Hungary Breaks With Eastern Bloc, Keeps Door To West Open

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BERLIN — Hungary said today it will break its Warsaw Pact commitment and keep open its borders to the West, and an East German newspaper said it is time to consider why the country's young, skilled citizens are fleeing.

In Austria, the Interior Ministry said 12,158 East Germans had passed through that country en route to West Germany in the two days that refugees have been taking advantage of Hungary's newly opened border.

In Budapest, a government official said today that Hungary has no intention of reversing its dramatic new pathway to the West and that it reflects the increasingly liberal Communist nation's new role in the world.

"The Hungarian government's policy of opening the country's borders will continue," said Ferenc Somogyi, the No. 2 official in the Foreign Ministry.

He said that as long as a third country is willing to accept refugees from other East bloc countries, Hungary will allow them to leave.

But he said that the current, orchestrated migration was a "unique step" that applied only to East German citizens. "The East Germans were not treated as refugees and they did not request asylum as refugees," Somogyi said.

East Germans are automatically considered citizens of West Germany and therefore technically do not qualify as refugees.

Somogyi said the country's open-border policy was consistent with Hungary's status as a signatory of the U.N. Convention on Refugees.

GUC May Step Up Water Output

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

By Stuart Savage
 THE DAILY REFLECTOR

A yearlong experiment by the Greenville Utilities Commission may serve to prolong the life of the water treatment plant before an expansion — predicted to cost $5 million — is needed.

And a study proposed by the GUC and other municipalities along the Tar and Pamlico rivers which operate wastewater treatment plants may help improve the quality of the water which the river empties into Pamlico Sound.

Malcolm Green, GUC's general manager, told the board Tuesday night that a study of the commission's water distribution system completed in 1987 suggested the need to expand the water treatment plant by 1992.

The water plant, which opened in 1983, is designed and permitted by the state to treat up to 12 million gallons of water a day.

But Green said the public water supply section of the state's Division of Environmental Health may allow operation of the plant at filtration rates higher than those now approved. If that happens, Green told the board, an expansion of the plant could be put off until 1997.

Green explained that at present the plant filters up to 4 gallons of water per minute per square foot of filter. The yearlong testing program would see the plant operated at rates of up to 6 gallons per minute per square foot of filter, which would produce up to 18 million gallons of water a day.

If the testing program is successful, Green said, the state would allow permanent operation at higher filter rates.

Teen Puts Word On Bush

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — President Bush put the White House spotlight today on a school program that teaches youngsters to resist drugs, and wound up hearing a tough lecture from a 13-year-old against the death penalty he favors.

Chantee Charles of nearby Arlington, Va., one of three youngsters invited to speak at a Rose Garden ceremony, appeared to take the president aback with her musings on capital punishment, which she called murder.

"It does not solve anything. ... The guard that turns on the switch to electrocute the prisoner is just as much a murderer as the person who has committed the crime," the seventh-grader said.

She added that the executioner "must feel guilty afterwards, but I guess they get paid for it."

Chantee claimed that "probably thousands" of innocent prisoners have been executed, and argued that death penalty proponents "miss the point that the prisoner has a family, too."

She told reporters later she did not know of the president's stance in favor of the death penalty.

After hearing two other young people talk about the need to resist peer pressure to use drugs, Bush, who favors the death penalty for cop-killers and drug kingpins, said, "My turn."

But instead of rebutting Chantee, the president thanked all three youths and said:

"It's not easy to get up in front of a big scary audience like this and do such a good job, say what's on your heart, not worry if people agree with you or not, but recognizing that there's a common theme here that you all did a beautiful job on, and that is turning your back on drugs."

Pitt School Board Likely To Act On West Monday

By Charles Hoskinson
 THE DAILY REFLECTOR

A Pitt County Board of Education member indicated today that answers to the questions surrounding Superintendent Edwin L. West Jr.'s job may come at a board meeting scheduled for Monday.

A source close to the board told The Daily Reflector on Tuesday that West had been given an ultimatum to resign within one week or face being fired.

"We took no action (Monday)," board member Mary L. Williams said this morning. Although she would not comment on whether or not West's job is on the line, she said she would have a statement after the meeting Monday. She indicated that other board members would also be willing to talk then.

No agenda has been set for Monday's meeting, a spokesman for the county school system said today.

Monday was the second time the board met in executive session to discuss West's job performance.

Under the state's Open Meetings Law, the board may discuss an employee's job performance in private, but any final decision must be made in open session.

The board's chairman, George E. Williams said after the board meeting Monday that the board discussed a personnel matter in executive session, but did not take action. He could not be reached for comment this morning.

"They did not take any action,"

Airport To Host Fly-In Oct. 28

By Kevin Boughal
 THE DAILY REFLECTOR

The Pitt-Greenville Airport Authority approved a request by the North Carolina Aeronautical Museum to host a fly-in at local airport on Oct. 28.

"We have wanted to have a low key event here for the last year," retired Lt. Col. Paul Kenoke, a spokesman for the museum, told authority members at Tuesday's meeting.

"We want to put a museum in the airport or in the area," Kenoke said. "It would not be in competition with other institutions in the area, but it would be a complement to the other institutions. We want to have a small event to interest (flying) enthusiasts and pilots."

Kenoke told the authority that he would try to get some antique planes and cars for a small show, but the fly-in would mostly be a chance to show a model of the proposed museum and to let the pilots talk about planes. He said he expects about 20 aircraft.

The airport had a record number of passengers during August despite 36 canceled flights, according to Jim Turcotte, airport manager.

The airport recorded 378 flights carrying 8,911 passengers during August, which is 526 more passengers than August of 1988, Turcotte said.

The manager said the 36 cancellations were due mostly to bad weather and the upgrading of the airport's Instrument Landing System (ILS).

The old ILS was dismantled at the beginning of the month to make way for the new system, but while it was down, the airport had several days of bad weather and fog, said Turcotte.

The new unit was commissioned on Aug. 25, Turcotte said, but it will not be completely certified by the Federal Aviation Administration until Dec. 14. It must go through several inspections, including a Wilcox flight check, FAA procedures, FAA ground inspection and FAA flight inspection before then.

"Asking around, I've discovered that it usually takes about two and one half years to get ILS installed and we've done it much faster than that," Turcotte told the Airport Authority.

The new ILS should be completely in place about the same time the airlines plan to start replacing their aircraft with newer planes, Turcotte said. USAir has been planning to acquire a 50-55 turbo prop plane and is

Knox conducts program at Alpha Xi Delta sorority house Tuesday on rape prevention

Coeds Live In Fear As Rape Scare Grows

By Charles Hoskinson
 THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Tracy Holderfield is scared. The 22-year-old East Carolina University senior says she and her two roommates don't feel safe anymore in their off-campus apartment. "We have people come by our house and bang on our doors. We've seen people looking into windows," she said.

She sleeps with a knife by her bed. "I'm terrified that someone's going to break in," Ms. Holderfield said.

A series of rapes and attempted rapes in the campus area has many ECU women feeling unsafe. Like Ms. Holderfield, they fear they will be the next victim.

There have been 22 rapes and attempted rapes reported in Greenville since Jan. 1, compared to a total of 15 last year. Police have made arrests in eight cases.

Police are especially concerned with three rapes that occurred near campus this summer, one of which involved an ECU student. In each case, the rapist entered the victim's home and raped her. Greenville police have said they believe the three rapes were committed by the same person.

ECU police say they believe there are similarities between this rapist and the man they are seeking in connection with the attempted rape of an ECU student in a campus parking lot Aug. 31.

Both ECU and Greenville police are quick to point out, however, that there is nothing unusual about the rapes that have so far occurred. But rumors persist, fueled by fear. A reported rape Tuesday in the parking lot of the Baptist Student Union on 10th Street turned out to be a hoax.

Many women say they are terrified. They lock their doors at night and refuse to go out. They said every man is suspect — even an innocent neighbor walking on the same side of the street toward his house.

"Ever since all this has happened I do not walk alone," Ms. Holderfield said. "We used to walk home alone all the time, but now we're too scared to do that."

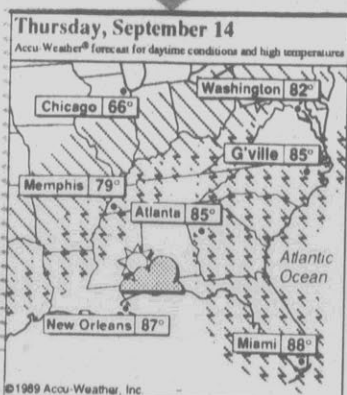

University officials have responded to the concern by increasing police patrols on campus and by sending public safety officers to residence halls and sorority houses to make students more aware of how to avoid potential rape situations. They say these measures will help reduce the chances for rapes to occur.

At the Alpha Xi Delta sorority house Tuesday, Lt. Keith Knox, ECU Department of Public Safety's crime prevention officer, prepared to give his rape-prevention class. As the sorority members assembled for the class, many seemed more concerned with the dinner that was being

Police Say Rape Report Was Hoax

The reported rape of an East Carolina University co-ed early Tuesday morning was "a fabricated story," Greenville police said today.

Detective S.B. Pass said Jessica Harris Riggs, 20, of Raleigh (127 Umstead Drive), who reported that she had been sexually assaulted near the intersection of 10th and Lawrence streets about 1:26 a.m., later Tuesday admitted that her story had been made up.

Pass said that, "during the course of the investigation we began to feel things didn't add up." Acting on those feelings, Pass said, investigators continued to question Miss Riggs, who admitted fabricating the story.

While no charges were brought against Miss Riggs on Tuesday, Pass said information on the case was turned over to the district attorney's office.

Pass and East Carolina University police officers close to the investigation said Miss Riggs was suspended from school because of the false report.

But Alfred Mathews, vice chancellor for student life at ECU, when asked about the terms of the suspension, said "any disciplinary action is protected by the right of privacy act," and would not comment.

Panel Set On India

ECU NEWS BUREAU

A community program on the culture and values of first generation immigrants from India will be held Friday from 7 p.m. to 9 p.m. in the Willis Building at East Carolina University.

The roundtable discussion is the first in a series of four programs dealing with Indian, Hispanic, Chinese and Arabic cultures.

Sponsored by the North Carolina Humanities Council, the program will provide a discussion by scholars, immigrants and interested citizens. An exhibit of art and artifacts and sampling of food and music will also be included in the program.

Participating on the panel will be Paramatma Saran, an associate professor of sociology at Baruch College, the City University of New York; Dr. Avtar Singh, a professor of sociology and anthropology at ECU; Usha Gulati, a Greenville entrepreneur and social worker, and Dr. Jose F. Caro, a professor in the ECU School of Medicine.

Moderator for the panel discussion will be DiAnn Bowen, co-host for the WNCT-TV program "Carolina Today."

Later program sessions will include Hispanic culture on Oct. 6, Chinese culture on Nov. 3 and Arabic culture on Dec. 1.

For more information, contact Dr. Mohammed Ahad at the ECU School of Nursing, 757-6061.

DOT Funds

RALEIGH (AP) — The state Department of Transportation is diverting $50,000 from landscaping projects in four mountain counties because the legislature raided DOT funds in order to staff a welcome center near Franklin, a newspaper reports.

A seven-county private group of businesses involved in tourism called Smoky Mountain Host had agreed to operate the welcome center — to be completed next summer on U.S. 441 — but then lobbied the General Assembly this summer to provide money to help pay the cost.

Transportation Secretary James Harrington has placed a hold on landscaping projects in Macon, Transylvania, Haywood, and Jackson counties — as well as several counties in eastern North Carolina — as a result of the legislature's action.

Winterville Citizens Seek Dismissal Of Police Chief

By Carol Tyer
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Some Winterville citizens said this morning that they were requesting a meeting with the town's police commissioner, Willie Lester Jones, to discuss the dismissal of Police Chief Lester Smith.

Smith, who the state Criminal Justice Standards Commission confirmed Tuesday has been slated by the panel for a five-year suspension from law enforcement, is charged with having "knowingly misrepresented facts" in a report to the commission.

The commission found Aug. 25 that Smith had reported that three police officers working in the Winterville department had been given 16 hours of supervised use of radar speed detection equipment when they, in fact, had not.

Calvin Henderson, a spokesman for those requesting the dismissal, said this morning that the citizens who were to talk to Jones feel that the Winterville Board of Aldermen should have acted Monday night during its regular meeting to dismiss Smith.

Henderson said he understood the aldermen had knowledge of the state agency's findings Monday.

"If the state commission has determined that he is guilty of an offense which calls for dismissal from law enforcement work, we don't believe that the town is acting responsibly in upholding him as police chief," Henderson said.

Contacted at noon today, Jones said he had not heard from Henderson and the other citizens seeking Smith's dismissal. "I think the chief's in enough hot water already without the citizens of Winterville making it worse on him," Jones commented.

Smith expressed confidence Tuesday in a telephone interview that he would be exonerated during a hearing before the commission.

David Cashwell, state Criminal Justice Standards Division director, confirmed that the hearing has been granted, and said a date has not been set.

Under commission policy, Smith can continue in law enforcement until the hearing is completed, Cashwell said.

Discussion Slated On Pitt Child Care

ECU NEWS BUREAU

Child care facilities in Pitt County will be discussed Tuesday at a "lunchtime learning" session in East Carolina University's Mendenhall Student Center.

The program is the first of the academic year in a monthly series sponsored by the ECU Committee on the Status of Women and will feature Brenda Ernest, director of the Pitt Community College Pre-School Laboratory. All interested persons in the campus and local communities are invited to attend and bring bag lunches to 221 Mendenhall around noon. The discussion will begin at 12:30 p.m.

Adequate child care is "a critical need for all working parents," particularly in Pitt County, where more than half of all mothers work outside the home, said Inez Fridley of the ECU Committee on the Status of Women.

Topics to be addressed at Tuesday's program will be in-house child care provided by large employers, North Carolina day care licensing regulations and how parents can choose and monitor child care arrangements for quality.

Child care has been identified by the ECU committee as "a priority topic" for 1989, Ms. Fridley said. Subsequent "lunchtime learning" programs will focus on women in management, women's health care and other current topics.

EMOTIONAL TOLERANCE

MEDICAL PARK ASSOCIATES

Many couples become very concerned, even panicked, when there is conflict in their relationship. To the outside observer, the fear may seem out of proportion to the degree of conflict. In trying to understand this often-unrealistic but nonetheless paralyzing fear, therapists often must trace a multigenerational family history in which emotions seemed chaotic but were avoided, not dealt with.

Individuals who haven't experienced emotions and conflict as an essential part of a growing relationship tend to interpret them as catastrophic and dangerous. Couples with this belief system avoid emotions until they become unbearable. Then things explode — often out of proportion — perpetuating the underlying fears.

Becoming more emotionally tolerant is a process that requires skilled professional assistance. Exposing fears, learning new behavior patterns, and struggling through the discomfort of learning to relate to others more fully, can seldom be successful without experienced help and support. Together a couple can learn to tolerate the kinds of feelings that are actually more mutually binding than destructive.

YOUR EYEGGLASS PRESCRIPTION
What does the Federal Trade Commission say about "Eyeglass Prescriptions?"

Q. Can I charge my patients an extra fee for releasing the prescription?
A. No. The Rule makes it illegal for you to charge your patients any fee in excess of your normal examination fee as a charge for releasing the prescription. So if your normal examination fee is $30, you cannot add an extra $5 or $10 for releasing the prescription.

Q. When do I have to give out a prescription?
A. The prescription must be given to your patient immediately after you complete the eye examination. This means that you must give your patient his or her prescription before you begin your dispensing procedures (if you also dispense eyeglasses).

Q. What if my patient doesn't ask for the prescription? Do I still have to give it out to my patient?
A. Yes. The Rule requires that you prepare the prescription and physically offer it to the patient. Of course, you can't force the patient to take it, but you must offer him or her the written prescription. Simply asking your patients whether they want their prescription is not sufficient. We found that many consumers had never seen a prescription for corrective eyewear, and thus were unaware that they could take that piece of paper and use it to comparison shop.

Q. What is the penalty for violating the Rule?
A. The penalty for violating the Rule is up to $10,000 per violation.

Q. How can I report violations of the Rule?

'Truth In Preference To Fiction'

The Bottom

A Question Of Commitment

Parents, students and educators must be numb to the words "at the bottom" and "lowest" when it comes to Scholastic Aptitude Test scores. It seems those are the only words that apply when either North Carolina or Pitt County are compared with other states and similar school systems. That position does little to inspire public confidence in schools and it sharply reflects the need for commitment to a strong public education system.

The news that North Carolina seniors ranked lowest nationally in SAT scores this year put an even finer edge on the ax that critics of the state's education system grind. And while the news about Pitt's scores was mixed, the county shares the shame that North Carolina bears by being dead last.

