Gabrielle Staying Out To Sea

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MIAMI — A weakening Hurricane Gabrielle is expected to spare Bermuda from destructive tropical storm-force winds when it passes the island tonight, and the East Coast will get little more than big ocean swells, forecasters said.

Forecasters said it appeared the storm center would pass 350 miles east of Bermuda.

"They may not get the core of it at all, but they are already getting 15- to 20-foot swells," Bob Sheets, director of the National Hurricane Center, said Wednesday night. "They'll get some showers, some winds and definitely some surf problems."

Gabrielle's top sustained winds dropped to 120 mph as it swirled north on a path far from the United States. At one point, the storm's winds topped 130 mph.

Still, the storm was so large that swells of five to 13 feet were recorded more than 1,500 miles away, from Florida to Maryland, Sheets said.

"We have a very large wind field around this hurricane," he said.

Winds 39 mph or higher — a speed that forecasters define as tropical storm-force — stretched 250 miles to the west and 300 miles to the east as Gabrielle curved north in the mid-Atlantic, forecasters said.

If Gabrielle's center passes 350 miles east of Bermuda, the island would be out of range of those storm-level winds.

Gabrielle is the largest and most powerful hurricane of the season, rating just below last year's Hurricane Gilbert, which ravaged the Caribbean with 155 mph winds.

Gabrielle's center this morning was located near 28.5 degrees north latitude and 60.0 degrees west longitude, or about 375 miles southeast of Bermuda. It was heading north at 15 mph.

Far to the north of Gabrielle, Felix maintained its status as a minimal hurricane, with winds of 75 mph. The storm was drifting slowly out in the Atlantic and was no threat to land, forecasters said.

Blacks Say 25 Died In Protests During Elections

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa — Acting President F.W. de Klerk said today the results of national elections show most white voters support his plan to grant some political rights to blacks, despite his party's worst showing in 41 years.

Black activists said at least 25 people were killed in clashes with police during protests of the elections Wednesday, from which blacks were excluded.

The governing National Party narrowly retained its parliamentary majority in the balloting, losing nearly a quarter of its seats in the dominant white chamber to anti-apartheid and hard-line segregationist parties.

With just two of 166 election districts undecided, it appeared the Nationalists would retain at least 93 of their previous 123 seats in Parliament.

The Conservatives, who want stricter enforcement of segregation laws and oppose any political rights for blacks, apparently will now have 40 seats.

The Democratic Party, which seeks an end to apartheid laws but wants some guarantees that whites and other minorities would retain a voice in the government, went from 20 seats to 33 seats. The jump was the biggest ever for an anti-apartheid faction.

Protesting their disenfranchisement, blacks on Wednesday observed a nationwide general strike that anti-apartheid leaders called the biggest anti-government protest ever with 3 million people taking part.

Violence flared in many black and mixed-race areas around Cape Town and white riot police were seen marching through townships firing in all directions.

Cape Town attorney Essa Moosa said 25 black and mixed-race people had been killed in violence in seven townships.

"Mr. de Klerk's president's seat sits now in a pool of blood," said Rev. Allan Boesak, a mixed-race anti-apartheid activist in Cape Town. "People who begin a new term of office with a massacre of ... people have no right to be in government."

Solons Say ECU Is Faring Better

By Kevin Boughal
 THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Legislators representing Pitt County said today that East Carolina University is now getting a "fairer share" of the money designated by the General Assembly for higher education.

The delegation, gathered for the Pitt-Greenville Chamber of Commerce's Eggs and Issues Breakfast '89, noted that ECU has now been allocated $1.85 million toward the construction of a regional activities center and $7 million toward the construction of a $24 million library.

The five local legislators — Reps. Ed Warren, Walter Jones Jr. and Gene Rogers and Sens. Bob Martin and Tom Taft — all agreed that ECU's lot has improved when it comes to splitting the monies set aside for the University of North Carolina system.

"ECU received the second highest amount of money for capital construction of all the 16 state schools," Warren said. "The House has said that academics will come before athletics."

"East Carolina will be treated fairly and get their share of the ball," said Jones.

They noted, however, that all education programs did not fare as well under the legislative ax. The Basic Education Program was cut by 31 percent, to $69 million, in favor of a major highway bill.

The cutback will not be permanent, according to the legislators. Despite this year's reduction in spending, Warren said legislators next year expect to spend over $180 million dollars on the BEP.

"No programs were cut," Warren said. "Some were not funded, but there is a difference between not funding a program and cutting it. A new program is not funded while an existing program is cut. The most important thing, however, is that the classrooms-stayed intact."

There was a feeling in the General Assembly that this was a good time to cut back on the BEP, Rogers explained.

"I did sense that many people felt that this was an appropriate time to step back and take a look at where those funds were going and what they were being used for," he said.

Senators Say No Smoking In Air

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — A Senate subcommittee voted today to permanently forbid smoking on all domestic airline routes, expanding the current ban covering flights lasting only two hours or less.

On a unanimous voice vote, the Senate Appropriations transportation subcommittee adopted an $11.9 billion spending bill for transportation programs for fiscal 1990 that includes the strengthened smoking prohibition. The 1990 fiscal year begins Oct. 1.

There was no debate on the smoking provision.

The full Appropriations Committee planned to vote on the bill later in the day. Subcommittee Chairman Frank Lautenberg, D-N.J., who sponsored the proposal, said he expected to prevail there but to face a tough fight from tobacco-state senators when the legislation reaches the Senate floor next week.

Bakker Back In Court

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHARLOTTE, N.C. — PTL raised nearly $17 million in one week during 1986, a former ministry employee testified today, but the former manager of the Heritage Grand Hotel said the hotel faced an almost constant cash-flow problem.

Delores Jones, who worked in PTL's cash management office, testified that during the week of May 31, 1986, the ministry collected $13,000 from offering plates at Sunday services and $7,000 from the audience for the Jim and Tammy Show.

"It was sometimes more, sometimes less," she said when asked by prosecutor Deborah Smith whether the $20,000 in cash collections for that week were unusual.

Ms. Jones said the rest of the $17 million in collections "would have to be the Lifetime Silver 1000 Account," one of several "lifetime partnership" programs that offered contributors three nights of free lodging each year for life in exchange for $1,000 donations.

Prosecutors say Bakker and other PTL executives diverted to their own use more than $4 million of the $158 million raised by the partner-

Moore Appeals Revocation Of License By State Board

By Carol Tyer
 THE DAILY REFLECTOR

The North Carolina Board of Medical Examiners made public Wednesday afternoon its decision to revoke the license to practice medicine of Dr. Barry Allen Moore, a Greenville psychiatrist.

However, Judge Donald W. Stephens of the Wake County Superior Court said this morning that he has reinstated Moore's license, pending action of the court which will hear Moore's appeal of the revocation. The Wake County court was petitioned by attorneys for Moore to consider the reinstatement as part of an appeals process.

The revocation ruling had been presented to Moore on Friday, Bryant Paris, executive director of the Board of Medical Examiners, said today.

Moore, 45, was quoted in an article published by The Daily Reflector on Aug. 18 denying charges that he "exercised sexual and immoral misconduct with female patients between 1984 and 1988."

Contacted this morning at his office, Moore said he is meeting with "a group of physicians, psychologists and other friends" in Wilson tonight to review his situation.

"I was served with a lawsuit some time ago," Moore said, "and basically since then, I've been quiet, following the advice of my lawyer not to answer the allegations that have been made against me. I feel I've had my hands tied behind my back, and I'm tired of it."

Moore said that, following tonight's meeting, he may be willing to make further statements in his own behalf.

ECU Freshmen Record Higher SAT Scores

By Charles Hoskinson
 THE DAILY REFLECTOR

This year's freshman class at East Carolina University had the highest average scores on the Scholastic Aptitude Test since 1980 for students entering ECU, but the scores may still fall below the average for the 16-school University of North Carolina system.

The average SAT score for first-time ECU freshmen from North Carolina was 870 this year, up from 850 in 1988. Out-of-state freshmen entering the university scored 925, an increase over last year's score of 894.

However, the increased scores may still leave ECU's freshman class below its counterparts at other schools in the UNC system. For the past nine years, the average SAT scores for entering freshmen at ECU have fallen below the system average for both in-state and out-of-state students. Last year, the system's 18,529 first-time freshmen from North Carolina had an average SAT score of 935. The 3,311 out-of-state freshmen posted an average score of 998.

Systemwide data for this year is not yet available.

The SAT is a standardized test designed to measure a student's aptitude. It has a verbal and a math portion, each of which has a possible score of 800 points. Colleges and universities have traditionally relied heavily on SAT scores in their admissions process.

But ECU officials say SAT scores are not the best way to measure past student performance or potential to succeed in college. They prefer to use a student's high-school record, Eugene Owens, ECU associate admissions director, said. "That's the only thing that we have that even smacks of a student's motivation and desire to excel," he said.

The university's tougher admissions standards this year focused on high-school class rank because it is a more accurate measure of a student's performance over a long period of time, Owens said. "The SAT to a certain degree is a measure of innate ability," he said. "It does not show that the student has the motivation to use it."

Owens said it is also fairer to rely on class rank because it is a measure of how students do against their peers that eliminates variables such as the relative quality of different educational programs.

"A student who has the drive to be successful is going to be successful whether they're in a high school with 1,000 students or one with 100 students," Owens said.

As a result of the tougher standards, the percentage of ECU freshmen who were in the top half of their high-school graduating class increased from 70 percent last year to 95 percent this year.

University officials do consider SAT scores as a factor in deciding admissions and would like to see them improve, Owens said, but it will take time. "It's not something you can wave a magic wand over and eliminate the problem," he said.

Schools May Cut Allowable Absences

By Charles Hoskinson
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Students in Pitt County public schools who miss more than 20 days of school in one year risk failure if the Board of Education decides to tighten its attendance policy.

At its meeting Monday, the board will consider a revised attendance policy that reduces the number of allowable absences from 30 to 20. Students who miss more than the allowable number of days will not receive credit unless the school principal grants an exemption. Students may appeal the principal's decision to the board.

The stricter policy is designed to keep students in school more often, officials said.

"We have a lot of kids that take advantage of the 30 days," Barry Gaskins, a spokesman for the county school system, said. The revised policy will end that abuse, he said. "At least they'll be in school 10 more days."

The stricter policy will also help the county school system meet state accreditation standards, which require an average daily attendance of 95 percent, said Patrick Austin, principal of J.H. Rose High School. "I think it will place on students the responsibility that is theirs — to come to school and to stay in school," he said.

The tighter policy is one of the principal strategies for dealing with the problems of at-risk students, Austin said. "If a student is in school we can teach him and he can learn. But if he's not in school, we can't teach him and he won't learn."

Police Investigate Dozen Theft Reports

Investigators said a dozen thefts ranging from a car and cash to bicycles and a pistol were reported to Greenville police on Wednesday.

Officer W.E. Davis said $77 in cash was taken from a man at the Trade Station on West Fifth Street in a strong-arm robbery incident reported at 12:07 a.m., while Officer D.R. Wyrick said several items were taken from a truck parked at the Fuel Doc at the intersection of Fifth Street and Memorial Drive in an incident reported at 5:16 a.m.

Officer J.M. Ebron said two bicycles, eight cassette tapes and $3.50 in change were taken from 203 Hillcrest Drive in an incident reported at 10:39 a.m. and a 1988 model Buick was taken from Bob Barbour Volvo at 3303 S. Memorial Drive in an incident reported at 4:07 p.m., while Officer K.L. Hadnott said $400 in cash was taken from 1106 Fairfax Ave. in an incident reported at 12:28 p.m.

Officer P.K. Burrows said a .25-caliber pistol was taken from 102 Bonner's Lane in an incident reported at 2:08 p.m., while Officer P.W. Worthington said a bicycle was taken from 111 Kings Arms Apartments in an incident reported at 4:39 p.m.

Officer R.C. Stroud said a dash panel valued at $25 was taken from a car parked in a lot in the 500 block of Evans Street in an incident reported at 7:17 p.m., while $97 worth of karate equipment was taken from Bill McDonald's Karate School on Dickinson Avenue in an incident reported at 8:52 p.m. The property was later recovered.

Officer E.A. Tyson said a purse containing $168 was taken from 1606B Hopkins Drive in an incident reported at 9:28 p.m.

Tyson also said a radio was taken from a car parked at Carolina East Mall in an incident reported at 10:39 p.m., while Officer F.G. Pruitt said a bicycle was taken from 211 Hardee Circle in an incident reported at 10:18 p.m.

No Lingering

Do It In A Day

If God can create the heaven and earth in one day, surely the North Carolina General Assembly should be able to make one decision — and a fairly clear-cut one at that — within the same time frame.

There is no way to avoid a special legislative session to consider whether North Carolina will enter a compact with seven other southeastern states for handling the region's hazardous waste. If it is to join such a compact, a decision must be made on the issue by Oct. 17 — or North Carolina will lose federal toxic site clean-up funds and access to Alabama's hazardous waste landfill. Last year North Carolina industry sent 7.3 million pounds of such waste to Alabama. Clearly, the issue cannot wait to be decided until the 1990 short session.

But it should not take more than a day's time for lawmakers to reach a consensus. This special session should not become an excuse to bring out pet issues. Nor should it be an attempt to resurrect proposals that bit the dust before the 1989 regular session ended. No, the special session should deal with one issue and one issue only — the hazardous waste compact.

Making laws costs taxpayers money. While the process is far from a waste, the amount of public money and time it takes is frequently wasteful. Witness the 1989 General Assembly — the longest and most expensive in history. Tax money supports this excess, and with North Carolina's public dollars this year squeezed tighter than ever before, unnecessary expenses aren't responsible.

With that in mind, the state's lawmakers should head to Raleigh with a clear commitment to come and go in the same day. No lingering to reminisce about the 1989 General Assembly, no dilly-dallying over details. Just resolve the issue at hand and get out of town. That's the way government is supposed to work.

If, as the book of Genesis describes, the Almighty can accomplish the awesome creation of heaven and earth in a day, a few elected officials can certainly make one decision. That's the kind of miracle taxpayers can relate to.

An Ovation

Evert Represents Sports' Best

No bitterness, no tears, no tantrums and no regrets. Only impeccable sportsmanship, a fierce drive to win and enough talent to overwhelm the toughest opponent and turn the tennis odds in her favor.

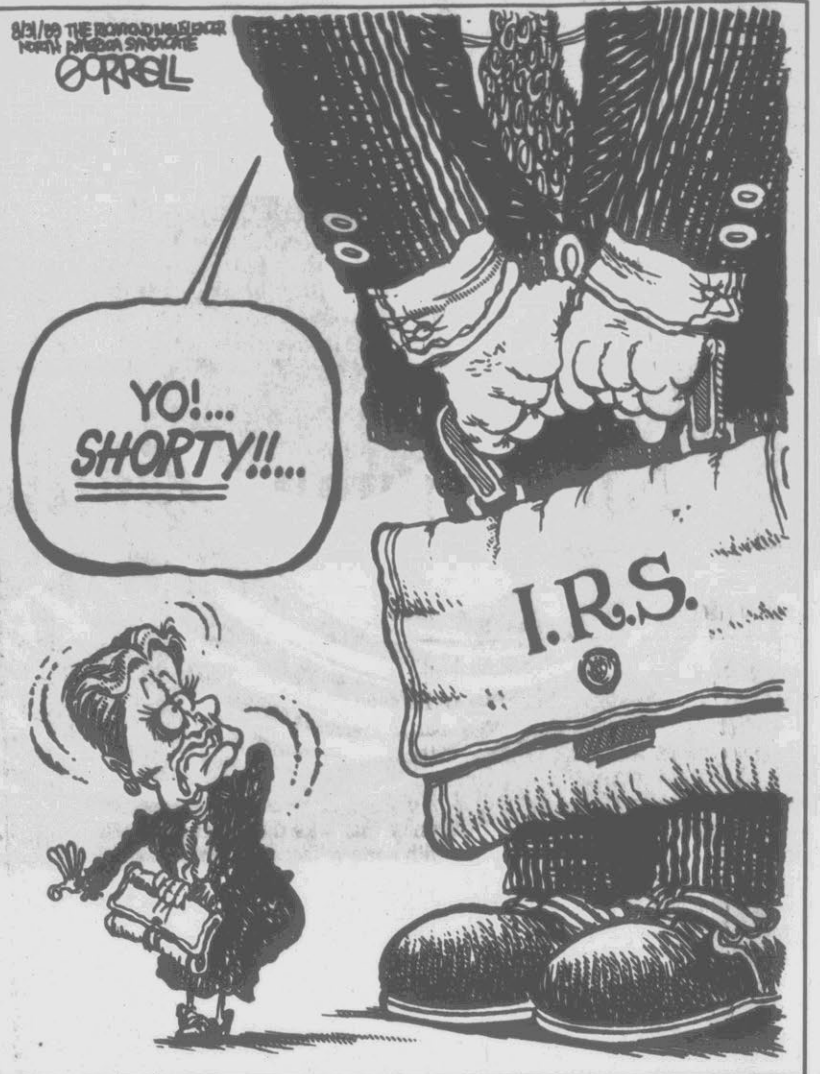

Chris Evert, the classy master of the two-handed backhand, has stepped off the tennis court. The woman who dazzled fans and foes with her peerless baseline strokes and nearly-stoic on-court demeanor, is leaving the professional tour. Her career ended Tuesday in the quarterfinals of the U.S. Open when she lost to Zina Garrison, 7-6, 6-2.

The final score on Evert's career, however, is 40-love, her favor. The 34-year-old's illustrious performance on the court for the past 18 years deserves a hearty round of applause from the bleachers. In the wane of a summer when sports fans watched the seemingly meaningless downfall of baseball biggie Pete Rose, Evert's career is like a soothing, refreshing breeze. Here is an athlete with class, talent, drive, coolheadedness and maturity. Here, in the career of Chris Evert, is the best of the sport she played so well — victory and disappointment, competitiveness and composure.

Evert was a gifted tennis player and a hard-hitting competitor. She took her first of four straight opens in 1975 and also won in 1980 and '82. Evert won the French Open seven times, including her last major title in 1986. She has three Wimbledon, two Australian Open crowns, From 1975 to 1986 she was steadily ranked first or second in women's professional tennis.

But good showings describe only part of what Evert brought to the court. Her brand of sportsmanship, her sense of fair play and polished demeanor, her unflagging devotion to the spirit of competition — these qualities also made her career remarkable.

At a time when sports role models bring disappointment more frequently than admiration, Evert stands out as an exception. Fans take note: no drugs, no misbehavior here. Only a strong love for the game and for competition. Chris Evert's career — and the example she set — deserves an ovation.

From Sublime To Truly Ridiculous

How Can You Tell A $50 Shoeshine From A $2 One?

Art Buchwald

It has been reported that Michael Milken made more than $180 million last year. Michael is now having his problems with the Feds, but he is still flying up there in the ozone with the super rich. His name appeared on a list which included the highest paid executives in America. (The lowest was Robert Haas, who earned a paltry $25 million in 1988.)

What can somebody do with so much money, except buy Grey Poupon mustard from the next Rolls-Royce? At some point the sublime becomes really ridiculous. I sought out one of the men on the top-money all-star team. His name was Net Gross, and his fortune came from manufacturing suspenders to hold up yuppies' pants.

I walked into his office as he was having his shoes shined. He waved me over to a chair.

"How do you feel now that everyone knows you made $45 million?"

"I still put my garters on one leg at a time," he said.

"Money hasn't changed you?"

"Why should it? Of course I go first class now. For example, this shoeshine is costing me $50. I could get one on the street for $2, but it wouldn't say anything about me."

"Is it really a better shine for $50 than it is for $2?"

"Most multimillionaires think so. The shine wouldn't seem worth much if it came cheap."

"But nobody knows whether you've had a $2 shine or a $50 one."

"I know it and that's all that counts. It's the same with this shirt. It cost $250. That's what I used to pay for a suit when I started out in this business. With a shirt like this I feel as if the Lord and Merrill Lynch are watching over me."

"Besides the material happiness that money brings, what other good reason is there for you to earn so much?"

"It tells me exactly where I rank socially. More importantly, it shows where the wealthy stand in relation to me. It's hard for you to understand how important it is to me to take in more money than Malcolm Forbes. If I have more big bucks, I can ruin his breakfast."

"Then making a billion dollars is still the best revenge?"

"Yes, because when your income is in the billions, there are only about 20 guys in the world who can really screw you."

"Do you have any friends among the billion-dollar class?"

"Yes and no. I might gang up with T. Boone Pickens just to get a third guy. Then on Friday he might gang up with someone else to get me. That's why having money is so satisfying — you stick it to those who are trying to stick it to you."

"What else can you do with your fortune besides sticking it to the other guy?"

"The really rich are the ones who put money into play. We spread it around, throw it on the table and toss it up, and make sure that it comes back to us 10 times more than what we put in."

"You must still be left with a lot that you don't know what to do with."

"That would be true if we didn't have to hire lawyers."

"Why do you need lawyers?"

"To tell us if it is legal to get a $50 shine."

A Crisis Of American Behavior

WASHINGTON — The martial metaphors miss the point. For all the rhetoric about a "war" on drugs, the government's job is primarily one of pressure and persuasion, comparable to the job the government undertook 35 years ago when the civil-rights crisis could no longer be deferred.

