Poster Child Is Looking Ahead

By Carol Tyer
 THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Even as 11-year-old Selene Faer Dalton-Kumins faces the real possibility that she won't live to adulthood, she makes plans for her future.

Miss Dalton-Kumins has had Werdnig-Hoffman spinal muscular atrophy all of her life. Diagnosed when she was 20 months old, she and her mother, Noel, have lived daily since then with the likelihood that she will die before she is grown.

Miss Dalton-Kumins, the poster child for the North Carolina Muscular Dystrophy Association, was in Greenville on Thursday to create public support for the organization and its upcoming telethon.

"I come from a very creative family," Miss Dalton-Kumins said. "My mom's mother was a high-fashion model in New York and she and her sister and my mom have always been into theatrics and writing and art. I love to draw and have developed some cartoon ideas that I know are original. I love television and theater and writing. I feel I'll be able to make all these into a career that's satisfying.

"And I'll always work for the well-being of MD children," she said. "The Muscular Dystrophy Association does such great work for individual children and their families. And they also foster research into these neuromuscular difficulties. I always want to be a part of this great work."

Miss Kumins, a Durham resident, originally planned to visit members of the National Association of Letter Carriers in Greenville and Goldsboro during a two-day visit to eastern North Carolina. She planned to alert them to the MD telethon planned for Labor Day weekend, challenging the group to continue to support the project as its members have since 1952.

But as time for the trip neared, many other activities were added to her agenda.

She spoke and sang Thursday morning on the WNCN television show Carolina Today before meeting with the Greenville letter carriers.

Accompanied by her mother, she then met Greenville's mayor, police chief, fire chief and other local public servants before going to Pitt County Memorial Hospital. Mayor Ed Carter presented her a copy of a proclamation he had signed declaring Thursday "Muscular Dystrophy Awareness Day" in Greenville.

At the hospital, she was greeted by Fancy Feathers, a volunteer good will ambassador for the hospital in the shape of a larger-than-life-sized chicken. And she then went to the Children's Hospital where she talked with many

Spangler Says Change Needed

Valvano Asked To Quit As AD

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. — University of North Carolina system President C.D. Spangler said today the "status quo is not good enough" at the N.C. State men's basketball program and called on Coach Jim Valvano to give up his title as athletic director.

Spangler said he wanted Valvano to resign as athletic director no later than Dec. 31. Valvano said Thursday he would resign if asked to do so, but there was no immediate comment from him today.

"It is essential that the athletic director be in an unambiguous position," Spangler said. "Mr. Valvano has served without pay in this position ... but I believe that is a responsibility he should not carry along with his duties as a coach."

"My foremost concern has been with the issue of academic integrity," Spangler said.

Not one instance of an NCAA violation has been found by the commission, he said. But the spirit of the system was violated, he added, through the use of "incomplete" grades.

"The system has been misused," he said.

The book "Personal Fouls," by Peter Golenbock, sparked a six month investigation into the basketball program at N.C. State. Allegations in the book included improper changes of grades for basketball players, improper payments and lavish gifts to athletes, drug abuse and concealment of drug test results.

Dow Jones Sees Record Close

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Stock market analysts say the risk of a financial meltdown is far lower today than it was two years ago, the last time the Dow Jones industrial average was in record territory.

The Dow Jones average of 30 key industrial company stocks jumped 56.53 points Thursday, carrying it to 2,734.64 and surpassing the record close of 2,722.42 set two years ago today. Prices churned ahead an additional 5.88 to 2,740.52 in the first half hour of trading this morning.

The 1987 peak was the start of a short but severe bear market that culminated in the worst day in Wall Street history, the 508-point plunge in the Dow Jones industrials on Oct. 19, 1987.

Evidence of that debacle was hard to find Thursday.

"The quote of the day is something like: What crash?" said Robert Brusca, chief economist of Nikko Securities Co. International Inc., the New York arm of a Japanese brokerage firm.

Supporting the stock market in 1989 are a healthy dollar, relatively low interest rates and optimism that the economy will manage to steer a middle course between recession and high inflation.

Most of all, there is no speculative bubble ready to be popped. Stock prices are far lower in relation to underlying company profits than they were two years ago, said Lawrence Kudlow, chief economist at Bear, Stearns & Co.

"Fundamentally this is a great expression of confidence in the whole U.S. economic outlook," Kudlow said. "We keep throwing negatives at the market and they don't stick."

Added David M. Jones, chief economist at the brokerage firm Aubrey G. Lanston & Co., "Essentially the stock market is telling us that a soft landing is in store for the economy, and that's exactly the slowdown you need to keep inflation from accelerating."

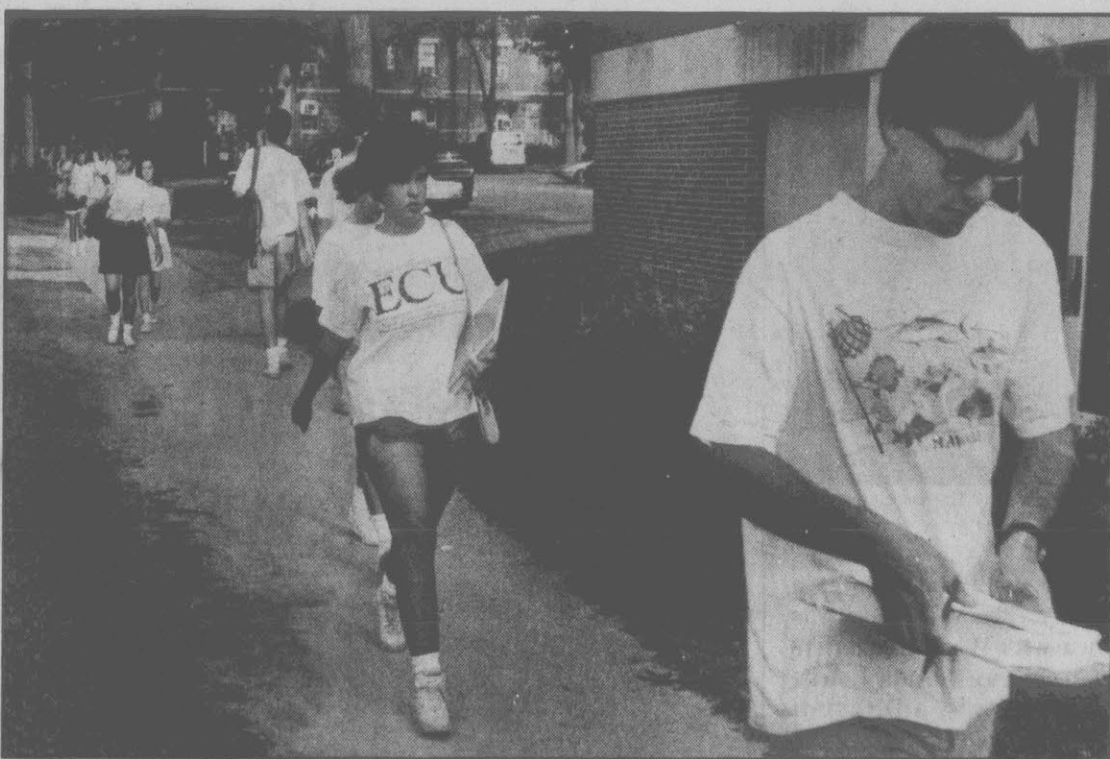

While some other strategists are more skeptical about the economy's health, a market rally can sometimes feed on itself regardless of fundamental factors.

"The worst thing that can happen to an institutional money manager is to sit there with a pile of cash and watch the market take off without him. It's a buying panic," said Lawrence R. Helfand, managing director for retail sales at the Chicago brokerage Rodman & Renshaw Inc.

Thursday's gain was the second-biggest of the year, and it came in the heaviest trading since mid-June, a good sign for the market. Volume on the New York Stock Exchange totaled 225.52 million shares.

A subdued cheer rose from the exchange floor after the close Thursday.

ECU students make their way to classes today as they settle into a campus routine

ECU Students Settling In After First Week

By Kevin Boughal
 THE DAILY REFLECTOR

With the first week almost under their belts, the key word used by East Carolina University officials to describe the opening days at ECU has been "smooth."

Although there were small problems with long lines and people parking in unassigned parking spots, most officials agree the week has gone well.

"As with any institution, we had some long lines but I think the students kept in good spirits," said Dr.

Al Matthews, vice chancellor for student life at ECU. "I think that things are going very well and we are off to a good year."

Classes began on Wednesday and lines formed when students needed to settle financial matters and to add and drop courses, but there were no major problems, according to Bobbie Austin, the associate registrar.

"Nothing more than just the usual problems," said Mrs. Austin.

Dr. Thomas Powell, the new director of admissions at ECU, said the week was typical for a first week in a college but he said he could not compare it with opening weeks in ECU's past because he is new.

"I didn't see any glaring problems," said Powell. "The first day was nuts, the second day was better and the third day has been calm. I've been told that this year was an excellent registration (compared to past years) and it was very typical of the kind of work people at ECU do. We had the kinds of problems that you expect when you register 16,000 people in three days."

The enrollment at ECU is expected to be very near, if not over 16,000 undergraduates this year, said Powell. The enrollment a year ago was 15,579 undergraduate students.

Wintervilles Find A Lot In Common

By Carol Tyer
 THE DAILY REFLECTOR

The mayor of Winterville, Ga., Wesley Whitehead, will spend his 73rd birthday Saturday riding in a Winterville parade. But it won't be in Georgia. He's in Pitt County for the Winterville, N.C., Watermelon Festival event.

Whitehead and his wife Mary, visiting their town's counterpart in North Carolina for the first time through Sunday, will serve as grand marshals of the parade.

Also riding in the event in a marigold-colored Cadillac provided her by her hometown will be Winterville, Ga., Marigold Queen Amy Tilman. A high school rising senior, she was accompanied to North Carolina by Winterville, Ga., City Clerk Frances Brooks and Town Councilwoman Brady Sue Coile.

The five Winterville, Ga., residents are special guests throughout the Pitt town's fourth annual Watermelon Festival.

"We were invited by the Winterville Jaycees," Whitehead said, "and we've been treated royally. I am absolutely amazed at how similar the history and the present function of our town is to that of this Winterville."

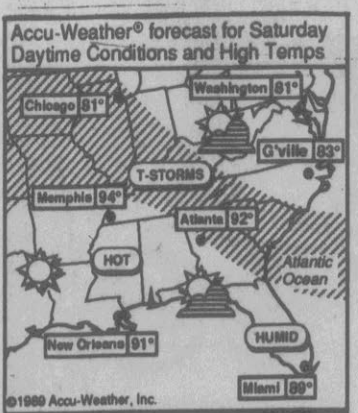

"We started as a wood and watering stations for the railroad. I understand that this Winterville, too, grew up around the railroad. We were chartered only in 1904, but existed long before. We were named for a German family named Winter who settled our area. We used to be called Six-Mile Station."

Legend has it, according to Winterville Jaycee Randy Avery, that Winterville, N.C., received its name when Amos Grave Cox, a founder of the town, closed his eyes and let his finger come to rest on the point on the Georgia map that read Winterville. As far as Whitehead and Avery know, the Georgia and the North Carolina Wintervilles are the only two in the United States.

Permits Approved

The Greenville Board of Adjustment approved four requests for special use permits during Thursday's monthly meeting at City Hall.

Merrill Flood, the city's development administrator, said the board quickly moved through the agenda in granting the four special use permits, reviewing an annual report of board actions and a conducting a 30-minute training session.

The board granted Goodwill Industries a special use permit for an indefinite period to operate a clothing donation center at 600 Greenville Blvd. Representatives from Goodwill indicated a desire to establish a permanent store in Greenville within six to eight months.

Pitt County Mental Health was granted a special use permit to operate a psychosocial rehabilitation program for emotionally disturbed adults. The board granted temporary approval for the permit and will review it again in one year.

Venture of Faith Fellowship was granted indefinite approval for a special use permit to operate a church at 429 Evans St.

Patricia Sawyer also received a special use permit to operate a dance studio at 412 Evans St.

patients and their families and was interviewed by WNCT radio. "Werdnig-Hoffman is one of about 40 kinds of neuromuscular ailments that come under the muscular dystrophy umbrella," Selene's mother said. "Many children with Werdnig-Hoffman die by the time they are two or four. So Selene has lived long past the time we might have expected her to die."

"And she's come so close at times. The worst time was 1984 when she had respiratory failure. It looked so unlikely then that she'd make it through the year. I really felt then that my child was dying."

"She and I have always been very close and able to talk about anything. I remember sitting with her, when she looked so gaunt and bad, and telling her that, if I seemed over-emotional at times it was because I was seeing her at that moment as my beautiful dying child."

"She let me know she understood. Then she said, 'Mommy, I really don't think I am dying. I think I have more time left.' That was five years ago."

Since then there has been spinal fusion surgery and many other gauntlets to run. But, in the meantime, she has developed into her own person, capable not only of caring for herself emotionally in many ways, but of contributing to other people.

Answering a comment about how much more mature than most 11-year-olds Selene seems, her mother said, "She's always been that way. Even as an infant, she seemed like a wise older person."

"And she's always been talented and articulate. She was making speeches when she was two years old."

She co-anchored a television show in Durham for a while and will co-anchor the Labor Day weekend telethon as well as appear in a video about her life. She recently sang a solo at the White House during the "America Sings" celebration there.

Miss Dalton-Kumins is enrolled in Sherwood Githens Middle School in Durham, but actually receives most of her instruction by tutoring from a special teacher for homebound students. She has skipped fifth grade and is currently considered a seventh-grader, though she participates in the school's eighth grade chorus and in its theater arts and publications programs.

Her mother is a former television broadcaster, now working as a free lance writer and editor. "I haven't worked away from home since Selene had her respiratory failure in 1984," she said. "Since then, it's been necessary for her to have much more care. I still try not to hover over her. She does everything she can for herself, but I just can't be gone enough to have a 40-hour-a-week job."

Boaters Face Tests

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PORTSMOUTH — Beginning today, boaters suspected of operating their vessels while intoxicated will have to take a breath test under a Coast Guard crackdown on drunken boating.

For the first time, all Coast Guard vessels patrolling in the Fifth District will be equipped with Breathalyzers and manned by boarding officers who have been trained to detect intoxicated boaters, conduct sobriety exercises and administer the test to measure blood alcohol levels.

Boaters who fail the test face up to a year in prison and a $5,000 fine.

Although a federal drunk-en-boating law has been in effect since January 1988, enforcement had been hampered because boarding officers could rely only on what they observed to prove a case.

Families Moved During Blasts

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PENROSE, N.C. — Hundreds of families and students were evacuated Thursday to get them out of harm's way during the detonation of 69,000 pounds of explosives at Penrose Quarry.

The Transylvania County quarry routinely blasts rock from the side of a granite cliff three or four times a year, but extra precautions were taken for Thursday's shot because of what had happened the night before. At about 7:30 p.m. Wednesday, a lightning bolt ignited 400 to 500 pounds of explosive primer inside a hole drilled in the cliff, said quarry superintendent Eddie Queen.

Roxanne O'Shields, a cashier at the Triangle Stop convenience store opposite the quarry, was on duty when the lightning struck and the explosion occurred.

"When it went off, I thought to myself the world was coming to an end at that moment," Ms. O'Shields said. She saw a blue light through the store windows.

O'Shields said she didn't learn of the blast until late that evening, but the thunderstorm was enough to make her cautious. "I told several customers, 'I wouldn't pump gas for no man's money,'" she said.

Twenty-eight other holes were still primed at the quarry, so the Transylvania County Sheriff's Department took the precaution of evacuating about a dozen households within a quarter-mile of the quarry late Wednesday night, Queen said.

About 200 families were cleared out, according to Sheriff's Detective Keith Fisher, who directed the evacuation from a command post at U.S. 64 and Crab Creek Road. Also evacuated were some 200 students at Penrose Elementary School, which is less than a mile west of the quarry.

estate salesman, he and his wife live in a restored Victorian-style house. Their three sons and six grandchildren also live in Winterville.

"Our Winterville," he said, "is adjacent to Athens, home of the University of Georgia. So isn't it interesting to learn that this Winterville is also adjacent to a city with a large university?"

"We make no bones about wanting industry. We don't. We want only nice residential property and small neighborhood businesses. And that's what we have — a nice quiet town with a good school system that university people love to live in. We still have a lot of natives like us, but since 1986, we've also added a lot of new people who do good things for our town."

When did Whitehead first hear about the North Carolina Winterville? "My wife and I got into a conversation with Randy and Tim Avery's parents, Floyd and Myrtle, and their neighbors Jay and Jean Weathington at a motor home park near Charlotte about two years ago," he said. "We were all amazed to learn we were all from Winterville. Tim is chairman of the Jaycee chairman of this year's festival and Randy's taking part, too. They and their fellow Jaycees graciously invited us. And we're so happy to be here."

Asked this morning if he's eaten any watermelon yet, he said, "No, but I plan to. If they'll let me I want to get in on that watermelon judging tomorrow. That would be a lot of fun."

Speaking of his town's Marigold Festival, now in its 20th year, he said, "We've had some distinguished guests over the years. Two I've especially enjoyed are Louella Dirksen of Pekin, Ill., and her son-in-law, Sen. Howard Baker. Mrs. Dirksen, who's now deceased, visited us several Junes and Mary and I have been to Pekin. She's the widow of Sen. B. Everett Dirksen who tried to get the marigold proclaimed the national flower of the United States. Another couple who visited our festival a lot was David and Lois Burpee of the Burpee Seed Company, famous for its breeding of marigolds."

Whitehead says the Averies, the Weathingtons, Winterville, N.C., Mayor E.C. Hines, Winterville Jaycee President Steve Evans and others from the Pitt town have already been invited to attend the Marigold Festival next June.

"We have a good time," Whitehead said. "And we really hope to have a good crowd from the North Carolina Winterville there next year."

Changes Urged At N.C. State

Spangler said more than 160 people were interviewed by the four-man commission he appointed to probe the allegations in the book.

North Carolina State Chancellor Bruce R. Poulton resigned Monday, and was not among university chancellors attending today's meeting of the UNC Board of Governors.

The NCAA also has investigated the men's basketball program at N.C. State and that report is expected in the fall, Spangler said. Poulton and coach Jim Valvano requested the report.

Valvano is expected to attend a meeting later today of the North Carolina State University Board of Trustees in Raleigh.

Spangler said nothing was found to support allegations of lavish gifts and payments to players. But he said there were some rule violations in "the disposition of tickets issued to players" that have been reported to the NCAA.

He said an effort is being made to "see that the problem will not recur."

Spangler also said players had been found trading extra basketball shoes to a local store and that players had received discounts "at a local restaurant."

The commission also checked summer employment by athletes.

"One instance was found in which a single player was employed by a firm employed by the head basketball coach but this had been authorized by the Atlantic Coast Conference, Spangler said.

"The inquiry into summer employment arrangements found no abuses," he said.

Spangler said players refused to talk to commission investigators and missing records made it difficult to look into cars driven by players. He said no evidence of abuse was found in the area of cars being driven by players.

No evidence of abuse was found in the allegations that the N.C. State booster club funneled money to players.

He said the commission found "weaknesses in institution record keeping and monitoring."

Regarding charges of drug abuse, the commission found a voluntary, non-punitive drug testing policy and had "serious doubts about the adequacy" of the program's application. But he said there was no evidence that drug test results were altered.

Spangler said on one occasion there was a drug test called for 47 athletes and none came because coaches hadn't notified them. In another instance, he said, 100 athletes were called to a drug awareness lecture and only one showed up.

"There remains serious weaknesses inherent in the terms of the voluntary policy itself," Spangler said.

And More Problems To Go

An additional Superior Court judge is a welcome relief for Pitt County's overburdened courts, but is only one step toward providing a pressured judicial system the space and manpower it needs.

Lawmakers don't often accomplish something that actually eases a problem, and when they do, it deserves note. The 1989 state Legislature funded a new Superior Court judge for Pitt County — an addition that was badly needed.

Pitt ranks second in the state in its need for another Superior Court judge. Superior court cases, because the number of court sessions is limited, pile up endlessly. On a typical week, for example, a dozen cases may be heard. But in the same week the district attorney's office may take in an additional 100 cases. That amounts to bailing out a sinking boat with a coffee cup.

The additional judge will abate this crisis by providing added court sessions. But help for this one aspect spotlights the need for some long term solutions to the growing pains of a vigorous court and prosecution system.

For example, the county's District Court criminal case load has doubled in the past five years — from 17,000 in 1982 to 34,000 in 1987. In addition, the number of court session rose from 34 per month in December, 1988, to 46 per month in January, 1989.

That growth — coupled with the rise in Superior Court — has placed space and personnel demands on a court system. To hold a session of court requires a courtroom, a judge, district attorneys, clerks. These resources have not increased in comparison to the caseload.

A strong criminal justice system is the foundation for a county's integrity and protection. Appropriately, that's one area the community has prioritized.

But while giving giving precedence to this basic need, the community has failed to properly plan for growth. The result is a court system penalized by its own success. Court officials are doing an efficient job now under difficult circumstances, but can this performance continue unblemished?

Diminishing legal services is a dilemma the county must avoid. State funding for an additional Superior Court judge will ease one area of concern, but local leaders should recognize other pressing deficiencies and address them. Then they should plan for the future and find ways to fund the court system a booming county demands.

Phi Beta Kappa An Important Goal

Establishment of a prestigious Phi Beta Kappa chapter on the East Carolina University is an important goal that won't be reached for the next three years.