It is neither tolerable for North Carolina to rank last in the nation in SAT scores nor Pitt County to lag behind the national average.'

Pitt County scored higher than the state average on math scores but it remained below the state on the verbal section of the test. While the county's scores have improved steadily for four years, they remain significantly lower than the national average. Pitt students scored 846 on the combined math and verbal sections, while nationally the average score was 903.

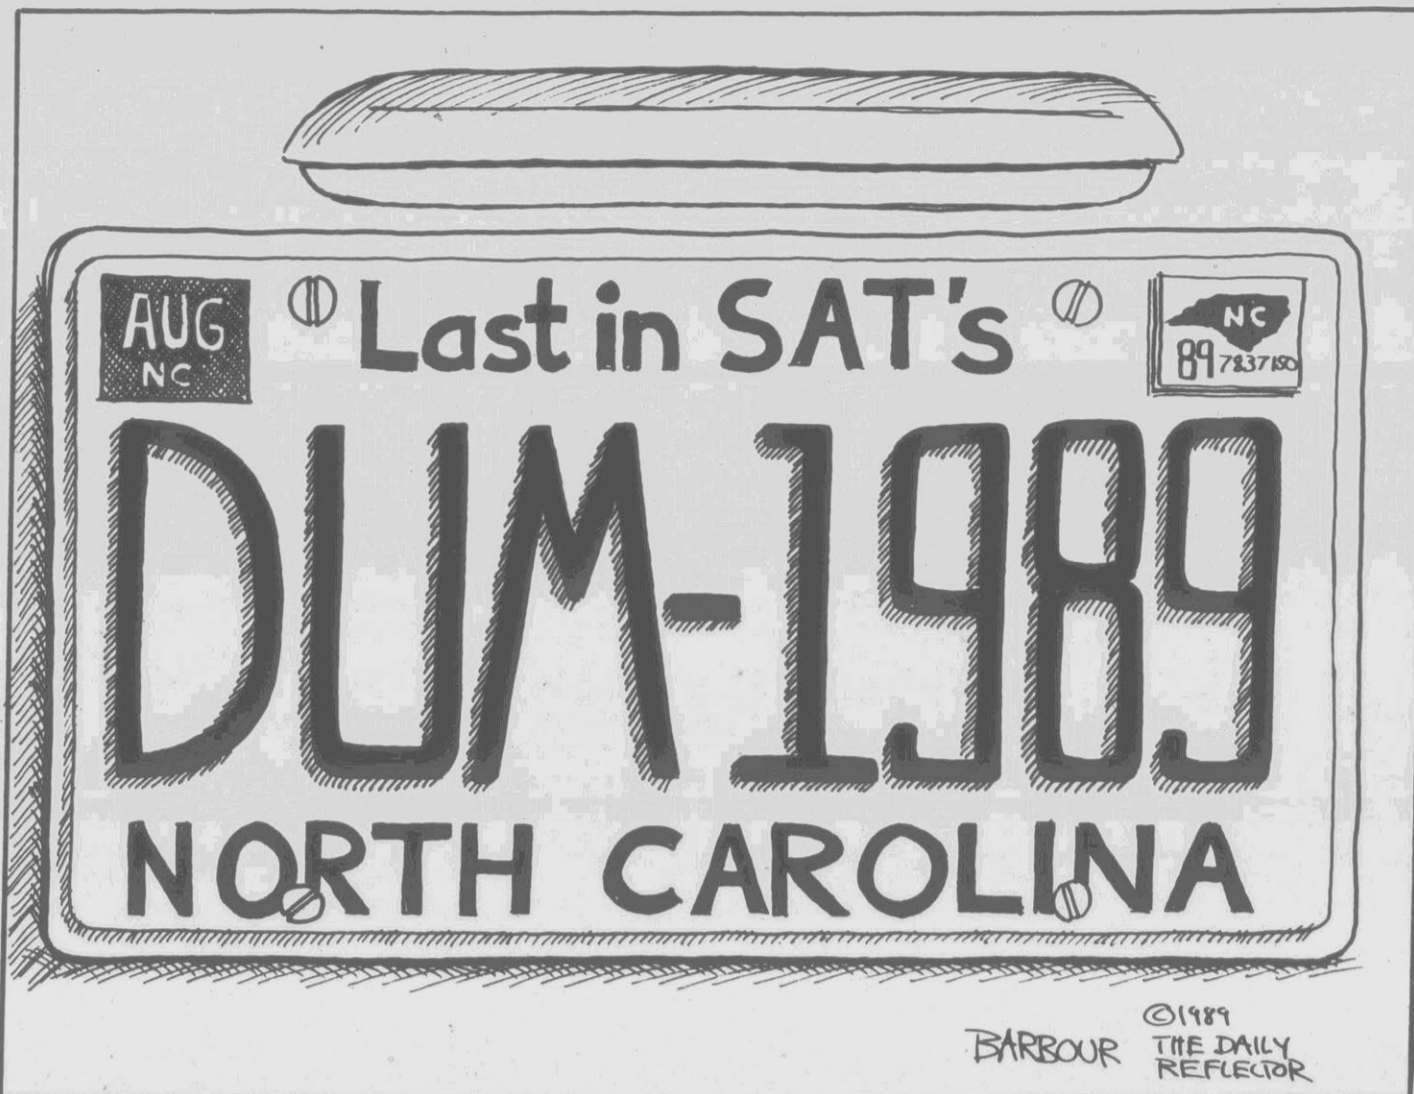

It is neither tolerable for North Carolina to rank last in the nation in SAT scores nor Pitt County to lag behind the national average. North Carolina encourages a broad base of students to take the test. Some states require only the brightest college bound students to participate; that increases the scores for those states. But North Carolina even ranked behind states like South Carolina and Virginia, when demographics are similar and where large numbers of students take the test.

For North Carolina, an immediate task is at hand: get out of last place. A careful, concerted effort should begin to improve students' comprehension and performance. The measures proposed Tuesday by State Superintendent Bobby Etheridge represent a good starting place.

For both Pitt County and North Carolina, a second, long-range task awaits: improve commitment to public education. It takes talent and resources to foster excellence. While SAT score ranking is not the only measurement of a public school system, it is an important and established indicator of quality. When commitment improves, so do indicators.

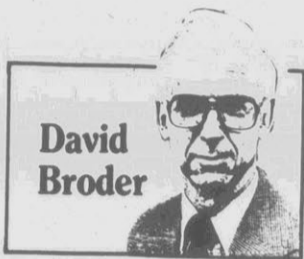

The state's legislature moved further from that obligation in 1989 when it slashed the budget of the Basic Education Program, a measure designed to give each school child in North Carolina an equal education. Ranking dead last in SATs should provide that body incentive to restore its commitment to the BEP.

When thoughtful measures are applied to an education problem, improvement is possible. The slow yet steady increase in Pitt County's SAT scores over the last four years prove it. Now is the time to apply such measures to the state's school troubles — along with a firm commitment to public education.

Playing The Low Stakes Game

WASHINGTON — Slowly the truth is beginning to dawn on Washington. People and policies are starting to fall into a familiar pattern. And the realization is growing that George Bush has not found a formula for extending the Reagan revolution. Instead, he has re-created the Eisenhower presidency.

David Broder

The early indicators were misleading. Where Dwight Eisenhower was elected in 1952 on a "Time for a Change" slogan, ending 20 years of Democratic control of the White House, Bush's theme was continuity. While Eisenhower was a national hero, Bush seemed at first to be badly overshadowed by his predecessor and unlikely to command a large following of his own.

But less than one-sixth of the way into his first term, this President has turned out to be as popular in his way as Eisenhower — a comfortable figure that most of the voters have decided is well-meaning, well-organized and on top of his job. If his speeches are as forgettable as Eisenhower's, his news conferences are as frequent and professional. His overall approach evokes trust, and opponents find their disagreements on specific policies hard to dramatize.

Once the parallel is acknowledged, it makes sense, for Bush was raised as an Eisenhower Republican. His father was one of the general's early political supporters and a loyal ally in the Senate. Eisenhower was the first President for whom George Bush voted.

Like Eisenhower, and unlike Reagan, Bush's instinct is to seek consensus. His background is far more partisan than the general's, a lifetime military man who did not declare a party affiliation until he was persuaded to seek the presidency. But if Bush cares more deeply than Eisenhower ever did about Republicans winning elections for other offices, he is as willing as Eisenhower was to do business with the Democrats on Capitol Hill. And those Democrats are easy to draw into the bipartisan game.

House Speaker Thomas S. Foley (D-Wash.) is a protege of the late Sen. Scoop Jackson, one of the key Democratic legislators of the Eisenhower era and a man who believed that politics should stop at the water's edge. Foley obviously doesn't have the control of the House that Sam Rayburn had in the Eisenhower era. But from Nicaragua to Lebanon to Poland to China, Foley has proven to be Bush's loyal partner.

Over on the Senate side, Majority Leader George Mitchell (D-Maine) is a far cry from Lyndon Johnson, who held that post during most of the Eisenhower period, when it comes to legislative showmanship. But Mitchell, like Johnson, believes that his party must be "responsible" if it is to regain the voters' trust. He is also cognizant that his own presidential hopes, no more implausible than LBJ's seemed 30 years ago, rest on making the Senate look more productive than partisan.

What makes all of this possible is the crucial break Bush has made with the Reagan model. Reagan came to the presidency convinced that government was not the solution but the problem. For all his personal agreeableness, that deep-seated belief, or prejudice, put him at odds with the rest of official Washington, which depends on governmental activism.

Bush, as successful a careerist in the civilian side of government as Eisenhower was in the military, harbors no anti-government sentiments. He enjoys government and believes in its utility.

Even more than Eisenhower, Bush is ready to recognize domestic needs that require government action. Like him, he'd rather things were done inexpensively, with a minimum of federal paperwork and a maximum reliance on the states. But he accepts that there are tasks to be done and that the federal government has a role to play. Once that's conceded, Congress, the bureaucracy and the interest groups are in a game they enjoy, knowing that all of them will be, to some degree, winners.

Legislators will have bills or amendments with their names on them — drug bills, day care bills, disabled-rights bills, you name it. Old agencies like NASA and EPA, which languished in the Reagan years, will get new missions. And new agencies, like the one bailing out the savings and loans, will come into being. Lobbyists will make deals with each other to carve up the expanding federal pie, instead of being at each others' throats as they were when Reagan was upsetting everyone's applecart.

Of course, the United States does not dominate the world economic and political stage now the way it did in the Fifties. But the chaos inside the Soviet and Chinese superpowers provides a breathing space and people are ready to enjoy it.

Even the politicians — the Democrats on Capitol Hill and the Republicans in the administration — find the status quo easily endurable. They can muster limited enthusiasm for the seemingly remote prospect of ousting the other party from its place of power.

It's so much easier to relax and play the familiar low-stakes game, which is exactly what Washington is doing.

Artistic Freedom Is Not To Be Trifled With

WASHINGTON — In 1917, Vice President Thomas Marshall said, "What this country really needs is a good five-cent cigar" — coining a phrase that others have amended. A character in a Clifford Odets play suggested a "good five-cent earthquake," another writer proposed "a good five-cent saga" and the columnist Franklin P. Adams (1943) recommended "a good five-cent nickel."

Let me add my two cents: What this country needs is a good resignation at any price. We may start with the director of Washington's Corcoran Gallery of Art.

It was the Corcoran, you may recall, which announced a show of Robert Mapplethorpe's homoerotic photos and then, in anticipation of congressional displeasure, changed its mind. Virtually as predicted, Sen. Jesse Helms (R-N.C.) bellowed his indignation. With malice but little forethought, he moved to prohibit federal funding of obscene art — whatever that is.

After the trembling Corcoran caved, the Mapplethorpe show was moved to the Washington Project of the Arts where nearly 50,000 people, some of them probably led astray by Helms, viewed it. A show that was supposed to be pornographic turned out to be something else instead: daring and provocative maybe, but hardly smut. Such was the universal judgment of the critics.

The Corcoran flap was distinctly un-Washington. It is rare for this town to concern itself with questions of taste, if only because we have been dulled over the years by true obscenity: the secret bombing of Cambodia, Richard Nixon prefacing a lie with the word "frankly," or, more recently, the use of HUD funds to enrich already-rich political consultants. Washingtonians can no more recognize obscenity than Venetians can recognize a flooded street.

But what Washington doesn't know about art, the artistic community does not know about censorship. Beating its chest and wailing, it accuses Congress of censoring the arts. Congress intends nothing of the sort. National Endowment for the Arts money comes from taxes and no matter what the artistic community thinks of Mapplethorpe's work, it may well be too gamey for general consumption. Withholding funds is subtly different from censorship, although the effect may be the same.

For all their shrill talk, however, the artists have the better argument: The Corcoran chickened out. It did so not because Mapplethorpe showed up at the last minute with some unanticipated pieces (the man, after all, is dead), but because the museum feared the political reaction. Its decision may have been prudent, but it was a political, not artistic, one.

Now the arts community is showing it knows how to play the same game. Several artists have withdrawn their shows from the Corcoran and another, Lowell Nesbitt, has hit the museum where it hurts: He cut the Corcoran out of his estimated $1 million will. If this sort of thing keeps up, the Corcoran, a proud and estimable museum, may be reduced to showing senatorial portraits of Jesse Helms with an occasional surrealist Alfonso D'Amato (R-N.Y.) thrown in — say an oil of him getting HUD low-income housing money to build a swimming pool for his middle-class neighbors.

So what's to be done? Easy. The museum's director, Christina Orr-Cahall, should resign. Backed by the board, she screwed up. Having accepted the Mapplethorpe show, the museum had an obligation to proceed as planned. It cannot allow donors — Congress or individuals — to veto artistic decisions on political grounds. If the Corcoran had originally taken a pass on the Mapplethorpe show, that would have been one thing. But once the decision was made, the Corcoran should have stuck to it.

A resounding resignation would set a wholesome precedent. As it is, almost no one resigns in this town. We proclaim individualism and then almost never hold the individual accountable. Think back. Who resigned when the Vietnam War became a fiasco? More recently, the 1983 bombing of the Marine barracks in Beirut produced not a single resignation — even though 241 lives were lost. It was as if no one was responsible when, almost certainly, the Marine brass had bungled security.

In Europe and Japan, on the other hand, resignations are common. It seems Japan has recently had a prime minister a week and, in 1957, Anthony Eden resigned as Britain's prime minister after the Suez invasion. He did so not because he was guilty of anything, but because he exercised poor judgment.

The Corcoran is not a government and art is not a war — but bad judgment is bad judgment. Its director's resignation would show artists that the museum acknowledges its mistake. Maybe that would restore the artistic community's faith in the Corcoran's commitment to art and, not incidentally, show Congress that artistic freedom is not something to trifle with.

Best of all, it might establish a precedent in Washington. It's called accountability.

Merging The Issues Of Religion And Day Care

Leah Latimer

WASHINGTON — At Asbury United Methodist Church in Northwest Washington, under a picture of Jesus and a blackboard chalked with Bible verses, 58 children nap, pray and thank God twice a day for the hot food a retired church member brings in. At an annual show last year for parents, a 3-year-old recited the 23rd Psalm: "The Lord is my shepherd..." the little one began.

The setting and activities of the Asbury group may seem religious, but this isn't Sunday school. This is day care, and it's becoming a painful political issue.

Around the country, groups like the church-based Asbury Child Development Center are prompting a national debate on religion in day care. The talk is about prayer in preschools and hymns in nurseries, about whether a sitter can evangelize between naps and diaper changes.

For parents, the issue often comes down to convenience and cost. Church day-care centers are usually safe and inexpensive places to leave a toddler-better than dropping the baby off at the cramped basement of a sitter found through the classifieds. Explains Ian Douglas, a pharmacist whose 4-year-old son attends a Baptist child-care center in Northeast Washington: "We feel these people at least are people with some kind of morals."

But on Capitol Hill, the issue is church and state. And as the first major child-care legislation of the decade works its way through Congress, politicians, child-care advocates and civil libertarians are debating government's role in subsidizing and regulating an industry that is intertwined with religion.

To a surprising extent, day care in America is church-based. According to the National Council of Churches, a third of the nation's day-care children spend their days in church basements, annexes and Sunday school rooms.

The stakes are high. The Senate in June passed the Act for Better Child Care, a $1.75 billion package that would help low- and moderate-income families pay child care costs. After much debate and political maneuvering by some religious groups, the Senate included in the legislation wording prohibiting the centers from using federal funds directly for religious purposes. But it but did not ban them outright from receiving federal day care dollars, as some civil libertarians had sought. The House of Representatives takes up its own child care package this fall.