In democracies, where public opinion must be palliated, there are necessary fatalities. One such is the warlike aspect of drug policy: the use of AWACS and the Navy and perhaps even the infantry for interdiction of drug shipments.

Interdiction today may be stopping one percent of the drug flow. Assume something highly improbable — that extensive use of the military could boost that to five percent. Every gram interdicted would be as expensive as a gram of moon rocks.

If we committed large forces for a long time to the depths of Colombian jungles, we probably could succeed in driving the processing apparatus...into Peru or Bolivia or elsewhere. In 1984, U.S. and Colombian efforts smashed a "cocaine industrial park" in the jungle — 14 laboratories, seven airplanes, barracks for hundreds of workers, 11,000 drums of chemicals, 14 tons of cocaine. The result? A small, brief (five-month) price rise.

In a decade, cocaine traffic has grown from handbag-sized parcels to shipments like the four tons found in a shipment of Brazilian lumber. In 1988, 55 percent of high-school seniors surveyed said cocaine was "fairly easy" or "very easy" to obtain, up from 45 percent in 1984.

Acreage allotted to production of coca leaves has increased enormously. Peru, which produces 60 percent of such leaves, has a per-capita income of $900 a year. America's drug dollars are about equal to the combined GNPs of Peru, Bolivia and Colombia. Those nations' police and judicial systems will not soon suppress an activity employing hundreds of thousands of people and woven into the fabric of those nations' economies.

George Will

But, then, political-economic factors here — America's unwillingness to put its money where its mouth is — will keep the drug "war" quite limited. William Bennett, the epigrammatic drug "czar," says "crack is worse than taxes," but his commander-in-chief emphatically disagrees. So there will still be long waiting lists at drug-treatment facilities which, properly funded, could dampen demand.

This is not new. In 1980, Ronald Reagan denounced drugs mightily. But in 1981, the Drug Enforcement Administration was not exempted from budget cuts. Surveillance was cut; so were undercover buys. Republican taxaphobia qualifies as a dangerous addiction.

Actually, we already are winning the "war." And as is generally the case in wars, the casualties are disproportionately — and increasingly — among the poor. The use of cocaine and other drugs by high-school seniors has fallen to the lowest level in more than a decade. The information-acquiring segments of the population have got the message: Drugs are dangerous and dumb. Their cachet is gone. Drugs, like cigarettes, are declassé. A potent weapon in the "war" is adolescent status anxiety.

But people who make it to senior year in high school are not the most at-risk group. Drugs and attendant pathologies are increasingly confined to inner-city enclaves — Beirut without heavy artillery. Let us assume (it cannot be assumed) that the nation will remain aroused when it realizes that the crisis is one of poor neighborhoods devouring themselves. Is there any model of government success in confronting a task of large-scale behavioral, and hence attitudinal, changes?

The conspicuous government successes of recent generations have included the Second World War and the reconstruction of Europe; TVA and rural electrification; the Manhattan and Apollo projects; the Interstate Highway System. All these were essentially material achievements. Even the radical reduction of poverty among the elderly was essentially a material act — mailing checks to a stable population group.

These achievements are not models for victory in the "war" against the myriad social pathologies of which drug use is part cause and part effect. But there is one heartening analogy. At bottom, the purpose of civil-rights legislation, usually enacted in advance of public attitudes, was attitudinal change. Such legislation was statecraft as soulcraft. It succeeded — not completely, but to a remarkable extent and remarkably quickly.

The drug crisis is not a crisis of Latin American production or of interdiction. It is a crisis of American behavior, of appetites produced by bad attitudes. But political action can change attitudes; it has done so regarding drugs, in segments of society, in this decade.

The crucial prerequisite is political leadership prepared to blame Americans first.

Holding An Election Doesn't End The Campaigning

Paul O'Connor

RALEIGH — While next year's U.S. Senate race goes begging for candidates, North Carolina's campaign for governor, the election for which is more than three years, is already well underway.

State Democrats can't seem to find an established candidate to oppose Republican Sen. Jesse Helms. The GOP, for that matter, can't be sure that Helms will run for a fourth term. He says his wife's health leaves that question open.

In the governor's race, Lt. Gov. Jim Gardner has made it obvious that he's a candidate since the day he filed to run for his current office. Gardner is travelling the state, bashing the legislature, presenting himself as the White Knight who'll fight drugs in our schools, and raising money.

Gardner, who practically disappeared from the political scene during the recent session, now says he needs help pushing his program. He has sent a letter statewide asking lobbyists, politicians and others to join his Legislative Steering Committee. He says he needs their contributions to help push his legislative agenda. The money is to be sent to the Jim Gardner Committee.

Gardner may be a shoo-in for the Republican nomination for governor. On the Democratic side, a primary is most likely brewing.

Sen. Marshall Rauch, D-Gaston, longtime chairman of the Senate Finance Committee and a businessman, is traveling the state assessing his chances. Rauch recently told The Gaston Gazette that he plans to sponsor a hospitality suite at the Democrats' annual Vance-Aycock Dinner in Asheville next month. That would be a first for Rauch who, despite his quarter-century legislative career, is not well-known to party workers outside his district.

Also working the political circuit is Attorney General Lacy Thornburg who has been speechifying and raising money.

It's not uncommon for potential candidates to begin thinking about, and doing initial groundwork for, a campaign this far in advance. No doubt, there are other pols laying plans for the 1996 elections. This campaign is unusual, several political observers said, because serious efforts to raise money have already begun.

There could be some good in the early start of this campaign, especially for the Democrats. They have talent at the legislative level but, unfortunately for them, these people are not known. An early start could overcome that. Gardner, on the other hand, should not have that problem.

The early start also poses problems for both parties. The 1984 Senate race proved that a Senate race can seriously strain the fundraising well for a gubernatorial race. This early start could have the opposite effect, hurting the Democrats as they try to raise the money they'll need to challenge Helms. Fundraising friction could also develop between Helms and Gardner as they try to mine the same core of Republican supporters.

This early action proves that the holding of an election doesn't mean an end to the campaigning.

Nicaraguan Coalition Finds Unity Difficult In Managua

Lee Hockstader

MANAGUA, Nicaragua — In choosing newspaper publisher Violeta Chamorro as the candidate to challenge President Daniel Ortega in February's elections, Nicaragua's opposition parties opted Saturday for a symbol they hoped would be capable of unifying the political forces arrayed against the Sandinista government.

Yet less than a day later, rumblings of discontent were heard within the opposition that seemed to threaten the unity that was the impetus behind nominating Chamorro and teaming her with a more liberal vice presidential running mate, Independent Liberal Party chief Virgilio Godoy.

Leaders of Nicaragua's main business group, the Supreme Council of Private Enterprise, were upset that former council president Enrique Bolanos was not chosen for a spot on the opposition slate.

Bolanos and his supporters, who met in the city of Granada Sunday to weigh their next move, said they considered the Chamorro-Godoy ticket weak and incapable of defeating Ortega in the elections, scheduled for Feb. 25.

"Although we have lost, although the name of Enrique Bolanos is not on the ticket, the big losers today are the important political parties, those that represent the great majority of the opposition," Bolanos said in a speech.

Bolanos was referring to three parties that supported his bid for a spot on the opposition ticket — the Liberal Constitutional Party, the National Conservative Party and the Democratic Party of National Confidence.

Ramiro Gurdian, head of a private-sector agricultural group, said he opposed the selection of Godoy as Chamorro's running mate. Godoy made some enemies in the business community during a stint as labor minister in the Sandinista government from 1979 to 1984.

"We are studying other alternatives to fighting, which will be unveiled at the proper time," Gurdian said in an interview.

The Chamorro-Godoy ticket received 10 votes out of 14 — the minimum necessary to win — in the balloting Saturday night. The three parties that favored Bolanos abstained, and one party's vote was annulled.

The decision came on the 10th round of balloting that began last Thursday.

While neither Bolanos nor Gurdian is formally a member of the opposition political coalition, the opposition depends heavily on the business sector for financial and organizational support. Several parties in the 14-party federation that nominated Chamorro and Godoy are closely aligned with business interests and supported Bolanos for the vice presidential slot.

Meanwhile, Chamorro and her advisers sought to dismiss the discontent within the opposition ranks as a natural political impulse in a nation with no history of democratic institutions or processes.

"I have no doubt whatsoever" that the three parties that voted against the Chamorro-Godoy ticket "are going to stay in" the coalition said Alfredo Cesar, a close ally of Chamorro.

"And I'm sure that Bolanos, who doesn't have a political party, will come out with a statement of support" for the coalition slate, Cesar added.

Cesar said the opposition candidates were open to including Bolanos in campaign events and, should the Chamorro-Godoy ticket win, in the government.

Alberto Saborio, an official of the National Conservative Party, one of those that opposed the Chamorro-Godoy ticket, called the disgruntlement of some opposition members "normal reactions" that posed no risk of disunity within the opposition federation.

Nicaraguan opposition politics have a tradition of dissolution and disunity that the current National Opposition Union, known by its Spanish initials as UNO, is trying to reverse.

In an interview, Chamorro said she placed her faith in running a successful campaign in God and her deceased husband, Pedro Joaquin Chamorro, who was editor of the family-owned opposition newspaper La Prensa until he was assassinated in 1978.

She acknowledged that she was ill-prepared to lead a nation, and compared herself to Corazon Aquino of the Philippines. Before she became president, Aquino often asked, "What do I know about running a country?"

"There's no need to study how to govern a country," Chamorro said. "I have accepted the challenge to revive this country with love, peace and according to the dictates of my conscience."

Earlier today, at a campaign rally in a downtown movie theater, Chamorro told about 1,500 supporters that she had turned to God and her dead husband for guidance, and she pledged to restore democracy to Nicaragua.

"UNO is unified," she declared, adding that a nation united by the opposition could include the Sandinistas.

During the rally, running mate Godoy flashed two V-for-victory signs with his hands as he delivered a speech. The two V's stood for Violeta and Virgilio, he said — and, of course, for victory.

Addiction Fight Marred By Quack Cures

Peter Kumpa

In Victorian England, the view was commonly expressed, even in medical journals, that the lower classes fared far worse from opium addiction than did the upper classes. The conventional wisdom was that poor folk quickly succumbed to degeneracy from excessive opium use, but that the upper classes remained relatively immune.

Among those claiming success were C.B. Pearson of Maryland and T. D. Crothers of Connecticut, both medical doctors. Both these men were pikers, however, compared to Charles B. Towns, who became something of a national hero for "curing" addiction.

Strangely, Towns wasn't even a doctor. A Georgia farm boy, he was a salesman by vocation; he once claimed to have written "more life insurance than any other man south of the Mason and Dixon line up to that time."

In 1901, Towns arrived in New York city to speculate on the stock market. But his firm failed. Providentially, he later related, he was approached by someone who whispered, "I have got a cure for the drug habit, morphine, opium, heroin, codeine — any of them."

The medical community remained skeptical. Towns got nowhere until he convinced Dr. Alexander Lambert of Cornell of his method's efficacy. Lambert happened to be Theodore Roosevelt's good friend and personal physician. With Lambert's endorsement, Towns managed to win the War Department's support in showing what he could do.

What was Towns' "secret" — and supposedly successful — formula? As described by drug historian David F. Musto in his study, "The American Disease," it was a horror. The formula consisted of one part fluid extract of prickly ash bark, one part fluid extract of hyoscyamus (henbane), and two parts tincture of belladonna, to be administered every half-hour in small doses. On the first day of treatment, the addict was subjected to "a complete evacuation of the bowels," as well as to the largest tolerable dose of the addictive substance.

Detractors labeled Towns' "secret" as nothing more than "diarrhea, delirium and damnation."

IN THE STATE

Indictments

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — Authorities seized more than 700 guns and six people were indicted on charges of conspiring to sell weapons to unlicensed buyers, officials said.

The weapons ranged from cheap pistols to fully automatic rifles — guns which Paul Lyon, special agent in charge of the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms in North Carolina and South Carolina, said were highly prized on the black market.

Among the weapons, which will be destroyed, were more than 500 California-made Raven Arms .25-caliber pistols.

Among other guns agents either bought undercover or seized during their 11-month investigation were World War II British Sten machine guns, capable of firing their 32-round clips in several seconds.

Four Arrested

RALEIGH (AP) — Four people were arrested following a migrant labor dispute that resulted in a shootout Sunday night at a Wilson County night spot, Wilson County Sheriff's Department officials said.

Four workers were being held in Wilson County Jail on charges of assault with a deadly weapon with intent to kill inflicting serious injury, and conspiracy.

The four were identified as Gilbert Rodriguez Chapa, 54, held on $10,000 bond; Pascual Martinez, 40, of Rt. 2, Bailey, held on $15,000 bond; Juan Jorge Apec, 29, Rt. 3, Kenly, held on $15,000 bond; and Steve Sanchez, 29, of Wilson, $50,000 bond.

Six others are still being sought in connection with the shootings at Nacho's Club near Lucama.

Apple Festival

HENDERSONVILLE (AP) — Good weather, a tightened schedule and national television coverage combined to help make this year's N.C. Apple Festival the best yet, according to organizers.

Final figures have not been tabulated, but up to 50,000 people are lied to have attended the five-day festival, said Ray Cantrell, executive vice president of the Greater Hendersonville Chamber of Commerce.

He estimated that the event poured between $500,000 and $1 million into the local economy.

State Rewards

RALEIGH (AP) — Rewards are being offered by the state in connection with murder cases in Fayetteville and Winston-Salem, Gov. Jim Martin's office announced Wednesday.

The state is offering a reward of up to $5,000 for information leading to the arrest and conviction of those responsible in the deaths of James Le Ngoc Holley of Fayetteville and James Nebraska Cloud of Winston-Salem.

Holley's body was found on June 25 at a Fayetteville gas station, where he was employed. Authorities say he had been beaten to death.

Cloud's body was found on Jan. 9 in his Winston-Salem home. Police say he had been beaten and stabbed to death.

Land Purchase

RALEIGH (AP) — The Conservation Fund has outbid a Japanese firm on 104,000 acres of environmentally sensitive coastal property to keep it from being used for peat mining.

The Conservation Fund announced Wednesday it would pay $8.8 million for the land between the Albemarle and Pamlico sounds. Federal Bankruptcy Court officials in New York accepted the offer Wednesday for the First Colony Farms property.

Last month, Nissho Iwai American Corp., a U.S. subsidiary of a Japanese trading company, offered to buy the land for about $1 million more than the conservation group had at first offered.

The fund will lease the land to the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service for management at no cost, the statement said. During the next one to two years, a study will be conducted to determine how best to use the property.

State Faces Uphill Battle To Get Sales Taxes On Mail Order Sales

By F. Alan Boyce
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — North Carolina's attempt to collect sales taxes from out-of-state mail order companies is facing an uphill battle as reluctant retailers have reduced the expected revenue stream by nearly 95 percent.

The so-called "yuppie" tax on such companies as L.L. Bean and Land's End, which took effect Jan. 1, yielded only $943,656 in its first seven months, said E.C. Byrum, assistant director of the Sales and Use Tax Division in the N.C. Department of Revenue. At that rate, collections would be less than 5 percent of the estimated $24 million in annual state taxes and $16 million in local taxes the division predicted when the law was enacted.

"This is somewhat below the estimate," Byrum said in a recent telephone interview. "But I think you have to bear in mind that this department is still in the process of contacting these vendors."

However, the 5 percent figure fits perfectly with estimates of compliance by the Direct Marketing Association in Washington, D.C., which has 3,000 mail-order members. Spokesman Bob Levering said that a small minority of companies collect the taxes because they are ignorant of the law or "willing to cave in" to states that try to intimidate them into paying an unconstitutional tax.

North Carolina is among 22 states requiring out-of-state companies to collect sales taxes on purchases. But the law is based on an Illinois statute that was declared unconstitutional by the U.S. Supreme Court in 1967. Congress is considering legislation to address the issue.

"That is still in full force," said Byrum. "So in light of the Supreme Court's decision back in 1967 ... and the pending legislation in Congress, there are some mail order vendors that thus far are reluctant to register (for the tax)."

Levering said North Carolina officials had asked for access to DMA's mailing list for the purposes of enforcing the law. He said he reviewed the letter that would be sent to vendors and refused to give up the list because it would be a "violation of the DMA code of ethics."

"This (the letter) seems to say that companies have to do this," he said. "It doesn't mention anything about this being the same law Illinois had."

Levering said he told state officials the letter amounted to "mail fraud."

"They got mad at that," he said. "But that is the unvarnished truth. There are two things going on here, the states using and abusing their power to intimidate companies to give up their rights and at the same time there is a legitimate move to get the Supreme Court to readdress the issue."

Byrum said Levering "is entitled to any opinion which he chooses."

"But the information which I have given you is based on the ratified legislative bills in North Carolina, which is now the existing law in this state," he said. "The Supreme Court decision to which he is referring involved a mail-order vendor and the state of Illinois. And that case was decided over 20 years ago. Thus far, there has been no litigation or state or U.S. Supreme Court decision which states that the North Carolina law is not valid."

side its boundaries. The law before Congress would give states the power to tax businesses in other states, he said, but would not allow taxation without representation.

"As a purely legal matter, I think that we would win just on the due process issue," he said. "But federal legislation would be dangerous because if the Congress specifically has spoken, courts as a practical matter may see things differently."

Catharine Hartnett, a spokeswoman for L.L. Bean in Freeport, Maine, said her company is among those complying with the law "as it was articulated by the Supreme Court in 1967."

"That says it is unconstitutional for the states to be required to collect taxes unless they have a presence in the state, an office, a store, a sales representative," she said. "We don't have any in North Carolina."

Byrum said his office is still in the stages of informing vendors of the state's law and has not levied any penalties. Levering agreed, saying, "North Carolina so far has done some misrepresentations in the mail, but they haven't gone to extreme coercion."

Court Orders New Trial In Murder

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — Prosecutors should not have used a murder suspect's silence against him, the state Supreme Court said in ordering a new trial for the man.

The court ordered a new trial Wednesday for Alton Reid Hoyle Jr. of Asheville, who was convicted of first-degree murder in April 1988 and sentenced to life in prison.

Hoyle agreed to answer general questions about the shooting death of Terry Kicinski outside an Asheville restaurant, but refused to sign a waiver of rights or answer specific questions about the shooting without a lawyer present.

While testifying in his own defense, Hoyle said he had refused to give Kicinski a ride home from the restaurant. He said Kicinski forced his way into his truck and the two got into a fight. While struggling over a pistol, it went off, striking the victim, Hoyle testified.

Prosecutors questioned Hoyle about his story, asking why he had not told police about the struggle. In closing arguments, the prosecution questioned the truth of Hoyle's story since he had not told it to police.

"He had a constitutional right not to answer such questions ...," Justice John Webb wrote for the majority. An earlier U.S. Supreme Court ruling "holds it was a violation of this right for his silence to be used against him."

The majority also held that Hoyle should have been advised of his constitutional rights at his home after officers asked him to go with them for questioning. The ruling said that Hoyle was stopped as he went to get a coat when officers spotted a pistol near the closet. After asking if officers had a warrant, Hoyle was told an officer could be kept at the house until one was obtained.

Before leaving the house, Hoyle was asked how long he had been at home. He responded, "All night." That answer was admitted into evidence at his trial, but the court held it should not have been allowed because Hoyle had not been given his rights.

Justice Louis Meyer dissented from the majority opinion, saying that Hoyle was not significantly restrained at the house when he responded to officers. Meyer said he did not believe the prosecution was wrong to question Hoyle's previous silence about the alleged struggle before the shooting.

U.S. Attorneys Say N.C. Drug Dealers Sometimes Agree On Sales Territories

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Major drug dealers in North Carolina tend to be less flashy and violent than their big-city counterparts, even agreeing on how to divide "turf" on some occasions, the state's three U.S. attorneys say.

Still, North Carolina suffers its share of drug trafficking and the accompanying crime, addiction and misery, the federal prosecutors say in separate reports to the U.S. Attorney General.

Drug dealing near military bases is so pervasive that it may threaten the nation's defense readiness, according to U.S. Attorney Margaret P. Currin, who also said that statewide efforts to stem the narcotics flow have had limited success.

"The Middle District of North Carolina is awash in cocaine," wrote Robert H. Edmunds Jr., U.S. attorney for the region that stretches from Durham to Mount Airy to Laurinburg. "The war on drugs is being waged with vigor in this district, but it is not being won."

Nonetheless, Edmunds said that drug rings in his area tend to divide their turf more amicably than dealers in cities such as Washington, where territorial disputes lead to killings.

"Actual gunplay and actual killing is not common," Edmunds wrote. "The organizations seem to find it more useful to cultivate a reputation for violence; thus they arm their people and make threats" that rarely have to be carried out. "True violence is bad for business."

Still, he wrote that in all of North Carolina, "there were 49 deaths related to cocaine and 11 deaths related to cocaine and heroin in combination in 1988. The previous years these figures were 28 and two, respectively."

Filed earlier this year, the three reports, totaling 62 pages, were among those submitted by every U.S. attorney in the country at the request of Attorney General Richard Thornburgh, the News and Observer of Raleigh reported in today's editions.