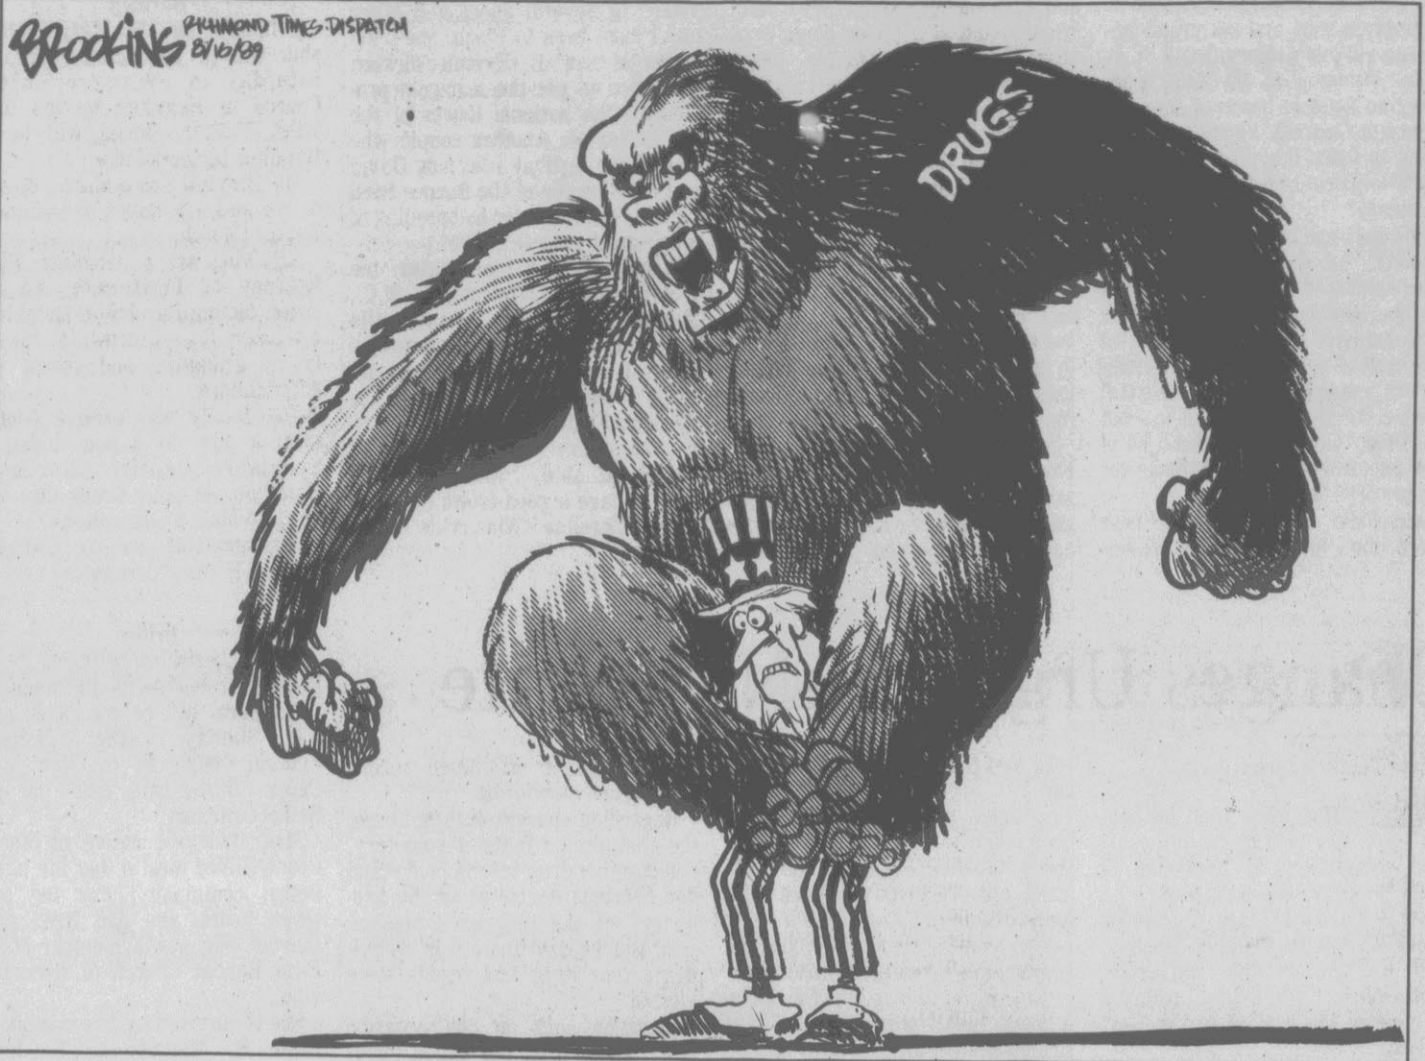

University officials learned this week that the school will not be among those selected for further review over the next three years. That is a disappointment but it should not be the end of the effort.

There are some 240 Phi Beta Kappa chapters in the nation with five in North Carolina. Currently chapters are located at Duke, Wake Forest, Davidson, UNC-Chapel Hill and UNC-Greensboro. At the schools with chapters, the top scholars are selected for membership.

The liberal arts honor society was established in 1776 and its circle of chapters has expanded slowly. At East Carolina and hundreds of other colleges and universities in the nation which do not have Phi Beta Kappa chapters, scholarship is recognized in other ways. But Phi Beta Kappa membership is universally viewed as a mark of scholarship.

The university must not give up its goal of establishing a chapter. A new application can be made in three years and that goal should be pursued. In the meantime, efforts will continue to improve scholarship on the campus.

East Carolina University has reached many goals and accomplished many dreams since it was established in 1907. Establishment of a Phi Beta Kappa chapter is an achievable aim. The effort required will pay dividends in many ways and the university can only become better for it.

The Dilemma Of The 'Second Shift'

Abigail Trafford

WASHINGTON — It was a remark that just slipped out, a throwback to old-fashioned gentlemanly manners, when President Bush stood in the Rose Garden and publicly thanked Senate Republican Leader Robert J. Dole, R-Kan., for allowing his wife to serve in the Cabinet.

"Good chance to thank Senator Dole for giving us one of the great secretaries of labor we've ever had... permitting her to serve our great country," said the President.

His remarks were obviously well-meant, a nice gesture. Polite applause greeted his words, and another White House ceremony ended.

For Secretary of Labor Elizabeth Hanford Dole, who stood with her husband at the ceremony to honor a job-training program, the remarks could be brushed off as courtly misspeak. After all, she could remember what it was like in the dark ages before the women's movement got under way — when she went to law school and joined that lonely category of "first" and "only" power women to crack the male barriers in the workplace.

Now, those barriers have largely fallen. Women have gone to work en masse, excelling in formerly male-dominated fields. In many ways, the social revolution of the last few decades has been a success. Women today grow up with the same expectations as men for a full double life at work and at home.

And there's the trouble — expectations. The expectation gap between the sexes has been closed but not the reality gap. A quarter century after the women's movement started, there is a sense that the revolution is stuck. Overt discrimination has been replaced by more subtle obstacles that have to do with the dynamics of marriage, the needs of children and the attitudes of industry and government.

Nowhere is the stalled revolution better illuminated than in "The Second Shift: Working Parents and the Revolution at Home" by Arlie Hochschild with Anne Machung. A sociology professor at Berkeley (with a husband and two sons), Hochschild investigated the brave new world of two-career parents with young children.

What she found was that behind the rhetoric of equality was a tremendous amount of tension, bitterness, despair and anxiety — especially among the women. Young married women today may not need permission from their husbands to work, but they need their support, and, in Hochschild's study of couples over the past decade, they are not getting it.

As a result, women do two shifts a day. The first is in the workplace. The second shift is the job that has to be done at home with young children. In her study, Hochschild found that only 20 percent of the husband-fathers shared equally in the second shift.

This has to do, she writes, with the fact that in the social revolution women have changed much faster and more profoundly than men have. It also has to do with the notion of gratitude. President Bush wants the whole country to be grateful not to Elizabeth Dole for doing a good job as Labor Secretary but to her husband for being such a good sport about it. The implication is that with his wife on the job, Senator Dole may have to do some second-shift work and make the coffee for breakfast.

The same notion of gratitude was present in many of the couples Hochschild studied. The husbands talked a good game about sharing duties at home. But most did certain tasks — dinner on Thursday nights — or they played games with their children at certain times. Taking responsibility for the household, organizing the chores, comforting children in need and dealing with crises were largely left to the women. At the same time, the men wanted gratitude for what they did do around the house and for being so supportive of their wives' careers.

Not surprisingly, the wives grew resentful and tired. Taking on the second shift meant that they worked an extra month every year, compared with their husbands, so their tiredness was not imaginary. They were also afraid: If they asked their husbands to do too much around the house, they might leave them and find a more pleasing woman. That's not imaginary either, since the divorce rate has doubled between 1970 and 1980 and sent a chill through the marriage ranks.

The fear factor for women comes in because the impact of divorce is too often worse on women.

And so working married mothers rewrite the myth of equality, saying how lucky they are that their husbands do some work in the second shift and complimenting their husbands for being so understanding about their jobs. But as Hochschild points out, this myth of gratitude and phony rhetoric about sharing the second shift create an "intricate web of tension and the huge, hidden emotional cost to women, men and children of having to 'manage' inequality."

The short-term solution in her couples was to cut back: cut back on the job or at home. In most cases, the wife cut back on her job. One fast-track couple, after a showdown over sharing and a trial separation, reordered their life with twins, and "both gave up on the spectacular career success they might have had for the respectable careers their attention to family allowed." In short, they defied the workaholic subculture of the marketplace and placed family ahead of their jobs.

If all this sounds a bit gloomy, it is. In destroying the myth of "having it all" or even wanting it all, "The Second Shift" presents a grim scenario for the future of the stalled revolution.

But as the song goes, nothing lasts forever. Children grow up. The emotional intensity between parent and child, and spouse and spouse, doesn't diminish, but the daily pressures do. Parents of grown children often find they have more time and more confidence. Instead of a mid-life crisis precipitated by the old Empty-Nest Syndrome, many working couples find that is the time when they enjoy a renaissance in the home and at work.

In a study of corporate executives by John Naisbitt, author of "Megatrends," 83 percent believed that more men feel the need to share parenting responsibilities but only 9 percent of corporations provided paternity leave.

Yet corporate consciousness-raising involves more than provisions for family leave, flex-time, part-time, day-care supports. It requires a redefinition of what constitutes such workplace values as "commitment," "loyalty" and "seriousness." It also demands a new sense of career timing to open up the conventional fast-track path, where only workaholics need apply. This would allow men and women to be more like tortoises than hares as they climb the success ladder both at home and at work.

How will we know when true equality is achieved? For one thing, it will come when no president has to echo Bush by thanking a husband or wife for letting the other spouse work.

Business Has Never Been Better

The Assembly Line Rolls At The Sudden Death Gun Company

Art Buchwald

President George Bush made a terrible mistake when he banned the importing of foreign semiautomatic guns into the United States. What he did was cut out the Italians, Israelis and Chinese to make sure the American people are supplied with semiautomatic weapons made in the good old U.S.A. The trouble with this is that U.S. manufacturers can't meet the demand, and Americans now have to wait months to get the semiautomatic weapons of their dreams.

The New York Times reports that most domestic manufacturers are working seven days a week to meet the orders, and the demand for the guns is at its peak and going higher.

I confirmed this when I visited the Sudden Death Gun Company. The owner, Orville Bang, was sweating as he poured grease on the weapons that came off the production line. Between crates he told me that the semiautomatic business has never been better, and President Bush was a peach of a guy for keeping the foreign competition out of the U.S. market.

"The orders are pouring in," he told me. "We've proven that we can make a better product than the foreigners. Right now we're backed up until 1992."

"I always knew that semiautomatics were popular with the average person, but why the surge in sales at this particular time?"

"People are afraid Congress will ban semiautomatics altogether, and they want one hanging in their Land Rover before some damn fool legislator takes it away from them."

"There must be more to it than that," I said. "It could be a fad. Everybody wants a semi these days — from the squirrel hunter to the guy fighting a gang war in the barrios."

"But you can't sell semiautomatics to gangs, can you?"

"I should hope not — but a middleman can. The way I see it, the role of the gun manufacturer is to make guns, not war. We're the guys who turn out the weapons — and we're not responsible if they get into the hands of someone who wants to shoot up a school yard. That's why President Bush likes us. We can arm the nation with weapons that this country has to have to save it from the enemy."

"You mean the Russians?" I asked.

"No, I mean the other semiautomatic owners. Besides, if we can keep the gun-manufacturing business in this country, we can resolve our deficit problem overnight."

"When did most Americans get the urge to buy assault rifles?"

He answered, "When the word got out that the government was thinking seriously of forbidding their sale. All you have to do is tell the people in the U.S. there is going to be a shortage of an item, and they will immediately line up to buy it."

I said, "But in this case they were wrongly informed because George Bush says they can have all the semiautomatics they want — as long as they are made over here. Why the panic?"

"If the gang wars get out of hand and more people are blown away by the guns, the president may have to take a stand and declare that semiautomatics aren't as safe as he originally thought. When that takes place, everyone of us in the domestic gun business will be dead."

Administration Already Assigning Blame For Recession

Walter Mears

WASHINGTON — Hedging a bet, the White House seems to be taking out some political insurance against the risk of a recession next year. Should there be a serious slump, the Republicans will blame the Federal Reserve Board.

The administration long ago declared that the old theory of business cycles, up then down, no longer need apply to the U.S. economy. At least it hasn't applied since early in Ronald Reagan's presidency. The longest period of economic expansion in peacetime history began in 1982 and continues now.

President Bush said as a candidate that he could keep it going with policies that restrain spending and forbid new taxes. "After all, economic growth doesn't die out from old age, it is smothered by bad policies," he said last Oct. 24.

Picking up the theme, with some of the same words, an administration economic spokesman said on July 10 that the record-long expansion could be sustained, with the outlook favorable for continuing growth ahead.

"Economic history teaches us that expansions have not died of old age, but were killed by policies — usually monetary policies — which with the benefit of hindsight were unfortunate mistakes," said Undersecretary of Commerce Michael R. Darby.

Translated, that argument holds that it's usually the Federal Reserve Board that stalls or scuttles economic expansion by clamping too tightly on the money supply and pushing up interest rates.

That's the issue that prompted Budget Director Richard G. Darman to chide the central bank for tightening interest rates because of what he said may have been excessive concern about renewed inflation.

"If we do have a recession it will be because they have erred on the side of caution," Darman said Aug. 13 on NBC's Meet the Press. "I think it's quite important that the Fed appreciate that growth is indeed fundamental to the health of this economy, and that they not become too obsessed with concern about things going too well for too long."

Bush endorsed those comments. "I think I've said essentially the same thing in the past," Bush said. He called Darman's comments balanced, although he dodged the question of whether he agreed that the Fed would be responsible for any recession.

"Listen, I don't know of any president, now or in the past, who doesn't favor lower interest rates," Bush said. "... That's the American way."

Trying to chart a course between the risks of inflation on one side and recession on the other, the Fed began increasing interest rates in March 1988 and pushed up short-term rates by three percentage points over the next year. Then, early in June, it began edging rates downward to stimulate economic activity and avoid a severe slump.

Its policymaking committee met on Tuesday and decided how to proceed for the next six weeks. Those policy decisions will not be disclosed until Oct. 6, although their impact could show in the marketplace. Current guessing is that interest rates will be left at or near current levels into the fall.

As Bush noted, strains between the central bank and the White House are nothing new. Lower interest rates serve the political and budget agendas of most presidents. Alan Greenspan, chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, knows all about that. He was an economic adviser to Richard M. Nixon during the 1968 campaign. He served as chairman of the Council of Economic Advisors when Gerald R. Ford was president. Reagan appointed Greenspan chairman of the Fed.

The seven governors of the Federal Reserve are appointed for 14-year terms; the chairmanship is for five years, tenure that is supposed to provide political insulation.

That seems to work. In the past there have been times of real tension between the Fed and expansion-bent presidents and Congresses. This season's differences have been polite by comparison.

Shortly after he was inaugurated, Bush said Greenspan seemed to be worrying more about inflation than he was. After the Fed raised interest rates in February, the president said they differed on the right way to interpret economic indicators regarding possible inflation.

But Greenspan has warned that inflation itself can trigger recession. "If inflation emerges, I think a recession will move up on us much more quickly than we can imagine, and when it occurs it will be a prolonged one," he told Congress early this year.

Walter R. Mears, vice president and columnist for The Associated Press, has reported on Washington and national politics for more than 25 years.

Peace Efforts Likely To Drag

Keith Richburg

BANGKOK, Thailand — After a summer of heightened hopes that the long conflict in Cambodia was nearing its final chapter, diplomats and other analysts now say bickering and bargaining will continue long after Vietnam withdraws all of its occupation troops next month, as Hanoi has promised to do.

Despite the convening last month in Paris of an international conference on Cambodia, which is entering its final and decisive week, the four warring Cambodian factions are still far apart in their proposals. Meanwhile, their armies appear to be attempting to improve their battlefield positions in case the talks collapse.

After a lull in fighting for most of this year, diplomats and relief workers here have reported an unusually high level of fighting in recent weeks, as the resistance groups attempt to penetrate deeper inside Cambodia and establish base camps. The departing Vietnamese troops have responded with heavy artillery barrages to back up their Cambodian allies. Diplomats said that casualties have been heavy at resistance field hospitals on the Thai-Cambodian border.

Hopeful prospects for a settlement to the conflict were prompted by a diplomatic flurry earlier this year that resulted in the monthlong conference, which is being held, for the first time, with Chinese participation. But in the roller-coaster diplomacy that has marked this conflict for a decade, the hopes were overtaken by events suggesting continued intransigence from the factions involved.

So far, the conference has been unable to agree on a power-sharing formula for Cambodia's factions, and recent hard-line statements from the government in Phnom Penh have suggested a new unwillingness to compromise.

Yesterday in Paris, the Vietnamese-backed Cambodian government rejected a peace plan offered by France and Indonesia, the co-sponsors of the conference, saying it was "unbalanced" in favor of the three resistance factions.

The Phnom Penh government was installed by Hanoi after Vietnamese troops invaded Cambodia in December 1978 and ousted the communist Khmer Rouge, who had killed more than 1 million Cambodians during their reign. The Khmer Rouge later joined in a guerrilla coalition with two non-communist groups, one of them headed by former Cambodian leader Prince Norodom Sihanouk.

The conflict has been complicated by the involvement of foreign powers: the Soviet Union has backed Vietnam and the Phnom Penh government, while China has aided the guerrilla coalition, especially the Khmer Rouge.

Vietnam has agreed to withdraw its remaining occupation troops in Cambodia by the end of September. But Western and other countries are now insisting that the Paris conference not be stamped into validating Vietnam's withdrawal until an internal power-sharing arrangement have been agreed to by all parties involved.

That, however, is likely to take time — far longer than the 30 or so days left before Vietnam completes its final withdrawal, diplomats said. "I don't think it can be resolved for another year or two," said one Asian diplomat here, voicing one of the more pessimistic predictions.

The issue that has bogged down the conference and dimmed settlement hopes is the same one that has divided the parties since direct peace talks began in 1987: the extent of participation in a provisional government that should be allotted to the Khmer Rouge, which has the largest army in the coalition.

Sihanouk, the leader of the fractious resistance coalition, has insisted that the Khmer Rouge be included in an interim, four-way Cambodian government that would rule prior to elections and also include his own faction, a smaller non-communist faction and the Phnom Penh government, led by Prime Minister Hun Sen.

Although Sihanouk has denounced the Khmer Rouge, he has also said that denying the group a share of power would prolong Cambodia's civil war.

Hun Sen has said the Khmer Rouge must be excluded from any provisional government.

Dortch Draws Eight-Year Sentence In Plea Bargain

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHARLOTTE, N.C. — Richard Dortch became the first former PTL employee to be sentenced in connection to the scandal-plagued ministry when he was given an eight-year prison term and fined $200,000 dollars.

"I failed my Master, failed my family and failed myself," said Dortch, PTL's former vice president, as he pleaded for mercy in his sentencing hearing Thursday.

Dortch's sentence was part of a plea agreement in exchange for testimony against his former boss, PTL founder Jim Bakker, whose trial on the same fraud and conspiracy charges starts Monday.

"I could not believe that I participated in this ... in deceiving people, in doing something I knew was wrong," Dortch said after prosecutors showed the judge charts detailing a pattern of financial manipulations at PTL. "The shame of that was the most humiliating thing I have ever known."

Prosecutor Deborah Smith said memos between Dortch and the PTL financial office showed "calculated attempts" to hide the financial difficulties at the ministry.

"The victims in this case are in the thousands," she said. "They are waiting to see the court's assessments. They are waiting for justice."

Dortch, Bakker's top assistant at PTL, pleaded guilty earlier this month to four counts of conspiracy and fraud and has agreed to testify against Bakker as part of a plea bargain.

"There's no question that he will testify if he is subpoenaed," said Bill Diehl, Dortch's attorney.

Dortch, who was charged in the same indictment with Bakker, is one of three former Bakker aides to be convicted. The indictment says Bakker used ministry funds to finance his opulent lifestyle, including expensive homes, cars and an air-conditioned house for his dog.

Former aides James and David Taggart, who are brothers, have been convicted of evading taxes on $1.1 million in ministry funds that prosecutors said they diverted to their own uses, which included Cartier jewelry, designer clothes and a Manhattan apartment. They will be sentenced Sept. 8.

Prosecutors presented evidence that even though Dortch and Bakker said there would be a limit of 30,000 "lifetime partnerships" sold in the Towers Hotel at PTL's Heritage USA, a total of 68,755 partnerships were sold. Lifetime partners made a one-time donation of $1,000 in exchange for three nights' free lodging each year for life, but the Towers Hotel and other hotels planned for Heritage USA were never built or were left uncompleted.

Prosecutors said the Towers project alone generated $74.2 million but only $11.4 million was spent on the uncompleted facility.

Instead of using all of the money to build hotels and other facilities at Heritage USA, the indictment said, the PTL executives spent more than $4 million on themselves and used some of it for operating expenses.

Root Will Help State Probers

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The cooperation of Thomas Root, the lawyer who survived a mysterious plane crash into the Atlantic Ocean, will help a securities fraud probe, said N.C. Secretary of State Rufus Edmisten.

"Thomas Root has agreed to cooperate with the secretary of state's office in the probe of Sonrise Management Services," said Edmisten in a news conference Thursday. He said the Columbus, Ga., company which helped clients apply for FM radio licenses, has been under investigation since February 1988.

Edmisten described the firm as an "application mill" which billed itself as a "one-stop shop" for investors seeking an FM license from the Federal Communications Commission.

Root has been the attorney for some 165 partnerships that have applied for FCC licenses, and was paid by the partners through Sonrise.

Edmisten said the investigation involved possible securities fraud by Sonrise, and centered on the disclosures made by the company to investors. More than 1,600 people have invested in the Sonrise licensing plan, including more than 800 in North Carolina.

More than $16 million has been collected in 26 states, at least $8 million from North Carolina investors, the state official told a news conference.

Root, of Alexandria, Va., crashed into the Atlantic July 13 after setting out on a business trip to Rocky Mount, N.C. He told air traffic controllers he was having trouble breathing, put his plane on autopilot and finally ditched — and was rescued — near the Bahamas.

He was found to have been shot in the abdomen, a wound that Root says he can't explain.

Edmisten said there had been little federal or state interest in Sonrise until the publicity surrounding the crash. Now, he said, other states and federal agencies are expressing an interest, and investors who lost money have been calling his office.

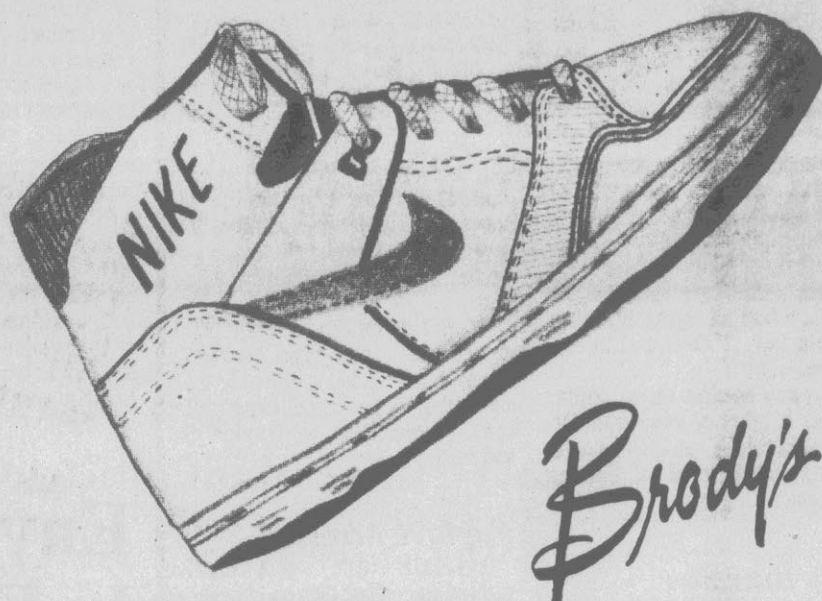

"Mr. Root could be very helpful to our investigation," Edmisten said.