"One of the most serious church-state issues that the Congress has to deal with is in the area of child care," says Barry Lynn of the American Civil Liberties Union.

Led by the ACLU, some child-advocacy and civil libertarian organizations have demanded that all child-care programs that receive federal money avoid religious instruction and preferential enrollment based on religious affiliation or membership. Some would go further and require religious neutrality in centers sponsored by churches or simply located in them—no picture of the Last Supper, no statue of the Virgin Mary, no Star of David.

The ACLU's Lynn would go further still and deny federal money to any child-care center located in a church, temple or synagogue. "There are religious artifacts on the wall, there's religious music coming down the hall. It sends the unmistakable message to the youngest day care student that this is a religious institution," he says.

When it comes to child care, dividing church and state poses some delicate questions: Can church-based programs be entirely secular when crucifixes are on the walls? Can nuns wear their habits when they are involved in an after-school program that receives federal child-care money?

"Our concern is for the protection of religious rights of minority children," said Mary Cooper, director of the National Council of Churches' Washington office. "If a child is Jewish... in a setting dominated by Christians, it's hard to protect the right of that child to express his or her own religious values," she said.

Church-based child-care centers aren't necessarily religious. According to the National Council of Churches, only half of the country's church-based centers are actually run by churches; the rest are run by community or private groups. And child-care experts say that some church-based facilities display no signs of religion, while others teach Bible stories and sing hymns, and regard the centers as part of their religious mission.

At the Asbury Child Development Center, where the children pray and occasionally recite psalms, director Katherine Flora maintains that religion "doesn't come into the picture." The center itself is decorated with the Three Little Pigs and other storybook characters, she notes. Bible verses and religious pictures on the walls are left over from the Sunday school classes that use the rooms once a week. The prayers, she said, are, well, just a part of the routine.

In the end, parents will have to decide: Does it matter if toddlers sing "Jesus Loves Me"? And how much evangelizing can you do with 2-year-olds anyway?

Promising Never-Ending War

Wiley Hall III

Like you, I had hoped President Bush would launch a bold new initiative in the war against drugs during his nationally televised speech last week.

Like you, I had hoped he would shift the focus of the war from law enforcement to drug treatment and prevention.

And this didn't seem like too much to hope for because so many people who have fought in the trenches in this war feel that it cannot be won any other way.

Last year, for instance, a national poll of state prosecutors found that the overwhelming majority felt that more arrests and longer sentences had not significantly lowered the availability of drugs in their communities, nor had they deterred drug use. The respondents called for more drug treatment facilities and money for education programs.

But Bush confounded all of our hopes last week and boldly announced more of the same: more arrests, more prisons, harsher penalties for a wider spectrum of people.

An estimated 23 million Americans use drugs and Bush wants to hold everyone criminally responsible — casual users, the international drug cartels, pregnant women.

To do this, he said, the criminal justice system would have to be "expanded across the board." So 70 percent of his $7.9 billion drug package is devoted to law enforcement. State and local governments will be expected to kick in billions of dollars more.

Never mind that the United States has fought this war for better than two decades and is losing.

In the real world, wise men abandon an approach that doesn't work.

In the political world, it seems, you expand upon it. So now, I give up.

I am tired of living in the real world.

If we are going to be silly and unrealistic, let's go all the way. Instead of decriminalizing drugs, let's criminalize alcohol and tobacco.

If Bush's motto is "More of the same," my new motto will become "Much, much more of the same."

Like drugs, the use of alcohol and tobacco is sapping our strength as a nation. Last year, alcohol contributed to more than half of the 49,000 fatal accidents and to a large proportion of the industrial accidents. Three-quarters of our prison population have problems with alcohol, and recidivism among that group is particularly high.

In 1987, a study by the federal Office of Smoking and Health concluded that cigarette smoking is responsible for 16 percent of all deaths in the United States, including those attributed to heart and lung diseases, cancers, fires and fatal infant ailments.

It is time we held everyone associated with the liquor and tobacco trade criminally responsible.

There are an estimated 10.4 million alcoholics in the country and some 55 million cigarette smokers, so, obviously, our prisons and jails will have to be greatly expanded.

We should concentrate our enforcement efforts on all levels of the alcohol and tobacco trade, from the international liquor and tobacco cartels to the casual smoker and drinker.

We should especially target the mid-level alcohol and tobacco dealers: the neighborhood grocer and the owner of the corner liquor store.

Women who are found to have used alcohol or tobacco during pregnancy should be charged with attempted murder and thrown into prison. They can deliver their children in the prison infirmary.

Federal agents should seize buses and subways that advertise alcohol and tobacco products and sell them at auction.

We should develop and maintain a master list of smokers and drinkers so that they will not be allowed to live in public housing. The families of current smokers and drinkers should be thrown into the streets.

And it goes without saying that there should be sweeping provisions for widespread random testing.

Recently, the president's budget director, Richard G. Darman, told Congress that money for Bush's drug package can be raised by making modest cuts in existing programs. For instance, he suggested cutting a program aimed at reducing unemployment and another program aimed at preventing juvenile delinquency.

Obviously, the fight against alcohol and tobacco will necessitate even deeper cuts in social programs.

And the best thing of all about Bush's approach is this: It promises warfare without end.

When we fail, and we will, we simply announce a bold new strategy — one that offers more of the same.

House OKs Bill Banning Public Misuse Of Flag

By Tom Bowman
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — The House wrapped itself tightly in the American flag Tuesday, voting overwhelmingly in favor of a measure that would restore fines and jail terms for those who desecrate the national symbol.

The 380-38 vote was a reaction to the public outcry after a U.S. Supreme Court decision in June that struck down a Texas law prohibiting desecration of the U.S. flag.

Under the measure, anyone who "knowingly mutilates, defaces, burns or tramples the flag of the United States" would be liable for fines of up to $100,000 and a year in jail.

During debate, Democratic supporters said that the statute was a reasonable response to the 5-4 Supreme Court decision which effectively overturned flag desecration laws in Texas and 47 other states.

But some Republicans said that only a constitutional amendment protecting the flag would shield it from future court decisions.

"It is far better to undertake a procedure we are confident will cure the problem, such as a constitutional amendment," said Rep. F. James Sensenbrenner, R-Wis., who led the opposition.

Rep. Chuck Douglas, R-N.H., denounced the bill as a "sham and a shame," terming it the "flag burners protection act of 1989."

Conservative Republicans were joined in opposing the bill by some liberal Democrats — such as Rep. Patricia Schroeder, D-Colo., and Rep. Ted Weiss, D-N.Y. — who argued that the bill curtailed the First Amendment right of free speech.

Weiss said that neither a bill nor a constitutional amendment was needed to protect the flag. "What we need is more faith in the United States Constitution," he said.

The Senate is expected to take up its own flag-protection bill next month and will take a separate vote on a constitutional amendment to prohibit flag desecration.

House Speaker Thomas Foley, D-Wash., told reporters before the vote that he would be willing to have a vote on a constitutional amendment after the Senate action. Foley also said support for the statute was increasing while backing for an amendment was on the wane.

The White House called the House measure inadequate and said that President Bush would continue to push for a constitutional amendment. Presidential spokesman Marlin Fitzwater refrained, however, from threatening a veto of the bill if it passed.

GOP Seeks Drug Compromise

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The White House is asking Senate Democrats to compromise on anti-drug legislation, while President Bush warns young people not to "blow it" by getting involved in drugs.

Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell, D-Maine, and his GOP counterpart, Sen. Bob Dole of Kansas, held talks on the Democratic proposal Tuesday. Further meetings among lawmakers from both parties were planned today.

Dole and other top GOP senators also met with top White House officials, emerging to say Republicans want to make a deal with the Democrats.

"The administration ... is prepared at any time to sit down ... and see if there is some way to bring it together," Dole said.

The closed-door sessions were held after Senate Appropriations Committee Chairman Robert Byrd, D-W.Va. — with Mitchell's support — proposed a $3.9 billion anti-drug program as an amendment to the $11.9 billion transportation spending bill for next year. Fiscal 1990 begins Oct. 1.

Meanwhile, Bush went on television Tuesday to ask schoolchildren across the country to help any friends who use drugs. Rejecting drugs "won't make you a nerd," Bush said, adding, "I'm asking you to find someone who needs you. And offer to help."

He said, "I'll let you in on a secret: We all can succeed. If you don't use drugs, you can be anything you want to be. ... So don't blow it."

Also, a pair of Senate appropriations subcommittees adopted their own anti-drug proposals.

Byrd said his plan would add $3.9 billion to the $6.2 billion Congress otherwise planned to spend on anti-drug efforts next year. The $10.1 billion total would be $2.2 billion more than what Bush has sought.

But the White House announced that top administration officials would urge Bush to veto it.

"It throws money at the problem rather than providing a plan," said a statement by the White House Office of Management and Budget.

Byrd told reporters he was "puzzled" by the White House statement and referred to the president's televised speech last week in which he revealed his own drug proposals.

"Mr. Bush went on TV the other night and stated in eloquent fashion ... that the drug war was right here on our streets," Byrd told reporters. "I believed what he said. This is my way of trying to develop something that's comprehensive."

Byrd's plan would include $1.1 billion for drug and alcohol treatment and $1 billion for new prisons, and would divide its resources 53 to 47 percent between law enforcement and treatment programs. It would be financed by a 0.575 percent cut in defense and domestic spending, except for Social Security and other benefit programs.

Republicans, however, argued that Byrd's plan would provide more money than can efficiently be spent, provides too little for enforcement efforts, and would slash an intolerable $1.8 billion out of defense.

White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said the administration supports a bipartisan measure approved Tuesday by the Senate commerce, justice and state subcommittee.

White House Open To Changing Catastrophic Care

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The Bush administration, facing "tidal waves" of complaints from the elderly, says it is willing to consider replacing an unpopular surtax to finance catastrophic health insurance.

As the Senate Finance Committee searched Tuesday for last-ditch ways to prevent repeal of the program, administration officials said a repeal is unacceptable because of the revenue loss it would cause.

The administration is "listening and learning" to what Congress proposes in the way of alternatives to finance the insurance program, said William Diefenderfer III, deputy director of the Office of Management and Budget.

The surtax, paid by the wealthiest 40 percent of all retirees, is the chief financing mechanism for the catastrophic insurance program enacted a year ago as an expansion of Medicare.

Bush supported the plan during his presidential campaign last year. "The administration thought it was a good program when it passed" during the Reagan administration, said White House Press Secretary Marlin Fitzwater.

But now, he said, the "political aspects" of the program have become clear.

"The elderly complaints are rolling in tidal waves of immense proportion," Fitzwater said. "We recognize the impact on the elderly ... We recognize their concern.

"We're working with Congress ... searching for a way to mitigate the financial problems and save the program."

Most of the complaints come from middle and upper income retirees who contend they are bearing most of the cost of the program, and those who are covered by private insurance plans.

But Diefenderfer said repeal of the entire program — and the loss of its $4 billion to $7 billion in surtax revenue — probably would force automatic spending cuts in other federal programs, including those that benefit the elderly and needy Americans.

Brady Says U.S. Savings Too Low

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The Bush administration is gearing up for a major campaign to encourage Americans to save more money and urge U.S. companies to make long-term investments rather than chasing fast-buck takeover deals.

"We've been willing to mortgage our future, to sacrifice quality and to cut corners in the pursuit of the immediate payoff," Treasury Secretary Nicholas Brady said Tuesday night. The United States needs to make fundamental changes in its economic affairs or risk losing out to international competitors, he warned.

Brady indicated the administration is considering ways to expand tax incentives to encourage individual savings, proposals to eliminate the double-taxation of stock dividends and initiatives that would encourage corporate managers to focus more on long-term performance.

"Our approach to the challenges of the 1990s and beyond should be to maintain our competitiveness where it's strong and to rebuild it where it has faltered," Brady said in a speech billed as the opening salvo in the administration's new campaign.

Brady said other nations are challenging America's economic leadership because the country has grown complacent with too many corporate executives chasing quick profits rather than investing for long-term performance.

"It worries me when I see many of the best minds in America concentrating on financial engineering rather than laying plans for sound corporate strategies for the future," Brady told members of the American Business Conference, who were invited to dinner at the Treasury Department.

Brady's comments received a generally warm response from the executives.

American Stock Exchange Chairman Arthur Levitt Jr. told Brady that many of his suggestions were similar to proposals by the Business Conference, which earlier this year called for a major government effort to boost the nation's savings rate to lower the cost of capital for U.S. businesses.

Brady, however, conceded that the administration hasn't found an answer to the key problem raised by the proposals — how should they be funded.

Suggestions to expand tax-deferred savings plans such as Individual Retirement Accounts could cost $15 billion over five years, while any proposal to eliminate the double taxation of corporate dividends might cost as much as $40 billion annually.

The 1986 tax law sharply curbed IRA tax benefits for workers who make more than $40,000 a year and are covered by a company retirement plan.

Brady said the administration is currently wrestling with the cost question. He said final decisions probably will not come until President Bush presents his next budget to Congress in January.

Democrats Propose Tax-Deductible IRA

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — After months of criticizing President Bush's proposed capital gains tax cut as a giveaway to the rich, Democratic leaders are offering an alternative for "average folks" — a return to tax-deductible Individual Retirement Accounts.

Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, said allowing all workers to have IRAs would be a better way to encourage saving than the proposed capital gains cut.

House Speaker Thomas S. Foley, D-Wash., and Senate Majority Leader George J. Mitchell, D-Maine, said they agree.

"The Senate and the American people now have a clear choice between competing plans to advance our economy," Mitchell said Tuesday.

"Cutting capital gains (taxes) is an investment incentive for a few, but the problem is broader than that," Bentsen said Tuesday in announcing his proposal. "With the IRA, we'd have the participation of a broad spectrum of middle America."

All workers were allowed fully deductible IRAs before passage of the 1986 tax overhaul. That law made them available only to workers not covered by a company pension, and to covered workers with incomes under $25,000 and couples under $40,000. Partial deductions are allowed couples with incomes under $50,000 and single people under $35,000.

Under Bentsen's proposal, a person could contribute up to $2,000 a year to an IRA and avoid current taxation on half the sum. The contribution and the interest earned would not be taxed until the money was withdrawn for retirement, tuition or making the down payment on a first home.

"This IRA affects average folks," Bentsen said. "It helps address three of the primary concerns of middle-income Americans, lower-income Americans: buying that first home, financing a college education or providing for one's retirement."

Bentsen outlined his proposal as the House Ways and Means Committee struggled to solve the capital gains issue, which has stalemated the panel for several weeks. The committee's 13 Republicans and six Democrats — a bare majority of the 37-member panel — favor a capital gains cut, which Bush has endorsed.

Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, D-Ill., the committee chairman, has blocked a vote on the cut.

IN THE STATE

Economic Forecast

CHARLOTTE (AP) — North Carolina's economy will grow at a considerably slower rate through 1990 in the wake of a Federal Reserve Board policy that made money tight in recent years, an economic forecast said Tuesday.

The third quarter UNC-Charlotte North Carolina Economic Forecast indicates that real economic growth in 1989 will be 2.1 percent and that 1990 growth should pick up slightly to 2.4 percent.

The report said six of 12 economic sectors in the state declined in the first quarter of 1989. Construction was particularly hard hit with output declining more than 15 percent. Durable manufacturing fell by 1.2 percent and nondurable manufacturing dropped 2.6 percent, the report said.

However, only construction will likely suffer a decline over the entire year, the forecast said.

Appointees

CLINTON, N.C. (AP) — The Sampson County Board of Education appointed two black women to the board during a special session Monday, complying with an election plan approved by the U.S. Department of Justice in August.

Mary Brown of Garland and Quenita Lee of Newton Grove were appointed by secret ballots from a field of five nominees submitted by a committee of the Concerned Minorities Organization.

The group had lobbied for more black representation on the board and was behind a voting rights lawsuit filed by black residents in December against the school board and the Sampson County Board of Commissioners.

The school board's settlement required two minorities to be appointed to the all-white board within 45 days. The appointment of Mrs. Lee and Mrs. Brown expands the board from five to seven members.

Land Purchase

CHARLOTTE (AP) — Catawba

Falls, where the Catawba River begins its winding flow across the Piedmont, is now owned by the public as part of the Pisgah National Forest.

The U.S. Forest Service bought the land around the McDowell County falls, paying the Trust for Public Lands $776,000 for 1,031 acres. The trust served as a go-between to help the federal government acquire the private property.

From its headwaters near Old Fort, the Catawba winds past Charlotte and toward coastal South Carolina. It's dammed in several places, forming among others Lake James in Burke County, Lake Norman in Mecklenburg and Lake Wylie in York County, S.C.

Plant Site

BOONE, N.C. (AP) — The preferred site for a proposed electric-generating plant in Deep Gap is owned by a member of the board of directors of Blue Ridge Electric Membership Corp.

