachev of shifting his base of authority opportunistically from the sinking party to the rising star of the Supreme Soviet — both of which he heads. The peremptory, uncompromising tone of Gorbachev's wind-up speech must have reinforced this impression. It must also have made the party apparatchiks feel that he was tempted to stop trying to win them over.

To the extent that ultimate authority lies anywhere in today's Soviet Union, it still seems to reside in the party politburo. But, as the July 18 meeting revealed, that deeply divided body has difficulty wielding whatever authority it retains.

The ultimate question for Soviet leadership, however, is whether Gorbachev's plan of transferring authority from the party to the councils will eventually work. In fact, there are several serious problems with it.

First, to the extent that the councils succeed in assuming authority, they also assume responsibility for the country's horribly intractable problems. Will they do any better than the party in pushing through economic reforms, controlling the behemoth ministries, handling ruinous strikes, solving complex inter-ethnic conflicts, and restraining the Baltic republics' drive towards independence?

It does not seem likely. The Supreme Soviet is even more divided politically than the party, and is bound to pull in different directions on most issues. Also, it is a legislative body with a very limited capacity for direct action. It thus appears likely to lose rather soon most of the authority it has built up in the last two months.

A second problem is that because elections to the local and republican councils will probably not take place until next year, the power vacuum at these levels is even worse than it is in Moscow. The existing councils enjoy no popular support.

Jones Says Valvano's Support Shaky On Board

By Al Boyce
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — Jim Valvano will likely resign his position as athletic director at North Carolina State University, said outgoing Chancellor Bruce Poulton, and another official says there is sentiment to have Valvano removed as the school's head basketball coach.

Some members of the University of North Carolina Board of Governors favor removing Valvano from his coaching position even if he gives up his dual role as athletic director, said Robert "Roddy" Jones, chairman of the board.

Valvano's fate may be decided Friday, when C.D. Spangler Jr., president of the UNC system, presents the results of an investigation into the Wolfpack basketball program and makes recommendations.

Jones said board members were waiting to see whether Spangler removes Valvano from both jobs or only requires that he step down as athletics director.

"I think a lot of them will raise that question if it doesn't come up," Jones said. He declined to speculate about what Spangler would recommend or about whether his board would vote to remove Valvano from both jobs.

Valvano did not return telephone calls Tuesday and declined to talk with reporters at his office.

His attorney, Art Kaminsky, said in a telephone interview from New York that Valvano intended to remain as basketball coach. Kaminsky declined to comment when asked whether the coach would resign as athletics director.

Poulton said in a brief news conference Tuesday that Valvano had offered to resign as athletics director two months ago. But Poulton said he had told the coach to wait until the results of an investigation by the National Collegiate Athletic Association were released.

"I felt it would be most desirable for him to remain in that post until the NCAA investigation that we requested jointly ... has been able to run its course," Poulton said. "We're only a month or two away from that."

Poulton said Valvano should remain as coach.

"He is a very successful basketball coach and should be allowed to retain his job," Poulton said.

Poulton, who announced his resignation Monday, said the perception of the university has been tarnished by publicity surrounding the book "Personal Fouls."

The book, published this month, alleges drug use among basketball players and grade changing to keep players eligible.

"There simply is no scandal at North Carolina State University, but there has been a tapestry woven of events and that sort of thing ...," Poulton said. "I'm concerned that there a lot of people in North Carolina that are beginning to wonder, seriously wonder, if indeed there was a scandal in the university."

Poulton said he hoped to defuse some of the controversy when he resigned.

"I feel like part of the problem is a personal attack that has been directed at me and I frankly feel like by taking myself out of that situation I might lessen the attacks on the university," he said. "There are some very clear elements that suggest that at least the local newspaper would prefer that I not be here."

The News and Observer of Raleigh was first to publish reports obtained from an advance copy of the dust cover for "Personal Fouls" that made allegations that basketball players used drugs, had grades changed to remain eligible to play and sold complimentary tickets to games. Poulton has maintained there is no evidence to substantiate the book's allegations but he said they "have been pursued with a relentless vengeance."

"There comes a time when you have to treat the perception rather than dealing with the facts," he said.

Changes Coming At Crucial Time For N.C. State Future

RALEIGH (AP) — The resignation of North Carolina State University Chancellor Bruce Poulton and the allegations of wrongdoing in the school's athletic program come at a pivotal moment for the school, observers say.

The school is about to embark on a year-long celebration of a century of service to North Carolina, a search for a successor to retiring Provost Nash Winstead and an ambitious $200 million fund-raising drive.

But university officials viewed his departure Tuesday as a challenge they could meet, although they acknowledge it will force changes in some plans.

They said that the 100th birthday celebration will go ahead. But the search for a new provost and the kick-off of the fund-raising campaign will probably be delayed.

Tentatively scheduled for Oct. 3 — 100 years to the day after the school first opened its doors — the campaign has a title fitting of events this week: "NCSU Century II Campaign: Opening New Doors."

"There are things that Bruce set in motion that he has been working on for seven years. I don't know how you pause in the building of a major university," Claude McKinney, special assistant to the chancellor, told the Greensboro News & Record. "There are probably more questions than there are answers at this point."

McKinney has been Poulton's chief adviser on development of the Centennial Campus, a Poulton brainchild that will combine university with private research facilities on a 900-acre expansion to campus.

The Centennial Campus is a major component of the fund-raising campaign, which has a goal of raising $200 million in private contributions.

John Kanipe, vice chancellor for development, said the executive committee of the school's development board is scheduled to meet next week to discuss the status of the campaign.

"I think the campaign will be conducted, but I expect that Chancellor Poulton's resignation will have some effect on the time line," Kanipe said. "But I expect a formal announcement of that campaign will occur sometime this academic year."

Kanipe said he was not concerned that the recent controversy swirling around Poulton and the school's basketball program will affect the fund-raising campaign's success.

"If the university were a tree, the university tree is alive and well," Kanipe said. "A major branch of the tree has been subjected to a substantial set of allegations that have placed a cloud over it. But the message I want to give is the university tree is alive and well."

McKinney, however, said contributors, who are often beset with requests from several universities and charities, often look for reasons not to give money to an institution.

"If someone is looking for a reason and they want to use this hearsay-scandal-episode they can do that," McKinney said. "Before this became a cause celebre in the press, they were devoid of any excuses like that."

Raymond Long, a crop science professor and chairman of the school's Faculty Senate, said the school's reputation has been damaged, and that could hinder the search for successor to Winstead, who will retire as provost in June.

The provost is the chief academic officer at a university, responsible for directing and developing courses and curriculum.

Long said the search for a successor, which has already been organized by Poulton, should be delayed until the chancellor's successor has been chosen. It is unclear when that will happen, although most university officials expect an acting chancellor will be named before Poulton leaves Sept. 30.

"We're looking for two of our top academic officers at the same time," Long said. "That's a little difficult position to be in. I'd like to have the chancellor on board before we make a decision about the number two man. He should have a hand in who ever is selected for the number 2 slot."

Speculation continued to swirl about a possible successor for Poulton.

Former Gov. Jim Hunt was among the early candidates being mentioned, with sources in the UNC General Administration and the state Democratic Party telling the Chapel Hill Newspaper that Hunt, an N.C. State alumnus, was a prime candidate for the post. They pointed to the interest he expressed last week — after announcing he would not seek a U.S. Senate seat in 1990 — in a university administration job.

A secretary at Hunt's Raleigh law office said he was out of state on vacation.

In interviews Tuesday, faculty members and administrators said they thought N.C. State needed the stability that someone familiar with the school could bring in the wake of a long-simmering scandal over academic compromises associated with the basketball team.

Others mentioned are Franklin D. Hart, N.C. State's vice chancellor for research; Larry K. Monteith, dean of N.C. State's College of Engineering and the university's most senior dean; and Jasper D. Memory, a former N.C. State vice chancellor who now is the UNC system's vice president for research.

While the task of naming an acting chancellor will fall to Spangler, N.C. State's Board of Trustees is expected to direct the search. The panel will elect a new chairman Friday.

Charlotte Tops In Bank Thefts

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

GASTONIA, N.C. — Charlotte leads the state in the number of bank robberies this year with 23, and NCNB seems to be the most popular target in North Carolina, a study shows.

There were 88 bank robberies statewide, according to a statewide scoreboard compiled by the North Carolina Bankers Association. Winston-Salem was second with 12 robberies.

The bank most frequently hit was NCNB, the scoreboard said. Robbers struck NCNB branches 13 times this year. Wachovia and First Citizens Bank tied for second place with 10 robberies each.

Ellison Clary, NCNB spokesman in Charlotte, would not comment because of security concerns, he said.

Robberies occurred more often on Fridays than any other days, according to the scoreboard. About 20 percent occurred in the last business hour.

"The key word on all of this is awareness," said Bill Stroupe, editor of Tarheel Banker, the NCBA's monthly magazine, which began publishing the scoreboard in July.

The association has been keeping score, using FBI data for about 10 years, he said.

NCNB, Wachovia and First Citizens top the list "simply because these are the largest banks with the most branches," Stroupe said.

Club Asks Funds For Art Fight

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — The National Congressional Club has begun airing a radio advertising campaign to help Sen. Jesse Helms in his fight against federal funding of what he calls obscene art.

The advertisements target an art exhibit funded by the National Endowment of the Arts which included homoerotic and sadomasochistic photographs by Robert Mapplethorpe.

The ad campaign points out that the artist died of AIDS.

"Helms recently revealed that The National Endowment of the Arts spent $30,000 of taxpayers' money for a public display of obscene photographs," says the ad, which first aired Monday. "The photographs of graphic homosexual activity are by photographer Robert Mapplethorpe, who died last year of AIDS."

Mapplethorpe's pictures are on display at the Washington Project for the Arts. They include photos showing male genitals, a partially exposed young girl and a young boy standing naked on a chair.

The spot was paid for by the Helms for Senate Committee and produced by the club, a political fund-raising and consulting firm closely affiliated with Helms. It also says Helms was "particularly outraged by photos sexually exploiting young children."

"Helms points out that free speech does not require us to spend tax money to subsidize such photos," the ad continues. "And added, 'If somebody wants to write dirty words on the bathroom wall, the taxpayers shouldn't be required to provide the crayons.'"

Efforts to reach Helms, R-N.C.,

Tuesday were unsuccessful, and information on how often the ad was being aired on local stations was unavailable.

Carter Wrenn, club executive director, told the Greensboro News & Record the ad airs Helms' side of a controversy that began last month when the National Endowment for the Arts' underwrote the Mapplethorpe exhibit and another that included a picture of a crucifix submerged in urine.

Officials at the Endowment declined to comment on the advertisement.

Post Office Puts N.C. Stamp On Sale

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

FAYETTEVILLE — Postal officials and dignitaries unveiled a new stamp that honors North Carolina's ratification of the U.S. Constitution and collectors lined up for the honor of purchasing one. Today, people outside of this city get the chance to buy the stamp.

The stamp is 12th in a series honoring the 13 colonies that ratified the U.S. Constitution 200 years ago. Because Fayetteville was where North Carolina's constitutional convention ratified the document in 1789, the city was chosen to issue the stamp — making it the only place where the stamp was available.

It was designed by Lexington artist Bob Timberlake and features dogwood flowers.

"I was trying to use something to commemorate the simple beauty of our great state," he said Tuesday night. "Even though it is our state flower, the dogwood means more to me than that: It is a promise of rebirth, of a fresh spring."

"We try to pick a design that captures the state as much as possible," says Frank Thomas, manager of the stamp support branch at Postal Service headquarters in Washington. "We also try to come up with a design that will be attractive not only to the people of that state but to people elsewhere."

About 150 people waited for Fayetteville's main post office to open at 12:01 a.m. when sales of the stamp began.

Bob Taffe, acting manager for general mail facilities, said his staff was surprised by the large turnout.

Only one window opened at 12:01 a.m., but another clerk quickly threw up the metal shade covering his window when staffers saw all the people, Taffe said.

"This is the first one (first-day issue) we've had here, and there's a lot more people than we anticipated," said Bob Taffe, acting manager for the general mail facilities. "But we're really pleased with the turnout."

Fred Solomon, a resident of Long Island, N.Y., was at the post office, waiting to buy a few dozen of the stamps.

As an avid stamp collector, Solomon wanted the first-day cancellation, a special postmark affixed on stamps that are bought the day they are issued. That means being at strange post offices in strange towns in the middle of the night.

Solomon and his 17-year-old son, Aaron, have been at the first-day issue of every stamp in the Constitution series.

"We've been collecting the whole series of cancellations, and this is the next-to-last one," he said. "Rhode Island is next, and that's a little closer (to New York)."

Roger Odom of Fayetteville has never collected a stamp. All of his stamps go for other purposes, he said. "I've mailed a lot of bills," he said.

But Odom said he wanted to take advantage of the rare chance to get a first-day stamp. "I'm here to get stamps for my 4-year-old to save them forever, to have something valuable," he said. "I just decided to be part of it. It's a great thing."

Margaret McArthur of Fayetteville felt the same way.

"It's exciting," she said. "I've never collected a stamp in my life, but there's never been one issued in Fayetteville before, either."

bring to five the number of bodies unearthed in the investigation. Mitchell is buried in Graham Cemetery. Mrs. Taylor is buried in Alamance Memorial Cemetery.

In a statement, officials said Burlington police have recently conducted inquiries into 22 deaths in connection with Mrs. Moore. The names were generated by the investigation or proposed by the public, the statement said.

Most of the inquiries never developed into a full investigation.

"We would hope, frankly, that there won't be other names to check out," he said.

Full-fledged investigations followed into six of the 22 deaths, including that of Mrs. Taylor and Mitchell. Balog said more exhumations could be possible, but that he doubted it.

"We would hope, because of the time elapsed and the publicity the matter has received, that anybody who feels their family member's death was suspicious would have come forward by now," he said.

Mrs. Moore, a long-time Kroger employee, is charged with murder in the 1973 death of her husband, James Taylor, and in the death of her boyfriend, Raymond C. Reid in 1986. Autopsies of both revealed they died of arsenic poisoning in Reid's 1986 death.

James Taylor was Isla Taylor's son.

She is also charged with attempted murder in the poisoning of her current husband, the Rev. Dwight Moore, who is recuperating at Moses Cone Memorial Hospital in Greensboro.

For two hours Tuesday, Balog huddled with an assistant district attorney, representatives of the Burlington Police Department and the State Bureau of Investigation and the state's chief medical examiner, Dr. John Butts.

They went over medical records and other evidence collected during investigations of Mitchell, Isla Taylor and the four others. They then phoned all six families to tell them of their decision.

"We understand that these are sensitive matters," Balog said.

He said both Mitchell and Isla Taylor's family have cooperated with the investigation.

Dot Taylor Kernodle, the daughter of Isla Taylor, who now lives in her mother's home in Burlington, said she was pleased with the decision.

"We were very concerned about our mother because her death was quoted to us like she'd have these spells and we didn't know what caused them," Mrs. Kernodle said. "The doctor said there were these little blood vessels bursting in her head, but we couldn't see how that was making her feel like she was."

Mrs. Kernodle said her mother suffered from nausea and could not walk for about four months prior to entering the hospital.

Efforts to reach members of Mitchell's family were unsuccessful, but neighbors of his widow said she was upset by the ordeal.

Authorities have exhumed and tested the remains of James Taylor and Reid.

Authorities also have unearthed the remains of Moore's father, Parker D. Kiser. Although he did not die of arsenic poisoning, tests indicated a higher than normal concentration of the poison.

Suspension

ASHEVILLE (AP) — An Asheville police officer has been suspended and reassigned after an incident Monday in which he shot a man while working off-duty as a security guard.

O'Donnell shot Robert Franklin Bearse, 29, of Asheville, in the leg with a .357-caliber, hollow-point bullet, officials said. O'Donnell was in satisfactory condition at Memorial Mission Hospital in Asheville on Tuesday night.

Regional Compact Discusses Sanctions For Wayward States

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ORANGE BEACH, Ala. — Members of a committee of the Southeast Compact Commission said state legislatures must be made more aware of the low-level nuclear waste disposal problem.

The committee, which met Tuesday, also discussed possible sanctions in dealing with troublesome member states over disposal of the waste. Under a proposal outlined at the meeting, the commission could hold a quasi-judicial hearing open to the public to review complaints against states.

The entire commission will meet today at the Perdido Hilton on Alabama's coast.

The commission represents Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee and Virginia.

North Carolina attorney George Givens of Raleigh said some possible complaints could include a state's non-acceptance of the low-level nuclear waste, undue restraints on generators of the waste or taxing the transport of the waste across state lines.

Sanctions committee Chairman William Briner, associate professor of radiology at Duke University Medical Center in Durham, N.C., said a sanctions procedure would seek to resolve complaints quickly.

The sanctions committee made no final decision on penalties against troublesome members but agreed to notify the governors of each state of any punitive steps against member states.

Compact Commissioner John McMillan said members of the commission were working in harmony now that North Carolina has been selected as the location for the next disposal site. Other committee members later discussed methods of informing state legislatures about the low-level nuclear waste disposal problem.

South Carolina State Rep. Harriet Keyserling of Beaufort said legislatures should be educated on the entire nuclear waste problem.

North Carolina initially balked at being selected as a regional disposal site several years ago. But that state now is screening locations for such a facility.

The present disposal site serving the Southeastern area is at Barnwell, S.C. It is scheduled to close Dec. 31, 1992.

Tenney Deane, executive director of the North Carolina Low-Level Radioactive Waste Management Authority, said the state plans to open an operating facility by Jan. 1, 1993. He said a contract has been signed with Chem-Nuclear Systems to build the facility and operate it.

Once the disposal site opens, it will operate for 20 years or until it reaches capacity, McMillan said.

Deane said the estimated cost for the entire project presently is between $50 million and $55 million.

He said the state has held at least 35 public forums in an attempt to quell public concern about the project, describing it as a "controversial but open process."

Aubrey Godwin of Montgomery, director of radiological health for the Alabama Department of Public Health, said Tennessee in 1988 surpassed South Carolina to become the leading shipper of low-level nuclear waste in the Southeast, with most of that generated by industry.

Alabama ranked fifth in the region and 10th in the nation, shipping 50,948 cubic feet of wastes.

TEENS AND SUICIDE

Do you know the most dangerous age for potential suicide? It's 15. This is a statistic that alarms parents and professionals alike. Adolescence is a time of great change, with an increased focus on gaining personal autonomy in a world that still sees the teen as a child.

As teenagers struggle with new roles and responsibilities, depression and possible suicidal thoughts are not uncommon. It is critical that parents take expressions of trouble seriously and not try to smooth them over. Establishing a dialogue between parent and child is essential in helping provide safety by setting up a format in which frustration can be expressed and teens can hear how others see their dilemma.

Suicidal thoughts turn to action when individuals perceive that they have little control over their lives. Setting up a dialogue between parents and teens, supervised by an experienced counselor, is often essential in breaking the cycle of struggle, helplessness and despair. Together they can re-establish the growth through struggle that the adolescent needs.

Duke Endowment

DURHAM (AP) — An Atlanta couple has created a $1 million endowment for Duke University Medical Center.

Dr. Edward G. Bowen and his wife, Mary Martin Bowen, made the gift without restrictions so it may be applied where it is most needed. However, special consideration can be given to a Duke medical student from Pender County in need of financial aid.

The Edward G. and Mary Martin Davis Bowen Endowment is in memory of his parents, Evander Jackson Bowen and Marguerite Hill Sanderson Bowen of Burgaw and Lakeland, Fla., and his grandparents, H. Ivy Bowen and Ida Jane Royal Bowen, also of Burgaw and Lakeland, Fla., and Richard Sanderson and Della Mae Hocutt Sanderson of Pender County.

Lucas Returns

FAYETTEVILLE (AP) — Charles Lyons Jr., former chancellor at Fayetteville State University, has returned to the school to teach after an 18-month absence, school officials said Monday.

Lyons, who resigned as chancellor in 1987, is teaching political science at the school, where classes began Monday, said Patti Jensen, the school's public relations director, said. Lyons also is scheduled to teach a history class, said Chancellor Lloyd "Vic" Hackley.

After his resignation, Lyons was given a one-year paid sabbatical. According to an agreement with University of North Carolina President C.D. Spangler and the UNC board of trustees, Lyons was scheduled to return to FSU at the beginning this year. But after the death of his father, Charles Lyons Sr., in December 1988, he asked for a leave of absence without pay for the spring semester, Hackley said.

Parade Approved

BREVARD, N.C. (AP) — Brevard City Council members say they are legally obligated to allow the Ku Klux Klan to march down Main Street.

Council members voiced "distaste" for the white supremacist group before voting 3-1 to grant a parade permit to the Christian Knights of the Ku Klux Klan.

Charles S. Beasley, grand dragon of the KKK in Charlotte, applied for the permit Aug. 9. He requested that 25 to 100 Klan members be allowed to conduct a membership recruitment march from Brevard's City Hall to the Transylvania County Courthouse from 12:30 to 1:30 p.m. Sunday. Beasley also applied for and was granted permits to march in Tryon and Hendersonville on Saturday.

"While the reputation of the KKK stirs extremely strong emotions and reactions, the application for a parade permit must be viewed by the city within the constitutional context of the right of people to peacefully assemble and exercise free speech," said City Manager Dee Freeman. "I have gotten advice from legal counsel — both the city attorney and Raleigh, and, quite frankly, the answer is that the city of Brevard is obligated to issue a permit."

Owner Beaten

LEXINGTON, N.C. (AP) — The 89-year-old owner of a Lexington cafe was beaten and robbed by an unidentified man, authorities said.

James Hunt was listed in stable condition at Lexington Memorial Hospital.