Sonrise in July sued Root, accusing him of breach of contract and unlawfully converting money to his own use.

According to the federal court suit filed in Washington, Root failed to perform work he had agreed to do in representing investors before the FCC. The firm also accused him of double billing the company, resulting in overpayments of nearly $100,000.

IN THE STATE

Mail Order Trees

RALEIGH (AP) — Along with pots, pans, toys and vacuum cleaners, shoppers browsing through Sears, Roebuck and Co.'s holiday catalog this year will find freshly cut Fraser fir Christmas trees grown in western North Carolina.

The catalog will offer the Fraser fir trees in three sizes — 3½-4 feet tall, 5-6 feet tall and 6-7 feet tall — for between $40 and $70, said Hal Johnson, owner of Booger Mountain Tree Farm in Ashe County.

"It's really a tremendous shot in the arm for the mountain economy," Johnson said Thursday. "North Carolina can become a major supplier of Christmas trees nationally in the next 10 to 15 years."

The trees will be featured in 11 million Sears "Wish Books," and it will be the first time Sears has offered the trees in its Christmas catalog, said company spokesman Kathy Guca.

Tuberculosis

WHITEVILLE, N.C. (AP) — The incidence of tuberculosis in Columbus County has increased dramatically and the county faces a "mini-epidemic," a doctor with the county health department warns.

"If we don't get a handle on this thing immediately, we could see tuberculosis in the school system this fall," said Dr. Henry Carr, who treats the department's tuberculosis patients.

Columbus County, which had 13 active tuberculosis cases last year, already has 24 active tuberculosis cases this year, Carr said. In 1987 the county had 14 cases of tuberculosis, in 1986 10 cases and in 1985 five cases.

There have been no other similar outbreaks in other counties, said Dr. John MacCormack, an official with the state Department of Human Resources.

Stanly Recruiter

ALBERMARLE, N.C. (AP) — The president of Stanly Community College will be forbidden to visit the campus or speak to employees during a three-week vacation, the school's trustees announced.

Trustees said Thursday they are encouraging employees to cooperate with the state auditor's investigation while President Charles Byrd is away on vacation.

State Auditor Ed Renfrow began investigating the school earlier this month after published reports that the college has paid recruiter Linda Funderud though she apparently wasn't working.

Supercomputer

RESEARCH TRIANGLE PARK, N.C. (AP) — A computer researchers say will be the most powerful in the Southeast will be ready for testing Saturday at the state's new Supercomputing Center in Research Triangle Park.

The $12.8 million Cray Y-MP supercomputer arrived Monday, less than a week after the center lost its director in a dispute over who will control its use.

Technicians have spent the week installing the supercomputer. Researchers will begin testing the machine on Monday.

It runs up to 1,000 times faster than a conventional mainframe computer and more than 27,000 times faster than a home computer, said a spokesman for the Microelectronics Center of North Carolina. Center officials, who received a state contract last year to install and manage the supercomputer, say it will be the most powerful in the Southeast.

Murder Charges

RALEIGH (AP) — Three men have been charged with murder after police said they stole crack cocaine from a Raleigh drug dealer and the dealer suffered an apparent heart attack while chasing them.

The suspected cocaine dealer, identified as Willa Jean Donaldson, 50, collapsed and died while chasing the men from her apartment shortly before midnight Tuesday, Raleigh police said. She was pronounced dead at 12:02 a.m. Wednesday at Rex Hospital.

Five Raleigh men were arrested in connection with her death, and three of them were charged with murder and stealing two vials of crack worth $50.

Building Destroyed

HIGH POINT (AP) — An 8-by-12-foot storage building was destroyed Wednesday by fire and explosions apparently caused by 90-plus degree temperatures, according to an owner.

Susan Halsey said the outbuilding was rocked repeatedly and nearby trees caught fire. She said she believes that spontaneous combustion, caused by high temperatures, caused the fire and subsequent explosions.

Ms. Halsey said the storage building housed a push-type mower, a riding mower, a boat, valuable tools and other items, including paint cans, several tires, a gasoline can and rags.

Fugitive Arrested

RALEIGH (AP) — A fugitive wanted since May 1980 on charges of interstate transportation of stolen property has been captured, the U.S. Marshal's Office said Thursday.

Leo Edward Fraley was arrested in Phoenix, Ariz., by U.S. marshals as a result of investigations conducted in Raleigh, Phoenix and Detroit.

Fraley had been charged in 1979 in a multi co-defendant indictment with interstate transportation of stolen property as a result of a jewelry store burglary in Wilmington.

Fraley was released on a $15,000 cash bond in Wilmington in 1980 and failed to appear for his scheduled trial.

Suspect Escapes

ROCKY MOUNT, N.C. (AP) — An armed robbery suspect known as the T-shirt bandit escaped police custody for the second time after he broke away from leg irons.

Bernard Blue, 21, of Enfield escaped Wednesday at the Judicial Center, where he was taken for a first appearance on three counts of armed robbery. Police captured Blue soon after the escape.

On Aug. 8, Blue escaped from the Nash County Sheriff's Department following a first appearance on another armed robbery charge. Blue was coming from the Nash County courthouse at the time. He was not wearing any restraints.

Blue was captured after a 10-hour manhunt.

N.C. Workers Gained In Average Salary

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Economists and labor analysts say the fact that North Carolina workers got fatter raises than the average American in 1988 is basically good news and means that the state is catching up with the national per capita income.

"We are getting wealthier — more like the rest of the nation," said Don Carrington, a North Carolina labor market analyst. "But we don't necessarily want to make a big jump because as you go up in per capita income the cost of living is going up as well. It's all relative."

According to a report by the U.S.

Department of Commerce, North Carolina's per capita income rose 7.1 percent to $14,304.

Although the state's per capita wage jump was greater than the 6.6 percent national average increase, workers in North Carolina are still lagging behind the national income average of $16,489, the report said.

The higher wage increase means the state's per capita income continued to close in on the national average. The state per capita income amounted to 86.7 percent of the national average, up from 80.8 percent in 1987.

The wage increases were caused by expanding economies and tight labor markets, an economist said.

"Economic development has been the major objective in this state, and now that is starting to bear fruit," said Doug Woodward, an economic development specialist at the University of South Carolina.

Carolinas wages have lagged behind the nation's average, labor experts say, for two big reasons — a high portion of low-skilled manufacturing jobs and a lower cost of living than in other regions.

With an 8.5 percent increase to $23,059, Connecticut continued to lead all states in average income. Mississippi remained at the bottom of the per capita income list at $11,116 for every adult and child in 1988, up 7.9 percent.

The revised figures show that income growth in the United States was stronger than reported four months ago. The original report put national per capita income at $16,444, a 6.2 percent increase from 1987.

The report also showed that regional income differences continue, with residents of the East and West coasts outpacing those of the inland states. By region, it comes in New England grew fastest with an 8.4 percent rise to $20,191. The Southeast ranked fifth of eight regions with average income of $14,462, up 6.9 percent.

Study Cites RTP Success

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. — Rated in terms of job creation and contributions to the region's economy, Research Triangle Park is one of the most successful parks of its kind in the country, says a new study.

"It's hard to conceive of another research park that has had as much influence and is as important to the economic development of the region as this one," said Harvey Goldstein, one of the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill researchers who conducted the study.

Since it began in 1959, the park has created, either directly or indirectly, 52,000 jobs in North Carolina, the study says. The park also brings in $1 billion a year to the region, according to the study.

Almost two-thirds of the 30,000 jobs at RTP would not have been created in the region if the park did not exist, the study shows. In addition, an estimated 21 of the research and development firms there would not have located in the Raleigh-Durham area without the park.

Lightning Ignites Fuel Storage Tank

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOREHEAD CITY, N.C. — Lightning struck a two million-gallon fuel storage tank, igniting a fire that raged for more than two hours before Coast Guard and Marine firefighters brought it under control, authorities said.

Tom Ditt of the state Division of Emergency Management said lightning apparently struck the tank on Radio Island at around 8:25 p.m. Thursday night.

He said the tank contained approximately 200,000 to 400,000 gallons of JP4 jet fuel when the fire erupted.

A Coast Guard cutter and Marine Corps soldiers from Cherry Point fought the fire and brought it under control by using foam.

"What is left is in the tank," Ditt said in a telephone interview late Thursday night. "All the valves are closed. There are eight tanks in the diked area."

Morehead City police urged motorists to stay away from a two-lane, high-rise bridge connecting the town with nearby Beaufort. Traffic was never kept off the bridge, except to allow emergency vehicles to get to the fire.

A police dispatcher, Robin Day, said a call went out to any fire unit within a 50-mile radius that could transport foam to the scene. Personnel remained on the scene late Thursday night to watch for the possibility of the fire reigniting, she said.

"They're trying to keep the temperature down in the fuel," Ms. Day said, adding that the Beaufort Fire Department would be watching the tanks.

The storage tank was in an area that was threatened by erosion that undermined it and left it close to collapsing into the water two years ago, Ditt said.

Thunderstorms and heavy rains pelted the area as emergency personnel kept watch over the fire.

Environmentalists Claim Victory In Fight Over Peat Mining Effort

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. — Environmentalists claimed a major victory with the settlement of a lawsuit that will result in new barriers to peat mining in the North Carolina coastal wetlands.

The lawsuit challenged a determination by the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers that about 7,000 acres in Hyde County known as White Tail Farms are not wetlands. The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency was also named as a defendant.

A Chicago developer had filed applications with the state to mine peat from the tract, according to the Norfolk Virginian-Pilot. The peat would have been used as fuel to generate electricity.

The legal action was filed in federal court in Raleigh in 1985 by the Southern Environmental Law Center on behalf of the N.C. Coastal Federation, the North Carolina Sierra Club, the North Carolina Wildlife Federation and the North Carolina Fisheries Association.

Lark Hayes, attorney for the environmental law group, said Thursday the settlement of the suit includes an agreement by the Corps of Engineers to void its earlier determination that the White Tail Farms property is not a wetland.

"They further agreed to make a new determination based on the legal and scientific criteria they should have used in the first place," she said.

Under the terms of the agreement, the EPA will make the next classification.

The corps had refused to classify the White Tails tract as wetlands because it had been ditched and drained.

"The environmentalists claimed that ditching alone does not change a wetland," she said. "And we claimed all along that ditches were illegal. They were done without permits, and discharges to the wetland occurred. We don't believe developers who ditch land illegally should be able to benefit from their illegal activity."

If White Tail Farms is found to contain significant wetlands, "peat projects cannot go forward without permits from the corps, and such projects would not be permitted if they have an unacceptable adverse impact," Ms. Hayes said.

"I'm certain the environmental community will be willing and able to demonstrate that extensive peat mining of those wetlands will have an adverse impact."

Within the past month, a Japanese investment firm, the Nissho Iwai American Corp., bid $8.1 million for 104,000 acres of the First Colony tract, with plans for a joint venture with Westinghouse Electric Corp. to mine peat and build electrical generating plants near Phelps Lake.

Following that bid, the Conservation Fund increased its previous bid for the First Colony lands to $8.6 million in an attempt to preserve the wetlands as parks and wildlife refuges. The Japanese firm, however, still has time to offer even more money for the tract.

Greyhound Faces Bias Allegation

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WINSTON-SALEM — Thirty-four years after Rosa Parks ignited the civil rights movement in Montgomery, Ala., by refusing to sit in the back of a bus, a Winston-Salem woman is accusing a bus company of sending her family to the back of a bus because they are black.

Vickie H. Hairston filed the lawsuit against Greyhound Lines Inc. last week in Forsyth Superior Court on behalf of herself and her children, Jemithra and Joy Hairston.

The lawsuit alleges that a Greyhound driver forced Mrs. Hairston and her children to ride in the back of a bus while they were traveling through Wyoming in 1986.

"These kinds of cases are rare anymore," said Romallus O. Murphy, an attorney from Greensboro who is representing Mrs. Hairston. "All of the case law is from the early 1970s and 1960s. It is a thing that we don't see much nowadays."

The suit claims Greyhound knew about what it calls the "racial feelings" of the driver and that officials allowed him to continue working.

The lawsuit asked for more than $30,000 in compensatory and punitive damages.

Murphy does a lot of work for the NAACP, but he said that the group is not directly involved in this lawsuit. He said, however, that the Winston-Salem chapter is assisting Mrs. Hairston.

The lawsuit says that Mrs. Hairston and her two children boarded a Greyhound bus in Winston-Salem on Aug. 15, 1986, bound for Portland, Ore. Murphy said that, at the time, Jemithra was 11 years old and Joy was 4.

U.S. Diplomats Get Word On How To Act, Dress, Speak Abroad

By Ruth Sinai
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The State Department is advising its diplomats that while they needn't splurge on their wardrobe for overseas duty, shoes are a must.

American women going abroad, as diplomats or their spouses, are also advised to remove their gloves while eating or drinking at a formal function.

This is some of the advice in a pamphlet entitled "Social Usage Abroad" given to U.S. representatives to help prepare them for foreign postings.

The leaflet illustrates how protocol, that French invention which greases the wheels of statehood, can be a U.S. diplomat's biggest nightmare. It also makes clear that proper behavior within the U.S. diplomatic community abroad is just as tricky as behavior toward officials of the host country.

The diplomat's training begins well before departure from Washington. "It is customary when assigned to a U.S. mission abroad to write to the principal officer (usually the ambassador) ... to express personal pleasure in the assignment," the guide advises. Wives (or husbands) of diplomats should do the same to the wife (or husband) of the principal officer.

A new member of the embassy staff must call on the ambassador or chief officer within two working days, according to the manual.

"An expensive or extensive wardrobe is not necessary" for junior diplomats. "It is advisable, however, for newcomers to bring along a basic wardrobe, including shoes, because they will often be too busy on arrival to shop for new clothes."

As for the dress code: for a daytime ceremony, "a woman's shoulders should be covered." And in countries where gloves are worn for all daytime social occasions, "it is useful to remember that they are always removed entirely for eating or drinking."

Ambassadors, in addition to familiarizing themselves with treaties and other aspects of bilateral relations, must remember to take the place closest to the curbside when entering a car.

When making social calls on officials of the host country in their homes, the American's calling card is left on a hall table "and a caller should stay no longer than 20 minutes unless strongly urged." The pamphlet doesn't explain how to judge whether such entreaties are "strong."

What it does do is answer every question "ever put to us," said Nancy Forbrd, relocation adviser for the Overseas Briefing Center. The center, run by the State Department's Foreign Service Institute, provides extensive reading materials on conditions in foreign countries, regulations of the U.S. foreign service, etiquette, educational and health facilities, and other information.

Some 14,000 people, or about half of the Americans sent abroad last year by various government agencies, used the center in 1988, she said. The center also offers a mandatory two-day seminar on security overseas, and even a course designed to help teenagers adjust to life abroad, Forbrd said.

For American hostesses abroad, the pitfalls are numerous. Making a dinner table seating plan is "full of complexities," warn the authors of the pamphlet. Hostesses should check with the embassy protocol officer to ensure they have not inadvertently planned to seat together people from countries which do not maintain diplomatic relations, for example.

A proper seating arrangement requires mathematical talent. "To seat eight, 12, 16 or 20 persons without two men or two women sitting together, the hostess sits to the left of the seat that is properly hers." Is that clear?

Now, if the women are served before the men, the woman on the host's right is served first and the woman on the host's left is served second. Try explaining that to the servants.

One also should be aware that an invitation for 8 o'clock doesn't necessarily mean you show up at 8. In some countries, it's a signal to turn up at 9:30.

"At official dinners in certain Commonwealth countries, it is rude to smoke at the table before the toast to the Queen." And speaking of toasts, "it is a good idea to leave enough wine in the glass at the end of the meal to join in the drinking" of such salutations.

And in case your parents neglected to tell you, the guide advises that "before leaving, each guest should thank those hosting the party."

Then there are ambiguities. For instance, men always rise when being introduced and when a woman enters the room. But "whether a woman rises to be introduced to another woman is a more complicated question" depending on age, social position, etc. The guide, however, doesn't advise whether a woman should rise when being introduced to a man. Emily Post, help!

Contract Accord Reached

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Negotiators for Bell Atlantic and striking members of the Communications Workers of America here have reached a tentative settlement, but talks elsewhere produced varying results, officials say.

Negotiators for the Chesapeake and Potomac Telephone Co. and the CWA local that represents its four subsidiaries announced the agreement after meeting twice on Thursday.

"We look forward to getting everyone back to work," said Bell Atlantic spokesman Larry Plumb.

But CWA spokesman Bill Bickers said none of the 41,000 C&P employees who have been on strike since Aug. 6 would return to work until local issues are settled at all Bell Atlantic subsidiaries.

C&P operates telephone companies in the District of Columbia, Virginia, Maryland and West Virginia. Local issues in dispute involved such things as work rules and the contracting of work traditionally done by union employees to outside firms.

Basic agreement on economic issues throughout the Bell Atlantic system was reached a week ago. The only outstanding local issues remaining among subsidiaries and the CWA involved Bell of Pennsylvania and Diamond State Telephone, Plumb said.

"We're pleased to have settled issues of job security and work rules with C&P Telephone," said CWA Vice President Peter Catucci. "But we're dismayed by the retrogressive demands still on the table."

Catucci charged that those companies were "completely unresponsive" to the needs of the workers and placed "major obstacles" in the path of a settlement. The company wants the union to give back some arbitration decisions, Bickers said.

Bell of Pennsylvania reached agreement with the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers on Sunday.

In New Jersey, the IBEW rejected New Jersey Bell's final offer late Thursday, Plumb said. The union, which represents 9,100 workers, presented a counter-offer that Plumb said "leaves the two sides far apart."

New Jersey Bell settled its local issues with the CWA earlier in the week.

In Ohio, contract talks resumed for the first time in the 12-day strike by 10,000 Ohio Bell employees Thursday, with both the CWA and the company indicating interest in making headway. Meetings were scheduled to continue this afternoon.

CWA and Illinois Bell on Thursday afternoon met for the first time since the strike began, but phone company negotiators walked out in early evening, saying the union was not willing to make key concessions on pay, said company negotiator Francine Solinas.

CWA officials countered that Illinois Bell has refused to make concessions as part of the collective bargaining process. No further bargaining sessions were scheduled.

Voyager Makes Close-Up Fly-By Of Neptune

By Lee Siegel
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PASADENA, Calif. — Voyager 2 plunged over Neptune's north pole for a close-up look today at the icy moon Triton, snapping photographs of cliffs and glacier-like lunar terrain as it reached the pinnacle of its epic exploration of four planets.

"We see what is best described as an extremely strange and puzzling surface" in photos of Triton taken a few hours before the spacecraft made its closest approach to Neptune, said Bradford Smith, head of Voyager's photographic imaging team at NASA's Jet Propulsion Laboratory.

The photos showed long fault lines, ridges, low-lying cliffs and "ice structures of various sorts, like glacier terrain," scientist Torrence Johnson said. "They're like things you see in polar caps on Mars. ... We're not seeing a lot of big craters," indicating Triton's surface is geologically active with processes that obliterate craters made by meteorites.

"It looks like there's all kinds of fault systems all over the place," said Laurence Soderblom, of the U.S. Geological Survey. The faults suggest that "Triton quakes" may have occurred at one time on the moon.

"Triton will upstage Neptune. It's filled with hummocky, rippling terrain," said laboratory astronomer Rich Terrier.

The one-ton Voyager probe skimmed 3,048 miles above Neptune's icy north pole cloud tops at 8:56 p.m.

PDT Thursday — the closest of its planetary encounters — after being accelerated by Neptune's gravity to a speed of 61,148 mph.

"This is a historic occasion," said Lennard Fisk, an associate administrator of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration. "It's the last time we're seeing a planet for the first time. We've completed the reconnaissance of the planets, except Pluto."

Radio signals received on Earth at 1:02 a.m. PDT today confirmed Voyager's closest approach to Neptune, Smith said. The four hour and six minute delay is the time it takes Voyager's radio signal to travel the 2.75 billion miles to Earth.

"This is it! We are exploring new worlds!" Terrier said. Neptune "is not a gee-whiz, science-fiction, special effects movie. It's a real place."

Scientists and engineers maintained an overnight vigil at Jet Propulsion Laboratory, waiting for signals confirming Voyager's pass within 23,900 miles of Triton.

Vice President Dan Quayle's itinerary today included a morning visit to the laboratory to congratulate the Voyager science and engineering teams, meet with reporters and receive a briefing on space activities.

While difficult to interpret, the early photos of Triton gave "the same impression as if you stepped out onto some strange and alien surface," with what appears to be a blue, pink and white topography that is "closer to flat than big mountains," said Smith, who called the pictures "just short of spectacular."

At 11:59 p.m. PDT, signals were received showing that Voyager had been bombarded by dust particles up to 100 times a second as it passed through the plane containing Neptune's rings, said Donald Gurnett. The particles, each about a millionth of a yard across — the size of the particles in cigarette smoke — did not damage the spacecraft, Gurnett said.

Voyager's safe progress through the ring plane prompted scientists to toast each other with champagne even before the spaceship's near encounter with Neptune, Smith said.

"There's certainly euphoria," he said. "We are all very excited."

Scientists announced Thursday that Voyager discovered two more tiny moons orbiting the solar system's fourth largest planet: a 60-mile-wide moon designated 1989 L<sub>1</sub>, and the even smaller 1989 N<sub>6</sub>, which is a mere 30 miles wide.

That brought the number of Neptune's moons discovered before the close encounter to eight, including the two moons detected from Earth — Triton and Nereid — and four found earlier by Voyager.

Voyager also found a complete ring of debris encircling Neptune, although it was at first thought to be a partial ring or ring arc. Voyager photos also indicated a ring arc orbiting farther from Neptune almost certainly also is a complete ring.

During its flight past Neptune and Triton, Voyager was programmed to shoot radio waves through the atmospheres of both worlds to study their atmospheres; measure changes in distant starlight to study the rings and search for others; and take its best but still 2.9-million-mile-distant pictures of Nereid.

Voyager's hectic schedule also included numerous measurements of Neptune's atmosphere in an effort to understand its 400-mph winds, high-altitude clouds, and its Earth-sized Great Dark Spot and other cyclones.

NASA calculated Voyager's position during the Neptune flyby as nearly 2.75 billion miles from Earth. But the ship had traveled a curving path totaling 4.43 billion miles since it was launched in 1977, and explored Jupiter in 1979, Saturn in 1981 and Uranus in 1986.

Champagne flowed at the laboratory Thursday when Voyager crossed the supersonic shock wave where the solar wind meets Neptune's magnetic field.

Earlier pictures of Triton suggested the backward-orbiting moon had meteorite impact craters and possibly glaciers of frozen natural gas on its pink-and-blue surface.

Using occasional trajectory corrections and engineering wizardry to aim a space probe built with 1960s technology, NASA engineers said Thursday they got Voyager to within 20 miles of where it was supposed to be after the long journey.

"Not bad shooting," said one engineer.

Voyager 1 visited Jupiter in 1979 and Saturn in 1980, and now is speeding toward interstellar space — just as Voyager 2 will do after it stops studying Neptune on Oct. 2.