The owner of the property, Bill Brown, said the site was chosen solely on the basis of engineering studies. He said he not involved in selection of the site and didn't discuss it with other officials of the electric cooperative.

'Big Sweep'

RALEIGH (AP) — Thousands of volunteers across North Carolina will arm themselves with trash and head for the water for "The Big Sweep" on Sept. 23.

From 9 a.m. to 1 p.m., they will walk the state's beaches, rivers, lakes and streams looking for trash.

The Big Sweep will cover North Carolina's coastline and inland waters from Nags Head to the Nantahala River. Unlike last year, this year's sweep will include some lakes, state parks and rivers.

Agencies involved in the project include the wildlife commission, UNC Sea Grant, the divisions of Parks and Recreation and Coastal Management, N.C. Aquariums, N.C. 4-H Program, WRAL-TV, Keep North Carolina Clean and Beautiful and Keep America Beautiful of Carteret County.

Witnesses Haven't Touched On Fraud In Bakker Trial

By Sandy Banisky
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

CHARLOTTE, N.C. — He is charged with fraud and conspiracy. Prosecutors say the case is about a man who was "cheating people ... tricking people out of their money."

But of the more than 60 people who have trooped to the stand in federal court here, no one yet has testified that Jim Bakker, former Assemblies of God preacher, actively plotted to swindle the followers of the PTL ministry.

Instead, Bakker has been described in court as a minister who discovered that he was a champion at bringing in money from his show-biz pulpit — and simply didn't stop when the fund-raising plans rocketed out of control.

Impulsive, enthusiastic, Bakker did not seem to worry if the money was not spent for exactly the projects he had promised his viewers, according to the witnesses.

Tuesday, more PTL followers testified that they did not get what they expected in return for the money they sent to the Bakker ministry.

Sarah Combs, the wife of a West Virginia coal miner and the mother of 13, said she sent $1,000 of her husband's black-lung disability payment to PTL but never got the hotel accommodations at Heritage U.S.A. that Bakker had promised on the air. When she sent a certified letter demanding a refund, Mrs. Combs said, she received no answer.

Witnesses who have testified that they tried to caution Bakker about his fund-raising practices said that the preacher would just reply that he trusted in the Lord. Then he would ask his audience to give more.

Bakker was capable of that, Assistant U.S. Attorney Jerry Miller said at the trial's start, because the preacher believed in "the concept of willful blindness."

The rule in Bakker's office, the prosecutor said, was, "Don't bring me any bad news."

It was that blindness that apparently allowed Bakker to go on buying binges — a jet, expensive suits, diamonds — even though he knew that his PTL (Praise the Lord) ministry was in financial trouble, prosecutors allege.

And it was that blindness, the prosecutors add, that enabled Bakker to continue to sell $1,000 "lifetime partnerships" — which were supposed to entitle contributors to free stays at his Heritage USA Christian theme park — long after the hotels there had run out of room.

If convicted on all 24 counts of fraud and conspiracy, Bakker could be imprisoned for 120 years and fined more than $5 million.

Bakker's lawyers, who have yet to mount their case, conceded as the trial began that the PTL president lived lavishly. They even conceded that he used ministry funds to try to buy the silence of church secretary Jessica Hahn, with whom Bakker once had sex. It was that episode that led to his resignation in 1987.

But Bakker's lawyers contend that he never had any criminal intent to defraud anyone.

They say his deputy, Richard Dortch — already sentenced to eight years in prison for his role in the PTL scandal — was the hands-on head of the ministry. Bakker was the "religious creative genius" of PTL who left management details to Dortch, they say.

Prosecutors, however, are trying to prove that Bakker indeed knew exactly how much money was coming in and used $3.7 million in ministry funds to support his rich tastes.

And when warnings came, according to witnesses, Bakker reverted to saying he had faith.

Several former PTL employees have testified that Bakker would not listen to anything that he did not want to hear. Steve Nelson, a former PTL vice president, told the court that he tried to talk to Bakker about problems with the "lifetime partnerships," but Bakker waved away any concerns.

"Look, the Lord's done a miracle for us here," Nelson recalled Bakker saying of the scores of millions of dollars pouring in.

David Taggart, the preacher's former personal assistant, said that Bakker "would turn around and look out the window" if someone came into his office with unpleasant reports. "A lot of the time, he didn't have any comment," said Taggart, who last week was sentenced to 18 years in prison for evading taxes on PTL funds.

And Taggart remembered delivering some bad news by phone, then having to wait for 10 silent minutes before Mr. Bakker would speak.

Etheridge outlines his program to combat low SAT scores compiled by N.C. students

Etheridge Calls For Task Force To Study SAT Woes

By F. Alan Boyce
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — State School Superintendent Bob Etheridge targeted high schools as he outlined a five-point program designed to improve the state's bottom ranking in average Scholastic Aptitude Test scores.

"Our mistake, apparently, was assuming that giving our children a good foundation would automatically translate into good test comparisons through high school," Etheridge said in a news conference Tuesday.

Etheridge's comments came after the College Board released figures showing that average SAT scores by North Carolina's high school seniors dropped from 49th to 50th place in the nation this year.

The average SAT scores of North Carolina's high school seniors fell by five points to 836 out of a possible 1,600 this year. South Carolina, which stayed even at 838, moved out of the bottom spot to 49th by virtue of North Carolina's drop.

"You reach a point where the only way to go is up, and North Carolina intends to do whatever is necessary to go up," Etheridge said.

Etheridge's program is to be keyed by a new Task Force on Excellence in Secondary Education.

Etheridge pointed out that the decline in achievement scores occurs after the eighth grade, a sign that the problem lies in secondary schools.

The task force, comprised of school administrators, teachers, parents and Department of Public Instruction staff, "will make recommendations that will, in my judgment, dramatically change our high schools," Etheridge said. But he declined to speculate on what those changes might be.

Etheridge also proposed asking local schools to sign release forms so the state can track SAT results by individual units and identify those doing the best job. And he proposed encouraging more students to take the Preliminary Scholastic Aptitude Test to help prepare them for the SAT.

Other points in the program called for steering more students into higher math courses and more rigorous courses in English, history and science and further encouraging school systems to devise merit pay plans that reward teachers who get the best results.

"I believe our administrators and teachers know how to improve student achievement, and we will give them the right to try some new methods," he said. "At the same time, we will hold them accountable for the results."

Etheridge said he is not looking for a quick fix, noting that department figures indicate that next year's SAT scores "probably offer little hope that we can move off the bottom."

The Basic Education Program, an eight-year, $800 million plan to improve schools statewide, has not been a failure in its first five years, Etheridge said.

"The bulk of the dollars have been at the elementary level," he said, noting that is where the most progress has been.

Not all of the blame rests with the schools, Etheridge said.

"There is some evidence that our high school students don't sign up for tough courses, that they don't prepare themselves to take the SAT and that they spend less time on homework than their counterparts in other states," he said.

Bomb Note Grounds Airliner

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

GREENSBORO — Nearly 100 passengers slid down evacuation chutes from an American Airlines jetliner that made an emergency landing after a note was found onboard warning that the plane would be blown up.

There were no injuries Tuesday among the 96 passengers and seven crew members aboard Flight 652 that landed at Piedmont Triad International Airport. The flight was from Dallas-Fort Worth and bound for Greensboro.

Authorities were still searching the aircraft and luggage Tuesday night and had found no bomb, according to the FBI.

No one had been arrested in connection with the bomb threat and authorities had no suspects, said Dan Wozniak, special agent in charge of the FBI's Greensboro office. He also said it was unclear whether the person who left the note was a passenger aboard the aircraft.

One passenger, Terry Millard Dixon, 36, of San Francisco was arrested by airport security after the airplane landed at 4:25 p.m. Dixon, whom authorities said was intoxicated, was charged with delaying and obstructing a law enforcement officer. They said the charge was unrelated to the bomb threat. He was placed under $1,000 bond.

Don Bedwell, a spokesman for American Airlines, said a note warning that the aircraft would blow up in 10 minutes was found in a rear toilet when the plane was still 100 miles from Greensboro.

The plane continued to Greensboro where it landed and taxied to a remote part of the airport.

Inflatable chutes were deployed and passengers, who had been ordered to take their shoes off to keep from puncturing the chutes, evacuated the airplane.

They waited on the tarmac for an hour and 20 minutes until shuttle buses were dispatched to pick them up, said one passenger, Dan Lucariello of Saugus, Calif.

Authorities said little about the note Tuesday night, but Lucariello said he had been told by airline officials that it had been typewritten.

"That said to me it was premeditated," he said.

The note was discovered by an unidentified female passenger.

Kevin Smith of Portland, Ore., said he had used the bathroom just before her and had not seen the note.

"But I wasn't looking for it either," he said.

Thornburg Rejects Spanking Proposal

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — State Attorney General Lacy Thornburg says he will not sign a settlement that would lift the ban on spanking in church-run day-care centers.

Last week the state Child Day-Care Commission voted to accept a settlement offered by 13 fundamentalist churches that had filed two lawsuits challenging the state's spanking ban.

But the commission's action cannot take effect unless the attorney general signs on behalf of the state. And Thornburg said he would not sign the settlement "in its current form."

An issue is a statement in the settlement that would have the state admit the commission lacked the authority to pass the corporal-punishment ban.

"I'm serving two different functions," Thornburg said. "On the one hand, we represent the commission, and we're told by our client to sign.

But my duties as attorney general prevent me."

He said a 1984 opinion by former Attorney General Rufus Edmisten concluded that the commission did have the power to impose the ban. He agreed with that analysis, Thornburg said.

"We don't change opinions of this office lightly," he said.

Signing the judgment would bind future commissions from enacting a ban later, unless the General Assembly revised the law outlining the commission's powers.

Attorneys for the churches have said merely dropping the ban is not enough, since commission members appointed later could simply impose the ban again. They want the clause admitting a lack of authority clause included.

"My decision after looking over the judgment in its current form is that I would not sign, but ask the attorneys to work something out," Thornburg said.

Black Democrat Beats Koch

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

New York Democrats chose calm, deliberate David Dinkins over brash Mayor Edward I. Koch, bringing the nation's largest city closer to electing its first black mayor.

Detroit Mayor Coleman Young, one of the first blacks to lead a major U.S. city, savored a big primary victory over a dozen challengers, and Democrats foiled Republican designs on House seats in Texas and California that were vacated by Speaker Jim Wright and Democratic Whip Tony Coelho.

Tuesday's primary election signaled the end of an era in New York, although Koch reminded supporters that it wasn't quite up.

"You'll have me from now to December 31st," he said in a concession speech. "I do not intend to keep my mouth shut."

Dinkins, the Manhattan borough president, will face former federal prosecutor Rudolph Giuliani in the Nov. 7 election. Giuliani powdered cosmetics heir Ronald Lauder in an unusually bitter GOP primary that saw Lauder spend an estimated $12 million on negative advertising.

Dinkins won the Democratic nomination by cornering near-unanimous support from blacks and getting greater-than-expected backing from whites.

His theme of uniting the city took on unexpected urgency in recent weeks after a white mob in Brooklyn attacked and killed a young black man. Koch angered many blacks with his response to the killing.

In a victory speech, Dinkins urged supporters not to savor Koch's loss. "We're all together now," he said. "Remember me? I'm the guy who brings people together."

With all the votes counted, Dinkins had 537,313, or 51 percent, to Koch's 445,816, or 42 percent. Two lesser-known candidates, former transit chief Richard Ravitch and city Comptroller Harrison Goldin, split the rest.

Giuliani had 75,720 votes, or 67 percent, to Lauder's 36,905, or 33 percent. Giuliani will run as the candidate of the Republican, Liberal and Independent Fusion parties, and said he wanted to be a mayor in the mold of Fiorello LaGuardia, who served from 1934 to 1945.

Dinkins was joined at a victory celebration by Jesse Jackson, who was active in the New York and Detroit mayoral races. Jackson supported the winner in New York, but wasn't able to rescue the failed campaign of Rep. John Conyers in Detroit.

Conyers, a 13-term congressman with a national reputation, was among the dozen candidates to challenge Young's bid for an unprecedented fifth term. But accountant Tom Barrow brushed past Conyers to place second in the primary, giving him the right to go head-to-head against Young in a November runoff.

With 92 percent of the precincts reporting, Young had 97,618 votes, or 52 percent, to Barrow's 43,230 votes, or 23 percent. Conyers was third with 33,232, or 18 percent. Ten other candidates shared the rest.

P&G Wins Award Over Cookie Recipe

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WILMINGTON, Del. — Three major cookie manufacturers have been ordered to pay Procter & Gamble Co. $125 million to settle a 5-year-old patent infringement case.

Chief U.S. District Judge Joseph J. Longobardi signed a consent judgment Tuesday, saying Keebler Co. of Elmhurst, Ill., Nabisco Brands Inc. of East Hanover, N.J., and Frito-Lay Inc. of Dallas, infringed on Procter & Gamble's patent for homestyle cookies marketed under the Duncan Hines label.

The case was scheduled to go to trial in October, but an agreement among the companies was reached late Monday that says Procter & Gamble's patents are valid and enforceable, according to Donald P. Tassone, spokesman for the Cincinnati-based company.

Keebler is to pay $52.9 million for the Soft Batch cookie it introduced in 1984; Nabisco will pay $52.9 million for its Almost Home Brand; and Frito-Lay will pay $19.1 million for its Grandmas Rich and Chewy product.

Once the lawsuit was filed, the formulas for the three products were changed.

Procter & Gamble said after it test-marketed its soft cookie in January 1983, the three competitors pirated the formula and beat it to the market.

The company sued the three in 1984.

The competitors countered that the patent was not valid. "It was very frustrating to see our competitors, who were already in the cookie business, beating us to market in most of the country with the very product we had developed and patented," said John E. Pepper, president of Procter & Gamble.

The cookie brand never reached its projected market share, Tassone said. "The settlement will help, but it will not make up for what we lost," he said.

Nabisco said it was "delighted the protracted legal battle was settled and that the settlement will not hurt parent RJR Nabisco's earnings."

Frito-Lay said the settlement will be paid by insurance and will have no effect on the earnings of its parent company, PepsiCo Inc.

Stuart L. Greenblatt, spokesman for Keebler, said homestyle cookies have not been the market blockbuster that was originally anticipated.

The cookies' market share began declining "almost as soon as they were introduced," said Manfredi.

"The cookies didn't turn out to be the bonanza expected," said James F. Burnett of Potter, Anderson & Corroon, which represented Frito-Lay.

Federal Agents Nab Cocaine-Laden Ship

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MIAMI — Federal agents made the largest cocaine seizure since President Bush announced his crackdown on drug trafficking, capturing 2,700 pound of cocaine, a freighter and four other boats.

The seizure capped a one-year undercover investigation that tracked a shipment of cocaine from Aruba to the Bahamas.

Near the Bahamas, a U.S. Coast Guard jet spotted the freighter and a patrol boat fired dozens of warning shots to capture a speedboat, the U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration announced Tuesday.

"This is a textbook example of what the taxpayers can expect from a coordinated drug enforcement effort," said Tom Cash, special agent in charge of Miami's DEA office.

Officials from the Coast Guard, DEA, the Customs Service and local police participated in the bust, which netted 17 suspects and cocaine with an estimated street value of $50 million.

The cocaine is believed to have originated in Medellin, Colombia. It was loaded onto the freighter Nerma on Aruba, an island off northern Venezuela, officials said.

The drug organization supervising the smuggling was based in Miami and had been under investigation for a year, officials said. More arrests were expected.

The 236-foot freighter, the "mother ship" of the operation, was spotted Saturday night near the Bahamas by a Coast Guard surveillance airplane, authorities said.

Early Sunday, Customs and Coast Guard officers saw four speedboats approach the Nerma as the freighter's crew prepared to unload bales and barrels of cocaine, authorities said.

After the speedboats met up with a 42-foot fishing boat, a Coast Guard patrol boat chased one of the speedboats for 22 minutes and fired 43 warning shots to stop the boat.

On Monday morning, authorities seized the Nerma and two other speedboats and recovered a total of 1,172 pounds of cocaine, authorities said. Fifteen bales of cocaine were floating in the water near the Nerma.

An additional 1,540 pounds was confiscated when the fishing boat, the J.J. Lorick, was seized late Monday at a marina on the Miami River, authorities said.

DEA officials believe the cocaine was already "in the pipeline" to this country before the Aug. 18 assassination of Colombian presidential candidate Luis Carlos Galan, which prompted a drug crackdown in the South American country. Bush announced his battle against drugs Sept. 5.

Cash said the bust "is indicative of the magnitude of the pipeline."

The Nerma's seven Danish crew members were arrested and ordered held without bond Monday.