Hunt told Davidson County Sheriff's detectives that he was attacked in his cafe at about 3:45 a.m. Monday. A man entered through an unsecured rear door and pulled a paper bag over Hunt's head.

The two men scuffled, and Hunt was thrown to the pavement outside. Hunt suffered two broken ribs and received three stitches to close a head wound.

Hunt told investigators he believed he'd seen the man in his restaurant before.

Radiation Beams

WINSTON-SALEM (AP) — After a two-month delay that almost killed the deal, Baptist Hospital has agreed to buy new technology from a British company that will allow doctors to use radiation beams like a scalpel on brain tumors.

Baptist is one of five U.S. hospitals selected by Philips Medical Systems to receive the equipment for research purposes at a cost of about $500,000.

Phillip Holder, the managing director of Philips, said Baptist was picked "because of their interest and their standing."

Although the technology should be on the market by mid-1990, Phillip said, the five hospitals will be in the forefront of developing it and, as the group that will research its use, will get it at a lower price.

The other facilities receiving the system are the University of Florida at Gainesville, which first developed the system; the University of California at Los Angeles; Case Western Reserve University in Cleveland; and Vanderbilt University in Nashville.

Dealer Sentenced

FAYETTEVILLE (AP) — A Pembroke man, whom prosecutors said was the leader of a cocaine distribution ring in a four-county area, has been sentenced to 13 years in prison.

David Keith Deese, 30, was one of four people from Robeson County sentenced by U.S. District Court Judge Malcolm J. Howard for their guilty pleas or conviction on various drug charges earlier this year.

Deese pleaded guilty in May to one count of conspiracy to distribute cocaine in Robeson, Harnett, Wake and Guilford counties between 1982 and 1988. Deese was fined a $50 special assessment and will be on supervised release for five years when discharged from prison.

Contract

EEDEN, N.C. (AP) — An Eden woman and man were arrested for allegedly hiring someone to kill the woman's husband, said Eden police officials.

Melinda D. Pierce, 32, and Daniel E. Pittman, 41, were charged with solicitation to commit murder and conspiracy to commit murder, said Detective Barry Carter.

The person who said he was hired to commit the murder told police of the scheme and helped them gather evidence against the suspects for the murder of Barry Pierce, Carter said.

The suspects apparently were involved in an affair, said police Capt. Mike Martin. Officials would not disclose the amount of money to be paid for the crime.

Sentenced

FAYETTEVILLE, N.C. (AP) — A Spring Lake man who pleaded guilty to strangling his wife in a Fort Bragg parking lot last summer was sentenced to more than 11 years in prison.

Donald M. Onar, 22, was sentenced Monday in U.S. District Court in Fayetteville to more a total of 135 months in prison, following his guilty plea in May to second-degree murder in the death of Pvt. Andrea A. Onar, 24.

Mrs. Onar's body was found a year ago today inside a car parked in the United Carolina Bank parking lot at Fort Bragg.

Diversion

FAYETTEVILLE, N.C. (AP) — Opponents to a proposal by the cities of Cary and Apex to divert 12 million gallons of water from the Cape Fear River to the Neuse River claim such a move would be devastating.

"I want them to know we're ticked off about this thing," said Charlie Holt, referring to the state Environmental Management Commission. Holt is a former state legislator and president of the Cape Fear River Research Institute.

The commission issued a permit to the cities in July to start planning for the water transfer.

Cary and Apex officials say they need more water to keep pace with growth in their cities. They propose taking water from Lake Jordan, part of the Cape Fear River basin, shipping it to city users and then discharging the treated wastewater into the Neuse River instead of back into the Cape Fear.

Measles

RALEIGH (AP) — Four preschool children in Wake County have been diagnosed with measles this month, and the county health department will hold clinics to immunize children age five or under.

A state official said there have been no signs of a statewide outbreak.

"It's just in Wake County now," said Dr. John R. Cutler, an epidemiologist with the state. An outbreak in North Carolina that subsided in February spread to more than half of the state's 100 counties.

Measles is highly contagious and can lead to serious complications. Parents should watch their children for symptoms, which include a fever, rash, runny nose, watery eyes and a cough, said Dr. Leah M. Devlin, director of the Wake County health department.

"This outbreak seems to be primarily in unimmunized preschool children," said Dr. Devlin said.

Bakker's Former Heritage City Empire Now Stands In Tatters

By Dennis Patterson
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

FORT MILL, S.C. — As Jim Bakker prepares for the opening of his trial on fraud and conspiracy charges in Charlotte, his former empire lies in tatters here about 30 miles to the south.

Heritage USA was a booming resort before Bakker resigned as head of the PTL ministry in March 1987 in the midst of a sex-and-money scandal. Bakker now stands charged with cheating supporters.

Prosecutors say Bakker and other PTL executives used at least $4 million of the $158 million they raised through "lifetime partnerships" in the ministry to pay for their own lavish lifestyles.

Ken Danielson of Turlock, Calif., was one of those who donated at least $1,000 to Bakker for a partnership in 1984 in exchange for three nights lodging a year at Heritage USA for the rest of his life. Several hotels were proposed, but the Heritage Grand Hotel was the only one finished and opened.

Danielson said he had not been to Heritage USA in a couple of years, and he could immediately see a difference.

"All the limousines are gone from the front of the hotel," he said. "They used to be all over the place out here. Every day we'd see Jim Bakker pull in with his limousine and chauffeur."

Danielson switched his partnership from the uncompleted towers to the Heritage Grand Hotel. The switch meant he got to use his partnership, unlike many others.

"I felt like I got my money's worth out of it," said Danielson. "I switched that first year and then came at least two more years. With rooms running $90 or $100 a night, it worked out about even."

The Heritage Grand Hotel and a sprawling water park remain open. They are bordered by the half-finished spectres of a 20-story hotel and the fiberglass turrets and towers of a hamburger castle.

There's no longer enough traffic to wear down the grass that grows through the concrete of the massive parking lot at the water park. A giant crane looms over the unfinished hotel, shadowing the shops of Main Street USA, Heritage's indoor shopping mall.

"Used to be, you couldn't even get a seat in here," said Danielson as he watched a handful of shoppers wander along Main Street. "Whenever a service would let out or something else was going on, you could forget about getting into the ice cream shop over there."

Bakker envisioned Heritage USA, which is now owned by a Canadian developer, as a retreat for Christians that would feature family entertainment and religious services.

The Bakkers' likenesses now are virtually absent from the shops along Main Street. A small table in the Victor Music Shoppe held books written by Jim and his wife, Tammy Faye, which were once used as premiums for faithful contributors. Tuesday, they were on sale at 75 percent off the retail price.

Records by Tammy Faye and her daughter, Tammy Sue Chapman, were selling for as little as 98 cents.

Manuel Cantu Sr., who owns a snack bar on Main Street, saw the end of PTL's heyday. "I got this just two weeks before it all started to unravel," Cantu said, referring to Bakker's resignation in March 1987.

"It's been kind of tough."

Cantu said the former owners, who also operated the ice cream shop and popcorn stand, did $10,000 worth of business on a Fourth of July four or five years ago.

"Ten thousand dollars in a single day, can you believe it?" asked Cantu, who lives on the Heritage USA grounds and also works as an evangelist helping refugees from Central America.

"That's how busy it used to be around here," he said. "There were so many people you could hardly move."

"Now, it's OK on weekends, but hardly anybody during the week," he said. "There's a healing conference going on this week, so you have maybe 40, 50, 60 people here for that. That's helped pick it up a little, but it's not like it was."

"And I honestly doubt if it ever will be again."

Army To Expand Drug Testing

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

FAYETTEVILLE — Mandatory drug testing among U.S. Army soldiers has been expanded to include tests for opiates, amphetamines and "angel dust," Army officials said.

The expanded urinalysis testing began last week at Fort Bragg as part of an Armywide program, said Margaret Tippy, a post spokeswoman.

"We know there are other drugs being abused in our society," said Paige Eversole, a spokeswoman at Army headquarters in Washington, D.C. "It would be silly for us to think the Army is immune to the problems that are attacking society at large."

"The soldiers will continue to be tested for cocaine and THC, the active ingredient in marijuana and hashish, and then in addition to that test they will be tested for one of the three additional drugs," Ms. Eversole said.

The Army also is looking into LSD testing, Ms. Eversole said.

The average soldier will be tested once a year, Ms. Eversole said. Testing is done by unit and unannounced on a random basis, but a commander has the option of testing individuals if problems are suspected, she said.

The soldiers will continue to give only one urine sample, Ms. Eversole said.

The cost of 1.4 million tests Armywide in 1988 including active and reserve components was $22.50 per test, Ms. Eversole said.

The expanded testing program has built-in safeguards for soldiers who have positive test results due to use of prescription drugs, Ms. Eversole said.

Friend Says Newton Was Seeking His Place In Life

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

OAKLAND, Calif. — Huey P. Newton, the charismatic co-founder of the Black Panther Party, was adrift without a battle to fight in his final days, a close friend said.

Newton's bullet-riddled body was found before dawn Tuesday in a neighborhood known for drug violence. Police had no suspects and no motive for the slaying, said Lt. Mike Sims.

Newton, 47, was killed in the neighborhood where he began organizing blacks more than 20 years ago, several miles from his present home. About 200 mourners marched Tuesday night at the scene of the shooting, some chanting, cheering, carrying candles and holding their fists in the black power salute.

"There are those who are going to try and make him look like gangster but we know he was a brother. We know he was a fighter," said the Rev. Cecil Williams of San Francisco, one of the participants.

Fred Hiestand, a Sacramento lawyer who was Newton's attorney and close friend, said Newton was struggling to find a niche for himself after earning a doctorate, overcoming alcohol and drug abuse problems and facing life with no criminal charges for the first time in 15 years.

"He was just trying to figure out where he fit, what he was going to do ... trying to shake some alcohol and chemical dependency that he acquired, but he was doing it all on his own, without anyone's help," said Hiestand.

Hiestand said he saw Newton on Friday and the former Panther leader "seemed to be OK. There was nothing bothering him that he talked about." Hiestand said he believed Newton had been drug-free for at least six months.

Newton was arrested earlier this year for possession of drug paraphernalia, but police said they had no indication the slaying was drug-related.

"He didn't seem to be able to find a role for himself," said Hiestand. "I think he was like a lot of people who went through that period ... He lived it intensely and it left its scars."

With Bobby Seale, Newton founded the Black Panther Party. Armed Panther members followed police cars to monitor their activities in the black community.

Under the slogan "All power to the people," the Panthers also operated a school, a health clinic and programs for ghetto youngsters.

The party drifted into violence and gradually disintegrated, as members were killed and the FBI infiltrated and disrupted the organization.

Tuesday's shooting occurred in a neighborhood of run-down Victorian-style homes and abandoned buildings.

"To us, Huey Newton was a hero," said resident Fred DePalm. "The Black Panthers were a thing to identify with along with Malcolm X and Martin Luther King."

Over the years, however, Newton was accused of two slayings and stood trial five times. His conviction in the 1967 killing of an Oakland police officer was overturned and two trials in the 1974 death of a young prostitute resulted in deadlocked juries.

Newton went into self-exile in Cuba shortly thereafter, returning to the United States in 1977.

This year he served a 90-day sentence in San Quentin Prison for a parole violation and a concurrent term for his plea of no contest to misappropriating $15,000 in public funds earmarked for a community school the party ran.

"He was a person who contributed an awful lot to the consciousness of this country in the early years of his participation in the Black Panther Party," said former Panther Johnny Spain. "In the last few years of his life, unfortunately he wasn't able to contribute."

Charles Garry, who was Newton's lawyer for many years, said he never saw a violent side to Newton.

"I saw a very sweet side, a humane side, a dignified side, a man who was theoretically in favor of a better world." But Garry said Newton became paranoid and his personality changed years ago when he was targeted by the FBI.

"They destroyed him over 10 years ago," Garry said. "To me, Huey died 10 years ago."

Newton earned a doctorate in philosophy at age 38 from the University of California at Santa Cruz, where he wrote a dissertation titled: "War Against the Panthers, a Study of Repression in America."

Two Police Officers Are Killed

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

An elderly drifter walked into police headquarters in Florence, S.C., and shot an officer to death, then turned the gun on himself.

In Florida, a Palm Beach County sheriff's deputy was shot to death by a man armed with a high-powered hunting rifle after deputies went to the man's house to commit him to an alcohol-treatment center.

Meanwhile in southern New Jersey, a state trooper was critically wounded in a shooting after pulling over a car for a motor vehicle violation on the New Jersey Turnpike.

Florence authorities say they didn't know of any motive for Tuesday's attack by Angelo Nicosia, a resident of Johnson City, N.Y., who drifted in and out of town and knew many city police officers. Florence County Sheriff William C. Barnes said Nicosia was "about 85."

Nicosia walked into the police department at the City-County Complex and asked to speak to Lt. Rick Gould, said Hugh Munn, spokesman for the State Law Enforcement Division.

Nicosia entered Gould's office and talked to him for about five minutes before pulling out a handgun and shooting the officer once in the head, Munn said. He then ran outside the station and shot himself in the head, Munn said.

Nicosia and Gould, an 11½-year veteran, were pronounced dead at McLeod Regional Medical Center, hospital spokeswoman Celia Whitten said.

Gould, 35, and other officers apparently knew Nicosia, but not in connection with any crime, Munn said.

Barnes said the gun used by Nicosia was purchased Tuesday morning in Florence, a city of 32,000 about 80 miles east of Columbia. South Carolina does not require a waiting period to purchase a weapon, Munn said.

In Florida, Deputy James Dickinson, 29, was killed Tuesday evening at a home near Royal Palm Beach, about 10 miles west of West Palm Beach.

As Dickinson approached the house, David Boswell, 42, popped out from behind the front door and shot the deputy once in the head, Palm Beach County Sheriff Richard Willie said.

Boswell, a land surveyor, was charged with first-degree murder and held overnight in the county jail pending a court hearing this afternoon in West Palm Beach.

His estranged wife, Beverly Boswell, had asked for an emergency court order earlier Tuesday to commit him to an alcohol abuse clinic. The two had been arguing at the house and Boswell had pointed a gun at his wife, sheriff's spokesman Bob Ferrell said.

In New Jersey, Anthony V. DiSalvatore was in critical but stable condition early today after surgery at the Cooper Medical Center in Camden, a hospital operator said. Authorities said he was shot in the abdomen and the chest.

Three Maryland men suspected of heading a cocaine ring were arrested in connection with the shooting and were to be arraigned today in Superior Court in Gloucester County. One man had fled the scene on foot and the others were arrested after fleeing in the trooper's cruiser and later commandeering a pickup truck.

Fortune Adds 32 To Billionaire List

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — The world has 32 new billionaires this year, according to Fortune magazine, including indicted junk-bond chieftain Michael R. Milken and a Taiwanese tycoon with holdings in insurance, hotels and soy sauce companies.

Meanwhile, the same five individuals or families who topped last year's list also lead the 1989 ranking, the magazine reports in its Sept. 11 edition, due on newsstands today.

Of those on the list, there are 58 in the United States, 54 in Europe, 23 in Asia, including 11 Japanese, and 22 others.

The list swelled to 157 members this year with the addition of 32 members, while five fell off the ranking. The list includes individuals and nuclear families with net worth Fortune estimates at $1 billion or more.

Taiwanese investor Tsai Wan-Lin, 64, joined the list at the No. 6 spot. The former poor farmer saw his 65 percent stake in Cathay Life Insurance in Taipei skyrocket in value and his net worth increase to $9 billion as the Taiwan stock market took off, Fortune said.

Milken, 43, who faces trial on federal charges that he violated securities laws, joined the list at No. 125, with an estimated fortune of $1.2 billion.

The Sultan of Brunei, who presides over the small oil-rich nation near the South China Sea, is still the world's wealthiest man with an estimated fortune of $25 billion, the magazine said.

King Fahd of Saudi Arabia and his family are next with $18 billion, followed by Forrest E. Mars Sr. and the Mars candy-bar clan, who are estimated to be worth $12.5 billion.

Ranked fourth after the Mars family was the world's richest woman, Britain's Queen Elizabeth II, who is worth an estimated $10.9 billion compared with $8.7 billion last year, Fortune reported.

Fifth on the list were New York-based publishing magnates Samuel I. Newhouse Jr. and Donald E. Newhouse, worth an estimated $10 billion.

Wal-Mart Stores mogul Sam Moore Walton, of Bentonville, Ark., was seventh with $8.9 billion; the Reichmann brothers — Albert, Paul and Ralph — whose Ontario-based Olympia & York is the largest owner of New York City commercial real estate, are eighth with $8.4 billion; British real estate tycoon Gerald Grosvenor is ninth with $6.9 billion; and Kenneth Roy Thomson, who controls Canada's Thomson Newspapers Ltd., was ranked No. 10 with estimated wealth of $6.9 billion.

Can Forbes Write Off Tax On Party?

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Malcolm Forbes is being vague about whether he plans to seek a tax write-off for his Moroccan "party of the century," but opponents are indignant at the idea of a tax break.

"If this party were to be tax-deductible it would be a perfect example of how the tax system is unfair to the average citizen and benefits the rich," said Michael Waldman, director of Public Citizen's Congress Watch, a Ralph Nader organization.

The magazine publisher's 70th birthday party in Tangier on the north coast of Africa last weekend featured 600 belly dancers, 200 Berber horsemen, pigeon pie served under elaborate tents and a guest list that included Elizabeth Taylor, Henry Kissinger, Walter Cronkite, Lee Iacocca, Rupert Murdoch, Barbara Walters, Beverly Sills and Donald Trump.

Guests were flown across the Atlantic on three jets, including a chartered supersonic Concorde. The party's expense has been estimated at $2 million to $3 million.

Rep. Fortney "Pete" Stark, D-Calif., released a letter he sent to Internal Revenue Service Commissioner Fred T. Goldberg on Tuesday saying he hopes the party is not deductible.

"The public's support of the tax system is destroyed by reports of tax-deductible birthday bashes by belly-dancing billionaires," he wrote.

Forbes magazine officials did not return repeated phone calls Tuesday seeking comment. The Washington Post on Monday quoted Forbes as saying that "some of it is a business expense."

"When you invite 300 CEOs that you do business with, you want to make a good impression," Malcolm Forbes Jr., the publisher's eldest son and the magazine's president, told The New York Times.

He said any deduction would be worked out by company accountants.

The IRS declined to comment on the party but a spokesman pointed to pertinent sections of the tax code.

Section 262 says that aside from a small exception involving telephones, "no deduction shall be allowed for personal, living or family expenses."

The IRS generally considers birthday parties to be personal expenses, said Sid Weinman, an attorney and senior editor of Federal Tax Coordinator, published in New York by Research Institute of America.

Section 274 says no deduction is allowed "with respect to an activity which is of a type generally considered to constitute entertainment, amusement, or recreation, unless the taxpayer establishes that the item was directly related to or associated with the active conduct of the taxpayer's trade or business."

The Forbes bash might be viewed as a more lavish version of the parties for advertisers that most magazines give — and write off — because the companies run by many of Forbes' guests also place ads in his magazine.

Still, Weinman said, "My guess is they'd have a hard time establishing that the shebang over there was directly associated with the magazine's business."

Even if Forbes managed to clear that hurdle, he still would face another hurdle in Section 274 that disallows spending in "amounts which are lavish or extravagant under the circumstances."

The multimillionaire motorcyclist may have hurt his own cause on that question when he told reporters, "We probably all do things in our lives that are not essential. I don't feel guilty about it. I feel grateful we can do it."

"Why should Malcolm Forbes be able to deduct his birthday party in Morocco just because people he does business with were there, when I can't deduct my birthday party at the local pizzeria when I go out with people I work with?" asked Waldman, of Congress Watch.

"This would be the ultimate proof of Leona Helmsley's dictum that the rich don't pay taxes, only the little people do," Waldman said. He was referring to comments allegedly made by the self-proclaimed hotel queen, who is on trial on federal tax-evasion charges.

S&Ls May Cost Over $50 Billion

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The $50 billion savings and loan bailout signed by President Bush this month probably isn't large enough, federal regulators are indicating after a look at new figures on the industry's health.

The nation's 2,934 S&Ls lost $3.7 billion in the April-June quarter, up from $3.5 billion in the first three months of the year, the Office of Thrift Supervision said Tuesday. It was the biggest loss since the record $4.1 billion loss in the second quarter of 1988.

The latest discouraging report came just two weeks after President Bush signed legislation authorizing $50 billion to close or sell failed institutions over the next 26 months.

During the six months leading up to the bill's approval, administration officials repeatedly said they believed $50 billion would be adequate, although they couldn't guarantee it.

Now, regulators' statements indicate that private analysts probably are right in predicting the administration will have to come back to Congress for more money.

David C. Cooke, executive director of the Resolution Trust Corp., the new agency charged with the cleanup, said Tuesday the $50 billion won't cover much more than 500 failed S&Ls. The agency now has 264 insolvent S&Ls in its control after closing seven this month.

"If it gets up to 500, it will probably be awfully tight. I can tell you that," Cooke told reporters at a luncheon. "Our best hope is ... (it will be) a little more than 400."

Meanwhile, James R. Barth, chief economist of the Office of Thrift Supervision, which regulates the industry, said at a news conference that he expects "upwards of 600" failed S&Ls will eventually be transferred from his jurisdiction to Cooke's agency.

Barth said 401 institutions already were insolvent at the end of June, up from 394 three months earlier.

He estimated another 1,200 S&Ls don't meet stricter standards in the bill requiring institutions to have more capital as a buffer between losses and the S&L insurance fund. Many of those will survive by shrinking, retaining profits or attracting outside investors, but others won't.