Rather than providing a comprehensive overview of the drug culture in North Carolina, the reports primarily contain anecdotes and prosecutorial success stories told by the three U.S. attorneys, all appointees who owe their jobs to Sen. Jesse Helms.

Included in the reports are these items:

— Unlike drug kingpins portrayed in "Miami Vice" and similar shows, North Carolina's major dealers often are low-key people, more likely to invest in a house than in gold jewelry.

"Most of the major trafficking groups in this district, whether smuggler or distributor, have invested heavily in real estate," wrote Mrs. Currin. "Most have also acquired expensive cars, boats, planes, etc. Yet few have been really 'flashy' as is more common in other geographical areas. They tend to hold onto their cash in safe deposit boxes ..."

Drug rings run by Jamaicans — who have a reputation for unusual violence — are active in Raleigh, Jacksonville and the Greenville-New Bern area, Mrs. Currin said.

Edmunds, of the Middle District, wrote: "Organizations tend to treat their drug income with a degree of caution. The most frequently seen use of drug money is to buy or improve real estate."

Drug-dealing in North Carolina cities generally is divided among a few organizations "which do not truly compete with each other," Edmunds wrote. "For the most part, the members all know each other ... This tightly knit structure makes infiltration by law enforcement difficult ..."

"Groups such as this have historically tended to cooperate. The market is large enough that there is plenty of opportunity for all, and there have been no turf wars to match the one which broke out between two motorcycle gangs about a decade ago and left several dead. In fact, there have been documented occasions when one group, short of cocaine, has gone to another group for help, which has been provided."

As for the effect of drugs on society, Mrs. Currin's report said: "Of particular concern is the impact of drugs on the readiness capability of some of the forces at Fort Bragg. One LSD distribution network did such a volume business with members of the 82nd Airborne Division that they switched the medium into which the LSD is impregnated to one with a camouflage motif."

LSD is a hallucinogen that can ingested in a variety of ways.

Drug dealing is so blatant in at least two Eastern North Carolina counties that citizens question the honesty of law enforcement officials, Mrs. Currin wrote.

"The openness with which cocaine is bought and sold in Robeson County has led to the widespread perception of public corruption," she said.

And in Perquimans County, where a family-run heroin and cocaine ring is powerful, she said, "Police corruption is perceived by the public as being widespread."

In Western North Carolina, some drug rings operate with what almost seems to be a "salesman of the month" system.

"Occasionally we found that the organization worked in a wheel pattern, with the individual who obtained the largest quantity of drugs in a particular month moving to the top and others replacing him in subsequent months," wrote U.S. Attorney Thomas Ashcraft, whose district includes Charlotte and the North Carolina mountains.

EAL Strikers End 3,000-Mile March

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS
 WASHINGTON — Hundreds of striking Eastern Airlines employees, ending a 3,000-mile march that began last month in Miami, want the Senate to bring to a vote a measure to force resolution of the 6-month-old walkout.

The 26-day relay march, which included rallies in a number of East Coast cities, ended Wednesday on the west steps of the Capitol amid chants of "One more day."

The marchers were joined by union leaders and several members of Congress.

"We're in a tough battle against one of the worst employers in the country," AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland told the crowd.

"We know which side the president of the United States is on. He's made that abundantly clear," said Kirkland, prompting marchers to chant "Where was George?"

The strikers vowed to continue the walkout "one more day" until Frank Lorenzo, owner of Eastern's parent company Texas Air Corp., gives in.

Sen. Paul Sarbanes, D-Md., describing Lorenzo as a "modern-day robber baron," said the strikers were "fighting for justice for all American workers."

Rep. John Lewis, D-Ga., donned a red shirt that urged a boycott of Eastern and Lorenzo-owned Continental Airlines.

"I believe Frank Lorenzo is vicious and greedy," Lewis said.

After the rally, hundreds of pilots, flight attendants and machinists paraded to the White House.

Kirkland demanded that the Senate bring to a vote a measure to force resolution of the strike. The House approved such a bill after President Bush refused to follow a National Mediation Board recommendation that he appoint an emergency board.

"Working men have to stick together," said Sen. Paul Simon, D-Ill., vowing to push for Senate approval of the emergency legislation.

The rally came at the end of a march and caravan that began Aug. 12 in Miami. Leaders said 13 Eastern employees traveled the entire route, while hundreds of others participated in mile-long relays of a symbolic picket sign along the East Coast route that included New York and Boston.

The striking unions accuse Lorenzo of planning to strip away Eastern's assets until the airline is dead. However, Eastern officials have said they are gradually building the airline back up to a major carrier and have been adding flights.

Court Says Man Paralyzed Since 1985 Can Shut Off Life Support

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ATLANTA — A 33-year-old quadriplegic quietly accepted the news that a judge had granted his wish to be allowed to shut off the machine that has kept him alive the past four years.

Larry McAfee, paralyzed from the neck down in a 1985 motorcycle accident, won permission Wednesday to fit the ventilator that allows him to breathe with a device he designed in his head as he lay paralyzed.

"He said, 'Well,' and was quiet, just said, 'Well, good,'" said nurse Carol Philpot at the Briarcliff Nursing Center in Alabaster, Ala., where McAfee is staying. "He's kind of digesting the news, I think."

Under his plans, McAfee would be administered a sedative and use a mouth-held stick to activate the device, which would be connected to a timer to shut off the ventilator.

Fulton County Superior Court Judge Edward Johnson ruled that McAfee's right to refuse life-sustaining treatment outweighed the state's interest in preserving life.

As a competent adult, McAfee has the right to refuse medical treatment, the judge said.

"The ventilator to which he is attached is not prolonging his life; it is prolonging his death," said Johnson, who had jurisdiction because McAfee is from Atlanta and had petitioned the Georgia court before he was taken to the Alabama nursing home.

McAfee asked the court's permission to shield anyone who helped him from potential legal problems.

Johnson told McAfee's parents and three adult sisters that the ruling would set a precedent so families in similar situations could make their decisions more privately.

In that way, the judge said: "Larry will have made his last and greatest contribution to his community. I have never met anyone who had a stronger impact on my own life than he had on me when we had the hearing at the hospital."

Although most "right-to-die" cases involve comatose patients or those who cannot make their wishes known, a case similar to McAfee's came up in July. A 38-year-old Michigan man paralyzed in a surfing accident died after a court decided he had the right to have his life-support system shut off.

Johnson ordered the state, which supported McAfee's petition, to appeal to the Georgia Supreme Court but said McAfee need not await the outcome.

McAfee's lawyer, Randall H. Davis, said he didn't expect any opposition.

"The judge hopes they will issue a definitive opinion to make it so that similarly situated people won't have to go to court and go through all this," Davis said.

Davis was unsure when McAfee would ask to be sent back to Georgia so he could disconnect the ventilator; he said his client wanted to be sent to a friend's apartment instead of a hospital.

"He has expressed a desire all along to move this along as quickly as possible," Davis said. "I assume that continues to be his desire."

McAfee had not arranged to be moved to Georgia yet, but the Alabama nursing home officials would expedite a move to wherever McAfee wished, said Richard Lazarnick, a spokesman for the home.

Johnson conducted a hearing at McAfee's bedside last month, hearing him testify that he wakes up "just fearful of each new day. There is nothing I have found or can think of that I really enjoy or that has helped me or my situation."

A petition filed last month included an affidavit that stated, "I understand turning off the ventilator will result in my death," and was signed by a shaky "X" made with a pencil held in McAfee's mouth.

Five family members and a family friend testified that McAfee told them numerous times he wanted to die rather than continue living as he is.

Julie Orr, a sister, said after the ruling that the family was simply glad it was over.

"It's what Larry wants," she said. "You never know (how hard it is) until you're put there."

Capital Spending Plans Increased

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The government reported today that American businesses plan to increase spending on plants and equipment by 7.7 percent in 1989, a sign that many company managers do not believe a recession is imminent.

Businesses responding to a Commerce Department survey completed in August said they expect to spend $463.95 billion for expansion and modernization this year, up from a record $430.74 billion spent on business investment in 1988. The 1988 figure was revised from $423.69 billion reported earlier. The numbers are adjusted for inflation.

Some economists had feared that business leaders would be inclined to cut back on capital spending if they felt a severe economic slowdown was on the horizon.

There was concern earlier this year that the economy, now approaching its seventh year of growth, might be headed for a recession as the Federal Reserve tightened credit in an attempt to contain inflation.

Instructions Mixed Up

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ST. LOUIS — A TWA jetliner nearly collided with a military plane near Chicago because the commercial plane's pilot obeyed an air traffic controller's instruction intended for another airliner, a federal agency said.

TWA Flight 818, a Boeing 767 carrying 151 passengers, was flying non-stop from St. Louis to Paris on Tuesday when it was forced to dive to avoid the collision at 37,000 feet. Five people, including a flight attendant, were treated for minor injuries after the jetliner returned to St. Louis.

The National Transportation Safety Board, which investigated the incident, said Wednesday that the TWA jetliner dived to miss a KC-10 tanker that was part of the 452nd Air Refueling Wing out of March Air Force Base in California.

Radio transmissions will be reviewed, tract data reconstructed and crew members and air traffic controllers interviewed, the NTSB said.

Federal Aviation Administration spokesman Mort Edelstein said shortly after Tuesday's incident that the agency had "had no knowledge of air traffic controllers being involved."

But Keith Potts, the FAA's associate administrator of aviation safety, said later the pilots mistakenly followed the controller's instructions that were intended for another aircraft.

The FAA said it was unclear whether the TWA pilot or the controller based at Aurora, Ill., was at fault. The TWA plane and the KC-10 tanker were within five miles of each other when the evasive action was taken about 30 miles southeast of Chicago, the FAA said.

Navy Says Iowa Sailor Probably Used Detonator

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — A Navy report being issued today concludes that gunner's mate Clayton Hartwig "probably caused" the blast aboard the USS Iowa by inserting a detonating device amid bags of gunpowder in the battleship's 16-inch guns, Pentagon sources say.

The sources, who spoke on condition they not be identified by name, said the Navy was unable to pinpoint a precise cause of the April 19 explosion, which killed Hartwig and 46 others. The tragedy ranks as the worst naval disaster since the Vietnam war.

Pentagon officials planned to release the report today, more than four months after the explosion in the battleship's No. 2 gun turret during training exercises northeast of Puerto Rico.

Vice Chief of Naval Operations Adm. Leon Edney; Rear Adm. William Schachte, the head of the Naval Investigative Service; and Rear Adm. Richard Milligan, who headed the inquiry, planned to brief reporters on the 1,100-page report.

The Pentagon sources said the Navy believes that Hartwig was the "most likely person" to have caused the blast. Investigators found that he was closest to the breech of the gun before the explosion occurred and that he was in charge of overseeing its loading.

The report found that "foreign material" was discovered in the gun that Hartwig manned, and that such material would not normally have been present after the firing of the 16-inch guns, the sources said.

The sources said they could not say what exactly was found remaining in the gun, but that it led investigators to believe that Hartwig apparently placed a type of timer or detonator between the bags of powder.

Ramming the bags and such a device up against the projectile that had already been placed in the gun barrel would have caused the powder to explode back into the seven-story turret. The only survivors of the blast were in the lowest level of the complex.

Meanwhile, congressional sources said the Navy inquiry found that "an unlawful and illegal act" by Hartwig probably caused the explosion. The sources, who also spoke on condition of anonymity, attended a briefing session by Pentagon officials Wednesday. The sources declined to specify the nature of the act.

Kathy Kubicina, Hartwig's sister, said Wednesday night, "This is nothing I didn't expect ... I fully expected the Navy to try and pin this on my brother..."

"None of the guys on the Iowa believe my brother blew up the turret," she said.

The Navy was hampered in its inquiry by the absence of any seamen who survived the explosion at close quarters. Navy sources had said in May that investigators were looking into the possibility of homicide or suicide resulting from a falling-out between Hartwig and another sailor.

Navy spokesman Cmdr. Mark Baker declined to comment Wednesday night on the reports from congressional sources.

Pentagon sources have said previously that the report "cites a probability" that human action, calculated or otherwise, caused the explosion. The officials also have said they ruled out any specific mechanical cause for the blast.

The sources had said the report also would outline numerous training and maintenance lapses on the ship, but that none of those was identified as a cause of the explosion. Gunner's Mate 3rd Class Kendall Truitt, one of 11 sailors in the base of the seven-deck turret who survived but did not witness the blast, had charged that the Navy leaked reports that the service was investigating his relationship with Hartwig.

Truitt said investigators suggested he had had a sexual relationship with Hartwig, or that Hartwig had committed suicide after the two had a falling-out.

Ellis Rubin, the Miami lawyer representing Truitt, said Wednesday night, "This is an underhanded attempt by the Navy to explain its negligence in training the crew and forcing 50-year-old technology onto the American public in order to preserve the battleship as a weapon of war. ... The Navy knows the cause of the tragedy and is not going to reveal it. It's all part of a coverup and whitewash to save the battleship."

Earlier this week, Seaman David Smith said Navy investigators browbeat him into an admission that Hartwig had made a sexual advance to him and had talked about how to set off an explosion with a cheap timing device. Smith told ABC Radio he had received no such proposition and had heard of no such timer.

The explosion occurred as the No. 2 gun, the middle gun of three in the second turret, was being loaded for firing practice.

The guns and turret were designed in the late 1930s and use powder and shells manufactured more than 40 years ago in World War II. There has been some speculation that the powder could have become unstable, but the Pentagon later discounted that theory.

The Iowa has since returned to service and is currently berthed in Gaeta, Italy, as part of a tour of the Mediterranean.

Pullout Of U.S. Diplomats Opens New Era In Beirut

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BEIRUT, Lebanon — The evacuation of the last U.S. diplomats from Beirut marks a milestone in 30 years of American involvement in turbulent Lebanon.

Washington's envoys had clung tenaciously to the war-battered capital despite the assassination of one U.S. ambassador, the suicide car bombings of two embassy buildings, the abductions of Americans and murderous artillery barrages.

But on Wednesday, Ambassador John McCarthy and his 29 remaining American staff members slipped out of the country aboard three U.S. Navy helicopters amid mounting criticism from militant pro-Western Christians.

The Christian standard-bearer, army commander Gen. Michel Aoun, had charged that Washington has "sold Lebanon to Syria" out of fear for the lives of eight Americans held hostage by pro-Iranian zealots.

But U.S. State Department spokeswoman Margaret Tutwiler angrily blamed the evacuation on Aoun, saying he had threatened to expose McCarthy and his staff to a "good dose of Christian terrorism."

She said that before the evacuation, an unidentified telephone caller had threatened to shoot down a U.S. helicopter that brought supplies to the hilltop embassy compound in east Beirut's Christian suburb of Aukar.

Aoun's supporters besieged the embassy on Tuesday and Ms. Tutwiler said an unidentified leader of the protest had warned that embassy employees moved in and out of the premises "at their own risk."

The protesters called off the siege hours after the evacuation. It is the first time that an American ambassador has been pulled from Beirut since Lebanon's civil war between Moslems and Christians began in 1975.

U.S. officials were at pains to point out that American diplomats would return to the Mediterranean country as soon as conditions permit, but there was no sign that this would be any time soon.

Observers in Beirut said the American pullout would escalate the nearly 6-month-old confrontation between Aoun's 20,000 mainly Christian troops and 40,000 Syrian soldiers based in Lebanon's Moslem areas.

The fear is that the Syrians could be encouraged by the U.S. withdrawal to step up their military pressure on Aoun's forces in the besieged Christian enclave north of Beirut.

Aoun's troops have been locked in savage artillery duels with the Syrians and their Druse Moslem allies since March 8. The battles have killed 828 people, wounded 2,455 and forced many of Beirut's 1.5 million residents to flee the city.

Syria intervened in 1976 under an Arab League mandate to stop the civil war. But Aoun, who heads a Christian military Cabinet in Lebanon's splintered government, contends the Syrians betrayed their mission by supporting the Moslems.

Aoun declared a "war of liberation" March 14 to drive the Syrians out. They retaliated by blockading and ruthlessly shelling the Christian enclave.

McCarthy, whose mansion in suburban Yarzeh was frequently hit by Syrian shellfire, has been outspokenly critical of Syria's actions and repeatedly urged Damascus to begin a dialogue with Aoun.

But the 54-year-old Maronite Catholic general said McCarthy's behests were merely "lip service" and demanded full U.S. recognition of him as the legitimate prime minister of Lebanon.

McCarthy came to Lebanon late in September 1988. But he did not present his credentials pending the election of a new head of state to succeed former President Amin Gemayel, whose six-year term expired that month.

McCarthy's move was designed to avoid recognizing either Aoun's Cabinet, which was formed by Gemayel minutes before he bowed out, or that of acting Prime Minister Salim Hoss, a Sunni Moslem.

The power struggle between the two Cabinets has deepened the de facto partition of the country into sectarian mini-states.

The evacuation of McCarthy and his staff was carried out with surgical precision. Two helicopters landed at the embassy compound at first light and took off with all 30 people within five minutes. A third gunship flew cover, witnesses reported.

Nearly 540 Lebanese guards and administrative employees were left in control of the embassy and of the ambassador's residence in Yarzeh.

U.S. involvement in Lebanon began July 15, 1958, when President Dwight D. Eisenhower sent Marines to Beirut at the request of Christian President Camille Chamoun to quell an uprising by Chamoun's Moslem rivals.

Civil war broke out in 1975 and the following year Moslem radicals kidnapped and murdered U.S. Ambassador Francis Meloy along with his economic counselor Robert Waring.

With the war, Yasser Arafat's Palestine Liberation Organization became the dominant force in Lebanon's Moslem areas. That lasted until Israel invaded in June 1982.

In August of that year, 800 U.S. Marines, part of a 5,400-man peacekeeping force with British, French and Italian units, went ashore to oversee the evacuation of Israeli, Syrian and PLO forces from Beirut.

The U.S. force was later increased to 1,800 men.

In April 1983, a Shiite Moslem suicide bomber rammed an explosives-packed van into the seaside U.S. Embassy in west Beirut, killing 63 people, including 17 Americans.

The worst was yet to come.

On Oct. 23, 1983, another Shiite suicide bomber attacked the U.S. Marine base near Beirut airport, killing 241 men, and a second bomber attacked a French paratroopers' base, killing 58 men.

In December, American reconnaissance planes were fired on and the United States responded with a Naval fighter-bomber attack that inflicted "significant damage" on Syrian missile and artillery batteries in Lebanon.

A few days later, the battleship USS New Jersey bombarded Moslem positions with 250 shells from its 16-inch guns.

But in February 1984, as the civil war erupted anew, the Marines were pulled back to warships off Beirut, a move that marked the beginning of their final withdrawal after a 22-month peacekeeping operation in which 264 U.S. servicemen were killed.

In September 1984 a suicide bomber hit the U.S. embassy annex in Christian east Beirut, killing 12 people and wounding 96, including the U.S. ambassador. It was this compound that was evacuated Wednesday.

Quayle Says Reagan Defense Unrealistic

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — Vice President Dan Quayle called the Reagan administration's "Star Wars" missile defense strategy unrealistic and unveiled a less expensive, revised version called "Brilliant Pebbles."

Instead of the system that Reagan said would end the danger of nuclear war by making atomic weapons "impotent," the Bush administration is supporting Brilliant Pebbles, Quayle said in an interview published in today's Los Angeles Times.

"We have redefined Star Wars and put it into missions, requirements, doctrine and strategy much differently than we did in the early 1980s," Quayle said.

Under Brilliant Pebbles, clusters of mini-missiles would track incoming rockets. The system is intended only to cope with a limited Soviet attack or with the sort of missile strike that could be mounted by a Third World country or some other nation that might acquire a small arsenal of relatively unsophisticated rockets.

Quayle declined to estimate the cost, but said it would be cheaper than the previous administration's concept.

He conceded that former President Reagan's plan, known formally as the Strategic Defense Initiative, was never authentic.

Reagan "talked about this impenetrable shield that was going to be completely leakproof," Quayle said.

Latchkey Kids and Substance Abuse

Eighth-graders who look after themselves more than 11 hours a week are twice as likely to abuse alcohol, tobacco or marijuana as children who always have adult supervision.

Latchkey Kids Apt To Become Abusers

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHICAGO — Youngsters who look after themselves after school for 11 or more hours a week on a regular basis are twice as likely to abuse alcohol, tobacco and marijuana as children who aren't "latchkey kids," a new report says.

The study, analyzing data on almost 5,000 eighth-graders in the Los Angeles and San Diego areas, found that higher risks of substance abuse occurred in two-parent as well as single-parent households and in affluent as well as poor homes.

The study is published in this month's issue of Pediatrics, the journal of the American Academy of Pediatrics, which is based in suburban Elk Grove Village.

Adolescents who turn to such abuse while caring for themselves may be "manifesting a desire to display their sense of maturity and independence," said the study. It found a relationship between self-care and substance abuse regardless of extracurricular activities, social influence and stress.

The authors suggested that risk-taking behavior, having friends who smoke and being in situations where cigarettes are offered may partially explain the relationship between self-care and substance abuse.

The findings support several recent articles that suggest some type of problem behavior among early adolescents can be linked, at least partly, to the large amounts of time they spend without adult supervision, particularly after school, the authors said.