Six other men were arrested aboard the three captured speedboats, and four more were arrested near the Lorick, including one man suspected of being the owner of the freighter, Cash said.

Six of the defendants appeared before a U.S. magistrate. One was ordered held on $200,000 bond and two were held on $75,000 bond. The others were ordered held in pretrial detention.

All 17 defendants face federal charges of possession of cocaine with intent to distribute.

Chinese Dissident Escapes To Safety In Hong Kong

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

HONG KONG — One of China's most wanted dissident intellectuals, the author of the controversial "River Elegy" television series, has escaped China and says the many people who aided him are all in "extreme danger."

"I've been living in terror for the past 100 days," journalist Su Xiaokang said in an interview 100 days after Chinese troops opened fire on unarmed citizens in Beijing crushing a movement for freedom.

"A lot of my friends have been arrested, a lot. I haven't seen my wife or my little boy since the massacre.

The pressure on me has been intense."

Su said he left China about 10 days ago with several other dissidents also wanted by the Beijing government.

His escape contradicts recent reports in Chinese-language newspapers that the "underground railroad" to help dissidents and students had been cut.

One activist who helped arrange Su's flight said Chinese security forces "have not been able to shut the operation down."

So far, the activist said, more than 55 dissidents and student participants in the movement for freedom have fled China, among them student leader Wu'er Kaixi, political scientist Yan Jiaqi and Marxist theoretician Su Shaozhi.

Most have either gone or intend to go on the United States or to France, where Su went today. Some are waiting in Hong Kong for travel papers.

Still, Chinese authorities have been successful at crushing several other smaller "railroads," run by Hong Kong-based activists and students, arresting several Chinese student leaders and people helping them escape.

In the interview Tuesday, Su declined to reveal details of his flight to freedom: "I was helped by many, many people and they are all in extreme danger ... Suffice it to say I was trembling every day.

"My nerves are frayed, completely. It's hard going underground in a country like China. I felt like there were eyes watching me everywhere," he added. "People are afraid now, everywhere."

Su was active in the Beijing pro-democracy movement. On May 14, a day after a hunger strike began on Tiananmen Square, he and 11 other well-known liberal intellectuals, including journalist Dai Qing who has since been arrested, went to the vast expanse to plead with the students to leave.

"We love you," he shouted to the crowd of more than 100,000 people. "The Chinese government is incompetent and it cannot stop the tide of history."

Since the crackdown, Su's works have frequently been criticized in the state-run press because they allegedly supported the cause of purged Communist Party boss Zhao Ziyang, who fell from power for supporting the student movement. Su's writings have been banned in China.

Along with Wu'er Kaixi, Su is by far the widest known escapee. His six-part "River Elegy" television series was shown twice in China in 1988, reaching hundreds of millions of homes.

The series criticized the Chinese people's fear of authority.

As it described the Yellow River, which has changed course many times in its history killing millions of people, the program questioned Communist China's turbulent history which has itself left millions dead.

The program marked the beginning of an almost year-long thaw in the arts and political debate. That thaw was frozen over in June when troops invaded Beijing, killing hundreds of unarmed civilians.

Since the crackdown began, "River Elegy" has been subjected to a scathing series of attacks, the most recent of which was published Tuesday.

An editorial in the Guangming Daily in August said "River Elegy tries to obliterate in one stroke 5,000 years of Chinese civilization."

In a prescient essay written for the May issue of Wenhui Monthly, Su asked, "Why is it in China, the losers of a political struggle are always killed or meet some other such horrible fate. What is it about our system that creates this kind of misery?"

In another work, Su wrote a fictionalized account of an important Communist Party meeting in 1958, giving Chinese their first look behind the scenes at the machinations of power in Beijing.

In the interview, Su said he still had hopes for his country but he did not feel confident about making predictions.

"I am very confused right now," he said. "I've been underground for 100 days and really don't know what is going on in China. I want to go to France and talk with some friends to get a better understanding."

Intellectual dissidents Chen Yizi and Yan Jiaqi, both of whom escaped by the "underground railroad," are based in Paris. They and others have formed several groups to push for democracy in China. Su's participation will add a calm, studied voice to the movement.

South African Police Step Aside For Protest March

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CAPE TOWN, South Africa — More than 10,000 people joined Archbishop Desmond Tutu and Cape Town's white mayor today in a march protesting police brutality after the government ordered police to allow the demonstration.

The marchers set off in rows of six from St. George's Anglican Cathedral along a major downtown street behind Tutu, Mayor Gordon Oliver and the Rev. Allan Boesak, president of the World Alliance of Reformed Churches.

Black and mixed-race youths sang freedom songs such as "We Shall Overcome" and waved banners that said "Peace In Our City!" and "Stop Killing Our People!" No violence was reported.

In an unprecedented move, acting President F.W. de Klerk overruled the local police chief and said authorities would not stop the march as long as it remained peaceful. No police units were seen near the cathedral.

That was a sharp contrast to protest marches two weeks ago in Cape Town that were broken up by riot squads using whips, batons and a water cannon that sprayed purple-dyed water on demonstrators.

Tutu and other activists have denounced the use of force against peaceful protesters. They also blamed police for the deaths of at least 23 people in Cape Town's black and mixed-race townships during violent protests of the Sept. 6 parliamentary election, which excluded blacks.

Police defended their actions and said only about 15 people died, most in violence unrelated to the election.

De Klerk's National Party narrowly won the election after offering to negotiate a new Constitution that would give limited political rights to South Africa's 28 million black majority, which cannot vote under the nation's apartheid laws. The nation's 5 million whites also control the economy and maintain separate districts, schools and health services.

The decision to allow the march was seen as part of de Klerk's effort to portray himself as a reformer.

Protest demonstrations normally are outlawed in South Africa, and the Cape Town police commander, Maj. Gen. Phillipus Fourie, had vowed he would stop the march. However, Mayor Oliver said earlier today that he had appealed to the national government and received permission for the march.

"I don't believe that by allowing one march the government is saying all future marches are on," Oliver said in an interview. "They are very twitchy about this sort of thing."

The decision to grant approval was announced by de Klerk, who said he received assurances the protest would be peaceful.

"I hope tomorrow will prove that a new spirit can arise in our beautiful country, a spirit in which all Christians and all people who say that they believe in peace will reach out and really start talking to each other," de Klerk said Tuesday evening.

The far-right Conservative Party, the largest white opposition group in Parliament, said today that approval of the march was "capitulation" to radicals. "A knife has been thrust in the back of the upholders of law and order," said Moolman Mentz, the Conservative's law and order spokesman.

As the marchers assembled, a new session of Parliament began at the parliamentary complex near St. George's. On Thursday, the electoral college is expected to elect de Klerk him to a five-year term.

In the parliamentary elections, the Nationalists suffered their worst showing since coming to power on an apartheid platform in 1948 but held onto its majority in the Parliament.

De Klerk said police were forced to into confrontations on election night because militants violently prevented people from voting. He said any police officer found to have used excessive force would face "remedial steps."

Although Tutu and activists say at least 23 people were killed, police say 15 people died, 10 of them in fighting among black factions.

Namibian Guerrilla Leader Assassinated

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WINDHOEK, Namibia — A gunman killed a leader of the guerrilla movement for Namibian independence, and a Namibian newspaper today said callers claiming to represent a white supremacist group took responsibility.

Anton Lubowski was shot in the head Tuesday night in front of his home by an assailant who drove away in a red sedan, said police Lt. Klerie du Rand.

He said authorities had begun a manhunt. Police today offered a "substantial" reward but did not specify an amount.

Lubowski, 37, was the only white top official for the South-West Africa People's Organization. The nationalist group has waged a bush war since 1966 against South African rule of the territory.

The group's president, Sam Nujoma, is to end 30 years in exile on Thursday and the group's election director, Hage Geingob, said today neither the slaying or new threats against Nujoma would change his plans to return to Namibia.

South Africa, which has ruled Namibia for 74 years, has agreed to grant independence in the territory under United Nations supervision. Elections are set for early November and independence is expected early next year.

Gwen Lister, editor of the pro-guerrilla newspaper The Namibian, said she received two phone calls from men who said they belonged to the White Wolves and claimed that the organization killed Lubowski.

In South Africa, men identifying themselves as Whites Wolves have carried out several attacks on blacks and anti-apartheid activists.

Geingob described Lubowski as a "brave young man, violently cut down at a time when we are talking about democratic elections."

"The murder of Mr. Lubowski strikes a blow against not just one political party, but against the process of peaceful reconciliation," said the U.S. Liaison Office in Windhoek.

The British Embassy in South Africa said Lubowski "would have had an important role to play in an independent Namibia."

In New York, a spokesman for U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar said today: "The secretary-general condemns this act perpetrated against a senior political official in Namibia as the election campaign there gathers momentum."

Geingob said Nujoma would return as planned Thursday despite the threats against him.

Yeltsin Seeks Aid For Soviet Reforms

LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — Soviet political figure Boris Yeltsin met President Bush, Vice President Quayle, Secretary of State James A. Baker III, National Security Adviser Brent Scowcroft and eight U.S. senators Tuesday to press his case for U.S. aid to the troubled reform process in the Soviet Union.

Yeltsin's White House meetings were carefully structured to avoid giving offense to Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev, whom Yeltsin has criticized sharply during his current American tour. Instead of granting the visiting Soviet legislator an official Oval Office meeting, the White House invited Yeltsin to meet Scowcroft — and Bush joined the meeting for about 15 minutes and Quayle for a separate 10 minutes.

Reporters and photographers were barred from the session and the White House declined to follow its usual practice of releasing a photograph.

Yeltsin told reporters later he had discussed with Bush and Quayle "ten issues that ... would serve to rescue perestroika," Gorbachev's restructuring program.

Officials familiar with Yeltsin's Baker and White House sessions said his suggestions were general and more visionary and philosophical than practical. They included increased U.S. private investment in the Soviet Union, but without details on how to make this more attractive to investors.

Teachers Say Books Skim Over Religion

By W. Dale Nelson
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Commonly used high school textbooks neglect the impact of religion on American history and give little insight into the thinking of such major figures as Abraham Lincoln, a teachers' union says today.

Three of the five textbooks analyzed "fail to provide a well-rounded evaluation of George Washington," said the American Federation of Teachers' study titled "Democracy's Half-Told Story: What American History Textbooks Should Add."

The longest sketch of Lincoln in any of the books is a six-paragraph account in "A History of the United States" by Daniel J. Boorstin and Brooks M. Kelley. Even it "does not reach to Lincoln's beliefs or depth of character," the union said.

The author of the study, Paul Gagnon, professor of history at the University of Massachusetts, argued that the books "omit or dumb-down the Old World background" of the American experience "as though it were of little importance."

"The plain fact is that American history is not intelligible, and we are not intelligible to ourselves, without a firm grasp of the life and ideas of the ancient world, of Judaism and Christianity, of Islam and Christendom in the Middle Ages," Gagnon wrote.

Because the books fail to discuss adequately the religious ideas of the Puritans, he said, "Students are left with the impression that toleration is the only 'religious' idea worth remembering."

"Modern readers, always ready to mistake their own indifference to religion for the virtue of toleration, could profit from a wider perspective," he said.

Gagnon argued that not only Washington but Adams, Jefferson, Madison, Hamilton and Franklin "all fail to earn adequate descriptions of their ideas, intellect, character or work" in the five books.

"Even the longer biographical sketches of the Founding Fathers do not reveal their education, reading, religious or philosophical stances, cosmopolitanism, regard for the ancient, respect for posterity, or place in the Enlightenment," he said.

The books do give biographical sketches of Theodore Roosevelt and Woodrow Wilson, he wrote, but, "Little is said about ... the religious and political principles they held, or about the substance of their reading and education."

In addition to the Boorstin and Kelley book, published in 1986 by Ginn and Company, the books reviewed were:

—"History of a Free People," by Henry W. Bragdon and Samuel P. McCutchen, Macmillan, 1981.

—"The United States: A History of the Republic," by James West Davidson and Mark H. Lytle, Prentice-Hall, 1988.

—"People and Our Country," by Normak K. Risjord and Terry L. Haywoode, Holt, Rinehart and Winston, 1982.

—"Triumph of the American Nation," by Lewis Paul Todd and Merle Curti, Harcourt Brace Jovanovich, 1986.

The study was sponsored by the Education for Democracy Project, a combined venture of the 710,000-member teachers' union, the Educational Excellence Network and Freedom House.

Albert Shanker, president of the union, wrote in an introduction to the study that the shortcomings of the volumes hurt students' chance of achieving "democratic literacy."

"Democratic literacy requires that a student study history with an eye toward understanding what forces strengthen or weaken democracy, which institutions are necessary and which aren't, which values can be compromised and which can't," said Shanker.

Alert Aborted

GOLDEN, Colo. (AP) — A state inspector declared there was no imminent danger of an earthen dam failing at the Rocky Flats nuclear weapons plant and causing contamination of suburban water supplies.

The state Office of Emergency Preparedness on Tuesday canceled an alert it issued earlier in the day at the plant, which manufactures plutonium triggers for nuclear weapons 15 miles northwest of Denver.

The U.S. Department of Energy, which owns the plant, had expressed concern about the dam when heavy rainfall filled Holding Pond C2 to 75 percent of capacity. DOE officials asked the state Department of Health for permission to release some water without treating it.

The health officials refused, saying the pond contains the herbicide atrazine, a possible carcinogen. The officials said radiation in the pond was measurable but comparable with other water sources around the state.

Panel Urges 'Leaner, Meaner' Colleges

By Barbara Vobejda
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — A panel of leaders in higher education, concerned about spiraling college prices, has recommended that institutions make fundamental changes in the way they do business, including closing marginal campuses and choosing among competing missions, so that new initiatives are funded only when administrators are willing to abandon other activities.

The panel also recommended, in a document to be released Wednesday, that colleges change their budgeting practices so that revenue public appropriations, in the case of state institutions, and tuition — is fixed at the beginning, rather than the end, of the budget cycle. That will force institutions to live within their revenues, rather than setting revenues to cover costs, the document said.

"What needs to happen in American higher education is no different than what needs to happen in American industry, and is in fact happening ... becoming leaner, a little leaner," said Robert Zemsky, director of the Higher Education Research Program. "It will be painful. It will be difficult, but it is in higher education's best interest."

Zemsky heads a panel of 19 education specialists who meet regularly under the sponsorship of the Pew Charitable Trusts to discuss and issue recommendations on problems facing higher education.

The group's examination of the price of higher education comes in the wake of announcements last month that college costs will rise between 6 percent and 9 percent this fall, outpacing inflation for the ninth straight year. The Justice Department is investigating as many as 20 colleges and universities to determine whether they may be violating antitrust laws in setting tuition and financial aid packages.

In their paper on college costs, panelists participating in the Higher Education Research Program noted that the public focus on tuition increases has masked a complex financial picture, in which many institutions have experienced financial growth during the 1980s, but others have struggled to make ends meet.

Nevertheless, the panel argued, colleges must begin to exhibit a willingness to make difficult choices, to increase productivity and contain costs, much the way hospitals were forced to do in the late 1970s.

Among the recommendations: —Learn to grow by substitution. Institutions should determine what they do best and invest in those programs, rather than continuing to grow across-the-board. For example, a small liberal arts college may decide to abandon graduate programs, or a university may invest in a new field, such as cognitive science, only after deciding to forgo new investment in related fields, such as linguistics.

—Set revenues first. Institutions or state legislatures should end the practice of "cost-plus pricing," in which a budget is established by taking the current year's budget and adding to cover inflation and new initiatives, then setting revenues in the form of tuition or public appropriations.

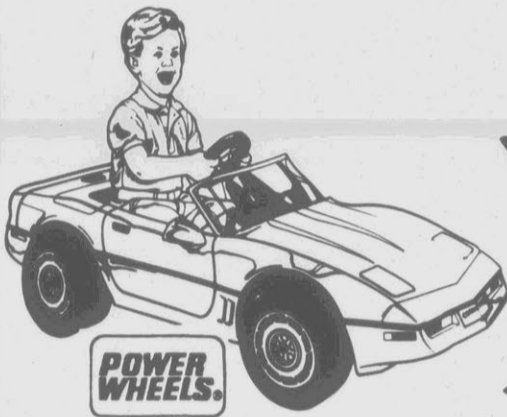

—Close marginal campuses.

—Exert trustee leadership.

Pat's Pointers By PAT TREXLER

Lace Stitch Table Cover Is Easy Care

Set up a table and give the room a lift. The square table cover measuring 42 by 42 inches, is knitted on large needles in a beautifully delicate feather lace stitch. The four sides are edged with a knitted lace border, then finished off with tassels attached to the corners. Place it over a solid color cloth for a custom-made designer look. It's surprisingly quick to knit using an easy-care acrylic yarn with the look of silky cotton.