"Are there circumstances under which the $50 billion is enough?" Barth asked in a telephone interview. "It's possible under very favorable circumstances. But, any sort of adverse circumstances make it increasingly likely that additional funds will have to be found to deal with insolvent institutions."

For the first half of this year, losses were mounting at a rate that could make 1989 the worst year for the savings industry since the Depression, topping 1988's record of $13.4 billion.

Most of the loss this year is at-

Environmentalists Say Deadline On Exxon Spill Studies Too Early

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Environmentalists are criticizing a government plan calling for all studies on damage caused by the Exxon Valdez oil spill off the Alaskan coast to be completed by February.

"This plan could lead to a serious underestimation of harm to the environment and a limited recovery of damages from Exxon," Sarah Chasis, a lawyer for the Natural Resources Defense Council, said Tuesday.

By February, Ms. Chasis said, there still will be oil on Alaska beaches, causing additional damage.

The extent of damage on species such as the bald eagle and salmon may not be known for years, she said, because the young born this year and exposed to the oil won't return to the region for three or four years.

"Only then will the extent of the damage begin to be known," she said.

The timetable for completion of the studies was included Tuesday in a 258-page government outline on how it will proceed with the staggering task of determining how much Exxon Corp. should pay to restore the Alaska environment following damage from the March 24 tanker spill that dumped 11 million gallons of oil into pristine Prince William Sound.

The document released by the Interior Department made no dollar assessment of damages and suggested in only broad terms what studies should be made to determine the effect of the spill on wildlife, birds, fish and other natural resources.

However, the report directs that all environmental studies to be used in determining damage should be completed over the next six months.

"No further studies will be conducted after Feb. 28, 1990," unless a government trustee council and scientific and legal review groups determine they are needed, the report said.

Interior spokesman Bob Walker acknowledged there were discussions on whether to allow longer environmental studies, but that there was a concern such studies would drag out the process.

"The trustees wanted to get to restoration as fast as possible and not take a leisurely approach to studying whatever needs to be studied," Walker said.

The proposed timetable and blueprint for determining damages was prepared by government trustees — representatives of three federal agencies and the state of Alaska — who are charged with making the long-term damage assessments.

Interested parties were asked to comment before the end of September, after which the blueprint becomes final. A narrowing of the assessment to include damage estimates in dollars and the cost of restoration is not expected until late next year.

Ms. Chasis said there also is concern that the plan does not make clear the role of Exxon in the assessment plan.

Voyager Seeks More Moons As It Approaches Neptune

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PASADENA, Calif. — Voyager 2, only a day away from its close encounter with Neptune, searched today for more moons and rings after the surprising discovery of a first complete ring around the storm-wracked planet.

"Suspects have been seen here and there," said Bradford Smith, a University of Arizona planetary scientist who heads Voyager's photographic imaging team at NASA's Jet Propulsion Laboratory. "I would expect several more satellites."

So far, Voyager has found four small moons besides Nereid and backward-orbiting Triton, which were first seen years ago from Earth.

After Voyager makes its closest approach by flying 3,000 miles above Neptune's cloudtops at 8:55 p.m. PDT Thursday, the probe may find a sheet of ring material encircling the planet — similar to the broad band of dust it discovered around Uranus in 1986, laboratory astronomer Rich Terrile said.

Smith announced Tuesday the spacecraft found at least one complete ring of diffuse debris orbiting Neptune, with part of it thicker than other parts. He said a partial ring discovered by the spacecraft almost two weeks ago also may prove to be a second complete ring.

Tuesday's find, the latest in a string of discoveries by the probe during passes by Jupiter in 1979, Saturn in 1981 and Uranus, elated scientists.

"I like the idea Voyager is going out with a bang. It's going to blow our minds," said Carolyn Porco, a planetary scientist with the University of Arizona, Tucson.

Pictures taken by Voyager on Aug. 11 revealed two partial rings — or ring arcs — extending around Neptune. One of them couldn't be found in later images and was dubbed the "lost arc," until Voyager relocated it Tuesday and found it goes all the way around the planet.

Finding a complete ring was surprising. Voyager project scientist Edward Stone said two months ago the planet might be orbited by 50 to 100 ring arcs, but he backed away from that Tuesday.

About 9 o'clock PDT tonight, Voyager will cross within 1 million miles of Neptune, speeding toward the giant gaseous planet at 38,047 mph. It will be about 2.75 billion miles from Earth, having traveled a curving path of 4.4 billion miles since it was launched in 1977.

At 2:10 a.m. Friday, Voyager will zip within 24,000 miles of the moon Triton.

Vice President Dan Quayle is scheduled to visit the Jet Propulsion Laboratory several hours later to congratulate Voyager scientists and engineers.

Voyager was programmed to search today for more rings and arcs — including any that might be in or near Triton's orbit — and to look for "shepherd moons." Rings get their shape from the pull of gravity between a planet and its moons, so moons that corral rings are called shepherd moons.

Today's picture-snapping schedule also included 30 images of Triton, four photos of one of the moons Voyager discovered, and 22 pictures of Neptune and its surprisingly turbulent weather, with racing clouds and an Earth-sized cyclone.

Because of its bluish color and bright clouds, "Neptune looks Earthlike," Porco said. "With clouds floating in the atmosphere, it looks homey."

The space probe also was to measure temperatures at various altitudes in Neptune's atmosphere.

Some scientists have said arcs and rings could be the remnants of moons torn apart by gravitational forces, but Porco said it was more likely some of them form when moons collide.

Polish Communists Win Pledge Of More Power

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WARSAW, Poland — Prime Minister-designate Tadeusz Mazowiecki committed himself today to providing more than two ministries to the Communist Party in the Solidarity-led government he is forming.

He said it would be a "trap" to offer the Communist Party only the key ministries of defense and interior, which control the army and the police and had been promised during the first stages of negotiations over the historic transition to the East bloc's first non-communist-led government.

"The Communist Party in total negation would be a trap for the country," he said. "There is no opposition in the world which at the same time has the army and security services and remains the opposition."

"Our new partners must not feel like secondary partners," Mazowiecki said during his first meeting with the Solidarity parliament caucus since being nominated as prime minister Saturday by communist President Wojciech Jaruzelski.

The parliament, where Solidarity leader Lech Walesa put together a new majority coalition with two minor parties long allied with the Communist Party, was scheduled to meet today and vote Thursday on the prime minister's nomination.

Mazowiecki did not say how many government ministries would be offered to the communists, or to Solidarity and the minor parties. He said he plans to present a government within a week.

Mazowiecki told the Solidarity lawmakers he had Jaruzelski's assurance the army and security forces would cooperate with a government led by the opposition movement they had long sought to repress.

He said "there is a feeling of danger" within those forces that must not be aggravated if the democcratization of Poland is to be successful.

"This is political wisdom not to increase this feeling of danger in order not to create a feeling of aggression," he said.

Mazowiecki said he plans no "witch hunts."

The Communist Party has been pressing for maximum representation in the new cabinet as Mazowiecki holds negotiations on the delicate task of balancing competing political interests.

He said he would meet tonight with the Democratic and United Peasants parties, the two minor parties that joined with Solidarity in a parliamentary majority and pushed Jaruzelski to nominate Mazowiecki, an editor of the independent movement's weekly newspaper and longtime Walesa ally.

The communist Politburo met Tuesday to fashion its position. It has demanded more than the two ministries promised in Walesa's agreement with Jaruzelski, the party's first secretary before becoming president, and said it wants to be treated as a full governing partner.

Afterward, party spokesman Jan Bisztyga reported party First Secretary Mieczyslaw F. Rakowski and Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev had agreed in a 40-minute telephone conversation that solving Poland's problems "is impossible" without the Communist Party.

Bisztyga said the two men held "a friendly conversation" and that Gorbachev "expressed confidence that the Polish (Communist) party would successfully solve the social and economic problems in the interest of socialism and voiced the conviction that solving these problems is impossible" without the Communists.

He said the Soviet Union was interested in a "significant" Communist participation "in shaping the social and economic and political situation" to assure the appropriate development of Poland.

Mazowiecki reiterated today that he understands Poland's "geographic place" and that it belongs to the Warsaw Pact military alliance.

As the unprecedented jousting for power continues, Mazowiecki faces tackling Poland's tremendous economic problems — a $39 billion foreign debt, chronic shortages of even basic foods and declining industrial production.

Berri Says French Ships Face Shelling

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BEIRUT, Lebanon — Syrian-backed Shiite Moslem militia leader Nabih Berri warned today that his forces will shell French warships gathering in the eastern Mediterranean if they approach the Lebanese coast.

The pro-Syrian Ash-Sharq daily declared in a frontpage headline: "France reinforces its fleet. Lebanon and the region face the threat of a large explosion."

Most of the eight-ship French task force, led by the aircraft carrier Foch carrying nearly 2,000 marines, was expected off Lebanon later today.

Syrian and Christian artillery clashed sporadically in and around Beirut during the night, violating a six-day-old cease-fire. Police reported one person was killed and 11 wounded.

That raised the casualty toll since the latest civil war fighting broke out March 8 to 790 killed and 2,201 wounded.

French officials have said the flotilla was dispatched to evacuate 7,000 French nationals, mostly Lebanese with dual nationality, if the 5-month-old battle between Christian leader Gen. Michel Aoun and the Syrian army worsens.

But the mission has triggered threats by Syrian-backed Moslem forces, who claim the warships were sent to support Christian leader Gen. Michel Aoun.

His estimated 20,000 troops, outnumbered about 3-1 by the Syrians and their Moslem allies, are besieged in the Christian enclave north of Beirut.

Berri said his 6,000-strong militia, which has heavy artillery and tanks, has ordered all its men in south Lebanon to "carry arms and join other Moslem and nationalist forces in confronting the new crusaders."

Stock And Market Reports

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market gained ground today as interest rates turned downward.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials edged up .19 to 2,651.18 in the first half hour of trading.

Gainers outnumbered losers by nearly 2 to 1 in nationwide trading of New York Stock Exchange-listed issues, with 622 up, 332 down and 523 unchanged.

Volume on the Big Board came to 20.63 million shares as of 10 a.m. on Wall Street.

In the credit markets this morning, prices of long-term government bonds rose nearly $5 for each $1,000 in face value, lowering their yields to the 8.21 percent-8.27 percent range. Analysts said that took a little pressure off the stock market.

Gainers among the blue chips included Dow Chemical, up 1/4 at 103; American Telephone & Telegraph, up 1/4 at 38 1/2, and Eastman Kodak, up 1/4 at 50 1/2.

The NYSE's composite index of all its listed common stocks rose .20 to 100.31. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index was up .62 at 376.48.

On Tuesday the Dow Jones industrial average rose 3.99 to 2,650.99 after having fallen 40.97 points on Monday.

Declining issues outnumbered advancing by about 4 to 3 on the NYSE, with 635 up, 823 down and 531 unchanged.

Big Board volume totaled 141.93 million shares, up from 136.80 million in the previous session.

Issues Forum

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (AP) — National and state leaders will discuss the role of education in preserving rights and liberties established by the U.S. Constitution during the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill's bicentennial issues forum in Fayetteville Dec. 11.

The forum, which will be broadcast live statewide on public television, will commemorate the 200th anniversary of two milestones in N.C. history: the N.C. Constitutional Convention's ratification of the U.S. Constitution on Nov. 21, 1789, and the General Assembly's passage of a bill chartering the university on Dec. 11 of that year.

British Boat Toll Increases To 44

LONDON — Thirteen more bodies have been recovered from the River Thames, bringing to 44 the number of people known to have died when a pleasure boat sank after being rammed by a barge, police said today.

Police believe the death toll from Sunday's accident could be as high as 57, meaning 13 people remain missing. Seventy-nine people on board the Marchioness pleasure boat survived.

A spokesman for Scotland Yard said 13 bodies were recovered from the river overnight and early today in a variety of locations, some carried miles from the accident scene by strong tides.

Autopsies were being performed.

The 90-ton Marchioness, carrying revelers on a late-night party cruise, sank after being hit from behind by the 1,475-ton dredger Bowbelle near Southwark Bridge in central London.

The Marchioness, which had been hired for the 26th birthday party of a London financier, was licensed to carry 149 passengers and two crew members.

Fashion Trendsetter Diana Vreeland Dies

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Diana Vreeland, a flamboyant trendsetter on both sides of the Atlantic, lived with drama and imagination at the place where fashion, art and publishing meet.

Mrs. Vreeland was in her 80s when she died of a heart attack Tuesday.

"The only real elegance is in the mind," Mrs. Vreeland once said. "If you've got that, the rest really follows from it."

Her originality helped launch the careers of designer Oscar de la Renta and model Lauren Hutton, among other people and trends.

"She was and remains the only genius fashion editor," photographer Richard Avedon said.

Mrs. Vreeland was fashion editor of Harper's Bazaar magazine from 1939-62. She joined Vogue in 1962 and presided over the fashion world there as editor in chief until 1971.

In the turbulent 60s, the industry watched her every move and repeated her legendary witticisms, such as, "The bikini is the most important thing since the atom bomb."

After running a lingerie shop in London for a few years, Mrs. Vreeland moved to New York in 1936 and began writing her "Why Don't You..." column for Harper's Bazaar, in which she posed questions to Depression-era America such as, "Why don't you put all your dogs in bright yellow collars and leads like all the dogs in Paris?"

The thin Parisian native blazed a theatrical trail through the fashion world for over four decades. Described as "an elegant crane picking her way out of a swamp" by English designer Sir Cecil Beaton, Mrs. Vreeland was known for her lacquered black hair, rouged cheeks and ear lobes, and red lips and nails.

Mrs. Vreeland discovered Hutton in 1966, when other fashion impresarios considered the gap-toothed beauty too unusual-looking to be a model.

"Mrs. Vreeland was a genius for understanding ... that society expressed itself visually, whether it was through fashion, whether it was through photography, whether it was through the way that people lived," said John Ross, a spokesman at the Metropolitan Museum of Art. "She always understood the cutting edge and she was usually a little ahead of it."

In 1972, Mrs. Vreeland became special consultant to the Costume Institute of the Metropolitan, where she was noted for revolutionary exhibitions like a retrospective of the work of Spanish designer Balenciaga, and a survey called, "The 10's, the 20's, the 30's," an exploration of a group of leading Paris designers.

In 1977, she received the French Order of Merit and in 1976, the French Legion of Honour.

Mrs. Vreeland moved with her parents to America at the outbreak of World War I, according to McDowell's Directory of Twentieth Century Fashion, which dubbed her "the undisputed Muse of Fashion."

Born Diana Dalziel, she married Thomas Reed Vreeland in 1924. A banker and Yale graduate, Vreeland died in 1966. They had two children, Thomas Reed Vreeland, now an architect, and Frederick D. Vreeland, a diplomat.

"She spent her last day thanking her staff and friends and family," said her grandson, Alexander Vreeland. "She never said why, she just said thank you and goodbye."

Some fashion texts said Mrs. Vreeland was born in 1906, but her grandson said that because she had two birth certificates, her true age was not known.

Mrs. Vreeland also is survived by a sister, four grandchildren and four great-grandchildren.

will want to make their neighborhood the best.

The plan also includes scholarship programs and job counseling, Gardner said.

Washington officials meeting with Gardner in Raleigh were Mayor Stancil Lilley, City Manager Bruce Radford, William Cochran, executive director of the Washington Housing Authority, Police Chief John Crone, and Washington City Councilman Floyd Brothers.

Cochran said the group met for about two hours and Gardner explained the basics of the plan and how a committee from Washington will draw up the details and submit the final draft.

Cochran said he wasn't sure exactly why Washington was chosen. But he said that in a recent visit to the city Gardner was shown evidence of the drug problem. Cochran said that a group touring the public housing facilities found crack vials on a playground basketball court.

"For some reason I thought the drug problem was not as severe down here," Gardner said. "But when I went in I saw exactly what I had seen in Charlotte."

Cochran said that since public housing is government regulated it is easier to target than the private sector.

But he said, "I don't think public housing has any more drug problems than any other part of the city."

The key to making the program work its acceptance by the residents of public housing, Gardner said. He said they seem to be receptive to the idea at this point and want to fight the drug problem.

"(Public housing residents) have been saying, 'We need help,'" Gardner said. "There is a certain amount of skepticism that we've got to, through action, overcome."

Gardner said he expects the program to have an immediate impact. "I want to go back in six months and see some difference," he said.

Protest Scheduled

In the Estonian capital, Tallinn, announcements today on the official radio told participants how to get to their spots on the human chain, and organizers scheduled news conferences, meetings and concerts.

"The Estonian people are very united and the mood is very good," said Ulo Kaevats, a member of the Estonian People's Front, one of the grass-roots groups that organized the event. The protests "are dedicated to victory over the evil that the pact and the Soviet occupation begat," he said.

Events marking the pact also were scheduled in other regions of the western Soviet Union that were absorbed under the secret pact. Yuri Rozhgo, a spokesman for the People's Front of Moldavia, said a rally would be held to condemn the agreement.

Moldavia was part of Romania before World War II, but Soviet soldiers occupied it in 1940 and it became one of the 15 Soviet republics.

In a secret protocol to the treaty, Hitler and Stalin divided Eastern Europe into spheres of influence. The small, independent Baltic republics fell into Soviet hands and were a battleground before Germany's defeat in the war.

Thousands of Baltic residents were shot or deported for their anti-Soviet sympathies, and after the war others were similarly punished for real or alleged collaboration with the Nazis.

Ryan Does It

Veteran Hurler Attains Record

By Denne H. Freeman
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Nolan Ryan got ready for one of the biggest days of his life by taking the phone off the hook and sleeping in.

After a solid night's rest — he didn't get up until 10:30 a.m. — Ryan began a day that would end with his historic 5,000 strikeout by picking up 57 tickets from the Texas Rangers' ticket office for relatives and friends.

Next, he reserved eight suites at the nearby Sheraton Hotel.

Ryan killed some time watching television with his brother, Bob, and about 25 other people who wandered in and out of his hotel suite.

Then came a sumptuous down-home lunch prepared by his wife, Ruth. There was honeybaked ham, sweet potatoes, green beans, biscuits and tea.

"My dad doesn't show a whole lot of emotion but I could tell he was in a real good mood all day," said 17-year-old Reid Ryan, son of the famous father and quite a pitcher in his own right for Alvin High School.

Ryan's been through so much in baseball, it would seem nothing could bother him. But on this Tuesday, he actually became a little antsy.

"I was a little nervous," Ryan admitted. "In fact, I drove right by the stadium."

At 7:07 p.m., Ryan came out of the dugout to begin warming up, and the early arrivals at Arlington Stadium gave him a big ovation.

At 7:28 p.m., Ryan finished his warmup pitches and walked over to the stands to hand the baseball to a boy.

At 7:31, Ryan was introduced in the starting lineup, eliciting another big cheer.

At 7:34, he took the mound. Another ovation.

At 7:37, he threw his first pitch to Oakland leadoff hitter Rickey Henderson. For the record, it was a fastball for a strike.

That pitch would prove to be a tipoff. Four innings later, Ryan and Henderson would meet again.

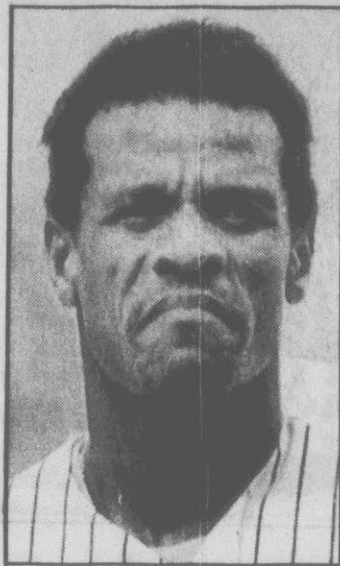

Ryan got the first of the six strikeouts he needed when he struck out Jose Canseco at 7:45 p.m.

At 7:55, Dave Henderson went down.

At 7:59, it was Tony Phillips' turn.

At 8:15, it was Rickey Hender-

Henderson An Honored Victim

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ARLINGTON, Texas — The glory wasn't all Nolan Ryan's. His victim felt good about it, too.

Rickey Henderson went so far as to say that being "Mr. 5,000" is a badge of honor.

Henderson's swing and miss on Ryan's 3-2 fastball in the fifth inning Tuesday night put the Oakland Athletics outfielder into the baseball record books for the ages.

Far from being unhappy about it, Henderson wanted to retrieve the ball from the catcher and deliver it personally to Ryan on the mound. But rookie catcher Chad Krueter wouldn't let go of it.

"The catcher said he wanted the honor," Henderson said.

Henderson said Ryan's 96 mph fastball on the outside corner was just too hot to handle.

"It gave me no chance," Henderson said. "He just blew it by me. But it's an honor. I'll have another paragraph in all the baseball books. I'm already in the books three or four times."

Henderson walked over to Ryan and shook his hand after the A's 2-0 victory over the Texas Rangers.

"Congrats on 5,000, Nolan," Henderson said. "I'm happy to be the one."

"Thanks," Ryan replied. "Sorry you had to be the one. Somebody had to be 5,000."

"We knew it would be one of us," Henderson said, "and since it happened to me, I'm glad. Like Davey Lopes (a Rangers coach) said, 'If he ain't struck you out, then you ain't nobody.'"

Henderson walked away slowly after becoming the answer to a trivia question while Ryan twice tipped his hat to acknowledge a roaring standing ovation for his unprecedented feat.

"We won the game and Nolan got his 5,000th," Henderson said, "so we both came away happy. 'I'm not bothered by it one bit.'"