Neptune usually is the eighth planet from the sun, but Pluto's elliptical orbit means it now is closer, making Neptune temporarily the solar system's outermost planet.

"Someday there ought to be a Pluto flyby," Fisk said. "But there are no active plans to do that."

Asteroid Skips On Past Earth

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The Earth is in no danger from a mile-wide chunk of space rock that zipped within about 2.5 million miles of the planet.

"It's just a nice close approach which makes it very convenient for astronomers who want to study it," said Brian Marsden of the International Astronomical Union's Central Bureau in Cambridge, Mass.

The asteroid, named 1989 PB, has been moving at many thousands miles per hour within close observation range of the Earth for several days, Marsden said. The point of closest approach, about 2.5 million miles away, was estimated at about 11 p.m. EDT Thursday.

That's a little more than 10 times the average distance of the Moon from Earth, about 239,000 miles.

Eleanor Helin, an astronomer for NASA's Jet Propulsion Laboratory, discovered the asteroid Aug. 9 in film studies taken that day on a telescope at the Palomar Observatory in San Diego.

When first seen, the asteroid was outside the orbit of Earth and angling inward, toward the sun, she said.

"It will be adjacent, then pass by and then lead the Earth" over the next few days, she said.

Helin said asteroid 1989 PB will arc away from the Earth's orbit, pass around the sun, dipping to a point inside the orbit of Venus and then loop back out to just beyond the orbit of Mars. It is expected to cross the Earth's orbit again in about 13 months. But, as Marsden noted, "the Earth will not be there then."

Asteroid 1989 PB is the sixth to make what Marsden called a "close approach" to the Earth this year, but only one other has been closer.

In March, 1989 FC passed within 460,000 miles of the Earth. Helin said this is believed to be the closest asteroid pass in the records of astronomy, surpassing an asteroid named Hermes that whizzed by 480,000 miles from the Earth in 1937.

Other close approaches, and their distances from Earth this year, according to Marsden: 1989 DA in February, 6 million miles; 1989 JA in June, 8 million miles; 1989 AC in January, 10 million miles; and 1989 FB in early February, 20 million to 30 million miles.

Marsden said the cluster of close approaches is just "a statistical fluke" and implies nothing about future asteroids.

But eventually, he said, one of the rapidly moving space mountains will smash into the Earth.

"If we are talking about a period of within a million years, one almost certainly will hit the Earth," he said.

The chances of a smaller asteroid hitting the Earth is likely "within a 1,000 years or so," he said, noting that one about 100 yards across exploded just over the Siberian plains near Tunguska in 1908. The sound could be heard for hundreds of miles and the landscape was blasted as if by a small atomic bomb.

Marsden said an object hit Arizona about 25,000 years ago, creating a well-known crater near Flagstaff more than a mile across.

A theory supported by many scientists is that an asteroid that hit the Earth 67 million years ago caused the extinction of the dinosaurs, perhaps by causing a rapid change in the weather.

TRW Wins Right To Dump Contract

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — A federal judge says the Energy Department must award a $1 billion contract for a high-level nuclear waste dump in Nevada to a company that sued the agency on the grounds the selection process was improper.

U.S. Claims Court Judge Reginald Gibson, in a ruling that has set back the government's problem-ridden nuclear waste program, said Thursday that the department could give the 10-year contract only to TRW Inc., an unsuccessful bidder that filed the December lawsuit.

The department said it was disappointed about the ruling, but stressed that the decision did not stop preliminary work to determine the site's suitability.

The project has been beset with delays and political squabbles, stemming in part from Nevada's objection to being chosen as the site for the waste dump, scheduled to begin receiving radioactive cargo in 2003.

Larry Henry, press secretary for Nevada Gov. Bob Miller, said the court ruling "severely weakens the DOE's credibility" and underscores the state's contention that the project has been guided by politics, not science.

The proposed site at Yucca Mountain is about 100 miles northwest of Las Vegas.

Construction has not begun, and Energy Secretary James D. Watkins has been pressing to begin geologic studies to determine whether the site would qualify.

Leo Duffy, Watkins' chief aide on waste issues, said last month that the department "can't afford" to start from scratch in soliciting bids for the contract.

Gibson's opinion was not immediately made public, but the ist of the decision, without explanation, was contained in a brief memorandum to the parties in the suit.

Gibson said the opinion would be kept secret until Wednesday to allow the companies involved to review the document for proprietary information or trade secrets that should not be made public.

At issue is a charge by Cleveland-based TRW that Energy Department officials involved in selecting Bechtel Systems Management Inc. in 1988 were guilty of a conflict of interest.

TRW's contention centered on the fact that Samuel Rouso, who had a hand in selecting Bechtel, had worked for Science Applications International Corp., a subcontractor to Bechtel. Rouso is director of the DOE's office of civilian radioactive waste management, which runs the project.

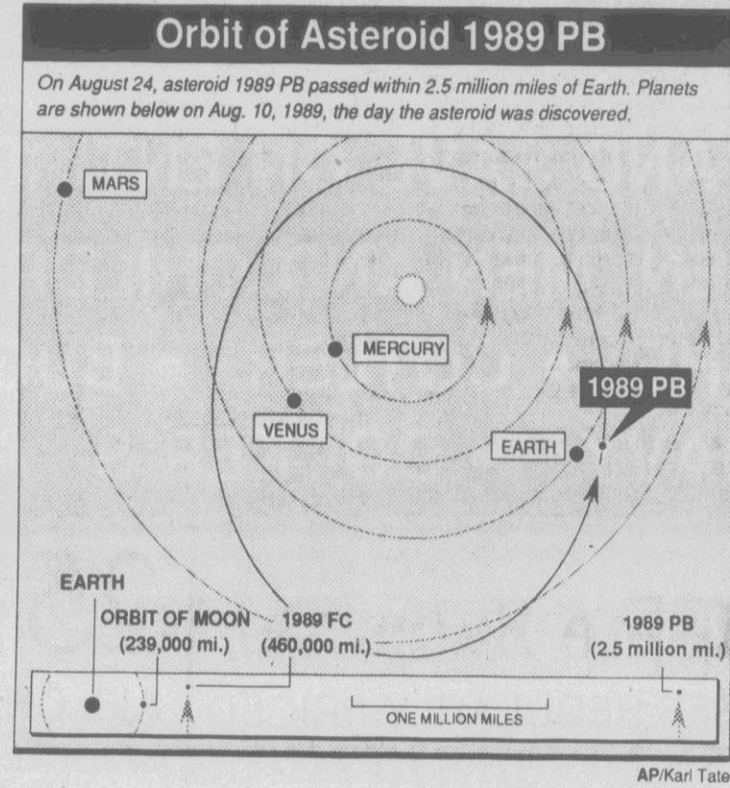

Under federal law, DOE supervisors can't participate in any projects that involve any energy concern for which they worked for up to one year after leaving that company.

Department spokeswoman Ginger King said Rouso was not available for comment Thursday.

Bechtel spokesman Rick Laubscher said from San Francisco that company officials were "very disappointed" in the ruling, but hadn't seen the opinion or conferred with the DOE.

"We have to do those things before we can speak knowledgeably on the matter," Laubscher said.

Spokesmen at TRW's Cleveland and Washington, D.C., offices were not available for comment.

Pilot Acquitted In Prison Break

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SANTA FE, N.M. — A pilot was cleared of criminal complicity in a July 1988 helicopter escape from the state penitentiary, and he said he is bitter over what he considers persecution by law enforcement agencies.

Following an eight-day trial, a jury deliberated fewer than three hours Thursday before acquitting Charles Bella of conspiracy and three counts of assisting a prison escape, all felonies.

The El Paso, Texas, pilot said afterward he's $500,000 in debt because of the trial and damage to his helicopter. Justice triumphed, but he is considering suing New Mexico, he added.

"I'm going to try to get a little bit more justice in this state," Bella said.

Bella had testified that he was hijacked July 11, 1988, by Beverly Shoemaker, a girlfriend of inmate Daniel Mahoney, and forced at gunpoint to land in the prison recreation yard to pick up three inmates.

He then flew to Mid Valley, where the escapees and Ms. Shoemaker fled from the helicopter, leaving Bella handcuffed to a control stick. He said inmate Preston Mitchell returned to the helicopter, stuck a pistol to his head and ordered him to take off.

That's when a U.S. Customs officer fired at the Gazelle helicopter and hit a landing skid.

"They are either going to try to kill you from the outside or persecute you on the inside," Bella said Thursday.

Bella said he's working on a book because "there is a lot to be learned from this experience. Things were done to me that shouldn't have been done."

District Attorney Chet Walter said: "Of course we regret but accept the jury's verdict. We do regret that the jury did not have at its disposal in making its decision all the evidence that the prosecution had at its disposal."

The judge excluded all hearsay statements by inmate Randy Mack Lackey.

The state alleged that Bella conspired with Lackey, Mahoney, Mitchell and Ms. Shoemaker and that he received $30,000.

Bella testified that he was contacted on the weekend prior to the escape by a man identifying himself as Bill Allen of Allen Real Estate in Santa Fe, who hired him for an aerial real estate survey.

He said he was hijacked shortly after picking up Ms. Shoemaker at Santa Fe Airport and forced at gunpoint to land in the penitentiary recreation yard to pick up the inmates.

Ms. Shoemaker, who also was charged with conspiracy and three counts of assisting a prison escape, pleaded guilty last week and testified for the defense. Her account mainly matched Bella's and contradicted Lackey's.

The three inmates were charged with conspiracy and prison escape. Mahoney was tried and convicted in April. Lackey pleaded guilty in April to a single charge of prison escape and was sentenced to a 10-year prison term with seven years suspended. Mitchell's trial is pending.

Former state Attorney General David Norvell, who teamed with F. Lee Bailey in defense of Bella, said the fairly brief deliberation "shows the decision was swift and dispositive and consistent with what we thought should have been the disposition all along."

Black Youth Killed In Racial Violence

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Racial violence flared once again in New York, where police said a gang of white teen-agers, out to block an interracial couple from getting together, shot and killed a black youth who happened along.

In a killing reminiscent of the Howard Beach case, as many as 30 white youths with baseball bats and at least one gun chased 16-year-old Yusef Hawkins and three of his friends, culminating with Hawkins' slaying, police said. The black teen-agers said they were going to meet someone selling a used car.

In 1986, a group of white teen-agers in the Howard Beach section of Queens chased three blacks, one of whom was hit by a car and killed. In Brooklyn's mostly Italian-American Bensonhurst section Wednesday night, the white gang gathered to waylay blacks or Hispanics they believed were headed for a young woman's birthday party in the neighborhood, authorities said.

Police Commissioner Benjamin Ward said the 18-year-old woman had recently jilted her white boyfriend and had been dating black and Hispanic men.

The spurned boyfriend had threatened the girl and made comments to her about "your nigger boyfriend" and "bringing niggers into the neighborhood," said Deputy Commissioner Alice McGillion.

The slain youth's father stood Thursday night on his own Brooklyn street, which is mostly black, and laid the blame squarely on racism.

"My son will never turn this color again and it's only because of this: the pigment of his skin," Fred Stewart said bitterly.

FEC Preparing Guides For States With Computerized Voting Systems

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The Federal Election Commission is working on voluntary standards aimed at assuring that computerized voting systems used in many states are accurate and fraud-free, but a draft proposal already is coming under fire.

A 20-member advisory panel of the FEC's National Clearinghouse on Election Administration was meeting today to discuss the proposed standards, intended to guide state authorities who oversee elections across the country.

But some public interest groups say the proposed standards are inadequate.

"The first major inadequacy is that they're not mandatory," said Mae Churchill, director of Election Watch, a project of the Urban Policy Research Institute, based in Pacific Palisades, Calif. "The second is that there ... was virtually no sign of any public input into their creation."

There has been increased concern in recent years over the accuracy and security of computerized tabulation systems, which in 1988 were used in handling more than 50 percent of all voters' ballots nationwide.

"The election community is underfunded and underorganized," according to Lance J. Hoffman, a computer science professor at George Washington University. "With some exceptions, it knows little about managing computer security. Few jurisdictions share knowledge. Therefore, American elections are more vulnerable to fraud and error than is desirable or necessary."

The proposed FEC standards outline in technical language the steps that should be followed by election authorities to operate a reliable voting system. The latest draft was released Aug. 8.

The standards would be voluntary because by law, states control their own election systems. Computerized voting systems include those using punch-cards; mark-sense cards, in which a person marks his choice in pencil on cards that are read by computer; and direct-recording electronic systems, in which the voter punches a button.

Ms. Churchill said the main role in developing the standards was played by companies that market computerized voting equipment, software and services. "It seems to me there's an obvious conflict of interest," she said.

Another public interest group, Computer Professionals for Social Responsibility, based in Palo Alto, Calif., said election authorities need tighter oversight of computerized systems.

"From the technology viewpoint, the basic problem is that computerized vote tabulation, without some form of public review, is a black box," said Marc Rotenberg, director of the group's Washington office.

"People put votes in and the result comes out — and we really don't know what's happened in between, without an opportunity to review the source code, to thoroughly test it and see if the system is operating properly," he said.

Rotenberg contended that "the FEC standards, as currently drafted, are inadequate to ensure that voting systems will operate as required."

He also complained that the FEC process, which began in 1984, is taking too long.

Roy G. Saltman, a computer security specialist at the National Institute of Standards and Technology, in Gaithersburg, Md., said in a letter to the FEC the standards contain "major flaws" in setting specific numerical accuracy requirements and thorough testing of vote-tallying software.

Penelope Bonsall, director of the FEC's election administration clearinghouse, said some of Saltman's points are valid while others "are not resolvable within the milieu of what the standards are supposed to do."

Regarding Ms. Churchill's complaint that the standards should be mandatory, Ms. Bonsall said, "Congress made it clear (in 1984) that these standards would not be mandated — that there would be no federal role ... to impose this type of standards on the states. It will be voluntary, it will always be voluntary. So that argument is moot."

The FEC official said she believed many states will adopt the standards, adding the four-year study has gained "a lot of field support."

Ms. Bonsall said there has been ample opportunity for public input during at least nine public meetings on the proposal, and that Election Watch and other groups have been provided with drafts of the standards.

The FEC is expected to make a decision by the end of October.

Army 'Enlists' Dying 8-Year-Old Boy 'Soldier'

FAIRMONT, W. Va. (AP) — It started as a simple visit by a couple of soldiers in combat fatigues with an 8-year-old boy dying of cancer.

But by the end of the day, Chris Riley had enlisted in the Army as a special soldier, flown in a helicopter, ridden in a tanklike vehicle called a mobile howitzer and made some new friends in the military.

"It certainly is a dream come true," said the boy's father, Robert "Kip" Riley. "He's a big G.I. Joe fan. He was just thrilled to death, just as thrilled as anyone could be with all these things."

Chris has undergone surgery twice since November 1986 for a brain tumor, said his mother, Gale Riley. She said chemotherapy was stopped last month after the cancer spread to Chris' spine, leaving him in pain and too weak to walk.

"Now he's on constant morphine to keep away the pain," Mrs. Riley said. "And he's lost most of his mobility. There's nothing more the doctors can do for him right now."

"He's a loving boy. It would have been nice to have all these things happen when he was able to follow them a little closer," his father added.

Chris, clad in a camouflage uniform with a black military police armband and RILEY stitched above his right pocket, nodded weakly when asked if he enjoyed the 10-minute ride Thursday in the howitzer across a hilly field a couple of blocks from his home in northern West Virginia.

Unable to speak much above a whisper, the shy boy described the ride as "loud."

"I saw the look on his face and I sent them around the field again," said Maj. John Pack of the 201st Field Artillery Unit of the West Virginia Army National Guard as the howitzer roared up a hill with Chris and his parents inside.

"He loves G.I. Joe and we wanted to make one of his dreams come true. This is the closest thing we have to it."

Poor weather conditions delayed Chris' ride in an Army reserve UH-1 helicopter until late afternoon.

"He's just totally wiped out, he's so happy," said Mrs. Riley. "His doctor called and said she didn't want him to go up but he wanted to do it."

Earlier, Chris was sworn in during a special ceremony by Capt. Duane Dawn of the Army's Fairmont recruiting office, which organized the event after a family friend suggested a visit from a couple of G.I. Joes might cheer Chris.

But Carol Taylor, a secretary at the recruiting office, wasn't about to let it stop there.

"I said why don't we try for a helicopter and a tank," said Taylor. "I wasn't about to take no for an answer."

She didn't have to. Members of the Army's Pittsburgh recruiting battalion sent a four-man color guard and a stuffed bear decked out in a camouflage suit. The 201st volunteered its equipment, soldiers and weapons, and Dawn and 1st Sgt. Gary Johnson prepared an enlistment certificate for Chris.

Neighbors Sue Over Crack House

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SAN FRANCISCO — Frustrated by two years of inaction and red tape, neighbors of an alleged crack house turned to small claims court and successfully sued the building's owner.

"It was an act of desperation," said Gary Brady, one of 15 neighbors of Rose Jackson who filed the lawsuit, charging the house was a nuisance and a threat to safety.

Municipal Judge Joseph Desmond notified the plaintiffs Thursday that each had been awarded $2,000 plus court costs of about $20. The judge would not discuss his ruling because of the possibility of appeal.

Jackson maintained she had no control over her tenant.

"We complained to the cops, to the fire department, the city building inspectors, the health department," said another neighbor, Aloysius Johnson. "I even complained to the archbishop's office, but nothing. Zilch."

"Cars parked outside at all hours, shots fired, fights," said police Capt. Diarmuid Philpott. "Narcotics officers made many arrests, but it didn't reduce the problem."

Home Sales On Rise

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Sales of existing homes rose 1.2 percent in July, posting the first back-to-back increase after high mortgage rates produced consecutive declines in the first five months of 1989, a real estate trade group reported today.

The National Association of Realtors said sales of existing single-family homes sold at a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 3.40 million units in July, up from June's revised 3.36 million units.

June's increase was the first in sales since December 1988 and the largest since December 1986, when sales jumped 6.6 percent.

"The downswing in (mortgage interest) rates is pulling some buyers off the sidelines," said NAR President Ira Gribbin.

The Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corp. reported that average fixed-rate mortgages fell from 10.03 percent to 9.81 percent during July.

The Realtors also reported the median price of a home rose $3,000 to $96,400, a 3.2 percent increase over June and 6.3 percent over the previous year. The median price means half the homes cost more, half less.

The median price reflects the dominance of higher-priced home sales, said NAR chief economist John A. Tuccillo, and "a relatively low volume of sales in the lower-priced starter range."

Lutherans Delay Vote On Issues

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ROSEMONT, Ill. — The newly consolidated Lutheran church's interim policy against ordaining practicing homosexuals prompted a clergywoman to comment, "So this is the policy we will have about it while we are trying to develop a policy about it."

The remark by the Rev. Gwendolyn King of Hanover, N.H., indicates the somewhat misty hiatus in which the church finds itself on various social issues.

In keeping with Lutheranism's characteristic analytical approach, the Evangelical Lutheran Church in America's first decision-making assembly called for more study before taking definite stands on several sensitive questions, including sexuality.

Of that subject's myriad aspects, the Rev. Gerald L. Falk of Chicago, executive director of the church's social-concerns commission, said, "It's a very difficult issue that we must study carefully, prayerfully and thoroughly so that we can discern the path which God is calling us to follow."

The Evangelical Lutheran Church in America is the result of the Jan. 1, 1988 merger of the Lutheran Church in America, the American Lutheran Church and the Association of Evangelical Lutheran Churches.

The 5.3-million-member denomination ordered studies on a batch of issues, including the homeless, family life, capital punishment and health care.

Action was pending on a proposal for a two-year study of sexuality, including homosexuality and abortion.

Accent

American Idioms Spell
Trouble For ForeignersBy Don Oldenburg
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — Jarold Kieffer had seen the puzzled looks on the faces of the Laotians and Afghans at work. Older refugees who came to the offices of Senior Employment Resources (SER), in Annandale, seeking jobs, sometimes showed the same expression when Kieffer talked to them.

But it never occurred to him there was a problem, a failure to communicate. Not until one day, about a year ago, when Kieffer, SER's chairman of the board, asked one of his counselors who is Vietnamese to help him move a table.

"Give me a hand, will ya?" Kieffer said. The counselor seemed stunned. Looking at his hands, he blurted, "But I need them both."

Sound like a line from a bad screenplay? That's about what Kieffer thought. But the script here is the everyday English peppered with idioms, colloquialisms, regional vernacular and just plain slang. For most Americans, these expressions are intelligible and as ordinary as a cheeseburger on a menu. Garden-variety conversation. But for people who translate English literally, those for whom it is a second and most exasperating language, phrases like "foot the bill" and "dyed-in-the-wool" parley into linguistic dead ends.

Not typically well-versed in other languages themselves, Americans generally aren't aware of how much difficulty idioms cause for foreign-speaking people. Even at the highest level of communicate: George Bush resorts to stock phrases, frequently frustrating foreign journalists covering the White House who then must translate the president's slang for folks back home.

"Lighten up," for instance, is meaningless in Russian, though the president once suggested the Soviets give that a try. When asked at a recent press conference where funding for the drug war would come from, if not from higher revenues, Bush answered with a favorite expression. "Stay tuned," however, has no equivalent in Bogota or Bangkok. Moments later, commenting on whether Gen. Manuel Noriega might leave Panama voluntarily, Bush said, "I'm not holding my breath..." How Noriega interpreted that is anybody's guess.

That the president likes sports allusions doesn't help either. For a foreigner clutching a Berlitz book, wording such as "get to first base" or "carry the ball" makes about as much sense as would a little dugout philosophizing 'tween Casey Stengel and Yogi Berra. On U.S. persistence, the president and former Yale first baseman recently warned that his administration would "stay at the plate," thereby throwing a curve to foreign audiences, at least those outside of Japan and Latin America where Abner Doubleday's game is all doublespeak. Also speaking on drug policy, the president went to the hoop: "We ought to put on a full-court press..."

"He reeks of it," Kieffer says of Bush's use of idiomatic language (not to be taken literally, of course). Kieffer admits he does, too. But, for the sake of hundreds of thousands of refugees who draw a blank on such talk, he decided to do something about it. He compiled a 496-page, shirt-pocket-size book that translates the most common of the lot, titled "What Are Those Crazy Americans Saying?"

"It struck me that the problem is a lot of these people have been here a few years and they know English words and they know how to use a dictionary," says Kieffer. "But it's the way we put the words together that leaves them absolutely puzzled. The meaning doesn't conform to the dictionary meaning.

"Like if I say 'turn in,' we know it means to get some rest, to go off duty. It means nothing to them. Then they try to use it, and they are embarrassed when we start laughing."

Acknowledging that his book is nothing new, Kieffer says there are tomes on slang at libraries, "but this had to be something useful in the workplace, something simple to use." Kieffer is all too aware of the troubles refugees face in finding and keeping jobs, especially the older ones who, along with other Northern Virginia senior citizens, the non-profit SER assists. Competency in basic workplace skills, with listening and speaking topping the list, has become a nagging concern for labor experts and employers, especially as forecasters predict that workers whose native tongue is not English will increasingly shape the U.S. workforce into the next century.

To make the expressions easily accessible, Kieffer lists them alphabetically, according to each of the main words in the phrase. "How do you look up 'I'll be with you in two shakes of a lamb's tail'?" I decided to put that under shake, lamb and tail," he says, "on the theory that they might pick up on one of those words. That lengthened the book a little, but I thought it was useful to have them not flapping pages."