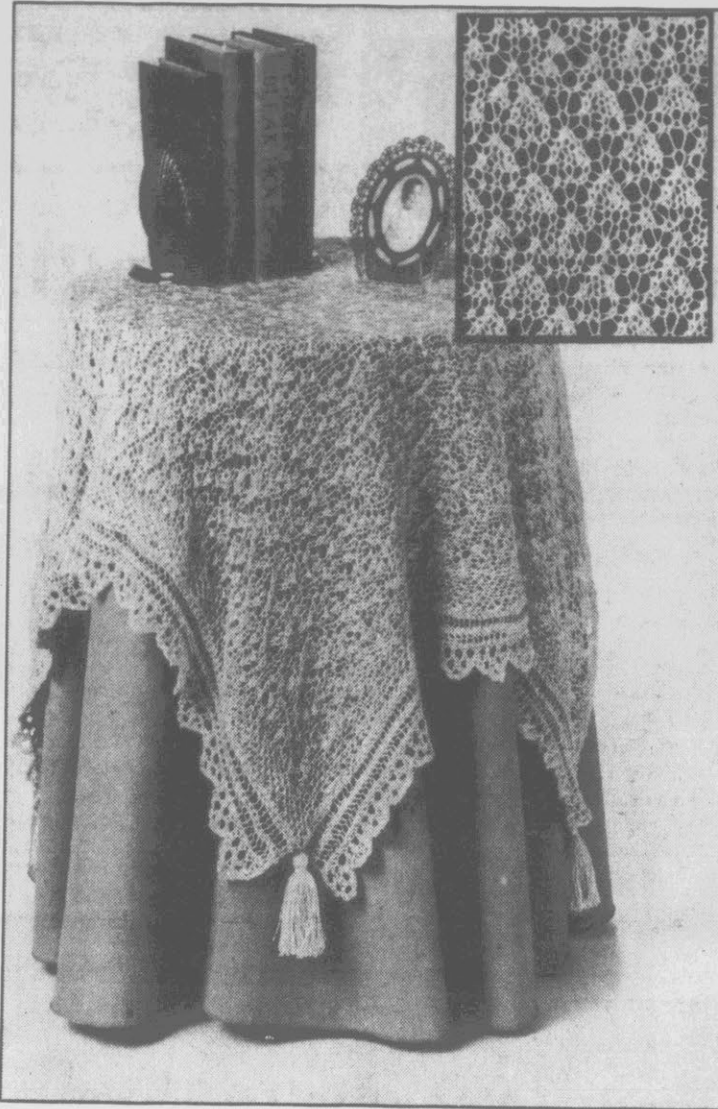

To obtain directions for making the Dress Up Your Table table cover, send your request for Leaflet No. Z-091089 with $2 and a long, stamp, self-addressed envelope to: Pat Trexler Crafts, (The Daily Reflector) P.O. Box 419148, Kansas City, Mo. 64141.

Or you may order Kit No. K-091089 by sending a check or money order for $13.95 to the same address. The kit price includes shipping charges, full instructions and yarn in your choice of the following colors: pale grey, white or ecru.

The feather lace stitch is the primary stitch in today's featured table cover. The stitch pattern, has only 8 rows and 4 of these are purl rows. Yarn overs, knitting 2 stitches together and passing slip stitches over, are the most involved procedures so you can see it is a relatively easy pattern.

A lace edging on a table cover always adds a finishing touch. Often edges are crocheted, but some people do not crochet and others just prefer knit edges.

Try your hand at the simple knit edge pattern given below. It is not as wide as the edging on the table

Universal Press Syndicate

Large needles are used for feather lace stitch

cover, but both are basically the same stitch. And both are worked lengthwise and then sewn in place. Either of these edges could be worked on the table cover.

Cast on 7 stitches. Row 1 is the right side. Step 1: Knit the first stitch. Step 2: Knit the next 2 stitches together, then yarn over twice. Repeat Step 2 once; knit the last 2 stitches. You will have 9 stitches on the needle now.

Row 2: Count each yarn over as a stitch. Step 1: Knit the first 3 stitches. Step 2: Purl 1 into the 2nd yarn over; knit 2. Repeat Step 2 once.

There will be 9 stitches on the needle.

Row 3: Knit 1, knit 2 together, yarn over twice, knit 2 together, knit 4. You will still have 9 stitches on the needle.

Row 4: Bind off 2 stitches as if to knit. You will have 1 stitch on the right-hand needle. Knit 3, purl 1, knit 2. There will be 7 stitches on the needle again. Repeat Rows 1 through 4.

Kleptomaniac Says She Has Nowhere To Turn

Dear Abby: If you're an alcoholic, you can get help at Alcoholics Anonymous. If you're a drug addict, you can get help from any number of drug rehabilitation facilities. But if you're a kleptomaniac — and not rich — you are doomed.

Psychiatrists charge outrageous fees to help kleptomaniacs, even though kleptomania is a "sickness," the same as drinking, smoking and drug addiction.

I know that taking things without paying for them is stealing, yet I take small items I have no use for — I just can't seem to help myself. (It's just as hard to take things back, which I have tried to do several times.)

I am a churchgoing, middle-aged woman, and that's all I can tell you about myself. Please answer me in the paper. Maybe others with this problem will write in and tell you how they were cured. — Kleptomaniac

Dear Kleptomaniac: There is help for you. Find "Mental Health" under "County" in your telephone book, and call. You will be told what kind of help is available near you.

You will be charged according to what you can afford to pay. There is no quick "cure," but a therapist may be able to tell you why you take things, and once you understand the reason for your behavior, you will be well on your way to overcoming it. I admire you. The person who knows he or she has a problem and seeks a solution is halfway cured.

Dear Abby: We have a problem that requires a quick solution. A wedding is coming up in our family soon, and there is a certain relative who takes her 6-year-old daughter everywhere. Wendy (not her real name) has attended every wedding, shower, anniversary party, etc. in the family. Wendy is very cute and loves to show off. Her mother encourages her, so consequently Wendy is always the center of attention.

Since Wendy's mother never tells her to sit down and be quiet, other family members eventually do when they have had it up to here. Also, when pictures are taken at these family celebrations, Wendy runs to be in every picture, while her mother just sits there beaming.

Should we politely ask Wendy's mother to please leave Wendy at home with a sitter? This has been going on for years, and we are ... Sick Of It

Dear Sick: Since you have tolerated Wendy's annoying behavior "for years," it's a little late to suggest that now she be left at home with a sitter.

You would be doing both Wendy and her mother a favor if you explained to this myopic mom that by encouraging Wendy to be the "center of attention," she will soon believe that she is the center of the universe. And self-centered children are usually unpopular with their peers and barely tolerated by adults.

Dear Abby: I am a kindergarten teacher and would like to offer a little advice to parents.

Several of my little ones are bed-wetters, and the odor can get very strong at times. I suppose some parents do not notice it because they've grown accustomed to it, but I wish you'd remind parents to give their children a bath every morning before they're sent off to school. (Even a sponge bath would help the bed-wetters.)

I hope to see this letter in the paper. Thank you. — Kindergarten Teacher

Dear Teacher: Shame on those insensitive parents who would send a child to school smelling bad. (Can you imagine the humiliation those odoriferous children must endure from their peers?)

Here's your letter, teacher. I hope the parents who need reminding get wind of it.

If you would like to write to Abby, send your letter to Abigail Van Buren, P.O. Box 63440, Los Angeles, CA. 90069. For a personal, non-published reply, enclose a self-addressed stamped envelope.

1985 Delta Crash Is Subject Of TV Movie

By Jay Sharbutt
 THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Given TV's penchant for docudramatizing everything but the making of a docudrama, it was inevitable that the fatal crash of a Delta Air Lines jumbo jet in 1985 would become a "fact-based" TV movie.

CINEPLEX ODEON THEATRES

RELENTLESS (R) 7:15-9:15
 ELM STREET V (R) 7:20-9:25
 LETHAL WEAPON II (R) 7:10-9:20
 CASUALTIES OF WAR (R) 7:00-9:30

Strange thing, though. There's a superior example of the breed tonight in "Fire and Rain," the USA Network's made-for-cable version of that stormy-day tragedy as the big jet approached the Dallas airport. The crash killed 136 people on the jet and a motorist on the ground.

A fair number of docudramas tend to be excessively dramatic, full of screams, distortions on behalf of dramatic "truth," hokey dialogue, loud, hype-the-story music, and even bad acting.

But the two-hour "Fire and Rain" is pretty much the opposite, a thoughtful, surprisingly restrained drama by Gary Sherman that covers a lot in two hours with only a few clinkers and with a generally solid cast.

Sensitively directed by Jerry Jameson and filmed in Dallas, its emphasis is not so much on the whys of the crash as its aftermath — the accident's traumatic effects on survivors, the families of the dead and injured, and even two volunteer emergency medical workers — well-played here by Charles Haid and Dean Jones — who do what they can to help after the tragedy.

Guilt, compassion, anger, anguish and helplessness — the whole emotional range is nicely stitched together, with some scenes that linger in the memory, like Jones near tears as he quietly puts a mud-spattered dead child into a black rubber body bag, one of many such bags lying on rain-damp concrete outside an airport hangar.

During the film's two hours, a cliché occasionally escapes. And it did not seem a wise idea to bring Angie Dickinson, David Hasselhoff and pop singer Patti Labelle to the proceedings. Dickinson in a medium-size role and the other two in small ones. They add naught to the night.

True, the movie is billed — somewhat erroneously — as having an "all-star" cast. But "Fire and Rain," a good show, would have been even better had those in charge simply cast good actors in all parts, as was the case in NBC's "Roe Vs. Wade" last season.

But it's a minor gripe. The majority of players here are good, particularly Susan Rutan as a mother of four kids, a housewife whose husband is killed in the crash.

The docudrama will be followed tonight by a half-hour discussion, led by former ABC anchor Steve Bell, on coping with the traumas that result from large-scale tragedies such as the Delta crash.

One of the three guests on the followup show, Robert M. Katz, has a firsthand perspective. He survived the crash, along with his wife, Debbie. He suffered minor injuries, but she was seriously injured, hospitalized for five months, and still suffers from the injuries of 1985.

Their story — they have four children and live in Coral Springs, Fla. — wasn't told as part of "Fire and Rain." Katz wasn't asked what he thought of the movie during taping of the followup program.

However, in an interview afterward, he said he was surprised that the film "wasn't as sensationalized as some of the other movies I've seen about some of the other plane crashes and disasters ... in this case, it was almost an understatement."

Katz, a stockbroker, said he hadn't closely paid attention to the movie when he saw the cassette of it that USA Network had sent him for viewing prior to its cable premiere tonight. But parts of the film weren't accurate, he said, emphasizing that he wasn't knocking the movie.

He cited a scene just before the Delta jumbo jet crashes, one that showed passengers "yelling, screaming and crying. I didn't see that. There actually was a really deadly silence. The whole flight, in my memory, was a pretty eerie affair."

Scientists Probing Effects Of Music

By Steve Metcalf
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

It can be a Schubert slow movement, or Ray Charles' version of "America the Beautiful" or Patty Duke doing "Don't Just Stand There." It can be an idiotic TV advertising jingle, a nursery rhyme tune, a half-remembered camp song, a record our parents used to play.

Whether tawdry or profound or in-between, music arouses our emotions, and there are those who say it arouses them more deeply than any other stimulus. Music can incite us to battle, or send us into a useless, love-struck reverie. And if, as is often the case, some stubborn little melody overstays its welcome inside our heads, it can drive us out of our wits.

Today, behavioral scientists and psychologists, brandishing electrodes and computers, are dutifully investigating the mechanics of human musical perception.

They are discovering some interesting things.

But the essential secret of exactly how and why music moves us remains locked, as it were, in the stardust of a song.

One of the things we are learning: What is music to my ears may not be music to yours.

Diana Deutsch, professor of psychology at the University of California, San Diego, has done extensive work on the question of how we hear, and by extension, what we hear. Her work suggests that music can be very much in the ear of the beholder.

"There are huge individual differences in the way people hear musical information, and I've done a number of experiments demonstrating this fact," Deutsch said recently by phone from her San Diego office. "Until this work was done, it was assumed that people heard music well or badly, accurately or inaccurately, and that trained musicians would surely agree on what they had heard. This, it turns out, is not so."

Deutsch found that listeners can perceive even relatively simple note-patterns and melodies in radically different ways, in some cases not even agreeing on whether a passage is ascending or descending in character. (She also has discovered, among other oddities, that there are subtle differences in the way left-handed and right-handed people hear music.)

Further, Deutsch has shown that there may be some practical limits to the level of musical complexity that people can comprehend, much less take to their bosoms. Even the tune "Yankee Doodle" was heard as an unrecognizable series of disjointed tones, Deutsch said, when the melody was distributed to different registers of a piano. (That is, when the notes were placed in different octaves, instead of all being confined to the same one, as the tune would ordinarily be played.) "People just couldn't hear it. They couldn't comprehend the tune."

Deutsch says that such register shifts and other complexities can simply overwhelm the ear and the mind, irrespective of the sophistication or training of the listener.

There are some large implications here, Deutsch notes, particularly with respect to 20th century serious music, which has become increasingly complex and abstruse. Audiences have, by and large, resisted this trend, often with voluble hostility.

The Associated Press

Chinese Authors Paid Dearly For Expertise

By Thomas Murphy
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SAN FRANCISCO — In 1966, as the horror of the Cultural Revolution fell upon China, Cheng Naishan and Wang Anyi were young schoolgirls, unaware how radically the events of the following decade would change their lives.

Today both are popular fiction writers in China, and each has drawn upon personal experience in new books that focus on the reform period that has followed the fall of the Gang of Four, who led the far-leftist Cultural Revolution from 1966 to '76.

Wang's book, "Lapse of Time," and Cheng's, "The Piano Tuner," each include a novella and a series of short stories. They were published in English by China Books and each sells for $16.95.

For Westerners, the books reveal in fascinating detail the rigors of daily life in a society that only recently has begun to open itself to outside scrutiny. Both women have the ability to express the anger, humiliation and fear experienced by many during the Cultural Revolution and the newfound optimism in the days since.

Both authors have paid dearly for this expertise.

"Nineteen-sixty-six was the hardest time," recalls Cheng. "My family was raided and my grandmother died from a heart attack right after the raid. The cruelest part was that they not only raided your family's house, they also forced you to accuse your parents and your family members to show your own attitude."

She said her husband's grandparents also faced "this humiliation."

"The Red Guards forced them to eat human waste," she said. "They couldn't take it and they committed suicide by turning on the gas stove. After they died, nobody would even dare to take care of their bodies because they were so afraid of getting involved and getting persecuted." The bodies remained unremoved for three days.

Cheng's own father, who had worked in Hong Kong for a German company before 1949, was accused of being a spy.

"I was so afraid he would commit suicide, too, that I would wait for my father every evening for him to come back," she said.

"The political movement after 1966 was so intense, it filled every minute of your life. People didn't talk to each other about other things."

Wang was so young when the Cultural Revolution began that she and her classmates were at first naively pleased their classes had been interrupted. She remembered going to her principal with her friends to ask if they could be allowed to join the revolution.

"My mother warned me at that time not to be so active in the Cultural Revolution because even though I was allowed to join, I wouldn't be allowed to be a Red Guard because my father had been denounced as a rightist," she said.

Wang's father, a theater director, had been named a rightist in the 1957 movement. Her mother had been a popular writer, and thus had shared in many privileges denounced after 1966. Young Wang suddenly realized her own parents might be targeted as counter-revolutionaries.

"We raided our own house and threw out all the books we had," she said. "We waited a long time, but the Red Guard never came. Later on, my sister and I went to a village. My mother went to a school to be re-educated. My very young brother stayed in Shanghai with the cadre."

In the books, we find families who have to bid goodbye to sons and daughters heading for far-off army posts, mothers who struggle to put food on the family table, neighbors who try to get past class conflicts of the past, and reflections of the romance that has blossomed openly between the young since the Cultural Revolution ended.

This reforms of the past several years have allowed both writers to travel, read the literature of other nations and rediscover classical Chinese literature, which was unavailable during the Cultural Revolution.

For example, the authors say that "The Unbearable Lightness of Being" is currently one of the most popular novels in China. Young people enjoy reading J.D. Salinger, just as they do in the United States, they said.

Both women expect the reform movement to continue.

"If I compared what is going on in China with what happened before the Cultural Revolution, it's two worlds," said Cheng. "Of course, there are some chaotic situations, but I don't think that means the reform is bad."

Turtles Volman, Kaylan Are Still Happy Together

By Kenneth Best
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

Mark Volman and Howard Kaylan have been working together for 25 years. That is a long time in any business, but it is especially remarkable in pop music, where most partnerships often dissolve amid clashes of arena-sized egos.