Evert Announces End U.S. Open Will Be Her Final Event

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Because she no longer feels the intensity, Chris Evert will make the U.S. Open, where she began her reign as tennis queen, her final serious competition.

"This is it," Evert writes in the Aug. 28 issue of Sports Illustrated. "No more 'maybes.' No more 'probablys.'"

"Even though I hate dealing with this — I don't even like to think about it — my mind is made up. The 1989 U.S. Open will be my final tournament."

The 34-year-old Evert, however, says she will not stop playing tennis completely.

"But as for Chris Evert, serious competitor, yes, I guess I really am outta here," she writes.

Evert, ranked fourth in the world, will represent the United States in the Federation Cup in Tokyo in October, will play exhibition matches with Martina Navratilova this fall and winter, and may make a cameo appearance in a tournament at Boca Raton, Fla., where she lives.

"I don't feel the same intensity," she said. "But I know a lot of other things in my life would suffer if I did feel that intense. ... I know I've lost some confidence, and I just don't want to pay the price any more."

"The truth is that at 34 I feel I'm about three years past my best tennis."

A native of Fort Lauderdale, Fla., Evert has won 157 tournaments, more than any other player, male or female. She has won the U.S. Open six times, Wimbledon three times, the Australian Open twice and the French Open a record seven times. Her last Grand Slam title was the French Open in 1986.

"Physically, I've never felt better," Evert writes. "I'm in better shape than I was five years ago."

"The mental strain is the difference. I used to cruise through the early rounds of tournaments. Now I'm exhausted after three matches, and then comes Zina (Garrison) or Lori McNeil or one of the younger girls, say Monica Seles, and I can see they're not scared or intimidated."

That she would call it quits in the U.S. Open is only fitting. It was in the 1971 U.S. Open that Evert, then a 16-year-old high schooler, burst into prominence by reaching the semifinals. She reached at least the semifinals of the Open every year until 1987, when she lost in the quarterfinals.

Chris Evert

Last year, she reached the semis, only to default to eventual winner Steffi Graf because of a stomach virus. When the U.S. Open begins next Monday, it will mark Evert's 19th consecutive year of play, a record for women.

For 13 consecutive years, 1974-86, she won at least one Grand Slam tournament, a record for men or women. And she holds the best record on clay of any player for any single surface with a 125-match win streak set from August 1973 to May 1979.

Seeing only limited action this year because of injuries, Evert has won $192,783 to increase her career earnings to nearly $9 million.

Evert says she has found her post-tennis niche as "Mrs. Andy Mill, full-time housewife." Her marriage to the former U.S. Ski Team downhill is her second, and she says she is looking forward to becoming a mother.

"No, I am not pregnant yet," she writes in the magazine, which on Tuesday released a portion of the story she wrote with senior writer Curry Kirkpatrick. "Over the years the tabloids in London have had me 'with child' about 10 separate times."

She says that when she stops playing, "I'm going to shop for groceries, peel vegetables and cook. I'm going to sit on a couch and read a magazine without feeling I've got to train or practice or eat a meal or be anywhere on time."

Clemson Coaches Focusing On Football, Not Controversy

By Rick Scoppe
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

If the question was about the NCAA investigation or about quarterback Michael Carr, the answer from Coach Danny Ford and most of his players was the same: No comment. Let's talk football.

So it went at Clemson's annual media day on Tuesday, when almost as many questions concerned what was going on off the field as what was going on it. For the most part, Ford and his higher ups got their way.

"Our policy ... on everything that you've written, read or heard is going to be that anything that comes out of Clemson will be handled by the athletic director," Ford said.

"My comments are going to be directed toward our football players that are here and that are practicing, because we've got some good ones. I'd like to be able to talk about them." Ford got his chance to talk about his team, which opens the season Sept. 2 against defending I-AA champion Furman. But Ford and his players had to dodge numerous questions about an NCAA probe and Carr's disappearance.

The Atlanta Journal-Constitution reported last week the NCAA was investigating the Atlantic Coast Conference school for possible recruiting violations.

Clemson Athletic Director Bobby Robinson reiterated Tuesday the school still had not heard from the National Collegiate Athletic Association.

"There is no update," Robinson said in a brief interview outside his office. "Nothing has changed."

Sources close to the probe were quoted by the Atlanta newspaper as saying Carr's situation has delayed the NCAA from formally notifying Clemson of the investigation. The NCAA, as is its custom, has declined comment.

Carr disappeared from school Thursday, missing both practice sessions that day. The red-shirt freshman quarterback took a 5:30 a.m. train home to Amite, La., and it wasn't until late Thursday night that Clemson officials knew where he was.

Carr arrived back in Clemson on Tuesday afternoon, but his status on the team "will be determined internally," according to Sports Information Director Tim Bourret.

Carr was one of three players vying for the starting quarterback job before leaving. Ford also declined comment on Carr's status. He also told his players not to comment on the NCAA probe or Carr.

"I'm just here to answer questions basically about football," linebacker Vince Taylor said. "I have no comments on all that other stuff. ... It's just a team issue."

NASCAR Drivers After Big Purse

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CONCORD — When the 40 drivers starting the All Pro Auto Parts 300 Busch Grand National Series race at Charlotte Motor Speedway take the green flag Oct. 7, they will be competing for the lion's share of an all-time record purse.

Officials of AEA Inc. — the parent company of the All Pro Auto Parts chain — and Charlotte Motor Speedway announced Tuesday that the total purse for the fall Busch race would total $388,688.

The increase in the purses for both the Oct. 7 Busch race and the Oct. 8 All Pro Auto Parts 500 NASCAR Winston Cup race gives Charlotte Motor Speedway a pair of $1 million racing weekends.

Speedway officials announced three weeks ago that the purse for the fall 500-mile Winston Cup race would be increased to $716,682 — up 10.4 percent from the 1988 purse of $651,025 — giving the drivers a shot at a total purse of $1,095,370.

"The record purse shows our dedication towards having not only the best Winston Cup racing on the circuit, but the best Grand National racing fans can enjoy anywhere," said H.A. "Humpty" Wheeler, president and general manager of Charlotte Motor Speedway.

"We're adding lots of extra incentives which have historically increased competition, making it a better show for the fans and adding incentive for drivers to run hard. This record purse will provide never-before-equalled competition."

Meyer Challenge Getting Attention

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PORTLAND, Ore. — To Arnold Palmer, the Fred Meyer Challenge is "the finest unofficial golf tournament you'll find anywhere."

To ESPN, it's "the best tournament you've never heard of."

In just four years, the tournament named for the Portland-based Fred Meyer retail chain has succeeded beyond the wildest dreams of its promoter, touring professional Peter Jacobsen.

The PGA has noticed, and in fact has offered Portland an "official" stop on the Tour schedule.

Jacobsen turned it down. The date that was offered, he said, was in late fall, when the weather in Oregon often is miserable.

Besides, he said, he likes the intimacy of the existing tournament. Lee Trevino shot the breeze with a fan during his round, but it seems he does that every week. But it certainly isn't very week that U.S. Open champion Curtis Strange can shed his pants and sell them for $6,000, as he did during Monday night's charity auction.

"Be careful about making any changes," Palmer said. "You've got something special here."

When Jacobsen and Portland businessman Mike Stoll came up with the idea for a tournament, they decided on a team format. Jacobsen, one of the most popular players on the PGA Tour, was able to lure eight of the game's biggest names to the inaugural event.

Mariners Sold To Indy Duo

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SEATTLE — Long-suffering Seattle Mariners baseball fans can only hope.

They hope Indianapolis businessmen Jeff Smulyan and Michael Browning, new principal owners of the Mariners, will keep the team in Seattle.

They also hope that Smulyan and Browning will turn the 13-year-old American League baseball franchise from perennial loser to a winner.

During a news conference Tuesday to announce the sale of the Mariners by George Argyros, Smulyan said he might have an open checkbook to acquire enough talent to turn the Mariners around quickly.

"We've been called calculated risk-takers, rational risk-takers," he said. "That may mean that we will work at all options to build this franchise. But I think this is a very, very good young team. I'm excited about it. I think there's a very good foundation there."

Smulyan said he didn't purchase the Mariners to make a lot of money.

"I don't think anybody buys a baseball team because it's a money-making proposition," he said. "Obviously, it's a business and has to be run like a business. But I think you buy a baseball team because you love baseball and you believe in its role in American life."

Argyros said he was convinced that Smulyan, 42, and Browning, 41, who head a group of Indianapolis investors, will keep the Mariners in Seattle and not take them to Indiana. During lease negotiations in 1985, Argyros, 52, threatened to move the Mariners to another city if King County didn't give him what he wanted.

"I think these gentlemen have every intent of keeping the team here," Argyros said. "I've been assured of that. They will do everything possible to make it work here."

Although Argyros and Smulyan refused to reveal the sale price, it was believed to be $76 million. Argyros purchased the team from its original group of owners for $13.1 million in 1981 and the club was appraised at $76.1 million in June.

Pirates Close Out Two-A-Day Workouts

With classes beginning today, East Carolina's football team closed out two-a-day workouts with a steamy practice session Tuesday afternoon.

First-year head coach Bill Lewis was pleased with the past week of two-a-day practices, but said there is a lot of work yet to be done.

"I don't know if we are quite where I would like to see us," Lewis said. "We got some heat late in our two-a-day sessions and we struggled with it."

"We are still not where we (the coaching staff) think we need to be, as a team as far as conditioning in the extreme heat, because it is going to do nothing but get warmer."

The team will begin practicing once a day starting today with a scrimmage in Ficklen Stadium tonight at 8:30 p.m. that is open to Pirate Club members only.

Pirate Club members should bring their membership cards and show them at the gate upon arrival.

In other practice news, freshman defensive lineman Kenneth Crawford has taken advantage of a lack of depth along the defensive front to move into a backup role behind starting defensive tackle Joe Holmes. Tight end Luke Fisher has moved in front of Charles Freeman as the number one tight end, while freshman kicker Joel Blackerby has moved up to second team behind Robb Imperato in the battle for placekicking duties.

With the move of Brian McPhatter to defensive end to offset the loss of James Singletary to academics, Earnest Tynes is now the backup to Derrick Fields at strong safety.

Freshman Carlester Crumpler, who recently moved from outside linebacker to tight end over this past weekend, is out indefinitely with an injured shoulder, but ECU officials have not decided whether Crumpler will undergo surgery or not.

Fullback Rich Cameron is presently out with a knee injury. Tailback Denell Harper, who was expected to share the number-one spot with Willie Lewis, has been slowed by a knee injury, allowing more practice time for freshman Cedric Van Buren, who is currently running second team.

Seale To Enroll At Anderson JC

WINSTON-SALEM (AP) — Donnie Seale, one of North Carolina State's academically troubled basketball recruits, has decided to enroll at Anderson Junior College in Anderson, S.C., officials said.

Seale registered for classes Monday, according to Steve Lyton, the Anderson coach. Seale signed an athletic grant with Anderson last Thursday afternoon after having visited the campus the previous weekend.

Seale chose to attend junior college after he was denied admittance to N.C. State, Lyton said. He did not make 700 on his Scholastic Aptitude Test — the minimum under NCAA rules — in four attempts and did not qualify under NCAA Proposition 48.

N.C. State could not admit Seale under those conditions. N.C. State basketball coach and athletic director Jim Valvano has said the school does not accept athletes who do not meet Proposition 48 standards.

"That's true," Lyton said. "The problem was his SAT score. Donnie went through all summer hoping things would change, but they didn't."

Seale can still play at N.C. State, but he must finish his academic work at Anderson before transferring. Because he is a non-qualifier, Seale must earn his associate's degree from junior college before attending a Division I school.

He will lose one year of eligibility for every season he plays at Anderson. Lyton said a degree can be earned in one year — leaving Seale with three years of eligibility at N.C. State — but Seale plans to stay in junior college for two years.

NBA To Prevent Kempton's Move To Spain

CHARLOTTE (AP) — The NBA announced Tuesday that it would enforce an agreement which would prevent Charlotte reserve center Tim Kempton from playing for a professional basketball team in Spain.

The agreement states that players held by binding contracts for either the NBA or the Spanish Federation of Basketball cannot sign new contracts in the other.

The ruling means Kempton will not be allowed to play for the Barcelona team and will be required to fulfill his contractual obligation with the Hornets for the 1989-90 season.

Kempton will have the opportunity to earn a place on the Hornets 1989-90 roster when training camp opens in October.

Kempton said last week that he would leave the Hornets to play in Spain.

Two WCU Cage Players Ruled Ineligible

CULLOWHEE (AP) — Two lettermen from last season's Western Carolina basketball team have been ruled academically ineligible for at least a portion of the coming season, school officials announced Tuesday.

Terry Miller, a starter in 17 games last season at a post position, and Willie Battle, a reserve point guard, will not be eligible to play in WCU's three games scheduled for the fall semester.

Officials said their status for the 25 games in the spring will be determines at the end of exams this fall.

Miller, a 6-6 forward-center, averaged 10.1 points and 5.5 rebounds last year, and had a team-high 58.5 percent field goal percentage.

Greg Blatt, Western Carolina's new head basketball coach, will have eight scholarship players eligible for the 1989-90 season.

Andre The Giant Charged With Assault

CEDAR RAPIDS, Iowa (AP) — Professional wrestler Andre Rene Roussimoss, known as Andre the Giant, was charged with assault and criminal mischief for allegedly putting a television cameraman in a headlock and damaging his equipment.

"Thank God he was cooperative in the arrest," said Jim Barnes, the assistant police chief. "A guy that big, he could cause some damage."

Roussimoss, who is 7 feet, 4 inches tall and weighs 540 pounds, was released from police custody after his manager posted $1,200 bond late Monday.

Barnes said Roussimoss was upset when Ben Hildebrandt, a cameraman for Cedar Rapids television station KCRG, was taking videotape during a match between Roussimoss and the Ultimate Warrior at the Five Seasons Center in downtown Cedar Rapids on Monday night. The Ultimate Warrior won in 30 seconds.

Berry Suicide Not Drug Related

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — Ricky Berry, the Sacramento Kings' star who shot himself to death following a quarrel with his wife, did not take drugs or alcohol in the hours before his death, the Sacramento County coroner's office reported Tuesday.

Berry was "very clean, there was no evidence of drugs at all," said Chief Deputy Coroner Bob Bowers, who released the findings of an autopsy and toxicology report.

Police investigators said Berry, 24, shot himself in the head on Aug. 14 within an hour of quarreling with his wife, who left their suburban Sacramento home following their middle-of-the-night dispute and returned hours later to discover the body.

Berry reportedly left a suicide note in which he described marital problems. He and his wife, Valerie, had recently moved to their $360,000 home, and friends of the couple have said there was no hint that Berry contemplated suicide.

Green Disputes His Firing

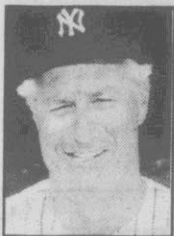

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

In the end, Dallas Green didn't see it coming so quickly, despite his doubts about his future as manager of George Steinbrenner's New York Yankees.

"You knew it was going to happen," said Green, Steinbrenner's latest ex-manager. "It was inevitable. He's just a guy you can't deal with. But I thought we'd get through the year. There's absolutely no sense changing managers now, unless it's public-relations related to get to the back page again (in New York tabloids)."

Steinbrenner met with Green on Friday in Detroit, where the Yankees were playing, fired a manager for the 17th time and handed Bucky Dent the job.

Steinbrenner, though, insisted Tuesday that Green fired himself as manager of the New York Yankees and the owner also criticized General Manager Syd Thrift.

Dallas Green

Baseball Notes

Steinbrenner said Green tried to provoke his own ouster and that he doesn't understand why Green would say the owner is impossible to work for.

"It's never Dallas' fault. Whenever something goes wrong, it's always someone else's fault. He's having this problem over and over again," Steinbrenner said in Tuesday's Tampa Tribune.

"He absolutely (tried to provoke the firing) because he couldn't win with this club. He didn't get any better from the All-Star break on," said Steinbrenner.

Steinbrenner had said during the season that it would be Thrift's decision whether to bring back Green and his coaching staff. When asked by the New York Post whether he was disappointed in Thrift, Steinbrenner answered, "very."

"It's about time that good old boy stood up and was counted," he said of Thrift. "That lack of communication (with Green) was underlying the whole thing."

Green defended his actions with the Yankees.

"I broke the ballclub down for him," Green said, "and I broke down the people he had surrounded himself with. I said, 'It's a shame you're so good to those people, give them so much money, and get no return. And then you get a group like we brought here, and you fire them.'"

But Green didn't think he'd made an impression, even after speaking his mind.

"In one ear and out the other," Green said. "You can't talk logic to that man. He could care less. All he wants is total control."

Tonight's Top Matchup
San Francisco at New York (1:35 p.m. EDT) Rick Reuschel, 14-5, pitches against David Cone, 11-5. Reuschel won his last start in his return from the disabled list.

Status
— Boston third baseman Wade Boggs sustained a badly bruised right elbow after getting hit by a pitch in game against the New York Yankees on Tuesday night. X-rays were taken, showing no break, and Boggs was further examined by Yankee team physician Dr. Stuart Hershon. His status is listed as day-to-day.

Mitchell, Knepper Key Giants By Mets

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

After Kevin Mitchell began his seemingly inexorable roll toward the National League home run title, the San Francisco Giants began to expect big things from him.

Kevin Mitchell

When the Houston Astros released Bob Knepper, hardly anyone expected anything. Mitchell, who hit his 40th home run in a 5-0 victory Tuesday night over the New York Mets, is now in elite company, becoming the first Giants' player in 20 years to hit 40 home runs in a season.

After the Giants took the lead in the third inning on Brett Butler's bunt single and Robby Thompson's triple, Mitchell, a former Met, put the game away with a long three-run homer in the sixth off Frank Viola, 1-3.

Knepper, whose four-hit shutout enabled the Giants to stretch their lead to 2½ games in the NL West, is suddenly a key man in the San Francisco rotation.

Cardinals 10, Braves 5

Ted Power, rescued from the minors in May, pitched a no-hitter for 7 1-3 innings and Tony Pena drove in five runs to lead a 14-hit St. Louis attack.

Braves reliever Paul Assenmacher tied a major league record by striking out four batters in the fifth. He is the 20th pitcher to fan four batters in an inning.

Pirates 4, Astros 1

Bobby Bonilla went 3-for-4 with a two-run homer and drove in three runs and Pittsburgh's John Smiley cooled off Houston with a six-hitter.

Smiley, 10-7, won for the first time in five starts with his eighth complete game as the Pirates ended the Astros' four-game winning streak.

Expos 4, Dodgers 2

Rookie Marquis Grissom drove in the tie-breaking run with his first major-league hit as third-place Montreal beat Los Angeles to move within two games of Chicago in the East.

Kevin Gross, 10-8, allowed four hits and two runs in seven-plus innings and Tim Burke finished for his 25th save.

Reds 7, Cubs 2

Seldom-used Dave Collins drove in three runs and Tom Browning won his sixth straight start as Cincinnati handed Chicago its fifth straight loss.

Collins entered the game with only 49 at-bats. He singled in two runs in the second inning and another in the sixth.

Phillies 4, Padres 2

Ken Howell allowed one hit in seven innings and Dickie Thon's RBI single sparked a three-run seventh as Philadelphia beat San Diego.

Howell, 10-9, struck out seven, walked two and allowed only Marvell Wynne's fourth-inning RBI single. Roger McDowell, the third Philadelphia pitcher, got the last three outs for his 15th save.

American League

Terry Leach would have preferred riding into the sunset. But it was raining in Kansas City so he settled for five innings of relief as the Royals defeated California, 4-2, Tuesday night.

It was Kansas City's eighth straight victory while the loss dropped California two games behind first-place Oakland in the American League West and the third-place Royals remained 4½ out.

Rick Luecken pitched the eighth and Jeff Montgomery the ninth for his 12th save. Montgomery has struck out at least one batter in 26 straight games.

Mike Witt, 8-11, pitched 5 1-3 innings and allowed nine hits.

Athletics 2, Rangers 0

Nolan Ryan became the first ever to strike out 5,000 batters, finishing the game with 13. He didn't get the victory, though, as Oakland beat Texas at Arlington.

No. 5,000 came in the fifth inning when Ryan struck out leadoff hitter Rickey Henderson with a 96 mph fastball.

Orioles 4, Brewers 2

Rookie Dave Johnson pitched a five-hitter for his third complete game of the month as Baltimore beat Milwaukee at Memorial Stadium.

The Orioles, who beat Milwaukee for the second straight night, dropped the Brewers into third place in the East. The Orioles lead Toronto by two games and the Brewers by 2½.

Blue Jays 3, Tigers 2

Tony Fernandez scored on pitcher Paul Gibson's throwing error on a routine comebacker with two outs in the 14th inning and Toronto beat Detroit at the SkyDome.

Fernandez started the inning with a walk off Edwin Nunez, 2-3, and Nelson Liriano followed with a sacrifice. Rance Mulliniks was walked intentionally before Junior Felix grounded into a fielder's choice, moving Fernandez to third.

Red Sox 4, Yankees 3

Randy Kutcher, a replacement for the injured Wade Boggs, hit a two-out solo homer in the eighth inning as Boston beat New York at Yankee Stadium.

White Sox 10, Twins 2

Lance Johnson had two hits, including a two-run single, during a six-run third inning as Chicago defeated Minnesota at the Metrodome.

Eric King, 6-8, allowed five hits and one run in seven innings and Tom McCarthy pitched the final 1 2-3.

Indians 3, Mariners 2

Brad Komminsk hit a home run with two outs in the 10th inning to give Cleveland its victory over visiting Seattle, the Mariners' sixth straight loss.