They speculated that more time in self-care may promote more unnoticed solitary trials of substances.

Bennett 'Heartened' By Reaction To Bush's Call For War On Drugs

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — National drug policy director William J. Bennett is taking the campaign for the administration's $7.9 billion anti-drug plan to Capitol Hill, and he expects to succeed.

Bennett says he is heartened that much of the Democratic criticism heard thus far on the drug control strategy announced Tuesday night by President Bush has concerned money to pay for the proposal, not the basic tenets.

A number of congressional Democrats have said the program doesn't go far enough and that Bush should recommend a tax increase to pay for it instead of proposing to take money from other programs. The $7.9 billion sought is $2.2 billion above the 1989 budget authorization.

Bennett today was to face Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Joseph R. Biden Jr. — who said the Bush plan isn't "bold enough, but it's a good start" — in the first congressional hearing on the plan.

Bennett told a packed National Press Club audience Wednesday that Biden revealed "no substantive disagreements with the strategy" in his Democratic response to the Bush plan aired Tuesday night.

As for those who say the $7.9 billion is inadequate to fight the war on drugs, Bennett said, "I'm just not going to be all that receptive to criticism of the figure of $8 billion from people whose correct mark is $6 billion."

Bennett said the strategy, if pursued "consistently over time," will enable the country to win the war against drugs, but he cautioned that it won't happen quickly with any "Batman through the transom" flashy solutions.

The strategy, which Congress had directed Bennett to develop, calls for a law enforcement crackdown on all levels of drug trafficking, from drug kingpins overseas to casual users in America. It seeks a 53 percent increase in funding for treatment programs, a 25 percent increase in prevention efforts, and a vast expansion of the federal prison system to house drug offenders.

The strategy also calls for $261 million next year in military and law enforcement aid to Colombia, Peru and Bolivia, the three main cocaine-producing countries. The administration plans to offer those countries some $2 billion more over the next five years once they demonstrate solid efforts to cut down on drug trafficking.

Meanwhile, Bush on Wednesday visited the District of Columbia General Hospital's pediatrics ward and cradled one of about a dozen infants who were abandoned after birth by mothers addicted to drugs.

The babies, after being cured of their own drug dependencies, still must wait for months until foster care can be found for them.

Sen. Ted Stevens, R-Alaska, temporarily halted a Senate effort to bolster treatment programs by cutting funds for congressional mailings. The measure, proposed by Republicans and accepted by Democrats, would reduce the $80 million proposed for next year's congressional mail, transferring $45 million of it to a treatment program for pregnant women addicted to crack cocaine and other drugs.

A vote was blocked by Stevens, R-Alaska, who argued that such a cut would deprive Alaskans of an important source of news.

The American Civil Liberties Union said the drug strategy will compromise civil liberties and will be "counterproductive and cynical," shortchanging prevention and treatment programs while putting "overwhelming reliance on the criminal justice system."

Donald Fiedler, national director of the National Organization for the Reform of Marijuana Laws, said the program declares "war on at least 25 million fellow citizens who are leading productive lives but for their casual or regular use of marijuana."

Also, the Drug Enforcement Administration said drug agents have detected a sharp increase in cocaine prices in Miami over the past few weeks, but are not yet ready to say whether the Colombian government's crackdown on traffickers has disrupted the business.

The retail price of cocaine in South Florida has gone from an average of $11,000 to $16,000 per kilogram to about $20,000, based on sales of 5 to 15 kilograms, DEA spokesman Frank Shults said.

Thrifths' Fate Will Depend On Interpretation Of Rules

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Savings institutions representing 80 percent of the industry could fail new capital standards if regulators choose the strictest interpretation of legislation enacted last month.

Under one interpretation of the bill signed into law Aug. 9 by President Bush, about 1,400 of the nation's 2,700 solvent thrifths, representing $1 trillion in assets, or 80 percent of the industry, would fall short, regulators in the Office of Thrift Supervision said Wednesday.

However, under a more lenient reading of the law, only 600 institutions with about $500 billion in assets would miss the standard and be subject to regulatory sanctions, including restrictions on growth and government review of their business plans.

The key reform in the bill requires S&L owners to risk more of their own capital as a buffer between losses and government deposit insurance funds. However, S&L regulators said they were not sure exactly how tough the standard should be.

The problem, according to M. Danny Wall, director of the thrift office, is that the final bill was cobbled together from very different versions passed separately by the House and Senate.

"When you compromise widely divergent views, you don't necessarily come up with something that's clear and that's what we have here," he said.

One section of the bill — the section that got the most attention during congressional debate — establishes a new standard for "core" capital of 3 percent of loans and other assets.

However, the S&L bill also requires thrifths to meet capital standards "no less stringent" than those adopted for national banks. Currently, that is 5.5 percent.

Further complicating the matter is the fact that national bank capital standards will be overhauled by 1991 in a way that varies required capital depending on the riskiness of an institution's loans and other investments.

Regulators could impose very stringent standards on S&Ls, only to wind up having to write more lenient rules a year later when the new risk-adjusted bank standards for banks take effect. S&Ls generally fare better than banks under risk-adjusted rules because they concentrate heavily on mortgage lending, which is considered safer than commercial lending.

Regulators must resolve the dilemma by Nov. 7, when they're due to publish capital rules taking effect a month later. Before that, the Office of Thrift Supervision, which was once an independent agency called the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, must clear the new rules with the Treasury Department.

In deciding the issue, Wall said regulators are trying to figure out the intent of Congress when it passed the bill, but because different factions assigned different meanings to the same passages, that's not easy.

Rep. Henry B. Gonzalez, D-Texas, chairman of the House Banking Committee, said in a letter to Treasury Secretary Nicholas F. Brady that Congress intended the 3 percent standard to apply, not the 5.5 percent.

Robert Glauber, under secretary of the Treasury, said Gonzalez's letter was an important contribution to unearthing the problem.

But, he said, "a literal reading of the language of the bill leaves it open to a variety of interpretations. ... I don't think there's a particularly persuasive case for one interpretation or another."

Marcos Tax Case Goes To Trial

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MANILA, Philippines — A court today began hearing an $810 million lawsuit against Ferdinand Marcos based on the former president's tax returns.

It is the first case against Marcos that has gone to trial in the Philippines since he was ousted three years ago.

In all, the government has filed 35 civil suits since in 1987 to recover $100 billion that Marcos and 300 associates are accused of stealing during his 24 years in power. He was forced into exile in Hawaii after a popular-military uprising ousted him in February 1986.

Solicitor General Frank Chavez said he expects to call as many as 20 witnesses and hopes the trial will persuade courts in Switzerland and elsewhere to speed up proceedings to recover money Marcos allegedly invested abroad.

"This is the first real, significant step toward the recovery of ill-gotten wealth," Chavez said.

In the case, being heard in the nation's anti-graft court, the government is seeking $476 million in damages and recovery of up to $334 million in property Marcos and his wife, Imelda, allegedly purchased in New York.

Government lawyers said they will argue that Marcos and his wife owned properties worth far more than they could afford based on assets declared in income tax returns.

Assistant Solicitor General Romeo de la Cruz told the three-judge panel that Marcos' presidential annual salary totaled $71,000 for his nearly quarter-century in power. Mrs. Marcos earned $34,000 during nine years as minister of human settlements and governor of the Metro Manila Commission, de la Cruz said.

Bridge Comes Down

The Notre Dame bridge at Manchester, N.H., topples, then crashes into the Merrimack River on Wednesday. The 444-foot steel arched span, scheduled for demolition, was pulled down by two front-end loaders as an estimated 15,000 spectators watched from both sides of the river.

Price Support Changes Urged

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Congress must devise a smarter and better price support program if farmers are to widely adopt alternative methods that save the soil and use fewer chemicals, a National Research Council report said today.

Federal farm policies "have generally made a plentiful food supply a higher priority than protection" of the nation's soil and water resources, the report said.

Instead of supporting "environmentally benign" ways of producing food, the report said, government programs have worked against those alternative methods.

The report, "Alternative Agriculture," came after a three-year $625,000 study by a 17-member committee headed by John Pesek of Iowa State University. The council is an agency of the National Academies of Sciences and Engineering.

As used in the 450-page report, alternative agriculture is not a single system of farm production with a simple list of do's and don'ts. It is a generic term that includes a wide range of methodology and labels — organic, biological, low-input, regenerative, sustainable.

The Agriculture Department even invented its own acronym — LISA, for low-input, sustainable agriculture — in its bid to help farmers find lower-cost ways of producing crops and livestock while helping protect the environment.

Pesek, in the report's introduction, noted that the 1980s have been traumatic for thousands of farmers and rural communities caught in the financial crunch of falling crop prices and land values.

And the environmental consequences of farming have become more apparent, he said.

The Pilot Asked For Forgiveness

SERRA DO CACHIMBO, Brazil (AP) — Plane crash survivors who were stranded in the Amazon jungle for nearly two days said the pilot asked for their forgiveness and wished them luck as their jet crashed into dense vegetation.

"We were ready to die but the hand of God guided our descent," passenger Epaminondas de Sousa Chaves, 36, said Wednesday after Air force helicopters airlifted 41 survivors out of the jungle.

Their Varig airlines Boeing 737-200 crashed Sunday night, killing at least 10 of the 54 people aboard.

"It is incredible that we came out alive," said Regia Acevedo, 29, who was thrown from the plane with her husband, Raimundo.

Air Force spokesman Col. Jose Maria dos Santos told a news conference that two passengers died Wednesday and identified them as a man trapped in the wreckage and a woman who died on a rescue plane en route to Brasilia.

The aircraft disappeared Sunday night when the pilot reported problems with his navigational system and the plane strayed far off route.

Chaves said the aircraft ran out of fuel and went down in thick forest cover.

"With a calm voice the pilot asked us to forgive him, and told us to pray to God and wished us luck. All of a sudden the motors stopped and I don't know if 10 minutes went by, 15 or even a minute," Chaves said.

He said the plane "seemed to bounce" when it hit the top of the 100-foot trees, then smashed through the jungle cover in the northern part of the central-western Amazon state of Mato Grosso. Both wings were ripped from the plane but the fuselage was nearly intact.

The plane bore a 300-by-120-foot hole in the jungle but did not explode, Chavez said.

"It was as if a giant claw had scratched the body of the plane. First there was a deafening screech and then a silence, and then absolute darkness," Ms. Acevedo said.

Another passenger, Jose Maria Gadelha, said: "All of a sudden there was a flash of lightning. I lost consciousness, and when I woke up I was outside the plane and alive."

The air force found the plane Tuesday night after four survivors walked through the jungle and contacted authorities by ham radio.

On Wednesday morning rescue helicopters airlifted 41 people nearly 30 miles to a ranch near Sao Jose do Xingu, about 1,050 miles northwest of Rio de Janeiro, Santos said.

From the ranch, three twin-engine Bandeirante planes took the survivors to the mountain Serra do Cachimbo air base 185 miles northwest. There, the survivors let their emotions go and wept as they were greeted by rescue workers.

They later were flown to Brasilia, the capital, for care at the Brasilia Base Hospital, Santos said.

The pilot of plane did not speak with reporters upon arriving in Brasilia and airline officials declined further comment on what caused the crash.

The plane, purchased by Varig airlines in 1982, had strayed off course while on the last leg of a regularly scheduled flight between the southeastern city of Sao Paulo and Belem, 2,140 miles northwest of Rio at the mouth of the Amazon river.

Border Agent Killed In Smuggling Arrest

LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

FRESNO, Calif. — An undercover Border Patrol agent was shot to death and his partner was critically wounded early Wednesday as they tried to arrest four suspects involved in smuggling illegal aliens from Mexico, police said.

A police SWAT team surrounded a residential neighborhood near the shooting scene and captured the four suspects, one by one, with the last apprehended after dawn. Three of the suspects were held on suspicion of murder. The fourth, an informant who had tipped agents to the smuggling operation, was released.

Keith Connelly, 42, an 18-year veteran of the Border Patrol, died shortly after arriving at a hospital. Agent Ted Jordan, 42, a 17-year veteran, suffered a bullet wound to the chest and was in critical but stable condition following surgery.

Connelly and Jordan were Border Patrol special agents and members of a U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service anti-smuggling unit. The undercover unit was founded about 10 years ago and this was the first killing involving an undercover Border Patrol agent, an INS spokesman said.

The agents were posing as employers willing to pay cash in exchange for undocumented workers, said Alan Dweley, deputy chief Border Patrol agent.

An informant introduced the agents to the suspects, which included a woman, on Saturday. They set up a meeting for Tuesday night, when the exchange of cash for aliens was supposed to take place.

Connelly and Jordan met the suspects at 1:30 a.m. Wednesday, in the parking lot of a service station-convenience store in northeast Fresno. Two other Border Patrol agents were parked nearby as "backup," Dweley said.

"As the agents were in the process of making the arrests, things went sour," Dweley said. "The suspects began firing and both agents were shot."

The two backup agents exchanged fire with the suspects as they fled, two on foot and the others in a car, which they abandoned a few blocks away.

The three men and one woman arrested gave Southern California addresses, police said. All were being held in Fresno County Jail.

Deficits In Trade And Budget Sow Seeds Of Social Discontent In China

By Michael Weisskopf
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

BEIJING — Bulging trade and budget deficits in the first half of this year indicate worsening times for the Chinese economy, sowing the seeds of social unrest and possible new political challenges to the Communist regime, according to Western economists here.

Statistics reported to the National People's Congress last week showed domestic expenditures rising 36 percent faster than revenues and imports growing at a rate nearly 20 times faster than exports. Prices of consumer goods rose 25.5 percent between January and June, compared to inflation of 18.5 percent in 1988.

Describing the problems as "rather serious," Finance Minister Wang Bingqian told the congress, China's nominal parliament, that the economic retrenchment policies initiated a year ago to correct the imbalances will continue for another three years.

Foreign specialists said the remedies will be painful and could ignite public anger against a regime already blamed for inflation, graft and the brutal suppression of demonstrations for democracy last spring. Among the possible social costs of such remedies are unemployment, mandatory purchases of government bonds and cuts in the supply of imported consumer goods.

"It's a pretty formidable bunch of problems," said one Western economic analyst. "I see real headaches ahead for the government."

Foreign economists said this year's budget deficit is expected to grow wider than earlier projections of $2.4 billion because of the precipitous drop in foreign receipts — investment, loans and tourist dollars — after the June 3-4 military assault on protesters in Beijing.

To reduce the budget deficit, the government plans further cuts in large construction projects, such as new housing, which have sopped up urban unemployment in recent years.

Specialists said the cuts could deepen China's severe unemployment problem, threatening the jobs of millions of peasants who have streamed into cities for construction work and closing off opportunities for the 10 million new entrants into the urban work force every year.

Industrial output grew at a rate of 10.6 percent in the first seven months of this year, compared to 16.9 percent in the same period in 1988 — a slowdown in growth that could further fuel unemployment, said Western economists.

With poor economic performances from the state-run enterprises that are responsible for three-quarters of China's revenues, the government may have no choice but to float bonds and press workers to buy them.

Beijing has raised money in that fashion every year since 1985, asking factories effectively to force employees to purchase bonds by appealing to their patriotism. Sometimes the price of bonds have simply been deducted from a week's paycheck. The practice is unpopular because the $15 government bonds, redeemable in three-to-five years, pay interest at significantly lower rates than three-year bank deposits.

But Western experts said that without the forced bond sales, the government may not have enough money to pay farmers for agricultural goods, risking an even bigger political problem.

Cuba Will Get U.S. TV

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The United States is planning to use what may be the ultimate weapon against Fidel Castro's Cuba: television.

By the end of the year, a million or more Soviet-made TV sets are expected to tune in six hours a day, seven days a week to American-made news programs and the best reruns Hollywood has to offer courtesy of the U.S. Information Agency. That programming includes "Dynasty," "Days of Our Lives" and pro bowling.

Proponents say Cubans will flock to their sets, as they apparently did with Radio Marti, and take their first uncensored look at the outside world in 30 years.

Latinos Say U.S. Exam Too Difficult

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The overwhelming majority of Latino immigrants say they intend to stay in the United States, but many say they've delayed applying for citizenship because the exam is too difficult, a survey released today said.

"These findings suggest that one effective method to increase U.S. citizenship among Latino immigrants would be education and outreach activities to demystify the naturalization process," the National Association of Latino Elected and Appointed Officials said.

In a release announcing results of the telephone survey of 1,635 immigrants in eight states, the association said such activities should also be designed to "allay fears about the difficulty of the citizenship examination." The average European and Asian immigrant waits seven to eight years before naturalizing, but Hispanic immigrants wait an average of 14 to 15 years, the association said.

However, once Latino immigrants take the exam, the survey said, most pass and don't find it difficult.

The Latino group said its survey also showed that Hispanic immigrants are more politically active than previously believed.

In light of the survey's findings, many of our society's assumptions about Latino immigrants will need to be re-examined," the group said.

"Foremost among these assumptions is the perception that Latino immigrants are here temporarily and are planning to return to their homelands upon accumulation of savings or upon retirement."

Ninety-eight percent of those interviewed said they wanted to make the United States their permanent home, and 79 percent said life in the United States is better than in their native country.

Dentist Joins Firm

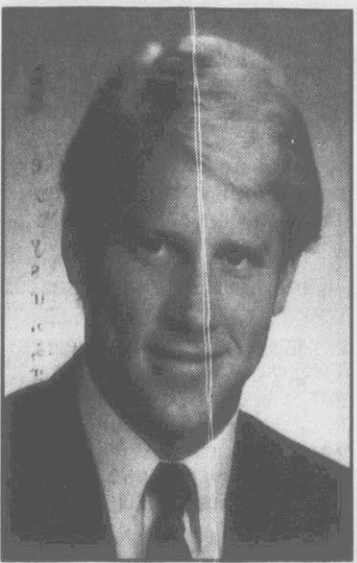

Dr. M.W. Aldridge announced the association of Dr. Brian R. Summers at his dentistry offices at 108 Oakmont Drive.

Born and raised in Michigan, Summers received an associate of arts degree in 1980 from New Mexico Military Institute, where he was commissioned a second lieutenant and was recognized as a distinguished military graduate. He received a bachelor's degree in 1983 from Northern Michigan University and a degree in dentistry in 1987 from Baylor College. He received a master's degree in dentistry from Baylor earlier this year.

Summers was a clinical instructor in the department of periodontics of the Baylor College of Dentistry and maintained a dental practice in Dallas during the evenings and weekends from 1987 to 1989.

He is a member of the American Dental Association, the Southwest Society of Periodontics and the American Academy of Periodontology.

Summers and his wife, Amy, have one daughter.

School-Use Policy Considered

By Charles Hoskinson
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Pitt County school officials hope a new policy on the use of facilities will clear up last year's problems with scheduling and use of schools by religious groups.

Under the new policy, presented to the county Board of Education in August, groups that want to use a school facility must wait until 30 days before the scheduled event before receiving final approval. This will give schools more flexibility to schedule school events which always have priority, according to community schools director Alice Keene.

The school system does not want to be locked into any contracts that schedule use of the facilities too far in advance because they may interfere with regular school activities, Ms. Keene said. "In a couple of situations we've run into problems with the school schedule needing to change," she said.

The new policy also clarifies limits on the use of schools by religious groups. These groups may use school facilities for one-time special events, or emergency use for up to six months, Ms. Keene said. However, long-term use of a school for religious services will not be allowed.

"We allow religious organizations to use the schools," she said. "We are not into regular church services held in school facilities on a regular, continuing basis."

The board is expected to approve the policy when it meets Monday.

Student Accepted

Benjamin Meggs, the son of William and Susan Meggs, has been accepted into the North Carolina School of the Arts in Winston-Salem to study the saxophone.

Meggs, 15, would have been in the 10th grade at J.H. Rose High School. Last year, Meggs performed with the Rose High School Jazz Ensemble and soloed on the tenor saxophone.

Town Meeting

The town of Grimesland will hold its regular board meeting at 7 p.m. Tuesday in the Town Hall on Pitt Street.

Auditions Scheduled

Auditions for the musical "Godspell" will be conducted Sunday at 3 p.m. and Monday at 7:30 p.m. by the Ayden Theater Workshop.

The auditions will be held in the Ayden-Grifton High School auditorium. For further information, call 746-2560.

Church Event

The Faith Fellowship Choir and the Tucker family of Portsmouth, Va., will appear at Triumph Missionary Baptist Church, Route 3, Washington, N.C., Sunday at 4:30 p.m.

Jim, left, and Tammy Bakker arrive at courthouse today with lawyer George T. Davis

Bakker Trial Under Way Again

ships between 1984 and 1987.

Bakker's fraud and conspiracy trial resumed Wednesday after a government psychiatrist testified that Bakker suffered a "panic attack" last week but now has the strength to go on. Bakker was taken to the Federal Correctional Institution at Butner for evaluation after his lawyers reported last Thursday that he was hallucinating and cowering on the floor of his attorney's office.

"He is not going crazy," Dr. Sally Johnson, head of the psychiatric team at Butner which evaluated Bakker, testified out of the jury's presence Wednesday. "He has no hidden mental illness. The stress that he's feeling is normal. I can't rule it out that it won't happen again, but I can't rule it in either."

Bakker appeared to be more composed during today's testimony, taking notes and talking with his attorneys as witnesses testified.