Besides interpreting expressions that range from "crying in his beer" to "go fly a kite" to "wrack our brains," Kieffer created several appendixes. In one, he lists the friendly ways of saying hello and goodbye. He lists the unfriendly ways, too, including "beat it," "bug off," "drop dead," "get lost," "take a hike" and "scram." He also documents equivalents for yes and no that range from "I'll buy that" and "Roger" to "Forget it" and "I pass." Expressions to soften or avoid swear words get two pages: "Darn it," "hells bells," "tarnation" and "I'll be darned," among them.

McCoy-Oakley Vows
Spoken On Saturday

FARMVILLE — The wedding ceremony of Gina Oakley and Keith McCoy took place Saturday at 7 p.m. in Pine Street Baptist Church.

The Rev. Richard C. Calhoun conducted the double-ring ceremony. Music was presented by organist Nancy Oakley of Farmville, pianist Janice Oakley of New Bern and vocalist Larry Martin of Cove City, accompanied by his wife.

Parents of the bridal couple are Mr. and Mrs. Bill Oakley of Farmville, and Mr. and Mrs. Ben McCoy of Cove City.

The bride was given in marriage by her father. Her dress featured a cathedral neckline edged in lace, semi-empire waistline and satin scalloped bustle around the waist with a satin bow. The skirt was scalloped with ribbon bows and lace, accenting the train. Her headpiece was of silk flowers and pearls with a tiered veil. She carried a fan accented with white silk flowers.

Deborah Morrison of New Bern was matron of honor for her sister. She wore a mauve tea-length gown of satin applique and carried a fan with mauve silk flowers.

Bridesmaids were Ivy Oakley of New Bern, niece of the bride; Darlene McCoy of Cove City, cousin of the bridegroom, and Beverly Cox of New Bern. Each wore a dusty rose tea-length gown and carried a fan of silk mauve flowers.

Heidi Morrison of New Bern, niece of the bride, was flower girl and wore a white silk dress with a V-neckline. She carried a basket of petals. Joshua Cumbo, nephew of the bridegroom, was ring bearer. Ribbon and rice girl was Susanna Dilda of Hookerton, cousin of the bride.

The best man was the bridegroom's father. Ushers were Ward McCoy, cousin of the bridegroom, Shelton Papas and David Cox, all of Cove City; Robbie Morrison and Corey Oakley of New Bern, nephews of the bride, and Jason Cumbo, nephew of the bridegroom, all of New Bern.

The mother of the bride wore a two-piece pale pink ensemble of georgette, and the mother of the bridegroom, wore a two-piece aqua brocade satin ensemble.

The couple will live in Cove City. The bride is employed by Pitt County Memorial Hospital, and the bridegroom is employed by the Craven County Transportation Department.

A reception was held on the Farmville Town Commons. An after-rehearsal dinner was given by the bridegroom's parents.

Double-Ring Ceremony Performed Saturday

Judy Delores Godwin and Keith Thomas Langley were married at 11 a.m. Saturday at Oakland Grove Farms. David Cox conducted the double-ring ceremony.

Parents of the bride are Billy G. Godwin of Greenville, and Mr. and Mrs. Howard D. Wooten Jr. of Route 2, Chocowinity. Grace T. Langley of Rocky Mount and Clayde E. Langley of Grafton, Va., are parents of the bridegroom.

Tammy Anderson of Greenville, cousin of the bride, was maid of honor and bridesmaids included May Jo Mitchell of Grimesland and Lynn Buck of Greenville. Casey Langley of Carrolton, Ga., niece of the bridegroom, was flower girl.

The best man was Mark Langley of Grimesland, brother of the bridegroom. Ushers included Chris Edwards and Greg Bland, both of Grimesland. The ring bearer was Brad Langley of Timmonsville, S.C., son of the bridegroom.

The bride was given in marriage by her stepfather. She wore a formal gown of taffeta over peau de soie with a modified sabrina neckline of alencon lace beaded with pearls, fitted bodice overlaid with English net and re-embroidered lace extending

Ivory Piano Keys Almost Extinct

By Joseph McLellan
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

Whatever you hear the pianist tickling in your favorite cocktail lounge, it probably isn't ivory; it's likely to be something a lot cheaper. The ivory keyboard is going the way of ivory dice and billiard balls, hats with egret feathers, leopard-skin coats and tortoise-shell anything.

If the elephant lovers of the world had been planning to put picket lines around piano warehouses, they can call them off. In the aftermath of an announcement in Tokyo, American piano manufacturers are hastening to assure the public that they stopped molesting our long-tusked friends decades ago. The elephant is undoubtedly endangered, but the ivory keyboard is almost extinct.

"We have not been using ivory for a long time," said spokeswoman Sally Coveleskie at the Baldwin Piano Co. in Manhattan. "The touch of a piano can't justify the slaughter of these animals."

She was responding to the announcement that the world's two biggest piano manufacturers, Yamaha and Kawai, would stop buying ivory to use in piano keys because of public pressure to protect elephants.

In the United States, the strongest defender of elephants in the piano business probably has been the bottom line — the factor that has made the wooden sled a luxury item, cloth automobile upholstery a special (and hard to get) accessory, the paper bag an endangered species.

The ivory used in piano keys (actually, a thin veneer glued on the top and sides of a wooden key) has been replaced by plastic substitutes that are cheaper, less likely to chip, longer-wearing and not inclined to turn yellow as old ivory is.

The time may come when ecologists begin agitating for piano keys that are biodegradable, when the landfills will be glutted with plastic piano keys that just sit there, century after century, biologically inert and taking up space that could be used by mulch. But that's not yet. Plastic keys are the wave of the present.

Pianists who insist on ivory can buy it to put on their keys, and some do — though the time may be near when it is harder to get. Or those who must have a piano made with ivory keys can still get one if they move fast, go to Japan (never buy a piano by intercontinental mail order) and pay through the nose. "Some pianists tell me they can feel the difference," Coveleskie said. "There is a grain in ivory, and it made a pianist feel he could get deeper into the keys. But it's not a very humane thing to do, it's not necessary, so we don't do it."

A common joke among pianists, when they see an ivory keyboard yellowed with age, is that "the elephant must have smoked too much." Plastics have made that joke obsolescent.

At Yamaha's American headquarters, spokesman Terry Lewis said that ivory keys "have been a non-issue in this country for a long time." Yamaha, which has been distributing in America for 29 years; may have imported some ivory keys in the beginning, Lewis said, "but we used very little even from the beginning and we haven't used any ivory at all in this country for well over a decade."

Taxation Ruling Making Waves

By Nancy Benac
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Aftershocks still are rippling across the country five months after an obscure lawsuit filed by a federal retiree in Michigan produced a Supreme Court ruling that upset tax laws in nearly half the states.

States are raising, cutting and shifting taxes, federal retirees are angling for more than a billion dollars in refunds and some private pensioners are claiming they, too, are victims of unfair state taxation.

The furor began when lawyer Paul S. Davis filed suit in 1984 claiming it was unfair for Michigan to tax part of his federal pension when the state exempted the full pensions of state and local government retirees.

The Supreme Court agreed, ruling in March that Davis was entitled to a $4,299 refund and ordering states to treat federal retirees at least as favorably as state and local retirees.

The decision hit home in as many as 24 states that didn't tax all government pensioners equally, 12 of which have enacted corrective legislation, according to the National Conference of State Legislatures.

But instead of making all federal retirement benefits exempt, some states have imposed new taxes on a portion of state and local pensions.

For example, Missouri used to provide a full exemption for state pensions and none for federal. Now it provides a $6,000 exclusion for all single public pensioners with income up to $25,000 and for couples with public pensions up to $32,000; there is no exclusion for those with higher incomes.

Laws that exclude part of public pensions from taxation tend to benefit state and local retirees disproportionately because their pensions generally are lower, said Denis Harrington, of the National Association of Retired Federal Employees.

Harrington said he'd rather see states offer federal pensioners the same benefits other government retirees received in the past, "but as long as they comply with the Supreme Court ruling we haven't got a leg to stand on."

The court left unsettled whether the states must refund tax payments by federal retirees; most states are resisting refund requests. Lawsuits seeking refunds have been filed in nearly all the affected states, and potential claims total $1.5 billion to $2 billion for years within the states' statutes of limitation, according to the Federation of Tax Administrators.

Lawrence Lewy, a 75-year-old former IRS attorney, believes he is due more than $10,000 from Virginia and is among those who have filed suit. "I'm not saying I won't be delighted with whatever eventually comes if we win," Lewy said. "But just the idea of the accomplishment is a big factor."

Virginia has the most to lose if refunds are required — an estimated $370 million for a three-year period.

Refunds so far have been forthcoming only for Davis and in Missouri, where the state Supreme Court in May ordered $160 million in refunds covering three years. The state will raise the money through temporary increases in the sales and corporate income taxes.

In Arizona, a tax judge this month ordered the state to reimburse 72,000 federal retirees up to $210 million on taxes paid from 1984 through 1988. Craig Cormier, deputy director of the Arizona Department of Revenue, said the ruling could be "financially devastating" if it stands, since the state recently had trouble resolving a $165 million budget deficit.

Harrington said the Missouri and Arizona rulings are encouraging, but most states seem determined to "go down fighting" against the refunds.

"Every time we get a favorable decision it improves the odds dramatically. It's inevitable that they're going to have to pay refunds of some kind."

Attorney Linda Riley of the Federation of Tax Administrators said states "are watching each other" on the refund question, but she cautioned that laws vary from state to state, and rulings won't necessarily go the same everywhere.

Harrington and Riley said many states are awaiting a Supreme Court ruling next term on two consolidated cases that will help determine when taxpayers are due a refund on a state tax that is found to be unconstitutional.

While the Davis ruling addressed only disparities in taxation of pensions for government retirees, it has sparked interest among private pensioners.

A retired Teamsters union member in Missouri and a group of private pensioners in Alabama have filed suits in their states alleging that dissimilar tax treatment for private retirees is unconstitutional.

Virginia, one of the first to respond to the Davis ruling, enacted a tax-reduction package that equalizes treatment for public and private retirees aged 55 and older, at a cost of $70 million in the first year and $87 million by the third. The state will exclude the first $16,000 of pension income from taxation, reducing the exclusion gradually for those with income from $16,001 to $40,000 and providing no exclusion for those with income over $40,000.

Here's how the NCSL said other states have responded:

—New York, North Dakota, West Virginia and Wisconsin extended state preferences to federal retirees;

—Arizona, Oregon and South Carolina repealed preferential state pension exclusions and raised other benefits for state retirees; —Alabama, Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi, Montana, New Mexico and North Carolina have yet to complete action.

800-Year-Old Tradition Of London's Lord Mayor Is More Than Figurehead

By Maggie Jackson
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LONDON — He's still entitled to any sturgeon caught off London Bridge and the password to the Tower, but gone are the days when London's Lord Mayors roused the rabble and played banker to the king.

Celebrating the 800th anniversary of his office this year, today's Lord Mayor, Christopher Collett, stays well away from politics in ruling his now-tiny domain, called the City, at the heart of ancient London.

Yet while bereft of his predecessors' powers, the Lord Mayor is not an empty figurehead. As representative of the City of London, the one-square mile financial district, the mayor is an ambassador for big business and, like the monarch, a symbol of the history Britons cherish.

"People, even Britons, think the Lord Mayor is like Ed Koch or Jacques Chirac," said Tony Travers, head of a London School of Economics research group on capital government, speaking of the mayors of New York and Paris. "The contrast could not be greater."

London's only mayor — the rest of the city has none — "does all the things that a marketing department might do," Travers said.

"Certainly the emphasis has changed," Lord Mayor Collett said from under a three-cornered hat in a spare moment at a public appearance. "We're now left as the titular head."

Like all the 660 mayors before him, Collett, an accountant, is a wealthy man with ties to business. Mayors are nominated by members of the City's ancient trade guilds and elected by aldermen. They serve for a year.

Early mayors often used their wealth to lend money to the crown or pay court expenses and received in return favors ranging from tax exemptions to gifts of royal venison.

Merchant Henry FitzAilwyn, the first lord mayor, was also the longest serving, with 20 years in office.

Lord mayors had to pay expenses so weighty that men often chose to pay fines rather than serve and in 1554, a law was passed allowing mayors to cut down the number of courses served at their feasts. Modern mayors still subsidize their terms, although they receive entertainment allowances.

Yet ample money did not always ensure good relations with the crown, writes Valerie Hope, author of "My Lord Mayor," a history of the office published this year.

Thomas FitzThomas — one of the early rabble rousers — landed in prison for heading a rebellion against City aristocrats. Many of his successors, particularly in the 18th century, were radicals, some siding with the American colonists against George III.

Most famous was John Wilkes, whose criticism of George III brought him a prison sentence, which a mob tried to prevent. Another, Brackley Kennett, was sentenced for exacerbating an anti-Catholic riot in 1780.

By this time the mayor wore quite a few hats.

"He arbitrated disputes between citizens or merchants, could dispatch people to prison and sat as a justice," City Archivist Jim Sewell said in an interview. "He might have gone 'round to the market and told poulterers off if they were overpricing" or seized fishing nets banned in the River Thames.

The Lord Mayor is still the City's chief magistrate and can preside at his official residence, Mansion House, in the "Justice Room."

A whirlwind of tree-plantings, business promotions, lunches, meetings and trips, sometimes abroad, also occupies today's mayor, who wears a medieval-looking costume of lacy shirt, flowing robe and gold chain.

His closest brushes with politics are hosting annual banquets, where the prime minister and head of the Treasury make major speeches, and presiding over meetings of the Common Council, the City's administrative body.

Added to Collett's duties this year have been anniversary celebrations, from cutting a seven-foot-high birthday cake to an extra special Lord Mayor's show, the mayor's popular election parade.

Dame Mary Donaldson, the only woman to hold the post, says she gave 600 speeches and worked 17-hour days during her year in office in 1983.

"You do have to submerge to a certain extent your own personality," said the perky Dame Mary, a member of the "Worshipful Company of Gardeners" guild. "Any thought of having a personal life is just out."

Periodic efforts have been made to reform the City, which is criticized as anachronistic with its medieval-era boundaries and government dominated by business interests, said Travers.

Wedding Vows Said Saturday

Robin Michelle Cates and Donald McKenzie Nicholls III were married at 7 p.m. Saturday in First Christian Church. Glen Evans officiated the double-ring ceremony.

Soloist Eddie Davenport presented music.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Carlton Thomas Cates, and the bridegroom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Amos McLawhorn, all of Greenville.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore a floor-length gown of sheerganza with a high neckline and sheer illusion yoke. Venise lace, accented the fitted bodice and self-fabric scalloped ruffles trimmed the shoulders and cathedral train. Lace motifs were accented by sequins.

She wore a halo heapeice of matching lace with sequins attached to a waist-length illusion veil. Her bouquet was of white roses, alstromerias and English ivy.

Kim Lockamy was maid of honor and Lisa Manning was matron of honor, both of Greenville.

Bridesmaids were Belinda Eubanks of Grifton, Renee Everett, cousin of the bridegroom, and Dana Cox, both of Greenville, and Dawn Cates of Wilson, cousin of the bride. Michelle McLawhorn, sister of the bridegroom, was flower girl.

Each of the attendants wore a royal blue tea-length dress and carried an arm bouquet of pink carnations and alstromerias.

The bridegroom's father was best man. Ushers were Terry Little, Mike Mills, brother of bridegroom, Ricky Cates, brother of the bride, Mike Manning, cousin of the bride, and Ray Jones, all of Greenville. Ring bearer was Kevin Lockamy of Greenville.

The couple will live in Greenville after a wedding trip to Lake Gaston.

Both the bride and bridegroom graduated from North Pitt High School and are attending Pitt Community College. She is employed by Pitt County Memorial Hospital and he is employed by Empire Brush.

A reception was held at the church. A rehearsal dinner and several showers were given for the couple prior to their wedding.

Woman Needs Change After Third Marriage To Same Man

Editor's note: Abby is off on a two-week vacation, but she left behind some of her favorite letters taken from her best-selling book, "The Best of Dear Abby."

Dear Abby: I am a 29-year-old woman who has married and divorced the same man three times in the last 10 years. Our last divorce became final three weeks ago, and now Mike is begging me to marry him again. We have no children, and we don't want any. Abby, the only time he is decent to me is when we're divorced. He's a wonderful lover but a rotten husband. He's a boozier and a cheater.

If I told you how much we've spent on lawyers you would think we were out of our minds. I love the guy, but I know if I marry him again he'll go back to his old abusive ways. Can you help me? — Three-Time Loser

Dear Loser: Three strikes and a man is out, no matter how good his pitches. Some men are great to date but not to mate, and Mike could be one of them.

Dear Abby: Here's a switch for you: Why should a married man who is seeing another woman on the side (me) keep telling me what a wonderful lover his wife is?

If she's so wonderful, what am I doing in the picture? — Puzzled

Dear Abby

Abigail Van Buren

Dear Puzzled: Perhaps he is trying to get you to try harder because you are No. 2.

Dear Abby: I saw a picture of a beautiful bride in the Sunday Indianapolis Star. She had been married the previous Sunday in an Episcopal church.

In the last line, describing the wedding ceremony, was the following: "The bride's pet dog, a toy Pomeranian, served as one of her attendants."

How about that? — Horrified Hoosier

Dear Horrified: It's a wise girl who knows who her best friend is. Dear Abby: I'm 84 years old, but I still like the ladies. My wife is the jealous type, and she never wants me to leave the house without her because she's afraid I might call on an old girlfriend, so she hides my false teeth.

What should I do? — Grandpa Max

Dear Grandpa: Your wife is looking out for your best interests. She wants to make sure you don't bite off more than you can chew.

Dear Abby: My husband sleeps in his underwear. He wears the long woolen kind, and he sleeps in the same underwear he's worn all day. The problem is getting him to change it. Abby, there are four sets of clean underwear in his drawer, but he won't put on a clean pair without a fight. I can't even get the underwear away from him to put in the wash. Don't tell me to grab it when he's in the bathtub. He doesn't bathe much either. Please help me. He's getting pretty ripe. — Holding My Nose

Dear Holding: Look at it this way. You don't have to worry about another woman stealing him. And he's easy to find in the dark. But if you want action, try begging, bribing, nagging and leaving! And in that order.

Dear Abby: I have always wanted to have my family history traced, but I can't afford to spend a lot of money to do it. Any suggestions? — Sam In California

Dear Sam: Yes. Run for public office.

If you would like to write to Abby, send your letter to Abigail Van Buren, P.O. Box 69440, Los Angeles, CA, 90069. For a personal, non-published reply, enclose a self-addressed stamped envelope.

Stock And Market Reports

By The Associated Press

HOGS: The trend is steady to 50 cents lower at N.C. buying stations. Kinston, Spivey's Corner, Murfreesboro, Siler City and Robersonville, 46.00; Clinton, Fayetteville, Dunn, Pink Hill, Pine Level, Chadbourne, Ayden, Laurinburg and Benson 46.00; Wilson 46.00. Sows: (500 pounds up) Fayetteville 34.00; Wallace 35.00; Spivey's Corner 35.00; Rowland 35.00.

BROILERS: The North Carolina fob dock quoted price on broilers for this week's trading was 54 cents, based on full truck load lots of ice pack USDA Grade A sized 2 1/2 to 3 pounds birds. 21 percent of the loads offered have been confirmed for a preliminary weighted average of 51.98. The market is steady and the live supply is adequate for a moderate demand. Average weights desirable. Estimated slaughter of broilers and fryers in North Carolina Friday was 2,198,000, compared to 2,098,000 last Friday.

HENS: Market higher. Supply adequate for a moderate demand. The undertone for next week's trading is weak. Prices paid per pound for hens over seven pounds at farm for Friday was 25 cents.

GRAIN: No. 2 yellow shelled corn 2 cents lower, 2.64-2.80 in East and mostly 2.79-2.84 in the Piedmont; No. 1 yellow soybeans 2 cents lower at 6.10-6.35 in East and mostly 6.44 in the Piedmont; wheat mostly 3.49-3.59; new crop corn 2.24-2.80; new crop soybeans 5.49-5.80; P.I.K. certificates steady to 2 percent lower and ranged from 100 to 103 percent of face value.

NEW YORK (AP) — Stock prices churned ahead today, extending the yearlong rally that carried the market to record highs on Thursday.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials rose 5.88 to 2,740.52 in the first half hour of trading.

Gainers outnumbered losers by nearly 2 to 1 in nationwide trading of New York Stock Exchange-listed issues, with 600 up, 333 down and 525 unchanged. Volume on the Big Board came to 34.83 million shares as of 10 a.m. on Wall Street.

The market appeared to pause briefly at the opening as some traders cashed in the dramatic gains of stock prices lately.

But prices soon began edging ahead again on the strength of the enthusiasm generated Thursday's record high and the widespread public attention it received.

Analysts say the market has been able to recoup the last of the losses it suffered in the crash of 1987 with help from increasing confidence that the Federal Reserve can restrain inflation without causing a recession.

They also note that corporate earnings have risen sharply in the past two years, making the perceived risk in stocks less than it was when the market peaked out two years ago today.

Gainers among the blue chips included Procter & Gamble, up 2 1/4 at 133 3/4; General Electric, up 1/2 at 58 1/2; International Business Machines, up 1/4 at 116 1/4, and Philip Morris, up 1/8 at 159 1/8.

The NYSE's composite index of all its listed common stocks rose .20 to 195.49. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index was up .71 at 382.16.

On Thursday the Dow Jones industrial average jumped 56.53 points to 2,734.64, surpassing its closing reading of 2,722.42 on Aug. 25, 1987.

The gain was the second biggest this year for the average, topped only by a 56.82-point advance on May 12.

Advancing issues outnumbered declines by more than 3 to 1 on the NYSE, with 1,187 up, 353 down and 429 unchanged.

Big Board volume totaled 225.52 million shares, up from 159.64 million in the previous session.

Drug Charges

FAYETTEVILLE (AP) — The daughter of a federal Drug Enforcement Administration agent and her husband have been sentenced to nearly two years in prison on cocaine charges.

Jacqueline Perry Washington, 27, and her husband, Gary Sylvester Washington, 29, both of Fayetteville, were each sentenced in federal court to 21 months in jail.

Washington pleaded guilty in April to possession with the intent to deliver cocaine, and his wife pleaded guilty the following month to interstate travel in the aid of racketeering.

A DEA agent told the court the agency participated in the investigation because Mrs. Washington's father is a DEA agent. The father had no prior knowledge of his daughter's activities, the agent said.

In Short: No More Baseball Rose Wonders What He'll Do; Says He'll Be Back

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CINCINNATI — No more baseball. Those words throw a fright into Pete Rose.

"Don't ask me what I'm going to do without baseball," Rose said Thursday, the first day of his lifetime suspension. "I'll probably go crazy."

The painful transition from baseball idol to baseball fan began Thursday for Rose with a final news conference at Riverfront Stadium and another appearance on a cable shopping network. It was the first of at least 365 such days of banishment for Rose.

The lifetime suspension the former Cincinnati Reds manager accepted from Commissioner A. Bartlett Giamatti prohibits him from appearing at old-timers' games, wearing a major-league uniform, or working in any capacity for a major-league club. He's barred even from stepping on the artificial turf at Riverfront Stadium.