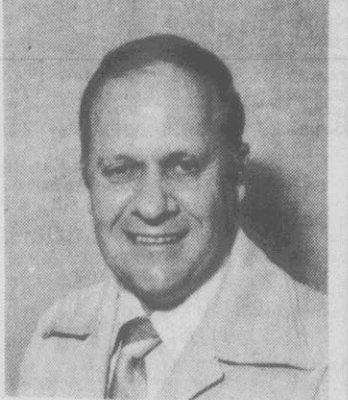

The Indians ended a four-game losing streak, while winning for only the second time in the last 10 games. The Mariners fell 10 games below .500 for the first time this season.

son, who had doubled the first time up.

Ron Hassey became the fifth victim at 8:20.

History and a 96 mph Ryan fastball collided over the outside of the plate in the fifth inning, and Rickey Henderson became No. 5,000. It happened at 8:51 p.m., on a 3-2 pitch that Henderson said he "had no chance to hit."

Ryan tipped his hat twice, accepted the ball from catcher Chad Krueter, then gave it to an attendant for safekeeping.

When he left the mound, he admonished the team "Come on, boys, let's get back in the saddle and win this game."

What everyone but Ryan seemed to have forgotten was that this was a baseball game, which Oakland led 1-0 at the time despite the record strikeout.

In the top of the sixth inning, Ryan delayed his warmup throws until a message from President Bush was shown on the center-field television screen. The president called Ryan "my noble friend."

At 10:03, Ryan walked off the field at the end of the ninth inning, to a standing ovation. The only thing wrong was that Oakland won the game 2-0.

White's Patience Pays Off As He Lands Big Contract

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PHILADELPHIA — All-Pro defensive end Reggie White said at times during contract negotiations, he had his feelings hurt and doubted whether he would reach an agreement with the Philadelphia Eagles.

But the waiting and anxiety paid off Tuesday — in a very big way.

White signed a contract that makes him the highest-paid defensive player in the NFL.

Although White and Eagles president Harry Gamble refused to specify the dollar figure, they did say that it exceeds the $1.5 million salary the Buffalo Bills pay defensive lineman Bruce Smith, previously the highest paid defenseman in the league.

"The past is the past," White said during a Tuesday night news conference. "It's time to play football now."

He said he was ready to report today to the Eagles training camp.

"I think I'm in great shape," White said. "Receiving the money I'm receiving, I don't want to be out of shape."

His fine of $1,000 a day for each missed day since training camp opened July 31 was one of the sticking points in the final hours of negotiations, White said. The contract was signed about 9 p.m. White, an ordained minister, said the sides settled the issue by deciding to donate the fine to the Fellowship of Christian Athletes.

The Eagles and White reached an agreement in principle on Monday, placing in limbo a $1.5 million civil lawsuit White had filed against his former agent, Patrick Forte, now an Eagles executive.

Quarterback Woes Hit L.A.

THE ASSOCIAT PRESS

ANAHEIM, Calif. — With Jim Everett around, the Los Angeles Rams are solid as far as a starting quarterback is concerned. With Mark Herrmann sidelined, they're mighty thin at the position.

Herrmann suffered a fractured rib Monday night during the Rams' 23-20 exhibition victory over the Phoenix Cardinals and he will be sidelined from three to four weeks.

Thus, unless they make a move, the Rams will start the season Sept. 10 with Everett as the only quarterback with NFL experience.

Other quarterbacks on the roster are Jeff Carlson, a fourth-round draft choice from Weber State who threw a 45-yard touchdown pass to Willie Anderson on 20 seconds remaining against Phoenix, and Chris Parker, a free agent from Cal State Northridge.

"Obviously, that's a major blow for us," Rams coach John Robinson said of the injury to Herrmann, who was hurt when sacked by safety Tim McDonald in the third quarter. "We just hope Mark isn't out for an extended time."

"It's part of the game. You never really feel like you have enough depth. Mark has had a good preseason, but his preseason is over."

f 16 passes for 112 yards with one interception.

Wide receiver Clarence Verdin of the Indianapolis Colts finally won a starting job, holding off rookie Andre Rison, a highly paid first-round draft pick.

"I've got to get better and I'm always looking over my shoulder. I got a first rounder stepping on my back," Verdin said.

Verdin averaged 21.9 yards per catch on 20 receptions to lead the team among players with more than one catch. His four touchdown receptions gave him a share of the team lead in that category.

"He's vastly improved over a year ago ... his work habits, his toughness as well as his overall production," Coach Ron Meyer said. "He's always had great speed and he can really catch the ball."

Flagler Tones Boasts Down
Terrence Flagler boldly set out to take away Roger Craig's starting job a year ago.

Exactly 1,507 combined rushing yards later — 1,502 of them Craig's — Flagler's not talking quite so tough.

"I have to be honest with myself and know what I'm faced with," says the running back, who was San Francisco's second first-round draft pick in 1987.

Flagler's career has been limited as much by injuries as by Craig. When healthy, he provides the 49ers with valuable insurance in the backfield and a hint of stardom to come.

"Roger Craig is the best back in the league, but I don't think Terrence is far behind," says offensive tackle Harris Barton, who was taken just ahead of Flagler two years ago.

If this were the regular season, Flagler would be on pace for a 1,200-yard year.

In three exhibition games, he has rushed for a team-leading 223 yards, an average of 6.4 yards per carry, and two touchdowns. He broke a 74-yard kickoff return down the right sideline in last Saturday night's 35-17 victory over Denver, and has caught five passes.

"If Terrence continues to play the way he has, then it will be up to us to find ways to get him the football," said San Francisco coach George Seifert. "If that means using Craig and Flagler, whatever, we just have to come up with ways. I don't mean Craig and Flagler as our starting backfield, but as a change."

Williams Comes To Terms

John L. Williams proved last year he could catch a football. His latest catch is a four-year contract that could make him the highest-paid fullback in the NFL.

The 15th player taken in the 1986 college draft, Williams reportedly signed with the Seattle Seahawks for $4 million for four years.

"It all worked out for the best," said Williams, the Seahawks' leading receiver last year while earning a reputation as one of the league's best multi-purpose backs. "Hopefully, over the next four years, I'll be able to say I was part of a Super Bowl team."

Last year, as a rookie first-round draft pick, Williams signed a four-year contract that would have given him $350,000 this year, plus a $25,000 roster bonus.

He held himself out of last week's game against New England and reported three days late to the team's training camp because of dissatisfaction over the progress of negotiations.

"The days I've been practicing, I've dropped three or four balls I wouldn't normally have dropped," Williams said. "I realized that (concern over the negotiations) was the reason."

Seattle still has three veteran holdouts — offensive tackle Ron Mattes and linebackers Darren Comeaux and Tony Woods.

In other training camps:

San Diego Chargers

Jim McMahon will make his first start when the Chargers take on the San Francisco 49ers tonight. That's just five days after San Diego obtained McMahon in a trade from the Chicago Bears.

After taking a crash course on San Diego's offensive system and playing briefly in the 24-7 victory over the Bears Saturday night, he's expected to play the first quarter and perhaps the entire half.

"He's always been a fast learner," Chargers quarterbacks coach Ted Tollner said. "He has a very quick mind for football. He visualizes things well and comprehends well."

New York Jets

Quarterback Mark Malone has signed with the New York Jets, four days after being released by the San Diego Chargers.

To The Sports Editor:

As the 1989 Pirate football season approaches, I find myself getting very excited. This season will begin a new era in Pirate football for coaches, players and fans.

I want to encourage everybody that is a Pirate fan to come to Ficklen Stadium on Sept. 9 so that when the Pirates take the field they will hear the roar of 35,000 people cheering for them. Can you imagine how great that would make them feel?

We, as fans, can make a difference this season. Let's show the team that we have confidence in them and help them build the confidence they need to win football games. A capacity crowd on opening night would sure help their confidence. Everybody wants a winning team, so everybody has to do their part to help by going to the games and hollering for the Pirates. If the fans don't disappoint the Pirates, I'm sure the Pirates will not disappoint the fans.

Good luck players and coaches.

PITTCOUNTY FILE NO. 89CVS296
IN THE GENERAL COURT OF JUSTICE
SUPERIOR COURT DIVISION
NOTICE OF SALE OF REAL PROPERTY
MERTIE WILLIAMS WHITE
DUDLEY
Administratrix of the Estate of BOBBY CHARLES WHITE, Deceased.
Plaintiff vs.
SANDRA FAYE HADDOCK WHITE, Defendant.

BY VIRTUE OF AN EXECUTION issued to the undersigned Sheriff on the 18th day of July, 1989, from the Clerk of Superior Court of Pitt County, in the above entitled action, the Sheriff will, on the 30th day of August, 1989, at 12:00 Noon at the door of the PITT County Courthouse in Greenville, Pitt County, North Carolina, offer for sale at public auction to the highest bidder for any right, title, interest or estate owned by Sandra Faye Haddock White, or at any time of or at the time of the docketing of the judgment in this action had, in the following property which is more particularly described as follows:

FIRST TRACT: BEGINNING at an iron stake located in the southern right-of-way line of U.S. Highway No. 264, said iron stake and point of beginning, being located 224 feet in an easterly direction along the southern right-of-way line of U.S. Highway No. 264 with the eastern right-of-way line of S.R. No. 1762; and thence from said point of beginning S. 73-25 E., 120.4 feet along the southern right-of-way line of U.S. Highway No. 264 to an iron stake, a corner; thence S. 89-39 W., 211 feet to an iron stake, a corner; thence N. 74-45 E., 49 feet to an iron stake, a corner; thence N. 46-30 E., 216 feet to the point and place of the Beginning and being a certain tract or parcel of land containing 102.934 square feet; also being the same lands as described in that certain deed recorded in Book M47, Page 823, Pitt County Registry.

LESS AND EXCEPTING from the above described lands that portion of the same which is more particularly described as follows:

BEGINNING at an angle iron in the southern right-of-way line of N.C. Highway No. 33 (formerly U.S. Highway No. 264), said angle iron measuring South 73 degrees 25 minutes East, 234 feet from the intersection of the southern right-of-way line of N.C. Highway No. 33 with the eastern right-of-way line of State Road No. 1762 and being the point of intersection of the common dividing line between the Jack McKay property and the Bobby White property where the same intersects the southern right-of-way line of N.C. Highway No. 33; and running thence along said common dividing line, South 48 degrees 27 minutes West, 217.27 feet to an existing iron pipe, a corner; thence South 76 degrees 29 minutes East, 48.73 feet to an existing iron pipe, a corner; thence in a northeasterly direction 199 feet more or less to the angle iron in the southern right-of-way line of N.C. Highway No. 33, the point of beginning, and being a triangular shaped portion of land taken from that property conveyed to Bobby C. White and wife, Sandra White, by deed from Ed N. Warren and wife, Joan B. Warren, dated the 3rd day of January, 1979, and recorded on the 4th day of January, 1979, at 11:30 A.M., in Book M46, Page 823, Office of the Clerk of Superior Court of Pitt County, to which deed reference is hereby made for a more accurate and complete description.

SECOND TRACT: BEGINNING at an iron stake in the southern right-of-way line of N.C. Highway No. 33 (formerly Highway No. 264) between Greenville and Grimsland, said iron stake being located 374 feet S. 73-23 E. from the southeast corner of the intersection of Highway No. 33 and N.C. Highway No. 1762, and running thence with Highway No. 33 S. 73-23 E. 100 feet, a corner; thence S. 16-53 W. 64.32 feet, a corner; thence S. 89-39 W. 105 feet, a corner; thence N. 16-53 E. 484.90 feet to the BEGINNING; being the same lands as described in that certain deed recorded in Book 87, Page 723, Pitt County Registry.

The above described property is subject to a 100 foot power line easement and right-of-way across the rear portion thereof, as the same appears of record in the Pitt County Registry. This property is being sold subject to all prior liens and encumbrances affecting the property, if any.

The highest bidder at the sale will be required to pay cash at the time of the sale.

This the 28th day of July, 1989.

Men on Los Angeles' Skid Row line up for a dollar and a handshake from Father Maurice Chase

Putting A Dollar In Every Pocket 'Father Dollar Bill' Ministers To Skid Row Bums

By Mathis Chazanov
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

LOS ANGELES — It's a long, hot wait on Main Street for a moment with the tall man in the priest's collar and the bright blue L.A. Rams cap. Then it's a handshake, "God bless you" and a brand-new dollar from "Father Dollar Bill."

The money goes for anything from crack cocaine to toothpaste, but Father Maurice Chase, a Roman Catholic priest, said he does not mind what his charity is spent on.

Always dressed in black clerical garb, he attracts a straggly line of hundreds of men and a few women when he arrives at the sidewalk across from the Union Rescue Mission on Sunday afternoons.

Bodyguards give out numbered cards and struggle to keep the line in order as Chase fishes out the bills from his pants pocket. He hands them over, with a few questions about health and hometowns.

"I like to think that everybody should have at least a dollar in their pocket, and a lot of these people don't," he said.

Chase, the chaplain at Norte Dame Academy, a girls' school on Los Angeles' prosperous West Side, gathers the money from wealthy friends who know that he frequents Skid Row. He names Irene Dunne, Loretta Young, Frank Sinatra and Gregory Peck as some of his benefactors, along with Georgia Frontiere, owner of the Rams.

"My heart breaks for the people down here who are just flotsam," he said. "It's kind of a parish to me ... I'm not Santa Claus down here, but I'm someone they love."

Chase, who just turned 59, has been a priest since he was 24. He got into fund-raising through his friendship with former President Dwight D. Eisenhower, and especially his wife, Mamie, when he was assigned to a parish in Palm Desert, Calif.

He worked several years as a fund-raiser for Loyola Marymount University in Los Angeles. His personal mission to Skid Row began 14 years ago.

At first he looked for the neediest people, he said. But there are so many desperate lives in the bleak blocks of downtown Los Angeles that he gave up and decided to hand out a dollar at a time. He has been coming to Skid Row on Sundays for about a year.

Pregnant women and families get larger donations. ("Don't tell the others," he whispers to them.)

"It's a good thing," said John Williams, originally of Detroit, who lined up behind 450 other men on a recent Sunday to wait his turn for a buck and a blessing. He said he had been living on the streets for a month.

"This way every person can do their own thing. It's like, optional," he said.

Others in the line said they would use their dollars for milk, bus fare or orange juice. But "most people, they take the money and go buy some brew or some wine," said Horace Herndon, a former car salesman who said he had been living on Skid Row for eight months.

"As for me, I'm going to buy a joint of marijuana," he said. "If I drank, I'd get depressed."

One man said he would buy a lottery ticket. "Am I ever going to win the lottery?" he asked the priest, who laughed and made the sign of the cross over the dollar to give it an extra blessing.

But many were looking forward to a pack of cigarettes.

"They last longer than those other things," Williams said.

Chase's $1 handouts draw mixed reactions from the activists who try to help the tattered men and women of Skid Row every day.

They say that a man who gives the invocation at high-society dinners and passes out at least $50,000 a year could do more good by paying for beds in a homeless shelter or by funding a food program.

"He's not just a simple priest," said John Dillon, executive director of the Chrysalis Center, a Skid Row self-help agency. "He's a major fund-raiser and maybe this is his way of staying in touch with the poor, and maybe that's good, but where is the money going?"

"To me, it's not what the church ought to be doing," said Catherine Morris, a member of the Los Angeles Catholic Worker Community, which operates a four-day-a-week lunch line for the homeless. "It is the moneyed church of Los Angeles passing out money, and that isn't the church's role. The church's role is being a spiritual leader. ... It just seems like fast money gone quickly, but gone nowhere."

Chase is aware of the doubts. If he could nail down a major donation, he would like to set up a 500-bed shelter. But he argues that the spiritual benefit of a blessing and the personal dignity that comes from having a dollar in the pocket are also worthwhile.

"One of my joys is looking at a face and seeing a face light up," he said. "If I saved all that money up, it would be a long time before anything came of it. And meanwhile, what about the people who could have a dollar to buy a cold drink on a warm afternoon?"

DePalma Prepares For Opening

New Yorker Story Basis For Movie

By Bob Thomas
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

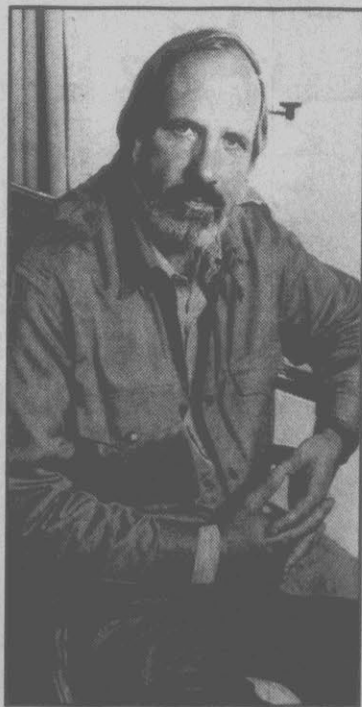

LOS ANGELES — Twenty years ago, Brian DePalma was electrified by a New Yorker article about a squad of army soldiers who kidnapped, raped and murdered a Vietnamese woman and then were brought to justice by an outraged squad member.

This month movie audiences will be able to see DePalma's film about that event, "Casualties of War," based on Daniel Lang's article and starring Sean Penn and Michael J. Fox.

The director was here from his New York base to help publicize the film, a process of which he is not fond. For some unexplained reason, he begins each interview recording the identity of the reporter on videotape.

A large, bearded man in slouchy clothes, DePalma became entranced with movies while studying physics at Columbia University. He switched to theater arts at Sarah Lawrence, earned a master's degree and directed his first film, "The Wedding Party," with unknowns Jill Clayburgh and Robert De Niro.

DePalma became famous with suspense films, such as "Sisters."

BRIAN DePALMA

"Carrie," "Dressed to Kill" and "Blowout." Then he launched into gangster films with "Scarface" and his first blockbuster, "The Untouchables."

Here are the highlights of a recent interview with The Associated Press.

Q. Do directors get typed, the same as actors?

A. Sure. It depends on your last hit.

Q. You got typed earlier in your career with suspense pictures. Were you comfortable with that?

A. Well, I thought you could learn a lot with suspense pictures. You have to tell stories purely with pictures. You don't rely on dialogue and character. You rely on building sequences that are emotionally suspenseful to the audience. It was a great training ground to learn all kind of visual grammar which can be used later in your career for other types of stories.

I became very good at it and hence was called "the new Hitchcock," "the master of the macabre," whatever you want to call it.

Q. Was it difficult to break out of suspense?

A. Not really. All you have to do is make a very successful picture in a different genre. I started to make successful gangster pictures. Those have been my biggest successes. So for the wide audience, I'm known more for them than my earlier suspense pictures.

Q. What was the inception of "Casualties of War"?

A. I read it in 1969. I found it a very tragic and heart-rending story of what happened to a specific squad during this particularly tragic war. I felt it was the best story about the Vietnam War, dealing in a microcosm that told what the whole war was about. I tried to get control of it then, but it was bought and developed by somebody else. But it followed the history of many Vietnam pictures and never got made.

After the success of "The Untouchables" at Paramount, I was able to get ("Casualties") developed with a script by David Rabe. (Producer) Art Linson, who had a long relationship with Sean Penn, was able to get him interested. I had been talking to Michael J. Fox about other projects, and he read the script and wanted to play the part of Eriksson. Then we had a package.

Again we were put into turnaround (Paramount declined the package). Fortunately, Dawn Steel was now at Columbia and had known about the project. She got it made.

Q. It's quite a change of character for Fox. Did he have any misgivings?

A. He was eager to do it from the start. I thought it was very important to have Michael bring his particular audience who have followed him on the TV show, a whole generation of kids who have had not had a direct experience with the war — to have them see the war through his eyes. Michael has a kind of inherent integrity and innocence that works very well for this particular character.

Q. It wasn't quite such a stretch for Sean Penn to play an intense character, was it?

A. No. Sean has the ability to take on a whole different skin when he plays a character. He put on about 30 pounds and built up his muscles. We had a long indoctrination of technical advisers taking guys out into a kind of basic training and spending hours and hours working on what his particular sergeant would do. Thus, his men would look up to him and relate to him as "The Sarge."

Author Is Ever A Bridesmaid Grace Kelly's Attendant Pens Book On 'The Chosen'

By Carla Hall
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

Everyone wanted to be Grace Kelly, says Judith Balaban Quine.

So if you got to be a bridesmaid at her wedding to Prince Rainier of Monaco, you got close.

"No matter what I did in life and what I accomplished, people were still fascinated," says Quine, one of those bridesmaids. "I understood and accepted it. We used to joke about it the older we got. We used to say to Grace, 'Someday we'll all sit out on some porch in rockers at the Jersey shore with our shawls and canes, 108 years old, and someone will go by and say, oh, there they are, the bride and bridesmaids.'"

For the still-fascinated, Quine has written "The Bridesmaids," which covers not only the April 19, 1956, wedding in lavish — and exhaustive — detail, but also the turbulence of the bridal party's separate lives over three decades.

The women were, as Quine writes, "the chosen" — educated, well born and determined to wed. They were either virgins or discreet about their experiences, women who never shared the extent of their sexual knowledge, not even with girlfriends.

They married young, divorced (all but one bridesmaid and, of course, Grace), remarried in some cases, and changed their outlooks and values with the times.

Grace, according to Quine, didn't. Long admired for her involvement in arts activities and charitable causes, Grace went from proper, sexy film star to sedate, elegant princess. In 1982, after Grace suffered a stroke that apparently caused her to drive off a road, her death was front-page news.

But over the years, the princess became strict in a way that Grace Kelly would have chafed under in her acting days.