William Maybrey, the general manager of Heritage Grand Hotel from April 1984 to December 1985, said the management contract with Brock Hotel Corp. required that 50 percent of the 500 rooms at the hotel be set aside for lifetime partners.

Brock, which was Maybrey's employer, made its money from the rooms rented out to the public.

"I didn't know of any hotel that was run like that," Maybrey testified. "It was a first, a unique animal."

Maybrey said Bakker was a "hands-on" owner after the hotel opened in December 1984, even down to helping design the uniforms worn by staff members.

"Initially, he was very involved," Maybrey said. "He wanted a quality product and he wanted it to be a five-star hotel."

He said PTL had agreed to keep a $300,000 balance in an operating account for the hotel, but he warned Bakker in two memos in 1985 that the account was at least $195,000 short of the requirement. Brock had to pay employees out of its own funds at one point because of the cash shortages, Maybrey testified.

He said Richard Dortch, Bakker's second-in-command, told him not to worry about the cash-flow problems, and Bakker kept insisting on improved service, including a $15,000 chandelier for a hotel hallway and more staffers to shorten the line of people waiting for reservations.

"It was difficult to balance the level of services with the cash flow problems we were experiencing," said Maybrey, who now manages a hotel in Indianapolis.

Former PTL Vice President Steve Nelson, the witness whose fainting episode on the stand last week was credited by doctors as triggering Bakker's breakdown, returned to the stand Wednesday.

Breakfast

"It was a good time to do that because of the highway bill. But the BEP will be boosted next year to over $180 million."

The highway bill was another issue that the legislators discussed today.

"Eastern North Carolina will be a major winner in terms of total road miles, Taft said. "This project is an extraordinary undertaking and it will mean a lot to this county."

The $9.1 billion program will resurface all roads that carry more than 50 cars a day, will make U.S. 17 a four-lane road through North Carolina and will help build three major four-lane roads to the coast, Taft said.

Rogers said a tax increase other than the one already implemented on gasoline is unlikely, but legislators will not know for certain for at least two years, when the impact on the state's General Fund can be determined.

"We have always put the money from the new car sales tax into the General Fund," Rogers said. "After two years we will move that money to the highway fund."

If too much money is lost from the General Fund, then the legislators will see if an increase in sales tax or an additional tax, like a beer tax is needed, Rogers said.

Martin said it does not seem likely that a tax increase will be needed because of the increased gas tax and the higher levy on new cars.

On other tax issues, the legislators were divided on how the new tax exemption law will affect middle and upper income families. Under the new law, over 700,000 low income families will be dropped off of the tax roll, Rogers said.

"I think probably overall it will be good for the state," he added.

The program is designed to help families that make under $40,000 a year, said Warren. A family of four making $12,000 a year in North Carolina pays the second highest tax in the nation, he added, and the tax exemption law will change that.

However, Martin disagreed, contending the tax burden will fall most heavily on the two-income families that just miss the $40,000 cutoff.

Kirkland Dies

RALEIGH (AP) — James Bryant Kirkland, dean emeritus of the North Carolina State University College of Education and Psychology, died Tuesday after apparently drowning in a pool in Pine Knoll Shores. He was 85.

From 1948 to 1969, Kirkland served as dean of the then-school of education. During his tenure as dean, the faculty grew from 12 members in three departments to 77 members in six departments. He retired in 1972 as a professor of education.

Encounters With Dolphins New Rage Or Outrage?

'Swim-With' Programs Generate Enthusiasm And Cause Controversy

By Lynn Smith
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

WAIKOLOA, Hawaii — On Cheryl Burton's list of fantasy adventures, swimming with dolphins ranked somewhere between visiting Angkor Wat and making love among the pyramids.

But after two weeks at the Hyatt Regency Waikoloa, Burton still had not been picked for the hotel's daily Dolphin Encounter, a 30-minute experience in which a half dozen guests are allowed to join six captive dolphins in the Hyatt's lagoon. So Burton became more methodical in her quest to have her name drawn in the hotel's daily Dolphin Encounter Lottery, from which approximately 30 guests a day are selected to swim with the hotel dolphins.

The 39-year-old San Francisco financial marketer admits she tried offering $250 bribes to hotel employees and lottery winners, and was ready to go up to $500. But then a winner didn't show, and Burton found herself in the lagoon, nuzzling a 300-pound animal with a permanent grin.

Burton is just one of thousands of dolphin enthusiasts flocking to the Hyatt's Dolphin Quest Program and to other centers in Florida, eager, sometimes desperate, to swim with dolphins for reasons ranging from the desire for an unusual vacation to a search for self-improvement and spiritual awareness.

As a result of the Hyatt's success, resort hotels from Las Vegas, Nev., to Washington, D.C., are scrambling to open their own dolphin lagoons.

But as fascination with the legendary, large-brained mammals continues to grow, so does the controversy over whether such encounters are good for either the dolphins or people, and whether they should be allowed at all.

A federal agency that handles marine-mammal permits is investigating the deaths of two dolphins at the Hyatt; there are unconfirmed reports of injuries elsewhere, and some experts have warned that diseases could be transferred back and forth between the swimmer and the dolphin.

Environmentalists complain that such swim-with-dolphin programs remove the highly social dolphins from their diminishing families and force them to interact with humans as a merchandising tool.

All this, they say, is contrary to the purpose of the federal Marine Mammal Protection Act, which requires bona fide educational benefits from the capture and display of dolphins.

"Our major concern with the swim-with programs is that they are proliferating to facilities that are not educational facilities. They are hotels," said Lesley Scheele, small cetaceans coordinator for Greenpeace International, based in Fort Lauderdale, Fla.

Captive dolphins do not breed well, Scheele said, adding that the continued capture and exploitation of the water-dwelling mammals could seriously impact their populations at sea. Responding to complaints as well as the growing number of requests to operate dolphin swim centers, the National Marine Fisheries Service now is scrutinizing the programs run by Dolphin Quest and three other facilities. Those concerns also have prompted the agency to review provisions of the 1972 Marine Mammal Protection Act for the first time in 15 years.

The service will decide by the end of the year whether or how to further regulate existing dolphin display or swim permits, which expire Dec. 31.

The Dolphin Quest Program at the Hyatt, a fantasy-themed hotel on the Kohala coast, is the latest and perhaps most successful use of dolphins as a tourist attraction.

When the hotel opened last November, the half-hour, $55 dolphin encounters were booked three months in advance by guests who were making their hotel reservations around the dolphins' availability. Management switched to a first-come, first-served system with 48 hours' notice, but dolphin encounter slots were usually booked 20 minutes after telephone lines opened. Eventually, the lottery system was installed for applicants, who include islanders and guests of neighboring hotels.

"Every hotel in Hawaii wants to put a dolphin in the swimming pool for their guests," said Georgia Cranmore, an ecologist with the National Marine Fisheries Service.

In addition to the Hyatt, the service has issued permits to Dolphins Plus, Dolphin Research Center and Theater of the Sea in the Florida Keys. Another, the Zoovet Center, operates a swim program at Hawk's Cay Resort in Florida while its permit is pending. And outside U.S. jurisdiction, the Dolphin Experience at the International Underwater Explorers Society on Grand Bahama Island also operates a dolphin swim program.

Meanwhile, the federal government is investigating as yet unfirmed reports of injuries to humans in the swim-with-dolphin lagoons, as well as the cleanliness of the pools and the propriety of flying dolphins thousands of miles to be used for encounters.

The eight Atlantic bottlenose dolphins in the Hyatt lagoon were captured in the Gulf of Mexico by Dolphin Quest operators, who trained them to accept petting as well as fish as rewards for good behavior before flying them to Hawaii.

Of the dozens of species of dolphins, Atlantic bottlenose are preferred because they do not migrate and are more comfortable in shallow waters, unlike the Pacific bottlenose and spinner dolphins native to the seas in the Hawaiian Islands, said Rae Stone, Dolphin Quest owner and veterinarian.

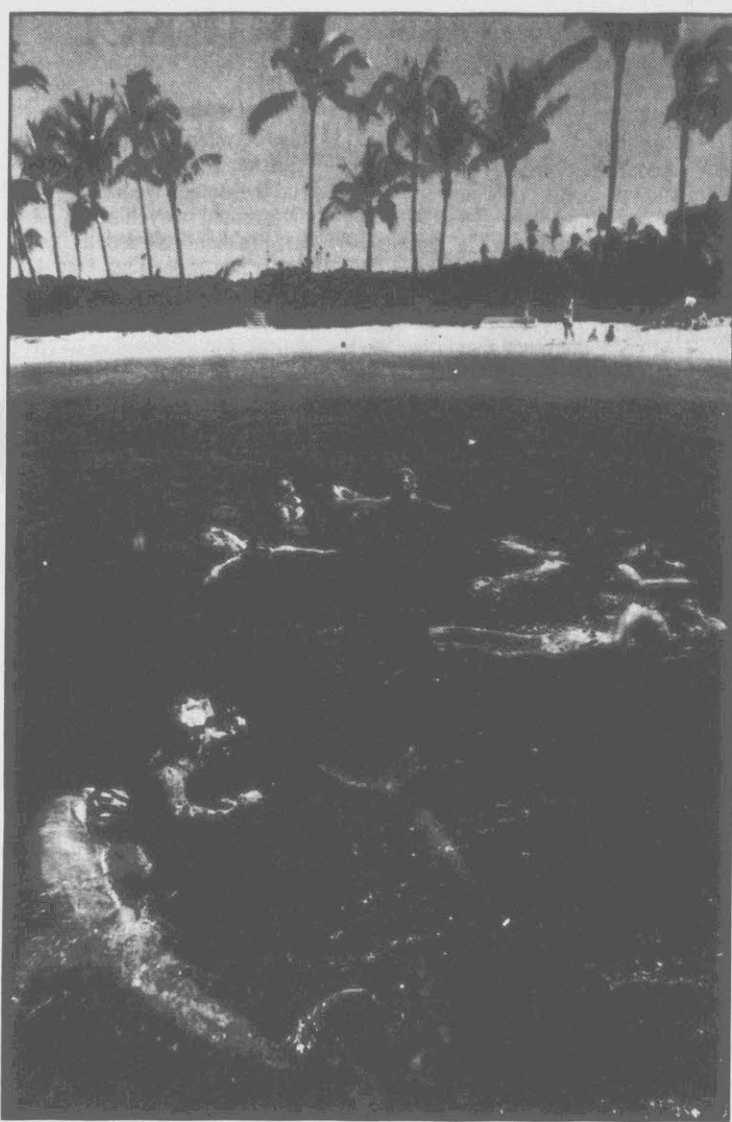

Trainers insist the dolphins are not forced to interact with humans. If the captive dolphins did not like being petted and played with by strangers all day long, "they wouldn't do it," Dolphin Quest training manager Jo Hay said. There is a free zone in the 35,000-square-foot lagoon where people are not allowed, but the dolphins choose not to use it, she said. Security guards watch the lagoon 24 hours a day to prevent people from jumping in with them.

Still, if dolphins do not voluntarily swim from their holding tank to the open lagoon where humans are waiting for them, a net is used to force them out. "They are like children. They'll test you — like saying, 'Do I really have to do this?' We say, 'Yes, you do,'" Stone said.

"Once they're out in the open lagoon, it is totally voluntary," she said. "They're not fed during that portion."

(Trainers at the Dolphin Experience in the Grand Bahamas and Dolphins Plus in Key Largo, Fla., said that they allow some dolphins to leave their pens every day for the open ocean. Territorial and aware of their food source, they always return, spokesmen said. The dolphins at the Hyatt also have been exposed to the open sea, which is connected to the lagoon, but showed no interest, according to trainers.)

Once in the Hyatt lagoon with humans, Stone said, dolphins are protected in a variety of ways: required life vests prevent swimmers from chasing the dolphins, and dorsal fin "rides" are forbidden. Swimmers are told not to touch the dolphins' blowholes. They are encouraged to stroke the dolphins' skins, and to act enthusiastic if they want the dolphins to play with them with hoops and balls.

Stone insists that Dolphin Quest, which raises research funds and holds field trips for local school children, is more educational than entertaining and helps create future conservationists by hands-on contact with the mammals. Spokesmen for Greenpeace, Hawaii and the West Hawaii Humane Society agree that the program is well-run.

But ecologist Cranmore said,

"Obviously a hotel can never primarily provide marine mammal education; let's face it."

On two separate mornings in March and April, Dolphin Quest trainers were shocked to discover two previously healthy dolphins dead at the bottom of the 20-foot-deep lagoon.

Veterinarian-owners Stone and Jay Sweeney performed a necropsy, concluding that the dolphins died as a result of eating Hawaiian reef fish that swam into the lagoon. The reef fish apparently had been poisoned by algae growing along the Kona coast, a common problem, state health officials said.

"It's unfortunate these two animals were eating on the side,"

At Hawaii's Hyatt Regency Waikoloa, visitors 'get acquainted' with dolphins at close range in the hotel's lagoon. Environmentalists are criticizing the encounters, saying that the mammals are being used as merchandising tools.

said Hokama Yoshitsugi, an independent investigator and professor of pathology at the University of Hawaii who still is trying to pinpoint the precise biotoxin responsible.

"The thing that disturbs me is this: Whatever you feed can be recycled. After all, they have to go to the bathroom, and you had eight of them. They may be internally polluting themselves and the algae may be picking it up."

After the deaths, the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee of the U.S. House of Representatives asked the Fisheries Service to suspend the Dolphin Quest permit. "However, at the moment, we don't have any indication the deaths were related to the swim program," Cranmore said.

Some also worry about whether human swimmers and dolphins may transmit diseases to one another.

Dolphin Quest owner-veterinarian Sweeney has written in published journals that humans are susceptible to a bacterial skin disease known as "fish handler's disease" that may enter the body through small cuts or abrasions. While it commonly runs its course within a few weeks, the bacteria occasionally spreads to the heart, where it can cause a life-threatening disease called endocarditis, according to Sweeney.

Laboratory tests also have shown wheezing and coughing dolphins to be infected with human viruses, he said. While such infection is rare, "It also leaves open the reverse potential of human infection back from the affected dolphins," he said.

All Shoppers Must Face The Valley Of Temptation

It's a scenario right out of Stephen King or Indiana Jones. You are driving a shopping cart with a kid or two attached to it like magnets to the refrigerator when you come to stop at the checkout.

But WAIT! The woman in front of you has bought enough food to feed the Third World. She has coupons sewed in the lining of her coat. She has a check that is drawn on a bank in Cuba. There is a price-check being pursued by a stock boy who can't find his way out of bed. You cannot move forward. You try to back up your cart, but someone is behind you. You are trapped in the dreaded Valley of Temptation!

To the right of you is Sugar City; to the left is Tabloid Alley. You are surrounded by balloons, bubble gum, paperbacks, trial sizes of anything, razor blades, nose drops, TV Guide, breath mints, taco chips and ballpoint pens.

On cue, the children in the cart come alive. Little fingers work the rows of goodies like scissors. It becomes a race against the odds. If they can get the packages to their mouths and slobber on them before you can slap their hands, they win. You have to pay for them.

This is unofficial, but every second you are in limbo in the Valley of Temptation, you can add $2 to your bill. Not only are children given to buyers' frenzy, but you are incapable of turning your eyes away from the headlines that promise to show you pictures of Donna Mills without eye makeup and pigs who jog. Decisions ... Can your body go for an entire day without a Roseanne Barr gossip fix or will it go into shock? Is it true that Morton Downey Jr. is teaming up with Imelda Marcos to sing at the Sahara in Vegas? It's all a matter of how much you want to pay to feed your inquiring mind.

The Valley of Temptation has always been a real boon for supermarkets. Children who scream themselves into a coma are responsible for a large slice of their revenue. There are no solutions in sight. A supermarket chain in Florida has instituted a new self-service policy in which there is no waiting. The customer empties her own cart, runs her own groceries over the scanner, and pays the tab while a bag boy sacks them up and takes them to her car.

But that still leaves a child alone and laminated between all those impulse items. Sometimes life has no detours.

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market turned upward today, rebounding from Wednesday's broad decline.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials climbed 6.84 to 2,726.63 in the first half hour of trading.

Gainers outnumbered losers by about 9 to 5 in the early tally of New York Stock Exchange-listed issues, with 603 up, 352 down and 545 unchanged.

Volume on the Big Board came to 24.07 million shares as of 10 a.m. on Wall Street.

Analysts said traders had been encouraged to see the market stabilize in late trading Wednesday after an early selloff.

They also noted a positive response to a strong showing by the dollar in foreign exchange today.

In the last few days a debate has heated up on Wall Street over whether stocks are due for a pullback after their sharp runup to record highs this summer.

The optimists argue, however, that the market's rise has not yet produced the excesses of speculation and exuberance that typically occur when prices are peaking out.

Greene
 Mr. William Henry Greene Sr., 74, of Route 1, Dover, died Sunday in Craven Regional Medical Center in New Bern.

His funeral will be conducted at 3 p.m. Saturday in St. Edwards Free Will Baptist Church in Fort Barnwell by Elder William Waters. Burial will be in the Greene Family Cemetery at Dover.

Mr. Greene was born in Beaufort County, but lived most of his life in Craven County. He attended the Craven County schools and was a member of St. Edwards Church. He was a retired employee of Kinston Tire Co.

Surviving are three sons, James O'Neil Greene of Brooklyn, N.Y., John Samuel Greene of Virginia Beach, Va., and William H. Greene of South Carolina; three daughters, Marjorie Williams of the home, Ida Ruth Franks of Kinston and Nancy Tootle of Morehead City; 24 grandchildren, and 23 great-grandchildren.

The body will be at St. Edwards Church in Fort Barnwell from 6:30 p.m. to 8:30 p.m. Friday. The family will receive friends at the church from 7 p.m. to 8 p.m. Friday. At other times the family will be at the home.

Arrangements are being handled by Norcott and Company Funeral Home of Ayden.

Langley
 Mrs. Magnolia Andrews Langley of 1312 B. Van Dyke St. died Monday at Pitt County Memorial Hospital.

Her funeral will be conducted Saturday at 4 p.m. at the Norcott Chapel of Loving Memories by the Rev. James Crandal. Burial will be at Greenwood Cemetery.

U.S. Extradites Colombian

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ATLANTA — A reputed money-launderer for the Medellin cocaine cartel arrived in the United States under heavy guard today at a small suburban airport, becoming the first person extradited from Colombia in the recent drug crackdown.

Eduardo Martinez Romero, who is accused of helping the drug cartel launder $1.2 billion, left Bogota aboard a Drug Enforcement Administration plane on Wednesday night, federal officials said.

Atlanta said the plane landed under tight security at Charlie Brown Airport, a small, county-run airport used by private planes. It is just outside Atlanta. Martinez was whisked away in a helicopter.

Martinez was being held at the federal courthouse for a hearing later in the day, Barr said.

He was arrested during the first weekend after Colombian President Virgilio Barco launched a crackdown on drug traffickers triggered by the Aug. 18 assassination of leading presidential candidate Luis Carlos Galan, an outspoken foe of the drug trade.

The Bogota newspaper El Tiempo quoted Martinez after his arrest as saying he was innocent.

"At no time have I had links to the Medellin cartel and I don't know any of its members," he said.

In the emergency measures imposed by Barco was a reinstatement of the extradition agreement with the United States that had been thrown out by the Colombian Supreme Court in 1987.

Open Your World Learn To Read

Our world is full of exciting people and places just waiting to be discovered. But many people are trapped in another world, a world of illiteracy. In Pitt County 1 out of every 4 adults do not have the reading skills necessary to fulfill their own needs as family, community members, citizens, consumers or employees.

There is no single reason, no one cause on which to place the blame. Many didn't receive the individual help they needed in school. Many left school to earn a living. Others came to America from foreign lands. Regardless of their reasons, illiteracy hurts us all.

Adult non-readers do not need pity, but do need help to take the first step toward reaching their potential. You can provide that help, by teaching someone to read and opening up the world.

Robinson Ready To Take Field

Senior Anxious To Hit Opponent

By Tom Morris
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

When East Carolina safety Junior Robinson heard Southern Mississippi had knocked off Florida State last Saturday, he knew he was ready for the football season to begin.

After all, ECU was originally supposed to open the season Sept. 2 in Hattiesburg against the Golden Eagles.

The date, though, was switched when USM had a chance to play FSU in Jacksonville, Fla., on national television.

USM's 30-26 upset win over the Seminoles got Robinson's competitive juices flowing. But it also left him with mixed emotions because ECU's home opener against Bowling Green was still seven days away.

"It was tough knowing that we were supposed to open up with Southern Miss and that was pushed off to the last game (Nov. 25)," Robinson said. "The fellas are really ready to play, but that enabled us to get some more practice in."

"It's always good to see a team knock off another team. It gives your players the attitude they can win anytime they hit the field. "By them beating Florida State, that enabled us to know we can win every time we hit the field. Plus it enabled us to work harder because we know we got both of them coming up on the schedule. We can't go out there with the wrong attitude."

Robinson, a senior from High Point who has started in the secondary since his sophomore season, is ready to go after almost a month of pre-season practices.