In short: no more baseball. Rose indicated on Thursday he hasn't given much thought to what he'll do with his life, except count the days until he's eligible for reinstatement. He can ask Giamatti to lift the suspension in a year — and Rose already is counting.

"My life is baseball. I hope to get back into baseball as soon as possible," Rose said.

There's no guarantee from Giamatti that reinstatement would follow in a year. But Rose sounded sure he'd be back in baseball in some capacity soon.

Asked whether he thinks he'll be reinstated, Rose responded firmly, "Absolutely. Without a doubt."

There's also a question whether any team would hire him after the suspension.

"I hope there is. In one capacity or another," Rose said.

All that could be merely wishful thinking unless he can convince Giamatti in a year that there's reason to bring him back into the game. The two remain at odds over a significant point — whether Rose bet on baseball.

The agreement Thursday contained no admission of betting on baseball by Rose. Giamatti said that in the absence of a hearing to get Rose's explanation, he would conclude that the former manager did bet on his own team. Rose vehemently denied on Thursday that he ever bet on baseball.

Rose lawyer Reuven Katz said there's no reason to think the difference of opinion will be the barrier that keeps Rose from being considered for reinstatement.

"The commissioner, we have agreed, is a man of good faith," Katz said. "And we have no reason to doubt he will not be fair when the application (for reinstatement) is made."

Reinstatement would be a precedent. None of the 14 others who got lifetime bans were ever allowed back into baseball.

If Rose can't stand being away from baseball, he could seek to play in Japan. He didn't rule that out completely Thursday during an interview with WLWT-TV, which broadcasts Reds games, but he didn't embrace it, either.

"I'm not really looking along those lines," he said. "I want to be back in the United States of America baseball because you've got to remember one thing, and maybe three things: Everything I've got and everything I will have, everybody I've met or will meet, and every place I've been or will go is because of baseball. And just to say, 'Sayonara baseball, it's been nice knowing you, I can't do that.'"

Asked whether he would continue to gamble, Rose said, "No illegal gambling. I will never bet on any kind of sports again — team sports. That was a mistake I made."

Much of Rose's time in the near future is expected to be taken up with his legal problems, which didn't end Thursday. A federal grand jury is still investigating whether he claimed all his gambling and memorabilia income on his taxes.

He didn't care to talk about his other problems Thursday, before flying to Minnesota for a second straight night to appear on the Cable Value Network. Rose again sold autographed memorabilia, and told one caller to the show that he didn't think the suspension would hurt his chances of election to the Hall of Fame.

Roger Cloutier, the chief financial officer for CVN, said the network wasn't concerned about the timing of Rose's appearances. The network has similar agreements with other athletes selling sports memorabilia and talking to callers.

"I guess we're not worried about it," he said.

Pete Rose talks after being banned from baseball

Helms Named As Interim Manager

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CINCINNATI — The Cincinnati Reds are starting over with an interim manager who's a close friend of their banished star.

Tommy Helms will try to hold the team together as interim manager while the Reds begin a search for a permanent replacement for Pete Rose, who on Thursday was suspended for life from baseball.

"Things must go on," General Manager Murray Cook said, introducing Helms as Rose's temporary replacement. "The game must go on. The Reds must go on."

As he walked to a cluster of microphones, Helms expressed myriad emotions that mirrored the Reds' spirit.

"This is one of the saddest days of my life, to become manager in this situation," Helms said.

The Reds made their announcement in the same room where Rose made his farewell just six hours earlier. Rose's absence was felt.

"This isn't the happiest day for us in Cincinnati," owner Marge Schott said, in a tone that was barely audible. "In fact, it's a very sad day for me. As you know, I'm the one who really wanted Pete Rose to come back to Cincinnati (as player-manager in 1984) because everybody was so down. We spent five years together with the 'Pete and Marge show,' and we had a lot of fun.

"But what really counts in baseball, because it is one of the most traditional things in our country, was the integrity of baseball. And that's really what I think the commissioner is more concerned about than anything else. And it's very important."

She tried to joke once with Helms the way she would tease Rose, but it was half-hearted.

"I'm glad to have him take over. He's going to win the next 10 games in a row. Hear that, Tom?" she said.

Cook said the team was caught off-guard by word of Rose's decision to accept the lifetime suspension from Giamatti. He said the ballclub figured Rose's legal challenge to Giamatti could go all season, and it made no contingency plans for losing the manager.

"The way things were going through the course of the season, it was pretty apparent that the whole Rose investigation would go through the whole year," Cook said. "So I say this thing was thrust upon us; certainly not that we didn't give it some thought as time went along."

Cook said the team expects to begin a search for a permanent replacement shortly, and said Helms would be a candidate.

Helms, 48, has been Rose's right-hand man in the dugout. Helms managed the Reds when Rose received a 30-day suspension last year for pushing umpire Dave Pallone, and took over whenever Rose was ejected from a game or absent for other reasons.

Tommy Helms

Elevating Helms in the interim will ease the team through the managerial change, Cook said.

"This will make the transition very easy for the players," Cook said. "They're comfortable with him. They know him."

Helms said he spoke with Rose before he learned he would be the replacement.

"He said, 'Tommy, if you get the job, I know you'll do a good job,'" Helms said.

Rose No Longer Among Heros

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WILLIAMSPORT, Pa. — When the best of today's Little Leaguers list the baseball stars they admire most, Pete Rose's name isn't mentioned.

Although Rose was a star before their time, he was someone they recognized from highlight films and history books. They were familiar with his hitting ability, his head-first slides and his intensity.

"He was a good ideal for the kids — Charlie Hustle and everything," said Dan O'Brien, a 12-year-old pitcher and outfielder from Davenport, Iowa.

But allegations that Rose gambled on baseball have tarnished his name for the 11- and 12-year-olds playing in the 43rd annual Little League World Series.

"I liked him before the gambling thing. He was a good hitter," said William Plambeck, a 12-year-old first baseman from Davenport.

Little Leaguers said they still might put Rose in the Hall of Fame but no longer in the dugout. They are disappointed but not disturbed by the announcement Thursday that he had been banned from baseball for betting on games.

Whether they liked him or not, most of more than 20 Little Leaguers interviewed said that if Rose gambled on the game, he should be kicked out.

"He should be banned from baseball if he gambled on baseball," Joey McCauley, Davenport's right fielder, said.

O'Brien said Rose's records should be stricken from the books, like those of the eight players banned for their roles in the Black Sox scandal involving a conspiracy to throw the 1919 World Series.

Area High School Teams Open Season

By Mike Grizzard
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

For nearly a month, prep football teams have been going through the rigors of preseason practice. When they suit up tonight, it's finally for real.

All five Pitt County teams kick off their 1989 seasons tonight. At 7:30 p.m., Farmville Central is at North Edgecombe, while at 8 p.m., Clayton is at D.H. Conley, North Pitt is at West Craven, Rose hosts Tarboro and Richlands visits Ayden-Grifton.

Elsewhere in the area, Washington hosts Wallace-Rose Hill, Jamesville hosts Northside and Chocowinity hosts South Lenoir.

Tarboro at Rose
Rose and Tarboro, perennial playoff visitors in their respective classifications, face rebuilding situations but are both expected to contend for conference crowns.

The Rampants are coming off two consecutive unbeaten regular seasons while Tarboro, which ruled the Tar-Roanoke Conference the last two years, moves into the Colonial 3-A Conference.

The Vikings are renowned for their quickness and long line of talented runners. Halfback Terrell Hinton, considered one of the top 100 prospects in the nation, is in the spotlight for Tarboro this season.

"They have got excellent athletes," Rose coach Chip Williams said. "(Tarboro coach) Jim (Brett) was complaining about not having any experience but we're in the same boat. Quickness sometimes will make up for a lack of experience."

"Last year we lost some good people and had some people step up and I hope the same thing happens this year."

A severe blow to the Rampant defense is the probable loss of Terry Miles, the lone returnee from last year's defensive unit. Miles has a leg infection and is listed as doubtful.

Maurice Hines makes his debut in the tailback spot for the Rampants.

Clayton at Conley
Conley, coached by third-year head coach Steve Craft, is faced with some nagging injuries even before the first snap of the regular season and only 28 players are expected to dress out.

Backup quarterback Trey Fogg will not suit up due to a sprained knee and guard Jeff Wheaton is listed as questionable because of a bruised shoulder. Running back Anthony Barrett and center Al Andrews, who were injured in last week's scrimmage, will both be in the lineup, however.

"We've got some bangs and bruises and that concerns me this early in the year," Craft said.

Craft is also concerned with a formidable Clayton club that has reigned as one of the dominant teams in the Capital Area 2-A Conference. He is quite familiar with the Comets with his years at North Johnston.

"They've been doing basically the same thing at Clayton for 20 years," Craft said. "They've got a good solid football team and they've got that history."

"We've got to be concerned with the tailback (Roderick Clark) because they have a tailback-oriented offense. And they are very, very quick."

Quarterback Scott Seymour, tight end Martin Patrick and wide receiver Junior Farrow key the Conley offense.

Farmville Central at North Edgecombe

A pair of talented signal-callers will be showcased when Farmville invades traditionally strong North Edgecombe of the 1-A Tobacco Belt Conference.

Senior quarterback Morris Foreman brings in a Jaguar offense packed with several weapons. He enjoyed a stellar junior campaign and put up impressive numbers during two preseason scrimmages.

Daily Reflector Top 20

The following is a list of some of the top high school football prospects in the Northeastern part of the state. The 1989 prep football season opens tonight with games all over North Carolina. As the season progresses, these are likely to be some of the top college prospects in the area.

TB Damian Moore	Washington-Sr.
TE Walter Rasby	Washington-Sr.
OT Mark Sullivan	Washington-Sr.
QB Orlando Whitaker	N. Edgecombe-Sr.
TE Lee Becton	West Craven-Jr.
DE Malcolm Wiggins	North Pitt-Sr.
TB Reggie Daniels	North Pitt-Sr.
QB Morris Foreman	Farmville-Jr.
OT Kevin Wade	Farmville-Sr.
TE Martin Patrick	D.H. Conley-Sr.
WR Junior Farrow	D.H. Conley-Jr.
TB Terry Williams	D.H. Conley-Sr.
FB Terrell Hinton	Tarboro-Sr.
PK Andy Fassett	D.H. Conley-Sr.
RB Maurice Hines	J.H. Rose-Sr.
DB Boris Newton	J.H. Rose-Sr.
OG Joel Daughtry	J.H. Rose-Sr.
LB Terry Miles	J.H. Rose-Sr.
RB David Perry	Northampton East-Sr.
QB Shawn Walker	Plymouth-Sr.

North Edgecombe is led by senior quarterback Orlando Whitaker, who has amassed 40 career touchdown passes. His top receiver is Derrick Belcher. The versatile Warriors, who reached the semifinals of the 1-A state playoffs last year, also have a potent ground game but tailback Chris Bryant is questionable due to a shoulder injury.

Farmville coach Dixon Sauls said he expected the Jaguars' secondary to get an early test and avoiding the big play would be critical.

"We have some athletes back there who have played but it takes the secondary a little more time to develop," Sauls said. "(North Edgecombe's) strength may be our weakness right now. The key will be if we can put pressure on their quarterback."

Opening away from home is not a major concern considering the Jaguars had one scrimmage on the road.

"With a new season and not having played a road game you don't know how you will react," Sauls said. "But at least we had an away scrimmage at James Kenan that was a valuable learning tool for us."

Richlands at Ayden-Grifton
Veterans carried Ayden-Grifton and Richlands to the playoffs in 1988. Now both teams are loaded with youth and hoping to mature quickly.

The Chargers, coached by B.T.

Chappell, lost 20 of their 27 players from last year to graduation while Richlands, with first-year coach Doug Rabalais at the helm, graduated 18 players from last year's team that fell to midway in the second round of the state playoffs.

Only two starters return for the Wildcats but one of those is sensational senior tailback Anthony Murphy. Tracy Canady, the other returning starter, has been shifted from receiver to quarterback. Junior fullback Earl Reddick is up from a strong jayvee team to solidify the backfield.

Chappell said he was most concerned with Richlands' team speed. The Wildcats use the I-formation and attempt to get Murphy outside with toss-sweeps and the option.

"In their offense, they want to use their speed," Chappell said. "The one thing I'm not real sold on is our speed."

Quarterback Jay Tripp and running backs Scott Cannon, Rashid Williams and Ricardo Gamble spearhead the Charger offense.

"We know we are going to have to be more versatile offensively," Chappell said. "We've tried to put in more and not that polished. We're doing a lot of things not good."

Bucs' Practice Shortened By Rain

Rain ended East Carolina's football team practice after two hours of work Thursday afternoon.

The Pirates' practice was spent reviewing and building on the coaching staff's critique of their first scrimmage held Wednesday night.

ECU head football coach Bill Lewis also announced that Levi Beckwith, a freshman signee from Garner, has left the squad.

The Pirates will practice Friday afternoon before going through their second scrimmage at 1:30 p.m. in Ficklen Stadium Saturday.

The scrimmage is open to the public and will be the last chance to see the Pirates in action until the Sept. 9 opener against Bowling Green. All remaining scrimmages will be closed to the public.

There will be representatives from the ECU Athletic Ticket office available to handle season and individual game ticket requests during Saturday's scrimmage.

In other news, linebacker Compton McCurry suffered a hamstring sprain in Wednesday's scrimmage and missed Thursday's practice. He is questionable for the scrimmage. Ken Burnette has replaced McCurry in the first-team defensive rotation.

Denell Harper, who was expected to share time at the first-team tailback spot with Willie Lewis, continues to miss practice time due to a mild knee sprain. Harper missed Wednesday's scrimmage due to the injury.

Broughton Claims 2-0 Win Over Rose

Visiting Raleigh Broughton struck for one goal late in the first half and added a goal early in the second half to claim a rain-shortened 2-0 soccer win over Rose Thursday afternoon.

Sharp lightning and heavy rains halted play less than 10 minutes into the second half. The remainder was canceled some 15 minutes later.

Chuck Zuehlke snapped a scoreless tie when he took a corner kick from Mike Casey and directed a cross 20 yards into the far side of the net. The Caps' second goal came from Chris Kelly on an assist from John Roberson.

The Rampants had a golden scoring opportunity to tie late in the first half but failed to convert.

Rose, now 0-1-1, finished with four shots on goal while Broughton had eight shots. The Caps, who dropped their opener 1-0 to Durham Jordan, improved to 1-1.

"Right now we're not bad," Rose coach Charlie Harvey said. "We just need to work on our touch. We are moving well and we are communicating well but we just don't have our touch down."

The Rampants will compete in the first round of the New Bern Invitational Monday, facing New Bern at 5 p.m. Havelock and Kinston will meet at 7 p.m.

The losers will meet Wednesday at 5 p.m. with the winners playing Wednesday at 7 p.m.

Rose Hands Tarboro A 12-6 Loss

TARBORO — Rose used two key defensive plays to hand Tarboro a 12-6 loss in a JV football game that opened the football season for both teams.

Tarboro took an early 6-0 lead with a touchdown near the end of the first quarter, but Rose came back when Melvin McLawhorn recovered a fumbled punt and returned it 35 yards for the first touchdown midway through the second quarter.

Dwight Sheppard scored at the end of the second quarter when he intercepted a pass and returned it 62 yards to give Rose a 12-0 lead.

McLawhorn rushed for 83 yards while Sheppard had 68 for Rose.

Conley JVs' Ease Past Clayton, 14-7

CLAYTON — D.H. Conley's junior varsity football team rallied in the final period to take a 14-7 win over Clayton Thursday night.

Clayton scored on its first possession in the opening period, taking it on a running play from 15 yards out.

But the Conley defense held and recovered a fumble at the Clayton 30 on the next series. The Vikings then took it in with 2:10 left on a 16-yard pass from Brian Smith to Derrick Cox. Smith then hit Chris Williams for the conversion for the 14-7 final score.

Now 1-0, Conley will be at home against Ayden-Grifton on Thursday.

Volleyball Leagues Organizing

The Greenville Recreation and Parks Department will be holding an organizational meeting Thursday at 7 p.m. at the Elm Street Gym for those interested in forming a team for the fall men's and women's volleyball leagues. The league will be divided into Industrial, Women's Church and City divisions.

All games will be played at the Elm Street Gym with game times between 7 p.m. and 10:30 p.m.

Fall Softball Registration

The Greenville Recreation and Parks Department is continuing registration for its fall softball league. The season begins in September and runs through October. Games will be played Monday through Thursday from 6:30 p.m. until 11 p.m.

All games will be held at West Meadowbrook Park.

An entry fee and participation fee is required. The last day to enter a team is Monday at 5 p.m. at the Elm Street Gym.

Carr Returns To Clemson Practices

CLEMSON, S.C. (AP) — Clemson quarterback Michael Carr is back working out with the Tigers.

The red-shirt freshman returned to practice Wednesday — his first workout in a week. Coach Danny Ford refused to comment on Carr's status, though. He has said Carr's situation would be handled "in-house."

Carr left the campus on an early-morning train Aug. 24 for home in Amite, La. He didn't return to Clemson until Tuesday.

Carr was seen leaving Memorial Stadium after Clemson's practice Wednesday, and a Clemson official who asked not to be identified confirmed Carr was working out with the team again.

Tucker Will Join Yow's Staff

RALEIGH (AP) — Que Tucker, the head coach at Reidsville High School for the past 11 seasons, will join Kay Yow's staff at North Carolina State.

Tucker guided Reidsville to a 156-115 record, a conference championship and six postseason appearances. She also was the school's volleyball coach, posting a 58-16 record and winning two conference championships.

Tucker played college basketball at Mars Hill, where she was a starter for two of her three years.

In the recent girls' all-star game at Greensboro, she was an assistant coach for the West team.

Williams To Return To Hometown?

ELIZABETH CITY (AP) — Kenny Williams, a high school All-American who who went to a junior college after his failure to graduate prevented him from attending North Carolina, has applied to Elizabeth City State University, according to reports.

The Daily Advance of Elizabeth City quoted ECSU athletic director Curtis Williams in Thursday's editions as saying the 6-foot-9 Williams had expressed an interest in enrolling at the school, which is a member of the Central Intercollegiate Athletic Association.

The newspaper quoted an anonymous source as saying Williams had applied on July 5, but the application had not been acted upon.

Williams could not be reached for comment Thursday.

Williams has "elected not to go back out to junior college," said Curtis Williams. The Elizabeth City native played at Barton County Community College in Great Bend, Kan., during the 1988-89 school year.

Curtis Williams said men's basketball coach Claudie Mackey is eager to work with the potential newcomer.

How Rose Capitulated

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — The telephone rang in Fay Vincent's office last Friday. It was Rueven Katz, and he wanted to talk deal.

After months of public protesting and posturing, the Pete Rose gambling saga was about to end as privately as it began.

"Mr. Katz ... basically told me they would accept, with some minor word changes, the position that I had previously told him," Vincent said Thursday.

That position was almost complete capitulation: a lifetime suspension.

"What happened was the gradual evolution to the adoption of what was our position," Commissioner A. Bartlett Giamatti said.

Since the investigation began on Feb. 20, Rose had steadfastly maintained his innocence. His lawyers sent Giamatti threatening letters. They sued him in Ohio state court, and for two months they stalled a hearing on the charges.

But behind the scenes, they were trying to cop a plea.

"The first discussions about a resolution occurred at end of April in Dayton," said Vincent, baseball's deputy commissioner and Giamatti's chief confidant. "I flew to Dayton on a Saturday morning. Mr. Katz, representing Mr. Rose, told me that he had some thoughts ...

"He made some proposals to me, which I rejected as being unrealistic in light of the circumstances as I then knew them. The proposals then involved Pete admitting misbehavior — not spelled out — some public service, some discussion of charitable contribution. It seemed to me the circumstances ... meant that the proposal from Mr. Katz was not one that I would recommend to the commissioner that we pursue. That was the end of that. There were no further discussions for a considerable period of time."

Rose filed his lawsuit against Giamatti on June 19 and six days later won a temporary restraining order against the commissioner. But when Giamatti successfully moved the suit to federal court, Rose's defense began to crumble, just like the many defenses he used to hit against.

Judge John D. Holschuh of U.S. District Court in Columbus, Ohio, who decided the case belonged in federal court, pushed for a deal.

"He strongly encouraged the parties to explore settlement on the basis that it would be in the interest of baseball and Pete Rose if that could be accomplished," said John C. Elam, Giamatti's trial lawyer.

Vincent heard from Katz soon after that.

"Toward the end of July, once again, we were approached," Vincent said. "Would we meet?"

Vincent went to the meeting with three instructions from Giamatti:

— No set period of time for the suspension.

— An agreement to never again challenge the commissioner in court.

— Rose could not deny betting on baseball in the agreement.

"Those discussions fell apart," Vincent said. Until last Friday. "Mr. Katz called me again and basically told me they would accept. ... So this resolution comes as the result of some intensive discussions that began last Friday."

Why did Rose give up the fight?

Katz said the primary reason was that Rose was not required to admit guilt.

"Without that provision in the agreement, there would not have been a settlement," Katz said.

The agreement was drafted by telephone between Vincent and Katz during telephone calls from Saturday through Tuesday. By Monday afternoon, Giamatti was telling some baseball executives that a deal was in the works. By Tuesday afternoon, when he left for Texas for Nolan Ryan's 5,000th strikeout, Giamatti was confident enough to reserve a hotel for Thursday's news conference.

On Wednesday, Katz and Vincent finalized the 862-word agreement. Giamatti signed it, Vincent witnessed it and a courier took the document from New York to Cincinnati. Katz and Rose signed the document at 4 p.m. EDT and the courier brought it back to New York.

But there was one more matter to attend to. Rose's lawsuit against Giamatti had to be dropped. At noon Wednesday, Elam went to the Cincinnati office of Robert G. Stachler, Rose's trial lawyer. They signed a stipulation ending the suit and called Holschuh.

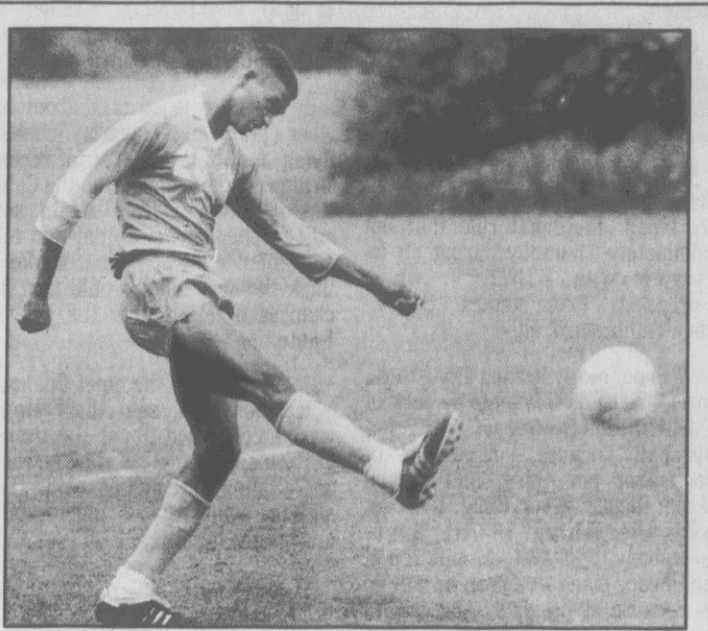

"I indicated to the court that we wanted nothing done until this morning," Elam said. "In cases of this kind, the worst thing that can happen is to have information leak out."