Known in one musical incarnation as Phlorescent Leech "Flo" and Eddie, Volman and Kaylan had five Top 10 hits between 1965 and 1969, including the No. 1 "Happy Together," when they performed as the Turtles.

The duo continued to work together over the years, in partnership with other groups (including Frank Zappa's band), as backup singers (on Bruce Springsteen's "Hungry Heart") and as record producers, but they hit the road again as the Turtles in 1984 for a series of summer festivals, which they have continued to play each year since.

"These festivals allow us to play before the tremendous age brackets," Volman said in a telephone interview from West Virginia, where he was preparing for one of the 70 to 80 dates the Turtles play each summer.

Volman, the Turtle with the bushy hair and glasses, said that their festival song list is primarily familiar songs like "It Ain't Me Babe," "She'd Rather Be with Me" and "Elenore."

"I try to stay away from doing too much new material. That's not why we're there," he said, noting that their newer songs usually are performed in nightclub shows. The festival show "is a family-type orientation, pretty much a composite of our career."

For part of their career, particularly the Flo and Eddie phase, Volman and Kaylan displayed their sense of humor by poking fun at the ever-changing pop music scene. Volman said that helps keep the duo current with what is on the charts, even though some of the younger fans in the audience may not understand their perspective.

"We've always kept a lot of tongue-in-cheek in our show," Volman said. "We take pot shots at who's on MTV."

Even though the Turtles are seen by many as part of the continuing 1960s nostalgia craze, Volman said that he and Kaylan are busy with several new projects. They have a Turtles memorabilia book in the works, are also collaborating with Mick Farren, author of "Elvis and the Colonel," on second book and have started work on what will be a nationally syndicated weekly radio program.

"The Turtles Oldies Radio Show is being done by Trans-Star, the same company that does John Candy's radio show. It will be a three-hour radio show weekly. That has taken up a lot of our time," Volman said.

While there are already some similar oldies radio programs on the air, Volman said that he and Kaylan will provide something the others cannot.

"One difference is that the people who are hosting the show are not people who are just giving their views of the (1960s) era, but are those who made music then," Volman said. "We'll focus not only on the history of the week, but we will focus on but a more kinetic view, a view from the inside. The disc jockeys didn't go on the road with the Union Gap or Gerry and the Pacemakers."

Grace Slick And Company Plan Reunion

By Roger Catlin
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

Just because groups like the Who, the Rolling Stones, the Allman Brothers, Blood, Sweat and Tears and the Raspals got back together this summer for tours and fame and money, money, money, that must also be the reason Grace Slick and Co. also decided to jump on the bandwagon, or shall we say, band-Airplane.

But no. Jefferson Airplane "never made any money ever!" lead singer Slick protests. "We've always been poor musicians. The Rolling Stones will make $60 million this year on tour and we hope to break even."

The reunion of the original Jefferson Airplane, after nearly 20 years, is occurring this year, she says, because of a joke.

"It all started as a joke on Paul," Slick says over the phone from Milwaukee, where the band was rehearsing for its tour.

Paul is Paul Kantner, co-founder of the band, and Slick's ex-husband. As will happen with ex-wives, ex-husbands and ex-members of rock bands, there was no small amount of ill will, acrimony and litigation when they parted.

In fact, Kantner and Slick had not been speaking for years, she says. "We were fighting on some legal business hassles over Starship."

Jefferson Airplane, rock historians will recall, began the Jefferson Starship, Kantner's utopian dream band. But the dream slowly evolved into the corporate rock excess known simply as Starship. One by one the original band members departed. When Slick was the last to leave two years ago, the Starship lineup was devoid of original Airplane members.

But to note an anniversary of the Fillmore Auditorium on January 1988, an enhanced version of another Airplane offshoot band, Hot Tuna, was performing in San Francisco. In addition to guitarist Jorma Kaukonen and bassist Jack Casady, Kantner was joining them for the occasion.

"Jack thought it would be funny to have me walk on mid-set and see what would happen," Slick says.

No fights broke out, and all the musicians found themselves feeling quite natural with the old sound, as spontaneously expressed on four songs.

And, free of other responsibilities, they all found themselves willing to pursue another go-around with Airplane. Still, that left Marty Balin, an important voice of the influential psychedelic band, who was still out, touring on his own.

"He wasn't all that interested," Slick says. "But because all these fans were out there saying, 'How come you're not getting involved?', he finally said OK."

So now the only one missing from the original recording ensemble is former drummer Spencer Dryden, who, at 53, has officially retired. Taking up the sticks on the road is John Cougar Mellencamp's talented drummer Kenny Aronson.

"Everybody is getting along," Slick reports cheerily. But, she adds, "We may kill each other before it's over."

Airplane's new album came together quite easily, she says, mostly because everybody brought their own material to do.

"The main reason we're doing this is that we are four songwriters who want our new songs to be heard and enjoyed."

That was the problem with Starship, she says.

"The guys in Starship prefer to have outside songwriters. In the Airplane, we prefer to write our own songs. Paul was upset with the kinds of songs the Starship was doing and he left. It's not nearly as honest and rewarding as singing your own music. Because I know what I'm talking about when I write a song. And I might not know what somebody else is writing about. Or agree with it."

A case in point is one of the "perfect pop hits" for Starship, titled "Nothing's Gonna Stop Us Now." That sentiment, says the singer who has been before many stop signs in her time, is "Not true."

Now, Starship doesn't like its association with the old Airplane any more than the Airplane does. Though record companies accustomed to the name and the hit records "won't let them change their name from Starship to the Micky Thomas Experience or whatever. So they're stuck with a halfhearted offshoot."

Still, she wishes them luck. "I own 51 percent of their (Starship's) stock."

The title of the original band's new album, "Jefferson Airplane," was an alternative to what she calls "three legal paper sheets of jerky names, everything from 'Save Rob Lowe' to 'Helmets Without Heads.'"

Ten of the new songs will be performed live, along with the expected classics, from "Somebody to Love" to "Volunteers" to "Crown of Creation," which fans might remember word for word even if Slick herself doesn't.

"My memory is terrible. I can't remember last week! It's always bothered me — does the bridge come after that? Or what is the second verse?"

"I've been carrying a tape recorder that plays our old songs over and over and over. I have file cards in my wallet."

And, once she finds her crib sheets, what is it like to sing "White Rabbit" in the very different age of just saying no?

It means she has to defend the song all over again. "I never said drugs are good."

Paul Kelly Writes Songs With Words That Linger

By Hillel Italie
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Paul Kelly's songs could take place anytime, anywhere: the 19th century in Australia, Europe in the 1940s, contemporary America.

Bus trips, history books and old girlfriends provide inspiration. With his band, the Messengers, Kelly sings of love in vain, mystery trains and hearts too big for the body.

His influences include rock 'n' rollers Chuck Berry and Lou Reed, bluesmen Muddy Waters and Howlin' Wolf, and author Raymond Carver, whose short story, "So Much Water, So Close to Home," provides the title for Kelly's third album.

"He definitely showed me how to write economically," how to convey a lot of information in a short space, Kelly said of the late writer. "His voice often has the ring of true speech. That's something I've tried to do with my songs."

His songs are often three-minute stories, condensing days, even years, into just a few stanzas. But if Kelly believes in writing words that linger, the melody, he insists, comes first.

"I wouldn't want people to think of songs just in terms of the lyrics. By making the words fit the melody, you open your stories up to chance. Sometimes the melody is going to make your story go somewhere. I don't sit to write a story in a song; it's usually the other way around."

He contrasts bitter lyrics and happy music, singing "Everything's Turning to White" so sweetly that only careful listeners will pick up

Kelly's rendition of Carver's bitter story about a man's indifference to a young girl's death.

Myths are also important, whether his own or someone else's. "Pigeon-Jundamarra" is based on a true story about an Aboriginal resistance hero from the late 19th century who kills his former masters and heads for the hills. Kelly added his own twist.

"He knew the country so well and had knowledge of this extensive cave system," the musician said. "He was very hard to catch and became almost supernatural. People believed he could never be caught by a white man's bullet. "It was surprising that the song turned out very short and was written from the point of view of the officer chasing him. I started with a formal story in my mind; the officer chasing him is just a fictional character. There was certainly no Officer O'Malley."

Kelly, born in Australia, grew up listening to rock 'n' roll, playing the trumpet and writing short stories. By age 18, he was ready to take up the guitar and write songs.

"I knew that I wanted to write so I was keeping a journal, but it took me a couple of years before I actually wrote a song. It was in F and G and sounded a bit like (Bob Dylan's) 'Percy's Song.'"

He began his career in 1976, working in bands in Melbourne and gradually meeting the musicians who became the Messengers: Steve Connelly, Michael Barclay, Peter Bull and Jon Schorfield.

"I've known Steve and Michael for a while because we all lived in Melbourne for a stage and we've seen each other in bands," Kelly said.

Author Nora Ephron Named As Director

HOLLYWOOD — The recent announcement that writer Nora Ephron was set to direct a feature for producer Linda Obst and Columbia Pictures caught many by surprise: Ephron has never directed a movie — no student films, no shorts, nothing.

But Obst, a one-time journalist who considers Ephron her mentor (Ephron is also buddies with Columbia production prez Dawn Steel), insists she has no qualms about Ephron's ability to rein Columbia's big screen "This Is Your Life."

"She's been a writer-on-set working alongside great directors like Mike Nichols and Rob Reiner," Obst said. "I don't think she'll have any problem. We'll protect her with the very best crew imaginable."

As for budget, the film "won't be very expensive."

Nora is in New York working on "Life" with her sister Delia, who is in Los Angeles. They are collaborating by FAX machine.

Obst called it a "drama with comedy" about "two teen-age girls trying to grow up normal in an abnormal household." She hopes to shoot next summer.

PAUL KELLY

solid, seems like it's going to be around for a long time. But seeing it from a distance, it's like, 'Here today, gone tomorrow.'

"Dallas made a big impression on me. The city seemed to shimmer with all the glass reflected. It's a song of mourning, so beautiful but it's going to go away."

The Family Circus

By Bil Keane

"We tried out a new teacher today."

Horoscope

From The Carroll Righter Institute

FORECAST FOR THURSDAY Sept. 14

ARIES (March 20 to April 19): It is necessary to retrace steps in your daily routines that require further revision. Put more charm in your business so better results can be obtained.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 19): You can now go forward by clearing up obligations that have been on hold. Go with family members to outside places of recreation that are to be eliminated.

GEMINI (May 20 to June 20): You find some information obtained to do a better job does not work so eliminate it. Your family will join you in settling whatever promises you have made regarding dwelling.

MOON CHILDREN (June 21 to July 21): You can put the finishing touches on a business proposition in which an expert will join. Your family and you will have a good time outside the doors of your residence.

LEO (July 22 to Aug. 21): Encourage friends to go out with you socially who will cooperate with your wishes. In any money matters be sure you operate with anyone else who is involved.

VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 21): Put off inviting associates into your home until a more convenient moment. You need to make sure you know any expenses before going along with a fussy friend.

LIBRA (Sept. 22 to Oct. 22): You certainly need to avoid quick or impulsive decisions in business or finances. Go with an interested friend to find out the actual cost of amusements that attract.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21): Many friends who have wishes different from your own should be catered to now. Put off business changes until they clarify results better.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 20): Look for some cooperative friends who are in a position of power or authority. This is the time to put into motion long desired ambitions at your home.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 21 to Jan. 18): The time is not yet up to make those changes at your dwelling. Don't let a practical problem bring a sticky situation between you and a good friend.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 19 to Feb. 17): At last an expert aware of your needs for some data will release it to you. Entertain persons in your home who at one time or another have rendered you favors.

PISCES (Feb. 18 to March 19): Greet friends from a distance warmly but don't break up your own routine. Now you can invite charming partners into your home for a happy time.

 Opening lead: Ten of ♠ Don't let a simple contract trip you up just because it looks as if it's unbeatable. One little quirk of distribution could jeopardize the result unless you take adequate precautions.

There are still many who are comfortable with an opening bid of three no trump to show a balanced hand of 25-27 points. With 10 points and a five-card suit, North invited a grand slam with his jump to five no trump. However, South settled for a small slam since he held the minimum of 25.

Declarer won the opening heart lead and counted 11 fast tricks—four spades, three hearts, one diamond and three clubs. Since the club suit rated to produce one or two extra tricks, depending on the break, declarer wasted no time.

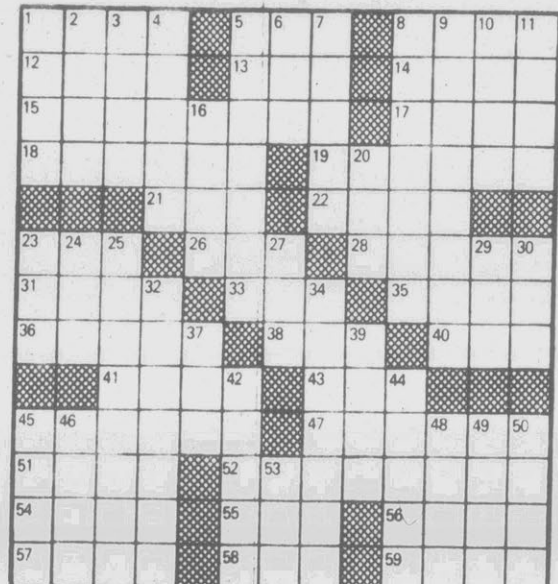

After clearing the ace and jack of spades from hand, declarer crossed to dummy with the ace of clubs to cash two more spades, on which he discarded diamonds. But when he tried to run clubs, he found he had to surrender a trick to East. That worthy also held a long spade, which was duly cashed for down one.

While declarer was unlucky to find both a 5-2 spade break and the defender with the established spade also holding the long clubs, his main problem was that he tried to run before he was ready to walk. Consider the difference if, after clearing the two high spades from hand, declarer were to lead a club to the ten.

East would win, but she could not harm declarer. South would win any return, cross to the ace of clubs, discard two diamonds on the high spades, and return to hand with a red winner to cash out his clubs and land his small slam.

My Teddy Bear

By Celeste Carr

My teddy bear is black and pink. Her name is Teresa. She has red lips. She is the best teddy bear.

I wish she were a real bear. When she is sad she can cry on me. She is my best friend. We go for walks in the park. We have fun and cannot be separated. We are the best couple in the world.

Celeste Carr, 7, a student at Stokes Elementary School receives special mention.

Easter Bunny

By Lamont Bullock

One morning I woke up and I saw a bunny rabbit. He was coming out of his hole. He brought me some Easter eggs. The eggs were blue and white. There was a special Easter egg. It had some bunny rabbits painted on it. It was a magic egg! The rabbits came alive. They jumped off the egg. They played with me all day long.

Lamont Bullock, 7, a student at Third Street School receives special mention.

The Big Horse Race

By Brandon Barnes

On a hot summer day a horse named Jim was playing in his pasture. Jim was brown and had a white streak down his forehead. He lived with a farmer. One day the farmer was reading the newspaper. He spotted an ad that said, "Another Horse Needed In Race." So he went to his kitchen window and looked at Jim. He thought he would use Jim in the race.

That same day the farmer called the phone number listed below the ad. The man in charge of the race answered the phone. He said he would like to use the farmer's horse in the race. The man in charge also wanted the farmer to ride Jim in the race. The race was on Friday at 8:00 a.m.

When Friday came, the farmer rode Jim to the race. When the race started, the horses ran fast. Jim was in second place but soon he caught up with the horse in first place. They ran side by side. Then all of a sudden Jim broke the tie. He won the race!

The farmer was very proud of Jim. Jim's prize was a blue ribbon and plenty of hay to eat. The farmer got $100. From then on the farmer and Jim were in many races.

Brandon Barnes, 10, a student at H.B. Sugg School receives special mention.

Send In Your Entries To Expressions

The Daily Reflector is looking for elementary, middle, and high school students to draw pictures, write stories, essays and poems. Each week we will publish the best writing and drawing. The winner of each will receive $2. We will publish stories and art work we feel should receive special mention.

Entries must be original. Drawings must be in ink, crayon, markers or paint on thick colored paper. Please no pencil. Entries will be held for a period of ninety days and will be considered for that period of time. Entries will be returned if a self-addressed, stamped envelope is included.

Parents or teachers who sign the entry form should monitor for good taste and plagiarism.

Fill out the form and attach it to your entry.