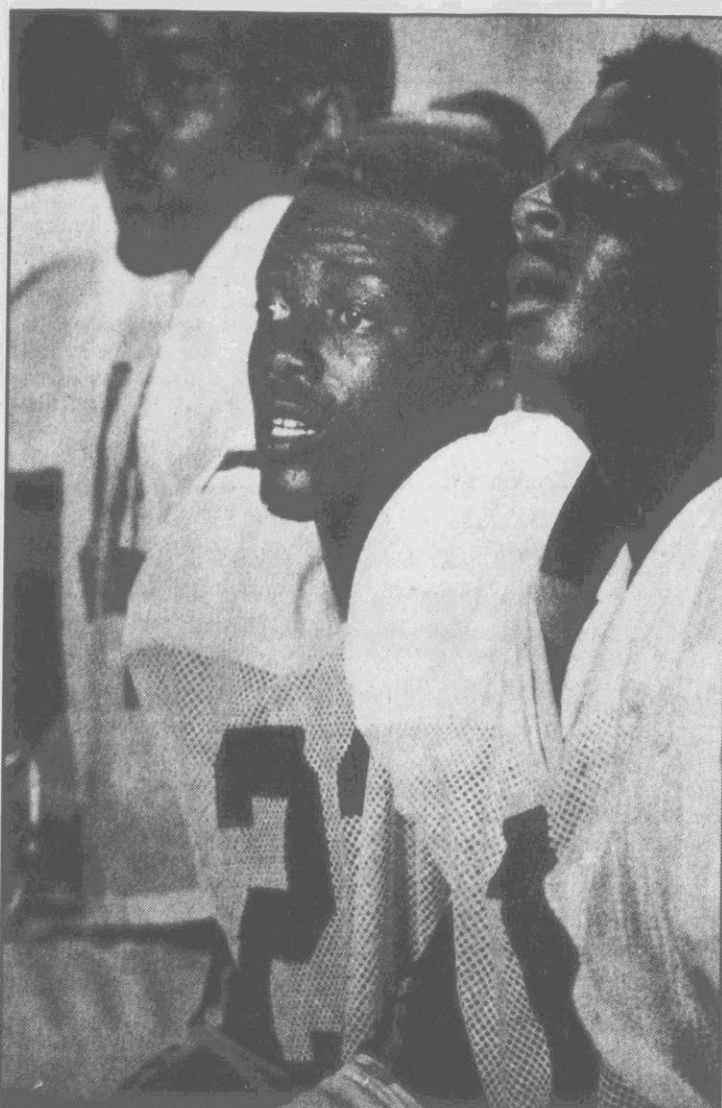

After all, how many times can you hit your own teammates. Robinson, for one, is ready to unload on someone new.

"I'm very, very anxious," he said. "I've been ready to play ever since last week. But the time has come now. I believe when the lights come on in Ficklen we'll be ready to go."

ECU is in its first year under new coach Bill Lewis and is going up against an opponent the Pirates haven't played in quite a while. The last time, ECU took on Bowling Green was 1974, when the Pirates earned a 24-6 win.

Neither team set the collegiate football world on fire last year, as ECU finished 3-8 while the Falcons finished 2-8-1.

Bowling Green Seeks Reversal

Veteran Falcon Team Comes Here

By Woody Peele
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Like East Carolina, Bowling Green is out to try and turn its fortunes around. Like the Pirates, the Falcons have a number of veterans back on both their offense and defense. And, like the Pirates, both are going to depend to a large extent on the aerial attack to get the job done.

East Carolina and Bowling Green will open the 1989 football season in Ficklen Stadium Saturday at 7 p.m., both hoping to kick off the year with a victory.

The Falcons come into the 1989 campaign following three straight losing seasons. Bowling Green's last winning year was in 1985 when the Falcons were 11-1, won the Mid-American Conference title, losing only to Fresno State in the California Bowl.

Since then, however, their fortunes have turned downward. In 1986 and '87, the Falcons were 5-6, and last season, posted a 2-8-1 record, their worst since 1953 when they were 1-8.

But, the potential is there for the turnaround. Bowling Green returns eight starters on offense and seven on defense, and the true nucleus is there.

Key among the returning players are quarterback Rick Dackin and three of his top receivers, split end Reggie Thornton, flanker Ronald Heard and tight end Kyle Hockman, who combined for 150 of the 204 completed passes last season.

Dackin, however, did not play that much last year, missing the last six games of the year with a broken wrist. Starting for the fourth straight year, Dackin has passed for over 4,200 yards, despite missing over half last year. All-MAC as a sophomore, he ranks in Bowling Green's top four in pass attempts (679), completions (376), yards (4,183), percentage (.554) and touchdowns (18). On the other side of the coin, he also ranks among those with the most interceptions against him with 33.

Thornton has 108 career catches for 1,586 yards and nine touchdowns, while Heard has 88 for 1,575 yards and nine scores. Hockman has caught 70 passes for 730 yards, but hasn't had a touchdown reception as yet. Hockman originally started his collegiate career at North Carolina State University, transferring to

Becker Crushes Noah In Quarters

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Living on borrowed tennis time, Boris Becker is turning the often unforgiving hardcourts of Flushing Meadow into a private playground.

It was in the first week of the U.S. Open that the second-seeded Becker stared into the abyss of elimination, faced with two match points against somebody named Derrick Rostagno. He survived the crisis, winning in five sets, and now his game is reaching the kind of crescendo he usually reserves for the grass courts of Wimbledon.

Becker dominated Yannick Noah 6-3, 6-3, 6-2 in the quarterfinals Wednesday night, a thrashing that was thorough and convincing.

Certainly, Noah was convinced. "His serve was much too fast for me," he said. "There was no way I could return. His first was pretty hard and his second was very high. I just had trouble through the whole match."

"It was much easier than I expected," Becker said. "I expected to lose a set, maybe two."

But his booming serve made the lime green tennis balls seem like they were being launched by a bazooka and kept Becker in charge. He broke Noah early in every set and just cruised after that.

"It was probably my most consistent, my best match ever here," the three-time Wimbledon champ said. "Wimbledon is the tournament for me and always will be. But if I win this tournament, I wouldn't mind at all."

The victory moved Becker into the semifinals against No. 14 seed Aaron Krickstein, who advanced when cramps forced Jay Berger to retire in the fourth set of their match.

Krickstein was leading 3-6, 6-4, 6-2 when Berger began moving in slow motion, his left leg stiff from cramps.

"I thought that something was wrong because in the second set he began playing a few loose games," Krickstein said. "I felt the longer the match, the better off I'd be. I didn't think he'd cramp up like that."

With Berger in obvious trouble, the crowd got behind the No. 11 seed, urging him on.

"I don't think a lot of the people know the rules exactly," Krickstein said. "A cramp isn't an injury, so a player can't take an injury timeout. He's got to play through it. I wasn't even going to serve. I was going to wait it out, but the guy gave him the code violation. Jay said he was ready. I served. What was I going to do? I'm trying to win the match."

Berger said nervousness and tension had caused his problem.

"I thought I did the right thing preparing. ... I had a lack of the right minerals and I was burning off a lot of energy," he said. "It would have been stupid to continue because, physically, I could have hurt myself and there was no chance of winning."

"Obviously, you don't want to win a match like that," Krickstein said. "I would have rather won straight out. I've had some bad luck in my career, so I'll take anything I can get right now."

On the women's side, defending champion and top-seeded Steffi Graf made fast work of No. 8 Helena Sukova, dispatching her 6-1, 6-1 in just 44 minutes, and Gabriela Sabatini, seeded third, ousted No. 6 Arantxa Sanchez Vicario 3-6, 6-4, 6-1.

State Preparing NCAA Response

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — Officials at North Carolina State University are preparing a response to a NCAA report that alleges rules were broken in the school's athletic department.

N.C. State Chancellor Bruce Poulton said the university will prepare a response to the NCAA Committee on Infractions, which meets in November and is expected then to determine what sanctions will be placed on the Wolfpack program.

"If they decide we're guilty of a major violation," Poulton said, "we could be put on probation for one or two years. If they decide our transgressions are minor, there would be lesser sanctions."

The National Collegiate Athletic Association's report says that basketball players sold complimentary basketball tickets and shoes, received discounts not available to other students and accepted free food and lodging from athletic boosters.

South Carolina's basketball program was found guilty of similar violations in March 1987 and was placed on two years probation, which included a ban on postseason play for one year but no restrictions in television appearances or scholarships.

If former players are found to have committed a violation, Poulton said, the university would have to return to the NCAA any money it had won in post-season tournaments in which those players competed.

The report was released to reporters by school officials Wednesday with the names of players blacked out.

N.C. State head basketball coach Jim Valvano said he did not know players were selling tickets and shoes, but said he could understand why they would.

"If you don't have any money ... and you only get room, board, books, tuition and fees, what do you do? ... How do you go home for the holidays? How do you buy a birthday present? ... So when someone said 'Why would a kid sell a ticket?' I assume the answer is — for the money," Valvano said. "Now does that make it right? I didn't say that, no. It's a violation ..."

Valvano said he was ready to suffer any penalties the NCAA handed down.

"I want to assure you we are taking these as very serious matters," Poulton said at a news conference. But he said he was pleased that many other more serious matters hinted at in the book "Personal Fouls" had not been substantiated.

"There's nothing in what the NCAA has been able to uncover that led them to inquire ... into changing of grades, millions of dollars of secret money, gifts of automobiles, secret drug tests et cetera," he said.

It would take a major violation for N.C. State to face probation or limits on post-season play, Poulton said. But he added, "If, indeed, we had a situation on our hands where the students got money for tickets, then I think they would consider that as a major violation."

Poulton said the continuing investigation would not affect Valvano unless there is evidence he knew of violations in his program. Valvano agreed to step down as athletic director following a report by University of North Carolina President C.D. Spangler that there were some academic irregularities in the Wolfpack program, but he has vowed

North Pitt Plays Host To Conley

Maurice Hines Questionable As Rampants Entertain Eastern Wayne

By Mike Grizzard
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

D.H. Conley has faced two extremes in the early portion of the 1989 football season.

In week one, the Vikings were dominated along the line of scrimmage by 2-A power Clayton and fell 19-6. Last week, Conley turned the tables and completely dismantled a young Ayden-Grifton squad 48-6.

Was it simply a difference in the opponents or did the Vikings step up their play a notch. DHC coach Steve Craft, whose team travels to North Pitt Friday night at 8, says it was combination.

"We played much better the second week than we did the first week," Craft said. "These kids have got a little character about them. They came back and worked hard and had a good week of practice — not a great week — but they got accomplished what they had to accomplish to go out and win."

"We're still a long ways from being a decent football team in our estimation but we made strides in that direction."

Meanwhile, North Pitt has been the victim of a pair of teams ranked in their respective classification. West Craven, ranked 10th in the 3-A ranks, eased past the Panthers 27-13 in the season-opener while North Edgecombe, ranked sixth in the

Runners Toil Outside Limelight

By Tom Morris
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

When John Welborn was asked to re-start the mens' cross country team and also begin the school's first ever womens' team at East Carolina, he was sure the administration had the wrong guy in mind.

Welborn came to ECU in 1967 as a wrestling coach and during his tenure here had also been asked to coach two sports, golf and soccer, that he had no experience with.

"I was apprehensive about getting into that (again)," Welborn said. "I'd done it before."

"Under the circumstances, the type of program they wanted it was not the same pressure situation (as wrestling). The strongest pressure I have felt I put on myself."

"With a sport like cross country, there is not a lot of finances involved and not a lot of (public) interest. Our philosophy was we wanted to provide a sport or sports that would be a positive experience for them. It's not the winning and losing, it's more so they can come out and learn."

This past weekend, both teams finished second at the Methodist Relays in Fayetteville.

Senior Matt Schweitzer had the best showing for the men, finishing sixth overall on the eight-kilometer (five-mile) route.

The women, despite missing top runners Ann Marie Welch and Kim Griffiths, got a first-place finish from freshman Denise Wehrenburg on the five-kilometer (3.1-mile) course.

Saturday, ECU will be at the Pembroke Invitational for its second meet of the season.

"I'm an old wrestling coach, but the assistants I've had know the ins and outs," Welborn said. "I'm learning, but I'm more administrative (oriented). I do the recruiting and get them to the meets. I do whatever the assistants want me to do in terms of training."

When Ken Karr, ECU's former director of athletics, approached Welborn about reinstating the mens' program, which had been dormant since 1976, and beginning a womens' program, the former wrestling coach suggested they hire Steve Thomas, a coach at Rose High.

But ECU's administration wanted to keep the job in-house. In the end, Welborn accepted the position and got Thomas to come on as his assistant.

After one year, Thomas was replaced by Mitch Craib, an exercise physiologist and running enthusiast. Craib was on staff for two seasons, but left last year to do some work at the Olympic Training Center in Colorado Springs, Colo.

That left Welborn with an open spot and he went after Choo Justice, a former equipment manager at ECU who had worked with ECU track coach Bill Carson in the past.

A graduate student at ECU,

Non-Revenue Report

Justice was competing for Team Tiger in five- and 10-kilometer races around the region.

Still, Justice was reluctant to join up. He was heavily involved with Team Tiger and had a productive spring and summer season.

"Coach (Welborn) had to work hard to talk me into it," Justice said. "A couple of years ago, when I worked with Coach Carson, I realized so many times you can't coach because the meets conflict with the races you are running."

"If you coach, your obligation is to coach first and compete second. Right now, since it's only a two-month season, this time of year most of the meets are on Saturday and the individual races are on Sundays."

"We don't travel like with the regular track team. In cross country, most of the meets are one day trips."

The program began with and still relies on walk-ons. The budget has steadily improved. When Welborn began, he had $250 at his disposal. Now, it's near $1,000.

Anybody who comes out is on the team. There are no cuts and Welborn tries to give everybody on the team a chance to run during the season.

In fact, Schweitzer and Griffiths joined the team that first year as walk-ons and have become the top performers on their respective squads.

There isn't a whole lot of recruiting going on. Welborn goes to the state track tournament each year and also tries to see the state cross country championships. He also keeps in touch with high school cross country coaches.

Justice said the recruiting philosophy is if a kid wants to continue to compete in cross country, but maybe doesn't want to do it at a small school, then ECU is the place to go.

If they go somewhere else and it doesn't work out, they are welcome to come back.

"Oh yeah," Justice said. "There are a lot of good runners that are out there. We try to get the people who slip through the cracks."

A good example is two of our freshmen. One (Calvin Graves) was fourth in state meet in the 800 (meters). He was considered for some scholarships (at smaller schools).

"His roommate, Tony Chadwick was an honor roll student. He took an advanced math class that counted two hours and failed it. So he wasn't eligible to compete in the spring and nobody really looked at him, but he was an honor roll student."

If anything, the cross country competitors are really closer to the idea of student-athletes than most. They compete solely for the sake of competing. It certainly isn't for the notoriety.

The locals may pack Ficklen Saturday for the football season opener against Bowling Green, but there are hardly throngs of fans at a collegiate cross country meet.

There are no scholarships on the line, no dreams of competing professionally for competitors on either of the ECU cross country teams.

"We've still got an awful good group of young people that are out," Welborn said. "Basically our talent hasn't changed a whole lot. This year, we've got probably the best team we've had in talent since the first year of the men. Each year in the women's program, we've gotten a little better."

ECU coach John Welborn works with Matt Schweitzer (left) and Kim Griffiths.

N.C. State Defeats ECU In Volleyball

RALEIGH — N.C. State and East Carolina opened the 1989 volleyball season Wednesday night in Raleigh with the Lady Wolfpack taking the match in three straight games.

The 'Pack took the opener, 15-13, added a 15-3 win in the second game then closed out the best-of-five match with a 15-8 victory.

"I saw some things that will make me optimistic about the rest of the year," ECU coach Judy Kirkpatrick said. "We really didn't do things as a team (in the match). We need to work on our offense, but I think we have a good chance of winning two of three this weekend at Carolina."

The Lady Pirates will participate in the Carolina Classic at Chapel Hill on Saturday. ECU will face Appalachian State, UNC-Asheville, as well as the hosting Tar Heels. The Pirates will then host their own invitational the following weekend.

Rose Nips Fike In Tennis Match

WILSON — Rose High School took two of the three doubles matches and inched past Wilson Fike, 5-4, in a Big East Conference tennis match Wednesday.

The action was the first league play for Rose this season, now 2-0 overall.

The two teams split the singles matches, each winning three. Taylor Evans and Jenny Stoneham then won the number one doubles and Tina Williams and Laura Young combined to win the number two doubles to give Rose the win.

The Rampettes travel to Rocky Mount today.

Singles — Shilpa Jaggi (F) d. Taylor Evans, 6-1, 6-2; Laura Young (R) d. Catherine Deans, 6-4, 6-4; Tricia Tripp (R) d. Amy Rhodes, 6-2, 6-2; Cameron Powell (F) d. Camilla Brown, 6-3, 6-2; Erin Rose (F) d. Tina Williams, 6-2, 6-1; Jenny Stoneham (R) d. Elizabeth Lamm, 7-5, 7-6 (7-1).

Doubles — Evans-Stoneham (R) d. Jaggi-Lamm, 8-5; Williams-Brown (R) d. Deans-Amy Rose, 8-6; Powell-E. Rose (F) d. Tripp-Young, 8-3.

Conley Opens Cross Country Season

NEW BERN — D.H. Conley's cross country teams opened the 1989 season Wednesday in a five-way meet at New Bern.

Lejeune took first place in both the boys' and girls' meet. Lejeune had 26 points to win the boys' meet, while Conley was second with 55. The host Bears were third with 67, Washington was fourth with 99 and White Oak trailed the field with 122.

Washington's Jeremy Hill took first place with a time of 18 minutes, 26 seconds. Conley's top finisher was Jason Wing, who finished third in 19:21.

Other Conley finishers included Paul Andreu (11th, 21:13); Rodrick Walton (29th, 21:14); Ron Mills (13th, 21:17); Jason Osborne (16th, 21:29); Nathan Wright (17th, 21:45); John Dunn (28th, 23:38); Adam Charlton (34th, 24:53); Michael Hanrahan (35th, 24:56); Alkiwuan Thompson (39th, 25:04); Wally Heritage (41st, 25:08); Stacy Barr (42nd, 25:11) and Matt Dunn (45th, 27:18).

In the girls' meet, Lejeune finished with 30 points while Washington was second with 52, followed by Conley with 56, White Oak with 113 and New Bern with 121.

Lejeune's Julie Barba was first with a time of 22:17, while Washington's Elaine Wozny was second in 22:40. Dawn Wehrens of Washington was third in 22:53.

Conley's top finisher was Hope Harrington in 25:15 while Celeste Charlton was ninth in 26:11.

Other Conley finishers included Tricia Smith (11th, 26:27); Amy Allen (13th, 26:32); Wendy Whitehurst (17th, 26:59); Valerie Mills (21st, 28:01); Stacey Burhans (23rd, 28:38); Julie Smith (26th, 30:58); Carrilee Andreu (29th, 31:50); Wendy Dixon (30th, 32:04); Jennifer Stevens (32nd, 33:02); Geri Troiano (35th, 34:34); Meghan Smith (37th, 35:43); Heather Smith (38th, 35:43); Pany Seyed (39th, 36:10) and Gretchen Meisner (42nd, 37:29).

Conley's boys are now 3-1 and the girls 2-2. Conley travels to Washington for its next meet on Monday.

Overton Gains 4th Place Finish

Kristi Overton completed her water ski season with a fourth-place slalom finish in the Pro Tour competitions and an eighth place finish in the slalom event at the World Water Ski Championships last weekend.

Overton, a sophomore at Central Florida University, successfully skied around four buoys at 35 feet off a 75-foot tow line pass with earned her eighth place.

Northern Nash Player Is Honored

CHAPEL HILL (AP) — Running back Joe Simmons of North Surry, who rushed for 220 yards and four touchdowns, was one of four high school players honored by the North Carolina High School Athletic Association as prep football players of the week.

In 4-A, defensive back Robbie Williams of Northern Nash came within one interception of the state record for a single game. He intercepted four passes in the 23-12 victory over SouthWest Edgecombe. Williams also returned a kickoff 70 yards.

State Officials Set To Answer NCAA...

 ed to remain as coach and says he had no knowledge of any NCAA violations.
 Poulton, who is resigning effective Sept. 30 in what he said was an effort to keep personal attacks on him from reflecting on the university, said the report would not affect his resignation.

 Regardless of the outcome of the investigation, N.C. State should put tighter controls on complimentary tickets and athletic shoes issued to athletes, Poulton said.

 "Unless you're on top of these kids all the time, they're likely to do things like this," he said.
 The NCAA report cited allegations that during the 1985-86 academic years, basketball players sold complimentary tickets valued at approximately $1,500, receiving as much as $150 for some admissions. The athletics department "did not exercise appropriate institutional control" over athletic shoes valued at $75 that were often sold, the report said.

 The NCAA also asked N.C. State to look into allegations that Larry Dickerson, owner of Walls Jewelers in Raleigh, gave players discounts and charge accounts not given to other students.
 Dickerson said his store had done nothing improper in its dealings with NCSU basketball players. "I haven't done anything wrong, intentionally or otherwise," he said.

dormitory room theft investigation, the newspaper reported.
 The report also cites an allegation that Larry Hall, "a representative of the university's athletics interests" gave free food and lodging to another player through arrangements by James Manley, the team physician. The NCAA asked for more information about Hall's relationship to the athletics program, whether he had been involved in athletic recruiting and whether he had contributed funds to the university or its athletics program.