"She made countless public statements opposing the new sexual freedom, relaxed dress codes, and nudity and violence in films," writes the author, who was puzzled to see Grace become so schoolmarmish.

"I think (it was) because she wanted to keep her children so protected," Quine muses. "I think the fact that you couldn't stop your children from doing certain things frightened her."

The two women met for the first time when the movie star came to Quine's wedding to Jay Kanter, Grace's agent. Quine watched her with interest, and what she says she saw was a woman who could dissolve into girlish giggles on the dance floor, a person with some wit.

"The beauty was so awesome," Quine says, "it was hard not to think there wasn't vacancy behind it. ... But there were little moments like when she went through the receiving line. Somebody thought we were all crying during the ceremony but we weren't, we were laughing, and when she winked at me I knew that she got that. I knew this is not a dummy."

In addition to Quine, the royal bride chose as her bridesmaids:

-Maree Frisby Rambo, a classmate from Stevens High School in Grace's hometown, Germantown, Pa., and a young divorced mother.

-Bettina Thompson Gray, a classmate from the American Academy of Dramatic Arts, a wife and mother and a former roommate of Grace's at the Barbizon, the rooming house for women that aspiring young models and actresses sought out in New York.

-Sally Parrish Richardson, a young, married actress, already retired, and a former Barbizon resident.

-Carolyn Scott Reybold, a Seventeen magazine cover girl and wife of a businessman.

-Peggy Kelly Davis, one of Grace's two sisters, a vivacious wife and mother — "the child who knew her father best, the child he liked best," Quine wrote.

-The most famous bridesmaid — stage and film actress Rita Gam, who had married and divorced Sidney Lumet and had just married publisher Tom Guinzburg, whose father had founded Viking Press.

Writes Quine, in one of the more gushing moments in the book: "Our hearts were young and gay, and we were bound by the shared experience of traipsing off together for this great adventure with our darling friend."

Quine's own life has evolved in the entertainment world. The daughter of a former president of Paramount Pictures, she grew up a New York hotel brat (the Savoy Plaza) who summured in the country. "Most of the places I lived in as a child have since become public facilities," she writes.

She dated Montgomery Clift (at the premiere of "A Place in the Sun," a scissors-wielding fan aiming to clip a lock of the actor's hair cut off a chunk of Quine's instead) and was engaged, briefly, to Merv Griffin. She became engaged to Kanter at age 20 after dating him for two weeks.

Quine's life with Kanter in New York was a whirlwind of parties and theater, with Marlon Brando dropping by with a new bride (Brando was best man at her wedding to Kanter) and Marilyn Monroe stopping by to get dressed in their apartment.

Record producer David Geffen once confided to Quine's adult daughters how envious he had been of the Kanter's lifestyle, which he had glimpsed as a messenger for the William Morris office. "He said to my daughters, 'No matter how much fun you ever have, you'll never have as much fun as your mother.' I said, 'David, what an awful thing to say to my children!'"

As her marriage to Kanter was disintegrating, Quine started a romance with actor Tony Franciosa that led to a second marriage, which also ended in divorce. She and husband No. 3, former karate sports promoter Don Quine, live in Beverly Hills. She's been a civic and social activist in California, and her life has not been tame.

'The beauty was so awesome, it was hard not to think there wasn't vacancy behind it.'

Judith Balaban Quine

Her book is thick with names of the famous, from Brando to former congressman Allard Lowenstein (a New York City school chum), but Quine is not the snooty sort. She's sweet and gabby, stylishly dressed for a morning interview and fretting over still-drying immaculately French-manicured nails.

Settling down at a table at the Jockey Club, she confesses sheepishly that she still smokes, as a reporter starts to move the ashtray.

She writes about taking LSD in the '60s under the guidance of a Beverly Hills doctor before severe panic attacks made her turn away; she says she accompanied Joan Collins to New Jersey so the actress could get an abortion, and later Collins returned the favor when she went with Quine to Mexico.

Being part of the bridal party meant an invitation to sail in first-class quarters on a cruise ship from New York to Monaco. There were shipboard parties and charades and, in Monaco, formal balls. Upon arrival, they were greeted with a fanfare of sailing vessels. The bridesmaids were ensconced at the Hotel de Paris. The bride was housed in an apartment in the royal palace and forbidden to have any male visitors.

The bridesmaids dodged the press, lugged trunks of newly purchased clothes and footed the bills.

Most of the bridesmaids went through trying transitions. Bettina Thompson Gray, now divorced, became an avid traveler. Rita Gam continues to act and produces documentaries. Sally Parrish Richardson and her husband maintained a relatively placid and contented life, seemingly unaffected by the political and social upheavals of the '60s. Widowed several years ago, she began working after her children went to college, first as a director of volunteer services at a New York hospital and then as an actress.

Lacy Angel Is Made On Plastic Canvas

Add the crowning touch to your Christmas tree with this lacy angel worked on seven-mesh plastic canvas with candlewicking thread, embroidery floss and yarn. This elegant angel is made in delicate off-white and rose trimmed with gold braid, pearl beads and lace.

Start now and you can make several in plenty of time for gift-giving or Christmas bazaars. The 9½-inch angel can also be used as a table ornament or centerpiece.

To obtain directions for making the Lacy Angel, send your request for Leaflet No. Z-082089 with $2 and a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope to: Pat Trexler Crafts, The Daily Reflector, P.O. Box 419148, Kansas City, Mo. 64141.

Or you may order Kit No. N-082089 by sending a check or money order for $17.95 to Pat Trexler Crafts at the same address. The kit price includes shipping charges, full instructions, precut plastic canvas and all other materials required to complete this project.

Dear Pat: I'm one of those gals who hates to throw away anything that I might later find some use for. Usually my odds and ends of leftover yarns and plastic canvas just languishes in boxes and bags, but last year I found a neat way to use them.

On one square of the canvas, I stitched the word "Clean" and on another I stitched "Dirty." I worked a border of a simple pattern stitch and filled in the background on each piece. I joined them on three sides, stuck a magnet between them and then whipped the last side together.

Pat's Pointers

It sticks right on my dishwasher as a reminder that it's either OK to add more "dirties" or that it needs to be run. I've done several more since and keep some in my purse to give to friends when I see them.

They're so quick to do -- I can finish one or more in an evening after dinner -- and have been such a hit that I am making quite a few this summer for our church bazaar this fall. Try one, you'll love it! -- Betsy R., Appleton, Wis.

Dear Betsy: What a good idea. I'm sure my readers will join me in a big "Thank you!"

Another thought for small gifts made from leftovers comes from an unsigned California reader who makes needlepoint or counted cross-stitch bookmarks. She suggests working a three-letter monogram vertically as a good way to personalize it.

If you are using plastic canvas, the 10-mesh is ideal, although you can use seven-mesh. A quick way to finish either is by backing them with a piece of felt secured with craft glue.

Like most of you, I am also squirrel -- like when it comes to leftover needlecraft materials. I'd love to hear from others who have found good ways to make use of them for knitting, crochet, cross-stitch or needlepoint.

Dear Pat: I usually use just the simple lacing -- or whipping -- stitch to join or finish the edges on plastic needlepoint canvas projects. I once tried an alternate method you had written about in your column and liked it very much. But now I can't remember how it was done and I didn't save the column. I believe you called it picot edging. Could you repeat the directions? -- Wanda M., Butler, Pa.

Dear Wanda: I'll be happy to. Here's how you do it if you are finishing an edge that is not to be joined to another.

Step 1: Bring the needle up in the second hole from one corner. Step 2: Take the needle to the back of your piece and bring it up in the corner hole. Step 3: Skip over these stitches and one empty hole, then bring the needle up in the following hole. Step 4: Take the needle to the back and bring it up in the hole you just skipped. Repeat Steps 3 and 4 across taking extra stitches as needed to cover the corners.

When two pieces are to be joined, work in the same manner, but hold the two together with right sides facing out. You will be working through matching holes of each piece, thus joining and finishing at the same time.

China Instability Keeps Tourists From Hong Kong

By Dan Biers
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

HONG KONG — Tourism has fallen off sharply in Hong Kong since the suppression of the students' pro-democracy movement in neighboring China.

Hong Kong's tourism boom came to an abrupt halt June 3-4 when the Chinese army rolled into Beijing's Tiananmen Square and opened fire on thousands of demonstrators.

Legions of travelers, including many Americans, immediately canceled trips to China that included stopovers in this British colony, tourist industry officials said. Other visitors are staying away from Hong Kong because of its proximity to China.

The Hong Kong Tourist Association estimates that the number of visitors to Hong Kong in June was 20 percent off from the same month a year earlier and believes July's figures will turn out to be similar when compiled.

The decline has affected the $4.2-billion tourism industry from the plush five-star hotels to the retailers who sell knick-knacks at popular tourist haunts.

One hotel executive said the current situation is good for customers, because hotels have to be more guest-oriented.

"But for us it will be tough," he added. "We've been spoiled in the past."

Internal figures kept by the hotel industry, based on 20 leading hotels, indicate average occupancy plummeted to 75 percent in June from 91 percent a year earlier. The South China Morning Post newspaper said the rate in July was 64 percent.

The news also is glum in the village of Stanley, a 30-minute bus ride from downtown Hong Kong. It had become a tourist mecca because of its narrow streets lined with stores selling discount clothes, gaudy T-shirts and typical Hong Kong gewgaws, such as mechanical toy pandas.

The Stanley streets, often crowded with tourists, have become uncommonly quiet even for the slow summer season, with some retailers glumly seated outside stores empty of customers.

"The number of tourists has dropped since June 4, everybody knows that," groused Ken Fu of the 23 Market in Stanley. In the clothing shop's window was a sign advertising a "Crazy Sale" of sweaters that had prices slashed by two-thirds after the Beijing massacre.

"Because of the events in Beijing, we have had a great loss in business," said a clerk at the Stanley Chinese Products Co.

Ian Wade, chairman of the Retail Management Association of Hong Kong, said sales in the colony were "very depressed" in June. While he believes businesses are recovering, retail stores that depend on tourism are probably still down 25 percent on average.

Tourism, which accounts for roughly 10 percent of Hong Kong's gross domestic product, had been on a long hot streak.

Nearly 5.6 million visitors, primarily tourists, came to Hong Kong last year, up 24 percent from 1987 and 154 percent from 1979, according to tourist association statistics. About 2.4 million visitors came to the colony in the first five months of this year, a 15-percent increase from the same period in 1988.

Most of those tourists came from Japan, where the rising yen currency made Hong Kong prices cheap, and from Taiwan, where the Nationalist Chinese government recently gave permission for its citizens to visit China.

Local hotels were delighted, maintaining occupancy rates at levels of around 90 percent or higher. Generally, occupancy rates of about 50 percent for established hotels and 65 percent for new hotels are necessary to break even in Hong Kong.

About three dozen more hotels are expected to open within the next 30 months. A 91-story hotel with 2,400 rooms is scheduled to open sometime after 1993.

It is not clear whether all those new projects will remain viable as existing hotels scramble to return to pre-June 4 occupancy levels. In one special promotion since the Beijing crackdown, 37 hotels have offered six nights for the price of four.

Meanwhile, the tourism association has been spreading the message overseas that Hong Kong remains safe and is not part of China. The organization also has increased invitations to foreign journalists to visit the colony.

But the key to recovery may well be the plight of China's own tourism industry, which also came to a virtual halt after June 4 and has yet to recover. Recent statistics indicate that more than one-fourth of visitors to Hong Kong were traveling to China.

Abnormal Births Should Be Treated The Same

Editor's note: Abby is off on a two-week vacation, but she left behind some of her favorite letters taken from her best-selling book, "The Best of Dear Abby."

Dear Abby: Please tell me what to do when a friend has had an abnormal child (a Mongoloid).

I certainly can't send a card or gift of "congratulations" to someone who has had such a tragedy. Would a message of "sympathy" be more in order? Or should something like this be acknowledged at all? — Oklahoman

Dear Oklahoman: A child, normal or otherwise, is a child to his mother. Don't differentiate. Send a little gift with your love and best wishes.

Dear Abby: You once said, "There are no cold women — only clumsy men." How right you were.

I am a man in my middle 50s. I'm short, balding and slightly overweight, but I have been with plenty of women, and I have yet to find one that's frigid.

I am not saying this to brag, but once I make love to a woman I can't get rid of her. A woman needs to hear that she's desirable, lovable and terrific. It's not so much what I do, it's what I say. A woman needs to hear that she's needed, wanted and loved. If a woman is "frigid," it's because the man is selfish, impatient and doesn't know how to turn her on. — Doing All Right

Dear Abby
Abigail Van Buren

Dear Doing: You are living proof of what I have long contended. Words are a powerful aphrodisiac. If a woman hears the right things from her lover, he's got it (and her) made.

Dear Abby: My husband hates to spend money! I cut my own hair and make my own clothes, and I have to account for every nickel I spend. Meanwhile he has a stack of savings bonds put away that would choke a cow. How do I get some money out of him before we are both called to our final judgment? He says he's saving for a rainy day. — Forty Years Hitched

Dear Hitched: Tell him it's raining!

Dear Abby: My husband has a terminal illness. The doctor said they don't know how long he'll last. Would it be proper for me to wear a large black picture hat with a wide brim and a black sheer veil over it for his funeral? My friend says veils are worn only with small hats, but I am a large woman and don't look good in small hats. Also, could I wear a black tailored gabardine suit with a green and blue flowered blouse? Or must I wear all black? If I wear all black, would it be all right to wear one large piece of costume jewelry? And if I wore black hose and black gloves, would people think I was overdoing it? — Preparing Ahead

Dear Preparing: Don't go overboard on getting an outfit together — he might live!

Dear Abby: I wanted to call up my postmaster and tell him a thing or two because I knew he ate my pension check, but I couldn't find his telephone number in the book. I called information, and that's when I found out he had an unlisted number! That really made me mad, so since I knew where he lived, I drove to his house and told his wife off.

Abby, as a taxpayer, I would like to know why a public servant like a postmaster would have an unlisted telephone number? — Taxpayer

Dear Taxpayer: It is probably to protect him from people who "know" he ate their pension checks.

If you would like to write to Abby, send your letter to Abigail Van Buren, P.O. Box 69440, Los Angeles, CA. 90069. For a personal, non-published reply, enclose a self-addressed stamped envelope.

Tumor Pain Builds Up Over Months

Ever have a headache that feels beyond any number Excedrin could come up with?

If you are still around to read this, it probably wasn't a brain tumor, but that indeed is what a brain tumor can feel like.

There are differences, however, between the garden variety headache and the one that is symptomatic of a brain tumor, said Dr. Michael Saleman, chief of neurological surgery for University of Maryland Hospital in Baltimore.

"The headache of a brain tumor is going to steadily build up in intensity over days, weeks, months," Saleman said.

Gary Puckett Tries Comeback

Aging Rocker Returns With New Sound On A New Album, Minus The Union Gap

By Nicholas K. Geranios
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

UNION GAP, Wash. — The man who sang the eternal question, "Woman, have you got cheating on your mind?" is back with a new sound and harsh criticism for the music of the 1980s.

Gary Puckett, minus the Union Gap, plans to release his first album in nearly 20 years this fall, and warns his old fans not to expect the same old sound.

"If they want another record like 'Young Girl,' it's not what they're going to get," he said. "You can't (make) a record that sounds like 1968."

"But it's still me singing. The voice is recognizable."

The 46-year-old Puckett's booming voice was one of the most recognizable in rock in the late '60s. He grew up in Yakima and named his original band after this small suburb. But he contends that the band name was initially chosen because of his interest in the Civil War and especially the Union forces.

"When I thought of that, I decided why not call it Union Gap," Puckett said. "It meant something to me. It was a sneaky little twist nobody would understand."

The name also allowed the group to dress up in Civil War uniforms, with Puckett wearing the rank of general.

But the whole issue is academic because the Union Gap broke up over creative differences in 1971, and Puckett now tours with three different musicians as the Gary Puckett Band.

Puckett, who lives in San Diego, Calif., hasn't had a new record since 1971, but has signed an agreement with AVM America Inc., a record company based in Venice, Calif., and plans to have a new album out in the fall.

AVM is a new company whose president, Terry Powell, was a publicist for CBS Records during Puckett's prime, the 1967-69 period when the Union Gap came out with such songs as "Woman, Woman," "Over You," "This Girl Is a Woman Now" and "Lady Willpower."

Puckett's on-going popularity in Germany inspired the company to sign him and produce an album. Powell said, "We think very highly of Gary," he said. "All his old records are very popular in Europe."

While Puckett hasn't released a record since 1971's "Keep the Customer Satisfied," he has not been idle. He performed on the Happy Together reunion tour of several 1960s bands in 1984, and was an opening act for The Monkees recent reunion tour.

For the past few years he has been playing fairs and family festivals. His audiences have primarily been his own age group and youngsters who are turned off by heavy metal.

"It's amazing how many of them are disdainful of hard rock," Puckett said. "They're not into the headbanger stuff. It's kind of encouraging."

Heavy metal and rap music deserve their own categories, he said. "Don't call it rock."

Puckett was born in Hibbing, Minn., and his family moved to Yakima when he was 5. The family spent a couple of years in Tacoma before moving back to Yakima when Puckett was in the sixth grade. They moved again near the end of his junior year of high school, and he graduated from high school in Twin Falls, Idaho. He formed the band while a college student at San Diego State in the mid-1960s.

Despite his roots in the region, Puckett rarely makes it back to the Pacific Northwest. His performance at the Central Washington State Fair in 1987 was his first time back in years, he said. He was recently here to perform at an antique car show.

"Some of the people I knew (came) to the fair," he said. "But there was kind of a lot of distance between us. It's hard to remember back. But I always remember it as my home."

Meatier Roles

SANTA ANA, Calif. (AP) — Actress Jennifer Tilly, the fast-talking ditty gambler's girlfriend in the movie "Let It Ride," says she likes being one of Hollywood's busiest actresses, but would prefer some meatier roles.

Miss Tilly, sister of actress Meg Tilly, said she was on location for the movie when the trade paper Daily Variety named her Hollywood's busiest actress, with 11 films to her credit in the last three years.

"I knew I worked a lot, but I was really surprised I was the busiest," she said in a recent interview. "Of course that kind of statistic is pretty misleading. I do a lot of small character parts while some other actresses with bigger roles work on them a year or more."

"I don't think Meryl Streep called to complain that she wasn't on the list."

Firm Brings Emergency Room To Movie Sets

By Patty Reinert
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BALTIMORE — When a medical emergency arises on the set of a movie, it's not always part of the script.

So when Dr. James D'Orta is not setting a broken bone at Baltimore's Franklin Square Hospital or patching up a shooting victim at Georgetown University Medical Center in Washington, the emergency medicine specialist usually can be found on location.

D'Orta is the founder of LifeStar International, a Washington-based medical consulting firm that expands the walls of the emergency room to movie sets.

He and his colleagues have provided advance planning and emergency medical care on the set for three recent movies: "Licence to Kill" and Arnold Schwarzenegger's "Total Recall," both filmed in Mexico City; and "The Abyss," an underwater thriller filmed in an abandoned nuclear power plant that was converted into a film studio in Gaffney, S.C.

"We're like the sprinkler heads in skyscrapers," said D'Orta. "Producers with vision can see the necessity of taking preventive measures to ensure the safety of their crews. It's several hundreds of millions of dollars of movie budgets that we're protecting."

According to the New York-based Center for Safety in the Arts, more than 1,000 injuries are reported each year in the U.S. film industry, and since 1980, at least 19 people have been killed in helicopter accidents on movie sets. Actor Vic Morrow and two children were killed in 1982 during the filming of "Twilight Zone: The Movie," and five people died during the filming of Chuck Norris' "Delta Force 2," in the Philippines last May.

D'Orta, 38, started the company after accompanying his producer-cousin, Albert "Cubby" Broccoli, to Morocco to film another James Bond movie, "The Living Daylights," released by United Artists in 1987.

It was D'Orta's job to keep the new James Bond, Timothy Dalton, and the rest of the cast and crew in good health while the movie was filmed in the oasis of Ouarzazate, in the Sahara Desert. Time lost on the set because of injuries or illness cost more than $250,000 per day, or about $500 per minute. The doctor's work also took him off the film set and into what he described as "a real-life James Bond drama." He was approached in the desert by soldiers who were seeking help for the victim of a motorcycle accident, the guard to the prince of Bahrain.

"They said, 'The prince will give you anything if you will come and help us,'" D'Orta said. "When we got there, the prince was begging me to help the man and the guy was lying unconscious on the street. He had a blood clot on the brain."

To the amazement of passersby, D'Orta inserted an intravenous needle and hooked the patient to a cardiac monitor. The 007 airplane was summoned to take the guard to a hospital in Rabat, Morocco.

Mission accomplished, D'Orta left the hospital, but was stopped by soldiers demanding his passport.

"I told them, 'It's back in the desert on the movie set,'" D'Orta said. "They put me in a room where I sat and drank tea for six hours until the king gave permission for me to leave."

D'Orta's patient recovered after surgery. "If it weren't for Jimmy, I don't think he would have lived," said Michael G. Wilson, who produced and wrote the Bond flick. "It's that kind of response that is very important to us, so when it came time to film our next movie, we wanted him back."

D'Orta drafted Dr. Craig Feied, an emergency physician at George Washington University Medical Center in Washington, and Vincent Young, a Harvard business graduate, and founded LifeStar.

D'Orta, Feied and a network of hundreds of emergency physicians throughout the country have traveled to movie sets in such places as the Philippines, Austria, Tangiers, Mexico and the Soviet Union. In addition to motion pictures, the company also provided medical consultation for Amnesty International's 1988 Human Rights Now! concert tour, which performed in major cities all over the world.