Rose went to Plymouth, Minn., on Wednesday night to sell memorabilia on cable television and left for Cincinnati by private jet about 2 a.m. EDT. Giamatti went home to his Manhattan apartment.

Then came Thursday's press conferences, and Rose was out of baseball. But baseball was not quite out from under the Rose cloud.

Investigator John M. Dowd, who compiled the 225-page report and seven volumes of evidence that led to Rose's downfall, still has to finish his work for Giamatti.

"I've got to knit some things together and give him another volume, which I will in a few days," Dowd said. "I don't think there are any questions left."

Crenshaw Bolts Into 3-Shot Lead

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

AKRON, Ohio — Firestone Country Club is not one of Ben Crenshaw's favorite golf courses. But it could be.

Crenshaw shot a 6-under-par 64 on Thursday to bolt into a three-stroke lead after the first round of the World Series of Golf.

"To tell you the truth, this would not be in my top 20," Crenshaw said after bogeying the closing hole to come within two strokes of the course record.

Three shots back was Jodie Mudd, with Mike Reid alone in third after a 68 on the 7,136-yard, par-70 layout.

Crenshaw's assessment of Firestone could change if he continues to play the way he did Thursday. In nine previous World Series starts, his best round was a 67 and his best finish was a tie for sixth in 1980.

Reid played with Crenshaw in the first two rounds of The International last week and saw the former Masters champion grooving his swing.

"Judging by the way Ben is playing, those of us behind him will have to get after it," Reid said. "We've got to get in gear."

Crenshaw, who qualified for the World Series with a victory in the World Cup, needed just 20 putts. He chipped in for birdies from 50 feet at the fourth hole and from 30 yards at the 14th hole.

"Some good things happened out there," Crenshaw said.

He bogeyed the closing hole after driving into a fairway bunker.

Mudd, the Byron Nelson Classic winner, saved par with five lengthy putts and tossed in four birdies against a lone bogey.

"It's nice to get off on a good start," he said. "There's only three days left."

Reid is still recovering from losing a four-stroke lead in the final nine holes of the PGA Championship two weeks ago. He began the World Series with birdies on the first three holes.

"I thought, 'This is a par-70 course. If I keep this up, I can break 60,'" he said. "I guess I momentarily forgot where I was."

He made the turn in 4-under 31, but gave two shots back with bogeys at 13 and 14.

"I'm very happy to have shot a 68. That's a good opening score," Reid said. "That's a good opening score at any time on this golf course, whether you're playing in a tournament or playing from the ladies' tees."

John Mahaffey, Bill Glasson and Ken Green, with 69s, were the only other players in the 45-man field to break par.

King Leads LPGA

BUFORD, Ga. (AP) — Betsy King isn't pleased with her game and doesn't like the golf course either, but neither factor kept her from sharing the first-round lead in the LPGA World Championship of Women's golf.

"I know it's hard to get sympathy when you shoot 66," King after the 6-under-par total gave her a share of the lead with defending champion Rosie Jones on Thursday.

"You don't have to love the golf course to play well," King said. "I'd rather just walk around and look at it; it's beautiful."

King said the greens are too slow, and there are a lot of blind shots and hilly lies on the 6,107-yard Pinesle Resort course along the shores of Lake Lanier.

"I had been playing poorly coming in," King said. "I didn't know what I'd do. I thought I might shoot 75."

King, who made the U.S. Open her fifth victory of the season, tied for 10th and 13th in her last two starts.

"I missed a few drives, kind of skied a few shots," she said. "I think I've learned to score, even when I'm not hitting the ball well."

King got her share of the lead on the final hole when she sank a 25-foot putt for birdie and watched Jones narrowly miss a 22-foot birdie putt.

Jones has been in a season-long slump, but began seeing signs of improvement when she tied for fifth and sixth in the last two LPGA events.

Last year's victory in this select field of 16 international players also boosted her confidence.

"The advantage of winning here and feeling good about your game is knowing you can win here," Jones said.

Both King and Jones had no bogeys in building a four-shot lead over six players, including Great Britain's Laura Davies, who scored two eagle-3s — on the 530-yard No. 9 and the 405-yard No. 16.

"I had three three-putts or I would have been right up there," Davies said.

Football Season's Here

As the 1989 high school football season rolls around tonight, there's just a little more confusion than usual — mainly due to starting times.

Some games will be starting at 7:30 p.m. while others will begin at 8 p.m. — and nearly all teams will be playing at both times through the season.

As of today, three of the six area conference, the Northeastern 2-A, the Colonial 3-A and the Tobacco Belt 1-A have voted to go to 7:30 p.m. starts. The Big East 4-A, the Coastal 3-A, and the Eastern Plains 2-A have decided to remain with the "traditional" 8 p.m. contests.

Where teams from one of the 8 p.m. conferences play teams from a 7:30 p.m. league, confusion is bound to occur, since the home team will set the game time. Fans who grow accustomed to 7:30 starts may arrive a half-hour early, but those used to an 8 p.m. start could arrive in time for the start of the second quarter.

And, there are even some teams who will play their home conference games at 7:30 p.m. and their home non-conference games at 8 p.m., just to add to the confusion.

It was earlier reported this week that the Coastal had gone to 7:30 p.m., but this proved to be untrue. Oddly enough, one source of the rumor was said to be a football coach at a member school, who's athletic director said no meeting had ever been held to discuss it.

Talk about confused.

This week, I contacted each of the area schools to confirm starting times and found that some schools were not even sure themselves when some of their road games against non-conference schools were. In fact, I even had one school report one starting time for a game while the other school reported a different one. Hope they get this one off on time!

This all came about a couple of years ago when the North Carolina High School Athletic Association began urging schools to go to the 7:30 p.m. time. Publicity was not the least of the reasons.

While the game time will not affect newspapers like The Daily Reflector, it will affect those statewide and regional papers who print several editions. A half-hour's time change will allow more schools to get their games into these newspapers.

It will not affect the gate, as some dollar-conscious administrators fear. It will also allow fans and players to get home earlier — something important for those who must get up again early in the morning for work.

Several years ago, Rose High School attempted to set the pace in this, moving all their home games to 7:30 p.m. But the other members of the Big East Conference resisted it and Rose finally moved its games back to 8 o'clock. Attempts since then by Rose to get the league to change have been met with continued resistance.

Eventually, everyone will move to the 7:30 p.m. time. "We had some resistance when we moved JV games to 7 p.m.," Greene Central athletic director Jim Fulghum said. "But now everyone is happy with it."

The Eastern Plains Conference brought up the time change at its meeting earlier this week, but decided to place it under advisement with an eye toward next year. It would be a good idea for those schools to contact those who have gone to 7:30 and ask for their opinions.

A principal at another school told me this week that he was bothered by the move from the traditional time of 8 p.m.

But what is tradition if not something that's always been done that it conservatively kept because no one has the gumption to try something new.

Hopefully, nobody will miss the kickoff, but this year will probably be the most confusing of them all.

Now, we turn to the area's high school games. Next week will be the first for our panel, which will include one new member, Mike Grizzard, who has joined the sports staff since last season.

There are several area games on the slate, including all five of the Pitt County Schools.

Rose High School opens its year by hosting Tarboro at 8 p.m. The Vikings are coming off a big year, but lost heavily. They still return one of the state's top running backs in Terrell Hinton, but he's the only starter back off last year's squad. Rose is coming off two straight unbeaten regular seasons, but also lost heavily off last year's highly regarded squad. Stopping Hinton will be the key, and my nod is to the Rampants, taking a 21-14 decision.

D.H. Conley's Vikings are expected to be the favorite in the Coastal 3-A this year, and they open at home at 7:30 p.m. against 2-A powerhouse Clayton. Clayton has, for years, been one of the stronger schools in its classification, and knocking off a 3-A team is nothing new to them. The Vikes, however, need to win this one to show that they are a threat in their league. Again, my nod goes to the home team in a close one, 17-15.

Ayden-Grifton is at home against 1-A Richlands, beginning at 8 p.m. The Chargers lost heavily off last year's team, but looked good in a scrimmage against Lejeune. Richlands traditionally is not one of the powerhouse teams, and Ayden-Grifton should be able to open up on a winning note. My pick is the Chargers, with a 28-13 victory.

Both North Pitt and Farmville Central take to the road. The Panthers will visit West Craven for a 7:30 p.m. game while Farmville Central is at North Edgecombe also with a 7:30 p.m. start.

North Pitt, coming off four straight years of playoff action, is in somewhat of a rebuilding year. The Eagles, meanwhile, are usually one of the top teams in the Coastal 3-A. North Pitt, with few numbers this year, must stay healthy to have a chance to return to the playoffs. Here, the nod must go to the Eagles, however, as West Craven takes a 20-14 win.

Farmville, expected to be the favorite in the Eastern Plains, will be going against the favorite in the Tobacco Belt 1-A in North Edgecombe. The Warriors are always strong and this should turn out to be a fine football game since both teams have ample talent. The big question will probably center around quarterback, and I'm going with Farmville to pull out the win, 15-13.

In other games in the area, it will be South Lenoir over Chocowinity, Washington over Wallace-Rose Hill, Northside over Jamesville and Williamston over Manteo.

Pirates Win Another Marathon

Astros Lose Some More Ground With Extra-Inning Loss To Pittsburgh

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PITTSBURGH — The Houston Astros couldn't wait to get out of Pittsburgh. They almost didn't.

The Astros and Pittsburgh Pirates have played more extra-inning games than any other teams in the majors, so it was no surprise that each gave a little extra Thursday night.

But all the Astros finally gave up in a 3-2, 14-inning loss to Pittsburgh was some more ground to the first-place San Francisco Giants in the National League West race. The Pirates gave more warning they're going to ruin some opponents' 1989 seasons as they prepare for 1990.

"This game has a lot of integrity, and we owe it to the other teams to prove we're going to play our butts off," Manager Jim Leyland said after the Pirates completed a three-game sweep. "I think the Giants will appreciate it."

Manager Art Howe's Astros had won seven of their first nine games against Pittsburgh, but scored only four runs over 32 innings in this series. Houston, only 1½ games out of the lead Tuesday, finished the series four games back.

The Astros managed only three hits off four Pirates pitchers, but didn't lose until Jose Lind's medium-range sacrifice fly scored Gary Redus with one out in the 14th.

The Astros, held to two solo homers in the first two games, had only one hit in the first six innings off Pirates starter Doug Drabek, but led 2-1 thanks to costly Pittsburgh errors by third baseman Bobby Bonilla and first baseman Redus. Drabek departed after giving up just two hits in nine innings.

The Pirates tied the score in the sixth when Mike LaValliere barely beat out a force-play grounder, allowing Barry Bonds to score from third. They stranded runners at third in the 12th and 13th innings before Redus doubled to center to start the 14th.

LaValliere's sacrifice bunt moved Redus to third, and Howe elected to let Juan Agosto, 3-5, his fourth pitcher, face the slumping Jose Lind.

Lind had only six hits in his previous 66 at-bats and hadn't gotten the ball out of the infield all night. He lofted a fly ball to medium-range left. After dropping back a couple of steps to make the catch, Kevin Bass' strong throw was too late to nail Redus.

Cardinals 4, Braves 1
Joe Magrane pitched a three-hitter for his sixth straight victory and Pedro Guerrero drove in three runs for St. Louis on a sweltering night in Atlanta.

Magrane, 17-7, tied Mike Scott of the Houston Astros and Dave Stewart of the Oakland Athletics for the major league lead in victories. He walked none and struck out six, retired 22 of the last 23 batters he faced and won for the 14th time in his last 16 decisions.

"I'm known as a hot-weather pitcher, but that was no fun," Magrane said of the 96-degree temperatures at Atlanta-Fulton County Stadium.

The victory moved the fourth-place Cardinals within 2½ games of the division-leading Chicago Cubs in the NL East.

Guerrero doubled home the tying run in the sixth and hit his 12th homer, a two-run shot, in the eighth off Tom Glavine, 12-7.

"Pedro's home run really gave us a big lift," Magrane said. "Without it, the game could have been tied or they could have gone ahead. It was a blessing."

AMERICAN LEAGUE

Angels 5, Royals 0

There's nothing like a pitcher who never loses — well, hardly ever — to snap a losing streak.

For the seventh time this season, 38-year-old Bert Blyleven stopped a California losing streak. He did it Thursday night with a four-hitter for his 10th consecutive victory, matching his career high, as the Angels beat Kansas City 5-0. In snapping a three-game losing streak, California halted the Royals' winning streak at nine games.

Blyleven, 14-2, pitched his seventh complete game of the season and is unbeaten since May 20. He walked one and struck out four in his 59th career shutout — fourth this year and seventh against the Royals.

Blyleven's pitching enabled the Angels to move within two games of first-place Oakland in the American League West when the Athletics lost to Texas 6-2. In the AL East, Toronto closed within 1½ games of Baltimore by trouncing Detroit 11-3 while the Orioles were splitting a doubleheader with the New York Yankees, winning the nightcap 9-2 after dropping the opener 5-1.

Rookie catcher John Orton, appearing in his second major-league game, went 3-for-3 for his first big-league hits and got his first RBIs with a three-run double in the Angels' four-run fourth inning. Of course, he didn't have to face Blyleven, just catch him.

Lozer Luis Aquino yielded four runs and seven hits in eight innings and has four losses and a no-decision in his last five starts.

Claudell Washington singled leading off the Angels' fourth. Johnny Ray grounded to second baseman Frank White and both runners were safe when shortstop Kurt Stillwell dropped White's throw for an error.

Wally Joyner singled to score Washington. After Chili Davis and Tony Armas grounded out, Jack Howell was intentionally walked. Orton followed with a line drive into the right-field corner to clear the bases.

Rangers 6, Athletics 2

Julio Franco went 3-for-3, including an RBI single in Texas' three-run fifth inning. Jeff Kunkel homered and Jack Daugherty stole home after an RBI triple. Winner Mike Jeffcoat yielded two runs and six hits in 6 1-3 innings as Texas snapped Oakland's five-game winning streak.

Mark McGwire's 24th homer gave the A's a 2-1 lead in the fourth inning but the Rangers scored three times in the fifth off Storm Davis, who lost to Texas for only the third time in 15 decisions.

After Kunkel's leadoff homer tied the score, Steve Buechele singled and went to third on Fred Manrique's one-out single. Buechele scored on Ruben Sierra's groundout and Franco singled Manrique home.

Yankees 5, Orioles 1

Orioles 9, Yankees 2
Larry Sheets hit a two-run homer and Tim Lulett had a two-run single for Baltimore in the nightcap after New York won the opener behind the six-hit pitching of Chuck Cary and Dave Righetti and Don Mattingly's two RBIs.

Sheets hit his seventh homer, and first since June 25, following Joe Orsulak's leadoff double in the second inning off Eric Plunk. Plunk yielded four runs and five hits in five innings in his first start of the season. Dave Schmidt, 10-12, who came into the game with a 5.34 ERA, held the Yankees to one run and three hits in five innings.

Sheets' homer put the Orioles in front 2-0 and Jamie Quirk and Stanley Jefferson added RBI singles in the fourth and fifth innings. New York scored in the fifth but the Orioles added four runs in the sixth off John Candelaria, including Hulett's bases-loaded single.

"They may not have a lot of names, but they get the job done," Mattingly said of the Orioles. "They've been holding back a lot of charges recently and I really respect them for that."

In the opener, New York ended Baltimore's four-game winning streak as Cary gave up five hits in eight innings, including Hulett's fifth-inning homer.

With the score tied 1-1, Roberto Kelly opened the eighth with a single off Pete Harnisch and took third on Steve Sax's hit-and-run single. Kevin Hickey relieved and walked pinch hitter Don Slaught, loading the bases.

Mattingly, who doubled home the tying run in the sixth inning, grounded into a force at second, scoring Kelly, and Sax came home on a wild pitch. Bob Geren and Alvaro Espinoza hit RBI singles off Mark Williamson.

Blue Jays 11, Tigers 3

Mookie Wilson hit three singles, drove in two runs, stole two bases and scored twice while George Bell and Nelson Liriano homered for Toronto. Mike Flanagan, who missed two starts with an eye injury, yielded two runs and five hits in six innings. Jack Morris, 3-11, was tagged for eight runs and 10 hits in six innings.

Toronto went ahead 2-1 in the third on Junior Felix's triple, Wilson's sacrifice fly and Bell's 14th home run. The Blue Jays made it 4-1 in the fifth on RBI singles by Wilson and Fred McGriff. Detroit's Kenny Williams and Liriano traded sixth-inning homers and the Blue Jays broke it open with six runs in the seventh, including RBI doubles by Rance Mulliniks and Lloyd Moseby.

Indians 5, Mariners 2

Brad Kommins had two doubles and a triple as Cleveland completed a three-game series sweep and handed Seattle its eighth straight loss. Steve Davis yielded two runs; one earned, and five hits in five innings for his first major-league win in almost four years and Doug Jones got his league-leading 30th save.

Jerry Browne's two-run triple off Clint Zavaras keyed a three-run fifth inning that put the Indians ahead to stay. Jay Buhner had a homer and two doubles for Seattle.

Twins 6, White Sox 4

John Moses reached on a blop double and scored on Al Newman's groundout to break a seventh-inning tie. Chicago had taken a 4-3 lead in the top of the inning when Scott Fletcher singled, went to second on a wild pitch by reliever Juan Berenguer and scored on Ivan Calderon's single.

Brian Harper began the Twins' seventh with his sixth home run, making it 4-4 and chasing starter Melido Perez in favor of Shawn Hillegas. Moses then lofted a pop fly that fell between third baseman Carlos Martinez and diving left fielder Lance Johnson.

After Greg Gagne sacrificed, Newman grounded to second baseman Steve Lyons, who bobbled the ball briefly and had to settled for the out at first. Moses singled home an insurance run in the eighth and Jeff Reardon pitched the ninth for his 24th save.

with a roster that has dwindled to 18 players so injuries and endurance will be a major concern for head coach Stuart Ennis throughout the season. West Craven is projected to be improved from last year's 4-6 record. The Eagles, implementing a new offense this season, are led by junior tailback Lee Becton.

"I think their attack this year is run and shoot or a one-back offense and it's going to be real hard for people to stop them if you don't tackle well," North Pitt coach Stuart Ennis said. "They try to spread you out and they've got a good quarterback (Kevin Halzworth) who gets the ball off quick.

"We're going to have to play real good in the secondary and do a much better job of tackling this week as opposed to last week's scrimmage against Plymouth."

North Pitt's option attack will be run by Randy House at quarterback. He played fullback last year and the year before was the team's backup quarterback.

With the option attack, House's reads will be a key to the Panthers' success.

"With the option game, it's of the utmost importance," Ennis said. "You have to have somebody back there who can make good reads and I have a lot of confidence in Randy. I think he's going to do the job for us, plus he does have a pretty good throwing arm."

Can Connecticut End String?

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WILLIAMSPORT, Pa. — Pitching and defense got the Little Leaguers from Trumbull, Conn., into the championship game of the Little League World Series.

Will it be enough for them to end Taiwanese dominance?

Andy Paul gave up three solo home runs but only four hits as Trumbull, the Eastern Regional champion, defeated San Pedro, Calif., 6-3 Thursday in a semifinal game.

Kaohsiung, Taiwan, crushed Maracaibo, Venezuela, 13-0 in Thursday's other semifinal game behind the three-hit pitching of hard-throwing Hsu Ming-Lan.

Trumbull, a suburb of Bridgeport, plays Kaohsiung, a port city of 3 million, on Saturday for the championship of the 43rd World Series.

"I think we can give the Taiwanese a good game," Paul said.

Ross Ready For Success At Georgia Tech

The Associated Press

Bobby Ross is looking for his first winning season at Tech

By Mike Grizzard
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Preseason polls do not hold much promise for Georgia Tech football in 1989, but head coach Bobby Ross strongly suggests "the program has turned the corner."

Ross begins his third year at the Yellow Jacket helm and the presence of greater team speed and strength enhance his hopes for a more fruitful season.

Despite outgaining its opponents on the ground and through the air and winding up with an edge in scoring, Tech finished 3-8 a year ago. Six losses were by a combined 32 points.

"I think we have turned the corner at Georgia Tech in a lot of ways," Ross said. "One of the real strengths of our football team at the beginning of the season will be in our offensive and defensive lines. Personally, I think that's where it has to be."

"I think we're a very strong football team. Although we're not as fast as I would like for us to be, I think that we do have good speed, better than what we have had."

The Jackets' most potent weapon is tailback Jerry Mays, a 5-8, 166-pound senior who returned to top form late last year after recovering from a knee injury that sidelined him for all of the 1987 campaign.

Mays, the third leading rusher in Yellow Jacket history with 2,350 career yards, overcame a slow start last year to finish with 942 yards and hauled 46 passes — the most ever by a Tech running back.

He did that while splitting time in the backfield with T.J. Edwards and Alphanzo Thomas. Mays will be the man in the spotlight this season, however.

"He will be a workhorse," Ross said. "I really think that Jerry Mays, pound for pound, is one of the better players in college football. It took me a period of time to learn that."

"He's come off a major knee reconstruction and to simply be playing is an accomplishment in itself but to be playing running back is an even bigger accomplishment."

"One of the keys to our football team is how much pressure the other people — the wide receivers, the tight ends and the fullback — can take off of Jerry Mays."

The big question mark — again — is at quarterback. Paul Bowman, a junior transfer from Navy, sophomore Lee Williamson and red-shirt freshmen Shawn Jones and Jeff Howard came into fall drills with a shot at the starting job.

"Our concern is at quarterback," Ross said. "It is not a bad concern. This is the third year in a row that we've had a problem at quarterback but we're reasonably good talent-wise."

"We came out of the spring feeling very positive because we felt like each had a strength."

Ross said whoever earns the start should enable the Jackets to rely on a conservative approach such as last season.

"We were reasonable competitive last year throughout the conference but one of the things we weren't able to do was we weren't able to do certain things in our passing game that we would have liked to do," Ross said. "I don't know who our quarterback will be but I really believe we can stretch the field laterally a lot more and certainly stretch the field length-wise."

Anchoring a defense that ranked 15th nationally in total defense a year ago are seniors Sean Smith and Willie Burks at tackles, Eric Thomas and Jerrell Williams at inside linebacker and Ken Swilling at free safety.

Swilling, 6-3, 227-pound sophomore speedster who Ross said will also be used on kickoff returns and as a running back in short-yardage situations, is one of 20 pre-season nominees for Jim Thorpe award which is given to the top defensive back in nation.

Attempting to shore up a weak kicking game are converted quarterback Scott Aldredge, Tony Gariety and Bill Weaver at punter and James Merritt and Alan Waters at place-kicker.

Ross said he may look to incoming freshmen for help in that critical area.

Back Surgery KO's Skins' Williams

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The Washington Redskins go into tonight's exhibition game against the Miami Dolphins with some bad news hanging over their heads.

Quarterback Doug Williams, who led Washington to the Super Bowl title two seasons ago, will be sidelined for eight to 10 weeks after undergoing back surgery today.

An operation on a herniated disc was planned at Sibley Hospital in the District of Columbia. The injury was identified by tests performed Thursday morning.

In a television interview, Williams said he knows the injury could be career-threatening.