The report also says that players accepted lodging and meals in the home of Nick and Diane Sarrocco, identified as "representatives of the university's athletic interests."

Rose-Conley Football Previews...

 1-A ranks, defeated North Pitt 19-6.
 "They are a fine 0-2 football team," Craft said. "They have a real strong, fine backfield with excellent athletes back there."
 "We feel like they've got a good solid football team and they are ready to spring out of that down side of the ledger. We just hope we can postpone it a little while."
 Also on tap for Friday night is Eastern Wayne at Rose, Farmville Central at Louisburg, Ayden-Grifton at Plymouth, Greene Central at North Lenoir, Washington at Pamlico County, Williamston at Roanoke and Chocowinity at Jamesville.

turn in an improved effort in the trenches as well as in the tackling department.
 "I think we're going to have to do a much better job with the basic fundamentals of the game, when I say that I'm talking about tackling and carrying out blocking assignments," Ennis said.
 "We did a very poor job against North Edgecombe in both of those areas. We're going to work hard this week to improve on those phases of the game."
 "We know we have a tough task and we know that upsets happen every day. That's the approach we're taking. All the pressure is on Conley. From that aspect, it seems nice."

against the Cards and should get the start against Eastern Wayne.
 Williams said Perkins did an adequate job Friday night but showed signs of fatigue in the late stages. Perkins also replaced an injured Hines during a preseason scrimmage with New Bern.
 Also in the backfield will be senior Tye Fickling and junior Carlos Ebron working at fullback. Junior Anthony Love sees time at both backfield slots.
 Quarterback Columbus Grice assumed the burden last with 94 yards rushing and threw for 58 yards. He has completed five of 13 passes in two games.
 "Consistency on offense concerns me," Williams said. "Columbus Grice has picked up his performance at quarterback but we've only completed three passes a game. That's something we've got to pick up."

"Effort-wise I thought everyone gave as much as they had. The defense was fairly solid, less about four breakdowns. The offense made a lot of mistakes but during practice this week I think we've gotten better. But Friday is test day."
 The Warriors, who opened with a win over Kinston before falling to Wilson Hunt 27-2 last week, brings a young squad to town. They had to replace all but one starter on offense, including their entire backfield, and seven starters on defense.
 Dennis Coleman, Chuck Ford and Brad Simmons now comprise the full-house backfield alignment with sophomore Brodie Groover under center. Leading the defense are Coleman, linebacker Derrick Vick and lineman Marlin Darby.

Conley-North Pitt
 The Vikings will again be without running back Anthony Barrett and backup quarterback Trey Fogg but the backfield is where Conley has depth with fullback Terry Williams and "flashbacks" Mike Clark and Kenny Haddock leading the way. The Viking ground game piled up 382 yards last week.
 Fogg should be back in one week but Barrett is out at least three more weeks.
 "Looking at them on film, their running game definitely creates some problems," North Pitt coach Stuart Ennis said. "They have very quick backs. Their quarterback (Scott Seymour) can throw the ball, (though) last week he didn't have to. They have some experience up front — that really paid off against Ayden-Grifton."
 Jon Middleton, Al Andrews, Tim Carmon, Danny Osborne, Larry Wilson and Boris Harris keyed Conley up front.
 Keith Fisher, Hal Conger, Robert Taylor and Jeff Wheaton anchored the defense.
 Ennis said the Panthers had to

Rose-Eastern Wayne
 The Rampants had to adjust quickly last week to running its offense without Maurice Hines and it is likely Hines will not be in the lineup when Eastern Wayne invades Friday night.
 Hines, who rushed for 128 yards in a season-opening win over Tarboro, suffered a dislocated shoulder on his first carry against Jacksonville last week and is listed as doubtful for Friday night's game although coach Chip Williams said Hines had the okay to play.
 "Maurice dislocated his shoulder," Williams said. "It's something that's happened to him three or four times. Saturday morning he was in a lot of pain but Maurice is the kind of kid that can play with pain. The doctor said he could play Friday if we needed him but I'm not sure right now if we'll use him. We'll just have to wait and see."
 The Rampants do have capable runners but experience is lacking, thus leaving Williams with a concern of consistency. Junior Andre Perkins, who also plays defensive end, filled in for Hines

The Warriors rely on a run-oriented, ball-control style. However, Williams said he is more concerned with what his team does rather than focusing on the opponent.
 "We are concerned with what the other team does but we're more concerned with how we execute," Williams said. "Eastern Wayne is certainly good enough to beat any team they play. They beat Kinston and they trailed Hunt 7-2 at halftime so they are very capable."

Robinson...

 Bowling Green likes to put the ball in the air, and that means extra work for Robinson and his defensive backfield mates.
 Falcon receivers Reggie Thornton and Ronald Heard both possess sprinter's speed and have combined to catch 196 passes for 3,160 yards and 18 touchdowns during their careers.
 Quarterback Rich Dackin has thrown for 4,183 yards in his career and was an All Mid-American Conference choice his sophomore year in 1987. He missed most of last season with a wrist injury.
 "We've got the attitude now that no matter who we come up against, they are going to have big-play people and they are going to have good receivers," Robinson said. "We're just going to have to be ready."
 "With them having Heard and Thornton, I mean, that's going to have us prepared even better. I feel like if we've defended the best that Miami and Florida State have thrown at us, and even though they won, it's no problem. It's nothing new."

 In Robinson's favor, he is part of an experienced cast in the secondary. He's in his third year as a starter. Left cornerback Chris Hall started last year as a freshman, while right cornerback Ricky Torain has been a starter on and off for the last two seasons. The lone newcomer is strong safety Derrick Fields.
 "I feel like this might be the most experience we've had back there," Robinson said. "Most of the starters have at least a few years. We've become family and we know what each other is going to do."
 "I've got a feeling we're going to use a lot of man coverage because we need to put a lot of pressure on Dackin. By us putting pressure on (the passer), that allows us to free up on the receiver and makes him put the ball off quicker than he wants to."
 And the sooner the better for Robinson.

Ruffin's New Delivery Sinks Cubs, 9-1

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Because Bruce Ruffin remembered to come over the top, the Chicago Cubs are in danger of falling from the top.

The Cubs' lead in the National League East is down to a measly one-half game following Wednesday night's 9-1 loss to Ruffin and the last-place Philadelphia Phillies. Hot on Chicago's heels are the St. Louis Cardinals, 3-2 winners over the New York Mets. The Montreal Expos, who beat Pittsburgh 11-6, are two games out and the Mets trail by 3½.

Ruffin, 5-8, scattered eight hits for his first complete game since May 8, 1988, and Darren Daulton and Dickie Thon each drove in three runs for Philadelphia.

Ruffin, who came into the game with a 5.13 earned-run average after wild streaks the last two years that threatened to end his career, said he felt some pain in his shoulder when he allowed his delivery to drop down to where he threw sidearm.

"The pain forced me to stay on top with the ball, which is the way I have to pitch to win," Ruffin said. "I've been a little sore, and it made me conscious of staying on top with my delivery."

Cardinals 3, Mets 2

Pedro Guerrero drove in the tying and winning runs and the Cardinals took advantage of two New York errors for their 16th victory in 23 games.

With the score tied 2-2, Mets second baseman Gregg Jefferies muffed Ozzie Smith's grounder to start the eighth inning. Smith went to third on Jose Oquendo's hit-and-run single and scored on Guerrero's grounder. Guerrero doubled home the tying run with two out in the sixth.

The Mets scored their runs off starter Ricky Horton, including Kevin McReynolds' second-inning homer. Frank DiPino, 7-0, was the winner with two scoreless innings of relief.

Expos 11, Pirates 6

Hubie Brooks drove in four runs with a first-inning single and a three-run homer in the second. The outburst enabled Mark Langston to snap a personal three-game losing streak and win for the first time since Aug. 11. Langston yielded three runs and eight hits in six innings.

Giants 7, Braves 2

Will Clark reached 100 RBIs with a two-run homer in the first inning and Scott Garrelts scattered eight hits.

After Robby Thompson singled with one out in the first, Clark hit his 22nd home run of the season off Derek Lilliquist.

The Giants made it 4-0 in the third after Clark doubled with two out. Clark reached third when shortstop Andres Thomas bobbled Kevin Mitchell's grounder and Matt Williams and Donell Nixon followed with RBI singles. Brett Butler's bunt single and Thompson's double produced a run in the seventh, and the Giants added two more in the eighth on Nixon's first home run of the season and an RBI single by Jose Uribe.

Padres 3, Astros 2

Calvin Schiraldi held Houston to one run and two hits over six innings in his first game with San Diego as the Padres moved into sole possession of second place in the NL West for the first time since May 5. The Padres have won six straight and 12 of 13 to drop the Astros into third place for the first time since June 6.

Schiraldi, obtained in a trade with the Chicago Cubs on Aug. 30, yielded a run in the sixth on Craig Biggio's double, a wild pitch and Eric Anthony's grounder.

Roberto Alomar drove in two runs for San Diego, extending his hitting streak to 11 games with his sixth home run in the first inning off Jim Deshaies, who lost to the Padres for the sixth straight time.

San Diego's Gene Harris yielded a run in the ninth before Mark Davis got the last out for his 37th save.

Reds 9, Dodgers 5

Barry Larkin tied the game with a two-run pinch single in the sixth inning and Joe Oliver's two-run double put Cincinnati ahead in the seventh.

With the score tied 5-5, Ken Griffey doubled with one out in the seventh off Dodgers reliever Ray Searage and Todd Benzinger was intentionally walked. Mike Morgan relieved and was greeted by Oliver's double.

Mariano Duncan singled Oliver home and the Reds added a run in the eighth when Jeff Richardson hit his second home run on the first major-league pitch thrown by Mike Munoz.

Cincinnati's Luis Quinones homered in the first inning, extending his hitting streak to 14 games and snapping Tim Belcher's scoreless string at 24½ innings.

AMERICAN LEAGUE

Tigers 11, Royals 5

The Detroit Tigers continued to make life miserable for the Kansas City Royals, handing them an 11-5 defeat at home Wednesday.

Detroit has won 13 straight over the Royals at home, and the latest loss dropped Kansas City to 4½ games behind the Oakland Athletics in the AL West. The Athletics took another step to a title with a 7-5 victory over the Boston Red Sox.

In beating the Royals this time, the Tigers combined homers by Mike Brumley and Lou Whitaker with three Royals errors. Brumley hit a two-run homer in the second and Whitaker gave the Tigers insurance with a three-run blast, his 27th, in the seventh.

Athletics 7, Red Sox 5

Dave Parker hit his first AL grand slam and Bob Welch won his fifth consecutive decision for Oakland.

Welch, 16-7, allowed five hits and two runs, one unearned, in five innings before leaving with a slight abdominal strain. He has allowed just four earned runs in his last 35 innings, an ERA of 1.03.

Indians 9, Orioles 0

Bud Black pitched a four-hitter and Cleveland erupted for 15 hits, including home runs by Dion James, Cory Snyder and Brad Kommsk.

James paced the Indians' attack with three hits and three RBI, while Joe Carter had three hits and two RBI. Paul Zuvella had a career-high four hits, and three other Indians drove in runs against six Baltimore pitchers.

Blue Jays 4, White Sox 2

Fred McGriff continued his good hitting against Chicago with an RBI single and Todd Stottlemyre, 7-5, won his fifth straight game as the Blue Jays increased their AL East lead over Baltimore to two games.

McGriff's RBI single triggered a three-run first inning off Eric King, 7-9, and the Blue Jays went onto their 11th victory in 12 games this season against the White Sox.

Rangers 3, Twins 2

Charlie Hough scattered seven hits over six innings to improve his record to 5-1 since coming off the disabled list on Aug. 4.

Hough, 10-12, the only pitcher in the major leagues to win 10 or more games in each of the last eight years, walked two and struck out three.

Hough went on the disabled list July 20 with recurring soreness in his right shoulder and was 0-5 with a 5.18 ERA during the final six starts of that span.

Jeff Russell pitched 1½ innings for his 33rd save.

Yankees 5, Mariners 3

Mel Hall and Bob Geren hit two-run homers off Seattle starter Brian Holman in the seventh inning as the Yankees rallied for their seventh straight victory.

Holman, 5-9, had held the Yankees scoreless on two hits before Alvaro Espinoza led off the seventh with a single. Hall followed one out later with his 13th home run to cut Seattle's lead to 3-2.

Steve Balboni continued the one-out rally with a single and Geren hit his ninth home run to put New York ahead 4-3.

Don Mattingly's leadoff home run in the ninth, his 19th, provided the Yankees with their final margin.

Brewers 7, Angels 4

Rookie George Canale, Robin Yount and Bill Spiers homered as Milwaukee dealt another blow to California's staggering pennant hopes.

Bowling Green...

Bowling Green as a sophomore.

Two of the top three runners on the team return in the backfield with Dakin, tailback Charles Edgerton and fullback Ron Viscounte. Edgerton carried the ball 105 times for 427 yards and three touchdowns, while Viscounte had 22 carries for 103 yards and two scores.

They are also able receivers. Viscounte caught 22 passes for 148 yards last year while Edgerton had 10 for 66 yards.

Four starters return in the offensive line, center Billy Horne, guard Brian Sherman and tackles Matt Kregel and Tom Addie. However, three of the four are at new positions. Horne moved from tackle to center, Sherman from center to guard and Addie from guard to tackle during the spring.

Bowling Green's biggest problem was getting the ball into the end zone last year. The team ranked last among the Mid-American schools in scoring, averaging only 14.5 points per game. Their passing offense was second in the league with 214.8 yards game, but their rushing was last at 91.8 yards an outing.

In fact, Bowling Green hasn't topped 100 yards in rushing average over the last three seasons.

The Falcons do have another offensive weapon in place-kicker Jason Zeller. The senior ranks among the school's top five in field goals with 27 and has a perfect 43-43 point after touchdown record.

The Falcons were also hoping to shore up their rushing defense this season. Last year, they allowed 245.6 yards a game on the ground, last in the MAC. They were third against the pass, surrendering 159.8 yards a game.

The leading tackler on the team, Kyle Kramer, was a fifth round draft choice of the Cleveland Browns, but seven of the top nine tacklers are back, including the entire linebacking crew.

Chief among them is Larry Lambright, considered one of the better players in the MAC. He played in only eight games last year, however, making 53 tackles. Joining him on the inside is Duane Crenshaw, who was second on the team last year with 110 tackles. Outside backers, Dal McDonald and Charles Dotson combined for 125 tackles last year.

Safety Mike Holmes is also considered an outstanding player, as is his running mate Terry Wilson. Wilson was third on the team in tackles with 97, while Holmes was fifth with 91 at a corner spot.

The Falcons also return an outstanding punter in Chris Shale, who averaged 41.5 yards a punt last season, tops in the MAC. The Falcons were somewhat vulnerable to the return, however, as the net average was just 32.7.

Bowling Green has been fairly successful in season openers, with a 38-25-7 record over the years. Since 1947, that mark is 30-11-1 on opening day. However, the Falcons come into the game riding a two-game losing streak on opening day, bowing to Penn State in 1987 and West Virginia in 1988. The last time they won their road opener was in 1985 when they downed Ball State, 31-6.

East Carolina, in contrast, has won its last two openers, not losing since 1986 when it fell to N.C. State, 38-10. But the Pirates have won only one of the last three home openers, last year's 52-13 win over Tennessee Tech.

'Paradise' Season Premier Reunites Western TV Stars

By Jerry Buck
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — Tarnation, that's Bat and Wyatt and young Maverick and The Rifleman's son and a whole passel of Western stars on the two-hour season premiere of "Paradise" on CBS.

"I was very excited about playing Bat Masterson again after 25 years," said Gene Barry, who comes to the rescue of Ethan Allen Cord (Lee Horsley) with Hugh O'Brian returning as Wyatt Earp.

The two-hour show on Sunday is a roundup of old Western stars. Barry played the cane-carrying dandy in NBC's "Bat Masterson" from 1959 to '61. O'Brian was the Dodge City marshal on ABC's "The Life and Legend of Wyatt Earp" from 1955 to '61.

Barry also starred in "Name of the Game," in rotation with Robert Stack and Tony Franciosa on NBC from 1968 to '71.

He recalled that when "Bat Masterson" first came up 30 years ago he didn't want to do it.

"Then someone said he wore a derby hat and carried a cane," he said. "That appealed to the actor in me. If it hadn't been for that I would have turned it down. I didn't want to be tied down doing a Western. I went to wardrobe and found the hat and cane and an elegant swallowtail coat and shiny black boots.

"I looked at myself in the mirror and I knew exactly how to play this man. The costume dictated my performance. It changed my life. Every role I've done since has been a guy who looked good in clothes."

It was his stint on Broadway as Georges in "La Cage aux Folles" that he calls "the highlight of my life." He was in New York for three years and then spent another year on the road in the French farce about a gay couple pretending to be straight for the sake of Georges' son, his fiancée and her parents.

"When the role came up it wasn't a surprise because every year I'd do a play or take off with my one-man musical revue, 'Gene Barry In One,'" he said. "I'd try to get back to New York for a musical now and then. That was my 'Repeat Performance.' That's where I started, on the musical stage."

'Bad Girls' Hits Top In Ratings

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — "Bad Girls," a news special on juvenile delinquents, helped NBC extend its prime-time Nielsen ratings streak to 63 weeks in a week dominated by sitcoms.

"Bad Girls," reported by NBC correspondent Deborah Norville, tied for seventh place with ABC's "Who's the Boss?" It was the only original show in last week's top 10 during this summer rerun period.

ABC's "Roseanne" was first again in the A.C. Nielsen Co. survey, followed by NBC's "Cheers."

Fox Broadcasting Co.'s highest-rated show, "Married...With Children," dropped from 17th to 41st place. Still, most of the Fox shows were able to hold their newfound positions in the middle of the ratings.

NBC extended its record streak at the top with an average prime-time rating of 10.6. ABC's average was 9.7 and CBS' was 9.0.

The rating point is the percentage of the nation's estimated 90.4 million homes with televisions.

The first of the new fall shows for the three networks will make its appearance this week. CBS' "Rescue: 911" had its premiere on Tuesday. Next week, five more shows will make their debut, and the fall season begins Sept. 18. Fox has gotten an early start with some of its shows.

NBC last week had seven of the top 10 shows. CBS once again failed to make the top 10. Its highest-rated show was "Designing Women" in 13th place.

Here are the top 10: ABC's "Roseanne," NBC's "Cheers," "The Cosby Show," "A Different World" and "Dear John," ABC's "The Wonder Years," NBC News special "Bad Girls" and ABC's "Who's the Boss?" tied, NBC's "Golden Girls" and NBC's "Empty Nest" and ABC's "Anything But Love," tied.

Former Cheerleader Tops MTV Awards

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

UNIVERSAL CITY, Calif. — Paula Abdul doesn't mind being known as a former Laker Girl but the four MTV Video Music Awards showered on her "Straight Up" video should help sideline the cheerleader image.

"You don't want to see me weep, do you?" she asked the audience Wednesday night as "Straight Up" collected trophies for best female video, dance, choreography and editing.

"I owe a lot to being a Laker Girl," the ex-cheerleader for the Los Angeles basketball team said backstage. Only nominations for best new artist and breakthrough video didn't pan out.

Madonna, veteran rocker Neil Young and newcomers Living Colour also were top winners at the sixth-annual event.

Young's satirical "This Note's for You" won the coveted best video award, although MTV once banned the video, ostensibly because it contained commercial messages.

Madonna won the Viewers' Choice trophy for "Like a Prayer." Her "Express Yourself" video earned direction honors for David Fincher, the art direction trophy for Vance Lorenzini, and best cinematography for Mark Plummer.

"I guess this means you like me, you really like me," Madonna told the crowd in a joking echo of actress Sally Field's "You like me" acceptance speech at the 1984 Oscars. "And I'd like to thank Pepsi for causing so much controversy."

The Pepsi Cola Co. in April withdrew its TV commercial featuring Madonna and its sponsorship of

Barty Video

WEST HOLLYWOOD, Calif. (AP) — Billy Barty, the 3-foot-9 actor who crusades on behalf of his Little People Liberation movement, is introducing an anthem and video.

"From Where I Stand" has a "We Are the World" flavor, and features singer Carl Anderson.

"It is a positive outlook toward life," Barty said, and will be released next month. Proceeds will fund scholarships and other programs, he told reporters Wednesday.

Flanked by 15 other dwarfs, Barty said, "We should be looked up to. We should not be judged by our size but for the space between our ears."

her tour. The commercial featured a burning cross and other images that offended some Christians.

Living Colour, a band that blends rock, funk, reggae and jazz, won the best group, new artist and stage performance awards for "Cult of Personality." They accepted by satellite from Pittsburgh, where they were performing in concert with the Rolling Stones.

"Veronica" gave Elvis Costello the male video honor, and R.E.M.'s "Orange Crush" captured the post-modern category.

The career-achievement Video Vanguard award went to pop singer George Michael.

Rap went to D.J. Jazzy Jeff & The Fresh Prince for "Parents Just Don't Understand."