D'Orta also helped coordinate emergency medical teams after the 1985 earthquake in Mexico City, and was part of a group of physicians who traveled to the Soviet Union after last fall's earthquake in Armenia.

"The thing that makes us different from other entrepreneurs and businessmen is that we truly practice medicine," D'Orta said. "That gives us more credibility."

LifeStar uses computer links to the World Health Organization, the Centers for Disease Control and the State Department to analyze everything from rumors of unrest in Grenada to reports of a new outbreak of resistant malaria in Zambia. The company checks each person's immunizations, types their blood and has access to blood that has been screened to be disease-free by U.S. and British standards.

Because many medications in the United States don't have exact equivalents in other countries, LifeStar sends along a well-stocked portable pharmacy.

Corbin Bernsen will star in 'Breaking Point' on TBS

Bernsen Gets New Experience In Weekend Cable TV Thriller

By Jerry Buck
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — Corbin Bernsen was looking for a new acting experience when he accepted the lead role in the mind-bending thriller "Breaking Point" on cable television.

He plays a World War II American intelligence officer whose capture just weeks before D-Day gives the Nazis an opportunity to pry out the invasion secrets in a most diabolical and deceptive manner.

"Breaking Point" gets its first showing on Turner Network Television on Friday and will be repeated Saturday and Sunday. It's a remake of the 1964 film starring James Garner.

"I did it like an Alfred Hitchcock movie or something from the 'Twilight Zone,'" says Bernsen, who stars regularly as lawyer Arnie Becker on NBC's "L.A. Law."

"That's what drew me to it. I've always wanted to do something in that genre. Since it's for cable we took risks. The wonderful thing is that after it's approved they leave the artists alone to do their work. It's not as pat as regular television. The experience was that of doing a feature film. I wanted to experience what my character feels, the pain, the torture, the freedom, and to be able to have the audience feel it, too."

He plays Maj. Jefferson Pike, who is abducted by the Germans, tortured briefly and wakes to find the war is over and he's in an American hospital. Or so he's led to believe. It's a plot to learn the secrets of D-Day. John Glover is the "American" doctor and Joanna Pacula is the nurse he falls in love with after being told his wife has died.

"We filmed the exteriors at Lake Tahoe. There's a wonderful old school and a retreat that looks like an Alpine chalet. When I first read the script I said, 'Great, England and Germany. I can take my son to meet his grandparents,'" said Bernsen, whose wife is English actress Amanda Pays.

"Well, we filmed England in Pasadena and Germany at Lake Tahoe. Peter Markle directed, and it has some interesting camera work. John Glover and I had a great relationship and I think our scenes are well written and work well. Pike's led to believe the war's over and he talks about the coming invasion of Normandy. Then he finds out he's been deceived and he hatches his own deception."

Bernsen did get to Europe, however. He and his wife spent a month traveling with their four-month-old son Oliver.

"Breaking Point" is Bernsen's first movie for cable. His feature film work in a busy schedule in the past few years included "Major League," "Disorganized Crime," "Bert Rigby, You're a Fool" and "Hello, Again."

Bernsen said he would talk soon to the producers of "L.A. Law" to see what would happen to Arnie Becker next season.

"I know what needs to be done," he said. "He needs some re-evaluation. Arnie hasn't quite figured it out. All life has to reproduce but Arnie's caught in a cycle of refusing to commit himself. He hasn't grown up enough to accept the moral conventions. The thing that I put into Arnie is that he senses something is missing. I don't think I could play a character who doesn't recognize it."

"I think Arnie is terrified of marriage. As a divorce lawyer he knows all the built-in problems. I think he also sees it as a progression toward death. He's trying to hold onto his youth."

He said one of the advantages of doing "Breaking Point" is that Pike is so different from Arnie.

"It's good to do a character who has his values and his loyalties straight," he said. "After 'L.A. Law,' I'd like to do more features. I'll have had seven years of a family and a house and a base. I think it'd be fun to live and work other places in the world. I'd like to base myself in Europe for a while. I could travel and spend time with my wife and son."

Bernsen grew up in Los Angeles. His father, Harry Bernsen is a former agent and now a producer. His mother, actress Jeanne Cooper, has been on the CBS soap opera "The Young and the Restless" for the past 15 years.

He said he occasionally works with his father in developing projects. "I'm working on an idea for a stage musical and I have an idea for a series for Amanda and myself."

Networks Are Looking Forward To Cable Channel Competition

By Michael Hill
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

There is a feeling around the big three networks that eventually the playing field will be level and they will once again have no trouble making plenty of money. That day will come when all the channels begging for a piece of your TV time have to make their own programs.

Currently, many of the channels ride others' coattails into profitability. The pay cable channels are hitched to the feature film industry, the music channels are tied in with the music industry, and many of the more popular basic cable channels — those that you don't have to pay extra for — actually live off the networks.

That is, their most popular offerings are old network shows sold in syndication. The same is true for most independent stations around the country, which are responsible for more erosion of the network audience than cable. These channels and stations show the programs that the networks paid to develop and produce, and in doing so the independents cut into the networks' profits.

So, once everybody is watching movies on rented videocassettes, and the syndicators start demanding prohibitively big bucks from cable operators who want to put their reruns on nationwide — thus dam-ing the lucrative market-by-market sales to stations — the cable channels will have to get around to making their own programs.

Then they will be playing the networks' game. After all, the networks have been doing this for years. And, say what you will about them, no one else has as much experience figuring out what the bulk of the American public wants to watch on television.

If you want to get an idea of why the networks are looking forward to the day when the cable channels must match them production for production, check out what the USA

Network has Wednesday night. USA, normally a rerun-filled channel, has recently announced a big move into original programming with a bunch of made-for-cable movies. Wednesday's movie, "Nightlife," is the latest offering.

The cable channels usually have a few more bucks to spend and, for "Nightlife," they were spent getting Maryam d'Abo ("Living Daylights") and Ben Cross ("Chariots of Fire") into the cast. Beyond that, though, "Nightlife" isn't any better than a run-of-the-mill made-for-TV movie on the networks.

Horoscope

From The Carroll Righter Institute

FORECAST FOR THURSDAY Aug. 24
ARIES (March 21 to April 19): An exchange of ideas is beneficial. You treasure your closeness to family and friends. A loving attitude will bring results.
TAURUS (April 20 to May 20): Stay clear of controversial issues. Direct your enthusiasm into playful activities. Relax with someone with whom you are comfortable.
GEMINI (May 21 to June 21): If you are having difficulty loving someone just as they are, take a second look at the relationship. It may be time to call it quits.
MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21): Restless? You may need a vacation or change of pace. Cash flow resumes or increases. Avoid clandestine or secret activities.
LEO (July 22 to Aug. 21): If you feel unfashionable, it may be time for a style makeover. Buy what you can afford and make yourself socially comfortable.
VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22): You have freedom today to be yourself and develop good communications with others. Break from the status quo and be original.
LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22): Someone may assume a position of authority and attempt to manipulate a situation. Money picture brightens. Start a diary today.
SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21): Intuition is at a high point! Today is perfect for developing creative ideas. Tactfully approach someone with immature attitudes.
SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21): Look your best and be prepared for a surprise meeting, possibly romantic. A wish can be fulfilled. Shop for a special gift.
CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20): Keep your composure if a companion gets offended. Go easy with love and its related spending. Get agreements in writing.
AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19): A mutual attraction can be brought together. Follow the rules at work and stay busy. Evening hours have humorous overtones.
PISCES (Feb. 20 to March 20): Family members may be expecting more than you can give. Let everyone know where you are coming from and why!

She cashed four hearts and two diamonds, then gave West the lead with a spade. West cashed his four tricks in the suit, but then was down to the K 10 of clubs. His forced club return allowed declarer to score two tricks in the suit for her contract.

On some hands, counting the distribution reveals the winning line. Here, counting the points was the key to success. Since the club finesse

West led a spade, won by declarer. That gave declarer eight running tricks, and there was no question the ninth would have to come from the club suit. That might have been enough to make most declarers take the club finesse, but that would have been a futile exercise.

For his opening bid, West had to have the king of clubs, and to pursue a course that is bound to lose is the height of folly. Instead, declarer opted to hope for a favorable lie of

John Candy Rides 'Uncle Buck' To Top Of Weekend Box Office

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

HOLLYWOOD — The John Candy vehicle "Uncle Buck" took first place in the weekend box office revue, beating the highly touted "Parenthood," "The Abyss" and "Casualties of War."

Director John Hughes' comedy grossed $8.8 million, according to figures released Monday by Exhibitor Relations Inc. The movie stars Candy as a peculiar relative struggling to babysit his nephew and two nieces.

Meanwhile, attendance at "A Nightmare on Elm Street 5: The Dream Child" dropped by nearly 50 percent and the film finished eighth in its second week of release, indicating Freddy Krueger's final demise may arrive sooner rather than later.

Ron Howard's "Parenthood" finished second after two weeks in first place. A bittersweet commentary on the American family, "Parenthood" stars Steve Martin and Jason Robards and had ticket sales of $7.6 million.

The underwater spectacular "The Abyss" continued to generate steady business in third with a box-office take of $7.2 million. The movie features Ed Harris and Mary Elizabeth Mastrantonio trapped on the ocean floor in a special-effects laden epic.

"Casualties of War," the new Vietnam movie starring Michael J.

Fox and Sean Penn, opened with an unimpressive $5.2 million in wide release to claim fourth place. Directed by Brian De Palma, "Casualties of War" tells the story of the rape and murder of a Vietnamese girl by a group of U.S. soldiers.

"When Harry Met Sally..." the romantic comedy pitting Billy Crystal and Meg Ryan as best friends who become lovers, finished in fifth by collecting $4.9 million. It was followed in sixth by "Lethal Weapon 2," the action-adventure sequel with Mel Gibson and Danny Glover, which grossed $4.5 million.

In seventh was the police comedy "Turner and Hooch," featuring Tom Hanks, on receipts of $4.3 million.

Here are the top movies for the weekend as tallied by Exhibitor Relations, with distributor, weekend gross, number of theater screens, average per screen, total gross and number of weeks in release.

1. "Uncle Buck," Universal, $8.8 million, 1,804 screens, $4,875 per screen, $11.9 million, one week.
2. "Parenthood," Universal, $7.6 million, 1,316 screens, $5,780 per screen, $43.3 million, three weeks.
3. "The Abyss," 20th Century Fox, $7.2 million, 1,538 screens, $4,690 per screen, $24.7 million, two weeks.
4. "Casualties of War," Columbia, $5.2 million, 1,487 screens, $3,498 per screen, $5.2 million, one week.
5. "When Harry Met Sally..." Columbia, $4.9 million, 1,144 screens, $4,281 per screen, $54 million, six weeks.

6. "Lethal Weapon 2," Warner Bros., $4.5 million, 1,584 screens, $2,851 per screen, $119.6 million, seven weeks.

7. "Turner and Hooch," Disney, $4.3 million, 1,594 screens, $2,682 per screen, $46.6 million, four weeks.

8. "A Nightmare on Elm Street 5: The Dream Child," New Line, $4.1 million, 1,846 screens, $2,213 per screen, $15.2 million, two weeks.

9. "Batman," Warner Bros., $3.4 million, 1,400 screens, $2,457 per screen, $229 million, nine weeks.

10. "Cheetah," Disney, $2.6 million, 1,310 screens, $2,012 per screen, $2.6 million, one week.

Hot Off The Grill

Fire Up Those Coals For Fish And Fresh Summer Vegetables

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Americans are enjoying more non-traditional items on the grill this summer, with fresh vegetables, seafood and other low-fat foods gaining popularity.

"Some of the best protein items for the grill include fish steaks, such as salmon, tuna, shark, swordfish and halibut," says Jean Marie Josselin, executive chef, Coco Palms Resort, Kapaa, Hawaii. "Fish steaks cook quickly and can easily be substituted for one another in recipes, or served in combination to add more variety to a meal." Josselin placed first in this year's American Seafood Challenge, a professional chef's competition.

Among Josselin's suggestions for backyard barbecues: Grilled Salmon with Two-Tomato Ginger Relish, Grilled Marinated Red Snapper with Lemon Grass and Basil, Grilled Marinated Tuna with Ginger Cilantro Vinaigrette.

GRILLED SALMON WITH TWO-TOMATO GINGER RELISH

Four 6-oz. salmon, halibut, tuna or swordfish steaks
3 tbsps. olive oil, divided
½ tsp. pepper, divided
3 large plum tomatoes, peeled, seeded and diced (about 1½ cups)
2 yellow tomatoes, peeled, seeded and diced, or 6 cherry tomatoes, quartered
2 tbsps. chopped fresh basil or 2 tbsps. dried basil
1 tbsp. red-wine vinegar
2 tbsps. finely chopped ginger
2 tbsps. lime or lemon juice
1 tsp. soy sauce

Measure salmon at its thickest part to determine approximate cooking time; place in glass dish. Allow 10 minutes cooking time per inch of thickness.

Pour 1 tablespoon olive oil in a small bowl. Brush salmon with olive oil and sprinkle with ¼ teaspoon pepper.

Combine plum and yellow tomatoes with remaining 2 tablespoons olive oil, remaining ¼ teaspoon pepper, basil, red-wine vinegar, ginger, lime juice and soy sauce. This mixture can be made 1 hour ahead.

Place salmon on an oiled grill 4-5 inches from hot coals. Grill, brushing with oil and turning once, just until fish begins to flake when tested with a fork, allowing 10 minutes cooking time per inch of thickness. To serve, divide tomato relish on plates and place hot fish on top. Or, serve relish on the side. Makes: 4 servings.

GRILLED MARINATED RED SNAPPER WITH LEMON GRASS AND BASIL

Four 6-oz. red snapper or Pacific rockfish fillets
2 stems lemon grass
¼ cup chopped fresh basil
¼ cup olive oil
¼ tsp. crushed red pepper
¼ tsp. pepper
Basil sprigs for garnish

Measure fish at its thickest part to determine approximate cooking time. Allow 10 minutes cooking time per inch thickness of fish. Place fish in a glass dish.

Peel off tough outer layers of lemon grass; thinly slice the tender, pale yellow portion to yield about ¼ cup. Place in food processor and process until finely chopped. Add basil and pulse on and off until finely chopped. Add oil slowly through the feed tube. Stir in red pepper and pepper. Spread over fish, coating all sides. Refrigerate until ready to use.

Place fish on hot, well-oiled grill 4 to 5 inches above hot coals. Grill about 3 minutes per side or just until fish begins to flake when tested with a fork, allowing a total cooking time of approximately 10 minutes per inch thickness of fish. Transfer to plates and garnish with basil sprigs. Makes 4 servings.

GRILLED MARINATED TUNA WITH GINGER CILANTRO VINAIGRETTE

5 tbsps. peanut oil, divided
½ cup chopped cilantro (fresh coriander or Chinese parsley), divided
1 tsp. finely chopped chili pepper (such as Anaheim), or ¼ tsp. crushed red pepper
2 tbsps. soy sauce
2 tbsps. finely chopped ginger
1 tbsp. red-wine vinegar

Measure fish at its thickest part to determine approximate cooking time. Allow 10 minutes cooking time per inch of thickness. Place in glass dish.

Combine 2 tablespoons of the peanut oil, ¼ cup of the cilantro, 1 teaspoon chili pepper and 2 teaspoons soy sauce. Pour over fish and marinate for at least 15 minutes.

To prepare vinaigrette, combine ginger, remaining ¼ cup cilantro and 1 tablespoon red-wine vinegar in medium bowl. Heat remaining peanut oil until it bubbles and pour over ginger mixture. Let stand 15 minutes.

Place fish on hot grill 4 to 5 inches above hot coals. Cook, turning once, just until fish begins to flake easily when tested with a fork and is still moist, allowing 10 minutes per inch of thickness of fish. Serve fish immediately with warm vinaigrette. Makes: 4 servings.

Tips Help Chef Broil Perfection

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The National Fisheries Institute offers the following recommendations for the safe handling of seafood.

Buying Fish Steaks

— Buy seafood products from approved licensed stores and markets.
— Allow ⅓ to ½ pound per person.

— Fish steaks should look freshly cut and not appear dried around the edges. They should have a firm elastic texture, fresh and mild odor, and bright and shiny color.

— Store steaks in the coldest part of the refrigerator and use within 1-2 days.

Grilling Tips

— A moderately hot fire is best for cooking seafood; it sears the flesh of fish so that it retains its natural moisture.

— Thoroughly clean the grill with a brush and wipe it down with cooking oil.

— Line the interior of the grill for easy cleanup.

— Start the fire about 30 minutes before you intend to start cooking. Let it burn until white hot. Make sure it is uniform in heat by spreading out the charcoal evenly. Or, preheat an outdoor gas grill or electric barbecue grill.

— To protect the delicate flavor of fish, refrain from using strong fire-starters and self-lighting briquets. Instead, use an electric fire-starter or kindling.

— Adjust the grill height to 4 to 6 inches above the heat.

— Oil both the grill and the fish to prevent sticking.

— Cook fish steaks directly over the heat source. Baste fish frequently to retain moisture.

— Consider marinades to lend a different taste to fish steaks. Choose from bottled salad dressing or a homemade combination of oil with vinegar or fresh lime or lemon juice and your choice of seasonings. Reserve extra marinade to brush on fish as it cooks.

To Determine Cooking Time

The general guideline for cooking fish is about 10 minutes per inch of thickness at 450°.

Fish is done when it just begins to flake easily when tested with a fork and the watery, translucent appearance of raw fish takes on an opaque cast throughout. However, the point between doneness and overdoneness occurs quickly. Therefore, it is important to keep a watchful eye on the fish, checking it frequently, and 2-3 minutes before expected cooking time is complete to prevent overcooking.

It is important to remember that not all species of fish cook in the same amount of time, and that the 10 minute rule is only a guideline to approximate cooking time.

Stir-Frying Has Many Advantages

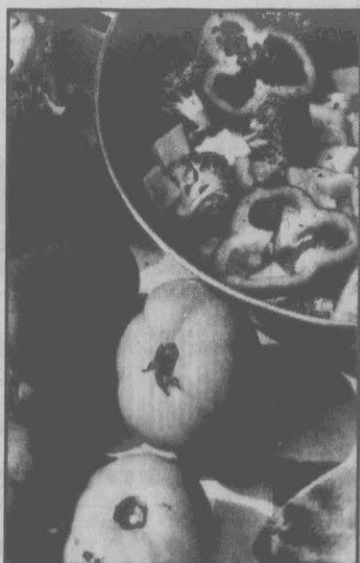

Although stir-frying is a cooking method generally associated with Oriental cuisine, inventive chefs are finding more and more ways to prepare traditionally Western foods using this healthful technique. What are the advantages?

• Stir-frying uses very little oil — sharply reducing unwanted fat in the cooking process.

• High heat used in stir-frying meals seals in natural juices and nutrients. Vegetables are cooked only until tender crisp, maintaining vitamins, flavor and attractive appearance.

• Stir-frying is fast, producing delicious meals and more leisure time to enjoy them.

If you thought that stir-fry ingredients were limited to foods such as bamboo shoots, bean sprouts and bok choy, you've been missing half the fun. Stir-frying is a great way to use the plentiful supply of zucchini, green beans, broccoli and other summer vegetables.

A good stir-fry cookbook will give you recipes for international dishes such as beef Burgundy, fish Florentine, Creole mixed vegetables — a host of delicious ideas that originate far from the Far East. Or, you can

Eat More Fruits And Vegetables

Dear Readers: "Eat more fruits and vegetables" is the simplest way to restate one of the important nutrition principles stated by the Surgeon General, the National Academy of Sciences and other nutrition authorities.

There is no better time to promote that idea than when fresh local produce is available.

Susan Childress reported earlier to you about her trip to the Pitt County Farmer's Market. This week she stopped at another source of fresh vegetables in addition to the grocery stores here in town. Here's her report.

Briley's Produce, locally owned and operated by Terrie Whitehurst, is located off U.S. 264, east of Greenville, next to the Pitt County Fairgrounds. The market is open Monday through Friday, 7 a.m. to 7 p.m., and Saturday, 7 a.m. to 4 p.m., through October.

The produce sold at the market is grown in Pitt County and includes Dixie Queen corn, Mississippi Purple Heart peas, peppers, squash, snap beans, tomatoes, collards, potatoes, eggplant, okra, onions, cucumbers, peaches and watermelon. She also sells lima beans, shelled or in the pod. Pumpkins will be available this fall.

Kathy Kolasa

Ph.D., ECU Dept. Family Medicine

Thanks, Susan, for the report. Here's a little of this and that I've picked up lately. It seems like practically every new food has some oat bran in it. Even the cartoon character Cathy showed her frustration in selecting oat products.

I recently saw that Frookies are available in oat-bran muffin variety. A southwestern food company is selling oat-bran tortilla chips. For some reason, I just think tortilla chips should be from corn!

Are North Carolinians ready for oat grits? At a recent food exhibition, I saw oat-bran pie shells, oat-bran pasta and oat-bran toppings for salads, desserts and casseroles.

I have not yet seen — but wouldn't be surprised if they existed — oat-bran matzos, lavash or wedding cakes!

Kelloggs has a new oat-bran cereal called Common Sense. But our own common sense must tell us that while eating foods with soluble fibers (and oat bran has soluble fiber) can provide health benefit, oat bran is not a magic food.

Remember that many foods have soluble fibers that have been shown to help a blood-cholesterol lowering diet. They include apples, oatmeal, dry beans, dry peas, barley, rice bran, carrots, broccoli, cabbage and onions. There are probably more, since the scientists are just now studying foods to determine how much and what kind of fibers they have.