"I have the mental attitude that I can play. At the same time, I know I will have to make a decision on whether I want to play," Williams said. "The thing about playing this game is you have to face reality."

Williams injured his back exercising on a treadmill two months ago. The injury kept him out of training camp at Carlisle, Pa.

Tonight's nationally televised game against the Dolphins follows the Redskins' 24-13 loss to the Minnesota Vikings on Monday. In that game, the Vikings compiled a 509-216 yardage advantage.

Mark Rypien will start at quarterback for the Redskins.

Lions-Seahawks
Detroit coach Wayne Fontes is looking for his first victory of the exhibition season and hopes that Rodney Peete, a sixth-round draft pick, can rescue the foundering Lions offense.

"We need to get a quarterback who can take over and move this football team," Fontes said. The only moving the Lions, 0-2, did last week was backwards — with eight interceptions in a 35-3 loss to Cincinnati.

The game also marks the return of Seattle's Brian Bosworth and John L. Williams. The Boz, Seattle's $11 million linebacker, returns from shoulder and knee surgery that has limited his hitting in practices.

Williams, the starting fullback, ended his holdout and signed this week for a reported $4.3 million over the next four years.

The Lions will again play without 1988 Heisman Trophy winner Barry Sanders, the third player picked in this year's draft. Sanders is unsigned.

Tampa Bay Buccaneers
Kicker Donald Igwebiuke ended a 40-day holdout on Thursday when he signed a two-year contract that boosts his salary by more than $100,000 per season.

The club's career scoring leader made $176,000 last season when he converted 19 of 25 field goals, including game-winning kicks in three of Tampa Bay's five victories. He has never missed from 34 yards or less in four NFL seasons, hitting 30 of 30, and just four of his 27 career misses have come inside of 40 yards.

"I'm glad it's all over," Igwebiuke said. "I want to put it behind me and concentrate on the upcoming season."

The kicker's signing leaves the Bucs with two holdouts — first-round draft pick Broderick Thomas and veteran defensive end Ron Holmes.

San Diego Chargers
No. 1 draft pick Burt Grossman agreed to contract terms Thursday, and the University of Pittsburgh product was expected to join the team for practice today.

"We made an agreement that we'd sit down on this thing until it got done," director of football operations Steve Ortmyer said.

Los Angeles Rams
Steve Dils decided Thursday to accept the Rams' offer as their emergency backup quarterback.

Dils, a 10-year veteran who played for the Rams from 1984 through 1987, gives the team insurance in case injured backup Mark Herrmann is not fully recovered from a fractured rib in time for the Sept. 10 season opener at Atlanta.

Dils was available because Atlanta did not offer him a contract. Dils, who played for the Falcons in 1988, was working for a real estate developer in Atlanta when the Rams called him on Tuesday.

"Steve is the perfect guy for what we need," Rams coach John Robinson said. "We like Mark as our backup (to Jim Everett), but we also need a guy who can step in on short notice and keep control of the game."

After pondering the Rams' offer for two days, Dils left Atlanta on Thursday and arrived in Anaheim in time to take a physical and meet with coaches.

Minnesota Vikings

NFL Notes

says he may give up pro football for at least one year if he doesn't get the contract he wants.

"I'm keeping all my options open," Browner said, adding that if he did take a year off, he'd pursue such other ventures as martial-arts movies. Browner has black belts in two forms of martial arts.

Browner said Pro Sports and Entertainment, a Beverly Hills, Calif., marketing company, has offered him $400,000 a year to book him for speaking engagements and TV and movie appearances.

That's $50,000 more than the two-time All-Pro strong safety is supposed to be paid by the Vikings in 1989.

Pittsburgh Steelers
Free agent wide receiver Louis Lipps signed a contract and ended his holdout as the Steelers prepared to break camp.

"I feel good about the contract and about being back with the team," said Lipps, a training camp holdout. "I can't wait to get started again."

Earlier this week, Lipps said he would return to his Hattiesburg, Miss., home if an agreement wasn't reached.

Lipps was paid $285,000 last year under a contract he signed after the Steelers made him their first-round draft pick in 1984. The new deal reportedly is worth $2.1 million over four years, plus incentives.

Phoenix Cardinals
Pro Bowl offensive tackle Luis Sharpe's holdout entered its 29th day, but the Cardinals still hope to sign him soon.

"I see no reason why it shouldn't happen this week," said Terry Bledsoe, the Cardinals' vice president of communications who is handling the negotiations. "But if someone would have asked me last week, I would have said the same thing."

Sharpe, an eight-year pro selected to the Pro Bowl after each of the last two seasons, was paid $415,000 last year and is seeking a multiyear deal with an annual salary of at least $700,000. He is the Cardinals' lone unsigned player.

"Right now, all I can say is we're still talking," Sharpe said. "I certainly realize the importance of training camp. I know how important it is to have at least two weeks to get ready."

Cleveland Browns
Cleveland Browns' wide receiver Reggie Langhorne will be sidelined four weeks following an emergency appendectomy, the team said Thursday.

"We will find out about our wide receivers," Coach Bud Carson said at the team's training camp at Lakeland Community College. "What Reggie Langhorne does better than anyone on the team is to go get the deep ball. We'll miss that."

Langhorne missed both practices Wednesday, complaining of stomach pains.

The surgery Wednesday night by Dr. Thomas Braughn to remove the inflamed appendix went without complication, team spokesman Kevin Byrne said.

Writer Launches Second TV Series

By Kathryn Baker
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — When Alan Spencer was taking a college TV writing class, he encountered the same frustrations many students do.

"My script flunked. It got, like, a D. It was, like, a 'One Day at a Time,' and they said this could never sell."

"And I said, 'It's on next week!'" Spencer by then was a veteran script writer. He was selling TV scripts when he was 17, the only kid in high school earning residuals.

Now, at the ripe old age of 29 — he quickly adds that he'll be 30 in October — Spencer is launching his second prime-time network comedy, "Nutt House," premiering next month on NBC. It stars Harvey Korman and Cloris Leachman as the, respectively, officious and bizarre staff of a large, unlikely New York hotel.

Spencer's first show, an homage to his hero, Mel Brooks, and Brooks' 1960s satirical spy comedy "Get Smart," was ABC's "Sledge Hammer!" Like "Get Smart," it was heavy on inside jokes and physical gags.

This time around, Spencer is not gazing from afar, but is paired with his idol. Producer-director Brooks co-wrote the pilot with Spencer and is co-executive producer of "Nutt House" with Spencer and Bob Brunner.

Spencer proclaimed in his high school yearbook that his goal in life was to work with Mel Brooks.

"I don't know, I just liked Mel Brooks' humor, because it's shocking, it's different, it's outrageous, it usually makes statements about life. But I think the key thing is, his goal is really to make you laugh," Spencer told an often laughter-interrupted session with television critics to discuss the new show.

"Nutt House" will join NBC's Wednesday lineup, well matched with its lead-in, the broadly comic "Night Court." The pilot that was screened for the critics was wildly slapstick, and Spencer said portions would be re-shot and toned down to develop the characters and emotional story a little more.

But Spencer hopes the show will mark a return to physical and visual comedy on television that Brooks has produced to such effect in films such as "Young Frankenstein" and "High Anxiety." Spencer acknowledges it will be hard "to do a high-standard kind of feature-level comedy" week after week.

He added: "I watch a lot of Marx Brothers movies and things to get the inspiration."

Brooks will not be involved in the day-to-day production of the show, but will serve as "shepherd," Spencer said. The show will, however, reflect Brooks' comedy philosophy, "be savage against those in authority, and be kind to those underneath it, that suffer from it," Spencer said.

The shooting of the "Nutt House" pilot gave Spencer the opportunity to go to the studio with Brooks, instead of sneaking onto a studio lot to see him as he used to do, explaining to studio guards that he was Brooks' son.

"I went up to him on the set of 'Young Frankenstein.' He was directing, and I said, 'Are you busy?' I said I wanted some advice on how to get into comedy-writing. That's the first time I met him. I remember all these things, you know. 'Go away, you know.'"

Spencer did manage to work for Brooks eventually, writing punch-up jokes for Brooks' last TV comedy, the short-lived Robin Hood satire "When Things Were Rotten."

Spencer said Brooks was a fan of "Sledge Hammer!" which went off the air two seasons ago after a two-season run. So when Disney offered a hotel set from the feature film "Big Business" for use as a television show set, Brooks called Spencer.

Now they're pals.

Roseanne Sued

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Roseanne Barr faces a lawsuit that claims she paid "thugs" $50 to beat a celebrity photographer as he took pictures of her.

Ralph Dominguez claims in a Superior Court suit filed Monday that he was photographing the star of the hit TV series "Roseanne" in her car outside the trendy restaurant Spago on July 14 when the beating took place.

The suit, which seeks unspecified damages, said several men approached the car Ms. Barr was in and spoke with her. She allegedly paid them $50, after which they began to beat the photographer, according to the suit.

Sawyer Named

WASHINGTON — ABC News announced Thursday that Forrest Sawyer "has been named an anchor" of ABC News' "World News Sunday," effective this weekend.

He replaces Sam Donaldson, who had held the job for 10 years but has finally bowed out because of his pressing new "PrimeTime Live" co-anchor duties.

FCC Reviews Indecency Reports

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The Federal Communications Commission, in what may indicate a new get-tough policy, is contemplating action against three radio stations it says may have aired indecent broadcasts during the day.

The stations in Indianapolis, Chicago and San Jose, Calif., were given 30 days to explain their actions or face sanctions ranging from a warning to non-renewal of their licenses, FCC General Counsel Diane Killory said Thursday.

The action comes just two weeks after former Missouri broadcaster Alfred Sikes was confirmed as FCC chairman.

The agency alleges that WLUP-AM in Chicago, KSJO-FM in San Jose, Calif., and WFBQ-FM in Indianapolis may have violated laws prohibiting indecent or obscene programming when children may be in the audience.

Lawyer John R. Price, president of Decency in Broadcasting Inc., said the Indianapolis-based watchdog group had taped WFBQ's "Bob and Tom Show" continuously since July 1987 and submitted more than 5,000 transcripts to the FCC for review.

"In the last six months particularly, there's been a real decline in the quality of material," he said Thursday.

day. "It was bad before, but it's really bad now."

Price said he hoped the FCC action would be "the first step in a process that will improve broadcasting in our area."

Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., an outspoken advocate of banning indecent programming 24 hours a day, applauded the FCC action.

"The American people are fed up with this trash that corrupts the minds of our children and erodes the values of our society," Helms said.

However, Andrew Schwartzman, executive director of the Washington-based free-speech advocacy group Media Access Project, criticized the FCC.

 Opening lead: King of ♠ Once upon a time, war might have been a question of getting there "fustes" with the "mostes." These days, there are ways of deflecting an army from its course.

 The bidding was straight out of an old Goren textbook. North's jump raise showed the equivalent of an opening bid with four-card support, and South had no ambitions beyond game.
 After West leads the king of spades, the defenders are there first. Their attack has targeted on declarer's weak spot. If declarer goes in with the ace, when East gets in with the ace of diamonds, a spade continuation nets the defenders two spade tricks and one trick in each minor suit.
 Declarer can blunt the enemy attack by refusing to win the first trick with the ace of spades. Now West cannot profitably continue with a spade, for that will give declarer two tricks in the suit. But shifting the attack to a club costs a tempo, and now declarer has the upper hand.
 However, South must be careful not to surrender his advantage to the enemy. To take a finesse would do just that if East holds the king. To keep a step ahead, declarer must rise with the ace of clubs, draw trumps and then force out the ace of diamonds. Now the defenders are helpless. Declarer wins the spade shift with the ace and discards a spade on dummy's high diamond, using a trump as an entry, if necessary. That holds East-West to one trick in each side suit, and the contract is just home.

U.S. Envoys Meet Poland's New Prime Minister

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WARSAW, Poland — Prime Minister Tadeusz Mazowiecki met with U.S. and Soviet officials today, and Labor Secretary Elizabeth Dole said the Bush administration would study new ways to aid the fledgling government.

Mazowiecki also met with Senate Minority Leader Robert Dole, R-Kansas, and later met with three Democratic congressmen.

Mazowiecki, a veteran Solidarity activist, assumed office Thursday in a historic transfer of leadership from the Communist Party to a government led by what was formerly the opposition.

The meetings with representatives from the superpowers underscored the international significance of the election of Mazowiecki, a close adviser to Solidarity leader Lech Walesa.

Dole said he would be carrying a message from Mazowiecki to President Bush.

"His words were, to characterize them, 'He who helps early, helps twice,'" said Dole. "In other words, this is very important now to keep up the momentum and let the Polish people see some change."

Mrs. Dole said the United States is looking for new ways in which existing money could be reallocated to Poland, but she was cautious about offering new assistance.

"Obviously, we do have a budget deficit at home," she said. "We will provide aid as we can, when we can, but there is already a very significant program under way."

She was referring to the $115 million aid package Bush offered during a July visit. Solidarity leaders have been hoping for $10 billion from Western countries, including investments, credits and rescheduling Poland's $39 billion Western debt.

No immediate details were available of Mazowiecki's meeting with Vladimir Brovikov, the Soviet ambassador to Poland, that followed the meeting with the U.S. visitors.

Mrs. Dole said Bush has offered help in a number of areas, including labor programs, and that she would soon send a team of experts to Poland to study what priorities such aid would take.

Referring to unemployment that will result as inefficient industries are closed under economic reform plans, she said Poland would have to lay "a safety net for workers as they go through this transition, which obviously is going to produce difficulties."

Mazowiecki also met U.S. Sens. Dennis DeConcini of Arizona and Frank Lautenberg of New Jersey and U.S. Rep. Jim Moody of Wisconsin, all Democrats. The three represent the congressional committee that oversees compliance with the Helsinki accords on human rights.

DeConcini called Mazowiecki's election "a wager on freedom we cannot afford to lose," and said he would return to the United States to support increased aid to Poland.

As he entered the meeting, DeConcini quipped to the new prime minister that he was impressed by Mazowiecki's 378-4 election margin in the Sejm, the lower chamber of the bicameral National Assembly.

"I need your advice too," Mazowiecki answered.

In the opposition paper Gazeta Wyborcza today, editor Adam Michnik said Mazowiecki "must display dynamism and a willingness to risk. He must have courage to make difficult decisions quickly."

Mazowiecki is the first non-Communist to lead Poland since 1944.

He said Thursday he planned to assemble a Cabinet within the next week and will seek participation by all parties in parliament. He did not say how many posts would go to each, but Solidarity has promised the Communists they will retain control of the ministries of defense and interior, which control the army and police.

He said Thursday he would seek economic support from the West but no special "privileges."

"I want to form a government capable of acting for the good of society, the nation and the state," Mazowiecki told the Sejm.

In reiterating his support for Poland's East bloc "easy obligations, he said it was wrong to identify 'people striving for reforms' as 'enemies of the Warsaw Pact.'"

But Mazowiecki also spoke of the need to restore "normal" political and economic life to Poland, and said that included a market-oriented economy.

The state "cannot take care of everything and guarantee everything," he said. "Poland cannot afford ideological experiments any longer."

Mazowiecki's election came barely 15 months after he and Walesa led a disappointed group of strikers from the Lenin Shipyard in Gdansk, ending a nationwide wave of labor unrest in April and May 1988.

54 Missing On Plane

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan — A Pakistan International Airlines plane with 54 people aboard was reported missing today, and rescue workers began searching the rugged Himalaya and Korakoram mountains along its intended flight path.

Airline officials said the twin-engine Fokker-27 Friendship propeller plane had not been heard from nine hours after it took off early this morning on what should have been a 45-minute flight from Gilgit to Islamabad.

Rescue workers in planes searched the mountains today, but their effort was hampered by thunderstorms and heavy rains.

It was not known if the missing plane had encountered bad weather, but planes generally don't leave the Korakoram Mountain city of Gilgit in storms.

A chief pilot at Pakistan International Airlines, who identified himself only as Khizar, said the plane carried 49 passengers and five crew members. Airline officials said most of those aboard were Pakistani.

Khizar said the search was conducted by the Pakistan Air Force, the Civil Aviation Authority, their Indian counterparts, and the U.N. Military Observer Group in India and Pakistan posted in the disputed state of Jammu-Kashmir.

"The problem is the deteriorating weather at this time," Khizar said.

Deaths From Breast Cancer On Increase In United States

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ATLANTA — The nation's rate of death from breast cancer is increasing and it's worse across the northern states, although federal cancer specialists can't explain why.

The annual death rate from breast cancer in the United States in 1986, the latest year available, was 32.8 per 100,000 women, up 5 percent from 1979's 31.1, the National Centers for Disease Control reported Thursday.

The mortality rate in 1986 was 12 percent higher for black women than for white women.

Breast cancer killed 40,534 women in the United States in 1986, the CDC said. Still, the disease is survivable in most cases. The National Cancer Institute estimates that 75 percent of breast cancer patients live at least another five years.

The CDC said Delaware, with an annual breast cancer death rate of 41 per 100,000 women, had a rate nearly double that of Hawaii, which was lowest at 23 per 100,000.

Each of the dozen states with the highest rates was in the northern half of the country. In contrast, all but three of the bottom dozen were in the South or Southwest.

"We don't know why that is," said Dr. Robert Hahn, a cancer specialist with the Atlanta-based CDC. "It likely has something to do with the distribution of risk factors for breast cancer, but we don't know which ones those are."

Overall, breast cancer death rates have increased for women born in each succeeding decade in this century. For example, Hahn said, women born in the 1930s are showing a higher rate than those born in the '20s, whose rate was higher than those born in the teens.

That trend is apparently continuing, Hahn said, although many women born in this century are just entering — or haven't yet entered — their years of greatest risk for breast cancer. The CDC said more than half of all breast cancer deaths occur in women 65 or older.

Breast cancer's risk factors include family history and childbearing at older ages. Another possible risk factor is a diet high in animal fat, Hahn said, although some researchers question that.

CDC researchers believe at least 19 percent of the deaths attributed to breast cancer could have been prevented if the victims had undergone recommended mammograms, which screen for breast cancer.

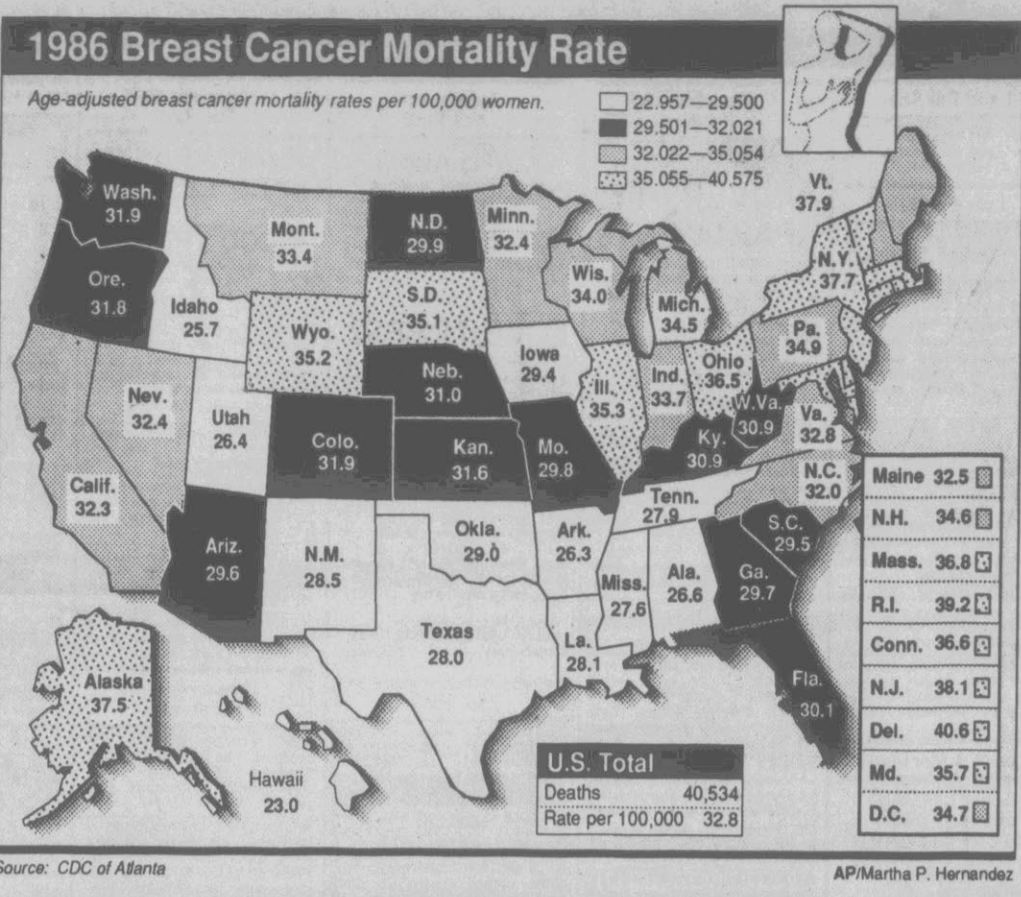

Women are seven times more likely to have mammograms if their doctor urges it, but Hahn said that as many as nine out of 10 doctors don't follow the American Cancer Society's advice and recommend the procedure.

"We think it's crucial for physicians to become informed of the guidelines and recommend to their patients that they get screening mammograms," he said.

The American Cancer Society recommends that women 40 and over have a breast exam every year. Women 40-49 also should have mammograms every year or two, and the society advises that women 50 and older should have mammograms each year.

Previous studies cited by the CDC have indicated that fewer than three in 10 eligible women reported having a mammogram in the previous year, and nearly half of women surveyed said no professional had ever recommended they get a mammogram.

Utilities Say More Plants Are Needed

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Electric utilities in the coming decade will have to build at least twice as much generating capacity as previously planned to meet the nation's growing appetite for electricity, an industry group says.

In an otherwise bright outlook for energy supplies and prices, the Gas Research Institute said Thursday that the Northeast will face a serious squeeze in electricity.

"The likelihood of a shortfall in electric utility generating capacity, particularly in the near term, to the year 2000 and through the 1990s, is very high," said Daniel Dreyfus, the group's vice president for strategic planning and analysis.

He said an electric in New England was unavoidable, and would outstrip supply as new power plants can't be built fast enough.

Even if the nation uses grows relatively slowly, electric utilities will have to add at least 45 gigawatts of new capacity — roughly equivalent to 45 new large-scale power plants — beyond the 46 gigawatts of capacity already on the drawing board, the report said.

The research group, sponsored by natural gas pipeline and distribution companies, also said the big increase in world oil prices that many forecasters have projected for the mid-1990s is unlikely to hit before the turn of the century.

A key reason for expecting a longer period of stable prices, it said, is that oil production in high-cost fields, such as the North Sea, has remained strong. Some high-cost production has been lost — particularly in the United States — but the overall decline has been smaller than expected after the 1986 price crash.

Oil prices by 1995 are likely to be about $18 a barrel in current dollars, rising to about $20 a barrel by 2000; the group said. Oil is selling for about $18 a barrel, up from about $15 a barrel last year.

A faster price escalation is likely after the turn of the century, Dreyfus said, as world oil demand moves closer into balance with available supplies. The forecast said the price, in current dollars, would be about $32 a barrel in 2010.

Low oil prices during the 1990s imply a generally stable price for all types of energy, including natural gas, coal and products made from oil, such as gasoline, the forecast said.