"This is a dream come true," said Fresh Prince, 19, who urged all of the "kids out there" to "stay away from drugs and all that stuff."

"Kiss" by Art of Noise featuring vocals by Tom Jones was named breakthrough video of the year.

Guns 'N Roses had the best heavy metal video with "Sweet Child O' Mine" and the combination of Irish rockers U2 and veteran bluesman B.B. King earned a best video from film trophy for "When Love Comes to Town" from the concert movie "Rattle and Hum."

The show, with host Arsenio Hall, featured performances by Miss Abdul, Cher — in a leather jacket and skimpy teddy — Def Leppard, Jon Bon Jovi, Richie Sambora, and Madonna.

Comedian Andrew Dice Clay made what became his last MTV performance, a routine filled with obscene and unprintable poems and comments about overweight women and sex.

MTV Vice President Barry Kluger suddenly appeared at a backstage press room and issued a statement of apology: "Andrew Dice Clay did not do this in rehearsal and we were very surprised by it. Based on this experience, Andrew Dice Clay will not be appearing on MTV in the future."

Two stars had major disappointments. Michael Jackson's work was nominated in eight categories, including best video for "Leave Me Alone," but came away with one special effects trophy.

Jody Watley, the Grammy Awards' best new artist of 1988, had six nominations for her "Real Love" video and came away emptyhanded.

"I tried the white crayon but it doesn't work."

Horoscope From The Carroll Righter Institute

FORECAST FOR FRIDAY Sept. 8

ARIES (March 20 to April 19): Your mind is filled with the benefits that you can extract from daily activities. Find out where you stand in business or financial matters with contacts.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 19): Don't rise to the bait of a fellow worker who needs to try and get you angry. Listen to a suggestion by a resourceful outsider for improving conditions at your home.

GEMINI (May 20 to June 20): You need to fight back to maintain your present work conditions. Inviting good friends into your home socially is not advisable now or trouble ensues.

MOON CHILDREN (June 21 to July 21): Work flows along smoothly if you follow directions given by influential men. You now can put in motion in your business some talent that you have perfected.

LEO (July 22 to Aug. 21): Be very careful you are not in anyway careless in performing your usual duties. An excellent day to get estimates for whatever needs to be fixed at your home.

VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 21): You can apply your most brilliant ideas now to the duties you have before you. Put the brakes on spending so much money on a business or property interest.

LIBRA (Sept. 22 to Oct. 22): Listen to advice given by one of your household for better results at work. It is ok to discuss an important money matter with an experienced friend.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21): A new attitude at your finances will bring you a greater abundance. Don't fret over what you cannot help, you do not like, in your occupation.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 20): Your insight is excellent regarding a business matter of vital moment to you. You can get practical matters better organized with family members now.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 21 to Jan. 18): Many friends will bring you the opportunity to have many good times now. If good friends invite you and your attachment out this day accept each invitation extended.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 19 to Feb. 17): Plan trips at a little later date that good friends want you to take with them. Invite into your home today as many persons as possible.

PISCES (Feb. 18 to March 19): New ideas of a practical nature will be excellent for your work now. A trip would now bring a closer harmony between you and your mate.

The lament from most players we know is not holding enough high

However, had he been dealt a low club rather than the queen, he might have spotted the sure-fire line.

Declarer should win the heart lead, draw trumps and then cash his remaining heart winners. Next comes the ace of clubs, followed by the queen. Declarer doesn't care a hoot which defender wins. Whoever is on lead must either play a diamond, removing a guess in that suit, or else give declarer a ruff-stuff.

Declarer won the opening heart lead, drew trumps, ending in dummy, and tried the club finesse. When that failed, the heart return was taken in the closed hand and declarer had to fall back on the diamond finesse. Since West had shown up with the king of clubs and jack of hearts, declarer decided to play East for the queen of diamonds. A diamond to the ace and a diamond back to the jack lost to the queen—down one.

Declarer was rather unlucky.

Celebrities and Winemakers That Anti-Drug Ads Hurt

LOS ANGELES — Drug czar William Bennett's suggestion that entertainers who reveal past addictions might lead others to abuse drugs was ridiculed by some celebrities.

Bennett is "an embarrassment to the American people," said Danny Goldberg, producer of the groundbreaking television campaign Rock Against Drugs, which featured popular musicians such as Belinda Carlisle and Vince Neil talking about their own drug addiction recoveries.

In the National Drug Control Strategy report issued this week, Bennett praised campaigns that encourage negative attitudes toward drugs and that label drug users as losers.

"Less useful — and probably even counterproductive — are commercials in which sports and pop music stars who are reformed drug users tell young people not to do as they have done," Bennett also said.

"Such commercials may lack credibility, and they also carry an unintended message: that you can do drugs and still be rich and successful."

Actor Gregory Harrison, who has made public service announcements on television and radio discussing his eight-year addiction to cocaine and alcohol, said that Bennett's criticism was misguided.

"I'm just out here to try to educate, and I think most of the celebrities who do these things are there to help educate," said the former star of "Trapper John, M.D.," now sober for two years.

"If William Bennett thinks that it's a mistake, he can think that. But I'd like to see him do something constructive instead of just critiquing other people's attempts," Harrison said.

Atlanta Braves outfielder Lonnie Smith, a recovering cocaine addict who has discussed openly his habit's costly toll, simply laughed and shook his head when asked to respond to Bennett's comments. "William Bennett is entitled to his opinion," is all Smith would say.

Goldberg, who brought the Rock Against Drugs campaign to national television in 1987, said RAD's TV spots were useful because they employed former addicts steering users toward sobriety, a tactic shared by Alcoholics Anonymous and Cocaine Anonymous.

"There was no question that the people with the greatest credibility with young people were people who had grappled with the same demons that were assaulting the teen-age fans," Goldberg said.

"I think that rock stars are people that young people could understand," he said.

In one of the RAD spots, former Sex Pistols guitarist Steve Jones said, "A good friend of mine, Sid Vicious, died of drugs. I nearly died from drugs. Drugs suck."

Another spot featured David Crosby, formerly of Crosby, Stills, Nash and Young. Crosby said, "Four things can happen to you if you do drugs: You can go crazy; you can go to prison; you can die; or you can quit."

Goldberg reported that one fan wrote to RAD participant and heavy-metal rocker Ronnie Dio to say, "Teachers can preach for hours about how bad drugs are and I still went out and got high. But man, once I heard you say how stupid drugs are, I never touched them again."

Harrison said that the "Just Say No" anti-drug rhetoric favored by former first lady Nancy Reagan is essentially useless.

"If some guy who's never done drugs in his life, never had a drug problem, comes on and does a 'Just Say No' commercial ... I watch that and I think, 'You ignorant fools. Don't you understand how much worse it is than that?'"

"If I could just say no and walk away, I'd have done it five years ago," he said. "People who just say no don't have the problem. They have no credibility at all. And it's infuriating."

Winemakers Fret About Availability of Corks For Bottle Tops

YAKIMA, Wash. — Sometime soon, that $35 bottle of cabernet sauvignon may come with a screw top. And peeling the seal from a $100 bottle of champagne may reveal plastic.

Some wine experts say these and other innovations may await the nation's wine drinkers because of problems with corks from Portugal, the industry's major source.

The Portuguese cork industry has been running low of virgin cork in recent years, forcing some winemakers to use poor quality stoppers that can ruin some wines, said Lisa Van de Water of The Wine Lab in Napa, Calif., a research center for the wine industry.

Cork is harvested by removing the bark from oak trees.

"The cork bark they are stripping now has a lot of moisture and is more conducive to the growth of mold," Ms. Van de Water said.

The molding, which is difficult to detect during bottling, can mix with chlorine used to sterilize corks and produce a chemical that can give wine an unpleasant odor and taste known as corkiness, she said.

Consumers either return the bottle or assume they purchased a lousy wine, she said.

Once nearly nonexistent, the problem now afflicts up to 6 percent of the nation's wine corks, Ms. Van de Water said.

"I think the problem is a lot worse than it used to be," said Clark Smith, executive winemaker for the R.H. Phillips Vineyard in Esparto, Calif.

But other experts in wine-producing regions like California and Washington state don't agree the problem is growing. And the exact cause of corkiness is uncertain.

Portugal, which sent $46 million worth of cork to the United States in 1988, does not acknowledge there is a problem, said Maria Bonifacio, product manager at the Portuguese Trade Commission in New York City.

But she said poor weather in recent years has reduced the size of the crop. New uses for cork, such as insulation, also have increased demand.

Some believe a resulting shortage, which raises prices, is the cause.

"It's a little more difficult every year to get quality corks," said Bob Betz, spokesman for Chateau Ste. Michelle, Washington's largest winery. "Quality is available, but it takes more time to get it."

Natural wood is good — but the Therma-Tru® Fiber-Classic® entry door is even better.

Why? Because it won't warp or split. And it has an energy efficient core with three times the insulation value of a conventional wood door.

Stain it, paint it, or trim it as if it were wood. And install it yourself in record time. (The Fiber-Classic door is available by itself, or as part of a complete system — including frame.)

THERMA-TRU®

Making doors that last, made us first.

THERMA-TRU
 Making doors that last, made us first.

Your premier choice for beauty, durability, energy-efficiency,
 and security.

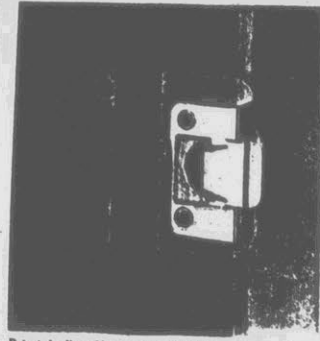

With a Therma-Tru insulated steel door system, you enjoy the performance that only our top quality, totally-engineered system can offer. Therma-Tru's system's unique features work together to ensure homeowners increased energy-efficiency and long product life; builders benefit because of fewer repair callbacks.

Weather-tight construction features include a solid polyurethane core with an R-Value of 15.15*, full thermal break edge construction that eliminates heat and cold transfer, weather-strip that seals like a refrigerator door, and our patented self-sealing, self-adjusting sill and door bottom system. These design features result in a durable system that's extraordinarily energy-efficient - with an insulating value that is five times that of wood doors and more than most other steel doors.

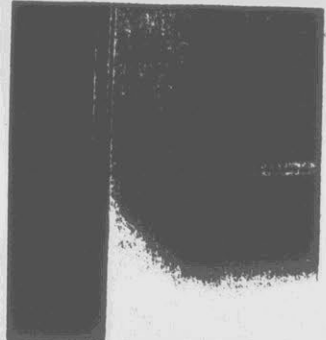

In addition to years of energy-efficient service, the Therma-Tru steel door system protects your home with unsurpassed security. Heavy, 24-gauge steel skins are tough and durable, and Therma-Tru's patented adjustable security strike plate reinforces the door frame to withstand over twice as much impact force as conventional door styles without giving way.

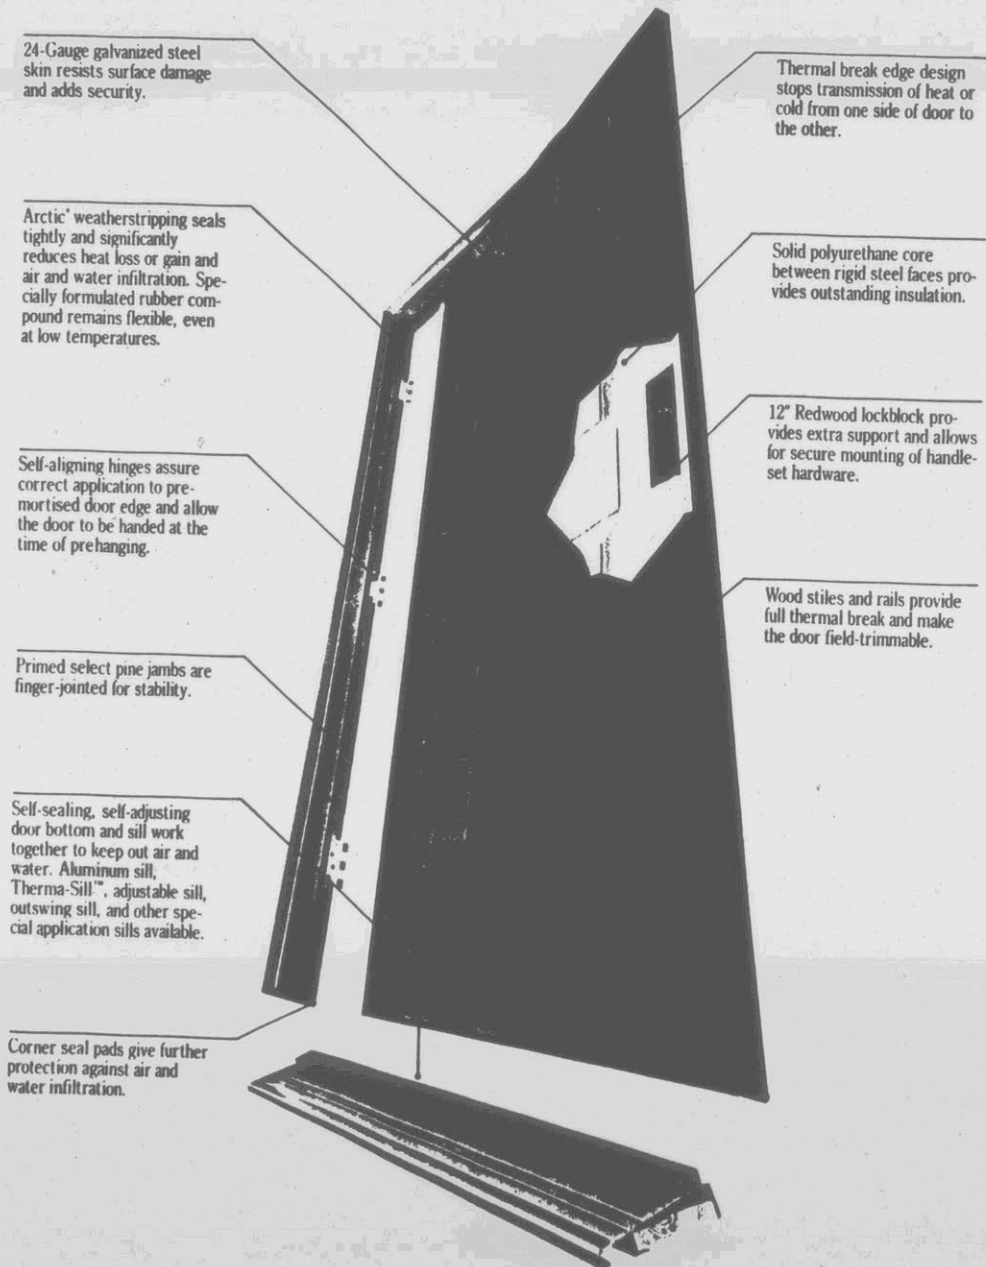

Self-sealing, self-adjusting sills available in standard aluminum, oak look Therma-Sill™, oak adjustable sill, and special application sills.

Patented adjustable security strike plate wraps around the wood jamb, spreading impact force over a wider area for more security. Its adjustability provides a tighter seal.

24-Gauge steel skins, thermal break edge design and solid polyurethane core with an R-Value of 15.15 eliminate transmission of hot and cold temperature.

Beauty that works. Day after day.
 Year after year.

*R-Value is a measure of thermal protection. The higher the R-Value, the greater the protection.

THERMA-TRU
Making doors that last, made us first.

Therma-Tru —your first choice for a fire-rated door system.

Our insulated B-Labeled Fire Doors are attractive, durable, and secure, and pass the 1½-hour fire endurance test per ASTM E-152*. Available in two handsome styles — a flush and a six-panel version — they're ideal for residential and commercial applications including office buildings, apartments, and motels (check local codes).

Our 90-minute Fire Door combined with either of our unique fire-rated steel frames gives you a full 1½-hour fire door system. Therma-Tru's Expandable Steel Frame includes a patented Slide Guide which makes it easily adjustable to wall widths from 4⅞" to 7⅞".

Our exclusive Expandable-Plus™ Steel Frame with expandable sill is adjustable from 4½" to 9" and is primed and pre-hangable as well.

These fire doors and steel frames carry a 90-minute fire rating with a certified sequentially numbered label per ASTM E-152.

Other options include ball bearing and spring-loaded hinges and door closure reinforcements.

If you want doors that are attractive and durable and need doors with a 90-minute fire rating, our insulated Steel Fire Doors and frames are for you.

*Test conducted by Warnock-Hersey International Laboratory.

Therma-Tru's steel doors are available in a wide variety of beautiful styles, each backed by our 5-year limited warranty. Choose from Embossed, Flush or Decorative Moulding styles — with or without lites. Combine them with our sidelites and transoms and you'll have dozens of design possibilities.

Therma-Tru premium steel doors also are available in patio styles — with or without decorative grilles.

Still more choices to satisfy your sense of design.

Flush Steel Doors.

The appeal of a Therma-Tru Flush steel door lies in the number of exciting design possibilities it presents. It can stand alone, be installed with a sidelite or two, or a transom. When used in a double door entry, the look is twice as effective.

A spectacular entry can be created by pairing a Flush steel door with a fabulous full oval doorlite in a Crystalline or Etched pattern, or if you prefer, Clear glass.

If you're looking for a door that provides all the Therma-Tru features plus innovative flexibility, don't overlook our Flush steel door.

Transoms.

A transom can dramatically change the scale of an entryway and make it more expansive and grandiose. It will also add individuality and architectural interest as well as value to any home.

Make your selection from Therma-Tru Crystalline Series® patterns with zinc leading or Clear lites with or without wood grilles — designed for single doors, doors with sidelites, and patio doors.

No matter which style you prefer, our transoms will add glorious new dimensions to your doorway.

Decorative Moulding Doors.

For a completely different look, review our selection of steel Decorative Moulding styles. They combine the performance features of our insulated steel doors with the beauty of rich, scrolled, raised-panel designs.

Steel Decorative Moulding doors also can be ordered with our diamond obscure glass pattern to increase privacy.

Add matching sidelites, and you've created a distinctive and stylish entryway.

Timeless favorites — Embossed and Flush doors with exquisite Crystalline Series lites.

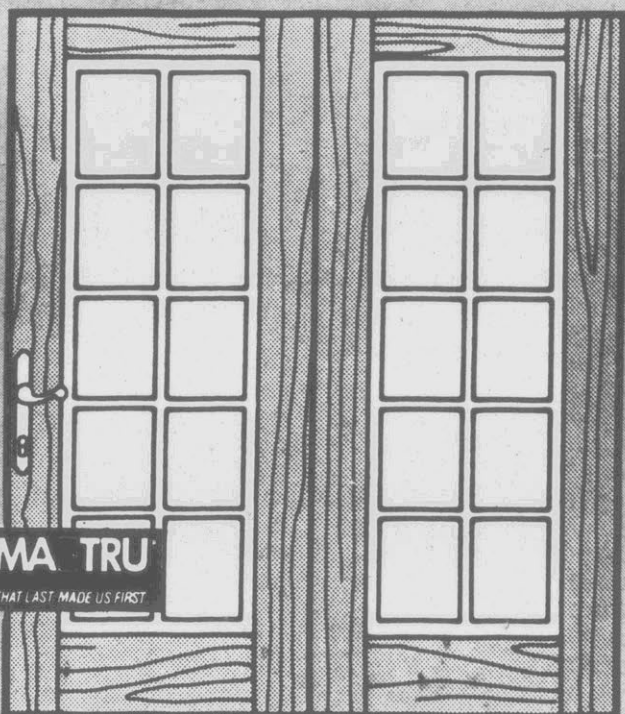

The deep, sculpted effect of Therma-Tru Embossed door designs makes them the choice for builders and homeowners alike. Embossed panel doors create sophisticated entryways that complement any architectural mood.

To add a touch of opulence to your home, select one of our Embossed or Flush designs with Crystalline lites. Therma-Tru Crystalline Series® lites sparkle like fine crystal because they are made the old world way — one at a time — not by mass-production methods. Each lite is hand-crafted of beveled clear and fine crystallized panes framed in traditional zinc leading.

Crystalline patterns are sealed between two panels of tempered glass to increase their insulation value, also making them durable and easy to clean.

For a truly exquisite entryway, consider Therma-Tru's Embossed or Flush doors enhanced with Crystalline lites, sidelites, and transoms.

THE FIBER-CLASSIC® FRENCH PATIO DOOR SYSTEM

Beauty by Design...

Performance through Engineering

- Highlighted oak-grained fiberglass surface
- Solid insulating core with foamed-in-place glass
- Won't warp, crack or split like wood
- Brass lockset standard; 10 or 15-lite grilles optional
- Five-year limited warranty (details available at our store)

MEET THE DOOR
THAT'S SO BEAUTIFUL
IT DOESN'T HAVE TO BE THIS PRACTICAL.

BUT IT IS.

The Therma-Tru® Fiber-Classic® entry door is definitely not a chip off the old block.

It's a totally new concept in door beauty: A polyurethane core that delivers three times the insulation value of a conventional wood door – plus a durable fiberglass finish that can be stained or painted just like wood.

But, unlike wood, the Fiber-Classic door will never warp or split. That's why we say it's what a wood door would be... if it could be.