The food industry is working hard to compete with restaurants. As a result, many new prepared and refrigerated foods are being made. The Campbell Soup Company has introduced in some parts of the country a line of entrees, soups and desserts called Fresh Kitchens.

They are packaged with date codes and freshness indicators. A freshness indicator changes color when the food is no longer safe to eat.

While you can normally rely on the expiration date on a package like milk or yogurt, that date cannot tell you if the food had some delays or was mishandled on its way from factory to market. The freshness indicators will know whether the food has been sitting in the hot sun.

Basics

Use Special Care Canning Acidic Foods

By Joan Drake
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

Home canning of foods high in acidity is not difficult, but it requires proper equipment and careful attention to directions. The following information has been compiled using the "Ball Blue Book — The Guide to Home Canning and Freezing" and publications on canning from the U.S. Department of Agriculture.

Through the process of canning, heat destroys potentially harmful microorganisms and enzymes. At the same time, a partial vacuum is formed and the jar seals, preventing recontamination of the food inside.

Foods that contain natural acid, such as fruits, can be safely processed using a water bath canner. This is a large kettle with a rack that fits inside to hold the canning jars separated and off the bottom so heat can penetrate properly. Standard glass canning jars with two-piece vacuum lids should be used.

It's important to select firm, ripe, unblemished produce for canning. Only enough food for one canner load at a time should be prepared. Although instructions vary for different fruits, the following information on canning peaches is representative.

Begin by assembling the canner and jars already mentioned, along with a long-handled spoon, sharp knife, non-metallic spatula and clean potholders, dishcloths and towels. A jar lifter — a tong-like device with heat resistant handles and soft plastic tips to protect the jars — is another good item to have on hand.

Check that the canning jars are free of chips, cracks or defects, then wash the jars and closures in hot soapy water. Rinse well and leave in hot water until needed. (A dishwasher may also be used to wash the jars and keep them warm.)

Make a light or medium syrup using one of the following formulas. Water or fruit juice may be used for the liquid.

Light — 2 cups sugar plus 1 quart liquid (yields 5 cups of syrup).

Medium — 3 cups sugar plus 1 quart liquid (yields 5½ cups syrup).

Medium with corn syrup — 1½ cups sugar, 1 cup corn syrup and 3 cups liquid.

Medium with honey — 1 cup sugar, 1 cup honey and 4 cups liquid.

Place the sugar (and corn syrup or honey) and liquid in a saucepan and heat until the sugar dissolves. The syrup should be kept hot until needed, but don't allow it to boil down.

Also place 2 tablespoons of salt and 2 tablespoons of vinegar in a large bowl. Add 1 gallon of water and set aside.

Wash and rinse the peaches, then,

Step one: To can fresh peaches, pack the peach halves into prepared canning jars, cavity side down, layers overlapping

Step two: Run a non-metallic utensil gently between the fruit and the jar to release air bubbles

Step three: If necessary, add enough hot water to cover the jars by 1 or 2 inches

Step four: When the processing time is completed, remove the jars from the canner and stand on a clean cloth to cool

LAT-WP News Service

using a slotted spoon or wire basket, lower them into a pot of boiling water for about one minute to loosen the skins. Remove the peaches, dip in cold water and peel.

Cut the peaches in half and remove the pits. Scrape the cavities to remove the pink or red fibers, which are likely to turn brownish after canning.

Drop the halves into the bowl of prepared water to prevent the fruit from darkening. Do not leave them in the solution for more than 20 minutes, however, and rinse thoroughly before packing.

Pack the peaches into the prepared canning jars, cavity side down, layers overlapping (Step 1). Cover the peaches with hot syrup, leaving a half-inch of head space. It will take a half to three-quarters of a cup of syrup for each pint jar; one to 1½ cups for each quart jar.

Run a non-metallic kitchen utensil gently between the fruit and jar (Step 2) to release air bubbles. Add more syrup if needed.

Wipe the rim and threads of the jar with a clean, damp cloth, then place the vacuum lid so the sealing compound is next to the jar. Add the band, screwing it down evenly and tightly.

As each jar is filled, stand it in the rack of a boiling water bath canner. The water in the canner should be hot but not boiling. When the rack is filled, the water needs to cover the jars by one or two inches. If it doesn't, add more hot water (Step 3).

Cover the canner and bring the water to a boil. Adjust the heat to maintain a steady boil. Start counting the processing time when the water reaches a full boil. Process pints 25 minutes, quarts 30 minutes. If the water boils away during the processing time and exposes the tops of the jars, add more boiling water to maintain the proper level.

When the processing time is completed, remove the jars (Step 4)

from the canner and stand on a clean cloth or towel, out of drafts and with space between for air to circulate. Do not retighten the jar bands.

After 12 to 24 hours, check the seals by trying to push down on the lid center. If it depresses but springs back, the jar is not sealed.

If the lid is not already concave but holds when pushed down, the seal is questionable. Remove the screw band and carefully lift the jar by the edges of the lid just a fraction of an inch above a padded surface. If the lid comes off, the contents should be reprocessed using a new metal disc with sealing compound.

Before storing, remove the metal bands from the sealed jars, be certain that the jars are clean and labeled with the contents and date. If stored in a dry, dark, cool place, canned peaches should remain in optimum condition for a year.

The Best Peaches Have A Golden Hue

By Sherrie Clinton
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

Peaches are the summertime pick of the market, according to Gwendolyn B. Hagood, an extension agent for home economics for the University of Maryland's Cooperative Extension Service.

The best peaches have a creamy or golden undercolor appearance, Hagood says. The red blush is a varietal characteristic and not necessarily an indication of maturity. A ready to eat peach will give to gentle palm pressure. Store ripened peaches in the refrigerator and eat at room temperature for additional juiciness and sweetness.

Hagood says successful peach preparation is simple when you follow the five peach "P's".

Peeling is not necessary. But if a recipe calls for peeled peaches, submerge them in boiling water 20 to 30 seconds, remove with a slotted spoon and immediately plunge into cold water. The skins will slip off easily.

Preserve the color of cut or sliced peaches by dipping in lemon juice.

Preserve by freezing peeled and quartered peaches. Stir 1 quart of fruit with 1 to 1½ tablespoons lemon juice and mix gently. Pack peaches in plastic freezer bags. Freeze in single layer. Then stack when frozen.

Puree chilled, unpeeled sliced peaches in the blender with a dash of lemon juice. Whirl until smooth and pour into tall frosted glasses.

Per Pound Equivalents: One pound is equivalent to 2 large or 3 medium-size peaches OR 2 cups peeled and sliced peaches OR 1 2-3 cups peeled and diced peaches OR 1½ cups peeled and pureed peaches.

PEACH ALMOND SHORTCAKE

1 cup sifted flour
4½ tbsps. granulated sugar, divided

1½ cups heavy cream, divided

1½ tsp. vanilla extract

¼ tsp. almond extract

1 tbs. melted butter, divided

3 large fresh peaches, diced

½ cup powdered sugar

2 tbsps. Amaretto liqueur OR ½

tsp. almond extract

and sliced for garnish
Peach slices for garnish

Sift together flour, 1½ tablespoons granulated sugar, baking powder and salt. Stir in ½ cup cream and vanilla and almond extracts until soft dough forms. Knead briefly. On lightly floured board, roll or pat dough about ¼-inch thick; cut into six 2-inch rounds. Place rounds on cookie sheet lightly brushed with ½ tablespoon butter. Brush tops with remaining butter. Bake in 450° oven for 12 minutes or until lightly browned. Cool on wire rack. Meanwhile, toss peaches with remaining 3 tablespoons granulated sugar; set aside. Just before serving, whip remaining 1 cup cream, powdered sugar and liqueur until soft peaks form, set aside. To serve split short-cakes in half. Spoon ¼ cup peach mixture, including juice, over each bottom half of shortcake. Spoon ¼ cup of whipped cream over each serving. Top each with shortcake, ¼ cup peach mixture and heaping tablespoon whipped cream. Garnish each serving with almonds and peach slices. Makes 6 servings.

PEACH ICE CREAM

½ cup cold water
¼ tsp. salt
3 fresh peaches, peeled and crushed
3 tbsps. sugar
1 cup heavy cream, whipped to peaks
¼ tsp. almond extract

Chill all ingredients. In mixing bowl, combine all ingredients. Pour into ice cube tray and freeze until mushy. Remove from freezer and pour into mixing bowl. Beat until smooth but not melted. Return to tray and continue freezing 3 hours. Makes 1 quart.

Capture Sweet Flavor With Watermelon Ice

BETTER HOMES AND GARDENS

Watermelons were early-comers to American gardens; the seeds came to these shores with the Puritan settlers in the 1660s. Today's watermelons are juicier and sweeter and come in yellow as well as red. Small round melons are as popular as the traditional long ones, and many new varieties are seedless. This frozen dessert captures the sweet melon flavor.

WATERMELON ICE

One 5-lb. piece of watermelon

(about 5 cups)
½ cup sugar
1 tsp. finely shredded orange peel
3 tbsps. orange juice
Watermelon wedges (optional)

Seed and cut up watermelon, removing rind (should have about 5 cups). In blender container puree watermelon (should have about 3 cups puree). Stir together watermelon puree, sugar, orange peel and orange juice. Stir until sugar dissolves. Pour into a 9-by-9-by-2-inch pan. Cover; freeze 3 to 4 hours or until almost firm.

Break frozen mixture into chunks. Transfer mixture to a chilled bowl. Beat with an electric mixer until smooth but not melted. Return to cold pan. Cover and freeze 6 to 8 hours or until firm.

To serve, let stand about 5 minutes at room temperature. Scoop or scrape across frozen mixture with a spoon; mound in individual dessert dishes. Serve with watermelon wedges, if desired. Makes 6 to 8 servings.

Dinnerware Makes Move From Bland To Bold

By Minnie Bernardino
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

The stage is set for the latest fashion in dinnerware. Move over pastels because jewel tones and more vivid, deeper hues are making a daring splash on the tables of the '90s. The exciting switch in the new table-top wardrobe shows a big transition from bland and dull to bold and provocative.

Today there is a dinnerware pattern to match every decorative motif in the home. Table-top enthusiasts, including decorators, will be delighted to pick from the wider selection of styles, which range from romantic Victorian to earthy Santa Fe, classic Mediterranean to high-tech, Oriental and French country to Art Deco and geometric.

"A pattern used to last forever," said Marvin Elenbogen, vice president of Noritake Inc. in Compton, Calif. "Now people are buying more than one or two sets. When they get married, they start with a formal and casual pattern. After that they tend to buy based on fashion and the colors they like."

The new plate pieces are also projecting more pronounced themes. They follow food trends. You will find a sea of fish and shell designs as well as an array of Southwest and botanical and fruit schemes. "The botanical theme never has left us," Elenbogen said, discussing the pretty Royal Orchard pattern from Noritake, which was a big hit last fall; "it's the new colors that are creating the interest."

Another trend is that people are finally using their good china.

Instead of being locked away to be stared at, fine china is appearing everywhere from formal entertainment settings to everyday tables. "We liberated china. So mix it. Match it. Take it on the boat," a Villeroy & Boch tableware advertising campaign encourages.

Here are the dinnerware patterns that are expected on the market during the fall and holiday seasons (a few may not make it until next spring, however):

One of the most dramatic new patterns recently unveiled comes from Noritake's premier bone china line, the Master's Collection. Meticulously detailed, its attractive Cabot pattern has an unusual burl wood inlaid look in its border with onyx black and gold edging. The new group of faux texture styling includes the Icon with bluish gray platinum banding edged with cobalt blue and gold lacing; and the Venetian Rose pattern with deep green granitelike borders trimmed with roses.

Fitz & Floyd has joined the bandwagon on the popular Southwest theme but offers sophisticated styling. The Dallas-based company introduced its Southwest collection consisting of Taos, featuring a play of gold with black zig-zagging pattern on white body; the Mesa, with complete zig-zagging coverage in similar tones; the Hopi, a geometric mixing of platinum gray, black and gold; Sedona, a definitive design of an Indian woman in zig-zagged cloak of gold, terra-cotta and black; Saguaro, illustrated with desert cactus and sun. The new designs match effectively with other Fitz & Floyd patterns such as the Basketry, a woven collection in terra-cotta and sand colors.

And you thought Southwest was out. Not so, according to Bill Lovell, visual director for Fitz & Floyd. "So many people like it and so many are collecting Southwest items," he explained; "it's like country, everybody thought that country died and yet it's still there. We wanted to bring out a fresh flavor; instead of pastels we did golds and black for sophistication."

Bringing out another Southwest flair is Villeroy & Boch, with its Heinrich, Cheyenne pattern, which promises guaranteed availability until the year 2000. The bone china collection offers white-base pieces with a thin rim of arrow graphics in deeper multicolored Southwest tones.

Favored for dressing up summer and fall tables are the light-hearted fruit designs in dishes that are often hand-painted. Deruta of Italy has a new line called Frutta with free-flowing design of fruit and vine that goes very well with its bright dinnerware grouping called Lattice.

A unique mingling of fruit, flowers and classic emblems in lapis, black and malachite comes from Taitu's new pattern called Firenze. Designed by Emilio Bergamin of Italy, the creation is reminiscent of classic wall murals done on a marbleized white body with grayish-veining. If you want splashy settings, take a look at Ifiori, another Taitu design, which is a wild floral symphony in the brightest imaginable tones of red, green and blue.

Another new fruit design comes from Studio Nova's Fruit Punch, which has a black rim stenciled with yellow, lavender, mint and orange-colored fruits. It is very effective with Studio Nova's rimmed chargers, which come in nine exquisite colors.

Seafood enthusiasts will rave about Bernardaud Limoges' Caraibes, a 15-piece service that features six fish designs with an aqua rim and seaweed decoration. Though not as bold as other patterns, the colors (blue, coral, yellow, white and black) in this innovative china are cool and soothing.

For the Art Deco and Memphis-style lovers, the mood is achieved by Mikasa in its International Sophistication Dinnerware line, which offers a variety of banding designs and colors. Any of these combine effectively with Mikasa's ridge-edged peach or aqua serveware or giftware called Terrace.

On a cheery casual note, consider the eye-catching dinnerware selections of Haldon from Japan in a wide variety of pleasing deep pastels. The Blue Check pattern has blue and white checkerboard throughout and features an extra size breakfast cup. Added to Haldon's embossed Majolica floral line are lavender and celadon colors, which go well with the new Morning Glory pattern with green leafing and lavender flowers. The Haldon ensemble includes accessories to match.

Hutschenreuther of Germany, renowned for its delicate porcelain, is introducing bone china for the first time, enabling the use of

Stir Fry

create your stir-fry originals, using the following techniques:

- Chop vegetables or meat into very thin or small pieces to speed cooking.

- Slice meat across the grain for added tenderness.

- Some slower cooking vegetables (such as carrots or broccoli) may need to be steamed briefly before stir-frying.

The following recipe provides an interesting stir-frying change. Although it uses traditional stir-frying techniques, the seasonings and final flavors are very much Italian. Serve over noodles or rice.

ITALIAN CHICKEN STIR-FRY

- 4 chicken breast halves, skinned and boned
- 2 tbsps. peanut or vegetable oil
- 1½ cups broccoli, in small pieces, or one 10-oz. package frozen broccoli pieces
- 1 large green pepper, cut into 1-inch squares
- ¼ to ½ tsp. garlic powder
- ½ tsp. oregano
- 1 tsp. basil
- 3 medium tomatoes, chopped

Cut the chicken into 1-inch cubes. Heat a wok or skillet over high heat for about 30 seconds. Add the oil and swirl to cover the pan bottom. Reduce the heat to medium and add the chicken. Fry the chicken rapidly, stirring and tossing to cook evenly.

Cook the chicken for one minute, then add the broccoli, green pepper, garlic powder and herbs. Cook, stirring continuously, until the vegetables are almost tender-crisp. Add the tomatoes and stir until heated through and well mixed.

This will yield four servings with 255 calories and about 10 grams of fat.

Author Recalls Art Of Making An Honest Cake

By Sherrie Clinton
LAT-WP News Service

There must be some law of nature that says that anyone transporting a cake to another location, such as a picnic or someone else's house, will encounter every pothole in the road, torrential downpours or 100 percent humidity. The fancier the occasion or cake the more likely disaster is to occur.

But there are ways to increase your chances of success. The secret is to choose the right cake because some cakes make better traveling companions than others, says Lisa Yockelson. Yockelson is the author of "Country Cakes" ($10.00; 1989; Harper & Row Publishers), the recently released second volume in her trilogy of country cooking.

Yockelson says that the recipes in her book are all "honest ones," using ingredients most cooks have on hand. Her only fancy recommendation is an old-fashioned one: vanilla sugar.

"This is very simple to make, it's nothing more than putting a vanilla bean in a container of sugar," she says.

Buy a vanilla bean, slit it down the center and place in a large container. Cover vanilla bean with sugar and let sit. Keep a tightly fitting lid on the sugar.

For a picnic, Yockelson recommends her Blueberry Walnut Brown Sugar Buckle or perhaps a fresh peach or nectarine cake.

"These particular cakes enclose fruit and cake in one dessert and for that reason they are easy to slice and easy to transport and they don't need any other embellishment," she says.

"The realm of cakedom expands somewhat," Yockelson says, if the dessert is to be served in somewhat more civilized surroundings, say at a bring-a-dish supper.

In that case, Yockelson recommends her Chocolate Pan Cake with Chocolate Fudge Frosting.

This one-layer cake is a good traveler because it can be transported in the same pan in which it was baked in. Just cut the cake in squares and serve it from the pan.

CHOCOLATE PAN CAKE

1 cup (2 sticks) unsalted butter, cut in rough chunks
4 tbsps. unsifted unsweetened cocoa powder
1 cup water
2 cups granulated sugar
2 cups unsifted cake flour
1 tsp. salt
1/2 cup buttermilk, at room temperature, blended with 1 teaspoon baking soda
2 extra large eggs, at room temperature
1 1/2 tps. pure vanilla extract
Chocolate Fudge Frosting

Chocolate Fudge Frosting
1/2 cup (1 stick) unsalted butter, cut in chunks
2 oz. (2 squares) unsweetened chocolate, chopped
5 tbsps. milk, at room temperature
1 tbsp. light cream, at room temperature
1 box (1 lb.) confectioners sugar, sifted
1 tsp. pure vanilla extract
Pinch of salt
1 cup chopped pecans

Lightly butter and flour a 9- by 13- by 2-inch cake pan; set aside. Preheat the oven to 400°.

For the cake, place the butter, cocoa and water in a large saucepan, set over moderately high heat and bring to a boil. Remove from the heat. Sift together the sugar, flour and salt into the large bowl of an electric mixer. Whisk together the buttermilk, eggs and vanilla in a mixing bowl. Pour the hot butter-cocoa-water mixture over the sifted dry mixture and beat on moderate speed until thoroughly blended. Add the whisked egg mixture and continue beating on low speed until the batter is a uniform color, about 1 1/2 minutes. Pour and scrape the batter into the prepared pan.

Bake the cake on the lower third level rack of the preheated oven for 20 to 22 minutes, or until a wooden pick inserted into the center of the cake comes out clean and dry and the cake shrinks away slightly from the edges of the pan.

About 10 minutes before the cake is done, make the Chocolate Fudge Frosting. Place the butter, chocolate, milk and cream in a large saucepan, set over low heat and cook, stirring occasionally, until the chocolate has melted down completely. Remove from the heat and beat in the sugar by cupfuls with vanilla and salt. Blend in the pecans.

As soon as the cake is done, remove it from the oven to a wire cooling rack. Immediately spread the frosting evenly over the top with a flexible palette knife. Let the cake cool in the pan.

For serving, cut the cake in squares directly from the cake pan.

FRESH PEACH CAKE

1 tsp. lemon juice
1 1/2 cups unsifted cake flour
1 1/2 tps. baking powder
1/4 tsp. salt
1/2 tsp. ground cinnamon
1/2 tsp. freshly grated nutmeg

1/4 tsp. ground ginger
1/2 cup (1 stick) unsalted butter, softened at room temperature
1/2 cup less 2 tbsps. vanilla-scented sugar (see above) or plain granulated sugar
2 tbsps. firmly packed light brown sugar
2 extra large egg yolks, at room temperature
1 tsp. pure vanilla extract
1/4 cup milk, blended with 1/4 cup light cream, at room temperature, OR 1/2 cup Half and Half at room temperature

Confectioners sugar for dusting, optional

Lightly butter and flour an 8-inch round springform pan, set aside. Preheat the oven to 400°. Peel the peaches (dip first in simmering water, then in cold water for easier peeling); slice 3/4-inch thick. Toss with lemon juice and set aside.

Sift together the flour, baking powder, salt, cinnamon, nutmeg and ginger onto a large sheet of waxed paper. Beat the butter in the large bowl of an electric mixer on moderately high speed for 2 minutes. Beat in the granulated sugar and brown sugar; beat for 2 minutes. Beat in the egg yolks and vanilla. With the mixer on low speed, alternately add the sifted dry ingredients in 2 additions and the milk-cream blend in 1 addition, beginning and ending with the dry mixture. Spread the batter evenly into the prepared pan. Arrange the peach slices in a pattern on top of the batter.

Bake the cake on the lower third level rack of the preheated oven for about 30 minutes, or until a wooden pick inserted into the center of the cake comes out without any particles of cake batter clinging to it. The cake will pull slightly away from the sides of the pan when done.

Let cool in the pan on a wire rack for 10 minutes, then remove the hinged ring of the pan. Let cool completely (If you are transporting this cake to a picnic, leave the outer band on for traveling). Dust the top of the cake with a little confectioners sugar, if you like.