How Stars Got In The Sky

By Billie Jo Harrison

One night my friend and I were playing baseball. A long time ago people played baseball using stars instead of balls. I kept swinging the bat but I never could hit any of the stars. So, my friend tried but he couldn't hit the stars either. We went to school that morning and when I got there a new boy had arrived. He looked smart and I heard he was a good baseball player. So, I went up to him and asked him to play ball that afternoon. He said his name was Tim. He found out where I lived and came over to play baseball that afternoon. Every star we pitched he hit. He hit them so hard they'd go up into the sky. They'd never come down. That's how we got stars into the sky.

Billie Jo Harrison, 9, a student at H.B. Sugg School wins this week's writing contest.

The Short Ear Elephant

By Katie Sasser

Harry was doing a show. Everyone was laughing at him but he didn't know why. He thought he was really being funny. When Harry gave his next show, he knew they were laughing at his funny looking ears. Harry was an elephant with short ears.

Harry told his friends how he felt about everyone laughing at him. They had an idea. They said Harry should put fake ears over his own ears. The fake ears would be big ears like the other elephants.

Harry and his friend had to find Harry some big ears by the time Harry would do his next show. They found some big ears in a store near the circus. They put the ears on Harry. Harry looked just like the rest of the elephants in the circus. When Harry gave his next show, the people laughed at him and not at his ears.

Katie Sasser, 6, a student at Wintergreen School receives special mention.

Sara Kroll, 5, a student at South Greenville School receives special mention.

North Carolina

North Carolina is located in the western hemisphere and the northern hemisphere. It is on the continent of North America. NC. is located between latitudes 33 degrees 51 minutes N to 30 degrees 35 minutes N and longitudes 75 degrees 28 minutes W to 84 degrees 19 minutes W.

The state is bordered by 4 other states: Virginia to the north, Tennessee to the west and Georgia and South Carolina to the south. The Atlantic Ocean is to the east of NC.

North Carolina is 499 miles long and is 298 miles wide at its broadest point. The Atlantic coastline is 301 miles.

Our state has 3 distinct physical areas. The Atlantic Coastal Plain is lowlands, swamps, level land, water, cypress trees and shallow lakes. It is in the eastern most part of the state.

The Piedmont area is hilly and covers the central part of the state. The fall line is located in the eastern part of the Piedmont. The fall line is where rivers drop to the coastal plains area. Here you will often see small water falls.

The mountains are in the western part of NC. Our state's most well-known mountains are the Blue Ridge and the Great Smoky mountains. Mt. Mitchell (6,684 feet) is the highest peak in the eastern USA. Many forests cover the NC mountains. Most of the rivers of NC. start in the mountains and flow southeast toward the Atlantic Ocean. The Roanoke, Neuse, Tar, Cape Fear and the Yadkin are some of the rivers which flow toward the ocean. In western NC, the French Broad and the Little Tennessee rivers flow toward the Mississippi River.

The climate of NC. is fairly wet which makes it good for farming. The state averages 1 hurricane a season. The highest recorded temperature was 109 degrees and the lowest was -29 degrees at Mt. Mitchell. Average yearly temperatures are 70 degrees in summer and 41 degrees in winter.

The largest natural lake in the state is Lake Mattamuskeet (15 miles x 6 miles). It is located in eastern NC.

Our state has 4 interstate highways, 20 railroad lines and several major airports (Charlotte, Greensboro, Raleigh-Durham). NC's major ports are located at Morehead City, Southport and Wilmington. All of these forms of transportation make it easy to export and import products. It also makes it easy for people to travel anywhere in the world.

North Carolina has 325 radio stations, 35 TV stations and approximately 190 newspapers of which 50 are printed daily.

PUZZLE CORNER

An international expedition composed of 6 members (from the USA, USSR, France, Japan, China and Great Britain) are crossing antarctica by dog sled and skis. The 4,000 mile trip will take 7 months and crosses antarctica at its widest point. The purpose of the trip is to increase awareness of the environment in antarctica and to propose peaceful use of the continent. You can get weekly updates on the expedition's progress by calling a toll-free number called the Polar Phone. Use the key below to find out the phone number. Substitute the correct number for the letters listed. The correct answer is below.

DELI TRAIN

- 1 tsp. reduced-calorie mayonnaise
- 1 tsp. prepared mustard
- 2 whole-wheat frankfurter buns
- 6 (3/4-inch) cubes turkey breast
- 2 cherry tomatoes, cut into halves
- 4 (3/4-inch) cubes part-skim mozzarella cheese
- 4 (3/4-inch) pieces green pepper
- 1/4 cup shredded romaine lettuce, lightly packed

Combine mayonnaise and mustard in small bowl. Spread inside buns with mixture. Beginning at 1 end, place 1 cube turkey, 1/2 cherry tomato, 1 cube cheese, 1 cube turkey, 1 piece green pepper, 1 cube cheese, 1/2 cherry tomato, 1 cube turkey and 1 green pepper. Top with half of romaine. Repeat with remaining ingredients. Makes 2 sandwiches.

TURKEY BURRITO TO GO

- 1 oz. light cream cheese, softened
- 1/2 tbsps. mild or medium salsa
- 1 tsp. diced mild green chiles
- 1/4 tsp. ground cumin
- 2 flour tortillas
- 1/4 lb. thinly sliced turkey breast
- 1/2 cup shredded spinach or romaine lettuce, lightly packed

Combine cream cheese, salsa, chiles and cumin in small bowl. Spread cream cheese mixture on 1 side of each tortilla to within 1/4-inch of edge. Sprinkle turkey evenly over cream cheese, top with spinach. Roll up tortilla, then wrap individually in plastic. Makes 2 sandwiches.

Lunch

PEANUT BUTTER BREAD

- 1/2 cup chunky peanut butter
- 1/2 cup orange marmalade
- 3 tbsps. vegetable oil
- 2 eggs
- 1/2 cup carrots, shredded
- 1/2 cup low-fat milk
- 1/4 tsp. ground cinnamon
- 1/4 tsp. ground cloves
- 1/4 tsp. ground nutmeg
- 1 tsp. vanilla extract
- Pinch of salt
- 1 tsp. baking powder
- 1 tsp. baking soda
- 1 1/4 cups whole wheat flour

Preheat the oven to 300°. Grease a 9-by-5-inch loaf pan. In a bowl, blend together the peanut butter, honey, oil, eggs, carrots and bananas. Add the milk, baking powder, salt, baking powder, baking soda and flour. Blend together well. Pour the batter into the prepared pan. Bake for 1 hour and 15 minutes or until a toothpick inserted in the center comes out clean. Cool the bread on a wire rack. Use plain or top with a spread.

CHICKEN MACARONI SALAD

- 8 oz. elbow macaroni or small shells
- 2 cups chopped cooked chicken
- 1 medium cucumber, chopped
- 1 cup sliced celery
- 1/4 cup chopped carrot
- 3/4 cup mayonnaise
- 1/4 cup low-fat yogurt
- 2 tbsps. milk
- 1 tsp. chopped parsley
- Salt and pepper to taste

Prepare macaroni according to package directions; drain and set aside. Combine macaroni, chicken, cucumber, celery and carrot. In a small bowl, combine mayonnaise, yogurt, milk, parsley, salt and pepper. Toss dressing with salad mixture. Cover and chill. Spoon into pita bread lined with lettuce or into a plastic container and cover. Makes four to six servings.

RAISIN LUNCH BOX COOKIES

- 3/4 cup margarine, softened
- 1/2 cup packed brown sugar
- 1/4 cup honey
- 2 eggs
- 1 tsp. vanilla
- 1/2 tsp. salt
- 1/2 tsp. baking soda
- 2 cups rolled oats
- 3/4 cup whole wheat flour
- 1/2 cup non-fat dry milk powder
- 1 1/2 cups raisins
- 1 cup chopped walnuts
- 2 cups bran flakes

In a large bowl, cream margarine, sugar and honey. Beat in eggs, then vanilla, salt and baking soda. Mix in oats, flour and milk powder, and blend thoroughly. Mix in raisins and walnuts, then gently mix in bran flakes.

Drop by tablespoonfuls, spaced apart onto greased baking sheets. Bake at 350° for 15 to 20 minutes until cookies are set and edges are lightly browned. Cool 10 minutes; remove to racks completely. Cookies may be sandwiched together with peanut butter, if desired. Makes about 5 dozen single cookies or 2 1/2 dozen sandwich cookies.

WATERMELON COOKIES

- 2 cups all-purpose flour
- 1 1/2 tbsps. baking powder
- 1/2 tsp. salt
- 6 tbsps. margarine or butter
- 1/2 cup shortening
- 3/4 cup sugar
- 1 egg
- 1 tbsps. orange juice or milk
- 1 tsp. vanilla
- Several drops red food coloring

- 1/3 cup miniature semisweet chocolate pieces
- 1 egg white
- 1 tbsps. water
- Green colored sugar

Stir together flour, baking powder and salt. In a large mixer bowl beat margarine and shortening with an electric mixer on medium speed 30 seconds. Add 3/4 cup sugar; beat until fluffy. Add egg, orange juice, vanilla and food coloring; beat well on medium speed. Add flour mixture, beating on low speed until combined. Cover; chill 3 hours or until easy to handle.

On a floured surface roll half the dough 1/4-inch thick. Cut with a 3-inch round cookie cutter, dipping cutter into flour between cuts. Cut cookies in half; place on ungreased cookie sheet. Press a few chocolate pieces into each. Repeat with remaining dough. Bake in a 375° oven 8 to 10 minutes. Do not brown. Remove; cool on a wire rack.

In a small shallow bowl stir together egg white and water; brush the edge of each cookie with egg white mixture. Sprinkle sugar on edges. Dry on racks. Makes about 60 cookies.

Skewer A Variety Of Foods For Your Kebabs

By Rose Dosti
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

ISTANBUL, Turkey — "Do I have a place for you," my husband said when I arrived in Istanbul. He had been to this Turkish seaport on business and had already staked out places to eat.

We drove up the steep cobblestone streets in Etiler, a residential area, to Hacidan (pronounced haj-i-dan), a new restaurant serving only kebabs. Nothing but kebabs.

We sat at the 20-foot counter attached to a 20-foot grill and watched the kebab chef, whose authority is as sacrosanct as a master sushi chef's in Japan, wield skewers as if they were a Mongolian warrior's swords.

His orchestration, like the sushi chef, is a dance of hands, hopping from one kebab to another, turning, basting, unthreading skewers with the help of flat pita bread used as a mitt.

The grill winds across the floor like a snake, with a cap over it made of hammered copper. Kebabs line the grill in neat rows — vegetables, chiles, meats and poultry. The fires spark up, causing flecks of carbon to float over the grill like a shower of confetti.

It was interesting to me that vegetables were cooked separate from meats and not together as we often see them in the United States. Masses of long green chiles threaded crosswise on skewers, look like giant green spiders charring on the grill.

We ordered according to appetite, but if one left the menu to the chef, he'd seek to satisfy your wildest whim, lifting eyebrows with delight at the slightest indication of pleasure from the diner. A smile of satisfaction is his signal to continue to create, create, create, until you can eat no more. Then you signal or say, "NO MORE."

There are dozens of kebabs to choose from but among the most popular are, of course, shish kebab, meaning skewered meat, which was probably brought into the region by meat-eating civilizations from the northeast thousands of years ago.

Shish kebab is simply a skewer of cubes of meat (usually lamb) marinated in lemon marinade. Bejti kebab, another popular kebab named after a famous kebab restaurant in Istanbul by the same name, is ground lamb shaped like a sausage and threaded on skewers lengthwise. It is served with or without pita bread. Beyti kebabs are similar to Greek souvlaki or soutzoukakia and Moroccan kefta kabab, as well as Arabic kofta.

The kebab chef also prepared organ meat kebabs, which are actually a street food specialty found throughout Turkey and the Balkans. Kukurec or the Greek kokoretsis is a kebab made of bits and pieces of heart, kidney, sweetbreads and liver entwined with intestine of young lamb. The kebabs are served nestled in a French-type loaf with an onion-laden salad.

Then there are chicken kebabs, which are seasoned with an Arabic spice mix known as baharat, apparently introduced to the region by Arab cooks over the centuries of trade with countries around the Mediterranean. Baharat is an intriguing mixture of spices, including coriander, cloves, cumin, cardamom, nutmeg and cinnamon, which seem to blend remarkably well. Baharat is especially good with fish and poultry but cooks also use the spice mix with meats.

Tiny lamb chops, or medallions, cut out and encased in grape leaves were a treat, served over a flat saucer of lavash, a form of pliable giant-size crepe often used as an edible plate for foods throughout the Middle East.

Vegetables also do well as kebabs, and any group of quick-cooking vegetables such as squash, tomatoes, onions, sweet peppers (including chiles), mushrooms and eggplant may be used with great success.

Here are a few of the recipes inspired by our visit to Hacidan, plus another that seemed appropriate to add for shrimp lovers.

fresh or preserved grape leaf, using wood pick to secure. Thread 2 to skewer horizontally and grill over medium hot coals until done as desired. Unwrap to serve.

Lamb Riblet Kebabs — Use rib ends of rack of lamb. Follow instructions for marinating and grilling Lamb Kebabs.

BEYTI KEBABS (Ground Meat Kebabs)

- 1½ lbs. ground lamb, beef or veal
- ¼ cup chopped parsley
- ¼ cup chopped mint leaves
- 1 large onion, minced
- 2 cloves garlic, minced
- Dash red pepper flakes
- 1 egg

Combine lamb, parsley, mint, onion, garlic, red pepper flakes and egg. Mix well. Shape ¼-cup lamb mixture into 4-inch sausage and thread lengthwise through center onto skewer, allowing 2 or 3 sausages per long (15-inch) skewer. Chill.

Place over medium-hot coals and grill, carefully turning to cook on all sides. Makes 6 servings.

Note: Serve as appetizer, in pita bread or as entree with rice or potatoes.

CHICKEN LIVER KEBABS

- 1 lb. chicken livers
- ¼ cup chopped parsley
- ½ tsp. red pepper flakes

- 1 small onion, thinly sliced
- 1 clove garlic, minced
- ¼ cup ouzo or whiskey
- Salt, pepper

Place livers in bowl and add parsley, red pepper flakes, onion, garlic and ouzo. Season to taste with salt and pepper. Toss to coat livers well. Marinate in refrigerator at least 2 hours or overnight.

For appetizers, thread 1 or 2 livers on water soaked bamboo skewers. For entrees thread 4 or 5 per skewer. Chill.

Place over medium-hot coals and grill, turning and basting often with marinade, until livers are cooked. Makes 12 appetizer or 4 to 6 entree servings.

TOMATO-PEPPER KEBABS

- 12 medium tomatoes
- 6 green, yellow or sweet red peppers
- Olive oil
- Salt, pepper

Wash and lightly pierce tomato skins in 2 or 3 places with skewer. Core, seed and cut peppers into halves.

Thread tomato and pepper halves alternately onto skewers, allowing 2 tomatoes and 2 pepper halves for each skewer. Sprinkle lightly with olive oil, salt and pepper to taste. Chill.

Place away from direct flame around edges of grill over medium coals. Grill, turning frequently until skins blister. Do not overcook or tomatoes will fall apart. Makes 6 servings.

CHILES ON SKEWERS

Poblano chiles

Skewer as many poblano chiles as needed horizontally through centers on skewers. Place over medium coals and grill away from direct heat until skins blister. Scrape off blistered skin before serving.

10% Low Price Guarantee Policy:

Lowe's guarantees our everyday low prices. If you find an identical advertised item at any retail competitor currently priced lower than ours, simply bring us written proof of that price. We'll match that price PLUS give you an additional 10% of the difference between the two prices when you buy from us. It must be an identical in-stock item. Closeout, discontinued and other clearance type sale items are excluded from this offer.

Satisfaction Guarantee Policy:

Lowe's guarantees that you will be satisfied with your purchase. If you are not completely happy with your purchase, simply return it along with your original sales receipt to any Lowe's store. We'll repair it, replace it, or refund your money.

Lowe's Raincheck Policy:

If an advertised item is temporarily out-of-stock, we will gladly issue a raincheck (except for items marked limited quantities, discontinued or closeout). When we restock you will be notified so you can buy at the previously advertised price. Some stores may not stock all advertised items; however, every item shown can be ordered for you.

UP TO $1,000 INSTANT CREDIT

Apply For Your Handy Lowe's Credit Card!

Just present your Visa, American Express, MasterCard or Sears card and you may qualify for up to $1,000 instant credit on a new Lowe's card. (Even without these cards, your application will be processed with minimum delay.)

Details on product warranties & Lowe's financing policy are available in store.

Lowe's Low Payment Plan — Terms Of Repayment:

Your credit must be satisfactory. No down payment required. The monthly payment includes sales tax of 5% and finance charges. If sales tax differs in your area, the monthly payment may vary slightly. The monthly payment has been estimated and may vary depending upon state laws and charges. Insurance is available upon request. The APR is as follows:
